Detente Call By Pertini

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Italian President Sandro Pertini, honored at a White House dinner featuring high-style entertainment, is calling for a renewal of detente in "this difficult period of international affairs."

The 85-year-old Italian president, on a nine-day visit to the United States, was remaining in Washington today to meet with Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige.

He also was scheduled to lay a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington, Va., and attend a reception at the Italian chancery.

At a state dinner in his honor at the White House on Thursday night, Pertini said in an after-dinner toast that a renewal of detente is "the only possible path away from what is a dangerous and inward-turned spiral."

After a banquet of veal and a mousse of shrimp in aspic, Pertini joined Reagan in the East Room for entertainment by two Americans of Italian descent — Frank Sinatra and Perry Como. The delicate aroma of huge bouquets of spring flowers wafted throughout the state floor.

The state dinner capped a day in which Reagan gave Pertini an elaborate welcoming ceremony, held talks with him in the Oval Office and publicly thanked him for the dramatic rescue of Brig. Gen. James Dozier from Red Brigade kidnapers.

Dozier was a guest at the dinner.

Pertini, whom White House aides called a bastion of integrity and morality, said in his toast that it was imperative for international dialogue to be kept open, especially given "this difficult period in international affairs."

"This must be done in the clear understanding that this is the only navigable channel away from the shoals of a dangerous downturn in international relations," he said.

Pertini also expressed his "condemnation of the regression forced upon a noble nation such as Poland, as promoted also by unjust and massive external interference."

On that issue, along with most others, he was in agreement with Reagan.

The main issue on which they disagree is El Salvador, with the Reagan administration supporting the civilian-military rulers. But a U.S. official said Pertini did not mention his opposition to U.S. policies in Central America to Reagan, in keeping with the low-key nature of the official talks.

Reagan told Pertini that the rescue of Dozier on Jan. 28 was a "triumph over evil" that had "inspired good and decent people everywhere."

Controversy Over 'Retraction'

By DIANE DUSTON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Controversy already surrounds the decision to transfer three Central Prison inmates to federal prison in Virginia, a decision negotiated while as many as eight hostages were held at knifepoint.

Correction Secretary James C. Woodard, who had signed the transfer agreement, announced an hour after the inmates boarded a van bound for Virginia that he would begin arrangements immediately for their return to North Carolina's only maximum-security prison.

"I made the decision to grant their request for a transfer to the federal correctional institute in Virginia solely to ensure the safe return of our six employees and the other inmates who were taken hostage," Woodard said.

Civil rights attorney Irving L. Joyner, who had been called in by Woodard late Wednesday to handle negotiations in the hostage situation assailed Woodard for the move.

"The action by Secretary Woodard clearly violated the spirit of the agreement that was entered," Joyner said. He added that the decision would rob prison officials of any credibility in dealing with inmates in the future.

The inmates were taken to the Federal Correctional Institute in Petersburg, Va., at about 6 a.m., in exchange for four prison employees they held captive. Four of the original eight hostages taken Tuesday morning were released Wednesday, followed by another just after midnight Thursday.

Joyner said the inmates, all black, wanted out of the North Carolina prison system because of its "racist mentality" and "harassment" by guards and others at the prison.

"They wanted to leave North Carolina and never return," Joyner said. "A couple of guys had been in prisons around the country and they thought the North Carolina prison system was the worst thing they'd ever encountered in their life."

All three inmates entered the state's system about one year ago. William Darrell Little, 27, of Dobson, is the only North Carolina native in the trio. The other two are Ezekial Hall, 28, of Brooklyn, N.Y., and Melvin Surgeon, 30, of Annapolis, Md.

Little was due to be considered for parole in 1989 after serving time for rape. Hall was convicted of robbery and kidnapping and due for parole consideration in 2014, while Surgeon, who was convicted of four armed robberies, was up for parole in 2015.

The ordeal began at 10:45 a.m. Tuesday, when the inmates grabbed six prison employees who were in the facility's diagnostic center, and two other inmates who were in the center which processes new arrivals.

The prison employees were bound with neckties. The inmate hostages were not, said one of the employees who was held.

The inmates barricaded the door with furniture from the office and talked to prison officials first by telephone and then through a hold punched in the door.

The two hostage inmates and two employees were released Wednesday at about noon in exchange for bologna sandwiches, water and cigarettes. A fifth hostage was freed shortly after midnight Wednesday because he needed medical treatment for hypertension. The remaining three were released at 4 a.m. Thursday.

The prison employee hostages were David Atkins, 26, a guard; the Rev. Lacy L. Joyner, 34, chaplain; Jimmy J. Stallings, 33, a case analyst; Hugh M. Martin Jr., 27, William Beckwith, 52, and Charles R. Cameron, 27, all data compilers. The inmates held hostage were Bobby Lee Mills, 27, serving three life sentences for murder and Roger McQueen, 44, serving two life terms for murder.

Day Of Trouble-Shooting Aboard Shuttle Columbia

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia's crew was troubleshooting a radio problem today as the shuttle passed a major test of engine endurance in the bitter cold of space. A weather forecast for New Mexico called for adequate landing conditions next Monday, despite gusting winds.

There was a chance the radio problem could cut the flight short, or that New Mexico sandstorms could keep the ship aloft an extra day. But Flight Director Neil Hutchinson said he expected neither to happen, that Columbia would come home on Monday as scheduled.

Just after midnight, while astronauts Jack R. Lousma and pilot C. Gordon Fullerton slept, they sailed through the midpoint of their planned seven-day voyage. A forecast from White Sands Missile Range predicted Monday's landing conditions would be acceptable despite winds gusting to 20 miles an hour.

Mission Control said scientists were excited about the information they'd received from Columbia's experiments, and commander Lousma rejoined, "We're pleased to hear it, that's what we came here to do."

"And we were just remarking between ourselves how well the orbiter has performed ... it's reached quite a remarkable level of maturity for just the third flight. We've been basically trouble free with the systems and able to do all these other things while the orbiter kind of took care of itself."

When the astronauts

awoke, they received "top of the morning" greetings from Mission Control along with teleprinted instruction on how to tackle a failure in the ship-to-shore radio system. Like in any office system, they encountered a glitch here — the printer was feeding wildly for a short time.

Thursday, the low-power section of one of two S-band communications transponders failed and officials said that if it cannot be fixed, Mission Control would consider terminating the flight early. The high-power side of the failed unit was operating when checks were made today.

Even with both transponders out, Columbia could land safely, the flight director said. He reported several ground stations can communicate with the spacecraft through UHF channels and that much of the reentry and landing is conducted through UHF.

On the other hand, Hutchinson raised the possibility of an extended mission, should high winds predicted at the White Sands Missile Range this weekend persist into Monday, blowing up the fine gypsum sand and reducing visibility drastically.

He said that by conserving fuel and power the next few days, NASA expected to save enough of both to operate Columbia an extra day in orbit.

"It doesn't mean we're going to do this," he stressed. "We're looking at the weather. It's going to be the middle or end of the weekend before we decide what we're going to do."

For two days, the shuttle's nose has faced the sun, leaving the tail section and its engines and fuel tanks in freezing shadow, exposed to temperatures as low as 215 degrees below zero.

NASA engineers don't believe the cold will affect the ability of the fuels or engines to function. Lousma and Fullerton were to find out today by firing two of the powerplants in one of the major thermal tests of Columbia's third shakedown cruise.

The first test went perfectly, if there were a problem with the second, early this evening, the astronauts would turn the tail to the sun and heat up the units — just as they did on Wednesday when exposure to the cold froze sealing material and prevented a tight closing of the cargo bay doors.

Joyner Chosen New President Of Foundation

The East Carolina University Foundation, which has

was elected vice president of the foundation.

MAX RAY JOYNER

now attained the status of a "million dollar corporation," elected Max Ray Joyner of Greenville president for 1982-83 at the annual meeting of the general membership and directors Thursday.

Joyner, regional agency manager of Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Co., has served as a director of the ECU Foundation. He is a past president of the ECU Alumni Association, a former president of the Pirate Club and the director of the ECU Business Foundation. Last November, Joyner was honored as an Outstanding ECU Alumni award winner.

He succeeds John F. Minges of Greenville as president.

Interim Chancellor John M. Howell was elected chairman and acting Vice Chancellor F. Douglas Moore was elected secretary.

ECU Vice Chancellor C.G. Moore, re-elected treasurer, reported that assets of the foundation increased by approximately $175,000 during the past year and that the foundation "is now a million dollar corporation."

The ECU Foundation provides financial support for university-wide programs with emphasis upon improving the academic level of excellence.

"Last year was the best year in growth in the foundation's history," Moore said.

Moore reported that the annual fund is approximately 20 per cent "ahead of last year." He said, "We're looking for a great year this year as well."

Issue Shunted To School Bd.

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

AYDEN — Pitt County Commissioners are only responsible for funding "what they feel the taxpayer can afford" and any school needs, including the Ayden Middle Project, must be dealt with by the Pitt County Board of Education, a board spokesman says.

Two of the six county commissioners, Alton Gardner and Charles Gaskins, attended a "Pepsi Break" on the middle school project Thursday night at which County Manager Reginald Gray read answers to 11 questions submitted in advance on the school project.

"...The board of Education has the responsibility for determining school needs, and the priority of those needs," Gray read, "and the board of commissioners (has the responsibility) to fund what they feel the taxpayer can afford."

There is nothing the commissioners can do, read Gray, short of raising taxes or implementing a school bond issue, to provide funds or expedite the project. "To raise taxes at this time in order to build such a school would, in the opinion of the county commissioners, be imprudent in view of the mood of the taxpayers and the citizens of Pitt County," read Gray.

He said the commissioners felt a school bond issue would be "questionable" since a $9 million bond proposal was voted down in 1979.

In response to a question on the county's funding options, Gray read, "The county does not have the money to fund this project ... Other than a bond issue, the board's only other alternative is to borrow up to two-thirds of its previous fiscal year's net debt reductions ... however, using this method would still leave a shortage of funds of approximately $682,300.57."

Gray said the commissioners preferred that the school board fund only "one capitol outlay project at a time, and put a priority on projects."

"The funds appropriated for capitol outlay for 1981-82 were designated for the Ayden Middle School project and (were) retained by the commissioners in a reserve fund for this project," Gray read.

"It is my understanding, though, that the (school) board placed no priority on capitol outlay projects," he added.

"The question of need," read the county manager, "is to be determined by the Pitt County Board of Education and the county commissioners have consistently requested the Board of Education to use its excess funds over which they have complete control."

Debate On 2-Year Term Rages

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A proponent of four-year terms for state legislators says it would encourage more people to campaign for office, but the opposition claims doubling the terms would only result in less responsive lawmakers.

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-

Wayne, said the expense of campaigning every two years was discouraging potential candidates with less money from running for the legislature. He also told a meeting of the Wake County Democratic Women that without a proposed constitutional amendment doubling lawmakers' terms from two to four years, North Carolina could end up with "elitist, full-time" legislators who don't have to earn a living.

Tom Gilmore, chairman of the Keep the Two-Year Term Committee, disagreed, saying four-year terms would limit the accessibility of legislators to their constituents.

"There's no evidence that it will save money for candidates and it won't save the taxpayers one dime," said Gilmore, a former legislator who resigned as deputy secretary of the Department of Human Resources to work against the proposed amendment.

"... this amendment would make it easier for them to conceal their voting record," he added. "It would not make good legislators any better but it would make bad legislators worse."

If the amendment fails, he warned, the legislature probably would vote itself more and bigger pay raises and add staff members, which would send the cost of state government "sky high."

If the state's voters approve the amendment, candidates for the legislature would run in off-presidential years. Barnes said that would make the candidates and their records more visible since they wouldn't have to share the spotlight with their party's candidates for president, governor and council of state. But Gilmore said it would protect incumbents since fewer people vote in off-presidential years.

Gilmore accused the amendment's supporters of being interested only in "self-preservation," saying there had been "no public outcry" in favor of the four-year term while a number of political organizations and three former governors have publicly opposed it.

In an interview after the meeting, Barnes admitted no private political groups had endorsed the amendment but he said that was because Gilmore's committee had conducted a vigorous campaign while he and legislators supporting the amendment were saying little.

Both the state House and Senate approved the amendment last year.

"We felt we should give the people the opportunity to vote as they wished on this matter without a high-pressure campaign on our parts," Barnes said. "But the other side has run around saying the sky would fall if this amendment is passed, and people haven't been given both sides of the story. They just don't understand what the dangers are if we don't change our course."

Interferon Reportedly Affected Some Tumors

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — Synthetic human interferon caused temporary tumor shrinkage in four of eight advanced cancer patients, but the drug also created side effects including fever and muscle pain, scientists reported.

The first published report on the use of manmade interferon in cancer therapy appeared in today's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The study, conducted at the Stanford University School of Medicine, showed one patient with breast cancer, two with lymphoma and one with a chronic form of leukemia had some modest regression of their diseases when treated with the synthetic interferon.

The patients were treated with eight to 11 injections of nearly pure synthetic interferon. Treatments for the four patients who showed improvement ranged from 32 to 56 days.

The four other patients showed no shrinkage of their tumors, the study said.

Despite these results, Dr. Sandra Horning, one of the report's authors, warned that because of the study group's small size, the report "must be interpreted with caution."

The results should not be considered "a dramatic clinical development," she added.

Although there was some activity in half of those studied, Ms. Horning said, "That's not to say they necessarily felt better after their treatment."

The modest shrinkage in tumors was not permanent, she said.

The study also showed that side effects of the synthetic interferon included fever, muscle pains and headaches, but all of them were reversible after treatment was discontinued.

Researchers said the side effects associated with synthetic interferon were similar to those seen in other studies when partially purified interferon from human cells was used.

"This demonstrates that synthetic interferon has very similar properties to human interferon," Ms. Horning said. This also suggests toxic side effects "are true properties of interferon" and not of a contaminant.

Interferons are a class of proteins secreted by animal cells that inhibit viral growth. Tumor regression after treatment with human interferon has been seen in certain lymphomas and breast cancer.

Progress in experimenting with human interferon has been limited by small quantities and high costs, the journal said. But Ms. Horning said interferon "is becoming more available and less costly."

Synthetic interferon is produced through recombinant DNA techniques — a genetic engineering method — and there is a potential for large quantities of the substance.

In the study, patients received laboratory-produced interferon similar to an interferon made by human white blood cells.

Snapped Under Nagging

NOTTINGHAM, England (AP) — Walter Hinton, described by a judge as a "shy, retiring man," put up with his wife's nagging for 30 years but he snapped when she pulled the plug on his stereo, according to court testimony.

Hinton grabbed his 51-year-old wife, Violet, around the neck and strangled her to death, the Nottingham Crown Court was told at Hinton's trial Thursday.

Hinton pleaded guilty to manslaughter, but Justice Sir Maurice Drake placed him on three years' probation and released him from custody.

"For very many years you tolerated an unhappy marriage although still continuing to love a dominant wife, hoping that matters would improve," the judge said. "You were finally taken beyond the breaking point."

Prosecutor Percy Grieve told the court that

Hinton, 57, and his wife were married in 1948 and were constantly bickering.

On the day of the killing, Sept. 1, 1981, they went for an afternoon drive. "Mrs. Hinton spent the whole journey abusing him," Grieve said. "On the way back, she was very put out because he took a wrong turn."

"I must have driven hundreds of miles with my wife sitting beside me and when I got out of the car it was always the same — I could scream," Hinton was quoted as telling police.

When they returned home, Hinton, an electrician, tried to listen to music through stereo headphones, but his wife pulled the unplugged the machine so she could continue nagging him, Grieve said.

"He does not remember fully what he did," the prosecutor said. "When he regained his senses, he was standing over her and she was dead."

Life As It's Lived Toddlers Are Just Not Very Socially Inclined

By GAIL MICHAELS

I don't know why parents feel compelled to give their toddlers an opportunity to socialize. Toddlers are not social people. Let's face it, they are rarely even civil. On occasion they can be cute, sweet, funny and charming, but their rugged individualism, their self-centeredness and their unpredictability make positive social contact with members of their own age group difficult at best.

No matter how well we know this, we parents all succumb at one time or another to the vague notion that the fighting, howling and general hostility accompanying any toddler will aid the social adjustment of our little sweethearts in years to come. I resisted the urge to introduce Zachary to his confederates as long as I could, but whenever I saw the look of wonder and fascination with which he beheld another baby, I felt certain I was depriving him of a most uplifting experience.

At first I thought that the best cure for Zachary's social deprivation would be one morning week in Mother's Morning Out. Unfortunately, this program had one drawback: I had to be a keeper one morning a month. Two weeks after I enrolled Zachary, another mother and I entertained two young men in vigorous training for the potty, two others were intent upon either establishing dominance or killing each other, a bossy 3-year-old girl who delighted in inciting to riot by telling the others what dumb babies they were, and three children under the age of 2 who preferred roosting in adult laps to playing. I wound up with two of the three, one of whom was Zachary.

I needed only one experience like this to decide that this situation was doing nothing to excite Zachary's social instincts. As an alternative, the next week I invited a little boy six months older than Zachary to spend a morning with us.

At least these two interacted. Cary crammed most of the toys in the toy basket into the Fisher-Price Play Family Hospital, then sat on the floor with his arms around it, prepared to guard it to the death. Zachary couldn't resist the challenge. He grabbed a plastic seal from the cache and grinned wickedly while Cary, wailing, attempted to recover the treasure.

"Don't you want to be a good boy and share?" I ventured.

"No!" Cary shouted.

"No!" Zachary echoed.

My attempts at distraction were of no use in the shouting contest that followed. Each child tried to outshout the other. I resorted to a time-out for both, only to have Zachary renew the hostilities as soon as he was allowed to rise from his chair. He grabbed a sock from the laundry I was sorting, backed up to Cary, and began to flail him by flinging the sock over his shoulder. I suppose Zachary figured that if his back was turned, his role on the dirty work would remain undetected.

But somehow Cary fingered the perpetrator. In retaliation Cary began to spank Zachary — on the head.

When Cary's mother arrived, I expected Cary to rush into her arms in gratitude for his rescue. Instead, he took one look at her and fell to the floor in a tantrum.

"I don't want to go!" he screamed. "I love it here."

Brazilian Feminists Say They Have Tough Fight Ahead

By GLORIA HELENA REY
Associated Press Writer
RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Leaders of a small but determined feminist movement say Brazilian women have made some progress but still have a long and tough fight against a tradition of "machismo" — domination by men.

In fact, there still is a law on the books that allows a husband to "return" his wife

if he discovers after the wedding that the bride isn't a virgin.
Deanda Prado, a member of a feminist group called Women's Collective, says this law still is carried out in rural parts of the country.

Romy Medeiros da Fonseca, a lawyer and president of the National Council of Women, adds that sometimes husbands kill non-virgin brides, rather than suffer what they consider to be the embarrassment of having to give them back.

Brazilian feminist movements date back to the 1920's and Brazil was the first Latin American country to let women vote, but women still are not prominent in the nation's politics or are women's issues a major part of national political party platforms. There is no talk of a Brazilian Equal Rights Amendment or similar laws to guarantee women's rights.
Marcia Oliveira, a sociologist, said, "Brazilian women ... want to be free, but they're afraid of breaking tradition. Therefore, liberation sometimes turns out to be destructive, because the women don't really understand what they're getting into."

Nevertheless, Rose Marie Muraro, a pioneer in the women's movement here, insists that "women have made significant progress."
She is supported by Adelia Borges, the editor of a feminist newspaper, who says there are now more than 90 women's rights organizations scattered throughout the country — not including local and neighborhood organizations that campaign for day-care centers and for greater women's participation in labor unions and political parties.

Women now make up 33 percent of the nation's work force.
Another long-time feminist activist, Diva Teixeira, says that even though recent legislation has given Brazilian women fairer treatment in areas such as divorce and business affairs, "there's still a lot to be done."
Feminist leaders considered a great triumph the sentencing to 15 years in prison of Raul Fernando do Amaral Street — a local playboy known as "Doca" — for the murder of his girl friend, society figure Angela Diniz.

In his first trial, in 1979, "Doca" was convicted but got off with a suspended two-year sentence after his lawyer convinced the jury he killed the 32-year-old woman to "defend his honor" after she decided to break off the relationship. In a retrial last year, surrounded by militant feminist campaigning in the mass media and outside the courthouse, Street got the stiffer sentence.
The more active feminist groups in Brazil now are concerned with campaigning against male violence against women and legalizing abortion.

Deanda Prado says that in 1980 in Sao Paulo, the

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem I can't talk to anybody about. My husband had an affair with my 17-year-old niece, and now she's pregnant. The only ones who know about it are my husband, the girl, the doctor who confirmed it, and now me.

My husband has always been a decent family man, and my niece is a nice, quiet girl who never even had a steady boyfriend. Nobody would ever believe this could happen to us. We are all respectable, churchgoing people.

My niece is in her third month, and soon everyone will know she's pregnant. This is a small town, and I don't want my family split up over this. We have three fine children. My husband has been walking around like a zombie for the last six weeks. He finally broke down and told me what was wrong. He says he loves me very much and must have been crazy. Meanwhile my niece says she "loves" my husband and wants to have his baby so he will have to marry her. (He's old enough to be her father.) I still love him and will stand by him regardless. Please help me, Abby.

OUT OF MY MIND

DEAR OUT: Since you are a churchgoing family, I urge you to talk to your clergyman. All of you involved desperately need his advice and counsel. Your husband should also see a lawyer. Because the girl is a minor, he could be charged with statutory rape. No man can be forced to marry a girl if he doesn't want to. I commend you for standing by your husband. Hang in there and good luck.

***

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 19-year-old unmarried woman, and my problem has almost become an obsession with me. I have sagging breasts like a woman who has nursed six kids! The rest of me is well-proportioned, but every time I look at my body in the mirror I get depressed. I tried toning up my chest muscles by weight-lifting, but all I got were big arms.

I know how I got this way, Abby. I developed early (age 12) and I never owned a support bra, so I bounced around a lot, and now I am paying for it. I look OK in an uplift bra, but I look terrible in a bathing suit.

If I didn't have this problem I would have a really nice-looking figure. Would plastic surgery help? I'm saving up for a fur coat, but I'd trade it for an operation. Thanks.

SAGGING IN SANDUSKY

DEAR SAGGING: Yes, plastic surgery can help. If you don't know a board-certified plastic surgeon, ask your family physician to recommend several. Talk to two or three, then make your own selection.

***

DEAR ABBY: I have a friend who has been seeing a guy who's been married, divorced and has five kids. She's so wrapped up in him that sometimes she doesn't see her family for weeks. Recently she told me that she loves this guy and he wants to marry her, but first he wants her to prove that she loves him by living with him for a year, doing all the cooking, laundry and taking care of his kids. (Their mama ran off and left them.)

She's 19 and he's 33. Do you think this guy is just using her? And how can I help her?

HER FRIEND IN ALABAMA

DEAR FRIEND: You can help her by being her friend. Whether I think she's being used is not important. Only if (and when) she concludes that she's being used will she do something about it. People "in love" are deaf, dumb, blind.

A Time For Concern

The unemployment rate for North Carolina as of mid-February had reached 9.3 percent, which means that 270,700 were listed as out of work.

The rate has been steadily increasing. In January it was 9.1 percent and in February, 1981 it was 7.3 percent.

Bad as it is, however, it was slightly lower than the unadjusted unemployment rate nationally of 9.6 percent in February.

Employment Security Commission analysts say the state and the national unemployment rate increased by 0.2 of a percent point from mid-January to mid-February.

That was interpreted as indicating the state's economy was being affected by the recession to the same degree as the nation as a whole. The North Carolina unemployment rate is not disastrous yet. There is, after all, a work force of 2,917,600 in our state. The rate, though, certainly is a matter of concern. There are too many people looking for jobs who don't have them. Many who are drawing unemployment benefits will see the benefits run out with no employment in sight.

Dealing with the situation is not going to be easy since our own unemployment is directly related to economic conditions for the nation as a whole.

It is not a problem to be ignored, however. Unemployment statistics represent a non-producing individuals — and that is a matter of personal concern to the persons involved, their communities and the state.

Assuming A Responsibility

It's encouraging to see that local industries appear willing to assume their responsibilities for pretreatment of wastewater destined to be discharged into the Greenville Utilities Commission's sewerage system. The GUC, formally following up on federal guidelines controlling such wastewater discharges, held a public hearing this week. There were some suggestions for modifications, but no opposition was voiced.

If approved, the GUC standards are designed to make the discharges fall within the limitations of Greenville's proposed treatment plant. That means the dozen or so industries that would be involved would have to bear the expense and the responsibility for pretreating the wastewater.

Greenville's treated discharges eventually make their way to the already polluted Tar River. The river does not need any more risk of pollution, and Greenville citizens don't need the additional costs of treating industrial wastes over and above its normal standards.

By seemingly accepting the guidelines and the responsibilities that go with them, the private and public industrial concerns have displayed a sense of public spirit that we all could use.

Our Town Kennesaw

News Item — The town of Kennesaw, Ga., has just passed an ordinance requiring the head of every household to own a gun and ammunition. The law was prompted by a recent ordinance passed in Morton Grove, Ill., banning the possession of handguns by all residents, except police officers and military personnel.

Stage Manager — "The name of the town is Kennesaw, Georgia. It's a nice town, y'know what I mean? Nobody remarkable ever came out of it s'far as we know. We're just plain simple folk here, we can't claim to be nothing more than just another town along Route 41."

"I better show you around a bit. That large yellow house with the funeral wreath in front of it belongs to the Kettermans. Two days ago Hodding Ketterman shot his son, Junior, who was trying to sneak in the window at three o'clock in the morning and Hodding thought he was a thief. The town feels terrible about it, but everyone says Junior should have known better."

"There's one of our leading citizens, Jeffrey Bean, on his way down to the Sear's Roebuck parking lot to have a shootout with Abel Grimstead. It seems Jeffrey's dog knocked over all of Abel's garbage, and this made Abel real mad and he took his Smith and Wesson and pumped the dog full of lead. Most folks in town think Abel overreacted, but Abel says that's what guns are for, and there's nothing on the books says you can't shoot a dog on your property.

"Here comes Doc Lafferty."

ART BUCHWALD

He looks a little peaked. He's been at the hospital all night removing a bullet from Hart Doubleday, who was practicing drawing his gun in front of the mirror and shot himself in the leg.

"Over there is the Court House. There's lots of excitement there because Betty Bentley is on trial for emptying her .45 into Lorelei Lee, who she suspected was playing around with her husband, Charles. Betty says it was an accident, and the gun went off while she was showing Lorelei how she won a silver cup at the Kennesaw Handgun church picnic last month.

"Here comes Hiram Dollop, who's become the village idiot because he refused to have a pistol in his house on religious grounds. Everyone thinks he's crazy, but he's harmless and except for the kids throwing mud at him because he doesn't own a gun, we leave him alone."

"Don't get nervous about those shots you just heard. That's 80-year-old Sam Francis. Every time the postman forgets to bring Sam his Social Security check, Sam starts shooting at the mail truck."

"Well it's getting on to bedtime. The Putnams are having a party to celebrate the opening of a new pistol range

A Sore Point In Tridents

By MAXWELL GLEN and CODY SHEARER
LONDON — By the time President and Mrs. Reagan go horseback riding with British royalty this June most of us will have wondered whether the U.S. administration really desires nuclear arms reduction.

Of course, Reagan and Soviet leader Brezhnev have been stealing headlines lately with proposals of arms reductions and nuclear freezes. But the announcement here on March 11 that Britain would move ahead with a new U.S.-designed, submarine-launched missile system — the Trident II — may have made the prospect of arms control more unlikely than it already appears today.

As a result, though the president may not understand why, the Trident is likely to make his third trip abroad less than picture-perfect. Reagan would like to address Parliament should that body's conservative majority find a non-controversial speaking location. Yet a "reception committee" of liberal activists and opposition ministers plans to hold an alternative forum in a hall nearby. The organizers also intend to sponsor a demonstration outside the U.S. Embassy in stately Grosvenor Square when Reagan arrives June 7.

On the day before his arrival, London is expected to rock to the chants of participants in a mass demonstration against nuclear arms. According to Bruce Kent, secretary general of the London-based Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (CND), the rally was conceived last October as a sidebar to a United Nations special session on disarmament and development scheduled for the same week in New York City. Kent now concedes that participants will probably turn the demonstration into a major anti-Reagan event.

In addition to earlier equivocations on nuclear arms policy, Reagan has assured himself a not-so-friendly reception with the sale of the deadly accurate, though still uncompleted Trident II. While the administration may have considered the (at least) $20 billion agreement a commercial and strategic feat, it apparently discounted the reasons why a majority of Britons (according to the CND) think Trident is a waste of money.

Stewart Holland, Labour Party minister from Brixton, speaks for many in calling the Trident unnecessarily "high risk"; but even the ardently anti-disarmament weekly, The Economist, has said that the new missile will "cost too much."

Tory defense minister John Nott has tried to promote the purchase from the salesman's point of view. He boasts that the system will work for Britain into the 21st Century and that the U.S. has agreed to allow certain portions of the missile to be built by Britons. Nevertheless, the Trident would snare as much as 20 percent of Britain's defense procurement budget over the next decade, cutting into the needs of conventional forces. Moreover, as with most arms purchases, there are no assurances that the program's development and production bill could be kept under the usual 30 percent cost overrun. Many members of Parliament — conservative backbenchers as well as their opponents — reasonably doubt that their unemployment-wrought (3 million) country needs a British equivalent of the MX project at this time.

As in the case of the MX in the U.S., the Trident might have been a hit here had Britons universally viewed it as essential to their security. Instead, too many already know that Trident may be the deterrent in itself, the first sea-based, silo-busting missile to be deployed anywhere in the world. As Mary Kaldor, one of this country's leading arms policy critics, contends, the decision to pass up Trident I "C-4" missiles for the increased range, accuracy and warhead capacity of the Trident II "D-5" is redundant and dangerous.

"We'd always assumed that the government would buy smaller missiles," Kaldor told us. "Now, with the bigger D-5s, we have a capability we don't need. It will only seem provocative." It's Trident's sheer excess, even more than the potential economic impact, that seems likely to haunt Reagan and his conservative allies here. (With a Labour Party victory in the 1983 parliamentary elections, disarmament advocates acknowledge, the Trident II deal could fizzle before the first construction contracts are awarded.)

Though disarmament activists may not admit that their cause indirectly thrives on such threats as Trident II, they have undoubtedly found

Future Dividends?

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — What will the average Tar Heel get from tomorrow's promise of a high technology future for this state?

That question permeates ongoing argument within the ranks of North Carolina educators, politicians, industry hunters and others with a stake in future economic growth.

To choose the two extremes of the debate:

— Research and development in microelectronics, microbiology and other exotic enterprises will be concentrated only in the already rich Research Triangle Park vicinity so that university professors and developers will be the primary beneficiaries. Those factories which use the technology will be scattered elsewhere offering jobs on assembly lines to minimally trained individuals making lower wages.

— Providing high technology training for young people, and older workers who choose to prepare for a different career, will open up a brave new world in which high technology firms will proliferate across the state because of the research programs at the universities, and the availability of competent labor.

No Answer
In reality, there is as yet no answer to which of those two extremes will come to pass. There is some element of likelihood in both, and top level strategists and planners take the position that they are keeping their sights on the prospect of enormous benefits available to any North Carolinians who want to take the effort to prepare for the new industrial scene while admitting that at least in the very beginning there will be a concentration of research and development activities in the Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill area with the only hope that farther along other areas of the state will benefit.

BILL NOBLITT

In the meantime progress is slow to non-existent in the area of providing the essential equipment, instruction or incentives to the average person interested in getting ready for a high technology job.

Public high schools can provide hardly any real-world, hands-on experience with computers and the pieces of those machines. Not even the technical and community colleges have been able to come up with the money needed to provide adequate training.

Even at N.C. State University where high technology is the byword, students enrolled in computer courses must spend untold hours in line just waiting for an opportunity to put their hands on a terminal to get practical experience.

This situation leads some critics of the present course wondering if perhaps the cart has gotten out front of the horse.

Gov. Jim Hunt prevailed on legislators to provide the $24 million, and upon the

Other Editors Say Questions Raised

(Rocky Mount Telegram)
Apparently, at least beneath the surface, the General Assembly is not content with losing some of its power due to a recent opinion by the state Supreme Court and an accompanying ruling by Attorney General Rufus Edmisten. The Joint Legislative Commission on Separation of Powers has voted tentatively to comply with the ruling that legislators may not serve as appointees on state boards and commissions.

That sounds fine — but then the commission said it would ask the Supreme Court whether legislators could serve on the boards if appointed by the governor or lieutenant governor.

The commission, formed after the high court and Edmisten made decisions setting a strict rule on the separation of government powers, also agreed tentatively to seek further guidance from the court on a series of related issues.

The Supreme Court had ruled it unconstitutional for the General Assembly to appoint its own members to the Environmental Management Commission, and an opinion by Edmisten extended that to 41 other state boards and commissions — in effect, curtailing the burgeoning power of the Legislature.

In a separate case the court responded to the Legislature in an advisory opinion saying it had violated the Constitution in restricting the governor's budget powers and delegating some of its own powers to a legislative committee.

On that issue, the commission raised still more questions. For example:

Can the Legislature continue to appoint members to executive-branch boards and commissions if their appointees are not members of the General Assembly? And if so, can the Legislature delegate that appointive power to the House Speaker or Senate President Pro Tem?

Can the governor or lieutenant governor appoint members of the General Assembly to serve on executive-branch panels? And what is the effect on legislators now serving on those boards if they were serving on those boards if they were appointed by the governor or lieutenant governor before they were elected to the General Assembly?

How far can the Legislature go in adding special provisions to the state budget if those provisions may be viewed as restricting the governor's budget authority?

Those are pertinent questions, and we suspect the Supreme Court will tread softly; it's something akin to walking in a political minefield.

Negative Side To High Rates

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — Americans earned $315 billion of interest income in 1981, about $55 billion more than a year earlier and twice what they earned from that source in 1977.

That's the positive side of high interest rates.

The negative aspect, says Jack Lavery, who last year became chief economist of Merrill Lynch, is that any real upturn in the economy awaits lower interest rates.

To bring that about, says Lavery, he assumes President Reagan will be willing to compromise on defense spending and maybe on Social Security, thus reducing fears that federal spending is out of hand.

There is room to do so, he says, reminding you that the President was elected on a promise that defense spending would grow 7 percent a year through fiscal 1984, and that the current rate exceeds that.

"His fiscal 1983 budget message contained an 18.1 percent increase. Take 6 percent inflation out of that and you still have 12 percent," said Lavery, who recalls economic numbers without referring to files.

"Like kids know batting averages," he explained. Or, you might say, like a person immersed in his subject. Lavery, 35, has already

Strength For Today

A TRUE POWER
Religion adds significance to everything a person does. As Sir Henry Jones once wrote, "True religion imparts the spirit of its disciples and adds consequence to the things it sanctions or condemns."

As soon as some people get religion and really integrate it into their lives, then goodness takes on a new significance and evil becomes much more vivid and threatening. Religion brings new life to the spirit and enables us to see much more clearly the things it either sanctions or condemns.

Jesus said that Christians are the salt of the earth, meaning that they keep life from turning rotten and bring out the latent flavors of life. Religion is the very essence of this salt, giving palpable reality to goodness and suppressing the corrupting force of evil. There is a type of goodness which exists apart from religion, but imperishable goodness rests firmly on religious faith. — Elisha Douglass mainly because the economy is coming up from such a low level. By the first half of next year he foresees the expansion slowing to a mere 1 percent to 1.5 percent rate of increase, as higher Social Security taxes and more restrained fiscal policy cut into buying plans. Other restraining factors also will be in the job, he believes. 1. The work rate will remain high, though falling from 9.5 percent in the second quarter of this year to 2.2 percent in the second half of 1983, when corporations might invest heavily. Lavery, who prior to coming to Merrill Lynch was senior vice president at Provident National Bank in Philadelphia, the eighth largest trust institution, isn't excited about the expected consumer-led recovery in this year's second half. Statistically, he says, the half will have a 5 percent real growth rate, "but we think it is misleading." That is, the gain might look good

He assumes Reagan will make defense spending cuts, that market psychology will improve, that interest rates will fall, and that the economy will grow at a 5 percent to 6 percent rate in the second half of 1983. Meanwhile, he says, it isn't correct to say the Reagan program isn't working. As he sees it, the program consists of four parts, one of which is to reduce the momentum of money growth, which he says is "working well." Reducing the rate of public sector growth also is "working well." The third, tax cuts to stimulate savings and investment, "really hasn't begun yet," but will, Lavery believes, with the July 1 tax cut. It is in the fourth area — restraints on government spending — that a big question mark looms in Lavery's forecast. "He needs an abatement of interest rates to get a turn in the economy," said Lavery. The need is critical, he emphasized. "He won't get the turn unless he relieves concern in the marketplace." He believes Reagan knows this, and will seek to reduce the deficit by cutting defense spending projections and lowering Social Security increases to changes in the consumer price index — less 3 percent.

No More Draft Prosecutions Until Agency Clears Its Mail

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the Selective Service System says it will probably be early summer before there are any new prosecutions for failing to register for the draft.

Thomas K. Turnage told a House Armed Services subcommittee Thursday that a recent grace period for late registrants has resulted in a deluge of forms, which has swamped the agency.

Thus, it will be at least May before the new forms are processed, and prosecutions of non-registrants are unlikely before "early summer," he said.

But Turnage said that the surge of forms has resulted in a sharp increase in compliance by young men. Currently 93.6 percent of the eligible men have registered, up from 71 percent at the end of December, he said.

The period during which men who failed to register earlier could do so without penalty ended Feb. 28.

Turnage estimated that there are currently about 7.8 million young men registered and 535,000 who have not complied with the law.

"We are very pleased with this tremendous response and we are optimistic that this trend will continue," Turnage said.

He speculated that public awareness of the grace period, plus President Reagan's public decision to continue the program led to the increased compliance. There had been speculation that the president would shut down the registration program.

However, David Landau of the American Civil Liberties Union disagreed about the success of the grace period, saying he considered it a failure because less than half of an estimated million non-registrants have signed up.

Turnage said that when the processing of the new forms is completed, cross checks will be made with the Social Security Administration to find eligible men who have not registered.

Those men will be sent warning letters, and if they do not sign up their names will be forwarded to the Justice Department for prosecution, Turnage said.

Selective Service officials said the first men likely to face indictment are a group of 183 whose names were sent to Justice in January, but whose prosecution was suspended pending a decision by Reagan on the future of the program. He announced Jan. 7 that registration would continue.

After those men, officials said, men born in 1963 who have not signed up are most likely to face charges, followed by those born in earlier years.

Turnage said he supports the current penalty of five years in prison and/or a $10,000 fine for non-registrants. Currently there is no actual draft, but the registration system is aimed at speeding that process should it be needed in the event of national emergency. Men are required to register, at any post office, within 30 days of their 18th birthday.

Training
Given the dearth of the Tar Heels ready to enter the high tech world, though, firms which choose to make the move to North Carolina must bring with them the designers and engineers who make the machines.

A recent issue of Readers Digest contained in its books section a fascinating inside look at the intensely competitive and high stake world of comouter technology. A key part concerned the move of some key parts of the Data General firm's operations to North Carolina, and the repercussions that move had on the firm's research and development program.

One apparent conclusion from reading such a revealing treatment of the industry is that until North Carolina can prepare North Carolinians to control the high tech world of the future, essential developments and decisions which can drastically affect the people and communities who have made major investments in microelectronics will be made far away from this state by people who care little one way or another what gut-level impact the action will have on the average person.

the missile decision well-timed for a new wave of spring activity; despite hasty assertions that the European peace movement died with Polish martial law, activists are already receiving widespread publicity through "camp-in" protests at least eight military bases in Britain.

The CND, whose membership has been increasing by approximately 250 persons per week for over a year, is sponsoring a "Peace Week" beginning April 4. And Trident II is likely to crop up on posters across Europe when another round of protests against U.S. Pershing II and cruise missiles erupts next summer.

Had the Reagan administration not been so anxious to spread the cost of its Trident II program and reap the benefits of other possible deals (rumors here have it that Britain agreed to help the U.S. with its plutonium supply problem), it might have been more cognizant of its own promises as well as the growing disarmament campaign. Trident II, when stacked against the backdrop of Reagan's nuclear-freezone proposal, gives the president the credibility of a Brezhnev and only enhances the European peace initiative.

A New Kind of Champ

Many basketball fans have been waiting all season for this week's dramatic showdown for the NCAA championship. But this year there will be two champs. For the first time the NCAA is holding a women's championship tournament. The 32 teams have been selected from nearly 700 intercollegiate women's squads. The pre-tourney favorite is Louisiana Tech which has lost only one game in the last two years. But after Sunday's championship game, the stars of the women's tourney — unlike their male counterparts — can't expect big-money contracts. The professional Women's Basketball Association collapsed last year and is not likely to be revived in the near future.

DO YOU KNOW — Which state originated the six-player women's rules in high school basketball?

Chancellor Candidate Concludes Visit

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Elon College President J. Fred Young, one of four finalists for the post of chancellor of East Carolina University, concluded a two-day visit to the ECU campus Thursday. The visit, highlighted by a series of meetings with faculty, students, administrators and community leaders, was arranged by the 15-member chancellor selection committee.

The search committee is scheduled to decide on two nominees for the post. Those names will be submitted to the ECU Board of Trustees.

Trustee chairman Ashley B. Futrell, who also heads the search committee, said the schedule calls for the board's recommendation to be submitted to University of North Carolina President William Friday and the UNC Board of Governors by May 14. He noted that Friday will make the final recommendation to the UNC board.

In addition to Young, the other finalists include ECU Acting Chancellor John M. Howell, ECU Professor Charles Q. Brown and Dr. James A. Robinson, president of the University of West Florida at Pensacola.

Dr. Young, a Burnsville native, received degrees from Wake Forest University, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Columbia University after attending Mars Hill Junior College.

After experience as a teacher, principal and assistant superintendent in North Carolina, Young became superintendent of the Lynchburg, Va., public schools and then deputy superintendent of public instruction for the commonwealth of Virginia, before being named president of Elon College in 1973.

Dr. Howell, an Alabama native, holds degrees from the University of Alabama and Duke University.

He taught at the University of Idaho, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Duke, Sweet Briar College and Memphis State University before coming to ECU in 1957.

During his tenure at East Carolina, Howell has served as chairman of the department of political science, dean of the college of arts and sciences, dean of the graduate school, and provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs.

Dr. Brown, a Roanoke Rapids native with degrees from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Virginia Polytechnic Institute, came to ECU in 1966 and has served as director of institutional development (now institutional advancement) at the school. He is currently acting dean of the school of technology and chairman of the geology department.

Robinson, a Blackwell, Okla., native, earned degrees at George Washington University, the University of Ohio and Northwestern University and holds honorary doctorates from George Washington University and Kyung Pook National University in Taiwan.

A political scientist, he has taught at Northwestern and at Ohio State, and was president of Macalester College in St. Paul, Minn., before becoming president of West Florida in 1974.

While at Ohio State, Robinson served as director of the Mershon Center for Education in National Security, as vice president for academic affairs and as provost.

On-campus interviews are scheduled to be held Monday and Tuesday for Robinson. Interviews for Brown are scheduled to begin April 6, while interviews for Howell are set to start April 13.

Poland Appears To Have 'Paid'

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The Polish government apparently has made good on its promise and repaid all $500 million in overdue interest owed Western banks this month, a banking source said today.

The source, who asked not to be identified, said preliminary checks among 16 major foreign creditor banks indicate the money was received from Bank Handlowy, Poland's foreign trade bank.

"It's too early for an official announcement but from information we've received so far, we are assuming that all interest payments have been made," the source added.

Payment of the interest due in 1981 was a condition laid down by private Western banks before they would agree to reschedule the $2.4 billion in principal which also fell due last year.

Polish economists have said rescheduling the crushing foreign debt, estimated to total more than $25 billion, was essential if Poland were to begin the slow march toward economic recovery.

Banking sources said invitations will be sent out at the end of this month to Polish officials and private banks to attend the April 6 signing of an accord on rescheduling the 1981 principal debt.

GOSPEL PROGRAM

There will be a gospel program at Fleming Chapel Church Sunday at 7:30 p.m. The program will feature the Stevenson Singers of Grimesland, the DEFG Singers of Greenville and the Mighty Travelettes.

principal debt.

The agreement was to have been signed this month but the date was postponed after the Poles failed to meet a Feb. 15 deadline for repaying its overdue interest.

Sources said the agreement would be signed at the headquarters of Dresdner Bank here in Frankfurt.

Poland's foreign debt was cited as one of the key reasons for the economic crisis of 1980 which triggered a wave of strikes culminating in the birth of Solidarity, the first independent union in the East bloc.

Solidarity was suspended with the imposition of martial law in Poland Dec. 13.

Drug Roundup Had 31 Arrests

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — Called the largest-ever drug and alcohol raid locally, Sanford and Lee County authorities made 31 arrests on 80 warrants Wednesday night and Thursday.

The arrests were the result of an under cover operation initiated by Alcoholic Beverage Commission officer Elwell Turner and Sanford Police Chief Ronnie Yarborough.

Those arrested on a variety of related charges ranged in ages from 16 to 68.

Forced Landing By Helicopter

FARMVILLE — Mechanical difficulties caused an Air Force helicopter to make a forced landing south of here Thursday but apparently the aircraft was repaired and flown out of the area before local authorities pinpointed its location.

Sheriff Ralph Tyson said a spokesman for the Air Force Rescue Coordinator Service in Washington, D.C., notified his department at 6:34 p.m. that the helicopter had landed earlier Thursday near Lizzie just across the Pitt County line in Greene County. The spokesman, according to the sheriff, confirmed that the aircraft had been repaired and was able to continue on to Seymour Johnson Air Force Base at Goldsboro.

Tyson said a witness told authorities that the disabled aircraft landed, followed by a second helicopter. He said that third helicopter also touched down and apparently left with passengers from the disabled helicopter. The witness quoted Air Force personnel he talked to as saying the chopper had experienced engine trouble.

The sheriff said the helicopter was apparently en route to Goldsboro from Alexandria, Va.

He said that after his office received initial reports of the helicopter's trouble, a pilot from Farmville agreed to take his airplane up but he was unsuccessful in locating the chopper. An Air Force jet out of Seymour Johnson apparently spotted the helicopter on the ground as repairs were being made.

Tyson said that apparently no injuries resulted from the forced landing.

R.J. Reynolds To Lay Off 825

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. has announced plans to lay off 825 workers — 8 1/2 percent of its labor force — for two weeks.

The company said the layoffs, which are scheduled to begin Monday, are blamed on the reaction of wholesalers to recent cigarette price increases for the rare move to cut production.

One company official said he thought sales were still holding up, but that retailers were letting their inventory deplete further than usual.

The last time the company had a layoff, about 250 workers were released temporarily in 1977.

Reagan Warned Time Running Out On His Deficit

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is being warned by Republican leaders in Congress that time is running out for White House participation in efforts to trim the record deficit in his fiscal 1983 budget.

"I can't wait forever," said Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., adding that the Senate Budget Committee would probably begin work on a spending outline next week unless there are indications of compromise from Reagan.

The Tennessee Republican joined with House GOP leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois in expressing impatience Thursday as White House officials acknowledged they were letting Congress "stew awhile" on the budget.

"Maybe I have to move on the shoulder and get around this stalled caravan," Michel said.

A Senate GOP source who asked anonymity said Baker's remarks were "a signal to the White House that we're running out of time."

Michel said talks with House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., and other Democrats have shown him that "the hard positions on the Democratic side have been somewhat softened" regarding cuts in benefit programs and other politically sensitive issues.

Michel said he hoped Reagan also would show flexibility by the time Congress begins an Easter recess next week.

"You've got to cross the Rubicon sometime," Michel said.

Elsewhere on Capitol Hill Thursday, the House Social Security subcommittee approved a bill to continue disability benefits to people for up to six months after the government determines they should be removed from the rolls.

Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, the subcommittee chairman, said the proposal is designed "to slow down the harsh, if not in some instances, inhumane" way the Social Security Administration is conducting its accelerated review of disability recipients.

Meanwhile, several lawmakers pushed ahead with a move to repeal last year's law giving members of Congress a special deduction that will save the average congressman about $7,500 a year in federal income taxes.

A petition intended to force a House vote on a bill repealing the living-expense deduction was introduced by Reps. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., Tom Lantos, D-Calif., and Ray Kogovsek, D-Colo.

The petition was signed by several other House members, including Republicans, but it will need 218 signatures — half the House plus one — to force the Ways and Means Committee to bring the bill to the floor.

In other congressional business:

—An aide to Rep. Lyle Williams said the White House has agreed to consider the Ohio Republican's proposal to tax imports 3 percent to raise money to help retire the national debt.

—Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., said Congress is losing patience because of the failure of European allies and Japan to set new minimum interest rates for their government-supported export credits. Heinz is sponsoring a bill to give the Export-Import Bank $1 billion to subsidize U.S. exports with below-market loans.

—A House subcommittee endorsed legislation to allow 100 U.S. cattle tick inspectors to carry guns. The "river riders" say they have been shot at as they patrol the U.S.-Mexico border in Texas looking for infested livestock.

—The House Agriculture subcommittee on department operations and research refused on a tie vote to back industry-sought changes in the federal pesticide law to limit public access to health and safety data submitted to the government.

Cite Irritation Due Fuel Clause

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Frequent electric rate adjustments reflecting changes in fuel costs irritate consumers and cost utilities millions of dollars, a legislative committee was told Thursday.

The Legislature's Utilities Review Committee heard electric company officials and consumer advocates call for changes in the law which allows rates to be changed three times a year to reflect changing fuel costs.

"I think the public is so aroused and so irritated because of the repetitive nature of this fuel clause," A. Hartwell Campbell, a member of the state Utilities Commission said.

Campbell asked the commission to seek the law's repeal in the short Legislative session this summer. There was a "growing consensus" on the seven-member commission to do away with the law, Campbell said.

Fuel companies have also been requesting about one general rate increase per year, resulting in what Campbell said was non-stop news reports telling customers their rates are going up.

Robert Fischbach, director of the commission's public staff, which looks out for consumer interests in rate cases, also sought changes.

"Our view is that a change must be made soon," he said. "Customers are, and have been since the fall of 1980, inadequately protected."

Fischbach's comments pertained to state court rulings in 1980 which overturned the commission's penalty against Virginia Electric and Power Company in a 1979 fuel adjustment case.

Prior to 1975, when the fuel clause law went into effect, estimates of fuel costs were included in utilities' general rate cases. The commission could change rates if the actual costs were substantially higher or lower than projected.

Companies now use a four-month period as a pattern in determining rates during a future four-month period. As an example, April through July bills will recover costs incurred for the previous September through December.

The commission ordered lower rates after finding that Veeco had made poor management decisions. The courts ruled that the commission could consider management issues only in a general rate case, not fuel clause actions.

Judge Certified

District Court Judge E. Buret Aycock Jr. of Greenville has been certified by the North Carolina Administrative Office of the Courts as being specially qualified to hear juvenile cases.

The certification is based on training and experience and results from a new law which has encouraged judges to specialize in hearing matters involving juveniles.

Judge Aycock has served as a District Court judge in the 3rd Judicial District — Pitt, Craven, Carteret and Pamlico counties — for the past 5½ years. He has presided over most of the juvenile hearings in the district for the past year and a half.

Certification requirements include being licensed to practice law in North Carolina, having presided over a specified number of juvenile hearings and having completed the required curriculum.

The curriculum consists of courses in juvenile law, school problems, family dysfunction, and both normal and abnormal child and adolescent development.

According to the Administrative office of the Courts, juvenile justice is an emerging area of concern for all court system officials. The certification program is designed to produce judges who are qualified through training and experience to deal with the problems juveniles present.

Aycock, who has two children, ages 12 and 13, is married to Nancy Barnhill Aycock.

Vote-Buying Inquiry Set In Columbus

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Allegations of vote buying in Columbus County will be investigated by a federal grand jury next month, U.S. Attorney Sam Currin said.

"The subpoenas have been issued to various individuals to testify before the federal grand jury with regard to the investigation," Currin said. "Normally, anyone who is subpoenaed is, of course, told the nature of the allegations. These allegations relate to vote buying."

Currin declined to elaborate on the specifics of the grand jury other than saying the allegations centered on the Columbus County area. He also refused to say who made the allegations.

Several area residents have been subpoenaed to appear before the grand jury in the investigation but Currin refused to identify the people or say how many subpoenas were served.

The grand jury is expected to meet in Raleigh during the third week of April, Currin said. The group, unlike the usual grand jury that issues indictments after most meetings, could meet several times before approving indictments.

Currin, who was appointed by President Reagan to the U.S. attorney's post for the eastern half of North Carolina, acknowledged there might be complaints that the probe is politically motivated. He noted there are about 22,000 Democrats registered to vote in the county compared to about 2,000 registered Republican voters.

Prime Minister 'In Waiting'

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer
GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — Roy Jenkins, co-leader of the fledgling Social Democratic Party, won a special parliamentary election and gained a shot at becoming Britain's next prime minister.

Jenkins, a former Labor Party chancellor of the exchequer, polled 10,106 vote, 2,038 more than his Conservative opponent in Thursday's balloting, ending a 63-year Conservative hammerlock on Glasgow's Hillhead district.

In a huge 16.7 percent swing against the Conservatives and a 13.6 percent shift against Labor, Hillhead sent Jenkins back to the House of Commons, where he sat for 28 years before resigning in 1977 to serve a four-year term as chief of the 10-nation European Commission in Brussels.

Jenkins, 61, ran as a joint candidate of the SDP and the tiny Liberal Party, the alliance that has now posted three straight victories over Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservatives in six months.

"This election has shown we are seriously in the business of presenting a third alternative choice for the next government of this country," said Jenkins, who also beat a Labor Party candidate.

His SDP co-leader, Shirley Williams, 51, cast aside canes she has used since a Christmas tobogganing accident and declared: "I shall walk home on air. We've got back into Parliament the man who will lead the alliance and will be prime minister in waiting."

Jenkins desperately needed the Hillhead victory to become alliance leader in the fall and take the centrist movement into the next general election due in 1984. Hillhead was his last foreseeable chance of returning to the House of Commons before fall.

"No seat in the country is now safe from the challenge of the alliance," Liberal Party leader David Steele declared.

Jenkins' win came exactly a year after he and three other former Labor Cabinet ministers founded the SDP, vowing to break the political stranglehold of the increasingly right-wing Conservatives and the leftward lurching socialist Laborites.

Conservative runner Gerry Malone, 33, a local lawyer, ran second in Hillhead with 8,068 votes, just ahead of Labor's David Wiseman, 38, a leftist community worker, with 7,846. The separatist Scottish National Party's candidate got only 11.3 percent of the vote.

Mrs. Thatcher, who ousted Labor in the 1979 general election, still has a comfortable 33-seat majority in the 635-member House of Commons, over Labor's 240 and the SDP alliance's 41, including 12 Liberals. Minority regional parties hold the remainder. A Gallup opinion poll published last week showed the SDP-Liberal alliance tied with Labor at 33 percent, 1.5 points ahead of the Conservative's popularity rating.

'Political Payola' Part Of Early Carolina History

By IRIS VINEGAR
 Tar Heels who turn up their noses at tales of political payola should be reminded that the territory from which the state of North Carolina emerged was just that.

The evidence rests in the N.C. Museum of History in Raleigh, which displays the Carolina Charter of 1663 in a special, illuminated fireproof safe.

This rare document, which observed its 319th anniversary Wednesday, was a thank-you gift to eight supporters of King Charles II of England.

These loyal gentlemen risked their heads by actively participating in the restoration of that monarch to the throne of England in 1660 after Richard Cromwell was forced to resign. Afterward they petitioned the crown for Carolina and became shareholders in some choice real estate.

But just who were these eight entrepreneurs responsible for so many familiar Tar Heel names?

Edward Hyde, earle of Clarendon, had been a loyal supporter and adviser to Charles I. After that monarch was beheaded, Hyde took the lead in restoring the monarchy to the late king's son, Charles II.

For a brief period, Hyde was one of the new king's trusted counselors. But trouble with Parliament caused Hyde to be banished from England in 1667, and the man for whom Hyde County is named died in exile in 1674.

George Monck, duke of Albemarle, was master of the King's Horse and captain general of all his forces. The royalists (followers of the king) were convinced that the duke was the one man best able to effect the king's restoration, and he was wooed by both King Charles and his adversaries, the Parliament of Cromwell. But Monck was instrumental in gaining concessions from Parliament for the king, and when Charles landed in Dover, ending his exile in France, he was met by Monck with expressions of humility and devotion.

The duke of Albemarle died at the age of 62, reportedly "like a Roman general and soldier, standing almost up in his chair." His title lives in North Carolina as the name of the sound, a region, a town and former county.

William, earl of Craven, was a wealthy soldier of the king. Because he gave both moral and financial support to Charles I, Cromwell's Parliament declared him to be an offender against the commonwealth, and his property was seized. Most of it was restored when he crossed the channel with Charles II.

Craven County is named for the earl, who died in 1697.

Lord John Berkeley was a mediator between Cromwell and Charles I. Having aroused the ire of Parliament, Berkeley was forced to flee to Paris where he was in the service of the duke of York. He returned to England after the restoration and was placed on the staff of the admiralty. He died at the age of 71.

His brother, Sir William Berkeley, had been governor of Virginia for 22 years before he became a proprietor. Sir William is known for his relentless persecution of Quakers and Puritans during the early years of his administration. However, his Virginia colony became an asylum for the persecuted clergy of England.

Sir William Berkeley's death preceded his brother's by one year.

Anthony Ashley Cooper, later earl of Shaftesbury, was the youngest of the proprietors. As a member of Parliament who had previously broken with Cromwell, he was one of a dozen men sent by Commons in 1660 to invite Charles to return. After the restoration, Cooper was made a member of the Privy Council at the suggestion of Monck. Shaftesbury Precinct in old Albemarle County was named in honor of the earl who died in 1683.

Sir George Carteret was declared a pirate by the commonwealth for privateering its supply ships and fired from his post as lieutenant governor of the Island of Jersey. But that island in the English Channel became the refuge of royalist fugitives. Carteret is reported to have gone so far as to turn his own family out to make room for the future king and his entourage. Carteret held out for three months against an invading army of Parliament which landed in Jersey in 1651.

Charles later wrote to Carteret: "I can never forget the good services you have done for my father and me." At the restoration, Carteret became a member of the Privy Council and treasurer of the navy. He was almost 80 when he died. Carteret

County is named for his great-grandson, Sir John Carteret, earl of Granville, for whom Granville County is also named.

Sir John Colleton is reported to have been a man of considerable wealth. He contributed 40,000 pounds to the cause of the king, much of which went for raising a regiment for the royalist cause. He is credited with being the first of the proprietors to have the idea of obtaining a grant from the king for the region south of Virginia. He was also the first of that group to die, living only three years after the charter was granted. Collington Island in Dare County was named for Colleton.

According to the records, the reign of the proprietors was not satisfactory. The problems were judicial and economic as well as administrative.

Nevertheless, it took 55 years for the territory to return to the crown of England.

In 1728 the crown bought all the proprietors' interests except those of the earl of Carteret. His heirs received permission to keep his share which was not sold and later became the Granville district.

The original charter granted the proprietors disappeared for more than 200 years. Then it was discovered for sale in a British antique bookstore near London. It was purchased for $6,000 with funds donated by private citizens and the N.C. Society for the Preservation of Antiquities (now the Historic Preservation Society of North Carolina).

Visitors can see the charter and read it in its entirety at the museum at 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh. Admission is free. The museum is open Tuesday-Saturday, 9 a.m.-5 p.m. and on Sunday, 1-6 p.m.

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

THE FORGOTTEN ONES

THE STORY OF ABRAHAM'S WIFE, SARAH, AND HIS BELOVED SON ISAAC, IS WELL RECORDED—AS IS THAT OF HAGAR, WHO BORE ABRAHAM'S FIRST SON, ISHMAEL, BUT LITTLE IS SAID OF THE WIFE THAT ABRAHAM TOOK AFTER SARAH'S DEATH, KETURAH. THIS FINE WOMAN GAVE ABRAHAM NOT ONE—NOT TWO—NOT FOUR—BUT SIX SONS!

FOUR TERSE VERSES (GENESIS 25:1-4) GIVE SHORT SHRIFT TO KETURAH AND HER SONS:

ZIMRAM, JOKSHAN, MEDAN, MIDIAN (FOUNDER OF THE MIDIANITE NATION) ISHBAK, AND SHUAH.

BUT ABRAHAM, FATHER OF EIGHT SONS, LOVED BEST THE ONE OF WHOM GOD SAID, "I WILL MAKE OF HIM A GREAT NATION", FOR, AS GENESIS 25:5 REPORTS: "ABRAHAM GAVE ALL THAT HE HAD TO ISAAC."

"WORSHIP GIVES US THE STRENGTH WE NEED..."

There is so much strain on families today: earning a living, finding time to spend together. It would be even more difficult without the strength and hope we receive through attending our church. Talking to God through prayer, listening to Him through Bible study, and worshipping Him with other believers — all of this adds meaning to our lives and helps us every day.

This is your invitation to worship at a Baptist church near you. We hope you find a church which means as much to you as ours does to us.

There are many good churches in North Carolina. Ours happens to be Baptist. During this time hundreds of Baptist churches in our state are having special HERE'S HOPE services.

Final Four Ready For New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The last time the University of Houston's basketball team was in New Orleans, the Cougars won the Sugar Bowl tournament.

It could be even sweeter this time for Coach Guy Lewis — if his unranked Southwest Conference club can get by top-ranked North Carolina in Saturday's NCAA championship semifinals.

It will be the Cougars' biggest challenge of the season, according to Lewis.

"North Carolina has no weaknesses," Lewis said Thursday. "We've got teams in the Southwest Conference like North Carolina — but none as good. It'll take something special to beat North Carolina."

The Houston-North Carolina game will precede the Louisville-Georgetown game at the Superdome, which will be witnessed by a record crowd of some 61,000, plus a national television audience in the millions. The winners will play for the NCAA championship Monday night.

"North Carolina is as good as any team in the country," Lewis said. "They've got strength at every position — just a great, great ballclub."

The contest features two teams of contrasting styles and temperments. Under Coach Dean Smith, a master of control, North Carolina exhibits a disciplined style of play that includes an intimidating offensive slowdown known as the "four corners."

Under Lewis, Houston is a run-and-shoot team spearheaded by guard Rob Williams, who at 22 points a game is the highest scorer in the Final Four.

Lewis appears to be more worried about North Carolina's style than Smith is about Houston's.

"You fall behind North Carolina and it's awfully tough to catch up," Lewis said. "Obviously, we can't afford to let that happen. We have to come right at them."

Houston, 25-7, and second in the Southwest Conference, has adjusted well to every other team thus far in this championship tournament. The Cougars beat Alcorn State, Tulsa, Missouri and Boston College en route to the regional championship in the Midwest.

The Cougars won the Sugar Bowl tourney last December by beating Louisiana State, and Lewis insists that Houston is playing even better now.

"We had some injuries then," Lewis said. "We're a lot healthier now."

Williams, among others, was hurt earlier in the year.

"I think people will see a different Houston team this time," Lewis said. "We're playing very well now."

Like Lewis, Williams has high regard for the Tar Heels, especially senior Jimmy Black, whom Smith calls "the best point guard in America."

Williams won't go quite that far, saying only that Black is "obviously one of the best" while adding, "I've got the utmost respect for Black."

With Black controlling the offense, North Carolina, 30-2, won the Atlantic Coast Conference championship and captured the East Regional with triumphs over James Madison, Alabama and Villanova.

It is Smith's seventh trip to the Final Four and Lewis's third. Neither has won an NCAA championship.

Louisville's Denny Crum, on the other hand, is going for his second title in three years. His 1980 Cardinals won in 1980 over UCLA, and the four starters who played supporting roles that year to All-American Darrell Griffith are back.

"The difference is we don't have the superstar to carry us this year," Crum said after the Cardinals flew into town Thursday night.

Crum was asked if he felt he would have an advantage over Georgetown Coach John Thompson, who's coaching his first Final Four team.

"The only thing about that is John and I don't get to play," Crum said. "If there is any advantage, my players might have it."

Jerry Eaves, Louisville's senior guard, said the team's Final Four experience had taught the Cardinals how to cope with big-game pressures.

"This isn't a party," he said. "We know what we came here to do."

Louisville, 23-9, the Midwest Regional winner, is the only team in the Final Four with any significant physical problems.

Reserve forward Poncho Wright has a stubbed toe and freshman guard Milt Wagner still is troubled with a virus. Neither has practiced in recent days. Starting senior forward Derek Smith has six stitches in his upper lip and a dislocated jaw, injuries he suffered in the regionals.

"I still have the stitches in, but it's fine," Smith said, adding with a smile that strained his sore jaw. "I'll probably pick up some more."

Georgetown, 29-6, the Big East playoff winner, was the West Regional champion.

The Hoyas are the only one of the four teams staying out of town — some 60 miles away in Biloxi, Miss. — following a pattern that Thompson established in the West Regionals at Salt Lake City. The Georgetown coach has kept his players relatively sheltered from the press during the season and continues to hold that position in the championship round.

Asked about his posture on interviews with players, Thompson said that it would be the same as it has been throughout the season.

"I'll comply with the NCAA regulations," he said. "But no more."

NCAA Was Born In Crisis And Lives In Crisis

Last of a Series
By DOUG TUCKER
AP Sports Writer

Even with popularity at an all-time high, scandal and controversy threatened to engulf college athletics.

Critics in academic, government and media circles demanded reform. At the White House, the president, a rugged individual who loved to go horseback riding out West, said if the schools didn't straighten out the mess, he would.

The year was 1906. The National Collegiate Athletic Association was born that year, conceived by a group of college administrators who met in New York to address problems that in many ways bother their successors three-quarters of a century later.

"The NCAA was born in crisis," says Walter Byers, its current executive director. "And it lives in crisis."

In 1906, the main concern was the alarming number of fatal injuries in football, and President Theodore Roosevelt threatened to ban the game unless immediate steps were taken. They were. Mandatory use of improved safety equipment was instituted and the "flying wedge" was outlawed.

But even then there were complaints of unethical conduct among coaches and demands for tighter guidelines in the delicate area of player acquisition — matters that bear a familiar ring 76 years later to a fourth generation of athletic administrators and fans.

Everyone agrees college athletics has entered another phase of rapid evolution. Changes are coming, but no one can say for certain what they will be.

Many of the complications today would have been familiar to those men in 1906: Economic conditions, the uneasy marriage of higher education and big business, the needs of the student-athletes themselves.

But there are other factors nobody in 1906 could have imagined: television, cablevision and a nationwide decline in college enrollment which is spawning competition for public acclaim and recognition through athletics.

Is the college game choking on its own popularity? As public interest grows, so does the pressure to win. And so do the rates advertisers will pay to sponsor football and basketball telecasts. And big chunks of these riches are passed along to the schools with winning teams.

"Somehow, you have to break the cycle," says Byers, who has headed the NCAA since 1951. "The cycle is: Fire the coach. Raise more money to pay off his contract. Get the boosters to raise more money to pay the new coach. Fire him if he doesn't win. Raise more money. The cycle keeps going on and on and on."

Intertwined in it all is the question of whether college football and basketball players are amateur athletes.

A U.S. District Court judge in Minnesota ruled that a basketball player could not be declared academically eligible because he was recruited for athletics, not scholarship. A jurisdiction, and there have been 253 probations since the NCAA launched an enforcement program in 1952.

Byers is urging tougher penalties and a retooling of the enforcement structure.

"The enforcement program has gotten a penalty pattern, become accustomed to it, a penalty pattern which has lost its bite," he said. "We need to rifle-shot, in my judgment. I think our procedures need to be more immediate."

Byers says present penalties, such as probation, public and private reprimands, are "essentially insignificant to the operating personnel. ... I've talked to a number of coaches who feel that a substantial fine would get attention."

The best deterrent, say Byers and Neinas, would be more direct penalties on cheating coaches.

"If a coach knows he can lose his job, and the athlete can't play anymore, then you're going to get to the heart of the matter," said Neinas. "I think we might get involved in certification of coaches in some manner, the way doctors and lawyers are certified. Unethical doctors and lawyers can lose their right to practice their profession, but not unethical coaches."

status of the NCAA and the CFA, as well as various conferences, could be challenged by the Internal Revenue Service.

"You could run into a workmen's compensation situation and I also think that there is a possibility of exposing these programs to unionization," Byers said.

The pressure to win and the influence of boosters have given rise to what most people agree is the most distressing public image problem facing college sports: cheating in recruiting.

There is no agreement on how widespread it is, and the figures only show those who have been caught. There are 751 schools under the NCAA's jurisdiction, and there have been 253 probations since the NCAA launched an enforcement program in 1952.

Byers is urging tougher penalties and a retooling of the enforcement structure. He says present penalties, such as probation, public and private reprimands, are "essentially insignificant to the operating personnel." The best deterrent, say Byers and Neinas, would be more direct penalties on cheating coaches.

Prentice Gautt, as much as anyone, is uniquely qualified to assess the good and the evil, and the past, present and future, of big-time college sports.

Gautt believes changes in the system are needed and are on the way.

"The NCAA and all of us have to keep it off the pro level, and more and more, that is going to be the issue," he said.

"I do think athletes are probably going to be requesting additional money. Right now, the only thing they have is the grant-in-aid, room, board, tuition, fees and books. I see more (NCAA) legislation going in that direction, more concern toward the student athlete.

Why the richest sherry? Years ago, a French woman touring John Harvey's wine cellar tasted his two sherries. She replied, "If the first is Bristol Milk, then this must be the cream." So, it was named. Bristol Creme, the first cream sherry. A blend of even finer, older wines.

Masterpiece Theater For Select Few

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) —
"Love in a Cold Climate,"
PBS' "Masterpiece Theater" presentation beginning Sunday night, is a comedy of manners that is must viewing only for those who enjoy crumpets and croquet.

If you're a typical colonial,
the eight-part adaptation of Nancy Mitford's autobiographical novels, "The Pursuit of Love" and "Love in a Cold Climate," will leave you cold. It's boring, boorish and brutally British.

And that's a shame.
"Masterpiece Theater" has long been a pleasant way to end the weekend and approach Monday. But it's hit on hard times since the picture postcards from

"Flame Trees of Thika" ended Feb. 14.
"I Remember Nelson" was repetitious and tedious for four weeks, followed by PBS' fund-raiser last Sunday —
and, now, eight weeks of
"Love in a Cold Climate."
That's one fourth of the year without the kind of grand entertainment that we've come to expect from the presenters of "Upstairs,
Downstairs" and "A Town
Like Alice."

On one level, "Upstairs, Downstairs" dealt with Britain's favored class. But the characters were easy companions and the situations essentially classless enough to be interesting and exciting for everybody.

That's not the case with
"Love in a Cold Climate."
The aristocratic, landed Radlett family is the essence of silliness. The treatment of the idle, rich British society between the wars isn't the stuff to hook American audiences.

"It's a family that's obsolete in habit and outlook," says the father of one of the Radlett's would-be suitors.
Alistair Cooke, host of

SUSPENDED — Thomas Noguchi, embattled Los Angeles County coroner, was suspended Thursday
for 30 days without pay by the county Board of Supervisors. The grounds were alleged mismanagement,
excessive absenteeism,
and prejudicial remarks
about celebrity deaths.
Noguchi's lawyer says he will appeal to the Civil Service Commission. (AP

"Masterpiece Theater," is a new setting when he introduces "Love in a Cold Climate." Gone is the soft living room and desk set.
Instead, he's sitting in what looks like a solarium or a jungle.

Cooke explains Sunday
that Miss Mitford wrote about a period of time when Europe was responding to the slaughter of World War I with a spirit of liberation.
"So the thing was to live for the day, even more for the night in a whirl of dancing, drinking and partying and ridiculous costumes."

It turns out that the first episode focuses, instead, on the Radlett's seven young children and a niece, Fanny, who becomes the most appealing and genuine character in the series. She lives with the Radletts
because her mother is busy cajoling. Her mother is known by everybody as "The Bolter."

On Sunday, the children

speak in their own language and act appropriately juvenile, giggling from one scene to the next. They even seem to enjoy being chased by bloodhounds, a bizarre deviation favored by the clan's father, the eccentric tyrant,
Lord Matthew Alconleigh.

Lord Matthew, played by Michael Aldridge, is a funny character in his own narrow way. He's an Archie Bunker-type who calls those he doesn't like "sewers."
That includes all foreigners, neighbors, intellectuals and anybody courting his six daughters for marriage. The major concern of the family for several of the ensuing episodes.

His zany antics and Victorian values, including his belief that girls should not be educated, provide some explanation and motivation for divergent activities of the real-life Mitfords. Unity Mitford became a confidant of Hitler's, while sister Jessica went in the opposite political direction and joined the Communist Party.

If the adult activities of the Radletts — the Mitfords — had been offered as contextual background earlier in the series, it may have become more involving. Unfortunately, by the time

"Love in a Cold Climate"
gets around to these absolute adult activities, the series is in its sixth episode, too late for even the most patient "Masterpiece Theater" aficionado.

Oscar Is Worth Millions

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer
HOLLYWOOD (AP) —
What is an Oscar worth?
The price the Dodge Trophy and Awards Co.
charges for the statuettes the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences will hand out Monday night is a secret, but Hollywood legend has it that winning an Oscar can bring actors and movie companies millions of dollars.

While the legend may be accurate for some companies, it's not always so for actors.

Theater owners are apt to book and rebook the winning film, and viewers of the Oscar awards ceremony are drawn to theaters by the hype and by film clips of the winner, said Charles Powell, former publicity and advertising chief for MGM and Universal and now head of a film marketing firm.

"The best-picture award
can mean a minimum of $6 million but closer to $10 million in ticket sales," said Powell. "That has been the experience over the past 10 years."

"Winning best picture
didn't help 'The Lost Weekend,'" said Billy Wilder, who directed the 1945
film. "But in those days,
once a picture was released,
that was it. Today the companies will bring back an Oscar winner and make millions more."

Sometimes the entire release pattern is built around the awards. Four years ago, Universal faced a problem with "The Deer Hunter," an expensive, unrelenting treatment of the Vietnam war. The company decided to release the film in Los Angeles just in time to qualify for the awards. A few more bookings were added in February, with the broad release scheduled to coincide with the Oscars.

The strategy worked. "The Deer Hunter" was named best picture of the year, and a problem picture became a huge moneymaker. The rentals in the United States and Canada totaled $31 million, meaning more than twice that amount poured through box offices.

Does Oscar have the same

golden touch for acting award winners?

"It certainly didn't help Luise Rainer, who won two years in a row and then dropped out of sight," Wilder said. "It certainly didn't help Ernest Borgnine." And what about winners Louise Fletcher, Miyoshi Umeki and George Chakiris?

William Morris agent Mike Zimring doubts there is an automatic jump in prices for acting winners.

"If an actor is a newcomer, then his asking price might rise," he said. "But the Oscar doesn't mean as much to established stars. If Burt Reynolds were to win an award, what would that change? He can already make $5 million for a picture deal."

"Individual winners don't mean as much for a box

office gross," said Gordon Armstrong, advertising and publicity head at Universal.
"What counts is the best-picture award or multiple winners. Last year the Oscar for Sissy Spacek added little to the 'Coal Miner's Daughter' business. The picture had been released more than a year before, and it had already played out."

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — SLICK STEPS JUST STUMP A SIMPLE STEEPLEJACK.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: E equals A

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

 Opening lead: Jack of ♣.

There is a simple way to avoid being end played. Get rid of your high cards when you can afford to do so!

This hand is from a recent pair competition. West's double of one heart was "negative"; i.e., for takeout, not penalties. North decided that it was not worth bidding a suit in which West was known to have at least four cards, so he simply corrected to hearts when his partner's second suit was doubled. East's double was based on the form of competition — at duplicate pairs you often have to make close doubles if you want to obtain a reasonable score.

West led the jack of clubs, covered by the queen and won by the king. East made the obvious shift to a trump. Declarer won the ace and ruffed a diamond in dummy. He led the king of spades from the table. West won the ace and exited with a diamond to his partner's ace. East cashed the ace of clubs and played a low club.

Declarer ruffed with the ten of trumps and cashed the king and queen. On these tricks East carefully followed with the seven and jack of trumps! Now, when declarer led the five of trumps, East was able to underplay the three, leaving declarer on lead. On declarer's forced diamond lead, West was able to take two diamond tricks to complete a one-trick set.

Observe what would have happened if East had left himself with a high trump. He would have been thrown in with the last trump and would then have been forced to lead a black suit, allowing dummy to collect the last three tricks — and the contract.
