Congressional Plan Facing House Test

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) - The House and Senate initially approved plans to redistrict themselves Tuesday while a new congressional reapportionment plan cleared the Senate and faced a House test today.

The congressional map, which would move Durham County from the 4th Congressional District to the 2nd, won a 42-7 Senate vote in a night meeting after the General Assembly opened its latest special session.

Both chambers, pressing to adjourn the special session quickly, planned to take final votes today on their plans for redrawing House and Senate districts.

A fight was expected in the Senate, where lawmakers carved populous Wake County into three districts, shaped a new majority-black district inside Guilford County and rejected their lawyers' advice by refusing to change northeastern districts.

The plans were all drawn up to replace maps passed last year but rejected by the U.S. Justice Department, which acted under the 1965 Voting Rights Act and said they diluted black voting strength.

But one of the Washington lawyers hired by the state to help gain federal approval for the plans warned senators their redistricting plan faced serious legal trouble because of its failure to change northeastern district lines to increase the percentage of blacks.

"I'm going to feel like I'm going into the lion's den when I go back to Washington," said attorney Kathleen Heenan. "I won't even be able to speak to you encouragingly."

The Senate voted 39-10 to tentatively approve the Senate map. Sen. Bob Wynne, D-Wake, planned to offer more amendments to eliminate the three-way division of Wake County and put most of the county with Lee and Harnett counties.

In the House, legislators voted 80-30 to tentatively approve a new plan that includes majority-black districts in Cumberland and Guilford counties and the northeast.

House members overwhelmingly defeated efforts by Rep. Kenneth Spaulding, D-Durham, to draw majority-black districts inside Charlotte, however.

The House also defeated an amendment sponsored by white Democrats from the northeast that would have altered district lines in that region and reduced black majorities in two new districts.

Both House and Senate plans would for the first time divide dozens of counties to achieve population balances, a move bitterly opposed by many lawmakers whose counties were split.

"Are you going to let some man sit up there in Washington, with a high-backed chair and a brief case, reverse what our people have voted for?" said Rep. Sam Bundy, D-Pitt.

He argued that the state should have appealed a decision by the Justice Department late last year that overturned a state constitutional amendment which had previously banned the division of county lines.

"We are being politically raped; not only raped but dismembered," he said.

But Rep. Dan Lilley, D-Lenoir, said the choice was divide counties now or see the federal courts draw the lines. "I find that a difficult pill to swallow, but I took an oath to defend the constitutions of the United States and North Carolina, and that's the way it is," he said.

Critics Rise To Challenge By Reagan To Put Up Or Shut Up

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan's budget architects are asking a skeptical Congress to give more study to their 1983 spending plan, but some critics already are rising to the president's challenge to "put up or shut up."

Even as Reagan was calling his proposal "a line drawn in the dirt," work was proceeding on an alternative that would freeze most federal spending and scrub a 10 percent drop in income tax withholding scheduled to take effect in July.

Responding to a growing chorus of criticism from Capitol Hill - including many Republicans - Reagan declared Tuesday:

"The budget we have proposed is a line drawn in the dirt. Those who are serious about reducing the deficit will cross it and work with us on our proposals or their alternatives. Those who are not sincere in their concern about the deficit will stay on the other side and simply continue their theatrics."

Before returning from a two-day trip to the Midwest, the president used a separate address to tell "the paid political complainers ... as politely as I can: Put up or shut up."

Among those putting up is Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., the top Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee.

He is drafting an alternative - clearly being watched closely by Republican leaders - that would freeze spending on benefit programs and the military at the level of the 1982 budget while eliminating the 10 percent cut in personal income tax withholding rates scheduled to take effect in July.

Hollings also would make changes in a similar cut due in July 1983, but it was not clear whether he wants to eliminate, postpone or reduce it.

A Hollings aide, who asked not to be identified, said Tuesday that preliminary estimates showed Hollings' plan would result in a deficit for the 1983 fiscal year of between $40 billion and $45 billion - less than half the $91.5 billion shortfall envisioned in Reagan's budget.

The aide said details of Hollings' proposal are still being worked out, but it is expected to include elimination for one year of cost-of-living increases for all benefit programs, including Social Security and other pensions.

Budget director David A. Stockman was skeptical about the Hollings plan. "It's so simple that it raises great questions of practicality," Stockman said in a brief interview.

He questioned how the freeze could be applied effectively to the variety of government programs.

"I can understand its attractiveness," Stockman said. "But after it's analyzed for about two weeks, it'll have a lot less attractiveness than a lot of other options."

Today, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said of the Hollings plan: "We have made our budget proposal and, as the president spelled out many times, that's what we want enacted."

Reagan's proposal, Speakes said, "is a good plan, it's a workable plan. If you stick by it, it will do what it's supposed to do."

He said a spending freeze

"doesn't allow us to move forward with the defense buildup that the president has a strong desire to see implemented."

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said Tuesday, "I support the president" adding that "at this moment the president has the only unified" budget proposal in existence.

Military Court To Try Walesa's Deputy Chief

GDANSK, Poland (AP) - Miroslaw Krupinski, the deputy chief of the Solidarity labor federation, is to be put on trial before a military court for organizing a national strike committee after martial law was declared, the Gdansk provincial prosecutor says.

Krupinski, second only to Solidarity chairman Lech Walesa in the hierarchy of the independent union, will be the highest union official brought to trial for violating martial law decrees.

(In Madrid meanwhile, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. said today that "never before has there been such unanimity of view achieved within" the 15-nation NATO alliance as there has been over the Polish crisis.

(Haig held a news conference after speeches by himself and five other Western foreign ministers at the 35-nation Conference on European Security and Cooperation, a meeting designed to check compliance with the 1975 Helsinki accords promoting "human rights."

(Sparking protests from Soviet and Polish delegates, Haig and the other ministers bitterly criticized the Polish regime and the Soviets for the imposition of martial law Dec. 13 by the Warsaw authorities. Haig told reporters Tuesday the United States and the Common Market would not continue talks on East-West cooperation and on upgrading the Helsinki pact until martial law ended in Poland.)

bipartisan drive in the U.S. Senate to get the military government in Poland declared in default on bank loans.

The House, in a 256-152 vote on Tuesday, rejected a move to require such a declaration before the U.S. government could pick up the interest payments on government-guaranteed food loans to Poland.

The Senate was expected to vote on the bill today.

Heart Surgery For Kissinger

BOSTON (AP) - Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger underwent open heart surgery today aimed at bypassing clogged arteries.

Shortly after 8 a.m. Scott Davis, an assistant in Massachusetts General Hospital's public relations office, said the surgery "is just beginning. It is under way." Davis he said he would get no word on how the surgery went for several hours, until the operation was over.

A coronary angiogram taken Monday showed a blockage in the circulation around his heart, Kissinger said. His surgeon, Dr. W. Gerald Austen, said one artery was fully blocked and two others might be partially blocked.

North Carolina Primary May Be In June-Maybe In August

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) - North Carolina's statewide primary is scheduled for May 4, but it may be held June 1. Or maybe it'll be August 3. Or then again, maybe there'll be two statewide primaries.

All those possibilities and more are posed in a bill - rescheduling the primary because of the confusion over redistricting - that won state House approval Tuesday and headed to the Senate today.

The bill establishes six alternative dates for the North Carolina primary election, with the ultimate decision left up to the state Board of Elections.

The board would be empowered to select one of the six dates, depending upon when the U.S. Justice Department approves reapportionment plans under provisions of the federal Voting Rights Act.

Elections Director Alex Brock said it was impossible to hold the primary as scheduled May 4 because Justice officials have already rejected redistricting maps for House, Senate and congressional seats. Approval of new plans isn't likely in time to set a May 4 election in motion, he said.

Also postponed under the bill would be primaries for local offices, such as sheriff or county commission, and the statewide water bond issue.

But the bill leaves open the possibility that two separate primaries could be held - one for congressional and one for legislative and local candidates.

That is because the Elections Board would schedule the primary once Justice approves plans for House and Senate districts. If the congressional plan isn't approved until later, the legislature would set another primary date for congressional candidates when it reconvenes in June.

State Rep. Doug Clark, D-Duplin, said he introduced the bill, "because we don't know how quick or slow the Justice Dept. (Please turn to Page 16)

ELECTRIC REFUND

The money that Vepco collected and refunded to the Greenville Utilities Commission last year after settlement of the rate case is being refunded to GUC customers over a four-month period - January, February, March and April.

What about the farmers that use bulk barns? Their curing bills range from $800 to $4,000 and some even more, from July through August. The bulk barn customers won't get any benefit from this and I don't think it's right. A.S.

You're right. The bulk barn customers won't get a refund during the curing season. But neither will air conditioning customers or customers on the system at the time the charges were made and who are no longer GUC customers.

A spokesman for the Utilities Commission acknowledged that unless the refund were spread over a 12-month period, every class of customer won't share equally. However, the spokesman said Utilities board members, in approving the four-month refund period, felt the 12-month plan would make the refunds "so small the people really wouldn't feel it ... wouldn't see it."

By reducing the length of time, customers "would see it ... feel it ... get some impact from it," in the cold winter months when utility bills are generally at their highest.

"There's no perfect way" to make the refunds so the people who used the electricity and paid the bills when the Vepco charges were made will get reimbursed, the commission spokesman said.

Acting ECU Chancellor Not 'Just Minding Shop'

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Listening to Dr. John Howell talk, you'd think he loves East Carolina University. If you know him, you know he does.

And he's now acting chancellor of the third largest university in North Carolina.

In his 25th year at the ECU campus, the political science professor has been a department chairman, dean of the college of arts and sciences, dean of the graduate school and provost, a position that later became vice chancellor for academic affairs. He resigned the vice chancellor's post in 1979, after six years, to return to teaching and writing.

"I'm not going to be just somebody minding the shop," Howell said after University of North Carolina President William Friday appointed him acting chancellor on Jan. 8. "It will be business as usual. And business as usual at a university is moving ahead."

Several days later, Howell told the university's trustees,

"I don't intend to be inactive." And he hasn't been. He's been out meeting the public.

A chancellor, Howell suggests, needs to get out and bolster the university's relations with the external community.

"I've spent more time with external relations than I have with internal matters," Howell said. "I don't have to spend as much time with internal matters. I know the people ... know how they work."

The school's vice chancellors make a lot of the decisions, and many others are made further "down the line," Howell explained. "Actually, the university is entirely too diverse for any one person to be in control. It's a matter of setting an atmosphere. We're going to move ahead harmoniously."

In this age of specialization, according to Howell, one person can't be expected to be an expert in everything. Decisions have to be left to others. "The chief executive officer has got to set the stage for that to happen," he said.

A native of Five Points, Ala., Howell received undergraduate degrees from the University of Alabama, his Ph.D. from Duke University (1954), and taught at the University of Idaho, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Duke, Sweet Briar College, and Memphis State University before joining the ECU faculty in 1957.

East Carolina has been a good institution for a long time, Howell said. He wants the university to continue to improve.

But the work of the university is not confined to the campus, he noted.

"A university has to move out into the surrounding country-side and the people it serves," to provide the kinds of programs that are needed. "It has to adapt to changing needs," Howell suggests. "If a university doesn't reach out that way, it doesn't complete its function. American universities have developed to serve the needs of the community. This is an area where the chief executive officer has a much more immediate influence with what's going on than in internal matters."

The internal workings of the university haven't changed much, according to Howell, "except a vague statement from me that I want things harmonious."

"The real guts and work are still going on. We haven't lost any time."

But Howell feels "we have to spend more time with external relations."

Leo Jenkins, the acting chancellor said, is "probably the last chancellor that will have much of a permanent impression on the school." Jenkins' tenure - from 1960 to 1978 - was a time of rapid growth. Those who follow, Howell said, will simply build and improve on what's already been started at East Carolina.

Why does Howell like East Carolina University?

"The atmosphere among the people who work here is very friendly. We get along with each other very well. It's a very friendly place to be."

Dear Abby

First, Try Apologizing

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I did the most terrible thing a mother-in-law could do. I told my daughter-in-law right in front of my son that it didn't look good for her to let their best friend (I'll call him Joe) in the house while my son was at work. I live next door and this has bothered me for two years, and I finally said it to her face to ease the pain of keeping my mouth shut for so long. My daughter-in-law's reputation wasn't very good before she married my son, if you get my drift.

Well, she got mad at me and told me if that's what I thought about her I was no longer welcome in her house. It's my son's house, too, but he sat right there and didn't say a word. Yesterday I called my son and asked him to bring their baby to my house so I could see him. I told him I was sorry about what I said to his wife, and he said that was something I would have to straighten out with her.

Abby, how do you reckon I should go about making up with my daughter-in-law?

FEELING BAD

DEAR FEELING: For openers, you could apologize to her.

DEAR ABBY: You blew it when you advised "Long John Silver" not to make a fuss about the two pieces of silverware that "disappeared" right off the table during a formal dinner at his home.

What do you mean, "The embarrassment wouldn't be worth the price of the silver"? Have you priced silverware lately?

I would have first announced to all the guests that some silverware was missing, and if nobody "fessed up," so help me, I'd search every man and woman thoroughly before they went home.

NO DUMMY

DEAR NO DUMMY: It takes all kinds. Try this for size:

DEAR ABBY: You were right to advise the host and hostess not to be too hasty in announcing that some silverware had disappeared, and would the guilty party please come forward and produce it.

This is what happened to me last October. A friend asked if he could bring his friend to my home for a dinner party. I, too, said, "Of course."

At the end of the evening, a sterling fork was missing. I looked through the trash, on the floor, behind the draperies, in the utensil drawer — everywhere. No fork!

Well, last week I found the fork! Because I recycle my used jars, I always sterilize them in my dishwasher first. It seems that the label from one of those jars got stuck up under the front of the inside of my dishwasher. In removing the label, I felt the fork, completely hidden from view. Had it not been for that label, I never would have found the fork.

Go look, John. It happened to me.

Agency Seeks Support In Population Control

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Most women in the Third World want to practice birth control, but many don't know how or can't get necessary devices, a top United Nations official says.

Dr. Nafis Sadik, assistant secretary general of U.N. and deputy of the U.N. fund for Population Activities, said developed nations need to provide birth-control education and resources to poorer countries.

Ms. Sadik commented during a gathering Monday at the Chapel Hill home of Dr. Betty Cogswell, a member of the Population Action Council board.

Also there was Werner Fornos, head of the Population Action Council in Washington, and a number of North Carolina population specialists.

"Mothers are quite tired of having too many children," said Ms. Sadik. "(But) an individual is only going to accept (birth control) if his or her desire coincides with whatever the national objective might be. So all you can do is provide the services and the education."

She predicted that international birth control programs would become more effective.

"Once women understand they can have control over their futures and destinations, I don't think they could be made to have 10 children again," she said.

Fertility rates in most African, Asian and Latin American countries where overpopulation is worst average seven children per mother, she said. In Kenya, the typical woman has an average of 8.4 living children aged 5 and up.

In China, 5 million census-takers will be needed to count the population (estimated at 1 billion) in June 1982. Census-takers alone will equal the population of Finland, Ms. Sadik said.

American taxpayers are this year contributing $211 million to the worldwide effort to curb population growth. However, Third World countries are contributing $1.5 billion to help solve their own problem, Fornos said.

Ms. Sanik said the thrust of the U.N.-sponsored programs is to build up the capacities of countries to provide services.

She said that is needed to reach the 400 million people who, in a U.N. survey, indicated they wanted family planning but did not understand it.

Leaders serving on committees who attended Monday session included J. Richard Udry, director of the Carolina Population Center in Chapel Hill; Daniel C. Jones, a Chapel Hill attorney; Dr. Nasiba Ahmad of Duke University; Elvin Kessel of Research Triangle Park and Leonard Laufe of Chapel Hill, both physicians; Stephen Mumford, a Chapel Hill educator, and the Rev. Robert L. Newton of the Baptist State Convention in Raleigh.

Congress Must Act

President Reagan has proposed a $757.6 billion budget for 1983 that increases defense spending and cuts into social programs.

The proposed budget brought instant reaction from Congress, with liberals complaining about the social cuts and conservatives upset about the projected $91.5 billion deficit. In fact a $273 billion deficit is forecast for the years 1982-83-84 unless there is a drastic turn around in the economy.

There are many who believe that the deficit projections are too low and government borrowing will be even heavier than anticipated. That is based on a lack of confidence in the Reagan programs turning the economy around, and the possibility that social cuts may lead to heavier costs in the future.

The introduction of the budget was followed by Budget Director David A. Stockman warning that Congress would be responsible if the Reagan budget were not approved and there was a stall in the economy.

That is laughable. If the economy continues to sink, the blame will be squarely on the president's shoulders with enough blame left over for Stockman. Last year they were obsessed with whacking taxes for special interest groups to the point where huge deficits have now materialized.

Congress should be growling about the economic naivete of those in the White House. The legislative branch of our government should make every effort to bring some order to the budget of next year and the years ahead. It may be true that Congress, by acting, could put itself in the position of sharing some of the blame for any economic disaster that develops. For Congress to do nothing, however, would be to simply wait for disaster. If Congress understands the situation it will do considerable work on this budget.

Start Buying American

"There is only one way the country is going to get on its feet," said Baleful.

"How's that?" I asked as we drank coffee in his office at the Baleful Refrigerator Company.

"The consumer has to start buying American," he said, slamming his fist down on the desk. "Every time an American buys a foreign refrigerator it costs one of my people his job. And every time one of my people is out of work it means he or she can't buy refrigerators."

"It is a vicious circle," I said.

Baleful's secretary came in, "Mr. Thompson, the steel broker, is on the phone."

My friend grabbed the receiver. "Thompson, where the hell is that steel shipment from Japan that was supposed to be in last weekend? ... I don't care about bad weather. We're almost out of steel and I'll have to close down the refrigerator assembly line next week. If you can't deliver when I promise, I'll find myself another broker."

"You get your steel from Japan?" I asked Baleful.

"Even with shipping costs, their price is still lower than steel made in Europe. We used to get all our sheets from Belgium, but the Japanese are now giving them a run for their money."

The buzzer on the phone alerted Baleful. He listened for a few moments and then said, "Excuse me I have a call from Taiwan ... Buster, how are you coming with those door handles for the Mark Four? Look R... D have designed a new push-button door handle and we're going to send the spec to you. Tell Mr. Chow if his people send us a sample of one and he can make it for us at the same price as the old ndle, we'll give his company the order."

A man came in with a plastic container and said, "Mr. Baleful, you said you wanted to see one of these before we ordered them. They are the containers for the ice maker in the refrigerator."

Baleful inspected it carefully and banged it on the floor a couple of times. "What's the price on it?"

"Hong Kong can deliver at $2 a tray and Dong-Fu Plastics in South Korea said they can make it for $1.70."

"It's just a plastic tray. Take the South Korean bid. We'll let Hong Kong supply us with the shelves for the freezer. Any word on the motors?"

"There's a German Company in Brazil that just came out with a new motor and it's passed all our tests, so Johnson has ordered 50,000."

"Call Cleveland Motors and tell them we're sorry but the price they quoted us was just too high."

"Yes, sir," the man said and departed.

The secretary came in again and said, "Harry telephoned and wanted to let you know the defrosters just arrived from Finland. They're unloading the box cars now."

"Good. Any word on the wooden crates from Singapore?"

"They're at the dock in Hoboken."

"Thank heaven, Cancel our order from Boise Cascade."

"What excuse should I give them?"

"... all them we made a mistake in our inventory or we're switching to fiberglass. I don't care what you tell them."

Baleful turned to me. "Where were we?"

"You were saying that if the consumer doesn't start buying American this country is going to be in a lot of trouble."

"Right. It's not only his patriotic duty, but his livelihood that's at stake. I'm going to Washington next week to tell the Senate Commerce Committee if they don't get off the stick there isn't going to be a domestic refrigerator left in this country. We're not going to sy in business for our health."

Dissimilar To Vietnam

By MAXWELL GLEN and CODY SHEARER

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's decision last week to provide the U.S.-backed Salvadoran junta with $55 million in "emergency" military aid was a blunt reminder to the Vietnam generation: Some administrations aren't adverse to embroiling America in another quagmire on foreign soil.

Unlike the Johnson White House, however, which lunged blindly into a deepening morass in Vietnam, the Reagan administration can't act impulsively overseas without paying a heavy price at home.

The world in 1982 is a far different place from the world of Lyndon Johnson, reflecting in part the bitterly learned lessons transposed from one era to another. It won't take seven years of domestic resistance to change government policies, as was the case in the vietnam war.

This was evident last week when three congressmen — Gerry Studds (D-Mass.), Tom Harkin, (D-Iowa) and Bob Edgar (D-Pa.) — called for an end to all U.S. military assistance to the Salvadoran junta. While the legislators were introducing their resolution in the House, demonstrators outside protested Reagan's supplemental appropriation as well as his Determination Number 82-4, certifying that the junta had met congressional human rights standards for receiving military assistance.

At a similar level of American involvement in Vietnam, Congress was far from leading any challenge to the president or the Pentagon. Nor would congressmen have met regularly, if at all, with so-called enemy leaders, as Rep. Michael Barnes (D-Md.) did last Tuesday, or even visited the battle zone, as several congressmen have.

The early dissent in Congress, however, reflects as much sophistication on the part of the American public as on a few legislators. Americans tend to be far more skeptical of presidential pronouncements, and equally unwilling to be party to another vietnam. Every major opinion poll indicates that a majority of Americans opposes increased U.S.

military commitment to Central America.

This view has been spawned by several factors. Segments of the Catholic Church — which backed U.S. involvement during much of the Indochina war — have given credence and visibility to congressmen and traditional peace groups, documenting atrocities and human rights violations by the American-backed junta.

America's allies, moreover, aren't as acquiescent as they were 15 years ago. Groups, if not the administrations in France, Mexico and West Germany, have supported various anti-government factions in El Salvador. Next to stories about repression in Poland, Reagan's support for the oppressive regime in San Salvador tends to dominate the foreign news sections of the European press. Not surprisingly, the U.S. is often cast in an unfavorable light.

Meanwhile, the American press has been far less susceptible to the "official" line than it was during the early stages of Vietnam, whereas only a "gadfly" journalist such as I.F. Stone would document government deception in 1967, even The Wall Street Journal now stands ready to criticize. Last spring, the business-oriented daily lambasted the State Department's "White Paper" on El Salvador for overstating the case for increased military aid to the junta. American reporters and camera crews also accompany guerrilla contingents now as a matter of course, and splash our television screens with images of barbaric civil war.

These new forces of cynicism have captured the flag from more traditional anti-war groups in the country. Until recently, the church and social activist groups played the major informational role for Congress and the press. Having coordinated rallies with varying degrees of success last year, they have been confused about their future role.

"We've definitely entered a new phase," said Robert Costa of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador (CISPES). "Right now, we're groping for answers on how to approach it."

Choice Between Two Devils

The government of El Salvador is not very palatable to the United States with our strong beliefs in liberty.

Consequently the idea of providing military aid does not set well with a large segment of our people. Not only does supporting a rightist government cause concern but the fear of another Vietnam involvement hangs over the whole situation.

We only have two choices, however. We can support the government which now exists or wait around for a takeover by forces backed by Cuba and its patron the Soviet Union, both of which have a human rights record as poor as any nations on earth.

The situation is different, too, from Vietnam in that further Cuban-Soviet inroads in the Western Hemisphere can put Soviet type repression at our very door.

Faced with this situation we have little choice than to support the government that exists against a Cuban takeover.

needs known to them and without the bureaucratic bulk so often accompanying social programs. The initiation of block grants this year will be a strong step in that direction.

Almost all commissioners (92 percent) like general revenue sharing funds which can be used with flexibility and freedom, and both two years ago and today continue to press for continuation.

They also like (80 percent strong) child support enforcement which uses effective techniques to track down and bring to justice individuals responsible for paying to feed, clothe and educate a youngster.

response from North Carolina's most local politicians obviously parallel those from all across the nation, since the outcome of Washington's study, polling and cutting produced almost identical results.

A most important general response from county commissioners has been that if federal or state government is going to demand a specific program operated in a particular way, then the higher level should provide the money. Otherwise, pass the money along in lesser amounts and county officials can spend it to better meet

Other Editors Say Spending Splurge

(High Point Enterprise)

If anybody in North Carolina still has any doubts about the legislative branch's quest for power, usually at the expense of the executive branch, a consideration of the office of lieutenant governor seems in order.

In this state, the lieutenant governor is the second in command to the governor. He would be prepared to take over the reins of state government should the governor for any reason be unable to continue.

That places him, of course, in the executive branch. At the same time, the lieutenant governor in this state is the presiding officer of the Senate. He has the authority of appointment for all Senate committee work, which in large measure gives him major power, to see that the work of lawmaking goes as he wants it to go. He becomes half of the "big two" with the speaker of the House. Since the governor of North Carolina does not have the power of the veto, this lawmaking clout is multiplied.

Not very long ago, the lieutenant governor of North Carolina usually went home and stayed there when the General Assembly was not in session. It is to be presumed that he kept up with what was going on back in Raleigh, in case the governor needed him; but his job was essentially a part-time one. Unlike the vice president of the United States, no pretense was made that the lieutenant governor was very important.

That is how Pat Taylor, who was lieutenant governor in 1973, saw it. In that year, the state budget set up $17,000 a year to operate the lieutenant governor's office.

Now, eight years later the state appropriates $300,000 for the office. Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green has seven fulltime employees to help him carry the heavy load. Comfortably removed from this scene, Pat Taylor was recently quoted as saying that a political empire was being created.

We have not heard from Gov. Jim Hunt on this, but we would greatly doubt that the impetus for creating this situation came from the governor's office, from any belief that the second in command had to become a full-time government power.

Where it came from was the General Assembly, where Jimmy Green has the power to make trades which contribute to his own authority and boost him toward the governor's race in 1984.

Do the taxpayers want this kind of spending of their dollars? Did they have any say in an 18-fold increase in expenditures so that the lieutenant governor could go about building and maintaining a personal political machine?

And would it not be a good idea now, as we proceed into another year when we will elect all the legislators who will represent us for the next two years, to suggest strongly that this is a good place to turn the spending pages backward, not forward?

The departure of Officer Hugh Benson from the Greenville Police Department to a new career in the private sector is an event which should not go unnoticed.

Officer Benson's long and worthy service to the citizens of Greenville while serving as the police juvenile officer was marked by professionalism and fairness. Many parents whose children drifted into trouble gained high respect for Officer Benson as a result of his caring for children and his common sense in dealing with parental problems.

The Options Are Fading, Too

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — The answer to deficits is economic growth, said the president in presenting his budget. But the economy shrinks. The gap grows. And the options evaporate.

One possibility for reducing the gap would be tax increases, but the economy already is in sorry shape. To raise taxes might be to risk pushing the teetering economic vehicle off the cliff.

Perhaps, then, even more can be cut from the budget. Perhaps, but only at the risk of an uproar from aid recipients and elected officials. Cut defense then? The president himself would object.

Maybe the Federal Reserve could be induced to ease credit, setting off a revenue-building spending spree. But, the Fed objects, that would mean a return to inflation, one area where success has come.

What then? Live with the budget gap, says President Reagan, foreseeing what was once the most basic of all his goals, and demonstrating at the same time that he had little or no choice.

Reagan has been forced by realities of life to make almost heretical changes in his formula for success, not just in terms of budget balancing, which now isn't a goal at all, but in other essentials.

Whereas a year ago he portrayed the options as clear and attainable, his budget this year demonstrates how ephemeral and elusive they are.

It is now conceded that there won't be a sharp recovery, even if the budget writers suggest it. Their own numbers show it. Real 1982 gross national product isn't expected to total even 1 percent, and in 1983 it might reach 5.2 percent, which ranks it as unremarkable.

Interest rates are likely to stay in double digits into next year. And over the next several years, concedes the president, rates "will fall less rapidly than we had originally anticipated."

As was conceded earlier, the unemployment rate is likely to rise rather than fall, to as much as 10 percent of the workforce, before improvement can be looked for.

Miscalculations? Yes. Neither the big deficits nor the recession were foreseen. The excuse sounds lame. "... it is impossible in a short period of time to correct the mistakes of decades," said Reagan.

If the economy grew smartly it would resolve a lot of the conflicts. But it isn't, and that removes the keystone from the plan. The transfer of economic power to the private sector isn't likely to be swift.

It is in this area that intense arguments are bound to develop. Some of the president's strongest supporters in private industry argue that the deficits will prevent them from embarking on expansion.

In essence, their argument is that the capital pool is insufficient for the administration to finance big deficits without denying industry its share or, at least, forcing interest rates to prohibitive levels.

The administration contends that not only will there be sufficient money, but that business and individual savings resulting from tax cuts will permit a rapid buildup of capital formation for expansion.

Private sector economists and business people already have expressed doubts, and have even ridiculed such assumptions.

Assuming little change in Federal Reserve policy, they say, borrowing costs are likely to remain high or even rise if they must compete for money with government.

The answer to deficits, said the president in his budget message, are "indefatigable efforts to control spending and borrowing" combined with "economic growth."

With the president committed to reducing government as a factor in the economy, the growth he seeks must then come from the private sector.

And nothing, it has been demonstrated, chokes off business like high interest rates.

In the coming weeks, the administration's renewed commitment to the Salvadoran junta is expected to draw more players into the ring. One U.S.-based humanitarian organization, Medical Aid for El Salvador, plans to bring a host of Hollywood stars to the State Department later this month. Another human rights monitoring group and a coalition of congressmen are challenging Reagan's steps in the courts. In the face of the president's certification that human rights are improving in El Salvador, contradictory reports from the U.N., Amnesty International, the ACLU and other organizations have only made the White House look foolish.

Nonetheless, the administration remains determined to take advantage of the geographical proximity of the conflict and other often absurd justifications for involvement.

Unfortunately, the Reaganauts haven't learned the right lessons from Vietnam. Fortunately, the American public has. We'll county commissioners, by and large, feel can be cut or eliminated with little harm.

Tops on that list is the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act which has been proven time and again ineffective and rife with fraud and waste. A third of the commissioners think reduction is fine, and fully 63 percent said eliminate it entirely.

Community Action Agencies are in disfavor with 92 percent of commissioners with more than half favoring elimination. Grants through the Law Enforcement Assistance Act received little support, as did the Work Incentive Program.

In lesser numbers, commissioners felt that funds could be cut or eliminated for the Women, Infants, Children Nutrition Program and for the elaborate and controversial health-planning machinery.

More than half of the commissioners felt that reductions could be made — but not elimination — in outdoor recreation grants, Community development grants, and in Section Eight Housing for the poor.

HOUSE DAMAGED BY FIRE — A Route 1, Winterville, home was heavily damaged by fire Tuesday night. According to Bobby Joyner, Pitt County fire marshal, the alarm was sounded for Winterville firemen at 8:39 p.m. Members of Ayden, Red Oak and Eastern Pines fire departments also assisted Winterville. The house was occupied by the C. E. Tripp family, which was not home at the time of the blaze. Joyner said the fire apparently started in the rear of the wood frame house. There were no injuries reported and there was no estimate of damage available. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Storm Damage Is A Record-Setter

By CRAIG HORST
Associated Press Writer
KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Severe storms that swept across the country in January caused an estimated $343.9 million in property damage, more than double the record amount for the month, according to an insurance industry analysis. Last month's damage total smashed the previous January record of $163.5 million in 1979, W.D. Swift, vice president of Property Claim Services for the American Insurance Association, said Tuesday.

Losses from subsequent floods and lost profits from businesses that couldn't open will send the economic loss figures even higher, Dave Stringer, a spokesman for the industry trade group, added.

"Some businesses made money — snowblower sales were up and any firm that does shoveling made money — but I've got a feeling that on balance it's going to be very negative figures," Stringer said.

The worst storm of the month swept across the country's midsection between Jan. 8 and Jan. 14, causing $220 million in property damage, Swift said. Damage claims included roof collapses, traffic accidents and flooded houses from frozen water pipes.

Loss estimates from the storm included $18 million in Illinois; $16 million in Michigan, Missouri and Ohio; $14 million in Minnesota and Texas; $12 million in Kansas, and $5 million in Iowa and Oklahoma.

A second storm hit parts of the country east of the Mississippi River Jan. 15-20, causing insured losses of $60 million, Swift said.

Damage from winds, flooding and earth movement from a Jan. 3-5 storm caused $33.9 million in losses in California, while a Jan. 17 windstorm resulted in $20 million in losses in Colorado, according to the industry analysis.

The first storm of the month, Jan. 2-4, caused $10 million in losses in Mississippi and Ohio from hail, tornadoes, snow and flooding.

In 1981, losses of $715 million were reported, the first time in three years losses were under $1 billion.

Even so, the industry took "a fairly big underwriting loss" in 1981 and expects larger losses this year, Stringer said.

The violent weather was expected to continue through the spring, he pointed out.

However, "Any time you attempt to speculate beyond a week, you're on very shaky ground," said Fred Ostby, a meteorologist with the Severe Storm Forecast Center. "The pattern now is very conducive to stormy weather, but these things can change rapidly."

"The temptation is to say the pattern indicates a very active tornado season," he said.

Autopsy Found 'Gaping Wound'

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — An autopsy on the body of a woman found in a charred apartment near Jacksonville on Sunday showed she died from "a big, open gaping wound ... to the throat (from) a sharp instrument," Onslow County Medical Examiner Dr. Walter Gable said Tuesday.

He said 20-year-old Tammy Harper died before fire swept through a second-floor bedroom at Old Beacham's Apartments on U.S. 17.

Onslow County Sheriff's Department detectives say they believe the fire was set by Ms. Harper's killer to cover the crime.

Gable said Ms. Harper sustained "second- and third-degree burns over much of her body" during the blaze that followed her death.

were scheduled to be laid off because of the cuts, and a number of unemployment offices were to be closed.

However, the Labor Department has notified the states not to fire any workers or close any offices while Congress works on the legislation.

The additional money for low-income energy assistance would bring spending for the program up to $1.875 billion, or the amount spent a year ago.

Reagan recommended deep cuts in the program a year ago and last week called for cutting spending on the program to $1.3 billion for 1983.

federal government to the states, whose own unemployment reserves have run low. It is the state governments that actually distribute unemployment benefits to the jobless.

In addition, Reagan asked for $133 million for personnel to process unemployment claims.

The president's proposal includes another $210 million for employment service workers who attempt to help the out-of-work find jobs.

Congressional officials said the $210 million would restore funds for the employment service that Congress cut only two months ago at the president's request.

Congress Rushes Work On New Jobless Funds

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The House and Senate, responding to unexpectedly high unemployment caused by the recession, are rushing to complete work on a request from President Reagan for $2.3 billion in additional jobless benefits and services.

At the same time, Congress appears ready to approve legislation that the Reagan administration doesn't want — a bill to spend an additional $123 million to help poor people heat their homes this winter.

The Democratic-controlled House approved both measures Tuesday by lopsided margins, and Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker said he hoped that final passage for the bills would come today.

The vote in the House on the $2.3 billion bill for jobless benefit was 398-3, with only Reps. Phil Crane, R-Ill.; Ron Paul, R-Tex.; and Larry McDonald, D-Ga., opposing the plan.

The low-income energy assistance bill was approved, 342-62. While the administration opposes it, the Republican leadership in the House made no attempt to defeat the measure.

And Republican aides in both the House and Senate expressed the hope that the president would drop his opposition.

There is almost no disagreement in Congress over the need for additional funds to deal with joblessness.

Unemployment was 8.5 percent of the workforce last month, and has been running far above earlier estimates by administration and congressional economists. The Labor Department estimated that 9.2 million Americans were out of work in January.

But while support for the jobless bill was almost unanimous, House Republicans and Democrats used the occasion to engage in a spirited political fight about which party was to blame for the recession.

"This recession started in 1978 (when Jimmy Carter was in the White House)," said Rep. Robert S. Walker, R-Pa.

"And we've been on a downward path ever since," he added. "What the administration is trying to do is meet major problems it inherited."

But Walker's assessment sparked a rebuttal from Rep. David Bonior, D-Mwch.

"If the gentleman thinks the recession started in 1978, I have a used car I'd like to sell him," Bonior said.

Bonior, whose state has been hit hard by the deep slump in the automobile industry, added:

"It's time the administration spent less time with the bluebloods and more time with the blue collars."

Reagan's request to Congress called for $1.95 billion in new advances from the Greater Chance Of TB In East N.C.

CHAPEL HILL — Men over age 65 who live east of Raleigh have about three times greater a chance of developing tuberculosis than their counterparts living west of Raleigh.

That's the finding of a team of researchers at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill School of Medicine. The statistics were collected in the spring of 1981 as a part of a comprehensive TB management program undertaken by the university in cooperation with the state division of human resources.

The study was conducted by Dr. William Rutala, research assistant professor of medicine; Greg Samsa, biostatistician, and Dr. Felix Sarubbi, program director and associate professor of medicine.

Sarubbi said further investigation of the data and the reasons behind the differences in the TB rate between the eastern and western parts of the state may provide valuable information which can be used in the state's TB management program. North Carolina has the third highest TB attack rate in the nation.

"We are concerned about North Carolina's number three ranking because it does represent a significant number of cases," Sarubbi said, "but the figures must be kept in perspective. The total number of cases each year really has not changed." Sarubbi said there has been about 1,000 cases of TB in the state every year for the past 10 years.

Sarubbi said there are no signs of a TB epidemic in the state and tremendous strides have been made in the comprehensive management of the disease.

As part of a two-year program that will end in June, Sarubbi, Rutala and Nurse Virginia Kennedy have visited 40 hospitals in the state to review each hospital's capability of caring for TB patients.

The team worked with the state to designate seven "contract hospitals" which will care for people with TB if treatment is not available at their local hospital. The seven referral sites are: Duke University, Durham; Craven County Hospital, New Bern; Memorial Mission Hospital, Asheville; Fletcher Hospital, Henderson County; Glenn R. Fry Memorial Hospital, Hickory; McCain Hospital, Hoke County and N.C. Baptist Hospital, Winston-Salem. Negotiations are under way to add N.C. Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill to the list.

"Some people think that the closing of sanatoriums in the state has had a negative impact," Sarubbi said, "but by identifying these contract hospitals, we really have made great strides in taking care of TB patients in their own communities."

In addition to the site visits, the team held TB workshops and seminars in every region of the state. It also provides consultant services for physicians, hospitals and health departments wishing to evaluate their procedures for managing TB.

All of the services have been offered at no charge, and transportation has been provided by the Area Health Education Centers program.

Sarubbi said many of the programs are continuing and should provide benefits for the state's TB patients for many years. Sarubbi also said that if a second epidemiological study can be conducted, researchers may find some clue about the reason for the differences in the TB rates in the eastern and western parts of the state.

Sarubbi said it would be useful to examine living conditions, associated illnesses and dietary habits in an attempt to profile the TB patient in North Carolina.

Symposium At Raleigh

Black history and medicine will be the focus of the third annual black history symposium in Raleigh.

In observance of February as Black History Month, on Friday the Department of Cultural Resources will present "The History of Black Americans in North Carolina and the South" featuring lectures by authors and lecturers Dr. Sherman A. James and Dr. James H. Jones.

At the free symposium, 1:45 p.m. to 5 p.m. at the Archives and History/State Library Building auditorium at 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh, Dr. James, of the school of public health at University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, will discuss "John Henryism and Blood Pressure Differences Among Black Men: The Princeville Study."

Dr. Jones, of the department of history of the University of Houston, will lecture on "The Tuskegee Syphilis Experiment: A Tragedy of Race and Medicine." Dr. Jones is the author of the recent book entitled "Bad Blood: The Tuskegee Syphilis Experiment" and has lectured around the country on the 40-year experiment which took place in Macon County, Ala., between 1932-1962.

The symposium, sponsored by the division of archives and history of the Department of Cultural Resources, is free and open to the public.

Find Benefits In Lowly Algae

EILAT, Israel (AP) — On the shores of the Red Sea, Israeli scientists are finding new benefits from a lowly algae — called dunaliella bardawil — which thrives in saline ponds.

This algae, now being grown in acres of specially prepared ponds, produces three useful by-products: glycerol, an important component in many processed foods, cosmetics and pharmaceuticals; beta carotene, a widely used natural food color from which the body makes vitamin A, and a high-quality protein food for animals.

Tests indicate one acre of ponds will produce 30 tons of dry algae which could result in 60 percent protein meal, 35 percent glycerol and 5 percent carotene.

Joint Chiefs Expecting Anti-Satellite Capability

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Joint Chiefs of Staff report to Congress indicates the Soviet Union is making progress on developing a means of destroying U.S. satellites in high orbits.

The Soviet anti-satellite system, already rated well ahead of the United States',

"has the potential to destroy satellites in high orbits," according to a security-censored version of the annual JCS report to Congress. The report, issued Tuesday, does not make clear how close Soviet scientists are to achieving an anti-satellite system that could reach very high orbits — more than 22,000 miles above the Earth.

The United States has placed satellites in such orbits that are equipped with infrared sensors to detect Soviet missile launchings. Key U.S. communications satellites, vital to transmission of orders and messages in wartime, also orbit at similar altitudes.

According to Pentagon sources, although the Soviets have made progress, it is not believed their satellite-killers have been developed to the point that they could imperil such important U.S. space vehicles.

Nonetheless, the JCS report appeared to signal Soviet progress in this direction.

U.S. experts for years have considered the Soviets ahead of the United States in developing a workable anti-satellite system. Former Defense Secretary Harold Brown first publicly acknowledged Soviet attainment of a limited satellite killer more than four years ago.

The United States since then has begun work on an anti-satellite weapons system. Jones said last year that system "will use a hit-to-kill miniature vehicle launched from an F-15 jet fighter plane to attack the target satellite."

The Joint Chiefs of Staff also told Congress Tuesday that their most critical concern about the readiness of U.S. conventional forces is the shortage of qualified military personnel.

However, the JCS also said "major shortfalls in equipment, supplies and training require correction as a matter of urgency."

The report went to Capitol Hill a day after President Reagan's fiscal 1983 defense budget, which requests a $13 billion increase to improve the combat readiness of U.S. forces.

The JCS report said that the most pressing military personnel problem in Army units remains a shortage of non-commissioned officers in the combat branches, military intelligence and electronic warfare.

The Navy is short of experienced petty officers and officers in billets requiring highly technical skills, the JCS report said.

All of the armed services are short of pilots, the report added.

Jones Seeking USCG Funds

EMERALD ISLE, N.C. (AP) — Rep. Walter B. Jones, D-N.C., has introduced legislation to restore funds for the Swansboro Coast Guard Station at Emerald Isle, scheduled to be closed April 1.

Jones, whose 1st Congressional District includes Carteret County where the station is located, said the reduction in Coast Guard funding proposed by the Reagan administration will mean the loss of about 3,500 uniformed personnel.

"It is expected that these reductions will total approximately $45 million," Jones said. "The Coast Guard was authorized $1.35 billion for fiscal year 1982, already $46 million less than requested."

"In addition, the Coast Guard must commit $88 million of its budget to cover already approved pay increases," he said. "This money will have to be taken from operations, thus forcing another round of cuts in the near future unless extra funding is appropriated."

Jones said the reductions "will definitely diminish safety of life and property at sea, and obstruct the enforcement of laws dealing with drug smuggling, illegal immigration and fishing violations by foreign nations."

"The bill I have introduced will provide enough money to fund Coast Guard operations at current levels," Jones said. "It will not mean an expansion of Coast Guard services at all."

Coast Guard officials have no plans to do away with the federal property overlooking Bogue Inlet. The property could be used by other federal and state agencies if Coast Guard funding is not restored.

ECU News Bureau "Education and Work — A Profitable Partnership," a conference for employers, educators and students, will be co-sponsored by the East Carolina University Office of Cooperative Education Thursday.

The other sponsor is the University of Cincinnati's Professional Practice Institute.

Featured speakers are James Chambers, director of educational programs and services for the Burroughs Corp., Detroit, Mich., who will present an overview of cooperative education in the past, present and future; and Dr. Bill Bunce, associate director of the Cincinnati Professional Practice Institute, whose address, "A Profitable Partnership" will conclude the conference.

Other events include panel discussions, "Design, Management and Implementation of a Co-op Program," "The Student-Employer-University Relationship" and "Reflections of Co-op Alumni and Parents."

The ECU Office of Cooperative Education arranges for students to alternate periods of study with actual work experiences related to their fields of interest.

Find Happiness In Mid-America

NEW YORK (AP) — The happiest people live in the central United States between the Mississippi River and the Rockies, according to a study reported in Psychology Today magazine.

Residents of the mid-Atlantic states and the Great Lakes region rank low in psychological well-being, along with parts of the booming Sun Belt, the study said. Economically struggling New England showed one of the higher ratings, it said.

The findings, by social psychologist Carin Rubenstein, were based on 3,000 interviews in which people were asked 200 questions about their sense of happiness and well-being.

Prosecutors Seek Bar Testimony On River Tests

By DAVID PACE
Associated Press Writer
ATLANTA (AP) — Prosecutors are trying to keep the jury in the murder trial of Wayne B. Williams from hearing results of tests a defense witness conducted to simulate the path a dead body would take if dumped in the Chattahoochee River.

David Dingle, a National Weather Service hydrologist, testified Tuesday he conducted the tests for the defense after he became concerned when a colleague told him he was pressured by prosecutors to change a report the two had co-authored. Judge Clarence Cooper allowed prosecutors and defense lawyers to question Dingle about how the tests were conducted, but he did not rule immediately whether Dingle could testify about the test results.

Williams is charged with murder in the slayings of Nathaniel Cater, 27, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21, two of 28 young blacks whose deaths during a 22-month period were investigated by a special police task force. No arrests have been made in the 26 other killings.

Prosecutors contend Williams dumped the bodies of Cater and Payne off the Jackson Parkway bridge, where the 23-year-old black man was spotted by police in the pre-dawn hours of May 22.

Cater's body was found in the Chattahoochee River on May 24 about a mile downstream from the bridge, in the same general area where Payne's body had been found a month earlier.

The issue of Dingle's test results was one of several facing Cooper today as the defense opened its fourth day of testimony. The judge must decide if defense lawyers can question Gov. George Busbee and several other state and federal officials about political pressure to prosecute Williams.

And he must answer a defense request that the jury be taken to the Jackson Parkway bridge to view the scene where Williams first came to police attention. Hearings on both issues were held Tuesday.

Dingle said he worked with Benjamin Kittle, a hydrologist with the U.S.

Army Corps of Engineers, on a study requested by the task force of water flow conditions in the Chattahoochee River.

Kittle testified earlier the study concluded the Jackson Parkway bridge was the most likely entry point into the river for a body that ended up where the bodies of Cater and Payne were found.

But Dingle said Kittle changed the study in October to exclude the Interstate 285 bridge as a possible entry point for such a body after he was told witnesses had seen Payne's body upstream from the bridge. Dingle said he did not believe the study should have been changed based on unreliable eyewitness reports. And he said Kittle told him "he had been under pressure from (Assistant District Attorney) Gordon Miller to make the change in the report."

"I was concerned about the report being changed. I was concerned about the potential impact that might have on the trial," Dingle said. "I was very upset about it. I didn't feel things were being dealt with squarely."

Dingle said he then approached the defense and offered to conduct further studies — an offer he said had been rejected by prosecutors. He said he promised defense lawyers only that "it would be an objective study."

The tests in the Chattahoochee were conducted in January and February using two dummies — "Horace" and "Ferdinand" — and 100 oranges, Dingle said.

Both dummies were 4-foot-10 and were made from mannequins, he said, with one designed to simulate a body floating on the surface of the water and one designed to simulate a body submerged in water. He said the oranges were used for a statistical study of the effect of river currents on floating objects.

Dingle said a series of tests were done with the water level in the river at different stages to obtain a range of data that would include river conditions last May when Cater's body was found.

Under questioning by Assistant District Attorney Wallace Speed, Dingle conceded the dummies were not dropped off the bridge but placed in the water by boat about 10 feet downstream from the bridge.

He also told Speed his tests were based on the assumption that a decomposing body would spend most of the time either near the bottom or surface of the river, rising "very quickly" from the bottom to the top once decomposition began.

Hearings on the motions to quash the subpoenas and to take the jury to Jackson Parkway bridge were held after the jury was dismissed for the day.

The motions to quash or continue defense subpoenas were filed in behalf of Busbee, his executive assistant, Charles Tidwell, Georgia Bureau of Investigation Director Phil Peters, former state Attorney General Arthur Bolton, FBI Special Agent John Glover, and former acting U.S. Attorney Dorothy Kirkley.

Defense lawyer Alvin Binder told Cooper at a hearing Tuesday the subpoenas should be enforced so the jury could learn about a meeting at the governor's mansion which he said led to the decision to prosecute Williams.

But Assistant State Attorney General Charles Brown characterized the subpoenas as "unreasonable and oppressive" and said they would set a precedent for "summoning the governor and his staff on the whim of any person accused of a crime."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Anthony Ekonomou argued that the subpoenas for Ms. Kirkley and Glover should be continued until the defense complies with a federal law requiring that they provide a summary of the testimony being sought and its relevance to the case.

In asking Cooper to allow the jury to visit the Jackson Parkway bridge, defense lawyer Mary Welcome said prosecutors "have gone through elaborate and expensive procedures" to demonstrate the importance of the bridges in their case against Williams.

She said Williams deserves to have the jury see the bridge firsthand because he "is on trial today because he had the misfortune of being on that bridge."

Assistant District Attorney Joe Drole, however, argued that it would be impractical to take the jury to the bridge and that prosecutors, with a scale model of the bridge and photographs, have "gone to great lengths to bring the bridge to the jury."

Win Honors For Best Breakfast

Wahl Coates School took top honors in the Best Breakfast Contest sponsored by the Pitt County-Greenville City Food Service Association.

Food services employees from each school were judged at the association's monthly meeting Monday at Greenville Middle School. Winners were: 1st place, Wahl-Coates School; 2nd place, A.G. Cox, and 3rd place, Belvoir School.

Nancy Jessup, Pitt County "Teacher of the Year," was the guest speaker for the meeting. She told the employees they were public relations agents for the public education system.

"You are a voice in the community," she said. "Your communities listen to you and respect your observation about our schools."

LEAVES ARE collected by the Greenville Public Works Department from curbside once a week provided they are placed in bags or cans. During the leaf season (November 1 through March 31), vacuum machines collect loose piles of leaves at curb. For more information, call 752-4137.

How Tar Heels Voted In U.S. Senate

Roll Call Report
WASHINGTON — Here's how area Senators were recorded on major roll votes between the opening of the Second Session and Feb. 5. There were no house votes.

BUSING - By a vote of 58 for and 38 against, the Senate adopted the toughest anti-busing language ever approved by either house.

The amendment prohibits the Justice Department from advocating busing to desegregate schools, and it bars courts from ordering busing that would send students more than five miles from their home or take them more than 15 minutes. The latter provision was retroactive and could affect existing court-ordered busing plans.

The amendment was attached to a fiscal 1982 Justice Department spending bill (S 951) that remained under debate. Sponsor Bennett Johnston, D-La., said opponents were raising constitutional arguments but that none has attempted "to defend busing as an institution, as a remedy that works" in improving educational quality or in desegregating schools.

Opponent Carl Levin, D-Mich., questioned whether Congress can tell the courts specifically what to do, and he said "I am not someone who believes that busing is always the answer, but I am someone who believes in the Constitution. Senators voting "yea" favored the anti-busing amendment. Senators John East, R, and Jessie Helms, R, voted "yea."

SENATE TV - The Senate approved, 92 for and 3 against, a procedural motion clearing the way for debate on a proposal to televise proceedings in the Senate chamber. House deliberations have been televised since 1979.

The three senators voting "nay" oppose Senate television. Many senators who voted "yea" also oppose it, but supported the procedural motion so that the issue can be carefully debated. Opponents plan a filibuster. Sen. Larry Pressler, D-S.D., said: "I think the people have the right to see what is going on in the...chamber. It is supposedly the greatest deliberative body in the world, but if public exposure shows up some failings, perhaps we should change some of our ways of doing business."

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., who voted "yea" but plans to lead the filibuster, said TV would "tend to make (a senator) spend more time creating an image of himself on the floor at the expense of the taxpayer and at the expense of the work that he should be doing off the floor." Senators voting "yea" either were supporters of Senate TV or were opponents who wanted to move to a filibuster against the proposal. East and Helms voted "yea."

Bombs Erupt In Guatemala City

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — A series of bombs exploded in Guatemala City on Tuesday evening, apparently at electric power installations, and the city's one million residents were left almost completely without electricity.

After the bombings there was electricity only in the few parts of the city equipped with emergency generators. There were no immediate reports from police and army officials.

Earlier, four left-wing guerrilla organizations said they have joined forces in their battle to overthrow the military-backed government of President Fernando Romeo Lucas Garcia.

Bands of guerrillas briefly occupied three Guatemala City radio stations Monday night to play taped recordings announcing the move and pamphlets also carried the leftists' declaration. Home-made bombs rigged to scatter the pamphlets exploded in the capital throughout the night.

A police report said there were no injuries when guerrillas temporarily seized the radio stations Fauestero, Rumbos and Progreso and forced the employees at gunpoint to broadcast the announcement of the new alliance.

The declaration said the Guerrilla Army of the Poor, the Rebel Armed Forces, the Organization of the People in Arms and the Guatemalan Labor Party have formed the National Patriotic United Front to pursue their struggle to establish a Marxist regime in this Central American nation. The Guatemalan Labor Party was the name taken by the outlawed Communist Party.

In Mexico City, a spokesman for the new alliance was interviewed by the newspaper Excelsior, but asked not to be named for fear of reprisals.

He was quoted by Excelsior as saying the United Front's goal is to "install a revolutionary, patriotic, popular and democratic government."

He accused the Guatemalan government of "the most odious genocide" and said in an average day, 36 people are killed, kidnapped or disappear.

Other reports indicate about 300 people are killed here each month by left- and right-wing extremists and in clashes between the guerrillas and security forces.

A police report listed the latest victim of political violence as Adib Zaid Villalobos, a 51-year-old industrialist. It said killers armed with submachine guns shot him as he was driving his car in Guatemala City Tuesday.

Lucas Garcia, a major general and center-right candidate, was elected president in March 1978, narrowly defeating his conservative opponent, Col. Enrique Peralta Azurdia. Congress later endorsed Lucas Garcia as president amid numerous allegations of fraud.

Deadly Fire Due Heating Unit

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Greensboro fire officials say an electric heater placed too close to flammable materials caused the Saturday night fire that killed three small children and critically injured their father.

The heater, which had been placed between a bed and a couch, apparently ignited cloth coverings, said Assistant Fire Chief Jerry Cox, director of the city's fire prevention bureau.

Erica Shepherd, 2; Michael D. Shepherd, 11 months; and Tomika Shepherd, 3 weeks, died when they apparently were asphyxiated by smoke, he said.

The victims' father, Haywood Shepherd Sr., 27, suffered burns over approximately 50 percent of his body. He remained in critical condition Tuesday night in the burn unit at North Carolina Baptist Hospital in Winston-Salem.

Many Governors Concerned About Domestic Cuts

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Governors throughout the nation are expressing concern over the depth of domestic program cuts in President Reagan's budget and calling for cuts in his defense spending proposals.

"I don't believe even the Defense Department deserves a carte-blanche budget," said Gov. Scott Matheson of Utah, in response to an Associated Press survey.

The Utah Democrat said that while he supports a strong national defense, "In a recessionary time each budget must stand up to scrutiny to determine what can be saved."

Reagan's proposal to increase the Pentagon budget by 18 percent to a total of $221.1 billion for the 1983 fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, drew opposition from Republicans and Democrats alike.

Republican Gov. Bob List of Nevada, a strong supporter of increased defense spending, said nonetheless that "I have to believe that some of the defense money can be pared down."

More than 30 of the 50 state governors were contacted, but several declined specific comment until they could analyze the proposed $75.6 billion budget.

Those who did comment expressed concern that the latest cuts in domestic programs would shift intolerable burdens to the states. They also indicated continuing skepticism about the workability of Reagan's new federalism plan to transfer some 40 federal programs to the states.

Gov. Ted Schwinden of Montana, a Democrat, said that while, in theory, the new federalism should offer his state "a potential to tailor government programs to fit Montana needs...it is increasingly apparent that Washington is much more anxious to transfer program responsibilities than to provide funding."

"Another Democrat, Gov. James B. Hunt of North Carolina, said he would ask his fellow governors when they hold their annual winter meeting in Washington beginning Feb. 21, to consider alternatives to the new federalism.

"I think we'll come up with some grand swap idea," said Hunt. "But it will not be the president's plan."

Even Gov. James A. Rhodes of Ohio, a Republican and a strong supporter of Reagan's economic policies, said he has a "wait and see" attitude on the new federalism, which he doubts will pass Congress.

Rhodes also broke with Reagan's refusal to consider tax increases to reduce budget deficits.

"He must start eliminating large deficits," said Rhodes. Reagan must trim an additional $100 billion or raise that much in revenue, said the Ohio governor, adding that since he doesn't think more cuts are possible "it will have to be taxes."

Republican Gov. John Spellman of Washington said he cannot support the latest proposed cuts in education and social service programs.

"While I agree with the president's general direction, the impacts of the proposed federal budget on education, social services and other state programs compound the earlier cuts in federal spending that the states are still attempting to absorb."

"These cuts would fall heavily on many of the nation's needy citizens and would shift unacceptable burdens to state and local governments already struggling with the recession and deep 1982 federal aid reductions," said Gov. Richard Snelling of Vermont, a Republican who is chairman of the National Governors' Association.

Comments from other governors included: "Too many domestic cuts, too few military cuts, too high deficits," said Gov. Richard Lamm of Colorado, a Democrat. On new federalism, Lamm said, "I support it as political science, but not if it's a stalking horse for budget cuts. I'm afraid state and local governments are being given all burden and no base."

"I believe a consistent tax policy is essential to economic recovery," said Gov. David Treen of Louisiana, a Republican. "Strengthening our defenses...is critical to national security. While I am concerned with the deficit, I would hope those members of Congress who share my concern will examine the budget for further possible cuts in spending."

"I do not support the $90 billion deficit," said Democratic Gov. Bob Graham of Florida. He said reducing the deficit was essential to bringing down interest rates "which are particularly painful to Florida" where more than 100,000 housing units must be built annually to keep up with the rapid population growth.

"I would prefer there was not as much an increase in defense," said Gov. Albert Quie of Minnesota, a Republican. "I'd like to see that reflected in a smaller budget deficit. Otherwise I support it (the Reagan budget)."

"I don't see how you arm the world and deny people in this country basic needs," said Democratic Gov. J. Joseph Garrahy of Rhode Island. He called the Reagan budget "totally unrealistic," and said its domestic cuts "strike right at the heart of the basic needs of people."

"I support the basic tenet of the president's program which is to reduce spending and ultimately to stimulate the economy to recovery," said Republican Gov. Pierre S. du Pont IV of Delaware. But he added that "the deficit's too big. The defense budget has got to be scrutinized with the same kind of budget-cutting thinking that the rest of the budget is scrutinized."

Gov. Hugh Carey of New York, a Democrat and a consistent critic of the president's economic policies, said of the budget: "The human suffering and waste contained in this arithmetic is tragic in both its short-term and long-term results."

"We are appalled at the size of the federal deficit and question the need for an 18 percent increase in the defense budget," said Democratic Gov. John Evans of Idaho. "It does not do much good to have a strong defense if the social fabric of the country is being torn apart by continued high unemployment and low productivity."

Wyoming Gov. Ed Herschler, a Democrat, called the combination of domestic cuts, increased defense spending, no tax increases and a $90 billion deficit "a poor way to run a railroad."

"All in all it's going to be a very difficult budget for the state to live with," said Gov. Thomas H. Kean of New Jersey, a Republican. Kean said he opposes cuts in mass transit, the lack of cuts in defense spending and cuts in Medicaid.

Leftists Gain In El-Salvador Despite U.S. Effort

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX
Associated Press Writer

EL TRANSITO, El Salvador (AP) — Despite increased U.S. aid to the Salvadoran government, leftist guerrillas are making headway in their war against the junta, and relief workers estimate the insurgents can move freely through one-third of the countryside.

The guerrillas have taken their 2½-year-old hit-and-run battle to scores of communities that lived quietly until a few months ago.

On Monday the insurgents reached into the capital, attacking 22 city buses, and on Tuesday announced their intention to increase the assaults, particularly in the evening.

President Reagan's administration, committed to support the civilian-military junta, announced last week it was sending $55 million in additional military aid to El Salvador after one guerrilla attack on a military base destroyed 15 warplanes and helicopters, more than half the junta's air force.

This sum was in addition to the $26 million approved by Congress a month ago. Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders said the aid was needed to prevent the guerrillas from overthrowing the junta, which hopes to defuse the war by holding elections for an assembly March 28.

As now planned, the assembly will decide how and when to hold elections next year for president and other leaders. Leftists have refused to participate, claiming there are no guarantees their candidates could run.

Apparently intent on showing muscle before the elections, the 5,000 guerrillas of the Farabundo Marti's National Liberation Front have been occupying tiny farm villages and attacking strategic targets far from their traditional strongholds in northern Chalatenango and Morazan provinces near the Honduran border.

As a result, the war now is more widespread than during a nationwide offensive the guerrillas mounted in January 1981, which failed for lack of popular support.

The position of the junta's armed forces, numbering 20,000 men, is now worse than a year ago, according to a Western diplomat who asked not to be identified for policy reasons.

Relief workers caring for refugees uprooted by the fighting concur with the diplomat's estimate and say guerrilla bands can now move easily through parts of 10 of the country's 14 provinces, although they are not in control entire provinces. The workers asked not to be identified by name for fear of reprisals.

"The guerrillas could overrun this place anytime they want," said Adelio Masferrer, a worried shopowner in Berlin, a town near here in the southeastern province of Usulután. He said 30 security-force men loyal to the junta guard Berlin's population of 20,000.

The guerrillas have captured few towns so far and held none for more than 10 days.

But in a spectacular raid Oct. 15, they destroyed the Golden Bridge spanning the Lempa River Oct. 15, cutting the country's major East-West highway. And on Jan. 27, they attacked the Ilopango Air Base outside the capital, San Salvador, crippling the junta's air force. The United States last week sent six helicopters to replace the destroyed aircraft.

Last week, guerrillas staged rare daylight shelling attacks against police and army posts in Usulután City, the provincial capital, and burned more than 30 buses and trucks on a six-mile stretch of highway to El Transito.

Saturday, the rebel regional commander, Juan Antonio Medrano, held an unusual news conference at a guerrilla hideout just a mile from Usulután, saying his men had just completed a six-day "pre-insurreccional" operation to train for urban warfare — a tactic to bring the war to the cities and towns.

Medrano said the operation had "demonstrated our combat ability to the masses." He said 25 government soldiers and four rebels were killed in the skirmishes.

So far, the guerrillas have avoided extended face-to-face combat with the army. Reported casualties were relatively low during the second half of 1981 — 160 rebel deaths by their own count, and 800 army troops dead or wounded by government estimate.

In the same period, according to El Salvador's Human Rights Commission, government soldiers and rightist "death squads" have killed 6,387 civilians. It estimated the 2½-year-old war so far has claimed 35,000 lives out of a total population of five million.

The leftists, too, have been accused of murdering civilians — the army last week claimed guerrillas massacred 150 peasants in the northeastern village of Nueva Trinidad. The claim could not be confirmed.

As the war quickens, more and more refugees from the fighting move through the countryside. They are mostly peasants, traveling on foot or by oxcart along dusty roads winding around heavily forested volcanos in this agricultural nation.

A trip through the eastern provinces of San Vicente, San Miguel, Usulután, Morazan and La Unión, where the fighting has been heaviest recently, revealed a growing population of refugees. Twenty-thousand were crammed into the 16 cities on the tour — a tenth of the estimated total of people displaced by the war.

More refugees arrived each day, straining the facilities of these once-quiet farm communities.

Last week alone, 50 refugee families turned up in El Transito, a palm-shaded market town in San Miguel province near the Pacific Coast, 75 miles southeast of San Salvador. El Transito's 11,000 residents have taken in 3,000 refugees.

Until the guerrillas shut off the water and power supply all the month of August 1981, El Transito had not felt the war. An uneasy four-months followed, and 2,000 apprehensive townspeople moved elsewhere. Those that stayed on started stockpiling fuel and canned food.

The refugees started arriving in early January. By their accounts, two boatloads of guerrillas landed at Espino Beach, 12 miles away, took over that town's three-story resort hotel as a command post and fanned out across inland farming communities.

Since then, El Transito's water and power have gone out again for 18 days and the bodies of 15 assassinated people have appeared on the streets. Last week, after guerrilla attacks between here and Usulután City, the army imposed an overnight curfew.

"Sure, people are worried about all this, but they refuse to be paralyzed," said Mayor Saul Quintanilla, an affable man who keeps pigs in his house and sleeps in a hammock. As he spoke last Saturday, the townspeople shopped or played billiards in cafes while artillery boomed a few miles away.

Quintanilla, a member of Junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte's Christian Democratic Party, said he expects a large turnout for the March elections.

In San Agustín, 25 miles from here, and in 10 other towns in the area, there may be no voting at all. The guerrillas have surrounded them.

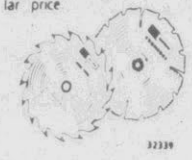

More than 4,000 refugees have settled into San Agustín's school, church, city hall and some private homes. The town had 20,000 people, but many of them fled elsewhere after a guerrilla attack in 1980.

The only road to San Agustín is controlled by the guerrillas, who allow only relief agencies to go in with food. The guerrillas have cut off water and power supplies for nearly two years.

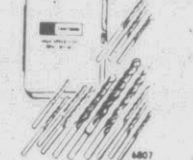

One evening last month, while old men played cards on a sidewalk there and children picked grapefruit from a tree overhead, guerrillas seized a coffee plantation near San Agustín, killing 15 soldiers who tried to defend it, residents said.

Sir Freddie Laker Wants To Make Another Start

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) - Bankrupt Sir Freddie Laker says he wants to make a new start at 59 and is trying to line up backing for another "people's airline."

for state-owned British Airways, the longtime foe of his cut-rate Skytrain service. The pioneer of cheap trans-Atlantic air travel announced that he was "actively exploring a new airline project" only five days after his Laker Airways collapsed under $390.6 million in debts.

One Laker creditor, after speaking to Sir Freddie, said he was "trying to get something going on the North Atlantic route." The Financial Times reported.

His announcement came as no surprise. Aviation industry sources the day before expressed the belief that he would try to buy or lease one or two of the Laker Airways jetliners from the receivers and start a charter airline.

Laker said his comeback bid was prompted in part by "the enormous public support" he was receiving from fans and employees spontaneously pouring contributions into a "save Laker" fund. But he asked his fans to stop sending money until he could get his financial plans organized.

Aides estimated that donations totaled some 3 million pounds ($5.58 million). They said 10,000 pounds ($18,600) came in Tuesday, including one check for 5,000 pounds.

"I'm very confident that we'll get Laker in the air," said Kay Hardy, organizer of the Friends of Freddie Fund. "If it's just one airplane, we'll get him in the air. All we can do is get enough cash together and ask Freddie Laker if he can save part of the airline and carry on."

A bank syndicate which loaned Laker Airways $131 million to buy three A-300 Airbus said it will sell off the airliners "in two or three months." Industry sources estimated Sir Freddie could buy one of them or one of Laker Airways' 11 DC-10s for 10 million pounds ($18.6 million).

Seeks To Delay Pollution Plan

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) - Joseph Grimsley, state Natural Resources and Community Development secretary, says he'll ask the state to delay implementation of an auto emission inspection program for Mecklenburg County.

In December, the Environmental Protection Agency turned down the state's request to delay the maintenance-inspection program. Last month the Transportation Advisory Committee, the county's voice on transportation matters with the state and federal government, unanimously voted to ignore EPA warnings to bring the county's air pollution levels under control.

Grimsley said he will recommend to the North Carolina Environmental Management Commission on Thursday that it delay the program, saying it's no longer needed.

Failure to comply with EPA regulations could mean the loss of millions of dollars in federal highway money.

He said the state feels Mecklenburg will achieve pollution control in four years without the program, but said the state would like to keep open the option to implement restrictions if pollution in Mecklenburg worsens.

The federal Clean Air Act says the levels of carbon monoxide in some areas of the country are dangerous and must be reduced by 1987.

Mecklenburg is the only North Carolina county judged to have dangerous carbon monoxide levels.

As a result, an inspection-maintenance program was proposed that would require Mecklenburg County motorists to have all vehicles tested annually. Cars, trucks and motorcycles emitting too much carbon monoxide would be required to have necessary repairs.

The program was to go into effect in January. But in March 1981 the Environmental Management Commission temporarily suspended the program, suspecting the Reagan administration might ease air pollution standards.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST—Rain is expected in the forecast period until Thursday morning from the eastern Gulf to the Carolinas. Snow flurries are forecast for the northern Plains, Great Lakes and from northern Alabama to the mid-Atlantic. Temperatures will be mild in the West and cold in the East. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
High pressure centered over the middle Mississippi valley headed toward North Carolina this morning, bringing a mass of cold, dry air.
The front followed another cold front that brought rain and cloudiness to North Carolina on Tuesday. Most of the state got rain, but the northern mountains got about an inch of snow. The precipitation was expected to end by late this morning.
Some cloudiness will linger along the coast and in the mountains today. Otherwise skies will be mostly sunny. Afternoon temperatures will range from the upper 20s in the northern mountains to near 50 along the south coast. High temperatures Tuesday afternoon were in the 50s for the most part. On the coast temperatures warmed into the 60s to around 70.

Temperatures Tuesday night ranged from the 20s in the west to the 40s and low 50s on the coast.

There is a possibility of light rain or snow across North Carolina late tonight and Thursday. As a weak area of low pressure moves southeast across the state. There is a good chance that the system will produce some snow across the mountains late tonight and Thursday.

East of the mountains, there is only a small chance of precipitation. If precipitation does occur it may be in the form of light snow across the Piedmont and northern counties of the coastal plain and coastal area.

Low temperatures tonight will be in the 20s and low 30s.

Audit Report

The audit report for the Pitt County Board of Education for fiscal year 1980-81 is on file in the superintendent's office, 1717 W. Fifth St., according to Dan Thomas, county finance officer.

This report, said Thomas, can be inspected by the public from 8:30 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday-Friday.

Hines Charged In Robbery Case

Dwight Coleman Hines, 26, of 1909 Norcott Circle was arrested by Greenville police about 5:15 p.m. Tuesday on common law robbery charges in connection with a Feb. 4 incident at 1707 S. Clark St.
Chief Glenn Cannon said Hines was accused of knocking James Jones to the ground outside Jones' home about 9:30 p.m. last Thursday, and taking $130 in cash from him.
Hines was placed under $5,000 bond pending a hearing of the case in court.

Highs Thursday will range from near 30 in the northern mountains to near 50 on the south coast.

Recreational weather outlook: Small craft advisories are in effect for the North Carolina coastal waters and sounds today. Northerly winds at 20 to 30 knots will decrease to northeast 10 to 20 knots tonight.

Tobacco Hearing Slated Friday

A public hearing on tobacco will be held Friday at the Kerr Scott Pavilion on the N.C. State Fairgrounds in Raleigh with Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C., and Sen. Walter Huddleston, D-Ky., attending.

The hearing, according to Stacy Evans of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, Greenville, is designed to assist Congress in evaluating proposals for adjustments in the tobacco program.

Oral testimony will be heard from federal and state elected officials, representatives of organizations, individuals who request permission to testify and individuals from the floor, in that order, said Evans.

The hearing begins at 10 a.m. and will recess at 4 p.m.

Senate Liberals Pledge Battle On Anti-Busing

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate foes of tough anti-busing legislation say they will use up all of 100 hours of remaining debate to battle a proposal they see as the first step in a broad attack on the federal judiciary.

The Senate voted 63-33 on Tuesday to shorten a liberal filibuster against legislation sharply restricting the use of busing by federal judges as a desegregation remedy.

The vote opened the final chapter in an occasionally bitter debate that began last June and will likely end sometime after Feb. 22, when the Senate returns from a 10-day Lincoln-Washington birthday recess.

When the discussion resumes, Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., said, "We will go several nights all night."

Packwood, one of a small group of liberals fighting the anti-busing measure, said a battle to the very end "will heighten awareness of the issue."

The issue, said Packwood, is the determination of Senate conservatives to strip federal judges of authority to act not only in busing suits but also in school prayer and abortion cases.

The leader of the opponents, Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., has more than 300 amendments prepared as parliamentary fodder for use in the continuing busing debate.

Specifically, the legislation sponsored by Sens. Bennett Johnston, D-La., and Jesse Helms, R-N.C., would bar judges from issuing busing orders to force public school students to travel more than five miles or 15 minutes from home. It also would prohibit Justice Department lawyers from recommending busing as a solution in federal desegregation cases.

The proposal, attached to an otherwise routine Justice Department authorization bill, was approved 58-38 last Thursday. Under the Senate rules, supporters of the measure were forced to demand a vote shortening the final debate to 100 hours.

Johnston and Helms say their bill is needed because busing has failed as a desegregation tool.

One surprise supporter of Senate liberals on Tuesday was Republican Barry Goldwater of Arizona, who warned against "serious questions of a constitutional and historical nature" breaching the traditional separation of powers between Congress and the courts on busing and other issues.

NCSU Faces Top-Ranked Cavs Tonight

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina State basketball coach Jim Valvano says he has a plan to stop All-American center Ralph Sampson in tonight's clash with top-ranked Virginia, but he admits it's far from foolproof.

"You play behind Ralph and let him get it and let him shoot it and hope he's having a bad night," Valvano said of the Cavaliers' 7-foot-4 center, the 1981 college basketball Player of the Year.

Virginia, coming off consecutive victories over second-ranked North Carolina and Virginia Tech this past week, will go after its 23rd victory tonight against the Wolfpack in Reynolds Coliseum.

Tipoff time for the Atlantic Coast Conference matchup is 8 p.m. EST.

In the only other Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game tonight, Wake Forest hosts Clemson at the Greensboro Coliseum. Thursday, North Carolina hosts Maryland.

In non-conference action tonight, Duke travels to Stetson and Georgia Tech plays Francis Marion.

"As long as we play well and play like we want to, we should have no problems winning the regular season (ACC race), and right now we'll just take on the next team," Sampson said after his club was named No. 1.

The coach of that next team — Valvano — has a definite opinion of the Cavaliers.

"Virginia is my pick as No. 1 in basketball and would probably come in about fifth in the National Basketball Association," Valvano said.

Valvano had already turned his thoughts to the Cavaliers shortly after Saturday's victory over Furman in the North-South doubleheader at Charlotte.

"All in all, it was a better game than we've had in a while," Valvano said of the Furman tilt. "That's the good news. The bad news is we've got to play Virginia twice in the next two weeks."

Virginia, 22-1, puts a 7-1 league record up against the 17-5 Wolfpack, now 5-4 and in fourth place in the ACC.

In the Cavaliers' easy 80-66 victory over Virginia Tech, Sampson scored 25 points and match his career-best of 21 rebounds. He was named ACC player of the week for his two-game effort.

Last year Sampson scored 41 points and grabbed 19 rebounds in Virginia's 63-55 and 51-46 victories over N.C. State.

The matchup offers Sampson the rare opportunity of looking up at the position as the Wolfpack center, Chuck Nevitt, stands 7-5. Nevitt gets help from 6-11 Thurl Bailey, 6-7 Scott Parzych and 6-11 reserve Cozell McQueen.

"North Carolina State is one of the biggest teams in the country and they are unquestionably much improved over last season," Virginia coach Terry Holland said.

Plymouth Downs Roanoke, 62-59

PLYMOUTH — Plymouth used Myron Bell's 17 points and Rondale Alexander's 16 to defeat Roanoke, 62-59, Tuesday night in a Northeastern Conference basketball game.

The loss was the third in four games for the Redskins, who are now 16-3 overall and 13-3 in the conference. Roanoke has already clinched the league title.

Earlier, in the girls' game, Plymouth defeated Roanoke, 38-33, to break a three-way tie for first in the league.

Roanoke was led in scoring by Michael Wilson with 18 points. Michael Neal added 13 and Ronnie Broadie 10 for the 'Skins. Joining Bell and Alexander in double figures was Lonnie Ford with 11 points.

Roanoke led at the end of the first period, 15-12, but Plymouth tied the game at the half, 30-30. The Vikings then took the lead with a 16-12 third-quarter advantage, 46-42, and held on in the final eight minutes for the win.

The victory leaves Plymouth at 13-7 overall and 9-6 in the conference.

In the girls' game, Plymouth led, 10-7, at the end of the first eight minutes and then stretched its lead to 24-12 at the half. The Lady Redskins managed to cut the deficit to 28-22 at the end of three quarters and closed the gap further in the final period but was never able to take the lead.

The win leaves Plymouth, 14-4 overall, tied with Williamston for the league lead. Both teams are 12-3 in the conference. The Lady Tigers downed Bertie, 52-39, last night.

Roanoke falls to 11-4 in the conference and 14-4 overall.

The Lady Redskins were led by Sylvia Parker with 13 points. Lois Bell had 12 for Plymouth. No one else was in double figures for either team.

Jags Romp Past Aycock, 66-37

FARMVILLE — Sometimes playing a team for the second time in as many games hurts you. Last night, Farmville Central's Jaguars played Charles B. Aycock for the second straight time (they met on Saturday), and it was all the better for the Jaguars.

Farmville finished the contest with a 66-37 romp, much better than the 55-52 margin they won by on Saturday.

Aycock's girls, however, rolled up a 46-32 win in their game.

Farmville's boys, who are now 4-7 in the Eastern Carolina Conference and 9-12 overall, had little trouble after the first half of play. During the early going, however, there was some question as to whether the Saturday night result might be repeated. Farmville built a 15-7 lead in the first period, only to see the Falcons rally to cut it back to 27-22 at intermission.

But in the third period, the Jaguars jumped into full command, roaring away to a 17-6 margin. That ran the lead out to 44-28. In the final period, the Jaguars outscored the Falcons, 22-9, completing the romp.

Farmville was led by Melvin Sutton with 19 points, while Gary Hobgood added 16.

Aycock, which ends the league season at 0-12, is 4-17 overall now. The Falcons were led by Bobby Artis with 16 points.

Aycock girls ran their record to 10-2 in the league and 18-3 overall, while Farmville dropped to 1-10, 3-16.

During the first period, Aycock rolled out to a 10-2 lead and was never in trouble. They outhit the Lady Jaguars 19-11 in the second frame for a 29-13 halftime lead. Aycock continued to pull away in the third frame, holding a 40-21 lead at the end of the period. Farmville was allowed an 11-6 rally in the final quarter.

Jeannette Dunn led Aycock with 11 points, while Rose Lang of Farmville led all scorers with 18 points. Farmville closes out the regular season on Friday, traveling to Southern Nash.

Andruzzi: Budget Crunch Leaves Future In Doubt

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

A sometimes-tearful Cathy Andruzzi told the Greenville Sports Club yesterday that women's basketball like that her East Carolina University team is playing may not be in the future for the school unless budgetary changes are forthcoming.

The Lady Pirates, who have won nine straight, including a stunning 68-60 upset of N.C. State on Sunday, have a 13-7 record at present, and face nationally ranked Old Dominion on Thursday.

"I'm so happy with the way things are going," she said, "but there are other things that people don't realize are happening."

"I guess with the way things are going, we're supposed to think that everything is well, but it seems like every time we take a giant step forward, we take one backward too. It seems all we get when we do well is a hand-shake," Andruzzi said.

"We're supposed to mean a lot to East Carolina as far as an athletic program. Four years ago when I came here I was excited and enthused. We never asked for anything but a chance. We never compared ourselves to the men's program or any other program."

"But we have pride and determination, and I don't think it's wrong to expect that our achieving our goals would be rewarded. Some people might complain that women's basketball might be taking something away from the men's program or from football, but we've had two 20-game winning seasons and national ranking," she added.

Andruzzi said that she considers her program first class. "I believe in East Carolina and I believe that we have the chance to be the best in the country, but we're letting it slip away from us. Right now, we're having to sit home while the rest of the country is out there out-recruiting us."

Andruzzi said that budgetary problems at East Carolina — all up and down the athletic program — have her handcuffed as far as recruiting is concerned. "We operate on a budget of about $110,000 — and that's everything, salaries, scholarships, pencils, travel, everything. Most of the Atlantic Coast Conference schools have $25,000 just for recruiting. We've got about $7,000 and we can use only about $3,000 or $4,000 of that for traveling to see players. We have no courtesy cars. Florida State, one of the schools that we're recruiting against, has $30,000 just for travel."

Andruzzi, who took a long time in getting her talk under way because of her emotions, noted, "I've never cried in public before. But I guess there's a first time for everything. I call my kids prisses when they cry, and I guess they'd all like to be here now."

Andruzzi continued by saying that East Carolina's program had all it needed now except the monetary support. "Without it, you're not going to see anymore Mary Denklers or Sam Jones. If you want us to play the big time, and I think we have one of the toughest schedules in the country, we have to have this support."

"We can get a team like Notre Dame on the schedule — next year — and we can get them to come here. But we've got to go out there, too, and we can't afford it."

"We can't take it for granted that East Carolina is always going to be good. One morning we're going to wake up and it's going to be gone. Right now others are coming into this area and recruiting players we should be getting, but we can't stay with them. Everytime State or Carolina visits a player, we need to visit twice. We still don't have the identity. Kids want to go to Carolina because of Dean Smith — even though they don't play for him. That's the kind of stuff we have to overcome."

The coach said that it wouldn't take a lot. "We could do a lot with a little. We already outdraw State and Carolina."

Andruzzi added that she did not intend for any of her comments to be seen as derogatory toward ECU or athletic director Ken Karr. "Dr. Karr has been very helpful to us, but his hands are tied."

"It comes down to support," she said. "I'm not asking people to give money, but when it comes time for decisions to be made, I'd like for people to voice their opinion as to whether our program grows or doesn't. We have to take strong measures now to insure the future."

The Sports Club meets again on Feb. 23, when Al Groh, head football coach at Wake Forest University, will be the speaker.

Transfer To Sit Out At ODU

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Medina Dixon, a 6-foot-4 freshman forward, said Tuesday she will not compete this season with the Old Dominion University women's basketball team.

Dixon transferred two weeks ago to ODU from the University of South Carolina, where she averaged 16 points and eight rebounds a game in leading the Lady Gamecocks in scoring through their first 15 games.

Based on AIAW rules and through interpretations from the NCAA, a mid-year transfer is not eligible to compete until one academic year has passed if she is to receive an athletic grant-in-aid. Dixon will be eligible for financial aid beginning with the 1982 fall semester.

Relay Team Set For Millrose

East Carolina University's mile relay team will participate in the Millrose Games at Madison Square Garden in New York City on Friday night.

The team, consisting of Terry Ford, a freshman from Fayetteville; Carlton Frazier, a sophomore from Charlotte; Keith Clarke, a sophomore from Sandys, Bermuda; and Tim Cephus, a junior from Warrenton, Va., were invited to attend the meet several weeks ago.

This Friday's games will be the Diamond Jubilee as the games celebrate their 75th year. The event is the longest running invitational track and field meet, and is known as the Kentucky Derby of Track, or the off-Broadway Olympics.

A number of firsts have occurred in the meet, such as the first indoor 15-foot pole vault, the first 7-foot indoor high jump, the first sub four-minute mile in this country, the first 16-foot pole vault, and Franklin Jacobs' 7-7/8 high jump, the existing world indoor best. The meet has also drawn some of the world's great athletes such as Jesse Owens, Harrison Dillard, Ralph Boston, Marty Li-quori, Bob Seagren, Willie Davenport, Renaldo Nehemiah, Dwight Stones, Eamonn Coghlan, and Wilma Rudolph.

East Carolina's best time in the mile is 3:15.50, run in the Florida Invitational in Gainesville, January 16.

Co-ECC Leaders Greene Central, North Pitt Fall

SW Edgemcombe Nips Panthers In OT, 55-54

STANHOPE — Southern Nash, possibly overlooked in the final days of the Eastern Carolina Conference race, kept itself within hailing distance of the top last night with a 61-48 upset of co-leader Greene Central. That win, coupled with Southwest Edgemcombe's overtime upset of North Pitt, 55-54, kept the Firebirds in the race for the title.

However, it would take a Southern win over Farmville Central, a Southwest win over Greene Central and a North Pitt loss to Ayden-Grifton to make it a three-way tie, the best the Firebirds can hope for.

Earlier in the evening, Greene Central gained a 54-50 overtime win over Southern Nash, leaving the Lady Firebirds winless in the league. "I don't know what our problem was," Ram coach Lewis Godwin said. "We were flat. We had no enthusiasm or life." Greene Central had beaten Southern on Thursday, 68-64 on the Ram court, and Godwin said he didn't know if the fresh memory of that win perhaps played a role in the loss.

At any rate, the Firebirds built up a 15-10 lead in the first period and outscored the Rams, 16-12, in the second for a 31-22 halftime lead. In the third period, Southern continued to hold sway, inching the lead out to 45-35. The Firebirds polished off the Rams, 16-13, in the last quarter.

Terry Best led the Firebirds with 18 points, while Ricky Battle added 14, Terry Battle had 13 and Frankie Toney had 10. The Rams were led by James Thompson with 14 and Roderick Lane and Cepado Albritton with 10 each.

The Lady Rams had a struggle with the last place

Lady Birds. Southern held an 18-16 lead after one period, and extended that to 32-25 in the second period. The Lady Rams cut one off that in the third period, but still trailed, 41-33, at the horn. In the final quarter, however, the Lady Rams outscored Southern by 15-9, catching up just before the horn for a 48-48 deadlock.

In the overtime, Sharon Suggs led the way to the win with three of the six Lady Ram points, while Sylvia Swinson added two more.

Suggs finished with 18 points to lead the Lady Rams, while Swinson added 15. Southern was led by Melissa Morgan with 26, while Lynn Lewis had 12.

Greene Central's boys are now 9-2 in the league and 12-9 overall, while the girls are 6-5 and 13-8. Southern Nash's boys climb to 8-3 and 13-8, while the girls are now 0-11, 2-16.

The Rams close out the regular season on Friday at Southwest Edgemcombe.

PINETOPS — Hilton Cobb's 10-foot jumper at the buzzer lifted Southwest Edgemcombe to a stunning 55-54 victory over North Pitt in overtime Tuesday night in an Eastern Carolina Conference basketball game.

Earlier in the girls' game, Southwest Edgemcombe clinched the ECC regular season title and extended its winning streak to 53 straight games with an easy 64-25 victory over North Pitt.

The loss, the Panthers' second straight and third in their last four games, drops North Pitt to 9-2 in the conference and 14-7 overall. The defeat could have been more damaging than it turned out to be.

But, Greene Central, which was tied with North Pitt for the league lead going into last night's games, lost to Southern Nash, 61-48. The Firebirds upped their conference mark to 8-3, one game back of the two co-leaders with one game left.

North Pitt trailed, 51-49, with six seconds left in the regulation, tied the game on two free throws by Greg Hines to send it into overtime.

In the overtime, Darryl Bess canned a pair of free throws to give Southwest a 53-51 lead. Hines then hit one of two free throws to cut the lead to one and Toby Crandol followed with a jumper from the corner to give the Panthers a 54-53 lead with 10 seconds left.

The Cougars rushed the ball up court and worked the ball to Cobb. Cobb drove the lane and put up a short jumper that fell through at the buzzer to give the Cougars the upset win.

Southwest Edgemcombe, now 6-16 overall and 6-5 in the conference, was led in scoring by Lemonte Johnson with 16 points. Bess and Cobb both had 12 points for the Cougars.

North Pitt was led by Dennis Bradley, who scored 23 points and pulled off 21 rebounds. Hines had 11 for the Panthers.

North Pitt trailed at the end of the first quarter, 17-14, but led at the half, 26-25. The Cougars regained the lead in the third quarter, 36-33, only to have the Panthers rally and tie the game and send it into overtime.

In the girls' game, Southwest Edgemcombe leaped out to an 18-4 lead at the end of the first eight minutes and stretched its lead to 35-15 at the half and then coasted home in the final two periods to win by 38 points.

Southwest, now 21-0 overall and 11-0 in the conference, was led in scoring by Delphine Mabry with 16 points and Melody Jenkins with 12. Janice Draughan and Bridget Jenkins added 10 each.

North Pitt, now 10-9 overall and 6-5 in the league, did not have anyone with more than six points.

North Pitt travels to Ayden-Grifton Friday night.

Wales Wins NHL All-Star Game

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — It was a National Hockey League All-Star game, so it figured to be cleanly played.

But in view of all the furor over recent dirty tricks on ice, it was perhaps fortuitous for the NHL that nice guy Mike Bossy was the Most Valuable Player as the Wales Conference defeated the Campbell Conference 4-2 Tuesday night.

Bossy, the New York Islander who'd rather score than fight, pumped in the winning and insurance tallies to give the Wales Conference its sixth triumph in the seven years of the current All-Star format.

Losing coach Glen Sonmor, whose Minnesota team is pushed around frequently during the regular season, took special note of the way the game was played.

"At this tempo," Sonmor said, "we showed hockey to its best advantage. It was an excellent example of so many of the best parts of our game, instead of the nonsense."

Wayne Gretzky, the high-scoring whiz from Edmonton who had one of the Campbell goals, added something along the same line.

"You come to a game like this to have fun and you keep in the back of your mind, sportsmanship," Gretzky said. "A game like this helps hold all that other stuff back."

Only five minor penalties were called, one leading to a power play goal by Raymond Bourque of Boston, pulling the Wales into a 1-1 tie at 12:03 of the first period.

That matched a goal by Rick Vaive of Toronto, on the first shot by the Campbells, and Wales went ahead 2-1 at 13:27 on a goal by Marc Tardif of Quebec.

Gretzky's breakout goal forged a 2-2 tie after 26 seconds of the second period, and then Bossy took charge.

His tiebreaker, at 17:10 of the second period, came on a backhanded shot which was deflected past goalie Gilles Meloche off the skate of Craig Hartsburg, a Campbell defenseman.

Then, at 1:19 of the third period, a perfect pass from the corner to mid-ice by Montreal defenseman Larry Robinson got Bossy in the clear for a breakaway goal.

"I think I played a good hockey game besides the two goals I scored," Bossy said. "I like to be recognized as a complete hockey player, and I did some things out there that I hope prove that."

After being awarded a $16,000 car as the MVP, Bossy accepted congratulations from Robinson and cracked to his teammate: "Two defensemen helped me, you and Craig (Hartsburg)."

In addition to scoring on their first shot on goal, the Campbells outshot the Wales 17-8 in the first period but trailed 2-1.

"We looked very much in charge early," said Sonmor, "but it was just a shot of youth. Then their poise took over."

Coach Al Arbour of the Islanders who directed the Campbell Conference's only victory in the series last season before the league was realigned, said of his squad whose average age was only two years per man more than the losers:

"The effort was there, but it took a period for our arthritis to loosen up."

Goalie Michel Dion of Pittsburgh turned aside 18 shots after yielding the early goal by Vaive.

"Sometimes a goal like that early in the game," Dion said, "can have the effect of motivating you."

"They (Campbells) were really passing, skating and shooting in the first period," Dion said. "If you're not ready, they can make you look pretty bad."

DHC Wins...

It was a lead the Vikings never lost. Setting up on the low post, Gatlin hit a turn-around jumper on the baseline and then got another bucket on a goaltending call and suddenly Conley led, 62-54, with 6:24 left in the game.
West Craven cut the gap to five, 71-66, on a jumper by Bellamy with 2:52 left, but could get no closer as Gatlin canned five straight free throws and Tyson added a jumper and a pair of foul shots in the final three minutes to give the Vikings the win.

In the girls' game, D.H. Conley let a nine-point lead slip away late in the third quarter but got two jumpers and three free throws from Irish Barnhill in the last 90 seconds to edge West Craven.

Conley led, 11-8, at the end of the first period and used a jumper by Cheryl Thompson with six seconds remaining to lead at the half, 21-18.

With five different players scoring two points each, the Valkyries outscored the Lady Eagles, 10-4, the first five minutes of the second period to go up, 31-22.

But, just when it appeared Conley was rolling Eunice Hargett hit three straight jumpers to pull West Craven within 31-28. A layup by Charlotte Smith with 16 seconds to go left the Lady Eagles down, 31-30, going into the final period.

The Lady Eagles used two jumpers and a free throw by Hargett to go up, 35-33, with 4:03 left. The Valkyries, who missed seven shots and turned the ball over once in their first nine possessions of the final period, tied the game on a follow shot by Mechio Kornegay with 3:19 left.

Then, after Smith the front end of a one-and-one and turnovers by both teams, the Valkyries took the lead for good on Darlene Cannon's 15-foot jumper with 2:36 left.

The Valkyries then turned another West Craven turnover into two free throws by Barnhill and Conley led, 39-35, with 1:30 left. West Craven never got closer as they turned the ball over four times, two of which Barnhill converted into layups to seal the victory.

The win ends a two-game losing streak by the Valkyries and ups their record to 17-3 overall and 7-2 in the league, one game back of league-leading North Lenoir, which nipped Havelock last night, 50-48.

Conley was led in scoring by Barnhill with 11 points. Hargett led West Craven, now 5-13 and 3-6, with 19 points. No one else was in double figures for either team.

"I thought we played good defense tonight," D.H. Conley coach Joy James said afterwards. "What'd we hold them to, 36 points. That's good defense."

Offensively, the Valkyries were not as sharp — something that has troubled them in losses to North Lenoir Friday night and North Pitt Saturday night.

"We were taking our shots tonight, they just weren't falling," James said. "I guess in a nutshell my girls have been using the fast break all season and now everybody that plays us is saying look out for the fast break."

"But we're so conditioned to run the fast break that we have trouble when we have to slow it down."

and we tried to put pressure on them and they got back doors, side windows and everything."

Fields finished with 24 points, while Sims had 18 and Terri Sutton added 10. Rose was led by Richardson with 11 and Barnhill with 10.

Rose plays host to North-eastern on Friday.

Rose's girls, after taking an early six-point lead, were outscored 23-7 over the final 9:40 of the first half as Kinston ran into a ten-point half time lead.

After two early ties, Linda Winstead put Rose ahead, 6-4, and Doris Richardson and Frances Barnhill both added baskets for a 10-4 lead.

But after each team scored again, Kinston ran off three straight baskets to end the period in a 12-12 tie, the last on a rebounding shot by Hope Walker with four seconds left.

Val Fields hit off a fast break to open the second period and after Barnhill tied it once more, Terry Sims hit for a 16-14 lead, and Kinston never trailed again.

The Valkyries ran off ten in a row before Rose could find the mark again, taking a 26-14 lead. They held on for a 29-19 halftime advantage.

Two quick baskets by Fields started the second half and ran the lead out to 14, 33-19. Then, after a couple of exchanged baskets, six more in a row by Kinston upped the lead to 41-23 with 2:56 left in the period.

Kinston then took a comfortable 48-31 lead into the final quarter.

Kinston led by 18, 49-31, with 2:05 left, before Rose put on a rally that cut it to the final ten point margin.

"I really don't know where to begin," Coach Dennis Gibson said. "Kinston has improved since we last played them, but I thought we had too. We got caught up in doing some things that I thought we'd gotten rid of."

"I'm disappointed in our performance. But it's been hard to win on the road. We've only won once on the road (Washington)."

Again Rose was hurt by the transition from offense to defense. "The weakest part of our game is the man defense, and we tried to put pressure on them and they got back doors, side windows and everything."

Fields finished with 24 points, while Sims had 18 and Terri Sutton added 10. Rose was led by Richardson with 11 and Barnhill with 10.

Smith Headed To St. Louis

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Shortstop Ozzie Smith has agreed to sign with the St. Louis Cardinals, completing a deal that sends Garry Templeton to San Diego, according to a published report today.

As part of the deal, Smith, the Padres' All-Star shortstop, has waived his no-trade provision in the one-year contract he signed a year ago.

In turn, the Cardinals will continue his no-trade clause, allow an arbitrator to decide whether Smith should get $450,000 or $750,000 and the Padres will make General Manager Jack McKeon available for questioning during arbitration. The San Diego Union said in today's editions.

By getting Smith to agree, the two clubs complete a series of conditional deals made Dec. 8-9 at the winter meetings in Florida.

at 6.7 and Jones at 6.5.

Denkler, too, is just eight points away from catching career scorer number seven Gale Kerbaugh (1,065). Her 11 rebounds against State moved her to the number fifth slot on the career rebounding list, passing Hall-of-Famer Sheila Cotton (528). Denkler now has 530 and is 28 short of Lydia Rountree (558).

Jones is ninth in scoring now with 778, and tied with Kerbaugh for ten in rebounding with 290. Her six assists against State brought her to 214, and she is only the third Lady Pirate to dish out 200 in here career. She needs 31 more to catch Rountree. She also needs just one steal to catch Kathy Riley's 103 career steals. Also, her 120 assists this year is the third best single season mark.

It's been a long time since an East Carolina team beat Old Dominion. The last victory was an 83-70 win in 1974. The Lady Monarchs have won the six games played since then.

Bowie To Sit Out

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — University of Kentucky center Sam Bowie said he decided to sit out the remainder of the basketball season because too much work remained in his recovery from a leg fracture.

"I just don't have the instincts and the habits of being in the game," the 7-foot-1 junior said Tuesday. "I'm just not in the flow. I find myself thinking about the game rather than just reacting."

Bowie, one of the nation's top college players a year ago, was placed on crutches when the hairline fracture in his left shinbone was diagnosed in July. He was not given permission to practice until Dec. 31.

Since then, Bowie said, he had regained "about 75 to 80 percent" of his leg strength, but couldn't escape the fear of another injury.

"Right now, it's more of a mental thing," he said. "I still haven't done some of the moves, basically because I'm afraid."

"This is probably a load off Sam's back," said Wildcat Coach Joe B. Hall, adding he did not try to influence the decision.

"Sam's decision was made by him. I'm sure it was in his best interest and probably in the best interest of the team," Hall said.

"It's been on everyone's mind. I don't think it's caused a letdown (among the other players), but it's dragged on all year. This will take the mystery out of the rest of the season."

Hall said he thought until early December that Bowie would return this season. At that time, X-rays showed the break had not healed "and they (doctors) put him back down for four weeks. It was predictable then that this would happen."

Kentucky has just six games remaining in the regular season and Bowie said he would only have been a "spot player" if he had returned.

"I couldn't have come in and taken somebody's starting position," he said. "It would have been fair since (the other players) have carried us this far."

Still, he said, "In my heart, I want to play. I sit on the bench and see places where I could help them."

"When we're playing around one basket (in practice), he really makes a difference," Hall said. "He alters play (by his opponent). But when we go up and down the court, you can see his lack of stamina."

Bowie, a native of Lebanon, Pa., averaged 17.4 points and 9.4 rebounds last season.

Kinston Nips E.B. Aycock

KINSTON — Kinston nipped E.B. Aycock, 77-75, Tuesday afternoon in a junior high basketball game.

Aycock, now 5-6, was led by Tyrone Smith with 28 points, Carlton Wilson with 19 and Battle Emory with 14.

Kinston was paced by C. Shackelford with 34 points and R. Davis with 21 points.

In the girls' game, Aycock whipped Kinston, 33-25. Lori Woolard had 12 points and Cheryl Clark 10 for Aycock. Jo Ann Whitfield had 11 for Kinston.

GRIMESLAND — Joel Cox scored nine points to lead A.G. Cox to a 47-28 win over G.R. Whitfield Tuesday afternoon in a junior high basketball game.

Kenneth Brown led Whitfield with eight points.

In the girls' game, Cox used 10 points from Trellaney Boyd to down Whitfield, 29-15.

Angie Mizelle, the Lady Bears built up a 12-4 lead in the first period, then were blitzed, 24-9, in the second. That left Creswell ahead, 28-21, at the half.

Creswell inched further out, 11-9, in the third quarter, for a 39-30 lead. The Bears then rallied, but fell short, scoring at the end to pull back within one.

Marvette Lewis led Creswell with 20 points, while Hattie Gatling had 12 and Vernice Norman scored 11.

GCA Nips Wilson In 3 Overtimes

WILSON — Greenville Christian Academy's Knights missed a shot at the end of regulation, so they kept trying until they got it right. And they finally did after three overtimes, taking a 60-59 victory over Wilson Christian Academy last night.

Earlier in the evening, Wilson and the Lady Knights set the tempo as Wilson took a 31-30 overtime win over GCA.

Greenville inched out into a 12-10 lead after one period of the boys' game, but Wilson came back, 18-10, to slip into a 28-27 halftime lead. Wilson continued to hold the lead in the third period, gaining a 44-40 lead at the end of the frame.

Greenville rallied, however, finally tying it at 54-54. "We had the ball for the final shot," Coach Dale Thatcher said, "but we missed."

In the first overtime, both teams scored again, 56-56, and again the Knights had the chance to win on the final shot — but missed. The same thing happened again in the second overtime, 58-58, before Troy Hudson's third overtime basket was unmatched by the Wilson club, giving the Knights their 14th win in 15 games.

Hudson led the Knight scoring with 20 points, while Jerry Butts had 12, John Parnell had 11, and David Hollingsworth had 10. Wilson was led by Kelly Teague with 18, while Todd Boykin had 14 and Glenn Dew hit 10.

In the girls' game, Wilson inched into a 6-4 lead in the first period, but GCA came back, 11-6, to take a 15-12 halftime lead. The Lady Knights moved further out in the third period with a 10-4 edge, building a 25-14 lead to take into the final quarter. In that, however, Wilson rallied to take a 29-27 lead before Kathy Vernelson hit for Greenville at the horn to force the overtime. In that, however, Sandy Academy on next Tuesday.

Hawley's field goal overcame a single free throw by Greenville to pull out the win for Wilson.

Hawley led the Wilson scoring with nine points, while Vernelson had 18 to pace Greenville.

The Lady Knights are now 6-5 on the year.

Find Bodies Long Dead

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — A High Point man shot a woman to death in his house and then committed suicide, the Guilford County medical examiner said.

The bodies had been in the house as long as a month when they were discovered Tuesday, Gordon Arnold said.

He said an attorney for Olin E. Jarrett Jr. found the bodies of Jarrett and the woman when he went to the house to contact his client.

Arnold said he found a note on a table in the house, along with a deed to the house and a car title.

The note said, "This is what she wanted."

Arnold said Jarrett, a former employee of the city tax department, apparently shot the woman with a .22-caliber rifle, then went upstairs, sat on a bed and shot himself.

The name of the woman, who wasn't married to Jarrett, was not released.

High Point Police Capt. Joe Howlett said a missing person report on the couple was filed last week.

He said the woman appeared to be in her mid- to late 40s, and Jarrett was in his late 50s to early 60s.

Losing About A Million Monthly

WASHINGTON (AP) — The General Accounting Office is recommending a full review of the food stamp distribution system because under current procedures the federal government is losing at least $1 million a month.

The major problem, GAO investigators said Tuesday, is related to duplicate cards authorizing individuals to purchase food stamps. That so-called "authorization-to-purchase" system is used to distribute about $8 billion in food stamps each year in 41 states.

They said the duplicate or fraudulent transactions occur when a recipient falsely claims his original card was lost or stolen so he can get a second one, or when a stolen or lost card that has been replaced is used by another person.

"In addition to an annual loss of about $12 million indicated by state and local agency reports, other losses were being incurred but were not being reported," according to the GAO, the investigating arm of Congress.

The GAO, which based its study on 1981 information, said reports from agencies in 15 states showed the multimillion-dollar losses. It said at least 27 other food stamp agencies either were filing incorrect reports or no reports at all.

The GAO acknowledged that major improvements have been made in some areas, especially New York City where losses had been running $200,000 a month just last summer. But it added that overall "only limited corrective action has been taken."

The agency recommended a full review of the system to determine its flaws, verifying the information contained in reports on losses, making states bear the responsibility for such losses and requiring photographic identification cards for food stamp recipients.

Bridge players have learned from the ancient Greeks — the gifts they bear may often be tainted.

North's decision to raise to five hearts does not impress us. If South needed no more than the scant values North could offer to make the slam, he would have found some bid other than four hearts at his second turn. Once North issued the invitation, however, it would have been churlish of South to refuse.

West led the jack of spades, and declarer was not thrilled with his prospects. Dummy's king took care of his spade loser, but he was faced with a loser in each minor and no place to put them. If spades were 3-2, the suit could be set up with a ruff, but there was no entry back to the good spades. Not even dropping a singleton ten of hearts would help, for though this would provide declarer with an entry to the research. The rush to install wood stoves and fireplaces has begun to slow down, but the Environmental Protection Agency estimates 1.5 million are still being installed annually on a nationwide basis. (AP Laserphoto)

TEACHING PUPPETS — Some Philadelphia elementary school students were treated to a special puppet show. The kid-sized puppets, one blind and the other one with cerebral palsy and riding a wheelchair, were part of a group showing youngsters that handicapped kids are human, too, and should be treated that way. At left, Cami Canzoner, 10, and Martha Harris and Jason Stull, 9, right, watch Fred Etter, 17, center, with blind Renaldo, and Tommy Vallette, 17, with Mark in wheelchair. Morrow Says People Will Have To Help State With Cutbacks RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — While President Reagan correctly asserts states can administer social programs more efficiently than the federal government, his proposed fund cuts could hamper the states' effectiveness, a North Carolina official says.

"We have felt for a long time that some belt-tightening was needed, but we feel at this point that we have not had our belt tightened, but cut," Sarah Morrow, secretary of Human Resources, said Tuesday.

Reagan's proposal that states pick up the cost of the Aid to Families with Dependent Children and food stamp programs could cost North Carolina over $193 million, she told health professionals at the North Carolina Health Council Convocation.

Also, she said, the proposal that the states take over 43 other programs could cost North Carolina another $190 million.

"In general, I agree with the principles of Reaganomics because states can operate the programs better," Dr. Morrow said. But the states don't have the same resources as the federal government and must be careful to provide equal services, she said.

by these programs will rise with the unemployment rates," she said.

Mrs. Morrow said if New Federalism legislation is enacted, people will have to learn more about being healthy and the state will have to contain costs as it assumes increased responsibility.

She said the state must consider alternatives to the present health care system because of rising costs. The cost of health care rose 12 percent last year while the cost of a hospital stay increased by 18 percent last year and 20 percent the year before, she said.

Mrs. Morrow said the average person making a reasonable salary would find it difficult to get medical care if he had to pay everything himself.

"We must become more conscious of how we can keep ourselves more healthy. As the dollars become shorter, it's evident it is all the more important that we work together," she said.

Stranded Parkway Motorists Pose Two Possible Morals

By MERRELL GREGORY Asheville Times

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Before we get to the story of Gay Walker and Robert Hudgins and how they walked half the night after a car wreck, you need to know that we live out in the woods, about a 10-minute walk from the Blue Ridge Parkway.

Since there aren't many houses out our way, we get lots of drop-in visitors — like roadside party-goers, and flatlanders sliding into ditches in the snow, and bloody cyclists who took a turn too fast. And, lots of hound dogs.

But nobody has arrived quite like Gay Walker and Robert Hudgins.

For them, the story started at 11:30 p.m. Monday. They had driven north on the Parkway, past Craggy Gardens. The road was clear.

But as they turned around and headed back toward Asheville not a half hour later the freezing and thawing of the winter had done its work on the rock banks above the Parkway. Just in those few minutes a section of bank broke away and boulders tumbled down on the road, leaving a heap of rock in the southbound lane.

Gay was driving when they rounded a sharp turn into that mountain of rock ahead. She veered right, demolishing the front end of her 1980 Subaru and leaving her with a twisted ankle and Robert with an injured knee.

After realizing their car could not be driven, they started walking, confident that somebody would stop and offer help.

No such luck.

Two, maybe three vehicles drove past. They stood in the middle of the road, frantically waving and shouting. Nobody would even slow down. They limped seven long miles down to Craven's Gap.

At 5 a.m. they came into sight of our house and began pounding on the door.

"There's been a wreck!" they shouted. "We need help."

My husband Hamilton told me to call the sheriff while he went to call off the dog and open the door.

We made hasty introductions and drank coffee while the two made their telephone rounds through local law enforcement agencies. Five conversations later came the news that the National Park Service does not offer taxi service for people wrecked on the Parkway.

Hamilton took them to Gay's nearby home in Beaverdam Valley.

Is there a moral to the story? Depends on who you talk to.

Park Ranger Ed Hedden, who supervised the towing of their car, says the moral is to be extra careful on the Parkway this time of year, especially after heavy rains. Rock slides are a real problem, he said.

I say the moral is: maybe you don't want to pick up strangers in the middle of the night, but why not stop and offer to make a call? It's awful to think how bad things would have been if either had been seriously injured.

Prize Goes To Walesa

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Lech Walesa, the detained Solidarity trade union leader, has been awarded the "free word" prize for his work to achieve "a minimum of freedom and justice for the people of Poland," Norway's Friit Ord, or Free Word, organization said.

The group's board said in a statement Tuesday night that the $16,950 prize usually was reserved for Norwegians who have made special efforts to defend free speech in Norway.

"As the foremost spokesman for Solidarity he (Walesa) has, with contempt of personal risks, used the free word against a totalitarian system in order to achieve a minimum of freedom and justice for the people of Poland. During the heat of the battle Lech Walesa has preserved the sense of responsibility and step-by-step developments, and while imprisoned he has remained upright," the board said.

Solidarity, the only independent trade union in the Soviet bloc, was suspended in the martial law crackdown Dec. 13 after 16 months of social and political upheaval.

Store Reports Break-In, Thefts

Greenville police are investigating a break-in at R. F. McLaughlin & Sons at 1408 N. Greene St. reported at 11:30 p.m. Tuesday.

According to Chief Glenn Cannon, entrance to the building was gained by breaking out a window. Four chain saws, two kerosene heaters and a color television set were reported taken.

How to Stifle a Sneeze

How do you prevent a sneeze when you are in a situation that might make it embarrassing? — Miss M.Y., Ala.

Dear Miss Y.:

The novelist Fanny Burney said in 1785, "In the presence of the king and queen you must not sneeze. If you have vehement cold you must take no notice of it; if your nose-membranes feel a great irritation, you must hold your breath."

"If a sneeze still insists on making its way, you must oppose it by keeping your teeth grinding together. If the violence of this method breaks a blood vessel, you must break the blood vessel, but do not sneeze."

These are pretty rigid rules of social behavior in the presence of royalty.

Lou Costello, of the famous Abbott and Costello comedy team, somehow always had to sneeze when secrecy was most needed. He suppressed the sneeze by firmly pressing the area over the middle of his upper lip.

The pressure against the upper teeth really does stop a sneeze. I've tried it and it works for me as it did for Dr. Costello.

Try it.

I've been using the same underarm deodorant for many years. Sometimes the skin under my arms becomes painful and red. What can cause this? — Miss V.H., R.L.

Dear Miss H.:

Body odor and perspiration are not one and the same thing. Perspiration in itself is odorless. When odor develops, it is the result of the action of bacteria on the secretions from the glands just beneath the skin. It is for this reason that bathing is most important in controlling body odor.

Deodorants are chemicals meant to mask body odors. Antiperspirants are chemicals of another group whose purpose is to reduce the amount of perspiration.

Both deodorants and antiperspirants are incorporated in the products that are commonly used. Sometimes these chemicals acting in conjunction with soap that has not been thoroughly rinsed from the underarm may cause the type of distress you describe. Occasionally people develop hypersensitive reactions to a deodorant even though they have been using the same one for a long time.

It might be wise to lubricate the red and angry area and avoid the use of any deodorant or antiperspirant until the skin has healed. Then you might shift to another product and hope that your skin sensitivity will not again erupt.

SPEAKING OF YOUR HEALTH... When patients completely understand their illnesses, they are given to follow the instructions that are given to them. Unless these instructions are completely understood, there is a great chance that there will be a premature discontinuance of the prescribed drugs. This most frequently happens with patients who have high blood pressure.

Former higher tar smokers affirm MERIT choice for taste, ease of switch, and long-term satisfaction.

The research results are overwhelming.

MERIT Taste Sparks Switch.

Nationwide survey reveals over 90% of MERIT smokers who switched from higher tar are glad they did. In fact, 94% don't even miss their former brands.

Further Evidence: 9 out of 10 former higher tar smokers report MERIT an easy switch, that they didn't give up taste in switching, and that MERIT is the best-tasting low tar they've ever tried.

MERIT Clear Choice In New Tests.

In addition, extensive unmarked-pack tests confirm that MERIT delivers a winning combination of taste and low tar when compared against higher tar leaders.

Confirmed: The overwhelming majority reported MERIT taste equal to—or better than—leading higher tar brands.

Confirmed: When tar levels were revealed, 2 out of 3 chose the MERIT combination of low tar and good taste.

Year after year, in study after study, MERIT remains unbeaten. The proven taste alternative to higher tar smoking—is MERIT.

Now It's Uncle Rather's Neighborhood

PECK AS LINCOLN — Academy Award-winning actor Gregory Peck has fulfilled a lifelong dream in portraying America's 16th President, Abraham Lincoln, for the upcoming CBS mini-series. Peck will be seen as Lincoln, whose birthday is February 12, in Bruce Catton's "The Blue and the Gray," an epic 8-hour series set during the American Civil War. Peck makes his television drama debut with this performance. (AP Laserphoto)

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Recent ratings indicate that Dan Rather is wearing better on America. He's looser with us; we're more snugly with him. Every day, he's looking more and more like Fred Rogers, and the "CBS Evening News" is fast becoming Mr. Rather's Neighborhood.

Rather has added another layer of warmth, a pullover sweater, between him and his audience. But there's much more to it than wool under his tweed jackets. Nearly one year since assuming the hot seat from Walter Cronkite, Rather is more comfortable with himself, his surroundings and his job.

That's important to a public that won't let just anybody through the door. Newscasters squirming in their seats make us nervous;

we have to be comfortable with our television companions. And if you're liking Rather better now than a year ago, there are reasons for this you probably never realized.

Tapes are back in the news, and this column has the Rather Tapes, a video cassette of his second broadcast, March 10, 1981. When compared to his recent work, there are some striking differences: —Dashing Dan has become Distinguished Dan. It's amazing how much grayer his hair is now. Either 11 months on the job has done it, or he just stopped coloring his hair in an effort to look his age (50). Maybe his makeup isn't being used to mask the wrinkles as much because Rather's lines are more visible now. Evidently, maturity is in. Rather is growing old gracefully.

—Clothes make the man. On March 10, he wore a slick suit that made him look like an insurance salesman. Now he wears more casual sports jackets. And sweaters. He has five of them. If the winter of '82 is freezing America, it's comforting to know Rather is feeling the cold, too. The effect is a more relaxed, folksy Rather. Middle America is noticing. All that's missing is the dog carrying his slippers.

—On TV, people speak body language. A year ago, Rather was ramrod straight, a marionette lecturing from the blackboard. Today he appears to be propped on one elbow, closer to our living rooms, confiding in us.

—Smile, you're on Candid Camera. The last story March 10 was the Atlanta murders, and Rather signed off somberly, without the hint of a smile. Now, the final story tends to be lighter, and the more human Rather can get out and react with a big grin and say: "Thank you for joining us. And good night."

—The camera is much kinder. Before, there was a longer range camera that caught Rather from the belt buckle up, and some of his desk. He didn't know what to do with his hands. Howard Stringer, new executive producer of the "Evening News," eliminated that shot. "From that angle," Stringer said, "you don't get to know somebody, and there's no ambience either."

With the longer view, Rather seemed to work too hard to get his words and expressions across. Now there's more use of the tight shot, making it look like Rather's head has grown in the past year. But the effect is the camera sees all, and Rather merely has to be his handsome self.

And he's looking bigger because the graphic picture over his left shoulder, which used to overwhelm Rather and his story, was cut practically in half. Also, the stark, sky blue background was changed to a more subdued, sea blue with maps, making Rather and his world softer and warmer.

—Cronkite's shadow is shorter. Time does that; so does bringing in Rather's own producers. They make him feel more confident and comfortable, and fit his personality and style better. Working with excess psychological baggage may have worn down the broadcast before and, remember, it does take time to learn a new job.

—The sentences are smaller, too. "Walter could read almost anything, and give it texture," said Stringer. "Our writing for Dan uses snorter sentences, a crisper style and fewer adjectives."

So what does this have to do with journalism? Everything and nothing. The impeccable news credentials of Rather and CBS were never questioned. But their message was getting missed a bit because they weren't communicating for the 1980s. It's all there on the Rather Tapes. It's no longer the "CBS Evening News Without Walter Cronkite." Welcome to Mr. Rather's Neighborhood.

'60 Minutes' Does It Again

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS' "60 Minutes" was the No. 1 show in prime time for the second straight week and the sixth time this season, and that helped the network to another first place in its race with ABC and NBC, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. showed.

The only real challenge to "60 Minutes" in the competition for the week ending Feb. 7 was from the first installment in ABC's two-part TV premiere of "Superman," which nudged CBS' "Dallas" out of second place.

NBC scored, meanwhile, with the conclusion of a two-part made-for-TV movie, "World War III," in second place, but the struggling network had only one other show — No. 17 "Real People" — in the week's Top 20.

CBS, with 13 of the week's 20 highest-rated programs, had an average rating for the period of 19.9 to 18 for ABC and 15.9 for NBC. The networks say that means in an average prime-time minute, 19.9 percent of the nation's television-equipped homes were watching CBS.

The rating for "60 Minutes" was 30.2. Nielsen says that means of the country's homes with television, 30.2 percent saw at least part of the show.

"Falcon Crest" on CBS and ABC's "Fall Guy" were the highest-rated of the season's new shows — tied for 13. Six newly introduced series were, in contrast, among the week's 11 lowest-rated programs — No. 61 "Code Red" on ABC, ABC's "Open All Night" 63rd, "McClain's Law" on NBC 67th, ABC's "King's Crossing" 69th, "Cassie & Co." on NBC 70th, and "Billy Crystal Comedy Hour," also on NBC, 71st.

Rounding out the week's five least-watched lists was "NBC Magazine," No. 68.

One made-for-TV movie, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," on CBS, was moderately successful in the ratings — No. 20 — while three others did not fare as well.

The vote was 2,274 to 2,098, and "no" voters carried eight of 13 precincts. There was a 25 percent voter turnout.

Leading the anti-liquor forces was the Rev. Art Burkan.

Fear Losses From Video GameBooks

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK

Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — There's trouble in Video Game City — code books. Memorize the manual and you'll get hours of playing time for just one quarter.

More and more video buffs have been exchanging techniques for pattern playing, sending arcade owners, who grossed an estimated $5 billion last year, to the edge of financial hyperspace.

Now the owners face a new problem — a growing number of best-selling paperbacks by video game wizards that serve as how-to manuals.

"Of course it's going to hurt business," said Irving Taube, co-owner of Manchester Music, a New Hampshire company that owns about 700 video games. "The longer a person plays on a quarter the less quarters I get."

There are at least five paperbacks on the market: Signet's "Mastering Pac-Man" by blackjack expert Ken Uston; Bantam's "How To Master the Video Games;" Pocket Books's "How To Win At Pac-Man;" Simon & Schuster's "How To Beat the Video Games;" and Warner Books' "Scoring Big at Pac-Man."

The books range in price from $1.95 to $3.95. "Theoretically, you could have a user's manual for each of these games," Uston said.

The original press run on Uston's book was 500,000, and according to Signet spokeswoman Fern Leiber Edison, store orders before the book was released required printing of another 250,000 copies. After two weeks in bookstores, Uston's book has climbed to No. 5 on B. Dalton's mass market best-seller list.

Bantam's entry, written by 19-year-old New Yorker Tom Hirschfeld, has sold about 650,000 copies and recently appeared on The New York Times mass-market paperback list.

Pac-Man has received so much literary attention because it lends itself to more thorough analysis than attack and reflex games. Uston said maze games like Pac-Man require "the most skill, about 90 percent, and only 10 percent hand-and-eye coordination." Attack games range from 90 percent hand-and-eye coordination to 50-50, he added.

Uston turned his attention to Pac-Man while awaiting the outcome of court appeals on his banishment from casinos in Atlantic City. He is an expert blackjack "counter" who can calculate the chances of a high or low card turning up after several decks of cards have been played.

Uston's book is the most elaborate on Pac-Man, still one of the most popular of all arcade games. He provides diagrams of patterns for the original arcade games, gives advice on how to handle new programs and tips on how to play the various table models, some of which look, sound and play like the larger arcade versions.

"The manufacturers are so worried that everyone's going to master these games," said Uston, during an interview conducted recently over a Pac-Man board at a Broadway arcade.

"But look, I just messed up," he said as his Pac-Man was caught by a pursuing monster. Until he was distracted by a crowd which had gathered around his board, he had effortlessly reached a score in excess of 50,000. Novices have to scramble to get 15,000.

Uston, who is writing a second book on arcade games, doesn't consider himself an expert at playing, just at analyzing. At a recent arcade party held to promote Coleco's new line of portable, self-contained games, including Pac-Man, Uston brought along Raymond Chan, a 20-year-old college student from San Francisco.

Uston asked Chan to help him with his book research after he saw Chan walk away bored from a Pac-Man after racking up 1.4 million points without a single mishap.

Chan thinks the pattern books make arcade playing more fun and interesting. "They show how the games work and give more of the fine details," he said. "The more patterns you got, the more interesting it is. Once you get the hang of it, it's more fun."

"It might take the self experimentation out of it, and maybe that's bad, but look at all the quarters (the experimentation) would gobble up," Uston said.

The arcade owners, concerned in the end with the balance sheet, don't see it that way. The longer each game lasts the longer it is before the next quarter drops into the machine.

To combat pattern playing, new computer programs have been devised.

"Most of our games are speeded up," said Ellsworth Brown, manager of Leisureland at the Morris County Mall in New Jersey. "After all, that's what we're in the business for, to make money, right?"

Brown said most of his customers feel that how-to books "spoil the game, but

1982 WORLD'S FAIR TAKES SHAPE — The 1982 World's Fair in Knoxville, Tenn. begins to take form as the exposition's permanent buildings and dramatically shaped tension structures spring up on the Fair site. In the upper left, the Fair's theme structure, the 266-foot high Sunsphere, towers over the 72-acre, mile-long site. The glass that surrounds the sphere, manufactured with 24-karat gold dust, is now being installed. Near the base, the structural steel of the Tennessee amphitheatre is anchored into place. The pyramid-shaped pavilion in the foreground is the exhibit of America's gas industry. At the center of the photo is the United States pavilion and adjacent IMAX theater, featuring a seven-story-high theater screen. The 1982 World's Fair begins May 1 and continues for six months, closing October 31.

To Try An Argon Laser To Remove Birthmarks

DURHAM — Birthmarks. They don't hurt, but they can be unsightly.

Using an argon laser, a Duke University Medical Center plastic surgeon will soon begin fading unsightly birthmarks, tattoos and "spider nevi" (broken blood vessels on the surface of the skin).

"We can't completely obliterate these marks, but for most people we can make them significantly lighter," said Dr. Ronald Riefkohl, an assistant professor of plastic surgery. The argon laser will be used by the physician to fade birth marks called "port wine" stains and "strawberry nevi" which he said are abnormal growths of blood vessels within the skin. "The laser can selectively destroy these abnormal blood vessels to a depth of about a millimeter and a half," Riefkohl said. "About 70 percent of the patients get good to excellent results with the technique, which is done on an outpatient basis with localized anesthesia. About 30 percent of patients have lesions that are too deep for us to help them." Using a foot pedal, the plastic surgeon "fires" the blue-green light of the laser into the reddened skin of the mark being treated. Because red objects absorb blue-green light, the blood vessels are coagulated by the transfer of heat from the laser beam and the lesion changes to a light color, usually pink. The laser treatment occasionally changes the lesion to a normal skin color.

"One of the advantages of this type of laser is that you can't overheat," Riefkohl said. "It's a tedious process, but it's precise and we can be selective about what is treated. Usually each treatment session lasts about 30 to 45 minutes, depending on the size of the mark."

The complication with the treatment of the marks situated below the collar bones is greater, Riefkohl said. The laser therapy works best removing marks on the face and neck.

"Overall about five percent of patients treated with argon laser will have some scarring," he said. "How much scarring depends on how an individual's skin scars, and how well the treated area is taken care of following the laser procedure."

Treated areas that become infected can scar, he said. Each patient is given a "test patch" to see how well their skin reacts to the laser, or whether they will scar.

The argon laser treatment is non-carcinogenic, Riefkohl said, and the cost is comparable to surgery.

Sees Socialism No Dead Creed

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Duke University historian Dr. Warren Lerner has written a book entitled "A History of Socialism and Communism in Modern Times."

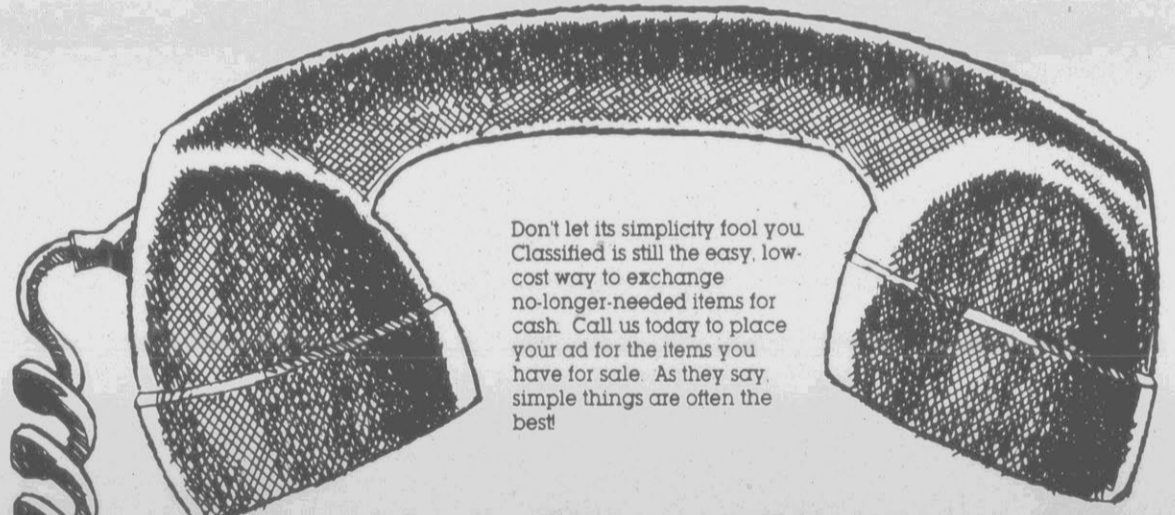

The book says despite the hopes of conservatives that socialism is a dying political beacon, its ideological principles "seem to be a permanent feature of the modern-day world."

"The mistakes, conflicts, and problems of socialist societies are evident to any observer, but they do not belie the fact that in the modern world some form of socialist or socialist-oriented then there's the professionals, who want to get everything they can for their quarter."

New computer chips to change programs and accelerated games usually put would-be pros in their place, said Brown. "We had a guy who got 600,000 on Pac-Man. Now, with the game in the 'advanced stage,' he's lucky if he gets 50,000."

Costa Rican Vote Seen Crucial

By ELOY O. AGUILAR
Associated Press Writer
SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — This tiny country, often called Latin America's showcase of democracy, is looking at its presidential election Sunday as a step toward overcoming its worst economic crisis of this century.

In the campaign for the Feb. 7 balloting, the two leading candidates are warning of harder times ahead for the nation's 2.2 million people and both pledge immediate and drastic spending cuts to satisfy demands made by foreign bankers, who halted all lending last year after the country virtually defaulted on its $3.6 billion foreign debt.

Jose Figueres, three-time president of Costa Rica, founder of the National Liberation Party and the country's elder statesman, said the current situation is as bad economically as "when we started the revolution" which in 1948 established the nation's present-day constitutional system. Figueres, 78, is not a candidate, but his party is favored to win the election over the Unity Coalition of incumbent President Rodrigo Carazo.

"We can only ask our people to have patience and faith," Figueres said in a recent statement. "We are going to fight. A person ill with cancer dies and is buried, but you cannot just bury a country."

Carazo's lame-duck administration has been struggling to keep rising inflation, unemployment, labor unrest and the threat of multiple bankruptcies from plunging Costa Rica into the kind of civil strife that is afflicting El Salvador and other Central American neighbors.

But while its democratic institutions remain intact, the nation's economy is getting worse. Carazo will end his four-year term in May as one of the country's most unpopular presidents, mainly because of the economy.

The candidate of Carazo's Unity Coalition, Rafael Calderon, has changed the colors of the party banner in an effort to shake off any identity with the incumbent.

"This government followed an economic policy different from that of the group that brought it to power," said Calderon, 32, Carazo's former foreign minister and son of an ex-president.

Despite Calderon's attractiveness, most observers here expect the winner of the election to be Luis A. Monge, 56, the National Liberation Party candidate who lost to Carazo in 1978. Voters surveyed in a poll two months ago preferred him to Calderon by a 3-1 margin.

It is a sign of the hard times here that Monge, whose party has previously enlarged the government's role while in power, is now preaching fiscal austerity.

Although Costa Ricans have long consumed more than they produced and imported more than they exported, the crunch started in 1980 with high world oil prices and a drop in the price of coffee exports.

With foreign banks no longer willing to finance the resulting trade and budget deficits, the country's currency was sharply devalued. Economic growth dropped from 4.6 percent in 1979 to 2.0 percent in 1981, according to the Central American Development Bank.

"A doctor at the medical institute made the equivalent of $1,200 (monthly) a year ago," Calderon said. "Now he is making the equivalent of $250 (monthly) because of the devaluation. If a professional must make adjustments, you can imagine what the poor people must do."

The value of the colon, the nation's currency, fell in a year from 8.50 to 40 to $1. But salaries have remained more or less stable in the same period.

Calderon says he is proposing a considerable wage increase because "our people already are paying for the new inflation without a corresponding increase in salary."

Inflation reached 70 percent in 1981 and unemployment is close to 15 percent, triple the norm for recent years. Communist-run unions have fomented strikes on U.S.-owned banana plantations, leading to a clash Jan. 16 between police and banana pickers in which one man died and 100 were arrested.

The budget deficit last year reached $500 million, much of it for price subsidies on food and gasoline. Carazo's government failed three times to make spending cuts demanded by the International Monetary Fund as a condition for an emergency three-year, $350 million loan to meet payments on debts to 150 foreign banks.

As a result, Costa Rica stopped paying even the interest on those debts five months ago.

Carazo claims some IMF requirements infringe on Costa Rica's sovereignty, but the argument is not echoed by either his opposition or by many businessmen.

"That is like saying a doctor has no right to tell a sick man what to do," commented Richard Beck, general manager of a large appliance manufacturing company.

Beck says businessmen, expecting effective belt-tightening measures from the next administration, are making sacrifices in trying not to lay off workers "because we do not want to add fuel to the fire" of possible unrest.

Monge, whose economic team has already started its own talks with the IMF, said: "We have the best attitude toward a normalization of our relations with the IMF and will accept all technical suggestions that may contribute to this normalization."

U.S. diplomats, who spoke on condition they would not be quoted by name, say austerity measures could

WORLD'S TALLEST — Tseng Chin-Lien, believed to be the world's tallest girl, at 2.41 meters (7 feet 10 3/4 inches), is measured by a man standing on a chair in Yuan Jiang, HLunan in south-central China. Device Offers 'Silent Words'

PARKERSBURG, W. Va. (AP) — A four-pound portable device is helping deaf or speech-impaired persons to communicate by telephone. The "Visual Ear" is a device that allows the user to "talk" with anyone having a similar device connected to a telephone. The instrument, made of cycloac engineering thermoplastic supplied by Borg-Warner Chemicals here, is so light it may be carried to work, school, shopping and other places.

By placing the handset on the instrument's "acoustic coupler" pads, the user can dial any telephone, including a coin-operated one. An alert light blinks on the receiver's Visual Ear. The sender then types his message onto a keyboard and the words appear on both the sender's and receiver's units.

The device, which is compatible with several other types of teletypewriter instruments used by the deaf, can also be connected to a printer.

The 'Expensive Look' Is Cheap

PORT WASHINGTON, N.Y. (AP) — An interior decorator here believes anyone can get an expensive look in a home even with a limited budget.

Her tips are "use classic styling, such as wing chairs. Color coordination is a must. Most important, wait and buy fewer good pieces, rather than a lot of cheap things to fill up the rooms in the beginning," says Eta Wright of Inside Design.

Hotels Are In Mourning In Warsaw

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer
WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The combination of winter, always a quiet tourist season in Poland, and martial law is keeping Warsaw's hotels nearly empty and hunting for money.

Some are closed. Some have become police dormitories. Some are hoping to organize art exhibits and other cultural exhibits to fill their public rooms. Some are offering rooms to flood victims.

"We wish we had more guests than we have," said an official at the Victoria, on Victory Square. "But it's not too bad."

The Victoria, considered Poland's best hotel, has some 80 guests in its 300 rooms. Five weeks ago the imposition of martial law had cut the guest list to 37, nearly all of them foreign correspondents. Now businessmen are beginning to join the journalists.

Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski closed the borders on Dec. 13 when he imposed martial law, and foreign tourists have been turned away since then. The only Arabs in Warsaw, which last summer was full of travelers from Libya and the Middle East, are students.

Many of them live in the Forum Hotel, which can accommodate 1,500 guests. Now it has 200 to 300, concentrated on its lower floors.

"We hope to have more foreign guests, beginning from April 1, because foreign tour groups will be allowed to come to Poland then," one official at the Forum said. "Individual tourists from the West will be allowed to come beginning May 1."

However, government officials said those dates are still tentative.

The newspaper Zycie Warszawy reported that several hotels — dingy, cheap and catering to Poles rather than foreign tourists — were being closed for alterations.

The Dom Chlopa, or Peasant House, is closed to the public and appears to be housing a brigade of police. Visitors to the Warszawa and Solec, the latter once a stronghold of the independent labor federation Solidarity, report police officers are occupying most of their rooms.

Some hotels are supplying meals to nearby offices or doing laundry for government institutions. Some are sending their staffs on "overdue holiday," Zycie Warszawy said.

"As not many foreign tourists are expected, Polish tourists could probably get better welcome and better treatment in Warsaw hotels," the paper added.

Despite a martial-law ban on most travel between cities, Poles seem to be getting around the country for winter vacations, at least in organized tours.

The dingy, gray Grand Hotel on Krucza Street reports it is 75 percent full, with "almost normal movement all the time," said one official. "The only exception is the lack of foreign tourists, so the hotel is losing hard currency."

An official at the Europejski reported similar occupancy but said the increasing numbers of flights from abroad meant more foreigners for it.

"The more flights, the more guests," he said.

The newspapers report ski resorts in the Tatra Mountains of southern Poland are filled with Polish tour groups. Room and board at one resort range from $8.75 to $13.75 a day.

Orbis, the government tourist agency, is gearing up for new business this year — guided tours of Polish cities for Polish peasants. The papers say it will be a first.

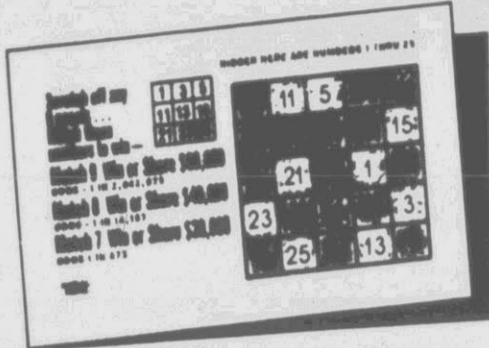

The government is also hoping for a big influx of Polonia tourists — Poles who live abroad permanently — for the 600th anniversary of the Jasna Gora Monastery in Czestochowa.

The monastery is the home of the Black Madonna, supposedly painted by St. Luke, which is venerated as the "Queen of Poland" and is the symbol of national survival. Polish-born Pope John Paul II is scheduled to visit the monastery in August, but there is speculation that he won't come if martial law is still in effect.

Chronicling The Argot Of Underworld

By JACK A. SEAMONDS
Associated Press Writer
BOWLING GREEN, Ohio (AP) — Backhand Art blew into The Morgue hot from Bean Town, and brushed his tail. One quick, solo Canadian build-up and he was ready to look for the big store.

As grifters go, he was as good as Fast Eddie, but that's punching guff. Forty-some odd was hanging loose in his pocket, but Art didn't need it — no heavy racket was he, see, strictly ready to pack it in and go to Omaha with no harm.

You say you don't understand? Some confidence man you'd have made in the 1930s, when a brace was on every corner and a bulldog's nose was as near as your arm.

It's argot, the street language of the underworld, and a Bowling Green State University professor who compiled a book full of the phrases says they're changing all the time.

In essence, the character Backhand Art arrived from Philadelphia. The Morgue, running from the police in Boston, or Bean Town. After a scam in which he made $50 short-changing a cashier, he settled into the community and started looking for a bigger game. As a confidence man, he was as good as the legendary Fast Eddie, but that's bragging, or punching guff.

He had a revolver in his pocket — "forty-some odd" being the caliber — but he was not violent. He was ready to retire from the rackets and — in the argot of confidence men — rest quietly in the proverbial Omaha without hurting anyone. A "brace" is a racket or con game and a bulldog's nose is a drink with cigar ash in it — just for flavor, you understand.

The professor, Allan Futrell, says he's not sure why Philadelphia had such a boring reputation among confidence men — it's other nickname in argot is The Sleepy City. But it could be worse — Brooklyn, N.Y. is known as The City of the Dead. Boston also was known as Highbrow Columbus, Ohio was called Louse Town.

"Argot is a dynamic language that is constantly changing," says Futrell, a red-haired, red-bearded doctoral student in American contemporary studies.

"The language changes as technology changes. A word or expression may lose its meaning and consequently it's usage over the years," he says. "For instance, it used to be that in pocket billiards a ball could be 'gummed' or glued to the rubber cushion on a pool table during play because of the heat of a room.

"Well, when the cushions were made more solid, it was impossible for a ball to 'gum' and the word disappeared," says Futrell, a native of Rantoul, Ill., who calls Louisville, Ky. his adopted home.

It was in Louisville that Futrell studied with a professor named David Maurer. "Maurer was the best when it came to studying argot," Futrell says of his mentor at the University of Louisville. "He knew pretty much everything about the argot of the streets.

After Maurer's death in June, Futrell took up the mission of collecting argot from the world of vice, crime and corruption. He says he feels right at home.

"My interest began when I was a little boy of 8. My dad put new covers on pool tables, and I'd go with him. I'd listen real careful in those pool halls and I'd pick up the language," Futrell recalls. "I've been hanging around pool halls ever since."

His searches for argot have carried him from Cairo, Ill., to the hills and hollows of Kentucky, to some of the country's best-known prisons, where the "residents" or prisoners told him of their language.

Pimps, pickpockets, race track regulars and gamblers are Futrell's resources. Right now, his special interest is the language of pool halls.

"Basically, what I'm doing is compiling an oral history of the language these people used in the streets, on all levels of criminal activity," Futrell says.

Legislative Veto Is In Trouble

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — When funeral directors, used-car dealers, hearing aid companies and mobile home manufacturers didn't like the way they were regulated by a federal agency, they went to Congress for help.

The lawmakers granted them relief with a device called a legislative veto — a majority vote of one or both houses that can nullify a government rule or a presidential decision.

Without the legislative veto, the Federal Trade Commission may have already required funeral directors to disclose price information.

Stringent FTC-imposed warranty practices may already have been placed in effect for the mobile home industry and hearing aid companies may by now have been returning money to people who changed their minds about a purchase within 30 days.

And the FTC's decision to force used-car dealers to inform consumers of vehicle defects may not be facing a legislative veto.

The legislative veto, which Congress says can prevent rulemaking agencies from "running amok" is in legal trouble.

A three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington ruled Jan. 29 that the legislative veto, especially when exercised by only one house, is unconstitutional.

A federal appeals panel in San Francisco also struck down the device in December 1980 and that case is set for argument before the Supreme Court Feb. 22.

When the 1980 decision came down, President Jimmy Carter said it carried "perhaps the most profound significance constitutionally of anything that's happened in my four years."

Carter and President Reagan have opposed the legislative veto on grounds it left no role for the chief executive in lawmaking.

The Washington decision concentrated on the one-house veto, although several lawyers involved in the case said the decision's rationale would also apply to the two-house veto.

The Washington court said the legislative veto violates the procedure established by the Constitution for passing laws. That involves approval by a majority vote of the House and Senate and acceptance or disapproval by the president. A presidential veto can be overridden by a two-thirds vote in each house.

The legislative veto has been written into specific pieces of legislation since 1932, but its use in recent years has become more frequent. It affects, for example, legislation on U.S. foreign policy and laws controlling rulemaking agencies such as the FTC.

For instance, the device can be used to increase natural gas home heating bills, deny arms sales to Saudi Arabia, prevent military aid to Pakistan and stop the FTC's disclosure requirements on used cars.

"It gives a powerful lobby that wants to do something quickly the chance to stamper Congress," said Michael Pertschuk, a member and the former chairman of the FTC. "The rules on funerals and used cars would both have been law by now (without a legislative veto)."

The Washington appellate court said its decision "may have far-reaching effects on the operation of the federal government." That is apparent when one looks at some of the ways the legislative veto can be or has been used.

For example, the mood of Congress could change after the next elections, and the legislators could decide to nullify any future presidential decision to sell arms to Saudi Arabia. That would reverse the policy set when Reagan chose to sell AWACS airplanes to the Saudis and Congress declined to veto the sale.

In the one-house veto that sparked the Washington court decision, the House vetoed a rule by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, which tried to shift some of the burden of natural gas price increases from consumers to industry.

In another key foreign policy move, Congress decided last December to institute a two-house legislative veto to prevent military aid to countries that violate U.S. policy on the reprocessing, enrichment, transfer and receipt of nuclear fuel and devices. The veto, which could apply to countries like Pakistan, would override a presidential recommendation that aid be granted despite the violation.

The House and the Senate have filed legal papers supporting the legislative veto.

Eugene Gressman, a law professor at the University of North Carolina and a special counsel to the House, said Congress is proceeding constitutionally because the legislative veto is used not to make new law, but to exercise control.

"If you didn't have the legislative veto, administrative agencies can run amok," he said. "Congress is saying let's stop the evil before it becomes final. This is an effective control mechanism."

He added the veto is legal in many areas of foreign affairs since some of the president's foreign policy-making powers stem from laws passed by Congress.

Another legal scholar, law professor Antonin Scalia of University of Chicago Law School, disagreed.

"Decisions which in the past have been less political will in the future be much more highly politicized" if the legislative veto continues to be used, he said.

"I'm not saying there isn't politics before the agencies. But there's an awful lot more before Congress."

Pertschuk, who was the target of congressional wrath because of the fundamental changes in society he tried to bring about while FTC chairman, agreed with Scalia.

"The effect of the legislative veto is that the FTC staff ends up negotiating ahead of time with a handful of congressmen or their staff," he said.

Pleased With New Jet Engine

EAST HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — The all-new technology Pratt and Whitney engine which is being readied for use in Boeing's new 757 jetliner is "achieving unprecedented standards of performance in initial testing," its manufacturers say.

The PW2037 engine has already run at 38,200 pounds of thrust, exceeding its rated takeoff thrust of 37,000 pounds, a Pratt and Whitney spokesman said, and in addition, in its first test run on Dec. 4, achieved the lowest specific fuel consumption of any engine ever tested at the company.

The new engine is being readied for six weeks of testing in an altitude simulation chamber.

Can Estimate Heating Costs

NEW YORK (AP) — Annual heating and cooling costs for new houses before they are even built will be available to consumers this spring, according to a building materials manufacturer.

The Energy Performance Design System, a workbook and computer program, will allow builders to measure the energy performance of any new home design, according to Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., developer of the system.

It will determine the number of potential "energy units" a home may consume in a year, taking into consideration the lifestyle of a typical family of four.

These energy units can be translated into kilowatt hours, cubic feet of gas or gallons of fuel oil, and then into dollars and cents using local utility rates. The company cautions homebuyers, however, that the final figure should not be considered an absolute.

Killing Journalists In Thailand Goes Unchecked

By JOHN LAIRE
Associated Press Writer
ANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Journalists here claim their profession has become the most dangerous in Thailand. By one count, 26 have met violent death in the past three years and nearly a dozen others have come under attack.

The latest was reporter Sumon Chungchua. He was riding his motorcycle home from work in southern Thailand last month when a number of assailants stepped from the undergrowth and pumped dozens of shots from military rifles into his body, according to the accounts reaching Bangkok.

On Jan. 15, three days after his death, the Committee of the Confederation of Thai Journalists issued a statement here formally protesting Sumon's death.

Just before the attack, Sumon had written an article for his newspaper in the province of Nakhon Si Thammarat describing a clash between two groups of Thailand's controversial paramilitary Rangers.

Manich Sookfomchitra, deputy chief editor of the Bangkok newspaper Thai Rath, for which Sumon was a part-time correspondence, said military police in the south have suspended 14 Rangers and turned one over for trial on a charge of murder, a charge the suspect denies.

Members of the Confederation of Thai Journalists, one of the largest of 10 such journalistic groups in Thailand, claim, however, that very few suspects accused in connection with the slayings of journalists ever are actually brought to trial.

The rising number of journalists' deaths underscores a ruthless rivalry that exists in both legal and illegal business ventures in Thailand, and the unchecked spread of high-powered weapons such as the U.S. standard military M-16 rifle, the type allegedly used in Sumon's killing.

"In past years, politics and crime were the only reasons for attacks on journalists," said civil rights lawyer Thongbai Thongpao, an adviser to the journalists confederation.

He added in an interview with The Associated Press that reporters now find themselves in increasing contact with "influential persons" during a time of rapid economic growth in the countryside, and of growing business rivalry.

"Influential persons" is the Thai term for wealthy and powerful entrepreneurs — many of them benevolent, but others involved in smuggling, illegal lumbering, illegal mining and other outlawed activities.

The illegal operators often maintain their own armed contingents, and usually have close contacts with authorities, mostly police, Thongbai claimed.

"This is why when an assassination takes place, no one can be arrested," he added.

"We want the police or authorities to pay more attention to protecting the rights and freedom of newsmen. The profession is very dangerous because reporters are exposing corrupt activities."

But he also said that some reporters have business interests of their own, and may also be involved in wrongdoing.

Thongbai, a former news correspondent himself and adviser to three other journalists associations in Thailand, said he began compiling a list of attacks on journalists in November 1978, mainly from press clippings. He said he believes it is far from complete. To date, he said, he has recorded 26 violent deaths of reporters, physical attacks on 19 others and 3 reported threats.

Said Thai Rath editor Manich: "The danger to the whole Thai people is the same, not just to journalists because people can buy guns easily and can keep guns everywhere."

Manich said Thailand has 300 full-time journalists and 700 part timers, those known as "stringers." He listed other civilian occupations with a high murder rate as village leaders, miners, businessmen and executives of farmers' unions.

There are no comprehensive statistics on homicides in Thailand, but researchers at Bangkok's Chulalongkorn University say it probably has the highest rate in Asia.

Thai Rath, claiming a daily circulation of 700,000 copies with 200 correspondents throughout the country, has had at least 22 killed or injured, said a senior editorial adviser, Somboon Worabongse.

"Last november our correspondent in Nakhon Sawan (130 miles north of Bangkok) was killed by police," Somboon charged.

"We asked the police chief to arrest the officers, but nothing happened. Three or four times we have had evidence of who killed our reporters, but the police would not take action."

Many of the attacks have been described as taking place in daylight, in front of many witnesses.

Lawyer Thongbai's file includes the case of one family:

On July 22, 1980, Amnat Chirandorn, editor and owner of a small provincial newspaper in the northeastern town of Nakhon Phathom, was shot dead while coming out of a movie theater.

The following Oct. 8, Amnat's father, who took over the editorship, was shot and killed in his car after interviewing the provincial governor.

Higher Costs In Bank Business

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Bank customers are victims of the trickle-down theory, but in this case it means higher fees rather than more income.

Bankers say the cost of doing business has soared the past 18 months and that cost must be passed on to the customer.

Charlotte bankers say that translates to higher costs for all types of services, from checking to safety deposit boxes. Additionally, many banks are requiring minimums on deposit accounts.

No North Carolina bank charges credit card use fees, because it is illegal, but interest rates on the charge cards have risen.

Bankers site competition as one reason for rising costs — competition among banks and other financial institutions, including credit unions, savings and loans and brokerage firms.

Moslem Minority In Thailand Warns Of Violence

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer
YALA, Thailand (AP) — Leaders of Thailand's Moslem minority say violence and demands for autonomy could be the result if, as they claim, the government continues to neglect their community's aspirations.

Thailand's Moslems, whose numbers are estimated as high as 4.5 million or about 10 percent of the population, are concentrated here in the southernmost part of the country.

The region of jungles and rubber plantations is the scene of violence between Moslem and Buddhist communities and calls by a welter of Moslem insurgent groups for a separate state or merger with neighboring Malaysia, which is predominantly Moslem. The most widely known of the groups, the Pattani United Liberation Organization or PULO, has been blamed for assassinations in the south and bombings in Bangkok, Thailand's capital.

"We (Moslems and Buddhists) don't understand each other," says Dr. Mohammed Abdul Kader, a Moslem who is a government official in Yala.

About half the Moslem population is concentrated in four provinces in the south. The remainder is spread out around the country. The radical groups, such as PULO, variously call for either autonomy or merger with Malaysia. More moderate Moslems say they would be satisfied with social justice and being treated like other Thais.

Kader, who heads the government's non-formal education program here, as well as other moderate Moslem leaders say the barriers to understanding include local government officials who are invariably Buddhists and the commonly held assumption that only a Buddhist can be "a real Thai."

On the other hand, the southern Thai Moslems, who are ethnic Malays, form a largely closed community. Marriages with Buddhists are rare; the older people speak little or no Thai and many look to Malaysia rather than Thailand, which took over the southernmost provinces in the 18th century, as their cultural and spiritual homeland.

Under some post-World War II administrations, the official policy was to "Thaize" the southern Moslems. Speaking Malay was frowned upon, children were taught Buddhist concepts from textbooks that bore no relation to their culture or surroundings and one prime minister even ordered Moslem men to wear pants rather than the traditional sarongs.

Dr. Arong Suthasana, a Moslem professor at Bangkok's Chulalongkorn University, expresses a hope that more talk now in government circles about "cultural concessions" will ease tensions.

"We are moving in the same direction as the Philippines (which has been plagued by a Moslem rebellion in its southern provinces)," says the U.S.-educated academic. "But Thais are by nature more flexible. I hope this will help prevent an explosion."

Kader also notes improvements in recent years, like the transfer of control of teachers from the Ministry of the Interior to the Education Ministry. Under Interior, Kader claims, many of the teachers were no better than police agents, coming to schools armed and reporting to police on "Moslem activities."

Nevertheless, Kader claims that about 80 percent of the teachers in the south are still "outsiders" and many Moslem parents, feeling that Buddhist teachers will not provide proper spiritual instruction, prefer to send their children to private Moslem religious schools, something which in turn tends to arouse the suspicions of local officials.

"We haven't been able yet to formulate a basic concept for the south," said Gen. Saiyud Kerdpol, Thailand's armed forces commander, in a recent interview. "The Moslems must be made to feel that they are Thais. If they want to wear their traditional dress, let them. That's not important."

Arong, an expert on southern problems, says there is yet "no commanding Moslem insurgency movement in the south" and that most of the separatist groups — lacking real ideology and solid organization — are not trusted by the majority of the conservative, rural Moslems. Many of the Moslems living in other parts of the country are believed to be well-integrated. "But inevitably the movement will become stronger if the government doesn't improve its performance," says Arong.

He expresses the belief that foreign support for the Moslem groups has so far been minimal.

Although there have been rumors in recent years of arms and other aid from Libya and other Middle Eastern nations, proof has not been forthcoming, although some aid from sympathetic "free-lancers" in Malaysia is known to reach the separatists. Malaysia and Thailand have friendly relations.

The official head of the Thailand's Moslems, Chulamontri Prasert Mohammad, said in an interview that his co-religionists have been little affected by radical religious and social currents in such Islamic nations as Iran.

But larger numbers of Thai Moslems are studying in Islamic nations, including Libya. Some youths, according to Kader, are at the "critical crossroads of realizing they have been repressed but not knowing enough about the root causes and what to do about them."

The status of the Moslems is further complicated since it is linked — sometimes erroneously — to a web of violence generally dubbed "the southern problem" by the central government.

Aside from communal violence and Moslem separatists, the government must cope with some 2,500 Thai communist guerrillas operating in the whole of southern Thailand; about 2,300 fighters of the Communist Party of Malaya along the Thai-Malaysian border; large numbers of bandit and pirate gangs as well as criminal elements within their own law-enforcement agencies.

Michigan Supplier Of Dogsleds, Cold Gear

By RON KOEHLER
NUNICA, Mich. (UPI) — Nunica, producer of cars and trucks, is home base for the world's top producer of another mode of transportation — the dogsled.

Nunica, a tiny burg some 30 miles north of Grand Rapids, is the home of Tun-Dra Kennels and Outfitters, a mail-order business that sends dogsleds and arctic gear to just about anywhere snow falls.

Nearly everything a snowbound person needs to survive, from snowshoes to headbands knit from 100 percent pure Siberian Husky hair, is available from Tun-Dra.

"We're not the biggest in terms of general northern type stuff," Deane Cheadle says, "but we are the largest in sled dogging. I built my first dogsled when I was 15 years old and am a second-generation breeder of Siberian Huskies."

Cheadle sells about 125 to 150 dogsleds and about 30 Siberian Husky puppies each year. That may not sound like a lot, but the market for dogsleds is somewhat limited, he says.

Cheadle, 46, says most of his dogsleds are purchased by people who want to own one for a "back-to-basics" form of entertainment that is considered by most to be more environmentally acceptable than the snowmobile.

A handful of freight sleds are sold each year to trappers and others who live and work so far back in the woods that the dogsled remains the only reliable form of transportation available.

Cheadle's claim to fame is his idea of putting a polyurethane runner on dogsleds. Although it was slow to catch on, he says the "world runs on poly" now.

"They laughed at me when I first brought it out," he said. "My competition and racers laughed for three years. I was even beginning to wonder myself but it finally caught on. Now they're all running on poly." A basic sled can be bought for about $150, with the more streamlined racing sleds going for $275 and the freight sleds priced at $375. That is the unassembled price, however, and it costs a few dollars more for his carpenter in nearby

Gossip Part Of Her Job

OAK HILL, Ala. (AP) — Kat Penland does more than pump gas and run the cash register at her crossroads country store here in northeastern Alabama. She listens — and takes notes.

"Slim Bowman came by the mall Saturday. He smelled like he was drinking antifreeze ... That may be the answer to our problems ..."

"The mall" is the store and the observation comes directly from the pages of the Tri City Times. Mrs. Penland, a 43-year-old grandmother, is a correspondent for the paper.

In another column, she told the public: "It snowed plum up to Bobby Slaton's fruit of the looms in Anniston Wednesday night."

And another: "I went by the DeKalb Bank Saturday night and I have never seen as many three-piece polyester suits and wild root creme oil in my life. All the bank guys and dolls were slicked up going to Huntsville to eat and take in a hockey game ..."

Mrs. Penland married when she was 17 and she and her husband left the mountains, but came back and she now runs the store and comes up with journalistic gems. Like this:

"I heard that Neal Davis was looking for a sexy lady with a heavenly body, with a good lawn mower.

Coopersville to assemble the sleds.

Tun-Dra is a family business. Daughters Cheryl and Linda are almost always manning the phones, taking orders and mailing out packages of dog supplies, arctic clothing and "Mush On America" bumperstickers. Two of Cheadle's sons worked with him too, until the call of the wild took them to Alaska.

Two of his biggest sellers are the Siberian Husky hair socks and headbands, made of the hair brushed from Cheadle's championship dogs.

Most of the hair is accumulated during the spring, when the dogs are shedding their winter coat. It is shipped to Anne Holopainen of Wisconsin, who cleans the hair, spins it into yarn and then knits the yarn into the socks and headbands.

At $19.95, you can't get a warmer pair of socks anywhere, Cheadle says, noting they've been shipped across the world to Sweden, Australia, Canada and Alaska.

Collecting Toys Fills Spare Time

By STEVE BREWER
Associated Press Writer
EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Armed with a handful of batteries, Arthur Compean can make King Kong beat his chest, Godzilla breathe smoke and Frankenstein drop his drawers.

Compean, 26, collects toys that move, with the aid of batteries or a wind-up key. Compean's bedroom — he lives with his parents — and an adjacent room are filled with hundreds of toys, ranging from a figurine of Sneezy of the Seven Dwarfs that doesn't do anything to robots that spark, sputter, walk, chatter and shoot guns.

"It started with me going through my closet and finding the toys I used to play with when I was young," he says. "I started checking antique stores and finding a few more toys. Pretty soon, I had a whole collection."

Compean, an X-ray technician at Thomason General Hospital, has been collecting toys for a little more than a year, but he says he's completely engaged in his hobby.

"A large portion of my check has been going into the toys," he says. "My mom gets a little upset when I tell her how much some of these cost."

His most recent acquisition is a collection of about 300 tin wind-up toys he bought from a collector in Phoenix who was dropping the hobby. He's not sure whether he'll have enough room to display them all.

Toys fill shelves in the two rooms, as well as the tops of Compean's dressers and virtually any other vacant space.

There's a large chimpanzee named Hy-Que who, when you shake his hand, will go into the "Speak No Evil" routine, doing all the parts himself. There's a furry King Kong who's more than a foot tall. Turn him on and he walks, growls and beats his chest, rattling the tiny chains that bind him.

Compean has three different models of a Frankenstein toy that, with the help of batteries, walks forward with his oversized hands outstretched. When the walk is done, Frank's pants fall down, revealing red striped boxer shorts.

"Robots are the hot item right now," Compean says, digging a book on robots out of a dresser drawer.

Prominently displayed in the book, which was published in France, is Robbie the Robot, the lovable tin man of the 1950s science fiction classic "Forbidden Planet." Compean's Robbie is his most valuable toy, with a resale value of more than $1,000.

"This is one of the most desirable robots," he says, explaining that it was produced from 1955 to 1960. "It's just that he is hard to find now."

Compean credits his mother with the roots of his collection, because, he says, she hid the toys away when he stopped playing with them.

The King Kong, now worth hundreds of dollars, was bought by his mother for $1.99 in the early 1960s.

When he began his collection, he found the gorilla in mint condition in its original box. "They're more valuable when you have the original boxes they came in," he says. "The boxes themselves take a whole lot of room."

Kong remains Compean's favorite toy.

"You're more attached to the ones you grew up with because they're a part of your life," he says.

Most of the collection has been purchased within the last year, but the toys' ages range from tin windups made in the 1920s to a giant piece from the recent movie "The Empire Strikes Back."

The oldest toys in Compean's collection are a dented tin zeppelin called the Los Angeles made in the early 1920s and a tin Santa and sleigh dated 1923. Several of the toys are from the tin toys' heyday in the 1930s, including a Flash Gordon ray gun that still spews sparks when the trigger is pulled.

"They discontinued making toys made out of tin because they got to be too expensive," Compean says. "Plus, they were dangerous to the kids because of sharp edges."

Goat Meat Nothing To Kid About

By ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN

Associated Press Writer
TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — This is nothing to kid about. It may even get your goat. But enjoy those thick, juicy beef sirloin strips and T-bone steaks while you can find and afford them.

Goat may be a staple in your diet 10 or 15 years from now.

All it's going to take, says an expert on the bearded ruminants, is a steady, inevitable decline in the world food supply.

Hold on, you say. Goats? Those cute, furry, fuzzy, goateed little critters? The stuff of "Billy-Goats Gruff"? Those animals much-maligned in literature, associated with lechery, gluttony, lasciviousness and all that, reputed to eat anything? Not, you say, by your chin-whiskers?

Why not? It's already consumed by many people in other parts of the world.

Listen a minute to Clair E. Terrill, who makes some pungent arguments:

— "As we produce less meat from grain, we'll need to take up that slack."

— "If meat is rationed, you won't be nearly so fussy. Believe me, when that time comes, (the price of beef) will be far, far higher than it is now."

— "People eat any food on the basis of supply and price. If there's plenty of it and it's cheap they eat all they can get. That's the situation the U.S. is in now (with beef) and has been in since World War II, because of a surplus of grain."

Terrill says it won't stay that way.

The American grain surplus won't fade overnight, unless there is a worldwide drought — which is possible. But world food production, which increased during the 1960s relative to the number of people, leveled off in the last decade and, Terrill predicts, will decrease in the 1980s as world population grows.

Terrill, 71, a retired staff scientist who directed the study of goats and sheep for the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Research Service, was in Tucson recently for an international conference on goat production. He says goats may become a primary food source in coming years as more marginal land comes into use for food production.

Why? Because goats — and sheep — don't have to eat grain. Goats, he says, are scroungers, browsers, eaters of brush and grass. The cud-chewers are hooves and horns ahead of cattle when it comes to feeding costs.

"They're pretty important in quite a few countries where meat production from grain is not possible," says Terrill. "Much of the meat has to be produced from land that we wouldn't even use. In some countries, over half the meat consumed is produced by meat goats. In the United States it's so different that it's difficult to assume."

Terrill says strangulating costs and steady loss of farmland to urban sprawl will continue to shrink agricultural acreage in this country. And that, he says, will contribute inexorably to a dwindling surplus of grain.

The number of farmers, particularly full-time, is shrinking because of the economy. Staggering interest rates for equipment, capital improvements and fertilizer, and knockout energy costs — besides the misfortune, from the farmer's perspective, of a bumper soybean and corn crop in 1981 that translates into depressed prices — have combined to tighten the wrench.

"I think sheep and goats are the most attractive thing a part-time farmer can have," he says. Raising them is low-cost, doesn't depend on maximizing production and offers a chance to use marginal land, areas with brush-type vegetation.

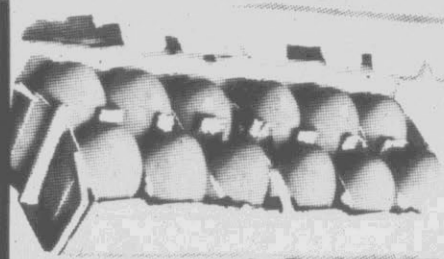

There are some 2 million to 4 million goats in the United States, including 1 million Angoras from which mohair fiber is produced, Terrill says, among a worldwide population he estimates at up to 400 million.
