Downtown Still Lively ... But What's Ahead

By MELVIN LANG Reflector Staff Writer

Downtown Greenville is alive and healthy but a survey of business leaders indicates its future remains uncertain.

Only four vacant stores are listed among more than 60 checked by the Downtown Greenville Association, according to executive director David Mosier.

Greenville's "downtown" area never was large, especially for a city of its size, but the mainstays of eastern North Carolina were there — Rose's, Belk's, White's, Charles', McLellan's, J.C. Penney, Grant's, the Jewel Box — along with such local firms as Blount-Harvey, Lautares and Brody's.

Today, a decade into the local shopping center craze and five years after the $7 million Evans Street Mall-Central Business District renovation project was completed, the retail lineup differs vastly.

Of those listed above, only White's, Blount-Harvey, Brody's and Lautares remain. The others have departed Greenville entirely or left the downtown area.

Specialty shops, ranging from jeans to coins to Oriental objects have taken their place on the once prestigious row of "downtown" stores.

With them have gone, for the most part, the "foot traffic" once generated by that glittering lineup of all-purpose stores of the old Evans Street-Dickinson Avenue shopping area.

To the contrary, according to Harold Arrowood of Coffman's, "Saturdays are definitely the slowest days of the week." Arrowood said most of Coffman's customers come from the ranks of "professionals."

Many of the stores depend heavily on the shopping needs of East Carolina University students and those who work permanently in the downtown area, a potential shopping force of about 1,600 persons, according to Mosier.

White's president, John Shannonhouse, gives at least partial credit for his store's success to the convenience of its adjoining parking lot.

"That parking lot helps because we get very little (customer traffic) from the mall area," Shannonhouse said. "They all drive down here and park beside the store."

"Our customers sometimes walk down to the mall, but we seldom get any walking from the mall."

Shannonhouse said White's business has prospered despite the departure of other downtown department stores and the competition from shopping centers on Greenville's fringes. "We have had increases every year, and we're doing very well this year, about 10 percent over last year ... but we need more than that," he said.

Unlike the stores on the mall, Saturday still is a big day for White's.

"I think downtown on the mall is kind of suffering," Shannonhouse said. "Last Saturday there was nobody down there (on the mall), but we were running four checkouts and keeping them busy."

Mall stores also have parking — parking that Mosier describes as being more than adequate.

It's Shaping Up As A Good Year

By MARY SCHULKEN Reflector Staff Writer

After battling two losing years of tobacco sales, area leaf farmers, their families and employees are reaping the benefits of a good crop, despite rising production costs that claim much of the profit.

Area merchants and lending institutions are sharing the wealth, based on increased sales in local stores and payoffs at banks.

"We're expecting a good year if prices continue as they are," said Jimmy Smith, county supervisor with the Farmer's Home Administration. "Even with the high prices for tobacco," he cautioned, "the increased expenses will make the probability of early payoffs very low."

Smith reported that the FHA has had no early payoffs yet. "We've had a lot of people paying on their loans, but no larger number than usual."

Greg Gladson, assistant vice president for Pitt-Greene Production Credit Association, attributes the institutions good payback record this year to the early crop, not good prices.

"The crops were earlier this year," said Gladson, "and we've had a better payback so far, but this I feel was due to the maturity of the crop." He added that it is too early to tell if 1981 would be a good year for loan payoffs. Pitt-Greene PCA also reported no early payoffs.

"Our sales have been good this year," said a spokesperson for Belk-Tyler's sales management department. "There's always a connection between sales and high tobacco prices, and although we've done a high back-to-school volume this year, good tobacco prices have helped." Farmers and agricultural extension agents hesitate to label 1981 as "an extraordinary year" just yet.

"Prices are very good now," said Roger Cobb, Pitt County extension agent, "but they've already started dropping off some."

"They're not that outstanding either when you consider the costs," he added. "Expenses have increased 15 percent this year, and that includes all the vital things — chemicals, fuel, etc.," continued the farm agent.

"The average price for a pound of tobacco would need to be $1.80 to keep up with what the farmers invest in chemicals and fuel."

This year will be, according to Cobb, "better than the last few years for paying bills, paying off loans and breaking even."

Evans Street Mall ... It 'Hasn't Helped And It Hasn't Hurt'

Street before the two business blocks were converted into a mall question the benefits derived from the project. "I really think that was a mistake, closing that street, I think it hurt downtown," Shannonhouse said.

Hyman Brody of Brody's, which now maintains its general offices in a retail store at Pitt Plaza shopping center, said his firm "remains optimistic" that downtown will prosper. "Sales have been down, but we have a lot of loyal customers who keep coming back. We feel the downtown still has a lot of potential," Brody said.

Ken Watkins of Blount-Harvey said his downtown store "suffered when the mall first opened" but has begun to recover.

Watkins said the mall "hasn't helped us, it hasn't helped anybody else. It opened at the wrong time ... we were hit by the bad tobacco market a couple of years ago, the economy, high interest rates."

Former Mayor Frank M. Wooten Jr., who sought legally to block city participation in funding the mall project, also says now that the mall "hasn't hurt and it hasn't helped. It is more attractive."

Wooten also noted that the "character (of the downtown area) has changed ... Ten years ago the type of merchant was different."

"Eventually, I think it will be more business (professional), getting away from retail," Wooten said.

Membership changes in the Downtown Greenville Association tend to support Wooten's projection. Mosier said that four

Poli Says Time Has Come For Negotiation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president of the striking air traffic controllers union said Saturday it is time to negotiate an end to the nearly week-old strike because neither the union nor the government can win "a clean-cut victory."

Robert E. Poli, president of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization (PATCO) said the controllers remained firm in their resolve Saturday, the sixth day of their strike, despite the Reagan administration's position that since the strikers had been fired there was no longer a strike.

"In other words, somebody has to come to an understanding that we sit down and say, 'Ronald Reagan you were right and Mr. Poli you weren't wrong,'" said Poli in a Cable News Network program. "Survival has to be an understanding to sit down and people have to give a little on both sides."

In Santa Barbara, Calif., Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary, was asked if any negotiations are under way. "Not that I'm aware of," he said, "but I sure would not want to rule it out either way."

Poli said he has never said PATCO "will have a clean-cut win here, that we know that will happen. The administration also is acting like it has a clean-cut win — 'We've blown them away. They (the union) don't exist.'"

"We know better than that," he continued. "We're much stronger than that. The administration is very strong in their position. There has to be a meeting of the minds and an understanding so that both parties can preserve their dignity and come out with a reasonable settlement. I think there is a way."

However, Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis has used the past tense concerning the strike and has begun replacing the 12,000 striking air controllers. On Saturday, the FAA said it has hired 321 applicants for air controller trainee and the first 144 will report to training school next Tuesday.

The FAA said the nation's air traffic system "continues to run smoothly. For the 24-hour period of Friday, 78 percent traffic flow was reported in airports across much of the nation" despite bad weather in many areas.

"We're forgetting about the strike that did exist, and we're going ahead in terms of hiring people and figuring out how we operate with reduced staffing in the next six months to a year and a half," Lewis said Friday.

Lewis was briefed by his senior staff Saturday on the latest effects of the strike.

Speakes said Saturday that air safety remains the administration's top concern, adding, "We are fully satisfied it's as safe to fly as it ever was."

Speakes said the administration was "not overly concerned" about sympathy extended to the strikers by foreign air traffic controllers. "It has not presented any major problem and does not at this time appear to be something that would increase," he said.

However, the union that represents 45 percent of France's controllers on Saturday called on its members to deny takeoff authority to all U.S.-bound aircraft and to deny permission for U.S.-bound aircraft from other points to enter French air space. And in New Zealand, air traffic controllers voted to refuse clearance to all American-registered aircraft. Australian controllers were expected to vote on a similar ban Sunday.

In answer to a question, Poli said he understood that the Reagan administration was moving as if the union did not exist but said it is only a facade.

"Knowing what is existing in air traffic control centers and towers around this country, they can not move fast enough and put people in there to sustain the system," he said. "We have talked to the supervisors in the towers, we have talked to the controllers in the facilities ... and the pressures on them are unbearable. The system just can't take that. They are going to have to realize that."

"They are just going to have to sit down and both sides are going to have to come to some agreement," said Poli. "I'm just surprised they did what they did. I just don't see how. There is no way. We understand the system, the controllers understand the system. Maybe that is their intent right now. Maybe they are hellbent on running this system without the air controllers of this country."

Lewis announced Friday that 521 military controllers have been assigned to towers and terminals. They will be joined early next week by another 200 military controllers, and eventually another 1,200 will be phased in.

In another move to get controllers where they are needed, Lewis announced that 17 towers at small airports in California, Texas, Nevada, Massachusetts and Connecticut have been closed.

tioned carried out by a transplantation team from Pitt County Memorial Hospital and the East Carolina University School of Medicine. (ECU News Bureau Photo)

Winterville Youth Had First Kidney Transplant

By GEORGETTE F. HEDRICK ECU Medical Writer

Stuart Jackson looks like any normal, healthy 16-year-old boy, but there's something special about this Winterville native whose hobbies include skateboarding and riding motorcycles.

In May Stuart received the first kidney transplant performed in Eastern North Carolina by surgeons and a team of health professionals at the East Carolina University School of Medicine and Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Stuart's older brother, Kenneth, 30, provided the kidney that gave him a chance to continue a normal life.

"I feel like I can do a million things I couldn't do before," Stuart said recently. "The only problem is that the doctors say I have to take it easy for awhile and protect this new kidney. And that means no skateboarding."

It also means watching his diet and taking medication to make sure that his body's immune system does not reject the left kidney transplanted during a three-hour operation.

The ECU renal transplantation team has performed successfully two other kidney grafts. Ten other patients with kidney failure are being evaluated and prepared for transplantation within the next few months.

Last October, Stuart Jackson was enjoying his freshman year at D.H. Conley High School when he became sick.

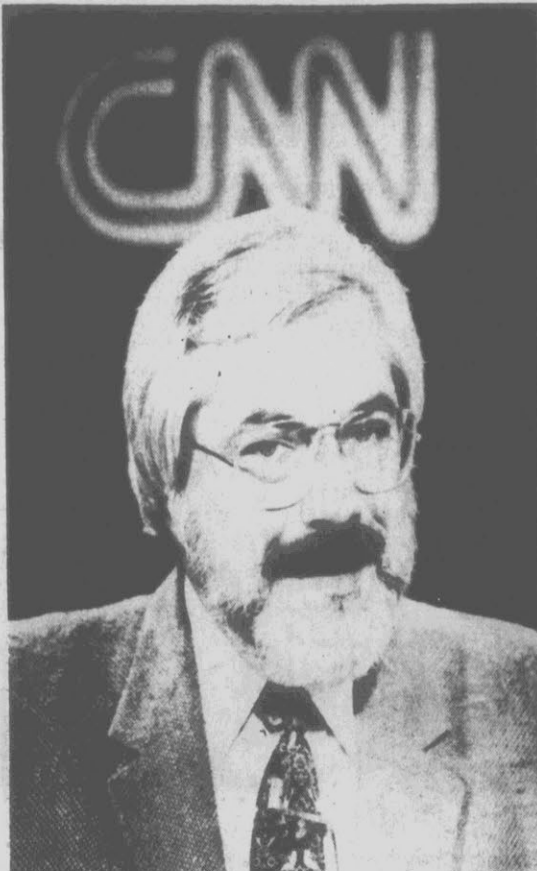

"He started complaining about nausea," said his mother, Eloise Jackson. "I'd pick him up at school and bring him home, and an hour later he'd feel fine. I thought he was bluffing."

But a few weeks later when Ms. Jackson went in to wake up the youngest of her five sons for school, she discovered that Stuart had been vomiting throughout the night and was having seizures.

A team of physicians at Pitt Memorial suspected renal failure, and Dr. Alfred Ferguson, Stuart's nephrologist, made the diagnosis: mesangiolipomatous glomerulonephritis, a disease which caused Stuart's antibodies to attack the tissues of his own kidneys.

In January Stuart went on dialysis to remove toxic waste from his blood, and physicians began discussing the possibility of a transplant.

Tarantulas Are Shy Creatures

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Many people think tarantulas are vicious creatures.

But according to experts, the hairy creatures — found in some warm areas of the United States — are shy and quiet and even run away from people. Should they bite, the bite is no more harmful than a pin prick.

Curators at the Arizona-Sonora Desert Museum advise that tarantulas eat insects that destroy many plants, so the spiders are helpful to the environment.

They add, however, that the bite of some South American tarantulas may be serious.

The first jail sentence for a traffic violation — five days for speeding — was imposed in 1904 on a motorist convicted of driving 20 miles per hour.

years ago, the association membership was 80 percent retail and 20 percent business. Today, the membership is split evenly.

Mosier said there is "constant demand" for downtown store sites and, for the most part, vacated buildings are filled in reasonable time. He also noted that the trend by older stores to move out apparently has been curbed.

"Every established store has renewed its lease during the past year," he said.

Mosier defended the mall project, saying that, "For property owners and the tax base, there's no question about the mall helping."

"Prior to the mall," Mosier said, "the leases were long and the rent was low. Now you have to talk to get more than a one-year lease."

The mall, constructed at a cost of just over $400,000, was part of an overall project aimed at restoring the downtown area and halting erosion of the area's tax base. Part of that effort was aimed at encouraging private investment.

Joe Laney, executive director of the city's Redevelopment Commission, said the project was successful. "We feel comfortable with the mall," he said.

Park's Traffic Ties Up Highway

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Traffic backed up for at least five miles in southbound lanes of I-77 Saturday as thousands of people flocked to Carowinds theme park, just south of Charlotte.

At 2 p.m., the park closed its gates for the first time in at least two years after admitting more than 30,000 visitors. The park reopened three hours later, after some guests left.

A park official said two shows Saturday by the country-rock group, the Oak Ridge Boys, helped boost attendance.

Charlotte Police officer D.F. Howie said at its worst, traffic backed up to Nations Ford Road, five miles north of Carowinds, which straddles the line between North Carolina and South Carolina just off I-77.

He said the backup began at about 9 a.m. and that Charlotte police, Mecklenburg County police and the highway patrols of both states unsnarled the mess.

At 12:30 p.m., Carowinds traffic was still creeping along bumper-to-bumper in the right-hand southbound lane, but police had opened the left lane.

The people who made it to Carowinds Boulevard still faced 40-minute backups as park employees tried to find space for all the cars. Many were directed to grassy medians and fields as parking lots surrounding the theme park filled.

"When everybody comes at once, we have to accommodate them the best we can," said Garry Bickett, the park's public relations manager. "The situation is that people are coming in individual cars."

Bickett said August is always a busy month, and in addition to the Oak Ridge Boys performances, a cereal company's coupon offer for children's admittance helped draw the huge crowds.

Ellyn Guthrie brought her son and nephew from Gastonia to see the show and got tickets for the 3 p.m. performance before they sold out.

"My son's a lover of the Oak Ridge Boys," she said. "I like them, too."

She said slow service because of the enormous crowd annoyed her.

"We stood in line 45 minutes to get a hamburger, and then it wasn't good," she said.

Carowinds employee Debbie Brazzell, 16, of Rock Hill, was doing a brisk business selling candy apples and frozen candy bars from a cart.

"It's rough," Brazzell said.

"There's a lot of people up here today."

Richard Miller of Salisbury hadn't visited the park for several years.

For five teenagers visiting the park from York, S.C., the crowds were just too much to bother with.

They had braved the traffic, paid the $1 parking fee, and had doled out the $9.95 admission price each. But they said after staying only a few minutes in the park, they decided to leave.

As they headed back to their car, one girl summed up their disappointment: "This sure ain't Busch Gardens."

On July 4, 1976, Israeli commandos made a pre-dawn raid on Uganda's Entebbe airport, freeing more than 100 Israeli hostages being held by terrorists. The raid followed the hijacking of an Air France jet.

Storm Poses No Threat

MIAMI (AP) — Tropical Storm Dennis, with highest sustained winds of 50 mph, was sailing westward in the eastern Atlantic Ocean Saturday, days away from any land and posing a threat only to shipping, forecasters said.

The National Hurricane Center in Miami said no significant change in the storm's strength is expected through late Sunday.

At 6 p.m. EDT, the center of the storm was located near latitude 13.0 North, longitude 38.0 West, or about 900 miles west-southwest of the Cape Verde Islands. It was moving west at 20 mph and was expected to continue that motion through Sunday.

Forecaster Gil Clark said Dennis was many days away from land and was a threat only to shipping.

Dennis, the 1981 hurricane season's fourth tropical storm, was born Friday just off the Cape Verde Islands, off the west coast of Africa.

A tropical storm has minimum sustained surface winds of 39 mph. If the sustained winds strengthen to 74 mph, it is classified as a hurricane.

Tissue matching, drug therapy and immunological monitoring determine a patient's chances of successfully accepting a new kidney. Surgeons say grafts from living related donors have fewer complications and a higher rate of acceptance than those transplanted from cadavers.

After testing Stuart's four brothers to see which one had the closest match of a kidney, doctors picked Kenneth.

From that time on the Jackson family was in almost daily contact with Ferguson, medical coordinator Sandra Bullock, surgical coordinator Dennis Blessing, transplant surgeon Frank Thomas and a long list of medical specialists, technicians and nurses.

"We had a whole new family," Ms. Jackson said. "Everyone was wonderful, especially all the nurses at Pitt Memorial. They made us so at home we could almost forget we had an illness."

Stuart stayed in the hospital for three weeks and spent two weeks in Pitt Memorial's ambulatory unit at the Greenville Holiday Inn.

After a seven-day hospital stay, Kenneth recuperated at home for a few more weeks before returning to his job at the Pitt County school bus garage.

Stuart continues to see Ferguson for follow-up care once a week and visits his office for laboratory work three times a week. Careful analysis of certain cells in Stuart's blood enables the transplant team to adjust the drug dosages that help his body accept the new kidney.

Stuart plans to return to school this fall.

Other members of the ECU transplantation team are Drs. Wayne Hendrick, Thomas E. Burkhardt and W. Joseph Newman. Drs. Emmett J. Walsh Jr., J. Richard Gavigan and Edward O. Janosko share responsibility for the removal of kidneys from donors.

Dr. Robert Hanrahan performs donor testing and tissue matching, and Dr. Judith Thomas directs immunological monitoring. Dr. Irvin Blöse is a psychiatric consultant.

ECU surgeons Walter J. Pories, Charles Rob and Edward G. Flickinger and nurse practitioner Diane Meelheim also participate in the transplant program.

Shortly after the Reagan administration took office, Weinberger said he was leaning toward development of the weapon, a statement viewed with some alarm among U.S. allies.

The State Department said the decision to produce the weapon was a logical outgrowth of the 1978 Carter administration judgment to make the components.

In 1978, West German Chancellor Helmut Schmit was one of the few Western European leaders to say he was willing to have the neutron weapon in his country. Schmit was reportedly upset at being left holding the bag when Carter backtracked.

Opposition to the weapons is based on the premise that, since the warheads are not as destructive as the more powerful conventional nuclear bombs, they would be more tempting to use, thus increasing the risk of a nuclear war.

After Weinberger's statement last winter caused concern among U.S. allies, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. told U.S. embassies in European capitals to inform America's NATO allies that Weinberger's comment was not a change in U.S. policy.

Clay Kirkman Says ...

During these long, hot days, many of you are probably spending a lot less time in your gardens and more inside. Early morning or late afternoon is the best time now to work in your gardens. Be sure to give your plants plenty of water. Even though it may have rained, it doesn't take plants long to dry out in this heat. Early morning is the best time for watering. If you do water in late afternoon, try not to splash water on the leaves of the plants, this helps disease to spread.

One of the more unusual houseplants is the Flamingo flower or the Anthurium. This plant is related to the spathiphyllum and the Calla lily. Like these plants, the Anthurium has a large colorful bract called a spathe. The spathes will last for several months and the plant will bloom all year.

This plant prefers a humid environment. It needs to be in a bright area, but out of direct sunlight. It needs to be grown in a highly organic soil. Be sure, also, to keep the soil moist at all times and fertilize it every other week. This plant would make a unique and unusual addition to your plant collection.

Belk Tyler Garden Shops now have a good selection of tropical foliage plants perfect for your home or office. Stop by and see the Anthuriums and other plants today!

Eagleton Bill Has Its Pitfalls

Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo., has introduced a bill which would allow only farmers to have tobacco allotments.

Under Eagleton's bill only those who receive 51 percent of their income from farming would qualify to hold the allotments. Sen. Eagleton contends that tobacco allotments are held by doctors, lawyers and businessmen, along with major corporations which bought the land for purposes other than raising tobacco. His bill would require that 90 percent of those allotments be turned over to farmers leasing the land. The ten percent would go into a reserve for new tobacco farmers.

Like so much legislation, all this seems appealing as one conjures up visions of family farmers taking over the allotments and producing tobacco without paying to rent the allotments.

If we are thoughtful about it though, we have to see that there would be some injustice done, if we believe in the principles of property rights. The allotments, after all, were bought along with the land at a price that was established at the time as fair. If the allotments had been excluded some lesser price would have been arrived at.

Too, the Eagleton bill could create another governmental administrative nightmare. Who is to determine whether a rural store operator gets over 50 percent of his income from sources other than farming? And how about the widow who is renting out a small allotment for an amount less than her pension. She could be put in the position of turning her little source of income over to a huge corporate farm which grows hundreds of acres of tobacco. Where is the justice in that?

The tobacco allotment system isn't perfect, but values of land in tobacco country have been controlled by the allotments for many years. To suddenly take away an allotment that somebody invested in years ago, doesn't exactly fit the American system of free enterprise.

Traveling By Air Is No 'Cake Walk'

The nation seems generally behind President Reagan in his stand against the air traffic controllers strike, but sooner or later the question of air safety has to enter the picture.

With 13,000 controllers out a far less number of supervisory personnel and non-strikers are handling the nation's busiest airports. No doubt they are already physically and mentally extended and the long hours will increase this.

Airports are busiest at the times the public wants to fly, which is generally not 3 a.m. To handle the traffic safely the flights will have to be spread out more which will mean the public will have to be willing to make their flights at inconvenient times.

It has been said the situation is no "cake walk." Indeed it is not, and while safety must be foremost, there is clearly going to be some inconvenience to the public for many months to come.

Sunday Morning Notes

Her name was Mary . . . and she was a waitress in one of the many fine restaurants at North Myrtle Beach.

She appeared quite young, perhaps the teen-aged daughter of a family living in the area, but that was not the case.

She was from Buffalo, N.Y. One day she got tired of the cold weather and heavy snows of the area.

"I just packed everything in my car and left," she said.

Mary had never even been to Myrtle Beach and her destination when she left New York was Florida. However, she found the Grand Strand of South Carolina and stopped there.

Now she has an apartment in Myrtle Beach and works five nights a week. If you live there, she says, you learn to use back streets to get to and from places you want to go, staying off the highways and thoroughfares which are crowded with the cars of visitors. Nor do you visit the numerous night spots very often. Entertainment is usually a group of friends gathering in one another's apartments.

She keeps contact with her family, but hasn't been back to Buffalo since she left. Her folks would like for her to visit, but, she says with a twinkle, "I tell them they ought to come down here."

Does she miss football . . . the Buffalo Bills?

"There's plenty of that on television," she laughs.

She does miss hockey. There's precious little of that played at Myrtle Beach and southward.

The snow and ice is definitely not missed. Although a little snow falls, it's almost always gone the next day. There also was a nine degree night at Myrtle Beach last year but it warmed up to the 30s during the day.

As with so many, the Sun Belt called for Mary and she doesn't plan to go north to live again.

The restaurant where she works will close for two months in the winter and that might mean a resumption of the migration to Florida. The only other alternative would be to go west.

"You talk like a southern girl," she was told.

Indeed she did, and at this point in life she is.

Something was glittering in the sun in the left lane of U.S. 17 south of Jacksonville. Cars and trucks were screeching to a halt as they approached the mysterious objects.

Closer observation revealed what it was all about. A pick-up truck had stopped on the shoulder. It was loaded with garbage bags filled with aluminum cans collected for recycling.

One of the bags had fallen from the truck. The bag burst and the empty cans covered one lane of the highway.

The Lady Is A Dock -Front Boss

RALEIGH — The commercial waterfront where the big ships dock to load and unload is a tough world. Any moviegoer or TV fan will perhaps think it's a much dirtier place than it really is.

What's a nice lady like Estelle Lee doing in a place like that? She's the boss of a big part of the ports operations at Wilmington.

As president of Seacor which operates Almont Shipping Company and Stevedores Inc., Mrs. Lee runs a company which handled more than a million tons of international commodities for 13 importers last year. Some 65 ships call at the Almont dock each year, and gross revenues are running around $7 million yearly.

As a feature article in the current issue of "Carolina Cargo" puts it, amid the masculine world of maritime trade, and the brawny he-men who work the waterfront, Mrs. Lee with her soft voice and warm manner is an anomaly.

She worked her way to the top in this rough-and-tumble, fiercely competitive business; learning the business of cargo coordination and storage and freight trafficking at the Sunny Point Army Ocean Terminal near Wilmington. Then, she worked in customs and brokerage for the company which she later would head.

It wasn't all that easy. She had to prove to international shippers that she not only had the authority to make decisions, but knew the business inside out. That done, she was accepted in the male-dominated world as an equal.

"Gradually, they have accepted me just as they would any new person. I don't think being female was a big deterrent," she said. "They treat me seriously and I appreciate that, because I am serious."

"This is a wonderful job and an exciting business and I love it."

Bulk cargo handling of steel ore, salt and chemicals among other commodities make up most of Almont Shipping's routine.

Administration Loses No Love On Gold Issue

WASHINGTON — The long-delayed inaugural meeting of the Federal Gold Commission had barely started when it became clear that, despite President Reagan's fascination with a possible return to the gold standard, his administration wanted to bury the issue.

"I don't want to see my quotes spread through the newspapers," warned tough-talking Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, the Commission chairman, as he opened its first meeting at the Treasury July 16. Then, summoned to more pressing duties, Regan handed the gavel to Beryl Sprinkel, Treasury undersecretary for monetary affairs. He is a faithful disciple of Professor Milton Friedman and hence an implacable enemy of gold. Sprinkel laid down the law.

He would give the Commission neither time nor exposure — and with good reason. Friedmanite monetarism, attempting to fight inflation by limiting the money supply, has been installed by Sprinkel as Reagan administration policy. But it is under attack from Republicans who fear that monetarism threatens Reagan with economic and political ruin. The supply-side alternative to monetarism is the gold standard — a fixed rate of exchange between the dollar and gold, intended to end inflation by stabilizing the currency. Sprinkel kept control July 16, but mini-revolt suggested possible trouble ahead.

A commission to study gold was pushed through Congress last year by such ardent "gold bugs" as Sen. Jesse Helm of North Carolina and Rep. Ron Paul of Texas. Had Jimmy Carter been re-elected, the discreet burial of the Commission's proceedings would have been certain.

But Reagan's victory suggested the gold standard no longer would be just a hobby horse of the lunatic fringe. After all, it had been endorsed "a monetary standard" by the Republican national platform. Reagan himself, when not hectoring by Professor Friedman, expresses interest in restoring the link between the dollar and gold finally severed by Richard Nixon in 1971. The supply-siders, in urging tax rate reduction as fiscal policy, always have urged a gold standard as monetary policy.

However, while embracing supply-side tax cuts, the Reagan administration adopted monetarism as its monetary policy to fight inflation. Gold became a forbidden four-letter word. Although the Gold Commission was mandated by Congress to report on Oct. 7, the Treasury never got around to forming it. Not until June 22 did it come into being.

No chances were taken. Out of 16 Commission members, only two favor a gold standard — Rep. Paul and Lewis Lehrman, drug store tycoon and financial scholar. Dr. Anna J. Schwartz, Friedman's collaborator in writing the monetarist bible, "An Economic History of the United States," became Commission staff director.

A no-nonsense Chicago banker, Sprinkel began by declaring that the Commission will meet its Oct. 7 deadline. How could that be, Nearly half North Carolina's public school students are now in countywide, consolidated school systems. The number of local administrative units continues to decline, and pressure is now mounting for further consolidation in some counties where two, three and even more units co-exist.

There are now a total of 144 local school units in the state. Sixty-nine of those are countywide systems which enroll 47.9 percent of all public school pupils. There are 44 city school units, and 31 county units which administer in areas other than countywide, considering the existence of city systems within the counties.

Latest figures from the Department of Public Instruction show that statewide spending for public schools is more than $2 billion. The state puts up $1.2 billion; the local governments provide $461 million; federal money totals $247 million, and another $111 million goes for building construction, renovation and expansion.

asked Paul and Lehrman, when the second meeting of the Commission would not be held until Sept. 18? The law said it had to be, replied Rep. Henry Reuss of Wisconsin, a liberal Democratic foe of gold.

It was then that Professor Paul McCracken of the University of Michigan, economic adviser to three previous Republican presidents, interjected his quiet voice. This was supposed to be the first serious governmental monetary study in over 75 years, McCracken said, and could not seriously do its work in two months. If Sprinkel insisted, McCracken could not see his way clear to making the long round trip from Michigan for future meetings.

Dead silence. It was broken when two Federal Reserve governors, J. Charles Partee and Emmett J. Rice, agreed with McCracken. Reuss relented, saying he would sponsor congressional legislation for a Jan. 1 deadline — but not one day later.

Sprinkel quickly moved to the need for secrecy, rejecting suggestions that the Sept. 18 meeting be opened. But Reuss, not part of the administration's burial detail, backed partially open sessions. That question was not resolved. Nor was the question of verbatim notes at future meetings.

No record was kept July 16. Thus, the defense of the gold standard by Lehrman and Paul was lost to posterity, as well as to contemporary public debate. Despite the mini-revolt, the Gold Commission remains tightly controlled by the Treasury.

Strike May Help Reagan Regain Support

WASHINGTON (AP) — Before the strike by air traffic controllers erupted into the toughest labor confrontation of Ronald Reagan's administration, many blue-collar workers were unhappy with the president they helped elect.

Now, ironically, the air controllers' strike could help Reagan regain some popularity among this traditionally Democratic group and among Americans generally.

Douglas Fraser, president of the United Auto Workers and among the most liberal American labor leaders, warned this week that "this (air controllers strike) could do massive damage to the labor movement" and that the main winner would be Reagan.

The reason is simple. The public generally opposes strikes by the government workers responsible for public safety. Thus, the air controllers have provided Reagan with the national equivalent of an unpopular strike by policemen or firefighters.

Blue-collar workers have swung around — much like the rest of the nation — to the view that the GOP, not the Democrats, have the better solutions to the nation's economic problems.

If the GOP hopes to use the Reagan administration as a springboard to rearrange the political alignment of the nation, the Republican party will have to attract — and hold — a substantial number of blue-collar workers.

Economic policy seems to be the key to making what are now tentative switches of allegiance into permanent conversions. But the first big labor fight of the Reagan administration could provide Reagan a new issue to test his standing among the blue collars.

Strike

WASHINGTON — Back in 1882, in the midst of his wheeling and dealing for the New York Central, William Henry Vanderbilt fielded a reporter's question. The reporter had suggested that a particular decision would hurt the public.

"The public," said the old tycoon, "be damned."
A century later, the air traffic controllers' union has exhibited the same arrogance, but there are differences in both kind and degree. Vanderbilt was operating within the private sector, using private capital, and his actions affected a small segment of the public. The controllers today are part of the public sector, and their defiance will impose heavy losses of time and money upon the nation as a whole.

Let us look at this strike for what it is.
The strike is an act of utter selfishness on the part of the 20,000 controllers. They have put their own personal interest above all else.

The strike is an expression of contempt — contempt for the courts, contempt for the Congress, and most of all, contempt for the hundreds of thousands of persons who are absolutely dependent upon air transportation for their personal and business travel. We must now seek to discover whether the controllers — and other public employees — are not only beneath contempt but also beyond the reach of law.

Infuriating as it is, the controllers' strike may serve a useful purpose: It may shock a complacent Congress into a sudden awareness of the peril that lies in public employee unionism. Even before the strike began, more than half the Senate had signed a statement warning the controllers the Congress would not be intimidated. Organized labor's influence is ebbing on Capitol Hill. The strike, coming at the very moment when members of the House and Senate are heading home for a month's recess, could produce federal legislation drastically amending the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978.

That act, in Section 7102, gives every federal employee a right to join a labor union and to bargain collectively on "conditions of employment." But the act absolutely prohibits a strike, and it excludes from "conditions of employment" certain matters that are covered by other federal statutes. Among these certain matters are pay scales. Government agencies — in the immediate case, the Federal Aviation Agency within the Department of Transportation — can discuss wages only in terms of legislation the FAA will prepare and support. The final terms of a contract must have congressional approval through the appropriations process.

The controllers' strike will focus attention on the whole problem of public employee unionism. In 1976 these unions staged 378 stoppages involving 180,700 workers. In 1977, public unions called 413 strikes involving 170,000 workers. In 1978, the record shows 481 strikes and 194,000 workers. In 1979, the last year for which figures are available, public unions called 593 strikes involving 254,000 workers. The 1979 walkouts collectively disrupted public service for 2,982 days.

The 1,865 strikes in that four-year period chiefly involved the public schools, but they also affected the public interest in sanitation, welfare services, hospital services, park facilities, and police and fire protection. Almost unnoticed, public employee unions have been growing prodigiously in numbers and in power. The controllers' strike is the first national strike since postal workers went out for a week in 1970. Let us see to it that, whatever new laws may be required, it is also the last national strike.

Until the Monday walkout, the controllers probably had the good opinion of air travelers. Those of us who fly regularly are well aware of the heavy responsibility that lies on the controllers' shoulders. We want them to be fairly paid for the vital work they do. But the rejected offer would have raised their average annual pay to about $37,000, which does not seem picaresque, and the precise terms are irrelevant to the main question anyhow. The main question is: Shall the public be damned?

To the editor:

People joining together to help each other out — neighbor to neighbor, friend to friend — is a unique American tradition. This was well exhibited by the fine citizens of Greenville when they recently were host to the Babe Ruth Baseball State Tournament played in Guy Smith Stadium. The planning and organization of this tournament was superb. Mike Baker, tournament director, and Mike Kincer, League president, showed much class and went out of their way to see that our visitors were happy and that our accommodations were adequate.

As a coach on the North Wake team, who played in this event, I would like to speak for our team, fans and friends to express our deep appreciation to all the people in Greenville who helped make our visit a most enjoyable one. We especially want to thank the six nice families who kept our ballplayers in their homes. They were most hospitable.

I would like to thank this nice newspaper for the good coverage that they provided during the tournament. It was a job well done.

As guests and strangers in your nice city, we were warmly and generously treated and Greenville was an excellent host.

You do not have to play a sport to be one.

Your article Wednesday made Mrs. Ada Dawson's life count for something. It also helped me to start thinking more positively about many things.

If more reporters had Carol Tyer's compassion, the media wouldn't be getting such a bad image projected about it.

I never miss reading anything with Mrs. Tyer's name above it, because I always know it will be, not only interesting, but many times will also be inspiring.

I hope "The Daily Reflector" realizes what a jewel it has.

A few years ago, some folks in Statesville and in the Wilkes County community of Ferguson were embroiled in something of a minor dispute over the final resting place of Wilkes County's most notorious citizen.

Legend says the mortal remains of Thomas C. Dula had lain in a weed-covered grave on a knoll overlooking the Yadkin River near Ferguson for nearly 100 years — since Duka was hanged at Statesville for the murder of Laura Foster. Only a field stone marked the site before the Kingston Trio got the notion to sing Tom's son, a mournful ditty that went:

"Hang down your head, Tom Dooley. Hang down your head and cry. Hang down your head, Tom Dooley, poor boy, you're bound to die."

Although the song took some liberties with the facts and changed the spelling of Dula's name, it made the fiddling Wilkes County man something of a folk hero.

Because of the revived interest in the Dula story, the long-neglected grave was found, and some folks set out to capitalize on the tragic story of the young man hanged for murdering one of the two women with whom he allegedly was involved.

Prodded possibly by the song, members of the Statesville American Legion post decided they wanted to give Tom a nice new grave. The trouble was they wanted to move Tom's body to Statesville. The commander of the post said the members had concluded that Tom wasn't guilty after all —

According to Meg, I am by every criterion a lousy mother.

I will not buy toys except for Christmas, birthdays and major surgery. When she points out that her best friend has every toy that's ever been advertised before the dust has even had time to settle on the department store shelf, I ask with singular originality, "Would you jump off a bridge ...?" Meg wishes I would let the dust settle on that bridge.

I do not keep gum in a kitchen drawer. I don't have any objections, dental or otherwise, to chewing gum. It's where the gum ends up after the chewing stops that bothers me.

I also will not allow fingerpaints, paste, clay or any other related art supply within 50 feet of my house. I came to the conclusion long ago while I was scraping up a mess with a putty knife that my mental health was far more important than any of Meg's creative impulses that I might be stifling.

Finally, I would no more serve Kool-Aid to the children in my backyard than I'd send the ants at the park engraved invitations to our picnic. They come anyway. So do the kids.

They come because Meg invites anyone over the age of 2 who straggle within yelling distance. And I allow this because if I don't, I end up taking the brunt of the conversation like the one Meg and I had last Wednesday.

It had been one of those slow days. All Meg had been allowed to do was to go to play school for three hours, to the swimming pool for two hours and to a friend's house for two more. That left approximately an hour before supper

Business May Be Bad, But Mergers Persist

NEW YORK (AP) — Who said business was bad? DuPont is buying Conoco and Phibro snapped up Salomoh Brothers and Burroughs is buying Memorex and Allied Corp. has agreed to buy Fisher Scientific.

Caterpillar Tractor has acquired the Solar Turbines International division of International Harvester, and Amfac Inc. said it intends to sell out its Amfac Mortgage Corp. to General Electric Credit Corp.

Heileman is after Schlitz and so is Pabst, and three other banks are trying to buy out the Connecticut National Bank of Bridgeport. Horn & Hardhart has agreed to buy Bojangles of America.

Meanwhile, Westinghouse's purchase offer to Teleprompter was cleared by the Federal Communications Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Board gave approval for Texas International to take over Continental Air, and Washington Savings & Loan, nearly broke, said it had seven suitors.

Amidst all this activity in the past week, the Acton Corporation's nut products division said it has acquired the nuts products division of General Foods, and Northwest Industries got a new $1 billion line of credit for, among other purposes, the acquisition of other companies.

All this buying and selling totals $10 billion or so, which suggests that America's businesses haven't been sitting on their hands in the past week. Ten billion is a week's work, even for the federal government.

It is enough, it can be said, to dispute the complaints coming from other sectors of the economy — from the auto people and the retailers and builders and semiconductor-makers and the savings-and-loan folks.

Yes, business has been great in the merger and acquisition industry, and the country can take heart that the big fish and little fish are so actively feeding. Except for one thing: the people aren't being fed.

Mergers and acquisitions don't always create more jobs for workers or more products or more efficiency or more shareholder earnings. They don't always improve the country's productive capability, either.

In fact, the opposite sometimes can be said. It has been said that they cost jobs, that they can cut into future earnings of shareholders because of high borrowing costs, and that they can lead to no gains in production or productivity at all. Not always. Sometimes.

There always are exceptions — major ones. International Telephone & Telegraph did rather well with acquisitions, becoming one of the world's largest corporations. And Caterpillar Tractor has projected sharp earnings gains because of acquiring Solar Turbines International.

But there is another side to mergers and acquisitions. These corporate marriages sometimes lead to divorces. Parts of the company acquired, and sometimes the entire acquisition, are sold off in a few years. ITT alone had seven of these so-called divestitures last year.

Why all this buying and selling? Companies generally say they buy because it is far less costly and far less risky than founding and developing a brand new operation. Companies sell for several reasons — because the owners want to cash in, because the company is losing money, because it needs more capital to be competitive.

There are lots of other reasons, too, but one thing becomes clear when you follow the list of mergers and acquisitions:

All the hullabaloo, all the give and take and the fighting and maneuvering, has rather little to do with a company's primary concern, which is to make products (or provide services), jobs and profits.

ERA Gains

By GEORGE GALLUP

PRINCETON, N.J. — Although opposed by the Reagan Administration, passage of the Equal Rights Amendment now has greater public support than ever before, with 63 percent of Americans who have heard or read about the ERA voting in favor of it and 32 percent opposed. In surveys conducted regularly since 1975 support has never exceeded 58 percent.

The upturn in public backing is primarily due to an increase in favorable attitudes toward the ERA by women. Men and women now support the amendment to the same degree. In each of four earlier surveys women were less inclined than men to favor the ERA.

Ratification Prospects Seem Dim

Notwithstanding the 2-to-1 public support for ratification of the ERA, its chances of becoming the 27th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution do not seem good. To date 35 states have ratified the amendment. Approval by 38 states is required before the amendment becomes law. Of the 15 states that have not endorsed the ERA, none appears close to approving it. In fact, more than four years have elapsed since any state voted for ratification, and five states that ratified the ERA have subsequently tried to rescind their action. When the ERA failed to win approval of the necessary 38 states within the seven years provided by the Constitution, Congress extended the deadline for ratification by three years. The extension expires June 30, 1982.

The proposed amendment states: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

President Reagan has said he favors equal rights for women but opposes the ERA because he believes such rights should be a matter of law, not part of the Constitution.

Republican Opposition Wanes

Although there is majority support for the ERA in all major population groups, somewhat greater opposition is found among Republicans, persons living in the Midwest and South, and older Americans.

Conversely, greater backing for the amendment is expressed by non-whites, Democrats and Independents, and persons living in the Eastern and Western regions of the country. In addition, persons who consider themselves liberals support the ERA by a 3-to-1 margin, whereas a much closer 3-to-2 favorable vote is recorded among conservatives.

The greatest increases in support for the ERA since 1980 are recorded among women, persons with a grade-school education, Republicans and Independents, persons under 30 years of age, those with annual family income of less than $15,000, and persons living in the East and West. In most instances, greater disparities were found between population groups in the 1980 survey than in the current survey.

Of particular interest is the fact that no significant differences in attitudes toward the amendment are recorded between working men and women and those not employed outside the home.

Reasons For Opposition

Opposition to the ERA centers around the beliefs that ratification would mean increased competition between men and women for jobs, and that de facto equality between the sexes already exists. A small minority of those opposed to the amendment contend that "a woman's place is in the home" and still fewer associate ratification with making women eligible for the military draft.

Following are the questions asked:

"Have you heard or read about the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution which would prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex?"

Those who responded affirmatively (88 percent in the latest survey) were asked:

"Do you favor or oppose this amendment?"

"Why do you feel this way?"

Following is the trend:

	Equal Rights Amendment (Based on those aware of ERA)		No opinion
	Favor	Oppose
LATEST (July 17-20)	63%	32%	5%

The latest results are based on in-person interviews with 1,545 adults, 18 and over, conducted in more than 300 scientifically-selected locations across the nation during the period July 17-20.

For results based on a sample of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be three percentage points in either direction.

NOTE: The screening question asked in earlier surveys to determine awareness of the ERA was worded as follows: "Have you heard or read about the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution which would give women equal rights and equal responsibilities?" A split-sample test of responses to the two variant wordings showed no significant differences in either awareness of or attitudes toward the ERA.

Either Way, Tom Dooley Caused A Stir

even though the song has Tom admitting he "met her on the mountain and stabbed her with my knife."

Andy Barker of Love Valley, near Statesville, issued a press release saying that, since Tom "was a lover, we'd like to offer a spot in Love Valley to bury the dude."

But Sam Jones, who owns the land were Tom is believed to have been buried, and other citizens of the Ferguson area demurred.

"No," said Jones, "that's where Dula's folks wanted him buried, and that's where he's going to stay."

Since Tom was an ex-soldier who had fought gallantly for the Confederacy, veterans' groups in Wilkes County volunteered to tidy up the grave site to make it neater and to make it easier to get to. Hal B. Hayes, a native of Lenoir who made a fortune in California, provided a gravestone — a large granite block — to mark the grave.

A month after Hayes' visit in March 1959, the Kingston Trio visited the site and put a wreath on the stone, and a few weeks later a movie entitled, "The Legend of Tom Dooley," was shown at the Ferguson drive-in theater. To draw customers, an effigy of Tom was hanged at the theater.

The version of the Tom Dooley ballad as sung by the Kingston Trio is one of many versions played and sung by mountain fiddlers and banjoists. They have been passed on from generation to generation since Tom Dula was hanged in the presence of a large throng at Statesville on May 1, 1868.

The hanging came nearly two years after Laura Foster, described by a New York Herald reporter as "beautiful but frail," had ridden from her father's mountain cabin, ostensibly to meet Tom Dula. She did not return home and, when her horse did, it trailed a broken halter rope. A search for her body was launched in the Reedy Branch area of Wilkes County's Happy Valley.

But the body was not discovered for about three months. Long before that, Dula had fled into Tennessee, where he lived under an assumed name. But he was arrested, charged with murder and returned to North Carolina.

The trial of Dula, who stoutly denied guilt, was held in Statesville. After a jury found him guilty, he appealed to the state Supreme Court, which granted a new trial. But the second trial also ended in a conviction, and Dula was sentenced to hang.

John Foster West, who grew up with the Tom Dula song and the folklore about the murder and the hanging, wrote a book, "The Ballad of Tom Dula," documenting the murder and the hanging. In it, West said, "The vast amount of circumstantial evidence indicates beyond reasonable doubt" that Dula was guilty.

But the last chapter of the book was written by Lenoir attorney Ted G. West, who said a study of the evidence convinced him that if the trial had been held today, Dula's "conviction at ... (the) second trial would have been set aside because of insufficient evidence" and he would have gone free.

The Dust Never Settles

with nothing on the agenda.

Meg followed me around the house like a piece of lint. "I don't have anything to do!" she moaned.

This statement never ceases to amaze me. Even with toy-giving restricted to special occasions, her room has the aura of point two on the Richter scale at a Fisher Price factory. "What do you mean, you don't have anything to do? What are all those games, puzzles, books and toys for?"

She heaved a dramatic sigh. "They're all for nothing if I have no one to share them with."

"Then share them with your brother." From the look on her face, you would have thought I'd asked her to eat a plate full of boiled okra. "I was thinking more about Sally, Mommy."

"You just came from playing at her house."

"But I want her for supper and to spend the night."

"No, I don't feel like having company tonight. You'll just have to entertain yourself this evening."

"That's not fair!"

"Yes, it is. What would you say if I had to have a friend over all the time? You'd get tired of always having an extra person in the house, wouldn't you?"

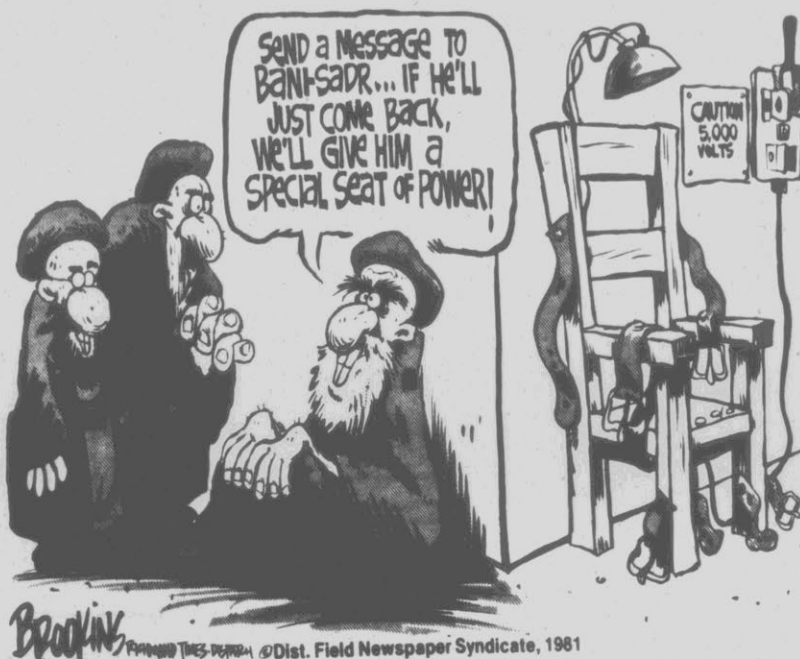

"You don't need a friend over. You have me."

"Well, you have me. That's the same thing isn't it?"

Meg thought for a minute; then she said, "Nope."

"What's the difference?"

"I'm a funner person than you."

TAMPA, Fla. — It's rare to find architects who use their talents for the public interest, rather than solely for private profit.

Jan Abell, who heads her own architectural firm in Tampa, has also helped to found a "community design center" aimed at providing design and technical assistance to low-income people and community groups. In addition, she's edited a guide to rehabilitating older homes and is currently working on rehabilitation plans for West Tampa, an old Black-Hispanic neighborhood.

All of this has come since 1976, when Ms. Abell moved to Tampa from Chicago.

Ms. Abell relishes challenge.

After graduation in 1968 from the University of Ohio, Ms. Abell went to England hoping for an apprenticeship there. When that fell through, she remembered a Dutch architect whose work she had admired, so she crossed the channel to Amsterdam.

For two years, the young apprentice lived in a cold-water flat in Amsterdam on a shoe-string budget. But the city — with its fascinating blend of old and new buildings and the intimate, human scale of its urban neighborhoods — profoundly affected her vision of city life and architecture. Ms. Abell began to plan toward working on public housing and community projects when she returned to the United States.

She worked for a firm in Rochester, N.Y., before her move to Tampa. But not until she became involved with Tampa Preservation Inc. did she work actively on a historic preservation effort in an old downtown neighborhood. Today, helping rescue irreplaceable old buildings from the ravages of the bulldozer still forms an important part of Ms. Abell's vigorous and varied architectural career.

She became president of the Community Design Center in 1977, and still serves as its part-time architect.

Ms. Abell's current projects include helping the Women's Survival Center renovate an old house on the historic register that's used as a shelter, counseling and training center for battered women, displaced homemakers or other women in need. She's also remodeling a former cigar factory in Ybor City (Tampa's original Latin Quarter) into a set of artist's studios and galleries. And then she's got a number of private commissions to work on as well.

Governors Say States To Make Little Effort To Offset Budget Cuts

By DON McLEOD
AP Political Writer
ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — President Reagan's budget cuts are going to be passed straight through to the public with little effort by the states to pick up the losses, according to a survey of the nation's governors.

The governors were reluctant to say just where their own spending programs would be trimmed to pass along the Reagan cuts. "The cuts will come in the programs the Reagan administration has cut, and that's virtually all of them," said Democrat James Hunt of North Carolina.

But the state leaders' choice of cuts over taxes means that reductions in federally assisted programs — ranging from nutrition for the poor to college tuition loans for the middle class — will begin to be felt almost immediately when the new federal budget goes into effect on Oct. 1.

A score of governors responding to the nationwide Associated Press survey said flatly they would react to the Reagan reductions in federal assistance with cuts of their own rather than raise taxes at the state level.

And, while other governors were less emphatic, none of them endorsed state and local taxes to keep up programs that will get less federal money under the fiscal 1982 budget.

Democratic governors generally viewed the losses with more alarm, while Republicans tended to take the cuts as necessary for the good of the economy. But governors in all but the most prosperous states said sacrifices are inevitable.

The National Governors' Association, which opens its annual convention here on Sunday, has supported for years Reagan's basic economic approach of ending categorical federal grants to state and local governments and replacing them with more flexible bloc grants.

The governors contended they could save as much as 10 percent through more efficient delivery of the funds if given this kind of discretion. The budget finally passed last week, however, contains cuts in state aid which the Congressional Budget office suggests may be as deep as 35 percent with inflation is considered.

Future cuts will meet stiff resistance unless state and local officials are given a bigger voice in budget decisions, predicted the association's chairman, Gov. George Busbee of Georgia.

Busbee released a report by the association staff that said the states will have to make up about one-third of the $35 billion in federal aid cuts and will lose another $2.3 billion in corporate tax revenues because of changes in federal tax law and will suffer from higher borrowing costs. Many state tax laws are tied directly to federal law.

The governors' report also said that to meet his spending targets, Reagan must produce even further spending cuts in the budget for the next fiscal year and must make additional cuts of $30 billion in 1983 and $44 billion in 1984.

"Now that the dimensions of these problems are becoming clear, it is essential for the administration, the states and local governments to reach a consensus on further changes in the federal system," Busbee said.

"In the absence of such a consensus, further efforts to shift new responsibilities to state and local government will meet with firm resistance from the states."

How to cope with the extra loss in federal funds will be a key topic of the conference, along with discussion of how to assume state management of the programs that were consolidated under the bloc grants.

"I don't know that any state is going to be able to 'cope' with the reductions," said Gov. George Ariyoshi of Hawaii, a Democrat. "Even though savings will be realized through flexibility of bloc grants these savings cannot, and will not, match the reductions."

Gov. John Spellman of Washington presented the more philosophical Republican view when he said his state has been anticipating the cutbacks and is prepared to live with them.

"It's necessary, bitter medicine for the present economy," Spellman said. "It won't be easy, but it's do-able. It's the old business of providing those services that are really needed, those that are necessary and not merely desirable."

Gov. Richard Thornburgh of Pennsylvania, another Republican, said he plans "to avoid general fund tax increases at the state level, in order to give the president's economic recovery program its best chance to work." But Thornburgh added that "although a final decision has been made, some program reductions may be necessary."

On the Democratic side, Hunt of North Carolina said that "when Washington cuts the money it will be cut in the states. We cannot pick up those cuts. We will not raise taxes. At best we're talking about a 25 percent, perhaps a 35 percent cut, and there's no way we can make that up."

Some states, particularly those rich in energy resources, are better prepared for the cuts. Alaska, for example, has set aside $5 million as a contingency fund to help ease any blow from Washington. Georgia has a $100 million surplus to cushion the blow. Idaho also has set aside a budget cut reserve.

An aide to New Mexico's Democratic Gov. Bruce King replied that the state "has the resources to address those programs we regard as providing vital services."

Gov. Richard Lamm, Democrat, of Colorado said the federal budget will cost his state about $300 million in total federal aid, but he foresees no immediate need to raise Colorado taxes because the current tax structure can handle the initial blow in the critical social service areas. Still, there may be trouble down the road.

"We must come up with creative ways to minimize the impact of the congressional budget decisions on Colorado," Lamm said. "But these financial cuts are so drastic that significant cuts in employment and in-state services are inevitable."

King Daughter Threat Target

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — Yolanda King, the daughter of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King, arrived in North Carolina Saturday under tightened security after alleged threats were made on her life.

Ms. King, 26, was scheduled to speak at Lee Senior High School in Sanford Saturday night at a fund raiser for the King Center in Atlanta.

A unidentified man called the Charlotte Observer and said he had overheard threats being made on Ms. King's life.

A newspaper spokesman said the reporter who took the call said the man did not talk long but said that he had heard Ms. King was in danger from "Nazis in Johnston County."

Pope Improves Despite Fever

ROME (AP) — Pope John Paul II, slightly feverish but improving, sipped liquids Saturday for the first time since abdominal surgery three days earlier, and will leave the hospital in about a week, doctors said.

"All clinical data are positive and underline that the pope is well and is continually recovering," Vatican Radio said.

The pontiff underwent a one-hour operation Wednesday to restore normal functioning of his intestines, wounded in the May 13 attempt to assassinate him. John Paul is receiving the rest of his food intubationally, doctors said.

After he leaves Gemelli Hospital, the pope is expected to rest for at least a month at his summer retreat at Castel Gandolfo in the Alban Hills south of Rome. He should be well enough to swim in the pool, said Dr. Emilio Tresalti, Gemelli's chief medical officer.

"He'll be the same as before, the same pope as before," Tresalti said.

Surgeons reversed an intestinal bypass performed after John Paul was shot in the assassination attempt in St. Peter's Square.

The bypass had enabled him to pass waste through a hole in his side, allowing the intestines to heal. Tresalti said the pope was running a slight temperature of up to 99.5 degrees Fahrenheit, normal after Wednesday's surgery.

Battle Broadens Against Medfly

By The Associated Press

As Florida prepared to take to the air in its battle against the Mediterranean fruit fly, California officials Saturday announced plans to start spraying an additional 179 square miles with pesticide in efforts to halt the spread of the destructive pest.

Officials in Florida — where dead flies were found last week for the first time in 18 years — hoped to act quickly enough make sure any live flies stay away from the state's multibillion-dollar citrus groves.

"We're finishing up on the ground spraying now, and the aerial spraying will begin at daybreak Monday," Frank King, spokesman for the Florida Department of Agriculture team conducting the campaign against the medfly, said Saturday.

In the meantime, King said, state workers will continue checking special traps set up to attract the flies.

"The trapping is an ongoing program," he said. "We're checking them daily, but so far we have found no more fruit flies."

Three dead flies were found Tuesday in a trap in a fruit tree at a home in Tampa, 15 miles from some of the state's huge citrus groves.

State officials promptly blamed the presence of the medflies on produce shipped into Tampa from California, which has been fighting the pest for more than a year. They ordered state workers to use the pesticide malathion on all fruit trees in a mile-square area surrounding the home.

In California, where aerial spraying of malathion began June 14, plans to increase the spraying area were announced Friday after officials said they had found a larval site and a third wild fly outside the present 267-square-mile zone.

The larval find means the fly still is breeding, officials said.

"It just seems as though you are beginning to get on top of the situation, and then, bang, something else raises its head," said George Strathearn, chief deputy director of the California Department of Agriculture.

Fertile flies were found on three successive days in Coyote, Morgan Hill and San Martin, all semi-rural communities south of San Jose in the Santa Clara Valley.

About 92,000 households will be affected by the additional spraying, which will begin sometime in the next few days, officials said. California residents have been vocal in their opposition to the spraying program.

In Florida, King said the spraying of an overlapping 1.5-square-mile area should be completed by 10 a.m. Monday. He said residents had nothing to fear from the spray, although he advised them to wash off any droplets that land on their vehicles.

Tampa-area residents have welcomed the state crews, King said.

"So far, we've had 100 percent cooperation from residents in the area, and that's most gratifying," he said. "We thought maybe we would get some resistance, because of what happened in California. But we've had none at all."

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Douglas Bruce Fenimore, who pleaded guilty to participating in what officials called the largest bank robbery in U.S. history, has been sentenced to 20 years in a federal prison.

In addition to the sentence in the $3.3 million robbery, Fenimore was sentenced Thursday to 10 years in prison for two jewelry store heists, officials said.

Saudi Prince Offers Plan

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — In an interview published Saturday, Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Fahd proposed a new Mideast peace plan, saying Arab states would recognize Israel's right to "live in peace" if Israel allows the creation of a Palestinian state. Israeli reaction was mixed.

Fahd, in charge of daily affairs in King Khaled's monarchy, also called for a new United Nations resolution for a comprehensive peace settlement.

He laid out his eight-point blueprint in an interview with the official Saudi press agency that was published in Beirut newspapers.

In Tel Aviv, Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman Herzl Inbar said, "We don't have the Saudi proposals. We have only what we get from the media, and those are unacceptable proposals to us."

But Inbar said his was a "first reaction," and Israel would wait for more details. A spokesman for Prime Minister Menachem Begin said he was vacationing and could not be reached.

Israeli television quoted members of Begin's Cabinet as saying the plan was "a turning point." The unidentified ministers said Fahd's statement was the first time the Saudis have said they were willing to recognize the Jewish state. One minister was quoted as saying, "Indeed, the conditions are the most radical and are totally unacceptable to Israel. But the readiness to recognize Israel must be viewed as a fundamental change in the Saudi position."

In what some diplomats viewed as significant, Fahd's plan made no mention of the Palestine Liberation Organization which the U.S. and Israeli governments have refused to consider as a partner in peace negotiations.

"Perhaps the omission is to make it easier for the U.S. administration to support the sort of U.N. resolution he is suggesting," said one Western diplomat who declined to be identified.

Elsewhere in the interview, however, Fahd mentioned the "need for the American government to recognize the PLO because it is a fact and a reality and any comprehensive peace in the area must depend upon reality."

Fahd's proposal comes after Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's visit to Washington, where Sadat told President Reagan the United States should open negotiations with the PLO. The administration said the PLO must recognize Israel as a state first. Begin has said he would have nothing to do with the "murderous" organization.

Western diplomats who specialize in Saudi affairs said the crown prince's package appeared designed as an alternative to stalled U.S.-sponsored Palestinian autonomy talks between Egypt and Israel. The diplomats requested anonymity.

The plan, a composite of proposals contained in previous U.N. resolutions, called for:

- Israeli withdrawal from all territory occupied in the 1967 Mideast war.

- Removal of all Israeli settlements in the West Bank and other occupied areas.

- Guarantees of freedom of worship for all religious sects in the holy land.

- Recognition of the right of two million Palestinian refugees to repatriation and compensation for those who did not wish to return.

- A U.N. trusteeship in the Palestinian-populated West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza strip during a transition period of a few months.

- Establishment of an independent Palestinian state with the Arab sector of Jerusalem as its capital.

- Guaranteeing the right of all states in the area to "live in peace."

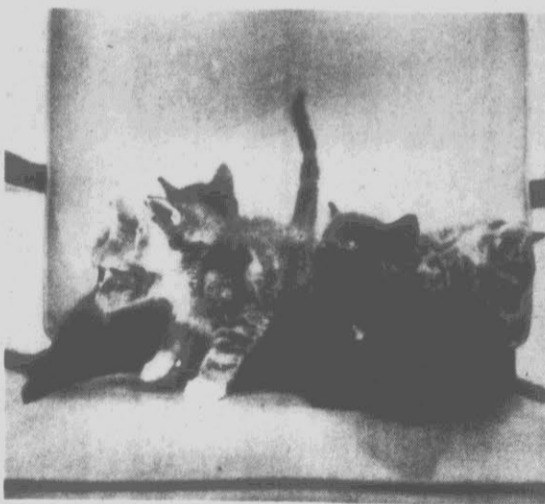

- Guarantees of any agreement by the United Nations or "some of its members," presumably the United States and the Soviet Union.

"I am not the author or inventor of the above (proposals)," Fahd said in the interview. "They are resolutions issued by the U.N. General Assembly or Security Council. They can be put together in one single resolution issued by the Security Council to form a framework for a just and comprehensive settlement."

The PLO and many Arab states have rejected the U.N. Security Council's Resolution 242 of 1967, the cornerstone of previous Mideast peace efforts, as inadequate because it refers to the Palestinians only as refugees.

The resolution says a "just and lasting peace" in the Middle East should be based on the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Arab territories occupied during the Six-Day War and recognition of the right of all states in the region "to live within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force."

Plague Found Near Reagan's Vacation Home

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan is taking precautions against bubonic plague, which was found last month near the mountaintop ranch where he is vacationing.

"The White House was recently advised by the county health department of the possibility of bubonic plague being in proximity to Rancho del Cielo," said a statement issued Saturday by the traveling White House. "Routine precautions as recommended by the county health department are being taken."

Those precautions include not handling wildlife and tucking trousers into boots, said Deputy White House Press Secretary Larry Speakes.

The plague was found last month in a wood rat less than a mile from Reagan's ranch on the Santa Ynez mountains about 20 miles from here. Bubonic plague, which claimed many lives in Europe in the Middle Ages, has not been found in the ranch area since last month, and Speakes expressed little concern over the president's safety.

Dr. Daniel Ruge, the president's physician, reported through White House press aides Saturday that he had been advised of the possibility of the plague before the president arrived here Thursday night. But no thought was given to canceling the trip.

Speakes said Reagan was taking "the normal precautions that his neighbors are taking." Asked whether there was any danger, the press spokesman replied: "If you disregard precautions, there's a possibility."

On the road from Santa Barbara to the ranch, health authorities had put up posters which said "Plague Warning" and advised residents on precautions.

Reagan was spending the day horseback riding with his wife, Nancy, clearing brush from trails and piling wood.

David Pierce, environmental health supervisor for the county health department, was quoted in Saturday's editions of the Los Angeles Times as saying that residents of the ranch area had been warned about the bubonic plague.

"The danger is to make sure that proper precautions are taken to avoid any encounter with the rodent population," he said. "It is important not to handle any wildlife — whether healthy, sick or dead."

The disease often is transmitted to rats and mice by infected fleas. There have been reports that Reagan's ranch has a sizable field mouse population, but Speakes refused to acknowledge that.

The health department sent a warning letter to residents of Refugio Canyon, where Reagan's ranch and others are located, warning that when small animals begin dying from the plague, the fleas often turn to humans.

Lawyers Study Conduct Code

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Sparked by the Watergate scandal, a new code of conduct for lawyers warns an attorney should not be "a policeman or a co-conspirator" for his client, an American Bar Association official said Saturday.

The ethics controversy has confronted the profession since the convictions of several lawyers involved in Watergate.

The American Bar Association, holding a week-long annual convention in New Orleans, is discussing the final draft of the proposed code, which has been four years in the making.

One section lays down a qualified prohibition against revealing confidential information about a client, but states there are times when an attorney may break the privilege.

"We have actually broadened the right of confidentiality," said Robert Kutak, of Omaha, Neb., chairman of the ABA commission that researched and wrote the new code.

But its general theme, he said, is: "The lawyer will not be made either a policeman or a co-conspirator."

Under the proposal, a lawyer would be required to disclose information about a client "when doing so is necessary to avoid assisting an ongoing or prospective fraudulent or criminal transaction."

Geoffrey C. Hazard, a Yale University professor and member of the commission, said the focus of the debate is the definition of a lawyer's role as "advocate" — how he should represent his client.

"You have two competing ideas as to what an 'advocate' is: a lawyer who only says everything good about his client and nothing else, or who brings forth all important information (to the court), good or bad, about a client," Hazard explained.

The reform measure would cover situations where "a lawyer 'has made statements that he subsequently discovers are false or so incomplete as to be fraudulent,'" and "where the client has made false statements and the lawyer's services will assist consummation of a fraud or crime unless the lawyer discloses the correct facts."

Kutak said a major goal of the ethics code is "a lessening of tension between the practitioners and the public," by giving the average lawyer a clearer, more easily understandable set of rules that he can apply to his daily dealings.

The proposal contains far less legal jargon than the old code that it would replace, he stressed.

A second major point of conflict involving the new code involves an attorney's responsibility to provide some free services for those unable to afford legal counsel. An earlier draft of the document contained a requirement that lawyers spend some of their time doing "pro bono," or free work.

It was dropped from the final draft on grounds "such a mandatory provision would not work" and would have been virtually unenforceable, Kutak said. In its place is a section that strongly urges all attorneys to set aside time for such work.

Polish Visited By Soviet

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — The Soviet commander-in-chief of the Warsaw Pact paid a surprise visit to Warsaw Saturday and met Prime Minister Wojciech Jaruzelski to discuss the "readiness" of the Polish army amid the country's labor strife.

The unexpected meeting came one day after half a million workers in Poland's industrial heartland staged a four-hour strike and after the state media launched a publicity campaign against labor unrest, mixed with a warning that the government had the means to protect Poland from anarchy.

At the same time, the Soviet navy is conducting its biggest amphibious landing exercises in the Baltic Sea off the Polish coast.

The state news agency PAP said Jaruzelski, who serves as both defense minister and prime minister, had a "cordial, friendly" meeting with Soviet Marshal Viktor Kulikov, commander of the Warsaw Pact. Also at the meeting were Gen. Florian Siwicki, chief of the Polish army general staff, and Gen. Afanasi Shcheglov, Warsaw Pact representative to the Polish army.

"Participants of the meeting discussed current activities of the (Warsaw Pact treaty states), including the issues of combat readiness of the Polish Peoples Army," PAP said.

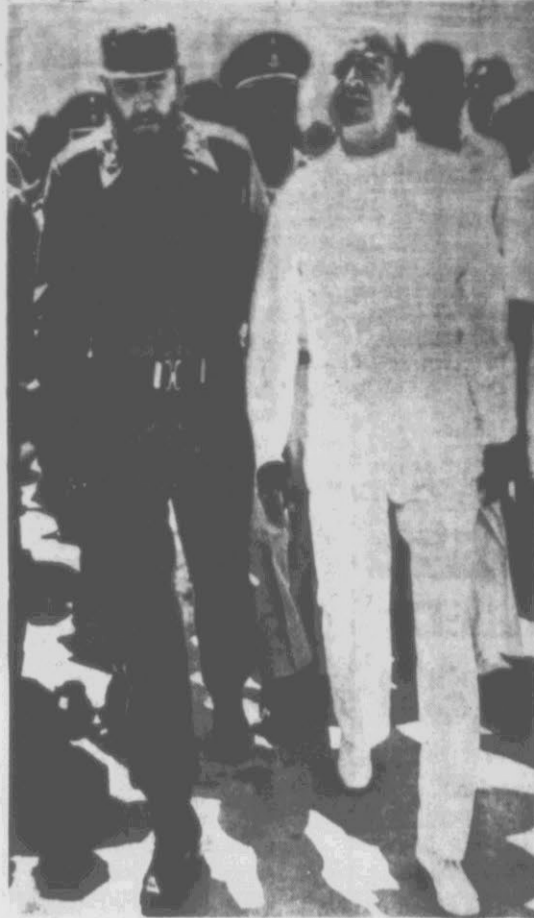

The meeting, the fourth meeting this year between Jaruzelski and Kulikov, came at the end of a hectic week of labor unrest and a government media campaign against it.

In response, Solidarity union leader Lech Walesa challenged the government to a nationally televised debate on the nation's economic crisis and requested 20 minutes of television time to present Solidarity's side in the growing confrontation.

EXPLANATION ... Cuba's Fidel Castro and Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo took a stroll on the resort island of Cozumel before concluding two days of talks Saturday. Mexican Leader Soothes Castro COZUMEL, Mexico (AP) — Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo tried Saturday to explain to Cuban President Fidel Castro why he was being excluded from this fall's summit conference in Mexico of industrialized and developing nations.

A communique issued jointly by the two presidents after four hours of talks said Lopez Portillo told Cuba's communist leader that the absence of President Reagan — who would not attend the summit if Castro did — would "damage the negotiating process between developed and developing countries."

"The President of Cuba thanked President Lopez Portillo for his loyal and spontaneous explanation," the statement said. It added that Castro "nevertheless reserved the right to analyze, at the proper time, the causes" of Cuba's exclusion.

The leaders of 22 nations will meet Oct. 22-23 in the Mexican resort of Cancun, 32 miles north of this Caribbean island, to discuss the issue of distribution of the world's resources among rich and poor nations.

Cuban sources said Castro had told Lopez Portillo he was frustrated by being kept out of the summit and asked Lopez Portillo to help make sure the Reagan administration does not succeed in isolating Cuba from Latin American politics.

The sources added, however, that Castro considers his exclusion from the conference a closed issue at this point. Three Cuban attempts to gain access to the conference have been rejected.

Castro arrived in Cozumel Friday for a two-day visit. The purpose was "to further strengthen the friendly relations that exist between the two countries," according to an official announcement.

Castro was the guest of honor at a dinner Friday night, where he praised Lopez Portillo in a brief toast as "an experienced man, so wise, so capable and so illustrious."

In an equally brief toast, Lopez Portillo said he had invited Castro to "know his views on contemporary problems." The two leaders met for two hours Friday afternoon, shortly after Castro's arrival by yacht.

The Cuban sources said Lopez Portillo also provided Castro with information on a still undefined joint plan by the United States, Canada, Mexico and Venezuela to help Caribbean and Central American nations economically as a way of stemming the violence sweeping the region.

French Nationals Preparing To Flee Iran

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Scores of French nationals seeking to leave Iran were reported gathering behind their shuttered embassy Saturday while the Islamic regime holding up their departure announced more terrorist killings and retaliatory executions by firing squads.

Observers in the Iranian capital reached by telephone said the main gate of the French Embassy opened briefly each time an incoming batch of French arrived. Most of the French men and women arrived early Saturday from their homes and "rushed quickly into the embassy without talking to anyone," the observers said.

All windows and doors in the three-story building otherwise remained shuttered for a fourth straight day, the observers said.

They said a sign on the consular section said "closed until further notice," but the French flag fluttered again on the staff at the main gate after being taken down Friday for unknown reasons. The observers requested anonymity.

French President Francois Mitterrand on Wednesday told the 144 French citizens in Iran to prepare for evacuation because of growing tension over France's decision to grant political asylum to Iran's ousted President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr and a key leftist leader. But Iran barred their immediate departure.

Under an agreement reached Friday between Paris and Tehran, the evacuees would be flown home by regularly scheduled Iran Air jetliners on Monday and Wednesday. So as not to jeopardize the pact, the government in Paris said it would make no weekend statements on the crisis.

In a prayer speech Friday, Tehran Radio broadcast a speech by a top clergyman identified as Ayatollah Meshkini who warned French President Francois Mitterrand that Iranians could treat France the same way they did the United States, when "with clenched fists...America's snout was rubbed in the dust."

Militant students took over the U.S. Embassy in Tehran on Nov. 4, 1979, and held more than 50 Americans hostage for 444 days. Their action was prompted by the arrival of deposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in New York for medical treatment.

Tehran's Jomhuri Islami newspaper of the ruling Islamic Republic said Saturday that firing squads in several parts of the country executed 46 leftists during the previous 24 hours on charges of armed insurrection.

It was the highest execution toll in a single day since the moderate Bani-Sadr was dismissed seven weeks ago. The total number of executions in the period rose to more than 300.

Those executed were accused of belonging to Marxist underground groups like the Mujahedeen Khalq that have been waging an urban guerrilla war against the regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. Assassins riding motorcycles have become a trademark of the campaign and fresh strikes were reported over the weekend.

Civil Rights Leaders Head March Lineup

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — Alabama civil rights leaders said Saturday they expect 10,000 blacks to march on the state capitol Sunday in support of keeping alive the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

The "Save the Voting Rights Act" event was designed to recapture the spirit of the Selma to Montgomery march in 1965 that brought about passage of the civil rights legislation.

Nationally recognized civil rights leaders were billed as headliners for a mass church rally and march although most of the rank and file

Marchers were expected to come from Alabama.

Coretta Scott King, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, president of Operation Push; former U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young, the Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and Walter E. Fauntroy, delegate to Congress from Washington, were among those expected to take part.

Despite the curtailment of some airline service due to the air traffic controllers' strike, Montgomery County Commissioner John Knight said he did not think the out-of-state speakers would have any serious problems arranging transportation to Montgomery.

Knight, a march organizer, said Mrs. King, widow of slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., and others based in Atlanta planned to drive.

Participation in the march was expected to be buoyed by attendance at the annual convention of the Alabama Democratic Conference, a black wing of the state Democratic Party and a key sponsor of the march.

Knight said three large downtown Montgomery motel were booked solid for the weekend activities. He estimated the march would draw some 10,000.

Jackson, Lowery and others led a peaceful march of several thousand blacks in Selma earlier this year in support of extending the Voting Rights Act.

Bill Edwards, director of the Alabama Coalition Against Hunger, called for all "fair-minded citizens in Alabama, both black and white" to join together for the Sunday church rally and march.

"Whites have nothing to fear from an extension of the Voting Rights Act in Alabama," Edwards said. "All that act does is to assure that a fair election process will take place throughout the state. It does not give any group of voters an edge or advantage in elections."

Edwards, a white, said it was unfortunate that Alabama's history was "such that the protections afforded by the Voting Rights Act are necessary."

MISSION TAKEOVER ... A demonstrator shouted slogans from the back of a police van in Washington, D.C., as officers prepared to put another man in the Anti-Khomeini Protest Upset In Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — The hostages are free and the demonstrators are under arrest following a brief takeover of Iran's only U.S. diplomatic outpost. At least three people were injured.

Opponents of Iran's religious leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, seized the Iranian Interest Section at the Algerian Embassy on Friday, sparking a melee between pro- and anti-Khomeini forces.

Demonstrators opposed to Khomeini's regime held about a half-dozen people hostage for about 40 minutes. Authorities said that at first they could not tell the captors from the hostages.

One person was shot and wounded during the takeover and was reported in serious condition at Georgetown University hospital. The person was not identified.

Two dozen demonstrators face charges of destroying diplomatic property, a federal crime punishable by up to five years in prison and a $10,000 fine. FBI spokesman Larry Knisely said the FBI was conducting a joint investigation with District of Columbia police.

Outside the interests section office, some demonstrators shouted "Long live the people, death to Khomeini" as they were frisked and loaded into police vans.

Behind police lines, Khomeini supporters set up a counter-chant: "Long live Khomeini, long live Khomeini."

The demonstrators belonged to the underground Mujahadeen Khalq, the FBI said. The group is led by Massoud Rajavi, who masterminded the July 29 escape of ousted Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr and fled with him from Iran to Paris.

State Department spokesman Alan Romberg described the group as a militant Marxist organization that operated underground in Iran. Several of its members have been executed there, he said.

A man who identified himself only as Husein and told reporters that he was speaking on behalf of the demonstrators claimed later that similar protests had taken place peacefully in Europe and Canada.

"They did not go there to hold hostages. They were there only to expose Khomeini's regime," Husein said of the demonstrators.

The takeover occurred during rush hour Friday on one of Washington's busiest thoroughfares.

Traffic was blocked off for about 20 blocks as police moved into the building to end the showdown.

Police and FBI agents led a group of about 30 people from the building. A police spokesman said later that they were students who were attending a class and had nothing to do with either of the rival factions.

Iranians Stage Hunger Strike

OTISVILLE, N.Y. (AP) — Sixty young Iranians awaiting deportation hearings in a federal prison here continued a hunger strike Saturday, refusing to talk to U.S. authorities, officials said.

Rick Luna, an acting manager of the prison unit, said the Iranians refused to speak, except among themselves, and were delinquent all food except water, tea and sugar.

The hunger strikers, who may be students, face deportation hearings Tuesday for refusing to provide authorities with documentation of their status in this country, according to a spokesman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service who asked not to be identified.

They were arrested in Englewood, N.J., on Wednesday after participating in a six-day hunger strike at the United Nations last week to protest executions carried out by the regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Englewood Police Chief Donald Rowan said the Iranians were picked up after neighbors complained of people sleeping in cars at a parking lot.

"They had no identification," he said. "One of them said he had his papers in an apartment upstairs. When we went up, we found about 50 other people sleeping there."

The Fleming House . . . As Seen By The Artist

Chamber Plans Leasing Party

The Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce has scheduled a leasing party Tuesday from 4-6 p.m. to mark the scheduled start of renovation on the Fleming House, at 302 S. Greene St., as its headquarters.

Chamber president Bob Griffin said work on the Victorian-style house will begin immediately. Plans include staff offices, conference and meeting rooms for members and committees, office space for the Service Corps of Retired Executives and space for storage and expansion as the chamber grows.

The chamber is leasing the house from the city for a token rental. Most of the renovation work is to be donated.

Construction of the Fleming House was begun in 1901 and completed in the summer of 1902. The lot was given to Loula White Fleming as a wedding gift from her father, Captain Charles A. White.

Her husband, James L. Fleming, was active politically and, along with the Greenville Chamber of Commerce, was instrumental in winning enabling legislation for East Carolina Teachers Training School, today East Carolina University.

The Fleming House has large rooms with high ceilings, eight fireplaces and an ornamental slate roof with a handsomely structured corner turret. The double front doors with a heavy two-key mortise lock and beveled glass panels are framed by five colorful stained glass panels across the top and upper sides of the doors. Ornate iron grillwork surrounds the front porch and the spacious yard.

Current plans call for the house to be restored to its original condition.

"The chamber of commerce takes pride in the Greenville area's heritage," Griffin said. "The preservation of this modified Victorian style structure is a tribute to that heritage and to the faith the chamber has in the area's future."

Griffin said business firms may sponsor renovation of a room as a memorial or simply or simply in the name of the business. A decorative plaque in each room will commemorate gifts to the project.

Nuclear Plant Begins Start-Up

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A controlled chain reaction, the first step in starting up a nuclear power plant, was achieved Saturday at the McGuire generating station here, Duke Power Co. said.

"Today went extremely well," said spokeswoman Mary Cartwright in a telephone interview from the plant, about 17 miles north of Charlotte on Lake Norman. The self-sustained chain reaction at the plant's Unit 1 reactor occurred at 9:28 a.m. The reaction begins when a neutron strikes an unstable uranium-235 atom. That action causes the atom to split, freeing two more neutrons.

These neutrons then strike other uranium-235 atoms with the process repeating itself several times. Each time an atom splits, heat is given off. The heat is transferred to water flowing around and between the fuel assemblies in the reactor. This water is circulated to a heat exchanger where steam is made to drive a turbine generator that produces electricity.

The $1.8 billion facility received an operating license from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission on July 8. Unit 2 of McGuire is still under construction and is scheduled for operation in 1983.

Currently, the Unit 1 reactor is being operated at a zero-power level while various tests are performed as part of the start-up procedures.

Court To Get Abortion Dispute

GRAHAM, N.C. (AP) — The dispute between state officials and Alamance County Commissioners over acceptance of state money earmarked for abortions is apparently headed for resolution by court order.

The Alamance Social Services Department has been unable to provide abortion assistance since July 1 after county commissioners refused to include $32,000 in state abortion funds in the local budget.

State officials have already said that decision was a violation of state law, and it has been viewed as a potential test of county rights.

Commission chairman Harvey Newlin joined county attorney Dow Spaulding in a meeting Friday with Assistant N.C. Attorney General Steve Shaber, regional social services director Albert Thompson and state Division of Social Services director John Syria.

Although no settlement came from the meeting, Newlin said Shaber indicated the money probably would be forced in the Alamance budget under court order this week.

"They said they probably will have an injunction by Friday," said Newlin, who has abstained from voting in the abortion funding issue, leaving the commission at a 2-2 deadlock.

Dr. Sarah Morrow, state secretary of human resources, "will have to make the decision on it herself. The only reason they're not doing it now is because she's on vacation," Newlin added.

Spaulding refused to comment on the Friday meeting, saying only that the two sides had discussed several legal implications of the case.

"We had a healthy dialogue," Spaulding said. "We're beginning to understand more about each other's viewpoint. It's an honest problem. Everybody's trying to work it out." Spaulding said he will continue to talk with Shaber by phone, but Newlin said he thinks the state is going ahead with the injunction. "I'm sure they'll have it their way," he said.

Youth Study Disputed

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — The Department of Human Resources is disputing a study that claims too many troubled youths in North Carolina are being sent to training schools.

"It is impossible to tell the number of children who should be treated in training schools," said Human Resources Secretary Sarah Morrow. "Children currently admitted to training schools have generally exhausted the community resources designed to deal with their problems."

"Although the report, by and large, is a positive report which offers helpful suggestions to improve the program, there are certain recommendations which we feel are based on incomplete information or understanding of the program," she said.

Morrow, whose department operates the state's five training schools, said some of the findings in the report are misleading and others were based on findings that were "not necessarily appropriate."

The report was prepared by a Chicago-based prison reform organization for the Governor's Advocacy Council on Children and Youth, a division of the state Department of Administration.

Stephanie Bass, deputy news secretary for Gov. James B. Hunt Jr., said she had not read the report and declined Saturday to comment on the disagreement between the two agencies, which are both under Hunt's control.

"The governor's position has been to try to divert as many young people as possible away from the criminal justice system," Ms. Bass said. "That's why we're making new efforts now to develop community alternatives."

The report, written by the John Howard Association of Chicago, contends judges tend "to rely heavily on institutionalization as a response to delinquency" programs and called the use of training schools by the courts "very unusual."

Between 50 and 75 percent of the youths in training schools "could function in community programs," the report said.

Hunt Eyes Democrats' Nominating Plan... Perhaps For Himself

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Jim Hunt is a successful Southern Democratic governor with the next presidential election on his mind.

That may sound like a familiar scenario, but the second-term North Carolina governor says it's not that he is campaigning himself. Hunt is heading a Democratic National Committee effort to overhaul the party's "reforms" of the 1970's.

It is an effort, says Hunt, to shorten the party's process of nominating a presidential candidate, to position the party in "the mainstream of the country," and to make the nominee more electable.

Hunt, 44, an earnest-sounding moderate who is the first North Carolina governor to win a second full term, plans to take his message to other Democratic governors this week.

He has asked for and received time to address his colleagues on Tuesday at a closed session of the Democratic governors caucus following the National Governor's Association meeting in Atlantic City, N.J.

"I think that if the Democratic governors help us do this job, getting our party clearly into the mainstream of the country, with operating procedures that are fairer and make sure that mainstream Democrats have a strong voice, I think we'll have a far better chance of succeeding," he said.

Hunt is chairman of the party's 69-member Commission on Presidential Nominations. He plans to have it hold four regional hearings around the country following an opening meeting in Washington later this month.

Hunt says his idea is to reduce the time and expense of campaigning for the presidential nomination and to increase the number of elected officials in convention delegations. A strong supporter of former President Carter, Hunt now says he is ready to abandon the "faithful delegate" rule that prevented Carter's delegates from drifting to Massachusetts Sen. Ted Kennedy last year.

The job, given to him by DNC Chairman Charles T. Manatt, figures to attract a lot of attention to Hunt in the next year. Already, Hunt deputy press secretary Brent Hackney says he has had to schedule interviews requested by political writers and television networks while Hunt is in Atlantic City.

But Hunt shrugs off suggestions that he harbors national ambitions, and his political advisors insist that while Hunt sought the commission chairmanship, it wasn't because he is trying to establish his name on the national scene.

"The exposure is fine," says Hackney, "but for people to assume he's using this as a vehicle for something down the road is ludicrous."

"This is the kind of thing that gets you a lot of attention with party regulars, but it's not a high-visibility thing with the public."

But, he acknowledges, if the commission succeeds in making fundamental changes in the party's operations Hunt may indeed gain notice.

Some may suggest that with the demise of the Carter presidency, however, the public won't be interested in another southern Democratic governor. And the parallels to Carter are numerous — Hunt is a patient if sometimes dry speaker, comes from a family tobacco farm, has established a moderate to progressive record and injects an occasional touch of religiosity in his sincere-sounding style.

But he has been included in some recent published speculation about possibilities for the national ticket, along with a group of other young Democratic officials standing by in case the fortunes of Kennedy and former Vice President Walter Mondale should falter.

Former Nixon Aide Plans New Career

COLUMBIA, S.C. (UPI) — Columbia attorney Harry S. Dent, formerly a top aide to President Richard Nixon, is giving up his legal career "to practice and propagate another law — the Law of God."

Dent said he envisions a future as a lay Bible teacher instead of becoming an ordained minister.

"I've been thinking about this for a while," Dent told the Washington correspondent for The State, Columbia's morning newspaper.

He said he decided to spread the gospel after taking a course at Columbia Bible College this summer.

He will enter the college's Graduate School of Bible and Missions next month for a year of study "to bolster my knowledge of the Bible."

"That's what I'm going to concentrate on, and then I will decide where to go from there," he said in the interview published Saturday.

Dent said he sought the advice of several people before he made up his mind, including Charles Colson, a former top Nixon aide and convicted Watergate co-conspirator who later "found" Christ and opened a prison ministry.

"Chuck strongly suggested that a more detailed study of the Bible was in order," Dent said.

Dent has been a Sunday school teacher and church leader for most of his adult life, but he confesses that "I didn't know the Bible like I should have."

While serving in the White House, Dent organized a breakfast prayer group that Colson once said provided him with his first real exposure to the gospel.

Dent said he has advised his legal clients of plans to shut down his law practice "over the next few months" and return to Columbia Bible College this fall.

HOBBY PICKETS — Wilbur Hobby, former president of the North Carolina AFL-CIO, joined a picket line in front of the Federal Building in Raleigh in support of striking air traffic controllers. (AP Laserphoto)

Controllers Have Human Side, Too

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — If anyone knows about bad timing, it's probably Beth Superman.

Miss Superman graduated from the Federal Aviation Administration's air traffic controller's academy at Oklahoma City last month. She took a two-week vacation before reporting to her new assignment at the Kinston airport.

She returned from vacation Sunday, she said, and on Monday she went on strike.

"It was a little disappointing," Miss Superman said Friday as she walked a picket line here. "But I'm 100 percent behind the strike."

Miss Superman, 22, had been working toward the controller's job for more than four years. The Fort Lauderdale, Fla., woman had worked as a trainee in a Miami airport control tower while getting a bachelor's degree in a related program at Florida International University.

"I've been in a busy airport and I've seen the problems," she said. "I know what we're striking for."

"The way I look at it, I've lost my job. I don't like it, but I've prepared for it."

She said she wouldn't let the events keep her out of an aviation career. If the strike isn't settled and she really is out of work, she said she may go back to school for a master's degree in airline management.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Andrew Eckert Jr., an air traffic controller who has been on leave without pay since September, says he can't obey a Federal Aviation Administration order to return to work.

"I've been ordered not to go back to work by my doctor," said Eckert, 38. "I anticipate that I will be fired. But I can't go back out there. I can't do it."

Nightmares, nausea, high blood pressure and depression prompted Eckert to stop working as an air traffic controller at the Little Rock airport.

The FAA, faced with empty spots in control towers at airports across the country because of the controllers' strike, sent Eckert a telegram earlier this week telling him to return to work.

The telegram from Richard Failor, air traffic division, said the strike required the agency to take certain emergency actions.

"Among these actions is the recall of all employees in a leave without pay status," the telegram said.

"If I don't comply, they'll consider me on strike, and fire me," Eckert said. "If they strap me on a position, that would be super dangerous."

Pete Burgess, tower chief at the Little Rock airport, said that the order to report didn't mean Eckert would be accepted for work. Burgess said people ordered to report for duty would have to pass a medical examination.

Eckert developed physical problems in 1979, after working here six years. A psychiatrist recommended that he work in a less stressful atmosphere and his doctors advised him not to go back to work, he said.

He asked the Federal Aviation Administration to take him off the traffic controller job and assign him to administrative duties, "pushing papers," he said.

Instead, he said, the FAA told him in September 1980 to request a leave without pay. That's been his status since.

ASBURY PARK, N.J. (AP) — "You have to be an animal. There's no such thing as a mild-mannered air traffic controller," says Stephen Grasso, describing the job he held for 11 years before being fired for striking illegally.

Only "blue humor" and constant banter among controllers saves them from the nearly unbearable pressure of the job, Grasso said.

Firings Will Leave Mark For Years

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —

The government is moving swiftly to rebuild its decimated air controller corps, but no one really knows how long it will take, whether the shortcuts will compromise safety, or what effect long-term cuts in air traffic will have on the economy.

The Reagan administration considers the controller strike over and is focusing on replacing the 12,000 strikers, nearly two-thirds of the old workforce. Before the year's end air traffic will be 85 to 90 percent of normal, officials hope.

But government and airline industry representatives as well as several former Federal Aviation Administration officials familiar with the air traffic control system say privately the mass firings will leave a clear mark for years to come.

The government with time will replace the fired controllers and might even improve the system with tighter management "and less fat."

one former FAA official said. But industry representatives predict the process is "going to mean a period of re-adjustment that will be costly" and could lead to layoffs in the airline industry.

But this official, asking to remain anonymous, said the airlines will grudgingly accept the situation, which he said was parallel to what the carriers faced when fuel was sharply cut after the 1973 Arab oil embargo. Then the air carriers also had to reduce operations.

Generally, the airlines have supported President Reagan's hard-line response to the strike. "The carriers are tired of being jerked around by these guys (the controllers) for the past decade," said one industry representative, asking that his name not be used.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis said Friday he does not expect the strike to have as much of an impact on the economy as had been expected. He said the administration was working on an economic impact assessment and some "rough figures" should be available early this week.

The administration's recovery plan essentially has two phases: First, plug the holes left by striking controllers; then, speed up and expand training to restore the system to peak levels.

The plugging of the holes began immediately as 2,500 supervisors returned to directing aircraft and steps were taken to move what soon will be about 2,000 military controllers to civilian towers and centers. They joined about 5,000 controllers that stayed on the job or returned during the strike.

Controllers also began shifting around the system to beef up areas sharply hit by the strike. Seventeen towers at small airports were closed and the number will reach 58 by the end of the week — a move that may provide 1,000 controllers for the rest of the system.

Lewis estimates it will take at least a year or two to get the system operating at full strength, although he claims the strike has shown the controller corps was bloated with perhaps 4,000 more controllers than needed.

"There's no question we're in trouble and the public is going to be inconvenienced. This is no cakewalk," Lewis said on the third day of the strike. But he insisted the air routes will remain safe and the system can be rebuilt.

Can the relatively small staff of controllers continue to handle even the reduced traffic load as they did during the first week of the strike?

The striking controllers are banking that they cannot and Robert E. Poll, president of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, says the crunch will come when working controllers become fatigued.

FAA Administrator Lynn J. Helms dismisses the claim as rhetoric. Beginning this week the controllers will work a maximum 48 hours a week to "err on the side of safety," Helms said. He acknowledged some controllers were working 10-hour shifts and up to 58 hours a week during the first 72 hours of the strike.

•East Carolina's 1981 football season gets started Monday when between 180 to 200 walk-ons are expected to start two-a-day practices. The ECU varsity arrives Friday to begin four-a-day practices (6:30, 10:30, 3:30 and 7:30).

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

Memories of a not-so-pleasant transition year gradually receding, East Carolina coach Ed Emory embarks on the second year of his self-imposed five-year plan still firmly convinced of its ultimate success.

"We're going after a winning season. We're out to turn back into a winner, but if we don't win this year I still think we're on the right path," Emory said. "We've got a plan, a philosophy and we're committed to it."

"I'm impatient. I want to win instantly. But at the same time I've got enough belief in myself that (the plan) will work. I didn't come here to go some place else. I came here to be a winner."

Winning was something Emory saw little of last year as the Pirates ended up 4-7, the first losing season for ECU since 1971. Another year like 1980 and the fans, if not Emory himself, may start to question the five-year plan.

"We've filled a lot of holes in a year and we've done a lot of things to make the program stable. But fans and alumni don't look at football different from a business or life."

"It's like building a new bank. It takes time to build your assets. But they expect a coach to get all the assets in one year and you can't do it."

"Last year was a year of walking on egg shells," Emory said. "We tried to make the transition as smoothly as we could and we probably concentrated too much on making the transition year too smooth."

"In the long run, though, I think we made 10 years of progress in one year. Most people judge programs on W's and L's. But having a stable program is just as important."

"We built up a recruiting foundation and a recruiting philosophy. We've built up a strength program. It's like we've gone from a Toyota to a Mercedes in a year."

When the nearly 200 expected walk-ons hit the ECU practice field Monday for two-a-day practices, Emory does not expect to hear the pleasant hum of motorized perfection. Neither does he expect to hear it when the varsity shows up Friday to begin four-a-day practices.

What Emory does expect is a stronger and quicker team and a more intelligent team. He also expects to see a team that is rapidly becoming his, not a team he inherited from his predecessor, Pat Dye.

"We do not have one player who started for Pat Dye on offense, or defense for that matter," Emory said. "The thing that concerns me most right now is our inexperience. We'll have only four playing seniors on offense and one of those (kicker Chuck Bushbeck) is a transfer.

"Depth is a problem that was left here. Dye had 30 seniors his last year here and we've got only seven playing seniors on this football team right now. You can't catch up for four years in one year."

"You look at the situation at North Carolina and (UNC coach Dick) Crum is still playing with some players Bill Dooley recruited. The same thing is true at N.C. State. Monty Kiffin is playing mostly with players Bo Rein recruited."

Emory may lack the senior leadership coaches so yearn for, but he is not without experienced players at nearly every position — if the depth chart from spring practice is to be believed.

On offense, 10 players earned letters last season. Only left guard Oscar Tyson, a 6-foot-1, 220-pound junior, did not. Of those 10, five were starters in 1980.

On defense, 10 players also earned letters last year. Only defensive end Jody Sultz, a 6-foot-4, 220-pound junior, did not. Of those 10, three started last year. Two others — nose guard Wally Myers and free safety Clint Harris — are listed behind players who did not start last season.

Thus, of the top 44 regular offensive and defensive players, 30 — 13 on offense and 17 on defense — earned letters last season.

Steelers Outpoint Cleveland, 35-31

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cliff Stoudt, who has spent his five National Football League seasons in the shadow of veteran Terry Bradshaw, took advantage of the preseason spotlight by scoring two touchdowns and throwing for three more in leading the Pittsburgh Steelers to a 35-31 exhibition victory over the Cleveland Browns Saturday night.

Stoudt, who grew up in nearby Oberlin, dazzled and disappointed the Browns' record preseason crowd of 78,610 by completing 14 of 19 passes for 228 yards in the same stadium where Sunday night's baseball All-Star game was to take place.

The outstanding Steeler offensive show was marred by news that veteran linebacker Jack Ham broke his arm in a third-quarter pileup near the goal line. It was not immediately known how long Ham would be out.

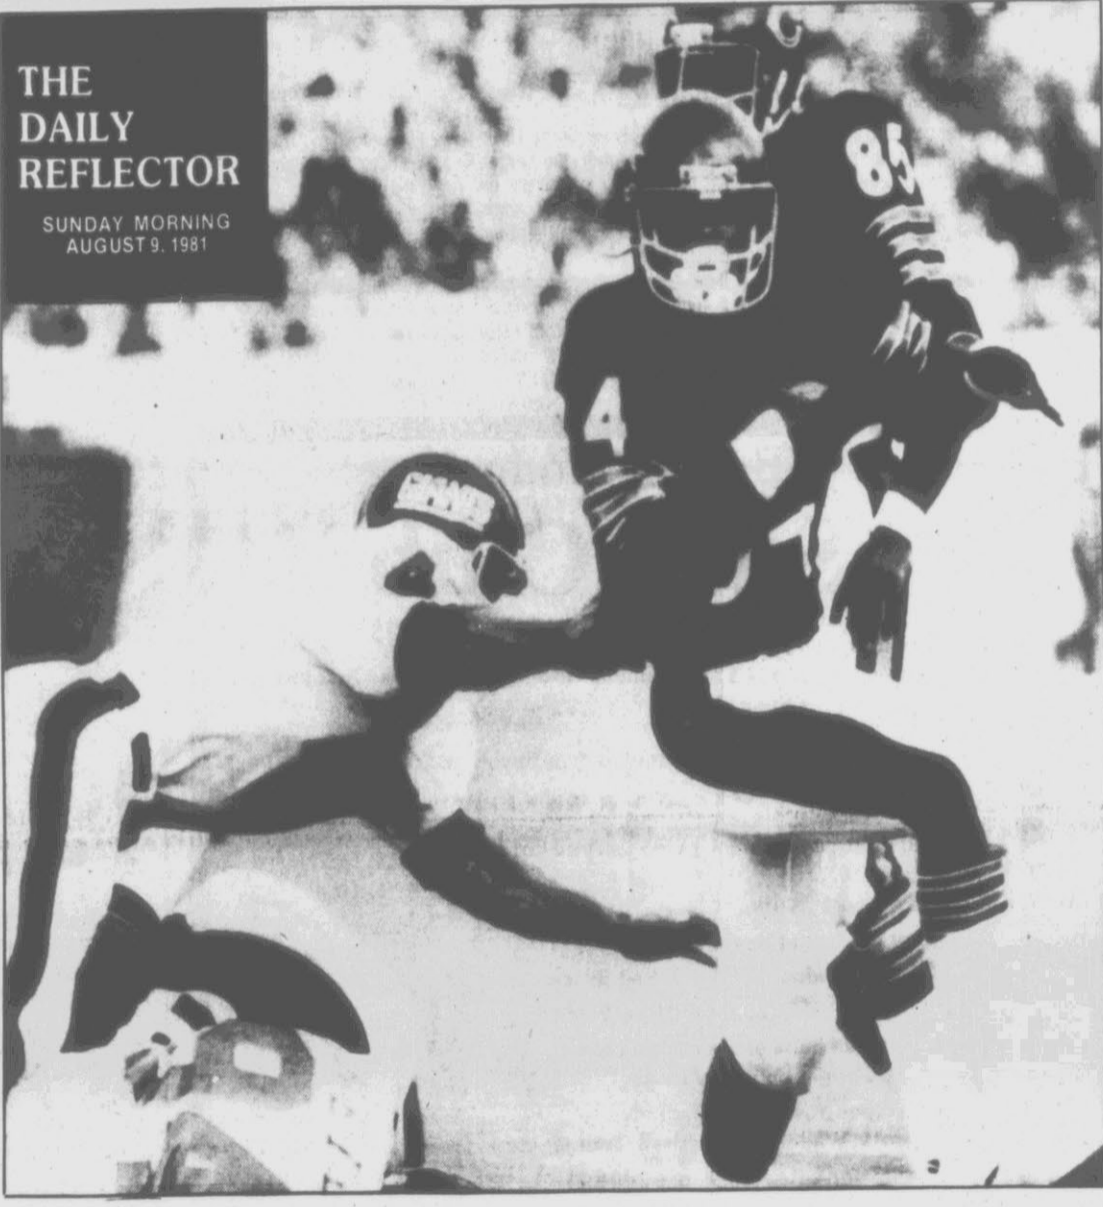

Stoudt directed an offense that collected 356 total yards before he gave way to third-string quarterback Mark Malone in the final period.

The starting quarterbacks ruled the first half, as Pittsburgh ran up a 28-14 edge. Cleveland's Brian Sipe completed 14 of 19 passes for 183 yards during the half, including touchdown strikes of 5 yards to Ricky Feacher and 21 yards to Dave Logan.

Stoudt, though, was even more impressive, completing 10 of his first 13 tosses for 176 yards and scrambling 2 yards for a touchdown.

He fired touchdown passes of 17 yards to Russell Davis, 23 yards to Lynn Swann and 5 yards to John Stallworth, the latter coming as the half expired.

The Browns added a 32-yard field goal in the third quarter, but Stoudt came back on the next Steeler possession, scoring on a 4-yard quarterback draw.

Nelson Streaks To PGA Lead

DULUTH, Ga. (AP) — Larry Nelson, from nearby Acworth, Ga., used a string of three consecutive birdies and a record-matching total to establish a commanding 4-stroke lead going into Sunday's final round of the 63rd PGA national championship.

And Nelson, who didn't take up the game until he started beating balls on his lunch break from a factory, has a habit of winning when he's in front.

"I've won four tournaments on the tour and every one has come when I was leading going into the last round," Nelson said after shooting a 4-under-par 66 in Saturday's third round.

Responding to a question concerning his attitude going into the final round, Nelson replied:

"My nerves are great. I'm looking forward to tomorrow."

He paused for a half-beat, let the hint of a smile break the often expressionless cast of his features, and said, "Especially tomorrow evening."

Jack Nicklaus, the defending champion who all but took himself out of it, acknowledged Nelson's control of the situation.

"Whatever he does tomorrow is the dictating factor to the rest of the field," Nicklaus said.

"I don't think he'll back up, and he'd have to do that to give anybody else much of a chance. Larry's a good player. And he's playing in wet, humid conditions he's familiar with."

And he's playing before a familiar gallery, a vast gathering of friends, relatives and neighbors who wildly applauded his go-ahead burst of three consecutive birdies.

That burst combined with Nicklaus' inability to make any definitive move at the leaders severely damaged any hopes the "Golden Bear" may have had of making a successful title defense in this, the last of the year's Big Four events.

Nicklaus, seeking a record sixth PGA title and 18th major professional crown, could do no better than a 71 that left him at 210, 8 shots off the pace.

The 41-year-old Nicklaus was very much aware of the difficulties facing him in the quest for his first victory in 12 months.

"I'll have to shoot in the mid-60s tomorrow to have a chance," he said. "And even that might not be good enough."

Nelson, once an illustrator at an aircraft factory in the Atlanta suburbs, put together a leading, 202 total, 8 strokes under par on the Atlanta Athletic Club course, a difficult layout that plays much longer than its listed 7,070 yards.

His 54-hole total tied the record for PGA championship play, set by Ray Floyd in 1969.

Nelson, winner of four tournaments over the last 2½ seasons and gunning for the first major title in an unusual career, took command with a 20-foot putt on the 11th hole, the first of three consecutive birdies for the slightly-built, soft-spoken 33-year-old.

And, just as he began to move to joyous shouts and yells of his gallery, the other contenders began to fade and left the tournament in his hands.

In the end, only free spirit Fuzzy Zoeller, the easy-going former Masters champion, could keep him in sight. Zoeller, winner of the Colonial National Invitation earlier this season, birdied the 17th hole for a 68 that left him at 206.

Tom Kite, golf's steadiest, most consistent performer this season with finishes of seventh or better in 10 of his last 11 starts, and Andy North, the big guy who has finished second in his last two starts, were another stroke back at 207. North had an erratic 70 that included four birdies and as many bogeys, and Kite shot 69 despite a ball in the water that led to a double-bogey on the 15th.

Bob Murphy, who had led the first two rounds, slipped to a 73 and was tied at 208 with Greg Norman, Bob Eastwood and Vance Heafner. Norman, the white-haired Australian who challenged in both the Masters and U.S. Open, had a 68. Eastwood shot a 72 that included a hole in one, a 3-iron shot that found the cup on the 210-yard fourth. Heafner shot 70.

Jerry Pate, who won the U.S. Open on this course in his rookie year of 1976, couldn't keep pace. Four strokes back and very much in contention when play started under gray, threatening skies that occasionally leaked a drizzling rain, Pate matched par 70 and was at 209.

Some other scores: Bruce Lietzke 70-211, Ray Floyd 71-212, Hale Irwin 68-213, British Open champion Bill Rogers 66-213. U.S. Open title-holder David Graham 74-218.

Tom Watson, the current Masters champ and Player of the Year for the past four seasons, missed the cut for the final two rounds.

Watson hit one in the water on 36th hole, made double-bogey and completed two rounds at 148. The cut was at 147. It wasn't set until Saturday morning, however, when 23 players who were stranded on the course by a Friday night storm came back to finish their rounds.

Nelson, winner of the Greensboro Open earlier this year, was 1 stroke off the pace when play started and, with Eastwood making an ace on the fourth, remained one back when he reached the turn in 1-under-par 34.

The journeyman Eastwood, who joined the tour in 1969 and is still seeking his first victory, bogeyed the 10th and 11th holes, however, and Nelson began his move with the birdie putt on the 11th.

CFA, NBC Sign TV Agreement

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The College Football Association announced Saturday it has reached an agreement with NBC on a four-year, $180 million contract.

Ten days ago, the National Collegiate Athletic Association announced a four-year, $263 million agreement with ABC and CBS. The two organizations, the CFA and NCAA, now appear to be in direct conflict, and in the words of one official, "It's anybody's guess as to what happens."

The CFA is a 5-year-old group comprised of all major football conferences and independents, except the Pacific 10 Conference and Big Ten Conference.

Charles M. Neinas, CFA executive director, said the NBC package would guarantee all 62 CFA members a minimum of two television appearances and $1 million during the four-year period.

Both the NCAA and CFA agreements cover the period from 1982 to 1985. ABC has this season remaining on its contract with the NCAA.

The CFA pact will be presented for ratification by the CFA membership at a special meeting Aug. 21 in Atlanta.

A primary feature of the CFA-NBC deal, and one rejected in earlier NCAA-NBC negotiations, allows for Saturday night prime-time telecasts.

Under the CFA agreement, NBC will televise a minimum of 11 prime-time games Saturday night in 1982, plus a minimum of six and a maximum 12 prime-time games during the rest of the contract period.

The NCAA rejected that concept on the grounds that few stadiums were equipped with lights and that universities in the Southwest and Southeast would have an advantage.

Neinas said the cost of installing adequate lighting had been estimated at $600,000.

The CFA board of directors approved the NBC package unanimously in a conference call Friday.

"We are happy to confirm the details of the announcement and look forward with eager anticipation to the vote taken in Atlanta on Aug. 21," said Geoffrey Mason, executive vice president of NBC sports.

Neinas said the CFA agreement allows a school to appear seven times over a two-year period. He said there will be an average of 92 team appearances each year, including 14 national and 32 regional telecasts.

There has been speculation inside and outside the collegiate athletic community that many schools could leave the NCAA as a result of the CFA's action.

Neinas and other CFA executives repeatedly deny this is their plan, but admit it is a possibility.

The Associated Press has obtained a copy of a July 11 report from Neinas to the CFA board of directors. In it, Neinas told the board, "Should the CFA's involvement in an independent television program result in the organization's divorce from the NCAA, NBC is willing to commit the means to support CFA activities in other sports and provide CLEVELAND (AP) — Rookie sensation Fernando Valenzuela of the Los Angeles Dodgers and veteran Jack Morris of the Detroit Tigers were named Saturday as the starting pitchers for the 52nd All-Star baseball game, delayed nearly a month by the strike of major league players.

Managers Dallas Green of the World Champion Philadelphia Phillies for the National League and Jim Frey of the Kansas City Royals for the American League announced their starting pitchers and opening lineups for Sunday night's game as the baseball community gathered for a resumption of the season which was interrupted by the seven-week strike.

Valenzuela and Morris had each won nine games before June 12, when the players walked out in a dispute with management over free-agent compensation.

Green said he would open with Phillies first baseman Pete Rose leading off. Rose tied Stan Musial's National League career record of 3,630 hits the day before the strike began. He will be shooting for the record when the regular season resumes Monday night.

"When you start with Pete Rose, you're starting with the best," said Green.

Behind the Phillies' first basemap, Green said he would bat shortstop Dave Concepcion of the Cincinnati Reds. Pittsburgh's Dave Parker will be in right field, batting third. Third baseman Mike Schmidt of the Phillies bats cleanup, followed by left fielder George Foster of Cincinnati and center fielder Andre Dawson of Montreal. Catcher Gary Carter of Montreal will bat seventh, followed by Los Angeles second baseman Davey Lopes and Valenzuela, or, as

Green referred to him, "the state of Mexico."

Frey said the AL lineup would start with California first baseman Rod Carew, followed by second baseman Willie Randolph of the New York Yankees and third baseman George Brett of the Royals.

New York's Dave Winfield will bat fourth and center field, followed by Ken Singleton of Baltimore in left field and Reggie Jackson of the Yankees in right field.

Chicago catcher Carlton Fisk, shortstop Bucky Dent of the Yankees, and Morris complete the AL starting lineup.

Green said he looked forward to his first All-Star managing assignment.

"For a guy who doesn't want to manage, a lot has happened in one year," he said. "This is special. It almost got away from me but we made it."

Green said choosing his 30-man squad was difficult.

"I've made some mistakes but I back off to no one on this club," he said. "It's a good one and I'm proud to be a part of it."

Frey said the American League team "could be a 45-man roster as far as I'm concerned. It was a numbers game. I've got a dining room table full of statistics. I picked the team based on the performances in the first few months and I tried to do the best I could."

Green said he would use each pitcher on his staff for no more than one inning and that Tom Seaver of the Cincinnati Reds would follow Valenzuela.

Frey did not limit himself to one inning per pitcher and said Cleveland's Len Barker would be his second hurler. Earlier this season, Barker pitched the first perfect game in the major leagues

Valenzuela To Start...

There was one roster change announced, with New York Yankees' reliever Rich Gossage scratched because of a bad shoulder and replaced by teammate Ron Davis.

Morris said he was surprised to be picked as the starting pitcher for the American League in his first All-Star appearance.

"It's probably the biggest thrill of my life, I'm all excited about it," he said.

Morris depends on three pitches: fastball, slider and changeup.

Valenzuela, a screwball specialist, was not present at the media conference.

He was quoted in a translation provided by Dodgers' broadcaster Jaime Jarrin, his interpreter, as saying, "First I was very excited to learn I had been named to the All-Star team in my first year in the major leagues. Then to learn I have been named to start the game is an even greater honor."

Brett, the AL batting champion and most valuable player last season, compared playing the All-Star Game after an eight-week layoff to coming back from a long injury.

"Last year, I missed 30 days with torn ligaments in my right ankle," he said. "This is similar. But I'm in good shape and I look forward to playing tomorrow night. I'll do everything possible to win."

Frey called the All-Star managing assignment "a big kick for me."

Fernando Valenzuela

"I like being here. I played 14 years but never in the big leagues and there were times I didn't know what I'd be doing to make a living, much less managing an All-Star Game."

Detroit Nips Bills, 21-14

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Detroit Lions defensive end William Gay recovered a Buffalo fumble in the end zone Saturday as the Lions scored twice within 19 seconds late in the fourth quarter to defeat the Bills 21-14 in the National Football League exhibition opener for both squads.

Detroit came from behind twice, forging a 7-7 tie on fullback Bo Robinson's 7-yard blast in the third period and a 14-14 deadlock on a 1-yard plunge by Vince Thompson with 4:21 left in the game.

Earlier, Buffalo quarterback Joe Ferguson passed 24 yards to wide receiver Jerry Butler on a first-period touchdown and reserve signal-caller Dan Manucci hooked up with rookie Byron Franklin for an 83-yard score.

The loss before 33,640 rain-drenched fans was Buffalo's 12th in 13 preseason contests under head Coach Chuck Knox.

Gay, a 250-pound second-stringer, scored a rare lineman's touchdown after he crashed into Manucci and running back Robb Riddick while the two were botching a handoff. The play started on Buffalo's 10-yard line, but Gay batted the ball into the end zone and pounced on it for the decisive tally.

Cincinnati 24 Tampa Bay 17

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Second-string tight end M.L. Harris caught touchdown passes of 8, 3 and 26 yards to lead the Cincinnati Bengals to a 24-17 victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in a National Football League preseason opener Saturday night.

Fumbles by rookie fullback James Wilder, the Bucs second-round draft choice, set up two of those touchdowns — an 8-yard first quarter toss from Bengals quarterback Ken Anderson and a 26-yard scoring strike from reserve quarterback Jack Thompson in the third period.

Anderson, who played only the first quarter, completed six of seven passes for 96 yards and also hit Harris with a 3-yard scoring pass.

Harris, a second-year pro from Kansas State and the University of Tampa, who came to the Bengals after four years in the Canadian Football League, had five receptions for 62 yards.

Placekicker Jim Breech added the rest of Cincinnati's points with a 25-yard field goal in the second quarter and three extra points.

Trailing 17-0 midway through the second period, Tampa got on the board on a 1-yard touchdown run by quarterback Doug Williams, who faked a handoff and ran around left end.

Williams played the first half and completed 12 of 23 passes for 144 yards.

New Orleans 24 Baltimore 23

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Bennie Ricardo kicked a 35-yard field goal with 33 seconds left on the clock to give the New Orleans Saints a 24-23 victory over the Baltimore Colts in a National Football League opener for both teams.

The kick capped a bizarre fourth quarter rally that saw the Saints score twice on fumbled snaps as the Colts lined up to punt.

Earlier in the quarter, rookie linebacker Rickey Jackson recovered a fumbled snap in the end zone for a touchdown to put the Saints in position to win the game.

New Orleans got first-half touchdowns from running backs Toussaint Tyler, who scored on a 2-yard run, and Wayne Wilson, who swept in from 7 yards out.

It was a successful debut for new Coach Bum Phillips.

The Colts had overcome a 14-9 halftime deficit with backup quarterback Greg Landry engineering two second-half touchdown drives for Baltimore.

Matthews: Feeney Left Me Off

BALTIMORE (AP) — Philadelphia Phillies outfielder Gary Matthews says there's someone behind his absence from the National League roster for Sunday night's All-Star game: National League President Chub Feeney.

"He's the one who left me out of it. I have the statistics to merit it," Matthews said Friday night after the Phillies defeated the Orioles 2-1 in an exhibition game.

Matthews figures his .317 average and his 30 RBIs would likely secure an All-Star spot for someone like Greg Luzinski, who played left field for the Phillies before being sold to the White Sox this year after the team acquired Matthews from Atlanta.

"I don't mean that as a black-white thing," said Matthews, who is black. "I think I have an unorthodox style of play. I'm not saying it's good or bad, it's just my style. The whole thing's political, you know? What can I say?"

Matthews, an aggressive player who rarely speaks of his achievements, has found himself in the middle of controversy before.

After becoming the National League Rookie of the Year in 1973, when he hit .300 for the San Francisco Giants, he became a free agent and went to the Atlanta Braves in 1977. Braves owner Ted Turner was suspended from baseball for a year by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn on charges he had negotiated with Matthews while he still was playing for the Giants.

Matthews' solid four-year career in Atlanta turned sour last year, though, when a dispute with Turner left Matthews on the bench for awhile.

Even without Matthews, the world champion Phils will be represented in Cleveland Sunday night, with five players in the lineup and Manager Dallas Green at the helm.

But while the argument might be offered that five Phillies are enough, Matthews points out that there are six Dodgers on the All-Star roster.

"What kind of stuff is that?" he said. "That doesn't really make sense to me. Maybe Chub had a little more to do with it than Dallas, don't you think?"

"I feel if Dallas had his say-so, I'd be on the team. And that makes me feel a little better. But it's not as good as being there."

Matthews' grudge does not extend to those who did make the roster. In fact, he's glad for his friend Dusty Baker of the Dodgers, who will be playing his first All-Star Game.

"If it came down to Dusty or me, I'm glad he got there because he's never had the chance to play in it," said Matthews, who has played in one All-Star game. "But what bothers me is that it doesn't matter how hard you play or what you do or what your statistics are. If they don't like you, you're not going to go."

Baseball Season Back Monday With Full Slate

By The Associated Press

Major league baseball resumes its regular season Monday with radically altered championship races and hopes that the fans will forgive and forget after a seven-week strike.

The New York Mets and the Chicago Cubs, who had the National League's worst records when the players' walkout began June 12, open the "second season" with an afternoon game at Wrigley Field, ending 59 days and 714 games without regular-season competition.

Monday night, the other 24 teams join the race for a spot in the expanded playoff system spawned by the strike, the longest in baseball's history.

Pittsburgh is at Montreal, St. Louis at Philadelphia, Cincinnati at Los Angeles, Atlanta at San Diego and Houston at San Francisco in the other NL openers.

In the American League, the Chicago White Sox are at Boston, Kansas City is at Baltimore, Milwaukee at Cleveland, Toronto at Detroit, Oakland at Minnesota, California at Seattle and Texas meets the Yankees at New York.

Fans whetted their appetites for the resumption of the regular season in exhibition games over the weekend, and they get a chance to see the sport's best in action Sunday night when the All-Star Game, originally set for July 14, is played at Cleveland.

When the strike interrupted the season, four tight pennant races were in progress. Philadelphia led the NL East by 1 1/2 games over St. Louis; Los Angeles had a half-game edge over Cincinnati in the NL West; the Yankees led Baltimore by two games in the AL East, and Oakland was atop the AL West by 1 1/2 games over Texas.

But when the season resumes, all teams will start from 0-0. With almost two months cut out of the heart of the summer game, the owners voted last week to split the season, declaring the teams in first place when the strike began as first-half winners and starting the second half Monday.

They also added a new playoff level, a best-of-five series between the first- and second-half winners of each division, with those four winners advancing to the league Championship Series. If a team wins both halves, it will play the club with the second-best overall winning percentage in its division in the first round.

Because of the All-Star Game, some teams will be deprived of using their best pitchers for the second-half openers. While traditional opening-day matchups between staff aces may be impossible, however, some clubs are doing everything else they can to lure fans to the ballparks Monday.

The Yankees, for example, are giving away T-shirts to young fans attending the first game against Texas.

In Philadelphia, the fireworks display that had been set for the Phillies' game July 4 will follow the opener against the Cardinals.

The first 40,000 fans entering Candlestick Park for the Houston-San Francisco game will receive a free Giants photo album.

television coverage and appropriate revenue in connection with such sports."

Tom Hansen, an assistant executive director of the NCAA, said the announcement Saturday could be interpreted as a challenge to the NCAA.

"The NCAA program offers so many more benefits, that for them to pursue a separate program signals not a desire to better the television situations of their members, but a desire to be hurtful of the NCAA and its programs," Hansen said.

Essentially, the differences are these: The NCAA package would guarantee about 192 more team appearances over four years than with the CFA; the CFA would distribute $180 million to 62 colleges, while the NCAA would split $263 million for its 138 Division I institutions, and the CFA would offer Saturday night telecasts and the NCAA wouldn't.

Neinas also said the CFA-NBC package would put the same 8 percent into the NCAA national organization that is called for in the NCAA plan.

The NCAA, which contains more than 600 members nationwide, including small schools without athletic programs of national prominence, is funded mainly from its national basketball tournament.

If a significant number of schools vote on adhering to the CFA plan, the NCAA has said probationary procedures would be started.

This could lead to expulsion. A member of the NCAA can be expelled by a two-thirds majority vote at the organization's national convention.

"It suddenly appears selfish when a small group of people would jeopardize the $263 million program, of which they stand to gain a good portion, just for their own separate agreement with $83 million less," Hansen said.

Hands Of Stone Ready To Make Ring Comeback

CLEVELAND (AP) — "He's the little guy in the white hat," the barmaid said, seeing Roberto Duran through a window. There he was, a snow white hat covering some of the mop of coal-black hair — Roberto Duran, the fighter whose image color was always villain black until that night in New Orleans. The 5-foot-7½ Duran, with the blazing eyes and the attacking style, was Hands of Stone, El Animal. Then last Nov. 25 in the Superdome he quit in the eighth round and lost the World Boxing Council welterweight championship to Sugar Ray Leonard. He said he was sick to his stomach. He said he would never fight again. Sunday, Duran fights again in a scheduled 10-round junior middleweight bout with 22-year-old Nino Gonzalez. His purse — $75,000 tax free and more than 100 times smaller than his paycheck in New Orleans. His purpose — to obtain a rematch with Leonard, something Leonard has said will never happen. The 30-year-old Panamanian's comeback will be televised live by CBS from the 9,000-seat Public Auditorium between 4:30 p.m. 4:45 p.m. EDT, about four hours before the major league baseball All-Star Game at Cleveland Stadium. "I didn't lose any respect for him as a fighter," the 22-year-old Gonzalez, of Bayonne, N.J., said of Duran's quitting in New Orleans. "Maybe he had a reason. Maybe he did have cramps." But by his actions, Gonzalez has illustrated the change in Duran's image. He turned down a $40,000 title bid against Wilfred Benitez, the WBC super welterweight champion, to fight Duran for $50,000. That is a show of confidence against a man who was once one of the most feared fighters in the game; a show of confidence by a young fighter who admitted he was nervous when he sparred three rounds with Duran last year. Duran says he doesn't feel he has to prove himself, but in a display of temper, Gonzalez hit at the heart of the matter that almost certainly has haunted Duran into a comeback. At a news conference earlier in the week, Duran made slurs about Puerto Ricans to Gonzalez, who is of Puerto Rican descent. Gonzalez snapped back at Duran in Spanish: "A Puerto Rican may go down, but he doesn't quit." Duran says he has learned to live with the shadow that has been cast on his brilliant 72-2 career, which includes 55 knockouts, wins in all 13 lightweight title bouts and the welterweight title victory over Leonard in Montreal June 20, 1980. But he's now in a weight class, which, a Duran aide says, hopefully will lead to another fight with Leonard. A victory over Gonzalez, who has a 24-1 record, with 13 knockouts, could lead to a title fight against Benitez for Duran. Promoter Don King has already offered Benitez $1 million for such a fight, and Duran said, "If that opportunity comes I'll take it."

The WBA half of the 154-pound class title is held by Leonard. The weigh-in for Duran's comeback was set for 4 p.m. today, with the contract calling for each fighter to come in at 154, give or take a pound. Duran says he has not set any limits on how long he will continue to fight. But a man close to him said that Duran will quit if he doesn't get a fight with Leonard in a year. Gonzalez could make it happen sooner. Two other 10-rounders are also on the card, one of them featuring Michael "Dynamite" Dokes, the WBC's No. 2-ranked heavyweight contender. Dokes, 22-0-1, of Akron, Ohio, meets Harry Terrell, 20-6, of Cleveland. In a 10-round middleweight bout, Ralph Moncreif of Cleveland opposes Bernard "Super Bad" Mays of Detroit. An eight-round middleweight fight matches Mark Holmes, 12-0, of Easton, Pa., and Benny Mitchell of Columbus Ohio. Holmes is a younger brother of Larry Holmes, the WBC heavyweight champion.

Jaeger Captures Clay Court Crown

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — most unattractive match I've seen in my life," Ruzici said. "I tried absolutely everything. It's easy to say, 'Why didn't you attack more?' but the ball bounces so high on this surface, it was difficult to hit a winner." Ruzici said the match, for the fans, "probably was boring. But tactically (for Jaeger), it was not bad. I have to give her credit for how she played. I have to congratulate her for her will power, for her patience the whole match.

"There were some points when I was bored, but more than bored I was frustrated," Ruzici added.

The 16-year-old Jaeger, ranked third in the world and seeded No. 1 here, was runner-up to Chris Evert Lloyd last year. It was another frustrating loss for the No. 2-seeded Ruzici, who has been beaten in the finals of seven tournaments the past two years and has not won a major tourney since the 1978 French Open.

The 26-year-old Ruzici, ranked ninth in the world, was broken on her own service all four times in the first set and all three times in the second set of the nationally televised match.

A volley of 70 hits on one point in the very first game set the tone of the match. Jaeger, of Lincolnshire, Ill., finally won that point and the next to break Ruzici's serve.

Jaeger also won a 101-hit volley in the next game to force a deuce and captured the next six points for another break and a 3-0 lead.

Jaeger, earning a first prize of $27,500 from a purse of $30,000, held service and broke Ruzici again for a commanding 5-0 advantage. Ruzici managed to win the next game, but Jaeger broke her service for the fourth time, winning on a double-fault, to wrap up the first set.

Another volley of 135 hits started the second set, which Jaeger again dominated. She broke Ruzici on the second, fourth and sixth games of that set.

Ruzici, who was to play with Joanne Russell in the doubles championship Saturday night against Sue Barker and Paula Smith, earned $14,000 for the singles' runnerup finish.

Ruzici said Jaeger "was very courageous to walk out there on national television and play the way she did. She didn't miss many shots and I made all the mistakes.

Stacy Atop Classic By Two Strokes

WHEELING, W.Va. (AP) — Hollis Stacy, overcoming a possibly disastrous 18th hole, fired her second straight sub-par round with a 70 Saturday for a two-shot lead over Kathy Postlewait after two rounds of the $125,000 West Virginia LPGA Classic.

At one point during the second round, Stacy — with birdie putts of 10 feet apiece on the ninth and 10th holes — held a seven-shot lead over Postlewait. But on the final eight holes, Stacy lost two shots to par while Postlewait birdied three of the final eight holes.

Stacy was at 138 while Postlewait fired a 71 for a 140 total. Stacy held a three-shot lead over Postlewait going into the 18th hole, a dangerous 475-yard par 5 that was playing particularly tough because of a difficult pin setting on the front edge of the undulating green. Putting from 20 feet for a birdie, Stacy's putt meandered down the green, rolled past the hole and wound up on the fringe of the green about 25 feet away from the cup. Stacy then played it safe, placing her par putt attempt to within two feet of the hole, then tapped home for a bogey. "I thought I'd be putting all night," said Stacy, a runnerup here in 1977. She called her 18th hole bogey "a good bogey. It's not too difficult a hole when you get below the hole ... but I got below it twice."

Winterville Wins

KINSTON — Winterville defeated Kinston, 9-8, Friday in the 9-12-year-old Babe Ruth state tournament here. Greene County's game with Person County was rained out in the second inning Saturday and will be played today at 1 p.m.

Postlewait, who shot a 1-under 71 Saturday, missed a birdie putt from five feet that would have sliced Stacy's lead to one shot. Tied at 2-under-par 142 — four shots out of the lead and two shots behind Postlewait — are Kathy Hite, the tour's second leading money winner, Pat Bradley, and Cathy Sherk. Hite and Pat Meyers, who was at four-over 148, tied for the best round of the day Saturday with identical 69s.

Winterville will meet Dare County "Green" at 3:30 with the winner playing the loser of the Greene County-Person County game. The tournament finals are set for Monday.

Protest Toot To Greet Stars In Cleveland?

CLEVELAND (AP) — Paul Meagher is bringing 10,000 whistles to Sunday night's All-Star Game in hopes that fans will join him in a massive protest toot.

Meagher, of Washington, founded the American Baseball Fans Association, which earned a non-profit charter June 19. He said the organization, a product of the 50-day baseball strike, has about 600 dues-paying members in 22 of the 24 major league cities, excluding the two Canadian entries, Toronto and Montreal.

"Fans have been ignored during the baseball strike," said Meagher, 38, a bartender at a Capitol Hill restaurant. "It is our game. We carry the statistics, the memories."

Meagher's protest calls for fans to "blow the whistle" on owners and players after the ceremonial first pitch thrown by Vice President George Bush and after the first pitch of every inning.

He said one object of his group's wrath is baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

Mayberry Returns, Sinks Mets

By The Associated Press Under normal circumstances, the New York Mets would have seen the last of big John Mayberry when the veteran Toronto first baseman was replaced in the fourth inning of Saturday's exhibition game, after belting a two-run homer in the previous inning.

But the strike-interrupted 1981 baseball season can hardly be called normal, so there was Mayberry — thanks to the free substitution rule being used in some exhibitions — up at the plate again in the ninth inning with the winning run on second base.

"That free substitution sure seems like a good rule to me," said Blue Jays Manager Bobby Mattick after Mayberry's RBI single capped a three-run rally that gave Toronto a 9-8 victory over the Mets Saturday before a sparse crowd of 4,671.

Mets relief ace Neil Allen was unable to hold an 8-6 lead, facing four batters in the ninth and getting no one out. Alfredo Griffin led off with a single and scored on Lloyd Moseby's triple to left-center. Otto Velez doubled to the same spot, setting the stage for Mayberry's game-winning single to center.

In other exhibition games, the Chicago Cubs edged the Chicago White Sox 4-3, the New York Yankees defeated their Bradenton, Fla. farm team 4-2 and the San Francisco Giants topped the Oakland A's 6-3.

The Mets had 16 hits, including home runs by Ellis Valentine, Dave Kingman and Mike Cuddage, while the Blue Jays — batting a lowly 218 before the strike, collected 15 hits, including homers by Mayberry and Garth Iorg.

Mattick was happy with the performance of the Blue Jays, whose pre-strike record of 16-42 was the worst in the majors. Toronto won 7-3 Friday night in New York.

"It's important for us to have won these two games," said Mattick. "It proved to the players that they can come back and that has to help their confidence. I thought all along that we're a better ballclub than last year."

The Cubs won bragging rights to the Windy City by edging the White Sox before 20,113 at Wrigley Field. The clubs had played a scoreless tie

Friday night in a game called after nine innings.

The Cubs got the winning run an inning later when Tim Lincecum beat out a slow roller to short, took second on a sacrifice by Jerry Morales and came home on a throwing error by White Sox shortstop Greg Pryor.

Dave Winfield homered and Graig Nettles and Larry Milbourne hit RBI singles to lead the Yankees over their rookie league team, which was bolstered by players from other farm clubs. The Yankees ran out of pitchers and had to borrow Henry Herrera of Bradenton to pitch the last two innings, and the 20-year-old Herrera blanked his teammates to preserve the victory.

"I thought it was a joke. I was very confused," said Herrera, who started toward the Bradenton dugout at the end of the eighth inning before reversing his field. "After the game, my teammates told me, 'You can't come back with us. You're a Yankee now.'"

Joe Morgan's leadoff home run triggered a three-run first inning that helped the Giants beat their cross-bay rivals.

The Giants ripped five hits off A's starter Matt Keough in the bottom of the first, with Enos Cabell, Jack Clark and Darrell Evans hitting consecutive singles after Morgan's homer.

Emory Begins Second Year...

In comparison, Duke is said to have 50 letterman returning this season while the University of Miami (Fla.) returns 41 of 55 letterman. UNC returns 29 letterman, including 12 starters.

Perhaps the Pirates' biggest need going into spring drills was to find a kicker and punter to replace Vern Davenport and Rodney Allen. Emory found neither.

But when Villanova dropped its football program, Emory was able to sign soccer-style kicker Chuck Bushbeck. And unless he breaks his leg, Bushbeck could be the answer to ECU's kicking problems.

During his three years at Villanova, Bushbeck, who has one year of eligibility left, connected on 62 of 67 extra points and 22 of 42 field goals, including 12 of 18 between the 40 and 50 yard lines.

"I was not pleased with our kicking game after spring practice," Emory said. "We're pleased to have gotten Chuck but we are still looking for a punter. We tried five or six people there and didn't find one in the spring."

Joining Bushbeck at ECU from Villanova are quarterback Kevin Ingram, running back Milt Corsey and linebacker Jerry Rogers. Ingram and Corsey will suit up this week but Rogers has mononucleosis and is expected to be out for the season.

Ingram, who has three years of eligibility left, is listed third, along with Carlton Nelson, on the depth chart going into fall drills but could end up winning the starting quarterback job.

Greg Stewart, who took over for Nelson last season when he injured his neck, is listed No. 1 going into practice this week. Nelson did not participate in spring drills but he will be in

Streater Out Of Hospital

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Steve Streater ended his two month stay at Charlotte Rehabilitation Center Friday as the former North Carolina football star, paralyzed in an April 30 auto accident, returned home to Sylva.

Center spokesman Alice Barnes said Streater's departure was "far earlier than projected." Streater flashed the a smile and the "No. 1" sign with his hand as he left the center.

Streater was injured on his trip home from Washington where he had signed a free agent contract as a punter with the Redskins. Ironically, his release came just hours before the Redskins opened their exhibition season.

It was thought that the physical and motor rehabilitation program set up for Streater would require at least two more months of work. He entered the facility on June 2.

"We realized a couple of weeks ago when Steve was able to get out of his halo (brace) much sooner than we thought he would," Barnes said. "The important thing to remember about Steve is through his drive and determination he has gained independence, though he remains in a wheelchair, of course."

uniform this week. Larry Brobst, a 5-foot-11, 178-pound sophomore, is listed as Stewart's backup going into this week's practice.

ECU lost three running backs — all of whom are still in training camp as of Saturday — and must depend on (fullback) Roy Wiley (6-0, 225 junior) Earnest Byner (5-10, 206 sophomore) and Harold Blue (6-0, 190 senior) to replace the trio of Anthony Collins, Theodore Sutton and Mike Hawkins.

Larry O'Roark is listed as the No. 1 split end after spring drills while Will Saunders, a starter last season, and Norwood Vann are nearly even at tight end.

The offensive line was hit hard by injuries last season and was one of the chief reasons the Pirates' season was not better. This year the offensive line could prove to be one of ECU's strong points.

After a trying season at nose guard, Long was moved to offense. Carnes is a transfer from Maryland. Robertson is one of the faster linemen, having run a 4.8 40-yard dash.

"The offensive line was very inconsistent last year but it made great progress in the spring," Emory said. "We lost only one to graduation (Wayne Inman) and we moved some bigger people to offense."

The same cannot be said of the Pirate defense. Gone are mammoth tackles Nat Wigfall (6-3, 265) and Doug Smith (6-5, 255) as well as defensive ends

Cliff Williams (6-1, 210) and Rocky Butler (6-3, 210).

Wigfall, Williams and Butler are listed as starters at linebacker are Donald's brother Ronald Reid (5-11, 210 sophomore), Mike Grant (6-1, 213 junior) and Amos Twitty (6-1, 205 junior).

In the secondary, Marvin Elliott (5-10, 188 senior) is back at strong safety and Freddie Jones (5-9, 170 sophomore) at right cornerback. Gerald Sykes (5-9, 163 junior), who was redshirted last season, is listed first at left cornerback.

Smokey Norris (6-0, 170 junior) and Clint Harris (5-11, 186 sophomore) are listed as the top two free safety prospects.

"Basically, it's a no-name defense," Emory said. "I'm concerned about our size up front but I think the pluses are in our speed and the competition (for the starting positions)."

"The key to our 1981 defense is we've got to keep the players on the field and eliminate the mental mistakes that came when players were playing as individuals and not as a team."

S. Hill Downs Hamlet In 9th

SNOW HILL — Greg Hardison drove home Frank Milkovits with the winning run in the bottom of the ninth to lift Snow Hill past Hamlet, 7-6, Friday night in the fourth game of the teams' American Legion East finals.

Snow Hill now leads the best-of-seven series three games to one. Game #5 was to have been played last night in Snow Hill. A victory by Post 94 would give them the East championship and put them in the state finals.

Snow Hill, which rallied three times from behind, twice in the last three innings, saw Hamlet go up, 6-5, with two runs in the top of the eighth. But, after failing to score in the bottom half of the inning, Post 94 came back in the ninth to push home two runs and capture the victory.

Kevin Korpi singled to open the inning and Milkovits then laid down a bunt between the pitcher's mound and first base that he beat out for a single. David Kester sacrificed both runners up a base before Wade Corbett singled to centerfield to score Korpi to tie the game at 6-6.

Gary Ream then walked to load the bases with one gone. Bobby Avery popped to the catcher for the second out of the inning.

Hamlet pitcher Billy Bostick, the team's third pitcher of the night, then threw three straight balls to Hardison. The Snow Hill shortstop then took two strikes before ripping a single over the leftfielder's head to easily score Milkovits with the winning run.

Hamlet, which won the first game of the series but has now lost three straight to Post 94, broke out on top with a run second. It stayed that way until the sixth when Snow Hill tied it up with a run.

Hamlet regained the lead in the sixth with a three-run outburst. Andre Harrington doubled and scored on Jeff Long's single. Two errors and a single by Fred Burr accounted for Hamlet's other two runs.

Snow Hill, however, countered with a four-run surge of its own to take its first lead of the game.

Sanderson and Ream singled to open the inning and Hardison then unloaded with a three-run homer to tie the game at 4-4 and chase starter Bud Loving, Shirley and Jabo Fulghum then walked, sending reliever Tommy Britt to the bench. Milkovits then singled home Shirley and Snow Hill led, 5-4.

It was a lead short-lived, however, as Hamlet scored twice in the eighth to regain the lead. Bostick singled and Alex Wallace then laid down a bunt that Snow Hill pitcher Bobby Avery threw away for a three-base error which allowed Bostick to score. Wallace subsequently scored on Harrington's single and Hamlet led, 6-5.

Milkovits led Snow Hill's 14-hit attack with three singles. Hardison, Korpi, Sanderson and Corbett all had two hits for Post 94. Long, Harrington and Burr all had two hits for Hamlet.

Gibbs Wins Debut With 'Skins

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was the type of game George Allen would have loved, but new Washington Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs liked it just as much.

The Redskins reverted to a combination of defense and field goals to beat the Kansas City Chiefs 16-10 Friday night in the National Football League exhibition opener for both teams.

In another exhibition game Friday, the New York Jets crushed Denver 33-7.

Last night the NFL pre-season was to include Detroit at Buffalo, Cincinnati at Tampa Bay, the New York Giants at Chicago, Pittsburgh at Cleveland, Baltimore at New Orleans, St. Louis at San Diego, Green Bay at Dallas, Miami at Minnesota and Atlanta at Oakland. The New England Patriots will be at the Los Angeles Rams Monday night.

The Redskin fans, over 32,000, came to Robert F. Kennedy to catch the first look at Gibbs wide open offense. What they saw was three Mark Moseley field goals — 39, 36 and 28 yards — and a defense that limited the Chiefs to 60 yards in the first half. For the game, the Chiefs gained 305 most coming in the waning moments of the game against the Redskin reserves.

The key play in the game was a third-period interception by Redskin linebacker Monte Coleman.

Coleman stepped in front of a Bill Kenney pass and ran it back 28 yards for the score and a 10-3 Washington lead.

"We were in a man-to-man defense and the ball just came to me," Coleman said.

"We kept waiting for something to happen. Monte's interception is what did it," Gibbs said, who replaced Jack Pardee, who replaced Allen in 1978.

Kansas City coach Marv Levy took the loss and his team's mistakes — 10 penalties, six fumbles, four sacks and an interception — in stride.

"There were a lot of mistakes and a lot of nervous people out there," said Levy. "There certainly wasn't much polish but that's why you play these exhibition games."

Levy was more worried about starting quarterback Steve Fuller, injured while trying to avoid 290-pound Redskin lineman Wilbur Young.

Fuller, who missed the final three games last season with an injury to his left knee, strained ligaments in the back of his right knee in the first half.

A preliminary report from the Chiefs team doctors indicated Fuller will not need surgery. However, knee injuries usually require four to six weeks of recovery time.

Before he was forced to leave, Fuller had completed 4-of-7 passes for 34 yards and had one interception.

In relief, Kenney was 7-of-19 for 120 yards.

Despite the failure of his offensive unit to score a touchdown, Gibbs was pleased with his team's overall play.

"The defense really had to suck it up a couple of times when we turned the ball over," he said. "I was proud of them, they really showed poise."

The Redskins threw the ball 19 times in the first half, 12-of-18 by quarterback Joe Theismann and 0-for-1 for Terry Metcalf on the halfback option play.

The game gave the fans their first look at a number of new and one one not so new Redskin.

John Riggins, returning to the fold after a one-year contract dispute which left him at home in Kansas, returned to wild cheers every time he touched the ball.

Riggins finished the evening with 17 yards on six carries.

Joe Washington, acquired from Baltimore in the off-season, ran the ball twice for six yards. Art Monk, last year's top receiver, caught six passes for 91 yards to lead the receivers.

The Chiefs could do little on the ground, running 28 plays for 59 yards. The leading rusher was Joe Delaney, gaining 12 yards on three carries.

Elsewhere, quarterback Richard Todd fired a 31-yard scoring pass to Johnny "Lam" Jones and Pat Leahy kicked four field goals to lead New York over Denver, spoiling the head coaching debut of the Broncos' Dan Reeves.

Earnhardt Joins Childress

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Defending NASCAR champion Dale Earnhardt, who resigned from the J.D. Stacy racing team following an early departure from last week's Talladega 500, will drive for Richard Childress in the Champion 400 Aug. 16 at Brooklyn, Mich.

will still be sponsored by Wrangler Jeans, and he will be accompanied by crew chief Doug Richert and other crew members.

Clutch problems sidelined Earnhardt's car after 93 laps of last week's National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing even in Alabama. But it was problems with new ownership of the Stacy team and suspicions that teammate Joe Ruttman was getting more attention that led to Earnhardt's pit stop.

His sponsor, Wrangler Jeans, is staying with Earnhardt as are crew chief Doug Richert and other crew members.

"I couldn't be happier," Earnhardt said. "Not only is Richard Childress a good, competent competitor, but he is also a fine individual and a hard worker. I am looking forward to our new relationship."

Childress is retiring from driving to manage the team after a 12-year NASCAR career. He has competed in the last 231 races on the tour, a string which began Feb. 17, 1974.

Childress and cars prepared in his shop have never won a Grand National race. His best finish was a third in the 1978 Nashville 420, but he has won over $800,000 in his career including $100,000 each of the past three years.

Earnhardt was NASCAR rookie of the year in 1979 on the Winston Cup circuit and won the title last year before falling on hard times.

"We considered a number of attractive options before we agreed to join forces with Richard Childress," said Bob Odear, vice president of Blue Bell Inc., which owns Wrangler. "We were very impressed with his capability and we are confident he will be able to field a competitive car for Dale to drive."

In the 12-14 age group, the junior played 18 holes from the white tees. Jim Blount took top honors with an 82, while Joey Hallow took second with an 84.

The 15-17 ages played 18 from the greens, and Jack Mann took first with a 77. Brian Hill was second with an 84.

A total of 26 players from Greenville and Brook Valley participated.

Wednesday's Jack and Jill Tournament was won by the team of Maxine and Red Hawley and Evelyn and Gene Ward with a 31. Second place was won by Dorothy and Wally Woolles and Shirley and Dave Martin with a 32. Third place saw a tie at 33 between Wanda and Doug Bonds and Kathy and Sandy Griffin and the team of Mary Meade and Bob Powell and Ellen and Jim Fleming.

The next Jack and Jill will be Wednesday, August 19, with signups closing at noon that day.

The Father-Son Tournament will be played next Saturday and Sunday, with signups closing Friday at 12 noon.

Nine Innings Later, Cubs, White Sox Scoreless

By The Associated Press
 Tony LaRussa, manager of the Chicago White Sox, figured at first that the hitters would be ahead of the pitchers when major league baseball resumed following the strike. Then he saw what the hitters looked like.
 "I changed my mind the first day the players came back," said LaRussa, whose team played a scoreless tie against the Chicago Cubs Friday night in a game called after nine innings by mutual agreement.
 "I realized then that the pitchers had a better chance to stay in shape than the players," said LaRussa. "Notice I said players, not hitters. Pitchers have only one skill to maintain, while players have to hit, run and throw."
 A total of 11 pitchers on the two Chicago teams showed they had maintained their one skill well enough during the seven-week strike. Five White Sox pitchers combined on a seven-hit shutout, while the Cubs' six pitchers allowed six hits.
 "The pitchers got their breaking balls over and that surprised me," said Cubs Manager Joey Amalfitano. "There was some good contact out there but there were also a lot of good plays. If this is any measure of things, you sure can cut down on spring training in the future."

Red Sox 13, Expos 3
 Carl Yastrzemski and Glenn Hoffman collected three hits apiece and Jim Rice and Joe Rudi belted towering home runs as the Red Sox delighted a crowd of 19,395 at Fenway Park, as well as Manager Ralph Houk.
 "When you win everything looks good," said Houk. "We hit the ball, we got good pitching and we got good defense. I hope this will carry over when we start playing for real again next week."
Pirates 10, Indians 3
 Dave Parker's two-run homer highlighted the Pittsburgh attack before a festive crowd of 7,613 at Three Rivers Stadium. Mike Easler, Phil Garner and Bill Madlock had three hits each for the Pirates.
Braden 20, Yankees 0
 Bill Castro and George Frazier scattered five hits over the first seven innings as Bradenton, a rookie team from the Gulf Coast League that was bolstered by players from other Yankee farm teams, blanked the parent club before 10,200 at Yankee Stadium.

 "Our guys were facing pitchers who have been pitching good baseball for a month or more," said Yankees owner George Steinbrenner. "It was great to see those kids playing their hearts out against us."
Blue Jays 7, Mets 3
 Buck Martinez lined a two-run double to highlight Toronto's six-run eighth inning as the Blue Jays rallied to beat the Mets before a sparse crowd of 4,022 at Shea Stadium in New York. The Mets set a $3 general admission fee for the game, with the proceeds going to the Mets' foundation for amateur baseball.
Astros 5, Rangers 1
 Cesar Cedeno's run-scoring triple and Harry Spilman's two-run double carried the Astros past the Rangers before a crowd of 25,888 at the Astrodome. Vern Ruhle, the second of five Houston hurlers, was the winner.
Cardinals 10, Royals 3
 Gene Tenace's two doubles led a 12-hit attack that carried the Cardinals past the Royals before 16,863 at St. Louis' Busch Stadium. Four other Cardinals had two hits apiece: Tommy Herr, Garry Templeton, Sixto Lezcano and Darrell Porter.

Brewers 4, Braves 1
 Ben Oglivie and Gorman Thomas drilled consecutive second-inning home runs to power the Brewers over the Braves before a turnout of only 2,937 in Atlanta. Oglivie and Thomas also drove in one run apiece in the third inning.
Angels 5, Reds 0
 Bobby Grich, who suffered a broken finger a week before the strike began, drove in two runs with a solo homer and an RBI single. Six California pitchers — Geoff Zahn, Ken Forsch, Mike Witt, Steve Renko, Andy Hassler and Don Asse — combined on a two-hitter before a crowd of 11,489 at Anaheim Stadium.
Phillies 2, Orioles 1
 Keith Moreland, Philadelphia's reserve catcher, homered and doubled to lead the Phillies over the Orioles.
 A crowd of 23,430 attended — 15,014 paid and the remainder season ticket holders who were admitted free. They gave the teams a warm reception, the only boos coming following three Baltimore baserunning blunders.

Lebanon's Farm Belt Is Battleground

By EARLEEN F. TATRO
Associated Press Writer
TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — For seven years the people who live in the fertile valleys and rock-strewn hills of Southern Lebanon have known war.

They've known it either as participants or as spectators. Some have known it as victims, caught in the middle of the Israeli-Palestinian strife.

Occasionally the guns fall silent, as they did in late July after 15 days of cross-border shelling and Israeli air and sea raids which killed an estimated 400 Lebanese and Palestinians and seven Israelis.

But even these lulls are shadowed by the almost certain knowledge that the violence will not end until there is a solution for the half million Palestinians, some now third-generation refugees, who make Lebanon their temporary home and power base.

Southern Lebanon — which has 800,000 people living in area smaller than Rhode Island — is a region of contrasts, of thriving summer retreats and bombed-out ghost towns, of Palestinian guerrilla camps and bucolic farming villages, of Lebanese who fight alongside the Israelis and of Lebanese who fight alongside the Palestinians.

There is Jarjoua, a tranquil town of Moslems and Christians, vineyards and apple trees, where expensive hillside villas command panoramic views sweeping 14 miles west to the Mediterranean.

Only four miles south of Jarjoua is Jarmaq, a moonscape of 20 shell-riddled stone houses whose last civilian inhabitants fled 10 months ago, leaving their hamlet to a half-dozen teen-aged guerrillas from the Arab Liberation Front, the pro-Iraq faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Further south, between the Palestinian strongholds and the Israeli border, lies a double buffer zone delineated after Israel invaded Lebanon in March 1978 in an effort to push the Palestinians far enough north to thwart their attacks on Israeli border settlements.

The first is the United Nations buffer zone patrolled by 6,000 soldiers from Fiji, the Netherlands, Ireland, Ghana, Nigeria, Senegal, Nepal and Norway. The second, sandwiched between the U.N. zone and the Israeli border, is the self-styled "Republic of Free Lebanon" declared in April 1979 by Maj. Saad Haddad, a Lebanese Christian now wanted for treason by the regular Lebanese army in which he rose to the rank of major before throwing in his lot with the Israelis.

The UNIFIL area, named for the acronym of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, is caught in the middle of the Palestinian-Israeli war of attrition. At its broadest part, it is 12 miles wide. When the artillery duels start, the Palestinians' Soviet-made Katyusha rockets whistle overhead destined for Haddad's enclave and for Israeli border settlements, while shells from the enclave and Israel arc through the sky toward guerrilla areas.

Sometimes, though, the shells fall short, like the one that exploded in mid-July a few yards inside UNIFIL's northern border and severed the veins and tendons in 6-year-old Samira Fawaz's right foot as she played in the yard of her aunt's home in the village of Aalmane on the southern bank of the Litani River.

But generally the UNIFIL area is quiet, one of the few places in Lebanon where the only guns you see are carried by uniformed soldiers of internationally recognized armies.

After the 1975-76 civil war when Lebanese right-wing Christians fought a coalition of mostly Moslem Lebanese leftists and Palestinian guerrillas, government services to Southern Lebanon broke down. Reconstruction efforts have been hampered by the Israeli-Palestinian fighting.

Tibnin, like many of the 500 towns and villages in Southern Lebanon, has erratic electricity, no telephones and no running water. Tanker trucks deliver water in the summer, charging the equivalent of about four cents a gallon, while rooftop cisterns catch rainwater in the winter.

Despite the inconveniences, Armina Haddad (no relation to Maj. Haddad) smilingly rejected the idea that she would leave Tibnin where her Roman Catholic family has lived for centuries in harmony with their Shiite Moslem neighbors.

"The old village is more peaceful than Beirut," said the widowed mother of seven children. "In Beirut you never know what time the war will start again. This is our homeland, and we believe that sometime in the future everything will be good again."

Others have elected to leave. The Lebanese government says 125,000 people fled Southern Lebanon during and after the civil war, most to Beirut where they moved in with relatives, took over apartments and whole buildings abandoned during the civil war and built teeming shanty towns.

In July, during the heavy land, sea and air assaults, still more fled north to the capital. Gov. Ghassan Haidar of the city of Tyre estimated that as many as 20 percent of the 380,000 people in his district left, while others who know the region well put the figure between 5 and 10 percent.

Further displacement was spawned by the creation of Maj. Haddad's "Free Lebanon." Although often referred to as "the Christian enclave," it contains many Shiites as well, some of whom fight with Haddad against the Palestinians they blame for the continuing strife in the South.

"The enclave is not Christian. It's Shiite," a Lebanese Shiite said bitterly as he gazed from the UNIFIL area south into the enclave.

"It is my home, but they will not let me return," he added, asking that neither he nor his village be named because many of his relatives still live there.

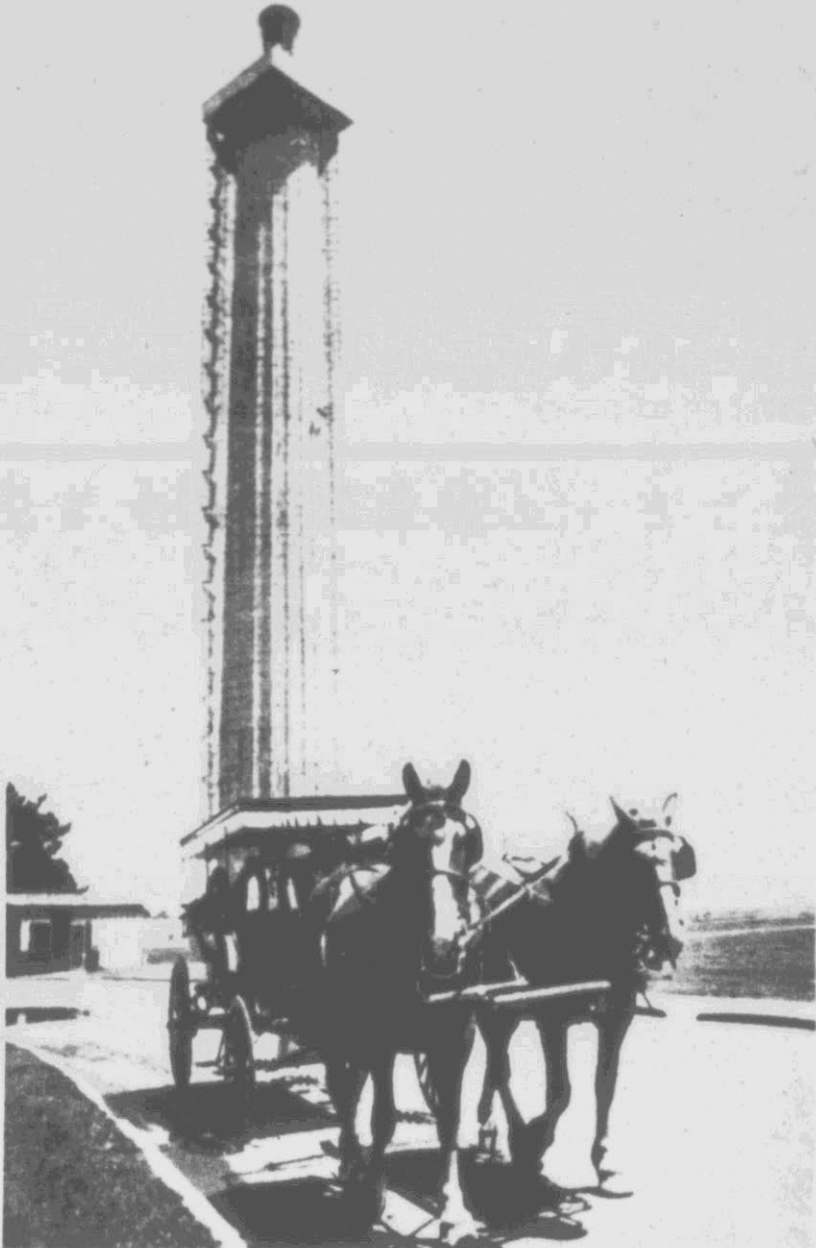

A Christian native of what is now the enclave said he left to avoid the violence, for Maj. Haddad's land is a target of Palestinian shells and rockets ever after the cease-fire.

"I go back to see my family, and once I went to Israel to a hospital," he said, asking not to be identified. "The Israelis are good people. The Israelis and the Lebanese can live together. But not like Haddad. Haddad is not good for us."

In Tyre, there is little thought of coexistence with Israel. This ancient seaport of Phoenician traders is one of the Palestinians' biggest bases and consequently a favorite target of Israeli raids and Haddad's shells.

Downtown streets in the city of 50,000 were deserted by midday, with shops shuttered in the week following the cease-fire.

"People are afraid to come out in the afternoon," Haidar said. "That's when the Israeli planes come."

Tourists Slow To Catch On To Fringed Surreys

By SANDRA L. LATIMER
PUT-IN-BAY, Ohio (UPI) — Visitors to Put-In-Bay on South Bass Island in Lake Erie normally move about the island on bicycles, on foot, on train tours or golf carts.

Now they have a new form of transportation — horse-drawn carriages.

The horse-drawn carriages were introduced to island visitors this season, and Jean Cummings, "Mom" of the Hickory Farms Girls Home on the island that operates the service, says the rides are slowly catching on.

"It takes a while for people to get to know about them," she said, acknowledging that business is slow. "People coming over here know how they are going to get around."

Visitors get to the island by ferry service from two points at Port Clinton, fly over by Island Airlines at the Port Clinton Airport, or fly their own planes over.

The horse-drawn carriages include an omnibus, two three-seated surries, one four-seated surrey and three surries that carry about 22 people. And the surries do have fringe on them.

The omnibus is a fully restored antique touring bus, circa 1850, formerly used for carrying passengers from the Denver railroad stations to hotels in downtown Denver as recent as the 1920s. It was restored by Chris Miller, an Amish man from Baltic, Ohio, Mrs. Cummings said.

The Amish built the other bus-type surries were built on the island. East Point, on the eastern part of the island, is home for the Belgian horses that pull the carriages, and also the Hickory Farms Girls Home whose residents drive the horses.

The drivers wear black pants, white short-sleeved blouses, red vests and black hats.

"We can take people on tours of the island, take them from the winery to downtown, or on special arrangements, we can pick them up and take them where they want to go," Mrs. Cummings said.

If visitors want to ride all day, adults pay $9 and children under 16 pay half that price. They'll get a string put around their arm so that the driver knows the person has paid for an all day drive and can get on and off.

Mrs. Cummings and her husband Ed have been operating the home on the island since 1975. The home takes in girls who have run afoul with the law, such as running away from home or truancy from school, Mrs. Cummings said.

The home has seven girls from ages 14 to 18 this summer. By the time school starts, Mrs. Cummings expects 10 or 11 girls.

"It's a lot of fun, but a lot of work," said Mrs. Cummings.

Energy Crisis Converts Brasilia Into 'Old City'

By PETER EISNER
Associated Press Writer
BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — This modernistic inland capital hailed as a visionary experiment in development when inaugurated in 1960 may today be more a city of the outmoded past than of the future.

Architects and urban planners agree that the Brazilian capital, a city of modern steel government towers and superplanned housing complexes surrounded by rings of poverty, succeeded in drawing the population of South America's largest nation inland from the Atlantic coast. But in the process, it created a megalopolis in which living costs are high and where only diplomats, government officials and the middle class can enjoy the benefits of clean air and open spaces.

More than half of Brasilia's 1.2 million residents live far from the central city in lower class "satellite" cities. A maid or blue-collar worker may travel 80 miles or more by bus every day paying a $1 fare to earn the minimum wage of about $4 a day.

The middle class has been hurt by drastic gasoline price hikes as Brazil attempts to conserve fuel and save on a foreign oil bill that reached $9.4 billion last year. The city is divided into isolated residential and commercial sectors, and with gasoline at $3.25 a gallon, a trip to the bank and supermarket can cost several dollars.

The country is dependent on highway transport for more than two-thirds of its commerce, so stocking Brasilia's warehouses is expensive and leads to what statistics say is the highest cost of living in Brazil. The capital, by design, has no major industries and is dependent on outside shipments for most goods.

"Brasilia is not an ultra-modern city, but a very old city," says Alexander Fils, a German architecture student preparing a book on the city's development. "The plan of this city reflects the ideas of the 1920s and 1930s. They built a city only for people with cars, when there's a shortage of gasoline and diesel fuel."

The brainchild of former President Juscelino Kubitschek was designed by Lucio Costa with unusual concepts. The center, shaped like an airplane, has few traffic lights. Traffic circles and circuitous intersections keep vehicles moving. Costa designated the fuselage of the "plane" for government buildings and the wings for apartment complexes called "superquadras." The complexes were to be self-sufficient, with schools, recreation and commerce in each.

"The idea was that the physical structure of the city would change the social structure," Galbinsky says. "But the exact opposite occurred."

Expensive apartment prices and high demand have kept the poor out of housing in the central city. Renting a two-bedroom apartment costs between $400 and $1,000 a month, more expensive than all but luxury apartments of the same size in Rio de Janeiro.

Wealthy Brasilia residents and high government officials can live on ranches outside the city or in houses along the artificial Lake Paranoa, which wraps around the central city.

Poor people are doubly penalized, having been forced to move from the center to the satellite cities, Galbinsky says. "The poor people are the ones with the greatest transportation burden. They also are artificially separated from informal work sources (house chores and cleaning) that are an important factor in developing countries."

The poor who have not moved to the satellites live in makeshift houses intended as temporary structures for the construction workers who built the capital.

Tobacco Festival Begins Planning For 1981 Show

Directors The board of directors of the 1981 Southern Flue-Cured Tobacco Festival Inc. has begun making plans for the festival's fourth annual exhibition in Greenville on Nov. 13.

H. Burke Barbee, festival president, informed the board at a meeting last week that most of the events have been scheduled and that he expects the 1981 festival will be the best to date. He commended board members for their participation and their desire to involve the five Southern states who are sponsors of the festival.

Kay Warren, executive director of the festival, reported that she and festival queen Debbie Earley were present for the openings of several tobacco markets, including Greenville, Lumberton, Oxford and Winston-Salem. Their itinerary also covered the Georgia-Florida Warehouse Association's annual meeting in Valdosta, Ga., and the Bright Belt Warehouse Association annual meeting in Myrtle Beach, S.C.

The board approved the 1981 budget and the following events for the festival were scheduled:

Junior tobacco festival football game between Rose High and James B. Hunt Jr. High; cheerleading contest; tractor driving contest; agriculture art contest; the commissioners most perfect bundle contest; young farmer of the year and farmer of the year contest; pipe smoking contest; queen's scholarship pageant; quilting seminar exhibit; tobacco tying contest; tobacco spitting contest; clogging contest; essay contest; decorating contest; and tour of the village of yesteryear. Members of the board meeting included: H. Burke Barbee, Robert L. Mills, Bruce Austin, Dr. Charles E. Russell, M. Some Taxpayers Can Get New Benefits

MARY BETH FRANKLIN
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Now that the dust is beginning to settle from the recent congressional tax battle, what can you, the consumer, expect to reap from the biggest tax cut in American history?

The most publicized relief is the average 25 percent across-the-board cut in individual tax rates over the next 33 months, beginning Oct. 1. That affects everybody.

But if you have a working spouse, own a small business, or plan to sell a house, live abroad or borrow money from the folks to go to school, there are added benefits.

For example, if you are married with a $30,000 income and have a nonworking spouse and two children, you can expect to save an average $405 from your current $3,917 tax liability in 1982, $744 in 1983, and $914 in 1984.

At the same income level when both spouses work, you can expect to save even more because of the new relief from the so-called "marriage penalty" — the higher tax often paid by two working married people than single people of similar incomes.

That two-earner $30,000 family can expect to save $499 in 1982; $916 in 1983; and $1,079 in 1984.

The marriage penalty relief will allow the lower-earning spouse to deduct 5 percent of his or her income, up to $1,500, for tax purposes in 1982 and 10 percent, up to $3,000, in 1983 and thereafter.

People with incomes of $10,000 or less will not feel any tax cut benefits the first year because inflation and scheduled increases in Social Security withholdings will more than offset their income tax reduction.

Beginning in 1985, the roughly 25 percent tax cut for all taxpayers will become permanent as the tax rates are "indexed" to inflation, meaning taxpayers will no longer be pushed into higher tax brackets as their incomes merely keep pace with inflation.

If you own a small business or a farm, you can lay to rest your fears that your heirs will have to sell the family property to pay estate or "death" taxes. The estate tax threshold will be gradually raised from the current $175,625 to $600,000 by 1987.

For those still subject to the estate tax, the rates will drop from the maximum 70 percent to 50 percent by 1985 and surviving spouses will pay no tax. They now pay tax on half of the value of the estate.

The annual gift tax exclusion was also raised. Currently, you must pay taxes on any money gifts received worth over $3,000. That will rise to $10,000 on Jan. 1, and if you are using the money for tuition or medical expenses, you will pay no tax.

There's good news for homeowners, too. Currently, when you sell a house you have 18 months to reinvest the profit without being subject to capital gains taxes. That grace period, retroactive to July 20, 1981, will increase to two years.

For homeowners 55 or older, your one-time only capital gains exclusion on the sale of your principal residence will increase from the current $100,000 exclusion to $125,000, also retroactive to July 20, 1981.

The new tax laws will help you feather your nest for retirement.

Beginning Jan. 1, you will be able to contribute up to $2,000 a year to tax-deferred Individual Retirement Accounts. If you have a nonworking spouse, you could contribute up to $2,250 to the IRA. For the first time, participants in employer-sponsored retirement plans also will be able to contribute their own IRA.

You don't pay taxes on that money until you withdraw it during retirement — when your income in general is lower — so you'll pay a lower tax rate.

If you own your own business and contribute to your own Keogh retirement account, you may contribute up to $15,000 a year beginning Jan. 1, 1982 — instead of the current $7,500 limit.

But if you're not thinking about retirement, there's another savings provision in the new tax bill that can help you — the "all-savers" certificate.

Nasal Spray's Effectiveness In Relieving Hay Fever Being Studied

The season for the sneezing and itching associated with ragweed allergy is about to begin, and so is a project at the East Carolina University School of Medicine to study the effectiveness of a new nasal spray in relieving the symptoms of fall hay fever sufferers.

ECU is one of 10 medical schools in the country that will perform clinical studies in funisolid, a drug used successfully in Europe and Canada for 10 years.

Dr. James A. Nickelsen, a specialist in allergy and immunology, says the results of the six-week project will be used in judging the success of the drug compared to commonly prescribed an-tihistamines and decongestants. The project will begin Aug. 19.

Ragweed, a common plant in the fields and ditches of Eastern North Carolina, is the major cause of hay fever in the United States. The plant's greenish flowers produce large amounts of wind-borne pollen that cause allergic reactions in individuals sensitive to the plant.

Hay fever symptoms include nasal congestion, sneezing, itchy eyes and tearing. Some hay fever victims suffer itching in the throat, ears and roof of the mouth.

The problem in treating hay fever, says

Nickelsen, is that the antihistamines and decongestants used to alleviate the symptoms work very well for patients with mild hay fever, but they do not provide adequate relief for severe discomfort. These medications may also cause unpleasant side-effects, such as drowsiness.

"There is no cure for hay fever," says Nickelsen, who can sympathize with victims because he has mild hay fever.

"Sufferers may currently take the traditional drugs, avoid the pollen by staying indoors in air conditioning, or try to develop an immunity by taking allergy shots. Funisolid should substantially improve the treatment available."

In the ECU project, Nickelsen will measure the effectiveness of funisolid in a group of 20 patients who are allergic to ragweed but have no other medical disorders, such as asthma. Nickelsen is recruiting volunteers for the study.

Physicians believe daily use of the drug during the ragweed season prevents the allergic reaction when sprayed on nasal tissues. According to Nickelsen, drugs similar to funisolid, and anti-inflammatory agent, are available to treat asthma.

Patients participating in the study will keep a daily diary of their symptoms that will be used to measure the success of the drug, manufactured by Syntex Laboratories of California.

Nickelsen is also collaborating on a study at the State University of New York that is comparing the effectiveness of allergy shots and a nasal spray of ragweed extract in treating hay fever.

CHEEK-TO-CHEEK ... The young have discovered that dancing cheek-to-cheek can indeed be heavenly and many now say there's no better music to sway to than the big band sound of the '30s and

Sound Of Big Bands Is Returning

By JIM NORVELLE
United Press International
High-pitched trumpet tunes soar to the ceilings of America's ballrooms and concert halls, joined by trombones, saxophones and clarinets.

Down front, couples swing hand-in-hand to the boogie-woogie beat bouncing from the piano and drums as the rest of the throng sways in tempo.

It's 1981, not '41. The dancers are in their 20s and 30s, not 50s or 60s. The children of Bill Haley, Elvis Presley and the Beatles are dancing to Benny Goodman, Glenn Miller and Kay Kyser and his Kollege of Musical Knowledge.

Thanks to disco, the young have discovered that dancing cheek-to-cheek can indeed be heavenly and many feel there's no better music to sway to than the big band sound of the '30s and '40s.

Thanks to the late Stan Kenton and his high school stage band clinics, the resurgence may be here to stay.

"There's something infectious about it and the youngsters have not been exposed to it, but when they hear it, they love it," says Ernie Hecksher of the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco, one of the last hotel bastions of the big band.

Hecksher, Wayne Hutchison of the Willard Alexander agency in New York, Charles Bourgeois of the Newport Jazz Festival and others all agree — the big band sound is making another comeback and their bookings reflect it.

"We get more calls for big one-nighters than ever before," said Hecksher, whose hotel operates a house band. "We do one every year for the Seattle Symphony and go to Los Angeles a half dozen times a year. People are just starved for it."

Hutchison said his company takes bookings up to a year ahead of time and some of their acts, especially Count Basie, are scheduled that far ahead.

"It's a resurgence in a sense that the rest of the business is not showing a growth pattern the way we are," said Hutchison. "Rock and roll is not that healthy except for a half-dozen acts."

Bourgeois said "I don't know if it's a resurgence or rather a continuation.

"Sure there are young people. At the Rainbow Room, you'll find a cross-section. Roseland has a big band playing at least every week. They say the average age is 38, so you have some young people."

"I think the trend's been going on for several years," said Sonny Anderson, who books bands for Disneyland in Anaheim, Calif. "I would say the last two or three years it's been fairly obvious in our dance areas."

Everybody has his own pet theory as to why the big band sound is returning, Hutchison said. The two main common denominators were touch dancing generated by disco and Kenton's high school workshops.

When the sound of music shifted in the late 1950s and into the 1960s, non-touching dance steps like the Twist and the Watusi flooded the dance floors.

With the late 1970s came the Hustle and the thump-thump-thump disco sounds of Donna Summer and the Village People that sent people back to coordinated dance steps.

The last time such steps were popular were the early sock-hop '50s and the hey-day of the hi-de-ho — the swinging, big-band '30s and '40s. The music has followed the steps.

"It was something my parents got into," said Alan Stein, 32, the assistant manager of live entertainment for The Old Country, Busch Gardens, theme park near Williamsburg, Va., and a former college music professor. "My parents are wonderful dancers and I'm particularly taken by the style and sound."

"I think dancing is a key (to the resurgence), but it's also tied in to just the rhythm of the music. That type of rhythm is what everybody's coming back for."

Said Hecksher: "People are just starved for it."

Much of the credit goes to Kenton and his workshops, most agreed.

"The clinic in the afternoon lasted less than an hour and usually didn't involve the leader, just the sidemen," said Hutchison. "Then a two-hour clinic at night under the auspices of the band boosters, who used it as a fund-raiser."

"Today, we have 400-to-500 dates a year playing in high schools ... and they are usually very, very successful."

Said Disneyland's Anderson, "Kenton involved a lot of young musicians. The momentum of that started things in high school and college and even junior high schools have some really good stage bands."

"Stan probably did a lot to generate interest ... and the kids said to themselves, 'Hey, this is neat'."

Churches Showing More Concern Over Missions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — It began 175 years ago, in 1806 in Sloane's meadow near the Hoosac River in Williamstown, Mass., when five young college students took cover from a summer rain storm under two haystacks and prayed about the "moral darkness of Asia."

The five young men did not stop with prayer but went on to create the society that sent the first missionaries from the United States to foreign shores.

From that beginning, known as the Haystack Meeting and currently being commemorated throughout the U.S. Protestant establishment, missionary activity by U.S. churches has gone through cycles of good times and bad, often buffeted by controversy, always facing rising costs.

There are signs that missionary activity by U.S. churches is again beginning to increase after a decade of sharp cutbacks and intense questioning of the goals and even the propriety of the mission endeavor.

"As the '80s begin," said Dr. David M. Stowe, executive vice president of the United Church of Christ's Board for World Ministries, "there are signs of a recovery sufficient to maintain strength and perhaps surpass inflation."

The latest edition of the Mission Handbook, published by the evangelical World Vision International, shows the North American overseas Protestant mission force now numbers 35,861 career missionaries and 17,633 short term missionaries.

More importantly, mission personnel is growing at a rate of 6.8 percent a year.

At the same time, however, the understanding and nature of foreign mission work has undergone a lot of change since the mid-1960s when the modern mission movement was at its peak.

Since those heady days, career missionary numbers have fallen sharply and financial support for mission boards and mission activities has not risen enough to keep pace with inflation.

Throughout the 1970s, especially among mainline Protestant churches, mission activity seemed languid, marked by uncertain purpose and uncertain support.

From 1969 to 1975, the number of missionaries serving overseas under the auspices of the Department of Overseas Mission of the National Council of Churches — generally, those missionaries from mainline Protestant churches — decreased from about 8,000 to 5,010.

"One of the main reasons for the decline in missionaries," Stowe said in an interview, "is purely fiscal. The curve in the rise of cost is directly proportional to the curve in the decline of missionaries."

Figures from the United Church of Christ's Board of Global Ministries shows that it currently costs nearly $32,000 to support the average missionary couple overseas.

Other major changes include the growing self-reliance of local churches that were once prime mission fields and a shift in the missionary's understanding of his role in the local mission community.

"In the past 10 years," Stowe said, "there has been a shift away from the missionary as manager and a move toward the idea of the missionary as servant."

Those differences in many respects also reflect the cleavage in U.S. Protestantism between the older, mainline churches and the more conservative, evangelical bodies.

But as the decade of the 1980s unfolds, churches are once again bringing mission front and center.

Both the mainline Reformed Church in America and the evangelical Church of the Brethren had overseas mission as a major part of their annual conventions, while United Methodists held a series of "Mission Dialogues" to respond to "deteriorating confidence" in the denominations' Board of Global Ministries.

Conservative church bodies, which have always seen foreign evangelism as a key part of their ministry, have become more aggressive and more sophisticated.

Youth Program Planned

Four "Discovery Days" will be held this week as the Greenville Church of the Nazarene sponsors the North Carolina YEAST (Youth Equipped and Serving Together) team.

The team will perform in four locations for one hour daily Tuesday through Friday at the following times and locations:

— 9:30 a.m. — 104 Bunch Lane, in Green Farms off Stantonsburg Road. (For directions, call John Moore at 758-6751).

— 11 a.m. — 517 Lee Street, Winterville (for directions, call Bailey Biggs at 756-5872).

— 2 p.m. — Elm Street Park.

— 3:30 p.m. — Carolina East Mall (inside).

A celebration will be held at 10 a.m. next Sunday to allow children who have taken part in the "Discovery Days" program to show what they have learned. The program will be held at the Greenville Church of the Nazarene in the First Federal Savings and Loan building on Greenville Boulevard.

If a child wishes to take part in one of the programs but does not have transportation, the child's parent can call the Rev. Winston Huff at 757-3606.

YEAST teams consist of high school and college-age youths from the North Carolina District of the Church of the Nazarene. Two weeks of intensive training are given members chosen for the teams.

The team to be in Greenville includes David Wilson of Sanford; Victoria Davis of Wilmington; Kim Holmes of Charlotte; Steve Thompson of Swannona; Tina Hall of Winston-Salem and Sandy Campbell of Fayetteville. Wilson and Davis are co-directors of the team.

Team members in "Discovery Days" teach through the use of puppetry, drama and pantomime. Children learn Bible verses, have sing-alongs, and take part in sucker hunts.

Garden Clinic

Q. My cucumbers taste bitter. What causes this? (T.B., Apex)

A. Dry weather and high temperatures cause a bitter chemical substance called "cucurbitacin" to develop in cucumbers. This substance is found just under the skin and never in the interior of the cucumber. It also penetrates more deeply at the skin end. So, when peeling a cucumber make the peel thicker at the stem end than at the blossom end. You'll remove the bitterness.

Q. How do you control whiteflies in the garden? (G.G., Kannapolis)

A. You don't. Once you have whiteflies, it is too late. Whiteflies come with greenhouse transplants. Once in the garden, they increase in numbers and move to beans, cucumbers, squash and other vegetables. Try to buy tomatoes, flowers and other transplants free of whiteflies. If you still get an infestation, spray with malathion every day for five days and keep your fingers crossed.

Q. My okra has not been setting fruit this summer. Could dry weather cause this? (S.P., Hillsboro)

A. Not likely. Okra is a very drought-tolerant crop. High temperatures, low pH (4.5 to 5.0) and low phosphorus are more likely suspects. You might want to have your soil tested before the next crop. Too much water and poor drainage will also cause poor fruit set in okra.

Q. Give me some pointers on telling when an apple is mature. (S.E., Union Grove)

A. Before I answer the question let me give you my definition of maturity. A mature apple if picked and held at room temperature will continue its ripening process. In other words, the starch will change to sugar. Mature apples will enlarge in size. Red types will turn red. Green types will turn lighter green and in some cases, yellow or golden. Seeds will turn brown and be loose in their "seed home." The flesh will tend to melt in your mouth rather than tasting starchy or sticky.

Higher Grain Prices Bring Busy Day To Elevators

By PAULINE JELINEK AP Business Writer
Corn and soybean futures prices turned lower and wheat and oats closed mixed Friday. Analysts said early support seemed to stem from a short term tightness of grain supplies at the Gulf of Mexico as well as at interior locations. They said that forced exporters and other commercial interests to bid higher for corn and soybeans in order to meet their commitments.

Underlying negative factors in the markets were the strong dollar overseas, and forecasts for beneficial rains this weekend in Mississippi Delta growing areas.

Analysts said demand for pork during the week gave some support to the hog and pork belly futures markets. August-delivery bellies rose to 51.20 cents a pound and hogs settled at 51.65 cents a pound.

Area Debs To Attend Raleigh Ball

The 55th annual North Carolina Debutante Ball, sponsored by the Terpsichorean Club of Raleigh, will be held in Raleigh the weekend of Sept. 10-12. Ten young ladies from the Greenville area will be presented formally to society at the Ball.

Karen Gale Brame of Greenville has been selected as one of the Debutantes from eastern North Carolina.

The daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert G. Brame, she graduated from J.H. Rose High School, where she was a member of the National Honor Society. She was also active in the Keywanettes, Executive Internship and the French Club.

Karen participates in Interservice Christian Fellowship at UNC-Chapel Hill, where she is a sophomore. "At this point I am interested in chemistry," she said of her major.

Karen's summer job has been "house-sitting" for her brother in Durham. Some of her hobbies are reading, waterskiing and tennis.

Dr. Brame, the chairman of the Department of OB-GYN at the ECU School of Medicine, will serve as his daughter's chief marshal. Karen's assistant marshal will be William L. Brigham of Greenville, S.C.

"I decided to become a debutante because I feel it is an honor and a good chance to get to know a lot of other girls my age," Karen said.

Valerie Corinne Fountain
Valerie Corinne Fountain of Farmville is a student at East Carolina University who is thinking about a career in nursing, or possibly travel. While in high school, she was an SES Foreign Exchange Student to Germany, where she stayed with a German family for a month.

While attending Williamston High School, Martha was active in the Keywanettes, played French horn on the band, was president of the Drama Club, a J-V cheerleader and a member of the homecoming court.

In November of this year, Martha will be a contestant in the Miss Martin County Pageant, in hopes of being a contestant for the title of Miss North Carolina.

Preparation for this pageant is taking up a big part of her summer. Martha is taking voice lessons and sharpening her skills on the piano, an instrument she has played for seven years.

GLAZED BACON
A favorite hors d'oeuvre at the Scioto Club in Columbus, Ohio. After tasting it, you may agree with us that it deserves its popularity.

1/2 pound bacon, sliced
1/2 cup light brown sugar, packed
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
2 tablespoons red or white wine

Put the bacon in a large cake pan and bake in a preheated 350-degree oven for 10 minutes. Drain off the fat. At this point, before you add the glaze, the bacon should be almost crisp — be sure not to underbake it. In a small bowl, mix the sugar, mustard and wine until smooth. Pour half of this glaze over the bacon and return to the oven. Bake at 350 degrees for 10 minutes. Turn the bacon; cover with the remaining glaze and continue to bake until golden brown. Remove and place on wax paper. Serve warm or cooled. Candlelight Vows Spoken

Cynthia Lynn Brown and Jimmy Wright Carter were united in marriage during an 8 p.m. candlelight ceremony at the Lebanon Baptist Church of Fayetteville Saturday. Performing the double ring ceremony was the Rev. Gerald Rhyne.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Derald D. Brown of Fayetteville and Mr. and Mrs. Bernice F. Carter of Clinton.

The wedding director was Mrs. Kay Williams. Providing music were organist, Mrs. Hope Fussell and soloist-pianist Wesley Pritchard who presented "Longer Than," "A Time for Joy," and "The Lord's Prayer."

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a formal gown of ivory silk organza featuring a scoop neckline formed from a Bertha collar of schiffli lace, edged with Venice lace. The full skirt fell from an empire waist and flowed into an attached chapel length train. A deep flounce of schiffli lace bordered with silk Venice lace encircled the full skirt and train. She wore a matching picture hat covered with schiffli lace and trimmed with bridal pearls. Silk illusion veiling fell from the back of the hat and featured small appliques of matching schiffli lace.

The bride carried a prayer book topped with white cattileya orchids, stephanotis, fleur de moure and gypsophilia with streamers tied in love knots.

Serving as matron of honor was the bride's sister Sally Elizabeth Brown of Raleigh. Bridesmaids included Teresa Carter, sister of the bridegroom of Clinton, Dana Edwards of Asheville, Janet Geddie of Chapel Hill and Sheila B. Grady, cousin of the bride, of Turkey.

The matron of honor and bridesmaids wore mauve gowns made of silesta chiffon with bateau necklines tied with bows at the shoulder. The bodices were shawl type drapes to the waist with accordin pleated skirts. They wore mauve-colored rose combs in their hair and carried hurricane lamps filled with spring flowers with soft pink burning tapers. Streamers of various shades of pink cascaded from the base of the hurricane lamps. The father of the bride-

The full skirt which stemmed from a natural waistline was trimmed with lace around the hem and the Waiteau Caple train. She wore a modified derby veil with beaded alencon lace with a stitched streamer veil.

She carried a bouquet of large orchids accompanied with miniature carnations and pompoms.

Serving as matron of honor was Elven S. Bridges of Greensboro. Bridesmaids included Roseline McKinney of Greensboro, Pocahontas S. Jones of Henrico, Margaret Dudley of Washington, D.C., and Linda S. Fitzpatrick of Columbus.

Bride Should Enjoy Wedding

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I'm being married soon at a formal wedding. All the plans are going well, but there is one problem I need help with.

My fiance's mother is a nice lady, but she smokes those long, thin, brown cigarettes that look like cigars, and I can't imagine her sitting at the bridal table puffing away on those things. It looks so masculine.

Since she's my fiance's mother, I think he should tell her to do away with them for one day and smoke regular cigarettes if she has to smoke at all.

He says I should tell her because he doesn't have the nerve. Abby, if I tell her, I'm afraid it will start our marriage on a sour note. How should we handle this situation?

TROUBLED BRIDE

DEAR BRIDE: I would let the lady smoke whatever she's accustomed to smoking. Those who know her will not be shocked, and let those who don't know her draw their own conclusions. Please enjoy your wedding day. It's a time for joy and merrymaking, not a show for the public.

DEAR ABBY: Our 26-year-old son (I'll call him Tom) came waltzing into our home one evening with his girlfriend (Gloria) on his arm, announcing to us that Gloria is three months' pregnant! They've known each other barely six months.

First of all, Tom is going to college full time and works only part time, while Gloria has a full-time job as a waitress. He can't even support himself, much less a family.

What floors us is they say they have no plans to get married, now or after the baby comes! Gloria has been married twice before and isn't even fully divorced from her last husband. She refers to our son as her "pal," her "buddy" and her "best friend." No mention of love. They refer to their relationship as a "partnership."

They are trying to come up with a nice name for the baby — first and last! Gloria doesn't want it to have her husband's last name, and Tom said he doesn't want the baby to have his last name either, so they will pick a name they both like. Have you ever heard of anything so crazy?

Abby, we brought this boy up right, and his attitude is beyond us. We are able to help him financially, but he says he will not accept any kind of help from us.

Is this a new trend among young people or what?

GRANDMOTHER-TO-BE

DEAR GRANDMOTHER: If this is a new trend, I'm behind the times. If your son refuses any kind of help from you (at the moment), there is nothing you can do. Write again in seven months and let me know if he has had a change of heart. I'm betting he will.

PATRICIA LEE HART. . . is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Farrar Hart Jr. of Richmond, Va., who announce her engagement to Charles Jackson Harrill Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Harrill Sr. of Reidsville. An Oct. 3 wedding is being planned.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

A couple in England who wanted to adopt a child were turned down because they were too happy and officials said, "The child would not be exposed to the negative aspects of life."

Boy, that's something we all fight every day, isn't it?

With a houseful of kids dancing around, spilling sugar, destroying furniture, clogging up the toilet, borrowing your car, and changing clothes every three hours, it's really hard not to "go with the flow" and succumb to terminal happiness.

That's why, early in motherhood, I made up my mind that my kids were going to get all the advantages of being exposed to the "negative aspects of life" if I had to sit up nights.

It was a rotten job, but someone had to do it.

My children have never told me to my face, but I hear from other people they have declared me the best bluebird of misery to ever come down the pike.

I try. "Negative aspects" are more effective when a child is happy.

Example: You have just told your child he can go with you on an airplane to visit your sister in Pennsylvania. He jumps up and down with ecstasy and you say, "You keep bobbing up and down like that and you're going to hit your head on the cupboard, and end up in the hospital with a concussion and you can just stay home." Prom nights can also be made depressing if you try. "You look wonderful, but if you're not home at curfew, we're going to be waiting up for you and you'll regret this night for the rest of your life."

Even the occasion of a new bicycle is fertile ground for negativism. "Happy birthday! And remember, if you so much as leave this bike unlocked, just once ... it's gone. They never find them and you'll be back to pedaling your feet!"

Frankly, it's hard for me to imagine a home where parents never point out life's pitfalls. They never know hostility. They never know anger. What do they talk about?

Sometimes, I feel I spoil my children with so many advantages.

looks like creamy crumbles — about 2 minutes. Still beating at medium speed, drizzle in 2-3rds cup safflower oil, about ¼ teaspoon at a time; make sure each addition, aimed toward beater, is incorporated before adding the next — the addition of all the oil should take only a few minutes if one person manipulates the beater and another person adds the oil. Add a ¼-pound stick of room-temperature unsalted butter and beat just until blended. Makes about 1¼ cups. Refrigerate to have firm. Army Recruiting Climbs, But Reasons Vary For Enlistment Spurt

By CYNTHIA WERTHAMER

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI) — Chuck Honaker twisted his dinner napkin back and forth under the table of a hotel coffee shop. At 17, he was about to go into the Army, where he hoped to become "an animal care specialist."

He wore a T-shirt, had blond hair, glasses and an earnest expression. Pushing his heavy-framed glasses nervously up his nose and munching a french fry, he admitted he was "a little bit" nervous about the prospect of basic training, even though he's lived at the Army base at Fort Lee and his father is a master sergeant.

Military recruitment increased in fiscal 1980 over the previous fiscal year, armed forces officials agree. But they do not agree on why recruitment is up.

Army Secretary John Marsh recently attributed the increase to a change in public attitude toward the military. He said Americans appeared to be putting Vietnam behind them and are serving their country out of a sense of obligation.

But Capt. Bill Pedrick, at the headquarters for the Military Enlistment Processing Command in Fort Sheridan, Ill., said, "It's a combination of lots of things, especially the economy. We met our recruitment goal (in fiscal 1980) for the first time in many years, and there's no doubt about it, the present economy is a factor."

But Honaker said, "I'm going in for the knowledge and the school." He scored the highest out of his high school class to qualify for all 480 job classifications the Army offers.

"I really didn't know what I wanted to do," he said. "I figured it was time to figure out a way to advance."

"I'll get my GE (general equivalency diploma) first, and if I decide to stay in, I'll go to night school so when I get out I can get a good job."

"I'm not planning to get out until I retire," said his dinner companion, Ronald McCauley, 22, of Norfolk, who already had gone through one Army stint and was reenlisting after two years' out.

As he spoke, recruits poured into the Richmond hotel's lobby, looking dazed and carrying duffel bags. They swaggered into the coffee shop, or disappeared into their rooms, played pool or bragged on the telephone to friends back home.

"I miss it," McCauley said matter-of-factly. "There's too many benefits — medical, dental, paid vacation. You can't beat it."

An Army radio teletype operator, McCauley said he had had trouble getting a job when he left the military. "The 'hire a vet' stuff isn't true. I worked in shipbuilding and there was no future in it."

"The recruiter'll tell you you got it made, because you're a vet, then you get down here and it's not that way at all."

He turned to Honaker. "At first it's hard to adjust to people telling you what to do. The Army is what you make out of it. If you go in with a bad attitude you don't get much."

He paused. "The benefits are great. Only the Army gives you dental benefits for dependents."

Did he have any? "Not yet. But I will soon. I'm getting married Friday."

The Pentagon issued a report May 5 saying the first six months of fiscal 1981 — October 1980 to March 1981 — showed an overall 101 percent recruitment goal, compared to 99 percent for the same time a year ago.

The Army achieved 99 percent of its objective, the Navy and Marines 103 percent and the Air Force 100 percent.

Inflation and unemployment are soaring and the Reagan administration is boosting defense spending, but officials aren't sure how much those factors influence recruitment.

The Army's fiscal 1980 recruitment — 101 percent of its goal — was the highest in four years, said Capt. David S. Farrar, operations officer for the Richmond District recruitment command.

"Personally, I think unemployment had something to do with it, but we can't prove a correlation," Farrar said.

Sgt. Clyde Middleton at the recruiting station in Richmond said starting pay for the military's bottom three ranks — privates, airmen and seamen — ranges from $9,480 to $11,043, depending on rank and education.

The old bottom-scale pay rate was $6,000 or less. There will be another raise in October, Middleton said, adding the raises were instituted to bring more people into the military — "I won't say more quality people" — and keep them there.

Recruiter Middleton, a former drill sergeant, listed advantages of enlistment: free housing, clothing and medical expenses; getting one's "station of choice;" delayed entry, under which a recruit can wait up to a year before shipping out; an enlistment bonus for those who score high on the aptitude tests; eligibility for the Veterans' Education Assistance Program, enabling a person to return to school after leaving the service.

His glowing report of job training echoed a current television ad for the service: "We don't ask for experience, we give it."

MISS GOP ... Josephine Good, director of meetings since 1956 for the Republican National Committee, holds Miss GOP, a calico alley cat that shares her office. Miss Good is preparing to move to a post with the government. (UPI Photo)

Republican Meet Director Leaves

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Look twice before you sit down in Jo Good's office. One of the chairs usually is occupied by the Grand Old Pussycat, and while she tolerates visitors, it is considered bad form and somewhat dangerous to sit on her.

Miss GOP, the calico alley cat who shares the office of Josephine Good, wandered in off the street five years ago and proceeded to annihilate the mice that had taken up residence in the Republican National Committee's Capitol Hill headquarters building.

Miss Good, the Republican National Committee's director of meetings and a confirmed cat-lover, has been with the GOP some 20 years longer than Miss GOP, and now is preparing to move to a post with the government. The cat will remain with whomever the national committee selects for the unique job that Jo Good has filled since 1956.

The job description could be something like this:

"Make sure everyone is comfortably housed, adequately fed, efficiently transported and happily entertained. Send them home convinced they have participated in a solemn ritual of democracy that will result in the selection of a leader who will solve the problems of the nation, if not the world, until the next meeting."

That, of course, describes a national political convention and Miss Good has been the main Republican planner for seven of them. The Democrats have no one on their staff who does the same work, so she is a one of a kind expert.

The toughest year she had was in 1972, when the GOP initially selected San Diego for its convention but ended up in Miami Beach when a combination of political embarrassments and legal problems made it necessary to switch.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By LOUISE PERRY

The wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer has aroused considerable interest in England's royal family; thus a new book on that subject is sure to be a success. Sheppard Library has acquired several non-fiction books which should make fascinating vacation reading.

"The Queen and Her Court," by Jerrold M. Packard is a guide to the British monarchy in modern times. Lively and readable, it is paced with interesting details of the royal family itself, their lives, their personalities and their houses. Buckingham Palace, Windsor, Sandringham, Balmoral, and the houses of the Queen Mother and Princess Anne are all described in detail with floor plans and photographs.

The book also tells about the functions of the court; the various titles of the nobility and what they signify, the customs surrounding court life and the fabulous collection of paintings, furniture and jewels; and the cost to the British people of maintaining the monarchy. The most comprehensive book of its kind on the British monarchy, this is a must for every royalty buff.

In the spring of 1962, a writer named Alex Haley returned to the office of "Playboy Magazine" where he worked, and emptied a briefcase full of tapes onto the desk. Thus was born the "Playboy" interview, a feature which has surpassed even the centerfold in popularity. "The Playboy Interview," edited by G. Barry Golson, contains 31 of the most memorable interviews, together with commentary on how the interviews were obtained and what some reactions were on publication.

The subjects include Helen Gurley Brown, Malcolm X, Albert Schweitzer, Tennessee Williams, Martin Luther King Jr., Fidel Castro, Jimmy Hoffa and John Wayne, just to name a few. As readers have found, the Playboy Interviews are extensive, a forum where prominent people discuss themselves and their ideas in unusual depth and with surprising frankness.

"Back to Basics," edited by Reader's Digest, is a compendium of useful information on how to learn and enjoy traditional American skills. This well-illustrated volume has chapters on buying and building on your property, energy sources, raising your own fruits and vegetables and livestock.

Baby Chosen For Lost Colony Role

Emily Lee Brickhouse of Williamston will play the part of Virginia Dare in the Aug. 18 performance of "The Lost Colony."

Emily is the 6-month-old daughter of Gene and Holly Presser Brickhouse of Williamston. For all other performances of the "Lost Colony" season, a doll is used in the role of Virginia Dare. But on Aug. 18, the date accepted as her birth date, the live baby who wins the yearly audition plays the part.

Fake, Or Real?

By CHRIS ROBERTS
Associated Press Writer

GREENVILLE, Del. (AP) — The tarnished sword bore Peter Stuyvesant's coat of arms and in Latin the inscription: "It's Better to Trust in God, Than to Trust in Man."

The message was prophetic, but the sword looked so real. The collector just had to have it. So swayed, he paid a handsome sum.

Alas, he should have stuck with God. The sword was fake.

Forgery of art objects flourishes, but detection is becoming simpler thanks to Victor Hanson, a sometimes mischievous, always bow-tied, forever inquisitive, 77-year-old scientist who hunts down art forgeries with his Energy Dispersive X-ray Fluorescence Spectrometer machine.

Housed at the Henry Francis du Pont Winterthur Museum here, it can, within minutes, determine an object's origin and authenticity without sampling or altering it in any way. To curators around the world, it's known as "The Dream Machine."

It's had a look at the Liberty Bell and the Statue of Liberty (both legit), reunited two priceless 15th century bronze statuettes that had been separated for more than a century, and once saved Christie's an embarrassing moment by determining on the eve of an auction that a soup tureen purportedly made in 1780 for Catherine the Great was a modern replica. Bidding was to have started at $300,000.

To the uninitiated, Hanson's machine is a bewildering array of dials and gauges and knobs hooked to a printer and an oscilloscope — a fluorescent screen which turns into a forest of wiggly green lines when analyzing an object.

It works like this: The object is placed in a box several inches from a radiation source — a man-made isotope like cadmium 109. X-rays pass through the object, then through a beryllium window to a lithium-doped silicon detector which converts them into electrical pulses.

These are then stored in computer memory banks and displayed on the oscilloscope — the length of the wiggly lines indicating the proportional amounts of elements present in an item. The breakdown also is displayed on the printer.

History holds the key to the machine's success, since art objects from different periods have distinct compositional features.

The absence of gold impurities in silver, for instance, is a strong indication that the piece is modern because early refineries (before about 1880) were unable to recover all the gold. Or the absence of silver is a positive indication of modern brass. Or the presence of abnormally high amounts of copper and zinc is an indication of silver solder, telltale of repairs or alterations.

"It's so versatile," Hanson says while strolling through Winterthur's sprawling gardens, his salmon-colored shirt, brown and blue striped bow tie and plaid jacket competing with the natural pinks and purples of the flowers.

"The remarkable thing is you get so much information in such a short time," he says. "Running that machine is like eating peanuts — you never get enough of them."

As a child, Hanson broke thermometers to get at the slippery mercury globs and tinkered with crystal sets and later vacuum tube radios.

He received a bachelor's degree in physics from the California Institute of Technology in 1926 and after research in geophysics and "talking movies" joined the Du Pont Co., headquartered in nearby Wilmington.

He coordinated the instrument development work for the original atomic energy project which Du Pont designed and built for the government in 1943 to produce plutonium for the atomic bomb and later headed Du Pont's Engineer Physics Laboratory.

Writers To Meet Tuesday

The first meeting in August of the Greenville Writers Club will be held at 8 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 11, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Forbes, Route 3, Box 435, Washington.

To reach the Forbes home, take U.S. 264 east to approximately five miles beyond Pictolus. Turn left on the first hardtop past Tranters Creek Bridge — at the VOA sign. After about one mile, turn left again on another hardtop road. Travel about two and one-half miles, watch for a large black mail box on the left side of the highway adjacent to a dirt lane. Take the dirt lane to the Forbes home, about one mile off the paved road.

Those who wish to follow someone from Greenville are to meet at the parking lot of the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 Evans St., 7:30 p.m., where rides will be shared.

Anyone interested in creative writing of any nature are invited to attend the Writers Club, which holds two monthly meetings, on the second and fourth Tuesdays.

RENOVATED GALLERY SPACE — Renovation work has been completed to provide additional exhibition space at the Greenville Museum of Art. Ms. Mary Anne Pennington, director, notes "the upstairs hallway has been designated the Rachel Maxwell Moore Permanent Collection Gallery." In addition, the small, window-filled room upstairs has been turned into a Children's Gallery. "I've displayed art work which I feel will appeal to children in that gallery," Ms. Pennington said. "We hope someday to have a selection of children's art to display here." Lighting has been installed in the Children's Gallery and track lighting is planned soon for the hallway area. The view here is of three works installed in the Children's Gallery and shows from left to right, art by Donald Sexauer, Doris Paul and Francis Speight. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

City Library Activities Reported

Willie Nelms, Director, Sheppard Memorial Library, reports that 1980-81 was a banner period of activity at Sheppard.

In a summary of activities and events, it is noted that patrons borrowed a total of 214,444 books during the one year period (July 1, 1980 through June 30, 1981). Sheppard, the main library, accounted for 142,031 of the loans, while East and Carver Branches circulated 30,274 items. The Pitt County Bookmobile circulated 42,139 items.

Staff members were active in helping users of all ages meet their need for information, with a total of 25,133 reference questions answered in person and by phone. Patrons were active in library programs offered during the year, with 19,432 taking part in 916 activities. The library added 5,496 books during the year, bringing the total number of holdings in the system to 126,508.

Library personnel have engaged in several special activities during the year. These included the Pitt County Oral History Project, jointly sponsored with the Pitt County Community Schools. Quotations from interviews gathered in the project were published in a book entitled "A Team of Mules and a One-Room School."

Teenagers from the county's five public high schools competed in the 1981 Quiz Bowl held on February 14. Younger children were actively involved with the library in a variety of programs, including story hours, puppet shows, and film presentations.

A highlight of the year was the 1980 Summer Reading Program, which involved 503 young people. In addition, 75 children were enrolled with System 80, an audio visual programmed learning system offering individualized instruction in reading, math and French.

At Carver and East Branches, morning hours were added during the summer of 1981 with a very positive public response. There was an increase in attendance at the branches as well as growth in the number of books loaned to patrons.

The Pitt County Bookmobile traveled nearly 10,000 miles during 1980-81, carrying the holdings of Sheppard Memorial to the homes of county residents. The bookmobile made over 1,200 stops during the year and registered a nine percent increase in circulation over the 1979-80 figure.

A new feature of the Sheppard program was a federally funded project, CHER (Children Having Enjoyment and Enthusiasm for Reading.) This project allowed for professionally prepared story programs in Pitt County Day Care facilities throughout the year. A total of 453 programs were offered, with 9,059 taking part in them. In addition, federal funds allowed project CHER to provide books to the day care facilities on a rotating basis.

A library newsletter, "The Bookmark," was inaugurated in March. This resource provides a good means of highlighting activities in the Sheppard library system. Produced on a monthly basis, "The Bookmark" has become a valuable communications tool for the library.

Cooperation with other libraries became a key element in activities during the 1980-81 year as various libraries joined together to form the Pitt County Library League. The purpose of this organization, formed in June 1981, is to examine mutual areas of cooperation, and to provide a source of communications among area libraries.

Nelms concludes the year's report by pointing out that with these various accomplishments and increasing requests for services, Sheppard Memorial continues to be a vital resource for all of Pitt County.

Actor's Comedy Is A Hit Play

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Kevin Wade, young unknown actor by trade, got tired of waiting for jobs, so he tried writing to keep busy. He wrote a modern, bittersweet romantic comedy called "Key Exchange."

Now it's an off-Broadway hit. He can pay his bills. He been photographed flanked by Liza Minnelli and Kate Jackson on a star-littered opening night. Movie powers ask him to write for them, ask if he has other plays in the trunk. To the first query, he says maybe later. To the second, he has to say no.

"Key Exchange," starring Brooke Adams, Mark Blum and Ben Masters, is his first play. He wrote it — in three months — on an old Royal typewriter his mother gave him. The writing began only in January, and only after he learned to type.

The weird wahoo of overnight success amuses him. He cites an opening-night interview with a young TV type.

"He was an Australian, from some cable news outfit here. He kept asking things like, 'Do you find it very difficult writing for Broadway and the screen as opposed to off-Broadway?'"

"I say, 'Ah, this is my first play.' He says, 'Did you always write for stars, did you have a particular actor in mind?' I say, 'Ah, this is my first play. It really is my first play!'"

Wade is 27, balding, has a beard, two Connecticut years of college, two years of acting studies and a finely-honed sense of the loony.

His play concerns three young Manhattan moderns — a couple whose "open" relationship gets a dire case of the wobbles and a guy whose for-life marriage goes poof in just 1 1/2 months.

Their sad stories unfold during a summer of bicycling in Central Park. Every time they stop rolling, they increasingly resemble the New York edition of love's walking wounded.

Wade, who lives in Greenwich Village and hails from Chappaqua, N.Y., scratches his head when asked what he's trying to say in "Key Exchange."

"I guess," he says, "it's that people here get very bogged down in things like, 'My boyfriend is this,' 'My girlfriend is that' and 'It's so hard to live.'"

"And yes, 'I don't go to an analyst, but I know a lot of people who do.' It seemed to me there was a lot of humor in all that. Once you get a little perspective, you see it's pretty funny."

"So that was the idea, to bring out the humor in these kinds of situations."

It was a keep-busy project, he says, "but I also was reading and seeing a lot of bad plays. I guess the idea was to write something my friends and I would like, something without a lot of metaphors or three acts of sturm und drang."

It's Hard Work, But Barnum Star Makes A Million A Year

By GLENNE CURRIE
UPI Lively Arts Editor
NEW YORK (UPI) — It's hard work being a star on Broadway, but it can pay off. For Jim Dale, mainstay of the hit musical "Barnum," in which he gives a highly-charged performance as showman Phineas T. Barnum, it pays more than $1 million a year.

When "Barnum" opened April 30, 1980, at the St. James Theater, many critics had reservations about the circus-oriented show, but praised his performance. It won him a Tony Award for outstanding actor in a musical. It is quite possible that without him, the show would have folded quickly instead of being a near sell-out more than a year later. (A French production of "Barnum" closed in Paris May 25 after only two months, for a loss of some $2 million.) Dale considers himself a comedian — "I don't think I'm much of a singer" — but with due respect to the rest of the cast, it is his singing, added to his hyperactive performance, which carries the show. He has the power and the personality to sell the songs of composer Cy Coleman and lyricist Michael Stewart like "There's a Sucker Born Every Minute," "Prince of Humbug" and "Join the Circus." The latter is used in the TV commercial for the show, one of the most effective commercials ever used for Broadway.

The producers, aware of his value to the show, are more than happy to be paying Dale 10 per cent of box office gross. (The first year he got 6 percent.) The St. James's capacity weekly gross is $260,000, which means $26,000 off the top for Dale. "Barnum" is consistently doing between 90 percent and 100 percent of capacity, which means up to $1.2 million a year for the star. For Jim Dale, 45, that's a far cry from the few shillings he'd get from the few weeks when he started in the English Midlands as a fall-about solo comedian at age 16. "If they'd laugh, you'd fall over," he said. "If they didn't laugh, you'd fall over. I know how hard every stage is in England."

"There was only one thing missing — good material. I wrote my own; stole it, really." He started out as Jim Smith, then switched to Jim Dale because there was another actor named Jim Smith. Dale has the most physically demanding lead role on Broadway: singing, dancing, trampoline, even walking a tightwire. He doesn't smoke or drink and "I daren't exercise because I'd lose too much energy. I get all the exercise I need on stage."

"It's always been there, the physical movement," he said. "I studied dancing for six years, and it always led to other movement in comedy. My movements can be seen from the back of the balcony." "I started when I was 9, comedy dancing in amateur talent contests in Northamptonshire," he said. "Dad worked in a foundry in Rothwell. One brother, Mike — he's a welder — works two miles away from where he was born. "I went to dance school to learn eccentric dancing. There were no other boys, just girls. I took a test, got 10 lessons a week for free — ballet, tap, ballroom. That lasted till I was 15. Then I learned to be a comic at 16."

WATCH OUT — Jeff Rice and Heath Jenkins appear to be headed for a sudden end to their tandem skateboarding ride down Lafayette Street in Stanley, N. C. when a tree got into their path. Tandem skateboarding may not be an official Olympic sport, but as their expressions indicate, it packs all the thrills of a toboggan ride down the Alps into sidewalk entertainment. (AP Laserphoto)

Kinston Native Specializes In The Study Of Mexican Lienzos

USEFUL ART TREASURE ... In a detail from an 18th century Mexican lienzo, the figure at right describes the location boundary established in the 16th century between his village and a neighboring community. Lienzos like this one are still used today as legal documents to resolve boundary disputes between villages in the mountains of southern Mexico. Kinston native Dr. Marion Oettinger Jr. of UNC-Chapel Hill says the documents can reveal much about life in Mexico after the fall of the Aztec empire.

By David Williamson
UNC News Bureau

CHAPEL HILL - When Marion Oettinger Jr. saw the priceless oil painting - more than two centuries old - he couldn't believe that birds had been allowed to build nests in it.

And yet there they were, fluttering in panic out through a hole in the dusty canvas, startling the young anthropologist almost as much as he had frightened them.

The year was 1978, and the place a remote village in Mexico's southern Sierra Madre. Oettinger, now a visiting assistant professor of anthropology at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, had been combing the mountain communities south of Mexico City for lienzos, some of the Western Hemisphere's most useful but least-known art treasures.

Paintings Of Holdings
Lienzos, he explained, are paintings that depict communal land holdings that the Spanish crown granted to Indians of Mexico shortly after its conquest of the Aztec empire. Most are still used from time to time when disputes arise over the location of boundaries between villages.

The oldest surviving lienzo was painted more than 400 years ago and is safely stored in Mexico City. But despite preservation efforts by the government, the majority of the works remain in the poor villages that own them, subject to the ravages of heat, humidity, fires, earthquakes, rodents and, of course, the birds.

"It's a real tragedy in that these people know the importance of lienzos, but there is simply not enough money to take care of them properly," Oettinger said. "In a community that doesn't even have electricity, you're not going to have humidity control or anything like that."

Artwork Maps
He believes artisans created the lienzos to bridge the gap between literate officers of the Spanish government and the native peoples who could neither read nor write. The result was the intricate and beautiful paintings that might be likened to today's aerial photographs or plat maps.

Oettinger's goal is to locate and photograph as many of the lienzos as he can, describing and translating them in the process.

"I've been interested in land boundary maintenance and social boundary maintenance in my work," he said. "I believe these documents help to keep the groups intact."

Without their land, he explained, the Indians would lose their way of life and so boundary maintenance takes on almost religious importance.

"Unfortunately, some of the paintings have deteriorated beyond repair," he commented. "After a flood, one was found several kilometers downstream in an earthen jar."

Planning A Book
Oettinger has been able to locate 16 lienzos and is planning a book on four of them that he feels are especially important historically and linguistically. Besides their beauty and the wealth of information they contain about colonial Mexico, some of the paintings show the locations of ruins that have never been explored by archeologists.

He said he located the canvases by poring over countless old files at the office of the secretary for agrarian reform in Mexico City.

"Virtually every town that has communal lands has had some form of land dispute with a neighboring community during the past 50 years," Oettinger said. "Many of them have erupted in violence. Whenever I found mention that the people of such and such a community presented a lienzo, a map, a painting or an old plan in support of their claims, then that was my cue to visit it."

Land Guarded
Because the lienzos are related to land, and land is guarded so jealously, village leaders often were reluctant to bring them out. Eventually, however, Oettinger convinced the men of his good intentions and was allowed to examine the documents.

"I never worked with them alone, however, because if anything had ever happened to them, the people would have been very upset," he said, smiling.

In partial payment for being allowed access, the anthropologist gave each of the villages he visited a metal tube in which to store the canvas and showed the leaders how to roll them around a bamboo rod.

He also sent photographs to each of the villages and plans to publish the paintings so that they'll be preserved for future generations.

Studied Since 1975
The UNC-CH faculty member has been studying lienzos since 1975 and has recently completed a book on one belonging to a small town some 60 miles east of Acapulco.

That painting has three parts - an outer border, an inner border and a central panel. The outer border was written in Nahuatl, the Aztec language, and describes three versions of the community's 65-year migration from Mexico City shortly before the conquistadors captured the city in 1521.

"It's much like the tale of the exodus of the Jews from Egypt with all the hardships and so forth and finally arriving in the promised land," he said.

The inner border, also written in Nahuatl, describes how and where boundary shrines or momoxtles were established, usually on top of mountains. Crosses adorn the tops of the momoxtles to indicate that the boundaries were protected by God.

The central panel gives a bird's eye view of the community and depicts Charles V of Spain addressing the chief of the village. Although the monarch is known never to have visited the New World, the anthropologist believes Charles was portrayed in an attempt to give the painting more authority. Oettinger, a native of Kinston, will continue his work on lienzos next year during a 12-month fellowship at Mexico City's Institute for Anthropological Investigations.

TAKING AN AERIAL FLING - or so it would appear. In reality, the strange figure which seems to be attached to the end of a heavy rope is a growth on the tip of a popcorn tassel. The weight of the growth has bent the tassel to this downward position. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

SERENITY ... a photograph by Dean James of Greenville, won the "Best Out of State" award and a "Court of Honor" award at a recent competition held in Fredericksburg, Va.

The print will be included in a "Traveling Loan" exhibition to be shown across the state of Virginia.

Dean James, a Greenville photographer, received the "Best Out of State" photography award at the 83rd Annual Competition of the Virginia Professional Photographers Association held recently in Fredericksburg, Va.

James received the award for a landscape scene with a woman in a boat, entitled "Serenity."

"Serenity" was presented to an out-of-state entry.

The same print also earned for James the "Court of Honor" award, given to the print chosen as the top print from a group considered for rejudging. Only one "Court

"Serenity" is one of the prints from the competition which will be shown by the association's "Traveling Loan" program. The exhibition will be shown across the state of Virginia.

Sea Grant Guide To Marshes Is Published

RALEIGH - When you see sea oats and beach grass you know you're near the ocean. But what about the plants around the marsh?

UNC Sea Grant's latest publication, "A Guide to Salt Marsh Plants Common to North Carolina" may help. Designed as a working key and picture guide for educational field trips, the 32-page booklet can help anyone identify the common shrubs, vines, herbs and grasses thriving in the marsh.

The guide, written by Elizabeth Jean Wilson of the Hampton Mariners Museum, Beaufort, also supplies background information about the salt marsh - its value, its characteristics and its zonation.

A drawing accompanies each plant listed in the booklet, along with a written description of the plant's leaf arrangement, flowers and fruits. Wilson also includes some of the common uses of these plants through history - in teas, salads and medicine.

People wanting a copy of "A Guide to Salt Marsh Plants Common to North Carolina" are to write to: UNC Sea Grant, Box 5001, Raleigh, N.C., 27650. Horses, A Different Kind of Friend

To some owning and caring for a horse is one of the greatest pleasures in life. But, it's not always sheer delight — it takes dedication and a lot of sweat.

Along with the exhilarating passion one feels while tearing down a country road comes the joy of cleaning stalls in 100 degree weather, brushing a mud-encrusted animal or walking one all night so that he won't die after he broke into the feed bin and gorged himself.

Horses and essentials that go along with them also cost a great deal of money. Recently grain, hay and leather prices have skyrocketed. Bedding for stalls such as wood shavings and straw are expensive, too. Show costs and vet bills take that much more out of your pocketbook.

But, most horse enthusiasts agree it's worth it or they wouldn't spend all their leisure time and money on such an exhaustive hobby.

Prices for registered horses range anywhere from the hundreds to tens of thousands of dollars. But, there is more to these animals than how much they cost.

Each horse shown on this page had its own distinct personality. The Arabian, Sweet Caroline, was as nonchalant as she could be. She seemed to be saying; "Well, here I am, just cantering along."

Aces Highs looked threatening, but he was a great big pussy cat of a Saddlebred who put his head down to be scratched.

"Smoky," a 2-year-old Quarter Horse, had all the gangling charm of an adolescent and the eyes of the Thoroughbred "Promises" lit up as she closed in on a fence. The friendliest of the group was "King," a Tennessee Walker, who — even though he had a sore foot from being shod the day before — was ready to give his best.

AMERICAN SADDLEBRED
HORSE OF THE AMERICAS ... Saddlebreds are fine boned horses with small heads and spectacular, high-stepping movements. Demonstrating the elastic leg action of the five-gaited American Saddlebred is Aces Highs, owned and ridden by Tom Gentile of Grimesland.

Saddlebreds are the largest of the light horses (Size classifications are heavy, including draft horses; light, arabians, thoroughbreds and saddlebreds; and ponies). Saddlebreds usually stand 15 hands (four inches to a hand) or more and are classified as three or five-gaited.

Three-gaited or walk-trot saddlebreds perform the walk, trot and canter; five-gaited horses, in addition, perform a slow-gait and rack. The slow gait is a four-beat-movement where only one hoof touches the ground at a time and is the prelude to the rack. The rack or speed-gait is like the slow gait only faster.

To enhance the natural high stepping motion of these horses, their hooves are kept unusually long and leather pads are nailed in between horseshoe and hoof. The muscles of their tails are often clipped for show purposes so that the base of the tail is carried high creating a look similar to the natural tail-carriage of Arabian horses.

The American Saddlebred Breed is a result of crossbreeding with English Thoroughbreds. Common colors are chestnut (coppery brown to dark liver brown with brown mane and tail) and bay (reddish brown with black stockings and black mane and tail).

THOROUGHBRED
MOST WELL KNOWN ATHLETE ... Thoroughbreds have a long history going all the way back to the Darley Arabian. The breed was introduced to England as early as the 3rd Century. The Registry for purebred Thoroughbreds was begun under the reigns of Charles I and James I. Only those horses related to the Royal Mares, the Darley Arabian, the Byerly Turk or the Godolphin Barb were registered as purebreds.

The Thoroughbred has since been introduced to most countries and is used for racing, improving local stock and jumping. This breed is noted for a small fine head, a deep chest and straight back. It's coat is generally bay or chestnut, rarely black or grey.

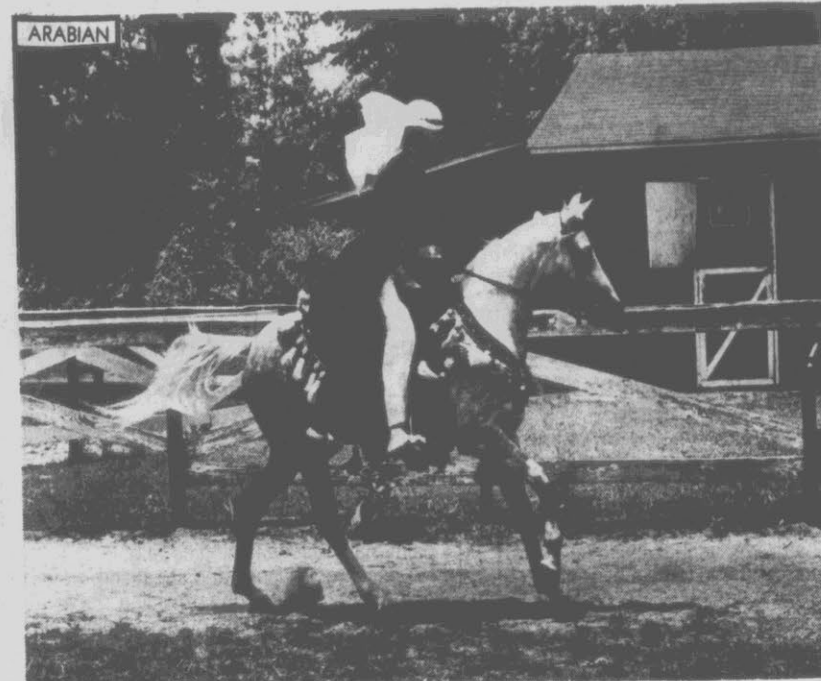

In the show ring, Thoroughbreds (and most hunters) often have their manes and tails braided. A registered Thoroughbred, Promises, owned and ridden by Karen Hendrix is shown joyfully taking a fence. According to Karen's mother, Karen is a fanatic about riding her horse, in fact said Mrs. Hendrix, "I sometimes have to go out there and pull her off."

QUARTER HORSE
FASTEST QUARTER MILER ... Debbie Davis teaches her two-year-old Quarter Horse, Mr. Short Smoke, how to turn and yield to leg pressure.

Quarter Horses are said to be descendants of Janus, a small thoroughbred stallion, and were bred for short fast races. They are relatively small 14.2 to 15 hands (four inches to a hand), with sturdily muscled hind quarters and chests which aid in the fast departure required in short races.

They are generally used for western work, although Quarter Horses are becoming increasingly popular for huntseat riding. At rated horse shows entries compete in pleasure riding, huntseat and jumping, trail competitions, and reining. Chestnut is the most common coloring. Debbie says she has been working Smoky hard and that he shows promise. She said he will muscle out in time and look like the traditional quarter horse except "maybe a bit larger."

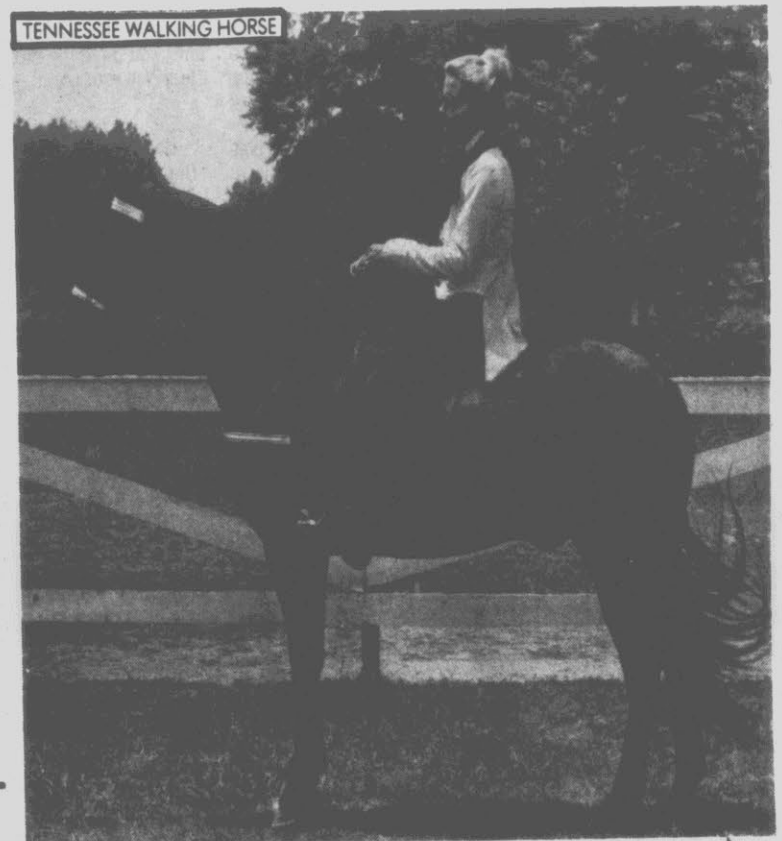

ARABIAN
DESERT BREED ... Noted for their stamina, intelligence, character, and natural high tail carriage, Arabians are versatile horses. Pictured above in Arabian Native costume is HB (Horseshoe Bend) Sweet Caroline, owned by Peter and Ann Fernald of Chapel Hill. Caroline is kept in Grimesland for short periods during the summer while Peter pays for her rent by cleaning stalls and teaching riding lessons. Caroline is a four-year-old mare and is both pleasure and show horse.

The Arabian Breed is said to have originated from five mares given to Muhammad by his followers around 400 B.C. These horses were held in high esteem by the Bedouin tribes of Arabia who kept their mares in their household tents.

Arabs are compact horses with small heads, large expressive eyes, wide nostrils, and short backs with only 23 vertebrae. Most breeds have 24 vertebrae. Arabians are usually grey but many other colors are possible.

In The United States, Arabs are used for many purposes from cow ponies to racing. "Muffin," as 16 year-old co-owner Peter, affectionately calls Caroline, is ridden saddle seat, western, costume, sidesaddle and on trails. Caroline can also pull a buggy and as soon as she matures the Fernald's plan to jump her. "She's more than just a show animal. She's a family endeavor," said Anne, Peter's mother. "I don't ride, but it's nice to be able to go out in the back yard and have someone to talk to," she said.

TENNESSEE WALKING HORSE
ORIGINAL PLANTATION HORSES ... Pictured to the right is Carolina Bay King, owned and ridden by Holly Henson of Greenville. King has on the traditional "tack" of the walking horse, including patent leather breast collar with matching browband and nose cavesson. Walking horses are known for being brightly decorated in the show ring and often have two colored ribbons braided into their manes and forelocks.

The Walking Horse Breed is the result of cross-breeding with English Thoroughbreds. It's specialty is the walking pace, a very long and swift stride which allows the horse to move at a rate of 8-10 miles per hour. In this gait, the hind quarters are tucked well under with the back feet barely coming off the ground. Another characteristic of the Walking Horse is exaggerated head bobbing, partially due to high front-end action. Sometimes these horses almost strike their chins with their front feet.

Controversy has surrounded these horses for many years, because of the old practice of "soring" the animals' feet. Acid was applied to the fetlock (ankle) area on the front feet causing pain. The combination of numerous leather pads on the hooves and acid caused the horses to pick their feet up even higher. Application of acid has been now outlawed. "King is clean legged," Holly said proudly.

New Products Reflect Consumer Needs

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Population trends, the changing style of homes, and consumer activism were not officially a part of the recently concluded National Housewares Exposition in Chicago.

But these concepts certainly had a great deal to do with the products that were on sale at the semiannual market for retailers.

As manufacturer after manufacturer talked about the need for long-lasting, high-quality multi-purpose appliances to fit today's pattern of living, it seemed clear they had gotten the message being sent by American consumers.

Having already saturated the market with multi-purpose and single-purpose small electric appliances, manufacturers brought out no new major types of miracle machines. Instead, they concentrated on offering new models of food processors, electric mixers, juicers, coffee makers and electric cookers that combine as many functions as possible within the same machine.

For other products, such as electric irons and personal-care items, a greater variety of desirable features seemed designed to make the products so appealing that consumer sales resistance would disappear. Some irons, for example, offered more settings, rust-resistant water reservoirs and reversible cords.

Manufacturers of pots and pans — another major product category at the market — also stressed higher quality in non-stick coatings, heavy-duty construction and professional "restaurant" styling.

Comments from manufacturers reinforced the picture of an industry seeking to give the public what it seems to want. There was a decided marketing point-of-view in comments such as those by Carl Sondheimer, president of Cuisinarts, Inc.

"The main fact of life that will influence marketing of food-preparation products over the coming few years is the reduction in size of kitchens. This is inevitable because population is growing while available space is not," he said.

"It means that multiple-use food-preparation products will increase in importance. But the day of the single-purpose food appliance has ended. While they will still be available, I expect to see their sales fall off slowly."

Cookware trends are hard to predict, Sondheimer said. "But the need to make do with smaller storage space will cause people to buy higher quality cookware, but fewer pieces of it, in my opinion."

Ingenuous storage systems should do well, he added, because of space limitations.

"In cookstoves, convection ovens should replace all other types of ovens in built-in stoves because the food either cooks faster or at a lower temperature than in standard, radiant-heat ovens." Microwave ovens, in Sondheimer's opinion, will be popular "especially in homes where defrosting food is a major activity and where there is no interest in gourmet cooking."

Sondheimer's view was backed up by other manufacturers. Harry Hill, general manager of Proctor-Silex, noted that small kitchens and lack of counter space have made multi-function products more important than they used to be.

Five years ago, his company introduced a countertop electric appliance that broils, toasts, bakes and is a slow cooker. "And we find that sales are getting stronger each year," he said. This despite the fact that it is a generally-held opinion in the electric housewares industry that products which do more than one or two things are hard to sell.

Quality is another feature some manufacturers have finally become convinced is a desired product attribute.

Tom McNeil, marketing vice president of Proctor-Silex, explained: "There has always been a small segment of the market that would spend more for better products. But today this is a larger segment. Inflation is a factor. There is less of a throwaway mentality than there used to be."

At least one product designer was pleased with what he saw at the housewares show. Larry Peabody, whose clocks and wall-storage product designs were on view, noted that "all of the things we urged on people 20 years ago have come to pass. Many of today's young people seek natural products that are well-designed."

"You can't sell these people fake products. If it is plastic, they want it to look like plastic. And if the product is pine, that's what they want to see. They don't want their pine to have a fake maple coating."

Here's The Answer

By ANDY LANG

Q — Our house has a hot-air heating system. The heat goes through metal ducts and comes out in the rooms through air registers. We had an air-conditioning system installed a couple of years ago. It uses the same ducts. We have been told that we can increase the efficiency of both systems if we insulate the ducts. Is this true? Will the same insulation work for both the heating and the air conditioning? Are there any other things I should know? We plan to use fiberglass blankets.

A — Yes, the same insulation can be used. But, because you have air conditioning, get blankets which have vapor barriers. When installing them, keep the vapor barrier side facing the outside of the ducts, not next to them. Check for leaks before putting on the insulation. If you find any, seal the area with a special tape made for metal ducts.

Q — I have an old cabinet which has a considerable amount of carved work on it. I want to take off the old finish and apply a new one. In the past, when doing something of this kind, I have used varnish remover to soften the finish and a putty knife to scrape it off. Because of the carved places, I cannot do this. At least, I think I can't. Am I right?

A — You are. You can still use the putty knife on the flat surfaces. When you get to the carvings, use an old toothbrush. It may take a bit longer, but it's safer. If you don't get off all the old finish the first time, repeat the procedure. Steel wool of a very fine grade also is useful, but you have to be extra careful that you don't take off wood along with the old finish.

Q — The stairway to the second floor of our house squeaks in several places when you step on the treads. I had understood that the best solution was to drive in nails in the squeaky area, but I just read something that advises against this if the stairs are put together in a tongue-and-groove arrangement. I investigated and find that such is the case. How do I halt the squeaks?

A — Drive thin wedges between the tongue and groove wherever this occurs. If the underside of the stairway cannot be reached, carefully remove the moulding from under the lip of the tread.

Author Criticizes Pollution Rules

By SCOTT M. BUSHNELL
Associated Press Writer
NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)

The blame for poor air quality in many parts of the country lies at the feet of government, not industry, argues a Yale law professor in a new book.

Bruce A. Ackerman, who wrote "Clean Coal, Dirty Air" with one of his students, William T. Hassler, believes Congress and the Environmental Protection Agency have handled the problem of air pollution ineptly. The book focuses on the creation and enforcement of the Clean Air Act as it applies to emissions from the burning of coal.

"Congress's well-intentioned effort to improve the administrative process has driven EPA to an extraordinary decision that will cost the public tens of billions of dollars to achieve environmental goals that could be reached more cheaply, more quickly and more surely by other means," Ackerman said in a recent interview in his office at the Yale Law School.

"This is the way it ought to be done: Congress should set goals in terms of what it wants. That is, a healthier environment should extend the life of 25,000 or 50,000 people or whatever for one year.

The second step should be for EPA to determine how to achieve those goals — what sort of things you can control, and set goals for industry. And then leave it to industry to find the best way to meet those goals."

Ackerman maintains that if industry were allowed to burn coal that gave off "x" amount of sulfur oxides and were sufficiently taxed on the amount over that figure, industry would find a way to remove the pollutants at a cost less than the tax.

"But the present system doesn't do that," Ackerman said. "Congress instead chose to go for the 'pie-in-the-sky' of wanting clean air, instead of stating operational goals."

Power tools have made do-it-yourselfers out of millions of persons who otherwise might not have tackled projects which used to require some dexterity with hand tools.

Unfortunately, the growing usage of power tools has brought with it an increasing number of accidents while such tools are in operation. Manufacturers, for the most part, have made improvements designed to reduce the number of such accidents, but the operators of the tools must themselves take the precautions necessary to assure safety.

I discovered a long time ago that people who are not used to power tools are generally careful enough to avoid accidents. It is after you have some experience with them that you become careless. You figure you have mastered the operation of them and do not take all the safety measures you did at the start. You become careless and forgetful, ignoring the safe operating steps outlined in your instruction manual. It is at that point accidents occur. Never become so familiar with a power tool that you lose respect for it.

Here are some tips essential to the safe operation of a tool powered by electricity:

Unless the tool is double insulated, be sure it is grounded. Do not use it in damp or wet locations.

Loose clothing can become entangled in moving parts. Remove them as well as jewelry before operating a power tool. Ties and long sleeves are among the most common culprits.

Tools should be disconnected when not in use.

Safety glasses and gloves can prevent many accidents. Use them when recommended by the manufacturer. When doing any work which might send metal filings, wood chips, etc., into the air, be sure that children and visitors are a safe distance from the work area.

Many machines are equipped with safety guards. Use them, even if it appears to be a bit less troublesome to work without them.

Table saws, chain saws and some other power tools have a tendency to kick back the material being worked on under certain circumstances. Modern techniques eliminate or reduce the danger of kickbacks if you use the recommended anti-kickback devices. Use those devices, but even if you do, learn never to stand in back of the work, so that if something goes wrong, the material will go flying back past you and not into you.

Accidents sometimes occur when a machine is used for something for which it was not intended. Incidentally, the same thing is true about hand tools.

When operating a portable power tool, such as an electric drill, never put it down until it has stopped.

Forget about using a power tool (or a hand tool) when you are tired. Fatigue is the enemy of safety.

Even as seemingly innocent a tool as a stationary belt sander can cause trouble if you do not operate it as recommended. In feeding wood into the moving belt, always do so against the direction of the sandpaper.

Finally, don't read the instruction manual when you buy a tool and then forget about it. Reread it the first few times you use the tool until you have the directions clearly in your mind.

Telescope Spans The Universe

PLAINS OF SAN AUGUSTIN, N.M. (AP) — This ancient lakebed, wrapped in an aura of silence and enveloped by rugged mountains, is on the forefront of man's probe into unexplored regions of space.

In its heart is the world's largest radio telescope, so sensitive it could detect CB radio signals from a 1-watt rig on the planet Pluto.

Quasars, pulsars, extragalactic radio jets, interstellar gas, supernovae, black holes — all are within range of scientists who operate the huge telescope in the southern New Mexico desert.

The complex is aptly dubbed Very Large Array. Its lab is the cosmos.

"The most distant objects we look at are at the edges of the observable universe," says Dr. Dick Sramek, one of 15 staff astronomers at the National Radio Astronomy Observatory's VLA.

The one-of-a-kind facility, an eerie space-age erector set, has 27 white dish-shaped antennas, each 82 feet in diameter, 92 feet high and 210 tons in weight. The massive dishes sit high and dry on miles of the parched Plains of San Augustin amid rolling tumbleweeds.

The site is skirted by four ranges, protecting it from much of the electronic interference caused by television, radios and aircraft.

The lakebed is at an average elevation of 7,000 feet — flat, high altitude and low water vapor in the air to minimize the adverse effects of atmosphere on radio waves. The low latitude permits observation of about 75 percent of the sky.

The dishes are along three arms of railroad track in the shape of a Y. Two of the arms are 13 miles long; the third measures 11.8 miles.

The Earth rotates the Y like a turntable, creating images that have the same detail as if using a radio telescope 21 miles in diameter.

"It gives us a quite well-defined circular beam," Sramek says.

The key to the installation is acute sensitivity and high resolution, Sramek says. The VLA uses a very fine beam to probe a distant object emitting radio waves. Sramek says.

French Students Seeing America

Asked how Americans differed from the French, summer exchange participant Christophe Legendary laughed: "You can't compare them at all."

Christophe is one of three young French people staying in the Greenville area this summer through the efforts of the North Atlantic Cultural Exchange League (NACEL), a French organization. The three have been staying in the homes of volunteers since July 16 with financial assistance from their French parents. They will return to their country Aug. 13.

"Discovering America" and working on his English are two of the reasons Christophe said he wanted to come to the United States. His home is in Vienne, France, which is near Lyon. In Greenville he lived with Connie and Robert Bright of 207 Stuart Lane. They have two sons, Robert Jr. and James, who are near in age to Christophe's 17 years.

Robert Jr. said his family has taken Christophe golfing at the Brook Valley Country Club, to an Air Force base and to the beach. Christophe hasn't had much time to engage in his own hobbies which include stamp collecting.

"Meeting people and travelling," is why Monique Heitz wanted to visit the United States. Monique is 18 and is from Strasbourg. She is staying with Lou and George Hamilton of 210 Lakewood Drive and their daughter Stacy. So far, Monique said, they have traveled to Pittsburg, to the Pungo River and are getting ready to go to the beach.

Monique said she likes to go to movies, loves sports and enjoys going to the pool and the beach.

Ernest and Patricia Marshall of 1001 E. 3rd St. are keeping the third of the visiting young people, Stephane Loras, who said he came for "the American experience and speaking English." His hobbies include tennis, swimming and going to movies.

Stephane has also had a chance to travel with his "family." They have visited Washington, D.C. where he saw the Capitol and White House and visited museums. "I took lots of pictures," he said. The Marshalls' daughter, Stephanie, helps entertain their French visitor.

Stephane, 16, has two more ears of high school. He is from Lyon.

East Carolina Divers Find Clues To Past In Coastal Waterways

By GEORGE A. THREEWITTS
ECU News Bureau

The 56-foot ex-Navy landing craft, which had been redesigned as a research vessel for underwater archaeologists, shuddered gently as a gasoline-powered air compressor roared to life. In the water, 15 yards away, a dark brown slush blows skyward from the end of what looks like a half-submerged piece of stovepipe.

The device was giving scuba divers a chance to inspect the remains of a large 18th century brigantine, believed to be of French origin, that had once sailed into the harbor at Edenton with arms and ammunition destined for the army of Gen. George Washington.

The wreck was found by participants in a specialized field school in maritime history and underwater archaeology sponsored by East Carolina University and the North Carolina Division of Archives and History. Conducted in Edenton in the summer of 1980, in Bath in 1979 and, most recently, in New Bern, the school enables students to search for artifacts in the muddy bottoms of some of this country's most historic waterways.

According to Dr. William Still, a maritime historian at ECU and a director for the field school, the program teaches more than just how to discover shipwrecks.

"Students are taught how to examine and identify the ships and how to preserve parts if it is determined that the parts are worth preserving," he said.

The students work with sophisticated equipment such as a magnetometer that detects abnormalities on the bottom by measuring the earth's magnetic surface. They also use sine scan sonar, a piece of equipment that will detect a shipwreck or other obstacle on the bottom through the use of sound waves.

"We let them work with this equipment, let them go down on shipwrecks and to actually measure shipwrecks and get an idea of what kinds of ships they were and ultimately to identify them," Still said.

Only college students certified as divers are eligible for the program. In past summers enrollment has been limited to 12 students.

The underwater archaeological field school and other marine related programs at ECU have led to the development of a program of courses leading to a master's degree in maritime history and underwater research. Approved recently by the University of North Carolina General Administration, the program when implemented will permit ECU to offer one of two such programs in underwater research currently available in the United States.

The ECU curriculum will concentrate primarily on research in the Western Hemisphere. A somewhat similar program at Texas A&M is directed at underwater study in the Mediterranean area.

One of the objectives for the new program is to develop the resources and expertise to tackle a wide range of underwater search projects.

"Ultimately, I'd like to go wherever there are significant wrecks and wherever there is support," remarked Still.

"It could be in the state or outside the state or even be outside the country within the Western Hemisphere. I prefer that we remain as flexible as possible in this direction."

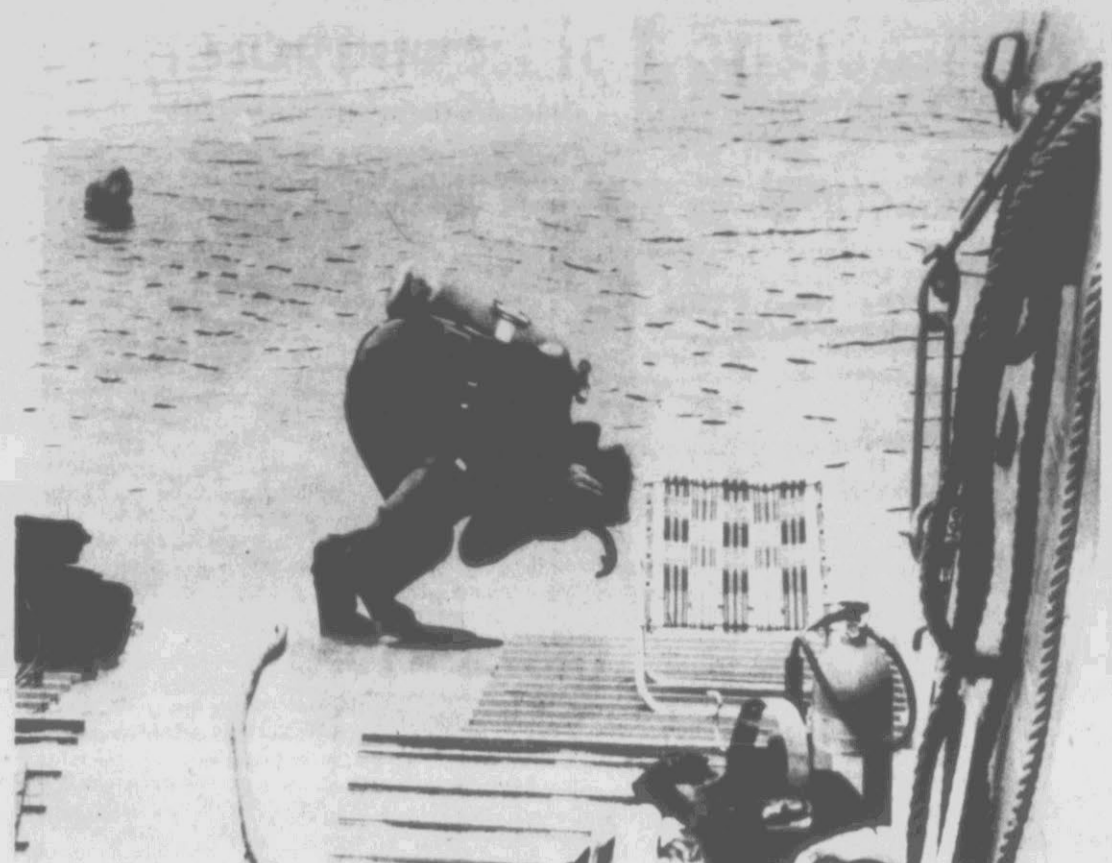

In North Carolina waters alone there are approximately 3,000 shipwrecks. In terms of significant finds, Still says the 1980 field school in Edenton uncovered the most valuable artifacts. Among them was the brigantine, an unusually large vessel for the state's inland waters. It was previously believed that only small sailing ships entered North Carolina ports but the huge ship is a notable exception.

The vessel is considered to be the remains of the "Holy Heart of Jesus" from France which brought armament for Virginia and North Carolina during the Revolutionary War. Virginia received it shipment but the ship's captain reportedly ordered North Carolina's cargo dumped overboard when the state did not pay. The vessel sank under mysterious circumstances around 1780.

A second vessel, a coastal schooner of mid 19th century vintage, was found in Queen Anne's Creek off Edenton Bay. This wreck was determined to be a centerboard schooner and in time two additional centerboard schooners were found, suggesting that this type of vessel was being built and used in the waters of the Carolinas.

While many people associate shipwrecks with treasure, the ECU divers have yet to find gold doubloons or pieces of eight. However, it's possible.

"We do know there was a Spanish treasure ship sunk off the North Carolina coast and we have some hope of finding it one of these days," Still said.

New Department Chairman Named

ECU News Bureau
Dr. Bruce N. Wardrep will become the first chairman of the newly created department of finance in the school of business at East Carolina University.

Dr. James H. Bearden, dean of the school of business, said creation of the department of finance and Wardrep's appointment "represent significant developments in the programs offered through the school of business."

"By drawing together the financial and institutional disciplines (finance, banking, real estate and insurance) we have an organization to prepare future managers in these functional and institutional areas," Bearden said.

Wardrep, who received the Ph.D. in real estate from Georgia State University in 1974, was selected for the chairmanship by a faculty committee which conducted a search process to secure nominations. Wardrep joined the ECU faculty in 1973 as an assistant professor. He served as acting chairman of the department of business administration from January through August 1980, and during the 1980-81 academic year served as acting chairman for the new department of finance.

Wardrep said the department "has a well known and well regarded faculty," which will be strengthened Aug. 24 when Dr. Donald C. Guy joins the ECU faculty from the University of Nebraska at Omaha. Guy, whose specialty is real estate, has a Ph.D. from the University of Illinois and has taught at American University in the area of urban studies.

With Dr. Guy's appointment, the department of finance will have eight full-time and two part-time faculty.

"This excellent faculty base and the continuing cooperation of the banking and finance industry should allow East Carolina University to come to the forefront in financial education in the state and region," Wardrep said.

Alaska Debates Move Of Capital

By JEAN KIZER
Associated Press Writer
JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Alaskans voted in 1974 to move their capital from Juneau — a picturesque town tucked away in the state's remote southeastern panhandle — to a site hundreds of miles northward and closer to Alaska's heartland.

Construction was to have begun in 1980 on a new, modern capital designed by planners who dreamed of carving a $3.5 billion "Brasilia of the North" from a hunk of barren wilderness.

But today, the seat of government remains Juneau, a charming but isolated town of about 20,000 people nestled between rugged mountain peaks and a narrow channel of water.

Despite the voters' mandate, not a shovel of dirt has been moved at Willow, the chosen site for Alaska's new capital. And the designs for a "model" capital, financed by the state's huge surplus of oil money, have been relegated to a dusty shelf.

But the Legislature, after long, often angry debate between supporters and opponents of the move, agreed to put the relocation issue before voters again in 1982. Alaskans will be asked — for the second time — to approve the cost of moving their capital.

The battle pits the patriots of Juneau and their allies in rural Alaska against the boosters of Anchorage, the state's largest city, with a population of nearly 200,000. Willow, the proposed capital site, is about 30 air miles north of Anchorage, 70 miles by road.

Although voters in 1974 agreed 46,659-35,683 that the capital should be moved, four years later they soundly rejected a $966 million bond issue designed to get the move under way.

The conflicting votes resulted in stalemate. Lawmakers have decided to call on a citizen commission to figure a new cost estimate for the move, and to put the pricetag before voters in November 1982.

Many expect the cost to top $1.5 billion, possibly $2 billion.

"It'll be an awful campaign. You've got to be willing to tear this state apart to win," says Bill McConkey, who has managed several campaigns in the state.

"This fight is Alaska's Vietnam," says Anchorage State Sen. Tim Kelly, who led capital move supporters in the Legislature. For his efforts, Kelly has won the enmity of many Juneau residents, who fear that relocation will turn Juneau into a ghost town.

Juneau's State Sen. Bill Ray, a staunch foe of the move, says: "Anchorage wants everything. I don't blame them for wanting to improve Anchorage and set up an economic base. But at the same time, they have to realize the move would ruin a whole area."

If pro-movers have their way, a barren hunk of wilderness, snow-covered in winter, mosquito-infested and swampy in summer, would become the beautiful, modern capital. The bizarre events to try to urbanize a wilderness began after Alaska won statehood in 1959.

Anchorage interests spearheaded an initiative in 1960 to move the capital north. The campaign was fueled by arguments that Juneau was too far from the bulk of the state's population.

Juneau is two time zones and 600 miles away from Anchorage and the heart of Alaska's population. It's also relatively inaccessible.

The only way to get there is by boat or plane — $285 round trip from Anchorage. There are no roads beyond the mountains.

But, despite the efforts of powerful Anchorage interests, including Anchorage Times publisher Robert Atwood, the capital move initiative was defeated, in part because Alaska's oil riches had not been discovered and the state barely had enough money to stay afloat.

Diehard capital movers lost again in 1962 with a second initiative.

In 1964, a massive earthquake hit Anchorage, leaving widespread damage and cutting short a third initiative. Reconstruction was a source of unity among Alaskans, and many hoped sectional rivalries produced by the capital move issue would be forgotten.

But the fight was renewed. Finally, in 1974, an initiative to move the capital won 56 percent to 44 percent.

Swiss Seeing Political Violence

By W. JOSEPH CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — For the first time in its modern history, Switzerland and its people have become the specific and repeated targets of an international terrorist organization.

The notion that the country was somehow immune to political-related violence were swept away with a sequence of daily bombings from July 19 to July 22.

Without warning, crude but powerful timebombs went off at public places in Bern, the nation's capital; Zurich, an international center of finance; Lausanne, self-proclaimed capital of the Swiss Riviera, and Geneva, a leading international city.

Thirty-six people, all but two of them Swiss, were wounded, four of them seriously. Twenty-six people, most of them women, were wounded in Lausanne where a crowded mid-town department store was bombed.

Responsibility for the attacks was claimed by a faction of the clandestine Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia (ASALA), which has struck more than 100 times in an international campaign of vengeance directed at Turkish diplomats and embassies.

This same Marxist-leaning organization claimed responsibility for killing two Turkish diplomats in Paris last March as well as the killing of a Turkish press attaché there in December 1979. Paris also was the scene of the killing of the Turkish ambassador and his driver in October 1975 — slayings for which ASALA claimed responsibility.

Terrorist-type activities attributed to Armenian underground groups have been reported in recent years in Britain, Italy, Spain, the Netherlands, Belgium and Denmark. ASALA is believed to be the largest of four known Armenian underground movements, whose main aim is to establish an Armenian homeland in what now is part of Turkey and the Soviet Union. They also seek to avenge what they consider to be the massacre of 1.5 million Armenians in Turkey in the early part of this century.

The Swiss were designated targets of an ASALA faction calling itself the "June 9th Organization" because an avowed Armenian gunman is jailed in Geneva awaiting trial on charges of fatally shooting a Turkish consular employee. ASALA has vowed, in a communique issued in Beirut, Lebanon, to "destroy Swiss interests throughout the world" unless the man is freed.

President Kurt Furgler of Switzerland, in uncharacteristically strident language, asserted that authorities will not "be intimidated by these cowardly acts of violence, nor yield to the blackmail of terrorist organizations."

Despite Furgler's strong words, the random bombings profoundly shook the customary feeling of security in Switzerland, where assured tranquility is a cornerstone of enviable prosperity.

Newspaper commentators throughout the country stressed that Switzerland can no longer think itself immune from terrorist violence. Far from the bombings, an editorialist in the small, watch-making city of La Chaux-de-Fonds wrote:

"The scare which has settled in Switzerland has, at least, shown one thing: we are not sheltered from terrorism anymore than our neighbors. Even if the attacks have not been committed in the spectacular manner as those in Germany or Italy, for example, it will be necessary, from here on, to recognize that Switzerland is not excluded from the scourge."

Although the intensity of the Armenian bombings was completely unexpected, federal authorities had begun bracing themselves for reprisals shortly after the arrest in Geneva of Mardiros M. Jamkudjian, a 23-year-old Lebanese of Armenian origin. After allegedly confessing to shooting Mehmet Yergoz, a Turkish consular employee, three times in the back in Geneva on June 9, the boyish-looking Jamkudjian was quoted as telling authorities that he was an ASALA commando. Soon after, ASALA issued its threatening communique, demanding Jamkudjian's freedom.

"We are afraid the arrest will present a very major threat for us in the near future," Peter Huber, deputy federal police chief, said in an interview with The Associated Press about three weeks before the first bombing.

Huber also expressed concern that Switzerland might remain a target because Jamkudjian, who is not expected to be tried until September or October, is likely to receive an extended prison sentence.

Jamkudjian is only the third suspected ASALA partisan to have fallen into the hands of authorities here since the movement was organized in December 1974.

The other two accused ASALA operatives were arrested in Geneva last Oct. 3. Police said a bomb exploded as they were assembling it.

Their arrests gave rise to the "October 3rd Organization," which claimed responsibility for detonating small explosives at Swiss government and commercial institutions in London, Paris, Rome, Milan and Madrid. Two bombs were set off in Geneva during the sequence, which lasted from mid-October to February.

The bombings, most of which were at night and caused few injuries, ended with the release of the two accused ASALA partisans who, in separate trials in Geneva, received suspended prison sentences and were ordered expelled from Switzerland.

ASALA's clandestine literature proclaimed this a victorious outcome for the pressure tactics of the "October 3rd Organization."

Swiss officials argued, however, that the sentences were just, noting that one suspect was blinded in the bomb blast and that his testimony had absolved the other of responsibility.

The Geneva state prosecutor, Raymond Foex, had demanded prison terms for both, as "blows to the odious tyranny of terrorism."

Foex also deplored the "bitter irony" that the two suspects were prepared to "set off bombs here, in a friendly country, a country that has always been a friend to the Armenian people."

It has been noted often in the media and elsewhere here since the more recent bombings that Switzerland welcomed hundreds of Armenian refugees fleeing Turkey early this century. In 1896, more than 433,000 Swiss signed petitions urging federal authorities to press European powers to intercede in the "massacres" of "thousands and thousands" of Armenians in what then was the Ottoman Empire.

Today, there are about 3,000 ethnic Armenians in Switzerland.

"How many Armenians have found, in Switzerland, exile and comfort, and a new country respectful of their original cultural identity," asked the newspaper Journal de Geneve. "So nothing, then, can temper the odious character of these attacks which have made victims of innocent people."

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN
AND OMAR SHARIF
1981 by Chicago Tribune

ASK OMAR

Q.—My partner and I have recently become very involved with suit preference signals—we wonder how we were ever able to play without them. But a question did arise in a game the other night. I led the nine of diamonds against an opposing heart game. Partner won and shifted to a spade, with disastrous consequences. He claimed my lead of a high diamond was a suit preference for spades. Is this so?—J. Watson, Alexandria, Va.

A.—This is one of the problems with becoming over-involved with suit preference signals—you tend to forget all about the fundamentals of bridge and look at everything through suit-preference colored glasses.

By and large, when you are defending, there are many things you want to tell partner about a hand that are more important than suit preference. This is true whether you are making the opening lead or playing to it. As third hand, it is vital that partner know your attitude about the suit led; i.e., do you want him to continue or to shift? In some circumstances, it may be necessary to give him the count of your length in the suit.

As opening leader, your goal is to try to describe your holding in the suit you have chosen to lead. Is it top-of-nothing or are you likely to be leading from an honor? If partner wins the trick, do you want him to continue the suit or would you like him to shift? Almost everyone plays that your choice of opening lead has little or nothing to do with suit preference. It is far more important to show your length and strength in the suit led. Thus, a high card simply means that you have nothing in the suit led, while a low card suggests that you have length and an honor.

If you lead a high card in a suit on opening lead, you are telling partner that there is no reason for him to continue the suit if he has something better to do. However, you are not telling him which suit he should shift to. He should be able to work that out from the auction, his hand and dummy.

That does not mean that I cannot think of circumstances where the opening lead might be lead-directing. For instance, suppose that your partner opened the bidding with three hearts and that the opponents then reach four spades. Your partner, on opening lead, attacks with the two of hearts. Obviously, that cannot be his fourth best heart, so he is making an unusual lead. The most probable reason is that he wants you to shift to the lower ranking side suit, in this case clubs, when you gain the lead.

Only in clear-cut circumstances should any card be treated as a suit preference. If there is any doubt in your mind, accept it as its natural meaning. Judicious use of suit preference signals can be a boon to the defenders. Over-use of the signal, like the abuse of any convention in play or bidding, can lead to disaster.

Minister's Dander Rises When Morality Involved

By KENDAL WEAVER Associated Press Writer TUPELO, Miss. (AP) — The Rev. Donald Wildmon was irritated. He paced his cramped and cluttered office, drawing rapidly on his pipe. He had gotten his dander up again.

This time it wasn't the television brass — the network chieftains who, he thinks, have turned America's youth to an unholy script of vulgarity, violence, and out-of-the-closet sex, and whose prime-time act he's determined to clean up.

This time it was a magazine which, he said, had gone to creative lengths to misquote him. It was a small quote, no great transgression, perhaps, but Wildmon picked up the phone and called New York. In a pointed conversation, he argued, cajoled, reasoned, and argued some more.

He hung up, still irritated. Nothing seemed clarified — nothing except a certain sense of mutual misgiving between the party in New York and the party in Tupelo.

But Wildmon and his Coalition for Better Television are used to wrestling with the media. As his brief round with the magazine suggests, he's quick into the ring, ready to take on corporate heavyweight, and undaunted when he fails to score points.

Not that he hasn't scored any. Wildmon's concern is not with print journalism, TV newscasts, theater films and radio music, though he has critical opinions about each. His target is prime-time TV, and his weapon the threat of a selective boycott of TV advertisers' products.

The first planned boycott was postponed late in June after talks with advertisers who, Wildmon says, convinced him that they would now show greater concern about the contents of the shows they sponsor.

"We'll be monitoring this fall," he says. "I hate to state any absolutes, but this fall, if we have been misled."

Right now, at 43, Wildmon is slightly weary but still exuberant from his summer surge into national prominence. Mississippi-born and raised, family man, Methodist minister, religious writer, travel business promoter, founder of the National Federation for Decency — suddenly he was crisscrossing the country, in the midst of a thickening debate.

It hasn't particularly raised him to celebrity status in Tupelo, and that's all right with Wildmon, who's neither flashy nor pretentious.

"I'm not a private person," he says. "We go to a small church. We're not members of the country club."

What bothered him about TV was:

"There is not a single program that shows a contemporary nuclear family, where they have their own children, where they are not something other than normal, and where they have a meaningful relationship to a church."

"I have not seen a program on TV in years that has any meaningful relationship to a church or synagogue." He says the TV program executives seem to look on him that way, too.

"When you're a preacher from Mississippi," he says, "and you're head of the National Federation for Decency, then you're stereotyped as a fire-eating, Bible-toting and Gospel-quoting, hellfire-and-damnation, rural stupid person."

"You're a fraud. You are" — and he laughs — "exactly what you see on television."

However his opponents may view him, Wildmon would not audition well as a latter-day Elmer Gantry.

Thick, brown-rimmed glasses, receding hairline, a voice not vibrant enough to hold an electronic church congregation in thrall. His wardrobe holds two suits and one pair of dress shoes. "You can only wear one pair of shoes at a time," he says.

Trained at Emory University in Atlanta, he is given to a sense of scholarship and religious teaching rather than the emotionalism of fundamentalist sects.

"I'm not a member of Moral Majority," says Wildmon. "I agree with a lot of things Moral Majority is doing. But I have been inaccurately described as Moral Majority's television critic."

This is not a sore point with Wildmon, but he emphasizes that the Coalition for Better Television, a 1981 offshoot of his four-year-old National Federation for Decency, is not an arm of Moral Majority.

Moral Majority, he says, is a member of the coalition, by far its biggest out of some 300 affiliated groups nationwide.

It is also the member with the most apparent clout: Moral Majority's founder, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, has promised to spend $2 million to support CBTV's advertiser boycott, if it materializes.

The boycott — which might also be aided by millions of mailouts under a contract CBTV has with conservative mail marketer Richard Viguerie — is the stick Wildmon finally grabbed after a few years of largely inconsequential arm wrestling with commercial television.

That means boycott.

To his critics, it means censorship.

One of his better-known adversaries, TV executive Norman Lear, has formed something of a counter-coalition, People for the American Way.

Critics of Wildmon say Americans have an absolute right to watch what they want to watch and to turn off their set if they don't like it. They contend that many thoughtful, experimental or challenging shows could suffer from a Wildmon-style boycott.

Wildmon, however, says a boycott is a traditional American right and censors are those who would try to stop it.

"If they want to show a porno flick on television, they can do that. If a company wants to sponsor that show with advertising, that's its right. And if I want to take a stand and refuse to buy the product of that company supporting that show, that's my right, too."

He "can live with a 'hell' or 'damn' every now and then," he says, "but if I showed you how many times they've been said in the last few weeks, it's just too much."

"Children are being raised on television," he says. "And what are we teaching them?"

Some argue that America has undergone a social transformation that TV reflects, and TV actually was tarty in catching up with trends and is far milder than movies. Wildmon says, "TV has done far more to change society than society has to change TV."

Wildmon has his favorite shows — "Little House on the Prairie," "Quincy," "Lou Grant," and lots of the reruns in the afternoon.

As a boy whose family got its first TV in the early 1950s, he recalls watching and enjoying Sid Caesar and "Your Show of Shows," and "Highway Patrol" with Broderick Crawford.

"I recently saw a Jack Benny rerun. There was not a single smutty reference made. There was no laugh track. But it was hilarious. The humor was just as real and as genuine as it could be."

Expert Says U.S. Terrorism Over

By MICHAEL HUDSON SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Author Claire Sterling says the United States should be reasonably free from terrorist activities for the next few years.

She says this is because the support forces, usually assembled from a nation's campuses, are not now available in this country.

"Even the University of California has reinstated the ROTC," she said when interviewed here recently. "Could you imagine what would have happened during the Vietnam era had that been tried?"

But she said that Americans abroad face great dangers from terrorists.

Mrs. Sterling, whose extensive research into terrorism has been published in "The Terror Network" (Readers Digest-Holt Rinehart), said "a new generation of terrorists is regrouping in smaller numbers, but they did a decade ago. I'm afraid the years ahead will be bad ones."

She says democratic nations can handle terrorism within their legal framework, if they will face up to the problem and join ranks.

"No one nation can handle the international nature of terrorism," she said, calling for international data banks of information on terrorists and police cooperation to fight the problem.

She also applauded the creation of small mobile police or military forces to fight terrorist incidents and said that no nation should negotiate substantive issues with terrorists.

Mrs. Sterling lived for 30 years in Italy, which was a textbook setting for terrorism. She then began researching the problem and discovered links among such seemingly diverse groups as The Baader-Meinhoff Gang, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, Al Fatah, the German Red Army Faction, the Red Help, the Japanese Red Army, the IRA Provos, the Basque ETA-Milis and other groups.

She shows how many from these groups have attended training camps in the Middle East, Eastern Europe, Cuba and Libya.

Terrorists may have started out working alone or in small groups, but now an international support system provides them training, communication and financial aid, she said.

She terms 1968-78 as "the fright decade" during which she asserts that some 11,000 died as the result of terrorist activities, in which she includes Ulster warfare and steady violence in Turkey, a nation she says is on the brink of collapse. She notes that terrorism had rougher going in 1979-80 when its ranks grew so big and unwieldy that fringe members began to turn in others and police improved their anti-terrorist methods.

Peking Shows New Fashions

By VICTORIA GRAHAM Associated Press Writer PEKING (AP) — The summer scene here in the ancient City of Swallows: women in thin dresses, romance in the parks, an abundance of luscious watermelons — and the annual shortage of beer.

The warm weather also brings a plague of raucous motorbikes and daredevils on roller skates. Plump, rosy-cheeked grandmothers sell frozen sweets on almost every streetcorner and tough-looking jobless kids hawk roses.

Dedicated consumers scramble for the latest Hong Kong styles at night-time bazaars. Young people read love stories and engineering books under eerie orange street lights and thousands fill the vast Square of Heavenly Peace for midnight picnics.

The summer of 1981 is the summer of color in the city known for high gray walls and years of relentless proletarian gray garb. It is the season of style; an unabashed fashion revolution is under way with the official blessing of a Communist Party leadership that now touts consumerism and a higher standard of living.

The rush is on for pretty things that would have been denounced as decadent and bourgeois not many years ago: colorful clothes, baubles, chic sunglasses and perfume.

★ 13 1/2% APR (1st Year) ★

CENTURY 21 Lanco Realty is proud to announce that we have available 13 1/2% APR fixed rate first year financing. This program is part of Federal National Mortgage Association's Buy Down Program.

Here is How It Works:

Example: A builder wishes to offer a buy-down plan to assist prospective purchasers to meet the mortgage payments on a 16 1/2% APR mortgage. The builder proposes a three-year graduated mortgage payment plan that would effectively give the home purchaser a 13 1/2% APR interest rate payment for the first year, 14 1/2% APR for the second year, and 15 1/2% APR for the third year. Starting with the mortgage 37th payment, the mortgage instruments slated mortgage payments, based upon a 16 1/2% APR rate, will become the complete responsibility of the buyer/owner (mortgagor).

These loans do NOT amortize negatively and have no prepayment penalty and can be refinanced.

Your down payment on the home can be as low as 5% of the appraised value.

You qualify at the bank at the 13 1/2% APR rate!

CENTURY 21 Lanco Realty keeps up to date with the ever changing real estate market and new financing programs. We are proud to offer you the best real estate service in Greenville. Come by our open house today at Greenwood Forest Subdivision (on Stantonsburg Highway) from 2-5 PM or call Jonathan Elliot, Manager, for a personal conference on how this financing program can get you into your dream home today.

Squatters Find Broken Dreams

By STEVE BREWER
 Associated Press Writer
 CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — They are squatters — 200,000 men, women and children trapped just a few miles from their dreams.

They live in shacks and houses built from whatever is available — adobe, cinderblocks, scrap wood, tin, cardboard.

Many shacks have no electricity or natural gas. Streets are rutted, dusty tracks between the houses.

Their houses are on land owned by others. Some pay rent, some don't.

Water is scarce. Hundreds often depend on one faucet or one dripping pipe. In other areas, water is trucked into the squatters' village — the colonias — by city contractors.

Many die from dehydration or heatstroke when the blistering desert temperature rises above 100. Others freeze to death in winter because they cannot find enough wood or kerosene to heat their homes.

"Ever since Juarez has been Juarez, the problem has existed," Mayor Jose Reyes Estrada says. "There's such a demographic explosion in our country, people tend to go to the border."

Indeed, peasants from the interior see Juarez as a city of opportunity. Thousands of Juarez' nearly 1 million residents have jobs in factories put here by American companies because of cheap labor. The city also does a booming tourist business.

The border city also is a staging area for Mexicans attempting to cross into the United States, legally and illegally. Because of the large Mexican-American population in El Paso — 65 percent of the residents have Spanish surnames — illegal aliens have a better chance of melting into the local population.

Between 80 and 100 people from the interior pour into Juarez every day. For many, the only option upon arrival is to move to the colonias to set up housekeeping while searching for jobs, immigration papers and a better life.

Despite Juarez's image of opportunity, unskilled laborers often find when they arrive that there is no work for them. Some take jobs as street vendors, reselling whatever they can find to American tourists or other colonos. Some beg. Some steal. Others cross the Rio Grande to work in fields or factories in the United States.

Gaining legal crossing status is difficult and often involves long delays, says Henry McGehee, an immigration inspector in El Paso.

McGehee says the wait for a "green card," which designates the holder a permanent resident alien and allows him to live and work in the United States, varies depending upon the immigrant's status.

For example, one group of Mexicans whose relatives have green cards recently got their papers after waiting since 1972. Most of the colonos have no such connection, McGehee says.

Meanwhile, they wait and continue their daily struggle to exist.

Reyes Estrada, who runs the city from an ornate office in City Hall, sees the colonias as the biggest problem facing the city.

The flow of squatters has been steady since the mid-1960s, when there was a near-revolt by lower-class Mexicans demanding land. Peasants snatched up farms, resulting in armed conflict with landowners and the army. While most of the conflicts occurred over ranches and farms, squatters left for border cities like Juarez.

A New Look At Katherine Hepburn

On screen and off, Katherine Hepburn has established herself as one of America's most durable, talented and likeable actresses. She is the winner of three Best Actress Oscars ("Morning Glory," 1932; "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?," 1967; "The Lion in Winter," 1968) and has been nominated for the award an unprecedented 11 times.

Hepburn came to Hollywood from the east in 1932 at the urging of film director George Cukor. She soon vaulted into the national eye with her motion picture debut in "Bill of Divorcement," and she has been a celebrity ever since.

Hepburn is never neutral nor indifferent nor casual about anything. "You either like a person a lot or you just don't like them at all," she once said. "I'm like that myself. But, do you know, I don't believe it's people we like or dislike. I think we admire or detest certain traits of character. I admire courage more than anything."

Despite her recent battle with Parkinson's disease, she is still a study in fortitude and forthrightness, her exuberance for life belying her 74 years.

Hepburn's outspoken views are legendary, and television viewers will be treated to a second dose of them on "The Barbara Walters Summer Special" on Tuesday, Aug. 11 (10-11 p.m.). Part One of the interview aired in the spring.

In the course of the discussion, Hepburn takes a swipe at censorship — "very unhealthy." She comments on her craft — "you know, acting is really not much," and she looks at her career — "I played all the spinsters and the uglies."

The program also offers film clips of Hepburn in some of her classic movies, including the upcoming "On Golden Pond," with Jane and Henry Fonda.

In a rebroadcast of an earlier interview, Walters talks with Burt Reynolds at his dinner theatre in Jupiter, Florida. Reynolds explains why he never turns down an autograph seeker: "I think probably people throw them (the autographs) away, or whatever, but I remember a time when my aunt had an old torn piece of paper under the glass of her coffee table, and it had Bing Crosby on it."

BARBARA WALTERS continues her in depth interview with Katherine Hepburn on "The Barbara Walters Summer Special," airing Tuesday, Aug. 11 (10-11 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

Writers Return

Hollywood screen and television writers have returned to work following a 13-week strike. Among the terms of the agreement are: a $29,485 minimum price for a high-budget screenplay; $7,548 for a half-hour television script; and $11,169 for an hour long television script.

Tony Kubek Provides Commentary

Sunday, Aug. 9 will mark the playing of the 52nd All Star game, which NBC-TV will be broadcast from Cleveland's Municipal Stadium from 8:00-11:30 p.m. The NBC host for the evening will be Bryant Gumbel. Announcers Tony Kubek and Joe Garagiola will be on hand to provide the play-by-play commentary.

Last year, the National League continued its dominance over the American League by defeating them 4-2 in Los Angeles. Dodger pitcher Jerry Reuss was credited with the win with Bruce Sutter picking up the save. Sutter has now won or saved the last three games for the National League. The National League has won an unbelievable 17 of the last 18 All Star Games.

Due to the professional baseball strike, no rosters were released, but it can be expected that certain players like Rod Carew, Reggie Jackson and Carlton Fisk will be on hand for the American League; National League players most likely to be voted in are Bill Buckner, Pete Rose and Steve Garvey.

The 1981 All-Star game will be played in Cleveland's Municipal Stadium. The American League will naturally be the home team. It will be the third All-Star game held in Cleveland. The first game hosted by the Indians set the All-Star game attendance record at 69,831 spectators on July 8, 1935.

Black Entertainment Television Friday, Aug. 14 11:00 p.m.

Movie: "Black Sampson" Starring Rockne Tarkington, William Smith and Connie Strickland. Action-black nightclub owner struggles to keep his club free from underworld drug peddling.

NBC ANNOUNCERS TONY KUBEK and Joe Garagiola will bring play-by-play and expert commentary to the viewing audience as NBC broadcasts the 52 All-Star Game Sunday, Aug. 9 (8-11:30 p.m.).

THE Rook Look AT GARMENT CARE

DICKIE ROOK

Drycleaning Improves Drapes

Drapes or curtains (even those labeled "Washable") are allowed to shrink up to 4% of their original size. On a 90" drape, this means up to a 3 1/2" change!

The allowable standard for drycleaning is a 2% drapery shrinkage. Plus, this amount is recoverable by the drycleaner.

Drycleaning is the best method of cleaning cotton and rayon draperies. These cellulose fibers absorb water and swell when humidity is high, and release water and shrink when it lowers. Changes caused by weather are made greater by washing. Since drycleaning uses almost no water, it insures your draperies will not suffer a permanent loss of fit.

Laundrying doesn't remove some types of soil your draperies accumulate. Gases from cooking fumes, cigarette smoke, gas-heated appliances and pollutants in the air of your home settle in your drapes. These "acid soils" deteriorate fabric fibers. (Damage is accelerated if draperies hang in heat, such as near a radiator.)

Most home machines don't have the capacity to handle drapes. In the washer, this results in soap not being evenly distributed, and in the dryer - excessive fabric wrinkling.

A Cleaner World recommends only drycleaning for your drapes. The best care you can give them at home is frequent vacuuming, since draperies, synthetic fabrics especially, pick up dry soil (dust) from the air due to static electricity.

To help you with your cleaning budget A Cleaner World will give you 10% off your cleaning bill when you present this ad.

Rent-A-Castle

When he's not busy playing ambitious attorney Ross Marler on the Emmy Award-winning serial "Guiding Light", actor Jerry Ver Dorn likes to get away from his regular routine. So, this summer, he and his wife have rented a castle in England, where they will spend his two-week vacation from the program. "It's something I have always fantasized about," says the actor, "so when I found out you actually do it, I had to."

Warren Who?

Janet Zarish, who appears as troublesome Natalie Triandos on "As the World Turns," will be moonlighting during the month of July. Along with stirring up trouble in Oakdale, she'll be appearing Off Broadway in a new historical comedy, "Villager," about the White House years of President Warren G. Harding.

Embryo Transplant Is Theme

"The Seeding of Sarah Burns" takes a dramatic look at the emotional upheavals surrounding a human embryo transplant experiment. The film will be rebroadcast on "The CBS Wednesday Night Movies" on Aug. 12 (9-11 p.m.) and stars Kay Lenz, Martin Balsam, Cassie Yates and Cliff DeYoung.

Sarah Burns (Lenz), a vital, independent young working woman, learns of a proposed embryo transplant and volunteers for the sensitive project. After careful deliberation, Dr. Samuel Melman (Balsam) accepts Sarah as the surrogate mother and transplants the embryo from the real mother, Karen Lovell (Yates), who is able to conceive, but unable to physically carry the pregnancy to term. Karen and her husband know of Sarah, but their names are purposely kept from her.

Soon after the transplant, Sarah meets Tim (DeYoung), a commercial artist, and they fall in love. Although Tim accepts Sarah's pregnancy, he is sworn to secrecy about the truth of the matter. Sarah begins the pregnancy with feelings of excitement and accomplishment, but as the months pass, she undergoes emotional and psychological changes which threaten not only her relationship with Tim but her commitment to the ethics of the unprecedented situation.

KAY LENZ AND CLIFF DEYOUNG star as a young woman who volunteers to undergo an embryo transplant and the boyfriend she meets before the experiment is completed, in "The Seeding of Sarah Burns," airing Wednesday, Aug. 12 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Back To Maverick

The Burbank Studios is now constructing an entire western town for the new "Maverick" series starring Jim Garner. Stuart Margolin will be a regular on the show, as he was in Garner's last series, "Rockford Files."

Acting For Therapy

Val Bisoglio made an untraditional entrance into show business.

"For a guy who didn't become an actor until I was way past the age for matinee idol status, I seem to be doing okay," said Val, who portrays Danny Tovo, owner of the restaurant where Quincy and his colleagues hang out, on NBC's "Quincy" series, Wednesdays (10-11 p.m.).

Born in New York, where he once owned a luncheonette, Bisoglio later moved to Las Vegas.

"I worked as a waiter in Vegas and was doing just fine until a few problems set in," recalled Bisoglio, "and a doctor suggested

I get into acting for therapeutic purposes.

"I thought it was kind of silly at first, but pretty soon I got to liking it — the acting bug bit me pretty good.

"That was only about 15 years ago. I began studying both in Hollywood and at New York's New School and the Actors Studio," he added.

Bisoglio made his acting debut in "Kiss Mama," an Off Broadway play. After a little more stage work, he went to Hollywood and studied with acting coach Jeff Corey.

Bisoglio soon was getting small parts in television shows, and then the parts became increasingly more important. "They were not always big roles, but for the most part, memorable enough that casting directors remembered your work," said Val.

His television credits include "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," "All in the Family," "McCloud" and "The Marcus-Nelson Murders."

This fall, "Quincy" will be in its sixth season and Bisoglio is delighted.

"Working with Klugman is like having a built-in tutor on hand to keep your efforts at their highest levels," he said.

You Can't Hold This 'Mayo'!

Whitman Mayo exudes a zest for life in the present. However, he stresses that his live-for-now attitude does not mean that "one should make no plans, but that one shouldn't put all hopes and plans into investment boxes marked 'future.' I believe if you are determined to be successful in what you are doing right at this minute and you continue with that determination, you will be a successful person in the future too."

"People ask me how hard did I push to become an actor and I tell them I didn't push at all," said Mayo. "I always try to do my best at whatever I do, but being an actor was not a plan."

Mayo, who portrays Grady in "Sanford," which is being rebroadcast on and off this summer on Fridays, began his professional acting career 15 years ago in a Los Angeles production of "The Amen Corner." The show starred Beah Richards and Isabel Sanford, now the star of "The Jeffersons."

"I felt as successful then as I have since," said Mayo. "You can't measure success by how much money you're making. Other people will judge you that way, but you have to know better."

"The Amen Corner" later moved to Broadway and Mayo's salary grew to $200 per week. "That was big time dough," he said. "I liked it; I sure won't deny that. But the money itself didn't give me an appreciation of my worth."

Eventually, Mayo started a literary agency, and while looking for work for his clients, he was hired to play Grady.

Miller Honored

Dr. Jonathan Miller, producer of "The Shakespeare Plays," has received the Royal Television Society's Silver Medal for Outstanding Creative Achievement Behind the Camera, generally acknowledged as Britain's most prestigious television honor. Since Miller's association with the show in 1980, he has produced 12 plays, five of which he also directed.

"The Shakespeare Plays" also garnered the Royal Society's Performance Award, a rare joint honor presented to Celia Johnson and Michael Hordern for their work in "All's Well That Ends Well."

"The Shakespeare Plays" is a BBC-TV and Time-Life Television co-production, made possible in America by grants from Exxon Corporation, Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, and Morgan Trust Company.

Star Survived

Bill Davidson's book, "Gary Coleman: Medical Miracle," will be available in a few months, detailing how the diminutive "Diff'rent Strokes" star survived a deadly congenital disease via a kidney transplant.

CBS Sports will broadcast, live from Indianapolis, the finals of the 72nd United States Clay Court Tennis Championship. Pat Summerall and two-time Clay Court Champion Tony Trabert will deliver the commentary on the men's finals, which will air Sunday, Aug. 9 (2-4:30 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

AMERICAN EDDIE DIBBS will vie for the U.S. Clay Court Championship, Sunday, Aug. 9 (2-4:30 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Defending champion, Jose-Luis Clerc of Argentina will face a lineup comprised of many of the world's finest players. The list is headed by Czechoslovakia's Ivan Lendl, who defeated Clerc in the semifinals of this year's French Open, another clay tournament. In other matches fought on clay, Lendl captured the 1980 Spanish and Japan Open singles titles.

Clerc's fellow countryman, Guillermo Vilas will also make a bid at Jose's title. Vilas is ranked as the world's seventh-best player and is the 1979 U.S. Clay Court runner-up. In other clay tournaments Vilas captured the 1978 and '79 Australian Open Titles.

America's bid for the championship will come from the trio of Mel Purcell, Eddie Dibbs, and Harold Solomon. Purcell was the 1980 "Rookie of the Year." Hard clay court title. A graduate of the Univ. of Miami, Dibbs has a powerful two fisted backhand and considers clay courts to be his specialty. On clay he has captured the 1973, '74, and '76 German Open, and in 1977 mastered Italy's Adriano Panatta, Australia's Ross Case, India's Vijay Amritraj, and Vitas Gerulaitis to win the WCT London title.

Dibbs' ex-doubles partner, Harold Solomon is also expected to be in contention for the title. Solomon, the defending ATP Champion, last year defeated Vilas for the International German Championship and is a three time French Open semi-finalist. The 28 year old captured his fourth 1980 title in Tel Aviv in October of last year.

fought victories over Solomon and Wojek Fibak brought him the finals match against Clerc in last years U.S. Clay Court Championships. He is currently competing in his second year on the professional tennis circuit.

Eddie Dibbs may be America's best hope for a title this year. Dibbs, age 30, with his 1980 U.S. Pro Championship, became the first American since Jimmy Connors in 1973, to win that coveted

Despite this stiff competition Clerc will vie for his 2nd straight U.S. Clay Court Championship. Last year his finals' victory over Purcell insured him of his first of three 1980 clay court victories. Clerc captured the Mutual Benefit Life championships by beating 1981 Wimbledon Champion John McEnroe, and went on to win the South American Open Championship.

HOLLYWOOD — Another former first lady has found it necessary to lift her spirits with a face lift. The grapevine in Plains, Ga. reports that ROSLYN CARTER, in preparation for her trip to China and those guest shots on talk shows when her autobiography is published, added a face lift to her shopping list.

LENA HORNE, currently starring on Broadway in "A Lady and Her Music," celebrated her 62th birthday with a 250 lb. cake presented to her onstage by SIDNEY POITIER. The band played "Happy Birthday, Dear Lena" and the entire SRO audience joined in the sentiment with a standing ovation.

JAMES FARENTINO fans can be looking forward to seeing him on "DYNASTY" this fall. Writers have been ordered to create a new character, as a permanent member of the cast, just for him.

JOEY TRAVOLTA was surprised by brother JOHN, who flew the TRAVOLTA family to St. Louis to applaud his show there. The brothers have worked out their problems and it's one big happy family again.

JOHN DENVER, on a private citizen tour of China, was applauded by Crown Prince Akihito and wife Michiko at DENVER's Tokyo concert. It was the first time the royal couple had attended a pop concert.

And now it is DANNY THOMAS with a publisher for his autobiog. "Upstairs From Mrs. Feldman's Bakery," which is where DANNY lived with his folks in Toledo, Ohio, before being bitten by the show business bug.

JACLYN SMITH's TV-movie deal in which she was to have had the real-life role of Gene Tierney has been postponed — but she is still the first choice of author/producer SIDNEY SHELDON to play the lead in the movie version of his bestseller "Rage of Angels."

A Divorce Proceeding

We've been severely troubled for several years about the quality of one of our old friends, our past major shirt line. We have watched with dismay a decline in workmanship and fabrics, to the point that we began two years ago to search the market place for a replacement.

We're pleased to report to you a happy ending, a new love affair. We have found a quality shirt line manufactured by GITMAN that we are proud to put our name on. This shirt is superior to any quality level we have seen in years. The shirt is cut along crisp classic lines with added distinguishing touches here and there to make it better, and always superior fabrics! We're very excited about this shirt and would love to show it to you. We wouldn't put our name on just any shirt! This is something special.

Send the question, on a postcard, to "Ask," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

Kids' tastes live happily ever after.

FOR CHARLOTTE ZOLOTOW, vice president and associate publisher, Junior Books Group, Harper & Row

Have children's tastes in books changed; are the books themselves different? —O.L., Saginaw, Mich.

● I don't think that the children who love fantasy today are different from those of years past. There always is a place for every kind of book — the lovely fairy stories of long ago and the realism that some children — sometimes even the same children — want in books. Children have always been more aware and more intelligent than most adults credit them to be. A new respect for younger readers is reflected in those books once directed at older children and now read by younger ones. Writers of children's books are quite alert to the changing cultural scene with its acceleration toward maturity.

FROM THE "ASK" EDITOR

● Are you tired of those lists dealing with women with the best or worst coiffs and feel that men have been left out in the cold? Well now Hollywood hairstylist George Carroll reviews some well-known fellows and tells what they are doing right or wrong: Christopher Reeve: "super hair, convertible style, looks great on the fly"; Cary Grant: "silver fox, perfect 10, from jet black to bright white"; Ronald Reagan: "aging but still a spirited look"; Efrem Zimbalist Jr.: "most distinguished look"; Paul Newman: "cool look — with blue eyes like that, who needs hair?"; Omar Sharif: "continental look"; Robert Redford: "medium-cool look, and it's natural blond"; Perry Como: "always in style — once a hairstylist always a hairstylist." (Perry was once a barber.)

Redford: Among the best tressed.

FOR JAMES NOBLE, star of TV's Benson

Your role of governor on the show makes me wonder if you ever had any desire to enter politics, the way some actors do. —P.F., Decatur, Ill.

● No. For one thing, my memory for faces and names could not be worse. And the awesome responsibility would be too much to bear: To do or say things that could change the course of many people's lives is a frightening and horrifying prospect. I'd better stay in acting where, if I make mistakes, no one suffers.

FOR LYNN-HOLLY JOHNSON, co-starring in For Your Eyes Only

What is more important to you — your reputation as a skater or as an actress? —E.D., Vancouver, Wash.

● In Ice Castles, my first film, I was hired because of what I did on ice, not what I did before the cameras. I was much more concerned about my skating because, in that respect, I had a reputation (still do, in fact) and I didn't want to make a mess of it. Now I'm equally concerned about my acting and my skating.

FROM THE "ASK" EDITOR

● Ever wonder how comics "warm up" their audience; put them in a jovial and receptive mood? This is how Joan Rivers does it: She starts off by asking, with a straight face: "Is Jackie Onassis here? No, then we can talk about her....Is Liz Taylor here? If you don't know what she looks like, look for a woman in Orson Welles designer jeans....Is the Queen of England here? Look for a woman in a house dress trimmed with ermine, and wearing a crown that's falling on her nose."

FOR JOHN GOODRUM, research scientist, University of Georgia Agricultural Experiment Stations

What success have you had in running your campus buses or your tractors on peanut oil? —R.S., Beachwood, N.J.

● Two University of Georgia buses have run 20,000 miles without a hitch on a 50-50 mix of peanut and diesel oil, and one of our experiment-station farm tractors has been running on 100 percent peanut oil. But it costs twice as much as diesel — so research continues.

FOR SPENCER MICHLIN, creator of advertising jingles

Do you only write jingles for products you really believe in? —L.V., Casper, Wyo.

● I feel a responsibility not to help sell a product I know to be shoddy or inferior, but in the case of national products, the industry itself has the responsibility to make the best possible product. I do not personally test every bra and perfume. The biggest difference between products of similar structure is the way they are marketed; most are equal to their competitors.

FOR LANNY LEWIS, hotel manager, Loews Drake Swissotel, New York City

Is it tough being a woman executive in a business which is run mainly by men? —A.B., Oklahoma City, Okla.

● If a male manager gives a customer his walking papers, that customer could reward the manager with a black eye. Guests don't argue with a lady. They wind up apologizing effusively, and sometimes send me flowers. What is tough is coping with the hotel industry itself. It does not welcome women with open arms.

PRO Hilda Howland M. Mason, Member at Large, Council of the District of Columbia

For 180 years, inhabitants of the District of Columbia have only partially shared in the American citizens' experience. They fully shoulder citizens' responsibilities. They are taxed by the Federal Government though denied representation in that Government. Their laws and budget must meet with Congressional approval. Supporters of statehood seek nothing extraordinary, merely the heritage of every American citizen: self-government and Congressional representation.

PRO AND CON Should Washington, D.C., Become the 51st State?

Question submitted by George Mocol, Menkato, Minn.

Send questions of national significance, on a postcard, to "Pro & Con," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $10 for those published.

CON Senator Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), chairman, Subcommittee on the Constitution

I oppose the D.C. Amendment because it would accord the District the benefits of statehood by allowing U.S. Congressional representation without requiring the District to bear the responsibility of statehood — raising its own finances. It would be an extremely bad precedent for our system of Federalism to allow a nonstate to be represented in Congress. Having little or no farming, mining, manufacturing, fishing or business, the District is dominated by a single interest — the Federal Government and its employees.

The Search for Nazi War Criminals

They live among us fearlessly—and with good reason. In 36 years, only a handful of the Nazis next door have been found.

Although Adolf Eichmann was punished, most Nazi criminals escaped — many of them to the U.S.

Wide World

Wide World

Former Nazi concentration camp guard Hermine Ryan was recently sentenced to life in prison for her crimes.

By Ernest Volkman

He might be the quiet old man who sells newspapers on the corner. Or the retired businessman down the street who now spends most of his time tending his roses.

They are former Nazi war criminals, and they live in virtually every nook and cranny of the United States. For the most part, they lead quiet lives, often as pillars of their communities. In some cases, their identities are false, but most of them live under their real names, convinced that they will never be brought to justice.

And, by and large, they are right: The chance that they will ever have to answer for their role in the slaughter of 13 million human beings — half of them Jews — is remote. Despite a new drive by the U.S. Justice Department, the record shows that in the 36 years since this country helped destroy Nazism and bring its leaders to justice, it has managed to deport only

Nazi-hunter Simon Wiesenthal: Many of the war criminals listed in his files live in the U.S.

one accused Nazi war criminal. And even that modest effort by the Federal Government is now threatened by budget cuts.

Nobody knows exactly how many former Nazi war criminals are living in the United States today. The estimates range from 400 to 3,000, but whatever the actual figure, the United States is the world's greatest haven for such criminals.

There is no single description that would sum up the Nazi war criminals now living in this country. They represent nearly every stratum of American society and include:

- Bishop Valerian Trifa, head of the Romanian Episcopate Church of America, who has been accused of leading an anti-Jewish pogrom in Romania during which men, women and children were hacked to pieces in the streets and hung up on meat hooks.

- A Texas farmer (not yet officially charged) who won a decoration from the Nazis for inventing a method of automatically destroying bodies removed from gas chambers.

- Karl Linnas, a retired businessman in New York who was once the commandant of Tartu, an infamous concentration camp where victims were buried alive.

- Andreas Artukovic, a California man who was a high official in the Nazi puppet state of Croatia, where he directed the extermination of nearly 800,000 people, most of them Jews and Gypsies.

The list goes on and on. These are just the highlights from bulging Government files, jammed with eyewitness reports, documents and other evidence. Few of these details have ever been made public, which is why there is extensive public ignorance about the extent of the problem in this country.

Most people seem to believe that Nazi war crimes were committed by a handful of notorious men, notably Heinrich Himmler, Adolf Eichmann, Hermann Goering, and, of course, Adolf Hitler himself. Those criminals who escaped, such as the infamous Dr. Josef Mengele (known as the "Angel of Auschwitz," he selected those to be gassed and carried out hideous medical experiments on inmates at the camp) are assumed to have escaped to South America.

In fact, however, the Nazis set up a huge apparatus to carry out their plans to exterminate millions of "sub-humans," including Jews — their most prominent victims — Gypsies, Slavs, various religious sects and the mentally retarded. Nearly 25,000 people were needed to run this killing apparatus. And of that total, according to estimates prepared by the West German Government, less than 10 percent have ever been brought to justice.

Where did the rest of them go? Many of the leading war criminals organized themselves into a group called Organization der SS Angehörigen, known by its more familiar acronym, ODESSA (which translates as "organization of SS members"). This group functioned as a secret escape organization, producing false travel documents and identity papers, then spiriting war criminal fugitives (including Adolf Eichmann) via escape routes to overseas sanctuaries, mainly in South America. Most of the major criminals chose such friendly South American countries as Paraguay and Argentina after buying citizenship and protection with huge sums paid out of the loot stolen from their victims.

But the vast majority of war criminals returned to Germany with the retreating German Army when the Third Reich collapsed and did not use such sophisticated escape machinery. They simply walked into displaced persons camps and passed themselves off as refugees. A significant portion of them finally wound up in this country.

The reason so many war criminals found refuge in the United States was a law called the Displaced Persons Act, which was passed by Congress shortly after World War II. Simply, the law offered immigration to America for anybody who was a displaced person — homeless refugee — as a result of World War II, without regard to immigration quotas. Provisions were added to the law requiring displaced persons to sign two affidavits upon entering the United States: One certified that the person had never participated in a "crime against humanity," and the second certified that the person had never belonged to the SS, Gestapo or other Nazi organizations.

As a practical matter, of course, this meant that there was virtually no screening at all, since Nazi war criminals blithely signed such affidavits, assuming their pasts would never catch up with them. What happened later is illustrated by the case of one of the most notorious accused Nazi war criminals living in this country today.

He is Boleslavs Maikovskis, now 74, a retired carpenter who resides on a tree-lined suburban street in a quiet community some 40 miles east of New York City. To his neighbors, he is an unfailingly courteous and religiously devout man who flies an American flag at his home.

But according to the United States Government, which is now trying to deport him, Boleslavs Maikovskis was a Latvian police official during World War II and worked with the Nazi SS to exterminate at least 40,000 Jews.

Maikovskis, who has also been accused of genocide by famed Nazi-hunter Simon Wiesenthal and various Jewish groups, followed the classic pattern established by many other accused Nazi war criminals. Claiming to be a displaced person, Maikovskis entered this country in 1951 with his wife, and both signed the affidavits required of them.

But in 1965, the Soviet Government demanded that the quiet carpenter living on Long Island be extradited back to his native Latvia to face war crimes charges. The U.S. Government refused the extradition request. For one thing, the United States has never recognized the incorporation of Latvia into the U.S.S.R. But there was an even more important political consideration: Maikovskis had become very active in anti-Communist exile organizations, and the Federal Government was unwilling to run the political risk of moving against a strong anti-Communist.

But why not try Maikovskis in this country on war crimes charges? Because such crimes are not violations of American law, which has no statute for genocide, whether committed in this country or anyplace else. Under immigration law, all the Government can do is charge in a civil action that a particular naturalized American citizen or resident alien living in this country lied when signing the affidavits mentioned earlier. If the Government can prove that, then the person is ineligible for American citizenship or residency in this country and can be deported — but only after a lengthy and complicated legal process that can take years.

In the case of Maikovskis, the Government did not decide to move legally against him until 1976. The reason for the delay was that the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, a Federal agency considered by some to be inept, had jurisdiction in such matters and plainly did not want to expend its chronically understaffed resources in prosecuting lengthy war crimes cases. (The cases are difficult because the courts have demanded strict standards of proof.)

It was only after strong congressional pressure was exerted, led by then-Congresswoman Elizabeth Holtzman of New York, that the Immigration Service in 1974 began to move against several cases that had been gathering dust for years.

However, although the Immigration Service was aware as early as 1945 that some Nazi war criminals had managed to find sanctuary in this country, by 1976 Immigration had managed to deport only one accused war criminal — Hermine Braunsteiner Ryan, a Queens, New York housewife. She was extradited to West Germany to face charges of atrocities she allegedly committed while serving as a guard at the Maidanek concentration camp, where over one million Jews were exterminated. (In June, Ryan, now 61, was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment. Her case is being appealed.)

The Immigration Service record was so bad on Nazi war criminal cases that such cases were taken away from Immigration three years ago and given to a new unit at the Justice Department. Since then, the new unit has opened files on about 450 cases and filed charges in 17 of them. Deportation charges have recently been filed against Andreas Artukovic, and in June, John Demjanjuk, 61, a Ukrainian immigrant accused of being a Nazi death camp guard known as "Ivan the Terrible," was stripped of his U.S. citizenship by a Federal court.

While the unit has earned high marks for dedication and vigor on such cases, it now faces an inexorable enemy: time. In some of the cases, 40 years have passed since the crimes were committed, which means that surviving witnesses may be dead, the trail of evidence has grown cold and even witnesses who can be located may have faulty memories after all the time that has passed.

The Nazi-hunters now face still another enemy: budget restraints. Recently the Reagan administration budget-cutters told the Justice Department that its special Nazi-hunting unit, known officially as the Office of Special Investigations (OSI), will get its next budget reduced from $2.6 million to $2.4 million, plus a cut in personnel from 50 to 45 professional staffers.

Alarmed, a bipartisan coalition of three Republican and eight Democratic senators, led by Senator Christopher Dodd of Connecticut, is urging President Reagan not to cut OSI's budget. Whether it will succeed is still open to question, but the larger issue remains. As Simon Wiesenthal puts it, "If you cannot obtain justice for the murderers of millions of people, then you cannot have justice at all."

VEGETABLES

Freshly harvested crops are available now in varieties and abundance to add color, flavor and nutrition to summer meals.

By Marilyn Hansen

The carefully tended home gardens are now bursting with all kinds of fresh vegetables. Roadside markets and supermarkets, too, show the season's splendor in neatly arranged rows of fresh, nutritious bounty.

Many of the varieties of vegetables that we enjoy today are the results of the work of the W. Atlee Burpee Company, plant seed breeders and growers since 1876.

I recently visited Mrs. Lois Burpee at her home in Fordhook Farm, Doylestown, Pa. The farm was originally established in 1888 as a testing ground for seeds and as a breeding center for new and better varieties of flowers and vegetables.

Sitting on the shady terrace under the graceful linden and walnut trees, I found the afternoon to be a welcome break in a fast-paced week. It was refreshing to talk with this thoughtful

Peas, simply steamed or in salads, keep their popularity year in and year out; the Maestro variety is a prolific producer.

Kandy Korn Hybrid, a new corn variety that is winning enthusiastic friends.

Unusual is Burpee's Golden Beet, featured here in cooked amber slices and tangy steamed beet tops.

This rich, red tomato, Burpee's Supersteak Hybrid, is temptingly stuffed with creamy cottage cheese.

This just may be the world's simplest recipe for beautifying a bean, or any other vegetable. Velveeta process cheese spread makes a sauce that's incredibly smooth, practically foolproof, and it's almost as fast as you can say "second helpings."

#33 SAUCY VEGETABLES

1/2 lb. VELVEETA Pasteurized Process Cheese Spread, cubed	2 10-oz. pkgs. frozen cut green beans, cooked, drained
1/4 cup milk	1 10-oz. pkg. frozen sliced carrots, cooked, drained
	1 cup canned French fried onions

Heat Velveeta process cheese spread and milk over low heat; stir until sauce is smooth. Add green beans and carrots; heat. Pour into serving dish; top with onions.

and gentle lady. Lois Burpee is the widow of David Burpee, the son of W. Atlee Burpee, the reknowned horticulturist who founded the mail-order seed business in 1876.

Lois is a Wellesley College graduate with a botany degree. She intended to be a plant doctor and steeped herself in plant physiology, genetics, bacteriology and chemistry! Just out of college and working at the Baltimore International Flower Show, she met her future husband.

Lois worked two years for the Burpee Company and then left to marry, and raise their two children, Jonathan and Blanche.

When asked about today's working mothers, Mrs. Burpee replied, "There is a time when children are young and the mother is needed at home.

"A woman should not look down on being a mother and a homekeeper. In the early, formative years of a child's life, the character is developing. Children learn many things from parents: attitudes to be taken toward people, how to open their eyes to the world around them.

"Cooking need not be drudgery; it can be creative and adventuresome, like trying new and different vegetables; not just to eat the vegetables, but to have an interest in where they came from and how they are used in their native country."

Mrs. Burpee continued with her warm smile, "For instance, the eggplant originated in the Near East and India. My favorite way to prepare it is to scoop it out, stuff it and bake it with a tomato sauce. The Indian way is to cook it, then mash it, season it and mix it with sesame seeds and serve hot or cold.

"Also, when you introduce a new food to children, tell them something about it and then they will get more interested in it."

Lois first became interested in food while living in Palestine where her father was a medical missionary, and so many foods there were different from those of her native Scotland.

Lois continued, "Vegetables aren't something just to put seasoning on — they have their own flavor. For instance, spaghetti squash has a slightly nutty taste. I like to season it with butter and a little spice or sherry. I've developed a recipe for spaghetti squash salad that people really enjoy."

Mrs. Burpee is currently writing a book on gardening and cooking. We share some of her own recipes with you.

This summer, Fordhook Farms will again be open to Burpee customers and friends for two long weekends: August 14, 15 and 16 and August 21, 22 and 23. Visiting hours will be from 9:30 AM to 3:30 PM. Wear comfortable shoes because a good amount of walking is necessary to see the trial fields and gardens.

If you plan to bring a group of 15 or more, please call or write in advance.

SCORCHED EGGPLANT

(Lois Burpee)

- 1 large or 2 small eggplants (about 2 lbs.)
- 2 tablespoons vegetable oil
- 2 medium-size onions, chopped
- Pinch turmeric
- 1 tablespoon sesame seeds
- ½ teaspoon coriander seeds
- Salt
- Ground black pepper

1. Place eggplant on a pan about 8 inches from the broiler. Turn broiler on and, as eggplant scorches, turn it over continually until the skin is all brown.

Everything You've Wanted to Know About Sex Therapy

Wide World

William Masters and Virginia Johnson took sex from the bedroom to the lab.

By Norman Lobsenz

— The middle-aged couple hold each other's hands as they tell a sex therapist about their problem. The husband has been impotent on many occasions for almost a year. His wife, equally distressed, believes it is her fault — that she is no longer attractive enough to arouse him.

— In a medical center's human sexuality clinic, a young woman reveals that she is increasingly uninterested in sex. When she avoids or rejects her husband's advances, he is hurt and she feels guilty. "Yet I love him as much as ever," she says, "so why has this happened to me?"

Only 15 short years ago, most couples who had sexual problems like these suffered in silence. But since 1970, when William H. Masters and Virginia Johnson published Human Sexual Inadequacy and pioneered the techniques of sex therapy, thousands of men and women have found the courage to seek help for their difficulties.

And they represent only the tip of the iceberg. Experts say that nearly one of every two marriages is troubled by sexual dysfunction of one kind or another. To meet the need for counseling, there are now more than 100 clinics nationwide specializing in human sexuality, most of them attached to hospitals and medical schools. There are also several thousand sex therapists in private practice.

But the explosive growth and increased acceptance of therapy in this once-taboo area is raising questions:

The answers to some of these questions provide a good picture of current trends, accomplishments and problems in sex therapy today.

What does a sex therapist do? Most still adhere to the basic method outlined by Masters and Johnson. This consists of an intense but relatively brief series of sessions that begins with an exploration of a couple's sexual history and problems. A medical history is taken and often a physical checkup is suggested, since a small percentage of sex problems stem from medical causes — for example, diabetes, hormone imbalance or the side effects of certain medications.

Actual therapy starts with "sensate focus" exercises during which the man and woman, in private, stroke all parts of each other's bodies except the sexual zones. The purpose of this exercise is to teach them to give and accept sensual feelings without the pressure of having to perform sexually. As therapy proceeds, the partners increase their sensual and sexual contact to the point of intercourse. In office sessions, a therapist will discuss with the couple their feelings about sex.

By experiencing the growing rewards of sex through this process, a couple learns to exchange negative feelings and patterns of behavior for positive ones.

How is sex therapy changing? Until recently, most couples who sought help suffered from what therapists call the basic problems of arousal and climax. These include impotence, premature ejaculation, painful intercourse and difficulties in reaching orgasm. Today most complaints con-

The World Wildlife Fund announces an original work of art in fine, hand-painted porcelain.

Surprise!

Inaugurating the World Wildlife Fund's first collection of baby animal sculptures in porcelain.

Issued in a limited edition.

Art of exceptional charm and beauty, at the very attractive price of $45.

For the first time in its history, the World Wildlife Fund has undertaken the creation of a collection of porcelain sculptures of baby animals.

Surprise!, portraying a charming little tiger cub, inaugurates the collection. Crafted in fine hand-painted porcelain, it is a thoroughly delightful work of art. And it will be issued at the very modest price of $45—which may itself be paid in two convenient monthly installments of $22.50 each.

This new and original work of art has been designed for the World Wildlife Fund by Eva Dalberg, one of the world's most talented portraitists of animals. Dalberg was chosen for this commission because she has the unique ability to capture the lovable quality of animals.

Here the little tiger is portrayed in an amusing—and totally unexpected situation. With a bright green butterfly perched right on the tip of his nose! This delightful sculpture will be crafted in fine porcelain and completely hand-painted. So, all the colors and features will be clear, crisp and vibrant. The tiger's orange coat and black stripes, his sparkling black and yellow eyes, his striped tail—and, of course, that devilish little green butterfly.

Surprise! will be crafted for the World Wildlife Fund, under the supervision of Franklin Porcelain of Japan. Each sculpture will be crafted in Taiwan and will be backmarked with the official "WWF" symbol. In addition, a Certificate of Authenticity attesting to its official status and bearing the signature of the Director General of the World Wildlife Fund International, will be included.

In the tradition of classic works in fine porcelain, this enchanting sculpture will be made available in a limited edition, reserved exclusively for those who order from the collection of porcelain animal sculptures during 1981. When all valid orders from these individuals have been filled, the edition will be permanently closed.

You'll enjoy displaying this enchanting little tiger in your home and showing it to all your friends. It will be a conversation piece you will treasure. And you will have the satisfaction of knowing that it is created in a long-established tradition. For, of all porcelain pieces collectors prize, small figures of animals are among the most popular.

To reserve Surprise! by Eva Dalberg, you should act promptly. Please be sure that your Reservation Application is sent to the World Wildlife Fund, c/o Franklin Porcelain, Franklin Center, PA. 19091, by August 31, 1981.

Sex Therapy

cern a lack of sexual desire (why, therapists aren't sure). This is a more difficult problem to deal with.

The loss of erotic desire seldom has a single cause. It is usually due to complex factors within the personality of one or both partners, such as anxiety about one's ability to perform well sexually. Sometimes the cause can be a deep sexual conflict within oneself, stemming from parental inhibitions about sex during early childhood or unpleasant sexual experiences in adolescence. In many instances loss of desire is a cover-up for other conflicts within a marriage.

How effective is sex therapy? According to some studies, problems with arousal and orgasm are treated successfully in more than 80 percent of cases. Problems with erotic desire have, so far, a much lower cure rate — about 15 percent. However, critics claim that much of the therapy that seems successful may actually produce only a temporary improvement. They charge that claims of "cures" cannot be proven statistically. "Any form of treatment is likely to work some of the time," says Dr. John Money of the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine. These critics cite the so-called "placebo" effect: If a patient expects to improve, he or she will improve — for a while.

Is there more than one approach to sex therapy? Though the basic techniques are standard, there are several variations in the way therapy is offered. For instance, experts at first believed it "took a couple to cure a couple," and therapy was always done by a man-woman team. Today most therapists practice individually.

Group therapy is also a growing trend. "People learn they are not the only ones in the world with a sexual problem," says Dr. Sharon Satterfield of the University of Minnesota Medical School.

No single approach to sex therapy is considered "best" or is equally helpful for everyone, says New York therapist Dr. Dorothy Strauss: "The best therapy is the kind that works for a particular client."

What about cost? Masters and Johnson's two-week intensive program costs $2,500, but sex therapy doesn't have to be that expensive. Private therapists usually charge from $35 to $60 or more for an hour session (the price is higher if two therapists work as a team). On the average, treatment requires from eight to 20 sessions. Group therapy is less expensive.

How do I know if a sex therapist is qualified and competent? Since sex therapy is a relatively new field, no state has yet set minimum standards or licensing regulations for its practitioners. Most legitimate sex therapists, however, have at least a graduate degree in such fields as medicine, psychology or marriage and family counseling, and belong to professional organizations in those areas.

It is wise to investigate the credentials of a therapist closely, as well as his or her approach to therapy.

When Masters and Johnson first made therapy an acceptable way to deal with sexual difficulties, many people were shocked at the idea of openly discussing sexual problems. Others denounced the use of what they called "mechanical techniques" for improving sexual performance.

But these objections have largely evaporated. For one thing, the new sex therapy does not rely simply on techniques; it also explores the interpersonal relationship that largely determines the quality of a couple's sex life.

Most important, sex therapy has proved successful. And it has become clear that the relief of a sexual problem has a profound effect on a marriage. "It can change the pattern of a couple's sexual communication for the rest of their lives," says therapist Dr. Helen Kaplan. "It can make their whole relationship more genuine, mature and trusting."

The Bible: How it came to be.

It's interesting how many persons read the Bible and quote the Bible without knowing anything of the story of how the Bible came to be written. Not that the Bible's story is more important than the Bible itself. But some knowledge of the background helps to avoid many false notions.

One such false notion is that which sees the Bible as the adversary of the Church and vice versa. Another is the notion that the Bible can be read in a vacuum as though it had no history at all or no dependence for meaning upon the history and culture of its human authors and their communities.

Quite apart from avoiding error, a knowledge of the history of the Bible helps to enrich one's reading of the Bible and thereby deepens one's faith. For a simple introduction to the great subject of the Bible's beginning and development, write for our free pamphlet, "God's News to Man." No one will call on you.

An Eyewitness Report on Actress Sigourney Weaver

By Patricia Bosworth

The red and white saddle shoes are the first thing you notice. That plus baggy coveralls and a visored cap seem almost inappropriate garb for rising movie star Sigourney Weaver, whose aristocratic features have often been likened to those of a debutante.

"Yeah, and I was a debutante," Sigourney, 31, admits cheerily. "My mother has photographs of me in this big white ball gown looking very stiff and proper. Now I can't believe I was like that."

Particularly since her dazzling screen debut in the sci-fi thriller Alien: Critics loved her as the funny but authoritative astronaut who — clad only in T-shirt and panties — singlehandedly slays a hideous monster aboard her spaceship. "I'll bet you didn't know the script was originally written for Paul Newman," she says, laughing.

Weaver secured her reputation as one of the up-and-coming actresses of the 1980's with the recent film Eyewitness, a romantic mystery directed by Peter Yates and co-starring William Hurt. She plays a classically trained musician who becomes a TV reporter against her parents' wishes and ends up investigating a murder.

Sigourney always suspected she would end up on stage. "Show business is part of our family," she states emphatically. Her mother, a former actress, appeared in the Bette Davis movie The Letter and her father, Sylvester "Pat" Weaver, was the visionary president of NBC during the 1950's, as well as a pioneer in cable TV.

One of Weaver's first roles was Bottom in a 7th-grade production of A Midsummer Night's Dream. But as a teenager she was so tall — she's 5 feet 10½ inches — and gangly that no one thought she'd survive in the theater. She did manage to get work in summer stock, Patricia Bosworth is the author of the 1978 bestseller Montgomery Clift: A Biography.

Good news for Sigourney: Stardom is her next assignment.

and later, at California's Stanford University, she performed with a comedy troupe that toured the San Francisco area. "But I was very much a loner — and a self-conscious loner at that."

In 1971 she enrolled at Yale Drama School and wasn't cast in anything until she began studying dance and learned to make her height work for her. Following graduation she moved to New York City with an increased sense of confidence, yet she was rejected at most auditions for "being too tall and offbeat." She eventually got her first Broadway job as an understudy and assistant stage manager in The Constant Wife, starring Ingrid Bergman. "I felt like her soulmate because Ingrid is close to six feet."

After that came the TV soap opera Somerset and numerous Off Broadway shows. Her big break was landing the role in Alien, which she filmed in London during most of 1978. "Always one for really digging into a part, Sigourney did much of her own stunt work in Alien, including using a 50-pound flame-thrower.

For her role in Eyewitness, the actress learned to play a Mendelssohn concerto ("I had a piano moved into my apartment for three months") and actually went out on assignments for several weeks with a New York City TV reporter.

Since filming Eyewitness, Weaver has returned to Off Broadway for several productions and is now in Texas filming a new movie, Lone Star. The screenplay was written by her boyfriend, James McClure, a handsome 29-year-old playwright/actor from Louisiana. They've been "going steady" for two years.

When asked if they live together she is clearly uncomfortable with the question. "Look," she says quietly, "I have a real thing about my privacy. I treasure it, I guard it — O.K.? Besides I believe in secrets."

Weaver pauses and then suddenly offers a radiant grin. "What's so terrible about being a little mysterious?"

Helping Kids Take Charge of Their Lives

By Susan Lapinski

At 25, Tim Black is still a baby of sorts. Although over six feet tall, Tim (not his real name) has never grown up emotionally. He is afraid to marry, incapable of holding a job and so dependent on his aging mother that he sulks if she forgets to keep his car's gas tank filled.

Tim Black's severe dependency on his parents began when he was a child and it's a problem that's more common than we realize. "In my 27 years working with families, I've seen the problem many times," says Dr. Victor Cline, a professor of psychology at the University of Utah, Salt Lake City. "If you don't raise children to be doers, you'll be supporting them in their middle age."

What makes a child grow up prone to dependency, laziness, lack of direction? Child experts like Dr. Cline have some answers, and schools now offer new help to families facing the problem.

As a first step, parents who are worried about an unmotivated child should check with a pediatrician to make sure that the youngster has no visual or hearing impairment; no learning disabilities, such as dyslexia; no biochemical imbalances, due to improper diet or a need for medication.

Once a child is found to be physically normal, other factors should be considered. According to Dr. Cline, these include genetic differences (children from the same parents may vary widely in temperament and disposition due to inherited factors), depression and low self-image. Another common cause — becoming even more significant today — is overindulgence. Unwittingly, a parent who does everything for a child establishes dangerous patterns of dependency.

Whatever the reasons, parents can make a difference. Dr. Cline, who is also the author of the book How to Make Your Child a Winner (Walker and Company) and the father of nine, offers these strategies:

A child's poor self-image can lead to his chronic dependency.

- Set an example. Parents who routinely seek challenges and thrive on activity teach their children to do the same in a subtle but powerful way.

- Discuss the problem openly. Without browbeating, call attention to a child's unsatisfactory behavior. Otherwise he may never know he has a problem.

- Delegate jobs at home. Children who don't help around the house may someday expect their spouses to do it all. Instead, expose kids to nonsexist chores: boys to dishwashing and diaper-changing, girls to weeding and lawn-mowing.

- Work alongside a child. Teach the joy of work by helping a child to bake a cake or clean a room. Then discuss the importance of a job well done.

- Reward good work. Parents should prepare kids for life in the real world by making them feel it is worthwhile to be productive. Routine chores, such as keeping their own rooms tidy, need not be rewarded, but scrubbing the bathroom might merit pay, or a special outing with a parent. Smaller children sometimes respond to chart-keeping, with points that add up to prizes.

- Punish when necessary. Too much scolding can create a deaf ear. Instead, temporarily take away a privilege dear to a child: dessert, TV time, use of the telephone. ("This last one really works with teen-agers," says Dr. Cline, who has used it in his own family.)

But long before the telephone becomes a bargaining tool, parents should begin lessons in self-sufficiency. "Some parents want their children to remain babies, so they do everything for them," says Geraldine Cicione, head teacher of The Catholic University of America's Children's Workshop, a developmental day-care center in Washington, D.C., for children 2 to 6. "Once children are in first grade, they're vying with 20 other kids for the teacher's attention, and there won't be time to teach basic skills. The time to help them develop their natural curiosity is now."

For children who show early problems, some universities now have early-intervention programs to help children under 3 catch up with their peers. To locate such a program, Cicione suggests checking with the psychology and education departments at a nearby university.

If problems persist, Dr. Cline says a good family therapist or child therapist — recommended by your doctor — might be consulted. Sometimes parents need counseling as much as, or more than, an overly dependent child. After a year in therapy with Dr. Cline, Tim Black's mother was able to loosen her grasp on her son. Now Black earns his own way — and fills his own gas tank.

DAFT OR DEAF?

New research at Stanford University shows that many elderly people who feel paranoid do so not because of senility but because they don't realize they are slowly losing their hearing.

Dr. Philip Zimbardo, a Stanford psychologist, induced symptoms of paranoia in college-age subjects by rendering them partially and temporarily deaf through hypnosis, without letting them know it. Of the 18 students tested, the six programmed to suffer hearing loss soon became "more irritated, agitated, hostile and unfriendly."

"When you're not aware of a gradual hearing loss and it seems like people are always whispering," says Zimbardo, "you assume they are plotting against you. But what these individuals — many of whom are institutionalized because of their 'irrational thinking' — may need is not psychotherapy but simply a hearing aid."

WHAT WORLD

SEPARATE BUT UNEQUAL

From the book Womanist, a collection of oddities and achievements by the distaff sex, here's a sampling of how our language sometimes just isn't fair.

A man's job, important 9-to-5 work.

Man in the street, represents The People.

Stag party, a convivial night out for the boys who will be boys.

Sir

Bachelor, an enviable status.

Woman's work, light stuff, even though it's never done.

Woman of the streets, available at a small price.

Hen party, a gossip-filled gathering of chattering women.

Madame, has the added connotation of illicit sex.

Spinster, a pitiable condition.

ROUGH ROAD

Some frightening news from Gerald McIvor of the Illinois Institute of Technology who spent six years studying U.S. highways and bridges: Our interstate highway system, started in 1956, was designed with a 20-year life span, a life span now running out in many areas. Moreover, 75 percent of our 550,000 bridges were built before 1935 and were expected to last 30 to 40 years. Each year, 150 bridges collapse, he adds.

But in a time of tight budgets, maintenance is slashed. "It's easier to get funds for new construction than for upkeep," notes McIvor. "Unlike with a new bridge, no politician gets repair work named after him, nor is there a ribbon-cutting ceremony at which he can be seen."

NOTHING TO SNEEZE AT

This year 15 million Americans are suffering the sneezes, sniffles and itches of hayfever, especially during the peak allergy season of August to mid-October, when a quarter-million tons of ragweed pollen blanket the nation. A little relief is available, though, from a free brochure by Dorsey Laboratories that lists, among other things, nine ways to depollenize your house and 20 get-away spots, both here and abroad, that are free of ragweed pollen. (Ragweed is indigenous to North America. Europe is virtually ragweed-free, except for a section of western France that became bombarded with pollen when American soldiers carried it with them on their boots during the D-Day invasion.)

For your free brochure, send a stamped, self-addressed, business-size envelope to: Ragweed Guide, 888 Seventh Ave., Box FW, New York, N.Y. 10106.

RECORD EFFORT

You may remember the recent chutzpah of Mark Bohn, 24, who, bewildered that his earnest pleas for a marketing job in the record industry drew nary a nibble, finally asked himself, "How can I get their attention?" His answer — to hang a 40 x 33-foot "résumé" across the street from CBS Records in New York City.

The giant résumé and cover letter, made from sewn-together muslin strips, took six months to fashion, says Bohn. But the toughest part was convincing the owner of the parking garage across from CBS headquarters of his intentions. "I assured him the message wasn't obscene, though, and he let me hang it from his roof," notes Bohn, who says he just hoped somebody would notice. Little did he know it would draw the attention of CBS Records president Bruce Lundvall, who, impressed by Bohn's ingenuity, invited him up for a chat.

We'd love to report a happy ending to this saga, but despite several interviews,

Bohn has not landed a job with CBS. "I still don't know whether to buy a shotgun or champagne," he says.

MERCURIAL LOVE

It may not be the most romantic accouterment, but a new device offers the promise of adding computer accuracy to a birth control method that isn't always so precise — the rhythm technique, the only form of contraception condoned by the Roman Catholic Church.

Developed at England's

Clinical Research Centre, the device — nicknamed the sexometer — consists of a small box with a temperature sensor attached to the end of a long wire. Before engaging in sexual relations, a woman puts the sensor in her mouth, much like a thermometer, and a computer microchip inside compares her temperature against her normal readings. Three minutes later, the sexometer lights green if it's safe to have sex without risking pregnancy, red if it's time for a cold shower.

About 50 sexometers are currently being tested in England, and the device might be commercially available for $25 to $40 by next year.

Our Story: ALETA IS AGAIN WITH CHILD, BUT THE JOY IN HER HOUSEHOLD DOES NOT SURVIVE THE NEWS THAT ARN IS MISSING. SOON THE WRECKAGE OF MORDRED'S BOAT WASHES ASHORE. "HAVE I GAINED ONE CHILD ONLY TO LOSE ANOTHER?" ALETA WEEPS.

ON A REMOTE ISLAND ARN IS SAFE, HIS THOUGHTS CLOUDED BY MEMORIES OF THE HUNTRESS WITH THE HOUNDS. HOW HE LONGS TO SPEAK TO HER.

BUT THE DOGS WILL NOT ALLOW IT. ONE MORNING HE HAPPENS UPON A FOX'S DEN AND HIS EYES BRIGHTEN WITH INSPIRATION. BY THE ENTRANCE HE LAYS A DELICATE TRAP. LATER, HE WEAVES A SMALL CAGE WITH TENDER VINES. IT IS DUSK WHEN A "SNAP" SIGNALS VICTORY.

NOW HE WAITS. A FULL MOON SMILES AS THE HUNTRESS STRIDES FORTH WITH HER PACK. SUDDENLY SHE STOPS, AWARE OF SOMETHING. THEN, AT HER COMMAND, THE HOUNDS RUSH TOWARD ARN... AND PAST HIM INTO THE WOODS. FOR ARN HAS TIED A PIECE OF HIS TUNIC TO THE FOX'S TAIL AND SET THE CREATURE FREE.

©1981 King Features Syndicate, Inc. World rights reserved.

QUIETLY HE APPROACHES THE HUNTRESS. "MY NAME IS ARN," HE SAYS SOFTLY. HIS SLYNNESS HAS BECOME SHYNESS.

"I AM MAEVE," SHE REPLIES COLDLY. "YOU HAVE NO BUSINESS HERE." WITHOUT FURTHER WORD SHE RAISES A SMALL WHISTLE TO HER LIPS.

IT IS RECORDED THAT THIS IS NOT THE FIRST TIME MAEVE HAS THROWN ROMANCE TO THE DOGS.
