Divers Hunt Scores Of Jet's Crash Dead

By G.G. LaBelle
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Divers in thermal suits plunged into the ice-crusted Potomac River today in a grim search for scores of bodies entombed in the fuselage of a crashed jetliner. A police official estimated "the slow, tedious task" of recovery may take three days.

The crash of a Florida-bound jet Wednesday killed 75 of the 80 people on the plane. District of Columbia police said said two other people were killed when the Air Florida plane broadsided cars as they inched across the 14th Street Bridge laden with rush-hour traffic. The impact sheared the tops off some of the cars.

"We expect the recovery to be a slow, tedious task, taking anywhere from one to two to three days perhaps," said James Shugart, a D.C. police inspector. "We want to make the recovery as quickly as possible, but you must keep in mind the fact that weather conditions are such that they are not conducive to rapid recovery."

Francis McAdams, head of the National Transportation Safety Board team of investigators assembling at the site, said:

"They may have to lift the wreckage before they get to the bodies, it's my understanding."

Divers hit the water not long after daybreak. A huge construction crane was being assembled on the bridge.

McAdams said when the wreckage is recovered, it will be put on a barge or towed to shore, whichever is easier.

"And if necessary, it will be brought down here to one of the hangars and perhaps a mockup might have to be made," he said. The NTSB "go team" of investigators set up shop at nearby National Airport.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis; Sen. John Warner, R-Va.; and Virginia's governor-elect, Charles Robb, visited the crash site early in the day.

At least five people were plucked from the fragments of the plane or from the river water, cold enough to kill in minutes.

The Boeing 737, carrying 75 passengers and five crew members, took off from National Airport, clipped a span of the 14th Street Bridge, then toppled into the river barely 100 yards from a second span crowded with commuters headed home to Virginia in the driving snow.

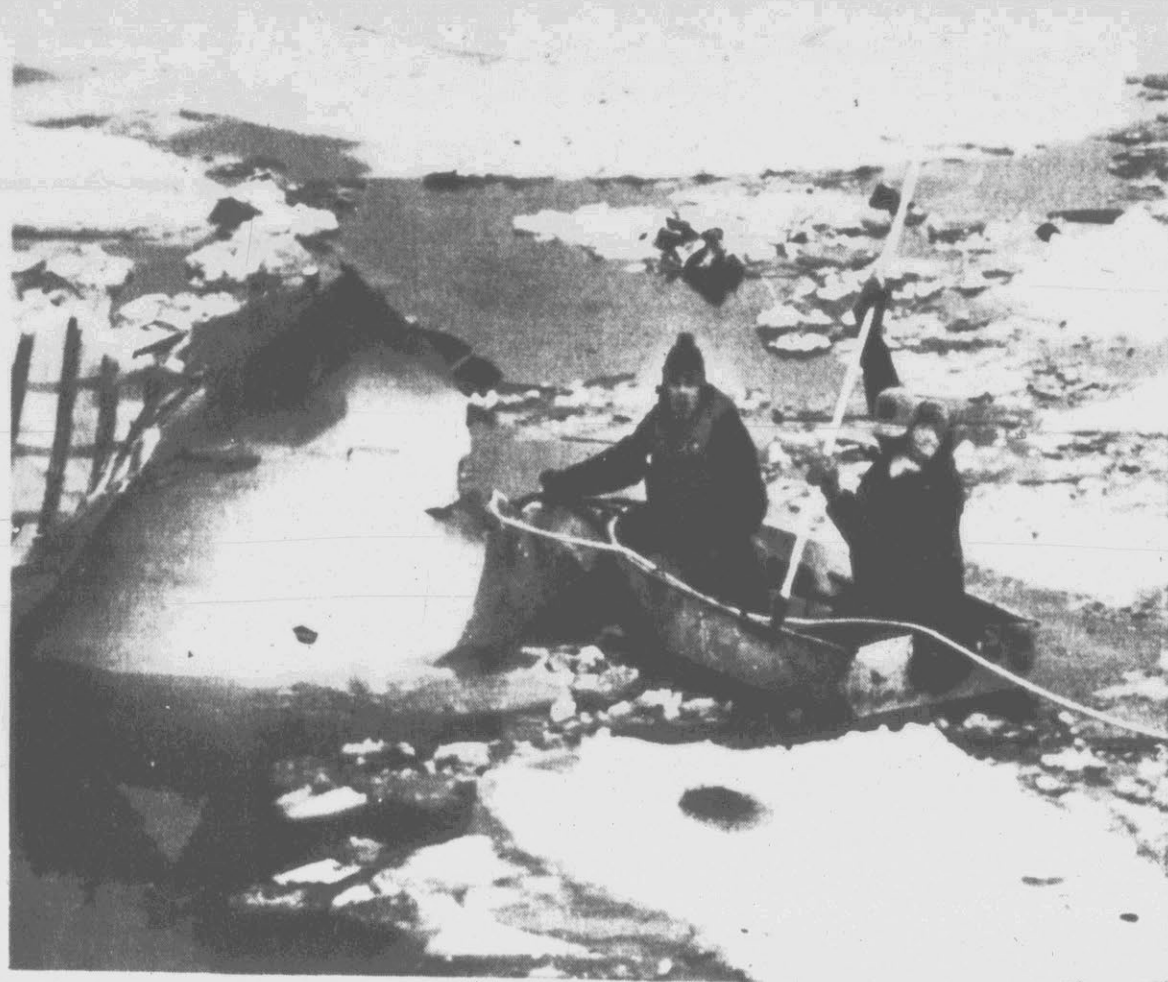

Ira Furman, spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board, said there was no hint why Air Florida Flight 90 to Tampa and Fort Lauderdale crashed, but one of the survivors said he had an uneasy feeling from the start.

"I had a pretty good indication things weren't going right when we started down the runway," said Joseph Stiley, 42, a licensed private pilot from Alexandria, Va. "I think it might have been just a little bit heavy from the ice."

The airport control tower reported no distress calls from the doomed plane during its few seconds of flight Wednesday. The last crash of a commercial plane at National, a smallish 40-year-old airport snuggled on the Virginia bank of the Potomac, was in 1949.

Furman said federal safety investigators "will be looking at the weather, human factors, everything." One of the first steps will be to examine cockpit flight recorders once the split pieces of the two-engine jet are fished from the river, hopefully today.

The blue and green airliner had just taken off from National Airport, where it had been serviced by American Airlines. The airport had been closed temporarily to clear snow from the runway until about an hour before the aircraft took off.

Leaped In To Save A Victim

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lennie Skutnik couldn't believe rescuers were not doing more to save a young woman struggling for her life among the wreckage of a downed airliner in the icy Potomac River.

So, when she "gave out" and lost her grip on a life preserver dangling at the end of a rope from a rescue helicopter overhead, "I jerked off my coat and boots and dove in after her," he said.

Moments later, about 10 yards from shore, Skutnik reached the woman from aboard the Air Florida plane that crashed into a bridge and plunged into the ice-covered river.

"I think she was out," Skutnik, 28, of Lorton, Va., recalled after he was treated for exposure and released from National Hospital for Orthopaedics and Rehabilitation in nearby Arlington, Va.

"Her eyes rolled back, and she just started to go under when I grabbed her," he said. "The bottom portion of her body was in the water at least 30 minutes."

Skutnik struggled to keep the woman afloat as he pushed and pulled her toward the shore, where another bystander on the bank lifted her out of the water.

The woman was one of five people survived the crash were taken to the same hospital, all of them suffering from hypothermia — a lowering of the body temperature due to exposure.

"If any of them had spent any more time in the water, they would have died," said Dr. Richard Schwartz, the medical disaster coordinator at the hospital. He said the survivors were responding to treatment.

Skutnik, an office service assistant with the Congressional Budget Office, and four others left their jobs early because of heavy snow in the Washington area and were driving home together.

Backed up in rush-hour traffic crossing the 14th Street Bridge between Washington and Virginia, Skutnik did not see the plane crash into the span and then into the river.

But after crossing the bridge, Skutnik and his companions parked their vehicle and went to the river's bank. "Just because we are human, I guess, we stood around and watched for a while."

When he saw a woman desperately trying to keep a grasp on the life preserver, "I felt so helpless; I couldn't do anything," he said.

Cold Grips Southland

By ANDY O'CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

Winter refused to release its grip on the South today, dumping new snow in the Gulf states, while the East dug out from a storm that roared up the Atlantic coast clogging highways and closing airports. Six days of cold and snow have killed at least 178 people.

Investigators were trying to determine whether the weather was to blame for the crash of an Air Florida jet which plunged into the Potomac River in downtown Washington on Wednesday, killing 80 people. Rescue efforts were hampered by the snow, snarled traffic and the icy temperatures of the Potomac.

The snowfall Wednesday was a curiosity in the Gulf states, but it became a severe problem as icy power lines snapped, depriving nearly a million people of electrical power and sending thousands to shelters. The storm dropped a half-foot of snow as it charged up the Atlantic coast, and left as much as 8 inches from Virginia to Rhode Island.

The National Weather Service said snow was expected again today from the Appalachians and lower Great Lakes to the mid-Atlantic states and into New England, with rain forming to the South. Minnesotans were warned that the storm heading their way was "potentially dangerous."

Temperatures were expected to remain in the teens and 20s for much of the central and eastern parts of the nation.

Schools and businesses were closed throughout the South and East on Wednesday and University of Tennessee students went sledding on the streets of the Knoxville campus during the first full-day closure of the university in 18 years. The snowfall was the worst for Georgia in 42 years.

With ice and snow everywhere, some people had little water to drink as pipes froze and burst. Two Mississippi cities declared water emergencies and a water-main break in Illinois prompted officials to urge people to boil their water.

New snow fell early today from Shreveport to New Orleans as Louisiana Gov. Dave Treen advised state employees to report to work only "if roads permit."

Snow was reported in Pensacola, Fla., but skies were clear again over Texas, leaving behind early morning temperatures in the teens.

Georgia Gov. George Busbee declared a state of emergency in Atlanta, which was immobilized by half a foot of snow, and ordered National Guardsmen to aid stranded motorists and help move abandoned cars. The snowfall forced a second day's delay in the trial of Wayne B. Williams, accused of killing two young blacks.

The Red Cross opened 25 disaster shelters in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina.

Alabama imported 100 utility workers from Florida to help restore electricity to 750,000 people, and thousands lit candles or moved in with friends. An Alabama Power Co. spokesman said it probably will be several days before all service is restored.

As the storm left the South, snow began falling Wednesday morning in the Northeast, and the accumulations by the afternoon rush hour snarled traffic badly in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Massachusetts.

Texas highways were clogged by up to 18 inches of snow.

Five inches of snow clogged afternoon traffic in the nation's capital, and cars were barely moving on the 14th Street Bridge when the Air Florida jet dove into the traffic and sank in the ice-covered river.

Pitt Woman Is Victim Of Poor Driving Conditions

Treacherous road conditions claimed the life of a 34-year-old Pitt County woman this early this morning in a two-car accident near Greenville, the North Carolina Highway Patrol reported.

Sgt. Kenneth Ross said Sue Smith Dunn died when her car skidded on a patch of ice on the Stantonsburg Road, 1.6 miles west of Greenville, about 7:15 a.m. The car spun around traveling backward on the roadway and collided with an oncoming vehicle driven by Compton McKenzie Willoughby of Farmville.

The Dunn car was a total loss, while damage to the Willoughby vehicle was set at $500, Ross said.

According to the sergeant, Ms. Dunn's license carried a Route 2, Winterville address. However, he said the woman, employed in the medical records section at the hospital, had moved to the Stantonsburg Road.

Medical examiner Dr. Stan Harris said Ms. Dunn died "almost instantly" of a "fractured neck."

More snow was forecast for the area this afternoon, as the second winter storm in as many days brushed eastern North Carolina.

Pitt County schools remained closed today, according to Thomas Craft, associate superintendent, but Greenville City schools opened as usual. "It was a tough one to call this morning," said Craft, "but there was a lot of ice on the roads."

Dr. Delma Blinson, superintendent of the city schools, said all schools opened on time this morning, but that plans have been made to close early should more ice develop today.

Temperatures remained normal for the season, with the high reaching 39 degrees Fahrenheit yesterday and the low dipping to 22 degrees F. At 8 a.m. today, Greenville Utilities reported the temperature at the freezing mark — 32 degrees F.

A total of 22 accidents were reported in Greenville yesterday, most of them weather-related, according to Greenville Police.

"I would encourage those people that don't have to travel to stay home should we get some more snow and ice," said Greenville Police Capt. A.G. Whitaker. "If you do have to get out, however, pay close attention to weather conditions, approaching traffic signals, stops and other traffic."

Whitaker recommends snow tires or chains. "If you have regular tires, lessen the air pressure slightly in the rear tires and it will increase your traction," he noted. "Don't lessen the pressure more than five pounds, though," he cautioned. Whitaker advised drivers with straight drive transmissions to gear their vehicles down rather than using the brakes.

"The key element is for people to respect the weather and drive slowly," he said.

Lack of food or fuel to keep warm has sent many families searching for help since the cold weather began last weekend, report Salvation Army officials. "We've received lots of calls — 16 since Monday," said Mrs. Betty Davis. Most of the calls were for food, wood or fuel, she added.

Funding Until September 30

City Manager Ed Wyatt said that federal and state funding for the city's transit system will continue at the present level at least until September 30.

Wyatt said the city has received inquiries from transit-dependent citizens regarding the future of the Greenville Area Transit (GREAT) System.

He said the Reagan administration, in efforts to reduce spending and balance the budget, is proposing cuts for various federal programs. GREAT currently receives assistance through the Section 18 program of the Urban Mass Transportation Administration (UMTA).

Wyatt said state officials have indicated to the city there is a good possibility that funding would be continued on a scaled-down basis for at least several years after 1982 and that transit assistance for capital expenses may be only slightly curtailed.

Greenville receives federal operating, capital, and administrative funds, Wyatt said, adding that 50 percent of the net operating cost of GREAT is provided by federal assistance.

Local officials will meet with the N.C. League of Municipalities' Transportation Committee in Raleigh on Jan. 22 to discuss the future of federal transit assistance.

Wyatt said the city has no plans to discontinue transit service. He said the city will continue to examine additional expanded revenue sources in the event federal transit operating subsidies are eliminated over the next few years.

Warsaw's First Bomb Explosion

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's martial law regime says it is considering meeting private farmers' demands to be treated like those on state farms so they will increase food production.

Meanwhile, Radio Warsaw reported a bomb explosion Wednesday in a Warsaw telephone booth, the first violence reported in the capital since the first week of martial law. Damage was said to be slight and no casualties were reported.

Agriculture Minister Jerzy Wojtecki told a news conference the government is considering proposals to give farmers fertilizers, coal, technical equipment and other industrial goods in exchange for meat and grain, Radio Warsaw reported.

The proposals appeared designed to meet the longtime complaint of private farmers, who account for 80 percent of Poland's food production, that the Communist regime discriminated against them in the allocation of agricultural development funds. The complaint was one of the causes for the organization of Rural Solidarity, the independent farmers' union and agricultural counterpart of the Solidarity labor federation.

Listed 22 Traffic Collisions In City Wednesday

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Greenville police investigated 22 traffic collisions yesterday, most of them due to the icy condition of city streets before warming temperatures helped make driving less hazardous.

According to police department reports this morning, $9,925 in property damage resulted from 11 of the mishaps in which damage was $400 or more.

Heaviest damage reported resulted from a 9:50 a.m. collision on the Tar River Bridge on Greene Street, involving a truck driven by Marion Frederick Riggsbee Jr. of Kinston, and a car operated by Arthur Cecil Oakley Jr. of Route 5, Greenville.

Damage was estimated at $500 to the truck and $1,500 to the car.

An 8 a.m. collision on Greenville Boulevard, 25 feet west of the Greenville Square Shopping Center entrance involved trucks operated by Joseph High Weeks of 400 Lewis St., and Patricia Crawford Patrick of 507 Lancelot Dr., and a car driven by Marlene Dee Graham of College Park Trailer Ct.

Damage was estimated at $400 to the car, $200 to the Weeks truck and $300 to the Patrick truck.

An 8:20 a.m. mishap on Cotanche Street, 50 feet south of the Reade Street intersection, caused $400 damage to a car driven by Robert Lewis Baker of Route 3, Greenville, and $500 damage to a car driven by Charles Henry Moore of 210

Investigators reported that a car, owned by Earl Gray Castellow of 1602 Brownlea Dr., skidded into a ditch at the intersection of 14th Street and Airlee Dr., about 9 a.m.

While the driver went for help, a car driven by Elaine Sokolosky of 306 Hillcrest Dr. skidded into the Castellow vehicle, causing $350 damage to the Sokolosky car and $400 damage to the Castellow auto.

'No Formal Statement Made, But Campaign Is Being Organized'

WILLIAMSTON — Betty Ann Knudsen of Raleigh has not made a formal announcement, but is in the process of organizing her campaign for the office of secretary of state of North Carolina.

"I thoroughly enjoy gathering, organizing and giving out information to citizens about how their government works and how they can have an impact. I also like working with the different levels of government and acting as a 'pollinator' and keeping the different groups informed on what's going on," said Mrs. Knudsen. She was replying to a question on why she had made the decision to run for the state office.

She spoke in Williamston Tuesday at a luncheon at the Roanoke Country Club before a combined meeting of the public affairs departments of the Williamston Woman's Club and the Rotary Club.

She is a member of the North Carolina 2000 Commission and is a member of the Wake County Board of Commissioners.

In discussing North Carolina 2000, she said, "People, natural resources, community and economy are four areas we will be concerned with throughout the state. We hope there will be a report on each of the subjects from each county which will be compiled by the N.C. 2000 Commission. The commission chairmen are President William Friday (of the University of North Carolina) and Mrs. Elizabeth Koonce.

"In March, the commission will distribute a ballot throughout the state and we hope to have hundreds of thousands respond to alternative ways they would like to see issues addressed by local and state governmental officials."

Betty Ann Knudsen

North Carolina 2000 is a program to involve citizens in determining what they would like their community and state to be like at the turn of the century.

"For instance, some things to consider would be: whether they want additional industry and population; how they want to provide human services, i.e. programs for the aging; and how we can preserve the quality of our environment particularly our water supply," Mrs. Knudsen said.

"This process is being developed to encourage citizens to express their views and know that it will be considered when important decisions are being made. What you say is very important and what you do will have an impact that will affect us now, but will carry over to the turn of the century," she said.

"Coordination and accountability are two issues of grave concern to the voter and elected officials. With the changes in federal funding for human services, it is imperative that local governments and volunteer organizations work together to see that the basic human needs of citizens be met in the most cost effective way," she added.

Mildred Taylor, incoming director of District 15, N. C. Federation of Women's Clubs, presided at the meeting. She welcomed members and guests and recognized Lillian Peele, program chairman.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

There was a time when there were so many soap opera fans hiding in the closet, you couldn't open the door without a couple of them falling out.

Who wanted to admit they sat around and watched daytime serials all day? It was like admitting you ate your kids' Halloween candy or didn't use a fabric softener in your final rinse. It just wasn't "professional."

Boy, times sure have changed. Fifteen million Americans eat lunch with General Hospital. Superstars work for scale for walk-on parts. And my own son took a class in Conversational Perrier last semester because it was the only course he could work in between All My Children and Search For Tomorrow.

The latter isn't at all surprising. While I carried him, every afternoon at 1 p.m., I'd sit down in front of the TV set with a plate of buttered noodles and remain comatose until As the World Turns signed off. In nine months, I gained 34 pounds and eight new words.

It has taken years for people to understand what the attraction is in soaps.

I can't imagine what took 'em so long. To me, soaps have always been the World Series of Sex, the love-in-the-afternoon Olympics, the perfect Ten of the Bored Housewife.

I loved 'em because it was so terrific to see a man hanging around the house. Oh sure, now you got Donahue, but back in my time, we had nothing. I loved the way husbands sat around the table and talked to their wives. They never worked.

I loved the way a woman was always dressed for an affair. With 'me, some days were better than others, but usually, I would have had to borrow something.

I loved the way the heroines were never happy. There's something depressing about women whose lives are going well and they have no problems. You could always count on the soaps. I could be sitting there with $200 worth of bills and $54 in the checking account, a baby due in three months, a gain of eight pounds in one month, a washer that walked, a furnace that groaned and a car that blacked out, but at least I wasn't on trial for the murder of my husband's boss like Joanne Tate.

Soaps are like a supermarket of our emotions. They have role models, villains to hate, new anxieties we haven't begun to explore, fantasies that someone else plays out for us... and a reason for your kid to stay in school. What more could you ask?

Gatherings Are Bad For Hubby

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 By Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: We've been married for three years. Howard (not his real name) is a wonderful husband. He's kind, understanding, easygoing and a big help around the house. I know he loves me, and he would be perfect except for one fault, which is a big one. He absolutely hates to attend my family's get-togethers. I come from a big and very close family, and I've grown up enjoying family get-togethers for all the holidays. (His family is small and they live far away.)

Abby, getting Howard to go with me is like pulling teeth. And after he gets there, he sits in a corner and sulks or watches TV by himself. Whenever we try to get him involved by asking questions about his interests, he gives one-word answers, which give the impression that he's not interested in conversing. This also gives the impression that he's too good to associate with my family.

I've told him over and over how hurt and embarrassed I am when he acts this way, but it doesn't change things. Abby, I want my family to love him the way I do, but how can they when he's so anti-social? What should I do?

FRUSTRATED

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Since you know that Howard hates family gatherings, don't subject him to so many. In fact, you'd be doing him (and yourself) a big favor if you went alone. A reluctant guest makes poor company.

DEAR ABBY: I'll bet this letter is only one of thousands. You advised "Fed Up" to have her boyfriend buy a Doberman pinscher or German shepherd and let it sit in the car so it wouldn't be stolen.

I can't believe you were serious, Abby, because you have often advised against leaving animals and children locked in a car — especially in summer with the windows rolled up. Please say you didn't mean it!

MADDER THAN A HOUND DOG

DEAR MADDER: Hold it! I did not recommend locking a dog in the car with all the windows rolled up! For the record, I have frequently warned my readers against locking children and pets in cars — especially in summer. I half-facetiously suggested that in order to discourage car thieves, a Doberman pinscher or a German shepherd could act as a guard dog. All the car windows could be rolled down enough for cross-ventilation, but not enough for the dog to escape.

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Disturbed and Guilty," who is secretly in love with her brother-in-law, that she is not alone.

I'm a man who feels that way about a secretary in our office. Sooner or later she will marry (I hope), quit her job and move away.

Until then, the pain and temptation are a daily struggle. I have a great wife and a wonderful family, and nothing could ever come of it. Meanwhile, Lord give me strength!

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — Mild, sunny weather is expected in the forecast period Thursday until Friday morning across the southern half of the nation. Cold weather will continue in the North. Showers are expected in the Northwest with snow flurries across the northern rim of the Plains and snow for New England. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
A strong area of low pressure located over northern Florida was expected to move northeast along the coast of the southeastern states today, passing along the North Carolina coast this afternoon and early tonight. This is the second winter storm to affect North Carolina in as many days. Another area of low pressure moved up the coast of the Carolinas yesterday. In its wake, from 1 to 4 inches of snow and ice were left on the ground across portions of the Piedmont and mountains. The winter storm today will be the stronger of the two. It will cause a mixture

Moped Laws

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Bicycle Committee will take another look at proposed moped regulations when it meets Friday at 10 a.m. in Raleigh.

Suggested federal guidelines that could change the definition of mopeds and new federal guidelines for bicycle facilities will be discussed by the committee.

The committee also will continue its preparation for "Bicycle Week in North Carolina," scheduled for May 1-7. The event is held annually to promote the growing interest in bicycle safety through the state.

of sleet, freezing rain and snow to fall from portions of the coastal plain west to the mountains. In these areas the precipitation will change to all snow during today and may accumulate from 2 to 4 inches before tapering off to flurries late today and early tonight.

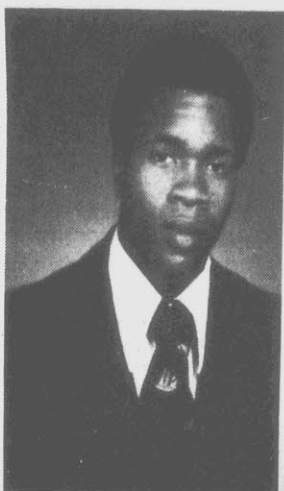

Along the north coast, there may be some freezing rain mixed with rain this morning. The rain may change to snow before ending early tonight. For the rest of the coast only rain is expected.

As the storm becomes stronger today, winds will likely increase to gale force along the immediate coast of North Carolina this afternoon and tonight.

High temperatures Wednesday afternoon ranged from the 20s and 30s across western and central sections to near 60 on the Outer Banks. Lows last night were in the 20s and 30s.

Think Tank Possibilities

Formation of a "think tank" to develop political alternatives to conservative economic policies on which moderate and liberal Democrats can run, is (or should be) more than just another gimmick.

The concept should have been inaugurated a long time ago, because the need for continuing intensive scrutiny and evaluation of economic and social policies is an ongoing thing. Fixed ideas as to how to cope with social problems are bound to ultimately fail because the factors themselves are changeable.

This was recognized by the electorate, and the impact was not lost on the organizers from among whose leaders came the observation that "We know that the liberal-moderate perspective of the last 20-30 years is not working anymore. Economic and social changes have rendered these solutions less and less effective. We need to energize the liberal perspective and examine alternatives and new ideas for liberals and moderates."

Composition of the new National Policy Exchange represents a mixed bag, including some veteran and able politicians as well as a recent winner of the Nobel Prize in economics ... which pleases us no end. On other occasions this page has called attention to the non-utilization of such proven talent in governmental roles; and now that quality has been interjected into a most valuable function.

We also look forward to contributions of the philosophically "mixed bag" representing organizers and leadership of the group. It is not good if the components are predisposed to opinions, theories and solutions of perennial problems confronting a nation.

Potential contributions to our country's future by the National Policy Exchange are quite literally immeasurable. From their studies and eventual consensus will come (we pray) something of value.

Something To Talk About

A dangerous snow and ice storm hit our area overnight Wednesday morning and people seemed to be as ready for it as we can get here.

Traffic moved slowly on slick streets and highways early in the morning. There were numerous reports of cars sliding into ditches and minor collisions, but there apparently were no major fires or critical injuries in accidents.

Motorists and pedestrians proceeded cautiously, and people seemed to be helping one another.

In such hazardous conditions, a major fire can be a disaster, since emergency equipment cannot move about quickly. An unthinking driver traveling at speeds unsafe for the conditions can involve other cars in accidents.

Fortunately we came through Wednesday's weather conditions with little more than something to talk about for awhile. That is to everybody's credit.

THIS AFTERNOON

Still Country Roads

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Largely overlooked in the recent outline of future activity in roadbuilding by the North Carolina Department of Transportation are the thousands of miles of rural secondary roads in North Carolina which remain unpaved, country roads.

The Highway Improvement Program embraces from now until 1991, and deals with the state's interstate, major primary, urban and rural primary, bridge, landscaping and safety programs.

The Secondary Roads Program is not part of that highway improvement program. Special funds are set aside each year for it as local county commissioners and Transportation Department officials develop a separate plan.

That keeps the so-called farm-to-market roads in a category where partisan politics and local connections can work their way to a much greater degree than in other state highway programs.

This year, the Secondary Program is getting $40 million, of which $10 million is from the 1977 bond issue.

Funds Drop

The bond money is practically exhausted, and there are some strong signals contained within the overall state highway program which foretell what is likely to happen to the secondary program in coming years. As Transportation Secretary Bill Roberson puts it: "But few people realize that the Good Roads Program has not yet been fully funded by the Legislature. We still do not have $59 million that would come from the Good Roads Program."

And, Roberson says, "Our present seven-year plan has, in reality become a 15-20 year plan because of inflation and the shortage of revenues."

These observations hold little promise for any expansion of the Secondary Roads fund. Loss of the bond money will put the total back to $30 million, and all along there have been strong indications that the Department of Transportation intends to use all the money it can get for roadway maintenance and to match federal construction funds which are decreasingly available. The odds are better that country roads will suffer than that they will get more attention.

Money for secondary roads is parceled out on a formula by which each county gets a share based on miles of unpaved secondary roads in relationship to total mileage of unpaved secondary roads in the state.

By the time that $40 million is divided among 100 counties on such a formula, many get far less than half-a-million dollars and that small amount means few miles actually get paved.

The lion's share of the roads budget totalling more than $212 million goes for other than country roads. Yet secondary roads make up 80 percent of the highway mileage in the state. Nearly

To the editor:

I've been impressed by an argument put forth by Laura Murphy of the Washington office of the American Civil Liberties Union on the matter of proposed constitutional amendments to ban abortion. "They would create fetal rights that are superior to other constitutional rights such as privacy, equal protection and due process ..." and give "constitutional status to a religious belief that a fertilized egg is a human being from the moment of fertilization ..." and "subordinate women's bodies, health, work and even lives, to fetal survival" (Civil Liberties, December, '81)

Personally, I see abortion as a very poor substitute for birth control. In many instances there must be great emotional suffering on the part of the women involved, regardless of the justifications for the abortion. But the impact of the proposed amendments, I believe, will be the multiplication of suffering and injustice far greater than is the present situation. In "righteous indignation" we may be suggesting solutions more awful than the problem.

Strength For Today

WITHIN THE WALLS

A young man was recently told by a physician that he had an incurable illness, but one which could be controlled. "You can live a happy and useful life," continued the physician, "but you must live it within certain limits. You must discipline yourself."

Some people would be devastated by such a diagnosis, but not people of wisdom and courage. For example, a very successful chaplain working in a hospital for the disabled was born without arms. But he trained his feet to do practically everything that other people do with their hands. A recent newspaper account tells of the rescue of three people from drowning — by a blind man.

Everyone has a wall around him. We all have to live within limits. For some people these are limits of health; for others they are limits of economic or geographical circumstances. Sometimes these handicaps seem discouraging or even tragic, but the wise and brave live meaningful lives within them. — Elisha Douglass

MUST BE BETTER THAN WE THOUGHT!

By JAMES KILPATRICK

Rank Abuse Of Power

WASHINGTON — At the presidential news conference on Dec. 17, a knowledgeable black reporter fired a loaded question at Mr. Reagan: Should the Supreme Court's Weber decision be overturned? The president was a sitting duck. Of the Weber decision, as such, he possessed no knowledge whatever.

"I have to confess to you," said Mr. Reagan, "that I can't bring to mind what it pertains to and what it calls for." The reporter provided a summary that was accurate as far as it went. "Well," the president lamely concluded, "if this is something that simply allows the training and the bringing up so there are more opportunities for (minorities), in voluntary agreement between the union and management, I can't see any fault with that. I'm for that."

On Jan. 4, the White House issued a belated statement correcting the record. The president agrees with the Justice Department that the Weber case was wrongly decided. The president "basically supports affirmative action where it is on a voluntary basis."

Very well. Let us have plain speech. The Supreme Court's decision of June 27, 1979, in the case of Brian F.

Weber violated every applicable principle of jurisprudence. In order to achieve a result it regarded as socially desirable, the majority trampled underfoot not only its own recent precedents but also its well-established rules for statutory construction. Five members of the court, led by Justice Brennan, tossed away their judicial robes and elected themselves to the United States Congress. They then proceeded, by their own fiat, simply to rewrite Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. It was an indefensible act of arrogance by life-tenured justices whose abuse of power cannot easily be corrected.

The case originated in 1974, not long after the Kaiser Aluminum Chemical Co. negotiated an agreement with the United Steelworkers. Under the agreement, affirmative action programs were to be instituted with the aim of bringing more blacks into craft positions. At the company's Gramercy, La., plant, where blacks held about 2 percent of the craft jobs, blacks were to be given at least half of the openings in training programs until they held at least 39 percent of all such positions. Trainees were to be accepted according to their seniority within the plant.

Pursuant to this agreement, 13 trainees were chosen for six different programs — seven blacks, six whites. It is not contested that the most senior black had less seniority than several whites, among them Weber, whose applications for four programs were rejected.

In a nutshell: Weber was denied this opportunity for advancement solely because of his race. He was a victim of the very kind of racial discrimination that is flatly forbidden by Title VII. The statute is explicit. It contains not the slightest ambiguity. Words could not be set more clearly one after another. It is "unlawful" for employers and unions to discriminate against "any" employee because of his race "in admission to any program established to provide training."

Brennan's incredible excuse for upholding the Kaiser discrimination was that while the program violated the letter of the law, it did not violate the spirit of the law. In a blistering dissent, Justice Rehnquist charged that the majority had pulled off a "tour de force reminiscent not of jurists such as Hale, Holmes and Hughes, but of escape artists such as Houdini." The majority had eluded both clear statutory language and uniform precedent. It had discarded a legislative history of the act that in earlier cases the court unanimously had described as beyond contradiction.

This is the "Weber case." Under the Reagan administration, the Justice Department openly and avowedly is searching for a set of facts that would provide an opportunity for the court to reverse itself. In the 1979 opinion, Brennan was joined by Justices Stewart, White, Marshall, and halfheartedly by Blackmun. Chief Justice Burger and Rehnquist dissented. Justices Powell and Stevens took no part. Stewart has departed. A new test case could well go 5-4 the other way, thus restoring vitality to a federal statute that now gives deliberate racial discrimination the approval of judge-made law.

Haig Holds High Cards

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan used the long-distance telephone Friday morning to inform complaining Republican senators that there was no use campaigning against Secretary Alexander Haig's plan to name career Foreign Service officers to the State Department's No. 2 and No. 3 spots. The president revealed he agreed with Haig and would announce the selections that very afternoon.

"I didn't like it," one senator told us, "but what could I do? Reagan was elected president, not me." However, selection of Walter Stoessel as deputy secretary and, more particularly, Lawrence Eagleburger as under secretary was steeped in irony for a president who had entered office vowing war against "the permanent government."

Contrary to all expectations, Reagan has now elevated Foreign Service officers to their highest steps on the State Department ladder during the post-World War II era. That is viewed as a significant policy defeat inside the Pentagon, by defense-oriented senators and within the conservative movement generally. To their dismay, Al Haig has solidified his hold on the State Department in setting a policy attuned to a Western alliance solid front, even at the cost of diluting positions toward the Soviet Union.

"It's Haig's sandbox now," one disgruntled White House aide grumbled. A Pentagon official made the same point differently: "Reagan has lost control of the State Department."

If his new State Department selections seem curious, the explanation can be found in the narrow window through which President Reagan receives information. There is no sign that he encountered any criticism about the Stoessel-Eagleburger selections, widely voiced within his own White House staff, until his own decision had been made.

Oddly, Haig's horde of enemies had again been forecasting his doom with the transfer of old Reaganite Clark from deputy secretary of state to the upgraded national security adviser's post. One virulent Haig critic inside the administration predicted that the return of a separate advisory link to the president would mean a new secretary of state within nine months.

But Gen. Haig moved swiftly on the field of bureaucratic battle once Clark was gone with a flanking movement putting Stoessel and Eagleburger in place. With Congress in recess and senators scattered throughout the country, the appointments were hurried to prevent a backfire.

A backfire was expected, considering the break with precedent. Not since David Bruce in 1952 had a Foreign Service officer filled the department's No. 2 post. But while Bruce had spent only two youthful years as a vice consul in Rome and had then left the Service for business and farming interests, Stoessel's entire distinguished career has been as a diplomat.

Until Stoessel, the No. 2 position at State has been the president's rather than the secretary's choice, typified by Sumner Welles in the 1930s serving as President Franklin Roosevelt's eyes and ears in the State Department. A similar function was viewed when Reagan talked his ex-aid, Bill Clark, into leaving a comfortable seat on the California Supreme Court to become Haig's deputy.

Conservatives fear that Stoessel, at age 61, will be a passive figure as deputy secretary while the department will be run by the hard-charging Eagleburger, his successor as under secretary. That is why the new State Department team has aroused so much concern on the right.

As Haig's assistant secretary for European affairs, Eagleburger has

(Greensboro Record)

A private organization has found that 87 percent of the state's roads and 76 percent of its bridges are deficient because they are unable to support the vehicle loads they were designed to handle. The report is a bit difficult to swallow.

Exactly what standards the Washington-based organization used to determine these figures isn't clear. A spokesman for the state Department of Transportation says the figures for bridges were taken from a survey the department conducted to qualify for federal bridge repair and replacement aid. Which immediately makes statistics on bridges suspect.

The figures on roads, the same source says, "were somewhat arbitrary." That also makes them suspect.

True, as the source points out, the findings may help the state to qualify for federal funds, but do they reflect a true report of North Carolina's roads?

Many of the state's roads are meandering, winding roads in rural areas which were tarred and gravelled during the administration of Governor W. Kerr Scott when he emphasized his farm-to-market roads program. Others were added during the term of his son, Gov. Robert Scott. These roads were never intended to support much more than a pickup truck load and the suspicion is the survey gave them heavier load assignments.

Another view is the report doesn't at all hurt the Department of Transportation's contention it will fall $2 billion short of needed funds in the next decade even though it will be spending $2 billion.

Good roads are an asset to any community or state but suspicion lingers that the Department of Transportation is crying "Wolf!" We bet it can do with a whole lot less than it will admit to.

Find Americans On The Move

By RANDOLPHE SCHMID

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The image of America as a nation on the move is underlined by new Census figures showing that more than three-quarters of those in their late 20s changed residences in the last half of the 1970s.

"The highest mobility rates typically occur among people in their 20s, reflecting the establishment of new households by young adults who have just finished school, recently married or entered the labor market," according to the study.

Between 1975 and 1980, some 77 percent of Americans aged 25 to 29 moved, the study said.

In addition, it noted that 45.1 percent of all Americans aged 5 and over changed residences during that half decade.

Of 202 million Americans over five, it said, 91 million moved to a new home sometime between 1975 and 1980.

While the peak moving age was the late 20s, there was a high rate of moving among children aged 5 to 9, reflecting the movement of their parents.

However, families with children under age 6 were more likely to move than those with older children. Officials noted that "the presence of school-age children acts to reduce the geographical mobility of families."

The study also noted that the tendency to move is related directly to education.

"Among persons 18 years old and over, 55 percent of those with four or more years of college moved between March 1975 and March 1980, compared with 45 percent of those who had completed only four years of high school and 29 percent of those with only eight years of education," the study said.

Race made little difference in likelihood of moving, with the bureau noting that blacks and whites relocated at almost the same rate. Blacks moved shorter distances, though, with 33 percent of them relocating within the same county compared to 25 percent of whites.

The bureau also noted the widely reported movement of Americans from metropolitan areas to non-metropolitan regions. However, due to that movement, many of the nonmetropolitan areas have been redesignated as metropolitan since the 1980 national head count.

People moving into cities had a median age of 26.3 years, the bureau said, compared with 29 years for those leaving.

The bureau said professional people were the most likely to move while farm workers were most stable.

Three People Die In Subway Accident

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — What started as a minor mishap turned into slow-motion terror when a subway operator backed a packed train that had started down the wrong track into a concrete divider, killing three people and injuring two dozen others.

The first fatal accident on the capital's showcase subway system occurred during the afternoon rush hour Wednesday, less than 30 minutes after an Air Florida jet crashed into a bridge in a severe snowstorm and plunged into the Potomac River, killing 80 people.

Joe Sheard, director of rail operations for Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority — Metro — said it started when a switch being operated manually was set the wrong way and headed the train down the wrong track near the Smithsonian station.

When the operator slowly backed up the train, the lead car moved diagonally because its front wheels remained on the wrong track while its rear wheels were rolling down the other track.

That skewing movement caused the car to impale itself on a concrete divider separating the two rails, ripping open a 15-foot section of the car wall, buckling the roof and tearing up about eight sets of seats.

Cody Pfanstiel, a Metro spokesman, said 155 people, including up to 80 standees, could have been crowded into the car. The train had six cars.

It took firemen using power tools a half hour to cut through the car's walls to free several pinned-in passengers and up to two hours to evacuate everyone through the tunnels.

When Metro officials took reporters on a tour of the scene Wednesday night, the only remnants of the commuters were a knitted scarf and a paperback book, "The Wilderness Reader," lying beside the car.

Passengers, many of them federal workers sent home early because of heavy snow, told of panic in the crowded car.

The motorman said over an intercom, "Let me know when I'm cleared," said passenger Susan Larrick, 24, of Silver Spring, Md.

"It was impossible to fall. ... It was something out of a slow-motion movie," said Arthur Hastings of Bowie, Md.

"It split open like a can. People were screaming, yelling."

"People were screaming when they saw the car going in" to the tall divider, said

Mark Lysne, 28, of Falls Church, Va. "There was nothing wrong until they started backing up."

Richard Page, general manager of transit authority, said an independent board of inquiry composed of four subway experts from New York, Chicago and San Francisco will investigate the crash to "examine our procedures and correct anything that might need correcting."

More People
As the established trend toward balanced growth sees more economic development in the countryside and as more people seek out the quieter rural settings for their homes, there will be more secondary road mileage, and more people living along dirt roads.

The state's primary system is just over 12,000 miles. The urban system is about 4,000 miles.

Paving those country roads is proving a laborious process.

In a three-year period, the limited funds permitted paving only 1,000 miles. That means about 300 miles get paved statewide each year; and that figures down to an average of only three miles per county. With the secondary roads money having to go for routine maintenance, shoulder and bridge work, signing, etc., in addition to paving, it is plain that given the increasing county road mileage and the decreasing funds, Tar Heels will continue to drive on dirt and gravel roads for a long time.

clashed repeatedly with both National Security Council (NSC) staffers and Pentagon officials on a variety of issues. The complaint has been that he magnifies Haig's own Western European emphasis in seeking a NATO consensus for U.S. approaches to the Kremlin.

Staff members of the senators belonging to the Steering Committee, the informal group of conservative Republicans, tried to mobilize their bosses to head off Haig's selections. Their real choice as deputy would have been Fred Ikle, a strategic arms expert who is under secretary of defense. But more realistically, they promoted former Sen. James Buckley, now under secretary of state for security assistance.

Several Republican members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, including North Carolina's Jesse Helms and Indiana's Richard Lugar, submitted such suggestions. But the big three senior staffers at the White House had blessed the Stoessel-Eagleburger package, and Clark agreed. Although key Pentagon subordinates were appalled by the choices, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger did not use his considerable influence with Reagan to protest.

Hopes of playing for time to delay the appointment disappeared when Reagan telephoned protesting senators Friday morning to tell them it was too late, the decision had been made. The critics of those picks wonder whether the president really had any notion of what their objections were about.

Short Primary Season Sought

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A Democratic Party commission headed by Gov. Jim Hunt was expected to vote on proposals to shorten the length of the presidential primary season today in Washington.

Hunt said Wednesday he hopes the party's Commission on Presidential Nominations, which is trying to improve the nominating process, will shorten the state primary season by three to four weeks.

But Hunt said he did not expect the commission to try to force Iowa and New Hampshire to comply with a party rule limiting caucuses and primaries to a 90-day period.

Instead, Hunt said he hoped the party could get those states to voluntarily move their traditional, first-in-the-nation delegate selection events closer to the 13 week "window" of dates approved by the party. He said that period runs from early March to early June.

"I think the chance of reducing the length of the process by three or four weeks is good," Hunt said.

"If we can get them within a week and a half or so of the beginning of the window, I think we will have done a very good thing," he added. "That will be close to a month that we will have reduced the process by."

Other proposals for changing the nominating process are also to be voted on, some expected to affect the leading 1984 Democratic presidential contenders, Sen. Edward Kennedy and former Vice President Walter Mondale.

Hunt, who remained strongly loyal to President Carter in 1980, said he favored a proposal to assure that more elected Democratic officials will be delegates to the national convention in 1984.

Hunt's press secretary, Gary Pearce, said Hunt's main goal was to see that Democratic governors and members of Congress will be assured of spots as uncommitted delegates.

He said on the primary length, Hunt hopes to have Iowa and New Hampshire's traditional first caucuses and primaries scheduled in mid-February rather than in January.

"Frankly I'm very hopeful we can make some progress," Hunt said. "What we're trying to do is put the Democratic Party right square in the mainstream of America."

Although the party could refuse to recognize delegates selected in events held too early, Hunt said the party could not as a practical matter stop early primaries or caucuses.

CITIZEN OF THE YEAR . . . John Pierce Sumrell receives a plaque from Don Russell upon the announcement Tuesday night that he had been named Ayden's "Citizen Of The Year" for 1981. The award was made by a secret committee of the Ayden Council, Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, and was officially presented in the organization's Annual Meeting, held at the Ayden Community Building. Sumrell is a retired farmer and businessman here, and has been active in many endeavors locally. (Photo by Mitchell Oakley)

J. P. Sumrell Named Ayden Citizen Of Year

John Pierce Sumrell was named Ayden's "Citizen Of The Year" during the Annual Meeting of the Ayden Council, Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce Tuesday night. The selection was made by a secret committee, and Don Russell made the official presentation.

Sumrell, a retired farmer and businessman, was born and raised in the Ayden community. He is a member of the Ayden United Methodist Church, the Ayden Masonic Lodge, the Pitt County Planning Board, and the REAL Crisis Center Board. He is local chairman of the United Way. He was active in the organization of Ayden's first Economic Council, served as Vice-Chairman of the Ayden Collard Festival in 1981 and was 1981 Membership Committee Chairman for the Ayden Council. In Chamber activities, he also worked with the formation of the Farmers Market here. He also serves in the Big Brother and Listerer programs in the Ayden schools.

Dr. Elliott Dixon, Chairman of the Ayden Council Board, introduced the 1982 officers and board members to open the Annual Meeting. New officers, in addition to Dixon who will serve a second term as Chairman, are Marvin Baldree, Vice-Chairman; Louis Stanfield, Vice-Chairman of Budget and Finance; Bobby McLawhorn, Louise Moseley, Gratz Norcott, Ross Persinger, Don Russell, J. Pierce Sumrell, Horace Tripp, and Victor Wilson, all board members.

Baldree introduced guests, including Mr. and Mrs. Larkin Little, Ed Walker, Bob Griffin, Senator and Mrs. Vernon White, and Pitt Commissioners Alton Gardner, Bruce Strickland, and Charles Gaskins. Also introduced were Pitt County Education Board members Jim Black and Mrs. Bob McGaughey, Greenville Mayor and Mrs. Percy Cox, Ayden Mayor Pro Tem and Mrs. J. J. Brown, Town Manager Don Russell, County Manager Reginald Gray, Pitt County Industrial Development Director Robert Dunn, and Greenville Attorney David Duffus.

Griffin, 1981 Chairman of the Board of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, pointed out that a primary goal in 1981 was to expand the chamber's influence and involvement throughout the county in 1981. He stated that the Ayden Council organization in 1981 was THE expansion move during the year with Bethel following later, and Grifton scheduled for next week.

A slide projection, prepared by John and Rosa Griffin, about the Town of Ayden was viewed by the audience. The presentation depicted the many assets of the local community as well as its close proximity to many other valuable resources in Pitt County. The slide projection was part of Ayden's presentation last year to a Department of Commerce team considering the town for the Governor's Community of Excellence Award. Ayden received the award in November.

Chairman Dixon presented various awards for volunteer leadership in 1981. Receiving the awards were: Victor Wilson, chairman of the Community Development Committee; Steve and Bert Sudor, Co-chairmen of the Revitalization Committee; Burt Tripp, chairman of the Public and Governmental Affairs Committee; Pierce Sumrell, chairman of the Membership Committee; and Don Russell, chairman of the Governor's Community of Excellence Award Committee. Also receiving awards were Ross Persinger, chairman of the Pepsi Break Committee and Horace Tripp, both who could not be in attendance at the meeting. Larkin Little, 1982 Chairman of the Board of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, congratulated the Ayden Council for the fine accomplishments in 1981 as well as for the program of work slated in 1982. He pointed out that the chamber is the largest business organization east of Raleigh. And, he added that it was imperative for volunteers to work together in the new year.

Little lauded Chairman Dixon for his leadership. "You are indeed fortunate to have someone with Elliott Dixon's drive and determination," Little said. "If any one person can make it happen (in 1982), it would be Elliott Dixon. He's a winner and I'm delighted to have him working with our team." Little added. He then presented Dixon with a plaque recognizing him for his leadership as Chairman in 1981.

Chairman Dixon, in his message for 1982, recounted the early efforts to organize an Ayden Council of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce here. He noted the questions that popped into people's minds. And, he pointed out the successes of the past year. He explained that "faith" was what had provided the accomplishments—"faith in ourselves, our town, and our community."

Larkin Little On Committee

J. Larkin Little, executive vice president of Home Federal Savings and Loan here, was named this week to the Legislative Committee of the United States League of Savings Associations. It was announced.

The new committee member said the coming 1982 session of Congress "may decide whether this nation remains one of the best housed on the world."

Little said in recent years decisions in Washington "have pushed housing farther and farther down the line as a national priority."

He said two million American families will need new homes in 1982 and three million others will want to "move or move up." Unless policies change, he said, the outlook is for only 1.2 million new homes to be built and less than 1.5 million existing homes to be financed.

Little said the U.S. League, which represents over 4,000 savings and loan associations nationwide, will seek Congressional action this year to lend and invest profitably in varied economic conditions.

Convicted Spy Facing Charges

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The jury that convicted a man of murdering Sarai Ribicoff could not agree on whether to sentence him to the gas chamber, so a judge says he will order the man to prison for life.

Superior Court Judge Laurence Rittenband handed out the sentence Wednesday, declaring there would be no parole.

Frederick Jerome Thomas, 22, was convicted Dec. 11 of first-degree murder in the November 1980 shotgun slaying of Ms. Ribicoff, a 23-year-old editorial writer for the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner and niece of former U.S. Sen. Abraham Ribicoff of Connecticut. Because the killing came during the commission of another crime, robbery, Thomas faced the death penalty.

Gift For Burial Of Veterans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A businessman who served in Vietnam has donated $9,000 toward the burial of indigent veterans.

The county morgue in Los Angeles may have as many as 30 bodies of U.S. combat veterans that were not buried because no one would pay. Some are not identified officially, according to the authorities.

Henry Rushing, 38, of Ventura County, heard about the situation and wrote a check, which the county accepted. Officials say it is enough to cover 30 burials.

'Extensive' Gag Set By Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's order aimed at plugging leaks of sensitive information is far more sweeping than first thought, extending to the Agriculture Department and other agencies not directly related to national security.

The White House announcement of the administration's new policy on Tuesday spoke only of national security matters. William P. Clark, the president's new national security adviser, said it was instituted because Reagan was tired of seeing classified information in the newspapers.

Nothing was said then about restricting conversations between officials and reporters on matters with no security implications.

However, it turned out

Wednesday that the policy is far more extensive. Officials of the Agriculture Department, for example, have been told to clear major news interviews with the White House.

A memorandum circulated by John Ochs, an assistant to Agriculture Secretary John R. Block, said, "It is requested that whenever you or anyone under your jurisdiction receives an invitation for an interview ... that you consult with me so that I may clear it with the White House."

The same word apparently is spreading throughout the federal bureaucracy.

At the Treasury Department, spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "We don't have any directives out yet, but we will."

"We, of course, will abide by the White House request," said Vernon Louviere, an aide to Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan, adding, "it's always been our policy not to conduct the business of this agency in the press ..."

David Lane, an assistant to Ochs, said that Reagan, angered by leaks to the news media, included budget information when he "laid down the law" about stopping leaks last Thursday at a Cabinet meeting. A directive was issued the following day to many, if not all, departments, he said.

Deputy press secretary Larry Speakes confirmed at the White House that Cabinet members were told to clear appearances on television interview programs. But he said that is not a new policy and described it as "a coordination process, not a clearance process."

The announcement of the new policy Tuesday said: "In the event of unauthorized disclosure of such information, government employees who have had access to that information will be subject to investigation, to include the use of all legal methods," the announcement said.

When queried Wednesday, Speakes refused to rule out use of wiretaps in seeking to find the source of leaks of national security information.

The implication Tuesday was that the directive applies to employees in departments that deal in national security secrets — Defense, State and the National Security Council.

But Lane said that when the matter was discussed at the Cabinet meeting the president included leaks about budget information.

Says Too Much Money Going To UNC Schools

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina may be spending too much money on its 16-campus university system and not enough on its public elementary and secondary schools, an official says.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction A. Craig Phillips said his contention was supported by a report released Wednesday by his department. It says North Carolina ranked in the bottom half of the 50 states last year in per-pupil spending for public schools.

Meanwhile, another study said the state was among the top 10 in total spending for higher education.

Phillips said the report pointed up a "serious concern that he hoped the Legislature would address."

In the 1980-81 year, North Carolina school systems spent an average of $2,030 per pupil in federal, state and local money, compared to the national average of $2,445 per pupil, according to the Department of Public Instruction report.

That amount placed North Carolina 35th in the nation. The state with the highest per-pupil expenditure was Alaska with $5,220 and the lowest was Alabama with $1,593.

Meanwhile, the state ranked ninth nationally during 1980-81 in overall state appropriations earmarked for higher education, according to a study by M.M. Chambers, a professor of educational administration at Illinois State University.

And the legislature's fiscal research staff says the state spent $1,220 from state funds for each pupil in the public schools for 1980-81, compared with $3,226 for every student in the UNC system.

State Treasurer Harlan E. Boyles said the gap in funding may be due to the lobbying abilities of university supporters.

"It involves not only the loyalties of the (lawmakers) but also their ability to understand the higher education budgets versus the public school budget — the magnitude of the dollars going into the public schools is so great," Boyles said.

UNC President William Friday said the gap wasn't too wide considering the tasks assigned to the university system.

"If the figure for us includes operating the two medical schools, the agriculture experiment station and the multiplicity of other functions in addition to the instruction of 117,000 young people that the university has been asked to perform, then I do not think that is a disproportionate investment by the state," Friday said.

He added that the state provides only 48 percent of the cost of operating the university, the remainder coming from tuition, fees, grants and other sources.

Critic Attacks Self-Promotion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Cancer Institute is under fire for spending $159,000 to publish a magazine that a long-time critic charges was "entirely devoted to ... self-glorification and self-promotion."

The money should have been used for cancer research, says Irwin D.J. Bross, director of biostatistics at Roswell Park Memorial Institute for cancer treatment in Buffalo, N.Y.

The magazine, which chronicles advances in cancer research since Congress created the institute in 1971, was published last month. Copies were sent to members of Congress and holders of NCI grants and contracts, and will be sold to the public for $5.50 each.

Dr. Henry C. Pitot, chairman of NCI's advisory board, defended the magazine expenditure as "really a small price to pay to tell the American public what has been done with their $7.6 billion."

Bross attacked the institute's publication in a letter published by The Washington Post. He has criticized the NCI previously in testimony before Congress.

Angola And U.S. Arrange Conference

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and Angola, at odds over the presence of Cuban troops in Angola, are planning high-level meetings on bilateral and regional issues Friday and Saturday in Paris, U.S. officials say.

The two countries do not have diplomatic relations but the upcoming meeting — still unannounced — is one of several recent indications of their interest in pursuing closer ties.

The Americans will be represented by Chester Crocker, the assistant secretary of state for African affairs, who will fly to Paris from talks in London with South African officials. The Angolan delegation will be led by Foreign Minister Paulo Jorge.

The Reagan administration has been participating in a broad-based diplomatic effort to achieve independence and black majority rule in the South African-controlled territory of Namibia. It also has been engaged in a simultaneous effort to create conditions that would permit the withdrawal of the 15,000 to 20,000 Cuban troops based in Angola.

As officials here see it, the two issues are related. Black nationalist guerrillas from Namibia, also known as South-West Africa, have been using neighboring Angola as a sanctuary and have been the target of repeated cross-border raids by South African forces. Angola contends that the Cuban troops are needed for protection against South Africa.

The administration has said it is hopeful that both Namibian independence and the withdrawal of Cuban troops can be achieved over the next year.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has cited the Cuban troop presence in Angola as evidence of an indirect bid by the Soviet Union to expand its influence in southern Africa.

A succession of U.S. administrations has viewed the Cuban military deployment as an unwarranted intrusion in an area where the Soviet Union has not had a historic interest and where there are mineral resources vital to the U.S. economy. Cuba has repeatedly noted that its troops were sent to Angola at the invitation of the Luanda government.

U.S. officials, who asked not to be identified, said Angola has been reassessing its ties to the Soviet bloc.

"Angola has been going backward economically rather rapidly and that is well known to the government," said one official. "The only way they can get their act together economically is through a progressive opening to the West, not just us but including us."

He added that Angolan officials are becoming increasingly aware that the "Soviets and their friends cannot solve Angola's economic problems."

Cuba has had troops deployed in Angola since 1975. Officials believe the Cubans have worn out their welcome because they have been reluctant to engage the South Africans militarily. In addition, maintenance of the Cuban troops represents a substantial drain on Angola's limited resources, the officials said.

Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos has indicated a desire for a progressive normalization of relations with the United States but the administration does not foresee an exchange of ambassadors until after the Cuban troops are withdrawn.

Asked about the possibility of establishing so-called "interests sections" — small, low-level diplomatic missions — in each other's capitals before the departure of the Cubans, one official said, "I wouldn't rule anything out but we're not at the stage of making announcements on that."

Another inducement for Angola to ask the Cubans to leave centers on the prospect that a Cuban departure would bring about an end to the costly six-year war which has been waged by pro-Western guerrillas against the Luanda government.

The leader of the UNITA guerrilla movement, Jonas Savimbi, has said that he will seek a peace settlement with the central government once Cuba withdraws its troops.

'Condition' Has A Carson Label

BOSTON (AP) — Diseases often get their names from their causes, and so it was a natural that someone would come up with Carsonogenesis — or Johnny Carson disorder.

It is a harmless form of night blindness that may be caused by people who spend their nights watching late television shows.

Dr. Park Biehl of Cincinnati, in a letter in today's New England Journal of Medicine, wrote that one of his patients complained about not being able to see out of her left eye at night. Funny thing, but the doctor told her he had the same affliction.

"She customarily watched a popular late-evening talk show while lying prone in bed with her head turned to the left and her right eye buried in the pillow."

"Naturally, when it came time to turn off the set, she could see well only with the dark-adapted right eye. The problem was explained and she was relieved."

Set Up An IRA At Planters And You Could Be Set For Life.

An Individual Retirement Account at Planters National Bank could be the financial opportunity of a lifetime. It lets you build an impressive fund for retirement. And it's an effective way to reduce your taxable income throughout your working years.

The money you deposit can be deducted right off the top of your taxable income. Individuals can contribute and write off up to $2000 a year. For working couples, the limit is $4000. And couples with a single income may contribute $2250 annually. Whatever your tax bracket, that adds up to a substantial tax savings over the course of your working life.

Write your IRA deposits right off the top of your taxable income.

Make Yourself A Millionaire By The Time You Retire.

Deposits to your IRA at Planters do more than reduce your tax burden right now. They earn daily compounded interest at Money Market rates. And, believe it or not, that can give you a retirement fund of more than a million dollars.

You can start with an initial deposit as small as $100. And make even smaller periodic deposits, if you choose.

For example, if you started investing $1200 a year ($100 each month) in an IRA at age 25, your account balance at age 65 would be $1,278,037. With that much money, you could withdraw $13,576 a month forever and never touch your million. (These figures are based on an estimated rate of 12%, compounded daily. This rate cannot be guaranteed.)

Citrus Producers Raising Prices After Big Freeze

By IKE FLORES
Associated Press Writer
LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — Florida citrus producers began raising the prices of the products making their way to America's breakfast tables as they slapped an embargo on the sale and shipping of the fresh fruit after this week's damaging freeze.

Two major producers of frozen juice concentrate, Ben Hill Griffin and Lykes-Pasco Packing Co., on Wednesday increased their wholesale prices by 30 cents to more than $4 for a six-pack of six-ounce cans.

Freezes often mean higher profits to growers. Last year, for instance, the Florida crop loss was estimated at about $200 million but growers actually made more money because they were able to sell their reduced crop at higher prices.

Most Florida citrus is processed into juice and the oranges and grapefruit attacked by ice this week can still be made into citrus products, though the "juice yield" from damaged fruit worries the industry.

The sale and shipping of fresh fruit itself was put under the 10-day embargo effective at 9 p.m. Friday by the Florida Citrus Commission, based in Lakeland, to guarantee the quality of the state's famous product, agriculture officials said.

But the fruit only makes up 10 percent of the state's orange crop and 25 percent to 35 percent of the grapefruit crop. The rest leaves the state as citrus products. Frozen fruit still on trees and destined for processing is not affected by the embargo.

Nevertheless, producer Ben Hill Griffin III, a member of the powerful Florida Citrus Commission and manager of the company's juice plant in Frostproof, Fla., said price hikes for juice are justified.

"Our opinion was our price was not appropriate given the condition of the freeze. This brings supply and demand into harmony," he said. Whether prices climb further will depend on juice demand and the strength of the Brazilian citrus harvest, industry specialists said.

Meanwhile, Sunkist Growers Inc., a cooperative accounting for half the citrus production in California and Arizona, held its annual meeting in Los Angeles on Wednesday, and a spokeswoman said it was too early to tell if its prices would rise because of the freeze.

Anne Warring said the prices of fresh fruit should not rise all that much because Florida's crop accounts for a relatively small amount of the fresh oranges sent to U.S. markets.

Industry specialists say losses from the freeze will be in the millions but Doyle Conner, Florida's agriculture commissioner, said he is "not putting any dollar figure on it yet."

Following the embargo, state agriculture inspectors will certify for shipment only undamaged fruit. The period will last 14 days for domestic sales and 30 days for exports.

The record-shattering low temperatures striking throughout the 845,000-acre

Citrus Belt Monday night and Tuesday morning have been compared in intensity and damage with one- and two-day January freezes in 1981 and 1977 when more than 90 percent of oranges showed ice.

Dick Small of the Florida

Crop and Livestock Reporting Service said 84 percent of the oranges sampled from 137 groves this week had ice on the inside. But he said the percentage may turn out to be higher because the sampling did not include much of the hard-hit southern fringe of the Citrus Belt, where the trees are less resistant to cold.

Small said that, while the extent of damage cannot be directly inferred from the icing percentages, "these conditions will reduce production through fruit dehydration, droppage and rotting."

The present wholesale price of a dozen six-ounce cans of frozen concentrate is about $3.80. Last year, major juice processors were charging supermarkets and other retail outlets $2.60 on the day before the January freeze. Several days after the cold spell, the price spiraled to what was then a record high—$3.55.

"I have a feeling the price will go up very quickly this time, too," said Wilson McGee.

NEW YORK (AP)—Stock prices continued to drift lower in early trading today as investors got another sign that the Federal Reserve Board was clamping down further on credit to stem growth in the money supply.

The Fed moved Wednesday to drain funds from the banking network through the temporary sales of Treasury bills.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 0.67 points to 838.28 after declining 8.75 points on Wednesday. The index is at its lowest point since Oct. 29, when it was 832.95.

Losers were ahead of gainers by 3 to 2 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Financial stocks opened mixed on news that the Federal Home Loan Bank Board could cut net worth requirements for federally insured savings and loan associations to 3 percent of assets from 4 percent. Bank America was unchanged at 19 and Citicorp was off 1/4 to 23 1/2.

Drug stocks, which have posted sharp declines all week, picked up some, with SmithKline showing a 1/4 gain to 59 1/2. Merck was down 1/4 to 80 1/2.

On Wednesday, the Dow fell 8.75 points to 838.95.

Losers outnumbered gainers by nearly a 3:1 margin on the NYSE.

Big Board volume totaled 49.13 million shares, against 49.8 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index fell 0.82 to 66.63.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 6.54 to 291.40.

Hot Carolina, Wake Take League Wins

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
A winter storm snowed out the Clemson-Furman game Wednesday night, but the frigid weather did nothing to cool the torrid play of top-ranked North Carolina as it streaked past arch-rival N.C. State, 61-41. At Greensboro, Wake Forest piled up a 20-point lead in the second half and turned back a late Duke rally for a 58-48 win over the Blue Devils. Georgia Tech took a 79-71 victory over non-conference opponent Flagler College.

The unbeaten Tar Heels, who let a 10-point lead dwindle to 1 point in the second half, roared back with 12 unanswered points to turn a close game into a rout. James Worthy and Michael Jordan hit two free throws apiece. Sam Perkins and Jimmy Black converted three-point plays, and Matt Doherty hit a driving layup while the Wolfpack's shooting went stone cold.

At that point, said N.C. State coach Jim Valvano, his 12th-ranked team lost its poise.

"We had very poor shot selection," he said. "The mental game left us. We just didn't do smart things.

"We worked eight minutes playing man-to-man to cut the score down. Then we were right back where we started."

Tar Heel coach Dean Smith, meanwhile, was unable to contain his enthusiasm at his team's performance.

"I thought it was amazing the way we played. We can't play much better," said Smith.

"We played better than we've played recently and they may not have played as well as they've been playing."

Although the Wolfpack never led, it stayed virtually even with North Carolina throughout the first half and trailed by four at intermission.

Dereck Whittenburg, with 18 points, was almost the entire Wolfpack offensive show. No one else had more than six for N.C. State, which fell to 12-2 overall and 3-1 in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The Tar Heels, who moved into a first-place tie with Wake Forest in the ACC, were led by freshman Jordan with 20 points, Perkins with 13, and Black with 11. North Carolina's record is now 12-0 overall and 3-0 in the ACC.

Duke committed 25 turnovers against Wake Forest, and Blue Devil coach Mike Krzyzewski said that was the telling factor in his team's loss.

"Sometimes, you can win with turnovers, but not tonight," he said. "I was disappointed that our guys didn't keep their heads in the game

Maurice Bradford scored 18 points for Georgia Tech, while Anthony Byrd added 18. George Thomas 12.

West Selected Player Of Week

Old Dominion's Mark West has been chosen as the ECAC-South Player of the Week for the period ending January 9.

West, a junior center, led the Monarchs to three wins during the week, ending a four-game losing streak, the longest in ten years for Old Dominion. In winning the finals of the Kiwanis Classic against Wagner, West had 16 points and a career high ten blocked shots. For the week, he shot 27 of 36 from the floor (75%), averaged 21.3 points, nine rebounds and 6.6 blocked shots a game.

George Mason's Carlos Yates, a freshman guard, was selected as the Rookie Of The Week. In two games split by the Patriots, Yates scored a career high of 28 in a loss to South Carolina and 24 points in a win over Maryland-Eastern Shore that ended a five-game losing streak.

West leads the league in scoring through the latest rating period with an 18.0 average. Richmond's John Schweitz is second at 17.6, followed by Andy Bolden. George Mason at 17.4, Ron McAdoo of Old Dominion fourth at 17.0, followed by Mason's Andre Gaddy at 16.8.

East Carolina's Tony By is 13th in the league's scoring race with 11.2, while Mon Hargrove was 14th and Char Green, 15th.

West is also the rebound leader with 11.5, followed by McAdoo with 8.4 and Gaddy with 7.5. Hargrove stands ninth with 4.8, while Gibson is 13th and Green, 16th.

Lady Pirates, Duke Host Campbell, Madison

East Carolina's Lady Pirates join with Duke University to host a pair of basketball games Friday and Saturday at Minges Coliseum in the ECU-Duke doubleheader.

The contests bring in James Madison and Campbell as foes for the two Friday night, Duke faces James Madison at 6 p.m., while the Lady Pirates face Campbell at 8 p.m. Saturday night, the two hosting teams swap opponents, with Duke facing Campbell in the opener, and ECU meeting Madison in the nightcap.

Campbell, 6-0 on the season is ranked fifth nationally among Division II women's teams. The Lady Camels feature all five starters in double figures, led by 5-8 junior guard Sharon Williams, hitting 20.2 points a game.

Others include 5-8 junior forward Melvarie Watson, hitting 17.0; 6-1 senior forward Cindy Biggerstaff, scoring 13.6; 6-1 senior center Rhonda Mueller, scoring 12.6, and 5-6 senior guard Jean Lamson, scoring 13.0.

Williams is the leading rebounder with a 9.2 average, closely followed by Watson at 8.8 and Mueller at 8.4.

Madison, meanwhile, held a 3-7 record prior to last night's game scheduled against Radford.

The Duchesses feature three scorers in double figures paced by 5-6 freshman guard Sue Manelski, hitting 18.0. Others include 5-11 freshman forward Beth Hamilton, 11.6; and 5-11 freshman forward Michele James, 11.7.

Other expected starters include 6-0 junior center Deana Meadows, 9.7, and 5-7 sophomore guard Betsy Bloese, 7.2.

James is the leading rebounder with a 9.1 average, while both Hamilton and Meadows are averaging 8.7.

East Carolina is coming off two big victories against Atlantic Coast Conference teams. Sunday night, the Lady Pirates inched past Virginia, 64-62, in Minges, then downed North Carolina, 71-66, Tuesday night in Chapel Hill.

East Carolina's Mary Denkler, in North Carolina Division I, continues the lead the state in scoring with a 21.7 average, well ahead of Appalachian State's Muriel Higginbotham at 17.0.

Teammate Sam Jones, who has recently moved into the number three spot in career assists at ECU, stands fourth at 14.3.

Denkler is also tenth in field goal percentage at 48.9; third in free throw percentage at 78.6; and third in rebounding with an 8.8 average.

Jones stands second in assists with 5.2 per game, and is the state's leader in steals with 2.3 per game.

As a team, ECU is third in field goal percentage, 41.6; sixth in free throw percentage, 63.3; fourth in scoring, 67.0; fifth in rebounding, 38.5; and third in defense, 65.8.

Denkler, by the way, is moving toward becoming the newest member of the ECU Lady Pirates' 1,000-Point Club. Through the North Carolina game, she has 934, and needs 66 more to meet that level. Odds are, however, that she will pass the 1,000-point mark during a three-game road trip which begins Sunday, January 24, as the Pirates travel to Georgia Tech, Wake Forest and Appalachian State to wind up their January play.

She will be the eighth Lady Pirate to reach 1,000 when that occurs.

Aaron Not Unhappy With His Vote

NEW YORK (AP) — He didn't get a unanimous vote — no one ever has. But neither that, nor a snowstorm that delayed his arrival, could dampen Hank Aaron's spirits on the day he and Frank Robinson were elected to the Hall of Fame.

Aaron, baseball's all-time home run king, said he was satisfied with having gotten the highest percentage of votes since Ty Cobb in the first balloting in 1936 for entry to the shrine at Cooperstown.

"I don't think it's a disappointment, but I'd be lying if I said I didn't want to be unanimous," Aaron said Wednesday after flying in from snow-bound Atlanta. "I certainly wanted to be, but I realized that no other player has ever received all of the votes and I'm just happy to come in second."

The 47-year-old Aaron, who belted 755 home runs and a record 2,297 runs-batted-in in a 23-year major league career in Milwaukee and Atlanta, received 406 of a possible 415 votes from veteran members of the Baseball Writers of America.

His percentage of the vote was 97.8 compared to Cobb's 98.2 in 1936.

Robinson, the fourth-leading all-time home run hitter with 586 and the only player to win the Most Valuable Player award in both major leagues, garnered 370 votes, well ahead of the 312 needed for induction.

Aaron and Robinson were only the 12th and 13th players to gain entry to the Hall in their first years of eligibility.

The only other candidate to come close to induction this time was pitcher Juan Marichal, who spent most of his career with the San Francisco Giants. He received 305 votes in his second year of eligibility.

"Getting the number of votes that I achieved was a great tribute to me," said Aaron, now director of minor league operations for the Atlanta Braves.

Robinson, baseball's first black manager and now at 46 manager of the Giants, called his selection "the greatest day, I guess, of my life. I put this honor right at the top."

Aaron, recalling his career with the Milwaukee and then Atlanta Braves, said his greatest moment was not breaking Babe Ruth's record of 714 career home runs in 1974.

It was, he said, winning the National League's Most Valuable Player award in 1957, when he led the Braves to victory in the World Series.

"I thought that if I played baseball and was very successful, I just felt like records and everything else would fall into place," he said. "Breaking the all-time home run record was not the biggest thrill. But I'd have to put it in the top five."

Robinson said his greatest achievement in 21 years, mostly spent with Cincinnati and Baltimore, was his second MVP award after being traded to the Orioles in 1966.

"This game has been played for over 100 years and it hadn't been done, and it was just a tremendous thrill for me. I'm sure it will happen again some day, but you can't take away being the first," he said.

The newest members of baseball's historical elite praised each other, Aaron calling Robinson "a tremendous ballplayer" to whom he compared himself.

Robinson said he "could not have selected a better player to be inducted into the Hall of Fame with."

He recalled that he had been compared to Aaron in their early years.

"It's very strange. It seems like I've been chasing him my entire career. Now I've finally caught up with him," he said.

Robinson described himself as an intense player, saying, "I had to be that intense to be a good player. I wanted to be a complete ballplayer and I was never satisfied with what I was doing."

"I always felt like whatever I could do to help the ballclub I should do short of hurting someone intentionally on the field," he said.

By contrast, Robinson described Aaron as "very easy going, unemotional, not flashy...he looked like he did it without any effort."

"That's the way he was as a young ballplayer and that's the way it was when he was an old ballplayer," said Robinson. "He just seemed to do things so easy without effort and I used to marvel at that because it always seemed like I had to work hard."

Aaron agreed that he was not a flashy type, but said, "I thought I got the job done. It was not as easy as some people maybe thought it was."

"If I went into a batting slump, I practiced at home," he said. "I stood before mirrors, I swung the bat when my wife and kids were in bed. I tried to solve problems and not let the pitchers know I was worried about anything."

Robinson said becoming the first black manager in the major leagues with Cleveland in 1975 ranked with his highest honors.

"It was quite an honor and a thrill for me to open the door and be the first of my race to manage in the major leagues," he said. "Someone had to walk through that door, and I was very proud that it was me."

Voters Have The Right To Ignore The Obvious

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

There was a rustle in the Imperial Ballroom of the Sheraton Centre when Commissioner Bowie Kuhn stepped to the rostrum to proclaim that home run king Hank Aaron and gifted Frank Robinson were the latest to be voted into baseball's Hall of Fame.

"Aaron received 406 of a possible 415 votes for the highest percentage since Ty Cobb's 98.2 per cent in 1936," Kuhn intoned.

A newsmen in the second row was heard to growl: "How can nine guys not vote for Aaron? — They're idiots."

"Schmoes," added another. "If Aaron shouldn't be voted in unanimously, who the devil should?" complained another.

"We ought to see if these guys deserve to be in the Baseball Writers Association," came the gripe from another side of the aisle.

It has been suggested that the names of those who did not vote for Aaron be made public. There are those who want the culprits unmasked, exposed and hung up on the line for national ridicule.

That would be flagrant injustice.

What player, great or near great, holds the God-given right to be the unanimous choice. It hasn't been so in the past. It won't be so in the future, insists Joe Reichler, former Associated Press baseball writer, author, a member of the writers' section of the Hall of Fame and longtime aide to the commissioner.

"Someone wanted to bet me that Pete Rose would be a unanimous pick when he becomes eligible (five years after retirement)," Reichler said Wednesday at the ceremonies. "I quickly offered to take it. It'll never happen. There always will be some people down the line who, for perhaps a variety of personal reasons, will not go with the mob."

Why not? It's their privilege. It is also patently unfair for the baseball writers to reveal the identities and votes of its 400-plus members who annually cast ballots.

If it be true that there are giants — Babe Ruth, Ty Cobb, Willie Mays and Hank Aaron — whose deeds leave no question about their right to a niche in Cooperstown, N.Y., why hold an election?

Put them in automatically every year, hold a vote only for the fringe players.

If the BBWAA (writers) want this to be a democratic process — as it should be — then every member has the privilege to vote his conscience without fear of the retaliation.

That vote should never be publicly disclosed and questioned, no more than any democratic ballot for president or other office.

It's not our system.

Sports writer Jack Lang put the first match to the impending grass fire when he wrote in the Wednesday morning New York Daily News that if Aaron weren't elected unanimously, there would be controversy.

"People will say that if Hank Aaron is not qualified for the Hall of Fame, who is?" said Lang, who wears a second hat as secretary of the BBWAA and counts the votes. "and if he is qualified, why doesn't every man eligible to vote check his name on the ballot?"

The answer to that is simple: This is the land of free thought. People have their own reasons. They shouldn't be marshalled into a single frame of mind.

There was no unanimity even for the original inductees in 1936 — Ty Cobb, Babe Ruth, Honus Wagner, Walter Johnson and Christy Mathewson — five all-time greats. Ty Cobb was best, getting all but four of 226 votes. Twenty-one people didn't vote for Ruth and Wagner.

Joe DiMaggio didn't make it until the third year of eligibility and even then was shunned by 28 voters.

The walls of Jericho didn't come tumbling down.

As Lang pointed out, it wasn't until the dynamic Willie Mays was elected in 1979, ignored by 23 writers, that the storm over unanimity broke. Lang said the 23 were referred to "schmoes."

Right or wrong, some writers feel personality as well as performance should be taken into account. They vote peeves. This has hurt hard-nosed, introverted guys such as Enos Slaughter and Roger Maris.

It's conceivable that in the latest election, some traditionalists might have been swayed by Aaron's and Robinson's militant crusade against baseball's failure to reward deserving blacks in managerial and front office positions. Others may have voted personal favorites, assuming the superstars will get in anyhow — at least, later.

But who are we to censure such reasoning, a minority judgment as it might be?

Overall, it's nice that unanimity remains an unreachable goal. Once it is achieved, then it will become, like the perfect 10 in gymnastics, a common denominator.

Two Winners

Boxing Promoter Smith Is Found Guilty Of Embezzlement Charge

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sports promoter Harold Rossfields Smith, who once sought to control some of professional boxing's top stars, has been found guilty of a $21.3 million embezzlement from Wells Fargo Bank - the largest such fraud in the nation's history.

Smith, who faces penalties of up to 265 years in prison, was found guilty Wednesday on 29 of 32 counts in the federal indictment which accused him of masterminding a complex financial juggling scheme carried out with the help of some bank officials.

A co-defendant, former bank officer Sammie Marshall, was convicted of three of four counts against him and faces a possible sentence of up to 20 years. Both men were found innocent of one count and two counts were dropped.

U. S. District Judge Consuelo Marshall rejected a government request for immediate imprisonment of the two men on grounds they might flee, and both were released on bail until their sentencing which was set for Mar. 9.

"I have no plans on running anywhere," Smith told reporters outside court. "Whatever is dished out to me, I'm man enough to take it."

The flamboyant Smith, 38, wearing a cowboy hat and blue jeans, maintained as he had from the start that he is innocent of any wrongdoing.

"I lost faith in justice a long time ago," he said. "It's been a long battle, and we had to fight it on a shoestring. But the battle isn't over yet."

He insisted he would one day be proved innocent. But Smith's attorney, Howard Moore Jr., said he had not decided whether to appeal the verdict. He said a number of other motions - including a motion for a new trial - must be decided first.

The prosecutor, Assistant U. S. Attorney General Dean Allison, said he believed Smith was "a very, very guilty man, and the evidence proved it. The jury did the right thing. Any appeal in this case would be frivolous."

The jury foreman, Byron C. Culp, said the panel didn't have any trouble convicting Smith.

"There was just such overwhelming evidence against him," said Culp. "The government put on a very strong case."

The prosecutor said his case was strengthened by the decision of a co-conspirator to turn government witness.

L. Ben Lewis, 47, the dapper former operations manager of the Beverly Hills branch of Wells Fargo, was the mystery man of the case. He disappeared for several months when the probe of missing funds became public, then surfaced to plead guilty as part of a plea bargain in which he agreed to testify against Smith and Marshall.

Another bank officer, Gene Kawakami, pleaded guilty in a separate plea bargain to misapplying $175,000 of the bank's funds. He also testified against Smith and Marshall.

Lewis told jurors how he operated as the "inside man" at Wells Fargo, juggling bank accounts to provide funds for Smith's sports organizations, Muhammad Ali Professional Sports Inc. (MAPS) and Muhammad Ali Amateur Sports Inc. (MAAS). Lewis admitted receiving $300,000 for his role in the scheme but claimed the rest of the $21.3 million went to Smith and his two organizations.

Boxer Muhammad Ali had no direct connection with either

MAPS or MAAS except that he lent his name to them. Ali has said he believes Smith is innocent.

The bizarre saga of Smith and Wells Fargo first made headlines a year ago when the bank disclosed it was missing millions, that Lewis had disappeared and it had linked Smith to the diversion of funds. Smith went into hiding, sending messages to the news media periodically before he stepped into the spotlight claiming he was falsely accused.

By then, it was known that Smith was a colorful figure in the boxing world, paying unusually high fight purses to the nation's top boxers in an apparent effort to gain control of the field.

'Help Wanted' Funny, Not Hilarious

ALL DRESSED UP — Anthony Hopkins displays the capabilities of stage makeup as he stars in the title role of Quasimodo, right, the deformed bell ringer at Paris' Notre Dame Cathedral, in the new "Hallmark Hall of Fame" presentation of "The Hunchback of Notre Dam" to be broadcast Thursday, February 4 on CBS-TV. (AP Laserphoto)

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Just because it's supposed to be sophisticated comedy doesn't mean they can't clobber you like "Three's Company" once in a while.

"You can't spell, but you write real good," Aggie, the busty copygirl tells Johnny Gillis, the athlete-turned-sportswriter. "Anything else?" Johnny asks. "Yeah," she replies, "you're gorgeous, and you're single." That's Aggie's come-on, and it works real good — like Johnny writes real good.

The sophistication? It's in the next scene:

Skip — "I would be acquitted in any paternity suit."

Laura — "You mean, you're uh... uh..."

Skip — "I believe sterile is the word you're groping for."

It's all from "Help Wanted: Male," a made-for-TV movie on CBS — Saturday night, 9-11 EST — starring Suzanne Pleshette as Laura Bingham, Gil Gerard as Johnny Gillis, Bert Convy as Skip McCullough and Karen Kaye as Aggie Swoboda. And it's funny — not hilarious, more like amusing.

Laura publishes Newsview magazine. She wants to marry Skip, who doesn't do much of anything, and have a baby — an heir. Skip doesn't want to get married, and even if he did, that would solve only half of Laura's problem — remember the paternity suit?

Laura decides to offer the job to Johnny. He's just spent the night with Aggie, but $1,000 a week, plus $100,000 after the baby is born — in exchange for a civilized divorce — is too much for a sore-armed ex-pitcher to pass up.

As part of the deal, Johnny gets kicked upstairs, into a big office, with nothing to do but play cards with Aggie, who's used "good old American ingenuity" to get the job as his secretary.

"Morning," Johnny says as he strides into the office. "Any calls for me?"

"Why would anybody call you?" Aggie asks her boss.

"Good point."

"Want to dictate any letters?" the secretary suggests.

"Who to?"

"Good point."

Things aren't moving along much better on the home front either. Johnny and Laura can't agree on which one gets the right side of the bed, so Johnny moves into his own room. Shortly, Johnny has had enough. He decides to spend the evening with Aggie.

Problem is, Laura goes to dinner with Skip. Johnny is tipped off by his friends from the sports department — the guys in the plaid jackets — and there's a confrontation at the restaurant. Johnny takes Laura home, and they decide it's not going to work. Johnny says he'll leave the next morning, but by now, Laura is fed up.

She asks to spend the night with her husband — for the first time. "Oh, Johnny, you are a lovely lover," she says the next morning. "It's the most fun I've ever had without a cigarette."

Johnny decides before long he'd rather have Laura than the $100,000. It's another variation on what seemed to be a promising theme, and the interested viewer can take it from there. Hint: Remember the old eternal quadrangle.

Those looking for even more sophistication than "Help Wanted: Male" can stick with CBS for "The Surrogate," a made-for-TV film on a married woman who undertakes a surrogate pregnancy for another woman and encounters family and social disapproval. No date has been set for broadcast of "The Surrogate."

On roughly the same subject — this time it's not supposed to be funny — public TV's "Nova" will broadcast exclusive film on the first successful American birth conceived by in vitro fertilization.

LOVES RETIREMENT — Actor Rbert Young poses with wife Betty at their secluded home by a golf course north of San Diego. Young, 74, recently signed to do more coffee commercials on television but said he retired five years ago after 80 films "and I've loved every minute of it." (AP Laserphoto)

New Miss America Host Says Voice Lessons Going To Pay Off

By KENNETH R. CLARK
UPI TV Reporter

NEW YORK (UPI) — It's a tough job, but somebody has to do it. After all, there can only be one Miss America, and when 50 of the most beautiful women in the country go after the crown, someone has to squire them through their paces.

"I finally get to put all that money I spent on voice lessons to work," said Gary Collins, the man who will do the squireing next fall in Atlantic City, N.J., while a nation of avid girl-watchers pins the telecast where it always winds up — in the Nielsen Top 10.

"It's a question that's been asked many times — am I going to sing the song?" he said. "Of course, I'm going to sing the song. That song is as important to that pageant as the girls are."

Collins inherited the right to sing the song from one-time Tarzan Ron Ely who inherited it, in turn, from the public relations bloodbath that followed the sacking two years ago of Bert Parks.

After more than 20 years of crooning, "There she is... Miss America," Parks did not fire easily. Great and humble alike rose up in righteous wrath and threat of boycott when pageant director Al Marks announced his dismissal.

Because of the rebellion, Collins doesn't expect long tenure as master of ceremonies. Pageant officials are not likely ever again to let one man get such an emotional armlock on the event.

"I don't think anyone expected the reaction that the country had when Bert was released," Collins said. "Ron stepped in and did a very fine job and kind of shouldered it all and took whatever abuse was to be taken. Al said to me after he let Ron go and was hiring me, 'We never want to get into that situation again!'"

"I got the same deal that Ron did. It's their option, so who knows? I may do it for just one year, or two. But I'm sure they are still very gun shy over the firing of Bert."

Collins, who hosts the syndicated "Hour Magazine" with a great deal of personal sympathy for feminist causes, may find himself in a different sort of situation for having accepted the job.

Feminists are gun shy, too — about "exploitation." They do not like beauty pageants. But Collins was not intimidated by the potential of their thunder and lightning.

"Women have every bit as much right to participate in the Miss America pageant as they have to go on to college and become executives in an advertising company," he said. "The opportunity is there if they choose to do it."

"Look — take a couple of boxers in the ring. Are those boys being exploited? Is a woman not reaching her full potential in the office or not being paid comparable to her work being exploited? I think we're all being exploited in one sense or another."

If women who go for the crown and the roses are being exploited, at least the exploiters pay them accordingly.

"It's a tremendous opportunity to compete, to become someone, to pop out of the crowd," Collins said. "It's a chance to be special and at the same time go a long way toward paying off your college education. It's probably the largest women's scholarship program in the country."

"The expression used to be, 'By the time the girls have arrived in Atlantic City, they've paid for their college education.' I don't know if that's true any more because of the cost of college today, but they certainly do make a big dent in it."

"No matter what you win at what level — whether it's local, state or national — they don't give you a scholarship. They give you a scholarship."

At present, all three commercial networks are dickering for the right to carry the show, but whichever logo it finally bears, Collins said it will look very much the way Miss America pageants have looked for years — lots of beautiful women, plenty of talent and a fresher of tears from the ultimate winner.

Hopalong May Ride TV Range

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Veteran cowboy Hopalong Cassidy may ride his white horse across American television screens for the first time in five years with the completion of a copyright infringement suit, an attorney says.

"We're hoping for a big reurgence of Hopalong Cassidy films," attorney Don Engel said Wednesday.

Engel said titles such as "Hopalong Cassidy Returns," "Trail Dust," "Hills of Old Wyoming," "North of the Rio Grande," "Rustlers Valley" and "Eagles Brood" have been tied up in litigation since about 1976 as a New York TV distributor battled with the estates of actor William Boyd and author Clarence Mulford.

U.S. District Judge Consuelo B. Marshall was to preside at a non-jury trial beginning today to assess damages in an infringement suit won by the estates against Film Video Releasing, which purchased 23 of the cowboy movies from a third party after the 1930s-era films went into public domain.

Storer Broadcasting and its San Diego television station, KCST, are among six companies and individuals ordered to pay damages in the infringement ruling issued last January in the Southern Federal District Court in New York and upheld by the 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals.

Lana Begins Guest Spot

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former movie queen Lana Turner has begun filming a guest spot on the new "Falcon Crest" television series, marking what series producers say is her first TV appearance since 1969.

Miss Turner on Wednesday began her role as the mother of series co-star Robert Foxworth.

We put our foot down about apartments being within walking distance.

Wedgewood Arms apartments are within walking distance of three shopping centers, a nursery school, a junior high school, doctors' and dentists' offices and an athletic center.

As if that wasn't enough, three major traffic arteries, 264 Bypass, Arlington Blvd., and Charles St. are close enough to be seen and not heard.

Fact is, no apartments in town can legitimately claim to be more convenient to more things than Wedgewood Arms. And, that's not all. Because Wedgewood Arms is not only convenient, it's different in other ways, too.

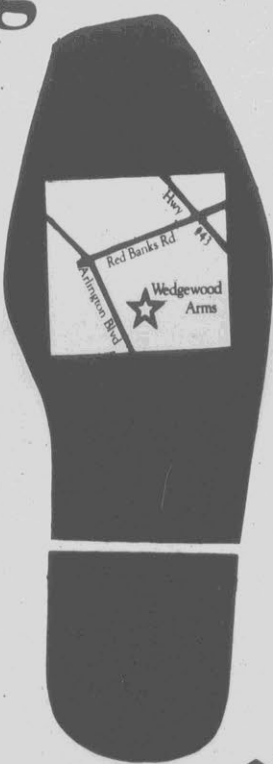

Take the floorplans, they're different from anything you've ever seen. And when you add in high energy efficiency, tennis courts, swimming pool, and the neighborhood "feeling" that these apartments will give you — well, you'll just have to see for yourself.

FDR's White House Bug Different From Nixon's

By JERRY SCHWARTZ
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The bugging of the Oval Office by President Franklin D. Roosevelt differed greatly from the bugs 30 years later that led to Richard Nixon's downfall, a leading historian says.

Nixon "was taping people in incriminating situations without telling them that they were being taped. There's none of that in the Roosevelt tapes," said historian and presidential biographer Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr.

Schlesinger spoke Wednesday at a news conference in which American Heritage magazine made the conversations public and outlined efforts that have been made to make the crude recordings audible.

Excerpts of transcripts made from the tapes, which contain no major revelations of historical note, are being published in the February-March issue of the magazine.

Roosevelt got angry about a misquote, magazine officials said, so in 1940 he had RCA Corp. rig a recording contraption for placement in the White House basement, the microphone hidden in his desk. Tape recorders did not come into wide use until years later.

The tape itself was motion-picture film, the magazine said.

For 11 weeks, Roosevelt recorded 14 news conferences, which at the time were held in the Oval Office.

Seven or eight random conversations were picked up as well as the news conferences as the device was being tested, White House stenographer Henry Kannee said shortly before his death last year.

FDR could have started the machine from his desk drawer, but Kannee generally turned it on from the basement, said R.J.C. Butow, a University of Washington historian.

The recordings were transferred to phonographic discs in 1947 and stored at the FDR Library at Hyde Park, N.Y. Butow found them in 1978 and their quality was improved by acoustics expert Mark Weiss, who assisted in the inquiry into the 18½-minute gap discovered on one of Nixon's Watergate tapes.

The device never was used again and President Harry Truman had it removed from the White House.

Roosevelt, in a conversation with the then-current and future House speakers, Sam Rayburn and John McCormack, discusses an assertion by a Japanese journalist that the United States should demilitarize Wake and Midway islands and Pearl Harbor.

"God! That's the first time that any damn Jap has told us to get out of Hawaii," he said.

"The only thing that worries me is that the Germans and the Japs have gone along, and the Italians for — oh, gosh — five, six years without their foot slipping — without their misjudging foreign opinion ... And the time may be coming when the Germans and the Japs will do some fool thing that would put us in. That's the only real danger of our getting in — is that their foot will slip."

In a conversation with aide Lowell Mellett, Roosevelt discusses the possibility that his 1940 presidential campaign opponent, Republican Wendell Willkie, would release embarrassing letters written by Roosevelt's running-mate, Henry Wallace.

Roosevelt says he could use "people way, way down the line" to put out the word that Willkie's marriage was a facade and he was having an affair with an "awfully nice gal" prominent in New York literary circles. Neither Wallace's letters, nor the allegations about Willkie, ever were used in the campaign, Schlesinger said. He said the rumors of Willkie's alleged infidelity were common at the time.

Interested In Young Artists

WINSTON-SALEM — For the first time in North Carolina, representatives from over 20 major art colleges in the country will gather at the North Carolina School of the Arts to allow high school and college students an opportunity to ask questions and to have their portfolios reviewed for possible admission.

The "North Carolina Portfolio Day" will be held from 1 to 4:30 p.m. Sunday in the visual arts department on the NCSA campus.

East Carolina University, the Ringling School of Art and Design, the School of the Art Institute of Chicago, the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and the Corcoran School of Art are among art schools in the nation who will have representatives attending.

Young artists interested in more information may contact Clyde Fowler, arts director of the visual arts department at 784-7170, or Don McCulloch, N.C. State Art Consultant at 733-7467.

CONFERENCE

The Cedar Grove Missionary General Conference will meet Friday at 7:30 p.m. at the church. Secretary Rosa L. Little urged all persons to attend.

Registering At Nursery School

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY, JAN. 15, 1982

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: It's advisable that you attend to personal tasks despite the obstacles. Don't put yourself in a position in which delays occur. Unexpected benefits come your way later in the day.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19): Buckle down to the work that needs to be done and handle it efficiently. Be alert to a new opportunity at this time.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20): Don't expect much from friends who are busy with their own affairs right now. Make plans to have more abundance in the future.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Show more courtesy and thoughtfulness to higher-ups who are under a heavy strain now. Don't neglect any payments.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Meet new and interesting persons who can help you in career matters. New situations should be studied with care.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Knowing what higher-ups expect of you makes the going easier and you stay on the right track. Think constructively.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 21): Listen to views and complaints of associates and come to a better accord. Sidestep a foe who is jealous of you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Avoid a co-worker who is in a bad mood right now. Take more time for rest and build up your energies. Be logical.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Not a good day to take any risks. You must use tact to gain acceptance of others at this time. Show others you have wisdom.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Make sure you choose your words well with others or there could be a gross misunderstanding. Be more optimistic.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Much care should be exercised in motion today to avoid possible accident. Try not to get drawn into arguments with others.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Exercise extreme care where monetary affairs are concerned or you could find yourself in a financial bind.

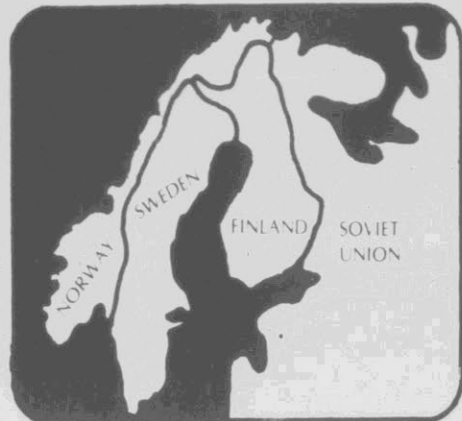

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20): Take care of a troublesome situation without delay. Make the effort to improve health and appearance. Be wise.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will know what to do in difficult situations, so direct the education along troubleshooting lines for best results. A compassionate nature in this chart. Give ethical and spiritual training early in life.

"The Stars impel, they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

FOCUS

Country in the Middle

Sandwiched between Sweden and the U.S.S.R., Finland has strong ties with both countries. Originally a tribe from the Russian Urals, the Finns moved north and were ruled by Swedes from 1154 to 1809. For the next century Finland was under Russian rule. Today Finland's culture and religion make it a part of Scandinavia. But it maintains good relations with the Soviets, who supply military equipment and two-thirds of its oil. On Sunday and Monday Finland holds presidential elections. It remains to be seen whether its new leader will be able to maintain an East-West balance as successfully as his predecessor, Pres. Urho Kekkonen, who has retired after 25 years in office.

DO YOU KNOW — What modern language is Finnish most similar to?

THURSDAY'S ANSWER — The biathlon is an Olympic event which combines skiing and shooting.

Optimists Holding Oratorical Contest

The Optimist Club of Greenville will conduct its annual oratorical contest in February, according to contest chairman Charles Ross.

Ross said the official subject for this year's competition is "You and I, and Tomorrow."

He said the "run off" event is scheduled Feb. 13 at 10 a.m. at Wahl-Coates School and the official contest will be held at the Optimist Club meeting on Feb. 15.

Ross invited interested young people to contact their teachers, principals or him (752-4192) for further information on the contest. Information and materials have been distributed to the city and county schools, he said.

He pointed out that, annually, Optimist Clubs throughout Canada and the United States conduct oratorical contests for boys and girls under 16 years of age. Local winners are eligible to enter the zone contest and possibly the regional and district contests.

Students winning the district or state contest will be presented college scholarships, according to Ross.

Optimist International first sponsored the oratorical contest in 1928 as an activity to foster self-improvement of the contestants.

Ross said the contest is not designed to merely recognize and honor the best speaker in a school or community. The purpose of the program is to offer training, encouragement and experience that will aid the participants as they become contributing citizens in society.

Set Up Legal Defense Fund

According to the Rev. A. M. Johnson, the Church of God in Christ at 1515 S. Pitt St. and the local chapter of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference have established a legal defense fund for James Redmond Jr., the man who recently conducted a hunger strike while in the Pitt County Jail.

Sources of information about the fund include Golden Frinks and Bennie Rountree, 758-1735 or 758-6820.

Five Million In Private Schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than five million students were enrolled in the nation's 21,000 private elementary and secondary schools in the last school year, government figures show.

The private schools enrolled nearly 11 percent of all students. The average pupil-teacher ratio was 18-to-1 in the private schools, compared to a 19-to-1 ratio in public schools.

But non-sectarian private schools had only 12 students per teacher, the National Center for Education Statistics said Tuesday.
