

Process Begins For New Chancellor Hunt

By MELVIN LANG
Reflector Staff Writer

Dr. Thomas Brewer remained away from his office again today as state university officials slowly geared up for the task of naming his successor as chancellor at East Carolina University.

Brewer, who submitted his resignation Wednesday, has requested leave with pay to allow him time to relocate, possibly to West Virginia University. But University of North Carolina officials said today no action has been taken on the leave request.

There was no indication as to when, or if, Brewer will return to his office.

In the meantime, Brewer will remain as the administrative head at East Carolina until his resignation, or leave request, is placed before the Board of Governors. That may be several days.

Jay Jenkins, administrative assistant to UNC President William Friday, said there was no plan at this time to present the Brewer matter to the Board of Governors at a meeting scheduled in Chapel Hill Friday.

Jenkins said Friday and Brewer have not had an opportunity to discuss Brewer's action since it was announced, although they did confer several times by telephone before Brewer submitted his resignation effective June 30, 1982, to coincide with the end of the 1981-82 academic year.

Meanwhile, ECU Trustee Chairman Ashley Futrell of

Washington said his board and Friday would meet in a few days to discuss the resignation and steps to find a replacement for Brewer.

Futrell said Friday wanted "to meet with us to discuss the situation and he will tell us what we can do and must do."

Futrell, who became chairman of the ECU board on Aug. 24, said he had spent "two hectic weeks" because of the controversy over the chancellor.

"I received several phone calls yesterday and right on up until late last night, from people in Greenville and at East Carolina. I'm satisfied they really wanted a change," Futrell said.

Brewer has been identified as being among eight or nine "strong candidates" from a list of more than 120 people who applied for the vacant president's position at West Virginia University.

Brewer reportedly is to be interviewed in Morgantown, W. Va., on Sunday. Several other candidates, including three or more from West Virginia, already have been interviewed by the WVU screening committee, which eventually will narrow the field to three or five candidates that will be submitted to West Virginia's Board of Regents.

In his absence at East Carolina, day-to-day administration will be handled initially by the vice chancellors. Jenkins said Friday would appoint an interim chancellor after a decision is made on Brewer's request for leave.

O'Connor Avers No Commitments

By KEVIN COSTELLOE

WASHINGTON (AP) —

Sandra Day O'Connor, in the second round of Senate committee questioning on her Supreme Court nomination, said today she personally opposes mandatory school busing.

In a tense exchange with Sen. Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa, she added that President Reagan had not asked for any commitments in exchange for the nomination.

"I was not asked to make any commitments ... about what I would do or how I would resolve any issue to come before the court," she told the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The conservative Grassley twice asked her to say that she had not been asked for any commitments.

"It would not be proper for me to disclose the contents of private conversations I had with the president. In no way am I suggesting that was at his request," she added.

She said she feels school busing to achieve integration can be "disruptive" to children, citing her own long treks to school when she was a child.

"I just think that isn't a system that often is terribly beneficial to the child," she said of school busing.

She also noted that during her tenure in the Arizona state Senate she voted for a resolution urging action "at the federal level" that would "terminate the use of forced busing in desegregation cases."

The 51-year-old Arizona appeals court judge also strongly defended her refusal to answer substantive questions during her confirmation hearings.

"The nominees have felt reluctant to answer questions on issues that may come before the court," Mrs. O'Connor said of past nominees to the high court.

Mrs. O'Connor was expected to finish her committee testimony later today.

Growing Crime In U.S.A.

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —

There was a murder every 23 minutes and robberies occurred at a rate of one a minute as crime in the United States rose 9 percent last year, the FBI reported today.

The bureau's annual Uniform Crime Report said 13 million serious crimes were reported last year in this country of 227 million, a level 55 percent higher than a decade earlier.

According to the report, criminals escaped apprehension in about four out of five crimes committed in 1980, with an arrest rate of 19 percent for all serious crimes.

Suspected offenders were taken into custody in 44 percent of all violent crimes but only 16 percent of crimes against property, which outnumber violent crimes by nearly 10 to one, the report said.

Arrests were made in 72 percent of the murder cases and 49 percent of the rapes, but only 14 percent of motor vehicle thefts and burglaries.

The report said the nation's overall crime rate rose four times faster last year than the population.

Year-to-year increases in the crime rate are not unusual. The 1980 increase of 9 percent compares with rises of 9.1 percent in 1979, 2 percent in 1978, a decrease of 3 percent in 1977, no change in the rate in 1976 and a 9.8 percent increase in 1975.

The report reflected increases last year in each of the seven categories of major crimes.

Compared with 1979 figures, murders in America rose 7 percent, forcible rapes 8 percent, robbery 18 percent and aggravated assault 7 percent. Among serious non-violent crimes, burglary was up 14 percent, larceny and theft 8 percent, and motor vehicle theft 2 percent, the FBI said.

Murders occurred every 23 minutes in America, on the average, and murders killed 23,044 people — one out of every 10,000 residents of the country.

Seventy-seven percent of the murder victims were male. About 53 percent were white and 42 were black. Pistols, rifles and shotguns killed 62 percent of all murder victims, 19 percent were cut or stabbed, 13 percent were the victims of other weapons such as clubs, explosives and poison, and 6 percent were beaten by hands or feet.

Tropical Storm Moves Through The Bahamas

MIAMI (AP) — A "fairly disorganized" Tropical Storm Gert moved through the central Bahama islands early today, and forecasters said some strengthening could occur by tonight.

ECU Enrollment

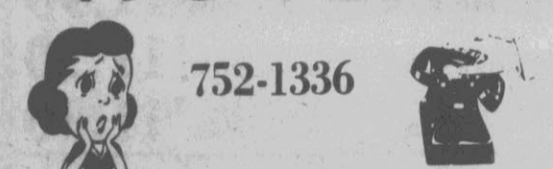

East Carolina University Registrar Gilbert Moore said today that the fall semester enrollment has reached an all-time record of 13,264 students on campus.

"Showing a modest but sustained increase," according to Moore, the fall semester total this year is an increase of 99 students over last year's enrollment.

More, pointing out that the enrollment in the ECU School of Medicine reached 172 students this fall, said the enrollment figures do not include students in the University (Evening) College.

A breakdown of the students as to classes, male-female, and the like should be available sometime next week, he said.

Hotline gets things done for you. Call 752-1336 and tell your problem or your sound-off or mail it to Hotline, The Daily Reflector, Box 1967, Greenville, N.C. 27834.

Because of the large numbers received, Hotline can answer and publish only those items considered most pertinent to our readers. Names must be given, but only initials will be used.

ADULT PENPALS?

I am always interested in international friendship and was pleased to see the recent Hotline item about opportunities for penpal relationship for youngsters here with Korean youngsters. However, I wish you'd also publish an opportunity for adults to correspond with world citizens abroad. This can be very satisfying and help raise worldwide consciousness, I feel. L.H.

Consider it done. Letters Abroad, according to its president, Frederick Winship, is a clearinghouse for international correspondence among potential friends 16 years of age or older. Since its founding in 1952, this volunteer organization has linked more than 1.2 million persons in the United States and in 140 nations overseas in the exchange of letters.

These correspondences have, in many cases, lasted for years and often resulted in personal visits between correspondents. At present, Letters Abroad has more applications from overseas in its files than it has American applicants to fulfill them. Anyone 16 or older interested is asked to write Letters Abroad, 209 E. 56th Street, New York, N.Y. 10022, for a brochure, enclosing a return self-addressed stamped envelope. For immediate action, send name, address, age, occupation and hobbies. Letters Abroad is a non-profit, non-governmental organization. Farmville Gearing Up For Political Contests

By CAROL TYER

FARMVILLE — Farmville is gearing up for a strenuous political race as municipal candidates have completed filing for the Tuesday, Oct. 6, election.

Running for mayor are Commissioner John Turner Walston and Wilton R. (Rusty) Duke Jr. Commissioner candidates are Michael B. Dixon, LeRoy Redden, James A. Allen, Rose Day Evans, Oliver Murphrey, and T. Frank "Red" Styers.

Mayor Linwood Mercer has announced that he will not be a candidate to succeed himself. There are two vacancies to be filled on the board of commissioners, the seats of Leroy Redden and David Stowe; three if Walston is successful in his mayoral bid.

Walston, the retired manager of the Feed and Seed Department of Farmville Hardware Company is a Farmville area native who is serving his second term as a town commissioner. He has been and is currently active in numerous civic, social and church-related organizations.

Duke, an attorney, is a Farmville native and a graduate of Wake Forest University and its School of Law. He is chairman of the Farmville Planning Board, a trustee of Meredith College, a former president of the Farmville United Way and the Farmville Rotary Club, and a director of the Farmville Arts Council, the North Carolina Railroad, and the East Carolina Vocational Center. He is a former treasurer of the Pitt Democratic Party and a former chairman of the Sheppard Memorial Library Board of Trustees. He and his wife, Patsy Davis Duke, have a daughter, Katherine, and a son, Lawrence.

Redden is an incumbent commissioner who has served two terms. He recently retired as assistant principal of Farmville Central High School, having worked in public education for 39 years, and now operates a florist business here. He earned the B.S. and M.A. degrees at A&T State University and did additional study at East Carolina University and in Calcutta, India. He and his wife, Bessie Joyner Redden, have one daughter, Debra Redden of Salisbury, Md. He is a steward and Sunday School superintendent of St. Stephen's AME Zion Church here, president of Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity, a past commander and assistant adjutant of American Legion Post No. 372 of Farmville, past secretary of Livingston Lodge No. 103, and serves on the recreation and library committees of the town.

Mrs. Evans, a Farmville resident for 11 years, has been a member of the Community Development Committee of the town since the CD project was launched. She operates a community grocery store at the corner of Wallace and George streets here and is a member of Brown Chapel Free

Report On Guy Smith Stadium Work Is Reported

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Work is well underway to level the ball field at Guy Smith Stadium. At the September meeting of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Commission Wednesday night, Recreation and Parks Executive Director Boyd Lee gave commissioners a report on work being carried out at Guy Smith.

Lee noted that a survey of the field earlier revealed soil and lime on the infield had gradually built up over the years so that the infield was six inches higher than the outfield area. "This created a hazardous situation, a sudden dropoff that was bad for players," Lee commented.

Reworking of the field has involved removing the excess soil, putting down a sand base for good drainage and replacing turf. "This project is involving more than we expected it to," Lee added, "but it will certainly upgrade the field and make it safer for playing."

Other project reports presented by Lee to the commissioners deal with cutting out underbrush for building a dike at one of the ponds in the river property in Meadowbrook and construction of an activity shelter at West Meadowbrook Park. The Public Works Department is assisting on the pond project by cutting a ditch.

Lee said that the position of a tennis supervisor had been approved. Applications are being accepted up to September 15, and after that date a tennis supervisor will be chosen from applications received.

The Fees and Charges Study Committee, headed by Dr. Edgar W. Hooks, will look into all aspects of fee charges for recreation activities and programs sponsored by the department. This will include a study of programs involving city schools, civic clubs, the Little League teams, swim clubs and similar groups.

The City Council has directed that recommendations for fees and charges be provided for its consideration. "The city wants as many fees as possible to generate money. We need to say what revisions we feel should be made and then to get feedback from our suggestions," Lee remarked.

The commission's chairman, Mrs. Lib Proctor, reported on the Special State Forum held recently. "It was an excellent session," Mrs. Proctor said, "one oriented to citizen board members, with emphasis on the relationship of boards to advisory councils on recreational policies."

A discussion was held on a forthcoming workshop training session for commission members. It was decided this would entail having commission members meeting recreation and park staff members, as well as a tour of sites.

Teaching Awards Go To Professors

Peggy Wood, chairman of the Department of Medical Record Science in the East Carolina University School of Allied Health and Social Professions, and Dr. Richard Spruill, associate professor of geology at ECU, are the 1981 recipients of two campus awards for outstanding teaching.

Mrs. Wood is the recipient of the Robert and Lina Worthington Mays Award, and Spruill was given the Robert L. Jones Award. Both received an engraved plaque and a check for $500 at ECU's recent annual faculty convocation.

The Mays and Jones Awards, designed to recognize and emphasize good teaching among ECU faculty members, are sponsored by the ECU Alumni Association. Recipients are selected by a computerized survey of ECU students.

Mrs. Wood, who holds degrees from Lees-McRae Junior College, ECU and Emory University, has been a member of the ECU faculty since 1969. She has previously worked in the medical records division of Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

DR. RICHARD SPRUILL
Dr. Spruill, who joined the ECU faculty in 1979, received the BS and MS degrees from ECU and the PhD from UNC-Chapel Hill.

Leaf Color-Peak Approaching

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — As the days become shorter and the nighttime air turns crisp, the traditional debate begins over when the autumn leaves will reach their peak of color.

The answer to the question is no joking matter to mountain businessmen, who depend on the onslaught of autumn tourists for their livelihoods.

On one side of the debate are the forest rangers who spend their careers among the Western North Carolina trees. They say, without hesitation, the peak will come during the second week of October.

J. Howard Parr, chief ranger for the Blue Ridge Parkway, goes so far as to predict the exact time of the peak will be 3 p.m., Wednesday, Oct. 21.

"You bet it'll be on the second week of October," said Hank Plotkin, a spokesman for the state Forestry Service in Asheville. "It always works out that way. There's no magic to it."

"In the mountains you have an elevation difference. If you're not right at one level, you're right at another," he said.

But then there are the botanists, represented by Arnold Krochmal of the Southeastern Forest Experiment Station. They see the debate in more scientific terms.

Krochmal says the color changes are affected most importantly by the length of daylight and the drop in temperatures. He says leaves at all elevations should change at the same time because of the affects of the number of daylight hours.

Krochmal says this year's peak will come at 2 a.m. Sept. 23 — at the latest.

But those on both sides of the argument acknowledge that some yellow and red leaves already are being seen in the North Carolina mountains.

"Occasionally some of the maples are falling off because it's real dry," Parr said. "But we're pretty well on schedule. The only thing that would make any real variation is if we have a real bad storm to take them (the leaves) off."

Parr said some of the poplars are turning yellow and a few dogwoods are turning red already.

For admiring the multi-colored leaves, Parr suggests a drive on the Blue Ridge Parkway from Boone south. And he predicts more people than ever may come to view the mountain spectacular this fall.

He said Parkway visitation currently is running about even with last year, when a record number of tourists visited the area.

Senate Deliberating Best Way Of Targeting Military Pay Hike

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —

The Senate is considering a military pay raise that its backers say would strengthen the all-volunteer force, but critics charge the measure would pave the way to a draft because it doesn't give enough money to recruits.

In a speech prepared for delivery at the opening of debate today, Sen. J. James Exon, D-Neb., said the bill would give increases to the skilled people the armed forces need to keep in uniform.

And in a letter to all senators, Exon and Sen. Roger W. Jepsen, R-Iowa, described the measure as "an important opportunity to ease our country's most pressing manpower problems."

But Sens. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., and Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, sponsors of an amendment to give more of the pay raise to recruits, called the bill "a blueprint for a return to the peacetime draft."

Jepsen is chairman and Exon the senior Democratic member of the manpower subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee. Their bill would give enlisted personnel raises ranging from 7 percent for a recruit to 22 percent for senior non-commissioned officers. Basic pay of commissioned officers would be increased by 9 percent for first lieutenant and up to 17 percent for some career personnel.

The Defense Department opposes the measure, favoring the House Armed Services Committee version, which calls for a 14.3 percent raise and leaves it up to the Pentagon whether to target the increases or grant them across-the-board for all ranks.

The House is scheduled to act on this bill next week.

Backers of a targeted raise say they will try to get the House to go along with the Senate version.

In his floor speech, Exon said, "I am disappointed ... but I am not surprised" at the Pentagon's position.

He noted that last year, in approving an 11.7 percent military pay increase, Congress gave the Defense Department authority to target up to 25 percent of it, but "not one dime was reallocated."

Hatfield and Matsunaga took a middle course, reducing the proposed pay for officers by 1 percent across-the-board and giving the money to recruits instead. Their amendment is scheduled to be considered Friday.

In a letter to colleagues, they said, "There is no justification for providing extraordinarily high pay increases to middle and senior enlisted personnel and sizable increases to officers at the expense of entry-level personnel."

The sponsors of the amendment argued that the armed services will not attract enough volunteers to meet their manpower goals without higher pay for recruits.

Exon told the Senate, however, "just the opposite is true. Whether the source of manpower for our armed services is the voluntary approach or conscription, we need trained, highly qualified personnel. If the all-volunteer force will not work under (our bill), it won't work at all."

SANTA ROSA, Calif. (AP) — Cartoonist Charles Schulz drew a Peanuts comic strip on the wall of his hospital room before leaving for home to recover from open heart surgery.

Schulz, who underwent a quadruple bypass operation one week ago, walked out of Memorial Hospital on Wednesday. A spokesman said the 58-year-old creator of Peanuts is "doing just fine."

The strip Schulz drew shows Snoopy trying to blow through a device used by post-operative heart patients. It will stay on the wall as a confidence booster for future heart patients, the hospital said.

Dear Abby

Some Brides Warm To Cash

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Your recent article in which you stated that "anyone requesting money instead of a gift is tacky" is from the 19th century!

When my daughter was growing up, every time I found a "good buy" in china or silver, or whatever, I bought it for her hope chest. Consequently when she marries, she will have the best of everything for less money. So what's wrong with the couple requesting money instead of a gift? Actually, it would save the guests the trouble of shopping and wrapping a gift that will probably be returned anyway.

Those who come to a wedding are there to celebrate the joy of a union of two people in love, so why saddle them with three toasters and six coffee pots?

If our society has accepted "living together" and brides with a six-month bulge walking down the aisle in white, who is to say that asking for money instead of a wedding gift is "tacky"?

IN THE SAME BOAT

DEAR IN: Hold it! Society has not unanimously accepted living together, or brides with a six-month bulge walking down the aisle in white. And there are many who would rather send a wedding gift than throw money in the pot to help pay for the wedding.

DEAR ABBY: I am a responsible 22-year-old woman living with my parents. I am going away for a month's vacation, and my problem is my parents and my guinea pigs. My parents have told me that the minute I am out the door they are getting rid of my guinea pigs.

I've told them that they won't have to do one thing because I've already made arrangements with a girlfriend to come by every day to feed them and clean their cages.

Abby, they still insist that the guinea pigs are going as soon as I leave. I have explained that the guinea pigs are my pets and not their property to do with as they please. Also, I said that I think I am old enough to take care of my affairs, but it is obvious that they have no respect for me or my wishes.

If they get rid of my guinea pigs while I'm gone, I will never forgive them. Tell me what you think should be done, and who is right.

WINTERVILLE — Mr. and Mrs. Ralph E. DeGraff of Greenville were honored at a 50th wedding anniversary reception Saturday evening in the Rose Hill Free Will Baptist Church fellowship building near here.

Guests were greeted and registered by Mrs. Jenny Evans. Miss Deborah J. Jones served the three-tiered cake and Mrs. Ann McCoy poured punch. Mrs. Faye Adams assisted in serving.

A program of music and singing was presented by Mrs. Effie Jones, Mrs. Teresa DeLong and Ledrew Stocks, son-in-law of the couple.

Good-byes were said by Lisa Baker and Ralph Matthew Stocks, two of the couple's grandchildren.

The honorees have two daughters, Mrs. Ledrew Stocks and Mrs. Robert L. Baker, both of Winterville and five grandchildren.

If that's not possible, find some other temporary home for your guinea pigs.

Some Lasting Impact

ECU Chancellor Thomas B. Brewer has ended three years as administrative head of East Carolina University with his resignation Wednesday.

Dr. Brewer sent the resignation to UNC President William Friday, effective June 30, 1982. He will, however, be on leave with pay in the interim.

In a statement Brewer said his resignation was not requested by Friday or the Board of Trustees. He said simply he felt it was in the best interest of East Carolina University.

"I believe that in the last three years the university has made much progress toward greater quality," he said. He gave credit to faculty, staff, students, alumni, friends and trustees.

President Friday said, too, the action was on Brewer's own initiative rising from his conviction it was for the best of the university.

"That takes a lot of courage," the president said.

Dr. Brewer's time as chancellor of ECU was marked by controversy. Perhaps that was inevitable. He followed the Leo Jenkins era during which great strides were made through rallying public opinion and developing external support for expanding the university's opportunities for service.

No doubt there was need for internal reorganization and Dr. Brewer set out to do that. Changes often bring discontent and controversy arose over many of the changes that Dr. Brewer instigated.

At any rate, the Brewer era is ended. If a university has adequate strength it never slips backward. Without doubt some of the changes instituted by Dr. Brewer will have lasting impact on East Carolina University's future. Just as Dr. Brewer did, whoever succeeds him will take what has been passed to him and continue building the university.

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

Promise Is Forbidden?

WASHINGTON — The politics of Kentucky have made some colorful history since the days of John J. Crittenden and Henry Clay. The state has nurtured politicians with such splendid names as Lazarus Powell and Isham Talbot. Kentucky has sent to the United States Senate such statesmen as Albert B. Chandler and Earle C. Clements. But in all the annals of this sovereign commonwealth you will find no wackier tale than the tale of the attempted ouster of Carl W. Brown.

Mr. Brown won election in November 1979 as a county commissioner in Jefferson County. Unless the U.S. Supreme Court decides in his favor in a case to be argued later this year, he will be rudely relieved of his job — and how come?

The gentleman faces removal from office because — now get this — because he promised during his campaign that if elected, he would vote to reduce his own salary. Under Kentucky law, such a campaign promise has been held to violate the state's Corrupt Practices Act. The law says that no candidate shall promise "things of value" to any person in consideration of a person's vote or even his moral support. Mr. Brown's proposed pay cut qualified as a "thing of value" to any person in consideration of a person's vote or even his moral support. Mr. Brown's proposed pay cut qualified as a "thing of value" to the voters of Jefferson County.

It is incredible, but there it is, and Supreme Court records indicate that many other states have similar statutes. Speaking as an observer who has covered politics for 40 years, I am bound to remark that the case is the most unheard-of thing I ever heard of. If a politician cannot promise to reduce the expenses of his office, what can a politician promise?

Let us think I am making all this up, let me offer a few details. Mr. Brown, a Republican, ran against Earl J. Hartlage, a Democratic incumbent, and defeated him by 10,000 votes. While in office, Mr. Hartlage had voted to increase the commissioners' pay from $9,600 a year to $20,000 a year. On Aug. 15, 1979, Mr. Brown and his running mate called a press conference. "We abhor the commissioners' outrageous salaries, and to prove the strength of our convictions ... we will lower our salaries by $3,000 each per

Four days later, on advice of counsel that so innocuous a promise might somehow violate the Corrupt Practices Act, Mr. Brown retracted. The retraction proved of no avail. The defeated Democrat promptly brought suit to void Mr. Brown's victory, and the Kentucky Court of Appeals upheld the Democrat's contention. The state Supreme Court refused review, and Mr. Brown appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The giddy theory behind this nonsense is that by promising to achieve economies in public office, a candidate is bribing the voters. If that doctrine wins high court approval, every politician in the land could be deprived of the very fodder of political existence. The politician has yet to be born who does not promise to achieve economies in public office. That the promises are mostly empty is beside the point. Such are the levels of public cynicism that almost no voter believes the promises in any event, but ritual and custom demand that the promises be made.

The courts of Kentucky would take most of the fun out of political campaigns. From time immemorial candidates for public office have promised roads, bridges, schoolhouses, irrigation ditches and higher levees. They have promised to eradicate the boll weevil and to end the hoof-and-mouth disease. They have promised chickens in every pot. And when some virtuous fellow runs for office on a platform of no promises at all, the voters eye him with massive distrust and flock to candidates of the New Jerusalem instead.

Stunned By Defense Cut

By ROWLAND EVANS, ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Just as the canard that Ronald Reagan really doesn't make decisions was dredged up again, the president's senior staff revealed a massive defense cutback not yet officially approved by him that threatens the very foundations of his foreign policy.

Reagan's position, as Congress returns from August recess, is very nearly impossible. If he accepts the $30 billion defense reduction wanted by white House advisers, the credibility of his hard line against Soviet expansionism is undercut. If he makes a more modest cutback ($15 billion is mentioned), financial markets may see this as retreat from the balanced budget.

What's worse, there is not even assurance that renewed austerity at the Pentagon will revive the bond market and depress interest rates as budget director David Stockman hopes. Rather, since premature release of the $30 billion cut, the bond market has resumed its inexorable decline (while the stock market kept dropping). If the leak did not reassure Wall Street, the actual announcement may not do much better.

Herein are limits for Reagan's brand of presidency. While determination is enough to sell tax cuts and overpower the air traffic controllers, the monetary-defense combination is a witch's brew where only the president himself can be the brewmaster. He cannot stay at arm's length if trade-offs between foreign and domestic policy and available other options — notably a gold standard — are to be fully considered.

Signs are there has been no full-scale consideration of the defense cut. But after Stockman and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger argued their cases in California, the word was spread that the president was "leaning" Stockman's way. By the weekend of Aug. 29-30, White House aides guaranteed that Stockman had won.

Nevertheless, as Stockman left Aug. 30 for a political fund-raising tour, he was making no predictions. Facing surprising unanimity from Republican businessmen that the Pentagon must be cut, Stockman on the tour would only say there are no "sacred cows." Consequently, he was stunned Sept. 1 when reporters along the route asked his comment on a White House "announcement" of the $30 billion cut.

The "announcement" came from the usually circumspect James Baker, the White House chief of staff just returning from two weeks' vacation. Baker assumed the decision was firmer than it was, but nobody in the Reagan inner circle disputed him. After all, when presidential counselor Edwin Meese, Jim Baker and Dave Stockman are in full agreement, they do not get overturned. Besides, most Republican politicians expressed delight.

But not defense-oriented members of Congress who in July carried the administration's colors in warding off defense cuts. Sen. John Tower, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, was staggered by $30 billion less in fiscal years 1983 and 1984. A conversation with fellow Texan Baker did not reassure him.

What worries Tower and other defense specialists on Capitol Hill is the impact of $30 billion less (or even $15 billion less) on weapons. They see at least these changes, turning back the clock to the day that Jimmy Carter left office:

Elimination of the CX transport and probably the F-18 warplane; Army cutbacks in forces; elimination of 37 new warships (dooming the proposed 600-ship fleet); elimination of two or three Air Force tactical fighter wings; trimming the Rapid Deployment Force, and reducing (or perhaps cancelling) the B-1 bomber.

That list, only a partial one, translates into foreign policy. "We would have to reduce our commitments around the globe," Sen. William Cohen of Maine, staunch defense advocate, told us. That sends a message

There Must Be A Tax Limit

New concern for tobacco surfaced recently with reports that the Reagan administration might seek new taxes on tobacco.

Fortunately administrative sources say such a new tax is now unlikely, and that is favorable for the tobacco industry.

Tobacco is already heavily taxed and certainly carries more than its share of the financial needs of government. There are those who would like to see the product taxed to death.

As we see it, however, many thousands of people's livelihoods depend on tobacco.

They accept the fact that it must carry a heavy tax load, but there is a limit on how far taxation should go on any product.

Economic Basics

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — People are finally catching on that you have to produce something to make money before the whole society can work properly. Catching on may not be the proper phrase — rediscovering is better, since this nation was founded on economic principles.

What do kids know about economics? A lot more than some of their parents, if some innovative teachers in Winston-Salem, and the North Carolina Council on Economic Education have anything to do with it.

Linda Cappel and Patsy Currin are fifth grade teachers at Cash Elementary School in the Winston-Salem-Forsyth County school system who tell the story of "Mini-Society" in an economic education study just published by the Agriculture Extension Service at N.C. State University.

A Nation
Imagine: youngsters set up their little society complete with money, a flag and national anthem, and a system to produce and market goods. The teachers serve as discussion leaders and financial advisors: not dictators. Successful businessmen come in to offer inside tips.

As Cappel and Currin describe the program, the children devote three one-hour periods each week for six to eight weeks. On production day they make things like crafts, newspapers, paper flowers, book markers, personalized stationery, etc. On market day, goods are sold. Good merchandise, well made, selling for a fair price generates a profit. Sloppy work, ripoff goods, or too much spent on production making the price too high result in economic chaos.

The final reward comes on "auction day" when the students can use their accumulated wealth to bid on and buy goodies. Those that have money get stuff. Those that don't, well ... too bad.

Here at work, just as in the real world, are the "concepts of inflation, supply and demand, competition versus monopoly, advertising, liking of the statewide Council on Economic Education which is a private, non-profit, non-partisan organization underwritten by business, foundations, and others interested in promoting economic literacy.

Foundation
John Redmond, executive vice president of the council, says economic education is an important part of two important developments in the schools — renewed interest in citizenship education, and the "back to basics" reliance on fundamental skills.

"In North Carolina, these movements are stronger and more effective than they would otherwise be because economic education has been made an important part of both," Redmond says. This is one of few states which has enacted law in the General Assembly requiring that public schools teach capitalism and economics.

Launched in 1969, the Council on Economic Education seeks to encourage schools to review their eco-banking principles, consumer law and many others," Cappel and Currin report.

The net result, they say, is an effective method of teaching economic principles. And that is much to the

To the editor:

Your editorial in the Tuesday, 8 September 1981 The Daily Reflector, vol. 100: no. 215, p. 4, regarding the 'controversy' surrounding Dr. Thomas Brewer's consideration for the presidency of West Virginia University has another facet that should be made clear. The side of the coin of which I speak has to do with the brighter side of the question. Would East Carolina University, now that it is moving toward true university status and function, be satisfied with a leader who was so complacent that he would not look at a position of greater challenge and responsibility? By the same token, would we want a leader who was not in demand elsewhere?

I know a microbiologist who has looked at many positions over the years only to return to his institution convinced that his position at that university presented more challenges and opportunities than ones at more prestigious levels at other universities. He always returned from these interview refreshed and more vigorous than before. In nearly 3 years at the same institution, he has brought world acclaim to the university through his work and literally millions of dollars in grant funds. He had the support of his institution and colleagues throughout.

Therefore, instead of castigating Dr. Brewer for what is a normal function of the academic marketplace, we should support him more than ever and leave the decisions of whether to move or to stay to the secret recesses of Dr. Brewer's heart. I say this to all from the Board of Trustees, to the academic community and to all of eastern North Carolina.

I hope that Dr. Brewer will remain at ECU. The example of what the original faculty at the ECU School of Medicine did by persisting in the face of daily difficulties and intermittent disappointments show what can be done by remaining with a challenge when better opportunities of the moment beckon.

Again, we should be very pleased to have a man of Dr. Brewer's stature and national reputation, and we should each do our utmost to convince him that the challenge at ECU is worthy of his continued leadership.

So Many Banks To Disappear

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) —

The 14,600 commercial banks that exist today will dwindle to fewer than 100 important institutions and maybe several hundred small community banks by the 1990s, says Thomas Thamaras.

Should that surprising — and to some, alarming — forecast come true, it would constitute one of the biggest upheavals ever to hit an industry. Measured one way — financial assets involved — it would be unequalled.

As Thamaras sees it, the process already has begun, with larger banks and regional networks beginning to absorb weaker competitors. "We may expect to see the pace of extinction quickening," he says.

Those disappearing, largely through mergers into larger institutions, would include many thousands of banks that manage less than $1 billion in assets. However, the forecast sees some very small banks surviving.

Thamaras' forecast won't be taken lightly, since it is issued by the Strategic Planning Institute. Based in Cambridge, Mass., the institute became independent of the Harvard Business School in the mid-1970s, and is now operated at a nonprofit membership organization to which 250 corporations contribute strategic marketing data and other information.

The essence of Thamaras' thesis about the coming structure of banking is contained in a synopsis of findings just sent to members.

In it, he argues that low savings rates, sophisticated customers who demand creative services, stiff competition, deregulation, high capital costs, and inflation create pressures medium-size banks cannot meet.

"Of the 14,600 banks now existing in the United States, all but about 200 are small banks that manage less than $1 billion in assets," Thamaras observes. Many are in communities with almost no competition.

"Today, however, they are threatened by a new environment in which capital shortages create explosive competition, and advancing technology mandates change," he reasons, continuing.

"The very smallest institutions — those with less than $100 million in assets — will probably survive, by virtue of an ability to provide their strictly local customers with empathy and hometown contacts.

"The remainder are probably doomed. They lack the advantage of the very small banks' personal touch; they also lack the economies of scale that allow large institutions to provide funds transfer, rapid transactions, and specialized services."

The Strategic Planning Institute seeks to analyze scientifically how markets work, studying actual strategies used by companies under various situations. It also operates a "for profit" consulting arm, called PIMS, an acronym for Profit Impact of Market Strategy.

From this material it seeks to draw laws or rules of the marketplace. Thamaras' study, for example, suggests that "given persistent low levels of savings, the entire United States, with 226 million people, will support no more than 100 major banks."

Other, more complex findings are the basis for Thamaras' conclusions, but he also suggests Canadian banking produces "additional evidence that further consolidation of U.S. banks is inevitable."

Of 102 Canadian banks that once existed, he says, 42 have merged with other and disappeared, and 49 have failed. "The number of existing active banks is now only 10, or one bank per 2.5 million people."

He points also to the securities industry as "a harbinger of the rapid change that is about to envelop the rest of the financial industry." In May 1975, fixed commission rates by brokers were ended, and competition then drove down rates and drove out weaker brokers.

"The outcome of this competitive squeeze was that the more than 800 firms that had previously existed dwindled to about 80 major firms with substantially changed profiles," Thamaras writes.

WRESTLING WITH THE INEXPRESSIBLE

The doctrine of the Trinity is man's awkward attempt to try to relate certain apparently irreconcilable facts which the Bible presents.

We believe in the unity of God. "The Lord our God is one God." Yet at our Lord's baptism the Heavenly Father spoke, calling Jesus his Son, and the Holy Spirit descended upon him in the form of a dove. The theological paradox which the human mind has never been able satisfactorily to understand — and which we try to explain in the doctrine of the Trinity — is that although God is one, He is set forth in the Bible as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. These three are persons — that is, endowed with personality — separate yet united.

Here are apparently irreconcilable facts. They appear contradictory, but we believe they appear so because of our lack of knowledge. In the doctrine of the Trinity man tries to express infinite truth in finite terms. — Elisha Douglass

Constitutional Snag On October Session Overcome

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — House Speaker Liston Ramsey says he's overcome a constitutional snag, allowing the General Assembly to go ahead with its plans to reconvene October 5.

But to do it, he and Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green have had to ask all 120 House members and 50 Senate members to sign and return to them a written request that the session be held on that date.

"It doesn't change one thing," Ramsey said.

It does, however, make things legal, after Attorney General Rufus Edmisten's office had raised several objections to the legislators' earlier arrangement for re-convening the session.

The problem arose over the wording of the adjournment resolution passed at conclusion of the regular session in July.

It set the fall session for Monday, Nov. 16, but provided that if Congress enacted a federal budget sooner than that, the Legislature could be reconvened at an earlier time agreed upon by the president of the Senate and the speaker of the House.

In a letter to Ramsey last week, Senior Deputy Attorney General James F. Bullock said there were several problems with that arrangement.

The state Constitution, in Article II, Section 20, provides that the Legislature may adjourn "to any future day or other place." Historically, Bullock said, that has been understood to mean a certain date set upon adjournment.

"It is our view that the word 'day' means 'date' in the sense both houses must jointly adjourn to a specified day, and that the Constitution does not authorize the speaker of the House and the president of the Senate to determine that 'future day or other place,'" Bullock wrote.

In addition, he said, there is "serious question" about just whether Congress has fully adopted its 1982 budget.

And further, he said, the intent of the Constitution's requirement is that legislators have time to arrange their business so they can attend the session. "That portion of the resolution in question does not give either the citizens of the state or the members of the General Assembly any notice or knowledge when that body will convene," Bullock wrote.

As a result, he said, legislators could wait until November 16 to convene, ask the governor to call a special session, or exercise a provision of the Constitution allowing an "extra session" if requested by the members themselves.

Ramsey said he and Green decided to seek the extra session and sent their request to legislators, along with a form letter to be returned calling for the extra session. The constitution requires that three-fifths of the members in both the House and Senate must ask for the extra session if it is to be held.

Ramsey said he received more than enough letters from House members on Tuesday and Wednesday. Green couldn't be reached for comment, but Ramsey said they hoped to issue a joint, formal call for the extra session later this week.

to Bonn, where the West German government has been chastised by Washington for reneging on defense commitments. It also sends a message to Moscow, which may be trouble believing Reagan is serious about engaging in an arms race to force strategic arms limitation. Finally, those who insist on immediate arms control talks will be encouraged by signs of wilting resolve at the White House.

Although this is a high price to pay for the defense cuts, it may be worth it if it fulfills Stockman's expectations of low interest rates and revived financial markets. White House aides were encouraged to read the morning of Sept. 2 after Tim Baker's statement of a mild bond market rally. It was not only mild but transitory. By week's end, the financial markets were riding downward once more, with bonds seeking new lows.

That raises the question of when, if ever, will reduced defense spending be translated into lower interest rates and a healthier market. When it is formally announced? Never? With the American economy, the free market and the Republican Party all at stake, those are transcendent questions. Along with consideration of the gold option, they point to an agonizing decision that can be made only by a president, not his aides.

By any commonsensical interpretation, Kentucky's law was intended to prohibit the ancient practice by which voters were bought for a pint of moonshine each or one dollar cash. That practice was plainly reprehensible, though when the bribed voters stayed honestly bought, it added a certain integrity to the political process. To extend the principle to the free and fulsome speech of a hot election is to reach too far. In the name of campaign oratory, the Kentucky decree must be reversed.

There is much more yet to be done, Redmond says. Most of the teachers have little economics training, and the colleges neglect this area in teacher preparation.

Colson Urges Prison Fellowship Role

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

One of the most famous converts to Christianity since Paul, Charles "Chuck" Colson was in Greenville yesterday to bolster the Prison Fellowship ministry here.

The local portion of the lay evangelical organization which Colson founded in 1976 and operates internationally, is now ministering to persons in the Pitt County Jail, the Maury Correctional Center, and the Treatment Facility for Women here.

Colson said he feels the Community Care Committees here and elsewhere in the United States and several other countries are the heart of the Fellowship's success. Persons from local church groups provide a broad base for the organization, enable it to serve individual prisons and prisoners on a one-to-one basis, and also stimulates individual Christians to learn about the problems inside prisons, usually an out-of-sight out-of-mind underworld.

Prison Fellowship is funded largely with money from royalties from "Born Again," Colson's best-selling book about his conversion after having taken part in the Watergate coverup and prior to his conviction for having disseminated false information about Daniel Ellsberg to protect his boss, Pres. Richard Nixon. He was in two federal prisons for seven months. Royalties from his second book, "Life Sentence," about the beginnings of Prison Fellowship are also used, along with private donations from others. The organization, which started with a staff of six, now has 100 full-time staff members in 35 states and hundreds of volunteers. Colson said he expects to enroll 10,000 new prisoners this year, bringing total enrollments of prison inmates and ex-inmates to 18,000.

"The last place I wanted to go when I got out of prison," Colson said, "was back to prison and I struggled against it. But that's what the Lord wanted me to do. Now he visits probably 50 federal and state prisons a year, preaching a sermon to "fellow sinners" of redemption through Christ and daring them to change prison life from inside through the courage born of their new-found faith.

Colson calls on Prison Fellowship volunteers to go into prisons near their homes and conduct Bible studies and develop personal relationships with inmates, sharing their concerns and hopes and aiding them in maturing as Christians in the depressing and brutalizing prison environment. He also asks volunteers to write letters to prisoners. He told of visiting "Miss Mertie," a 90-year-old lady who lives in a nursing home in Columbus, Ga. He said she told him that her correspondence with 18 different inmates through Prison Ministry has made the last several years the most meaningful of her life.

The organization also conducts two-week out-of-prison seminars for inmates who have demonstrated Christian growth and leadership potential. He said none of the participants in these seminars have gone back to prison once they were out, "as I would expect," and that only a small percentage of those who have enrolled in Prison Fellowship have had to go back. By contrast, he said, four out of five of all prisoners released eventually have to go back and 80 per Chancellor...

At that point, a search also would be organized for a permanent chancellor.

The ECU campus has shown only slight public reaction to Brewer's resignation, which came after a three-year administration in which he irked faculty members and alumni by abrupt administrative changes that resulted in a major realignment of responsibilities and personalities in the university family.

East Carolina, with 13,264 students on campus, is the third largest institution in the state's 16-campus university system.

Several names were being mentioned today for possible consideration as interim chancellors, including some of those displaced in Brewer's administration. The names included those of Robert Maier, current vice chancellor for academic affairs, and former Vice Chancellors John Howell, Robert L. Holt and Robert Williams. Former Dean Doug Jones also has been mentioned.

Brewer's resignation followed public disclosure of his interest in the West Virginia job, a disclosure that aggravated trustee discontent simmering from his administrative program and a similar job application filed with the University of Louisville last year. In each case, Brewer did not inform the ECU trustees that he was interested in the other jobs.

Several trustees publicly voiced their dissatisfaction with his conduct during the last two weeks, apparently prompting Brewer to submit his resignation to Friday in a letter dated last Monday.

Brewer held a reception for new faculty members at his home Tuesday night, but has not made a general announcement of his resignation to the ECU community. Excerpts from his letter to Friday were made public Wednesday by the ECU News Bureau.

Colson says Prison Fellowship works not only for and with individual prisoners in the belief that spiritual awakening is what changes persons, and institutions and nations, but also for prison reform. He has expressed his disdain for a recent Reagan Task Force's recommendation that $2 billion be spent to build more prisons and has put forth ideas for alternative forms of punishment for criminals and for less dehumanizing treatment of prisoners.

Rape Victim

Aided Arrest

MIAMI (AP) — A 9-year-old rape victim recorded the license tag number and described her attacker to police, aiding in the arrest of a suspect, officers said.

The girl, who was not identified, said she knew what to do because of a television documentary she saw. Detective J.J. Crocker described her as "probably the best witness I've ever had in my life."

Roemy Castellano was arrested at his home Tuesday morning. He was charged with sexual battery and kidnapping.

Re-Attach Child's Foot

DENVER (AP) — Surgeons at University Hospital have successfully reattached the foot of an 11-month-old Wyoming girl that was cut off by a falling tree in a freak Labor Day accident.

Wednesday night after undergoing a six-hour operation that ended early Tuesday. One of the doctors who performed the operation says that she should recover full use of her foot.

Melissa was sitting on a tree stump in the Big Horn Mountains west of Sheridan when her father, Timothy O'Leary, felled a tree, which struck another tree, said Alan Marble of Sheridan's Community Ambulance Service.

The second tree dropped in the opposite direction and severed Melissa's foot when it fell, Marble said.

Melissa was flown to Denver from a Sheridan hospital and surgeons took turns peering through a microscope to join blood vessels and nerve fibers using thread smaller than a human hair.

"It's rare to try to reattach a foot, but we decided to try in this case because of the child's young age," one of the surgeons said. "So far, she's doing fine. The foot has good circulation."

Melissa also was the youngest person to undergo a reattachment at the hospital.

Although Melissa had been walking since she was 8 months old, doctors said she won't walk again for at least a couple of months. But if all goes well, she is expected to spend only two weeks in the hospital and then return home. A program of therapy will be designed as she recovers.

Auto Parts Theft Reported

Greenville Police are investigating the theft of an estimated $34,000 worth of auto parts, service equipment and tools from Doodle's Auto Parts on Greenville Boulevard sometime Tuesday night or early Wednesday morning.

Chief Glenn Cannon said the theft was reported sometime after 8 a.m. yesterday. Entrance to the building was gained through a large overhead door on the west side of the building.

The chief, who said the initial estimate of the amount of goods stolen was set at $18,000, noted that an inventory of the company stock is still underway.

Urban League Head Is Planning To Step Down

NEW YORK (AP) — Saying it's "time to pass the torch," Vernon E. Jordan has announced he will resign as president of the National Urban League to join a prestigious law firm in Washington, D.C.

Jordan, who has headed the non-profit, non-partisan league since 1971, said Wednesday he will depart on Dec. 31 to work in the nation's capital for the Dallas law firm of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld. Robert Strauss, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, is a partner in the firm.

One of the nation's leading civil rights spokesmen and the target of a shooting on May 29, 1980, Jordan said neither his health nor the still-unresolved attack in Fort Wayne, Ind., had anything to do with his decision.

"I contemplated a 10-year job from the beginning. Ten years of hard work suggests that it's time to pass the torch," he said. "My resignation is based on the belief that it is time for a change, personally and institutionally."

The 46-year-old black leader said that although he would be "off the front line, from time to time I will speak my piece ... One can resign from the leadership, but not from the troops. I'm still black. I still care. I'm still committed."

A seven-member search committee has been appointed to assist the board of trustees in selecting a successor.

"I leave the leadership of the Urban League with pride in what we have been able to accomplish; disappointment with the halt in progress toward equality; sadness at leaving my colleagues and friends, and exhilaration at the prospect of a new career," Jordan said at a crowded news conference.

Jordan, a frequent critic of the Reagan administration, said there has been a halt in progress by the civil rights movement because of "the vast majority of the American people who are reneging on the commitments of the 1960s. And this is being exacerbated by this administration."

Jordan first gained national attention as a 25-year-old law clerk when he led a black student, Charlayne Hunter, through a screaming mob of whites trying to prevent her from integrating the University of Georgia.

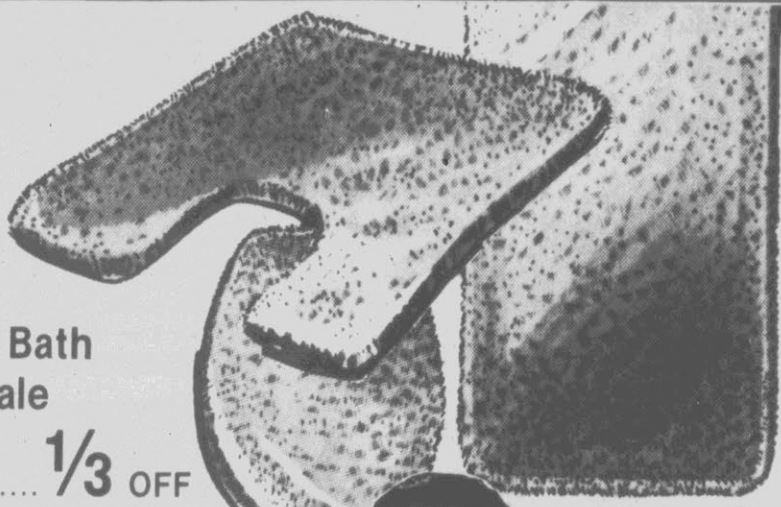

On June 15, 1971, he was named as successor of Whitney M. Young Jr., executive director of the Urban League. The title was changed to president several years ago.

Jordan left his post at the United Negro College Fund to take over the helm of an organization that now operates programs in 118 cities with 30,000 volunteers.

Redistricting Plan Hit Snag

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Approval of North Carolina's new redistricting plan is being held up as the U.S. Justice Department seeks more information about how it affects the black population and black elected officials.

And while Tom Stewart, a Justice Department spokesman, said the request for additional information was routine, he did not indicate how the department will finally rule.

The department must approve any change in election laws, such as redistricting, in areas covered by the Voting Rights Act and 40 counties in North Carolina are covered under that act.

State Board of Elections Director Alex Brock said he received a letter Tuesday from the department's Voting Section asking for detailed information on how the North Carolina General Assembly redrew district lines this year for 11 congressional, 120 House and 50 Senate seats.

The letter also requested data about the black population and black elected officials in the new and old districts.

Until the agency gets the information it has requested, potential candidates for the state House and Senate and candidates for Congress can't be sure what districts they will run in next year.

Brock said the request was more positive than negative. He said if the Justice Department had been unhappy with their preliminary review, they could have rejected the plans.

Controversy over the redistricting plans concerned efforts to protect incumbents while drawing new districts that better aligned 1980 Census returns in compliance with Supreme Court guidelines for equal representation.

The state House plan ended up with a population deviation between the largest and smallest district of nearly 24 percent. The state Senate plan had a deviation of almost 23 percent.

The congressional redistricting plan had a deviation of only 2.7 percent, but that required splitting Moore County between two districts.

Report Fund-Use Investigation

CHICAGO (AP) — A federal grand jury is investigating whether Cardinal John P. Cody illegally diverted tax-exempt church funds to a personal friend, the Chicago Sun-Times reported today.

In a copyright story, the newspaper said the grand jury has issued subpoenas for financial records of the Chicago Archdiocese, the cardinal and his friend, Helen Dolan Wilson of St. Louis.

The newspaper said it learned Cody provided almost $90,000 in 1969 and 1970 for Mrs. Wilson to buy a home in Boca Raton, Fla., shortly after she retired from an $8,000-a-year position as an office manager in St. Louis and moved to Chicago.

The grand jury is looking into the source of those funds, according to unnamed sources quoted by the Sun-Times.

Cody, reached by the newspaper at a bishops' conference in suburban Mundelein, declined to comment on the report.

"I don't need any chance for rebuttal," said Cody, 73, archbishop of the nation's largest Catholic diocese with 2.4 million members.

Efforts by The Associated Press to reach Cody were not successful.

Joseph Zingrich of the St. Louis-based brokerage firm of Stifel Nicolaus & Co. confirmed that records of Mrs. Wilson's account there had been subpoenaed by the grand jury, the newspaper said.

The newspaper said Cody held personal control of two bank accounts that received deposits of more than $1 million from 1966 to 1973.

One account had been established prior to Cody's becoming archbishop in Chicago and was used to provide donations to foreign and domestic bishops and told associates he paid for the home out of personal funds.

Mrs. Wilson could not be reached for comment, the newspaper said.

Mrs. Wilson, 74, was described by associates of Cody as a close personal friend and a relative by marriage. Mrs. Wilson's father married Cody's aunt in 1912, about a year after her mother died.

Over the years, confusion has developed over their relationship. Cody refers to her as his cousin and she has been known in newspaper accounts and by church officials as Cody's niece and as his sister.

She has traveled extensively with the cardinal and was present in 1965 when he was enthroned as archbishop in Chicago and in 1967 when he was inducted in Rome into the College of Cardinals.

Mrs. Wilson was divorced from her husband, David Beam Wilson, in 1939. In 1944, Cody used his influence as chancellor of the St. Louis Diocese to obtain a position for her as a clerk in the church, according to Geraldine Cody, the wife of Cody's brother, Thomas.

Cody was chancellor from 1940 to 1947 and bishop of the diocese from 1947 to 1954.

Monsignor James P. O'Connell, administrator of the office that Mrs. Wilson managed, said her annual salary was about $8,000.

Mrs. Wilson reared two children, both college graduates, and "lived the high life all her life," Mrs. Cody told the Sun-Times.

"I know that she lived well," said O'Connell, "but it was her husband... I can tell you she didn't make it while working here." Court records said that when Mrs. Wilson divorced her husband in 1939, she received $1 a month alimony and $50 a month child support. When Wilson died in 1969 in Louisville, he left no will and his only known asset was a car worth $150 that he left to his second wife, the Sun-Times said.

CARDINAL JOHN CODY

priests on official visits to Chicago. The second fund was set up by Cody and reportedly used to pay utility, grocery, entertainment, travel and other expenses related to operating the church-owned mansion in Chicago, where Cody lives.

The accounts are not subject to outside audit, the Sun-Times said.

Internal church documents quoted by the newspaper said $68,000 was deposited into one of the two accounts under Cody's control while Mrs. Wilson was making the cash payments for her Florida home.

The Sun-Times said Cody

East Assails O'Connor Abortion-Issue Stance

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court nominee Sandra Day O'Connor deftly sidestepped several attempts Wednesday by Sen. John East, R-N.C., to uncover her views on the legality of abortions.

East, a leading abortion opponent, repeatedly rephrased questions to draw Mrs. O'Connor out on the subject during confirmation hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee. Mrs. O'Connor's nomination has drawn strong opposition from the anti-abortion movement because of several votes she cast when she was a member of the Arizona state legislature.

She told East it was "improper" for a prospective justice to give such an opinion because she might have to rule on abortion cases that come before the Supreme Court. She also told several senators that her votes on abortion were cast largely for legal and parliamentary reasons and that she was personally opposed to abortions.

East, not to be denied, asked whether Mrs. O'Connor agreed with Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 Supreme Court decision which declared abortion to be a constitutionally protected right.

"I just feel it is improper for me to endorse or criticize that decision, which may well come back before the court in one form or another," she replied.

East remained dissatisfied with her non-committal attitude.

"In terms of getting a feel for your judicial philosophy beyond generalities, certainly you can comment upon already decided cases and doctrines emanating out of them," he said.

He added that Mrs. O'Connor's personal opposition to abortion did not satisfy him. Many people oppose abortion personally but favor giving women the right to have them, he said.

East also told the nominee that her abortion views would not be the test upon which he would base his decision on whether to support her.

But he said he would probably have further questions concerning her abortion views when the committee hearing resumed today.

BOARD TO MEET

The executive board of the Pitt County Cancer Society will meet at 12 noon Friday in the dining room at Pitt Memorial Hospital. A review of the fund drive for the year will be on the agenda. Appointments for the next year will be made and staffing for the new downtown office will be discussed.

Belated Apology

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. John East, R-N.C., has sent a letter to Sen. Thomas Eagleton apologizing for remarks he made about the Missouri Democrat's "mental problems".

A source told the News and Observer of Raleigh that Eagleton's office received the letter Wednesday, but that the senator was out of town and had not read the apology.

The letter followed a wave of criticism over remarks East made at a Sept. 1 press conference in High Point.

East was asked about Eagleton's motivation for offering an amendment that would prohibit non-farmers from owning tobacco allotments and responded with a disjointed attack on his colleague.

"Now, he was George McGovern's running mate, you know, in 1972, and then he dropped out because it turned out he had mental problems", he said, "and as for the motivations of Sen. Eagleton, I do not know. I would direct those questions to Sen. Eagleton."

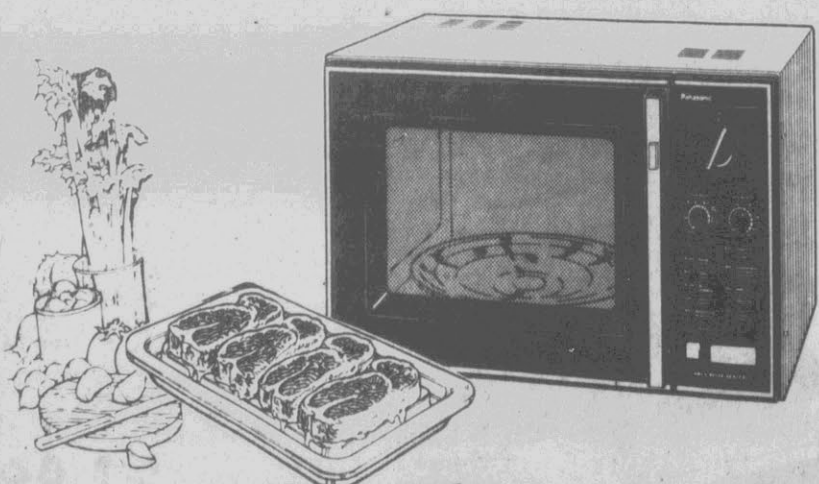

Eagleton removed himself from the vice presidential part of the Democratic ticket after it was learned he had undergone psychiatric treatment, including shock therapy, for depression suffered years before the campaign.

McGovern Attacks 'New Right' As An Appeal To Selfishness

By The Associated Press
In a rapid-fire tour of three North Carolina cities, former U.S. Sen. George S. McGovern criticized President Reagan, former President Richard Nixon and the emergence of the New Right. In a speech Wednesday at St. Augustine's College in Raleigh, McGovern said Reagan's policies were based on an "appeal to selfishness."

"That's what Reaganism is all about," McGovern told about 350 students and faculty members. "Take care of me ... don't be concerned for the poor and afflicted ... for black and brown people who have been neglected." He also made passing reference to his loss to Nixon in his 1972 presidential election bid, with a mention of the current negotiations for a Nixon presidential library at Duke University, where Nixon received his law degree. "In politics, as in life, you sometimes suffer setbacks that are not a clamorous as they might seem at the time," he said. "I'd rather be right here ... as the loser in 1972 than trade places with the man who defeated me, even if they are building a library." McGovern, who was denied a fourth Senate term in South Dakota in a campaign marked by heavy opposition from New Right political action committees, was critical of the motives behind emerging conservatism. "I'm not concerned when a good, thoughtful conservative defeats somebody like Frank Church or Dick Clark or George McGovern," he told an audience at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. "What I'm concerned about is when some second-rate dink does it — people who quit thinking and let their emotions take over, and that's the type of people who swept into office."

Offer Technical Writing Classes

ECU News Bureau
Technical writing — increasingly important in business and industry as our technology becomes more complex — is the subject of two October 20 programs to be offered at East Carolina University. The first program is scheduled for 9:00 a.m. to noon. The second, from 2 to 5 p.m., will explain opportunities available to skilled technical writers who wish to become consultants. Leaders are Dr. Bertie Fearing of the ECU English faculty, a specialist in technical writing, and Dr. Thomas Warren, author, training leader and authority on technical writing programs in higher education and industry. Fee for each seminar is $20, or $30 for both seminars. Voting Barred For 2 Annexed Areas

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — The U.S. Justice Department has refused to let two communities recently annexed by New Bern vote in upcoming elections, claiming that the mostly-white areas have helped dilute the city's black vote. New Bern officials voted unanimously Tuesday night not to hold the Oct. 6 city elections until the matter is settled.

The Justice Department's Civil Rights Division contends that the city violated the 1965 Voting Rights Act when it attempted to annex the areas, containing 850 voters, and other communities since 1970. Division officials say the overall effect has been to dilute the black vote by 3 percent to 4 percent. At a meeting Tuesday night of the city's aldermen, Pinecrest resident Don McDowell told the board that residents of the two communities are being treated "like felons, because felons can't vote."

Sierra Club To Hold Meet

The September meeting of the Cypress Group, Sierra Club, Joseph LeConte Chapter, will be held beginning at 8 p.m. Monday, September 14 at First Presbyterian Church, corner Elm and 14th Streets. A slide show will be shown, featuring local outings which the group sponsors — dayhikes, canoe trips, base camps and other activities in eastern North Carolina. Interested people are invited to attend the meeting and to become acquainted with the group's work and its members.

"It seems to me that the American Revolution started with taxation without representation. I sincerely hope we don't have a New Bern Tea Party," McDowell said. City Attorney A.D. Ward told the aldermen they have two options — to fight the Justice Department decision in federal court, or to change the method of voting in the city. Ward was instructed to find a judge to get an injunction against the board of elections and was tentatively given until Friday to do so.

Nicaragua State Of Emergency

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The ruling leftist junta decreed a national state of "economic and social" emergency Wednesday, banning strikes, raising import taxes and declaring "economic sabotage" a crime punishable by one to three years in prison.

As part of an attempt to shore up the economy, the junta also ordered cuts in government spending which it said should save it $43.8 million in the next year.

The decree declaring economic sabotage a crime said this included paralyzing transportation, publishing false economic news, raising prices without government authorization, striking or inciting others to strike, seizing land or other means of production, and "inciting foreign governments to inflict damage on the national economy."

Daniel Ortega Saavedra, coordinator of the three-man junta, told a news conference the decree would be in force for one year, beginning Wednesday.

He appealed to all Nicaraguans to help the government combat growing fiscal fraud, the black market in foreign currency, excessive bureaucracy, increasingly frequent strikes and "other labor indiscipline," land and factory seizures "and other elements of economic destabilization." Ortega said before issuing the decree, the junta "consulted with leaders of all sectors of the country." But there was no immediate reaction from business groups, which have recently been critical of the junta's policies and its increasingly leftist ideological trend.

Nicaragua's economy was shattered by the 1978-79 civil war which ended with the overthrow of dictator Anastasio Somoza by the leftist Sandinista National Liberation Front. More than 50,000 people were killed in the fighting, and Somoza and his associates transferred much of the country's wealth abroad before they fled.

The U.S. government provided the junta with $75 million in economic aid, but the Reagan administration withdrew about $15 million of this earlier this year, claiming Nicaragua was helping the leftist guerrillas in neighboring El Salvador. The Nicaraguan government denied official involvement.

The emergency decree ordered a 5 percent cut in the national budget of $87.2 million; 10 percent cuts in food, transportation and other subsidies; froze all government jobs, and put taxes of 30 to 100 percent on imports of luxury goods.

The decree also suspends all administrative appeals against the government, orders tax collection tightened and orders strict enforcement of controls on foreign exchange and laws against embezzlement of government funds and other fiscal wrongdoing.

Ortega said the government is studying legislation to penalize the black market in foreign currency. The cordoba, Nicaragua's currency, is officially pegged at 10 to $1, but on the black market the dollar sells for about 30 cordobas, mostly to people taking their money out of the country.

Up to now, the junta ignored the black market and no one has been punished for dealing in it.

Although no government figures on the flight of capital area available, banking sources say it has been very heavy during the past year. Meanwhile, the foreign trade deficit is estimated at $100 million.

Marriage Is Confirmed By George Wallace, 62

wealthy coal mining businessman. It was revealed Wednesday that the two were recently married. (AP Laserphoto)

MONTGOMERY Ala. (AP) — Former Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace says he has married 32-year-old Linda Lee Taylor, a businesswoman who once performed country music songs during his 1968 presidential campaign.

He would not say Wednesday when the wedding took place, but others close to him said it was held before a judge "in recent days."

Wallace, 62, confirmed the marriage in a telephone interview, saying, "I'm very happy to have as my wife one with such high values, honesty, integrity and intelligence. She is a fine woman."

Mrs. Wallace gave up singing to run the family business when her father, James Taylor, became ill, relatives said. She now is vice president of Taylor Coal Co. and manages the family-owned Hillard Coal Co. The new Mrs. Wallace, contacted at her home in Jasper, Ala., said she had the flu and declined comment. She is divorced and has a son, 6-year-old Taylor Gordon.

Described as a "Dolly Parton look-alike," Mrs. Wallace sang country music on Wallace's 1968 presidential campaign tour with her sister, Mona, as "Mona and Lisa, The Singing Taylor Sisters."

Wallace has been married twice before. His first wife, Lurleen, died of cancer in 1968, while she was governor. Wallace has four grown children from that marriage.

In 1971, Wallace married Cornelia Ellis Snively; they divorced in 1978 after he learned that she had planted bugs in the governor's mansion to tape-record his conversations.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices moved higher today amid optimistic U.S. comments about lower interest rates that came one day after tough congressional talk about taking more severe steps to get rates down.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks was up 5.42 points to 859.30 after two hours of trading. The measure gained 2.76 points Wednesday before trading was halted with about 30 minutes to go because of a power failure in Lower Manhattan.

Advances were ahead of declines by a 3-1 margin in New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Early NYSE gainers included the interest-sensitive financial stocks, with Chase Manhattan up 1/2 to 49 1/2, Dean Witter Reynolds 3/4 to 27 3/4 and E.F. Hutton 1/2 to 31 1/2.

Continental Airlines led the early active list, up 1/4 at 9 1/4. Two blocks totaling 435,000 shares were sold at 9 1/4. The carrier said its passenger traffic fell 6.4 percent in August.

Correction

A news article published in Monday's edition about a Sunday morning traffic collision on Third Street near the Pitt Street intersection incorrectly identified one of the drivers involved. Michael Anthony Stancill of Route 1, Ayden, as having been charged with exceeding a safe speed in connection with the mishap.

Stancill was not charged with a violation in connection with traffic accident. The Daily Reflector regrets the error.

The NYSE's composite index was up 0.60 to 69.08 and at the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 4.17 at 324.87.

Forged Checks Being Pursued

Greenville Police are looking for several forged checks believed to have been returned to local area businesses marked "account closed" in connection with an investigation being conducted by the department, Chief Glenn Cannon said today.

Cannon said the checks which have the name "Marjorie A. Hill" and the address "P.O. Box 188, Greenville" printed on them are for a personal account at North Carolina National Bank in Greenville, which has been closed. The forged checks are signed "Marjorie A. Hill" or "Alice Hill".

The checks were stolen from Ms. Hill's home, according to Cannon, who added that a number of the checks have been used to purchase appliances ranging in value from $200 to $450, as well as food.

Any area business having one of the forged checks should contact the Police Department's Detective Division, the chief said.

Bears Help Rose Open Home Slate

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Rose High School's Rampants put their show on the field for the home crowd Friday night, opening their Ficklen Stadium schedule against New Bern at 7:30 p.m.

And Coach Ronald Vincent is hopeful of a second straight victory for Rose against the Bears.

Rose managed a 15-14 win over Jacksonville last Friday night in the season opening contest. In that game, Rose scored first, but Jacksonville came back to take a 7-6 and then a 14-6 lead.

The Rampants, however, rallied to kick a half-ending field goal by Willie Levett to cut the margin to 14-9. (In game writeups, the field goal was credited to Ernest Reeves, listed in the game program as wearing the number later assigned to Levett.)

That kick, which hit the left upright and bounced through, proved to be the big difference in the game.

Later, on its first possession of the second half, Rose pushed the ball in as Chris McLawhorn made his second touchdown reception of the night, and that gave the Rampants a 15-14 edge.

From there on out, the defense took over, helped along by a number of penalties against the Cardinals, and shut out Jacksonville.

"I think we played a little better than I expected us to," Vincent said. "We had some problems on defense in the first half. We were confused about our assignments, plus I think our inexperience showed, too."

Vincent said the Rampants made some minor adjustments at halftime, and they proved to be a boon to the team. "For instance, we moved Larry Batts from one end to the other. We noted that they had a tendency to roll mostly to the right, so we put him there and that put a little more pressure on their passing game. It made a big difference."

In the second half, Jacksonville's first play netted 13 yards and a first down. But in the remainder of the half, the Cardinals got only 17 more yards in net offense, and didn't get another first down — a key factor in the win.

A couple of times, the Rose defense got some help from the Cards, who piled up well over 100 yards in penalties. Twice on short yardage situations, players moved, bringing down a rain of yellow flags.

"I still think holding them to 30 yards in the second half was pretty impressive," the coach said. "I'm not sure why they didn't pass more, maybe it was because we were getting more pressure on them then."

Offensively, Vincent said that field position had a lot to do with Rose's inability to score in the second half. "We started once on the three and the next time on the five. That's a big hole to get out of."

The time when the Rampants started at the three came right after McLawhorn had returned a punt 93 yards for an apparent touchdown. But a clip was called behind the play, at the seven, killing the score.

"That's either three or four times in the last two years that Chris has lost a touchdown because of a call behind him. And, in reviewing the films, we don't believe it was a clip anyway."

"At any rate, we have reemphasized our instructions to let Chris go once he gets past you. We don't want another big run called back on a block or clip that has no effect on the run anyway."

Vincent said he feels that Rampants will be able to move the ball better under better field position. "We really didn't get a chance to open up like I'd want to do."

Vincent praised the play of McLawhorn, who not only had the long punt return, but also

Dum-De-Dum-Dum! Tar Heels Accuse ECU Of Practice Spying

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — East Carolina University football coach Ed Emory is upset with charges made Wednesday by University of North Carolina officials that his staff has spied on Tar Heel practices.

Kenneth Broun, Dean of the UNC Law School, said he had caught a man whom he identified as ECU assistant coach Charles Elmquist, apparently watching the practice session from the Law School library, which towers over the practice field.

East Carolina travels to Chapel Hill Saturday for its final meeting with the Atlantic Coast Conference Tar Heels.

But Emory denies the allegations.

"I'm just saying my folks have been at practice, team meetings and staff meetings," Emory said. "To my knowledge, no one from here has been there."

University of North Carolina coach Dick Crum said he wasn't surprised that it had happened.

"A lot of people had thought that has gone on in the past, but we've never done anything about it," Crum said.

Ken Saylor, an injured Tar Heel player, was in the library and noticed the man watching the practice and taking notes. He notified Crum who contacted Broun and asked that he look into the situation.

When confronted, the man refused to identify himself or let Broun look at his notes. But Broun said before the man covered the pad he was writing on, he saw x's and o's written as if plays were being diagrammed.

"I told him he could stay in the library as long as he was using the materials," Broun said. "I also told him if he was using the library to watch football plays he would have to leave."

Broun said he and Saylor watched the man for a few minutes before the man left. He said the same man and another had been in that area of the library on Tuesday.

"Later, a coach's secretary brought an ECU football program and I was able to identify one of the coach's as appearing to be the man I saw," Broun said. "I think it was the defensive line coach. I think his name was Elmquist."

Broun said Saylor then identified the other man from the day before as another assistant, Garry Fast.

"There's positive identification," Crum said. "If it's just a couple students who come down and say something to you, that's one thing. But when the dean of the law school makes a positive identification, it's hard to question."

Emory countered the charges by saying it was impossible for his coaches to be there since they both were at practice Tuesday afternoon and in the ECU athletic area all day Wednesday.

In fact, Emory said his Pirates practiced Wednesday night because a number of unknown people watched their practice Tuesday. Five of those people were asked to leave.

"We had a lot of similar problems ourselves yesterday," Emory said. "That's why we moved to the stadium today. In 1979, one of their coaches came here and identified himself as a high school coach and sat in our stands during practice."

Emory said a man named Charles Shavitz identified that person as UNC quarterback coach Cleve Bryant and Bryant was then asked to leave.

Emory added that assistant coaches approached five people at practice on Tuesday, asking for identification.

"Two of them refused, and were asked to leave. The other three got in a car and drove away when our people approached them."

The ECU coach said that waiting until Wednesday to try and get information was "kind of late, anyway. We put our game plan in on Monday. It makes it tough to make changes on stuff you might learn on Wednesday. Besides, we're not the only team that Carolina plans this year."

Emory also expressed anger that Carolina officials had not contacted him or athletic director Ken Karr. "The first thing I heard about it was when our sports information people told me after newspapers started calling. Seems like the professional thing to do would have been to contact us right away, and not call every newspaper in the state. I think they were out for sensationalism and a way to get their kids up for the game."

Crum said his athletic director might talk to the ECU athletic director, and that the school might want to ask the American Football Coaches Association to look into the matter. Emory said he agrees, if Crum thinks he's right.

"I don't know why he wouldn't go to the NCAA or the American Coaches Association Ethics Committee," Emory said. "But I know my people were in staff meetings today and in practice tonight."

Conley In VB Victory

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley's girls gained a two-match victory over Rose High School yesterday in the opening volleyball outing of the season for both teams.

Conley took the first match in two straight games, but the second match went three sets before the Valkyries pulled out the win.

The first match saw Conley take a 15-2 win in the opening game, then come back with a 17-15 victory in the second game. Sherri Waters served up six straight serves in the first match for Conley, while Darlene Cannon added seven in the second. Arlene Valentine had five in a row for Rose in the second game.

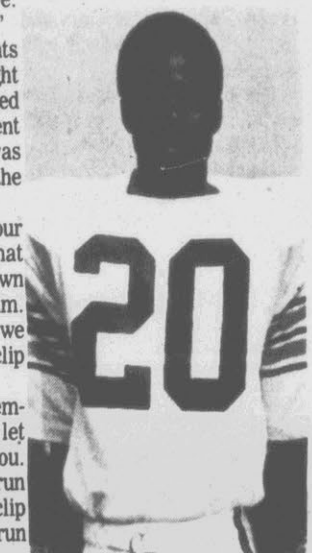

Conley won the first game in the second match, 15-6, but Rose came back with a 15-13 win in the second game. Conley then won the match with a 15-13 score in the final game.

Waters had seven straight for Conley in the first game, and added five in a row in the third. Toni Streeter led Rose in the first game with four, while Frances Barnhill had four in the second.

Rose returns to action on Thursday, September 17, against North Pitt, while Conley hosts Ayden-Grifton on Tuesday.

Series Between Carolina, ECU Coming To An End On Saturday

By BILL WERONKA
AP Sports Writer

Saturday marks the end of a short and somewhat lackluster rivalry.

North Carolina versus East Carolina. It appears to be a natural rivalry but the last seven meetings have set off few fireworks.

In 1975, the Pirates soundly whipped the Tar Heels 38-17 and in 1979 the Pirates pulled off a tie with the favored Tar Heels. The rest of the series has belonged to North Carolina.

The eighth and final meeting Saturday may be the highlight of the series, but not necessarily because of the football played in Kenan Stadium.

It seems there may be some covert activity afoot. On Wednesday, the Tar Heels reported coming across a couple of East Carolina coaches sitting in the stands and taking in the Tar Heel practice — a no-no.

East Carolina coach Ed Emory denied any of his coaches were in the vicinity, saying his entire staff had been "in house all day."

At his Tuesday news conference, North Carolina coach Dick Crum was discussing what advantage having played one game might give the Pirates over the 13th-ranked Tar Heels.

"They've had a trial run," Crum said.

Then he added that North Carolina had the advantage of scouting East Carolina's 42-6 romp over Western Carolina.

Crum and the North Carolina players all felt the Pirates would be psyched up for the game. They were embarrassed last year 31-3 and the players would like nothing better than to end the series on a winning note.

In light of the alleged spy episode, Emory had some interesting comments at his Wednesday news conference.

"We don't know how many changes were made on offense with Famous Amos (Lawrence) gone ... We don't know what they are doing."

"Our No. 1 thing this week at East Carolina has been not worrying about what North Carolina does. We've been worrying about East Carolina."

Crum's biggest concern Tuesday was preparing his team for the game. He said he would rather play a big name because the outside expectation of a sure win was not there.

"People expect Carolina to have an easy time with them (East Carolina)," Crum said.

Crum drew a parallel with Duke's coming battle with Ohio State.

"They'll drive Ohio State nuts throwing the football ... You just wait and see."

North Carolina's national ranking adds to the problem but Crum is not about to give that up.

Montreal Fate Doesn't Get Any Better

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

Although his team has given up 21 runs in two games since he took over as manager of the Montreal Expos, Jim Fanning knows his life will get better...when his team wins a game.

"We scored enough runs to win, but we were a little shabby on defense," said Fanning after Montreal gave up five runs in the eighth inning to lose 11-8 to the Philadelphia Phillies Wednesday night.

Fanning, who took over the Expos after Dick Williams was fired, lost his first game 10-5 on Tuesday night.

Gary Matthews greeted Montreal reliever Charlie Lea with a three-run homer in the bottom of the eighth inning to climax the five-run rally.

"Our pitchers made just enough mistakes to get hurt," said Fanning. "The report from the bullpen was that Charlie Lea was throwing very well. That's when I decided to bring him in."

Despite the consecutive bombings by the Phillies, Fanning is a long way from losing his enthusiasm.

After talking to the media, the new manager walked back into the quiet locker room for a pep talk before the team left Philadelphia for a three-game series in Chicago. After that, the Expos will be at home for 15 straight games.

"Okay guys, we've got to start a string in Chicago," he said, clapping his hands. "Let's do it in Chicago men."

In other National League games, Cincinnati edged San Diego 5-4, New York beat Pittsburgh 5-3, Atlanta blanked Houston 9-0, Chicago trimmed St. Louis 7-3 and San Francisco defeated Los Angeles 6-3 in 11 innings.

Matthews had a perfect night at the plate for the Phillies, with two walks, a double and a single to go with the game-winning homer. He also had a homer in Tuesday night's victory.

"I don't want to say I'm back in the groove yet, but I'm happy I'm hitting," said Matthews, whose average fell under .270 after he hit well over .300 in the first half. "I would say this is the longest I've gone without hitting the ball hard."

With Montreal ahead 8-6, Larry Bowa walked and Manny Trillo doubled to open the eighth and Bowa scored on pinch-hitter Dick Davis' sacrifice fly. Pete Rose then singled home Trillo with the tying run and Bake McBride reached base on second baseman Rodney Scott's error.

Lea then replaced Woody Fryman, 5-3, and Matthews slugged a 1-0 pitch for his fifth homer of the year.

Ron Reed, 4-1, the fourth of five Philadelphia pitchers, was the winner.

Garry Maddox had three hits and three RBIs for Philadelphia, giving him eight RBIs in the last two games. Mike Schmidt hit his 25th homer, most in the majors, for the Phillies.

"I would say this is one of the most satisfying wins we've had in the second half," said Phillies Manager Dallas Green. "This is more like what the Phillies are capable of."

Cubs 7, Cardinals 3
Bobby Bonds hit two home runs in a game for the second time in three days as Chicago swept the three-game series and handed St. Louis its fifth straight loss.

The Cubs, tied for second place in the NL East with the Mets and Expos, 1½ games behind the Cardinals, already led 3-0 in the second inning when Bonds hit his first homer, a two-run shot. He added a solo homer in the fourth.

Winner Mike Krukow, 6-8, surrendered all three St. Louis runs in the sixth, but only one of them was earned because of a throwing error by shortstop Ivan DeJesus.

Braves 9, Astros 0
Phil Niekro scattered eight hits for his 41st career shutout for Atlanta, but he said he stifled Houston on an assortment of pitches rather than relying on his staple pitch, the knuckleball.

"I didn't have my good knuckler," said Niekro, 7-5. "I was wild with my knuckleball, so I used a fastball, a slider and occasionally a screwball. I probably threw pitches other than the knuckleball 85 or 90 percent of the time."

The Braves provided Niekro with a 5-0 lead in the first two innings on Glenn Hubbard's two-run single and Bob Horner's three-run homer, the 100th of his career.

Rafael Ramirez contributed four hits and three RBI to the Braves' 15-hit attack.

Reds 5, Padres 4
Johnny Bench hit the game-winning single for Cincinnati with two outs in the ninth inning and also blasted his fourth homer in the four games he has started since coming off the disabled list last week.

The Reds trailed 4-2 going into the ninth before rallying for three runs. Ken Griffey had an RBI grounder and Dave Concepcion hit a run-scoring single to tie the game, setting up Bench's decisive hit.

Bench, who suffered a broken ankle early in the season, hit a solo homer in the sixth, the 362nd of his career, putting him ahead of Joe DiMaggio on the all-time list.

Mets 5, Pirates 3
Hubie Brooks hit two run-scoring singles and Terry Leach won his first major-league game with 31-3 innings of scoreless relief pitching to lead New York over Pittsburgh.

Leach, 1-0, came into the game in the fifth inning and allowed only two hits before giving way to Ray Searage, who retired the last five batters for his first major-league save.

Giants 6, Dodgers 3
San Francisco took leads into the bottom of the ninth and 10th innings at Los Angeles before making the final margin stick in the 11th on Johnnie LeMaster's tie-breaking single and Dave Bergman's two-run homer.

The Giants led 2-0 before singles by Steve Garvey, Jay Johnstone, Mike Scioscia and Rick Monday tied the score in the ninth. Jack Clark and Garvey traded homers in the 10th.

The victory snapped a four-game winning streak for Los Angeles, which also had won 30 of the previous 41 games with the Giants at Dodger Stadium.

Horner's 100th Homer

Atlanta Braves' Bob Horner (5) gets the high five from teammates Rafael Ramirez (16) as he crosses home during the second inning of Wednesday's night's game in Atlanta. Horner's homer, off of Houston Astros' Nolan Ryan, was his 100th and gave Atlanta three of its nine runs in the 9-0 game. (AP Laserphoto)

Bears Help...

w'd give both of them the chance to start. Tom had some problems last week, but he came in in pressure situations, too. The first time he came in, we had just lost the lead, and the second time, we were deep in a hole. Giving him a chance to start is only fair."

The coach added that having two quarterbacks is not a bad thing. "We're going to have two quarterbacks this year. A lot can happen over the course of a season, and we don't want to be caught cold if something happens to one or the other. We need to have two experienced players there."

If there is an element that didn't please Vincent in the game, it was kickoff coverage. "You know, we haven't covered kicks well as long as I've been here. We usually have our best players in there too. This year, we started out with a group that didn't have anyone that was slower than 4.9 in the 40. But we still didn't cover well. Maybe it's desire, and the people in there know they're going to be playing anyway."

"At any rate, we've made some changes and I hope that they'll do better this week."

New Bern brings a 1-0-1 record into the game, having beaten 3-A Havelock 13-0 and tied 4-A Kinston 13-13.

"They have some good backs, and one of them, Larry Berry, is supposed to be one of the top prospects in the east," Vincent said. "But the guy that's been doing the most damage so far is Eric Lewis."

Lewis, just a junior, was switched from quarterback on last year's junior varsity, to halfback on this year's varsity. Running out of the wishbone backfield, he has accounted for 215 yards in the two games so far.

While not expected to be a passing team, the Bears were able to throw the ball against Kinston, as quarterback Leonard Spicer hit for 146 yards against the Vikings.

"They have good team speed, and their defensive line is probably the strongest part of their game," Vincent added. That line is anchored by 5-11, 195-pound sophomore tackle Arthur Grady, who reportedly benches 350 pounds, and by guard Brian Saunders.

"Regardless of who we play and what their caliber is," Vincent said, "we're going to have to be ready to play. We can't just show up and expect to win. We found out last year we couldn't do that with a team that was expected to be the best in the state, and we certainly can't this year with a team so young and inexperienced."

"Beating Jacksonville was important to us, but it's not the whole season. We've still got nine games to play, and hopefully a few more, and we have to be able to play well to compete."

Vincent said he planned no changes in the team's starting lineup, with the exception of Buie at quarterback.

Pittsburgh Seeks To Get Back On Track Tonight

MIAMI (AP) — Pittsburgh quarterback Terry Bradshaw says there was a time when National Football League observers wouldn't have been so concerned about the Steelers season-opening loss to the Kansas City Chiefs.

But when you're coming off a 9-7 season and you failed to make the playoffs for the first time in nine years, such alarm is understandable, the 12-year veteran says.

"If we were coming off a good year, people would just say, 'Hey, this is still a great team.' But we're coming off a bad year, and I don't think they're overreacting so much as being a little bit concerned," said Bradshaw. "In football, it's so important to get off to a good start. Well, we didn't, and now everybody's scratching their heads and wondering."

Pittsburgh fumbled eight times, losing five, and Bradshaw threw two interceptions as Kansas City upset the four-time Super Bowl champions 37-33 last Sunday. Chiefs linebacker Thomas Howard scored the winning touchdown when he scooped up a Bradshaw fumble and raced 65 yards late in the fourth quarter.

The Steelers, with 15 veterans back from their four titles years and 18 others who played in at least one Super Bowl, will try to get back on the right track tonight when they meet a young Miami Dolphins team that's also struggling to regain its former NFL prominence.

Gametime for the nationally-televised matchup at the Orange Bowl is 8:30 p.m. EDT. A crowd of better than 65,000 is expected for the seventh meeting ever between the American Conference rivals.

The Dolphins, who were 8-8 in 1980 and haven't won a playoff game since Super Bowl

VIII on Jan. 13, 1974, are coming off an impressive 20-7 triumph over St. Louis.

Second-year quarterback David Woodley tossed a pair of touchdowns and the Miami defense yielded only 61 yards on the ground against the Cardinals. The Steelers will face Woodley with third-year pro Dwayne Woodruff at left cornerback, in place of the injured Ron Johnson.

Shula, who is six victories shy of becoming the fourth coach in NFL history to win 200 games, said his club will be looking to establish consistency in its ground attack. Dolphins runners piled up 144 yards on 33 carries Sunday, but 46 of them came on a Tony Nathan run late in the game.

"We would have hoped the running game would have been more productive early," said Shula. "We weren't pleased with the production offensively."

The Steelers, who have not lost the first two games of any season since 1970, have never beaten the Dolphins in Miami, although the club did win two of its Super Bowl titles in the Orange Bowl.

Miami has compiled the second best record of any NFL team — 14-7 — during ABC prime-time telecasts, while Pittsburgh is 10-10 with four consecutive losses.

There are a dozen games Sunday with Atlanta at Green Bay, Houston at Cleveland, Los Angeles at New Orleans, the New York Giants at Washington, Tampa Bay at Kansas City, Buffalo at Baltimore, Chicago at San Francisco, Cincinnati at the New York Jets, Denver at Seattle, Detroit at San Diego, New England at Philadelphia and St. Louis at Dallas.

Bill Riordan Denies He Started Net Manners

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Bill Riordan remembers how it all got started.

"Ilie Nastase had just come over to this country from Romania," related the onetime tennis entrepreneur from Salisbury, Md.

"Ilie was playing a tournament in Macon, Ga. When he got there he saw Tomas Koch, the hippy Brazilian, playing in a brightly colored sunflower shirt.

"Everybody was shocked, even Ilie. 'Hey, what goes here?' Ilie said to his Romanian teammate, Ion Tiriac. 'Tomorrow I think I come out in my polka-dot shortie pajamas.' Fifty dollars says you don't dare," said Tiriac. 'Bet,' said Ilie.

The next day, sure enough, when Nastase took off his sweatshirt he was wearing his polka-dot pajamas."

Riordan recalls another time when Nastase and Jimmy Connors were playing doubles in England both appeared in British toppers and never took them off during the match.

Another time Nastase and Connors, who were labeled the Tantrum Twins, were playing in Salisbury, once scene of the U.S. Indoor Championships.

In a petulant gesture, after complaining of a line call, Connors hit a ball toward the linesman, missing by a yard or so.

"That'll cost you $25," barked Riordan, who was director of the tournament and also boss of the maverick Independent Players Association of which Nastase and Connors were charter members.

Newsman were baffled. "What if he'd hit the linesman?" someone asked.

"That would have been $50," Riordan replied blandly.

It became known as Riordan's Law. Some people, recalling those boisterous times a decade or so ago, regard Riordan as the father of the changing manners in the onetime very proper gentlemanly sport.

"That isn't true," insists the enterprising Barnum of the courts. "It's true I encouraged the boys to be individuals. But I always have been strongly opposed to vulgar gestures and foul language.

"It sickens me. I think it is terrible."

Reardon organized the independent tour when it appeared that millionaire Lamar Hunt and his Dallas-based World Championship Tennis were going to take over the game — lock, stock and tiebacks.

He brought Nastase over from Romania, collared a promising young player named Connors and added Vitas Gerulaitis and the two Mayer brothers, Sandy and Gene.

"I was fortunate in having two world champions back to back," he said. Nastase, who was No. 1 in 1972, was one of the most naturally gifted players ever. Connors, of course, had a great streak, starting with his Wimbledon and U.S. sweep in 1974.

Riordans Rascals were the scourge of tennis during the period. Hunt had to agree to a truce.

Connors and Nastase were the most exciting figures in the game in the early and mid-1970s. They were uninhibited, brassy and good.

People flocked to see them play. The Australian tour, featuring Australians Rod Laver, Ken Rosewall and John Newcombe was snidely referred to as The Rod, John and Kenny Show.

Commentators said Riordan had rid tennis of its medieval shackles and brought it to the masses.

Riordan capitalized on his product by sponsoring nationally televised "Heavyweight Championship of the World" matches which sent Connors first against Laver, then Newcombe, Manuel Orantes and Nastase.

Then came the change. Both players got out of hand.

"Connors had a star quality which I've never seen in another player," Riordan said. "He appealed to the anti-establishment mood of the time. Everybody loved him."

"After he shot to the top in 1974, he became arrogant. He thought he could thumb his nose at society. His department and language became deplorable but I'm glad to see he's mellowed."

McEnroe Underestimates Foe But Still Manages To Get Win

NEW YORK (AP) — It was a washday miracle and a rare event in the tennis life of John McEnroe.

"It was the most tired I've ever gotten without sweating a drop," the defending champion said after underestimating and dragging through his match in the U.S. Open tennis championships against Ramesh Krishnan of India. "It's really weird to play a match where your shirt is perfectly dry."

McEnroe struggled with lethargy, sporadic winds and an unexpectedly tough opponent before winning 6-7, 7-6, 6-4, 6-2.

"It was just an off-balance type of affair," the 22-year-old McEnroe said. Rarely in his pro career has he played so unaggressively.

He advanced to Saturday's semifinals against 15th-seeded Vitas Gerulaitis, who defeated Bruce Manson Wednesday night, 6-4, 6-2, 4-6, 6-1.

McEnroe beat Gerulaitis, a fellow New Yorker, in the final here in 1979.

Two more men's quarterfinals were to be played. Second-seeded Bjorn Borg met No. 9 Roscoe Tanner today. It was their third year in a row meeting in the quarterfinals here. They are 1-1.

Tonight, fourth-seeded Jimmy Connors will play the other quarterfinal against No. 8 Eliot Teltscher.

Teltscher defeated Brian Gottfried, the 16th seed Wednesday, 6-4, 6-0, 5-7, 1-6, 6-3. Teltscher was serving at 5-4 in the third set, but lost his next seven service games before rallying.

The women's semi pairings are set.

Defending champion Chris Evert Lloyd will meet fourth-seeded Martina Navratilova Friday, and third-seeded Tracy Austin will play No. 11 Barbara Potter.

Navratilova beat Anne Smith 7-5, 6-4 Wednesday. Austin came from 0-3 down in the first set to beat No. 6 Sylvia Hanika 6-4, 6-3.

And Potter, a 19-year-old making her first semifinal in a big tournament, defeated 17-year-old Barbara Gerken, will be the longest string of victories for a man in the American championship since Bill Tilden won his sixth in a row in 1925.

Potter, an articulate, aggressive player from Woodbury, Conn., was having no such problems.

She said she has as much chance as the other three female semifinalists of winning. "One would have to say the pressure is on Tracy and the others now," she said confidently.

Potter is the only one of the four who came up through the minor leagues of women's tennis, the Avon Futures tour. She honed her skills there and has made a steady rise in the rankings. "It didn't happen overnight, you know," she said.

Austin was in the stands watching her match against Gerken Wednesday. Had Potter noticed?

"No comment," she said quickly, grinning. Austin has won all of their seven pro encounters.

Navratilova was looking forward to renewing her rivalry with Lloyd, who leads their head-to-head record 28-13.

Navratilova, who has not lost her service once here, said she feels a sense of relief now, having gotten through the first five rounds and such opponents as Smith and No. 14 Kathy Jordan.

Navratilova in years past has come here as the No. 1 player. "Now I have nothing to lose, which is nice for a change. I don't like being an underdog but ... when you are No. 1 you have no place to go. You just keep fending people off. You can't go any higher."

McEnroe won the final game with an overhead, two aces and a service winner.

McEnroe, who is bidding for a third consecutive Open title, had no excuses for his uncharacteristic performance. He said he was not sick or hurt.

"It's really hard to express," he said. "The pressure of being No. 1 and people are talking about the record. If it's on your mind, I think it affects you a bit."

Boston Rallies From Behind For 25th Time To Claim A Victory

By KEN RAPPOPORT

When it comes to poise, you can't beat Ralph Houk's boys.

For the 25th time this season, the Boston Red Sox came back to win a game Wednesday night, a 6-5, 11-inning thriller over the Detroit Tigers.

"That's the only kind of game we've had this year, it seems," said Houk. "I don't believe we've had two easy games all year. We've won some and lost some — but they've all been close."

Gary Allenson singled home Rick Miller from second base with the go-ahead run in the 11th as the Red Sox won for the 14th time this year in their final turn at bat. The victory enabled the Red Sox to leave Detroit with two victories in three games and boosted them toward a three-game weekend series with the New York Yankees starting Friday night.

"I thought last night was the real big ballgame because we had to win a game here," Houk said of Tuesday night's 5-3 victory after a loss Monday night. "Now, winning this game by coming back really gives us a big lift going to New York. Now I don't think the day off on Thursday is going to hurt us."

The Texas Rangers also made a nice comeback Wednesday night, scoring seven runs in the ninth inning to pull out a 9-4 victory over the Oakland A's.

Elsewhere in the American League, Kansas City defeated California 7-3. Cleveland tripped Baltimore 8-5, Seattle turned back Chicago 3-1, Minnesota stopped Toronto 3-1 and New York beat Milwaukee 5-2

Royals 7, Angels 3

Willie Wilson had three hits and John Wathan, George Brett and Hal McRae all collected two as Kansas City whipped California and handed the staggering Angels their sixth straight loss.

Renie Martin, 4-5, picked up the victory in relief. He entered the game with two out in the fourth after left-hander Larry Gura, who had a 2-1 lead, dislocated the little finger on his pitching hand fielding a grounder.

The Royals struck for two runs in the first inning off loser Dave Frost, 1-6, and never lost their advantage.

Indians 8, Orioles 5

Von Hayes, one of five Cleveland batters with two or more hits, drove in two runs as the Indians defeated Baltimore. Beaten 9-2 and 14-5 by the Orioles in two previous games, the Indians took a 7-0 lead before Terry Crowley clubbed a three-run homer in the Baltimore fifth off Bert Blyleven, 11-6. Blyleven left after seven innings because of a stiff shoulder, after scattering four hits.

Hayes walked during Cleveland's three-run outburst in the second, against Steve Stone, 4-5, and had RBI singles in the fifth and seventh. Every Cleveland starter except Miguel Dilone, who left the game in the sixth because of a sore thumb, contributed to the 15-hit attack and seven different players had RBIs.

Mariners 3, White Sox 1

Tom Paciorek smashed a two-run homer and Joe Simpson added an RBI single to give right-hander Bob Stoddard his second major league victory in as many starts as Seattle beat Chicago.

The 24-year-old Stoddard pitched 62-3 innings, yielding seven hits. Chicago's only run came on a homer in the seventh by Wayne Nordhagen. That brought in Larry Andersen, who finished up for Seattle to pick up his fourth save.

Dennis Lamp, 5-4, was the loser.

Cedeno Is Appealing

ATLANTA (AP) — Houston Astros first baseman Cesar Cedeno's indefinite suspension by National League President Chub Feeney is being appealed by the Major League Players Association.

Cedeno, however, did not play in the Astros' 9-0 loss to Atlanta Wednesday night.

Cedeno charged into the stands here in the first inning of Tuesday night's game, and was ejected for it. He said a fan had been heckling him for two nights and that the insults were of a personal nature.

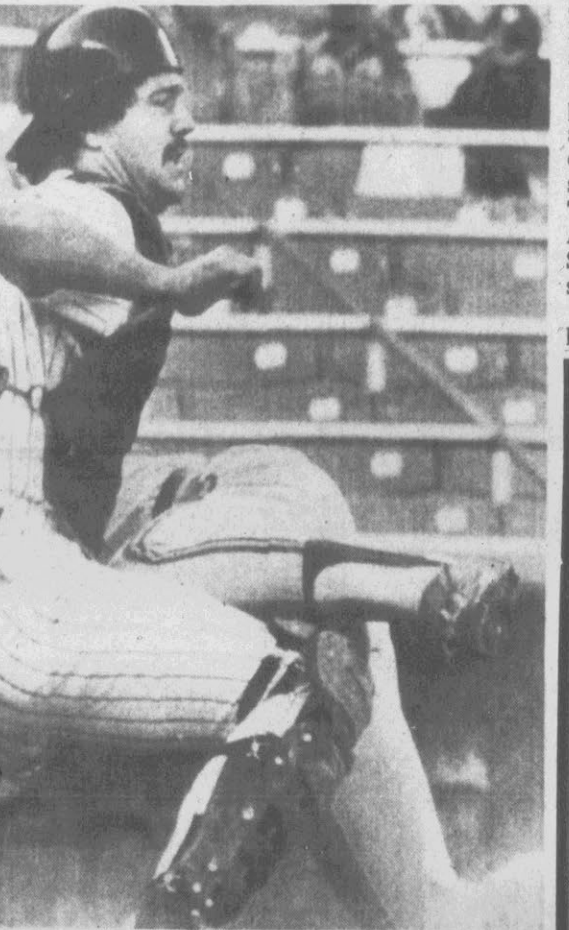

Cedeno's agent, Tom Reich, said in New York that the suspension was unfair. "It's being done without any process. I thought there was due process in baseball."

"What precipitated Cedeno's fight was that he was abused for two days by one person," Reich said. "The guy called him murderer and killer."

Reich said he had hired an investigator in Atlanta who will look into the incident.

"There's a fine line over what a player has to endure. That person (taunting Cedeno) should have been ejected," said Reich.

Joe Shirley, director of stadium operations at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium, said two fans were involved but neither was charged.

CP&L Chairman Optimistic Over Future Outlook

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — For Sherwood H. Smith, Carolina Power & Light Co. chairman and president, this year has been riddled with problems.

The Raleigh-based utility has suffered from unscheduled outages this summer at its three nuclear units, it faces an audit by the North Carolina Utilities Commission and an investigation by the commission's Public Staff also is pending.

But Smith, an unflinching young executive with an easy-going manner, says he sees the series of events as merely a short streak of bad luck, a limited picture that distorts the company's good record.

He acknowledges that perhaps the utility's biggest problem has been the Brunswick nuclear plant. For two summers in a row, the two units at the plant near Wilmington have been out of service for scheduled maintenance or unexpected repair, at times leaving the utility without any nuclear power.

During the period between January 1980 and May 1981, the Brunswick Unit 1 was out of service for 135 days — 35 days of unscheduled outages and 100 days for maintenance and refueling.

Meanwhile, high demand for power to cool homes and businesses has forced the utility to turn to other, more expensive sources of power. That eventually means higher utility bills for CP&L's 742,000 customers in North Carolina and South Carolina.

Smith, 47, said it's easy to see that alternatives to nuclear power cost more. He said it costs a half cent to produce a kilowatt hour with nuclear energy, as compared to 1.8 cents with coal and 14 cents with turbines powered by fuel oil.

Last summer's outage cost $58 million in fuel charges. The utility filed with the federal government in June for a 15.7 percent increase in wholesale power rates. And in residential rate cases pending before the Utilities Commission, CP&L is asking for a 16.34 percent rate hike.

For the first time since 1975, the gap has narrowed between rates charged by CP&L and Virginia Electric and Power Co., which serves some northeastern North Carolina counties, to a difference of about 60 cents.

Back in July 1979, the Utilities Commission issued a report about Veeco's relatively high rates. Days later, Gov. Jim Hunt called for CP&L to take over Veeco's North Carolina operations.

But Hunt's voiced urgency about reducing Veeco rates apparently has waned.

"There is some hope that state legislators will look at it," Hunt spokesman Gary Pearce said. "Veeco's rates temporarily closed up with CP&L's. But the statistics show the gap is going to open up again. He's (Hunt) still concerned about it."

The power outages were accompanied by a decrease in the percentage of electricity produced by CP&L's nuclear plants. In 1978, CP&L got 47 percent of its electricity from nuclear power as compared to 36 percent in 1979 and 28 percent in 1980.

Figures from the Utilities Commission's Public Staff also indicate the efficiency of CP&L's nuclear plants has declined. Robert Fischbach, director of the staff, noted that the necessity of refueling each year drops the maximum output of a plant to about 88 percent.

Fischbach said that for the year ending in May, CP&L's output was 43.5 percent of its total capacity as compared to 70.27 percent for Duke and 47.2 percent for Veeco.

It was the series of outages at Brunswick that prompted the Public Staff to initiate an investigation of CP&L's nuclear operations, Fischbach said.

Smith said the outages made it "quite logical to expect that in that case the commission might say in addition to the regular type of audit undertaken in a rate (increase) case it would also do an overview of CP&L's entire nuclear program."

But the upcoming Utilities Commission audit will be separate and wider in scope than the Public Staff probe. The General Assembly has authorized the commission to conduct audits of North Carolina utilities once every five years. Duke and CP&L were audited soon after the law was enacted.

Smith takes the prospects of an audit in stride.

"It's a fact of life," he said, "that we would accept and accommodate to and I think that the results as I would expect them to turn out ... are likely to be on balance very favorable.

"I would expect that there would be some negative findings and some positive findings but I think the positive findings would far outweigh the negative," he said.

Another criticism that has been directed at CP&L focuses on safety at the utility's nuclear plants. For example:

— In an NRC report covering the period from April 1979 through August 1980, the utility was rated below average because of an alleged lack of controls on radiation contamination.

— The NRC in May set a $40,000 civil penalty for violations at CP&L's H.B. Robinson nuclear plant in Hartsville, S.C. An inspection that month found three workers had been exposed to excessive amounts of radiation.

— Last February, an uncontrolled release of airborne radiation spread to the beaches near the Brunswick plant. The release was not detected until a month later.

— Critical Mass, a Ralph Nader-affiliated anti-nuclear group said the Brunswick plant was tied for the fifth highest incidence of nuclear accidents in the nation.

Smith criticized the NRC report for looking at a relatively short period of time "when had they looked at a different period of time, the results would have been very different."

Smith also charged that the number of events reported to the NRC does not represent the number of actual nuclear accidents.

"It's been our management policy to report virtually everything that has occurred when at another company very, very minor events may not have been reported," he said, noting that the NRC allows a great leeway in what events must be reported.

"We police ourselves to a large extent in the operation of the plants because the Nuclear Regulatory Commission doesn't seek to actually operate the plants. They seek to set out rules and guidelines."

Smith said the cumulative effect of the situation — the rate increases, the power outages, the NRC report — has not damaged the image of CP&L in the eyes of its customers. He said the close scrutiny of the Utilities Commission may even improve the company's image.

"The public feels a greater degree of assurance that the regulatory system is working, that there is close monitoring of the operation of the companies so that ... as a result of these cost increases, rates go up and the public knows that everything reasonable is being done in order to make sure that the rates aren't going up any more than they absolutely have to," he said.

Smith said he believes the public views an audit as a normal part of the commission's scrutiny of utilities.

"We didn't view the determination that the audit be made in and of itself as a criticism or an advance finding perhaps on the part of the commission that they felt anything was not being done properly," he said.

GREENVILLE UTILITIES COMMISSION

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

The Greenville Utilities Commission will hold a Public Hearing on Thursday night, September 17, 1981, at 7:30 P.M., in the City Council Chambers, 3rd Floor City Hall Building, to receive comments from citizen/ratepayers on the Commission's electric rates adjusted on September 1, 1981, to reflect (a) higher cost of power from its supplier Veeco, and (b) allocation to each customer class (residential, commercial, industrial, etc.) the proper cost responsibility. The allocation of costs has been determined through a "Cost-of-Service" Study performed by R. W. Beck & Associates, Engineers and Consultants. Copies of the R. W. Beck 1981 Electric Rate Study will be available in the office of the Business Manager, Greenville Utilities Building; the City Clerk's Office, City Hall Building; the Sheppard Memorial Library, Evans Street; the East Branch Library, Cedar Lane; and the Carver Library, 14th Street.

A summary extract from Beck's Cost-of-Service Study is as follows:

Customer Class	Electric System Comparison by Customer Class
	Existing Rate Revenues	Additional Proposed Rate Revenues	Total Rate Revenues	Percent Increase Proposed Rates to Existing Rates
Residential Service	$14,978,322	$ 343,907	$15,322,229	2.30%
Small General Service	6,124,688	972,217	7,096,905	15.87
Large General Service	9,752,698	1,308,349	11,061,047	13.42
County, Municipal, or Housing Authority All-Electric Building Service	101,047	35,627	136,674	35.26
Seasonal General Service	805,620	(182,226)	623,394	(22.62)
Outdoor Lighting Service	283,124	0	283,124	---
County, Municipal, or Housing Authority Outdoor Lighting Service	273,245	0	273,245	---
Total	$32,318,744	$2,477,874	$34,796,618	7.67%

It must be recognized that even with prompt adoption, the resultant rates will be applicable during only the last 10 months of the Test Year. Thus, the Commission cannot expect to recover the annual amount of the additional retail rate revenue from each of the customer classes. Historical customer consumption characteristics indicate that approximately 81% of the sales of electricity to the retail customers and 81% of the base rate revenues are billed during the last ten months of the fiscal year. Therefore, of the $2,485,363 annualized rate increase, the Commission can expect to recover approximately $2,016,848 during the Test Year.

Further, it should be noted that effective December, 1981, the Electric System will initiate the purchase of its power requirements from North Carolina Power Agency No. 3 rather than from Virginia Electric Power Company ("VEPCO"), its current purchased power supplier. This conversion of power suppliers will necessitate a further adjustment to rates and, thus, revenues.

The proposed rate levels and rate structures submitted herein for consideration and adoption by the Commission will, in our opinion, meet the following electric utility rate criteria for service provided by municipally owned electric utilities.

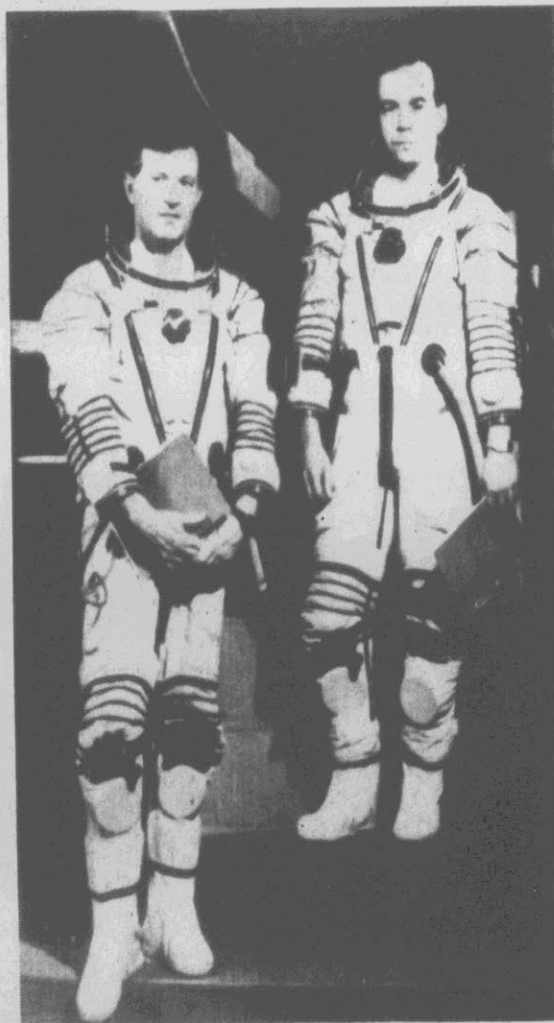

- Electric rates should be based on a rate policy that establishes rates and charges at the lowest possible prices consistent with customer requirements and high quality, efficient service.
- Electric rates should be simple and understandable.
- Electric rates should be equitable between classes of customers and individuals within classes, taking into consideration the available cost responsibility data.
- Electric rates should be designed to encourage the most efficient use of the Commission's power purchases and discourage unnecessary or wasteful use of service.

The Commission will take comments from citizen/ratepayers for the purpose of continued evaluation of the rates adjusted on September 1, 1981, and for future rate adjustments.

Lost Records Plague Probe

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Accused deserter Donald Norman claims that it was missing records that led to the filing of the charges against him. But now the military is having trouble prosecuting the case for the same reason.

"We want to process this as soon as we can," said Capt. Bill Mattox, an information officer at Fort Bragg, where Norman, of Mooresville, is being housed in the base's Personnel Control Facility. "But right now we're at the mercy of the administrative process."

Norman, arrested 10 days ago on charges he deserted the military 11 years ago, maintains that he was told to wait for new orders — and has been waiting ever since. He said his troubles are the result of records lost by the Army in October 1970, when he was assigned to an Army base in Oakland, Calif., after a year's combat service in Vietnam.

In a recent interview, Norman, 34, said Army officials in Oakland — after they could not find his records — sent him home on leave, telling him to wait there for new orders.

Norman said he did just that, but never heard from the Army again. He also contends he called Army officials in Oakland and visited a recruiter in Statesville in 1970 and 1971, trying to learn his new assignment. Then, he said, he took the first of three jobs he held in the Iredell County community since 1971.

Mattox said the Army is still trying to locate Norman's records. He said it is unclear why it took the Army 11 years to notice that Norman was missing and why the records can't be found.

An Army spokesman at Fort Benjamin Harrison in Indianapolis speculated last week that Norman's case turned up in a recent screening of individual finance records.

Norman, who is a night foreman with a textile machinery firm in Mooresville, will be permitted weekend passes while he awaits the Army's decision on whether to pursue charges against him, Mattox said.

"It might take a week, two weeks, maybe longer," Mattox said. But Norman is used to waiting.

Bitter Memories Of 'Angel Island' Will Not Die

RECALLING ANGEL ISLAND — Paul Chow, right, and his father Hing Gai Chow, recall the hell on Angel Island in San Francisco Bay in this tour in 1974. The elder Chow, along with thousands of other immigrants, awaited entry into the U.S. at Angel Island where they were locked up. (AP Laserphoto)

"There are tens of thousands of poems composed on these walls. They are all cries of complaint and sadness. The day I am rid of this prison and attain success, I must remember that this chapter once existed." — Poem by anonymous Chinese immigrant, Angel Island.

By FRANCES D'EMILIO
Associated Press Writer
ANGEL ISLAND STATE PARK, Calif. (AP) —

"Angel Island. Shhh!" I heard that so much from my father, it's almost like one word. 'Angel Island Shhh!'"

Paul Chow vividly recalls his father's admonition. Between 1910 and 1940, some 175,000 Chinese came to the United States. Most, including the elder Chow, awaited entry to Gam Saan — the Golden Mountain, as they called California — at the U.S. Immigration Station on Angel Island.

Like better-known Ellis Island in New York Harbor, where legions of Europeans first saw their promised land, Angel Island was the first stop for Asian immigrants.

But many recall their stay with only bitterness.

They were locked up like criminals. They slept stacked on steel bunks six high. The reward for rebellion was a bare, windowless closet.

For decades this shabby chapter in American history lay virtually unexamined. Humiliated Chinese-Americans — nearly all of those who entered at Angel Island were Chinese — would not speak of it.

Besides, many had entered with false papers, "paper sons" whose documents made them sons of merchants, teachers and U.S. citizens. Those were the privileged, exempted under the Chinese Exclusion Act of 1882, the first U.S. law to deny entry to a specific ethnic group.

Now the unpleasant story is being told — by Chow, whose Angel Island Immigration Station Historical Advisory Committee wants a museum created in the decaying barracks, last used in 1940.

And told by Felicia Lowe, a Chinese-American filmmaker from San Francisco who is interviewing detainees for a television documentary.

Chow, a state transportation engineer, stands in what was the men's dormitory on an island whose hilly paths and secluded coves in the middle of San Francisco Bay now draw cyclists, hikers and boaters.

On the peeling walls of the dormitory are poems in Chinese, written by immigrants to express outrage and anguish.

The immigrants called this place "The Island." "Angel" seems to mock memories like those held vividly by Howard Tom.

Tom was a bewildered 14-year-old when he arrived on Angel Island in 1922. His father was a naturalized U.S. citizen who returned to China to get his wife, Howard and a baby son.

His family was "separated within two hours. We didn't have a chance to say goodbye." Tom recalls lying on his bunk in the locked dormitory, daydreaming of pals in China.

Through an interpreter, an immigration official separately grilled him and his parents, seeking to determine if they were, indeed, a family.

"How far from your house to your neighbor's?" they each were asked.

"The three of us all gave the wrong answer. I stretched my hand out to represent so many feet. I didn't tell the interpreter how many feet each arm (length) represented," Tom said.

The family was detained for two weeks and released only when a Chinese minister in San Francisco vouched for them.

"After 40 some odd years," Tom visited the island as part of a special tour. "I was really upset."

There are some Chinese who say the period is too painful to relive. Genny Lim, who wrote a history of the era, says a "prominent, older" Chinese-American woman was horrified by the idea of tourists, calling it "exploitation."

The story is ugly. Detainees recount suicides not mentioned in official records. Modest Chinese women, shocked by lack of privacy in toilets, covered their heads with bags.

This history began to unfold in 1970, thanks to Alan Weiss, then a ranger on the island. Weiss noticed characters carved on the walls and showed them to superiors.

"No one was interested," said Weiss during a recent tour with Chow's group. So he invited a scholar who determined that they were the poems of Chinese immigrants. Enthusiastic Asian-American college students then began to pry loose the island's history.

Restoration work goes slowly. A state grant of $322,000 is exhausted, and $1 million more is needed.

Chow doesn't want to rush the project. Yet, "Patience grows thin when I see people dying" before they can visit the island. He wants survivors of the detention to be purged emotionally, as his father was when he returned in 1956.

"He stood before his bunk and cried. 'Today I can walk in and forgive America,'" Chow recalls him saying. "He walked home with me and he was free."

Two Attend Design Seminar

Lee Murphy and John Burch of the city's Engineering and Inspections Department recently attended a seminar in Raleigh on traffic engineering designs for residential, commercial, and industrial developments.

The seminar, which focused on the impact of development on traffic, thoroughfare planning, parking, driveways, and traffic generation, gave participants the opportunity to learn of methods employed by other state, municipal, and private engineers to regulate development as it relates to traffic engineering.

The session was sponsored by the N.C. Department of Transportation.

Senior Cards Being Offered

The card provides admission to home athletic events, drama presentations, and musical programs, all free of charge.

To receive a card, interested people are to contact Carolyn Ferebee, Community Schools Director at 752-4192. Arrangements will be made for an application form, and when completed, a card will be issued.

Commenting on this service, superintendent Dr. Delma C. Blinson said, "We feel involvement of our senior citizens offers a tremendous resource for our students and younger adults. We welcome such involvement."

Modeling Career Is But One Of Many Options

By JULIE KNIGHT
Forest City Daily Courier
FOREST CITY, N.C. (AP) — Randy Sechrist is a young man who doesn't shy away from new adventures.

He's enterprising: he buys houses, fixes them up and sells them for a profit.

He's creative: he decorates homes professionally.

He's enthusiastic: at 26 he's vice president of a growing company.

And he's attractive. And his good looks are getting him everywhere these days as he embarks upon his latest adventure — modeling.

His buddies at East High School in the 1970s surely didn't imagine he's move on from playing football and working in his dad's furniture store to modeling for catalogues and fashion shows, but then they couldn't have imagined all that Sechrist would get into.

"I'm kind of bouncing around, seeing what all I like," he said. "I enjoy it that way. I'm having fun with everything that comes along."

It was only at the suggestion of a couple of women Sechrist dated that he tried this new profession.

"A lot of women tell you you ought to be a model," he said, almost embarrassed at the fact. But these two women both happened to be working models and one arranged an appointment for Sechrist with a modeling school in Charlotte.

The Tryon Ross Institute of Modeling encouraged him.

Sechrist — known as Dirk Randall in the modeling world — has made his debut in a business where the years from 26 to 35 are prime. The future is there if he wants it.

His stats fit all the "ideal male model" standards. The 6-foot 1-inch, 175-pound model measures a 31-inch waist and wears a regular size 40 coat.

Staying in shape has always been a part of his life. "You have to do it," he said, listing off his regular activities — swimming four days a week, lifting weights two days, riding his bike about 20 miles every Sunday and five or six miles during the week.

The good looks plus the training have paid off. After just 16 lessons in modeling, he was selected by talent scout Tichka Nebbia to participate in international modeling and talent competitions in New York next year.

Ms. Nebbia, a scout for the world-famous Ford Models Inc., discovered Sechrist at the TRIM graduation production two weeks ago. She selected top models in several classifications. Sechrist was chosen over 74 other models.

Although he takes his profession seriously, Sechrist says he's not ready to leave his job of 11 years with the family-owned Furniture Barn Inc. "You just don't pull up your stakes. I haven't made it yet. When I go to New York next year it's just going to be a vacation for me. If I win, fine."

Thus, while taking the plunge into modeling slowly, Sechrist has landed a number of modeling jobs in North Carolina, including some non-speaking parts in television ads, spots for Montgomery Ward's catalogue and runway modeling for Jodphur's Mens Clothing Store in Charlotte.

Modeling, of course, can pay very well. "But I'm not looking to become an $800 or $1,000-a-day model in the near future. I'm taking it slow," Sechrist said. "Those guys who make $1,000 a day don't work five days a week. You have to have something else behind you. Somebody can take your place in a day," he admitted.

It's the excitement that makes Sechrist pursue this course.

STRIKING A POSE — Randy Sechrist's experiment with modeling may turn into a lucrative profession. (AP Laserphoto)

Not Everybody Is Pleased With A Life Of Testing

By KEN KLEIN
Associated Press Writer
TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Many American youngsters begin taking school tests as soon as they can hold a pencil. Before they finish high school, some will have been tested and retested almost every school year of their young lives.

That's the case in Florida, which educators say is the most test-conscious state in the country, using a battery of standardized exams as a mirror to reflect weaknesses and improvements in its schools.

"Despite being popular with many parents, testing is hotly debated in education and civil rights circles. A vocal minority of critics claims that America's lust for competency testing has gone too far.

"We're doing a lot of testing just for the sake of testing," complains state Sen. Jack Gordon, a Democrat. "We're getting more concerned with test results than what goes on in the classroom."

Thirty-eight states have minimum-skills tests for high school students, designed to find out if teen-agers have mastered the basics: Can they make change, read warning signs and balance checkbooks?

Even the test givers — teachers — have become test takers. Twenty states administer competency tests to would-be instructors, according to Judy Shoemaker of the National Institute of Education in Washington.

Testing proponents argue that competency exams encourage schools to teach fundamentals. Without minimum academic standards, diplomas are meaningless, said Florida Education Commissioner Ralph Turlington, an outspoken advocate of competency testing.

A Lou Harris survey conducted in three Florida counties indicated "an overwhelming majority of the public feel students should be required to pass a basic literacy test as a condition for graduation from the public school system."

Beginning in the 1982-83 school year, Florida students will be required to do just that — if the courts don't step in.

Florida has been trying for years to withhold diplomas from students who fail a two-part literacy test, but the efforts have been held up in court because of the perceived detrimental effect on black students.

In all, 17 states require high school students to pass tests to receive diplomas.

Since 1976, when Florida adopted its Education Accountability Act, testing here has expanded dramatically.

The youngest grade school pupils take diagnostic and placement exams. Statewide basic skills tests are scattered through four grade levels. The literacy test under court challenge is already given to high school sophomores, giving those who fail two more years and four more chances to try to pass.

In addition, teaching candidates who want Florida licenses must pass a four-part exam. A typical math problem asks how much a teacher's salary would be after a 9 percent pay raise. When the teacher test was introduced last year, more than 20 percent of the prospective teachers flunked.

This summer, Gov. Bob Graham and the state Cabinet authorized educators to prepare a new test for college sophomores, known as the second-year exit test. Eventually, college sophomores in Florida will be required to pass the test before advancing to upper divisions in the university system.

Civil rights leaders were among the first to question the wisdom of the testing trend. They argued, sometimes in court, that standardized tests are unfair to blacks who had to attend segregated or second-rate schools.

Only half of Florida's black sophomores passed the state's literacy test last April.

The outcome of the court battle over the Florida literacy test — and whether it may be used to deny diplomas — is expected to have national implications.

The lawsuit was filed by an arm of the federally funded Legal Services Corp. on behalf of black students who failed the test. U.S. District Judge George Carr ruled that Florida's literacy test isn't racially biased, but a federal appeals court in Atlanta ordered the state to prove that material covered on the exam is taught in public school classrooms. The case is pending gulf based on race is shallow. Exposing students' deficiencies and providing remedial instruction has benefited blacks, Turlington argued.

But doubts about standardized testing go beyond the discrimination question.

Some testing experts aren't convinced that scores are reliable enough to make critical decisions about students' futures, such as who should receive diplomas or who should be sent to slow-learner classes.

And both sides agree testing can be a painful method to judge performance. When Florida introduced its literacy test in 1977, more than a third of the students failed, embarrassing teachers and students. Students who fail tests are labeled as "dummies," say testing opponents.

Train Track Removal Bar

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Seaboard Coast Line railroad has been barred from tearing up any of its tracks so that the East Carolina Chapter of the National Railway Historical Society may buy it.

A temporary restraining order issued Friday by Judge W. Earl Britt gives the society the opportunity to purchase 4.4 miles of tracks near Fuquay-Varina, where the group plans to run trains for the public in Wake County.

Charles Jefferson Moody III, a member of the historical society, said the society wants to run trains for the public on weekends and would eventually like to build a train museum on the site.

The society already already owns two military surplus locomotives and two flatcars, and two cabooses were donated by train companies. The cars have been stored in Farmville while the society seeks tracks for the trains.

The temporary restraining order was granted after Seaboard sought a certificate to abandon the track, which was part of the old Durham and Southern route leading from Durham to Dunn.

Searchers Find Missing Child

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — Searchers found a 7-year-old deaf girl in a wooded area near Gastonia Wednesday, 14 hours after she wandered away from her parents. "She's OK," said Mrs. Ronald Kendrick, as she clutched her daughter, Meredith, in her arms. "She's just got some scratches."

Aided by bloodhounds and spotlights, up to 300 searchers spent the night in the woods looking for the girl.

Meredith disappeared about 8 p.m. Tuesday while the parents were walking over a lot where they planned to build a house. Meredith's 10-year-old sister Jennifer joined in the walk.

Rescuers said the search was complicated because the girl could not hear them. She also was afraid of dogs and bright lights, and was afraid of strangers.

Taught About Dollars, Sense

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — California students are being taught how to make sense out of dollar and cents.

The program, underwritten by Crocker Bank, helps high school students learn about managing money through simulated day-to-day experiences, including managing a budget as either married persons or roommates.

The Bank-Ed School Series includes classroom materials that help teachers provide a basic economic understanding for children in elementary, intermediate and secondary classrooms.

The series was successfully tested in San Diego County's 37 school districts and will reach more than 4,000 public school districts throughout California by fall.

'Best Of The West' Is Basically Top ABC Effort Of The Season

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — ABC had better circle the wagons if "Best of the West," which debuts tonight and is billed as the network's funniest new comedy, is really its top effort in the new season.

The idea of an Easterner moving to a lawless Western town and becoming marshal could have worked as a sanitized version of Mel Brooks' "Blazing Saddles" or as a make-the-best-of-a-bad-situation sitcom like "M-A-S-H." Instead, it is mostly a series of predictable jokes with family relationships straight out of "I Love Lucy."

The greenhorn marshal, Sam Best, played by Joel Higgins, is the show's strength. Higgins gives the character an engaging dimension as the bright-eyed idealist who tries to make the town a better place for his wife and son.

Higgins' good humor and spirits are constantly tested by the black hat of the show, Parker Tillman (Leonard Frey), who owns the saloon and practically everything else. Frey's idea of comedy is deadpan, stares and grimaces. His delivery gets tiring very quickly.

Best comes to uncivilized Copper Creek with his 10-year-old son, Daniel, played by Meeno Peluce, and his wife Elvira (Carlene Watkins).

Best, a widower, met his wife while he and other Union soldiers were burning her father's plantation during the Civil War. Their meeting and the fact that Best purchased a general store sight unseen in Copper Creek and then became marshal is told in the show's theme song. The mocking tone and words of the music, written by the show's executive producer, Earl Pomerantz, offers some early hope.

"How do you like the West so far?" Tillman asks Best in the opening.

Best looks around the sleazy saloon and says cheerfully that it's just what he expected, except for the fat lady who could have been the bar's bouncer rather than its female escort. This is the kind of playful satire on Western traditions and imagery that could have made "Best" funny and unique.

When Best says Tillman's hired snake wouldn't shoot him because the Code of the West forbids killing an unarmed man, his son points out that the ornery gunslinger doesn't look like the reading type. It's too bad there couldn't have been more of this.

The gunslinger in tonight's first episode (8 p.m. EDT) is played by Christopher Lloyd, the strung-out cabbie on ABC's "Taxi." He brings his famous shrugs and bewilderment, but it isn't enough.

On the domestic front, Elvira isn't much of a housewife and wise-guy Daniel isn't much for the macho Western lifestyle. This is where the comedy really bogs down, with silly jokes about churning whey that make Elvira look like just another dizzy housewife, even if this house has just one room.

The cast includes the usual band of caricatures who are just plain silly and offer little substance: the drunken doctor (Tom Ewell), the town idiot (Tracey Walter) and the bawdy frontierwoman (Laney Gibbs).

Actually, tonight's pilot is much funnier than a two-parter we saw dealing with Tillman's trial and incarceration for cattle rustling. Again, the humor falls flat because it lacks sophistication. Just because the characters are from the 19th century doesn't mean the comedy has to be.

The town's hatred of Tillman melts at the end of that show when he offers drinks on the house.

Biggest Box Office By Summer Hit 'Raiders'

By JAY ARNOLD
Associated Press Writer
HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "Raiders of the Lost Ark" led a smash 15-week summer movie season with more than $125 million in box-office revenue as movie-goers flocked to see several fantasy-adventure films.

"Raiders" took in $5.41 million during the four-day Labor Day weekend to boost its 12½-week total to $125,254,773, said a Paramount Pictures spokeswoman who asked not to be named.

The film, about a swashbuckling archaeologist and his girlfriend racing the Nazis to recover the Ark of the Covenant, was still playing in 1,144 theaters in the United States and Canada. It increased its gross 24 percent from the previous weekend, she said.

The second place summer money winner was "Superman II," launched a week later than "Raiders." It had grossed $101,449,746 through Tuesday. In third place, but hardly an also-ran at $71,850,123, was "Stripes," the Bill Murray "you're-in-the-Army now" comedy.

The all-star cast of "The Cannonball Run," about a cross-country car race starring Burt Reynolds, attracted $59,871,942 in 11½ weeks in up to 1,670 theaters through Tuesday.

In fifth place at $46,436,983 was "The Four Seasons," a comedy-drama about three couples' shared vacations starring Alan Alda and Carol Burnett. It was the only non-fantasy-adventure film to make this summer's top 10 grossers.

Rounding out the top 10 were the latest James Bond movie, "For Your Eyes Only," estimated at $40 million; the Dudley Moore-John Gielgud comedy "Arthur," $39,011,690; "Cheech and Chong's Nice Dreams," $35,445,499; "Clash of the Titans," $31,585,559; and Bo Derek's "Tarzan, the Ape Man," $30,920,417.

Total returns for August and the first week of September have yet to be calculated by the Motion Picture Association of America, but summer box office tallies through July had been running up to 30 percent ahead of 1980.

Some late entries provided a kicker to the end-of-summer box office dash. "Endless Love" had taken in $23,315,700 for Universal through Labor Day, while "First Monday in October" had plopped $8,201,232 into Paramount's coffers in its first 18 days. "An American Werewolf in London" had drawn $15,067,621 in 18 days.

Proof: WWII German Soldiers Landed In Canada

By ISOLDE HAUG
ULM, West Germany (AP) — Austrian-born Franz Selinger, a 66-year-old retired engineer, returned here from a visit to Canada recently with firm proof that German soldiers set foot on North American soil in World War II.

"Until only a year ago," Selinger told The Associated Press in his southwest German home, "the Canadians wouldn't believe me. But when I presented them with definite proof, things started humming." In close cooperation with Canadian historian Alec Douglas and with generous help from the Canadian Coast Guard, Selinger discovered at the end of July the rusted remains of a German-built automatic weather station on the northernmost tip of Labrador.

The 10 barrel-like steel containers were set up about 20 miles south of Cape Chidley by the crew of U-537, a German World War II submarine, which nudged its way through shallow water in October 1943. It then surfaced, and the crew launched rubber dinghies to take ashore the men who put up the weather station with its antennae and tall wind-measuring pole.

Much of the withered material was still there when Selinger arrived at the spot. To disguise it, the Germans had marked it "Canadian Weather Service." But it appeared that hunters, whose empty cartridges were found nearby, discovered it some time after World War II and damaged much of the equipment.

Now, 38 years later, the remains are to be taken to Halifax for display. Selinger said he wants to return there for the occasion.

Rumors of German landings in North America during World War II were often heard and never substantiated. Selinger, intrigued by the scientific performance of fewer than 100 armed forces weathermen, said their exploits in frequently appalling conditions are well worth remembering.

The former department chief of a large Ulm-based electronics company prepared his Canadian excursion over two years before setting out to find the forgotten weather station.

He paged through war diaries, traced the routes taken by U-537 and then put it all together. His investigation was complicated by the fact that the 1,500-ton submarine, after it had accomplished the feat in Canada, was sunk in the Java Sea by the U.S.N.S. Flounder.

All those who were witness to the top-secret Canadian weather station mission perished in the attack.

Selinger said he never doubted that the Germans were there. He pointed out geographical differences between weather stations the Germans established in northern Europe and that in Canada, but Canadian officials initially doubted his theory.

After furnishing more evidence, he won them over and Selinger is now full of praise for the Canadian Coast Guard. "Without them — no dice," he said. The discovery could never have been made.

In Halifax, Selinger boarded the icebreaker "Louis S. St. Laurent" for the 2,700-mile voyage to Labrador. "The ship's own helicopter discovered the station right behind the first bend in the area I had indicated," Selinger said.

The rusty containers were found to be in such good condition that there could be no doubt about their original purpose, Selinger said.

The weather station was probably a fully automatic one, designed to work for about six months, Selinger said. "The equipment was designed and assembled by Siemens, and Sel (two German electronics companies) supplied the transmitter."

The station operated until January 1944, transmitting every three hours information about temperature, wind direction, strength and humidity before the extreme cold caused its batteries to fail, Selinger said.

But the data were of vital importance for the German navy and its strategy in the Atlantic war theater.

Selinger said he would very much like to go on another search for former German weather stations in Spitzbergen, Norway. "But as an individual, I cannot afford such expeditions," he said.

Poachers Stripping Jungles Of Brazil

By PETER EISNER
Associated Press Writer
BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of monkeys, jaguars, alligators, birds, and other exotic jungle beasts are falling prey each year to illegal game hunters in the South American tropics, scientists say.

They claim the poachers take advantage of sophisticated equipment, inadequate policing and the natural protection of the isolated jungle frontier on their expeditions that are systematically stripping the tropics of their diminishing numbers of wild animals.

Added to this are sports hunters who can kill animals without regard to quotas — knowing they will almost never be detected — and the subsistence dwellers who hunt for their survival.

Beside the scientific value of the disappearing animals, their dwindling numbers also pose ecological problems. Though there is no documentation, environmental officials note that with the killing of so many caiman (South American alligators), an increase has been observed in populations of their favorite prey — the meat-eating piranha fish that inhabit waters in Brazil's Pantanal region.

A school of sharp-toothed piranha fish can devour a man in minutes.

Scientists thus warn that removing one animal species could cause a chain reaction leading to environmental disaster in jungle regions.

The problem is most acute in Brazil — half of which is made up of the Amazon region.

Brazilian environmental officials say many of the animals are taken across lightly patrolled international borders by poachers dealing in prized animal species.

"It's a brutal situation," said Maria Teresa Jorge Padua, director of Brazil's national parks system.

She added in an interview, "There's no easy way to control it. Our park rangers aren't equipped or trained to deal with this. They're facing professional assassins with modern equipment and they can end up being killed."

Statistics provided by park officials show the extent of the problem:

—More than half a million caiman skins alone are poached and illegally shipped from Brazil's western jungle region every year. These and other animals are simply disappearing from sight in Brazil's once-rich wildlife regions.

—The hunting in recent years has left Brazil's endangered species list of about 60 animals outdated. Some officials say as many as 300 animals here are threatened with extinction.

Probably hardest hit by the growth of illegal game hunting in Brazil is the western region known as the Pantanal, which means "swamp-land" in Portuguese. Brazil's national language. The Pantanal — which borders with Bolivia where the Paraguay River serves as a natural boundary line — is a convenient spot for illegal shipments of poached game.

Scientists returning from the region say large boats are stationed in the river, protected, officials say, by the same bankrolls that allow drug trafficking to flourish in Bolivia and adjacent territory in Brazil. Hunters can sell their poached skins to distributors who then take the goods out of the area to markets where they escape international laws against such trafficking.

The list of animals endangered by such hunting includes the toucan, a bird whose huge orange beak makes it a popular trophy for game hunters; the jaguar, prized for its spotted skin; the giant otter, and the ostrich-like rhea. Trade in parrots and macaws for their feathers or for sale as house pets is another serious problem, scientists say.

Ms. Padua says these animals, once common, are becoming increasingly difficult to locate.

The Brazilian government is taking steps to deal with the problem. The National Parks Department is purchasing huge swaths of jungle land to create millions of acres of protected parkland and ecological reserves. Ms. Padua says officials also have called in Brazil's federal police to fight illegal game hunting with force where necessary.

Ultimately, however, the best method of dealing with illegal hunting may be to eliminate the market for exotic animals, Ms. Padua indicated.

She said the international accords to prevent trade in endangered species immediately cut down trade in South America, from countries like Paraguay, Surinam and Guyana, and convinced receiver countries like West Germany and other European nations to improve their controls.

The United States has been a supporter of the plan and prevents the entry of endangered animal specimens and skins.

Girl Helps Catch Thief

TRURO, England (AP) — "I just felt so angry I had to do something," says Kay Pope, the 19-year-old farmer's daughter who helped capture a thief and was shot for her trouble.

British newspapers splashed the story on their front pages today, calling Miss Pope a heroine.

From her car, stopped at a traffic light, she saw a gunman shoot down security guard Victor Harvey, 37, who was loading cash from a bank into his truck. The robber seized a bag of cash and fled.

Jumping from the car and grabbing a trash can lid as a shield, she ran after the killer, who was also pursued by carpenter William Pascoe, 38.

As Pascoe grabbed the man, Miss Pope beat him on the head with his own crash helmet which had fallen to the sidewalk. In the fight, she was shot in her right thigh.

A score of other passers-by in the normally sleepy town of Wadebridge, Cornwall, joined in and held the gunman until police arrived.

Doctors at Truro City Hospital said Miss Pope was "comfortable" today after surgery for the bullet wound.

The guard shot in the robbery died of a chest wound. His alleged assailant was scheduled to appear in court today for arraignment on a murder charge.

Reagan To Join Dedication

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan plans to attend the dedication of former President Ford's presidential library in Grand Rapids, Mich., the White House says.

President Jose Lopez Portillo of Mexico and Canadian Prime Minister Elliott Trudeau also are expected at the ceremonies.

Despite the presence of the three leaders from North America at the opening, Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Wednesday that no meetings were planned.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, who also served in the Ford administration, will be on hand for the Sept. 17 ceremony, along with former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

DEFECTED TO EAST? BERLIN (AP) — A West German soldier defected to east Germany and asked Communist authorities for political asylum, the East Berlin news agency ADN reported Tuesday. There was no elaboration.

We put our foot down about apartments being within walking distance.

Wedgewood Arms apartments are within walking distance of three shopping centers, a nursery school, a junior high school, doctors' and dentists' offices and an athletic center.

As if that wasn't enough, three major traffic arteries, 264 Bypass, Arlington Blvd., and Charles St. are close enough to be seen and not heard.

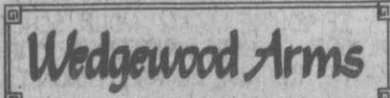

Fact is, no apartments in town can legitimately claim to be more convenient to more things than Wedgewood Arms.

And, that's not all. Because Wedgewood Arms is not only convenient, it's different in other ways, too.

Take the floorplans: they're different from anything you've ever seen. And when you add in high energy efficiency, tennis courts, swimming pool, and the neighborhood "feeling" that these apartments will give you — well, you'll just have to see for yourself.

The bidding: North East South West
 Pass Pass INT Pass
 3 NT Pass Pass Pass
 Opening lead: Queen of ♠

We have remarked before that "obvious" and "correct" are not necessarily synonymous. Here's another deal to prove our point.

Since North had a near opening bid, he could not imagine that his side would be in any trouble when he raised his partner's one no trump opening bid to game. West made the text book opening lead of the top of his club sequence and declarer noted that a successful diamond finesse would give him nine running tricks. So, declarer won in hand and ran the queen of diamonds. East won and returned a club to knock out declarer's remaining stopper, and it began to dawn on declarer that he was in a spot of trouble. He tried the spade finesse, but West grabbed the king and three more club tricks to defeat the contract one trick.

Declarer could have done better by running his diamonds before deciding on whether he wanted to finesse in either hearts or spades, but that was a minor error. Had he considered what would happen if he lost the diamond finesse, he might have come up with the winning play. Between his hand and dummy, declarer was sure of three club stoppers if East could be kept off lead. Furthermore, if declarer banks everything on the diamond finesse and it loses, he has only eight tricks and will still need a successful finesse in one of the major suits. Therefore, it is essential to develop a ninth trick before East gains the lead.

That is a simple goal to attain. Declarer should win the first trick in dummy and take either major suit finesse! Even if this loses, West cannot persevere in his club attack without ceding declarer another trick in the suit. He has to shift, and give declarer the tempo that puts him ahead in the race. A ninth trick has already been developed in a major suit, so declarer can afford to win any return and take the diamond finesse, even if it loses to East. When East returns a club, declarer simply wins the king and cashes out his tricks for his contract.

How do you choose the best opening lead? Charles Goren has the answer. For a copy of "Winning Opening Leads," send $1.85 to "Goren-Leads," care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J. 07648. Make checks payable to Newspaperbooks.

FOCUS

Canada's Inspiration

Terry Fox died earlier this year after a long battle with cancer. But he remains the inspiration for millions of Canadians who will participate in special walks, runs, and other "Marathons of Hope" this Sunday, Terry Fox Day. Last year, after cancer forced amputation of one of his legs, Terry Fox attempted to run all the way across Canada to raise money for cancer research. A recurrence of the disease forced Fox to abandon his lone "Marathon of Hope." Eventually the marathon helped raised $24-million for cancer research. Terry Fox's courage and death have inspired Canadians to plan Sunday's fundraising marathons. One organizer vowed that Terry Fox Day "won't end until cancer has been beaten."

His Hounds Sniff Out Lost, Escapees

By LINDA FRANKLIN
 Associated Press Writer
 Give John Hitchcock a tattered piece of cloth and he and his team of bloodhounds will find the owner two out of three times.

Hitchcock, a 12-year veteran with the Craighead County Sheriff's Department in Jonesboro, Ark., uses his nine bloodhounds to track jail escapees, search for lost children, find criminals and sniff out stolen goods.

His hounds have sniffed all over Arkansas and in Missouri. "I'll never own a whole lot, but at least I've got my family and my bloodhounds," Hitchcock said in a recent telephone interview.

Hitchcock has been interested in hounds all his life. After seeing a bloodhound team in action at Cummins Prison Farm in 1979, he was ready to get into the business.

"That fired me up," he said. He told himself, "I just got to have some of my own."

Hitchcock, 36, erected two dog pens on his property near Jonesboro and bought a couple of dogs from a Hempstead County man.

There are now nine dogs - who consume 500 pounds of dog food in about six weeks - a telephone in the kennel and a customized van that can carry four dogs and three dog trailers and doubles as a tack room.

He spends at least two hours a day caring for the dogs. Twice a week, he spends five hours training the bloodhounds - sometimes using his 5-year-old daughter in a game of hide and seek.

Most of Hitchcock's work is free. With the permission of Sheriff Floyd Johnson, he is sometimes gone from his job as chief jailer for three or four days.

The city of Trumann and the White River Regional Peace Officers Association have donated money to help with feed and veterinarian bills.

The dogs got steaks on the Clay County Jail steps in Piggott after tracking down jail escapees.

One of Hitchcock's most harrowing experiences came in the tracking of those escapees. He followed his dog for at least four miles through fields, swamps and a "really woolly area."

"He never missed a lick," Hitchcock said. But the dog stopped suddenly. Hitchcock found out why as he reeled in the dog's check line.
