

Handling VEPCO Rate Hike Undecided

By MELVIN LANG
Reflector Staff Writer

A 21.7 percent wholesale rate increase by Virginia Electric & Power Co. will translate into an overall retail rate hike averaging less than 8 percent for Greenville's retail electric customers, but just how that burden will fall initially still must be determined.

The Greenville Utilities Commission agreed Tuesday night to pass on the Vepco increase, plus any line losses, as a wholesale jump for Winterville but bogged down when it came time to decide how its own interim retail rate structure should change.

The commission is facing three alternatives:

— Take no action on retail rates until its negotiations are completed to become a generating partner in a proposed North Carolina Power Agency No. 3 tieup with Carolina Power & Light Co., an action that consultants said would cost the commission $400,000 or more during the month of September.

— Follow its tradition of passing on the Vepco increase in a "tracking," or flow-through, procedure based on Vepco's own retail structure.

— Switch Greenville's retail rates to a cost-of-service structure based on a report made public for the first time Tuesday night by the consulting firm of R.W. Beck & Associates of Orlando, Fla.

The traditional tracking method would raise retail rates an average of 7.67 percent, while the cost-of-service method would generate a 7.69 percent increase and essentially the same amount of revenue — about $2.5 million annually. But the burden of the costs would be shifted dramatically from one classification of customer to another.

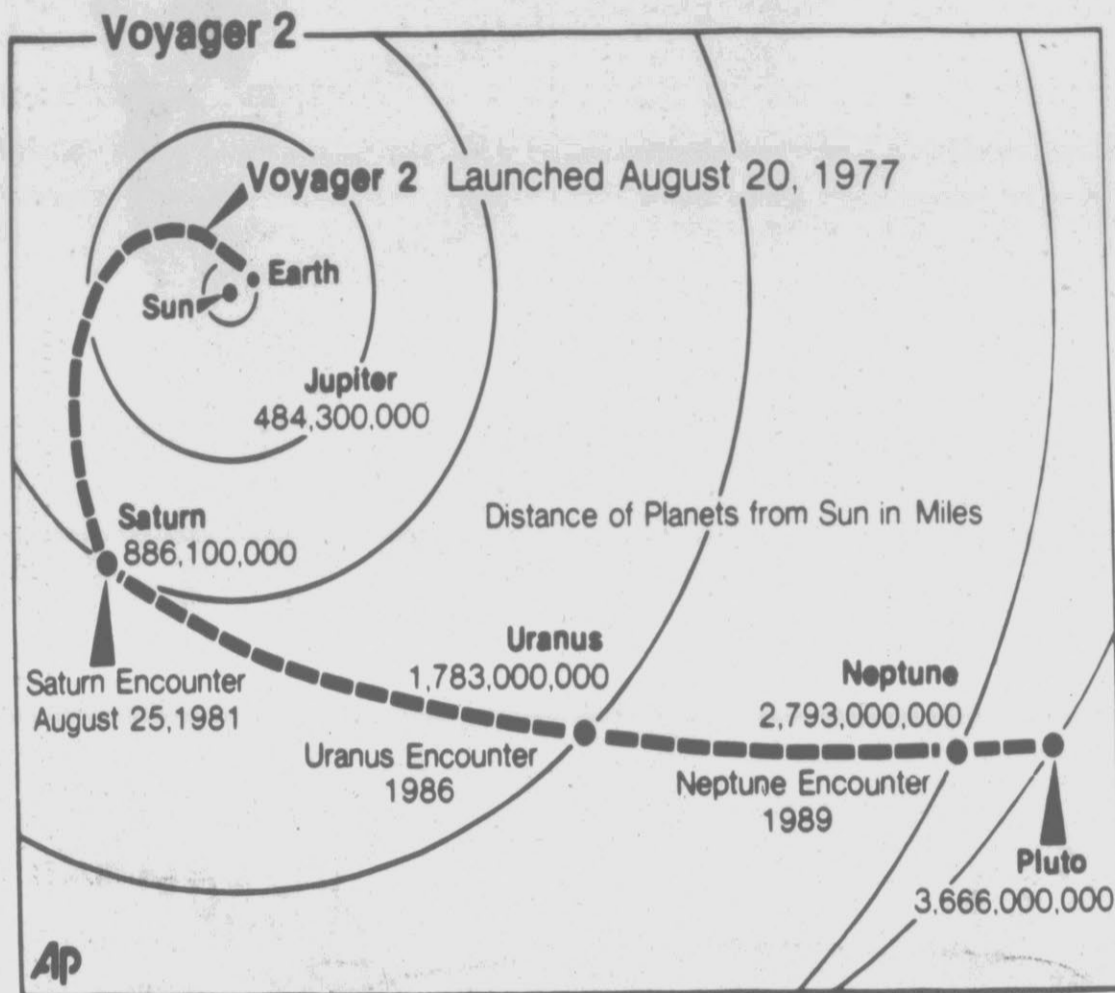

The commission, which showed what City Manager Ed Wyatt called "a drift" toward the traditional tracking increase, scheduled another meeting next Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. to resolve the rate problem.

Under the tracking method, residential customers would feel an increase of 7 percent, small general service (commercial) customers would see an increase of 7.3

percent, large general service 9.4 percent, county, municipal or housing authority all-electric building service (for eight customers) 9.6 percent, seasonal general service (primarily bulk tobacco barns) 4.3 percent, outdoor lighting service 4.2 percent and county, municipal or housing authority outdoor lighting service, 4.3 percent.

By comparison, the Beck firm, in a preliminary report subject to change, suggested an increase of only 2.3 percent for residential customers and sharp increases for the commercial customers — 15.87 percent for small general service and 13.42 percent for large general customers.

But the company also proposed tentatively an increase of (Please turn to Page 12)

Israeli Remain Opposed To Selling Saudis AWAC

WASHINGTON (AP) — A ride on an American radar plane has not caused Israeli leaders to lessen their opposition to the projected sale of five of the aircraft to Saudi Arabia, says a spokesman for the Israeli Embassy in Washington.

"This will not affect our position or our opposition," Nachman Shai said Tuesday after the Pentagon disclosed that Israeli military and technical experts were flown from Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma to the vicinity of Langley Air Force Base in Virginia and back to Tinker.

"Israel rejects the whole package and all its elements," Shai said.

The Reagan administration wants to sell five of the Airborne Warning and Control System — AWACS — planes to Saudi Arabia. The package, which Congress has until Oct. 30 to veto, also includes missiles and fuel tanks for 62 American-built F-15 fighter jets, giving them the range to reach Israeli territory.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker of Tennessee threw his support behind the proposal Tuesday and predicted that the Senate will not block the sale. Although saying he thinks the House may oppose it, the sale cannot be blocked unless both houses vote to do so.

There's Always A Line

WAITING — If there is one thing that is a certainty in college life, it's having to wait in lines. Whether it be for registration, drop-add, or paying fees — as these students are doing outside the Spilman building at ECU — waiting in line is rarely a pleasant chore. Although yesterday was registration day, late registration continues through Friday, and, of course, the lines are inevitable. (Reflector Photo By Larry Zicherman)

Voyager's Camera Stand Apparently Now 'Stuck'

By ROBERT LOCKE
AP Science Writer
PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Mechanical trouble aboard Voyager 2, perhaps caused by a collision with particles from Saturn's rings, interrupted the flow of stunning and revealing photographs from the pit today, but scientists said the mission was still a "high-percentage success."

A platform carrying Voyager's cameras apparently got stuck, limiting the cameras' aim, and project controllers could not fully analyze the problems until they receive crucial tape recordings at mid-morning, a spokesman said.

Controllers noticed the problem shortly after 2 a.m. EDT as soon as radio signals with the craft were reacquired once Voyager passed from behind Saturn as seen from earth, project spokesman Alan Wood said.

Scientists had said that passing through Saturn's rings posed a danger of collision for Voyager with ring particles. A pathfinder spaceship, Pioneer 11, followed the same route safely in 1979 and scientists were confident Voyager would make it too.

Whether Voyager did indeed collide with ring particles had yet to be determined, but Wood said, "We know at least it wasn't a strong hit if there was a hit. We got the radio signal back perfectly on time" once Voyager passed from behind Saturn.

He said scientists hoped to learn from the tape recording made when Voyager 2 was behind Saturn the extent of the platform problem and also whether it occurred before "some crucial pictures" were taken. "We can't point the cameras at the proper targets," Wood said. "The other instruments are working. It's just the optical instruments that are pointed by the platform."

Although many of the critical close-up transmissions were received as Voyager 2 approached Saturn, "there were some crucial pictures taken during the ring-plane crossing which we hope is on the tape-recording. That is not quite clear yet," Wood said.

As it raced away from Saturn today, the one-ton robot explorer began a five-year journey to distant Uranus, a world never before seen up close. Until the ship arrives in January 1986, no other world will unravel before an American spacecraft. Voyager is the headed for a 1989 tour of Neptune.

Until today's hitch, the project had been proceeding well.

"I think it is the most flawless, perfect encounter I've ever been through, and I've been through a lot of them," Voyager project manager Esker Davis said after the spaceship made its closest approach to Saturn late Tuesday night.

After traveling across nearly 1 1/2 billion miles of space since it left Earth Aug. 20, 1977, the ship arrived within 30 miles of the bullseye just 3.1 seconds early, Davis said.

At 11:58 p.m. (PDT) Tuesday, Voyager commentator Al Hibbs announced, "All is well."

Rezoning OK's Employment At All-Time High

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

The Planning & Zoning Commission, in a special call session Tuesday afternoon, gave unanimous approval to a recommendation that a request to rezone property at Ninth and Washington Streets be approved.

Staff planner Wade Pitt said that three structures were involved in the request to rezone .34 acres at the southwest corner of the intersection from Unoffensive Industry (IU) to Downtown Commercial Fringe (CDF).

One of the facilities, Evans Seafood Market, is currently operating as a non-conforming use under the IU guidelines and would become a conforming use under CDF, he said. In addition, the firm has not been able to secure a building permit for remodeling due to the zoning situation and that problem would be solved with CDF zoning.

Pitt said the property involved in the request adjoins CDF to the east and he pointed out that the planning staff will also take a look at other uses in the area to see if rezoning action might be appropriate.

Planning board members also recommended to the council that amendments to Section 32-160 of the Zoning Ordinance entitled "Penalties for Violation" and to Article H, Section 9-5-191 of the Subdivision Ordinance entitled "Violation is misdemeanor; penalties," be approved.

DeWitt McCarley, staff attorney, explained that present code provisions make an ordinance violation a criminal matter and the amendments basically change the violations from criminal to civil jurisdiction. The action, he said, will return control of enforcement action to the city staff.

Commissioners received draft copies of the land use survey of the city's land use plan. The document will serve as a general land use planning policy guide, it was noted.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Total employment in North Carolina in July was at an all-time high as 6,600 workers were added to the June employment total, the state Employment Security Commission said Tuesday.

Meanwhile, the state unemployment rate dropped one-fifth of a percentage point from 6.3 percent in June to 6.1 percent in July.

The state's unemployment rate usually increases between June and July, the commission said, but dropped this year because many June school graduates and summer job seekers were able to find work in July, ESC officials said.

Nationally, 7.3 percent of the work force was unable to find work in July, down from 7.7 percent in June.

North Carolina's total civilian labor force for July was 2,835,400, compared to 2,833,100 in June and 2,804,000 in July 1980. There were 173,900 unemployed people in July, compared with 178,200 in June and 227,400 in July 1980.

A seasonal increase in the number of agricultural workers was the major reason for the employment gain between June and July, the ESC said.

Manufacturing employment dropped by 4,500 over the month as most industry groups recorded small worker declines. Non-manufacturing employment was down significantly — 52,900 — between mid-June and mid-July, largely because schools closed in June for the summer and teachers were added to the unemployment lists.

Both manufacturing and non-manufacturing employment this July was up from July 1980. In manufacturing, there were 21,300 more workers this July than in July 1980.

Employment in furniture and fixtures increased 11.8 percent over last July with 9,000 more workers.

Porter says the continuing education non-curriculum part of the program plans to conduct afternoon workshops in industries beginning this fall, updating those maintenance personnel who have been on the job for a few years in new methods and developments.

Approximately $32,600 was made available for the industrial maintenance electromechanical (V-028) program. This regular curriculum program, according to Bright, will teach basic skills in electrical, mechanical, welding, plumbing and control devices. "Troubleshooting will also be emphasized," he added. A program enabling Pitt Community College to train skilled industrial maintenance mechanics is now a reality, according to officials at the college, and will be implemented during the fall 1981 quarter.

"This is an effort to respond to the needs of industry in the area," said Ola L. Porter, dean of continuing education at PCC. "They have repeatedly said they need specifically trained, highly skilled maintenance mechanics — now we will have a program basically designed to give students training in electromechanical maintenance and troubleshooting.

A cooperative skills training program will also be established, designed to train new personnel and upgrade the skills of existing industrial personnel.

PCC was awarded $100,720 in special funds by the State Board of Community Colleges to implement both the cooperative skills training center and the industrial maintenance-electromechanical program. The IM-E program is high-cost priority (critical need) prefunded program.

"Plans for the program began one year ago," explained Dr. Edward B. Bright, dean of instruction at the college, who has been working with an industry advisory group during the past year. "When we started we had no idea how we would fund the endeavor. Ola Porter had been in contact with state president of the Department of Community Colleges about prefunding for an industrial maintenance program, then these funds became available."

The cooperative critical skills program was awarded $68,040 for 1981-82, one of eight selected in the state for funding. Training will be conducted at industrial sites and on the PCC campus.

"This special program allows more flexibility in the number of trainees and type of skills to be taught than

The Other Story: Women Who Are Driven To Kill

By GARY LANGER
Associated Press Writer
CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — July 14: Ana Pelton, down to 88 pounds from 120 and psychologically "a piece of meat," is home with her husband. Last night, she mailed suicide notes to her son and her sister. Now she's pointing a .25-caliber Beretta at her head.

"Go ahead," says her husband, who's been cheating on her for four of their 12 married years. "It'll save me the cost of a divorce."

Mrs. Pelton turns the pistol and shoots him nine times. She reloads and fires four more shots. He is hit in the head, the chest — "all over the place," a prosecutor says.

Mrs. Pelton, 45, is charged with first-degree murder. She is scheduled to stand trial Nov. 16. Today she is a patient at the state mental hospital.

"She's a hopeless case," says her lawyer, Thomas Allison, who related the incident. "She doesn't know where she is. She doesn't even know he's dead."

July 29: Priscilla Szelog, 38, mother of three, is home for a day. She was hospitalized, for depression, by her husband — described in court by her lawyer as "a severe, reprehensible, cruel man who physically, morally and emotionally abused her over a long, continuous period of time."

She is alone with him "no more than five minutes and he starts at it again," says the lawyer, Frank Holland. A 20-gauge shotgun roars once, and Henry Szelog, hit in the chest, is dead.

Holland calls the case classic. He says Szelog drove his wife to an "irresistible impulse, a spur of the moment mental aberration wherein you really lose control for a brief period of time, never to do it again."

When Mrs. Szelog goes on trial for second-degree murder in November, Holland will argue that his client's actions were justified.

Aug. 3: Superior Court Judge Richard Dunfee hears Catherine Kelley describe five years of psychological abuse from her ex-husband. She recalls the scene last summer, how he demanded $1,000 and oral sex in a parking lot before she could visit their daughter, how moments later she shot him five times in the abdomen.

Dunfee sentences Mrs. Kelley, 34, to 15 to 25 years.

"It was a little hard for the court to understand the mental abuse she had been put through," says Ruth Scribner, one of Mrs. Kelley's lawyers. "A woman should not have to walk into court with missing limbs and her head broken open to prove she has been provoked."

Each year in New Hampshire, three or four men are charged with killing their wives. Last year, police handled 324 separate reports of wife abuse, and counselors say that's just a fraction of the real count.

Some experts say that increasing numbers of women are striking back at these violent husbands — and more are using provocation as a defense in court.

The defense has been raised elsewhere, with varying success: perhaps the most celebrated case was that of Francine Hughes of Dansville, Mich., who was acquitted in 1977 of killing her sleeping husband by pouring gasoline under his bed and igniting it. Testimony showed she had been mentally and physically brutalized for years.

"It isn't the right thing to do — but they're saying enough is enough, and they're lashing out," says Deanna Crawford of Nashua's Rape and Assault Committee.

Three New Hampshire women have been charged with killing their husbands this summer, compared to none in 1979 and one in 1980.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

It's been coming for a long time, but I didn't put my finger on the problem until the other night.

Every time a news story breaks, I find myself knowing more about it than I care to know. If it's a Washington scandal, I see the "scandalee" on television, in the newspaper, in magazines, authoring a paperback book, on radio talk shows, on a poster and a few weeks later on Hollywood Squares.

The other night as I watched two TV reporters interviewing one another, it hit me. We don't have enough major news stories to go around.

Suppose it's a slow news day and a congressman is suspected of paying $130,000 a year to a secretary who couldn't find her office.

We get to see the congressman with his head in an attache case hiding from the cameras, lurking behind the blinds of his apartment and shouting obscenities to the press as he runs to the elevator. After we have seen his mother, his birthplace and the typewriter that was never unpacked in the office, we are treated to an interview with a psychiatrist who explains mid-life behavior, an interview with the head of the secretaries' association, plus a few tabloids that will examine the contents of the congressman's garbage.

The answer is simple. Those of you living ordinary, uneventful lives are just going to have to get off your apathy and start supplying news to fill the demand.

Heaven knows, Elizabeth Taylor, Tip O'Neill, the baseball strikers, Sandra O'Connor, Prince Charles and Lady Diana, William Casey and John McEnroe have done their share. (Do you think Bani-Sadr enjoyed describing the dress he wore to escape from Iran to France to Woman's Wear Daily?) It's time for all of us to pitch in and bear our Media Burden.

The next time you feel like staying home and doing something uneventful, just think about the 1,769 daily newspapers in this country that are counting on you, the 1,013 television stations with 20 hours of time to fill every day, the thousands of radio stations that want to hear your questions, the hundreds of magazines and newsletters who need to know what you have never told anyone before and hunger for details of your life.

So, don't just sit there... do something.

Avers Babies Sold For Beer At A Bar

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — For two glasses of beer, a St. Paul mother sold her two babies to a stranger, according to affidavits filed in Ramsey District Court.

The affidavits were filed recently, two years after the sale, by a woman who has been taking care of the children and is seeking full rights as their legal guardian.

The transaction was reported Tuesday in the St. Paul Dispatch, which used pseudonyms in its account to protect the children.

In her affidavit, a woman referred to as "Mary" said she struck up a conversation with the children's mother in a bar on St. Paul's East Side.

The women decided to go to another bar, but first stopped off at the second woman's house.

There, Mary said in her sworn statement, she found a 3-month-old girl and a 16-month-old boy crying in their cribs. Also in the room were seven dogs and six to 10 cats.

The apartment "smelled of animals and defecation and there was defecation in the children's hair, on their bodies and in their cribs," Mary said in the affidavit.

"The only thing in the refrigerator was sour milk."

"She told me to fix a bottle anyway and that the milk wouldn't hurt them," Mary said in the affidavit.

Mary said she suggested that the woman give the children to her mother, who had been a foster parent for the county Welfare Department.

The woman then offered to sell the children to Mary for a glass of beer apiece.

"I took her across the street and bought her two beers and she gave me the children," Mary said in the affidavit. "I took them home to my mother who has cared for them ever since."

Mary's mother, "Betty," said she located the children's mother in Florida, where the woman was working as a striptease dancer. The mother voluntarily signed papers transferring legal guardianship to Betty.

The matter surfaced in court records because some relatives of the mother initiated proceedings to become the children's legal guardians.

Todd Young, a St. Paul attorney representing Betty, said Monday he understood the relatives have decided not to pursue the matter.

Set Auction Of Lennon's Car

AUBURN, Ind. (AP) — John Lennon's psychedelic 1966 Bentley with purple seats and hot pink carpeting will be auctioned off next month at an antique car museum.

The magical mystery car, which also features paisley drapes and a walnut dashboard, attracted bids as high as $280,000 when it was put up for sale last month, but the owner, Ron Morgan of Santa Ana, Calif., refused to sell it.

Dan Burger, a spokesman for the Auburn-Cord-Duesenberg Museum, said the car was purchased for Lennon in 1966 by the Beatle-owned Apple Corp. It will be auctioned off during the week of Sept. 4.

Burger said Morgan is putting the car up for auction in several locations across the country, a move he hopes will enhance its value.

Mauled By 'Protector'

DENVER, N.C. (AP) — A 58-year-old man was in serious condition today in Lincoln County Hospital after a 2-year-old German shepherd mauled him, then turned on his sister.

"It was the worst thing I've ever seen in my life," said Don Mauldin, a Lincoln County deputy sheriff. "In my opinion, that dog got a taste of blood and it went crazy."

Mauldin said Flora Powell, 67, owner of the dog, and TOLLIE NIXON, 58, Ms. Powell's brother, lived together and kept the dog for protection.

Robert Powell, Flora's brother, told deputies that Nixon fell in the yard and the dog attacked him. When she tried to intervene, the dog bit her hand.

During the attack, the dog tore off Nixon's ears and peeled back his scalp. He also suffered dog bites over other parts of his body.

Mauldin said when he arrived at the home, the dog's chest was covered with blood and about a dozen neighbors, one armed with a shotgun, stood nearby trying to provoke it so they could kill it.

Efforts by the dog warden to subdue the animal failed and Robert Powell was summoned to quiet it down. The dog later was taken to the animal pound.

Robert Powell said the dog wasn't a trained attack dog, just "kind of a mean dog."

City Buying Rental Cars

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Greensboro officials are hoping to save money by buying city vehicles used from rental agencies.

In an experiment begun last year, the city has added 20 cars bought used from rental agencies to its fleet of about 250, instead of the new cars they would normally buy.

The saving from buying the used cars with 12,000 to 18,000 miles on the odometers was about $1,000 per car, said city purchasing agent R. Larry Jones.

The cars all come with what city officials said was essentially a new-car warranty — 12,000 miles or one year on the drive trains.

Now that the city has saved about $20,000 on the initial purchase, Jones said he and other city officials are now keeping tabs to see if the city gets to keep that savings, or loses it on extra maintenance.

"So far it's working out pretty well," said David V. Kirkman of the city garage. "Most of them are in good condition when we get them, ready to go. We haven't needed to put new tires on any of them yet."

ABANDONED BY THEIR MOTHERS, these youngsters are being cared for at an orphanage. They are Amerasian — half-American and half-Thai. (UPI Telephoto)

Foundation Tries To Help Amerasian Kids

By RACHEL GLASS
BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Oeng and Maliwan are prostitutes. Nightly they prowl the streets of Bangkok searching for customers. They are 14 years old. Kasem has glassy eyes and yellowing skin. He is thin and peaked. Kasem is 19 and has been addicted to drugs since the age of 14.

Like Oeng and Maliwan, Kasem is an Amerasian — half-American and half-Thai. All three are the offspring of informal relations between American GIs stationed in Thailand during the Vietnam war and their rented Thai "wives" — called "mia chow" by the Thais.

Not all of the estimated 4,100 Amerasians in Thailand have fallen to such levels. The Pearl Buck Foundation, a non-profit organization, is dedicated to the education and general welfare of these half-Americans.

One of the lucky few helped by the foundation is Yupa, 10, who flew to California in July to join her father.

Their story began years ago when Yupa's father, one of the 46,000 American GIs stationed in Thailand during the Vietnam conflict, lived casually with Yupa's mother.

He had no intention of marrying her and he eventually returned to the United States. Two years later, the father flew to Thailand to visit the family and registered Yupa as his daughter.

But then he returned to California. Letters and money arrived infrequently. In recent years Yupa lived in the Bangkok slums with her mother, a market vendor who earns about $2 a day.

Being a half black Amerasian in color-conscious Thai society, Yupa found herself the victim of constant teasing and heckling.

But with the aid of the foundation the father was able to find Yupa again.

With the consent of her mother, who already had several other children, Yupa's father took her to the United States. Now Yupa lives with her father and his American family, on the threshold of a new life.

Happy endings like Yupa's are rare. Yet through its sponsorship program the Pearl Buck Foundation provides direct cash payments, school equipment, books, nutrition and counselors for about 2,000 children.

In 1979, "Amerasian Outreach," a program for documenting each child's case was begun with funds from a U.S. government grant. The foundation has traced the histories of more than 3,000 children.

The U.S. government also provided the foundation with a grant to supply medical care.

Robert Hearn, director of the foundation, says illegitimate Amerasian children have a better status in Thailand than those whose parents were wed. These youngsters can qualify for Thai citizenship.

The very small minority of legitimate children are denied all rights under Thai law. They cannot attend school, work without a permit or join the army.

As many of their fathers have not acknowledged paternity, most of these youngsters are not eligible for U.S. Citizenship. In effect, they are non-persons, stateless.

At present "Amerasian Outreach" is trying to help these children.

"I appeal to the thousands of men who know their children and where they are. If they would legitimize their child, the child could have the option of becoming an American citizen. The man doesn't have to marry the mother," Hearn said.

Although the majority of the children are full Thai citizens, they still are victims.

Hearn said black Amerasians have the saddest plight. These youngsters are teased constantly, causing many to become anti-social. Teenage black Amerasian girls are shunned by Thai boys. In desperation or defiance, these young girls turn more and more to prostitution.

About 10 percent of the Amerasians have been abandoned by their mothers and are living with "phi-liangs" or informal guardians.

Originally the "phi-liangs," usually elderly women, were hired by the mothers as babysitters. After the mother deserted the child, the "phi-liang" often continued to raise the

DEAR ABBY: The recent letter in your column from Cyd Hassner, whose 16-year-old daughter was killed by a drunk driver, reminded me that drunk drivers have just about been eliminated from the roads of Norway because of mandatory jail sentences and revocation of driving licenses. I have often wondered why we, as Americans, continue to tolerate this needless slaughter on our highways.

Our state legislature just reformed Maryland's drunk-driving laws on July 1. Now our congressman, Michael D. Barnes, has introduced in the House of Representatives Bill H.R. 2488, for legislation to combat the nationwide epidemic of drunk driving. Identical legislation in the Senate (S. 671) is being sponsored by Rhode Island Sen. Claiborne Pell.

If you agree that such legislation is a step in the right direction, please bring these bills to the attention of your readers. If they are seriously interested in saving lives and reducing injuries on our highways, I'm sure they wouldn't mind spending a few minutes writing post cards to their congressman and senators in support of these bills.

GERALDINE NORBY, BETHESDA, MD.

DEAR GERALDINE: First, some statistics provided by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and the National Safety Council:

—One quarter of a million Americans lost their lives in alcohol-related auto crashes over the past decade.

—About 26,000 citizens are killed in drunk-driving incidents yearly.

—Nearly 70 Americans are killed in drunk-driving incidents every day.

—Over one million Americans suffer crippling and other serious injuries every year in drunk-driving incidents.

—The drinking-driver problem creates an estimated economic cost of over $5 billion annually.

—For Americans up to age 35, the No. 1 cause of death is motor vehicle accidents, and more than half of highway deaths are caused by drunk drivers.

—On an average weekend night, one out of every 10 drivers on the road is drunk.

—65 percent of drivers who kill themselves in single-car wrecks are drunk.

—Of every 2,000 drunken drivers, only one is arrested.

—44 percent of all nighttime fatal alcohol-related crashes are caused by the 16-to-24 age group (this group comprises only 22 percent of the total licensed population).

Now, Bill H.R. 2488:

—For first offenders, would provide mandatory sentence of at least 10 days of community service, in addition to fines and participation in alcohol treatment or traffic safety programs.

—For repeat offenders (persons convicted of drunk driving two or more times within a five-year period), would provide mandatory sentence of at least 10 days' imprisonment, in addition to fines and participation in alcohol treatment programs.

—For first offenders, would provide mandatory suspension of the driving privilege by the state licensing agency for up to one year with provision for a restricted license.

youngster and eventually sold the child into a "placement agency." The child becomes little more than a slave.

The foundation is trying to help but Hearn emphasized, "We don't make the difference in these children's lives. The mothers do."

Outside Thailand, the foundation also touches the lives of thousands of Amerasians in the Philippines, Korea, Japan, Taiwan, and perhaps soon in Vietnam.

Nobody knows for sure how many children have been forgotten in Vietnam but at least 8,000 Amerasians are believed in need of help there.

Season Of Anticipation

For some of our young people this is the season of anticipation, the beginnings of a new stage in the process of "growing up." For others, the loss of a summer's freedom entailed in a return to the classroom is to be mourned.

The opening of a new school year always has drawn a variety of reactions that run the gamut from despair to determination, to soaring hope.

We have somewhere read that at a relatively early age a pattern has been set for the young man or young woman's future life; making it plain the adoption of habits, the acquiring of knowledge, disciplines, tastes and cultures during a very early and relatively brief span of years shapes the futures of individuals...as well as that of society as a whole.

This imposes a great responsibility and obligation on our elders as well as a monumental and largely unsought and unwanted burden on the young.

Each year adults hope and believe their contribution to an improved educational process will bear better fruit...something far better than they remember; and earnestly pray their children and their neighbor's children will benefit from the experience, investment and lessons of the past. They do not aspire to miracles.

All across this land, families, local governments, state governments and the federal government (in an incredibly complex manifestation of teamwork) are offering youngsters of every imaginable background a ladder whose rungs only lead upward.

Parental encouragement and guidance — even participation — is necessary to make it work.

Somewhere in the recesses of every parents' mind in readying their offspring for the new school year lurks the usually unspoken thought "If I knew then, what I know now...life might have been richer beyond even my imagination today."

It is a pity that feeling of urgency cannot be imparted to all of today's children.

Let's Make It The Finest . . .

Like many other things, the School of Veterinary Medicine at N. C. State University was born of controversy.

Many felt that the large expenditure of funds could not be justified in a state which faces so many needs.

The school is now a fact, however, and its first 40 students will begin classes this week.

Even those who were lukewarm about it have come around to accept the role the school will play in our state. We are, after all, a strong agricultural state with livestock playing an important part in our economy. Until now, no North Carolina citizen could obtain a veterinary degree in our state. Prospective students had to be farmed out to schools in other states.

The School of Veterinary Medicine will play a great part in agricultural progress of North Carolina. We can all join in helping to make it the finest school that it can be.

Money Is Power

(2nd of Two Articles)
By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — He who holds the purse strings runs things. That foundation of how government works undergirds the developing statewide showdown over federal block grants coming soon to North Carolina.

The hundreds of confusing and often competing categorical grants programs in which public and private agency people fought one another to get the money and the clients so they could feed and nurture their own little bureaucracy is supposed to give way to a new spirit of cooperation and common devotion to using the federal money in the best way possible to help the most people.

When the federal bureaucracy convinced the U.S. Congress in the 1960s that state and local governments were not to be trusted in handling federal dollars and running programs to help people, the ever-growing result is the mish-mash of red tape, regulation, oversight, auditing, reporting, and grantsmanship. It has been a profitable growth industry for the people running it who inevitably have skimmed off in administrative costs a scandalous

mitted to cutting spending across the board, eliminating numerous programs entirely, trimming others, and lumping many into the block grants system.

A share of the anguish and wailing which has been heard from the professional social services industry has been not so much for the "little people who will get hurt" as it has been for the prosperous bureaucrats who would face hunting a job. Across North Carolina, the professional human services people are holding their breaths to see what guidelines the federal government will come out with, how much money there will be, and what process will be established in this state to carry the system forward from Raleigh to the county, city, and precinct level.

In sum: who will hold the purse strings? This is big money they're talking about; somewhere between $500 million and a cool billion.

Between now and October, the beginning of a new federal fiscal year, the dialogue will get louder and louder. It has already begun, softly and not getting much public attention. But as the various agencies get organized for the battle and begin holding local and statewide meetings and jockeying for the attention of television and newspaper reporters, the headlines will get bigger and bigger.

The money must be split up for health care, nutrition programs, child day care, food stamp aid, education. (Please turn to Page 5)

Less Said, The Better

I've been reading a lot of spy books this summer and they all seem to end the same way. "Then, Mussoff, it is agreed. You will come to the United States and tell us everything you know about Vorinsky's circus in exchange for a new identity, and a house in McLean, Virginia."

"Yes, Savage. But one question. How did you know I was ready to come over to your side?"

"Maria told us." "Maria of the PLO?" "Maria really worked for Mossad, the Israeli intelligence service."

"But I thought her father was a Nazi criminal hiding in Argentina."

"That's what we wanted you to think. Maria's father was actually in charge of the St. Tropez History Section of the Library of Congress."

"Then that means he knew 'R' was working for us?" "He actually didn't know it until 'R's' wife revealed it during her tryst with Dubois of the French Secret Service, whom we had been watching for some time."

"Is that why 'R' killed himself?" "No, strangely enough 'R' killed himself when he ran out of cigarettes and couldn't find a shop that was open at 3 in the morning. Here comes your plane."

"Will I see you again, Savage?" "Perhaps someday our paths may cross. Tell me, Mussoff. What was Karnofsky's connection with the Friedrichstrasse gang?" "Karnofsky's mother and Friedrichstrasse were all part of the Bader Meinhof group. They hoped to get Ludorf out of jail by selling the West Germans a list of Parliament members who were on 'R's' payroll."

"Then it all fits into place. Ludorf knew this, and that is why he was blackmailing the coded message from Tarhouse."

"Well, here we are at the ramp. I guess this is it, Mussoff. Here is a package for you."

"What is it?" "It's Balridge's watch. We found it on his body after he was pushed in front of the Zurich to Munich express train."

"No wonder we couldn't locate it when we searched his luggage at the Helsinki airport. Thank you, Savage. I guess there is no more to say."

Strength For Today

THE WHOLE GOSPEL. A minister was told recently by an angry parishioner that he should stop discussing politics and social questions and stick to the gospel.

The angry parishioner was right — the preacher should stick to preaching the gospel. But he should preach the whole gospel, and when he does this he must denounce iniquity wherever he finds it — in politics, business, or in the social life of his comfortably living people.

When we read the 27 books of the New Testament, and along with them the 39 books of the Old, we will find that the term "gospel" takes in a wide territory. It has a word to say to sinning kings, to dishonest merchants, to tyrants, as well as to adulterers, thieves, and liars. It smites the comfortable as well as the indulgent. It has a mighty message which involves economics, sociology, and politics as well as theology.

So let us encourage our ministers to preach the gospel — the whole gospel. — Elisha Douglass.

Degree Courses Within Reach

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — Would you like to earn a bachelor's degree from a prestigious university without paying a cent of your own for tuition? While you earn a regular income?

It can be done, albeit on a limited scale for the time being. But it is conceivable that this new way of education could spread.

If it does, it could offer a partial solution to several related problems, including the financial needs of colleges and students, and the need of industry to raise employee standards and performance.

In a few more weeks, for example, 99 employees of INA Corporation in Philadelphia will be able to commute by elevator to degree courses offered in the company's offices by the University of Pennsylvania.

The courses — liberal arts rather than work-related technical subjects — will be offered from 4:30 p.m. to 7 p.m. by the university's College of General Studies, with INA paying tuition and fees in advance.

While any INA corporate employee is eligible to apply, they must pass the university's entrance requirements. Two hundred applied; 99 were admitted to the degree courses and another 45 were offered a non-credit, pre-college preparatory program.

Although the Penn-INA plan has some unique features, it isn't by any means the first linkup of industry and education.

The insurance industry, for example, aids a degree-granting College of Insurance. Arthur D. Little offers an M.S. in management. And the Wang Institute, affiliated with Wang Labs, grants an M.S. in engineering.

Northeastern University helped pioneer a work-study concept, in which students work or study full-time in alternate semesters. And many companies offer tuition credits for employees attending night school.

Sometimes the links aren't as obvious. According to K. Patricia Cross of Harvard University, AT&T last year spent 4½ times as much on employee education as M.I.T. spent on student education. The American Management Association budgets $50 million a year on 2,000 formal education programs each year. And soon it will grant degrees.

The Penn-INA has some original aspects, aside from the fact that the student seldom has to leave the building in which he or she works, an important consideration during the long, dark nights of winter.

INA pays tuition and fees when due, rather than through reimbursement, as is common in most plans. And the student's courses may have no direct link with work; the purpose is education, rather than technical training. INA feels "liberal arts helps develop good managers."

For universities, plans such as the Penn-INA program may offer financial help to offset that resulting from reduced enrollments and, in some instances, decreased government assistance.

"The trend seems clear," said an INA official. "Colleges and universities need more money to stay open and provide quality education. Instead, they're getting less," he said.

He said INA reasoned that "even though the high school graduating class of 1979 was the largest in our history, financial exigencies may keep hundreds of thousands of those 18-year-olds from college today."

The education site also might help the university. As the spokesman observed, "It will increase the enrollment of the university without taxing its facilities." The company provides not just a physical plant, but the utilities, heat, maintenance and security.

It is no secret that over the next decade some of the country's 3,270 colleges and universities may have to merge or close, a consequence of rising costs and a decline in the number of students. By 1990, demographers estimate, there will be 20 percent fewer 18-year-olds than in 1979. And by 1994, they say, there will be 26 percent fewer.

One answer is to make education more accessible to a greater number, regardless of age. The potential is there: only 17.5 million people — just 14.7 percent of those over age 25 — are college graduates, according to study by Howard Bowen, funded by the Carnegie Foundation.

Says Bowen: "Each increase of 1 percent in the number of persons over the age of 24 attending college would add a half million full-time equivalent enrollments."

Share Thorn Of Families

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
WASHINGTON — "Well, I guess I just blew it," Ronald Reagan told an aide moments after he publicly expressed hope that daughter Maureen would not run for the Senate next year.

He was right. He had angered his daughter, without budging her from an irrevocable decision to go after the Senate seat now held by Republican S.I. Hayakawa. At the end of the press conference at his Santa Barbara ranch, Reagan was asked whether Maureen was going to run. "I hope not," he replied.

That snap answer reflected the president's private comments. Vice President George Bush, less than overjoyed about the prospect of his brother, Prescott, running for the Senate from Connecticut next year, has commiserated with Reagan over their mutual family problems. But the president's daughter and the vice president's brother will run no matter what their famous relatives think.

Reagan's Combat Rules

The restrictive rules of engagement laid down in the Carter administration would almost certainly have saved those two Soviet-made Libyan SU-22 aircraft from being shot down by U.S. Navy F-14s over the Gulf of Sidra.

Jimmy Carter issued a directive to the Pentagon early in his administration limiting U.S. military flights over the gulf and carrying strict warnings to evade actual combat. When President Reagan took over, he was eager to demonstrate American resolution to stand up to the Libyan strongman Muammar Qaddafi, even at the risk of confrontation.

The result — shooting down two Libyan planes which shot first with no damage to the U.S. F-14s — sent this message to the world: Reagan means to restore American credibility as a country determined to stand up for international law and protect its rights.

GOP Money Bloop

Indictive refusal by President Reagan's inner circle to forgive Californians who supported other Republican candidates last year has cost the Republican Party more than $100,000, plus wasted effort and embarrassment.

Beverly Hills millionaire David Murdoch had planned a party fund-raiser, with about 30 well-heeled guests paying $5,000 apiece at his home with the president as the featured speaker. But senior aide Michael Deaver ruled it out on grounds that Murdoch backed John B. Connally for president in 1980. That is unacceptable behavior for a Californian, say Reagan's political aides.

Instead, Republican leaders hurriedly planned a Reagan fund-raiser at the Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles. About one-quarter of the room was papered with giveaway tickets, and even then there were embarrassing empty seats. Insiders put the net take at not much better than $25,000 (far below the announced total), compared with an expected $150,000 from the virtually expense-free dinner at Murdoch's home.

Turning Down Embassies
Millionaire New York City businessman Lewis Lehrman, a leading supply-side economic theoretician, turned down separate offers to become ambassador to France and Portugal in order to launch a long-shot bid to be elected governor of New York.

After Lehrman had been passed over early this year for any economic policymaking post in the Reagan administration, he was suddenly offered the coveted Paris embassy last month. When he said no, he was offered the Lisbon post to finish Portuguese base negotiations. His reason for turning down diplomatic service: At age 43, he feels his role is to stay home and fight to bring Reaganism to Albany.

Some friends of Lehrman were suddenly suspicious that the sudden White House interest in him coincided with the beginning of deliberations of the U.S. Gold Commission, where Lehrman is advocating a gold standard in opposition to top Reagan policymakers. Just as Dr. Arthur Burns was silenced as an economic critic by naming him ambassador to West Germany, a diplomatic assignment would have removed Lehrman from the commission and silenced him on the gold question.

Massachusetts labor leaders are privately overjoyed at the prospect of Dr. Mildred Jefferson, a black physician and anti-abortion crusader, as Republican nominee opposing Sen. Edward M. Kennedy for re-election next year — a candidacy that terrifies Republican leaders.

Other Editors Say Whose Alarms?

(Greensboro Record)

A plague of false burglar alarms in Greensboro is costing the taxpayers two ways: in money and security. The city police chief says an ordinance fining the worst offenders may be in order. It seems to us that in addition to the alarm owners, the sellers and operators of the equipment ought to bear some responsibility.

Last year, Greensboro police responded to some 6,000 false alarms. That number is expected to be topped this year with nearly 600 a month being reported so far. According to the department's Crime Prevention Bureau chief, $17,000 was spent in the last three months alone just to respond to the alarms.

Of even more concern, perhaps, is the inevitable lackadaisical attitude that develops when that much wolf-crying is going on. "You get complacent," admits Capt. B.L. Thomas of the Criminal Investigation Unit. Which means burglars are more likely to get away.

Other cities have adopted ordinances penalizing owners of alarms that consistently misfire. The Crime Prevention Bureau chief proposes a $25 fine for owners of alarms that register falsely four times a year. That is too reasonable. It offers too little incentive to alarm owners to fix their alarms. A hundred dollars for four false alarms a year makes more sense.

But the alarm companies profiting from the multi-million dollar business shouldn't be ignored. Are they installing equipment without leaving behind sufficient instruction for maintenance and operation? Should the owners have to be fully responsible for a security toy that is being sold to them promiscuously? The alarm industry apparently needs reason to police itself, and an ordinance directed at it might be just the ticket.

Cutting down on false alarms is a good idea. But first the city needs to determine who is really responsible for them.

On Vacation

In August, along with the heat and humidity, a hush descends over the Capitol as members of Congress depart for summer recess. Early Congresses only met during the winter so members, who were often farmers, could be home for the growing season. Until the 1930s, Congress met for only half the year. One historian wrote of a rare summer congressional hearing in 1933 in which, "gentlemen were given unusual permission to remove their coats and a key witness fell asleep in the heat." Soon after, the Capitol was air conditioned. Recent Congresses have met almost continually with about 8 weeks of recess per year. Congress will resume on September 8th.

Opening lead: Three of ♠.

Results alone don't always reveal the drama of bridge. If someone studied the scores of this hand from a match a few years ago between a Texas team and one from Montreal, it would seem that the result was a standoff. At one table, Montreal bid and made five diamonds with the North-South cards, and at the other Texas bid and made four hearts. But that bland statement covers a ton of excitement at the table where Texas declared four hearts.

The opening bid of two clubs was artificial and the two diamond response denied an ace. Thereafter, the auction was natural, and West led his fourth-best club against South's four heart contract.

Sitting East was Montreal attorney Joe Silver, one of Canada's most imaginative players. He won the ace of clubs and found a brilliant switch—the three of diamonds! He knew from the auction that his partner held the ace of diamonds. To fully appreciate the reasoning behind his play, consider what might have happened had West won the ace of diamonds and continued the suit.

Declarer would surely have played East for a singleton diamond and taken the finesse. East would win the queen and revert to the queen of clubs to force dummy to ruff. The queen of trumps would then become a sure trick and declarer would be down one, having lost two diamond tricks, a club and a trump.

Unfortunately for Montreal, the play was too deep for West to read. He won the ace of diamonds and reverted to clubs. Declarer ruffed with dummy's ace (♠), finessed the ten of hearts and then played king and another heart. When the trumps split evenly, declarer claimed the rest of the tricks, and a major defeat had been averted.

The Fight
In some service areas, the block grant money will be all there is. In a couple of major welfare and education areas, the block grant money will supplement other federal dollars specifically earmarked for programs.

Governor Jim Hunt will be the man in the middle. He will essentially control the process through administrative and commission channels.

There will be loud protests that human rights, civil rights, and basic dignity are on the line. Local governments will want to take one direction with the money, while human service specialists will protest that helping the police, building roads or offices, or putting money into recreation will be done at the expense of the suffering poor. Dozens of service agencies dedicated to helping the poor or aging or children or malnourished or out-of-work will find themselves pitted against one another in competition for the money.

Some individuals will demand a split on the basis of population; others on the basis of need; still others will demand state control while others will say that would make it all political and it should be given over entirely to local citizens.

The end is not in sight.

Nobody expects to beat Kennedy, but Republican leaders fear Jefferson's nomination would ruin the rest of the ticket and blight the state party's future. They hope the $500,000 war chest amassed by industrialist Ray Shamie, a political novice, will win the Republican nomination against Jefferson. Education Excellence Is Next Target

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary T.H. Bell, citing repeated complaints about a "long and continuing decline in the quality of American education," today named a commission to search for ways to upgrade the nation's schools.

Education will spend 18 months examining U.S. schools, comparing them with schools in other countries and seeking to pinpoint those that have maintained high standards in the face of a general scholastic decline.

Bell, former head of Utah's higher education system, named David Pierpont Gardner, president of the University of Utah, as chairman. The 18-member commission also includes Minnesota Gov. Albert H. Quie; Glenn T. Seaborg, former Atomic Energy Commission head and now a chemistry professor at University of California-Berkeley; Yale President A. Bartlett Giamatti; and Jay Sommer, a foreign language teacher at New Rochelle, N.Y., High School, who was recently honored at the White House as teacher of the year.

The education secretary said the commission will hold hearings around the nation and issue a report with "practical recommendations for action ... by educators, public officials, governing boards, parents and others having a vital interest in American education."

Bell said that since he took office last January he has heard complaints "from every quarter regarding what many consider to be a long and continuing decline in the quality of American education."

He said that through the commission his department plans to identify high schools producing outstanding graduates and to identify colleges "that have influenced the pursuit of excellence by working with high schools and by holding to high admission standards."

"By recognizing the best models we hope to make the examples contagious," said Bell, who previously has called for tougher standards in schools and more attention to the basics.

Bell said this nation differs from European democracies in that it does not single out "only the academically elite" for higher education.

But he said that in pursuing equality of opportunity "we must not ignore the rights of our students who have been endowed with a bright and quick mind. They must have the right to become intellectually unequal. We must work as hard for the talented as we do for the disadvantaged, deprived and handicapped."

The commission members will receive $100-per-day honoraria for their quarterly meetings. The annual cost of operating the commission is estimated at $332,000 plus $453,000 for a 16-member staff provided by the Education Department.

The other commission members are: the vice chairman, Yvonne Larsen, president of San Diego's board of education; William O. Baker, retired chairman of Bell Telephone Laboratories in Morristown, N.J.; Anne Campbell, Nebraska's commissioner of education; Emerald A. Crosby, principal of Northern High School in Detroit; and Charles A. Foster Jr., president of the Foundation for Teaching of Economics in San Francisco.

Also, Norman C. Francis, president of Xavier University in New Orleans; Shirley Gordon, president of High Line Community College in Midway, Wash.; Robert B. Haderlein, president of the National School Boards Association, from Girard, Kan.; Gerald Holton Mallinckrodt, a Harvard professor of physics and history of science; Annette Y. Kirk, a former school teacher from Mecosta, Mich.; Margaret S. Marston, a member of the Virginia state board of education, from Arlington; Francisco D. Sanchez Jr., superintendent of schools in Albuquerque, N.M.; and Richard Wallace, principal of Lutheran High School East in Cleveland Heights, Ohio.

Russian, Pakistani Discussions Held

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Nikolai Firiyubin met with Pakistan's Foreign Minister Agha Shahi on Tuesday to discuss revised proposals for an international conference on the Afghan crisis, a government spokesman said.

In Moscow, the official Tass news agency praised the latest proposals as a "historical initiative."

Pakistani officials, however, said they saw little substantive change in the terms announced Monday night by the Afghan regime in Kabul.

Firiyubin, the most senior Soviet official to visit Pakistan since the Kremlin sent troops into Afghanistan in December 1979. The government spokesman said he also paid a courtesy call on President Gen. Mohammed Zia ul-Haq on the first day of his three-day visit.

No details of Firiyubin's meetings were disclosed.

The latest proposals for the conference drop an Afghan condition that neighboring Pakistan and Iran negotiate separately with Afghanistan, and offer to include U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim in the discussions.

Pakistan favors the conference in principle, but objects of Afghan President Babrak Karmal's insistence that they be conducted on a government-to-government level that would exclude Moslem rebels fighting his regime.

Few nations outside the Soviet bloc recognize Karmal, who was installed in a coup at the time Soviet troops arrived in Afghanistan and kept in power with the help of those troops.

"We cannot give (Karmal) what 85,000 Soviet troops haven't been able to achieve — legitimacy," said a Pakistani official who asked to remain anonymous.

The troops have failed to quell continuing insurgency by Moslem rebels who object to the communist regime in Kabul.

To Discontinue Art Service

RALEIGH — Because of the many tasks facing the N.C. Museum of Art staff as it prepares to move to the museum's new facility, the museum will temporarily discontinue its art consultation service after August 31. The final time of service is from 2 to 4:30 p.m. Monday, August 31.

The consultation service is one in which staff members give verbal opinions on the period or date of a work of art, its country of origin and its condition. Neither written opinions nor monetary evaluations are offered.

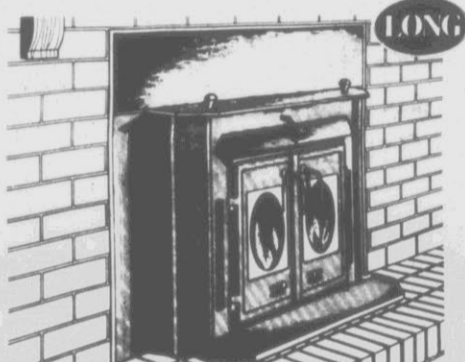

The museum's new facility is expected to open in late 1982.

S&Ls Request Brokerage Role

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans could find a stockbroker at their neighborhood savings and loan if the government approves a proposal being pushed by two such institutions.

The institutions on Tuesday asked for permission to set up brokerage services for participating savings and loan associations and their customers.

"It's one of a whole flood of new approaches resulting from the deregulation of financial institutions," said Allan Wade, spokesman for the United States League of Savings Associations.

The proposal, the first of its kind, is an effort to help the ailing S&L industry compete with brokerage houses that are luring away investors' money with their high-paying money market mutual funds. Brokerage houses are not subject to the same federal rules that govern commercial banks and thrift institutions.

"We feel the savings and loan industry has taken some heavy sledding from the brokerage industry, so we feel the way to meet this challenge is to take them head on," said Stephen M. Ege, legal counsel to the proposed S&L brokerage house.

Pushing the proposal are Coast Federal Savings and Loan Association of Sarasota, Fla., and Perpetual American Federal Savings and Loan Association of Washington, D.C. They filed applications with the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to organize the Savings Association Financial Corp., which would set up a nationwide registered brokerage firm to handle trades in securities and provide counseling to S&L customers on investments in general.

It would, they said, "make one-stop financial services a reality." But bank board legal counsel Thomas P. Vartanian said a quick look at the thrifts' application "raises various legal questions dealing with the authority of S&Ls" to take part in such business.

He said, though, that the application "may provide the board with the opportunity to take a fresh look at these questions in today's world."

Navy Is Again At Odds With A Submarine-Builder

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy's relationship with its largest submarine manufacturer is continuing on a stormy course, with disputed insurance claims the latest focus of contention.

In separate developments Tuesday, some 15,000 employees of General Dynamics Corp.'s Electric Boat Division petitioned President Reagan to bar the Navy from retaliating because of the claims and a senator said the company has left open the possibility of further claims.

The latest dispute dates from June, when Electric Boat filed a multi-million-dollar claim with the Navy to recover the cost of replacing poor workmanship and substandard materials that went into some of the nuclear attack submarines it built.

Electric Boat, which is based in Groton, Conn., contended it was entitled to the money under a Navy-issued insurance policy. But service officials replied that only accidental losses are covered, and Navy Secretary John Lehman last week called the company position "preposterous."

The Navy also has been displeased by late deliveries and cost growth of submarines produced by Electric Boat. Earlier this month the Navy awarded a non-competitive contract for three attack subs to the firm's only U.S. rival, Newport News (Va.) Shipbuilding and Drydock Co.

Lehman has said the Navy gave the contract to Newport News because it wanted to keep the company's submarine production line running efficiently.

But in a letter to Reagan accompanying their petition, the Electric Boat employees said they believed that action was "intended to hold the company hostage so it will withdraw their insurance reimbursement request."

"We don't pretend to understand all the legalities of such a request, but we understand that one of the legal principles that sets this country apart from much of the world is the right to a 'day in court,'" the letter said.

"With that in mind, we urge you to reject the Navy's strong-arm position," the letter added. "The need for work at Electric Boat and the need for submarines by this country are too important to get halted by a matter that belongs in the court."

Lehman has criticized the use of "platoons of corporate lawyers" to try to build a legal case for the claim.

Rep. Sam Gejdensen, D-Conn., who has many Electric Boat employees in his district, said in a separate letter to Reagan that the denial of the new contracts to the firm and the delay in awarding a ninth Trident strategic-missile submarine to it has cost more than 1,000 jobs.

"We cannot strengthen our defense industrial base if we do not maintain adequate work levels at the nation's shipyards," he added.

Meanwhile Tuesday, Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., quoted Electric Boat's general manager, P. Takis Veliotis, as indicating that further claims may be filed against the Navy.

Electric Boat agreed with the Navy in 1978 to absorb a $359 million loss on a submarine contract rather than make additional claims for reimbursement. Insurance items were excluded from the settlement.

Proxmire asked Veliotis at an April 9 hearing for assurance that Electric Boat would not seek to recover any part of this loss.

In a written response, the senator said, Veliotis said Electric Boat had agreed April 20 that the company "would not seek recovery under the insurance provisions of its ... contracts" for any portion of the loss.

But Proxmire said Veliotis "leaves open the option of trying to recover all or part of the $359 million under some other claims theory."

And, he added, while

Veliotis said the firm would not submit claims for faulty workmanship or materials repaired or replaced before the April settlement, it would seek reimbursement for items repaired or replaced after that date, regardless of when the faulty work was done.

Veliotis testified at the hearing that these insurance claims would not total more than $100 million. But in his follow-up letter, he said that limit did not apply to such items as quality assurance problems and late design changes and defective equipment furnished by the government.

"General Dynamics' strategy apparently is to downplay the amount of money involved by dividing claims into small pieces and submitting them individually," Proxmire said in a statement. "Judging from Mr. Veliotis' carefully worded response, it is obvious that General Dynamics is keeping open all possible avenues for new claims against the government."

Joseph Sutherland, a General Dynamics spokesman in Washington, said the company could not comment until it had studied Proxmire's statements.

The Navy's unhappiness with Electric Boat has prompted suggestions by Lehman and other defense officials that the United States open a third submarine production yard.

Less Tension With Private Cells, Small Prisons

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — At a time when the Reagan administration wants to put more criminals behind bars, a new federally financed study says private cells and smaller prisons would curb rising inmate violence.

The study, done for the Justice Department's National Institute of Justice, found that long-term inmates of overcrowded prisons die, are killed, commit suicide, become ill and create disciplinary problems more frequently than those confined in private cells of at least 50 square feet. The study by the University of Texas at Arlington was released Sunday.

In addition, large prisons produce much more severe physical and psychological ill effects than small institutions, the researchers said.

The study concluded that the ideal prison for avoiding these problems would house about 500 inmates in single rooms or cubicles.

The reports comes in a year in which violence has erupted in state prisons in Florida, Hawaii, Michigan, Nevada, New Jersey and New York and a year after 33 inmates were killed in a New Mexico prison riot.

Twenty-four state prison systems are so overcrowded they have been ruled in violation of constitutional guarantees against cruel and unusual punishment.

But the Supreme Court ruled earlier this year, in a case involving Ohio prisons, that it is not automatically unconstitutional to put two prisoners in a cell designed for one.

Despite sharp federal budget cuts, Attorney General William French Smith's task force on violent crime recommended last week that the federal government provide $2 billion in aid to help build state prisons over the next four years.

Illinois Gov. James Thompson, the panel's co-chairman, identified this recommendation as "the linchpin" of the group's proposals, most of which were aimed at putting more violent criminals behind bars.

The panel recommended that the new prisons house no more than 750 inmates rather than the thousands often locked in old-style, three-tiered penitentiaries.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., has proposed spending $6.5 billion over seven years on prisons and other criminal justice facilities.

The study was based on several years of data from the Oklahoma and Texas prison systems. The Texas system, now the nation's largest with more than 31,000 prisoners, until recently had up to 3,000 inmates who did not have beds to sleep on.

Data also was collected on 1,400 prisoners in six federal prisons — Atlanta, an old-style penitentiary; Danbury, Conn.; El Reno, Okla.; and La Tuna, Fort Worth and Texarkana in Texas.

Between 1968 and 1978, the Texas inmate population nearly doubled while bed space increased only 30 percent. The study found that the rate of violent deaths, suicides and disciplinary problems rose more sharply than the inmate population, and that the problem was greater in larger prisons.

Between 1973 and 1976, the Oklahoma inmate population dropped, and the study found an even greater percentage drop in the rates of violent death.

The study said that most inmates functioned better in single cells with fewer square feet per person than they did in two-man cells or dormitories where they had more square feet per person.

"Double-occupant housing is a common response to increases in prison population," the study said. "We found that double cells... had measurably greater negative effects than single-unit housing."

The study found no detrimental effects for an inmate after confinement in at least 50 square feet of private space.

During the Carter administration, the Justice Department set a standard for federal prisons of at least 60 square feet per inmate in single cells. Federal officials say 70 percent of prison cells — virtually all of them in state facilities — are more crowded than the federal standard, and they estimate it would cost $10 billion to bring them to that standard.

The Carter Justice Department said it would not use its statutory authority to sue state prison systems so long as they were moving toward meeting the federal standards. But in the Reagan administration, Smith has said the government will only sue to enforce constitutional minimum standards rather than the tougher federal rules. Associate Attorney General Rudolph Giuliani, who heads the violent crime campaign, said in an interview that Smith's policy was not a retreat from the goal of better treatment but a judgment that more could be accomplished by negotiating with financially pressed state systems than by court confrontations "where the federal government becomes the enemy."

Money Comes Hard In Grueling Clam-Digging Job

By KEN O'QUINN
Associated Press Writer
FREEPORT, Maine (AP) — Bent beneath a scorching sun, clam digger Stan Ashby turned over a mound of soft mud, snatched up at least eight clams and probed the dark gray muck for more.

He worked deliberately while stuck ankle-deep in the soupy earth, his muscular arms plunging the short-handled clam fork about six inches into the glistening mud.

And as he jerked back each scoop, his hands scratched the mud for another handful of clams and carefully placed them in a plastic pail.

It was grueling work; Ashby straightened up only long enough to walk a few feet while his eyes scanned the mud for more air holes, which clams form by spitting water toward the surface.

But in 20 minutes the rugged 27-year-old commercial digger from Freeport had dug $12 worth of clams.

Whether it's digging in the summer heat for four hours or cutting through 10 inches of ice with a chain saw to dig in sub-zero weather, Ashby says there's nothing else he would rather do.

Maine has some 3,500 licensed commercial clam diggers, according to the state Marine Resources Department. Hundreds of other people dig part-time.

Only about 30 percent of Maine's clams wind up in Maine restaurants. The rest are shipped out of state, to such places as New York, Philadelphia and Boston, said Marine Resources scientist Lloyd Varney.

Ashby's clams are picked up by a dealer in eastern Maine, who travels down the coast, buying from diggers along the way. Dealers are currently paying $23 to $25 a bushel, and most commercial diggers can expect to earn from $15,000 to $25,000 a year.

The money comes hard, however, and many people give up on clamming for a living. It is a numbingly monotonous, exacting job with irregular hours. The day may begin at 5:30 a.m., and if there are two low tides in one day, an ambitious digger will make sure he doesn't miss the four extra hours of digging later in the day.

A third-generation commercial digger who has labored in the mud flats since he was 10, Ashby said, "I've always found that I like doing this more than anything. Even when I was in the service, I came home weekends and did this."

He likes the independence and being able to "make as much in four hours as most people do all day."

But that's when the clams are plentiful. "Some days we've gone down and gotten five bushels, then the next day we've gone back and we got nothing," he said.

Diggers are also in a seasonal business. Although clams are dug year 'round, demand wanes in the fall. The clamming season is over and vacationers who flocked to restaurants and roadside stands for succulent fried clams are back home.

"That's why in the summertime you have to pound as hard as you can, because if you don't make what you need for the winter, then forget it," said Ashby, keeping his face low to the ground and continuing to dig.

Other factors that make clam digging an insecure livelihood are the harsh winters, the fluctuating market and the paralytic shellfish poisoning known as Red Tide.

There is also competition. "Years ago people were doing it because they didn't have enough education," Ashby said. Now, "there are so many people in it, it's (the clam supply) depleted. Too many people have found out what a clam digger can make."

This was Ashby's favorite area, a place only he and his young partner, Brian Moore, clammed. They dig other areas whenever they can, knowing they can always return here, but most of their time is spent on this mile-long beach area.

"That's a pretty clam," he said suddenly, standing up admiring one that may have measured four inches end-to-end. "You don't see those in supermarkets" because the larger clams become fried clams, while smaller ones are used in chowders.

It was quiet as he dug, the silence broken only by the sound of the 10-inch fork prongs slicing into the mud, and an occasional slurp when Ashby, a heavyset man, tried to free his hip boots from the mud to walk a few steps.

Ashby does auto body and electronic work in a garage next to the trailer that he and his wife, Evelyn, share outside of town. And he is pursuing a business management degree at Casco Bay Community College.

Clamming, he says, is "not something I would count on completely for my sole income for the rest of my life."

His faded yellow T-shirt, his face and arms were spattered with mud as he slogged through the muck, grabbed a red onion bag and carefully slipped it over the top of his brimming pail of clams.

He emptied the pail into the bag, laid the bag in shallow water so the clams could soak — and trudged back to resume digging.

CLAM DIGGERS — Third-generation clam-digger Stanley Ashby, left, works the flats in South Freeport, Maine. Ashby is one of more than 3,500 licensed diggers in Maine, where the practice is as much a part of the state's heritage as lobstering. (AP Laserphoto)

Still Probing Bizarre Slayings

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — Military investigators say eight children were asleep in the house or nearby while a 34-year-old woman and two teen-agers were slain and mutilated.

Sharon S. Sager, whose husband, U.S. Army Staff Sgt. Fred Sager Jr. was en route to a new duty station, was found mutilated "almost beyond recognition," according to a source quoted by The Jacksonville Daily News.

Tyler T. Dash, Mrs. Sager's son by a previous marriage, was found in an upstairs bathroom and was so badly cut and so close in age and size to his first cousin that investigators "had a hard time making a positive identification," the source said.

Connie D. Smith, the daughter of James and Betty Smith, was found nude and battered on a couch downstairs.

But investigators said Tuesday that three boys, ages 4 to 6, were asleep downstairs while the slayings took place, including two members of the Sager family and one neighbor boy. Asleep outside in a car were two girls, one a member of the Sager family and one a member of the Smith family, ages 12 and 13.

Because of the complicated family relationships involved, authorities were unable to provide precise identifications.

The incident occurred in a two-story house occupied by the Smiths and their three children in the Watkins Village complex on the Marine base. A Camp Lejeune spokesman said only military personnel and their families live there.

Smith is a Marine staff sergeant and is stationed in Okinawa. Mrs. Sager was identified as Smith's sister-in-law.

"Everybody here is torn to pieces," one neighbor said as she watched investigators mill around the roped-off area.

"Everybody's nerves are shot," the onlooker said, declining to give her name. "People are scared to open their doors or let their kids go outside after dark."

Family members discovered the bodies about 7:30 a.m. Monday, said a spokesman for the Joint Public Affairs Office at Camp Lejeune. But The Jacksonville Daily News quoted a confidential source close to the investigation as saying that a neighbor's 5-year-old child, who was sleeping over at the house, woke up and saw the body of the 12-year-old girl downstairs.

The newspaper also quoted the source as saying that investigators strongly suspect the victims knew their attacker because there were no apparent signs of forced entry.

The newspaper said the 12-year-old girl, whose body was found downstairs, had a slashed throat and a long, deep slash running from the top of her forehead down to her lower abdomen.

Staff Sgt. Steve Wyatt of the Joint Public Affairs Office at Camp Lejeune said that autopsy reports have not been completed by the base Naval Regional Medical Center and it is not yet known if any of the victims were sexually assaulted.

Mrs. Smith, who works the 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. shift at a Jacksonville nursing home, did not discover that her daughter, sister and nephew had been murdered until she arrived home from work Monday morning shortly after the bodies were discovered.

The investigation is being hampered because of difficulty in reconstructing information from the eight children, ages 4 through 14, who apparently slept through the night unharmed, the spokesman indicated.

Wyatt said officers with the Naval Investigative Service had pinpointed where the nine children at the residence slept the night of the slayings.

Mrs. Sager's two girls, ages 12 and 13, apparently spent the latter part of the night in a car parked outside, Wyatt said. Officials have offered no explanation why the children were sleeping in the automobile.

Several of the boys had camped out in the backyard of the residence and the other children were sleeping inside.

He also said authorities were having trouble reaching all of the next of kin because each of the adult women living at the residence had been married twice and there were two sets of fathers and stepfathers to notify.

Wyatt said that officers still have not determined a motive for the slayings, although robbery is among the motives which have not been ruled out.

One Guilty Plea In Skid Row Slashings

NEW YORK (AP) — A Bowery drifter has unexpectedly pleaded guilty to attempted murder in one of the 15 so-called Skid Row slashings this summer.

Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Irving Lang said at the hearing Tuesday that Charles A. Sears, 32, would receive 7 1/2 to 15 years in prison when he is sentenced Oct. 5. The maximum sentence is 25 years in prison.

took place in an area between the Bowery on the Lower East Side and Pennsylvania Station, several miles to the northwest.

Sears' attorney, Robert Stein, said the promised sentence was "the best thing for my client as I see it at this time. Based upon the knowledge that I have of the strength of the prosecution case, the plea is appropriate."

Sears pleaded guilty to the attempted murder of Roy Miley, 25, whose throat was slashed July 5 on the Lower East Side.

Sears also has been charged with murder in the death of 40-year-old Michael Fiorentino, who was slashed as he lay on a park bench July 6, and with the attempted assault of Edwin Feliciano, 29, on the same day.

Ms. deBourbon, said prosecutors had expected Sears to use insanity as a defense and to challenge the findings of a court-appointed psychologist that Sears was fit to stand trial.

Sears has a record of arrests for gun possession, robbery, menacing and assault dating to 1971, according to authorities.

Attempted assault charges lodged against Sears in an attack on Louis Harris inside Pennsylvania station June 28 were dropped in a plea bargain when Sears pleaded guilty to the attack on Miley.

Sears has not been charged in the other attacks, one of which resulted in a death.

Police said at the time they believed all the attacks were committed by the same person. Mary deBourbon, a spokesman for the district attorney's office said Tuesday that the other cases remain open.

The series of slashings in Manhattan began June 27. The throats of eight homeless men were slashed in the space of several hours, each within blocks of the others. On June 30, another vagrant had his throat slashed. All survived.

Sears was arrested July 6 with a bloody razor in his pocket, hours after six more men were slashed, two of them fatally. All 15 attacks

In 1977 he was accused of assaulting a man, but he failed to appear to answer that charge in court. Officials speculated Sears may have become hostile when his wife kicked him out of their Bronx home after that charge.

He was described as drifting to the Bowery, moving from one cheap residence to another.

Most of the slashing victims were derelicts, and police sources said Sears may have seen his own "image" in them.

VEPCO Hike.....

35.26 percent for the eight customers in the county, municipal or Housing Authority category — Sheppard Memorial Library, East Branch Library, Recreation Administration Building, Public Works administration building, two buildings at the Utilities Operations Center, a community building and D.H. Conley High School.

Beck's proposal also called for a reduction of 22.62 percent in the rates for bulk barns and other items in the seasonal general service category and no increase at all for outdoor lighting service.

Jack Pous, a consultant for the Beck agency, said the proposals were based on studies of demand and costs incurred by the Greenville system. Pous noted that Greenville's evening peak time — when the demand for electricity is at its highest — has shifted from 6:30 p.m., a residential peak, to 5 p.m., which would represent an industrial peak.

The change has occurred since Ayden went off Greenville's wholesale list in June 1980.

C. Eugene Prescott, commission vice chairman who presided at Tuesday night's meeting, noted that the commission faced the possibility of having to adjust retail rates three times within the next six months as Beck's proposed cost of service rate structure and the tracking structure are based on Greenville's acquisition of power from Vepco.

Either method would be subject to change if Greenville succeeds in its efforts to obtain electricity through Power Agency No. 3, and would be subject to another change after final costs are resolved in the changeover from Vepco.

Although most commission members appeared Tuesday night to be leaning toward the tradition tracking increase for the early fall months, one member — Margaret Wirth — called for a revision, pointing out that the Beck study reflected significant changes in demand and cost factors among retail customers.

"I think that now that we know, or think that we know, we have to deal with it in some way. We can't just blanketedly pass on rates like we did before," she said.

Shot, Robbed By Test-Driver

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A Charlotte man who had advertised his car for sale got more than he bargained for when an interested buyer shot and robbed him after test-driving the car.

Jackson David Miller Jr., 22, was taken to Charlotte Memorial Hospital with five gunshot wounds after the incident Sunday.

He told the Cabarrus County sheriff's department that a man answering his ad for a 1981 Datsun 310GX hatchback drove the car toward Concord, stopped and demanded money at gunpoint.

Manpower Opens Office

Manpower, a temporary help firm, announced that a new office has been opened at 118 Reade Street to provide temporary employees to business firms throughout Pitt County.

Bill Williams, owner of the new office, said that Rebecca Roney Ball has been named office manager with responsibility for sales and service to Pitt County customers.

A Greenville resident, Ms. Ball is a native of Rocky Mount and holds a B.S. degree from East Carolina University. Prior to joining Manpower, she had been employed in the personnel field and had taught in the Pitt County school system.

In addition to Ms. Ball, the local Manpower office is staffed by service representative Barbara Zicherman, according to Williams.

REBECCA BALL

He said the Greenville office is part of the eastern North Carolina Manpower operation which also includes single offices in Durham and Fayetteville and two locations in Raleigh. The five offices are owned by Williams.

The offices, along with those in Wilmington, Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Charlotte, High Point and Asheville annually employ more than 11,000 North Carolinians, he reported.

Williams said that as the world's largest temporary help firm, Manpower annually provides temporary employment to more than 600,000 people through its 900 offices in 31 countries. Approximately 60 percent of the assignments filled by Manpower's temporary work force are in skilled clerical positions, he added.

Firm Sues A&T Univ. For Debt

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A lawsuit filed by Pet Inc. of Greensboro is one of many financial burdens being felt by North Carolina A&T University and one of its department chairmen.

Pet, in a suit filed in 1979, is seeking $18,557 from the college for milk supplied to a 1977 meals program for the poor.

State lawyers defending the college maintain that Lynglas Enterprises Ltd., a private company that administered the program sponsored by A&T, had no authority to make deals on behalf of the school. Any debts, they say, belong to Lynglas.

Meanwhile A&T professor and Lynglas president Roy D. Moore, who has piled up legal problems from feeding programs both as a director and food supplier, has declared bankruptcy. Moore, who has chaired A&T's physical education department for 12 years, filed a Chapter 13 bankruptcy plan last month in Greensboro. He listed debts of more than $100,000 and assets of about $46,000 after mortgages and liens were deducted.

Many of Moore's debts grew out of a $500,000 "meals on wheels" program he directed in 1976 under the church's sponsorship. The federally funded program ran up more than $70,000 in debts, which technically were charged against the church.

But church officials, who claimed they were victimized by Moore and his associates, have won court rulings saying Moore and some of his business partners owe the money to the church.

The timing of Moore's bankruptcy plan prevented the church from acquiring some of Moore's property in Mecklenburg County. The church had bid $10,000 on the property, sold at a court-ordered public auction to help settle Moore's debts. But Moore's bankruptcy filing halted the sale of any of his property.

Despite the problems of the 1976 meals program, Moore was active in a similar feeding program at A&T in 1977, mainly as a food supplier through Lynglas. A&T paid Lynglas at least $124,000 in a six-week period, according to A&T records.

Gist said A&T was reimbursed with federal money, and from his standpoint the program went well. It is unclear why Pet wasn't fully paid. Robert Cone, a lawyer representing Pet, declined to discuss the case beyond matters listed in the lawsuit.

Moore formed Lynglas, a food catering business, in 1975 along with his wife, Eva, and Carl and Nan Manuel of Greensboro. Nan Manuel and Eva Moore are A&T faculty members. Carl Manuel and Lynglas are the other two defendants in the Pet lawsuit involving A&T.

In their bankruptcy plan, which a federal judge will consider next month, Roy and Eva Moore propose to pay $700 a month for at least 36 months to a trustee, who would distribute the money among creditors. But the lawyer for one of the creditors — PYA Goodnight Bros. of Charlotte — has filed an objection to the plan, saying the company may not receive its fair share.

PYA Goodnight, a food supplier that wasn't fully paid in the 1976 Thomasville program, says Moore owes it about $43,000. Its lawyer has asked that the company be paid first, or that a bankruptcy judge require Moore to undergo a Chapter 7 liquidation, in which the debtor essentially sells all his assets at once.

James Turner of Greensboro, Moore's attorney, said the bankruptcy proceedings prevented the Thomasville First Baptist Church's $10,000 bid from being accepted. If the sale had been approved, he said, the church might have written off the property's cost against Moore's debt, rather than pay cash for the property. Turner said Moore filed for bankruptcy only after a proposal to sell the property for $32,500 fell through.

Great Wealth And Great Poverty In McAllen, Tex.

By SUSAN STOLER
Associated Press Writer
McALLEN, Texas (AP) — Welcome to the poorest metropolitan area in America, a way station on the road from Mexican poverty to the good life in the United States.

It is a land of stark contrasts: —Wealthy Mexicans flying in to spend their pesos in fancy shops, while poor countrymen sneak across the Rio Grande to seek jobs and a new life.

—Affluent neighborhoods for a fast-growing professional and management pool and impoverished "colonias" of immigrants.

—Long lines of food stamp recipients in the most bountiful agricultural county in Texas.

On some days, a sharp-eyed visitor driving south of the city can spot "los indocumentados" wading the Rio Grande from Mexico or just waiting on the river's southern banks for the U.S. Border Patrol to look away long enough.

Some of the illegals are caught, but others make it across the border to start climbing America's socioeconomic ladder — from the bottom rung.

"We're the entry point, as are all the border cities, for the migrants from Mexico, illegal or legal," Mayor Othal Brand said.

"There are two kinds, the doctors and the lawyers, and then the extremely poverty stricken from rural areas of Mexico who are willing to live in what we would consider unsuitable conditions but in reality are an improvement for them."

Mexican-Americans make up 80 percent of McAllen's 67,000 residents, with some families tracing their ancestry to the days when Spain owned Mexico and Texas and granted colonists large tracts of land.

Poor immigrants, and descendants of poor immigrants, are the reason the U.S. Commerce Department ranks the McAllen-Pharr-Edinburg area — with 283,229 residents — dead last among 273 standard metropolitan statistical areas.

The 1979 per capita income here was $5,024 — 43 percent below the national average.

By way of comparison, the wealthiest SMSA that year — the latest for which figures are available — was Reno, Nev., with income of $12,713 per person.

The McAllen-area SMSA, located along the Mexican border about 70 miles inland from the Gulf of Mexico, takes in Hidalgo County in the Lower Rio Grande Valley. It is a semi-tropical area with rich soil that produces abundant citrus, cotton, grain and vegetable crops.

Indeed, Hidalgo County is tops in the state for farm revenue, yet food prices rank slightly above the national average and one in four county residents lives in a household that receives food stamps.

Another telling contrast is in schooling: the most recent figures show the average adult education level in Hidalgo County at 7.4 years, compared to the national average of 12.1 years and the Texas average of 11.6.

Because it is the biggest metropolitan area within hundreds of miles of northeastern Mexico, McAllen does one-third of its retail sales with Mexican tourists. At the airport, hundreds of Mexicans arrive from Monterrey and head for shops that transact business in Spanish as often as English.

But contrasting with that affluence, the unemployment rate in the McAllen SMSA is 13 percent, compared with 4.2 percent for all of Texas.

Low incomes are a big problem here, Brand and other officials admit, but they point to mitigating factors.

Just across the Rio Grande is bustling Reynosa, Mexico, with a huge refinery and regional headquarters for the Mexican oil monopoly, Pemex.

As Mexico capitalizes on its petroleum deposits, U.S. businesses are taking note and moving to the border. Several have plants on both sides of the border, to take advantage of Mexico's cheap labor supply and the U.S. duty-free foreign trade zone.

In the most recent fiscal year, $547 million worth of goods was received in the zone, mostly electronic components, television parts and oilfield equipment.

And despite its financial rank, McAllen is a boom town. It ranked among the top 25 SMSAs in population growth between 1970 and 1980, with a 56 percent gain. Businesses are moving in. And retail trade is doing well.

The overall cost of living, according to an American Chamber of Commerce survey, is close to the national average. Using 100 for the average, McAllen ranks 100.6, compared to Houston at 106.6 or New York City at 129.

In addition, many migrant farmworkers make their homes in the area, and their income earned in other states is not counted in determining local income averages, said Alden Schiller, executive vice president of the McAllen Chamber of Commerce.

Neither are welfare, unemployment and other "transfer payments" included in the income figures, and the "underground" economy of unreported but legitimate income also probably lowers the average figures, he added.

Brand says industry and new jobs are the way for the McAllen area to end its poverty, but affluence is a long way off.

"There's no really effective means of stemming the flow from Mexico," the mayor said. "As long as we have people seeking a better life for themselves, it (poverty) will continue."

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market advanced modestly today, adding to the small gain of the previous session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had dipped nearly 13 points Tuesday before rebounding late in the day, rose 2.47 to 904.30 in the first half-hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by a 2-1 margin, among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Despite the rally late Tuesday and the small gain early today, analysts said concerns about high interest rates and bigger government deficits remained a stumbling block.

Among today's early prices, the oils were generally higher. Getty rose 3/4 to 67 1/2 and Kerr McGee added 1/4 to 75 1/2.

Pan Am, which announced in London that it would seek pay reductions for its Britain-based workers, added 1/2 to 3 in active trading.

On Tuesday, the Dow Jones industrial average added 1.72 points to 901.83.

The NYSE's composite index fell 0.34 to 72.58.

The American Stock Exchange's market value index lost 1.31 to 352.55.

Big Board volume totaled 54.6 million shares compared with 46.8 million Monday.

Pinning Ceremony For Technologists

The surgical technology graduating class of Pitt Community College sponsored a pinning ceremony and dinner at the Western Sizzlin' Steak House last evening.

Dr. E.G. Crawford, an oral surgeon from Greenville was the speaker. He used as his topic, "The Team Approach in Surgery."

The speaker traced the history of surgery from the beginning of man. He pointed out that this phase of medical science "has come a long way during the last decade."

"The field of surgical technology is an exciting and rewarding one," he said, "and I would encourage young talented people to enter this field."

Crawford emphasized that the surgical technologists are the right arm of the surgeon and without their help in the operating room the job would be utterly impossible.

The speaker was introduced by Gayle Cobb, R.N., chairman of the surgical technology program. Mrs. Cobb and Nancy Phelps, C.S.T., clinical instructor at PCC, presented the pins to the graduates.

The welcome was given by student Debbie Briley and Jan Beckwith gave the student response.

Joseph E. Downing, assistant dean of instruction for curricular programs, made the closing remarks.

Mrs. Miriam Pleasant was recognized during the ceremony. She is the wife of the late George Lemuel Pleasant Jr., a deceased surgical technology student who would have been a member of this graduating class.

The surgical technologists graduation pledge, written by student Jan Beckwith, was recited by the group at the close of the program.

Members of the graduating class receiving pins were Dana Philip Nelson, Doreen Cheryl Swane of Greenville; Janet Earl Beckwith of Winterville; Sharon Mazingo, Mary Oakley of Farmville; Debbie Briley of Stokes; Janet Senecal of Fayetteville; and Juanita Rochelle of Washington, D.C.

Currently, groups of 6-8 employees come to machine shop and welding classes as their employed work assignment for a full quarter and special programs are available in blueprint reading, math, supervision, plant maintenance and safety.

Vocational and technical teachers have also visted industries and received back-to-industry work experience ranging from two weeks to one month, and an Education Work Council with representatives from educational institutions, businesses and industries was formed.

"The program will be a great assistance toward meeting the needs of our industries and will prepare a student for entry level employment in several possible areas," said Bright, "and in addition, pave the way for advancement in employment."

Dr. William E. Fulford Jr., president of Pitt Community College, stated, "These two new programs will strengthen PCC's relationship with Pitt County industries. We constantly hear their expressed need for help in industrial maintenance for both newly-trained people and their desire to upgrade present employees. The funding of these programs will enable PCC to provide an additional opportunity for being helpful where skill training is needed."

Crum Excited About 1981 Tar Heels

Coach Concerned About Inexperience

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina linebacker Darrell Nicholson thinks its slightly ludicrous when people say the Tar Heels have an easy schedule this season.

True, there is no Oklahoma on the schedule. And in the place of the only team to tarnish the Tar Heels 11-1 season last year is Boston College.

But, "No team is going to lay down for us," Nicholson said Tuesday during the Atlantic Coast Conference's Operation Football, a writer's tour of the eight conference schools.

"Every team that lines up against us wants to beat Carolina. Every game will be a fight. We know that."

And there isn't any overconfidence. "We always respect the other team. As far as overconfidence, coach Crum takes care of that in practice."

Coach Dick Crum seems anything but overconfident.

"This might be the most inexperienced team I've ever coached," said Crum, now in his fourth year with North Carolina.

He notes that UNC lost four of five starters from last year's defensive front, including All-America linebacker and ACC Player-of-the-Year Lawrence Taylor. He mentions holes in the secondary and the offensive line. But Crum does not paint a totally bleak picture.

"I'm concerned about the lack of experience," Crum said. "But I'm kind of excited about this team because I think they have a lot of potential. I'm real interested in seeing how it turns out. Every Saturday afternoon will be like opening a package on Christmas."

"I got kind of spoiled last year because I pretty much knew what was going to happen every Saturday. But I think they can be a good football team. If they come along and mature, they'll be all right."

In the midst of all the problems Crum expounded on, he did find some bright spots too.

"One plus is we have a veteran quarterback," he said. "If we were this young with no veteran quarterback, we'd be in real trouble. Also in our favor is we have people at the skill positions that are as talented as I've had since I've been here."

The veteran quarterback is junior Rod Elkins, thrown into action last year after starter Chuck Sharpe went down with a bad knee.

"I feel a lot more comfortable this year," Elkins said. "I know the offense is looked upon as being more powerful this year because of the defense. But once they (the defense) get some experience, they'll be all right."

In the backfield with Elkins is 1,000-yard tailback Kelvin Bryant. Bryant will see more playing time this year because he will not be sharing time with Amos Lawrence, and his 9.0 speed in the 100 excites the offensive coaches. And Crum said fullback Alan Burrus will help take the pressure off the junior. Burrus replaces 250-pound Billy Johnson. At 210 pounds Burrus can't block like Johnson but his 4.5 second speed in the 40-yard dash gives the Tar Heels another running threat.

Bryant and Burrus also will be running more pass patterns this year. Elkins and Burrus say the offense is more complicated with shifts and more passing planned.

"We picked up where we left off in the Bluebonnet Bowl and kept adding on," Burrus said.

Green's A Goner

Following Monday Night Fracas

Green Benched Indefinitely

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Suspended indefinitely after a fracas with an umpire, Philadelphia Phillies Manager Dallas Green is waiting to learn the full extent of his punishment.

National League President Chub Feeney imposed the discipline Tuesday, but said the length of the suspension and possible fines wouldn't be determined until he reviewed films of the ninth-inning spat.

Feeney said in a telegram to Green the league had been promised films of the game by today.

Green stormed out of the dugout during Monday night's game against the Atlanta Braves to protest a call by second-base umpire Steve Fields.

The umpire had ruled shortstop Larry Bowa failed to touch second during a crucial double-play attempt and called the baserunner safe. The play allowed a run to score, and the Braves took a temporary 5-4 lead. But the Phillies tied the score in the bottom of the ninth and went on to win 7-5 in the 13th.

"I don't regret a thing, except the call," Green said in a clubhouse news conference after the suspension announcement. "I'm not going to sit there and watch things like that happen."

"Maybe I acted a little bit like the fool, but that's part of baseball," Green added.

Coach Bobby Wine has been named the team's acting manager; to be assisted by pitching coach Herm Starrette.

"But I'll be around, every so often Wine and Herm will hear a little bird whisper in their ears," Green said.

Green watched his defending world champions go down to a

Michael Yanks Jackson, Threatens Other Moves

NEW YORK (AP) — This time, Manager Gene Michael isn't waiting for owner George Steinbrenner to lose his temper.

Because the New York Yankees have a game scheduled tonight against the Minnesota Twins, Michael couldn't match Steinbrenner's act of ordering an off-day workout when he was upset by the team's sloppy play last week.

But the first-year manager took the bull by the horns Tuesday night, yanking slugger Reggie Jackson for a pinch hitter for one of the few times in his career, chewing the Yankees out for the second time in a week and threatening wholesale lineup changes if the club doesn't snap out of a slump that has seen it lose eight of its last 11 games and nine of 15 since the baseball season resumed.

Michael kept the clubhouse closed for almost 10 minutes following Tuesday night's second consecutive loss to the lowly Twins. The 3-0 setback marked the fourth time the Yankees have been shut out since the end of the baseball strike.

"I let them know if they don't want to play, they won't be playing," Michael said angrily but without mentioning names after the Yankees stranded 10 baserunners and wasted five scoring opportunities. "If they don't want to play hard and do the little things that win games, they don't have to play. Those guys over there (the Twins) aren't as talented as we are, but they wanted to play hard."

One of the Yankees' seven hits was an eighth-inning single by Aurelio Rodriguez, pinch hitting for Jackson, who hasn't hit a home run since May 25 and is hitting a meager .212 with only six homers and 28 RBIs.

"I thought our chances were better with Rodriguez," Michael explained. "I was trying to get a couple of runners on so we could get back in the game. Reggie hasn't been swinging the bat well and I thought our best chance to score a run was with Rodriguez."

Was it Michael's idea or did Jackson ask out after walking, grounding out with two men on base and striking out?

"I run the ballclub, so obviously it was my idea," Michael replied.

For one of the few times in his career, Jackson had little to say.

"What do you want? I've been pinch-hit for before. Go bother somebody else," he said, pushing his way through the first wave of newsmen who approached his locker.

True to form, though, a few minutes later he was sitting at a table in the center of the clubhouse answering questions.

"Are you frustrated?"

"I'm not frustrated."

"Are you discouraged?"

"I'm not discouraged. Sorry, but I'm not anything."

"When do you think you'll get your act together?"

"I haven't really wondered about it too much."

"What's your feeling about it?"

"I don't have any; too bad."

"When do you think you'll come out of it?"

"I don't know. I've quit thinking about it. Why are you talking to me?"

"You're supposed to be a leader on this club."

"Well, I'm following for a while. We've got five guys hitting .220 and a whole club of guys with six home runs. Five guys on this club are making more money than I make."

"Are you pessimistic?"

"I'm nothing."

Michael, meanwhile, was boiling as he perused a sheet of statistics that showed the Yankees batting just .250 for the entire season — 10th in the American League — and only .230 in the 15 games since the end of the strike.

"We're going to do some things differently," he promised. "We're going to scrap for runs. I know some people are not good at certain things, so they'll learn to do them...or at least they'll practice them."

In batting practice tonight, each player will bunt five times and hit behind an imaginary runner five times rather than simply swinging for the seats.

Farmville Central Rebuilding Under New Head Coach

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
FARMVILLE — The 1980 football season was somewhat of a let down for Farmville Central fans, and new coach Gilbert Carroll is hopeful that the Jaguars can return to their prominence of old.

However, it probably won't be this year. Carroll, taking over from highly successful Gene Brewer, who has taken on the job of rebuilding Fayetteville's South View High School, found much of the beef from the golden days of Farmville Central gone. There are no Keno Farrows, no Reid brothers to brighten the picture for the Jaguars.

Instead, Carroll hopes to rebuild the program, getting the Jags back on top as soon as possible. "It's challenging to come into a situation like this," Carroll said of his first head coaching job. "The tradition is here. A lot of the success has been due to individuals, however, and we're trying to go at it in a different way. We're trying to build depth with more kids involved. It's going to take a couple of years."

With 37 out for the varsity unit right now, Carroll has found only seven people back who served as starters last season. He feels it gives him a good nucleus, but he also notes that most of these seven are going to be going both ways.

"We have a lot of kids out who didn't play last year, or even year before last. The tradition, however, is there for us, and that's a help. The kids get up easier due to pride."

Of the 37 currently on the varsity roster, nine are sophomores, and Carroll noted that some of them will probably move down to the junior varsity when that unit's season begins several weeks into the season.

"We have some experience to work with on the offense, and even through we're working with a new scheme, they've learned their assignments pretty well," Carroll said. The Jaguars will be switching from a split-back offense to variations of the I. "What's been the most disappointing has been the strength of the players. It's not what it could be with a good strength program—something we don't have right now. But that's one thing that we'll be putting in in the off-season," Carroll said.

"We don't have a great deal of depth, either. That's going to take a while to build, so condition is going to be important since we'll have so many going both ways. I do plan to play the second unit offense at least once in the second quarter of each game to give them experience and to spell the others. That group is mostly juniors, so we'll be building some depth as we go."

All seven of the returning starters will be seeing action on the offensive unit, although several of them did not start there in the past.

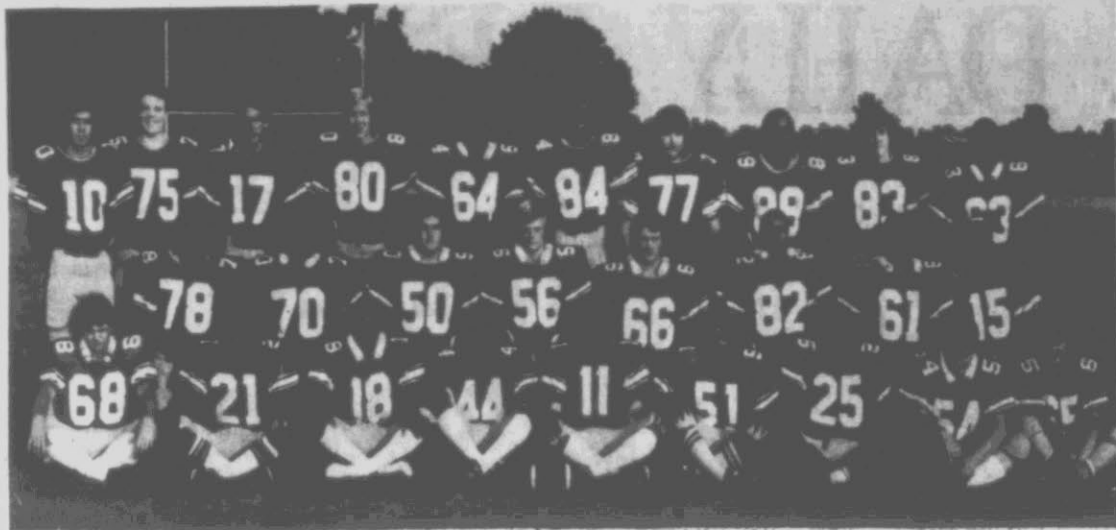

One of the two returnees who won't be going both ways is quarterback Jeff Cutler (6-1, 162, Sr.). The other is running back Wesley Carmon, (5-10, 173, Jr.), the only non-senior returning starter.

"Cutler is a well-rounded quarterback. He can throw well and he can run too. He has a good head on his shoulders, and we look for him for some of our leadership," the coach said.

James Moore (6-0, 173, Jr.) will handle the fullback duties, and Carroll feels that he is a good blocker and a good runner. "I've told him he has to be a blocker first and a ball-carrier second," Carroll said.

Carmon will handle the tailback duties, with Willie Davis, one of the returning starters at slotback. Davis is a 5-8, 143-pound senior.

The center is returning senior Rusty Cotton (5-10, 160), while the rest of the line will consist of two other veterans, Charles Sutton (5-9, 186, Sr.), Raymond May (6-0, 180, Sr.), along with junior Dennis Tyson (6-0, 180) and sophomore Joey Steppe (5-8, 161). Another offensive line veteran, Robert Barnes (5-11, 160, Sr.) is currently sidelined with an injury.

Gilbert Carroll

The tight end will be senior Alfred Williams (6-0, 188), while Tony Hargrove (5-11, 143, Jr.) will be the split end. Reggie Willoughby (6-1, 159, Jr.) is quite likely to see action at either position as a back-up.

Most of the defensive players will be the same ones as on offense.

And here too, Carroll has put in a new scheme. The Jaguars in the past ran from a 5-2, but this year will be using the "Notre Dame Box," giving the look of a 4-4 and a 6-2. "Some of the variations of that may give us the look of a six-man front."

May will be the middle guard, flanked by senior Verral Jordan — at 6-3, 350 by far the biggest man on the team — and Eric Faison (5-8, 190, Jr.) at the tackles. Tracy Horne (5-5, 169, Jr.) is also likely to play a lot here, as well as back up Cotton at center.

Tyson and Moore will be the ends, with Cotten and Williams playing here a lot too.

Sutton and Steppe will handle the linebacking duties, backed up by Moore and Davis.

Hargrove and Willoughby will be at the corners, backed by Davis and Willie Foreman (5-9, 147, Sr.), with Sam Sumrell (6-0, 173, Jr.) as the fifth defensive back. He is also the backup quarterback.

Alan Wooten will handle the punting, while James Streeter will probably take care of the placements.

"I think that we'll have an exciting year," Carroll said. "We're going to throw the ball more, but not more than we run. I do feel that we won't be out of any game, because we're going to be able to go the length of the field in just a few plays. We're just going to have to try and play good defense and then score as many points as we can."

Carroll, although a newcomer to the area, feels Charles B. Aycock will be the team to beat. "Southern Nash should also be strong, and Southwest Edgecombe has been picked by some to win it. Ayden-Grifton and Greene Central are also expecting banner seasons. Really, I think the league this year will be more competitive than it has in some time."

As to Farmville Central, Carroll says that he wouldn't count the Jaguars out. "I think we are capable of beating anyone we play on a given night. A lot is going to depend

Carter Puts Hurtin' On Cincy

By The Associated Press
Montreal Expos catcher Gary Carter is playing in pain ... but it's the Cincinnati Reds who are hurting.

"Dr. (Larry) Coughlin, our team physician, just diagnosed the injury as a torn ligament in the right ankle," Carter said. "He said it doesn't require surgery. It's going to cause some pain but he expects that time will help it heal. In the meantime, I can continue to play on it."

Adndplay he did. On Tuesday night Carter drove in six runs, four of them with a grand slam homer, to power the Expos over Cincinnati 9-1.

"I'll take it," said Carter of his performance. "I'm happy that I'm still able to play." Carter suffered the injury in a game against the Houston Astros last week. Diagnosed then as a strained ligament, Carter aggravated it when he bailed out at the plate on an inside pitch from Reds starter Mike LaCoss.

"He couldn't have been hurting that much because he played 18 holes of golf yesterday," said Expos Manager Dick Williams of Carter's injury.

The six RBI equaled a career high for Carter. He also had a two-run double.

Braves 12, Phillies 2
Catcher Bruce Benedict slammed his first major league grand slam and Chris Chambliss added a homer and five runs batted as Atlanta crushed Philadelphia and snapped a four-game Phillies winning streak.

With the bases loaded in the first, Chambliss doubled home two runs. After a walk loaded the bases again, Benedict unloaded his fourth homer of the year over the left field fence.

The Braves made it 7-0 in the second, stretched their lead to 10-0 in the fourth and made it 12-0 in the sixth when Chambliss, who extended his hitting streak to 11 games, slammed his seventh homer with a man on base.

Dodgers 9, Pirates 7
Pinch-hitter Rick Monday singled home the winning run as Los Angeles outlasted Pittsburgh in 11 innings.

Dave Parker blasted a three-run homer with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning, topping a four-run rally and knotting the score at 7-7.

Dusty Baker had staked the Dodgers to a four-run lead in the top of the ninth with a run-scoring double before the Pirates came storming back.

The game was halted briefly by a bench-clearing confrontation under the stands in the sixth inning. Both teams rushed from their dugouts into the corridors beneath Three Rivers Stadium after a sixth-inning incident involving starting pitcher Pascual Perez ignited the angry exchange.

Perez was warned by home plate umpire Dutch Rennett after he hit Bill Russell and Baker with pitches. Perez then exchanged comments with the Dodger bench as he left the mound at the end of the inning.

After he reached the Pittsburgh dugout, Perez led the Pirates into a hallway connecting the two dugouts.

Mets 2, Astros 1
Mookie Wilson led off the eighth inning with a home run to lift New York over Houston. It was Wilson's second home run of the year and gave reliever Mike Marshall his first victory since returning to baseball.

Giants 4, Cardinals 2
Tom Griffin worked out of jams in the third and sixth innings, hurling San Francisco over St. Louis with the aid of Al Holland's relief pitching. The victory squared Griffin's record at 6-6.

Cubs 4, Padres 3
Leon Durham and Bill Buckner each drove in two runs to spark Chicago to its third straight victory. Ken Kravec, 1-3, posted his first National League victory. He didn't allow a hit until the sixth inning.

In 1952, Dick "Night Train" Lane of the Los Angeles Rams intercepted 14 major-league history by pitching a no-hitter on opening day.

ECU Ticket Sales Up; Bushbeck In For More Tests

Ticket sales at East Carolina University have rebounded during the past few weeks, and are now ahead of the same pace set last year, as of August 20.

"We've had a brisk increase in ticket sales during the last week," said ticket manager Brenda Edwards. "It is great to note that through August 20, ticket sales were actually ahead of last year at this time."

"The next two weeks should be busy with last minute buyers based on previous years. Good tickets remain and we hope to finish strong with our season ticket sales and finish well ahead of last year."

The Economy Plan, introduced just this year, has produced very positive results. One may buy season tickets for half-price in a special section of Ficklen Stadium when purchased in groups of five season sets. Sales have been very strong in this area over the last three weeks.

ing ticket outlets with Wachovia Bank has proven successful. Several season and individual game tickets have been purchased in areas throughout eastern North Carolina. There are 44 outlets in 27 cities of Wachovia Bank involved in Pirate ticket sales this year.

The ticket office will be open longer on Thursday and Friday. The Minges office is open from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. daily, with the sales continuing until 6 p.m. on Thursday and Friday. On game day, the office will open at 8 a.m. and remain until kickoff.

Kicker Chuck Bushbeck will undergo further testing for Hodgkin's Disease in Greenville, rather than returning home to Philadelphia, Pa. Bushbeck learned last Friday that he suffers from the disease, a lymphatic cancer. Further test will determine whether he will be able to kick for the Pirates in 1981, something that he wants very badly to do.

Bushbeck transferred to East Carolina following Villanova's ending of its football program. He knocked through 12 of 17 field goals from outside the 40 at Villanova.

While Bushbeck has attended practices since a Thursday morning operation, his activities have been limited to giving pointers to his kicking mates.

With Bushbeck on the sidelines, Ted King of Greenville has taken over the number one spot on the depth chart for placements. Kurt Larkins, a Kingston freshman, and David Pere, a Fayetteville sophomore, are also in on the battle.

Meanwhile, Jeff Bolch, a Hickory sophomore, Tommy Barnhardt, a freshman from China Grove, and Greg Cooper, a Jacksonville freshman, are battling it out for the punting job.

While much has been said about the Villanova transfers, a group of defensive players from Chowan has been steadily gaining in the ranks.

Coach Ed Emory is very high on the play of defensive end Jody Schulz. The 64, 232-pounder has been the outstanding defensive player so far in practice.

Four other former teammates of Schulz also are getting in a lot of time. They include linebackers Amos Twitty and Mike Grant, and defensive backs Will Barrett and Kenny Phillips. The latter is coming off knee surgery in the spring.

While Bushbeck and quarterback Kevin Ingram have gotten the most attention of the Villanova connection, a third, running back Milt Corsey is also looking good in scrimmages and has impressed Emory.

"Corsey will be a great plus to us in the backfield. He's smart and tough," Emory said.

Illness has prevented one other member of the Villanova four from competing this fall. Linebacker Jerry Rogers came down with the mononucleosis during the summer and will not enter ECU until January.

Also, Aaron Carter had surgery for a hernia, and is also expected to rejoin the team in January. Both plan to continue play next year.

NCSU Tennis Coach Resigns

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina State University tennis coach J.W. Isenhour says he resigned over a "difference in philosophy" with the school's athletic hierarchy.

Isenhour, who transformed N.C. State's tennis team from last place to Atlantic Coast Conference champions in the late 70s, said he will remain at the school as a professor of physical education.

He said he turned in his resignation last week, ending 14 years as a net coach.

"Our philosophies about how and where the program should go were different," Isenhour said. "I don't think my ideas as coach were thought of as being the right way."

But Isenhour stressed that "no animosities" were involved in his resignation.

"I've thought about it for a long time and I felt it would be best to get out of the situation," said Isenhour.

DHC To Hold Open House

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley's Viking Club will sponsor an open house in the school's fieldhouse Thursday night beginning at 8 o'clock.

Free refreshments will be served and memberships to the Viking Club will be available.

D.H. Conley opens its 1981 football season Friday night at Washington.

Green Benched...

12-2 defeat at the hands of the Braves Tuesday night on a television in the Phillies clubhouse lounge.

The manager admitted he should be fined or suspended for the language he used during the dispute, and for the bumping that ensued between him and the umpire.

"I'll stand for a few days," Green said. "But I'm not going to sit back and let somebody run my ball club for a long period of time. If it's more than a couple of days, we're going to have some long talks (with Feeney).

"If I'm fined, I wonder what the umpires get," he said, referring to a post-game altercation involving umpires Nick Colosi, Frank Pulli and a Philadelphia television commentator.

According to the reporter, Mike Forrest of KYW-TV, harsh language was used, and about $18,000 in damage was done to a camera one of the umpires knocked to the ground.

The station has asked Feeney for an apology.

Green said in view of the fact that Monday's tantrum marked his first trip out of the dugout to argue with an umpire this season, he does not expect a heavy fine or lengthy suspension.

Bragg, Weaver Get The Boot

By The Associated Press

Between them, Mike Bragg and Herman Weaver punted the football 1,671 times over a combined 24 years of National Football League games. The balls traveled 66,785 yards — almost 38 miles — and now, neither has a team that wants him.

Bragg, a 13-year veteran from Richmond, and Weaver, an 11-year pro from Tennessee, were waived Tuesday by the Baltimore Colts and Seattle Seahawks, respectively, as all NFL teams reached the 50-man roster limit, five more than the regular-season minimum.

Bragg and Weaver weren't the only "name" players to be released Tuesday, but they certainly were the most famous of the men who aim for the coffin corner.

Bragg, who never missed a game in playing in 188 contests, 172 with the Washington Redskins, led the American Football Conference in punts inside the 20-yard line with 22.

Washington's fifth-round draft choice in 1967, Bragg averaged 39.1 yards in 1980 and his job might now go to Brian Sullivan, a free agent recently released by Kansas City.

Weaver lost his job to Jeff West, a six-year veteran who sat out the entire 1980 season after being released by San Diego after four seasons there.

Weaver and West were the only punters in the Seahawks' camp and Weaver said that made the competition harder.

"The way they did it made it tough on people," said Weaver referring to the two-kicker camp. "One bad kick could have meant your career, but I guess that's the way they had to do it."

"I averaged 43.9 yards in preseason, and that's not bad," said Weaver. "I'm still hoping for a good year. Something good might happen from this. I'd really like to play for a contender."

In other roster movements Tuesday, the Cleveland Browns cut 10 players, including linebacker Charlie Hall, who had a string of 131 consecutive games played.

The San Diego Chargers traded tight end Gregg McCrary, a six-year veteran, back to Washington for an undisclosed draft choice. The 6-foot-2, 235-pounder was drafted by the Atlanta Falcons in 1975, sat out the 1976 season with an injury and was traded to the Redskins. They released him after six games and he hooked on with the Chargers.

While Washington picked up McCrary, it released running back Rickey Claitt, tight end Phil DuBois and linebacker Dave Graf and put guards Ron Saul and Fred Dean and linebackers Farley Bell and Quentin Lowry on injured reserve.

Lamp Hurls One-Hitter For Chicago

By The Associated Press
It seemed like outfielder Rusty Kuntz was more crushed when teammate Dennis Lamp lost his bid at a no-hitter than the White Sox pitcher was.
Lamp pitched the second one-hitter of his career in beating Milwaukee 5-1 Tuesday night. The only hit was a leadoff bloop double in the ninth by Robin Yount, a shot that fell just out of left fielder Kuntz's reach. Cecil Cooper, who walked on four pitches in the first, was the only other Milwaukee runner.

"I feel as bad as anyone," said Kuntz after his diving try for Yount's hit fell about a foot short. "It was a little cheap thing that I couldn't come up with. I thought I had a good jump, but when Yount hit it, I thought he didn't hit it worth a noodle and that I'd have to dive because Dennis jammed him so bad."

"It's not that I felt that I should have caught it, but I feel bad about not getting it. When I didn't, the first thing I thought was, 'where's the floor?' I wanted to crawl under something. But Dennis told me it was a great try and that he appreciated the effort."

Lamp's effort came in only his second start of the season. The other was against Toronto in a 6-2 Chicago victory June 8.

"I didn't have time to think about the no-hitter," said Lamp, who one-hit the San Diego Padres on June 9, 1976 when he was a Chicago Cub. "I was thinking about the Brewers because they have a lot of good hitters. I had some bad days against them in spring training."

"I couldn't think about getting tired. I just went after them. I went out there with the idea of going right at them and challenging them. I told myself I had to get stronger as the game went on."

Angels 6, Sox 5, 10 innings
After Jim Rice homered for a 5-4 Boston lead in the top of the 10th inning, Bobby Grich's two-run single with one out in the bottom of the inning won it for the Angels.

Boston led 6-0 after a half-inning but California chipped away and tied it in the ninth on John Harris' two-out pinch-single.

Indians 2, A's 0
Len Barker was almost as overwhelming as Lamp, throwing a three-hitter and fanning eight to increase his league-leading strikeout total to 92.

The Cleveland victory came on the heels of a 16-4 loss to the A's in which Oakland had a season-high 20 hits.

"We had to pay them back," said Barker. "We were just plain embarrassed by the A's Monday night. I told the guys that we couldn't leave here without playing them tough. Sure I pitched a good game, but you gotta give the rest of the team credit."

Twins 3, Yankees 0
Darrell Jackson and Jerry Koonsman combined to pitch out of trouble five times as the Yankees stranded 10 runners. Jackson, 2-2, allowed five hits and five walks in 51-3 innings. Koonsman gave up two hits in 32-3 innings of relief.

"I'm glad I won, but I'm not happy with the way I pitched," said Jackson. "I was just too wild. But I did get the ground ball when I needed it and I got through some tough innings."

Rangers 6, Blue Jays 1
Ferguson Jenkins fired a four-hitter. Buddy Bell homered and Mario Mendoza had a two-run double to spark a four-run sixth inning for the Rangers. Jenkins was bothered by a fan behind home plate who used a hot-dog wrapper to flash the sun's reflection in the pitcher's eyes.

Tigers 4, Royals 3
10 innings
Lance Parrish's 10th-inning single won the game for Detroit.

"I'm doing everything I can," said the slump-ridden Parrish, who entered the game batting .227 and was 0 for 4 before his hit. "I've taken extra hitting and all of that. It's just a matter of time. Hopefully, this will be the start of something for me."

Orioles 6, Mariners 5
12 innings

Jose Morales' pinch-hit, three-run homer was decisive for Baltimore. Seattle rallied with two out in the 12th on an RBI single by Richie Zisk and a run-scoring double by Casey Parsons. But Lenny Randle flied out to deep center field with the bases loaded as Al Bumby made a sensational running catch to end the game.

Crum Excited About Heels...

Elkins said he would be dropping back into the pocket more. Last season he threw little and when he did it was mostly on the run.

Burrus and Elkins smile when they think about the left side of the line. Although a new face is there, it is on top of a mighty big frame. Left tackle Brian Blados is 6-foot-6 and weighs 300 pounds. How does it feel to be behind him?

"Good," said Burrus, "but anyplace on the field you're behind him. He's big and he's fast as lightning."

The only real concern Elkins has with the offense is at center. Gone is All-America Rick Donnalley. Replacing him is freshman Brian Johnston. Elkins says he's concerned about the center-quarterback exchange. He and Donnalley did not account for one fumble last season.

The defense does have a lot of new faces. They are talented but inexperienced, Crum said.

But Nicholson is one of those with experience. He was ACC rookie of the year and All-ACC last season. This season he has dropped 20 pounds to pick up speed. He also is one of the leaders on defense, picking up where Taylor left off. But he doesn't feel any pressure.

"Pressure is something you put on yourself," he said. "I just expect to go out and give 100 percent or more and come out with a big win."

As far as following in Taylor's footsteps, "I don't feel I have to be ACC Player of the Year."

Even though much of last year's highly touted defense is gone, Nicholson said "we've got guys that are just as good."

"They may not have as much experience and they may have a different look. But we can be as good as last year. But we'll take it one day at a time."

"If they think by being a big player in baseball they can get away without doing little things, we have other people to take their place," Michael said. "They all got here by doing the little things. We don't bunt well and we don't hit-and-run well. We haven't done those things well all season."

"I keep waiting for the big hit and I let guys swing 2-0. I keep waiting for people to do something with the bat, but they're not doing the things which earn them their salary. Let's move some runners and hit the ball the other way once in a while."

"Most of them are trying hard but they haven't had any luck swinging the bats. I can buy that for one night, but not over a whole season. All season we've been in the middle or just below in team batting. I'd like to think it's execution, but I wonder about their attitude as we go along."

"A lot of guys really want to play but somehow this season they haven't had the opportunity to play enough. We'll find out what they can do."

"It might be a subconscious thing because we won the first-half pennant and we're in the playoffs, but it shouldn't last for a long period. If it's a subconscious thing, we'll get some other guys who don't have a subconscious feeling. The thing I worry about is that we don't score a lot of runs. We didn't score much in the first half until the last 20 games and we're scoring even less now. I can't make excuses all the time."

"They can get mad at me if they want, but I've got this (he waved the statistics sheet) and that's what bothers me. If I don't do this there'll be somebody else here, so we'll go down my way."

Hopewell Wins Tournament

Putt-Putt Church League got under way last night with defending champion Hopewell Pentecostal jumping out to the early lead.

Hopewell beat closest rival Salem Methodist by a big 16 strokes. Faith Pentecostal and Bell Arthur Christian were a distant third and fourth.

Medalist honors went to Hopewell's George Mayo with a four-under par 68. Salem's Jeff Taft shot a 69, while Lanny Morris had a 74 for Bell Arthur and Lynn Jackson topped Faith with a 78.

Documentary Proves Confusing

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) - CBS Reports cogently examined the defense of the United States in five hours but seems to have bitten off too much in a one-hour investigation tonight on the Texas Legislature.

That does not mean that the subject is too big, as some perceive everything about Texas. Rather, the handling of the documentary is so choppy and confusing that it obscures the wonderful glimpses of power-brokering and wheeling-dealing in what CBS calls the "Best Little Statehouse in Texas."

The title is a play on Broadway's "Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," which was co-authored by Larry L. King, the Texas journalist who was sent home by CBS to report on "the corridors of power in Texas."

"Let's go behind the scenes," King says, "for a rare look at the back rooms where politicians in Texas cut deals and take names."

King's down-home interviewing is more comedy than serious journalism - as in this questioning of Nub Donaldson, whose bill just passed.

"Well, Nub, you've got it and gone with it. How do you feel about it now?"

"Relieved."
"Did you all cut a fat hog durin' lunch hour celebratin'?"

"No."
"Count your money or what?"

"Just kind of let our hair down and relaxed for a few minutes. Get back and get to work on something else."

King and producer Philip Burton Jr. spent six weeks filming 50 hours of material. When it was boiled down to one hour, the legislative process had lost its time frame.

Normally, CBS Reports does a fine job of making complicated stories intelligible. But "Best Little Statehouse" is an inside look that lost its way when it became too much of an insider's look.

Politicians are introduced in machine-gun style and it's difficult to keep everyone straight. There's little identifying graphic or illustrative help, as the program traces three bills - one would have been enough - through the Legislature.

But the biggest flaw is that we never know the politicians as people, nor do we understand the impact their wheeling-dealing has on the people who elected them.

King glosses over the fact that legislators are paid $600 a month and meet only once every two years for 140 days. Since this is a part-time job, more was needed on their lives, particularly since King gives such strong play to the money-toting lobbyists peddling influence.

In one scene, the lobbying Trial Lawyers Association offers a free lunch to the legislators who mingle "in a buddy-buddy atmosphere."

One lawyer explains what's expected for the hospitality: "Hopefully, we get an opportunity to at least express to 'em our views. Hopefully, they get a good meal, and full stomachs make for better legislation."
But their impact on legislation and its consequent effect on the public is never fully explored.

The back-room shuffling with Speaker of the House Billy Wayne Clayton and his supporter, Craig Washington, is the documentary's strength.

"If you've got 76 votes out of this 150 members, you can do anything you want to do ... and the object is to have 76 votes in your pocket at all times," said Clayton.

"I never lose my liberal idealism, and I never compromised on principles," said Washington. "But I have learned how to get along, and I've learned that's the only way you accomplish anything down here."

If CBS had just focused on Clayton and Washington and given the story to Morley Safer, it would have made a wonderful segment on '60 Minutes."

Movie Industry Seeing Another Banner Year

By JAY ARNOLD
Associated Press Writer
HOLLYWOOD (AP) - The movie industry, awash with box-office money from the most successful summer in its history, is banking on its fall-winter lineup to give it its second consecutive banner year.

Major filmmakers expect to see their Christmas stockings stuffed full of dividends from upcoming movies starring heavyweights such as Jane Fonda, Burt Reynolds, Jack Nicholson and Faye Dunaway.

"It looks like - if our fall product performs well - we're fast approaching the biggest year we've ever had," said Barry Reardon, vice president-general sales manager of Warner Bros.

Warner Bros.' "Superman II" has grabbed $96.95 million after nine weeks and four days' release.

Warner Bros., Reardon said, recently logged its most successful third quarter ever and is looking to surpass its returns of 1979, which was a banner year both for Warner and the film industry overall.

"It's the biggest third quarter we've ever had," said Reardon, noting that rentals - the money actually returned to a studio after exhibitors take out their share of the box office sales - had hit $180 million for the first 33 weeks of the year.

Total Warner Bros. rentals in 1979 were $255 million, Reardon said.

Topping "Superman" in the box office derby is Paramount's "Raiders of the Lost Ark," which in its first 10 weeks and 3 days of release had raided theatergoers' pockets for $110.73 million.

"It's really hanging in there," said Paramount spokeswoman Susan Pile, who noted that "Raiders," which is now playing in 1,200 to 1,300 theaters.

Total box office receipts for the first seven months of 1981 were $1.654 billion - a 6.3 percent increase over the $1.557 billion collected in the first seven months of 1980, according to the Motion Picture Association of America.

MPAA President Jack Valenti, while acknowledging that inflation had boosted the average ticket price 3.4 percent to $2.76 this year from $2.67 in 1980, said the main indicator of industry health - admissions - climbed 2.9 percent. Some 601 million tickets were sold in 1981's first seven months, compared with 584 million by the end of July last year.

Films contributing to the summer box office bonanza include "Tarzan the Ape Man," "Blowout," "Endless Love," "The Great Muppet Caper," "S.O.B.," "Cannonball Run," "The Fox and the Hound," "Wolfen" and a reissue of "The Empire Strikes Back."

Other big earners are "Eye of the Needle," "The Four Seasons," "Victory," "History of the World Part I," "Dragonslayer," "Clash of the Titans," "Under the Rainbow," "Force Five," "Zorro, the Gay Blade," "First Monday in October" and "Heavy Metal."

The studios hope to continue the upbeat trend through the end of the year with pictures that include two Burt Reynolds vehicles, "Sharkey's Machine" from Warners and "Paternity" from Paramount. Big hopes also are pinned on Kris Kristofferson and Jane Fonda in "Roll Over" at Christmas, along with Faye Dunaway, who will play screen legend Joan Crawford in "Mommy, Dearest."

Jack Nicholson teams with Warren Beatty and Diane Keaton in "Reds," and James Cagney comes out of retirement to co-star with Mary Steenburgen in "Ragtime."

CBS Reruns Win 14th Week In Row

NEW YORK (AP) - With the start of the 1981-82 television season just a month away, CBS was solidly in command in the networks' ratings competition.

CBS won the three-way race for the 14th consecutive week, with the six top-rated programs and seven of the first 10, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. showed. All were reruns.

"The Jeffersons" finished the week ending Aug. 23 as the No. 1 show for the period, with "Trapper John, M.D." second and a "Circus of the Stars" special in third.

The rating for "The Jeffersons" was 23.5. Nielsen says that means of the homes in the country with television, 23.5 percent saw at least part of the show.

CBS' average rating for the week was 15.4 to 13 for runnerup ABC and 12.8 for NBC. The networks say that means in an average prime-time minute, 15.4 percent of the nation's TV-equipped homes were tuned to CBS.

The highest-rated for the first-run programs broadcast during the week was an episode from a proposed NBC series called "Irene," No. 15.

Other original programs were only moderately successful - a pre-season professional football game on NBC between Pittsburgh and Dallas was No. 35, with an NBC "Comedy Theater" presentation called "Why Us?" 39th and "Walter Cronkite's Universe" on CBS 40th.

ABC had three of the week's five lowest-rated programs, including "Foul Play" in 62nd place, "Eight is Enough" 63rd and "Those Amazing Animals" 66th. "Lobo" on NBC was 64th, and an NBC movie, "Buck Rogers," 65th.

We will help make your house payments
It's true. When you buy your newly constructed home from us in BAYTREE, we will pay a portion of your monthly mortgage payment for the first year. It's very simple.
Here's why we're doing this. Many buyers seem to be hesitating, waiting for interest rates to come down. But since construction costs are rising so rapidly, tomorrow's mortgage payment is almost certain to buy less house than you can buy today.
For a limited time, when you come to us to buy your new home in BAYTREE, using conventional financing (which we can help you arrange), we'll pay a portion of your house payment from a special trust account for the first year.
If you are in the market for a home, you owe it to yourself to talk with us about our plan. Call us today for an appointment.
Let us help make your house payments.

She Rescues Abused Dogs From Junkies, Drunks

By DANIEL J. WAKIN
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — She cajoles, bribes and even steals when necessary to separate suffering dogs from the junkies, alcoholics and former mental patients who are their masters.

Every night, Chitra Besbroda enters New York's twilight world of tenements and SRO's, single-room occupancy hotels, offering whatever cash she has to nodding addicts and others to buy their abused pets.

"The pain of not doing what I know I have to do causes me more grief than the risk I take. I know it's risky, but it's a job to be done," she said.

"Mrs. B.," as the addicts call her, says she has cared for 90 to 100 dogs in eight years. She is a small, assertive woman with black hair, a middle-aged divorcee who lives on Manhattan's Upper West Side and works in de-toxification centers.

She will do almost anything for an animal. When an addict demanded $100 and a color television in exchange for his starving chihuahua, she bargained him down to just the TV, ran home and brought back her own black-and-white set.

Mrs. Besbroda, a social worker trained in psychotherapy, came to this country from her native Sri Lanka in 1971. Her training in New York street life began in 1973, when she started work at a detox center in Harlem and witnessed the "unbearable grief" of some of the addicts' animals.

At lunch hours she would walk around and talk to pet owners in the area, asking about the animals, making suggestions about medical care and nutrition. And then came Teddy.

Mrs. Besbroda had occasionally heard the howls of a dog coming from a garage across the street from her clinic. When she investigated, she found an animal "starving, whipped, beaten and locked in an abandoned building all winter."

The drunken owner, who locked the dog up on weekends, threatened her life and chased her away. Mrs. Besbroda taught Teddy to eat dry dogfood through the keyhole and placated his owner by bringing him cakes, wine and beer.

Eventually, he allowed her to take Teddy home for a weekend. She didn't take him back.

Since then, Mrs. Besbroda says she has come across unimaginable cruelties, such as dogs fed hot sauce or gunpowder because their owners think cruelty is good training for guard dogs. Other starve their animals or beat them, even prick their genitals with pins.

"They're not sensitive to the pain of animals, maybe because they suffer so much themselves," she said.

Most dogs stay with their masters, she said. "All these dogs love them, that's the problem," she explained. But when they can escape to the safety of her home, "they completely forget their masters."

Sometimes Mrs. Besbroda fails. Once she called the ASPCA about one puppy in an SRO that "was like the living dead" after a diet of hot sauce and bread. The ASPCA, unable to find proof of mistreatment, trimmed and washed the puppy's coat and returned it to its master.

Soon after, the owner's brother-in-law returned from Bellevue Hospital's mental ward for a weekend and strangled the puppy with a telephone cord.

But more often, she succeeds in saving a suffering animal, sometimes by paying for medical care herself when an owner refuses or the ASPCA cannot provide a free operation.

She keeps three or four dogs at a time in her small co-op, with the overflow going to her mother's nearby apartment. Since 1979, 21 of Mrs. Besbroda's dogs have been adopted. She carefully screens prospective owners, who must sign a contract stipulating they will provide good care for the dog, return it to her if no longer wanted and allow her to visit periodically to inspect the animal's condition.

Mrs. Besbroda says she is thinking of giving up her crusade; she works full-time and cares for an 11-year-old daughter. But she has a goal left: to rescue one last SRO dog, perhaps her toughest case.

His name is Cocaine. He lives in a tiny room with about two square feet to stand in. In the winter, he is tied to a steaming radiator by a chain so short he cannot sit down. His paws are full of splinters from trying to scratch through the door.

When free, he can drink from a toilet bowl. His master never feeds him. Food comes from Mrs. Besbroda and a neighbor.

His owner, F., has had five dogs in four years, the neighbor says. Three were hit by cars and killed.

Mrs. Besbroda has tried everything to get the animal from F. — persuasion, bribery, appeals to the ASPCA and the SRO's landlord. F. resents her efforts.

"Every day there's a subtle threat about killing me," Mrs. Besbroda said.

But she is determined to save Cocaine. "When I go to sleep, I see his face peering through a hole in the door. I feel very bad that I can't give him a drink of water. It's getting too much of an emotional strain. When I get him, I think my work is done."

IT'S A DOG'S LIFE — Chita Besbroda stands outside her upper Manhattan West Side apartment with three of the dogs she has rescued from junkies and alcoholics. (AP Laserphoto)

Speaking of Your Health...

Preventive Medicine Will Increase Life Span

If science continues to progress with the same degree of brilliance, is it true that people may live to the age of 150? I am interested in science and I am interested in this question. — Mr. G.H., Pa.

Dear Mr. H.: With today's concentration on preventive medicine, it is speculated that life expectancy before the turn of the 21st century should be between 90 and 100 years.

This of course, depends on the elimination of congenital birth defects, the earlier recognition and treatment of cancer, the prevention of cancer with vaccines, the reduction of cardiovascular disease, the prevention of venereal diseases, and complete utilization of vaccines for contagious diseases.

This goal should not be difficult to attain. For the present-day statistics state that a female child born today has a life expectancy of more than 75 years. A male child born today has a life expectancy of more than 71 years. The remarkable increase in today's life expectancy as compared to that of the turn of this century is a testimonial to the creative advances in medicine, surgery, and all other scientific endeavor.

The explosive amount of information that has accrued concerning immunology and genetic engineering portends additional years of longevity.

Electronic devices, microscopic surgical techniques, improved safety of anesthesia, CAT scans, sonograms, chemotherapy and radiotherapy indicate that many years can be added to the life span.

Many techniques once thought to be in the realm of fantasy are now practical realities.

Extending human life has a dual objective. The first is to extend life. The second is to be sure that the quality of life will make those additional years a gift rather than a burden.

Social planning must provide adequate nutrition, good housing, excellent education, and the right of every person in every age group to receive proper medical attention.

Living longer means working longer, for premature dislocation from jobs by means of forced early retirement makes the additional years of longevity a painful problem.

Added years of health, productivity and enjoyment seem to be an attainable utopian philosophy. Actually, it can become a reality if the medical forces, the social sciences and the government agencies combine their talents to attain this goal.

Pakistan A Heroin Base

By BARRY SHLACHTER
Associated Press Writer
BUNER, Pakistan (AP) — Stashed in airliner rest rooms, sewn inside baseballs or taped to the bodies of individual smugglers, Pakistani heroin is reaching U.S. and West European cities in ever increasing quantities and causing international concern, U.S. and Pakistani officials say.

Opium cultivation has dropped sharply in this valley and other major poppy growing areas of Pakistan. But what remains to be harvested is apparently more than ample for a string of underground laboratories which began producing the country's first heroin in the past year.

"Since this spring, Pakistani heroin has been well ahead of Southeast Asian heroin in the American market although many people think it's Iranian," said a U.S. Embassy official in Islamabad, Pakistan's capital, 115 miles northwest of here.

"It's some of the purest heroin so far seized in the United States."

Iftikhar Ahmed Khan, Director of Pakistan's Narcotics Control Board, said the locally refined drug is indistinguishable from that produced in Iran. He speculated that Iranian technology was the reason.

At least five Iranian chemists were known to be in the semi-autonomous tribal territory of North West Frontier where the infant heroin industry is located and where law enforcement officers have no jurisdiction, Khan said.

President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq's military regime credits its 1979 Islamic law prohibiting substances which "place a veil over the mind" for the decline in opium cultivation. Mandatory punishment for growers is two years' imprisonment and 30 lashes at a public whipping post.

Large bonuses were paid to customs agents who recently cracked a drug-smuggling ring and a million dollars has been earmarked for speedboats and other equipment for narcotics agents in Karachi, Pakistan's main port.

But U.S. Embassy officials and even some Pakistani drug control officers complain that regime and provincial authorities are not doing all they can to close down the proliferating heroin laboratories.

A ranking Pakistani drug official, who requested anonymity, claimed authorities are reluctant to move against heroin producers because they are in areas near the sensitive border with Afghanistan where Soviet troops are stationed.

"We know where the labs are — Landi Kotal, Bara and other tribal towns," he said. "But the government is being very careful. We just cannot afford to be harsh because of the serious geopolitical situation."

Heroin is much easier to transport — and conceal — than raw opium extracted from poppies and it pays to make the conversion.

Ten kilograms (22 pounds) of raw opium in the currently depressed market here costs about $300 and yields one kilogram (2.2 pounds) of heroin. This amount of heroin sells for about $10,000 in Pakistan, at least $45,000 in Western Europe and $175,000 on the U.S. East Coast, a U.S. Embassy official said. Once in the hands of U.S. dealers, the heroin is cut and sold in packets. The income to such dealers runs into the millions of dollars from a single kilo.

There is a glut of opium in Pakistan due to low prices arising from disturbed conditions in the traditional "golden crescent" markets in Iran and Afghanistan.

Guerrilla warfare has made shipping raw opium through Afghan mountain passes too risky and the death penalty imposed by the Iranian revolutionary regime on drug dealers has dampened their enthusiasm for the trade.

Filling the gap, Pakistani narcotic entrepreneurs secured the refining know-how and either used Persian Gulf sea routes or the numerous direct air links with the West to smuggle out the heroin, the sources said.

"A number of Iranians operating independently have been picked up in the past year through sheer inexperience" in the United States, said one American official. "But the Pakistanis have been smarter by using networks which they had established earlier for hashish."

Pakistan lacks the domestic consumption on the scale of Iran in the past. But as heroin refining expands here, drug-enforcement officials fear that demand for opium will pick up.

Syed Rahimzada, who has grown poppies for decades in Buner, part of the North West Frontier's opium belt, said he switched to corn this year but not because of government pressure or Islamic laws.

"The opium price is just too low right now," he said in an interview.

Fiber Analysis Gains Attention In Murder Cases

By NANCY KENNEY
Associated Press Writer
ATLANTA (AP) — The slender threads that tied Theodore Bundy to the sex slaying of a 12-year-old girl and may link Wayne Williams to the killing of a young black man are almost too tiny to be seen by a juror's naked eye.

But to microanalysts such as Larry Peterson and Lynn Henson, fibers are momentous finds — clues that may betray a criminal when all else fails.

Their craft is not new. Fibers removed from car fenders and corpses' scalps have been used for years to help identify culprits in hit-and-run, robbery and murder cases.

But recent sensational cases have brought new fame to fiber analysis and raised new questions about its validity. Can jurors evaluate similarities they cannot see? How conclusive can fiber matchups be?

Peterson, a Georgia Crime Lab technician, has analyzed fibers in the murders of 28 young blacks in Atlanta. As the death toll rose, he carefully mounted fibers from victims' hair and clothing on slides and peered at them through a microscope.

Ms. Henson, a Florida Department of Law Enforcement microanalyst, assembled the fibers which helped convict Bundy of murder in the 1978 slaying of Kimberly Leach near Lake City, Fla.

Both scientists say their craft is often misunderstood and assumed to be a new, unproven discipline.

"Fibers have been used in court for ages," Ms. Henson said in an interview. "Most people don't understand that, and some investigators only go after things like fingerprints."

"When you don't have fingerprints, you've got to fall back on something. That's where we come in."

Described in detail in Sherlock Holmes novels of the late 1800s, the analysis of fibers at crime scenes dates to the middle of the 19th century. But the discipline had no real recognition until the 1950s, when manmade threads were produced in mass quantities.

Unlike cotton or woolen strands, each of the thousands of synthetic fibers has characteristics which can be measured precisely.

Scientists can look at a synthetic fiber with six kinds of microscopes. They can bombard it with neutrons and X-rays. They can tell whether it's permanent press and how its molecules are shaped.

They can measure its density, weight, melting point and solubility and tell exactly where it was made.

Ultimately, however, the microanalyst can testify only that a fiber could, might, may have come from a particular piece of material.

Williams is charged with murder in the strangulation of Nathaniel Cater, 27, and the asphyxiation of Jimmy Ray Payne, 21, two of the 28 dead youths.

In a June 23 preliminary hearing, which dealt only with evidence in the Cater case, Peterson testified that a green fiber and a violet fiber found in Cater's hair showed "no significant microscopic differences" when compared with fibers in Williams' green carpet and violet-and-green bedspread.

"Three or four" dog hairs found on Cater's head were similar to hairs taken from Williams' German shepherd, and "two or three" other fibers in the victim's hair corresponded to carpet sweepings from the Williams family car, Peterson also testified.

But Peterson had to admit his science was inexact. When pressed by the defense, he acknowledged he couldn't say the fibers in Cater's hair were "identical" to those from Williams' bedroom and dog.

"Identical is not a word I use," Peterson said in court. Other sources could have produced the purple fiber, the green fiber and the three dog hairs.

Jurors in a criminal case nonetheless "can more or less form an opinion based on common sense," Ms. Henson said. In the Leach case, Ms. Henson produced 98 fiber matchups which she said formed a "probable link" between Bundy and the murdered girl.

When the child's body was found in a hogpen, Ms. Henson spent seven hours gathering fibers. Supplied with other fibers obtained through investigation, she catalogued the matchups.

Fibers resembling threads from Bundy's clothing were found in the hogpen. So were fibers from a carpet in a van he drove. Fibers similar to those in Miss Leach's clothing and Bundy's clothing were found in the van. "The transfers went in four directions," Ms. Henson said, adding that her findings were backed up by eyewitnesses, a shoe track, blood specimens, semen samples and receipts indicating Bundy had driven the van.

It's not known whether prosecutors in the Atlanta case have a great deal of physical evidence to back up the fiber findings in the Payne and Cater cases, as they did in the Leach-Bundy case.

Ms. Henson believes fiber evidence is superior to eyewitness testimony.

"Two people will see the same person on a street and give two widely different descriptions, but fiber analysts will always agree on whether a fiber does or does not match," she said. "They may argue about how significant it is, but the physical evidence isn't going to change."

One thing jurors must weigh is whether a fiber could have come from another source in the area where the crime was committed. "If the fiber is something you see all over the Northeast, but rarely in Florida, that would mean something to the jury," she said.

The green carpet which figures in the Williams case was made at a tiny textile plant in South Carolina, which decreases chances the fiber could have been found "on just about any person," said one investigator.

Officials hope similarities between the Cater and Payne cases will help. Both men were asphyxiated. Both were found in the Chattahoochee River. Both were at least partially unclothed, and fiber evidence in the cases is "similar," investigators say. Jurors may see representations of the fibers. Georgia Crime Lab Director Larry Howard says electron

micrographs — enlarged pictures of the fibers as they appear under a microscope

Real Estate 'Game Show'

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — The real estate market here has taken on a bit of a game-show look.

A sign outside Mark and Rachel Middleton's house offers a free Hawaiian vacation for anyone buying their home.

The sign, sporting color pictures of pineapples, waterfalls and entertainer Don Ho, has lured a couple of prospective buyers, but no takers as yet.

"We wanted to do something that would attract attention, and it really has brought more showings," said Mrs. Middleton. "We've had eight or nine more people go through since we started advertising the fee trip."

The asking price of $65,900 includes the trip with stops on Maui Island and Waikiki Beach, a free lei at the airport, a tote bag, continental breakfasts and a tour of Honolulu.

"We'll probably lose money on the deal if we give the trip and sell below the full price, but the problem is we want to move," said Mrs. Middleton, whose family is bound for South Bend, Ind.

Compliance Seen No Bar To Injuries

BINGHAMTON, N.Y. (AP) — Victims of crimes are pawns between the criminal and the criminal justice system, says a political scientist at the State University of New York at Binghamton, and those who advise strict compliance with a robber's demands could be giving "bad advice."

Eduard Ziegenhagen, associate professor of political science and senior fellow at the Center for Social Analysis, says data from a National Crime Panel study of 13 American cities indicates that compliant crime victims are just as likely to sustain serious injury as victims who resist.

"Present policy virtually assures the success of the robbery," he says. "There is a serious question of whether people should follow police advice when there is every reason to believe it is bad advice."

In his study of how robbery victims respond, Ziegenhagen notes that police policy is based on law enforcement agency reports which reflect successful crimes.

"The incidents most likely to be reported are the successful robberies," he says. "If a robbery attempt is thwarted, by whatever means used by the intended victim, it is unlikely to show up in police reports." He says police recommendations not to resist robbery are based on a very small and self-selected sample of cases.

"Cases where victims do not resist make for very clear-cut investigations — one perpetrator, one victim," Ziegenhagen says. "It's less ambiguous and can be dealt with more routinely. In the law enforcement view, the victims have no official standing; they are seen only as reporters of crime and as sources of witness information."

However, Ziegenhagen concludes, considering all the variables in a robbery attempt, there is still no guarantee the intended victim will escape injury. "I want to make it clear I am not endorsing violence by the victim against the criminal," he says. "But there is really no reason for the victim to be totally passive — a role that seems to be preferred by robbers and the criminal justice system alike."

Warranty Is Good For 100 Years

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. (UPI) — For generations, women handed cookware down to their daughters and granddaughters — usually cast iron or tinned copper.

Now a Terre Haute manufacturer is offering a 100-year limited warranty on its line of professional-style, anodized aluminum cookware.

Frank Tullos, marketing vice president of General Housewares' Cookware Group, says the warranty is being offered for the utensils in normal household use because the company is convinced they will last that long.

Cookware found defective in material or workmanship during the warranty period will either be repaired or replaced free if it is returned postpaid to the manufacturer.

The warranty does not cover products damaged by misuse or by commercial use or by failure to follow the manufacturer's use and care instructions.

WRITING PROJECT
WILSON — A Grifton school teacher was among 20 public school classroom teachers from the eastern part of the state participating in a weeklong writing project held on the campus of Atlantic Christian College recently.

Nanelle Congleton of Ayden, who is serving as an Atlantic Christian College Writing Fellow, attended the project, which dealt with the techniques of teaching writing in the classroom in grades K-12.

Simplicity Keynote Of Azores Life

By PRUDENCE HELLER
Associated Press Writer
ANGRA DO HEROISMO, Azores (AP) — "Behind him lay the gray Azores," said the American poet Joaquin
Columbus setting out to find the New World.

Today's traveler, waking up in his hotel in Angra do Heroismo on Terceira on a sunny day, might be pardonable if he wonders how anyone could call the Azores
"gray."

For as you listen to the medley of birds calling, singing and squawking, you look out on a medley of flowers — lilies, snapdragons, daisies, salvia.

But wait.
The Azores (there are nine of them, and they're part of Portugal) are out in mid-Atlantic, about a third of the way from Lisbon to New York, with the Gulf Stream to keep them warm. You can get real Atlantic weather in the Azores — rain, fog, wind.

Some of the islands have airports. But some of them you can reach only by boat.
Board the inter-island boat on Terceira, say, and move onward, roughly west-northwest, to Graciosa, Sao Jorge, Pico, Faial, Corvo and Flores. Then come back the way you came, but continuing on southeastward from Terceira to San Miguel and Santa Maria.

Some of the harbors are so small and rock-strewn that the little ship, the "Ponta Delgada," cannot dock, and anchors offshore, where the harbor pilot tells her to. He has come out in a launch and hoisted a white flag with a black "P" on it at the chosen spot. In larger ports — a strictly relative designation
— the pilot comes aboard to bring the boat in.

If you're off-season, you'll have the boat pretty much to yourself, save for a stray foreign tourist or two and a few Azoreans going about their business — and perhaps a goat tethered on the lower deck.

If you're especially lucky off-season, the captain may decide to take you up to the top of the extinct volcano on Corvo, smallest of the Azores, while his ship's in port. He just plans it as a pleasant surprise. At the top, you look down into a peaceful green valley, a serene lake, and a few cows. That's all.

But that's only one of many craters, or caldeiras, in the Azores. Some have whole towns in them, like the resort town of Furnas on San Miguel, biggest of the islands. Furnas has hot springs, an elegant hotel and semi-tropical gardens that seem to go on forever.

An Azorean told a visitor that Terceira is the keeper of the islands' historical heritage. San Miguel and its capital, Ponta Delgada, are the most developed region of the Azores and their business center. But the Azorean poets, writers and intellectuals tend to come from Pico and Faial.

Pico also boasts the highest mountain peak (7,750 feet) in continental and insular Portugal, and strong men who go out in row boats to hunt whales.

You can get all the tourist delights in the Azores, and feast on fish.

But perhaps the choicest things the Azores have to offer are beauty, simplicity and kindness.

The beauty is everywhere
— green hills and mountains, vineyards mulched with volcanic rock, seascapes galore, and flowers. Calla lilies growing wild.
Hydrangeas. Azaleas.

The sidewalks are not paved with gold. They're paved with black-and-white mosaic in an endless variety of patterns: circles, diamonds, lozenges, ears of corn, pineapples, crests.

The simplicity is in the rural way of life. Your country bus picks up a lone farmer with his hoe and his wicker-covered bottle of wine at sunset in the middle of nowhere. In the public market, a man is weighing potatoes on an old-fashioned balance scale.

The kindness, like the flowers, is everywhere. In pleasant surprises like the captain's expedition on Corvo. In the people who take off their watches and set them to the time your bus is leaving, so you'll be sure to understand, despite a language barrier.

Anything Is A Souvenir To Tourists

By TIMOTHY HARPER
Associated Press Writer
They can be tacky, tasteless trinkets or refined reminders of times gone by, but whatever the style, Americans and foreign visitors are spending record amounts this year on souvenirs.

Gold-plated cockroaches in Hawaii. Peanuts in Plains, Ga. Elvis belt buckles in Memphis. Bags of salt in — where else? — Salt Lake City.

Revere bows and models of Old Ironsides in Boston. Tri-cornered hats in colonial Williamsburg, Va. And parchment-like copies of the Declaration of Independence in Philadelphia.

And, of course, the ever-popular Statue of Liberty thermometer or the bronzed Empire State Building model in New York City.

U.S. gift shops sell about $2 billion worth of souvenirs each year, says Scott Borowsky, publisher of Souvenir and Novelty Magazine, and the business is growing.

Consider that 4,005 people work in Pennsylvania's 889 novelty, gift and souvenir shops. That souvenirs accounted for $386 million of the $3 billion tourists spent in Hawaii last year.

Or that Americans mail more than a billion postcards each year — and buy more for mementos of their travels, according to Harry Lambeth of the Post Card Manufacturers Association.

And how about these figures: Charles Promislo, a Philadelphia manufacturer, turns out 500,000 tiny metal replicas of the Liberty Bell each year.

Disneyland sells 560,000 pairs of Mickey Mouse ears annually.

"Our souvenirs tend to remind us of the pleasant things on vacation," said psychologist Joyce Brothers. "But we also use them to impress the people back home. They are a way of showing off."

In Alaska, "moose nuggets," delicately described as the result of the moose's digestive process, are a current rage.

"We have moose nugget tie tacks, moose nugget earrings, moose nugget swizzle sticks," said May Jefford, manager of an Anchorage trading post. "It's been sprayed, but it's not all that encased. We sell them by the gross. Can you believe it?"

And in California, where such things are taken seriously, the latest fad is the canned earthquake — a windup soup-can-sized temblor. The manufacturer says it's guaranteed to shake up the folks back home, and orders are rolling in like aftershocks — 10,000 a day.

Bangup souvenirs are available in South Carolina, the only Eastern Seaboard state allowing fireworks sales — $30 million a year, 80 percent to tourists who smuggle them home as contraband.

"If they're not legal in other states, I hate to say it, but that's their problem," said Richard Neley, director of the state Pyrotechnic Safety Board.

In the Ozark Mountains, it's wet stones for sharpening knives, handmade white oak baskets and local delicacies such as honey.

In Washington state, the serious traveler may return home with fresh salmon packed in dry ice, a basket of fancy apples — and "Mount St. Helens" T-shirts and jars of volcanic ash.

Such is the stuff of souvenirs. In Nashville, just about anything that says "Music City, USA," sells: savings banks, cedar chests and little picnic tables for the salt and pepper. One hit is a $5.25 slab of wood bearing the moon, a seagull, the ocean — Nashville is 350 miles from the sea — and the words "Music City."

"Hey, I don't ask them 'Why do you want to buy this?' I just tell them how much it is," said J. Henry Cooley, owner of the Country Corner USA shop.

All-Savers Certificate Rush Is On

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer
"High interest right now!
Tax-free interest starting Oct. 1."

"Earn 20 percent per annum through Sept. 30 and tax-free interest thereafter
...No gimmicks!"
"Act now and get a 1 percent cash bonus!"

The scramble for your money is under way, as financial institutions prepare for the introduction of the "All Savers Certificates" authorized by Congress as part of the tax-cut package.

The certificates — known as ASCs — will be available from Oct. 1, 1981 to Dec. 31, 1982. They will have one-year maturities. You will be able to get one for as little as $500.
The interest will be 70 percent of the going rate on one-year U.S. Treasury bills. Up to $1,000 in interest — $2,000 for married couples — will be exempt from federal income tax.

trying to get customers to deposit money now. They are advertising short-term, high-interest investments which will be converted, automatically, into All Savers Certificates on Oct. 1.

Brian Smith of the U.S.
League of Savings Associations said the early bird deals generally involve
"repos" or retail repurchase agreements. "It's not an insured savings account," Smith said. "It is a loan to the financial institution which is collateralized by ... some government security that the S&L owns anyway ..."

It's the reverse of what happens when you get a loan and put up a house or stocks as collateral. In a "repo" arrangement, the financial institution is the borrower and the customer is the lender.

Interest rates on the convertible "repo" investments vary; thrift institutions in New York City have been advertising annual rates up to 20 percent. There is no limit on the minimum deposit which can be required for a "repo" investment.

There are still several questions about the rules and regulations that will apply to the All Savers Certificates themselves. Some will be answered by the government's Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee, which is expected to issue its guidelines by the early part of next month.

One thing the committee has to decide is the size of the All Savers Certificates. They must, by law, be available in denominations as low as $500. But it is not clear whether larger deposits must be in increments of $500. Can you deposit $600 in an ASC or do you have to put up an exact multiple of $500 — such as $1,000, $1,500, etc.?

The actual amount of interest which the All Savers Certificates will pay is another unknown. Since the interest on ASCs is tied to the interest on one-year Treasury bills, it will fluctuate with the rate for the government securities. Once you buy a certificate, the interest rate will stay the same for the full year of your investment. But ASCs purchased at different times will carry different interest rates. The rate for the first ASCs will be set at the Sept. 3 auction of Treasury bills.

Based on current market conditions, Smith said, the interest rate on the first certificates will be "somewhere around 12 percent."

The ASCs are designed to encourage people to put money into savings which can be used to finance home building and mortgages.

Supporters say ASCs will let banks and thrift institutions compete for deposits without paying the high rates attached to money-market certificates or regular certificates of deposit.

While the financial institutions pay less interest, the public — because of the tax exemption — gets to keep more dollars. In the 30 percent tax bracket, for example, you need a taxable interest rate of about 17 percent to equal a tax-exempt yield of 12 percent.

The higher your income bracket, the bigger break you get. You also need a substantial sum to take full advantage of the tax saving.

North Carolina Experiencing Booming Tourism

By SUSAN USHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — As North Carolina's peak tourist season nears an end this week, all signs point toward a boom summer, spokesmen for resort areas indicate.

But tourism spokesmen say vacationers have had to resort to increased motorcycle travel and less expensive eating habits to keep much-wanted get-aways within their means.

Dick Trammell, director of the convention and visitors' bureau of the Asheville Chamber of Commerce said, "1981 could end up an all-time record year for the mountains. This year everyone seems to be having a much better year than last year."

Tish Brissette, his counterpart in Wilmington, also was enthusiastic. "It looks like it has been a very good summer," she said, noting that area beaches experienced capacity weekend crowds with increased business at area specialty shops.

"It's super," reported Carteret County Chamber of Commerce spokesman Priscilla Murrell. "Fifty percent more than last year."

The Blue Ridge Parkway's Chief Ranger Howard Parr reported 9,000 more visitors so far this year than in 1980, but decreases in attendance for the months of June and July.

Retired Navy Capt. Frank Conlon, director of the U.S.S. North Carolina Battleship Memorial, projected that the Eagle Island attraction will see only a 5 percent to 7 percent increase in attendance over 1980 — but it recorded significantly higher attendance for the months June and July.

Trammell said that 1980 was an outstanding year for the Asheville-Buncombe County area, with figures for some operators equaling or excelling those for 1978, another outstanding year.

Tourism and travel is the state's third-largest industry, outranked only by textiles and furniture. Last year it made progress despite weakened economic conditions and recording a 12 percent increase over 1979, said Charles Heatherly, director of the North Carolina Travel and Tourism Division. It contributed $2.4 billion to the state's economy.

Though specific figures won't be available until later,

Heatherly says talks with businessmen across the state promises even more in 1981. "They agree business is up considerably this year, about 10 to 20 percent," he said.

Heatherly said some overflow crowds at Carowinds near Charlotte, turnouts at Charlotte Motor Speedway, full beach accommodations all summer and tremendous response to an out-of-state advertising program confirmed those estimates.

Of the 305,000 inquiries received at his office through July, 24,629 came from Florida. Ohio ranked second with 20,342; Pennsylvania, 19,986; New York, 15,617; New Jersey, 13,377. North Carolinians made 13,519 requests. Other inquiries came from Virginia, 10,891; Illinois, 10,059; Maryland, 8,823; Michigan, 7,867.

Heatherly said one urban Ohio travel club polled its members and learned that Fontana Dam in western North Carolina was their most popular travel destination.

Checks with chamber of commerce offices show that the Southeast and the Ohio Valley supply most of North Carolina's vacationers. The beach areas reported increases also in the number of Tar Heels visiting their own shoreline.

Offer Payoffs For Attendance

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — For the Jefferson County public school system, higher attendance means more reimbursements from the state.

Now there's an incentive for the students too: a good attendance record means free hamburgers, french fries, soft drinks and a chance to win tickets to University of Louisville football games.

The program is now in its second year, said Jim Gatewood, assistant director for attendance and student relations. "The most important thing is to get students to attend every day," he said. "Then there's the financial rewards."

State government gives local school systems an average of $5.50 a day for each student who attends.

Ms. Murrell said the majority of visitors to Carteret County beaches appear to be from North Carolina, Virginia, Ohio and Pennsylvania, and overnight stops by vacationers en route from Florida to the North.

"We're accrediting it (the increase in business) to people traveling more within the 300-mile radius because of gas prices," she said.

Trammell said the western area is getting its "usual influx" of visitors from Florida. While the Southeast provides probably the majority of visitors, he said the area is attracting many people from the Ohio Valley.

"We have had visitors from about all of the states — and suprisingly, a number of foreign countries," Trammell said.

Parkway Chief Ranger Parr reports that between January and July, 8,789,000 visited the area, up 9,000 from a year ago. But Parr said business dropped 4.2 percent in July and 5.1 percent in June. He thinks gas prices are partly the cause.

"I think gas prices haven't risen; they've actually dropped. People are traveling farther (than last year)," he said.

He said that most visitors in 1980 were from neighboring states. This year he figures they're traveling west to parks such as the Grand Canyon. Last year his office handled few requests for information on western parks; but has been overwhelmed with them this year.

The Battleship Memorial also is dependent on motorists, and its business hurts when gasoline is scarce and prices high.

Attendance was up in June 8.3 percent over the same month a year ago, and July showed a 10.5 percent gain, according director Conlon. For the first three quarters of the financial year that began in October, the World War II monument welcomed 159,715 visitors.

But retired Navy Col. Amo Judd, director of promotions for the battleship, said he wouldn't know where the visitors were from until the end of summer when the results of a season-long poll are pahlie'.

"We are solely depen'ajp kj ikpr praffic," Conlon said, noting the minimal effect of the air traffic controllers strike on business. "We are really looking forward to I-40 coming down here."

Vacationers may be traveling farther, but they also may be finding less expensive ways to get to their destinations and to live once they arrive. Parr says the number of motorcyclists on the parkway is up "60 percent."

"It's an economical way to travel," he said. "A lot of them pull little trailers." Parr's also said he's seeing more recreational vehicles than last year and that campground business is up.

Like Parr, Ms. Brissette noted trends toward economizing.

"We're seeing more weekend visitation rather than weeklong — it's a matter of economics," she said. "People are taking shorter vacations maybe or two rather than one long one."

"We also are seeing a change in restaurant habits. They don't seem to be eating out as much or are eating in fast-food restaurants (rather than full-service restaurants.)"

For Living Lose Weight - Stop Smoking Seminar. This program will be given at

The Ramada Inn
284 Bypass
Thursday, September 3,
At 12:00 Noon & 7:30 P.M.

EASY AND EFFECTIVE

The TFL Program does something that no other program does — it uses modern clinical hypnosis to permanently remove the causes of weight and smoking problems. Why is that so important? Well, think of how many times you have dieted — only to regain the weight that you lost. Hypnosis prevents this, while still allowing you to eat the foods you enjoy! The same holds true for smoking, where the need to prevent cravings and weight gain is equally important.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

The TFL program works so well, it even has a Money-Back Guarantee. Anyone can leave the seminar during the first hour, for any reason whatsoever, and receive a complete refund at that time. Additionally, anyone can re-attend the seminar for extra help without additional charge. The program even includes a FREE cassette tape to insure continued progress at home.

WADE M. GENTHNER, F.A.I.H., is the founder and director of TFL. The subject of many newspaper and magazine articles as well as T.V. appearances. Mr. Genthner's skill in clinical hypnosis was noted by Dan Rather of CBS' "60 Minutes," who referred to him as "a well-trained and highly experienced hypnotist." Mr. Genthner has trained a highly motivated and professional staff to conduct these seminars nationwide.

Traffic Heavy

Police Chief E. G. Cannon today reminded citizens of the importance of observing parking and traffic regulations.
 Cannon said that with the opening of the city and county schools and East Carolina University, the city will experience an increase in pedestrian and vehicular traffic.
 He asked motorists to observe all parking and traffic safety regulations and he reminded parents to talk with their children about how to cross streets and how to enter and exit school buses.
 Cannon reminded persons parking in and around the university area to observe parking regulations signs posted on the street and traffic markings painted on the curbing. He cautioned motorists not to park vehicles improperly in tow-away zones or in a manner which would block private driveways or sidewalks.

The Truth About Those

MISLEADING WINN-DIXIE PRICE COMPARISONS

Before Food Town came to Greenville, Winn-Dixie charged whatever they thought you would pay for groceries. But since Food Town brought 6800 lower food prices to town, Winn-Dixie has had to lower a few prices in order to compete. And they hope that by comparing these few prices with Food Town they will convince you to shop at Winn-Dixie. Well, we don't think grocery shoppers in Greenville are swayed by misleading price comparisons. But even if you don't shop at Food Town, we would like for you to know who brought lower food prices to Greenville. It makes you wonder why Winn-Dixie waited so long to lower their prices, doesn't it? Or, is it obvious?

Insurance For Movers

MIAMI (UPI) - Fifty percent of the people who rent trucks to do their own moving out-of-town and 15 percent of those who move locally buy additional insurance to cover the moves.

These figures are based on patterns of customers of a truck rental company over the past year.

If it's not enough, most truck rental companies offer load insurance.

Coverage can be obtained on the actual cash value of cargo on a one-way move; for protection of furniture and possessions while in the truck for local moves; and against loss from accidents for driver and passengers the entire period of the rental agreement.

To obtain Ryder's brochure on moving insurance, Safeguard Yourself, Your Passengers and Your Possessions, and other information on do-it-yourself moving, call the company's Customer Service toll free line, 800-327-7777, or write: Cathy Rowe, Customer Service, Ryder One-Way Operations, P.O. Box 520816, Miami, Fla. 33152.
