Urges More Evidence Of Nicaragua-Cuba Activity

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A key Republican senator says he is "absolutely convinced" Nicaragua and Cuba are controlling leftist guerrillas in El Salvador, but that the Reagan administration should reveal more evidence to garner public support for its Central American policy.

Sen. Robert Kasten of Wisconsin made his comments Wednesday as a Senate subcommittee began hearings on President Reagan's proposal to send $350 million in emergency aid to the Caribbean Basin, including $128 million to El Salvador.

The trade subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee heard testimony on the proposal Wednesday, but canceled another session today.

The hearings got under way just hours after the president's aid package was sent to Congress. Besides emergency money, the proposal calls for a 12-year period of duty-free entry into this country for virtually all Caribbean exports and tax incentives to encourage U.S. private investment in the region.

Kasten, chairman of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, said he had no doubt about outside involvement in El Salvador's insurgency.

"I am absolutely convinced of Cuban and Nicaraguan support and control of terrorist guerrillas in El Salvador," Kasten told Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs.

"But you have got to bring the information out into public view and let the people of this country know what is going on," he said. The administration should move to counter "what is clearly a tide in American public opinion" against support of El Salvador's civilian-military junta, he said.

Enders replied, "The evidence we have, although it cannot all be made public, is, we believe, overwhelming." He said Cuban weapons have been sent to insurgents in El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala and "now some are showing up" in Costa Rica and Colombia.

Reagan, in his message to Congress, charged that "extremist groups and violent minorities are exploiting" economic misery in Central America and the Caribbean.

"El Salvador's economy is in desperate straits," Reagan said. "The insurgents have used every tactic of terrorism to try to destroy it."

The package includes no aid for the leftist-run government of Nicaragua, which the administration charges is funneling Cuban and Soviet arms to the Salvadoran rebels. American aid to Nicaragua was cut off last April.

The president's Caribbean Basin package got a generally favorable reception from the Senate panel, with some grumbling about the details.

"The president's Caribbean Basin initiative is a welcome new strategy for our neighbors to the south," said Kasten.

But Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., said he would not support a proposal providing tax and other incentives to industries to locate in Central America.

Robber Given Prison

A 22-year-old Baltimore man was sentenced Wednesday in Pitt County Superior Court after he entered pleas on three armed robbery charges, one of them involving First-Citizens Bank & Trust Co. in Grimesland.

Judge David Reid sentenced Juan (Butch) Hill to 16 years in prison after Hill pleaded guilty to the Nov. 30 bank robbery.

Hill was also given 16 years by Reid after he entered pleas of no contest to charges stemming from the Oct. 25 armed robbery of Gwik Wilson's Store and the Nov. 21 armed robbery of the Kash and Karry Store, both located on the Pictolus Highway east of Greenville.

The sentences will run concurrently and under state law regarding armed robbery convictions Hill will be required to serve a minimum of seven years before he will be eligible for parole consideration.

Plea bargaining was not involved in any of the cases.

Some $6,133 was taken in the bank robbery with $4,054 recovered by investigators, while the Oct. 25 and Nov. 21 robberies involved thefts of $150 and $380. Reid ordered Hill to pay restitution in all three cases.

Hill, who was arrested on Dec. 28, had been visiting a relative who resided in the area near the two convenience stores when the robberies took place.

All three robberies involved the use of a small handgun, the victims told investigating officers.

In the Grimesland robbery, the victims were two female bank tellers, while the victims of the Wilson Store and Kash and Karry incidents were a young male clerk and a young female clerk, respectively.

Local law enforcement agencies were involved in the investigations, with help from the FBI and SBI.

Modest Rise In Personal February Income Cited

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' personal income rose 0.5 percent last month, a modest improvement over the scant January gain and a December decline, the government reported today.

Personal income had fallen less than 0.1 percent in December, the first decline since the 1975 recession, before climbing 0.2 percent in January, the Commerce Department had reported earlier.

Today's income report joined a string of apparently encouraging economic indicators published in recent days, but analysts inside and outside the government are still not proclaiming an end to the recession.

Within the past two weeks, Commerce Department officials have said retail sales rose substantially in February, the Labor Department has reported prices declining at the wholesale level, and the Federal Reserve Board has reported rising industrial production and use of U.S. factories.

However, economists in general have said that the good inflation news was at least partly due to the recession's dampening down of demand for goods. They also say the other indicators' improvement was probably exaggerated because it followed January figures that were unusually depressed by bad weather.

Most analysts say they do expect economic recovery, but not before later this spring. The recovery probably won't be very robust unless recently rising interest rates decline again, they say.

Today's report said total personal income rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $2.51 trillion in February. The 0.5 percent increase probably was slightly more than could be accounted for by inflation, though consumer price figures won't be announced until next week.

Personal consumption spending, which economists say is the best hope for pulling the nation out of recession, rose 0.8 percent in February after gaining 1.1 percent in January, the new report said.

Disposable, or after-tax, income rose 0.5 percent, the same as in January.

Floodwaters Pour Through Fort Wayne Dike; More People Flee

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (AP) — Floodwaters poured through holes in a 15-foot-high dike in this soggy city during the night, sending hundreds of more residents scurrying to higher ground and leaving as many as 9,000 cut off from their homes.

About 700 volunteers passing sandbags bucket-brigade style worked through the night to shore up the 50-year-old dike breached by three-foot holes.

Firefighters hurried people out of their homes and onto city buses as the floodwaters surged through the dike on the city's northeast side.

"We began evacuating another 500 or so persons late last night," said Mark Rozeen, the city's public information director. "The number of persons evacuated is between 8,000 and 9,000."

Ralph Fortriede, a city design engineer said today, "The dike is holding its own."

But, he said, if more rains come, "I don't know what will happen. I don't think the dike is going to break, but it may go over the top."

Fortriede said that during the night, "We had three-foot holes opening up. At that time, I thought we were within minutes of losing it."

Al Zirkle, director of operations for the city utilities, said, "Our engineers tell us the sheer weight of the sand is the only thing that can save (the dike)."

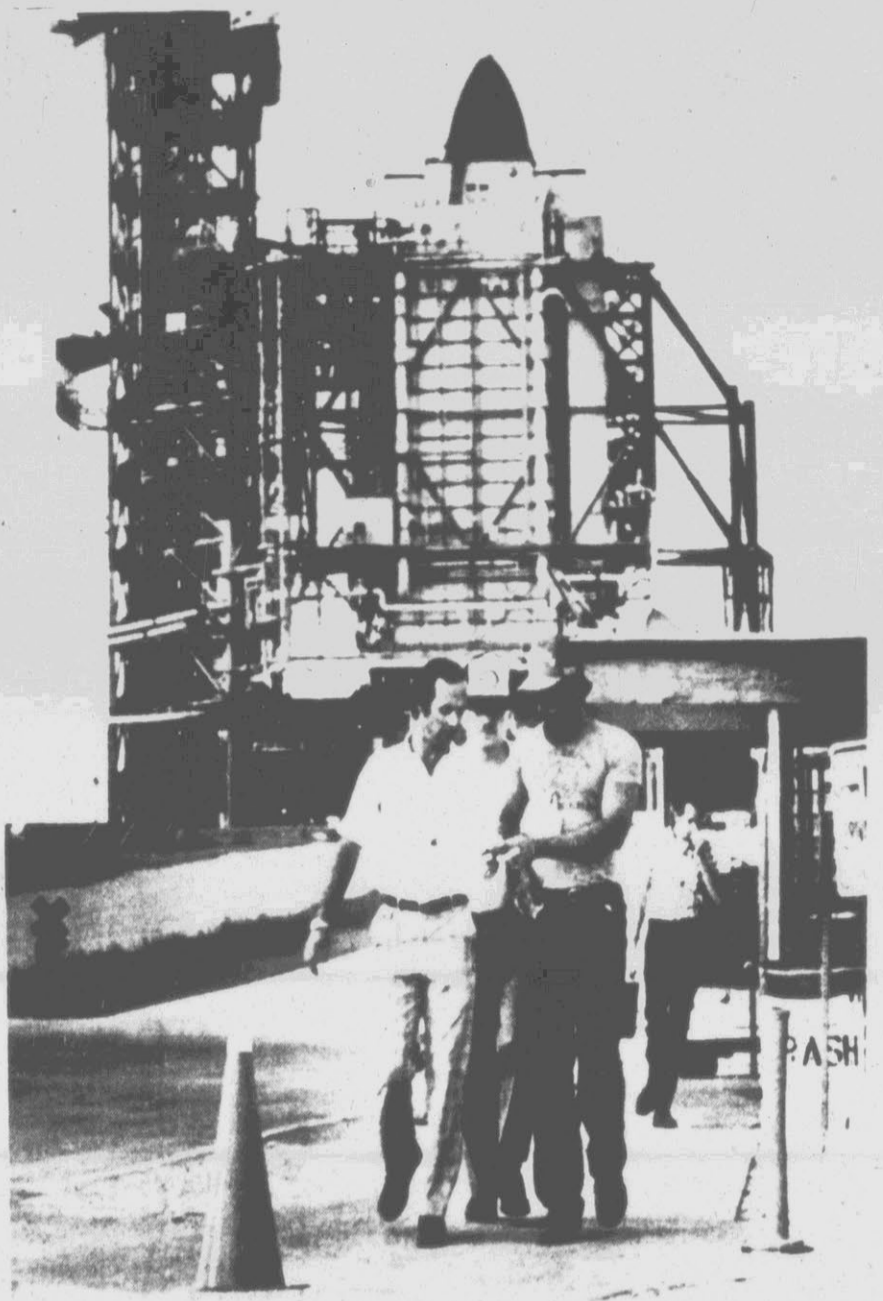

Water was filling streets today along the Maumee River dike in the Lakeside neighborhood in the eastern part of the city. The river, bloated from thawing ice and days of rain, remained nearly stationary today just inches shy of its record level in 1913, when a series of floods killed 700 people in Indiana and Ohio.

But the National Weather Service predicted thunderstorms for tonight and Friday.

Rivers were receding in Ohio and Michigan, where floods have done a total of $19 million in damage, but the Illinois River was still rising and causing minor flooding in Peoria. Damage in Fort Wayne is estimated at $16.8 million.

A tornado damaged an Atlanta building Wednesday as thunderstorms hit Georgia, and the San Francisco area was pelted with hail, snow and rain.

The death toll from a week of flooding in northern Indiana, Ohio and southern Michigan rose to six today.

COUNTDOWN — Workers leave the Columbia is scheduled for Pad 39A at Kennedy Space Center Monday, March 22 at 10 a.m. (AP Laserphoto) as the countdown begins. Liftoff of

Shuttle Re-Routed To A New Mexico Landing

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Determined to prove "we can launch on the way we say," NASA began the countdown early this morning for a Monday liftoff of the space shuttle Columbia and shifted the third-flight landing from a flooded Mojave desert floor in California to the white sands of New Mexico.

"White Sands all the way," said a NASA spokesman.

The clock started ticking at 4 a.m. EST with test conductor Andy Browne's announcement, "The launch countdown is now in progress."

Immediately, technicians activated Columbia's computer systems and its electricity-producing fuel cells.

While launch preparations were routine, planning for a first-ever landing in New Mexico preoccupied space agency officials.

The U.S. Army's White Sands Missile Range is usually the backup landing site for the shuttle. Today, NASA decided to shift landing and "safing" equipment there because of heavy rainwater that fell on Edwards Air Force Base in California, the site of Columbia's first two landings.

NASA spokesman Dick Young said the decision to "use White Sands all the way" was made after top management officials assessed the latest reports from Edwards and determined that conditions there might be marginal to support a landing on March 29.

Earlier, officials had hoped to designate White Sands as an early-abort site while still planning to use Edwards for an end-of-mission landing.

On launch pad 39A, technicians were oblivious to all this. They were getting the ship ready for astronauts Jack R. Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton, beginning four days of precise preparations toward a scheduled 10 a.m. ZST liftoff. It would be the third of Columbia's four test flights.

Kilpatrick Avers Self-Reliance Is Old Value Of New Federalism

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The "New Federalism" of the Reagan administration, rather than being new, is "an old value we're trying to get back to... the old value of self-reliance," James J. Kilpatrick said Wednesday night.

Kilpatrick, the nation's most widely syndicated political columnist — his column appears in over 425 American newspapers including The Daily Reflector — and the author of a half-dozen books, including the 1977 best-seller "The Foxe's Union," spoke at East Carolina University as part of the ECU Lecture Series.

"I'm here to talk politics with you," Kilpatrick told the 225 persons who attended the program. He set the tone of his lecture with: "Politicians are a wonderful breed... The exercise of political power is what politics is all about."

Kilpatrick said he believed that the 1980 elections marked a major shift in U.S. political philosophy and that the Reagan administration, supported by Congress, generally is fulfilling the mandate given them by voters.

As for the 1980 being a turning point in U.S. history, Kilpatrick said both Franklin Roosevelt and Ronald Reagan were former governors of major states. Roosevelt's election marked a turning point toward "liberalism" which lasted for "almost 50 years."

Liberalism, Kilpatrick explained, was a movement "away from strong state and local governments" and toward a more powerful federal government.

That "flow of power peaked in the mid-70s... (President) Carter came after the wave hit the beach," according to Kilpatrick.

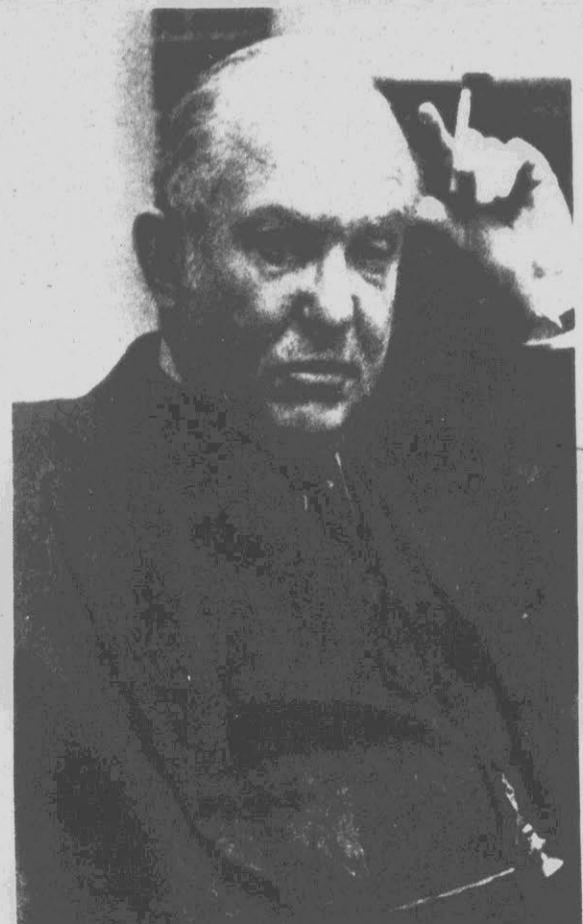

In 1980, he said, "the tide turned back. That's the meaning of the 1980 elections."

"Carter was perceived as a man not quite up to the presidency. He did his damndest, but the perception of Carter was that he was not presidential quality. These perceptions are so important... at least as important as realities," Kilpatrick said.

The election of Reagan alone was not enough to be considered a turning point, according to Kilpatrick, who noted that congressional elections continued the conservative bent that sent Reagan to the White House.

"Every Senate seat that changed hands changed to a more conservative stance," Kilpatrick said. "A half-dozen of the top liberals were cut down like great oak trees."

POLITICAL COLUMNIST... James J. Kilpatrick, who spoke at East Carolina University Wednesday night, termed the 1980 elections "a major turning point in U.S. history" but suggested the fate of the conservative movement will hinge on how voters view the economy in late August and early September. DEADLINE APPROACHING

Hotline some time ago published an item about a court order requiring Fedders Corp. to repair malfunctioning home heating and cooling systems, reimburse owners for past repair costs and, in some instances, give pro rata refunds of the purchase price. Attorney General Rufus Edmisten reminds that March 31 is the "absolute deadline" for North Carolina consumers to exercise use of that court order. Particulars of eligibility may be obtained from the Consumer Protection Division of the N.C. Department of Justice, P.O. Box 629, Raleigh, N.C. 27602, and written complaints should be sent to the same address prior to the end of this month.

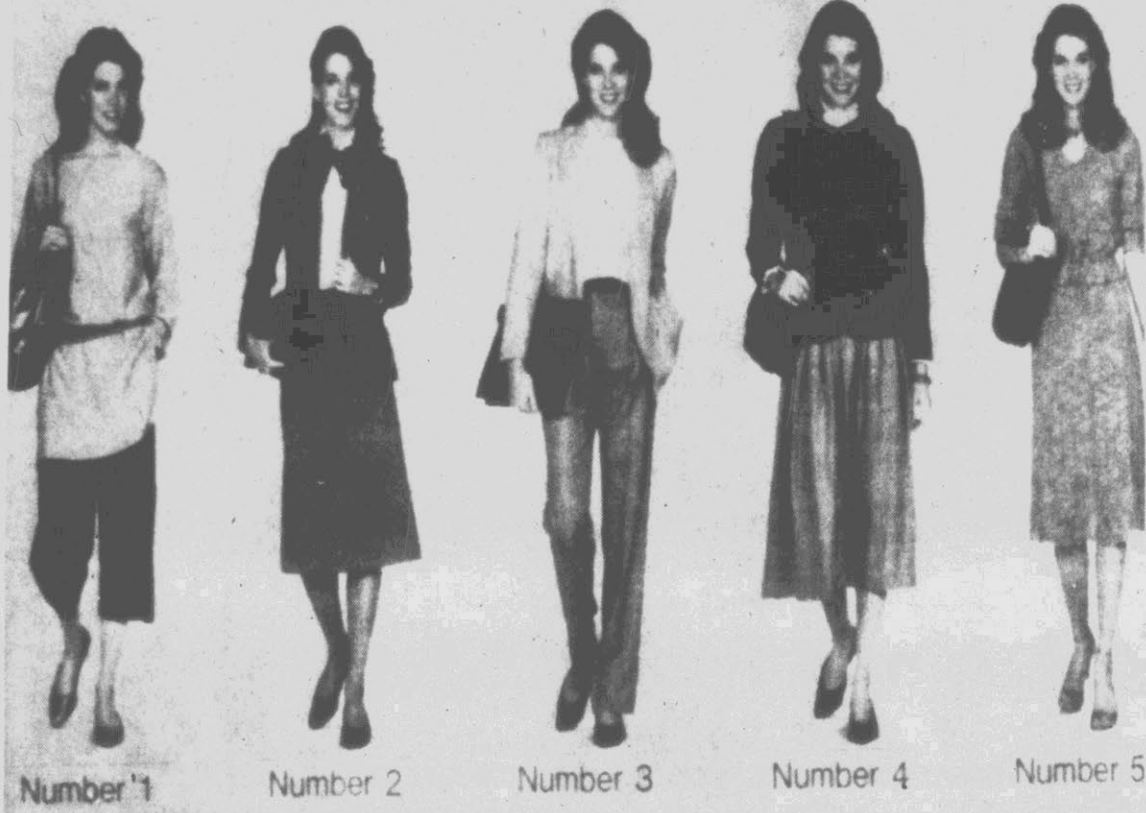

An Evaluation

Columnist James Kilpatrick says he has been "right impressed" by Republican John East's conduct in his role as a freshman senator from North Carolina.

The Greenville senator, Kilpatrick said Wednesday, is "well regarded by his colleagues." And although Kilpatrick conceded it was "really too early to form a judgment," the columnist said he had been impressed especially by East's "fairness and even-handedness" when he presides over Senate committee hearings.

As for Jesse Helms, North Carolina's senior senator and a long-time friend of Kilpatrick's, the journalist said: "I'm not sure just how effective Jesse is." But Kilpatrick acknowledged that Helms "rallied the votes" when the tobacco price support program was threatened.

Describing Helms as "much maligned" and "an easy target" for critics, Kilpatrick said Helms' effectiveness "lies somewhere in the middle... maybe 7/2 to 8/2," on a scale of one to 10. Kilpatrick said Helms has "tremendous skill as a parliamentarian... probably the best, most experienced parliamentarian" in the Senate.

WHO GETS THE JOB? — These photographs of the same woman in five different outfits were sent to personnel directors across the country who were asked by Glamour magazine to pick the one they would be the most likely to hire as a management trainee assuming each had identical job qualifications. The winning look for success in a job interview, which makes an applicant stand out from the competition, was overwhelmingly outfit No. 2. Placing a strong second was outfit No. 4. None of the others was considered appropriate and outfit No. 1 was the unanimous last choice. (AP Laserphoto)

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I watched my mother put on lipstick the other day. She twisted the tube as far as it would go. Then she dipped in a toothpick and scooped a little piece off and put it on her little finger. With quick, brisk strokes, she covered her lips.
Then, she carefully ran her finger over the rim to scrape any excess back into the tube, twisted it down and put a cap on it. You'd have thought it was an elixir to retain youth forever.
It occurred to me my mother has two cars in her garage, owns her own home, wears 35 credit cards next to her body and goes through the lipstick ritual at least four or five times a day. When I asked her why she didn't buy a new tube of lipstick she said, "They don't make Persimmon Jungle anymore."

There is an entire list of things people never throw away in this country that has nothing to do with sentiment. Lipstick is only one of them.
I have never known a woman who can let go of a cookie sheet. In some of the finest kitchens in America are cookie sheets that look like they've been a drip pan for a 1938 Chrysler. They cost $2.95. You'd think they cost $295.
Keys are another commodity that have permanent status in our culture. To throw away a key is like dancing on a grave. It doesn't matter that it doesn't fit anything. Throw away a key today and tomorrow a trunk full of Krugerrands will fall in your path and you won't be able to open it without the key you threw away.
I've never been able to figure out why people save eyeglasses they can't see out of anymore. We have a whole drawer of them and my husband keeps saying, "But they're good yet," and I keep saying, "Only for bumping into walls."
It goes without saying that the No. 1 survivor among objects around the house is underwear.
It's all part of my Mother's Laws that I learned at her knee: If it doesn't show, don't replace it. If you're too full to eat it, save it and throw it

Dear Abby

She Wants To Date Boys Of Other Faiths

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a very upset and frustrated 15-year-old girl. My parents have forbidden me to date boys of a different religion, but I have been doing it on the sneak and this bothers me.

I can understand their objections and have no intentions of marrying out of my faith, but I am not considering marriage now.

My parents and I have had some very heated arguments over this. Dating at 15 and marriage are two different things, but my parents can't see it that way.

I am proud of my heritage, and when it's time to look for a husband, I will restrict my dating to men of my own faith. In the meantime, I can't see the harm in dating others.

I hate sneaking around, but what am I to do?
15 IN SHAKER HEIGHTS

DEAR 15: If you have no intentions of marrying out of your faith, you will avoid a lot of possible heartaches by dating only boys you may one day marry. The heart doesn't care what the head is thinking.

DEAR ABBY: Three of us girls from the office decided to go to a club that features male strippers. I told my boyfriend I was going and he didn't want me to go, but he wouldn't give me a reason.

I went anyway just to see what it was like, and I enjoyed it. I didn't get "turned on" like some of the women in the audience appeared to be. I thought it was funny. The audience was more fun to watch than the male strippers.

One of the girls who went with us is married, and she said her husband would not approve of her going to see men strip, so she didn't tell him. The other girl is engaged, and she said her fiance thought it was disgusting.

Now we're asking you, Abby. Why would a man get upset because his wife or girlfriend wanted to see a male stripper?
NORA

DEAR NORA: Probably for the same reason some women get upset because their husbands or boyfriends want to see female strippers. They feel that comparisons will be made and they won't measure up.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the woman who lamented that her guests never used her pretty little guest towels, preferring instead to dry their hands on the rug or whatever was handy, brought back memories.

When my wife was living, we didn't entertain much. But when we did, my wife always had the bathroom spotlessly clean, and she laid out her fancy guest towels. Of course, my son and I were admonished not to use them — they were for the guests. However, none of the guests used them either.

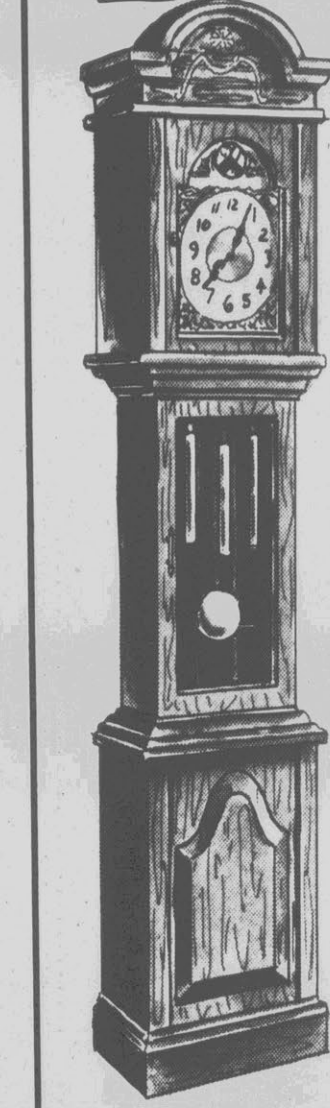

Finally, after one party, my wife mentioned that nobody used her guest towels and she seemed hurt about it. The next time we entertained, I went into the bathroom and dried my hands on not one, but two guest towels, and just to make sure they looked "used," I wadded them up and left them in plain view. Sure enough, one or two guests followed my example!

The morning after the party, my wife and I were discussing what a good time we had, and she said, "And this time they used the guest towels!"

After that, I always did the same thing, and it worked like magic. I never did tell my wife my secret, bless her heart.

Armani Comes Out Of Closet

By DANIELA PETROFF
Associated Press Writer
MILAN, Italy (AP) — Giorgio Armani came out of his fashion closet and publicly admitted to designing two collections which do not bear his name. It was no secret to fashion watchers that for several years the king of Italian ready-to-wear was behind more than his own label. But on Tuesday he admitted fathering the Erreuno and all-leather Mario Valentino collections.

Both were displayed on the Milan runway as part of the ready-to-wear offerings for next fall and winter, and both were roaring successes.

In the Valentino collection the smooth Armani line in the pants and jackets and the leather Neapolitan artistry of Valentino combined to create the ultimate in styled leather fashion.

Loose pants cut off above the ankle or below the knee were stitched in Madras-printed suede. They were worn with three-quarter embroidered black shearing jackets.

The surprise appearance of Armani on the runway after both shows seemed aimed at appeasing the wrath he incurred this season by snubbing the traditional fashion calendar and announcing that he would show his own collection to a select few at a later date.

Jenny, designed by another ready-to-wear favorite Gianni Versace, also showed Tuesday on the third day of the five-day Milan showings. It featured the Renaissance theme widely favored this year. Velvet pants so tight as to seem panty hose and short skirts brought back the days of gallant knights and graceful courtiers. Wide-shouldered metal gray leather jackets and matching leather vests created an armored look worthy of

England's Henry VIII. For evening Jenny jumped back into the 20th century in a series of black velvet suits with extra tight sequined trousers suitable to the best international dinner and dance clubs.

Haig Offer Could Help

Perhaps we are at least getting somewhere with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig, Jr.'s five-point plan to settle the differences between the United States and Nicaragua.

Haig outlined his plan to Mexico's Foreign Minister Jorge Castaneda, who will relay it to Nicaragua and Cuba.

No one expects any immediate agreement on the proposals, but it is a starting point and we have Mexico playing a key role which could be important to our relationship with our Central American neighbor.

The proposals included a non-aggression pact which would protect Nicaragua, a pledge that the United States would not assist rebels and ending the shipment of heavy weapons into Central America. Nicaragua would pledge to get out of El Salvador and United States aid to Nicaragua would resume.

All that seems reasonable enough assuming the intent of the Nicaraguan government is not to help spread Cuban-type repression. There is certainly adequate room for negotiation, although nothing can be settled if there is no agreement that military equipment, presumably from the Soviets, is not excluded from the area.

Emergency Power Awesome

One would hope that the Pitt County Board of Commissioners would never have to use a "State of Emergency" ordinance which it approved last week.

It gives the board chairman great powers to order restrictions in the event of an emergency in the county.

The situation would have to be severe ... a crisis, disaster, riot where maintaining public order would be impossible.

We are certain the County Commissioners recognize that these powers are awesome and go against all we cherish in a democratic society. Yet there have been times when such powers were used in Greenville, during the 1960s, and curfews were imposed.

With much of the county more urban than it once was the possibility always exists that there could be a disaster of such magnitude as to call for emergency measures. It should only occur, however, in the most severe situation.

LOWERING CHANCES OF HIGHER EDUCATION

By JAMES KILPATRICK

All Part Of The News

WASHINGTON — Twenty-one years have passed, almost to the day, since John F. Kennedy succeeded in killing news stories that would have disclosed a covert CIA operation in Latin America. The incident set off months of troubled self-examination within the press.

Now some of the same questions arise. Twice in recent weeks the Washington Post has published Page-One stories based upon leaks at the highest levels of government. On Feb. 19 the Post published excerpts from notes taken by a senior State Department official at conferences with Secretary Haig. On March 10 the Post quoted from highly classified documents dealing with a covert CIA operation in Nicaragua.

Was this responsible journalism? The 1961 incident, of course, had to do with the Bay of Pigs invasion. Karl Meyer of The New Republic prepared an article, "Our Men in Miami." Gilbert Harrison, editor of the magazine, sent an advance text to the White House. President Kennedy asked that the piece be behaved irresponsibly, it would not have spared the country a disaster.

The current circumstances are similar but not identical. In 1961 word of the Bay of Pigs operation was all over Miami. As events proved, Castro needed no warning from The New York Times. This time around we are dealing with a different matter. We are dealing with the disclosure of confidential papers having to do with private conversations and with truly covert operations.

JAMES J. KILPATRICK

The Post's pious defense of its Feb. 19 story is that the people have a right to know if Secretary Haig is saying one thing in private and something else in public. In breaking the March 10 story that President Reagan had authorized the CIA to train a paramilitary force of 500 Latin Americans, the Post's position is far more defensible: This was news, and the duty of a newspaper is to report the news, not to suppress it.

I thought the Feb. 19 story of Haig's private conversations was a dirty piece of business unworthy of a great newspaper. The Post didn't report the real news. It was mere gossip that in private Haig had called Britain's Lord Carrington a "duplicitous bastard." The real news lay in the identity of the other duplicitous bastard — the senior State Department official who had willfully or negligently violated the trust reposed in him. Why don't the people have a right to know who this was?

The same hard question has to be explored in the far more serious matter of the CIA's operation in suppressed, and Harrison agreed to kill it. At about the same time, Tad Szulc filed a similar story to The New York Times. The newspaper's senior editors talked it over. According to Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr., special assistant to the president, James Reston counseled against publication. This was Schlesinger's memoir: "Either the story would alert Castro, in which case the Times would be responsible for casualties on the beach, or else the expedition would be canceled, in which case the Times would be responsible for grave interference with national policy. (Killing the story) was a patriotic act, but in retrospect, I have wondered whether, if the press had

Food Co-Op Fills A Need

By MARK SCHWED

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Street vendor Yahya Abdur-Rahman frowns every time he sees people cramming fresh fruits and vegetables into their shopping carts at the neighborhood grocery store.

He considers it a waste — for both the consumer and the small farmer.

Abdur-Rahman, 28, sells jewelry and incense on the streets of Nashville to make a living. He is responsible for putting food on the table for his wife, his 5-year-old son, his 3-year-old daughter and his 2-month-old baby.

The rising cost of living forced him to cut corners. But the most important decision he made was to join a food co-op.

A member for only two months, Abdur-Rahman says he has realized savings of 50 to 65 percent by buying fruits, vegetables and dry goods from the neighborhood co-op based in his government-subsidized housing project.

"It's best for consumption and best for the pocketbook," he says. "It's costing us less and there's more available."

For his first $5 co-op "share," he took home three bags of fruits and vegetables; bags stuffed with oranges, apples, collard greens, spinach, cabbage and other foodstuffs.

"When you go to a grocery store with $5, you come out with a bag of onions and a bag of potatoes," he says. "That is the thing that kicked the co-op idea over with me."

The co-op was set up with the help of the Agricultural Marketing Project. The AMP was formed in 1974 by a group of Vanderbilt University students concerned about the decline in the number of small farms in the South, the small profits being made by farmers, the decrease in consumer demands for fresh fruits and vegetables and the problem of rising food prices.

"A lot of people are feeling the pinch," says John Vleck, co-founder of the non-profit AMP, which seeks to bring farmers and consumers closer together.

"Everything I'm hearing is that it's the worst it's been since the depression," Vleck says.

Of the 94,000 farmers in Tennessee, 90 percent gross less than $20,000 in farm sales a year and many tell the AMP they cannot survive much longer unless something is done about high interest rates and competition from big farms.

As an example, the AMP says 65 percent of all grocery sales in metropolitan areas of the United States are by only four grocery chains. Tennessee farmers had a choice of about 10 major food processors to sell to a decade ago. Now there are only three.

Farmer Landon Haynes: "If we go broke, all the rest of the economy will collapse — just like a pile of dominoes. Don't kid yourselves. It will happen."

"If they just sit up there in Washington on their fannies," Haynes says, "the country's going to get in worse shape than Poland."

Instead of waiting for federal help, the AMP has set up open air farmers markets, wholesale cooperatives in which farmers sell to restaurants, hospitals and schools, and created co-ops to help farmers sell their produce to bargain-hunting consumers.

The farmer-to-consumer co-op is catching on in Nashville. About 400 families have formed 10 consumer co-ops in Nashville since May. These co-ops buy directly from farmers and save their members up to 65 percent on their produce purchases.

Members pay $5 per week and the money is pooled to purchase large quantities of food at wholesale prices. Once a week, each member stops by a neighbor's house to pick up an allotment of the variety of foods distributed equally among members.

"The co-op is not like going into a store," Abdur-Rahman says. "You have to participate. You have to do some work."

"They've been doing real well," Vleck says. "The phones have been ringing off the hook by others who are interested in joining or forming their own co-ops. Our role is to let people know that this kind of thing can happen."

One reason for the direct consumer-farmer link is to reduce the amount of waste in the fields.

The AMP estimates that 137 million tons of edible food worth $31 billion is destroyed in the United States each year. Much of it is left in the fields to rot because it is either surplus, unmarketable or just passed over by mechanical reapers, the AMP says.

"Farmers, when they overproduce, destroy foods. With the rise of co-ops, and the elimination of the middle man, the bonds between the farmer and consumer will get stronger. There will be less waste," says Abdur-Rahman.

The AMP's latest project is setting up wholesale cooperatives. Farmers are organized to sell their produce directly to restaurants, grocery store warehouses, hospitals, day care centers, and other businesses that consume large quantities of food.

Testing Nashville markets, AMP organized a wholesale cooperative of 35 farmers who found they could easily undercut higher wholesale prices traditionally quoted to restaurants. With more persistence, the farmers broke into the grocery store warehouse markets.

The wholesale co-op sold $30,000 to $40,000 worth of produce last year — enough to encourage participants to expand the project to Knoxville this year.

"I think it means there's a potential for access to big-scale markets and that the farmers know there are incentives for producing vegetables in the future," Vleck said.

Tax System Study

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — When time comes for a property tax study commission of the North Carolina General Assembly to look at firsthand examples of some changes in the local property tax payment system, they will find several within the state.

Activity in providing an incentive for early payment currently centers in Burke County. The County Commissioners adopted a system last month, and the towns of Valdese and Drexel have followed suit.

Property owners who pay their bills in August get a 1 percent discount.

While this is a relatively small discount, it does help to spotlight the fact that taxes are due at those early dates, it does reward the conscientious citizen who pays in a timely way, and it does give local governments an earlier cash flow which, properly invested, can produce added interest income while saving on some borrowing which might have to be done as the tax year ends.

Good Will Local government leaders in that area consider the plan a goodwill gesture to the people. One benefit resulting is the earlier preparation and mailing of tax bills, which of itself should prompt more taxpayers to send their payments in earlier.

Few people realize that local property taxes are actually due and payable Sept. 1 each year. Almost everyone thinks the due date is Jan. 1. That is because penalties begin Jan. 6.

The penalties, however, are so slight as to be little incentive to prompt payment. In January it is 2 percent of the due amount, then 0.75 percent each month thereafter. Actually, say the payment experts, holding back on paying local property taxes is one of the cheapest ways to "borrow" money you can find in these days of high interest rates.

The legislative study commission has placed its first priority on a look at the payment schedule and penalty system, and specialists from local governments and the Institute of Government at Chapel Hill are urging legislators to make reforms in those areas, along with some change in the revaluation system.

Revaluation of property tax for tax purposes now takes place every eight years from county to county and, when property owners are faced with tax values which are double or triple, the reaction can be traumatic for local government officials.

No immediate relief is in sight on any of these points, however, since the study commission is not expected to produce its recommendations until 1983.

Changes

Among the proposals now being studied are those which would shorten the time between the due date of local taxes and the date on which penalties begin, presenting tax bills earlier and providing positive rewards for early payment, and sizable increases in penalties to discourage late payment.

As to revaluation, numerous side effects are related. The lengthy delay is causing more rapid increases in developing suburban areas and farmlands than in downtown and business sections. There is no workable system currently available for pegging tax values to market values, and not even the deed stamps

Other Editors Say A Costly Error

(Goldsboro News-Argus)

This newspaper proposed several years ago when the cost of the lieutenant governor's office was getting out of hand that it was time to return it to parttime status.

That suggestion has been repeated on this page from time to time and it has been taken up by other newspapers around the state.

Not once has there been a public suggestion from anyone that the more than $1.2 million the taxpayers cough up for each four-year term can be justified.

Yet there has not been a whisper in the General Assembly about returning the position to where it should be — parttime.

Why? Unfortunately, the issue becomes embroiled in personal political loyalties, in fears of retribution and the feeling by legislators that in order to get along one must go along.

Who, after all, wants to buck the lieutenant governor who has substantial political following among the public and has the power of appointments to major committees, in addition to having influential friends in both houses of the General Assembly?

There have been some attacks in the press and elsewhere, that were directed personally against Jimmy Green because of the fulltime nature of his position and its cost to taxpayers.

This newspaper has not and will not engage in a personal attack of Mr. Green on this issue. While he successfully ran for the position twice, he did not create it nor was he the first to occupy it and use it largely as a base for running for governor. It was proposed in a referendum and approved by a vote of the people. So we can blame ourselves.

But there was no public demand that initiated the referendum in the first place. There is a public outcry now, however, protesting the fulltime position. It is time to correct a costly mistake.

Strength For Today

A LIBERATED WILL Much has been written about the necessity of strengthening the will. Some modern ethical movements are based on the theory that a strong will can do anything.

But much of this talk about strengthening the will is beside the point. What the wills of most of us need is not strength but liberation. Our wills are in bondage. We look upon certain evils and know that it is our duty to avoid them, and yet ultimately we yield to them because of some little promise of pleasure they hold out. On the other hand, we aspire to do some good thing and find that we cannot because our vices, great and small, interfere.

What we need is to strike from the will the fetters which bind it. The liberated will may be weak, but at least it is free. Being liberated, it is now prepared to be strengthened. But no amount of strengthening will make it adequate so long as it is held in bondage.

The wills of some are bound by ignorance or prejudice. But the greatest bondage of all is that of sin. — Elisha Douglass

Questions, But Few Answers

By JOHN CUNNIFF AP Business Analyst NEW YORK (AP) —

The economy has reached that point in its complexity, its obstinacy, and its obfuscation that more questions than answers are being thrown at problems, especially the problem of high interest.

They are being thrown even by the administration, as Treasury Secretary Donald Regan revealed in his talk last week to securities people, or Wall Streeters, the same sort that he himself used to be.

Even the President, said Regan, is asking why interest rates remain high while inflation slows. As he acknowledged this, Regan had ideas. Doubts the deficit will be lowered, doubts apparently shared by the Federal Reserve, which pursues tight money.

But why the doubts? Specifically, why do the Fed and Wall Street doubt? "What don't you believe?" the treasury secretary snapped at his audience, barely pausing to allow any response. Had there been doubts might have been phrased as questions. Nobody is certain today.

That is especially true about forecasters, those people who sound so bright when the economy is under no stress but who risk life, limb and reputation when they are forced to call major turns in direction.

Befuddled, they are asking what happened. More than a year ago, you may recall, they forecast sluggishness in the early part of 1981, and said economic activity would accelerate later in the year.

"In fact," says Paul McCracken, University of Michigan economist, "the profile ... was almost precisely the opposite. There was a strong first quarter, a flat middle half of the year, and a sharp decline at the end." No wonder economists are asking questions.

With a track record like that, McCracken writes in "Economic Outlook USA," published by Michigan's Survey Research Center, "forecasters have been making their prognostications about 1982 and beyond with more evident, and some would say well-earned, diffidence and modesty."

Perhaps as a defense against doubters, the professor seeks support from history before making his, and history shows that seven recessions since World War II averaged 9.3 months of decline.

That would suggest the low point of this recession might be in April, but mindful of his own comments, and certainly of high interest rates, McCracken declares "the low point itself might not show up quite on schedule in April."

Whatever the reason, those interest rates seem to be offsetting any benefits from tax cuts. Jack Lavery, the new chief economist at Merrill Lynch, where Donald Regan used to preside as chairman, has found only three other periods in U.S. history when real rates have been so high.

Real rates are the difference between posted rates and the inflation rate. With inflation for the past year running 8 to 9 percent, the real rate on long-term government bonds is 5 or 6 percent, on high grade utilities about 8.25 percent, and on the prime rate about 8 to 8.5 percent.

"Real interest rates have reached record highs for the post World War Two period," says Lavery. "We have had only three earlier periods with such high real rates — the 1870s, the 1920s, and the 1930s."

He observes: "In American history, the prior periods of sustained high real interest rates have been accompanied by disinflation and, at least in the short term, a reduced momentum of economic activity."

It is with that history in mind that you measure the degree of anguish in the White House when they seek the reason for such high rates.

The nearest you can come to answering their plea is to say that high rates reflect doubts and uncertainties. It is more difficult to answer what would seem to be the next question: "Why do you doubt?"

We Care About Eagles

Soaring through the sky, the proud eagle with its snowy white head and tail gleaming in the sun is a majestic figure. No wonder that 100 years ago it was chosen as our national symbol. But despite its honored status, the eagle has long suffered from neglect and harassment. Its breeding and hunting areas have shrunk as civilization spreads. Ranchers have shot eagles to prevent livestock predation. Pesticides like DDT have interfered with reproduction. In the 48 states, only 1200 breeding nests are left, making the bald eagle an endangered species. Worried conservationists hope to stress the eagles' plight during this National Wildlife Week. The motto for the week is "We Care About Eagles."

N.C. Gun Ban Seen Unlikely

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Although nationwide attention has been focused on communities in Illinois and Georgia that have adopted gun-control ordinances, prospects for a statewide anti-gun law in North Carolina are slim to none, officials say.

"I don't think any type of gun control legislation stands a chance in this state," said state Sen. Craig Lawing, D-Mecklenburg, Senate president pro tem.

"Most people in this legislature own guns, either a shotgun or rifle or handgun, and when you start talking about restricting them, they don't particularly like it," he said.

Last year, Sen. Charles Vickery, D-Orange, introduced a bill in the General Assembly to control the sale of handguns. After a campaign by gun supporters, which brought 5,000 pieces of mail and more than 1,500 phone calls in opposition of the bill, the state Senate voted 32-15 to table the bill.

"There's no question about it; what the National Rifle Association did here was nothing but blackmail," Vickery said. "This legislature is frightened by the myth of the power of the NRA, so they don't deal with it (gun control) on a rational basis."

The NRA has 33,657 members in North Carolina and 1.8 million in the nation. Much of the group's work in the state is handled by an affiliate, the North Carolina Rifle and Pistol Association, with headquarters in Charlotte.

Vickery's anti-gun law has not won the support of Gov. Jim Hunt or Attorney General Rufus Edmisten. Hunt is undecided on the issue, and Edmisten opposes it.

Brent Hackney, a spokesman Hunt, said the governor is concerned about the use of firearms in crimes. But Hunt has not taken a position on the best means of "keeping guns, particularly handguns, out of the hands of criminals," Hackney said.

Edmisten said he thinks enough laws already are on the books to adequately control guns.

"Those people who think you can go out here today and take up all the guns and cut off access to guns by criminals are absolutely ridiculous," he said.

Nicaragua. Who leaked to the Post? On the face of it, it seems evident that persons at the highest levels of the CIA or the National Security Council have engaged in conduct that approaches the traitorous. These "officials" have acted dishonorably once. We have to assume that, left unidentified, they will compromise other operations in the future.

If the identity of these moles is not news, I have wasted 40 years in the news business. Of course this is news, big news, but through some perversion of the journalists' code, it is not news you are likely to find reported in the Washington Post. Our sources, you know, must be protected.

If it had been my decision to make, after carefully verifying the smuggled documents, yes, I would have published the March 10 piece on the CIA operation. The consequences may be highly damaging to the national image, but the consequences are damned. If a national image of non-interventionism is false, we had better know the truth. The Post in this instance acted responsibly. But now, if the Post will not report the rest of the news, other investigative journalists should dig it out. Who are the moles? Surely the people have a right to know.

To make revaluation work, say most experts, a constant updating by feeding into the computers a variety of market information would be the fairest way. But that would prove expensive to construct.

Soviet Meat, Milk Production Slumps

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet meat and milk production in the first two months of 1982 fell five percent below the output for the same period last year, the government said today.

"This is clear evidence that short feed supplies are resulting in a sharp decline in (cattle) productivity," one Western expert said. "There is a decline in slaughter weights."

According to figures published in the government weekly Economic Gazette, meat production in the first two months of 1982 was about 2.7 million tons.

Soviet per capita meat consumption is about 60 percent of that in the United States.

Milk production dipped to 7.7 million tons in the first two months of the year, also down 5 percent from the same period last year.

Soviet agricultural difficulties apparently stem from three consecutive poor grain harvests. Last year's harvest was thought to have been so far below the government target that no totals were ever published.

The U.S. Agriculture Department estimated the Soviet harvest at 192 million tons. The Kremlin's five-year plan called for grain harvests averaging between 261 million and 267 million tons a year.

Meanwhile, Soviet industrial production rebounded slightly after a poor start in January, according to the Economic Gazette.

Coal production was up 1 percent, oil production increased by 0.1 percent, and automobile output improved by 2 percent, the paper said. All three sectors posted declines last month.

The paper said steel production dropped from 13.6 million tons in January to 12.6 million tons in February, while natural gas production was up 2 percent in February, after an equal rise in January.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — Snow and snow flurries are expected in the forecast period, Thursday until Friday morning, from the Southwest into the north and upper Great Lakes. Showers are forecast from east Texas through the Midwest into the Northeast. The West will be mostly sunny but colder. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
Skies were clear to partly cloudy over inland sections of the state during the early morning hours. Some cloudiness, however was reported near the coast. Patchy dense fog reduced visibilities in the southern Piedmont.

Pre-dawn temperatures ranged from the low 40s in the northeastern corner of the state to the 50s across southern sections. Most locations saw the mercury dip into the mid-to upper 40s. These temperatures seem almost chilly compared to the highs recorded Wednesday afternoon. On Wednesday the mercury climbed well into the 70s in most areas, even in the mountains. The warm spot was Jacksonville where the afternoon high was 82 degrees.

Cooler readings this morning were caused by a weak cold front that drifted through north Carolina late last night. After the frontal passage... Weak high pressure centered over eastern Canada began to move southward. By late tonight, an extension of the high pressure system will stretch down the eastern seaboard to the Georgia coast giving our region a northeast wind flow.

The onshore winds will bring some clouds into the state and also help keep temperatures today a few degrees below those observed Wednesday.

On Friday a storm system will be gathering strength as it moves through the plains states toward the midwest. The southerly winds ahead of a trailing cold front will bring enough moisture into western North Carolina so that there will be a chance of showers in the mountains. On Saturday the chance of showers will increase east of the mountains.

Recreational weather outlook: Comfortable weather for most outdoor activities is on tap today. Highs are going to range from the 50s in the northeast corner of the state to the 70s in the west. Afternoon readings in the 60s will be common along the central and southern coast as well as in much of the Piedmont.

There will be plenty of sunshine in the west where skies are going to be partly cloudy. Variable cloudiness will be order of the day in the east and northeast. Lows tonight will be generally in the 40s and 50s. Cloudiness will gradually increase over all of the tar heel state Friday. By afternoon and evening there is even going to be a chance of showers in the mountains. Highs will be in the 60s and 70s.

Officer Cleared In Gun Death

KANNAPOLIS, N.C. (AP) — A Kannapolis police officer has been cleared of any wrongdoing in the fatal shooting of a 19-year-old Concord man.

"We've concluded that based on the SBI report, the shooting was in the line of duty," said Bob Roberts, district attorney for Cabarrus and Rowan counties. "The officer used legally justifiable force under the circumstances."

The State Bureau of Investigation conducted a probe of the Dec. 21 shooting which left Lloyd Matthew Ross dead. Officer Michael Rowell, a nine-year veteran of the police force, shot Ross. Police said Ross fired a shotgun at officers three times before he was killed by three shots by Rowell. Police said the incident occurred when Ross took a shotgun from another police officer's cruiser and ran into nearby woods.

Early Work Is Begun On Vietnam War Memorial

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Preliminary work has started on the grassy parkland that is to hold the nation's memorial to Americans who fought in Vietnam and the 57,892 who died there.

Three years after a young former infantryman, Jan C. Scruggs, began buttonholing Congress to support the idea of a memorial, work crews put up a fence at the site Wednesday and began preparations for excavation. A formal groundbreaking ceremony is to be held March 26.

"We feel like a million bucks," said Scruggs, who created the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund and persuaded Congress to devote a section of Constitution Gardens, between the Lincoln Memorial and the Washington Monument, to the memorial.

The monument is expected to cost between $6 million and $7 million. Scruggs said $6 million has been collected or pledged and he expressed confidence the rest will be raised.

Even though work is about to begin, a disputed point over the monument's appearance is still to be settled.

The original design called for two long, submerged walls of polished black granite coming together in the shape of a V and bearing the names of Americans killed and the 1,500 still listed as missing in the war.

Some Vietnam veterans and congressmen objected to that stark design, calling it a political statement that said more about the controversy of the war at home than the heroism of the Americans who fought in it. They demanded a more traditional, and more heroic, monument.

The memorial fund agreed to add a flag and a larger-than-life statue of a soldier, but the statute design must still be selected and other details must still be worked out.

Scruggs said he agreed that those elements could be put at the center of the monument — the flagpole at the apex and the statue in front of it.

But the government's Fine Arts Commission, which must approve the design changes, suggested that they be put elsewhere — near a directory of names which will help people locate the names of loved ones.

The original plans also called for listing the names of those killed in the war in the order in which they died. Critics said the names should be listed alphabetically by year in which the death occurred. Scruggs said that issue has not been settled yet.

Last week, at a meeting between critics and supporters of the original concept, a compromise was proposed under which the names would be listed alphabetically by year in which the death occurred. Scruggs said that issue has not been settled yet.

Prison For Drug Counts

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Three Cubans, one a former Marine sergeant, were sentenced Wednesday in Onslow County Superior Court on drug convictions stemming from a cache of cocaine.

Jorge L. Acosta, the former Marine, and his father-in-law, Sergio Morales, were sentenced to seven years in prison and were ordered to pay court costs and a fine of $50,000 each. They were convicted of possessing and trafficking in cocaine.

Eva Rosa Armenteros-Lopez, charged with possession of cocaine, was sentenced to two years in prison. The sentence was suspended and she was placed on five years' probation. She was also ordered to pay court costs and a $1,500 fine.

The trio, along with Acosta's wife, Bertha, were arrested Oct. 11, 1981 at Acosta's Jacksonville apartment. Recovered at the scene was 266.9 grams of cocaine.

The four, all Florida residents, were originally charged with possession, manufacture with the intent to sell and deliver cocaine and three other drug-related offenses. Plea bargaining resulted in the dismissal of the other charges while all charges against Mrs. Acosta were dropped.

Acosta received an honorable discharge from the Marine Corps in February.

Third Fire Loss In 20 Years.

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — For the third time in less than 20 years, fire has destroyed the home of Dora Lee Barker.

"I just don't feel like I can go through it again," she said. The fire Monday destroyed her double-wide mobile home, along with all of its contents.

In the mid-1960s, fire destroyed their rented home in Asheboro and four years ago, fire destroyed the family's two-story home where the trailer stands.

A local motel owner has offered them a place to stay, and friends have donated money to help the family out.

Fire investigators say the cause of the most recent fire is still under investigation.

Old Ambition: To Be President

BEING PRESIDENT WAS HIS GOAL ... and now Wayne Avery serves as chief executive for the Winterville Kiwanis Club. Impressed as a youth by the organization's gift of a new activity bus to his high school, he vowed to become a member and

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

WINTERVILLE — When Wayne Avery was in high school, he made up his mind he wanted to be president. Now, he is.

Avery is president of the Winterville Kiwanis Club, a goal he set for himself during his teens and one he achieved last fall when his fellow Kiwanians voted him into office.

"When I was in high school I played baseball and basketball and did a lot of traveling with the teams," he explained. "The old bus we had may or may not get us there. Then, the second year I was in school the Kiwanis Club was formed and they bought the school a new activity bus."

"maybe even be president." Last fall club members elected him to that office. His goal for the year, he says, is to begin a building on the club's new eight-acre permanent site, above. (Reflector Photo By Mary Schulken)

Avery, impressed, vowed he would join the organization one day and secretly hoped he could be elected president sometime "so I could repay what I felt they had given me," he said.

"I used that activity bus for two years and was very appreciative," he noted. "I said I would join one day and I have."

Avery has been a member of the Winterville Kiwanis for nine years, and has a record of perfect attendance at their functions. One thing he likes about it, he says, is that "nobody in the club is called Mr."

"It's an informal thing," he noted. "We are a group that's interested in the community and we work to help the community."

Another thing that impressed Avery about the Kiwanis Club was the fact that it took them only a year to pay for the bus. "They bought and paid for it in one year," he said. "Every Saturday they cooked barbeque until the bus was ours."

The young president said he had no interest in joining civic clubs until he saw the difference the bus made in his own life. "I saw through that project what an organization like this can mean to a community, and I wanted to be a part of it," he said.

Avery is also active in the Winterville Fire and Rescue Department and has been a Cub Scout master and director of the local Boy Scout troop. He says his involvements have benefited him.

"Kiwanis has helped me become more outgoing," noted Avery. "I've had to go out and meet people and be more of an extrovert than I would be if I weren't involved with the club."

Avery's main project as president, he says, is getting a building started on the eight acres the club has just purchased near the town. "We hope to eventually have recreation facilities, too," he noted. "It's a nice, wooded area. It was last year's president that got the land, and now I hope I'll be the one that gets the building going."

Rabies Shots

The Pitt County Health Department is offering evening clinics for vaccinations of all dogs.

According to Dr. Robert Ehinger, health director, "The General Statutes of North Carolina require that all dogs be vaccinated and display a vaccination tag at all times."

Licensed doctors of veterinary medicine will administer the rabies vaccine to all dogs 4 months of age and older. Dogs receiving their first vaccinations this year will need to be vaccinated again in 1983. For dogs previously vaccinated, this year's vaccination is good for three years.

The cost for vaccination at Public Health Clinics is $4 per animal.

The clinics are being held at clinic sites within Pitt County communities. Those who are unable to take their pets to the clinics nearest their homes may take them to any other clinic site.

"The important thing is for all dogs and cats to be vaccinated to prevent any future outbreak of rabies in our county," said Dr. Ehinger.

OPEC Members Face Clash In Emergency Meeting

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer
VIENNA, Austria (AP) — OPEC's emergency meeting Friday to deal with the world oil glut is going to be a rough one, but the Saudis will defend the $34 benchmark price, Venezuela's energy minister said today.

"It's going to be a difficult meeting. It's a difficult situation. I don't believe we can make a final decision of production levels," said Energy Minister Humberto Calderon, who was among the early arrivals for the meeting.

Calderon said Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest oil exporter, will defend its price before the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. "I think the effort is needed, that's our position," he told reporters.

Venezuela has had trouble selling some of its oil products since the glut developed, being forced to cut production and exports.

The glut is pushing prices lower, OPEC production is at a 13-year-low and its petrodollar surplus is fast dwindling. Internal bickering, while always present, seems to be growing.

Some analysts believe that unless OPEC drastically reduces its production, its members will launch a free-for-all in price cutting to avoid losing customers. That could push oil prices to $25 a barrel or lower. The current contract price averages about $33 a barrel.

For nearly a decade OPEC flaunted its power to set prices, and in doing so reshaped the economic paths of the industrialized West. Now OPEC is seeing its strength sapped by such non-OPEC producers as Mexico and Great Britain.

By forcing prices higher in the 1970s, OPEC spurred the importing nations to conserve, to find oil outside the Middle East and to use alternative fuel sources.

As a result, Great Britain and Norway — which had virtually no oil production before 1967 — have rapidly developed rich oil fields in the North Sea. Production there now exceeds 2.4 million barrels a day and is growing.

The increased output from non-OPEC countries has come at a critical time for the oil group. Its competitors have cut prices far below the Saudi Arabian price of $34 a barrel, around which other OPEC members set their prices. As a result, oil customers are walking away from OPEC contracts.

And many energy analysts believe OPEC will be forced to reduce its benchmark price in order to avoid a further, possibly disastrous, erosion of its finances.

If OPEC lowers the $34-a-barrel base, which is far above the cost of production, it would mark the first such collective price reduction in the group's 21-year history.

Mana Saeed Oteiba, the chairman of OPEC and oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, was quoted earlier this week by a Lebanese magazine as recommending OPEC keep its benchmark price intact and ride out its "unprecedented storm."

Many economists say OPEC would not solve its problem by cutting prices. Instead, they say, the group would have to reduce production even further, to 16 million barrels a day or lower, to balance supply with demand.

The options facing OPEC are fraught with danger, said Dillard Spriggs, president of Petroleum Analysis Ltd. in New York.

"This is a testing period for them, like they've never been tested before," he said.

The test is perhaps greatest for Saudi Arabia, whose production makes it the world's largest oil exporter and accounts for more than 40 percent of OPEC's output.

Herbert Krupp, an energy economist at Bankers Trust Co., believes if the Saudis try to hold their price at $34 and oil demand continues to wither, critics within OPEC — most notably Iran and Libya — might retaliate with violence. Libya recently called for the overthrow of Saudi Arabia's monarchy, and Iran has accused the Saudis of engineering the oil glut.

But if the Saudis cut prices and scale down internal development programs, the royal family risks antagonizing the people it rules.

Saudi Arabia has one-quarter of the world's known oil reserves which are expected to last well into the 21st century. As a result, its officials can afford to take a long view. Others, such as Algeria and Gabon, whose wells may run dry in the 1990s, cannot, and they are determined to get top price now for their diminishing reserves.

Coroner Backed By Grand Jury

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The county grand jury says the coroner's office needs a bigger budget and some operating improvements, but it criticized the decision to suspend Coroner Thomas Noguchi.

"We see nothing that would warrant the action the board took," John G. Sonneborn Jr., the grand jury foreman, said Wednesday. "Had the Board of Supervisors waited for the grand jury's audit, they might have had other thoughts. If I were the boss, I would have waited for all of the facts."

The five-member board furloughed Noguchi for a month effective Friday for alleged mismanagement, absenteeism and doing private consulting work from his office during business hours.

Supervisor Pete Schabarum said the board would review Noguchi's written response to those charges today, and noted that the discipline was based on "a substantial body of material" in a critical department audit released March 8 by chief County Administrative Officer Harry Hufford.

The grand jury audit, released Wednesday after a six-month investigation, called for increasing the department's budget and improving training procedures, personnel evaluations, evidence storing, assignment of workloads and equipment. More staff was suggested, as well as limits on records the coroner's office provides other departments and the public.

"This department needs some help," Sonneborn said. "It needs $85,000 in equipment; it needs to bring down certain (workload) standards the pathologists are performing; it needs five more doctors."

National standards suggest limiting a medical examiner to 1.3 autopsies daily, but every Los Angeles County medical examiner performs about three a day, he said.

The juror who headed the review team, Rebecca Allen, said supervisors may have reacted to public pressure following Noguchi's comments about the deaths of actor William Holden and actress Natalie Wood last November.

The coroner suggested Holden may have been too drunk to get help after he fell in his apartment and speculated an argument occurred between Miss Wood's husband, actor Robert Wagner, and actor Christopher Walken the night she drowned.

Noguchi, 55, was fired in 1969 for alleged "intemperate" statements and for purportedly praying for a major plane crash so he could make a name for himself. The Civil Service Commission ordered his reinstatement.

Negative News Reporting Hit

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's spokesman says the news media "has been reasonably fair" in its coverage of the administration but that persistent negative reporting can have a psychological impact on the economy.

David R. Gergen, Reagan's assistant for communications, was asked Wednesday to explain Reagan's criticism of news reporting, made in an interview Tuesday with the Daily Oklahoman.

Gergen's comment on the impact of "negative" reporting echoed Reagan, who asked in the newspaper interview:

"Is it news that some fellow out in South Succotash someplace has just been laid off, that he should be interviewed nationwide? ...

"You can't turn on evening news without seeing that they're going to interview someone else who has lost his job or they're outside the factory that has laid-off workers and so forth — the constant down-beat — that can contribute psychologically to slowing down a new recovery that is in the offing," the president said, according to a transcript made available at the White House.

The president said network news programs, in "the battle of the ratings," were "looking for what's eye-catching and spectacular."

At CBS, spokesman Richard Drayne said the network had no comment.

Ron Najman, director of news information at NBC News in New York, said NBC had no comment.

At ABC, Kitty Bayh, director of news information, said "the president is certainly entitled to his opinion, but beyond that we would have no comment."

Charleston Has A Black Chief

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — The city of Charleston has appointed the first black police chief in modern state history, the South Carolina Criminal Justice Academy says.

Reuben M. Greenberg, 37, a Florida state law enforcement officer, will assume the post in mid-April, Mayor Joseph Riley said Wednesday.

Greenberg was selected after a nationwide search that examined more than 200 applicants, officials said.

He has held a variety of administrative jobs in police and sheriff's departments in Oregon, California, Georgia and Florida.

Built Better Mousetrap

FLINT, Mich. (AP) — Any day now, the world should be beating a path to the doors of Gilbert Kaufman and Alfred Evans.

The two say they have invented a better mousetrap — the "Crittter Getter," a device that can capture the rodents without killing.

"It's a humane trap," Evans, 51, an architectural draftsman from Swartz Creek, said Wednesday. "A person who doesn't want to kill (a rodent) can catch it then let it go. You can use (the trap) over and over again, and it's clean."

But if you're in the mood to permanently get rid of your trapped rodent, Crittter Getter lets you do that, too.

Says Evans, "Just fill it with water and in 30 seconds ...

Evans explained that standard spring-loaded, throwaway traps kill rodents in a "rather messy" fashion. But not the Crittter Getter, which consists of a plastic tapered box open at one end. Inside is a seesaw, slanted toward the open end. The mouse is lured into the box by some edible bait placed at the end of the runway. As it reaches the bait, its weight releases a latch and it's trapped.

The two men got their idea when Kaufman, 51, had trouble with mice in the home he was renting. About three years ago, he came to Evans with the idea for a better mousetrap.

Evans took it from there, fiddling with the design and using Kaufman's home as the testing ground. They knew they had success when Kaufman caught 217 mice in one year.

Some Colleges Can Offer Jobs In Students' Fields

By BEN OLAN
(Fourth in a Series)

It took Ellen O'Brien of Pittsfield, Mass., five years to graduate from college. She was neither ill for any length of time nor a slow learner during her undergraduate years.

So, why did she go to college one year more than most others?

Ellen participated in the cooperative education program at Northeastern University in Boston. It is a five-year program in which students alternate time on campus with periods of paid employment in a field related to whatever they are studying. Often a student can earn up to half of his or her entire college costs in this arrangement. The school locates the jobs.

There are about 210,000 men and women currently involved in the nationwide program, according to Dr. James W. Wilson, a Northeastern professor who is the director of the Cooperative Education Research Center.

The aggregate is minimal compared with the 12.3 million students attending the nation's 3,000 colleges. However, some parents, students and educators see cooperative education as an antidote to the government cutbacks in student financial assistance and the mushrooming costs of tuition and other college expenses.

Although approximately 1,000 schools are participating in the program only a dozen or so have a reasonable high percentage of cooperative education students.

In addition to Northeastern (about 9,000 of 15,000 students) the list includes Drexel of Philadelphia, the University of Cincinnati, the University of Detroit and Drake University of Des Moines, Iowa.

"I think the reason it hasn't caught on more is because our program is associated with work and when many parents send their children to college, they expect them to study, not work," Dr. Wilson speculates. "But now, it may take on a lot of importance and make going to college more feasible."

A brochure prepared by Wilson's staff named the following among the major highlights of cooperative education:

•For students with limited finances, the earnings from cooperative assignments are a means for them to obtain a college education which otherwise might be beyond their reach.

•For employers, it is a means for effectively pre-screening and recruiting full-time employees less expensively than through traditional methods.

"We work with many companies and most of the jobs are in the engineering and business fields," Wilson pointed out. "Students earned about $41 million through the cooperative program in 1980-81."

Ellen O'Brien, who majored in finance and insurance, says she grossed between $3,700 and $6,000 annually while working for the Continental Group Inc. (formerly The Continental Can Co.) during her stay at Northeastern. Ellen's tuition and additional expenses there soared close to $6,000 in her final year.

"Of course, I had to pay taxes on my earnings," she said. "I had some federal grants and loans, and my parents contributed as much as they could. But working really helped financially."

When she graduated last summer, Continental hired Ellen as a budget and forecast analyst at an annual salary of $18,500. She is currently employed at the company's Stamford, Conn., headquarters.

"I know I couldn't have gotten the experience without the cooperative program," the 23-year-old said.

The program is divided into 19 quarters over the five years — four quarters over four years and three quarters for the fifth. "We'd go to school for three months and then to work for three months. I got no school credit for the time I worked. When I was nearing the end of the program, I had eight interviews before the company gave me the steady job," Ellen said.

The Continental Group, which is involved in international packaging, insurance and energy, began participating in cooperative education in 1968. "We've hired about 50 people full-time straight from college since then and about 70 percent are still with us," said Alan Anspach, the company's assistant controller. "Some of the cooperative education people are in key positions."

"At Northeastern, I run three interview sessions a year and talk to from eight to 10 students each time. Usually, three are selected after every session. Last year, 10 of our students graduated and four chose to go with us fulltime."

There is money totaling about $15 million available annually for top students in the National Merit Scholarship Program. Awards are made to approximately 5,000 students each year. High school juniors compete for these by taking an aptitude-scholarship test.

About 1,500 are one-time awards of $1,000 each and the other 3,500 are four-year awards ranging from $250 to $2,000 a year," explained Ruth Lytle of the National Merit Scholarship Corp. of Evanston, Ill., which began setting up the scholarship programs in 1955.

If a student is black or Hispanic, there are several sources of aid available. Some include: Roy Wilkins Educational Program of New York; The Negro Educational Emergency Drive of Pittsburgh, Pa.; University Fellowship for Black Graduate Students, Washington University of St. Louis, and the Mexican-American Business and Scholarship Association, Los Angeles.

Among the two most complete compendiums listing financial aid in the federal state and private sectors are: "The College Cost Book" ($8.95 from College Board Publication Orders, Box 2815, Princeton, N.J., 08541) and "Need a Lift?" ($1 from the American Legion, National Emblem Sales, Box 1055 Indianapolis, Indiana 46206).

McGuire Plant Tubing 'Worn'

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Duke Power Co.'s McGuire nuclear plant has become the first American nuclear plant to sustain steam-generator tube wear, which may keep the unit from becoming operating until summer or early fall, officials say.

Duke officials said Wednesday they have found worn places on four metal tubes in one of McGuire's four steam generators. The tube problem set back Duke's plans to use the $960-million unit, which has run only 30 days since Dec. 1.

Officials said the tubes wore because unexpected water patterns banged them against support plates. Two hundred of the plant's 18,400 tubes may be susceptible.

"In a certain place the stuff starts swirling. The water doesn't turn exactly the way it was thought," said Dr. William A. Haller, manager of technical and environmental services.

The same phenomenon has shown up in new Westinghouse plants in Brazil, Spain and Sweden, but McGuire is the first American plant to encounter tube wear, officials said.

McGuire's steam-generator tubes make steam to generate electricity by heating 440-degree water pumped in from the turbine. The steam then flows to the turbine, returning as hot water.

Haller said ill-designed baffling in the preheating section of the Westinghouse Electric steam generator caused the swirling. At full power, 8,250 gallons of water surge into the generator each minute.

Consequently, Haller said Duke has decided to cut power to 50 to 75 of capacity. He said vibrations don't occur at those levels.

Gus Lainas, a safety assessment official for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in Bethesda, Md., said the NRC views the tube-wear problem as a safety concern because continued battering can cause leaks in the finger-thick tubes.

The tubes carry radioactive water from the reactor. Leaks allow radioactivity to escape into the steam-water system, posing potential danger to workers.

Haller said the plant will run at reduced power for the next two to three months while Duke decides how it will modify the steam generator. Then it will be shut down again for the modifications. That shutdown "could be a couple of weeks. At worst two months," he said.

The plant's Unit 1 was taken off line Feb. 26 as part of Duke's steam generator evaluation program, officials said. During the outage, tubes in the four generators were checked and monitoring equipment installed.

When the McGuire plant goes back into service, it will be operating at 75 percent power.

Graham Tour In England

LONDON (AP) — Billy Graham plans an evangelistic tour of five English cities in the summer of 1984, his London office says.

Director Maurice Rowlandson said today the tour will run from the middle of May to the end of July, with Graham spending 10 days in each city. Graham was invited by interdenominational Anglican and Protestant clergy and laymen, who will plan the tour.

Graham, 63, held his first British crusade in 1954. In the northwest resort of Blackpool earlier this month, he drew 9,000 people to a crusade-type meeting, the largest audience seen there, the Lancashire Evening Gazette reported.

Kilpatrick...

That defeat of liberals was a signal that the "people wanted change" toward a "more conservative direction," he said. Kilpatrick described that direction as being toward less federal involvement, a reduction in the regulatory burden placed on Americans, more freedom for individuals and "for a strong national defense."

"Within its limited boundaries the mandate ... appears to be fulfilled," Kilpatrick said.

The columnist also expressed the belief that Reagan "is living up to his campaign promises."

"Reagan says the same thing in 1982 that he said in 1962. There's nothing new or novel. He hasn't waffled. There's no great novelty in his ideas," Kilpatrick said.

Noting Reagan's call for budget cuts in social service programs, Kilpatrick said that the United States — under the Kennedy administration, which was considered liberal — spent 50 percent of its national budget on defense and only 29 percent on social programs. Under the conservative Raagan administration, he said 29 percent is allocated for defense and 50 percent on social service programs.

"For 50 years, we have been living beyond our means. We've been unwilling to pay as you go. Deficits have a disastrous effect on interest rates. Interest rates have a disastrous effect on the economy ... I think the reforms will pass," Kilpatrick said.

Kilpatrick, a native of Oklahoma City, said he has found America to be like "glowing cherry red embers — coals, if you will —" in a fireplace covered with seemingly dead ashes.

"Breathe on it and the fire glows again," he said. "The old values are still there — self-reliance, the work ethic, the sense of family. Breathe upon them. Keep the Republic warm for years to come."

Heavy Damage In Two Auto Mishaps

An estimated $10,850 property damage resulted from two multivehicle collisions investigated by Greenville police Wednesday.

Heaviest damage resulted from an 8:05 a.m. mishap on Memorial Drive, 150 feet north of the Ione Street intersection.

Police reported a car driven by Fannie Weaver Hill of Homestead Trailer Park went out of control as it rounded a curve on Memorial Drive and left the roadway, striking two flag poles, three cars and four trucks parked on the Phelps Chevrolet parking lot. The vehicles hit by the Weaver car were owned by the car dealer.

Officers, who charged Ms. Hill with improper equipment (tires), said she was injured in the collision.

Damage was estimated at $600 to the Hill car, $50 to the flag poles, $5,900 to the parked trucks, and $1,400 to the parked cars. One of the parked cars, investigators noted, was not damaged.

Cars driven by Timothy Allen Hannah of 141 State Road; Penney Louise Belch of Route 2, Plymouth; Michael Francis Hatcher of Ayden, and Rebecca Dane Snider of Route 11, Lexington, collided about 5:36 p.m. on 10th Street, 88 feet east of the Cedar Lane intersection.

Damage from the mishap was estimated at $1,200 to the Hannah car, $600 to the Belch vehicle, $300 to the Hatcher car and $800 to the Snider car.

Police, who charged Ms. Belch with failing to reduce her speed enough to avoid an accident, reported Hannah was injured in the collision.

Again First In Barbecue

WASHINGTON (AP) — It came as no surprise to Rep. Eugene Johnston, R-N.C., that a North Carolina chef's pork barbecue took first place in the second annual "Barbecue Bowl."

After all, the freshman congressman declared, Tar Heel barbecue is "the real thing, clearly superior to the musty concoction prepared in the lower Carolina."

"Hogwash," retorted Rep. John Napier, R-S.C., who along with Johnston conceived the idea of having outsiders judge North and South Carolina hogs.

On Wednesday, Barbecue Bowl judges from the Virginia and Georgia congressional delegations declared chef Short Sugars of Leesville, N.C., the winner. Second and third place were captured by South Carolinians from Hemingway and Bennettsville.

Hundreds of politicians, staffers and dignitaries converged on Capitol Hill for the occasion. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., was master of ceremonies and entertainers from both states performed.

Helms, who said he had hoped for a tie so there would be a rematch, was assured that another Barbecue Bowl will be held next year.

"Everybody had a wine time," Johnston said.

Barnes Faces Arraignment

Robert I. Barnes Jr., suspended associate director of Pitt County Memorial Hospital, was released under $10,000 bond Wednesday pending his arraignment March 29 on a charge of embezzlement.

Barnes is accused of embezzling more than $53,000 from the hospital, where he was associate director for general services. His arraignment was set during a first appearance in Superior Court.

The $10,000 bond was posted by Barbara Barnes.

REQUESTS APPROVED

Police Chief Glenn Cannon announced the approval of two requests for solicitation permits.

Cannon said the requests were submitted by the Winterville Jayettes to conduct a door-to-door and merchant solicitation Wednesday through April 23 to raise funds for senior citizens' programs; and by Pi Kappa Phi fraternity to conduct a sidewalk solicitation Saturday through March 26 to raise funds for project PUSH (Play Units for the Severely Handicapped).

Two Firms Agree Back N.C. Electronics Center

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Two industries have promised to back an electronics research center at North Carolina State University, said John B. O'Neal Jr., an electrical engineering professor.

The national University-Industry Cooperative Research Center for Communications and Signal Processing will be funded by private enterprise with help from the National Science Foundation. O'Neal declined Wednesday to identify the two companies that have written letters of intent to join.

The center is scheduled to begin operations July 1, provided enough firms pay their $50,000-a-year membership dues and the NSF approves. At a planning meeting Wednesday, O'Neal predicted that 12 to 18 firms will decide to become charter center sponsors. Research would deal with topics such as simultaneous speech and data transmission and two-way voice and video communications.

The center would be different from the Microelectronics Center of North Carolina, which is more heavily state funded and larger in scope.

"It will definitely improve the quality of the (engineering) program at the graduate and undergraduate levels," O'Neal said.

Under current plans, the communications center would share N.C. State facilities. But Larry K. Monteith, N.C. State's dean of engineering, hinted that could change.

"If it grew to 20 or 25 sponsors, we would almost certainly have to build some space for it," he said.

The proposal follows the lead of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Ohio

State University, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, the University of Massachusetts and Case Western Reserve University. All the schools have established NSF-backed university-industry centers in other research areas.

Baha'i New Year Begins On Sunday

Members of the Baha'i Assembly in Greenville here will celebrate the Baha'i new year Sunday, the first day of spring, but its celebration will be marred by events in Iran, birthplace of the faith.

Sunday will begin the year 139 B.E. (Baha'i Era) for the Baha'i calendar dates from the religion's origin in Persia (now Iran) in 1844.

The Iranian government, local Baha'is Karen and Jeremy Tarlo said, has chosen the Baha'i new year's day, as the time to begin issuing identification cards needed to buy food and fuel.

Baha'is, labeled by the Moslem fundamentalist government as heretics — those who war against God — will not receive them, nor will they be allowed to leave Iran. "They are faced with the complete deprivation of any civil status whatsoever," Karen Tarlo said.

Already, 113 Baha'is are known to have been executed or abducted in Iran since the revolution. And hundreds of Baha'is have been dismissed from their jobs and deprived of their business and trade licenses. Baha'i children have been banned from schools and personal and community-held bank accounts have been frozen.

In the wake of continued atrocities, Baha'is worldwide are appealing to their leaders of their 360 different governments to take whatever actions they can to help prevent further persecution and oppression of Iran's Baha'i community, Tarlo said. In late March or early April, the U.S. House of Representatives Subcommittee on Human Rights will begin hearings on religious persecution throughout the world. Area Baha'is are urging everyone concerned about the situation in Iran to write to Congressman Walter B. Jones to request his support for these hearings.

For further information about the Baha'i dilemma in Iran, contact Tarlo, 752-4483.

Boone Sets An ABC Vote Date

BOONE, N.C. (AP) — The Watauga County Board of Elections has chosen May 12 as the date for Boone's first referendum on alcoholic beverages.

The referendum will ask voters to approve or disapprove the establishment of an Alcoholic Beverage Control liquor store in Boone. The town board wanted the election as early as possible so they would know if they can depend on revenue from an ABC store before preparing next year's budget. State law requires that the board set the election no sooner than 60 days after the request for an election.

The annual revenue from the proposed liquor store is estimated at $175,000 to $200,000.

New Nat'l Security Adviser Makes Presence Felt

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan was leaving his Los Angeles hotel suite for his mountaintop ranch when William P. Clark dropped by to warn that an important defense decision was in danger of leaking.

Reagan hates unauthorized leaks and it's one of Clark's jobs to help plug them. He offered a novel suggestion to the president.

Reagan left the hotel carrying a sheet of paper from Clark, his new national security adviser. En route to his helicopter, the president walked over to a group of reporters and dropped a bombshell.

"I just thought I would like to give you a leak of information from an authoritative White House source," joked Reagan. With that, Reagan disclosed he had passed over a host of senior officers and chosen Gen. John W. Vessey Jr. as the next chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The announcement caught a lot of people by surprise, including Reagan's "Big

WILLIAM P. CLARK

Three" advisers: chief of staff James A. Baker III, counselor Edwin Meese III and deputy chief of staff Michael K. Deaver. They knew Reagan had selected Vessey, but were caught off guard by the disclosure.

Not many people can get away with pulling the rug out from under the Big Three. But Bill Clark, the tall, slow-talking Californian who's known Reagan longer than any other senior White House official, who hired Meese and Deaver for Reagan way back when, is changing the balance of power and chemistry of the Palace Guard. Now, maybe it's the Big Four.

It was Clark who picked up the telephone and awoke Reagan one morning to alert him of Italy's rescue of Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier from Red Brigade terrorists. Last summer, Meese decided to let Reagan sleep after U.S. warplanes shot down two Libyan fighters.

It was Clark who drafted rules restricting government officials' contacts with reporters on national security matters, and then overruled instructions from Baker not to release the material immediately.

Clark also sent a memo to Cabinet officers ordering them to get prior approval from the White House before traveling abroad.

And, it was Clark who ordered Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger to quit squabbling about foreign policy.

"I've let those two fellows know that I want this stopped," Clark told a meeting of senior officials, with Reagan present. "And if they don't stop, they'll hear from somebody else."

Speaking of Clark's performance since he assumed his new job Jan. 4, Meese says, "Bill is really running that the way we originally anticipated it should be run." It was a none-too-subtle reminder of Clark's predecessor, Richard V. Allen, who was thought to be ineffectual by many; Allen did not have the president's ear. Allen reported to Meese; Clark reports to Reagan.

"We now have a national security adviser who everybody knows has the absolute confidence of the president, can go to the president directly, does not have to go through somebody else," said Baker. "When he speaks, it's obvious that he speaks for the president. He can go to the Cabinet secretaries and they know full well he's speaking for the president."

"In terms of rank and closeness to the president, the respect that he commands through the organization, sure, he's one of the heavyweights," said David R. Gergen, Reagan's spokesman.

Clark does not have the breadth of responsibility that Baker, Meese and Deaver share in running the administration. "But insofar as access to the president and influence with the president in his sphere, it's very much a Big Four," Baker says.

Clark's debut in Washington — at Senate confirmation hearings — was an embarrassment. He was nominated for the No. 2 job in the State Department, but couldn't name the foreign ministers of South Africa and Zimbabwe, had no opinions on nuclear non-proliferation and said his foreign policy experience amounted to a 1967 visit to Chile — "72 hours in Santiago."

Once confirmed as Haig's deputy, however, Clark worked long hours, sought out experts to teach him foreign policy and proved to be a quick study.

In the White House, Clark is known as "The Judge" — a reference to his appointment by Reagan as a California Supreme Court justice. His selection for that job also had stirred controversy since he had flunked out of Stanford University and Loyola University Law School, and had failed the bar examination the first time around.

Clark's White House role has been largely confined to national security and foreign policy. It probably won't remain that limited.

Reagan has relied on Clark since 1966 when Reagan was running for governor and Clark served as his Ventura County chairman.

Clark, a staunch conservative, left behind a private law practice and a 900-acre ranch to become Reagan's chief of staff in Sacramento.

With his ability to simplify complex matters, Clark devised a system of single-page "minimemos" that summarized issues for Reagan. Now he briefs Reagan every day on foreign policy, frequently bringing along an expert in a particular area.

Although Clark is known to push for a hard line in foreign policy, "He doesn't make a pretense to know every jot and tittle of every foreign policy area," said Gergen. "His strength is not in being deeply, deeply versed in every aspect of foreign policy, but in having good judgment and having a larger view and knowing where to turn and how to make the organization work."

East Carolina Takes Two

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Fran Fitzgerald banged out five hits in six trips, two of them home runs, to pace East Carolina to a pair of baseball victories over Fairfield University yesterday.

The Bucs took the opening game 9-1 behind three-hit pitching by freshman Brian Peterson, then came back with a 9-0 shutout on a two-hitter by Charlie Smith.

Fitzgerald drove in four runs with two homers, a pair of doubles and a single in the two games. Todd Hendley added five hits in seven trips, also having a homer and two doubles, accounting for five runs batted in, while Todd Evans went 2-for-3 in the opener, including a double.

"Our pitching was awfully strong," a happy coach Hal Baird said afterwards. "I'm really proud of it and the way our people are playing. I can't ask for much more. We're swinging the bat and playing solid defense."

Baird said he felt Smith did a good job throughout his game, while Peterson, although not getting his breaking ball in that well, was stronger after the Pirates gave him a lead.

Fairfield didn't put a runner on second base in the opener until the fourth inning when the lone Stag run of the day scored.

Bill Albino greeted Peterson in the fourth with a double to right field, scoring when Carmine Farese singled to center.

Peterson got some help in the fifth when Fitzgerald picked off a runner at second, and in the seventh, the freshman pitched his way out after two errors and a single with two away loaded the bases. A grounder back to him ended the threat and the game.

East Carolina meanwhile, was rolling along in its times at bat.

The Pirates scored twice in the first inning. David Wells singled and John Hallow reached on an error. Another error let Evans arrive and singles by Hendley and Fitzgerald accounted for the runs.

In the fourth, with ECU up only 2-1, Fitzgerald provided a little more margin with a lead-off homer over the fence in near dead-center. That made it 3-1.

Then, in the fifth, six runs broke it open. With one down, Wells walked and Hallow batted out the first of three doubles in the inning. Evans hit a sacrifice fly to score Wells, and Hendley and Fitzgerald hit back-to-back doubles, scoring two more runs. Kelly Robinette singled in courtesy runner Ricky Nichols and Chuck Bishop finished it off with a two-run homer to left.

Fairfield had only two threats in the second game, and each time the Pirates and Smith got out of danger. In the second, with two away, a walk and one of the two hits the Stags got in the game put runners on first and second, but a bounce back to the mound ended it. In the third, an infield hit and a walk put men on second and third, and a stolen base put a runner to third before a fly-out and a strikeout ended that threat.

The Pirates, meanwhile, pushed over two in the first. Mike Sorrell beat out a bunt down the third base line and Hallow walked. Hallow moved upon an infield out, then faked a break to third, drawing a throw from the Fairfield catcher. Sorrell then streaked home on the throw for the first run. Hallow then scored on a hit by Hendley.

Five more crossed in the third. Evans reached on a bunt to third and Hendley cracked a two-run homer to center. Fitzgerald followed that up with his second homer of the day.

Bishop kept it going with a freak hit, lost in the sun by both the shortstop and third baseman. Sorrell reached on a fielder's choice and Wells walked. Hallow then doubled in both Bishop and Sorrell for a 7-0 lead. One scored in the fourth. Fitzgerald doubled and courtesy runner Carl Daniels scored on Robert Wells' single to left.

The other run came in the sixth. Hendley doubled, scoring when Robinette's grounder to short took a freaky bounce over the fielder into the outfield.

The wins boosted the Pirate record to 9-3 on the year, and were the sixth and seventh straight for the team.

Fairfield falls off to 0-3 with the day's effort. East Carolina returns to action today, hosting ECAC-South rival George Mason at 3 p.m. The two teams met again on Friday, also a 3 p.m.

NCAA Playoffs Resume Action Tonight

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Georgetown will present some tall problems tonight for Fresno State in the NCAA's West Regional basketball playoffs at Provo, Utah.

The tallest is Pat Ewing. "I think Ewing's presence creates more problems on defense than he does on offense," says Fresno State Coach Boyd Grant. "John Thompson is a good coach and he has Ewing play so alertly in the middle of his defense."

The Hoyas' 7-footer rejected 112 shots in the regular season and figures to block a few more in tonight's action at Brigham Young University's 22,700-seat Marriott Center.

The game will be the nightcap of a West Regional semifinal doubleheader. In the other contest, Idaho faces Oregon State.

In other action tonight, Louisville plays Minnesota and Alabama-Birmingham faces Virginia in the Midwest Regionals at Birmingham, Ala.

Friday night, Memphis State, 24-4, plays Villanova, 23-7, and North Carolina, 28-2, meets Alabama, 24-5, in the East Regional at Raleigh, N.C. In the Midwest at St. Louis, it's Boston College, 21-9, vs. Kansas State, 23-7, and Houston, 23-7, against Missouri, 27-3.

Finals in the West and Midwest will be played Saturday and in the East and Midwest on Sunday. The winners of the regional tournaments will advance to the Final Four in New Orleans March 27-29.

The West Regional features some of the toughest defenses in the country, including Fresno State's statistical country leaders. The champions of the Pacific Coast Athletic Association have surrendered a mere 46.7 points a game, using a combination of presses and zones and man-to-man defense.

"We have to be a good defensive team to get the most out of our talent," says Grant. "It's important to play the game to win and we've won with our defense."

The 11th-ranked Bulldogs, 27-2, advanced to the West Regionals with a 50-46 victory over No. 14 West Virginia in sub-regional play, while sixth-ranked Georgetown, 27-6, the Big East champion, defeated Wyoming 51-43.

Eighth-ranked Idaho, 27-2, the Big Sky champion, uses a tough matchup zone which Coach Don Monson describes as "man for man on the ball, with zone concepts of the other four players." Washington State Coach George Raveling calls it one of the best in the country.

The Vandals stunned Oregon State 71-49 in the Far West Classic last December and Beaver Coach Ralph Miller says his Pac-10 champions are eager for a rematch.

"The biggest thing that I see is that we played them in December and ours was a more experienced team than theirs at that time," Monson says.

Fourth-ranked Oregon State, 24-4, beat Pepperdine 70-51 and Idaho edged Iowa 69-67 in overtime in earlier NCAA play.

In the Midwest Regional, Alabama-Birmingham will face another tall problem in Cavalier center Ralph Sampson. The two-time All-America is the main reason for Virginia's fancy 30-3 record and No. 3 national ranking.

Virginia guard Jeff Jones says he expects UAB to run and press in an effort to neutralize the board advantage afforded by the 7-4 Sampson.

"They'll want to run the whole 40 minutes," Jones predicts. "We've faced some teams recently that wanted to run, but not for the whole 40 minutes — five minutes, then slow it down and get it under control."

"I think we've shown with what we have coming off the bench that if any team wants to run with us, we'll wear them out."

The game will be played at the Civic Center, UAB's home court, where the Blazers have recorded a 52-8 record in the four years that the school has fielded a basketball team. UAB is 30-1 at home over the past two seasons.

Virginia Coach Terry Holland said he was less concerned about UAB's home court advantage than UAB's fine outside shooter, Oliver Robinson, who averaged 21 points a game this season.

Considering that UAB will try to deny Sampson the ball, Holland says he doesn't want his guards to completely quit trying to get it to Sampson inside.

"We don't want to get into that syndrome," he said.

UAB, 24-5, is bidding for a Final Four berth in only the fourth year of the school's basketball program. Should the Blazers make it, Coach Gene Barow would become the first coach ever to take three teams to the championship tournament. He made previous trips to the Final Four with Memphis State and UCLA.

Minnesota, the Big 10 champion with a 23-5 record, depends on a big, strong front line, which Louisville Coach Denny Crum calls the most dominant in college basketball. Smith said his Cardinals will try to minimize the size disadvantage by out-running the Gophers.

"We're going to have to get position and make them come over our backs," he said. "We're not going to outjump those guys."

After a miserable 2-7 start this year, Louisville turned things around and finished the year at 21-9. Crum feels his team is playing as well as any time this season.

"If we've got a chance to beat teams of this caliber any time during the season, it's now, because we are playing well," says Crum, who led the Cardinals to the NCAA title two seasons ago.

Jamesville

BATH — Bath High School pushed over three runs in the bottom of the third inning and gained a 4-2 victory over Jamesville in a Tobacco Belt Conference baseball game yesterday.

Bath scored first, getting a run in the opening inning. Galen Braddy singled and Jimmy Chitmon was hit by a pitch. Travis Jackson then singled in Braddy.

The Bullets rallied for two in the top of the third for a 2-1 lead. Matthew Moore and Richie Ange both walked and Rex Bell reached on an error, loading the bases. Walks to Jeff Rogers and Rusty Holliday forced in two runs.

But Bath came back to score three in the bottom of the inning to regain the lead and close out the scoring. Jeff Tuten singled and Braddy got a hit. Jackson then singled in Tuten, and William Woolard reached on an error, allowing two runs to score.

Jackson led the Bath hitting with two, while no one for Jamesville got more than one hit.

Ange, in hurrying the loss, struck out 11 Bath batters.

Now 1-1 overall and 0-1 in league play, Jamesville will host Chocowinity on Monday.

CBS Makes Fans Happy

By The Associated Press
CBS Television officials, sympathetic to their affiliates' desire to offend fans of neither college basketball nor "Dallas," managed to squeeze both into Friday night's program schedule.

North Carolina's four CBS affiliates persuaded the network to televise the NCAA East Regional matchup between top-ranked North Carolina at 8 p.m., followed by local programming from 9 p.m. until 9:35 p.m., at which time the game will be telecast within the state and to selected other stations.

Those four affiliates include WNCT-TV, Channel 9, in Greenville.

Following the game will be 15 minutes of local news. "Dallas," the popular night-time soap opera, will be seen in its entirety after the local newscast.

Phones at the four stations lighted up when it was first announced that the game would be shown at 11:30 p.m. Friday night, by which time the results of the game would be known.

One station, WTVD in Durham, announced to its viewers that it was trying to convince network officials that the game should be televised live. It didn't take long; Tuesday afternoon, the station and its three counterparts heard the good news from CBS officials.

"I don't want to call it a power play," said WTVD sports director Don Shea. "But it has that sort of attachment."

Mark DeCastrique of WBTV in Charlotte said the network was as concerned about the live broadcast as the local affiliates.

"They understood our problem," he said. "My understanding was that the decision came from the entertainment division and the sports division."

DeCastrique said once the situation was described, it was up to the network to devise a plan to soothe the basketball fans and keep the viewers of "Dallas" happy.

"What they needed to do is see if it could be worked out to make sure that everyone would be able to live with the situation," DeCastrique added.

A spokesman for WFMY in Greensboro said they received sparse complaints from "Dallas" fans about the delay, but that most of the calls applauded the decision to televise the Tar Heel-Crimson Tide game live.

The rest of the country will receive its normal CBS schedule, with the North Carolina-Alabama game brought to them at 11:30 p.m., EDT.

Tulane On Road Again In NIT Contest

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

If it's Thursday, it must be Peoria, Ill., for the Tulane basketball team.

"I don't know what the (NIT officials) are thinking," says Coach Ned Fowler. "We have had to play three games in a row in hostile environments."

Of the eight teams remaining in the NIT field, only Tulane hasn't played at home. And tonight, Fowler's players find themselves facing another unsympathetic audience in Bradley's Robertson Field House.

It's one of three NIT games tonight. Elsewhere, Dayton plays at Oklahoma and Virginia Tech visits Georgia. In another third-round game Friday night, Purdue entertains Texas A&M.

The winners tonight and Friday night will advance to the semifinals at New York's Madison Square Garden next Monday night. The championship will be decided Wednesday night.

Tulane has been the surprise team in this year's NIT. In its first-ever postseason bid, the Green Wave has beaten Louisiana State 83-72 and Nevada-Las Vegas 56-51 en route to the quarter-final round.

Bradley, meanwhile, has surprised few people, including Coach Dick Versace. The Braves' coach was critical of the NCAA's tourney selection committee for inviting four Big East teams while ignoring his club.

Bradley took out its frustration Monday night with a 95-81 trouncing of Big East team Syracuse in the Big Orange's own arena. Bradley's other victory was a 76-65 decision over American University.

The Braves may have to play tonight's game without the services of junior guard Willie Scott, who is suffering from a pulled groin muscle.

"This is our 34th game and Willie has been playing really hard," Versace says. "He was in the whirlpool when I last saw him, and he may heal. But Eddie Matthews (a junior guard) and Eddie Harris (a freshman) are both healthy."

About Tulane, Versace said: "They have a style that gives everybody trouble. If you get behind a team like this, you get trouble. They're difficult to pressure."

Tulane doesn't run like Syracuse, noted Versace. "Syracuse wanted to run and we ran them out of the gym," he said.

Oklahoma has bounced back from large deficits in both of its earlier games. The Sooners opened the tourney by beating Oral Roberts 81-73 after overcoming a 17-3 deficit. They then beat California-Irvine 80-77 after shaking off a 17-point disadvantage.

"We've been very effective with the press," notes Coach Billy Tubbs. "We don't press that much in the first half but we kind of get into it in the second. You get the crowd involved in it and it gets everybody fired up and gets us moving up and down the floor."

The Sooners' two victories in the NIT improved their season's record to 21-10. Dayton, 21-8, advanced to the quarter-finals with a 76-75 overtime win over Connecticut and 61-58 over Illinois.

"Dayton is probably one of the best rebounding teams we'll go against," said Tubbs. "They're very big and strong players. We don't know a lot about them. At this point in the season, there's not much you can do. You pretty well have your game plan ready."

Dayton Coach Don Donofor: "For us to survive, we'll have to do a better job offensively than at Illinois."

Georgia, 18-11, will have the home court advantage for the third straight time in this tournament, hosting a Virginia

Tech team with a 20-11 record and two victories over NCAA entrant Louisville. The Bulldogs beat Temple 73-60 and Maryland 83-69 in earlier games while Virginia Tech stopped Fordham 69-58 and Mississippi 61-59.

"I'd say both teams are going to run it up and down a little," said Georgia Coach Hugh Durham of tonight's impending meeting with the Gobblers.

"We don't know that much about them — but just knowing that they beat Louisville twice, and lost close games to Marquette and Memphis State is enough."

Like Georgia, Purdue, 16-13, will be playing its third straight NIT game at home. The Boilermakers have never lost in post-season competition in Mackey Arena.

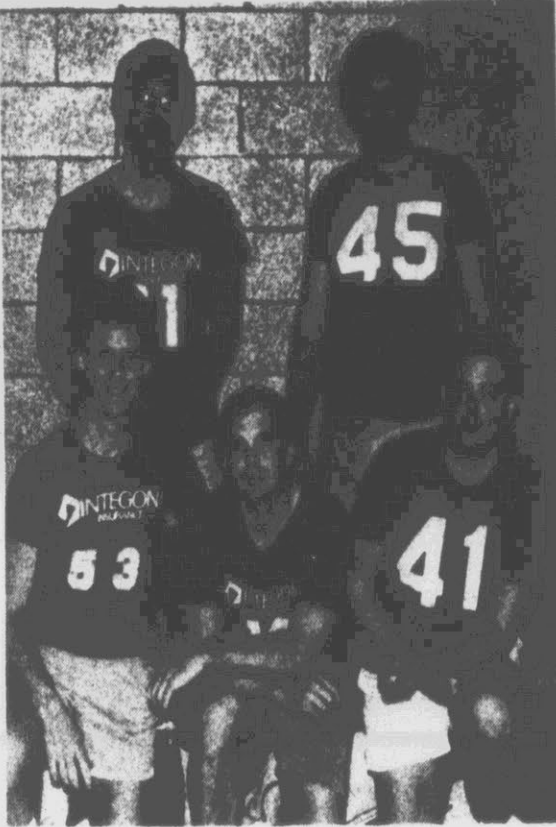

"It's tough to play on the road this time of the year unless you've really got some highly motivational factors," said Purdue Coach Gene Keady, noting the home-court advantage. "It's a tough place to play here."

Purdue, the 1974 NIT champion and 1979 runnerup, won three straight NIT games at Mackey Arena last year, then finished third in the tourney finals in New York, losing to Syracuse and then beating West Virginia. So far this year in the NIT, the Boilermakers have beaten Western Kentucky 72-65 and Rutgers 98-65.

Texas A&M, 20-10 this season, is coming off a 60-58 win over Lamar and 69-65 over Washington. The Aggies, in the NIT for the second time, are looking toward their first appearance in the Final Four.

"At home, we're much better with our transition game," said Keady. "Our kids are playing with pretty good confidence right now. I think that's the main thing."

A League Champs

Piniella Angered Over Fines

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The war of words between Lou Piniella and New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner continues over $7,000 in fines slapped on the veteran outfielder for being overweight when he reported for spring training last month.

Before Wednesday's exhibition game against Montreal, Piniella told newsmen he would appeal the fines if the Yankees dock his salary. That can't happen for a few weeks, however, because baseball players don't get paid during spring training.

Piniella confirmed he was fined $1,000 a day from Feb. 22-28. He reported at 207 pounds and did not get down to the 200 stipulated in his contract until March 1.

"Here I am 38 years old and I've been a model citizen and a proud Yankee for nine years and I've never been fined before and all of a sudden I'm being treated like Little Orphan Annie," Piniella said.

"I'm sick and tired of being fined and of being told that I have to weigh in every day. I work too hard for my money to give it away. I'm sick and tired of being treated like a 19-year-old kid. I've never been affected by my weight. I've always done what I'm supposed to do and I find it insulting to be treated this way. I am utterly disappointed with George Steinbrenner and his policies."

Piniella also was fined $1,000 by Manager Bob Lemon for leaving the ballpark prior to Tuesday's exhibition game without telling anyone. Piniella said he went for treatment of a hand injury he suffered in the morning.

Piniella said he was not upset by that fine. "I just made the wrong assumption," he said.

SouthWest Coach Given Statewide Honor By AP

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — SouthWest Edgecombe's Sandra Langley says she's "shocked" at being named North Carolina High School girls' basketball Coach of the Year — in spite of the fact that her Cougars take a 61-game winning streak into Friday's state championship game.

Meanwhile, Ken Miller of Chapel Hill didn't seem as surprised over his selection as boys' basketball Coach of the year. But perhaps being in line for a second consecutive state title is surprise enough for a man who never thought he'd be a basketball coach.

"I didn't even get all-conference coach of the year this year," said Langley, whose Cougars are 29-0 going into Friday's Class 3A title game against Shelby Crest. "I didn't get it last year either."

Had she received that award during last year's state tournament, she would have had to share it with her son, Gerald Langley, then unborn, but definitely on the bench during the championship game.

"It was a trying time last year," she said of the state finals. "They were afraid I'd have the baby during the game."

Langley, 29, is a Pinetops native and played her high school basketball at South Edgecombe, which combined with West Edgecombe to form SouthWest Edgecombe. She also played for Atlantic Christian College.

Her coaching career began at North Edgecombe in 1975 where she posted 8-12 and 12-8 records. The next stop was at West Edgecombe and an 11-11 record.

Langley is the only coach

4-year-old SouthWest Edgecombe has had. Under her guidance, the three previous Cougar outfits have finished 26-5, 30-1, 31-0.

Miller didn't start out to be a basketball coach. After graduating from Chatham, Va., High School, he played baseball at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

"I started in junior high coaching," Miller said. "I coached football, basketball, track and baseball. That's when I realized what I wanted to do."

Miller, now 40, played basketball in high school, but not in college.

"I liked the game, but I was one of those who didn't have the skills for it," he said.

His head coaching career began in 1972 at Northern Durham High School and he took the Chapel Hill job three years later. Last year, his club won the state championship and this year's club takes a 27-0 record into Saturday's championship game against Rocky Mount.

Concerned Over Return Of A Dreaded 'Dust Bowl'

By NANCY TRAVER
Associated Press Writer
FLAGLER, Colo. (AP) — Leonard Smith and his father spent 10 years rebuilding their farm after the dust storms of the "Dirty '30s." Fifty years after the dust "billowed up into the sky and blotted out the sun," Smith looks nervously over his fence at his neighbors' land and wonders if his 2-year-old granddaughter will grow up through another dust bowl. "I was only a little boy, but I remember how we used to stuff wet sheets and rags around the windows and doors to keep the dust out,"

Smith said recently, sitting with his family in a sprawling stucco farmhouse on the high, arid plains of eastern Colorado. Just west of the Smith property is an 8,000-acre ranch that has been purchased by a corporation whose directors ordered the fragile grassland plowed up and planted in winter wheat. Smith says he wishes he knew the owners so he could tell them how that kind of overzealous farming helped bring on a dust bowl 50 years ago. Experts are not predicting a disaster of the same proportions that hit Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas and Colorado in the 1930s. Most of America's farmland has been restored since the Dust Bowl era and conservation practices are well entrenched. But many farmers in eastern Colorado are afraid a new trend toward "plowouts" will bring back hard times. They believe they are facing an onslaught of investors who live far away, are interested only in profit and do not know anything about conditions in eastern Colorado. As in the days before the Dust Bowl, huge tracts of newly purchased land are being plowed up and planted corner-to-corner with wheat. The fields stand in stark contrast to the surrounding farmland, which is planted in narrow strips sandwiched between areas of fallow ground. "The outfit that bought the land west of us came in here with big four-wheel drive tractors and 60-foot plows," Smith said. "They plowed straight up and down hills, through fences, in and out of gullies."

Federal conservation officials say they have seen similar scenes across eastern Colorado during the past three years as more than 400,000 acres of virgin prairie have been plowed out. That exceeds even the Dust Bowl days, when 300,000 acres went under the till in eastern Colorado. The motive then and now was the same: Get as much profit as possible out of the land during the short term. "What we're seeing here is the beginning of a movement," said David Miller, district conservationist for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service. "The biggest buyers are Germans and Canadians, who want to make big bucks fast, and that usually means abusing the land. They think that all they have to do to get abundant crops is put a plow on the land."

The problem with plowouts, Miller explained, is that the land is not rich enough to support intensive farming. In most places, the grasslands are covered only with sparse tufts of blue-green prairie grass, used for grazing cattle. The thin topsoil lacks moisture and nutrients and lies over a hard bed of shale. Eastern Colorado averages only about 12 inches of rain-annually and farmers must use all the available conservation methods to coax a wheat crop out of the ground. "Those who are born and raised here use windstrip cropping, alternating between thin sections of fallow ground," said Miller. "The method lets the ground rest every other year, conserves moisture and leaves only small areas naked to the wind." Terraces are built to prevent water from racing down fields and forming deep gullies during infrequent rainstorms. Despite the inhospitality of the land, foreign investors are attracted to the area.

Cultivated farmland is much more valuable than pastures. Investors have been able to purchase the grassland for $300 an acre, but the going price for plowed cropland is $500 per acre. Because prices continue to decline for beef and wheat while the costs of production spiral, many farmers find the market pressure too great to keep their land and snap up offers from out-of-state buyers. Real estate agent Joe Hendricks helped a local farmer sell a 16,000-acre ranch to a group of investors from Canada and West Germany. The ranch is 15 miles east of Smith's property. "The price of land here is relatively cheap, but if they get it plowed, it doubles in value, which makes it a great investment," he said. "Also, they like putting their money into the United States — it's stable here and they know their investments will be safe." If the worst predictions come true and the land is destroyed by high winds, federal programs would pay 80 percent of the costs of returning it to grassland, Miller said. Reseeding is a costly process, however, requiring up to 30 years of careful nurturing. Hendricks acknowledged there was local opposition to the sale but said it was because "the local guys are just jealous — they want the land and they can't afford it." He denied that loose topsoil was blowing onto neighboring fields. Meanwhile, during the past two years, eastern Colorado has received enough rain and snow to keep the ground moist. High winds have been absent, forestalling residents' fears of an impending dust bowl. "The areas that have been plowed out still have nutrients and organic matter left in the soil from the grass roots," Miller said. "The weather has been kind to us, but the drought will come back — it always has."

ANTI-CLOCKWISE WATCH — Watches which turn counter-clockwise are on sale in Japan for the first time in the world, according to a watch maker. The watch, named Puma Quartz Southern Cross, was developed as an exercise in humor. The watch maker says several persons tested it and said, "one gets used to it completely after two hours". This watch's price is 25,000 yen (about U.S. $108.80). (AP Laserphoto)

Small N.C. Towns Interesting Japanese Industry

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — When Fuji Cone Inc. went looking for a place in the United States to produce its stereo-speaker components, its executives found several possible southern locations to be pretty much the same.

But the Japanese company chose Clinton, a town of 7,500 people located 70 miles southeast of Raleigh, for one main reason — the town wanted it most.

"I did not see much difference in Sunbelt states," said Yuzo Itoh, vice president of Fuji Cone. "The decisive factor was very simple. The county and city showed us the most positive and cooperative attitude to invite our investment."

Fuji Cone began production of its loudspeaker elements last December in a joint venture with an American company, International Jensen Inc. In doing so, it joined a growing number of Japanese companies building sales or manufacturing centers in the South, in North Carolina, and particularly in smaller towns previously unknown to Japanese companies.

"Traditionally, most have been locating in Charlotte because of their textile orientation," said Walter Johnson, Japan specialist and industry hunter for the North Carolina Department of Commerce. "But now, they are really looking everywhere."

Johnson, along with Itoh and other Japanese executive, led a seminar for reporters and news executives Monday on the experiences and potential for Japanese-American trade, and especially the growing investment by Japanese companies in the state.

There are 21 Japanese-owned companies operating in North Carolina and two more have announced intentions to locate a facility in the state, Johnson said. In addition, he said, another 55 companies are considering North Carolina sites.

Georgia is currently the leader among southern states in attracting Japanese investment with about 80 plants, he said.

Many of North Carolina prospects include producers of automotive parts for use in both American and Japanese cars, along with fewer firms in electronics, heavy machinery, pharmaceuticals, chemicals and rubber, Johnson said.

The majority of the facilities already established are in Charlotte, but five of the companies have located in areas outside the state's three biggest urban centers — Charlotte, Greensboro and Raleigh — and are in Clinton, Reidsville, Hendersonville, Fletcher and Hertford.

There have been no detected cases of hostility expressed toward the Japanese in North Carolina, said Johnson. "Jobs," he said, "help overcome whatever hard feelings there might be."

And the Japanese companies provide jobs — some 2,000 for North Carolina workers presently, with an investment of $100 million, said Johnson. At Ajinomoto USA Inc., a pharmaceutical plant to be dedicated next month in Raleigh, the average worker's wage will be $8 an hour, said Johnson.

The companies have looked to the South for locations largely because of official indifference to their investment in some other states, such as in the Northeast. Itoh, who lived in Philadelphia for eight years, looked first at Pennsylvania but found little interest, he said.

"Their basic attitude is, 'if you want to do it, okay, just do it,'" he said. "Not positive."

In southern states, Itoh said, state officials courted the company for its investment. And in Clinton, he said, local officials agreed to what he was looking for — establishment of skill-training programs, custom made to the firm's needs, at Sampson Technical Institute.

In addition, he said, the school has established programs to teach English and other courses to the families of company executives and engineers, making entry into a strange culture more comfortable.

As a result, Clinton has a new $3½ million plant employing 15 local people and one that should employ 70 local people by the end of the year, ultimately representing an $8 million investment, according to Itoh.

The companies are looking for the same things any company would — a good labor climate, a suitable site, good water and sewer systems, financing and a good education system for the families of workers, said Johnson.

Also a factor is the state's low unionization rate. Japanese companies are unaccustomed to American-style labor unions, Johnson said. And while he contends the union factor isn't one he exploits, Johnson said "it always comes up."

"I would say it works to our benefit," Johnson said. "There's no question about it."

Japanese executives said they found fewer skilled workers in North Carolina than in other areas, but they said the state's work force was generally favorable.

The work ethic here is much like in Japan's, said Yasuo Maetani, vice president of Ajinomoto. But there are major differences, such as the extreme loyalty of Japanese workers that isn't found in this country.

"All the Japanese workers think of their company as their home, and they do not intend to move," said Maetani. "When they produce, they think this product is their own."

Franklin Readies For World's Fair With Bed To Fit Quilt

LARGEST BED — Craftsmen in Franklin, N.C. have built what has been billed as the world's largest bed. It will be displayed at the Knoxville World's Fair. (AP Laserphoto)

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer
FRANKLIN, N.C. (AP) — When the small mountain community of Franklin produced the world's largest quilt last year, someone quipped, "Now where's the bed?"

This year, Franklin craftsmen have answered that question by building what the town is touting as the world's largest bed. The huge four-poster bed measures 16 feet by 20 feet with posters nearly 12 feet high.

Area residents got their first look at the bed Tuesday at a World's Fair promotional program.

"I heard one elderly woman say it's bigger than her bedroom," said woodworker Russel Brahmmer. Brahmmer and eight other Macon County craftsmen put in about 1,000 hours of work building the bed.

"We're the little town that thinks big," said Betty Gideon, executive director of the Franklin Chamber of Commerce. "With our proximity to the Knoxville World's Fair, we were so concerned about accommodating the thousands of tourists we expect we decided to make the world's largest bed."

Franklin is a 2½ hour drive from Knoxville, site of the 1982 World's Fair.

The bed will be on display at the fair's folk-life exhibition during the fair's run from May 1 through October. Franklin's mammoth quilt along with an international quilt also will be on display.

About 850 board feet of Appalachian oak went into the huge bed — enough wood, according to Brahmmer, to build the furniture and cabinets for a four-bedroom house. It takes eight regular-size mattresses to cover the bed.

The bed's premier attracted hundreds of Macon County residents Tuesday, many of whom showed up in pajamas and nightgowns to participate in the world's largest pajama party.

The festivities kicked off Franklin's campaign to get fairgoers to spend some time and money in the North Carolina mountains. Fair president S. H. "Bo" Roberts came to town to encourage Franklin's effort and the town responded by rolling out the red carpet, showering Roberts with gifts and declaring Bo Roberts Day.

"This is the first World's Fair ever to be held in the Southeast, and we feel it can be a great economic boost for our area," said Ms. Gideon. "We want the people to know we're here."

We put our foot down about apartments being within walking distance.

Wedgewood Arms apartments are within walking distance of three shopping centers, a nursery school, a junior high school, doctors' and dentists' offices and an athletic center.

As if that wasn't enough, three major traffic arteries, 264 Bypass, Arlington Blvd., and Charles St. are close enough to be seen and not heard.

Fact is, no apartments in town can legitimately claim to be more convenient to more things than Wedgewood Arms. And, that's not all. Because Wedgewood Arms is not only convenient, it's different in other ways, too.

Take the floorplans: they're different from anything you've ever seen. And when you add in high energy efficiency, tennis courts, swimming pool, and the neighborhood "feeling" that these apartments will give you — well, you'll just have to see for yourself.

From Ingenue To A Matronly Role

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Reporter
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Among the shortest careers in the world is that of movie-TV ingenue, more brief even than that of professional athlete or kamikaze pilot.

Dimpled darlings from the hussings arrive in droves by bus, plane and jalopy every day in Hollywood and have for years. Most had the lead in the senior class play or wowed the folks in Little Rock's little theater group.

An infinitesimal few land tiny roles and are never heard from again. An even smaller number are "discovered" and cast in a lead role. Those who do, rarely maintain a career when the bloom of youth vanishes.

The successful transition from ingenue to leading lady to character woman and matron is an almost unheard-of achievement for any actress.

It is a complex succession for many reasons. Most ingenues aren't talented enough actresses to make the necessary adjustments. Many refuse to admit they can no longer play ingenues.

Often the public won't accept the ingenue as a serious, mature actress, i.e., Sandra Dee, Annette Funicello.

But Katharine Hepburn managed all right. Jane Fonda has graduated from ingenue to leading lady and doubtless will make a great character actress. Ingrid Bergman pulled it off, too.

Another is Shirley Jones, the beautiful blonde with the operatic soprano who burst on the scene as ingenue-leading lady at 18 as Laurie in "Oklahoma" 27 years ago.

She won an Oscar for best supporting actress in 1960 for her performance as a prostitute in "Elmer Gantry" and enjoyed a rich career as a leading lady in a score of other pictures.

Shirley turned to television in the '60s, playing the mother to "The Partridge Family," a hit sitcom. Motherly roles came naturally to the actress who has three sons of her own — Shaun Cassidy, an established actor, Patrick Cassidy, currently starring on Broadway, and school-ager Ryan.

She has managed to slip into each new area of her career gracefully. Shirley plays matrons with the same ease she did pink-cheeked virgins. She is, moreover, as effective in character roles as she was playing the ingenue.

In private life, as in her career, Shirley has moved along from apple pie innocence to motherhood and now grandmotherhood. She proudly displayed a photograph of Shaun's offspring.

3-month-old Caitlin, the other day during lunch at the flossy Polo Lounge.

"I absolutely love being a grandmother," Shirley said. "She's a beautiful child, and at last I have a little girl to spoil."

Shirley has another little girl to fuss over. On April 3 Shirley will star in "The Adventures of Pollyanna," playing Aunt Polly to England's 13-year-old Patsy Kensit.

The Disney special for CBS-TV could become a weekly series if Mr. Nielsen's numbers game favors the show.

"Patsy is truly Pollyanna," Shirley said, laughing. "She's bright-eyed, beautiful and has a wonderful English accent. Aunt Polly is fun to play — bitchy, stern and afraid to show her vulnerability."

"I don't think I have too much in common with Polly. She's a spinster who owns the town and is the epitome of a starchy Victorian lady."

Next month Shirley will inaugurate a new facet of her career, singing with full symphony orchestras.

"Can you imagine the thrill of singing with a 75-piece orchestra?" Shirley exclaimed. "I've never done that before. Of course, I've played Vegas and I still do my nightclub act, but not with a symphony.

"I'll start right here in California with the Long Beach orchestra and then with the Boston Pops and the New Orleans Pops.

"There won't be any jokes or dancing or dialogue, just me singing two full hours of songs from movies, show tunes and contemporary numbers.

"I decided it was time for me to sing the way I do best. I toured last summer with my club and concert show. And I'll sing many of the same songs with the symphonies in concert.

"People still love to hear 'People Will Say We're In Love,' 'Till There Was You,' 'If I Loved You,' and 'You'll Never Walk Alone,' and I enjoy singing them.

"The simple truth is I enjoy singing most of all and I'm having more fun with my career now more than I ever did."

'Hill Street' Scores Tonight As Real People Face A Real World

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Anybody who's ever felt job frustration and dissatisfaction — and who hasn't? — will find some kindred spirits on "Hill Street Blues" tonight.

"Hill Street," winner of eight Emmy awards, is the best show in television for many reasons. Not the least of which is that the show raises universal experiences and themes that gain greater applicability because human, breathing characters are trying to make sense of them each week.

Their problems are our problems, both because we care for them as people and because we understand their suffering and success.

Joyce Davenport, the sophisticated, self-assured public defender, is undergoing a career crisis. It was triggered by the murder of a colleague and the fact that a major suspect in the case was set free on a technicality.

Joyce is ordinarily an advocate for this kind of vigilance of the individual's constitutional protections, and she normally defends society's lowest and least defensible. But Pam Gilliam's death has forced her to focus on whether there's a place any more for idealism in an often inverted world.

Tonight, she has to defend someone the prosecutor characterizes as a hopeless career criminal. It becomes too much, and Joyce rails at a system that allows itself to be exploited by low lifes and high-minded public defenders.

Her first explosion comes in a gripping courtroom scene, in which she is threatened with contempt. All the while, her silky client is boisterously claiming his rights have been abridged, and he demands stronger representation from someone like "F. Lee Bailey or Perry Mason."

Joyce needs a compassionate ear, but her lover, Capt. Frank Furillo, isn't supportive of talk about quitting. Part of his insensitivity comes from his uncertainty whether their relationship could survive a career change. Part of it comes from the fact that three of his top officers all threatened to quit that morning.

"Doesn't anybody have the courage any more to work a job through?" he asks.

The first defection came from Sgt. Henry Goldblume, normally a solid, soft-spoken sort with a strong sense of justice. But Henry has been passed over in his bid to become a lieutenant. The promotion went to a black officer. Henry considers it reverse discrimination.

He requests a temporary field assignment, preferring to find an outlet for his frustration while he broods. He doesn't want to push a pencil in the precinct house while the new lieutenant is receiving "his attaboys."

Ironically, Frank sends him to Ray Calletano, a

Puerto Rican, and another minority lieutenant, who is organizing an undercover operation. Ray is having job troubles of his own. His paycheck is $10 because accounting decided to correct a five-year federal insurance deduction error in one shot.

His rage building, Ray threatens to quit. "Bureaucrats," he says and storms away.

If Ray's paycheck can't cover his car payments, at least he has a car, points out Sgt. Phil Esterhaus. Phil is falling apart because his vintage Buick has been stolen. "Depriving a man of mobility is tantamount to maiming the man himself," he says.

Daughter To Be Festival Queen

WINCHESTER, Va. (AP) — Elyse Dianne Knight, 21, an aspiring actress and daughter of actor Ted Knight, will be queen of the 55th annual Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival in this northern Virginia city, festival officials say.

Miss Knight said her mother, Dorothy, plans to attend the April 29-May 2 festival and that her father is trying to arrange his schedule so he can make the trip too.

Her father played Ted Baxter, an egomaniacal television news anchorman, on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show." He now stars in ABC-TV's "Too Close for Comfort," in which he portrays the protective father of two grown daughters.

Miss Knight, who lives in Hollywood, is studying drama at the University of Southern California.

The 1981 Apple Blossom queen was Amelia Linden, daughter of Hal Linden, star of the "Barney Miller" television show.

'Desperate' Rush Job On New Prisons

By EMEL ANIL
Associated Press Writer
ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — The military government has begun a crash program to build prisons to house the overflow of inmates captured in the crackdown on terrorism in the past two years.

Prisons built for 54,000 convicts now hold 95,000 — 30,000 of whom were allegedly involved in the political violence which claimed an average 20 lives daily before the military took power 18 months ago.

"Turkey's judicial system, institutions and prisons could not catch up or keep up with the escalation in terrorism in the years 1977 to 1980," a top martial law official said in an interview with The Associated Press. "We were all caught unprepared and unaware."

The official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified by name, said living conditions in Turkish prisons are "primitive and far from humane."

"We had to convert cafeterias, sports facilities, reading rooms or even the hallways of the existing jails into sleeping quarters for the inmates," he said. "We had to line them up all the way to the toilet doors. We turned out some of our soldiers from their barracks and housed them in tents in order to make room for the prisoners."

The desperate situation led to a prison reform program authorized a year ago by Gen. Kenan Evren, Turkey's head of state who engineered the military takeover which ousted a civilian government.

Military authorities hope to complete 18 new prisons, which would increase the total capacity to 86,000 inmates, by the end of this year. They are being built in Istanbul, Turkey's largest city; in Canakkale, on the Dardanelles Strait; at Gaziantep and Malatya in the east, and at Bartin on the Black Sea.

At least another two dozen would be needed in the years to come and these are in the planning stage, authorities have said.

The new prisons would provide not only extra space but improved living conditions as well, the officials claim. Currently prisoners sleep dozens to a large room on bunk beds. In the new institutions they will have work shops, libraries and sports facilities.

"Until now the philosophy has been catch him, put him behind bars and do not let him escape, but this has to change," the martial law official said in the interview.

What jolted Turkish authorities into their recent feverish activity was the vast difference between common Turkish criminals and the terrorists.

The majority of those held for common crimes are listed as coming from the lower classes of society and are barely literate.

According to official statistics 13,000 of those held as terrorists are school teachers and university or high school graduates. Half of them are between the ages of 16 and 25.

The military hopes to rehabilitate them so that when they finish their prison terms they will renounce violence.

But officials complain there are no psychologists, sociologists or well-trained educators to deal effectively with them. At the same time, doctors and dentists are reluctant to work in prisons.

A special task force, including criminologists and psychologists from universities, has been set up within the Justice Ministry to find a solution. Funds have been allocated in the 1982 budget to hire nearly 5,000 new staff. Among them would be imams, Moslem priests in this predominantly Islamic country.

A pilot project, to be started in the Bartin and Malatya prisons when they are completed, would seek to weed out the terrorists deemed "irredeemably bad" from the other inmates. Then the two groups would be separated and experts would go to work on the repentant inmates, using modern methods, possibly including group therapy, officials say.

spades, and declarer was not unhappy with his chances. It seemed that the contract would hinge on one of two minor-suit finesses, and the odds of one of them succeeding were better than 3-to-1. However, declarer decided that, in view of West's preempt, the possibility that neither finesse would succeed was increased, so he went about for another line.

He won the ace of spades, crossed to dummy with the ten of trumps and ruffed a spade. A heart to the king put declarer back in dummy for another spade ruff. When declarer now cashed the ace of hearts, East had been stripped of all his cards in the major suits.

Declarer continued with a diamond to the king, a diamond back to the ace and a third diamond. East won the queen but, because the suit divided evenly, he was end played. He was forced to lead a club away from the king. Declarer won the ten of clubs, crossed to dummy's ace and discarded his last club on the thirteenth diamond.

What if the diamonds had split 4-2 and East had been able to exit safely with a diamond? Declarer would have been no worse off than if he tried both finesses. He would ruff the diamond and fall back on the club finesse for his slam. Only if West had queen third, or queen fourth of diamonds, would South's line fail, and that was unlikely on the auction.

Senator East Critical Of Senate Colleagues On Court-Curb Bills

By The Associated Press
Sen. John East, R-N.C., says listening to his colleagues protest efforts to prevent federal courts from ruling on controversial social issues made him feel like he had been in a "constitutional Alice in Wonderland."

East criticized fellow senators Wednesday who took the Senate floor in Washington to denounce some 30 bills that would prevent federal courts from ruling on such issues as abortion, school busing and school prayer. East said Article III of the Constitution gives Congress the authority to limit court jurisdiction.

The 12 senators were led by Sen. Barry M. Goldwater, R-Ariz., who said the bills were "radical" assaults on the independence of the federal judiciary.

East, who took the floor after Goldwater, said the bills simply were an effort to get Congress to reassert its position as the nation's chief policymaker.

"What's so radical about that?" East said. "It strikes me that it is about as American as you can get."

East said the federal courts have "polarized" the nation with rulings on abortion, busing and school prayer.

"They have inflamed these issues because they have not allowed them to be settled in the deliberative process," he said.

East said Congress had been "timid" and "impotent" in the last decade, allowing the Supreme Court to usurp its role as the nation's chief policymaking body.

East and Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., are in the forefront of the movement in Congress to reduce the power of the federal courts to rule on social issues. But while East was the only defender of "court stripping" during the Wednesday debate, he said many senators agreed with him.

Goldwater said he was troubled by U.S. Supreme Court rulings that legalized abortions, permitted busing for school desegregation and outlawed group prayer in public schools.

However, he said, "We should not meet judicial excesses with legislative excesses."

Goldwater labeled the bills "a frontal assault on the independence of the courts" and a "radical proposition."

Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., said the bills were a "transparent" effort to "weaken our basic constitutional guarantees." He said that if the bills were passed, they would erode freedom of religion, freedom from discrimination and freedom of control over one's body.

The debate took place during several hours that Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., had set aside for general discussion.

History Buffs Seek To Save Old Cabin

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — History buffs in are fighting what might be thought of as the Second Battle of Guilford Courthouse as they try to save a cabin that stood at the time and near the site of the Revolutionary War battle.

Commercial developers want to build offices across from the site. History lovers fear rezoning the land across the street will put pressure on landowners near the cabin to rezone their property and endanger the cabin.

"It is important that the site be preserved and that people in Guilford County know what happened there many years ago," said stockbroker Sam Hummel, spokesman for an informal preservation committee.

Hummel's committee wants a corporation to buy the house for a museum or perhaps a company guest house.

"We think a small retail operation could be located there and the character of house preserved," Hummel said. "Perhaps a private office or a small restaurant."

Joseph Hoskins' cabin was taken over by the British during the battle in 1781, and the house still stands on a grassy knoll at the corner of New Garden Road and U.S. 220.

Built in 1779, the Hoskins house is said to be the oldest occupied dwelling in Guilford County. British soldiers occupied it during the war.

The farmhouse is the only building remaining from the battle.

Despite the house's historical background, the state of North Carolina has rejected nominating it for the National Register of Historic Places. The state cites too many alterations to the

We are ambivalent about preemptive jump overalls. Often, they crowd the auction mercilessly and keep the opponents from getting to their best contract. But sometimes they force the opponents into makable contracts that they wouldn't reach on their own steam, or draw a blueprint for declarer in the play of the hand. Here's an example.

West's preempt did prevent the opponents from conducting a scientific investigation of their prospects. But South made up for the lack of bidding space by simply bidding what he hoped he could make.

West led the king of cabin. A listing on the register would provide some degree of protection against developers.

David Wyrick, who bought the house 11 years ago from writer-historian Burke Davis, wants the house and surrounding 4.2 acres preserved. But he and his wife would like to move to a smaller house.
