Big Bird In A Small Pond

ITS NOT THE ATLANTIC ... but it's good enough for a home-away-from-home for this seagull in Ayden. There's a plentiful supply of these feathered ocean-going creatures in Pitt County this winter, blown in from the coast by storms, say local wildlife experts, and unable to return to their native seashore. Or maybe they just prefer, like the gull above, to be big birds in a small pond. (Reflector Photo By Mary Schulken)

Income Surtax Plan Figures As A Recourse

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican congressional leaders, trying to rewrite President Reagan's floundering 1983 budget proposals, are considering a plan that would raise personal income taxes by as much as $37 billion next year.

Money from the surtax — an amount tacked onto Americans' regular income tax bill — would help trim the record deficts projected in Reagan's spending plan.

On the heels of declarations from the chief budget writers in Congress that the president's budget has virtually no support, GOP leaders were meeting with Reagan at the White House today to discuss the situation.

In advance of that meeting, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, responding to the surtax suggestion, said: "We don't want to do anything that would cause problems with the tax cut or an increase in defense spending. We will entertain any good ideas from the Hill, but we do not want them in a piecemeal fashion. We won't swing at every pitch they throw up here."

Meanwhile, budget director David A. Stockman was defending the administration's embattled plan today before the Senate Budget Committee, a number of whose members — Republicans and Democrats — have proposed their own alternatives to Reagan's recommendations.

The surtax idea surfaced Monday as the chairmen of the House and Senate budget committees all but ruled out enactment of Reagan's 1983 budget as submitted. The chairmen raised the prospect of a bipartisan effort to rewrite the administration's budget plan to lower deficits, tone down the increase in defense spending, raise taxes and trim the cost-of-living increase in Social Security benefits.

"I don't think, as presently presented to Congress, that it (Reagan's budget) has a very significant chance of becoming the budget resolution of the United States Senate," Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, said in remarks to the National Governors' Association.

Rep. James R. Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee, told the same group that there is "not a handful of Republican or Democratic votes" in favor of the president's budget.

Jones said a bipartisan effort is essential for a new budget to be approved. "You're not going to find either party sticking its neck out by itself," he said.

Domenici said taxes would have to be raised to narrow the deficit, but he refused to be specific.

Domenici is only one of the Senate Budget Committee members pressing alternatives to Reagan's budget for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.

Among those who have offered alternatives of their own are Sens. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina, the ranking Democrat on the panel; Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., and Slade Gorton, R-Wash.

Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., also has said he will make proposals aimed at trimming budget deficits.

As part of the scramble for alternatives, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., is floating the idea of a temporary federal surtax of up to 10 percent of personal income taxes as a way to reduce the growing federal deficit.

"The woods are full of suggestions," Baker said Monday in an interview with The Associated Press. "The surtax was one of those and frankly it has a lot to commend it."

The proposal, under discussion among Baker and other Senate Republicans, could reduce the administration's projected 1983 budget deficit of $91.5 billion by as much as $37 billion, according to sources who asked not to be identified.

"It's (the surtax) fully progressive in the sense that it applies across the spectrum of tax rates, effective tax rates," Baker said. "It does not change the mix of incentives (for savings and investment) in the president's program. ... It would be easy to do and it would not be a hodge-podge. So, on the surface of it, it has appeal."

However, Baker declined to endorse the plan outright. "What I'm doing is identifying ones (plans) that are being discussed," he said.

One Senate aide emphasized that the surtax idea could vanish quickly if it meets with firm resistance in Congress or at the White House.

Sales, Use Tax Sums Received

Net distributable proceeds from sales and use taxes totaling some $898,750 were received by Pitt County for the quarter ending Dec. 31, according to Mark Lynch, secretary of the N.C. Department of Transportation.

The official said that on a per capita distribution basis, Greenville received $230,615. The city's population was listed in the report as 36,969.

Farmville, based on a population of 4,839, received $30,186, Lynch said, while Ayden, with a population of 4,437, received $27,678.

Seven towns shared in the balance, including: Washington, $68,528; Belhaven, $19,129; Aurora, $5,491; Chocowinity, $5,397; Washington Park, $4,045; Bath, $1,626, and Pantego, $1,453.

Governors Accept 'New Federalism'

By DON McLEOD
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic governors told President Reagan today they are willing to work with him toward a "new federalism" but warned that the whole project "will ring hollow" unless he first straightens out the economy.

The tough-worded resolution by the Democratic caucus of the National Governors Association was adopted unanimously as Republican governors, meeting separately, were endorsing a milder bipartisan plan taken to President Reagan at the White House on Monday and expected to be approved by the overall conference at its closing session today.

Senate majority leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., meanwhile told the governors he will push for Senate action on Reagan's "new federalism" proposal this year, probably in late summer or fall.

"If we do not go forward with this debate now, we will lose it," Baker said. "It is now or never."

The Democrats' resolution said: "We are appalled at the administration's callous disregard of the elderly, small business, farmers, college students and unemployed workers. The Republicans' insensitive policy of high interest rates, runway deficits, rising bankruptcy and unaffordable housing is tearing at our social fabric."

The Democrats said they are agreeable to Reagan's suggestion that states take over some programs now controlled at the federal level.

"But we will not be a part to any scheme to further cut aid to states and local government," the Democratic resolution said.

The Democrats also said they have long supported the general concept of federalism and commended Reagan's general ideas to the country for careful consideration.

"But in good conscience we must warn the president that the promises of federalism will ring hollow unless the economy is strong, jobs are plentiful and fairness and quality become our guiding principles," the Democrats said.

Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California, chairman of the Democratic caucus, said while the Democrats are critical of Reagan's economic policies and his new budget proposals they are standing by the bipartisan federalism stand agreed to by the governors earlier in their annual winter meeting.

The bipartisan resolution supports Reagan's proposal to take full responsibility for the expensive Medicaid program but asks him to reconsider his plan to transfer basic welfare programs to the states.

Reagan, confronted by a battery of state officials unwilling to assume responsibility for the welfare system, said Monday he wants their help in "fleshing out the details" of his "new federalism."

The governors' association, by a 36-5 vote, earlier told Reagan they support his Medicaid proposal but not his suggestion they run basic welfare programs.

Instead, the governors and leaders of the National Association of Counties offered to take over other programs of equal cost — if Washington will assume welfare responsibilities they consider national in nature and unmanageable at their level.

"The president's reaction to our alternative and to our statement that we would like to negotiate it was, 'We begin here'," said Gov. Richard Snelling of Vermont after the governors met with Reagan at the White House.

Snelling, a Republican who is chairman of the governor's association, said Reagan's mild response to their defiance convinced him "that we are now in a full negotiating posture and that the odds are very high" that a federalism program agreeable to all can be worked out.

Speaking to the governors at their annual winter conference, however, Rep. James Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee, said there was "less than a 50-50 chance" any "new federalism" program will pass this year.

In a meeting with the county officials, Reagan had said his plan to swap Medicaid for welfare is only an outline, not a blueprint.

PAPER RECYCLING FEEDBACK

As feedback to Monday's Hotline item, Wayne Bryant, Scoutmaster of Boy Scout Troop 340, Greenville, said his troop has accepted responsibility for keeping four paper recycling houses emptied and taking the paper to the Vocational Center recycling center, where they will receive a half-cent per pound. He asked that the public support his troop's efforts and urged that no trash, magazines or cardboard be mixed with the newspaper left there. These four houses are located at Pitt Plaza, Harris Supermarket on Memorial Drive, the Piggly Wiggly Supermarket at the corner of Dickinson Avenue and Hooker Road, and behind St. James United Methodist Church on E. Sixth Street.

HOME BURNED

The home of John and Nancy Moore and nine children on Highway 222 between Fountain and Falkland burned to the ground Friday afternoon. The entire contents of the house was lost, but all the occupants are safe.

The Women of the Church of Fountain Presbyterian Church have asked Hotline to appeal on behalf of the family, whose children range in age from teens to infancy. The Moores, who are foster care providers for the Pitt County Department of Social Services, say that, due to the community's quick generosity, they and the children need no clothes, but are in need of furnishings, bed and bath linens, and kitchenware. Anyone wishing to give may take items to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alton Moore, John Moore's parents, across Highway 222 from the burned house. Inquiries about the needs may be made by calling the Alton Moore residence, 749-4526.

Nancy Moore's fellow employees of H&R Block company, Greenville, are holding a miscellaneous shower for the family Thursday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Anyone wishing to bring a gift to help the family start over is asked to visit the Greenville Square office that day and have coffee and doughnuts. Boxes for the collection of gifts for the Moores will also be available in the downtown mall and Sears offices of the firm, Fay Best said.

IRA Guerillas Seize British Ship In Inlet, Blow Up The Vessel

MOVILLE, Ireland (AP) — Twelve Irish Republican Army guerrillas seized a British cargo vessel in a sea inlet early today, cast its 10-man crew adrift in a lifeboat and blew up the ship, police said.

All the crew members reached shore safely and no one was hurt in the incident in Lough Foyle, an inlet which separates the Irish Republic from the British-ruled province of Northern Ireland. The ship sank in shallow water a quarter mile from the Irish coast.

The outlawed IRA's "Provisional" guerrilla wing said in a statement later that it was responsible for what it termed "a successful attack on an economic target."

The IRA has been fighting to oust the British from the mainly Protestant province and unite it with the overwhelmingly Roman Catholic Irish Republic.

The attack on the 1,200-ton St. Bedan, loaded with coal and bound for Londonderry, Northern Ireland, was identical to an incident a year ago when a Liverpool coal ship was blown up in Lough Foyle.

Irish police said the IRA group, armed with automatic weapons and handguns, seized the boat-pilot station at Moville, County Donegal, on the west coast of the inlet. The gang ordered a pilot boat to take them to the moored coal ship, police said.

They boarded the St. Bedan, put guns to the heads of crew members and forced them into a lifeboat, police said. The raiders then took explosives from sacks they brought, planted several bombs and departed by boat just as the explosives went off, police said.

Police in the Irish Republic said they were questioning three men arrested in County Donegal on the west side of the inlet following the bombing.

The St. Bedan had sailed from Northumberland, England, and was waiting to take its load of coal to Londonderry at the southern end of Lough Foyle.

The ship's owners, J. and A. Gardner of Glasgow, Scotland, sent a strong protest to the Irish government through the General Council of British Shipping, company spokesman Alastair Struthers said.

"This was an appalling incident anh the fact that it had happened in exactly the same way once before makes it even worse," Struthers said.

The ship's captain, Roderick Black, said he was in the wheelhouse "just before midnight (7 a.m. EST) when one of the men burst in wielding a machine gun. He told me to stop the engines, then put my hands on my head and told me not to touch anything."

Black said the masked raiders "warned us not to come back to this area again. They said they may use rockets against British ships in future."

Edminsten Advises Lawmakers Quit Boards

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Attorney General Rufus Edmisten has warned state legislators that any actions taken by boards and commissions to which they belong could be voided unless they relinquish their positions.

"My office has conducted a careful review of all the boards and commissions upon which legislators sit which exercise a part of the administrative or executive sovereign power of the State of North Carolina," Edmisten said in a letter sent Monday to legislators.

"If you sit on any (of the 41 boards or commissions), I respectfully suggest that you immediately give notice in writing of your resignation," the letter said.

The letter resulted from a ruling by the North Carolina Supreme Court last month that said the appointment of legislators to the Environmental Management Commission violated the separation of powers doctrine of the state Constitution.

Edmisten said legislators can remain as members of the Advisory Budget Commission, but said they can only advise the governor. Legislative members of the commission should give up all duties that are other than purely advisory, he said.

The Committee on Employee Hospital and Medical Benefits is made up entirely of legislators, Edmisten said. The duties of the committee, including the awarding of contracts, are "clearly executive and administrative," he said, adding that the Supreme Court ruling means legislators on the committee cannot do their duties without violating the Constitution.

"Any decisions made by this committee may be subject to court challenge," Edmisten said, declaring that the law creating the committee was null and void.

Brent Hackney, a spokesman for Gov. Jim Hunt, said Monday that Hunt has not drawn up a contingency plan to cope with the ruling, and said it may take several weeks for legislators to comply with the recommendation.

"We are looking to the attorney general as to how to proceed," he said.

He said that some of the board members are appointed by the governor, while others are appointed by the Legislature.

"In some cases, members to boards and commissions are appointed to fixed terms, and in other cases the appointments remain in force at the pleasure of the governor. I don't expect any confrontation here. We'll work with members of the commissions on an individual basis."

Mardi Gras Jams New Orleans Jails

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Police are known to look the other way at Mardi Gras activities that could ordinarily land one in jail, but extra shifts were on hand to keep control of an expected 1 million people for today's parades.

King Zulu was to lead off the day-long street parades, his 73rd annual appearance.

The jails were already jammed with more than 2,800 prisoners, and more than 150 state police had been sent in to help free police for parade duties.

U.S. District Judge Frank Polozola, who has ordered Sheriff Charles C. Foti Jr. to limit the inmate population, relaxed his orders somewhat for the 14-day Carnival season.

Polozola, who is overseeing lawsuits attacking overcrowding in the jails, met with Foti on Monday to discuss the problems.

"I think he's satisfied," Foti said after the meeting. "We've done what we needed to do — protect the citizens and the tourists from the unlawful element and remain within the court-imposed (jail population) limits.

"Thank God it only comes once a year," said Foti.

Mayor Dutch Morial praised police and citizens Monday for the lack of any serious violence and called for restraint. "The response has been tremendous," he said.

Last year, a gunshot wounded three people at the Bacchus parade while two children were crushed between floats during other parades.

Police reported many minor incidents, including picked pockets, some snatched purses and several booze-inspired fistfights.

Early last week, a teen-age girl was stabbed by another girl at a parade. On Sunday night, a youngster fell through a storefront window and sent a crowd on Canal Street running in panic, but no one was seriously hurt.

Police said a melee developed in which about 50 people waiting for the Bacchus parade started dancing and singing.

Last year during Bacchus, a plainclothes policeman's gun went off in a scuffle with a band chaperone and two people, including a high school drum major, were wounded.

The top parade of the day is that of Rex, king of Carnival.

William B. Reily III of Metairie, president of a coffee company that bears his name, will serve as Rex. Katherine Waters of New Orleans, a junior at the University of Alabama, is is consort.

As the parades roll on all day long, people stand shoulder to shoulder along the streets yelling, "Throw me something, mister" as those on floats toss cheap beads and aluminum dubloons.

In the French Quarter, where it's wall-to-wall people, some men shimmy along Bourbon Street in bikinis or elaborate ball gowns. Women on ironwork balconies are urged by chanting crowds to expose their chests. Some do.

The festivities officially end at midnight, when Rex and Comus meet and usher in Lent, the traditional Christian 40-day period of fasting and sacrifice.

High-Tech Drain Count Confronts Englishman

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — An Englishman who allegedly sold video terminals and other computer equipment to eastern European countries is the first target of a new federal crackdown on the flow of American technology to the Soviet Bloc.

Brian A. Moller-Butcher, owner of a company in Brockton, Mass., denied the charges Monday at his arraignment in U.S. District Court.

Moller-Butcher, 50, of Camberly, England, and an employee, Paul C. Carlson, 40, of Bridgewater, Mass., entered innocent pleas before Magistrate Lawrence Cohen.

Moller-Butcher is owner of M.E.S. Equipment, Inc., and Carlson is its chief operating officer. In a 30-count indictment, the two are accused of selling restricted high-technology equipment to Poland, Romania and Bulgaria.

Last October, Reagan ordered a crackdown on the sale of American high technology to the Soviet Bloc. Ed Kitritch, a spokesman for the Customs Service in Washington, said the Boston prosecution is the first since the enforcement effort began.

Kitritch said the program, called Exodus, involves teams of customs agents, inspectors, patrol officers, import specialists and accountants in 10 cities.

According to the federal indictment, the two men exported equipment that was "controlled for national security reasons." All the devices were on the "commodity control list" compiled by the Office of Export Administration, which regulates which U.S. products can be sold outside the country.

The two men allegedly sold a video terminal, a desk-top calculator, testing equipment used to manufacture integrated circuits, chemicals needed to make electronic equipment and other technological gear.

Several of the companies that manufactured the devices said similar equipment is widely available around the world.

For instance, the men allegedly exported a Data General diskette subsystem to Great Britain and then sold it again to Romania. The device is used for long-term storage of computer information.

"This storage device is not complex," said Michael Klatman, a Data General spokesman. "It's like a tape recorder. The technology is pretty well-known, and they are widely available internationally."

Also allegedly sent through Britain to Bulgaria was a Digital Equipment video terminal.

"This is the leading video terminal on the market," said Digital's Richard Berube. "There are dozens of look-alikes produced by other companies."

Moller-Butcher and Carlson allegedly sold the equipment between June 1969 and August 1981.

The magistrate scheduled a trial to begin May 3 before Judge David Nelson.

Once Is Not Enough As Couples Re-Wed

WINTER PARK, Fla. (AP) — Once was not enough for 100 couples here. They said their marriage vows for a second time — but at the same place.

The occasion was a mass ceremony Sunday to reaffirm their commitments and to help celebrate the 50th anniversary of Knowles Memorial Chapel at Rollins College.

"Marriage is hell — that's typical of what we hear these days," said the Rev. A. Arnold Wettstein. "We are told that it's a not-so-tender trap, forcing us to give up our heroic life goals and sell them out.

"Over and against that kind of picture, we find others among us today making a different kind of statement. They've found something to build on."

Some had been married almost as long as the chapel has been here; others had been married only a few months.

But all 100 couples walked down the aisle and crowded around the altar to restate their pledges to love and honor, for better or for worse.

"It seemed like a good idea to do it all over again," said Dorothy Peeples, who met her husband, Fleetwood, while she was a student at the college and he was her swimming instructor. They married in 1936, the year she won a trophy as the college's best swimmer.

"She always accused me of marrying her to keep that loving cup in the family," said Peeples.

And they departed, happily, to another wedding party.

Reading Project Set

Students in St. Peter School here will be encouraged to "Read for the Need of Others" Mar. 22-Apr. 19, according to Sister Joan of the school.

"We are fighting a dual battle — for improved literacy and against multiple sclerosis," she said. "Reading books and seeking sponsors for each book they read help the youngsters raise funds for MS patient services and multiple sclerosis and multiple sclerosis research while broadening their own reading enjoyment and their general and specific interest. We are pleased to participate."

Anyone who wishes to sponsor a student or students may contact Sister Joan at St. Peter School or Pat Day at the Eastern North Carolina chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, 4109 Wake Forest Road, Raleigh, N.C. 27609. Pledges are due by Apr. 23.

Town Can Keep Its ZIP - For Awhile

LAKE CITY, Ga. (AP) — he U.S. Postal Service won't zap Lake City's ZIP code this year, signaling a truce in the 8-year-old war between Washington and Atlanta suburb 30252.

In 1974, City Clerk Alva Inman wrote the Atlanta postmaster to complain that Lake City's mail was being delivered to towns bearing that name in Florida, South Carolina, Arkansas, California, Illinois, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota and Pennsylvania.

"Our letters would go around the horn two or three times before they got here," said Mayor Harold Bevis.

"They told us we were not big enough to merit our own post office," Bevis said. "But they said they could give us a ZIP code that will give you your own identity."

But last week, post office spokesman Ron Denney said Lake City, a small Clayton County town of less than 3,000 people, should never have been given a ZIP code.

The post office was ready to begin notifying residents that their ZIP would be changed to 30260, the same as nearby Morrow's.

Denney said on Friday, however, the post office had changed its mind and Lake City residents can keep their ZIP code until early next year, when the whole nation will switch to nine-digit ZIP codes.

"In the meantime, we're not going to ask them to make any changes at all," he said.

Please specify your choice of the following color combinations: coffee, ecru and rust; paddy green, sea green and maize; or deep blue, light blue and white.

Two-or three-color slip-stitch patterns are great fun for the beginning or intermediate knitter, giving stunning effects with a minimum of skill required. These surprising pattern stitches make it appear that you have constantly alternated colors on every row, but you actually never work with more than one color on any given row.

If you have never tried this type of knitting, get out a pair of needles and some leftover yarns and experiment with the stitches that follow. When instructed to slip a stitch, insert the tip of the right needle into the first stitch on the left needle as if you were going to purl it. Don't wrap the yarn around the needle, however. Just slip it from the left to the right needle.

To try the Waffle Stitch, cast on any uneven number of stitches and with Color A knit all the stitches for the first two rows. For the third row, join in Color B and with it (knit 1 stitch, slip 1 stitch). Repeat the steps between parentheses all across the row to the last stitch, keeping the yarn at the back of your work all across; knit the last stitch. The fourth row is worked the same as the third row except that you bring the yarn to the front of your work — as you would do if you were purling a stitch — before each slip stitch and then take it to the back of your work before each knit stitch. Just repeat these four rows over and over for the desired length — that's all there is to it.

For a Single Waffle Check Stitch, cast on the same number of stitches and work the first four rows as described above. Then with Color A knit all stitches for the fifth and sixth rows. To work Row 7, (slip 1 stitch, knit 1 stitch) all across the row, slipping the last stitch. Row 8 is worked the same as Row 7, except that the yarn is held in front of the work for the slip stitches and at the back of the work for the knit stitches.

Still a third version is the Tweed Stitch in which every row after the foundation rows is a pattern stitch row. Cast on an even number of stitches and work at least two knit rows with Color A for the border or foundation, then work as follows: Row 1 — with Color A (with yarn in back, knit 1 stitch; bring yarn forward and slip 1 stitch) repeat steps within parentheses. For the second row, still using Color A (with yarn forward, purl 1 stitch; take yarn to back and slip 1 stitch). Repeat these two steps across the row. For the third and fourth rows, repeat Rows 1 and 2, but use Color B.

Because these stitches tend to compress more than most knit pattern stitches, you should usually use a needle two or three sizes larger than you would use with the same yarn for stockinette stitch. In other words, if you normally use a size 7 or 8 needle with knitting worsted weight yarn, try a size 10 or 11 for these slip stitch patterns.

The more experienced knitter with a good understanding of the relationship of gauge to fit will enjoy substituting these stitches for stockinette on basic garment patterns. The beginner will probably need to be satisfied with making squares or rectangles such as pillows, pot holders, scarves or afghans. But the beginner will probably be even more delighted than the "old pro" to learn how easy some types of "fancy" knitting can be.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

For years, men have been the peripatetic species and women the pathetic.

Traveling husbands whipped in and out of the house, stopping only to pack clean underwear and catch the next flight to Atlanta, while their wives faced a week of leftovers and single parenting.

Well, two funny things happened on the way to jet lag. After years of dropping their husbands off at the airport, a lot of women finally admitted they actually look forward to time by themselves.

In an unofficial poll among wives of husbands who travel, the women admitted they really like the single life occasionally. It was like a mini-vacation. They could relax, eat onions in bed, go on a diet and find their own space.

One woman said she felt like a child who could stay up as late as she wanted instead of having her husband yell, "Aren't you coming to bed?"

Another woman said at first it was lonely, then she realized she could go to movies which her husband hated, eat whenever she wanted to and have pizza for breakfast if she liked and not be tied down to a schedule.

The second funny thing that happened on the way to jet lag was a women's revolution where 3 percent of the women turned to the work force and now they're running for planes while their husbands stay at home.

And the men's reaction? It stinks. Ironically, it has nothing to do with the old cliche, "Absence Makes the Heartburn Stronger." They're just plain lonely.

One man complained, "I come home lonely. I wake up lonely. It's like walking into an empty theatre." Another one said, "I come home ready to talk and unload and there's no one there but my kid hanging on the phone."

What they're feeling is what women have been trying to tell them for years when they walk in the house and ask, "How was your day?" Loneliness takes getting used to. It's the most underrated disease in the world today, characterized by overeating and talking to the tropical fish, yet it's given about as much respect as the common cold.

But men can do it. Next time your wife is out of town, put on the raggy pajamas your wife wants to dust the piano with, get that fish out of the can that she says smells up the entire house. Then climb into bed and spread it on a box of crackers while you're propped up watching the all-night sports network of replays.

As for the garbage by the sink, tell it to take a walk!

Dear Abby

Mother's Advice Rings In Her Ear

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am a 22-year-old female and a college senior. I have lived alone in apartments for four years and have been self-supporting for a year and a half. (My parents are now supporting me while I finish college.)

My problem is that my mom wants me to call home long distance every day. If I have a problem, she can tell it in my voice, and she pesters me until I tell her about it — in detail. Then she gives me a lot of usually good — but unasked for — advice.

I appreciate her concern, but the result is that I don't solve even minor problems myself.

Mom also wants a recap of my entire day, which doesn't leave me much privacy. "Where did you go? Who did you see?" Until a month ago when I blew up and refused to continue, she insisted that I call her when I got home from every date so she'd know I was "all right." (She'd wait up.) If I didn't call by 12:30, she'd call me every 15 minutes until she reached me. If she couldn't reach me, she'd call my apartment manager.

I've tried to cut down on the calls, using the bills as an excuse, but she insists her peace of mind is worth every penny.

I've never given her any reason to mistrust me. I lead a very wholesome, quiet life.

I love my mother very much, but I need more time between calls to learn how to handle my own life alone. Help!

SMOTHERED BY LOVE

DEAR SMOTHERED: The problem appears to be your mother's. She needs to advise, direct and control you. For the good of both of you, lovingly suggest that she get professional help and stop trying to live your life. Even though she means well, she is stunting your emotional growth.

DEAR ABBY: As most people know, women live longer than their husbands, but do you know why? My doctor has advanced an interesting theory based on his studies in the medical profession.

Men die younger because of tension caused by lack of sex. It seems that wives, as they grow older, find many excuses to deprive their husbands of sex. Lack of sex causes tension buildup, which leads to strokes and heart attacks.

If wives want their husbands to live longer, they will give them lots of loving. I'm 68 and have already had one heart attack and I'm afraid it is my fate to have more. This letter may, however, cause some wives to have second thoughts.

LACKING LOVE AND HATING IT

DEAR LACKING LOVE: What about women who are also being deprived of sex? They are faced with the same "tension buildup" as men. There are many reasons why strokes and heart attacks occur in both men and women, and sexual frustration may contribute some, but I think your doctor's "theory" is too simplistic.

Travel Along with Janet Stoughton

"Circadian Biorythmicity" is the scientific name given to the lethargy which many travelers call jet lag. A closer look at these symptoms reveals that much of this feeling may be due to too much food and the wrong kind of drink. Here are some tips to minimize the problem. Do not feel compelled to eat every morsel of food set before you. If the captain warns of turbulence ahead, eat even less. Eating less will help you dose more easily. Above 35,000 feet, digestive processes are somewhat in a state of disarray. Forego rich foods as well. Decreased air pressure at this altitude expands the gas in soft drinks by 20%, and liquor is almost twice as potent.

Prisoners Need To Work

With the population of the prisons steadily increasing there has become more public concern over prisoners providing useful labor.

The thinking seems to be that the prisoners would be better off with their time occupied and the state would benefit from their labors in return for providing the prisoners care while they are incarcerated.

Older people recall the days when the saw prisoners regularly working on the roads and wonder where they all went. Some still work with the Department of Transportation but efficient equipment long ago eliminated some of the jobs that prisoners did.

That's not to say that prisoners don't work, however, and prison officials, aware of the criticism, are attempting to set the record straight about that.

Department of Corrections Secretary James C. Woodard has pointed out that 11,741 inmates in the North Carolina prison system are assigned to work or program activities. There are 16,123 prisoners in the system and 1,912 of these are new, segregated for special reasons or not able to work. Thus Woodard says the system has an 82.6 percent employment rate for the available prisoners.

Many of the prisoners do the traditional jobs — making license plates, repairing road signs, printing, making paint, yardwork, cooking and cleaning jobs. Others are on work release or in training programs for careers upon their release.

We would have to acknowlege it is not a bad record for the prison system. We hope efforts will continue to find jobs for all prisoners. Anything from cleaning trash from the highways to producing items that state agencies might need would be helpful work. It still holds that keeping prisoners busy is best for everyone.

War On Waste Is Launched

Here it comes . . . President Reagan has announced a panel of private citizens to identify waste and inefficiency in government.

He said it would be "the largest effort of its kind ever mounted to save tax dollars. We mean business and we intend to get results."

We hope so. If there is one thing that all shades of political thinking agree on, it is that there is considerable waste in government. If we can get it under control there is no doubt that the legitimate public needs of our nation can be met.

The problem is that it has been tried before with mediocre results. Perhaps the Reagan administration will do better . . . and certainly this is a start in that direction.

The Uncertain Key

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Last year's scurry for new or expanded industrial development left South Carolina with an ever-so-slight edge over North Carolina. When all the figures are beaten down to facts, it was something like $2.6 billion to $2.4 billion.

Bob Leake, who used to be North Carolina's chief industrial recruiter but is now beating the bushes for growth in South Carolina, accepted the situation philosophically.

He did not go about tooting a big horn and proclaiming that his new state is better and offers more than his old state. Nor, even that he is a better recruiter than those he left behind in North Carolina.

Candidly, Leake said he really doesn't know why it happened. There's no way to tell what will go into a decision by an industrialist to locate in one location or another in a given instance.

It can even be the weather, Leake said. It can be golf, sailing, an opera company or any number of other things as well.

Smuggling

Industry hunters can tell some fascinating stories about their forays into the industrial heartland of the nation seeking to woo and win growth and jobs for North Carolina.

There's the important space-age firm in a New England state, for example, who sent a team of location people on the Governor's plane to ride around in the Governor's car and eat from the Governor's table.

Before winging back to the cold northland, they paid a call at one of North Carolina's famous cigarette outlets and stocked up with not just a carton or two apiece, but dozens. And so the North Carolina State Airplane carried the industrialists home with their tax-free booty.

A few months later, with no location decision having been made by the firm, contact was re-established. The chief decisionmakers needed to take another close look at North Carolina, it seems, and they wanted to make certain that they could hit a cigarette outlet on the way to the airport.

Northing doing, state industry hunters told them. You've had your look at North Carolina, so make up your minds without another cigarette boot-legging haul. The firm didn't relocate.

What do the experts try to find when hunting an industrial site?

With the tight money, high interest, inflated building cost situation in existence, a prime requisite is an existing building which can be adapted for a new use.

Times when new industrial neighbors bought sprawling acres of Tar Heel landscape with an eye to future expansion, and decorated the tract with all sorts of gardens, parks, recreation and ancilary facilities is probably a thing of the past.

Cut Costs

You will see lots of neat buildings going up on industrial park property where adequate parking and urban services like streets, water and sewer are close at hand, so there is a minimum of investment. And many others can be found nestled close upon an Interstate Highway ramp.

Services and transit, then, are among the most important things for a location specialist. Then there is the all-important matter of reaching the market. The location must provide quick and easy access to the places where goods will be sold and resold.

Pondering The Budget

WASHINGTON — Critics of President Reagan's budget for 1983 seem to be voicing two principal complaints — first, that further cuts in social programs are unbearable, and second, that the prospective deficit is intolerable. Neither complaint has merit.

To listen to the agonized cries from the liberal left, one might suppose that the president had no purpose in mind but to grind the faces of the poor — that he advocates starvation, illiteracy, rotting teeth, and the mass eviction of elderly couples from their humble abodes. Mr. Reagan is being depicted as a cruel and heartless monster who delights in slashing, destroying, undermining and hitting hard. A contributor to the editorial page of The Wall Street Journal charges that the president's budget "makes it clear that the needs of our poorest people are his least concern."

Suppose we look at the figures. The food stamp program provides a useful example. The program got off the ground in 1965 with an outlay of $35.6 million. By 1970 the outlay was $577 million. As recently as 1975, which was not so very long ago, food stamps cost the taxpayers $4.7 billion. In 1980, just two fiscal years ago, the program topped $9 billion. For 1983, Mr. Reagan proposes $10.3 billion.

Some of this mind-boggling increase of course is owing to inflation. In constant dollars, the growth is not quite so alarming. But when that factor has been fully discounted, a program of phenomenal dimensions still remains. More than 19 million persons will be receiving food stamps under the president's "slashed" and "heartless" recommendation.

JAMES J. KILPATRICK

Housing subsidies provide another example. In 1977, just five fiscal years ago, federal outlays for housing assistance came to $3 billion. For 1983 Mr. Reagan proposes housing assistance of $8.9 billion. If this is cruelty, it is a curious kind of cruelty.

Are the elderly being tossed to the wolves? In 1978, just four fiscal ycars ago, Social Security, Medicare and other programs amounted to $103.9 billion. For 1983 these same benefits would amount to $209.6 billion. On down the road, in 1987, the benefits are fixed at $283.3 billion. The Office of Management and Budget asserts that the average elderly couple, retiring next year, stands to receive $15,700 in tax-free benefits. Would the president's critics provide vastly more?

Look. The most dismaying aspect of this criticism lies in what it tells us about ourselves. We have drifted a long way from the old moorings — from self-reliance, local responsibility, the virtues of can-do and make-do. Whole generations of middle-income Americans used to get their higher education without guaranteed loans and Pell grants. There was a time, and it wasn't so long ago, when our people survived without 95 million subsidized meals every day. To the extent that Mr. Reagan's budget nudges us back toward the old initiatives, the budget ought to be praised and not condemned.

The 1983 deficit is estimated at $92 billion. It probably will be higher. Congress has a high obligation to reduce the figure by selective tax increases and by further cuts in spending — including defense spending. But to cry that a $92 billion deficit is "intolerable" is to lose a sense of perspective. The sum represents about 3.1 percent of our gross national product, not greatly beyond the 2.9 percent of 1977 and 1980 and much lower than the 4.5 percent of 1976. As a percentage of total federal spending, the prospective deficit is less than we somehow tolerated in 1975 and 1976.

None of this is to say that Mr. Reagan's budget is cast in stone. It is arguable that in some areas, he is attempting to cut too much too soon for

No Refusal From Haig

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Zbigniew Brzezinski, having refused to appear opposite Soviet Central Committee spokesman Stanislav Menshikov on ABC's Sunday interview show, was flabbergasted to see Secretary of State Alexander Haig answering Menshikov's criticisms of U.S. foreign policy.

Brzezinski, national security adviser in the Carter White House, felt it would be "demeaning" for a former major foreign-policy-maker to appear on the same program with a second-level Soviet propagandist on American television. Menshikov's exposure to American viewers, he felt, would be given additional weight by the presence of a well-known U.S. statesman.

ABC's David Brinkley went to Haig when Brzezinski turned down his invitation. Haig, just back from his European trip, accepted. Haig performed well when he followed Menshikov (who was beamed via satellite from Moscow), but that did not change Brzezinski's distaste for such an unequal bill-sharing. He felt Haig should appear jointly only with his counterpart, Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, or some other senior Soviet official.

Rebellious Republicans

Rebellious Republican congressmen became so upset with the Reagan administration that they deputized Republican National Committee chairman Richard Richards to spell out their grievances at the White House Feb. 17 in a private session with chief of staff James Baker III.

Richards reiterated a familiar complaint the past year from Republicans on Capitol Hill: inadequate access to the White House and no impact on filling presidential appointments. But Richards most stressed the complaint of the lawmakers that they have no part of the policy-making process — particularly on the new budget.

The president's men were not impressed. They see the complaints as signs not of White House failure but of congressional nervousness about the currently poor state of the economy and the dangers that poses for them at the polls in November.

Weinberger's Non-Statement

The "top official" traveling with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in the Middle East who mortally offended Israel by calling for "redirecting" U.S. policy toward the Arabs was not Weinberger, but Assistant Defense Secretary Francis (Bing) West.

Weinberger, loyal to his own men, declined to target West as the culprit. He ordered his associates not to name west, and took the heat for the offending word himself.

All this does not mean that Weinberger is against shifting the U.S. to a more even-handed Mideast policy, taking equal account of both the moderate Arab states and Israel. That is Weinberger's policy, shared by many other Reagan administration officials — but not, as yet, by Reagan or Secretary of State Alexander Haig. Nor does Weinberger worry about becoming Israel's enemy No. 1.

Tower's Warning

Sen. John Tower, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has issued this private warning to budget director David Stockman: Don't try to "back channel" President Reagan's new defense budget.

Tower, a Senate workhorse on all defense issues, is not by nature an angry man. But he has made clear to high White House officials that he will react harshly if Stockman, by innuendo or suggestion, gives an assist of his own to opponents of the new defense budget.

Nevertheless, Stockman seems determined to do just that. Admittedly under heavy defense-reduction pressure from both parties on Capitol Hill, Stockman is tossing off invitations to cut by saying the administration has an open mind on the Pentagon budget. That hints at an early confrontation with Tower, if the senator takes his case against "back channeling" directly to the president.

New Jersey's Senator

Prominent Republican senators are hinting to Gov.

Strength For Today

WHERE GARDENS SPRING UP

We are told in the Gospel of John that in the place where Christ was crucified there was a garden.

Think of the incongruity of this situation. While murder was being perpetrated on the Lord of all life, flowers were growing so near to the cross, perhaps, that his crimson blood trickled down and soaked the ground about the roots.

And yet, it is not so incongruous after all. Let a person suffer for a good cause, or renounce self and live for others, and beauty begins to spring up everywhere about him. We give up something we hold very dear, and find that God compensates us in a measure by making our life richer as a result of the denial. That is our garden. It grows at the foot of our cross, as it grew at the foot of Christ's cross.

Life's crucifixions are sometimes terrible, but if we have the eyes to see, always there is a garden growing just adjacent. — Elisha Douglass

To the editor:

It disappoints me that the East Carolina University Symphony Orchestra performs an outstanding children's concert annually for students in the Greenville City Schools, but that students in the Pitt County Schools do not have the opportunity to share in this experience.

The music performed in this program is specifically directed toward young people. Demonstrations of various instruments, particularly sound effects, and popular arrangements of well known tunes highlight the day.

It is regrettable that only once in the 14-year history of these concerts have students in the Pitt County Schools been permitted to participate in this culturally enlightening program.

To the editor:

Evidently there are a lot of people in our fair city and county that don't know there are laws protecting animals. I am referring to those insensitive and uncaring people who hit animals with their cars or trucks and keep on going.

I have just buried another one of my much-loved cats. I realize animals and especially cats and dogs are famous for staying on roads. I also realize people cannot help but hit an animal at times.

I would once again like to enlighten the folks of Greenville and surrounding areas. There is a state law — Statute No. 20-166-B — that states a hit and run driver can be fined and/or imprisoned up to two years, if caught.

Most of you people, if you hit a person, you would stop and try to help that person or you would try and find where that person lived or if they had family. Why can't you give a helpless animal the same consideration. Most of the time the injured animal belongs to someone who loves him or her.

If anyone sees a hit and run, please try and get the license number and let the proper authorities know. Laws are made for animals, as well as for people.

Small Business Is Struggling

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Wrung out by falling demand and high interest rates, small business last fall dropped workers at a rate unmatched in at least eight years. It was a last resort in order to remain alive.

What that meant was the breakup of home construction crews, the pink slip to long-time employees who had become part of the family, the sad news to the apprentice who had been taken on in hopes of better times.

Small business had hit bottom. For seven of the past eight quarters the employment picture had deteriorated, and some improvement finally was foreseen, because fourth quarters often are times of job increases.

In the fourth quarter of 1981, however, employment plunged. A survey by the Federation of Independent Business shows 22 percent of firms with an average of five employees had employent declines.

Now, says the federation in its latest report, there may be some good news not just for those seeking jobs in small businesses but for the entire economy. The number of small firms planning to raise employment in the current quarter is on the rise, says Professor William Dunkelberg.

Dunkelberg, Purdue University economist, and Jonathan Scott of Southern Methodist University, have completed an analysis of the latest reports from 2,322 of the federation's half-million members. They found:

—"The proportion of firms planning further employment reductions in the first quarter dropped drmatically form a record high 15 percent in October to 10 percent in January."

—In the same period, "the percentage of firms planning increased employment rose from 10 percent to 14 percent of the firms."

This, they point out, has more signifigance than you might think, because "historically, these figures have accurately predicted actual changes in employment for the economy as a whole."

There is an explanation for this. Small business, they maintain, is the source of most long-term employment growth. No, not big concerns. Small ones, mainly those with far less than $25 million in sales.

More than 80 percent of jobs created during the period 1969-1976 were by firms with 100 employees or fewer, they note, apparently drawing on an MIT study that has been the source of several other reports, all of which emphasize the germinal economic role of small business.

Big business employs great masses of people, but it doesn't grow at nearly the same rate as does small business. It is, some say, far less creative, innovative, adaptable. It seems to be less sensitive to the marketplace, less swift to discover and exploit new opportunities

Small business, so goes the argument, is in the trenches, on the front line of battle, making hard-nosed decisions based on the immediate, pressing realities, rather than on distant, theoretical judgements.

During the fourth-quarter of 1981, the professors found, there were few private-sector job openings. Only 11 percent reported any openings at all, and almost all of those were for skilled workers.

But some of the same respondents who had said last October that they were going to reduce their work forces, and then did so, reported in January that they were ready to put on workers again in this quarter.

Nothing is certain in making economic projections. To begin with, we do not even understand many of the factors we use, a grim realization inflicted painfully on President Reagan and at least 5,000 economists.

Small-business people, however, have a very practical rather than theoretical understanding of their material — survival instincts and understandings you might trace back to mankind's more primitive days.

They could be reading the signals incorrectly. They do not, after all, control interest rates, which have banrupted many of them before.

But their hiring plans still might be as good an economic indicator as any we have. And those hiring plans seem to be aimed higher.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — Showers are expected in the forecast period, Tuesday until Wednesday morning, from east Texas to the Midwest. Snow is forecast from the upper Midwest to Minnesota, the Great Lakes and across Pennsylvania and Delaware. Cold weather is forecast for north-central states. The Southeast will be mild. (AP Laserphoto)

By The Associated Press

A large high pressure system centered over the southeastern states gave North Carolina clear skies and cool temperatures overniht. Readings ranged from the upper 20s in some mountain areas and the northern Piedmont to the 30s across the rest of the state.

Today, the high was expected to drift southeast, allowing the area wind flow to become more southwesterly. As a result, the mercury will climb into the 60s in most areas this afternoon under sunny skies.

Readings will be a bit cooler in the northeastern corner of the state, along the Outer Banks, and in the northern mountains.

Far to our west, a low pressure system was gradually taking shape over the southern plains. An associated frontal system stretched northeast through the Great Lakes into Canada. A strong high pressure system over the prairie provinces of Canada will push southeast tonight forcing the front to move through the Ohio Valley into the Middle Atlantic region.

By early Wednesday morning, the front will extend from the northeastern corner of North Carolina westward to the middle Mississippi Valley. There it will join the southern great plains low as that storm begins to move into the Midwest.

Yet another front will trail southward from the low into Texas. As the Middle Atlantic front dips into northeastern North Carolina tonight, clouds will form. Fair weather will prevail elsewhere.

As the low over the Mississippi Valley moves northeast Wednesday, it will pull the front back to the north and keep most of the state in a mild southwest wind flow. Western North Carolina will have an increase in cloudiness during the day as the southward trailing cold front moves through Tennessee.

Only isolated showers are expected there since very little moisture will be available.

Recreational weather outlook: Today is going to be a good day for most outdoor activities in North Carolina. Skies will be sunny and temperatures will be several degrees warmer than those of Monday. Highs are going to be in the 60s in most areas. Slightly cooler weather will continue along the Outer Banks, in the northeastern corner of the state and in the northern mountains.

Fair skies are on tap tonight except for partly cloudy conditions in the northeast. Lows will be in the 40s. Mild weather is going to continue Wednesday under partly cloudy skies. Afternoon highs will range from the 50s in the northeast and northern mountains to near 70 in the south.

Along the coast, Winds will be westerly today at speeds of 10 to 20 mph. Tonight and Wednesday southwest winds are going to be the rule except for northeasterly breezes along the north coast.

Thomas Kean of New Jersey that he should fill the Senate vacancy about to be created by the expulsion of Democratic senator Harrison Williams with a seat-warmer who would agree to serve only until the Nov. 2 election.

That would relieve Kean of the task of picking between the two main announced candidates for the Republican nomination. Kean would prefer conservative Jeffrey Bell, but liberal Rep. Millicent Fenwick has a long lead over Bell in the polls. Prominent senators advise that the tough Senate votes to be faced this summer would benefit neither Bell nor Fenwick during the campaign. The best guess to be seatwarmer: expresentative Peter Frelinghuysen.

Senatorial advice to name a seat-warmer is low-keyed. But the Senate Republican leadership has made it clear to Kean in no uncertain terms that it feels he would make a horrendous mistake to leave the Senate seat unfilled until after the June 8 primary.

A reliable, trainable labor force is also a major element. Hardly any importance is attached to state or local taxes since corporations find those taxes about even wherever they look regardless of the different scales and names attached to the taxes. The key thing is whether they get something in return — reliable service.

After that, decisions may hinge on whether the chief executive likes golf or horses. Or whether a good college for the children is nearby.

Will Resume Titanic Hunt

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The search for the British liner Titantic, which struck an iceberg in the North Atlantic and sank on its maiden voyage in 1912, is expected to be resumed in the summer of 1983, says an official involved in the expedition.

The multi-million dollar search was financed and launched during the past two summers by Texas oilman Jack Grimm.

The work in 1980 and 1981 was concentrated in a 300-square-mile area that statistics had pinpointed as the best spot to look, said Arthur L. Markel, who is involved in the expedition as senior project manager and representative of Reynolds International Services Inc. of Richmond.

Though the area has been scanned by sonar and the Titanic has not been found, Markel still believes "there is a 99.9 percent probability that the ship is still there and we simply have missed her."

For nearly 18 years, Markel has been captain of the Aluminaut, the first aluminum submarine, a vessel that can dive 15,000 feet. If Grimm's team finds the Titanic — believed to have sunk in 12,000 to 14,000 feet of water — Markel will dive to examine the ship.

Wayne Williams Denies Knowing Either Of Victims

By DAVID PACE
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Wayne B. Williams told jurors in his murder trial today that he didn't know either of the two young blacks he is accused of killing.

The 23-year-old black freelance photographer took the stand in his own behalf after hearing his ailing mother call him a "100 percent American boy" who got into the music business as a way to help black youngsters and keep them off the streets.

Williams said he was "scared" about testifying at the trial, now in its ninth week.

"I don't know them. I've never seen them before in my life," said Williams of the two men he is charged with murdering.

Faye Williams, the defendant's 64-year-old mother, a retired teacher who has been bedridden with cancer for long periods since 1980, supported her husband's testimony that green carpeting in their home was purchased in 1968, two years before prosecutors contend it was manufactured.

The carpeting is the major part of the fiber evidence used by prosecutors to link Williams to 12 slain young blacks. Prosecutors contend the carpet was of a rare type manufactured only in the early 1970s, and witnesses testified that fibers found on the bodies of the victims matched fibers from the Williams carpet.

Williams, 23, is charged with murdering Nathaniel Cater, 27, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21, two of 28 young blacks whose deaths since July 1979 were investigated by a special police task force. Prosecutors have introduced evidence in 10 other slayings in an attempt to show a pattern of killings related to the Cater and Payne deaths.

Mrs. Williams said she was home with her son until after midnight on May 21, 1981, the night a prosecution witness testified he saw Williams holding hands with Cater outside a downtown theater.

She said her son had an upset stomach and stayed home until shortly after midnight, when he left to go pick up a tape recorder and to locate the address of a singer he planned to audition.

Mrs. Williams brought scrapbooks to describe for the jury her son's upbringing and his interests and goals in life.

Mrs. Williams said she was 41 when her only child was born. "He wasn't planned, he was our miracle child," she said.

"He was a fun-loving, 100 percent American boy, although his interests leaned toward adults because he was only around his mother and father except for his playmates," she said, adding she never saw him commit a violent act.

Her son became interested in the music business because "he wanted to work with young people, to try to develop (singing) groups, because he thought the black music field was playing out and he felt new talent had to be developed. He also saw it as a way of helping to keep our youth busy and to keep some of them out of the streets."

Mrs. Williams said she never heard her son say anything derogatory about his race. Prosecution witnesses said Williams used racial slurs to describe poor black youngsters.

Before Mrs. Williams took the stand today, Judge Clarence Cooper refused to allow defense lawyers to question a police officer about a man the attorneys say was a suspect in the killings of young blacks.

Defense attorney Mary Welcome told Cooper that police had information the man pretended to be an FBI agent, picked up children and had killed several children. She said the purpose of the testimony was to show that, despite this information, police did not search the man's residence, as they did Williams' before his arrest.

Prosecutors argued the testimony would be irrelevant.

Williams came to the attention of authorities early May 22, when he was stopped by police staking out the Chattahoochee River bridge. An officer under the bridge reported hearing a loud splash in the river. Prosecutors contend Williams had dumped Cater's body in the river.

Ex-Air Officer Freed In Secrets Sale

By ROBERT CULLEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Christopher Cook, the Titan missile officer accused by the Air Force of divulging vital defense secrets to the Soviet Union, is a free civilian today. He even has his back pay and allowances.

Cooke was given an "other than honorable discharge" and released from the stockade at Fort Meade, Md., Monday after the Court of Military Appeals ruled that the Air Force had violated his rights to due process.

Leaving Fort Meade, Cooke avoided reporters. His brother Matthew, reached at the family home near Richmond, Va., said the 26-year-old former second lieutenant would be spending the next few weeks with friends in New York in order to avoid the press.

Under military law, the Court of Military Appeals is the highest tribunal, and the Air Force acknowledged that it had no way to appeal the decision.

The Defense Department, in a brief statement, noted that the Justice Department was still investigating the possibility of prosecuting Cooke in a civilian court.

Associate Attorney Gen. Rudolph Giuliani, asked about the department's intentions, said no decision has been made. "We haven't given any thought to it."

Speaking privately, Justice Department attorneys have said that the Air Force's handling of Cooke's case irreparably destroyed the chance that any branch of the federal government can prosecute him.

But F. Lee Bailey, Cooke's attorney, said his client had good reason to remain reticent because anything he said in an interview, or wrote in a book, might still be used against him. Cooke's immunity from prosecution applies only to what he told the Air Force during an interrogation, Bailey said.

The Court of Military Appeals, in a 2-1 decision, said that the legal officer who supervised the case, Brig. Gen. Claude Teagarden, had failed to meet the "minimum standard of professional conduct" in handling the case.

Teagarden, the staff judge advocate, or chief counsel, for the Strategic Air Command said through an Air Force spokesman Monday that he would have no comment on the decision.

The court said Cooke and his Air Force defense attorney had properly relied on an oral promise from Teagarden that Cooke would not be prosecuted if he told Air Force investigators everything about his relations with the Soviet Union and verified the statement with a lie detector test.

Cooke complied with the offer as he understood it, making a statement and passing a lie detector test to verify it. An Air Force officer who read the statement, Maj. Gen. Andrew Pringle, said he concluded, "We've got a traitor on our hands."

Teagarden now insists that he never offered Cooke such a broad grant of immunity. He says he offered immunity only if Cooke took a lie detector test which proved he had not been involved in espionage.

But Teagarden, aware that Cooke was cooperating under the assumption that he had immunity, did nothing to correct the officer's misconception. This, the court found, violated the basic standards of prosecutorial behavior and justified Cooke's petition for dismissal of the charges.

The Air Force has never specified exactly what Cooke told the Soviets. His verified statement, termed a "confession" in appeals court Judge Albert Fletcher's opinion, is classified.

The Titan II missile on which Cooke worked is 20 years old and obsolete. The Pentagon has announced plans to scrap the 54 remaining in service.

Believe Gang Warfare In N.C. Is Intensifying

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Warfare between rival motorcycle gangs in the Chrlotte area may be intensifying, Charlotte police said after investigating an apparent attempted bombing and a shooting over the weekend.

A Charlotte police sergeant who asked not to be identified attributed the apparent attempt to bomb a former Hell's Angels bar and the shooting at a house of gang associates to rivalry between the Hell's Angels and the Outlaws.

"I suspect this will all lead to more fighting amongst themselves," he said.

Bobby Marshall, supervisor of the Charlotte bureau of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, said Milton D. Anthony, 24, a member of the rival Outlaws motorcycle gang, apparently intended to blow up the now-vacant Tom Thumb Grill on Sunday morning.

However, the homemade bomb — believed to consist of dynamite and a timing device — exploded about 5 a.m. as Anthony crouched over it about 15 yards behind the club, authorities said.

Marshall said federal or local charges against Anthony are being considered, but said agents are waiting to see if his condition improves.

As of Monday, no charges had been filed.

Anthony, who required 12 hours of surgery, was in critical but stable condition Monday at a Charlotte hospital. He lost part of both hands and part of a leg, his eyes, and suffered severe head injuries.

Anthony, an ex-Marine and martial arts expert, is a self-described spokesman for the Charlotte chapter of the Outlaws.

Police said the bombing may have been intended as a warning to the Hell's Angels, because the place is up for sale and there was only a guard dog in the building at the time.

On Saturday, several automatic rifle shots were fired into a home on Avalon Avenue at about 3:45 a.m., wounding Ronda Jo Mankin, 24, as she sat with two other women and two men in the living room.

Ms. Mankin, who was shot in the shoulder, was listed in satisfactory and stable condition Monday in Charlotte Memorial Hospital. None of the other occupants was injured.

Police found no ammunition casings around the home, leading to speculation the shots were fired from a vehicle. Police say they have no suspects.

A police sergeant said all five are Hell's Angels associates.

Police said the rivalry is believed to involve massage parlor operations and illegal drug traffic in the Charlotte area. They said the rivalry has been a factor in the slayings of several members of both gangs in the past 2½ years.

Ex-College Prof Is Said Top Terrorist

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The defense minister said today that a former college president is the suspected leader of an alleged new group of Communist urban guerrillas.

Juan Ponce Enrile said Nemesio Prudente, former president of the Philippine College of Commerce in downtown Manila, is now the object of a military search.

Prudente, one of the Philippines' leading academicians, was jailed briefly after President Ferdinand E. Marcos proclaimed martial law in 1972. Marcos lifted martial law last year.

The alleged guerrilla group, dubbed the "Guerilla Anak Pawis Sa Kalunsuran" — Guerrillas of the Urban Working Class — has been blamed by the military for the killing of six soldiers and policemen in Manila's suburbs since its alleged formation last October.

Enrile, in a Defense Ministry communique, said the group represents the third faction of the splintered Philippine Communist Party. One faction is Maoist-oriented while another is pro-Soviet.

"They (the Prudente group) do not pose a great danger to the state at this time and we are treating the group just like a group of ordinary criminals," Enrile said.

Four alleged members of the group were recently arrested by the military after a shootout with police, and one of them identified Prudente as the man who provided them with firearms, Enrile said.

Basic Changes In N.C. Assembly Likely To Result

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The full implications are still to be seen, but two rulings by the North Carolina Supreme Court appear likely to foretell fundamental changes for the General Assembly, legal experts say.

Initial reaction to the pair of decisions has been that the court rapped the legislature's knuckles and said it had gone too far — intruding on the executive branch by placing its own members on policymaking commissions and by trying to limit the governor's budget authority.

"The Supreme Court is being a very strict constructionist on the whole separation of powers issue," said Gerry Cohen, head of the legislature's bill-writing staff. "Separation means separation means separation."

Attorney General Rufus Edmisten sent word over the weekend that the first decision last month means legislators will have to give up their seats on scores of boards with executive duties. And even legislative leaders agreed that the powerful Advisory Budget Commission, often accused of blurring the line between the legislative and executive branches to suit both, was in for an overhaul.

"There's 25 or more statutes giving the ABC different powers, accumulated over probably 50 years," said House Speaker Liston Ramsey. "I'm of the belief that there's 20 or more that won't hold water."

Interviews with legal experts who have been closely watching developments say the implications may prove to be even broader. They say the firmness of the court's decisions may:

— Prompt the legislature to hold more frequent and longer sessions, perhaps making last year's unique October budget session a regular event to review federal aid.

— Lead it to create new legislative committees overseeing how agencies operate, since the court appears to have said legislators cannot serve on policymaking boards themselves.

— Lead legislators to search for other ways to assert control over the budget, perhaps by going into more detail on department spending when they enact a state budget.

— Perhaps even place a small brake on a recent trend toward concentrating power in the hands of a few House and Senate leaders, some of whom are virtual professional legislators remaining in Raleigh when the rest of the General Assembly has gone home.

Legislative leaders and Gov. Jim Hunt have reacted cautiously, with Hunt stressing that he'll continue to cooperate and consult with legislators.

But legal experts seemed to agree that the court outlined a separation-of-powers doctrine that will prove to be a landmark case.

"The legislature has been increasing its power ever since a Republican governor was elected," observed Ran Coble, executive director of the North Carolina Center for Public Policy Research.

"They've found things that they like, such as putting legislators on executive commissions, and this decision sort of stops that trend," he added. "They've been trying to move toward more and more control — over the budget and over executive rules."

The first decision held it an unconstitutional encroachment on the executive branch for the General Assembly to place some of its own members on a policymaking executive board. The decision threw into question the constitutionality of legislators on as many as 90 similar panels.

A separate case, but rooted in the same type of assertion of power by the legislature, brought an advisory opinion saying the legislature violated the separation of powers and encroached on the governor's authority when it sought to expand its control over the budget.

But the court appeared to answer more than legislators and the governor had asked. It ruled that regardless of whether the legislature had power over federal block grants, it could not delegate its authority to a committee of legislative leaders.

That decision could have broad implications for boards like the budget commission and the Governmental Operations Commission, both of which include the most powerful Democratic legislators who have been given wide duties to speak for the legislature when it isn't in session.

"Legislative oversight appears to be legitimate and likely to be stepped up," said Coble. "What they can't do is put the final decision power in the hands of a few legislators."

"That may cause more frequent sessions and longer ones, and maybe more detail in the appropriations bill," said one legislative staff lawyer, asking not to be named. "Since the legislature can't delegate to a committee, it's probably going to want to go into more detail itself."

Car Bombs Kill 12 In Moslem West Beirut

By TOM BALDWIN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Two cars packed with explosives blew up in an outdoor market in mostly Moslem West Beirut today, and police sources said 12 people were killed and 40 wounded, including schoolchildren.

Witnesses said the first car bomb went off at 1:20 p.m., drawing crowds to the scene. Ten minutes later a second car exploded near the crowd, apparently accounting for most of the casualties.

The blasts set off a huge fire that trapped people in flaming ruins, and the police sources said the casualty figure could rise.

Beirut state television said a hitherto unknown group calling itself the "Holy Struggle Organization" claimed responsibility.

But a Western news agency in Beirut said it received a telephone call from a group which calls itself the "Front for the Liberation of Lebanon for Foreigners," also claiming responsibility.

It said the group threatened to "continue a series of operations mostly in Lebanon and abroad until April 28." It did not elaborate and the significance of the date could not be determined.

The front is believed to be right-wing and has said in previous communiques that it wants to rid Lebanon of foreigners, an apparent reference to Palestinians and Syrians.

Scores of ambulances raced to and from the seafront Rawche district where the bombs went off while militiamen fired automatic weapons into the air to clear away traffic.

Some of the wounded were youngsters caught walking or riding buses home from school through the usually overcrowded shopping area.

Associated Press reporter Scheherezade Faramarzi, who happened to be at the scene of the blasts, said the bomb-laden cars were parked on the side of the road and that several other cars were set afire.

"There is so much smoke you can't breathe," she said.

A thick pall of smoke rose above the capital shortly after the two explosions, which were heard throughout the city.

It was the first car bombing in West Beirut this year after a string of car bombings last year. A total of 18 bombings in Beirut between September and December last year claimed more than 200 lives.

London Times Still Alive, But No Deal

LONDON (AP) — The Times of London was alive and reporting the news today, and publisher Rupert Murdoch was quoted as saying he is optimistic he won't have to close the famous daily and its sister Sunday Times because of heavy financial losses.

Ten hours of talks with union leaders Monday failed to produce agreement on Murdoch's demand for sweeping layoffs to save money.

But afterward, Murdoch announced he was abandoning his Tuesday deadline for shutting the papers and firing 210 clerical workers.

The Times reported in its own front-page story that the "immediate threat of closure is lifted."

Murdoch was quoted by the afternoon newspaper The Standard as saying: "I am very optimistic about the future...We have already had a lot of movement from the unions."

The dismissals — with two weeks' notice and "on the basis of last in, first out," Murdoch said — are just under a third of the 671 staff in the clerical departments. The total full-time payroll at both newspapers is 2,600. The Times quoted Murdoch as saying the clericals are the "most grossly overmanned areas in the industry."

Arthur Brittenden, director of corporate relations for Murdoch's News International Ltd., Said he hoped there would be no more firings.

"The intention is to carry on talking with unions to discuss cutbacks," he said. "We are still hoping to reach deals with the unions."

The publisher said the reduction in the work force was necessary because the papers had lost $27.8 million in the year since he bought them from Lord Thomson of Fleet.

No Punishment Of Controllers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration has decided not to punish about 1,000 air traffic controllers who went on strike last year but heeded President Reagan's call to return to work, a Department of Transportion spokeswoman said Monday night.

Investigating Theft At Home

Property valued at nearly $4,500, including some $1,040 in smoked country hams, was stolen from a Route 2, Robersonville, home over the weekend, according to Pitt Sheriff Ralph Tyson.

He said Pitt and Martin County deputies were investigating the incident at the Foye Rogerson home, located on the Pitt-Martin line on N.C. 903.

Tyson said Rogerson reported the theft of 23 country hams from a barn on the property, 300 assorted animal traps valued at $1,500, approximately 100 animal hides valued at $1,500 from a freezer, a chain saw valued at $180, and six stands of lard valued at $120.

Rogerson reported the incident at 9:33 a.m. Monday, according to the sheriff.

Frightened By Break-In

The Pitt County Sheriff's Department today was investigating a break-in early Monday afternoon at a Route 7, Greenville, home that saw a frightened babysitter flee with a small child to a neighboring residence for help.

Sheriff Ralph Tyson said the babysitter at the Sammy Robertson home in the Lake Glenwood section east of Greenville fled with the child after someone cut a screen on the rear of the house and entered the Robertson residence.

Tyson said the sitter, Barbara Dudley of 233 Fairway Drive, was upset by the incident and was transported by the local rescue unit to Pitt County Memorial Hospital, where she was admitted. He said deputies hoped to talk with Ms. Dudley today about the incident.

No one was hurt, Tyson said, but the intruder rifled through the contents of three rooms in the house and also went through the sitter's pocketbook, scattering the contents on the floor. He said the Robertsons, who were at work in Tarboro when the incident took place, have not yet determined if anything is missing from their home.

He said the next-door neighbors of the Robertsons reported the incident after Ms. Dudley fled to their house. The Sheriff's Department received the call at 2:15 p.m., he said.

Mason Gets Revenge, Guns Down ECU

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

George Mason — a team with revenge on its mind — blistered the Minges Coliseum nets on 11 of its first 12 shots from the floor last night and went on to record a 70-57 win over East Carolina's Pirates.

The defeat, the third in a row for ECU, closed out the 1981-82 home season for the Pirates, who slip to 10-14 overall — and are insured of a second straight losing season.

The Pirates are also now 2-6 in the ECAC-South, and tied with Mason for sixth place in the standings. Mason climbed to 12-12 overall.

And the game also increased the likelihood that the Pirates will now finish in last place in the conference standings. ECU has two games left to play, Wednesday at Richmond and Saturday at William & Mary. Mason has only one league game left, against W&M. ECU must win at least one of the two remaining games to escape the cellar — both of them should Mason win its final league game.

The win was a sweet one for the Patriots, who earlier lost on their home court, 66-64, when Tony Byles hit two free throws after time ran out.

"They ran a new offense tonight. Not a new one that we hadn't seen, but one we hadn't seen them run," Coach Dave Odom said. "That helped to give them too many open shots in the first half. We made an adjustment in the second half, but when you're that far back, it's tough to come all the way back.

"Considering the hole we dug ourselves into, we did a good job of coming back."

The Pirates, down by 15 at the half, rallied several times, and closed to as little as five with 2:15 left to play. But they could get no closer.

George Mason, sparked by the play of guard Andy Bolden and center Andre Gaddy, hit through nine of nine free throws and 15 of 20 field goals in the first half as it forged the lead that led to the victory. During the first 13 minutes, they made 11 of 12 shots before missing three in a row. That helped to build the lead out to 15 points, 29-14.

East Carolina, in the meanwhile, couldn't seem to find the range and shot after shot was just short or overly long. That led to only a 33.3 percentage in the first half for the Pirates, as compared to GMU's 75 percent.

Mason was only slightly cooler in the second half and didn't try nearly as hard, putting it up only 13 times, scoring on eight of those for 61.5 percent and a total of 69.7 percent for the game.

East Carolina, in attempting to rally, shot 50 percent in the second half, but that warmed them up to only 41.4 for the game.

Mason also outrebounded the Pirates, who again seemed to see the ball slip through their hands time after time. Mason ended up with a 29-21 edge in rebounding, led by Mike Shannon's nine and Bolden's eight.

ECU's floor play was better as they turned it over only ten times, while Mason had 20.

Carlos Yates and Bolden both hit to get Mason into a 4-0 lead, and the Pirates never caught up. They stuck close, however, matching baskets over the next few minutes until three baskets and four free throws by the Patriots ran the lead out to 12, 20-8, with 11:51 showing.

East Carolina inched it back to eight, 22-14, but a basket by Gaddy, a three-pointer by Shannon and another shot by Gaddy ran it out to 15. The lead eventually reached 17, 39-22, before the Pirates cut it back to 15 at intermission, 39-24.

Herb Gilchrist hit to open the second half for ECU, and Bruce Peartree added two more baskets to cut it back to nine, but that was as close as the Pirates could get for a while.

Finally, however, baskets by Michael Gibson and Gilchrist cut it back to five, 49-44, before Yates hit a jumper and Gaddy added a three-pointer to run it back out to ten.

The Pirates twice struggled back to within five, the last time at 56-51 before George Mason used the foul line to hold off the Pirates.

Mason, in fact, went to a keep-away game with about 11 minutes left, scoring 13 of its last 21 points at the stripe.

Mason finished the game with one less field goal than the Pirates, 24 to 23. But Mason canned 24 of 28 free throws, while ECU made only nine of 12.

Bolden, who made 15 of 16 at the line, led the Patriots with 23 points, while Gaddy added 15, Shannon had 12 and Yates hit 10.

East Carolia was led by Peartree with 14 and Gibson with 10.

"My main concern is for the players," Odom said afterwards. "I hope the fans will stick with them. They need encouragement now and not criticism.

"We told them to stick together, support each other and things would work out," he added.

Odom praised the play of Gibson and added that Gilchrist gave the Pirates a lift in the second half. "Bruce (Peartree), although a victim sometimes of his own frustrations, gives every ounce of enthusiasm and that's hard to replace."

Odom was asked to recall what had happened to the Pirates following their outstanding play against Eastern Illinois four games back — a point in the season when they looked like they could whip the world.

"We ran into one of the top 20 teams in the country, regardless of what the media says," Odom said in reference to James Madison, its next foe after Eastern Illinois. It doesn't help to get beat like that in front of your own fans.

"Navy was a big disappointment. We have more talent, but they had more heart. Somebody told me after the game that we had more athletes, but I said that if you describe an athlete as some one who runs, jumps and has heart, then they have as many as we do.

"But my biggest disappointment is that we haven't been a team that can come from behind and win. I don't know if we've done that all year. We just aren't a good come-from-behind team."

The Pirates, with two games left before the ECAC-South tournament, travel to Richmond on Wednesday and close out the regular season on Saturday at Williamsburg aganist William & Mary.

Rampants Pay Debt, Upset Northern

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

ROCKY MOUNT — Having dined out on pig Saturday afternoon, Greenville Rose returned indoors to the hardcourt Monday night looking to fulfill a promise made to Coach Jim Brewington.

The Rampants did not disappoint their coach. Sparked by guard Barry Smith's layup with 35 seconds remaining and an alert defensive play moments later by Freddie Cherry, Rose stunned third-seeded Northern Nash, 52-50, last night in the opening round of the Big East Conference tournament.

Rose will play Wilson Fike Thursday at 9 p.m. in Rocky Mount. Fike, seeded seventh after winning only two conference games during the regular season, stunned second-seeded Kinston, 77-69, last night.

In other first-round games Monday night, top-seeded Rocky Mount rolled past Northeastern, 71-51, and Wilson Hunt defeated Wilson Beddingfield, 57-47. The Gryphons and Bruins will play Wednesday in the tournament semifinals at Rocky Mount.

If Rose and Rocky Mount make the finals, the Rampants will automatically advance into the first round of the state playoffs which begin next Tuesday night.

(Because of misinformation supplied to The Daily Reflector, the location of the semifinals of the tournament was wrong in Sunday's paper. Both the semifinals and finals will be played in Rocky Mount.)

"I gave 'em a party Saturday," Brewington said. "We had a pig pickin' and they told me, 'Coach, we're gonna win.'

"Everytime I feed them we win," he added. "I promised them pizza if we won tonight. I don't know what I'll do if we win (Thursday)."

The Rampants, now 13-10 this season, led at the half by one (28-27), but trailed at the end of the third period (43-40) and saw the Knights up their margin to five early in the final period.

A jumper from the top of the key by Smith, a follow shot and a jumper by Tim Harris gave Rose a 46-45 lead with 3:48 left. The Knights tied it up a minute later on a free throw by guard Thomas Mabry, but William Battle took a pass from Smith on the baseline and maneuvered inside to put Rose back on top, 48-46.

Mabry's 20-foot jumper from the left with 52 seconds left gave the Knights a 50-49 lead with 52 seconds left. Rose worked the ball back down court and with 35 seconds left Smith drove down the middle of the lane for a layup to give Rose a 51-50 lead.

After forward Steve Lynch missed an off-balanced shot from the left baseline, Russell Perkins was fouled with 15 seconds to go. The Rose guard hit the first free throw but missed the second and Rose led, 52-50.

After a time out, Northern Nash got the ball to Mabry, the Knights' leading scorer, but he was tied up for a jump ball by Cherry with seven seconds left. The tap went toward midcourt where a scramble ensued.

Perkins finally ran the ball down in the Knights' backcourt and was fouled with one second left. He missed the free throw, but the win — Rose's fourth straight — was already clinched.

"We played super ball tonight," Brewington said. "This is a tremendous win for us. The kids played with a lot of heart tonight. They did the things that count — we came back when we had to."

One of the main keys to the win was a trapping, 1-3-1 zone that Brewington hoped would contain Mabry, the Knights' best outside shooter. It worked. Mabry, whom Brewington called the Knights' "money player," scored just nine points — five of which came in the final quarter.

"About three years ago we were successfull with it (against Northern Nash)," Brewington said. "Number 12 (Mabry) is a good perimeter shooter and we wanted to try to control him.

"We've never used it for as long as we did tonight. We don't like playing it that much, but we needed it tonight."

Another key to the win was the improved play of center Tim Harris, who scored 12 points and grabbed six rebounds to help inject blood into what has otherwise been an anemic front court this season for Rose.

Cherry and Smith each had 10 points for Rose. The Rampants got 22 points from their three guards. Along with Smith's 10, Perkins scored seven and Donnell Lee five.

Ronnie Stample led Northern Nash with 15 points. Derrick Battle scored nine points in limited action. Battle picked up his third and fourth fouls midway through the third period and had to sit out the remainder of the quarter and much of the fourth period.

Northern Nash, which finishes the season at 18-6, was also hurt by missed foul shots. The Knights made just 14 of 24 foul shots and missed three one-and-ones. Of those 10 misses, six came in the second half, including three by Mabry in the final period.

Rose hit 16 of 23 from the foul line and connected on 18 of 40 (42.5%) shots from the field. Northern Nash hit 18 of 36 (50.0%) shots from the floor. The Knights, along with outshooting the Rampants, outrebounded Rose, 31-25, led by Stample with six.

The Knights also led in another category — turnovers. Northern Nash turned the ball over 16 times to Rose's 10.

A slow and nervous first quarter left Northern Nash up, 8-6. There was nothing slow or nervous about the rest of the contest. Cherry hit eight of Rose's first 10 points of the period — on two jumpers and four-of-four free throws — to give the Rampants a 16-15 lead with 5:18 left.

The lead changed hands five times over the next three minutes before Bobby Dunn went up for two in the lane and Mabry hit a driving jumper off the break and two free throws to give Northern Nash a 25-21 lead with 1:55 left.

The Rampants outscored the Knights, six to two, in the final two minutes, the final bucket coming on a short jumper in the lane by Harris that gave Rose a 28-27 halftime lead.

The Knights quickly erased that lead early in the third quarter. Battle worked inside for a bucket and then hit one of two free throws and Clifton Lynch put in a driving layup off the break to give Northern Nash a 34-30 lead.

The Rampants tied the game at 36-36 moments later on a jumper by Battle from the right corner, but the Knights went back on top, 43-40, at the end of the quarter.

Derrick Battle canned two free throws to open the fourth period to give the Knights a 45-40 lead — their biggest of the night.

But, just when Northern Nash appeared headed for the win, the Rampants scored six straight points to regain the lead — their first of the second half — and Rose was on its way to keeping its promise to Brewington.

Baby Bucs Win Finale

East Carolina's junior varsity closed out its season last night with a 58-57 victory over Chowan Junior College, the only team to beat them in their five-game schedule.

That lone loss came at Chowan in the first game of the season.

The contest was close all night, with neither team able to build a great deal of a lead.

East Carolina gained a late three-point lead, and managed to hold off the Braves in the final few minutes of the contest.

Bill McNair led the scoring for the Pirates with 18 points. He also paced the ECU rebounding with nine.

Mike Fox added 16 points, while Jeff Best added 14.

Chowan was paced by Andrea McGee with 13 points, while Jeff Ervin and Mevlin McCray each had 11 and Tracy Myles had 10.

The Braves dominated the rebounding, 41-30, led by McCray's nine. But Chowan shot only 40.3 percent as compared to East Carolina's 47.2 percent.

Conley's Boys, Girls Take Wins In First Round Of District Play

LITTLEFIELD — D. H. Conley's boys and girls both advanced into the semifinals of the District II 3-A Tournament with victories last night.

Conley's girls downed Ayden-Grifton, 57-47, while the boys took a 63-59 win over SouthWest Edgecombe.

In the other game, SouthWest Edgecombe's unbeaten girls destroyed West Craven, 95-24.

Ayden-Grifton threatened to pull off a suprise in the tournament's opening game. The Lady Chargers shot out to a 12-6 lead after one period, and had the Valkyries sputtering.

But the sputter didn't last long. Conley took control in the second period, outscoring the Chargers, 18-13, to pull back within one at the half, 25-24.

In the third period, Conley pushed ahead and began to pick up more steam with a 15-10 margin. That gave the Valkyries a 39-35 edge going into the final period. In that, Conley outscored A-G, 18-12.

Mechio Kornegay led the Valkyrie scoring with 20 points, while Karen Barrett added 12. Cora Faison paced Ayden-Grifton with 19, while Linda Brown added 12.

Conley, which now has the task of going up against SouthWest Edgecombe, the defending girls 3-A state champion on Thursday at 8:30 p.m., is now 20-5 on the season. Ayden-Grifton closes out the year with an 11-15 record.

In the final game, Conley's boys, who won their tenth straight game in the contest, found their hands full with the upstart Cougars. SouthWest, which fell to 6-19 with the loss, gave Conley a battle from start to finish.

Conley managed only a 12-10 lead after one period of the game, and couldn't shake the Cougars in the second frame. Both teams pushed in 19 points in the period, leaving the Vikings in a slim 31-29 lead at the half.

It stayed just as close through the third period as the two again matched points, each scoring 18. Thus, Conley carried only a 49-47 lead into the final eight minutes of play.

In that, the Vikings were able to prevent the Cougars from pulling off the upset, as their 14-12 advantage preserved the victory.

Sammy Tyson led Conley with 23 points, while Keith Gatlin added 22. SouthWest had four players in double figures, led by Hilton Cobb's 16. LeMonte Johnson had 13, while Jesse Forbes and Darryl Bess each added 12.

The Vikings, now 17-8, will meet the winner of the Greene Central-West Carteret game on Friday at 8:30 p.m.

Southwest Edgecombe, unbeaten in 25 games this year, is riding the crest of a 57-game winning streak following their rout of West Craven last night.

Tonight, West Carteret's girls face Greene Central at 5:30 p.m., followed by West Craven and Southern Nash's boys at 7 p.m. North Pitt's boys and North Lenoir close out the evening at 8:30 p.m.

Valvano Wants Bid To Tourney

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina State basketball coach Jim Valvano makes no bones about it. He thinks the Wolfpack is NCAA tournament caliber.

"I think we belong in the NCAA tournament," Valvano said after his team's 80-52 non-conference victory over Loyola of Baltimore Monday night. "People tend to forget that five of our seven losses were to teams ranked No. 1 or No. 2."

Valvano said he thinks people have forgotten a lot about his club.

"We were ranked in the middle of the season, fell out and now its tough to get back in," he said. "I feel we've got to be somewhere in the top 48 teams."

Loyola coach Bill Burke could hardly dispute Valvano's assessment after seeing the tall Wolfpack at work.

"I think N.C. State is a very well-coached team," Burke said. "They mixed their defenses up on us and forced us to the perimeter. I thought they did a great job defensively. On offense they were patient and got the ball where they wanted to get it."

Valvano said he was concerned that his club might take the Greyhounds too lightly, or be thinking of upcoming Atlantic Coast Conference games.

"I told the kids before the game that we should go out and win it the first half," he said. "I'm pleased that they did. That gave us a chance to play some of our young kids."

Valvano's first N.C. State team finished 14-13, and he was more than pleased to get back into the 20-win column.

"I'll be honest with you, it means a lot getting number 20," said Valvano, whose club is now 20-7. "Before the season that was the magic number and I didn't know if we could make it or not. We got it and I'm real pleased with that."

Dereck Whittenburg scored 14 points and Thurl Bailey 12 to lead the Wolfpack, while Scott Parzych and freshman Cozell McQueen added 10 each.

N.C. State jumped into a 41-16 halftime lead and led by as much as 59-24 in the second half.

Bob Selby led the 10-14 Greyhounds with 18 points while Maurice Hicks scored 13.

UCLA Plays Way Back Onto Poll; Cavs Still 1st

By The Associated Press

The start of the NCAA tournament is just a little more than two weeks away, but there will be no second season for UCLA, which has played its way back into The Associated Press college basketball rankings.

The Bruins, who had won 10 of the last 18 NCAA basketball championships, were placed on probation earlier this season by the NCAA for an assortment of violations and will pack it in after their game against Washington State March 6.

After a 6-5 start, the Bruins have won 12 straight games, and were ranked 20th in this week's poll announced Monday.

"Our goals are a little different than anybody else's at this time," Coach Larry Farmer said in an interview. "The goals we've set are to win the rest of our games."

The Bruins, 18-5 with four games remaining, have a chance to do just that, but they face their toughest test in making that goal come true when they meet No.4 Oregon State on the road next Friday.

Then comes Oregon, Washington and Washington State before the Bruins miss the NCAA tournament for the first time since 1966.

Virginia, which has won its last four games by a total of just 14 points, continued to be the overwhelming choice for the No.1 position in The AP rankings.

The Cavaliers collected 55 of 59 first-place votes and 1,176 of possible 1,180 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. Virginia, 26-1 and currently riding a 14-game winning streak, had a tough time last week, edging Georgia Tech 56-52 and nipping North Carolina State 45-40.

Preseason favorite North Carolina and Ray Meyer's DePaul Blue Demons were again second and third in the voting, while Oregon State and Missouri swapped the fourth and fifth slots, respectively.

North Carolina, 22-2, received two first-place votes and collected 1,107 points. DePaul got the other two first-place votes and had 1,075 points.

Oregon State collected 980 points, while Missouri slipped to fifth following a 63-51 loss Sunday to the then No.13 and now No.12 Georgetown.

West Virginia, currently boasting the nation's longest winning streak at 22, and Kentucky both jumped three positions and took over sixth and seventh places. West Virginia's Mountaineers collected 807 points, while the Wildcats picked up 757.

Tulsa, Idaho and Memphis State rounded out the Top Ten, respectively, although just a few points separated them. The Golden Hurricane had 666 points — seven more than Idaho and 12 more than Memphis State.

Iowa, which was ranked seventh last week when it was upset by Michigan, headed the Second Ten. Georgetown was 12th and was followed by Minnesota, Fresno State, Arkansas, San Francisco, Alabama, Wake Forest, Tennessee and UCLA, the latter two rejoining the Top 20 for the second time this year.

Kansas State and Indiana both fell from the Top Twenty.

Roanoke Sixth On Poll With One Week Left

By The Associated Press

It took until the next-to-last North Carolina Associated Press high school basketball poll to achieve perfection, but West Montgomery's boys' team has that honor.

West Montgomery has received all 14 first-place votes for a perfect 140 points in the boys' 2A-1A division of this week poll. Balloting is conducted by a statewide panel of sportswriters. The final poll of the season will be released next week, prior to the regional tournaments.

West Montgomery and Bandys battled for the 2A-1A lead much of the season, but West Montgomery got a clear shot at the top when Bandys lost its first game in 25 outings this season, falling to unranked West Lincoln in Friday night's Southern District 7 2A finals.

Meanwhile, West Montgomery improved its record to 24-0 by beating 11th-ranked Cameron Union Pines in the finals of the Central Tar Heel 2A tournament.

There were no changes atop any divisions in the poll this week.

Chapel Hill retains its lock in 4A, with the unbeaten Tiger boys and once-beaten Tiger girls ranked first in their respective divisions. The boys have 12 first-place votes, second-best total for any team in the poll.

Other leaders are Southern Durham (3A boys), Southwest Edgecombe (3A girls) and Sampson Union (2A-1A girls).

Here is how a statewide panel of sportswriters rates North Carolina high school basketball teams this week for The Associated Press. Teams Continue Salary Wins

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball clubowners continue to win their salary arbitration cases against major league players at close to a 2-out-of-3 pace.

Third baseman Carney Lansford of Boston and outfielder Bobby Brown of the New York Yankees lost their cases Monday, while pitcher Tom Hume of Cincinnati was a winner. That left the teams with 14 victories in 22 cases with the players so far.

A hearing for John Castino and the Minnesota Twins remained to conclude the arbitration cases today.

Arbitrator Robert Stutz ruled that the Lansford's value was closer to the $440,000 salary offered by the Red Sox than the $650,000 requested by the defending American League batting champion.

The arbitrator must pick one of the figures for a one-year contract and cannot compromise.

Leigh Steinberg, Lansford's agent, called his hearing a test case for young, productive players who haven't played enough years to become free agents.

"This was a case that was larger than Carney Lansford," said Steinberg. "It was really a test."

Steinberg said the Red Sox argued that Lansford's salary should not be based on the multiyear, multimillion-dollar contracts being signed by players who threaten to become free agents. The team said those players command additional pay to keep them from leaving.

Lansford, who batted .336 last season at age 25, won't be eligible for free agency until after his sixth season in 1983.

Both Steinberg and Red Sox owner Haywood Sullivan indicated negotiations for a long-term contract for Lansford would begin this year.

Brown, who hit .226 in 31 games with New York and spent much of 1981 in the minors at Columbus, became the first straight Yankee player to lose his arbitration case.

Brown will play for $90,000 in 1982 after seeking $175,000. He said New York's acquisition of Dave Collins and Ken Griffey meant he would probably play even less for the Yankees this year.

"If I had won, I still wouldn't get what I want. What I want is to go someplace else," Brown said.

Hume, won a $575,000 salary, $200,000 more than the Reds wanted to pay him.

His 25 saves, 9-10 record and 2.56 ERA won National League Fireman of the Year honors for him in 1980, and in the strike-shortened 1981 season, he saved 13 games with a 9-4 record.

"Tom Hume has very good statistics, but he has even greater pure value to the Reds," said his agent, Tom Reich. "In this case, we were trying to prove that he was among the elite relief pitchers."

In other baseball news, San Francisco pitcher Doyle Alexander said through his agent, Jerry DeNisco, that he would not report to the Giants' training camp at Scottsdale, Ariz., until the team renegotiates his contract.

He has one year remaining on his contract, paying $150,000 a year, but Alexander charges that the Giants promised to renegotiate when they traded for him last year.

Madison Is Top Seeded

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — James Madison University's defending champion Duks will be seeded No. 1 and draw a bye in the ECAC South basketball tournament next weekend at the Norfolk Scope, it was announced Monday.

The announcement came from Ben Carnevale, chairman of the ECAC South. He said the No. 2 through No. 7 spots will not be determined until after this week's games.

"James Madison's 9-1 conference record and 20-4 overall mark clearly established it as the No. 1 team," Carnevale said.

"The other seeded positions are still very much unsettled and this week's games will determine the standings of the tournament," Carnevale added.

The tournament will open Thursday, March 4, with games at 5, 7 and 9 p.m.

Behind James Madison are Old Dominion at 5-2, Richmond at 4-4, William & Mary at 4-5, Navy at 2-4, East Carolina at 2-5 and George Mason at 1-6. All but Navy have at least one conference game remaining.

Westphal Anxious

NEW YORK (AP) — Paul Westphal, saying he is "anxious to get back to plaing," plans to sign an offer sheet with the New York Knicks if he passes a physical.

Westphal, a five-time National Basketball Association all-star for Seattle and Phoenix, was reached at his home in Seattle by RKO Radio Monday night. He said would catch a late-night flight to New York to be examined today.

"I think I'm in pretty good shape," he said. "I've been working out every day for the last two months. I'm in as good as shape as I can be without being in NBA competition."

Under the NBA's first-refusal rule, the Seattle SuperSonics will have 15 days to match any offer made by the Knicks, who reportedly were ready to give Westphal up to $150,000 for the rest of this season.

A stress fracture in his right foot limited the 6-foot-4 guard to 36 games with Seattle last season and he has not played or signed a free-agent contract in 1981-82 because of questions about his physical condition.

Similar foot injuries ended the careers of NBA all-stars Bill Walton and Doug Collins.

Westphal has averaged 17.1 points per game for his nine-year career for Boston, Phoenix and Seattle. He played in the NBA All-Star game from 1977 through 1981.

A special committee of the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers selected Miller as the conference's top rookie for the second time this season.

Cards Press On To Win Over Memphis

By The Associated Press

Memphis State Coach Dana Kirk's "no comment" turned out to be anything but.

"The game was well-called in the first half, but the second half — no comment," Kirk said Monday night after his 10th-ranked Tigers were beaten on the road by Louisville 65-61 in a Metro Conference basketball game.

No comment, Coach?

"I feel like the officials set double standards," Kirk no-commented. "They gave me a tecnical foul for crossing half-court, and Denny (Louisville Coach Denny Crum) did it and no call was made."

Once Kirk calmed down, however, he realized that Louisville's zone press, which forced Memphis State into 21 turnovers, hurt the Tigers more than the officiating.

"The officials didn't really beat us. We beat ourselves," he said. "We made some crucial turnovers in key situations and we also failed to rebound in certain key situations."

In the only other game involving a member of The Associated Press Top Twenty, Bruce Vanley scored a career-high 23 points to lead eighth-ranked Tulsa to an 85-67 Missouri Valley Conference rout of Southern Illinois.

Kirk was socked with a technical with 17:25 left in the game for arguing what he contended was a traveling violation on a Louisville player. After the game, he charged after one of the officials and had to be restrained by one of his assistants.

The setback snapped the Tigers' eight-game winning streak and left them with a 19-4 record, 8-2 in the Metro. Louisville, which has won four in a row, is 16-8 and 8-4.

Charles Jones hit two pressure free throws and Milt Wagner scored on a slam dunk in the final 19 seconds to spark Louisville. Memphis State had rallied from a 57-52 deficit to tie the game 59-59 on Bobby Parks' two free throws with 1:58 to go. Louisville went ahead 61-59 when Derek Smith hit a short baseline jumper 18 seconds later. Jones added two free throws with 19 seconds left and Wagner's dunk came with five seconds to go.

Memphis State freshman Keith Lee led all scorers with 20 points, while Louisville had five players in double figures, led by Smith with 15.

Meanwhile, Tulsa posted its 31st consecutive home-court triumph and boosted its record to 20-4, including 13-3 in MVC play. The Golden Hurricane fell behind 5-0 but Vanley paced a 22-8 burst that put them in front to stay.

Elsewhere:

— Alonzo Allen scored 16 points and five teammates also reached double figures as Southwestern Louisiana nipped McNeese State 81-77 and remained one game ahead of Lamar in the Southland Conference.

— Lamar, led by Nicky Snell's 16 points, set a school defensive record by trouncing Arkansas State 64-38. The 38 points was the lowest opposition total in Lamar history and the Cardinals posted their 56th consecutive victory at home.

— John Bagley scored 26 points, leading Boston College to an 88-77 triumph over Syracuse in a Big East Conference game. "It's obvious that we are doing the things that good teams do," said BC Coach Tom Davis, whose club has won 11 of its last 13 outings. "Our passing, our defense and our player movement has been excellent. It's almost too much to ask for our team to keep playing this well."

— Tennessee-Chattanooga, which has clinched the Southern Conference regular-season crown, trimmed Marshall 100-82 as Nick Morken and Stanford Strickland scored 22 points apiece. The Mocs are 23-3 over-all, 15-1 in league play.

— Texas Tech roared from 10 points behind in the final 3½ minutes and edged Texas Tech 67-65 in a Southwest Conference game. The Longhorns led 61-51 when they went into a delay game that backfired. Charles Johnson's layup with 29 seconds left put the Red Raiders on top 66-65.

— Junior forward Steve Harriel scored 18 points and pulled down six rebounds to lead Washington State to a 76-69 victory over Oregon in a Pacific-10 Conference game. Senior forward Ronnie Joyner came off the bench for the Cougars to score 16 points.

— Dereck Whittenburg scored 14 points and Thurl Bailey added 12 as North Carolina State notched its 20th victory of the season, an 80-52 romp over Loyola of Baltimore.

"I'll be honest with you, it means a lot getting number 20," said Wolfpack Coach Jim Valvano. "Before the season that was the magic number and I didn't know if we could make it or not. We got it and I'm real pleased with that.

"I think we belong in the NCAA Tournament. People tend to forget that five of our seven losses were to teams ranked No.1 or No.2. We were ranked in the middle of the season, fell out and now it's tough to get back in. I feel we've got to be somewhere in the top 48 teams."

Time Does Move On: Eric Heiden Rarely Recognized By The Public

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

The tall young man in blue jeans and plaid wool shirt sat at a table in a crowded mid-town hotel restaurant, munching breakfast and chatting with friends.

No one turned a head to stare at him. No one rushed over from an adjoining table to ask his autograph. He finished, got up and casually strode through the lobby en route to New York's Coliseum for the International Cycling Show.

No mob scene.

"That's the way I like it," said Eric Heiden. "I enjoy my privacy. I have no ambition to be an exploited Olympic hero."

What a difference two years make.

Exactly two years ago today — Feb. 23,1980 — Heiden swept to a fifth speed skating gold medal in the XIII Winter Games at Lake Placid, N.Y., setting a world record in the process, and thousands struggled just to get a brief glimpse of him while millions marveled from TV.

It was an individual feat comparable to Jesse Owens' four-medal track exploits in the Berlin's Nazi Olympics in 1936 and Mark Spitz's cache of seven swimming golds at Munich in 1972.

At that particular moment — his image reflecting in the glare of Olympic gold and the snow of Lake Placid's hills — this remarkable unaffected young man from Madison, Wis., was the most lionized athlete in the world.

The obvious next step for the celebrated king of the ice was to sign contracts worth millions of dollars for myriad endorsements, public appearances and other commercial ventures — following the footsteps of Spitz, decathlete Bruce Jenner and figure skating queen Dorothy Hamill, among others.

"Not I," said Heiden. "I had some good offers. My agent (Art Kaminsky) urged me to accept them. I said, 'No, thanks.' When you sign those kinds of contracts, people start owning you.

"I don't want anybody owning me."

So young Heiden, 23, is doing just what he wants to do. He is a pre-med student at Stanford University, aiming to eventually specialize in sports medicine. And, in whatever spare time he has, he is working with U.S. cyclists, pointing to the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles.

Cycling was one of Heiden's first loves, as was speed skating. As a growing kid he had to make a choice — whether to be a world-class cyclist or world-class speed skater. The silver blades won out, although Eric succeeded in both.

He currently is serving as honorary captain of the American cycling team, most of them Olympic candidates, who will be competing in 40 races across the country from March through November.

The team is sponsored by 7-Eleven, a Dallas-based chain of convenience stores owned by Southland Corp., and the Schwinn Bicycle Co., of Chicago. Southland is putting up $1 million a year to train the cyclists and $4 million to build a world class velodrome in Los Angeles to be used for Olympic cycling and other events.

For months prior to the Olympics, Eric and his sister, Beth, who had won the world ladies' speed skating crown the year before, were the world's most publicized athletes. They were the darlings of Europe, where speed skating is a major sport. They appeared on the covers of Time and Sports Illustrated magazines. They were besieged from all sides by international news, radio and TV reporters.

It must have been like a dream.

Not for Eric Heiden. It was closer to a nightmare for both the boy and his younger sister.

"Skating owned my life for seven years," Heiden said. "By the time I got to Lake Placid, the pressure had become tremendous. From my European experience, I could handle it. But it was tough on Beth."

Beth, 21, rated the world's best, had to settle for a bronze medal in the 1,000 meters — a bitter disappointment. She is now attending the University of Vermont and is big on long-distance skiing.

"During those two weeks in Lake Placid, I felt like a zombie," Eric said. "I had tunnel vision. I could think of nothing but skating. Every day was pressure day.

"I went to the movies and couldn't tell you what they were about a half-hour later. I didn't recognize anything going on around me. In my last race — the 10,000 — after the eighth lap (there are 25) I felt burned out and wanted to quit. But I didn't dare.

"When it was over, I was numb. I didn't even go to the victory parties. I just wanted to go some place and be by myself.

"Now I am happy, comfortable with my life. I am doing only what I want to do, and I envy nobody."

Lansford Might Come Out Okay

BOSTON (AP) — Carney Lansford lost his salary arbitration dispute to the Boston Red Sox, but may reap the extra money he sought once a new long-term contract is hammered out, his agent says.

"I would just hope that we could execute a long-term contract with Carney in the future that would make this whole thing moot," Leigh Steinberg, agent for the American League batting champion, said Monday.

Haywood Sullivan, Boston's owner and general manager, said he hoped to start negotiations toward a long-term contract for Lansford during spring training. He said Monday he didn't know how difficult they would be.

In a ruling announced Monday, arbitrator Robert Stutz said the 25-year-old third baseman was entitled to the $440,000 the Red Sox offered for the 1982 season.

Ivanhoe And Playhouse Tonight

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — An old story and a recent play are on television tonight. The old story, "Ivanhoe," remains stale and musty, but the recent play, "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When The Rainbow Is Enuf," is alive and spirited.

The recommendation is to watch "For Colored Girls ..." on PBS. Written by Ntozake Shange and first performed on Broadway in 1976, it's 90 minutes of passionate exploration into the lives, psyches and libidos of seven black women.

"Being alive, being colored, being a woman is a metaphysical dilemma that I have not conquered yet," says one of them.

Wonderfully acted by cast that includes Ms. Shange, it's an intimately involving play, actually a series of poems, that will have you soaring with their ups, diving with their downs. It's human, humorous, and a certification of what's right, wrong and meaningful.

"I found God in myself ... and I loved her ... I loved her fiercely."

On the other hand, most young students will eagerly attest that Sir Walter Scott's classic, "Ivanhoe," is a tough read. The language is a real joust, and, unfortunately, CBS is unable to crash that sound barrier tonight.

Set in 12th century England, the movie "Ivanhoe" requires a fair knowledge of history. The Normans, who conquered the native Saxons, have brought ravage, plunder and French cuisine across the channel. The Normans aren't ruling even-handedly because good King Richard the Lionhearted is fighting in the Crusades, leaving the kingdom to his wicked brother, John.

Into that setting of injustice comes Ivanhoe, himself returning from the Crusades. Anthony Andrews, who has captured Sebastian Flyte's wounds of the spirit so poignantly in "Brideshead Revisited," seems to be sleepwalking in "Ivanhoe," falling short in the dash and swashbuckle category.

Ivanhoe is a Saxon, but his father, Cedric, has disowned him for forsaking the Saxon cause. That rift means he can't marry the woman he loves, Lady Rowena. She's Cedric's ward, and he wants her to marry the grubby Athelstane, the last line of Saxon royal lineage. He's so vulgar that he's the only character in need of a shave throughout this tedious three-hour movie.

Ivanhoe becomes friendly with Isaac, the Jewish merchant who is played with intensity by James Mason. These are chivalrous times, and each gets the other out of a sticky situation. But these are also discriminatory times, so Ivanhoe can't allow himself to love Isaac's beautiful daughter, Rebecca (Olivia Hussey from "Romeo and Juliet.")

And evil times, too. Rebecca and Isaac, Cedric and Lady Rowena, and various Saxon hangers-on are captured and imprisoned by the Normans. Ivanhoe, incognito and injured, is also taken to the castle, where two of the wicked Normans make plays for Rebecca and Lady Rowena.

Sam Neill brings some interesting shading to the villainous Brian de Bois-Guilbert, who wants Rebecca for fun but not marriage. "Does your order justify carnal lust and debauchery?" asks Rebecca, who wins his respect and love by refusing to yield, even when submission could save her from being tried as a witch.

It all works out well, as epic fantasies are supposed to, with Ivanhoe, King Richard, and even Robin Hood (David Robb of "Flame Trees of Thika") joining forces in armed battle to save the day. But, by then, this long-winded exercise has been lanced through the heart.

"Ivanhoe" is the latest effort of Mr. Remake, Norman Rosemont, who has been more successful in recreating "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Les Miserables," "All Quiet on the Western Front" and many others. "Ivanhoe" required a lighter touch. It would have made a better Walt Disney film.

Charlotte Opera 'Hits The Road'

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — After what most observers called a successful debut, the Charlotte Opera Association is hitting the road with its world premiere opera "Abelard and Heloise," hoping that nationally-known critics will give them a boost.

The 44-member cast will take the opera to Duke University or a performance tonight night. The 2½-hour opera made its debut Friday at Charlotte's Ovens Auditorium before a sellout crowd. a Sunday matinee was equaly successful, with about 2,400 people in attendance.

"We don't know what the out-of-state critics are going to say, but we were gratified with the performances," Jim Deere, public relations director for the association, said Monday.

"We'll just wait until all the reviews are in, but reviews aren't everything. We think we did very well."

Last week, association director Richard Marshall said the success or failure of the show would make or break the opera association nationally, saying "the eyes of the whole opera world will be on us."

The opera tells the story of two star-crossed 12th century lovers, Abelard and Heloise. Their tale already has inspired three plays a novel and an epic poem.

The opera was written by Pulitzer Prize-winning composer Robert Ward, currently composer in residence at Duke University, and librettist Jan Hartman.

The Charlotte Opera Association convinced Ward and Hartman in 1977 to write the opera.

Deere said the opera's debut Friday attracted critics from all over North Carolina as well as from such publications as Arts Magazine, Opera News and The Washington Post.

State critics gave the opera generally favorable reviews, calling it "a rare creature, delicate but durable" and "a piece of theater with solid impact."

But they also found fault with the show, saying the acoustics of Ovens Auditorium swallowed two-thirds of the sound and that Marshall, who conducted the orchestra, drowned out the other third with his overly powerful conducting.

So far, national critics have been mum on the show. Most of the reviews won't be out for at least two weeks, Deere said. He added that some of the publications may decide to do no review at all.

"We were kind of disappointed that Time magazine and The New York Times didn't show up on Friday," he said. "But all in all we feel that we got most of the attention we had hoped for."

Orson Cites 'Bad Films'

PARIS (AP) — Although he's being inducted in the prestigious French Legion of Honor, Orson Welles says there was little honor in the legion of bad films he appeared in to make ends meet.

"Nobody in the world has acted in worse films than I," Welles said Monday at a news conference.

The 67-year-old veteran actor and director was in France to attend a ceremony today making him a member of the organization founded by Napoleon to commemorate those who have given their services to France. Welles, who became famous at the age of 25 with the movie "Citizen Kane," is being cited for his film achievements.

Welles said he accepted roles in numerous bad films because "I needed to eat. The films that I directed always cost me more than they brought in."

French President Francois Mitterrand is to attend Welles' Legion of Honor ceremony.

Welles said Monday he has not seen his film classic in 40 years.

"Decorations are like jewels — they only have the value we ourselves give them," Welles said. "Like anyone else, I've asked myself if I deserve to receive this honor. I doubt that I do."

Robert Young Reading Scripts

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Robert Young, former star of the TV series "Father Knows Best" and "Marcus Welby, M.D.," still reads scripts at age 75, looking for something he likes, his agent says.

Young, who marked his 75th year Monday, "said he didn't know whether to feel guilty that he hasn't been working and thus making commissions for me," said his agent, Herb Tobias. "I told him, 'Hey, in 40 years we've probably made more money together than any two guys in town.'"

EXPELLED AS SPIES

SINGAPORE (AP) — A Soviet diplomat and a Soviet marine superintendent were expelled by the government today "for indulging in espionage activities in Singapore", the Ministry of Home Affairs said.

RISING STAR — Anthony Andrews, who gained recognition for his role as Sebastian Flyte in the Public Television series "Brideshead Revisited", is shown in character during filming in Northumberland, England of the Normon Roremont production of "Ivanhoe", to be broadcast on CBS-TV tonight. (AP Laserphoto)

RECUPERATING — Dolly Parton underwent surgery of an undisclosed nature last week in Santa Monica and will spend the next month or so recuperating in Los Angeles. She had just finished filming "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" with Burt Reynolds. (AP Laserphoto)

Concert Canceled

The concert by Dutch singer Elly Ameling, scheduled for 8 p.m. tonight at Hendrix Theater, East Carolina University, has been canceled due to illness.

The concert has been rescheduled for March 2 at Hendrix Theater, Mendenhall Student Union.

Choosing Jury To Try Corona

JUAN CORONA

HAYWARD, Calif. (AP) — Jury selection in the retrial of Juan Corona, accused in the machete slayings of 25 farm laborers 11 years ago, is expected to last several weeks, attorneys for both sides say.

No jurors were selected Monday, the first day of screening. Corona, 48, sat impassively behind his lawyers as proceedings began.

Each side may each dismiss up to 26 prospective panelists without giving a reason and may reject an unlimited number.

Corona, who has been in custody since his arrest in 1971, has pleaded innocent to the slayings.

His attorney, Terrence Hallinan, hinted he would try to show another man did it.

"I do know who much more likely did it than Juan Corona," Hallinan told reporters. He has previously hinted at another suspect, Corona's brother, Nativadad, whom Hallinan says is dead.

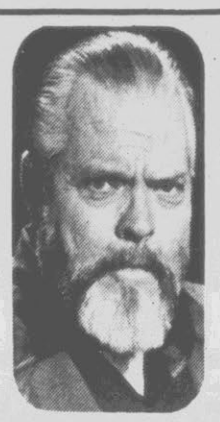

Nativadad Corona disappeared in 1970 after a $250,000 Superior Court judgment against him for the beating of a young Mexican-American farm worker in Marysville.

"We have a death certificate from Mexico for him," Hallinan said. "We talked to the doctor who prepared the death certificate. He didn't see the body."

Juan Corona was convicted in 1973 based on elaborate circumstantial evidence. The conviction was overturned in 1978 on the grounds of an inadequate defense, and various hearings were held after on what evidence could be used for the retrial.

Officers found 25 hacked bodies in two Sutter County peach orchards in 1971. Most of the bodies had the heads chopped or slashed and most were stabbed in the heart or left lung.

FOCUS

Spotlight on Citizen Welles

The portly, bearded gentleman raising a glass of wine in TV commercials is a far cry from the brash young man who shook up the world 40 years ago. In 1938, Orson Welles' War of the Worlds, a radio drama, panicked thousands, who believed that Martians had landed on earth. In 1941, Welles made the movie, Citizen Kane, with himself in the title role. Although at times he exasperated Hollywood studio heads with his independent spirit and high film budgets some people now consider Citizen Kane to be the greatest film ever made. Today this great director and actor will be honored in Paris, as French President Mitterrand decorates him Commander in the French Legion of Honor.

DO YOU KNOW — Who wrote the original book The War of the Worlds?

Auto Sales Dip Hit N.C. Plants

By The Associated Press

North Carolina manufacturers dependent on the automoile industry are experiencing sales slumps and are laying off workers after the fashion of Detroit.

But the decline in auto sales is a boon to manufacturers and distributors of replacement auto parts, as more people are fixing up their aging vehicles instead of trading them as part of a new-car purchase.

About 43,000 workers in the state manufacture parts and supplies for the auto industry.

"We are living and dying with the automotive industry," said John Schindelar, controller of Standard Products in Rocky Mount, which makes weather stripping for automobiles.

Industry members estimate that layoffs and cutbacks in production schedules have affected 185 plants and companies in North Carolina.

A survey by the North Carolina Commerce Department of auto-related manufacturing shows plants and companies across the state make tires, axles, clutches, transmissions, brakes and other items for the Big Three automakers in Detroit — Ford, General Motors and Chrysler.

Production at the Dayco Corp. plant in Waynesville, which makes automotive hose and fan belts, is down 75 percent. About a fifth of its 1,800 workers have been laid off.

At the Eaton Corp. emission control plant in Sanford, the workforce has dropped from 450 to 200 in three years. And employees have agreed to go without annual cost-of-living increases to keep even more employees from being laid off.

But Benny Hoyle, president of the Gastonia-based Wix Corp., says demand is up for the oil, air and fuel filters his company makes.

"People are keeping their cars longer and maintaining them better," said Hoyle, adding that profits and revenues were ahead were ahead 20 percent in 1981.

Rebels Kill A Soviet General

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Lt. Gen. P.I. Shkidchenko and several other Soviet officers were killed in the crash of a helicopter in eastern Afghanistan after it was hit by rebel rocket fire, Western diplomatic reports from Kabul said today.

The reports were disclosed by sources in New Delhi and Islamabad, Pakistan, who refused to be identified by name or nationality. They said Shkidchenko, two or three other Soviet officers and an Afghan were flying between Gardez and Khost in eastern Afghanistan when their aircraft was hit Jan. 19 or Jan. 20 by at least one rocket.

All aboard were killed, and the wreckage was found about 6 miles from Khost, which is 112 miles southeast of Kabul, the reports said. They said a military memorial service was held for the Soviet officers before their bodies were flown to the Soviet Union.

The sources who disclosed the report said news of the general's death was received earlier but was withheld until it was verified by a number of reliable informants.

The Soviet army newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda (Red Star) announced Shkidchenko's death on Jan. 23 and said he "perished in an air disaster while performing his duty." It gave no other details.

The obituary notice said he had been deputy commander of Soviet troops in East Germany in charge of combat training and then was transferred to Odessa, on the Black Sea, where he was chief of the military training department for that military district. It said he was 59.

It was not immediately known whether Shkidchenko was the highest-ranking Soviet military officer reported killed in Afghanistan since the Soviet army first intervened there in December 1979 to help the President Babrak Karmal's Marxist government battle Moslem insurgents.

Other Western diplomatic sources in New Delhi reported earlier that several Soviet army officers, possibly including a general in the medical corps, were gunned down on a Kabul street last month.

Western diplomatic sources in New Delhi also reported heavy fighting in Gulbahar, a textile center north of Kabul. They said the rebels and the government troops had numerous casualties but details were not reported.

West led the king of hearts and continued with the queen. Declarer ruffed, cashed the ace of trumps and led the ace of clubs and another. West won and forced declarer once more with a heart. Declarer accepted the force, ruffed a club in dummy and returned to hand with the king of trumps. Now he simply led his good clubs. The defenders could score their high trump, but no more.

One of our associates often joined Garry Davis for a game of commuter bridge on the New Haven line. We are sure the games will be duller without him!

We were saddened to learn of the death of Garry Davis of Cos Cob, Conn. A graduate of Harvard University, he was a disciple and frequent partner of S. Garton Churchill. Since he learned his bridge in the days when psychic bidding was in vogue, playing with and against Garry was always an adventure.

There was no doubt that he was an imaginative bidder and card player, and this hand, from a rubber game at the Regency Whist Club in New York, where he was a long-time member, bears eloquent testimony.

Garry picked up the rather uninspiring North hand. His partner was U.S. internationalist, Boris Koytchou, who played on many of our championship teams. Koytchou opened the bidding with one club and then came in freely at the three-level despite the fact that he was vulnerable. With four-card support for his partner's second suit and only a doubleton in the first-bid suit, Garry realized that there might easily be ten tricks in the black suits, so he boldly raised to four spades on his yarborough!

Speaking of Your Health...

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

Value of the Yearly Exam

I have been taking a yearly examination from the time I joined my company 22 years ago. Sometimes I think that these examinations are entirely unnecessary and that they can be dispensed with. I feel they are a waste of time. — Mr. N.C., N.Y.

Dear Mr. C.:

The battle plans are carefully laid out. There are those physicians who believe that the yearly examination is of great value. There are others who think that they are entirely unnecessary.

While these "trench-to-trench" battles are going on, patients remain in the active line of fire for trouble. In a study of 569 executives who were given 2,000 annual pysicals, it was found that 83 percent of these had some abnormality which did not produce symptoms or cause distress. Sixteen percent had high blood pressure. Eight percent had coronary artery disease. Ten percent had cancer. These are significant statistics and cannot be denied.

How can one deny the importance of recognizing, treating and controlling a single serious illness. Certainly that one patient will become the greatest protagonist of the concept of the value of the annual physical examination.

There are some doctors who believe that the statistics would be even better if patients presented themselves at their doctor's offices when any symptom persisted for any length of time. "Any lenght of time" varies with the stoicism of the individual. There are some who will seek help immediately. There are others who will wait, hoping that the symptoms will disappear.

How long does one wait? Is a week, or a month reasonable when a distressing symptom is present?

There is an old concept that anything that a doctor does must be wrong. If the doctor uses the electrocardiogram over a period of years and finds nothing significant, then the patient raises the question, "Does the doctor use the gadget indiscriminately?" Yet there are innumerable instances on record where doctors pick up evidence of a previously undetected "silent heart attack."

Physicians have changed their attitude toward physical examinations at yearly intervals. Certainly the "annual" is not as important at 30 or 40 as it is at 50 or 60. The "annual" certainly has more significance in a patient who has a prior illness that deserves such constant supervision.

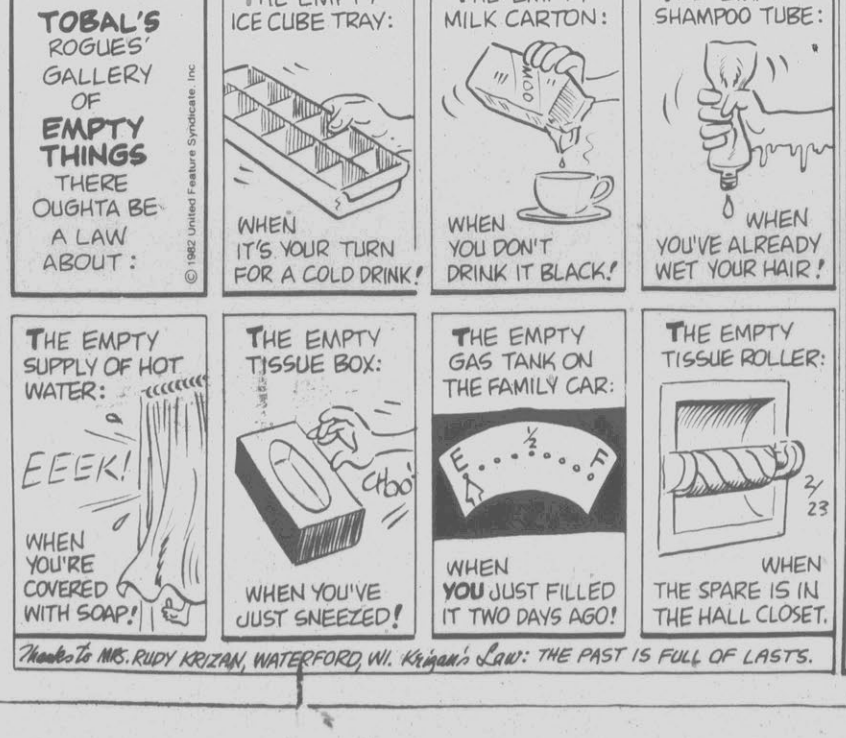

It is most naive to believe that doctors use the annual only as a means of supplementing their income. If such a thought occurs to you, find yourself another doctor, for you don't deserve the faith and dedication of the one you have.

You obviously have been thriving well with your annual examinations. If you feel that you can do just as well without them, no one will push you into investing that meager amount of time in your health destiny.
