

Mubarek Is Welcomed By Reagan

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak pledged today to redouble their efforts to achieve a lasting Mideast peace and reaffirmed their two nations' close ties.

"Without setting deadlines, I personally believe the time has come to get on with the task before us, and the sooner the better," Reagan said in an official arrival ceremony for Mubarak in the White House East Room.

Mubarak, in turn, told Reagan, "We are here to reaffirm our commitment to work together for peace and reconciliation in the Middle East. We must redouble our efforts ... to establish a just and comprehensive peace," he said.

But Mubarak, in a forceful statement, also called for self-determination for the 1.3 million Palestinians living on the Israeli-occupied West Bank and in the Gaza Strip.

The "key to peace," said Mubarak, is to solve the "Palestinian problem ... based on mutual recognition and acceptance."

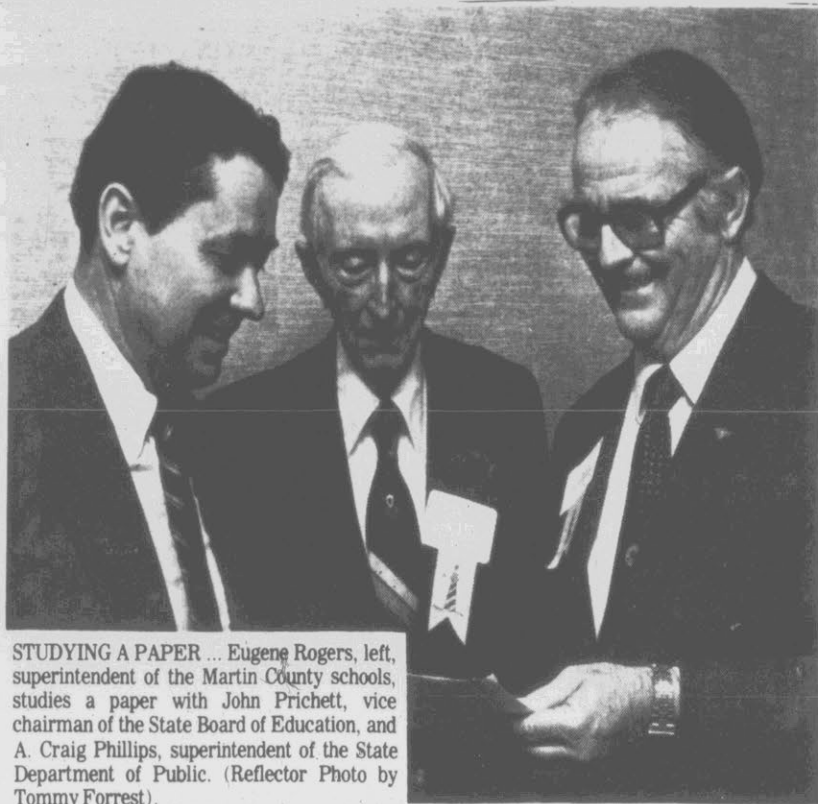

"The Palestinians need your help and your understanding," he told Reagan. He said the goal of self-determination for the Palestinians "cannot be denied" and offers Israel its best hope for peace in the Middle East.

Mubarak arrived Tuesday for a four-day official visit to Washington, his first since taking over as president of Egypt following the assassination of Anwar Sadat on Oct. 6. A major purpose of the visit is to demonstrate that the good relations established under Sadat will continue under Mubarak.

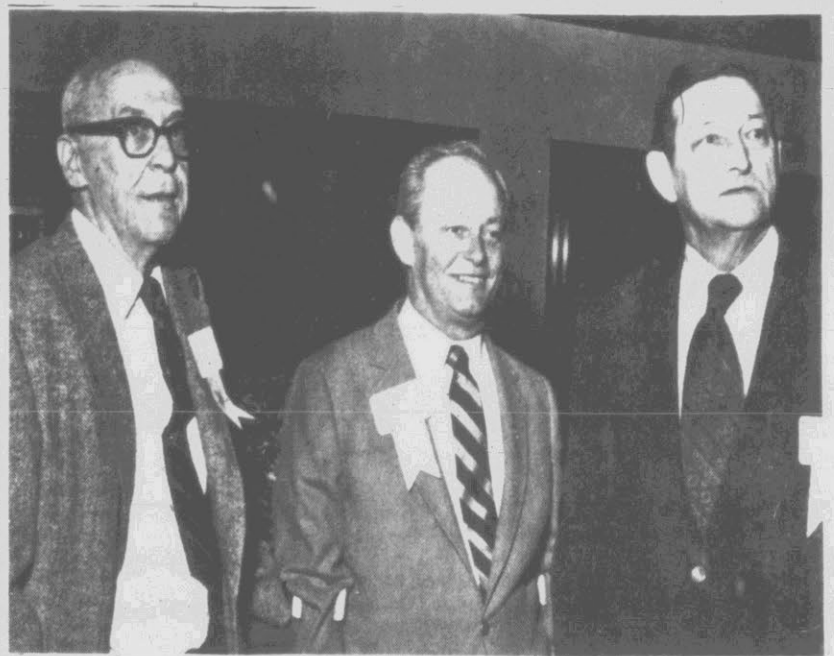

Reagan told Mubarak his visit is testimony that the good relations between the United States and Egypt are "more than a compact between individuals; it's a commitment between nations."

The two leaders stood side-by-side while the U.S. Marine Band played the national anthems of both countries.

Security around the White House was tight with large numbers of both Egyptian and American security personnel on duty.

Williamston Hosts Education Leaders

WILLIAMSTON — Approximately 250 people including school teachers, principals, PTA members, superintendents, state legislators, other government officials and leaders in education gathered at the Williamston High School Tuesday night.

The occasion was the opening dinner-meeting of a series of meetings and workshops for educators from N.C. Education District I being held today and Thursday. Education District I comprises 17 school systems in several eastern North Carolina counties, including Pitt and Martin counties.

In addition to the workshops, a brief meeting of the State Board of Education is to be held in Williamston on Thursday.

Members of the State Board of Education are also visiting schools throughout the district today. The two scheduled to be in Greenville schools are Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green and Dr. Jerome Melton, deputy superintendent of the N.C. Department of Public Instruction.

Dr. David Bruton, chairman of the State Board of Education, was the keynote speaker at the opening dinner Tuesday night. In a brief speech, he emphasized the need for educators, legislators and others concerned with the educational process to think about rearranging their priorities, in light of signals coming through from the federal government on tight funds in the immediate future.

A slide show prepared by the Albemarle Tour Association was shown, and the District I teacher of the year, from Hertford County, was recognized.

Capital Rocked By Bush Scare

By HARRY ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — "I am not used to all this attention," said George Bush, modestly. "Really, it's gotten out of hand."

And so it had. What happened to the vice president Tuesday was the biggest non-event to excite the nation's capital in a long time.

Morning commuters fuming in traffic jams learned over their radio that "a projectile" hit Bush's armor-plated, escorted limousine as he was being driven to work. It made a loud bang.

The limousine speeded up and drove to the Executive Office Building. By the time it got there, cops were rushing to the scene of the bang, looking for the source.

Helicopters hovered. Riot squads assembled. Cops trod roofs.

The FBI mobile crime lab lumbered into view. Agents with gold badges pinned on their business suits swarmed around.

The area was secured, meaning thousands who use L Street or 22nd Street or 21st Street or any of a number of other major downtown streets to get to work, suddenly couldn't.

"Nobody was injured; everybody is safe," said Jack Warner of the Secret Service. "The only harm was to the limousine."

The limo sustained what was called variously a V-shaped gash or a tear in the vinyl that covered its roof.

The calmest man during all this was Bush, who went about doing what vice presidents do. He made no news for the rest of the day.

"We heard a loud bang and drove on to work and that was it," Bush said. "There really wasn't heightened tension even."

The vaunted FBI crime lab conducted exhaustive tests. The Secret Service, the Metropolitan Police Department did their thing.

Finally, Secret Service spokesman James Boyle announced officially "it has been determined that there was no assault on the vice presidential limousine."

The object that struck the car was determined to be made of clay and cement.

NEEDED HELP

I'm a school bus driver with the Greenville City Schools. Recently I had an accident on 14th Street, and went to a house asking for help. I was very bluntly told that the telephone was our order, although I heard a phone in the house ringing when I went to the door.

I'd like to ask the citizens of Greenville to be more cooperative, especially to school bus drivers when buses are involved in accidents or during an emergency because it could be their kid or my kid on the bus. D.P.

Whitfield School Project Finished

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

Repairs have been made to the troublesome G.R. Whitfield sewage system to eliminate an odor that has plagued nearby classrooms, said Associate Superintendent of Pitt County Schools Thomas Craft.

"The sewage project has been completed," he reported at Tuesday's monthly meeting of the Pitt County Board of Education. "We enlarged the holding tanks and installed pumps, and the system is now cycling from 8 p.m. until 2 a.m. rather than in the afternoon when students are there."

G.R. Whitfield officials asked several months ago for funds to repair or replace the sewage system, which they said fills several classrooms with a noxious odor when it cycles onto the drain field.

So far the adjustments "seem to be working," Craft added, because odor is no longer a problem. The real test, he concluded, will come during hot humid weather. The cost of the repairs, according to Craft, was over $4,000. The board budgeted $6,000 for the project.

Board members voted to exchange the former principal's home in Pactolus for land adjoining the present school property. The land adjacent to the school is presently owned by Paul Davenport Jr.

March 15 was designated as make-up day for the Jan. 14 snow day. The teacher workday originally scheduled for March was moved to June 17.

Former board member Dr. Tom Patterson of Farmville appeared before the board and suggested that any school board members who are candidates for county commissioners resign. "I see the Pitt County Commissioners and the Pitt County Board of Education as incompatible because one funds the other," he said. "I would urge the resignation of school board members who are running for county commissioner."

Patterson praised the board's funding in 1982 of several positions eliminated by the county commissioners. "We must not stop programs and dismiss personnel so vital to our system," he said.

Retirement and health benefits were approved for all adult bus drivers who drive a minimum of six hours per day. This qualifies three drivers, said Assistant Superintendent Leck Keeter, to these benefits. The state provides the funds, he added.

Craft reported that the schools' utility bill for January totaled over $5,000, compared with $46,662 in January of 1981.

A budget workshop meeting was scheduled for Feb. 16 at 7:30 p.m. in the third floor conference room of the county office building.

Heptinstall Found Guilty Of First Degree Murder

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

A Pitt County Superior Court jury Tuesday found Jeffrey Steven Heptinstall guilty of first degree murder in the death of Rachael B. Albritton, who was beaten and stabbed to death at her Greene County home last July 11.

The second phase of the trial began this morning when the jury started hearing testimony before considering whether to recommend that the 30-year-old defendant should receive a life prison sentence or the death penalty.

Heptinstall, who pleaded innocent by reason of insanity, escaped from the prison unit at Maury the night before Mrs. Albritton, 62, was beaten and stabbed at her home in the Lizzie community. Testimony during the trial showed he was driving the victim's car when he was taken into custody in Craven County several hours after Mrs. Albritton died.

Witnesses for the State said Heptinstall's fingerprints and shoe prints were found in the Albritton home, and blood, consistent with Mrs. Albritton's type, was found on the shirt he was wearing when arrested.

Other witnesses told how Mrs. Albritton described the assault on her and her attacker — a description that matched Heptinstall — shortly before she died.

Defense witnesses, describing Heptinstall's history of mental problems, said he had been hospitalized five times for psychiatric treatment, and has been diagnosed as a paranoid schizophrenic.

His father, Martin K. Heptinstall of Raleigh, said family members were afraid of his son and said having him around was "like having a rabid dog in the house."

Heptinstall, against the advice of his attorneys, testified Monday that he broke into the Albritton home after his escape to find food, found her car keys and took the car. But he denied seeing Mrs. Albritton, and said he did not beat or stab her. He also said the finger and palm prints found in her home were not his.

At times, Heptinstall's testimony contradicted earlier testimony by members of his family.

The defendant, who said he knew the difference between right and wrong, and knew it was wrong to break into someone's home, denied threatening family members.

After the jury returned with its verdict, Heptinstall, in an apparent reference to members of his family sitting behind him, said, "Get these beasts out of here."

In addition to the murder charge, the jurors found the defendant guilty of breaking into Mrs. Albritton's home and armed robbery in the theft of her car.

A defense motion to set aside the verdicts and to empanel another jury for sentencing was rejected by Judge Preston Cornelius.

The defense renewed the motion again this morning, citing the defendant's "outburst" when the jury was being polled.

In rejecting the motion for the second time, Judge Cornelius said the court's recollection was that Heptinstall "pounded on the desk," produced a loud "shriek," and, referring to his family, said get them out of here, "this is not a wailing wall."

The state presented no evidence as the sentencing phase of the trial began. District Attorney Donald Jacobs simply asked the jury to "consider all evidence offered in the guilt phase."

Heptinstall's father was the first defense witness today.

He said his son had a fairly normal childhood, but said he noticed changes in the youth in late 1972.

Heptinstall said his son became "more and more anti-social, more and more hostile," and was absent without leave from the U.S. Air Force.

The father said his son had "threatened bodily harm and perpetrated bodily harm" at times, and he had "known him to break civil law and known him to break criminal law" with such acts as "stealing, breaking and entering, physical assaults, and threatening passersby on public streets."

Heptinstall also said that in his opinion, his son was "absolutely insane" when he attacked Mrs. Albritton.

Heptinstall said he thought his son ought to be "confined in maximum security and treated with every possible method of treatment" in an effort to restore his "full faculties." The father added that if his son's full faculties could not be restored, then he should be "confined for the rest of his life."

Farmville To Proceed On Recreation Facility

By MELVIN LANG
Reflector Staff Writer

FARMVILLE — Town commissioners agreed Tuesday night to proceed — but with caution — with plans to construct a $450,000 multipurpose recreational facility to be financed by a community development block grant.

The Town Board authorized Farmville officials to seek preliminary proposals from architects for the facility, which would be built on Farmville's southside as a replacement for one or more existing facilities.

Approval of the search for an architect came after a lengthy discussion of the need for the facility, which was included in a 1980 request for federal community development funds.

Commissioner Oliver Murphrey questioned the desire for a new recreational facility, even raising the question of trying to return the federal money earmarked for the building.

"I've just made a tour of the (town's) recreational facilities," Murphrey told the other commissioners. "They're scattered ... but they are right good facilities."

He continued, "If we go build this thing, and we've got all these others, we aren't going to want to do away with them."

The board agreed to let the search for an architect continue after Town Administrator Robert Morgan assured the commissioners "that public input is not over." Morgan said the design proposals would go before the board's planning and finance committee and back to the full board for final approval.

The commissioners also stilled on a request by former Farmville police officer Earl L. Keel for reinstatement of $2,064 in retirement funds reimbursed to the town after he left the police force in 1969. State law at that time required Keel to withdraw from the state pension fund for law enforcement officers and the money, contributed originally by the town, was returned to Farmville.

Keel, who said he has been employed as a security officer at Pitt Community College since 1971, is now eligible to "buy back" his former retirement benefits by replacing the money refunded in 1969.

Morgan recommended that the board deny Keel's request for the funds, noting that it could "open the door" to similar requests from other former officers. Commissioner Michael Dixon disagreed, contending that the money originally had been intended for Keel's retirement. His motion to honor Keel's request was seconded by Murphrey.

Dixon withdrew his motion under protest, however, when Commissioners John T. Waltson and Joe Kue called for Morgan to provide a list of how many former officers could be affected by the "buy back" rule cited by Keel.

Keel's request was put off until the board's next meeting.

In other matters, the board:

- Decided to leave intact existing membership criteria for the town Planning Board.
- Postponed for one month consideration of a flood damage prevention ordinance.

- Confirmed appointments by Mayor W. Russell Duke Jr. of Fred Austin to the Tree Board and Agnes Monk to the Library Board.
- Referred for study a proposal by the state Transportation Secretary W.R. Roberson that the town consider constructing a heliport.

- Accepted a state grant of $15,455 as the state's 25 percent share of the U.S. 258 water main extension.
- Agreed to pass on to consumers recent wholesale electric rate increases by Carolina Power & Light Co. that will average about 10 percent for residential customers.
- Agreed to conduct an on-the-spot inspection of town-owned property and equipment at 2 p.m. Feb. 21.
- Agreed to compensate members of the Farmville Rescue Squad at the rate of $3 per person responding to calls.
- Confirmed the appointment of H.P. Norman as fire chief for 1982.

Interior Designer Gives Talk

"A home should reflect the tastes and experiences of the people who live there," said Kate Phillips, interior decorator of Tapscott Designs. She spoke recently at a meeting arranged by the Pitt Co. Agricultural Extension Service.

She stressed accessories should not be thought of just as the finishing touches of a room but rather as an integral part of the decorating scheme. According to Mrs. Phillips, grouping of visually related accessories is one of the best techniques to avoid clutter.

When selecting accessories, one should look for objects which are well designed and of good quality. The style should be fitting or compatible to the home — nothing should jump out when one enters a room. Although contrast is needed, overall harmony is the goal. Mrs. Phillips also stated that very formal and very informal should not be mixed. She recommended that in a room with a warm color scheme one use accessories of a color color.

Leaflets "Spark the Interior of Your Home With Color" and "Sources of Color Scheme" may be obtained at no charge by calling the Agricultural Extension Service, 752-2934, extension 370.

Devoted Friend Written Off

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My mother died last week following a two-year battle with cancer. She was 75. Mom had been widowed at 50 and she lived her last 19 years with a male friend in his home. He could not have been more devoted to my mother. He nursed her during her illness and rarely left her side. This is a rather small town, and everyone was aware of the situation. After Mom died her relatives gave the obituary to the local newspaper and completely ignored Mom's devoted companion.

I know it would have meant a great deal to Mom's friend to have been listed in the write-up as one of her survivors. Just a simple mention, such as, "Mrs. () was also survived by her long-time friend, Mr. ()". Do you think it would have been wrong or improper to have given that dear and generous man a small mention in the press? Please print your answer.

HER DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: It would have been neither wrong nor improper. Some friends are far more important in a relationship than relatives. Apparently your mother's friend was, and mentioning him as her long-time friend would have harmed no one and given him some well-deserved pleasure.

DEAR ABBY: A girl wrote to say she was getting married and felt entitled to take her bedroom set with her since her parents had given it to her for her 16th birthday. Her parents disagreed, saying it was "hers" only as long as she lived at home. You said, "Leave the set, and don't argue." That's all the poor girl could do. She had no choice.

That letter interested us because we had exactly the same situation in our family. We redecorated our daughter's room when she was 15, and when she decided to get married at 17, she demanded to take "her" bedroom set with her. We said no. However, the bedroom set was not the real issue. The bottom line was that we did not think the boy she wanted to marry was right for her. As it turned out, he wasn't, and the marriage didn't even last a year.

SAME STORY, CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA

DEAR SAME: You make a valid point. When parents are pleased about a marriage, usually they can't do enough for "the kids." If they're not pleased, it's a different story.

DEAR ABBY: Since you're letting your readers have their say about what they don't like about your column, may I add my 2 cents' worth?

Stick to the problems people send you and your solutions. I am not interested in reading letters from readers telling how they would have answered "Helen from Hicksville." If their answers were as good as yours, they would be writing your column instead of you.

And while I'm griping, I might as well tell you that our newspaper never prints your address. How does a person get a letter to you anyway?

LONG-TIME READER

DEAR READER: My address: Dear Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal, unpublished reply, please enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Wyatt Performed Well

The resignation of City Manager Ed Wyatt came with a suddenness that surprised us.

Wyatt announced his resignation after accepting a similar position with Fairfax, Va., a suburb of Washington.

He has had the city manager's position here since July, 1978.

We join with members of the City Council in expressing regret at the departure of Ed Wyatt. He has done an outstanding job here and as Council member Louis Clark pointed out, the fact that a city such as Fairfax, Va. chose Wyatt "speaks well of him."

Certainly Fairfax is gaining a capable city manager.

In the meantime the City Council moved swiftly to make the transition smooth.

Gail Meeks, a capable member of the city hall staff who joined the city government in 1968, will serve as interim city manager until a permanent replacement can be found.

This is a wise choice. Mrs. Meeks is as familiar with the workings of the city government as anyone and she is fully able to handle the responsibility during the interim.

The council also appointed a committee composed of Louis Clark, chairman, Stuart Shinn and Janice Buck to seek candidates for the position of city manager.

We trust the search for a new city manager will move rapidly. In the meantime there is no reason the activities of city government can't proceed without interruption.

America Has a Role Model

Once again the United States is finding people in whom it can take pride... heroes if you will.

The latest is U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier who was captured by terrorists in Italy and spent 42 days of what must have been agonizing captivity.

A sensational move on the part of Italian police commandos; brought about by brilliant police work, secured his release in Padua. The story is now well known that a commando move knocked a gun from a terrorist's hand and saved the general's life even at the moment of rescue.

Since, the entire world has been impressed by Brig. Gen. Dozier's demeanor following his release. He appeared for a statement the day after his release and has since discussed his captivity at press conferences. He discussed his captors unemotionally, and now he is ready to get back to work as a professional soldier.

Any of us searching for decorum role models would do well to look to Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier.

RALEIGH — The one idea which won't go away when it comes to helping children in trouble is the problems which would be solved if there were one central state agency which would tackle all of the diverse problems.

It is next to impossible to catalog all of the ills which beset youngsters — which, indeed, plague one individual child. And one problem can be the cause of several others.

A malnourished mother who received no health care during pregnancy produces a child with physical and mental problems which grows up in surroundings lacking in challenge and encouragement, possibly suffering neglect or abuse, only to compound the problems with added emotional and learning difficulties.

Nowhere in the state government does an agency take a look at the whole problem.

Welfare is principally aid to families with dependent children.

Split

But the social services are split into several directions which sometimes compete and seldom communicate on a daily basis.

At school, there is little relationship between past physical and emotional experiences which might be the foundation of current difficulties.

Then there's the juvenile justice system which often comes in contact with those same deprived, malnourished, underloved, difficult kids with little machinery or time to sift through the entire fabric of problems.

Several years ago, the legislative Commission on Children With Special Needs spent long months developing a proposal for a single state agency to handle children's problems.

The notion died aborning as it challenged the status quo in numerous bureaucracies in several different agencies. Power and budgets would be sharply lifted, and the idea didn't have a chance.

More recently specialists in Urban Affairs and Community Service at N.C. State University worked on a report for the Juvenile Justice Planning Committee of the Governor's Crime Commission and the National Council on Crime and Delinquency.

Cutting to the worst examples of children needing help, that team of specialists came to a similar conclusion — a central agency is critical.

The study found youngsters regularly running into trouble at various places — neighborhood, school, the emergency room — but no way for agencies to exchange information and ideas.

Typically, once a child runs into a particular situation and comes to the attention of a particular agency, he or she becomes a "ward" of that agency and remains there for a long while.

There were many cases of repeat offenders who are in and out of juvenile training schools with regularity. Another group were repeat-

EPA Is Good Example

The beauty of the American system of government is Congress makes the laws of the land, and then the executive branch of government carries them out. At least that is how it used to work in the past.

But under "New Federalism" there aren't enough troops to carry out all the laws that Congress passes. So the administration has to be selective about those it believes are necessary to the welfare of the country, and the ones that just can't be administered.

The Environmental Protection Agency is a good example of this. Chalmers, who is supposed to work in toxic wastes, explained the problem.

"EPA is very concerned about the spilling of toxic wastes into the nation's waters, but unfortunately we had to lay off so many people that we have to put the problem on hold."

"What good is the EPA if you can't stop people from spilling toxic wastes in the rivers and streams of the nation?"

"You have to have an Environmental Protection Agency because it was mandated by Congress, but we can't go around checking everyone who is dumping poison into the water. We have to concentrate our energies on important things."

"Such as?"

"Making sure the regulations concerning toxic waste make sense. We're hoping to clear them out of the department, because they're not team players. When we find an environmentalist working for us, we take a brown crayon and put a dot next to his or her name, and then we find a reason to eliminate the job. That's far more important than worrying about some toxic waste dump that doesn't mean diddley-doo except to the people who live in a small area."

"But if you keep firing people who are supposed to know something about the environment, how can you say the agency is doing its job?"

"All you have to do is look at the statistics. Before we came in, 230 violations of pollution laws were turned over to the Justice Department for prosecution. Since BPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch took over, we've only cited 42 companies. That should prove we're on the ball."

"Does that mean there have been less violations since she took over, or you're reluctant to cite more violations?"

"It means we're doing our job with a lot less people. Instead of going to the environmentalists, ask the business community how we're doing, and you'll discover they consider the new EPA one of the best-run agencies in Washington. Business used to hate us. Now they think of us as their friends."

"I didn't know business was supposed to be your friend."

"Our attitude is that you can get a lot more done for the environment if you treat business as a partner and not an adversary. Before Ms. (Please Turn To Page 5)

To the editor:

Greenville will soon lose five of her finest citizens. It has been my happy good fortune to know the Ed Wyatt Family: Ed, Jeannie and sons Ed, Stephen and Kent.

I have watched Ed discharge the duties of city manager at the very highest professional level, making tough decisions that were sometimes politically unpopular, but bringing ever increasing levels of service to all of us and controlling costs with exceptional ability.

Apart from his labors at his vocation have been his leadership roles in his church and in the Greenville Noon Rotary club, where his strong guidance, counsel and support will be sorely missed. Jeannie's presence in our church has been an example for us all.

The boys, Ed, Stephen and Kent, have been good friends, well-behaved competitive young men, who have been welcome additions to classrooms, Recreation and Parks programs, and all the other activities in which they have participated.

In short, the Wyatts contributions to Greenville have gone miles beyond the work of a competent city manager. They have made a lasting impact and we shall miss them greatly.

Strength For Today

DO WE WANT TO BE BETTER?

Modern psychology claims to be able to heal the sick of body and mind. But it can help the sick only if they want to be helped.

The psychologists, of course, did not make this discovery. All through his ministry of healing, Jesus was continually asking men, "Wilt thou be made whole?" The Bible does not say that any ever gave him a negative answer, but it does say that there were times when he could do no mighty works because of men's unbelief.

As we complain over our lot in life we had best ask ourselves whether we really want it to be changed. Or do we enjoy being sick? Do we enjoy complaining about the way people treat us? Do we really get a joy out of our anger and hostility that we are loath to part with? Are we sure we would want to be made fine and unselfish persons?

"Wilt thou be made whole?" That is the question. — Elisha Douglass

Undermined On Defense

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Quiet talks have started between senior White House staffers and Republican congressional leaders aimed at reducing defense spending below President Reagan's still-secret new budget, a backstairs campaign somewhat similar to the failed effort of senior presidential aides to change Reagan's mind on taxes.

Shrouded moves made so far to shake the president's determination included a last-minute Oval Office appeal by budget director David Stockman. Pentagon exemption from across-the-board budget cuts, he argued, must end. When that failed, the president was persuaded to delete a paragraph in the State of the Union address amplifying his pledge for "a strong national defense"; it could be included in a future message, he was told.

At work here is the familiar syndrome of the Reagan White House. When defeated internally by a stubborn president convinced of his rectitude, White House aides journey afield for allies in their campaign to break down the boss's resistance.

In their campaign to commit Reagan to tax increases he repeatedly rejected, senior aides led by chief of staff James Baker III leaked premature "decisions" that turned out to be inaccurate (leading The New York Times to report on Jan. 21 that Reagan "has decided" to ask for higher excise taxes).

The game of decision-by-leak not only embarrassed, seasoned, conscientious, reporters; it failed to change Reagan's mind. But the new alliance of White House defensecutters and congressional Republicans of similar persuasion has a far greater chance to succeed, even though success would come at the expense of Ronald Reagan.

What brings success within reach is the torrid mix of an election-year Congress charged with a new round of domestic budget cuts in a major recession while facing a probable deficit far higher than the $90 billion to be disclosed in Reagan's new budget.

"Reagan can't cut the budget this year and raise defense spending at the same time," we were told by a Reaganite loyalist who stayed with the president last year on both budget cuts and higher defense spending. A similar, though somewhat veiled, expression was sent privately to the president in a Dec. 9 letter signed by all 16 freshman Republican senators: the "Reagan class" of 1980, which includes some of the most conservative Reaganites in the Senate.

The letter pressed Reagan to deepen his program for general budget-cutting and offered niggardly support for his higher defense spending "only at a rate that can be justified by meeting the most stringent test of serving undeniable national security needs."

The first draft of the letter was much more pointed. It said that defense spending could not be divorced from limits imposed on the rest of the government. The change was agreed to only to get the signatures of Sens. Steve Symms and Jeremiah Denton, leaders of the pro-defense bloc.

Instead of attempting to meet this threat to the defense budget head on, White House aides are manifesting an itch to take advantage of it. Both Baker and Stockman have privately told Sen. Pete Domenici, hard-driving chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, that they agree with his basic budget premise. Domenici believes that the fate of Reagan's drive to cut domestic spending is tied directly to Pentagon cuts.

Senate insiders told us that Stockman has given strong hints to Domenici that the administration will accept the senator's proposal to reduce Reagan's 7 percent increase in defense spending (slightly higher than the current fiscal year) to 5 percent. That would cut only $5.5 billion from the new, $25.7 billion authorization bill for the year starting next Oct. 1. But it would slow future defense spending drastically, by $4.25 billion in 1986 below Reagan's budget projections.

Late last August, when Reagan was preparing his secondround budget cuts for Congress, Domenici wanted the White House to approve a $30 billion cut for defense spending, a figure Baker then announced to the press as the agreed target. Reagan disowned the figure and later settled for a small fraction.

It is doubtful to say the least that the president is even dimly aware that top aides are jiggling with his defense budget. Reagan puts high value on his pledge toward rapid American rearmament, believing it essential to convince both U.S. allies and the Soviets that the U.S. is on a steady course. Whether a majority in Congress can be found to support domestic cuts and defense hikes is admittedly a big question. But the answer will not be in doubt if senior aides, no matter how honorably motivated and no matter how convinced of their political realism, cut a deal before the battle starts.

Inflation Exploiters Hard Hit

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The sober economic outlook has produced an effect that in other times might be considered un-American, but which some think is welcome today. It has undermined some of our great expectations.

Where are all those new stock issues that double in price before the week and sometimes before the day is out? You don't hear much about them. Promoters of such issues know how hard it is to attract money.

And what happened to that old staple of cocktail parties, the line that began "Do you know what I was offered for my house the other day?" How smoothly it was slipped into the conversation. How practiced the indifference with which the owner dropped the question. What triumph as he witnessed the envy of his listeners. Too bad; no more.

What became of the arrogance of the seller who used to say "That's the price, take it or leave it?" Recently somebody told him "forget it." He'll never get over it. No longer does he maintain even the pose. No longer is he confident he can get his price. Just witness the behavior of automakers. Or real estate agents. Or diamond merchants.

Where are the boasts from labor? Gone. You can't make demands unless someone is buying the goods. Instead, labor negotiators today are often found working with management on the problem of raising productivity, and they are even willing to give back benefits in order to help.

Inflation was the simplest of concepts to exploit. It took no great insight to understand that so long as demand exceeded supply, so long as borrowing was easy and inexpensive, so long as so many people felt they should have everything they set their eyes on, that inflation would exist. So, if prices were going to rise, get in on the action.

It was, of course, what is so often referred to as the psychology of inflation, the belief that if you think prices are high today then just wait a week or so. Homeowners and homebuyers knew all about it.

What made all the inflation-induced activity so bad was its lack of productivity. Millions of manhours went into exploiting the market, rather than into producing goods and services. Brainpower was exercised in the devising of schemes rather than in the creating of wealth.

Savers were gyped. Those who contributed to the capital pool that finances economic expansion found their assets almost disappeared. Borrowers from that pool were rewarded, even if they did very little to enrich the economy, since they repaid in cheaper dollars.

With wiser people and higher interest rates and tougher times — but especially because there seems to be some evidence that double digit inflation isn't a permanent situation — the psychology has changed.

Individuals and companies and institutions have abandoned many of their great expectations, especially those they couldn't afford but still felt were within their grasp in a world of wild inflation.

The problem now is to save the legitimate, productive, practical, sensible, achievable dreams and keep them from being destroyed too.

The Cool Technocrat

The new Egyptian President, Hosni Mubarak, is carrying out the policies of Anwar Sadat, but in a much different style. Sadat was flamboyant and informal. Mubarak is cool and maintains a low profile. His family life is kept private and he discourages hero-worship. There are no portraits of Mubarak on public streets. But with quiet efficiency he has moved to clean up corruption, eliminate special privileges among government officials, and further social equality. The Egyptian leader is scheduled to visit Washington this week, where his style will also be a contrast to President Reagan's more informal ways. Never casual, Mubarak has said, "It is my habit to call everyone mister."

Say Saturn Has Unseen Moons

PASEDNA, Calif. (AP) — Scientists poring over pictures of Saturn transmitted by the Voyager 2 spacecraft say the ringed planet has at least four and possibly six more moons than previously known. The new satellites bring Saturn's total to 21 or 23 and help support the theory that the planet's rings were formed through collisions of comets or asteroids with its part-rock, part-ice moons, researchers at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory said Tuesday.

Planetary scientists Stephen P. Synnott and Richard Terrile discovered the moons while examining computer-enhanced photographs from Voyager 2's Saturn fly-by last September. Each moon is no larger than 6 to 12 miles in diameter and appear in the photos as mere pinpoints or streaks of light. The discovery "helps us piece together the history of the rings," Terrile said, "and lends support to the collisional theory" explaining the rings' genesis, which he developed with Gene Shoemaker of the U.S. Geological Society. "We're seeing a greater range of fragment sizes (throughout the rings)," said Terrile, "which is what you would expect to see if these were once larger objects that have been broken up." The four moons orbit Saturn at distances of ers in the mental health system. Seldom, though, did individuals cross over and become associated with another of the systems once contact was made with one. What is indeed, the study concludes, is some agency given responsibility of keeping up with youngsters displaying severe behavior problems to see that diagnosis is made and proper treatment provided. The mental health system is suggested at that focal point. This report is talking not about everyday, ordinary kids, but the worst: the kind who when they get into trouble, agency officials admit they can't do anything with them. Hence, the title of that report: "Dirty, Rotten Kids." But there is a lesson in that report for a lot of kids, not just the sickest of the lot.

Parachutist Survives A Fall When Chute Fails

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — A faulty parachute apparently functioned just well enough to enable an Army paratrooper to escape an 8,000-foot fall with a dislocated elbow and a few broken bones. Doctors said that Terry Bennett, a member of the Army's elite Golden Knights parachute team, would be hospitalized for about two weeks and grounded for a couple of months. She suffered two broken bones in one wrist and a chipped ankle bone.

The 5-foot-2 Ms. Bennett, 20, who was recently inducted into the Golden Knights, had completed 850 jumps with only one sprained ankle on her record. But during Friday's jump, as she reached the 2,000-foot level, her parachute only partially opened. She pulled the chord on her reserve chute, thinking "something above my head is better than nothing," she said. But the reserve chute tangled in the other chute's cords. Apparently, the two chutes slowed her descent to between 60 mph and 70 mph. "I remember looking at the ground and saying, 'Oh gosh, here it comes,'" she said. "I turned my head away and hit the ground on my right side, bounced and landed on my left side." Ms. Bennett landed in a freshly plowed field. It was "wet and muddy and soft and gushy, and they said that took most of the shock," she said. Moments after the fall, Ms. Bennett was found by some of the eight other Golden Knights who had participated in the routine style and accuracy jump.

She was taken to Womack Hospital and listed in stable condition. Ms. Bennett comes from a politically prominent family. Her father, Bert Bennett of Winston-Salem, is former chairman of the N.C. Democratic Party, campaign manager for former Gov. Terry Sanford, and influential adviser to Gov. Jim Hunt. Her brother, John Bennett, is Hunt's appointments aide.

"It's lucky she's alive," said John Bennett. "We were mighty lucky," Bert Bennett added. "As a parent with eight children (I am) used to that kind of news."

Tractors Assist Snowbound

By The Associated Press

Oklahoma farm tractors sorted to rescue travelers stranded in fender-deep snow after a fierce Gulf storm battered the southern Great Plains with winds that blew the snow into 6-foot drifts.

The Groundhog Day storm left the deepest drifts in Texas and frustrated road cleanup operations in Oklahoma, where many highways had only one lane open after a snowfall of up to 18 inches.

It was also the day the National Weather Service issued its 30-day forecast, which again predicted below normal temperatures for most of the eastern United States. On the bright side, the weather service said, there is supposed to be less than normal rain or snow in most areas of the country.

Tuesday's storm hit northwestern Kansas with up to 9 inches of snow and splashed Arkansas with freezing rain before petering out en route to the Great Lakes.

"Anybody in a two-wheel drive vehicle can't navigate at all — and a four-wheel-drive can't because the road's blocked with stranded two-wheel drivers," said Woods County sheriff's dispatcher Beyerly Yadon. Schools in northwestern Oklahoma were closed and stranded travelers doubled up with strangers in crowded motels.

The storm plastered the panhandle of Texas with up to 9 inches of snow and "we've got drifts all over everywhere," said dispatcher Cindy Farr of the Ochiltree County sheriff's department in Perryton, Texas. Schools in Amarillo and other panhandle towns were shut.

Michigan and other northern states braced for another storm billed as the twin of a storm that killed at least 56 people in a snowfall up to 2 feet deep Sunday and Monday.

But the storm "looks most like a fizzle," said National Weather Service forecaster John McLeod in North Little Rock, Ark. The northwest corner of Arkansas got snow for about two hours, but it didn't stick, and sleet and snow hit the eastern part of the state.

Another storm dropped up to 16 inches of new snow in the Colorado Rockies and the state bundled up for bitter-cold weather.

In the East, icejams on rivers and streams caused more flooding. Water swirled for a third day through the streets of Oil City, Pa., north of Pittsburgh, and 100 people were asked to evacuate their homes in Renova, halfway across the state.

The storm brewed on the day Punxsutawney Phil, the Pennsylvania groundhog, emerged from his burrow and saw his shadow, signaling six more weeks of bad weather in an exceptionally mean winter.

Tuesday's snowstorm in Oklahoma dumped 18 inches of snow on the Woods County community of Waynoka, and officials there said reports of stranded travelers were still trickling in Tuesday. Farm tractors were used to reach some stranded cars.

Strong northerly winds pushing cold arctic air dropped temperatures below zero from eastern Montana to northern Minnesota.

In Centralia, Ill., the mail carriers had begun making their appointed rounds Tuesday, after being shut in for a day.

Voting Rights Charges Anger Tar Heel Brock

WASHINGTON (AP) — The man in charge of elections in North Carolina says he's angry that a civil rights activist has accused the state of massive abuse of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

Steve Suits of Atlanta, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, said North Carolina has violated the act 150 times. He testified Monday before a Senate judiciary committee looking into the act.

Alex K. Brock, North Carolina chairman of the state Board of Elections, responded: "If the Congress listens to somebody from Atlanta saying things like that about North Carolina, then we don't have a damn prayer anyway."

According to Suits, the state ignored the pre-clearance provision of the act when 150 voting laws were passed between 1965 and 1979.

A key element of the Voting Rights Act requires that states and local jurisdictions covered by its provisions submit changes in election laws to the U.S. Justice Department for approval before those laws are put into effect.

But Brock said he "just submitted 40 different changes" made during the 1981 session of the state legislature.

Brock admitted that the state didn't submit a 1968 amendment to the state constitution for review because he was told that the amendment, which said that no county lines could be crossed for the purpose of legislative redistricting, did not substantially change the way reapportionment had been handled.

The Justice Department later ruled that not submitting the amendment was a violation of the act and that the amendment could not be enforced.

Suits said that 15 changes in local voting laws were also made in some of the 40 counties covered by the act, but were not sent to Washington for review.

In 39 instances, cities covered by the act never told the Justice Department about annexations, said a spokeswoman for the council.

Port Will Have Representative

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt has announced that North Carolina's ports will have a full-time representative in Japan, which he hopes will give the state's shipping business a boost.

Ichiro Iwao will be the new representative. Based in Tokyo, he will meet with Japanese shipping companies, exporters and importers, to promote the use of the state's ports. He will also promote the ports in other Far East countries.

"This is another step we are taking to secure a strong position for North Carolina in the significantly increasing business relationships between the U.S. and Japan," Hunt said at a "Doing Business with Japan" seminar at North Carolina State University Monday.

Seek Delay Cutoff Students' Social Security Aid

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several dozen congressmen are trying to delay a scheduled cutoff of Social Security benefits that has thousands of high school students scrambling to enter college before May 1.

Two House education subcommittees called a hearing today to examine the controversy about the cutoff and what some critics contend was an inadequate effort by the Social Security Administration to alert high school students to the change.

Among the scheduled witnesses were Reps. Harold L. Volkmer, D-Mo., who said he has 45 co-sponsors for his bill to delay the cutoff until Oct. 31, and Gerald B.H. Solomon, R-N.Y., who has nearly three dozen co-sponsors for a bill delaying it until June 30.

The Social Security Administration estimates that 100,000 to 150,000 high school seniors who have a parent who is dead, disabled or retired are affected by the cutoff. The American Association of State Colleges and Universities says 300,000 seniors may lose out.

Social Security benefits usually end at age 18 but, since 1965, students in college have been eligible for benefits up to age 22. Last year, 761,000 students got an average $259 a month, costing the trust fund $2.3 billion.

Congress agreed to phase out the student benefits last year as part of President Reagan's budget cuts. Current beneficiaries will get checks at reduced levels until 1985, but only students enrolled full-time in college before May 1 will be eligible.

The House Ways and Means subcommittee on Social Security also has called a hearing Friday to look into what it calls "the apparent lack of information" about the cutoff.

Social Security Commissioner John A. Svahn has defended his agency's actions and said it would have been improper for the agency to mail notices to students telling them "there was a way that they could probably circumvent the will of Congress."

Jim Brown, a Social Security Spokesman, said Monday that contrary to information previously released by the agency, pamphlets explaining the change in student benefits were included with notices sent to teen-age recipients five months before their 18th birthday.

Previously, the agency said it had put 2 million pamphlets in its field offices, but had not mailed them out.

The cutoff, which was not widely publicized until a month ago, has led thousands of high school seniors to seek early enrollment in community colleges and other institutions in order to qualify for the benefits. Some high school districts have allowed students to leave early and will accept the college credit to fulfill their scholastic requirements.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee which oversees Social Security, sent Svahn a letter two weeks ago suggesting a notice be sent to families with children about the impending cutoff.

There appeared to be little chance that Congress would change its mind and revive the student benefit. The phase-out was voted as part of the Omnibus Reconciliation Act along with other retrenchments, including the repeal of the minimum Social Security benefit and a host of relatively minor changes.

After an outcry about the minimum benefit, the Reagan administration and Congress backtracked and decided not to apply it retroactively.

Svahn said he believes, however, that most people recognize that "the Social Security system shouldn't be paying for an educational program."

Callous Youth Gets Sentence

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A teen-ager who showed a "perverse sense of morality" for trying to hide the body of a strangled girl has been sentenced to up to three years at a ranch for delinquent boys.

Superior Court Judge Thomas Hastings, sitting in Juvenile Court, imposed the sentence Tuesday on 16-year-old Kirk Rasmussen of Milpitas. The sentence means the youth must spend a minimum of three months at the ranch.

The 14-year-old girl, Marcy Conrad, allegedly was killed by a friend of Rasmussen.

Rasmussen was found guilty last week of being an accessory after the fact in Miss Conrad's killing. The judge said he would review the sentence in three months.

Anthony Jaques Broussard, 17, has been charged as an adult with rape and murder in the case. He allegedly took Rasmussen and seven other Milpitas High School students to see the body of his former girlfriend in a ravine near town before anyone called police.

Rasmussen told police he tried to cover the body with pieces of plastic and leaves to give Broussard "a head start...If it had been somebody else, I would have done the same thing if I knew him."

But Rasmussen told the judge he had done it because "she was naked and I felt it was the right thing to do...It was just like a reaction."

His lawyer, Anthony Leone, argued that Rasmussen has "great remorse. He has grasped the gravity of the whole situation."

But Hastings rejected Leone's request that he turn Rasmussen over to his parents. Hastings told Rasmussen he had a "perverse sense of morality."

"You're not what I would call a delinquent," the judge told the boy. "We're dealing with rehabilitation. You're from a good family and have good school attendance, and that sets you aside from 95 percent of the youngsters who come through here."

A preliminary hearing for Broussard, originally set for Monday, has been delayed pending an investigation into charges filed against him last week in connection with attacks on two other young girls.

ONE IDENTIFIED

TULA, Mexico (AP) — One of 13 murder victims whose bodies were dumped into the Valley of Mexico sewage system has been identified as a taxi driver hired by three Colombians believed to have been involved in bank robberies or drug trafficking, police say.

Renaming Jetport Ran Into Protest

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — The Portland International Jetport has been re-named for former Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, but an intended nice gesture almost didn't survive a protest.

"We tried to do something nice, but it backfired," City Councilor Linda Abramson said Tuesday. "It was very important that this be handled with the dignity that he (Muskie) deserves. I truly regret that didn't happen."

The idea to rename the airport for Muskie was the brainchild of former a Portland mayor and city councilor, Harold Loring, who spent several months quietly selling the idea to the council.

Muskie, the former presidential candidate, U.S. senator and secretary of state under President Carter "was delighted" about the idea when approached, according to a spokesman at the Washington office where Muskie now practices law.

Eight of the council's nine members agreed to the name change last month, but when a local television station asked viewers if they agreed with the move, 3,576 respondents said no and 2,614 said yes.

After the results were broadcast Friday night, councilors were inundated with phone calls, mostly from people opposed to the change.

The opposition prompted three councilors to initially oppose the change Monday night. But when an effort to table the issue for six months failed, only one councilor voted against renaming the jetport.

Church Planning Go Commerical

LONDON (AP) — The Roman Catholic Church is going a little commercial temporarily to help pay for Pope John Paul II's visit to Britain in May.

The church has authorized the sale of a variety of mementos ranging from 15-cent balloons in papal gold to a $1,800 gold watch inscribed with the papal coat of arms.

Papal Visit Ltd., the company established to help finance the pope's visit, will get 10 percent of the selling price of each of the items, with an undisclosed percentage going to International Management Group, an American marketing consulting agency.

The papal company and consulting firm rejected some souvenirs suggested by manufacturers, including a set of screwdrivers with a picture of the pope on the package. Robin Frost of the consulting agency said.

The February issue of the magazine features several of Evans' designs, mostly his specialty of bright, youthful evening separates.

Burt Is Elected Livestock Prexy

HOWARD BURT

Howard Burt of Calico has been elected president of the Pitt County Livestock Producers Association for 1982.

Burt, manager of a 60-sow hog operation, said the organization's primary concern would be to increase youth involvement. "We want to beef up the junior program and get more young people involved," he noted. "We have a fair number participating in programs now but we'd like to build it as much as possible."

The new president also said the organization would like to increase the number of entries in the annual market hog show it sponsors during the Pitt County Fair, as well as enlarge the building so that entries could remain there throughout the entire week.

"Right now we have space for 90 entries doubling up," he explained, "and last year we had 78. We need more space."

Guest speaker for the organization's annual banquet at which Burt was elected was Jim Butler, who also emphasized the importance of youth involvement in livestock. Butler is an animal husbandry specialist at N.C. State University.

The livestock association presented three major awards at its banquet as well as numerous friend-of-livestock certificates.

Bill Farrior, son of Mr. and Mrs. B.F. Farrior of Farmville, won the junior livestock award for 1981, given to the young person who achieved the most in livestock during the year. Farrior participated in the Coastal Plains Junior Livestock Show and Sale.

The dedicated service award went to Harold Flanagan, honoring his work with youth in livestock.

Charles Gaskins won the distinguished service award for his efforts for the livestock association in the past year.

The following other officers were elected for 1982: John Redden Lewis, vice president and Ray Surnell, secretary-treasurer. Voted to the board of directors were Charles Gaskins, John Brown, Ray Hardee, Glen Stewart and Mike Regans.

"Clothes For The Man of Distinction"

STATE SCHOOL BOARD MEMBERS VISIT BETHEL ... Norma Turnage and Dr. C.R. Edwards, members of the North Carolina State Board of Education, observed programs at the elementary school this morning with Pitt County school officials. Of special interest to the state board members was the administration of Title I instructional programs. Pitt County's method, according to school officials, eliminates pulling students from regular classes. Turnage and Edwards also examined the county's concept of defining grade levels in academic areas, the parent reporting system and accelerated programs in math and science. Keep-The-2-Year Term Committee Appointed

By BILL OUTLAW
Associated Press Writer
Seventeen people ranging from the editor of a religious newspaper to the state president of the AFL-CIO today were appointed vice chairmen of the Keep the Two-Year Term committee.

The appointments were announced by committee chairman Tom Gilmore. Previously appointed as honorary co-chairmen are former Govs. Terry Sanford, Robert Scott and James Holshouser.

Several of those appointed today made statements endorsing the concept of two-year terms as bringing elected representatives closer to the people.

"We have always prided ourselves a citizen legislature," said state Sen. Robert W. Wynne, D-Wake, "but if we go to four-year terms, that's going to move us closer to a professional legislature."

Marse Grant, editor of the Biblical Recorder, also endorsed the committee, which was formed to oppose the passage of a state constitutional amendment that would double the terms of legislators from two years to four. Grant said that four year terms would give legislators too much power and could cause them to lose touch with the people they represent.

Others who spoke included E.A. Britt, president of the North Carolina AFL-CIO.

"We feel the government should be accountable to the people, and a gap of four years between elections for locally elected officials will jeopardize this accountability," he said.

Other appointed to the panel include: former state Sen. Ralph H. Scott of Alamance County; state labor commissioner John C. Brooks; Coy Privette, executive director of the Christian Action League; state Rep. Bertha Holt, D-Alamance; state Sen. Donald R. Kincaid, R-Caldwell; state Sen. Kenneth Spaulding, D-Durham; state Rep. Jay Howard Coble, R-Guilford; state Rep. E. Graham Bell, D-Gaston; state Rep. Marie Colton, D-Buncombe.

Also on the panel were: Bobby Hurst, chairman of the North Carolina Federation of Young Republicans; Gary Bartlett, president of the North Carolina Young Democrats; Robert Drakeford, president of the North Carolina Association of Black Mayors; John Wilson, president of the North Carolina Association of Educators; A.J. Howard, former legislator from Durham.

Say Massacre By Guerrillas

By EDUARDO VAZQUEZ BECKER
Associated Press Writer
SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — El Salvador's government claimed leftist guerrillas massacred 150 peasants in a northeastern village and that its army repulsed a daylight attack on a city in the southeast.

However, the Defense Ministry did not dispute the rebels' claim of holding another northeastern town, Corinto, since Sunday.

A Defense Ministry spokesman, Col. Eusebio Coto, said leftist guerrillas carried out a bloody weekend raid on Nueva Trinidad, about 75 miles northeast of San Salvador near the Honduran border.

Coto said the raiders killed the local military commander and nine of his men, then slaughtered about 150 peasants, more than half the population of the village. Another unconfirmed report said the guerrillas suffered some casualties and forced surviving villagers to carry away the rebels' dead and wounded when they fled at dawn Sunday.

Journalists who visited Nueva Trinidad Tuesday afternoon said they saw about a dozen bodies still lying in the streets. Independent observers speculated that the Defense Ministry exaggerated the attack on Nueva

NCNB Studies Acquisition

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Officers of NCNB Corp. and Bancshares of North Carolina Inc. said Tuesday there have been discussions of possible acquisition of Bank of North Carolina by North Carolina National Bank.

North Carolina National Bank is the major subsidiary of NCNB Corp.

On Friday there will be a meeting of the directors of Bancshares to discuss the possible purchase, said C.D. Spangler Jr., Bancshares chairman.

North Carolina National Bank, headquartered in Charlotte, has assets of $7.2 billion. Bank of North Carolina, headquartered in Raleigh, has assets of $417 million.

Union Attacking New Federalism

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's "new federalism" proposals are under attack by the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, the largest union of state and local workers in the nation.

The president's plan would cost the states more than $17 billion during the first year, the organization said Tuesday.

"We have caught the Republicans in a significant misstatement of the effects of his 'turnback' program," said Gerald W. McEntee, AFSCME president.

Reagan last week proposed turning over more than 40 federally assisted programs to the states, with a federally financed trust fund helping with the transition, and Washington taking over the Medicare program.

Reporters from the New York Times and the Washington Post who visited rebel-controlled areas in northeast El Salvador's Morazan Province reported last week that villagers there told them government troops shot and killed as many as 1,000 unarmed peasants during an anti-guerrilla sweep in December.

The Defense Ministry denied the reports, and the U.S. State Department told Congress on Monday that American investigators concluded it was "impossible to prove or disprove excessive violence during the sweep." But Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders said the investigators found "no evidence...that government forces systematically massacred civilians."

INVITED TO SEE

Lift Boycott On Miami Beach

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Miami Beach, exempted from a convention boycott organized by the National Organization for Women, hopes to begin recapturing some of the $200 million it estimates it lost during the last two years.

The NOW national board voted to exempt the resort city from the boycott because "it has consistently elected a 100 percent pro-ERA delegation to its state Legislature and...provided chief Florida sponsors for the ERA, NOW spokeswoman Gloria Sackman-Reed said Tuesday.

The rest of Florida, along with other states that haven't endorsed the ERA, remains under the boycott.

Associated Press Writer
ATLANTA (AP) — Blood stains found in Wayne B. Williams' car and ashes from behind his house have been introduced as evidence in his murder trial despite defense objections that prosecutors are turning the trial into a "Hollywood show."

Three Georgia crime lab serologists testified Tuesday that blood stains found in a car driven by the 23-year-old Williams matched the blood types of two of 12 young blacks whose deaths prosecutors claim were part of a pattern of killings linked to Williams.

But one of the serologists, John G. Wegel Jr., testified that even after analyzing enzymes from the blood stains and from the blood of the two victims, the less common of the two stains could have been made by blood from seven out of every 100 people.

Wegel said the other stain came from a blood and enzyme type that is present in 24 percent of the population.

Another witness, Fulton County Police officer William Clay, identified ashes taken from a barbecue pit behind Williams' house. He said the ashes appeared to be burned pictures, but he said he did not know what the pictures were.

Defense lawyer Alvin Binder objected to the introduction of the ashes, claiming they were irrelevant. Judge Clarence Cooper did not rule immediately on the objection.

Binder also interrupted Wegel's testimony to accuse prosecutors of staging a "Hollywood show" by claiming that Wegel had developed a new scientific technique for determining the age of blood stains.

Cooper overruled that objection, and Wegel then testified that one enzyme found in the blood stains normally will disappear within eight weeks after blood is removed from the body.

He concluded that the stains were made less than eight weeks before June 3, when Williams' car was seized by authorities. Linda Tillman, another of the crime lab serologists, had testified earlier, however, that the age of blood stains cannot be determined.

The two victims with the same blood type as the stains found in Williams' car were John Howard Porter, 28, who was found stabbed to death on April 12, and William Barrett, 17, who was found strangled to death on May 12. Barrett also had several stab wounds in his abdomen which a medical examiner said were inflicted after death.

Williams is on trial for the slayings of Nathaniel Cater, 27, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21, two of 28 young blacks whose deaths during a 22-month period have been investigated by a special police task force.

Cooper has allowed prosecutors to introduce evidence of 10 other slayings, including the deaths of Porter and Barrett, in an attempt to show a pattern of killings that relate to the deaths of Cater and Payne.

The strongest evidence linking the 12 killings are some 700 hairs and fibers found on the victims' bodies and later matched to 18 different sources from Williams' home and car, including his head hair.

Larry Peterson, a state crime lab microanalyst and one of three prosecution experts who have testified about the fiber evidence, said Tuesday the fiber matchups make it "virtually impossible" that 11 of the victims did not have "contact with the home and/or automobile of Wayne Williams."

The victim not included in Peterson's testimony was Joseph "Jo Jo" Bell, a 15-year-old who was found in the South River of suburban DeKalb County in April 1981.

Only two fibers from his body were matched to items in Williams' home or car.

Peterson and the other prosecution fiber experts have testified that a fiber matchup does not provide a positive indication of contact between a victim and Williams. It means only that the two could have come into contact.

But because of the large number of such matchups, all three prosecution experts have said they believe there is no doubt that Williams had contact with 11 of the victims.

Barry Gaudette, a scientific adviser for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, testified Tuesday he examined fibers found on three of the victims. The possibility that all the fibers found on those victims came from sources other than the Williams' environment "is so remote as to not be worth considering," he said.

Peterson conceded to Binder on Tuesday, however, that "hundreds, maybe thousands" of fibers found on the 12 victims were not matched to anything in the Williams' environment and were not considered significant.

"Some of those fibers you disregarded could be the fibers of a killer, couldn't they?" Binder asked Peterson.

"I wouldn't know," he replied.

Violation Point Will Cost Less

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina Reinsurance Facility set a 10.5 percent recoupment surcharge Tuesday on automobile insurance policies for drivers with traffic violation points on their license.

The surcharge will affect policies that begin or are renewed after April 1 and before March 1, 1983.

The 10.5 percent rate will mean a decrease in annual premiums for those drivers with points who renew their policy after April 1. The surcharge on similar policies renewed or started between Jan. 1 and March 31 was 27.6 percent.

The reinsurance facility is a pool set up by the various auto insurance companies operating in North Carolina to cover drivers who are considered to be high risks. By law, the facility must operate on a no-profit, no-loss basis.

Prison Terms Given For Migrant Labor Slavery

Building in New Bern Tuesday after three men were sentenced for conspiring to enslave migrant workers. (AP Laserphoto)

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — The editor of the New Bern Sun-Journal says he'll file charges against people who allegedly assaulted reporters during a sentencing hearing for three migrant labor field bosses convicted of slavery charges.

A 39-year-old Alabama man was sentenced to life in prison during the Tuesday hearing for his conviction on charges of conspiring to enslave migrant farm workers that resulted in a man's death.

Two other men were sentenced to shorter prison terms for conspiring to enslave workers.

After the sentencing, two reporters and two photographers said they were attacked and spit upon by several spectators.

About 11 people who appeared to be family members of the defendants were in the courtroom for the sentencing.

Linda Chion, 24, of the New Bern Sun-Journal, said she and photographer Dan Maxheimer, 20, were spit upon and she was punched in the face by a woman who tried to take Maxheimer's film.

Francine Sawyer, a reporter for WCTI-TV, said she and television cameraman Kim Courter also were spit upon and threatened.

None of them was injured, although some of Ms. Chion's hair was pulled out.

Robert Stephens, editor of the newspaper, said Tuesday that the paper was trying to gather film clips and photographs of the incident, and plans to file charges.

U.S. District Judge W. Earl Britt sentenced John Lester Harris, of Bullock County, Ala., to life and three five-year terms to run consecutively.

Dennis Warren, 19, who was found guilty of the same charge, was sentenced to 20 years and was also given two five-year terms to run concurrently.

Richard Wayne Warren, 22, brother of Dennis Warren, was sentenced to a split sentence, with six months to be served in prison and five years on probation for his conviction on a lesser charge of conspiring to enslave workers. He also was convicted of one count of involuntary servitude.

The Warren brothers are from Orlando, Fla. As he sentenced the defendants, Britt said the way they ran their labor camp was "atrocious."

"It's a black mark on you, a black mark on others who might try to do it in a fashion that's humane," he said.

Dennis Warren and Harris were found guilty last month of a slavery conspiracy resulting in the death of Robert Lee Anderson, 40, who collapsed Sept. 13 in a Nash County field.

Two women began to cry as Dennis Warren's sentence was read. One became hysterical and both left the courtroom. A court official was sent to calm them, disrupting the proceedings momentarily.

Hard To Find

FORT COLLINS, Colo. (AP) — A bad man is hard to find these days, officials in Larimer County say.

They're looking for an ex-offender willing to do a little more time — on the county Community Corrections Advisory Board.

The county likes to have a n ex-outlaw on the board to add a perspective not available to those who have not been jailed, board Chairman Charles Unfug said.

The only qualification other than a prison record is that the offender already have served his time and not be under parole or other supervision, he said.

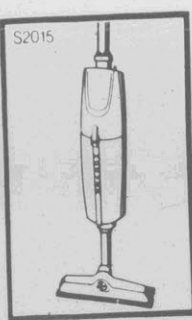

A convict who was in the state prison is preferable, Unfug told the county commissioners this week, but a misdemeanor offender who only served county jail time also might qualify.

Once an ex-offender is found, he's sometimes hard to keep, Community Corrections director Dennis Gatlin said. The previous one had to be removed from the board when he had another scrape with the law.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — Rain is expected in the forecast period Wednesday until Thursday morning for Atlantic coast states. Snow flurries are forecast through the central Plains. Cold weather is expected for most of the country. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
Rain and freezing rain fell across most of North Carolina today, but a complex weather pattern caused wide temperature differences, with readings ranging from the mid-30s in the mountains to over 60 along the coast. A cold pocket of air remains trapped at the surface across much of the inland areas of the state. This is a result of high pressure located over the New England states with a ridge of high pressure extending south through the Piedmont of the Carolinas. Meanwhile, a warm front that was along the southeast coast Tuesday moved up through the coastal region during the night. This resulted in mild southerly winds just inland along the coast. To complicate matters even further, a low pressure area located over the northern Gulf of Mexico has spread heavy rains and thunderstorms through sections of Alabama, Georgia and into southwestern North Carolina. Heavy rains were forecast in western counties, where flash flood warnings were posted. Recreational weather outlook: Scattered areas of rain and drizzle and fog through the interior will become heavier as the day progresses. There will be some scattered thunderstorms across the mountains which will result in some locally heavy rains. This, added to the already saturated grounds will produce some rapid runoff, will cause rises in streams and rivers over western North Carolina today. A wide range in temperatures will occur today, ranging from the low 70s along the coast to the 40s and 50s through the interior portion of the state. A weak cold front will move slowly across the mountains tonight and into the interior section of the state on Thursday. Some drier air will spread over the state behind this front. Thus, the showers will gradually end from the west tonight and Thursday but some showers will linger over the east into Thursday. A small craft advisory remains in effect along the coast for gusty southerly winds.

New Mecca Of Outlet Malls

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — The ailing economy has been a boon to retail outlets along Interstate 85 in southwest Burlington, say developers who are planning even more outlets for the area.

Earl Thompson, who is coordinating development of a new outlet center called Burlington Outlet Park for a group of investors, says people used to look down on the outlet stores because they thought outlets meant second-quality merchandise. But outlets are in style now, he says.

"People are looking for their money's worth. You get a lot of upper middle-class shoppers in outlets now. There's something about the thrill of looking for a bargain that packs them in."

Thompson says its owners hope Burlington Outlet Park will become a thriving addition to the city's booming collection of outlets.

He says outlets are a relatively new marketing technology, although they have existed for many years as small stores in the backs of factories.

The centers break all the rules of retail sales strategy — there are few frills, they often stock only one category of merchandise and claim to offer discounts from 25 to 50 percent.

That strategy is bringing buyers to Burlington by the busload.

The new facility will have space for as many as 40 stores and is expected to open in March.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices were little changed today amid uncertainty over the interest-rate outlook. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped .10 to 852.45 in the first half hour. Gainers and losers were evenly balanced in the over-all tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues. Analysts noted that the market was able to stabilize Tuesday after a selloff Monday that drove the Dow Jones industrial average down 19.41 points. But they said traders were still cautiously awaiting the outcome of the federal government's quarterly sale of intermediate and long-term debt securities this week. The Treasury sold $5 billion worth of notes Tuesday. Still to come were $2.5 billion in 10-year notes today and another $2.5 billion of 30-year bonds Thursday. Duke Power led the active list in early trading, unchanged at 21½. A 100,000-share block traded at that price. On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average rose .86 to 852.55. Gainers led losers 4 to 3 on the NYSE, and the exchange's composite index rose 0.16 to 68.17. Big Board volume totaled 45.02 million shares, down from 47.72 million the day before. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index rose 1.60 to 288.98.

Pirate Football Program Remains Among Div. I-A

From Wire and Staff Reports

East Carolina University's football program is among those listed by the NCAA as remaining in the Division I-A, or major division, it was announced last night.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) has reclassified 39 schools to its Division I-AA in football competition, reducing the number of I-A schools from 137 to 92.

The decision announced Tuesday increases the number of Division I-AA schools to 89. The numbers could change because the classification of six schools that had been classified I-A is still undetermined pending further NCAA study.

North Carolina schools that will drop from I-A to I-AA are Appalachian State and Western Carolina. Furman and The Citadel of the Southern Conference were also dropped to the I-AA classification.

The NCAA left East Carolina in Division I-A, as well as all schools in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The action was the result of a decision at a special NCAA convention in December. All Ivy League members but Yale were reclassified to Division I-AA as a result of the action Tuesday.

East Carolina Athletic Director Ken Karr took the news in stride, noting that he had expected ECU to be retained in the upper group, despite early report in the media that the school would be dropped. Those reports stemmed from a United Press International writer in St. Louis who projected a list of his own following the special convention of the NCAA late last year.

"We're exactly where we expected to be," Karr said this morning. "Obviously we are glad that we have been able to clarify the issue and that the NCAA has issued a list that we can direct our scheduling activities toward."

"Our constituents obviously wanted us to continue to play at this level. Now we have to pursue the financial support that will allow us to continue to compete at this level."

"We're exactly where we expected to be. Obviously we are glad that we have been able to clarify the issue and that the NCAA has issued a list that we can direct our scheduling activities toward."

—ECU AD Dr. Ken Karr

Ed Emory, ECU's head football coach, was out of town on a recruiting trip, and unavailable for comment.

The reclassification, effective Sept. 1, will force some schools that are still classified Division I-A but are members of a Division I-AA league to make a decision, said Dave Cawood, an NCAA spokesman.

Cawood said the schools that moved down to Division I-AA failed to meet three criteria for Division I-A membership:

—Sponsor at least eight varsity sports, including football.

—Play at least 60 percent of their games against Division I-A members.

—Have averaged more than 17,000 paid attendance at home games for the past four years, or play in a stadium that contains at least 30,000 seats and have averaged 17,000 paid home attendance for at least one of the past four years.

Cawood said there were two notable exceptions.

A school may stay in Division I-A, despite failing to meet the above criteria, if it is in a conference in which at least six teams play football and more than half meet the Division I-A criteria.

If a school fails to meet the third criteria, it may remain in Division I-A if it has averaged 20,000 paid attendance in all games for a four-year period.

The Division I-A members must continue to meet the criteria every year if they are to remain in that group, Cawood said.

East Carolina's 1982 schedule, released yesterday, includes six teams that have been reclassified as I-A. They include N.C. State, Central Michigan, Missouri, Florida State, West Virginia and Temple. Division I-AA members on the schedule include East Tennessee State, Richmond, Illinois State, Texas-Arlington and William & Mary.

Karr indicated that he understood that the 60 percent (seven games out of eleven) would not take affect until the 1983 season.

Pirates To Face Baptist

East Carolina University's men return to action Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. in Minges Coliseum, hosting resurgent Baptist College of Charleston, S.C.

The Buccaneers bring in a 10-9 record, as they are enjoying their best season in nearly ten years. The ten victories so far this year is the most since Baptist recorded a 16-14 record back in 1972-73, and is the first time since then that they have won as many as nine games in a season.

East Carolina, after a heart-breaking 81-71 loss to the University of Richmond Saturday night in an ECAC-South game, is 7-10, and will be seeking its second win over the Buccaneers this year. Earlier in the season, the Pirates gained a 70-56 victory in Charleston. In that game, Tony Byles led the Pirates with 15 points, while Morris Hargrove added 13.

However, Byles is currently sidelined with a broken hand, and will be unavailable for play in the game. He's expected to be back in a week or so.

In his place, freshman Bruce Peartree has come on, however, and was named as the ECAC-South Rookie of the Week for his play against UNC Charlotte and Richmond.

Baptist is led by 6-7 senior forward Eddie Talley, who scores as a 12.4 clip and pulls down 5.1 rebounds a game. He's joined in the front court by 6-5 junior Reggie Walker, hitting 10.7 points a game.

Tom TenBroeck, a 6-8 freshman, is expected to start at center. He's averaging only 2.9 points a game, but has become a starter only recently.

At the guards are 6-3 sophomore Richard Richardson, hitting 6.6 points a game, and 5-11 freshman Marcus Beasley, hitting 2.8 per game.

Overall, Baptist is scoring at

'Sports For The People' Group Making Waves

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

For decades, bigtime college sports — mostly football and basketball — have been saturated with subsidization of athletes, hypocrisy, double dealing and, of late, another betting scandal.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), formed largely for the purpose of policing and eliminating such abuses, has dealt with the problem with pillowed gloves.

The infection hasn't disappeared. It has festered and grown worse.

Now a hitherto rather obscure and unlikely organization called Sports for the People has stepped in and started making waves. They are big waves. They could swallow up the whole mad mess.

Head of the group is a young, bearded sociologist named Dr. Cary Goodman of New York. He has surrounded himself with a battery of lawyers, sociologists and medical men for the purpose of restoring a sense of decency and fair play to all sports.

"We have been in existence seven years," said Dr. Goodman, a Colgate alumus now living in New York. "We are an advocate group, fighting for the right of everyone to participate in and enjoy sports. We have sponsored fitness programs for seniors 60 years and older. We have sought to end discrimination and recently have gained the support of the National Football League Players Association, the National Conference of Black Lawyers and the Center for Athletes' Rights and Education."

In Tallahassee, Bob Goin, assistant FSU athletic director, said a special committee was studying the allegations. Besides his physical problems, Bozeman told of long absences from class during the basketball season and how grades were made up through correspondence courses, with answers supplied. He told of illegal payments, drug use and other violations.

"Bozeman is the first active athlete to stand up and tell all," Goodman said. "This is not a personal problem, it is a national problem."

It's a battle that the NCAA has been fighting ineffectively since a "Sanity Code" was adopted by the colleges in the 1950s, designed to curtail over-emphasis, subsidization and under-the-table payments.

Such abuses have existed since the game went bigtime. College sports were blackened by the widespread point-shaving scandals of the 1950s and 1960s (repeated recently in the Boston College case) and rocked more recently by recurring violations on the part of some of America's biggest institutions.

The Pac 5 became virtually the Pac 6 when half of the conference schools was charged with falsifying transfer documents. There's been an unending parade of schools placed on probation over the last few years — Kentucky, UCLA, Arizona State, SMU, Miami, Fla., Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Nevada-Las Vegas, and on.

It's a mad cycle. You have to win. Victories bring bowl bids and TV exposure worth millions. This puts undue pressure on recruiting, spawning unsavory practices.

"The problem," says Goodman, "is that the NCAA can't make up its mind whether athletes are workers, subject to workers' compensation, or students. If they're students, they have the right to a guaranteed full education and all the rights that go with it."

Williamston's boys, whipping boy of the Northeastern Conference, helped out Roanoke's Redskins last night with a 65-6 overtime victory, and that clinched the league championship for Roanoke.

Williamston's girls, meanwhile, grabbed a share of first place in their division, gaining a 35-32 win over Plymouth.

The Williamston girls are now 10-3 in league play and 10-4 overall. Plymouth falls to 10-3 in the league and 12-4 overall. Roanoke and Tarboro could also grab a share of the lead, pending victories last night.

In the boys' game, Williamston and Plymouth battled through a 15-15 tie in the first period before Williamston eased out into a 32-30 halftime lead. In the third period, the Tigers extended the city, who gave a "kiss and tell" testimony of the university's insensitivity toward its athletes.

"It happens everywhere — they put profits in front of persons," Bozeman charged, detailing how he was neglected by team doctors after suffering a torn Achilles, given pain-killing drugs and told to continue when he felt the injury could cause permanent damage.

"I wrote letters to everybody," he said, insisting he had taken his case to higher university personnel and even the NCAA. "Also, I had meetings. They ignored me."

"They told me, like they tell everyone who raises a protest, that I was just a problem maker."

In Tallahassee, Bob Goin, assistant FSU athletic director, said a special committee was studying the allegations.

Besides his physical problems, Bozeman told of long absences from class during the basketball season and how grades were made up through correspondence courses, with answers supplied. He told of illegal payments, drug use and other violations.

"Bozeman is the first active athlete to stand up and tell all," Goodman said. "This is not a personal problem, it is a national problem."

Panthers Rally To Whip Jaguars

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

BETHEL — Just when Farmville Central appeared primed to spring perhaps the biggest upset of the season in the Eastern Carolina Conference, the Jaguars wilted — the victim of a relentless full-court press and a resurrected offense.

Down by 13 points seven minutes into the game, North Pitt closed to within five at half and then used its full-court press to key a 14-0 surge in the third quarter to escape with a 47-35 win over Farmville Central Tuesday evening.

Earlier, in the girls' game, North Pitt beat Farmville Central, 42-34.

"When you can't score, you can't win and we couldn't score," Farmville Central coach Mike Terrell said. "It's hard for me to understand how a team can be so hot and then so cold."

Farmville Central, now 7-11 overall and 2-6 in the ECC, connected on nearly 50% from the field in the first two periods as the Jaguars raced to an early 13-point lead and a five-point halftime advantage.

In the second half, however, the Jaguars hit only 21% in the face of a North Pitt press that forced an up-tempo and hampered the Jaguars' ability to set up their half-court offense.

"Their press really hurt us," Terrell said. "I don't know if the guys got up tight or what. We did the same things offensively we did in the first half but the shots didn't go in the second half."

The first half — particularly the first seven minutes of the game — was all Farmville Central as the Jaguars raced to a 14-1 lead. Farmville scored but 21 points the remaining 25 minutes.

The Panthers outscored the Jaguars, 14-2, over the next 4½ minutes to close within one (16-15), but could get no closer for the time being and trailed at the half, 20-15.

The second half was a reversal of the first half as North Pitt outscored the Jaguars, 14-0, in the first five minutes of the third quarter to take command of a game that was essential for North Pitt to win as it continues its quest for the conference title.

The win, which comes on the heels of a 48-45 loss to Greene Central Friday night, leaves North Pitt at 13-5 overall and 9-1 in the conference, one game ahead of the Rams. Greene Central, now 7-1 in the ECC, nipped Ayden-Grifton, 60-59, Friday evening.

"This was two different ballgames," North Pitt coach Cobby Deans said as he looked over his team's stat sheet. "We did a lot of standing around in the first half."

Just how much standing around is reflected in the rebounding statistics. The Jaguars outrebounded North Pitt, 11-1, in the first quarter and 19-6 for the half.

For the game, Farmville won the battle of the boards, 30-23. Andrew Edwards led the Jaguars in rebounding with 10. Guard Gary Hobgood pulled down eight rebounds — six in the first half.

Muscular forward Dennis Bradley led North Pitt in rebounding with 10. Toby Crandol led the Panthers in scoring with 14 points and Greg Hines added 10 points.

Neither team shot well from the field. The Panthers connected on 18 of 43 shots (41.8%). Farmville, on the other hand, hit 14 of 43 shots (32.5%) and just five of 24 (20.8%) in the second half.

"We just became more aggressive in the second half and that carried over to the boards and to our offense," Deans said. "By pushing up the tempo that made us play more aggressive."

North Pitt was anything but aggressive in the first period. The game started with Tony Hargrove gliding down the middle for a layup and following that with another layup and a jumper to give the Jaguars an 8-0 lead.

After a free throw by North Pitt's Toby Crandol, the Jaguars used a jumper by Melvin Sutton, a follow shot by Hargrove and two free throws by Edwards to up their margin to 14-1 with a minute left in the quarter.

North Pitt's first field goal came moments later when Crandol hit a driving jumper with 56 seconds left. Three straight turnovers by the Jaguars — all against the North Pitt press — were turned into a free throw by Hines and a three-point play by Crandol as the Panthers scored six straight points to close to 14-7 at the end of the period.

The rally continued into the second period as North Pitt ran off an 8-2 string in the first 3½ minutes of the quarter to close within one (16-15). However, a backdoor cut by Edwards and a drive by Barnes stopped the surge and gave the Jaguars a 20-15 lead at intermission.

Farmville missed an opportunity to stretch its lead further in the quarter by missing five free throws. The Jaguars hit seven of 14 from the line for the game.

The second half started out like the first half, but with the roles reversed as North Pitt dominated play from the outset with the help of their defensive pressure.

"We knew they were gonna come out and press us," Terrell said. "We just didn't execute and we know how to do it."

The first four minutes of the second half were a nightmare for Terrell. His Jaguars missed nine shots and had four turnovers. The Panthers, meanwhile, hit seven straight shots to take a 29-20 lead.

A layup and power move inside by Hines started the 14-0 surge. Crandol added two jumpers from the right corner — the first giving the Panthers their first lead of the game at 21-20.

When the quarter ended North Pitt had hit nine of 13 field goals to outscore the Jaguars, 18-4, and led, 33-24. Farmville hit just one of 13 from the floor in the period.

The Jaguars got within six (36-30) two minutes into the final quarter on a jumper by Hargrove, but came no closer.

In the girls' game, North Pitt stretched a six-point halftime lead to nine in the second half and then held off a fourth-quarter charge by Farmville Central to capture its sixth ECC win in 10 outings.

After a slow first quarter that saw both teams score just four points, the Pant-HERS, now 8-8 overall, grabbed the lead in the second quarter and never relinquished it.

Sherry Bradley sandwiched two layups around a pair of free throws by Gladys Roberson to give North Pitt a 17-11 lead with 1:28 remaining. The quarter ended with the Pant-HERS up, 19-13.

A follow shot by Rhonda Harris and a free throw by Cynthia Hart pulled the Lady Jaguars within three (19-16) a minute into the third period. However, a three-point play by Patricia Daniels and a bucket by Sudi Sharpe extended the Pant-HER lead to 24-17.

North Pitt, which led, 28-21, at the end of the third quarter, opened up a nine-point bulge (34-25) only to see Farmville outscore the Pant-HERS, 6-1, over the next 2½ minutes and close to within four (35-31).

It was as close as the Lady Jaguars got. Sharpe, who scored nine points and led the Pant-HERS off the boards with 16 rebounds, worked inside for a bucket moments later to push the lead back to six and all but seal the win.

North Pitt was led in scoring by Roberson with 10 points. Roberson, the only Pant-HER in double figures, also had nine steals. Both Bradley and Linda Harrell pulled down 10 rebounds for North Pitt.

Farmville Central, now 3-13 overall and 1-7 in the ECC, was led in scoring by Rose Lang with 12 points.

"I'll take it," North Pitt coach Randy Avery said.

"Defensively, I thought we played well, but offensively we played poorly. But I'm just tickled that we're 6-4 in the conference."

Avery said much of his team's offensive problems were caused by the Lady Jaguars' size.

"Farmville Central matches up with us size-wise as well as anybody in the conference," Avery said. "And that's fairly intimidating for players who are used to playing against smaller players."

North Pitt travels to Williamston tonight for a nonconference game. Farmville Central plays host to Ayden-Grifton Friday.

ond. That made it 14-13 for the Lady Tigers at the half.

Gryphons Hit 62.5% From Field In 84-61 Win Rocky Mount Shoots Down Rose

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Rocky Mount, setting a blistering pace from the field, pulled away from a stubborn Rose High School basketball team in the final period last night to race to an 84-61 Big East victory.

Rocky Mount's girls also pulled away late to win, taking a 74-60 victory.

The Gryphons, who hold a share of first place in the Big East, used the transition basket — mostly layups — and a complete domination of the boards to destroy the Rampants in the final ten minutes of play, breaking open what had been until that point a tight ball game.

Leading only 54-51 with 2:43 left in the third period, the Gryphons scored six straight points to close out the third quarter.

Then, after the Rampants got the opening basket of the fourth period, the Gryphons tossed in 16 straight points to break the game open.

The hot-shooting Rocky Mount team, which got so-o-o many easy baskets on the fast break, ended up with a blazing 62.5 percent from the floor. Rose, which had to put up the ball with more haste in the final period, finished with only a cool 40.9 percent. Both teams had been over 50 percent at the half, Rocky Mount shooting 78.3 percent and Rose, 57.1. In the second quarter, Rocky Mount missed just one shot — that one blocked — out of 11.

At the same time, the Gryphons were dominating the Rampants on the board like few teams have. By the time it was over, the Gryphons had pulled down 47 loose balls, while Rose got only 20. In the final quarter, Rose was out-rebounded, 20-4, as the Gryphons stealthily pulled away.

"The rebounding and the transition on defense killed us," Coach Jim Brewington said. "Nobody got a rebound," he complained of the taller Rampant team.

"For two and a half quarters, almost three quarters, we gave them a good game — as good as we could give them. But the fourth blew us away," he said.

Brewington said he felt the Rampants honestly had a chance at the game coming in.

"But we got to the place where we started making turnovers, and they got the ball back down court on us before we could regroup. We're too good a ball club to get beat like this."

Throughout the game, the Rampants would creep up on Rocky Mount only to fall back again. Then, just before Rocky Mount pulled away for good, Rose had the chance to cut it to just one point several times. "We missed a layup that would have cut it to one," Brewington said. "I'm not taking anything from Rocky Mount. They are a very good team. But our kids played hard. If they play like this the rest of the way, we'll be all right."

Rose managed to pull even only twice in the game at 2-2 and 14-14. Between that, Rocky Mount ran off ten straight points, for a 12-2 lead. But Donnell Lee sparked the Rampants in a comeback during the late stages of the period, and Rose finally pulled even at 14-14 on a layup by Lee with 52 seconds left.

Jerome Garrett hit from underneath, then added two free throws, however, to push Rocky Mount back out by four, before Freddie Cherry hit from the lane to close it to 18-16 at the horn.

A Tony Clemons free throw closed it to one, 18-17, before the Gryphons, behind the scoring of five different players, pushed through nine straight points to run the lead back to ten, 27-17 with 6:10 left. Then, after another Rose basket, Garrett and George McClain each hit to up it to 12, 31-19 with 5:13 showing.

Over the rest of the period, Rose steadily chopped away at the lead, cutting it to as little as six, 45-39, before having to settle for a 46-39 deficit at the half.

Rocky Mount, plagued by turnovers in the first half — committing 16 — used its rebounding (15-5) and shooting (18 of 23) to forge the lead and hold it.

Rose, after scoring the first two baskets of the third period, spotted Rocky Mount two, then picked up two more, the last a slam dunk by Tim Harris, cutting it back to three, 50-47.

Throughout much of the period, Rose had opportunity after opportunity to cut it back to one, thanks to seven more Gryphon turnovers — and the only even rebounding of the game — but they couldn't hit when they had to.

Finally, with only a 54-51 lead, McClain hit two straight jumpers and Mike Williams added another to push the Gryphon lead out to nine, 60-51 at the end of the period.

After Rose got the first basket, McClain and Williams each hit free throws, then Harry Knight scored off the fast break, Garrett made two charity shots, and Knight scored again off the break. McClain hit two more, followed by baskets by Alton Phillips and Williams, running the lead out to 23 points, 76-53 with 3:24 left, and it was all over.

The lead eventually climbed to 25 before Rose cut it back to the final 23-point margin.

McClain and Garrett finished the game with 21 points each, while Phillips added 12.

Rose was led by Lee and William Battle with 16 each, while Barry Smith hit 12.

The win keeps Rocky Mount in a share of first place in the league with an 8-1 mark, and a 16-2 overall record. Rose drops to 2-6, 8-8.

The Rampettes, playing one of their better games, gave Rocky Mount — also the league leader — a fit before finally bowing. It wasn't until the final period that Rocky Mount's height and transition game finally proved too much for the Rose lassies.

Rocky Mount, now 9-1 in the league and 10-5 overall, scored first, but two baskets by Frances Barnhill put Rose up, 4-2. Rocky Mount came back to regain the lead on baskets by Sabrina Lewis and inched on out to an 11-8 lead before Barnhill and Linda Winstead helped push Rose back up, 12-11 with 3:20 left.

It was their last lead.

Shoni Jenkins scored from the top of the key for a 13-12 lead and in the remaining time, the Lady Gryphons built up a 21-16 lead.

Rose struggled back once more to tie it up, 25-25, but Lewis tossed back a missed shot to return the lead to Rocky Mount for good, 27-25. Rocky Mount, led by Lewis pulled out to as much as an 11-point lead, 36-25, before Rose closed it to 37-29 at halftime.

Kim Taylor got two free throws and a basket to run the lead to 12, 41-29, before Rose began to pull back, inching steadily long behind Barnhill and Winstead to close to 50-43 at the end of the quarter.

Then, early in the final period, they closed to six on several occasions before finally running out of gas. Over the final four minutes, Rocky Mount outscored Rose, 13-9, building up as much as a 19-point spread, 72-53, before it ended.

Taylor led the Rocky Mount scoring with 24, while Lewis added 16, Jenkins had 15 and Sharon Pratt had 14. Winstead led Rose with 22, while Barnhill had 21.

"Boards and the transition. That's what beat us," Coach Dennis Gibson said. "Other than that, we played fairly decent. Sixty points is as much as we've scored in a while. We tried to slow them down, and were able to for a while. But they just suddenly grabbed the tempo and took it away from us. They were able to get back on offense a lot quicker than I thought they could."

"I'm proud of the way Winstead had been playing lately. She's had several good games now."

Rose drops to 2-6 on the year in conference play, and is 5-9 overall.

The Rampants play host to Wilson Hunt on Thursday, and travel to Wilson Beddingfield on Friday.

Pam Pack Hands 'Skins 1st Loss Of Year, 44-43

WASHINGTON — Rossie Cobb hit two free throws with two seconds left to lift Washington past previously unbeaten Roanoke, 44-43, Tuesday night in a Northeastern Conference basketball game.

Earlier, in the girls' game, Roanoke used 23 points from Sylvia Parker to defeat Washington, 48-32.

The loss, however, didn't stop Roanoke from clinching the Northeastern title, thanks to a 65-62 overtime victory by Williamston over Plymouth, the only team which still had a chance to catch the Redskins going into last night's games.

Roanoke, now 15-1 overall and 12-1 in the league, trailed for much of the game, but took the lead in the fourth quarter on a bucket by Ronnie Broadie with 4:03 left.

Angelo Spruill then hit a jumper to extend the lead to 43-40 with 3:20 left. It was the Redskins' last points of the game.

Washington, now 11-8 overall and 8-5 in the league, closed to within one (43-42) on a jumper by Wayne Wooten with 43 seconds left. Then, after a series of turnovers and missed shots, the Pam Pack fouled the Redskins three straight times trying to get the ball.

The final foul sent Roanoke into the one-and-one, but Broadie missed the free throw with six seconds left. The Pam Pack pulled off the rebound and raced down court. Cobb missed the shot, but was fouled by Michael Neal.

After a Roanoke time out, Cobb hit the first free throw to tie the game at 43-43. Then, after another Roanoke time out, Cobb saw his second free throw bounce off the backboard and roll around the rim before falling in for the victory.

Broadie led all scorers with 15 points. Spruill added 13 points for the Redskins. James Guilford and Earl Smith each had 14 points for Washington.

The Redskins led at the end of the first quarter, 10-6, but were outscored, 18-7, in the second period and trailed, 24-17, at the half.

Roanoke inched back to within four (48-44) as the third period came to a close and then took the lead midway through the fourth period before losing it in the end.

In the girls' game, Roanoke inched out to a 9-7 lead in the first eight minutes and stretched its lead to 20-15 at intermission. The Lady Redskins pushed their lead to 33-21 at the end of the third quarter and then coasted home with the win.

Roanoke, now 13-3 overall and 10-3 in the league, got 12 points from Mary Bland, who was the only other player besides Parker in double figures for the Redskins.

Roanoke's girls, with the win, pull into a tie for first place. Washington, now 4-13 overall and 4-9 in the conference, was led by Robin McClain with 10 points.

Roanoke travels to Roanoke Rapids Friday.

Greene Central Holds On To Nip Chargers, 60-59

LITTLEFIELD — Greene Central, holding half of the Eastern Carolina Conference lead, had to scramble to hold off Ayden-Grifton last night, 60-59, and even then, it took a rimmed-out half-court shot to put the final touches on the heart-stopper.

Greene Central's girls also came away with a win, 59-57 in overtime, while the junior varsity, down 36-12 at halftime, rallied to make it a sweep, 48-43.

The Rams, who are now 7-1 in the league and 10-8 overall, just couldn't find the stuff to shake the stubborn Chargers, now 2-8 and 5-14. When the first period ended it was 13-13. At the half it was 27-27. At the end of the third quarter, it was still deadlocked at 47-47.

Ayden-Grifton finally took the lead late in the game on a pair of free throws by Thomas Anderson, 59-58, but Greene Central regained the lead when Cepado Albritton hit with about 1:05 left.

Ayden-Grifton's Tyrone Gay missed the front end of a one-and-one chance at the line, and Greene Central's Roderick Lane lost the rebound out of bounds. The Chargers, again missed, as an 8-foot baseliner fell away into the hands of another Ram. Then, with six seconds left, Albritton was fouled, and when he missed, John Ray got the loose ball, but stepped out of bounds with five seconds to go. Anderson then missed on his half-court desperation shot that banked off the glass, then caromed off the rim to end it.

Lane led the Rams with 19 points, while Albritton had 15 and Ray, 13. Ayden-Grifton was led by Anderson with 26, while Calvin Peterson and Gay each had 10.

The girls' game was just as much of a thriller. Ayden-Grifton jumped out to a 16-9 lead in the first period, only to see the Lady Rams rally, 14-8, and close the gap to 24-23 at intermission. The Lady Rams then took the lead, 39-38, at the end of the third quarter.

In the final period, Sharon Suggs hit with ten seconds left, tying it at 53-53, and a Cora Faison buzzer shot missed for A-G.

In the overtime, Sylvia Swinson hit all six Lady Ram points as Greene took the lead and was never caught again.

Leatha Taylor led Greene Central, now 4-4 in the league and 11-7 overall, with 21 points, Suggs added 14 and Swinson, 11.

Ayden-Grifton, which falls to 4-6, 7-12, was paced by Faison with 23 and Danita McCotter with 12.

Ayden-Grifton travels to Farmville Central on Friday, while Greene Central play host to Southern Nash on Thursday.

a 63.5 clip, hitting 50.7 percent of its field goal attempts. Charles Green leads the East Carolina scoring with an 11.1 average, while Hargrove is hitting 10.8 per game. Al Mack, starting at center recently, is hitting 6.6, while Peartree is up to 5.9 per game now. Charles Watkins, the other starter of recent, is hitting 4.9 per game.

"We're urging our players to give a top effort," Coach Dave Odom said, "and I hope that our fans will demand that of our players."

He noted that in many cases, the Pirates have been guilty of less than this top effort against teams with the reputation Baptist has had in the past. "Baptist is obviously dangerous," he said, pointing out that just after the Pirates topped them, they turned around and beat ECAC-South member Navy. "They are very capable. Even though we won down there if it took a strong performance, and I think it's obvious that it will take another to win here."

The game is the last for six days for the Pirates, who next will face ECAC-South member Old Dominion on February 10. East Carolina has six more games to go after that, including four against ECAC-South members.

Irish Roll Past #7 San Francisco

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Hang another ranked team's scalp on Notre Dame's belt.

The Fighting Irish upset seventh-ranked San Francisco, 75-66, Tuesday night as senior guard Mike Mitchell scored a career-high 19 points. It was the fifth victory in the last seven games for the Irish who have rebounded from a dreadful 2-9 start to an almost respectable 7-11.

The recovery includes a victory over nationally ranked Idaho as well as Tuesday night's triumph over San Francisco.

"We've beaten a top 10 team two weeks in a row now," said Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps. "We've come a long way since December."

Actually, the Irish can trace the start of their turnaround to a two-point loss against the Dons in Oakland, Calif., three weeks ago.

"The team started gelling then, coming together," said

Mitchell. "We didn't want the 2-25 season."

Mitchell, the captain and lone senior starter for Notre Dame, has been the inspirational leader of the Irish. He is playing despite operations on his knee before the start of both his sophomore and junior seasons.

"The doctors said I'd never play again, but I couldn't accept that," he said. "I've worked hard to come back. It's a mental thing. I can do it, I just have to do it."

Against San Francisco, Mitchell scored 12 points in the first half, helping Notre Dame to a 36-28 intermission lead. Then his cool foul shooting in the second half helped keep the Irish in front.

"I'm really happy for Mike Mitchell," said Phelps. "This is his team — he gives us loads of inspiration and leadership, especially after the injuries which have hampered his career."

Mitchell took advantage of San Francisco guard Quintin Dailey's tendency to freelance on defense in the first half.

"He likes to double team," said Mitchell. "I waited for him to make his move and then I made mine."

Dailey, the nation's fifth-leading scorer, finished with a game-high 24 points, matching his season's average, but Notre Dame led almost throughout. When Mitchell needed scoring help, it came from freshman Ron Rowan, who contributed 16 points coming off the bench and junior John Paxson, who scored 16.

The loss was only the third in 22 games for San Francisco, all of them on the road.

Elsewhere:

- Steve Burt led Iona with 26 points and Gary Springer hit five free throws in the last 39 seconds as the Gaels held off Manhattan 69-65 and moved into first place in the Metro Atlantic Conference.
- In another Metro Atlantic game, David Maxwell scored 17 points to lead Fordham over Fairfield 64-59.

Tar Heels Battle Cavs Tonight In Key ACC Clash

CHARLOTTEVILLE, Va. (AP) — Coach Terry Holland says "it's too late in the season" for his third-ranked Virginia Cavaliers to make any adjustments for tonight's pivotal Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game against North Carolina's second-ranked Tar Heels.

Nor does Holland intend to concentrate his defense in any one area in an effort to reverse a 65-60 victory scored by North Carolina on its home court last month despite a 30-point, 19-rebound performance by Virginia All-American Ralph Sampson.

"North Carolina's back court quite often is overlooked because of the strength of their front line," Holland says. "We're certainly not going to be sagging off (Matt) Doherty, (Jimmy) Black and Michael Jordan to concentrate on their inside game."

By the same token, Holland feels the Cavaliers can compensate if the Tar Heels try to load their defense inside in an effort to stop Sampson.

"If they leave somebody open, I think we have the ability to score and score consistently," Holland says.

But he likes the makeup of this year's team by comparison with last year when Jeff Lamp and Lee Raker were the players to whom the Cavaliers looked when Sampson was stopped. If opposing defenses could stop all three, they could stop the Virginia offense.

"I don't know where the points will come from. It's been a different player each time. Last year, you knew where the points were going to come from," Holland says.

The Virginia coach sees no advantage either on the bench or in the stands.

"I don't think our bench is any stronger than North Carolina's. I know they have outstanding bench strength," Holland says. He notes reserve Jimmy Braddock played a key role in the earlier Tar Heel victory after Black fouled out late in the game.

But Holland adds that "I like to think our bench will be a positive factor for us. We've been able to play a lot of players all year."

As for the fans, Holland would like to think they would be an advantage, but he doesn't.

"I don't think the home crowd makes that much of a difference in this game. North Carolina's players have been around. They've played before big crowds and I don't think it will have an effect on them. I don't think we lost down there because of the crowd," Holland says.

When all is said and done, however, the outcome of the game is likely to ride on the inside showdown of Sampson against the Tar Heels' James Worthy and Sam Perkins.

"I think in Perkins and Worthy they certainly have two of the superior big players in the country," Holland says. "They do have a superior front line, but I think our front line is capable of staying with them and playing with them."

NHL Investigating Alleged Order To Fight By Coach

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The National Hockey League is investigating an incident that led to the Los Angeles Kings dropping Paul Mulvey and sending him to their American Hockey League farm club in New Haven, Conn.

The 23-year-old wing refused to leave the team bench at his coach's order to participate in a fight on the ice. He cleared waivers Tuesday.

NHL President John Ziegler says he is looking into the incident that involved Coach Don Perry and Mulvey on Jan. 24 during a game against the Vancouver Canucks.

If Perry ordered Mulvey to leave the bench and join the altercation, the coach — who took over the Kings Jan. 12 — could be fined $5,000 under NHL rules.

Mulvey was acquired last year by Los Angeles on waivers from the Pittsburgh Penguins.

"When we got Mulvey we were down to 16 players, because we had a lot of injuries," said John Wolf, the Kings' assistant general manager. "He (Mulvey) had been playing less and less in recent games."

Mulvey's departure leaves the Kings with 24 players on their current roster.

Wolf said Mulvey's refusal to enter the fight against Vancouver did not help his cause, that it probably expedited the situation whereby he was put on waivers.

Meanwhile, San Bernardino radio station KQLH announced it will no longer carry or publicize the Kings games after its contract expires at the end of the season.

Pat Michaels, vice-president and general manager of the station, said, "When violence is used to further a spectacle's interest, simply for the sake of violence, we must take a stand."

"We do not believe it honorable or sportsmanlike for a sporting event to heighten its interest by deliberately encouraging fights and battles on the floor of competition."

Perry has said he wanted Mulvey on the ice to help protect his teammates who were involved in the altercation.

Mulvey said Perry told him three times to go onto the ice and fight, and each time he refused.

"I'm not going to be a designated assassin and come off the bench and fight," Mulvey had been quoted as saying. "Don came to me and said, 'When I tell you to go out and fight, I want you to.' He told me to go out and fight and I didn't."

Tuesday, on the nationally televised Good Morning America show (on ABC), Mulvey said, "Never in four years (in the NHL) have I been instructed to fight."

"I didn't want to do it," he said. "I've spent 20 years trying to become a professional athlete... a professional hockey player. No coach has ever asked me to do that."

Asked about the report that the Kings had been planning before the incident to put him on waivers, Mulvey said "I don't believe that."

Kings owner Jerry Buss has refused to comment, saying he doesn't interfere with personnel matters.

Chicago Black Hawks goalie Tony Esposito, president of the NHL Players Association, called the incident "a complete black eye for the National Hockey League."

House Panel Agrees To Split Up Guilford County

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — With the General Assembly preparing for a special session on redistricting Tuesday, a House panel has agreed to divide Guilford County into four state House districts and faces decisions today on how to draw lines in other areas of the state.

Gov. Jim Hunt, acting at the request of legislative leaders, officially called the special session by signing a proclamation Tuesday to invoke his constitutional authority.

The House Legislative Redistricting Committee, meanwhile, planned to resume meeting today and faced a deadline of Thursday to come up with a new reapportionment plan. Joint committees on congressional redistricting also planned to meet later in the day to consider a proposal to move Durham County out of the 4th Congressional District and into the 2nd.

The plans are scheduled to be put before public hearings in the Legislative Building Thursday. Earlier plans redistricting House, Senate and congressional seats have been rejected by the U.S. Justice Department.

The House panel postponed a decision on whether to divide Cumberland County and shape a single-member majority-black district inside its boundaries.

The panel also put off a decision on revamping districts in the northeastern corner of the state, where majority-black districts have been proposed, and in Charlotte, Winston-Salem and perhaps elsewhere.

The division of Guilford County came after the U.S. Justice Department pointed to it and Cumberland as examples of where large, multi-member districts had in the past diluted the voting strength of large numbers of blacks.

The House panel agreed to four districts with seven representatives in Guilford County, adding to it small portions of Forsyth and Randolph counties — needed to make population figures balance.

The Guilford plan, approved on a voice vote, would have one single-member district with 68 percent black population, and another single-member district made up of mainly white rural areas along the northern and eastern borders, including the portions of north-central Randolph and northeastern Forsyth.

The remaining, largely white area of Greensboro would get three House members, and a two-seat district would be created out of High Point, Jamestown and surrounding areas.

Rep. Ken Spaulding, D-Durham, one of three blacks in the 120-member House, urged the committee to consider making similar divisions in areas such as Charlotte, even though they are not covered by the 1965 federal Voting Rights Act, as is Guilford.

Rep. Dan Blue, D-Wake, who is also black, also called for such divisions, and said his own county — which includes Raleigh — might also be a candidate for a single, majority-black district.

"We're going to have to look at the black majorities in Mecklenburg, and that applies to my own back yard too," he said.

The proposal found some support among eastern legislators, who have seen several counties in their region split in order to avoid diluting concentrations of black voters.

"If we're going to have a policy affecting eastern North Carolina, why should we have a different policy for the Piedmont and western North Carolina," said Rep. Sam Bundy, D-Pitt.

The panel agreed to recommend that the General Assembly reschedule the May 4 statewide primary to June 1, but also added a provision allowing further delay if needed. Under the proposal, the state Board of Elections would have authority to delay the primary further if the redistricting plans are held up again.

Any plans approved by the legislature must face review by the federal Justice Department and probably also by a panel of three federal judges, since lawsuits are pending in federal court against the reapportionment maps.

Redistricting Is Proving To Be No GOP Bonanza

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional redistricting is failing to turn into the bonanza that Republican leaders once predicted, forcing GOP strategists to lower their expectations and re-examine their computer programs.

But Democrats are troubled as well. The snail's pace with which states are re-drawing congressional boundaries is frustrating efforts by both parties to plan sophisticated campaigns for the upcoming elections.

A year ago, Republican officials were boasting that population shifts away from the cities of the Northeast and Midwest to the GOP-populated Sun Belt could bring them 17 or 18 seats.

But it doesn't seem to be working out that way. As state legislatures slowly report in with their new congressional maps, GOP leaders are conceding that redistricting may put fewer than a half dozen new seats in their column.

"At this point, it's probably a wash," with neither party gaining much from the process, said Rich Bond, deputy chairman of the Republican National Committee.

And, while Republicans are still speaking confidently of cashing in on President Reagan's popularity to help them buck history and pick up House seats in this mid-term election, they're no longer talking seriously of wresting control from the Democrats.

"I think you must bear in mind that if we gain one seat, it would only be the second time this century that the party that seized the White House did so," said Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, R-Mich., chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee.

The other time was 1934, when Democrats picked up congressional seats midway into Franklin Delano Roosevelt's first presidential term.

But Democrats are also frustrated by state delays in final boundaries. Party leaders are eager to pin down congressional campaign strategy, and are trying to copy the high-technology tactics used successfully by Republicans in 1980 — including heavy reliance on television ads and on computerized direct-mail lists.

Officials of both parties are now generally discounting the effect reapportionment will have on the outcome of the 1982 congressional elections and pointing to other factors — including the economy and Reagan's popularity — as far more influential.

"Everyone is looking at the House elections as Reagan's report card," said Nancy Sinnott, executive director of the GOP unit headed by Vander Jagt. "It will not necessarily be a classic mid-term election."

Of the House's 435 seats — all up for grabs this year — new district boundaries for only 134 have been drawn so far, according to a GOP analysis.

Many large states — including Florida, Pennsylvania, New York and Ohio — haven't finished their new maps. And others like Texas are snarled in legal challenges.

This is making it difficult for both parties as they attempt to find candidates and try to decide which seats to target for extra campaign expenditures.

"Of course it's a problem to us. It's a problem however that is shared by the Democratic side as well, so I'm not sure it's a disadvantage," said Vander Jagt.

"In general, we are better organized than the Democrat party so we ought to be able to produce campaigns in short order," he asserted.

Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., chairman of the counterpart Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, disagreed.

"If you go back to the beginning, there was the appearance that the Republicans, because of their money and their computers, were going to wipe us out," Coelho said.

"But we've gotten our act together. And I'm very upbeat about reapportionment. The Republicans were predicting a gain of 18 seats from reapportionment. But, based on what's been happening, I would predict that there'll be a zero net gain for them."

Congressional redistricting now under way was compelled by U.S. population shifts as reflected in the 1980 census. Because of migration patterns that included population losses during the 1970s in big cities, 17 House seats are being transferred away from the Northeast and Midwest and to the Sun Belt.

But just because states with growing GOP populations were the main recipients of this shift doesn't mean Republicans will get an automatic increase in their ranks. Proving to be more of a factor has been which party controls the state legislatures and governors' mansions.

For instance, instead of cashing in on the two new seats that went to California, Republicans stand to lose four to five of their present congressional seats there under a redistricting plan by the Democratic-controlled state legislature.

That plan, largely proposed by Rep. Philip Burton, D-Calif., was upheld late last week by the California Supreme Court.

And Republicans face potential losses in some states which are losing seats — like Illinois, where the Supreme Court recently let stand a Democratic-written reapportionment plan.

Adoption of that plan prompted the retirement of 20-year veteran Rep. Robert McClory, R-Ill., who would have had to seek re-election in the same district as fellow Republican Rep. John Porter.

McClory is among 19 House members — 11 Republicans and 8 Democrats — who have already announced they are not running for re-election.

Retirements along with reapportionment will produce a large number of "open" seats, districts with no incumbent, while many incumbents — Democrats as well as Republicans — have found themselves thrown into the same district.

"Eighty percent of the people voting for Congress this year will not have an opportunity to vote for the same Congress member they voted for before," Vander Jagt said.

"Generally speaking, Republicans will take it on the chin in some states and Democrats in others. But I think the general tilt will be Republican," he said.

Democrats now have a 243-192 edge in the House. Republicans have a better chance of making substantial gains in the Senate, which they now control 53-47. Of the 34 Senate seats up this year, only 12 are now held by Republicans.

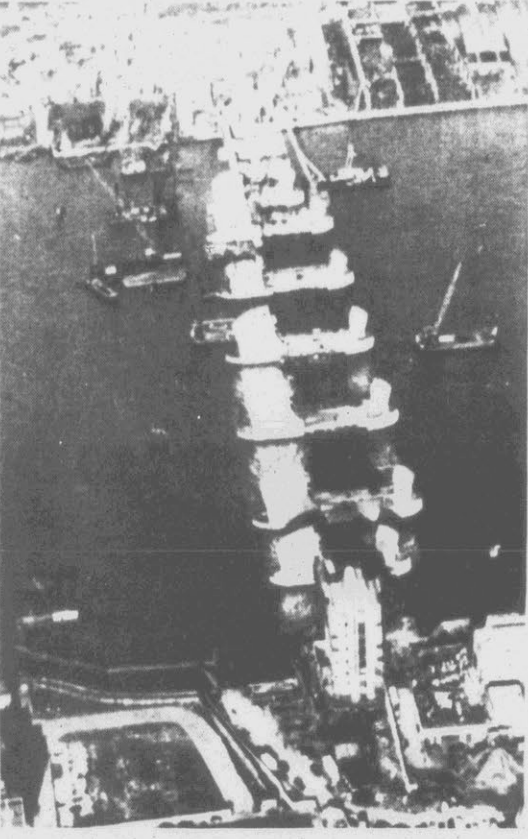

REPUBLICANS — Because of a Democratic-written reapportionment plan in Illinois, Rep. Robt. McClory, center, will not seek re-election in the same district as fellow Republican John Porter, left. Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, R-Mich., chairman of the Nat'l GOP Congressional Committee is hoping for an overall gain of Republicans in Congress. (AP Laserphoto)

So you are rather proud of your dummy play? Well, here's your chance to play along with an expert at a three no trump contract.

The auction was a simple matter of arithmetic. North added his 11 points to his partner's announced 16-18 and had no aspirations beyond game.

There is no trouble making nine tricks—if you go about your business in the right order. First, this is not the hand for an immediate holdup—East might have a profitable heart shift; so you win the king of spades.

Since West is the danger hand, you must attack his entry first. If West has the king of clubs, your contract is always secure because the finesse will succeed. What you must protect against is the possibility that East has the king of clubs and West the ace of diamonds. Now if you start clubs, East will win and force out your remaining spade stopper. You have only eight tricks without diamonds, and when you try to establish a diamond trick, West will win the ace and cash his spades to defeat you.

So, at trick two you lead the queen of diamonds. If West refuses to take his ace, you have set up your ninth trick. Abandon diamonds in favor of the club finesse and you are home whether it wins or loses.

But the defenders are on their toes. West wins the ace of diamonds and continues with a spade. This time you must duck to exhaust East of spades. East wins and perseveres with spades to knock out your last stopper.

But now you can take the club finesse with safety. If it loses, either East will have no more spades, or if he does have another, the suit has split 4-4 and you lose only two spades, the ace of diamonds and the king of clubs. You have played the hand as well as you can and deserve your fine result.

Gift Presented Medical Library

The Alpha Xi Delta Sorority of East Carolina University and the American Lung Association of America has presented a new teaching resource to the East Carolina University Health Sciences Library. The gift presented to the library is a slide and audiocassette program, "Aspiration of Foreign Bodies in Children."

The slide-tape gift deals with the problem of children swallowing things the wrong way and swallowing indigestible objects. This is the leading cause of accidental death in the home of children under the age of 6 years. Many parents have experienced at least one incident in which a child has had a bit of food or toys lodged in the windpipe.

Susan Kirkwood and Gina Albani, representatives from Alpha Xi Delta, and Deborah Bryan, regional director of the American Lung Association-Eastern Region, presented the gift to Dr. Jo Anne Bell, Health Sciences Library director.

Vault Holds Rich Crown

NEW YORK (UPI) — A spectacular gold and jeweled crown once known as the Crown of the Andes which has disappeared from public view for nearly 20 years has been traced to a bank vault in New York City, according to an article in Connoisseur Magazine.

The crown is believed to be the one made in Popayan, Colombia, between 1590 and 1597 and, as recently as the early part of this century, was in the Popayan Cathedral. In 1936 a syndicate headed by Warren J. Piper of Chicago successfully bid for the crown in an auction. It was sold again at auction in 1963, when it was last seen publicly.

The author of the magazine article, Neil Letson, said he traced the crown to the New York bank vault where it is "in the hands of a private collector" whom he did not identify. He said plans to dismantle the crown have been "deferred if not permanently halted."

At one time, Pope Pius X gave permission for the crown to be sold with the funds to go to an orphanage, hospital, and home for the aged. Czar Nicholas II of Russia is said to have bid for it, but the Bolshevik revolution intervened.

Bette Davis Starring In CBS-TV Movie Tonight

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The judge enters the courtroom and the clerk commands everybody to rise. They all stand, except an old lady strapped into her wheelchair, a prisoner of her own mental competency hearing.

The woman, Esther Cimino, is played by Bette Davis in "A Piano for Mrs. Cimino" on CBS tonight. Miss Davis' lonely look says a lot about this warm-hearted movie, which deals with how America's elderly often are stripped of their dignity and left by the wayside before they're ready to go.

As audiences are getting older, so are some of television's stars and subjects. Lana Turner will play Jane Wyman's rival in an episode of "Falcon Crest" this month. Mickey Rooney's new series "One of the Boys" has attracted sizable audiences on Saturday nights.

These audiences make it easier for the networks to raise issues of the elderly, once the province of news and documentary units, in dramatic shows. And CBS handles "A Piano for Mrs. Cimino" with special care.

Mrs. Cimino has not been herself since her husband passed away a year ago. It turns out to be a case of depression, a disease that knows no age distinctions. It's also curable. But she's 73 and hard of hearing, so doctors label her senile and write her off.

A sanity hearing is held, in which the judge deems Mrs. Cimino incompetent and incapable of handling her financial affairs. Mrs. Cimino's concerned, but busy, sons don't get any legal advice to ascertain their mother's choices and rights before letting the court appoint a bank trustee to handle her estate.

The sons then hurriedly look for a nursing home and find one that is barely more than a way station before burial. The man in charge, who sounds like a used car salesman, speaks of the serenity of the facility, no surprise since TV watching is the major activity and that's enough to make anybody stale.

This would have been Mrs. Cimino's last home, except her granddaughter, Karen (Alexa Kenin), thinks there must be something better. She finds the St. Hild's Convalescent Hospital, where patients are challenged because the mind and body need constant stimulation to stay healthy.

Under the guidance of the hospital's director, Mrs. Polanski (Penny Fuller), Mrs. Cimino begins to regain her faculties and even return to her piano playing. "You are here to get better," Mrs. Polanski says. As proof, a wall of pictures prominently display the hospital's graduates, about 35 percent of the patients.

St. Hild's may be a bit idealized, but it forcefully makes the point.

Meanwhile, the estate trustee (Graham Jarvis), fearing that money to pay for the convalescent home might be depleted, has sold Mrs.

Cimino's home and music store, without consulting her. When Mrs. Cimino recovers and is ready to renew her life, she finds that her lifeblood is gone.

She hires a lawyer (Christopher Guest) and begins the painful procedure of having to prove her competency and sanity — her self-worth — and get back her possessions. While waiting for the legal maneuvering, Miss Cimino moves away to live in a hotel residence. There she meets Barney, an old friend played sweetly by Keenan Wynn.

He plays the clarinet and she plays the piano. They seem ready to forge a life together, until Mrs. Cimino's case comes to court, forcing her to choose between living with Barney or getting back her old life and going home.

It's a meaningful dilemma, as are the issues raised throughout. And television's new-found elderly audience won't be the only age group to think so, either.

Buying A Record Takes On Less Simple Aspect

By MARK SCHWED
NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Buying a record has become as complicated as deciding whether to invest in money market funds or All-Savers Certificates.

It used to be simple. There were just the singles and the LP's.

A 7-inch single had a song on each side and was played at a speed of 45 revolutions per minute. It lasted about three minutes, maybe less. The "A" side of the single was what was played on the radio to promote the album.

A "long playing" album had up to 12 songs a few years ago, but that has dwindled to about 10. At first, it was played at 78 rpm. Now the standard is 33 rpm.

A visit to today's record store would confuse even the most learned discophiles.

The singles are tucked away in a separate section, arranged according to popularity, with brightly colored name tags describing the groups and the songs.

Pop groups still put their top commercial song on the "A" side of the single and dump some other tune on the "B" side. Having two hits on the same single record is avoided. A record company makes more money selling two singles than one.

An adaptor is required to fit the big hole of the 45 to the standard phonograph spindle.

"There's less music and the fidelity is less because of the smaller size," Mayer says. "It's just a shorter album at a smaller price."

Then the Pretenders did Cheap Trick one better — they released a 12-inch EP, or extended play album. The difference between an LP and an EP is price, the amount of music and the quality of the fidelity. The width of the grooves on the record has a lot to do with fidelity. The wider the groove, the better the sound, or so the argument goes.

"I listened to an album and I didn't notice any difference," says Mayer. "Maybe the musicians themselves can tell. I suppose if you really had sensitive ears...."

An extended play 12-inch album costs about $5.99, but you get less music. List price for a standard 12-inch album is about $7.99.

Malaysian School Back To 'Basics'

By KENNETH L. WHITING
Associated Press Writer
KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — A return to the basics of reading, writing and arithmetic in Malaysian primary schools has revived a language debate here and pointed up similar language problems in other parts of Southeast Asia.

Some spokesmen for Malaysia's minority Chinese and Indian communities say the educational reforms that took effect here in early January could undermine use of the Chinese and Tamil languages. Tamil is spoken in southern India and northern Sri Lanka.

The Chinese and Indian critics view introduction of the 3-r system — from reading, writing and arithmetic — as a scheme to eventually convert Chinese and Tamil primary schools into Malay-language institutions.

The Malaysian constitution says Bahasa Malaysia, the mother tongue of about half the population of 14 million, is the national language to be used for "all official purposes." Bahasa is the Malay word for language.

"The new 3-r system, in which all teaching materials are written in Bahasa and restrictions placed on music education, will eventually lead to a change in the character of Chinese schools," said a joint statement issued Jan. 10 by 54 Chinese associations.

Lim Fon Seng, chairman of the United Chinese School Committees Association, called the plan an act of oppression which he claimed will force the Chinese to give up their mother tongue, education and culture.

Five issues are as politically touchy in Malaysia and elsewhere in Southeast Asia as the language question. Frequent literary conferences, language seminars and teaching workshops discuss the "pollution" of one language by another or the need to find a common tongue for the region.

Neighboring Singapore has four official languages: English, Mandarin, Tamil and Malay. Malay is designated the national language and English the language of administration.

Despite years of government campaigns, many people in Singapore continue to speak in languages other than the approved four.

In the early years, the emphasis was largely on English, but that battle has been substantially won. Singapore's 2.4 million people are 76 percent ethnic Chinese, but in recent years only about 10 percent of children entering school have chosen to be educated primarily in Mandarin, the main dialect of China.

In 1979, Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew of Singapore started a long-term program to eliminate regional Chinese dialects such as Hokkien, Teochew, Cantonese, Hainanese, Hakka and Fochow. Every October is "Speak-Mandarin-Not-Dialects Month" in Singapore.

American-style English is still widely used in the Philippines, which also boasts at least 80 distinct native dialects. Since independence from the United States after World War II, the government has tried to encourage the use of Pilipino as the national language.

Based on Tagalog, the common tongue of most on the main island of Luzon, Pilipino is a language rooted in Malay and influenced by Spanish and English. The Philippines was a colony of Spain before being taken by the United States in the Spanish-American War in 1898.

In Thailand, about three million Thai Moslems who live on the border with Malaysia continue to speak Malay even though the Thai government wants all its 48.6 million people to learn Thai as a unifying influence.

Indonesia had no post-independence struggle to establish Bahasa Indonesia as the chief tongue. That Malay-linked language was widely used for decades and Japan's World War II occupation forces helped by abolishing the Dutch of colonial times.

However, some educators complained recently that too much English is creeping into everyday use and that regional dialects flourished to the detriment of Bahasa.

Sun Offers Alternative Home Heat

By PAUL J. SHANE
Associated Press Writer
WEST CHESTER, Pa.
(AP) — I'm saving money and my house is warmer than when my family was at the mercy of our furnace and fuel oil.

This is our second winter of energy self-sufficiency. Our furnace still works — I test it from time to time to make sure — but our needs now are met by a solar system I installed myself, and a wood stove.

Conservation, such as sealing windows and doors and adding insulation, has helped keep us toasty no matter what the temperature is outside — or the cost of fuel oil.

It all began in the spring of 1980, when fuel oil prices rose to a dollar a gallon. We had used about 1,500 gallons of fuel oil the previous winter and knew that prices were going to keep climbing.

We live in an 8-year-old, four bedroom, bi-level house with an unheated, two-car garage. The house sits atop a hill facing south, catching the brunt of north and west winds.

By this winter's end, I will have recovered the $6,000 I spent to install the solar system, not to mention the $400 a year we are saving on our electric bills because our water is mostly solar heated.
A $2,400 income tax credit for energy conservation knocked the cost down to $3,600 for the solar system, which is about how much I would have spent for fuel oil these last two years.

We use less than four cords of wood a winter to heat our home, and purchasing wood in the future is the only major energy cost we face.

I'm handy, but it was more work than I expected to install the solar system.
Once I'd spent all that money though, there was no turning back.

The system worked the first time I turned it on, and has never suffered a breakdown. Aside from three pumps, the solar system has no moving parts.

Using ordinary tools, I spent the better part of my free time during the summer of 1980 constructing 336 square feet of solar panels on my south-facing roof. To make their appearance as unobtrusive as possible, I built the 7-foot-long panels on the same angle as the roof, 25 degrees. By covering the entire 48-foot length of the roof, I more than compensated for not having the panels at an optimal 40-degree angle.

Inside a wood frame made from two-by-fours, I laid Thermax insulation to protect the roof. In summer, the heat could melt the roof's shingles if not insulated.

Then I hooked up the collectors, a series of long rubber-like mats with six tubes each attached to a central copper manifold that brings the unheated water to the roof, then carries it away to the storage tank.

Atop the spaghetti-like solar collector mats, I placed 12 fiberglass-reinforced acrylic sheets. These 4-foot-wide sheets give the appearance of 12 panels, but actually they cover just one large panel fed by a single water pipe. In heavy snow, I sweep off the panel.

The heated water flows from the roof to a 700-gallon storage tank in my garage. I constructed the tank from four, 4-by-8-foot sheets of plywood, styrofoam insulation and a plastic bladder.
The pumps, which use less electricity than a television; a computerized differential thermostat and heat exchangers were added to the tank, and I connected pipes from the tank to the water heater and to the baseboard, hot-water heating system.

On a hot August day in 1980, the pump sent cool water to the roof, where the sun-heated collectors warmed it a degree every 10 minutes. By the end of the following day, the water had reached 120 degrees and I was able to shut off the electricity to our water heater.

The differential thermostat has a sensor on the roof to measure the temperature of the solar collectors and a sensor in the storage tank.

NEW STAMP — A new stamp was issued this week with the word "LOVE" on it in a flower design. The stamp was released in time to be used for Valentines Day but is not a valentine stamp per se. The stamp was designed by Mary Faulconer of New York City. Each flower was selected on the basis of color and shape to, in Faulconer's words, "give form to the word and convey a sense of its meaning, delicacy and strength at the same time." (AP Laserphoto)

Thai Resort Is Despoiled

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PATTAYA, Thailand (AP) — A decade ago this sea resort on the Gulf of Thailand quietly prided itself on its shimmering clear waters, lush palm groves fringing a perfect bay and friendly fishermen who would run after a tourist who forgot his wallet on the beach.

Today the fishermen have been replaced by leering beach bums, rip-off artists of every stamp and a sizable colony of hoodlums and heroin pushers. Pattaya's waters are polluted and the low-slung houses have given way to a honky-tonk strip and rows of ugly, cheaply constructed concrete shops.

The story of Pattaya, which bills itself as the Asian resort with everything, is not merely that of a sleepy slice of paradise being discovered and seduced into runaway commercialism.

Thai social scientists, editorial writers and some government officials have pointed to the resort as a prime case study in some of this developing country's endemic problems: a lack of social discipline, the difficulty of enforcing even the most basic laws, and a muscle-flexing private economic sector that often rides roughshod over attempts at government planning and regulation.

"They don't care about the future. All they want is to make a quick profit and if it's spoiled they can just move on," says Dr. Pakit Kiravanich, deputy secretary-general of Thailand's National Environment Board, referring to wealthy private developers who make no effort to stop the water pollution.

Pakit notes that several large hotels simply dump raw sewage into Pattaya Bay and others have treatment systems so poor they are unlikely to arrest water-borne diseases. The Environment Board says that by international standards the coliform count — a measure of human waste matter — is already above the danger level for bathing at the southern end of the bay.

The growing ugliness of Pattaya bothers some officials and local residents, but efforts at improvement have been cosmetic. A 1977 master plan for Pattaya, drawn up by the Japan International Cooperation Agency, outlined ways to safeguard the resort's beauty, but few of its suggestions have been carried out.

Building codes are routinely flaunted even on municipal land, partly because of the light penalties and the power of the private sector.

"Everyone breaks the law here," says one foreign businessman, who asked not to be identified. "I built an extra illegal floor on my place and all it got me was a 11,000 baht ($480) fine."

Pattaya has received some bad publicity, often sparked by crimes against tourists, such as the robbery and rape of an Italian travel agent. Some visitors vow never to return, but nonetheless the resort continues to grow at a fast clip.

It currently has 91 hotels, which catered to almost a half-million tourists in 1980, and several more large ones are being built. A decade ago, when Pattaya was little more than a fishing village, there was only a single modern hotel.

Part of the growth stems from its location — less than two hours by road from the Thai capital of Bangkok, a burgeoning and increasingly affluent city of more than 5 million people.

Some foreigners seem to be attracted by Pattaya's unique raw-life kaleidoscope, especially its wide-open nightlife. Here there are turbaned Indian hawkers mingling with beer-bellied German factory workers; transvestite beauty shows and women's boxing matches; gangling American sailors and flashy Thais of the "Golden Youth" set, and a myriad of freewheeling, outdoor bars, such as the Marine House, which may have more than 100 prostitutes in attendance on a busy night.

IF YOU'RE NOT SHOPPING AT WINN-DIXIE, AREN'T YOU TIRED OF PAYING TOO MUCH FOR YOUR GROCERIES?

Week After Week After Week, We Beat The Store That Claims To Be "LOWEST" In Head-To-Head Price Comparisons.

Water Runs Grist Mill In Oregon

By WES GUDERIAN
The Oregonian
EAGLE POINT, Ore. (AP) — For 109 years, the French buhrstones at the Butte Creek Mill have been grinding nutritious flour in the weathered building on the bank of Little Butte Creek in southern Oregon.

Oregon's only remaining water-powered grist mill is producing quality flour under the direction of owner Peter Crandall and his wife, Cora. Stone-ground flour, they claim, is better tasting, longer lasting and healthier than modern roller grinds.

Stone grinding of wheat is better than modern methods, he believes, because it is a cooler process. The slower-moving stones build less heat, and the grooves tend to aerate and cool the product. Rollers, on the other hand, crush the grain, generating heat that can destroy the enzymes.

In the mill, grain shakes from a hopper into a hole in the center of the revolving top stone where in about three revolutions it will travel between the stones to trickle off the edge of the bottom stone as flour or cracked wheat, depending on how the stone clearances are set.

The flour is considered a "high dispersion flour" because the wheat germ, containing oil, is so well diffused that the keeping qualities are enhanced. The roller-ground product, Crandall says, has larger oil specks that can turn rancid more quickly and spoil the flour.

He urges keeping any whole-grain product under refrigeration to maintain the high nutritional value and best flavor.

Wheat contains 24 vitamins and minerals, and Crandall's product retains them with the wheat germ, endosperm and bran. He said many roller grinds produced a flour composed mainly of endosperm bleached with chemicals to make it white, and enriched by governmental order to restore lost vitamins.

In 1905, there were 185 mills in Oregon. Crandall said. Now only his produces flour, though another at Shedd in the Willamette Valley grinds feed.

There are other relics of the milling past in the West. A mill at Calistoga, Calif., is being restored, and there is one at Redding, Calif., grinding with stones, but powered with electricity. Restoration is also under way for a mill near Woodland, Wash.

The Butte Creek Mill is powered by a water turbine, not a water wheel. Water is brought to the building through a half-mile canal, hand-dug originally in 1872, that parallels the creek. It powers the compressors for the refrigeration units cooling the 500 rental lockers and the milling machinery, but does not generate electricity.

Crandall says he is the fifth owner of the property. First was John Daley, who with Eber Emery built it in 1872. Just six years before retirement from a job as a mechanical engineer in southern California, Crandall saw and purchased the mill from Frank Putnam, whose family had owned it for 40 years.

Putnam, now 79, who still lives at Eagle Point, taught Crandall to be a miller after selling the mill to him in 1972.

The weathered exterior needs some repair, Crandall said, though rotting and deteriorating timbers beneath the structure have already been replaced. There can never be major changes in the building, for the National Park Service placed it on the National Register of Historic Places Sept. 1, 1976.

Much of the machinery, except for some new driving belts, has been at the mill since 1872. So the creaks and groans of the ancient equipment and the sight of hand-hewn posts, hardwood pegs joining beams and deeply rutted stairways spark visions of a busy past.

The hard wheat for the mill is red spring wheat from Montana, the soft wheat is a local product, the rye is from southeast of Klamath Falls, and California grows the corn.

The Wrong Name Often A Disaster

By KILEY ARMSTRONG
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Sticks and stones may break your bones, but the wrong name can land you in a ward for the criminally insane, a language expert says.

"You will have a higher chance of being in an asylum or jail if you have an unusual name," warns Leonard R.N. Ashley of Brooklyn College, past president of the American Name Society.

But if you are strong enough to overcome the stigma of a wrong name, you also have a higher chance of becoming a college president, a movie star or even a religious leader, says Ashley.

Ashley, who has a doctorate in psychology, studies names as "an aspect of human behavior." He writes articles for professional journals and is working on an anthology of British names.

He contends that the "way you perceive people depends on their name. Have you ever met an Episcopal priest named Buck?"

And he believes an unusual name will have either a wonderful or a terrible effect on your life.

The late Ima Hogg, daughter of Texas Gov. James Hogg, overcame an unusual name to become a prominent Houston socialite and philanthropist. Before she died in 1975, fictitious stories abounded about the existence of a sister named Ura.

Then there are names like "Oral Roberts or Hubert Humphrey. If you stand up to that, you can become unique instead of peculiar and can do very well," Ashley says.

A sense of humor can help, as in the case of Manila's archbishop — Cardinal Jaime Sin.

The cardinal often tells in speeches how he enjoys inviting people to "the house of Sin," his official residence in a Manila suburb.

"When I was little, I suppose you could call me a 'Venial Sin,' but after I die people will realize I was a 'Mortal Sin,'" he adds.

Even ordinary names often imply something about their owners, "whether it is true or not," says Ashley.

"Everybody named Leonard wears glasses and is interested in the futures market," says Leonard Ashley. "George means farmer in Greek. But now it suggests someone who is a weak husband."

"Christopher suggests intellectuality and Katherine is determined and strong," he says.

Peoples' names, product names, place names and the names of objects all are scrutinized by the American Name Society, a group composed of linguists, psychologists and other people who study names.

Its scholars have found that the origins of names often are clouded by assimilation.

"Darren is an African name. But the British saw the TV show 'Bewitched' and thought it was an American name," Ashley says.

Sheldon, Seymour and Sidney are considered Jewish names because they were commonly used by parents who wanted American-sounding names for their children, he says. Actually, the name Sheldon has English origins, while Seymour and Sidney are French.

Famous people can popularize a name. But Ashley cautions parents against choosing a name that is too faddish. "If you name your kid Farrah, 25 years from now everybody will know her age because the Farrah (Fawcett) phase was quick."

Other name guidelines for parents include:

—Pay attention to the initials. "When Arthur S. Sullivan grows up and gets a briefcase with his initials on it, he's going to be furious."

—Watch for double meanings. "I once had a student named Warren Peace. He signed his name 'W. Peace' because he was embarrassed."

—Choose names that offer a lot of nicknames — such as Margaret, which yields Maggy, Peggy, Margie — so the child has an option.

—Keep "family heirloom" names. "If the name is ugly, just give the kid an extra name or two."

Boys Ranch Thrives On Volunteers

By HOWARD KERCHEVAL BELEN, N.M. (UPI) - President Reagan's call for a turn away from government subsidy toward voluntarism has raised apprehension in some quarters, but not at the New Mexico Boys Ranch.

Elimination of government support for many charitable organizations has been part of the president's plan to trim the federal budget since before he was elected. Reagan renewed that point Dec. 2.

"Americans should never have to consider themselves wards of the state," he told a group studying ways the private sector can pick up the burden created by budget cuts.

"They're members of their communities and the answers to their problems can be found on the streets where they live," Reagan said.

Mike Kull, director at the ranch 50 miles south of Albuquerque, cheered that principle.

But, he said, "The only thing is I don't know if the private sector has the mentality that goes along with voluntarism and charity and so forth - that there's a public good derived from people helping other people."

The Boys Ranch, a multi-million-dollar working ranch that provides an alternative home for boys whose family lives have been disrupted, has existed since the mid-1940s on voluntary contributions.

"As a matter of policy," he said, "our board of directors says, 'We will not take government funds,' simply because we want to maintain the sovereignty of the board of directors over the policies and programs. That's number one."

"Secondly, we want people to support us because they want to... and not because they have to. And if we're not worthy of support by the people who see our programs - see what we do - then we don't deserve to exist."

It was voluntarism that saved the ranch after its founder, Al Buck, was killed in an airplane crash in 1954. Kull said. It was $167,000 in the red because of taxes and accumulated debt.

"They were going to sell the ranch," he said. "They were ready to auction it off. But when people heard about it, everybody became alarmed and they started an effort to try and save the ranch."

The result was that the debt was retired in 1968, and the ranch was put on solid financial footing.

Kull said that was largely due to the influence of Walter Hubbard, who was superintendent of the Baptist Children's Home in Portales, N.M., when Buck was killed, and was hired to supervise the Boys Ranch.

Kull said the ranch cares for 50 boys; and added, "We're presently having to turn down about 400 kids a year because we don't have room for them."

The ranch operates with a staff of 25. The annual operating budget is about $500,000, which works out to about $10,000 per boy per year, a figure lower than the national average of $21,000.

Kull said he believes the New Mexico Boys Ranch is unique in that it is supported entirely by donations but not from any exclusive source. He said a similar Florida institution comes closest to its method of operation, but derives most of its support from its own thoroughbred horse operation.

"We feel like since we do not take any government funds," he said, "and since our reputation is basically what keeps us alive, that we are very responsive to the people who support us... much more so than a government-sponsored program."

Kull, with his four brothers and sisters, lived at the Baptist Children's Home after their family broke up. He was influenced by Hubbard and by the function of the home, which had allowed the five children to grow up together rather than in separation.

"When I first went into this 'business,'" he said, "my attitude was, 'I spent nine years in the children's home. Therefore, I have a nine-year debt to society that I need to pay back in service to other people, somehow.'"

Irish Debate Exile Joyce

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer
DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — A century after his birth, Dubliners are at last embracing the memory of their scandalous son and grand literary exile, James Joyce.

But 41 years after his death, the debate over this titan of letters rages on. Was he a genius or obfuscator? Pornographer or moralist?

The most outrageously Joycean event in a year of centenary celebrations will be on Bloomsday, June 16 — the day in 1904 on which the events in "Ulysses" take place — when RTE, the Irish state broadcasting service, has scheduled a 24-hour, non-stop reading of the author's most famous book.

Some think it's a great idea. Others think it's daft.

"I can't imagine anyone listening to it. After all, there are long, long passages which are extremely boring," said Niall Montgomery, a Joyce scholar and enthusiast.

The Roman Catholic Church, outraged by Joyce's work in his lifetime, has declined official comment on the centenary even though the government says it is happy to join in honoring a "world-renowned literary figure."

As befits a writer more widely talked about than read, the biggest controversy to erupt so far concerns a musical written and composed by English novelist Anthony Burgess, called "Blooms of Dublin."

Based on "Ulysses," the work was broadcast Monday by both Irish state radio and the British Broadcasting Corp.

It reflects the book's bawdy spirit with references to contraception, masturbation, flagellation and religious mockery.

Some members of the Radio Telefis Eireann Singers, who are recording the work, objected to the text and were backed by the Irish Housewives Association, which demanded cancellation of the broadcast.

When the station said the singers could decline to perform — but would not be paid — they changed their minds. One upset singer, June Croker, denied suggestions they had "abdicated from their moral stand for 30 pieces of silver."

A correspondent to the Irish Times newspaper noted:

"James Joyce would have appreciated the nice combination of narrow morality, musical mean-spiritedness and all-embracing concern with money..."

Another reader, Seosamh O'Briain, rancorously disagreed.

"This is still a Christian country and the beliefs and customs of the vast majority should not be offended by the 1 percent or 2 percent who wish to impose their godlessness through filth on their own media."

Born in Rathgar, Dublin, on Feb. 2, 1882, the author of "Ulysses" and "Finnegan's Wake" both loved and hated his country.

"He wanted to free people from the demands of church and state which imposed conventions upon them," Richard Ellmann, author of the standard Joyce biography, said in an interview.

Ellmann, an American, is Goldsmith Professor of English Literature at Oxford University, England.

"I think the Irish have been a little slow to recognize Joyce's greatness but they have done their best to catch up now," he said.

Ellmann will join Norman Mailer, Tom Stoppard, Burgess and other writers at an international symposium in Dublin in June.

"It's a great tribute to him — 100 years is quite good staying power for a writer, you know," said Ellmann, who rates "Ulysses" the fiction masterpiece of the 20th century.

"I think Joyce was the first writer to show us in English what modern literature really is," he said.

However, English writer J.B. Priestley said in his "Literature and the Western Man" that Joyce did not invent stream-of-consciousness or interior-monologue and what's more:

"Most of what we have been told about Joyce as the great modern master of the novel, changing the course of fiction, opening a way for later novelists, is nonsense."

Novelist Evelyn Waugh once said of the Irishman: "He wrote absolute rot. You could watch him going mad sentence-by-sentence if you read 'Ulysses.'"

But American author John Updike defended Joyce in a recent BBC radio documentary:

"There is the Joyce who's the kind of mountain and the bugaboo of the writing courses and of the literature courses. We're apt to lose sight of the less intimidating and kinder man who sang family life and always had an eye out for the humble, the grits of existence as well as the ideal and the beautiful."

Joyce's ambivalence toward Ireland led him to choose exile in Europe from his early 20s until his death in 1941, but he continued to write almost exclusively about Dublin.

Educated by Jesuits, he became a fierce anti-Catholic, like the autobiographical Stephen Dedalus in "A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man."

An expert linguist, he confounded even his admirers by creating a gibberish language-of-the-night in "Finnegan's Wake," his last book. When he was buried in Zurich two years later, he left no adequate explanation of its obscurities.

His best works were banned in Ireland in his lifetime. "Ulysses," a chronicle of a day in the life of Dubliner Leopold Bloom, was published in Paris in 1922 and, only after lengthy litigation, became available in the United States in 1933. It appeared three years later in England.

The Irish tourist board envisages Dublin awash with literary tourists this year, trooping around the sites Joyce immortalized.

Life Abroad Is Handicap

RETURNING PROBLEM — A Japanese youth who returned home from abroad, learns Japanese writing at a special classroom in Tokyo. Each year an estimated 7,700 Japanese children go abroad and return to face a limited language ability and differences in the way they think. (AP Laserphoto)

By DEBORAH SMITH Associated Press Writer
TOKYO (AP) — The estimated 7,700 Japanese children who return each year from living abroad often find themselves misfits in their own country. Some are unable to communicate well enough in Japanese to enter the most competitive schools.

Criticized abroad as being clannish, the Japanese come home to discover that their foreign experience isolates them from neighbors, classmates and business associates — leading them to feel like aliens despite Japan's vigorous "internationalization" campaign.

Some 30,000 Japanese youngsters yearly live abroad with their families. Back home, they face educational and social barriers largely brought about by limited language ability and differences in the way they think, scholars say.

One repatriated mother said her children came home from school in tears, upset at being called "foreigners" and laughed at by their classmates. Another said returnees "must discard their uniqueness" to be accepted.

Michiko Yawata, who returned with her husband and two children after three years in California, said, "The children lose their identity. It's sad because they grew up in America: to be very individual and free. But once back in Japan you must disappear, lose yourself."

The problem is not confined to students. Entire families face sometimes difficult social adjustments on re-entry into Japan's homogeneous society, with its stress on group action and peer pressure, says Dr. Hiroshi Inamura, a psychiatrist and university professor.

Higher prices, lower salaries without overseas allowances and smaller living quarters in Japan contribute to the frustration, he said. A returning businessman must regain his colleagues' trust, drinking with them after work — which in turn strains the family relationship — while a wife may miss the personal interests she had while living abroad.

Abroad, "The way of thinking, expression is different," Inamura said in an interview. "The face is Japanese but the way of thinking is not. In Japanese companies cooperation is valued. Everyone works together. Japanese want to feel as if they share one heart."

Inamura noted that in Japan, a university degree largely determines the course of a person's life, employment, even marriage, and Japanese companies generally hire only graduates of Japanese universities.

Thus for returning students, school is especially hard. Written Japanese — with more than 2,000 characters in daily use — is often an obstacle to passing vital, and tough, entrance exams to prestigious universities that virtually guarantee employment security.

A steady rise in the number of Japanese going abroad has led scholars to question the fairness of the exam-oriented system which begins as early as grammar school. A few universities have revised entrance procedures, others have created special programs.

Worried that prolonged stays abroad hurt their children's chances to compete, some parents choose to live apart, keeping their children, especially sons, in school here.

"Usually parents who go abroad are intelligent graduates of good universities, and want their children to enter the same level universities so they try to enroll them in good high schools," Inamura said. "But no matter how hard the child studies abroad, he is not prepared for the exams."

Anne Murase, a university lecturer, said, "It is a real problem for most of the families from the Foreign Ministry or big trading companies who are well-educated and socially aggressive. If the child does not get into a good university, it is a setback for the family."

Inamura said, "If the child goes through high school abroad, his life — university education, employment, marriage — becomes centered abroad. For the sake of internationalism, Japan should accept the returnees and learn from their viewpoint. Otherwise Japan cannot become international!"

Last year, the Education Ministry said, about 13,800 students in 70 full-time, government-supported Japanese schools abroad studied subjects similar to those taught at home — in Japanese. Another 10,400 in 82 part-time schools were tutored in Japanese language, math, science and social studies after regular classes at local schools, and about 6,000 attended only local foreign schools and receive no instruction in Japanese.

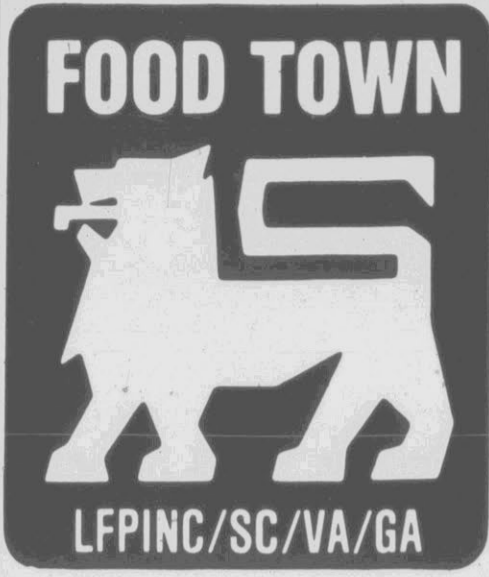

The Education Ministry has no program to reorient returnees, leaving it to individual schools. A child may attend special classes available at some, or go directly into a regular classroom.

Inamura said the majority return to regular Japanese schools because they need the strict preparation for examinations.

Mrs. Murase, who met her husband while he was a graduate student abroad, said Japanese who have lived abroad actually may feel less stress because they "have seen two ways of doing things" and can reject pressures to conform.

Mrs. Yawata, whose two children returned to a neighborhood elementary school, said: "The experience of living abroad gave us confidence."

Mudslides Haunt One Californian

By THOMAS MURPHY
Associated Press Writer
BEN LOMOND, Calif.
(AP) — Jack Mills shakes some powdered cement on the hillside above his Love Creek home, hoping it will seep into the soil and prevent the soggy land from sliding onto his tiny cabin.

He has reason to worry. On Jan. 4, 200 yards from Mills' Santa Cruz County home, a 1,500-yard swath of mountain tore loose during a two-day rainstorm, splintering houses and killing 11 people.

"The first rain after the storm I lay in bed listening to every rain drop, wondering if the hill above my house would hold," Mills said. The winter rains usually continue through March.

Looking at the half-mile of rubble left by the slide, it seems doubtful if a thousand bags of cement would make a difference. But Mills' work was the only sign someone was trying to protect homes still standing in this scenic canyon 70 miles south of San Francisco.

"It's really gone past the ability of the local people to cope with," he said. "We really need federal help."

The plea for more federal help is heard often in the 150-mile stretch of northern California where the storm killed 31 people and caused an estimated $280 million damage.

In all, 3,160 people were forced from their homes and 477 people were hurt. The storm destroyed 231 homes and 25 businesses. Another 6,304 homes and 1,014 businesses were damaged. Santa Cruz County alone suffered $106 million damage.

Although Santa Cruz and nine other counties are eligible for federal disaster aid, officials and residents in the hard-hit areas complain that help from the Federal Emergency Management Agency is limited and extremely slow in coming.

Michael Van De Veer, administrative analyst and emergency services coordinator for Santa Cruz County, said the county's $90 million budget will have to absorb the $5.6 million already spent in storm repairs. With strict spending limitations brought on by Proposition 13, the county can't afford to spend much more.

There are also problems for residents whose homes were damaged. There is loan money available at 8 or 16 percent interest. People who can't qualify for a loan from a commercial institution are eligible for the lower rate.

Before the loan is authorized, an investigator must visit the damaged home, verify damage, set the interest rate, determine if the homeowner can make the payments and mail the papers to the homeowner for signatures. Jim Brady, a spokesman for the Small Business Administration, which runs the loan program, says it takes an average of two months to process loans.

Grants of up to $3,000 are available for emergency home repair, but they are subject to delays as clerks verify eligibility. Brady says 47 grant checks, totaling $36,314, have already been sent out in Marin, Sonoma and Contra Costa counties under the Limited Home Repair program. Checks for Santa Cruz County are to go out this week.

Many of the homes damaged and lost in the flood did not carry flood insurance, available only through the federal government, according to insurance agent Colin Giles.

Some 8,380 northern Californians have asked for help at one of six federal disaster centers opened after the storm, according to another FEMA official, Charles Raudebaugh.

In Marin County, with $77 million damage and an $80 million annual budget, county administrator John Barrows said clean-up alone cost $20 million, of which the federal government will pay 75 percent.

To help fill the gaps left by FEMA, the San Francisco Foundation, a private charity, is setting up a $500,000 pilot project in Marin County to help homeowners and small businesses that don't qualify for federal aid.

Ugliness Is Concealing Inner Beauty

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer
NAPLES, Fla. (AP) — Precious doesn't mind that she's ugly. Neither does anyone else, because her appearance is only the cover for inner kindness and beauty.

Precious shows up around this Gulf Coast city from time to time, whenever a charitable cause lacks volunteers to help raise money, when hospital patients need an extra dose of laughter, or when senior citizens are especially lonely.

Wearing "granny" eye-glasses, she's easily recognized in her baggy old jeans and battered brown hat, with its brim turned up in front.

She's usually carrying an old broom and, as soon as she speaks or smiles, one can't help notice she doesn't have a tooth in her head. But that's not particularly strange for a flirty lady who gives her age as 101.

To know more about Precious, however, one has to talk to Bettye Floyd.

It is this timid 39-year-old who in minutes is transformed into a brazen centenarian who doesn't hesitate to solicit a kiss from any nearby man.

"Precious loves people," Ms. Floyd says with a laugh, "and she can get away with a lot of things that I could never do."

Ms. Floyd explains that Precious was born more than a year ago when she was asked to help a muscular dystrophy drive at the bowling alley where she has the food concession.

"I had no idea what I was going to do. I was scared," she recalls. With no previous show business experience, she created Precious on that occasion.

"I took out my false teeth and stood there dressed like an old woman with a flop hat on and holding a donations can in my hands."

A crowd gathered and began tittering at her comical appearance. Instinctively, she approached a man, puckered up and said, "How about a kiss, honey?"

She remembers how everyone broke out laughing and the man said: "I'll pay you if I don't have to kiss you."

"Everybody started giving me money. People would hand me dollars to offer a kiss to some man and then that man would offer me twice as much not to kiss him. It was a lot of fun and helped raise money for a worthy cause."

Ms. Floyd estimates Precious was 100 years old that day. "And every year she gets a year older. She's 101 now and I hope she reaches 200."

There's an increasing demand for Precious' appearance. She's never received or asked for any pay for her effort.

"Because of Ms. Floyd's efforts, thousands of dollars have been raised. She gets peoples' hearts in the right place and she affects both volunteers and those who give," says Peter DeVos, the southwestern Florida coordinator for muscular dystrophy.

Few people cheered by Ms. Floyd's humor are aware of the pathos of her own life.

Born in Louisville, Ky., and raised in Maryland, she was struck with polio as a child, but overcame most of the disease's crippling effects. As a teen-ager, her mother placed her in an orphanage to protect her from abnormal advances made by her natural father, who has since died.

Ms. Floyd's two marriages ended in divorce. She has worked most of her life as a waitress to support her five children including her youngest — an adopted girl who is now 12.

Ms. Floyd is rather thin, the result of a string of serious illnesses some years back that caused her to lose her natural teeth and undergo major surgery over a dozen times. She has been at death's door on numerous occasions and was in severe pain for years.

"There were times when I felt like simply stopping my medication and ending it all," she says. "And I was bitter because life hasn't been easy. But my mother taught me love. I saw her suffer and do without for us."

KROGER nutrition NEWS

FOR GOOD NUTRITION USE THE OLD NOODLE

Almost anyone will tell you that the noodle - from spaghetti and macaroni to ravioli and lasagna - is just "a lot of starch" - and especially fattening.

But happily, almost everyone is wrong!

The fact is, pasta - the name for the whole noodle family - is second only to bread as the way the world gets the key nutritional values of wheat.

Once you understand pasta, you can put it to tasty work - not only to help balance nutrition in a cost-cutting way, but to help keep your calories and your weight under control.

The facts about pasta - from sure-fire recipe and menu ideas to a brochure that tells you how to choose, cook and keep this good food - are available free at your KROGER store.

The clue to pasta's nutrition is in its very name which means a dried paste made from wheat so that it will keep longer. (Try keeping bread on your shelf for a month or more.)

A cup of cooked noodles (enriched with vitamins and minerals and with egg) can be very satisfying for its 150 calories. It can offer 10% of your day's protein; 15% of the day's vitamin B1; 8% of your iron; 10% of your niacin; and much more.

And that's before you add the values of tomatoes, mushrooms and peppers - or of meat and cheese, with both their high-quality protein and their vitamins and minerals. That's why KROGER would like you to look again at pasta - and its truth.

Kroger Sav-on
