Shuttle Columbia Returns Safely Home

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. (AP) — The space shuttle Columbia returned home to a calm harbor today, diving through Earth atmosphere to a pinpoint landing on the sparkling desert sands of Northrup Strip.

A day late, but none the worse for wear. "This is really a great flying machine," Jack R. Lousma said as he flew hypersonic over southern California en route over three states to this supersecret military base.

At touchdown, the nose rose a bit and then settled smoothly on the gypsum floor.

With Lousma in command and C. Gordon Fullerton beside him, the winged shuttle slapped wheels to sand at 9:05 a.m., mountain time. Monday, Columbia was blocked from landing here by a fierce sandstorm.

Today, the air was clear, winds calm, spirits high. Approach was accompanied by a pair of dull sonic booms.

For Lousma and Fullerton it was a perfect ending for Columbia's next-to-last test flight. For eight days they had put the craft to its most rigorous tests and, except for nagging technical problems, it responded beautifully.

The spaceship settled onto runway 17, a seven-mile strip laid out in a barren-but-beautiful desert setting. The astronauts had no trouble spotting their target from the air — 100 square miles of white gypsum surrounding the landing zone. The spaceship swung right over a nearby mountain range and settled with a gentle thump.

Mission Control said, "Welcome home. That was a beautiful job," and the Houston descent team erupted in applause.

Because of the possibility of continuing high winds, Mission Control had maintained an option to order another "wave off" and direct the ship to an alternate landing on a concrete runway at the Kennedy Space Center in Cape Canaveral, Fla.

"A little bumpy at Mach 2," said Lousma as the ship was traveling twice the speed of sound in the sky above Truth or Consequences, N.M.

At decision time, NASA officials determined that New Mexico landing conditions were very acceptable and Lousma and Fullerton were given the green light to land.

"A nice solid burn," commander Jack Lousma said after firing the shuttle engines. "Columbia now committed to deorbit," confirmed Mission Control. "Have a good one," said capsule communicator Steve Nagel.

Columbia had been in space for 130 orbits — 8 days — its longest mission by far.

A second-day crowd of less than 10,000 people, closely watched by Army troops, gathered in the desert to watch the ship come in.

A desert sandstorm blocked Monday's scheduled landing. Gusty winds still buffeted the air above the site today, but conditions were considered safe and NASA rejected its own suggestion that Columbia might be sent to a back-up site, the concrete runway at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

The firing of twin maneuvering engines took place at 8:13 a.m. MST and forced Columbia from its orbit. The ship then began its hour-long descent from 140 miles high.

The burn came as the shuttle sailed high above the west coast of Australia and began the third world's only re-flyable spaceship third return from orbit in less than a year.

Lousma and Fullerton were flying backwards, in position for the rockets in the spacecraft tail to brake their 17,495-mph speed by 184 mph.

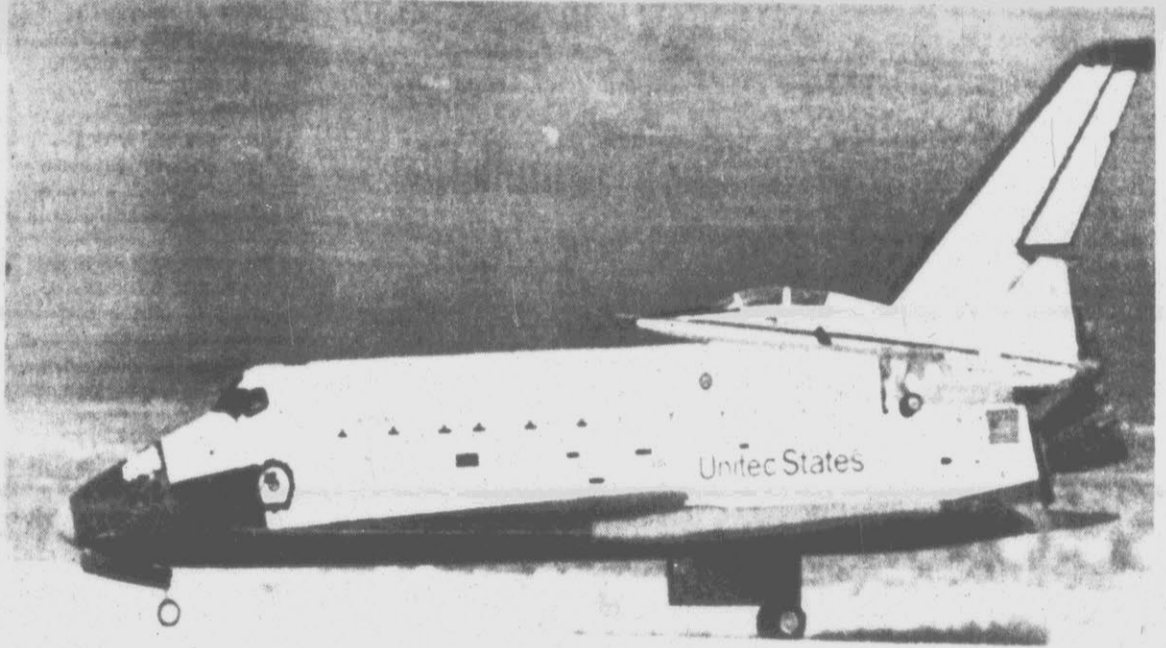

Four minutes after ignition they were turned Columbia's nose forward and began to feel the buildup of atmospheric gravity pressure on the vehicle.

Money In The Ground

THE BEGINNING OF A LONG SEASON ... Hoping that these green plants will turn into greenbacks, workers on the Bonnie Rouse farm in the St. Johns Community of Pitt County plopped the first tobacco plants of the year into the ground Monday. According to Billy McLawhorn of Ayden, who tends the Rouse farm, his workers got three to four acres set Monday afternoon and they'll continue planting all day today. Above, doing the work are, left to right, William Taylor, William Rouse, J.T. McLawhorn and Shep McLawhorn. (Reflector Photo By Mary Schulken)

Fulford Says Space At PCC Is Becoming Critical Problem

By MARY SCHULKEN Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt Community College has a serious instructional space crisis, says PCC President William E. Fulford Jr.

"We have reached critical emergency situations in several areas as far as space," Dr. Fulford told faculty, trustees and public officials attending the school's annual progress night Monday. "In a recent report that ranks North Carolina's community colleges and technical institutes according to building needs, Pitt Community College has the second greatest need for space in the system."

Wayne Community College heads the list, said Fulford. "But when you consider that they have started a new campus and are now planning for additional funds we should be considered the most needy," he added.

Fulford cited what he called "dramatic increases" in enrollment and community services at PCC for the critical classroom shortage. Particularly hard-pressed for space, he noted, are the nursing program, the learning resource center and student activities.

"We have experienced a tremendous increase in programs in the last year to meet the educational needs of community, business and industries," he said. "We added the electro-mechanical program last fall, and of course our college transfer curriculum is growing constantly."

In addition, Fulford said the job placement service has expanded and evening counseling has been added. He listed the following enrollment increases:

•Curriculum, 1977-79, 1409; 1980-81, 1924, a 37 percent increase.

•Continuing education, 1977-78, 540; 1980-81, 631, a 17 percent increase.

•Technical students, 1977-78, 859; 1980-81, 1,179, a 37 percent increase.

•Vocational students, 1977-78, 425; 1980-81, 586, a 38 percent increase.

"Progress is both good and bad, though," said the college president. "It has led to problems, and one of these is our desperate need for facilities."

Fulford added that the college's state budget grew from $2.5 to $3.5 million from 1977-1981 and county funds increased from $366,494 to $442,204.

Capitol outlay, however, he said, decreased from $88,000 in 1977-78 to $30,000 in 1979-80 and went to $35,000 in 1980-81.

Hotline gets things done for you. Call 752-1336 and tell your problem or your sound-off or mail it to Hotline, The Daily Reflector, Box 1967, Greenville, N.C. 27834.

Because of the large numbers received, Hotline can answer and publish only those items considered most pertinent to our readers. Names must be given, but only initials will be used.

PUPPIES NOT FREE

I called about some puppies written up in the Reflector "Adopt A Pet" column and found that they were for sale. The column clearly states that the animals written of are for free adoption. What gives?

The Sunday Reflector Adopt-A-Pet column is a cooperative endeavor of The Daily Reflector and the Pitt County Humane Society. Column co-editors Mary Schulken and Carol Tyer and Humane Society officers Elizabeth Savage and Barbara Haddock all stress that the column is for assisting the public in placing animals to be given away, not sold. All four agree that more care will be given in the future to stressing to each person who calls that no animal is to be sold after being listed in the column. They would appreciate reports about anyone who thus misuses the column.

OVERWHELMED BY GIVING

Charles and Alexandra Tripp have asked Hotline to thank everyone who contributed to their recovery from their house fire. "We were overwhelmed at how giving everyone was," Mrs. Whitehurst said. They said they express gratitude to the fire departments of Winterville, Ayden, Red Oak and Eastern Pines, the employees of Fieldcrest Mills, the congregations of St. Peter's and St. Gabriel's Catholic churches, the students and faculties of A.G. Cox and W.H. Robinson schools and many friends and readers of Hotline they do not even know.

Rightists Set Goal Of Unity

By JOE FRAZIER

Associated Press Writer

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The five rightist parties leading in El Salvador's election declared today they will aim for a "government of national unity, with an eye to installing a regime of concord and of peace."

In a manifesto published in local newspapers, they specified that the parties will maintain their own ideological positions, apparently indicating a coalition has yet to be made solid.

The manifesto also said the large turnout for Sunday's elections rejected communism and "communitarianism" — a label the right has often placed on the land reforms sponsored by President Jose Napoleon Duarte's centrist Christian Democrats. The reforms rely on redistribution of land in cooperatives, rather than as private plots.

The manifesto praised citizens for participating in the elections and the armed forces for "complying with its word of honor" to guarantee free elections while preserving the public order.

It interpreted the election turnout as a "resounding rejection of violence and adoption of the democratic electoral faith as the first collective step for the solution of our serious problems."

The rightists earlier had invited the Christian Democrats to join them in a unity government. But leaders of the biggest rightist faction said Duarte could not participate.

The overture to the junta chief's party, which was leading in the election returns with just over 40 percent of the votes cast, came as the army for the second day battled leftist guerrillas for control of Usulután, the country's fourth largest city.

Christian Democrats greeted the rightist proposal with caution. One party leader, Guillermo Guevara, said the party was still discussing the possibility of a coalition with Democratic Action, the most moderate of the right-wing parties.

Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, former mayor of San Salvador and the No. 2 man to Duarte in the party, said any alliance or unity government would have to be widely discussed.

Rey Prendes said the Christian Democrats do not want to share power with ARENA, the ultra-rightist Republican Nationalist Alliance led by retired Maj. Robert d'Aubuisson, which was running second in the election returns. He added that peasants' unions and other workers' groups were "very worried" about how a rightist-led government might treat them.

Duarte, interviewed Monday night by ABC's Good Morning America, said a rightist government "could also change certain laws, especially on the reforms we make, they could go back on the reforms ... This is a real threat. This is what I told the people and this is the reason why the people went out and vote, they wanted to stop that, to stop it by voting."

D'Aubuisson, who is accused of links with right-wing terrorists, said his party would "lead and control" any unity government.

$1 Million For Traffic Victim

The Rev. and Mrs. Chester Phillips, parents of the late Cindy Phillips Joyner, have been awarded $1,055,213 in compensation for her traffic accident death and their attorney may turn to the N.C. General Assembly to collect the compensation. The defendant is an inmate in the state prison system and has no assets.

Mrs. Joyner was 30 and a Greenville resident at the time of her death Oct. 4, 1978, and her parents are former Greenville residents. She was on the job as a representative of the Levi Corp. when she was killed in an accident near Boone. She previously had taught at Greenville Christian Academy and Ayden Middle School and had made television commercials in this area. Her father is the former pastor of Grace Free Will Baptist Church here and her mother, Dorothy Phillips, is a former Rose High and Farmville High School teacher. They now live in Johnson City, Tenn.

The parents' attorney, Elkin attorney Franklin Smith, contends that inmate Lancey Augustus Pittman, 46, was acting as an agent of the state and that the state should be responsible for his actions. He has been imprisoned since 1968 when he was sentenced to life for murder. No criminal charges were filed against him as a result of the accident.

Court testimony showed that the state-owned 2½-ton truck driven by Pittman, going west, ran off the right side of U.S. 421 about 1.5 miles east of Boone at a point where recent repaving had raised the highway several inches above the shoulder. After traveling 75 to 100 feet on the shoulder, Pittman steered the truck back onto the road, lost control and hit Mrs. Joyner's oncoming car. The only occupant of the car, she apparently died instantly of head injuries, Watauga County Medical Examiner Evan Ashby said.

CD Plans Include Evacuation

WASHINGTON (AP) — A major revamping of the nation's civil defense program — including a plan to evacuate millions of Americans from high-risk areas if nuclear war seems imminent — has been approved by President Reagan, a government spokesman says.

The $4.2 billion, seven-year project, announced Monday by Federal Emergency Management Agency spokesman James Holton, is designed to double the number of citizens who would survive a nuclear holocaust. It is estimated now that about 40 percent of the population would survive, he said, making the goal an 80 percent survival rate.

Holton said "high-risk areas" include 61 likely targets such as bomber bases, missile fields and nuclear submarine ports, and 319 cities, which basically are all those with populations of at least 50,000.

The new plans are based on a government determination that a surprise attack is not as probable as one that would have been signalled in advance by "a period of heightened international tension" with the Soviets, Holton said.

The evacuation plan would have at least a week's notice to achieve the massive relocation from the high-risk sites to an unspecified number of "host areas," he said.

The current state of the civil defense programs "is not very good and hasn't been since the late 1960s when it was put on the back burner," said Holton, whose agency will have the responsibility for developing the new civil defense plans under the National Security Decision Directive signed by Reagan.

Reagan had previously announced plans to update civil defense and his budget for fiscal 1983 calls for spending $252.3 million for the programs, almost double the current $133.3 million.

Critics have said that such an improvement could be considered provocative by the Soviets or falsely reassuring to Americans, but administration officials respond that they are simply preparing for any eventualities.

Reagan's directive says that among the goals of the civil defense program would be to "provide for survival of a substantial portion of the U.S. population in the event of nuclear attack" and to "provide an improved ability to deal with natural disasters and other large-scale domestic emergencies."

Most of the early work will be drawing up various federal, state and local plans involving such things as evacuation and shelter, said Holton.

"We don't see any great crisis now," he said, "but basically, we're just trying to prepare ourselves. The nation has effectively been without a good (civil defense plan) for the past 15 years or so."

After planning, purchases of equipment such as communications gear will be made, he explained. No large-scale purchases of food are planned, which was one of the elements of the nation's early civil defense plans. "We might ask people to take food with them," said Holton.

WWII Vets Reunited After 38 Years Apart

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer
Albert R. Smith of Greenville and two World War II buddies, one originally from Pitt County, recently were reunited after 38 years and spent a day together reminiscing.

Smith, who works in the East Carolina University Maintenance Department and manages Oakmont Square Apartments here, read in a recent issue of The Daily Reflector that Bertha Mills Scott of Gardnerville, mother of his old friend, Jimmy Scott of Salem, Ore., had died. He called the family and learned that Scott was coming home for the funeral.

The two men saw each other at the family visitation the next evening and made plans to be together the following Wednesday and to go to Kinston and spend the day with Herman McArthur.

The three friends had last been together on June 6, 1944, during the thick of battle north of Rome. McArthur was taken away very seriously injured that day and is still classified 100 percent disabled. Smith was taken off the battlefield just south of Bologna, Italy, in early December of the same year because of severely infected sores. Scott escaped injury and remained in Europe till the war ended.

They were three of about 500 North Carolinians in the 5th Army's 91st Division, which served in North Africa and Italy. They met on the train going from Fort Bragg to Camp White near Medford, Ore. early in the war. While they were stationed at Camp Adair near Salem, Ore., Scott met and married his wife. Smith and McArthur both had left wives at home in North Carolina and saw them only briefly on their way from Oregon to North Africa.

All three are still married to the same women. Smith, long a railroad man before settling in Greenville 16 years ago, and his wife, Ruth, have one daughter, Kay Swope, and two granddaughters, Dawn and Mary Kathryn, all of whom live here.

Scott has spent all the years since the war working for Sears, Roebuck in Salem, Ore., where he manages the store's mechanical repair shop. He has two sons and several grandchildren. McArthur, a tree farmer originally from Comfort in Jones County, now lives in Kinston and has two sons.

"That reunion was wonderful," Smith said. "We all agree we have had good lives and are so fortunate to be alive. The loss of men in our division was something like 530 percent — lots replaced and lots of those killed and wounded. Very, very few of the original men in the division survived and the three of us were among them. None of us have ever taken the lives we came back to for granted."

Finalist As A Scholar

Jeffrey T. Prescott, a senior at Rose High School, is one of the 1,000 young American students chosen to become a finalist in the Presidential Scholars program from among more than three million seniors to graduate this year.

Jeffrey, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Eugene Prescott, has been awarded a certificate by the President's Commission on Presidential Scholars. The selection of the new Presidential Scholars will be made in April by the members of the commission.

Finalists who become Presidential Scholars will be invited to Washington, D.C., where they will be honored by their elected representatives, by educators and by others in public life.

Selection is based on numerous factors in addition to academic excellence, factors such as achievement in the visual and performing arts and creative writing; demonstrated leadership ability; contribution of energy and creativity to school and community, and achievement in the sciences and other fields of interest.

No Tickets Left

Scott Parker, manager of the ECU Playhouse, has announced that all tickets to the upcoming production of "Show Boat" have been sold.

The musical, chosen to inaugurate the newly renovated and expanded theater complex on campus, opens Thursday with six performances scheduled on April 1-3, 5, 7-8.

Plan Market New Viral Drug

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK — Burroughs Wellcome Co. announced today that it has received approval to market a new antiviral drug, Zovirax, for the treatment of genital herpes.

Company officials, at an afternoon press conference at the firm's research facilities here, said the drug was discovered by company scientists in 1974 and has been under development since that time.

Zovirax will be manufactured at Burroughs Wellcome's manufacturing facility in Greenville.

The drug is available for management of the initial infection of genital herpes (herpes simplex) virus, BW said. It will also be used against localized herpes simplex infections of the skin in immunocompromised patients. The natural defenses of these patients are impaired and are unable to control the spread of herpes infections.

Genital herpes is a sexually transmitted disease marked by painful, recurring sores in the genital area. It has reached epidemic proportions in the United States and may affect from 15 million to 20 million people, the company said. Another form of herpes simplex virus causes cold sores (fever blisters) and may affect as many as 25 million in the United States. These viruses belong to a family of five herpes viruses that cause a number of diseases, it was pointed out, including chicken pox, shingles and mononucleosis.

Burroughs Wellcome said that studies show Zovirax ointment can speed healing and in some cases reduce the pain of initial lesions. Zovirax also reduces the length of time that the live virus is present in herpes sores.

The ointment is the first formulation to be marketed and Burroughs Wellcome said it hopes to have a second formulation, an intravenous injection, available soon. Several other forms of the drug, including an oral capsule, are under development.

The company said the drug will be available by prescription in about 30 days.

Grimesland Postmaster Ann Hudson said Stanley was "a true asset to our service." She presented him a special achievement award from the Grimesland Post Office and U.S. Postal Service. He has been a postal worker in Washington, Pantego and Grimesland.

"Stanley has a total of 32 years of federal service."

Greenville's solar fraction for Monday was 88. The measurement, made by the department of physics at East Carolina University, indicates that a solar hot water heater could have furnished 88 percent of the heater's hot water.

Fine Line Between Toys For Fathers, Mothers, Children

By JEANNE LESEM
UPI Family Editor
The line between adults' and children's toys continues to blur.

"We're really not kidding anybody," one industry executive said at the 79th annual trade show of the Toy Manufacturers Association. "We're going after fathers as well as sons. Market research shows even mothers and daughters are interested."

John Brady was talking about one of the classic toys of all time — Lionel trains. He said consumer response cards are packed with each set to keep up with trends. The company often follows up with questionnaires and telephone surveys.

"Collectors want the best things ever made by Lionel," Brady added. "Unfortunately, they cost a fortune. We're going back toward the mass market, with sets that sell for $35 to $40."

Brady said the Chapter 11 reorganization announced recently by the Lionel Corp. will not affect the toy train business. He said Fundamentals, of Mt. Clemens, Mich., has been making the trains since 1969 under a royalty arrangement with the original company. Although classics continue to sell well, the toys that got the most attention at the 1982 trade show in New York City were licensed characters — from television, the movies, comic strips and cartoons.

The growing popularity of licensed characters is a key industry trend, according to a recent article in Playthings, a trade magazine.

Among new licensed characters from Effanbee are Bobsey Twins and Mae West dolls, the latter in the company's limited edition Legend series that also includes John Wayne.

The 1981 Wayne character doll was 17 inches tall and showed the late actor as an older man with a lined face.

This year's Wayne is an inch taller, looks about 15 to 20 years younger and is dressed in a cavalry officer's uniform.

"I guess when you get older you shrink," said Arthur Keller, the manufacturer's vice president for sales.

LJN Toys showed a Brooke Shields fashion doll.

The Knickerbocker Toy Co., Inc., is readying a promotion blitz for Annie dolls to coincide with the June opening of the movie based on the hit Broadway play, "Annie," which in turn is based on the comic strip, Little Orphan Annie.

A Chicago manufacturer, Arrow Industries, displayed an Annie Christmas ornament kit and Annie leather set kits.

An Allendale, N.J., manufacturer, Bandai, introduced a device for making Annie lapel buttons or pendants.

Binney and Smith Inc., of Easton, Pa., is putting Annie's image on some Crayola brand products, including a coloring book and T-shirt transfers.

Dukes of Hazzard characters and vehicles were everywhere.

Snoopy and his sister, Belle, ditto.

The House of Nisbet, a Winscombe, England, manufacturer, showed a Princess Diana doll in two different outfits — her turquoise engagement gown and a wedding gown that was not a copy of the one she actually wore. The company catalogue promises a Special Limited Edition Signature Set of 5,000 to commemorate the birth of the royal baby later this year.

The Nisbet dolls, like the Mae West, are for adult collectors, not playthings for little girls.

The women's movement has contributed to the doll collecting trend, said Mary Moline, a Greensboro, Pa., manufacturer of Norman Rockwell character dolls.

"Until women were liberated they didn't want to tell people they still played with dolls," Ms. Moline said.

"I first came to this show three years ago with a styrofoam model in my briefcase. We sold $50,000 worth the first year — before we had a doll made. We sold $1 million (wholesale) in 1980."

Ms. Moline also writes books about characters from the late Norman Rockwell's paintings, magazine covers and illustrations and publishes them herself through her Rumbleseat Press, Inc.

New dolls for little girls, aged 7 and up, included Hasbro's Fashions by Me. The three-dimensional, 13-inch mannequins come with paper patterns and fabrics. A tool shaped like a nail file with a rounded tip is used to drape and tuck fabric into the dolls' grooved sides to create a seamed look without sewing. Each doll comes with enough fabric for 10 different outfits. They are expected to be in stores by early summer.

Dollhouses are also popular collectibles for adults — some with prices that would bankrupt a little girl's piggy bank.

Fundimensions showed a six-room, two-story electronic dollhouse with seven sounds: a doorbell chime, a telephone ringing, a thunderstorm, crickets chirping, birds singing, a clock ticking and a fire crackling in the fireplace.

The unfurnished house with one occupant — a girl doll named Lori — is expected to retail in the $100-$110 range when it appears in stores around July this year, Brady said.

If you add Lori's parents, pets and all the accessories currently available, the price probably doubles, he said.

The age of electronics has caught up with another classic, the Erector Set.

Modular units that operate by remote control have been added to the classic steel girder construction. Four sets of snap-together parts can be used to build such things as a radar tracking station and a lunar vehicle, said Robert Frank, product manager for Gabriel Industries.

Retail prices are expected to range from about $15 to $60, with more than one set required for some of the larger designs. They are expected to be in retail stores by June.

Another snap-together toy was designed by sculptor Ross Miller. His Snapazoo consists of flat velour shapes for making real and imaginary animals. The toys come in three sizes and retail in the $6-$10 range, said J.A. Sapiaenza, president of Pro-Creations, Inc., of Brookline, Mass.

Other new toys included airlines pilot Bruce Byers' Chairplane, the Rudnick brothers' Grow-a-Frog kits and the Original Boob Cube, a spoof of Rubik's Cube, by A Nice Cube Company, of Southbury, Conn.

D.J. Arneson, aka company founder Marvin Boob, is described by his distributor as "a reclusive Bulgarian brick designer who spent years working on the answer to the question, 'What do you give to someone who can stare a Simple Solution in the face for hours and miss it every time.'"

Actually, Arneson is the articulate author of such books as "The Preppy Cookbook" and "The Original Preppy Jokebook" (Dell paperbacks).

"The cube is very complex," he said. "It has seven moves."

Byers' plastic chairs for children are a scaled down version of a waterbed frame with an airplane motif he built a few years ago. Both national and regional airlines are represented, as well as Air Force One. A panel-tray table is optional.

Paul and Kenneth Rudnick, of Farmingdale, N.Y., showed live, transparent tadpoles in small plastic containers. Each comes with enough liquid food in a dropper bottle to nourish the tadpole for the six weeks it takes to become a one-inch-long frog. A year's supply of frog food pellets costs $2, said Paul Rudnick.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

A couple of years ago, advertisers took a good look at their mail campaigns and realized most of their correspondence was going from mailbox to trash without ever leaving the curb.

So they personalized it. Did it work?

You naive little fool, you. Do you honestly think I could toss a letter that began, "Dear Erma: You and Bill may just have won $100,000 in our annual Carpet Sweepstakes. Why don't you fill out the enclosed card and I will call on you to talk about your carpet needs and the over 100 prizes you may have won? Signed, Bonnie Sparkle."

It was years before I dared to believe that Bonnie was a two-ton computer programmed to read the phone book.

Ms. Madge Heit of Broomfield, Minn., also got a little suspicious. She wrote recently that she received a "personal" letter from the publishers of a rather exclusive fashion magazine.

It began, "Dear Ms. Heit:

with .580 percent; tied for second were Mr. and Mrs. Wendell Smiley with Mrs. Barry Powers and Mrs. Pat Conner.

East-West: Mrs. Sol Schechter and Mrs. Max Chused with .625 percent; Mrs. Wiley Corbett and Mrs. George Martin, second; Mrs. W.R. Harris and Dave Proctor, third.

Our compliments for being one of the best-dressed people in Broomfield! For turning your place into a home that sizzles with decorating excitement. For giving parties that are the talk of the whole state of Minnesota. For getting the fun out of the fashionable living you do."

Well, the first thing Ms. Heit did was to check the envelope to see if she had opened someone else's mail by mistake.

"Imagine for a moment," she said, "that I live in a town of 600 people (mostly farmers) and you'll appreciate how thrilled I was to find that I am one of the best-dressed people there."

"My decorating that 'sizzles with excitement' must mean the roller skates in the living room and the wet beach towels on the organ."

"My 'parties' consist of popcorn and punch served to very high-class 15- and 11-year-olds. These are the 'talk of the whole state of Minnesota?' I had no idea their music was so loud."

The kicker is that Ms. Heit is only home on weekends. "I have a useless housekeeper and the kids act like animals all week," she said. "I find the whole thing insulting." I don't know, Madge. With

Pilot Quiz Distributed

The Pilot Club of Greenville held its business meeting at the Ramada Inn. The program was prepared by the Internal Affairs Committee headed by Margaret Nelson. She distributed a quiz concerning Pilot.

Ann Heffelfinger and Dot Johnson presented general information about Pilot, the by-laws and qualifications for membership. Irene Pre-witt was installed as secretary for the remainder of the year and next year.

Vice President Mary Cochran conducted the meeting. The club will have a bake sale in front of Overton's Super Market Saturday beginning at 9 a.m. On April 14 the club will host a smorgasbord at the American Legion Building. The proceeds from the smorgasbord will go toward a special project, to purchase a part for a computer through the Adopt-A-School program.

Problems With Thumb-Sucking

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Tell "Going Crazy" with the thumb-sucking children not to let it bother her.

I have five children, and they were all thumb-suckers. When my oldest baby started sucking his thumb a lot, I asked my doctor what to do about it. He recommended that I paint the baby's thumb with some bitter-tasting medicine, which I immediately picked up at the drugstore. While painting my baby's thumb with that stuff, I accidentally spilled a few drops on my skirt, and would you believe it not only ate a hole in my skirt, it ate a hole in my slip, too!

I threw it out and let my kids suck their thumbs to their hearts' content. All five stopped by the time they went to school and they all have beautiful mouths.

NORTH DAKOTA NANA

DEAR ABBY: I have two children. The first one was a thumb-sucker. It didn't bother me much, but it seemed to bother a lot of other people, so I used every remedy I heard of to get her to stop. It became a real battle, and I lost. That child sucked her thumb every chance she got. She'd come home from school, hide in a closet or behind the sofa and suck her thumb. I finally gave up.

The next child was also a thumb-sucker, but I made up my mind to ignore it. I don't know whether my attitude about thumb-sucking made the difference in their personalities or not, but the second child is much more loving and even-tempered.

MRS. C.

DEAR ABBY: A psychoanalyst once told my husband that most habitual smokers, gum-chewers and compulsive overeaters were probably thumb-suckers as children. He said that the urge to put things in their mouths dies hard. My husband was a heavy smoker (before he quit), and his mother confirmed the fact that he sucked his thumb until he was nearly 10. It didn't bother his teeth, but the thumb on his left hand is flat.

LEHIGH, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: I am 78, and I sucked my thumb even after I started school. The other kids made fun of me, so I put my head on my arm and went to sleep sucking my thumb. I went home crying that day and asked my father to help me. That night before going to bed, he wrapped my thumb with black bicycle tape. The next morning I woke up sucking the other thumb. That night my father taped both thumbs before I went to bed. That did the trick!

MRS. G.B.

DEAR ABBY: A child psychologist once told me that children suck their thumbs instinctively to comfort themselves when they are tired, bored, lonely or sleepy. Trying to prevent a youngster from engaging in this natural, harmless activity by physical force or by shaming him can do emotional damage. Some children develop an overbite from constant thumb-sucking, but it's easier to fix a child's teeth than his emotions.

I agree with you, Abby. Don't nag a thumb-sucker, but do make sure an orthodontist watches his teeth and mouth development carefully. Some orthodontists make special appliances to prevent and correct malformation of the mouth.

DENTAL ASSISTANT

DEAR ABBY: Our son sucked his thumb until he was 9. While growing up he needed a lot of orthodontia. His brother, who was three years younger, never sucked his thumb and needed the exact same correction! Our thumb-sucker is now 18. He's well-adjusted, happy, popular, a top student and a fine athlete. His kid brother, I'm sorry to say, is sullen, troubled and has a lot of problems.

Real Evidence Needed

Secretary of State Alexander Haig is not alone in saying the United States has "overwhelming and irrefutable evidence" that Marxist guerrillas in El Salvador are under the "command and control" of outside forces.

And from time to time a report is issued in Washington that describes in some detail those ties and how they operate.

This is not "evidence." No judge, no jury can accept it as such.

It suggests U.S. Intelligence agencies know what they are talking about, but cannot produce "proof" before the American jury for fear of losing their source of information. The dilemma is a difficult one.

Yet, if the "jury" and the world is to be convinced dirty work is afoot, the proof must be laid out on the table for all to see.

Until that is done, Washington invites doubt, criticism and damaging propaganda.

President Roosevelt knew the Japanese secret code was broken, and it was a well kept secret that paid dividends.

President Kennedy knew what he was doing when he laid out U-2 photographs of missile installations in Cuba. They left no room for doubt. He could act.

President Reagan, Secretary Haig and others should produce real evidence or clam up until they can go public.

HOW LONG---?

By JAMES KILPATRICK

A Spring Deliveryman

SCRABBLE, Va. — This has been a long cold winter in the Blue Ridge mountains. We've had more snow and ice than anyone truly had any use for, and lately we've had a problem with mud. As a consequence, my wife, who generally is the soul of sunny good humor, was a bit testy when she finally got Mr. Springmaker on the phone.

"Well," she said, putting a little topspin on the word, "it's about time you got back to Rappahannock County."

Mr. Springmaker, you should understand, comes to our country store about this time every year. He could be anywhere from 40 to 60 years old — it's hard to tell — a tall, cool fellow with a twinkle in his eye. We've been ordering from him since 1966, and I'll say this for him: He delivers first-class merchandise.

After a few minutes of palaver, Southern style, in which he asked about the grandchildren and she inquired about his recent sales trip through the Carolinas, they got down to business.

"I'd like five consecutive 60-degree days," she said, reading from a list she'd made out, "but I'll take four 65s if you have them."

"If you'll wait a couple of weeks," said Mr. Springmaker. "I can give you half a dozen."

"Now," she said, "I want them now. Right now! We're tired of waiting."

Mr. Springmaker, you could tell, was writing all this down. "How would you like the wind?" he asked. "I have some eight-mile April breezes, top of the line." said my wife. "But Douglas wants to fly a kite after school, so let me have a couple of 15-knot afternoons along with four want winddrops and snowflakes and wood violets and Virginia bluebells." "You're going too fast for me," said Mr. Springmaker. "As soon as you ship the bluebells, I want trillium, and then I want hyacinths with hats like the guards at Buckingham Palace, Beefeater tulips and acornites in green berets. I want the pear and peach and apple trees in blossom."

"Hold on," said Mr. Springmaker. "You know you can't have apple blossoms until late April. Or dogwood either. I'll send them when I send the azaleas — the ones that look like pink and white butterflies on the hillside. Anything else?"

"Smells," said the wife. "Send me the smell of warm earth when I turn over the vegetable plots. Send me the smell of April grass. Send me your usual sounds — piccolo peepers and two frogs on the bass viols. Send me the flutter of nesting birds, robins on the lawn, phoebes in the barn, bluebirds along the fence row. Send me one hawk, hang gliding off of Red Oak Mountain."

"You've got him," said Mr. Springmaker. "One more thing," she said. "Let me have a couple of rabbitts to fuss about, one groundhog for the same reason, and no more than four chipmunks."

"OK on the groundhog," said Mr. Springmaker, "and OK on the chips, but, lady, there's no such thing as two rabbits."

"Do your best," my wife said firmly. She hung up, put on a jacket and walked down to the rock garden. Behold: snowdrops and bluebells. "Springmaker," she said to herself, "you never let me down."

deep-blue skies and a dozen cumulus clouds that look like sailing ships."

"Gotcha," said Mr. Springmaker. "Any rain?" My wife paused. We've had about all the rain that White Walnut Run can tolerate just now. "Let's hold it to four soft showers and one good thunderstorm," she said; "but space them two days apart and stop them by six in the morning."

"Right on," said Mr. Springmaker. "I want the forsythia to burst into bloom," said my wife. "I want fountains of forsythia, great looping garlands of forsythia, all golden yellow."

"That's the only color it comes in," said Mr. Springmaker. "Don't interrupt," she said. "I want rebud in the same soft rose we've had before. I want a hundred daffodils, half white, half gold, but don't send me a marching band. Scatter them over the hillside that runs down to the brook. I want pansies and poppies. I

Looking For Spokesman

By ROBLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
WASHINGTON — Worried conservative Republicans in and out of the White House are pushing journalist Pat Buchanan to be principal press spokesman for the administration to provide a more certain trumpet for Ronald Reagan's views.

Buchanan would give up his nationally-syndicated column and network radio program to take that job — but only if guaranteed access to the president. However, there is no sign that James Baker, White House chief of staff, is any more interested in recruiting the strong-minded Buchanan in today's crisis atmosphere than he was during the honeymoon a year ago.

On the contrary, White House staffers were uneasy when they learned Buchanan would lunch with the president in the Oval Office March 19 with nobody else present. Their lunchtime conversation showed that Reagan has more in common philosophically with Buchanan than his senior aides, but the idea of ex-Nixon speechwriter Buchanan returning to the White House was not mentioned.

Nuke 'Freeze' Danger
Deepening concern over the mushrooming nuclear freeze movement sweeping Western Europe and spreading throughout the U.S. has led Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Perle to help his former boss, Democratic senator Henry M. Jackson, draft a pro-freeze resolution carefully tied to "equal" nuclear armaments in both West and East.

The strategy of defense-oriented senators of both parties is to move for quick congressional passage of a joint congressional resolution endorsing Jackson's "freeze," but only under the all-important "equality" concept. President Reagan's signature would follow. Jackson, after getting Perle's help, has lined up Senate heavy artillery behind his resolution, including the two floor leaders, Democrat Robert Byrd and Republican Howard Baker.

The Jackson resolution now has more support than the pro-freeze proposal by Democratic senator Edward M. Kennedy and Republican senator Mark Hatfield, liberals long identified with arms control. The concern over the sweeping pro-freeze movement is that it could become powerful enough to affect U.S. strategic arms programs, giving the Soviet Union a free ride for the foreseeable future.

Reagan's Koch Bloop
White House aides can explain President Reagan's essentially inexplicable bloop "endorsing" Democratic mayor Ed Koch for governor of New York only in these terms: He apparently did not read a new memo while remembering an old one.

The new memo was put in the president's briefing book for his March 23 visit to New York City. It detailed the state's political situation, making clear that a heated race for governor was shaping up in the fall with Democrat Koch and Republican Lewis Lehman leading for the major party.

nominations. "I'll bet the president never got around to reading that," one aide confided. There was no oral briefing of Reagan describing how Koch's praise of him and turned to criticism.

So, when asked at a New York Post interview whether Koch would make a good governor, Reagan replied in words reminiscent of an out-of-date memo written for the White House last fall. That memo, prepared by Republican political consultant Roger Stone, justified Koch's nomination by Republicans as well as Democrats for 1981 reelection as mayor.

CIA's Senate Secrets
An unusual closed-door Senate session is being pushed by Sen. John Glenn of Ohio, a Democratic presidential hopeful, and Sen. Paul Laxalt of Nevada, President Reagan's closest friend in the Senate, as a top-secret briefing on the worldwide Soviet military threat.

The briefer would be the Defense Intelligence Agency's John Hughes, whose standard two-hour briefing on the Soviet threat has frightened the few senators who have heard it.

Glenn and Laxalt both fear that in its budget-cutting mood, Congress might slash away too deeply at defense. But if the entire Senate understands the gravity of the threat, they and other backers of the closed-door briefing — including Republican senator Steve Symms of Idaho and Democratic senator David Boren of Oklahoma — are convinced that their colleagues will think twice before voting big Pentagon budget cuts.

Bye Barber?
Rep. Barber Conable, one of the most respected and persuasive House members as senior Republican on the tax-writing ways and means committee, will not seek a 10th term this year if the forthcoming court redistricting of New York carves him out a basically new upstate district.

Conable is not making any public comments. But near his 60th birthday in November, he has no desire to learn a wholly new district (whether or not that district puts him into a confrontation with Rep. Jack Kemp).

Conable, who considers himself more a legislator than a politician, has not been happy lately anyway. The 2-to-1 Democratic majority on ways and means and the partisan style of its chairman, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, combined with President Reagan's rigidity, do not make for the bipartisan compepromising that Conable prefers.

Question Is Unanswered

A few years back bumper stickers in eastern North Carolina proclaimed: "The surgeon general has determined that Joe Califano is dangerous to your health." Those signs popped up as a counter paraphrase of Califano's strong war on cigarette smoking while he was secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Califano is no longer in the federal administration, but he says his stance on smoking hasn't changed. But he does now have what loosely could be interpreted as kind words for tobacco farmers.

Speaking at Wake Forest University, Califano says he doesn't oppose the price support program for tobacco and does not believe farmers should suffer because of government-backed warfare on smoking.

That's kind to the ears, but Califano — as all before and after him — left unanswered the major question facing eastern North Carolina: where will the farmer turn for a major money crop when tobacco is gone? For tobacco growers, Califano's fervent attacks while he was in office may yet be the beginning of the end.

Research Goes On

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — While it may be years before results are commonly available, there is much research and thought currently being given to ways in which hazardous waste can be used instead of disposed of.

There are already some examples. The State of North Carolina operates an oil recycling plant near Raleigh where used motor oil is refined to produce new motor oil.

In paper and metals industries, recycling has become the byword.

But in the future, planners are talking about using really hazardous stuff — that which can kill and maim, cause cancer and which now causes so much trouble in industries and communities struggle with ways to get rid of it.

Horror stories are numerous, not only so far away as Love Canal, but at the Kernersville water reservoir, along many miles of North Carolina highways where PCBs still languish, and other yet unknown locales.

Recycling can take either of two forms:

- Harmless
- 1. Deadly stuff can be rendered harmless and discarded without concern;
- 2. Materials can be converted for use in other research or industrial applications.

As North Carolina moves into gear with its waste management effort, numerous alternatives are being studied. There is an inventory of hazardous wastes to judge the size of the problem, put labels on the items, and pinpoint current disposal sites and methods.

The state has set up new law to allow government aid in making land available for disposal sites and to help overcome local opposition.

BILL NOBLITT

Research is ongoing to find an acceptable method of burning hazardous wastes quickly, cheaply, and safely.

But the most pressing matter on the state's agenda in waste disposal is recycling.

One approach will be a waste information exchange centrally located so that materials across the state can be identified and tracked, and potential users of another firm's waste can locate a source.

Ultimately, though, planners put their faith in some system of restructuring the molecules of hazardous substances. Such a mind-boggling prospect is not nearly so far-fetched as it may seem.

The time will likely come, say the specialists, when science can produce either from nature or artificially substances which will enter the molecular of materials and alter them by rearranging the molecules, removing certain ones, or adding some.

New Field
Whether microbiology, chemistry, or microelectronics — or maybe each of those fields — hold the key to such a process, the prospects are enormous.

Imagine that a barrel of acid from a metalworks plant could be changed into a barrel of common household cleanser. Or better yet, gasoline.

In the midst of concern with immediate problems — finding and developing disposal sites using presently available technology — state officials will continue to push future technology and provide some incentives to creative thinkers and scientists seeking to invent a better way.

As the state grows in reliance on industrial expansion and as medical

Other Editors Say Too Permissive?

(The Raleigh Times)

How do you spell relief from big government? R-E-A-G-A-N. But that cure may be worse than the disease, if new EPA and IRS compliance methods are any example.

First, RR's appointees relieved industries from the bother of having to verify, via reports to EPA, that indeed they are cleaning up their act on toxic and hazardous waste. Instead, EPA will just run spot checks on 10 percent of the industries that generate these hard-to-handle wastes.

Responsible companies, of course, won't let the change interfere with their cleanup plans. But what about the irresponsible ones, who've been getting away for years with dumping their mess or letting it rust, rot and trickle away into the rest of the environment?

Won't they be encouraged to continue doing just that, when they stand a good chance of getting by with continuing to pollute for as much as nine years before the odds catch up with them?

As punishment should suit the crime, enforcement methods for regulations should suit those regulations' intent. For many bureaucratic purposes a 10 percent spot check is fine.

But for toxic waste, whose poisonous effect is cumulative and often permanent, spot checks are a doubly appropriate technique for making sure industries do what they're supposed to do.

Tax audits are another place the Reaganites are overdoing their relief from burdensome government. In the face of a skyrocketing $87-billion-a-year loss from income-tax fraud and error, the IRS has announced another drop in the likelihood your individual return will be audited. That chance has fallen from 26 per 1,000 in 1975 to an almost-ignorable 1.6 percent this year.

Maybe the Reaganites' premise is that if they want to bring back trust in government, then government first must display more trust in all of us. In governing, as in parenting, that's an admirable principle — as long as it's linked with a promise of strict consequences for violators of the trust.

But in EPA and IRS cases, trust flies over the edge into permissiveness. We all know where that leads.

Stability On The Small Farm

By JOE BIGHAM
Associated Press Writer
STOCKTON, Calif. (AP) —

Contrary to conventional wisdom, it is not small farmers who have trouble surviving but rather middle-size growers dependent entirely on farm income, an economist maintains.

"There's a stability and strength on small farms where they get a substantial share of income from other sources," says J. Patrick Madden, an agricultural economics professor at Pennsylvania State University.

Many of the smallest farmers and-or their spouses hold outside jobs to supplement farm income, he notes.

"In the middle, farmers are trying to earn their entire livelihood from farming. That's tough," Madden says.

He discussed the subject recently at a conference here on family farming.

Madden says statistics show that sales increased in the 1970s for farms with gross sales under $10,000 a year or over $40,000 but decreased every year for farms with incomes of $10,000 to $40,000. Income showed a "sharp increase" for farms with sales over $100,000.

"Evidence supports the idea of the disappearing middle syndrome in U.S. agriculture," Madden says.

He says his ideal would be for farms to have "owner-operators rather than hired managers, self-employed businessmen instead of having decision-making in the hands of large firms."

Madden would prefer "people to be full-time farmers or devoting most of their time to it."

"A lot of people in farming have other jobs and occupations. That can be a nice cushion, but I would like to see it done in such a way as not to cut family farms out. There is competition between part-time and full-time farmers," he says.

He adds that what he calls "hobby" farmers, who make their basic living in other ways, can "distort prices" by paying too much for land or equipment and selling crops at cost because they do not need a profit.

"That undercut the position of those trying to earn a living from farms," he says.

Small farms are not an ideal if they are too small for anyone to earn a living, he warns.

"The Jefferson idea of family farms did not include deprivation," Madden says. "Peasants on the land is not the ideal of this country or any country ... We're not interested in getting a lot of people out there with limited resources but in providing an opportunity to let people get into (a situation) where they make decent earnings."

Madden also says small and medium growers should work toward "quality stewardship of water, soil and air and (consider) toxicity of the materials we use."

But, he adds, "short-term benefits usually prevail." He cites severe soil erosion in many of America's agricultural areas as an example.

He says the ingredients small and medium farmers need to succeed are access to markets, used equipment because most cannot afford new machinery and off-farm income, which Madden calls "a buffer, liquidity and a base for borrowing."

AT OCEAN DUMPING HEARING — New York City Mayor Ed Koch and noted oceanographer Jacques-Yves Cousteau talk with Congressman Walter Jones at a House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee hearing in

Silent On 'Doomsday' Exercise

NEW YORK (AP) — The White House and the participants remain publicly silent about a five-day game of worldwide nuclear war that reportedly involved more than 1,000 civilian and military personnel earlier this month.

Participants signed an agreement not to discuss the game, which included information classified as top-secret, according to one participant who spoke to The Associated Press on condition he not be identified.

The Wall Street Journal, quoting officials who requested anonymity, reported details of the game, code-named "Ivy League," on Friday. It was the first time in 25 years that the command structures and communications systems that would be used in all-out nuclear war were given a complete exercise.

The anonymous officials told the Journal their objective in discussing the game was "to make sure that the other side is aware that we have the capability."

William P. Rogers, former Secretary of State, played the president and Richard Helms, former CIA director, played the vice president while President Reagan and Vice President George Bush watched from the sidelines.

Rogers, now senior partner in the New York City law firm of Rogers & Wells, and Helms, now head of Washington consulting firm Safier Co., were chosen by Reagan for the parts, the Journal said. Rogers and Helms have declined to comment on the exercise.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger, the president's national security adviser, William P. Clark Jr., and other security council members looked on while deputy and under secretaries of cabinet agencies acted as members of the National Security Council, the Journal said.

The Journal gave this account of the game:

The exercise began with assumptions of rising international tension and both the United States and the Soviet Union mobilizing for war. After Soviet attacks on American forces overseas, war was declared.

Then, the game assumed, a U.S. ship was sunk in the North Atlantic and U.S. troops overseas were attacked by troops using chemical warfare. The president ordered a low-level nuclear counterattack and the war escalated.

On the fourth day, the game called for a 5,000-megaton missile attack on the American mainland as an attempt to destroy the federal command structure. The blast killed the "president," who had been directing matters from Washington.

Power then shifted to the "vice president" and later to two unidentified cabinet members who were sent to secret federal facilities in Texas and Massachusetts. Newsweek magazine said Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and Interior Secretary James Watt, playing themselves, were sent to secret federal facilities hundreds of miles from the capital.

The game ended with the president's "successors" setting in motion a retaliatory strike.

The day the game ended, Reagan placed a conference call to all the command centers used during the exercise and told the players: "While we pray to God that we will never have to use the procedures you have tested the past week, the nation is better off for what has been done."

Officials Differ Over Extent Of Cold Losses

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Agriculture officials and growers in different parts of the state agree North Carolina's apple and peach crops were hurt by a weekend freeze, but differ on the extent and effects of the damage.

Howard Waynick, Lincoln County agricultural extension agent, said 100 percent of the apple and peach crops might be lost.

"We feel our peach crop probably is gone," he said. "It's probably the worst thing we've had happen in the past 20 years."

"Our apples were at a stage where only a 30-minute exposure to those temperatures would give us a 90 percent bud kill, so we could expect up to a 100 percent kill on peaches."

But Harley Blackwell, director of the Mountain Horticultural Crops Research Station in Henderson County, said this year's damage isn't expected to be as bad as it was during the devastating freeze of 1955 when the crops were completely wiped out.

"In 1955 we were in bloom, which is the most vulnerable time," said Blackwell. "It was a different situation in that we were further along in the development of the apple and the temperature dropped faster."

In Henderson County, where 60 percent of the state's apples are grown, there were reports of 10-degree temperatures Sunday night, Blackwell said, adding that some areas suffered for as long as 14 hours with temperatures below 20.

Blackwell said an accurate estimate of damage would not be available for about a week.

While the cold was not as severe in the Sandhills of Eastern North Carolina, where most of the state's peaches are grown, some farmers have reported 90 percent losses.

But at the Sandhills Horticultural Crops Research Station, Clarence Black said it was too early to make accurate estimates of damage.

"We did have a severe freeze," he said. "But it takes time for the freeze damage to show up."

Last year North Carolina, the nation's seventh largest apple-producing state, had apple sales totaling more than $24 million. The state's peach crop, the nation's sixth largest, was valued at about $10 million.

If the state's apple and peach farmers lose even half of their crops, supermarket prices could double, said Edmund A. Estes, assistant professor of economics at North Carolina State University.

However, Black said prices were unlikely to be severely affected.

"People won't pay but so much for anything," he said.

36 Years For Burglarizing

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Superior Court Judge Claude Sitton sentenced Terry Jerome Wright to 36 years in prison Monday for his conviction on charges of burglarizing the house of a 71-year-old woman who was killed.

A co-defendant in the case, Michael Edward Fincher, 18, was sentenced to life in prison last week for his conviction on charges of raping and killing Henrietta Wallace.

Wright will be eligible for parole in 18 years.

Possibly Had Heart Attack

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham was in stable condition Monday at Rex Hospital, recovering from what doctors said might have been a light heart attack.

Doctors also said there is a possibility Graham suffered slight heart damage.

Graham became ill after a luncheon meeting last Wednesday for North Carolina State University alumni and was taken to Rex Hospital.

According to a statement issued by the North Carolina Department of Agriculture, Graham is expected to be kept in the hospital for several more days for rest and observation.

Israeli Arab Protest Mounts

TAIBEH, Israel (AP) — Israeli Arabs went on strike, blocked roads and held protest marches today in memory of six Arabs killed by Israeli gunfire in 1976 while protesting government confiscation of their land.

A hand grenade exploded in a busy Jerusalem intersection, causing no injuries but damaging a car, Israeli army radio said.

The protests came amid persistent clashes in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza Strip, where Palestinian demonstrators lobbed stones, smashed windows and burned tires in the 12th straight day of violence over Israel's firing of three Palestinian mayors it said were too radical. Five Arabs and an Israeli sergeant have been killed in the fighting.

Many shops in the territories were closed, but storekeepers in some towns were forced to reopen after troops broke locks on some doors and threatened to weld others shut, reliable sources said.

Israeli army radio said two soldiers were injured when demonstrators stoned their vehicle at a Palestinian refugee camp outside Jerusalem. In Beit Safafa, south of Jerusalem, troops fired shots in the air to scatter Palestinians who burned tires on railroad tracks. Several protesters were arrested.

In Baqa al-Gharbiya, 31 miles north of Tel Aviv, about 100 Arab youths threw stones at reporters' cars and a bus, smashing windows.

Israeli officials were concerned over the link between Israel's 657,000 Arab citizens and 1.3 million Palestinians in the occupied territories, and have warned that violence will not be tolerated.

Many Arab villages in northern Israel were on strike, and three marches were scheduled for Land Day, celebrated annually on March 30 to commemorate the deaths of six Palestinians protesting government confiscation of Arab land.

Militant Palestinians regard the deaths as the first major anti-Israel uprising in the occupied territories, which Israeli seized in the 1967 Middle East war.

A march in Taibeh, an Arab town 20 miles northeast of Tel Aviv, was peaceful and carefully ordered by monitors wearing armbands.

"We are protesting the expropriation of land in Israel and actions of the government in the West Bank," said Taibeh Mayor Abdel Latif Habib.

Israeli police were stationed outside the town in case violence erupted. About 500 Arabs marched in Taibeh, shouting Palestinian nationalist slogans and gesturing in the V-victory sign.

Tel Aviv Police Chief Arye Ivtsan said his men were instructed to use restraint in handling Israeli Arab protestors, but cautioned: "We are prepared to prevent anyone from disturbing the peace."

N.C. Legislator Questions Use Of Expensive Outside Attorneys

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State Rep. Howard Coble, R-Guilford, says North Carolina is spending too much money on outside attorneys when there are over 110 lawyers on the state payroll.

"It just appears too easy to retain out-of-state counsel every time a thorny problem is encountered," Coble said. "That's what we're paying the Attorney General and staff to do."

But some state officials said getting attorneys from private firms to represent the state can save money.

"We gain more from doing the trial work with our staff lawyers and retaining private attorneys for the title work," said Budget Officer David Hayes.

Deputy Attorney General Jim Wallace, who has helped with legal work concerning the redistricting tangle, agreed.

"You've got to realize that even though we have a lot of attorneys, we've got nearly six million people in this state and their legal needs require a lot of time," he said. "We could have hired more attorneys and then have them sit around for weeks at a time waiting for a crisis. Or, we can handle this as we do."

The state officials contend the expense is justified in cases requiring unusual legal expertise. In other cases, they maintain, the outside consultants cost less than hiring enough full-time lawyers to deal with every crisis.

The state Attorney General's office, with its staff of 112 lawyers, is designated by statute as the official legal counsel for all of North Carolina's varied agencies. But scores of private attorneys handle lawsuits, special projects, real estate purchases and other legal work for the state.

The most prominent example is the $2-million fee paid to a Washington firm to handle the University of North Carolina's desegregation dispute with the U.S. Department of Education.

That was the highest single legal fee the state has ever paid.

Another Washington firm has been authorized to spend up to $50,000 to help the General Assembly win U.S. Justice Department approval of redistricting plans.

"I can see the advantages of having retained D.C. counsel," Coble told the state House of Representatives during the last short legislative session, "but when you consider what we're paying I believe it is a luxurious advantage which we simply cannot afford."

"I guess I'm gun-shy because this comes on the heels of that ridiculous amount the university paid in legal fees," he added.

Helms Critical Of N.C. Work

By The Associated Press
North Carolina's record on handling the food stamp program is one of the worst in the country, says Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C. But a spokesman for Gov. Jim Hunt disagrees.

"As a citizen of North Carolina and as a senator representing the state, this (situation) is totally unacceptable," Helms said Monday. Helms, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, commented in Washington during a hearing he chaired on the reauthorization of the food stamp program.

Brent Hackney, Hunt's deputy press secretary, said it was "a significant overstatement" to call North Carolina one of the worst states in handling food stamps.

Hackney, contacted in Raleigh, added that Hunt is concerned about the errors in the program and has taken steps to tighten state and county administration.

North Carolina had a 15.8 percent error rate in issuing food stamps during a six-month period ending last March, compared with a national average of 13.3 percent, according to U.S. General Accounting Office report.

Only 10 states had a higher error rate than North Carolina, a GAO spokesman said.

In 5.9 percent of the cases the state underpaid food stamp recipients, and in 9.86 percent of the cases the state overpaid recipients, according to the GAO report, which was presented Monday to the Senate Agriculture Committee.

North Carolina's record of overpayment of food stamp benefits was less than the national average of 10.6 percent, the GAO said.

Helms said the only way to induce officials in North Carolina and others states to become more concerned about the "extravagant waste of taxpayers' money" was to require states to repay overpayments to the federal treasury.

The Reagan administration has proposed that starting next year states be required to reimburse the federal government for overpayments above a 2 percent error rate.

Helms hailed the administration's proposal as a "progressive step" but said he believes states should begin repaying all errors immediately.

Trial Slated Begin Today

The trial of Abraham Pruett on embezzlement charges and Keith Gardner on charges of receiving stolen goods was scheduled to begin today in Pitt County Superior Court.

Pruett, former manager of Clark's Department Store here, and Gardner, who worked part-time as a security officer at the store, were charged with the alleged violations in December, following an investigation by the Loss Prevention Division of Cook United, Inc., the parent company of the Clark's store.

Gardner, an Ayden police officer, was suspended pending the outcome of the case.

Pruett was charged with embezzlement for allegedly diverting 30 floor fans to his own use, while Gardner was charged with receiving the fans, valued at $1,490, which he allegedly knew to be stolen.

Traffic Victim...

Shadbolt said Pittman was driving the truck as part of a special work detail at the Watauga Prison Unit, where he has an honor-grade inmate.

Superior Court Judge Anthony Brannon found Pittman at fault, stating there was "an abundance of evidence for ordinary negligence" by Pittman. The amount judged due the Phillipps is $1 million for "loss of society, companionship, comfort, kindly ofers and advice" from their daughter; $50,000 for "loss of services, protection, care and assistance" from her, and $5,213 for the bill for her funeral.

There is precedent for families' receiving compensation from the state through special legislation, although claims against the state normally are made through the N.C. Industrial Commission, which decides the amount - if any - of damages that should be paid when the state is a party to an accident. The N.C. General Assembly twice has granted special funds to help accident victims. In 1975 four people were killed and 15 were injured in the collapse of the Siloam Bridge in Surry County and the state paid $151,000. And in 1978, a Yancey County girl was hurt critically in a school bus accident and the state gave her family $70,000.

If the Phillipps were to collect the full amount, retired Superior Judge Hamilton Hobgood says he believes it could very well be the largest judgment in an accident case in the state's history. "I can't remember one larger," he said. "I know we have had some other cases - like medical malpractice suits - that have been larger."

Big Star Plans To Close Stores

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) - The Grand Union Co. announced today plans to close its Norfolk division, which operates Big Star supermarkets in Virginia and parts of Maryland and North Carolina.

Included in the closure plans are 37 of the division's 48 supermarkets, its bakery, office and distribution center in Norfolk.

(The manager of the company's Big Star store in Greenville, Terry Fields, said today that "as far as I know there are no plans to close" the Pitt Plaza facility.

Fields said the Greenville store is in the firm's Raleigh Division and Grand Union's current plans only affect facilities in the Norfolk segment.)

Unaffected by the closing plans will be 11 Big Star supermarkets in the Richmond and Petersburg areas.

Some 1,200 people will lose their jobs because of the closings, said Don Vaillancourt, vice president for communications of the Elmwood, N.J.-based Grand Union.

Patrick A. Deo, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Grand Union, said "We regret that we must take this action, but it has been precipitated by a number of major factors."

Deo said operating results of the Norfolk division had been unsatisfactory for a number of years despite attempts by the company to improve the division's performance.

In addition, he said, high labor rates as a result of store-labor contracts presented a major obstacle in the company's ability to compete against other food retailers whose employees were not union members.

The company said it plans to cease operations in its Norfolk bakery in early April, to be followed by the closing of the 37 affected stores by the end of April.

The 500,000-square-foot Norfolk distribution center will be closed in early May and all Norfolk offices will cease operations by the end of May.

The company said its eastern region headquarters in Norfolk, which had previously handled merchandising, buying, accounting and data processing functions for its Washington and Norfolk divisions, will be moved to Grand Union's major distribution center in Landover, Md., by June 1.

All employees will receive severance benefits based upon their length of service with the company as well as all accrued benefits, Vaillancourt said.

Effective immediately, all stores to be closed will go on a new operating schedule of 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. six days a week. They will be all closed on Sundays.

A 20 percent inventory reduction sale will begin in all stores Wednesday.

Grand Union acquired the Tidewater Virginia stores as part of a $133 million merger in 1978 with Atlanta-based Colonial Stores Inc.

The merger produced an 852-store chain along the East Coast which reported sales of $3.5 billion in its latest fiscal year, ended last April. Its most recent earnings report, for the third quarter ended Jan. 2, reported sales of $939.79 million and profits of $6.95 million. The sales rose 13.2 percent but net income fell 38.1 percent from the corresponding quarter a year earlier.

The company has been told by a Federal Trade Commission judge to divest itself of its Colonial division within a year, although that opinion is the subject of debate scheduled before the full FTC April 19.

Walesa, 38, catapulted to the top of the Solidarity movement during 1980 shipyard strikes in Gdansk and led the union through 16 stormy months until its suspension by the authorities last December.

He and hundreds of other union activists are among 3,600 people being held in martial law detention camps.

Walesa Is Allowed To See Daughter

WARSAW, Poland (AP) - Interned Solidarity leader Lech Walesa has been allowed by martial law authorities to see his infant daughter for the first time, informed sources said today.

Danuta Walesa took Maria Victoria, born Jan. 27, to see Walesa on Sunday and Monday at a villa near the Warsaw suburb of Otwock, the sources said. The elected leader of the suspended independent union has been in government custody since the Dec. 13 military crackdown.

Mrs. Walesa returned to the Baltic port city of Gdansk Monday to join her other six children, the sources reported.

Other sources described the union chief as "nervous" and "tense" during the visit, but the report could not be verified.

The christening of the baby girl in Gdansk on March 21 drew several thousand people who chanted "Free Walesa." The union chief was not allowed to attend the ceremony despite repeated pleas by Mrs. Walesa to the martial law authorities.

Walesa, 38, catapulted to the top of the Solidarity movement during 1980 shipyard strikes in Gdansk and led the union through 16 stormy months until its suspension by the authorities last December.

He and hundreds of other union activists are among 3,600 people being held in martial law detention camps.

Cites Progress On Student Aid Authorization For N. Carolina

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) - North Carolina has become one of the first states in the nation to receive authorization to administer the second phase of the federal Resource Conservation and Recovery Act.

The authorization allows the state's Solid and Hazardous Waste Management Branch to issue permits to regulate the storage, treatment and incineration of hazardous wastes.

State health officials estimate that about 250 facilities in the state now must apply for hazardous waste permits under Phase II of the act.

O.W. Strickland, head of the state branch, said the authorization "is a tribute to our program here in North Carolina."

Texas was the first state to receive Phase II authorization.

Fire, Explosion 'Suspicious'

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) - An explosion and fire destroyed a massage parlor, mechanics shop and an upholstery shop early Monday.

Firefighters said the blaze was "suspicious."

No one was injured in the explosion, which hurled tin and glass more than 75 feet and twisted steel frames.

It was the second time in eight months an explosion had ripped through the cinderblock and tin structure, near the Metrolina Fairgrounds.

At Long Last—The Title Is Dean's

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A national champion at last, North Carolina basketball Coach Dean Smith can finally say what he thinks about his critics.

"A great writer in Charlotte once said that it was our system that kept us from winning the national championship," Smith says. "It's the most ridiculous comment ever made and I always wanted to say that. We don't have a 'system.' We try to use our talent."

Part of that talent, All-American forward James

Worthy and freshman guard Michael Jordan, teamed up to help the Tar Heels beat Georgetown 63-62 in the NCAA finals Monday night, the closest championship game in 23 years.

Worthy won the duel of dunks with Georgetown's Pat Ewing, scoring a career-high 28 points and winning the Most Outstanding Player award. Jordan scored 16 points, including the game-winning shot with 15 seconds left.

The NCAA championship was the only thing missing from Smith's trophy case in an otherwise brilliant career that includes one of the best records in coaching — 468-145 over 21 years at Chapel Hill — an Olympic gold medal and acknowledgment by peers of his basketball greatness.

Smith had brought North Carolina teams to six previous Final Fours only to end up a loser.

Disappointed in the past, Smith said he would have been doubly disappointed if the Tar Heels hadn't won Monday night.

"We had the best basketball team (in the tournament), I thought," he said. "This was the only year it would have bothered me."

Smith didn't necessarily think he had the best team Monday night, however. "I think we were the lucky team," he said.

The Tar Heels thus certified their No. 1 ranking going into the tournament, the first time that has happened since Kentucky in 1978.

"We were ranked No. 1 in the country in the pre-season and post-season," Smith said. "Everybody shot at us. We took peoples' best shots and found a way to win."

North Carolina proved its worth as No. 1 by winning 13 games at the start of the season, including triumphs over five teams eventually selected for the NCAA playoffs.

Both Kentucky and Virginia were undefeated and ranked No. 2 when the Tar Heels knocked them off.

The Tar Heels dropped from the top spot after a loss to Wake Forest with center Sam Perkins out sick. Their only other loss this season was to Virginia, but they finished with 16 straight victories and a 32-2 record.

Monday night's victory was one of the toughest of all.

Ewing was responsible for that. The 7-foot Georgetown freshman scored 23 points, grabbed a game-high 11 rebounds and blocked two shots. He also was called for goaltending five times, three on Worthy shots early in the first half.

"I was amazed at Pat Ewing," said Smith. "He has not shot that well in tapes that I watched."

Lucky for North Carolina, the Tar Heels had a pretty good freshman of their own in Jordan, who collected a team-high nine rebounds in addition to the 18-foot jump shot from the corner with 15 seconds left that gave Smith the championship.

There was still time, about 10 seconds, for Georgetown to come downcourt and pull it out.

Some felt it was also the moment for Georgetown to call a time out. Coach John Thompson explained why he didn't: "When Carolina called a time out (with 32 seconds to go) I told my players not to call one if they (North Carolina) so Dean wouldn't have a chance to set up a defense against a last shot."

As it turned out, Worthy proved better than any defense that could have been arranged. He caught a pass thrown by apparently confused Georgetown guard Fred Brown, a pass that should have gone to All-American guard Eric "Sleepy" Floyd, who scored 18 points for the Hoyas.

"I saw him pick up the ball at the top of the key," said Worthy. "He was going to throw it to someone on the wings. I thought he'd try to lob

Jordan Couldn't Watch His Shot

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Freshman guard Michael Jordan said he saw the winning shot in a pregame vision, but couldn't watch to see what happened after he arched the real thing with 15 seconds to go in the NCAA championship game.

It swished through from 16 feet away, just as it was planned and just as it occurred in his pregame fantasy. The shot gave North Carolina a 63-62 victory over Georgetown Monday night and the national college basketball championship.

"To tell the truth, I didn't see it go in," Jordan said. "I didn't want to look."

The winning basket came after North Carolina called a timeout to discuss strategy with 32 seconds left, trailing 62-61.

"The play was designed for Mike to shoot a jumper. They were in a 1-3-1 zone, and he should have had about a 15-foot shot after we passed it a couple of times," said senior playmaker Jimmy Black. He had seven assists in the game, including the pass to Jordan.

"I knew I was within my range, and I was open, so I took it," Jordan said.

He said junior forward James Worthy, who got a career-high 28 points for North Carolina, would have saved the game anyway, had the shot gone awry.

"James said after the game that if I didn't get my shot down, he was in good position to get a tipin," Jordan said.

But that would have spoiled the fantasy.

Jordan said he envisioned the dramatic finish and his hero's role before he got to the game.

"I was thinking the game might come down to a last-second shot. I saw myself taking it and hitting it," he said.

And the dream-come-true saved sophomore forward Matt Doherty from a nightmare.

Doherty missed the front end of a 1-and-1 with 1:19 left, opening the door for Georgetown to take the 62-61 lead and set the stage for Jordan's heroics. He felt at the time that he had failed his team in the clutch, Doherty said.

But he said a heavy load fell from his shoulders when he saw his teammate turn the shot loose.

"I knew it was in," Doherty said.

But it still remained for Worthy to make a big defensive play to go with his game-high 28 points. With five seconds left, he stepped in front of a Georgetown pass, came away with the ball and dribbled down court.

He missed two free throws after a deliberate foul with two seconds left, but Georgetown had time only for a midcourt heave that fell way short.

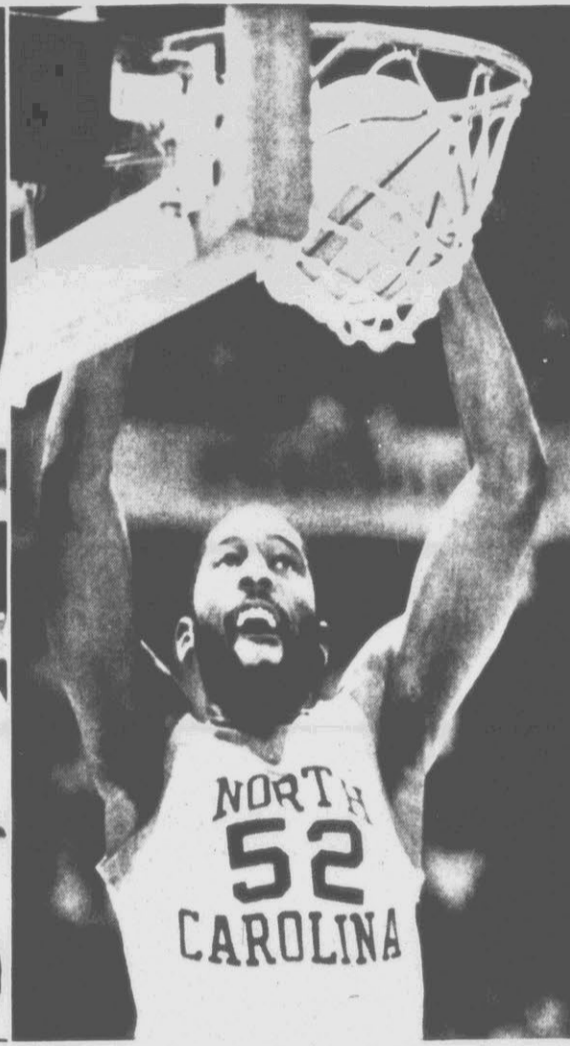

North Carolina Coach Dean Smith had been accused of being unable to win the big ones. It was his seventh trip to the Final Four, but his first national championship.

Smith praised Georgetown, its coach, John Thompson, and Georgetown players Pat Ewing and Eric "Sleepy" Floyd.

"I'm not sure we were the best team tonight," Smith said. "We were the lucky team."

Few Tears From The Hoya Fans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seven blocks away, there was little traffic on the normally busy street that is the commercial heart of Georgetown. However, the taverns along it were full, particularly those with signs in the windows advertising that the game was on their television sets.

Thirty minutes before the game began, most of the bars were crowded three and four deep. The patrons, who normally talk about government, were instead debating the merits of the Hoyas' relative inexperience versus the older Tar Heels.

Along the exclusive streets, there were only a few signs urging the local college on.

Chapel Hill Celebrates, Paints The Town Blue As Tar Heels Win

By TOM FOREMAN Jr., AP Sports Writer

CHAPEL HILL — Marred only by widespread vandalism, the celebration of the University of North Carolina's victory in the NCAA basketball tournament by a throng estimated at more than 20,000 continued at full tilt early this morning, police said.

"We haven't made any arrests, except a few DUIs (drunken drivers), but a lot of people are returning to their cars and finding the windows smashed," Rick Smith, public safety officer with the Chapel Hill Police Department, said at 2 a.m.

"And of course, you're seeing a few fights but no one's been seriously hurt. It's about like it was last year (when the Tar Heels made it to the NCAA finals), maybe a little worse. But hell-raising is hell-raising any way you look at it."

Within seconds after North Carolina won its first national championship in 25 years with a 63-62 victory over Georgetown at New Orleans, screaming mobs descended on a two-block commercial area on the edge of the UNC campus.

Firecrackers, Roman candles and fans' shouts filled the night. Two naked men cavorted on a nearby building. Beer flowed freely, toilet paper was strewn in trees, and light blue paint covered hands, faces, clothes and even vehicles.

Officer Smith said he had heard unconfirmed reports that at least one vehicle had been overturned and said a television van had been painted "Carolina blue."

"(Coach) Dean Smith finally stuck it to 'em," said one fan, his features hardly distinguishable under a coat of blue paint, referring to criticism leveled at the Tar Heel coach for never having won a national championship prior to this year.

Eric Jorgensen, an assistant manager at a restaurant, said he came to Chapel Hill from Maine and said he hadn't originally been a Tar Heel fan — before Monday night.

"But I'm a Tar Heel fan all the way through," Jorgensen said after the victory.

Jane Davis said she wasn't much of a basketball fan either. But the Tar Heels' progression to the Final Four changed her mind.

"I didn't start out as being a basketball fan," she said. "Lots of spirit changed my attitude."

Many people in the victory party were alumni who returned to Chapel Hill sensing the victory.

Joe Quigg, who played as a forward for North Carolina when the team last won the championship, in 1957, said he was happy for Dean Smith and happy for the team.

"After 25 years, they were ready for another one," said Quigg, 45, now a Fayetteville dentist.

Quigg scored 10 points in 1957, as UNC skipped past Kansas, 54-53, in triple overtime.

Patrick Ewing Had Something To Prove In Championship Game

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Georgetown's Pat Ewing wanted to show critics that he doesn't just play on the defensive end of the court.

The 7-foot freshman center poured in 23 points, grabbed 11 rebounds, had three steals and blocked two shots in Monday's 63-62 loss to North Carolina in the NCAA championship game.

"I wanted to do my best," said Ewing, who hit 10 of 15 shots in equalling his season-high scoring output.

"They think I'm just defense. I wanted to show I could play offense, too."

He wasted no time showing North Carolina.

After controlling the opening tip, he went down and popped a seven-footer from the baseline for a 2-0 lead.

Over the next three minutes Ewing was called for goaltending after swatting back a James Worthy six-footer; stole the ball; hit a short jumper; and was whistled on another goaltending violation on a Worthy jumper.

"For a freshman, he's awesome talent," said Worthy, the game's most valuable player with 28 points. "I hate to see him the next year or after that. He's awesome."

Nobody was more surprised with Ewing's overall play than North Carolina Coach Dean Smith.

"I was amazed at Pat Ewing," Smith said. "He has not shot that well in tapes that I watched. Sam (Perkins) had a hand up on him and he still made them."

"Not only is he a great shot blocker, he made some shots that showed he could play offense."

Ewing, called for goaltending five times in the first half, thought the blocks were clean swipes.

"I felt I wasn't goaltending," he said. "I felt it was judgment calls."

North Carolina didn't get an untouched basket until Matt Doherty's driving layup with 11:52 remaining in the half to cut the Georgetown lead to 12-10.

"Those were high-percentage shots they were taking," Georgetown Coach John Thompson said of the goaltending violations. "It creates a consciousness and tends to make people gravitate to the outside."

Georgetown, playing in its first Final Four since 1943, lost its chance for the title after with a turnover in the final seconds.

Sophomore guard Fred Brown attempted to flip a pass to forward Eric Smith on the right baseline, but Worthy was there to pick it off with five seconds to go.

"We were in great position but James Worthy stole the ball on the perimeter and

ACC Coaches Will Ask Athletic Directors To Approve Shot Clock

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Atlantic Coast Conference basketball coaches have approved a recommendation calling for the league to adopt a shot clock for ACC games beginning next season.

Bill Foster of Clemson said the coaches probably will ask the athletic directors of ACC schools to approve a 45-second clock, which would be in effect except for the last four minutes of play.

The decision to seek a shot clock in the ACC was made during a gathering of five ACC coaches in New Orleans to watch the championship basketball game of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

ACC directors would consider the plan at their annual meeting in May.

Penalty for not shooting within the time frame would be surrendering the ball. The 45-second shot clock has been used by the Sun Belt Conference in play this past year.

Smith did not attend the meeting, and coaches Carl Tacy of Wake Forest and Lefty Driesell of Maryland were not in New Orleans.

Valvano said, however, that Smith told him in a telephone conversation that Smith favors the move. Foster, chairman of the coaches' group, said he will issue a specific proposal after talking with Tacy and Driesell.

The shot clock has been the subject of much debate because of a methodical offense which has resulted in lower scores in college basketball in recent years.

This year, average college scores dropped for the seventh straight year, falling to about 137 total points a game. ACC games had the lowest average in the country last year, 118.5 points per game.

"The clock will probably not be the answer in pulling the scores up," Foster predicted. "The scores might come down with the clock. I know that sounds crazy, but that's what happened in the Big Eight when they experimented with the 30-second clock a few years ago. Everybody went to zones and the field-goal percentages went way down."

The ACC coaches discussed three options: a 30-second clock, a 45-second clock, and a 45-second clock that is turned off the final four minutes. The last plan would enable coaches to use game clinching spread offense such as the Four Corners, made famous by UNC.

"I think everybody's in favor of it," Valvano said.

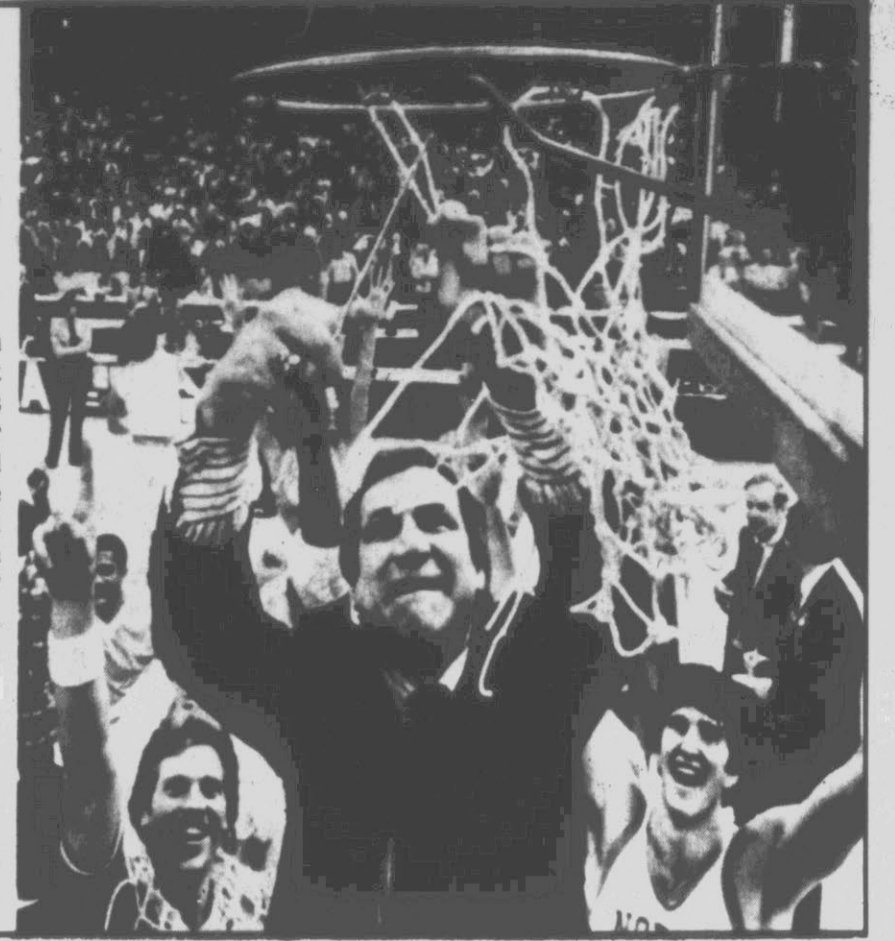

A survey of all college coaches showed that a majority oppose a shot clock, but that opposition is stronger against a 30-second-clock than the 45-second clock.

That survey, conducted by Ed Steitz of Springfield College, showed that coaches rejected a 30-second clock by a 3.5-to-1 ratio, and opposed the 45-second clock by a 2.2 to 1 margin.

Foster said he believes the coaches would reject another proposal calling for a three-point goal.

Worthy Handed Two Prizes: Bad Pass And Most Valuable Award

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — James Worthy was handed two prizes as he led North Carolina to the NCAA championship Monday night. First, a pass from an obviously confused Fred Brown of Georgetown, then the award as the game's outstanding player.

Many folks, like James Ferguson, 50-year-old director of the Erwin Recreation Center, said the real winner was this town of 47,300.

"I think it's great," said Ferguson, who remembers handing Floyd, at age 6 or 7, his first basketball.

"They're both two well-deserving young men. It's very healthy and rewarding for Gastonia."

Worthy, a center whose natural position would be in the middle, was several steps from midcourt when Brown tossed the ball into his hands. It looked like Brown might have even thought Worthy was on his team.

Worthy, who also had three steals and four rebounds, grabbed the ball and dribbled the length of the court before he was fouled with two seconds left.

"My natural instincts took me there," Worthy said of his catch of Brown's pass. "I didn't think it was a risk to be out there."

Georgetown Coach John Thompson said Worthy was where the Hoyas wanted him to be.

"We had him where we wanted him," Thompson said. "He stole the ball on the perimeter. That's just about where we want a great player like Worthy to be."

"At first, I was going to guard my man. But then I saw him (Brown) fake," Worthy recalled. "I was pretty surprised, it was right in my chest."

Worthy hit 13 of his 17 field goal attempts and two of seven from the foul line for his point total. When he was fouled with two seconds remaining in the game, he missed both shots, allowing Georgetown one last attempt for a victory. However, the Hoyas had run out of time outs and did not come close to a basket.

"When I stole the ball, at first I was going for the shot, but I figured I could dribble the clock out," Worthy said.

Worthy said he didn't think North Carolina could have played any better.

"To have played better would have been a miracle," he said.

Worthy's performance came against Georgetown's freshman Pat Ewing, who scored 23 points, and Worthy had high praise for the 7-foot Ewing.

"For a freshman, he's awesome. Under Coach Thomson he's development has been better. I'd had to see him the next year or after that. He's awesome."

Bullets In 5-0 Victory

CRESWELL — Jamesville High School got a two-hit shutout from Carl Ange and picked up a 5-0 victory over Creswell yesterday.

Ange, in going the distance, struck out ten and walked one. Only once did the home team threaten, when K. Davenport cracked a triple.

Held scoreless until the fifth inning, the Bullets broke the game open then with four runs. Rusty Holliday singled and stole second, scoring the first run when Marty Swinson singled. Swinson also stole up, scoring when Kevin Perry reached on an error. Ritchie Ange also was safe on an error, scoring Perry. Carl Ange then singled in two more runs to wind up the scoring.

Holliday led the Jamesville hitting with two.

Bath Tops Bears, 11-7

BATH — Bath took advantage of six Bear Grass errors and scored four runs in the fourth inning to break up a tie ball game en route to an 11-7 win Monday afternoon in a Tobacco Belt Conference baseball game.

Bear Grass, now 1-3 overall and in the league, jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the first inning when Jody Peaks drove home Dave Cratt and Greg Harrison singled home Lawrence Watson and Peaks.

Bath came back to tie the game in the bottom of the third with three runs and then took the lead in the bottom of the fourth after seeing Bear Grass regain the lead in the top of the inning with a run.

Bath stretched its lead to 11-5 with a run in the fifth inning and three in the sixth. The Bears rallied briefly in the seventh when Watson singled home Billy Fulford and Cratt, but Craig Gardner was thrown out at the plate trying to score on the play to end the game.

Watson led the Bears at the plate with four hits in five at bats. Watson had a double and triple. Peaks was two for five.

Travis Jackson was two for four for Bath.

Gastonia Had Split Feelings

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — The paths of Georgetown's Eric Floyd and North Carolina's James Worthy have crossed frequently during the past six years.

Both hail from this Gaston County town and battled each other at local high school basketball tournaments.

They met again Monday night, this time in New Orleans, where Worthy scored 28 points and led the Tar Heels to a 63-62 victory over Georgetown and the NCAA basketball championship.

Floyd and Worthy played high school basketball against each other for three years when Floyd was at Hunter Huss High School and Worthy played for Ashbrook.

The championship created somewhat of a quandry for Gastonia residents, with some of them rooting for Worthy and others for Floyd.

Many folks, like James Ferguson, 50-year-old director of the Erwin Recreation Center, said the real winner was this town of 47,300.

"I think it's great," said Ferguson, who remembers handing Floyd, at age 6 or 7, his first basketball.

"They're both two well-deserving young men. It's very healthy and rewarding for Gastonia."

Oscars For Hepburn; Fonda; 'Chariots' Rated Top Movie

By YARDENA ARAR
Associated Press Writer
HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Katharine Hepburn and Henry Fonda, the still-in-love oldsters of "On Golden Pond," were hailed as best actress and actor of 1981 at the 54th Academy Awards.

"Chariots of Fire," the British-made saga of two runners who won gold medals at the 1924 Olympic games, scored a smashing surprise Monday night as best picture of the year. The picture, starring relative unknowns, won three other awards for score, costuming and original script.

Warren Beatty, nominated in four categories for the heavily favored "Reds," won only as best director. His film of American radicalism and the Russian Revolution also won for supporting actress Maureen Stapleton as the firebrand radical Emma Goldman and for cinematography by Vittorio Storaro.

John Gielgud, the wisecracking gentleman's gentleman to a millionaire tippler in "Arthur," took his first Oscar, as best supporting actor.

For Miss Hepburn, 74, it was a record fourth Oscar as best actress. For Fonda, 76, it was the climax of a 48-year film career during which the Oscar eluded him — except for an honorary award last year.

Too ill to attend the Music Center festivities, Fonda designated daughter Jane to accept the award. She explained to the Los Angeles Music Center and a national television audience that her father first wanted his wife, Shirlee, to claim the Oscar — "but she wanted to be with him tonight as is her custom."

After the ceremony, Mrs. Fonda told reporters outside their Bel-Air home, "He just burst into tears. He's so emotional."

"This makes me feel very happy," Fonda said in a brief interview. Asked whether he had thought he would win, he replied: "So many people were telling me that I would, that I started to believe them."

Miss Hepburn followed her pattern of 11 previous nominations and did not attend. She was in Washington touring in the play "West Side Waltz," written by Ernest Thompson, author of "On Golden Pond."

Thompson also won an Oscar for his "Pond" screenplay.

"You're the most extraordinary, generous people," said "Chariots of Fire" producer David Puttnam in his acceptance speech. "Not just the Academy, but as a country, for taking what is absolutely a Cinderella picture and awarding it this."

"It feels as if I had won an Olympic gold medal myself," said Ian Charleson in Edinburgh, Scotland. Charleson, who played Eric Liddell, the Scottish missionary who refused to run on Sunday and took the 400-meter gold medal at the Paris Olympics, added he was surprised by the award and had expected "Reds" to win.

"Raiders of the Lost Ark" a tongue-in-cheek adventure expression and announced: "I'm thrilled, happy, delighted — and sober."

Barbara Stanwyck, glamorous and slim as ever at 74 in a red sequin gown, received the first and most enthusiastic standing ovation of the evening.

Miss Stanwyck thanked the studio workers she has known through her career, and added a special tribute to the late William Holden, who four years ago stood with her on the same Music Center stage and thanked her for helping to launch his career in "Golden Boy" in 1938.

"I love him very much and I miss him," she said. "He always wished that I would get the Oscar. And so to night, my Golden Boy, you got your wish."

The Hungarian-made "Mephisto," a drama chronicling the rise of an unscrupulous actor in Nazi Germany, won as best foreign-language film over competition that included the Polish "Man of Iron," a film about the Solidarity labor movement. Director Istvan Szabo and actor Klaus Maria Brandauer delighted the audience by performing an impromptu dance of joy in each other's arms.

Four winners came to the stage to claim the award for original song: Burt Bacharach, Carole Bayer Sager, Christopher Cross and Peter Allen, who collaborated on "Arthur's Theme (Best That You Can Do)" from "Arthur."

Albert R. "Cubby" Broccoli was given the Irving Thalberg award for consistent quality in producing. He produced the superhit James Bond films.

Drug Count For Country Singer

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Country singer George Jones and a woman companion have been charged with cocaine possession and public drunkenness after police stopped his car for speeding.

Jones, 50, and Nancy Sepulvado, 33, both of Muscle Shoals, Ala., were stopped Monday by a state Highway Patrol officer who clocked the car at 91 mph, said Tom Dial, director of the Mississippi Bureau of Narcotics.

Dial said Ms. Sepulvado, who was driving, also was charged with speeding.

Jones and Ms. Sepulvado were jailed briefly at the Hinds County jail before being released on their own recognizance.

The car was stopped on Interstate 55 about 20 miles south of Jackson, Dial said.

The arresting officer called the Bureau of Narcotics, which sent agents and a drug-sniffing dog to the scene. Dial said the dog found a white powder on the floor mats that was identified as cocaine by the state crime laboratory.

Jones' current hit on the country charts is "Still the Same Ole Me." In 1980, Jones' "He Stopped Loving Her Today" was a Country Music Association Song of the Year, Single of the Year, and won a Grammy Award from the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences.

Yesterday's Cryptiquip — OH DEAR, THIS DEAR DEER IS SHOT DEAD.

Today's Cryptiquip clue: S equals D

The Cryptiquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Familiar themes come up in different disguises. Declarer has a sure-trick line for his contract on this example. Can you spot it?

Despite the fact that they were sadly outgunned in terms of high cards, East-West had an excellent vulnerable sacrifice at six diamonds because of the position of the heart honors. But it is not surprising that they failed to find it.

West led a trump, and when dummy came down, declarer was tempted to cash the top spades and ruff a spade in the hope of setting up the long spade for a heart discard. However, this line risked defeat if spades were 5-1. The contract can be assured by putting the heart spot cards to full use in combination with a pretty play in the spade suit.

Declarer won the club lead with dummy's seven and ruffed a diamond. He crossed back to the ten of trumps and ruffed another diamond. Next, he cashed the king and ace of spades, then led a heart from the table. He simply covered any card that East cared to put up. West could win the trick, but he was end played. As the cards lie, he had to return a red suit. A heart would be into declarer's tenace, and a diamond would allow declarer to ruff in one hand while discarding a heart from the other.

Pure luck, you say. What if West had started with length in spades and could now play a spade?

The contract still cannot be defeated. If West leads the queen of spades, declarer ruffs, gets back to dummy with a trump and discards his remaining heart loser on the jack of spades. And if West has a low spade to lead, declarer puts up dummy's jack. If East has the queen, declarer ruffs and dummy's spades are again established. So the contract is made regardless of the distribution.

A Surprise Symphony Party

At the age of 17, Franz Josef Haydn was already a musical "has been." His nine-year career as a singer at the Vienna Court Chapel school ended abruptly when his voice changed. Only through years of struggle did he establish his reputation as a great composer, which endures to this day — his 250th birthday. Although often called the "father of the symphony," Haydn was not the first to write symphonies. But he changed the short, simple form to a lengthy, complex one using large orchestras. His more than 100 symphonies have been admired for centuries by many, including Mozart — who said he learned much about instrumentation from his friend Haydn.

DO YOU KNOW — What is the name of Haydn's most famous symphony?

MONDAY'S ANSWER — Henry Fonda's children Jane and Peter are also actors.
