By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

A resolution calling on U.S. senators and congressmen representing North Carolina to "support and work for maintenance of the current school year (1981-82) funding levels for fiscal year 1983" was approved unanimously at the Monday night information meeting of the Greenville City Schools Board of Education.

The resolution also urges President Reagan "to reconsider his proposed cuts in federal funding for education, and request of the Congress that the 1981-82 levels of funding be maintained at least until the economy improves enough to allow needed increases in federal support of public education."

The resolution, signed by each board member and by Supt. of City Schools Dr. Delma Blinson in his capacity as secretary to the board, cites a number of budget developments reported in the President's budget proposal to Congress.

General budget recommendations cited include an increase of 4 percent in the total federal budget; an increase by over 18 percent in defense spending; decrease by 23 percent for total public schools funding; a cut by 34 percent in Title I funds for support of remedial reading and math; and cuts in funding for handicapped children, vocational education, and food service.

The resolution also cites data from the N.C. Department of Public Instruction on how the proposed cuts would affect public education in North Carolina. Some of the figures cited affecting student service cuts in various areas throughout North Carolina are:

- The reading and math remedial programs, 20 percent cut, 33,600 students;

Retirement For Alford

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

Ott Alford, superintendent of Pitt County schools for over 16 years, announced today that he has retired from that position, effective Feb. 1.

The disclosure was made at the monthly meeting of the Pitt County Board of Education in a letter dated Feb. 26.

"I never thought I could say the word 'retirement,'" said Alford, "for I have enjoyed my work so. And with so many unfinished aspects of it, I come now reluctantly, to this point in my life."

Alford began his career in education in 1952 as a teacher at Chicod School. He became principal of Fountain School, then served as an elementary supervisor and an assistant superintendent until becoming superintendent in 1965.

"I would have preferred to remain in the position as long as I could be of service before retiring," said the superintendent. "But the state retirement system has determined that I qualify for disability retirement, giving me 13 years in addition to my 30. The state of my health being what it is, I had to think in terms of what is best for my family."

Alford referred to his years in Pitt County as "filled with joy."

"I do not apologize for the level and degree of my concern for boys and girls," he noted. "I know that I have given it my all in time, energy and whatever talents I possess."

"I am willing to leave the duties and responsibilities to those who remain...the finest group of administrators and teachers to be found anywhere."

Alford, a native of Laurinburg, graduated from Laurinburg High School and received his B.S. and M.A. degrees from

Suspended At Hospital

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County Memorial Hospital Associate Director for General Services Robert Barnes has been suspended from the administrative staff of the hospital.

An investigation of alleged misappropriation of funds between February, 1980, and November, 1981 is underway.

Hospital General Director Jack Richardson would give no particulars, but did say that no hospital personnel other than Barnes has been suspended at this time. He said his refusal to elaborate is on the advice of the District Attorney's Office and promised a detailed statement at a later date.

Barnes was suspended Friday and the County Board of Commissioners was informed of the incident by Richardson yesterday morning.

The alleged misappropriation is thought to be approximately $53,000, Richardson said in a prepared statement. In answer to a question, he said, "The process had to do with an invoice procedure — invoices going through the system...checks being issued for goods from which the hospital did not benefit."

The discovery of the alleged misappropriation, he said, was the result of internal audits.

Independent auditors have been obtained to make a thorough investigation and report to the hospital board of trustees, Richardson said. He said the hospital has notified the District Attorney's office and the hospital bonding agent and "we expect the bonding company to cover this loss."

He said it appears at this time that the alleged misappropriation caused no direct loss to any patient. He confirmed that the State Bureau of Investigation and state auditors are assisting with the investigation.

"We all feel a hurt," Richardson said, calling the incident, "a great personal tragedy."

As associate director for general services, Barnes' responsibilities included purchasing for the dietary, laboratory, radiology and surgery departments of the hospital. He has been a member of the administration staff of the hospital for 10 years.

Counterfeit Bill

Greenville Police Chief Glenn Cannon reported a counterfeit $20 Federal Reserve note was passed here Friday night at Godfather's Pizza.

According to the chief, the counterfeit $20, passed about 7:30 p.m., bore the serial number B96788378F. The bill, described as printed on slick paper with no colored threads, had a front plate number (lower right) of C364, the quadrant number (upper left) of C1, and the back plate number (lower right), 535.

The counterfeit series 1977 bill also bore the New York Federal Reserve District 3 seal.

Cannon said anyone finding similar bills should contact the Police Department.

Off-Road Adventures

OUT FOR SOME AIR — Celeste Hiatt and Pee Wee, a two-year-old Chihuahua-Pekinese mix, catch some fresh air and sunshine as they stroll near Hooker Road in search of scenic attractions. After a weekend of gloom, sunny skies returned to the area Monday afternoon and temperatures surged to the 60-degree plus mark today, with more of the same forecast for tomorrow. Following a ramble in the new-found sunlight, the well-worn path and the oak tree towering above it looked inviting, so the two wanderers above turned down it for their own "off-road adventures." ## Two New Members For Pitt Hospital Trustees Approved

Two new members and two re-appointees for the Pitt County Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees were approved by County Commissioners on Monday.

J. Reid Hooper and Henry C. Humphreys, Jr. are the two new members appointed for three year terms. Hooper is vice president and office executive, Wachovia Bank and Trust Company, Greenville. Humphreys is vice president of the National Spinning Company in Washington.

The two re-appointed for three year terms are Joseph Parker of the Roanoke-Chowan News Herald, Ahoskie, and Thomas J. White, Jr., an attorney of Kingston.

Another appointment approved by Commissioners Monday was that of Romona Enslay as the representative on the Pitt County Council on the Status of Women.

Approval was also given to a resolution requesting Governor Hunt and Attorney General Edmisten to fight the suit by railroads against the state. The suit in question is one dating from 1980 in which railroads claim that the state of North Carolina has not set right-of-way assessments at a rate equal to other property in the state. The state certifies the value of railroad property to the counties for property tax

OSCEOLA BAND INFORMATION

Joe Congleton, an editor of the Pitt County Chronicles history section, would like information about a coronet band that played around the turn of the century in Pitt County — the Osceola Band. He quotes from a Daily Reflector article of Sept. 30, 1911, Old Pitt County Band Will Get Together and Make Music for County Fair: "Some years ago Greenville had one of the best coronet bands in North Carolina because of the members' getting different interests that separated them, the band went down. Many of them still have their instruments. Mr. J.F. Evans, who was a member of the band, is one of the governing members of the board of the Pitt County Fair Association. He is proposing to get enough of the old band members together to make music for the county fair on Nov. 2 and 3. This will certainly be a treat and we are sure Mr. Evans will make a success of his proposition."

Congleton has another reference to the band's playing for the dedication day of the Grady School in November, 1903.

Anyone having information about the band or any of its members or with a picture of the band is asked to contact Congleton, 122 Oxford Road, 756-4038.

Housing Authority Okays Bid For Radio System

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

Housing Authority commissioners approved Monday night a bid for a mobile radio system that is expected to enable the agency to move toward an improved, centralized system of maintenance for its property holdings.

Commissioners, after lengthy discussion relative to the merits of a mobile installation, accepted the $16,646 bid submitted by Motorola for the equipment. The system involves a repeater with associated tower and antenna to be installed at the authority's University Towers facility, a base station with antenna and tower to be placed at the central offices on Broad Street, nine portable units, and four monitor units.

Ken Noland, director of operations, said the list price for the equipment would be over $20,000. He said the city has a Motorola system and local servicing is available.

Noland suggested that the system will save the authority "considerable time" in its daily maintenance work and should improve overall service.

Joe Laney, executive director, said the Department of Housing and Urban Development has recommended in its management surveys that the authority improve its maintenance operations through a mobile radio system. Laney said he feels the authority needs to improve what he termed an "antiquated" maintenance system.

Commission chairman Jimmy Sutton noted that purchase of the system will not be the end of the expense as annual maintenance would be necessary and would have to be budgeted.

Laney reported that the authority has had communications recently with a legal services agency from Newtown Grove and a representative of the agency is apparently attempting to organize a group of local tenants to protest certain authority actions. Laney said the legal services agency is specifically alleging that the authority is not complying with federal regulations in computing rent charges for repairs, for excess utilities, and for other charges for service. He added that the agency has implied that a large number of tenants are involved.

The director said that the authority's basic position, which has been submitted to the legal services agency in writing, is that the relations between the authority and a tenant is based upon a contract in the form of a lease which sets forth both tenant and authority responsibilities. Under the lease, tenants are expected to take reasonable care of their units, he said, and if damages occur beyond normal wear and tear, the authority charges for repairs. In addition, if the allowance for utilities usage is exceeded, tenants are charged for the excess.

Consultant Offers Rescue Service Proposals

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

A consultant has suggested that Pitt County move cautiously in the direction of an advance of life support system with "due regard for the county's Association of Rescue Squads."

In a continuing series of discussions and suggestions on approaches to improve and expand emergency medical services in Pitt County, Commissioners were presented a report by Raymond G. Graham of Charleston, S.C. At the request of the county commissioners, Graham has spent several days in Pitt County with Fire Marshal Joyner and with members of the volunteer rescue squads throughout the county.

Graham commented that what impresses him above all "is the dedication of these men, many of them young, that is very much in evidence. You have a good group, a real foundation of people willing and motivated to serve."

Graham said the county units have the basic equipment and ambulances to provide a good basic life support system, with minimal cost to the county. He said that should the county decide to go into a basic life support system with intravenous capability, or if a decision is made to move into a paramedic system, "there will be a significant increase in the costs of supplies which may not be picked up by the hospital. Also, the initial setup of supplies and equipment for a paramedic system is substantial and the rescue squads may not be able to pick up the costs necessary for purchase and maintenance."

Noting that already the time required for volunteers to train to receive the emergency medical technician certification is a burden on volunteers, Graham feels "only the most dedicated with the time available to do so will be able to certify and maintain the certification required for intravenous capability."

Speaking of the experience of some of the best known fire departments noted for their rescue capabilities, Graham added "if you try to use a combination of volunteers and paid personnel, you may open up a number of old wounds. There is still some resentment between volunteers and the paid squad."

One suggestion Graham made relative to Pitt County rescue efforts is the need to have one individual responsible for standardizing training and to provide support to the individual training officers and their squads.

Knowledge Said A Preventive Health Care Factor

ECU News Bureau

The more you know about health, the more likely you will be able to seek preventive health care, say two East Carolina University sociologists.

Knowledge is the most important single factor in motivating a person to practice preventive health care, more so than money or the availability of medical services, the sociologists have found.

"This would underscore the need for continued health care education for the general public," according to Drs. Avtar Singh and James P. Mitchell in a report on their research study.

They also found that a community plays a significant role in determining whether a person practices preventive health care. They speculate, for instance, that elderly people in close-knit environments transmit health-related information by discussing ailments and comparing aches and pains.

In this regard, the study indicates the importance of community-wide health care education to preventive health care. There is a need to "recognize the notion of community as an important source for preventive health care in future investigations," says Singh and Mitchell.

If a community is informed on health care matters, and an individual feels good about his community, that individual is likely to do something about preventing disease, the report concludes.

"If we are to increase preventive health care utilization, dissemination of health care knowledge would appear to be a key element in motivating people to seek preventive health care. Future research effort may be devoted to a better understanding of the informal and formal social networks in the community conducive to a better public awareness about preventive health care," the report adds.

People knowledgeable about health matters and who are community oriented get dental examinations and blood-pressure checks before other preventive medical procedures, the research also shows. Other procedures measured in the Singh-Mitchell study include physical check-ups, eye tests and TB skin tests.

The study indicates, however, that reasons people practice preventive health care can differ between diseases.

"It would appear that what motivated people to seek physical examination may be considerably different from that prompting them to get a blood-pressure check..." the report explains.

From the questions asked the 293 eastern North Carolina households surveyed for the study, health knowledge outweighed all other factors driving a person to seek preventive health care. Community orientation, satisfaction with traditional health care, and a person's natural tendency to get health care, all ranked higher than income or availability of health care services, the two traditionally-held motivations for preventive health care the study shows.

The typical respondent in the report was about 40 years old with a high school education who had been married for about 19 years and who had lived in his community for about 18 years. The model family income of those questioned was from $10,000 to $19,000, although 13 percent of the households earned less than $5,000 per year. Eighty-seven percent reported to have a family doctor.

Drs. Singh and Mitchell, ECU sociology professors, presented their report at the 12th Annual Sociological Research Symposium in Richmond, Va. The ECU Research Committee partially funded the study.

Place On Farm For Computers

LINCOLNTON, N.C. (AP) — Computers are finding their way into the fields, as North Carolina farmers are applying the latest technology to the increasingly complex business of growing food.

"The difference between farmers of today and of old is that they still wear faded overalls, but today's farmer will pull ... a calculator out of his pocket to do his figuring rather than applying old-fashioned, seat-of-the-pants farm techniques," said Jim Knight, a spokesman for the North Carolina Department of Agriculture.

A computer at the Producer Cooperative Feed Mill in Union County is used to perform as many as 7 million computations to determine the best ingredient mix in turkey feed at the lowest cost.

Bob Shaw, secretary-treasurer of the group, said the computer saves as much as 75 cents per ton of feed.

Co-op members also can hook up to the main computer by way of a telephone hookup and home computer to get help with bookkeeping and other business matters.

Some farmers have installed home computers, or use computers at county agriculture extension offices.

"It used to be that a farmer could operate the old, traditional way, but as competition gets keener and the farmer gets caught between the cost-price squeeze, modern farm management needs quick information," said J.D. Dodson, a spokesman for the North Carolina Agriculture Extension Service.

He said farmers can use the computers to figure cost of production, what market prices to expect, and for payroll, taxes, inventory, accounts payable and budgeting.

Amended Gill Net Rules At Meeting

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Marine Fisheries Commission at a February 24 meeting amended a gill net regulation in the Roanoke River, passed a resolution opposing a proposed U.S. Coast Guard user-pay program, and passed another resolution recommending changes in water quality standards to more adequately protect coastal waters, according to Jerry Gaskill, commission chairman.

Stationary or fixed gill nets with a stretched mesh less than three inches can now be used from April 1 to May 31 from the mouth of Roanoke River to Highway 258 bridge.

The commission passed a resolution opposing a program being considered by the U.S. Department of Transportation for the U.S. Coast Guard. The proposed user-pay program implies a minimal annual fee of $1,350 for every commercial fishing vessel.

The commission passed a motion to support North Carolina Office of Coastal Management and North Carolina Division of Marine Fisheries recommendations to the Environmental Management Commission whereby water quality standards in some areas should be improved or broadened to more adequately address what many people believe to be declining water quality conditions along coastal North Carolina, and to give more consideration to the water quality needs for fisheries production in coastal waters.

- Handicapped children, 23 percent, 8,388 students;
- Vocational education, 19 percent, 11,963 students;
- Food service, 2 percent. (The statewide loss in the food service program for the current school year already is estimated at $20 million).

The resolution takes note that the proposed federal cuts "will have a comparable devastating affect on Greenville City Schools, as outlined for North Carolina as a whole;" and the proposed cuts come on top of "severe problems from the curtailment of state and local resources ... exacerbated by the current economic problems."

Other factors mentioned in the resolution include "many unanswered and potentially threatening problems in the proposed elimination of the Department of Education, the 'block grants,' and the 'new federalism' proposals."

In other actions, the school board:

- Approved Budget Amendment No. 11 in the current expense fund for $17,278 for the vocational education program. This provides funding for the earlier approved addition of equipment for a graphics course. Some $16,319 of the amount is from the fund balance appropriated.
- Granted permission for the annual field trip to Washington, D.C. for students in the Language Arts/Social Sciences classes at Aycock Junior High. The trip is scheduled for April 7, 8 and 9.
- Discussed, with action to be taken at the information meeting in April, the proposed school calendar for the forthcoming school year. The month's period before taking action will permit public input into the proposed calendar.

Delayed until a later date taking final action on the draft of the complete affirmative action plan. Dr. Blinson noted more time is needed to permit local groups and organizations to complete their responses to the draft, and also to provide input on the legal implications inherent in the plan.

Assured interested parents and teachers of students at Eastern Elementary School that consideration would be given to a request for the addition of dividers in the open classroom area of the K-1 wing.

A photographic portrait of Clarence Gray was officially accepted and will be placed in the library at Rose High. Gray, who was honored in a community wide special tribute on Feb. 20, is currently principal at Eastern Elementary School. He was an assistant principal at Rose for seven years.

Charges Are Placed

Charlene Langston, 24 of 1309A Fairfax Ave. was arrested about 1:25 p.m. Sunday on charges of larceny and assault on an officer, following an incident at Kroger's Save-on, according to Greenville Police Chief Glenn Cannon.

Cannon said Ms. Langston was stopped by an off-duty policeman after she allegedly attempted to take some merchandise from the store.

The assault charge came after Ms. Langston allegedly bit the officers hand as he attempted to take her into custody.

The concept of support for a "state of emergency" ordinance was given by commissioners, with the ordinance to receive a public hearing and vote at the next meeting of the board. The ordinance, according to Pitt County Fire Marshal Bobby Joyner, will, in effect, be a supplement to the already existing 1978 emergency preparation plan which deals with action to be taken by the county in the event of war. The state prepared ordinance, Joyner notes, is designed to cover non-war type emergencies, such as tornadoes, hurricanes, chemical spills and other natural disasters or civil disturbances.

Spring Footwear Looks Good

NEW YORK (AP) — This spring, your feet can feel as beautiful as they look, reports The Footwear Council. Thanks to the wide variety of heel heights making fashion news, from ballet flats to vampy stiletto-heel sandals, there's no need to sacrifice style for comfort.

"The footwear industry is recognizing that today's active, hard-working woman can't afford to let her shoes slow her down," says Andrea Rosen, fashion director of the council.

"Today, there is no one correct heel height. Women can select shoes that combine fashion and function. In fact, a wardrobe of shoes in several heel heights can contribute to the long-term health of your feet."

Podiatrists agree that many foot problems caused by improper shoes could be avoided by changing shoes several times a day, and fitting the shoe to the purpose.

Sky-high heels may have their place — for a special night out once in a while — but according to Dr. Rob Roy McGregor, medical consultant to The Footwear Council, extended wearing of high heels can cause problems throughout the body.

"Shoes with high heels throw the back out of alignment," explains

McGregor. "The results can include backache, tightness in the hip joints, and tension in the legs."

When high heels are worn every day, he explains, the calf muscles can actually become shortened, making it uncomfortable to wear low-heeled shoes. There may be a sensation of falling backward because of the pull on the muscles.

To correct this problem, it's necessary to gradually wean yourself away from high heels by switching to low shoes for a few hours every day, he notes.

The ideal heel height for work days ranges from 1 to 2 inches, say the experts. Low or mid-heel shoes distribute the body's weight more evenly; with very high heels, the weight must be borne by the balls of the feet, a burden that may lead to metatarsal problems, calluses and a burning sensation.

McGregor adds that shoes of moderate height hold the heel in a neutral position, essential to preserving the arch. The podiatrist says that broader heels offer more stability than slim ones, regardless of height — something to take into consideration if your job involves lots of walking or standing.

If long, brisk walks are part of your routine, the shoes that work best are not perfectly flat, as you might expect, but ones that have a little lift to them, McGregor says. A slightly raised heel, from 3/4 to 1 1/2 inches, encourages the heel-toe motion needed for a spring in your step. Completely flat shoes, such as sandals with no heels or tennis sneakers, don't offer the support and the slight angle that helps you maintain your momentum.

"Most of this spring's newest shoe shapes have heels somewhere in between perfectly flat and very high," says Ms. Rosen. "A pump with a sculptured Louis or court heel looks higher than it really is, because the heel is tapered inward. These new heels go comfortably from day into evening."

Wedges are also making a big comeback for spring, she says. The newest wedge heels, slightly tapered and more delicately sculptured than the ones of a few seasons ago, have enough height to give the leg a slim silhouette, yet are really quite walkable and provide good support to the entire foot, including the arch.

Some women will still favor high heels because they are so flattering to the legs, and have a festive look for dressy occasions, says Ms. Rosen. She recommends that if you must wear high heels to work, keep a pair of low-heel shoes in the office to give your feet a rest for a few hours in the middle of the day.

On those occasions when you find yourself standing for long periods in high heels (at a party, for instance), try to keep your weight centered in the middle of the heel. There's a tendency to let your ankles bend inward, a habit that can cause both aching feet and misshapen shoes.

"Good fit can prevent a lot of problems, regardless of heel height," Ms. Rosen points out. "Having enough toe room in a pair of high heels can make a big difference. And with flat shoes, buying half a size larger than usual may be a good idea, since the foot has a tendency to spread out."

"Visualize the situations in which you'll be wearing the shoes before you buy," advises Ms. Rosen. "It's important to choose shoes to match your lifestyle, as well as your clothing."

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

A lot of professions enjoy limited lifespans.

Dancers retire when the energy goes. Athletes retire when the legs go and sex symbols retire when the chins fall in their soup.

When the time comes, no one wants to go.

As a performing housewife of 30 years, I'm ready to go. I know, I thought I had 20 or 30 more good years ahead of me, but I'm lying to myself and am ready to hang it up.

It's been coming for some time now. Like a dancer, the energy just isn't there when I need it. There's no motivation. I no longer care that my distowels look like the seat of a mechanic's pants or that my cookie sheet was born the same year as Alan Alda.

No longer can I leap into the air in glorious exhilaration when my laundry smells fresh or glide my hands smoothly across a bathtub that doesn't feel gritty.

Like a ballplayer, I've lost my timing. There was a moment when I knew exactly when a child was going to split from the kitchen and lock himself in the bathroom to keep from doing dishes, but no more. They get away from me.

My average for creative meals used to be stunning.

A couple of years ago, I batted .355. I've been in a slump now for five years, reaching my all-time low the other night when I served a bowl of cottage cheese and leftover pizza.

Face it, the body is gone. Those legs that used to run trays up to the bedroom 18 times a day for a common cold have more ridges than corduroy. The form that used to drag out every morning and feed everyone now burrows under the covers like a lump and whimpers. I told the family last week, "I'm finally retiring." My husband said, "You've retired every week since we've been married." I told him, "This is different. I want to move over and let a younger woman take my place. I want to retreat from life and take my place in history, leaving the house only for an occasional award or a tribute ceremony at Kennedy Center, where they can dig up old home movies and testimonials of the housewife I used to be. This old soldier from the utility room is saying her last goodbye."

My husband said, "Before you go, could you drop off the dog at the vet's and my jacket at the cleaners?"

Somehow, I thought my leaving would be more poignant than that.

Friend Wants More Things

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am 84, single, of sound mind, in fairly good health, and I have no heirs. I recently completed a will with a bequest to a particular friend, and I made the mistake of telling her what I had willed to her.

Since then she has been asking for additional items! I told her plainly that my will was written and I had no intention of altering it. I wonder if other elderly people have had a similar experience, and if so, how they handled it.

This friend now appears to be more interested in my early demise than in me.

APPALLED

DEAR APPALLED: Ignore her requests. Feeling as you do, I wonder why you would want to leave her anything.

DEAR ABBY: I am living with a man. He's 29 and I'm 27. He's almost a saint. He doesn't smoke, drink or curse. He opens doors for me and treats me with the greatest respect. He would do anything in the world for me. He wants what most people want — home, family, love, etc. So do I. So what's the problem? I don't love him the way he loves me. He's very romantic, likes candlelight, soft music, long foreplay and the works. Me? I'm just a 1-2-3 lover. I do a lot for him (physically), but he doesn't really do that much for me. I'm honest. I don't play games. I try to explain that just because we have different needs doesn't make either one of us weird. We are just incompatible when it comes to love.

I have been in love and I know how it's supposed to be. I'm not really miserable with him, but I'm not completely happy either. Why do we both continue in this arrangement? Am I hurting both of us by staying?

He says he loves me and he's content. But is contentment enough? I don't want to hurt him. He's a wonderful man and most women would feel lucky to have him.

What do you make of this?

MISSING SOMETHING

DEAR MISSING: If he's content, knowing that you don't feel for him what he feels for you, you aren't being unfair to him. But whether you're being unfair to yourself is another question.

When people feel they're "missing something" (you provided the signature, I didn't), in time they usually go looking for it.

DEAR ABBY: I wonder why the feminist groups haven't challenged the age-old tradition of the bride's parents paying for the wedding. That custom dates back to the days when the male reigned supreme and a female was made to feel fortunate if a man asked to marry her. Parents of daughters used bribes (dowries) to unload them. And parents were only too happy to pay for the wedding. Talk about sex discrimination!

If women want equality with men, isn't it time they abolished that ridiculous, demeaning custom? Today's women work as hard as men, and many of them earn more than their husbands.

I'm for splitting the cost of the wedding 50-50. Are you with me, Abby?

FOR EQUALITY

DEAR FOR: One hundred percent!

Achieving Our Dreams

Local leaders met Saturday under the sponsorship of the Pitt County N.C. 2000 Steering Committee to help plan for North Carolina's future.

Chairman Tommy Edwards said the goal is to involve all citizens in the planning process.

"We will encourage them to reach out into their communities to build local awareness of the emerging issues and to give our citizens a clear voice in choosing future directions for the state."

Edwards said counties will be holding community meetings to obtain ideas from citizens and questionnaires will be distributed on which individual ideas can be recorded.

Kenneth Dews of Winterville, member of the Commission on the Future of North Carolina, discussed the efforts at the weekend meeting.

Looking forward to the year 2000 is not the easiest thing to do, particularly when we have enough problems today to be solved. The turn of the century is less than 20 years away, however. We must envision what we want life in North Carolina to be like if we are to achieve our dreams for our state.

Individualism Is Refreshing

State Trooper D.C. Whitt is probably fighting a losing battle.

The officer was slated to go unpaid last week because he objected to direct deposit of his state pay check. Whitt bases his objections to direct deposit on religious grounds.

The state has a side, of course. It maintains it can save a million dollars a year in check writing and mailing costs by making deposits of pay checks directly at the banks designated by the employee.

It can be recalled there were those who resisted the age of computer numbers for bank accounts, but the inexorable advance of check processing costs eventually made this a way of life.

Thus we can conclude that Trooper Whitt, reportedly the sole holdout among state employees, will eventually lose . . . but isn't it nice to know there is still some individualism remaining in America?

Freer Enterprise

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Free enterprise business built this nation, but almost lost it when businessmen either withdrew or were forced out of politics by increasingly liberal directions spawned in the New Deal of the 1930s.

Finally, free enterprise business is fighting its way back into control and things show promise of returning to sane times of lower taxes, less government spending and less regulation.

That is the message presented in an engrossing essay published in the February issue of "We the People of North Carolina," a periodical distributed by the North Carolina Citizens Association, a statewide coalition of business and industry leaders.

Richard J. Bryan is the author who details the history of the decline and near-fall of the nation's economy, and espouses the firm belief that businessmen are now committed to recapturing a major role in politics.

Bryan is senior counsel for government regulatory affairs at Burlington Industries, Inc., in Greensboro. He has been an assistant U.S. Attorney in the Eastern District and legislative assistant to U.S. Senator Jesse Helms.

Degrees He holds degrees in economics and law, is a member of the Guilford County Board of Elections and is treasurer of the Republican Lawyers Association of North Carolina.

Bryan traces what he considers the history of the vacuum created by the withdrawal of business from national debate and political action. Social reformers with liberal notions moved in with "little understanding of capitalism, free enterprise, the immutable laws of competition and of supply and demand, the function of price in allocating scarce resources in the most productive fashion," Bryan writes.

Pressure for social goals gradually increased while the economy remained relatively stable, until the 1960s when heavy government spending and budget deficits of the combined War on Poverty and the Vietnam War — "coupled with a regulator frenzy, eroded business profits and lowered the real value of people's incomes," Bryan notes. Government came to depend upon inflation, income tax bracket creep, and deficits to fund programs at a level which stifled productivity.

"What was often overlooked was that the new regulatory burden . . . was causing business to become less productive, thereby providing fewer goods for the selling money supply to chase . . . inflation was an inevitable result. It was also inevitable that politicians would blame the inflation on everyone and everything but themselves, from OPEC oil prices to greedy businessmen to unproductive labor to wasteful consumers," Bryan said.

Also ignored was the rule that "the most important social goal of any government is to create a climate for general prosperity," he notes.

Intolerable But business reached an intolerable situation by the middle 1970s. It had been pushed too far. About the same time, political liberals reached too far and spread too thin as they enjoyed success after success. Then came Watergate and the election reforms which followed. Bryan considers this "a most convenient coincidence," since it made possible creation of corporate political action committees.

Businessmen ready to fight back now found the weapons: money for business-oriented candidates, and organizations to carry on public information and education campaigns.

Meanwhile, regulatory agencies "had developed as

Other Editors Say A Clash To Avoid

(Washington Daily News)

When former U.S. Senator Robert Morgan a few days ago intimated that he would like to return to the U.S. Senate and to "have a voice speaking for us," he surely knew what he was saying and he certainly knew the political ripples that would follow across North Carolina.

We are somewhat surprised to learn that he seems to prefer to run against Senator Jesse Helms in 1984 than to wait and run again against Senator John East in 1986.

But in looking out into the dim distance and trying to see what might well happen, politically speaking, we look at what Mr. Morgan said, the position that Governor Jim Hunt finds himself in today, and the tremendous task of defeating Senator Helms.

If Mr. Morgan should decide to take on Senator Helms and should Mr. Hunt decide to do the very same thing, then we have a big Democratic party fight for the party nomination. And a primary race between Mr. Morgan and Mr. Hunt would be a costly contest and drain off a lot of resources so badly needed in the election in the effort to beat Mr. Helms.

Of course, one of them might decide to take on Senator Helms in 1984 and the other might decide to wait and take on Mr. East in 1986. Even then, there could be Democratic opposition and a primary to win, but it would not be as critical as would a race between Mr. Morgan and Mr. Hunt.

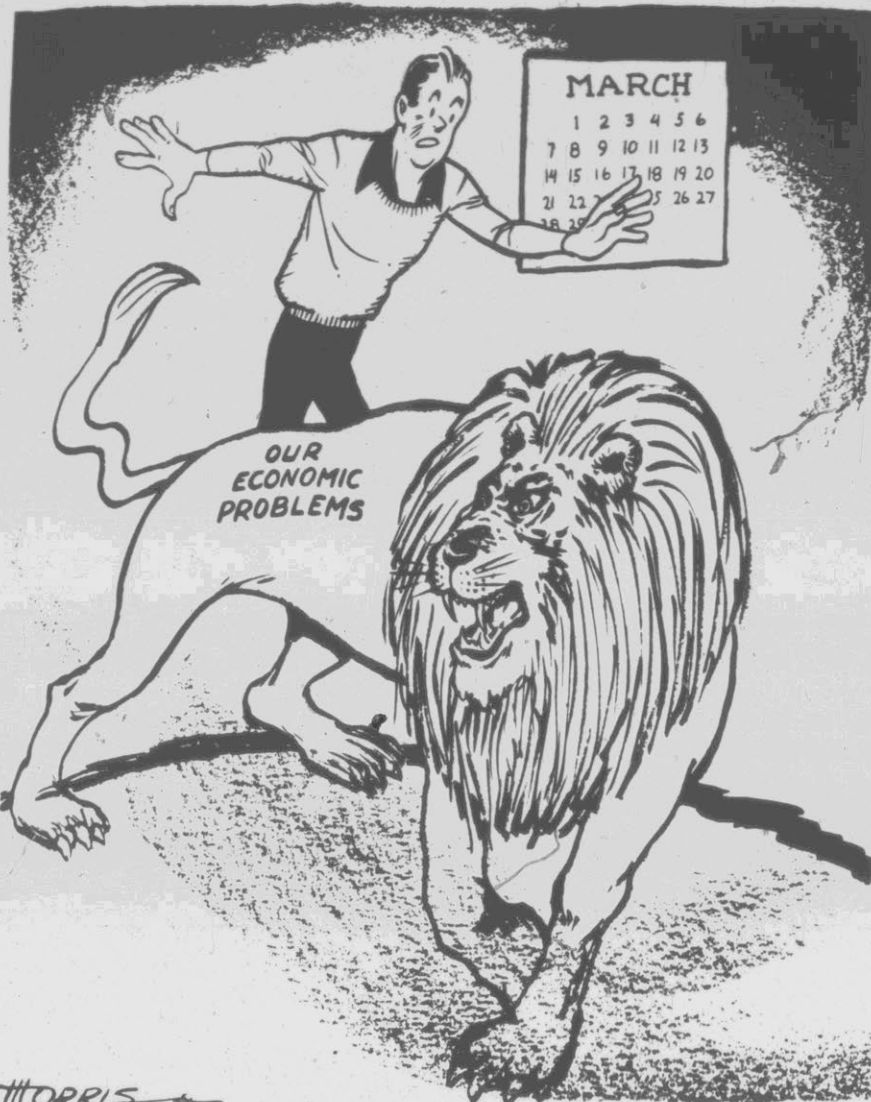

Somehow, we have heretofore felt in recent times that Mr. Morgan might be more interested in the judiciary than in the legislative branch of government. We have believed that he might wish to be on either the N.C. Court of Appeals or the N.C. Supreme Court. He is a top-flight attorney, well recognized by his fellow lawyers for his ability. But what he said a few days ago about getting back into political harness and running again for the senate sounds a drum beat heard all over our state.

It is quite evident that Jesse Helms is not going to be an easy candidate to beat. He has plenty of money behind him and a strong conservative record that appeals to a large following in North Carolina. He is recognized nationally as a real conservative power in the U.S. Senate. Few senators dare cross him. He has managed to establish a power base that few ever imagined he could do.

Senator East has not had the opportunity to establish himself as firmly as has Senator Helms. As of this year he will have served only two years.

It could be a political disaster for Mr. Morgan and Mr. Hunt to engage in any blood-letting party primary. We just cannot believe it will happen. Surely both men would wish to avoid it, and we feel they will.

Familiar, Predictable

WASHINGTON — The week brings two reports on cigarettes and cancer, one from the Surgeon-General, the other from the Tobacco Institute. The two reports are as predictable as the phases of the moon. The public health people are convinced that cigarettes cause cancer. The tobacco people are convinced that the charge has yet to be proved.

A personal note: I have been a smoker off and on for the past 45 years. Five years ago I quit. I thought I had quit for good. Then one Friday morning I was mugged down in southeast Washington, and my shaking hands reached for a cigarette. It was all on earth I wanted. Now this lousy, satisfying habit has me back in its clutches and I wish it didn't. I can't think of one good thing to say about cigarettes.

With that apology on record, let me make a point and state a moral. The point is that the tobacco people are quite right. The causal relationship of cigarettes and cancer hasn't been proved; it still is only statistically inferred. The moral is that we ought always to beware of statistics. If I were teaching journalism, I would require my students to take one year of statistics for every semester of news writing, and I'd turn out better reporters.

JAMES J. KILPATRICK

The anti-smoking people have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars trying to prove medically that cigarettes cause cancer. They once cut holes in the throats of 86 beagles and set the dogs to puffing furiously for 876 days. Then they killed the dogs and looked at their lungs. The findings were so uncertain that the study embarrassed everyone who had a hand in it. In another experiment, researchers shaved the ears of rabbits and the backs of mice, and painted the shaved skin with tobacco tar. It was as if the animals had smoked 100,000 cigarettes a day. When the experiment ended, the researchers had dead rabbits with dirty ears.

To this day, a quarter-century after anti-cigarette research began in earnest, a scientifically respectable animal study has yet to demonstrate even the minimal "proof" adduced as to saccharin, formaldehyde and cyclamates. The evidence of causality is still statistical evidence.

Statistics are facts, but when that has been said a (Please turn to Page 5)

ENDS AND MEANS

There are many definitions of democracy, but one element common to them all is that democracy is a form of government which makes man an end in himself and government a means. Communism, and all other forms of totalitarianism, reverse the process and make man a means and government an end.

We have many blessings for which we can be thankful, but none are greater than the freedom of the institutions under which we live. Imperfect? Of course. We can get dreadfully stirred up at election time, and rightfully so. But when the smoke of battle has cleared away, we are all again members of a free, although imperfectly functioning, form of government.

Among the greatest tragedies of history are the traumatic occurrences which have led people to substitute authoritarianism for democratic government. Perhaps the incidence of these could be lessened if people could keep clearly in mind the relationship between ends and means. — Elisha Douglass

Refused To Steer Clear

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — President Reagan personally overruled pollster Richard Wirthlin and White House chief of staff James A. Baker III in deciding to Jace his Caribbean Basin speech with tough warnings against "Soviet-backed, Cuban-managed support for violent revolution in Central America."

Wirthlin's polling data, showing popular fears of U.S. military involvement in El Salvador, convinced Baker and other senior White House staffers that Reagan should steer clear of the worsening security problem in the Caribbean. They wanted the speech limited to the president's new economic and trade program.

National security aide William P. Clark, joined by Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Assistant Secretary Tom Enders, objected strenuously. However, Reagan had exactly the same reaction himself without any prompting. He took an early draft of the speech, stripped by White House speechwriters of the offending rhetoric, and personally inserted seven tough paragraphs attacking the Soviet-Cuban campaign "to establish Cuban-style Marxist-Leninist dictatorships" throughout Central America.

Jack Kemp's 'Education'

When Rep. Jack Kemp ran into Secretary of State Alexander Haig in the White House Feb. 23, four days after Haig was reported saying, "We need to educate the Jack Kemps of the world," Kemp asked: "When is my education going to start, Mr. Secretary?"

The report on Kemp's "education" was included in the Washington Post's revelation of private comments attributed to Haig at his early-morning meetings with State Department aides.

Haig, reaching out to shake hands with the conservative congressman, said he felt "very badly" about the remark attributed to him. Kemp minimized the embarrassing incident genially accepted Haig's apology. The secretary's "education" crack resulted from Kemp's strong opposition to heavy U.S. financing of multinational foreign aid programs.

Putting Jerry Down

Edmund G. (Jerry) Brown Jr., who in his eighth and last year as governor of California has not yet gained the respect of fellow governors, was put down harshly by a Democratic colleague during a wide-attended reception during the recent governors' conference in Washington.

"Jerry, you've demeaned us all," snapped Gov. Bruce Babbitt, criticizing Brown's unrestrained attack on President Reagan's new federalism. Babbitt, one of the most highly-respected governors among his colleagues, is a liberal Democrat but wants Reagan's ideas to get serious attention and sober criticism.

On the next day, Brown proved again that he is a quick learner. Interviewed over national television, he took a much more conciliatory posture, asserting that Reagan's proposals should be given thorough study as the basis for possible compromise.

Send For Greenspan

In the midst of the chaos caused by Congressional Republicans against the Reagan budget, one senior White House aide is privately pushing for the return to Washington of balanced-budget militant Alan Greenspan as Reagan's economic czar.

Greenspan, who runs a highly-profitable economic consulting firm in New York City, is unlikely to come to Washington full-time. Nevertheless, the senior aide's desire for Greenspan to become Reagan's economic strongman exposes disaffection about Reaganomics within the president's own staff.

As a strict fiscal conservative who believes budget deficits are the source of most evil, Greenspan never has been enthusiastic about Reagan's supply-side tax cuts. An opponent of tax reduction when he was President Ford's chief economic adviser, Greenspan in a similar role for Reagan probably would try to sidetrack the cuts passed last year.

Western intelligence ports communist China has established close contact with Soviet-oriented French Communist Party, an important development that can be used by both friends and foes of clove U.S. ties with Peking.

Chinese contacts with the French Communist Party, a member of the left coalition governing France has gone far enough to tentatively schedule high-level talks this spring endorsed the Soviet-directed imposition of martial law in Poland.

This development, say opponents of strong Washington-Peking links, proves that communist China cannot be depended upon to renew its Soviet connection. But in the State Department's view, this only shows what will happen if the U.S. angers Peking by getting too close to Taiwan.

A Difference In Expectations

By JOHN CUNIFF

AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Which estimate of the 1983 budget deficit is correct? The Reagan administration's $91.5 billion, or the Congressional Budget Office's figure of $121 billion? Who is right: Reagan or Rivlin?

To suggest that neither is right might be correct, but verification awaits the passage of time. Meanwhile, the disparity can be accounted for by an old a persistent theme: Differences in expectations.

Those differences, many so subjective they cannot be measured, demonstrated or proven by any scientific technique, pervade today's economic analyses, and in fact the direction of the economy itself.

In the budget dispute, the president assumes that the economy will improve more sharply and provide more revenues than does Alice Rivlin, director of the budget office. On the spending side, he feels he can operate more efficiently than Mrs. Rivlin and staff assumes he can.

To say that the administration's view of things includes a good deal of hope might be close to the truth. It assumes, for example, that leases of federal lands will be at maximum rates, recession or not.

The budget office, however, is no less gully, assuming as it does that the country will enjoy bumper crops, thus adding to the cost of price supports, an assumption that no farmer would take for granted.

Equally subjective expectations and assumptions are found throughout the economic world, even among those econometric model builders who reduce economic activity to piles of numbers and then seek to make the numbers interact in what they think is a manner similar to the economy.

The result of their activity is, of course, more numbers, some drawn out to hundreds of a unit of whatever it is they are measuring or projecting, giving the impression of great accuracy and objectivity.

Some of this activity is nonsense. Some of the numbers that go into the recipe are guesses. Many are rounded estimates. And some of the hardest looking numbers used are, for practical purposes, inaccurate.

National income as provided by the Commerce Department, for example, measures only domestic activity, though the U.S. economy operates extensively overseas. Corporate profits as reported to the Internal Revenue Service differ from profits as reported to shareholders because of accounting procedures. Still, they are sometimes interchanged.

Inevitably, and especially when a forecaster has a choice between using one or the other of two differing measures of the same economic activity, his own subjective expectations are likely to intrude.

Consider what expectations are currently doing to the economy.

Although they have now become more realistic, administration officials had hoped that the private sector would more quickly pick up economic slack left by the alleged reduction in federal activity. Since expectations were overly optimistic, projections became skewed.

The private sector in recent months has held to its own expectations, which obviously have been different from those of the Reagan people. And for once these expectations can be measured with some objectivity.

To illustrate, there is what is called an interest rate premium at work in the economy today. Historically, a real interest rate — that is, the percentage by which the cost of money exceeds the inflation rate — is about 3 percent or so. But current interest rates exceed inflation by double that percentage, a condition that suggests fear of the future.

That is, lenders are not yet convinced that the administration has licked inflation. Yes, they are impressed, but they are still fearful that inflation could force interest rates higher.

Therefore, rather than drop rates now, and be stuck with them for many years into the future, lenders are said to be protecting themselves. They are keeping rates "artificially" high. They're asking a premium.

Their expectations, it is said, have not yet reached levels as high as those of the president, and because their expectations have not, the president's expectations are all the more difficult to achieve.

Pitt Rescue Service....

"If you go into intravenous or paramedic training, standardized training will be even more important and will also require direct medical input. Paid personnel can have this training as part of their duty assignment. Volunteers will find it very difficult to find time to train."

Other aspects of an emergency medical service touched on by Graham included communications and operations. In the field of communications, Graham suggests that central dispatchers receive a training program that will set up a uniform signal code, a protocol for handling rescue requests, and a review of the entire county road system and landmarks. Also suggested by Graham is that the same program include teaching radio technique to doctors, nurses and anyone else with access to the radio system.

In concluding his presentation, Graham said "I have found that you already have the capability of a very good basic life support system. As approximately 85 percent of your emergency medical service calls will require no more than this, you are in good shape. For that other 15 percent which really gets into the reduction of death and morbidity, you will have to make some very difficult decisions.

"Under the current economic pinch, you will have to consider picking up the additional costs involved with intravenous capability and paramedic levels. You may want to consider putting paramedics into a separate county organization and tie it into the use of sprint cars for paramedic backup.

"I would suggest that you move in the direction of an advance of life support system but that it be done cautiously and with due regard to Pitt County's Association of Rescue Squads. Without their help and support, you'll set back several years emergency medical service as a system. With their support, you'll be able to set up a fine system offering advanced life support capabilities to all the residents of the county."

Commissioners were unanimous in expressing appreciation to Graham for what they termed a complete, informative job of researching the status of the county rescue squads and preparing suggestions for the commissioners to consider.

Applying For New TV Sta.

Elcom Inc., a firm headed by Dr. and Mrs. Charles E. Franklin of Jacksonville, and Mr. and Mrs. Ebern E. Allen of Bethel, has applied to the Federal Communications Commission to construct a new television broadcast station in Greenville.

The station will, if approved, operate on UHF Channel 14, with power of 5,000 kilowatts, and a 1,500 foot tall antenna.

Allen said this morning that the proposed transmitter will be located on N.C. 118, 2.1 miles east of Grifton — the site of the old WITN-TV antenna — while the studios will be located in Greenville.

"We'll be an independent station," Allen explained, with "30 percent local programming, 30 percent sports, and 30 percent syndicated programming. The rest," he said, will be "public service and news."

He said the $4.1 million project, including tower, transmitter and a $750,000 mobile production van described as a "mini tv station," is designed to serve seven cities in Eastern North Carolina.

Approval of the application, Allen said, is expected in April. The new station is expected to be on the air "within 18 months from now."

Franklin, president of Elcom, is a veterinarian and owns radio station WJIK in Jacksonville. Allen, vice-president, is operator of a public relations firm in Bethel.

Housing Board...

Laney said "to the best of our knowledge, the Housing Authority is in full compliance with...regulations."

The authority, he said, also has a grievance procedure whereby a tenant with a complaint can be heard on an individual basis. Laney said that federal law states that grievance procedures are not a vehicle for group pressure to force demands on an authority.

The authority does not plan to have group meetings on the matter but is willing to review all complaints and meet with a tenant on an individual basis, he said.

The director said the legal services agency also indicated dissatisfaction with the authority's new policy of assessing late charges on non payment of rent. Laney said the policy has been approved by HUD.

He explained that tenant rent is due and payable in advance on the first of the month. The authority allows five working days for payment as a grace period but on the sixth day the rent is delinquent. The tenant is notified in writing that the rent is past due, he said, but a petition can not be filed with the magistrate until the 14th of the month. Laney said that some tenants have apparently decided that since the petition can not be filed until the 14th, they will hold their rents until the 15th. He said "that is not legal."

Laney said the authority is willing to check each tenant situation and make an adjustment if there is a rent charge mistake.

In other business last night, commissioners authorized the negotiation of a contract for rental uniforms for authority employees. Under the rental situation, the employee participates in approximately half of the cost, involving some $1.50 to $1.70 per month. The cost to the authority will be approximately $1,600 per year.

The board members authorized the staff to negotiate the contract, providing that the rental company allows the authority to accept no responsibility for the uniforms.

Commissioners also authorized the agency to dispose of several pieces of obsolete equipment, including manual calculators and typewriters, through negotiated sale.

Laney said the authority is in "good shape" relative to the Section Eight program activity here. He said that 102 units are under lease in the existing housing segment, while 74 of the authorized 100 units under the moderate rehabilitation program are under lease and rehabilitation work is underway on 21 more units. All 60 units in the University Towers mid-rise for the elderly are rented, he said.

Laney said the authority is no longer accepting applications for existing or moderate rehabilitation work.

He reported that the authority has submitted a proposal to HUD for scattered site utilization of 40 new units of low-rent family housing. Laney said that sites in the West Meadowbrook section, most of them owned by the city, are being studied as possible locations.

Commissioners voted to sponsor the nomination of a high school senior as a candidate for a $1,000 scholarship offered by the Carolinas Council of Housing and Redevelopment Officials. The authority will be in competition among over 100 housing authorities in the state for the scholarship, which is awarded to a needy student.

Sallye Streeter, director of tenant affairs, said that average rents in the authority's six housing areas in February included: NC 22-1 (Meadowbrook), $80.59; NC 22-2 (Kearney Park), $93.43; NC 22-3 (Moyewood), $98.36; NC 22-4 (Moyewood), $92.40; NC 22-5 (Hopkins Park), $74.12; and NC 22-6 (Newtown), $79.04.

A spokesman for the Surry County Sheriff's Department said Monday they are looking for a seventh person in connection with the case. Detective Jimmy Miller said the arrests were the result of undercover purchases and searches. He said the operation began last October and arrests were a fourth branch of government, largely uncontrolled and uncontrollable..." Bryan recalls. Businessmen who had spent untold time and money fighting regulatory excesses in the courts now found they could influence political decisions at the top which were quicker and more effective, Bryan notes.

An offensive on the regulatory front and political action by business "is going a long way toward reassertion of sensible national economic and business policy, in turn making possible the unleashing of the human creativity, imagination and daring that always have been the essence of the free enterprise system," Bryan writes.

vast deal remains to be said. For facts come in all colors, sizes, shapes and weights. It is a fact, let us agree, that "x" number of persons die of cancer. Very well. How factual is that fact? The tobacco people point out correctly that such facts are derived historically from death certificates, and death certificates are historically inaccurate.

Much of the evidence cast in this week's report from the Surgeon-General is cast in terms of mortality data. Cancer victims are posthumously classified. An "x" percentage were smokers; a much lower "y" percentage were non-smokers. Very well. Those are facts. But how factual are these facts? What about the prototype dead smoker? When did he start smoking? What brands? How did he inhale? Where did he live at different ages in his life? What were his occupations?

Some of the statistics serve to puzzle, not to prove. Between 1949 and 1971, the rate of cancer of the pharynx went down as to white males, up as to non-white males. The rate of bladder cancer went up for men, down for women. Cancers of the esophagus went up for non-whites, down for whites. How come? If cigarettes were carcinogens as surely as cyanides are poison, every person who smokes would come down with cancer. But this is not so. Some heavy smokers live to their 90s and die not of cancer, but of boredom. How come? We don't know how come.

Cancer may be caused by elements in the air we breathe, the food we eat, the clothes we wear. The high incidence of cancer among heavy smokers may be explained not by the chemistry of nicotine but by the personality of the individual. Maybe heavy smokers are more susceptible to stress, and maybe the stress triggers cancer.

I don't mean to challenge the persuasive nature of the statistical evidence. It is almost as persuasive as the trout in Thoreau's dish of milk. But to assert, as the Surgeon-General asserts, that tobacco is a "major cause" of cancer is to put more weight on statistical scaffolds than the structures were meant to bear.

will end up before the U.S. Supreme Court even if they are approved by the U.S. Justice Department, a state attorney says.

The state will find out by April 22 whether the plans have met with approval from the Justice Department, which rejected plans submitted earlier.

But the plans still face court challenges brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's Legal Defense Fund and the N.C. Republican Party.

The suits have been combined and a three-judge panel of Dickson Phillips Jr. of the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, and Franklin T. Dupree Jr. and Earl Britt of the Eastern District will hear them.

Jim Wallace, special deputy attorney general, said the plans along with a legal justification were submitted to the Justice Department last week. Earlier House Senate and congressional redistricting plans that were rejected had no legal justification accompanying them.

"We decided it's best to defend the thing when you submit it, rather than just letting the papers stand by themselves," Wallace said.

Wallace said the major issue is whether the state should have single-member districts statewide for the House and the Senate.

Any appeal goes automatically to the U.S. Supreme Court, he said, and "chances are very, very good" the case will end up there.

The plans are only nine pages total. The documentation includes transcripts of committee meetings, floor debates and a public hearing. The Justice Department must approve the plans because 40 of the state's 100 counties come under the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

Wallace said Justice attorneys had indicated they would have a decision for the state within 30 days, "but I wouldn't bet the house on it." Under law the Justice Department has up to 60 days to decide under law.

WINNERS — Reena Beth Gordon, 16, the winner of the Westinghouse Science Talent Search, is flanked by second place winner Ronald Marc Kantor, 17, right, and Ogan Gurel, 17, the third place winner, during award banquet for the competition Monday evening in Washington. All three winners are from New York City schools, but were judged over nearly 1,000 competitors from 49 states, all of whom presented research projects. First place is a $12,000 scholarship, with $10,000 each for second and third. (AP Laserphoto)

Science Awards Won By New York Students

By WARREN E. LEARY
 AP Science Writer
 WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time in a decade, high school students from New York City have captured all three top scholarship prizes in the nation's biggest science talent contest. Major winners in this year's Westinghouse Science Talent Search, announced in ceremonies on Monday, developed complicated projects in linguistics, nuclear physics and computer programming. The top scholarship winners are seniors from New York City high schools, which traditionally produce strong contenders, contest officials say. But the last time Gotham youngsters took all three top slots was in 1972. Reena Beth Gordon, 16, of Midwood High School in Brooklyn, won the country's premier high school science contest and a $12,000 scholarship for combining her interests in mathematics and language. Miss Gordon, also an accomplished classical pianist and cellist, constructed a mathematical model of speech that she believes represents the process listeners follow in correctly interpreting certain natural ambiguities in the English language. "This model generates possible structures for various types of word strings, and correctly predicts a listener's preferred interpretations," said the winner, who plans to attend Harvard-Radcliffe College. Completing the New York City sweep of top prizes with $10,000 scholarships are second-place winner Ronald Marc Kantor, 17, of the Bronx, and third-place winner Ogan Gurel, 17, of Manhattan. A senior at Riverdale Country School, Kantor won for a plasma physics project related to the development of fusion energy sources. Kantor, who plans to study physics at Princeton University, investigated the method of using powerful magnetic "mirrors" to confine the superhot plasma gas needed in fusion. Gurel, who was born in Ankara, Turkey, developed a universal system for writing instructions, or "software," for computers using so-called 16-bit microprocessors. A Stuyvesant High School soccer star who plans to attend Harvard, Gurel said his system, with slight modifications, could be used to develop software programs for any 16-bit microprocessor. The students learned the winners of the 41st annual talent search Monday night at a Washington banquet. Over the weekend, the 40 national finalists from 16 states met with a panel of eight scientists who named the winners of $89,500 in scholarships this year. The contest, which has seen five former winners receive the Nobel Prize since 1972, is sponsored by the Westinghouse Educational Foundation and conducted by Science Service, a non-profit Washington organization. More than 70 percent of the winners have had time to complete higher education have earned Ph.D. or M.D. degrees, and the program has picked up the sporting nickname of "Nobel Farm Club."

Kremlin Hikes Help To Poland

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet leaders assured Polish Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski that the Kremlin will step up economic aid to his martial law regime, official Soviet sources said today. The sources, who asked not to be identified, said President Leonid I. Brezhnev and Premier Nikolai A. Tikhonov told Jaruzelski during two days of talks here that Moscow will provide Warsaw with more aid than had been agreed to only two months ago. The two countries signed a 1982 trade and payments protocol in early January. The Soviets have never disclosed how much aid they will provide Poland this year, but a Radio Warsaw broadcast said that Soviet economic aid, mainly in the form of trade credits, would amount to the equivalent of $3.86 billion in 1982. There was no word how much more the Soviets are now willing to provide the Poles. Radio Moscow said Jaruzelski and his party left for home after the talks. In Warsaw, the Communist Party daily Trybuna Ludu said today that humanitarian aid to Poland has quadrupled since the start of martial law last December. While not providing specific figures, the paper said most of the aid was provided by the American aid agency CARE, the International Red Cross and other Western organizations. Jaruzelski, an army general who also is Poland's Communist Party chief, pledged Monday night that his country "will not abandon the road of socialism; it will not be its weak link." "Poland is in a very grave economic situation," Jaruzelski said at a Kremlin dinner after arriving for his first visit to the Soviet Union since he imposed martial law on Dec. 13. He thanked the Soviet Union for its "irreplaceable" assistance but warned: "Without a substantial broadening of the cooperation... a way out of the crisis would be impossible." Brezhnev replied that "a better day" was coming to Poland. "We helped socialist Poland the best we could," he said, "and we shall continue helping it."

By The Associated Press Presspoll favorite North Carolina, which reigned over the elite of college basketball from the beginning of the season until late January, once again rules the Associated Press poll following a week of upsets among the nation's Top Twenty teams.

A dozen members of last week's Top Twenty, including then top-ranked Virginia, lost at least one game during the week. West Virginia, ranked sixth at the time, also saw its 23-game winning streak — the longest in the country — end against Rutgers.

North Carolina, ranked second last week, collected 36 of 60 first-place votes in the balloting by nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters Monday. The Tar Heels, 24-2 following victories over Georgia Tech and Duke last week, picked up 1,162 of a possible 1,200 points — 40 more than runner-up DePaul.

Ray Meyer's Blue Demons received 16 first-place votes after raising their record to 26-1 with victories over Furman and Notre Dame. DePaul now has the nation's longest major winning streak at 21 games.

Virginia slipped to No.3 following its 47-46 loss at Maryland. The Cavaliers still managed five first-place votes and 1,097 points.

Oregon State, which has clinched the Pac-10 title and an NCAA tournament berth, and Missouri retained the fourth and fifth positions, respectively, although Missouri was surprised by Kansas State, 57-56, early in the week.

Oregon State, which got three first-place votes, received 1,043 points, while Missouri, now 23-2, got 797.

Idaho, 24-2, jumped up three positions and edged Minnesota and Georgetown, D.C., in that order, for the No.6 position. The Vandals had 766 points — 32 more than the Gophers, who were ranked 13th last week when they downed Big Ten rival Iowa. The Hoyas of Georgetown, 23-6 after victories over Providence and Connecticut, were another 10 points back at 724.

West Virginia, now 24-2, and Tulsa, ranked eighth last week when it was upset by Bradley in overtime, rounded out the Top Ten. The Mountaineers got 617, while the Golden Hurricane had 565 to nip both Iowa (562) and Fresno State (560) for 10th place.

Memphis State slipped three slots to No.13 following a loss to red-hot Louisville, and was followed by Arkansas, Kentucky, Wake Forest, Kansas State, Alabama, UCLA and Alabama-Birmingham, which won the Sun Belt Conference tournament Sunday and a berth in the NCAA tournament.

San Francisco, outlasted by Pepperdine last week, and Tennessee, a losers to both Georgia and Auburn last week, fell from the Top Twenty, being replaced by Kansas State and Alabama-Birmingham.

Last week, the Second Ten was low, Georgetown, Minnesota, Fresno State, Arkansas, San Francisco, Alabama, Wake Forest, Tennessee and UCLA.

ECU Netters Win Opener

East Carolina's men's tennis team opened the spring 1982 season yesterday with a 9-0 victory over Mt. Olive Junior College.

The Pirates had little trouble with the Trojans, allowing no more than four wins in a set throughout the afternoon.

"Two of our starters, Barry Parker and Ted Lepper did not play singles," assistant coach Alan Farfour pointed out. "That gave some of our new members (Don Fairman, Cole King and Paul Owen) a chance to play. I was pleased with the way they played. (Keith) Zengel played well at the number one spot. Overall it was a good first match for us."

East Carolina returns to action on March 15, hosting Atlantic Christian College.

L.A. Renews Valenzuela's Contract

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fernando Valenzuela and his representatives have been unable to agree on salary terms with the Los Angeles Dodgers. So the defending world champions, obviously out of patience, have unilaterally renewed the pitching sensation's contract for 1982.

The Dodgers said Monday night in announcing their decision that Valenzuela, who became the first pitcher in major league history to receive the Cy Young Award and Rookie of the Year award in the same season, will be the highest paid second-year big leaguer in history. Terms were not announced.

Valenzuela, who earned a reported $42,500 as a rookie last year, was 13-7 with a 2.48 earned run average in the strike-interrupted season. He led the majors in shutouts with eight and strikeouts with 180.

It is believed that the contract calls for the 21-year-old left-hander to receive $300,000 in 1982, the club's original offer. The Associated Press was told by a source close to the Dodgers that the National League team made a higher offer during negotiations, but went back to its original offer when it renewed the contract.

Through his representatives, Antonio DeMarco and Dick Moss, Valenzuela reportedly had asked the Dodgers for at least $1 million for the coming season. The club reportedly opened the negotiations offering $300,000 and had raised it during talks, but not significantly.

The two sides, including Valenzuela, met for more than three hours Sunday and held another session Monday. The meetings proved fruitless.

DeMarco said by telephone that he would wait until the contract arrived by registered mail before issuing any definitive statement.

"We are going to wait to receive the contract because they didn't extend us the amount," said DeMarco, referring to what he was told by the Dodgers over the telephone. "We're going to wait and we'll see what happens."

"Fernando would like to be in Florida when we arrive at an arrangement that is satisfactory. We maintain that we are fair and not unreasonable."

When asked if he was upset by what has happened, DeMarco said, "No."

Valenzuela, from the Mexican state of Sonora, has no recourse in the matter except to remain on the sidelines. As a second-year player, he was not eligible for either salary arbitration or the free-agent re-entry draft. Under terms of the Basic Agreement, a team can cut the salary of a player whose contract is renewed by a maximum of 20 percent.

Clubs are allowed to renew the contracts of eligible players between March 1-10.

Steve Brenner, the Dodgers' publicity director, issued a statement Monday night quoting both club President Peter O'Malley and Vice President Al Campanis.

"We have tried hard to sign Fernando and we have made a number of very fair offers," said O'Malley. "Many proposals were exchanged and considered, but we were unable

Two Decades Ago! Wilt Chamberlain (13) is engulfed by teammates on the Philadelphia Warriors and fans, on the court at Hershey, Pa., March 2, 1962, after he scored his 100th point. He thus set eight National Basketball Association records that still stand. (AP Laserphoto)

Wilt's 100 Twenty Years Have Passed Since Chamberlain's Record-Breaking Performance Against New York

NEW YORK (AP) — Wilt Chamberlain seemed surprised that 20 years had gone by since that incredible game in which he scored 100 points and set eight National Basketball Association records that still stand.

"Twenty years? I didn't realize I was getting that old," Chamberlain, 45, smiled. "Frankly, I didn't even know the anniversary was coming up until you fellows mentioned it."

It was March 2, 1962 that Chamberlain, then in his third year with the Philadelphia Warriors, became the only NBA player to score 100 points in a game and forever inscribed Hershey, Pa., in the minds of sports fans for something other than candy bars.

In that game, which Philadelphia won 169-147 over the New York Knicks, Chamberlain set records for most points in a game; most points in a half (59 in the second half); most field goals attempts in a quarter (21), half (37) and game (63); most field goals made in a half (22) and game (36); most free throws made in game (28).

"I wasn't aware of how many points I had until I hit 75, and the fans started to chant, 'We want 100. We want 100.'" Chamberlain reached 75 points in the fourth quarter, and some writers who were there recalled that public address announcer Dave Zinkoff began to announce Chamberlain's point total at about that time.

The fans also were chanting, "Give it to Wilt," which were the same instructions given the players by Warriors Coach Frank McGuire, who said he had a feeling when Chamberlain had 69 points by the end of the third quarter that 100 points was possible.

Wilt's teammates, who had been kidding him that winter about averaging 47 shots a game, really didn't need McGuire's orders. They, too, were caught up in the excitement.

"My teammates made more of a conscious effort than I did," Chamberlain recalled. "They took it upon themselves to be sure I got the ball. Guy Rodgers, a tremendous feeding guard, Al Attles, who is now the Warriors' coach, and the others, they gave of themselves to make sure I got the 100."

Rodgers, who averaged 7.9 assists that season, had 20 in that game.

"It was not a sideshow," said Chamberlain, aware that the term had been used in the intervening 20 years to describe the performance which turned into a deliberate effort — at the expense of all other aspects of the game — to reach the 100-point figure.

"It was something the people wanted to see, getting into triple figures. It was a nice round number."

Chamberlain had been scoring high numbers all season. McGuire, when he took over as coach that season, had made it clear he wanted "Dipper," a nickname the 25-year-old star preferred to "Wilt the Stilt," to be a scoring machine, even if

Lady Pirates Face Tar Heels, Possible NCAA Bid On Line

A Staff Report

At the start of the season, it was just the final game on the schedule. In January, it meant little.

But right now, Wednesday night's game between the University of North Carolina and the Lady Pirates of East Carolina in Minges Coliseum means quite a bit — mainly an NCAA tournament bid.

Tipoff is set for 7:30 p.m. East Carolina comes into the game with a 16-9 record, having won 12 of the last 14 games. The only losses came by slim margins to two nationally ranked teams, Old Dominion, then ranked third, and South Carolina, ranked 13th. The latter loss, which came Saturday, was the first for the Lady Pirates on their own home court.

Back in January, when the Pirates came off a long road trip with a 4-7 mark, things looked bleak. But a victory over the University of Virginia in Minges, followed a few days later by one over the Lady Tar Heels in Chapel Hill got the ball rolling and it has seldom been off the track.

Now, an ECU victory could propel the Lady Pirates into an at-large NCAA tournament berth. A loss, however, could end the dreams of the team at making a post-season tournament for the second straight year.

Carolina brings in a 17-11 record after having been top-seeded in the Atlantic Coast Conference's women's tournament last week. The Lady Heels, however, were beaten in the second round by Clemson, which went on to be the tournament runner-up. Maryland won that tournament and will receive an automatic bid into the NCAA field, while Clemson and N.C. State, both nationally ranked are considered good bets for at-large selections.

Whether the Tar Heels could still earn a berth with a win over the Lady Pirates is questionable, but they certainly have the chance to play spoiler.

"The kids are very tired right now," Coach Cathy Andruzzi said. "But this is a big game for both teams. It could help us in getting into the tournament, so it weighs pretty heavy."

Andruzzi said, however, that the Lady Pirates would approach it as they do every game. "When you are 4-7 in January, you have to look at each game as a chance to win one more. You try to be relaxed and play to win. But you have to be cautious too."

The coach said she has to be proud of the team for turning the season around like it has. "I'd like to see the kids win this one because they've worked so hard to get where they are."

She doesn't think it will be easy. "Carolina, potentially, has the best front line in the country. We're in the midget category compared to them. But we have to adjust to it. We did it once, and we can do it again."

"It will be a matter of a little luck, too. In the big ones, a little luck helps. Like Saturday, we got the good shots, but they wouldn't fall for us. This time, they have to."

And despite Carolina's lack of success in the ACC tournament, Andruzzi feels that the Lady Heels will be ready. "They've beaten us here the last few times while we've won up there. It's the last game for both teams, and both should want to win it very badly."

"It's also the last chance for our people to see Sam (Jones) and Lillion (Barnes — ECU's two seniors) in Minges," Andruzzi added.

Carolina's front line is led by forward Kathy Crawford, who is scoring 16.0 points a game and 7.5 rebounds. Six-two center Henrietta Walls is hitting 12.5 points and pulling a team-leading 8.5 rebounds, while forward Tresa Brown had a 14.0 average and a 7.3 rebounding mark.

Brown scored 30 points in the first meeting of the two, a 71-66 ECU victory. That is the most points by one individual this year against the Lady Pirates.

The backcourt is expected to consist of Pam Hammond and Eileen McCann, who leads the team in assists. East Carolina is led by Mary Denkier with a 20.3 average, while Jones is scoring at a 16.9 pace.

Hearns Wants Hagler, Then Return Shot At Ray

By The Associated Press

Will middleweight Marvin Hagler fight welterweight Sugar Ray Leonard in a battle of boxing's only undisputed champions?

That's a weighty question, and Thomas Hearns thinks he can answer it with an emphatic "no" by hearing Hagler to pose a new question: Can Leonard beat Hearns again?

Leonard wants Hagler to agree to fight in at 154-155 pounds, although the middleweight limit is 160. The welterweight limit is 147.

"The only purpose for Hagler being under the weight is to make sure he isn't over 160," says Mike Trainer. Leonard's attorney, who contends that if Hagler weighs in at or near 160 pounds, he will be 165-167 by fight time. Leonard, who has difficulty putting on weight, probably would fight at about 155.

"He knows where to find me. He knows what the limit is," said Hagler. Adds Goody Petronelli, Hagler's co-manager-trainer: "If Leonard wants to challenge for the middleweight championship, let him fight at the middleweight limit. We're not going to oblige Leonard just for money."

"I can make my money one fight at a time," says Hagler. "Why sit back and dream on one big fight?"

One fight in which Hagler can make a lot of money is one against Hearns, who is willing to risk a solid weight disadvantage, and it is a fight which promoter Bob Arum says will happen within the first 15 days in May.

First, Hagler has to get by Caveman Lee next Sunday at Atlantic City, but Caveman appears to be a low hurdle.

"It's been taken care of," Petronelli says of a Hagler-Hearns bout. "Everything is set except for finalizing the financial end of it," said Emanuel Steward, manager-trainer of Hearns. "I don't expect any big problems."

Steward placed Hearns' purse in the neighborhood of $3.5 million. Hagler's would be higher.

As for weight, Steward feels the 6-foot-1 Hearns can give away several pounds without being at a disadvantage. Hearns weighed 155 in outpointing Ernie Singletary, 161, in his middleweight debut and only 153½ in knocking out Marco Geraldo, 159½, who didn't come close to living up to his reputation as a fighter who could go with anyone, in the first round last Saturday.

Hearns would weigh about 155, and not more than 157, for Hagler and would be willing to fight Leonard on Leonard's weight terms.

Should Hearns beat Hagler, it would make a Hearns-Leonard match more attractive and richer than a Leonard-Hearns welterweight rematch. It would give Leonard a shot at becoming a triple champion, at equal weights, against a man he has already beaten—he stopped Hearns in 14 rounds for the undisputed welterweight title. It's all Leonard could ask for.

"That's the key reason we're going this route (a challenge of Hagler)," said Hearns.

A Hearns victory could lead to a Hearns-Leonard fight in September or October.

But a Hearns win is anything but certain. Hagler is a solid all-round fighter, who has become even better with the confidence of a champion. And he certainly could ruin Hearns' hopes of another shot at Leonard.

Should Hagler win, it certainly looks as if he and Leonard will go their separate ways for the rest of 1982.

Leonard is set to defend against Roger Stafford in a fight, which, Trainer, says, could happen from the mid to late May. Then, Leonard could fight Alexis Arguello, the WBC lightweight champion; Aaron Pryor, the World Boxing Association junior welterweight champion, or another member of the welterweight division, which doesn't seem to currently have anyone to really challenge Leonard.

Arum wants Hagler, after the Hearns fight, to defend against Fulgenio Obelmejias of Venezuela, WBA's No.1 contender, and a fighter Hagler already has easily beaten in a title defense. The WBC's top-ranked contender is Tony Sibson of England, the European champion, who, says Petronelli, is a nice opponent because "He walks in and he's slow."

Plans apparently don't call for a Hagler-Sibson fight this year, which, if he wins his other fights, could lead to a move to strip him a half the title.

Remember: Marvin Hagler is the whole middleweight champion of the world until someone beats him.

Bartow, UAB Have Come A Long Way

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — It's remarkable what Coach Gene Bartow and his players have accomplished at Alabama-Birmingham, a school that didn't even own a basketball five years ago.

When UAB decided to enter intercollegiate competition, it asked Bartow for advice on how to proceed. He impressed the committee members so much they decided that, hey, here's the man we need.

Bartow had taken both Memphis State and UCLA to the Final Four in NCAA tournaments, one of only two active coaches to do so.

Bartow spent his first year in Birmingham lining up a schedule, scouting and recruiting players, promoting ticket sales and getting the team into the Sun Belt Conference.

In their first game, in 1978, the Blazers lost to Nebraska, then defeated San Francisco State and have not been below .500 since then. That team went 15-11.

The next one went 18-12, including a trip to the National Invitation Tournament at New York.

The 1980 team was 23-9, including victories over Western Kentucky and Kentucky in the NCAA tournament to advance to the top 16. Then it lost to Indiana, the eventual national champion, but UAB had attracted attention.

The team got the NCAA bid a year ago as an at-large team.

Carner's Goal Is Hall Of Fame

NEW YORK (AP) — Give JoAnne Carner a choice and she'll gladly settle for two consecutive victories and a spot in the Ladies Professional Golf Association's Hall of Fame.

"It's the hardest Hall of Fame to get into," Carner said. "The last ones went in about four years ago."

Unlike other sports Halls, the LPGA Hall of Fame is based strictly on performance: win 30 events with two different major championships, 35 official events with one major championship, or 40 official events.

Carner, who didn't join the pro tour until she was 30 years old in 1970, is just two victories from being eligible for induction into the LPGA Hall of Fame. After winning the second tournament of this year's tour, she has 33 career victories, including one major — the U.S. Women's Open, which she has won twice.

"My goal this year is get enough tournament wins to get into the Hall of Fame," Carner said. "The sooner I do it, the less pressure it will be."

"There's enough pressure already. But when you get out there knowing you can get into the Hall of Fame with a victory, there's added pressure."

Carner was in New York Monday to help announce the first points-bonus system in golf. News conferences also were held in Los Angeles and Tokyo to announce a $4.5 million prize money program established by Mazda.

Under the three-year agreement with the LPGA, a $300,000 bonus pool will be established by Mazda annually. A points system based on players' finishes in LPGA Tour events will divide this among the top 10 players in points standings following the final LPGA event of the season — the Mazda Japan Classic in November.

The Series' first-place winner will receive $125,000, the richest cash award in women's golf. Second place will be worth $60,000.

In addition, each tour stop winner will receive either a new automobile or $5,000 in cash. The LPGA and tournament sponsors also will share another $1 million annually in promotional programs for the new Series.

"This will unify all of our sponsors, reward all of our players with a bonus pool, expand media coverage and provide a year-end bonus pool," said Ray Volpe, LPGA commissioner.

Carner already has received a check for $5,000 for her win in Miami last month. Hollis Stacy, winner of the first and third tournaments of 1982, received a check for $5,000 and a new car.

"When it (the new bonus system) was first announced to the players, there was a standing ovation in the room," Carner said. "There's an awful lot of money."

"When I see $125,000, that's as much as I was making two years ago for the entire year."

Last September, Carner passed the $1 million mark in career earnings, a plateau reached by only by two others — Kathy Whitworth and Donna

Caponi. Although her goal is the Hall of Fame, the new money looks good to her.

"I played 30 tournaments last year," she said. "I was going to cut back to maybe 23. Now, I might play all 38 with that kind of money."

To The Editor:

The Lady Pirates and their pushers like my letters and asked that I write another one for the Carolina game that comes up tomorrow night in Minges at 7:30. I really am at a loss for words (my friends and enemies say that that is impossible and that I use too many cuss words) when I try to inspire the Lady Pirates but I will meekly say this about the loss to the Lady Gamecocks: "Evelyn (the carbon copy of 'Magic') should be playing on the men's team. She used those big hips to push us around in no lady fashion."

Chaney says she (Darlene) is not going to put up with that mess from any of the Carolina ladies. I believe her!

As to the game against Carolina come Wednesday, I will have to go along with Coach Cathy when she says: "We'll whup 'em, but it won't be easy."

The "boss" and I watched them work out yesterday and they are really looking great.

Jackson, Foster To Add Punch, Fans To Teams

By The Associated Press
The acquisition of Reggie Jackson and George Foster is expected to put punch in the lineups — and people in the seats — of the California Angels and New York Mets.

Any power display must await the start of the season next month, but an Associated Press survey shows that ticket sales for 1982 are generally up, including those of the Angels and Mets.

"Our mail has been very heavy and season renewals have been very good, better than we expected," said Angels ticket manager Carl Gordon. "We expected a bad year because of the strike (last season), but it hasn't turned out that way."

Asked about Jackson's possible influence on sales, Gordon said, "With the renewals, I think if they were sitting on the fence deciding whether to buy season tickets again, they may have said to themselves, 'Well, since Reggie's here, let's give it another season.'"

The Mets are up 10 percent in season ticket sales over last year. A team spokesman said a number of renewals were based on the Foster trade, fans saying, "If you get Foster...or make a similar big move...we'll renew; if not, we won't."

Even the departure of Jackson hasn't hurt the New York Yankees.

"Any time you lose a player of Reggie's caliber, you run the risk of losing some fans," said Dave Szen, public relations director of the Yankees. "But for every fan who's canceled his tickets because of Reggie, there are two or three fans who would love to have those seats. So what we lose, we make up immediately."

The trend appears to support Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's contention that last year's midseason seven-week strike would have no effect on this year's attendance. In fact, those teams which show a decrease in sales blame it on the economy and the cold winter, not on the 1981 walkout.

"I'd say things are very good, considering the current squeeze from the recession," said Mark Bloomquist, director of sales for the Seattle Mariners. "We're talking about the entertainment dollar, and people are spending it on baseball." Bloomquist said the Mariners expect to exceed last year's season ticket sales of slightly more than 3,000.

The Milwaukee Brewers are running about 10 percent ahead of last year, according to Dick Hackett, vice president for marketing. Group sales are "just fantastic," he said, ahead of last year, and individual ticket sales are "very heavy."

The Pittsburgh Pirates are in the minority. Their season ticket sales are about 10 percent behind last year.

"The biggest drawback is the recession more than the baseball strike," said Steve Greenberg, director of season ticket and group sales. "People are out of work and companies are cutting back. We depend on a lot of corporations, and when they cut back people it's difficult for them to justify buying tickets."

The Boston Red Sox are also feeling the pinch because of the economy.

"It was going slow, but last week it picked up," said Arthur Muscato, director of ticket sales. "We expect that, because when they (the team) go down to spring training, it perks up. It's strictly the economy now."

In Chicago, the White Sox "are running ahead, definitely, dollar and ticket-wise," said ticket manager Robert Devoy.

Rose: Always Out To Prove Something

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) — Age is purely psychological, says 40-year-old Pete Rose, who hopes positive thinking will help him in his quest to become major league baseball's career hit leader.

"Some guys convince themselves they're getting old," said the Philadelphia Phillies first baseman, nursing a pulled muscle in his back that has kept him from practicing.

"I think I'm just the opposite. It seems like I'm always trying to prove something."

"When I won a batting title, I had to prove I could win another batting title. Now, even though I've hit .300 15 times, I've still got to prove I can hit .300 again."

Rose admits his current injury, sustained some nine days ago while playing tennis, had him worried at first.

He said he woke up the day after the tennis match and couldn't get out of bed. "Anybody'd be concerned if they couldn't put their shoes on," he said. "I do a lot of strange things, I know, but I don't look good without shoes on."

Rose consulted a specialist, who told him there was no disc trouble or other major problem.

"I knew then it was just a pulled muscle or back spasm," Rose said, adding that he has been relatively free of the pulls and pains that often bother other players who approach his age.

"I don't even get aches or pains when I practice," he said. "I could go out and run around all day. I'd get tired, but everybody gets tired."

Rose said he expects to be practicing by the end of the week, although Phillies Manager Pat Corrales said he wants the veteran to wait 10 days.

Rose needs 494 hits to tie the all-time mark of 4,191 held by Ty Cobb.

Rose and Corrales agree that if Rose is capable of playing every day in pursuit of the mark, then so be it, in spite of his age.

Wilt's 100-Point Night...

it meant neglecting other duties on the court. Chamberlain recalled that when McGuire suggested he could average 50 points a game, he told the coach he was crazy.

Chamberlain, though, took McGuire at his word. Before the 100-point game he scored 78 points in a triple overtime, set a regulation-game record with 73 points and twice scored 67 points. He wound up averaging 50.4 points a game that season, another record that still stands.

Chamberlain takes more pride in that mark, and the record 55 rebounds he pulled down in a 1960 game, than he does in the 100-point game.

"I think those two will stand up longer than the 100 points. All records eventually will be broken, but those two will be around longer," he predicted.

Still, only two other players have scored 70 or more points. David Thompson of Denver, 73, in 1978, and Elgin Baylor of Los Angeles, 71, in 1960.

As the 100-point game got down to the frantic last minutes, Chamberlain broke his own all-time record of 78 points with 7:51 remaining. He had 89 points with five minutes to play.

There was a period of two minutes and 15 seconds when he didn't score at all, but he got to 98 points with a little more than one minute to play.

The crowd was on its feet by then, and roared when Chamberlain missed both shot and the followup on a rebound. Then, with 46 seconds to go, Chamberlain leaped, grabbed a pass from Joe Ruklick, and, with both hands, stuffed in the basket that gave him 100 points.

The crowd poured onto the court, his teammates left the bench and so did some of the Knicks.

"They never finished that game," as Chamberlain remembered it. "People came on the court and it was all over."

Chamberlain, who recently rejected an offer to come out of retirement, pays little attention to pro basketball these days. Instead, he is involved in track and field, which he called his first love.

But his eyes sparkled when he talked about that game played 20 years ago. "In retrospect, it was a sensational situation," he said.

Herd's Absence Hurts Tourney

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — Marshall University's failure to qualify for the coming Southern Conference Basketball Tournament in Charleston means the loss of some 3,000 advance ticket sales, sponsors said Monday.

"We've sold 3,000 advance tickets and I'm sure we could have doubled that figure if Marshall had won Saturday night," said Patty Dameron, chairman of the Huntington Junior League's tournament ticket committee.

Marshall was beaten Saturday 110-92 at East Tennessee State, which joins UT Chattanooga, Davidson and The Citadel at Charleston.

The Charleston and Huntington Junior Leagues are sponsoring the tournament, which begins Friday. And those members who didn't travel to Johnson City, Tenn., last Saturday said they were tuned in to the game.

"I was praying for a miracle," admitted Mrs. Dameron. "However, we knew back in November, when we started selling tickets, that this could happen. Unfortunately, it did."

Fern Jones, in charge of tournament publicity, said she also was hoping Marshall could come back and whip East Tennessee.

"I was agonizing during every minute of Saturday's game, after we fell behind," she said. "I thought before the game that we could win, but we blew it. Marshall's program had a problem, but everybody knows that." Marshall Athletic Director Lynn Snyder couldn't be reached for comment Monday, but Ken Germann, president of the Southern Conference, acknowledged that he was "disappointed but not crushed" that Marshall had failed to make the tournament's final four.

"We won't really know until the tournament's completed just how much of an effect it will have," he said. "But, it obviously would have been a big help had Marshall been in the tournament."

Germann added, however, that he thought the Southern Conference tournament still would be a success.

Lawyer Fees Are Studied By Justices

By KEVIN COSTELLO
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —

The Supreme Court is considering an attempt to trim court-ordered lawyers' fees in some civil rights cases while the Reagan administration is preparing to seek possibly broader limits.

The court agreed Monday to decide whether to scale down fees to private lawyers who are only partially successful in court battles they wage on behalf of victims of alleged civil rights violations.

The lawsuits involve attacks on state prison and state hospital conditions, police misconduct and welfare discrimination, among others. State and local governments must pay the court-ordered lawyers' fees.

Richard Teitelman, executive director of the Legal Services of Eastern Missouri, said Monday that if the high court imposes the restrictions "it would have a devastating impact on people's ability to bring civil rights cases" under federal law.

The justices agreed to hear Missouri's attempt to avoid paying the legal services group a $133,333 fee stemming from a challenge to the conditions at the forensic unit of the Fulton State Hospital.

The state says the award upheld last September by the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is unjustified because the legal services group was successful "on substantially less than one-half" of the claims it made.

Missouri says the award should be "proportioned" to reflect the lawyers' success. Congress has provided that lawyers' fees may be awarded to the "prevailing party" in federal civil rights cases against state and local governments.

However, the amount of the awards to the lawyers and the circumstances calling for such payment continue to be a heated topic of debate.

Meanwhile, an official of the federal Office of Management and Budget said Monday the administration was completing its plans to ask Congress to limit court-ordered fees to private lawyers in several types of cases, including civil rights cases.

In other action Monday, the Supreme Court:

—Said it will decide whether the federal government may delay the marketing of generic drugs while their inactive ingredients are checked for safety and effectiveness.

—Refused to free Bridgeport, Conn., from taking sweeping remedial steps to increase the number of blacks and Hispanics in the city's fire department.

—Agreed to consider reinstating North Dakota laws that curbed the federal government's ability to acquire land for use by migratory birds.

Asner Recall Drive Is Ended By Critic

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A stuntman who launched a recall drive against Screen Actors Guild President Ed Asner has called it off since the star of the "Lou Grant" series promised last week to make it clear he is speaking as a private citizen when he talks about politics.

"I am not going on with the recall," stuntman Tony Cecere said Monday.

But he added, "If Asner should do something like leading the guild into the political arena, the members might decide to do something like this again."

Cecere said 800 signatures had been gathered and petitions he sent out for others to circulate were still coming in but the recall move had been "put on hold."

Asner generated controversy among guild members when he announced in Washington last month that he was donating money to aid the guerrillas battling against the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador.

Charlton Heston and Robert Conrad were among the actors who criticized Asner for not noting his statements had nothing to do with SAG.

On Thursday, after a closed-door meeting of the SAG executive committee, Asner said he would be careful in the future to identify himself as a private citizen when talking about issues not related to the union.

Cecere said he met Friday night with a small group of SAG members who had been critical of Asner's actions. The group included Conrad and Heston, and they declined to back the recall.

A timely penalty double can dramatically increase your reward from a hand. But sometimes a double can tip declarer off to a winning line.

It is difficult to fault East for making a penalty double of four hearts. After all, he thought he was looking at four tricks in his own hand opposite a partner who had made a two-level overcall. A mother lode seemed to be on hand! But West must be blamed — both for his feather-light overcall and for his decision to sit for the double. Since his values were all distributional, he should have made a prudent retreat to five diamonds.

West led the king of diamonds, and declarer was not delighted with his prospects. It seemed he would have to lose three clubs and a trump or two. But there was a slight chance if the distribution was friendly.

Declarer won the ace of diamonds and ruffed a diamond. He crossed to the queen of spades and led a low trump from dummy. East played the ten and the king won. Declarer crossed back to dummy with the king of spades and ruffed another diamond. Next he cashed the ace of spades, and when West failed to follow and was unable to ruff, the contract was as good as made.

Declarer ruffed his last spade in dummy. With eight tricks in the bag, he led dummy's last diamond. If East ruffed low or failed to ruff, declarer would score his nine of trumps and the ace would be the fulfilling trick. So East ruffed with a trump honor and declarer countered elegantly — he discarded a losing club! Then he sat back with his A-9 of trumps poised over East's Q-7 and waited for two more tricks, and his contract.

Had there been no bidding, and no double, declarer would surely have drawn two rounds of trumps at some point, and gone down.

Carl Sandburg 'Rediscovered' On PBS-TV Offering Tonight

By FRED ROTHENBERG
 AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Of course, English teachers should make PBS' "Carl Sandburg — Echoes and Silences" tonight's homework assignment. Sandburg touched all disciplines of the humanities. He was a poet, biographer, journalist, singer and down-home philosopher.

But history teachers would be negligent if they, too, didn't assign this two-hour documentary-drama. Sandburg's own experiences, observations and writings reflected America's passage into adulthood in the 20th century.

Actually, let's just make "Carl Sandburg" must viewing for students of all ages; the story of his life and work will touch us all.

Actor John Cullum is the explorer on this program. He visits Sandburg's birthplace in Illinois and late-in-life farm in North Carolina, learning about America's "Proletarian Poet" from his family and friends.

Cullum's discoveries are ours. He acts out and narrates, with the aid of archival film and vintage still photographs, key episodes in Sandburg's life. In the last 30 minutes, Cullum and his audience are so comfortable with Sandburg that the actor can embody Sandburg on stage, singing, rhyming and philosophizing in "An Evening With Carl Sandburg."

Sandburg was born on the prairie in 1878. His parents were Swedish immigrants, a status that may have made Sandburg more appreciative and observant of their adopted land.

They lived in Galesburg, Ill., the second house from the railroad tracks. His early experiences included delivering milk, washing dishes, harvesting wheat and fighting in the Spanish-American War.

Before he began college, he took the West Point entrance exam. Fellow applicant, Douglas MacArthur, showed promise; Sandburg was considered deficient in math and grammar. It wasn't his last bad review.

Some criticized his six-volume biography of Abraham Lincoln because poets didn't write history. Others complained that his poetry was too raw. "Slang rolls up its sleeves, spits on its hands and goes to work," Sandburg said.

Sandburg retorted that poetry which wasn't of the people and for the people was written by "cerebrum poets, abacadabra boys." In the stage segment, Cullum's Sandburg tells of two churchgoers analyzing a sermon:

"Did you understand it?"
 "I wouldn't have the presumption."

Sandburg's keen wit and eye captured an America outgrowing its adolescence, flexing its muscles. He was proud that American Federation of Labor organizers quoted his poems. At first, he opposed World War I, then supported it, only to change his mind again with the poem "Liars." He wrote: "Some time they'll give a war and nobody will come."

Industrial America's skyscrapers and energy fascinated him. Chicago was the "city of big shoulders...hog butcher, tool maker, stacker of wheat, player of railroads and freight handler to a nation."

Sandburg, who died in 1967, said he needed four things in life: to stay out of jail, eat regularly, get his work printed, and get a little love at home and outside.

"Carl Sandburg: Echoes and Silences" is a remarkable love poem.

"An Innocent Love," a two-hour movie on CBS tonight, is billed as an unusual love story. But it's really a warm exploration of friendship between young people.

Doug McKeon ("On Golden Pond") is very likeable as the 14-year-old math whiz, who goes to college on an early entrance program and falls in love with a 19-year student (Melissa Sue Anderson of "Little House on the Prairie").

It's an entertaining, light-hearted story that has plenty of appeal but limited substance. Perhaps that's why General Electric backed off as a full sponsor.

Maybe "G.E. Theater" wanted to follow "Bill," Mickey Rooney's poignant portrayal of a mentally retarded man, with a more powerful project. They should have invested in "Carl Sandburg: Echoes and Silences."

Old standards never fade away; they seem to get better and better. And like Marshall Dillon, the No. 3 Marshall at Western Sizzlin is a long time standard. Once you've tried the No. 3 Marshall, you are sure to be back again and again to Western Sizzlin.
