Bombing Run Prompts Fierce Fighting

British Strike Falklands

By The Associated Press

British jets attacked both airfields on the Argentine-held Falkland Islands Saturday and warships bombarded Argentine army positions near the capital of Stanley, battle communiques from the warring nations reported.

Both sides claimed enemy warplanes were shot down in dogfights or by anti-aircraft fire, and Britain acknowledged some damage from air attacks on vessels of the British armada blockading the islands.

Argentina reported six soldiers were wounded in the air raids and Britain said there were some casualties aboard the warships, but no British lives were lost.

The pre-dawn raids on the airstrips were the first attacks by the British on the Falklands, although there were skirmishes when Argentine troops seized the islands April 2 and a week ago when British forces recaptured South Georia Island, a Falklands dependency 800 miles east of the main islands.

Argentina claimed that its gunners shot down two British Harrier jets, with one pilot killed and another captured, and said two others probably were downed. Government communiques and reports from the Argentine Embassy in Washington said one Argentine Dagger, which is an Israeli version of the French-designed Mirage fighter, was destroyed along with an army helicopter that was hit while on the ground at the Goose Green settlement.

A British Defense ministry spokesman claimed all the British aircraft returned safely. He said at least two Argentine warplanes — a Mirage fighter and a Canberra bomber — were shot down in dogfights but he could not confirm reports from the aircraft carrier Hermes that a second Mirage was downed. "Apart from the two Argentine aircraft shot down, reports indicate the Argentines may have shot down one of their own aircraft," he said.

The Argentine Embassy said that as dogfights raged over the Falklands around 4:30 p.m. (3:30 p.m. EDT), three British destroyers began shelling Argentine positions. It claimed one destroyer was "silenced" and withdrawing from the area in flames, "sending an SOS to the fleet." It said the two other warships also were pulling back.

An Argentine military communique said the warships were frigates, which in the British navy are smaller than destroyers, and claimed one was seriously damaged by Argentine warplanes and all three were "obliged to leave the scene of combat."

Argentine reports said six Argentine soldiers were wounded in four waves of air attacks on the South Atlantic islands, but denied British claims that the main, 4,000-foot asphalt runway at Stanley was "severely cratered."

The British warplanes also struck at the secondary airfield at Goose Green, 40 miles west of Stanley.

British reports said that the first air strike was carried out on the Stanley airfield by an aging Vulcan bomber that pounded the runway with 21 thousand-pound bombs. It said a later raid on the Railroad Runs Into Snag On Crossing

Once Again, 14th Is Open

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

After months of construction and detours, and the resultant inconvenience to residents, businesses and motorists, 14th Street "hopefully" will be opened to traffic (complete with the final layer of asphalt) by mid-week, according to city engineer Ron Sewell.

Contractors began laying the base course of asphalt on the final three blocks — between Pitt and Beatty streets — of the widening project at 7:30 a.m. Friday, Sewell said. And the barricades were removed late Friday, allowing traffic to travel over the entire length of the street for the first time in several months.

However, the railroad ran into trouble at its crossing.

"They laid the ties down wrong" for the crossing and are having to rework them, Sewell said. That's why Beatty Street is still closed.

Contracts to widen 14th Street from two to four lanes from Charles Street to Beatty Street — some nine blocks — were awarded in July 1981. And Sewell said work will be completed early — before the June 30 contract deadline.

Cost of the 3,000-foot project when finished will total about $800,000.

The improvement work, according to Sewell, was designed in "three sections ... three blocks each," in an effort to cause as little disruption of traffic as possible, even though it "costs more" and "takes longer" that way.

The first stage, from Charles to Evans Street, was completed (with the base course of asphalt) around the first of December, while "in the last two months we've done patches of the others," Sewell said.

What will remain after the base course of pavement is completed will be the installation of "150 feet of curb and gutter to straighten the alignment up" in the area of the Beatty-14th Street intersection, and the laying of the final course of asphalt.

The street was blocked six weeks ago to allow both Southern and Seaboard Coast Line railroads to install new crossings. Southern completed its work some time ago. However, work on the SCL crossing was continuing Friday.

Sewell said the project has "gone smoother than any other project we've worked on," even though "we've had complaints from two people — two store owners." Sewell added, "we've spent additional funds" in an effort to help solve their problems.

However, the widening of the street has cost businesses along the way money.

Edward Buck at University Seafood at the intersection of Charles and 14th said last week the work has "hurt business ... hurt around $5,000 worth. It's off that much from last year." However, he said since the portion of 14th Street east of Evans has reopened, "business has picked up ... back to normal."

At General Cash and Carry, spokesman Bud Stallings said even though the city did "work with us pretty well," the street work "really did" hurt business. "It was off 12 to 15 percent. But it's picked back up ... improving all along now."

Project Exodus Offers Firsthand Look At Careers

Students Get Trial Runs

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

One of them met a sociopath, one saw a dog euthanized and one watched a kidney transplant in a rhesus monkey.

No, not medical interns, not college students, not professors doing reserach; just high school students in search of their careers and themselves through Project Exodus — Experimental Opportunities in Defining the Unlimited Self.

"I wanted to see if I was interested in medicine," said Rob Ehinger, one of several participants in the Pitt County program for gifted and talented students. "I thought I would realize I'd either become very interested or not interested at all."

What did he discover? "I found I could be interested," he said with a smile.

Ehinger learned, he said, that to practice medicine an individual needs self-confidence. "You have to know a lot about what you're doing," he said.

"I think I have an aptitude for medicine," he added, "but I don't know if that's what I want to do. I do feel much better about not knowing," explained the D.H. Conley senior. "Going through the program took a lot of the pressure off."

Ehinger, who spent afternoons during the spring observing surgery at Pitt County Memorial Hospital with Dr. Judy Thomas and Dr. Frank Thomas, will begin study at the University of North Carolina next fall as a pre-med student.

He saw a kidney transplant in a rhesus monkey, an experience most students have to wait until they're in med school to have.

"I was really lucky, I guess, because I just happened to be there at a time when a transplant was being done," said Ehinger.

He and other Conley students will be wiser, if not more certain, about how they chose to use their talents because of their journey through Exodus.

Project Exodus, says its director, Mary Alice Yarbrough, is a program designed to integrate school and community experiences to help gifted Pitt County students develop life goals, career choices and post secondary plans.

"Exodus focuses on three goals for the students," Mrs. Yarbrough said. "First, we want to enhance self-awareness, make self-directed learners aware of their responsibilities and provide an understanding of alternative methods of problem-solving and decision making."

After that, she added, the program gives students access to explore professional career areas normally beyond a secondary student's reach.

"Finally, Exodus gives participants an insight, we hope, into the local community as an educational institution," noted the director.

The program, through two phases labeled "guidance experience" and "mentor experience," helps students decide about what they want to do with their lives, then gives them a hands-on look locally at their career choice.

For example, DeAnne Gaylord wanted a close look at dentistry, her first career choice. When she wasn't able to get the subject, she interned instead with Monica Turner, patient educator at the Family Practice Center.

"Nursing didn't interest me," she said. "But I decided I'd give it a try and it was a lot better than I thought."

Ms. Gaylord worked with patients at the center, talking with those who were sick and watching Ms. Turner teach patients and family members how to cope with illness.

"I liked it because there was always somnething going on," said the student.

Cigarette Samples Face Ban In Chicago

CHICAGO (UPI) — First there was the surgeon general's report saying smoking was dangerous to health. Then cigarette advertising was banned on radio and television and non-smokers started demanding smoke-free restaurant and work areas.

Now the City Council is considering a measure to prevent cigarette manufacturers from handing out free samples of their product on street corners. The proposal has drawn the ire of the American Tobacco Institute.

Hearings opened last week on an ordinance proposed by Alderman Bernard Stone, an ex-smoker, to prevent people hired by cigarette companies — some of them scantily clad women — from handing out their wares to passersby.

"I filed it basically because I saw young kids handing out the samples and half the time they never even looked up to see who they were handing them to," Stone said. "I was concerned minors might get the samples.

"I was a cigarette smoker and I smoked for 35 years — three packs a day. I quit four years ago. I quit by choice."

In his testimony before the council's Committee on Health, Stone said he also suspects the free samples might induce non-smokers to begin smoking.

Stone said that because smoking is a health hazard, the City Council has the right to regulate distribution of cigarettes.

Anne Browder, assistant to the president of the American Tobacco Institute, said handing out free samples is the only way cigarette companies have to influence smokers to switch brands.

She said cigarette manufacturers subscribe to the "highest standards" of advertising and have no intention of persuading non-smoking adults or minors to begin lighting up.

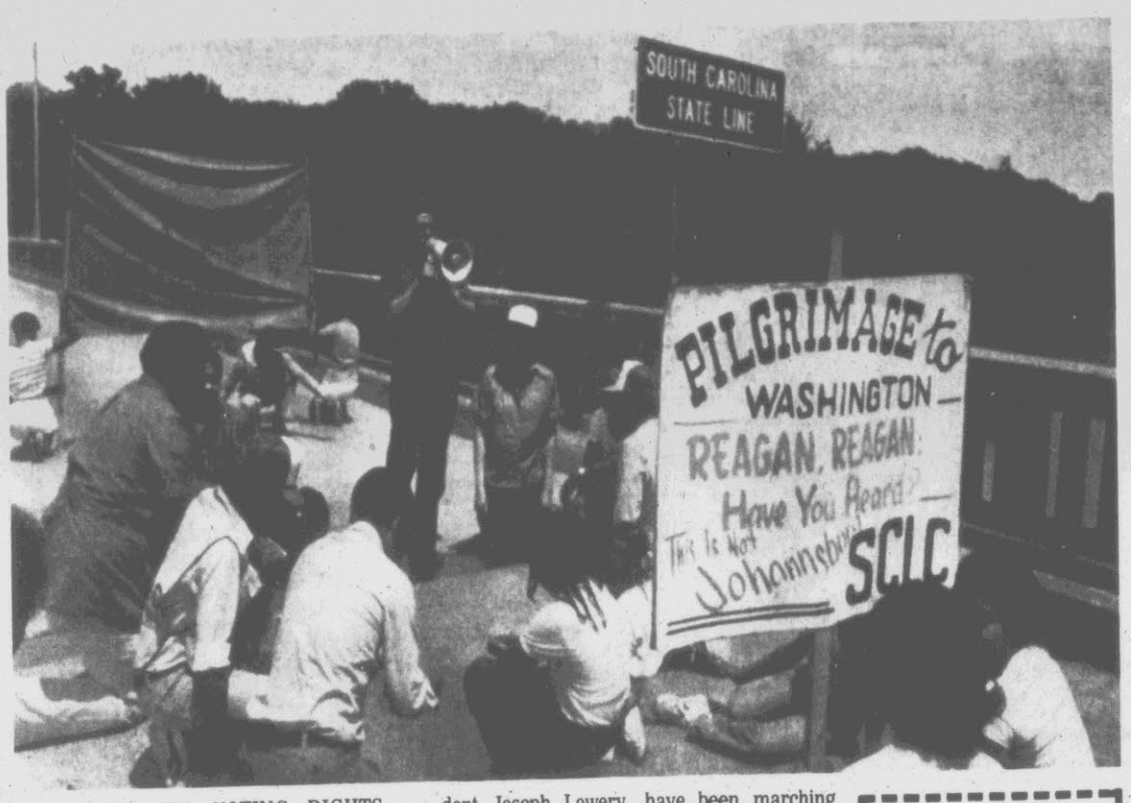

Stone said he expects a fight for passage of his ordinance, first introduced three years ago.

Baptist Drive Said Paying Off

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — A $500,000 advertising campaign aimed at bringing an estimated 2 million nonchurchgoing North Carolinians into the fold appears to be paying off, state Baptist officials say.

Although the "Here's Hope" campaign was begun five years ago, significant increases in church membership have come in recent weeks, said the Rev. Richard Everett.

Township is added to the 9th District and Martin County's Goose Nest, Hamilton and Robersonville townships are pared from the 9th and assigned to the 2nd District.

Warren will seek one of the two seats in the 9th House District.

The proposed redistricting plan would have the district including all of Pitt and Greene counties except Bethel and Carolina townships.

Stallings admitted there was a problem with traffic on the old two-lane road. "It should be better now," he said.

Probably the least affected businesses along 14th Street were Carolina Sales, Perkins Oil Co. and Hallow Distributing Co. — all wholesale-distributor operations.

Spokesmen for all three firms said the torn-up streets and detours had little noticeable effect on their business, although Hallow spokesmen said the road work did cause some delays in deliveries, which irritated some truck drivers.

Reese Furniture Co. officials estimated that the interruption in traffic has caused a $2,000 to $3,000 drop in sales there.

Probably hardest hit by the construction work has been Leo's Perco service station at the intersection of 14th and Washington streets.

Leo Hunt said his business has been "hurt to beat heck" by the improvement project and "I'm almost bankrupt because of it."

Hunt said his problems — because of the street work — include the loss of about "$200 to $300 a day ... 25 percent or maybe a little more" in sales and the need to lay one employee off because of the drop in business.

"I've had to let one man go and I'm behind on the other one."

The station operator, saying "I've had no help from the city," said he hopes to make up for the loss in business when the four-lane roadway is finally opened to traffic once more.

The Corner Car Wash at the intersection of Evans and 14th also suffered a drop in business because of the torn up streets. Owner Jeep Streeper described the car wash as "an impulse business," where people "on their way back and forth" stop to vacuum and wash their cars.

If the traffic pattern changes so motorists don't pass by, then they don't stop, Streeper suggested.

"Percent-wise it's really hard for me to tell," but business was hurt, he said. However, Streeper said business "has come back considerably" since the street was reopened.

"It's one of the prices we have to pay for improvements," Streeper rationalized.

Project Exodus ...

"It was very different from what I expected."

She found out nursing is a good career, she said, but remains undecided about her future.

Judy Boyd chose nursing as her career experience, and received first-hand experience in the hospital delivery room during her internship. "They (the nurses) let me work with the equipment in the delivery room," she explained, "and taught me how to read the moniters and read contractions."

Ms. Boyd loved it and says she believes nursing with a specialization in obstetrics-gynecology is her career. "I had decided I wanted to be a nurse before," she said, "so I thought I'd try that in the program., Now that's what I'm going to school for."

Participants are nominated by teachers and counselors for the program, then apply for acceptance. They are then screened, selected and given a choice of several career options.

After the course is completed, the students evaluate their experiences and the program and in turn are given evaluations by their mentors, the persons who guide them through their actual career experiences. Students also have to complete a project related to their career choice.

"We don't push students to come out of the program knowing what they want to do," said Mrs. Yarbrough. "That would be unfair. What we want is for them to make more informed and well-thought-out decisions about their future.

"Once a kid gets into pre-med or pre-law, engineering or nursing in college," she continued, "their time is very committed to that subject. If they change their mind and don't like the career, well, that's a year or however long that could have been spent on something else. Exodus gives them a chance to experience their career before they commit themselves."

Pamela Joyner, for example, said she learned she didn't want a career in law.

"I didn't know much about the legal system, so I chose law thinking it would be a good chance to learn something firsthand," she explained. "Well, I did, and I've decided engineering is my career choice."

Packwood Sticking 'To Knitting'

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., and President Reagan are burying their differences in the name of party unity, with Packwood promising to maintain a lower profile as the Senate's chief campaign fund-raiser.

"I'm going to stick to my knitting," Packwood said in an interview. "I'm not going to make any more comments (on the president) this year."

At the White House, an official who asked not to be identified, said, "There's too many other things going on for us to belabor" Packwood's earlier outspoken criticism of the president.

Republicans hold their biggest fund-raising event of the year on Tuesday, a $1,000-a-plate congressional dinner that Packwood said should net at least $2.5 million for House and Senate GOP campaigns.

Reagan has accepted an invitation to be the keynote speaker.

Meanwhile, Republican Senate sources say the furor over Packwood's outspoken criticism of the president appears to be subsiding — despite calls by some conservatives for Packwood's ouster as chairman of the Senate Republican Campaign Committee.

A letter by Colorado brewer Joseph Coors, a member of Reagan's so-called "kitchen cabinet," urging 2,500 wealthy Republicans to withhold funds from the Packwood-led committee may have backfired, some GOP sources suggested.

"Many view it as unwarranted interference," said one Senate Republican, who did not wish to be identified. "It may have actually produced more support within the Senate for Packwood."

Packwood said it's still too early to tell whether the Coors letter — which seeks the senator's resignation from the campaign post — will have any noticeable effect on fund raising.

While published reports have suggested receipts for Tuesday's dinner are running behind what had been anticipated, Packwood said it's wrong to compare this year's take with the $3.5 million raised at last year's dinner.

That was in a "flush period" right after Reagan had taken office and when GOP contributors were feeling unusually generous, Packwood said. Discounting last year, "we've never raised more than $1 million before" from the annual banquet, he said.

Campaign committee aides also noted that there already has been a GOP fund-raiser this year, a $1,000-a-plate "Salute to Ronald Reagan" dinner in March, which may have drained off some potential contributors to Tuesday's event.

Packwood had been in trouble at the White House since he said in a March interview with The Associated Press that Reagan had "an idealized concept of America" and that the president was weakening the party by ignoring women, blacks and other minorities.

Packwood made several subsequent speeches in Oregon attacking the president's policies, including a claim on April 15 in a speech in Astoria, Ore., that Reagan has "removed the glue that held everyone together in the Republican Party."

Reagan retaliated by withdrawing the use of his name and signature on a fund-raising letter that had been used by the Packwood committee to solicit funds for GOP candidates.

The committee already had mailed out about 8 million copies of the letter and Reagan's objection that he found the letter offensive left the unit with about 8 million more that could not be mailed.

The flap cost the campaign committee about $2 million and temporarily forced a cutback in funds and technical assistance to GOP candidates, according to Craig Smith, deputy director of the campaign committee.

But since then, Packwood and the White House have both moved to heal the breech, culminating in a meeting last week between Packwood, Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., and White House chief of staff James Baker.

It was described by participants as a "bury the hatchet" session.

"We've put it all behind us," said Packwood, who said a new fund-raising letter has been prepared with White House approval and will soon be sent out.

Was he bitter about the president's decision to demand the withdrawal of the earlier letter? "It went out under the president's signature, and it's his signature. If he doesn't want it used, that's it."

A White House source said the new letter does not contain the same glowing praise for Packwood that the original one did, but does mention his name and the efforts he has been making to elect more Republicans to the Senate.

Common Cause Issues Awards

WASHINGTON (AP) — A mayor, a member of Congress and four citizen activists were honored Saturday as 1982 recipients of the Common Cause Public Service Achievement Award.

The winners were Barbara Bennett, mayor of Reno, Nev.; Richard Bolling, a member of the U.S. House from Missouri; Paul Feiner, coordinator of the Open Government Coalition in Scarsdale, N.Y.; Charles G. Common Cause, a national citizens organization, said the awards were given to honor people who "by force of imagination, initiative and perserverance have made an outstanding contribution to the public interest in the areas of government performance and integrity."

Lethal Injection Ordered For Man

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — A 19-year-old man has been sentenced to death by lethal injection for abducting, raping and murdering a college student.

Michael Guzman, of Albuquerque, was sentenced Friday by District Justice Gerald Cole, who acted on a jury's recommendation that Guzman be executed for the death of Julie Ann Jackson, 19, one of two women abducted near the University of New Mexico on April 5, 1981.

Justice Dep't Holds The Reins To Local Politics

It's cheering to hear that the Justice Department at least has given tentative approval to the latest legislative redistricting effort for North Carolina. Now, if the State Board of Elections can clear up the flap over a date for the primary, maybe the state's political candidates finally will get a chance to face the voters. That, of course, is if the Justice Department sticks to its word this time.

That's the only good news that came out of the quick special session of the General Assembly last week. Two Pitt County legislators possibly gave the best assessment of the Legislature's work: Sen. Vernon White said he has "never seen anything to beat it in my life;" Rep. Ed Warren said the "House was already messed up so bad it didn't bother us any more." Warren obviously was speaking with his tongue in cheek.

Historians will tell you that the nation-states developed in Europe and America during the 16th, 17th, 18th and 19th centuries all grew up around a central factor — a common bond of heritage, culture and politics. In many cases, the new House and Senate districts in North Carolina fall far short of providing that oneness of purpose.

The proposed 9th Senatorial District, with White as the incumbent, would encompass Pitt County, seven townships in Martin County and one Beaufort County township. That stretches roughly from Grifton to Robersonville and from Farmville to Chocowinity. It definitely is not the worst senatorial district — there still is the 2nd District, which will range from Robersonville northward as it slices toward the Virginia border.

Politically, so far as representation is concerned, the Legislature might just as well have changed county lines. We probably could not expect more so long as the Justice Department holds the reins to local politics, but there must be a better day ahead when local representation means just that — a representative serving constituents with common ties.

Administrative Cuts Come First

Pitt County's school board has begun the task of cutting back in the face of uncertain funding for the next academic year. The first to feel the sting were approximately 60 employees, including 20 or more teachers who had been hired under a limited contract to fill in for teachers on leave.

Associate Superintendent Thomas Craft says the others are administrators, secretaries, custodians and aides, many of them in the special programs such as speech, special education and exceptional children. Each program is expected to see major funding cuts next fall.

Earlier this year Pitt County's principals approved a resolution urging the school board to look first to the administrative staff if personnel cuts are to be made. We heartily endorse that resolution and recommend that the school board embrace its concept.

Sunday Morning Notes

Skylight Inn in Ayden has done it again. The famed barbecue restaurant has made a national publication.

The Skylight Inn is featured in an article in the May edition of Southern Living.

The article, entitled "The South Burns for Barbecue," describes the delicacy from Virginia to Texas. Accompanying the story is a picture of the Skylight Inn and also of Pete Jones and his son who, the caption says, were voted "the best barbecue cooks in a North-South Carolina cookoff."

The article describes the Skylight Inn as "the typical Southern barbecue restuarant — a cinder-block building, a dirt parking lot, a cookhouse in back almost hidden by piles of oak and hickory logs."

"I can get the barbecue to you before you get the money out of your pocket," the article quotes Jones as saying, in reference to his quick service.

The article also mentions Parker's in Wilson, Wilber's in Goldsboro, King's in Kinston, Melton's in Rocky Mount and Spoon's in Charlotte as the homes of eastern North Carolina style barbecue (Charlotte?). Anyway, it says the whole hog is split in halves and cooked over glowing hardwood coals for 8 to 12 hours. "The meat is finely chopped, liberally sprinkled with a sauce of apple cider vinegar, salt and pepper, and served with cornbread, slaw and, often, Brunswick stew."

There is also mention of North Carolina's celebrated pig-picking, the current mainstay of political rallies. "Most of the meat is chopped to serve on plates, but a portion is left intact so celebrants may wander by to pick the meat right off the hog with their fingers."

Well, if eastern North Carolina is known for anything, it is its chopped pork barbecue.

Visitors love it or they hate it, but anybody who comes to the area has to try it at least once.

Barbecue pork also overshadows some other delectable cooking in eastern North Carolina. Where else, for instance, can you get barbecue chicken such as is found here?

Somehow the chicken has been overlooked when it comes time to talk about barbecue in the east. The best eating you'll ever find, however, is properly basted chickens cooked slowly over a bed of glowing coals in a huge outdoor grill. And where else can you get it but in eastern North Carolina?

WASHINGTON — At the very moment Secretary of State Alexander Haig most needed support from the White House for his debut in big-league mediation, he was degraded by staff backbiting that provoked even President Reagan to "blow up."

That degrading has had little impact on Haig's arduous mission to prevent America's closest ally from getting into all-out war with a lesser but still important ally.

But Haig's success in maintaining the United States as mediator acceptable to both sides has come despite nasty personal cracks more reminiscent of precinct politics than the lofty heights of the White House. The hostility raises anew this question: Can Reagan make his foreign policy succeed when White House aides (described in The New York Times as "senior" advisers and suspected at the State Department of including chief of staff James Baker) are renewng an old campaign to drive Al Haig from the State Department?

Reagan arrived at a White House lunch with his senior aides carrying a copy of Newsweek magazine's Periscope column which one aide told us provoked the president into an angry "blowup" against Haig's detractors. The item attributed to Haig's "inner circle" the fear that his failure in the Falklands mediation might "end his career" because "the White House is gunning for him."

Members of Haig's "inner circle" not only denied making such a ridiculous forecast but specifically fingered White House staffers for planting the hatchet in Haig's back. That comported with the self-defeating White House backfire against Haig's decision not to take a second-class Air Force plane without windows or, more important, sophisticated communications gear on his 30,000-mile shuttle diplomacy.

Friendly foreign governments were surprised when the White House grumbled about suplying a first-class plane. They were stunned on learning further that senior advisers were passing unattributable word to the press that "Haig needs a win badly." They could not believe that the president's top domestic aides would go out of their way to tear down the secretary of state, whose mediation would spell glory or defeat for Ronald Reagan.

Until last winter, the suspected source of White House animus against Haig was then national security assistant Richard V. Allen. But Allen's ouster and replacement by William P. Clark, Haig's colleague as deputy secretary of state, has not ended the anti-Haig sniping.

That points the finger at Jim Baker, who from the first day of the Reagan administration has openly regarded Haig as a disruptive force rampaging out of control. Close associates in the White House deny Baker's involvement in the current harassment of Haig. But inside the State Department, there is no doubt that Baker is Haig's tormentor..

Leaders of U.S. allies, including Great Britain, have agonized over the recent effort to get Haig. Published leaks that Haig has played too even-handed a role in his mediation are ridiculed in London. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government knows that premature alientation of Argentina would have doomed Haig's mission, a matter that Reagan and Thatcher personally discussed in undisclosed phone conversations.

Whatever the obstacles, the U.S. and Britain substantially agreed on the course of that mediation.

The greater problem for U.S. foreign policy is the poison oozing from the White House. Although it has not seriously impaired Haig's vital work in the Falklands crisis, it underlines the graver question of the Reagan administration's fitness to govern.

State Wants To Match Its Computers

RALEIGH — The Employment Security Commission wants a new computer and the controversy the purchase has created illustrates why the Hunt administration wants to revamp the state's procedure for acquiring computers.

ESC has taken bids for a new $3 million computer system. ESC officials have decided they like one brand while officials at the state Department of Administration would prefer that they buy another. Because the matter is still in the bidding process, state officials were not able to be specific about brand names. ESC claims the computer they want performs ESC's work more efficiently and less expensively than the other computer. DOA claims the computer ESC wants doesn't mesh with the state's computer system.

Administration Secretary Jane Patterson said she wants ESC to buy a computer which will "talk" to the state's other computers. Computers all have their own languages. When they can talk to each other, the people working on one can plug into another and receive information. That's important when the state tries to check someone's eligibility for a social program.

Mrs. Patterson gave this example: Someone applies for food stamps in Robeson County. The social worker checks in to the state's central computer system through a Lumberton terminal and is quickly able to find if the person is receiving welfare or Medicaid, if the person owns a registered auto, or if the person is eligible for any training programs. The social worker cannot, however, find out if the applicant is receiving unemployment insurance. ESC's computer is a different brand and doesn't "interface" with, or talk to, the state's main cumputer. The social worker can, however, get an ESC-supplied computer tape that lists all of this information. But that takes extra time and the information is not always up to date.

If ESC acquires a computer that talks with the state's central computer, the state will be better able to fight food stamp, unemployment and welfare fraud. It would also reduce the total number of computer personnel the state needs, said Charlie Williams, DOA's information management director.

ESC's Bill Lewis counters that ESC should get a computer which first of all serves its own needs best. Then, ESC can purchase computer software and hardware which will adapt ESC's new computer to the state system. DOA says that's possible, but much more expensive.

Gov. Jim Hunt is currently drafting an executive order that will transfer operation and maintenance of almost all state computers to DOA. It would also establish the Information Technology Services Council which would be responsible for approving all new computer purchases and leases.

Under the draft of the executive order, which was presented to a legislative committee in late April, a top priority for the council would be development of a computer system comprised of compatible parts. Currently, the state Board of Awards makes the final decision on which computer to get. The board's decision can be appealed to the Advisory Budget Commission.

Hunt's executive order is scheduled to go into effecct on July 1, with the start of the 1982-83 fiscal year. Under the order, Mrs. Patterson would be council chairperson.

It will then be up to the council to decide whether the individual needs of a state agancy are more important than the state's general need for compatibility.

Why Fight The Peace Academy Proposal?

WASHINGTON — where were Ronald Reagan's in-house image-makers when he really needed them?

With their attentions focused on the Falkland Islands and the anti-nuclear deliberations of Ground Zero Week, Americans learned that the president, citing "severe budget constraints," opposed creation of a federallysponsored "Peace Academy."

Under normal circumstances, such a disclosure probably wouldn't have risked Reagan much embarrassment. For nearly five decades, a U.S. school specializing in conflict resolution has been one of those obscure, rather ethereal proposals that make good speech material but little headway in Congress.

Today, however, a majority of the Senate and more than 100 House members have had the savvy to join the accelerating campaign to make the Peace Academy a reality. World affairs, as well as the unreassuring words from the Reagan administration, have made "peace" the table talk of practically every household in America. In short, a Peace Academy is becoming as American as apple pie.

If Reagan's advisers are willing to approve $100 million for military concert bands (up $14 million over last year), Sen. Spark Matsunaga (D-Hawaii) believes that the "time has at last arrived" to appropriate $31 million for the training of graduate students, scholars and government officials in mediation techniques, labor-management relations and peace-keeping.

"If we miss our chance now," he conceded to us, noting the current fervor over nuclear war, "it'll be another 10 years before we get it passed."

Perhaps the administration's real reservations about studying non-military solutions were betrayed in the defiant remarks of Vice President George Bush. While alluding to the public's nuclear anxieties, he reiterated the administration's opposition to changing its arms buildup plans. "The United States has nothing to apologize for in its efforts to bring this nuclear madness under control," he declared, as if to dismiss growing public discontent with Reagan's arms policies.

While we're not inclined to emphasize symbols over substance, the administration's lack of support for the Peace Academy may only fan the fires that Bush hoped to douse. Indeed, the White House has only seen the beginning of Ground Zeroism: During June's United Nations disarmament conference in New York, for example, hundreds of thousands are expected to rally in frustration over the arms race. From all indications at home and in Europe, it's going to be a "Peace Summer."

The Peace Academy's leading House sponsor, Dan Glickman (D-Kans.), admits that a school for studies and research in conflict resolution is "no substitute for responsible arms reduction." But it could be the natural outgrowth of the freeze movement, whether the president likes it or not.

Defense Watchdog May Be A Puppy Instead

WASHINGTON — Politics, so the saying goes, is the art of the attainable. You will seldom find a better example of that rule in operation than you will find in the matter of providing an inspector general for the Department of Defense. What is needed is an independent watchdog. What we are likely to get is a subordinate watchpuppy instead.

By way of background: Six years ago, prompted by reports of massive fraud in welfare expenditures, Congrees came up with the concept of entirely independent inspectors general. The idea was to create a corps of professional auditors and investigators who would be free to do their job, in the hackneyed phrase, without fear or favor.

Today 10 Cabinet departments and five other agencies have such inspectors general. They have saved the taxpayers millions of dollars. In 1978, efforts began to extend the concept to the Department of Defense — and with good reason: It is commonly acknowledged that the Department of Defense, with the most money to spend, is the most wasteful of all departments. The month rarely passes without a horror story of cost overruns, padded contracts or notorious mismanagement.

This is not to suggest that Defense lacks auditors of its own. On the contrary. The department employs 18,000 inspectors of high and low degree, scattered over 18 major subdivisions; without their services, the waste would be more monumental than it is. But despite the labors of 11 coordinating committees, an impression remains of a multilegged beast with neither head nor tail. Eleven coordinating committees probably are incapable of coordinating a light bulb with a socket.

The situation cries out for the appointment of one take-charge inspector general, responsible solely to the president and to the taxpayers, with authority and professional staff to investigate anything, anywhere, in the whole defense establishment. Last year the House responded to the need: The House passed a bill to create precisely such an officer.

Now the House bill is bogged down in the Senate. The Department of Defense regularly sends witnesses to testify that the department "strongly supports" an inspector general, to which affirmation should be added a footnote reading, "in a pig's eye." The department will accept an IG only if he is "under the authority, direction and control" of the secretary of defense. The Pentagon brass think it "essential to any military organization" that channels of command be preserved. The idea of a wholly independent watchdog is an idea they regard very coolly.

What to do? Sen. Bill Roth of Delaware, chief sponsor of IG legislation, sees half a loaf as better than none. Bowing to the department's objections, he has come up with a compromise proposal that he regards as the only attainable legislation. There would be a presidentially appointed inspector general for defense with power to investigate anything he wanted to investigate. The secretary of defense, whoever he might be, could muzzle the watchdog by flatly prohibiting the IG to probe any deeper, but in that event the secretary would have to explain his veto to the appropriate committees of Congress.

Senator Roth probably is right: This may not be the best bill, but it is the best bill that has a prayer of winning Senate approval. The Senate historically has shown greater deference than the House to the armed services. And there may be some merit to the hawks' objection that Defense truly is different — that it would be unwise to permit a wholly independent auditor to romp around in sensitive areas of secret weapons.

Very well. If agreement can be reached on the Roth compromise, the taxpaying public will be well-served. An energetic inspector general, given sufficient staff and an adequate budget, should be able to expose some of the more infuriating examples of waste in the Pentagon. If it turns out in a couple of years that the watchdog is no more than a puppy, the act can always be reconsidered.

To the editor:

I congratulate the East Carolina University Chancellor Selection Committee and the Board of Turstees in their successful completion of a long and arduous process. I respect and accept their decision and join with the university faculty, professional staff and the community in full support of it.

ECU is the most dynamic university in the University of North Carolina System and it must have the most capable leadership to advance its programs in the coming critical years. It is well known that I love the university; therefore, I rejoice in the knowledge that men with such extraordinary talents are available and ready to carry us forward. The decision rendered has made it impossible for President Friday to err.

As my friends know, I was at ECU by choice prior to this event. I choose to be here afterward and with God's help will continue to do what I can to improve upon the existing high quality programs and where necessary expand them.

Good for Admiral Inman!

Unlike Director Casey, who has brought not one iota of expertise to the Central Intelligence Agency, Bobby Inman is a highly respected professional whose opinions on agency operations deserve the utmost deference. He opposed proposals for domestic spookery which, besides threatening civil rights, would open the door to unnecessary rivalry and duplication of effort between the FBI and CIA. Up to now, operating within established limits for the rights of individuals, the domestic process has been the purview of the FBI. The present CIA charter expressly forbids domestic spying and would have to be changed if the aforementioned proposals met acceptance.

Bobby Inman saw no reason to imitate the Soviet Union whose intelligence system is combined with a domestic apparatus in the KGB.

To the editor:

The record of human history shows many rare and unusual feats. Certainly the achievements of all people exhibit the potential of the human mind and the will of the human spirit.

One of the truly unique features of life reflects the fact that God permits giants to lead his people to the threshold of safety, triumph and greatness only to have the leader die when victory seems close.

The Bible records that Moses led God's people for many years through trials and tribulations; yet, Moses did not see the Promised Land. The annals of American military history indicates that Franklin D. Roosevelt led this nation through bloody World War II; yet FDR did not see the just and honorable resolution of this conflict. The story of the Civil Rights movement in America illustrates that John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King Jr. led this nation through this difficult period; yet Kennedy did not see the passage of the 1963 Civil Rights Bill and King did not witness the multitudes of black Americans reaching the Promised Land of black Americans have today. Our recent world history proves that Anwar El Sadat boldly initiated a peace plan with Israel; yet, he did not see the transfer of hallowed ground to Egypt.

Last Sunday Israel submitted a portion of the Sinai to Egypt as a condition of the Camp David Peace Accord. The central figure in this historic attempt toward peace betweeen ancient enemies was President Sadat. His vision, leadership, and courage made this day a special one for his land. The world hopes real and lasting peace in this region will serve as his eternal legacy.

We must conclude that Jesus Christ seeks leaders to serve His people. His desire is that justice, righteousness and truth will take His people to the "Promised Land." We must work and concern ourselves with serving Jesus humbly through our relationships and involvements with fellow human beings.

Should Gov. Jim Hunt, working with North Carolinians United for ERA, be successful in his attempt to bring the Equal Rights Amendment to a vote, he will force North Carolina legislators to break their word given in a formal gentlemen's agreement not to consider the amendment. Gov. Hunt has officially aligned himself with a special interest group at the exclusion and indifference of all others.

The Equal Rights Amendment has been defeated or shelved on four previous tries in our state and is clearly not the will of the North Carolina people or the nation.

The Moral Majority of North Carolina and its affiliate coalitions denounce Gov. Hunt's action in both overstepping his bounds as governor in the amendment process and in forcing this issue upon the people for the benefit of his own national image.

To the editor:

It's rather boring to constantly read The Daily Reflector's criticism of Sen. Jesse Helms. No matter what stand he takes, your paper and The News and Observer are against it. Fortunately, neither of these papers has any influence on the voters who have in the past and will in the future continue to send Jesse to Washington to speak his piece.

He is one of the very few in Washington who dares to do so. He's beholding to no group, not the Trilateralist nor the Jewish lobby nor the labor unions nor the NAACP nor Jesse Jackson nor the Republicans nor the Democrats.

His is the only official voice in Washington saying to Great Britain to stay out of the Americas. Wonder what the hypocrites (Haig, Bush and Baker, who have taken over the administration since they retired ex-President Reagan last fall) will have to say when Russia moves into Central America? Where do we get any support for the Monroe Doctrine then? With friends like England and Israel, who needs enemies? It's a contest as to which one gets us into World War III first.

It All Depends On How You Want To See It

On Oct. 19, 1948, President Harry S. Truman came to Raleigh to help the state dedicate a statue on Capitol Square which commemorates the three presidents that North Carolina says were born in this state — James K. Polk, Andrew Johnson and Andrew Jackson.

In the case of Jackson, the people of South Carolina would have been justified if they had observed the event by singing "It Ain't Necessarily So."

North Carolina's claim that the seventh president was born in this state ignores the conclusion of leading historians who are willing to accept Jackson's word that he was a native of South Carolina.

One of those who is not willing to take Jackson's word is former U.S. Sen. Sam Ervin. The senator says Jackson's word was unreliable because he obviously was "too young and too mentally immature st the time" to recall personally where he was born and because Jackson, as a politician, needed to curry votes in South Carolina more than he did in North Carolina.

Ervin, an attorney who sharpened his legal wits as a justice of the state Supreme Court, stated in a recent newspaper article that if the whereabouts of Jackson's birth were submitted to an impartial court. North Carolina would wind hands down because the court "would reject as incompetent" the evidence favoring South Carolina and would accept "as absolute truth" the testimony of three witnesses who allegedly said Jackson was born in North Carolina.

Ervin recalled that Andrew Jackson Sr. died shortly before his famous son was born and that some of his in-laws took the body from the home in North Carolina to the Waxhaw Presbyterian Church in South Carolina for the funeral and burial.

Some Jackson biographers state that he was born the night after the funeral at a house on the Crawford plantation in South Carolina. The place was owned by James Crawford, who had married Mrs. Jackson's sister. However, others — including Ervin — contend that Mrs. Jackson went to the home of another sister in the George McCamie cabin, in North Carolina, where the future president was born.

Still another group says Jackson was not born until a month or so later and that Mrs. Jackson returned to her cabin in North Carolina after the funeral. Those historians say that, a few days before her third son was born, Mrs. Jackson packed her belongings and two sons aboard a wagon and set off for the Crawford plantation. But, they say, she stopped at the McCamie cabin where Jackson was born. Still other historians say she reached the Crawford plantation before Andrew was born.

Recently, the Historic Sites Division of the Department of Archives and History commissioned archaeologists to do some digging at the spot where the McCamie cabin is believed to have stood. Chris Allen, a researcher for the division, says the diggers have come up with artifacts — pieces of tile and 18th century ceramics, some fragments of 19th century ceramics, several bricks and some pieces of a stone-like substance that could hav been used for caulking a log building — but no definite proof that a cabin ever stood on the site. It had been thought that a monument which proclaimed Jackson was born there stood on rocks which had formed the foundation of the McCamie chimney. However, Allen said this was not the case.

Allen pointed out that "every major historian writing since 1965 has accepted Andrew Jackson's word that he probably knew where he was born," and that was South Carolina.

However, Ervin cited James Partin, who wrote "the first authoritative life of Jackson." In his work, published in 1861, Partin said Jackson "always supposed himself to be a native of South Carolina ... but it is as certain as any fact of the kind can be that he was mistaken."

Reagan Will Make Another Debut In June

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan will make his debut on the world's diplomatic stage when he travels to Europe in early June.

Up to now Reagan's other foreign travels — to Ottowa, Cancun, and Jamaica — have been side skirmishes compared to the nine-day swing that includes two major summit meetings and visits with the Pope, a queen and other world leaders.

To prepare himself, Reagan will read comprehensive, briefing books and hold advance meetings with his chief advisers on all the major issues he is likely to confront. The CIA also prepares special films on the leaders he will meet so that none will be completely a stranger to Reagan on first encounter.

In the world of summitry, the United States is often on the defense. But that is not Reagan's style. In major speeches before the Parliament in the Royal Gallery in London, to the Bundestag in Bonn and at the Berlin Wall, he is expected to lay down in explicit terms the main goals of U.S. foreign policy.

U.S. relations with allies are in some ways at the crossroads, and Reagan has a lot of fence mending to do.

He will also have to contend with anti-nuclear demonstrations in various capitals, having aroused fear from early statements that he views a limited nuclear war in Europe as conceivable. He has since backed away from such positions, but the memory lingers on and his hardline policies in the nuclear field have added to the suspicion.

He departs Washington June 2 and his first stop will be Paris, where he will rest from the jet lag before joining the leaders of six other Western industrialized nations for a three-day economic summit in the magnificent Palace of Versailles, where he will have to contend with criticism of high U.S. interest rates.

From France, Reagan will fly to Rome for a six-hour stay. He will meet with Italian President Sandro Pertini. He also will pay his respects to other Italian leaders, but the high point will be his visit to the Vatican to see Pope John Paul II.

Then on to London for two days where he will be the guest of Queen Elizabeth II at Windsor Castle. The British are planning grand doings for Reagan, including lunch at No. 10 Downing Street with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, and a state dinner at the Castle at a long table that seats 160 guests.

But the cameramen are waiting for the big moment when the queen invites Reagan to go horseback riding on the grounds of Windsor Castle. It's Reagan's favorite form of relaxation and it will be a respite from long sessions on state affairs.

From England, he will travel to Bonn, where he will attend the 15-nation NATO meeting with other heads of state. The alliance is in disarray with the confusion and mixed signals that have been coming from various partners.

The nuclear issue has put heavy pressure on some of the European leaders and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, in particular, is pushing hard to reaffirm the U.S. intention of placing intermediate range advanced nuclear weapons in Europe to counter what Reagan says are 300 long range SS-20 missiles targeted at Western European capitals from the Soviet Union.

As is traditional for any American president who visits Germany, a trip to the Berlin Wall is essential to reaffirm once again the U.S. determination to defend the West against any Soviet onslaught. The symbolic gesture was established by John Kennedy when he made his famous "Ich bin ein Berliner" speech at the wall in 1961 with thousands of cheering Germans at the scene.

Much planning is going into the trip. Reagan's aides say it will be grueling. They also know that Reagan's leadership ability will be severely tested at a time when the Western world is looking for new directions and understanding.

Reports Can Be Revealing

NEW YORK (AP) — This is the season for corporate show and tell. Companies big and small, prosperous and desperate, must reveal to the public how much they earned, or lost, in the first three months of the year.

And while it sometimes is painful, they also give reasons for the ups and downs.

Aside from the folks on Wall Street and the holders of a company's stock, few people outside the corporate world usually care what the reports might say. But today, with recession dominating the news, earnings reports can be particularly revealing of how business is coping.

Q. Who writes the reports?

A. The companies do, as required by law. The reports usually appear at least three weeks after the business quarter has ended, and their writing and distribution are a serious affair at most companies. Even the timing of their release can be crucial because the stock market's reaction can mean a gain or loss worth millions of dollars for the company's stock.

Q. What can one company's report on one quarter's earnings tell me?

A. If you own some of that company's stock, the answer is obvious: It tells you how much money the company earned or lost and in which direction its business is headed. For others, the report by itself is less important than an overall picture of corporate profits in the quarter. This year's first quarter is a striking example of how profits reflect the health of the economy — and, indirectly, the well-being of families.

Q. What was so remarkable about last quarter's earnings results?

A. Just this: They generally were as dismal as the economy's performance. Take Boeing Co., for example. Earlier this week it reported a 58 percent drop in first-quarter earnings compared with a year earlier. The Seattle-based aerospace concern, riding high only two years ago, has been dragged down by the depressed airline industry on which it relies for much of its business. Delta Air Lines, considered one of the strongest lines in the country, reported its first loss in 25 years.

Q. How much do the companies reveal in their earnings reports?

A. In general, they say no more than necessary. The trick to reading the reports is remembering that companies will put on their best public relations face.

Q. Do all companies use the same terms to describe profits or losses?

A. They generally use the words "net income" and "earnings" to describe their profits, but they rarely call them "profits," perhaps for fear of the sentiment in some circles that profit means corporate greed.

And some companies are equally relunctant to say earnings went down. Union Planters Corp., a bank holding company in Memphis, Tenn., took the round-about approach in explaining why its profits fell 56 percent.

Newest Senator Is Rare Specimen

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Nicholas F. Brady of New Jersey is the latest addition to the Senate and the natural impulse is to wonder why he would desert the canyons of Wall Street for a summer in the city built atop a swamp.

Brady is one of a rare species of political creations which dot the history books — an appointed seat-warming senator who foreswears running for election in his own right.

These types are usually friends and cronies, or both, of those in a position to appoint and very often they have labored in the party vineyards long and loyally.

Among the most recent that come to mind are Kaneaster Hodges of Arkansas, Benjamin Smith of Massachusetts and Hub Walters of Tennessee.

They provide ample proof that these short-term appointed senators have just about no impact on the national scene and are hurriedly forgotten.

Their only solace is being addressed as senator for the rest of their lives, usually by people who want something.

Although Brady has the right connections to get appointed and has been active in Republican politics, he does not seem to fit the mold.

As his biography indicates, Brady has been a super success in the world of business and at the professional mid-life of 52, he is at the top.

Brady, a millionaire, was, until his appointment, head of Dillon, Read and Co., an investment banking outfit, and chairman of Purolator Inc. He was also a director of NCR Corp. and the Bessemer Securities Corp.

At a news conference — the first he has ever held — Brady said he had resigned "every business connection that I know of.

"I put it that way because after 28 years in business, you don't even realize what you have," Brady said.

With those credentials, Brady hardly needs a six-month ego trip. And at 52, he is still too young for the meaningless honors reserved for age.

Why, then, did Brady decide on the six-month sabbatical from business.

Well, Brady told reporters in Washington that his decision was partly based on loyalty to friends.

Two of those friends are Vice President George Bush, for whom he worked in the 1980 pre-convention presidential campaign, and Thomas Kean, the new New Jersey governor.

"I've always felt in life that you do what your friends ask," Brady said.

There are those who would question if that kind of philosophy leads to the top of the business world.

Another reason he gave, that he wanted to "pitch in" seems more plausible. Many men in the private sector feel at some point an obligation to public service — either doing it themselves and volunteering sons and daughters.

Yet, neither of these explanations seem quite adequate.

What Brady might be doing, in accepting the interim appointment, is paying some more political dues in anticipation of becoming even more active in that arena.

It wouldn't be surprising if Brady returns to Washington at some point after he leaves the Senate.

The move could come during this or a second Reagan administration or during a Bush presidency.

Should it come to that, even six-months of Washington will give him a better idea of what to expect.

George Gallup

POLL

PRINCETON, N.J. — President Reagan's announcement of a major drive to reduce drunken driving comes at a time when a majority of adults living in states where 18-or 19-year-olds can legally purchase alcoholic beverages believe the legal age should be raised.

In these 20 states, 58 percent of residents favor raising the legal age to 20 or 21 years, while 37 percent feel the present minimum ae limits should be retained.

In the 30 states where the law provides for legal purchases at age 20 or 21, the overwhelming public sentiment is that the drinking age should be lowered (13 percent) or raised (10 percent).

When the 26th Amendment, giving 18-year-olds the vote, was ratified in 1971, many states lowered their legal drinking age, reflecting the belief that if teen-agers are old enough to vote, marry and serve in the armed forces, they are mature enough to drink alcoholic beverages responsibly. Now, some states which lowered the drining ages have experienced an increase in problem drinking by teen-agers, including a rise in the number of young drivers convicted of driving while intoxicated.

As a consequence, some states — including Massachusetts, New Jersey and Connecticut — which lowered their legal drinking age are now returning to higher age limits. In New Jersey, which upped its legal age from 18 to 19 in 1980, new elected Gov. Thomas Kean has pledged his support to further increase the minimum age to 21 if he feels this will have a positive effect.

Teen-agers' Views

Comparing the latest adult findings with those recorded in a Gallup Youth Survey of 13- to 18-year-olds conducted last year, far fewer teen-agers living in states with lower drinking ages favored raising the legal age while in states with higher limits, many more teen-agers expressed a preference for lowering the drinking age.

There is a widespread feeling among teen-agers that the legal drinking age is almost academic, since they can readily obtain alcoholic beverages regardless of their age.

President Reagan recently established a commission to work with state and local governments on drinking-driving problems. The panel is charged with heightening public awareness of the problem; urging states to deal with drunken driving in a more organized and systematic manner, encouraging the use of the latest techniques for solving the problem and generating local support for better enforcement of laws against drunken driving.

Each year drunken driving is blamed for about half the country's 50,000 automobile fatalities, an estimated 800,000 auto accidents, 750,000 serious injuries and $5 billion in economic losses.

It has been estimated that there are 3.3 million American teen-agers with serious drinking problems; 8,000 young people are killed each year in alcohol-related traffic accidents and another 40,000 disfigured; including vandalims and other crimes in addition to drunken driving, alcohol-related arrests have doubled for boys under 18 and tripled for girls in the last seven years.

One of the principal arguments for raising the legal age is that is would help prevent high school seniors, many of whom are now legal age, from buying alcoholic beverages for their younger schoolmates.

Following is the question asked and the trend:

"Do you think the legal drinking age in this state should be raised, lowered, or kept where it is now?"

	Raised	Lowered	Kept As Now	No Opinion
In States Where Legal Age Now is 18 or 19:
LATEST (March 12-15)	58%	2%	37%	3%
1979	56	1	39	4
In States Where Legal Age Now is 20 or 21:
LATEST (March 12-15)	10%	13%	75%	2%
1979	7	19	70	4

The results reported today are based on in-person interviews with 1,580 adults, 18 and older, conducted in more than 300 scientifically selected locations across the nation during the period March 12-15.

For results based on a sample of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be three percentage points in either direction.

For results based on the subsamples of persons living in states where the legal drinking age is 18 or 19 and where it is 20 or 21 one could say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be six percentage points in either directin.

British Strike Island

Stanley field and Goose Green airstrip was carried out by the carrier-based Harrier jets.

The reports said the Vulcan was refueled in the air three times during its 7,600-mile round-trip from Ascension Island.

Peter Archer, correspondent of the British domestic news agency Press Association aboard the armada's flagship, the carrier HMS Hermes, said British Harrier jets shot down two Mirages and seriously damaged others.

Archer said a British warship was hit during the air battle but the damage was not believed to be serious. He said Capt. L.Y. Middleton of the Hermes reported none of the British planes were shot down. Archer said a Harrier received a minor bullet hole in the tail-fin.

Another British correspondent aboard the Hermes, Michael Nicholson of Independent Television News, said a pair of Mirages tried to attack the task force shortly before 6 p.m. local time (5 p.m. EDT) and the Harriers were scrambled to intercept them.

Nicholson said one Mirage was downed but the second escaped and British helicopters were searching for the pilot.

Unconfirmed reports said the Vulcan also dropped anti-personnel mines to prevent repairs on the runway. It's apparent main task was to crater the airfield, while the smaller Harriers, using rockets and 30mm cannon fire, were sent in to strafe Argentine planes and missile positions.

A report by Argentina's militay junta reported some damage to buildings around the Stanley landing strip, and said a burning fuel drum ignited by a hit from the British planes was quickly extinguished.

Argentina's official Telam news agency said six Dagger jets scrambled from a southern mainland base in pursuit of five British Harrier jets and that the Daggers "were in action for 15 minutes over the British fleet."

Telam said the British attacked at 4:40 a.m. (3:40 a.m. EDT), 7:45 a.m., 8:23 a.m. and noon local time. It reported six wounded among Argentine ground forces but claimed the airstrip was undamaged and operational "in spite of heavy encounters."

However, unofficial reports circulating in Buenos Aires said the British destroyed 80 percent of the main airfield, and that one Falklands resident was wounded in the raid in addition to the Argentine troops. There was no confirmation that any of the 1,800 British-descended Falklanders was hit. Most were believed hiding on sheep ranches in the interior.

The British Defense Ministry reported the first raid took place during the night and was flown by the long-range Vulcan from Ascension. It said the second attack took place three hours later, just before dawn, and was flown by the vertical takeoff Harrier jets flying from armada carriers.

Argentina complained to the U.N. Security Council in New York that the British attack violated Resolution 502 calling for an end to hostilities, resumption of negotiations and withdrawal of Argentine troops from the Falklands. But it requested no further action from the Council.

U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar meets Sunday night with British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym after Pym holds talks with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. in Washington.

The British Defense Ministry said the raids were aimed at enforcing the 200-mile air and sea blockade imposed around the disputed islands early Friday and denying the Argentines use of the airstrips — a vital prelude to any large-scale British landing to retake the islands.

The British armada, commanded by Rear Adm. John Woodward, has 20 Harriers on its two aircraft carriers, Hermes and Invincible. The Argentines are believed to have 163 warplanes, most of them on mainland bases.

Most of the 27 warships spearheading the British battle fleet — which is backed up by 38 support vessels — are believed to be patrolling about 100 miles northeast of the Falklands beyond the combat range of Argentine air force planes on the mainland, 250 miles west of the Falklands.

The loss of the airfield at Stanley would eliminate the Argentines' only air base outside the mainland and hamper their capability for air strikes against any British invasion force.

Reagan: British Attack Was A Surprise

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan and other U.S. officials, denying they had advance knowledge of British attacks on Argentine-occupied airbases on the Falkland Islands, said Saturday they still have hopes for a peaceful solution to the South Atlantic crisis.

Asked if he thought full-scale hostilities will erupt because of Saturday's clashes, Reagan said, "No, I don't believe they have to necessarily follow. We hope there can be a peaceful solution."

The State Department, meanwhile, issued a written statement saying, "The United States remains ready to assist the parties in finding a fairly early settlement."

British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym arrived in Washington for Sunday mneetings with Secretary of States Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger before going on for further talks at the United Nations on the crisis.

Pym told reporters on arrival the British strategy "has been to apply inexorable pressure upon Argentina, that is, diplomatic, economic and military, to indicate that aggression does not pay. This would clearly indicate that recent events have brought this home rather sharply."

It had not previously been known that Pym would see Weinberger. Haig said Friday the United States would "respond positively" to British requests for aid, without direct U.S. involvement, but it was not known if Pym was bringing any such requests.

Reagan told reporters that while the United States had no advance warning of the British attack he does not believe that wider hostilities "have to necessarily follow."

Commenting as he left the White House for a trip to the opening of the World's Fair in Knoxville, Tenn., Reagan said there were conflicting stories about what happened.

"All I know is we still stand ready to help," Reagan said as he boarded a helicopter. "We hope there can be a peaceful solution."

The British Defense Ministry said in London that the planes involved in the attack were carrier-based Harrier jets and Vulcan bombers, which flew from the Ascension Island 3,500 miles away and refueled in the air. But the Argentine Embassy in Washington said no Vulcan planes participated in the attack.

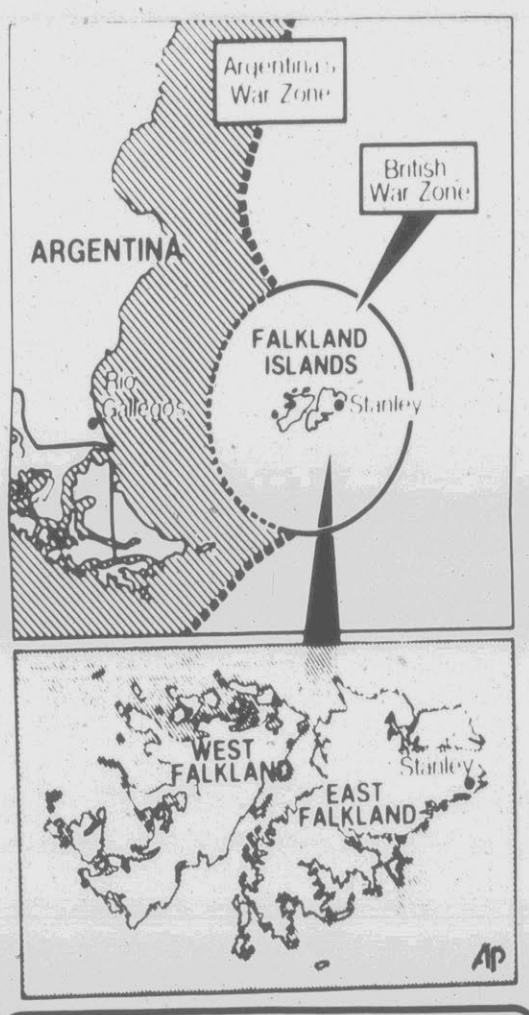

Reagan said later in Knoxville that he had "no report" in advance of the British attacks. But, after conferring Adm. John Poindexter, the top-ranking military aide on the National Security Council's staff, he acknowledged that the Ascension Islands facility "is a joint-use base" for both Britain and the United States.

When asked if Argentina and Britain were engaged in an "all-out war," Reagan said that was not the case.

Joseph Reap, a State Department spokesman, also was asked whether the United States had any advance word on the British attack.

"No, none whatsoever," he replied. "The British do not advise us of their military plans."

Reap said the department had no additional details on the raids and declined to speculate on how Argentina might react to them.

Latin Nations Denounce Britain, U.S.

By FREDERICK KIEL

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Latin American nations united Saturday to denounce Britain's attack on the Falkland Islands and U.S. support for Britain. Some May Day marches in Latin America turned into anti-British rallies.

Mexican government officials condemned Britain's air attack on Falkland Islands bases, warning that full-scale war means irreversible consequences for the entire world.

In Caracas, groups of demonstrators participating in May Day marches Saturday burned British flags and an effigy of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to protest the bombing of the Falklands by British warplanes.

Argentine groups marched in the parade with placards saying, "The Malvinas are ours," and "Get out, British and Yankee imperialists." The Malvinas is the Spanish term for the Falklands.

In Rio de Janeiro, Foreign Minister Bernardo Pericas read a government statement saying, "Brazil can only disagree with the armed attack carried out this morning."

Nicaraguan Interior Minister Tomas Borges told the May Day parade in Managua all Nicaraguans support Argentina.

"The Nicaraguan people justify and know how to maintain, in spite of everything, its unconditional solidarity with the Argentine people who today were attacked by English airplanes in the Malvina Islands," Borgas said.

Guatemala's Foreign Minister Alfonso Alonso Lima said he deplored the British air attack on Argentine ports, noting the attacks "complicate the serious situation in the South Atlantic."

Fidel Castro's Cuba lashed out at "immodest support from American imperialism" for helping Great Britain to "impose by force what does not belong to them by right" in the Falklands crisis.

"Cuba repudiates this intolerable aggression and repeats its solidarity with the Argentina people fighting to defend their sovereignty," a press dispatch from the official Prensa Latina news agency monitored in Mexico City said.

Salvadoran leaders, engaged in a civil war with leftist guerrillas they say are supported by Cuba, also denounced U.S. support of Great Britain.

"The United States has broken the Inter-American treaty by supporting Britain," Hugo Carrillo Corleto, deputy to the new Salvadoran constituent assembly, told UPI.

"I personally feel we must align ourselves with Argentina because it's part of the American territory," Carrillo, a National Conciliation Party leader, said.

Can Falklands War Be Stopped There?

By BARRY JAMES
United Press International

Now that war has broken out in the Falklands the big question is, can it be stopped there?

Will it drag in the superpowers, polarize the Americas, jeopardize the international banking system and lead to social collapse in Argentina?

The Argentine government pointedly summoned the Soviet ambassador for talks only minutes after Secretary of State Alexander Haig announced the United States was coming down on Britain's side.

The meeting may have been intended as a warning Argentina would turn to the Soviet bloc for support if its back is pushed against the wall.

Argentina sells much of its beef and wheat to the Soviet Union, although the ruling junta remains firmly anti-communist.

It will be argued in Buenos Aires, however, that anti-communism has not paid off in winning the support or even the neutrality of the United States. Inter-American relations are likely to take a severe hammering as a result of Britain's offensive and America's siding with the British.

Latin American nations overwhelmingly back Argentina's claim to sovereignty over the Falklands, but gave only lukewarm support when Buenos Aires last week invoked the mutual defense provisions of the Rio treaty. Now the assertion by Washington of a trans-Atlantic rather than a hemispheric alliance may provoke a polarization between Latins and "gringos."

Officials in Latin America already are questioning the United States' value as a mediator in the dispute and criticizing its decision to come to the aid of an outside colonial power.

President Reagan's decision to back Britain may jeopardize his anti-communist strategy in Latin America because Moscow will almost certainly argue the United States cannot be relied upon as an ally or arms supplier.

The conflict casts a shadow over the international banking system. Argentina has more than $34 billion worth of international debts, of which about $9.2 billion is owed to U.S. banks.

Argentina could retaliate bndeclaring a moratorium on its repayments to British and American banks. It could eventually default.

The conflict increases the risks of regional instability. Chile, with which Argentina has come close to war over islands off the southern tip of South America, might be tempted to take advantage of Argentine weakness to side with Britain and attack its neighbor. Bolivia and Peru are likely to go to Argentina's support with materiel support if the conflict worsens.

Argentina might be tempted to develop nuclear weapons, further threatening instability.

The Falklands crisis has an indirect bearing on the East-West situation. Britain, which has the main responsibility for guarding the Eastern Atlantic, has sent many of its ships and the bulk of its naval aviation to the South Atlantic, creating some concern among NATO partners about the maritime defense of Europe.

But Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher believes that unless Britain is prepared to defend a responsibility, it would lose credibility not only in the South Atlantic but also in Europe.

The United States may cite its willingness to side with a NATO partner at the risk of regional interests as an additional reason for European allies to step up defense spending when President Reagan goes to an alliance summit in Bonn next month.

Soviets Criticize U.S. Aid

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union called President Reagan a hypocrite Saturday for pledging military aid to Britain in its conflict with Argentina over the Falkland Islands.

The official news agency Tass said Reagan, "brushing aside the hypocrisy of American diplomacy," offered Britain "all the necessary assistance" to "reestablish its colonial rule."

It said the president's announcement Friday of "anti-Argentine military and economic sanctions" proved that Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.'s mediation mission between Britain and Argentina was, "sheer hypocrisy."

"Its purpose was to consolidate British and American interests in the South Atlantic," the agency claimed. "This mission only enabled Britain to gain time, in order to take its warships to the Falkland Islands and to establish a military blockade around the archipelago."

"Once more," Tass asserted, Washington was trying "to put pressure" on Third World countries "with a view to adapting them to its imperialist interests."

The Soviet Union initially claimed it was neutral in the British-Argentine dispute and advocated negotiations for a peaceful settlement. But the state-run media has consistently portrayed the Argentine takeover of the Falklands as a move to end British "colonialism" and restore sovereignty to what the Soviets claim are the islands' legitimate rulers.

The Soviet Union is a major importer of Argentine wheat, and has reportedly helped Argentina track the British naval armada in the South Atlantic.

Will Not Be Required To Prove He Was Insane

Hinckley Wins Sanity Ruling

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge ruled Saturday that if John W. Hinckley Jr. is to be convicted, the prosecution must prove "beyond a reasonable doubt" that he was sane when he shot President Reagan and three others last year.

The alternative would have forced the defense to show that Hinckley was insane.

"The government will bear the burden on all of the counts in proving the defendant was sane beyond a reasonable doubt," U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker said. "The burden will not be placed on the defense."

Although it lost that one point, the prosecution won another.

Parker decided, after a 4½-hour hearing, that the government's key psychiatrists may testify in the trial, even though some of their information came from evidence obtained illegally.

Hinckley was charged in three counts of violating federal law and in 10 of violating the District of Columbia Code.

The two jurisdictions have diametrically opposed burdens of proof if a defendant claims insanity. The federal law requires the government to prove a defendant was sane when the crime was committed. Under D.C. law, the defendant must brear the burden of proving "by a preponderance of evidence" that he was insane.

Parker said he had ruled in such hybrid cases previously that the government must prove sanity and that he saw no reason to act differently in the Hinckley case.

The judge also said he will not allow the jury to consider "diminished capacity" in the case, since federal courts in the District of Columbia have permitted such a defense only in murder cases.

If he had ruled otherwise, defense attorneys would have argued Hinckley did not have sufficient mental capacity to form the intent to commit first degree murder.

In the defense challenge to the prosecution psychiatrists, Parker ruled the doctors "arrived at their judgments, conclusions, and analyses without the information subject of this inquiry."

Dr. Ernst Rodin, one of the five doctors who testified in the unusual Saturday hearing, startled the courtroom when he said:

"I heard tapes of Mr. Hinckley's New Year's message to the world and other tapes he made." Rodin, a neurologist from Detroit, did not elaborate.

A Harvard psychiatrist testified that Hinckley "described in intimate detail his thought processes before, during and after" he shot Reagan.

For that reason, said Dr. Parke E. Dietz, the information he got from evidence that has been barred from Hinckley's trial would be "decimal points between zero and one" on a scale of one to ten.

Other prosecution psychiatrists said much the same thing:

"It would be on the order of one or two pieces in a 1,000-piece puzzle," said Dr. James L. Cavanaugh Jr., of Chicago.

"I relied on (the inadmissible evidence) to be another source to verify or contradict what I heard from other sources," said Dr. Sally Johnson, a prison psychiatrist at Butner, N.C.

Dr. Jonas Rappeport of Baltimore said his evaluation of Hinckley was formed in large part on what the defendant told him "spontaneously without any prodding."

The psychiatrists were not permitted to testify what conclusion they reached, but Dr. Johnson said "I got the perceptin that Mr. Hinckley was oriented to person, time, place and generally to the situation.

The government has said that the psychiatrists will testify they found no mental defect in the blond drifter who said he shot the president to get the attention of actress Jodie Foster.

Defense lawyers asked that all the testimony of the government doctors be barred from the trial. Prosecutors, whose case could be seriously damaged by such a development, are fighting to have the doctors' conclusions presented to the jury.

Hinckley was in the courtroom, staring at his hands much of the time, during a hearing called to determine whether three government psychiatrists' findings were "tainted" by information that has since been ordered excluded from the trial.

The evidence was barred by Parker because three federal agents — and perhaps a fourth — interviewed Hinckley on the day of the shooting, March 30, 1981, before a lawyer was present and because authorities illegally seized some notes from Hinckley's cell last July at the federal institution at Butner, N.C.

Prison Calm After Uprising

YPSILANTI, Mich. (AP) — Michigan prison officials said Saturday about 75 inmates would remain locked in their cells indefinitely after an uprising that left two guards and four inmates injured.

But Louella Burke, a duty warden at Huron Valley Correctional Facility, said, "We're trying to run most things as close to normal as we can."

The disturbance began at 12:30 p.m. Friday when eight prisoners being taken to a recreation room jumped and beat two guards, stabbed one in the back, and took their keys, Warden William Grant said. It ended almost three hours later after two squads of corrections officers clad in riot gear moved into the cellblock.

"They went on a rampage, breaking windows and setting fires," the warden said. No damage estimate was available, but he said a guards' station also was destroyed and some computer equipment was smashed.

Up to 35 inmates participated in the disturbance at its height, but only nine remained in the cellblock when it was retaken at 3:20 p.m.

The maximum-security prison houses 400 of the most troublesome offenders in Michigan's penal system, and the unit where the disturbance took place holds the facility's most violent residents.

Prisoners were confined to their cells for a weapons search Friday night, but Mrs. Burke said "an insignificant number" of crude weapons were found and most inmates were released from the lockdown Saturday.

"We hope by Monday for the rest of the prison to be back to total normal operation," she said.

May Day Demonstrators Stage Turbulent Rallies

By United Press International

Workers from Warsaw to Rio de Janeiro marched Saturday in turbulent May Day demonstrations. Solidarity supporters ripped down red banners in Poland, two Communists were killed in Portugal and neo-Nazis shouting "Sieg Heil" stormed a union rally in West Germany.

In Oporto, Portugal, the two young May Day demonstrators were killed when riot police fired into a melee of rock-throwing Communist trade unionists in the country's worst street violence since its 1974-75 revolution.

At least 40 demonstrators and 37 police were injured in the clashes, which began before midnight Friday and continued for hours. Three wounded demonstrators were listed in "grave condition" at a local hospital.

More than 50,000 Poles marched through the streets of Warsaw shouting "Long Live Solidarity" and ripping down Communist Party banners in front of lines of heavily armed police watching in grim silence.

It was the largest, best-organized and boldest protest by Poles since Solidarity was suspended and martial law declared Dec. 13 by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski.

"Solidarity! Solidarity!" The chant resounded through the cobblestoned streets of Old Warsaw. "Down with the Junta." "Free Poland."

In Moscow, an obviously ailing President Leonid Brezhnev stood weak and frail to review thousands of workers parading through Red Square carrying banners, flowers, flags and balloons in a rally boycotted by Western ambassadors.

In Frankfurt, West Germany, about 200 neo-Nazis shouting "Sieg Heil" crashed a rally of 5,000 members of the German Federation of Labor rally, tore down union banners and clashed with unionists shouting "Nazis out."

Police said 57 neo-Nazis were arrested and later released and four injured. Seven union members also were injured.

In Rio de Janeiro, an opposition labor group seeking to unite all Brazilian workers called an afternoon rally at which 20,000 people were expected.

Thousands of Italian workers marched in major cities throughout the country.

In the Sicilian capital of Palermo, 3,000 people carrying banners bearing anti-Mafia slogans turned out to hear Communist Party leaders denounce the Mafia assassination Friday of regional party head Pio Latorre.

France celebrated its first May Day under the Socialist government of President Francois Mitterrand with 50,000 people wearing red carnations and scarlet armbands marching in a Communist-sponsored rally.

At the Vatican, Pope John Paul II told a crowd of 3,000 people that workers should "become newly aware of the dignity that is their own."

In Turkey, military vans and vehicles patrolled the streets of all major cities and police searched pedestrians in attempts to thwart possible leftist demonstrations.

Mayors Favor Handgun Ban

CHICAGO (AP) — The U.S. Conference of Mayors, representing about 850 cities, has filed a brief in federal appeals court supporting the handgun ban enacted in January in suburban Morton Grove.

Morton Grove handgun owners appealed after a judge ruled the law constitutional last December. The law prohibits possession of guns except by law officers and licensed collectors.

"The decision of this court is of enormous importance to cities throughout the United States as they struggle to valid mechanisms for preventing crimes and other acts of violence perpetrated with firearms," the conference said in a statement.

The brief filed Friday with the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals asks the appeals court to consider its views in an advisory capacity.

DIPLOMATES EXPELLED

LISBON (AP) — The government has ordered two senior Czechoslovak diplomats expelled from Portugal, Lisbon newspapers reported Saturday. No reason was given for the expulsions of Czechoslovak Ambassador Jan Janik and embassy Third Secretary Ladislav Kolackovsky.

Reagan Says Government Caused Energy Crisis

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — President Reagan opened the 1982 World's Fair on Saturday with a vow that Americans will never again "be held hostage by the whim of any country or cartel" for energy supplies.

He also used the occasion to call on Americans to put pressure on Congress for passage of a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced federal budget.

Standing in the shadow of a 266-foot tall Sunsphere at a fair based on the theme, "Energy turns the world," Reagan said energy shortages as well as the country's economic problems "were in large part caused by government excesses and quick fixes, not by a basic scarcity of supply."

The answer to energy problems is free enterprise, Reagan said, boasting of cutting energy spending by $5 billion, speeding up the decontrol of oil prices and proposing the abolishment of the Department of Energy.

He also renewed his call for faster decontrol of natural gas prices but acknowledged that it would be impossible to get Congress to approve gas decontrol legislation this year.

Reagan said past administrations tried to cope with energy shortages "by interfering with the market process. The results were gas lines, bottlenecks and bureaucracy."

He added, "We are unleashing again the power of our people and the forces of Democratic capitalism."

Fair organizers predicted an opening day audience of 100,000 people, and visitors were required to walk through metal detectors as a security precaution for the president's visit.

Arriving at the fair, Reagan made a radio address to the nation from the U.S. Pavilion, a solar-powered building packed with five stories of exhibits.

Declaring that Congress finds it too difficult to withstand pressures for increased spending, Reagan urged support for a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget.

"I am appealing to all of you at the grass roots: start putting pressure on the Congress now," he said. "Let's find out who's hiding behind the rhetoric of balanced budget but is unwilling to make the cuts in spending needed to bring them about."

Responding to criticism that his administration's cuts in food stamps, housing supports and other social spending have been unfair to the poor, Reagan declared, "We are devoting one of the largest shares in the history of the federal budget to assisting low-income Americans.

"But let's ask ourselves where was the fairness in those bankrupt spending policies that gave us double-digit inflation, record interest rates and a trillion-dollar debt? Where is the fairness now if we make even more painful the highest peacetime tax burden we've ever known?"

Rep. Geraldine A. Ferraro of New York, giving the Democratic response to Reagan's radio speech, disputed the president's assertion that the economy was starting to improve.

"The notion that things are improving and that recovery is around the corner is a cruel illusion — the image of an oasis held out to the millions of Americans lost in the economic desert that is the result of Reaganomics," she said in Washington.

She said this year's federal deficit was expected to exceed $100 billion, while in fiscal 1984 the deficit would reach at least $216 billion, despite Reagan's earlier pledge to achieve a balanced budget by that year.

"Now the president is trying to escape responsibility for his failure to keep that campaign promise," the New York congresswoman said. "His enormous tax cuts and excessive defense spending have created these deficits. But instead of owning up to that fact, the president is now hiding behind a call for a constitutional amendment to balance the budget."

At a fair where 22 nations are represented, Reagan singled out the Soviet Union for criticism as he dedicated the U.S. Pavilion. Noting that there would be May Day parades at the Kremlin on Saturday, the president declared, "They celebrate a government that promises a freedom it systematically denies and proclaims justice while practicing tyranny."

Reagan's speech opening the World's Fair focused on energy and the economy.

"We still have a long, long way to go before our economy is back in shape and this recession is causing great pain to too many of our people," Reagan told the crowd.

World's Fair Draws Crowd For Opening

By STEVE HOLLAND

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — The 1982 World's Fair opened Saturday with an energy theme, a burst of star-spangled pagentry and a pledge by President Reagan that this country would never again be "held hostage" by a foreign oil cartel.

Hundreds of multicolored balloons floated into the clear blue skies, firecrackers popped and a 21-gun salute boomed out announcing the arrival of the president to launch officially the $173-million extravaganza that will run for six months.

Tens of thousands of tourists jammed the 72-acre downtown fair site and cheered as Reagan told them the exhibits they would see at the exposition would seem as "fanciful as the extraction of sunbeams from cucumbers in Gulliver's Travels."

Marines in dress uniform simultaneously raised the flags of 22 nations participating in the fair, including Britains's familiar Union Jack and the maple leaf of Canada.

Security was tight for the president's visit. All persons entering through the VIP gate leading to the area where Reagan spoke were screened by metal detectors and searched.

The fair exhibits include a tiny slab from the Great Wall of China, artifacts from King Tut's tomb, and a 3,000-year-old mummy from Peru, but Reagan was the main attraction on opening day.

He was applauded numerous times during his talk, and when he finished there were shouts of, "We love you."

William Burks of Mishawaka, Ind., perched on a hillside while his wife stood behind ropes for a glimpse of Reagan's motorcade, said, You want the truth? I think this whole thing is just an overgrown 4-H fair."

But schoolteacher Caroline Scarborough of Paris, Tenn., said she was "so excited I could burst." Her companion, Joan Jones, also a Paris teacher, said she is a Democrat but wanted to see Reagan just the same.

"I'm going back to Paris and tell everybody to leave spring planting and come to the fair," Ms. Jones said.

Fire Kills 4 In New Jersey

JERSEY CITY, N.J. (AP) — An apartment house fire that killed four children who apparently ran into a shower stall in confusion was believed to have been set by an arsonist, officials said Saturday.

The Friday night blaze was the second suspicious fire of the day in North Jersey. Before dawn, a fire surged through a waterfront hotel in neighboring Hoboken, killing 12 people, including seven children.

The four children were trapped in a shower stall on the second floor when fire swept through the two-story wooden apartment building about 9:15 p.m. Friday.

Two people escaped from the burning apartment and four others escaped from the first floor, Lecowitch said. No other injuries were reported.

"The children were trapped," said Joe Lecowitch, director of the Red Cross in Hudson County. "I think instead of running out, they ran into a shower stall."

The youngsters were still alive but unconscious when rescued from the burning apartment. They died a short time later.

The fire has been termed suspicious, and officials were seeking a suspect, said Fire Lt. Francis Ryan.

Public Relations Director John Whitely of the Jersey City Medical Center identified the dead as 6-month-old Miriam Ortiz and her 12-year-old sister, Diana Sanchez; and 4-year-old Julinn Diaz and his brother, 7-year-old Alfredo Matos.

The girls apparently were not related to the boys, he said.

'Frail' Breshnev Views Parade

MOSCOW (UPI) — Looking very frail and weary, President Leonid Brezhnev stood under a light, chilling rain Saturday to review the Soviet Union's May Day parade in a ceremony boycotted again by Western ambassadors.

Several times the 75-year-old leader sat down in a chair to rest during the 90-minute parade. He appeared to be unable to raise his right hand above his chest to wave at the marchers carrying posters that mixed accolades for the Soviet work force with denunciations of U.S. military policies.

Diplomats attending the parade through Red Square eyed the Politburo line-up flanking Brezhnev to try to glean possible changes in the Kremlin power structure following the death of one of Brezhnev's aides and the signs that Brezhnev himself was in failing health.

Though changes were noticed, the diplomats shook their heads and came away puzzled at the new line-up, unable to say for sure who was up and who might be on his way down in the Kremlin's dark corridors of power.

It was the capital's most colorful holiday. Thousands of workers carrying banners, flowers, flags and balloons trooped through Red Square as Brezhnev's Kremlin colleagues applauded and waved.

He waved weakly as the Kremlin clock struck 10 a.m. A light but steady drizzle began to fall and a chilling wind swept through Red Square. Brezhnev slipped into a chair for the first of several rest breaks.

His face was expressionless. His right hand moved weakly to his chest to acknowledge the cry of "hurrah" that greeted every mention of his name by an announcer.

Bundled in an overcoat and fedora, Brezhnev endured the entire 90-minute parade, but some observers suggested the demonstration of socialist pride may have been shortened this year to make his presence possible.

As they have done for the past few years, most Western ambassadors including U.S. envoy Arthur A. Hartman boycotted the parade to protest the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan and now martial law in Poland.

Joining the protest were Canada, Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, Ireland, the Netherlands, Australia, New Zealand, Belgium, Luxembourg, Spain and Portugal. They all sent lesser ranking diplomats to the parade.

Flanking Brezhnev were Premier Nikolai Tikhonov to the left and Moscow Communist Party chief Viktor Grishin to the right. Flanking them were Konstantin Chernenko and Andrei Kirilenko, both mentioned as possible successors to Brezhnev.

Western diplomats scrutinize the Politburo line-up every year for clues to power changes in the Kremlin. The death of Politburo ideologue Mikhail Suslov Jan. 25 moved Chernenko and Kirilenko a place closer to kezhnev.

Iran Claims Three More Iraqi Planes Shot Down

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran said it shot down three Iraqi jetfighters over the occupied Iranian port city of Khorramshahr on Saturday, the second day of a major drive to recapture its southwestern oil province of Khuzistan.

Iraq denied losing any planes and said it shot down an Iranian jetfighter and eight helicopter gunships.

Each side claimed about 6,000 enemy deaths in the two days of ground fighting in the area. The rival claims could not be independently verified. Iran and Iraq rarely allow Western reporters to the battlefront.

"May Allah support our warriors in their current drive for final victory," Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said in a speech broadcast by Tehran radio.

Military analysts say Iran could cut off the Iraqi army's supply lines by recapturing Khorramshahr, putting it in a certain position to win the 19-month-old border war.

A statement by Iran's joint chiefs of staff said the three jets shot down Saturday, including a French-made Mirage, brought to nine the number of Iraqi aircraft destroyed in two days of escalated combat along the southern end of the 300-mile battle front.

It said thousands of Iranian troops had crossed the shark-infested Karun River on pontoon bridges to break through Iraqi defense lines and encircle Khorramshar on the northern tip of the disputed Shatt-al-Arab waterway.

Iraq said its forces staged 218 bombing missions to destroy the pontoon bridges and besieged the attackers west of the river.

Iran claims it has recaptured 1,160 square miles of the estimated 7,700 square miles of western and southern territory Iraq seized at the beginning of the two Persian Gulf nations' war over the Shatt-al-Arab.

The waterway, Iraq's only shipping outlet to the Persian Gulf, is claimed by both nations and was the flashpoint of the conflict begun Sept. 22, 1980. Arab Moslem Iraq and Persian Moslem Iran have been quarreling about their border for 14 centuries.

The gulf nations, led by Saudi Arabia, have already poured $30 billion into the Iraqi treasury to help offset war losses. They fear an outright Iranian victory in the war would help Khomeini's Islamic revolution sweep the gulf region and topple their conservative monarchies.

Hijackers Free Last Hostages

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Four leftist gunmen Saturday freed the last 11 hostages held for 72 hours on a hijacked Honduran airliner rigged with dynamite and left on another plane for Cuba after their demands were rejected.

The hijackers, who earlier vowed to "win or die," in the siege, yielded the last exhausted captives several hours after a daring night-time escape by 10 hostages, including the pilot and eight Americans who dived through smashed windows and an emergency door.

Two of the original 40 hostages on the four-engine Honduran Air Service turboprop seized Wednesday remained hospitalized. Others suffered minor cuts and scrapes but all were in good condition, army officials said.

Honduras' conservative government refused to pay a $100,000 ransom and denied it held 52 political prisoners the hijackers wanted released. But it arranged safe conduct for the gunmen to Cuba aboard a larger four-engine plane, a presidential spokesman said.

Monsignor Andres Cordero Lanza, Vatican ambassador to Honduras, led the remaining captives to safety after the hijackers accepted the safe conduct offer during his eighth negotiating session with them in four days.

Hunt Helps Dedicate Jordan Dam

MONCURE, N.C. (AP) — Spectators in shorts gathered Saturday for the dedication of the B. Everett Jordan Dam and heard politicians in suits extol the new lake behind it.

"I see jobs in the lake, and that is literally true," said Gov. Jim Hunt. "There will be thousands and thousands of jobs associated with recreation here."

About 500 people attended the lunch-hour ceremony, then joined at least 3,000 others to watch a parade of boats on the 14,300-acre reservoir.

The lake was built by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to provide flood control for cities downstream and boating and fishing reacreation. But the lake also is designed to provide up to 100 million gallons of water a day to local governments.

"By the year 2000, the (state's) population will grow by 2 million people," Hunt said. "Without adequate water supply, we would not be able to provide jobs for these people."

Hunt said the lake would be a "specific advantage as we try to recruit industry from all over the country and the world to this area."

Environmentalists have opposed the lake, arguing that wastewater nutrients from cities upstream on the Haw River will flow into the shallow reservoir and foster algae blooms and poor water quality.

Greensboro, Chapel Hill, Durham and Burlington discharge their wastes upstream, but officials have said it is too early to determine the new lake's water quality.

Lt. Gen. Joseph K. Bratton of Washington, chief of the Army Corps of Engineers, said in a speech, "The project will provide benefits far into the 21st century."

State Rep. John M. Jordan, D-Alamance, son of the late U.S. senator for whom the reservoir is named; and U.S. Rep. Ike Andrews, D-N.C., also spoke.

The project began in May 1962, when the late Sen. B. Everett Jordan and former Sen. Sam Ervin Jr. asked a Senate subcommittee to fund it. Originally estimated to cost about $25 million, the Corps most recently placed the total cost at $127 million.

EPA Orders Exhaust Study

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has ordered the state to begin an auto exhaust inspection program in Mecklenburg County or face a loss of federal air pollution funds.

Similar warnings were sent out Friday to 10 other states: Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, Nevada, Ohio, Tennessee, Texas and Wisconsin.

In addition to the loss of money to the state, the EPA could ban new industries that emit large amounts of carbon monoxide in Mecklenburg County if the inspection program is not started.

State environmental officials have been delaying the program for a year in the hope EPA would drop the requirement.

Officials have estimated it would cost almost $2.5 million a year to inspect about 230,000 vehicles in the county annually.

The program is intended to catch poorly tuned cars and require owners to tune them up to reduce the amounts of carbon monoxide being released in the environment.

The cost of the inspections has been estimated at $10 a car when combined with regular auto safety inspections.

A decision on implementing the program or fighting the EPA decision rests with the state Environmental Management Commission, which meets May 13 in Raleigh. The state has 30 days to respond.

Paul Wilms, assistant director of the state Environmental Management Division, said the inspection program would be started 135 days after the meeting, sometime in September or October.

But legislation pending in Congress could stop the program before it starts by weakening requirements for mandatory exhaust inspection programs.

Federal law now requires areas with more than 200,000 population to adopt the programs if air pollution levels exceed specified limits. The bill would require the inspections on areas of more than 500,000 population, but Mecklenburg County has 404,000 residents.

Billy Graham Leaves Crusade For Soviet Trip

By MARY WESSLING
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Evangelist Billy Graham, saying he seeks peace of the spirit and not unilateral disarmament, interrupted an arduous crusade Saturday to go to the Soviet Union, where he will preach and address a conference on nuclear war.

"I'm not going in any way, shape or form as a political person," Graham said at a news conference in Manchester, N.H., on Saturday before his departure that night. "I'm going only as a preacher of gospel."

He spoke before a rally that attracted 10,600 people. The throng included 19 people who handed out leaflets saying "Billy stay home, don't go to Moscow."

Graham said Vice President George Bush called him "to tell me a little bit about what one of our ambassadors had written about some risks involved. But no one in the White House has ever told me not to go." Graham declined to elaborate on the "risks."

Newsweek magazine had reported that the White House tried to discourage Graham from making the trip, fearing he would be used for propaganda. Graham, who once said of the Soviet Union that "the devil is their God," said he hoped the trip would contribute to better international understanding.

"I'm going to preach the gospel wherever I go," he said in a recent interview. "My message is the gospel. I don't want to get sidetracked and have the press always building me up as a leader of some peace movement. I will certainly be there, but my main thing, my primary thing will not have changed. It will be the gospel of Jesus Christ."

The 63-year-old Southern Baptist minister, who had been conducting a two-month crusade in New England, planned to leave for Moscow late Saturday.

He said he is to preach in a Russian Orthodox cathedral and a Baptist Church on May 9, and two days later is to address the Soviet-sponsored international meeting of religious leaders called "World Conference: Religious Workers for Saving the Sacred Gift of Life from Nuclear Catastrophe."

Many of his recent speeches have carried the theme of "peace in a nuclear age." Before campus audiences, Graham calls for the elimination of weapons of mass destruction.

But Graham said, "I am not a pacifist and I'm not for unilateral disarmament."

"I still don't know the total answer to this nuclear situation," he said. "I'm still studying it ... when you deal with nuclear weapons, you're dealing with millions and millions of innocent people.

"If all the weapons of the world were detroyed — all the nuclear weapons were destroyed — would we have peace? The answer is no. Man has always been fighting since the beginning."

The peace of which the gospel speaks, he tells his audience, is the "one exit out of the human dilemma."

Graham, who grew up on a dairy farm in Charlotte, N.C., has during his 40-year career ministered to presidents and preached to an estimated 91 million people in 50 countries.

Marchers Cite Reagan Policies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of demonstrators marched through Washington to the Capitol Saturday, protesting President Reagan's domestic and foreign policies and demanding their reversal.

"The marching of today will be the beginning of a great many marches of tomorrow until the time when these (administration) people understand what this country is all about," said Paul O'Dwyer, former president of the New York City Council.

After massing at a downtown park, the demonstrators, toting anti-Reagan banners and chanting anti-Reagan slogans, marched peacefully through the city to a rally in front of the Capitol. Several of the demonstrators were overcome with exhaustion, but police said there were no serious problems.

"You've got a lot of old people here, and it was a long march, two or two and a half miles," a police officer explained.

As the march began, the U.S. Park Police estimated the crowd at 2,100. Protest leaders said 12,000 took part in the demonstration, coming from all along the Eastern Seaboard and from as far west as Colorado and Oklahoma.

Organized by the All-People's Congress, a coalition of more than 800 labor, student, community and social groups, the protest culminated a week of demonstrations spanning the nation that were aimed at building public pressure to "roll back Reaganism."

The coalition is demanding immediate restoration of spending cuts in social and education programs, a halt to Reagan's military buildup and an end to U.S. involvement in several foreign nations, including El Salvador.

"There is a great movement on foot that will topple not only Reagan but the Congress and the Senate that are standing idly by at a time when there is hunger in this land," O'Dwyer told the crowd.

There were similar demonstrations in a dozen other cities, including Miami, Los Angeles and Knoxville, Tenn., where Reagan was opening the World's Fair.

"The All-People's Congress is already planning a new set of national activities to take place in the early summer or late fall," said coalition spokesman Bill Massey. "It will be a long, hot summer of protests against Reagan's reactionary program."

U.S May Sign Sea Law Pact

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — U.S. Ambassador James L. Malone said Saturday the United States still might join an international Law of the Sea treaty if American conditions regarding deep-seabed mining are met before the newly adopted pact is signed.

But Ambassador Tommy Koh of Singapore, president of the 152-nation sea law conference, angrily rejected further tampering with a draft text that represents the results of eight years of tough give-and-take between the developing and industrialized world.

"There can be no more negotiations." Koh told reporters Saturday. Third World countries had made every possible concession to the United States "in return for nothing," he said.

Malone, current head of the U.S. sea law delegation, told a news conference "it's still possible" the Reagan administration will sign the treaty despite its negative vote Friday.

"We have made no final judgment in terms of what our position will be on the signing of the ...convention or ratification of the convention," he said. "I do not feel that our objectives were met. We now must assess that situation and decide what our next steps will be."

Malone said he thought revisions to the treaty still could be sought at a final meeting of the conference's drafting committee at New York or Geneva in July and August before final signature next December.

Plant Worries State Officials

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP).— While destructive gypsy moths from the North strive to gain a foothold in North Carolina's skies, state officials fear another scourge from the South may endanger its waters.

Both the moths and the aquatic plant called Hydrilla verticillata appear innocent enough. But the moth larvae are responsible for defoliating millions of acres of forests each year in New England, and hydrilla costs Florida up to $12 million a year to control. California recently appropriated $2.5 million for the same purpose.

Hydrilla was imported into the United States from Africa for use in aquariums, said Jay Langfelder of North Carolina's Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

"The trouble is that it grows so fast and reproduces to prolifically that no one seems to be able to stop it once it gets free in the environment," he said. "It has been called the perfect weed because it is so hardy and can reproduce in so many ways."

Langfelder says once hydrilla gets into a body of water, it spreads very rapidly and takes its toll on swimming, boating and fishing. It also hurts farming by ruining up to 60 percent of the retrievable water in farm ponds and other impoundments.

Like the gypsy moths, which were recently sprayed with biologic pesticides to control their population, hydrilla appears to be taking hold primarily in Wake County, Langfelder said.

"It has been found in 14 locations in Wake County and one each in Scotland and Columbus counties," he said of the growing problem. "Hydrilla is now found in 12 states and may be present but unidentified in others."

Hydrilla is often carried from one location to another by boaters who move their boats from one location to another, Langfelder said. He said one way that happens is that boaters snag the weed on their boat propellers.

State officials said a similar mechanism was involved in the spread of gypsy moths, whose larvae sometimes attach to campers and recreational vehicles.

Friendship Force Sets Interviews

The Eastern North Carolina Friendship Force, the Pitt and Beaufort County foreign exchange program, will hold two additional interview sessions for hosts and ambassadors, according to Cheryl Taft, local exchange director.

The first session will be held today from 2 to 5 p.m. at the Willis Building, corner of First and Reade Streets. Another session is planned for Wednesday, May 5, from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Willis Building.

Mrs. Taft said residents of all ages may apply to be ambassadors to the foreign country or to be hosts for the foreign exchange group visiting here. She said the interviews take only 20 minutes and are used to determine travel and life style preferences.

The exchange will take place Sept. 27-Oct. 10 with a Western European country. The cost of the trip is $715 for adults and $495 for children under 12.

"The program is open to married couples, couples with children and single individuals," Mrs. Taft said. "The interview process helps us match our ambassadors with foreign host families. It also guides us in placing our foreign guests in homes here in Pitt County."

For more information, call the Friendship Force office, 752-1784, between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Jones Will Lead Dimes March Here

WalkAMERICA is now under way in Greenville. Ben Jones — "Cooter" of television's "The Dukes Of Hazzard" — is the honorary chairman for the event and will lead the walk on Saturday from Carolina East Mall.

Pledges are collected by each walker with the proceeds benefitting the Coastal Plains Chapter of the March of Dimes. Sponsor forms are available at various locations throughout the city including Wachovia Bank, local fitness centers, area schools and the March of Dimes offices.

A grand prize and other prizes and awards will be given including a "battered boot" trophy to the school with the most participants.

Preston Sisk, chairman of Greenville's WalkAMERICA says, "Birth defects are the nation's most serious child health problem. Each year one out of 12 babies is born with a birth defect." The goal of the March of Dimes is to protect the unborn and the newborn and to give every child born the best possible chance for a healthy life.

Walkers will begin their 15-kilometer trek at 10 a.m. The pledges they collect will assist the March of Dimes programs of research, medical service and education, according to Sisk.

On the same date, walkers from Washington will head twoard Greenville, with plans for the two groups to meet at a midway point at the elementary school in Pactolus.

Luxury Hotel Breaks Ground

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Ground has been broken for a 32-story, $100 million hotel in the Tenderloin, a low-income neighborhood bordering San Francisco's theater district.

The 1,033 rooms of the Ramada Renaissance Hotel are expected to be ready for occupancy in 1984, said Kenneth G. Jensen, spokesman for the Ramada chain. Owners of the hotel, for which ground was broken Friday, will be U.S. Hotelier Associates, a partnership of International Hoteliers Ltd., of Los Angeles, and International Land, Inc., of San Francisco.

Community organizers have complained construction of the Ramada and two other high-rise hotels will drive up property values and drive out poor residents. The hotel has agreed to pay the city 50 cents a night for each occupied room to subsidize low-income housing.

ECU Educator Influenced By Early Contact With Famed Scientist

ECU News Bureau

When he was 4 years old, Zubie W. Metcalf Jr. scraped his face when his tricycle overturned on a sidewalk at Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. A slender, soft-spoken man comforted the frightened child, cleansed his face and applied some salve.

Metcalf learned later that his benefactor that day had been Dr. George Washington Carver.

The wound healed without leaving a scar. But the gentle, soothing touch and kind words of the famous scientist-educator of Tuskegee left a deep, lasting and symbolic impression upon the young Zubie Metcalf.

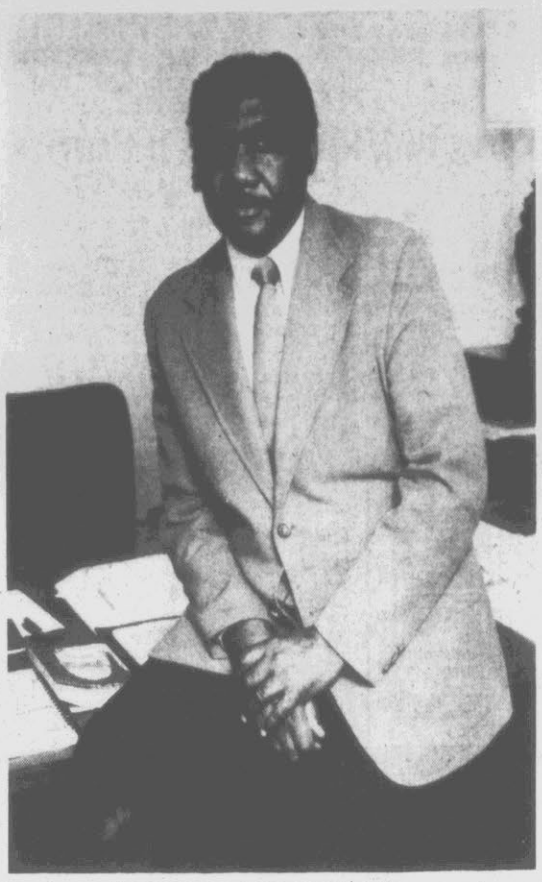

More than 40 years later, Metcalf himself is a scientist-educator lending a helping hand in the form of student opportunity programs at East Carolina University. In a dozen years of this work, Metcalf has written grant proposals for programs funded for more than $3 million, primarily to help blacks and the disadvantaged.

"It's a part of me. It's the only life I know and I am totally committed to it," says Metcalf, director of ECU's Center for Student Opportunities.

Within a year after coming to ECU in 1976, Metcalf obtained a renewable three-year Department of Health, Education and Welfare grant totaling $342,514 to support recruitment and retention of disadvantaged and minority students in ECU's schools of medicine, nursing and allied health and social professions.

Under this program, an academic monitoring system was established to determine strengths and weaknesses of 107 pre-health professional students and remedial steps were taken.

He received recently a $23,670 grant from the National Fund for Medical Education for a summer tutorial program to identify, recruit and prepare high potential minority and disadvantaged students for the "challenging expectations of medical school." The program is designed for 24 students this summer.

ZUBIE W. METACLF JR.

In recruiting, "we go the whole spectrum, reaching a wide range," Metcalf says.

he has prepared proposals for National Science Foundation support of a program of research apprenticeships for minority high school students.

Ten percent of the students enrolled in ECU'S School of Medicine are blacks. Two blacks were among the first class of doctors graduated in 1981.

"We are very proud of our programs and the national attention they are getting, as far away as California," Metcalf said.

California education authorities have listed ECU's summer enrichment program with those of such prestigous medical schools as Georgia, Baylor, University of Texas, New York, the University of Tennessee and Tulane as offering exceptional opportunities for Californians.

Piecing together educational opportunities as thay arose is part of Metcalf's personal education story, from public schools in Sheffield, Ala., to chemistry assistantships at the University of Dayton, in Ohio, where he majored in biology. He drove at night to further his studies at Antioch College and picked up courses at Purdue, then received a National Science Foundation graduate fellowship for a master's in teaching from Miami University of Ohio.

He returned to Dayton as a biology instructor. Then for five years he was an assistant professor on the faculty of Florida A&M University, picking up further study at Florida State University. In 1970, he received a Ford Foundation fellowship for advanced study which led to a doctorate at the State University of New York-Buffalo.

It was at Dayton that he "really got started and interested in college opportunities work," Metcalf says. "I really liked it. It was a good feeling."

He became director of academic opportunities programs at Ball State University where, in 1973, he asked himself, "Why not go back home?"

"I felt I had made very good use of my educational opportunities as they arose. It was hard to do, but I had learned how. I asked, 'why not do the same thing for my people.' I had the feeling that I could go there (to Alabama) and make a contribution to the people of my home state."

He returned to Tuskegee where 35 years befor George Washington Carver "worked on my face and gave my parents a little can of salve. I had never forgotten it."

As assistant vice president for academic affairs and dean of graduate programs, Metcalf's office at Tuskegee was next door to the archives housing the letters, papers and writings of George Washington Carver.

"It made me feel good. I worked hard and it inspired me to work up some of the best educational opportunity programs Tuskegee ever had." One of these was a $2.15 million advanced institutional development program, funded by the U.S. Office of Education.

In the mid '70s, Metcalf was a finalist in the search for a chancellor of the University of Maryland-Eastern Shore. Then he became interested in the programs and philosophy of the newly established medical school, health and science programs at East Carolna.

He had heard of East Carolina's growing reputation and also knew that Carver had corresponded with the late Lucy Crisp Cherry of eastern North Carolina. The Cherry-Carver correspondence was in the Tuskegee archives and Metcalf had read of her telling about East Carolina's founding years of growth and development.

He was especially attracted to ECU because of its vigorous program to recruit, retain and strengthen opportunities for minorities and disadvantaged students in medicine and health professions.

"I like the area. I like the school. I was attracted to the job. I had confidence that I could do it," Metcalf said.

"So it fell in place and, and it all matched up."

Metcalf was born in Port Deposit, Ala., but grew up in Sheffield, in northern Alabama. His parents live there, having retired from public school careers that took them across the south, to Ringgold, Ga., Ewing, Va., and various localities in Alabama. A brother is a counselor for a vocational technical school in Florence and his sister-in-law teaches talented, gifted students in Florence.

His parents were summer students at Tuskegee on that day more than 40 years ago when young Zubie toppled from the tricycle.

Helms, Thurmond Feud Delaying Flow Of Major Legislation In Congress

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two of the Senate's most powerful Southern conservatives, Republicans Jesse Helms and Strom Thurmond, are locked in a behind-the-scenes struggle that has blocked or slowed several major pieces of legislation this year.

So far, Helms is winning.

The North Carolinian has repeatedly outmaneuvered Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Thurmond on a series of social, law enforcement and civil rights issues like voting rights and changes in the federal criminal code.

The 79-year-old Thurmond, a courtly South Carolinian, is as conservative on most issues as Helms. But Thurmond is a member of the Senate establishment and a compromiser who is well-liked personally by Senate colleagues as politically diverse as Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Orrin Hatch, R-Utah.

Helms, meanwhile, makes skillful use of Senate rules on debate and procedure to devise ways around legislation debated and voted on in the Judiciary Committee, where his views are often echoed by another conservative North Carolinian, freshman Republican John East.

Thurmond declined to comment publicly on Helms' tactics, but he is known to have said privately that they accomplish little except to anger him and other members of the Senate.

When Republicans took control of the Senate in 1980, conservatives thought they had a good shot at passing a number of social agenda issues, including proposals on abortion, school prayer, busing for desegregation, gun control and a federal death penalty.

The Senate so far has approved an anti-busing bill, but none of the other issues has even been debated on the Senate floor.

There also is a fundamental disagreement about whether constitutional amendments are required on a number of touchy issues like abortion, or if changes can be made through legislation.

A constitutional amendment can be enacted only with a two-thirds vote of the House and Senate and approval by three-fourths of the states. Bills only require a majority vote in both houses of Congress.

Most often, Thurmond supports the lengthy amendment process, while Helms has introduced a series of bill stripping the federal courts of jurisdiction on issues like abortion and school busing.

Until last week, the rift between Helms and Thurmond had simmered in the background with little public attention.

But last Wednesday, Helms succeeded in torpedoing one of Thurmond's biggest Senate priorities, legislation to streamline the country's criminal laws, a reform urged for a decade by federal judges, prosecutors and the American Bar Association.

Thurmond had worked for months to produce a compromise criminal code bill acceptable to both conservatives and liberals.

But Helms and his allies insisted on attaching volatile amendments like a death penalty and anti-gun control measures to the criminal code bill, and it died before formal debate was even begun.

Similarly, legislation extending key provisions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act has been delayed in the Judiciary Committee.

Civil rights organizations have lined up 65 Senate sponsors for a version opposed by both Thurmond and Helms.

Despite his own opposition, Thurmond has promised not to block votes in the committee, where liberals and moderate Republicans have a majority.

Committee action on the Voting Rights Act was to have begun last Monday. But Helms invoked a little-used rule limiting simultaneous committee meetings and Senate floor debate, and so there were no decisions on voting rights made last week.

It was not clear how long Helms might use the same tactic, but Thurmond said it might force the committee to meet at night.

Tar Heel To Head Sierra

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A North Carolina man has been elected president of the Sierra Club, the nation's largest environmentalist group.

Shaffer has served on the club's board of directors for five years, most recently as treasurer. Before that he chaired the membership committee.

"The Sierra Club is a grassroots organization. That is our uniqueness and our strength," he said after his selection Friday night.

The club has grown from 180,000 members in 1980 to 300,000 members today.

"The American people care about clean air, clean water, protection of our natural resources, and we are certain that their concerns about these quality of life issues will translate into political activity next November," he said.

Michele Perrault of Lafayette, an activist involved in coastal protection and land use issues, was named vice president. Sandy Tepfer, a biology professor from the University of Oregon at Eugene, is the club's new secretary.

Peg Tileston of Anchorage, Alaska was elected treasurer. Marty Fluharty, a farmer and gas pipeline contractor, will serve as the board's fifth member.

Man Sentenced For Costly Fire

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — An unemployed house painter who said he set the fire because he was angry about a theft has been sentenced to seven years for a $6.5 million blaze that destroyed 18 houses.

Otis J. Bloom, 39, was sentenced Friday. He was convicted on one count of arson after a non-jury trial in March and was ruled sane.

Elections Board To Discuss Dates For Primary

By GENE WANG

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — The State Board of Elections will meet Sunday to consider a U.S. Justice Department request for the rescheduling of primary elections from June 10 to June 29, officials said Saturday.

Elections Director Alex Brock said the board would meet at 1 p.m. Sunday at its Raleigh offices. At least four of the five members will be present.

He said the board will decide whether to comply with a Justice Department request for a later primary date or go to court over the issue, the only apparent stumbling block facing local, congressional and legislative primaries.

Neither Brock nor Robert Spearman of Raleigh, the elections board chairman, would speculate on what the board would do.

But House Speaker Liston Ramsey, D-Madison, said he felt the board has no alternative except to change the primary date.

"June 29 would be here and gone before we ever get to the courts," said Ramsey.

Under the primary schedule sought by the Justice Department, runoff primaries would be held July 27 instead of the June 10 and July 8 dates adopted by the General Assembly during a special session last week.

A one-week filing period for legislative and congressional candidates will remain unchanged and would expire May 7 at noon.

The Justice Department indicated Friday it had approved new reapportionment plans for the state House and Senate adopted during the two-day special legislative session.

But the department, which has jurisdiction under the federal Voting Rights Act, balked at approving a compressed primary schedule enacted at the same time.

The Legislature set the primaries for June 10, but officials of the department's Civil Rights Division objected on the grounds the date could have an adverse effect on candidates seeking seats in newly created black-controlled legislative districts created by the reapportionment plans.

Federal officials pressed for a primary date in July or August, but following an afternoon of telephone negotiations modified that demand to June 29.

Brock, who called those discussions "excruciating," said he would probably make a recommendation to the Elections Board, but declined to say what it would be.

"It's just not appropriate for me to say what I'll recommend to them," he said. "Hopefully, they'll make a decision tomorrow (Sunday)."

Spearman said the board would "just have to see exactly what we get from the Justice Department. I don't have any communication with Justice, but the department has the authority to disapprove everything North Carolina does."

Brock said he would brief the board on the telephone negotiations, which lasted more than 3½ hours, and led to the tentative agreement to approve a primary no sooner than June 29.

"They've got to be briefed," said Brock, who admitted Friday's discussions had been frustrating.

"There were times I felt like throwing the phone out the window," he said. "We started out with a lot of differences."

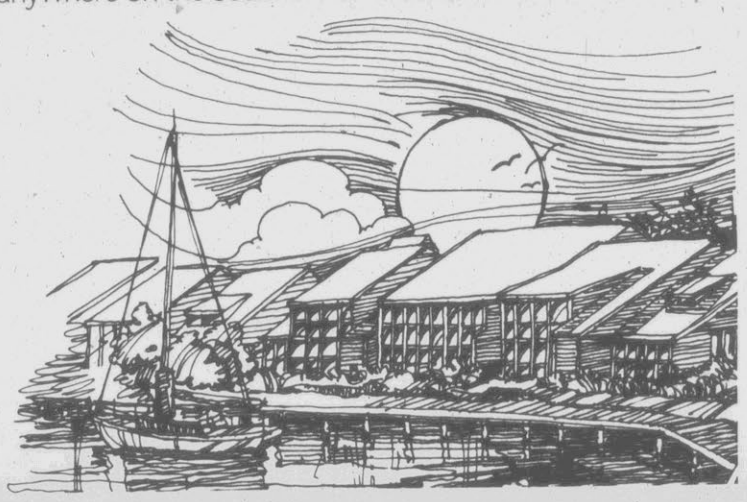

Officials were first concerned by the one-week filing period established by the Legislature, but Brock said those concerns were resolved early in the talks.

The Justice Department then cited a provision of state law allowing indigent candidates to seek office by submitting petitions instead of paying a filing fee. That provision was not changed in the legislation applying only to this year's primaries, forcing Brock to draft and dictate an administrative change extending the indigent filing period to May 17.

Beacon's Reach. An outstanding approach to the sea.

The villages of Pine Knoll Shores West, near Morehead City, have become well-known for the variety of exceptional seaside lifestyles. And now, we've brought them all together under the new name, Beacon's Reach — to offer you the most far-reaching new idea in oceanfront community living anywhere on the coast of North Carolina.

With prices from $90,000, Beacon's Reach features a superb choice of beachfront lots, condominiums on the ocean, and quiet soundside residences along the peaceful shores of Bogue Banks.

Because we offer a "Vacation Colony" environment, residents can choose to live in any of several distinct village clusters. Each with its own special character. Each with its own special charm.

We outshine them all.

Situated within the sweep of the beam from Cape Lookout Lighthouse, Beacon's Reach lies amidst the ancient Maritime Forest and white, rolling dunes of Bogue Banks Island.

Because the island actually runs East and West, for much of the year the sun both rises and sets over the ocean. And the relaxed quality of life is as constant as the sunshine. Here, the word "vacation" takes on a whole new meaning and becomes an all-encompassing, permanent way of life.

A natural heritage that's here to stay.

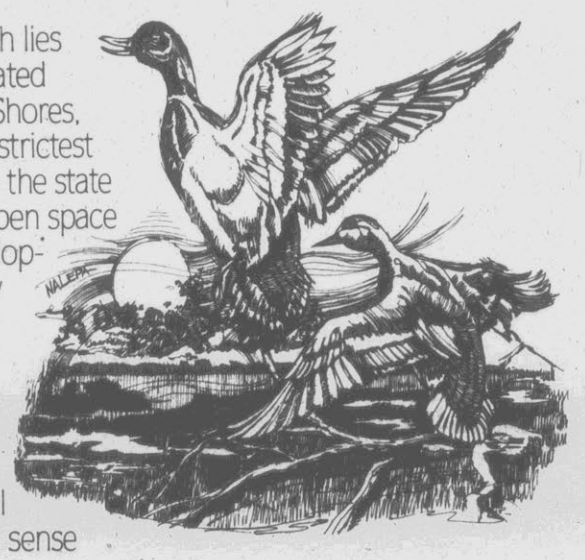

At Beacon's Reach, the Cedar, Wax Myrtle, Yaupon and Live Oak stretch from sound to sea, forming a natural shield against coastal conditions. And since our unique Maritime Forest vegetation makes our dune system unusually stable, the result is one of the most impressive primary dune systems on the Coast of North Carolina, averaging more than 20 feet in height.

The property itself lies adjacent to a 300-acre marine resources nature preserve, set aside by the Theodore Roosevelt family. The Roosevelts have long played an important role in maintaining the island's natural integrity. And that involvement is still going on.

Our man-made structures are complements to nature.

Realizing we could never improve on the natural elegance of Beacon's Reach, we've patterned our development after the topographical designs which were here in the first place.

Roads within the community have been planned in harmony with the contours of the land. Each and every residence is designed to complement the delicate balance of its natural setting. And many of our oceanfront homes even take their design directly from the shape of the dunes themselves.

Beacon's Reach lies within the incorporated town of Pine Knoll Shores, which enforces the strictest zoning ordinance in the state when it comes to open space and density of development. So with a low average density of only six units per acre, we can assure residents quality construction, breathtaking natural surroundings, and a sense of community, all at the same time.

Amenities that stretch from horizon to horizon.

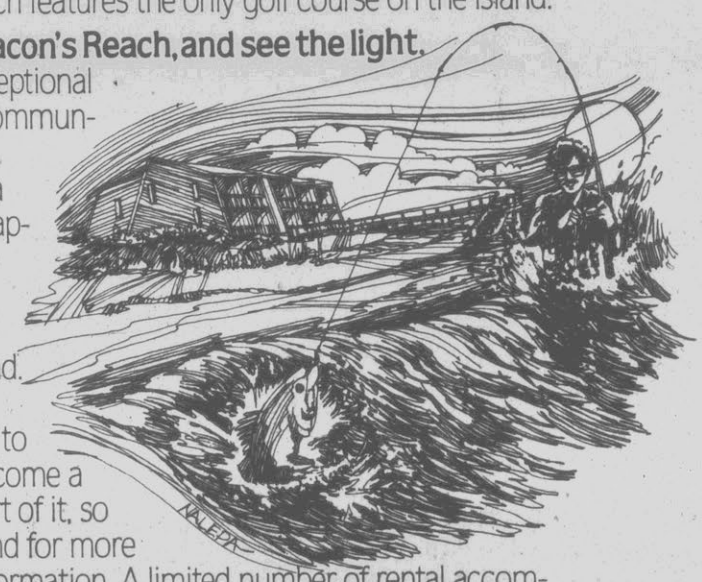

At Beacon's Reach you can swim, surf, sail, or simply spend your time sunning yourself on the beach.

In the surf, and in the sounds, you'll fish for Speckled Trout, Bluefish and Channel Bass. Offshore, you'll find prize Red Snapper and battle Marlin in the deep, warm waters of the Gulf Stream.

And when you're not fishing, you can enjoy some of the best duck hunting you'll find anywhere.

As a community, Beacon's Reach offers its own special package of amenities, including swimming pools, all-weather lighted tennis courts, and almost two full miles of clean, white beach. Our Westport Marina provides safe harbor and slips for more than 50 boats. And residents are also offered prepaid membership in the Bogue Banks Country Club, which features the only golf course on the island.

Visit Beacon's Reach, and see the light.

It's an exceptional seaside community, which provides a personal approach to vacation living all year 'round. And we want you to become a part of it, so send for more information. A limited number of rental accommodations are also available if you'd like to make a preliminary visit.

Gato del Sol Rushes To Wire For Derby Win

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Gato del Sol, a survivor in a year when many top candidates were knocked out by injury or illness, proved to be a winner, too, in Saturday's Kentucky Derby.

The 108th Derby at Churchill Downs might have been a different story if Timely Writer, Hostage, Linkage and a few others were there. But they weren't, and the story was Gato del Sol.

As usual, Gato del Sol had to come from far back. But unlike his other races this year, he came all the way from dead last, leading a cavalry charge through the stretch to get to the wire 2½ lengths ahead of Laser Light for his first victory of the year. He will never score a more important one.

In his last start before the Derby, in the Blue Grass Stakes, Gato del Sol came from off the pace but didn't come close to getting the job done. He finished second, 5 ½ lengths behind Linkage, whose trainer, Henry Clark, skipped the Derby and pointed the colt toward the Preakness.

A showdown in the Preakness May 15 between Gato del Sol and his Blue Grass conqueror might not come about, however.

Trainer Eddie Gregson, who before the Derby had described Gato del Sol as "very smart — he's a survivor," said immediately after the race: "I don't think we're going to the Preakness. We'll discuss it later."

Leone J.Peters, co-owner of Gato del Sol, said the final decision on whether to send the colt, a 21-1 longshot in the Derby, to the Preakness rested with Gregson.

Peters said there were three reasons being considered for not sending Gato del Sol to the second jewel of the Triple Crown: The Preakness is shorter at 13-16 miles; "Linkage will be there, and we'll have a fresh horse for the Belmont," the third and longest leg (1½ miles) of the series.

"I would like to go to the Preakness, but I'm going to leave that up to Mr. Gregson, the trainer," said jockey Eddie Delahoussaye, who steered Gato del Sol through the traffic of a 19-horse field.

"Oh, this feels so good to win a race like this," said Delahoussaye, who guided Gato del Sol home before a throng of 141,009, the second largest crowd in Derby history. The record is 163,628 for the 100th Derby in 1974.

"I remember last year when I rode Woodchopper, and I got trapped inside and couldn't get out," said Delahoussaye, who finished second behind Pleasant Colony in 1981.

"With 19 horses in there, I figured I'd be better off losing a little ground, to stay in the clear," said the jockey, who kept the winner off the pace — yet perhaps a little closer to the pace than in some of his previous races.

Gato del Sol was last going into the first turn, but Delahoussaye had him about seventh and outside in the early run down the backstretch.

Gato del Sol made his decisive move on the turn, then took command in the final eighth of a mile, winning in 2:022-5 and paying $44.40, $19 and $9.40. It was the first Derby triumph for both Delahoussaye and owner-breeders Peters and Arthur B.Hancock.

Live Oak Plantation's Laser Light paid $12.17 and $9.20. Another neck back was Harbor View Farm's Reinvested, at $4.40 to show. He beat fourth-place Water Bank by 2½ lengths.

The three favorites — Air Forbes Won, who had won his first four career starts; El Baba, the winner of the Louisiana Derby, and Santa Anita Derby winner Muttering — were in contention for much of the 1¼ miles, but faded in the torrid stretch duel. Muttering finished fifth, Air Forbes Won seventh and El Baba 11th.

Of course, there were traffic problems, and to many of the jockeys, the race might have seemed a demolition derby rather than the Kentucky Derby.

"This was a crazy race," said Miguel Rivera, who finished 14th on Royal Roberto. "It was like running, what do you call it? Like running bumper cars. It might be the most beautiful race in the world, but it must be the craziest race in the world."

Don MacBeth, aboard Reinvested, said: "There was too much traffic and too many horses to get through, but toward the end, I thought I was going to win until I got to the 16th pole, and the other horses started to pull away on me."

There was one less 3-year-old in the 108th Derby than expected. That was Rock Steady, who was scratched. But another longshot really wasn't needed; they did all right without Rock Steady.

Completing the order of finish, in a race that belonged to the common people with so many top Derby hopefuls out of action, were Muttering, Rockwall, Air Forbes Won, Star Gallant, Majesty's Prince, Cupecoy's Joy, El Baba, Wavering Monarch, Cassaleria, Royal Roberto, Music Leader, Bold Style, Wolfie's Rascal, New Discovery and Real Dare.

A lot of stars might have been missing, but the fans certainly weren't. They came to bet on a warm but overcast day, wagering a record $5 ,011,5 75 on the Derby, breaking the old mark of $4,5 66,179 set last year. Those lucky

Bump Cost Air Forbes His Chance

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A bump forced favorite Air Forbes Won off his stride and caused his seventh-place finish in Saturday's Kentucky Derby, said trainer Frank LaBoccetta.

"I felt my horse got too close to Bold Style," said LaBoccetta. "He would have run a lot better if he could have run the way we wanted him to.

"I would have liked to have seen him run farther back early in the race, but when he got bumped, it made him rank."

The Ohio-bred son of Bold Forbes — winner of the 1976 Derby — was a 5 -2 favorite of the 141,000 fans at Churchill Downs after scoring a victory in last month's prestigious Wood Memorial at Aqueduct.

Angel Cordero, Air Forbes Won's jockey, said he thought his horse had a chance to win the Derby.

"When we got head-and-head with El Baba (the second choice), I thought we'd win it," Cordero said. "We were on the lead at the five-sixteenth pole, but those other horses came running the last part of it."

LaBoccetta said that his horse would not run in the Preakness May 15 and no decision had been made yet on running in next month's Preakness at Belmont.

Bob Gilder Stretches Dallas Lead To Three Shots With Round Of 67

DALLAS (AP) — Bob Gilder composed a front-running, 3-under-par 67 and stretched his lead to an impressive three shots Saturday in the third round of the $35 0,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

Gilder, winner of two titles in seven years of PGA Tour activity, took advantage of another day of near-ideal scoring conditions to compile a course-record score of 199 for 5 4 holes.

That's 11 shots under par on the Preston Trail Golf Club course that has been robbed of its natural defenses by the absence of wind and has yielded the lowest scores in the 15 years it has played host to the tournament. By way of contrast, last year's event, played in more typical windy and stormy weather was won with a 1-over-par total.

This time, gray and gloomy skies have threatened on a daily basis but failed to produce the violent weather so common here. Instead, the temperatures have been very mild with winds mere gentle breezes.

"Absolutely perfect conditions — no wind, the greens soft and holding," said Curtis Strange, who had his second 65 of the tournament and moved into second at 202.

"I feel very confident," he said, looking ahead to Sunday's final round of the chase for a $63,000 first prize. "Being only three back, anything can happen."

U.S. Open champion David Graham, an Australian now living in Dallas and a member of the host club, agreed.

"Three or four shots is not an insurmountable lead," Graham said after he put together a 67 and advanced to third place at 203. "There's only one person between me and the lead. That makes my chances a lot better."

Still, he said, his work is cut out for him.

"The golf course is playing as easy as it can play. Obviously, Bob is playing very, very well. I'd figure I have to shoot 65 or 66 tomorrow to win."

"I'm trying not to even think about tomorrow," said Gilder. "I'm just trying to hang in there."

Phil Hancock and veteran George Archer were tied for third at 204. Hancock closed up with a 66. Archer, only one stroke back of Gilder when the day's play started, slipped to a 71.

They were trailed by Canadian Dan Halldorson and D.A. Weibring at 205 . Each shot a third-round 69.

Tom Watson, a four-time winner of this title, had a 67 and topped a group at 206, seven strokes off the pace. Also at that figure were Jim Colbert, who had a 66, and Bruce Fleisher, with a 67.

Defending champion Bruce Lietzke appeared out of the title chase. He matched par-70 and was nine strokes behind at 208.

Gilder, whose last victory came in the 1980 Canadian Open, said he was "nervous, to say the least. It's been a long time since I've had the lead. I didn't play as solid as I have, but I'm happy I was able to make some birdies."

Starting with a one-shot lead, he played his front side in 34, then pulled away with consecutive birdies on the 14th and 15 th holes. He got an 8-iron close on the 14th and dropped a 10-footer on the 15 th.

Young Giant Staff Keeps Rolling

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The San Francisco Giants young pitching staff, one reason the club has won five of its last six games, keeps on rolling.

Left-hander Atlee Hammaker, making his Natwonal League starting debut after joining the club in a trade with Kansas City for Vida Blue, went five strong innings and was the winner in the Giants' 6-3 victory over the New York Mets Saturday.

The Giants have won four in a row and three of the victories have been posted by rookie starters Bill Laskey, Alan Fowlkes and Hammaker. The other was registered by second-year reliever Fred Breining.

"The young pitchers have given us a big lift this week," Manager Frank Robinson said. "It couldn't have happened at a better time because we have some players hurting."

Hammaker, recalled from Phoenix one week ago, left the game for a pinch-hitter, and Jim Barr and Greg Minton mopped up.

"I wasn't as strong as I'd like to be because I haven't pitched for a while," Hammaker said, "but I could have gone longer. I didn't have a curve or a changeup, so I went with fastballs and sliders.

"I didn't have great stuff, but when I had to make a pitch, I did," added Hammaker, who blanked the Mets for four innings after giving up two runs in the first.

Hammaker fell behind 2-0 in the first inning but blanked the Mets over the next four before leaving for pinch batter Duane Kuiper, who rapped a two-run single. Hammaker allowed four hits and struck out four.

Barr came on in the sixth and blanked the Mets until the ninth when he needed help from Minton after Wally Backman doubled with one out and scored on Mike Jorgensen's pinch single. Minton retired Dave Kingman on a foul pop with two runners aboard to end the game.

The Mets took a 2-0 lead on Bob Bailor's leadoff walk, John Stearns' run-scoring double, Hammaker's balk and an RBI grounder by George Foster. Stearns' double gave him a 13-game hitting streak.

The Giants tied it 2-2 in the bottom of the second with the help of a blown rundown play by third baseman Hubie Brooks and a run-scoring single by Johnnie LeMaster. With Darrell Evans on third base and dave Bergman on first, Jeff Ransom grounded to Brooks, who trapped Evans in a rundown.

After an exchange of throws with catcher Stearns, Brooks chased Evans across the plate and failed to tag him.

The Giants scored the go-ahead run in the fourth on another unusual play. LeMaster led off with a single, stole second and went to third on Chili Davis' single. Davis tried to steal second and was tagged out by shortstop Ron Gardenhire as LeMaster raced home from third.

San Francisco broke it open in the fifth with three runs off loser Pat Zachry, 1-1. The key hits were a run-scoring single by Ransom and a bases-loaded single by Kuiper, his fourth hit in his last six pinch hitting appearances.

Lady Pirates Second In Regionals

GRAHAM — East Carolina University's women finished in second place in the AIAW Regional Softball Tournament which wound up on Saturday in Graham.

The Lady Pirates, knocked out of the winners' bracket on Friday struggled back through the losers' bracket and knocked off the last unbeaten, Northern Kentucky, but fell to that same team in the last game of the tournament.

East Carolina started the day with a 14-0 licking of Appalachian State, eliminating that team. Then, the Lady Pirates topped UNC-Charlotte, 3-1, to move into the tournament's finals.

Needing two victories over Northern Kentucky, the tournament's top-seeded team, the Lady Pirates topped them, 2-0, to force a second do-or-die game for the title.

Northern rallied to win that one, however, 2-1, in eight innings, gaining the championship and an automatic berth into the AIAW National Championship Tournament.

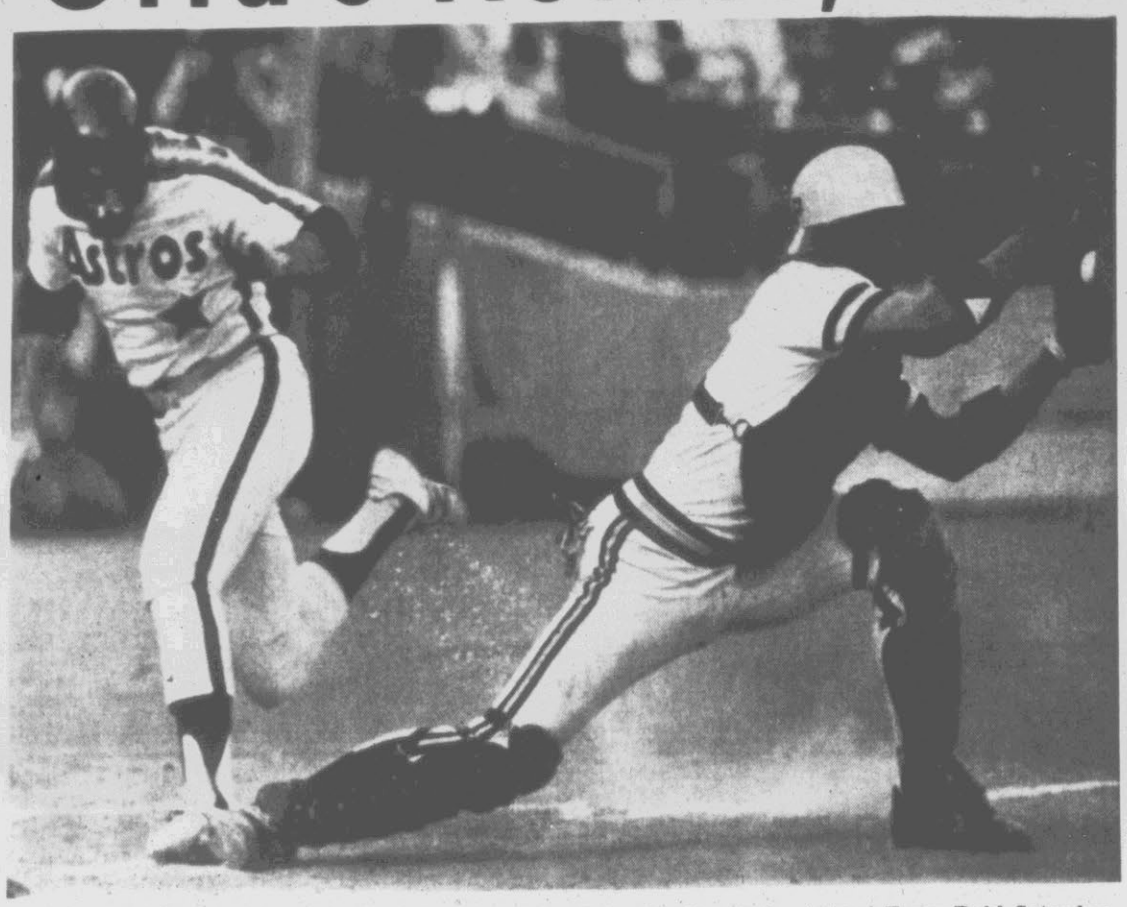

That tournament will be held in two weeks, and East Carolina, which finished third in last year's nationals, is believed to have a good chance at one of the at-large berths for the field.

The Lady Pirates landed five players, three more than did the champion Northern Kentucky team, on the All-Regional selections made following the tournament.

Selected from East Carolina were Yvonne Williams, outfielder; Ginger Rothermel, second baseman; Jo Landa Clayton, shortstop; Mitzi Davis, outfielder; and Cynthia Shepard, outfielder.

Further details of the tournament games were not available.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pinch hitter Jorge Orta hit a two-run homer in the seventh inning Saturday and left fielder Dusty Baker threw out the potential tying run at the plate in the ninth, pacing the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 2-1 victory over the Montreal Expos.

The homer was the first of the year for Orta and also his first as a Dodger. Obtained in a trade with Cleveland over the winter, Orta had one hit in eight previous at-bats before his towering drive into the right-center field pavilion at Dodger Stadium.

Mike Scioscia had walked with one out and, after pinch hitter Jay Johnstone flied out, Orta batted for Dodger starter Jerry Reuss. He lashed a fast ball from Charlie Lea, 1-1, into the stands to put the Dodgers ahead.

Reuss, 3-1, who had pitched shutouts in his previous two statrs, allowed four hits and one unearned run during the seven innings he worked.

Montreal scored run in the fifth. Warren Cromartie singled to open the inning and was safe at second when Chris Speier bunted and Reuss' throw to second was late. Both runners moved up a base when Reuss threw wildly trying to pick Cromartie off second and Cromartie scored on Tim Wallach's grounder.

With one out in the Expos' ninth, Cromartie and Speier singled off Terry Forster, who came on in the eighth. Wallach then singled to left, but Baker gunned down Cromartie at the plate. Tom Niedenfuer came in to get the final out and record his first save of the season.

CINCINNATI (AP) — Dan Driessen cracked his first career grand slam and Mario Soto pitched a five-hitter Saturday for his first victory of the season, pacing the Cincinnati Reds to a 10-1 pounding of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Driessen's grand slam in the seventh inning off reliever Jim Kaat put the Reds ahead 10-1 and highlighted an 11-hit attack.

Soto, 1-2, struck out six batters — giving him 43 in 40 innings — in registering his first complete game of the season. He also singled and doubled to help the Reds capture their second straight game from the Cardinals, who have dropped five of their last six.

The Reds scord six runs in the first five innings, two of them on Cardinal throwing errors. Dave Concepcion's opposite-field double — the first of his three hits — and Cesar Cedeno's single drove in runs to give the Reds a 2-0 lead in the first inning off Andy Rincon, 1-2. Trevino doubled with one out in the second and Soto singled for a 3-0 lead.

St. Louis scored in the fourth on singles by Keith Hernandez and Darrell Porter and Dane Iorg's sacrifice fly.

Soto doubled and scored on a throwing error by first baseman Hernandez for a 4-1 lead in the fourth. The Reds added a pair of runs in the fifth.

Knights Bow To Wilmington

WILMINGTON — Wilmington Christian Academy rolled to a pair of baseball wins over Greenville Christian Academy Saturday. Wilmington took the opener, 8-1 and came back with a 5-2 win in the second contest.

In the opener, Wilmington got all it needed in the second. Sam Edens walked and John Creech doubled him in. Tim Reagan walked and John Dover singled, driving in Creech.

Wilmington later added five in the third and one in the sixth. The lone Knight run scored in the seventh.

Brian Lewis and Creech each had two hits to lead Wilmington while Joel Nason had two for GCA.

In the second game, Wilmington got a run in the second, but sealed it with three in the fifth. In the fifth, Lewis reached on an error and Tim Darden was hit by a pitch. With two away, Creech reached on an error, scoring Lewis, and Reagan singled, and an error on his ball let two more score.

Wilmington closed out its scoring with one in the sixth, while again GCA got both of its runs in the seventh.

The GCA scores came on a two-run homer by Troy Hudson.

Reagan led the Wilmington attack with two hits, while Jerry Simpson had two for GCA.

The Knights, now 6-4, host Goldsboro on Tuesday. Wilmington climbs to 7-1 with the sweep.

enough, or smart enough, to bet on Gato del Sol were rewarded with the biggest winning mutuel return since Proud Clarion paid $62.20 in 1967.

It was a great day for lovers of trivia and for sentimentalists. Many hearts were captured by — and many dollars were lost on — Cassaleria, the one-eyed colt who suffers from claustrophobia.

Gato del Sol broke from the No.18 post. Only one Derby winner has started farther outside — Clyde Van Deusen started from the No.20 slot in a 21-horse field in 1929.

Cupecoy's Joy was trying to join Regret in 1915 and Genuine Risk in 1980 as the only fillies to win the Derby, while Real Dare was trying to become the eighth gelding, and the first since Clyde Van Deusen, to win the Derby.

Angel Cordero, riding Air Forbes Won, tried for his third Derby victory on a colt whose sire, Bold Forbes, carried Cordero into the winner's circle in 1976.

Gato del Sol became the fourth gray to win the Derby — the others were Determined in 1954, Decidedly in 1962 and Spectacular Bid in 1979. His first victory in five starts this year, and his third triumph in 13 career starts, was worth $417,600 and boosted his career bankroll to $724,793.

And jockey Bill Shoemaker added to a long list of records in his brilliant career. The 50-year-old "Shoe" rode in a record 22nd Derby in search of his fourth victory and first since 1965, when he rode Lucky Debonair. But Shoemaker was another who had traffic problems, his colt getting bumped and knocked sideways before the first turn aboard Star Gallant.

While Star Gallant wasn't up to the task, Shoemaker wasn't surprised by the outcome. "I thought Gato del Sol was the horse to beat," said Shoemaker.

Lots of others in the crowd were more surprised. The $44.40 return was the biggest winning mutuel payoff since Proud Clarion returned $62.20 to win in 1967.

Last year, Gato del Sol won two of eight starts, including the Del Mar Futurity. He also finished second once and was third three times while earning $220,828.

This year, he was unable to win until Saturday, although he finished second in the San Felipe Hanicap and second in the Blue Grass, beaten 5½ lengths by Linkage, a colt whose trainer, Henry Clark, decided to skip the Derby.

Although Gato del Sol was the hero to the Churchill Downs throng and to millions watching on national television, this Derby also will be remembered for some of the top colts who didn't make it to the starting gate.

In fact, the road to Churchill Downs began to look like an equine demolition derby, as Timely Writer was sidelined by an abdominal problem, Hostage broke a bone in his right front foot and several others were put out by illness and injury in the weeks leading to the Derby.

Gato del Sol, whose style for most of his races has been to come from off the pace, was last around the first turn. Delahoussaye then had him in the middle of the pack, seven horses wide, as the run began down the backstretch.

As the field came out of the final turn, there were five horses abreast — Air Forbes Won, El Baba, Muttering, Cupecoy's Joy and Gato del Sol. Then, the duel began, and Gato del Sol was up to the challenge. Delahoussaye hit him eight times during the stretch run, and he won in true championship style.

Gato del Sol was overlooked, not only by the experts, but also by the public in what became a sort of poor man's Derby, with many of the stars on the sidelines. There was the filly, the gelding, and several colts whose records suggested they didn't belong in the field but the kind who have made racing history before.

One of his five owners, Tom Gentry, handed out T-shirts and buttons during the week that read: "Cassalaria" in the Daily Racing Form Friday, and shortly before the Derby began, a plane flew overhead towing a sign that read: "Our hearts are with you, Cassaleria." The well-wishes weren't enough to carry Cassaleria to victory.

Air Forbes Won was trying to duplicate the feat of his daddy, Bold Forbes, who carried Cordero to victory in the 1976 Derby, and El Baba was trying to become the first horse to come out of the Arkansas Derby to win the big one in Kentucky.

Laser Light earned $60,000 for his excellent performance. Reinvested's surprising showing was worth $30,000, while Water Bank's fourth place earned him $15,000.

If the engine quits, two-way radio could pay for itself today.

Lose just one day during the planting season and it could make all the difference between a good crop and a poor one.
That's why you should be equipped with a Johnson FM two-way radio.
With two-way radio if your engine quits you can simply call for help. Chances are a mechanic can get to you and get you going again while there's still some daylight left.
But without two-way radio you'd just have to start walking.
There are a lot of other ways Johnson FM radio can save you time and money. Why not let us show you how you can lease or own a complete two-way system for as little as 75¢ a day.

Oakland Dumps Indians, 8-2

CLEVELAND (AP) — Wayne Gross homered and Mike Heath and Dave McKay also drove in two runs apiece as the Oakland A's downed the Cleveland Indians 8-2 Saturday.

Jeff Jones, making his first major league start after 75 relief appearances, lifted his record to 3-1 while yielding both Cleveland runs on six hits over the first five innings. Tom Underwood blanked the Indians on three hits the rest of the way for his second save.

Gross led off Oakland's second inning with a single and went to third when Jim Spencer doubled. After Jeff Burroughs walked to load the bases, Gross scored and Spencer moved to third on Heath's sacrifice fly. McKay singled Spencer home and Fred Stanley walked to reload the bases.

Cleveland starter Bert Blyleven, 2-2, then was removed from the game with tightness in his elbow after going to a 3-1 count on Rickey Henderson. Tom Brennan completed the walk to Henderson, with Burroughs scoring, and Dwayne Murphy's sacrifice fly gave Oakland a 4-0 lead.

Cleveland cut the lead to 4-2 in the third when Miguel Dilone singled, Toby Harrah tripled and Mike Hargrove singled. But the A's added three runs in the seventh. Gross clubbed his first home run of the season, Burroughs singled and pinch runner Jimmy Sexton scored when Heath tripled. McKay added an RBI single.

In the Oakland ninth, Henderson singled, stole second and third — giving him 24 steals in 23 games — and scored on a single by Gross.

Boston 6
Texas 5

BOSTON (AP) — Texas' Bill Stein, who singled home the lead run in the top of the 12th, committed a throwing error in the bottom of the inning on a potential game-ending double play that allowed two runs to score and gave the Boston Red Sox a 6-5 victory over the Rangers.

It was the eighth consecutive setback for the Rangers, while the Red Sox won for the 10th time in the last 11 games.

Dwight Evans started the Boston 12th with a single. Jim Rice flied out, but Wade Boggs singled and Carney Lansford beat out a hit off first baseman Lamar Johnson's glove, filling the bases against Steve Comer, 0-1.

Danny Darwin relieved and got Dave Stapleton to ground to short and Lansford was forced at second. However, Stein's relay to first was wild and went into the Boston dugout, permitting Boggs to follow Evans home with the winning run.

Stein had given the Rangers a 5-4 lead with a bases-loaded single in the top of the inning after the Rangers loaded the bases on a double by Billy Sample, a walk and an infield hit on which reliever Mark Clear failed to cover first base.

The Rangers had tied the game 4-4 with a run in the ninth off reliever Bob Stanley. With one out, George Wright singled, Lee Mazzilli forced him and Bell singled Mazzilli to third, from where he scored on Johnson's single.

Tony Perez, just two weeks shy of his 40th birthday, belted his first home run of the season and 358th of his career to give the Red Sox a 1-0 lead in the second. Reportedly on the trading block, Perez moved into a tie with Yogi Berra for 30th place among all-time home run hitters.

After Perez' homer, the Red Sox added another run in the inning on a single by Stapleton, a double by Glenn Hoffman and Gary Allenson's sacrifice fly.

Morriss Charged

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Philadelphia Eagles center Guy Morriss faces charges of assault and criminal mischief after an incident in which he allegedly exchanged shots with his former stepfather.

The National Football League player was freed on $2,213 in bonds Friday after being charged with felony criminal mischief and aggravated assault and misdemeanor simple assault.

His two brothers, Vic, 29, and Ken, 18, were hospitalized with shotgun wounds after the incident about 2:30 a.m., CDT, Thursday.

Morriss' former stepfather, Maynard Ingraham, told police he fired his shotgun at three men who were vandalizing an automobile that was parked at Ingraham's house.

Ingraham, who was divorced from Morriss' mother last year, said one of the men fired at him, and officers found a bullet hole in the man's apartment, police said.

"Guy Morriss was alleged by witnesses to have fired a pistol at the party who discharged the shotgun," said police legal adviser Bob Diaz.

Harold Baines was walked intentionally to loiad the bases and Marc Hill also walked to force in Luzinski and make it 2-0. Petry then struck out Jim Morrison to end the inning.

Parish, Maxwell Pace Celtics By Washington, 92-83, For 2-1 Lead

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Robert Parish and Cedric Maxwell combined for 45 points Saturday as the Boston Celtics led throughout and scored a 92-83 National Basketball Association playoff victory over the Washington Bullets.

The triumph, Boston's 10th straight at the Capital Centre, gave the Celtics a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven Eastern Conference semifinals. The fourth game will be played here Sunday.

Parish scored 17 of his 25 points in the second half, including a field goal after the Bullets had rallied to within 84-78 with 2:31 remaining. Parish grabbed 13 rebounds and recorded six of Boston's 16 blocked shots.

The Celtics played more than 11½ minutes in the second half without Larry Bird, who went to the bench after incurring his fifth foul with 4:25 left in the third quarter. He didn't return until 4:46 remained to be played. Boston increased its lead by three points during his absence.

Maxwell had 11 of his 20 points as the Celtics built a 28-18 first-quarter lead, with Bird contributing four points and eight rebounds. Washington rallied to within 40-36 late in the second period, but Boston led 48-38 at halftime.

The Bullets, who lost all six regular-season games to the Celtics, got only 13 points from its guards, including nine by Frank Johnson, whose three-point shot with three seconds left won the series' second game in Boston.

Starting guard Don Collins picked up three fouls in the first six minutes of the first quarter and substitute Garry Witts had three early in the second period. Another guard, Kevin Grevey, was accidentally poked in the eye by M.L. Carr soon after he entered the game in the first quarter and was scoreless in limited action thereafter.

Bird finished with 14 points for the Celtics, who have defeated the Bullets in 11 of their last 12 meetings.

Milwaukee 92
Philadelphia 91

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Sidney Moncrief banked in a 10-foot jump shot at the buzzer, lifting the Milwaukee Bucks to a 92-91 National Basketball Association playoff victory over the Philadelphia 76ers Saturday.

Moncrief finished with 20 points and Mickey Johnson had 21 to lead the Bucks, who trail the 76ers 2-1 in the best-of-seven Eastern Conference semifinal series. Game Four is to be played here Sunday (noon, CDT).

After a Bucks timeout, Moncrief passed inbounds from mid-court to center Bob Lanier at the top of the circle. Lanier handed off to Moncrief, who drove around the right side of the lane and dropped in his winning basket off the glass as the buzzer sounded.

The 76ers, who trailed by 18 points midway through the second quarter and by 48-37 at halftime, rallied in the second half behind Cheeks and Bobby Jones. Jones scored 13 of his 17 points in the second half.

The 76ers outscored the Bucks 13-2 at the start of the second half and tied the game at 50-50 on a three-point play by Andrew Toney, who finished with 18 points.

However, a basket on an offensive rebound and a steal and layup by Lanier regained momentum for the Bucks, who opened a 74-63 lead with 9:07 to play.

Jones rallied the 76ers and scored on a drive to pull Philadelphia to within 89-87 with 2:24 left. Brian Winters sank one of two free throws with 2:06 left as Milwaukee led 90-87.

After Caldwell Jones sank a jumper to bring to Philadelphia to within 90-89, neither team scored on the next five possessions, and the 76ers got a chance when Julius Erving rebounded a missed shot by Lanier with 14 seconds left. Winters then fouled Cheeks, who sank his free throws with five seconds left before Moncrief's winning basket.

Lanier sank two jump shots and scored on an offensive rebound, while Moncrief scored eight points to help the Bucks break to a 29-14 lead. The Bucks collapsed their defense inside and forced eight Philadelphia turnovers in the first quarter. Moncrief contributed six points to a 20-4 Milwaukee tear as the Bucks opened their 15-point lead.

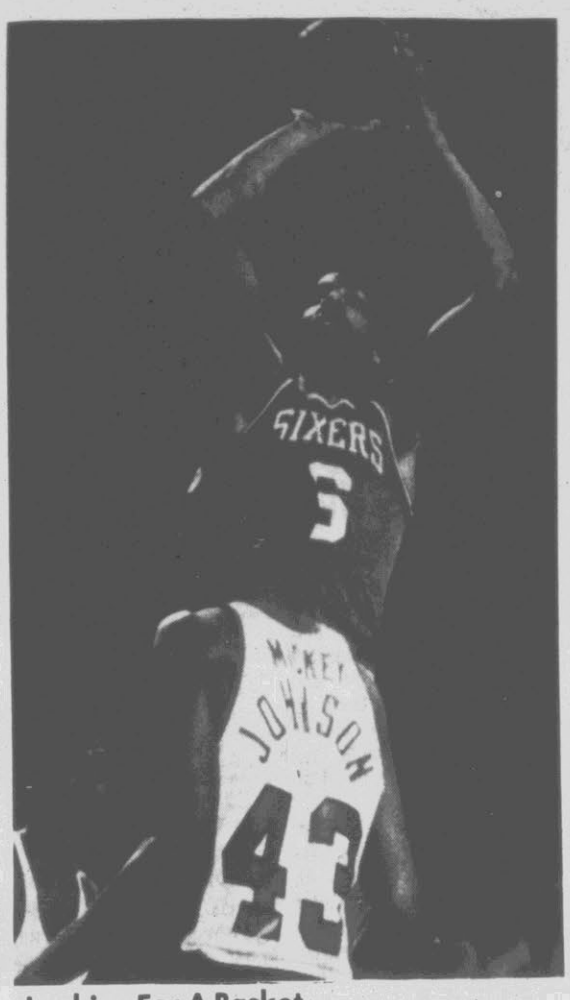

The 76ers switched to a half-court trap defense in the second quarter, but reserve Robert Smith fired in two long jumpers and Marques Johnson scored on a drive as the Bucks stretched their lead to 39-21.

But the trap forced the Bucks to use up much of the shot clock on several occasions and they had to take hurried shots. Two driving layups by Toney started a Philadelphia rally as the 76ers three times cut their deficit to nine points. Milwaukee led 48-37 at halftime.

Mears Runs To Easy Stroh Win

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — Rick Mears, who set a track record in qualifying a week earlier, ran off to an easy victory Saturday in the rain-delayed Stroh's 200 Indy car race.

Mears, the defending Indy car national champion, now has swept the first two rounds of the 1982 PPG-CART Indy Car World Series, firmly establishing him as the early favorite for the Indianapolis 500 May 30.

The 30-year-old driver from Bakersfield, Calif., roared away from Mario Andretti, the other front-row starter, at the start of the 132-lap race and lost the spot only once. Andretti, who later left the race with engine problems, led briefly after Mears made his first pit stop on lap 40.

Mears, who also won the season-opener from the pole in March at Phoenix, Ariz., drove his arrow-nosed blue and white Cosworth-powered Penske PC-10 racer across the finish line at Atlanta International Raceway 7.69-seconds ahead of second-place finisher Gordon Johncock.

Johncock, driving a Wildcat, was the only other competitor among the 19 starters to finish on the same lap with the leader.

Indy car rookie Danny Sullivan was third, a distant six laps behind. Mears' older brother, Roger, 35, getting his first chance at a regular ride on the Indy car circuit, finished fourth, seven laps behind, and Bill Alsup was fifth, seven laps back of Roger Mears.

Rick Mears, who set a track record of 204.463 mph in qualifying for the 200-miler a week ago, averaged 164.750 mph on the 1.5-mile, high-banked oval.

Twenty-two cars actually qualified for the starting field, but after last Sunday's racing program was postponed by rain, several of the competitors, including three-time Indy 500 winner Johnny Rutherford, decided to pass up the rescheduled race.

Jim Hall, who owns Rutherford's Chaparral racer, decided to stay home and work on the car in preparation for the opening of Indianapolis practice next Saturday.

There were five caution flags for a total of 22 laps, but there were no serious accidents. The only injuries occurred in pit-lane.

A crewman for Tom Sneva suffered a foot injury when the fuel hose stuck in Sneva's car and pulled him under the left rear wheel as the driver began to leave the pits. Fuel sprayed on the car and it was hosed down with foam.

Cage Star To Try Football

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Pete Metzelaars, college basketball's all-time field-goal percentage leader and the guiding force behind Wabash's NCAA Division III championship last season, decided his future was in professional football.

The 6-foot-8, 240-pound Metzelaars, unstoppable in small-college basketball, figured he might not make it in the National Basketball Association.

But he believes his size, speed and sure hands are his biggest assets for a career as a tight end in the National Football League.

He was chosen by the Seattle Seahawks in the third round of Tuesday's college draft, the 76th overall selection and the first Wabash player ever picked by the NFL.

"This is a great opportunity for me, to be drafted this early by a fine organization...to have the opportunity to prove myself, coming from Division III football, that I can play in the NFL," Metzelaars said Thursday in a telephone interview from his home at Crawfordsville, Ind.

Wabash finished 8-1 last season, losing 21-14 in the season finale to arch-rival DePauw. That snapped a 24-game unbeaten string by the Little Giants.

"I thought if I got lucky I could go that early," Metzelaars said of his third-round selection by the Seahawks. "At first, I thought I could go anywhere from the third to sixth rounds. I'm just happy to go that early. I would have been happy with most any team, but Seattle has a young team and there are a lot of positions open. I've got an opportunity to go in and make a contribution right away."

Metzelaars, who will attend an orientation camp this week in Seattle, caught 40 passes for 603 yards and five touchdowns last season. For his career, he caught 77 passes for 1,196 yards and nine touchdowns.

In basketball, he averaged 24.2 points and 13.2 rebounds for the 24-4 Little Giants, including a 45-point performance in an 83-62 victory over Potsdam, N.Y., for the Division III championship last month.

Metzelaars, who hit 17 of 23 shots from the field and was named tourney most valuable player, set NCAA records — for all divisions — with 75.3 percent field goal accuracy.

Revenge Sweet For Wilder, Pirates

NORFOLK, Va. — East Carolina pushed over six runs in the second inning and went on to record a 7-5 baseball victory over Old Dominion Friday night in a game filled with meaning.

For the Pirates it meant a 30-game winning season, which ties the school record for most wins. It also meant another win against an ECAC-South opponent, and just about insures that the Pirates will get a bid to the league's post-season tournament in two weeks.

But, sweeter yet, it was revenge for an earlier 4-1 loss to the Monarchs in Greenville several weeks back: a game at which the Old Dominion coach reportedly made some disparaging remarks about the Pirate "lack of talent."

The Monarchs, who drop to 32-9-2 overall and 9-2-1 in ECAC play, grabbed an initial lead in the first inning of the contest. With one out, Joe Millis singled and Lenny Koperna singled up the middle, moving Millis to third. Old Dominion then attempted a double steal, which the Pirates read perfectly. However, when attempting to make the return throw to the plate, ECU second baseman Mike Sorrell dropped the ball, allowing Millis to score for a 1-0 lead.

But it didn't last long as the Pirates exploded for six second inning runs that put the game away for the Bucs.

It all came with two away. First, with one out, Todd Hendley walked, then after the second putout, Kelly Robinette singled down the left field line. Robert Wells walked, loading the bases.

David Wells followed with a triple over the head of the leftfielder, scoring all three baserunners. Sorrell made up for his misplay, doubling to left to score Wells. John Hallow singled and Todd Evans got a hit scoring Sorrell. Fran Fitzgerald followed with another hit, driving in Hallow for the 6-1 lead.

Old Dominion came back with a run in the third to make it 6-2. With one down, Mark Wasinger walked — one of ten given up by winner Bill Wilder, who also walked Millis. Koperna then singled to score Wasinger.

The Monarchs rallied once more, cutting the lead back to just one run, 6-5, with three in the seventh. With one away, Millis walked and Koperna singled. Jeff Beard then hit a towering homer, his tenth of the season, to account for all three runs.

The Pirates, however, came up with an insurance run in the ninth. After one out, Fitzgerald doubled and scored on a hit by Hendley.

East Carolina had several other threats throughout the evening. The Pirates left a runner stranded at third in the first, and at second in the sixth and eighth. A bases-loaded double play ended a threat in the fourth.

Old Dominion left runners at second in the fourth and fifth, and in the ninth finally chased Wilder.

The senior righthander walked both Millis and Koperna to start the inning, and that brought on Bobby Patterson. Patterson, who had won two games this week, earned the save, but it didn't come easy.

The first batter he faced attempted to bunt the runners up, but hit a short popup instead that Hendley made a diving catch of to retire him. Patterson then struck out the next two batters to end the game.

Sorrell and Fitzgerald led the East Carolina hitting with three each, while David Wells and Hallow each had two.

East Carolina closes out the regular season with a 30-12 record and a 6-3 ECAC-South mark.

Now, it becomes a waiting situation. The ECAC selection committee is to meet Saturday, May 8, to choose the four teams for the double-elimination event that begins May 14 at James Madison University.

The general feeling around the league is that East Carolina, James Madison, Old Dominion and probably Catholic University will be the four chosen, with the former three seen as the most likely picks.

BOOS DON'T BOTHER

MIAMI (AP) — Miami quarterback David Woodley heard some boos during the 1981 NFL season but he took them in stride.

"I don't take booing in a personal way," the young quarterback said. "The way I look at it, they're not booing me as much as they are cheering for somebody else to come in and take over. Besides, none of the boos sounded as bad as I heard in college.

Suns Play Well, But Lakers Playing Better; Just One Away

By The Associated Press

It's not that Phoenix is playing all that badly, says Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley. It's just that the Lakers are playing so well.

"I think we're playing excellent basketball. I don't think they collapsed," Riley said Friday night after the Lakers, with their third straight triumph over the Suns, moved within a victory (they can get it Sunday) of the National Basketball Association's Western Conference finals against the winner of the San Antonio-Seattle series.

Los Angeles, Riley added, "hasn't played this well more than four or five times over a string of three games this season."

The Suns, blown out by 19 points in each of the first two games, made a game of it this time before succumbing 114-106 as Jamaal Wilkes, taking advantage of Phoenix's overloaded defense on Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, scored 26 points. Earvin "Magic" Johnson added 23 and Abdul-Jabbar 22.

"I think triple-teaming Kareem all night had something to do with it ... They do pay too much attention to Kareem, which is OK by me," said Wilkes.

San Antonio, trailing by 21 points late in the second period and 17 at the half, rallied to edge the SuperSonics 99-97 and take a 2-1 lead going into Sunday's fourth game.

"We played worse than we've ever played all year in the first half," said George Gervin, who scored 16 of his 36 points in the third period. "The second half was a different story. My shots were starting to go in in the third so I started looking for my jumpers."

The Eastern Conference semifinals resumed today with Philadelphia holding a 2-0 lead heading into Milwaukee and Washington and visiting Boston tied 1-1.

Even John MacLeod, the Phoenix coach, couldn't knock his Suns' play. "A lot of people say we expended a lot of energy to make it to the playoffs — that after winning two out of three we'd be sapped," he said of their mini-series victory over Denver. "But we just ran into a solid, solid ball club."

The Suns cut a 14-point deficit to 98-92 with 5:30 to go and 105-99 with 2:38 remaining before Wilkes reeled off six consecutive points to put the game out of reach. Alvan Adams had 23 points for the Suns.

San Antonio hasn't lost at home to Seattle in more than four years. The streak seemed over with the Sonics up 59-42 at halftime before the Spurs began chipping away. An 18-foot jumper by reserve guard Mike Bratz, his only basket of the game, with five seconds to play, was the game-winner.

He wasn't supposed to be part of the play mapped out by Coach Stan Albeck with 28 seconds to go and the score tied 97-97. But the Sonics converged on Gervin and knocked the ball free. Mark Olberding flipped it to Bratz, wide open on the baseline. He hit the game-winner with one second left on the shot clock. Gus Williams led Seattle with 25 points and Jack Sikma had 20.

Firebirds Top N. Pitt

STANHOPE — Southern Nash scored five runs in the second inning and went on to whip North Pitt, 10-1, Friday in an Eastern Carolina Conference baseball game.

North Pitt, 4-9 overall and 1-6 in the league, took a 1-0 lead in the top of the first but the Firebirds came back to score five runs in the bottom of the inning — thanks mainly to a grand slam.

Southern Nash, 7-9 overall and 4-3 in the conference, then added three more runs in the third and two in the fourth for their 10-run total.

Durham Pitcher Sets Mark

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Durham pitcher Brian Fisher set one Carolina League strikeout record and tied another in hurling the Bulls to a 5-3 victory over Salem Friday night.

Fisher fanned the first nine batters to break the old mark set in 1964 by Portsmouth's Rudy May, and finished with 20 strikeouts to match a mark established by three others.

Perry Downs Yankees For Win No. 299

NEW YORK (AP) — Rather than just talking about how to pitch, Gaylord Perry gave a demonstration and moved closer to joining the elite group of pitchers who have posted 300 career pitchers.

"Every game he sits in the corner over there (in the dugout) and holds class," Seattle manager Rene Lachemann said of the 43-year-old Perry. "The pitchers line up to sit next to him. Talking to him and seeing how he sets hitters up is like taking a class in the game."

Perry, needing final-out help, hurled a seven-hitter Friday night as the Mariners defeated the New York Yankees 6-3, giving the veteran right-hander his 299th career major league win.

Seattle won by scoring five of its runs in the eighth and ninth innings.

Perry gave up two Yankee runs in the first inning before he discovered a flaw in his pitching motion.

"They (the Yankees) were hitting good pitches," Perry said. "I felt they shouldn't be hitting them that good, so it must have been something I was doing wrong.

"I had a flaw in my windup. I wasn't rotating and hiding the ball the way I should and they were able to pick up the ball early. I slowed my motion down a little and rotated a little more."

The teacher was almost perfect, giving up a single to Willie Randolph in the third inning, a single to Jerry Mumphrey in the sixth and a walk in the sixth.

Still, the Mariners were behind 2-1 when Yankee relief ace Goose Gossage came on in the top of the eighth for New York starter Doyle Alexander.

"I don't want Alexander to go too long, especially with Goose in the bullpen," said Yankee Manager Gene Michael. "You've got a guy like Goose, you want to use him. I was trying to get Alexander some confidence with a win."

It was Perry, the old teacher, who evened his season mark at 2-2 as the Mariners dropped Gossage's record to 0-2.

"My arm seemed dead," Gossage said after being belted for six hits and five runs in the two innings he worked. "I didn't have the good velocity. I felt like that in the bullpen. My fastball had no jump to it."

Michael said, "Goose is not Goose yet. It's the inactivity. We'll have to get him in there more."

Perry, though, was Perry. The veteran pitcher is the oldest player in the majors and is the only man to win the Cy Young Award in both leagues, capturing the American League honor in 1972 when he was 24-16 with the Cleveland Indians and the National League Award in 1978 when he was 21-6 with the San Diego Padres.

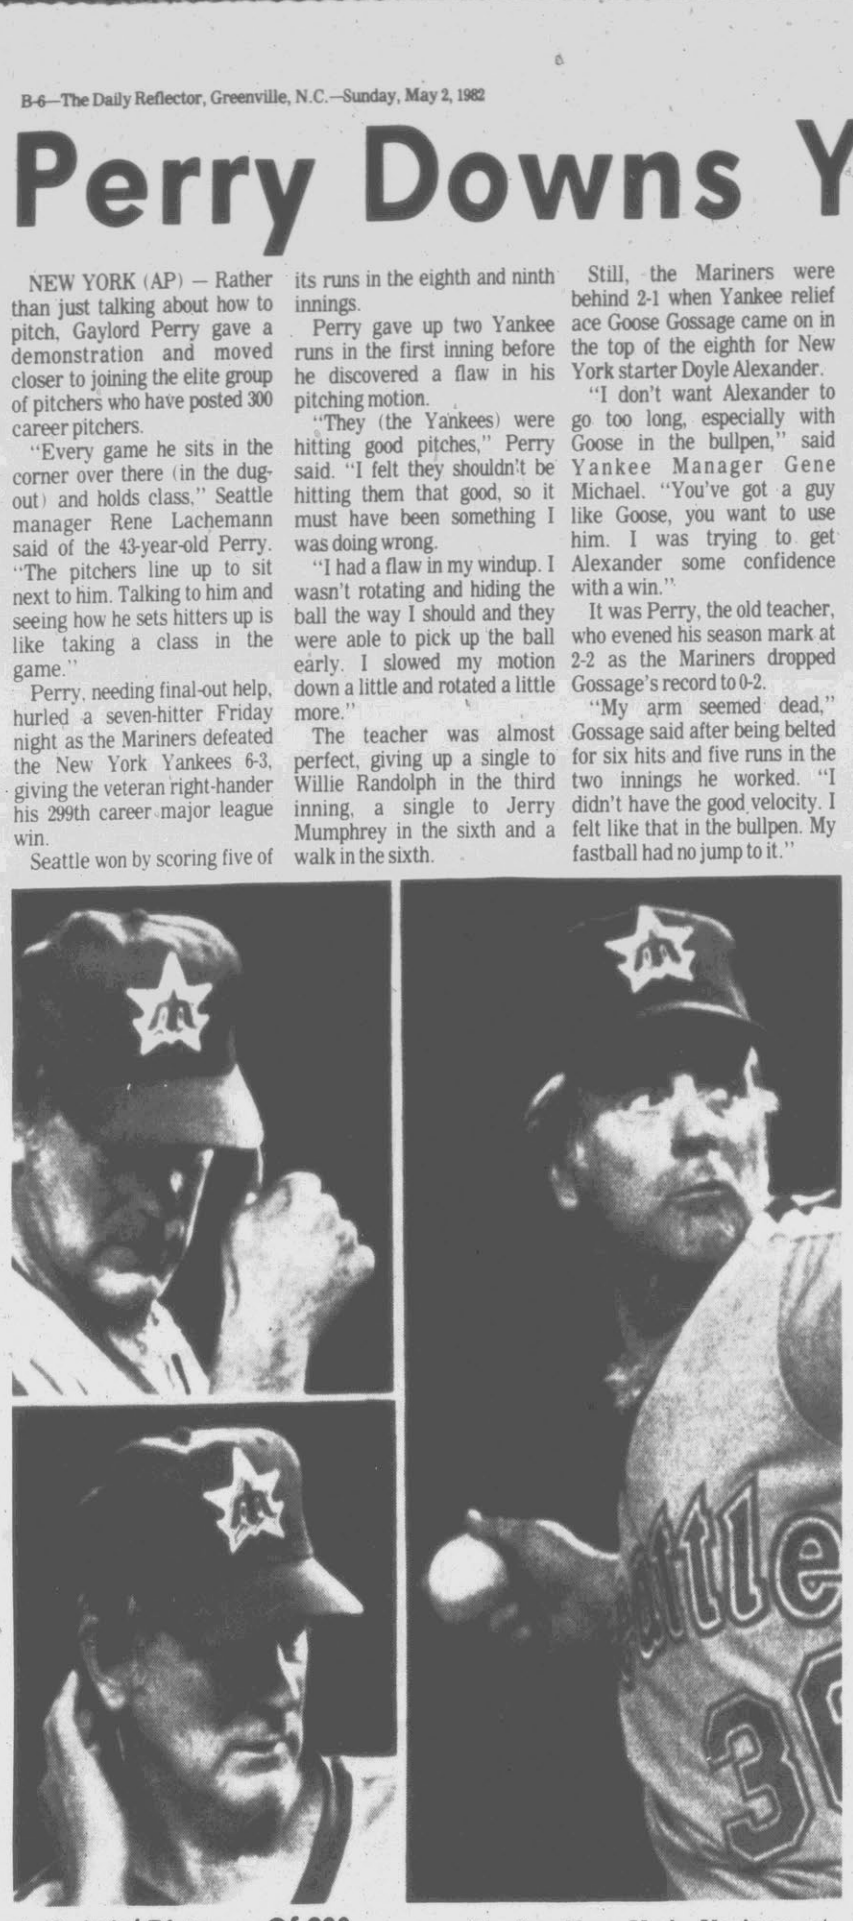

"I wouldn't want to embarrass the club or myself," Perry said when asked how long he was going to pitch. Then he noted: "I knew the kids (his teammates) weren't quitting, and I wasn't going to quit."

In the ninth, Dave Winfield doubled and scored when New York pinch-hitter Lou Piniella blooped a two-out single to center. When Rick Cerone reached on shortstop Todd Cruz' error, Lachemann went to reliever Bill Caudill.

"I wasn't tired where I couldn't keep on going," Perry said. "Rene came out to the mound and said, 'You pitched a good game, but I think I need a hard thrower.' I said, 'Go get him.'"

With that, Perry left to a standing ovation from the crowd of 20,121 and a group of happy students — his teammates.

Richie Zisk doubled home a run for Seattle in the first, Bruce Bochte singled home a pair in the eighth and Bud Bulling doubled home two more in the ninth.

Expos Hand Valenzuela Second Straight Loss Friday By 4-2

By The Associated Press

No offense intended, Fernando, but the Montreal Expos can hit any pitcher in the National League, Al Oliver says.

The Expos handed Fernando Valenzuela, the Los Angeles Dodgers' 1981 Cy Young winner, his second straight loss Friday night, beating the Dodgers 4-2. Valenzuela, who was beaten 6-3 by San Francisco last Sunday, yielded four runs on seven hits in seven innings against Montreal.

Oliver, acquired from the Texas Rangers this spring, drove in three of Montreal's runs, helping the Expos snap a nine-game losing streak at Dodger Stadium.

"We feel we can hit anybody," Oliver said. "I feel Fernando is the pitcher everyone said he is. He had all his pitches, but tonight we were able to capitalize."

Scott Sanderson, 3-1, gave up consecutive homers to Ron Cey and Pedro Guerrero in the fourth inning, then settled down to stop Los Angeles until two were out in the eighth. He had yielded just six hits when he was relieved by Jeff Reardon, who earned his fourth save.

Phillies 3, Padres 1

Bo Diaz's two-run homer with one out in the 10th inning lifted Steve Carlton over the San Diego Padres. The Philadelphia lefthander checked the Padres on 10 hits, walking two and striking out eight in earning his second victory against five losses.

The only damage off Carlton came in the first inning when consecutive hits by Gene Richards, Juan Bonilla and Garry Templeton produced a 1-0 San Diego lead.

Gary Matthews tied the score 1-1 in the seventh inning with a solo homer. Then, in the 10th, Matthews singled and was forced at second on George Vukovich's attempted sacrifice. Diaz followed by clouting Juan Eichelberger's first pitch into the left field seats.

Braves 1, Cubs 0

Rookie Steve Bedrosian, making only his second start of the season, and Gene Garber combined on a five-hitter as Atlanta shut out the Cubs for the second straight night.

Claudell Washington's sixth-inning homer provided the only run of the game. It was his second homer of the year and third hit of the game.

Bedrosian, 2-0, allowed just four hits in his seven-inning stint, and Garber allowed one hit as he earned his fourth save. The victory was the third straight for Atlanta.

Astros 4, Pirates 3

Don Sutton worked eight strong innings, and Phil Garner, a former Pirate, celebrated his 33rd birthday with a three-run homer that helped Houston end a two-game losing streak.

Sutton limited Pittsburgh to three runs, one unearned, on five hits during his outing. He walked only one and struck out seven before he got ninth-inning relief help from Dave Smith, who got his second save.

Reds 8, Cards 2

Frank Pastore scattered nine hits in his second complete game of the season, and Alex Trevino and Ron Oester drove in two runs apiece for Cincinnati.

Trevino ripped a two-run single in the fifth inning to give Cincinnati a 5-2 lead, and Oester smacked an RBI double in the sixth to start a three-run outburst that put the Reds up 8-2.

Giants 5, Mets 4

Pinch-hitter Reggie Smith slugged a three-run homer with none out in the ninth inning to give San Francisco a victory over ace New York reliever Neil Allen. With runners at first and second, Allen relieved Pete Falcone and promptly threw a wild pitch to Johnnie LeMaster that advanced the runners.

Giants Manager Frank Robinson called LeMaster back to the dugout, sending out Smith, who took two strikes before lofting Allen's 1-2 pitch into the right field seats.

Knights Rally To Top Bethel

Jerry Simpson drove in three runs to help Greenville Christian rally for a 9-7 victory over Bethel Christian Friday afternoon in a high school baseball game.

GCA, now 6-2, trailed, 5-3, going into the bottom of the fourth, but scored three runs to take a lead it never lost.

With one gone, Joel Mason singled and stole second. Then, with two out, Steve Dilda and David Hollingsworth walked to load the bases. A third walk — to John Parnell — forced Mason home and Simpson followed with a double to score both Dilda and Parnell and GCA led, 6-5.

The Knights added another run in the fifth and scored twice more in the sixth to go up, 9-5. In the sixth, errors allowed Troy Hudson and Joseph Sasser to reach.

Mason was then hit by a pitch to load the bases and, with one out, Dilda singled to score two runs and up the lead to four.

Bethel battled back for two runs in the seventh but the Knights, with O'Brian on the mound, held on for the win.

Simpson led GCA with three hits in four at bats. Mason was two for two and Dilda was two for three. Hank Jarman was three for four for Bethel.

Chargers Move Into Lead On 6-0 Win

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

PIKEVILLE — Ayden-Grifton, which has sought all year to claim the top spot in the Eastern Carolina Conference as its own, stands alone atop the ECC — thanks to a mighty performance by Tyrone Gay and company.

Gay, the Chargers' hard-throwing junior left-hander, struck out 10 and hurled a three-hitter to lead Ayden-Grifton to an impressive 6-0 victory over Charles B. Aycock Friday night.

The victory leaves Ayden-Grifton at 7-1 in the ECC, one-half game in front of the Falcons, who are 6-1. Greene Central is a game and a half out of first at 5-2.

The game was scoreless after three innings but the Chargers used an error in the fourth to score one run and then scored two runs in the fifth without aid of a hit before Doug Coley launched a two-run home run in the seventh to seal the win.

"I thought we played well," A-G coach Allan Wilson said. "I thought we played with a lot of emotion. I thought we were ready to play tonight, but we've still got four games to go."

The Chargers' remaining four contests — against Southern Nash, Greene Central, Farmville Central and North Pitt — are all at home. Said Wilson: "We know now if we win the next four games we can't finish worse than in first."

The Chargers, now 12-5, entered Friday's game know a loss would all but end any hopes of repeating as ECC champs. And, if A-G needed any added incentive, a 7-6 loss to Aycock earlier in the season provided it.

"We were ready to play them yesterday," Wilson said. "We wanted to play them."

Aycock has what is perhaps the best hitting team in the league. Five of their players are among the top ten in runs batted in and two are among the top five in hitting.

Gay was equal to the task. After having trouble early — he walked the bases loaded in the third — Gay settled down. He walked only one more batter while striking out six in the final four innings in upping his record to 6-3.

"I felt pretty good out there," Gay said as he pulled his A-G jacket on afterwards. "I used my fastball a lot tonight. I knew once we started scoring I needed to hold 'em."

Added Wilson: "He threw the ball hard. He mixed it up well and kept them off balance. Even the catcher was having trouble handling the ball."

CBA coach Dee Glover was equally impressed. "He's by far the best in this league," Glover said. "I wish we had a stopper like that."

The game was scoreless after three innings only because neither team was able to find a hit when it was needed.

With two out in the top of the first, A-G loaded the bases when CBA starter Rich Colvin threw 13 straight balls. But Joey Kennedy hit into a force out at second to end the threat.

Paul Thomas reached second on an error by Coley in right in the bottom of the inning and went to third on a wild pitch. But Andy Bunn struck out looking for the third out.

A-G had runners at first and second in the second but Chris Strickland lined into a double play. The Falcons loaded the bases in the bottom of the second via three walks, but Kenny Grantham struck out to end the inning.

The Chargers then stranded two in the third and Aycock one to give both teams six left on base through four innings.

"I was beginning to wonder if we were gonna get a hit," Wilson said. "We needed to score but just couldn't get a hit."

The Chargers finally broke through in the fourth — thanks to an errant throw by shortstop Paul Thomas of Bernard Riccarelli's grounder allowed pinch runner Quentin Warren to score.

Warren was running for Moye, who with one gone in the inning had hit a line drive that Thomas made a diving attempt at but which was ruled a trap by the umpire.

Ayden-Grifton was back for more in the fifth, scoring two runs without aid of a hit.

Terry Locust walked to open the inning, stole second and went to third on Coley's sacrifice bunt. Locust later scored on Kennedy's grounder to second when the throw home was late.

Kennedy subsquently stole second and went to third on a passed ball before scoring on Jackie Conway's sacrifice fly to make it 3-0.

Nicky Burroughs lined a double off Kennedy's glove at first but Paul Thomas grounded back to Gay and Bunn flew out to leave Burroughs stranded. In the sixth, Mike Rose led off with a single but Greg Thomas hit the ball back to Gay, who turned it into a double play — the Chargers' first of 1982.

If that didn't seal the win, what Ayden-Grifton did in the seventh at the plate surely did. With one gone and Shannon Peede running for Gay, who had walked, Coley drilled a homer over the left-centerfield fence, some 330 feet away.

Then, with two gone, Conway doubled to center and stole second — the Chargers' sixth steal of the night. He then scored when Mercer misplayed Art Rouse's grounder and A-G led, 6-0.

After throwing out the lead off man in the seventh, Gay struck out the next two batters to end the game and send the Chargers into first place in the ECC all alone.

Havelock Nips Conley By 6-3

HAVELOCK — Havelock hurler Curtis Gaskell struck out 16 Conley batters as he hurled the Rams to a 6-3 victory over the Vikings Friday night in a Coastal Conference baseball game.

Conley managed only five hits off Gaskell, who walked three along the way. His blazing fast ball and a sharp-breaking curve kept the Vikings guessing all night.

Havelock rallied for the lead in the fourth, scoring twice. Gaskell helped his own cause with a single, and Dwight Downie walked. Joey Colley, attempting to sacrifice them up, reached when his bunt was thrown away, and that allowed both runners to score.

In the fifth, the Rams picked up two more runs, salting it away. With two gone, Ron Dahart doubled, and Gaskell popped up just behind the mound. However, the Conley secondbaseman overran the ball and it dropped in with Dahart scoring on the play. Gaskell's courtesy runner, Bryar, moved to third on a passed ball, then scored on a wild pitch for a 4-1 lead.

Havelock scored two more in the bottom of the sixth, after the Vikings had closed to 4-3 with two in the top of the frame.

The loss was the third against no wins in Coastal play for Conley, 4-9 overall. Havelock advances to 4-1 in the league and 11-3 overall.

Roenicke Breaks Slump With Homer

By The Associated Press

It looked like the same old story when Gary Roenicke came off the Baltimore bench to pinch hit in the fourth inning and struck out for the 12th time in a streak of 20 hitless at-bats.

"I had never struck out so much before when I was getting my swings," Roenicke said. "I usually strike out on checked swings or looking at the ball."

Two innings later, though, Roenicke managed to swing his bat where the ball was and it sailed over the left field fence for a three-run homer that sealed the Orioles' 9-4 victory Friday night over the California Angels.

"That took a load off my feet, my body and my mind, especially," Roenicke said. "That was probably the most satisfying homer I've ever hit. The slump was bad because it came after I had my best spring training ever and got off to a good start. Then overnight it turned around."

Baltimore's 11-hit attack enabled Jim Palmer to post his first victory of the season and 249th of his career. That is 50 fewer than Gaylord Perry has after the 43-year-old right-hander notched No.299 as the Seattle Mariners pounded Rich Gossage and the New York Yankees 6-3.

Al Bumbry and Rick Dempsey drove in two runs apiece as the Orioles concluded the third worst April in the club's history with a 6-12 record. Roenicke's fourth homer of the season came off Luis Sanchez following an intentional walk to Eddie Murray.

Mariners 6, Yankees 3

Perry gave up two runs and three hits in the first inning, then blanked the Yankees on two more hits until the ninth when he needed last-out help from Bill Caudill. However, the Mariners managed only three hits off Yankee starter Doyle Alexander and trailed 2-1 when relief ace Gossage cameNo start the eighth.

Seattle tied the scored on one-out singles by Bud Bulling, Todd Cruz and Julio Cruz. The runners advanced on a grounder and scored on a single by Bruce Bochte. Bulling doubled home two insurance runs in the ninth.

"They were hitting good pitches," Perry said of his shaky first inning. "I felt they shouldn't be hitting them that good, so it must have been something I was doing wrong. It was in my windup. I wasn't rotating and hiding the ball the way I should."

Perry also said the pressure of pursuing the milestone 300th victory didn't bother him.

"My whole career I've pitched better under pressure. I just have to take the pressure off the young kids," he said. "They didn't give up, and neither did I."

Red Sox 7, Rangers 1

Rich Gedman and Dave Stapleton rapped out three hits apiece as Boston won for the ninth time in 10 games and handed Texas its seventh consecutive loss behind the four-hit pitching of Mike Torrez. Gedman doubled off Texas starter Charlie Hough and scored an unearned run on a throwing error by first baseman Lamar Johnson in the second inning. He blooped a single and eventually scored in a three-run fourth and singled in the fifth.

Tigers 6, White Sox 4

With one out in the 11th, Lou Whitaker singled off loser Jerry Koosman and Chet Lemon greeted Salome Barojas with a single that sent Whitaker to third. Enos Cabell grounded to third baseman Jim Morrison and Whitaker beat the throw to the plate to put the Tigers ahead. Kirk Gibson's single scored Lemon with an insurance run.

A's 8, Indians 0

Rick Langford fired a three-hitter, Jeff Newman drove in four runs and Dwayne Murphy added three, two on his fourth home run of the season. Langford struck out three and walked one. Murphy homered in the third inning and Newman rapped a three-run double in the seventh.

Twins 7, Brewers 4

Roger Erickson and Ron Davis combined on a six-hitter and Kent Hrbek kept up his torrid hitting. Erickson held Milwaukee hitless until Jim Gantner singled leading off the sixth inning. By that time, the Twins had a 4-1 lead. They raked Moose Haas for three runs in the first inning, including a two-run triple by Hrbek, who extended his hitting streak to 12 games. Gary Gaetti homered in the second inning and Ron Washington belted a two-run shot in the seventh.

Royals 8, Blue Jays 7

Cesar Geronimo surprised Toronto with a two-out squeeze bunt in the eighth inning that scored the winning run. Frank White reached base when third baseman Rance Mulliniks muffed his two-out grounder and went to third on Onix Concepcion's single. Manager Dick Howser signaled for a delayed double steal but Geronimo never saw the sign and bunted perfectly down the third-base line as White raced home. Kansas City trailed 5-0 — Willie Upshaw homered for Toronto — but Amos Otis tied the score 7-7 with a two-run single in the seventh.

Fishing Report

Saltwater — reports from the Outer Banks show good catches of grey trout just off shore in nets. Talking with guides at Ocracoke and Nags Head, they seem to think as soon as the weather clears the fishing will take off, especially with the trout.

Wayne Teeter, a guide on Ocracoke, reports good catches of red drum in the 35-pound class before the weather turned sour. A few kings were caught off Morehead by the charter boats also.

Freshwater — weather conditions have controlled the inland fishing again this week. Lake Mattamuskeet has been the only bright spot when the wild has been down. George Wilkerson of Greenville lost a whopper of a largemouth (8-10 pounds?) this week on Mattamuskeet. I tried to tell him to change his old line before he went.

Fulghum Honored

Former Greene Central star Jabo Fulghum has been selected as the Player of The Week in the Eastern Tarheel Conference.

Fulghum, a sophomore at Louisburg College, was six for 11 with nine runs batted in this past week. He ahd two home runs, one a grand slam, and two doubles.

Fulghum is currently hitting .405.

General Notes

Dr. George Martin has done it again. In years past, Martin has been an avid collector of lost golf balls. Some years back, he donated a large supply he had built up in his basement to the Boys Club of Greenville.

Now, he's done it again.

Last week, Martin donated 16,000 balls to the Lions Club. Those were sold to Brook Valley Country Club. Another 1,000 was donated to the East Carolina golf team.

George, of course, will continue to be beating the bushes for those balls that have escaped detection from their original owners, and maybe later on, more will find their way to a charitable cause.

Some people in the area may remember Kathy Postlewait when she was a student at East Carolina University. Now, she's an active member of the Ladies Professional Golfers Association, still seeking her first win on the tour.

After several second place finishes, Postlewait had another shot last week in the Orlando, Fla., tournament, only to lose in a sudden-death playoff to Patty Sheehan.

Still, she's looking forward to breaking into the winner's circle for the first time. "I know I have it in me to win," she was quoted. "I've know for the last couple of years I can win. I made a lot of good shots last week and thought it was my time."

Apparently, however, Postlewait will have to wait until another time for that elusive first win.

Nine Drivers Try And Fail To Surpass Parson's 200 MPH Trip

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Nine drivers took a shot at Benny Parsons' stock car qualifying record Friday, but the one-time Detroit taxi driver easily held on to the pole position for the Winston 500 Grand National race.

Parsons charged around the Alabama International Motor Speedway track Thursday at 200.176 mph, the fastest qualifying lap ever turned in by a Grand National car. But late afternoon rain halted the first-day time trials with nine competitors still waiting for a chance to qualify up front.

That meant Parsons, elated by his record run in a Pontiac LeMans, still had to wait until Friday to find out if he had wrapped up his third pole of the season.

"The waiting wasn't really bad," Parsons said. "I knew the 200 (mph lap) was good enough to keep me somewhere near the front."

That was quick, but good enough only for fourth place on the 40-car grid for Sunday's race.

"That was about what we expected," the soft-spoken Labonte said. "Benny was really just out of reach."

Rookie Geoff Bodine was next in a Pontiac Grand Prix at 197.860, followed by Dave Marcis at 195.705 and Buddy Baker at 195.166, both in Buicks, and Kyle Petty at 194.686 in a Pontiac.

All of them wound up among the top 20 — the positions determined in what was officially first-day qualifying.

In all, 29 of the 40 starters qualified at more than 190 mph, with the slowest car in the field, a Buick driven by Ferrell Harris, clocked at 185.899 mph.

Ron Bouchard, who won last fall's Talladega 500 as a Grand National rookie, ws among the first-day qualifiers with a fast lap of 196.343 mph. That put him eighth on the race-day grid, a spot he figures will help him when the green flag falls Sunday at 2 p.m., EDT.

"There are easily a dozen cars out here that can win the race," noted the youngster from Fitchburg, Mass. "I feel pretty good about us being one of them if things go right for us. We've got to get a good start and keep out of trouble until the field gets a little spread out.

"You've got to remember that this is only the third time we've run at this track. And everytime you come here, you learn little bit more about drafting.

"The key is to be around the leaders at the finish," added Bouchard, who snuck past Darrell Waltrip and Labonte to take the checkered flag last August. "At least it worked out pretty well last fall."

Ricky Rudd, another first-day qualifier at 199.388, will be next to Labonte in the second row, while Bodine will be joined in row threz by Cale Yarborough, who was clocked at 197.379.

Ex-Rampant Shining Brightly As Sunblazers' Second Baseman

There have been many reasons why the Florida International University Sunblazers are enjoying their most successful baseball season to date, but none have been more important than the play of junior second baseman Ron Chapman.

Chapman is a graduate of Rose High School in Greenville, and attended Louisburg Junior College before transfering to FIU, located in Miami, Fla.

Already, in only his first year at FIU, he has proven to be a driving force behind the Sunblazers' 42-7 record and second place national ranking. He's become recognized as one of the top middle-infielders in the state of Florida.

Not only is Chapman the team's third leading hitter with a .359 average, but he has also shown a knack for reaching base out of the leadoff spot in the order. Playing in 44 games, he has an on-base percenteage of .516.

After getting on, Chapman has displayed another talent. He leads the team with 39 stolen bases, and because of that, is second with 45 runs scored.

"Ronnie has made a big difference to our ball club this season," said head coach Danny Price, also a former Tar Heel. "We needed a good leadoff man and we recruited him for just that reason. He's having a good year with the bat and has performed well defensively, too. Ronnie's been our team's spark plug."

Before attending FIU, Chapman starred for the Louisburg Hurricanes and Coach Russ Frazier. As a sophomore, the 5-10 speedstar was team co-catpain and an All-Conference performer who helped lead the team to a third pace finish in the NJCAA National Championships.

Chapman's talents didn't go unnoticed. In January, 1981, he was selected in the Major League Free Agent Draft by the Los Angeles Dodgers but opted to continue his education.

Dear Mr. Congressman:

The American Dream is dying! Most people can't afford to buy a home. Even worse, if something isn't done, my children will never own a home. Something must be done.

Mr. Congressman, affordable home ownership has been one of the great distinguishing triumphs of our nation. I don't know when the dream got put aside, but I don't want it to die.

You have the ability to assure the perpetuation of the opportunity for home ownership.

Please Mr. Congressman, Save The American Dream.

Pirate Club Sets Meet

Dr. Leo Jenkins, former East Carolina University chancellor, will be the keynote speaker for the Greenville Pirate Club Revival, to be held Friday at the Casablanca.

The revival, to solicit new members and promote financial and fan support for East Carolina athletics, will run from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. In addition to Jenkins, Greenville club president Mike Yorke, and Pirate Club executive director Richard Dupree will also speak.

Members of the East Carolina coaching staff will also be present and available to talk to fans.

A $1 charge is being made and tickets are available at the Pirate Club or at the door.

Minor Sports Could Be Hurt

By The Associated Press

There could be hard times ahead for some minor intercollegiate sports as the result of new rules on scholarships, according to some college athletic officials.

Beginning Aug. 1, the NCAA rule change will lower from 80 to 70 the number of athletic scholarships a school can hand out in men's nonrevenue-producing sports — virtually every sport other than football and basketball.

The legislation, intended to ease the economic strain on schools, was sponsored at the NCAA's 1981 convention by the Big Ten Conference. It passed without measurable opposition.

No one is predicting the end for those varsity teams which don't pay their own way. But, Maryland Athletic Director Dick Dull believes some sports could be reduced to club status because of the rule change.

"In the future we may restore full funding to some sports while reducing others to club status," Dull said. "Eliminating varsity sports is an option I don't particulary like, but, economically, something has to be done."

While the reduction will force schools to re-evaluate their programs, an NCAA spokesman says some intercollegiate teams could become stronger as schools place more emphasis on them.

"I don't foresee everybody deciding to eliminate the same sport," said Dave Cawood, NCAA Public Relations Director. "The competition could actually become stronger in some sports, since the emphasis will be more distinct on a particular sport than currently exists.

"The strong ice-hockey program will remain strong, as will the strong swimming, gymnastics, track and baseball programs. But the number of institutions sponsoring each particular sport may decrease."

And the overall competitiveness in a sport could be strenghtened by the rule change.

"The major effect of the rule change might be to lessen the dominance of spring sports among a relatively small group of western and southern schools, although no rule will take away the advantages of good weather," said Louisville Athletic Director Bill Olsen, whose school sponsors seven non-revenue sports.

"Any time you reduce the number of scholarships, it spreads the talent around and you get a better balance among the schools."

Clemson, last season's national football champion, was forced to drop fencing from its varsity-sports list. The move eliminated five scholarships and reduced the school's number to the 70 limit.

A Clemson spokesman said it was necessitated by several factors, including recruiting difficulties and distance from matches.

"It's not because of the cutback in scholarships, but because of a cutback in our own money here at the university," said John Beatty, Western Michigan's sports information director. "Other departments in the university are cutting back in addition to athletics — it's not just us."

Some big-time hockey schools will be hurt because the sport is considered non-income by the NCAA. Hockey, for instance, is the second-leading revenue producer behind football at Wisconsin, which awards 20 scholarships in the sport.

The new rule "will reduce our non-income scholarships to 50," said Otto Breitenback, Wisconsin's associate athletic director.

The situation at several schools, such as Kentucky, Oregon and Oregon State, will not be affected because they don't offer 70 scholarships.

"It's of no concern to us because we're well below those limits," said Kentucky Athletic Director Cliff Hagan, whose school provides 59 grants. "We haven't looked at the budget yet for next year, but there's no problem with numbers."

Temple Athletic Director Ernie Casale says his school's practice is to give out parts of each of the scholarships to several athletes, such as tuition to one and room and board to another.

He says 150 people shared in about 60 scholarships awarded by the school this year. "Temple may have a little advantage — we are in the metropolitan (Philadelphia) area where we can get a number of athletes who can commute," he said.

Neale Stoner, athletic director at Illinois, says the reduction should have little impact. He says that since it is being done by the NCAA, all the schools will have fewer scholarships, so no one will have an advantage.

Stoner said that if the Big Ten, of which Illinois is a member, had changed the rule alone, it would have been difficult to compete outside the conference.

At Georgia Tech, the problem, if it could be considered one, is increasing the number of scholarships.

"We're going the other route," said Athletic Director Homer Rice. "We're giving more aid in our non-revenue sports. We have not fully funded all of our programs, so the rule has little or no impact on our program at this time. We're upgrading our non-revenue sports."

Colorado took the initiative on reductions two years ag to offset a projected $1 million deficit in the school's 1980-81 athletic budget.

Eddie Crowder, the school's athleitc director, said the scholarship reduction "unquestionably will have some effect, but I think its effect will be pretty limited here. I imagine what we'll do is reduce scholarships in each sport proportionately. I don't see us dropping any more sports."

But Crowder sees reductions as a wave of the future in college athletic departments.

"My inclination is that we'll see more of this type of thing," he said. "There have been proposals in the past to limit financial aid in non-income sports to just tuition.

Plane Crash Kills 4

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio (AP) — A small plane plowed into a building housing Bowling Green State University students and burst into flames on Saturday, killing four people aboard the aircraft, officials said.

There were no reports of injuries to any of the 46 students who lived in the two-story, privately owned Frazee Apartments, used as off-campus student housing. Officials said the fire severely damaged the building's roof.

Wood County Coroner Dr. Roger Peatee said at least two of the victims were male. He said identities of the victims would not be released until relatives had been notified.

"I can't tell you right now if the burns killed them or the crash killed them," Peatee said.

Police Chief Galen Ash said the plane had just taken off from Wood County airport when it crashed at 10:40 a.m. The airport manager, William "Hoot" Gibson, said it is about one-half mile from the end of the runway to the apartment building.

Larry Shaw, a 20-year-old students, said he was about 100 yards away when he saw the plane crash.

"It had its nose up, then it dropped right into the building," he said. "It looked like it was going down sooner. I guess he was just trying to clear the apartments.

"It sounded like it went through the roof, then two or three seconds later it exploded," Shaw said. "It cleared the trees and the wire, and was just trying to keep its nose up. It seemed to kind of hover, and then it went in."

Both Police Sgt. Tom Brokamp and Cliff Boutelle, the university's public relations director, said the four victims had been aboard the single-engine Cherokee 140.

"It was very fortunate that it was a Saturday morning," said Boutelle. "There are lots of events going on on campus, and a lot of students were out."

One resident who was in the building was Chris Tuttle, 20, the center on the university's women's basketball team.

"I was in the shower and the whole ceiling came down and the lights went out," she said. "The bathroom started on fire. So I got out. Something hit me in the shoulder, and I just ran."

Tracy Collins, editor of the Bowling Green student newspaper, was watching television at his apartment in an adjacent building when the plane went down.

"I heard an explosion and the whole building just shuddered," he said. "I didn't know what it was. I sat there in a daze. Then one of our reporters came in and said a plane had hit and the apartment next door was on fire."

Collins said that by the time he got outside, an ambulance was already pulling up, and the first fire truck arrived in about 10 minutes.

Raymond Heyde, a safety representative from the Federal Aviation Administration, was conducting a preliminary inquiry, Gibson said.

University officials said efforts were being made to find temporary alternative housing for the students who lived in the building.

Guilt Plagues Mothers

By KATHLEEN CARROLL
Associated Press Writer

HASBROUCK HEIGHTS, N.J. (AP) — Both employed mothers and those who stay at home often are plagued by guilt — just another worry on top of cut knees, meetings with teachers and balanced diets, the organizer of a motherhood convention said Saturday.

"Mothers have too many opportunities to feel guilty, and guilt is unproductive," said Kay Willis, a 52-year-old mother of 10 from Rutherford who also founded Mothers Matter.

"Stop pitting us one against the other," she said. "We've got to get beyond judging the mother and what she wants to do."

Even in this enlightened age, Mrs. Willis said, society imposes extremes on mothers — "the career mother versus the stay-at-home mother."

Mothers often have problems learning to be comfortable with their own style of mothering, and society makes it more difficult by imposing rigid and unattainable roles mothers, she said.

A mother with a career is not considered as a good a mother as one who stays home with the children. Yet, the woman who chooses to stay home is regarded as less than a productive human being, she said.

"It shouldn't matter to you what everybody else thinks," said Theresa Ebert, a mother of 12 from Cornwall, N.Y., and one of 100 mothers attending the convention. "But every year, what they think keeps changing."

"If I go away overnight, people say 'you're leaving Jerry with three kids?'" said Kathy Potts, a 28-year-old mother from Bayonne. "But he goes away every June to Canada to go fishing and nobody ever says 'he's leaving you with three kids?'"

That attitude, Mrs. Willis said, is the kind of "invasion of privacy" that mothers often take too seriously.

"People who feel like they can comment if you're pregnant ...," Mrs Willis said, before being interrupted by enthusiastic cries of agreement. "If you ask them why they don't have more children, they would think you were really invadaing their privacy," she continued.

"When I was pregnant with John, people would say to me, 'What? You're pregnant again?' People looked at you as if it's a crime for you to be pregnant," Mrs. Potts said.

Mrs. Willis founded Mothers Matter in 1975 and has conducted smaller workshops in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Washington, D.C., New York and New Jersey. Her organization now is affiliated with Fairleigh Dickinson University in Rutherford, and more than 1,000 women have been through her program in the past four years, she said.

"The woman who always has been a full-time mother is not often believed to be a legitimate person," Mrs. Willis said. "And this new influx of women having their first child at 30 ... somehow they are believed to be more legitimate.

"Mothers as mothers need to know each other better and find that place where we are comfortable and accept who we are."

Carter Raising Standing

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Carter, the guest of honor Saturday at a Democratic fund-raising dinner, is finding his standing among some party officials rising as he becomes more vocal in his disagreements with the Reagan administration.

Organizers of the event to benefit the Montgomery County, Md., Democratic Party said that, with Carter as the attraction, the $25-a-plate dinner and $50-a-person cocktail reception at a suburban Washington country club were sold out and that the party would net $20,000.

A year ago, the county organization's annual dinner netted only $5,000, the organizers said.

Also on the ex-president's schedule Saturday was a private reunion with former aides.

Since leaving the White House, Carter has spent most of his time at his Plains, Ga., home working on his memoirs. But he is expected to campaign extensively later this year for Democratic congressional candidates.

He formed a political action committee last December to raise money for Democratic candidates, finance his travels on behalf of candidates and to promote such favorite causes as human rights and arms control.

But, despite his sharply critical remarks in recent months about President Reagan's foreign and domestic policies, Carter has maintained his disclaimer of any interest in trying to regain the presidency.

"This PAC in no way is for my own political career, for I do not seek office," Carter wrote in a letter to potential contributors. "It is a legal instrument for you and me to speak and act forcefully to reach common goals."

At a fund-raising reception for Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., Carter called the president's economic policies "the worst mistake this country's ever made."

He said the deficits in the Republican president's proposed budget for the next fiscal year "will exaggerate the serious problems we already have now. It will make it impossible to carry out worthy causes."

Carter also has criticized his successor's administration for what he called its failure to speak out on human rights — a cornerstone of his foreign policy — and for carrying on a "very confused" Middle East policy.

"The world waits for a clear unequivocal voice on human rights," he told a meeting of Jewish leaders in Florida.

The most publicized and controversial episode involving Carter since he left office was last fall after he accompanied former Presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford to Egypt for the funeral of Anwar Sadat.

After that trip, Carter endorsed Reagan's proposal to sell $8.5 billion in military equipment to Saudi Arabia, a sale strongly opposed by Democratic leaders in Congress and by the Democratic National Committee.

Party chairman Charles T. Manatt said at the time, "The president speaks for himself and certainly not for the party."

Plenty Of Time For Sergeants

FORT MONROE, Va. (UPI) — The Army's top two drill sergeants didn't quite fit the Sgt. Vince Carter archetype — scowling, bellowing, mountainous men — but they won anyway.

Sgt. Charles W. Fitzpatrick, the active-duty Drill Sergeant of the Year, even smiled and bounced on his toes when his name was announced Thursday during the presentation ceremony at Fort Monroe.

Volcano Erupts In Hawaii

By LINDY WASHBURN
Associated Press Writer

HAWAII VOLCANOES NATIONAL PARK, Hawaii (AP) — Geysers of red-hot lava exploded over Kilauea Caldera on Saturday as one of the world's most active volcanoes put on a surprise fireworks show that attracted 20,000 sightseers.

Hotels in Volcano Village and Hilo, the county seat 40 miles away, were full. Airlines scheduled special flights from other islands, and tour bus companies advertised special sightseeing expeditions.

But scientists said the volcano seemed to be simmering down, a day after a wall of flame burst from a crack in the earth with less than three hours warning.

"It's slowly fading into the sunrise," said Reggie Okamura, acting scientist-in-charge of the Hawaiian Volcano Observatory. "You can see some sporadic fountaining, but I think it's going to be stopping soon."

The eruption, the first at Kilauea in almost three years, began at 11:37 a.m. Friday after 2½ hours of closely spaced shallow earthquakes.

No one was injured and no property was threatened.

Two hikers on a Park Service trail in the area were walked out by geologists Friday before lava buried their path.

Kilauea is a part of Mauna Loa, a gently sloping shield volcano comprising half of Hawaii Island's land area. The 3,700-foot mountain, one of the most active and thoroughly monitored volcanoes in the world, is located 200 miles southeast of Honolulu.

As cascades of yellow-orange fireworks shot 50 feet into the dark sky early Saturday, scientists wearing gas masks and hard hats scurried to sample the spattering lava and billowing gases.

Waving ribbons of glowing lava oozing down the slopes could be seen clearly by an estimated 20,000 visitors jammed bumper-to-bumper along Crater Rim drive about two miles away.

In the area where the scientists collected their samples, as close as 30 or 40 feet from the fissure, the rock was hot underfoot and the acrid aroma of plants burning filled the air.

Clouds of sulfuric gas and steam gushed from fumaroles, occasionally making it impossible to see your feet as you walked. A constant drizzle hissed against the brittle skin of hardening lava, and whip-like cracking sounds came from cooling rock.

"All that time in the lab — this is the experience I have been waiting for," said Barry Stokes, a geologic field assistant, as he poked plastic tubing into smoking vents to draw gas samples.

Wearing thick-soled hiking boots, he scampered warily over a fresh flow, edging close to the fissure to fill another beaker with gas.

The samples later would be analyzed as scientists try to learn the underground plumbing of the volcano.

"Every eruption is a new experience," Okamura said.

The caldera, formed by the prehistoric collapse of the summit area, lies 300 feet below the rim. It's floor is a patchwork of black and brown lava flows from earlier Kilauea eruptions, the most recent in November 1979.

The frothy pumice of the fire fountain spattered into ramparts on either side of the fissure, which extended a half mile in a north-south direction.

Excess lava seeped slowly east and west from the crack in smooth streams of ropey lava, reaching thicknesses of 6 feet.

SALES DOWN

The Black & Decker Manufacturing Co. announced that sales for the second quarter ended March 28 were 9 percent below the prior year, while net earnings for the quarter were down 11 percent from the comparable quarter in 1981.

Sales and earnings for the first six months were down 10 and 28 percent, respectively, compared to the prior year, the company said.

AGREEMENT SIGNED

NCNB Corp. and Gulfstream Banks Inc. of Boca Raton, Fla., announced the signing of a definitive agreement for the acquisition of Gulfstream through the merger of a wholly owned subsidiary of NCNB into Gulfstream.

Under terms of the agreement, Gulfstream shareholders will receive $17.50 a share in cash for the 5,096,465 shares of Gulfstream stock outstanding. Gulfstream will become a subsidiary of NCNB Corp. and continue to operate under the Gulfstream name.

INCREASE NOTED

Planters National Bank announced net income of $1,031,000 for the quarter ended March 31, compared to $982,000 in 1981, a gain of 5 percent.

James B. Powers, chairman and president, said that income before securities transactions for the first quarter was $1,062,000, an increase over the $1,037,000 reported for 1981.

Total assets on March 31 of $404,815,000 were up 10.8 percent from the March of 1981 figure.

ANNIVERSARY

Anserphone, offering telephone answering, radio paging, car telephone and alarm monitoring services in eight cities, announced that April marked the firm's 20th year of service.

The business, which is regulated by the State Utilities Commission and the Federal Communications Commission, began operations in 1962 in Raleigh and expanded to other North Carolina cities, opening a Greenville office in 1980.

Hilda S. Patterson serves as president of the firm which said it employs over 100 people and has over 4,500 customers.

20TH ANNIVERSARY

K mart stores throughout the United States and Canada are celebrating the 20th anniversary of the opening of the company's first discount department store.

The first store opened in 1962 in a Detroit suburb, followed that year by 17 others in seven states. Before 1962, the company had operated Kresge variety stores, recording 1961 sales of $426 million in 777 units.

Founded in 1899 as the S. S. Kresge Co., K mart Corp. is now the second largest general merchandise retailer in the United States, K mart said.

In fiscal 1981, the more than 2,000 K mart stores accounted for over 96 percent of the corporation's revenues of $16.5 billion, it was reported.

Peugeot 504 Wagon

Peugeot 604

the Peugeot Diesel Wagon...

A station wagon with the miserly thirst of a diesel...

A station wagon with steering that "knows" when to step in and help the driver in difficult situations...

A prodigious load capacity

Few people today can afford the once-touted "practicality" of the full-sized station wagon. If you need the capacity, you can barely afford the fuel costs. And if you switch to a "downsized" wagon, you discover the truth in the old adage about trying to squeeze a quart into a pint pot.

Peugeot offers a timely solution to this quandary: a wagon that will carry more than a third of its own weight in cargo... yet sip fuel sparingly.

The Peugeot Diesel Wagon has a load capacity of well over half a ton—1,265 pounds, to be exact.

Awesome damping devices

Many wagons—large and small—tend to wallow and flounder uncomfortably in turns when fully loaded. Not so the Peugeot. Its shock absorbers—awesome damping devices—maintain the Peugeot's aplomb in situations that would send a less-sophisticated wagon lurching sideways.

Cut apart a Peugeot shock absorber and you discover that its piston has eight valves...four times as many valves as a normal shock absorber.

Complex, indeed, but amazingly durable. Where lesser shock absorbers might be expected to show signs of weakening after 30,000 miles, the Peugeot shock absorbers have been designed to maintain their peak efficiency for 60,000 miles of normal use.

Four springs where others use two

Peer underneath the Peugeot wagon and you quickly see why it can carry such a heavy load. Where the rear suspension of a normal wagon uses only two springs, the Peugeot has four coil springs.

To support heavy loads, two coil springs would have to be either so stiff that the wagon would ride like an oxcart...or so tall that they would intrude into the cargo area.

With four shorter, softer coil springs, the Peugeot wagon will swallow a 1,265-pound load...and ride smoothly at all times.

Only a handful of the very largest wagons—a species swiftly becoming extinct—would exceed the load capacity of the Peugeot.

No other imported wagon comes close.

A miser under the hood

The Peugeot Diesel Wagon is as miserly with fuel as it is generous with cargo capacity. It is rated at 28 EPA estimated mpg, 35 estimated highway mpg, with the standard 4-speed manual gearbox.

There is more to this diesel, however, than simple fuel economy.

This is not Peugeot's way. Sixty years of diesel experience—and almost 2 million diesel engines—have long ago taught Peugeot the correct way.

The Peugeot diesel engine is a true diesel, designed from scratch to withstand the enormous internal pressures of diesel combustion. (The compression ratio is 23 to 1—two and one-half times that of a gasoline engine.)

A few examples: The block has been designed with heavy structural ribs. The crankshaft, forged from an ingot of steel, is massive. Reinforced pistons, connecting rods, and bearings are fitted.

Interesting note: New York cabdrivers have switched to Peugeot diesels by the hundreds, despite the higher cost.

Steering that "reads" the road

No suspension, no matter how advanced, can disguise the deficiencies of a second-rate steering system.

The power steering on most cars is *over*powering. It performs so much of the work that it can take control away from the driver.

This, to Peugeot, is not permissible.

Peugeot's philosophy of power steering is graduated assistance. The steering must "know" when to step in and help the driver...and when to step back.

The steering wheel of the Peugeot Diesel Wagon will turn easily during parking maneuvers. But when very little help is needed—at cruising speed, or if the road is slippery—the steering senses this and cuts back on the power assistance.

The steering is never insensitive, never numb, never overpowering. You "read" the road through your fingertips. You are in command.

the Peugeot 505...

A car with steering that "knows" when to step in and help the driver in difficult situations...

A car whose seats contain no springs; you may not find more comfortable seats in any production car today...

A car that delivers respectable fuel economy without requiring you to downgrade to a small, lightweight car...

A car which is not permitted to leave the factory until it has been subjected to a complete road trial by an expert test driver.

So high is the quality of the Peugeot 505—and so well is it equipped—that some observers think it may well be undervalued in today's market.

The Peugeot Seats

"If I were designing a car," a driver writes, "I would begin by stealing Peugeot's seats."

Few, if any, carmakers are as fanatical in their pursuit of comfort as Peugeot. It has even gone so far as to banish springs from its seats.

In their place, polymerized foam. It is obedient. It can be directed to damp the oscillations at 2.5 Hz that are known to produce actual stomach discomfort. It can be "tuned" to act in close collaboration with the car's suspension, using a maximum density of 43 grams per cubic decimeter.

As owner after owner has discovered, this is a car which makes it possible to survive a long day's drive without arriving saddlesore and in a state of ill-tempered exhaustion.

Be sure to try the back seat. It is no narrow, thinly cushioned ledge that requires you to sit all scrunched up with your knees in the air. The Peugeot 505 is a true 5-seater, with room for adult-length legs and adult-height heads

The Gasoline Engine

It is Peugeot's view that cars should not require constant, annoying trips to the shop for tune-ups.

The standard Peugeot engine is the XN6, a 2-litre gasoline engine which propels this ton-and-a-half car to almost 100 miles per hour (there are no speed limits on some roads in Europe).

The ignition is by magnetic pulse; there are no points to replace.

The spark plugs are no ordinary plugs; they are tipped with silver and last 2 to 3 times longer than ordinary plugs.

Little is left to chance. Peugeot engineers have mounted a sensor in the tailpipe—linked to an onboard computer—that monitors the performance of the fuel injection. The sensor "sniffs" the exhaust gases, instantly analyzes them, and then orders the fuel injection to tune itself for the most efficient and most pollution-free mixture of fuel and air.

It should be no surprise, then, to learn that the Peugeot XN6 engine is designed to take you 30,000 miles between tune-ups.

The Diesel Engine

This is not Peugeot's way.

The Peugeot diesel engine is a true diesel, designed from scratch to withstand the enormous internal pressures of diesel combustion. (The compression ratio of the 505 Diesel is 23 to 1—two and one-half times that of a gasoline engine.)

Dismantle this engine and you will see that the block has been designed with heavy structural ribs to begin with; they are not afterthoughts.

Reinforced pistons, connecting rods, and bearings are fitted.

The Turbocharged Diesel Engine

There are two models of the Peugeot 505 that are fitted with an extraordinary engine. An engine that captures energy normally lost in the tailpipe and recycles it to give you "free" extra power.

The engine is the Peugeot turbocharged diesel.

A tiny turbine under the hood blows a 600-mph whirlwind that literally stuffs the combustion chambers of this engine with power: 35 percent more torque, 13 percent more horsepower.

The performance of the 2.3-litre Peugeot Turbodiesel yields little to comparable gasoline-engined cars, yet it has not sacrificed any of its diesel miserliness with fuel: 27 EPA estimated mpg, 36 estimated highway mpg. Proof that you do not have to switch to a "downsized" car to live with today's bloated fuel

The strokes of a master painter

Pass your hand over the paintwork of the Peugeot 505 STI and you will make a further discovery about the car.

No bored, "just-doing-my-job" worker has created this smooth finish. Instead, the critical part has been done by a computerized robot, taught to imitate the strokes of a master painter.

The STI is the only model of the Peugeot 505 available in a metallic claret or classic black. The black is a wet-on-wet process. First comes the enamel itself. Then, while the black is still glistening wet, it is overlaid with a clear coat of lacquer, sprayed to a thickness of 30 microns.

Testing, testing, more testing

Before the Peugeot 505 STI was ever built, its components were subjected to a barrage of tests. One small example should suffice to make the point:

All four doors were slammed 100,000 times on a test rig.

To look at it another way, if you and your passengers were to get in and out of the car four times a day, every day of the year, it would take you 34 years to slam the doors that many times.

Once built, every single car is taken to a special track and road-tested by one of Peugeot's 65-member team of expert drivers. Only when it has met Peugeot's standards is the car permitted to leave Europe for the U.S.

Peugeot has little tolerance for poorly made cars.

A perfect car? Nonsense!

Does this mean that nothing will ever fail on a Peugeot? That would be wishful thinking. The perfect, indestructible car does not exist, no matter what its price. But one can usually count on a car to reveal its little glitches and foibles during the first year of driving.

You will be reassured to know that Peugeot does not care how many thousands of miles you put on your car during the first year you own it. The Peugeot new-vehicle limited warranty is for 12 months...*with unlimited mileage.

A most-complete car

So lavishly equipped is the Peugeot 505 STI that there is only one option, a 3-speed automatic transmission ($370) in place of the 5-speed overdrive manual gearbox.

Here is a partial list of the equipment that is standard on this $14,990 car:

- Air conditioning, factory-installed
- Power-assisted steering
- Power-assisted 4-wheel disc brakes
- Cruise control
- Electric sunroof
- Electric windows
- Central locking system—a twist of the key locks all four doors and fuel-filler door
- Digital AM/FM 40-watt stereo radio with cassette player, scan tuning, and four speakers
- Automatic electric antenna
- Leather upholstery
- Multi-adjustable driver's seat
- Tachometer
- Limited-slip differential.

Fantasy Sings With Signs and Mime

Fantasy brings signings of fun, love and joyful communication to its audiences.

Composed mostly of members of the Sign Language Club of East Carolina University, the group interprets popular music in sign language and mime. Staff interpreters and students taking sign language courses also are involved.

"Mime," club adviser Mike Ernest said, "is an integral part of the language of the deaf. Facial expressions and body movement tell everything."

Two recent performances of the group were "The Times They Are A'Changing," given during ECU's Handicap Awareness Week, and a performance outdoors during the fourth annual Barefoot on the Mall observance at the university.

"We began in 1979," Ernest said, "as a semi-professional group performing at special functions and even went on the road some. There were only about five members.

"But we've evolved into a much larger group in which even first-course sign language students can take part. We now perform mostly on campus or in the eastern North Carolina community. We see ourselves now, not so much as performers, but as communicators helping make the public aware of sign language and how it can be used to enhance communication everywhere."

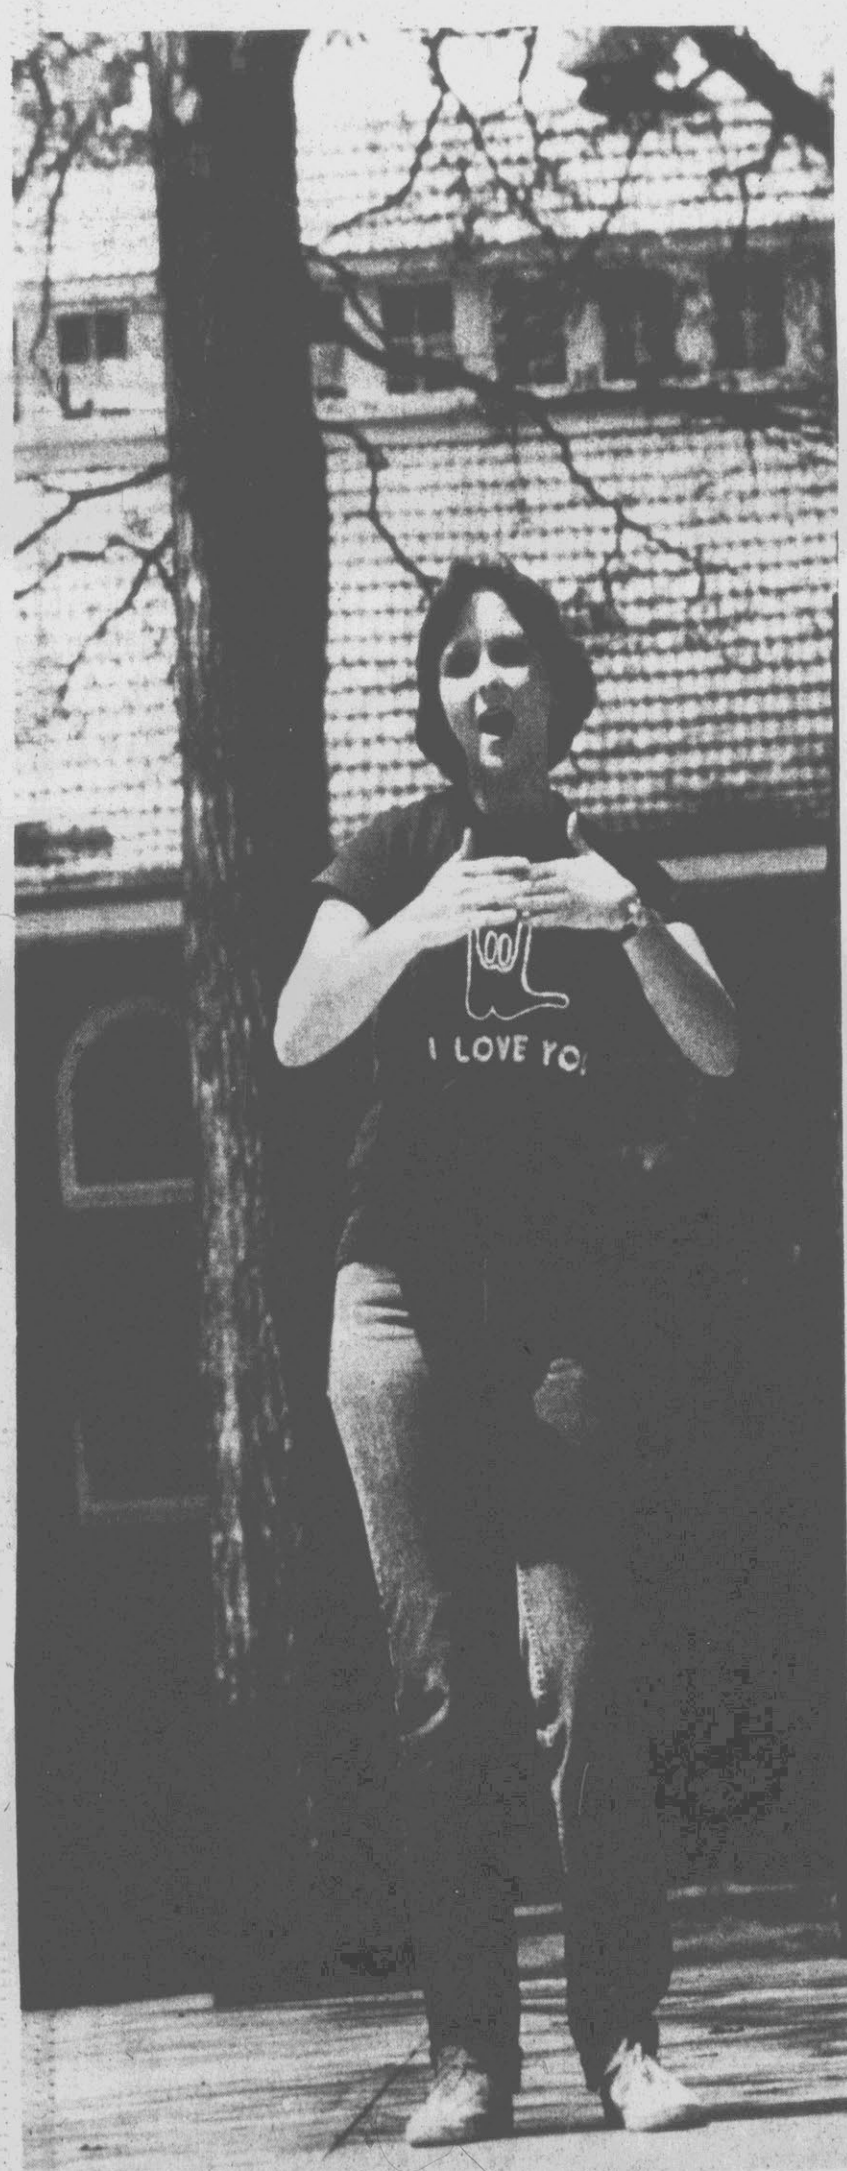

Fantasy was one of the first sign language music interpretation groups in the United States and has been emulated many places now, Ernest added.

Couple Marries In Ceremony Saturday

MRS. EDWIN LAFAYETTE CLARK JR.

The wedding ceremony of Martha Ann Williams and Edwin Lafayette Clark Jr. was solemnized Saturday afternoon at two o'clock in Immanuel Baptist Church. The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Irby B. Jackson, pastor emeritus.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lee Williams and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Lafayette Clark Sr., all of Greenville.

A program of nuptial music was presented by Charles Currin, organist. Mrs. Norman Wilkerson sang "Wedding Prayer" and "A Wedding Benediction."

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore her mother's formal wedding gown of candlelight antique chantilly lace over peau de soie. The gown was designed with a modified Queen Anne neckline outlined in chantilly lace. The fitted bodice was overlaid in antique chantilly lace over imported English net and was fashioned with a dropped waistline outlined in rolled cording. The long fitted chantilly lace sleeves were enhanced with calla pointed lace cuffs and buttoned closures. The semi flared skirt and attached chapel length train were fashioned of antique lace. Dear Daughter,

Mother's Day is almost here. It's been over-commercialized. Over-sentimentalized. Overdone. With all this, it might be easy to lose sight of the true meaning of our relationship. For me, being your mother means doing my best to help you become a warm, loving, happy human being. When you feel free to come to me and take me into your confidence, knowing I will listen and try to understand, I feel as if I have succeeded at my task. I will always try to guide you the best I can while having the confidence in you to know you'll do what's best. Let our commitment to each other always be one of both love and awareness.

Love,
Mom

Dear Mom,

No store-bought card could ever express how important you are to me and how much I appreciate all the time and effort and love you've invested over the years to make me the best person I can be. When I was young and rebelled against restrictions, you used to tell me "Someday, when you're a mother, you'll understand. But I didn't need to have my own children to understand that you always did what you thought was best for me. As inadequate as it may be, all I can say is "thank you." I love you.

Love,
Daughter

MRS. OWEN LANGLEY SIMMONS

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

"Psychology of the Soap Opera" sounds like something my kids would schedule their senior year around, but would need a lab fee to cover the cost of a new TV set.

There really is such a class being taught by a professor in New Jersey who, with 54 students, sits around and dissects the basic human motivations behind the soaps.

From what they've already observed, they are predicting that in another 10 years, there will be more sex in the afternoon and more nudity.

That's like saying to a pregnant woman you are going to be more pregnant next month than you are right now.

Besides, I don't for a minute believe a word of it. You all know my theory on nudity . . . if God had meant for us to walk around naked, He would never have invented the wicker chair.

Using that same principle, the soaps will never produce more nudity than the traffic can bare . . . bear!

It just isn't realistic. To begin with, three-fourths of the soaps take place in the dramatic confines of a hospital. There isn't one piece of equipment in a hospital that is not chilled before using . . . tables, instruments, handles, etc. Do you honestly think there is an actor or actress in this world who could keep that kind of pain secret?

Secondly, one-third of the performers on soaps are 55 or over. With all due respect, the human body at this age, especially when bare, is not your basic religious experience.

People are becoming bored with the human anatomy. There aren't too many corners one can turn these days without a feeling he's been there before. Joggers wearing shorts with racing stripes that go all the way up to the armpits fill the streets. Bodybuilders basted in oil fill the magazines. Bathers wearing little pieces of crocheted string, scarcely big enough to set a glass on, fill the beaches. And if I never see another fanny with Calvin Klein branded on the backside, I could still go in peace.

I say to the soaps, "Give it a rest!" It's going to take at least another 10 years for me to get my curiosity back.

ASK OMAR

Q.—Three members of our foursome and I are in disagreement. After an opening bid has been passed round to opener's right-hand opponent and he balances, can opener then make a jump shift? If he does, is it forcing? I maintain that opener should not jump shift since he knows that partner has nothing. My friends say the opener can jump shift and that it is then forcing to game on his partner. I can't find a discussion on this situation in any of the books, so I would appreciate your reply—Mrs. C. J. Smith, Toledo, Ohio

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

South West North East
1 ♠ Pass Pass 2 ♠
3 ♢-3 ♡

First, does a jump shift such as that shown by South's second bid exist? Yes, it does. Second, is it forcing? To answer that question, we must first decide what sort of hand South has for a jump shift over the reopening bid.

Obviously, South cannot have game in hand. Bear in mind that he didn't open the bidding with a demand bid, but simply with one spade. Also, he did not leap to game in his second suit. Therefore, this jump shift cannot be forcing, for North might have a complete bust.

Next, can it be a hand where South requires quite a bit in the way of high cards to make game? Of course not, because South knows from North's original pass that his partner has little or nothing in the way of high cards.

Thus, we can define South's hand. It is a hand not strong enough for a demand bid but so powerful distributionally that a fit or merely a key high card in one of his suits will give him good play for game. For example, a hand such as:

♠AK10xxx ♡AQ10xx ♢x ♣x

If the second suit were a minor, the hand would probably have to be slightly better:

♠AK10xxx ♡x ♢AK10xx ♣x

Notice that the second hand will make game opposite any bust that contains long diamonds. Even queen-third of diamonds could be enough.

We have now answered the question of whether the bid is forcing. Since South cannot have game in hand, the bid can't be forcing. However, he is not looking for a good hand from partner. Rather, he needs a good fit for one of his suits.

Q.—What do you do with a partner who bids on score? She will open the bidding and then drop me when I make a jump shift because we have a 60 partscore.—R. Evans, Chicago, Ill.

A.—Try and explain to her that a jump shift is unconditionally forcing, and that there are rather hefty bonuses for bidding and making slam. If she continues to drop you when you jump shift, the final recourse is to drop her. If she is too good a friend, resign yourself to suffering in silence.

Send any questions for this column to: Charles Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Bridge Complete," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged the best received.

Charles Goren and Omar Sharif personally cannot undertake to answer all questions submitted.

Legislative Tax Deductions Under Study

By CRAIG WEBB

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Legislators will consider changing North Carolina's income tax laws this summer to allow most lawmakers to claim hundreds of dollars in new tax deductions for their General Assembly work.

The proposal by the joint Revenue Laws Study Committee would allow legislators to claim an automatic $50 deduction for expenses every day the General Assembly is in session and every day during a recess of four days or less.

Legislators would not have to account for their expenses to justify the $50 daily exemption.

Currently, legislators must account for all business expenses they claim, and they are not allowed to claim deductions for weekends unless they were on official business.

The proposed new exemptions would be particularly valuable during odd-numbered years, when the General Assembly meets for about six months. In 1981, for example, there were 50 Saturdays and Sundays while the Legislature was meeting. If the proposed changes had been in effect then, a legislator could claim $2,500 in business expenses for those days.

The proposal, however, would not apply to legislators living within 50 miles of Raleigh. They would have to continue providing receipts to prove any expense deductions they claim.

The revision is patterned after a change in the federal tax code that Congress approved last year. Sabra Faires, an attorney for the North Carolina General Assembly who helps write tax laws, said the only major difference is the federal change is retroactive to 1976, so legislators can file amended returns seeking to recoup past expenses.

Ms. Faires said the federal change already is "resulting in a much larger deduction for most people" and the state's proposal would add to the benefits.

Rep. Dan Lilley, D-Lenoir, and co-chairman of the joint Revenue Laws Study Committee, said the extra benefits from the proposed change are justifiable because legislators weren't being compensated enough.

"In one way it offsets the additional expenses we have," he said. "For example, you're allowed mileage for one round-trip drive from your home to the Legislature each week. But I often have to make many trips that I'm not reimbursed for. Getting per diem helps defray the cost....

"I look at the $50 a day as a break-even proposition," he added. "There may be a week I make $10, but the next week, if I have to drive back home, I spent $75 or $100."

Donna Jones Burton, executive director of Common Cause of North Carolina, called the proposal "outrageous."

"We've recognized that salaries for North Carolina legislators are too low — that's a peril of being a citizen legislator," she said. "But this is a little of a back-door approach. I'm wondering if they're doing this to avoid going through the front door and treating this as a pay raise."

Refugees See U.S. As Haven

By TODD R. EASTHAM

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A growing number of Salvadoran refugees seek the protection of a government which is chief supporter of the regime many have fled in fear for their lives.

U.S. immigration and Salvadoran embassy officials put the overall number of Salvadorans in the United States at less than 100,000, but members of Salvardoran communities say that figure is far too low.

Support and relief organizations say there are 200,000 to 300,000 — from a country with a population of fewer than 5 million.

They are still coming, settling mostly on the West Coast but also in New York, Houston and other large cities.

They call themselves refugees from political oppression and demand asylum. The U.S. government calls them "economic migrants" subject to deportation back — say the refugees — into the arms of their tormentors.

Most come by foot or bus overland through Central America and Mexico, with student or tourist visas or no visas at all. U.S. Immigration officials give an official influx figure of at least 600 a month.

Of the more than 6,000 Salvadorans that filed petitions for asylum with immigration officials in the 1981 fiscal year, only 154 were considered. All but two were denied. In that time, 10,473 Salvadorans were deported.

Salvadorans in this country say that policy is inhumane and unrealistic in the face of mounting political violence at home.

"I asked for political asylum, but they didn't answer my petition," said Salvador, 19, who refused to give his last name for fear his family would suffer reprisals.

"If I go to El Salvador, they are going to kill me right now. I know that much," he said. "We demand the status of refugees. There is a war on."

U.S. Observes "Year Of Eagle'

Two centuries ago, on June 20, 1782, America's Continental Congress adopted the great white-headed bird as a national symbol. President Reagan has signed a joint congressional resolution to make official the eagle year designation by the National Wildlife Federation and thus help along the celebration.

The peak of the celebration will be June 20, designated as American Eagle Day.

There is something to celebrate — if you like eagles. Although the big, "bald" bird is still listed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service as endangered in 43 of the lower 48 states and threatened in the other five, indications are that it is coming back, slowly.

Another check on its progress has been made by some 4,000 observers during the Wildlife Federation's third annual census, the most complete mid-winter count available. In 1981 there was a 5 percent increase to 13,709, including an estimated 9,500 migrants which had flown in to avoid the worst weather in Canada and Alaska. This is two or three times the number tallied in other more limited censuses by the Wildlife Service and others.

The National Audubon Society's scientific director, Dick Plunkett, believes the breeding population is holding its own in Florida and increasing somewhat in the Great Lakes region and other northern states. For instance, two dozen nests were spotted last season in Maine, where only three or four were found a decade ago.

It was partly a matter of luck that the eagle's image now appears on the Great Seal of the United States, on dollar bills, uniform buttons, flag staffs, stamps, door knockers and what-have-you. Congress OKed an eagle design dictated by its secretary, Charles Thomson, after rejecting the recommendations of three committees and several artists during a period of six years.

Prospect Dims For Close Vatican-Chinese Ties

By SAMUEL KOO
Associated Press Writer

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Despite repeated overtures by Pope John Paul II, Roman Catholic Church officials here and in the Far East say there appears to be little hope the Vatican can reassert its control over the faithful in mainland China.

Without any Vatican ties and in large part deprived of the right to worship openly and regularly, Catholics in China have doubled in number since Mao Tse-tung's death in 1976 to an estimated 5 million, according to new figures compiled by the church officials.

However, church sources in Rome, Hong Kong and Taipei, the Nationalist Chinese capital, say the mainland church, which operates under heavy government influence, has let it be known that it would not accept papal authority again, even if the Vatican severs its diplomatic ties with the Nationalists on Taiwan.

Since his election as pope in October 1978, John Paul repeatedly has made overtures to Peking. During his Asian tour last year, he said China should forget about the past and reestablish ties with the Vatican that were broken after the Communist victory in 1949.

The church in China, represented by the Patriotic Catholic Association, follows the basic ritual of Catholicism but its hierarchy handles church affairs independent of the Vatican. For one thing, it has ordained a bishop without the approval of Rome.

Vatican officials say a tactical error was made in the appointment over Pope John Paul II's name of Monsignor Dominic Tang as archbishop for Canton last July.

Tang had spent 21 years in a Chinese prison and Vatican sources as well as church officials in Taipei and Hong Kong say the Holy See misread the intentions of the Chinese government regarding Tang.

The appointment, heralded as a major papal gesture of conciliation toward China, backfired and drew sharp criticism from the Chinese Catholic organization which accused the pope of interference.

The ailing 74-year-old Tang was then removed by Peking church authorities even as an ordinary bishop in Canton, a position given him by the Chinese hierarchy in October 1980. The 1982 Vatican Yearbook still lists Tang as archbishop of Canton.

In March, after the pontiff appealed to all Roman Catholics around the world to pray for the Chinese Catholics who have been "tried amid various experiences and sufferings," a Chinese Catholic leader accused the pope of "vicious slander" and blasphemy.

In the past few years, Peking's communist regime, in line with its new moves toward the West, has relaxed religious restrictions. The pope welcomed this, but he called for even greater religious freedom and said the link with the Chair of St. Peter is "indispensable."

The Vatican would like to see the Chinese authorities, whose official policy is to foster atheism, grant freedom for priests to celebrate Mass anywhere in the country and allow the establishment of seminaries, according to the Vatican sources who asked not to be named.

Despite the independent stance by the Chinese church leaders, Vatican sources say, there is evidence that rank-and-file Chinese Catholics still feel attachment to the pope and the Holy See. They cite letters and reports from visiting church officials indicating that the Vatican Radio's shortwave Chinese-language program is heard by a large number of Chinese Catholics.

"The Chinese Catholics on the mainland, after all the suffering, have become more audacious and stronger in faith and are actively converting friends and relatives, especially the young," the Most Rev. Matthew Kia Yen-wen, archbishop of Taipei, said in a recent interview with The Associated Press in Taipei.

He said reports from missionaries and visitors returning to Hong Kong from the mainland indicate there are "pockets of heavy concentration" of Catholics in Hubei, Fujian and Jiangxi provinces in southern China.

He said recent estimates put the number of Chinese Catholics as high as seven million, but he added that 6 million is a "more reasonable" figure corroborated by visitors and overseas Chinese Christians with ties to the mainland, a country of one billion people.

Church officials and missionaries on Taiwan claim the Vatican has neglected the interests of the Taiwanese Catholics in its effort to woo the Catholics on the mainland.

"We say we have no political aims anywhere in the world, but the message gets lost when we do such plainly political thing youth center south of Taipei," Kia said.

He criticized the Vatican for not naming a cardinal for Taipei after the death in 1978 of Cardinal Paul Yu Pin and downgrading the Vatican's diplomatic representation in Taipei from the ambassasdor-level apostolic pro-nuncio to charge d'affaires.

Kia said the church counts about 300,000 Roman Catholics in Taiwan, an island nation of 18 million people.

Sleepers Aren't True Pedestrians

DENVER (UPI) — A family of four asleep in their beds cannot, under any rules of common sense, be considered "pedestrians" just because a motorist drove her car through their bedroom, the Colorado Court of Appeals ruled.

An attorney for Peggy Margaret Simpson, whose car went out of control Oct. 7, 1977, as she was returning home from a party where she had been drinking, claimed the sleeping family should be considered "pedestrians" under Colorado's no-fault auto insurance law.

The vehicle went through a wall and came to rest in a child's bedroom. Rubble and debris blocked the door to the other child's room.

Ms. Simpson was sued in Adams County District Court by Darvin and Jackie Smith on behalf of themselves and their two children, Andrew and Bruce. The family was awarded $13,339.84 in compensatory damages and $32,5 00 in punitive damages.

"To include persons secure in their homes, and asleep in their beds, as 'pedestrians' under the act simply does not comport with common sense," the appeals court said Thursday in unanimously rejecting the claim.

The first of the five senses to develop in a human is smell.

Philippines' Rebels Pose Real Threat

By DAVID BRISCOE
Associated Press Writer

NAGA, Philippines (AP) — Two men sit on the worn wooden floor of a remote hut, a sleeping infant and a Soviet-made automatic rifle lying nearby.

The men identified themselves as "red fighters" in the Communist New People's Army, part of a revolution they admit may be more than 20 years away in the Philippines.

But their presence here in the scenic and once-peaceful Bicol region of Luzon 150 miles southeast of Manila, the nation's capital, signals a violent if not an immediate threat to President Ferdinand E. Marcos, who has been in office for 16 years.

The government acknowledges the rebel army has recently expanded into all 72 provinces, but Marcos said recently it no longer poses a danger to national security.

"If Marcos says communism is bad, then it must be good — it's as simple as that for rural people," said Ka Oscar, a middle-class college graduate who said he joined the rebels eight years ago. He added that military harshness and government failures have attracted more people to communism since Marcos lifted eight years of martial law in January 1981.

Ka Oscar, 39, and Ka Ari, 29, both regional guerrilla leaders, talked to a reporter at a hillside coconut farm never reached by government soldiers. The rebels would not allow photographs. They refused to disclose their "civilian names" or give family backgrounds, saying they feared military retribution against relatives.

Both claimed they had led ambushes against soldiers, police and "despotic landlords" as well as more-peaceful efforts to help the rural poor and build a "revolutionary government from the grass roots." Some New People's Army units provide medical care, conduct seminars and levy taxes, they said.

Clashes between the guerrillas and government forces occur almost daily around the Philippines. Twelve government soldiers and two civilians were killed in mid-April a few miles from the coconut farm.

The guerrilla army wants to bring down Marcos' government and close down U.S. military bases in the country. Their movement has attracted peasants, students, priests, former soldiers and at least two local beauty queens. One guerrilla leader once was a town mayor; another the former president of a government school.

But their bases in remote villages are a long way from Marcos' Malacanang Palace and Manila's daily bustle.

The military has estimated the strength of the New People's Army at 3,000 to 5,000 armed fighters nationwide, but Marcos recently said there were 300 on the island of Samar, and 300 others here on Luzon and "that's about all."

Ka Oscar said they are organized on 34 fronts with several armed squads of from 7 to 11 and at least one larger armed group on each front.

He said the force has no national leader.

"Before we would accept any leader, he must first declare he is fighting for the interest of the people and is willing to form an alliance against the Marcos-U.S. dictatorship," said Ka Oscar, wearing a corduroy hat, a light shirt and waterproof blue pants. Ka Ari was in the casual clothes of a Philippines college student.

The New People's Army was organized in 1969 as a Maoist movement replacing the defunct Soviet-oriented Huk rebels of central Luzon. Over the years, Oscar said, it has developed a unique Philippine revolutionary dogma with few foreign ties.

The rebels say their inspiration comes from international communism, the 19th century Filipino revolt against Spain, the subsequent Philippine-American war and the underground resistance against the Japanese during World War II.

The rebels say they shun alcohol, rarely see city life and claim to live on the equivalent of 45 cents a day. They eat root crops when rice is not available and rarely eat meat. Ari and Oscar speak the flawless English of Philippines college graduates, but they said 85 percent of the rebels are peasants, with an average age of 25.

About half are women, Ari said.

As the guerrillas talked in the two-room hut, their 18-year-old logistics officer stood in the doorway holding an M-16 rifle marked "Property of the U.S. Government."

The weapon was taken from an ambushed Filipino soldier, Oscar said. The Soviet-made rifle on the floor came from a gun smuggler, he added, laughing at government reports that a white helicopter and a submarine had landed crates of foreign weapons for Philippine rebels.

Oscar also said the guerrilla army's support comes from an "agrarian reform tax."

He explained the tax comes from money saved by farmers through guerrilla efforts. He said that farmers who earn less than the equivalent of $1 a day often have to borrow rice to feed their families and are forced to pay back with 300 percent interest at harvest time. The guerrillas convince the lenders to lower the rate, Oscar said.

He said rural people are worse off now than they were before Marcos declared martial law in 1972, "and now there are more military abuses."

Gov. Fernando Pajarillo of Camarines Norte acknowledged that the number of government military personnel has increased in his province since the lifting of martial law.

"If the New People's Army should get stronger, it will be because of the abuses of some of us in the government," Pajarillo said in an interview.

Brig. Gen. Rene Cruz, regional military commander, said several soldiers have been demoted or discharged for abuses of the people. But he added that a complete crackdown would destroy morale.

"You cannot punish them for every little thing or they'll just sit down and not move any more," he said.

Cruz accused the region's 28 weekly newspapers of "playing up military atrocities while ignoring New People's Army abuses." The end of martial law has brought a more politically expressive provincial press while Manila's newspapers remain largely pro-government.

Cruz maintained that the guerrillas control no territory in the region and their influence is subsiding, but the rebels and some of his own men see things differently.

The guerrillas claim their influence is felt in every neighborhood.

A constabulary sergeant at a checkpoint on the main highway where several ambushes have occurred said, "If the (guerrillas) could get more weapons, there would be a full-scale revolution."

The soldier, who asked not to be identified, said military men never travel alone in uniform because of the danger of an attack.

Rumors have been circulating in the region of an open revolt by mid-year, but the two guerrilla leaders said they were in a prolonged struggle and didn't expect to form a full guerrilla army for 10 more years or see a Communist in Malacanang Palace for 20 years.

Ka Ari, who lives with his wife and 2-year-old daughter, said he is prepared to fight that long for his child's future.

"And when she happens to be of fighting age, she can join us," he added.

Soviet Economy Has Slowed But Shows Progress

By MARC ROSENWASSER
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — There's an old joke about four Soviet leaders riding together on a train when the tracks suddenly and inexplicably end.

Says Lenin: "We just appeal to the revolutionary fervor of the masses so they'll complete the track."

Says Stalin: "Round up those responsible and punish them."

Finally, Leonid Brezhnev, today's president: "My advice is to close the curtains, turn off the light and pretend we're still moving."

The Soviet economy is still chugging along, unlike that mythical train, but it's been chugging more slowly in recent years. There are signs it may be losing more steam at a time when the average Soviet citizen still earns far less, has fewer consumer goods, lives in smaller quarters and eats a less balanced diet than his counterpart in the West.

Soviet officials ation, and that industrial growth is continuing without the periodic "crises" that beset capitalist countries.

But the growth in industrial output was 3.4 percent in 1981, according to Soviet figures, down from 3.6 in the previous year, and below the planned increased of 4.1 percent.

The Soviets themselves acknowledge that the fuel on which their economy runs is becoming scarcer and increasingly expensive to extract; that workers are often inefficient, and that there aren't enough of them in the right places.

The country's population is growing in the Moslem areas to the southeast; its greatest natural wealth is located in Siberia, to the north and east, and the majority of its population still lives in the European part of the country to the west. In addition, the country suffers from what one Soviet writer recently called a "demographical hole" — a manpower shortage that stems from heavy Soviet losses in World War II.

Western experts say inertia on the part of Soviet officialdom, reluctant to make hard political decisions or ideological concessions, is another major factor contributing to the economy's problems.

They say the Kremlin could cut down on defense spending, estimated at 12 to 14 percent of the Soviet gross national product, and put the difference into domestic consumption; trim aid to client states like Cuba and Vietnam, which receive Soviet resources and goods at below-market prices; or increase private ownership and incentives, tactics that have stimulated the economies of other Communist nations, such as Hungary.

However, the Soviets are not likely to cut arms spending at a time when the United States has begun an arms buildup. Cuts in aid to client states would mean giving up political leverage, a move the Soviets are reluctant to make. And major economic changes would amount to an admission that the current system, based on Marxist-Leninist principles, is unworkable — an unacceptable ideological concession for the world's leading promoter and defender of communism.

"The Soviet Union has a tremendous economy that has a lot of potential. It's not about to collapse overnight," one Western analyst said recently. "But all the symptoms show it is slowing down and showing signs of strain."

Soviet industrial and agricultural production dropped in several key areas in January 1982, following a sluggish performance last year and disappointing results in the five-year period ended in 1980.

Data published in the Economic Gazette, a weekly publication of the Soviet government, showed that the production of oil, steel, coal, cement, trucks and cars, and meat all fell in January from the same month a year ago. There was only a marginal improvement in February.

That means the economy is again running far behind the ambitious targets that the leadership set, a situation that has upset Communist Party leaders.

Last November, the Communist Party Central Committee insisted that "practices allowed in the past of correcting plans cannot be tolerated. After being endorsed, the (economic) plan becomes law, and it is precisely as a law that everyone — from worker to minister — must treat it. The party sets the task: the plan for 1982 must be not only fulfilled, but overfulfilled."

Any optimism about the Soviet economy rests largely on the country's enormous natural resources. The Soviet Union is the world's leading oil producer, second in natural gas and gold, and has great stores of diamonds, timber, and coal.

Natural gas production continues strong. It ran ahead of target last year and is expected to increase by nearly 50 percent by 1985. It's considered the nation's best means for earning badly needed hard (convertible) currency from the energy-hungry, capitalist West.

The Soviet Union needs Western currency if it wants to continue importing grain and technology from Western nations which refuse to accept Moscow's ruble in payment.

The Soviets are developing new gas fields and moving ahead with the construction of six giant pipelines that will feed natural gas from western Siberia to the European part of the country. One will extend into Western Europe. Brezhnev has called these the "key construction projects" of the 11th five-year plan.

The oil picture is less rosy, however. Earlier this year, the president of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, Anatoly Alexandrov, told a Soviet newspaper that "fuel resources are running out quickly .... Oil should be vigorously saved."

Soviet oil production, which rose dramatically over the past 25 years, last year grew by less than 1 percent, and today the Soviets are earning less for the oil on international markets because of the oil glut. That is thought to be causing cash-flow problems.

In an article published in January, the deputy chairman of the U.S.S.R. state planning committee, A. Lalayants, wrote: "Atomic energy has a special place in the development of the fuel and energy complex .... Simultaneously, foundations are being laid for tapping new sources of power — the sun, the wind ...."

Conservation is being urged more and more. Soviet Premier Nikolai Tikhonov, in a speech a year ago, called for "tight restrictions on the use of all resources. The saving of every ton of oil, coal, and metal is having an ever-greater effect, and the damage caused by their irrational use is becoming more palpable."

To get the most for their money, Soviet economic planners say the country will spend less on building new plants and more on modernizing existing ones.

Press reports indicate that the country will go ahead with fuel-and-energy, petrochemical and metallurgical projects but that a greater percent of money will be spent on modernizing and retooling plants and on completion of unfinished projects.

Waste has been a matter of concern, in building especially. The Soviet construction minister, G. Karavayev, recently exhorted builders to use materials more carefully and do away "once and for all with losses of working time." He demanded better organization and work discipline on construction projects.

Such demands are issued often, but seem to have little effect. Western analysts contend waste is built into the system.

"In the West," said one expert, "you either adapt or you go out of business. Here the government keeps inefficient businesses going."

The Communist leader of the Soviet republic of Georgia acknowledged in a recent speech that many of the region's enterprises would have gone bankrupt long ago if the government hadn't keep them afloat.

One area where waste has seemed endemic is the government-run farms. Soviet agriculture came up with three successive poor harvests, and the shortage of grain has cut into meat and milk production, forced the country to spend hard currency on food imports, and undermined the leadership's promises of higher living standards.

Bad weather has been cited as a factor, but Brezhnev himself has said that unfavorable weather can no longer be blamed for all of the nation's agricultural ills.

The Supreme Soviet recently recommended that regional governments examine decentralization and private-plot experiments conducted in Soviet Georgia and in the northwestern republic of Latvia, indicating that the leadership may at last be prepared to endorse changes.

But Western experts doubt that the Soviets will be willing to make far-reaching reforms.

"They're trying to tinker, to take measures here and there," said one Western analyst. "But to carry out major reforms, you would need a dynamic new leadership."

The average Russian still consumes only about 60 percent as much meat as the average American and must wait in long lines at state shops for fresh fruits and vegetables.

Better meat and vegetable supplies are available at "farmers markets," where sellers keep the profit for themselves. But prices there are exorbitant. For instance, during the winter in Moscow, one melon sells for the equivalent of two or three days of the average worker's salary.

The Soviet Union has been forced to buy record amounts of grain from the West in the past few years. Imports this year may cost up to $8 billion, and the government needs hard currency to pay for badly needed technology imports as well.

In recent months, the Soviet Union has been forced to lower the price of its oil to match price cuts by other nations, has sold large quantities of gold on the open market, even though gold prices are at a two-year low, and has had to ask for large new credits from West Germany and France.

Western experts say the Soviets are known to have $3 billion to $4 billion on deposit in the West and up to 2,000 tons of gold bullion in reserve.

"No one is worried about them going bust," one expert said.

Small Firms Use Homes To Finance Businesses

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Pressed by sluggish sales and the reluctance of old credit sources to lend them money, many small-business people are mortgaging their homes.

The extent of activity isn't quite clear, but many consumer credit companies are involved, and one company, BA Business Credit Corp., has $100 million of such loans outstanding and is growing swiftly.

All the loans, said William R. Hobson, president of the BankAmerica Corp. financial services company, are made to small businesses, often retail outlets, restaurants or taverns, with homes as collateral.

Hobson stresses that some of the loans are for expansion, or even for seed money in brand-new businesses, rather than to meet emergencies. But he also provides figures to show the latter is very much at work.

Last year, he said, 30 percent of applicants were rejected, though screened by brokers, accountants and others who refer potential customers. The ratio this year is 45 percent to 50 percent, he said.

Adding to the pressures on small businesses, said Hobson, is that traditional sources are tending to draw away from small-business loans. Banks, he said, say they can't afford to make them, and some commercial finance companies establish a minimum of $500,000 for each loan.

Hobson's company, based in Allentown, Pa., offers loans from $10,000 to $500,000, although the latter is relatively rare.

"Our current loans average $100,000, except in California, where the average has been $200,000," he said. Collateral generally is the borrower's home, but rental and commercial properties are accepted.

Making possible this source of business financing has been the sharp rise in the market values of houses. A home bought for $45,000 a decade ago might be worth $110,000 now. Assuming a mortgage of $20,000, up to 80 percent of the remainder, $90,000, might be available for borrowing.

Hobson's rates now range from 18 percent to 21 percent, payable in five years, but with installments made on the basis of a 15-year loan. That means the borrower's monthly repayments are manageable, but he is presented with a sizable "balloon" payment at the end of five years.

Assuming the borrower's credit standing has remained good, he usually can be considered for another loan at that time, based on current interest rates. While no one can say what rates will be five years from now, Hobson suggests there is at least a chance they might be lower.

One criticism of such practices is that the loans are made on the basis of total rather than business income. The important factor is the overall ability to handle the loan, said Hobson, and therefore his company includes income from sources other than the business.

Conceivably, therefore, a failing business could persist as a drain on the borrower's personal assets when, it has been suggested, it might be wiser for him to fold or radically reorganize the business.

So far, however, BA Business Credit has had few bad experiences with borrowers. It now owns 4 houses as a result of foreclosures, down from 6 a short time ago, and Hobson suggests that if business were better in general these might never have appeared among BA's assets.

In his estimation, the industry, which he credits BA Business Credit with pioneering, "is still in its infancy." The company has four branches, in Richmond, Atlanta, Indianapolis and San Diego, and expects to open a branch in Denver, and perhaps another city also, this year.

In his estimation the home mortgage type of financing offers small-business people — proprietorships and partnerships as well as those that are incorporated — an open door at a time when doors are closing.

Moreover, it adds an alternative to "brickhouse" outfits that offer home mortgage loans almost indiscriminately, but charge as much as 35 percent interest, depending on the state, and frequently foreclose.

The BA Credit concept is established, said Hobson. Even if interest rates fall and money becomes more available, he predicts many borrowers won't go back to their traditional sources of credit.

PLAN YOUR HOME — The Cayman

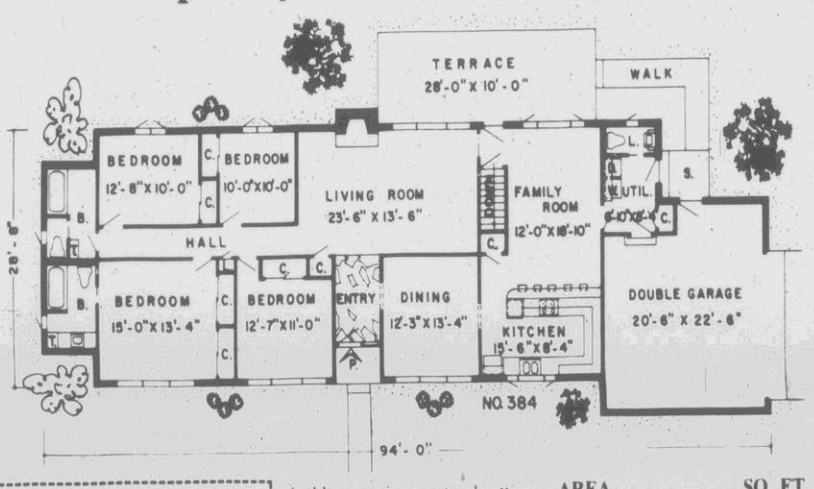

Contemporary Plan Emphasizes Space

By Jerry Bishop

Cathedral ceilings crown the array of windows that marks the Cayman, a generously proportioned contemporary plan with an interior bursting with light and space.

Four full-sized bedrooms, a handy utility room, two and one half baths, and well-defined living areas meld to create this airy plan.

Fronted by a small covered porch, entry is into the foyer, open to the formal dining room at right and formal living room ahead. Carefully placed to offer a cozy welcome is the wood-burning fireplace, clearly visible from the foyer. The living and dining room, both private and sizable, promise a natural setting for entertaining, while the sprawling and casual family room-kitchen sparks informality. With access to the basement and terrace, the family room is a hub of family activity and is linked to the kitchen by a useful breakfast bar.

Three entrances maximize the efficiency of the bordering utility room. A logical location for laundry equipment, the room also functions as a mud room, joined to the garage and outdoors, and edges a handy half bath.

Four large bedrooms are lodged in the left wing of the plan, with two baths, each with towel closet, neatly tucked at the end of the hallway. The master bedroom is favored with a private bath and double closets, as well as a liberal splash of natural light.

Storage problems are solved by the basement, another 1817 sq. ft. of useful space. In addition, the oversized garage allots a storage area with an outside entry for convenient storage of bicycles and garden equipment.

Q. What are some summer flowers that I can grow in shade? (A.L., Charlotte)

A. Begonias, impatiens and caladiums are three good choices. They all need fertile, well-drained soil. Mix one to two pints of 5-10-10 fertilizer per 100 square feet of bed area when preparing the soil. By using a low-nitrogen fertilizer you'll get a higher ratio of flowers to foliage. Control weeds and insects and pinch off the flowers as they begin to fade.

Q. My beets always have a healthy top but no roots. What is the problem? (E.B., Roxboro)

A. This is generally an indication of too much nitrogen fertilizer. Planting too thickly without thinning and planting too late in the season can also cause the same problem. Plant beets the first or second week in March in Piedmont North Carolina.

Q. Where do aphids or plant lice come from? (Ms. J.S., Carrboro)

A. They seem to come from everywhere. This is because they reproduce in a short time and often have large colonies whan you first see them. Sprays of malathion should keep aphid populations at a tolerable level.

Q. What is a good formula for a homemade starter solution that might be applied to newly set transplants? (G.S., Greensboro)

A. Mix four tablespoons of 8-8-8 fertilizer in a gallon of water. If you need larger amounts, mix one pound of 8-8-8 in 10 gallons of water.

Q. Moles are ruining my lawn. They are making tunnels all over it. What can I do? (M.S., Hickory)

A. Even though you see a lot of tunnels, the damage is probably being done by only two or three moles. The best way of stopping them is with a trap. Two types — the choker trap or the stake or spear trap — can probably be purchased at your local hardware store. Basically, moles like your lawn because of grubs in the turf. You can treat with a broad-based insecticide, such as Spectracide or Diazinon, to get rid of the grubs. You can also use a bacteria treatment which causes the grubs to eventually die of milky spore disease. Your county extension office has a folder on controlling moles in a lawn if you need additional information.

Q. Some of my Irish potatoes turn green before they are harvested. Why? (G.C., Raeford)

A. Because they are getting sunburned. They are growing up through the soil. Add more soil and the sunburning (greening) problem will be solved.

Q. Please give me some advice on sidedressing tomatoes. This is my first year at vegetable gardening. (G.L., Rocky Mount)

A. Sidedressing or applying additional fetilizer after planting should be done about half-way through the maturity cycle. For example, broccoli stays in the garden 70 to 80 days. It should be sidedressed about 40 to 45 days after planting. There are exceptions, as always. Tomatoes, eggplants and peppers can remain in the garden from spring until frost. They need two or three applications of sidedressing during the growing season. Also, more frequent sidedressings are needed if the soil is very sandy and if it rains a lot. A good sidedressing to apply is one cup of ammonium nitrate, which is 33 percent pure nitrogen, per 100 feet of row. An alternative is two cups of sodium nitrate, which is 16 percent pure nitrogen, per 100 feet of row. Or you can use four cups of 8-8-8 fertilizer per 100 feet of row. For widely spaced plants, you can apply two tablespoons of 8-8-8 in a cirle around each plant.

Q. What causes carrot roots to be short and nubby and sometimes split open? (L.D., Lexington)

A. Split carrots occur when they suddenly begin growing rapidly after a period of stunted growth, such as when wet, favorable weather follows hot, dry weather. Heavy soil, rocky soil, low fertility, crowded growing conditions and nematodes can contibute to short, nubby carrots.

Plants Used Several Ways

"This is the cheapest way of purifying water," Eneas Salati, the agronomist heading the project, says.

"This is the only place in the world that I know of where waterlilies are being used to control both organic and inorganic waste and to help agriculture at the same time. And the results of our research can be applied in other parts of the world."

Salati is head of the Center of Nuclear Energy in Agriculture, an organization that uses nuclear energy in agricultural research. It is located in Piracicaba, a manufacturing city in southeastern Brazil.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

The expressions about certain people following the sun might be applied to those who paint their houses.

When doing exterior painting on a sunny day, it's a good idea to start on the side where the sun has been and then, as you continue, follow the sun around the house. There are three advantages. First, the side you start on will be completely dry. Secondly, the painted area will not be subjected to the rays of the sun and therefore won't dry too fast. And finally, it's a lot more comfortable to paint in the shade than in the sun.

Be sure you are standing on a sound ladder and that it is firmly planted on the ground before you ascend it. The distance from the foundation of the feet of the ladder should be about one-fourth the height of the ladder. Thus, a 20-foot ladder should have its feet about 5 feet from the house. If the base of the ladder is to rest on soft ground, place a board under it in such a position that it cannot slip. If the feet are on concrete, they should be equipped with rubber safety treads or some other kind of safety equipment.

It is usually better to paint from top to bottom, starting at a left-hand corner if possible. Professionals sometimes work across a house, especially when working with assistants and with special equipment. You may have to move the ladder often when you have to work from top to bottom, but it's safer that way. The important thing is not to stretch any farther than your natural reach, advice that goes whether you are using a brush or a roller.

With an all-wood house, it is usually better to paint the siding first, the trim and sash later. This is not always practical, though, particularly when painting on a high house. In that case, do the siding and the trim at the same time, if feasible, so that the ladder does not have to be moved too many times.

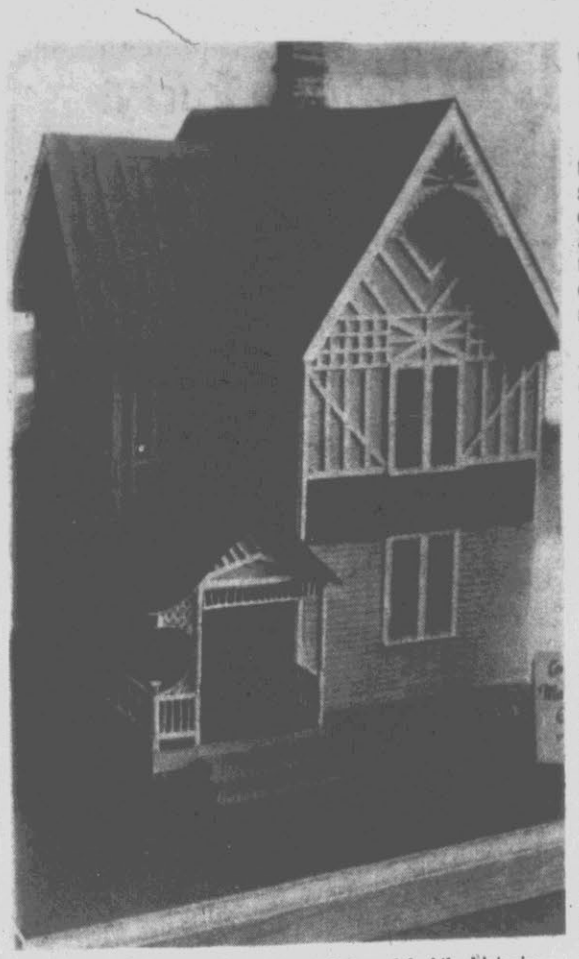

As with interior painting, the preparation of the surface is all-important. Loose and peeling paint must be scraped and sanded. Remember, too, that new paint will not take well on old paint if the latter is glossy, in which case the shine will have to be dulled. Do all nailing and caulking before you begin the actual painting.

The matter of which type of paint to use is sometimes a problem, but shouldn't be in most cases. Most of the time, it's best to use the same kind of paint as that used previously. Latex will take over oil- or alkyd-base paint, and vice versa, but you must take such a step with care. See what the paint-can label says about putting one coat over another and whether any special preparatory in-between coat is necessary. The oil- and alkyd-base paint manufacturers say their products give better coverage and have better durability. The makers of the good latex paints say it isn't so and that latex not only permits an easier cleanup, but is actually better because it drys faster, can be applied even if the surface is not fully dry, and allows the wall to breathe, hindering blistering and peeling. Regardless of the claims, never put on latex over the so-called chalking paints, which chalk during rainy weather and get rid of dirt when they do so.

Wood, Textiles Prominent In ECU Student Show

SCALE MODEL — This precisely scaled model of the historic Jones-Lee House on Evans Street has been constructed by two Aycock Junior High students, Mark Elmore and Greg Vacek. The two spent long hours on the project, one they chose for the recently held Aycock School Fair. The model was installed for public viewing at the Jones-Lee house for the April 17 Heritage Tour of homes, and is being taken to Raleigh to compete in a state level school fair.

It's worth saying again that the spacious exhibition space afforded by the airy expanses of Gray Gallery is a real asset when time comes to display a large potpourri of art such as shows of student work.

This year's exhibition of art by undergraduate students in the East Carolina University School of Art, now on view at Gray Gallery, is a good example of how a show of such disparate pieces can be handsomely installed despite the problems such a show present.

This year, ECU students have manifested some discernable preferences — for textiles, for works constructed of wood and for mixed media work. Paintings, photographs, drawings and ceramics do not have as large a showing as these categories have had in past years.

Printed scarves, knitted wearables, lengths of dyed, stenciled and printed fabrics are in abundance. There's a fresh, playful air depicted in a number of the wooden pieces, some of which lean toward skillfully crafted replicas of tools, radios, sewing machines, etc. A gold fish bowl (with a real gold fish swimming in the bowl) is incorported into an unpainted replica of a television set.

This year, too, the section devoted to the commercial arts seems to be stronger than in recent years. And happily, humor has not been forgotten. There's a few examples of the usual art-literary delights that always manage to crop up in such shows — i.e., John Arnold's watercolor entitled "And How The Fairy Queen Did Enchant The Once Known Wart."

Student artists awarded first, second and third places in the show are: first, Kris Gunderson, a sculpture, "A Plane Pain" of brass, copper and paint; second place, David Sharp for a photograph in the commercial art category, "All Colors Agree in the Dark;" and third place, Bev Bass for a mixed media work, "Bar Scene."

The undergraduate show has many pieces that will appeal to young and old viewers.

Gallery hours at Gray are 10-5 Mondays through Fridays, and 1-4 on Sundays. Admission is free.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By WILLIE MAE GIBBS

Fans of Judy Blume will welcome "Judy Blume's Story" written by freelance writer Betsy Lee.

Based on personal interviews and correspondence, Ms. Lee's book is the first full-length biography of Judy Blume. It answers a lot of questions — about what it was like for Judy to grow up in Elizabeth, N.J.; why and how she started to write books for kids, and what the life of a best-selling author is like.

"Judy Blume's Story" is a lot like her books. It is about sad things, like a warm-hearted father's death, and about silly things, like toes that crack while dancing. In writing for young people, Ms. Blume's credo is be honest, be open, even if it hurts. Therefore, her books are firmly rooted in real life. They are books about kids as real people. The same can be said of the story of her life. It is fresh, and warm and funny because this is the kind of person Judy Blume is. And because it is about real life, it is also painful.

To the millions of admirers who watch Gary Coleman in the TV series "Different Strokes," he is a superstar. To his colleagues who work with him, he is a hardworking, creative professional. To his friends, he is a rambunctious 13-year-old school kid who is also a famous person. To his parents, Gary is all these things and more.

In a book co-authored by the Coleman family and Bill Davidson, they share the story of their formidably bright, near straight-A student who just happens to be, as the book is titled, "Gary Coleman: Medical Miracle." Gary Coleman is alive today thanks to a kidney transplant, "the gift of life" from a 4-year-old boy killed in a hit-and-run accident in 1973. His own kidney was destroyed by a rare congenital disease.

There are many fascinating aspects to the Cary Coleman story: breakthroughs in the field of organ replacement, the skill and dedication of his doctors, Gary's inner strength, the enduring faith of his loving parents. More than anything else, "Gary Coleman: Medical Miracle" is a story of family courage: of a father who won a hard struggle out of rural poverty to make a better life for his wife and son; of a mother who studied nursing, saw her son through three dramatic medical crises and must still see that Gary takes his daily medications to fend off transplant rejection, and who had the insight to anitcipate the pscychological impact of the shortness that is a side effect of kidney transplant in the very young — and to open the door to the entertainment career that has made Gary Coleman a superstar.

New Show At EEii's

BELHAVEN — Pots by Bea Behr and paintings by Ralph Ihrie are going on view Sunday at EEii's little KORNERS of the world in Belhaven. A reception, open to the public, is being held from 1 to 5 p.m.

Mrs. Behr, who holds BFA and MFA degrees from East Carolina University, is the potter-in-residence at EEii's. She also teaches pottery through the East Carolina University extension service.

Her pots, glazed in earth and sky tones in both functional and decorative forms, are in numerous collections in the United States and in several foreign countries. She has filled commissions for convention centers and other special orders in the Orient and in Europe as well as having been commissioned to do individual pieces for private collections.

Ihrie, also a graduate of East Carolina University, is continuing to show a collection of paintings inspired by a recent tour of Russia. The paintings, which have been at EEii's for some time, have been kept on view for an extended period at the request of interested collectors and travelers in the area.

Ihrie had work included in the "American Painters in Paris" Exhibition held a couple of years ago in the grand opening of the Paris Convention Center.

During the afternoon, Mrs. Behr will be on hand to demonstrate the kick wheel technique used in pottery making.

Hang Gliding Competition At Nags Head May 14-16

NAGS HEAD — The 10th annual Hang Gliding Spectacular — the oldest continously held hang gliding competition in the country — will be held at Jockey's Ridge State Park May 14-16.

Staged from the top of Jockey's Ridge, the highest natural sand dune on the eastern Atlantic seaboard, the event is sponsored by the Dare County Jaycees and Kitty Hawk Kites.

Competition will consist of both duration-target events and distance trials," said Mark Airey, director of the spectacular. "Pilots will be trying to stay airborne as long as they can and still hit a target in the landing area about the size of a Frisbee. Other fliers will attempt to see who can fly the greatest distance from the peak of Jockey's Ridge," he said.

Registration will be held from 9 a.m. until noon May 14. The dunes will be open for practice flights at that time. Target competition will start at noon. The distance competition will be held at Saturday at 9 a.m. and the duration competition at 1 p.m. Due to weather conditions, the competition order may change.

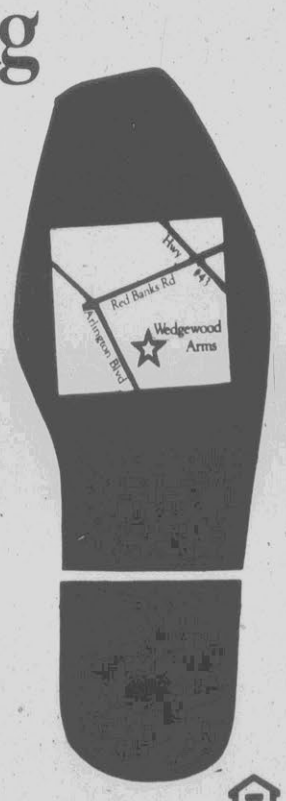

For more information about the competition and registration, contact Mark Airey, Kitty Hawk Kites, Box 340, Nags Head, N.C. 27959.

We put our foot down about apartments being within walking distance.

Wedgewood Arms apartments are within walking distance of three shopping centers, a nursery school, a junior high school, doctors' and dentists' offices and an athletic center.

As if that wasn't enough, three major traffic arteries, 264 Bypass, Arlington Blvd., and Charles St. are close enough to be seen and not heard.

Fact is, no apartments in town can legitimately claim to be more convenient to more things than Wedgewood Arms.

And, that's not all. Because Wedgewood Arms is not only convenient, it's different in other ways, too.

Take the floorplans: they're different from anything you've ever seen. And when you add in high energy efficiency, tennis courts, swimming pool, and the neighborhood "feeling" that these apartments will give you — well, you'll just have to see for yourself.

Archaeological Dig At Somerset Scheduled To Begin On June 28

LEARNING EXCAVATION TECHNIQUES . . . Students in the continuing archaeological excavations at Somerset Place on the shores of Lake Phelps in Washington County are shown doing field work in the summer of 1981. The excavation will continue for a six week period this summer beginning June 28. The school is sponsored by the Historic Sites Section of the N.C. Department of Cultural Resources.

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department Of Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — The lives and times of early slaves in eastern North Carolina will again be the focus of an archaeology field school this summer.

Beginning June 28, a six--week field school at Somerset Place on Lake Phelps near Creswell in Washington County and at Durham's Stagville Plantation will expose students to the methods, techniques and theory of field archaeology. Students will participate in the excavation of several archaeological sites and develop skills in photography, surveying, data recording and artifact processing. No prior experience is necessary.

This summer's school will continue the work begun in 1981 at Somerset Place, plantation home of the Josiah Collins family, according to Thomas Funk, school director and archaeologist for the Historic Sites Section, an agency of the Department of Cultural Resources. Staff archaeologist Terry Erlandson will be assistant director.

The first week will be held at the Stagville Preservation Center north of Durham where a five-day seminar in historical archaeology, plantation history and material culture studies will be offered. The lectures will be available to all interested people regardless of participation in the Somerset field session following, Funk explained. However, the lecture series will be required of all students enrolled for college credit, which is available through Durham Technical Institute and Duke University.

In 1786 Somerset Place, one of the first coastal plantations in North Carolina, had about 100 slaves who had arrived directly from Africa. By 1859, these had increased to about 300.

Funk explains the Somerset Place salves were especially interesting since they did not make the trip via the West Indies as most did, but came directly from Africa, and therefore, brought their African culture intact to Somerset. With these excavations, it is hoped to uncover some of this culture, Funk noted.

The field school will include further exploration of the Somerset slave buildings located last summer; test excavations along the shore of Lake Phelps; and test excavations along the slave street and the area of the slave houses.

The summer field school is sponsored by the Institute of Applied History and offered through Durham Technical Institute for a fee of $8.

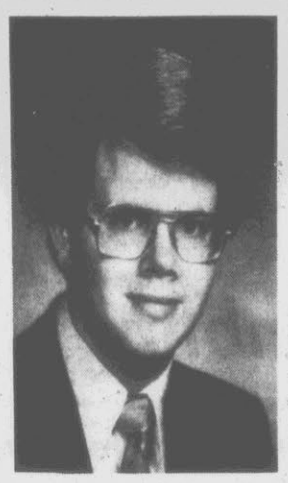

The Duke University Summer Session offers the field school for up to six hours of academic credit with additional fees of $468 for three hours and $936 for six credit hours. The transfer of credit is automatic to institutions affiliated with the Institute of Applied History.

Food and housing costs for the field session at Somerset will be arranged on the basis of enrollment. While in Durham, food and housing arrangements are the responsibility of the student.

For details or to register, contact the Historic Sites Section of the Department of Cultural Resources, 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh, N.C., 27611, or telephone 733-7862.

New Books Of Poetry

THOMASVILLE — The North Carolina Poetry Society announces it has received two grants from the North Carolina Arts Council during the past year, both designed to help make possible the two Poetry Society books, "Award Winning Poems 1982" and "Soundings in Poetry."

The "Award 1982" volume is comprised of all prize-winning poems from the society's 1982 Spring Contest. The grant funds were supplemented by funds from society dues, contest entrance fees and privately donated funds for some of the awards.

"Soundings" is an anthology of 135 poems by 64 Poetry Society members and appeared in November 1981. It is the second anthology published by the N.C. Poetry Society, the first one having appeared in 1966.

Both publications may be ordered from: Mrs. Nona Madison, 1048 Johnsontown Road, Thomasville, N.C., 27360. "Award Winning Poems 1982" is available at $1.50 plus postage; "Soundings in Poetry" is available at $5 soft cover or $10 hard cover plus 90 cents postage per copy.

Spend a week in Knoxville as Allison McDuffy reports on the year's biggest event in an exciting 5 part series beginning May 3rd on 9 Alive News.

STILL STANDING — Each year, this abandoned mule stable/packhouse combination on a farm near Williamston leans backward a little more, but continues to survive winds, time and non-usage. Once painted red, the barn's boards now have reverted to a weathered silver-gray color, with only randsom splotches of red to indicate its brilliant color in the past. More Sex, Sin And Gambling

By MYRAM BORDERS

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — High-priced entertainers are being replaced by topless showgirls. More prostitutes are walking the streets.

Gaming is being marketed to attract volume business. There is big advertising for such come-ons as six-figure slot-machine payoffs.

Like much of the rest of the country, Las Vegas is in trouble economically. It is fighting back the way it knows best — by going back to its roots of sex, sin and gambling.

Prostitutes are out in greater numbers to the chagrin of vice officers and those concerned with the city's tainted image. Prostitution is illegal in Las Vegas' Clark County but is allowed by county ordinance in rural areas nearby.

The Las Vegas Chamber of Commerce and some hotel-casino executives prefer to bury the "sin city" image in hopes of attracting entire families to Las Vegas. But they admit sex-for-sale, at least on showroom stages, paid off in the past.

The switch from superstars to sex shows will be completed at all but three major hotel-casino showrooms by September.

"Shows here are no more explicit than in Cleveland and Chicago," said Chamber of Commerce President Fred Lewis, a top executive of Summa Corp., which has made the switch at hotels owned by the late Howard Hughes.

But he said the town has fostered an image he called "the combination of gambling and shows, topless women."

"It is an image that has paid off over the years. We have to point out what we do is sexy, but not dirty. Sexy in a wholesome way," said Lewis.

The Frontier Hotel currently features Siegfried and Roy, illusionists who make lions and tigers disappear on a stage shared with skimpily clad showgirls. The Desert Inn Hotel booked "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" for a long run. Both are Summa Corp.-owned hotels.

Superstars will have priced themselves out of jobs by the fall season, at least temporarily, at most Las Vegas showrooms. Only the marquees of Caesars Palace, the Riviera and the MGM Grand Hotels will carry big, expensive names like Frank Sinatra, Dolly Parton and Liza Minelli.

Name stars in recent years have demanded and received from $100,000 to $350,000 a week to appear in Las Vegas. Dolly Parton was paid $350,000 a week by the Riviera Hotel last year.

"The reason for the switch is economics," said Dick Lane, entertainment director for the Las Vegas Hilton. The Hilton previously has booked name stars into the showroom. Beginning Sept. 1 it will feature a French revue entitled "Moulin Rouge," a production with a 65-member cast.

"We should be saving money. In general there has been a drop-off in Las Vegas. The big factor for the change is the general economy and audiences are ready to see new faces. They are not coming to see the old ones the way they did," said Lane.

Highroller losses in high-stake games did much to insulate Las Vegas from previous economic slumps. But during the past decade, hotel rooms have swelled to 50,000 and by necessity are being filled with middle-class tourists and conventioneers. There are not enough highrollers to go around and middle-class America is savings its money.

Hotel president Isidore Becker is one of many casino owners to begin marketing gambling in a big way. He started the "World Championship of Craps." The by-product of such gambling promotions is additional casino play, unofficially estimated to reach $1 million during the tournament.

While casino owners are promoting sex on stages, police are fighting a war against prostitution — and losing. Thousands of prostitutes work the glittery streets.

Festival In Fayetteville

FAYETTEVILLE — The ninth annual Sunday-on-the-Square arts festival in downtown Fayetteville will be held Sunday from 1 to 6 p.m. The fair will be at historic Market House Square and will feature a large variety of street festival entertainments. Also, art work will be shown, demonstrated and sold.

Five entertainment stages have been set up and performers will include the all-new Jazz/Pop/Rock Fountain at Cross Creek Park; the Market House Choral Area, the Branch Bank & Trust Cabaret, the Person Street Dance Center and the Academy Coffeehouse.

Other attractions will include a big flea market, face painting, clown performances, juggling, a mime troupe, poetry reading, animated movies and art films, belly dancing and theatrical reading.

Kemp's Ridleys are the smallest turtle species and the rarest. Their only known major nesting beach, according to National Geographic, is at Rancho Nuevo, Mexico. The turtles nest en masse, but the number of nesting females has sharply declined because the eggs are snatched to be sold as food or as an aphrodisiac.

Dear Abby

Man Proposes, Priest Opposes

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: The Rev. J. Roger Skelley-Watts wrote you that he performed a wedding ceremony for an obviously pregnant bride after the couple had been previously refused by a Catholic priest.

I will never understand how any religious minister could be so arrogant and vindictive as to chastise a "sinner" and not address the human need for understanding, forgiveness and acceptance. If that's a Christian attitude, I'll eat my Bible.

As for marrying expectant parents: Few people seem to realize the wedding ceremony is a blessing of a couple's union to formalize a commitment already made in their hearts. If the family is begun before the blessing, why not attribute the "sin" to the impatience of love, for which there is plenty of precedent?

Through history (and in some countries still) unions were consummated far in advance of the blessing because there weren't enough men of God to go around. It was not unusual for an itinerant minister to bless the marriage and baptize its offspring at the same time. A lot of us wouldn't be here today if current righteousness prevailed then, and a lot more of us could not claim to be properly legitimate descendents of our ancestors.

Meanness, not morality, is in the hearts of those who would deprive a pregnant bride of a church wedding and all the support they can possibly give to welcome this new family into the community.

If this is too long for your column, please forward it to the Rev. Skelley-Watts with my warm congratulations.

LOVE IS EASY TO FORGIVE

DEAR LOVE: Your letter is well worth the space, and deserves a wider audience than one clergyman in Bolivar, Ohio. But stay tuned for the voice of a Catholic priest who deserves equal time:

DEAR ABBY: You published a letter from a clergyman who said that he had performed a marriage ceremony for an "obviously pregnant bride who had been previously refused by a Catholic priest." I think in all fairness to the Catholic Church, the reason for the priest's refusal to perform the ceremony should be explained.

The Catholic Church takes the position that the holy wedding rite should not be used to protect a pregnant girl from embarrassment, or to give her baby a name. I think most people would agree that such marriages seldom last.

If, however, after the birth of the child, the couple still wants to marry, then the wedding could take place.

Catholic priests have been known to marry pregnant brides after talking with the couple and being convinced that the pregnancy is not the only or main reason for the marriage.

THE REV. ROBERT M. COX, DALLAS

DEAR ABBY: I am writing this in hopes that it will get through to some knuckleheaded daughter or son out there.

My daughter, who is now an adult and lives out of town, is a wonderful young woman. We have a great relationship and I know she loves me, but a few years ago she told me she thought Mother's Day was a "racket" and she refused to be sucked into it, so since then she has never acknowledged Mother's Day with flowers, gift or card.

I could never bring myself to tell her that I feel hurt and that a card would mean a great deal to me. So I'm writing this. Maybe she will read it. Or perhaps someone else's child will read it and get the message.

MOM IN TUCSON

* * *

DEAR ABBY: How do you get a man to propose marriage? I've tried every approach I can think of.

I've played hard to get. When that didn't work, I let him know he could have whatever he wanted. I've told him I didn't mind if he wanted to date others. No reaction. Then I acted jealous and possessive when he as much as looked at another woman. Still no reaction.

I've tried pursuing him shamelessly. He said he didn't like to be pressured, so I quit calling him and waited for him to call me.

I've tried being vivacious, exuberant and extroverted. That didn't work, so I toned down and came on more laid-back, subdued and ladylike. Abby, nothing seems to work, and I am desperate to marry this man.

What is wrong with me?

OPEN FOR SUGGESTIONS

DEAR OPEN: You ask what is wrong with you. Which you? The woman who's hard to get, or the woman who's easy? The liberal, broad-minded woman who's willing to share him? Or the jealous, possessive one? The aggressive huntress or the shy, retiring maiden who waits to be pursued?

Be yourself and quit acting. He may find the real you refreshingly appealing. And if that doesn't work, you haven't lost anything because so far you've batted zero.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: How do you tell a middle-aged woman to change her clothes and use some kind of deodorant? For the last six months this woman has worn the same soiled pant-suit to work every day. This is a business office, and she not only looks terrible, she smells bad.

She is a good worker and good-natured, and we hate to hurt her feelings, but something has to be done. She also wears a dirty wig to work nearly every day. I wonder if she knows it can be shampooed.

Please help us.

HOLDING OUR NOSES

DEAR HOLDING: If this woman has one friend in the office, ask that friend to have a heart-to-heart talk with her. If no one wants to confront her, it is the responsibility of the office manager or head of personnel to do so. It would be a kindness.

What Price Injured Pride

LINCOLN, Neb. (UPI) — A man ordered by a jury to pay $17,500 to a woman he promised to marry and then jilted is contesting the award on the grounds wounded pride and humiliation aren't worth that much.

J. William Kelly III, attorney for James Dake of Grand Island, Neb., contends the award given Ruby Menhusen was too large, and she should not have been allowed to recover damages for mental pain and anguish, wounded pride, mortification and humiliation.

In a legal brief filed with the high court, Kelly said Dake and Ms. Menhusen lived together in Grand Island from June through October 1980, when Dake "removed himself from the residence."

He said the jury's $17,5 00 judgment in Ms. Menhusen's favor "is clearly excessive."

Life As It's Lived

By GAIL MICHAELS

Zachary's initiation into the terrible 2s has taken its toll on Meg's and my relationship. I already know that by the time she's a teen-ager, I'll be seen as one of those mothers who has never taken time to establish rapport with her child.

It's not that I can't remember how she feels. I remember every painful detail of childhood. Like her, I was the older sister who had to cater to a stupid nuisance of a baby. My little sister got away with murder. I, on the other hand, never got away with anything.

For example, I got the spanking the time my sister fell into a creek on a vacant lot. The fact that she followed me there (against my will and in spite of my remonstrances, I might add) after I had been told to stay away from the lot did little to mitigate the unfairness of the situation.

And my mother didn't believe me when I told her that my little sister had pilfered all the necklaces from my jewelry box. She accused me of losing them in the mess in my room. When she actually found the necklaces several weeks later in a corner of the windowsill in my sister's room, her apologies were not sufficient to soothe my injured feelings.

Moreover, according to my mother, I was too untidy, too talkative, too argumentive, and rude to my elders. In short, I had many of the same problems Meg has.

Still, I can't empathize with her. I've tried, I really have. But understanding Meg is dangerous. Understanding her makes the situation infinitely worse. If during a quarrel I refuse to listen to her grievances against her brother and merely send her to her room to calm down, she will merge 10 minutes later and behave like a person who has some potential for becoming civilized.

But if I get on one of my empathy kicks and tell her that I can relate to her problems with her little brother, she not only vents all her hostilities as the psychology books say she should, she invents them. By the end of the conversation she has convinced herself that by rights her brother should be imprisoned in a dungeon for his constant diabolical scheming to make her life miserable and that I should be with him for daring to give him access to her in the first place. She forgets entirely the fun they share together and the love she usually displays for him. In our conversations Meg views the world only in black and white — or maybe in black and blue.

I thought we had finally found a vehicle to help establish communication when we started reading "Ramona the Pest," by Beverly Cleary. Ramona is a deligtful little girl who wears worms on her fingers for rings, who talks too much, who asks too many questions, who gets in trouble when she is most well-meaning, and who has an older sister who gets to do anything she wants. Despite Meg's amazement that the older sister seemed to Ramona to be the mother's favorite, Meg identified with Ramona, and I tried to show her that I understood how Ramona felt.

As usual, unfortunately, the book and my reaction only sensitized Meg. She was more eager than ever to point out the disparities in my treatment of her and Zachary. She began automatically to drop the corners of her mouth whenever I looked at her. "What's the matter?" I finally asked.

"Oh," she sighed dramatically, "somehow I feel sad, you know, about us."

I fell back on my old response. "Go to your room. I don't want to hear it."

Ironically, it was she who eventually tried to re-establish the lines of communication. Zachary threw a temper tantrum at the dinner table one evening and kicked his milk all over my freshly washed floor because I tried to make him taste cooked carrot. Phillip was out of town, I was worn out, and my feelings toward Zachary as I cleaned up the mess were not exactly amicable.

I sighed. "I do feel pretty lousy."

"I understand how hard it is for you to have to clean up the floor after Zachary was so careless."

But Meg was feeling too close in spirit to let the matter drop. "Yes," she shook her head, "I love him, but just between you and me, don't you think living with him is the pits?"

A young Havana lawyer, Fidel Castro, in 1953 led a group of revolutionaries in an attack on a fortress held by the army and police supporters of Cuban dictator Fulgencio Batista. Many of the attackers, including Castro, were captured and imprisoned. Subsequently released, Castro dropped from sight until 1956.

Passion Drives Woman Into Tragedy

Lee Remick stars as the beautiful, restless wife of a rubber planter whose smoldering passions erupt into forbidden romance and shocking tragedy, in "The Letter," W. Somerset Maugham's torrid tale of love, death and deceit in the tropics, airing as the ABC Theatre of the Month, Monday, May 3 (9-11 p.m.).

Abruptly, a gunshot rends the sultry night air. Lurching onto the verandah, Geoff Hammond (Ian McShane) staggers and falls, tumbling crazily down the steps. Gun in hand, Leslie Crosbie (Miss Remick), nearly hysterical and with her clothes in disarray, follows. Deliberately, she empties the remaining cartridges into his lifeless body.

Taken into police custody, Leslie relives the horrifying experience for the benefit of her adoring husband, Robert (Jack Thompson), their family friend and lawyer, Howard Joyce (Ronald Pickup), and District Officer Withers (Christopher Cazenove).

Via the first of a gripping series of flashbacks, she describes how Hammond, whom she had once nursed through a bout of malaria, arrived unexpectedly at the bungalow, drunk and aggressively amorous. Despite her protestations, Hammond's lust had soon turned to physical attack, and only the pistol that Robert had left for her protection had prevented her from being raped.

Although charged with murder, Leslie seems assured of acquittal until Joyce's chief clerk, Ong Chi Seng (Soon-Teck Oh), informs him of the existence of a mysterious letter that is in the possession of Hammond's enigmatic Chinese mistress. The incriminating missive threatens to destroy both Robert and Howard, and cost Leslie her own life.

But before their fates are sealed, a final flashback reveals the surprising — and devastating — truth surrounding the letter, and the tragic chain of events set in motion the night of Hammond's fatal visit.

The artistic wizardry that transformed a section of L.A.'s Chinatown into the streets of Singapore was the doing of Jim Hulsey, the film's art director.

LEE REMICK STARS AS A BEAUTIFUL AND RESTLESS wife whose forbidden affair with Ian McShane leads to shocking tragedy in Somerset Maugham's torrid novella of love, death and deceit in the tropics, "The Letter," airing on the ABC Theatre of the Month, Monday, May 3 (9-11 p.m.).

Rogers Plays A Gambling Man

One of the most popular performers in the entertainment world today will be seen in his debut as a dramatic actor, in "Kenny Rogers as The Gambler," to be rebroadcast as The NBC Sunday Night Movie, May 2 (9-11 p.m.). When the program first aired in 1980, it was the highest-rated TV movie of the season.

This western adventure is set in the Southwest during the 1800s. The script by Jim Byrnes uses as a narrative springboard the lyrics from Kenny's hit single of the same title. In 1979, "The Gambler" won the Song of the Year Award at the 13th annual Country Music Association Awards, and Rogers' album, "The Gambler," was named Album of the Year. In 1980, during the 22nd Annual Grammy Awards, Rogers' rendition of the title cut won him the coveted award for Best Country Vocal Performance, Male.

The story concerns Brady Hawkes (Rogers), a cool, steely-eyed professional gambler who plays by the rules and knows the power of a good bluff. Brady sets out by train from El Paso to Yuma, responding to a plea from a son (Ronnie Scribner) he never knew he had. It is the most dangerous move that Brady has ever made, because he knows that his son's cruel stepfather, Rufe Bennett (Clu Gulager), harbors an abiding hatred of him and will try to ambush him.

Along the way, Brady falls in with Billy Montana, (Bruce Boxleitner), an impetuous young gambler, and Jennie Reed (Lee Purcell) a society lady with a shady past. In separate encounters with the arrogant railroad owner (Harold Gould) in his private car and with a gang of cutthroats in a wayside town, Brady defends Jennie and Billy before having to face his own private showdown with Bennett.

KENNY ROGERS STARS as a professional gambler who knows the power of a good bluff, in "Kenny Rogers as The Gambler," to be rebroadcast as the NBC Sunday Night Movie, May 2 (9-11 p.m.).

No stunt doubles were used in the filming of the movie's fight sequences, and after director Dick Lowry blocked the action, stunt coordinator Dave Cass took over, coaching Rogers and Gulager on the verisimilitude of movie brawls. Grabbing Gulager by the shirt, he instructed Rogers, "At this point you just release Clu and he throws himself back against the bar."

Finally, during a well-deserved break, Rogers said, "Sure it's hard, sweaty work, but it's paid off, and I could see it coming together, bit by bit.

LESLEY ANN WARREN STARS as a Broadway dancer newly arrived in Las Vegas, who is eager to continue her career in a new locale, in "Portrait of a Showgirl," airing as the CBS Tuesday Night Movie, May 4 (9-11 p.m.).

Michele Will Tell

Q: Could you please tell me about the guy who plays David Gray on "General Hospital? Is he married? D.A.V., FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

A: The role of David on "General Hospital" is portrayed by newcomer Paul Rossilli. Paul is single and a veteran stage actor. He has appeared in the feature films "Midnight Cowboy" and "Serial" with Martin Mull.

Q: Could you please give me some information on Lorenzo Lamas, the handsome actor who portrays Lance Cumson on "Falcon Crest"? Also, where can I write to him? S. LANIER, LEXINGTON, N.C.

A: Twenty-three-year-old Lorenzo Lamas, the son of Fernando Lamas and Arlene Dahl, had to audition three times before he garnered the role of Lance. Born in the Los Angeles area, he graduated from the Farragut Academy in Toms River, New Jersey, and attended Santa Monica City College for a year — mainly, he says, so that he could be a member of the swimming team. Lorenzo is single and lives in Hollywood. In addition to acting, he is also interested in pursuing a singing career and has signed with a recording company to do pop and soft rock tunes. Write to him in c/o "Falcon Crest," CBS-TV, 51 W. 52 Street, New York, N.Y., 10019.

Q: My wife and I have an argument going. Who was Karl Malden's sidekick on "The Streets of San Francisco"? Was it Michael Douglas or Martin Sheen? If it was not Martin Sheen did he appear in a TV series and what was it. ROY WILLIAMS, LITTLETON, N.C.

A: Malden's original partner was Michael Douglas — he was later replaced by Richard Hatch. Martin Sheen did guest star on 'Streets' in the episode "Betrayal." He portrayed Dean Knox, an unscrupulous young stock broker. Sheen has guest-starred in numerous TV series and has appeared in many made for TV films — he has never had his own series.

Q: Will you please tell me who sang "Down in the Boon Docks," back in the 60s? I say Billy Crystal did and my husband says Sonny and Cher. BETH COOPER, MORGANTON, N.C.

Q: I have a bet going with a friend that Charles Bronson is 70 years old. He says Bronson is only in his 50s. Who's right? SHIRLEY COLE, HICKORY, N.C.

"Ain't Misbehavin'" will be staged in Knoxville, Tenn., this May as part of the 1982 World's Fair events in that city. Also on tap are concerts by Al Hirt and Pete Fountain, Loretta Lynn and Conway Twitty, Cristy Lane, Peter Nero, Roberta Peters and Ava Barber.

Break A Leg

Popular young actor John Wesley Shipp, who plays dedicated medical student Kelly Nelson on the daytime drama "Guiding Light," is currently sporting a cast and sling on his left hand on the serial. Due to a real-life accident at the actor's home, he was able to observe hospital procedures first-hand. Shipp is fine, and didn't have to miss an episode of the serial, although some hasty rewrites were necessary to explain his bandages (including a scene with recent guest star Judy Collins in which she autographed his cast, writing "Break a Leg").

'If It Ain't Broke, Don't Try To Fix It'

"You don't tamper with success," Don Novello says. "This show is so good that there's absolutely no need for any major revamping on my part."

The show is "SCTV Network," NBC-TV's late-night satirical comedy series (12:30-2 a.m.), following Friday editions of "The Tonight Show") and Novello — who rose to TV stardom via his comedic portrayal of Father Guido Sarducci, a Vatican social commentator — recently switched hats to become the producer of "SCTV."

Novello perceives his producer's assignment on "SCTV" as different from many other productions. "The show evolves differently. The way I see it, I am the one with the responsibility for the 'overview' of the operation, the one who, if necessary, must step back and put in perspective the various elements that will ultimately comprise the whole."

Although "SCTV" is his first assignment as a producer, Novello cites two of his prior stints as writer and/or performer as invaluable training for his new role. As a performer on NBC's "Smothers Brothers' Show" in 1975, when he first introduced the Father Sarducci character to a national TV audience, Novello says he considered himself very fortunate to be able to observe the comedic genius of Tom Smothers at close range. Later, he was both a writer and performer on "Saturday Night Live" and Novello says of Lorne Michaels, its producer, "he is just the very best there is."

Novello numbers himself among the long-time devotees of "SCTV," going back to when the Canada-originated program was a syndicated half-hour offering in the United States. "They are superb at what they do," he says of the show's repertory players. "What we have here is a group of amazingly talented people."

Boston Is Eager To Defend Title

Can the Boston Celtics become the first team in 12 years to repeat as NBA World Champions? Eleven other teams started in the playoffs, all of whom are intent on knocking Boston off its throne. CBS Sports will be broadcasting part of the playoff action this week, starting with a doubleheader on Sunday, May 2 at (1 p.m.-conclusion).

Not since the Boston Celtics of 1967-68 and 1968-69, which were led by player-coach Bill Russell, has a team been able to successfully defend its NBA crown. Eleven teams have tried and all have failed, most recently the Los Angeles Lakers, who won the title in 1979-80 but were knocked out by the Houston Rockets in the first round of last year's playoffs. Nevertheless, the Celtics are approaching Showdown '82, the Battle for the NBA World Championship, confident that they can break the streak.

"We're the team to beat," said Celtics center Robert Parish. "We're playing very well. We've been winning all the close games, making all the big plays and getting a lot of help from the bench. It's a matter of everyone knowing his role. Nobody here wants this team to be a one-man show. It's been a team effort from No. 1 down to No. 12 and I think that's been a key to our success."

The Celtics finished the regular season by winning 26 of their last 30 games to wind up with a 63-19 record, the best in the League. By winning the Atlantic Division title for the third year in a row they earned a bye through the first round of the playoffs.

The Celtics won their 14th NBA title last season, beating the Houston Rockets in a six-game NBA World Championship Series after rallying from a 3-1 deficit to defeat the Philadelphia 76ers in a memorable Eastern Conference Final. Boston approaches Showdown '82 fully expecting to gain title to a 15th championship banner.

Proclaiming the Celtics the huntee rather than the hunter, M.L. Carr said: "There's a lot more pressure on the hunter than the rabbit. We can just run and play our games and it's up to the others to try and catch us."

Receives Training

Mrs. Olive Osmond was asked if she gave her daughter, Marie, any advice before the 22-year-old singer-actress portrayed her in the movie "Side by Side: The True Story of the Osmond Family."

"Oh, of course not," said Mrs. Osmond, who, with husband George, is considered the guiding force behind the family of entertainers. "Not really. How could I? Marie knows more about show business than I do."

An Early Start

Born in the small town of Sterrett, Texas, Boxcar Willie turned a country lyric before he could even talk in complete sentences. As a 3-year-old, he would run to the door as freight trains traveled less than a stone's throw from his home. It was at this young age that he began imitating the train whistles.

TV Chatter

By Polly Vonetes

HOLLYWOOD — It looks like "J.R." may soon have some real political influence in Texas — LARRY HAGMAN'S brother, attorney GARY HAGMAN of Weatherford, Texas, is running for State Senator on the Republican ticket.

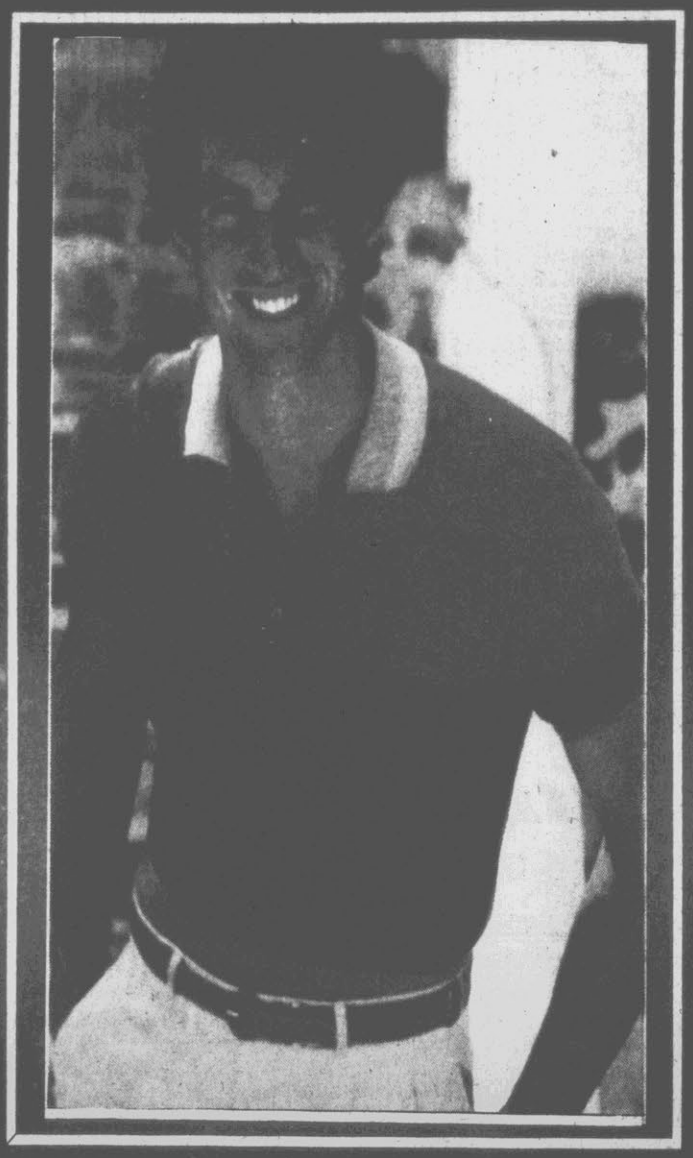

The final word on the "Little House on the Prairie" series is — it has been renewed for its ninth season on NBC, but will return sans MICHAEL LANDON and KAREN GRASSLE. Future episodes will focus on younger members of the cast, MELISSA GILBERT and DEAN BUTLER. New characters will also be added to the cast — a young married couple with two pre-teen boys; a young girl; and a new school teacher, to be played by LESLIE LANDON, MICHAEL'S daughter. LANDON will continue as the series' executive producer and director.

It's a safe bet that comedian ANDY KAUFMAN'S wrestling career has ended. KAUFMAN, who has been challenging people to wrestle him in his nightclub act — met his match in JERRY LAWLER, a 234-pound professional wrestler, determined to teach ANDY a lesson. He picked him up and slammed him head-first into the mat twice — resulting in cuts, strained neck muscles and a compressed vertebral disc.

When "Bette Davis Day" was proclaimed by MAYOR TOM BRADLEY and the Los Angeles City Council, many honors and tributes were bestowed upon her. However, the highlight of her day came from grandson, J. ASHLEY HYMAN. Voted "Most Outstanding Young Newcomer in 1981" for his starring role in "Family Reunion," ASHLEY stole the show with his touching praise for his grandmother — "She taught me everything I know about acting — She is a very good friend of mine, and I love her very much."

Lowe's Pricing Policy
Many items in this tabloid carry a reference retail price. The reference is intended to provide a guide to the range of retail selling prices in our area and may be useful in identifying different units of the same manufacturer. An item's reference retail price is either the manufacturer's suggested retail price or our determination of its full retail price based on prices at which it or similar merchandise is offered by principal retailers (department stores, specialty shops and other non-discount sellers) in our selling area. While we believe our reference retails do not appreciably exceed the highest retail prices at which sales are made in our selling area, we cannot assure you that our reference retail prices, as described above, represent the prices in every community on any given day. Some items in this advertisement are listed at "regular" selling prices. The merchandise is offered at this price except during a special sale. The purpose of showing a reference retail price (or a regular price) is to assist you, our customer, in making a knowledgeable and better informed buying decision. We suggest that you also do comparative shopping and compare our prices. (Prices in this tabloid do not include delivery charges. Ask us about delivery rates.)
Lowe's Raincheck Policy: If we sell out of an advertised item, we'll issue you a raincheck. When we restock, you'll be notified so you can buy at the previously advertised price (except for products marked "Limited Quantities"). Our smaller stores may not stock all advertised items. But every item shown here can be ordered for you.

Schmitt: "U.S. behind competitors."

FOR SENATOR HARRISON SCHMITT (R.-N.M.)

What can the Government do to help our private companies compete with international industries? —S.L., Biloxi, Miss.

● The Federal Government must move rapidly to help make U.S. manufacturers on par with their foreign competitors. The problems in the manufacturing industry were partly caused by a lack of Federal support for basic research and technology development necessary for the continuous growth of productivity during the 70's. Ill-devised and shortsighted Federal regulation and tax policy in the 60's and 70's are also to blame. In addition, inept and misguided trade policy toward our international competition has left other countries free to trade in the U.S., while we are restricted from trading with them.

FOR CHERYL TIEGS, model

Does the elephant charm you wear around your neck have any special significance? —P.B., Las Vegas, Nev.

● It certainly does. A couple of years ago I was sent to Africa on assignment and was given this elephant charm (gold, nearly an inch wide) while there. From the moment I put it on I felt safe. I think it brings me good luck and now I rarely take it off. The one who gave it to me — Peter Beard — is now my husband.

FOR TELLY SAVALAS, star of the American Playhouse series, My Palikari, (to be aired May 4)

How often do you go back to your parents' birthplace in Greece? —E.S., Twin Falls, Idaho

● I had never been to Sparta, where my folks were born, until the summer of 1981. Naturally, when I got there I was greeted like a hero — a change from my usual receptions! It seems that the Kojak series is very popular over there.

FOR IRMA SHORELL, skin care expert and co-author of A Lifetime of Skin Beauty (Simon and Schuster, 1982)

How effective is smearing on your face all that vegetable mush that so many stars swear by? —B.G., Monterey, Calif.

● Most food-based recipes are great to eat — but the skin can't absorb food. Putting things from the refrigerator or the pantry shelf on your face does as much good as using cold cream in a cake recipe.

FROM THE "ASK" EDITOR

IMAGE: Paul Newman's beer-drinking image is about to be diluted — in Japan. He's doing coffee commercials for that country. . . . Ever wondered which of our recent Presidents was most concerned with his public image? It's L.B.J., according to John B. Oakes, former editor at the New York Times, who has known every chief exec. from F.D.R. to Reagan. A few nights after J.F.K. was assassinated, the White House phoned him. Oakes was puzzled about the purpose of the call. L.B.J. said, "I've been thinking about you." Oakes replied: "I've been thinking about you, too, Mr. President." He later learned that Johnson made similar brief calls across the country to all those he thought could be of help to him. . . . ITEMS: Dolly Parton and her husband, Carl Dean, have a hard and fast rule that every year on their wedding anniversary (May 30) they return to the Florida hotel where they honeymooned in 1966. . . . The lips featured in the ads for Victor/Victoria don't belong to the star, Julie Andrews, but to co-star Lesley Ann Warren. . . . Victor Drai (Jackie Bisset's ex) and Liz Treadwell (George Hamilton's former companion) have obviously forgotten all about their respective past loves, according to those who see the new pair around town. . . . IRELAND: Sean O'Huiggin, consul general of Ireland, made these remarks when news of the second annual Great Irish Fair (planned for June 5,6 in Brooklyn, N.Y.) was revealed: "It's not a sin not to be Irish — but it is a great shame. . . . When an Irishman stands up to speak, everyone has a shrewd idea of what he'll say, but only the good Lord knows how long he'll take to say it.". . . INSPIRATION: Nine out of 10 stars trace their desire to act to the moment they saw their first movie and vowed to be just like the leading man or lady. The 10th one is Harry Hamlin, now in Making Love. He fell in love with movies at age 5. The one who captured his heart was a little deer — Bambi. . . . Pop recording star Jennifer Warnes was inspired at 4. Her mom, desperate for new ways to keep her babe occupied, finally resorted to playing records. "I caught on quick," said Jennifer. "Every night I showed my dad what I'd learned. After two weeks I had a repertoire of 10 songs."

PRO AND CON

Should the Legal Age for a Driver's License Be Raised in All States to Age 18?

(Question submitted by V. Johnson, Lynnwood, Wash.)

Send questions of national significance, on a postcard, to "Pro & Con," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022.
We'll pay $10 for those published.

PRO State Senator Peter von Reichbauer (R.-Wash.), chairman, Transportation Committee

During 1980, 60 percent of the 16-year-old drivers in Washington state were involved in traffic accidents. In the same year, 18-year-olds had 66 percent fewer accidents than 16-year-olds. Increasing the licensing age to 18 could potentially eliminate about 15,000 accidents per year involving 16- and 17-year-old drivers. But we need a more extensive program of on-the-road instruction as well as to encourage more responsibility in young drivers.

CON State Senator Edith Miller Klein (R.-Idaho), chairman, Judiciary and Rules Committee

Because a variety of conditions exist among the states, it is essential that each state adopt its own drivers regulations. Idaho, for example, is 12th in geographical size with a population of less than 1 million. Many highways are in rural areas with little traffic, and young teens need operators permits to drive to school or transport family farm supplies. The Idaho legislature has recognized that age is not the only criterion of a person's ability to operate a vehicle.

Horsing Around With Jack Klugman

As a slovenly sportswriter and a caring coroner, Jack Klugman has captivated TV fans everywhere. Still, he scorns the medium that's made him rich. His enduring loves: theater, pasta and a thoroughbred named Jaklin.

By Mark Goodman

You have to get up early in the morning to talk to Jack Klugman. At 7:15, to be precise, because that is when the savvy, high-strung, high-rolling star of Quincy arrives on the set — that is, when he hasn't spent the night at the studio. "I sit down with the writers and work on each show," explains the fellow with a face like everybody's old Army buddy. "I sometimes work 20 hours a day. But it's my series and I take full responsibility for it."

For that reason, Klugman's police coroner has been NBC's quality prime-time offering for the past six years. (The show was recently renewed for a seventh.) Klugman demands a neurosurgeon's attention to detail on the show, a dedication to craft that sometimes drives scriptwriters to distraction. Still, it has worked because Klugman, at 60 one of the most popular and colorful character actors in the land, makes it work. "Oh," says Klugman, "we get an occasional letter saying, 'You held the X-ray upside down,' or a doctor may say, 'Hey, how do you have time to have all those pretty girls on your boat? I don't.' But we try to be authentic."

Perhaps Klugman is so conscientious about this role because it grew out of a medical scare in his own life. During the mid-1970's Klugman discovered to his terror that he had cancer of the larynx and for a time thought he would have to have his voice box removed. Fortunately a friend, Dr. Max Som, was able to remove the growth without removing the voice box. Som's dedication impressed Klugman so much that he began to think about a medical series. Out of this came Dr. Quincy, based in part on Los Angeles County's controversial Medical Examiner, Thomas Noguchi, who thrust himself into the spotlight by his handling of such celebrity deaths as Marilyn Monroe, Robert Kennedy, Sharon Tate and, more recently, William Holden, Natalie Wood and John Belushi.

Oddly coupled with his slavish devotion to detail is the fact that Klugman doesn't really like television. It's true he established himself as one of TV's hardiest perennials back in the Golden Age of the 50's, when he made some 400 dramatic appearances. They led him to choice roles in such powerful films as Twelve Angry Men and Days of Wine and Roses. But his real love? "Theater," he says emphatically. "I want theater work now; I need to be refueled. You can't do any good acting on TV; there just isn't time to work. And time is one of the most important elements in any art form."

That's why Klugman regularly threatens to leave Quincy and television and get back on the boards. "At my age, what does success mean? You have to be successful for yourself. What do I need at 60? What do I want? I want to do what I want to do, and I'm entitled to do it. I want to be with my horses; I want to travel; I want to enjoy the rest of my life. And," he frankly adds, "I have enough money to do it."

Of course, television has provided most of the silver lining in his pockets; but his beloved ponies have also contributed their fair share. Any place Jack Klugman lives in is likely to look like Oscar Madison's, ruined bedroom of TV's Odd Couple lore, and that is because he exists in a morass of scripts and racing forms. They occupy just about all of his time now that his son Adam, 18, who had been living with Klugman in his Malibu condominium, has gone off to New York to study acting. Klugman's older son by ex-wife Brett Somers (she of Match Game fame), David, 23, is earning a master's degree at Johns Hopkins.

Klugman's horse sense is very real indeed, and his love of action deeply ingrained. "My sister, who raised me, was a degenerate horseplayer like me," he explains. (As a matter of fact, he once told a reporter that he got into acting because loan sharks were after him: Klugman, like Oscar, is not above pulling a leg now and again.) Back in 1960, it seems, Klugman was at the track one day, tapped out of funds, when he got to talking with another railbird who empathetically offered to lend him $50. His name was John Dominguez, and the Klugman-Dominguez stable now boasts 11 thoroughbreds. The most famous is Jaklin Klugman himself, the racehorse everyone thought was a filly when he was born. He was discovered to be a colt after architect Dominguez named him, and went on to become one of the fastest thoroughbreds anywhere. In 1980 Jaklin ran third in the Kentucky Derby while his ecstatic owner pounded the rail and cried, "Now it's in the record books forever!"

"People might not believe me when I say this colt has changed my whole life," Klugman once said, "but it's the absolute truth. Nothing has ever had such an impact on me. This horse has brought me immense joy and tranquility at a time when I needed such a thing and thought I would never find it."

Jaklin fetched a cool $5 million in stud syndication, and his owners are putting the money to sober use: They're building a horse farm in Temecula, Calif. Klugman's fond dream is to go to the Preakness and the Derby again. As he put it: "That was two years of thrills compressed into the greatest two minutes of my life."

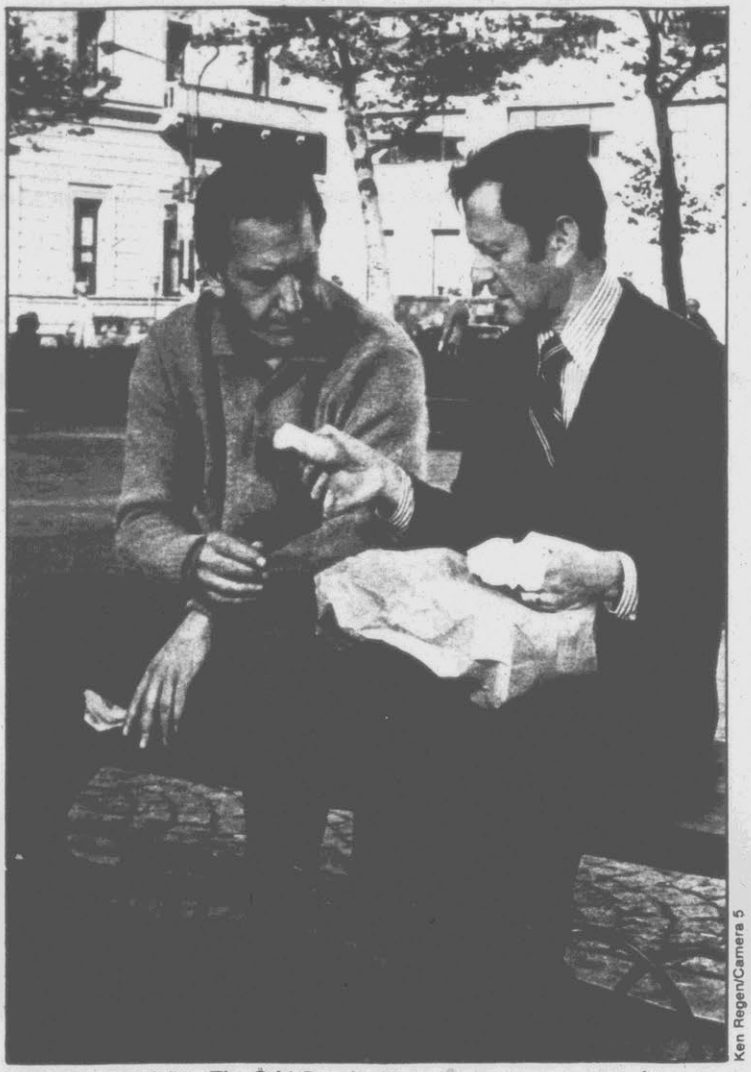

It is the lot of the gambler to try to win love and security out on the edge, against life's odds. Klugman's background is indeed the sort that produces horseplayers, dreamers — and actors. He grew up in the predominantly Italian neighborhood of South Philadelphia, the youngest of six children of Russian immigrant parents. By his own account, this milieu produced his raspy roar. "If you wanted to be heard, you had to talk like that," he recalls. "You had to be part actor, and that's what got me into the business. It's also," he adds, "why I cook the best pasta."

In his youth he worked as a bartender, a waiter, a housepainter. "I quit all those jobs because I wasn't good at them," he says. His sister the gambler also took him to the theater, however, and he got hooked fast. "I went to Carnegie Tech in an old jalopy on the G.I. Bill to get it out of my system," he recalls. "But the first time I got on stage I knew that's where I belonged because I was good at it. I'm a clumsy person in life, but not on stage. I'm socially inept in life, but not on stage. That was my place."

Klugman did 10 years of hard Broadway time in bit parts before he got his break in a road-company production of Mr. Roberts. He married actress Brett Somers in 1956 after she met him and said, "You're going to be my second husband." Soon his career began to climb as he distinguished himself in important roles in the theater and on television, where he won three Emmys.

Still, nothing will make one a household face quite like prime-time television. The Odd Couple was by all odds one of the funniest sitcoms ever, with Klugman's klutzy Oscar and Tony Randall's persnickety Felix struggling mightily to keep their friendship stronger than dirt. (Ironically, on the show, Somers played Oscar's estranged wife, Blanche; after 18 years of marriage, she and Klugman divorced in 1974 but are still very close.)

Klugman's ceaseless worrying over scripts and details comes from what his friend Randall describes as "chronic kvetching" — a Yiddish word that defines complaint as a mode of existence. Klugman admits he's a "heavy Russian type," and adds, "if I'm sitting and just thinking, someone will come up and say, 'Things can't be that bad.'"

With Tony Randall on The Odd Couple: Never a ratings success in its five years on the air, the show has found a new life in reruns.

NBC

Still, steady kvetching will sometimes win the race. In the post-Marcus Welby era, when doctor shows were pronounced legally dead, Klugman carefully fashioned Quincy into a formidable and significant dramatic series. His impact was such that Klugman was called as an "amateur expert" before a Congressional panel studying "orphan drugs" — drugs that are not profitable to produce because of the low incidence rate of the diseases they cure. Quincy had done an episode dealing with the matter, and Klugman made an impassioned plea to get these drugs on the market. Said Klugman: "How many cries before they get heard? We're not talking about orphan drugs. We're talking about orphan people."

His role as Dr. Quincy (the character has never been given a first name) has had it's lighter side, as well. Like Robert Young before him, Klugman is persistently asked for medical advice from strangers. He has a ready answer: "Look, I play a coroner — I can't help you until you're dead."

And what happens when Jack Klugman — actor, gambler, kvetcher nonpareil — passes on? "I'll flip a coin," he deadpans, "to decide whether it's burial or cremation." FW

LIVING

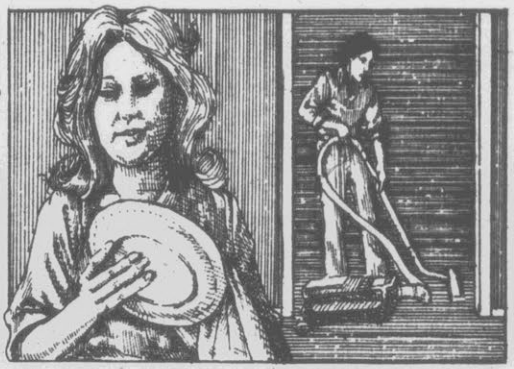

When You Both Work, Is There Time for Love?

By Terri Schultz

Recently, we spoke to a number of working wives, as well as several marriage experts, to find out what common problems turn up in dual-paycheck marriages and how they can be dealt with effectively.

"Not Tonight Dear, I'm Too Tired"

Work-related fatigue — especially when a wife begins a new or different job — is normal. And the first area to show signs of strain is a couple's love life. Sex may occur less often — at least temporarily. But it can sometimes be even more satisfying, especially if a woman's job makes her feel more fulfilled, more independent or more equal by allowing her to share the financial burden.

Doug Jamieson

Sometimes, improving a relationship takes work.

So if your love life languishes for a while, don't panic. "Sexual frequency only indicates persistence," points out Dr. Merle Kroop, director of education and training in the human sexuality program at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center. "I know couples who make love only once every two weeks and are quite happy."

If work saps your evening energy, talk to your husband about your feelings. Set aside some "together" time — whether it's for lovemaking or intimate conversation. And enjoy the pleasure of touching and holding one another some nights without the pressure of sex.

If fatigue persists, however, it might mask other problems. Sometimes, the solution is fairly obvious: Some women reduce or change their work hours; others seek part-time work or find a job closer to home. Since chronic fatigue can also be a sign that you feel angry or depressed in your job, a new employer might be the answer.

If you are in the sexual doldrums, it's up to you to take that first brave step and tell your husband — in a loving, not accusatory, way. The most important thing is to enlist his help — make him your ally, instead of your adversary.

"Whose Turn Is It To Do the Dishes?"

Some husbands of working wives do more than their share of the housework, and even the most reluctant men will often agree to do some of it. But the hard reality, according to a recent national survey, is that 86 percent of all married women who work still handle most of the cleaning, laundry, cooking and child care. Some women can cope with this; those who cannot have several options.

A direct request for a helping hand, made firmly and without anger, is usually the best way to begin.

First, be specific. Tell him you are having problems juggling domestic and job responsibilities. Tell him exactly what help you need. If necessary, prepare with him an outline of the way you spend your hours each day. Have him do the same. Then see if you can agree on an equitable arrangement for housework and child care during each of your free hours. Chances are he will be surprised at the length of your workweek; family time-allocation studies show the average workday of the working wife is 13 hours long; for the working husband, it is eight.

"Women should try to speak up," says Mildred Klingman, a New York psychotherapist who often counsels couples. "Often, a woman is afraid her husband will say, 'You can't handle it? Quit the job.' And if she feels she doesn't have any real right to work — if she feels guilty — then she is totally vulnerable. Unfortunately, many women still believe they don't have the right to demand more for themselves."

But while it's nice to have your way, be sure to consider your husband's needs, too. If his background, or job

Amy by Tasha Tudor

Inaugurating Tasha Tudor's first collection of porcelain sculptures. Individually crafted, hand-painted and issued in limited edition. Art of enchanting beauty, at the very attractive price of $75.

In today's world of fine book illustrators, there is one name that stands out among the rest—Tasha Tudor. An artist who, for almost fifty years, has been capturing the hearts of millions with art that is happy, innocent and filled with old-fashioned charm. With delicate use of colors and a wealth of detail, her illustrations create a magical world of make-believe with characters as loveable as they are unforgettable.

Now, to celebrate the 150th anniversary of author Louisa May Alcott's birth, Tasha Tudor has created her very first works in porcelain. A collection of limited edition "Little Women" sculptures that are sure to be of exceptional interest to collectors.

"Amy", portraying Louisa May Alcott's charming, blue-eyed beauty, inaugurates the collection. Crafted in fine, hand-painted porcelain, it is a thoroughly delightful work of art. And it will be issued at the very modest price of just $75—which may itself be paid in convenient monthly installments.

The figure that Tasha Tudor has designed is so vivid, so alive, it's as if "Amy" had invited you into the pages of "Little Women" to come pay a special visit. There she sits with dreamy eyes fixed on the sketchpad in her lap. From her cascading golden curls, to the ruffled pinafore she wears as an artist's smock—she's the very vision of loveliness. A captivating and compelling sculpture as charming and full of grace as Louisa May Alcott's young artist.

To ensure that every small detail of Tasha Tudor's art—every nuance of expression—is faithfully captured, each sculpture will be individually crafted by master porcelain artisans in Japan. Each sculpture will be hand-cast . . . hand-assembled . . . and hand-painted with uncompromising care.

In the tradition of classic works in fine porcelain, "Amy" will be issued in a single limited edition, reserved exclusively for those who order from the collection by November 29, 1982—the 150th anniversary of Louisa May Alcott's birth. When all valid orders from these individuals have been filled, the edition will be closed.

"Amy" will bring her own personality and charm to your home and any room in which you choose to display her. And in time to come, this engaging work of art is likely to become a treasured family heirloom, lovingly passed on from mother to daughter.

To acquire your own hand-painted fine porcelain sculpture of "Amy" by Tasha Tudor, it is important to act promptly. Please be sure to mail the accompanying advance reservation application by May 31, 1982.

pressures simply make it impossible for him to help, be prepared with other options. A housekeeper one day a week may diminish your paycheck, but salvage your happiness. Your children may be able to take on a greater share of small chores. Your mother, or his, may be willing to lend a hand. Or your husband might agree to do other nonhousework but time-consuming jobs, (like grocery shopping) that now eat away at your energy.

Whatever arrangement you make, be sure it does not breed resentment or regret. If your agreed division of labor does not feel comfortable for either of you, change it.

"My Husband Doesn't Want Me to Work"

A husband may appreciate the extra income when his wife works, yet resent the fact that he is no longer the only breadwinner. He may boast about you at parties, then complain privately that you're no longer home enough. Don't ignore the danger signals. If he seems angry, withdrawn or upset when you go off to the job market instead of the supermarket, talk to him about his feelings.

Tact and negotiation are usually the most effective antidotes if your husband is experiencing this type of discomfort.

When Martha C. returned to the work force as a nurse in a Madison, Wis. hospital, she overcame her husband's objections by reassuring him the money was "for little extras." Other women find that volunteer work or part-time work is easier for nervous husbands to digest.

And be aware that your husband may react with less than joy to any promotion or raise you might receive. Many husbands genuinely enjoy their wives' success. Some grin and bear it. But if yours is prejudiced against it, don't make light of his very real fears.

As Dr. Kroop points out: "It goes right back to first grade, when girls were told, 'Don't raise your hand so much — boys won't like you if you know all the answers.' That's why women are so often ambivalent about getting a job, or a promotion, or a raise," she explains. "They are afraid to threaten their husbands — and often wisely so."

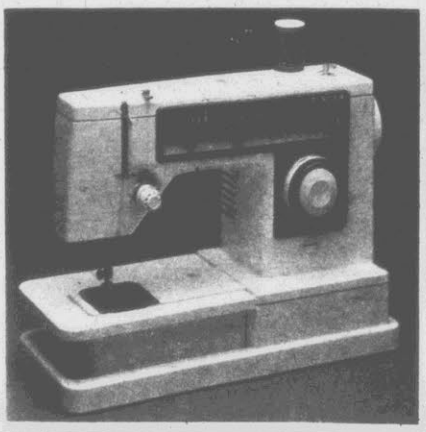

Sometimes, a frank discussion will unravel mixed emotions. A third party — a member of the clergy or a marriage counselor — can be a helpful intermediary. But the key, say the women we interviewed, is to avoid doing battle over a single issue.

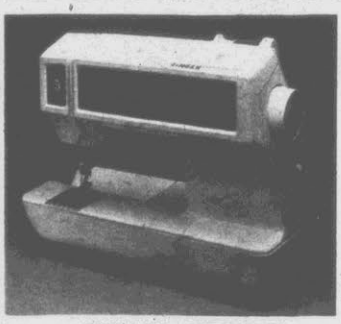

"My Job Saved My Marriage"

It is important to remember, however, that an outside job often can ease marriage strains as well as add to them. Everything from the way you communicate to your sex life, from finances to housework, can be changed for the better if handled with a little wisdom, flexibility, a sense of humor and a dash of self-esteem. "Now that I have a little independence, I don't think about our problems at home so much," says Mary K., who last year began working for a market-research firm, canvassing neighborhood women door-to-door about nail polish, breakfast foods and shampoo. "And now we get along better. We have more things to talk about." FW

GARDEN FRESH VEGETABLE MOLD

1 can (14½ oz.) ready-to-serve chicken broth
2 teaspoons lemon juice
1 can (12 oz.) cocktail vegetable juice
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
⅛ teaspoon hot pepper sauce
1 10-oz. pkg. (or 2½ cups fresh) asparagus spears, cooked and drained
2 cups sliced cauliflowerets, cooked and drained

1. In saucepan, sprinkle 1 envelope gelatin over chicken broth to soften. Place over low heat, stirring until gelatin is dissolved. Remove from heat; stir in 1 teaspoon lemon juice. Cool.

2. Meanwhile, in another saucepan, sprinkle remaining gelatin over cocktail vegetable juice to soften. Place over low heat, stirring until gelatin is dissolved. Remove from heat; stir in Worcestershire, hot pepper sauce and remaining lemon juice. Cool.

3. To make first layer, pour about ½ cup chicken broth mixture into 6-cup round mold. Chill until slightly thickened (about 5 minutes). Meanwhile, trim tips from asparagus to fit mold. Arrange asparagus tips spokes-fashion on gelatin. Spoon about ½ cup chicken broth mixture over asparagus. Chill until slightly firm (about 5 minutes).

4. To make second layer, combine remaining broth mixture and cauliflowerets. Chill until slightly thickened. Spoon over asparagus layer. Chill until slightly firm (about 5 minutes).

5. To make third layer, chop remaining asparagus; stir into vegetable juice mixture. Chill until slightly thickened. Spoon over cauliflower layer. Chill until firm, several hours or overnight.

6. Unmold just before serving. Garnish with radish slices and green onion fans if desired.

Angie Dickinson says: "Now's the perfect time to buy California Avocados."°

A perfect touch! Add avocado crescents to burgers and B.L.T.'s. Slice avocados into salads or serve them along with scrambled eggs or entrees. Avocados make it special!

A perfect way to maintain your figure. The smooth, rich taste of avocados helps satisfy your appetite. Yet, for only 138 calories in a 4 oz. average half shell, you get vitamins A, C, B1 plus potassium and iron. And avocados have no cholesterol.

A perfect party giver. California Avocado guacamole dip is so easy to make, you almost feel guilty. Just lightly mash the avocados, add a squeeze of lemon and your own favorite seasoning.

A perfect love potion? From the days of the Aztecs, avocados have been considered to be an aphrodisiac. It could be only gossip.

Would this body lie to you?

AMERICAN EAGLE

COMMEMORATIVE BELT BUCKLE

Layered with SOLID SILVER or PURE 24-KARAT GOLD

STRICTLY LIMITED EDITION

THE AMERICAN EAGLE, stirring symbol of our great nation's eternal vigilance in defense of freedom, was adopted for the Great Seal of the United States by the Continental Congress on June 20, 1782. Now—200 years later—the eagle continues to soar free and unfettered over the greatest bastion of freedom the world has ever known.

To commemorate the 200th anniversary of this proud symbol of our country, The International Monetary Mint master engravers and minters have struck a special high-relief, limited-edition collector's buckle. It is available in two versions: layered in pure silver or pure 24-karat gold. It will be offered only during the commemorative year, after which time the dies will be permanently destroyed.

Each buckle will be individually numbered and each original owner will be permanently registered in the Official Archives of the Mint. Your buckle will be sent to you in a specially-designed Collector's Presentation Case, and protected by our unusual Unlimited Money-back Guarantee. The American Eagle Commemorative Buckle will be worn proudly by every patriotic American fortunate enough to possess one, and will be passed on as a proud heirloom to generations to come.

NOTE: These buckles will be minted in a strictly limited edition. Lowest Registry Numbers will be assigned to the first orders received; to assure that you receive a coveted low Registry Number, prompt action is strongly urged (limit 5).

International Monetary Mint is an independent agency not affiliated with the U.S. Mint or any government agency.

Boxer-Poet Ray Mancini Lowers the Boom Boom For His Dad

By Barry Wilner

In 1941, Lenny (Boom Boom) Mancini was a top contender for the lightweight title. He was a relentless, buzz saw of a boxer. As one writer put it then, "With Boom Boom, you wound him up and he couldn't stop punching."

That year, he lost a controversial split decision to champion Sammy Angott. The next year, Lenny was ready to sign for a rematch with Angott when he was drafted into the Army.

Lenny never got another shot at the title. In 1944 in Metz, France, he was hit by mortar shrapnel — six pieces in all — which tore through his arm, back and leg. The doctors could remove only four of the fragments. Though he returned to the ring two years later as a middleweight, Lenny had lost all of his fighting skills.

Today, the scars of age, boxing and war remain. Lenny, 62, is partly blind in one eye, walks with a limp and has frequent memory lapses. But Lenny has an opportunity few men do: His son has chosen to pick up his father's life and fulfill its promise.

Ray (Boom Boom) Mancini is a 21-year-old lightweight boxer from Youngstown, Ohio. He gets his second shot at the world title on Saturday, May 8 in a televised bout from Las Vegas against World Boxing Association champ Arturo Frias. A superb all-round athlete, Mancini probably would have received college scholarship offers as a defensive back in football, point guard in basketball and outfielder in baseball. But Mancini chose the ring.

His reason was simple. "My father never got the shot at the title he deserved and I wanted to do it for him," explains Mancini, who lost his first title bout in October to formidable World Boxing Council champion Alexis Arguello. "My father paid his dues and now he's getting a chance for some publicity. Everywhere he goes now, he's a celebrity. When I win the title, it will be for him as much as for myself. We like to say that after I win a title, there'll be two champs in the family."

As a boy, Ray would listen to his father's tales of boxing glory. He went through Lenny's scrapbook so often, he memorized every detail of Lenny's career. Then, as a teen-ager he began training, wearing his father's old trunks and shoes. Ray turned pro at age 18 and has risen steadily, under the tutelage of veteran trainer Murphy Griffith (uncle of five-time champ Emile Griffith) and manager Dave Wolf, a former sportswriter (Foul) who handled Too Tall Jones in his embarrassing one-year hiatus from football.

Now, with a 21-1 record and 17 knockouts, Ray is a hero in Youngstown, a blue-collar city with little else to cheer about in these recessionary times.

But one person from Youngstown wasn't exactly thrilled when Ray decided to become a boxer. That dissenter was Ray's father, the man they call "the uncrowned champ" around Youngstown. "My father told me there was nothing special about boxing," says Ray. "He said it's tough and lonely and that I was talented enough to do other things. He has a favorite saying: 'One day headlines, the next day breadlines.'"

John Iacono/Sports Illustrated

If Ray does pull it off it will be in the same nonstop, relentless style of his father. A natural left-hander who was switched to the right side because southpaws have trouble getting fights, Mancini's left hook to the body is his best punch — and it's a devastating one.

And the 5-foot 6-inch, 135-pound Ray isn't one to lay back and wait for the right opportunity. He just keeps flailing away. It has been estimated that he throws as many as 100 punches a round. "If you don't throw punches, you don't win," he explains with impeccable logic.

In order to continue his attacking style, Mancini has found a unique way to train. He spends nearly an hour neck-deep in a swimming pool, throwing punches.

Lenny marvels at the training regimen Ray goes through. "I never had the kind of preparation he has for his fights," says Dad. "Watching Ray get in shape would hurt anybody."

"My father always talked to me about having more heart than anybody else," says Ray. "He always did. No matter how hard he was hit, he kept coming at you. ["I never took a step backward," Lenny is fond of saying. "But sometimes I wish I did."]

"The inspiration he gives me is something special. I look over from the ring and see the look on his face — though I don't make a habit of it. And I wink at him to let him know I'm in control."

Mancini has no doubt he'll beat Frias. He even thinks he should have taken Arguello, who is considered by many to be the best fighter in the world and has held three different weight-class crowns.

"I learned a tremendous amount about myself as a fighter," says Ray, who was knocked out by Arguello in the 14th round of a vicious fight, a fight Ray says he was winning until the 12th round. "I know that even when I'm hurt, I don't lose my composure and faith. That means a lot to you when you get back in the ring."

Away from the ring, Ray goes in for more sensitive pursuits. He especially likes writing poetry. "When things move me, I like to write about them," he explains. "I don't plan it but when they happen . . . It's just a gift I'm blessed with."

When he was 13, Ray wrote a poem for his father, entitled I Walk in Your Shadow. One of the verses reads:

I try every task that this man tries,
I keep every memory that this man keeps,
I leap every mountain that this man leaps.

POLL RESULTS

Readers Speak Out On Timely Issues . . . . They're Worried

If the Presidential election were held tomorrow, more than half of those surveyed in FAMILY WEEKLY's latest poll would vote against President Reagan.

A mood of pessimism about the present Administration and the nation's economy pervades the responses to our March 14 "Timely Issues" questionnaire. Our readers seem skeptical about the President's handling of a wide range of issues: foreign policy, defense, the environment, employment opportunities, the cost of living. They appear less worried about their daily lives — marriage, children, the work they do.

The Administration

- 41.6% would vote to reelect the President, 57.8% would not (including 11.1% who say they would choose another Republican).
- Vice President George Bush and Sen. Howard Baker are first among other Republicans, with 32.5% and 25.9% of the reader vote respectively.
- The Democrats named "most qualified to challenge President Reagan" are Sen. Edward Kennedy (22.1%), Walter Mondale (21.1%) and Sen. John Glenn (16.1%).
- Of all the First Ladies of the past 50 years, the one most admired was Eleanor Roosevelt with 35.9%. Nancy Reagan was fourth with 10.4%. Bess Truman was second with 11.6%, followed by Betty Ford with 10.8%. Rosalynn Carter was fifth with 9.5%.

More respondents identify themselves as Democrats than Republicans (43.9% vs. 33.7%), but 52.7% of our readers prefer a Republican as President. The G.O.P. seems to get the nod of those who cite affiliation with a third party or with no party.

However, our readers feel differently about their Congressmen: 50% want the Democratic Party to win in their district come the next election, 42.9% the G.O.P. and 4.9% a third party.

Readers cast thumbs down on the President's foreign policy (57.8% disapprove of the way he's handling foreign affairs) and his proposed defense budget (a 56% vote of disapproval).

Sex		Age		Political Affiliation (Registered Voter)
Male	48%	Under 18	0.6%	Democrat	43.9%
Female	52%	18-34	15.7%	Republican	33.7%
Marital Status		35-49	26.7%	Other	8.4%
Married	62%	50-64	37.4%	None	6.3%
Single	20.9%	65 and over	19.6%	No Answer	7.7%
Other/No Answer	17.1%

More than 71,000 answered questionnaires were received by FAMILY WEEKLY by the time the Scarborough Research Corporation started to tabulate the replies. A representative, weighted cross section of ballots from all sections of the nation was used as the base.

Wide World

Report card on Reagan: 57.8% say they'd vote against him in an election if held now.

The Economy

A few interesting paradoxes emerge in our readers' responses to economic questions. Although 53.2% support the President's personal tax-cut program and 53.8% approve of the cuts in the Federal budget, readers seem quite skeptical about how well Reaganomics is actually working.

More than 40% say they are worse off financially now than they were when Reagan was elected President. Another 40% say they are about the same. Only 19% say they are better off now.

Respondents don't seem any more optimistic about the future: 28.2% say they'll be better off a year from now, but most say they'll either be worse off financially (41.2%) or about the same (29.2%).

What's more, 46.3% of our readers

Is your car better protected than your child?

Today almost everyone has car insurance. Because through the years, people have come to accept it...to realize how important insurance protection can be. Insurance is a way of guarding against disaster...as well as a means of planning for the future.

Shouldn't you give your children this same important protection...with a special life insurance policy from Globe Life And Accident Insurance Company? It's developed exclusively for young people.

It's Globe's Young American Plan. It insures children as young as 6 weeks, for a full $10,000. The introductory period costs $1*! After that, the coverage—a full $10,000—costs $40 per year. That's about 77¢ a week...less than you pay for the newspapers.

After age 27, your child can use the cash value of the policy as collateral for a loan (while keeping the insurance in force) or obtain the accumulated cash value. What an advantage for a young person who's moving to another city...beginning a new career...thinking of graduate school...or starting a family! It is truly a gift for life.

Take this opportunity to find out more about a Young American Plan policy for your child. We'll send all the information you need—with easy-to-complete applications—directly to you by return mail. There's no obligation, of course.

In 1981, A.M. Best Company—independent analysts of the insurance industry since 1899—rated Globe as "A" (excellent).

say unemployment is the nation's most serious problem and 59.6% say they disapprove of the President's handling of the issue. (In our May 1980 poll, 69.6% of respondents said they believed the Carter Administration was creating enough benefits for the unemployed.)

The second most serious problem is inflation, cited by 27.4%. (In the 1980 poll 60.3% named inflation as the nation's biggest problem.)

But 52.5% of this year's respondents cite the cost of living as their own most serious problem, followed by job security at 13.9%.

Crime (with 16%) ranks third among our national problems.

On a more optimistic note, our readers have noticed an easing in the energy crisis. Whereas in 1980 energy was called the nation's second most serious problem, garnering 23.6% of the vote, the readers now place it low on the list with only 5.4%.

Our Lives Now

Respondents seem to feel fairly secure about the institutions of marriage and the family; 84.7% of those who are parents say that if they could live their lives over they would again choose to have children. (The median number of children they'd have is 2.2.)

UPI

46.3% believe that unemployment is our biggest problem.

And when it comes to citing their most serious personal problem, children, marital relationships and work satisfaction come last. This is one area, it appears, that has not changed since our 1980 poll when 59.7% of readers felt that marriage would not diminish in importance in the future.

One final question that received overwhelming support: 92.7% said terminally ill patients should have the right to request that their treatment be stopped.

In general, then, it seems our readers have serious doubts about the performance of the Reagan Administration thus far in many areas, both foreign and domestic. And their disenchantment could have a major effect on the Congressional elections this November — and on the next Presidential race. FW

How do our conclusions compare to other national opinion polls conducted around the same time? The following figures appeared in the February 8 issue of Newsweek, a survey by Louis Harris taken between March 12 and March 16 and The New York Times on March 19. IN GUARDED VAULTS! 5,000 ORIGINAL, U.S. GOV'T. MORGAN SILVER DOLLARS that escaped Gov't. meltdown!

Rare Surviving Hoard of Original U.S. Gov't. Coins To Be Released To U.S. Citizens For Only $30 Each ...Acceptance Deadline: June 13

Tonight at midnight, history will be made when the National Monetary Center opens its vaults and releases to the public some of the last surviving ORIGINAL, U.S. GOV'T. MINTED MORGAN SILVER DOLLARS IN EXISTENCE IN ALL THE WORLD. Yes, a valuable hoard of 5,000 Morgan Silver Dollars . . . that escaped Gov't. meltdown over a half a century ago . . . and have become one of the rarest coins on the face of the earth.

THE DAY THE SILVER DOLLAR ARMY MARCHED OFF TO WAR!

You see, in World War I, due to severe silver shortages, the U.S. Gov't. drafted from circulation and melted down some 270 million Morgan Silver Dollars. In one single action—"Operation Meltdown"—the Morgan suddenly became one of the rarest coins ever minted. Which is why the release of this hoard of 5,000 original U.S. Gov't. Morgans is such a significant event in the world of valuable coins.

FOR THE RELEASE TO INDIVIDUAL CITIZENS ONLY— FOREIGN AND DEALER ORDERS WILL NOT BE HONORED!

Most significant, each of these original Morgan Silver Dollars, is guaranteed to "contain 412.5 grains of ninety per cent fine silver," to measure 38.1 mm in diameter with weight of 26.73 grams and will be accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity to this effect for your own insurance purposes.

PRICE GUARANTEED FOR THIS SPECIAL RELEASE ONLY! SUPPLY GUARANTEED FOR ONLY AS LONG AS THEY LAST!

Due to limitations of our available supply, and the acute scarcity of original U.S. Gov't. Morgan Silver Dollars still in good condition, we can only guarantee this initial offering price of $30 per coin plus $2 postage, handling and insurance per coin for this special release only.

In addition we must set a strict limit on no more than twenty (20) original Morgan Silver Dollars per order, AND SINCE THIS OFFER IS BEING MADE AVAILABLE TO PRIVATE U.S. CITIZENS ONLY, NO ORDERS FROM DEALERS OR INDIVIDUALS FROM OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES WILL BE ACCEPTED and uncashed checks will be returned.

But once again . . . this is a STRICT LIMITED OFFERING TO U.S. CITIZENS ONLY. All orders will be filled on a first-come, first-serve basis; and of course your purchase price refunded in full, anytime within 14 days if not completely satisfied. SPECIAL COLLECTOR'S DISCOUNTS: 3 COINS for $75 plus $5 postage, handling & insurance; 5 coins for $120 plus $5 postage, handling & insurance; 10 coins for $225 plus $5 postage, handling & insurance; 20 coins for $425 plus $5 for postage, handling & insurance. WHAT IN THE WORLD

SNORE CURE: PIECE OF (MARBLE) CAKE

If your companion's snoring is keeping you up, the solution may be as simple as aggies, cat's eyes or Boston blackies.

Herman/FPG

In March a van full of teen-agers, returning from a party, stopped at a railroad crossing in Mineola, N.Y. The warning gate was down, but the driver tried to speed around it. A train, going 65 miles an hour, smashed the van broadside. Nine of 10 passengers — friends since childhood — died instantly.

Every year, nearly 1,000 Americans are killed when their cars are hit by trains at grade crossings. Why do people take the risk?

According to Penn State psychologist Herschel Leibowitz, these drivers are "rational people with full use of their senses." But their perceptions may deceive them. As he explained recently in Psychology Today, warning signals are designed for "the fastest train, the slowest driver and the worst weather." Thus, most people who take the risk make it. But Leibowitz points out that larger objects appear to move more slowly than smaller ones. In addition, crossing signs frequently remain in place along abandoned tracks, encouraging people to ignore them completely.

NOBODY'S KID SISTER

There are two things you first notice when you meet Stella Parton, Dolly's younger sister. Her eyes. They're huge, brown and beautiful.

The sixth of 12 Parton kids, the reed-slim Stella has been a country singer for 13 years. In New York recently, Stella, 33 this Tuesday, admitted, "Being Dolly's sister has been a big pain in the butt. I've always been taken less seriously." (There's also buxom baby sister Rachel Dennison, now recreating Dolly's original role in the TV spinoff of 9 to 5.)

Stella's new album (her fifth), So Far, So Good, shows her wide range: country, pop, rock, gospel, folk and rhythm and blues. The days of being pigeonholed into one style of music are finally disappearing, she notes, "as long as you can pull it off." (Her early ballad, "Ode to Olivia," was a spirited defense of Olivia Newton John, then spurned by country music's elite.)

Twice divorced, Parton raised son Tim, 13, mainly on the road. Asked if she'd like to settle down one day, she laughs, "Heck, no. I love life on the road [up to 200 days a year]. I want to be riding around on the bus giving concerts into my 80's. If Ella Fitzgerald can do it, so can I."

GIVING BIRTH IN A CHAIR

An ancient method of giving birth is now coming of age in the U.S. Lying down to give birth didn't come into fashion until the 18th century. Before that, a squatting or sitting position was used. And now women at 300 hospitals around the country can have their babies delivered from a modern version of the birthing chair.

Available here since late 1979, the molded plastic chair, set on a pedestal, has a motor to raise, lower and tilt the seat. The sitting position obviously takes advantage of gravity and, notes Dr. Lynn Lowe, a Providence, R.I. obstetrician who has used the chair in several births, "Women find it easier and more comfortable to push from a sitting position. They can use their arms more."

Century Manufacturing Co.

Birthing chair: Idea reborn.

Evidence also seems to indicate that the sitting position cuts the second stage of labor — perhaps by half.

Lowe doesn't recommend the chair for sedated women ("They could fall out") but adds, "as more women choose natural childbirth, this method will be even more popular."

CINEMATIC DEJA VU

Ah, Hollywood, land of imagination and courage. Just listen to the original movie ideas coming this year: Grease 2, Friday the 13th Part 3, Star Trek: Vengeance of Khan, Airplane 2002, The Sting II (with Mac Davis and Jackie Gleason as Paul Newman/Robert Redford), The Black Stallion Returns, Rocky III, Death Wish II, Amityville Horror II and Halloween III. And don't forget remakes of Cat People, The Thing, I, the Jury, Victor/Victoria and The Babe Ruth Story, starring Joe Don Baker as the Sultan of Swat.

Really now, can Star Wars XVIII be far behind?

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: PRINCE VALIANT HAS MORE WOES THAN FINGERS AND TOES, BUT THE VISIT TO NIMROD'S ISLAND HAS REKINDLED SOME HOPE. THE POWERFUL CRYSTAL IN THE DOME CONCENTRATES THE RAYS OF THE SUN. VAL ORDERS IT REMOVED AND BROUGHT TO THE PALACE.

THERE, CRAFTSMEN PLACE IT IN A NEW SETTING. "WE WILL NEED THE SUN BEHIND US," VAL TELLS GAWAIN.

BELISARIUS HAS RECONQUERED AFRICA AND ITALY FOR JUSTINIAN. NOT SINCE CAESAR HAS THE WORLD SEEN HIS LIKE. NOW HIS FLEET ENCIRCLES THE MISTY ISLES AND EASILY TAKES THE OUTER ISLANDS. RESISTANCE IS FUTILE.

SVEN FORK-BEARD HAS KEPT WATCH FROM AFAR ABOARD HIS SWIFT TRIREME. "TWENTY SHIPS," HE TELLS THE WAR COUNCIL. "DAY AWAY." PRINCE VALIANT FEELS NO EXHILARATION. HE PAUSES SADLY BY ALETA'S DOORWAY, BUT THE QUEEN SEES NOTHING. VAL WILL HAVE HIS VENGEANCE.

DAWN FLIRTS WITH THE SEA AS JUSTINIAN'S FLEET ARRAYS ITSELF OUTSIDE THE HARBOR. THE BRAVE LITTLE NAVY OF THE MISTY ISLES BARS THE WAY. PARTING THE WAVES LIE THE TREACHEROUS "THREE GRACES", AND THERE LURKS PRINCE VALIANT WITH NIMROD'S GLASS. IF THERE WERE ANY SUN IT WOULD BE BEHIND HIM, BUT THE MISTY ISLES WERE APTLY NAMED.
