

Reagan Seeks Shift Programs To States

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's pitch for a "bold stroke" transfer of $47 billion in federal programs to the states is doing little to allay the concerns of lawmakers preoccupied with soaring deficits and the troubled economy.

Democrats and Republicans alike were quick to say the proposal Reagan outlined Tuesday night in his first State of the Union speech should not be allowed to divert national attention from coping with pressing economic problems.

The federal government, while shifting the burden of the programs to the states, also should turn over the revenue to pay for them, Reagan said. That would come from excise taxes on gasoline, tobacco, alcohol and telephones, plus the so-called windfall profits tax on oil.

Food stamps and welfare were among the programs Reagan proposed turning over to state and local governments. The switch would begin in October 1983, and be completed in eight years, Reagan said. During that period the programs would cost approximately $400 billion, according to administration estimates.

In exchange, the federal government would take over full responsibility for the Medicaid program of health care for the needy.

Reagan conceded the nation was "in a time of recession," but said the tax and budget-cutting programs Congress enacted at his behest last year need more time to take hold. He cautioned against expecting a "quick fix."

That seemed to provide little solace for the many legislators — most of them facing re-election in 10 months — eager for something more than an admonition to hang tough.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., called Reagan's plan to transfer more than 40 programs to the states "a brave courageous statement" that could be approved by Congress this year.

But Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., chairman of the Appropriations Committee, cautioned: "His success in achieving this remarkable program ... will ultimately hinge on an economic rebirth in the coming year. The looming specter of increasing federal deficits and high interest rates simply cannot be ignored."

And Senate Finance Chairman Bob Dole, the Kansas Republican whose appeal for an increase in excise taxes to trim the deficit went unheeded by Reagan, warned the transfer plan could "produce some pitfalls." Federal deficits of just under $100 billion, the figure cited by Reagan in his address, "are not economically acceptable," Dole added.

Democratic criticism was predictably harsher.

Cooperation Stressed City, County Problems Talked

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Mayor Percy Cox told a joint meeting of the Greenville City Council and the Pitt County Board of Commissioners last night that discussions and cooperation between the two bodies is "important," especially "as far as the budget is concerned."

"We don't expect to solve anything tonight," Cox said. "We want to go through these things, discuss them, and give these two fellows (county manager Reginald Gray and city manager Ed Wyatt) some direction in the way to go."

Joint funding ventures, including the Pitt-Greenville Airport, Sheppard Memorial Library, The Tar River Ports Commission, and rescue service, were the subjects discussed at the session.

A history of the joint involvement in the airport, compiled by Gray, was made available to those present. It indicated that, contrary to the popular belief that the airport was given to the city and county by the federal government after its use during World War II as a U.S. Marine Corps flight training facility, some 501 acres of land for the airport was bought by the city and county in October 1940 for $6,500.

In 1941, a $90,000 improvement project was begun by the federal Works Projects Administration, and in 1942, the airport was leased to the U.S. Government as an auxiliary airport to the Marine Corps facility at Cherry Point. Additional land was purchased by the city and county in 1943, and the government surrendered the lease, returning the property to the two governing bodies, in 1947.

The present 50-50 funding basis was started when the airport was begun in 1940 and clarified in a resolution in 1943, Gray's history indicated.

Following a recommendation last night by commissioner Charles Gaskins, the two boards agreed that the airport should become a self-supporting venture.

Cox said "for what we're getting out of the airport it's not taking a lot (of money)," but he emphasized "they ought to be self-supporting. We ought to continue to work towards that goal."

"As for Greenville getting out of the airport (which had been suggested last year during the administration of Mayor Don McGlohon)," Cox said "I'd want to keep it" a joint venture.

Sheppard Memorial Library, dedicated in 1930 after a construction gift by Harper Donelson Sheppard provided the building, first received money from the county in 1934. It became a joint city-county venture in fiscal year 1940, in order to make the facility eligible for a $900 state grant, Gray reported. Then, as now, only county libraries are eligible for state library aid, he explained.

County appropriations for the library continued to increase, until a two-to-one city-county ratio was established in fiscal year 1968-69. That ratio, "got off balance," last year, according to Gray, when the city appropriated more for salary increases than did the county.

Council member Janice Buck then suggested that the city and county governing bodies "sit down and jointly make the decisions," regarding salaries and other expenditures for library operations — a suggestion which seemed to meet the approval of both groups.

"Now lets talk about the Greenville Rescue Squad," Cox suggested.

"I offer my condolences," for the problems the city has had, commissioner Charles Gaskins replied.

"We have got a problem with the whole county rescue system," Cox suggested, adding "I appreciate what you've (the county commissioners) done for us." But he then asked, "What are you going to do for us now?"

Gray and members of the board then outlined what the county is doing to help support other rescue squads in the county.

They pointed out that, while rescue vehicles are purchased by the individual squads, the county has provided communications equipment for all squads in the county, and makes funds available for advanced emergency medical technician and paramedic training and continuing education.

"The rescue service is probably the most popular service the city provides it's citizens," Gaskins told the mayor and council.

Agreeing, Cox explained that the new council is "trying to find out where we are right now ... playing catch-up," but he indicated as soon as there is time, the council intends to delve more deeply into the rescue situation.

U.S. Is Told 'Stay Out'

By W. JOSEPH CAMPBELL

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko said today the United States "must end all interference" in Poland, that the Kremlin has no plans to talk about Poland with Washington, and that the matter was discussed only briefly with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.

Gromyko, in a statement read just before flying home and after Haig left for the Middle East, reiterated that the Warsaw regime's imposition of martial law was exclusively an internal Polish matter.

He said that in his "brief discussion" with Haig on the matter that "it was resolutely declared on the Soviet side that the United States must end all interference in the domestic affairs of the Polish People's Republic, which it has been carrying out in various forms for a lengthy period of time."

"It goes without saying that the Soviet Union does not intend to discuss the domestic Polish affairs with anyone, and that includes the United States."

Haig, who arrived in Israel today, said at news conference in Geneva that the Polish crisis had "cast a long and dark shadow" on all aspects of his nearly eight hours of talks with Gromyko Tuesday.

Gromyko, asked by reporters whether the superpowers have effectively renewed the Cold War, said, "Not all is lost yet."

He said the Soviet Union was ready to begin talks on strategic armaments, but the Americans were "found to be unprepared to begin negotiations on this paramount problem, whose solution is awaited by the peoples of the world."

"All responsibility for the consequences of the policy aimed at blocking the solution of this problem rests with the administration of the United States, and that is a responsibility from which it cannot escape."

Candidate For School Board

Anne Creech of Ayden, former coordinator of the Pitt County Community Schools program, has filed for election to a seat on the Pitt County Board of Education representing the Ayden area.

Creech is a classroom teacher's aid in the Ayden schools and has been involved in Pitt County schools for 11 years. She has served as countywide Parent Advisory chairman and as the first chairman of the Ayden Elementary Parent-Teacher Association. She has been involved in locating learning

Mrs. Buck pointed out that Wally Wooles has been selected as chairman of a committee to study rescue operations at the present time. "He is trying to put together a committee now, and come up with some recommendations," he said.

"I think that rescue is something dear to everyone," Cox emphasized. "What price do you put on a life?"

As for the Tar River Port Commission, established by an act of the 1938 General Assembly, both commissioners and council members agreed to have attorneys come up with some suggestions on disbanding the authority since the purpose for which it was started no longer exists.

The authority was created, Gray reported, to build, maintain and operate docks and warehouses as terminal facilities on the Tar. Later legislation enabled the commission to acquire and operate barges and other types of freight-carrying ships, and to make loans and advance funds to any agency of the state to be used in conjunction with the related projects of the commission.

Dixon Files For County Bd. Seat Re-Election Bid To School Bd.

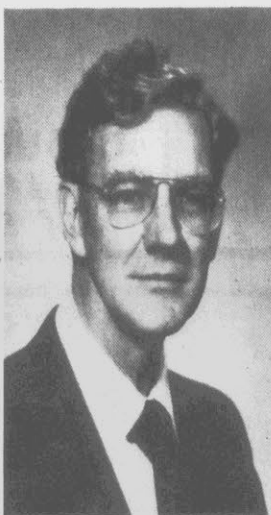

Dr. J. Elliott Dixon of Ayden has filed as a candidate for the Board of County Commissioners. He is seeking to represent Ayden, Grifton and Swift Creek Townships in the seat now held by Alton Gardner, who is not seeking another term after more than 27 years on the board.

"Since 1963, I have been a family physician in the Ayden community. For the last 9 years, I have been a town commissioner and have gained a great deal of experience in governmental affairs," Dixon said.

"With this experience, I feel I can serve the people of Pitt County as a county commissioner. I can address the problems facing our county in education, taxation, economic growth, management and the relationship to other units of government."

A 1951 Ayden High School graduate, Dixon received an A.B. degree in chemistry from Duke University in 1954 and his M.D. degree from Duke in 1958. After serving a two-year residency at the University of Michigan and two years in the Air Force, Dixon began his practice at the Dixon Medical Center.

Elected to the Ayden town board in 1973, Dixon has served as chairman of the board of directors of the Contentnea Metropolitan Sewage District since 1976, and is a past member of the Mid-East Commission.

He is a member and past president of the Ayden Rotary Club, past president of the Ayden Economic Council, chairman of the board of directors of the Ayden Council of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, a member of the executive committee and board of directors of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, and a member of the board of managers of the Ayden branch of Planters National Bank, as well as a Erma S. Carr, a retired school teacher and incumbent member of the City Board of Education, has filed for re-election to the board in the May 4 elections.

Mrs. Carr was appointed last July to fill the unexpired term of Nancy M. Jenkins, who resigned her seat on the board when she moved from Greenville.

The incumbent is a Winston-Salem native and attended public schools there. She holds a Master's of Education degree from Pennsylvania State College and has studied at Cornell University and East Carolina University. Mrs. Carr is a member of Cornerstone Missionary Baptist Church, president of the deaconess board and financial secretary.

She has served on the Vocational Educational Council of the City Schools and the Guidance Committee of Rose High School. Mrs. Carr is first vice-chairman of voting precinct number six, a member of Pitt County Democratic Women, the Pitt County Branch of the NAACP and assistant secretary of the Pitt County Black Assembly. She also serves as chairman of the South Evans Neighborhood Association, the Greenville Industrial/Eppes High School Alumni Association as financial secretary, was the 1981 district chairman for the Pitt County Cancer Society, and is on the 1982 board of directors for that group.

Mrs. Carr is a member of the North Carolina Association of Educators, president of the Greenville-Pitt County Unit of the N.C. Association of Retired School Personnel and a member of the American Home Economics Association.

"I believe that my experiences as an educator, as a community leader, and as a parent have been most valuable as I have involved myself with the issues and problems of the board," Mrs. Carr said.

Reagan Speech.

Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said, "I don't believe Democrats or Republicans will want to stand still while our economy continues to deteriorate."

Fred Harrison, president of the National League of Cities, called Reagan's plan "the boldest proposal since the 1930s" and said it would "greatly simplify the way government works."

Reagan put to rest the possibility that the administration would back an increase in excise taxes on consumer goods, a route the president had considered.

"Raising taxes won't balance the budget," Reagan declared. "I will seek no tax increases this year and I have no intention of retreating from our basic program of tax relief."

The largest tax increase in history — a 25 percent reduction over three years — was enacted last year, along with about $35 billion in spending cuts as the first part of Reagan's economic recovery program.

As he has done in the past, Reagan suggested the nation's economic woes were not his fault, but were inherited from the previous Democratic administration.

"If we had not acted as we did, things would be far worse for all Americans than they are today," he said.

Reagan was interrupted by applause 20 times, but most of it came from the Republican side of the aisle.

And at one point, Reagan was jeered by a handful of Democrats when he conceded "the budget deficit this year will exceed our earlier expectations."

But he drew a standing ovation when he turned from economic matters to praise the heroism of Lenny Skutnik, the Virginia man who dove into the icy Potomac River on Jan. 13 to rescue a woman after the crash of an Air Florida jet.

Skutnik watched from the visitors' gallery, beside Reagan's wife, Nancy.

Reviewing his first year on the job, Reagan said: "The economy will face difficult moments in the months ahead ... but the program for economic recovery that is in place will pull the economy out of its slump and put us on the road to prosperity and stable growth by the latter half of this year. Yes, we have our problems; yes, we are in a time of recession."

Reagan proposed putting a cap on federal benefit programs, saying his plan could save $63 billion over four years "without affecting Social Security."

"Children are our most valuable possessions," she said, "and they deserve the best educational opportunities possible. I feel my past experience and understanding of the system will enable me to make a positive contribution to this cause and that's what I'd like to work for."

"I understand the school system because of my work with it," added Creech, "and I would like to continue my involvement as a board member."

Man Changes Beneficiary

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am 52, have been divorced three years and live with my elderly father. Having no other source of income, I took a real estate course, got my broker's license and am making a modest living selling real estate.

I've dated several men, among whom was a friend of my former husband. This man (I'll call him John) lives in another town. He contacted me after he himself was divorced and flew here to take me to dinner several times. He asked me to marry him, and after serious consideration, I refused. John is a nice man, but he has some unpleasant personal habits that I couldn't see myself living with the rest of my life. We parted company and I had no contact with him for over a year.

Last week I received an unexpected phone call from John's lawyer informing me that John had changed the beneficiary of his life insurance policy from his former wife to me!

The lawyer said John wanted to be sure I was taken care of in my old age since he knew I had no pension prospects (other than Social Security) and no other life insurance. John is 56.

I was surprised and touched. However, I still have no intention of marrying him. I haven't replied yet.

What do you make of it, Abby? What are my obligations, if any? Is it right for me to accept this gift under the circumstances? How should I respond?

BEWILDERED

DEAR BEWILDERED: I think John is hoping that his unexpected generosity will so overwhelm you that you will change your mind and marry him. But since you have no such intention, tell him so. And if he still wants to take care of you in your old age with no strings attached, please let me know, and I'll start believing in Santa Claus again.

DEAR ABBY: I would like to comment on your reply to "Good Ear in St. Paul," who asked which is correct, "I feel bad" or "I feel badly." You answered that "I feel bad" is correct.

Wrong! The word "bad" is an adjective and must modify a noun, such as a "bad day," or it can function as a predicate adjective in the sentence, "The day is bad."

When you ask someone how he feels, an adverb must be used to answer the question "how?" Then you add the "ly" ending to the word. Therefore, "I feel badly" is correct.

If you use my letter, please use my name. I teach English in Eau Claire, Wis.

TEACHER

DEAR SIR: Sorry, you are in error. Most verbs are modified by adverbs, but verbs that do not show action, but instead show a state of being such as "feel, become, seem, smell, taste, look, etc." are modified by adjectives. Hence, to describe how one feels, "I feel bad" is correct.

Although you requested that I use your name, I shall withhold it. If you felt "bad" before, you'd feel worse if I had used it.

DEAR ABBY: I've had the same hairdresser for years. She does nice work, and I had always looked forward to my weekly appointment.

Unfortunately, someone gave her a small portable TV for Christmas, and she keeps it turned on so she can watch it while she works. She keeps the volume turned down, but she does keep her eyes on the TV much of the time, which I find annoying.

If I speak to her, she says, "Shhh... please, I want to hear this!" She is a faithful Dear Abby fan. How can I let her know that I miss formerly friendly chitchat?

DEAR ANNOYED: After this hits print, you may not have to.

Dr. Howell Taking Hold

It appears that ECU Acting Chancellor John Howell has hit the ground running as he takes over the leadership of the university.

Dr. Howell told the Jaycees at their annual DSA and Bosses Night that the university is in "good order."

"I know the organization of the university," he said. "All parts of the organization are operating harmoniously and I intend to work with this structure during the interim."

The acting chancellor indicated he would not make wholesale staff changes "and that is why the work of the university will go uninterrupted."

However, he noted that he did not expect a placid and settled time during his administration. The interchange between professors, students, administration will go on.

"The segments of a university are always in ferment," he explained. "They will propose changes and they will proceed."

He said he would not initiate his own pet projects but "I emphatically do not declare a moratorium on the university's development."

Acting Chancellor Howell said he expected to spend a great deal of time on the external affairs of the university.

"I will work to continue the good relationship between the campus and the external community."

Dr. Howell already has a good start on using his considerable personal prestige to improve relations with the public and lift morale within the university itself.

Atlantic City Not Winner

Gambling casino profits make it very clear why a multitude of interests promoted their approval in Atlantic City.

True, the once-fabled resort city was in dire straits — even with state and federal grants, which are a dubious thing these days. The city was on a long slide down hill.

But the casino-hotel financial report for 1981 shows the nine gambling centers won $1.1 billion from their patrons; ample evidence of the popularity as well as futility of trying to beat established odds.

Parenthetically, it also bespeaks a trait among many people to gamble despite absolute knowledge the "percentages" are stacked against them.

Nevertheless, despite earnings of the gambling industry in Atlantic City we have yet to read of benefits accruing to that city other than to the industry itself.

Maybe time will tell; but we'd give you odds the big winners are the hotel-casino people, not the city.

RALEIGH—Whatever approach has been mentioned for equalizing public school spending from one school district to another across North Carolina, a variety of problems invariably crop up.

So far, no acceptable scheme has been developed.

The differences are sharp in spending in the state's 144 local school systems. While local funds make up about a quarter of the total $2 billion in public school spending, nearly half of that local amount comes from a handful of wealthy counties.

Per pupil spending from local funds varies from more than $700 in at least one district to $500 or more in several to a low of less than 20 counties.

Wealth of the local district alone doesn't explain the wide range. Some communities literally commit more of their available resources to education than other others. Forsyth, for example, not only has more tax base to provide a potential per pupil resource of nearly $800, but commits better than 30 percent of that to the schools so that per pupil spending is just over $125.

Too Low
Cherokee, as an example of low-spending counties, has tax resources per pupil of only $433, and commits less than 30 percent of that to the schools so that per pupil spending is just over $125.

The Governor's Commission on Public School Finance, and others, suggested that spending be equalized through state grants designed to boost the per pupil spending in the poor counties. The cost is tremendous to even begin that process — more than $160 million yearly.

But this suggestion only deepens the concern and debate.

The wealthy systems use local funds to pay salary downward rather than upward, critics responded, and those communities which do support their systems heavily would fight.

There is a question of whether large salary supplements are fair, especially in light of the differences in the cost of living from the wealthy, urban areas to the rural and small town settings.

Differences

An even more important consideration is how the money would be spent even if equalization were achieved. In some communities the people want art, music, culture, foreign languages.

In other communities, there is little interest in such programs. Instead, emphasis would be needed on vocational training. In others, the basic program is in need of advancement.

Should, then, equalization funds going to the poorer counties be earmarked for specific purposes, or should it be made available for whatever use the local people decide upon?

There is, in addition, the matter of how to provide equalization funds. Recognizing that some school units of limited resources commit much more of those resources to education than do some wealthier ones, a complicated formula was devised to determine how much money should be devoted.

Should taxpayers in Durham who have been paying more to boost local schools pay even more to help remote Madison or Chowan?

At one point the notion was advanced that a way to equalize spending would be to cap the local supplement which could be paid. That would provide equalization supplements to school personnel, to provide foreign language, arts, cultural, and other specialty courses, and to supplement sophisticated supplies and equipment needs for advanced math and science courses.

Do all school systems across the state need such advanced education?

Reverse Side Of Coin

The White House is clamping down hard on any government employee who speaks to a member of the press. Originally they were concerned with "National Security" leaks from the State Department, Defense, CIA and National Security Agency. But the rules are now being adopted by other departments, most of which have no state secrets.

On the surface, the Reagan Administration cannot be faulted for wanting everyone in the government to speak with one voice (it seems to work very well in the Soviet Union).

But I believe there are inherent dangers in making it very difficult, if not impossible, to keep government officials from discussing anything of importance with the media.

What most people don't realize is that when a government official has lunch or discreet meeting with a reporter, many times the official is trying to get more information out of the newspaperman, than the newspaperman is trying to get out of the official.

For example, let us assume a Defense Department big shot is having lunch with a reporter from the "Daily Planet."

The Defense Department man opens up the conversation.

"What have you heard?"
"The Navy is going to ask for two more nuclear carriers."

"Damn, where did you hear it?"
"A reliable source in naval plans."

"We haven't had anything on that on our floor. How are they going to try and get them?"
"By going over your head direct to Congress. They figure if they ask for two, they'll get one."

"I better let the secretary know about it so he doesn't appear to be surprised, what else is going on in the Pentagon?"
"The army is having more trouble with the M-1 tank than they're admitting. But they're covering up because they're afraid you'll order them to stop building the tanks until the bugs are worked out."

"Is this straight?"
"I got it from the guy at

The Washington Post who knows someone in the weapons testing department."

"This is good stuff," the Defense Department official says. "I'll get on it right away. You heard anything I should know about the MX missile?"

"The Wall Street Journal man says if you harden the

"Off the record. He's trying to get the autonomy talks between Israel and Egypt on the tracks. In order to do it, he may have to put the Golan Heights on the back burner."

"He hasn't mentioned his plan to Weinberger."

"He's going straight to the President with it, so Defense doesn't foul him up."

"You're really cooking today. Can I use it?"

"The New York Times man, gave it to a White House aide, so I don't imagine it's classified."

"I appreciate this briefing and so does the secretary."

"Don't mention it. I believe that in a free society the people who work in government have a right to know what is going in their own departments."

present missile sites with more cement, the silos might not be able to handle the weight."

"How reliable is The Wall Street Journal on this?"

"The reporter's been working on the story for three months. I think he knows what he's talking about."

"How much time do we have before the story breaks?"

"Maybe two or three weeks."

"Our contractors haven't told us this."

"Why should they? They're hoping to sell you a lot of cement."

"Do you think I should tell the Defense secretary about it?"

"Yeh, but don't tell him where you got it. I don't want The Wall Street Journal to give me a lie detector test to find out the source of the leak."

"Do you have anything on what Al Haig is up to these days?"

Members of the East Carolina University Committee on the Status of Women were gratified to see your article on January 17 concerning "Greenville's Lady Cops," especially since three out of the four officers have four-year degrees in corrections from ECU. It was encouraging to note that the women officers view themselves as competent professionals and have learned how to handle over-protective or negative attitudes held by citizens or male officers.

Unfortunately, the article also encouraged the stereotypical image of "frail women" unsuitable for police work. Such quotes as "They are accepted as well as can be expected," or "They can't handle the calls that are given to them ... we send a backup. If no one is available to back them up, we don't send them," underwrite the image that women cannot cut it in police work. In reality, few police officers, men or women, go into any serious call without a backup; this is simply a good safety precaution.

One result: The council agreed not to make statements on any issues where serious dissent exists. They include the Israeli raid against the Iraqi nuclear reactor, the annexation of the Golan Heights, and others — including Prime Minister Begin. "Consensus" was reached that there must be no Palestinian state; that Jerusalem in its entirety, belongs under Israeli sovereignty, and that the U.S. must stick with the Camp David process with no new plans even if that fails.

A hush-hush parley by the policy-making National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council in Houston Jan. 15-18 almost broke apart on the question of Israeli prime minister Menachem Begin.

The feisty Israeli leader came under savage attack behind closed doors by moderates in the American Jewish community. He was emotionally defended by hard-line backers. At one point, Zvi Harry Hurwitz, information counselor at the Israeli Embassy here and a guest at the Council's meeting, grabbed the microphone and shouted a warning that American Jews "must not let this dissent" get out into the public domain.

Dole's opposition, while not wholly unexpected, signals a possible revolt against Reagan's prime legislative priority when Congress reconvenes next week. Reagan has submitted to White House advisers on raising new taxes, on continuing nuclear talks with Moscow

Baker's Worries
Shortly before costly administration stumble-bumping on the torrid issue of religious school tax exemption, White House chief of staff James Baker confided this worry to a close friend: Some day I'm going to wake up and find the roof has blown off this place!

The cause of Baker's concern, he explained, is the scarcity of top-grade personnel surrounding the president in the White House and at second-levels throughout the government. He named no names, but his criticism seemed prescient when the roof blew off the White House in the tax-exemption fiasco.

Intimates say Baker has a generally low opinion of White House counselor Edwin Meese III's personal staff, which is viewed by objective critics as far less proficient than Baker's staff. Baker's worry failed to mention another major source of White House problems: The escalating battle between new right Reaganite Republicans and old-line conservatives who now fight for the president's soul in ways reminiscent of the Byzantine Empire.

Convictions Sidetracked

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is torn on the Polish debt issue between go-slow advice from Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, two of his big three Cabinet members on one side, and far more hawkish officials on the other, led by United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick.

Kirkpatrick, who considered leaving the administration because of her profound disagreement with the go-slow policy, has plenty of conservative Reaganite allies, particularly at second levels of the State and Defense Departments. The hawks believe the Soviet Union would be severely hurt if the U.S. foreclosed on the $28 billion of Polish debt to western countries and banks. Foreclosure could affect Soviet credit standing throughout the West and would gravely aggravate Poland's economic crisis, forcing more Soviet aid.

But Haig and Regan have so far won the day. Haig worried about Western Europe's reaction to U.S.-led foreclosure or a refusal to "roll over" the huge debt with easier payments. Regan fears dislocations in the financial markets. The betting today is that Reagan, against his own ideological convictions, will stick with Haig and Regan despite costly political erosion on the right flank.

Shortly before costly administration stumble-bumping on the torrid issue of religious school tax exemption, White House chief of staff James Baker confided this worry to a close friend: Some day I'm going to wake up and find the roof has blown off this place!

The cause of Baker's concern, he explained, is the scarcity of top-grade personnel surrounding the president in the White House and at second-levels throughout the government. He named no names, but his criticism seemed prescient when the roof blew off the White House in the tax-exemption fiasco.

Intimates say Baker has a generally low opinion of White House counselor Edwin Meese III's personal staff, which is viewed by objective critics as far less proficient than Baker's staff. Baker's worry failed to mention another major source of White House problems: The escalating battle between new right Reaganite Republicans and old-line conservatives who now fight for the president's soul in ways reminiscent of the Byzantine Empire.

Jews Versus Begin
A hush-hush parley by the policy-making National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council in Houston Jan. 15-18 almost broke apart on the question of Israeli prime minister Menachem Begin.

The feisty Israeli leader came under savage attack behind closed doors by moderates in the American Jewish community. He was emotionally defended by hard-line backers. At one point, Zvi Harry Hurwitz, information counselor at the Israeli Embassy here and a guest at the Council's meeting, grabbed the microphone and shouted a warning that American Jews "must not let this dissent" get out into the public domain.

Anti-Defense Counterattack
Sen. Robert Dole chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and a wily leader of old-line Republican conservatives, has sent this private word to the Reagan White House: Don't count on me to support the big new military spending bill for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

Dole's opposition, while not wholly unexpected, signals a possible revolt against Reagan's prime legislative priority when Congress reconvenes next week. Reagan has submitted to White House advisers on raising new taxes, on continuing nuclear talks with Moscow

Closing Of Station Is Difficult To Accept

SWANSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The federal government's decision to close the Swansboro Coast Guard station is difficult to accept but is in the best interest of the Guard, the station's commander says.

CPO Gregory Straub, commanding officer of the station said news of the closing struck him as "a little upsetting and disheartening," but he characterized the closings as "doing away with the 'nice-to-have' so we can maintain the professional standards of the 'must-have.'"

Straub said he learned last Friday the station near Bogue Inlet would be one of 15 nationwide to close because of federal budget cuts.

The facility will be closed "as early as April or possibly by June," said Straub.

Straub said the property, purchased in the late 1930s, will be kept in case the Coast Guard decides to reactivate the station.

He said the building, also constructed in the 1930s, probably will be rented or leased to a civic or service organization.

"It's been a good job here and we want to continue to do the very best we can right up until the very last minute so they can see they're closing up one of the best (stations) they've got," Straub said.

Straub said this is the third time he has had a station close under his leadership. Straub said he was commanding officer of a Coast Guard ship that was decommissioned, and later was in charge of the Chesapeake Light Tower, which was closed after it was automated.

He said work will continue as usual at the facility until it closes. He said projects begun to improve the facility still will be completed before personnel leave, and his men will work hard to get the facility ready for an inspection Feb. 9.

West trade, which would cut into hard currency earnings for the Soviet Union and its satellites.

Intelligence sources here report a gross gold sale by the Russians of 250 million tons in 1981. Considering today's gold price of $375 an ounce — far below levels of last year — that adds up to a tidy sum.

The hard currency being paid for the Soviet gold has to be earmarked for cash-and-carry purchases of food, feed grains and industrial products, particularly for economically-prostrate and insolvent Poland. Looking into the future, the Kremlin appears gravely concerned that a cutback of Western credit could find its whole Eastern European empire looking to Moscow for help.

A footnote: Secret talks may soon take place between the U.S. and South Africa, the world's major source of gold, to find some way to reduce the price of the yellow metal, thus reducing the value of Soviet gold.

No Charges

MOCKSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Authorities say no charges will be filed in the death of a Yadkin County man killed when his car was struck by a Southern Railway freight train in Mocksville.

Police identified the victim as Kenneth Ray Rhodes, 43, of Hamptonville.

Rhodes' car crossed in front of the train on the Bethel Church Road on Tuesday, police said. The train struck the car on the driver's side and pushed it 150 feet down the track, he said.

Police said the train was sounding its whistle and ringing its bell, but Rhodes showed no signs of trying to stop.

Mystery Youth Heard In Atlanta Murders Trial

By DAVID PACE
Associated Press Writer
ATLANTA (AP) — A teen-ager testifying for the prosecution in the murder trial of Wayne B. Williams says the defendant sexually fondled him, but under cross-examination the youth contradicted some of his testimony linking Williams with two other victims.

The appearance of the surprise witness Tuesday marked the first time in the 5-week-old trial that the state has brought forward testimony linking Williams to a homosexual encounter.

The 23-year-old free-lance photographer and talent scout, who is charged with two of 28 slayings of young blacks whose deaths were investigated by a special police task force, has denied he is a homosexual. No charges have been filed in the other 26 slayings.

The trial was to resume today.

The boy on the stand was not identified by agreement between the prosecution and defense. He testified that he was a student at the Challenge School, a state-run facility for youthful offenders that a number of the 28 victims had links to.

He testified that in August 1980, while he was selling newspapers he had stolen in Atlanta, Williams drove up and asked him if he wanted a job washing cars. He said he got into Williams' station wagon and, as they drove around, Williams asked him about his family, whether he played a musical instrument and whether he had any money.

"He felt my pocket — he wasn't really feeling my pocket ...," the youth said, describing how Williams fondled his sex organ.

He said Williams gave him $2 and when they drove to a secluded area, he "jumped out and ran," getting away when Williams stopped to get something from the trunk.

"I remember his face. I can't forget his face," the youth said. "I wake up at night dreaming about it."
The youth also linked

Williams with two of the victims he is not charged with killing. He said he saw Williams and Lubie Geter, 14, get into Williams' car sometime during the first weekend of January 1981. Geter is believed to have disappeared Jan. 2.

He also said he saw Williams in a white station wagon at the Jan. 28, 1981, funeral of Terry Pae, 15, another of the 28 victims.

Williams is standing trial for the murders of Nathaniel Cater, 27, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21. However, the judge on Monday allowed the prosecution to enter evidence that mentions other victims, even though no one is charged with their deaths.

The prosecution used that opening Tuesday when it questioned the unidentified youth about the alleged Geter encounter.

Geter's death is one of 10 which prosecutors contend they can link to Williams.

But the youth, who did not enunciate his words and was asked frequently by prosecutors to repeat them for the court, contradicted part of his testimony when defense lawyer Alvin Binder questioned him.

The youngster said that five months after his encounter in the car, he saw Williams leaving a shopping center with Geter on the last weekend Geter was seen alive. However, when Binder questioned him, the youth said he saw Williams and Geter on a Saturday. Geter disappeared on a Friday, according to earlier testimony.

Later that month, January 1981, the youth testified he saw Williams at the Pae funeral. However, on cross-examination, the youth told Binder he never saw Williams again after seeing him with Geter.

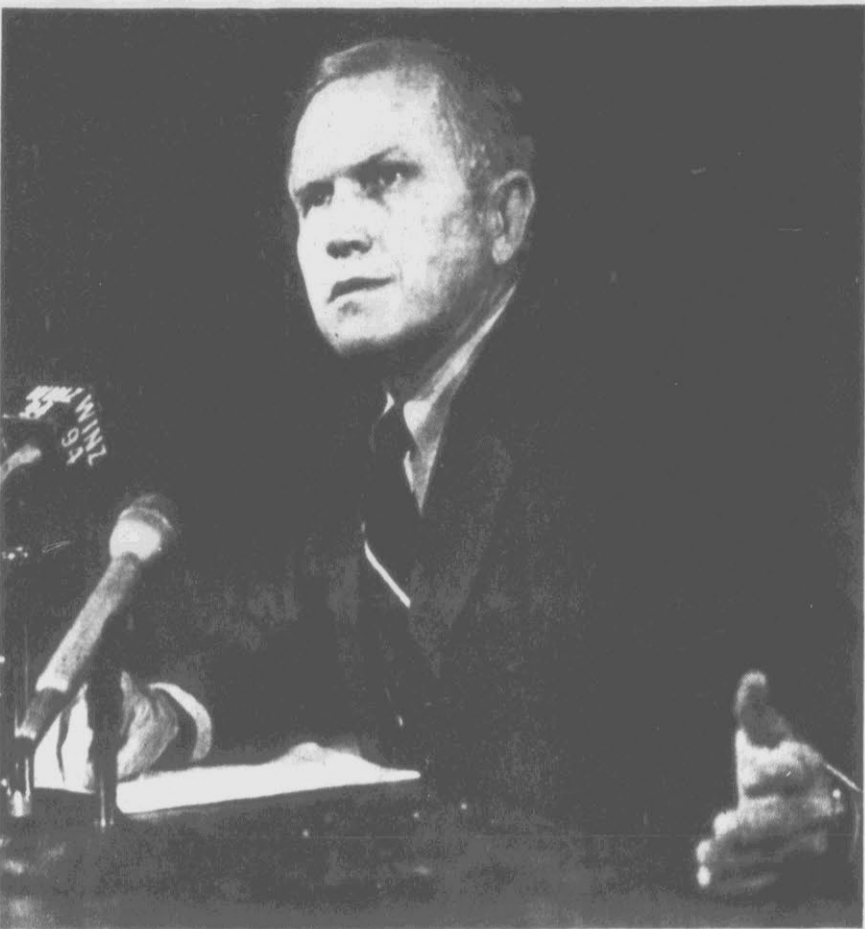

The youth testified that, after the Pae funeral, he pointed out Williams to a friend, Eric Thompson, who took the stand and corroborated the testimony.

Thompson, 15, said his friend "poked me in the side and said that's the man who grabbed him."

The youth said it was between 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. Jan. 3 when he saw Geter enter the car Williams was driving. Ruth Warren, another witness, testified she saw Williams and Geter at the shopping center about 3 p.m. Jan. 2.

RDF Exercises Begin At Base In Ft. Bragg

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — The Rapid Deployment Joint Task Force is undergoing its third command post exercise at Fort Bragg since President Carter formed the force in 1980, military officials said.

More than 8,300 military leaders from almost every branch of service began a week-long exercise Tuesday, testing their ability to quickly deploy and sustain an armed force overseas.

The exercise — Gallant Knight '82 — is sponsored by the U.S. Army Readiness Command. It is one of a series of exercises evaluating command functions, employment and deployment plans and security.

Maj. David Patterson, spokesman for the Readiness Command, said the exercise would evaluate only command, communications and control aspects. He said the exercise will not involve the actual movement of troops.

He said participants from the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines have been arriving at the base for the past two weeks.

Military spokesmen declined to give any details about the $4.5 million exercise scenario.

The force is a group of the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines that can draw on a pool of more than 200,000 troops, including personnel in the XVIII Airborne Corps.

Fort Bragg was selected as the exercise site because "it is a good communications center and has a good airfield (Pope Air Force Base) from which to operate," an exercise spokesman said.

Senior commander for this week's exercise is Gen. Donn A. Starry, leader of the readiness command. Starry and other top-ranking military officials are expected to visit Fort Bragg to monitor the exercise before it concludes Feb. 2.

NRC Chief Expects More 'Tube Problems'

By RICH KIRKPATRICK
Associated Press Writer
ONTARIO, N.Y. (AP) —
The nation's chief nuclear power regulator says he thinks steam generator pipes will continue to cause problems at facilities like the B.E. Ginna plant, which was brought to a "cold shutdown" after a rupture caused a radiation leak.

A plant spokesman said officials hope to get their first look at any damage inside the steam generator Saturday.
"There will be no major benchmarks (in the recovery effort) before we physically inspect the steam generator," said John Oberlies, chief spokesman for the plant's owner, Rochester Gas & Electric Co.

The plant, which stands on the shore of Lake Ontario 16 miles northeast of Rochester, was brought to a cold shutdown — a state of low pressure and temperature —
Tuesday afternoon, about 31 hours after a number of tubes ruptured within one of two steam generators.

Three bursts of radioactive steam lasting a total of two minutes were released into the atmosphere Monday and 11,000 gallons of mildly radioactive water spilled into a sump in the basement of the plant's containment building.

Oberlies said no traces of radiation were found Tuesday outside the plant gates.
Traces had been detected Monday.

With cold shutdown, temperatures in the reactor's primary cooling system dropped to about 200 degrees
Fahrenheit at 4:30 p.m.
Tuesday, and the pressure was lowered to about 15 pounds per square inch — the same as that in the atmosphere at sea level. Heat removal systems were kept on to cut the temperature to 140 degrees.

The normal operating temperature of the reactor is about 600 degrees, with water under pressures of 2250 psi.

The radioactive water was to be pumped out of the containment building basement today and transferred to tanks. Eventually, the radioactive elements will be removed and sent to a disposal site.

Nuclear Regulatory Commission Chairman
Nunzio Palladino said
Tuesday night on public TV's
"McNeil-Lehrer Report" that he thinks there will be steam generator tube problems at other nuclear power plants.

"We have been having trouble with steam generator tubes, due to corrosion," Palladino said. "As (NRC
Regional Administrator Ronald) Haynes reported, we've had three other incidents that have had releases comparable to or greater than this incident." However, Palladino said it was unlikely any future incident would be worse than the Ginna incident.

The NRC noted in a November 1980 report that steam generators in nuclear plants have had tube problems, but said that the plants could continue to operate because inspection and corrective techniques could keep leaks down.

Radioactive water heated by the nuclear reactor runs through a network of pipes in the generator, which is filled with non-radioactive water that drives the plant's powerful turbines after it turns to steam. Normally water from the two systems does not mix — only heat is exchanged — but in the Tuesday's incident at the Westinghouse-designed Ginna plant, one of the tubes carrying radioactive water burst and leaked into the non-radioactive water.

At least seven American nuclear power plants have been shut down at least briefly since November 1980 because of tube leaks, according to NRC records, and the Ginna plant has a history of corrosion in the type of tubing where the leak occurred.

With the declaration of cold shutdown, the NRC removed its emergency response team and closed its emergency and news centers in the company's Rochester headquarters.

A site emergency was declared at the plant Monday.
The designation, the second most serious on a four-step scale, was the first declared at a U.S. commercial nuclear plant since the March 1979 accident at Three Mile Island near Harrisburg, Pa.

But the NRC said the Ginna incident was vastly different from the TMI accident, the worst at a U.S. commercial nuclear power facility.

"There is no comparison," said NRC spokesman Jan Strasma. He said automatic safety systems and plant operators performed properly, and "there was no time when the reactor was placed in jeopardy."

Strasma said the problem seems to occur in older plants that formerly used phosphate-based chemicals in their cooling systems.
Deterioration in tubes prompted plant operators to switch to other chemicals beginning in 1974, he said.

There are 3,260 steam tubes in each of Ginna's two generators, and they tend to become corroded with caked up crud and mineral deposits. "The only way it can develop into a serious problem is if several of them burst at once," Strasma said.

'New Federalism' To Cut Washington Bureaucracy

By DON McLEOD
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — It will never regress to the sleepy river city it was when Franklin Delano Roosevelt arrived with the New Deal, but the Washington bureaucracy will shrink substantially over the next several years if President Reagan gets his way.

The federalism that Reagan outlined in his State of the Union speech Tuesday night would transfer most of the government's domestic programs to state and local governments, where they resided for most of the nation's history before the Great Depression drove them to Washington.

The federal government will keep some big ticket items on the domestic front, including the expensive and politically sensitive Social Security.

But most programs would be dispatched to the countryside.

Beginning in the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1, 1983, state and local governments would assume more than 40 programs now financed in whole or part by Washington. With a combined price tag of $30.2 billion a year, they include streets and bridges, sewers, mass transit, education, health centers, urban renewal and social work.

To help states, cities and counties shoulder this burden, Reagan will ask Congress to put about $28 billion a year into a Federalism Trust Fund. The money would come from federal excise tax receipts and the windfall profits tax on petroleum.

Cornerstone of the package would be an initial tradeoff of key programs, with Reagan accepting federal responsibility for the Medicaid program of health care for the poor, one of the most costly and hard-to-control items in nearly every state's budget.

In return, the states would be expected to take over food stamps and Aid for Families with Dependent Children, the country's main welfare program.

Administration officials estimate it will be lifting a $19.1 billion burden from the states by picking up the Medicaid tab. In exchange, the states would absorb $16.5 billion with the two programs they take over.

The combined federal contribution in the first year would be $47.1 billion and would rise gradually over the 8-year life of the transition, averaging about $50 billion a year.

The trust fund would absorb most of the blow from the transfers for the first four years, the administration says. But beginning in 1988 the fund would be phased out, by 25 percent per year until it expires in 1991.

At the same time, however, the government would stop collecting excise taxes in similar stages. By 1991 it would eliminate all federal excise taxes except for 2 cents per gallon on gasoline, and even this would benefit the states by maintaining the interstate highway system.

The windfall profits tax already is slated to expire in 1991.

With the federal government no longer collecting excise taxes, states would have room for replacing them with their own levies on such items as gasoline, tobacco, alcoholic beverages and telephone calls.

If states choose not to impose new excise taxes, they could make up the loss of federal funds by cutting or eliminating programs. Either way, Washington would be off the hook.

Officials acknowledged that it will take months to iron out all the details, including the dismantling of the massive federal machinery that now serves the programs, and creating replacements in state capitols, city halls and county courthouses.

State and local officials have insisted for years that they could handle the programs better if they were given the freedom to do it without Washington red tape.

But the same officials also have said they must have the money to run the programs and the federal government is the best equipped to raise it.

Big Earnings Drop For Weyerhaeuser

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A spokesman for The Weyerhaeuser Co., a timber grower and manufacturer, says that 726 of its North Carolina employees won't get scheduled pay raises on time as the company attempts to recover from an 18 percent loss in 1981.

Nationwide, 8,500 workers will experience the delay.

The company, in a statement released at its Tacoma, Wash., headquarters, said Monday that earnings for the year fell to $228 million from $278 million, or $1.62 a share from $2.12 a share. Sales decreased to $4.50 billion from $4.54 billion in 1980.

Keith Hundley, a spokesman for Weyerhaeuser in New Bern, said Tuesday that union workers at the plants would not be affected.

Hundley said North Carolina plants have not been as hard hit as others.

"It may be good management, or it may be good luck," he said, "but we have not faced the major shut-downs and losses some other regions of the United States have."

He said the company has experienced several furloughs, and has had to reduce a number of shifts at wood product locations.

Tom Ambrose, a spokesman for the company in Tacoma, said 500 of the company's top management personnel have had their annual salary review delayed by one year. About 8,000 salaried employees exempt from receiving additional pay for overtime work will have their pay raises delayed six months.

Similar action was taken during the recession of 1975, Ambrose said, but more workers are affected by the latest freeze.

The 1981 profits were reduced by a $6.1 million after-tax charge from damage from the Mount St. Helens eruptions in 1980. The 1980 profits were reduced by a charge of $43.5 million because of the eruptions.

Conscience Puts Youth In Jail

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — James Jody Godwin's conscience got the better of him, and it also got him thrown into jail.

The 17-year-old youth was charged with armed robbery by Cumberland County deputies Tuesday after he tried to return money he said he took in two holdups.

Deputies said a young man walked into The Pantry grocery on Monday and handed clerk Carolyn Williams $140 in cash. He told the woman he robbed the store earlier this month and decided to return the money after his conscience bothered him. He then turned around and walked out.

A short while later, the same man entered the Quick Stop grocery and handed a clerk a handful of money, saying he had robbed the store earlier this month and wanted to make restitution. The clerk then called police.

Godwin is being held in jail in lieu of $25,000 bond.

Maverick Lawyer Fights Traditions

By SUSAN E. KINSMAN

WARWICK, R.I. (UPI) — Edward Dangel was a professor of criminal law in 1949 when he sized up one of his students.

"In the entire history of Boston University Law School only two people have flunked criminal law. One student handed in a blank paper and the other was Aram K. Berberian. He should have been a carpenter."

There are many in Rhode Island's court system who agree with Dangel's assessment. Berberian said he would have been a radio engineer, if his father had not pushed him into law.

Berberian followed the letter of his father's wishes, but took license with the spirit. In the name of civil liberties, Berberian has launched outrageous attacks on the legal traditions and foundations of government which his Armenian immigrant parents held in awe.

"I'm an absolute disappointment to my folks, but I'm not engaged in a popularity contest," he says.

Berberian, 60, of Charlestown, R.I., has made a name for himself — on police blotters, court dockets and among political and legal leaders who view him as part of the lunatic fringe.

He has smuggled guns and defused hand grenades into court buildings to demonstrate the inadequacy of electronic security systems; adopted his second wife as a daughter before he married her to "legitimize cohabitation" and is now battling the federal government for the right to sunbathe nude on a Rhode Island beach.

"Law is defined as a system for the resolution of social conflicts. Lawyers should help to resolve and prevent these conflicts. Most lawyers don't feel this way. I do. Most are in this business to make money. I'm in the law business to be a steward," Berberian said.

His efforts have resulted in a lengthy arrest record and frequent court appearances as a defendant.

"Mr. Berberian's criminal record is three pages long. Even though he has been acquitted of all the charges against him, it reflects a lifetime of anti-social activity," Superior Court Judge Eugene G. Gallant wrote in 1973.

Most recently, Berberian indefinitely was suspended from practicing law because of the conviction.

Berberian appealed the conviction but said the latest scrape came too close for comfort. The prosecutor asked for a jail term.

"In my several demonstrations — this is my sixth — I've researched the law carefully... This last one I guessed wrong," he said.

"I'm on probation for five years and I have to keep my mouth shut. I don't like it. I have to behave like other lawyers do — to be a prostitute and sacrifice my principles," Berberian said.

Berberian said those who practice civil disobedience should be prepared for the consequences. But "I don't want to go to jail," he said. "In the last analysis I'm a coward."

By his count, Berberian has chalked up 36 "significant civil rights victories" and prevailed in another 118 of the more than 300 cases he has appealed to the Rhode Island Supreme and federal courts.

"I don't regret anything I've done in principle. I regret I've landed in hot water," Berberian said.

Berberian was disbarred from practicing in Rhode Island courts for 18 months between 1965 and 1967 after committing "an affront to the court" by filling in his law partner's name on a motion to the Rhode Island Supreme Court.

Since then the Rhode Island Bar Association has tried more than a half-dozen times to suspend him and others for failing to pay annual dues to the organization, in which membership is compulsory.

"That really hurts me," Berberian said. "There are several bar associations in Rhode Island and the state Supreme Court has singled one out. It is a violation of my right to privacy and freedom of association."

The Rhode Island Supreme Court have struck down his objections and every year Berberian pays his dues — under protest.

Despite his vow to lay low during probation, Berberian is suing the federal Fish and Wildlife Service from prohibiting nude bathing on Moonstone Beach in South Kingstown, R.I., a popular retreat for an nature sun worshippers.

Berberian is a member of Naturalists, a nationwide nudist group. Town officials tolerated the practice at one end of the beach, but the property has since been transferred to the less lenient federal government.

Berberian once appealed to city officials to block off the "uninhabited" section of the beach to those wearing clothes. "I feel that the clothed persons were glorified peeping toms. These clothed voyeurs made us feel quite uncomfortable," he said.

Permit Ridding Undesirables

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The Navy, for the second time in a year, is giving commanding officers permission to clear the decks of undesirable sailors.

"There is no place in such a professional force for those few individuals who routinely migrate between unsatisfactory and marginal performance..." the chief of naval operations, Adm. Thomas Hayward, said in a letter to commanders, who have a March 1 deadline.

German Unions In The Middle

By ALISON SMALE
Associated Press Writer
BOON, West Germany (AP)—West Germany's employers and unions are entangled in their annual argument over wages. But this year, the battle is not just about money. It is part of a larger political fight about how to run the country.

Unemployment was an average 1.25 million in 1981 and is expected to touch 2 million this year, equivalent to about 7 percent of the labor force.

Like 1981's 5.9 percent inflation rate in West Germany, these figures sound low when compared with Britain or U.S. cities such as Detroit.

But in a country where order and sustained economic growth had come to be synonymous, the recession has not only gnawed at the famed economic miracle, but eaten away at the political structure too.

It has divided Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's increasingly rocky government coalition into two camps: those supporting state programs to combat joblessness and those against.

It promises, too, to encroach on what is normally a ritual: annual wage negotiations.

Wage negotiations in West Germany are not haphazard. Each of the 17 major labor unions sits down with the relevant employers each

New Year to hammer out wage hikes covering most of the 26.9 million-member work force.

The traditional pacesetter is the Metalworkers' Union. It has entered pay talks with union board member Hans Janssen predicting "a tough confrontation."

This was no idle talk, according to union spokeswoman Dagmar Opoczynski.

"We know we say every year we are going to be firm — and then there's a settlement anyway," she said.

"But this year is different, because the unemployment figure is so high."

Mrs. Opoczynski and other unionists explained that they felt they acted with moderation in 1981 — when wage settlements averaged 4.9 percent, 1 percent below the inflation rate.

Janssen said, "That is something which cannot, in any event, be repeated in 1982."

Thus his union is threatening to strike if its demand for a 7.5 percent wage hike is not met.

The employers disagree. A 7.5 percent increase "in no way appropriate," said Otto Esser, president of West Germany's Employers' Federation.

"We need wage settlements which allow a turnaround... Business profits must grow again so that firms invest again to ensure jobs and create new ones."

A similar debate is going on in the state sector, where the public workers' union, whose members run the country in everything from driving trains to advising Cabinet ministers, is warning of an all-out strike if a 1 percent pay cut is not restored before wage negotiations start in March.

"It is not the function of a trade union to negotiate over cuts," said union spokeswoman Ulrike Mayr-Wolkow.

The cuts in the public sector are a result of a 1982 austerity budget the government is still trying to pass through Parliament.

In 1979, the new-year negotiations resulted in a 44-day strike by Ruhr steel workers who finally won a 4 percent wage increase and other benefits. Steel officials claimed the strike cost the industry $820 million.

The final months of 1981 were characterized by a sharp political debate in which leftists in Schmidt's Social Democrat Party, already stunned by cuts in generous social welfare programs, argued ever more fiercely for state programs to combat joblessness.

The Social Democrats' coalition partners, the Free

Democrats, refused to countenance the higher taxes required to pay for such a program.

But the debate has not gone away. A leading Social Democrat, Wolfgang Roth, proposed a $17.9 billion job program and, as unemployment rises, he appears to have growing support.

If political pressure forces the government into agreeing to some kind of job program, employers are sure to suffer higher taxes. Then, the employers argue, they will be even less able to invest to create new jobs.

If, on the other hand,

Schmidt's government resists the call for state funds, it may lose support in its traditional power base, the unions. Together with the disenchantment of leftists in the party key state elections this year.

Watchful Eye

On Containers

VERNON, N.Y. (AP) — A watchful eye is kept on the machine that fills its cottage-cheese containers by DairyLea because overfilling is as expensive for the producer as underfilling would be for the customer.

The company fills five-pound tubs to an accuracy of one-eighth of an ounce on a filler at a speed of 30 containers per minute, said operations manager Henry Winterstein.

30 Years After Her Death, Evita's Image Lingers

By DOUGLAS GRANT MINE
Associated Press Writer
BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Thirty years after her death, the image of Eva (Evita) Peron is confounding the passage of time almost as well as her meticulously embalmed body lying lifelike in a Buenos Aires mausoleum.

Most Argentines, even those born after she died of cancer at the age of 33 and at the peak of her power as the wife of President Juan D. Peron, regard her with emotions ranging from respect to reverence.

The woman who vowed to obliterate the oligarchy is still deprecatd by those of the elite who recall her harangues to hundreds of thousands in the Plaza de Mayo in Buenos Aires. But even the young rich — those who never felt the sting of her tongue — recognize the force of her personality and to a certain extent admire her will.

The women's branch of the Justicialist (Peronist) Party, the largest political force in this nation of 28 million, has deemed 1982 "The International Year of Eva Peron" and has launched a campaign to counter what it calls the "injury" done her image by, principally, the hugely successful musical "Evita" — the name of endearment by which she was popularly known.

A dozen women Peronists, some wearing their hair pulled back in the tight bun favored by Evita, spoke of her at a recent news conference.

"Evita lives, and continues being the standard-bearer of the Peronist revolution," said Alicia de Lopez, who was seated beneath a portrait of her idol larger than those of the late President Peron and his last wife Isabel adorning other walls. Mrs. Lopez said she saw the Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber musical in Denmark last year and was disgusted by it.

"We are offended by its presentation of Eva as immoral and mediocre and by its negation of history," she said.

The musical, which shows the poor, illegitimate young Eva sleeping her way to show business success and political power, is banned in Argentina. Mrs. Lopez said the military government is considering relaxing the ban and allowing at least some of the musical's hit songs to be distributed here.

"If they let any of that pseudo-artistic absurdity into the country, I assure you we will take to the streets with more than they bargained for," she said.

Peron died in 1974 and Isabel succeeded him as president, only to be ousted by the military two years later. The military government is for the most part anti-Peronist and as such no big fan of Eva.

A comparison of current and Peronist-era school curriculum is illustrative. During the first Peronist regime (1946-1955), nearly half the grammar school reading primer was devoted to emphasizing Eva Peron's benevolence.

She distributed at her personal discretion the funds of The Eva Peron Foundation, winning the hearts and political loyalties of children, the needy, disabled and old. All public workers had a day's wages tithed to the fund each year.

The book has pictures of her giving dolls to little girls and scooters to boys. One lesson is called "The New House." A boy writes Eva telling how he lives in a shack. "He soon got a new home, comfortable and sunny," the lesson reads.

These days, a student could complete secondary school and, unless his teacher chose to supplement the recommended curriculum, would never read the name Eva Peron in a text.

Julio Gonzalez Rivero, national director of intermediate and secondary instruction, said teachers are free to discuss the subject and assign readings on it.

"It is another period of history and we treat it objectively," he said. "But she is treated in a social rather than a political context."

His personal opinion of Eva?

"You have to recognize she brought about some social advances. But you also have to admit that ... there were censurable episodes, like the burning of churches."

During the 1950s, the Roman Catholic establishment became increasingly critical of Peron's restriction of civil liberties and persecution of non-Peronists, and the strongman's followers sacked and burned a number of churches.

"It was really bad luck for the country that Evita died. We need her now," said Cristobal Alvarez, a 50-year-old truck driver.

"She lifted up the country from nothing. In that time, people had jobs and money."

Argentina is currently in the midst of a deep recession, with unemployment higher than at any time since 1972. Real wages fell almost 20 percent last year.

Alvarez said that as a young man he listened to the speeches Peron and Eva would make from the balcony of government house to crowds that sometimes numbered a million.

"She didn't need notes. It all came from inside," he said of her tirades against the privileged in which she offered to supply torches to burn down Barrio Norte — a rich residential neighborhood.

Monica Rodriguez Barrios, 28, lives in Barrio Norte. She is against Peronism and said Eva must take some of the blame for the ills the populist and ultra-nationalist doctrine brought the country.

"But she knew what she wanted and had such charisma and force. You have to give her credit for that," she said.

Argentina's poor came to look upon her as a modern-day Mary Magdalene. Every July 26, the anniversary of her death, candles are lit in humble homes next to pictures of the ruby-lipped, blonde Evita, who despite her bitterness toward the wealthy assumed their trappings of jewels and furs.

Catholic Masses are said in her name and wreaths laid at the entrance to the crypt in the Recoleta Cemetery — ironically the oligarchic burial ground — where she lies.

Peron, whose request that Eva be canonized was rejected by the Vatican, paid Dr. Pedro Ara a reported $100,000 to restore and preserve the cancer-ravaged body. The work took almost a year. When the corpse, after an odyssey that took it to Italy and Spain following Peron's ouster in 1955, was returned to Argentina in 1974, the deceased former first lady looked to be sleeping.

If Argentines don't agree completely on Eva's true nature, the feeling is practically unanimous that Isabel, currently living in exile in Spain, could not hold a candle to her in terms of strength and charisma.

"Isabelita, poor girl," said truck driver Alvarez. "It's not even fair to make the comparison, but she was the opposite of Eva. The people surrounding Evita did what she wanted or they were out on their ear, Isabel was manipulated by everyone."

At Peronist gatherings, when the spirit gets flowing, it is not the exiled president conjured up by the loyalists.

They chant: "Se sienta! Se sienta! Evita esta presente!" — We feel it! We feel it! Evita is present!

Hypertension and High Altitudes

I am planning a trip to Mexico in a few months. My blood pressure was high about eight months ago and now is almost normal. I have been told that the altitude may be too high for me. Can't the body adjust to such a change without danger? — Mr. M.J., Mich.

undertook this holiday supported by your own doctor's agreement that it is perfectly safe.

Many people who have undertaken a high altitude holiday with trepidation are often surprised that they have suffered no unpleasant effects.

Dear Mr. J.:

Even young people whose blood pressure is perfectly normal may have some difficulty in immediately adjusting to living in a high altitude. The rarefied air makes breathing a little more rapid. With it may come a general feeling of fatigue and lack of energy. The change of the oxygen pressures does put some slight temporary additional stress on the heart and lungs.

Most people adjust quickly to the physiological changes that occur in high altitudes.

There are many people with high blood pressure who live normal, active lives in high altitude cities. Undoubtedly they have undergone a gradual period of adjustment to this type of climate.

The chances are great that with your controlled, mild hypertension that you will suffer no adverse problems. Yet it would give you a great deal of emotional assurance if you

I always thought that thrush only happens to children. My husband had it a few weeks ago and no one seems to know how he caught it. — Mrs. L.K.N., Texas.

Dear Mrs. N.:

Thrush does occur more often in children than in adults. It is an infection caused by the fungus albicans. The mouth, tongue, palate, gums and tonsils are covered by the milky white film of thrush with tenaciously sticks to the surface.

Thrush seems to occur more frequently in adults who have been sucking on lozenges that contain antibiotics. The antibiotics in these lozenges upset the normal balance in the mouth between bacteria and fungi. Thrush and other types of fungus infections may then flare up. It is for this reason that antibiotic lozenges should be avoided.

Thrush is not a serious condition and disappears readily with little or no treatment.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined slightly today, showing no strong reaction either way to President Reagan's State of the Union message.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 2.09 to 839.42 in the first half hour.

Losers took a 5-4 lead over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said investors found few surprises in Reagan's speech Tuesday night. For example, the President's decision not to call for increases in federal excise taxes had been generally known beforehand.

They said the outlook for interest rates remained a dominant concern of stock traders.

Wall Street's attention was focused on the government's quarterly announcement, due later today, of its borrowing plans.

Continental Telephone led the active list in early trading, unchanged at 16. A 100,000-share block traded at 16.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average dropped 1.24 to 841.51.

Declines slightly outnumbered advances on the NYSE.

Big Board volume totaled 44.87 million shares, against 43.17 million in the previous session.

Tells Court Accused Was Driving Car Of Victim

Jeffrey Steven Heptinstall, on trial in Pitt County Superior Court for the murder of 62-year-old Rachel B. Albritton of Lizzie, was driving the Greene County woman's car when arrested near New Bern, Craven County Deputy Sheriff Tony Hamilton said yesterday. Hamilton told the jury of seven men and five women that he arrested Heptinstall off N.C. 55 near New Bern, several hours after Mrs. Albritton was fatally stabbed and beaten at her home. Heptinstall, an escapee from the state prison unit at Maury, offered no resistance. Hamilton testified. Pathologist Dr. Stanley Harris, who conducted an autopsy on Mrs. Albritton's body, said the cause of death was a stab wound in the side and internal bleeding, which could have been caused by a 10-inch butcher knife. However, he said that Mrs. Albritton, with 19 wounds, had a fractured skull that eventually could have killed her. Some of her wounds, Harris said, could have resulted from being hit with a soft drink bottle, television set and other household objects, just as she told friends and relatives in describing the attack shortly before she died.

A number of state witnesses Monday and yesterday described the woman's demeanor following his arrest, and potential evidence taken from the scene of the crime.

A former SBI agent testified yesterday that when he arrived at the scene, he found parts of a broken soft drink bottle on the back porch and in the kitchen, a butcher knife on the floor of the dining room, and a fan

Wolfpack Beats Georgia Tech

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Seventeenth-ranked North Carolina State was determined not to let Georgia Tech set the tempo in Tuesday night's Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game...

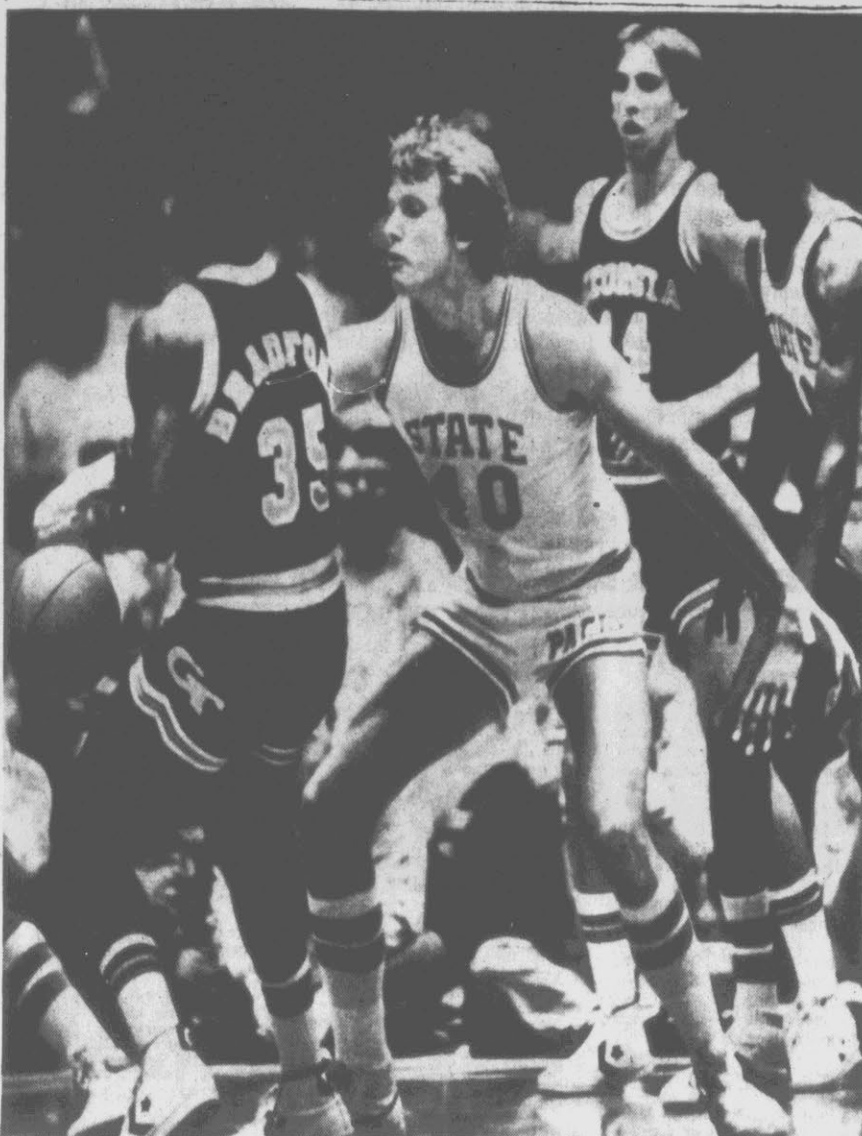

Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano, whose club was upset last week in a slow-tempo game against Duke, decided to let guard Dereck Whittenburg pull the trigger early against Georgia Tech.

Whittenburg finished with 20 points while forward Thurl Bailey added 12. "We've watched a lot of film lately. We'd been staying with what we'd been doing and lost the lead. We felt we had to change up, that's why we pulled Tech of their zone," Valvano said.

Goza's 3-point play. But the Wolfpack then went into a delay game and held the ball for nearly four minutes without taking a shot before Bailey hit two free throws to make it 44-39 with 2:38 to play.

The victory upped the Wolfpack record to 15-3, 5-2 in the ACC. The loss drops Georgia Tech to 5-11, 1-7 in league play.

Rampants Roll By Pam Pack, 66-58

By WOODY PEELE Reflector Sports Editor WASHINGTON — Rose High School jumped out to a 10-0 lead in the opening minutes of a non-conference basketball game against Washington High...

Rose's girls also came away with a victory, taking a 55-48 win in their game.

The Rampants, hitting ten of their first 13 shots, including seven in a row at one point in the first period, powered out by as many as 14 points in that period, stretched the lead out to as much as 20, and withstood a Washington rally in the final period as Coach Jim Brewington shuttled in his subs with great regularity.

The Rampants ended up shooting 56.5 percent, connecting on 26 of 46 attempts from the floor. Washington, helped along by seven of 12 in the final period, hit on 21 of 45 for 46.7 percent.

played a zone exclusively during the game.

"They're such a good ball-handling team that we thought we'd be better off in a zone. That way, they wouldn't be able to run as many picks. It's tough to stay with them in man the way they play."

Brewington also felt his big men played one of their better games.

With the Rampants hitting four their first six shots, Rose powered out to a 10-0 lead. Tim Harris started things with two free throws, and Battle, Derwin Little, Barry Smith and Russell Perkins all followed with baskets during the first four and a half minutes as Rose built its lead.

James Guilford finally broke the ice for the Pam Pack, but Rose still pulled further away, getting baskets from Little, Battle and Perkins for an 18-4 lead with 1:50 left in the first period.

Rose led at the end of the frame, 22-10.

Washington closed back within eight three times before Rose got off another string late in the half to power out to a 16-point spread, 36-20. Jim Whitehurst helped that along hitting four of the six in the string. Rose then led at the half, 38-24.

After scoring eight of the first ten points in the second half, Rose held a 20-point spread, 46-26. Little scored first, ten seconds into the half, and Smith followed with two free throws. After Guilford hit a jumper for Washington, Harris slammed one through and Perkins followed with a jumper from the lane for the margin.

Washington cut it back to as little as 15 before Rose closed it out at 52-36.

In the final quarter, Rose led by as many as 19 several times, but Washington scored the final ten points of the game to cut it back to the final eight-point margin.

In addition to Battle's 17, Perkins picked up 12 to pace the Rampant attack.

Earl Smith, son of coach Dave Smith of Washington, poured in 28 points, including 12 of 12 at the line to lead the Pam Pack. Guilford added 12.

Rose is now 7-6 overall while Washington drops to 9-8.

Rose's girls, after a tight first period, pulled away in the second quarter, and never trailed again after that as they recorded their fifth win in 11 starts. Washington, with the loss, falls to 4-11.

The Rampettes scored the first two baskets, one each by Linda Winstead and Belinda Haselrig to take and early lead. Washington tied it up at 4-4 and 6-6, before a free throw by Tammy Sparkman and a jumper by Alma Atkinson let Rose take a 9-6 lead at the end of the period.

Rose scored the first two baskets of the second period to move out by seven, 13-6. Then, after three Washington points, Atkinson led another streak that ran it out to as much as 13, 23-10. The half ended with Rose up, 23-12.

The Rampettes continued to control the action in the third period, running the lead out to

#1 Roanoke Ups Record To 14-0

ROBERSONVILLE — Ronnie Broadie led four Roanoke High School scorers in double figures as the Redskins rolled to their 14th straight victory last night, downing Edenton, 75-57.

Roanoke's girls also won easily, 35-25.

Roanoke, ranked number one in the state by the AP in 3-A competition, boosted its Northeastern Conference record to 11-0 with the win. The Redskins shot away to a big first period lead, holding a 24-16 margin after one period. Things got no better for the Aces in the second quarter, as Roanoke held an 18-8 margin. That ran it to 42-24 at intermission.

For the rest of the game, it was basket-for-basket. Both teams pushed in 12 points in the third period and each scored 21 in the final period.

Broadie led the scoring for Roanoke with 19 points, while Mike Wilson hit 14 and Ricky Highsmith and Angelo Spruill each scored 12. Thomas White led Edenton with 15, while Frank Hardy added 12 and Demelton White had 10.

Edenton drops to 6-5 in league play and 7-9 overall with the loss.

Roanoke's girls stayed close to the top in their division, upping their record to 8-3 in the conference and 12-3 overall. Edenton fell to 6-5 in the NEC and 9-5 overall.

Roanoke inched out into an 8-5 lead after one period and increased that to 16-10 at the half as both teams equalled their first period output in the second.

Roanoke ran the lead out to 27-14 in the third period. Edenton managed a small 11-8 rally in the final period.

Baylor Stuns Longhorns, 69-59

No. 5 Texas Loses First

By The Associated Press With Abe Lemons away...the Texas Longhorns won't play.

With their coach in Oklahoma City because his brother was having surgery, the fifth-ranked Longhorns played one of their worst basketball games of the season Tuesday night.

The result was a 69-59 loss to Baylor that ended their unbeaten streak at 14 and reduced the Top Twenty to one undefeated team, Missouri.

"We're still 14-1 and there's a long way to go," said Texas assistant Coach Barry Dowd, who filled in for Lemons Tuesday night. "Baylor played well and Terry Teagle was just super."

Teagle scored 22 points, 18 in the second half when the unheralded Bears raced past the Longhorns.

Texas, second-leading rebounding team in the country, was beaten badly on the backboards, 48-28, mainly because Texas' sophomore sensation, Mike Wacker, injured his left knee in the first half and never returned.

Dowd went to his bench to try to replace Wacker but couldn't find the help he needed. The Bears then proceeded to double Texas' rebound total and outdistanced the Longhorns in the final five minutes.

"It was a great victory for the Baylor Bears and our program in general," said Baylor Coach Jim Haller. "I think this victory will again prove that our league, from top to bottom, can hold its own with any in the nation. Terry Teagle and Ozell Hall completely overshadowed LaSalle Thompson inside."

"Ozell was able to do some things without Wacker playing. It hurt me to see Wacker go out because we were very close during recruiting."

"Sure, we missed Wacker but there's no way to tell what the outcome would have been with him in there...we missed his rebounding," said Dowd. "They outrebounced us brutally, and that's one place we had been beating people."

In other games involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 12 Arkansas escaped with a 64-63 victory over Texas A&M and No. 17 North Carolina State held off Georgia Tech 49-40.

Top Twenty Darrell Walker raced downcourt and hit a 20-foot jump shot with two seconds to play, rallying Arkansas over Texas A&M.

The winning shot came after A&M's Rudy Woods sank a free

NFL Was Just A Phone Call Away For Jim Clack

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

When the 1981 NFL season began Jim Clack was quietly minding his sporting goods store in Rocky Mount. But, nearly three months and one long distance phone call later, Clack was once more calling the NFL home.

For 12 seasons — 10 with the Pittsburgh Steelers and two with the New York Giants — Clack made his living in the trenches of the NFL. But in July Clack announced his retirement. One day later he underwent surgery on both his knees.

During the next few months, Clack, a former standout basketball and football player at Rocky Mount Senior High, worked to strengthen his knees. He played basketball at the local YMCA. Occasionally, he would watch the Giants on television.

Then, in mid-November, Ernie Hughes was injured, leaving New York without an experienced center. It was not long after Hughes went down that Coach Ray Perkins put Clack on the phone.

"I was just sitting around the house," Clack said Tuesday at the Greenville Sports Club's bi-weekly luncheon. "I had just got up and was getting ready to go to work when the phone rang."

"The operator told me she had a man named Ray Perkins who wanted to talk to me but that since I had an unlisted number she couldn't give it out. I thought for a minute about not giving it to him — I knew something was up — but I did."

Something was up that

Monday morning. "He asked me if I was in shape and I told him I was," Clack said. "Then he asked me if I was in good enough shape to play a full game Sunday."

Perkins wanted Clack in New York that day, but Clack could not make it until Tuesday. "I have never been so scared," Clack said. "I had forgotten about the head slaps, the trips and the kicks. I was worried about who'd try to beat me up the next day at practice."

Clack, who went to two Super Bowls and had become used to winning in his 10 years at Pittsburgh, underwent culture shock — NFL style — when he was traded to New York three years ago.

Everything the Steelers were, the Giants were not. The Steelers had Franco Harris'

Immaculate Reception, the Giants Joe Pisarcik's Philadelphia Fumble.

The Steelers were winners, the Giants losers. That is, until Perkins arrived on the scene.

"When Perkins became coach I went and told him I wanted to be traded, that the Giants were a bunch of individuals not interested in winning. They just wanted to pick up their check every week."

"Well, Perkins told me, 'I'll get some unity into this football team,'" Clack said. "So, for the last two years we've been working toward that, but I really didn't see it."

Not, that is, until Clack returned to New York after his brief hiatus. "I'll never forget walking into that locker room that day," Clack said. "There was something different. You could feel the team had a cohesiveness it hadn't had before. You could see it in practice."

Clack cited two personnel changes that, along with the team's new-found unity, helped the Giants advance to the second round of the playoffs. One, was the addition of running back Rob Carpenter. The other was the drafting of North Carolina linebacker Lawrence Taylor.

"Being a Wake Forest graduate, I hate to say it but a North Carolina player came in and turned it around," Clack said. "Lawrence Taylor has got to be the most well-rounded athlete I've ever seen."

As for Carpenter, Clack said: "We were in a situation in New York where the offensive line had been waiting for a running back to come in and make us look good."

On a number of other topics, Clack had this to say:

"On gambling on NFL games by the public: 'I remember, a guy in Pittsburgh who came up to me one day and said he had three sons who were getting ready to go to college and asked if I had any suggestions.'"

Clack obliged the man and five years later he ran into him. The man said his first son was a dentist making $75,000 and that his second son was a doctor making $100,000.

The third son, said Clack in his best Italian accent, "My Michael, he's making $250,000 and has all the cars and houses he wants. He's an athletic engineer."

"I asked him what's an athletic engineer and he said, 'He fixes the football games, he fixes a basketball game.'"

"On why George Allen, the former Washington Redskin head coach, is not coaching in the NFL: 'George Allen is a player's coach. He's going to pay the players what they deserve and the owners don't like that. That's what it is, they've blackballed him.'"

"On fines in the NFL: 'Bruce Laird was fined $500 this year for having his socks down during a game. L.C. Greenwood gets fined every game for wearing his gold shoes. And you know those guys who throw the footballs in the stands, they pay $250 a shot.'"

Clack said the Giants had about $48,000 in fines this past season and make their players pay their own fines. The Steelers, on the other hand, pay their players' fines, Clack said.

Tigers Dump Ahoskie For First Win Of Year

WILLIAMSTON — Williamston's Tigers, after losing their first 11 outings, finally found the range last night and dumped Ahoskie, 61-52 to record their first win of the season.

Williamston's girls had little trouble in their game, winning their ninth in 12 starts, 44-29.

Williamston, which is now 1-10 in the Northeastern Conference, jumped out to a 14-9 lead in the first quarter of the boys' contest. Ahoskie rallied, however, in the second quarter, 19-14, and tied it up at 28-28 at intermission.

The Tigers inched back out during the third frame, finally claiming a 40-39 lead as the last period got underway. In that, Williamston pulled away, dumping in 21 points while holding the Cougars to 13, and it broke the losing skid of the Tigers.

Vincent Washington led Williamston with 17 points, while James Maye and Johnny Speller each had 13. Eric Eure led Ahoskie with 24 points.

Ahoskie is now 2-10 in North-eastern play and 2-11 overall.

In the girls' contest, the two battled even in the first period, which ended in an 8-8 deadlock. In the second quarter, however, Williamston pulled away, 17-10, and built up a 25-18 halftime lead.

The Lady Tigers again were matched by Ahoskie in the third period as the score climbed to 32-25. Then, in the last period, Williamston pulled away again, 12-4, to wrap up the win.

Theresa Duffy led Williamston with 12 points, while Lynn Mills added ten. No one scored in double figures for Ahoskie.

Williamston climbs to 9-2 in league play and 8-3 overall. Ahoskie is now 1-11 and 1-12, respectively.

Knights Rally To Beat Faith, 49-40

GOLDSBORO — Greenville Christian Academy rallied from a first period deficit to gain a 49-40 victory over Faith Christian Academy last night in Goldsboro.

The Knights, who raised their overall record to 9-1 with the victory, trailed at the end of the first quarter, 11-8. But they came back to outscore Faith, 20-15, in the second frame, gaining a slim 28-26 halftime lead.

In the third period, Greenville Christian again outscored Faith, 10-6, easing the lead out to 38-32. An 11-8 margin in the final period closed it out for Greenville.

"Faith did a good job, as we expected. They came out well in the first period. But our goal was just to win on the road against them. We usually have a good third quarter and we were able to get a little lead and go into our spread offense after that," Coach Dale Thatcher said.

Troy Hudson led the GCA scoring with 15 points, while John Parnell added 12 and David Hollingsworth added 10. No one scored in double figures for Faith.

The Knights are now 6-0 in league play and return to action on Friday, when the girls play host to Wilson Academy, and the boys face an alumni team.

Moncrief's Shot Defeats Lakers

By The Associated Press
Sidney Moncrief, even when guarded by the National Basketball Association's most acclaimed magician, has a few tricks of his own.

With only seconds left in the game and Los Angeles and Milwaukee tied 94-94, the Bucks guard drove the lane past a surprised Earvin "Magic" Johnson and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar to drop in the winning basket at the buzzer for a 96-94 victory Tuesday night.

"I was surprised at how open the lane was," Moncrief said. "I was going to pull up for a jump shot."

"Moncrief is a great player. He took it hard to the basket," said Lakers Coach Pat Riley. "Moncrief got by Magic very quickly."

But Johnson believes he shouldn't take all the blame for the basket that lost the game for Los Angeles.

"I was always taught to make the guy go to the middle, that's where you get help," he said. "I could have played him tougher but the help wasn't there. Everybody has to help out. He made a nice move but nobody should be able to drive down the middle."

The Lakers missed four of six free throws in the final minutes to give Milwaukee the final chance to win after Los Angeles guard Norm Nixon tied the game with two free shots with seven seconds remaining.

"Our inability to hit free throws is a concern," said Riley. "It doesn't make sense to me. We hit 78 percent on the road and only 68 percent at home."

Marques Johnson led all scorers with 32 points for the Bucks, while Moncrief added 20.

Jamaal Wilkes led the Lakers with 18 points, and Abdul-Jabbar and Johnson had 16 each.

Quinn Buckner hit two long field goals to give Milwaukee a 92-90 lead with two minutes to play. Wilkes then missed two free throws and Michael Cooper and Abdul-Jabbar both made one of two as Milwaukee maintained a 93-92 edge.

Mickey Johnson gave the Bucks a 94-92 lead with a free throw with 13 seconds left before Nixon hit two fouls shots with seven seconds on the clock.

Bullets 94, Bulls 84
Washington won its seventh straight game as Greg Ballard scored 20 points and guard John Lucas turned in a gutsy performance after being injured in an auto accident earlier in the day.

Lucas, who admitted last week that cocaine use had hampered his performance and caused him to behave erratically, scored nine points and handed out eight assists while playing with five stitches in his eyelid and seven in his knee.

NBA scoring leader George Gervin netted 36 points and reserve guard Mike Bratz keyed a fourth-quarter rally that carried San Antonio over Philadelphia.

The Spurs never led in the first half, but they came back to tie the score at 77. Bratz then hit seven of San Antonio's next nine points during a 13-4 spurt that put the Spurs ahead 90-81 with 5:40 to go.

Nets 138, Jazz 129
Buck Williams scored a career-high 29 points and Ray Williams added 27 as New Jersey jumped out of sole possession of the Atlantic Division cellar.

Ray Williams scored six points in overtime and Buck added four as the Nets controlled the extra period after Albert King hit a three-point goal at the buzzer to tie the game at 117 at the end of regulation.

Rockets 104, Pacers 94
Moses Malone scored 33 points and Houston took a quick 15-3 lead and held on to beat Indiana.

The Rockets hit 72 percent of their shots in the first quarter while taking a 29-21 lead, and the Pacers never got closer than four points thereafter.

Johnn Davis scored 23 points to lead Indiana.

Mavericks 90, Hawks 88
Jay Vincent scored 30 points and Wayne Cooper blocked three shots late in the game to preserve Dallas' fourth victory in a row, a team record.

With Dallas leading Atlanta 87-86 with 1:15 remaining, Cooper blocked two Wayne Rollins hook shots and then blocked a John Drew jumper with 17 seconds to go.

Drew led Hawks scorers with 27 points.

Profs Upset Over Sherrill's Salary

By The Associated Press
Agriculture professor John Ross at the University of Wisconsin calls it "outrageous."

Abe Chanin, a University of Arizona journalism professor, says it is "completely out of line."

Mathematics professor Wilfred Kaplan of the University of Michigan thinks it is "inevitable," though "a sad sidelight on American society."

At best, they accept it grudgingly as a fact of academic life. At worst they are infuriated.

But overall, a sampling of campus opinion shows that a reported $287,000-a-year contract University of Pittsburgh coach Jackie Sherrill signed last week to coach Texas A&M's football team is not sitting well with college professors who can only dream about such a salary.

The terms of Sherrill's six-year contract announced by the university put the coach's base pay at $95,000 a year. But he also will receive cash and other benefits from Aggie fans and alumni, and published reports have put his total compensation at around $287,000 a year.

"If that were to happen in Madison, there'd be a faculty revolt. We'd be out marching in the streets," said Ross of Wisconsin, which pays its head coach Dave McClain a $42,000 salary plus about $12,000 in fringe benefits.

Sherrill, 38, became a hot property during five years as head coach at Pitt, where his teams compiled a 50-9-1 record. The Panthers finished 11-1 each of the last three years and were strong contenders for the national championship each time. Pitt finished fourth in national rankings in 1981.

Still, even some athletic directors expressed shock at Sherrill's salary.

"I just wonder how they can do that," says Dave Strack, athletic director of the University of Arizona which pays football coach Larry Smith about $59,000. "It appears that in some areas the priorities get a little mixed up."

Coaches' salaries reflect the premium colleges place on successful athletic programs today. Some benefits are intangible — the added prestige and attention paid to a football power, increased alumni support.

But there also is serious money involved: television appearances worth an estimated $800,000 per team for regular-season games next fall, and lucrative bowl bids.

NBC, for instance, will pay $7.5 million for the right to broadcast the Rose Bowl next year, with the money to be divided among the Rose Bowl Committee, the two contending schools and their conferences. The Cotton, Sugar and Orange bowls all divide more than $1 million between the schools.

The bull market in college football coach's salaries is especially irksome to some faculty members now because colleges face tough times with the recession, student-aid cutbacks in Washington and reductions in federal research grants.

"At a time when federal aid is about to be cut, and average salaries of full professors at major public universities range from $27,090 to $39,040, to pay Coach Sherrill what is being paid raises serious questions about the way resources are being allocated," says Irving Spitzberg, general secretary of the Washington-based American Association of University Professors.

It's very possible that Sherrill makes more money than anyone in the educational field, from university presidents on down. But other football coaches are making big money.

— Chuck Fairbanks, lured to the University of Colorado in 1979 from the New England Patriots, makes an estimated $200,000 a year. He gets a $47,500 a year salary, but much more in fringe benefits including an expense allowance and his own TV show.

— University of Michigan coach Bo Schembechler gets a $60,030 salary, plus perks, including his own weekly TV show that probably brings him to well over $100,000. He was offered the Texas A&M job before Sherrill but turned it down because he had "emotional ties to Michigan."

— Oklahoma State University's Jimmy Johnson makes a $50,000 salary and another $50,000 in benefits; Vince Dooley of the University of Georgia has a $60,000 salary, and $40,000 in benefits, and the University of Arkansas' Lou Holtz has a $51,945 salary, plus benefits from TV, radio, a housing allowance and car allowance worth another $125,000.

"It is not just a Texas A&M problem," says Spitzberg. A breakdown of the salaries of full professors at 78 public land-grant universities conducted by Mike Usher and Merle Gillam of Oklahoma State University shows that even academic superstars fall well short of top football coach salaries.

The survey showed professors of medicine making anywhere from $100,000-plus, to a low of $17,344, with an average of $46,262. Top biological science professors earn up to $90,000, and the highest paid business professors make $70,000. Law professors earn up to $66,000.

Big football powers such as Penn State insist coaches are not getting rich at professors' expense, and they add that football programs more than pay their own way.

throw with eight seconds left to give the Aggies a 63-62 lead. But Woods missed his second shot and Walker sprinted to the winning goal, giving the Razorbacks their second one-point victory in four days. They had beaten Houston 67-66 last Saturday.

The Razorbacks fell behind 22-20 with 8:12 to play in the first half and did not lead again until Walker's spectacular jump shot. The Aggies led 39-32 at half-time and jumped out to a 49-34 advantage after six minutes of the second half before Arkansas rallied behind Walker, who led all scorers with 23 points.

North Carolina State built an early lead behind the outside shooting of Dereck Whittenburg and held off stubborn Georgia Tech. Whittenburg finished with 20 points, while forward Thurl Bailey added 12.

Coach Jim Valvano's Wolfpack used its rebounding and Whittenburg's shooting in an attempt to make sure it didn't fall victim to Georgia Tech's slow-paced play and tightly-packed zone defense.

Lee Goza led Georgia Tech with 14 points.

Valvano, whose club was upset last week in a slow-tempo game against Duke, decided to let Whittenburg fire away at the Yellow Jackets.

"Yes, we wanted to send Whittenburg to the basket," Valvano said. "He's an acrobatic athlete and he was effective."

"Our program is still struggling," said Georgia Tech Coach Bobby Cremins. "The guys don't have the confidence they need to be big winners in this league, but we're improving. I guess you have to crawl before you walk and tonight was an example of that."

Unranked Teams

Elsewhere, Colgate forward Eric Jones hit a 17-foot jumper with seven seconds left to give the Red Raiders a 25-24 victory over Princeton in a slowdown game. Norm Bailey scored 13 points and Mike McKay and Cory Thompson each had 12 as Connecticut stopped Yale 63-57 and Bill Calhoun scored 18 points and Mike Cooper added 15 to lead Fordham to a 73-56 victory over Manhattan.

Also, John Bagley hit an 18-foot jump shot with eight seconds to play to give Boston College a 46-44 victory over Rhode Island. Doug Arnold scored 30 points and teammate Darrell Browder added 23 to pace Texas Christian to an 85-82 upset of Houston. Brett Brown came off the bench and scored a career-high 21 points while directing Boston University over Northeastern 82-64 and Nevada Reno's Billy Allen scored 21 points and handed out four assists to lead the Wolf Pack to a 73-71 victory over Idaho State.

Bath Boys, Girls Down Bear Grass

BEAR GRASS — Bath High School swept a pair of Tobacco Belt Conference games from hosting Bear Grass last night. The boys took their game, 62-48, while the girls came away with a 28-24 victory.

In the boys' game, Bath ran out to an 18-10 lead in the first period. They came back with a 12-8 margin in the second period to take a 30-18 halftime lead.

In the third period, Bear Grass rallied, 8-5, to trim the lead to 35-26, but a 27-22 final quarter edge for the Pirates ended the Bear hopes.

Kevin Cutler led Bath with 20 points, while Roger Woolard had 16 and Randy Bonner added 10. Ray Biggs had 18 to lead Bear Grass.

In the girls' contest, Bear Grass took a 6-3 lead after one period, but couldn't hold to it. Bath came back to outscore the Lady Bears, 13-2, for a 16-8 halftime lead. Bath then outhit Bear Grass, 8-6, in the third period for a 24-14 lead, and then withstood a 10-4 comeback by the Bears to take the win.

Barbara Setchel led Bath with 12 points, while Angie Mizelle paced Bear Grass with 18.

The Bears are now 2-10 in league play and 2-11 overall, while the girls drop to 7-5 and 8-5, respectively. Bath's boys are 6-5 and the girls are 7-4, both in conference and overall play.

The Bears host Cape Hatteras on Friday.

John, Lansford Among 98 Seeking Arbitration

NEW YORK (AP) — Some of baseball's biggest names, including New York Yankee pitcher Tommy John and American League batting champion Carney Lansford, are among nearly 100 major leaguers seeking salary arbitration.

In taking their cases to an impartial arbitrator, players hope to get more money than team owners are willing to give. But the players also face possible retaliation, said Marvin Miller, executive director of the Major League Players Association.

"The bullying never stops," Miller said Tuesday when he announced this year's list of disgruntled players. "Some players don't know their rights. Some are wary and will swallow a lot. I have to tell them that they have to consider the retaliation an owner can take."

Miller said an owner can retaliate by sending a young player to the minor leagues, or in the case of veteran pitcher Ken Holtzman, "an established player...can be buried in the bullpen."

John, the Yankees' winningest pitcher over the last three years, reportedly wants more than the $475,000 offered for 1982.

Lansford, who batted .336 for Boston last season, filed for arbitration despite being offered a "tremendous increase" in his salary, said Red Sox owner Haywood Sullivan.

Others who filed for salary hearings by the midnight Monday deadline include Los Angeles outfielder Pedro Guerrero, Detroit pitcher Jack Morris, outfielder Paul Molitor of Milwaukee, infielders Ken Oberkfell and Tom Herr of St. Louis, and outfielders Dwayne Murphy and Rickey Henderson of Oakland.

Players may negotiate with their teams right up until an arbitration ruling is rendered, and most cases never reach formal hearings: Last season, only 24 of 106 cases actually went before an arbitrator.

This year's list of 103 players who filed by the midnight Monday deadline dropped to 98 by late Tuesday with the announced signings of Cincinnati's Mike LaCoss, Rick Sutcliffe of Cleveland and Jim Clancy, Jerry Garvin and Al Woods of Toronto.

In arbitration hearings, the player and team each submits a single salary figure and arguments supporting it. The arbitrator then picks one figure or the other.

Final figures must be exchanged by Thursday, with hearings scheduled for Feb. 1-20 in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles.

The number of players seeking arbitration this year is the second-highest total since the process began.

"I think through the years, as players become more familiar with the arbitration mechanism, there is a greater inclination to use it," said Miller.

Players who have come away from hearings as big winners include outfielder Steve Kemp and relief pitcher Bruce Sutter. Kemp won rulings twice, getting $210,000 from the Detroit Tigers in 1980 and $600,000 in 1981.

as many as 16, 35-19, on a jumper by Karen Green with 1:07 left in the quarter. Rose led, 37-21, at the end of the frame.

The Rampette lead reached its acme in the early seconds of the final frame, as Frances Barnhill scored off a fast break to make it 39-21, an 18-point lead.

After that, Washington began to inch back, closing the gap to as little as four before Atkinson scored the final five points for Rose to allow the Rampettes to claim the win.

Atkinson finished with 17 points for Rose, while Jeanne Spencer and Robin McLean each had 18 and Jeanne Trueblood hit ten was Washington.

"We wanted to play everybody," coach Dennis Gibson said. "That explains the final period and Washington's comeback. We're still lacking in intensity on defense. We're trying to prepare a little for Fike (tonight's opponent). They have a smart club, and it won't be this easy."

"But it's good to break the ice on the road; this was our first road win. Being on the road the rest of the week, it gives us a chance to get something started."

Gibson noted that most of the points came from the backcourt. "We need to be getting more from our inside people. We need to develop more there."

Rose returns to action tonight traveling to Wilson to face Fike High School in a Big East contest.

Set Up An IRA At Planters And You Could Be Set For Life.

An Individual Retirement Account at Planters National Bank could be the financial opportunity of a lifetime. It lets you build an impressive fund for retirement. And it's an effective way to reduce your taxable income throughout your working years.

Write $4000 Right Off Your 1982 Taxable Income.

The money you deposit can be deducted right off the top of your taxable income. Individuals can contribute and write off up to $2000 a year. For working couples, the limit is $4000. And couples with a single income may contribute $2250 annually. Whatever your tax bracket, that adds up to a substantial tax savings over the course of your working life.

24	Employee business expenses (attach Form 2106)	24
25	Payments to an IRA (enter code from page 10)	25	$4000 00
26	Payments to a Keogh (H.R. 10) retirement plan	26
27	Interest penalty on early withdrawal of savings	27
28	Alimony paid	28

Make Yourself A Millionaire By The Time You Retire.

Deposits to your IRA at Planters do more than reduce your tax burden right now. They earn daily compounded interest at Money Market rates. And, believe it or not, that can give you a retirement fund of more than a million dollars.

You can start with an initial deposit as small as $100. And make even smaller periodic deposits, if you choose.

For example, if you started investing $1200 a year ($100 each month) in an IRA at age 25, your account balance at age 65 would be $1,278,037. With that much money, you could withdraw $13,576 a month forever and never touch your million. (These figures are based on an estimated rate of 12%, compounded daily. This rate cannot be guaranteed.)

Everyone Is Eligible.

Even if you're currently enrolled in a profit-sharing or pension plan, you can set up an Individual Retirement Account at Planters. To find out how an IRA can improve your financial outlook, visit us at Planters National Bank. We have IRA Counselors at every office ready to prepare a personal IRA analysis just for you. They'll show you that when it comes to IRAs, we're out to earn your interest.

To The Editor:

I believe that most ECU football fans have long had a dream that the Pirate program would continue to grow and progress and someday be truly big time. That dream included playing major schools on a home and home basis, being on TV regularly, winning, and going to bowl games. Due to recent NCAA legislation and the direction major college football is heading, I do not believe this dream can come true.

Even if ECU is judged to be in the upper division of college football (I-A) for now, it will be required to play at least seven I-A opponents each season. When a realistic future eleven game schedule is considered, the most likely result would be four home games and seven away games. Of the four home games, three would be against I-AA teams and one against I-A competition. The road games would include six against major schools and one against I-AA competition.

Realistically, this is the best schedule we could hope for. Realistically, this schedule is not going to enthruse Ficklen Stadium fans, and more importantly, this schedule may make winning almost impossible. Obviously, without winning records, television exposure and bowl appearances would be impossible.

With the above in minds, I believe that ECU should immediately move toward competing at the I-AA level (in football). I am convinced that East Carolina can be successful against the ninety some schools in this division.

Division I-AA will have television exposure for the better teams during the season. Also, the best teams advance to the I-AA playoffs which are covered on national television. I believe ECU could be national championship material in this division and also enjoy the substantial TV revenue that goes with the territory. In Division I-AA, our eleven game schedule could easily include six and maybe seven home games. With a solid winning record, the attendance at Ficklen could exceed present levels.

When the realities of I-A versus I-AA competition are considered, there should be no doubt which course is best for East Carolina. The I-A route means away games, losing, and drowning in a sea of red ink. The I-AA course permits home games, winning, TV exposure, and financial soundness.

EDENTON — Trinity Christian School rolled to a 51-36 victory over Immanuel Christian School of Edenton last night.

'Everything But Truth' Is Charged

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Gen. William Westmoreland, criticizing a CBS television report on Vietnam as "everything but the truth," is demanding that reporter Mike Wallace apologize to the American people.

Westmoreland, former commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam, made his charges in response to "CBS Reports — The Uncounted Enemy," which was broadcast Saturday.

Westmoreland likened the documentary to the movie "Absence of Malice," in which an innocent man is accused in a news story.

"It was all there, the arrogance, the color, the drama, the contrived plot, the close shots, everything but the truth," the general charged Tuesday.

"In the interests of accuracy," Westmoreland added, "I call upon Mike Wallace to apologize to the American people for the cruel hoax he and his associates tried to perpetrate." He said he has made no decision about whether to take legal action.

Wallace, who is out of the country, could not be reached immediately for comment.

Tuesday night, the CBS Evening News broadcast a report on Westmoreland's statements and concluded: "CBS News will give further study to the allegations made at the news conference."

The dispute centers on charges from former CIA official Sam Adams that military officials in Saigon eliminated whole segments of the communist forces from their estimates, thus reporting fewer enemy soldiers than actually existed.

Responding to CBS' allegation that alterations in these estimates amounted to a conspiracy, Westmoreland said: "There was no conspiracy — not even a hint of a conspiracy — to deceive anybody."

He charged that Wallace "ambushed" him by inviting him to talk about the broad topic of intelligence and then asking questions about specific instances in Vietnam without giving him a chance to refresh his memory.

Because of faulty memory, Westmoreland said, he gave Wallace several "imprecise" answers, which he sought to correct later through a letter sent to the reporter. But he charged that the corrections were not included in the CBS broadcast.

Westmoreland told a news conference that he had tried to prevent political workers and poorly armed irregulars from being added to the estimates for full-time soldiers in Vietnam.

That would have been deceptive, making the enemy seem stronger than they were, he said.

George Carver of the CIA explained that there had been many disagreements about the figures, but both he and Gen. Daniel Graham denied that there had been any conspiracy. Graham was Westmoreland's chief of intelligence.

Former ambassador Ellsworth Bunker also spoke, reporting that he kept President Lyndon B. Johnson informed of the estimates of enemy strength.

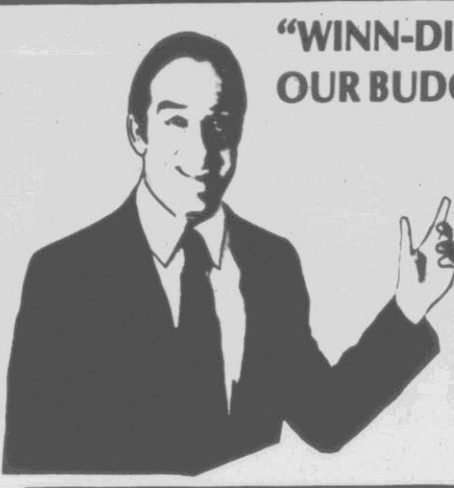

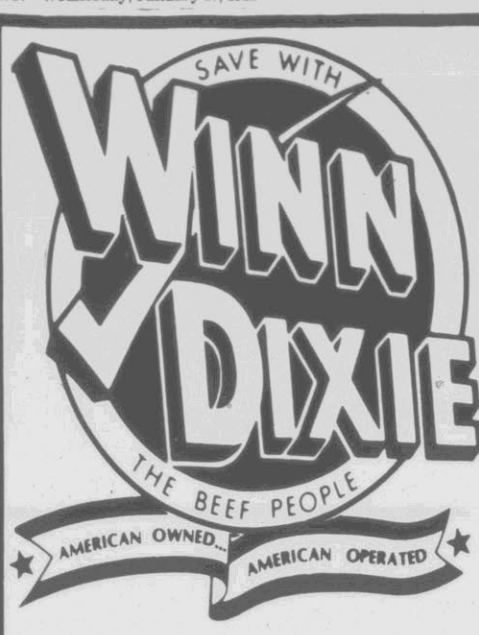

The CBS broadcast also reported that prior to the 1968 Tet offensive some 25,000 North Vietnamese came south monthly, but only 8,000 were reported by military intelligence.

That, is incorrect, said Westmoreland. He said the flow of soldiers south along the Ho Chi Minh Trail only reached 20,000 in one month.

Says Consumer Was Hurt Most

WASHINGTON (AP) — Budget cuts and industry deregulation have harmed U.S. consumers instead of helping them, says a coalition of consumer groups in a report on the Reagan administration's first year.

"Consumers are now forced to live with their fingers crossed, hoping to avoid injury, death and financial hardship," said Sandra L. Willett, executive vice president of the National Consumers League.

Old Manuscripts Shed Light On Medicine In Early 19th Century

ECU News Bureau
If you don't really appreciate the benefits from modern medicine, try an early 19th century eastern North Carolina "Receipt to Cure the Quinsy" next time your throat is sore.

The "receipt" is one of several items related to the development of medicine in this region on display in the Manuscript Collection of East Carolina University's Joyner Library.

It calls for boiling and blending "Chamberly" (chamber lye or urine), sage, burnt alum, camphor, butter, honey, black pepper, vinegar and other ingredients. The sufferer is directed to "make a sirup of the same and gargel your Throat with it."

This complex concoction was found among the papers of the Getsinger family of Martin County.

The ECU display, entitled, "Good for What Ails You: Medical Trends in North Carolina," includes an early advertisement for an easier, and probably more palatable, remedy — Efedron Hart Nasal Jelly.

"Convenient, efficient, satisfactory," the colorful ad boasts, recommending the product "for colds, hay fever, sinus infections, nasopharyngitis and influenza."

Other items include correspondence, antebellum manuscripts, photographs and miscellaneous printed material that shed glimmers of light on the nature of the medical profession in North Carolina from before the Civil War to the present.

A 1918 letter of Thurman Moore discusses the harsh effects of the influenza epidemic in eastern North Carolina — a horrifying phenomenon which took many lives. Moore urged his brother to exercise extreme caution against infection:

"Keep your bowels open, and gargle your throat with Listerine, and wash your mouth with Listerine, and clean your nostrils with salt water or Listerine."

The correspondence on display also includes letters from W.H. Osborn to his wife in Oxford. Osborn operated North Carolina's Keeley Institute in Greensboro, an institution designed "For the Treatment of the Liquor, Opium, Chloral, and Cocaine Habits and Nerve Exhaustion."

Indeed, Keeley must have believed in cures for drug and alcohol addiction. Besides founder of the Keeley Institute, he was (as Osborn's letterhead shows) president of a manufacturing firm which produced "Gold Cures" for "drunkenness" and other excesses.

Several items in the display relate to the physicians of Pitt County. The daybook of Dr. Richard Williams chronicles his medical practices during the 1840s and 1850s. Along with memoranda of his practice, which reveal that patients were charged sums ranging from 25 cents to a dollar or two for consultations and medicines, the Williams daybook includes notes of business transactions and lists of the doctor's slaves.

Other documents concern Charles O'Hagan Laughinghouse and his attempts during the early 1900s to arouse interest in a hospital for Pitt County. Then, as now, citizens seemed reluctant to have their taxes raised, for whatever worthy purpose. A 1954 pamphlet features a photograph of Greenville physician Karl Busbee Pace, that year's winner of the American Medical Association's General Practitioner of the Year Award.

Most recent items, including newspapers and photographs, reflect aspects of ECU's successful struggle to institute a four-year medical school.

The display will be available for viewing each weekday from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. through February.

Flood Study To Be Discussed

Burney L. Tucker, chairman of the Pitt County Board of Commissioners said today that the Federal Emergency Management Agency has completed a detailed study of flood areas in the county, and announced that a public meeting will be held on the study February 3, at 9 a.m. at the county office building.

The study, Tucker explained, was developed as part of the county's involvement in the National Flood Insurance Program.

Tucker quoted Gleen C. Woodard, director of FEMA's Atlanta Regional Insurance and Mitigation Division office as saying the purpose of the study is to examine and evaluate flood hazard areas which are developed or which are likely to be developed, and to determine flood elevations for those areas.

The flood elevations will be used by the county to carry out flood plain management objectives of the National Flood Insurance Program, and as the basis for determining the appropriate flood insurance premium rates for new buildings and their contents, as well as rates for additional insurance on existing structures.

An FEMA staff member will discuss the results of the flood insurance study and outline specific actions which need to be taken in order to continue eligibility in the NFIP, at the public meeting.

Tucker urged property owners and others interested in the flood insurance program to attend the meeting.

Retire Rich.

Now, more people than ever before can retire with a fortune. And they can do it without investing a fortune.

With the new tax laws, now even people who have a retirement plan where they work can have one where they bank.

Then, too, you can invest a lot more — up to $2,000 a year of your salary or wages.

What's more, with our IRA you get a two-way tax break.

Every year, all contributions to your IRA are tax-deductible.

Later, even though you pay taxes when you retire and start withdrawing from your IRA, you'll probably be in a much lower tax bracket.

So take a look at the chart. Then come see us and let's talk over your particular situation.

Whatever it is, we'll do all we can to help out. After all, at NCNB we'd like to see everyone all over the neighborhood retire rich.

Student Aid Fund Set Up

ECU News Bureau
Forty-seven retired faculty and administrators of East Carolina University have contributed a total of $4,025 to the newly-established ECU Retirees' Student Emergency Aid Fund.

The fund, begun in honor of East Carolina's 75th anniversary, is designed to support emergency loans to undergraduate students at ECU, according to Dr. Richard Todd, professor emeritus of history and chairman of the fund project.

"Our goal is $7,500 by March 8, the 75th anniversary of East Carolina's founding," he said.

Other retirees serving on the fund committee are Lawrence Brewster (history), Elizabeth Drake (music), James Fleming and Henry Wanderman (foreign languages and literatures), John Horne (admissions), Nell Stallings (physical education), Mildred Southwick and Lee Williams (library services) and Louise Williams (mathematics).

All have remained residents of Greenville since their retirement.

Todd said that retirees now residing in 14 states as far away as California and Texas as well as in Switzerland and Japan have been appraised of the fund by letter.

"Contributions so far have ranged from $25 to $500," he said. "We are asking each retiree to consider a gift of $75 — one dollar for each year of East Carolina's existence."

The fund has been officially established with the ECU foundation and will remain open-ended as gifts are added by future retirees or by friends of deceased retirees as memorials. Earnings of the fund will be used as emergency aid at the discretion of the director of ECU's Student Financial Aid Office.

Wednesday Nights Tough For CBS

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — CBS, comfortably moving toward its third straight year as the No. 1 network, subscribes to the "Big Bang" theory, concentrating its programming strength on certain nights. There's "Dallas" on Fridays, "60 Minutes" on Saturdays and, so far, a series of dud on Wednesday nights.

It's prestigious to be top-rated, but the reality is that advertisers buy programs, not networks, and Wednesdays are not as lucrative for CBS.

Through mid-January, "Dallas" was the top-rated show and "60 Minutes" No. 2, but none of this programming magic has touched tonight's CBS schedule.

At the beginning of the 1981-82 TV season, CBS' Wednesday night lineup included "Mr. Merlin," a new show, and "WKRP in Cincinnati." The rest of the night had a movie for the first two months, since the writers' strike had delayed production on "Nurse" and "Shannon," the scheduled 9 and 10 p.m. EST shows.

When CBS filled with Kenny Rogers' "Coward of the County," it finished first for the night. But, more often, the replacement movies were stiff and CBS settled for third behind ABC's programs that included "Fall Guy" and "Dynasty" and NBC's "Real People," "Facts of Life," "Love, Sidney," and "Quincy."

CBS already had movie nights on Tuesdays and Saturdays and, once the writers reached a contract agreement with the production studios, the network was eager to go with its original game plan of "Nurse" at 9 and "Shannon" at 10.

Programmers and their original schedules are like baseball managers in spring training. Every team and show has the look of a winner.

"The backbone of the CBS schedule is our series," said Bud Grant, president of CBS Entertainment.

"Our strategy is that we generally use movies more defensively against ABC's series," said Sheppard.

"Movies tend to play toward younger audiences and our series schedule is more adult-oriented."

But then when "Nurse" and "Shannon" came on board, CBS found these shows were hardly playing for any audience.

"Shannon," with Kevin Dobson, was not well received. It was placed on hiatus after just three shows and is ranked 80th of the 87 regular shows listed by the A.C. Nielsen Co. for this season.

"Nurse" wasn't faring that much better and it was yanked from CBS' Wednesday night intensive care unit in the hopes of recuperating on Thursday nights. It has made some inroads into NBC's "Hill Street Blues," still the top-rated program in that hour.

Meanwhile, back in the family viewing hour on Wednesday nights, "Mr. Merlin" (No. 46 in the ratings in mid-January) was not working any magic and "WKRP" (No. 53) was far from a hit. So earlier this month, "Merlin" disappeared from Wednesdays and reappeared on Mondays, paired with "Private Benjamin," a show that had taken a more adolescent turn from the movie of the same name that was, ultimately, about the dignity of women.

"CBS and Warner Bros. (producers of 'Private Benjamin') were not happy with the direction of 'Private Benjamin,'" said Grant. "We changed the creative talent and decided to match it with 'Mr. Merlin.' It's a better combination."

As part of the switch, Grant moved what he called "the more sophisticated" "Two of Us" to Wednesdays, linking it with "WKRP in Cincinnati." In the first week of the change, Jan. 13, "Two of Us" suffered one of its poorest ratings of the season.

But that was to be expected on Wednesday, the land mine night in CBS' Big Bang schedule.

Attenborough Fighting On Opposition's Terms

By KENNETH CLARK
UPI TV Reporter
NEW YORK (UPI) — David Attenborough's timing in bringing out his exquisite PBS series "Life On Earth" just as American fundamentalists are in the process of waging their periodic brouhaha over evolution may not have been the best, but he came out fighting — and in their own terms.

"Blasphemy," he said last week following the debut of his 13-part series. "Jolly well nearly a blasphemy!"

Fundamentalists, who are fond of referring to Charles Darwin's theories of natural selection as "devil-ution," are in court in several states demanding that "creationism" be taught in the classroom as an alternative.

"Life On Earth" is all about evolution — 3.5 billion years of it.

Those who insist that the Genesis account of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden is the only valid explanation of the world are not going to like it. Not liking it will be difficult because what the former program director for the BBC has created is sheer beauty.

Attenborough, who resigned his prestigious BBC post to make "Life on Earth" because he feared someone would beat him to it, took his cameras all over the globe, tracing the development of bird and animal species and turning the whole thing into a visual symphony.

He was bewildered at the hostility with which Americans who take their Bible literally greet the whole evolutionary premise.

"Here you have a story," he said, "a history of infinite grandeur and splendor and awe. You can't conceive anything more magnificent and profoundly stirring — 3,500 million years of history with animals and wonderful beauty proliferating in myriad forms."

"Why anybody should say that this is a barrier to religious belief absolutely baffles me... I actually have letters in England from clergymen — from bishops — saying, 'Thank you for the most moving demonstration of the reality of God's creation we have yet seen on television.'"

If Attenborough's 1.3 million-mile trip in the footsteps of Darwin rankles American fundamentalists, their doctrine is equally rankling to him.

"What I find a barrier to religious belief," he said, "is the requirement that I should believe that there was an old man in a gray beard sitting on a cloud who was leaning down and making a model of man out of clay... and this little man says, 'I'm lonely,' so God says, 'Lie down and I'll take a rib from your side,' and he makes it into a little woman — and that's the end of creation, the beginning."

"Now, if I am required to believe that is literally true, then I find that jolly well nearly a blasphemy!"

Attenborough is a scientist and a self-proclaimed agnostic, but neither scientific method nor refusal either to confirm or deny the existence of God impedes his own sense of awe and wonder at the world.

"I do not believe that everything in the world and the universe can be measured with a thermometer and a tape measure," he said. "When I look at another creature that has life, when I sit and listen to Mozart, when I sit on the edge of the Grand Canyon, I know that there are other things which science can't measure."

"Exactly what they are, I don't know. I have intimations — but I don't believe it's an old man with a gray beard..."

"Life On Earth" — first as a book, then as a runaway television success in England — found its own Genesis in Attenborough's mind when the BBC produced Sir Kenneth Clark's monumental "Civilisation" a few years ago.

If Kenneth Clark could make a "Wow" out of the Mona Lisa — well, the Mona Lisa doesn't get out of her frame, but birds of paradise do," he said.

Merit Taste Unbeaten!

MERIT low tar/good taste combination continues as proven winner over leading higher tar brands.

One low tar cigarette continues to challenge higher tar smoking—and win.

Latest research offers new evidence confirming MERIT as the proven taste alternative to higher tar smoking.

Higher Tars Meet Taste Match.

In impartial new tests where brand identity was concealed, the overwhelming majority of smokers reported MERIT taste equal to—or better than—leading higher tar brands.

Moreover, when tar levels were revealed, 2 out of 3 chose the MERIT combination of low tar and good taste.

Taste Smokers Turning To MERIT.

In a second part of the same study, smokers confirm that MERIT taste is a major factor in completing their successful switch from higher tar brands.

Confirmed: 9 out of 10 former higher tar smokers report MERIT is an easy switch, that they didn't give up taste in switching, and that MERIT is the best-tasting low tar they've ever tried.

Year after year, in study after study, MERIT remains unbeaten. The proven taste alternative to higher tar smoking—is MERIT.

'Ghost-Written' Term Papers A Thriving Business

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sam Fitch, a University of Colorado political science teacher, decided a term paper was worth an A-minus. He changed his mind when he read a virtually identical term paper from another student.

Fitch investigated and found that both students had bought the paper on a Latin American solidarity movement from Pacific Research, a Seattle-based company that ran advertisements in campus newspapers and offered "a solution at last to students' term-paper problems."

The company advertised a 336-page catalog of 10,000 research papers and also offered to do "research to order" on topics suggested by customers.

Academic officials have condemned commercialized ghost-writing of papers since entrepreneurs more than a decade ago first hired staffs to write research papers on thousands of subjects and then sold them to students across the nation.

Until then, fraternity house files could help some students plagiarize term papers and some off-campus merchants sold them, but

Pacific Research reported annual sales of $300,000 worth of research materials, Postal Inspector James A. Harbin said. Sales from the catalog were at $3 per page and customized papers went for between $8 and $10 per page.

The company was charged by the Postal Service with using the mail for making money through misrepresentation, and in an out-of-court settlement agreed to tell colleges the names of all students who have bought their products.

Leading efforts to end the market in term papers is Thomas Ziebarth, a Postal Service consumer-protection attorney who formerly taught evening classes at American University in Washington.

"Term papers were part of my teaching responsibility. It's a very valuable learning experience, but the callous, cynical buying of a term paper doesn't help anyone except the one getting the money. It is unfortunate that cheating can so easily be applied to term papers," Ziebarth said.

The landmark court precedent in this field was a 1973 ruling by the U.S. Court of Appeals in Boston. Overruling a lower court, it said four term paper companies violated a law making it illegal to "obtain money ... through the mail by means of false representation."

Previously, this law had been used only against mail-order schemes in which the seller misled the buyer, such as by advertising lotions that would "cure" baldness or that touted worthless diet pills.

But the court held that when a third person, such as a college professor, is misled, that is also using the mails to misrepresent.

Using this precedent, Ziebarth has won decisions or obtained what he called "favorable settlements" against more than a dozen other companies.

Since then, term-paper companies have made it more difficult for the Postal Service to bring the cases by being less blatant in their advertising, Ziebarth said.

"Some used to say, 'Let us know what grade you get.' They now are in the same business but they adopt a head-in-the-sand approach and don't say they are selling term papers, even though they know very well what the student wants."

"They use disclaimers like 'For research purposes only.' When we go before the judge, we have to show that the company knows what purpose it will be used for," he said.

Ziebarth said the Postal Service has most term paper cases decided by judges.

The last three cases have resulted in out-of-court settlements. Pacific Research agreed to furnish to any requesting college or faculty member the names of all students from that institution who have ordered their products. It also agreed to put into its catalog, order forms and ads a warning that any student who buys a paper from the company and turns it in as his own work may be breaking the law.

This sort of settlement also ended other recent Postal Service cases, making it easier for universities to catch students who turn in term papers they have bought instead of writing themselves. Ziebarth said this is "tossing the ball into the academic court. If the colleges choose to use the tools they have, they should be able to do something against the cheats in their midst."

Since the Pacific Research settlement last year, the University of Minnesota, University of Oregon, Marquette University and dozens of other schools have asked for and received the list of students ordering papers from the Pacific Research, Harbin said.

"For those schools at least, our approach appears to be working," Ziebarth said.

The two students in Fitch's political science class had been seniors about to graduate, but each was suspended for two years. They may apply for reinstatement after the suspension is over, but their transcripts now read "suspended for academic dishonesty."

Fitch said catching the two was "very much of a fluke. The company obviously didn't intend for two students in the same class to use the same paper. Policing of academic honesty usually is very difficult."

Cheetahs Given Security In Zoo

By JULI CRAGG ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Thousands of miles from the African veldts where they face extinction, cheetahs are thriving — and more importantly, breeding.

In one of the quieter corners of the St. Louis Zoo, cheetahs sun, romp and — most importantly — breed oblivious to the crowds that line the grassy enclosure to catch a glimpse of the world's fastest land mammal.

Although they are extinct in Asia and disappearing from Africa, three litters have been born since 1978 at the zoo's Cheetah Survival Center. Curator Charles Hoessle says with confidence: "We've been able to repeat it when we want to."

Hoessle says the St. Louis Zoo has joined with others around the world in concentrating on breeding endangered species. To house the cheetahs, the zoo gave away its herd of American buffaloes in 1973 and used the space for the survival center.

"That was an animal that had been saved," Hoessle says of the buffaloes.

The zoo had four older animals, but soon bought younger cats from Lion Country in California and from the Arizona Ranch of actress Amanda Blake, who raises cheetahs as a hobby.

Hoessle said Miss Blake's husband Frank Gilbert taught the St. Louis Zoo most of what it knows about keeping cheetahs content.

Roger Birkle, who oversees the center, says the key to raising the tawny, black-spotted felines is to separate them from the intimidating presence of other big cats. Although the cheetahs can see rhinos and elephants from their rocky heights, they are far from the lions and tigers living in the zoo's Big Cat Country.

Birkle says you have to vary their surroundings — and mates. Cheetahs are not monogamous, he says. They seem to form a brother-sister bond if left too long with the same mate.

The most recent litter was born in March. The five lively cubs greet visitors with hisses or bird-like chirps. Adults sometimes make the tweeting noise also.

For privacy, the cheetahs at the center turn to heated dens made from pipes buried in the ground. Closed-circuit television cameras permit viewing without disturbing.

Outside the dens, the cheetahs hone their retractable claws on trees and survey the horizon from atop large rocks and mounds.

"They seem to like to spot their prey from long distances," says Birkle.

For exercise, Birkle says the cheetahs often chase the miniature trains that carry visitors around the zoo. With cheetahs attaining speeds of 60 miles per hour, the race is no contest.

Hoessle says cheetahs have been kept in captivity since the time of the Pharaohs, who used them like falcons for hunting.

"You can walk one on a leash," Hoessle says of the cats, which are less aggressive than other members of the cat family. Despite the allure of the cheetahs' glowing eyes and soft furry coat, the zoo makes sure they maintain their distance from humans.

"We don't go close to them," says Birkle. "We don't handle them. We want them to remain as natural as possible."

Hoessle says the zoo's first litter is just now reaching maturity, and will be used in breeding projects at other zoos. He says moving the animals around prevents inbreeding.

"Our cooperative efforts are ensuring the survival of cheetahs in U.S. zoos," says Hoessle. "As long as there's a demand for them, we'll keep producing them."

'Demanding' To Pay Tax

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Mikele Sikes is putting her money where her mouth is; she's demanding that she pay more taxes.

The 37-year-old accountant and office manager says her entire real estate tax bill, which had been running to $32 a month, has been erased by Florida's homestead tax exemption.

"I haven't had to pay property taxes in two years. It's just not fair. Other people have to pay taxes, why shouldn't I?" Mrs. Sikes asked.

"I'm sure it's not only me. In all those 45,000 homes I'm sure there are a few Christians who have been taught not to steal. I feel like that's what I'm doing," she said.

Robert Mallard, the city property appraiser, said Mrs. Sikes is one of 45,000 homeowners who will be dropped from the tax rolls in Jacksonville because the homestead exemption was raised from $5,000 to $25,000.

He said in 16 years as appraiser, he has heard a lot of people joke about not paying enough taxes but never heard anyone who was serious about it.

But, not to be caught off guard, the taxman said there is a way Mrs. Sikes can pay: "All she has to do is not sign the exemption and she'll have to pay. I'll guarantee you."

China Whittles Away At Its Bloated Bureaucracy

By PHIL BROWN
Associated Press Writer
PEKING (AP) — Chinese leaders have begun trimming this country's bloated, bickering bureaucracy. The first targets are elderly officials, but the ax is expected to fall next on the corrupt and the dogmatic leftists within the giant government structure.

Premier Zhao Ziyang announced last month the bureaucracy would be cut back sharply and quickly to make it more effective.

At the top of the communist government's bureaucratic mountain are about 1,000 ministers and vice ministers, or "too many mothers-in-law," as one official told the National People's Congress last month.

In recent weeks, the official press has reported prominently the retirements of 13 elderly vice ministers — six in the Coal Ministry and seven in the ministry that oversees the aircraft industry — to make way for younger officials.

After the elderly, Western analysts say, the efficiency drive will cut down corrupt officials and those who rose to high positions under the patronage of ultra-leftists during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, a period of purges and factional fighting when the accent was on political loyalty rather than professional skill.

The whole weeding-out process could involve thousands in the central bureaucracy alone, said the analysts, who declined to be named.

The current issue of the Communist Party theoretical journal Red Flag says some "perplexed" people have expressed anxiety that the Cultural Revolution's ultra-leftist "Gang of Four" might make a comeback. The Gang, headed by Jiang Qing, widow of former Chairman Mao Tse-tung, are all in jail on charges of framing and persecuting thousands of po-

Among those who were purged during the Cultural Revolution was Deng Xiaoping, who is now a Communist Party vice chairman and China's most powerful figure. Premier Zhao, 61, is a protege of the 78-year-old Deng.

Red Flag said Gang followers who have risen to high positions "must be resolutely removed."

The journal said they would be dealt with according to the seriousness of their mistakes, with the aim "to educate and reform them, rather than bludgeon them to death at one blow."

"In this way, we will unite the majority among them and isolate the minority of diehards," it said.

China's new "pragmatic" leadership says it wants to build a bureaucracy of relatively young, intellectual and professionally capable loyalists.

It complains that in the existing administrative structure, as a result of overlapping jobs and superfluous high positions, problems are kicked back and forth endlessly, delaying action.

Asked what might happen to those dropped from the bureaucracy, Chinese officials said only that a socialist country would look after everybody, and they noted that those leaving government work in Western countries often find jobs in industry or education.

To deal with the elderly, retirement is the obvious answer. Reports on the recently retired vice ministers stressed the privileges they will retain in their new role as advisers — continued access to automobiles and good housing, as well as to important documents.

The 13 publicized retirements had been in the works for some time, the Western analysts said.

They described this initial phase as the "easy" part of the reform, saying the process could grow more difficult when bureaucrats facing the ax start appealing for protection to associates higher up. To minimize this, the cutback was begun at the top, they said.

Ministries dealing with the economy are likely to receive the most attention, the analysts said, because the leadership's political success or failure is tied to economic gains.

In his efforts to modernize the Chinese economy and break away from the rigidly ideological past, Deng instituted a range of economic incentives for individual workers and enterprises. But to strengthen consensus for the bureaucratic reforms, the analysts said, Deng now has compromised with conservatives who thought the incentives were being carried too far, breeding a generation of workers interested only in money and the good life and lacking proper communist political ideals.

The bonuses and other incentives are still being used, but the official press has stressed the importance of ideological training and revived a good deal from "Mao Tse-tung thought" that fits in with current goals of modernization.

A Communist Party resolution adopted last year criticized Mao for "leftist" mistakes in his later years that caused political divisions.

To boost the new reforms, the leadership also is publishing selected works of the late President Liu Shao-chi, known for his emphasis on a pragmatic working style for the party.

Liu, accused during the Cultural Revolution of being a "capitalist roader" for opposing some of Mao's policies, has been exonerated posthumously and praised. He died in disgrace in 1969.

Decides Against Running Again

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The Republican governor of Minnesota, who used to say he would seek a second term, has decided instead not to run again.

Al Quie's standing in public opinion polls has been slipping badly. Last year, he was saddled with a long series of erroneous revenue projections and Democrats accused him of mismanagement. Quie even accused his own finance department of "stupidity."

Soviet Police Polish Their Image In New Museum

By DAVID MINTHORN
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet police are polishing their image at the country's first museum on law enforcement.

The Central Militia Museum, opened to the public last November, traces the history of uniformed police from the bloody days after the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution to now.

Crime detection, traffic control, fire fighting and rescue operations are the main duties of today's militia, along with the "rehabilitation" of convicts in the Soviet penal system they operate.

"We want to educate the public to respect those who protect their lives. At the same time, anyone who intends to break the law will see that all crimes will be detected," Maj. Gen. Nikolai M. Bulanov, the 66-year-old museum chief, said in an interview.

The crime exhibit suggests that Soviet police have their hands full battling law breakers, although crime statistics are not published.

A few crimes are recounted: The hammer slayings of 30 people by a Moscow coachman in the early 1930s and art thefts from the Kremlin and Pushkin museums in the 1920s. The crimes were solved by the peoples' police — the militia.

The KGB secret police agency and its predecessors are scarcely mentioned at the exhibit, which was set up by the Ministry of Internal Affairs in a refurbished, 18th-century fire station in north-central Moscow.

Documents, uniforms, pictures, banners and other paraphernalia are displayed in glass showcases in a succession of rooms with murals on police activities.

Police actions against "counter-revolutionary" gangs in the 1920s, the expansion of police powers in the 1930s and the struggle against German invaders in World War II are major themes.

The police role in the "red terror" after the Bolshevik takeover, GULAG labor camps of the Stalin era and the current crackdown on political dissidents go unmentioned.

Bulanov said the museum also serves to educate militia recruits.

"They must know what happened in the past in order not to make old mistakes," he declared.

One newspaper clipping hints at the widespread use of convict labor under Stalin, reporting 60,000 prisoners were paroled after helping to build the Baltic Sea-White Sea Canal.

Photos of Felix Dzerzhinsky, founder of the Soviet police apparatus, are prominently displayed in the collection, along with portraits of his mentors, Vladimir I. Lenin and Josef Stalin.

There's even a shot of Soviet and American military policemen guarding the gate at the 1945 Yalta Conference in the Crimea attended by Stalin, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill and U.S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"Despite different ideologies, the alliance was a big factor in the victory. We can be proud of this," says a Soviet newspaper clipping.

Some 200,000 selected Soviets visited the exhibit before it was opened to the public. Now, guided tours must be booked in advance. The Associated Press waited more than a month for permission to visit.

A few topics are taboo. Bulanov declined to provide figures on the membership of the Soviet police forces or to give statistics on the Soviet crime rate.

"We have less violent crime in the Soviet Union than in the West because we don't permit violence on television and in films," Bulanov said.

He said violence and sex crimes in the Soviet Union have been traced to foreign films and pornographic magazines smuggled into the country.

"Once there was a French film shown about a gangster who used a stocking mask when committing robberies," the general said. "Suddenly, in three different towns, Soviet boys started to commit robberies wearing stocking masks."

Despite the risks of their job, Bulanov said policemen are paid about the same as average Soviet workers, 172 rubles ($246) a month. They enter the force between ages 20 and 30 after completing two years of military service. Many are recruited at factories after showing potential in the civilian auxiliary police or druzhinki, who patrol the streets wearing red arm bands.

Police officers receive special training in a network of law enforcement academies and are paid according to rank. There are other bonuses.

"They get free uniforms, and that's worth a lot," a Soviet source said. "Even regular cops get preferred treatment in food stores and other retail outlets."

Moscow is believed to have one of the largest municipal law enforcement forces in the world — an estimated 50,000 uniformed police. The job is not considered one of high prestige, although police seem to be respected and even feared by Soviet citizens.

To honor police and improve their image, the Soviet Union marks Militia Day each year on Nov. 10.

Eagle Release Monitored By Birdwatchers

By CARRICK LEAVITT
SEATTLE (UPI) — Housewife Bonnie Robbins, who warned her family they would some day lose her to the birds, went off to monitor the return to nature of a one-eyed golden eagle and a young bald eagle.

Mrs. Robbins left her home in Seattle recently to join three other volunteers for two weeks on San Juan island in Puget Sound. They assisted officials of the Woodland Park Zoological Gardens in the first Project Babe free flight releases of seven eagles.

Injured in the wild, the birds were nursed back to health at the zoo and are being monitored as they return to nature on the beaches, marshes and rocky bluffs of the island, winter home for more than a thousand migrating monarchs of the sky.

"They understood my passion for eagles," Mrs. Robbins said in explaining how her husband, Dick, and two teenage children took the announcement they'd be cooking their own meals for two weeks. She said she had told her husband "that some day he'd lose me, so I guess he wasn't terribly surprised."

Along with Mrs. Robbins, team members included Bill Scheible, 36, a San Diego doctor; Jeff Hill, 22, a college student from Simsbury, Conn.; and Nori Mandell, 19, a veterinary student from South Windsor, Conn.

They were recruited through Earthwatch, an environmental group based in Belmont, Mass. Earthwatch specializes in allowing novice outdoor lovers to share the adventure and discoveries of field research. Each volunteer pays his own expenses and donates about $700 to the scientific project in which he participates.

Other volunteers were to take part in three Project Babe releases in late January and in February, said Hank Klein, zoo spokesman.

Before crating the eagles for transport to the island 80 miles northwest of Seattle, project members attached lightweight radio transmitters to the eagles' tailfeathers and banded them. Colored streamers were also attached to make the big birds easier to pick out from a distance.

The bald eagle, an immature female with a broken right wing, came to the zoo from Sitka, Alaska, via a research center in Modesto, Calif.

"It will be interesting to see if she'll go back to Alaska after wintering in the San Juans," said Dr. James W. Foster, zoo veterinarian who heads the project with Walter English, curator of birds. Foster said he expected the fully recovered bird to have little trouble catching some of the island's numerous rabbits for food.

There was more concern for the golden eagle, a female that had been blinded in one eye when found in LaGrande, Ore. She was brought to Seattle by the federal Fish and Wildlife Service.

"Eagles are visually oriented and having only one eye may make things difficult for this one to make a living," Foster said.

Operating from dawn to dusk, the observation team locates the eagles via the radio transmitters then attempts to follow their progress with visual sightings. Evenings are filled with lectures, slide shows and work on journals.

"It's a chance to get away and accomplish something for me and for others," said Scheible, who is a radiologist at the University of California at San Diego School of Medicine.

The zoo has rehabilitated and released 35 eagles and more than 200 other birds of prey — including hawks, owls and falcons — since 1971.

Work Done In Varied Fields

East Carolina University students from various fields of study are involved in development projects in eastern North Carolina this year, under sponsorship of the ECU Regional Development Institute.

The students, representing the art, business, planning, sociology, geography, computer science, industrial technology and parks/recreation disciplines, are either working part-time with pay or as unpaid interns for academic credit.

"We feel that each student is gaining valuable on-the-job experience while performing services in their assigned areas," said Tim Brinn, director of the ECU institute. He noted that each student project is expected to be completed in late spring.

Assignments are made at the request of local governments or at the suggestion of state or local public advisory bodies.

Vines Sisters To Be Honored

The Vines Sisters of Farmville will be honored on Jan. 29 at 7:30 p.m. at Well's Chapel Church of God in Christ by the Black Awareness Production.

The Black Awareness Production honors an individual or groups monthly for services in Pitt County and surrounding areas. The honoree is chosen by citizens of the area.

Special guests for the program will be evangelist Anthony McGregor, a song writer and performer from New York, and several other singers and musicians.

Jobless Rate Is Following Trend

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's swelling unemployment rate is in keeping with the nationwide trend, says the state Employment Security Commission.

"The continued decline of the national economy is being felt much more in North Carolina now," said Floyd Outland, of the commission's Labor Market Information Division.

"In addition to this, employment is falling off to the extent that we have lost 14,000 non-agriculture wage and salary positions since November 1981," he said.

Misquoted As To The Cigars

WASHINGTON (AP) — Well, now there are at least two things Treasury Secretary Donald Regan doesn't like about Paul Volcker, the Federal Reserve Board chairman with the tight fists.

Regan said Monday that he had been quoted as saying Volcker is "obstinate, tyrannical and smokes cheap cigars."

Regan said that was "a misquote."

"I never mentioned cigars," he said.

Young Adult Worries An Opportunity

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer
A new study of Americans age 25 to 49 shows that young adults are worried about the future — financially, physically and emotionally. And it suggests that marketers can turn those worries into an opportunity for sales of new products.

The study, "What Does The Future Hold and Who's Worried About It?" was done by the advertising agency of Doyle Dane Bernbach and was released in New York last week. It reflects the results of two surveys of a sampling of 500 men and women, 25 to 49 years old, in 20 major markets. The first survey was conducted in August 1980. The second took place a year later.

Ruth Ziff, executive vice president of the agency and its executive director of research and marketing, said the study provides information on how consumers expect to feel and act in the coming decade. An understanding of this information, she said, "is crucial to strategic planning and definition of target audience for every product or service category."

Ms. Ziff said there are major marketing opportunities for financial and career planning services, for what she called "ego supporters" to reassure people who are worried about their looks or have emotional anxieties and for "self-accomplishment facilitators" to satisfy the do-it-yourself urge.

Concern over finances remains high, Ms. Ziff said. In both 1980 and 1981, more than four out of five people questioned agreed with the statement that their highest economic priority was to provide for their long-term financial security. More than half, however, said they did not think they would be able to achieve their long-term material goals and the number of people expressing this doubt rose from 53 percent in the first survey to 57 percent in the second.

The survey takers also asked participants in the study about a wide range of personal concerns. They found 48 percent of those questioned said they were concerned about being less financially secure in the future; 40 percent said they were worried about the difficulty of getting another job.

More than four people in 10 said they were concerned about gaining too much weight or being out of shape. A similar number worried about heart and back problems. Ms. Ziff said the survey did not list cancer as a possible cause for concern "because it seemed obvious."

"Emotional concerns are as high as health concerns," Ms. Ziff said. Forty percent of those questioned worried about losing close friends; 34 percent worried about being less respected, lonelier and less happy.

When the results were broken down according to sex and age, with the group being divided into two sections — 25 to 34 and 34 to 49, the researchers found that younger women and older men often had the same concerns, Ms. Ziff said.

In general, for example, the number of women expressing emotional concerns was higher in the 25-to-34 group than it was in the older group. With men, the pattern was reversed.

The percentage of women who said they were worried about their personal appearance, about being attractive and young looking, also decreased with age; the percentage of men who were concerned increased with age. The findings, Ms. Ziff said, point to "greater opportunities for marketing some of the appearance products to the male segment of the population."

Marketers, Ms. Ziff said, have the chance to boost sales by soothing all these worries. "Preventives and enhancers" like drugs, dietary supplements and weight-control products will appeal to those who are worried about their health and appearance, she said. "Social supportives" like video games and interactive television systems can counter feelings of isolation and loneliness, Ms. Ziff added.

Tapes Help Young Patients To Cope With Cancer

By JEFF BARNARD
Associated Press Writer
PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)
— As captain of his high school tennis team, Peter F. Findlay used videotape to improve his volley. Now the 18-year-old is using videotape to learn how to live with leukemia.

Findlay and other young cancer patients are finding that recording group discussions helps them understand their hopes and fears.

"There is something about being recorded, made permanent, that is particularly relevant to these kids, who are facing the possibility of dying," says Stephanie L. LaFarge, who helped start the program.

Doctors and nurses say they also benefit, by seeing how important it is to understand their patients' feelings.

The tapes grew out of Ms. LaFarge's discussions with adolescent cancer patients at Rhode Island Hospital as part of her doctoral dissertation for Columbia University. Ms. LaFarge is a consultant in pediatric oncology, or cancer treatment, at the hospital.

She and Dr. Robert Tull, a hospital psychologist, have produced four tapes of groups of five youngsters each, aged 13 to 22, who talk about their experiences with different forms of cancer.

"When a kid is diagnosed as having cancer, part of his life is out of control," Tull says. "We have these kids edit the tapes themselves and pick out the music that goes along with them. Being able to take control of any part of your life at that point is critical."

"Seeing the tape again often brings back thoughts I may not have been thinking about lately," says Findlay, now a freshman at Brown University. "The last time I looked at the tape, I was in remission. I forgot about how I felt when I got the disease. One of those things was not taking every day for granted."

Besides giving the patients a chance to share experiences like the pain of chemotherapy and the fear of what changes will occur in their lives, the tapes allow their families, friends and even strangers to find out a kid with cancer is still a regular kid, Ms. LaFarge says.

"We decided to use videotape to entice the adolescents to do something for other people," said Tull, who with Ms. LaFarge is on the faculty of the Brown University School of Biology and Medicine.

"Videotape is good in learning to ski," Ms. LaFarge said. "It works the same way in coping with the fact that you have cancer. It is a tool."

While the project was born out of a desire to help the children, Dr. Paul A. Pitel says it is of greater benefit to the hospital staff.

"As a physician, I think it's been very helpful in that the children explain very clearly what their needs are from the medical staff and how our actions — good and bad — affect them," says Pitel, a blood and cancer specialist at Rhode Island Hospital.

"The psychology of health is a controversial area," Pitel said. "But it is very clear that patients need to maintain a certain degree of optimism and energy just to get through what is often a trying experience."

Pitel said the tapes also help the parents understand the feelings of their children, who often try to protect members of the family by hiding their fear and suffering.

"It is difficult to get adolescents to participate in group therapy, but if you tell them you are making a videotape and through the medium of television they will communicate a message to others, they are very willing to do it," Pitel said.

"The tapes are very powerful. I think they cut through people's defenses, because they are so vivid. In an age when we are all sensitized to the film and television media, I think they are even more powerful."

Findlay and his parents showed a tape of his discussions with fellow patients to members of their church and to friends in his native Greencastle, Ind.

"When we showed it in church, people came to see it who I never met before," Findlay said. "It wasn't a particularly positive film in many respects. For some people it takes real guts to see it. Then they stay and it makes you feel good."

Susan R. Lanoue, 18, of Woonsocket, was among the first group of girls to videotape their discussions.

"We were all nervous at the beginning," said the Bryant College business student who lost her left arm to muscle cancer. "We didn't even move our heads — just our eyes — because we knew somebody was looking at us."

As they got used to it, they opened up, trading feelings about being in the hospital, the reactions of friends and family, and how doctors and nurses could make them feel better.

Miss Lanoue especially remembers one girl from that group, who has since died.

"Man, she could talk," she said. "Just to listen to her is inspiring. Even though she is gone, I can still listen to her."

N.C. Alligators Still In Trouble

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's endangered alligator population faces an uncertain future as the reptiles' habitat shrinks and indiscriminate killing continues, scientists say.

N.C. State University researchers, who for the past two years have been studying the state's alligators, say laws passed and conservation measures initiated during the past decade have stemmed a steady decline in their numbers that hit its low point in the late 1960s.

But while North Carolina's 5,000 to 10,000 alligators appear to be "holding their own," they don't seem to be on the increase either, which does not bode well for the reptile's long-term prospects, scientists say.

"Right now, with all the publicity that followed (passage of the federal Endangered Species Act), the illegal hunting of 'gators for their hides isn't so bad," said Phillip Doerr, NCSU associate professor of zoology.

"But our major concern is that the alligator population will gradually decrease, not because of illegal activities by man but because of things that are legal — plus some characteristics of the alligators themselves that don't contribute very well to their long-term survival."

Summer houses, motels, condominiums, and trailer parks are springing up as developers clear thousands of acres of swamps and marshes where alligators make their homes, Doerr said. Within a few decades, it will be necessary to set aside alligator refuges if any semblance of their natural habitat is to remain, he said.

"Coastal development is the one thing working against the alligator that we scientists can't do anything about," he said. "It's a relentless force that will just overwhelm us in time."

Although the black market on alligator hides still exists, poaching has lessened as enforcement of federal and state laws has tightened. But that doesn't stop many people from destroying the reptiles for other reasons.

"Simply put, there are people who get a charge out of 'shooting the big lizard,' and it's a shame," Doerr said. "It's especially sad in North Carolina because it takes almost twice as long for a 'gator to reach full size here as it does in the Deep South. It can take 12 to 18 years here."

Another problem with the North Carolina alligator's slow maturation is that it takes longer to breed — and the alligator is an erratic breeder at best, Doerr said. Some years it doesn't breed at all, even after reaching full maturity, he said.

The NCSU research team, composed mostly of graduate students, has had to cut corners because federal funding was discontinued, said Paul Smithson, who worked with the team as a technician. But he said it managed to complete much of the project and said the participants are preparing a report to submit to state and federal wildlife officials.

Much of the "field work" consisted of catching, tranquilizing and tagging scores of alligators for identification purposes, Smithson said. Fifteen of them were fitted with radio transmitters and tracked for days at a time, as the researchers tried to see where the reptiles went and how they lived, he said.

"We wanted to determine their breeding season and to see which parts of the state they liked best," he said.

"We also wanted to see where they built their nests. We caught a lot of baby 'gators and tagged them, measured and weighed them. We'll try to gauge how long it takes for them to grow."

The heaviest concentrations of alligators in the state are in the Southport area and in the Croatan National Forest, Doerr said. But they also have been spotted as far north as the Albemarle Sound, and a popular breeding spot is in the neighborhood of Lake Mattamuskeet.

The researchers have sent questionnaires to sportsmen and employees of the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission and other land-management agencies, who have supplied useful information on alligator sightings and habits, Smithson said.

If conservation measures are successful enough, they could result in removal of alligators from North Carolina's endangered species list, Smithson said.

"The ironic thing there is that we'd just be cutting our own throats, because as soon as they go off that list people will just start killing them more than ever and it won't be long until they're back on the list," he said. "It's sort of a vicious cycle trying to protect them."

Dentist For Animals Is Not Bitten

By ANN JOB WOOLLEY
Associated Press Writer
ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Ben H. Colmery III doesn't get complaints about his bills from his dental patients. But he hears an occasional yelp and knocks his patients out cold so they don't nip at his fingers.

Colmery is an animal dentist, working on dogs, cats and even filing down an occasional bird beak that gets too long.

"It just happened that my interest was in that area," the 36-year-old veterinarian said. "Nobody else was doing it so I thought, 'Why not?'"

A specialist in the field who is known nationwide, Colmery does everything from cleaning, straightening and pulling teeth to elongating jaws.

The tools he uses are the same ones used on humans, but his patients range from specially bred Doberman Pinschers to family cats. Animal owners from as far away as Iowa have come to his eight-room veterinary hospital on Ann Arbor's rural west side with their pets.

The patients don't sit in chairs, but are laid out on an operating table after being knocked out cold.

"For what I do, they have to be anesthetized," said Colmery. "I wouldn't put my hand in some dog's mouth when he's awake!"

A typical bill ranges from $50 for a root canal up to $300 for orthodontic procedures, he said.

Colmery has been taking his message — "Let's not forget the mouth ... an animal's gotta eat!" — all over the country, in seminars for animal technicians, other veterinarians, breeders and students he teaches at Michigan State University's veterinary school. He jokingly calls himself "the motor mouth" of the field.

A veterinarian for 13 years, Colmery said acceptance from the public has surprised him: People are interested in their pets' dental health and are eager to have work done.

"The first thing I was doing was root canals, and one thing led to another," he said. "The veterinary science is really coming out of the dark ages."

He said he had no college training in dentistry when he started — in his years at MSU in the mid-1960s, no animal dentistry classes were offered. Now, he teaches an animal dentistry course at the East Lansing campus.

"Everything that is being done on humans was first done on beagles, so I read a lot of books," Colmery said. "Veterinarians can do innovative things and fuss (over their patients). They don't have to worry about people who complain."

Smaller dogs have the most dental problems because their mouths are crowded with teeth, Colmery said. And, he said, small dogs are much more likely to be pampered.

"They eat soft mush and yuck," he said. "The dogs on dry food tend to have a lot fewer hassles than those on mush, for sure."

Cavities that go unnoticed can lead to ailments later on, he said.

Eventually the animal can't chew on that side (of the mouth) and pretty soon on the other side gets bad, too," he said. "I've seen people bring in animals with vague sets of symptoms (usually the animals have not been eating). You do all the tests, and nothing. Then you poke around in the mouths and find hurting teeth."

"For example, field dogs and retrievers — a lot of handlers will say they notice the dog is apprehensive about picking up a bird. Sure he'll do it, but he's not very eager."

Colmery said most of his work is done on family pets, although a lot of the orthodontic work is done on exotic show dogs.

But he said he draws the line when show dog owners ask him to camouflage a genetic defect.

He recalled one man who spent several thousand dollars for a dog which later developed a lower jaw longer than the upper jaw and wanted Colmery to correct the flaw.

"It's not ethical," he said, adding that it would result in the dog being bred and passing on the trait.

Tax Audits Triggered By Returns

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —
Sometime this year or next, nearly 2 million Americans will open their mail and learn their 1981 tax returns are being audited by the Internal Revenue Service. The experience will cost some sleepless nights and, on average, extra tax and penalties of about $2,000.

About 5 percent of those taxpayers will be chosen by the luck of the draw. But 90 percent will be audited because some of the figures on their returns set off a warning in IRS computers.

The remainder generally are spinoffs from leads developed from returns originally selected for audit. For example, if an audited return showed the taxpayer did a lot of business with a particular individual, that individual also might get audited.

The IRS has fought successfully in Congress and the courts to prevent public disclosure of just what triggers the computer alarm. But it is generally assumed to be based on average deductions acceptable at various income levels.

For example, if a taxpayer claims a significantly larger deduction for contributions than do most people earning about the same money, that could prompt an audit.

The agency audited almost 2.2 million individual and business tax returns in 1980, or 4 percent fewer than the year before. IRS officials say it is likely the figure will drop again this year.

One reason is that the agency is going all-out to end tax-shelter abuses, a complex, time-consuming process requiring manpower that otherwise would be available for auditing other returns. IRS is investigating 260,000 returns involving tax shelters claimed by upper-income Americans, up nearly 70,000 from 1980.

Although President Reagan's effort to hold down federal spending has cut into parts of the IRS budget, officials at the agency insist their effectiveness in finding tax cheaters has not been reduced.

However, IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. conceded earlier this week that the agency lacks the manpower and computers to audit all the returns that should be checked. He expressed hope for a doubling of the number of audits when the agency increases its computer capability.

Despite fewer audits, examination of selected returns in 1980 resulted in recommendations for a record $9.4 billion additional tax and penalties, including $2 billion on individuals. That compared with $7.1 billion in 1979.

In 1980, 1.14 percent (114 of every 10,000) of non-business returns claiming income under $10,000 were audited; 2.03 percent of those claiming $10,000 to $15,000; 2.66 of those between $15,000 and $50,000, and 8.74 percent of those with $50,000 or more income were audited.

Short of a formal audit, IRS subjects most returns to two computer checks.

—The arithmetic on almost every return is checked by computer. In 1980, 6.5 million individual returns had such errors. About 3.6 million of those errors were in the taxpayer's favor by an average of $315. The remainder would have cost the taxpayer an average of $203.

—Second, the IRS computer generates notices to taxpayers whose returns carry deductions that clearly are not allowed. For example, a person who deducts funeral expenses for a relative automatically gets a notice demanding that the deduction be eliminated and the taxes recomputed.

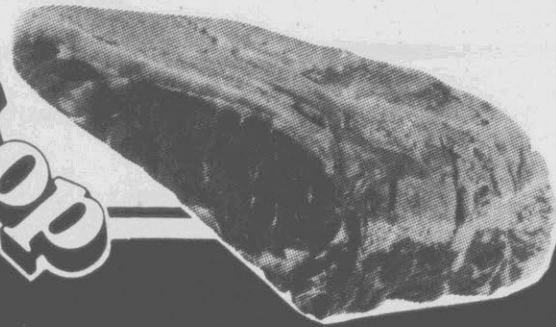

But in a full-fledged audit, a taxpayer comes face to face with an IRS auditor or revenue agent.

If you're selected, IRS will check your records, listen to your story and outline any proposed change in tax liability. You can end the dispute on the spot by agreeing to the examiner's finding. That could mean you'll have to pay more tax or that IRS will give you a refund.
