Holiday Joy Can Become Yuletide Blues

By SUSAN RIES
Reflector Staff Writer

Christmas is usually the time of peace on earth ond good will toward men, but it can turn into uncertainty, depression and loneliness.

"Family stress is increased in holiday times," said Dr. Irvin Blose of the East Carolina School of Psychiatric Medicine. Prescribed activities push people into uncomfortable patterns of behavior. Being forced to participate in some activity you don't like can be more stressful than doing something you prefer, said Blose.

A holiday toast is likely to magnify the depression. Chemicals that control depression are knocked off balance by too much alcohol and can't function properly.

According to psychologists, depression is a psychological problem stemming from a traceable physical root. The blues are feelings of sadness or disappointment.

"Depression doesn't increase at Christmas, the blues increase," said Dr. James Mathis, also with ECU's Psychiatric Medicine department. He said that people are depressed by the Christmas celebration that begins before Thanksgiving.

"The inrush of suicides begins the weekend before Thanksgiving," said Dr. Robert Nenno, with the Pitt County Mental Health Association. Emergency room director Dr. Jack Allison agrees with him.

"It (emergency room traffic) increases but I can't put a definitive number on it," Allison said. The rise in traffic is due, paradoxically, to Christmas cheer.

"People become depressed and it is exacerbated by others' joyous attitude," said Allison.

Christmas shopping is also a big anxiety producer. Concerns ranging from "what do I buy for whom" to "having to buy something" for someone you don't care for, confuses most shoppers. This required buying creates ambivalance, according to Blose.

"Buying a present is better than saying, 'I like you,'" Nenno said, who thinks of gift-giving as a way to avoid confrontations. "We are basically very greedy. We want everything handed to us on a silver platter."

Once we realize our goals are unrealistic, he says, we're out of the woods.

The worry "am I giving what I should give?" plagues many shoppers and Mathis cites the fear of disappointing a child as another gift-giving worry.

"Many times, we feel that just because our needs are not met, we could at least meet others'," Nenno said.

The classically jolly individuals aren't always safe from depression, either.

"Some of these people ho-ho-hoing on the outside are crumbling inside," said Nenno. They're afraid of disappointing others by showing their depression, so they hold it in or work hard to please others.

Nenno describes a person who would be relatively invulnerable to depression as "a wise person who has not been super-elated or crushed by the experiences life hands them." These people are helpful to those who are truly depressed and those who are blue.

Walesa Asks For Strikes By Solidarity

By The Associated Press

Lech Walesa urged Solidarity members to stage bloodless strikes against Poland's martial law regime to prove the independent union "works and exists," the Norwegian radio reported Saturday. Reports from Poland said troops shot and kiled 56 people and clubbed 10 others to death.

Western intelligence sources Saturday confirmed that planeloads of Soviet officers landed in Warsaw last Wednesday. There was no further elaboration.

The State Department said it considered reports of 54 killed in worker-police clashes in Poland to be reliable. A Dutch truck driver returning from Poland said Solidarity officials told him Polish troops shot and killed 56 miners and clubbed 10 others to death in Katowice last week.

The driver, Albert Brand, reached by The Associated Press bureau in Amsterdam after he returned from a convoy delivering charity food parcels to Poland, said Solidarity officials told him 10 people were clubbed to death Wednesday and 56 shot to death Thursday night at the Wojek mine. Poland's official media reported seven demonstrators shot and killed at the mine.

Polish workers, some joined by deserting martial law troops, were holding out in factories, mines, and shipyards, according to reports reaching the West from Poland on Saturday.

Some accounts said the strikers threatened to blow up mines and ships and that Walesa suffered a heart attack, but as with all the other reports, the accounts could not be confirmed because there are no normal communications with Poland and dispatches by Western correspondents are subject to military censorship.

Walesa's appeal was written and signed by him Thursday in the village he is being held in 15 miles south of Warsaw and smuggled out of Poland by a Norwegian citizen, Norway's government radio, NRK, said.

The broadcast said Walsea urged Solidarity members to stage "passive strikes" at their factories, meaning not to report to work, and that "at plants where you have a possiblity to defend yourselves, you should stage active strikes," meaning occupations, NRK said.

"Workers should not arm themselves and should avoid bloodshed," said Walesa, Solidarity's chief. The message ended with an appeal to "prove that Solidarity works and exits," the radio said.

Reports from Warsaw said hundreds of people trudged through the snow for the funeral of a prominent Polish journalist, Jerzy Zielinski, who reportedly leaped from a hospital window last Sunday after learning about the military takeover and the arrests of Solidarity's top leaders.

The funeral procession took place in silence. There was no eulogy, but friends described Zielinski as the "first victim of martial law."

Meanwhile, a convoy of at least 30 trucks carrying food arrived in Poland. Some of the trucks bore red "friendship" banners saying the food came from East Germany. Food appeared on usually empty shelves, sparking speculation that the government had been hoarding it.

Hobby Trial Ends In Conviction

By BILL OUTLAW
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A federal jury Saturday found former state labor leader Wilbur Hobby and business associate Mort Levi guilty of illegally obtaining and misapplying federal job-training funds.

The six-man, six-woman jury returned the verdict about 3:30 p.m., after nearly 15 hours of deliberations.

U.S. District Judge W. Earl Britt delayed sentencing for the men until Dec. 29 at 1 p.m. Hobby faces maximum punishment of 11 years in prison and a $40,000 fine for the four counts against him. Levi faces a maximum sentence of seven years in prison and a $20,000 fine for the two counts against him.

Britt allowed each of the men to remain free on an unsecured $10,000 bond.

Hobby and Levi sat motionless as they heard the jury had found them guilty of illegally obtaining and misapplying federal Comprehensive Employment and Training Act funds. None of the jurors displayed any outward signs of emotion in the nine days of the trial and two days of deliberations.

The money was given to Hobby's printing company in Raleigh, Precision Graphics Inc. Levi also was found guilty of urging students to falsify applications for the program.

Federal marshalls escorted the jurors from the building when court adjourned as prosecutors and Hobby, Levi and their relatives quickly disappeared through a side door to the courtroom.

David Rudolph, an attorney for Hobby, refused to comment on the verdict but Joseph P. Cheshire V, an attorney for Levi, said he would have to review the case before deciding whether to appeal the verdict.

When asked if he was disappointed, Cheshire said "extremely so...We did not come into this expecting to lose. It's like a football team preparing for the Super Bowl."

Chesire also said he believed the long deliberations by the jury indicated that it was a difficult and complex case to resolve.

He speculated that one reason for the guilty verdict was that "it's very hard for 12 jurors to digest that much evidence in that short a period of time. There's a tendency after seeing that much evidence for them to say they think they're guilty."

U.S. Attorney Sam Currin said the reason he believed a guilty verdict was returned was because of the "totality of the evidence."

"I think we demontrated that funds were misapplied," Currin said, although he acknowledged that he was worried about the length of time the jurors took to come to their decision.

Currin also said that negotiations are continuing between the state and federal government regarding reimbursement of the CETA money.

"I would expect reimbursement to be made to the U.S.government," Currin said. "I would imagine that the entire contract (between the state and Precision Graphics) would be disallowed."

The jury resumed deliberations about 9 a.m. Saturday, after recessing at 5:30 p.m., Friday.

Hobby and Levi were indicted by a federal grand jury on Feb. 10. The indictments related to CETA funds the two had secured between

Roberson: New Plan Meets Pressing Road Needs

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Transportation Secretary W. R. Roberson says a highway improvement program adopted Friday represents a shift from new construction to maintaining existing roads but "reflects an equitable distribution of limited resources to meet some of the most pressing needs we have in terms of balanced economic development for the state."

The state Board of Transportation's scaled-down plan, based on a 33 percent reduction in funds, eliminated about half of the projects contained in earlier seven-year plans and extended the time period for those left to 10 years.

Of the 279 projects contained in the last seven-year highway program, 95 were scrapped, along with 372 that the board had endorsed but not programmed into the plan for construction. Previously scheduled projects that were killed would have cost $1.2 billion.

The four-laning of U.S. 13-N.C.11 from Greenville to Bethel, estimated to cost $9.7 million, and a 1.2-mile improvement of Secondary Road 1225 from the U.S. 264 Bypass to downtown Farmville, estimated to cost $1.05 million, were among the previously programmed projects placed on an "inactive" list.

However, the Board of Transportation's new improvement program includes the construction of a four-lane, limited-access U.S. 264 from N.C. 58 at Wilson to Greenville, and the completion of a four-lane U.S. 264 from S.R. 1537 east of Greenville to Washington.

The interchanges planned along the Wilson-to-Greenville route have been deleted and will be replaced with at-grade intersections as a means of cutting costs.

Gov. Jim Hunt has said in the past that a four-lane highway from Wilson to Greenville was a priority item for him. That, along with the fact that Roberson is from Washington and that Pitt's representatives in the General Assembly — including Rep. Ed Warren who attended the board meeting Friday, Rep. Sam Bundy and Sen. Vernon White — strongly supported the project, certainly helped to preserve it.

Right-of-way acquisition for the new highway between Wilson and Greenville has already begun. Construction of the 11 miles of roadway from N.C. 58 to the Wilson-Greene County line, estimated to cost $32.07 million, is scheduled to begin during the 1982-83 fiscal year. Construction on the 9.9 miles from the Wilson-Greene County line to the Farmville bypass ($13.25 million), and the 12.5 miles from Farmville to Greenville ($31.11 million) is programmed to begin in fiscal year 1983-84.

If things go as planned, the new roadway between Wilson and Greenville, should be completed in fiscal year 1990-1991.

Construction of U.S. 264 from secondary road 1537 to Washington — a 10.4 mile section estimated to cost $14.81 million — is scheduled to begin in fiscal year 1983-84, and should be completed before the Wilson-to-Greenville highway.

Even with Hunt's support, and the backing of such people as Roberson, Warren and the other Pitt legislators, the project may run into difficulty.

Roberson and Highway Administrator Billy Rose warned Friday that even with the scaled-down and lengthened plan, construction planned beyond mid-1983 may face funding problems unless revenues increase.

Highway officials acknowledged that the old seven-year improvement program has become a "wish book" and that funding for the 10-year plan is not guaranteed beyond 18 months.

"We won't be able to build any projects after June 30, 1983, unless we have some additional state revenues to match federal aid," Roberson said.

Money from a state highway bond issue is running out and the General Assembly this year limited highway construction spending to projects funded with federal matching grants. Unless additional money is raised, the state, after June 30, 1983, won't have the $45 million a year in matching funds needed to obtain $167 million a year in federal grants.

Roberson pointed out that the old seven-year highway improvement plan "has become a 15- to 20-year plan because of inflation and the shortage of revenues.

Increased highway construction costs, and reduced revenues for construction and maintenance have combined to cause the problem.

"The idea of living within our means is truly an 'idea whose time has come' for the Department of Transportation," Roberson emphasized.

ABC Receipts Up Slightly

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Ten months ago Greenville residents voted their approval of the sale of mixed beverages in local restaurants — liquor by the drink.

Now, it's difficult to tell just what impact the sale of mixed drinks has had.

From the time sales began in early March through Nov. 30, establishments selling mixed drinks bought 33,525 bottles of alcoholic beverages — mostly fifths — from the Pitt County ABC system for a total price of $282,755.41, according to ABC officials. The total cost, the spokesman said, includes $64,273.56 in special taxes placed on liquor sold for mixed drink sales.

Of the special $10 per gallon tax on bottles sold for mixed drink sales, $9 is returned to the county, while $1 goes to the N.C. Department of Human Resources.

Some 3,733 bottles of liquor were sold to local restaurants during the first month of mixed drink sales. That was followed in April by 2,726 bottles, 3,406 bottles in May, 3,428 in June, 3,566 in July, 2,919 in August, 4,434 in September, 4,971 in October, and 4,342 in November.

ABC officials, pointing out that total sales in Pitt are up from last year, said that so far for the month of December, had it not been for mixed drink bottle sales, total sales for the month would be down about $2,000.

The sale of liquor for mixed drinks accounts for about 8 percent of the total Pitt ABC system business. However, officials said just because the dollar amount of sales is up doesn't mean that there is more whiskey being consumed. Price increases over the past year, they said, would be reflected in the total sales figures.

Are there more persons driving under the influence of alcohol now than there were before mixed drink sales?

That question is also hard to answer. During the period of July 1, 1980, through Oct. 31, 1980, Greenville police made 65 DUI arrests, while for the same four-month period in 1981, local officers charged 84 motorists with driving under the influence.

However, the number of other motor vehicle arrests were up during the same period this year. In 1980, 119 drivers — checked by radar — were charged with speeding during the same four-month period compared to 427 in 1981. In 1980, the number of other traffic charges totaled 363 with 620 in 1981.

By-the-drink liquor sales were supported by the Greenville Restaurant Association. Most restaurants in Greenville eligible to sell mixed beverages have chosen to do so, and last week, a random sampling of their managers indicated that Poland ...

"It was there all along," said an elderly Polish woman. "Solidarity was right all along."

Warsaw Radio reported "pauses in work" and continuing sit-ins at several plants in Wroclaw province, along the Baltic coast's industrial belt and at the Huta Katowice steel works. It also said the 10 p.m.-6 a.m. curfew was extended two hours in Gdansk, scene of fierce rioting last week, maintained at the same level in six other provinces, and relaxed two hours in the other 42.

In a later broadcast, the radio reported that a miner was killed and several others injured in a mine explosion at the Zabrze coal mine in Silesia on Friday. The report said 23 miners were rescued.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said a pattern was emerging in which Poland's military rulers were using soldiers to seal off public areas and workplaces and using police to intimidate political activists through violence. "We again call for the release of political prisoners," Fischer said.

There have been unconfirmed reports of 50,000 arrests in Poland since martial was declared a week ago. The Polish state radio has admitted seven people killed in clashes with police.

Fischer said the State Department has unconfirmed information that many more have been killed. Some reports placed the dead at 54. Fischer said these reports appeared based on multiple sources and "appear to be reliable. We call upon the Polish government to cease its repressive attacks on Polish workers."

From the Vatican, Pope John Paul II sent two envoys to Vienna, where they boarded a train to Warsaw to hold talks with Polish church and government officials and Walesa. They were sent in hopes of negotiating a settlement of the week-old crisis in the pontiff's native land.

The Italian news agency ANSA said a proclamation from Poland's primate, Archbishop Jozef Glemp, will be read in all Polish churches Sunday urging Poles to avoid bloodshed and "not to raise an arm filled with hatred against one another.

"Keep calm, do not drive our country to a still greater disaster. Only self-control and the maintenance of calm can save the country and the church which fulfills her mission in it," ANSA quoted Glemp's message as saying.

A Polish sailor enroute to Saint Nazaire, a French port on the Atlantic, told reporters in Paris after arriving by plane from Warsaw that Walesa was "interned in a suburb of Warsaw because he refused to issue an appeal for calm."

The sailor, among a group of 20 heading to Saint Nazaire for reasons which could not be determined, said he had been in Gdansk and that workers occupying the shipyards there were "threatening to sink everything if the militia intervenes."

The Czechoslovak Communist Party newspaper Rude Pravo said Polish strikers have threatened to blow up a barricaded gas bottling plant 20 miles from the Wojek coal mine in Katowice where troops shot and killed seven demonstrators last week.

Warsaw Radio said those injured Wednesday during clashes at the Wujek mine were being cared for at Katowice hospitals. Another broadcast said that governors and mayors had been instructed by the government to set up 24-hour shifts for doctors and nurses. The radio said the goal was "to adapt health service establishments to the conditions of winter and martial law."

Rude Pravo said strikers at another mine in Upper Silesia have placed explosives at the shaft entrance and are threatening to set them off unless martial law is repealed.

Polish air force Lt. Gen. Roman Paszkowski, the new Katowice provincial governor, told miners, "It has not so far been found possible to extinguish all hotbeds of conflicts," Warsaw Television reported. But Warsaw Radio claimed Polish troops were "proving true."

A later Warsaw Radio broadcast acknowledged there were strikes in Gdansk, Sopot and Gdynia.

Broadcast reports said summary investigations were started by regional prosecutors' offices in Gorzow Wielkopolski, Lodz-Srodmiescie, Bialogard and army prosecutors in Krakow.

Former activists in the Warsaw region were reliably reported to have gone on a hunger strike two days ago at an overcroweded prison in the capital.

But former Communist Party chief Edward Gierek was said to be detained at a military rest home on the Hel Peninsula in the Bay of Gdansk.

Western travelers arriving in Warsaw on Friday night said strikes were underway at aircraft factories in Mielec and Swidnik. Other reports said a truck factory in Lublin was on strike, as was a railroad car factory in Wrocaw.

Paul Koshinski, 20, a student from Binghamton, N.Y., told reporters on arriving in Vienna by train from Warsaw, that Polish soldiers joined workers occupying the Nowa Huta steel works shortly after security forces stormed the mill earlier this week.

He said workers were still holding a small section of the sprawling Krakow works, and were being supplied with food and information by student couriers.

"I don't know how many soldiers joined the workers, but I gathered it could have been quite a few."

Koshinski, who was studying Polish at Krakow's Jagiellonian University, said he heard of the soldiers' desertion from a Polish student who said he was at Nowa Huta Wednesday, shortly after workers and security forces clashed there during the early morning hours.

Another traveler arriving in Vienna from Warsaw — a French national who requested anonymity — said he heard that the 38-year-old Walesa was said to have had a heart attack after hearing of the deaths of the demonstrators at the Wojek coal mine.

But he said he heard the rumor from a friend, who in turn allegedly heard it from "medical circles," and could not elaborate further. Poland's ambassador in London said Friday that Walesa was receiving "special treatment" but did not specify what this meant.

Walesa has not been heard from directly since authorities declared martial law a week ago after Solidarity leaders called for a national referendum on whether or not to retain the communist government.

Holiday Joy ...

"We ain't living in heaven, but on the other hand, we're not living in hell," said Nenno.

Another facet to holiday blues is known to psychologists as retroactive falsification. This is forgetting the bad times and convincing yourself that every other holiday was good, and this one is going to be a disappointment.

While Mathis believes the blues to be a part of a normal life, he also states that the first Christmas after a husband or wife leaves or a child dies will be a rough one.

For parents, the fear of letting their children find out that there really is no Santa Claus is very real. Everyone wants to be able to believe in the round-bellied gent and, according to psychologists, if the children don't, that means the parents can't either.

Regression plays an important role here. Leaving out cookies and milk for Santa Claus or labeling packages "from Santa," in Mom's familiar hand is healthy even if the children are 16 or 18 years old; or there are no children to benefit from the practice.

"It never really comes as a shock to kids that Santa doesn't exist," said Nenno. "We would all like to be on the take, to be kids, at Christmas."

ABC Sales ...

their business is up, liquor sales help hold down food prices, and there are fewer problems with customers who have had too much to drink than before.

For example, an official at Sweet Caroline's said the sale of mixed beverages has increased business by 25 percent and "greatly increased the bottom line ... the profit margin." However, he emphasized that "you've got to have a good business to begin with. If you don't have a good business to begin with, liquor by the drink is not going to help."

He added that, "We have less problem with drunks now than we had before liquor by the drink."

A spokesman at the Beef Barn said mixed drinks there account for about 12 percent of sales and have helped to hold food prices down. While never having a big problem with drinkers, the official said, "we have had no problem" since brown-bagging was eliminated.

"It's hard to tell with us" but business "has improved," a spokesman at the Ramada Inn said.

The Holiday Inn did not begin selling mixed drinks until Sept. 1. However John Haughn said drink sales have "rounded business out ... helped hold the cost of food down," although it "has not been an overnight mass buying situation."

At the Holiday Inn, just as at other restaurants, "it has not affected meetings," Haughn noted. "Facilities affect meetings. Liquor by the drink is just part of our facility."

At the Casablanca Restaurant liquor accounts for a third of the sales, according to Leroy Cherry, who said "yes, it's helped tremendously."

"We have found that some of the companies — larger businesses here that have had banquets with us — probably would have gone to another part of the state or to another state if we had not had liquor by the drink."

Cherry noted that, on Wednesday night, "we had a group that flew in from Winston-Salem for the night" for the Casablanca "happy hour," which he described as "the largest (similar) event we know of in the state. We have people come from all over Eastern North Carolina ... Raleigh, Wilmington, all around to be at this occasion ... 800 to 1,200 people. That means an awful lot to us ... It's totally the result of liquor by the drink."

While restaurants with mixed drink sales seem pleased, so do restaurants that don't sell liquor.

For example, officials at The Three Steers said "business is good" and has been since other firms began selling drinks. "We've been booked solid" with parties and have had to turn some away.

At those private parties "most people are brown-bagging," so not selling liquor by the drink hasn't seemed to hurt.

Florida Citrus Growers Brace For Cold Weather

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — Florida's citrus and vegetable growers escaped a killing frost early Saturday, but didn't expect to be as lucky early Sunday as bitterly cold air settled over the state.

Five Florida cities experienced record cold temperatures for a Dec. 19 early Saturday. Some below-freezing temperatures were recorded in the citrus belt, but it didn't get cold enough or stay cold long enough to do any damage, spokesmen said.

Citrus can be damaged if the temperature drops to 28 or below and stays there for four or more hours.

"Tonight, I think we could very well have some problems," Earl Wells, spokesman for Florida Citrus Mutual in Lakeland, representing 15,000 growers, said Saturday. "The preliminary indication is for possible mid-20 temperatures for four or five hours here in Polk County, and maybe a little longer up in Lake County."

Polk County, heart of the citrus belt, produces more fruit than all other citrus-growing states combined. Lake County is in the northern part of the belt, which covers most of central Florida.

Of the most concern to the industry were trees that were damaged in a hard freeze last January, when the $2 billion-a-year industry suffered a loss estimated at $190 million.

"A lot of the trees damaged in the January freeze were pruned and cut back, and they have a lot of new growth on them," said Wells. "This could really effect their recovery because new growth is more susceptible."

Industry officials say only about 10 percent of citrus growers have grove heaters, mostly because fuel is too costly. Others may use wind machines to keep cold air from settling on the trees, but many will take no preventative measures.

Reginald Brown, Collier County's agricultural extension agent, said temperatures in the upper 20s early Sunday would threaten tomatoes, squash, green peppers, cucumbers and other crops in southern and southwestern Florida.

"We're in trouble" if the mercury stays below freezing for two to four hours. Such a cold snap, he said, "could be catastrophic."

By mid-day Saturday, at least one farmer in southern Dade County reported that bitter winds and cold temperatures had wiped out 200 acres of cucumbers.

"We lost everything we have," Sam Accursio, who farms 210 acres south of Miami, said. "It is a disaster for us. Right now, we're out of business."

In Palm Beach County, grower Ted Winsberg said he did not think Saturday night's cold snap posed a threat to his pepper crop in Delray Beach.

"It all depends on the wind conditions," Winsberg said. "If they stay (high), it will save a lot of frost (from settling). We hope to make it through."

Brown said many growers would spray water on the fields, hoping the warmer water would reduce frost damage.

Pensacola's 18 degrees — coldest in the state — broke a 22-degree mark set in 1929. Apalachicola, on the Gulf of Mexico in the Panhandle, had 22, breaking the 24-degree record posted in 1975.

A record low of 44 was recorded at Tampa International Airport. The previous record for the date for Tampa, set in 1891, was 52.

Heavy Traffic Damages Cited

Weekend traffic accidents caused approximately $9,450 in damage, according to Greenville police reports.

The collision Friday of a city school bus driven by Kathy Lou Clack of 1210 Myrtle Ave. and a car driven by Karen Haas Kara-Eneff of 105-A S. Jarvis St. caused about $200 damage to the bus and about $100 in damages to the car. The accident occurred on Elm Street.

Another collision Friday, on Greenville Boulevard, caused more extensive damage. The accident involved cars driven by Stacy Ann Stephenson of 1733 Beaumont Drive and Irene Heath Tucker of Route 1, Greenville.

Damage was placed at $1,300 to the Stephenson vehicle and $800 to the Tucker vehicle. Ms. Stephenson received minor injuries in the accident.

No charges were made.

Another Friday accident was reported on Arlington Boulevard at the exit of Greenville Square Shpping Center.

Police reported a car driven by Carolyn Boyd Jones of Route 2, Greenville, collided with a vehicle driven by Rodney Vernon Wilkins of 720 Hooker Rd. Both drivers received minor injuries in the accident.

Approximatley $1,900 damage was caused to the Jones vehicle while an estimate of $2,800 was placed on the Wilkins auto.

No charges were made in another accident on Greenville Boulevard involving cars driven by Timothy Earl Daniels of 112 Greenfield Boulevard and Connie Joyner Eastwood of Robersonville. Approximately $100 damage was caused to the Daniels auto, while officials placed damage to the Eastwood car at $250.

An accident on 14th Street resulted in $2,000 dmamge to the two vehicles. Police said Jimmy Ray Lloyd of Carrboro was charged with exceeding a safe speed after his car collided with one driven by Tracy Glynn Hagan of Route 6, Greenville.

Hobby ...

February 1979 and May 1980. Hobby and Levi were found guilty of all five counts in the indictment.

Shortly after the trial began, Britt dismissed a related but separate charge that Hobby had gained illegal profits from CETA money earmarked for transporting students.

At the time of the alleged crimes, Hobby was president and chief executive officer of Precision Graphics as well as president of the state AFL-CIO, a position he had held since 1969. He now works at the American Tobacco Factory in Durham and Leland paperworker E.A. Britt is president of the union. Levi was program director for Precision Graphics during the time covered by the indictment.

Sunday Opinion

Carter Decision Not To Appeal Is Best For City

Ed Carter, who lost a seat on the City Council by only 20 votes, announced last week that he would not pursue an appeal of a decision against a recount.

The Pitt County Board of Elections had ruled against the recount and the State Board of Elections upheld the ruling. The next step would have been an appeal to the Wake County Superior Court.

Carter was clearly disappointed in the decision which he said he considered unjust. However, he said he was taking the course because of the high regard he felt for the citizens of Greenville.

"It is quite obvious that the new mayor, Mr. Cox, and the City Council are facing some of the most critical issues of the decade and to have to continue to face the uncertainty of the City Council composition could have a negative impact on their decision-making capability."

Carter made it plain that he did not agree with the decision and said he hoped "no candidate in my situation will ever be denied a recount in the future."

It is not easy for a competitive person to take a loss by so narrow a margin and certainly the request for a recount was to be expected.

However, Ed Carter has taken the statesmanlike approach in not pursuing the matter further. The council has already been sworn in based on the State Board of Elections action. Any further appeals to the courts could possibly paralyze city government at a time when decisions need to be made.

We assume Carter's instinct would be to pursue the issue, but we have no doubt he has gained respect in his decision to allow the newly elected council to freely function.

Department To Go; Energy Objectives Need To Be Met

The Reagan administration has decided to abolish the Energy Department and disperse its duties among other agencies.

The objective is to reduce jobs in the federal government. That sounds appealing as applied to Washington where too many government workers are employed to do the work at hand. At the same time the public needs more assurance that the duties of the Energy Department will be carried out. We need energy conservation and we must have alternate sources of energy. We have just come through the shattering experience of seeing energy price increases nearly wreck our economy.

As a society we should not be standing around unprotected when it occurs again. No one else is going to do it for us.

Sunday Morning Notes

David Brian Williams is only 4 years old. Already, however, he has learned that a penney saved is a penney earned ... or that it takes pennies to make dollars.

He saved enough of them to make 32 rolls, and as Christmas approached he decided to turn the rolls in for dollars to be used to buy Christmas gifts for his family.

So last Tuesday it was off to the bank to cash in the rolls of pennies. He was greeted by the lady at the NCNB office on Greenville Boulevard. She told him she had heard he had come to make a major transaction. David was then given 16 new one dollar bills in exchange for the pennies.

David's mother said saving the pennies had been going on for a year. They were saved first in a cash register bank David got for Christmas last year. When that filled up the pennies went into a gallon jug. David's mother counted and helped roll the pennies and, following the stop at the bank, it was off Christmas shopping for David.

David is the son of Tommy J. and Katherine Williams of Greenville.

The lady had been hurrying about downtown, no doubt preparing for Christmas. Then bad luck came at the worst possible time. Her feet went out from under her and she fell to the sidewalk hitting her face. It was a serious fall and the fire-rescuemen were called.

They carefully bandaged her head and placed her on a stretcher. Soon a friend came by and recognized her.

"Do you want me to call your children?" the friend asked. The woman was firm in saying that she didn't, that it would only worry them.

Getting back to her car from the hospital was her major concern, and the friend volunteered to pick her up once she was treated.

The fire-rescuemen gently lifted the stretcher into the ambulance and left for the hospital.

The man was obviously waiting for his wife at the crowded Carolina East Mall one night last week.

"You doing your Christmas shopping," we asked the stock question.

"No," he replied with mock grumpiness. "My wife's doing the shopping. I'm just sitting."

He might not have been shopping but he surely was spending.

Parallel

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan drew the parallel: This Christmas it is Poland, two years ago it was Afghanistan. That was a time of stern U.S. warnings to Moscow, too; warnings followed by economic sanctions.

But Soviet soldiers still are in Afghanistan. And on the western flank of the Soviet Union, the government of Poland is crushing the Solidarity reform movement.

Those episodes — one of direct Soviet intervention, the other of Polish government action that Reagan said must have been sanctioned and supported by Moscow — point to the dilemma of an administration trying to deal with Soviet interventionism.

Gunboat diplomacy doesn't work with superpowers. Besides, these days the gunboats come equipped with nuclear weapons, heightening the risk in any military response, even a symbolic one.

Economic sanctions are a more likely option — but Jimmy Carter applied them without success after Soviet force moved into Afghanistan.

So far, the administration response to the Polish crackdown has been to suspend food shipments.But that is not likely to cause grave concern at the Kremlin.

Beyond that, Reagan has warned of serious consequences if the Soviet Union intervenes directly, while carefully avoiding saying what they might be.

Reagan said the Soviet Union already is interfering, although indirectly. "It would be naive to think this could happen without the full knowledge and support of the Soviet Union," he said. "We are not naive."

When Soviet troops moved into Afghanistan, Carter retaliated with a partial embargo of grain sales, a ban on shipment of high-technology equipment to the Soviet Union and a boycott of the 1980 Moscow Olympic games.

Reagan, then a presidential candidate, opposed the grain embargo, saying it was unfair to American farmers and was not effective anyhow. As president, he lifted the embargo, warning as he did so that the action did not mean the new administration would tolerate Soviet aggression.

"We will react strongly to acts of aggression wherever they take place," Reagan said in lifting the embargo last spring. "There will never be a weakening of this resolve."

Now, with Poland in crisis, the administration is responding with stern warnings of unspecified consequences should the Soviet Union take overt action.

"Two Decembers ago, freedom was lost in Afghanistan," Reagan said. "This Christmas, it is at stake in Poland. But the torch of liberty is hot. It warms those who hold it high. It burns those who try to extinguish it."

A Christmas That Could Be Remembered

RALEIGH — Christmases of the '30s and '40s were times for getting something you needed; something you could use, whether or not that's what you wanted.

Looking back, that was probably good for us.

In that same spirit, here's a list of Christmas wishes for North Carolinians and their political and governmental leaders:

For U.S. Rep. L.H. Fountain, a congressional district which is honestly anf fairly drawn even if that means he must face both primary opposition from fellow Democrats, and general election opposition from a Republican.

For members of the General Assembly, a computer printout which settles once and for all a single district from which one member will run for the state Senate and the state House of Representatives based simply on population rather than power bases or politics.

For North Carolinians, political leaders top to bottom with the courage and good sense to recognize that continued power brokering and manipulating district lines in elections serves only personal and selfish interests and not the interest of the citizens.

For Sen. Jesse Helms, the clarity of thought and strength of conviction to recognize that getting the federal government off everybody's back means getting out of tobacco, too.

For Gov. Jim Hunt, enough wisdom to withstand the siren lure of those who say he is the only person who can defeat Jesse Helms and that he owes it to his state and party to try it.

For the Democratic Party, emergence of a good, kind and wise candidate for governor who does not lust after power so that the present turkey trot can come to an end.

For the Republican Party, a realization that lasting political change begins at home and fielding solid candidates for local and state offices is more important than crowing over the presidency.

For the Congressional Club, the acceptance of reality that raising money, backing candidates and pushing issues independently can only lead to further fracturing of the Republican Party and splintering of the conservative cause into competing groups.

For Tar Heel motorists, a pothole patched instead of another "Good Roads" sign painted and stuck in the shoulder.

For North Carolina newsmen — radio, television and print, a microelectronic bunk detector so we can quit feeding the public so much of the political mouthings which daily assult us, and which we and the politicians know to be bunk.

For judges and district attorneys, the courage to go ahead with criminal trials on serious charges — especially drunk driving — without reducing charges and handing down slaps on the wrist in the name of "clearing the calandar." If reinforcing the law and rendering justice requires longer hours and more personnel as they claim, then let the truth of that be seen by doing and not by threat.

For inmates in North Carolina prisons and jails, the opportunity to work and learn a trade for those who truly have a change of heart and want to turn their lives around; but hard times for those who only await freedom to prey once more on decent people.

For members of the General Assembly, a hearty showing of rejection from Tar Heels of the four-year term proposal in the May primary election and leadership in Raleigh intent upon serving the state and her citizens rather than grabbing purse strings and power.

For all who yearn for that day when state government will be clean, compassionate, willing and dedicated to the common good, faith, hope ... and the enduring patience of Job.

Polish Gamble On Results Of Martial Law

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's advisers see a strong probability that Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski will lose his martial law gamble, leading to direct Soviet intervention in Poland and perhaps costing the lives of hundreds of thousands of fighting Poles.

Loss of the gamble would also plunge U.S.-Soviet relations into a new period of cold war and transform the East-West struggle that has shown some recent signs of easing under pressures of the Western European peace movement.

Jaruzelski is gambling that the threat of Polish military force will tame the Solidarity workers' peaceful, democratic revolution, anathema to Moscow. To win his bet, the prime minister and Communist Party leader must persuade Solidarity to become a submissive partner in a Communist regime that has flunked every economic test and resisted every political test since Solidarity's banner first flew in Gdansk in August, 1980. "Solidarity cannot become submissive without sacrificing all the gains it has made," one Western specialist on Poland told us.

An unsubmissive workers' movement would carry Jaruzelski's gamble to a dreaded climax: whether his army and its 56,000-man paramilitary security force can conceivably compel workers by threats of reprisal not only to forego the priceless strike weapon but to turn out goods for an economy that the Communist Party has destroyed. Failure would bring Soviet troops into the streets of Moscow's largest satellite.

On Sept. 4, 1980 hard-line Communist leader Stefan Olszowski, survivor of repeated Party purges by virtue of his Soviet backing, ordered Jaruzelski, then the defense minister and Poland's top Warsaw Pact general, to deploy his forces in Silesia, the heart of Poland's industrial coal region. Jaruzelski rejected the order, claiming that it would convert "all our factories" into "fortresses" against an army regarded as more loyal to Solidarity than the Communist Party.

But 15 months later, Moscow's rising fears that the Solidarity movement threatened the very existence of a Communist-run Poland produced pressures that changed Jaruzelski's mind and persuaded him to take the gamble. Top administration officials say he has a maximum of two to three weeks to show Moscow that his gamble is paying off.

Despite late-burning lights at the State and Defense departments, President Reagan's National Security men told us there is no way for the U.S. to affect what happens in those two to three weeks. For now, they have ruled out economic reprisals against Moscow. Except for public warnings to the Soviets to keep out and for planning economic sanctions on grain and technology if Moscow intervenes, the U.S. and its Western allies claim they are helpless bystanders in this dramatic Eastern European challenge to Soviet control. That underecores the mood of White House frustration, a mood temporarily interrupted on Dec. 10 after months of internal debate.

On that day, Reagan changed his mind and personally approved an emergency food package of $100 million for immediate shipment to Poland. When a larger aid package was first taken up by the NSC in late summer, Reagan vetoed it in accord with his hardnosed anti-Communist ideology.

Model Report On A Strange Situation

WASHINGTON — An estimated 75 million Americans fly somewhere in the country every year. This month's report from the National Transportation Safety Board on the consequences of the air controllers' strike will renew their confidence in the airways. The system is as safe as it was before the strike. Indeed, for various reasons, it is probably safer.

The report is a model of its kind — thorough, even-handed, pleasantly compact. The safety board is an independent entity, owing no allegiance to government, labor or industry. The board's inspectors visited airport towers and en route control centers; they interviewed pilots and controllers; they sought comments from airlines and from persons in general aviation. Their measured conclusions merit respectful attention.

The strike began on Aug. 3 when 13,000 members of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization (PATCO) failed to report for work. In the next day or so, 1,600 of them returned; 11,400 stayed on strike. Owing to elaborate preparations for such a contingency, the government was able to rise to the situation. Military controllers were called in; 70 small towers were closed; operations were reduced at another 250 airports. The Federal Aviation Administration ordered an immediate reduction in the operations of commercial carriers and general aviation. A system of "flow control" was introduced. The response was make-do and can-do, and it worked.

Has the system worked safely? To that primary question, the board returns an unequivocal answer: yes. The statistics on operational errors and near collisions are in conflict, but the best evidence indicates that such incidents have been sharply reduced from the levels of a year ago.

Within the airport towers and the control centers, consequences have been both good and not-so-good. Many of the tensions that had existed before the strike have been relieved. Almost unanimously, working controllers and pilots report a new spirit of cooperation and camaraderie. Morale is high. On the other hand, many controllers now on the job continue to work more than 40 hours a week at their demanding tasks. The board foresees an increasing risk of excessive stress and fatigue on their part.

How long will these conditions continue? The board believes it will be "mid to late 1984" before the cadre of fully-qualified civilian controllers can be restored to pre-strike levels. Meanwhile, flight operations will be gradually increased as graduates of the controller training school come on line. Some military controllers will be required through 1982.

The board's report provides a clear picture — and a deplorable picture — of the working conditions that led to the strike. Many working controllers spoke of stresses created by the "disruptive tactics of PATCO members." Weak managers, getting no support from Washington, were unable to cope with the militants. The union "harassed" supervisors with grievances, paperwork and uncooperative attitudes. "Virtually all contact betwcen management and controller representatives was on a confrontational basis."

"A major concern of most working controllers was that the striking controllers would be allowed to return. This concern caused most controllers to do everything possible to make the system operate smoothly in order to eliminate all criticism by system users."

The FAA has responded promptly to the board's criticisms by appointing blue-ribbon groups to investigate failures of management and problems of potential stress. New screening procedures have been put into effect at the training academy in an effort to reduce the high failure rate. A bill is actively pending in Congress to award the controllers a retroactive 6.6 percent pay raise. The president, though he has agreed to let the dismissed controllers seek jobs elsewhere in government, has not retreated from his determination not to rehire them in the towers.

All in all, thumbs up. The system has been hurt, but it's getting well.

To the editor:

The American Legion is in the middle of a drive to raise funds for a memorial to the 57,709 American military persons who died in the Vietnam War. Several other organizations have joined with the Legion in this drive. The memorial will be built without government funds but on federal property in Washington. It will consist of an attractive and impressive wall over a hundred yards long and will bear the names of all of the honored dead.

Recently a letter was received from the widow of a soldier who died in combat. Her letter asked for some symbol which would serve her son as evidence of his nation's memory of his father whom the 12-year-old boy had never seen.

Undoubtedly there are many persons in our area who would like to contribute to the creation of this memorial to the latest of our war dead — men who gave their lives for our country in hope their families and all our citizens and other people of the World lmight be saved from militant communism. A dollar, or even ten dollars, from each of many people will assure completion of this magnificent memorial.

Contributions may be sent to: Vietnam Veterans Memorial, The American Legion Headquarters, P.O. Box 1055, Indianapolis, Ind. 46206; or to: Post 39 The American Legion, P.O. Box 21, Greenville, N.C. 27834; or may be given to members of the Legion for conveyance to his post.

'People Get By With Murder A Lot'

To a law enforcement officer, nothing is more frustrating than to know who committed a crime and not be able to prove it. To Attorney General Rufus Edminsten, it's even more frustrating because he has had to disband the unsolved murders task force he set up in the State Bureau of Investigation four years ago despite the fact "it was going great guns."

"It's a terrible, crying shame," said Edmisten in revealing the murder investigation squad headed by veteran SBI Agent Max Bryan had been disbanded because there are so many new murders to probe the state agency cannot afford the manpower for a concentrated attack on the old ones.

"We solved a bunch of crimes," Edmisten added. "But the trouble is most of our good officers have 20 to 25 cases on their desks. The tragic fact is there are so many current murders I couldn't keep the special squad going."

Bryan noted that his task force had concentrated on 50 unsolved slayings after it was created in 1977 and that its efforts had resulted in writing "solved" on about 17 cases.

"We might take another 50 unsolved cases and have the same results," Bryan added, "but it's pretty hard to tell a family you haven't solved their case which happened two weeks ago because you are working on one that happened 10 years ago."

The comments by Edmisten and Bryan reminded this reporter that North Carolina newspapers carried a story on Sept.1, 1968, in which Myron McBryde, then SBI director, was quoted as saying his men were on the verge of solving three of North Carolina's most sensational murder cases.

McBryde told the reporter that the SBI had solid suspects in the slaying of University of North Carolina coed Suellen Evans in the Arboretum at Chapel Hill, the killing of Lost Colony performer Brenda Joyce Holland, and the weird case of two bachelors and a divorcee found murdered in the mountains near Hendersonville.

Although 13 years have gone by, no arrests have been made in any of those cases, and they're still near the top of the stack in the SBI's file of unsolved murders. In at least one of them — that of Brenda Joyce Holland, the Campbell College student whose body was found floating in Albemarle Sound five days after she disappeared from her lodgings at Manteo on July 1, 1967 — SBI Director Haywood Starling and Bryan are morally certain they know the name of her slayer, but lack the evidence to prove it in court.

"Notions ain't worth a damn in court," said Bryan.

"Our investigation had led us to a suspect in the Brenda Joyce Holland case, but has not developed enough evidence to justify an arrest and trial at this time," said Starling as he indicated a similar situation exists in some other sensational cases.

Edmisten said these include the slaying of three members of the Bryce Durham family in his home town of Boone 10 years ago next February, the murder of school bus driver Phyllis Ann Bradford in Harnett County in 1973 and the death of Benson matron Bonnie Neighbors in 1972.

Edmisten recalled that Bryce Durham, a prominent auto dealer at Boone, his wife and their 16-year-old son were found murdered in their home. All three had been strangled with a rope, and their heads pushed into a bathtub filled with water "execution style."

Edmisten said several teams of investigators had spent hundreds of hours on the case, and all had "come up with the same conclusion ... We think we know who did it, but we can't get that last essential piece of evidence."

Edmisten said much the same is true of the case of Mrs. Neighbors, 33, who disappeared Dec. 14, 1972, while driving to Benson Elementary School to pick up one of her two sons. Her body was found a few days later in an empty migrant labor camp. She had been shot twice in the stomach. Her infant son was found by her side, crying, but in remarkably good health after going without food or water in an unheated building for several days.

After ruling out robbery and sexual assault, investigators could find no reason for the killing. Although Edmisten listed it as one in which investigators felt "We know in our hearts who did it," Bryan said, "We don't know anymore about that case than we did a year ago."

But folks at Benson point out that the migrant labor camp where Mrs. Neighbors was found is not an easy place to find and that a stranger would not know it existed.

The Bradford girl, who was president of her senior class and captain of the girls' basketball team at the Anderson Creek School, left her home 10 miles south of Lillington on Dec. 9, 1973, to make her school bus round. But she never made it to school. Her bus was found less than 500 yards from her home. Nearly a year later, her skeletal remains were found about eight miles from her home. She had been shot once in the head.

The girl's father, Ezra Bradford, said several years ago he knew those who killed his daughter, but "I can't get the state, nor the federal (government) nor Harnett County to do anything about it."

"We think we know what happened in that case," Edmisten agreed. "We had a suspect; but we had to turn him loose."

However, Bryan said that "right off hand I'd still say we don't know who did it."

Edmisten said he hoped one day he would be able to reconstitute the SBI's special murder unit because "the way to solve crimes is to have special squads of agents whose tasks are to do nothing but work on a particular kind of case until they come to their wit's end then start all over again."

White House Will Get Some New Faces

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Year Two at the Ronald Reagan White House will begin with significant changes in the lineup.

Of the spiffy new team that came aboard on Inauguration Day a year ago, some have left, some are leaving and some have been damaged beyond repair.

The biggest loss came March 30 when Reagan loyalist and press secretary James Brady was critically wounded in an assassination attempt on the president. The affable, folksy Brady had been taming the White House press corps and his absence as chief spokesman has had lingering effects.

Of near equal importance to insiders are the voluntary exits of Lyn Nofziger and Max Friedersdorf.

Nofziger, a longtime Reagan pal, adviser and political wizard, is returning to the private consulting business. His loss means the White House will have a wobbly start for the crucial 1982 congressional elections.

Friedersdorf is becoming U.S. envoy to the Bahamas. He leaves Capitol Hill, where he was point man for the administration in dealing with Congress.

In both cases, the replacements are well qualified, but may not have the luxury of time before having to deal with stormy issues.

But there is also a possible star rising out of the mired National Security Council, where director Richard Allen and members Gen. Robert Schweitzer and Richard Pipes all felt the lash during 1981.

Pipes rode out a storm and remained in place after speaking out about possible war with the Soviet Union, but Schweitzer went too far with an unauthorized speech that proclaimed a "drift toward war" and was dismissed.

Allen named a former aircraft carrier skipper, retired Adm. James Nance, to replace Schweitzer as the top military man on the NSC.

Then Allen himself stumbled into a tangle of events, spawned by accepting a $1,000 thank-you gift from some Japanese journalists, and Nance was promoted again to be temporary head of the NSC.

It was not the first bump in the road for Allen. The president only weeks earlier had taken the most unusual step of dressing down Allen and Secretary of State Alexander Haig in the Oval Office after a turf battle between the two men went public. There are strong doubts that Allen, currently on "administrative leave," will ever return to his office in the West Wing.

Perhaps the biggest black eye came with the embarrassment of David Stockman, keeper of the economic keys who surprised everyone when he voiced in a national magazine his own doubts about the Reagan economic program.

The brilliant former congressman offered his resignation, but Reagan let him off with a severe "woodshed" reprimand and put him back to work.

The economic situation received another kick recently when William Niskanen, a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, made comments opposed to administration policy. He was not openly chastized, but went into immediate eclipse.

Even while the Allen embroglio continued, two more top men in the administration — CIA Director William Casey and Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan — chipped in as investigative targets themselves. And Casey received very faint praise when a separate report on his performance declared him "not unfit to serve."

Casey's top deputy in the early days of the administration, Max Hugel, quit as CIA chief of operations, after reports surfaced of his involvement in possible inside stock market information in 1969.

And Reagan's choice of Ernest Lefever as director of the office of human rights in the State Department ran into such a storm of derision the nomination was withdrawn.

The hard-learned lesson for the president and his men was simply that while great prizes can be earned in top federal office, judgment can be quick and punishment harsh on mistakes.

George Gallup

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — With investigative reporting playing an increasingly prominent role in the news media, the Gallup Poll sought the views of the public on this form of journalism.

The latest survey shows that Americans overshwlmingly endorese investigative reporting — which ferrets out and exposes crime, waste, corruption and other wrongdoing in business, government agencies and elsewhere — but at the same time have reservations about some of the techniques used in obtaining this information.

Specifically, four out of five Americans (79 percent) approve of investigative reporting while 18 percent disapprove. In addition, two in three (66 percent) indicate an interest in seeing more of this type of journalism, while 19 percent would like to see less and 11 percent think the amount they are now exposed to is about right.

Techniques Are Criticized

Of the techniques studied, having newsmen and women misrepresent themselves in the course of gathering information of their reports — masquerading as prospective customers for a product or service, for example — draws the most public ire, with 65 percent of survey respondents opposed. Considered somewhat less objectionable are the use of hidden cameras and microphones, and paying informers for their information or testimony, objected to by 58 percent and 56 percent respectively. A slightly smaller majority, 53 percent, disapproves of the common practice of citing an anonymous or nameless person ("a top official of the company who asked that his name with withheld..") as the source of a news item rather than identifying that person by name.

More Popular With Young Adults, "Upscale" Groups

Although majority approval of investigative reporting is found in every major population group, somwhat greater approval is found among college-educated persons, those with family incomes of over $15,000 per year, and 18-to-29-year-olds. Yet while interest is seeing more of this type of journalism is also greater among younger adults, persons with a college background conform to the pattern found in the overall population. Those in the upper-income category are marginally less inclined to want more.

Here are the questions asked and the key findings:

"As you probably know, the news media — TV, newspapers and magazines — often do what is called 'investigative reporting' — uncovering and reporting on corruption and fraud in business, government agencies and other organization. In general, do you approve or disapprove of investigative reporting by the news meida?"

"Now, I am going to read to you a list of techniques the media sometimes use when they are doing investigative reporting. Please tell me whether you approve or disapprove of each technique: Using hidden cameras and microphones?...Having reporters not identify themselves as reporters?...Running stories that quote an unnamed source rather than giving the persons name?...Paying informers for their information or testimony?"

The results reported today are based on in-person interviews with 1,508 adults, 18 and older,interviewed in more than 300 scientifically-selected localities across the nation during the period Nov. 20-23.

For results based on a sample of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be three percentage points in either direction.

Privacy

NEW YORK (UPI) — A person's privacy is a sense of himself and any business that doesn't recognize the need for employees to have that identity is making a mistake that can cost millions in lost productivity, a research expert says.

"The need for privacy is a very basic one," said C. Frederic John, project director of a new study, "Privacy in Public and Semi-Public Places," conducted by Research & Forecasts, Inc. "If people are denied privacy they feel deprived of something very basic in our culture."

The report was commissioned by GF Business Equipment Inc., a Youngstown, Ohio-based firm which felt it would help its customers develop personal strategies for attaining privacy.

"The two areas where people spend the most time — work and home — are often where they have the least to say about their space or circumstances," John said. "In the office they have little to say about where they sit. They are often forced to work with people they don't care about and listen to conversations they're not interested in.

"We wanted to help establish that even in an office, where there are necessary restrictions, each person can have, and in fact needs, his own space in order to be productive."

John said people who don't feel they have any say in their space are "reduced to childlike status. Productivity falls. It bothers workers. Whether they're conscious of it or not they need a space where they can establish their separateness."

In an enclosed office a significant amount of privacy is ensured, the R&F report noted, but John said even in a shared "neutral" workspace it's possible to stake out your "space," which could be likened to "an air bubble, a portable territory, to which we have the right to control access."

Maintaining control of our space is vital, the report said. "When our personal space has been invaded, we are likely to react with discomfort, anxiety, irritation, and even anger and aggression."

John emphasized that in an office privacy can mean as little as having a drawer in which to lock personal belongings.

While there are necessary limitations, the report, published in booklet form, outlines ways of attaining privacy at home and at the office whether you have enclosed or shared quarters.

Mark the boundaries of your space to define the territory you are claiming with chairs, tables, typewriters or other furniture, the report suggests. Then look at your space from the perspective of a visitor and evaluate the impression you receive.

Once you have determined your space it can be personalized with photos, postcards, prints or plants. However, at work you must decide how much of your personal life you want to reveal to your co-workers.

A Lack Of History

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Former Federal Reserve Chairman Arthur F. Burns is tackling a new and formidable fifth career at an age when most people have long retired.

At 77, the economist, educator, author and adviser to presidents jokes: "I can't hold on to a job."

But his new post as ambassador to West Germany is no sinecure, and it's plain Burns did't expect it to be.

"A new career makes the juices flow," he says from his office, a modest room in the sprawling U.S. Embassy complex overlooking the Rhine. "I love to work."

Since he moved last June into his tree-shaded residence overlooking the Rhine River, West Germany has seen terrorist attacks against U.S. forces, mass demonstrations against American nuclear weapons and attacks on U.S. monetary policy by government leaders.

One of his major concerns is the international dispute over NATO plans to counter a Soviet missile force by stationing 572 new U.S. nuclear missiles in Europe.

"Young people are worried, concerned, and some of the older generation are, too, that Germany is becoming a pawn in the struggle between the superpowers, that it will be a nuclear graveyard," Burns says. "People are yearning for a reduction in armaments ... I don't think there's a significant amount of anti-Americanism in this country."

Burns blames much of the uncertainty on failures in German education: "The teaching of history has been neglected in this country."

"I have little patience with people who say the Soviets are trying to influence thinking here, or trying to sway opinions. Of course they are. It's to be expected ...

"This country had a break with history after the war, and there's a gap there. After the Hitler years were over, young people were promised a new life, a united Europe.

"But that hasn't gotten very far. Now there are two Germanies. They feel lost, and they're not being helped by their teachers or parents."

Recession: The New Danger For A New Year

NEW YORK (AP) — With the change in seasons has come an economic storm of new colors.

In the heat of last summer, Wall Street and Washington were locked in combat over whether the bankers, money managers, economists and individual investors who comprise the financial community were giving the Reagan administration's economic program a fair shake.

The White House, noting the dismal performance of the stock market and the pessimism of private economic forecasts, heaped blame on Wall Street.

The financial community doubting the administration's projections for budget deficits and economic growth, answered with a ringing skepticism.

The standoff even produced threats from Congress of new controls on the financial markets. But that was never more than a threat, and now, as fall fades into winter, all fears seem concentrated on a new danger: recession.

Here are some questions and answers about the interplay between Wall Street and Washington and why their concerns can influence the course of the nation's economy.

Q. Whatever happened to the worries about big budget deficits and runaway inflation?

A. The worries seem to have faded. But the prospects for huge deficits remain — in fact may have grown. Evidence that budget fears on Wall Street have subsided is the modest recovery of blue-chip stock prices since late September. Yet at the same time the Reagan administration is conceding the possibility that its books may be out of balance by $109 billion this fiscal year, given current spending and economic trends.

Q. Does that mean inflation will be higher?

A. Last summer the answer on Wall Street would have been a resounding "Yes!" That was the basis of investors' pessimism. They figured a bigger federal budget deficit meant the government would become an even bigger competitor in the credit markets for the limited amount of money available. The result would be higher interests rates and worse inflation.

Q. What has changed?

A. Ironically, the change is that the president's budget planners now see an even bigger budget shortfall. Just three months ago the administration was holding to its projection of a $43.1 billion deficit and the promise of a balanced budget by 1984. But now the administration's economic forecasters are conceding what many economists have claimed for months: that budget deficits may swell beyond $100 billion in the current fiscal year and in the following two years as well.

Q. So why isn't Wall Street worried now?

A. It is worried. But the object of those fears has shifted. Instead of assailing the dangers of big budget deficits, many economists now are focusing on the recession. It may seem ironic, but the recession in a sense has lessened the chance that $100 billion budget-deficits will create a credit crunch and higher interest rates.

Q. How can that be?

A. The logic goes like this: The recession is likely to dampen the demand for private credit as industrial production falls and unemployment grows. As a result, the government's larger appetite for credit to cover its debts will be partly offset by the smaller demand for credit from commercial borrowers. That will allow interest rates to fall, or at least remain steady, until after the economy recovers from the recession.

Q. What happens when the recession is gone?

A. That is anybody's guess. The 1980 recession lasted only about six months, and once it was over interest rates soared to record levels and inflation roared. The administration says that will not happen this time because the Federal Reserve Board is keeping a tighter rein on the nation's money supply. In so doing, the Fed will keep the demand for money and credit low — even after economic growth resumes, the administration says.

Dominica Repels Coup Effort

ROSEAU, Dominica (AP) — Masked gunmen stormed this island nation's police headquarters and central prison Saturday in an attempt to overthrow the government, Prime Minister Eugenia Charles said.

A policeman and a former member of the country's defense force were killed and 10 others wounded in the simultaneous pre-dawn attacks, which were repulsed by police, authorities said. Among the injured was Police Commissioner Oliver Phillip.

In a speech to the nation Saturday, Miss Charles said the attacks were linked to two previous coup attempts by former members of the now-disbanded Dominican Defense Force, aided by American and Canadian mercenaries. No foreigners were reported involved in Saturday's assaults.

Miss Charles said the former commander of the defense force, Frederick Newton, had been arrested. She said police were searching for other former members of the force allegedly involved in Saturday's attacks.

Cabinet officials were meeting in special session and consulting with police officers, the prime minister said.

One policeman was killed and nine others were wounded during a shootout in the police headquarters compound, Miss Charles said. Phillip was shot when he approached the police headquarters during the attack. He was admitted to the Princess Margaret Hospital in Roseau, the prime minister said. Police said earlier he had been shot in the head.

As the attackers stormed the police station, another group of armed and masked men attacked the prison where former Prime Minister Patrick John and others charged with conspiring to bring down the government with the aid of the mercenaries have been held since March.

The man killed in the attack on the prison was identified as Howell Piper, a former officer in the defense force. He had been arrested earlier this year on the conspiracy charges, which were later dropped for lack of evidence.

A government statement Saturday morning said it appeared the attacks were an attempt to follow through on plans earlier this year by Michael Perdue, the self-confessed leader of a group of mercenaries who planned to invade this Caribbean nation and put John back in power.

Perdue and nine others, eight of whom have connections with the Ku Klux Klan were arrested in New Orleans on April 27.

Nine of the ten mercenaries were convicted of conspiring to overthrow Dominica's government, including Perdue, who drew a three-year jail term in a plea bargaining arrangement.

Dominica, a 290-square mile island with about 70,000 inhabitants, is located between Guadeloupe and Martinique in the Windward Islands of the eastern Caribbean.

Guatemala Fight Leaves Nine Dead

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — An army lieutenant and eight leftist guerrillas were killed in a shoot-out near the Yalpemech oilfields, and unidentified gunmen murdered four military security agents in a small village, the army said Saturday.

An army press bulletin said a guerrilla group opened fire riday on a military patrol outside the La Sultana ranch near the Yalpemech oilfields, 198 miles northwest of the capital, killing Lt. Fabian Enrique Garcia de Leon. It said eight "subversive delinquents" — a government term for the guerrillas — were killed in the fighting and that trails of blood left by fleeing insurgents showed several more were wounded.

Suspected guerrillas also shot and killed four army security agents, members of a civilian plainclothes corps that assists the military in fighting the insurgents, on a street in the village Guachipilin, 85 miles north of Guatemala City.

The killings were part of the ongoing violence between four leftist guerrilla groups seeking to overthrow Gen. Fernando Romeo Lucas Garcia's rightist regime and the army.

About 300 people have been killed monthly during the past two years of fighting, which also involves three clandestine rightist hit-squads that hunt down and assassinate leftists and suspected leftists.

Meanwhile, Public Health Minister Dr. Roquelino Recinos Mendez, kidnapped by a guerrilla group for 85 days, returned to work Friday.

Recinos, a leading cancer specialist, was kidnapped by armed men Aug. 31 as he was leaving a clinic in Guatemala City. Unlike other Cabinet ministers, he had refused a permanent police bodyguard-escort.

The last big battle of the Boer War was fought at Paardeberg, South Africa, in 1900. The Canadian expeditionary force led an assault before dawn but was forced back with heavy casualties. However, the Boers surrendered the following day.

Liza Alexeyeva Arrives In Paris On Way To U.S.

PARIS (AP) — Liza Alexeyeva, who was granted approval to leave the Soviet Union after a hunger strike by Nobel Peace laureate Andrei Sakharov, landed in Paris Saturday night, ending the first leg of a journey to join her husband in the United States.

Miss Alexeyeva, 26, burst into tears on leaving the plane in Paris, where she was greeted by Tatanya Yankelevich, the sister of her husband by a proxy marriage, Alexei Semyonov.

At a hastily arranged news conference, Miss Alexeyeva credited pressure from the West for helping her obtain an exit visa to join Semyonov, the husband she married by proxy and has not seen for nearly four years. Semyonov, 25, is Sakharov's step-son.

"Sakharov is weak but his wife is weaker," the young woman said in Russian, translated into French by friends who greeted her. "She plans to return to Gorky as soon as possible. Sakharov will keep working."

She then left the airport for an overnight stay with Mrs. Yankelevich, who will travel with her Sunday to Boston, where Semyonov is a graduate student.

"I am very happy, I am very grateful," Semyonov said when he was informed that his wife had reached Paris. "This is all a great relief."

In Moscow, Miss Alexeyeva had bid a tearful farewell to Sakharov's wife, Yelena Bonner, who joined the human rights activist in the 17-day hunger strike. Mrs. Bonner is Semyonov's mother.

"Have a happy life," Mrs. Bonner called to her daughter-in-law as she walked toward the airport departure gate to board an Air France flight en route to Paris, which left almost four hours behind schedule.

French sources said the delay was caused by a baggage identification check ordered after an African diplomat decided to leave the plane after boarding.

Miss Alexeyeva was mobbed by reporters and cameramen as she attempted to get her bagagge and literally pinned into a corner before security guards fought them back and took her to a closed room.

An American woman who sat next to her on the flight from Moscow said Miss Alexeyeva had been unnerved by the plane's delayed departure.

"She was very sad about leaving Moscow. She told me she would have remained there if she could have been with the man she loved," said the American woman who declined to be identified.

"She told me as she was eating dinner it was the first time she could eat for some time because she had been so nervous."

Miss Alexeyeva was married to Semyonov, 25, last June in a proxy ceremony. Semyonov left the Soviet Union in 1978 to avoid what he said was official harassment.

Mrs. Bonner, pale but cheerful after the hunger strike, wished Miss Alexeyeva a safe and speedy journey.

Sakharov remained in the Volga River city of Gorky, 250 miles east of Moscow, where he was exiled in January 1980 after criticizing Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Mrs. Bonner told reporters that her husband was recovering slowly in a Gorky hospital. She said she would return to Gorky next week.

Sakharov and Mrs. Bonner, a 58-year-old physician, began their hunger strike on Nov. 22, and agreed to end it on Dec. 8, after the Soviet KGB secret police agreed to allow Miss Alexeyeva to leave the Soviet Union.

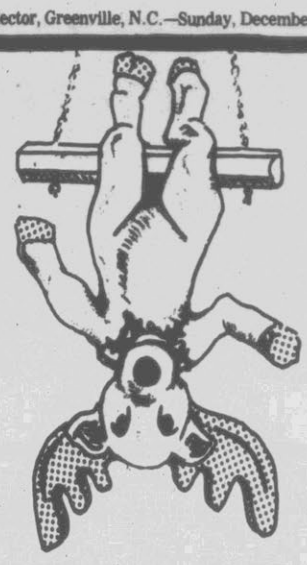

Mrs. Bonner said Sakharov, 60, would start work on scientific papers as soon as his health improved, and he also would resume his cooperation with other Soviet physicists on nuclear fusion. Sakharov was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1975.

Sakharov, who is credited with helping create the Soviet hydrogen bomb, declared last summer he would suspend his cooperative work on nuclear fusion until Miss Alexeyeva was allowed to emigrate.

In a tape recording announcing the hunger strike, Sakharov said Soviet authorities were persecuting the couple because of his dissident activities.

Miss Alexeyeva was accompanied by about 15 relatives and family friends to Moscow's Sheremetyevo Airport. She hugged and kissed each of them before undergoing a 20-minute customs check.

Two uniformed Soviet customs officials carefully examined a biege cloth bag and a shoulder purse carried Miss Alexeyeva, and told her she would have to leave behind a small ceramic painting of two pomegranates, an antique ring and a broach. The customs men said the objects were works of art which could not be removed from the country.

Presley Estate Hit By Taxes

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Lawyers for Elvis Presley's estate are battling to keep from paying state and federal taxes amounting to 70 percent of the estate's $25 million value.

The Internal Revenue Service billed the estate $14.6 million last spring, and the federal tax case has been tied up in U.S. Tax Court.

Tennessee officials, meanwhile, estimate the estate will be assessed $2.3 million — one of the largest inheritance tax assessments in the state's history.

The state's effort to complete an assessment before a Dec. 31 deadline suffered a setback last week when a judge refused to allow auditors to examine estate documents which might shed some light on Presley's income before his death.

Probate Court Judge Joseph Evans said state officials had all the information they needed in the IRS files.

The Department of Revenue has appealed Evans' decision to the Tennessee Supreme Court and hopes to have a hearing on the matter before Dec. 31, said Jim Creecy, a deputy state attorney.

"We're trying to be very fair about the valuation of the estate," Creecy said. "The Department of Revenue wanted to see any document which might be applicable to income Mr. Presley received ... We're just fishing, but if we didn't expect to find anything there, we wouldn't be looking."

Presley died Aug. 16, 1977, at age 42, leaving the bulk of his estate to his daughter, Lisa Marie, in a trust. The 13-year-old girl is to gain control of the estate when she reaches age 25.

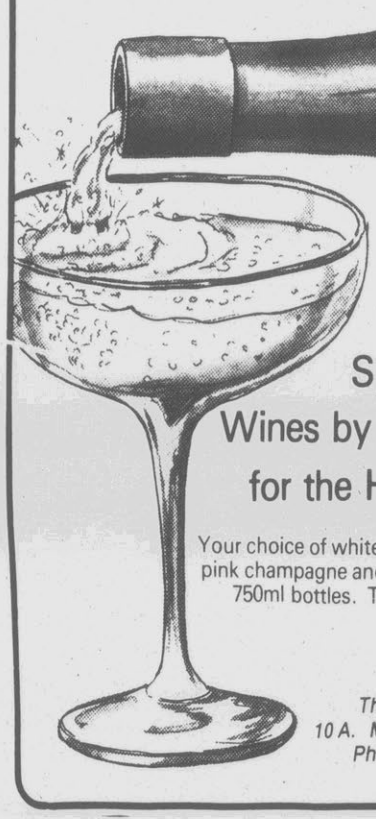

Estate attorneys have contested the IRS bill, contending only $550,000 is owed. The amount the estate says it owes the state has not been made public.

Tennessee officials based their preliminary assessment, in part, on information from the IRS, which valued the estate at $25 million.

Judge Targeted In Murder Plot

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Four men have been charged in a secret idictment with plotting to kill a Superior Court judge by bombing his home, according to published reports and official sources.

Judge Eugene G. Gallant was targeted for murder in July while presiding over the trial of two men accused of the 1974 slaying of loanshark Joseph Schiavone, the Providence Journal-Bulletin said Saturday.

WJAR-TV on Friday quoted unidentified law enforcement sources as saying a Providence County grand jury handed up secret indictments on Friday charging the four men with conspiracy to murder.

Three of the men are in custody on other charges, and one is being sought, according to both reports.

Authorities refused to comment, but a source familiar with the case who asked not to be identified confirmed the newspaper and broadcast accounts to The Associated Press.

At the time of his death, Schiavone was under indictment for allegedly conspiring to murder reputed New England organized crime boss Raymond L.S. Patriarca. During the trial, a state's witness described Schiavone as a loan shark who failed to pay his dues to organized crime.

'Phoenix' Joins U.S. Sub Fleet

GROTON, Conn (AP) — The nuclear-powered submarine USS Phoenix officially joined the Navy on Saturday, bringing the U.S. fleet of fast-attack submarines to 15.

The Electric Boat shipyard delivered the submarine to the Navy earlier this month, 4½ years after the Phoenix's keel was laid.

In an outdoor commissioning ceremony, Rep. John Rhodes, R-Ariz., issued a call for continued increases in defense spending, saying the Soviet Union has outpaced America in military strength.

Rhodes said the Soviets' naval strength is "nothing short of awesome," and the United States should step up its defense spending, particularly in shipbuilding.

"Perhaps we need not match Soviet capabilities on a one-to-one basis. But we must build defenses that will both provide a margin of security and support a foreign policy based on consistency of purpose," he told the vessel's 127 crew members and officers and other officials attending the ceremony.

Along with higher defense spending, however, Rhodes encouraged continuing talks between the superpowers concerning arms control.

"While working to recapture our former postion of military and technological superiority, we also must proceed in a dialogue wih the Soviet leaders.

The 360-foot, 6,900-ton, torpedo-firing Phoenix is the fifth Los Angeles-class submarine delivered by EB to the Navy this year. It joins the fleet several weeks after the first of the Navy's huge Trident submarines — the USS Ohio — was commissioned.

Later this month, the fast-attack USS Boston also is expected to be turned over to the Navy.

Groom Jailed Twice

RENO, Nev. (AP) — After landing in jail twice and being sent to the state mental hospital, newlywed Wayne Stapleton is going home with his bride, vowing never to return here.

According to Reno newspaper accounts, last week the couple from Portland, Ore., hitchhiked to Reno to avoid a 30-day wait for their wedding ceremony.

But just hours after exchanging vows at a wedding chapel Wednesday, Stapeton landed in the city jail because he was unable to pay a $70 limousine fare, the newspapers said.

Police said the groom was sprung from jail Friday morning by an anonymous donor who said he was acting "in the spirit of Christmas."

But after being released, Stapleton said, he was unable to find his wife. He became frantic, thinking she had deserted him, and caught a taxi to look for her.

But he wasn't too frazzled to put a $4 deposit on a Christmas present for his wife, a 1981 Ferrari costing $58,793.

"We took his $4 and told him to come back when he had his financing together," said Dick Sims, co-owner of Modern Classic Motors.

Stapleton, 34, continued his search and by 1 p.m., he was back in jail, unable to pay a $21 taxi fare, according to officials. Once settled in his cell, Stapleton said, he became increasingly distraught over his inability to find his wife, and he began shredding towels with which to hang himself.

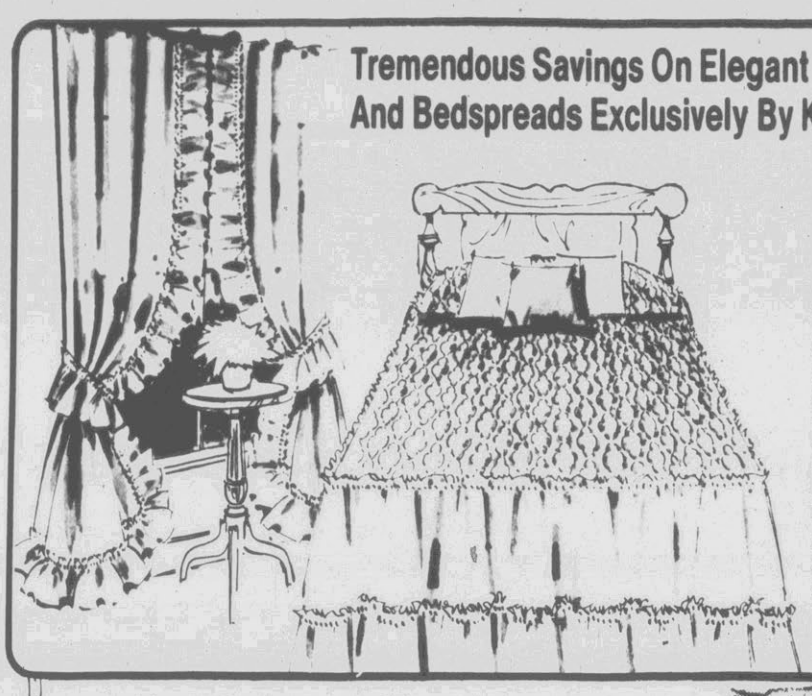

About 2:30 p.m., he was transferred to the Nevada Mental Health Institute, where he remained until being released late Friday into his wife's custody. Kathy Jean Stapleton was able to locate her new husband through Stapleton's father, who had been contacted by the hospital.

After Stapleton's release, the newlyweds retired to a hotel room to await bus tickets sent by his father.

Stapleton said he may write a book about his "week in Reno." And he said he's decided not to purchase the Ferrari after all.

Scouts Are Sued By Girl

By BILL JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — The parents of a 9-year-old girl who "needs to be taught to be a survivor" go to court this week to press a suit over her ouster from the Cub Scouts.

The parents of Marystephanie Constantikes — "Toffie" to friends and family — filed the federal sex discrimination suit against the Boy Scouts of America when she was booted out of the group after nearly a year.

"She won all the main awards and even got the Silver Arrow for outstanding achievement in the Cub Scouts," said her mother, Joy Constantikes.

When Marystephanie won the Pinewood Derby, in which the scouts carve cars from wood and race them down an incline, "that really cemented her place in the troop," said Mrs. Constantikes.

The ouster came when Marystephanie wanted to go with her brother, who also was a Cub Scout, to summer day camp this year.

"We filled out the papers and sent them in along with the money," said her father, John Constantikes, an attorney. "Then we got a letter from the Scouts and our money back. The letter said they hadn't known that Marystephanie was a girl.

"When she joined she filled out three sets of papers with her name on them. One went to the national, one to the regional and one to the local. They are trying now to say they didn't know she was a girl."

Her father filed the $250,000 sex discrimination on Marystephanie's behalf against the Boy Scouts of America, the Cub Scouts of America and the Last Frontier Council.

The Boy Scouts don't see it as sex discrimination.

"The issue from our point of view has nothing to do with sex discrimination," said Scout spokesman Brantly Hudson. "We are a private membership organization and as such are able to determine our membership requirements."

Hudson said the decision to bar Marystephanie was not a matter of local judgment but "is based on national policies and decisions."

He said girls are permitted in the Explorer program, which is open to youths from high school through age 20. There are programs for younger girls similar to the Cub Scouts, he added.

"The Cub Scout program was started in the 1930s as a program designed to meet the emerging emotional, psychological and physical needs of young boys," Hudson said. "It's been constantly updated and modernized with the help of nationally prominent psychologists and educators who have advised us the emerging emotional, psychological and physical needs of boys differ from those of girls."

Marystephanie was in the Bluebirds, a girls' organization, for a year. "But I didn't like it," she said. "All we did was learn to keep house, to cook and sew. I know how to do that."

Her mother said Marystephanie got interested in the Cub Scouts because she liked the activities her brother was involved in. Both her mother and father said Scout leaders on the local level had no objections to Marystephanie's participation in the Cub Scouts.

Her mother and father say they are not out to break down all sexual barriers, but that they feel the old male-female stereotyped roles are outdated.

"We really believe Marystephanie needs the things she could learn in the Cub Scouts," Mrs. Constantikes said. "She needs to be taught to be a survivor. There are many one-parent families, and she needs to know how to do the things that girls traditionally aren't taught."

Judge Studies Issues In Creationism Trial

By BILL SIMMONS
Associated Press Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The Methodist son of a biology teacher is deliberating the fate of Arkansas' new law requring balanced treatment in public schools for evolution and creation-science.

The nine-day trial of an American Civil Liberties Union challenge to the law ended Thursday. Testimony touched on metaphysics and molecules, whether UFOs are a satanic manifestation, whether a rain of cosmic microbes started life on earth, whether "In the beginning, God..."

In the end, U.S. District Judge William R. Overton reminded everyone that the issue is solely a constitutional one. He will deal only with an act of the Arkansas Legislature and the relationship of that act to the Constitution.

The tall, lanky Carter administration appointee is 42, a Democrat and a Methodist whose mother taught biology and history during 38 years in Arkansas classrooms. His wife once worked for the state Senate.

Overton pores over his 300 pages of notes in his office in the quiet of the courthouse's fifth floor. In a few days, he will pen a verdict awaited by supporters and backers of a religious, scientific and political movement that has coalesced under the banner of creationism.

By dealing with the act, he will deal, in effect, with the movement because the law is the movement's brainchild.

Creationists drew up, circulated, introduced and pushed to passage the Balanced Treatment for Creation-Science and Evolution-Science Act. Gov. Frank White, a devout member of the non-denominational Fellowship Bible Church, signed it.

The creationists say evolution is religious, and that schools are indoctrinating students by teaching only evolution in violation of creationists' constitutionally guaranteed religious freedom.

The law requires public schools that teach evolution to teach creation without religious materials and only from scientific data. Creationists say this will make the state neutral on religion.

This is the first court test of the legislation that embodies their religious freedom argument. The proposal is circulating in many states.

Schools must obey the law next September if Overton lets it stand. An ACLU witness said obeying the law could cost Arkansas $1.6 million for teaching materials. Losing the case could cost as much if Overton orders the state to pay the ACLU's fees and expenses, ACLU legal director Bruce Ennis said.

Creation-science is the name given by the law to the view that the universe, the Earth and living things came into existence from nothingness 6,000 or so years ago. Creationists usually assign the act of creation to God.

Evolution, the predominant view of scientists, maintains that life on Earth developed slowly over millions of years as a result of natural forces and that the universe has existed for billions of years.

The ACLU filed suit May 27 against state education officials on behalf of 23 clients, icluding 12 clergymen, saying the law is vague and unconstitutionally infringes on academic freedom.

State witnesses said believing there is a creator or a God is not necessarily religious. People can believe evolution in a religious way, they said. The merit of creation-science should not be discounted just because it has arisen among religious people, they said.

Most state witnesses acknowledged belief that Genesis is without historical or scientific error.

Ennis agrees that religious freedom is the issue — the freedom of non-fundamentalists. Fundamentalists are trying to sneak a literal account of Genesis into school in a science guise, the ACLU argues.

ACLU witnesses said Genesis isn't scientific. ACLU lawyer Philip Kaplan of Little Rock said the movement causes him concern because it's political, not just scientific or religious.

Questions raised in the lawsuit include: Does the law violate the academic freedom of teachers to teach and pupils to learn? Does it violate the First Amendment ban on laws that establish religion?

Both sides say they will appeal if they lose.

Senators Urge Veto Loan Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fourteen Democatic senators urged President Reagan Saturday to veto what they called an effort to undermine the FHA and VA home loan guarantee programs.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, was joined by 13 colleagues in a letter to Reagan protesting Budget Director David Stockman's reported recommendation to phase out by 1987 the Government National Mortgage Association, better known as Ginnie Mae.

"It's worked for 45 years and now at a time when you have high interest rates, when millions of young Americans are having a very difficult time buying a home, to talk about doing away with it ... is just dumb. It's an outrage," Bentsen complained.

GNMA buys mortgages guaranteed by the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration.

Those two programs, "which operate at no cost to the taxpayer, have made home ownership possible for millions of Americans. It would be a national tragedy" to undermine them, the senators' letter said.

Senators co-signing the letter were John Melcher and Max Baucus of Montana, Howell Heflin of Alabama, Jennings Randolph of West Virginia, Sam Nunn of Georgia, Carl Levin of Michigan, Paul Sarbanes of Maryland, Quentin Burdick of North Dakota, Russell Long of Louisiana, Dale Bumpers of Arkansas, Lawton Chiles of Florida, Ernest Hollings of South Carolina and Paul Tsongas of Massachusetts.

According to industry sources, Stockman wants to phase out GNMA's authority by reducing its credit ceiling by about $10 billion a year, starting with a $48 billion ceiling in fiscal 1983 and dropping to $38.4 billion in 1984.

The senators complained in their letter that Stockman's proposal would not reduce federal expenditures nor the federal deficit, but would "strike a fatal blow to the already tenuous position of our ailing housing industry ... and deny thousands of Americans the ability to own a home."

Rather than competing with the private sector, Bentsen said, GNMA has been "providing a service and assuming a risk that the private sector cannot withstand."

Four Patients Die In Rest Home Fire

PATCHOGUE, N.Y. (AP) — An early morning fire Saturday blazed through a cottage used for a Northport Veterans Hospital outpatient program, killing four psychiatric patients, officials said.

Patchogue Fire Chief Robert Smith said the blaze, which broke out shortly before 4 a.m., quickly engulfed the two-story wood-frame building and burned it to the ground.

Edward Ripke, a hospital official, said John Joseph Nolan, 55, Frank Sanfilippo, 52, Gerald Goodkin, 56, and Harold Lochnowitz, 57, had shared the four-room house at 31 Carmen St. since 1971.

The Suffolk Arson Squad investigated the fire, but Smith said the blaze "does not appear to be suspicious."

Smith said the house was in flames when firefighters arrived. Firefighters needed 90 minutes to bring the fire under control and were at the scene for more than four hours.

Ripke said the men lived in the small building behind the home of James and Diane Browning, who served as the outpatients' "family" as part of the program.

Introducing the Smith-Corona Typetronic.

The first electronic office typewriter at the price of ordinary electrics.

There isn't an office typing machine anywhere—electric or electronic—that performs the way the Smith-Corona® Typetronic™ performs and costs what the Typetronic costs. Here are some of its key features:

Memory Correction. At the touch of a single key, it can correct single characters or whole words at a time—automatically. Any typing error is keyboard correctable.

Ultrasonic Keyboard. The Typetronic uses a new and exclusive ultrasonic rod, which identifies the letters you touch by analyzing the sound waves. This extremely accurate system eliminates hundreds of parts which helps make the Typetronic more dependable than ordinary office typewriters. It also maintains the touch experienced typists prefer.

Printwheel, for changing type styles in seconds. A state-of-the-art printwheel is made of a special high impact glass-reinforced nylon that is amazingly durable, and costs less than a ball, so you can have several wheels for different type styles.

Fixed or programmed page formats. Typetronic's memory gives you standard preset margins, and paragraph indent, center of the line, and signature block tab stops. All can be reprogrammed by the touch of a button, for any desired position.

Another electronic feature is reverse tabulation for faster statistical and columnar typing.

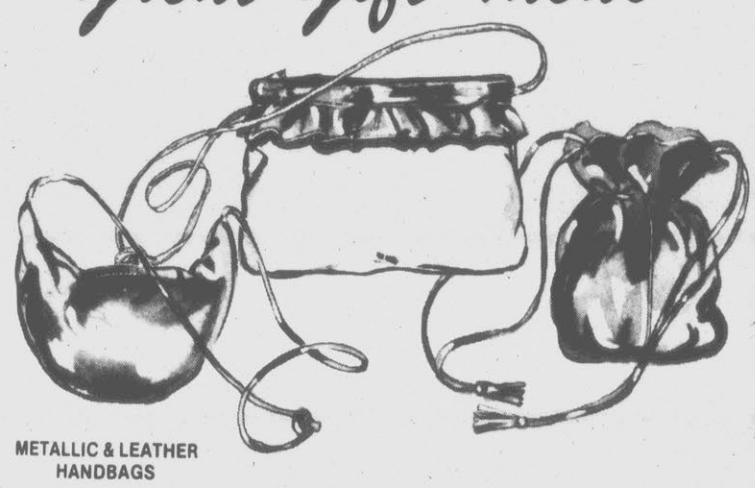

Perhaps the most amazing fact of all is that all this advanced electronic technology costs under $900.

See your Smith-Corona Typetronic dealer below for a demonstration of these and many other Typetronic features. Or fill in and return the coupon below.

☐ Please send me more information on the Typetronic.

Life In White House Is 'Emotional Roller Coaster'

Nancy Stung By Public's Criticism

By HELEN THOMAS

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Nancy Reagan says her first year as first lady has been a difficult "emotional roller coaster," but she has settled into her new life.

In an interview with United Press International, Mrs. Reagan also said she cannot understand why she has been criticized for refurbishing the White House family quarters and purchasing a new $200,000 set of china.

The interview took place in the cheerful elegant surroundings of the family quarters where Mrs. Reagan, wearing a brown wool skirt and a print blouse, appeared relaxed despite a heavy holiday schedule of parties.

"It's my favorite time of the year," she said, glancing at the first family's Christmas tree glittering with baubles and guarding gaily wrapped presents.

She obviously has been stung by criticism that she an extravagant spendthrift at the same time her husband is cutting social programs for the poor.

Reagan and her children have risen to her defense, calling criticism "a bum rap."

"You know I'm doing the things that had to be done," she said.

"I do think that what I did was right. It didn't cost anybody any money. You know the things that Mrs. (Jacqueline Kennedy) Onassis did on this floor. She put in the dining room. She did the Yellow Oval Room, the Treaty Room and the Queen's Room.

"I'm sure if she had been here longer she would have gotten up to the third floor (which Mrs. Reagan renovated) — but she wasn't here long and those were things that just had to be done.

"The plumbing and the historic things that were in storage really were deteriorating and that's wasteful, and I thought that accepting a donation to the White House ... all I did was accept a donation," she said.

A fashion pace-setter, Mrs. Reagan said she had not dreamed there would be "so much concentration" on her wardrobe of designer clothing "when there are other things that I do."

"Last year was an emotional roller coaster, starting with leaving California, the house we built, our friends, our dogs," she said.

"That was more emotional than I thought it would be. But I feel settled now. It think it almost takes a year."

She said it feels more "homey" now that the Reagans are surrounded by so many of their own belongings and furniture.

Her favorite rooms in the family quarters are "our bedroom, or Ronnie's study... and I think the Yellow Oval Room is beautiful."

As for highs and lows, Inauguration Day was a happy time, the attempt on her husband's life obviously the low point.

"The demands are more than I thought ... more than I thought," she mused. "I'm busier than I thought I'd be. No one can really imagine. I've done a lot of reading about first ladies since I've been here and found that ... you know it's not easy, so I guess you just have to do the best you can and what you think is right and leave it at that."

Mrs. Reagan has geared her interests to children and the elderly "because I feel they are vulnerable."

She passionately deplores what she says are negative influences on young people by the fare offered in modern films and on television.

"I think we've done a terrible thing to our young children, to everybody really, in the movies, on television ... in the news that we give them," she said.

"We've taken away all their heros. There's this tendency to tear people down all the time. Why? Why? There's no point in all of that.

"I'm talking about the things you see on television or you read in the paper. It doesn't seem to me that thre is any balance and I know there are wonderful, courageous, compassionate things that are being done every day of the week that we'll never hear anything about."

She said that "kids just see the bad side of people, the warts. I think we're doing a terrible thing to our kids."

Mrs. Reagan recalled that during the campaign people would come up to her and say "they wanted something uplifting."

"You can't always dwell on the negative and you can't always drag people down and talk about bad things," she said. "We should try to encourage young people."

Her words also showed the frustration of public figures subjected to close, constant scrutiny.

In the past year she has visited several rehabilitation centers for young people trying to break the drug habit. She became interested in the cause when she read about kindergarten children addicted to drugs.

"I think it obviously is a terrible problem and strikes a chord everywhere," she said. "I said it is the most democratic problem we have. It crosses all lines, all — economic, color — it doesn't make any difference."

Mrs. Reagan said once-embarrassed parents are waking up to the fact it is a wsdsespread problem, and have formed groups to combat it.

"The kids I've seen at the drug centers are so great, and so anxious to talk about it — how they got on it and what their lives were like."

She said that she was glad her own children are not young and living in the White House — they were young when Reagan was governor of California and they lived in Sacramento.

"I think it's very hard on children to live in the limelight. Kids can be so cruel. I can remember going out and watching him play football and hearing the other team say 'there's the Reagan kid. Let's get him.' And he was beaten up a couple of times."

She cannot forget the trauma of her husband's gunshot wounds in March, and the heightened security because of alleged Libyan hit squads.

"I'm more conscious of security since the assassination attempt ... just more aware," she said.

Mrs. Reagan is learning to sidestep controversial issues involving her president.

She refused to confirm or deny reports she has advised Reagan to drop national security affairs adviser Richard Allen, cleared of wrongdoing in receiving a $1,000 payment for a Japanese magazine interview with Mrs. Reagan. Allen's past business dealings still are under investigation.

"I haven't gotten into that at all," she said. "It's none of my affair, and I've kept it that way."

Then she pointed to the West Wing, indicating the line between her role and the official side of the White House.

Mrs. Reagan said her husband has not changed in his year in the White House, and likes being first lady — "but I wouldn't want to be here alone."

Would she like her husband to run again?

"Ask me in three years," she replied.

Few Are Using Energy Credits

NEW YORK (UPI) — American businesses are taking greater advantage of tax credits for energy saving than ever before but still not as much as the government had expected, according to Energy User News, an energy-oriented publication.

The journal reports that business credits for energy-saving expenditures in 1980 totaled $350 million, compared to about $200 million in 1979. However, in both figures the tax credits taken were only about three-quarters of the amount the Treasury Department had anticipated.

Business energy tax credits are available for renewable energy systems, some cogeneration equipment, the conversion of boilers to coal and alternative fuels, and such energy conservation equipment as waste heat boilers, process controls, and heat exchangers.

Rhetoric Holds Big Role In Talk About Assembly

By CRAIG WEBB
A News Analysis

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Both sides in the upcoming constitutional referendum debate over stretching legislators' terms to four years appear likely to get tangled in their own rhetoric because the terms they use don't match reality.

Both sides proclaim they want to retain the "citizen legislator," who writes laws only part-time. Both want to avoid the trend toward the "professional legislator" who works year-round in Raleigh.

Their dispute hinges on whether doubling the current length of office will help maintain their ideal.

But many legislators today are not citizen legislators, because they spend too many hours in Raleigh. However, they do not draw enough pay from the General Assembly (about $6,900 a year, not counting expenses) to earn a living at it and thus qualify as professionals.

This group is better labeled as Prime Time Legislators, because they devote most of their time to lawmaking even if they aren't paid accordingly.

They include House members like Tom Rabon, a former county planner who now is a private consultant; Wilma Woodard, a homemaker; and Josephus Mavretic, a former Marine pilot. In the Senate, the Prime Time Legislators list features Bill Redman, a real estate speculator, and Russell Walker, a retired supermarket owner.

If interpreted strictly, neither chamber probably could count more than a fifth of its members as Prime Timers. But if one counts all the lawyers, insurance agents, auctioneers, land salesmen and others who often trim their work loads to be in Raleigh, then just about everyone belongs on the list.

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, an attorney who sponsored the referendum question, said Prime Time Legislators are needed — but dangerous.

"Let's face it: they do a service in doing so much work," Barnes said. "But the system that is developing with these so-called Prime Time Legislators is that, of necessity, they end up making all the heaier decisions because they were there all the time while we had to go back home."

Barnes maintains that the time and cost involved in running for re-election every other year, combined with the increasing amount of time legislators must spend on lawmaking, is forcing out many good candidates.

He says four-year terms will take away some of the financial and time burdens, although he adds that the workload shows no signs of lessening.

"By the year 2000 we'll probably go to a fulltime legislature anyway," he said. "The only thing this (referendum proposal) will do is delay it for a period of time. But if you don't pass this, the 1980s won't pass without some major changes being made, and it won't be for the good."

Barnes' chief opponent is Tom Gilmore, an executive in the Department of Human Resources who is quitting Dec. 31 to head the "Keep the Two-Year Term Committee," a new group devoted to fighting the referendum proposal.

"The four-year term would be a serious mistake and would be a big step toward that professional assembly," he said. "I think that to have a four-year term, the next step would be a bigger salary and more staff and you get away from the people."

Gilmore agreed that, for many legislators, lawmaking already is their chief job and campaigning is a costly chore.

"But, the answer to some legitimate problem is not to double the terms," he argued. He said, however, that his group would not recommend any alternatives because it refuses to muddy the referendum debate.

Barnes believes Gilmore already is tinting the picture by his presence in it. Several published reports have said Gilmore might run for governor.

"I'm positive that Tom Gilmore is interested in getting Tom Gilmore's name out before the public," Barnes said. "The people can decide which way to go. They don't need Tom Gilmore to tell them."

Gilmore denied he was in the campaign for the publicity and maintained he is not a candidate for any office. He declined to discuss whether the committee would provide any incidental exposure for him during the campaign.

A Christmas Wish

HIGH POINT, N.C. (UPI) — For Brenda Fowler, the best possible Christmas gift would be to see her 19-year-old daughter recover from a coma and say "mama."

Every day, Mrs. Fowler sits in High Point Memorial Hospital watching her daughter, Kim, who has been in an intensive-care unit since her auto crashed into some trees Nov. 5.

"Kim hasn't spoken a word since then," Mrs. Fowler said. "The doctors say that she has severe brain damage, but we (in the family) keep hoping and praying for the best."

A couple of times, Kim opened one eye but showed no sign of recognition, Mrs. Fowler said.

"She squeezed my hand, too," she added. "But we don't know if she knew anything or was just doing it because of reflex action."

So Mrs. Fowler's wish is for Kim to "just look at me or stick her tongue out at me — anything to show that she recognizes me."

Kim Fowler was on her way to a job interview when the accident occurred. The 1980 Ledford High School graduate, who will turn 20 on Dec. 31, also had been thinking of going to Davidson County Community College. "But we hadn't decided on whether she was going," Mrs. Fowler said.

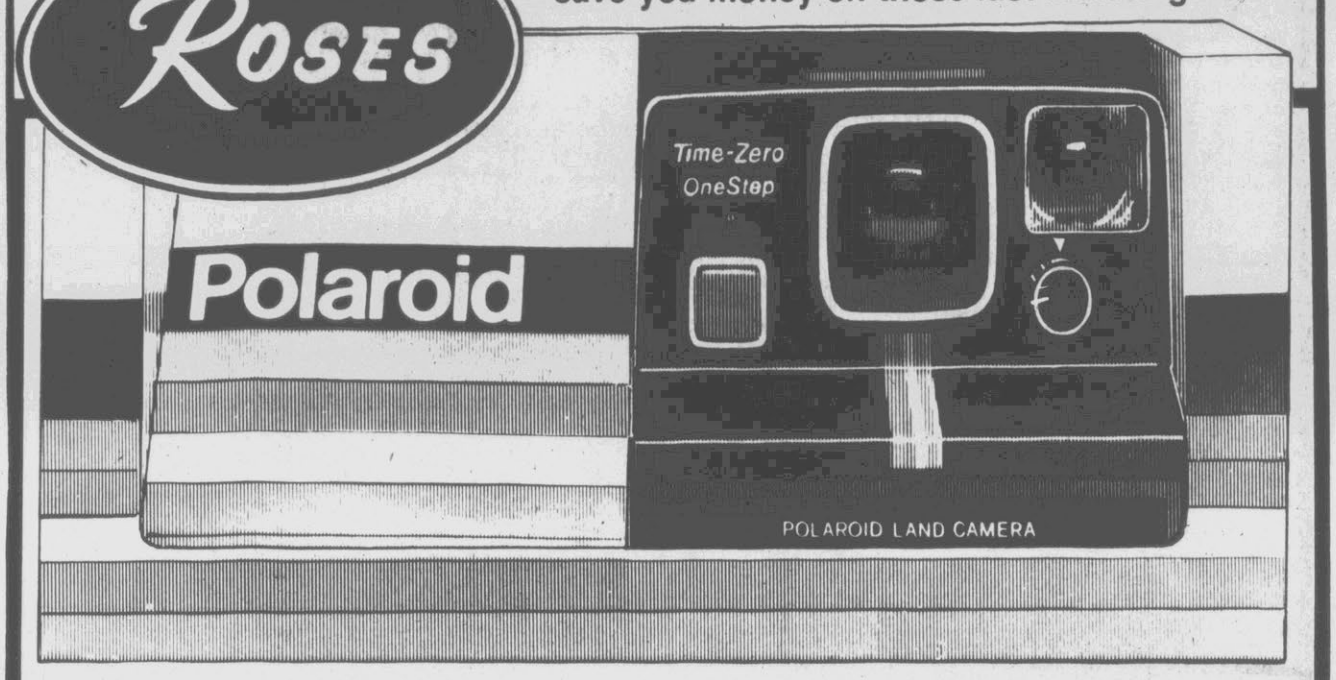

Now Mrs. Fowler visits every day, and her husband Leon comes each night.

Kid's School Grades Not Harmed By Mom's Work

By The Associated Press

A woman's choice to work outside the home will not hurt her child's performance in school, say two East Carolina University education researchers.

Robert Brown, a professor in the ECU School of Education, and Kristie Fleshman, a graduate student in education, from Morehead City, came to that conclusion after studying 60 fifth-grade students in Washington, N.C.

Half of the students' mothers worked outside the home and half the students had mothers who did not.

When the students' scores on the California Achievement Test were compared, Brown said the scores were "not significantly different according to established statistical procedures."

The researchers said they were unable to control factors such as the parents' educational levels or the students' IQ scores but since the survey group was chosen at random, the researchers said a wide range of factors was evident.

They said the results support other recent studies across the nation that have used preschool and school-age children.

Brown said the study was started because, "increasingly, when faced with the current economic conditions, families have attempted to improve their financial position by the mother's working outside the home."

"Parents have often wondered if there were some sort of detrimental effect on the child's schoolwork, which in part, might be attributed to the mother's outside employment," he said.

Brown said 102 students originally were selected for the study but only 30 students had nonworking mothers so the sample group was reduced.

"The high percentage of working mothers among the parents of the original group indicates that a working mother is definitely the norm in Washington," he said.

Brown has collaborated on a number of related research projects, including studies of the effects of absent fathers on the achievement of rural black children and a comparison of the success of high school seniors from one- and two-parent homes.

Adopt-A-Pet

The Adopt-a-Pets of the Week are two poodles, both female. One is a 7½-year-old miniature apricot and one is a 4½-year-old miniature silver poodle. Both are used to the outdoors. Owner wants to keep them together if possible. Call 795-3718 in Robersonville or 758-0751 on Monday.

Also being sought homes by the Pitt County Humane Society are the following:

- Five 7-week-old sheepdog-combination puppies. Black with white markings. Call 758-5511 during weekday business hours, ask specifically for Jim Berkowitz.
- Six 5-week-old black and white mixed breed puppies that will be medium-sized dogs. Great Christmas gifts. 756-2429.
- Found near Pitt Plaza, a female older cocker spaniel several weeks ago. Call and describe. 758-7894.
- Male dog, 8 months old, looks like a hunting dog. Call 752-5776.
- Male fice Chihuahua, 8 or 9 pounds, has had shots and is black and white. Call 746-3195.
- Five mixed puppies, some bulldog, 4 weeks old. Call 756-6326 after 5 p.m.

Phi Kappa Tau Elects Pierce

ECU NEWS BUREAU

Robert Dale Pierce of Hopewell, Va., a junior in the East Carolina School of Business, has been re-elected president of ECU's Gamma Eta chapter of Phi Kappa Tau fraternity.

Pierce is the first president in the chapter's 20-year history to be elected by the active membership to consecutive terms.

During Pierce's first term as president, the chapter made extensive improvements on its house, rated high in intramural athletics and helped collect toys for child patients of the local mental health clinic.

Service League Publishes Book

Sustaining members of the Greenville Service League have just published a cookbook.

It's a compilation of the best recipes from three previous cookbooks published by the league. It also includes new recipes.

Proceeds will be used for the Laughinghouse Hospital Fund, a league project.

Cookbooks are being sold at Brody's at Pitt Plaza, at the gift shop at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, by contacting a Service League member or calling 756-1369.

ECU Panel Suggests Realigning Schools

ECU NEWS BUREAU

A long-range planning proposal for East Carolina University is expected to recommend that the university's school of education be expanded and elevated to college status.

Under the recommendations given preliminary approval by the University Planning Commission, proposed expansion would include adding the departments of science education, library science and health, physical education, recreation and safety to the ECU School of Education. Additionally, the plan calls for the school of technology join the new college when it is established.

Among specific preparatory objectives, the planning commission tentatively approved a recommendation that the department of health, physical education, recreation and safety be given divisional status, with its own budget, in the expanded school of education.

Science education and library science would be assigned departmental status, with their own budgets, within the proposal school.

Those three departments are now units of the ECU College of Arts and Sciences. Technology, like education, is among ECU's nine peofessional schools under existing organization.

Acting on the report of its subcommission on organization, the planning commission this month also gave preliminary approval to recommendations which would:

— Rename the department of sociology and anthropology as sociology, anthropology and economics with provision that it "should house the curriculum of the emerging department of economics until such time as unit status is deemed appropriate."

— Rename departments in the school of technology as the department of adminisrative services (instead of business education and offices adminisration) and department of industrial studies (instead of department of industrial and technical education.)

— Change the name of the department of drama and speech to the department of theater arts.

— Foster development of programs in computer science and statistics within the mathematics department "to a point where, within the decade, these curricula will assume departmental status."

The subcommission on organization said its recommendations were based on goal and objective recommendations submitted by earlier subcommissions on academic programs, student service, public service, academic support and institutional support, all of which have also been given preliminary final approval by the long-range planning commission.

In early 1982, the planning commission is to complete a comprehensive planning document to serve as a beacon for ECU's development and growth during the next 10 years. It has been at work for nearly two years involving task forces and major subcommissions in the planning process. More than 900 faculty, alumni, trustees, students, staff and public members have been involved.

The subcommission on organization also recommended a list of new priorities and a number of major renovation projects which it is said "respond to existing necessities and program and support objectives generated by the planning process."

Facilities recommendations include three new classroom buildings, an entertainment and dining facility addition to Mendenhall Student Center, a physical education and intramural recreation facility and some dormitory consruction.

Dear Abby

Even an Apostle Isn't a Saint

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: One of the toughest tasks a church faces is choosing a good minister. A member of an official board undergoing this painful process finally lost patience. He'd watched the Pastoral Relations Committee reject applicant after applicant for some fault, alleged or otherwise. It was time for a bit of soul-searching on the part of the committee. So he stood up and read a letter purporting to be from another applicant.

"Gentlemen: Understanding your pulpit is vacant, I should like to apply for the position. I have many qualifications . . . I've been a preacher with much success and also some succees as a writer. Some say I'm a good organizer. I've been a leader most places I've been.

"I'm over 50 years of age. I have never preached in one place for more than three years. In some places I have left town after my work has caused riots and disturbances. I must admit I have been in jail three or four times, but not because of any real wrongdoing. My health is not too good, though I still get a great deal done. The churches I have preached in have been small, though located in several large cities. I've not got along well with religious leaders in towns where I have preached. In fact, some have threatened me and even attacked me physically. I am not too good at keeping records. I have been known to forget whom I have baptized.

"However, if you can use me, I shall do my best for you."

The board member looked over the committee. "Well, what do you think? Shall we call him?"

The good church folks were aghast. Call an unhealthy, trouble-making, absent-minded ex-jailbird? Was the board member crazy? Who signed that application? Who had such colossal nerve?

The board member eyed them all keenly before he answered. "It's signed, 'The Apostle Paul.'"

DEAR ABBY: My daughter is 25 and a college graduate. For the last three years she has been living with a man I'll call Bill, and now they are getting married. She has asked me to attend her wedding and give her away. Abby, I never approved of her living with Bill, and as far as I'm concerned, nobody has to "give her away" — she did that herself three years ago.

I have been a widower for five years, and my family thinks I should go along with my daughter's wishes, but I'm afraid if I do, it will look like I approved of her former lifestyle and have forgiven her for it.

I need help in deciding what to do.

OLD-FASHIONED FATHER

DEAR FATHER: I think you will have fewer regrets if you were to go along with your daughter's wishes. I vote go and perform your fatherly duty.

Thanks and Other Thoughts from Don McGlohon

December 20, 1981

To The Citizens of Greenville:

During this season of thanksgiving and joyous celebrations, I want to pause and give thanks for the unique opportunity which I had to serve as Mayor of Greenville for the past two years ... and to personally thank those of you who supported and encouraged me in so many ways!! I appreciate it. I am especially thankful for the City Council Members with whom I worked. Ours was a special relationship, a healthy and productive one. We enjoyed a pleasant and relaxed atmosphere and we're proud of several major accomplishments:

the Comprehensive Plan; the Mayors Advisory Committee Report on City Services; Funding for South Evans Rehabilitation; Employment of a Personnel Manager; Centralized Purchasing and more effective use of facilities; the Volunteer Citizens Talent Bank; our Citizens Concern System; our Goals and Objectives Program; the opportunity to add a few additional Personnel to the Police and Fire/Rescue Departments, a positive approach to affirmative action throughout the City; and several dollar saving economic measures.

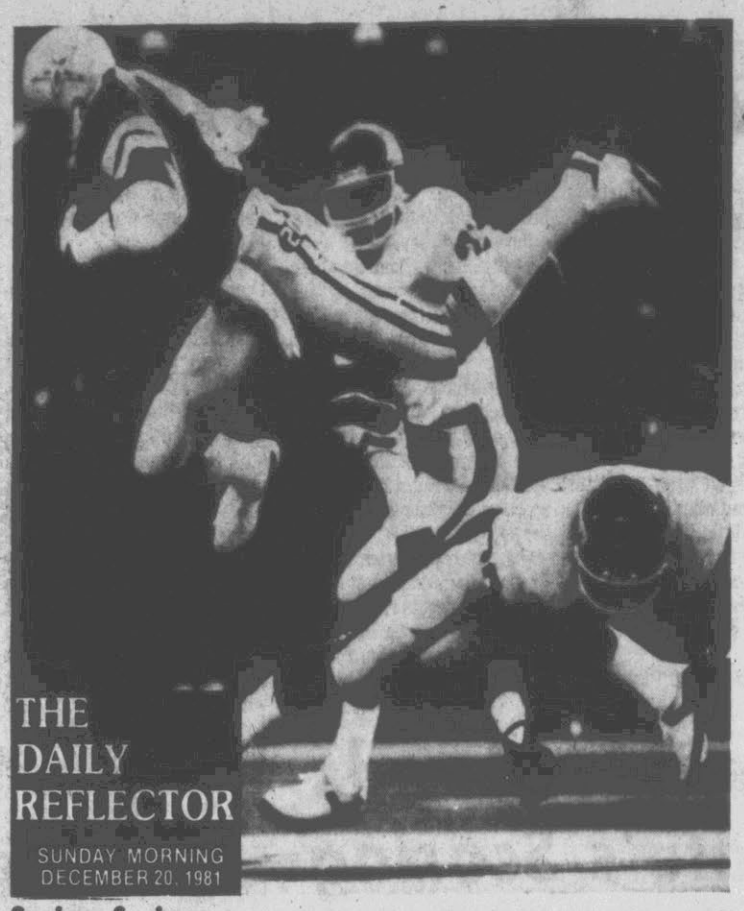

Incidentally, I agree fully with the thoughts expressed by Paul Nethercutt, retired Fire/Rescue Captain, in a recent letter to the editor. This department is better trained and equipped and providing better service than has been available for many years. Unless the "level of service" is changed, or a county-wide EMS system is implemented, it would be well to leave this department non-political so that it may concentrate on fire and rescue services. Our Council-Manager form of government has worked well these two years. I'm confident that our current elected body will continue to represent us well. They, both incumbents and newcomers, are a conscientious, hard working group, dedicated to serve in our best interests. I challenge them to devote their efforts to planning and policy making. As was editorialized recently in The Daily Reflector, separating the offices of Mayor and City Manager is OK, but a very close cooperation and mutual encouragement must continue between the two bodies for the Council-Manager form of government to function at its best.

I personally thank Ed Wyatt, our City Manager and ALL his staff, for the cooperation and support given ... and for the hard work performed at our direction. We are blessed with good, productive employees in our City and most of them are working hard to improve their productivity ... which I'm sure they will continue to do.

Remember, all the good services which we enjoy as citizens of Greenville are costly. As funding becomes more difficult in the future, we must continue to pay for what we receive. Finally, I challenge each of you to become more involved and more knowledgeable of the local government process ... this will help in the management of our city as we strive to have orderly growth and development in future years.

Best wishes for the happiest of holiday seasons and a most prosperous new year.

Sincerely,
Don McGlohon

Jaspers Too Much For ECU

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

CHARLESTON, W. Va. — At a press luncheon Friday Manhattan College coach Gordon Chiesa said his Jaspers have been criticized for being too slow, too white and too Catholic — all of which was all too true.

However, on Saturday night the Jaspers proved too smart and too patient for East Carolina. Led by a stingy 1-2-2 zone and outrebounding the taller Pirates, Manhattan defeated ECU, 60-54, in the consolation game of the Mountaineer Classic.

It was the second time this season ECU has lost both games in tournament competition. The Pirates, now 2-4, lost to Missouri and Canisius two weeks ago in the Show-Me Classic.

These two losses — ECU dropped an 82-72 decision to Long Island University Friday — were no easier to take for ECU coach Dave Odom.

ECU never led in the game and trailed by as many as seven in the first half and trailed at the half, 27-24. Manhattan, now 4-4, stretched its advantage to 11 midway through the second half only to see ECU whittle the lead to four in the last 30 seconds before holding on for the victory.

"I really don't know what to say," Odom said afterwards. "I'm not particularly pleased. I'm particularly disappointed in our rebounding, our leadership and lack of direction that is sorely missing.

"It is very easy sometimes to when things don't go well to fabricate reasons for losing," Odom said. "But, you've got to go back and look at yourself in the mirror and evaulate your own play.

"That's basically what I told the players in the locker room — to look our themselves to see what they can do to help the team be the best it can be," he said. "I doubt seriously that any one on this team can say, 'I've done everything within my physical abilities and God-given talents.'"

The most obvious ECU failing Saturday night was on the boards. Manhattan, without a starter taller than 6-7, outrebounded the Pirates, 42-33.

Forward Jim Bronner, a 6-5 junior, led the Jaspers on the boards with 13 rebounds. Tim Cain, a 6-7 freshman who played on the same team at UNC's Sam Perkins at Latham, N.Y., pulled down eight rebounds.

ECU was led off the boards by forwards Charles Green with seven rebounds and Morris Hargrove with six.

Another area where the Pirates faltered on this night was from the field. ECU, forced to take long outside jumpers by the Manhattan 1-2-2 zone, hit just 41% of its shots (23 of 56).

"We played a good zone defense," Chiesa said. "We gave them the long jumper and we were fortunate they missed."

While ECU was struggling against the Jaspers' zone, Manhattan was hitting on 46.5% (20 of 43) of its shots from the field. Leading the way was Cain, who scored a game-high 16 points. Luke Johnson, a 6-7 freshman forward, added 13 points while senior guard John Leonard added 11 points.

ECU was led in scoring by Green with 15. The 6-7 junior college transfer was the only starter in double figures. The other four starters managed just 12 points.

The Pirates, however, did get a fine performance from freshman guard Bruce Peartree, who came off the bench to play 25 minutes and score 14 points and dish out three assists.

Other than Peartree, however, Odom had little praise for the rest of the Pirates.

"We're very inconsistent, not only from game to game but from minute to minute in a game," he said. "One minute we're playing very hard and the next minute we seem to be going through the motions.

"Manhattan is a scrappy team," Odom added. "At times, we scrapped, but at other times we did not play well. Manhattan is a patient and smart and they come close to playing to its maximum ability each time out."

The game started out with the Jaspers threatening to blow the Pirates out of the Charleston Civic Center Coliseum and back to Greenville.

Manhattan, running a patient, passing-offense which emphasized getting the ball to the baseline, jumped out to an 11-4 lead in the first four minutes of the game.

A three-point play by Leonard and consecutive jumpers on the baseline by Joe McGuinness, Leonard and Jim Bronner keyed the early run against the Pirate man-to-man.

ECU, however, scored seven straight points — including three points from both Peartree and Hargrove — to knot the game at 11-11 with 13:17 left.

From there, both offenses sputtered.

Danelo's Boot Lets Giants Top Dallas

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Joe Danelo of the New York Giants, perhaps the most consistent place-kicker in the National Football League, turned what might have been a routine — yet thrilling — victory over Dallas into a cliff-hanger Saturday. He finally kicked a 35-yard field goal in overtime and gave the Giants a 13-10 National Football League triumph.

Danelo missed three routine field goals, one in overtime, before connecting on the game-winner 6:19 into the extra period.

It put the Giants just 24 hours away from what could be their first visit to the playoffs since they lost the 1963 NFL title game to the Chicago Bears 14-10. All they need for a playoff berth is a victory by their cross-river rivals, the New York Jets, who play Green Bay.

"I was kicking too hard," said Danelo. "I didn't want them drifting. After missing the first one (from just 21 yards away) I tried to guide the ball instead of kicking it.

"I feel excited for the team's sake, but not for myself. It's probably the worst kicking day I've ever had," continued Danelo. "We have to make the most of our opportunities and you're not going to get five shots a game too often."

Coach Tom Landry of the Cowboys said pretty much the same thing. "Late in the game, when he had a chance to win it, we gave it away," he said of Dallas' two fumbles and one interception. "You give a team that many chances and anyone is going to score."

The victory brightened the Giants' hopes for their first playoff berth since 1963, and wiped out Dallas' hopes of finishing the regular season with the best record in the National Conference.

Danelo tied it at 10-10 with a 40-yard field goal into the wind with just 25 seconds remaining in regulation play after the Giants had relinquished an early 7-0 lead.

He had missed chip shots from 21 and 27 yards in the first period. And when rookie linebacker Lawrence Taylor recovered a Tony Dorsett fumble in the opening minutes of overtime, Danelo blew that chance, too, his 33-yard attempt striking the right upright and bouncing back 3:36 into overtime.

Three plays later, another rookie linebacker, Byron Hunt, intercepted a Danny White pass intended for Drew Pearson and returned it 7 yards to the Dallas 25.

An 8-yard pass from Scott Brunner to rookie wide receiver John Mistler on third-and-11 put the ball on the Dallas 18-yard line. And Danelo came through.

The Giants, 9-7, will clinch the remaining NFC wild-card playoff berth if Green Bay loses Sunday to the New York Jets. If the Packers win, the Giants still can make the playoffs if Philadelphia, the NFC's other wild-card team, loses Sunday to St. Louis.

The Cowboys finished the regular season at 12-4, automatically giving San Francisco the home field for all NFC playoff games. The 49ers, 12-3 heading into New Orleans Sunday, beat Dallas 45-14 on Oct.11.

Rafael Septien had given the Cowboys a 10-7 lead with a 36-yard field goal with 9:13 remaining in the fourth quarter.

The Cowboys were throttled through virtually all of the first three quarters. But on the last play of the third period, White and Tony Hill teamed up on a 44-yard pass play to the New York 11.

Three plays later, 1:29 into the fourth quarter, White rolled to his left and passed three yards to tight end Doug Cosbie, deep in the left side of the end zone for the touchdown that pulled Dallas into a 7-7 tie.

The Giants kicked around the ensuing kickoff and wound up with possession on their own one. And three plays later, rookie safety Michael Downs of Dallas intercepted a Brunner bomb to give Dallas the ball on the New York 47.

White and tight end Billy Joe DuPree hooked up on a 16-yard pass on the first play, the next six plays gained 12 more, then Septien put the Cowboys ahead 10-7.

The Giants, whose first touchdown came on Brunner's 20-yard pass to tight end Tom Mullady with 4:48 to go in the third quarter, failed on their first possession following Septien's field goal.

But they were given new life with 2:14 to play in regulation when Dallas running back Ron Springs fumbled and defensive end George Martin recovered.

The Giants moved from the Dallas 45 to the 23 — stalled by a holding penalty which wiped out a 15-yard run by Leon Perry — to set up the Danelo field goal that sent it into overtime.

The first two times the Cowboys had the ball they failed to get a first down, Martin sacking White once in each possession. The Cowboys, in fact, failed to cross midfield until just 18 seconds remained in the first half. Then, Septien was way short on a 60-yard field goal try.

Conversely, the first two times the Giants had the ball, they pushed deep into Dallas territory. But the first time, with 7:18 left in the opening quarter, Danelo's 21-yard try was a line drive to the left of the uprights. And with 3:33 remaining in the same period, he was wide to the right. It was, actually, his third field goal try. But his second one, a 32-yarder, hit the right upright — but was wiped out when Ed "Too Tall" Jones of the Cowboys was called offsides on the play.

Midway in the second quarter, kick returner Leon Bright sprinted 16 yards with a White punt to the Dallas 41. But the Giants were unable to pick up a first down.

On White's next punt, Bright was clobbered by Anthony Dickerson of the Cowboys before the ball arrived. He had to be carried off the field. But X-rays showed no rib damage and he returned to the game in the second half.

The Giants' touchdown was built on two key plays in a 62-yard, six-play march. The first was a 12-yard pass from Brunner to rookie tight end Dave Young to the Dallas 39. The next one was a flea-flicker to the Cowboys' 23.

Dolphins Win AFC East

MIAMI (AP) — The Miami Dolphins, a young team picked by many to finish in the lower half of their division, captured the American Football Conference East title Saturday with a 16-6 victory over the Buffalo Bills.

The triumph gave Coach Don Shula his sixth undisputed AFC East crown in 12 seasons and lifted the Dolphins' record to 11-4-1. Miami shared three division crowns in the 1970s.

"We entered this season with a lot of question marks, and a lot of the questions have been answered in a positive way," said Shula, who launched his 19th National Football League season with a team averaging about 25 years of age.

"We've got a bunch of no-names — nobody knows us," said reserve tight end Joe Rose. "But these no-names know how to win."

Quarterback David Woodley fired a touchdown pass and Uwe von Schamann kicked three field goals as the Dolphins won their fourth consecutive game and snapped the 10-6 Bills' four-game winning skein.

The victory gave the Dolphins the home-field advantage for their first playoff game Jan. 2 or 3. Buffalo will move into postseason play as one of two AFC wild-card teams which will meet Dec. 27.

Shula said the key to the Dolphins' playoff stretch drive was the team's ability to battle adversities such as the injuries that sidelined several key players Saturday.

"The story of this team has really been everybody picking up for the other ones," said Shula.

Buffalo quarterback Joe Ferguson said the Bills were disappointed not to win the division championship, but he is confident the team will regroup for the playoffs.

"A lot of teams will be going home tomorrow (Sunday) and we're still in the thick of things. There are two roads to the playoffs now, one easy and one hard. We have to take the hard one," he said.

Woodley tossed a 7-yard touchdown pass to rookie running back Tommy Vigorito with 7:22 left in the first quarter and set up field goals of 22 and 30 yards with pinpoint passing to reserve tight ends Joe Rose and Bruce Hardy.

Von Schamann's 22-yarder with six minutes remaining in the second period gave Miami a 10-0 advantage, but the Bills sliced their halftime deficit to 10-3 on Nick Mike-Mayer's 31-yard field goal with 1:01 left in the half.

Woodley, who completed 10 of 21 passes for 137 yards, directed a 13-play, 67-yard drive which led to von Schamann's second field goal midway through the third period. Key plays in the drive were passes of 20 yards to Rose and 21 to Hardy and a 14-yard halfback pass from Eddie Hill to Hardy.

Buffalo cornerback Mario Clark recovered a fumble by Woodley at the Miami 48 to set up a 36-yard field goal by Mike-Mayer which trimmed the Dolphins' lead to 13-6 with 9:09 remaining.

Von Schamann's 36-yard field goal with 2:15 to play sealed the Dolphins' 15th straight victory at home against the Bills.

The division crown was the sixth for the Dolphins since Shula arrived in Miami from Baltimore in 1970. The team also shared three AFC East crowns during the 1970s.

Buffalo quarterback Joe Ferguson, who passed for 338 yards in the Bills' 31-21 victory over the Dolphins at Buffalo on Oct. 12, was limited to 140 yards on 13-of-29 passing Saturday. He was intercepted twice, both times in the final two minutes.

Bills running back Joe Cribbs led all rushers with 94 yards on 17 carries.

The Dolphins moved 58 yards in 13 plays on their first possession of the game to take a 7-0 lead on Woodley's scoring pass to Vigorito.

Buffalo took the ensuing kickoff and marched from its own 31 to the Miami 5-yard line, but the drive stalled when veteran guard Conrad Dobler was penalized 5 yards for a false start and Miami cornerback Gerald Small deflected a Ferguson pass intended for Jerry Butler in the end zone.

Robb Riddick's 22-yard return of a punt by Tom Orosz gave the Bills good field position at the Miami 42 early in the second quarter. But four plays later, the Bills were forced to punt.

State Blisters Seahawks, 77-43

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Senior forward Scott Parzych pumped in 19 points points to propel North Carolina State to a 77-43 college basketball victory over North Carolina-Wilmington Saturday night.

Forward Thurl Bailey added 17 points and center Chuck Nevitt added a career high 16 points as the Wolfpack rolled to its seventh victory in as many starts.

The Seahawks, who dropped to 3-3, were led by Edward Timmons' 11 points.

N.C. State never trailed as it employed a zone defense to force their shorter to take low-percentage shots. As a result, the Wolfpack raced to a 27-9 lead midway through the first half and took a 34-19 lead at halftime.

Bailey, Parzych and Nevitt were the only Wolfpack players to score through the first 12 minutes of the second half.

Bailey hit a foul shot at the 8:35 mark to give N.C. State a 57-33 lead, and later followed with a dunk to extend the margin to 73-39 with 2:07 left.

Nevitt, a 7-foot-5 senior, swatted down six shots and snatched 12 rebounds, also a career high.

Meanwhile, UNCW shot 26.2 percent from the floor and had no other players in double figures.

Owners Pressuring Kuhn To Retire

NEW YORK (AP) — Nine major league clubowners wrote a letter last week aimed at pressuring Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn to resign or not run for a third term, the New York Times said in Sunday's editions.

The paper added that the letter was never delivered. But, it continued, knowledge of the existence of the letter, written during baseball's annual winter meetings in Hollywood, Fla., served notice to Kuhn that the National League has enough votes to prevent him from continuing as commissioner in August 1983.

According to the Times, the letter did not ask Kuhn to resign, but said that "we the undersigned are not going to vte for the re-election of Bowie Kuhn."

It would take four of the 12 NL owners or five of the 14 American League owners to block Kuhn's re-election. The Times said five of the nine signees were NL owners — August Busch Jr. of St. Louis, William Williams of Cincinnati, John McMullen of Houston, Ballard Smith of San Diego and Nelson Doubleday of the New York Mets.

AL signees were George Steinbrenner of the New York Yankees, Edward Bennett Williams of Baltimore, Eddie Chiles of Texas and George Argyros of Seattle, according to the Times.

Kuhn said he was "aware of the letter and I became of the group of clubs who were raising the questions the letter presented. Beyond that, there's not much I can say. I've been faced through the years with incidents very much like this, so it doesn't come as any enormous surprise to me."

Jordan, Perkins Pace Carolina Win

NEW YORK (AP) — Freshman Michael Jordan and center Sam Perkins led a second-half rampage that gave top-ranked North Carolina a 59-36 victory over Rutgers Saturday night at Madison Square Garden.

Jordan scored seven straight North Carolina points to cap a span during which the Tar Heels outscored Rutgers 18-2 and took a 20-point lead, 47-27, with 8:27 to play. Perkins, meanwhile, shut down Rutgers' high-scoring tandem of big men, Clarence Tillman and Roy Hinson.

Leading by four at 29-25, North Carolina, 5-0, ran off 13 straight points, including five straight by Matt Doherty, to lead 42-25 with 10:42 remaining. After a basket by Rutgers' Kevin Black, Jordan, a leaping guard from Wilmington, N.C., hit two baskets and a free throw to cap the outburst and end any hope of still another upset by the Scarlet Knights.

Earlier this month, Rutgers had defeated then-No.9 UCLA 57-54, and the Scarlet Knights battled North Carolina apparently with the same idea through much of the first half.

But with Perkins jamming the middle and Jordan leading the North Carolina fast break, the Tar Heels quickly began to increase their lead in the second half.

The Tar Heels led 24-19 after 20 minutes of play, and Chris Nieberlein of Rutgers hit the opening basket of the second half to cut the margin to three. Jordan and Doherty then hit quick baskets and Perkins added a free throw as the Tar Heels led by eight 29-21, with 17:05 to play.

Nieberlein hit another basket and Black followed with his first two points of the game to make it 29-25, but North Carolina then began its burst.

Jordan, Perkins and Doherty each wound up with 15 points, and Perkins had 12 rebounds and six blocked shots.

Nieberlein paced Rutgers, 5-2, with eight points and John Battle had seven.

North Carolina's second-half showing came primarily without the services of forward James Worthy, who picked up his fourth foul with less than four minutes gone. He finished with eight points, only two in the second half.

Braxton Kayos Champ In 10th

Braxton, of Camden, N.J., a boxing unknown until recently, overwhelmed the champion in his ninth title defense by punishing Muhammad inside throughout most of their scheduled 15-round fight.

Muhammad staggered to his feet and grabbed the ropes as referee Arthur Mercante gave him a count of 10 to recover.

But Muhammad almost was defenseless, his nose bleeding profusely, as Braxton came charging.

Muhammad's cut man, Adolph Ratacco, of Philadelphia, jumped into the ring waving a towel. Mercante jumped between the two fighters and stopped the bout, giving the championship to Braxton.

Muhammad, 26, of Philadelphia, now has a 32-4-1 record.

Mercante said he did not see Ratacco jump onto the canvass with the ...ige towel.

"I was just going to stop it a little bit sooner," Mercante said. "But Muhammad, if you remember, came back in a little spurt. I didn't see him (Ratacco)."

Muhammad is a slow-starting fighter, who often lulls challengers into a false sense of confidence during the early rounds.

His style was no different against Braxton. But Braxton maintained his momentum throughout the fight with a crouching style that seemed to aim at Muhammad's stomach, but allowed him to go to the head easily with overhand rights.

Braxton scored from the inside. Muhammad scored from a distance.

Braxton led throughout the fight on most unofficial cards. He bloodied Muhammad's nose in the fourth round with characteristic short right jabs that snapped back Muhammad's head.

Muhammad hurt Braxton only once, when his right hand scored to the challenger's head as Braxton stood against the ropes at the end of the seventh round.

Toward the 10th round, it became clear that Muhammad was not finding his wind as he had done so dramatically against earlier challengers.

Muhammad was six pounds overweight, at 181 pounds, as late as Friday night, according to Robert W. Lee, deputy state athletic commissioner.

Muhammad came to Saturday's weigh-in at 177, then hit the sauna and ran on the beach to lose 2½ pounds within two hours. Muhammad fought at 174½. Braxton was a quarter-pound heavier.

Braxton, a former inmate at Rahway State Prison, has risen slowly and, some say, deliberately. This year, for example, he earned his fight with Muhammad by overcoming Johnny Davis, Mike Rossman and James Scott, handing his former fellow inmate his first defeat in his 22-bout career.

On the other hand, Muhammad was looking beyond Braxton to an eventual fight with World Boxing Association champion Michael Spinks to unite the light heavyweight title.

Villanova Is Upset

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Sophomor Terence Stansbury scored on a fast-break dunk and added two free throws to spark undefeated Temple to a 52-48 upset of 18th-ranked Villanova in the second game of a college basketball doubleheader Saturday at the Palestra.

Cheyney State defeated Philadelphia Textile 79-67 in the first game.

Stansbury's dunk, with 34 seconds remaining, followed a steal by freshman Ed Coe and broke a 46-46 tie. Villanova, 6-1, had squandered an eight-point lead midway through the second half and tried to hold the ball the last two minutes for the final shot.

Stansbury and Coe each added a pair of foul shots in the final 22 seconds.

Temple, 7-0, led the entire first half behind the shooting of sophomore Granger Hall. The Owls were in front 28-24 at halftime, despite making only six of 18 free throws.

Villanova's tentative first half offense shifted into high gear to open the second half. Stellar freshman Ed Pinckney scored seven points to trigger a 13-1 burst that gave Villanova a 37-29 lead with 13 minutes left to play.

Hall had 21 points while Stansbury finished with 14. The pair combined for 15 of Temple's final 17 points. John Pinone scored 14 points to lead Villanova, while Aaron Howard and Stewart Granger each added 8.

Elon Again NAIA Champion

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Coach Jerry Tolley's power of foresight, as well as his faith in senior placekicker Phil Renn, were rewarded Saturday when Elon College captured a 3-0 victory over Pittsburg State for the NAIA Division I football championship.

Renn booted a 23-yard field goal early in the fourth quarter to offset seven turnovers and give the Fightin' Christians another national title.

"I didn't think a touchdown would be scored today," Tolley said. "I knew we had a good field goal kicker, so I was just hoping I would get that chance."

Renn got the chance for his only attempt of the day after nose guard Chris Worst blocked a punt by Pittsburg State's Gene Wayenberg. Strong safety Kenny Angel recovered the ball at the Gorilla 8-yard line.

Three plays up the middle gained only two yards, but Renn booted the ball through the uprights for the first successful field goal by either team after four tries by Pittsburg State.

Head Knocker

"It's great to be national champions again and we're proud to represent the community.

Pittsburg State Coach Ron Randleman said Elon's special team was the difference.

"They made the big play in the punting game, but we knew they were capable of doing that," Randleman said.

Randleman also felt that the free weekend prior to Saturday's game may have left his team a little flat. Pittsburg State advanced to the finals after Cameron University was disqualified for using ineligible players during the regular season.

"The long layoff that we had hurt us," he said. "It was probably one of the reasons our offense wasn't sharp."

Both defenses dominated the contest, but mistakes by the Fightin' Christians gave Pittsburg State its chances to score.

On the next series, Elon's Fred Jordan fumbled at his 25, where Alan Watts recovered on the spot to set up one more chance for Hammons. Following a 12-yard gain by fullback Stan Patton, Hammons' 28-yard attempt was again wide to the left.

In the second quarter, Ray Dalton coughed up the ball to the Gorillas at their 26. Pittsburg State drove to the Elon 11, where Hammons' third try, from 27 yards, was wide right.

The Gorillas, aided by a pass interference call, drove within striking distance in the fourth quarter after Renn's kick. But a 47-yard try by Hammons was right of the mark.

The victory was Elon's second consecutive championship and finished their season at 11-1-1. Pittsburg State, which had not been in NAIA postseason play since 1961, closed with a 10-2 record.

Denkler Leads State's Scoring

East Carolina's Mary Denkler continues to lead the state of North Carolina in scoring, according to the lastest statistics released for Division I women's basketball.

Denkler, through games of December 14, has posted a 19.8 average, and holds a 6.5 point margin over second place Paula Nicholson of N.C. State. Denkler's average also places her 44th in the nation among NCAA Division I players.

Denkler is also the leading rebounder in the state with a 9.4 average, just 0.2 per game ahead of Tresa Brown of North Carolina. She is also sixth in free throw percentage, hitting 83.3 percent of her shots.

Sam Jones stands fifth in scoring with an 11.8 average, tied with teammate Loraine Jones. Jones is ninth in free throw percentage at 78.6, and is 13th in rebounding at 5.2, again tied with Barnes. Jones leads the state in assists with 6.0 per game and is second in steals with 2.2 per game.

ECU's Lady Pirates, as a team are third in field goal percentage at 41.6, fifth in free throw percentage, 62.9; fourth in scoring at 63.2 points per game, fifth in rebound at 37.8 per game, and third in defense in 61.8 points allowed per game.

Toledo Field Goal Keys California Bowl Win

The game-winning kick came just half a minute after the San Jose Spartans, who trailed 21-3 in the third period, went ahead on a touchdown pass and two-point conversion.

The Spartans, champions of the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, got a 467-yard passing performance from quarterback Steve Clarkson, who hit sophomore wide receiver Mervyn Fernandez for three touchdown passes.

On the touchdown, Fernandez caught the ball at the 20-yard line, sidestepped a defender and raced into the end zone.

The Rockets, Mid-American Conference champs, began from their 20-yard line after the ensuing kickoff, and quarterback Maurice Hall's 39-yard pass to Bill Poure was the key play on the quick drive for the winning field goal.

San Jose's Clarkson completed a school-record 43 passes and had 62 attempts. However, he also allowed five interceptions in the game played before a disappointing crowd of 15,565 in the 30,000-seat Fresno State stadium.

Toledo finished the season with a 9-3 record. One of its losses was a 28-24 defeat at the hands of East Carolina University.

Johnstone Leads Wake By ASU

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Wake Forest center Jim Johnstone scored a game-high 24 points, including 13 in a row in the first half, to lead Wake Forest to a 79-57 win over Appalachian State in a non-conference college basketball game Saturday night.

Johnstone, a 6-foot-10 senior, hit 10 of 13 shots from the field and added four free throws for his season-high scoring total. With the Deacons leading 4-0 five minutes into the game, Johnstone put together a string of five baskets and three free throws to give Wake Forest a 17-8 lead.

The Deacons, winning their fifth straight game after a season-opening loss, hit 65 percent of their shots from the field and limited the Apps, now 2-4, to 49 percent shooting.

Two other Wake Forest players scored in double figures — sophomore guard Danny Young with 11 and senior guard Mike Helms with 10. Center Charles Payton led the Apps with 17 points, while guard John Fitch added 15.

The Deacons scored the game's first seven points and jumped to a 32-11 lead. Appalachian cut the deficit to 38-25 at the half, but Wake Forest scored the first eight points of the second half to lead 46-25.

The Deacons led by as many as 24 points in the second half. Appalachian cut the margin to 18 points five times, but could get no closer.

Wake Forest forward Alvis Rogers re-injured the knee that kept him out of action for the past two weeks, landing and twisting it after shooting a jump shot in the first half.

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Herman Vel and Adrian Branch combined for 22 points in the first 12½ minutes of the second half, enabling Maryland to pull away from underdog Ohio University for a 90-64 victory Saturday night.

The Terps, 7-1, led only 38-34 at halftime after the Bobcats scored the final eight points before intermission.

Veal scored six of his 20 points as the Terps started the second half with a 10-2 streak for a 48-36 lead. Branch scored 12 of his 16 points before leaving the game with Maryland ahead 69-49 with 7:35 remaining.

Charles Pittman scored 14 points for the Terps, 12 in the first half, and pulled down nine rebounds. Veal had 11 rebounds.

John Devereaux scored 14 points for Ohio U., 2-4, and Kirk Lehman had 12. The Bobcats were never closer than 12 points after Maryland's spurt at the start of the second half.

HOUSTON (AP) — Sophomore guard Vincent Hamilton and senior center Horace Wyatt helped Clemson overcome a sluggish first half to defeat Mississippi State 59-32 Saturday night in the consolation game of the Kettle Basketball Classic.

Sixth-ranked Iowa met Houston in the championship game later Saturday night.

Both teams got off to a slow start in the first half of the game that saw Mississippi State unable to score in the first four minutes and Clemson leading by a margin of only 20-15 at intermission.

But behind the shooting of Hamilton, who finished with 12 points, and Wyatt, who had 11, Clemson slowly pulled away from the Bulldogs in the second half.

Clemson hit 57 percent of its shots from the field for the game, while Mississippi State hit a dismal 35 percent of its shots and was led in scoring by Jeff Norwood and Butch Pierre, who both had 8 points.

The win raised Clemson's record to 7-1 and the loss dropped Mississippi State to 4-4 for the season.

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Point guard Gerald Peacock led South Carolina to a school game shooting record of 75 percent from the floor as the Gamecocks defeated Western Carolina 92-76 in basketball here Saturday night.

The score was tied 39-39 at the half, but South Carolina hit on 82.6 percent from the field in the second half to break the game open, setting a school record for scoring rate in a period.

South Carolina, which scored the first 11 points in the second half, hit on 19 of 23 shots from the field in the last period.

The Gamecocks, now 3-4, had three players besides Peacock who scored in double figures. Kenny Holmes scored 11 points, while both Kevin Darmody and Brad Jergenson scored 10 points each.

Western Carolina, which fell to 5-2, was paced by Ronnie Carr with 20 points. Kevin Young added 14, while Greg Dennis scored 12 and Kenny Trimier added 11.

The old Carolina Coliseum record was a 65.1 field goal percentage set just Wednesday night against Brown. The old school mark was 67.4 percent and was set on the road against Notre Dame and Santa Clara.

Lady Chargers Win First Game

LITTLEFIELD — West Craven rolled to a 77-65 victory over Ayden-Grifton last night, but the Charger girls claimed their first win of the season, downing the Lady Eagles, 57-37.

The victory for the Lady Chargers ended seven games of frustration as they sought their first win of the year.

Both teams scored 12 points in the first period and each hit six in the second for an 18-18 deadlock at the half. But the Lady Chargers took command at the half and outscored West Craven, 20-7, for a 38-25 lead going into the final period. Ayden-Grifton outshot them, 19-12, in that quarter.

Cora Faison led Ayden-Grifton with 24 points, while Linda Brown added 15. West Craven was led by E. Hargett with 13 and B. Peele with 10.

Despite having five players in double figures, Ayden-Grifton could not stay with the stronger Eagles. West Craven pushed out to a 22-16 lead in the fist period and extended that to 45-32 in the second frame. Ayden-Grifton cut one off that in the third period, 13-12, and equaled the Eagle production of 20 in the final period.

R. Bellamy led West Craven with 26 points, while L. Harris added 23 and W. Becton had 13.

Ayden-Grifton was paced by Jesse Anderson with 14, while Jonathan Woods had 13, Calvin Peterson and Tyrone Gay each had 12 and Bernard Cannon had ten.

The loss dropped the A-G boys to 3-5 on the year.

ECU, which hit just 39% from the field in the first half, managed just 12 more points before intermission, Manhattan but 16.

The score was tied three times over the next 10 minutes. The last tie came at 23-23 when ECU's Peartree hit a jumper with 1:15 left. The 6-1 freshman from Pantego was fouled on the play but missed the free throw.

Two buckets by Manhattan — one by Cain at the buzzer — gave the Jaspers a 27-23 lead going into the locker rooms.

Manhattan pushed its lead to six (29-23) on two free throws by Johnson moments into the second 20 minutes. The Pirates did not allow the deficit to grow — for the moment.

A layup by McLaurin, two free throws by Hargrove and a inside move by Thom Brown brought ECU to within one, 32-31, with 13:59 left. The Pirates, however, were never able to get closer.

With the score at 36-35, Manhattan outscored ECU 12 to two over the next five minutes to go up, 48-37, with 6:07 remaining. Eight of those 12 points came at the free throw line, five of which were canned by Johnson.

The Jaspers managed to maintain a 10-point bulge for the next five minutes before the Pirates rallied to within four in the last minute.

Using a full-court press, the Pirates scored two quick buckets by Hargrove and Bill McNair following turnovers to close to within six, 56-50, with 55 seconds left.

The Pirates inched to within four (58-54) ith 25 seconds left on a follow by Hargrove, but Cain connected on a pair of free throws with 18 seconds left to seal the win.

West Virginia captured the tournament title with an 85-83 victory over Long Island University in the championships. LIU's Riley Clarida, who scored 28 points against East Carolina Friday night in the Blackbirds' 82-72 win over the Pirates, was voted the most valuable player of the tournament.

Joining Clarida on the all-tournament team from LIU was guard Robert Cole. West Virginia placed Greg Jones and Lester Rowe on the five-man team, while Manhattan's John Leonard rounded out the squad. The team was selected by media covering the two-day event.

East Carolina has not won an invitational tourament game since the second game the Pirates played under Odom, three years ago.

Danelo...

On it, Rob Carpenter, the game's leading rusher with 83 yards, took a handoff from Brunner, who then flipped it back to the quarterback. Brunner's pass was tipped by linebacker D.D. Lewis and floated down to Perry for the 16-yard gain. Two plays later, Mullady caught Brunner's pass at the Dallas 2 and dived into the right corner of the end zone as he was being hit by linebacker Mike Hegman.

Indiana Rallies To Nip Kansas State

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Indiana, a team unaccustomed to giving up easy baskets, found its defense in the second half and rallie Saturday for a 58-49 victory over Kansas State in a college basketball game.

"Our defense just wasn't there in the first half," said junior Ted Kitchel, who scored 20 points to lead the 13th-ranked Hoosiers. "They just seemed to get inside of us."

"We really didn't do anything different at the half. We were not able," said Indiana Coach Bobby Knight.

"Defensively they were able to set up to take advantage of our mistakes," he added. "Neither team got much offensively but they got some back picks and some offensive rebounds. We did a good job the second half of taking away those things."

"I think our first half play was terrible," said Kitchel, who was perfect from the free throw line to give him 23 consecutive foul shots.

"I thought the Indiana kids just wanted it a little bit more in the second half," said Kansas State Coach Jack Hartman. "I don't think we showed the mental toughness we needed."

Indiana trailed by nine points, 34-25, after Kansas State scored the first six points of the second half on baskets by Randy Reed, Ed Nealy and Tyrone Adams.

"We were hoping to start the second half well and then we began to slide," Hartman said. "They shot the ball well against the zone all day. They got it inside when they needed it."

Georgetown.....76 Nevada-Las Vegas. 52

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Eric Floyd scored 15 of his 27 points in the second half, seven during a 15-point Georgetown streak midway through the period, as the 19th-ranked Hoyas buried Nevada-Las Vegas 76-52 Saturday.

Floyd and freshman center Pat Ewing, who sat out 10 minutes of the first half in foul trouble, combined for 13 points in the first eight minutes of the second half. Georgetown, meanwhile, opened up a 51-39 lead.

The Hoyas, 7-2, extended their advantage to 66-41 with 8:05 remaining as the Runnin' Rebels went without a point for more than six minutes.

Ewing, who had only two points and two rebounds at halftime, finished with 10 points and hauled down eight rebounds. Freshman Anthony Jones scored 12 for the Hoyas, while Fred Brown added 11 and Mike Hancock 10.

Nevada-Las Vegas, 4-3, trailed 32-20 with 5:27 left in the first half before Sidney Green and Larry Anderson sparked a 13-4 rally which pulled the Runnin' Rebels to within 36-33 at the intermission.

William & Mary....69 N.C. Wesleyan....45

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — William & Mary's Indians, led by freshmen Keith Cieplicki and Kevin Richarson, scored the game's first 10 points and coasted to a 69-45 basketball victory Saturday over North Carolina Wesleyan's Bishops.

Cieplicki had six of his 13 points as the Indians, 4-1, opened up a 20-4 lead with 13:40 left in the first half and never let the Bishops, 1-7, closer than nine points. The Indians led at intermission 38-25.

Richardson hit seven of nine floor shots and finished with a game-high 15 points for the Indians and also pulled down six rebounds. Sophomore Gary Bland added 10 points for the Indians, who shot 53.3 percent from the floor.

Terry Wright had 12 points and was the only player in double figures for the Bishops, who shot just 38.3 percent from the floor.

Austin Wins To Gain Net Finals

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Tracy Austin trounced second-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd 6-1, 6-2 Saturday night to advance into the finals of the $250,000 Toyota Tennis Championships.

The victory, Austin's ninth in 16 career meetings with Lloyd, was even sweeter since it came only two days after she had dropped a 3-hour, 18-minute three-set match to Lloyd.

Austin, who captured her second U.S. Open singles title in September, will meet the winner of Saturday night's other semifinal between top-seeded Martina Navratilova and Pam Shriver in Sunday's final.

The winner of this eight-woman, double-elimination tournament receives $75,000, while the runner-up gets $40,000.

Lloyd won the opening game, breaking Austin at love. But the reigning Wimbledon champion could win only 10 more points in the first set as Austin dominated her older rival.

Whatever Lloyd did, Austin did better. When Lloyd brought her opponent to the net with a chip shot, Austin won the point with a delicately placed drop shot. When Lloyd fired a two-fisted backhand cross court, Austin returned it cross court with a two-fisted backhand that was twice as hard.

Lloyd, the teacher, received an expensive lesson from the pupil. For losing in the semifinals, Lloyd, ranked No.1 in the world on the Women's Tennis Association computer, collected $19,000.

In the second set, Lloyd held serve in the seventh game. It was the only time in the 76-minute match that she could hold serve. Her only other game came in the fourth game of the second set when she broke Austin after the two had battled to deuce four times.

Valenzuela To Wed On Dec. 28

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mike Brito, the Los Angeles Dodgers' scout who discovered superstar pitcher Fernando Valenzuela for the World Series winners, has confirmed that the Rooki of the Year and Cy Young Award winner will be married on Dec.28.

"He's been engaged for a long time," Brito was quoted as saying in Saturday's Los Angeles Herald Examiner. "But now that he has a better position, they got more serious.

"He asked me to be his best man. You know, he's like my own son."

Brito said that Valenzuela, 21, will marry Linda Buijos, a 20-year-old elementary school teacher from Merida, the Caribbean port city on Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula. The wedding will take place in the bride-to-be's hometown, Brito said.

Brito said Valenzuela told him of the plans on Wednesday, when the young left-hander from Sonora, Mexico, made his winter league season debut for the Navajoa Mayos. In that game, Valenzuela walked none, struck out five and allowed only three hits in five innings as Los Mayos beat Mazatlan 8-1.

Valenzuela was a key factor as the Dodgers advanced to the 1981 World Series and defeated the New York Yankees in six games for their first Series triumph since 1965.

Idaho State Is I-AA Champion

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Senior quarterback Mike Machurek took advantage of the elements Saturday, directing Idaho State to three wind-aided second-quarter touchdowns, and the Bengals whipped Eastern Kentucky 34-23 in the Pioneer Bowl for the NCAA Division IAA national championship.

It was the first championship-game appearance for the Bengals, 12-1, who went 0-11 just two years ago. The Colonels, 12-2, were making their third championship-game trip in a row.

Eastern Kentucky was the NCAA's top-ranked Division IAA team when the game started, and ISU was No. 2.

With the 25 mph wind at his back, Machurek took the Bengals 52, 80 and 38 yards for second-period tallies. His 9-yard pass to Charles Ewing was sandwiched between a pair of 6-yard runs by tailback Dwain Wilson and ISU took a 28-9 lead into the locker room at intermission.

Machurek, who led the division in passing and total offense, also found Chris Corp for a 17-yard scoring pass in the first period and Paul Fite scored on a 2-yard plunge on the first play of the final quarter.

Eastern Kentucky scored first on a 21-yard field goal by Jamie Lovett and added a 3-yard touchdown run by Ed Hairston two plays into the second quarter, but could not mount a scoring drive against the wind the rest of the half.

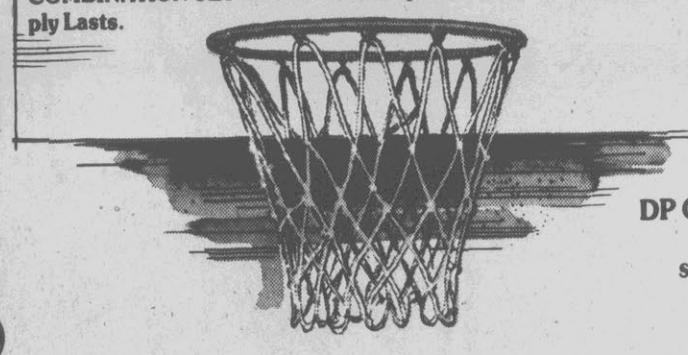

The Colonels scored with the wind at their backs in the third period, marching 71 yards for a 2-yard plunge by Nicky Yeast, and moved within 11 points when Yeast banged 4 yards for a touchdown midway through the fourth quarter.

ISU's first touchdown was set up by some trickery. Facing fourth down and 7 at the Colonels' 32-yard line, the Bengals lined up in punt formation. But the snap went to the short man, reserve quarterback Dirk Koetter, who snapped a 12-yard pass to Jerry Bird, and Machurek found Corp on the next play.

Icy Shooting Helps Knights Top Rose

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Northern Nash's Knights, considered by some as the dark horse in the Big East Conference, warmed up in the second half after a cold-shooting first and outdistanced Rose High School's confused Rampants, 66-48, Friday night.

It was the conference opener for both teams.

Rose's girls won their league opener against the Lady Knights, 50-38, and the win, their third, surpassed the total for the whole season last year.

Rose's boys, who fired through 50 percent of their shots in the first half, chilled in the second half to a frigid 33.3 percent, giving the Rampants only 38.6 percent for the evening.

Northern, which canned only 39.1 percent in the first half — but still managed a 23-20 halftime lead — blistered the nets in the second half for 65.5 percent, canning 19 of 29 shots during the 16 minutes of play.

"This was some lousy basketball," Jim Brewington, the Rampant coach said afterwards in disgust.

"We didn't play good at all. I don't know if we left it all at Conley or not," he said in reference to Rose's upset win over the Vikings earlier in the week.

Turnovers — a problem the Rampants didn't have against Conley — plagued them against Northern. When Rose wasn't missing shots, it was throwing the ball away, committing 26 turnovers for the game, including 16 in the first half.

Northern was almost as sloppy, turning it over 20 times.

Rose controlled the boards, 39-31, but it did little good as there were few defensive rebounds to control and the offensive ones couldn't seem to find the mark when thrown back.

"Twenty-some turnovers is way too many," Brewington said. "That's 40-some points we just gave away. I'm very disappointed. I just hope we can regroup.

"We played out of control. I tried to work in different combinations, hoping to find one that would settle down, but nothing ever worked. We're not this bad a club, but we played that way tonight."

Rose took an early lead in the game, hitting six of ten shots in the first period. But eight turnovers kept them from pulling away from the Knights. Rose scored first, and after a 2-2 tie, pulled out into a 6-4 lead — the largest for the Rampants during the evening.

Derrick Battle and Clifton Lynch both scored, tieing it up, but Rose regained the lead.

Each time, through the rest of the half, Northern would retie it, until it reached 12-12 on a jumper by Jim Harris with just four seconds left.

"We had chance after chance to break the game open early," Brewington said, "but we just kept throwing it away."

In the second period, Northern went without a field goal for the first six and a half minutes — and still managed to take the lead. Rose, after moving up, 16-13, went scoreless for nearly three minutes, while Northern was hitting six shots at the foul line, and finally getting a basket with 1:30 left for a 21-16 lead. Steve Lynch hit four of the free throws in that string.

Rose cut the margin back to three, but still trailed, 23-20, at the half.

It was just a preview of what was to come.

The Rampants, who did cut down the turnovers, nevertheless, lost their shooting touch and missed 11 of 17 shots during the third period as Northern extended its lead to six. Rose did manage to pull back and regain the lead at 32-31 with 3:41 left, but the Rampants scored only two free throws the rest of the period, while Northern, led by six points from Clifton Lynch, scored nine points for a 40-34 lead at the horn.

Northern dropped in seven of nine shots from the floor during the period, and was almost as hot in the final period, making 12 of 20. Rose, impatient to catch up, again turned the ball over time and again, and Northern took full advantage of it, blowing the game wind open in the period. Two quick baskets at the start of the period ran the lead to 10, 44-34, and although Rose pulled back within six, 46-40, Northern ran off ten straight after that, and it was all over. Lynch and Thomas Mabry both hit six points each during the streak that carried the Knights out to as much as a 20-point spread at 62-42 and again at 66-46.

Lynch led the Knight scoring with 16, while Mabry added 14. Rose was led by William Battle with 14 and Lee with 10.

Rose tumbles to 3-3 with the loss and is 0-1 in Big East play. Northern is now 6-1 and 1-0.

The Rampettes, in surpassing their total victories for all last year in winning their third this year, got their conference play off on a happy note.

Gibson noted that while the girls didn't play well in some areas, they are gaining more confidence with each game. "We're playing to win now."

He praised the individual play of Frances Barnhill, who scored 20 points in the win, and of sophomore Doris Richardson who scored 18 and pulled down a number of rebounds.

Rose jumped out into a 4-0 lead early, but Northern came back to tie it up. Rose again jumped out on two baskets by Alma Atkinson around a baseline jumper by Barnhill to take a 10-4 lead.

But Rose didn't score again in the period as the Knights, led by Paula Evans, came back to take a 12-10 lead at the end of the frame.

The two exchanged the lead once in the first minutes of the second period before Rose took

Perfect Clarida Tops ECU

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

CHARLESTON, W. Va. — It was a performance worthy of an All-American by a player whose university has a storied basketball history.

Riley Clarida had yet to be born when the legendary Clair Bee was coaching at Long Island University during the 30s and 40s.

But, the effort by the LIU forward Friday evening against East Carolina University surely would have pleased the coach who won 357 games and lost only 79 during his 18 years at LIU.

All Clarida did was connect on 13-of-13 shots from the field, two-of-two from the foul line and pull down a game-high 14 rebounds to lead LIU past ECU, 82-72, in the opening game of the 1981 Mountaineer Classic.

ECU, now 2-3, was to have played Manhattan College Saturday night in the consolation game. Manhattan, 3-4, lost to West Virginia, 73-42, in the second game Friday.

The Mountaineers, 5-1, were to have played LIU in the championship game Saturday evening at the Charleston Civic Center Colisieum.

"If there is such a thing as a perfect game," LIU coach Paul Lizzo said, "Clarida played it tonight.".

ECU coach Dave Odom did not disagree. "We tried every defense we had on him," Odom said. "We were never able to stop him, we were never able to keep him off the boards.

"Clarida is street-wise in terms of basketball," Odom said. " His game is limited to inside 10 feet from the basket, but within those 10 feet he is excellent.

"The only way we were able to stop him was to put three or four players on him. When we did that he dumped the ball outside to their little guys and they made 'em."

When Clarida, a 6-7, 220-pound senior, was not muscling inside for a basket, LIU guards Richard Cole and Earl Fuller were connecting from long range.

Cole, a 5-10 junior, hit seven of 14 from the field and eight for eight from the foul line — all in the last three minutes of the game — for 22 points. Fuller, a 5-9 senior, added 14 points while LIU forward Eric Short added 14 points.

LIU, which won the ECAC New York-New Jersey Championship a year ago and an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament, knocked in 63.5% of its shots (33 of 52) from the field and 16 of 18 (88.5%) from the foul line.

ECU, meanwhile, hit 30 of 52 (51.1%) from the field, but continued to have trouble from the foul line. ECU, which came into the game hitting just 56% of its free throws, hit a meager 12 of 21 (57.1%) from the foul line.

The Pirates were led in scoring by forwards Charles Green and Morris Hargrove. Green scored 18 points while Hargrove added 17 points and snatched down nine rebounds.

Forward Mark McLaurin, showing no ill effects from damaged ligaments in his hand that has kept him out of the lineup all season, contributed 15 points, four rebounds and four assists in 28 minutes of action.

Guard Charles Watkins added 13 points. Point guard Tony Byles, ECU's leading scorer coming into the game, scored just four points but had six assists and had only three turnovers.

"We're a very disappointed team," Odom said. "In spots I thought we played well enough to win. I thought our players kept the game in control."

One of Odom's concerns coming into the game was the LIU running game. The Blackbirds averaged over 80 points a game last year and have not scored under 70 this season.

The Pirates, relying mainly on an active, helping man-to-man defense, cut off the LIU fast break almost completely, forcing the Blackbirds to play a half-court game.

"Our defense is good enough to keep teams from just going out and doing what they want," Odom said, "but it is not physical enough to dominate a team.

LIU, however, despite not having a player over 6-7, proved equal to the challenge. The experienced Blackbirds worked patiently against the Pirates' man-to-man.

If ECU left Clarida one-on-one inside, the ball was soon there. If Clarida was double- or triple-teamed, Cole or Fuller took the jumper.

"They're a very tough team to play," Odom said. "You have to remember they're a veteran club and that is important.

"They have been intact for two years and some have played for four years," Odom added. "They're an experienced club. We tried changing defenses to get them out of their rhythm, but we couldn't.

"They didn't surprise me in any way, shape or form," Odom added. "We knew what they did and we hoped we could stop it. We played hard — we wanted it.

"It was a bit of encouragement to hang in there with an NCAA tournament team, but there is still a great deal of disappointment."

While the crowd of 2,732 filed in, ECU managed to take the early lead. Watkins sandwiched a jumper and a layup around a Hargrove follow shot to give ECU an 8-4 lead three minutes into the game.

LIU took its first lead four minutes later when Clarida hit a 12-foot jumper from the right to put the Blackbirds up, 15-14.

ECU regained the lead on its next trip down court on a bucket by Hargrove, but LIU battle back on top moments later.

Fuller connected on two jumpers — one from the top of the key and the other from about 22 feet — and Short followed with a three-point play to give LIU a 24-18 lead.

The Blackbirds stretched their lead to 10 (36-26) with 4:05 left when Cole scored on a layup on one of LIU's few fast break opportunities.

It was the last score of the half for LIU, however, as ECU put together a 9-0 run to close to within one (36-35) at the half.

Conley Matmen Top Jaguars

FARMVILLE — Lorenzo Strong, D.H. Conley's 145-pounder, won his sixth straight match by fall Friday night as he helped the Vikings to a 48-21 victory over Farmville Central.

It was the sixth straight win for the unbeaten Vikings, ranked in the state's top twenty teams.

In addition to Strong, Conley also has three other wrestlers with 6-0 marks including 112-pounder William Green, 167-pounder Willie Greene and heavyweight Paul Menichelli. Reginald Moore is 5-0, while William Bridgett is 4-0-1 and Mike Long is 5-0-1.

Farmville, which fell to 1-4 on the year, saw 195-pounder Charles Sutton lose his first match after four straight wins.

Conley returns to action on Monday and Tuesday in the Bull Durham Classic in Durham. Farmville Central travels to Lumberton for a tournament there on Wednesday.

North Pitt Edges Past Conley, 40-36

BETHEL — North Pitt's Panthers, helped along by two free throws and a basket off a steal by Toby Crandol, edged past D.H. Conley's Vikings, 40-36, Friday night.

The loss was the third straight for the Vikes after five straight victories, as North Pitt upped its mark to 5-3 on the year also.

Conley's girls, unbeaten in eight outings now, rolled to a 40-28 win over North Pitt in the preliminary.

Conley was ahead only 13-12 after one period of play in the boys' game, and then extended that out to 23-18 by the end of the half.

But the Panthers refused to die and held the Vikings to only four points in the third period and scored ten of their own to take a 28-27 lead going into the final quarter.

With the score tied at 34-34, Mitchell Cox scored to put the Panthers ahead to stay. Crandol then added two free throws, and Sammy Tyson hit for Conley on a pair at the line to pull back within two, 38-36.

Vince Parker led the Conley scoring with 12 points, while Keith Gatlin led Conley with 16.

Conley's girls wasted little time in taking control of their game, moving out to a 14-3 lead in the first quarter. Conley allowed a 9-8 rally by North Pitt in the second quarter, and took a 22-12 lead into intermission.

North Pitt again out hit the Valkyries, 8-4, in the third period, cutting the lead back to 26-20, but a final 14-8 spurt by the Conley girls put the game away.

Mechio Kornegay led Conley wih 18 points, while Darlene Cannon added 10. No one scored in double figures for the Pant-HERS.

JV — Conley 40, North Pitt 29.

Ayden-Grifton Defeats Aycock By 68-61 Score

LITTLEFIELD — Ayden-Grifton, after losing two straight games, bounced back Friday night and gained a 68-51 victory over Charles B. Aycock in an Eastern Carolina Conference contest.

Things got no better, however, for the hapless Lady Chargers, who bowed for the seventh straight time, 65-42.

Ayden-Grifton pulled ahead in the first period of the game and never trailed again. By the end of the first period, the Chargers had edged out to an 18-13 lead. They extended that by outscoring the Falcons, 13-5, in the second quarter for a 31-18 lead.

In the third period, Aycock chopped one point off that lead and trailed, 44-32, going into the last frame. Ayden-Grifton outscored Aycock in the last frame, 24-19.

Johathan Woods led Ayden-Grifton with 18 points, while Jesse Anderson added 13 and Tyrone Gay hit 10. No one scored in double figures for Aycock.

The Chargers are now 3-4 overall and 1-1 in Eastern Carolina play.

Aycock's girls, in contract, took the lead in the first period and never lost it either. By the end of the first frame, it was 17-12, and the Falconettes extended that to 31-24 by halftime.

Ayden-Grifton's girls, now 0-2 in league play, were outscored 14-9 in the third period and trailed 45-33. Aycock left them further behind with a 20-9 final period outburst.

Sherri Williams led Aycock with 17 points, while Ann Lancaster added 14, Jeanette Dunn had 13 and Zena Jones hit 10. Linda Brown paced Ayden-Grifton with 13 points, while Angela Griffin had 12 and Cora Faison, 11.

Williamston Drops Sixth In Row As Bertie Wins

Williamston's girls, however, downed Bertie, 39-34, claiming their fifth win in six starts.

The Falcons eased ahead of the Williamston boys in the first period, 8-6, then built that lead into a 23-18 margin by halftime. Both teams tossed through eight points in the third period, running the score to 31-26. Bertie then outhit the Tigers down the stretch, 14-13.

Brian Bunch led Bertie with 13 points, while John Sessoms added 12 and Dwayne Williams hit 10. Woody Sadler had nine points to lead Williamston.

Williamston's girls found themselves trailing 9-7 after the first period and Bertie poured it on in the second frame, 12-6. That left the Falconettes up 21-13 at intermission.

But Williamston took command of the game in the third period, outscoring Bertie 11-6 to cut the lead to 28-24. Then, in the final quarter, Williamston outscored Bertie 15-7 to claim the victory.

Angie Williams led Williamston with 13 points, while Maria Pugh had 18 for Bertie.

Williamston returns to action on January 5, hosting Roanoke.

The surge started with a follow shot by Hargrove and ended with McLaurin, who had four points during the run, hitting a jumper with five seconds left.

The Pirates continued their streak into the second half, outscoring LIU 8-4 in the opening minutes to go up, 43-40. Watkins scored five of those eight points.

The game was tied four times in the next six minutes before LIU took the lead for good at 55-53 on a 22-foot jumper by Fuller. Clarida muscled inside for a bucket to make it 57-53.

The Pirates closed to within two at 61-59 with 6:12 left on a pair of jumpers by McLaurin and bucket by Hargrove, but that was as close as they could get the rest of the evening.

A three-point play by Clarida pushed the LIU lead to 68-61 with 4:28 to play. Then, with ECU forced to began fouling, LIU sealed the victory at the foul line.

Cole, who came into the game hitting 77.3% from the free throw line, swished eight of eight from the stripe in the last 2½ minutes and added a layup to clinch the win, LIU's fourth in seven outings.

Afterwards, Cole came into the press room for the final statistics. Asked about Clarida, he said: "I've been here three years and I haven't seen anybody stop him."

On this night, ECU surely couldn't.

the lead again — this time for good — on a jumper by Belinda Haselrig with 4:06 left, making it 15-14. Rose went on to score eight more points while holding Northern scoreless for a 23-14 halftime lead.

The Rampettes, after allowing Northern the first two baskets of the second half, extended the lead out to ten, 32-22, before leading 23-24 at the horn. The fourth period saw Rose run the lead out to as much as 13, 42-29 with 4:44 left, before Northern rallied back within six only to see Rose pull out to the final 12-point spread.

Evans led the Lady Knight scoring with 24 points.

The Rampettes are now 3-3 overall and 1-0 in league play. Northern falls to 1-6 overall and 0-1 in the conference.

Rose's boys return to action on Tuesday, facing D.H. Conley for the third time in the first round of the Pitt Holiday Tournament at Rose. North Pitt takes on Conley in the other game. The girls are idle until January 5, when Rose travels to Rocky Mount.

Bullets Take Pair Of Wins

JAMESVILLE — Jamesville High School swept a pair of Tobacco Belt Conference games from Creswell Friday night. The Bullets won the boys' game, 44-38, and the girls added a 51-35 victory.

In the girls' contest, Jamesville built up a 10-6 lead in the first period and stretched that to 23-12 by halftime. Creswell rallied in the third quarter, with a 14-10 margin, but Jamesville held to a 33-26 lead as the final period opened. In that Jamesville outscored Creswell, 18-9, to wrap up the victory.

Kim Floyd led Jamesville with 18 points while Kelly Hardison added 16. B. Norman was high for Creswell with 12 points.

The Bullets took a 10-4 lead in the first period then had to fight off a Creswell rally in the second period. Creswell outhit Jamesville, 11-7, and closed the gap to 17-15 at the half.

But Jamesville came back with a 13-9 edge in the third period running its lead to 30-24. Both teams then scored 14 points each in the final peiod.

Rex Bell led Jamesville with 15 points, while Onwood James had 13. J. Phelps led Creswell with 13.

Jamesville boys are now 3-5 overall and 2-4 in league play. The Lady Bullets are 5-3 overall and 5-1 in the league.

Southwest Tops Jaguars In Overtime

PINETOPS — Southwest Edgecombe's Jesse Forbes hit five of seven free throws in overtime to guide the Cougars to a 67-64 victory over Farmville Central Friday night in an Eastern Carolina Conference game.

Southwest's girls ran their winning streak to 41 in a row with a 66-41 romp over the Lady Jaguars earlier in the evening.

Farmville took the lead in the boys' game with a 15-10 edge in the first quarter. The Jaguars extended that witha 19-10 margin in the second frame to take a 34-20 halftime lead.

But in the third period, Southwest started a comeback, outhitting the Jags, 19-10. Southwest scored the first six points of the period, but Farmville held the Cougars off after they eventually closed to one, scoring the final four points of the period for a 44-39 lead.

In the final period, however, Farmville wasn't as fortunate, as the Cougars finally took the lead on two free throws by Forbes with ten seconds left. Bobby Carraway, who fouled out on the play, was replaced by Tony Barnes, who took the inbounds pass and drove the court to score with one second left on a jumper from the top of the key, tieing it at 62-62, and forcing the overtime.

In the extra period, however, Forbes' free throws made the difference as Farmville got only one field goal.

Herbert Vines led Southwest with 17 points, while Alex Cobb has 14 and Forbes had 13. Farmville was led by Melvin Sutton and Andrew Edwards with 19 each, while Terrence Pettaway added 15.

The loss was the sixth straight for Farmville, which is now 2-6 overall and 0-2 in the league. Southwest is 2-0 in conference play and 2-7 overall.

Southwest's girls, now 9-0 overall and 2-0 in the league, vaulted out into a 14-2 lead in the first period and never stopped rolling. They outhit Farmville, 26-10, in the second quarter to hold a 40-12 lead at the half.

The third period saw Farmville match Southwest, 14-14, and then outhit the Lady Cougars, 15-12, in the final period — all to no avail.

Bridgette Jenkins led Southwest with 14 points, while Janice Draughn had 13 and Kim Edmondson and Delphine Mabry had 12 each. Rose Lang led Farmville with 17.

The Lady Jaguars are now 2-6 overall and 0-2 in the league.

Redskins Rip Plymouth, 65-45

ROBERSONVILLE — Roanoke High School placed four players in double figures and rolled to a 65-45 Northeastern Conference victory over Plymouth Friday night.

The victory boosted the league record of the Redskins to 5-0. They are 8-0 overall.

Plymouth's girls, however, took a 43-40 win over the Squaws in their contest.

Roanoke eased out into a 17-15 lead in the boys game, then doubled the Plymouth scoring in the second period, 16-8, to run the lead out 33-23 at the half.

Roanoke continued to hold sway in the third period upping the lead to 43-31. The Redskins polished off the Vikings with a 22-14 edge in the final quarter.

Ronnie Broadie led Roanoke with 16 points, while Michael Neal and Ricky Highsmith each had 13 and Michael Wilson added ten. Plymouth was led by Myron Bell with 20, while James Jackson had 14.

Plymouth's girls eased out into a 12-9 lead in the first period, then outscored Roanoke, 20-12, in the second. That left the Valkyries up, 32-21 at intermission.

Roanoke rallied in the second half, outscoring Plymouth 10-6, in the third period to trim the lead to 38-31. But a 9-5 advantage by the Squaws in the last quarter fell short.

Roanoke's girls are now 6-2 overall and 3-2 in the league.

Playoff Spots At Stake In NFL's Final Weekend

By The Associated Press

A 9-7 record isn't exactly earth-shattering, but it will be good enough to get either the Tampa Bay Buccaneers or the Detroit Lions into the National Football League playoffs.

The Bucs, who won the National Conference Central in 1979, journey to Pontiac, Mich., today to take on the Lions, who are 7-0 at home this year. The winner walks away with the division crown and a spot in the postseason run to the Super Bowl, which will be played at Pontiac's Silverdome.

The Bucs could have made the game less significant by winning last week, but they blew their chance to clinch the title when the San Diego Chargers edged them 24-23 on a field goal in the final minute. The Lions bombed Minnesota 45-7 to set up the showdown.

Today, Denver is at Chicago, Green Bay at the New York Jets, Cincinnati at Atlanta, San Francisco at New Orleans, St. Louis at Philadelphia, Kansas City at Minnesota and Washington at Los Angeles in games with some playoff importance, while other contests pit Pittsburgh at Houston, Cleveland at Seattle and New England at Baltimore. San Diego hosts the defending Super Bowl-champion Oakland Raiders — eliminated from contention this season — Monday night.

The only way either the Lions or Bucs will not win the NFC Central title is if they tie and the Packers beat the Jets. Then Green Bay would capture the division.

The loser of Tampa Bay-Detroit could still advance into the playoffs if both Green Bay and the Giants came up losers this weekend.

The Jets, in search of their first playoff berth since 1969 — the year, after they won the Super Bowl — could lose to the Packers and still qualify — if San Diego loses to Oakland Monday night. If New York wins, it will host the wild-card playoff game next Sunday.

The Broncos lead the NFC West by a game over San Diego and face a Bears team which already has knocked off three NFC West clubs — Kansas City, San Diego and Oakland. If Denver wins, it's in as division champion; if the Broncos lose, they must hope either the Jets or San Diego also falls. A New York loss would assure the Broncos at least a wild-card spot and a San Diego loss would give Denver the division.

Both the Bengals and 49ers already have clinched their divisions but have plenty at stake Sunday. Cincinnati is in Atlanta and a victory by the Bengals would wrap up the home-field advantage throughout the AFC playoffs for the Central Division winners. The Falcons have an outside chance at a wild-card spot — but only if the second wild-card goes to an 8-8 team and the right combination of clubs tie at 8-8.

San Francisco, which is in New Orleans, entered this weekend 12-3, deadlocked with Dallas for the best record in the NFC. Since the 49ers beat the Cowboys this season, they would get the home edge in all playoff rounds if they wound up with the same record as Dallas.

The Eagles must win today to host the wild-card playoff contest.

Hawks Top Rams In Triple OT

SNOW HILL — It took a triple overtime, but thanks to two free throws by Todd Mooring, North Lenoir finally nipped Greene Central, 49-47, Friday night.

Earlier, Greene Central's girls gained a 57-44 win over the Lady Hawks.

Greene Central moved out into an 18-10 lead over the Hawks in the first period of the boys game, but were unable to hold onto the lead. North Lenoir cut it back to 27-21 by halftime, and then tied it up, 33-33 at the end of the third period.

In the fourth frame, John Ray scored just before the horn to tie it up for the Rams after North Lenoir had taken a 45-43 lead.

In the first overtime, North Lenoir controlled the tap and held it until late when the Rams fouled with less than 30 seconds to go. Maurice Thorbes hit both shots, and then James Thompson hit at the horn for the Rams to tie it up once more, 47-47.

In the second overtime, North Lenoir again got the tap and held it until 1:30 was left before the Rams were able to force a turnover. Greene Central then missed a chance at the horn.

Finally, in the third three-minute extra period, North Lenoir, again controlling the tap, missed a shot late and Greene Central got the ball with eight seconds left, calling for a time out. On the inbounds play, however, Roderick Lane was called for a foul and Mooring knocked in both shots to put North Lenoir back up, 49-47. A Ram shot at the end to try and force a fourth overtime went in and came back out.

Thorbes led the North Lenoir scoring with 20 points, while Danny Wooten and Thomas Patrick each had 10. Greene Central was led by Lane with 16, while Thompson had 14 and Ray had 10.

The Rams are now 2-6 on the year.

Greene Central's girls, who ran their record to 6-2, fell behind in the first period, 16-9, but came back with a 14-6 advantage in the second period, for at 23-22 lead at intermission. The Lady Rams again outhit the Hawks, 17-12, in the third to extend the lead to 40-34. The final quarter saw Greene outhit Lenoir, 17-10.

Letha Taylor led the Lady Rams with 21 points, while Sylvia Swinson added 13. Veronica Chapman led North Lenoir with 14.

Hatteras Nails Bear Grass

HATTERAS — Bear Grass High School made the long trip out to Cape Hatteras High Friday night and came away with a split in a pair of varsity games. The Bear Grass girls won their outing, 38-17, but the boys went down to defeat, 50-26.

In the girls' game, the hosting Hatteras team inched into a 6-5 lead in the first period, but the Lady Bears came back with an 8-2 margin in the second frame for a 13-8 halftime lead. Hatteras failed to score in the third quarter while the Bears pushed through 11 for a 24-8 lead. The Bears then outhit Cape Hatteras, 14-9, in the final quarter.

Angie Mizelle led Bear Grass with 17 points, while Sharon Cratt had 12. No one scored in double figures for Cape Hatteras.

New Jersey In Win Over Bucks

By The Associated Press

It usually means that more than one thing went wrong when a team that has been winning 70 percent of its games loses at home to a team that has been winning 30 percent of its games.

That proved to be true Friday night when nearly everyone had a different reason why the New Jersey Nets, 7-16, beat Milwaukee 100-88 Friday night, snapping a nine-game National Basketball Association winning streak for the 17-7 Bucks.

"About the time you get to thinking you're good and you're not prepared, this is exactly what can happen to you," said Bucks Coach Don Nelson. "You get beat by a team that shouldn't beat you."

"Milwaukee didn't shoot that straight, and that gave us a chance to run," said New Jersey Coach Larry Brown, who saw his team outrebound the Bucks 55-33. "We got some easy baskets off the break. That was the big difference."

"It was our defense," said Nets forward Mike O'Koren, who scored 14 points. "Any time you hold a team like Milwaukee to 88 points, you have a good chance of winning ... We just played hard defense and went after them."

In other NBA games, Boston edged Washington 99-98, Houston buried Dallas 112-93, Phoenix trimmed San Antonio 108-104, New York walloped Chicago 121-106, Kansas City upended Utah 100-95 and Indiana clobbered Cleveland 109-73.

The big rebounding edge and the resulting running game enabled guards Ray Williams, Otis Birdsong and Darwin Cook to score 22, 14 and 12 points, respectively, to lead the Nets.

Bridgeman came off the bench to sink four of his first five shots in the second quarter, while Marques Johnson tossed in three baskets in a 63-second span late in the period to help the Bucks open a 47-42 halftime lead. They had led by nine late in the second quarter.

The Bucks led 47-42 at halftime, but the Nets outscored Milwaukee 26-17 in the third quarter to overtake the Bucks.

In the final minutes of the third period, the Nets started a 20-4 surge that left them ahead 80-66 midway through the final quarter.

Celtics 99, Bullets 98

Robert Parish scored 14 points in the fourth period on 7-for-7 shooting as Boston spoiled a Washington comeback.

Parish scored 24 of his 32 points in the second half, when the Celtics fell behind 85-73 after leading by 15 in the first half.

Suns 108, Spurs 104

Truck Robinson scored a season-high 38 points, including 14 in the fourth quarter as Phoenix rallied from a seven-point deficit midway through the period to beat San Antonio.

Dennis Johnson, who scored 19 for the Suns, hit two free throws with 4:01 to go to put Phoenix ahead to stay, 101-99, and Robinson followed with two baskets for a 105-101 edge with 2:25 left.

Knicks 121, Bulls 106

Campy Russell scored 14 of his game-high 22 points in the first quarter, when New York took control of the game and went on to beat Chicago.

Bill Cartwright also scored 22 for the Knicks, including 10 in the fourth quarter when the Bulls twice closed to within seven points of New York after trailing by as many as 21 in the first half.

Kings 100, Jazz 95

Cliff Robinson scored 29 points, eight of them in the final quarter when Kansas City erased a seven-point Utah lead.

The Kings, who led by as many as 14 earlier, took the lead for good at 91-90 with 4:16 left on a Phil Ford jump shot.

Adrian Dantley scored 29 points to lead the Jazz, but had only two in the final period.

Rockets 112, Mavericks 93

Moses Malone had 11 of his 23 points, three rebounds, three steals, three assists and one blocked shot in the third quarter to lead a Houston surge over Dallas.

The Rockets, who have won three in a row after a 7-15 start, extended a seven-point halftime lead into a 22-point advantage early in the final period.

Dallas rookie Jay Vincent led all scorers with 29 points.

Robert Reid, returning to the lineup after a self-imposed absence of 11 days and five games, scored 10.

Pacers 109, Cavaliers 73

Indiana tied a club record for fewest points allowed as it handed Cleveland its 19th loss in 24 games this season.

McMahon Leads BYU To Victory

SAN DIEGO (AP) — How good is Jim McMahon, Brigam Young University's senior passing sensation?

"If I were a pro coach, I'd pick McMahon and he'd lead us to the Super Bowl," says his coach, LaVell Edwards, architect of college football's most explosive offense.

With McMahon directing BYU's big-play attack, the Western Athletic Conference powerhouse outlasted Washington State 38-36 Friday night to repeat as Holiday Bowl champions.

McMahon, the NCAA passing champion the past two years and holder of 56 all-time offensive records, riddled the best pass defense in the Pacific-10 Conference, completing 27 of 43 passes for three touchdowns and 342 yards.

"He's the best quarterback we faced this year," said Washington State Coach Jim Walden.

McMahon, off target early and plagued by fumbles, was a more critical judge.

"I was off all night," said McMahon. "I don't know what the problem was." But, he said, "When we had to make the big plays, we did."

The biggest play for BYU came early in the fourth quarter, after WSU had rallied from a 31-7 deficit to whittle the lead to 31-28.

Throttled the entire third quarter during WSU's three-touchdown outburst, McMahon completed a 45-yard pass to sophomore tight end Gordon Hudson on a third-and-12 from BYU's 18-yard line.

Lifetime Licenses Make Fine Christmas Gifts — Are you wondering what to give the family sportsman for Christmas? Why not give him a Christmas gift that's really special and will be appreciated for years to come — one of the lifetime hunting and fishing licenses sold by the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission.

Five different licenses are available, and are as follows:

•The lifetime adult sportsman's license includes all hunting and fishing priviledges for North Carolina and costs $300.

•A similar lifetime sportsman's license for youngsters under 12 is available for only $200.

•Lifetime hunting licenses cost $150, but include only basic hunting-license requirements. Special-use licenses, like big game tags or game-lands use permits, must still be purchased annually.

•Lifetime fishing licenses cost $150 but include only basic fishing-license requirements.

•A lifetime subscription to Wildlife in North Carolina magazine, the official monthly publication of the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, is available for only $100.

•For an additional $5, any of the lifetime sportsman's licenses may be personalized. These personalized licenses include two unique features — a special license number and a personal message. For example, a birthday could be used for the license number and the personal message could be "Merry Christmas Dad."

The lifetime sportsman's licenses for adults and the lifetime hunting and fishing licenses are sold only to residents of North Carolina. There are no residency restrictions for the lifetime sportsman's licenses for youngsters and infants.

"Funds from the sale of lifetime licenses are placed in the newly created Wildlife Endowment Fund," said Richard B. Hamilton, assistant executive director of the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission. "Only the interest from this fund is spent on wildlife conservation, and as the fund grows it will play a bigger role in supporting Wildlife Commission programs. Contributions to this fund are also accepted, and are tax-deducatable. Buying a lifetime license or making a contribution to the Wildlife Endowment Fund is really an investment in the future because the interest from the payment or donation will be used to support wildlife for future generations."

Applications for lifetime licenses and information on the Wildlife Endowment Fund are available from license agents, Wildlife Commission employees or from the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, 512 N. Salisbury St., Raleigh, N.C., or call the Wildlife Commission's 24-hour toll-free Wildlife Watch hotline at 1-800-662-7137.

Shotgun Plugs Not Needed For Small Game — Hunters do not need to used plugged shotguns for hunting small game this year, according to Wildlife Commission enforcement officials.

In the past, small-game hunters could only use shotguns capable of holding a maximum of three shells in the magazine while hunting quail, squirrel, grouse and rabbit. This provision was eliminated under the game-law revision in 1980, and hunters may now use the maximum number of shells the shotgun will hold when hunting these species. However, shotguns must still be plugged when hunting migratory birds.

"Hunters are required to use plugged shotguns limiting them to a maximum of three shots when hunting migratory birds which includes all waterfowl, doves, woodcock and snipe," said Gene Abernathy, chief of the Commission's Division of Enforcement. "These birds are protected under the federal migratory-bird statutes."

Fishing Report — Fishing has dropped off on the coast, sound and the rivers. A frew stripers are being caught in the Albemarle Sound near Mann's Harbor. For the most part fishing will be slow until February when the annual run of shad, herring and raccoon perch will begin.

Local Report — Fred Mallory of Greenville bagged a nice 8-point buck while hunting in Halifax County. Local waterfowl hunters seem to be doing well on the ducks when the weather has been rough. With the holidays upon us the woods and fields of Eastern Carolina will be full of hunters. Remember this while hunting and put safety first. Christmas is not the time for tragedies to happen.

Bears To Stall If They Have To

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

BEAR GRASS — It was not a threat. Not exactly. Bear Grass coach Jerry Rogerson just wants to make something perfectly clear — his Bears will not hestitate to stall if their opponents insist on playing a zone defense.

"I think teams will want to play zone against us because of our size and quickness, but we won't let 'em," Rogerson said. "I won't mind holding the ball until the last minute of the fourth quarter. I can take being behind 2-0 with a minute to go and a chance to win.

"But I don't think we'll have that problem," Rogerson added. "Most of the teams we play are so strong that it really won't matter. I think they'll be willing to play man-to-man."

The Bears' first three opponents — Jamesville, Columbia and Mattamuskeet — were not. That, in part, is what prompted Rogerson to embrace the stall as a tactic from which he would not shy.

Bear Grass, with no starter taller over 6-0, opened its 1981 season by losing its first three outings, all by more than 12 points. Next up for the Bears was Aurora, perhaps their toughest opponent yet.

Aurora chose to play a man-to-man against the Bears. It was not the best of moves. Bear Grass surged to a 14-point lead at the end of three quarters and then hung on for a stunning 66-64 victory.

"Our offense was the key," Rogerson said. "Our offense really stunk up the gym in the first three games. It was much better against Aurora. They decided to play us man-to-man and that got some of their big people away from the basket.

"I think that was a disadvantage for their big people. They had to come out and guard us and we've got pretty good quickness."

That quickness helped the Bears overcome their lack of height and place three players in double figures. Center Phil Peele, a 5-11 junior, led the way with 22 points. Forward Rudy Brown, a 5-11 senior, added 20 and guard Ray Biggs, a 5-8 senior, had 13.

Peele, Brown and Biggs are all returning starters off last season's 10-14 team. Brown averaged eight points a game last season, tops among the three returnees.

The Bears' other two starters — 5-10 forward Craig Gardner and 5-7 guard Greg Hadley — are up from the junior varsity. Gardner and Hadley replace Clay Gardner and William Roberson, the Bears' top two scorers of a year ago.

Bear Grass' top reserves are: juniors William Hardison, a 5-10 forward, David Price, a 5-11 forward, and seniors Benji Reddick, a 5-9 forward, and Marvin Brown, a 5-7 guard.

It is a small team and the lack of height has hurt the Bears, who are 1-5 overall and 1-4 in the conference following Friday night's game with Cape Hatteras.

"In the first two or three gmaes we were beaten badly on the boards," Rogerson said. "The teams we played, with the expection of Jamesville, have been so much bigger than we are."

The problem has only been compounded by the Bears' inablity to run their patterns correctly during the early season.

Normally, Rogerson uses a 1-4 offense against the man-to-man and a 1-3-1 against a zone. Until the Aurora game, however, neither was run to his satisfaction.

"It seems very difficult for us to get our offensive patterns down," said Rogerson, whose team averaged over 20 turnovers through its first three games. "That has really hurt us. But, I think as the season goes along we'll get better."

Mixed Doubles Tourney Set

The Greenville Recreation and Parks Department will inaugurate the New Year's Day Mixed Doubles Championships to be held January 1.

Should enough entries be received, the tournament would be extended through January 2.

The tournament will be played at the River Birch Tennis Center, and each team will play every team in its division one time. The winner of each division will then participate in the divisional playoffs. The team that win the most number of games is the winner.

The tournament is open to the public of all ages, and a $5 per team entry fee is being charged.

The deadline for applications is Tuesday, December 29, and entries should be sent to New Year's Day Tournament, Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, P.O. Box 202, Greenville, N.C. 27834. Checks should be made payable to the department.

Those players who do not have a partner may call the tennis center, 756-9343, or the Recreation and Parks Department, and efforts will be made to pair them with other unpaired players.

Prizes will be awarded to the top five teams.

All teams must be at the River Birch Tennis Center at 9 a.m. on January 1, unless otherwise notified.

Good And Bad News For Jax

By The Associated Press

Jacksonville Coach Bob Wenzel had just witnessed his basketball team score 91 points — not a bad offensive effort, by college standards. The only drawback was, he also had just seen his team lose by 16 points.

"I believe we met a little bi better team tonight," Wenzel said after the Dolphins bowed, 107-91, to second-ranked Kentucky in the first round of the Kentucky Invitational Tournament.

Wenzel and Coach Hoddy Mahon, whose unbeaten Seton Hall Pirates meet the Wildcats in the UKIT final tonight, were similarly impressed with Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall's powerhouse.

Derrick Hord scored 17 points for Kentucky, now 5-0, and six other players were in double figures as the Wildcats led 50-37 at halftime.

"It was one of our better overall efforts," the Kentucky coach said. "We didn't have a letdown in the second half. Some of the players actually played better in the second half."

Seton Hall defeated Utah State 85-77 in the other first-round game to set up a meeting of unbeaten teams.

Dan Callandrillo scored 26 points to lead Seton Hall, 6-0. The Pirates hit 16 of 24 free throw attempts in the final nine minutes, without sinking a single field goal, to beat winless Utah State.

In other games involving the ranked teams, sixth-ranked Iowa downed Clemson 80-68; No. 10 San Francisco defeated Rice 85-69; No. 16 Alabama-Birmingham whipped Southern Mississippi 71-56, and 20th-ranked Oregon State clobbered Pennsylvania 102-64.

The Top Ten

Iowa scored a relatively easy victory over Clemson, despite the absence of scoring leader Bob Hansen, to move into the final of the Kettle Classic at Houston. Kenny Arnold and Kevin Boyle filled in offensively after Hansen reinjured his left foot just before halftime. Iowa took a 46-28 at intermission, and the 6-0 Buckeyes were never really in trouble. Arnold had 15 points and Boyle 14.

Iowa meets Houston in Saturday's championship game. The Cougars, 6-1, got 23 points from Rob Williams and some key baskets from 7-foot freshman Akeem Abdul Olajuwan of Nigeria late in the game to wallop Mississippi State 96-49.

Guard Quintin Dailey scored 24 points and John Hegwood added 20 to spark undefeated San Francisco over Rice. The Dons, 6-0, took the lead for good, 18-16, on a tipin by Ken McAlister midway in th first half. Ricky Pierce scored 26 points for Rice.

Iona earned the right to meet San Francisco in the final of the tourney by beating La Salle 95-71.

Grain, Soybean Prices Fall

By PAULINE JELINEK
AP Business Writer

Most grain and soybean futures prices fell Friday in a market said to be gripped by uncertainty over what will happen in Poland.

Wheat lost the most, settling 6¼ cents to 9¼ cents lower with the contract for delivery in December at $3.72 a bushel.

The decline was the third this week attributed to fears that the United States could impose a trade embargo on the Soviet Union or on all Soviet bloc nations if the Russians move into Poland. Prices had recovered a little Wednesday and Thursday partly on buying by price chart watchers.

"But now we are at the weekend, with no new bullish news coming up and those who bought on charts may not be willing to stay in the market," one source at the exchange said. "Things could explode over the weekend. Poland is still overhanging the market."

Corn prices fell, with December at $2.49¾ a bushel; oats were mixed with December at $2.01½ a bushel.

Cattle futures on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange settled mixed. Traders were said to be expecting live animals at terminals and dressed beef to bring higher prices next week.

Pork belly futures fell as traders positioned themselves for the U.S Agriculture Department's monthly cold storage report. The report, released after the close of trading, showed the amount of warehoused frozen pork bellies was sharply higher in November than the previous month but sharply lower than year ago.

Precious metals prices fell. Failure of the metals to rally in spite of the turmoil in Poland prompted much of the selling, analysts said.

They said the Soviet Union continued to sell gold as it has done through the recent runup in prices. Traders have been guessing for a couple of weeks that the Soviets were selling larger-than-normal amounts of gold this year because a disappointing grain crop will force them to raise more money for imports. Some also have said the Soviets may want the money to bolster defense funds, possibly for an intervention of Poland.

"I believe the Russians just have a lot of gold to sell and they are using this (rally in sessions earlier this week) as an opportunity to sell it," said Len Alpert, trader with Merrill Lynch Commodities in Greenwich, Conn.

He said other activity Friday came from people who wanted to square their books in advance of the holidays.

Copper sold off largely for technical reasons, that is, based on analysis of price trend charts, volume and similar market factors.

Frozen concentrate orange juice prices turned back, losing most of what they gained Thursday amid predictions that a damaging freeze could hit Florida citrus groves this weekend.

January-delivery juice fell 4.10 cents to 125.60 cents a pound.

East Federal Has Some Good News For You!

IRA (Individual Retirement Account)

Beginning January 1, 1982, you'll be eligible for a tax-deferred IRA (Individual Retirement Account) even if you're already covered under any pension plan. This means you can now make retirement even more attractive than ever.

With an IRA account, you can now set aside as much as $2,000 (up to $2,250 with a non-working spouse) or 100% of your income, whichever is less. If both you and your spouse are working, you each qualify for the maximum. Your IRA savings will earn a high yield rate, and you don't pay any tax until you begin withdrawing your money after retirement. By then, you'll likely be in a lower tax bracket.

You can open your IRA anytime before age 70½. But to qualify for the current tax year, you must set up your account prior to your income tax return deadline (including extensions). Start early, because every IRA contribution, no matter how small, means a more secure retirement for you.

KEOGH and SEP (Simplified Employee Pension)

Like IRA, Keogh and SEP (Simplified Employee Pension) have been improved. Tax deferred contribution limits on both plans have been increased to $15,000 or 15% of your income, whichever is less. Keogh is designed for self-employed persons who are not incorporated, while SEP can be set up by an employer according to IRS guidelines.

Find out how to make the most of retirement. Call East Federal soon and ask about the new tax break on retirement savings.

Your East Federal Retirement Account is insured up to $100,000 by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, an agency of the U.S. Government.

Israel Reacts Sharply To U.S. Suspension Of Strategic Alliance

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Defense Minister Ariel Sharon said Saturday that America's suspension of its strategic alliance with the Jewish state struck at the "heart of Israel's national security."

It was Israel's first official reaction to the suspension announced Friday in retaliation for Israel's annexation of the Golan Heights.

Later Saturday, 5,000 Israelis protesting the annexation, passed Monday by Israel's Parliament, gathered in a central Tel Aviv square, Israel Radio said.

The demonstrators carried placards reading, "Zionism yes, annexation no" and "We are not living in South America, stop the dictatorship now."

Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Cabinet was to discuss the U.S. suspension during its regular Sunday meeting, Israel Radio said. It said Begin was also scheduled to meet with U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis to discuss the suspension of the agreement signed Nov. 30. No date was given for the meeting.

In a radio interview Saturday, Sharon said the U.S. measure was "bound to raise doubts and tough questions about the United States' credibility in the framework of international treaties."

He said these doubts extended to concern over the American commitment to the Camp David peace accords between Israel and Egypt.

In a sharp attack leveled during an Israel Television interview, Sharon called the Washington action "uncontrolled ... and out of proportion."

The television also reported that several Cabinet ministers were displeased with Sharon's statements, fearing they would worsen relations between Israel and the United States.

Defense circles were quoted earlier as saying that the strategic alliance memorandum dealt only with confronting a threat from the Soviet Union and did not obligate Israel to consult with the United States on actions against Arab states.

"Here is a new attempt to strike at the heart of Israel's national security by suspending defense-related activities," Sharon said.

The United States was showing its displeasure by holding off on buying $200 million worth of Israeli-made armaments, forbidding Israel from selling arms with American components to other countries, and turning down an Israeli request to pay back some U.S. loans in Israeli currency instead of dollars, Israel Radio said.

Sharon said the United States should not have been surprised by the annexation, since the Israeli government, in its platform, had committed itself to the principle of taking over the 458-mile plateau captured from Syria in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

"The only room for surprise was in the timing," Sharon said.

Syria was reportedly pleased with the U.S. suspension. Israel radio quoted foreign news agencies in Damascus as saying government officials believed the United States was "taking an important turn for the Arabs," by voting for a U.N. Security Council resolution on Thursday that declared the annexation "null and void."

Meanwhile, Arabs on the Golan Heights continued their commercial and labor strike for the fourth day to protest the annexation.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak said Saturday that the U.S. action is "an encouraging sign" in the search for a Middle East peace settlement.

"We hope to reach a logical solution of the problems arising from Israel's annexation of the Golan Heights and we hope the tensions will not escalate further," Mubarak said in remarks broadcast by Cairo Radio.

The British Empire's first flight of a heavier-than-air machine under its own power was made in 1909. The plane, the Silver Dart, was piloted by John A.D. McCurdy of Baddeck, Nova Scotia.

A CANDLE TABLE ... in Janet McGlohon's living room shows the gold wire framed reading glasses that belonged to her great-great-grandmother atop a pocket Bible that her father used as a child.

Christmas Keepsakes Symbolize Feelings

By PATRICIA M. MOORE

Although the table is no more than 10 inches wide, it holds generations of keepsakes that are a part of the McGlohon's celebration of Christmas.

The little gold-framed eyeglasses belonged to Mrs. McGlohon's great-great-grandmother and most of the year they repose in a cabinet. The pocket Bible, its cloth cover now slightly tattered from years of use, is opened to the Christmas story. The Bible is the one her father took to school as a child and that he signed in his child's hand in 1923.

The wooden picture of the Madonna and child was given to Mrs. McGlohon when she taught kindergarten at St. Paul's Episcopal Church years ago, with the understanding that when she retired as a teacher, the wooden picture was hers to take home.

The spectacles, the Bible and the Madonna and child are keepsakes — things that Mrs. McGlohon has kept as treasured mementos. Ordinarily, the eyeglasses and the pocket Bible would not be considered Christmas decorations, yet Mrs. McGlohon has found a way to make then a meaningful part of this special season.

Like many other people, she has used her keepsakes to symbolize feelings and to preserve memories that people seldom find the right words to describe. Somehow, Christmas would not be the same without them.

If you look carefully as you visit Greenville families during the holidays, you will notice that they, like Mrs. McGlohon, have found unique ways to incorporate keepsakes into their decorating schemes.

At Norwood and Jeanette Whitehurst's home, several pairs of brides and bridegroms dressed in white and green net are attached to the tree branches. A silver bell hangs nearby. However, none of these were purchased as tree ornaments. Originally they were table decorations from pre-nuptial parties for the couple some 20 years ago. Like most brides, Mrs. Whitehurst saved her mementos, but instead of keeping them in a box intermittently to be rediscovered when she sorted through the things in her storeroom, she made them a part of her Christmas decorating and, in so doing, incorporated wedding bliss into the season of joy.

Margaret Clark also has preserved wedding memories and family ties in her Christmas customs. The white Bible that she opens to the Christmas story was the one that belonged to her mother and that she carried as the bride of James W. Clark Jr. bride 34 years ago.

The Bible that Sherry Carter places on a table and opens to the Christmas story belonged to Charles Carter's grandfather, who was a Baptist minister. It is from this book that her family reads the nativity story.

On a nearby mantel is a stand-up antique Christmas card depicting an old-fashioned Santa. Mrs. Carter received it when she was about 3 years old. To her, Christmas would not be the same without these mementos from the past.

Every Christmas Julie Hicks places the book, "The Littlest Angel," on her coffee table. It is a memento from her childhood days which she recalls when she takes time out from the holiday rush to sit and re-read her old favorite.

A three-piece cookie jar and her husband's boyhood stocking are part of Christmas at Mary Hannah Taft's house. The stocking that Bill III now hangs from the chimney is the same one that his father used as a child.

The ceramic Santa Claus cookie jar has special significance for Mrs. Taft because her mother made it and fired it as a gift for Hannah Taft when she was 3 years old and because it is unique. It portrays Santa sitting on a barrel at a secretary holding Hannah's "want" list and the names of good boys and girls. The list includes a Barbie doll, piano, tea set, doll carriage, books and what many little girls want but little boys usually get — a fire truck.

The good girls and boys Santa is asked to remember are Hannah's childhood neighbors Tori Clement and David McGowan as well as her sister Ruth.

The second part of the jar is Santa's hat and the third piece is a container for switches for bad boys and girls. Did Mrs.Taft ever put switches in the container? "No," she laughs, "We never had any naughty children around the house at Christmastime."

Christmas keepsakes at Gloria and Ed Tipton's house take a different form. The most unique one is a cookie cutter tree which sits atop a kitchen counter. Each year Mrs. Tipton selects a branch from a bush, such as pyracantha, and hangs on it her assortment of cookie cutters, some of which belonged to her grandmother. Her three children add the finishing touches by stringing garlands of popcorn and weaving them around the branches.

Christmas keepsakes come in other ways, too. Many Greenville women have collected tree ornaments that they intend to pass on to their children. Each year they buy one new ornament for every child in the family with the understanding that when the children become adults, they will take them into their own homes to be used there. Sometimes these ornaments are purchased as souvenirs from family trips, which adds to their significance. Another type of keepsake ornament is the child's school picture which is framed and hung on the tree.

Even the Christmas tree itself can become a permanent keepsake if you have a hobby like George Hocutt's. After his tree has dried out, he cuts off the branches and the bark and then makes it into a walking cane.

But no matter what form Christmas keepsakes assume, they share one thing in common: they are an individual's way of symbolizing the significance of the Christmas season. For the owner, they represent all the feelings and memories contained in the words, "Merry Christmas.

International UNC-G Students Tell Of Yuletide Customs

GREENSBORO — In Portugal, children anticipate the arrival of Pai Natal to come and bring them presents.

Children in the French quarters of Belgium go to bed early on Reveillon Night so Papa Nicolas can visit and place gifts around a tree trimmed with real candles.

The people of Colombia, South America, have no need of chimneys or fire places so Nino Dios slips in quietly through the front door while good little children sleep to place toys on the foot of their beds.

In many ways, Christmas is the same in almost every corner of the world. At the same time, however, some yuletide celebrations in foreign countries may seem strange to Americans.

One common Christmas tradition — family gatherings — holds particular significance for nearly 100 students from foreign countries who reside in the International House at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. Despite the distances involved, many of the students will be going to their homes to celebrate Christmas by their own customs.

Some of the students discussed the traditions of Christmas festivities in their native countries recently as they prepared to leave the UNC-G campus for the Christmas break.

Leida Capella, a junior nursing major from Aguadilla, Puerto Rico, said that she has already missed the beginning of the season's festivities which began in mid-November.

"At home they began going around singing parrandas, or Christmas carols, around the middle of November and this will continue until Ano Nuevo (New Year's Day)," she said.

"Navidad, our name for Christmas, comes on Dec. 25 just like in America, but we celebrate the season right up to Three Kings Day on Jan. 6," she explained. "That is the day we believe the three kings arrived to see the baby, Jesus, in Bethlehem."

On the eve of Three Kings Day, Puerto Rican children make little bundles of grass for the three kings' camels and leave the bundles beside the door. The following morning the bundles of grass are gone and a small gift is left where the grass was, according to Miss Capella.

Toshikazu Kishi, a senior business administration major at UNC-G, will go home to Nagoya, Japan, for the first time in two years this Christmas. Even though many of the Japanese do not know about Christianity, they celebrate Christmas with much the same high festivities as Americans do.

"As far as Christmas is concerned, Japan has adopted much of the holiday traditions from American influences during the last 10 years," Kishi explained. "Christmas is even becoming very commercial in Japan.

"Now we have Christmas trees and family gatherings on Dec. 25 and we go to lots of parties," he added. "It is a very festive occasion and we have lots of fun."

In Portugal, the traditional Christmas dinner includes codfish and sweet rice rather than ham or turkey, according to Luis Dos Santos, a UNC-G freshman from Lisbon.

"We do have a tree decorated with lights, but traditionally, we open our presents at midnight on Christmas Eve," he said. "After we open the gifts, we have a big Christmas dinner and while we are eating in the dining room, Pai Natal (Santa Claus) sneaks into the living room and leaves toys for the children."

Although Mary Lou Wiesendanger will spend Christmas in North Carolina, she will celebrate Christmas in the traditional way of her father who was raised in Switzerland.

Miss Wiesendanger was born in Japan, lived the next three years in Puerto Rico and then moved to Belgium for 14 years before coming to the United States.

"Our celebration is fairly religious," pointed out Miss Wiesendanger, a freshman anthropology major at UNC-G. "We usually stay home, have a traditional Christmas meal of barley soup, ham and Christmas cookies, and then we light candles.

"We don't have a Santa Claus, but we do have a Papa Nicolas," she added. "Papa Nicolas is not a fat, jolly man in a red suit, though. He is a tall, authoritarian who wears a brightly decorated robe and a cone-shaped hat, but he is the one who brings presents on Christmas."

In Cali, Colombia, residents generally will put up a Christmas tree, but there the Pesebre is the big thing, according to Margarita Moncada, a senior business and economics major at UNC-G.

"A Pesebre is a scene of the town of Bethlehem," she said. "We build little houses and roads and at the top of the hill we build the stable where the baby, Jesus, was born.

"Eight days before Christmas, we begin reading a book about Mary and Joseph and each night we follow their journey to Bethlehem," Miss Moncada explained. "On Christmas morning we place the baby, Jesus, in the manger and we sing villancicos, or Christmas carols. The whole family gets involved with the building of the Pesebre and it's usually four or five feet tall."

In Stockholm, Sweden, the people celebrate Christmas by dressing in white robes and walking in a processional around town holding candles and singing Christmas songs, according to Annica Skoglund, a sophomore majoring in mathematics at UNC-G.

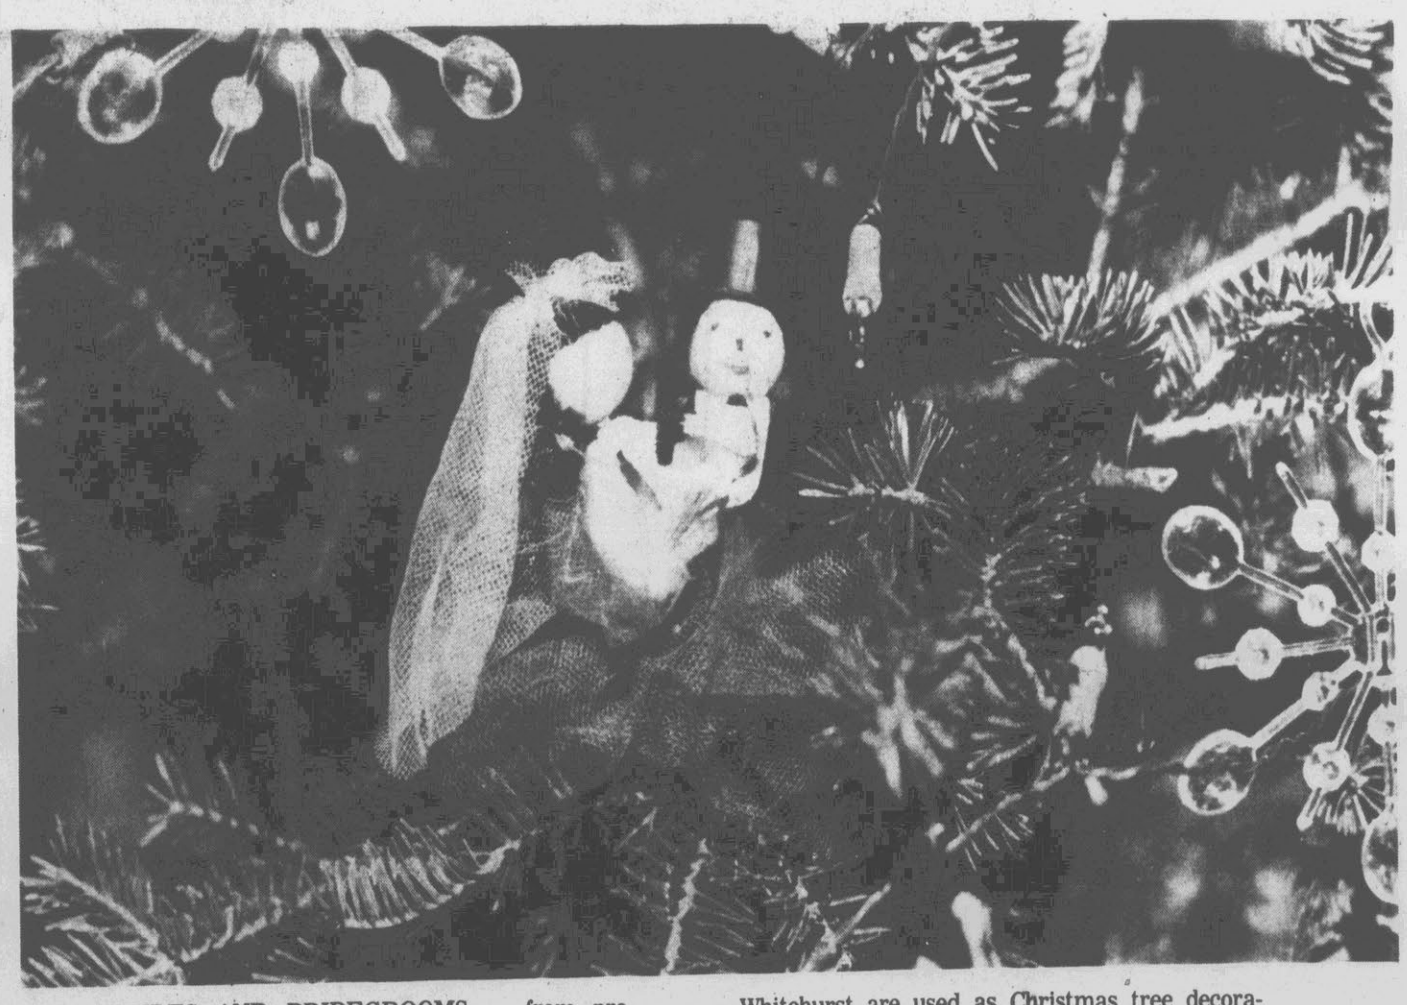

"Jultomten (Santa Claus) comes on Christmas Eve, and on Christmas morning we all go to church and the roads are all lined with luminaries," she explained.

Even in India, where only three percent of the seven million people are Christians, Christmas is widely celebrated and called Diwali, said Nikhil Dembla, a freshman math major from Bombay.

"Although we are Hindu ourselves, my mother's brother married an English wife, and that is why we celebrate Christmas," she said. "But many people in India enjoy the festivities of Christmas, too.

"Like in America, we exchange gifts and light candles and you can hear people shooting firecrackers all over," he added. "When it comes to religion, we do not have much prejudice in India."

The International House, a dormitory for students from foreign countries at UNC-G, houses approximately 100 students from 18 different countries. Established in 1968, the residence hall is a nucleus for international activities on the UNC-G campus with the primary purpose of promoting interest and understanding in the study of foreign languages, cultures and ideas.

Miss Hulsey, Mr. Brown Say Vows

WINSTON-SALEM — Beth Peters Hulsey and Jeffrey Stephen Brown were united in marriage Saturday at 3 p.m. in the Salem Baptist Church here. The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Frank Hartwig.

MRS. JEFFREY STEPHEN BROWN

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilmer Lamar Hulsey of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sherl Brown Jr. of Winston-Salem.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a candlelight satin gown by Priscilla of Boston. It featured a sweetheart nekline and empire waistline. The bodice was enhanced by French alencon lace and the fitted sleeves were made of English netting and appliqued in French alencon lace. The full A-line skirt was edged at the hemline with French alencon lace and a design of the lace was featured on the front of the skirt, which extended into a semi-cathedral train. She chose a full cathedral length candlelight veil of bridal illusion attached to a satin Juliet cap. The cap was appliqued in French alencon lace with a design in the back that matched the one on the front of the gown. She carried a cascade bouquet of white roses centered with white poinsettias and trimmed with holly. She wore pearls belonging to her mother.

The bridesmaids, Karen Watts of Martinsville, Va. and Dona Kinter of Winston-Salem wore dresses identical to that of the matron of honor.

Sherl Brown Jr. was the best man and ushers included Mitchell Brown, brother of the bridegroom, and Steve Bond, both of Winston-Salem.

A program of wedding music was presented by Vicki Masting, organist, Janet Shoah, pianist, and soloists, Karen Watts and Wanda Cook. They performed "Sweet Adoration" and "That's the Way."

Mrs. David Thokey held a bridesmaids' luncheon and a rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents both on Friday.

The bride, a graduate of Piedmont Bible College, is employed by Rosemont Baptist School here. The bridegroom, a graduate of Stanley Technical College in Albemarle, is a respiratory therapist at Community General Hospital in Thomasville.

After a wedding trip to Williamsburg, Va., the couple will reside in Winston-Salem.

Wedding Vows Exchanged

CHAPEL HILL — June Celeste Hall and William Michael McDermott exchanged marriage vows here Saturday at 2 p.m. The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Daniel J. Riggall at Chapel of the Cross here.

The bride is the daughter of Jennie B. Hall of Winterville and the late Lt. Col. Robert V. Hall. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George M. McDermott of Sanford.

Given in marriage by their parents and escorted by her brother, Robert V. Hall Jr., the bride wore a formal gown of candlelight satin. The empire bodice featured a Queen Anne neckline overlaid in re-embroidered alencon lace. The lace was embellished in seed pearls and crystal beads. The long fitted traditional sleeves had cutwork appliques in the lace. A semi-fitted full skirt had a pyramid design of lace and the hemline was bordered in scalloped lace. The skirt extended into a full chapel train. The gown was complemented by a waltz length mantilla bordered with alencon and Brussels lace. She carried a bouquet of white orchids and variegated ivy.

The maid of honor was Jane C. Hall, twin sister of the bride of Chapel Hill. Bridesmaids were Linda H. Falushy, sister of the bride of Cape Canaveral, Fla., and Mary Barbara McDermott, sister of the bridegroom of Chapel Hill.

The bridal attendants wore formal gowns of teal qiana with full length skirts. The dropped bodice featured spaghetti straps and a cape of matching chiffon. The cape featured hand paintings in white and orchid and a ruffle of teal chiffon at the neckline. They each carried a long-stemmed white rose.

The mother of the bride wore a floor length formal gown of seafoam chiffon. The mother of the bridegroom wore a floor length formal gown of violet chiffon.

The ushers included Kyle McDermott, brother of the bridegroom of Chester, S.C., Rich McDermott, brother of the bridegroom of Pinehurst and Robert Hall Jr. of Durham. The best man was George M. McDermott.

The reception table was decorated with white poinsettias and brass candelabra. Mr. and Mrs. Abbott Hunsucker attended the guest register. Assisting at the reception were Frances Blackburn, cousin of the bride, Betsy Briley, Denise Godwin, Beth McKiver and Robbin Dorrier.

An afte-rehersal dinner and cocktail party was held at the Carolina Inn in Chapel Hill Friday. The bridal party and out-of-town guests attended.

After a wedding trip to St. Thomas, the couple will reside in Chapel Hill.

The bride received a B.S. in pharmacy from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and did a residency in hospital pharmacy at the Duke University Medical Center. She is currently associate director for pharmacy at the Eastern Area Health Education Center, Greenville and clinical instructor at the UNC School of Pharmacy in Chapel Hill.

The bridegroom, who has a B.S. in biology from UNC-CH, is presently a second year dental student at UNC-CH.

Susan Smith Weds Timothy H. Beasley

MRS. TIMOTHY HARLEY BEASLEY

Susan Annette Smith and Timothy Harley Beasley exchanged wedding vows Saturday afternoon at two o'clock in a ceremony performed in the chapel of Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Scott Smith of Greenville, the bride was given in marriage by her father. Her sister, Lisa Smith of Greenville, was honor attendant and bridesmaids included Penny Buck, Suzanne McGee and Lori Braxton, all of Greenville.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Williams of Fayetteville and Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Beasley of Columbia, S.C.

Gary Beasley of Savannah, Ga. was best man for his brother and ushers included Jim Owens of Greenville, Edmond Pruden and Coy Domeco, both of Merry Hill.

A program of organ music was presented by Frances Cain.

The bride chose for her wedding, a formal gown of white French chantilly lace and Venise lace over peau de soie. Her gown was fashioned with a fitted empire bodice designed with a wedding ring neckline and sheer V-yoke accented with a crystal pleated ruffle and long tapered sleeves. Venise lace trimmed the neckline, sleeves and circled the empire waistline. The A-line lace skirt flowed into a chapel train. The bride wore a matching veil of imported silk illusion edged with Venise lace and attached to a band of Venise lace. Her flowers were a silk cascade including pink roses with white and burgundy accents.

The honor attendant and bridesmaids each wore a formal gown of mauve rose styled with an elasticized waistline and front and back V-neckline. It had spaghetti ties at the shoulder with a sheer cape in matching color which draped over the shoulders. The waistline was accented with a mauve belt. They each carried a burgundy silk rose accented with baby's breath and streamers.

The mother of the bride selected a wine colored formal gown accented with a corsage of silk flowers. The mother of the bridegroom wore an aqua formal gown complemented with a corsage of silk flowers. The stepmother of the bridegroom was remembered with a white carnation.

The bride is a student at East Carolina University and works part-time at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The bridegroom is a graduate of East Carolina University with a B.S.B.A. degree with concentration in accounting.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to Boone.

Couple Marries Saturday In Williamston

WILLIAMSTON — Miss Sonia Winston Davis and Steven Oakley Fuller were united in marriage Saturday afternoon in the First United Methodist Church here. The Rev. Herbert Charles Davis, father of the bride, officiated.

The bride is the daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Davis of Williamston. Mr. and Mrs. Hartwell H. Fuller Sr. of Pinetops are parents of the bridegroom.

Mrs. Charley Hopkins of Williamston, organist, and Miss Alice Cobb of Pinetops provided the wedding music.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white chiffon with a Victorian neckline of point p'esprit accented with Venise lace and seed pearls. Bishop sleeves of point d'esprit and chiffon fell to a cuff of lace. The hemline, brushed with Venise lace, fell to a chapel length train. A walking length veil of bridal illusion fell from a cap of Venise lace and seed pearls. The veil was edged in matching lace. The bride carried a semi-cascade colonial bouquet of pink sweetheart roses, white and fuschia miniature carnations accented by gypsophilia with picot satin streamers.

Suzanne Coker of Pinetops was maid of honor and wore a gown with shirring detail in huckleberry. She carried a long-stemmed bridal pink rosebud with gypsophilia and pink satin streamers.

Matrons of honor were Frances Davis Johnson of Wilson and Martha Davis Cobb of Tarboro, sisters of the bride. Bridesmaids were Cecelia Williams of Havelock and Judy Fuller Van Male of Pinetops, sister of the bridegroom. They wore dresses like those of the honor attendants.

Dr. Hartwell Fuller Jr. served as his brother's best man.

Immediately following the ceremony, the Rev. and Mrs. Davis hosted a reception in the church social hall.

Serving punch was Mrs. Alvin Reavis and Mrs. Larry Reavis. The wedding cake was served by Mrs. Evelyn Morse. Mrs. Ellen Thigpen served as reception director.

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher Harris said the good-byes.

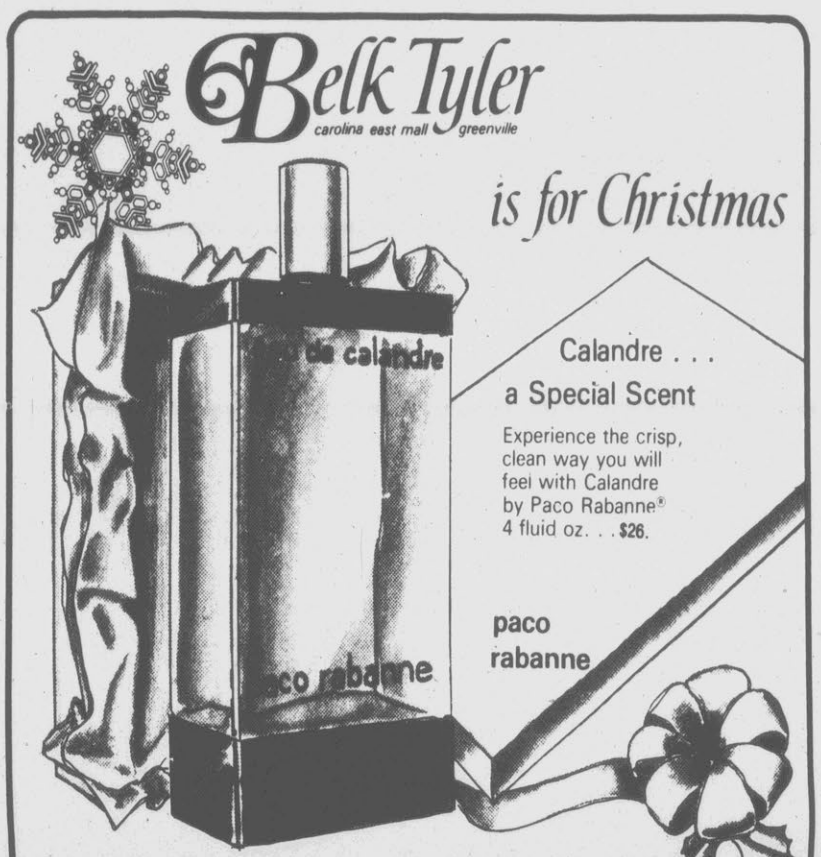

Mrs. Fuller is a junior at East Carolina University majoring in home management and design. Mr. Fuller is a graduate of East Carolina University and is an accountant with the Carolina Telephone Co.

After a wedding trip to Williamsburg, Va. the couple will reside in Greenville.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I was unpacking the Christmas decorations this week when I came across a pie tin with a picture of the Blessed Virgin pasted inside dangling from a soiled ribbon.

The ornament is pitiful. It is usually the first decoration put on the tree every year by my older son, who knocks you into the fireplace, steps on your knees and physically races you to the tree to get it on first. He made it in the third grade.

This is the first Christmas he will not spend with us in 26 years.

I always knew how I got three children, but I never knew why. (I used to tell people it was a 4-H project that got out of hand.)

I was frustrated by children. They didn't come with any instructions. You had to fumble around and try to get them aSsembled and working the best way you could. And what worked for one never worked with the other one. They were all different.

I was confused by my job. Was I supposed to serve as a buffer between them and the sidewalk? Them and disappointment? Them and failure? How close was I supposed to get? How far did I dare fall behind?

I was ultimately angered by the whole process. They were telling me that as soon as I got their teeth straightened, their hernias repaired, their bodies packed with vitamins, taught 'em to parallel park, wipe their feet, put down lids, flush, feed themselves and make their own beds, I should back off?

For the last ten years I've been "doing all the right things." I've given them room to breathe, I've smiled in all the right places. I've swallowed advice that lodged in my throat like a lump. I've resisted spreading guilt, of which I have an abundance.

When my son set off with a backpack several months ago to see the world and aaid, "Don't worry," I shrugged and said, "Who, me? Don't be ridiculous. Worry makes you retain water."

As a 1980s mother who believes her children should develop independence and live their own lives in their own way, I have but two questions:

If we're all doing the right thing why do I feel so rotten?

MRS. JAMES WILLIAM JOHNSTON III

Miss Cheatham Speaks Vows

STATESVILLE — Mr. and Mrs. James Theodore Cheatham III of Greenville announce the marriage of their daughter, Brenning Marie, to James William Johnston III Saturday at Trinity Episcopal Church here.

The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. James William Johnston Jr. of Statesville and the late Mr. Johnston.

The ceremony took place at 12 o'clock with the Rev. Joel Thompson Keyes officiating.

Mr. Cheatham gave his daughter in marriage. Mary Eccles Cheatham, sister of the bride, served as maid of honor. Royal Randolph Smith Johnston, brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnston will reside in Statesville.

APPLE PUDDING

Our no-fail version of a famous Scandinavian dessert.

½ cup (4-ounce stick) butter
1 cup fine zwieback crumbs
½ cup fine honey graham cracker crumbs
2 cups canned sweetened applesauce
½ teaspoon cinnamon
Grated rind of 1 lemon (1 teaspoon)
Topping: Sweetened whipped cream or vanilla sauce

In an 8-inch skillet over low heat melt the butter; add the zwieback and graham cracker crumbs; stir to coat the crumbs with butter. In a small bowl stir together the apple sauce, cinnamon and lemon rind. Spread 1-3rd of the crumb mixture in a buttered 4- or 5-cup souffle dish or casserole; add ½ of the apple sauce mixture; spread with another 1-3rd of the crumbs and top with the remaining apple sauce and then the remaining crumbs. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until browned — 30 minutes. Serve warm with one of the Toppings. Makes 6 servings.

Storyteller Jackie Torrence Revives Art

By NINA MIKKELSON

On stage she wears a wooden medallion, presented by Hausa tribesmen. The five-pointed star at the center signifies her title: Keeper of History — Weaver of Fantasy.

Her annual appearances these days number 600. Her calandar is filled through 1984. She has performed in 39 states, in Canada and Mexico. Recently she was invited to Sweden. Her videotapes are played in Russia.

She conducts yearly seminars for the National School of Storytelling, Jonesboro, Tenn. This summer she will participate in the International Children's Literature Conference at the World's Fair in Knoxville. She is paid hundreds of dollars for her 90-minute concert performances and thousands for her week-long visits to school systems in the nation.

Yet things have not always looked so rosy for Jackie Torrence, nationally acclaimed storyteller and spokesperson for the ancient art.

Twelve years ago, at the age of 24, she left the settled existence of a minister's wife to strike out alone, even though she had no job prospects and was expecting a baby. Having been influenced by both a very independent grandmother and aunt, she found it impossible to accept the role of independent housewife.

Two years of college, however, had not prepared her for the best jobs; and she soon found herself washing dishes for a living. Other odd jobs followed and then one day, several years later, having acquired a job in the High Point Public Library, she found herself unexpectantly in charge of a children's storyhour. Unprepared to read a story, she decided to tell one instead.

The children were amazed that anyone could tell a story without using a book, but Jackie Torrence had grown up in a home filled with storytellers. In Salisbury, she had heard Indian tales from her grandmother and Afro-American tales from both of her grandparents. Her great uncle had told stories, accompanying himself with the guitar. Her cousins, she says, had always told side-splitting stories. Now, it seemed, she was a storyteller, too, and apparantly a talented one, for busloads of children were soon appearing for her library storyhours.

Eventually she received an invitation to participate in the National Storytelling Festival, Jonesboro, Tenn., and once there, she made an important discovery. Not all storytelling was taking place in libraries. Many of those who loved telling stories were supporting themselves as professional storytellers, traveling from place to place to share their talents. Jackie Torrence made up her mind to take the same route.

She had heard many Uncle Remus stories as a child. She had also created stories of her own through the years. Fifteen stories about an old man, Henry, and his wife, Elvira, were spun out of the mere glimpse she had one summer of an old man in a mule driven wagon calling out "Rags!" She began to enlarge her collection of tales by listening to the stories of others like the Appalachian friend, a man who makes dulcimers, who sat one day, for seven hors, rubbing wood of his instruments and telling her his stories. She heard a great many North Carolina legends and ghost stories, and of all the stories she tells today, these are her favorites.

"I have a friend called Tillie," says Mrs. Torrence as she begins one of her "scary" tales; and within moments her audience is caught up in the delemma of Tillie, all alone in her little upstairs room, listening to the raspy voice that whispers, "I am on the seventh step, Tillie," and "I am on the sixth step," as It climbs closer and closer to Tillie.

Should children be protected from frightening experiences in stories? Jackie is inevitably asked. "No," she replies. "Children who are exposed to ghost stories or the ugliness of Grimm have bad dreams sometimes, but they also need to rid themselves of those bad dreams as children in order to walk through the dark as normal adults. When children don't hear these things, they become preoccupied with them."

"Buried Alive," is the title of another one of her favorite North Carolina tales. She heard it from an old woman from Asheville, she says, and she has filmed it for a forthcoming CBS Unitel Special for adults. She often uses it to close a concert, as she did Dec. 11 in Kinston.

"It's a good story," she tells her audience. What gives this particular story its strength, however, is the way Mrs. Torrence conveys her emotions of a child who has seen her mother buried alive. How does Jackie Torrence achieve those special touches of gesture, expression and voice modulation that keep both children and adults spellbound?

"First," she says, "the story must be one that I like. I try to find pictures of the character in my mind that I want to pass on to the listener. And then I practice — on the road, in motel rooms, in the shower — everywhere."

Her rehearsal of animal howls has sent motel owners prowling after real dogs. Her Uncle Remus snake-hisses hane caused Russian members of the audience to cringe in fear (but later sent them scurrying through American bookstores to purchase Black folktale collections.)

"It is the Uncle Remus stories that the audiences find the most entertaining," says Jackie Torrnce. "And these stories must not be overlooked today." She pre-

Wedding Vows Said

CHOCOWINITY — Robin Lou Chandler and David Brian Temple were united in marriage Saturday at 2 p.m. in the First Baptist Church here. The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Robert Jordan.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Doyle Chandler of Vanceboro. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Temple of Hillsborough.

Floral baskets of dried fall flowers, deertails and burgundy and dusty rose silk roses adorned the church sanctuary. Matching candle arrangements were placed on the altar rails and flanked the communion table.

MRS. DAVID BRIAN TEMPLE

Wedding guests were greeted at the register by Mrs. Julia Brown of Vanceboro. The wedding was directed by Mrs. Elaine Umphlett of Farmville.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a formal white gown of sheerganza and alencon lace. The gown was styled with a square neckline encrusted with pearls, empire waist and long fitted sleeves which closed with side sheerganza ruffles. The flowing A-line skirt featured elongated lace appliques which accented the skirt from the waist to the hem. A sheerganza ruffle, accented with lace, trimmed the hemline which flowed into an attached chapel train. Her two tier tulle veil with chantilly lace and pearls complemented her bridal gown. She carried a cascading bridal bouquet of burgundy and dusty rose silk roses, accented with dusty rose baby's breath, pink lace and white lace ribbons.

The honor attendant, Lisa Hedgepeth of Greenville, wore a burgundy dress with a dusty pink cape accenting the bodice of her A-line skirt. She carried a nosegay of dusty pink and burgundy silk roses. Bridesmaids included Kaye Brown and Darlene Brown of Vanceboro. Susan Brown of Vanceboro was the junior bridesmaid. They wore dresses of dusty rose with burgundy lace capes. The flower girl, Meredith Lancaster of Vanceboro, wore a white and pink floor length dress and carried a basket of burgundy and dusty rose silk roses.

The best man was the father of the bridegroom. Ushers included Todd Riley, cousin of the bridegroom, Chuck Parrish, both of Hillsborough, and Kenneth Chandler, brother of the bride of Vanceboro. John Ian Farias of Vanceboro was the ring bearer.

A program of wedding music was provided by June Arnold, organist, and Melinda Peadon, soloist, who performed "The Wedding Song" and "We've Only Just Begun."

A reception was held at the home of the bride. Guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Gray Lancaster and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Peoples. The wedding cake was served by Elaine Umphlett and punch was served by Grace Peoples. Wedding scrolls were passes out by Maurey Umphlett. Rice packets were given out by Daniel Temple, brother of the bridegroom, and Susan Brown.

An after-rehearsal dinner was given by Mr. and Mrs. Carl Peoples at the Holiday Inn, Greenville, Friday evening.

After a wedding trip to unannounced points, the couple will reside in Burlington.

The bridegroom graduated from Orange High School and is a student at Elon College. He is currently employeed by the "Greensboro Daily News." The bride graduated from Greenville Christian Academy and attended East Carolina University. She will attend the Technical College of Alamance.

Storyteller...

fers William J. Faulkner's black folk tale collection to the dialect-burdened stories of Joel Chandler Harris. "Don't woory about dialect," she says. "Just tell the tales. Tell them to your children. America is a gigantic melting pot of many cultures, but we have very little culture of our own. Slavery is a part of the American culture. Why should we hide it? Black folk tales are both a part of the black and white culture.

"For a long time," she continues, "all we had was storytelling — around the fireplace, at the neighbor's house, over the radio. Then came television and we didn't have to imagine anymore — we could see. But in the mountains, people were still listening to stories; and then, 10 years ago, the world of storytelling came back to us."

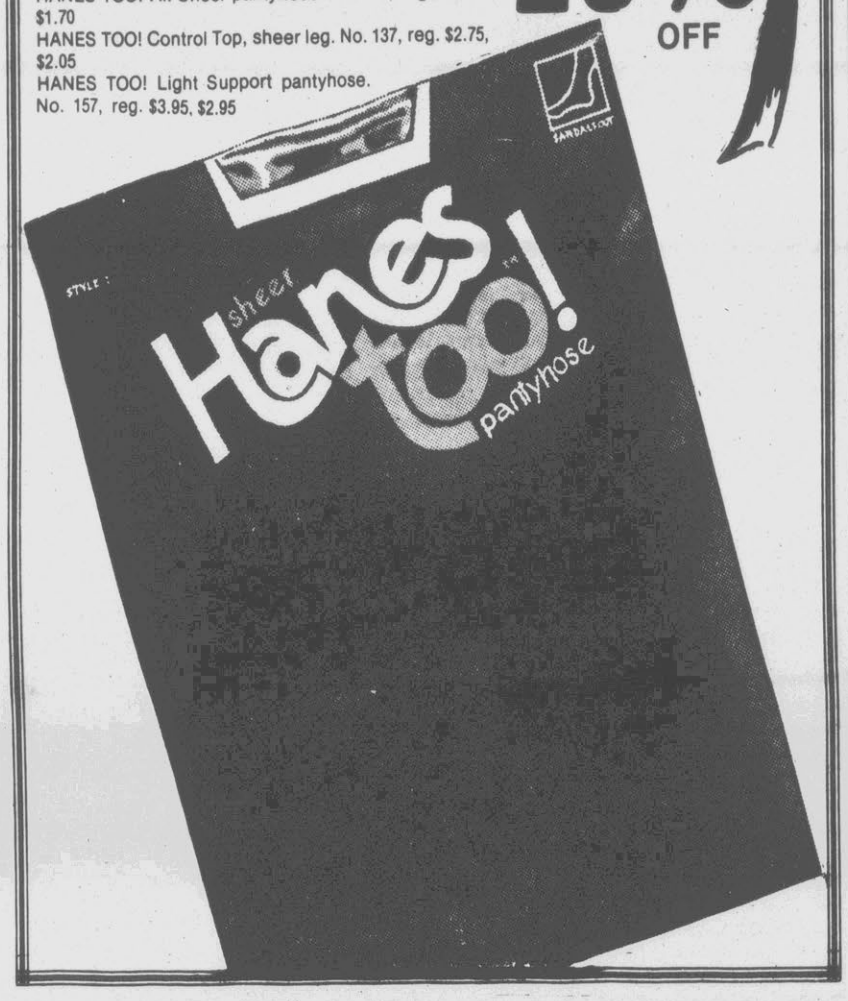

Following the folk arts renaissance that emerged in the '60s, with the rejection of materialism and the adoption of more natural lifestyles, organizations such as the National School of Storytellers were formed. National Storytelling Festivals became popular and, says Jackie, "Librarians started putting down their books and telling stories." Yet, she adds, "Children today still don't know enough about stories. They know about TV instead."

Thus it is that Jackie Torrence is now lending her talents to the television industry in order to reach more young people, as well as more adults. She has recently taped an ABC Special for the series, "Kids Are People, Too," to be aired Feb. 14 at 7 a.m. The topic is "Ghost Stories," and those who tune in will see why Jackie Torrence is no longer washing dishes today. They will also see why more people are listening to stories.

MAC HARRIS

THELMA WHITEHURST

Realtors Install 1982 Officers

Harris received the oath of office from A. C. Robbins of Chapel Hill, president of the North Carolina Association of Realtors, during the board's annual Christmas gathering at Greenville Golf and Country Club.

Also installed were Richard Lane as vice president and Dorlis Mills as secretary-treasurer, as well as directors Jack Duffus, David Nichols, Ed Meyer, Louise Moseley and Les Turnage.

During the evening, Thelma Whitehurst of Greenville was named Realtor of the Year by the board. The honor, it was pointed out during presentation ceremonies, is based on Mrs. Whitehurst's service to the organization, including leadership of the board's Make America Better Committee which won the highest national award for crime prevention/vandalism recently from the National Associaton of Realtors.

Mrs. Whitehurst attended the national convention in Miami, where she accepted the award. She is a director of both the local board and the state association, as well as state treasurer of the N.C. Women's Council of Realtors. She is a graduate of the N.C. Realtors Institute.

In other ceremonies, Patricia Gobble, governor of the N.C. Women's Council, installed Mrs. Whitehurst as president of the local Women's Council of Realtors for 1982. Other officers sworn in were Ann Bass, vice president; Evelyn Barousse, secretary, and Faye Adams, treasurer.

Louise Hodge of Greenville was honored during the meeting as Member of the Year by the Women's Council. Mrs. Hodge was selected by the local council for her leadership as president of the group this year, and for her service to the community and the local board of Realtors.

A graduate of the N.C. Realtors Institute, she has served in various local board positions, as well as a committee post with the state Realtors association.

School Offers Wine Appreciation Class

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Pass the wine, please, it's time for Mel Young's weekly class.

But make no mistake, it's all done in the interest of academics. Young's non-credit course in wine appreciation has become a fixture in the eight years he has taught it for the University of Tennessee-Chattanooga's continuing education program.

"Our lab work consists of sampling anywhere from 45 to 55 wines," he said in an interview. "The main thrust of the course is to learn how to read the label."

Young insists his students learn how to comprehend the information provided on a wine bottle's label. That ability, he said, makes them knowledgeable consumers who can recognize genuine fine wines and who are able to buy equivalent wines at lower prices than better-known brands, much like saving money by shopping for generic drugs.

A 1952 graduate of West Point, Young is a 51-year-old accountant who became interested in wines when he had clients in the wine wholesaling business. He started his own wine cellar and his interest grew.

He detected increased public interest in wines and noticed that some colleges had begun offering wine courses.

Malaise Spreads From Auto Industry

Layoffs Rack State's Economy

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

DETROIT (AP) — Paul Welch has been struggling to meet his $900-a-month mortgage payment since Chrysler Corp. laid him off as a production supervisor 15 months ago.

Sixty miles away near Flint, Mich., real estate agent Ken Minto has laid off his five employees and taken a night job as a part-time maintenance man because houses are not selling.

In Detroit, a soup kitchen run by the Rev. Lloyd Thiel often serves free meals to 800 people a day. It is one of 200 groups aiding the destitute.

The winds of recession now blowing across most of the nation hit the major industrial centers of the country long ago, and nowhere harder than Detroit and other cities in Michigan, which has led the states in unemployment for two years.

The auto industry, the heart and soul of Michigan's livelihood, has been in a deep slump for three years, the worst since the Depression. It lost $4 billion last year, and the U.S. Commerce Department estimates it will lose $1.4 billion this year. More than 325,000 autoworkers have lost their jobs since 1979. Chrysler has shut 10 plants and Ford Motor Co. four.

That malaise seeped throughout Michigan's economy months ago, much like the recession now is affecting businesses and workers across most of the country. The strain of a depressed economy has stretched the fabric of life in Detroit and other parts of Michigan.

And the private desperation of being out of work is building as unemployment benefits near depletion and families face financial ruin.

In the past 18 months, the number of people seeking food from relief organizations in and around Detroit has tripled. Twice as many people are on the state welfare roll as in 1979. Burglaries have increased 18 percent and robberies 16 percent this year. Out-of-town newspapers are selling briskly and moving companies say more households are leaving the area than arriving.

Job-related emotional illness, alcoholism, drug abuse and suicide attempts have increased. In Federal Bankruptcy Court in Detroit, 5,338 companies were declared bankrupt in the first 10 months of this year, more than 2,000 more than failed during the same period in 1979.

The ravages of recession could not have come at a worse time for the civic groups working for a rebirth of a Detroit tarnished by riots in 1967 and an image as the nation's murder capital in the mid-1970s. New homes, office buildings and shops have grown near the banks of the Detroit River, but plans for improved public transportation, further building and a downtown shopping mall have been shelved until better days.

The problem facing Detroit and other auto-making towns is that people are not buying many new cars. Prices are high. Interest rates on auto loans are high. And the proportion of new-car sales captured by foreign companies is high.

When Detroit sells fewer cars, it builds fewer. The effects of the resulting auto layoffs and loss of income in the community have percolated through the state's economy, undercutting retailing, other manufacturing, construction and most other businesses in the region.

The greatest crunch has been felt in southeastern Michigan, where nearly 70 percent of the state's 9.26 million residents live. Grand Rapids, a center of furniture making in southwestern Michigan, had an unemployment rate of 10.6 percent in October, high by national standards, but better than the state's average of 11.5 percent. Michigan's unemployment rate rose to 11.8 percent in November, but the most recent municipal figures are for October.

At 35, Paul Welch is a veteran of 15 years of the vissicitudes of the auto industry. This time it is different, he says.

"My idea of security has been shattered totally. You might be in steak one day and beans the next."

Eighteen months ago, when Welch's job as a production supervisor paid him $26,000 a year, he moved his family into a $95,000 home in the Detroit suburb of Bloomfield Township. The mortgage was $900 monthly, and he had to carry a $180 monthly mortgage payment on his former home for nearly a year before he could sell it.

As Chrysler began closing plants, Welch was told he would be laid off if he did not give up his management position and become either a janitor or a messenger at a substantially lower wage.

He took the layoff and is attending law school at night while looking for work during the day.

Welch has used up state unemployment benefits and federal aid paid under the Trade Readjustment Act, which helps workers damaged by foreign competition. He will exhaust company-financed supplemental unemployment benefits next summer, unless those funds run out earlier.

Michigan Malaise...

521,000 unemployed workers in Michigan last month. Many only now are beginning to feel a financial pinch with the depletion of unemployment benefits, union-negotiated supplemental unemployment benefits and federal payments under the Trade Readjustment Act.

Payments under the Trade Readjustment Act to Michigan's unemployed totaled $2.6 billion in the two-year period that ended Sept. 30, according to state officials. But the Reagan administration's budget cutting will reduce those payments to $100 million in the fiscal year that ends Sept. 30, 1982. About 80,000 Michigan residents collected benefits under the program in August. But, because of the cuts, that number will fall to 4,000 by the end of this month, says S. Martin Taylor, director of the Michigan Employment Security Commission.

Supplemental unemployment benefits are in jeopardy, too. The funds are financed by company contributions based on the number of hours each employee works. During high unemployment, more unemployed workers collect from the fund, while fewer employees are on the company's rolls to replenish the accounts.

Chrysler's supplemental unemployment benefit funds had about $5 million at the beginning of December and was paying about $450,000 in benefits weekly, according to the United Auto Workers union. The union estimates the fund will run out early next year.

Welch says he can hold out until summer, but by that time "I'll really be hurting."

"I'm going to die on the vine if I don't get a job. I'll probably lose this house," he says.

Welch's wife works and he receives benefits of a little less than $1,200 a month, 46 percent of his Chrysler salary. Occassionally, part-time work is available. But, Welch says, "We can't live on four or five bucks an hour."

Meanwhile, the house is being furnished by occasional purchases at garage sales and a leaky roof has gone unrepaired.

"It's scary as hell," says Welch. "You think you have security for 15 years and it just melts away."

Most of the rest of the nation now is feeling Detroit's malaise and the weight of one of its main causes — the high cost of borrowing money. Housing and commercial construction are depressed. Retail sales, industrial production and factory orders are down.

Unemployment is rising nationwide, hitting a six-year high of 8.4 percent in November.

The U.S. Labor Department says 20,000 jobs are lost throughout the American economy each time sales of domestic autos drop by 100,000 vehicles. Michigan Budget Director Gerald Miller says the same drop in sales costs the state $15 million in revenues.

U.S. auto production peaked in 1973, when 9.67 million cars were built. Output fell to 8.4 million in 1979, then to 6.4 million in 1980. Production was 5.9 million in the first 11 months of this year, roughly the same as during the same period last year.

But sales of new cars tumbled 18.4 percent in November, compared with November of last year.

Unemployment is expected to increase this winter, and even the most optimistic economic forecast does not expect a turnaround in the auto industry or the economy until spring.

UAW leaders, calling the situation "desperate," have freed individual bargaining councils to renegotiate current contracts with U.S. automakers.

And imports continue to erode Detroit's business. The Commerce Department estimates foreign cars this year will account for about 26.5 percent of all sales in the United States, up from 17.9 percent three years ago.

Signs at auto-union parking lots say: "300,000 laid-off UAW members don't like your import. Please park it in Tokyo."

The economic storm broke just when Detroit and Michigan are least able to cope with it.

Municipal and state revenues have fallen, yet demand for social services has increased.

But "if the economy gets worse, all bets are off" says Walter Stetcher, Detroit's budget director.

The state has been borrowing $500 million at the end of each fiscal year to meet immediate cash needs. If things get worse and Michigan cannot find buyers for its notes, it faces another round of sharp spending cuts or other emergency measures to avoid default.

"Our cuts have been so deep, so dramatic, we've not only cut to the bone but to the marrow," says Gov. William Milliken. But he insists "the state does not face financial collapse."

But Milliken is encouraging spending in one area — economic development — recommending a $10 million "Say Yes To Michigan" campaign to attract new business and investment and improve the state's image.

One Detroit civic group, Detroit Rennaissance, has been working since 1970 to revive the nation's sixth largest city. Its job has become more difficult since 1979, says Detroit Rennaissance President Robert McCabe.

"You cannot deny we have a depression in this city," McCabe says. "If we give up, yes you can write us off. But we haven't given up."

Despite increased demand for public assistance, welfare programs remain unpopular, says John Dempsey, Michigan's director of social services. "It seems every time we're needed the most we're hated the most," he adds.

Tom Snover, director of community services for the UAW, says it was only five years ago that autoworkers were among those complaining about welfare and food stamps. "There's a complete difference in philosophy among the workers today," Snover says.

But Dempsey says groups that used to band together to protect social programs are now competing for a share of a shrinking pie.

"There was a network of decent do-gooders willing to help one another," he says. "As we used to work together, I'm afraid now we're beginning to work apart."

Private relief organizations say they are getting more referrals from state agencies.

The Rev. Thiel, director of a soup kitchen operated in Detroit since 1929 by Capuchin Franciscan friars, says that with prolonged unemployment, "it is so hard to give any direction to people."

"My concern is whether we are making people dependent on us," he says.

The operating budget of the kitchens and other Capuchin social programs has grown from $600,000 to $1 million in the past three years.

"If it (the economy) doesn't turn around, I can see us turning into the old soup kitchen, serving 3,000 persons a day with soup and bread," Thiel says. "I don't think that will happen, but it could — the lines are getting longer."

George Covintree, director of the Southeastern Michigan Food Coalition, says drives to raise money and collect food have been accelerated, but demand for help has been growing even faster. The coalition coordinates the operations of about 200 organizations providing emergency food care in a seven-county area including Detroit.

The services are "just seeing the tip right now, but they are at their maximum at what they are able to put out," Covintree says.

Community mental health officials in Flint, where unemployment peaked at 23.2 percent in June 1980 and stood at 15.6 percent in October, say they frequently hear patients complain their lives have fallen apart and they do not know where to turn.

Paul Allen, clinical supervisor for the Flint Regional Emergency Service, says more than one out of four requests for help involve job-related emotional problems.

"The economy does not make one sick, but the pressures of the financial situation exacerbates things that were under control," says Arthur Heller, director of the Genesee County Community Mental Health Center in Flint. Complaints of wife-beating, depression, alcoholism and family problems have grown as jobless benefits run out, he says.

Top Performers Fees Rising Quickly

RALEIGH — Last week a call came to the office of the Friends of the College concert series at N.C. State University from an agent offering the London Philharmonic Orchestra in January of 1983 for a fee of $50,000. That is more than twice the fee other major London orchestras have charged within the last three years.

"You certainly can't expect to get the New York Philharmonic with Leonard Bernstein today for $10,000 as we did in 1961," said Henry Bowers, administrative director of the Friends of the College, "but the inflation in fees in recent years has been overwhelming."

He attributes this rise to the state of the economy with rising transportation costs, unfavorable exchange rates, union regulations, plus the pace-setting rock star fees which operatic and other classical music superstars can command. As a consequence, the Friends of the College Board of Directors has voted to increase its membership fee for the 1982-83 season to $15.

The FOTC artists' fee budget has steadily increased in the last few years from $104,200 in 1975-76 to an estimated $220,000 in 1982-83. Other expenses are on the rise, too, such as mailing, printing and production costs. It is estimated that the total budget in 1982-83 will have increased 96 percent over the budget of 1975-76.

"It is with considerable nostalgia that we look back to the days when Isaac Stern's fee was $3,500 for two performances (it is $22,500 a performance now), the Boston Pops was available for $5,500 (now over $40,000) and Artur Rubinstein performed for $6,000 a night," said Bowers.

The Friends of the College membership fee was last raised from $7 to $10 in 1975. FOTC membership has fluctuated between 18,000 and 20,000 in the last several years.

"Interest earned, contributions and the enthusiasm of hundreds of volunteer workers has made it possible for us to keep our membership fee so low," said Bowers.

"When compared to New York City prices, where a single seat at the Metropolitan can cost $35, our price of $15 for seven performances is a terrific bargain," said Paul DelaCourt, this year's FOTC president. "It is the goal of Friends of the College to bring the best in classical music and dance for as low a fee as possible so that these great performers can be within the financial reach of almost everyone. The 1982-83 season is still in the development stage and will be announced in February. We plan to include some of the world's most exciting performers."

Wagenseil Senior Show

ECU News Bureau

Three-dimensional art works by Lois Wagenseil of Raleigh, a senior in the School of Art, East Carolina University, were displayed last week in the foyer of the Leo Jenkins Fine Arts Center on campus.

Children's Show

About 24 pieces are being shown by children in the age group of 6 to 12 who have been studying with Linda Darty in lessons being given at the museum. The children have been learning ideas about drawing, use of color and design.

This colorful collection is housed in the sunniest gallery of the museum, with lots of light coming in through the tall windows. The small show is well worth the climb up the spiral steps for anyone visiting the museum during the next few days.

Arts Festival Planned

Mrs. Roz Fuchs, president of the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, has announced that the council will sponsor an Eastern Carolina Arts Festival in April 1982. Last year's festival was a first for Greenville and was very well received throughout the community, with total attendance at a variety of events estimated at 35,000.

John M. McConney is chairman for the '82 Festival, and Ms. Elizabeth Stewart will serve as executive director. Steering committee members include Rudy Alexander, Dr. Delma Blinson, Tim Brinn, Don Davenport, Walter Faulkner, Ed Glenn, Dr. Richard Laing, Ms. Mary Ann Pennington, Ms. Pat Pertalion, Dr. Charles Russell, Billy Stinson, Charles Vincent, Ms. Emmy Whitehead and Ed Wyatt.

Artists and groups desiring to take part in the festival are requested to contact Ms. Elizabeth Stewart at 757-1785 or visit the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council office, located in the North State Savings and Loan Building at Second and Washington streets.

Adventure, Romance Reflected In Books By Vagabond Travelers

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Few pasttimes are more pleasurable on long winter nights than time spent being transported to some far-off exotic land with an adventurer traveler who happens also to be a gifted chronicler.

Most men of my generation, whose young years were before the birth of television, devoted innumerable boyhood hours to night time reading.

On winter nights, bundled up in an unheated farmhouse bedroom, or on sultry summer nights tending the fires of tobacco barn furnaces and reading by the light of an oil lantern, nothing beat the excitement of adventures taken with masters such as T.E. (of Arabia) Lawrence in "Seven Pillars of Wisdom;" Herman Melville's world of the Far Pacific in "Typee," "Omoo" and "White Jacket;" or Jack London's rousing "Call of the Wild."

Sometimes, a friend with access to a wider choice of adventure-travel literature would make a welcome loan of a volume made doubly exciting by the fact it had to be hidden. Most Southern mamas of those days, like mine, nourished the unarguable conviction that aside from the Bible and Shakespeare, the weekly "Grit," the works of Mark Twain, Zane Gray and Gene Stratton Porter constituted a sufficiency of proper reading for a boy in his impressionable years.

So, when a conspiring friend would smuggle into my house an erotic-threaded volume by Sir Richard Burton or Pierre Loti, these breathtaking temporary acquisitions had to be assigned to under the covers flashlight reading hours.

Later Discoveries

Through the years, oftentime by accident, I have come across the chronicles of other travelers (including a few pioneering nomadic females) who possessed the literary talent to pen memorable accounts of their global escapades.

Not as well-known as London, Burton, Lawrence or Melville, these hardy traveler-writers of the 19th century and early years of the 20th century nonetheless comprise a fraternity of literary vagabonds who were gifted both with the courage to strike out, usually near-penniless, to the lands of their heart's desire, and later the discipline to put their journeys into print.

From a number of old bookstores in scattered corners of the world and in more recent years from the treasure-laden shelves of David Stick's Book Store on the Outer Banks, I have made the acquaintance of several writers who have given me many hours of pleasure in intriguing tales of real-life adventure.

An American Traveler

Foremost among this group is Harry A. Frank. Just after the turn of the century, in June 1904, Frank, then a recent graduate of the University of Michigan, "resolved to take a 'year off,' to wander through as much of the world as possible, and to return to my desk in the autumn ... It was my original intention to attempt the journey without money, without weapons, and without carrying baggage or supplies; to depend both for protection and the necessities of life on personal endeavor and the native resources of each locality. That plan I altered in one particular. I decided to carry a Kodak; and to obviate the necessity of earning en route what I might choose to squander in photography, I set out with a sum that seemed sufficient to cover that extraneous expense; to be exact: with one hundred and four dollars."

In those days, $104 would of course been a much neater sum than the same amount today. Yet, considering the extent of Frank's travels — to Canada, thence to France, Switzerland, Mediterranean lands, the Arab world, and on to India, Burma, Thailand, Malay and Japan before heading eastward across the Pacific back home, it's apparent — as happened — that he'd often be without funds.

Frank was a knowledgeable vagabond, fluent in French, German, Spanish and Italian. He was also a keen observer, alert to the customs and geography of places visited as well as being responsive to the sublime and the ridiculous in his encounters with people in his travels. And he was something of an accomplished con-man. Time and again he passed off as a passort the discharge paper he received from the captain of the cattle boat he worked on across the Atlantic.

We can be grateful that Frank decided to encumber himself with a camera. A number of fine black and white photographs complement his account of the leisurely paced world-encircling journey contained in "A Vagabond Journey Around The World: A Narrative of Personal Experience," published in March, 1910 by Garden City Publishing Company, Garden City, New York.

One of the most amusing incidents in "A Vagabond Journey Around the World" is Frank's detailed account of an encounter with a money changer in Beirut. Newly ashore, he had trudged for miles behind "a sinister-looking native, attired in a single garment that reached to his knees." The character delivered him safely, however, to the house of the American consulate, who directed him to a cheap, but safe lodging for the night.

Tale of A Sovereign

• "When I paid my bill next morning in the French pension to which I had been directed, my worldly wealth was reduced to one English sovereign. I turned in at the office of Cook and Son and, tossing the piece to the native clerk, asked him to change it into coin of the realm, of small denomination. He turned the sovereign over several times, bit it, laid it carefully away, and set to pulling out boxes and drawers and dumping the coins they contained on the counter before me. There were pieces of copper, pieces of silver, pieces of bronze, tin, iron, nickel, zinc; coins half the size of a dime, coins that looked like tobacco tags, coins big enough with which to fell an ox, coins with holes in them, coins bent double, saucer-shaped coins, coins that had been scalloped around the edge by some erstwhile possessor of artistic temperament and hours of leisure; and still the clerk continued to pour out coins until I felt in duty bound, as a tolerably honest member of society, to call a halt.

• "'Say, old mman,' I put in, 'that was only a sovereign I gave you, you know.'

• "'Yes, yes, I know,' panted the native, dumping another handful that rattled down the sides of the heap like a bucketful of stones on the pile under a stone crusher, 'I know, and I am very sorry I have not enough to change him. But I give you this and he just make him up.'

• "He tossed me a gold piece of ten francs.

• "'What!' I cried, 'You don't mean that I get that heap and ten francs besides, for one quid?'

• "'Aywa, efendee, yes, that makes one pound,' he answered.

• "I pawed over the heap. Each rake brought to light pieces of new and unique pattern. 'Fine collection,' I said, 'but what's the answer?'

• "The clerk drew a long breath as if for an extended lecture, and picked up one of the tobacco tags: 'This,' he said, 'is a metleek. It is worth eleven-twelths of a half-penny. Five of these coppers make a metleek — only not quite — that is — here in Beirut — in Damascus five of them make a metleek and a little more. Ten metleeks make a bishleek —' he picked up one of the coins the owner of which would be arrested, in a civilized country, for carrying concealed weapons, 'one bishleek — that is — except one and a half of these copper coins — that is — here — in Damascus ten metleeks make a bishleek and four coppers — except not quite — and in Sidon they make the same as in Damascus — only a little less — and these coins are worth the same as a bishleek — except not quite — that is — here — if they have a hole in them they are worth a copper and three-fourths — more — that is, here — in Damascus they are worth a copper and one-fourth more, and this dish-shaped one is worth three bishleeks and three metleeks and two coppers and sometimes three-fourths of a copper more, except they with holes in them which are worth two metleeks and a copper and a half more, and this me-jeedieh is worth in Damascus seven bishleeks and seven metleeks and two coppers and sometimes here not so much by two and a half coppers and in Jerusalem —'

• "'And suppose it is a rainy day?' I asked.

• "'Oh, that does not make any difference,' said the clerk, with owl-like solemnity, 'but sometimes on busy days, as on feast days, the bishleek is worth three coppers and a half more — that is, here — in Damascus it is worth two more and sometimes not so much — as in Ramadan, and in Sidon it is worth three-fourths of a copper less and in — here in Beirut —'

• "'Hold on, efendee,' I cried. 'If you have a pencil and a ream of paper at hand —'

• "I understood his explanation perfectly, of course, but I had an unconquerable dread of forgetting it in my sleep.

• "'Certainly,' cried the obliging clerk, and he dragged forth two sheets of paper and covered both with figures. Reduced to writing, the monetary system of Syria was simplicity itself. One could see through it as easily as through six inches of armor plate.

• "'Now, in carting this around —' I asked, tucking the sheets of paper away in a pocket, 'you don't have a porter? —'

• "'Ah,' said the clerk, 'you have not the large purse? Our Syrians carry a purse which is very long, which is long like the stocking which it is said are worn by the lady; but if you have not such a long purse and you have not any ladies —' I drew out a large handerkchief and fell to raking the heap of coins into it. 'Ah,' he cried. 'that does very good, only you do not forget that in Damascus the ma-jeedieh is worth seven bishleeks and seven metleeks and two coppers and sometimes —' But I had escaped into the silence outside.

• "I reduced my burden somewhat by spending the heaviest pieces of junk for breakfast and, strolling down to the harbor, sat down on a pier. The bedlam of shrieking stevedores, braying camels, and the rattle of discharging ships drowned for some time all individual sounds."

Frank One Of Best

The reader may wonder how the author kept that explanation of monetary exchange fixed in memory in those pre-tape recorder days. It could be suspected that Frank may have resorted to a touch of literary license later on when writing about the incident.

Be that as it may, "A Vagabound Journey Around the World" is rich in an amazing array of adventures — some chilling brushes with danger; others that are touching tales of friendships formed with the most unlikely characters. Many of the events related provide perspective insights into ways of life that in all likelihood have vanished even in the most remote lands visited by the inquisitive young American.

Frank was one of a brotherhood of young men, mostly British, German, Swedish and American, who in the days before air travel, answered the lure to travel to distant places unfettered by little more than one change of clothes, a small purse and unbounded confidence.

A remarkably large number of these fascinating travelers have committed their adventures to paper, and Frank can be numbered among the best of that colorful troup who recorded for our enjoyment the joys and tribulations of being a true vagabond.

Two ECU Faculty Authors Of New Poetry Textbook

ECU News Bureau

A new college-level poetry textbook by Drs. James Kirkland and David Sanders of the East Carolina University English faculty has been released by its publisher, Random House.

The book, entitled "Poetry: Sight and Insight," is designed for freshman literature courses, and includes approximately 400 poems which are used as models of analysis.

ECU's introductory poetry classes, offered through the department of English, will begin using the text during the second semester, and the book is expected to be adopted at other campuses during 1982.

The Kirkland-Sanders book has a three-part structure, which gives instructors several options in using the text in their classes. The first part is a technique-oriented section, with each chapter emphasizing such elements of poetry as tone, symbol and image.

The second part is an arrangement of poems and discussions according to theme (love, youth and age, death, religion, etc.) and the final part is a varied anthology of poems, arranged chronologically. The book concludes with a glossary of terms used in the study of poetry.

A noteworthy feature of the book is the number and variety of contemporary poems included, representing the work of such recent poets as Randall Jarrell, X.J. Kennedy, Sylvia Plath and Richard Wilbur.

Sanders noted that one of the chief purposes of the text is to provide models of poetry analysis which can be useful guides for freshman composition students as they write their own analyses of poetry.

Kirkland, a specialist in American literature and folklore, chairs ECU's freshman composition program. Sanders, whose specialty is English Renaissance literature, is coordinator of ECU's Honors Program. Both are advisory editors to "Tar Heel Poetry," a quarterly poetry magazine published by ECU.

Thinking Man's Hero Will Host PBS 'Life On Earth' Show

By FREDERICK M. WINSHIP
UPI Senior Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — Naturalist David Attenborough seems destined to be the thinking man's televison hero of 1982, just as Dr. Carl Sagan was in 1981.

Attenborough is host and narrator of "Life on Earth," a 13-part documentary series on evolution that will be premiered for American viewers on Public Broadcasting Service stations Jan. 12.

The series was Britain's top televison show in 1979 (20 million viewers weekly). The book Attenborough modelled on the series was the British best-seller for two years (2 million copies sold to date).

"Neither the series nor the book are original in any way," said Attenborough modestly on a visit to promote the book, also titled "Life on Earth," which has just been published by Little, Brown and Co. ($22.50). "It's mainstream zoological thought put together to give the world a prospectus. I've been called Charles Darwin's evangelist, but the question seems to be — did Darwin have all the answers?"

American audiences, keyed up by the "Cosmos" series on PBS can expect to find Attenborough a different species from the bookishly romantic Sagan. The Cambridge-educated Britisher has a natural exhuberance that separates him from the college don. He infuses boyish enthusiasm into all his filmed activities, whether scuba-diving alongside a humpback whale or wrestling playfully with gorillas.

As a writer, Attenborough is an exciting story teller, making the 3.5-billion-year history of evolution — from one-celled organisms to the great apes — come alive in all its panoply and wonder. Critics have called "Life on Earth" the best introduction to natural history ever written. There isn't a line in its 13 chapters that is merely dry fact or patronizing to the layman. The color illustrations are truly remarkable photographs, about one-third of them taken by Attenborough himself.

"I designed the show and wrote the book to be understood by 14-year-olds but research shows that even 12-year-olds and younger understand it, probably because I didn't use any technical words," he said. "And still it is being shown to post-graduate students at Oxford and Cambridge. An elderly professor wrote me saying he was grateful for the book because it reminded him why he had become a zoologist in the first place."

LIFE ON EARTH NARRATOR ... Naturalist David Attenborough is host and narrator of "Life on Earth," a 13-part documentary series on evolution that will be premiered for American viewers on PBS stations Jan. 12. He is the brother of actor Sir Richard Attenborough. (UPI Photo)

Attenborough, brother of actor Sir Richard Attenborough, is a BBC producer and former executive who pioneered the 13-week series format that Americans have learned to love ("Civilization," Alistair Cook's "America," "The Ascent of Man"). He has Anglo-Saxon blond good looks, appears years younger than his age of 55, and represents the last of the great derring-do explorers to a generation of British youth.

Since he began to produce a series of BBC wildlife programs known as "Zoo-Quest" in 1954, Attenborough has visited the most remote and dangerous outbacks of the world to film animals and plants that only a few intrepid Westerners had ever seen before. He gave up his peripatetic life for two years to be BBC's program director, but found a desk job was not for him. More

"I resigned just in time to make 'Life on Earth', which took three years to research, write and produce," he said. "I travelled to 100 locations in 30 countries on every continent with a camera crew that totaled 26 in the course of the project and shot 1.25 million feet of film. Authorities at 600 unversities throughout the world helped check out my working scripts."

"Of course, I couldn't just use my scripts to make a book," he said. "The book has things in it that the film commentary just couldn't include. The material demanded another form, rethought and reshaped. I've always kept a daily journal in the field, and that was a great help in writing the book.

"Some of the pictures in the book were taken by us in the field and some were not. I was very selective, using only six or seven to a chapter — each one an icon that is fundamental and typical of what I'm writing about. I didn't want a coffee table book with copious illustrations. This is a book to be read."

Attenborough is gratified that "Life on Earth" will be aired by public broadcasting, which has an audience of more specialized interests than network audiences, but it is a mystery to him why none of the important BBC documentaries have been snapped up by American networks in view of their proven popularity in Britain and Europe.

"NBC had an option on 'Life on Earth' for a long time, but didn't take it up," he said, losing his attractive grin for a moment. "It's a matter of sadness to me."

A viewer's guide to "Life on Earth" is being marketed to schools by Penn Communications (P.O. Box 10, Erie, Pa., 16512). Science World, a bi-weekly publication for students, will provide a viewer's guide to the series in its Jan. 8 issue.

Attenborough is completing another 13-part series about ecosystems, which has taken him to both the Arctic and Antarctic in the past year and to Aldabra, a coral atoll in the Indian Ocean where rare rail birds and giant tortoises are being endangered by plans for a satellite base. The thrust of this TV project is how animal and plant life adjusts to changes in environment.

"This is much more contemporary than 'Life on Earth', but it's not propagandistic," he said. "It takes into concern changes in the landscape of our time. Deserts are spreading and the everglades of Florida are disappearing. Between now and the end of the century, we would have lost a lot if there hadn't been a consideration of conservation."

But he said, "I'd hate it if conservation stood in the way of some important development. We have to use common sense."

In Attenborough's view, man's singular contribution to evolution was the develop mment of his instinct to communcate and relate experiences leading him to unprecedented cultural levels. Man, he said, is also the only creature to controvert the evolutionary process which Darwin called natural selection.

"We've stopped natural selection among ourselves. We don't reject children who are disadvantaged. We keep children alive who naturally might die. And we've transcended physical forms by creating machines to do work. We pass on forms that are extra-corporeal. That's what makes man great."

Music Competition Announced

Young musicians from the Greenville area will be competing this winter for a chance to boost their music careers througn one year of free studies.

The "NCNB 1982 Music Competition," sponsored by North Carolina National Bank, will award two full, one-year scholarships to the school of music at the North Carolina School of the Arts in Winston-Salem.

Winners in the statewide competition will be selected based on regional auditions Feb. 6 in Marion, Salisbury, Raleigh and Greenville and a final competition in Charlotte Feb. 23.

The competition is open to residents of North Carolina who have not reached their 20th birthdays and who are not enrolled in institutions of higher learning in the state. Competition is open to strings, woodwinds, brass, percussion, harp, piano, classical guitar and voice.

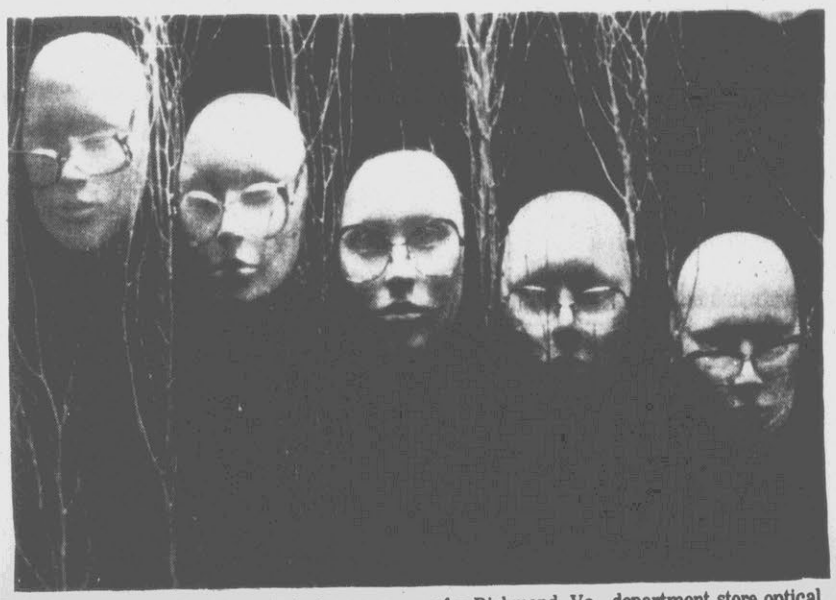

Applications, which must be in by Jan. 21, can be obtained from music teachers or by writing Shelby Graham, NCNB Corp., T15-4, Charlotte, N.C., 28255.

The "NCNB 1982 Music Competition" is a new addition to NCNB's support of the arts, which includes traveling and permanent art collections, photography competition and various outdoor performances across the state.

Big WOOW Classics

Hostess Karen Hause tonight continues the program of Christmas and Christmas Renaissance Music featured in last week's Big WOOW Classic broadcast. From 10 p.m. until midnight Mrs. Hause will give listeners a varied fare of Christmas music, some dating back to the 16th and 17th centuries.

The program opens with the concluding Part 2 of Berloiz's "L'Enfance du Christ," to be followed by compositions by Praetorius and De la Vittoria.

Next will be Christmas selections by the 16th century English composer by William Byrd, then Pezel's "Pastorale" and Wechmann's cantata of 1602, "Annunciation."

The final selections tonight will be a recording of carols performed by the Philadelphia Brass Ensemble.

GIFT TO JUILLIARD

NEW YORK (AP) — The Juilliard School says it has received a $1.8 million gift from the William Petschek Charitable Fund to establish a program of financial assistance to the school's most gifted young pianists.

Concert Being Aired Today

Will Videosettes Make Records Obsolete

By MARK SCHWED

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — In a few years, you'll be able to pop a videosette into your video-viewer and groove to the visual vibes of the latest Rolling Stones tape.

Music with pictures — the technology exists today — and some predict it will make the phonograph record obsolete by 1990.

Michael Nesmith, a member of the 1967-68 television group the Monkeys, was a featured guest at a recent Nashville forum on "What is this thing called video music, and where is it going?"

The forum drew 300 recording executives to a new $2.5 million state-of-the-art audio-video studio to hear Nesmith say he was "irresistably drawn" to video.

Americans demonstrated their willingness to accept the video artist with the introduction of the game "Pong," Nesmith said.

"You play ping pong on your TV set," Nesmith said. "It's kind of dumb. But it represented a general change in the mindset of the public about their TV sets."

Nesmith, who said his record sales dropped off after leaving the Monkeys, has abandoned audio-only recording and plunged into the video market.

"I became more and more convinced that audio-only recording was becoming obsolete and probably by 1990 we won't have audio-only records," he said. "What's happening in the video business is not the death of the record business, but the beginning of a new era. I'm not kidding when I say it's the most important event in the history of rock 'n' roll."

Nesmith said video records will force artists to be more inventive than simply showing someone strumming a guitar and mouthing the words of a song.

"You've got to put pictures on the music now," he said. "It's a whole different thing. It's not just radio with pictures. This is where we're going. There's no choice involved in this. Video music, video records is your future. It's simply the way the American people are moving because of this perceptive change in the use of the television."

But others, like Robert Pittman of Music Television, don't agree that video music will replace records.

Pittman is the programming director for "MTV," a New York-based cable television channel that shows video clips of the latest pop, rock and punk music songs strung together by a video disc jockey. With a simple connection, the music can be heard in stereo while the pictures are being shown on televison.

Some industry experts believe the growth of cable television will launch other cable music channels and with a flick of the dial, you'll be able to tune in to video blues, classical, soul, disco, easy listening, gospel and country music.

"For the first time we can play our television," said Frances Preston of Broadcast Music Inc. in Nashville. "It is believed by many that MTV may change the way we look at the whole cable-television business and the music business."

"We'd like to think we are to FM (radio) what FM was to AM in the early '60s," Pittman said. "It is more than another TV channel. We are really looking at a new use of the existing technology of the TV set.

"But we're not going to replace radio or records. FM didn't kill AM. It reached parity with AM," he said.

Sam Trust, president of ATV Music in Los Angeles, is more pessimistic about the video craze.

"I'm not convinced video will replace the phonograph," he said. "Music is for listening. Video is just another area of communication."

One question to be resolved is who will make money from the video clips.

Photographs By Spector

In the 30 pieces in this show, Spector uses the camera to select and record everyday scenes with the sure eye of an artist backed by technical skill. Many of the scenes are near-at-hand vistas of pleasant landscapes

Other photographs focus on the texture of walls and the play of shadows in architectural forms. This group includes a couple of splendid views of walls mellowed by age or brightened with art murals.

These photographs in some instances reflect Spector's propensity for focusing on a central subject or object — a tree standing alone, a brilliantly colored object such as a multi-painted booth, a sky blue tent, a carmine ice box, or a miniature festive village in a lake at the feet of a seated couple. Often, the bright objects are used as a foil for nature's greens and blues of grass, trees, sky and sea.

In this group of photographs, there is no evidence or hint of violence or chaos. Spector creates a realistic projection of places that invite contemplation, ones that evoke a world in which order and everyday beauty are paramount.

The one major distraction in this collection of photographs is the identical size and sameness of framing of each photograph. A diversity in size and method of presentation would have heightened the individual and collective interest generated by these fine works.

Spector has a science degree in engineering from the University of Connecticut and a master of fine arts degree in photography from the State University of New York at Buffalo. He has lived and worked in Europe and has been represented in national and international exhibits.

RECORD PRICE — A record price of $201,600 for a work of art by Amerian artist Washington Allston was paid recently at Sotheby's Gallery in London. "Hermia and Helena" was purchased by an anonymous English collector who outbid several American museums. Allston is regarded as the first important American landscape painter. (AP Laserphoto)

Book News

Several exciting new "Show Biz" biographies at Sheppard Library should entertain the exhausted Christmas shopper.

• Betty Grable: The Reluctant Movie Queen is a fascinating look at America's favorite pin-up. Author Doug Warren (of Walking Tall fame) reveals an affectionate portrait of the highest paid woman in the country for many years — the "girl with the gorgeous gams." Both the girl next door and the leggy sex symbol of World War II, Grable is revealed as every bit as warm and charming off-screen as on. Beginning with her stage mother's driving ambitions, to her film debut at 14 and rocketing career through marriages, and finally death from lung cancer, Doug Warren captures the spirit of a colorful personality.

Some have called Richard Burton the greatest actor of our time, others have criticized him as languishing too long on Hollywood's payroll. But Burton has defied all attempts to cast him in a single role. Paul Ferris, the author of the biography Richard Burton, discovers the man behind the actor who has worn so many masks and the result is an illuminating profile of a complex personality and remarkable dramatic talent. Born Richard Jenkins in 1925, his professional career rose and fell through successes and failures, bouts of drunkeness, extravagant expenditures, marriage to Elizabeth Taylor, and numerous affairs and scandals. Paul Ferris is a noted writer, fellow Welshman, and the author of the critically acclaimed Dylan Thomas.

Sports fans will love Joe DiMaggio: An Informal Biography, as a fastpaced, nostalgic trip through the golden years of Yankee baseball. This biography puts flesh and bone on Joe DiMaggio and recreates his 56 game hitting streak, and his 13 years as a Yankee player. His rise from North Beach to the Big Apple, his marriage, his comeback of 1949, and baseball's $100,000 contract all are included in this story about a remarkable sports figure who became a part of American folklore.

Christmas Music By Young ECU Singers

"The East Carolina Choir Sings At Christmas." Greenville. The East Caroilina Choir, Brett Watson, Director. One Disc, Stereophonic Album. $5. (Available at Cha Rich Music, Arlington Boulevard and School of Music, East Carolina University.)

A truly satisfying recording of Christmas music is the just released stereophonic single-record album by Greenville's East Carolina Choir. The 45 young singers, male and female, students in the school of music, East Carolina University, are directed by Brett Watson.

Unfortunately, both for the public and the choir, which had hoped to sell a substantial number of records before Christmas to help finance a singing tour to Los Angeles and San Francisco in May, the albums were late arriving. Watson explained that the original shipment arrived in early November, was defective. The Long Island, N. Y. firm cutting the album readily agreed to take back the defective shipment and to re-press the entire order. This necessarily delayed receipt of the albums in Greenville until mid-December.

The new pressing, happily, can be reported as being technically excellent.

Music lovers who prefer their Christmas music performed in a traditional manner without souped-up embellishments will find "The East Carolina Choir" disc a rewarding musical experience. All 17 selections are sung a capella. The voices are beautifully balanced, the texture throughout is consistently warm and rich. Clarity, both in tone and in enunciation, is one of the strong points of this recording.

Old favorites predominate in the selections, with a few lesser known works adding a touch of variety. Side one contains: "O Come All Ye Faithful," "The First Noel," "Angels We Have Heard on High," "O Little Town of Bethlehem," Gustav Holst's "In the Bleak Midwinter," "It Came Upon A Midnight Clear," Alfred Burt's "All On a Christmas Morning," and "The Door of Heaven Opens."

Selections on Side Two are: "O Come, O Come, Emmanuel," "Silent Night," "Lo! How a Rose Ee'r Blooming," "Fum, Fum, Fum," "Here, Mid the Ass and Oxen Mild," "Away in A Manger," "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing," and Tomas Luis de Victoria's "Ave Maria."

Director Brett paces the singers in tempos best suited to each selection, and elicits a marvelous balance in the blend of male and female voices. These factors result in exceptionally fine performances of all the beloved favorites in this album such as "O Come All Ye Faithful," "The First Noel," and "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear."

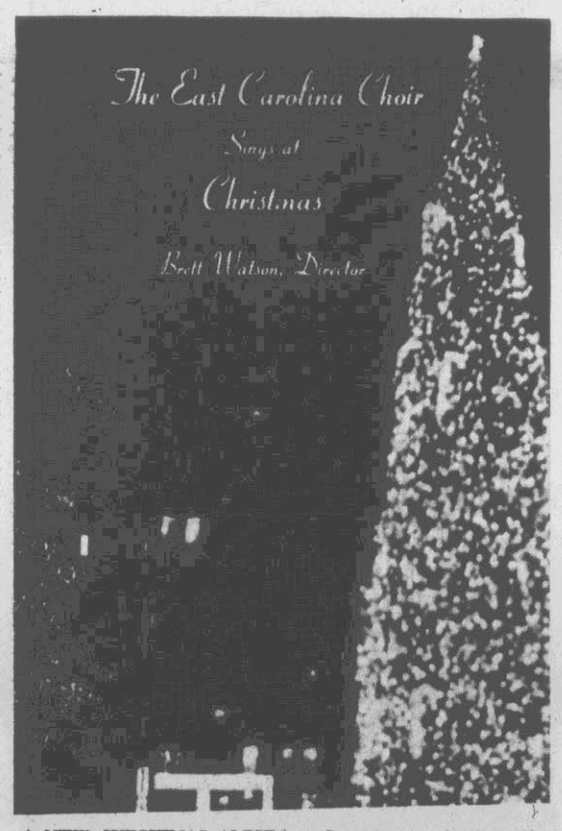

Personally, I would have liked hearing all female voices perform "Bring A Torch, Jeanette Isabella," and an all male performance of "O Come, O Come, Emmanuel," but these are personal preferences perhaps not shared by most listeners.

Two talented soloists are featured — Mary Katherine Griffin in the Holst song, and Anne Gunn in "Here, Mid the Ass and Oxen Mild."

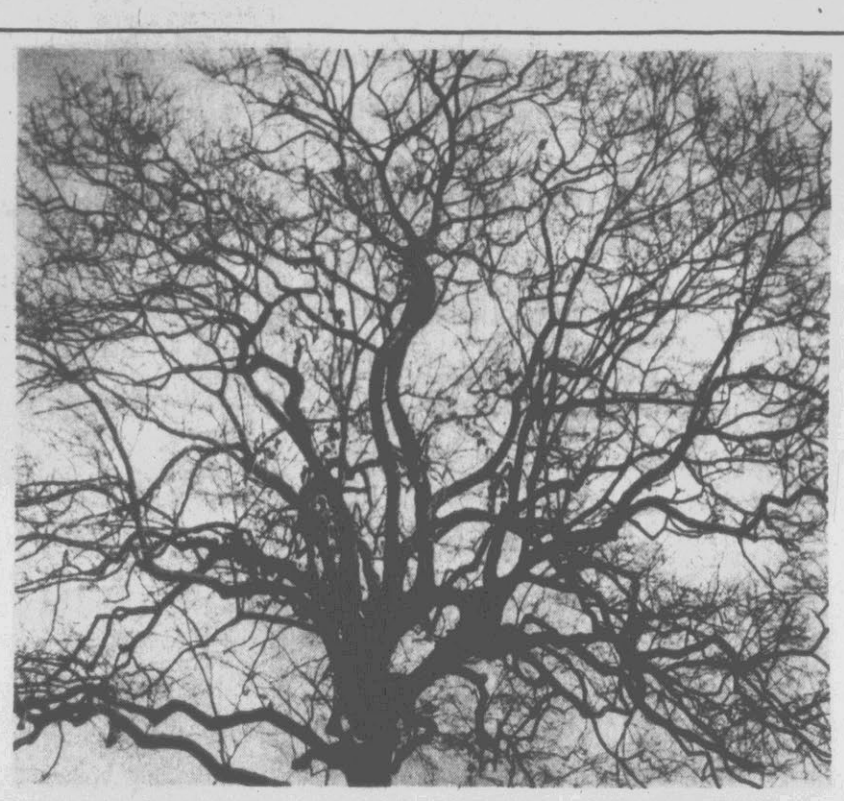

"The East Carolina Choir Sings at Christmas" album provides an opportunity for those who have not heard this excellent choir to do so. The choir has received critical acclaim in earlier appearances at Rockefeller Plaza and St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York, at The National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, St. Matthews Cathedral, and the Washington Cathedral in Washington, D.C. The choir has also toured and performed extensivley in schools and churches in North Carolina and other East Coast states.

James Rees and David Winstead are responsible for the top quality recording of this Christmas concert of music, which was recorded in the chapel of S. G. Wilkerson & Sons Inc. in Greenville.

A NEW CHRISTMAS ALBUM ... Seventeeen selections of Christmas music are performed in "The East Carolina Choir Sings at Christmas." Forty-five students of the school of music, ECU, comprise the choir directed by Brett Watson. The album is priced at $5 and is available at Cha-Rich Music and the ECU School of Music. Proceeds realized from the sale of the record will be applied to a May 1972 trip by the choir to Los Angeles and San Francisco.

New Favorites From An Old Hand

Second Harvest. By Dennis Rogers. Raleigh. The News and Observer. 196 pages, $5.95 paper cover, $9.95 hardback.

A collection of articles by Dennis Rogers is like a fine box of chocolates. You want to keep sampling all the tempting pieces. And like a box of candy, Rogers' articles are conveniently compartmented into logical arrangements. "A Place Just Down the Road," is an entertaining assortment about little crossroads and other out-of-the-way places that have captured the roving writer's fancy.

"In Dixie Land Where I Was Born" there are some amusing yet perceptive insights into the pride that will never die in the hearts of people who are lucky enough to be be born Southern (and even better if you're genuine Tar Heel). It must be added that Rogers is a compassionate man, and refrains from belitting those Yankees and other American foreigners who by design or accident have been fortunate enough to choose habitation in our fair land.

In "Lest We Forget," Rogers rightfully puts aside his comic flair and pens serious (and deserving) tribute to young heroes of times past. Some of these are gone, others are men growing mellow with age and memories. Many of their stories have been told before, in newspapers, magazines and some in books. This does not detract from the fascination of reading about them again. Rogers is a straight-on-the-target storyteller. Also, it's good to have these inspiring real life stories together in one source.

Readers who are avid fans of Rogers' column in "The News and Observer" will need not be reminded that he keeps attuned to the colorful, the unexpected, the sometimes oddball people and events that add spice to life. In his inimical way, he has the gift of bringing a welcome breath of freshness to divert our sad attention from the somber flow of national and international news that could crush our spirits without an occasional chuckle.

Much of the appeal Rogers holds for his readers is that sooner or later he will touch on someone they know and admire, name a favorite place, or expound on a particular human foible in a manner that evokes the feeling "that's it. I've thought of that myself, and now he's gone and put it in words." An example of this is the most compact article in this collection, "A Few of My Favorite Things." Here, he enumerates a necklace of favorites (good and not so good) — "Best tattoo parlors: Jacksonville;" "Best honky-tonk, Carolina Opry House, Greenville;" "Best place to walk on the beach: Hammocks Beach State Park;" "Most boring towns at night: Kinston and Williamston;" "Hardest place to find: Bear Grass. Just try;" "Best stand of kudzu: Along U.S. 401 between Rolesville and Louisburg;" "Best big town: Wilmington;" and "Hardest town to find something in: Greenville."

Not everybody will be enraptured by being informed about where to find the best stand of kudzu. It must be admitted, however, it's a jewel of far-out trivia.

Rogers is a writer difficult to pin down if your game is that of trying to analyze his appeal to readers. Admittedly, his writing bears eighth cousin once removed kinship to Art Buchwald (especially in his early days of writing about Arab rug dealers); to Mark Twain's vivid short sketches; to Taylor Koonce's preposterous characters mined from eastern North Carolina soil; and in an oblique manner, there's an echo in his writing style to that of the admirable Chinese poet-wanderer-reporter, Tu Fu. None of these vague kinships, however, really provide a ready answer to Rogers' appeal. The truth is that he's an original who has perfected the art of storytelling about what really matters most to many in North Carolina.

"Second Harvest" is a worthy successor to Rogers' first collection of articles, "Home Grown." His admirers can now begin to look forward to the hoped for event of a third volume.

Holiday Bonus From American Dance Festival

DURHAM — The American Dance Festival has announced a special holiday bonus for subscribers to its 1982 season in the form of a sneak preview and a 40 to 50 percent savings over single ticket prices.

The holiday offer ends Jan. 15, 1982.

"Normally we do not announce the companies that will be part of our coming summer until March," said ADF President Charles L. Reinhart. "Since this summer is especially exciting we decided to launch a special advance subscription campaign in time for the holiday season."

Purchasing a subscription at this time saves between $18.20 and $85.75 depending on the series subscribed to. In addition, subscribers who also become members of the Association for the American Dance Festival will receive a specially designed ADF tote bag as a gift.

The companies available on the Christmas subscription bonus include the Merce Cunningham Dance Company, the Paul Taylor Dance Company, Pilolobus along with Momix and Crowsnest, Jennifer Muller/The Works, the Nikolais Dance Theater and Chuck Davis — plus four modern dance companies from Japan scheduled to make their American deubt at the American Dance Festival this summer.

For further information, write to: American Dance Festival, P. O. Box 6097, College Station, Durham, N.C., 27708 or call the Festival number, 684-6402.

A PROMISE FOR FUTURE CHRISTMASES — A first sprout of mistletoe on the branch of a black gum tree, will in a few years grow into a sizeable multi-branch bunch. Mistletoe, with its leathery green leaves and stems and waxy white berries that ripen in December, attaches itself to various deciduous trees. It is one of the traditional plants used in holiday decorations. Anyone standing under a sprig of mistletoe invites the receipt of a holiday kiss. (Reflector photograph by Jerry Raynor)

Classic Films Offered By Cinema Society

The Cinema Society of Greenville is now selling tickets for the upcoming spring film series. The lineup of films include early classics as well as more recent features, encompassing subjects from love to madness to futurism, in styles ranging from black comedy and savage humor, to political thrillers to exotic fantasy.

The spring series will be shown in Hendrix Theater, Mendenhall Student Center on the East Carolina University campus at 7 p.m. on the dates listed. All dates are Sundays. There is ample parking space at the center. Coffee and light refreshements will be served from 6:30 to 7 p.m. (included in the ticket prices).

Tickets for the six films are priced at $10. These can be ordered by sending a check or money order to: Cinema Society of Greenville, English Department, East Carolina University, Greenville, N. C., 27834.

For more information, contact Glen Brewster or Karen Blansfield at the English Department, telephone 757-6041.

•Feb. 27 — "Nada," a French film of 1975, directed by Claude Chabrol. A thriller in which victims and predators are intermingled. Political radicals kidnap the American Ambassador to France during his weekly visit to an elegant brothel operated by the French Secret Police. The kidnappers come to realize they have been manipulated by corrupt police.

•March 21 — "Jane is Jane Forever." Directed by Walter Bockmayer and Rolf Buhrmann. Johanna, an old woman placed into a home for the elderly is so convinced that she is Tarzan's mate Jane that she plasters her walls with Tarzan movie posters, wears leopard skins and eats bananas continually. She spends most of her time at the zoo, preferring animals to people around her in the old folks' home.

•April 4 — "Metropolis," a German film dating back to 1927, is directed by Fritz Lang. An early futuristic film of a city-factory in which workers are slaves to rich masters. The film contains sequences still considered among the most memorable in film history, including Moloch the infernal machine which controls the city.

•April 18 — A Brazilian film of 1976, "Bahia," is directed by Marcel Camus. "Bahia," noted for its astounding physical beauty, is set in a sensual world of bossa-nova, handsome dancers and luxurious landscapes surrounding star-crossed lovers, a street hustler and a beautiful young prostitute. The film depicts a tapestry of dance, music, voodoo and Christianity in shanty-town slums.

•May 2 — The final film of the six is "The River," Jean Renoir's 1951 classic based in India. Three young women are in love with one of their cousins wounded during the war, who decides to leave rather than having to choose one among the three of them. The story is a reflection of British colonialism through the eyes of a teen-ager. "The River" is noted for it cinemaphotography, its music and its cast of young people in an exotic land.

Summer Theater Ticket A Good Season Gift Idea

Holiday shoppers who may be looking for that last-minute gift for a family member or friend have three days left — through Wednesday — to purchase a pre-Christmas gift season ticket for the four musicals to be presented in the summer of 1982 at East Carolina's Summer Theater.

Tickets for one person for the four musicals are priced at $25 for attendance at a Monday or Tuesday evening performance, and at $34 for attendance at performances on Wednesday through Saturday evenings.

The four musicals being offered in the 1982 return of Summer Theater to East Carolina University campus are established hits from Broadway — "Grease," "Shenandoah," "Cabaret" and "She Loves Me." The cast for the shows will include both professional performers and local talent.

People wanting to purchase tickets at the box office are to go to Room 108 in the building adjoining McGuiness Theater (at the corner of East Fifth and Eastern streets). The box office is open from 10 to 4 daily through Wednesday and will re-open on Jan. 4.

Mail orders with checks or money orders made payable to the Summer Theater may be sent to: Summer Theater, East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C., 27834. Those ordering tickets by mail are asked to enclose a stamped-self addressed envelope.

Inflation Evident In Price Tags Of Fine Illustrated Books

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Groceries, gasoline, cow feed, salt pork and mink coats are not the only products whose costs have spiraled dramatically in recent years.

Illustrated books, once like gasoline a true American bargain, have taken the escalation route in price increases that can conservatively be assigned to the "rocketing" price bracket.

Twenty, ten, even five years ago, top quality hard-bound illustrated books were within the reach of modest budgets as ideal gifts to oneself or to a book-lover friend at Christmas or for other special occasions. No longer.

Today, price tags for many books, particularly desirable volumes on art, travel, music, dance, film and photography, are beginning to place these volumes in the realm of luxury items.

Consider, for example, a few current book offerings gleaned from publisher's tempting holiday lists and catalogues.

•"The Anatomical Studies of Leonardi di Vinci" is being offered under the auspices of the Smithsonian Bookstore in a limited numbered edition of 998 copies. The studies consist of two volumes of text in both Italian and English, plus a portfolio volume of 210 drawings in up to six colors per plate. Drawn from the di Vinci writings and drawings lodged in the Royal Library at Windsor Castle, the three volumes in the set are bound in Nigerian goatskin. The price tag — $6,600 (with a 10 percent discount for Smithsonian associates). This set is undoubtedly painstakingly and lavishly produced, and will not be long in becoming a collector's item. Nonetheless, the price tag places it in the upper echelon of book luxury.

In a less rarified atmosphere, but still above the budget range of the average book buyer, are several publications listed in the recent catalogue of offerings by Barron's, a highly respected distributor of art books. (It must be noted that many excellent paper books are available from this firm, some for as little as $1.95, with a wide range available under $10).

A few examples of Baroon's books that are likely destined to be treasured by those fortunate enough to own them are these publications listed in the "Barron's Collector's Editions" of the catalog:

•"British Textile Designs in the Victoria and Albert Museum," in three cloth bound volumes with each averaging 284 pages and 250 color photographs. Each volume is priced at $340, for a total of $1,020 for the set. Another set on textiles also comes in three volumes, two volumes on French textiles and one on textiles of the Orient, Italy and Spain. Each contains more than 200 illustrations, mostly in color. At $395 per volume, the complete set calls for an outlay of $1,185.

•"Flower Designs in Europe" is a two volume set devoted to classic Art Nouveau floral design. Volume 1, "Grasset" contains 214 pages and 144 color plates; volume 2, "Seguy," has 94 pages and 60 color plates. The set is priced at $320.

•"Masterpieces of Buddhist Painting in Japan — Heian Period." A large (14 3/4 by 21½ inches) publication, the work is a 10-volume set, unbound and mounted on special paper. Each volume contains color plates of a single entire painting plus plates delineating individual details of the painting, and has a separate illustrated pamphlet covering the provenance as well as the art, historical and cultural significance of each painting. The ten volume work contains 120 illustrations, 30 of them in color. The price is $995.

A noted publisher of art books, Abrams of New York, again this year has a cornucopia of handsome books to appeal to many tastes. Among their titles are: "The Christian World" edited by Geoffrey Barraclough with 353 illustrations, $50; an illustrated history of "Witches," by Erica Jong, now $19.95, to go up to $25 after Dec. 31; an illustrated full-length monogram by David Shapiro on the art of contemporary artist "Jim Dine," $65; a large book on "Russian Avant-Garde Art" from the George Costakis Collection, $60, and Ted Sennet's pictorial history of "Hollywood Musicals," $50.

Another top publisher of art books, Rizzoli of New York, has among its holiday listings — "Picasso, The Early Years: 1881-1907," 1,587 illustrations, with 361 in color, $160 until Dec. 31, $175 thereafter; Marielle Ernould-Gandouet's history of "Rings Through the Ages," $75; and "Arts of the Maya: From the Olmecs to the Maya-Toltecs" by Henri Stierlin, 212 pages, illustrated, $50.

A brief look at quality illustrated books offered by commercial and university presses reveal a consistent trend in record high price tags:

•Abbeville Press — Roger Tory Peterson and Virginia Marie Peterson join forces in "Aububon's Birds of America," a new portfolio reproducing the paintings in large size — 11 3/4 x 15 inches. The regular edition is priced at $150; a signed, leatherbound edition is $300. "The Complete Book of Hunting" edited by Robert Elman has over 700 illustrations, 150 in full color. The regular edition is $49.95, a special bound and slipcased edition is $125.

•Farrar-Straus-Giroux — John McPhee's "The Pine Barrens," a special edition of this classic with 75 photographs and a new addendum by the author, $25.

•George Braziller Inc. — "The Prayer Book of Michelino da Besozzo," a facsimile of a 1430 Latin prayer book, 67 illustrations in four colors plus gold, 148 pages, $50.

•The Massachusetts Institute of Technology Press — A four volume set on the work of the 20th century architect Corbusier is covered in "Le Corbusier Sketchbooks," which contains over 4,000 illustrations totally, $500 ($125 per volume).

•University of California Press — "Moby Dick, or the Whale," by Herman Melville. This special edition of a belovied American classic is published in two editions, designed by Andrew Hoyem with illustrations by Barry Moser. One is a trade edition priced at $19.95, $24.95 after Dec. 31. The other is a special edition limited to 750 numbered copies at $225 each. The special edition has two-color printing throughout, contains 100 illustrations, and is issued in a slipcase.

Toy Company Rolls Along By Paying Attention To Basic Products

By JOHN C. GIVEN
Associated Press Writer

EAST AURORA, N.Y. (AP) — The attention goes to video games and other fancy toys, but Fisher-Price is rolling along nicely, turning out its line of unspectacular, but good-selling playthings.

"You're seeing a very good performance by the basic toys," company spokesman Harold S. Tolley Jr. says of recent buying trends by consumers.

He says the recession has brought sluggish sales in recent weeks, but he contends it also is producing a return to traditional toys.

Industry people say video games are big sellers this year, following last year's craze for hand-held electronic games. But some analysts also say the market is glutted with electronic items.

It is a segment ignored by Fisher-Price, a Quaker Oats subsidiary that ranks as the nation's fourth-largest toymaker, behind General Mills, Mattel and Milton Bradley. The company continues to focus on no-frills toys that run on "child power."

Two examples of these, Tolley says, are "Play Family Farm," a standard since 1968, and this year's "Play Family Jetport," both of which feature buildings, vehicles and Fisher-Price's familiar little, stubby, round-headed human figures.

Today's consumers like the simplicity of such toys because "they want to apply their money in the most cost-effective fashion," Tolley says. "A basic toy has the advantage of being a plaything a child can enjoy — and they're not speculating on something that may be new and gimmicky."

That attitude is being seen across the industry, says Penny Richman, a spokeswoman for Toy Manufacturers of America, a New York-based trade association that says its 235 members account for 90 percent of the nation's toy sales.

"This has definitely been a back-to-basics year, for the most part — things you played with as a child — board games, construction sets, baby dolls, stuffed animals," Ms. Richman says.

Hand-held electronics "haven't been doing as well ... because they're not new or as trendy as when they first came out," and because the market has grown from seven models in 1977 to a flood of up to 500 versions, she says.

While home video games such as Atari and Mattel's Intellevision are "definitely pushing (industry) sales up," as items costing more than $100, their impact on this year's sales shows up more in their dollar value than in the number of units sold, she says.

As for Fisher-Price, which takes in about $390 million a year, Tolley says the company has done well with limited ventures into electronics.

"Our phonograph and tape recorders are in effect sold out," he says. "They will be the top-dollar producers — though they come at a higher price (about $38)."

In addition, Tolley says, last year's introduction of two toys augmented with electronic features was successful enough to keep them in the line this year.

One, "Alpha Probe," is a plastic space shuttle with interchangable parts that emits three electronic sounds. The other is a doll that makes 17 sounds depending on whether it is held, picked up or put down.

Tolley says that aside from the phonograph and tape recorder, consumers are leaning toward the two-thirds of Fisher-Price's inventory that retails at $10 or less.

"People are shying away from the higher-priced stuff," he says.

At the same time, he says, "the overall pace (of the marketplace) this year is slower than usual."

Fourth-quarter sales are running behind expectations, but Fisher-Price still will finish ahead of last year, Tolley say.

"The real winner this year will probably be the consumer," Tolley adds. He predicts that high interest rates will encourage retailers to dump inventories — which could lead to "bargain prices."

Students Ready Shuttle Payload

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina A&T students are working on a project to prepare a payload for a U.S. space shuttle flight about the fall of 1985.

A new NASA program would permit universities and small businesses to purchase space on a space shuttle flight for about $10,000. Former A&T Chancellor Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy submitted the required $500 deposit to reserve space on a future flight.

A&T has been given reservation No. 316.

Students majoring in biology, chemistry, engineering, industrial technology, business administration and physics have been working to gather ideas for experiments which would comprise A&T's payload. They have also solicited funds from businesses to fund their projects.

Cold-Weather Casinos Offering Gimmicks To Attract Customers

By PETER MATTIACE
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Atlantic City's casino hotels have a problem their colleagues in Las Vegas don't — how do you lure gamblers when the chill of winter descends on the Boardwalk.

The casinos got burned in a "bus war" for patrons last year, so they are trying new gimmicks this time around — games of chance with cash prizes hourly, sweepstakes offering free cars daily, professional boxing and wrestling, two new gaming tournaments and even appearances by television soap opera stars.

"It's good, old-fashioned American competition," says William P. Weidner, president of the Sands Hotel & Casino. "We have to give a reason for people to come out of their homes in the wintertime, out from in front of the television set, to participate in gaming."

The problem of winter is a big one. Resorts International Hotel Casino, for example, dropped from a peak gambling take of $24.3 million during August 1980 to $10.5 million last December and then peaked again last August with $21.8 million. The other casino hotels showed similar fluctuations, and all say they lose money on their operations during the winter.

Casino executives hope their new emphasis on "fun and excitement" will help lure gamblers to the city's nine gaming halls from December through March without replaying last winter's disastrous battle for bus patrons.

During the "bus wars," three of the four casino hotels then operating offered escalating bounties for people taking day-trips to Atlantic City on special buses.

The bounties brought in thousands of people, especially senior citizens playing the slot machines. But the high cost of war made losers of the casino hotels.

One new casino hotel, the Sands, lost thousands of small-time players because some bus companies switched to another casino for more money, according to industry officials.

At the height of bus wars, an enterprising Philadelphia-area rider could put down $6.90 for a round-trip ticket and pick up $15 in quarters at Caesars Boardwalk Regency or Resorts International Hotel Casino. Some senior citizens and handicapped people rode for half-fare.

And for three cutthroat weeks in January, the same gamblers could drop in at Bally's Park Place for an additional $5.

Some senior citizens reportedly rode the buses twice a day just to collect the quarters.

"The so-called bus wars didn't work," says Weidner, who helped direct Caesars' battle plan last winter. "We were giving people the wrong kind of incentive. We were putting dollars in their hands and there were people riding the buses for a profit. Now we want to make Atlantic City a little more fun during the winter."

Weidner's Sands is leading this winter's fun-and-games policy with the resort's first gaming tournament for serious players of blackjack, roulette, craps and baccarat.

The tournament offers a "world championship" with a $25,000 grand prize, plus gifts for successful gamblers.

Weidner says the tournament will cost about $250,000 to stage. Sands officials predicts the tournament could stimulate up to $6 million in gaming and hotel revenues.

The Sands also has been giving away replicas of 1937 Jaguar automobiles every month and $5,000 cash in Saturday afternoon drawings. It also is publicizing a "Sands Dollars" game in which people match winning serial numbers with dollar bills circulated in Atlantic City, New York and Philadelphia.

Soap opera buffs can get to talk to their favorite television stars at the Sands' "Soap Opera Festivals" on Thursdays and Fridays. For $4, fans gossip with television villains and lovers in four shifts.

Resorts International Hotel Casino gives away a color television to bus patrons daily. It also plans a craps tournament in March.

Bally's Park Place and the Playboy Hotel & Casino are offering cash prizes with weekday drawings. Park Place has a "Half Grand an Hour" drawing, and Playboy uses its bunnies to hand out free chances for four spin-the-wheel drawings.

Park Place's game followed the scuttling of an announced plan to give away 22 Toyotas during November weekdays. The car giveaway was canceled shortly after Atlantic City-area dealers complained that Park Place should at least give away American-made cars.

Richard Knight, a Park Place vice president, says a similar car giveaway at the Claridge Hotel & Hi-Ho Casino next door really convinced officials to junk the idea.

"It didn't appear to us that it was worth it, and somebody beat us to the punch," he says. "We didn't want to appear to be duplicating someone else's promotion."

At the Claridge, which gave away 17 Renaults, the casino hotel allows selected patrons to choose unmarked gift boxes in a daily game patterned after television's "Let's Make a Deal." The Claridge's calls it, "Knock, Knock, Who's There?"

Gary Saltzgiver, Claridge's director of public relations, says he is planning a "Whirlwind of Money" game for next month.

The Last Great Deal Of 1981.

Right now's your last chance to get two full years of tax savings, plus a gift that's great to get. And give. So, this is not only the last Great Deal of 1981, but may be the best ever.

Last Chance To Get Two Years' Tax-Free Savings.

Next year, you'll be able to buy a new One-Year Tax Saver Certificate, but this month is the last time that you can buy a Tax Saver Certificate you can renew.

If you invest in an NCNB Tax Saver Certificate before January 1, your interest will be tax-free on your 1982 Federal Return.

Then, if you haven't earned more than $2000 interest (or $1000 on individual returns), you can renew your Tax Saver and also save on taxes in 1983.

Which means that you'll be able to get a tax break for two full years. And that's not all.

A Great Calculator To Get. Or To Give.

Right now, when you invest $2500 or more, you also get this Unisonic LC 270 Pocket Calculator, complete with an automatic shut-off, memory, liquid crystal display, and its own handy carrying case.

It's a great gift to get for yourself. Or to give someone else. And, when you compare tax-free interest rates with regular taxable investments, you can see that the Tax Saver may well be the best investment you can make.

Use the chart to compare rates.

8.34%* On Tax Saver: The Payoff.

If Your Marginal Tax Rate Is:	8.34% Tax-Free Equals This Taxable Rate:
50%	16.680%
45%	15.164%
40%	13.900%
35%	12.831%
30%	11.914%
25%	11.120%
20%	10.425%

Then come by the NCNB office in your neighborhood for all the details. But just do it soon. The days dwindle down to a precious few.

NCNB

Hurry! Like 1981, This Offer Expires December 31.

*Yield is based on 8.037% annual rate compounded monthly, with interest left on deposit until maturity. Rate good through December 24. 1-Year Term. NCNB Tax Saver Certificate pays 70% of the average annual investment yield of the most recently auctioned 52-Week T-Bill. Substantial Interest Penalty is required for Early Withdrawal. Each depositor insured to $100,000 by FDIC.

English Exhibition Cites Noted Architect's Work

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Sir Edwin Lutyens, creator of gardens, cottages and country houses, suburban developments, the Cenotaph war memorial in London's Whitehall and the Imperial City of New Delhi, is commemorated in the largest and most elaborate exhibition yet staged on the work of an English architect.

Widely praised in his lifetime, then neglected for decades after his death on New Year's Day, 1944, Lutyens is coming back into his own. Some critics believe he will one day be seen as the greatest architect England has ever produced, even above Sir Christopher Wren, who built St. Paul's Cathedral at the end of the 17th century.

Britain's state-funded Arts Council calls its exhibition at the Hayward Gallery in London "a celebration of both Lutyens and of the art of British architecture" and says it was inspired by the "tremendous interest in his work on both sides of the Atlantic."

The exhibition runs through Jan. 31, 1982.

Colin Amery, who chaired the exhibition committee and wrote the catalog, said: "As so often happens, America grasped the point about Lutyens before his reputation was reassessed in England. The Museum of Modern Art in New York put on an exhibition about him in 1978."

Lutyens was born in 1869 of Dutch and German ancestry. The son of an artist, he had nine brothers and three sisters. He suffered from rheumatic fever so badly that he never went to school.

From childhood, he was fascinated by builders and carpenters. He taught himself to draw and made his liking for building so clear that at 15 he was sent to an art school.

He spent two years there, leaving because he had no more to learn, then studied in an architect's office for one year and set up his own practice at the age of 20. From his first commission, a house in Surrey, he never looked back.

His output — revealed in 480 models, drawings, photographs, reconstructions of elements of his buildings and personal relics in the Hayward show — was prodigious.

Huge projects by him were the World War I memorials erected in France, the design and construction of New Delhi and a Roman Catholic cathedral in Liverpool, of which only the crypt was built before World War II.

Inflated costs after the war stopped the project. He also built a castle in Devon for a millionaire grocer and palaces for two Indian maharajahs.

The exhibition includes the matrimonial bed which Lutyens designed and in which all his five children were born.

He was a perfectionist who designed almost everything to go with his houses: clocks and lighting fixtures in the living rooms, seats in the gardens, desks, billiard tables, library steps and door latches.

In all three of his homes, Lutyens had the same colored interiors — black walls, green painted floor and yellow curtains.

"Black is a factor in all decoration. I often wonder why black is not more frequently used," he said.

During difficulties in his marriage to Lady Emily Lytton, daughter of a Viceroy of India, Lutyens had a 10-year love affair with Lady Victoria Sackville, who was seven years his senior. She called him MacNed and he called her MacSack, and when he did work for her she paid him in furniture and paintings.

List Of Chores Helps In Home

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

There is no place like home, especially in the winter time. These days when darkness sets in at 5 p.m. are perfect for making a list of things that need doing around the house and then performing chores, one by one.

What sort of projects? Here are several ideas culled from the thoughts of home furnishings decorating professionals. Some or all of them are bound to make your home a more comfortable or organized environment.

—Take an inventory, room-by-room, of furnishings and accessories, including appliances and home electronics by brand, model and serial number, as well as silver, artwork and other valuables.

Estimate the cost of replacement and make sure your insurance is adequate to cover it. Instant photographs of valuables like antiques and artworks are useful in case of fire or theft. Keep two copies of the list — one in your possession at home and one in a place outside the house.

Making up such a list is also a good method of taking stock. Perhaps you have something valuable that you never use and could sell.

—While you're getting your house in order, find a place to centralize home office chores such as bills paying and storage of papers.

You will need a used or new file cabinet, a desk or table to write on, some drawer space to store writing utensils and other supplies, a source of light and an office chair. Keep all family records including warranties, bills and recipts, tax records and birth certificates in the file cabinet, arranged alphabetically.

Spots for a home office include foyers, the master bedroom, a corner of the dining room or family room, the kitchen or even a walk-in closet if you have one to spare.

—Refinish or repaint an attic "find." If you don't have something with character in your own attic or cellar, go shopping for one at a rummage sale or second-hand shop. Some possibilities — a mirror with an ornate frame, a clothes tree, an old dry sink or a small table. You can get a book out of the library to learn how to do it. (Isabel O'Neil's "The Art of the Painted Finish for Furniture and Decoration" is a good one.) Or take an adult-education course that allows you to work on your own piece in the classroom.

—Rearrange your books according to subject. While you are at it, take all the books out of the bookcase, dust thoroughly and examine their condition.

—Redo the worst closet in the house — the one you can hardly open. If that is too big a challenge, choose the closet in the foyer or hall where company coats are hung.

Replace the tiny dark fixture with one that provides better light, or change the bulb. Repaint the closet or, better yet, wallpaper it in a pattern compatible with the room.

Buy some matching storage boxes for the closet shelf or do it the inexpensive way by covering plain boxes with decorative stick-on paper. Coordinated hangers also give the closet a pretty look

Country Living With Modern Design

By Jerry Bishop

This captivating styled home offers more contributions to easier and better living than it seems possible one house could supply. Each area of this design contributes to its overall livability. Note how the active living area and quiet sections of the home have been well separated. The bedroom wing is completely separated from the remainder of the house by the large entryway and split landing stairs, creating an atmosphere of privacy. There are many features to recommend this highly appealing home. The entire design radiates a cheerful, informal country atmosphere. Special attention has been given to the planning of the attached garage so that it adds instead of detracts from the exterior design of the house. The design of this comfortable home says country living at its best yet would fit well in any suburban neighborhood. Constructed of energy-efficient wood for beauty and warmth, this home offers room for a growing family at an affordable price.

The master bedroom on the upper level boasts a large private bath and huge walk-in closet, also shown, is a private deck. The two Jr. bedrooms on the main level are separated by a bath which both share, each bedroom features a private entrance to the lower deck. The large foyer also allows entrance from the back patio. The large living room has sliding glass doors that open onto a deck. The dining room is large enough for entertaining and the spacious eat-in kitchen is a delight as sunlight floods in through the glass doors that open to yet another deck. The family room has a built-in fireplace for those cozy evenings at home, there are also sliding glass doors here that open to the deck shared with the breakfast nook. The double garage allows access to the house through the family room. The Osage will provide easy care and comfortable living for the growing family.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

A few years ago I was up to my hip boots in books, letters and press releases about solar-energy houses.

Today I am being engulfed in data about log-cabin homes. The avalanche of information includes everything available on the various sizes and shapes of log cabins, but most of it concerns structures to which you contribute all or part of the labor.

While most of the log-cabin companies once were principally in the business of building and selling such houses, many of them these days are putting out do-it-yourself kits. We supply the materials, they say, all measured, cut and marked — and you supply the elbow grease. Of course, they add, we will handle as much or as little of the construction as you want.

One company, Indian Creek Corp. of Rochester, N. Y., says slightly more than half of its log-home sales are to people who do all the construction work themselves, with 20 percent having the houses partly erected and then finishing off the remainder. Another upstate New York company, Lincoln Logs Ltd. of Chestertown, even turns out what it calls passive solar log homes.

All this renewed activity in log-cabin houses is a result of the housing squeeze that has been generated by high mortgage-interest rates and increased prices, both of which have shown some signs of backing off very slightly in recent months.

Young couples finding it difficult to get into the housing market are investigating every possible avenue in the hope of discovering a solution to their problem. At first, their efforts were directed towards so-called creative financing; that is, the many new forms of loans being offered these days in place of conventional mortgages. But no matter how the mortgage loan is sliced,, it must be paid back at a high rate of interest. The alternative is cheaper housing. And log cabins, chiefly because they are smaller and without frills, offer cheaper housing, although you can get some large and pretty fancy log cabins if you have a mind (and a pocketbook) to do so.

In the case of the Indian Creek log cabins, the logs are hand-peeled in such a way that the exterior surface remains rounded but with a reduced curve. Inside, the logs are machined flat, forming a horizontal paneled interior. In place of the old style heavy mortar between the logs is a double tongue-and-groove. The solid, massive, white-pine log is engineered to be self-leveling and self-seating.

In the case of the passive solar energy log house, it does not rely on separate collectors, storage units or machine equipment. Logs themselves are natural solar collectors, the manufacturer points out, storing heat and releasing it only as temperature drops. Thick hollow-masonry walls faced with bricks, stone or other dark coating, plus a concrete floor and an underlying 14-by-16-foot rock bed, work together to absorb and radiate heat through daylight hours and start releasing it when the temperature falls after sunset.

GARDEN CLINIC

Q. The geraniums that I grow indoors during the winter often develop weak stems and fall over. How can I prevent this? (Mrs. E.S., Tabor City)

A. Keep them in a sunny window and pinch them back from time to time to encourage bushy growth. If strong natural light is not available in the home, artificial light is acceptable. Satisfactory results can be obtained if geraniums are placed 12 inches beneath a 40-watt, daylight cool fluorescent bulb.

Q. Please suggest some landscape plants with aromatic (good smelling) foliage. (R.H., Yanceyville)

A. Most conifers, particulary the cedars and junipers, have aromatic foliage. Waxmyrtle and illicium have a pleasant aroma. Several herbs could be listed but the most popular landscape plant is santolina.

Q. How much cold will broccoli and cauliflower tolerate? (C.L., Burlington)

A. Not much. Although they are cool season crops, they will not tolerate temperatures much below 29 to 32 degrees. Unlike other winter cabbage, they will be knocked out by hard freeze.

Q. I've heard that it harms a peach tree to prune it in mid-winter. Is this true? (L.L., Goldsboro)

A. Yes. A lot of injury can occur to peach trees when pruning cuts are made during November, December, January and early February. This is caused by the sap freezing and thawing, the spread of disease and some reasons still unknown. Wait til early spring to prune peach trees. You can even wait until they are in full bloom.

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — Will you please discuss in your column how to take apart the aluminum frme on the glass insert for an aluminum storm door? The frame on each corner has four dimples. Do I have to take apart the corners where the mitered corners are? I have to replace the broken glass.

A. — The corners are not meant to be separated. On the side opposite the dimples, you will find a rubber or plastic material a fraction of an inch wide. It is fitted in around the edges of the glass and is similar to the putty found around the glass in a wooden frame. Remove it, replace the glass and put back the moulding-like material or buy a new piece of it.

Q. — Please tell me how to get rid of cloudiness in crystal decanters and glasses. I have tried ammonia and vinegar with tea leaves. Neither works. Can you help?

A. — Credit my wife for the answer to this one. She says that since she took the stopper out of the decanter and stored the glasses in the cabinet open side upwards, the cloudiness has disappeared.

Q. — The wall of our bedroom begins to sweat in the fall and winter months. What causes this? It is an outside wall.

A. — There appears to be excess moisture in that room which is condensing on a cold wall. Is it a master bedroom which has a private bathroom? If so, then the warm, moist air is coming from the bathroom. Try opening the window in that room a trifle, especially after showering or bathing. An exhaust fan would be even better.

Seasons Greetings from Sanford Brick Corporation

We put our foot down about apartments being within walking distance.

Wedgewood Arms apartments are within walking distance of three shopping centers, a nursery school, a junior high school, doctors' and dentists' offices and an athletic center.
As if that wasn't enough, three major traffic arteries; 264 Bypass, Arlington Blvd., and Charles St. are close enough to be seen and not heard.
Fact is, no apartments in town can legitimately claim to be more convenient to more things than Wedgewood Arms.
And, that's not all. Because Wedgewood Arms is not only convenient, it's different in other ways, too.
Take the floorplans: they're different from anything you've ever seen. And when you add in high energy efficiency, tennis courts, swimming pool, and the neighborhood "feeling" that these apartments will give you — well, you'll just have to see for yourself.
Call us for an appointment today.

IN THE GENERAL COURT OF JUSTICE
BEFORE THE CLERK
NORTH CAROLINA
PITT COUNTY

NOTICE OF RESALE OF LAND UNDER DEED OF TRUST

Under and by virtue of the power and authority contained in that certain deed of trust dated June 8, 1973, executed by Mary Bess Atkins and duly recorded in the Office of the Register of Deeds for Pitt County, North Carolina, in Book T-41, page 780, in which W. W. Speight was named Trustee, (Edward J. Harper, II, having been duly substituted as successor trustee by instrument recorded in Book R-48, page 543, Pitt County Registry), the undersigned Substituted Trustee offered the within described property for sale and filed report of such sale on November 16, 1981, but an upset bid having been filed within the time allowed by law and the Clerk of Superior Court of Pitt County having entered an order on December 1, 1981, requiring such Substituted Trustee to resell said property, the undersigned Substituted Trustee will, at 12:00 Noon on December 29, 1981 at the front door of the Pitt County Courthouse, in Greenville, North Carolina, offer for sale to the highest bidder for cash, at public auction, upon an opening bid of $37,426.71, that certain parcel of real property and the improvements located thereon described as follows:

"BEING all of Lots Numbers 7 and 8 of Block "A" Addition No. 1, Section B of Lincoln Park Subdivision. This being the same property as shown in Map Book 11, page 16 of the Pitt County Public Registry."

The improvements on said property are included in the sale. Said sale will be made subject to all ad valorem taxes and any outstanding governmental assessments, building restrictions, and easements of record.

The last and highest bidder at the sale will be required to make a cash deposit of ten percent (10%) of the first one thousand dollars of the bid price and five percent (5%) of the balance of the bid price at said sale, pending confirmation by the Court.

This the 2nd day of December, 1981.

"A Christmas Message"

Many times during the year we fail to think of our fellow beings and are bound up in the pressure of business and the economic problems of our confused world. Too often, the holidays have passed without our realizing the season's true meaning, or taking the time to consider our fellow beings and their problems. Your friends at Grant Buick DO feel the true meaning of Christmas and hope that this message will help to instill in each of your minds the purpose of Christmas. In closing, the employees of Grant Buick, Inc., wish you a very Merry Christmas and may God bless you and your family.

Decades Later, A Light Shines Over 'Silent Cal'

By CHRISTOPHER GRAFF
Associated Press Writer

PLYMOUTH, Vt. (AP) — Keeping Cool With Coolidge is back in style again. After decades of despair, lovers of Silent Cal can come out of the closet now, thanks to Ronald Reagan's unabashed love for the nation's 30th president.

Fifty-two years after the taciturn Vermont native walked out of the White House, his portrait hangs in a place of honor in the Cabinet Room and his philosophy echoes through the Oval Office.

Even Cal himself, who was once accused of having been weaned on a pickle, might be smiling at the new glimmer being given to his presidency.

In Plymouth, where Calvin Coolidge grew up and where he is buried, attendance is up at the Coolidge birthplace, the Coolidge memorial building and at the little country store that is part of the simple Coolidge complex.

The state officials who oversee the Coolidge compound say 35 ,416 people made the pilgrimage this year to the section of Plymouth known as Plymouth Notch to see the Coolidge birthplace, boyhood home, church and grave.

That's 3,000 more people than last year, an increase attributed to the new glow given Coolidge by Reagan.

On a crisp November day, visitors were still making the drive through the mountains to see Cal's place, even though the buildings were all closed.

The Coolidge homes and museum are only open from May-October, a fact that surprises many.

But that's the way Cal would want it. Little has changed since Coolidge was buried next to his son here.

There's the Coolidge homestead, which is now furnished just the way it was when Coolidge's father administered the presidential oath to his son in 1923.

Across the dirt road from the home is the Coolidge birthplace, attached to a general store that also only opens in the summer.

Up the road is the cheese factory that Coolidge's father founded. It was operated until 1930 and has since been renovated and re-opened by Coolidge's son.

The only addition since Coolidge's death was construction of a visitor's center in 1972 that houses a small museum and gift shop.

Cal would be pleased that so little has changed. As he said in 1928.

Space-Age Machines Are Whirring Everywhere

Video Games Dazzle All Ages

By SCOTT KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

Lunchtime. Broadway at 52nd Street. New York City.

John Henry Davis fishes two bits from the jacket of his navy blue suit. He's an attorney, 36 years old and married. His hobby is playing the piano.

But today he's in a video game arcade, elbow to elbow with teen-agers in worn jackets and blue jeans. And he's ready for battle.

The game is Space Invaders.

On the screen, he's protected by four barricades, armed with a laser and facing 55 similarly armed galactic invaders moving back and forth in five neat rows over Earth.

His job: Dodge the invaders' lasers and pick them off one by one. The catch: The invaders move closer and closer, their shots rip away more and more of the barricades and once you've knocked off one batch another arrives.

Davis purses his lips. His brow wrinkles. He shakes his head between waves of invaders. Finally, mercifully, "Game Over" appears on the screen. But Davis reaches for another quarter.

"I'm still a kid," he explains sheepishly.

Rat-a-tat-a-tat-a-tat!

Brring! Brrring! Brrring!

Ka-Boom! Ka-Boom! Ka-Boom!

It's the invasion of the video games. Glowing shapes of extraterrestrial beasts are exploding and whirring in arcades, delicatessens, shopping malls, taverns and convenience stores around the world.

These jazzed up, computer-era versions of pinball have won the hearts of a generation weaned on television — and a few weaned on radio as well.

This year, Americans will pump 11.2 billion quarters into the machines for a chance to fire at armed globs from outer space or outwit a monster with a computer chip for a brain. And the games are challenging the movie of the week on a growing number of TV sets.

Fascination with them is apparent even in the staid New England Journal of Medicine, where a physician claimed he had discovered a new ailment, "Space Invaders Wrist." Some home video game players complain of "Asteroids Finger."

But the real worry is not physical. Video games have resurrected the old debate over pool tables and cruising Chevys: What are these things doing to our children?

Are the games harmless, even relaxing, entertainment? Or are they breeding grounds for tomorrow's compulsive gamblers, Maypoles for loitering, drug sales and other sinister doings?

Psychiatrists and child experts are divided on the questions. So are the dozens of U.S. communities, from Lakewood, Colo., to Irvington, N.Y., that have tied to tilt the whole operation.

Some communities, like Coral Gables, Fla., have banned the games outright. Others have limited the number of video games in arcades, imposed licensing fees as high as $1,000 per machine or placed stiff requirements on supervision at amusement parlors and confined the parlors to high-density commercial areas.

In Oakland, Calif., this month, the City Council declared pinball parlors and video arcades off-limits to youngsters during school hours and after 10 p.m. on school nights.

The issue is even before the U.S. Supreme Court, which has agreed to decide the constitutionality of an ordinance in Mesquite, Texas, that bars children 17 or younger from playing video and pinball games at amusement centers.

Cities that prohibit kids from playing the games are overreacting, says Elissa Benedek, a child psychiatrist in Ann Arbor, Mich.

"Doing something like that just makes it more interesting and fun for kids to do," says Ms. Benedek, who allows her own children to play the games.

Arcades are mostly a male province where martial games predominate. But more females are putting their quarters into games like Pac-Man and Centipede, two in a genre of games without spaceships.

Sherry Turkle, an MIT associate professor of sociology, says the games emphasize power, aggression and manipulation. But they also give kids confidence in their ability to master complex things and overcome a fear of computers, she adds.

Other psychiatrists, however, say the games encourage a kill-or-be-killed philosophy and provide instant titillation not always available in the world outside the arcade.

In the worst scenario, the games are turning out a whole generation of bug-eyed vidkids who face the real world with a pocketful of quarters, and respond only to beeps and whistles.

One champion vidkid in Fresno, Calif., turned into a vid-businessman. Last year, Greg Davies played Asteroids for 31 hours on one quarter — a record at the time.

Now Davies is 19, a college student, night manager at a pizza parlor and owner of six video games in pizza parlors.

"You might spend a little too much money on the games or play them too much," Davies says. "But no matter what hobby you have, you're going to spend money. And this way, at least, parents know where their kids are."

The video game phenomenon began with Pong, a version of pingpong developed by Nolan Bushnell, founder of Atari. It was something less than an overnight success. Atari nearly went bankrupt in the early '70s and Bushnell later was ousted.

But in 1980, video game revenues zoomed into hyperspace — arcade games earned $2.8 billion, almost 10 times their 1978 earnings. And there were more than a half-million arcade video games in use, four times the number in 1977.

Atari's sales figures, $3 million in 1973, are projected to top $710 million this year, making it the world's largest video game producer.

The business usually works like this: A distributor buys a machine for $1,500 to $3,000 and leases it to the owner of an arcade for 50 percent of the machine's earnings.

The games earn an average of $100 a week, but a popular machine in a good location may swallow as much as $800, according to industry trade publications.

For game makers, the new marketing front is the home. Games already are hooked up to TV sets in 4 million households. And this Christmas manufacturers expect another few hundred-thousand homes will turn into galactic playgrounds. That still leaves more than 70 million homes to invade.

To bring the games into the living room you first need a master component, which costs $150 to $280. Then you buy casettes at $20 to $30 apiece.

Atari's 43 video casettes include versions of arcade games like Asteroids as well as backgammon, chess, checkers, basketball and golf. It expects to have 80 casettes on the market within five years. Mattel, maker of Barbie and Ken dolls, offers similar, but more expensive, games in its 26-casette Intellevision library.

The success of the home video games has lured independent casette makers into the market. Activision Inc., a Santa Clara, Calif., firm that makes casettes compatible with Atari's master component, expects sales of $100 million this year — double last year's sales.

David Leeder, 29, who teaches learning disabled high school students in Tucson, Ariz., has 16 video

Scandinavia Uses Polar Circle To Draw Tourists

By HARALD MOLLERSTROM
Associated Press Writer

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Tourist pamphleteers call it "The Top of Europe," "The Land of the Midnight Sun," "The Land of a Thousand Lakes."

Less romantically, the remote polar circle of Sweden, Norway and Finland represents money in the till to the Scandinavian neighbors' tourism officials, a real growth industry.

"Tourism is now one of the most important staple industries in the region," said Lars Florin, press spokesman of the Swedish Tourist Council. "In less than 15 years it has manifolded."

Tourism in the polar circle area, worth an estimated $150 million, counted some 350,000 tourists in 1965, the lion's share foreigners. In 1980 its worth quadrupled to $600 million, while the number of visitors increased to 1.5 million.

Covering 300,000 square kilometers, roughly one third the combined three-nation area, the region is home to only 800,000 people — 5 percent of the population. That leaves plenty of room for tourists.

The Scandinavian programs began in the 1950s when the Swedes decided to exploit the polar region as a drawing card for luxurious cruise ships filled with rich Americans.

The never-ending summer nights were the major attraction back then, when Sweden launched its 10-day "Sunlit night land cruises" — trains which offered cabins with full board. The luxurious excursions were finally abandoned in the early '60s as the number of ship-borne American millionaires dwindled to a trickle.

Since that beginning, all three nations have advertised the sun as a national asset, and Finland has done a flip-flop in its campaign to lure tourists even during the interminable, deathly black winter nights. Its latest campaign advertises "the midnight darkness."

All three have launched big projects to make their polar areas attractive, not only to bring in foreigners but to entice their own people to spend money at home in the summer and winter holidays.

Norway, at the top of the Scandinavian peninsula, has as its prime attraction the 973-foot-high North Cape cliff at the northernmost tip of Europe. A classic spot for watching the midnight sun and its beautiful fjords, it also offers rich deep-sea fishing opportunities at the Lofoten islands.

In addition, the northern rivers offer some of the best trout and salmon waters in Europe, which once made the kingdom almost a second home for a generation of British nobility.

The Finns, lagging behind their neighbors at the outset, lost to Sweden the race to exploit the midnight sun, but they have begun advertising the "Ruska" — Finnish for autumn's splash of color — as a Finnish specialty in September.

The Finns also have laid claim to Santa Claus, and a Finnish Father Christmas answers an estimated 50,000 letters a year from children around the world.

Finland has billed itself the "Land of the Thousand Lakes," again getting the jump on its Nordic neighbors who could just as easily qualify for the title. It features annual midnight-sun sailing regattas on its northern lakes and world gold-digging championships for professionals and amateurs in the village of Tankavaara.

Sweden, tennis crazy since the Bjorn Borg era of professional tennis began in the mid-1970s, has tennis courts as far north as the 68th parallel. There, a tennis enthusiast can play for 24 hours a day in summer.

And for those who'd like to take in a post-midnight round of golf, the Swedes have built a nine-hole course at the 67th parallel.

Life As It's Lived

By GAIL MICHAELS

I hate to brag, but I am always bringing home prizes for my bridge playing. Somewhere under the phone books in the middle kitchen drawer is an extensive collection; straw trivets, early American toothpick holders, crocheted matchbook covers. These are the kind of prizes you get when you continually come in low.

Having come to expect little goodies like these, I was pleasantly surprised the other night at our duplicate club's Christmas party. I still won low, but instead of an Art Deco pencil sharpener, I received a bottle of Aviance bubble bath. This was in addition to the pencil, pen, plastic key holder, and bottomless ashrtay I had already received as party favors.

Now I thought of all the prizes I have ever been awarded for low, this bubble bath was the most approriate. After a day spent chasing two wild children and two wilder cats through a house which rates a permanent spot on "Code Red," I rarely bounce into a bridge game with enough zest to count my points. It usually takes three or four cups of coffee before I can begin to recoginize the suits.

But there at my very fingertips was a product designed to pull me out of the after-five slump and endow me with boundless energy and sexiness to boot. It looked almost as promising as Coast deoderant soap. Not only might I come in above the bottom at bridge, but Phillip might even be waiting up for me when I got home.

Besides, I had always secretly longed for an Aviance night. I had yearned to tear off my flannel shirt after a full day of motherhood and be ready to do more than yawn. I wanted to be one of those women who can mop floors, bake cookies and carpool to gymnastics, then turn around and dance till 2 a.m.

I did not, however, want to waste this magic potion or dilute its effect in any way. So I waited until the evening of Phillip's office Christmas party to try it out.

I was hopeful about what might happen. Phillip was downright anticipatory.

I left the dishes soaking in the sink and retired to the bathtub where I luxuriated in the warm water while Zachary watched all his toy cars sink into the bubbles. I sustained a few bruises, but all in all it was very relaxing.

"Well," said Phillip anxiously, "how do you feel?"

I thought about that for a few minutes, then yawned. "Sleepy."

He grabbed the bottle and looked at the list of ingredients on the back. "Maybe something was left out."

"Yeah," I sniffed. "Me."

Symposium On TraumaPlanned

PHOENIX, Ariz. (UPI) — A national symposium on the treatment of trauma, the third highest killer in the nation, will be sponsored in Scottsdale, Ariz., Jan. 17-20, 1982 by the John C. Lincoln Hospital and the Lincoln Institute of Surgery and Trauma, Phoenix.

Trauma is any severe injury which disrupts the body's basic life support systems, respiration and circulation. Trauma medicine is a relatively new specialty which evolved from the rapid transport, assessment and surgical procedures developed by U.S. Army MASH units.

Brain Trust Helps Keep Humans Human

By JOE FERULLO

RENSSELAERVILLE, N.Y. (UPI) — The Institute on Man and Science is a think-tank with a Cleveland neighborhood, a small town in Pennsylvania, and the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma among its clients.

This brain trust focuses on how to keep humans human in the face of the technological revolution.

The Institute, said Martin Sullivan, its president, tries to preserve small towns and neighborhoods against the growth of technology and government. Their recent projects have included creating a new, energy-efficient village in Pennsylvania and buying out two, old company towns.

"We tend to learn while doing," Martin Sullivan, president of the institute, said from his office in the hamlet of Rensselaerville about 30 miles southwest of Albany, N.Y.

The New Village, located outside Unionville in southwest Pennsylvania, is being put together by the institute, which bought the land, and by families which give their labor to build their own homes and live as charter members of the community.

The 50 families have built an energy-efficient community center and a model house to encourage others to come in on the project.

The other towns — Stump Creek, Pa., and Corbett, N.Y. — were old company towns where people rented their homes, bought at the company store, and worked at the company plant. When the factories closed, two desolate towns remained, a situation Sullivan said is all too familiar in America's industrial belt.

"With the concept of self-help, the people renovate their homes" and, with self-help as a pre-requisite, the institute sells the houses to the families at low interest, Sullivan said.

In Stump Creek, people still used outhouses in the mid-1970s. Encouraged by their new landlords, the residents built their own municipal water system.

The institute began in 1963, on land donated by the Huycks, an old industrial family which was concerned about the tremendous growth of technology in the 1950s and early '60s.

The institute is using what it has learned in its two towns for other groups, Sullivan said. "We have a contract with the Cherokee Nation to work with them and look at their long term needs in housing and other areas" while preserving their traditions, he said.

Video Games ...

casettes in his home. One recent night he spent five hours playing Asteroids.

"You plug this thing in and you can make your TV do something," he says, adding that he'll look into educational video games when his 4-month-old daughter is older.

"Anything that gets a kid to learn to spell or learn to do math facts I'd even try in the classroom," Leeder says.

The games already have inspired video teaching aids. In Swarthmore, Pa., college students are learning trigonometry on one.

Several firms, including Texas Instruments and Mattel Toys, hope to convince parents that the video computer screen can teach children the three Rs at home — and make it fun. Home video devices offer programs in reading and grammar, mathematics and music skills.

But the video game idea has applications elsewhere. Video blackjack and five-card-draw are as popular as slot machines in the casinos at Atlantic City, N.J. The Defense Department, with Atari's help, has developed its own tabletop gunnery game to train recruits.

Meanwhile, in Atari's Sunnyvale headquarters, more than 400 engineers sharpen their own skills during coffee breaks by playing games set up in the lobbies and lounge areas.

The brains of the games are microprocessor computer chips, and researchers like those at Atari continue to use microelectronics to develop more and more intricate movements, colors and characters for video game programs.

The next major innovation will likely be games that respond to vocal commands.

"The whole area of games that will talk to you and listen to you is still a few years away, but it's something that's going to happen," says Michael Moone, Atari's president of consumer electronics.

Whatever their future, whatever their language, the games today are making bags of money.

One game, Berserk, even ends each session with an advisory any vidkid would love:

"Coin detected in pocket."

Brazilian Gems Originate With Poor Prospectors

By PETER EISNER
Associated Press Writer

CRISTALINA, Brazil (AP) — The journey of many a gemstone from Brazil to the jewelry boxes of the world begins with the nation's "garimpeiros" — mostly dirt-poor prospectors who scratch the earth and pan the streams for their day-to-day livelihood.

Less than two hours down the road from Brazil's modernistic capital, Brasilia, the ragged miners stand along the highway hawking for customers or ride their bicycles into Cristalina with sacks of uncut gemstones that supply part of this country's multimillion dollar jewelry business.

The miners here are just some of Brazil's estimated 15 0,000 "garimpeiros" — Portuguese for prospecters — who government mining officials say remain the mainstay of the nation's jewelry business, as they have for hundreds of years, despite modern techniques and clandestine gem hunting by large firms and by fortune hunters.

The government is taking steps to protect them.

Practicing long-used methods, the garimpeiros sift through rivers in search of gold or cut through the jungle in hopes of uncovering diamonds.

Most find nothing. Those who do come up with a strike may either be cheated by middlemen or simply squander what they earn, only to start prospecting again.

The average garimpeiro earns about the minimum wage in Brazil — the equivalent of about $100 a month. Here in Cristalina his home is most likely a mud hut on the outskirts of town.

There usually is a huge difference between what a garampeiro is paid for his rough-cut stones and the finished price. He usually receives a speculation price based on rapid turnover and the need to get whatever quantity of money he can as fast as possible. The middleman receiving his stones, in turn selling them to a large gem company, normally at least triples the original price, one local gem dealer said.

"I have seen cut stones of citrine (a topaz-like semi-precious gem) being sold in New York at $1 per carat when I could have purchased the same stone at three cents per carat in Brazil," he said.

Huge jewelry firms buy up large quantities of stones from the garimpeiros — emeralds, topaz, aquamarine, and diamonds being among the most popular and plentiful. Skilled craftsmen work in Brazil's major cities to turn rough-cut stones into fine jewelry — which is then sold on the domestic market, to foreign tourists, or directly overseas.

"We estimate 3,000 (metric) tons of gem exports this year, which will be worth a bit less than $100 million," said Gerobal Guimaraes, a geologist with the government National Department of Mineral Production. He said the figures include rough-cut and finished stones.

Guimaraes said, however, it was difficult for the government to monitor national gemstone production. The export figures do not always count private purchases made by buyers who can pocket their goods and carry them for cutting either here or overseas — without paying domestic taxes or facing export and customs controls.

Major foreign markets for Brazilian gems include the United States, West Germany, France, Switzerland and Japan.

Garimpeiros find Cristalina, 80 miles southeast of Brasilia, to be a region rich in emeralds, topaz, tourmalines and, more rarely now than in the past, gold. The town is also conveniently located at the intersection of two federal roads that link Brasilia with Rio de Janeiro, 700 miles to the southeast, and with the industrial center of Sao Paulo, 635 miles to the south. Both cities are important centers for the Brazilian jewelry business.

Dozens of retail and wholesale jewelry stores line the streets of this 10,000-population, sagebrush town whose name in Portuguese means crystal. But it is only one of many small towns throughout Brazil that support and are supported by jewelry prospecting.

Most shopowners here have old balance scales behind the counter, which they take out whenever a garimpeiro shows up with something to sell. They say the wiliest of garimpeiros show up only on cloudy days or at dusk, when artificial light is being used. It is harder in artificial light to see a stone's imperfections.

"I get almost everything in the shop from the garimpeiros right in this area," said one shopkeeper.

The shopkeeper offers customers immediate discounts of 30 percent or more on objects for sale. His store is frequented by diplomats and government officials from Brasilia, their limousines parked outside next to bicycles and donkey carts.

The prices in such stores vary and specialists warn there is no guarantee on quality in a business that depends on technical evluation of a gem's purity and design, among other characteristics.

Brazil, for example, has large quantities of emeralds, many of them of medium to low quality. To the unskilled eye, a gem that is flawed and inexpensive could be misrepresented by an unscrupulous salesman.

"Places like this are not a major factor in our business," said Hans Stern, founder and president of the Brazilian-based jewelry company H. Stern, with stores in 14 countries, including the United States.

"I've never been to Cristalina, but I know merchandise there is usually low quality," he said in an interview in his Rio de Janeiro corporate headquarters. "We are not happy about this, not because we are losing a sale or two, but because it reflects badly on us."

The sale of poor-quality stones, he said, could give Brazil in general a bad reputation, reflecting unfairly on his business.

Stern says his firm guarantees and registers all of his retail sales.

Stern said his buyers circulate throughout the country, contacting garimpeiros and purchasing large quantities of stones.

The Brazilian government is taking steps to both regulate gem prospecting and protect garimpeiros, who sometimes are at the mercy of buyers and wild West-like violence.

The government's Federal Savings Bank has created a Precious Stones Exchange, intended to guarantee fair-market conditions for garimpeiros, by acting as their sales agents.

Bank representatives register the prospecting finds, and send gems for evaluation to any of five regional exchange centers, said Nadir Rodriguez Pereira, a spokesman at the Federal Savings Bank headquarters in Brasilia. The bank pays roughly half of the appraised value of the gemstone in advance, then sells it on consignment at a public auction. The bank then repays the garimpeiro based on the auction price, minus the initial payment and a small commission charge.

"The garimpeiro can still sell his stones to anyone he wants," Pereira said. "It's still an experiment, but so far it's a totally positive one."

The Federal Savings Bank also has acted as agent for the nation's Central Bank on purchases of gold mined at an increasing number of major gold strikes.

Japan's Diet Holds Key To Whaling Industry

By RICHARD BILL
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — The Japanese appetite for a tasty delicacy from the sea, whale meat, has become a key link in an industry under worldwide attack.

Although the Japanese whaling fleet today remains the world's largest, it cannot satisfy demand for the meat in this nation of fish lovers. Japan therefore is forced to import whale meat from the handful of other nations that still engage in commercial whaling — in several cases buying the entire catch.

Because of quotas set by the International Whaling Commission and rising costs of whaling, Japan's own whaling industry is only a fraction of what it once was. But were the Japanese hunger for whale meat not so voracious, those few other nations still in the hunt might give it up — as some already have.

Brazil's only whaling company, Copesbra, which operates out of the northeastern port of Joao Pessao, is linked to Japanese interests. Of the 948 whales that Brazil took last year, 70 percent of the catch was consumed domestically and the rest was exported to Japan.

Peru's whaling is conducted by a Japanese-run factory in the northern port of Paita. The company, Kinkay, has a contract with the Lima government to provide 1,100 pounds of whale oil annually — to be used to lubricate military hardware. The rest of the annual catch of 320 whales, mainly Brydes, goes to Japan. Catches of Blue and Sperm whales are outlawed, although conservationists claim the company could violate the rules since there is "no real control."

Chile suspended whale hunting this year after authorities learned that the only whaling firm was processing whales aboard ship in violation of regulations. In 1980, Chile was permitted to take 188 whales.

Norway last year took 2,5 34 small Minke whales in coastal waters, of which 10 percent, or 382 tons, was exported to Japan. A small amount was bought by Czechoslovakia, Sweden and others, and the rest was consumed domestically.

South Korea's government-controlled whalers are limited to offshore areas. Last year, they were allowed to harvest 940 Minke and 19 Baleen whales, of which half was exported to Japan and half used domestically. Seoul has asked the IWC for an increase in quotas.

Spain was allowed to harvest 210 whales last year, but no figures were available on how the catch was disposed of.

Iceland was permitted to harvest 494 whales, all of which were sold to Japan. The Soviet Union, which has the world's second-largest whaling fleet, caught 3,75 6 whales — again all went to Japan.

Whaling operations by the Soviet Union and Japan, the only nation to import whale meat, account for about 60 percent of all catches.

In London, a spokesman for the International Whaling Commission, which sets each year's global quotas, insisted that whaling would not end if other nations quit supplying Japan. Martin Harvey noted that only five species may be harvested and stocks of those are plentiful.

The IWC says whaling operations provide a significant number of jobs in South America, and a ban on whaling could hurt the economies of whaling nations.

Japan, long a target of conservationists who accuse it of having hunted some species to the brink of extinction, has resisted pressure to abandon the once-thriving industry. But it acknowledges that anti-whaling movements, rising costs and international catch limits are exacting a toll.

In its heyday during the 1960s, 15,000 people worked in the industry here. Now, there are fewer than 2,500 and Japan is down from seven to just one mothership operation. Faced with massive layoffs and plummeting profits, the six Japanese pelagic whaling concerns in 1976 merged under one roof, Nippon Kyodo Hogei, in a battle for survival.

The Japanese say they would be hurt if whale imports to Japan were curtailed, but the domestic industry would survive. "In that case, we'd be forced to look for new areas of supply," said Chuichi Ohmura, vice secretary of the Japan Whaling Association.

"When I graduated from university in 1955 I was so proud to be selected as a member of the fleet. In those days whaling was Japan's most prestigious industry," recalls Ohmura. "We are accused of unnecessary slaughter, but we Japanese hunt whales only for food — and stocks are more than abundant."

"The countries that accuse us, such as the United States and Britain, have a long tradition of whaling. They've stopped now, but they ignore the fact that they hunted whales — not for food — but for oil and other commercial reasons. I just don't understand that logic," Ohmura said in an interview.

Among nations most committed now to preservation of whales is the United States, which in the peak whaling years of 1820-1860 plied the Pacific and, according to the JWA, decimated whaling stocks. It was partly because American whalers sought ports for their ships that Japan emerged from three centuries of self-imposed isolation.

It was also the United States that urged Japan to resume whaling after World War II, when Gen. Douglas MacArthur, commander of the U.S. occupation forces, saw it as a means of helping fend off starvation in the defeated nation.

Ohmura is skeptical of the intentions of the IWC. Of 34 nations in the organization, only nine still roam the high seas for whales. Some unlikely countries are members — Costa Rica, Oman, St. Lucia, Dominican Republic, India, Egypt and Switzerland.

"The anti-whaling advocates enlist any country they can. But what right do they have to decide another nation's fate? Besides, they have nothing to lose if a worldwide moratorium is passed. We do," Ohmura said.

A JWA pamphlet says any proposal for a moratorium "blatantly violates the spirit and objectives" of the IWC, and adds, "To press for adoption of the whaling ban merely by the tyranny of votes without any scientific basis will lead nowhere but to the collapse of the IWC."

The decline of whaling in Japan may be best illustrated at Taiji, the southwest coastal town where the industry dates back 700 years and which is trying now to develop tourism, with a museum and other attractions to preserve its heritage as a whaling town.

Traditional whale meat dishes are offered to lure visitors, but because of insufficient supply the town must bring in whale meat from outside. Many Taiji men still hunt in coastal waters — mainly for pilot whales and dolphins — but few families can afford the $22 supermarket price for whale steak or dolphin entrails.

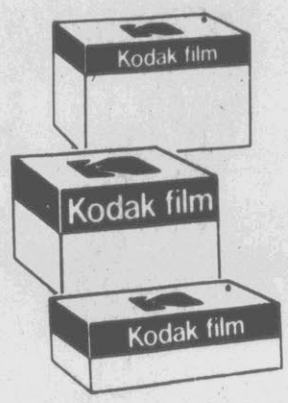

The 1981 IWC quota for Japan is 3,577 Minke whales in the Antarctic, 501 Brydes whales in coastal waters, and 1,678 Minke whales in coastal waters for a five-year period ending in 1984, with no more than 421 per year.

Communists Give Industry More Freedom

Chinese Try Industrial Taxes

BY JOHN RODERICK
AP Special Correspondent

CHENGDU, China (AP) — Sichuan Province, testing ground for new concepts in China's march toward modernization, has come up with another new idea for the Communist state: industrial taxes.

The experiment involves reducing government regulation of a factory, which then pays the state a fixed amount of taxes on profits, keeping the rest for development, worker welfare and profit-sharing. The factory is free to operate as it wishes without getting government approval.

Under China's current profit-sharing system, a reform instituted a few years ago, factories have some flexibility but the government still takes a hand in planning and operations. Before that, the central government approved all decisions.

Provincial officials say the taxation plan has been successfully applied in the big Chengdu Cotton Mill for nearly two years.

Deputy Gov. He Haoju, 59, says that if the results continue to be good, the idea might be adopted nationally, as was a previous Sichuan innovation — decentralization of the economy to give industries greater voice in their management and workers a share of profits from their labor.

China's most populous province with 98 million people, Sichuan is famous for its spicy food, its partiality for revolutionary initiatives — it was a leader in overthrowing the monarchy in 1911 — and as the home of Communist Party Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping, who is as peppery as the cuisine.

When Sichuan's then-governor, Zhao Ziyang, came up with the idea of decentralization and profit-sharing in 1978, it was only natural that it should catch Deng's attention. Although a sharp departure from standard Marxist dogma, it fit so well with Deng's own pragmatic approach to China's economic problems that he arranged for Zhao to become premier, a role in which he could apply his concept countrywide.

Zhao moved to Peking in 1979, but the people he left in charge here appear to be fired with the zeal for reform. They say the taxation idea yields more benefits for everyone and consequently is the wave of the future.

"The factory was responsible for its own profit and loss," says He. "It was the first in the country to try this system and it has developed faster than it did in the past. It made more, and had more, after paying its taxes, than ever before."

Before 1977, he says, the mill's annual profit was little more than 20 million yuan — $11.7 million — all of which went to the state. During its profit-sharing period from 1978 to 1979, the factory made 30 million yuan, of which it was able to keep 4.5 million.

In 1980, the first full year of the tax system, the factory earned 60 million yuan. Of this, the mill kept 10 million, distributing part of it among the workers as a bonus and alloting some to the welfare fund but devoting the biggest share to factory development.

The tax, set experimentally at a little more than 70 percent of profits over a three-year period, gives both managers and workers greater flexibility than under the profit-sharing system. Once taxes are paid, they are free to operate as they see fit.

This is a contrast to pre-1977 days when the state decided everything and often rejected pleas for more money and raw materials. Now, plant managers meet with increasingly independent-minded workers' congresses to plan work programs.

The workers can veto management proposals by majority vote, as in the recent case of a management request for 100,000 yuan, about $59,000, to aid flood victims. The congress overruled that and approved five times the amount.

The workers' congress also elects its own officers and is able to reject, on sufficient grounds, managers chosen by Peking. It can set work hours, pay scales and division of the profits — a good deal of which goes into worker housing — without higher approval.

"The facts prove that so far, the orientation is correct," says the deputy governor, speaking of the tax experiment. "So we shall continue."

"We also are continuing the profit-sharing system in about 300 provincial factories," he adds. "All are making money. In fact, under either system a profit seems guaranteed. The difference is that under profit-sharing the state extends loans if a company is in difficulty. Under taxation, the company can go out and borrow from the banks, without prior approval."

During the 1966-1976 Cultural Revolution, Sichuan took an economic beating. Zhao's readiness to tamper with hidebound Marxist formulas pleased native-son Deng, especially when the red ink turned to black. Now both he and Zhao are watching the taxation experiment with intense interest.

For the new leaders here — no one claims personal credit for the present reforms — it may be hard to match Zhao's record: a 100 percent increase in industrial production and a 30 percent boost in overall production over a four-year period.

Yenan Spirit No Longer Rules

By JOHN RODERICK
AP Special Correspondent

YENAN, China (AP) — "The earth and the sky rotate. Heaven is different," says 82-year-old Feng Yuxing contemplating human politics and earthquakes, both of which he has suffered through in his long lifetime.

The same can be said of Yenan, symbol and cradle of Chinese communism.

What would Mao Tse-tung have thought if he knew that the "Yenan spirit" of self-reliance and hard work has gone out of fashion in a nation ruled by hard-headed realists who believe in as much help from abroad as they can get?

Mao, who died in September 1976, would, if he returned, find Yenan vastly different physically and politically from those long ago days in 1937 when he led the remnants of the Chinese Communists here to safe refuge at the end of an epic 8,000-mile retreat since known as "The Long March."

Astute politician that he was, he might not be astonished that students now dare criticize him for his mistakes, particularly those committed during the turbulent, Maoist-dominated 1966-76 Cultural Revolution.

But almost always the impossible dreamer, he might well grimace to see his vision of a New China — to which he dedicated an erratic lifetime — shattered on the anvil of economism, the doctrine that higher wages, shorter hours, more incentives and higher living standards come before Communist idealism.

The primitive Red capital of 10,000 caves on the edge of the Gobi which I knew 36 years ago has faded into history, replaced by a noisy modern city. But over the caves and the hills there hovers the other Yenan spirit, that of an idealism which bound together youths from widely different backgrounds in a crusade to wipe out poverty and inequality from the ancient Chinese earth. They demonstrated repeatedly that they would suffer any indignity, resort to any strategy, even lay down their lives for this dream.

I met the wispy-bearded Feng Yuxing on the same old dusty road where Mao used to stroll without a bodyguard on a fair winter day. The old man and his 75-year-old brother, Feng Yungcheng, were smoking their pipes and enjoying the passing scene. A towel tied around his head, his arms akimbo, a smile creasing his leathery face, he acted as if he fully expected to meet me.

"We were both militiamen," he says, indicating his brother, "when Chairman Mao and the others arrived here at the end of the Long March.

"We fought the local bandits. Later, I became propaganda chief for Yenan City. When we had to leave Yenan in 1947, I was political commissar of a unit."

Had he known about the Americans in Yenan in 1945, when I was there?

"Oh, yes, my brother and I used to go up there once in a

Army Chaplain Isn't Ordinary

FORT HOOD, Tex. (AP) — Not only does Army chaplain and captain the Rev. Nicholas J. Kusevich conduct Sunday services in unusual settings, but his garb is also out of the ordinary.

Using the hood of a jeep as an altar, he holds services in the field wearing an olive-drab vestment his mother made from an Army parachute, protected from mud and rain that would ruin a cloth garment.

Though his clothing may be unorthodox, the chaplain of the 17th Engineer Battalion, 2nd Armored Division, in Fort Hood, is really about as "orthodox" as they come. He is one of only 10 Eastern Orthodox chaplains in the Army.

"It baffles me that some people don't even know what an Eastern Orthodox is," says Kusevich, 40. "Until recently, even the Army regulations referred to us as Protestant, rather than Orthodox.

"I hold an Eastern Orthodox Divine Liturgy every Sunday," he adds. "There are so few Eastern Orthodox priests in the service that a lot of people don't even realize I'm here. That really distresses me because the next closest Eastern Orthodox church is 50 miles away.

"I'm also concerned because I found a lot of people don't really know what the religion is about or who we are," says Kusevich, whose parents were Romanian and Yugoslavian. "But I have no desire to live in either of those countries. I am an American, and I feel I have a great contribution to make to America — to share and to gain understanding.

"I wear a lot of hats at my job here," he says. "I'm responsible for the spiritual needs of 700 soldiers of all religious backgrounds. Regardless of their faith, I still try to relate to them as a chaplain."

Kusevich was graduated from St. Vladimir's Seminary in Crestwood, N.Y., in 1969 and was ordained in July of that year.

"I tried to enlist in the Army then," he recalls. "It was during Vietnam and I thought if I went I could have a greater understanding for the members of the congregation who would also go. I felt they would be able to relate to me better."

But Kusevich had a hard time persuading his bishop, who had to release him in order for him to join. In the meantime, he was given a church in Akron, Ohio. He continued applying for active duty and after five years was granted permission to become a chaplain. He joined the Army in January 1974.

Kusevich spent his first year in the service at Fort Campbell, Ky., then went overseas for a one-year tour in Korea. He returned to the United States for a 2½-year tour at Fort Bragg, N.C., and it was there he decided he wanted to try the civilian world again.

"I'm a working priest," he says. "I felt like I was being bogged down with Army paperwork, so I asked to be released from active duty. It took six months for the bishop to get me released.

"I was made deacon of a church in Bridgeport, Conn. The building was falling apart, and it seemed like I spent most of my time fixing it up, rather than being with my congregation. Six months later I began wondering if the Army would take me back. It wasn't easy, but I got back in," he adds.

Kusevich attended the Chaplain School at Fort Monmouth, N.J., went on tactical exercises in Germany and then was assigned to Fort Hood.

"The Army has been very good to me and I have great respect for it," he says. "I'm glad to be back."

'Yenan Spirit' ...

He pauses, squints hard at me, and exclaims: "Aiya! I met you then. You took my picture!"

We shook hands warmly at this sudden revelation, but I went away scratching my head. My albums indeed show a man who looks like Old Feng, white beard and all. But in 36 years, wouldn't he have aged a bitmore? The mystery persists.

The U.S. Observation Group, better known as the Dixie Mission, was my home during the six months spent in Yenan. Headed by a ramrod-straight New Englander, Col. Ivan Yeaton, it consisted of three officers and six men whose main job was acting as liaison between the Communists and the American embassy in Chungking, wartime capital for the Nationalists.

During my stay, Mao came to sample Christmas dinner and watch the movies. His favorites starred comedians Laurel and Hardy. Though Yeaton, a cavalryman, kept a tight rein on things, the mood was relaxed and the laughter frequent.

The American flag flew there, 34 years before Washington officially recognized the People's Republic. It was a period of friendship and good will, soured after 1949 by the wars in Korea and Indochina.

All that is left of the Dixie Mission today is a set of eight caves, their paper windows broken, mud and debris strewn in front of them. Whittlesey Hall, the old recreation center, and my cave, along with a dozen others, are now the site of a middle school.

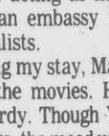

But not all is lost. An enlarged photograph of the hall and the mission, including Dr. Ma Hai-teh, the American George Hatem, and myself, now decorates the handsome local museum. Absent is Huang Hua, then our liaison chief, now vice-premier and foreign minister. But Ling Ching, my interpreter, is there, grinning broadly. He heads the Chinese U.N. Mission today.

A feeling of nostalgia hit me on a tour of the caves of the military compound. It was there that handsome Marshal Yeh Chen-ying, now a Communist Party vice-chairman, briefed the group of four foreign correspondents, of which I was one, who had flown in from Chungking on a cold, dry winter day in 1945.

Environmental Forces See '81 As Losing Boom

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — To hear environmentalists talk, 1981 was the year the "rape, ruin and run" boys took over Washington.

Ronald Reagan became president and brought the nation Interior Secretary James Watt and a new team committed to less red tape, more energy development and a scaled-down bureaucracy.

The halls of the Interior Department were no longer the haunts of environmental types in blue jeans. In their place were men in three-piece suits from oil, mining and timber companies.

National environmental organizations saw it as an all-out assault on laws to protect the nation's air, water and pristine wilderness. The Reagan administration, meanwhile, defines environmentalism as closed factories, declining productivity and "no-growth."

Watt became a target for editorial cartoonists, who helped make him one of the best-known members of the Cabinet, an accomplishment for the head of a department that normally attracts little attention east of the Mississippi River.

He also became a big draw on the Republican fund-raising circuit — so much in demand, aides say, that he will spend half his time next year on the road raising money for GOP candidates.

In one vintage-Watt speech, the secretary attacked the House of Representatives as being "riddled with a bunch of liberals," who opposed development of the nation's resources such as building dams and reservoirs.

His statements and actions prompted 1.1 million people to demand his ouster in the largest petition drive ever directed at a Cabinet member. But throughout the furor, Reagan has stood solidly behind Watt, saying the secretary "has been doing what I think is a common-sense job in the face of some environmental extremism that we've suffered from."

All environmental groups reported a surge in membership in 1981. The Sierra Club said its rolls grew more than any other year since it was founded in 1892 — topping 250,000 members. The gains outstripped those of the glory years of the early 1970s.

Citing what he called "40 to 50 years of bad government," Watt began by firing all but one appointed official at his department. He brought in people dedicated to more oil and gas drilling, more timber cutting and more coal mining on public lands.

Among other actions, the interior secretary:

—Proposed a five-year schedule to open virtually all the U.S. coast for oil and gas drilling. The plan to auction 875 million acres of offshore land was so sweeping that some oil companies said it was too large.

—Reorganized the Office of Surface Mining, which regulates coal strip mining, by closing five regional offices and eliminating nearly 57 percent of the enforcement staff. He said the states were taking over enforcement. Opponents said Watt wanted to gut the program.

—Scheduled a lease sale of 2 million acres in Alaska's National Petroleum Reserve, a first for the area; and pushed to open another 100 million acres of Alaska land, including national forests and wildlife refuges, to oil drilling.

There were mutterings among Watt's supporters that he may be moving too fast. Privately, some oilmen worried his go-for-broke tactics might backfire.

Watt has had to backtrack on several initiatives:

—He proposed drilling in four basins off the Northern California coast, but withdrew the effort, at least until 1983, after the state GOP chairman protested it would hurt the party in the 1982 election.

—He promised to begin issuing oil and gas leases in wilderness areas. But in November when the first leases outraged Congress, Watt agreed to a moratorium until next June.

—He wanted a moratorium on purchases of park and wilderness areas, but Congress would not go along.

Environmentalists, who placed many of their number in the Carter administration, are now fighting defensive actions in Congress and the courts. And for the most part, Reagan has been winning on budget issues, trimming government outlays on environmental efforts.

The Council on Environmental Quality, for example, which is described as the environmental conscience of the White House, saw its staff cut by 60 percent and barely escaped abolition.

Conservationists were so alarmed by budget cuts at the Environmental Protection Agency that they formed a Save EPA Committee to fight efforts they said would erase a decade of gains in air and water quality.

Opponents dubbed Anne Gorsuch, Reagan's choice as EPA head, the "Ice Queen" because of her steely managerial style and arms-length approach to the career staff.

To make EPA regulations less burdensome for industry, she has proposed revising the rules governing air pollution, hazardous chemical dumps and discharge of toxic chemicals into waterways. All the revisions are opposed by environmentalists.

And environmentalists say Mrs. Gorsuch has dragged her feet on the government's newest environmental program — the $1.6 billion Superfund effort to clean up chemical dumps. She denies there's been any unnecessary delay, saying she needed time to review what she considers a top priority program.

While environmental issues dominated the news in 1981 to a greater extent than in a decade, 1982 promised more of the same.

Three of the biggest battles will occur in Congress where lawmakers must rewrite the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act and the Endangered Species Act. The administration and industry groups want changes, and environmentalists are preparing for a fight.

The ups and downs of the numbers dominated consumers' lives in 1981.

Interest rates went up. Income taxes went down.

Unemployment went up. Housing sales went down.

The Consumer Price Index went up. But the rate of inflation came down.

The changing numbers meant delight or disaster — depending on what you wanted to do.

The high interest rates, for example, were good news for savers. Certificates of deposit and money-market funds offered double-digit yields, even for people without a lot of money to invest.

But the same high interest rates were bad news for people who wanted to buy homes. Would-be borrowers faced mortgage rates near 20 percent — if they could find someone willing to lend.

The biggest news of 1981 for most consumers was the tax cut. Withholding rates were trimmed by 5 percent Oct. 1 — the first of three reductions. The All Savers Certificate was created, offering up to $2,000 in tax-free interest for a married couple.

But some experts warned that budget cuts and anti-regulatory moves by Congress and the administration would mean less protection for consumers.

"There are a lot of defective, hazardous products out there that we are going to be unable to do anything about," said Sam Zagoria, one of five members of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, about the agency budget cuts.

James C. Miller, new chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, suggested a possible review of regulation requiring advertisers to substantiate their claims, and consumer activists were quick to respond.

Rhoda H. Karpatkin, executive director of Consumers Union, said such a change "opens the door to the massive selling of defective, shoddy merchandise."

Ralph Nader said the Reagan administration was ignoring consumers and "is out to destroy the rule of law as it applies to corporations."

An FTC proposal on used cars was a key issue for many consumer advocates. The agency suggested used car dealers be required to disclose known defects in vehicles. The industry said the regulation wasn't needed and would boost prices, and launched a lobbying campaign against it.

Legislation passed in 1980 gives Congress the right to veto FTC proposals under certain conditions, and the used car rule was the first such case. Committees of the House and the Senate approved a veto, but a vote by the full Congress was delayed until next year.

Meanwhile, the Transportation Department decided to rescind a rule requiring air bags or automatic seat belts in new cars. The National Association of Independent Insurers filed suit to block the move.

And the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration announced it was considering easing the requirement that car bumpers withstand a crash at 5 mph. A staff report concluded the rule "costs consumers more than it saves them." The insurance industry disagreed, saying motorists want stronger bumpers. No decision was reached.

Consumers, for their part, worried about the economy in 1981 as the nation slipped into recession.

The Conference Board reported consumer confidence declined in November for the third month in a row. The board's monthly survey of 5,000 households also showed people were reluctant to buy big-ticket items like cars and appliances and almost half of those questioned said jobs are "hard to get."

Clinic Treats Horses

By CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN
Associated Press Writer

NAPERVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Dr. Tom Phillips placed a 9-pound stone, almost as big as a bowling ball, on his desk.

"I got this out of a horse, and he lived," he said. "It was formed in the intestines by calcium deposits."

The lame, the colicky, and the diseased are brought to Phillips' Illinois Equine Hospital and Clinic, located amid cornfields 35 miles southwest of Chicago.

About 2,000 horses a year from throughout the Midwest pass through the 21-stall facility with its hydraulic-tilt operating table, padded recovery stalls, X-ray examining room and isolation rooms.

Seventy percent of the equine patients come from the racing industry. Others are hunters, jumpers and show horses.

Most of the work is with lameness, either for evaluation or surgery to repair knee chips and fractures with new orthopedic techniques of using metal plates and screws.

It used to be that race horses with broken legs were simply "put down." But Phillips, who opened his hospital in 1965, is saving many of them to race again.

Colic (abdominal problems) takes a high toll of horses. Of the 14 operations for such trouble yearly at the hospital, 63 percent are saved, said Phillips, whose facility is on call 24 hours a day.

"Dewan Keyes was a thoroughbred who won a quarter-million dollars as a 2-year-old and then was stricken by twisted intestines," recalled Phillips, who was a graduate and a professor of veterinary medicine at the University of Illinois. "When we got him he was in severe pain. A horse has 35 feet of intestines. After surgery, Dewan Keyes returned to racing."

Phillips' in-clinic staff includes Joe Foerner, who in 1971 was elected a Fellow of the American College of Veterinary Surgeons, and Bill Barclay, who had a three-year teaching residency at Cornell in surgery and medicine.

An offshoot of the clinic is an equine field service where a separate staff makes "barn calls."

Foerner is also consultant at Brookfield Zoo near Chicago.

"I've amputated a toe of a kangaroo, bone-plated a fractured femur of a tiger, removed the tumor from the nose of a rhino and filled toe cracks of another, fixed a knock-kneed giraffe, delivered a set of twins to an antelope and retrieved an eye cup of a performing dolphin that had swallowed it. It's very interesting work," said Foerner.

Hospital services, including surgery and an average stay of eight to 10 days, usually cost about $1,000, said Phillips.

The biggest bill of $5,000 was run up by the hospital's all-time star boarder — Shirley, a 19-year-old, 6,400-pound Indian elephant.

She broke a hind leg in September 1980 while performing for Circus Vargas in Chicago.

Preemies Gain Fat Faster

BOSTON (AP) — A premature baby fed infant formula gains fat three times faster than a fetus in its mother's womb, and the condition may contribute to obesity later in life, doctors say.

Doctors from The Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto described their findings in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

The doctors observed 13 premature babies each weighing an average of 2½ pounds at birth. Each day, the babies gained fat at a rate of 5.4 grams for each kilogram of their weight. Doctors believe fat adults have more fat cells, or larger size fat cells than normal-size people, and these patterns may be established early in life.

Driver Records The Stars

By JUDITH CAPAR
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Trolley driver Gary Watson is star-struck, and has 5 ,200 pictures of himself with celebrities to prove it.

During the day, he's the amiable transit operator, working rush hour routes through the poor and working class neighborhoods of west and southwest Philadelphia.

But when the stars come out, he's the suave man-about-town, who will bluff his way into the Academy Awards or arrive at the Studio 5 4 disco in New York in his 195 3 Bentley, hoping to capture a moment with people he has admired since childhood.

Watson, 35 , is not just another paparazzi, those free-lance photographers who take pictures of celebrities whether they like it or not. He's really the star of his own photo, slide and taped interview collection.

It was the gift of a rose that charmed Princess Grace into posing with Watson during one of her frequent visits back to Philadelphia, her home town.

Watson has a style — be polite, ask permission for the photograph, be articulate and act and dress the part — which he says is why he has been able to upstage others of his trade.

Not to mention that he can be as crafty as his nickname, "The Fox."

"I'm the guy who wears a tuxedo. I'm the guy who drives a Rolls-Royce, and I'm the guy who has a dialogue to complement my interests in getting in a lot of places," he says.

He once gained entry to the New York Film Critics Awards by posing as the publisher of a fictitious magazine and was seated at a table next to Peter Ustinov.

He also cultivates a star's chauffeurs and maids, police and security guards, all people he says other photographers avoid.

Watson hasn't sold any of his pictures because he says he doesn't want to cheapen his collection. But he does admit to planning a book about his adventures and has been approached about a movie.

"The gratification of sharing a moment with a Ted Kennedy or a Jackie Kennedy, these moments are precious moments," he says. "Charlton Heston, I held his Oscar. Hey, I've never held an Oscar before and he let me hold it!"

"I have my own source of gold and diamonds," Watson says. "I was able to say that these are the things I'm going to do in life."

And, one of those things was to buy a Rolls-Royce manufactured Bentley.

"I told my mother when I was 20 years old I was going to buy a Rolls-Royce and I did it when I was 27," he says.

Since he began tracking the famous in 1968 at a Poor Peoples Campaign March, Watson has spent nearly $30,000 for cameras, film, transportation, hotels and fees of up to $100 a day for the friends he takes along to snap the pictures.

It eats up a good portion of the $17,000 he earns as a trolley driver, but he says his wife, a hospital administrative assistant, controls the budget.

Plus, he thinks his book and the potential of a movie will eventually bring in some money. If he can recoup his $30,000 investment, he says he'd be gratified.

Not all of Watson's experiences, however, have been star-studded. There was the night he spent several hours in a New York City police station after decking a guard who had shoved him at the 1979 Tony Awards. They eventually dropped charges against each other.

And not all of the stars have been cooperative. Lee Marvin, in town for a television taping, refused Watson's request, but Watson says Marvin later relented.

Workers Minister To Poor

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The door of the Catholic Worker soup kitchen bangs open. In staggers a drunk, swearing and looking mean. He lurches across the room, crashing into tables and chairs.

The ragged men and women who have come for a free breakfast cower in the shadows, hiding from his intoxicated rage. But the slim, long-haired young woman in charge of the kitchen grinds out her cigarette and walks up to him.

"You've been drinking, John. You know the rules," she says, looking into his wild red eyes. "You have to leave."

The drunk grabs a chair and slams it on the floor next to her. They stand face to face, hers young, angelic; his gap-toothed, unshaven. The girl doesn't blink.

John backs toward the door and leaves.

So begins another day in the life of the Catholic Worker movement, a day of begging for food, stirring soup, folding and stamping newspapers, caring for people others shun, and then, praying for the strength to do it all again tomorrow.

From the time she started the first Catholic Worker "house of hospitality" in 1933 until she died a year ago at 83, Dorothy Day's life was filled with the noise, dirt and strife of the streets. Many only lamented the life of the poor; she lived it.

To Dwight MacDonald, the critic and author, she was "one of those surprises that makes life life," a woman who fed and sheltered thousands but never had a nickel herself, who was jailed eight times for civil disobedience, who swore allegiance to the church and attended Mass daily.

Today there are about 40 Catholic Worker houses across the nation. The movement's philosophy, a blend of pacificism and Catholicism, is expounded by the gritty, one-cent Catholic Worker newspaper, a sometime monthly with a circulation of almost 100,000.

Although the New York workers are best known, others are just as active. In Los Angeles, for instance, a community of 20 workers runs two houses, The Catholic Agitator newspaper, a soup line, a food co-op and legal and medical clinics.

Some of the work is more political than charitable. In Des Moines, workers were arrested last year for splattering blood on a sign at a military base. They also marched on the state capital with antiabortion groups.

Although its radicalism has limited the breadth of its appeal, Thomas Merton, the author-monk, said that if not for Dorothy Day's movement he would not have become a Catholic.

When Dorothy Day died last year, friends of the workers were worried. "They asked, 'What are you going to do now?,'" recalls a worker.

"'We're going to bury her,' we told them."

It was an answer Dorothy Day would have liked. She believed the movement was inspired by good works, not her personal magnetism.

"The Catholic Worker has always believed that, besides talking and theorizing and writing theological tomes about what it means to be a Christian, you have to start living it yourself," says Jeff Gneuhs, a young Dominican priest who lives and works at Maryhouse, one of two houses the workers run here.

Dressed in faded jeans and a dirty sweatshirt, he slouches in a chair with his feet up on an old gray desk, gazing out the window at the streets of the Lower East Side ghetto.

"If you see someone who's hungry you should feed him, not wait for the government to do it," he says.

Another worker, Frank Donovan, puts it this way:

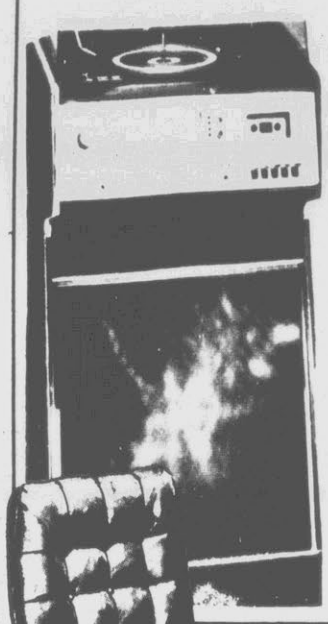

Deeply wounded people may never fully recover their equilibrium, "but if they have someplace to go and someone to help them, they'll get by." Donovan started "coming around" to help out at the house 14 years ago.

THE GOVERNMENT'S LETTING EVERYBODY IN ON INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS!

Thanks to new government regulations, even people covered under company Pension and Keogh plans can soon take advantage of the tax-free Individual Retirement Account!

Beginning January 1, 1982, every working man or woman can save money without paying a penny of it for taxes until retirement! By then, most people are usually in a lower tax bracket. So for as little as a $20 per month deposit, your IRA savings will earn at a variable interest rate tied to the discounted 91 day U.S. Treasury Bill rate.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO WAIT FOR RETIREMENT TO BENEFIT FROM IRA.

You can set aside as much as $2,000 a year and deduct that amount from your Income Tax! Up to $4,000 if you're married and both earning an income!

Various plans available including payroll deduction, direct deposit from savings or checking, monthly payment plan — all for as little as a $20.00 per month deposit.

Act early, and you'll maximize your IRA earnings. And when you're ready to enjoy retirement, you can receive your funds as early as age 59½ or as late as 70½. You'll get your money in a lump sum or in equal installments over your life expectancy. Let your money lead a tax "sheltered" life. Set up an IRA account at Peoples Bank.

Shoplifters Get Anti-Theft Class In New Penalty

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — This city has established a school for shoplifters.

Instead of going to jail, a first-time offender has the option of paying $35 to attend a six- to eight-hour deprogramming class that counsels him or her on how to stop shoplifting. The charge is dropped if the class is completed, saving the shoplifter from a conviction record and a minimum of a $50 fine and probation.

City prosecutor Jack Schrimsher says the program is supported by retailers and is being financed entirely from the shoplifters' fees. The classes are useful to city officials because they provide information on the type of people who shoplift and what they steal. About 2,500 first-time shoplifting arrests are made each year in the city.

The program started last May and the one-day classes are usually scheduled for Saturday so that those attending will not have to take time off work. In a sampling of four classes, only 12 of 46 reported themselves as unemployed, with others listing jobs ranging from accountant to cab driver.

The majority of shoplifters have a checkbook, a credit card or enough cash to pay for what they take when they go into a store, notes Schrimsher. In the four-class study, 25 of the shoplifters stole articles of apparel, while only 11 took food or medicine.

The typical shoplifter doesn't fit the stereotype of a criminal, says Schrimsher. Most shoplifters are not people with bad records, or poor people. Many of them don't know why they stole, and finding out why is a big relief. Among the reasons are having a poor self-image, seeking attention or getting even with someone, he explains.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
1981 by Chicago Tribune

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—We seem to create disasters out of the most commonplace situations. The other night we had the following auction:

East	South	West	North
1 ♢	Dble	Pass	1 ♠
Pass	2 ♠	Pass	4 ♠
Dble	Pass	Pass	Pass

The final contract was not a success. As a matter of fact, the opponents collected 500 points. South held 13 points and four-card spade support; North held eight points. North argued that South's raise showed a much better hand. South contended that a single raise could never show a good hand under any circumstances. You be the judge.—L. Carew, Denver, Col.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—When you bid freely in an uncontested auction, a raise of partner's suit shows a minimum holding consistent with the previous bidding. For example, if you open the bidding and then make a single raise of partner's response, you probably have a maximum of 15 points. If partner opens and you raise his suit, your maximum is 9-10 points. However, if you jump shift and then raise partner's suit at your next turn, you probably have a minimum of about 19 points, but your upper range is unlimited.

On the auction shown, however, we are not considering a sequence when partner made a free bid. North's bid of one spade was a forced response to South's takeout double, and his strength can be described within precise parameters—0-9 points. If North was any stronger, he would have made a jump response, even if he had only a four-card suit.

When South chose to raise North's response to his takeout double, he was in effect saying: "I know that you might have next to nothing. Nevertheless, I think there might be play for game if you have a maximum. But whatever happens, we should be reasonably safe at the two-level even if you have only a smattering of strength."

Obviously, to make such a guarantee, or to issue a game invitation, South must have a reasonable hand—certainly, considerably more than the minimum 13 points he promised with his takeout double. Opposite five or six points, 13 points does not promise safety at the two-level. The usual range for a simple raise in this situation is 16-18 points. In other words, it is a hand that offers play for game if partner has some useful values.

No doubt, eight points is about as near a maximum for his one spade response as North could have. While I cannot comment with 100 percent authority on whether he had the right hand to jump to game, or whether he should simply have shown interest by raising to three spades (I would need to see his hand for that), no major share of the blame for this debacle can be attributed to North.

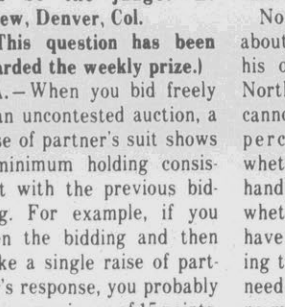

There is only one way for the takeout doubler to show a minimum—he must pass at his next turn. If the opponents compete further, the doubler can then bid again if he has sound values and good support for partner's suit. Now it is safe to do so because he has already limited his hand by passing.

Send any questions for this column to: Charles Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Bridge Complete," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged the best received.

Former House Member Eyes Another Office

By STEVE SZKOTAK

CENTRAL FALLS, R.I (UPI) — Sunlight struggles through the smoke-stained window, dappling the slouched backs of an elderly couple hugging the end of the bar.

A TV blares reruns of "Gomer Pyle, USMC." The smell of stale beer and cigarettes linger in the air. A hand-scribbled sign warns, $1 Deposite (sic) on all mugs.

In his blue-collar tavern, The Batter's Choice, Beard sits among the remnants of his six years in Congress: political cartoons, yellowed newspaper clippings of his triumphs and knick knacks collected during four campaigns.

The former congressman reflects on his forced retirement from his $60,000-a-year congressional seat, the change from three-piece suits to open-collared shirts.

And with the nervous energy of a boxer stepping into the ring, a profession Eddie Beard also toiled at, he plots his next jump on the merry-go-round.

Beard's life has come full circle. Now, back where he started, he's talking comeback, a return to politics and to the brash style that chafed a president and Democratic party leaders, yet attracted voters.

"I will return — no, I'd like to quote MacArthur — I shall return," Beard said, his light-blue eyes filling with excitement. "I'm not retired from politics at age 41. I figure one more time, one more shot."

Beard mentions the Providence mayoral seat as a "good bet" for his 1982 political rebirth. He ruminates about a run for his old congressional seat and a longshot — the 1st congressional seat occupied by Rep. Fernand St Germain, D-R.I., for 20 years.

"I know how to lose, but I also know how to win. That's important."

Beard said his unlikely move from Congress to barroom has helped his image. Reporters, columnists and TV crews have beaten a path to his neighborhood watering hole, tucked among triple-deckers and neat yards bordered with chain link fence.

"It's almost been a pot of gold for someone out of politics," Beard said of the tavern he bought for $25,000 last March 17, St. Patrick's Day.

"This place has been magic for me. It has kept my name alive. This is the most famous tavern in Rhode Island."

After six years in Washington, Beard finds himself back full-time in the heavily blue-collar state that sent him there. His departure from Congress — in a loss to Republican Claudine Schneider last November — has given him time to reflect on Washington.

"It was always frustrating. The biggest frustration was the slowness. They had more recesses than I had in school," said Beard, a high school dropout who later got his equivalency diploma.

"President Reagan's programs are based on the people he knows — the wealthy. The only thing he has in common with senior citizens is chronology."

Edward P. Beard was an unlikely member of the House of Representatives.

He worked as a window washer, boxed professionally for two years and finally settled into a career as a painter and maintenance man at Rhode Island School of Design before he turned to public office.

"I always loved politics, going back to the time my mother would take me to the political rallies."

After serving one term in the Rhode Island House of Representatives, he set his sights on the 2nd congressional district seat.

Beard campaigned, often in painter's clothes, appealing to the elderly and the state's blue collar voters. Democratic leaders treated him with disdain. They labeled him a grandstander and loudmouth.

In 1974, he surprised party officials — and himself — by defeating incumbent Rep. Robert O. Tiernan in the Democratic primary, then soundly beat Republican Vincent J. Rotondo by a margin of more than 88,000 votes.

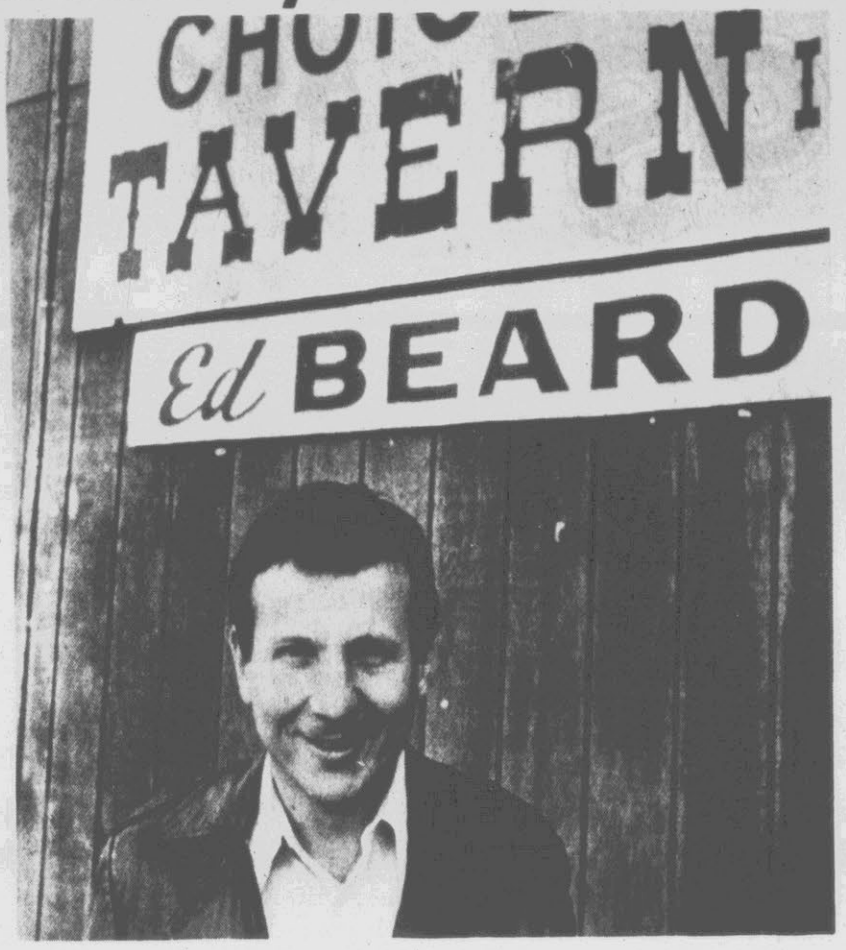

"One day I'm a housepainter and the next I'm a congressman," a dazzled Beard, then 34, said after his Cinderella rise to Congress. One day he was making $9,000 a year, the next $60,000.

Despite his obvious appeal to voters, state Democrats didn't warm up to Beard. It didn't matter. He snared two more terms without the party's backing.

Then, in 1980, he hired a campaign consulting firm, toned down his image and got the endorsement of state Democrats. The new Beard apparently did not appeal to the voters. He lost in 1980, beaten by Claudine Schneider who had waged an ambitious campaign.

Beard said he now realizes his mistake.

"My instincts would tell me one thing but a phone call would tell me something else," he said of his public relations advice. "I paid someone to get defeated.

COMEBACK ... Former Rhode Island Congressman Edward Beard says he is truly happy surrounded by the smell of stale cigarette smoke and even staler beer. But he says he may try for another political office, maybe at the local level. (UPI Photo)

Some Britons Favor Abolition Of House Of Lords

By BARRY JAMES
UPI Senior Editor

LONDON (UPI) — "We are peers of highest station," W.S. Gilbert wrote in a dig at the House of Lords almost a century ago, "paragons of legislation, pillars of the British nation."

The Lords, an assemblage of noble scions, bishops, judges, political has-beens and other titled worthies, still stands as a bastion of inherited privilege and patronage. But though they are half the legislature, as legislative paragons the peers could be an endangered species.

There are those on the left wing of the opposition Labor party — agreeing with Mark Twain that "any kind of aristocracy, howsoever pruned, is rightly an insult" — who have vowed to abolish the House of Lords if they regain power.

Left-wing leader Tony Benn, who forced a bill through parliament that enabled him to relinquish his own title of Viscount Stansgate and sit in the House of Commons, has said Labor ought to pack the House of Lords with 1,000 new peers dedicated to its abolition. Under present law this would be quite possible.

Most Britons, however, probably would prefer to keep the Lords in some recognizable form because it is considered more impartial and less corruptible than the House of Commons, the nation's primary legislative body.

"There is a need for a second chamber, whether it's called the Lords or not," said Joe Gormley, general secretary of the National Union of Mineworkers.

But, as The Times of London commented, "a chamber that does not contain a single elected member cannot claim convincingly that it is representing anyone."

The ruling Conservative party recently rejected a proposal to reform the House of Lords by giving it "a democratic legitimacy which can only come from elections." Many Laborites, in contrast, oppose reform because this might improve the effectiveness of the house and make it more difficult to abolish at a later date.

Baroness Young, the Conservative leader of the Lords, agreed that "the impatience and contempt" of the left against the peers "has known no bounds." But she said the current government simply has not enough time before elections in 1984 to carry out a far-reaching reform of parliament.

She said the Conservatives were pledged to preserve the Lords as "an essential safeguard for individual liberty" because it was "the only constitutional guarantee that elections must be held at intervals of not more than five years."

Without the restraining influence of the Lords, she said. "the House of Commons could extend its life indefinitely — the classic route to tyranny throughout the ages."

The House of Lords has resisted many attempts at reform, although there now is growing awareness of the need to introduce democratic representation. It has conceded two significant changes this century.

The first, in 1911, ended the Lords' absolute power to reject bills passed by the Commons. All bills must be approved by both houses before being signed into the statute books by Queen Elizabeth II. The Lords now can delay a Commons bill for no more than a year, and they have no power of veto whatsoever over money bills.

The Lords can initiate legislation, which tends these days to be of a non-controversial or technical nature. It also acts as Britain's highest appeals court, although this role is carried out on its behalf by its member judges.

The second major change was the Life Peerages Act of 1958, which empowered the Crown to create peers whose titles would expire on their death.

This produced a measure of democratization as politicians were elevated to the peerage and other members of the hoi polloi received the ermine handshake of patronage.

The House of Lords has a possible membership of 1,177, including 767 who inherited titles and 330 who were created peers for their lifetime only.

The inherited peerage ranges from the billionaire Duke of Westminster, owner of 300 choice acres in London, to police sergeant Peter Nelson, whose uncle died a couple of months ago, bequeathing him the hereditary titles once bestowed on Admiral Horatio Nelson — Earl Nelson of Trafalgar and Baron Nelson of the Nile.

But many have taken leave of absence, and only 930 peers have the right to actually sit on the 300 buttoned-leather benches in the intimate, wood-paneled Lords chamber. By happy chance, the average daily attendance is a little less than 300.

Unlike the paid politicians in the Commons, the Lords are amateurs, although they can claim up to $85 a day in attendance fees.

At the start of each legislative session, the Queen — attended by such personages as the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, Bluemantle Pursuivant and Wales Herald Extraordinary — rides to the House of Lords in a gilded carriage to open parliament amid resplendently costumed pageantry.

Once the Queen has taken her place before the Lords and Ladies, Black Rod is sent to summon the 635 members of the House of Commons "to attend her Majesty immediately in the House of Peers."

At other times the atmosphere is less forbidding. The House of Lords has what one of its paid servants called "a clubby spirit," with no apparent rivalry between the moneyed landowners whose titles stretch back into the mists of history and the working-class worthies recently ennobled by the Labor Party.

Their debate is courteous, more concerned with issues than personalities and frequently of a higher intellectual level than the rowdy bickering of the Commons.

At lunch, Lord This and Lady That, the Earl of Here and the Baroness of There, sit around common tables in cheery familiarity. One Commons member captured the mood when he said the House of Lords is a model of what an old folks home should be.

The Lord Chancellor acts as speaker, but in effect the members control their own proceedings. One official said the Lords have never been known to become unruly.

"It never happens," he said. "There are some standing orders dating from the 17th century for keeping discipline, but they are literally never used. The members are always very dignified."

Can 'Discount' Prescriptions

EVANSTON, Ill. (UPI) — A major way patients can cut the cost of prescription drugs is "quantity discounting", according to an article in the current issue of "Pediatrics", the journal of the American Academy of Pediatrics.

The article, by Dr. Lance Chilton of the University of New Mexico, Albuquerque, N.M., says doctors can do this by "prescribing a larger amount of a drug once, rather than a smaller amount on multiple occasions." He notes that if a drug is available in more than one container size, the largest size is almost always the least expensive per dose.

Also, if possible, prescribing a drug in a more concentrated form also will save the patient money because pills or tablets, when they can be taken, are usually less expensive than liquid forms of the same drug.

Chilton also said the most significant drug-savings method might be restricting the presciption of drugs for minor symptoms. He cited a British study showing that by rarely prescribing drugs for minor symptoms, $4,800 was saved in one month in just one physician's practice.

HOW TO MAKE A TAX-DEDUCTIBLE CONTRIBUTION TO YOURSELF.SM

Beginning January 1, the new tax law makes it possible for you to deposit up to $2,000 a year in a Wachovia Individual Retirement Account and deduct it from your taxable income... even if you are presently covered by a company retirement program.

You can deposit the money in large or small amounts, as often as you choose, whenever you choose. Your interest is based on money market rates and it accumulates tax-free until you start making withdrawals. When you begin withdrawing from your account, each withdrawal will be taxed as ordinary income. Of course, the law requires penalties on withdrawals before you reach age 59½.

What it all adds up to is an opportunity for any employed individual to put something aside for the future, and reduce his or her income taxes at the same time.

Here's how much a Wachovia IRA can reduce your 1982 taxes.

If your 1982 taxable income is approximately:	Your tax brackets probably are: Federal	North Carolina	If you put $2000 into a Wachovia IRA, you can probably reduce your 1982 income taxes by:	If your working spouse also contributes $2000, together you can probably reduce 1982 taxes by:
$20,000	22%	7%	$580 REDUCTION	$1,160 REDUCTION
$29,000	29%	7%	$720 REDUCTION	$1,440 REDUCTION
$39,000	39%	7%	$920 REDUCTION	$1,840 REDUCTION
$64,000	49%	7%	$1,120 REDUCTION	$2,240 REDUCTION

The above examples are based on the most recent IRS and N.C. tax information available assuming a married couple filing a joint return. While deposits to an IRA are tax-deductible in the year they are made, these funds are taxed as ordinary income when they are withdrawn from the account. Substantial tax penalties required for withdrawals prior to age 59½. Federal regulations also require a substantial interest penalty for early withdrawal of a time deposit.

You can start earning tax-deferred interest right now. Deposits to your Wachovia Individual Retirement Account start earning interest from the day you open your account. Yet you pay no taxes on that interest—or your deposits—until you begin your withdrawals. And if, like most people, you begin withdrawals when you retire, you will probably be in a lower tax bracket.

Bill Sackter Becomes His Own Man

A mentally retarded adult tackles life in the world beyond the confines of the mental institution in which he spent 44 years, in "Bill," airing on Tuesday, Dec. 22 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS.

Mickey Rooney portrays Bill Sackter, who, through an indomitable spirit and the help of Barry Morrow (Dennis Quaid), eventually becomes integrated back into society. Largo Woodruff plays Morrow's supportive wife, Bev, and Harry Gos plays Thomas Walz, a social worker who assists Bill in obtaining a suitable job. The story is true.

Through a 1977 probate court ruling, Bill was restored to "full capacity" — guardianship of himself — and now works in the coffee shop on the campus of the University of Iowa. As he puts it, "I got a good life now. I'm happy and nothing to worry about. So thank you very much and God bless you."

Bill's good life began nine years ago with a serendipitous meeting with Barry Morrow, a young filmmaker and media specialist. Barry used to go to a country club every night to pick up his wife, who was working as a waitress. Bill worked in the kitchen scrubbing pots.

From his car, Barry would see Bill's face peering out at him from a small window in the back of the building. "Every now and then he would wave, and I would wave back," Barry said. "At first we were both hesitant, and used small nervous waves, but as the nights went by and the ritual developed, we waved harder and more enthusiastically."

Finally, they met at an employee Christmas party. "The first thing we did was laugh," Barry continued. "Then we shook hands, and laughed some more. And something bonded."

That something was friendship, a tie that enabled Barry to help Bill become self-sufficient. "By being on his own, Bill teaches the social work students at the University of Iowa the very essence of their profession," Barry said.

Rooney filmed "Bill" during the Broadway run of "Sugar Babies," alchemizing himself daily from the retarded man triumphing over his handicap into a wisecracking, singing and dancing burlesque clown.

Rooney was very impressed with the story of Bill and feels "very honored to be playing him on screen."

MICKEY ROONEY STARS as Bill Sackter, a mentally retarded adult who tackles life beyond the confines of a mental institution, in "Bill," airing Tuesday, Dec. 22 (9-11 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

A Look At The Pope

"From A Far Country: Pope John Paul II," a dramatization of the life of Karol Wojtyla — the man who lived through the German occupation of Poland and repression against the Catholic faith to become the first non-Italian Pope in over 400 years — will be broadcast on NBC's Sunday Night at the Movies, Dec. 20 (9-11:30 p.m.).

Wojtyla was born in the Polish town of Wadowice in 1920, the son of a retired staff lieutenant. His mother and older brother died while he was still a youngster. A devout Catholic and an excellent student, he played football, wrote poetry and participated in school drama productions, later deciding to enter Cracow University and study Polish literature.

When the German army occupied Poland during World War II, however, Wojtyla turned to the Church. Following the war, he was ordained and continued his studies in Italy, France and Belgium, returning to Poland in 1948.

During the 1950s, Wojtyla became a bishop and worked in Rome with the Ecumenical Council. Years later, he returned to his native Poland as Pope, celebrating Mass in Cracow and in Auschwitz, demonstrating that despite repression, the power of faith can triumph.

POLISH ACTOR CEZARY MORAWSKI stars as Karol Wojtyla, the priest who lived through the German occupation of Poland during World War II and, later, the repression of the Catholic church to become the first non-Italian Pope in over 400 years, in "From A Far Country: Pope John Paul II," airing Sunday, Dec. 20 (9-11:30 p.m.), on NBC-TV.

Pope John Paul II watched the film when it was screened at Castel Gandolfo, his summer retreat. According to Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, the Vatican Secretary of State, the pontiff was pleased. "His Holiness is grateful for all the efforts in this project," Casaroli stated, "and hopes that it will be pleasing to the general public and foster the great cause of human dignity."

From the outset, the producers had sought and received Papal approval of the original script. Then, they were granted virtually unlimited access to film inside St. Peter's Basilica and the Sistine Chapel in the Vatican. And finally, the Pope received the entire film unit in audience at the Vatican — staying with the group for an hour, chatting with members in Polish, Italian and English.

JOHN DENVER AND AMERICA'S FAVORITE SUPERSTAR, Miss Piggy, share a smooch in the hour-long, music-filled Christmas special, "John Denver and the Muppets — A Christmas Together," airing Tuesday, Dec. 22 (8-9 p.m.), on ABC-TV.

Michele Will Tell

Q: Please tell me why the producers of "As The World Turns" found it necessary to change the music and picture symbol? MRS. C. KIRBY, KENLEY, N.C.

A: All we can tell you is time changes everything — not always for the better!

Q: Please give me some information on Andrew Stevens. DEBBIE BAKER, STANTONSBURG, N.C.

A: Twenty-nine-year-old Andrew Stevens was born in Memphis, Tenn. He began acting in high school plays and in local community theaters before graduating from Messick High School in Memphis and relocating in Los Angeles. During his career that spans only nine years, Andrew has proven himself to be a versatile star, whether it be as a television or motion picture performer. He is also a singer/songwriter and has written and recorded a song for "Code Red" entitled "750cc." Once married to actress Kate Jackson, Andrew is single and lives in Los Angeles where he enjoys canoeing, backpacking and white water rafting in addition to tennis. Write to him in c/o "Code Red," ABC-TV, 1330 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y., 10019.

Q: Could you tell me if Barnard Hughes ("Mr. Merlin") played in another series as a doctor? Also, how old is he? EDGAR PARKER, HUDSON, N.C.

A: Your memory serves you correctly. Barnard Hughes, Max Merlin in "Mr. Merlin," starred for two seasons in the CBS television series "Doc." His role was that of Doctor Joe Bogert, an old-fashioned neighborhood general practitioner. Hughes is sixty-six years old.

Q: Will you settle this bet for me? I say that John Travolta recorded a record in the early 70s before "Saturday Night Fever," and a friend says he did not. Who's right? BETH LYLES, HENDERSON, N.C.

A: It was in the latter part of the seventies that John Travolta cut two albums, "John Travolta" and "Can't Let You Go." Both were released before the "Saturday Night Fever" phenomenon. Check your local record shops for copies of the LPs.

Q: Did Tom Selleck play Brad on "The Young and the Restless"? Also, does he play on "Magnum, P.I."? GLENNELLE WATSON, HALIFAX, N.C.

A: The role of Brad Eliot (husband of Leslie Brooks) was portrayed by none other than "Entertainment Tonight's" co-host, Tom Hallick. "Magnum's" star, Tom Selleck, appeared as Jed Andrews in 'Y&R,' and was one of Lorie's beaux.

Theatre For NBC

Ned Beatty and Polly Holliday co-star with Sally Field and William Hurt in "All the Way Home," the Pulitzer Prize-winning play that will air Dec. 21 on NBC Live Theatre. The drama will be telecast from the Bing Theatre on the USC campus.

Year For Disabled

This is the year the UN has designated as International Year of Disabled Persons, so GE Theater couldn't have chosen a more appropriate time to present "Bill," which airs on CBS-TV Dec. 22, with Mickey Rooney starring as a mentally retarded man who triumphs over his disability.

Having A Devil Of A Time

Peter Strauss stars as a wrongfully executed Chicago gangster who gets a second chance at life when the devil sends him back for some dirty work, in "Angel on My Shoulder," airing on Wednesday, Dec. 23 (9-11 p.m.).

In the story, Eddie Kagel (Strauss) is framed for a murder he did not commit and is executed in the gas chamber. He finds himself in the "lower depths," where he toils unrelentingly for years.

One day, the redoubtable boss of the "underworld," Nick (Richard Kiley), offers Eddie a chance to go back to Earth, where a politician is giving government a good name. Nick would like him stopped. Eddie looks like the politician, so Nick offers him the man's soul.

Seeing a chance to gain revenge on those who wronged him years before, Eddie accepts, and soon everyone's favorite politician is spouting language befitting a drunken sailor.

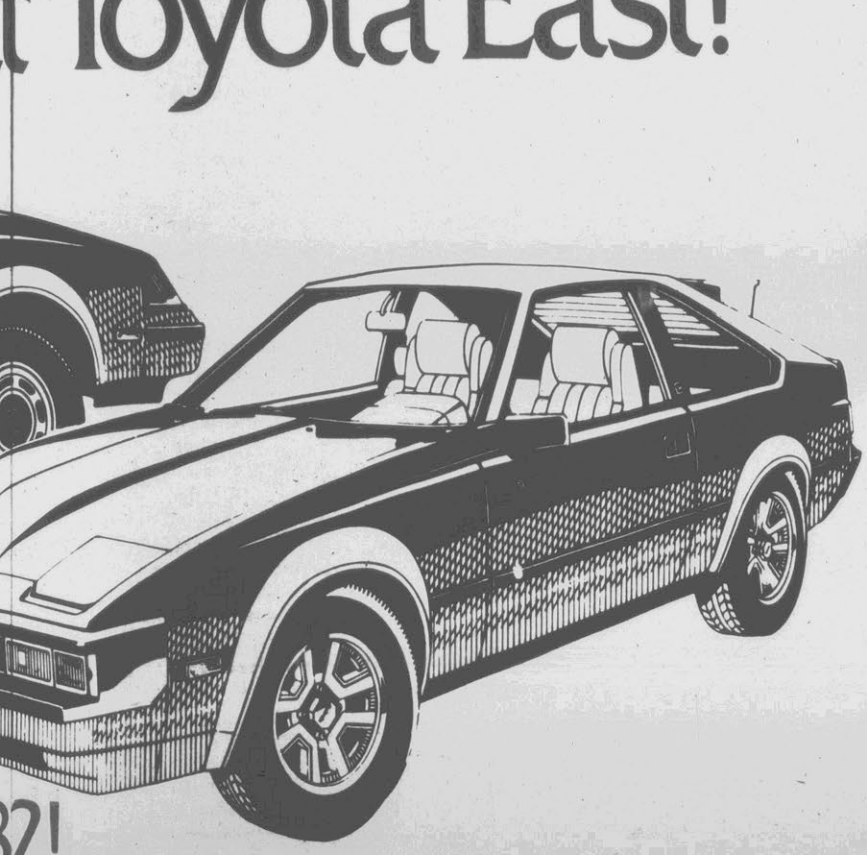

But when love, friendship and a growing awareness of human emotions gnaw at Eddie, he begins to realize that he may not be able to give the devil his due.

As the film's art director, Tom John was charged with the design of the devil's habitat. It was an assignment that he tackled with relish.

"The two most vivid concepts I had of what hell was supposed to look like came from Dante's 'Inferno' and from the Sunday school teachers I had who warned of the fire and brimstone that awaited if I was bad," John said. "But the film was described to me as a fantasy, so I tried to create a set that showed a place that was as rotten as could be but one that was not filled with horrible, vile images."

John's set included flames, dark rock and a general sense of utter drabness — all in accordance with the specifications prescribed by the Culver City Fire Department. "As a result, the inferno we had conceived was somewhat diminished," John said. Even so, he described the building of the sets as "the most unusual challenge in design" he had ever had.

Together Again

A widowed woman is reunited with her family at Christmas, in "The Gathering, Part II," airing on Friday, Dec. 25 (9-11 p.m.) on NBC. The film is a sequel to "The Gathering," the Emmy Award-winning play which was televised in 1977.

The original play dramatized a Christmas family gathering that took place when the estranged father, having discovered that he was terminally ill, wished to re-establish the broken ties with his wife and children.

"The Gathering, Part II" begins nearly two years after the man's death. Kate Thornton (Maureen Stapleton) has taken over her husband's business. Industrialist Victor Wainwright (Efrem Zimbalist Jr.) makes a handsome offer for that business, which she refuses. When Wainwright shows a romantic interest in Kate, her suspicious and hostile family close ranks against the intruder.

A Christmas reunion brings other problems: daughter Peggy (Gail Strickland), separated from her long-time lover, discovers that she is pregnant; sons Tom and Bud (Lawrence Pressman, Jameson Parker) are bitterly at odds over Tom's failure two years earlier to reveal his father's terminal condition; and daughter Julie jealously guards her father's memory by opposition to Wainwright's attentions to Kate.

Also starring are Bruce Davidson as George Pelham, Kate's son-in-law; Veronica Hamel as Helen and Patricia Conwell as Toni.

Pressman, who suffered the loss of his mother before the shooting of "The Gathering, Part II," said: "There is a metamorphosis following the death of a parent. There's a softening, an acceptance of one's own responsibility, and a sense of your own mortality." In accordance with this philosophy, Pressman's character, Tom Thornton, has lost some of his stuffiness.

Being Prepared

Jennifer Runyon, who plays Sally Frame on "Another World," says she wasn't nervous making her film debut in a horror movie. The blonde beauty appears as a heroine in "And To All A Good Night," which opens around Christmas.

"I wasn't frightened at all, since I knew who was getting killed and who wasn't."

Always A Doctor

After nursing a burnt hand for several weeks, Jim Pritchett of "The Doctors" recovered to help his teammates win the annual Mike Schmidt Golf Classic, in Hilton Head, S.C. His partners were Philadelphia Phillies pitcher Ron Reed; Sam Rosa, who runs Slicker Sam's in Chicago; and Robert Onorator, owner of Palmetto Dunes, where the tournament is played.

But it seems Pritchett can't shake his daytime TV identity no matter where he goes. The local paper listed the victors as Reed, Onorato, Rosa and "Dr. Matt Powers."

Many items in this ad carry a reference retail price. This reference is intended to provide a guide to the range of retail selling prices in our selling area and may be useful in identifying different units of the same merchandise. An item's reference retail price is either the manufacturer's suggested retail price or our determination of its retail price based on prices at which similar merchandise is offered by principal retailers (department stores, specialty shops and other non-discount sellers) in our selling area. While we believe our reference retails do not appreciably exceed the highest retail prices at which sales are made in our selling area, we cannot assure you that our reference retail prices as described above represent the prices in every community on any given day. Some items in this ad are listed as "regular" selling price. The merchandise is offered at this price except during a special sale. The purpose of showing a reference retail price or a regular price is to assist you, our customer, in making a knowledgeable and better informed buying decision. SAN DIEGO CHARGER quarterback Dan Fouts will lead his team against the Oakland Raiders on "ABC's NFL Monday Night Football," Dec. 21 (9-11:45 p.m.).

Fouts Leads The Way

On Dec. 21, (9-11:45 p.m.), the Oakland Raiders will square off against the San Diego Chargers on "ABC's NFL Monday Night Football." The game will be played at Jack Murphy Stadium in San Diego.

The Chargers have had a disappointing season compared to their 11-5 record last year. They do, however, still hope to gain a playoff berth in the tightly contested AFC West.

Much of the Chargers' success has been attributed to the exceptional talents of quarterback Dan Fouts, who has been a superlative performer each year.

Earlier in the month against Buffalo, Fouts had a record-breaking day in a losing cause. Playing against a superb Bills defense, Fouts completed 28 passes in 42 attempts for 343 yards, set a club record for TD passes in a year (31) and eclipsed the 4,000 yard mark in passing yardage for the third consecutive year.

Fouts' emergence in the league came in the year of the quarterback, 1973. He was San Diego's 3rd-round draft choice from Oregon and was the 64th player selected in the draft and the sixth quarterback chosen (behind Bert Jones, Gary Huff, Ron Jaworski, Gary Keithley and Joe Ferguson, in that order).

Fouts made his professional debut in the fourth game of the 1973 season against Pittsburgh. The Chargers were trailing 38-0 at halftime, and Fouts was brought in to play the second half. He completed 11 of 21 passes for 174 yards and one touchdown and marshaled two other scoring drives in the 38-21 defeat. He has been baffling the NFL's best defenses ever since.

Last year, Fouts completed over 59 percent of his attempts for 4,715 yards and threw 30 touchdown passes in the process. He also threw four more scoring passes in post-season play.

While playing collegiate ball at Oregon, Fouts set 19 school records, with a three-year total of 5,995 yards and 37 touchdown passes.

Still His Father

When Joe Frazier was asked what would happen if he were matched against his son, Maruis, also a heavyweight, he replied. "If I said, 'Fall down,' he's going to fall down. I'm still his father."

Freak Injury

Pike's Peek

HOLLYWOOD — That old adage about "money goes to money" is certainly true in ELIZABETH TAYLOR'S case — ownership of MIKE TODD'S classic 1956 "Around the World in 80 Days" has now reverted to LIZ. ERIC WEISSMAN, handling the sales, says the offers are pouring in from cable and commercial TV, cassettes, disks and theatres.

MARTY INGLES and SHIRLEY JONES had passersby doing double takes as they picnicked with caviar and champagne on the front lawn of MICHAEL LANDON'S home in Bel Air. They were celebrating their fourth wedding anniversary right on the spot where they first met.

JILL CLAYBURGH is putting a "hold" on her career until late '82. She and husband, DAVID RABE, expect their first stork arrival in June — they lost an anticipated delivery last year — so JILL is not taking any chances with this one.

SEAN CONNERY is ready to clobber a phony who is passing himself as SEAN'S son all over the continent and running up big bills. SEAN'S son, eighteen-year-old JASON, is currently appearing at the Perth Theatre in Australia.

ASK THEM YOURSELF

Send the question, on a postcard, to "Ask," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022
We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

We All Agree That It's Better to Give Than to Receive. But Why?

We polled our celebrity friends, and this is what they told us:

Pavarotti

Parton

Proxmire

Moore

LUCIANO PAVAROTTI (opera star): When you give, you get back more than you can possibly imagine. And the forms of giving take root and grow; you get feedback years after you "gave." When I'm out there, onstage, I give everything to the audience. I try to do the same offstage. So far, it works.

DOLLY PARTON (singer-composer-actress): It's better to give than receive because the Bible says so. But the Bible didn't know that I'd have 11 brothers and sisters, umpteen nieces and nephews. I spend too much time buying and giving. I'm having serious thoughts as to whether the Bible is right.

SENATOR WILLIAM PROXMIRE: (D.-Wis.): It is not only better to give than to receive, it is also more fun, especially when it comes to things like a helping hand, a note of admiration or affection and, yes, the Golden Fleece Award. O.K., I admit my Golden Fleece Award may not be the best Christmas gift around, but I do hope those who receive it will, in the long run, benefit from the way all of us benefit from criticism; and, indeed, it is better and much more fun to give it than to get it.

VIRGINIA GRAHAM (TV personality-author): It is so much better to give than to receive, for selfish reasons. You are spared the drudge of taking back what you receive. And the stuff I usually get has last year's date on it — so it's too late to return, and I'm stuck with it.

JACQUES BELLINI (fashion designer): I prefer giving, which is a subtle way of announcing "I'm alive," a way of re-establishing contact with those I've lost touch with during the year.

MELBA MOORE (recording star-actress): There's a warmth about Christmas-giving that is different from all other kinds of giving. I suppose what I enjoy most is the feeling it gives me, almost like slurping down hot chocolate; I get all cozy and warm. I also like planning what to buy, figuring what my family and friends need most.

HAROLD ROBBINS (author): I get a kick out of giving. What the hell, it's only money, and if it makes someone happy, gives them a lift, I don't mind leaving this world a bit poorer. I stick to the adage, it's not the gift, it's the thought. What's important is the knowledge that you're remembered, that someone cares.

LETITIA BALDRIGE (etiquette expert): It is better to give than receive because one has the satisfaction of helping someone, plus the satisfaction of knowing it takes character to realize one will never be thanked sincerely. In other words, the old saying, "No good deed goes unpunished" holds true more often than not!

MARIE OSMOND (recording star-actress): Knowing that someone knows I thought of him or her, and didn't expect that I would, makes me feel wonderful. Christmas is the time I can show that I care and that I thought of Dec. 25 long, long beforehand, for the gifts I give are obviously not last-minute purchases. I find giving to be soothing, like rubbing cream into a sunburn.

There's a saying, "There's one in every crowd" — and our crowd is no exception. Nine out of 10 like to give. The 10th one does not:

JIMMY COCO, (star of Only When I Laugh): I like nothing better than receiving. I'm tired of giving. I've been doing it for too many years. I've started a new system. When I receive, then I give, not before. No receiving, no giving! And I give on a par with what I get — a peanut for a peanut, a sweater for a sweater.

FROM THE "ASK" EDITOR

● When visitors to Monaco hear that every child in the principality is invited to Princess Grace's annual Christmas party, they're amazed (imagine President Reagan throwing open the doors of the White House to all the kids in D.C.) until it's pointed out that only those youngsters who are Monegasques (born in Monaco or in foreign countries of Monegasque parents) are invited, and they don't add up to thousands. The guest list is around 400 (Monaco is very small). Also, festivities are held in the ballroom of the Loews Monte-Carlo and not at the Pink Palace. It's said the royal residence isn't big enough for such a mob scene. But could it be that the Princess would rather have the mess away from home — just the way so many moms prefer to have their kids' birthday parties at an ice-cream parlor, rather than in their own basements?

If Jackie Bisset could resurrect someone from history, and find him or her propped up by the tree on Christmas morning, she'd pick William Shakespeare. Said the star of Rich and Famous: "He'd be marvelous to chat with. I'd have no trouble coming up with a list of at least a hundred questions, off the top of my head. I'm assuming he'd be as good a conversationalist as he was a writer"... Ever wonder what country singers would like to find under their Christmas trees? Barbara Mandrell goes for the practical. She's hoping to unwrap some long underwear, to keep her cozy and snug for her ski vacation next month... Jerry Stiller is hoping he'll be spared his usual assortment of cheese this year. He has had some unfortunate experiences with it: "Since it spends so much time in the mail, the cheese shouldn't spend any time in my stomach."

Should All Working Americans Be Paying Social Security Taxes?

PRO Joseph W. Bartlett, attorney, chairman, Universal Social Security Study

Social security was designed to cover all working Americans. The exempting of state and Federal workers was enacted for reasons no longer valid. Most exempt workers, because they moonlight in Social Security-covered employment, earn disproportionate benefits due to a complicated formula which favors the low-income worker. This produces windfall benefits. Extending coverage to all Americans will produce billions of dollars in additional short-term revenues. The insistence by Government employees for favored treatment further diminishes their status in the eyes of the general working population.

CON Representative Claude D. Pepper (D.-Fla.), chairman, Select Committee on Aging

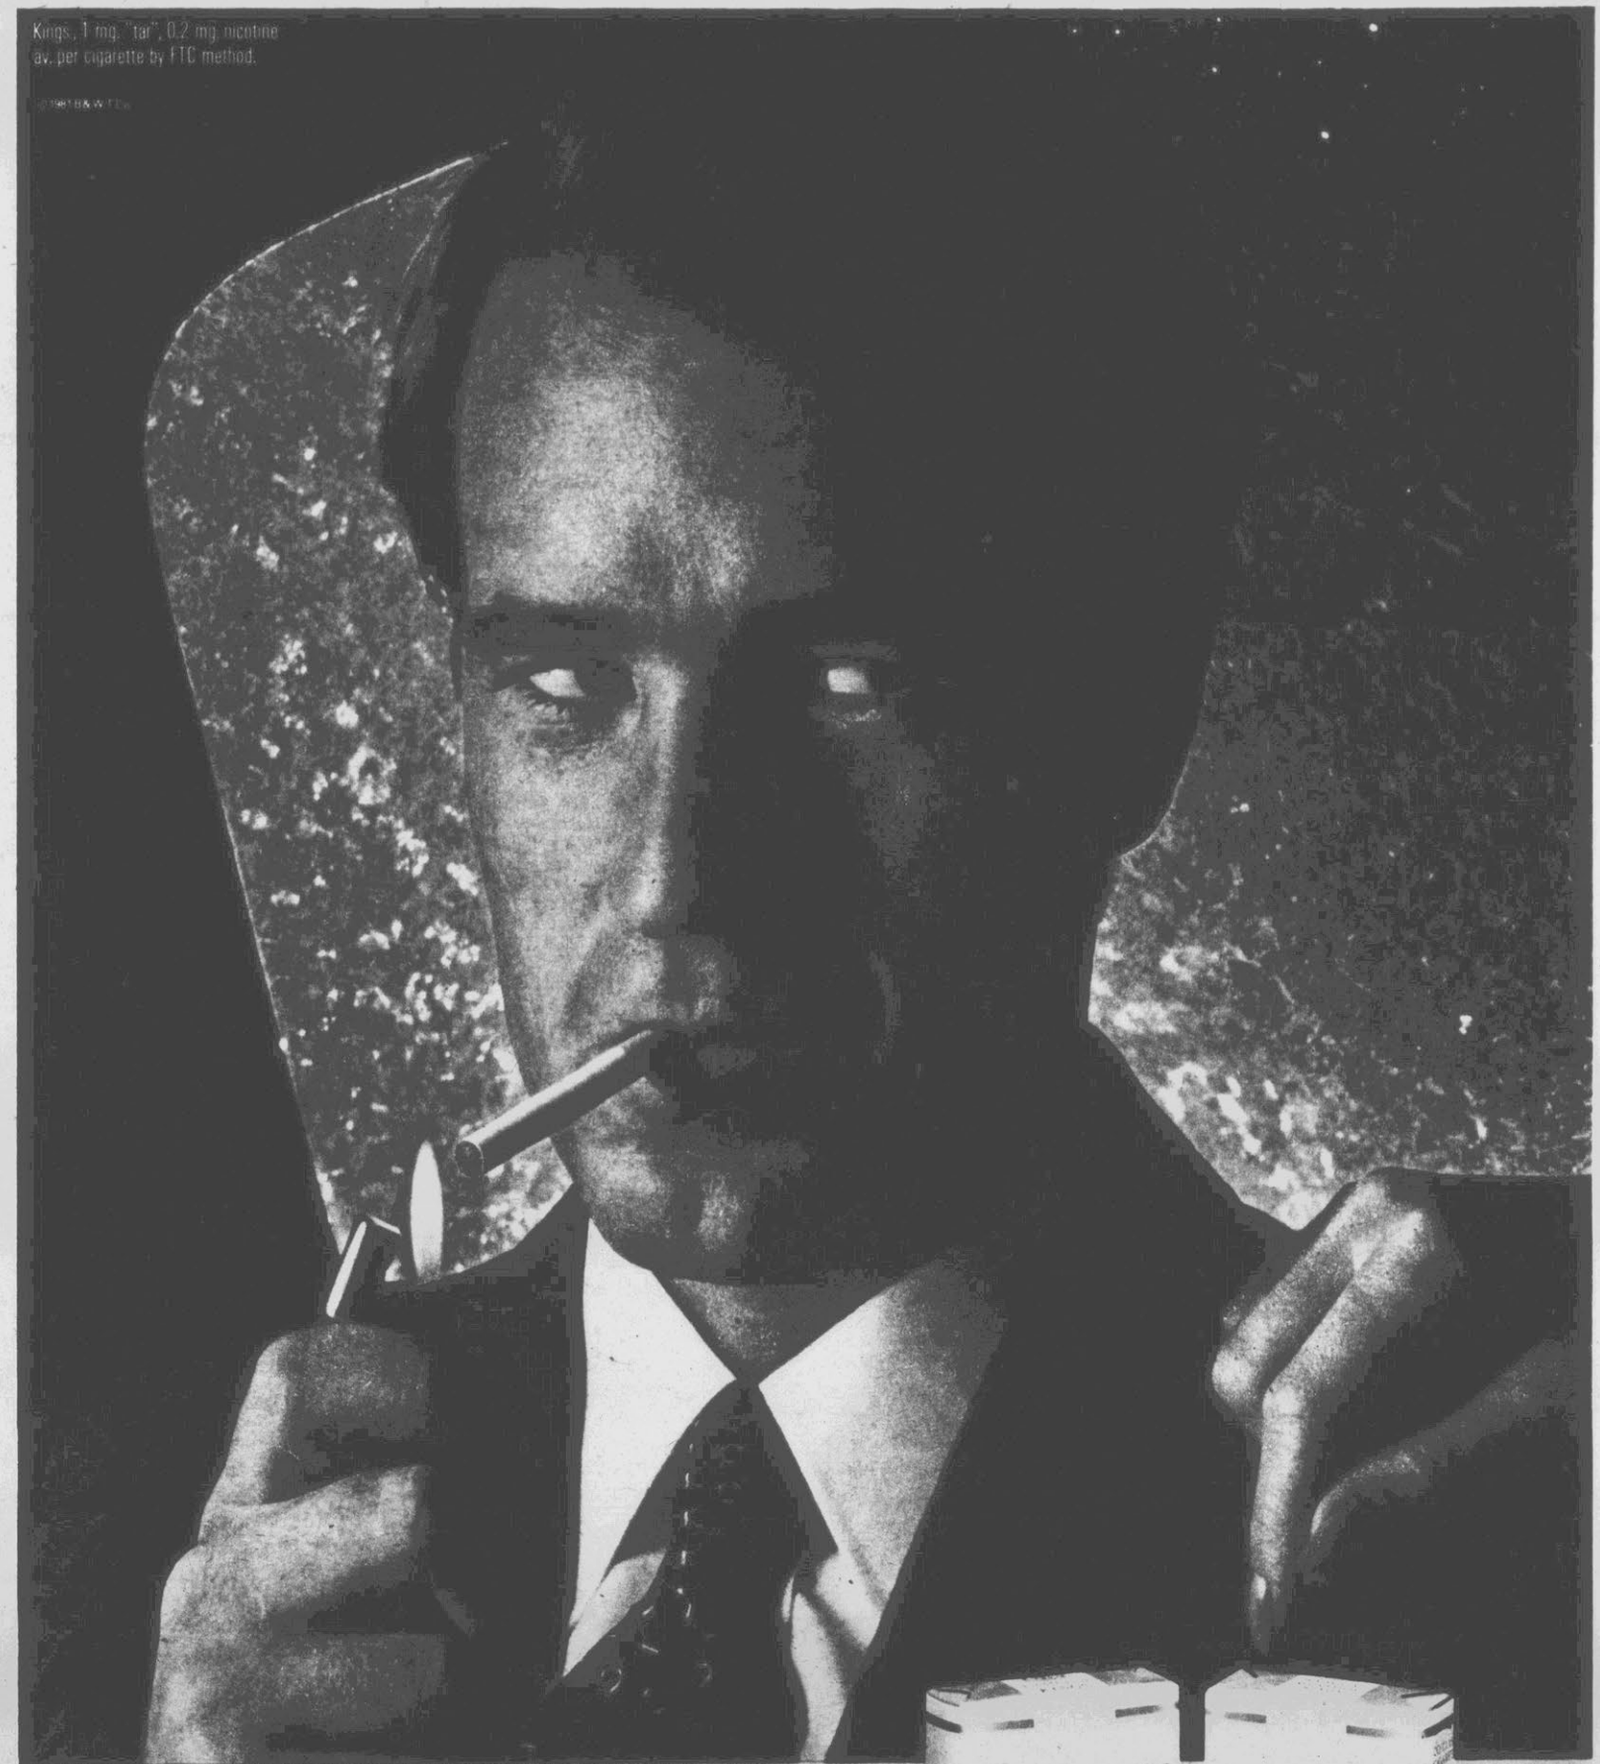

No. While universal coverage would expand the Social Security base by 5 percent immediately, the greater number of future beneficiaries would result in a cost to the system far exceeding the increased revenue. Social Security is social insurance whose benefits are designed to be supplemented by a private pension or annuity. Civil Service retirement is a contributory benefit of Federal employment, keyed to length of service and earnings. It's intended to provide an adequate retirement income, not to provide the additional social insurance benefits offered by Social Security.

Holiday reunions "are like flashbacks — family confrontations are reawakened and old feelings of anger may be revived."

By Mary Ellin Barrett

At this time of year most of us look forward to reuniting with our families for a holiday celebration. But not all celebrations run smoothly. As family members find themselves together again, tensions can arise, tempers flare and fights erupt.

In some cases bad feelings surface because our holiday hopes are unrealistic. The optimistic spirit of the season leads us to expect a joyous family gathering — and when reality doesn't measure up, we feel cheated. "We develop major expectations of the way things should be," explains Arthur Freeman, professor of psychology at the University of Pennsylvania. "A good part of it has to do with the way in which the holidays are portrayed by the media. The holidays are touted as a time for giving. Everything's going to be good now. If we expect that our dinner is going to be something out of The Waltons and it's not, we become very upset. It's at such variance with our expectations."

"There's a myth of the holidays," adds Charles Rotman, professor of psychology at Babson College, "togetherness, giving and receiving of love, peace and good will. But, 'tis the season not to be jolly necessarily." Upon returning home, he notes, what we may experience, along with all the pleasures we've always found there, are the same old problems. "It's like being in a flashback," Dr. Rotman states. "At holiday gatherings, people go back to the dynamics of their previous relationships. Family confrontations are reawakened. Old feelings of frustration, rejection, anger and hostility may be revived."

The person who wants to be treated as an adult may be frustrated by siblings who refuse to relinquish old rivalries or, more significantly, parents who still want their offspring to play outworn, childish roles. "The individual's accomplishments and maturity may be diminished by the parents," Dr. Rotman explains. "The parents may want to retain their leverage and not acknowledge that the child has made it."

Further complicating the situation is the fact that the returning child may feel torn between the need for parental love and the desire for independence. On one hand, the child may want to retreat to the ease and security of a juvenile role. On the other hand, he may want to take center stage and command respect as an adult. "Children would like to be accepted as adults and also recreate the environment they had when they were young," states John McCarthy, associate professor of psychology at Fairfield University. "No matter how independent you are, there's always a degree of dependency. Parents are very significant people in your life. You always want to be loved by them."

Parents, on the other hand, may be made unhappy by their children's desire for independence. "The parents get hurt. They feel rejected," Dr. McCarthy notes. "There are some parents who hope for a greater closeness with their children at holiday time," explains Phoebe Prosky, family therapist with the Ackerman Institute for Family Therapy in New York City. "Holidays can rekindle the pain of letting go."

Still other factors, unrelated to family relationships, may contribute to the feeling of discouragement. Reunion hosts are often tired and tense from preparing the get-together. Guests may be exhausted from traveling distances. Even the time of year can play a role. "The holidays come at the beginning of winter, and this can be a downer," points out Dr. Rotman. "There is also a certain amount of year-end inventory-taking: Did I get the raise? Were my expectations met?" If the answers to these questions are negative, he points out, "a person can come to the table ready to explode."

What's more, a feeling of disappointment about the year can be compounded by questioning from curious relatives: "You're expected to give a status report on where your life is at, and if your life isn't going well this is going to promote resentment," Rotman adds.

Finally, overindulging in food and, especially, drink, can be stressful and create problems. As Dr. McCarthy notes, "When people drink too much they have a tendency to say things they regret."

The most important step in having a holiday you and your family won't regret, the experts say, is to work at changing your attitude — and not to worry so much about changing your family. Try to keep your hopes within reason. "The trick is largely in the expectations," Dr. Prosky explains. "Go into it without expectations, knowing that things don't generally turn around. We have a sense of things being more changeable than they are. It really takes years and years for things to shift."

"Be aware of the holiday myth," Dr. Freeman cautions. "Work with the family you have and don't expect them to be something they're not."

Once you're home, Dr. Rotman suggests, "stay on neutral subjects. Try to structure the situation by setting limits on what can or cannot be discussed. Don't put yourself in a detrimental position by overeating or overdrinking." Sometimes, making the visit a brief one can result in a happier reunion, he notes.

"If you want to change your role in relation to someone else," Phoebe Prosky adds, "change your own behavior. Do the opposite of what you would normally do." You thus create a domino effect: Your new behavior triggers new behavior from the other person.

Should things fall apart in spite of your efforts, Dr. McCarthy advises, try not to overreact. "Don't turn it into a catastrophe if it goes wrong," he says. "If you're human, you're going to mess up. The important thing is recovery." FW

BEHAVIOR

That Championship Season

Why Some Athletes Excel

By Nancy Josephson

For years, trainers and coaches have wondered why certain athletes are able to shut out the noise, bright lights and frenzy that go along with competition, while their teammates are unnerved by such distractions.

The answer, as it turns out, may have to do with psychological training. Some researchers believe that the ability to cope with stress makes the difference between giving a mediocre performance and a dazzler.

"It's the ability to take control of yourself — not to give in to the emotional factor in competition," says Dr. Thomas Tutko, a psychology professor at San Jose State University, co-author of Sports Psyching: Playing Your Best Game All of the Time (J.P. Tarcher, Inc.) and a firm believer in psychological conditioning in athletes. "After talking to literally thousands of athletes, we found that people who were successful practiced a certain kind of self-mind control, using any one of a series of techniques that got them to relax, concentrate or change their attitudes. These people were doing it automatically. They thought everybody did."

Clearly, everybody doesn't. But now there's a movement afoot to teach athletes how not to give in to anger, fear, anxiety and frustration — emotions that can negatively affect their performance in competition.

This psychological training involves teaching not only a system for concentration and relaxation, but also something known as "mental rehearsal," in which an athlete mentally rehearses the successful moves of his or her game. For instance, the athlete recaptures the feeling of how he held his arm when he threw the ball well or how he moved his leg when he was running at a winning stride. The point, says Tutko, is to "get the feeling of what it was like to do it right."

Research shows that mental rehearsal does have an impact on performance and outcome. It works, experts say, because the constant repetition makes the player so familiar with the moves, he automatically slips into the right action.

While the key to the process is mental rehearsal, the technique won't work if the athlete can't concentrate and relax, says Dr. Richard Suinn, a Colorado State University psychology professor and psychologist for the U.S. women's track and field team.

Dr. Suinn teaches his athletes to stay calm by using a system for "progressive muscle relaxation." They start by tensing and relaxing the right hand, the right foot, the left hand, the left foot, until they've covered all the muscles of the body.

Concentration is achieved with a system called "centering," which helps the athlete take the focus off what's going on around him and turn his attention inside.

Like Tutko, Suinn believes image rehearsal can lead to improved technique for players, though it can't be used to teach someone something he's never done.

Other experts in the field are using different methods for getting athletes into good mental shape. Dr. Daniel Landers, a sports scientist at Arizona State University, for example, is working with biofeedback to help rifle shooters improve their performance. He has them listening to their heartbeat and pulling the trigger between sounds — because even the beat of the heart is enough to move the gun and thus throw off the shot.

"What we discovered is that a lot of shooters learn these mental strategies through trial and error," says Dr. Landers. "But now we're working with younger shooters so they won't have to wait 20 years." FW

Out, Out Darn Spot!

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Especially at holiday time, we can all use some expert advice for taking care of spills and stains caused by party food and drinks.

Generally, stains set as they age, so if possible, tackle them as soon as they occur. If the fabric is washable, it's recommended that you immediately treat the stain with the suds made from mixing a liquid detergent solution with water — rather than using the solution directly.

The nastiest stains are caused by grease, and the best treatment is to apply a dry-cleaning solvent (available at hardware stores) to nonwashables and the suds of a mild detergent solution to washables. Place a wad of white paper towels or white cloth under the fabric to absorb the grease stain as you rub in the cleaner (gently for delicate fabrics). If the underside is not accessible (such as for an upholstery stain), frequently turn the cloth or paper towel being used to apply the cleaning agent so that you're always working with a clean surface.

It's best to work from the center out to the edges of the stain, so a ring doesn't form. Never rub back and forth repeatedly with the same part of the cloth against the stain. Wipe once or twice in one direction, then turn the cloth and wipe in another direction.

When using cleaning fluids, be sure you're in a well-ventilated room. Also, because cleaning fluids are often flammable, treated fabrics shouldn't be put in the washer. Launder them by hand.

And before tackling any stain-removal job, first test the cleaning agent on a corner of the fabric (or on a sample piece you may have saved). This is doubly important when dealing with synthetic fabrics. Some chemical solvents may affect dyes or even partially dissolve such fabrics.

The following chart lists some common fabric stains and suggests how to treat them. FW fruit, juices, wine	Sponge with cool water, holding absorbent towel behind stain. Blot dry, and next treat with dry-cleaning fluid or detergent suds, depending on the fabric.

blood, egg	Sponge or scrape off excess, then soak in cool water. Wash with warm suds if applicable and use ammonia on the stain if it persists.
coffee, tea, soft drinks	Blot quickly with clean paper towel. If fabric can take it, pour boiling water through stain. If not, treat with warm suds or dry-cleaning fluid, depending on fabric.
alcoholic beverages	Blot up excess, then rinse promptly in cold water. Sponge with solution of 1 part vinegar to 8 parts water, then launder if applicable.
cosmetics	Sponge with dry-cleaning fluid, holding absorbent paper towels or cloth beneath. Launder if applicable.
ink	Dab with alcohol and then blot immediately with dry cloth. Sponge with suds of liquid detergent if applicable.
candle wax	Scrape off excess wax. Place stained portion between paper towels and press with a warm iron. Sponge with a dry-cleaning fluid if stain remains.

PEOPLE QUIZ

What's in a Name?

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE

1. A girl's first name has a marked effect on ratings of her physical attractiveness.

2. The better you like your first name, the better you like yourself.

3. Your name is an expression of your identity—the second face you present to the world.

4. Unusual persons have unusual names.

5. Men with "Jr." after their names score significantly higher on psychological tests than men with Roman numerals — "II," "III," etc.

ANSWERS

1. True. A team of investigators at Tulane University studied the power of a girl's first name to project an image of personal beauty and physical attractiveness. The investigation is described as follows: College students voted to select a beauty queen from among photographs equivalent in physical appeal, as determined by rankings of students from a separate university. Half the photographs bore a desirable first name and half were assigned less-desirable first names. The first name had a significant effect on the ratings of physical attractiveness: Girls with desirable first names received four times as many votes as those with less-desirable first names.

2. True. A study of the relationship between attitudes towards one's name and self-esteem, which evaluated the research of leading behavioral scientists, shows that "individuals" who like their first names tend to make higher scores on self-concept and 'self' attitude measures which reflect a person's prevailing appraisal of his worthiness." This obtained only to a lesser extent with last names. And it is noted that the closer relationship of first name to last name to self-esteem may be due to the first name being more personal and more of an anchorage point of identity.

3. True. Studies at the University of Toronto, on the impact of a given name on a bearer, cite findings showing that individuals have strong feelings about their personal names which influence their personal adjustment, interpersonal relationships and even vocational choice. It is noted that "an infant's charcteristics influence the choice of a name to some degree, and to a degree a name also directly affects the person who bears it."

4. True. But this is so only for women, as evidenced by a Guilford College study of unusual names and uniqueness, in which over 250 men and women undergraduates were separated into two groups, those with unusual names and those with common names. All were tested on a "uniqueness scale," designed by psychologists to assess unusual, out-of-the-ordinary characteristics and attitudes. Results: Unusual-named women scored significantly higher on the scale than their common-named counterparts, being more independent-minded, impatient with rules and regulations and often disinclined to follow them; more than willing to publicly defend their beliefs, and lacking concern regarding others' reactions to their different ideas, actions and general conduct. This was not found true, however, for men with unusual first names. It is also noted that women, as compared with men, were found more likely to have unusual first names.

5. False. In studies of the psychological impact of names, conducted by a team of investigators from Wesleyan University and Guilford College, students with Jr. after their names and those whose names were followed by the Roman numerals "II," "III," etc., were given a standard psychological inventory test designed to measure various personality characteristics, including capacity for status, sense of well-being, responsibility, socialization, self-control, tolerance, and achievement potential. Men with Roman numerals after their names scored significantly higher than those with Jr. attached to their names. As for the reason, the researchers speculate that "if the Roman numeral is interpreted as part of a long line of respected individuals of the same name, the individual bearing such a title may feel that he is special. He is, he may believe, part of a tradition, an important link in a long and valuable chain. In contrast, the person with Jr. attached to his name may or may not be a part of a long line of many. His title reminds us, and him, that he is younger, most likely smaller (at least for the first 15 years of his life) and lesser in status than the real thing, the person he was named after." FW

Yes, Marlo, Christmas Trees Can Last

By C.Z. Guest

Celebrities Celebrate

It is customary in our family to put up the tree two weeks before Christmas and leave it up through New Year's. Unfortunately, by the time January gets here our tree is as dry as a bone with half its needles fallen on the floor. Do you have any suggestions for making it last longer?

Marlo Thomas

CBS

Most Christmas trees are cut in bulk, then shipped. They can arrive at their destination anywhere from a few days to two weeks later. Your tree is probably already starting to dry out before you even get it up.

The solution is to go to a tree farm and cut your own tree! Be sure to bring a tape measure — trees look smaller outdoors. It's safer to use a saw rather than an ax for cutting. When you get the tree home, make a new cut diagonally across the base of the trunk. Then put it in a stand that holds water. This freshly cut tree should last well through the holiday season.

What information can you give me about the Amaryllis plant?

Eubie Blake

Tim Boxer / Pictorial Parade

The Amaryllis is becoming as much of a Christmas tradition as evergreen boughs and holly. It is one of the most exotic, exciting flower bulbs in the world. Originally it was a tropical flower, but Dutch bulb experts developed it into a flower that could bloom indoors year after year. Colors range from orange and deep red to whites and pastel pink. The Amaryllis will grow in either direct or artificial light, making it adaptable to a wide range of life styles.

After planting your Amaryllis bulb, all you need to do is water it occasionally. It grows quickly. Flowers appear four to six weeks after planting, and they are one of the most beautiful sights of the season.

Present a Pomander

Delightfully fragrant pomander balls are fruits studded with cloves and sometimes rolled in a mixture of aromatic spices. They're just perfect for scenting a room or perfuming a drawer — and they make inexpensive presents.

The best fruits to work with are lemons, oranges and limes, but pears and apples can also be used.

Pierce the skin of the fruit all over with a small knitting needle or nut pick and immediately insert a whole stick clove into each hole.

Next, pierce the fruit from stem to blossom end with knitting needle, and suspend for several weeks until the skin of the fruit appears thoroughly dry. Twist the needle often to keep it from sticking.

When your pomander is ready, push a crochet hook through the hole made by the knitting needle and thread some pretty yarn through it. FW

Leave it all behind without leaving it all behind.

Getting out to where the deer and the antelope play can be a lot of work. And getting all that camping gear out there can be downright impossible, let alone discouraging.

But not if you have a Honda ATC® three-wheeler. Like the great outdoors, it has plenty of wide open spaces. With optional racks and baskets, there's lots of room for a cooler, a camp stove, a lantern and even a tent you don't have to crawl into.

The Honda ATC has three big balloon tires. So even if the terra isn't all that firma between civilization and your favorite campsite, an ATC three-wheeler can get you there. And back. Because they all come with powerful, reliable Honda engines.

And since a Honda ATC moves a lot faster than you do, you'll just have to spend more time hunting, fishing or camping.

But you may spend more time riding your ATC than you figured on. They're so much fun, it's easy to get carried away.

Are You a Victim Of Adolescence?

By Carol Eisen Rinzler

Adolescence is an insidious condition; usually silent and invisible, it has been known to attack even the best-regulated households. Infected parents often are unaware of the cause of their increased nervousness and insomnia, their bizarre and frequent impulses to scream and cry.

1. The amount of money I spend feeding my child is
(a) about the weekly food budget for an urban family of four
(b) about the weekly food budget for an urban family of parakeets
(c) about the same as it always was
2. When I try to hug my child
(a) I wonder if I should use a stronger mouthwash
(b) he or she leaves magazine articles about incest on my desk
(c) he or she hugs me back
3. When I ask my child how he or she is, he or she
(a) tells me how happy he or she is and bursts into tears
(b) tells me that they are studying the Spanish Inquisition in school and I should be a guest lecturer
(c) tells me he or she is fine and wants to know how I am
4. When I ask my child how school was today, he or she
(a) tells me school is fine and wants to know how I am
(b) tells me they are studying the Spanish Inquisition and I should be a guest lecturer
(c) answers communicatively
5. If I share a bathroom with my child in the morning
(a) there is no problem with my getting to use it before 6 A.M.
(b) there is no problem with my getting to use it after 8 A.M.
(c) there is no problem with my getting to use it
6. For Christmas, my child asked me for
(a) a subscription to Hairdo magazine, a razor or plastic surgery
(b) his or her freedom
(c) none of the above
7. When I want to use the telephone outside of school hours, I
(a) tell my children the house is on fire
(b) go next door
(c) just pick it up
8. The music my child seems to enjoy listening to reminds me of
(a) wet socks at the bottom of a hamper
(b) the time I had a bone reset without anesthesia
(c) nothing in particular

Scoring Key

Unless you chose (c) as the answer to every question, the chances are that you are or soon will be a victim of adolescence. If you still are unsure, try this test: Treat your child like an adult; then treat your child like a child. If your child acts like a child in the first instance and like an adult in the second, you definitely are infected. FW

Even top diamond experts cannot see with the naked eye the difference between a $30,000 flawless diamond and a cubic zirconia. Our cubic zirconia pendants, rings, earrings and tie tacks are created by old world master craftsmen in solid 14K gold or 14K gold filled. Surprise a loved one or treat yourself to a gift of everlasting beauty.

Cubic zirconia is the very best simulated diamond that money can buy. It is the only perfect diamond look-alike. Introduced to the public only a few years ago by the prestigious Saks Fifth Avenue, it has consistently sold for at least $80 per carat unmounted, with a minimum extra charge of $100 for a simple pendant or ear-stud setting. Since it was introduced, tens of thousands of the world's richest, most fashionable women and men from Beverly Hills to Paris have locked away their diamonds for safekeeping and have worn cubic zirconia with pride and with confidence that absolutely no one could tell the difference.

Cubic zirconia is the only diamond substitute ever developed that has consistently been identified as a genuine diamond by experienced jewelers even after careful study under intense magnification. Many jewelers have paid thousands of dollars for cubic zirconia, mistaking it for a costly diamond. A diamond is nature's hardest substance, and cubic zirconia is man's hardest diamond substitute. It is so like a diamond it will actually cut glass and will never scratch or change color. It sparkles with the same magnificent clear white brilliance as do the finest quality diamonds.

Now U.S. Diamond Imports offers you this same quality cubic zirconia at a fraction of the price you would have to pay in a jewelry store. With more than 50 years experience in the wholesale jewelry trade, we guarantee that you will receive only the best quality, finest cut cubic zirconia jewelry, produced under the strictest quality control. We offer our jewelry to you directly, without a costly series of middlemen. Our high volume enables us to price our rings, pendants, earrings and tie tacks far below the prices of our competitors.

Our exquisite 8-carat stones are a phenemenal buy. The bigger the cubic zirconia, the more spectacular is its appearance. Our 8-carat cubic zirconia at only $5.95 per carat is truly the BEST BUY ANYWHERE! We will not be undersold! Join the thousands of satisfied customers who turn to us each year for all of their jewelry needs.

FOOD

Homemade Candy: A Gift for Special Friends

At this time of year, stirring up a batch of delicious candy makes a sure-to-please gift for relatives and friends.

By Marilyn Hansen

GRASSHOPPER BALLS

⅓ cup light corn syrup
¼ cup crème de menthe
3 tablespoons crème de cacao
2 pkgs (8½-oz. size) chocolate wafers, crushed (about 4¼ cups)
½ cup ground almonds
Slivered almonds

1. In medium bowl, stir together corn syrup, crème de menthe and crème de cacao. Add wafer crumbs, stirring until ingredients are moistened.

2. With hands, knead mixture until well mixed. Form into 1-inch balls; roll in ground almonds. Press one slivered almond into top of each. Store in tightly covered container at least 1 week to blend flavors. Makes 4 dozen

Vanilla Grasshopper Balls: Follow basic recipe. Substitute 1 box (11 ozs.) vanilla wafers, crushed (3¼ cups) for chocolate wafers. Reduce corn syrup to ¼ cup. Use 3 tablespoons white crème de menthe and 2 tablespoons white crème de cacao.

Makes 2½ dozen

PEANUT BUTTER DIPPED COCOA BONBONS

2 pkgs. (3 ozs. each) cream cheese
1 tablespoon milk
4 cups unsifted confectioners' sugar
⅓ cup cocoa, unsweetened
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 cup finely chopped nuts (optional)
2 cups (12-oz. pkg.) peanut butter-flavored chips
2 tablespoons vegetable shortening

1. Beat cream cheese and milk in small mixer bowl until fluffy; blend in confectioners' sugar, cocoa and vanilla. Stir in nuts. Chill until firm enough to handle.

2. Shape into ½-inch balls; place on waxed paper-lined tray or baking sheet. Chill, uncovered, 3 to 4 hours. Centers should feel dry to touch before coating.

3. In top of double boiler, stir peanut butter chips and shortening until melted. Dip chilled centers into peanut butter mixture; remove with fork. To remove excess peanut butter mixture, slide fork across rim of pan several times.

Makes about 3½ dozen bonbons

DOUBLE-DECKER FUDGE

2 cups sugar
1 cup (½ pt.) sour cream
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
Dash salt
3 tablespoons cocoa, unsweetened
½ cup water
1 cup chopped walnuts, pecans or almonds
1 can (14 ozs.) sweetened condensed milk
1 pkg. (12 ozs.) peanut butter chips

1. In a saucepan, combine sugar, sour cream, butter and salt. Butter sides of pan. Mix cocoa and water and stir into saucepan. Bring to a boil and boil until 238°F. on a candy thermometer or until a small amount of syrup forms a ball when dropped into cold water.

2. Remove from heat and cool to lukewarm. Stir in nuts and beat only until mixture just starts to thicken. Spread evenly into a foil-lined 8-inch square pan.

3. In a saucepan, combine condensed milk and chips. Stir until smooth and melted. Spread mixture evenly over cocoa fudge.

4. Chill until firm. Using foil, pull fudge from pan and cut with a sharp knife into 1-inch squares. Makes about 36 squares

MINTED NUTS

1 cup sugar
½ cup water
¼ cup light corn syrup
10 large marshmallows
1 teaspoon peppermint extract
10 drops food color (optional)
3 cups walnut or pecan halves

1. In heavy, 2-quart saucepan, mix sugar, water and corn syrup. Stirring constantly, bring to boil over medium heat. Continue cooking, stirring occasionally until temperature on candy thermometer reaches 238°F. or until small amount of mixture dropped into very cold water forms soft ball, which flattens on removal from water. Remove from heat.

2. Stir in marshmallows and peppermint extract; stir until marshmallows are melted. Add nuts and stir until well coated. Turn onto waxed paper.

3. With two forks, separate nuts while still warm (mixture will be very sticky). Cool several hours or until set. Store in tightly covered container. Makes 1¼ pounds

MILK CHOCOLATE DIPPED PRETZELS

1 pkg. (11½ ozs., 2 cups) milk chocolate morsels
¼ cup vegetable shortening
About fifty 3-inch twisted pretzels

1. Combine over hot (not boiling) water, milk chocolate morsels and vegetable shortening; stir until morsels melt and mixture is smooth.

2. Remove from heat but keep chocolate over hot water. Dip pretzels into chocolate mixture and coat evenly; shake off any excess coating. Place pretzels on waxed paper-lined cookie sheets.

3. Chill in refrigerator until coating sets (about 15 minutes). Gently loosen from waxed paper. Serve immediately or store in refrigerator until ready to serve.

Makes about 50 dipped pretzels

NEW ORLEANS PRALINES

1 cup firmly packed light brown sugar
½ cup sugar
½ cup evaporated milk (undiluted)
¼ cup light corn syrup
1 tablespoon margarine
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1½ cups coarsely broken pecans or walnuts

1. In heavy, 3-quart saucepan, stir together brown sugar, sugar, milk and corn syrup. Cook over very low heat (about 1 hour), stirring frequently, until temperature reaches 238°F. on candy thermometer or until small amount of mixture dropped into very cold water forms a soft ball, which flattens on removal from water. Remove from heat.

2. Add margarine and vanilla. Beat about 1 minute or until well blended. Add nuts; stir until coated. Quickly drop by tablespoonfuls onto waxed paper on cookie sheets. When cool and set, remove from paper. Makes about 24 (3-inch) pralines

Note: Mixture will curdle if cooked too rapidly.

FRUIT AND NUT WHITE FUDGE

2½ cups sugar
1 cup milk
¼ lb. white chocolate
¼ cup butter or margarine
2 tablespoons light corn syrup
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
¾ cup chopped macadamia nuts
½ cup chopped candied cherries

1. Grease an 8×8×2-inch baking pan. In a medium-size heavy saucepan place sugar, milk, chocolate, butter, corn syrup and salt. Cook over moderate heat, stirring constantly, until temperature reaches 236°F. on a candy thermometer (the mixture forms a soft ball when a small amount is dropped in cold water).

2. Remove from heat immediately; cool to 110°F. or until lukewarm. Add vanilla; stir vigorously with a wooden spoon until thick and mixture begins to lose its gloss. Quickly stir in nuts and cherries. Spread in prepared pan. Chill. Cut into 1½-inch squares. Makes 25 (1½-inch) squares

CHOCOLATE ALMOND BARK

1 pkg. (11½ ozs., 2 cups) milk chocolate morsels
1 tablespoon solid vegetable shortening
½ cup raisins
½ cup chopped toasted almonds, divided

1. Combine over hot (not boiling) water, milk chocolate morsels and vegetable shortening. Heat until morsels are melted and mixture is smooth.

2. Remove from heat and stir in raisins and half the almonds. Spread into waxed paper-lined 13×9×2-inch baking pan.* Sprinkle remaining almonds on top. Chill in refrigerator until ready to serve, at least 30 minutes. Before serving, break into bite-size pieces. Makes 1 lb. candy

EASY MIX FUDGE NUT DROPS

1⅓ cups sugar
1 cup milk
2 pkgs. (12-oz. size) peanut butter chips
2 teaspoons vanilla extract
2 teaspoons rum flavoring
1 cup chopped walnuts, pecans or cashews

1. In a saucepan, combine cocoa, sugar, milk and chips. Stir constantly over low heat until chips are melted and mixture is smooth.

2. Stir in vanilla and rum flavoring. Fold in nuts. Chill until mixture holds its shape.

3. Drop mixture about the size of a large olive onto foil-lined cookie sheets. Chill until hard. Store in airtight containers in a cool dry place.

Makes about 6 dozen pieces

WHAT IN THE WORLD

By Eliot Kaplan

FESSING UP

Thirty-eight percent of Americans have cheated on their income taxes, while 45 percent have cheated on their spouses, according to a recent ethics survey by Psychology Today. (The 24,000 respondents reflected a higher-than-normal percentage of women, the young and the educated.)

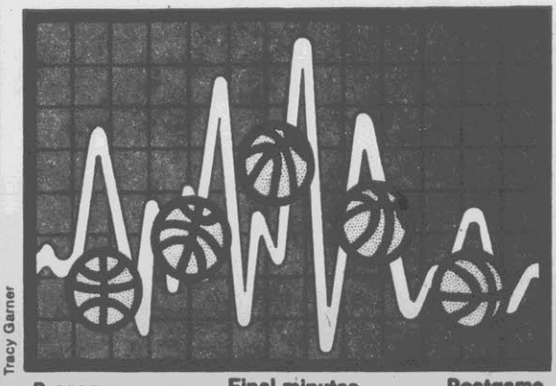

Dan Nevins

Among other indiscretions, 93 percent admitted driving faster than the speed limit; 68 percent took office supplies home; 60 percent parked illegally; 47 percent took fraudulent sick days from work, and 33 percent lied to their best friend about something important in the last year.

Eighty-four percent of those who had extramarital sex and 59 percent of those who lied on their income taxes admitted feeling guilty about their actions. Which leads to one of two conclusions: Either guilt has little effect on preventing unethical acts, or imagine how bad things would be if we didn't feel guilty.

YOU GOTTA HAVE HEART

Tracy Garner

Pregame Final minutes Postgame

They say pro basketball features heart-stopping excitement, and one fan almost proved it last May. Two months after suffering a heart attack, an avid Celtics fan was monitored as he watched the climactic seventh game of the playoffs between Boston and the Philadelphia 76ers on TV. That morning, his heart rate was 60 to 80 beats per minute, reports The New England Journal of Medicine. By 2:00, in anticipation of the opening tip-off, frequent irregular heart beats appeared. During the first half, his heart rate jumped to 120, and as the game came down to its final thrilling minutes, the rate soared to 150 beats per minute with severe irregularities recorded. After the game, his heart rate gradually decreased to normal.

Good thing his Celtics won 91-90.

JAWS III

Those who assert that sharks are the perpetual-motion man-eaters seen in Jaws are just flapping their gums. So says Dr. Eugenie Clark, who's been diving with sharks for 26 years.

First, she notes, not all sharks are in constant motion. She has discovered underwater caves where sharks lie motionless, almost as if sleeping.

Nor are they all ferocious. "There are over 350 species of sharks, and basically they're cowardly, timid animals," says Clark, who's featured on the National Geographic special The Sharks, airing on PBS next month. "There are a few shark attacks, but almost all are forgeries or were provoked."

You're in more danger driving to the beach than in being attacked by a shark once there, she adds. In fact, Clark, 59, was hurt by a shark only once. While driving to a lecture, she had a shark jaw on the front seat of her car. After stopping short at a red light, she reached out and cut her hand on the shark's teeth.

RETIREMENT HEAVEN

If you're thinking of retiring, which state should you settle down in? Utah, reports a surprising Chase Econometrics study that looked at 10 factors, including weather, property taxes, living costs, housing, unemployment, the ratio of elderly to working-age population and metropolitanization (a measurement of access to medical facilities, public transportation, social services, etc.). Rounding out Chase's top five states to retire in are Louisiana, South Carolina, Nevada and Texas. Those two traditional retirement havens, Arizona and Florida, ranked eighth and ninth respectively, while sunny California came in 17th. The worst state for retirees, according to the study, is Massachusetts, followed by Maine, New Jersey, Vermont, Rhode Island and New York.

Wide World

New England: Not so hot for retirees.

WHERE IS THE WONDERCAR?

An innovative plan to reduce our energy dependence is being proposed by an innovative man — Sherwood Fawcett, president of Columbus, Ohio's, Battelle Memorial Institute, the world's largest independent research group.

To the organization that develops a car that can get 80 miles per gallon in city driving, hold four adults and luggage comfortably, have a life expectancy of 100,000 miles, meet all U.S. safety and environmental standards and cost only $6,000, Fawcett proposes that the U.S. Government award a $14,000 premium on each of the first 10,000 cars sold.

The technology for such a dream car is available, notes Fawcett. All that is lacking is the incentive for carmakers or other organizations to take the risk and begin attracting the needed investment capital.

So far his $140-million rebate plan has met with cool response in Washington, but Fawcett notes, "We'll easily make back that money in decreased oil imports and increased security for our nation."

Landmark Smoker Study:

Merit Remains Unbeaten!

A rigorous new program of MERIT research has just been completed.

Result: The most conclusive evidence yet confirms low tar MERIT as the proven taste alternative to higher tar smoking.

MERIT Sweeps New Blind Taste Tests.

In impartial new tests where brand identity was concealed, the overwhelming majority of smokers reported MERIT taste equal to—or better than—leading higher tar brands.

Moreover, when tar levels were revealed, 2 out of 3 smokers chose the MERIT combination of low tar and good taste.

MERIT Takes Top Honors.

In the second part of this extensive new study, MERIT smokers confirm that taste is a major factor in completing their successful switch to MERIT from higher tar cigarettes.

Confirmed: 9 out of 10 former higher tar smokers report MERIT is an easy switch, that they didn't give up taste in switching, and that MERIT is the best-tasting low tar they've ever tried.

Year after year, in study after study, MERIT remains unbeaten. The proven taste alternative to higher tar smoking—is MERIT.

LET IT ALL HANG OUT

A puzzlist with a knack for mystifying friends suspended a Christmas greeting from the ceiling, mobile fashion, as shown above. He did this by anagramming letters of each of three words. That is to say, he scrambled letters of each word in separate groupings.

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: SOMETHING IS IN THE WIND. PRINCE VALIANT KNOWS NOT WHAT IT IS, BUT SOMEHOW IT INVOLVES HIS FAMILY, AND SO HE BROODS. GALAN BREAKS THE SPELL. "TELL US A STORY ABOUT WHEN YOU WERE YOUNG," HE BEGS. AND VAL RELAXES.

"A FEW YEARS BEFORE I CARRIED OFF YOUR MOTHER," HE BEGINS, "I WAS IN CISALPINE GAUL WITH SIR GAWAIN AS HIS SQUIRE.

"ATTILA WAS DEAD, BUT THE HUNS STILL BOTHERED THE LOMBARDS AND VENETI AND THE TWO OF US HAD OUR HANDS FULL KEEPING CIVILIZATION ALIVE." ALETA ROLLS HER EYES AND VAL HURRIES ON. "ONE DAY AFTER A GREAT BATTLE WE PAUSED BY A FRESHET.

"I AMUSED MYSELF BY FISHING, THE MOST SUBLIME OF SPORTS. GAWAIN SPLASHED NOISILY NEARBY. SUDDENLY MY LINE WENT TAUT. I HAD HOOKED A BIG ONE -- A BIG ONE WITH LONG, BLACK HAIR. GAWAIN YELPED HIS DISPLEASURE IN LANGUAGE I SHALL NOT REPEAT.

"WITH THAT A LITTLE MAN RAN OUT OF THE WOODS. 'OH, WOE, WOE!' HE CRIED. 'YOU HAVE CURSED A FISHERMAN. BAD LUCK, BAD LUCK.' HE NIMBLY CLIMBED A TREE, FOUND THREE ROBIN'S EGGS, BOILED THEM, THEN REPLACED THEM IN THE NEST. 'THERE,' HE SAID AT LAST. 'I HAVE UNDONE THE DAMAGE.'

"THE SUPERSTITIOUS MAN'S NAME WAS TANCRED, AND BECAUSE WE WERE BORED WE TOOK HIM WITH US, MUCH TO GAWAIN'S REGRET."
