More Ships, Planes, Men To Falkland Islands

By United Press International

Britain rushed more planes, ships and troops to the South Atlantic Saturday and Argentina said it expected a British attack on its mainland airbases and an invasion of the Falkland Islands themselves at any moment.

Both sides appeared to be moving inexorably toward all-out war despite peace efforts at the United Nations, where British and Argentine envoys met separately for the second day with U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

With speculation, hints and other signs all pointing to the possibility of a major British military action as early as Monday, Perez de Cuellar was asked by a reporter if Saturday was a "make-or-break day" in his effort to negotiate a cease-fire. "That is so," he replied.

But Perez de Cuellar disagreed with Argentine statements that the extension of Britain's air and sea blockade of the Falklands to within 12 miles of the Argentine coast was a "bad" blow to the peace efforts.

What "is important for me that hostilities don't take place," he said. "I hope that today we will have real progress or at least we will know whether there are reasons for hope...

"The simple fact that they are up there," he said, pointing up to his 38th floor office, "is an expression of interest for a peaceful solution."

Breaking through the circle of reporters, the Peruvian secretary general ducked into an elevator and went up to his office for meetings with Argentine Deputy Foreign Minister Enrique Ros and British Ambassador Sir Anthony Parsons to continue the talks that so far have failed to break the key stalemate over sovereignty of the Falkland Islands.

Parsons said later the negotiations were "moving" but that it was "too early" to predict their outcome. "We are sparing no effort in the search for a peaceful solution, nor is the secretary general," he said.

If peace efforts snaked along at a slow pace, military preparations were quickly moving the two sides closer to another round of war over the former British colony invaded by Argentina April 2.

Refueling in mid-air and flying through the night, 20 Harrier fighter-bombers arrived on Ascension Island en route to the British task force to double Britain's air power in the South Atlantic.

More British Royal Marines were scheduled to arrive Monday and there was mounting speculation that an invasion of the Falklands might occur then.

The Times of London reported British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher had received a go-ahead from her cabinet to order bombing strikes against air bases on the Argentine mainland — a possibility that Foreign Secretary Francis Pym said was being considered.

Record Number Receive Degrees On Saturday

By JERRY RAYNOR

A total of 3,044 East Carolina University students, including 36 from the ECU School of Medicine, received undergradute and graduate degrees at the 73rd commencement ceremony held in Ficklen Stadium Saturday morning. William Overman, president of the senior class, accepted a token diploma on behalf of all graduates except those of the School of Medicene, who came on stage to receive their diplomas from Dr. William E. Laupus, Vice Chancellor and Dean of the School of Medicine.

Keynote speaker Dr. Alan W. Ostar, president of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, was introduced by Dr. John M. Howell, acting chancellor of ECU.

In his address, Ostar told the graduates that "We must have the opportunity to discover what we can do: to find our own limits and to push our potential as far as we want to. We must not have that opportunity cut-off by socio-economic factors beyond our control."

A significant portion of Ostar's address took the Reagan administration to task for its proposals to significantly cut federal support for education.

"Under President Reagan," Ostar said, "we have witnessed in the last few months proposals that would result in a substantial reduction of support to higher education in this country."

Ostar cited educational incentives offered by the prior administrations of Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford and Carter, all of whom "regarded higher education as a corner stone in our country's development and progress." The progress made under these former presidents, Ostar avers, will be seriously set back if Congress approves Reagan's proposals.

"The Reagan budget will fall hardest on blacks, minorities and other low-income groups. . . because of the massive proposed reductions in student aid, tens of thousands of students simply will not be able to go to school this fall."

Ostar termed as ironic the administration's proposal to cut money to education while providing tax incentives to industry and strenghtening the military. "An irony of the reduction in higher education spending is that while institutions are being forced to retrench and/or raise tutition and students are having to drop out, President Reagan is providing a variety of tax incentives to industry to help modernize plants and is proposing to spend billions of dollars to increase the sophistication of our military."

Saying that "education is not a luxury," Ostar added "I find it difficult to believe that people in this country oppose developing the minds of our young people to the fullest extent

Plane Crashes Into Home Killing Three In Burbank

By DEBORAH BELGUM
Associated Press Writer

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — A twin-engine airplane crashed into a back yard garage and exploded Saturday, tearing out the back of a house and killing three people, officials said.

Two charred bodies — those of a man and a woman — were found beside the framework of the six-seat Piper Aerostar and apparently were occupants of the plane, the Burbank Fire Department said in a prepared statement.

The body of a "small-statured female" was found by firefighters in the rubble of the garage, said Burbank Fire Capt. Richard Fischer. That victim was believed to be an elderly woman who had been sleeping in the garage.

Fischer said, "The FAA (Federal Aviation Administration) says the pilot was a female ..."

The victims' identities were not released immediately.

Officials said the plane apparently crashed into the garage and blew up.

William Wong, 25, a student at California State University, Los Angeles, who lived in the house with his mother, said he had been sleeping in a bedroom near the front of the house and was awakened by the sound of a plane.

"The first time it flew by it woke me up," he said. "The second time I heard it crash. I went to investigate and the whole back part of the house was opened up."

He said the plane then burst into flames and exploded as he helped his mother get out of the house.

Wong said his grandmother, Tsui-Nge Chan, had been sleeping in the gargage. Mrs. Chan, who was about 80, had come to the United States from the People's Republic of China at the beginning of the year, he said.

The crash occurred around 6:18 a.m., moments after the plane took off into overcast skies from Hollywood-Burbank Airport, 1½ miles away, according to Sam Jones, airport community relations manager.

The plane was registered to an individual, not a company, Jones said, adding that "there was no indication of any distress call."

It had not been determined whether the pilot had filed a flight plan, he said.

A tape-recorded announcement at the fire department said the fire was controlled at 6:41 a.m. The house was located on North Avon Street, near the old Burbank Ranch movie studio.

Fischer said the garage behind the house was flattened, with only the charred frame of a large car sticking out from the debris. Officials said the plane was worth $140,000 and estimated the property damage at $150,000.

Fewer Students Hurts Funding

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners allocates more money — money raised by taxing county property owners — for public school education than for any other function of government.

For fiscal 1981-82, the total county budget for such functions as administration, social services, health, law enforcement, solid waste disposal, data processing, mental health, building inspections, planning and education amounts to $27.5 million. Some $7.05 million of that total was appropriated for the Pitt County and Greenville school systems.

County appropriations for the schools are distributed on the basis of state-certified average daily membership figures. Those same attendance figures are used by the state to allocate teaching positions, administrative costs, janitorial service, transportation and other funds to the school systems.

And that's a major problem facing both the school systems now, although the problem for the Greenville system is greater — a steady drop over the past 10 years in student population.

For the 1971-72 school year, the average daily membership (ADM) of the county system on which the allocations were based was 12,216, while the city ADM was 6,159 for a 66.48 percent county, 33.52 percent city split. That year, the city system received $381,300 in countywide appropriations for current expense, while the county schools received $1.16 million. (The city received another $242,300 from a special district tax levy and the county an additional $200,300 from district taxes, which have since been abolished in favor of one countywide levy.)

Five years ago, for the 1976-77 school year, the county ADM had dropped to 10,851 students and the city ADM had declined to 5,249 — a 67.4-32.6 percent ratio. That year, the city schools received $1.36 million in county current expense funds, while the Pitt system received $3.01 million.

For the current fiscal year, 1981-82, the ADM on which appropriations were based was 11,396 for the county and 4,893 for the city — a 69.961-30.039 percent division. And the county schools received $4.5 million while the city system got $1.98 million in county current expense funds.

The average daily membership on which allocations will be made for the 1982-83 fiscal year, which begins July 1, will be 11,350 for the county and 4,806 for the city — a 70.253-29.747 percent division of funds.

Historically, when the amount of state support for the schools has dropped — because of the declining enrollment — the Board of County Commissioners has been asked to fund at least some of the lost teaching positions and other expenses.

For the coming year, the city school board has approved a budget to be submitted to the commissioners which includes $2.4 million in local current expense funds. The county board of education will ask for $6.59 million in current expense money from the county.

Robert Stewart, veteran assistant superintendent of the Greenville schools, explained the problem. "It's a matter of the more students you have, the more teachers we're allotted by the state. The fewer students we have, the fewer teachers." However, he emphasized that the cost of operating a school system does not decrease proportionately to the number of students.

"As a rule of thumb, a drop of 30 students equals one teaching position" the state will not fund, "a loss of $12,000 ... $13,000 ... $14,000 in state support.

"All school systems put the highest paid teachers on the state payroll," and leave the ones with the smaller salaries to be paid by the county. The state, he explained, "allocates so many positions, not dollars."

Why the drop in student population in the city system?

"People are moving out of the (city school) district" and into the county district, Stewart suggested as one reason. Another, "the birth rate is down" which results in fewer school-age children.

"As long as the city school district line remains fixed," Stewart said, there is little hope of increasing the number of available students. "I don't see any immediate increase."

The only hope, Stewart suggested, are "national projections" that "say that we're going to get some increase (in the number of school-age children) in the mid-80s. But I don't know."

In addition to the current operating money, both boards are requesting capital outlay funds — $3.15 million for the county and $541,210 for the city.

National Conciliation Is Power Broker Party

By SAM DILLON
Associated Press Writer

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The National Conciliation Party, whose pro-military conservative leaders ruled El Salvador from 1961 to 1979, has emerged as the power broker in the new Constituent Assembly. It wields far more influence than its third-place finish in the March 28 election might indicate.

The party, widely blamed for ills that bred the Salvadoran civil war, has moderated its image since being ousted in a 1979 coup by reform-minded army officers. Its comeback has been at the expense of both the centrist Christian Democrats, who dominated the civilian-military junta that ruled until a week ago, and the ultra-rightist Republican Nationalist Alliance.

With no party possessing a majority, National Conciliation leaders maneuvered skillfully in six weeks of closed-door dealing to form the coalition government that was approved by the 60-seat assembly last Tuesday.

"For us it was better to have 14 (assembly seats) than 24 or 19, because today the other parties are depending on our 14," Rigoberto Cornejo, the National Conciliation organizational secretary, told The Associated Press in an interview.

National Conciliation's evolution and recent grasp for power have been watched with interest by the Reagan administration, which believes the party's leaders will continue land redistribution and other reforms started by the junta to undercut support for leftist guerrillas. Congress has made the reforms a condition for continued U.S. aid to the Salvadoran armed forces.

"In El Salvador, the PCN really is a political center — though they still are very conservative — and some members have a progressive attitude," a U.S. official here said.

National Conciliation, known here by its Spanish acronym PCN, won only 14 seats in the new assembly, compared to the Christian Democrats' 24 and the Republican Nationalists' 19.

But PCN assembly deputies turned their minority status into an advantage by siding with the Republican Nationalists to elect that party's leader, right-wing firebrand Roberto d'Aubuisson, assembly speaker. Then they joined the Christian Democrats to oppose d'Aubuisson's candidate for interim president and elect a moderate independent, Alvaro Magana.

In exchange, National Conciliation got three of the 14 Cabinet posts, including that of presidential minister, the Salvadoran equivalent of White House chief of staff.

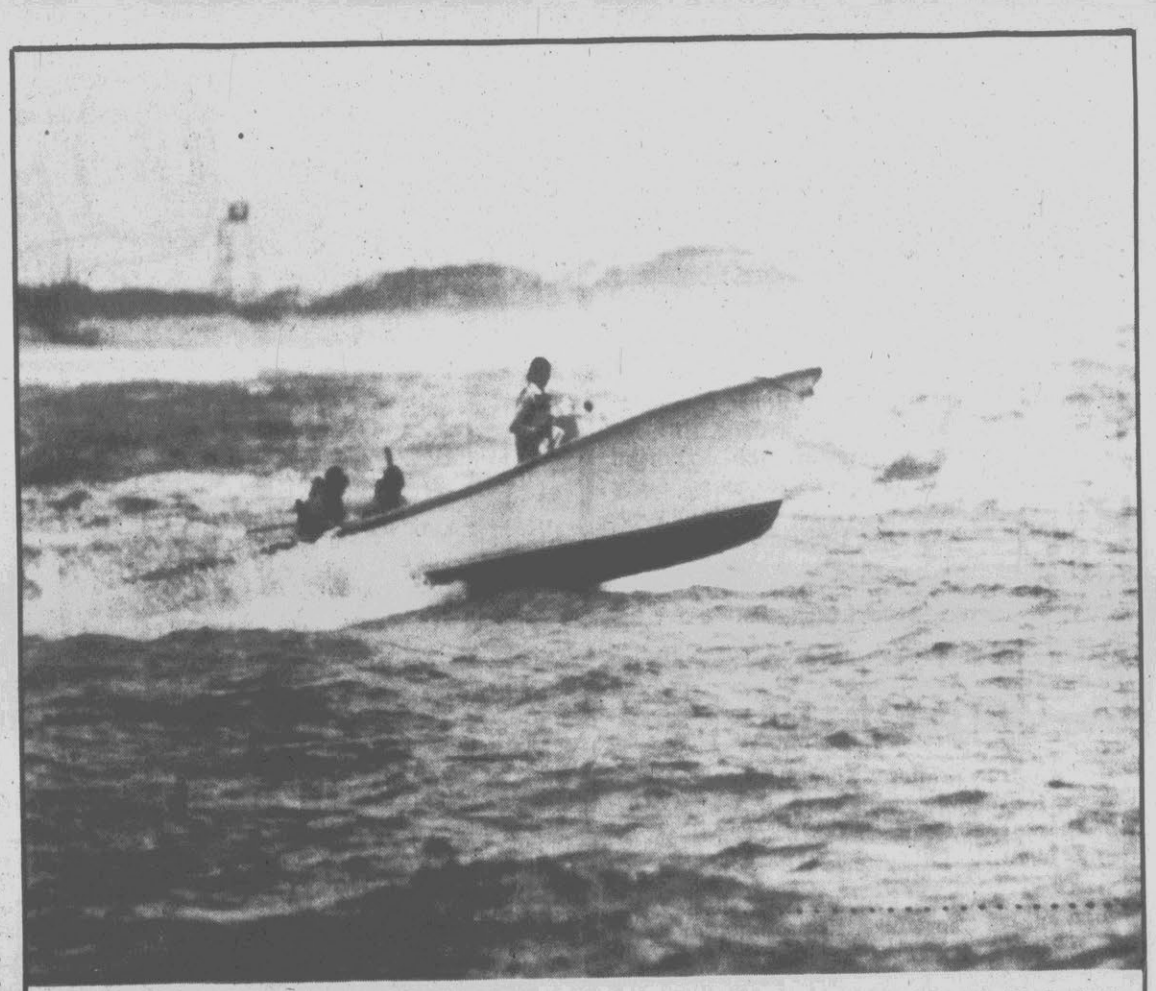

Because of a squabble between Christian Democrat and Republican Nationalist deputies, National Conciliation also won the most powerful of three vice presidencies.

Although Magana has no party affiliation, he has close personal ties with National Conciliation leaders. He was president of the Salvadoran Mortgage Bank during four successive PCN regimes.

Other National Conciliation men were named justice minister and public works minister. Four ministries went to the Republican Nationalists, three to the Christian Democrats and three to independents. Army Gen. Jose Guillermo Garcia remained as defense minister.

possible. . . We cannot afford to stop investing in our people; We cannot afford to lose those extraordinary possibilities to be discovered in the potential of ordinary people."

Ostar called on his audience to "help keep East Carolina University a strong university. . . As alumni and as taxpayers, it is in your best interest to support East Carolina University, insuring that it stays at the forefront of educational change that is required by the region."

Dr. Robert H. Maier, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, presented the study body candidates for degress and called on deans from the various schools in turn to present their students. These were — Angelo A. Volpe, dean, College of Arts and Sciences; Ronald L. Thiele, dean, School of Allied Health and Social Professions; Richard H. Laing, dean, School of Art; James H. Bearden, dean, School of Business; Richard W. Warner, Jr., dean, School of Education; Eugenia M. Zallen, dean, School of Home Economics; Charles F. Schwartz, dean, School of Music; Theresa G. Lawler, acting dean, School of Nursing; Charles Q. Brown, acting dean, School of Technology; Joseph G. Boyette, dean of the Graduate School; and William E. Laupus, vice chancellor and dean of the School of Medicine.

Seven of the ECU faculty who are retiring were recognized — Dr. Frank Fuller, Mrs. Nannie Lee Manning, Dr. James Nicholson, Dr. F.M. Simmons Patterson, Ms. Evelyn L. Perry, Dr. Mary Lois Station and Paul E. Waldrop.

In his brief opening remarks, acting chancellor Howell said "this year, our 75th anniversy, is a special time. We can look back on a long partnership with and an unusually supportive effort by the community around us. It is a partnership made warm and meaningful in providing good results that go far beyond the confines of this campus."

Dr. Donald J. Stedman, associate vice president for Academic Affairs of the University of North Carolina, brought greetings from UNC president Dr. William Friday. The mace was carried by Dr. James White; Harold McDougle, class of 1944, was the alma mater representative; and Rev. Robert E. Clyde, Jr. gave the benediction.

A band concert by the East Carolina University Wind Ensemble, under the direction of Herbert L. Carter, began at 10 a.m. The Ensemble also provided the traditional selections of processional and recessional music.

Related Ceremony

At a ceremony Friday honoring the 36 ECU medical graduates, two of the men instrumental in laying the groundwork for the establishment of the ECU Medical School — former chancellor Dr. Leo Jenkins and former vice chancellor for health affairs Dr. Edwin W. Monroe — commented on a report that only four of the graduates plan to specialize in family medicine. Family medical practice was one of the key points stressed as a need for establishing the ECU Medical School.

Dr. Jenkins said he was not pessimistic about the medical school's mission to train family practice physicians, but he feels that there is a need for renewed emphasis on recruiting students who want to go into family practice.

Monroe said he is not particularly concerned about the situation, and does not know if the ECU situation is an isolated case or a national trend.

The dean of the medical school, Dr. William E. Laupus, commented that officials are disappointed at the small number of medical graduates who have indicated intentions to enter family medicine.

Of this year's 36 graduates, 17 will stay in North Carolina for their internships — 10 of them at Pitt Memorial Hospital, with the other 19 to take their internships outside North Carolina.

At the request of the chairman of the Board of Commissioners, both school systems, in March, prepared a report on the utilization of present school facilities.

The report from the Greenville system indicated that an additional 1,088 students could be accommodated with no problem and "no negative impact on the instructional program." The report also indicated that 3,958 more students could be accommodated "if necessary ... if we used substandard teaching stations and without regard to 'inconvenience' and 'nonpreferred' impact on the instructional program."

The county system reported that, based on the optimal capacity of the 457 permanent, standard teaching stations, seven of the 20 schools in use in the system could handle 1,039 more students without resorting to substandard facilities. Another school, Farmville Middle, according to the report, is at its optimal capacity of 608 students.

The report also indicated that the remaining 12 schools have a total of 1,339 more students than the optimal capacity, using only standard permanent teaching stations. However, there are a total 129 substandard teaching stations and 70 mobile units available for use at the 12 "overcrowded" sites, along with 63 substandard teaching stations and eight mobile units at the seven schools that now have less than the "optimal capacitynggM^{7}_{8} Oneapp2oa#h toapos3iblesol5ti/n4oat,east so-eo&thepro'lemsf!cin 'th%twos#hool5.itsl manyp%ople &eell7ou,d '% ! m-erger of the two districts, or at the least, a much closer working relationship.

The Board of County Commissioners several years ago asked the two administrative units to investigate the possiblity of a merger. That request resulted in the establishment of a joint city-county merger study group.

However, no substantative action was taken because the county school board withdrew its representatives and refused to move foward with the study.

The latest public statement on the need for increased cooperation between the two school boards came from Dr. John Tingelstad, chairman of the Greenville City Board of Education, at a county commissioners meeting last month.

Tingelstad, citing major reductions in federal funding for education, told commissioners, "It would seem to me it is time for us and representatives of the county board to consider the possibility of beginning to look at ways to work together," to provide services for "all the children in the county."

He suggested that maintenance, transportation, food services and special education are some of the areas in which cooperative programs might be developed.

Whirlwind Schedule For Howard Hessemann

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

From the time televison star Howard Hessemann arrived in Greenville Wednesday afternoon from Lost Angeles until his departure Saturday for New York City, the actor was on a whirlwind schedule of personal appearances, radio broadcasts, acting as master of ceremonies and making videotapes to be used on television spots in eastern North Carolina.

Hessemann, who portrays the role of disc jockey Dr. Johnny Fever in the popular television program, "WKRP In Cincinnati," was in the area for appearances to benefit the March of Dimes campaign.

At Carolina East Mall late Friday afternoon, Hessemann was on a radio broadcast from the Mall made by radio station 94 RQR, Greenville, hosted by Henry Hinton and assisted by Kirk Williams. The Mall appearance was coordinated by Terry Traylor, Marketing Director for Carolina East Mall.

Commenting on this benefit, which he said was his first for the March of Dimes, Hessemann said "I'm really happy to be doing this. What we do for ourselves alone doesn't count for much. It's our contact with others, and doing things for them, I feel, that is most important."

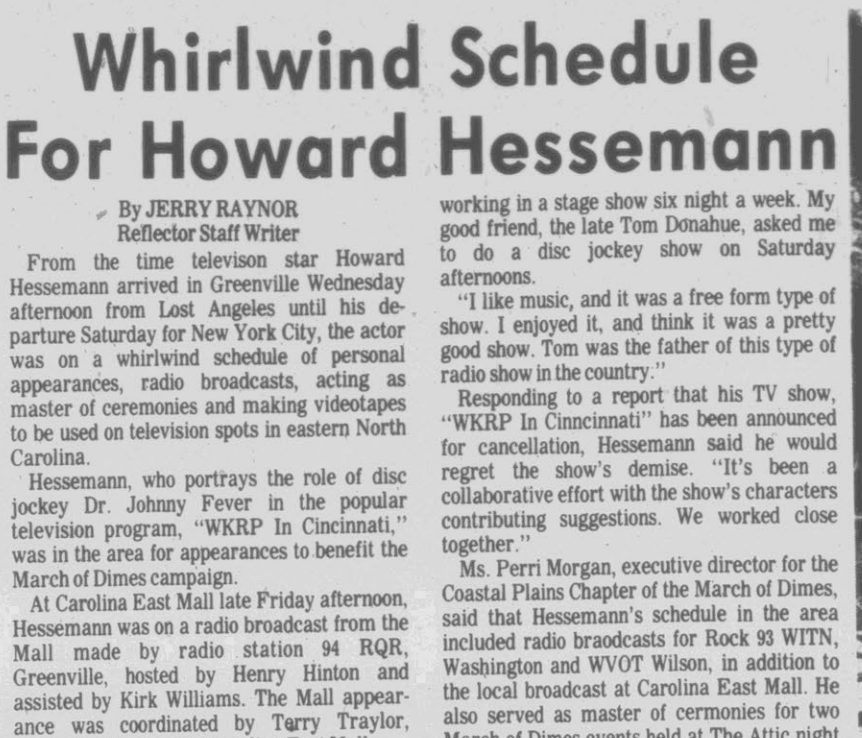

At one point in the program, Hessemann recalled an experience of working for about eight months as a real life disc jockey in San Francisco. "That was back in 1967. I'd been working in a stage show six night a week. My good friend, the late Tom Donahue, asked me to do a disc jockey show on Saturday afternoons.

"I like music, and it was a free form type of show. I enjoyed it, and think it was a pretty good show. Tom was the father of this type of radio show in the country."

Responding to a report that his TV show, "WKRP In Cinncinnati" has been announced for cancellation, Hessemann said he would regret the show's demise. "It's been a collaborative effort with the show's characters contributing suggestions. We worked close together."

Ms. Perri Morgan, executive director for the Coastal Plains Chapter of the March of Dimes, said that Hessemann's schedule in the area included radio braodcasts for Rock 93 WITN, Washington and WVOT Wilson, in addition to the local broadcast at Carolina East Mall. He also served as master of cermonies for two March of Dimes events held at The Attic night club downtown — one Thursday night, the other Friday night. "We videotaped a number of commercials for future spots in the March of Dime campaign," Ms. Morgan said. "These were made at various spots around town and on the campus so that viewers can see Howard in settings familiar to them." She added that a number of local businesses and agencies supported Hessemann's visit to Greenville.

"We're very pleased that a man of Howard Hesseman's talent was generous enough, without pay, to take the time to come here and help us in the March of Dimes campaign," Ms. Morgan remarked.

A LOT OF YOUNG PEOPLE . . . were among the large crowd of fans that were on hand late Friday afternoon to watch television actor Howard Hessemann in a 94 RQR radio broadcast made at Carolina East Mall. Hessemann visted Greenville on a benefit tour for the March of Dimes.

Western N.C. To Feel Impact Of Worlds Fair

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer

Travel officials in Western North Carolina say it will be at least a month before their area begins to feel the impact of tourists stopping over on their way to the World's Fair in Knoxville, Tenn.

The fact that the first week of the fair didn't bring many visitors to the mountain towns disappointed some motel and restaurant owners, the director of the Asheville Chamber of Commerce says.

"We knew it would be June, when children get out of school and families are free to travel, before we would see any big increase in tourists here," said Dick Trammel. "But I guess some motel and restaurant people were expecting it to happen all at once and it didn't."

Trammel said traffic through his town has steadily increased during the week, with double the number of riders on the shuttlebus service to the fair by midweek.

The World's Fair opened last Saturday in Knoxville, with fair officials predicting an opening-day crowd of about 100,000 people. About 87,000, including 11,000 dignitaries, special fair guests and reporters, showed up. Sunday was even more disappointing, with only 40,000 visitors when 80,000 had been expected.

However, attendance began to increase by Thursday, with 280,000 visitors passing through the fair gates — close to the 300,000 mark fair officials had predicted for the first several days.

North Carolina tourism officials expect at least 1 million of the expected 15 million visitors to the fair to stop in or pass through North Carolina along the way. Officials expect the crowd to pump about $100 million into the state's economy.

Last year, the state launched a massive campaign to promote the mountains — just across the border from Knoxville — as the best place to stay while visiting the fair. The Legislature appropriated $150,000 to the 11-county Western Carolina Associated Communities for promotion of accommodations and attractions and gave another $414,000 for a North Carolina exhibit at the fair.

Charles Heatherly, director of the state Division of Tourism, says the response to the North Carolina exhibit has been "fantastic." The exhibit features cloggers, folk singers and can-can dancers. The state spent $200,000 to build the 1,500-square-foot exhibit and will spend another $200,000 to operate it. Officials are hoping to get $35 million to $50 million in income from the exhibit.

Several mountain towns have spent a lot of money on their own promotions. Entrepreneurs in Asheville and the Boone-Blowing Rock area have set up shuttle-bus service to the fair. The City of Asheville has advertised in 11 national publications ranging from Southern Living to TV Guide.

The Boone Chamber of Commerce printed and mailed out thousands of brochures urging visitors to "take the high road to the World's Fair." High Country Host, an organization operated by the Boone Chamber of Commerce, operateds a toll-free "world's fair line" for people seeking information on the area.

"There wasn't much sign of fair visitors in Boone this week," said a spokesman for the Chamber of Commerce. "We're hoping things will pick up as the fair goes along. We're sure ready for them."

Trammel said although reservations are up at Asheville hotels and attractions, visitors will have no trouble getting rooms.

"It's started out pretty slowly but that's no big surprise," he said. "All that matters is that the people turn out before the fair ends."

Debates Lesson

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Naval warfare in the South Atlantic between Britain and Argentina has triggered a debate about the capabilities of U.S. ships and the future of the battleship in an era when Third World countries possess deadly missiles.

Argentina's one-shot destruction of the British destroyer Sheffield with a French-built Exocet, an air-launched missile that skims the sea, has raised questions anew about whether the $3.5 billion super aircraft carriers and the battleships the Navy is taking out of mothballs will be sitting ducks.

Navy planners seek to reactivate four World War II Iowa Class battleships for about $1 billion. Two of them, the New Jersey and the Iowa, are undergoing refitting to carry cruise missiles and other modern weapons.

The battleships would serve "as a means to provide an impressive presence where aircraft carriers are not available," said a Navy background paper issued in March 1980. One area would be the Persian Gulf, it said.

Navy Secretary John Lehman moved quickly following the disabling of the Sheffield last week to dispel fears that what happened to the destroyer could happen to a U.S. warship. Fleet defense is such, he told Pentagon reporters, that a hostile aircraft never could come close enough to launch a missile.

As an example, two F-14 Tomcat fighters from the Nimitz shot down two Soviet-built Libyan Sukhoi 22 fighter-bombers last July. The Libyan planes, on a course for the Nimitz battle group, were stopped long before they reached its perimeter.

But the missile hit that disabled the Sheffield may have realigned Navy thinking about where to put a battleship. It could not safely be sent to areas where it would be unprotected by air cover — by aircraft based either ashore or on carriers, Lehman said.

If unaccompanied by an aircraft carrier, that would seem to exclude such deployment possibilities as the Persian Gulf and most other areas where the United States does not maintain air bases.

When pressed on the issue, Lehman acknowledged a battleship unscreened by aircraft carrier defenses such as patroling F-14s could not be deployed far beyond the Caribbean — and then not beyond the range of aircraft based in Florida.

Outlaw Gang Investigation

CHICAGO (UPI) — The FBI and a federal grand jury are investigating a story told by a woman who says she was abducted by members of a motorcycle gang in North Carolina and forced into prostitution.

The woman, Betty Callahan, told authorities she was kidnapped by members of the Outlaws motorcycle gang in North Carolina and held for six weeks.

She said she was taken to Chicago where she was forced to strip at gunpoint so leaders of the gang could examine her body to determine whether she was suitable for prostitution.

U.S. Magistrate James T. Balog ordered Stimac and Ms. Summers held on $1 million cash bond and called their conduct and the actions of five other defendants in the case "subhuman."

Ms. Callahan said her boyfriend, Tommy Forester, was with her at the time she was kidnapped on Dec. 12. His body was found at the bottom of a 200-foot abandoned mine shaft in North Carolina.

The complaint accuses Stimac, Ms. Summers and five others — Marty Curran, 33, and George Burroughs, 41, Montreal, who were arrested at Indian Head Park; Paul Bare, who is being held in North Carolina; and Allan Ray Hattaway and Gary Miller, who are being sought — of abducting Miss Callahan and transporting her in interstate commerce for the purpose of prostitution. Bare is also charged with murder in North Carolina.

Medical School Is Developing As Envisioned

It is no doubt disappointing that only four of the 36 who are graduating from the ECU School of Medicine this year chose family practice as their specialty.

That is not, however, cause for alarm in any consideration of the school's carrying out its mission.

The ECU School of Medicine was charged with training primary care physicians. More than half of this year's graduates have chosen to specialize in the primary care fields such as internal medicine, pediatrics, obstetrics-gynecology and family practice.

These specialties are as needed as general practitioners. There is not an eastern North Carolina community which wouldn't welcome a pediatrician, but most small municipalities would not even dare hope for these primary care specialists to locate in their midst at present.

All who have supported and developed the medical school would rather see more graduates pursuing the family practice specialty. The choice, however, is that of the individual. It is well to remember that last year 12 of 28 graduates chose family practice, and that emphaisis is placed on family practice in the residency program which is being developed along with the medical school.

No one should be concerned that the ECU School of Medicine is not fulfilling its mission, which is to alleviate the shortage of primary care physicians in large areas of North Carolina.

The school's development is proceeding as it was envisioned, and there are few who have closely observed the school who wouldn't agree that it has already improved health care in eastern North Carolina.

ECU Graduates Have Unlimited Opportunities

Some 3,000 East Carolina University seniors and graduate students were awarded their degrees during ceremonies Saturday morning.

It is a difficult world they will face as they move on to careers and further training. It is, however, a world filled with opportunity for young people who have dreams and the energy to pursue them.

These young graduates can build good lives for themselves. They can also find unlimited opportunities to be of service to their fellow man. The graduates have the knowlege to develop a better world. We hope they will use the great opportunities they have to the fullest extent.

Sunday Morning Notes

The sinking of the Argentine ship, the General Belgrano, and the British destroyer Sheffield is but another in the long series of naval battles which have characterized warfare for many centuries.

The defeat of the Spanish Armada set the British off to assembling its empire which made it the most powerful nation of the world for hundreds of years, and is still the seat of its problems today in the South Atlantic.

No one in the United States has to be told that the sinking of much of our Pacific Navy at Pearl Harbor galvanized our nation into military action.

There was another such incident in 1898 in the Carribean which took our nation to war with Spain. It was the sinking of the United States' battleship Maine in Havana harbor.

The incident occurred on Feb. 15 but the only hint of war in The Daily Reflector of that day was a Frank Wilson, King Clothier advertisement headed, "A War Cloud.

"We like to live at peace with all the world and free from entangling alliances, as Father George said," the ad read. "Nevertheless, we consider it good business to sell clothing."

The next day the tragedy that had befallen the United States Navy began to unfold.

"The United States Battleship Maine was blown all to pieces by a Spanish torpedo boat last night. 102 of the crew reported killed.

"Inquiries were made by wire as to the correctness of the report and it was said to have come through reliable channels. However, all efforts to get further news during the day have been without result and we are unable to say whether the report is true.

"While the report caused some excitement here, it is discredited by most people as it hardly looks reasonable that Spain would take such a rash step, knowing that it would precipitate an immediate war with the United States as well as arouse the censure of all civilized countries."

Dispatches in subsequent editions told of the sinking of the ship and the loss of hundreds of lives.

As we know it led to war, the slogan "Remember the Maine" and some acquistions by the United States.

Spain declared war on April 24 and the United States destroyed the Spanish fleet in the Philippines on May 1.

The United States acquired Guam, the Philippines and Puerto Rico, and Cuba became independent.

No More

WASHINGTON — It is time to talk common sense on this matter of a federal budget for fiscal '83 and thereafter. We have had entirely too much, on both sides, of playing to the galleries, of striking ideological attitudes, of looking to the elections in November. Knock it off, I would say to the president and to Speaker Tip O'Neill. Just knock it off.

We start with fundamentals: The prospective deficits are too large. It is almost immaterial that in times past, as a percentage of the gross national product and as a percentage of total spending, the nation has survived relatively larger deficits. The prospective federal borrowings are a major factor in keeping interest rates at the absurdly high levels that now maintain.

Call it Catch-22 or call it a vicious circle: So long as the deficits stay high, the interest rates stay high; so long as the interest rates stay high, unemployment stays high. Bankruptcies soar. The economy remains in recession. The key to recovery lies in reducing these fantastic rates of interest; and the key to these rates of interest lies in doing something positive about the deficits.

OK? The prospective deficits can be reduced in two ways only — by increasing revenues, or by reducing outlays, or of course by a combination of both.

Let me interject one more fundamental proposition: National security comes first. No other function of the national government is even close. After we have met the requirements for a strong defense, we can talk about the needs of health, education, welfare, housing, the farmers, the old folks, the college students, the arts and sciences and all the rest. If we permit our defense to deteriorate to a point at which Soviet adventurism can be neither deterred nor defeated, the game is up. Either by direct aggression or by the more subtle techniques of economic maneuvers, the Soviet Union could achieve world domination. At any cost — at any cost! — that cannot be risked.

Those are the starting points, and so far as I can perceive, these propositions attract nearly universal support. Our problems are not problems in kind; they are problems of degree.

If this is the case, it ought to be possible for men of good will to find acceptable common ground. I happen to believe that the president's ideas on tax reduction are basically sound: By cutting the rates of taxation on both business and individuals, enough new economic activity should be generated that in time we produce more tax revenue than the former rates would have produced. But the structure of a tax reduction plan is not cast in concrete. As a tool for reducing the prospective deficits, the program of tax reduction can be adjusted.

The same common-sense rule applies to federal outlays. These ruinous deficits are largely a product of the entitlement programs that have gone out of control. Never mind the partisan politics: Both Republicans and Democrats are responsible for these loose cannons. We simply are spending too much on food stamps, school lunches, health care, crop subsidies, business subsidies, educational grants and other programs. Nothing but political cowardice stands in the way of making responsible reductions in Social Security benefits.

Mr. Reagan will have to yield on parts of his defense budget. The Democrats' chief spokesman, Richard Bolling of Missouri, may be quite right when he insists that the president's program amounts to too much, too fast. The concept of strong defense comes first, but within that concept reasonably minded men may disagree. The less imperative defense meas.ures can prudently be postponed.

'Let No One Have A Monopoly'

RALEIGH — When Gov. Jim Hunt and Raleigh Rep. Al Adams were in New Orleans for the NCAA basketball championship, they expanded their religious horizons in hopes of helping UNC.

Adams, a Congregationalist, recently told this story during a legislative committee break. On the Sunday morning before the Monday night game with Georgetown University, he and Hunt, a Presbyterian, went to a Roman Catholic mass at Saint Louis Cathedral in Jackson Square.

As Adams tells the story, the two decided "we ought not let one side get any monopoly with the Lord" on the day before the game. Georgetown is a Catholic university and a great number of Hoya fans were at the mass. The sermon, appropriately, was delivered by the Rev. Timothy Healy, president of Georgetown. He spoke of attaining world peace through world teamwork similar to the kind the Hoya basketball team practices.

When the collection basket was passed, "We figured we'd try to cut down the odds," Adams said. So they both contributed generously. The problem arose when the church kept collecting special collections and the Georgetown fans kept dishing out the money. Hunt apparently ran out of cash. So, on the last pass — a collection for the church's building fund — Adams took out a $10 bill and Hunt dropped it in with a note attached identifying the contibutors. "We just wanted them to know we were represented," Adams said.

Hunt later got a thank you note from the church's pastor which congratulated him on the Tar Heel victory.

New Political Ideas Aren't Needed

WATERLOO, Iowa — On overnight swings through this state last weekend, two Democratic presidential prospects proved that "new ideas" aren't necessary to mobilize party members just yet.

But when former vice president Walter Mondale and "neoliberal" Sen. Gary Hart (D-Colo.) return here in two years for The Big One, they'll surely need a bagful of proposals to win voters.

Judging from the mood at several "district conventions" held Saturday, Ronald Reagan is the best friend Iowa Democrats could hope for. At present, Reagan's policies are doing more to organize Democrats at the grass-roots level than have the presidential hopefuls.

As elsewhere in the Midwest, depressed farm prices and high interest rates have made foreclosures commonplace in Iowa. Once considered immune to layoffs, the state is now hobbled by 8 percent unemployment (industrial Dubuque's 17 percent unemployment rate makes that city No. 1 in the U.S. for urban joblessness).

Other signs in this key swing state also point to a Democratic turnaround this year. "We have good people competing for legislative offices that, in the past, we haven't been able to find a single person to run for," said Jerry Fitzgerald, one of the three Democratic contenders for the gubernatorial nomination.

The bipartisan nuclear-arms-freeze movement, meanwhile, is leading Republican incumbents to act increasingly like Democrats: Third District Congressman Cooper Evans, elected in 1980 on a pro-military platform, now tells voters that Reagan's defense policies go too far.

Explained Iowa's own Lynn Cutler, vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee, "In 1980 many Iowa Democrats talked into their shoes and made apologies for their party. But they have no apologies this year."

Indeed, a sense of relief hung in the air at Columbus High School here Saturday. The school's gymnasium was one of six sites where, as Iowa political tradition dictates, delegates from every county in the district were meeting to hammer out a platform, elect officers and be wooed by candidates. Among their suitors was Walter Mondale.

The Minnesota native spent Saturday delivering a prepared speech to crowds at six convention sites. He drew standing ovations everywhere with his criticism of the Reagan administration's "radical" revision of social and military policy.

Yet, in an interview with our reporter, Michael Duffy, aboard a chartered private plane, Mondale admitted that the Democrats would not necessarily need economic or moral alternatives of their own to succeed this year.

"Everybody talks about new ideas, but most ideas aren't new at all," he said. "Nobody's going to be able to come up with a new idea that's going to solve this country's problems, and shout 'Eureka!' We just don't want to re-enact the old ideas."

Unlike Mondale, Hart bypassed the conventions entirely. The handsome 44-year-old, often depicted as the younger generation's candidate, arrived Friday morning and met with leaders in two districts.

Though he lacks Mondale's name recognition, Hart is devoting himself to "new ideas" and coaching 75 congressional candidates on, among other things, military and tax policy. He wants to be seen as a thoughtful leader and, at least, end up somewhere on the Democratic ticket in 1984.

"We know the problems," Hart told the crowd at a Waterloo cocktail party. "There's a shortage of hope in this country, particularly among young people. It's our duty to recapture that sense of hope for young Americans and all Americans." Unfortunately, Hart didn't bother his listeners with constructive suggestions.

Of course, one can't expect fledgling presidential candidates today to have mapped out the state of the American economy in 1984. But Democrats seem all too willing to let Reagan's unpopular policies do their work for them.

We'd like to think that bold economic and military proposals (beyond simpler cries of "WE WANT JOBS!" and "NO NUKES!") might come at the Democratic mid-term convention next month in Philadelphia.

Yet we know that these days Democratic priorities hinge on fund-raising strategies. While cash-flow concerns may interest politicians, they do little for the rest of us. If Democrats can't realize that, can they blame Americans for dropping out of politics?

Falklands Crisis Could Backfire For U.S.

WASHINGTON — Collapse of the U.S. Falklands strategy, built on the foundation of Argentina's presumed early retreat under British punishment, raises the specter of major U.S. reverses against communist expansion throughout Latin America.

Instead of Argentina crying "uncle" under British military pounding, as Reagan administration officials hoped, the junta in Buenos Aires is growing more nationalistic, not less. So are large portions of the Americas south of the border, from Mexico to Tierra del Fuego.

That threatens long-term erosion of U.S. influence in Latin America. Once war broke out between Washington's closest ally, Britain, and a country for which President Reagan has shown special favor, Argentina, the U.S. counted on quick capitulation by the Argentines to limit damage throughout the hemisphere.

Argument within the administration went on for weeks before Reagan came down on the British side April 30. One school insisted that as soon as an Argentinian ship or two was sunk by the British, the junta would either collapse or change course. If it collapsed, the successor regime would see the light and settle the dispute.

The counter-argument, which lost the day, warned that air and naval blows to Argentina, far from softening the mood of nationalism, would intensify it. That would put a solution even further out of reach.

The losing argument, if successful, would have required much tougher U.S. treatment of the British and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who is Ronald Reagan's favorite. With overwhelming majorities in Congress pushing Reagan to back the British and the glaring illegality of the Argentine occupation, the counter-argument never had a chance. Now, however, some policy-makers wish they could turn back the clock.

A telephone call from a leading Argentine official to a high former U.S. official early in the morning of April 30 showed the depth of anti-U.S. sentiment. With "terror in his voice," the Argentine official said he had just been advised that Reagan "is going to hit us on the head" even though Argentina had not yet closed the door to Secretary of State Alexander Haig's mediation efforts. He begged the former official to intervene.

But there was no turning back at that stage. The policy decision to give Britain U.S. economic and military support was backed within the administration by a strong majority in the belief that it would work.

The heart of current unpublicized criticism is that support of British military action will make much tougher U.S. attempts to mobilize Latin America against Castro-directed aggression.

That implies Soviet gains in the U.S. backyard, not by overt intervention but by exploiting desires throughout the hemisphere to take revenge on Washington for the Falklands humiliation. Down that road lie more instability and U.S. influence over future events, a condition afflicting this country all around the world but more dangerously so close to home.

To the editor:

Once again the lack of facilities at Rose High School becomes apparent. First there was no auditorium for the school plays. After reading the school baord report in The Daily Reflector on May 4, we were appalled that now there is no place to hold graduation ceremonies. We find it difficult to accept that, with the various stadia and auditoriums available at other schools and ECU, the city of Greenville's high school has no place to honor its graduating class. Ficklen Stadium allegedly cannot be used because the graduation ceremonies would interfere with preparing the playing surface for next fall. If this be so, to honor the excellence of academics has been downgraded in order for a few to play a game four to five months from now. The price to use Minges Coliseum is obscene. To charge $2,000 to allow a senior high school class to graduate at a state-supported university proffers little hope that the taxpayers' dollar will ever be used justly and uniformly.

Perhaps the use of Ficklen Stadium for such a short time for graduation ceremonies will not injure the grass so critically as to render the stadium useless for football, come September. We request that ECU offer to J.H. Rose High School the use of Ficklen Stadium for graduation ceremonies for 1982.

To the editor:

May is Mental Health Month and we at Cherry Hospital would like to acknowledge the people of Pitt County who have shown so much interest in and support for our patients throughout the year.

Statistics show that between 10 and 20 percent of the people living today are affected by some form of mental illness. This includes minor as well as severe emotional problems. Ideally, treatment should take place in the least restrictive environment and disrupt the person's life as little as possible. However, there are times when commitment to a regional institution is the only alternative. Cherry Hospital admitted almost 300 patients from Pitt County last year. These patients need to know that the people in their communities have not forgotten them. The Mental Health Association in Pitt County is working toward that end.

The MHA sponsored the annual Operation Santa Claus Drive to provide Christmas gifts for patients. They did an outstanding job and won statewide recognition for the project. At the same time, an effort was made to support the Forgotten Patient Program and resulted in adoption of more than 50 previously forgotten patients.

Groups in the county are encouraged to provide an activity for patients each month. Activities have included a cookout, a puppet show and a square dance.

The support of our patients not only reflects an energetic and active Mental Health Association, but a community full of concern for those less fortunate.

To the editor:

A constitutional amendment will be on the ballot in the 1982 primary election to double the length of the terms of the members of the General Assembly from two years to four years beginning with members elected in 1982.

This proposal is an outrage.

The citizens of this state are being asked to give up one of their long-held and most cherished rights — the right to vote every two years for those who will represent them in the General Assembly. They are being asked to give up the right to hold their legislators accountable every two years for those decisions which most keenly affect them — decisions about taxes, our system of justice, the regulation of business, human services of every description, and the environment in which we live.

who has been calling for a four-year term? Certainly not the citizens of our state. The only voices heard to support this proposal come from incumbent legislators.

We need to defeat this amendment — to defeat it soundly and decisively — so the members of our General Assembly will get the message. We are accustomed to good government in North Carolina and we won't settle for less.

Two-year terms for North Carolna legislators have worked well since 1835. We have nothing to gain by approving four-year terms, but we surely risk a great deal.

I've heard it said before, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." I can't see a thing we'll fix by giving our General Assembly members four-year terms.

Keep the two-year term. Vote NO on Amendment No. 1.

Economy Poses Problems For Parties

WASHINGTON (AP) — While Congress belatedly drafts a new federal budget, Republicans are crowing that they have the Democrats in an election-year corner as advocates of increased spending and higher taxes.

Maybe so, but the Republican corner isn't very comfortable, either. The recession persists, unemployment is high, and the pollsters report President Reagan's job approval ratings down.

Those are not promising circumstances as Reagan seeks to reassemble his old team of congressional Republicans and conservative Democrats to pass the kind of budget he wants.

"I am convinced that we are in the trough, as it is called, of this recession, and that we will begin to see recovery in the second half of the year," Reagan said in his nationally televised address on the budget.

That may not be soon enough for Republican campaign purposes.

It takes three to make a budget, a president, the Senate and the House. Since the first two are Republican and the House is Democratic, the debate may become what all sides say they don't want: a sharply partisan debate that will have more to do with the coming elections than with economics.

Efforts at budget compromise collapsed after an April-long effort. Republican congressional leaders say they're going to try again. Rep. Richard Bollings, D-Mo., a key Democratic negotiator, said he still wants to work with the administration and the Republicans on a bipartisan budget.

Democratic congressional leaders say any acceptable compromise will have to be fair, by which they mean it must ease curbs and cuts on social spending. Reagan says it must be responsible, meaning spending has to be cut, defense appropriations maintained at levels that won't delay the rebuilding of the military, and "our tax reductions adopted last year must be preserved."

Each side blames the other for the record deficits now in prospect.

There was a record deficit built into the budget Reagan proposed in the first place and it now is projected at $102 billion. The president said that's because lower inflation rates have reduced revenues while higher unemployment and interest rates have increased costs.

He says the answer is to reduce spending; Democrats counter that something has to be done to increase revenues.

Those were disputes that couldn't be bridged in the compromise talks that foundered a week ago. And the rhetoric since is not that of compromise.

"Apparently the philosophical difference between us is that they want more and more spending and more and more taxes," Reagan said. "I believe we should have less spending, less taxes and more prosperity."

The president then asked the public to tell Congress "that you think this is no time for politics as usual," and that therefore his proposals should be approved as the alternative to "runaway taxes, spending, government debt and high interest rates."

That has the makings of a Republican campaign theme.

"If our opponents want to go to the American people next fall and say 'We're the party that tried to take away your tax cuts, we're the party that wanted a bargain basement military and held a fire sale on national security,' we'll give them all the running room they want," the Republican National Committee quoted Reagan as saying.

Bunn Hearn...A Legend

Old-time UNC baseball coach Bunn Hearn was both the delight and despair of sports writers.

Hearn, a big mountain of a man who guided the Tar Heel nines for 27 years, spoke in a drawl as Southern as hominy grits and red-eye gravy. Hearn's laconic pronouncements about his team's prospects seldom produced big headlines, but they furnished anecdotes that are still told when aging newspapermen gather.

When asked about how his team was shaping up, Hearn would venture something to the effect that "we have some pretty good boys out this year. They're a little green but they are hustlers and will come along."

Then if the reporter pressed "Big Steam" — as Hearn was known affectionately — on UNC's chances of winning the conference crown, Hearn would allow that "you never can tell how fast the boys will come along. We'll have a ball club this year, thought, I believe."

If the newsman pressed Bunn to be more specific, he would predict that, "We'll win a few games, we'll lose a few games and some will be rained out."

After getting his education and playing baseball and football at Mississippi A&M and Elon College, Hearn hit the big league's with the St. Louis Cardinals in 1910. He was in the majors six years with the Cards, the New York Giants and Boston Braves. He established a world record in 1913 by hurling 20 scoreless innings for Toronto of the International League against Jersey City. He pitched no-hit ball the first nine innings and gave up only seven hits during the remaining 11 stanzas. Another time, Hearn — who also starred as a hitter — hit three home runs in the same game, two of them in the same inning.

In 1913-14, Hearn went on a world tour with the New York Giants and the Chicago White Sox in an exhibition jaunt that saw the teams play in England, France, Japan and the Philippines. The cast included such immortals as Tris Speaker, Buck Weaver, Larry Doyle and Jim Thorpe in addition to Hearn.

In later years, Hearn liked to reall that during the trip he showed King George V of England how to throw a curve ball. When he was introduced to the monarch, the story goes, he is said to have drawled, "Glad to meet you, Mr. King."

Leaving John McGraw's Giants in 1917, Hearn took over as Carolina's coach in 1917 and 1918 before going into the life insurance business. He returned to Chapel Hill as coach in 1932 after piloting his last professional team — Winston-Salem — to a pennant in 1931.

During the years in which Hearn guided the Tar Heels to a passel of state and Southern Conference championships, a host of his players went on to star in the majors. These included George (Snuffy) Stirnweiss, the American League batting champ and most valuable player on the 1945 New York Yankees.

Other Hearn proteges were Burgess Whitehead, Giant second baseman in the mid 1930s; Lew Riggs, an infielder for the Cincinnati Reds; Jim Mallory, who played outfield at various times for the Washington Senators, the Cardinals and the Giants; Johnny Peacock, catcher for the Boston Red Sox; Clyde King of Goldsboro, who starred for UNC in 1944 and went on to star as a relief hurler for the Dodgers in 1945, and many others who became topnotch performers in the majors and minors.

One of the stories they told about Hearn dealt with an exhibition game during the 1933 commencement between Carolina's 1922 and 1923 teams. The 1922 team was having the best of it until fans began to raise a clamor for "Big Steam" to come to the aid of the trailing team.

Hearn sauntered out to the mound and hurled the rest of the way with just three up and three down each inning. In addition he banged out a sizzling triple in the eighth inning that won the game for the 1923 team.

Although he suffered a paralytic stroke in 1947, Hearn continued partly active as the UNC baseball coach until he retired in 1956. The "Big Steam," who died at his home in Wilson in 1959, was one of the most beloved coaches in UNC history.

X-Rays

WASHINGTON (UPI) — We all know that the night sky is black between the stars and planets. Or is it?

If your eyes could see X-rays, and you looked at the sky from above the atmosphere, which screens out X-rays, the night sky would appear uniformly bright.

Astronomers have known that for 20 years, but they still can't say why the universe glows at X-ray wave lengths of light.

All that is known is that the X-ray background radiation reaching Earth is amazingly uniform, says astronomer Bruce Margon of the University of Washington in Seattle.

"Every small patch of sky has a X-ray brightness quite precisely equal to its neighbor, and all other sections of the celestial sphere."

Margon discussed the problem at a meeting of the American Physical Society and said there are two possible explanations.

One idea is that the X-ray light comes from a very hot, but thin gas that uniformly fills the universe between the galaxies. A gas hot enough would generate X-rays.

If gas is responsible for the X-ray glow, Margon said that would have profound implications for the future of the universe. He said the total amount of gas in the universe would have 50 to 100 times more mass than everything else we know about in the universe — the stars and everything.

This would mean there would be enough stuff in the universe to keep it from expanding forever as is now generally believed. It would reach the point billion of years from now when it would begin to shrink and eventually become so compact it would explode.

Margon said the alternate explanation for the X-ray glow is that the X-rays are coming from so many, very distant objects called quasars that by the time the radiation reaches Earth, it appears diffuse and uniform.

Margon indicated that he leans toward the latter explanation.

Quasars were discovered coincidentally the same year that the X-ray background was found. There still is considerable controversy about their nature, but they generally are believed to be the most distant objects that can be seen in the universe.

POLL

PRINCETON, N.J. — As fighting between Argentina and Great Britain broke out last week, both nations had a solid wall of public opinion backing their governments' actions.

In Britain, as reported by the British Gallup Poll recently, the public emphatically sided with their goverment's actions, but were critical of it for allowing the situation to reach crisis proportins.

In Argentina, the public's intransigence was so strong that they voted down any proposals for mediating the crisis.

Here is the status of public opinion in Argentina just before the fighting began but after the United States indicated it sided with Great Britain:

*90 percent of Argentines supported the decision to defend the Malvinas (as the Falkland Islands are known there) against British attempts to retake the islands by force;

*Almost as many Argentines (86 percent) rejected a British proposal to return to the status quo that prevailed before Argentina's April 2 takeover, with the ultimate sovereignty of the islands to be negotiated between Argentina and Great Britain and through the self-determination of the islanders;

*By better than a 5-to-1 ratio, the Argentine public opposed any negotiations at all over the sovereignty of the islands;

*Having the United Nations administer the islands while their future is decided by the two belligerent nations fared hardly any better, with the weight of Argentine public opinion 3-to-1 in opposition.

*76 percent picked Argentina to win an armed conflict in the islands, with only 3 percent naming Great Britain and 21 percent undecided.

*By an 8-to-1 margin the United States was felt to have been a poor rather than a good mediator in the dispute. Finally, the Argentine people overwhelmingly back government moves in the affair — by 84 percent in military efforts and by 88 percent in the diplomatic sphere.

Britons Almost As Fervent

A British Gallup Poll taken in mid-April showed the public strongly supporting the sending of their fleet to the Falklands and the use of military force to regain the islands. Specifically, 78 percent approved the decision to sen the fleet to the South Atlantic.

At the same time, however, nearly eight in 10 (78 percent) agreed with those who criticized the government for being caught off-guard by Argentina's takeover of the islands.

A 61 percent majority of the British surveyed approved of attacking Argentinian ships and troops guarding the Falklands in order to gain control of the islands while 32 percent disapproved. And as many as 24 percent would approve of British forces attacking the Argentine mainland, itself; but 68 percent disapprove of that measure.

U.S. Public Backs Britain, Fears American Involvement

Among the nine Americans in 10 familiar with the Falklands dispute, 17 percent felt the U.S. should help Great Britain, compared to only 2 percent who felt we should aid the Argentinians, with about two-thirds (65 percent) believing the U.S. should stay completely out of the Falkland situation. Americans's sympathies, however, were clearly with the British (50 percent) rather than with Argentines (15 percent) while 21 percent said their sympathies lay with both sides equally.

The Argentine results are based on 420 in-person interviews conducted April 29-30. The British findings are based on 874 personal interviews conducted April 10-13. The U.S. results are based on telephone interviews with 516 adults, and 18 and older, between April 16 and 25.

For results based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be six percentage points in either direction.

Inflation: Bane Or Balm For Stock Market?

NEW YORK (AP) — Time was, not so many years ago, when stockbrokers liked to tout their wares as effective "inflation hedges."

The same tide that carried prices of consumer products upward, they argued, would also eventually lift the dollar value of corporate earnings, dividends — and stock prices.

So a long-term investor in the stock market could hope to preserve the purchasing power of his money even while the currency diminished in worth most of the time.

Then, in the early and mid-1970s, along came an era in which the price of almost everything but stocks rose faster and faster. Inflation came to be seen as the market's nemesis, and investors who relied on stocks as a hedge found themselves getting trimmed.

Today, inflation is receding again, as evidenced by the three-tenths of a percent drop reported for the consumer price index in March. But the stock market seems to have found scant cause for celebration in that news either.

In all of this, it is pretty hard to find anything even faintly resembling a pattern. And one might be tempted to write off as pointless any attempt to find a relationship between the inflation rate and the course of the stock market.

But analysts at Standard & Poor's Corp.'s "The Outlook" recently made the effort anyway. And the weekly investment advisory service concluded that the record of the last 46 years suggests that there is some correlation after all.

Stocks, the firm found, tended to do well when inflation was at its lowest, and not so well when the cost of living rose most rapidly.

The 10 individual years in which inflation was most virulent ranged chronologically from 1941, when consumer prices climbed 8.9 percent, to 1981, when they rose by precisely the same amount.

In between, there were even worse years, like 1946 (CPI up 18.2 percent in the aftermath of World War II) and 1980 (CPI up 12.4 percent).

Standard & Poor's composite index of 500 stocks managed gains in a few of those years. In 1980, for example, it soared 25.8 percent. But on average, the market was down 3.5 percent for the 10 years of greatest inflation.

By contrast, the market rose in most of the years in which inflation was least. Its best showing in all the 46 years of the study was a 45 percent rise in 1954, when the CPI dropped 0.5 percent.

For the 10 years of lowest inflation, the S&P market index averaged a gain of 14.2 percent.

The study also found that bonds lived up to their reputation of being especially sensitive to inflation trends. Bond prices, which move in the opposite direction from interest rates, fell in all of the 10 worst inflation years, and rose in eight of the 10 best inflation years.

As S&P acknowledged, the pattern hasn't been holding lately for stocks. "The past three years may not have been a particularly good test period," the firm said.

"The stock market's strong gains during 1979 and 1980, while inflation was exceptionally high, reflected to a large degree the strength of the important oil group, which benefited from surging crude oil prices.

"The market's setback in 1981, despite a slowing of inflation, again was influenced significantly by the oils."

Special circumstances like the energy crisis, which economists like to call "exogenous factors," have a way of interfering regularly with most efforts to find order in anythingly as unpredictable as the securities markets.

Still, Standard & Poor's says, "the long-term relationship is encouraging. If inflation can be kept under control, stock prices may well extend their recent gains."

Endorsement Fuels Both Campaigns

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — U.S. House Speaker Tip O'Neill helped raise some $60,000 last week for Democrats and their candidate for Congress, but Republicans are trying to turn the endorsement to their advantage.

O'Neill's rousing assault on Reaganomics was intended to kick off the campaign of state Sen. James M. "Jamie" Clarke, of Fairview, who is challenging first-term Republican Congressman William M. Hendon.

But Hendon supporters sought to capitalize on O'Neill's visit by depicting the speaker as the epitome of the big-spending Washington liberal.

O'Neill was greeted with three-quarter-page ads taken by Republicans in Western North Carolina newspapers, radio advertisements and letters calling attention to the visit.

"Tip O'Neill, the biggest taxer and spender of them all, is coming to Western North Carolina to try to throw our congressman, Bill Hendon, out," the ads said. "We thought you should know."

Clarke's campaigners say Hendon's supporters spent at least $11,000 on the ads, an outlay indicating the fight for the 11th Congressional District seat is going to be expensive.

"I think he (Hendon) will spend half a million dollars," said Terry Garren, who is managing Clarke's campaign. "And we feel like we're going to be able to compete financially."

The race has attracted interest from the national Democratic Party, with the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee targeting Clarke's campaign for a $25,000 contribution and technical help.

O'Neill's visit was arranged by Asheville Democratic Party money-man Wallace Hyde, a member of that Democratic committee. The 11th District race is one of 40, and the only one in North Carolina, targeted by the national party to concentrate on winning from the GOP.

Forty other seats are targeted for special effort to perserve for Democrats. Fifth District Democrat Stephen Neal may be among that group, Wallace said.

Spokesmen for Hendon in Washington and Asheville declined to talk about the O'Neill visit or their advertisements. Hendon's press secretary, Billy Pritchard, said the congrssman would have nothing to say about the visit, and Hendon could not be reached for comment.

Wilma Sherrill, who runs his campaign office in Asheville, said the Democrats' estimate of their ad spending wasn't accurate, but said she didn't know what the real amount was.

Hendon, 37, is an Asheville businessman who became the first Republican elected from the mountainous district in 50 years, unseating incumbent Lamar Gudger by 14,000 votes in 1980.

Although Democrats contend he was swept into office on Ronald Reagan's coattails, Hendon actually ran ahead of the president in the 17 counties of the district, winning 54 percent of the vote to Reagan's 51 percent. Redistricting has changed the 11th only slightly.

He reflects the traditional mountain Republicanism which has been strong in the district, despite a heavy Democratic registration. He has supported much of Reagan's program, although he showed some reservations about Reagan's recent proposed social security cuts.

Clarke, 64, has been a leading vote getter in legislative races, despite a shy demeanor. He has what is generally regarded as token opposition in the June 29 primary, and has been campaigning for the seat for more than a year.

Democrats see the district as winnable because of their long grip on the seat and because of the economy. Unemployment has hit the mountains hard, with Swain County posting the highest jobless rate in the state.

Hendon's advertising about the O'Neill visit appeared to strike a nerve with the Democrats. Several party officials said privately they were concerned O'Neill's visit might taint Clarke with an unpopular image.

"To be honest with you, Tip O'Neill is not the person to bring in," one prominent Democrat said, asking not to be identified. He said a poll conducted for Clarke by the Peter Hart firm showed O'Neill to be unpopular in the district.

Barges Used In Reef

CAROLINA BEACH, N.C. (AP) — They thought it would be easy, but officials found it more difficult than expected to add two run-down barges to an articifical reef off the North Carolina coast.

The North Carolina Division of Marine Fisheries is using the old barges as part of a reef designed to improve sport fishing in the Carolina Beach area.

Jim Brown, chief of the division's fisheries service section, said the scuttled barges make perfect artificial reefs because they provide plenty of places for fish to congregate and hide.

He said that among the fish likely to congregate around an artificial reef are black sea bass and flounder. To the reefs, officials attach buoys which float on the surface and let fishermen know it's a good place to drop lines.

The barges, donated by LaPortte Dredging Co. of Virginia, bobbed on the sound at Carolina Beach for more than three weeks before being towed to sea to join a barge used to begin the reef last November.

"The division has so little money to work with that we always have to do it this way with sponsors," Brown said, adding that the reef at Wrightsville Beach contains a "Liberty" ship, several small vessels and 200,000 tires.

Getting one of the LaPortte barges to float was the first challenge facing Marine Fisheries workers and Skippy Winner, a local salvage operator who volunteered to tow the barges.

Workers spent two days repairing one barge which had become partly submerged in the mud of the Carolina Beach Basin, just so it could be towed.

However, once the barges reached the reef they stubbornly resisted sinking. Workers punched holes in the side of one, but it still took more than an hour to go under. They then had to pump water into the second barge's hull to get it to sink.

Loftus says visitors will see an old-fashioned muster and watch a water brigade pumping as well as other contests between the exhibitors and owners of antique fire trucks.

Falklands Bungled

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A former U.S. ambassador to Paraguay and El Salvador says the Reagan administration bungled its handling of peace negotiations in the Falkland Islands dispute between Argentina and Great Britain.

Robert White also predicted Thursday before delivering a speech at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte that Argentina will gain sovreignty over the Islands in a negotiated settlement.

White said Argentina felt betrayed and that the U.S. was wrong to try to appear neutral when the crisis began.

"We instead should have started with the U.N. position that sought withdrawal and then negotiations," he said.

White said U.S. policy in El Salvador underscores the fundamental flaw of the Reagan administration's foreign policy. He said that policy places too much emphasis on military aid and not enough on social and economic aid.

"This administration's policy is a reactionary policy which draws on military force," he said. "We should ... (help) other countries develop Democratic institutions, like land reform and economic development."

White spent 25 years in the U.S. Foreign Service before Secretary of State Alexander Haig fired him as ambassador to El Salvador in February 1981. He is now senior associate at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace in Washington.

"There will be no point in Britain trying to maintain its governing of the Falklands when their power simply does not extend that far," White said. "They want to get out of the situation but are looking for a way to do it gracefully.

"What's going to happen is a United Nations international force will occupy the islands, during which both sides will withdraw," he added. "An agreement will be reached requiring that after a certain period of time, Argentina will gain sovereignty."

Dwindling Funds For Education

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Budget cuts have forced North Carolina's public schools to reduce teachers, increase class size and phase out programs for students with special needs and interests, state superintendents say.

Some of the superintendents attending last week's conference of the North Carolina Association of School Administrators in Greensboro say they sense a feeling of helplessness among parents when it comes to fighting budget cuts.

"I think our citizens are very realistic about the cutbacks," said Clyde Pressley, head of Eden City Schools. "They understand that what's happening at home is also happening at school."

Others, however, find it hard to explain cutbacks in the arts, physical education and in programs designed to help slow learners.

School systems statewide are awaiting June decisions on next year's operating budgets from their county commissioners. Many superintendents fear that any new tax dollars appropriated for next year will be soaked up by inflation, but they're against increases in local taxes to replace federal and state funding cuts.

Changes in state appropriation methods for education may mean many systems will get less than they expect, and educators may lose a 4.8 percent salary increase from the state.

Burlington City Schools Superintendent Jim Surratt said as teachers pick up more students each year, the standard of education will drop gradually, leaving missing links in the students' educations.

Some said they are reorganizing their systems to be more economical and efficient, carefully trimming personnel to preserve basic programs and pleading with county commissioners to keep future programs at least the same as this year's.

Lexington City Schools, where buildings are underused, will look like a new system next year with the first reorganization since the 3,600-student system began desegregation in 1968-69, said Superintendent Richard Thompson.

The city's nine schools will decrease to seven. Ninth graders will move from junior to senior high school, a middle school will house grades six through eight, and fourth and fifth graders will be in one school.

Similar proposals are before the Greensboro Board of Education as it works up a comprehensive plan to be completed by December for its 44 schools.

Robeson County Superintendent Purnell Swett is worried about how the 80 percent Indian and black students in his system will fair later in competition with students from less deprived schools.

The system is facing what Swett called "drastic cuts" in federal Title I programs which assist slow and deprived youngsters in reading and mathematics.

Preschool Registration

Greenville schools will continue through Friday their preschool census and registration for students who will be in a kindergarten or first grade class during the 1982-83 school year.

Census and registration forms have been sent to homes which contain children now enrolled in city schools. Parents who have preschool children who will be starting to school next year and who do not receive a form should contact the elementary school nearest their home.

Once registration information has been received, the school will provide more information to parents about the time and place for a preschool orienttion and party, tentatively scheduled for May 24.

One of the prime requirements for a child entering public schools in North Carolina is having had the necessary immunizations prescribed by law.

Dawkins Is Naminated

RALEIGH — Howard Dawkins of Greenville has been nominated as a North Carolina candidate to be considered for the National Distinguished Service Award for services to handicapped persons. The nomination has been submitted to the President's Committee on the Employment of the Handicapped.

The nomination was made by Governor Jim Hunt on behalf of the Governor's Advisory Council for persons with disabilities and in cooperation with Charles Dunn, executive vice president of the N.C. Textile Manufacturers Association, Inc.

Dawkins, former director of the Eastern Carolina Vocational Center, was a recent recipient of a state Distinguished Service Award for work with the handicapped.

Historic Site Management

The second regional conference on historic resources management, sponsored by the Historic Preservation Society of North Carolina and the National Trust for Historic Preservation, in cooperation with the office of the state attorney general, will be held June 10-11 in Goldsboro.

The workshop is designed for preservationists living in the eastern area of the state, although any interested person may attend.

The conference is sponsored locally by the Wayne County Historical Association, the Downtown Goldsboro Association and the Community Arts Council of Goldsboro and Wayne County Inc.

Graham Takes Pains Not To Anger Soviet Hosts

By STEVEN R. HURST
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Evangelist Billy Graham smiled, chatted and lunched with his Soviet hosts Saturday and met a high-ranking Communist to discuss U.S.-Soviet relations. He called him a "very wonderful official."

The 63-year-old Southern Baptist preacher from Montreat, N.C., known for fiery oratory and worldwide Christian crusades, arrived Friday for a six-day visit. He will deliver a Sunday sermon at a Baptist church, speak at a Russian Orthodox cathedral and address an anti-nuclear weapons conference of religious leaders.

Graham met privately for more than three hours with Georgy Arbatov, head of the state-run Soviet Institute of the United States and Canada. Arbatov also is a member of the ruling Communist Party's policymaking Central Committee. The meeting, three hours and 15 minutes long, was more than twice as long as expected.

Speaking to reporters afterward, Graham refused to elaborate on the meeting, but when repeatedly questioned said that he and Arbatov discussed "bettering relations between our two countries, religion in our country, this country, some of the history of our two nations, how we have worked together in the past and hopefully how to solve the problems that face us in the future."

Graham, who once called Communists Satan worshippers, pointed to Arbatov and said: "I have met a very wonderful official here."

Both men smiled and exchanged banter reporters could not hear as Arbatov, a fluent English speaker, led the evangelist to a waiting black Chaika limousine. Graham then left for lunch at the residence of Metropolitan Filaret, head of the Russian Orthodox church's external affairs department. The state-authorized church is the preacher's official host.

Later Graham visited three Russian Orthodox churches packed with old women who wore brightly colored headscarves. He was driven to the front door of each church by limousine and stayed for only a few minutes at each service.

There was no indication any worshippers recognized him, but churches were unusually full, suggesting parishioners were told in advance that an important guest might be coming.

Graham has carefully avoided offending the government or his Soviet hosts, who arranged to house him in the posh Sovyetskaya hotel, normally reserved for foreign dignitaries.

He has released few details of his itinerary, apparently deferring to Soviet fears he will publicly attempt to intervene on behalf of religious dissidents. State-run media have ignored the visit but dissenters apparently learned about it via Western shortwave radio broadcasts.

The Kremlin tolerates religion but officially practices atheism, the denial of God's existence. All congregations must register with the state and recuiting religious followers is banned.

The most notable religious dissidents are six Soviet Pentecostalists living in the U.S. Embassy. They claim they were victims of religious persecution before they stormed past the embassy gates and were granted humanitarian refuge in June 1978.

Graham's attendance at the conference of "Religious Workers for Saving the Sacred Gift of Life from Nuclear Catastrophe" has focused world attention on the gathering, which the Russian Orthodox church organized.

Some of Graham's U.S. colleagues have criticized the visit, saying he will be used by Soviet propagandists to blame the United States for the arms race. Graham says the visit is non-political and denies reports the Reagan administration pressured him to scrap the trip.

Nicaragua Reports Fighting

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Government soldiers killed two "counterrevolutionary elements" and wounded eight others in a shootout this week 90 miles north of the capital, the Interior Ministry reported Saturday.

The report said the clash was Thursday in the department of Matagalpa and that there were no government casualties.

The announcement said one of the dead was the leader it identified as Carlos Luis Lizano Rodriguez. The ministry said the group was made up of 15 men who were "causing terror in the zone."

Bands of dissident Nicaraguan opposed to the leftist turn the Sandinista revolutionary government has been taking roam the rural areas of the countryside, and many apparently operate out of clandestine bases in Honduras. Clashes between them and government troops are frequent.

Nicaragua accuses Honduras and the United States of supporting the bands, a charge both countries deny.

Boat-Camping Trip Planned

The Greenville Recreation and Parks Department will sponsor a canoe-camping trip to Merchants Mill Pond State Park on Saturday and Sunday.

The pond, located north of Greenville, is a 750-acre swamp-forested pond dominated by gum trees and cypresses.

Some canoes and camp equipment are available for a nominal fee from the Recreation and Parks Department.

Participants should have prior canoeing experience. For more information, call Bill Twine at the department through the city phone, 752-4137.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" was originally titled "The Defense of Fort McHenry."

Vertical siding sheathes much of the home's exterior and the front entry door is cleverly placed for convenience. Inside, from a gracious foyer, visitors can glimpse the dramatic dining room, the design focus and its double-story sweep.

At rear of the plan, the service areas are grouped for efficiency. A utility room offers laundry and counter space that suggests added uses as a sewing or hobby center. The adjoining kitchen complex is made up of a corridor kitchen with breakfast bar and access to the patio, a bonus for barbecues.

Notable is the first floor bedroom, allowing parents a quiet spot of their own, complete with full bath and linen closet.

A partial second story includes two sizable bedrooms separated by another full bath. The level features abundant closet space and the unique balcony overlooking the dining area.

For additional storage space or possible finishing as a recreation room, a basement is outlined.

Showroom Highlights Market

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

There are two courses open when business is bad. You can tempt customers by paring prices for safe merchandise that has already proven itself. Or you can go out on a limb with something sensational.

Both approaches were evident at the recent April furniture market in North Carolina. Reeling from the effects of several years of curtailed demand for their products due to unemployment and diminished housing starts, and the closing of scores of retail stores and manufacturing plants, the survivors who gathered in High Point and nearby points largely were a gloomy lot.

In recognition of prior poor sales, diminished retailer attendance and smaller budgets among those who were present, many manufacturers limited new items.

Those catering to the affluent appeared least affected by hard times. Not surprisingly, the newsiest product introductions came from such manufacturers.

The most exciting new development was not a new product, but a new market building. Unlike other buildings which are frequented by buyers only a few weeks out of the year, the new Market Square building's showrooms will remain open year-round to serve designers and their clients. The building, a recycled old furniture factory, provides a setting of brick walls, high ceilings, huge windows and polished wood floors. Against such a backdrop, the furniture and accessories gleam like jewels in a masterly setting.

Market Square, only partially full now, is North Carolina's first design center. It represents furniture land's first attempt to come to grips with the increasing amounts of furniture being bought through designers.

The opening of the center is significant. The industry has recently been debating the wisdom of opening to the public its beautifully designed showrooms, many of which represent the state of the art when it comes to home furnishings display.

So far, such debates have always ended in a decision not to open the showrooms. But Market Square's success might change some minds on the subject.

Does the smaller number of new offerings mean that there will be nothing exciting to see when the furniture shown to retailers at market becomes available to consumers next fall?

Of course not. A walk through the giant complex yielded enough beautiful new items to give anyone susceptible a serious case of what one editor referred to as "the wants."

In wood furniture, 18th-century English and American styles authentically rendered in mahogany and cherry wood were widely displayed. Many of these collections were introduced last October and are now appearing in retail stores.

Also continuing an important new direction from October were a number of light wood — mostly scrubbed pine — collections of country furniture. These groups, many based on rustic antiques, have just started to appear in retail stores.

More in evidence at this market were oriental and French-inspired furniture collections. Most of the oriental styles are based on Chinese elements. But Shoji, by Bernhardt Furniture Co. of Lenoir, N.C., owes its design inspiration to Japanese architecture.

A painted Louis XVI bedroom by Baker Furniture, Grand Rapids, Mich., suggests a new direction in wood furniture. Painted finishes are somewhat out of favor. But, like Shoji, the decorated yet not too ornate furniture appeared to meet what designer John Mascheroni described as "a need for tastefully-applied decorative detailing."

In upholstered furniture, contemporary styles dominated. Alessandro's new sofa and chaise designs for Selig Manufacturing Co. of Leominster, Mass., represent a new direction in highly styled silhouettes formerly available only through interior designers.

The popularity of modular seating, which accounts for over half of all contemporary upholstered furniture sales, was obvious in the greatly expanded offerings in this category.

The increase in furniture designed to fit into small spaces, such as a studio apartment, was very evident.

This furniture takes two tacks. First of all, there are the small-scale replicas of larger pieces — settees instead of full-size sofas, small secretaries instead of large ones, smaller easy chairs, modular storage pieces that stack one atop the other.

Second, there are larger pieces designed to provide needed storage and perhaps to serve as a focal point in a room devoid of architectural interest. Armoires fitted out as home-entertainment centers or bars or for clothing storage are examples of this type of furniture.

As one manufacturer pointed out, most Americans live in one of the existing 85 million or so housing units built mainly before space considerations became acute. "This is still where the bulk of furniture is sold," according to Henry Timnick, president of Stanley Furniture Co.

However, the furniture industry knows many new customers do not have all the space they want. This is the wave of the future, said Keith Rowe, vice president of Rowe Furniture Co.

"Americans have been spoiled by lots of room and plenty of closets. That's changing. We are becoming more like the European countries," said Rowe. He expects to see the day when people will move into a place equipped only with bare walls. "They'll have to buy all the necessities," he said.

Here's the Answer

Q. — Our fuse box in the utility room has the regular type of fuses in them — the kind that screw into place like an electric light bulb. I have just been told there is some way of telling when a fuse blows out whether it is caused by an overload or a short. Unfortunately, the person who told me doesn't know the difference. Can you help?

A. — Generally, on a regular fuse of that kind, the little metal strip at the top of the fuse will break when an overload has caused the fuse to blow. When the see-through material at the top of the fuse gets black, the cause usually is a short.

Q. — A few weeks ago you had a story about using a hacksaw. I should have cut it out, but I didn't. What I want to know is whether the blade of a hacksaw cuts on the forward or the rear stroke?

A. — It cuts on the forward stroke. Therefore, as you draw the saw back, do not put any pressure on it.

Q. — Our kitchen sink is beginning to drain a bit slowly. It hasn't prevented us from using the sink, but I see trouble ahead in the near future. I know the best way to unclog the drain is to take off the cleanout plug at the bottom of the trap under the sink, which may be a good idea except that our sink trap has no such plug. What do I do?

A. — You will have to remove the trap itself, which you will see is connected to the vertical pipe and the horizontal pipe under the sink. Loosen the nuts holding the trap in place, working very carefully with a wrench and placing adhesive tape or something similar over the places which come in contact with the wrench to prevent marring the metal.

How you silence a squeaking floor depends on whether the underside can be reached. If it can, the repair method differs completely from that necessary when it cannot.

Why does a floor squeak in the first place? Usually, because two pieces of wood rub against each other, an action caused because somebody has stepped on the top board or low-humidity conditions have caused the wood to contract and high-humidity conditions have caused it to expand. Squeaks also will occur when boards rub against nails or nails move up and down.

A squeak that occurs in a floor where the underside cannot be reached can sometimes be halted by sprinkling bath poweder or graphite powder between the boards in the area of the noise, but this is only a temporary remedy. The squeaks will soon be back, perhaps in a week, perhaps in a month, but inevitably. It's just a matter of when the powder or graphite wears away.

A lasting repair requires insertion of ring or spiral nails into the floor where each squeak is. The nails must be driven in two at a time, angled so that the tips almost meet inside the wood. If you could see through the wood, you would see that the nails form a V inside the floor.

The irregularities on the nails prevent them from pulling out at some time in the future, as ordinary nails might.

Two steps are necessary to perform this task properly. First, you must drill a pilot hole for each nail so the wood, especially if it's hardwood, will not split. Two, after each nail is nearly in, use a nailset to hammer it about an eighth of an inch below the surface.

The resulting hole then should be filled with plastic wood or wood putty. It's best to apply the filling so that it's a tiny bit above the surface. When it's hard, sand down the excess. This will leave a smooth, tough-to-spot repair.

When the underside of a floor is accessible, the repair is tackled from underneath. In that event, you will need an assistant, who can be anyone who will walk across the floor to let you know where the squeaks are. He or she walks back and forth while you are downstairs, using a piece or chalk or other marker so that you can put an X or line wherever there is a squeak.

In many cases, all that is necessary is to drive one or more wedges between the floor and one or more joists.

In other cases, use your common sense to tell you how to silence the noise. For instance, occasionally, inserting pieces of wood between the joists at an angle and snug up against the subflooring will do the trick.

Keep in mind always that the idea is to prevent the top flooring and the subflooring from moving against each other or to prevent the flooring as a whole from pulling up and down against a joist.

Another excellent way to stop the top flooring and the subflooring from rubbing against each other is to drive screws from underneath so that the two floorings are brought together securely. Each screw must be at least one inch in length and no more than 1¼ inches, since it is vital that it does not come out upstairs.

Try one screw first to be certain it hasn't come through, then you can go ahead with the rest. Here again, your job will be easier if you first drill holes to receive the screws.

Each time you drive a screw into place, have your assistant stand on that spot to bring the two floors together.

(If you do repair work around the house, you will find much valuable information in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

Unprecedented Number Of Primaries

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State Elections Director Alex Brock said the rush to file for congressional primaries has created an unprecedented number of primaries, especially for an off-year election.

Because of the number of candidates filing, Brock said 12 Republican or Democratic primaries will be required in the 11 congressional districts. The date for those primaries is June 29.

"This is an unprecedented number of primaries, especially in an off year," Brock said. "I predict we'll have one of our best (voter) turnouts."

Brock said he believed the large candidate turnout is the result of publicity surrounding the General Assembly's repeated attempts to redraw state House and Senate districts, and to set a primary date to the satisfaction of the U.S. Justice Department.

There was no last-minute rush to file for candidacy as the noon deadline arrived Friday.

Legislative candidates had the same filing deadline, although their filings were conducted by county boards of elections. Over the next two weeks, those offices are expected to mail candidates' names to the office of Secretary of State Thad Eure for ballots to be printed.

Brock said he expected no more candidates to file, although congressional candidates have until May 17 to file for office by petition. The petitions require signatures of a certain percentage of voters in the candidate's district and are seldom used to get on the ballot, Brock said.

Only one of 10 congressman is unopposed in his bid for re-election while four others are without primary opposition, but will face an opponent in November's general election. Rep. James T. Broyhill, R-Lenoir, in the 10th District, is one unopposed for re-election.

Six candidates — three Republicans and three Democrats — will vie for the 2nd District congressional seat left vacant by retiring Rep. L.H. Fountain. The contenders include former U.S. Attorney H.M. "Mickey" Michaux of Durham and former Duke University and National Basketball Association basketball standout John "Jack" Marin.

Fifth District Rep. Stephen Neal, D-Winston-Salem, has to get past Wallace B. Ray of Winston-Salem in the primary. In the general election, the winner will face one of four people battling for the Republican nod, a group made up of Wallace Vanhoy of Winston-Salem, Anne Bagnal of Winston-Salem, Warren B. Brooks of Clemmons and C. Lincoln Puckett of Mount Airy.

The last candidates to file Friday were Republican incumbent William Hendon of the 11th District; Michaux in the 2nd District; T.C. Gibson of Lumberton, a Democrat in the 7th District; Gene Leggett of Emerald Isle, a Republican in the 1st District; James McIntyre III of Greenville, a Republican in the 1st District; and Superior Court Judge Preston Cornelius of Mooresville, a Democrat in the 9th District.

Beacon's Reach. An outstanding approach to the sea.

The villages of Pine Knoll Shores West, near Morehead City, have become well-known for the variety of exceptional seaside lifestyles. And now, we've brought them all together under the new name, Beacon's Reach — to offer you the most far-reaching new idea in oceanfront community living anywhere on the coast of North Carolina.

With prices from $90,000, Beacon's Reach features a superb choice of beachfront lots, condominiums on the ocean, and quiet soundside residences along the peaceful shores of Bogue Banks.

Because we offer a "Vacation Colony" environment, residents can choose to live in any of several distinct village clusters. Each with its own special character. Each with its own special charm.

We outshine them all.

Situated within the sweep of the beam from Cape Lookout Lighthouse, Beacon's Reach lies amidst the ancient Maritime Forest and white, rolling dunes of Bogue Banks Island.

Because the island actually runs East and West, for much of the year the sun both rises and sets over the ocean. And the relaxed quality of life is as constant as the sunshine. Here, the word "vacation" takes on a whole new meaning and becomes an all-encompassing, permanent way of life.

A natural heritage that's here to stay.

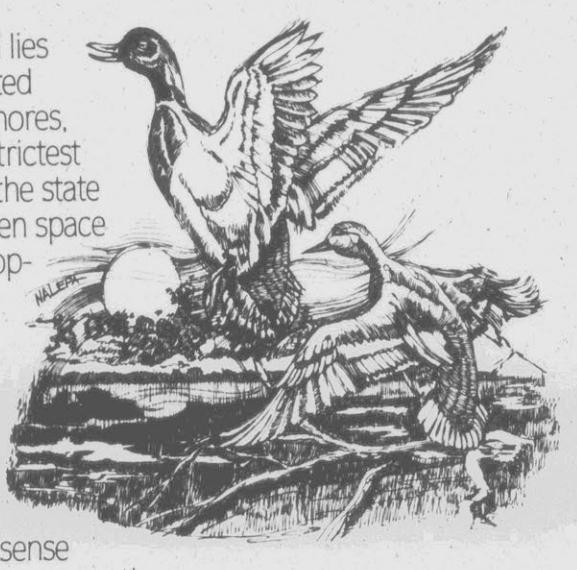

At Beacon's Reach, the Cedar, Wax Myrtle, Yaupon and Live Oak stretch from sound to sea, forming a natural shield against coastal conditions. And since our unique Maritime Forest vegetation makes our dune system unusually stable, the result is one of the most impressive primary dune systems on the Coast of North Carolina, averaging more than 20 feet in height.

The property itself lies adjacent to a 300-acre marine resources nature preserve, set aside by the Theodore Roosevelt family. The Roosevelts have long played an important role in maintaining the island's natural integrity. And that involvement is still going on.

Our man-made structures are complements to nature.

Realizing we could never improve on the natural elegance of Beacon's Reach, we've patterned our development after the topographical designs which were here in the first place.

Roads within the community have been planned in harmony with the contours of the land. Each and every residence is designed to complement the delicate balance of its natural setting. And many of our oceanfront homes even take their design directly from the shape of the dunes themselves.

Beacon's Reach lies within the incorporated town of Pine Knoll Shores, which enforces the strictest zoning ordinance in the state when it comes to open space and density of development. So with a low average density of only six units per acre, we can assure residents quality construction, breathtaking natural surroundings, and a sense of community, all at the same time.

Amenities that stretch from horizon to horizon.

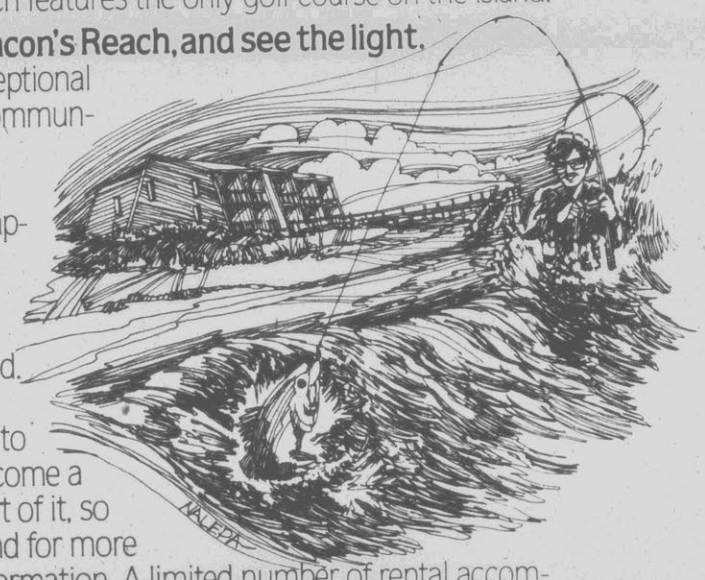

At Beacon's Reach you can swim, surf, sail, or simply spend your time sunning yourself on the beach.

In the surf, and in the sounds, you'll fish for Speckled Trout, Bluefish and Channel Bass. Offshore, you'll find prize Red Snapper and battle Marlin in the deep, warm waters of the Gulf Stream.

And when you're not fishing, you can enjoy some of the best duck hunting you'll find anywhere.

As a community, Beacon's Reach offers its own special package of amenities, including swimming pools, all-weather lighted tennis courts, and almost two full miles of clean, white beach. Our Westport Marina provides safe harbor and slips for more than 50 boats. And residents are also offered prepaid membership in the Bogue Banks Country Club, which features the only golf course on the island.

Visit Beacon's Reach, and see the light.

It's an exceptional seaside community, which provides a personal approach to vacation living all year 'round. And we want you to become a part of it, so send for more information. A limited number of rental accommodations are also available if you'd like to make a preliminary visit.

ECU Nine Selected For ECAC Tourney; To Open Vs. Dukes

A Staff Report

East Carolina University was selected Saturday as one of the four teams to participate in the ECAC-South's post-season tournament in Harrisonburg, Va., starting Thursday. The double-elimination tournament winner receives an automatic berth in to the NCAA playoffs.

East Carolina, 30-12, was seeded third in the four-team field and will meet number two ranked James Madison, the host team, 40-13-1, Thursday at 3 p.m.

Top seeded Old Dominion, 33-10-2, will meet Catholic, 19-12, in the other game at noon.

The losers meet at noon Friday, with the winners playing at 3 p.m. The losers' bracket finals will be at noon on Saturday, with the championship game at 3 p.m. Should a second championship game be necessary, it would be played at a time to be determined on Sunday.

"I'm happy that we got the bid," ECU Coach Hal Baird said. "I did hope that we could play someone other than Madison in the first round, since it's at their home field. They were 24-1 on their home field this year, and we were hoping to draw someone else.

"We're happy about the bid and unlike the last time we went to a tournament, we have a little time to prepare. I called the kids (Saturday) and we'll work out (today) and I think we'll be on top of our game. They're through with exams now and should come back refreshed and ready to play."

Baird said that the Pirates will go with Bill Wilder in the first game of the tournament. "I really don't see much difference in which one we'll use, Wilder or (Bobby) Patterson, since the other will be going in the second game, no matter who we play."

The coach feels that while it will be tough, the Pirates do have a chance. "I think that the field really is tougher than the NCAA regional we went to. Old Dominion and Madison both can swing the bats better than we do, but I don't think they can go as deep into their pitching staff as we can.

"Too, if we can get into the winners' bracket, that will help us. Getting by Madison on their field would put us in excellent shape."

Baird expects that Old Dominion will hold off its ace, Jim Ambrose, for the second round. "That would put them in good position if they could do that and win."

Baird added that he feels that Patterson and Wilder are both number one ECU pitchers.

"I think our chances of winning are as good as anybody's. But I don't think anyone can underestimate the value of playing on your own home field, either." Baird pointed out that Madison hosted the tournament last year, too, losing in the first round, then coming back in the losers' bracket to down Old Dominion twice in the finals to win the title.

Should the Pirates fail in their effort to win the tournament, Baird feels that the team still may have a shot at an at-large bid in the NCAA field. "I think we'd have to get into the finals, so that we'd have at worst, two wins and two losses. I don't think we can go up there and lose two in a row and still have a chance, but I'm just speculating."

The Pirates plan to leave Wednesday for the tournament.

The Pirates last made the NCAA field in 1980, Baird's first year, qualifying as an at-large entrant with a 28-7 record. The Pirates, however, were not picked for the tournament until two days before the start of the regional they were placed in — at Bangor, Maine, and did not practice for two weeks prior to getting in one day's work before the trip — where they lost out in two straight games.

McEnroe Upset In T Of C

NEW YORK (AP) — John McEnroe, moving uneasily around the court on a gimpy ankle, played right into Eddie Dibbs' game plan.

"I just wanted to play steady, move the ball around and let him make the errors," Dibbs said.

McEnroe, top-seeded in the $500,000 WCT Tournament of Champions at the West Side Tennis Club, did just that, committing 42 unforced errors as Dibbs advanced into the finals with a 7-6, 6-3 victory Saturday.

"I might have got him on a bad day. There was a big momentum factor, especially in the first set," said Dibbs, the defending champion here although seeded 10th in this year's 61-player tournament. "If he had won that first set, things might have been different."

Dibbs now faces second-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia in Sunday's nationally televised finals (ABC-TV). Lendl reached the finals in his 18th consecutive tournament by eliminating Jose Luis Clerc of Argentina, the No. 3 seed, 6-2, 7-5.

"He's playing awfully well," Dibbs said about Lendl. "He gets a lot of balls back ... He's playing well, but I'm playing well, too. If I get into the match early, I have a very good chance. I might have to attack a little more than usual."

In their last clash, three weeks ago in Houston, Lendl defeated Dibbs 7-5, 6-2 in the quarterfinals.

When told that Clerc had predicted that the winner of the Lendl-Clerc match would capture the $100,000 first-place prize, Lendl said: "I hope he's right."

Dibbs outlasted McEnroe 13-11 in the first-set tie-breaker. McEnroe, who sprained his ankle during practice in Brussels, Belgium, two months ago, twisted it again in the eight game of the opening set.

Dibbs, ranked 22nd in the world, exploited the injury, hitting behind left-hander at every chance. He broke McEnroe to capture the eighth game, then staved off three set points in the 10th game to hold serve.

The two exchanged service breaks in the 11th and 12th games, sending the first set into the tie-breaker.

McEnroe, ranked No. 1 in the world on the Association of Tennis Professionals computer, lost the first four points, but battled back to knot the score 5-5. Dibbs failed to cash in on his first five set points and staved off McEnroe's set point No. 4.

But he finally prevailed, winning the final point off McEnroe's serve.

Dibbs then broke McEnroe in the second game of the second set. McEnroe moved back on serve by breaking back in the fifth game. The came the crucial sixth game.

McEnroe, a bundle of unforced errors, was up 40-love before losing his serve, giving Dibbs a 4-2 lead.

The left-hander, who lives about eight miles from the West Side Tennis Club, site of the U.S. Open until 1978, committed 42 unforced errors as he failed for the third straight year to win this tournament. McEnroe lost in the finals two years ago to Vitas Gerulaitis and was upset last year by Carlos Kirmayr of Brazil in the second round.

The speedy Dibbs is known for his clay court powers, while McEnroe has only won a four-man exhibition on clay since turning pro, his best showing otherwise being a quarterfinalist at the French Open in 1981.

Milwaukee Batters Minnesota, 12-1

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Mike Caldwell figured he would get some hitting support eventually, but he was beginning to worry that it might be later than sooner.

It finally happened Saturday. Gorman Thomas paced a 12-hit Milwaukee attack with a three-run homer and an RBI single to back Caldwell's five-hit pitching as the Brewers routed the Minnesota Twins 12-1.

"After not getting runs for two or three games, they go out and get 12 and it makes me look like I'm not pitching that good," Caldwell said.

Caldwell has been one of the better pitchers in the American League this season, even though he has only two victories to show for it.

The Brewers had scored only 14 runs in Caldwell's previous five games, and seven of those runs were in one game.

His earned run average dropped to 2.72 after Saturday's game. It is 1.59 for games not counting his one bad outing, an 8-1 defeat by Cleveland April 15.

"I've had better results before, but I don't know if I've thrown any better than I have lately," he said. "I've developed a couple of off-speed pitches — a palm ball to compensate my fastball and an off-speed slider to compensate my sinker. The effect has been to keep hitters off-stride a little more.

"An off-speed pitch is a tremendous weapon against a young team," he said. "An older team can guess with you and sit on a pitch, but a young, aggressive team like Minnesota won't wait on a particular pitch. They'll hit it where it's pitched."

"I never thought he lost it," Twins' second baseman Rob Wilfong said. "He knows how to pitch. He makes you hit the ball on the ground or not hit it at all."

The Brewers jumped to a 4-0 lead against loser Terry Felton, 0-4, in the third.

Paul Molitor walked and stole second and Robin Yount beat out an infield hit. Molitor took third when Cecil Cooper grounded into a fielder's choice, and Cooper then stole second.

Molitor scored on Ben Oglivie's grounder and Ted Simmons was intentionally walked. Thomas followed with his fourth homer of the year. All four of Thomas' homers have come against the Twins.

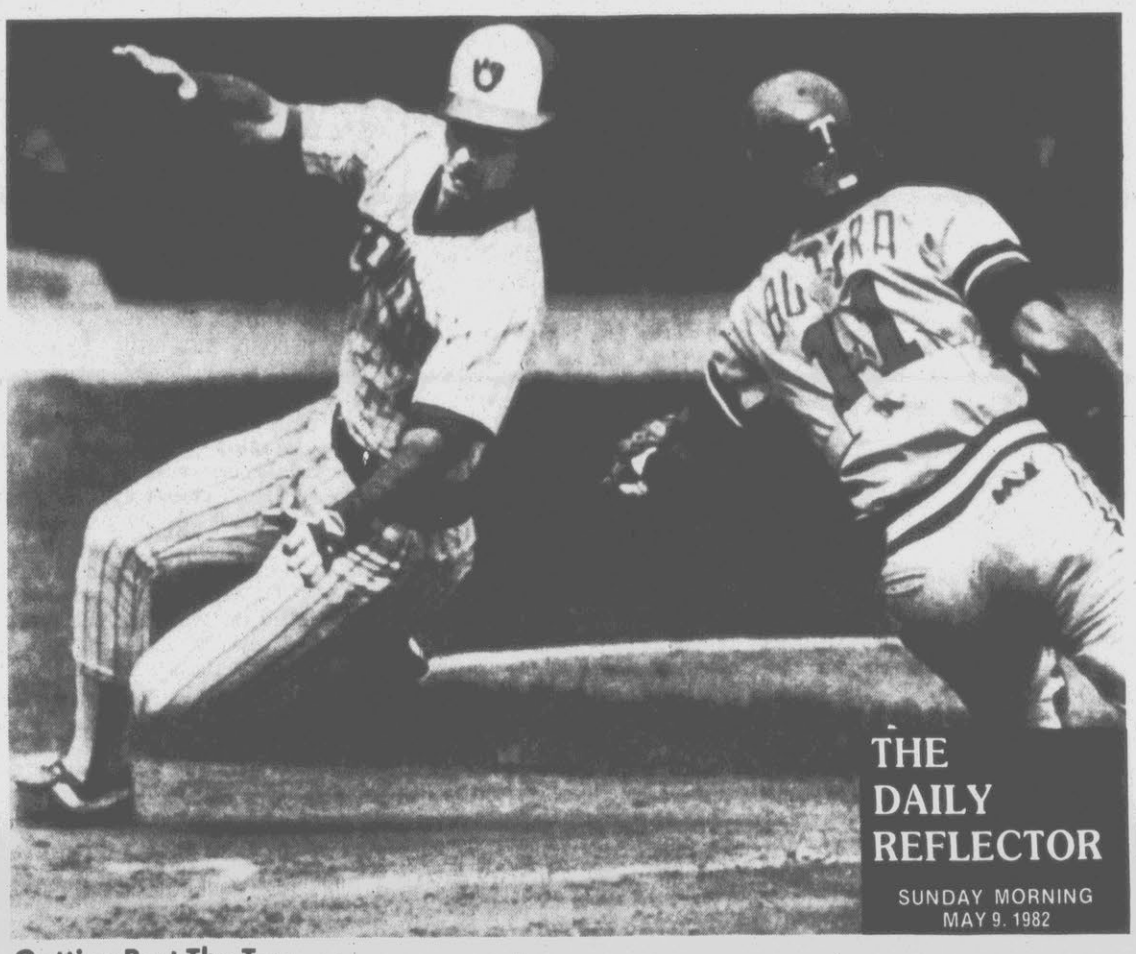

The Brewers made it 7-0 with three runs against Darrel Jackson in the sixth on singles by Charley Moore and Mark Brouhard and a bunt single by Jim Gantner.

Molitor hit a potential double-play grounder back to Jackson, whose high throw to the plate sailed back to the screen for an error as Moore and Brouhard scored. Gantner also tried to score, but was tagged out by Jackson on a throw back to the plate.

Molitor raced all the way to third on the play and scored on a sacrifice fly by Yount.

The Twins scored in the seventh agaonst Caldwell, 2-2, on a double by Kent Hrbek and a single by Jesus Vega. Hrbek had an infield single in the fourth to extend his consecutive game hitting streak to 18, longest in the major leagues this season.

Rozelle To Fight Court Decision

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Faced with one of the most crucial issues in his 22-year tenure as National Football League commissioner, Pete Rozelle has vowed to fight all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary after the league was found in violation of antitrust laws.

The NFL also plans to seek congressional action to place it and other sports leagues in the category of baseball, where antitrust laws do not apply.

"We certainly lost this round," Rozelle said after a U.S. District Court jury returned a unanimous verdict Friday saying the league was in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act in refusing to permit the Oakland Raiders from moving to the vacant Los Angeles Coliseum.

It took a jury of six women only 5½ hours of deliberation after a 23-day trial to decide in favor of the Los Angeles Coliseum and the Raiders. However, it wasn't known when and if the Raiders would move.

Another suit for compensation was scheduled Sept.20 with the same jury. The Coliseum has asked $53 million damages and the Raiders $160 million.

Joseph L. Alioto, attorney for the Raiders, filed for an injunction to permit immediate movement. Defense attorney Patrick Lynch said a stay would be asked if the injunction was granted.

"We are disappointed in the jury's verdict and plan to ask for an expedited appeal at the first opportunity," Rozelle said at a news conference after the decision.

A smiling Al Davis, Raiders' managing partner, who was present when the decision was announced, said he didn't know when the team would move because, "I don't know about all the legal ramifications."

Rozelle, who was not present when the verdict was disclosed, said, "Specific details of the appeal will be determined after consultation with the other 27 (NFL) clubs and league attorneys. We feel we are partners and not competitors."

Two issues were ruled on by the jury. First, that NFL rule 4.3 — requiring a three-fourths vote of the 28 league teams to permit a team to move — violates

O's Palmer Wants To Be Traded

BALTIMORE (AP) — Baltimore pitcher Jim Palmer has asked to be traded because he says he feels he has been made the scapegoat for the teams' poor record, according to a published report.

Palmer said he met with Manager Earl Weaver prior to Friday night's 5-3 victory over the California Angels when he made the request, according to a copyright story published in the Sunday Baltimore News American.

"It was a very illogical meeting," Palmer is quoted as saying. "I'm not the reason why we've been losing."

The Orioles' record stood at 10-14 going into Saturday night's game against the Angels.

Weaver told the 36-year-old veteran who's in his 17th season with the Orioles he believed he still had a pitching future, Palmer said.

Weaver also said the club had tried to deal Palmer, but could find no takers, the newspaper reported.

"They say nobody wants me," Palmer said. "If that's so, I'd like the chance to make my own deal."

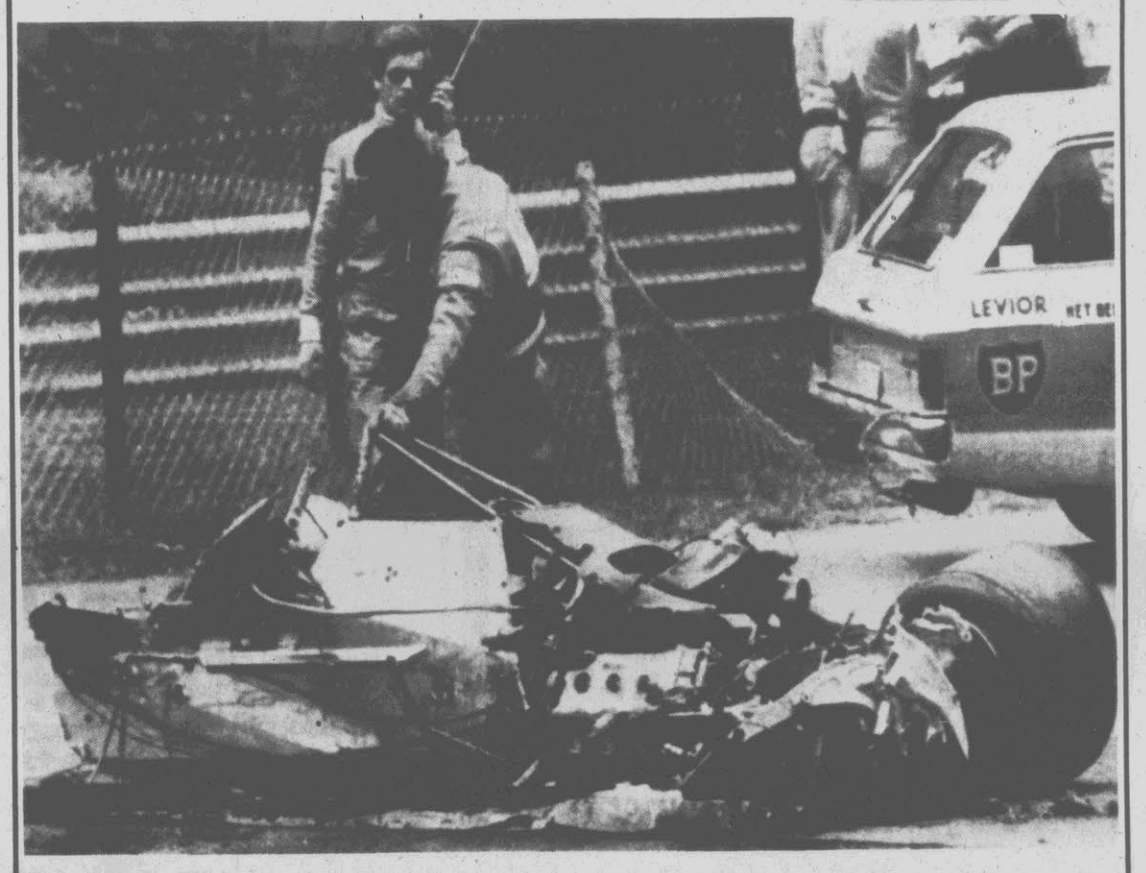

Palmer said Weaver told him he planned to start in his place either Sammy Stewart or Ross Grimsley Monday night against the Oakland A's. He also was told the demotion was only temporary, according to Palmer.

What has set off the latest round in the continuing Weaver-Palmer dispute is Weaver's ordering Palmer to the bullpen. Palmer started in Thursday night's game against the Angels, but asked to be taken out because of a stiff neck after facing only three batters.

"If I'm benched for having a stiff neck," Palmer said, "then it's very unfair and it's time to move on...

"Don't they know it was embarrassing to me to come out (of the Thursday night's game) in such a short span? It was very frustrating to come out like that, so I went and ran two or three miles around the periphery of the stadium. There was some conjecture that a man with a stiff neck can't run 3 miles. Well, I know Earl never pitched, but there is a big difference between pitching in a major league game and running three miles."

Pittsburgh Slips Past Reds In 15 Innings

CINCINNATI (AP) — Johnny Ray and Jason Thompson delivered run-scoring singles in the 15th inning Saturday night, giving the Pittsburgh Pirates a 4-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

The Pirates were held to one scratch single for eighth innings by Bruce Berenyi, but tied the score 2-2 in the ninth on RBI singles by Bill Madlock and Thompson.

Lee Lacy, who started the ninth-inning rally by drawing a walk as a pinch hitter, led off the 15th with a single off Bob Shirley, 1-2, and was sacrificed to second. Ray then drilled a single, his third hit, to snap the tie. After an intentional walk to Madlock, Thompson lashed a single to score Ray.

Manny Sarmiento, 1-0, the Pirates' fifth pitcher, hurled two shutout innings to earn the victory. The Pirates used 23 players and the Reds 18.

Lacy walked to start the Pittsburgh ninth and one out later Ray and Madlock singled to cut Cincinnati's lead to 2-1. Thompson greeted reliever Joe Price with a game-tying single.

Rozelle Vows To Fight To Supreme Court...

antitrust law, and secondly that the NFL did not act in good faith and fair dealings in the Oakland request.

The trial was the second in the case. The first trial, which lasted 55 days with 12½ days of jury deliberations, ended in a hung jury. Although that count was 8-2 in favor of the Los Angeles Coliseum and the Raiders, it takes a unanimous vote to decide such an issue.

Alioto said, "This could be the greatest thing in the world for professional football. An appeal would be a sham appeal. They don't have a chance. We were very, very careful."

Ironically, Alioto represented the NFL in the Joe Kapp suit several years ago when the league won against the former quarterback who now coaches at the University of California.

The plaintiffs claimed successfully that rule 4.3 limited competition.

An attorney for the defense, Joseph Cotchett, said an appeal would be based on refusal of Judge Harry Pregerson to allow a change of venue for the second trial and "other issues."

Rozelle said a final decision in the Raiders' favor would:

—Impair the league's ability to back up the commitment of NFL franchises to their areas, resulting in the relocation of clubs under auction-type conditions.

—Create serious obstacles to NFL expansion.

—Produce strong pressures for abandonment of league policies on revenue-sharing and franchise ownership that have enabled the league to keep franchises in cities of all sizes throughout the nation.

—Invite new internal and external challenges to virtually every provision of the NFL constitution and by-laws.

There was no immediate comment from other professional sports leagues.

"Certainly we lost this round," Rozelle said. "We will see what happens in the future."

He said the league was preparing a bill for introduction in Congress, but "we want to get a bill they will accept."

Rozelle added: "The NFL had no prospect of immediate financial benefit in defending this case, but did so facing a potentially destructive damage liability. This risk was taken because of the clubs' belief that the antitrust laws were never intended to overrule the interest of NFL communities or the league at large in favor of the profit motivations of a particular team."

Davis had contended the 54,000-seat Oakland Coliseum was not suited to competition during the 1980s and he had no assurance that changes would be made.

The 90,000-seat coliseum in Los Angeles has not had a pro football tenant since the Rams moved to nearby Anaheim in 1980.

It was the Los Angeles Coliseum that first filed suit in 1978 when it said Rozelle could give no assurance an expansion team would be awarded the city. Oakland joined the suit later. The league had voted 22-0, with five abstentions, in 1980 against the Raiders' proposed move.

How long the appeal process is uncertain.

Lynch, who headed the NFL defense team, said, "The appeal process, in my opinion, could take a minimum of one year and as long as four or five years."

Rozelle said, "If the jury's verdict and related rulings of the court are sustained, sports leagues will have been told that league objectives and community commitments are of no legal consequence in antitrust cases. The long-range effects could include a serious erosion in the competitive balance that makes sports entertaining. The final result could be a loss of both fan support and public goodwill."

"We will not expand until we get clarification of our status — congressional or the appeal process."

Davis said, "I love the stature of professional football but the NFL has been told for 15 years some of its rules are illegal. They changed the compensation rule and the draft rule to make them legal. This rule (4.3) can be changed also to make it the law of the land. We went for credibility and facts. I don't like their arrogance."

Rozelle, asked about other clubs' feelings toward Davis, said, "There are strong feelings in the league — the other 27 clubs. He'll play in Oakland unless the court stops him. We intend to pursue all possibilities of appeal including the Supreme Court."

NBA PLAYOFFS

Celtics, 76ers To Battle Again

BOSTON (AP) — Just one year ago, after a dramatic seven-game playoff for the National Basketball Association's Eastern Conference championship, observers wondered what, if anything, the Boston Celtics and the Philadelphia 76ers could ever do for an encore.

Now, as in a "same time, same place, next year" soap opera, that time of year has arrived with the two powers ready to go at it again. And only the next couple of weeks will determine if it's possible to match the drama of one year ago.

The 76ers, who charged to a three games to one lead only to fall in seven games to the Celtics, were not convinced they had been beaten by a better team. They still don't think so and are bent on vengeance.

The Celtics, who followed their mighty comeback by going on to win their 14th NBA title in 24 years, are determined to prove the playoff victory over the 76ers was no fluke.

While bidding to become the first champion to repeat since Boston's Bill Russell & Co. in 1969, the Celtics also are seeking acknowledgment of greatness.

"We achieved one goal by winning 60 or more games for the third season in a row for the best record in the league, but there's a long way to go to achieve our other goal of winning the championship a second straight year," Boston Coach Bill Fitch said on the eve of the best-of-seven series opener Sunday at Boston Garden.

The Celtics are coming off a war with the physical Washington Bullets. Boston finished off the upstart Bullets in five games. However, one game went into overtime and the series clincher was a double overtime cliffhanger.

"Nothing is easy at this time of year," Fitch said. "When you get to this stage, it's jut one great team against another. Washington didn't make it to where they did on luck. And neither did Philadelphia."

The 76ers, itching for another crack at Boston for a year, earned the opportunity by eliminating the Milwaukee Bucks in a six-game playoff.

Last year the Celtics and 76ers began their showdown even for the season. They split the regular season six-game series and finished with identical 62-20 records. This season Boston won four of six games with Philadelphia while compiling a 63-19 mark, five games better than the 76ers.

Lakers Square Off Vs. Spurs

LOS ANGELES (AP) — San Antonio Coach Stan Albeck is aware that the Spurs generally haven't been successful in playoff situations over the years. But he believes that's changed.

The Spurs have made the playoffs in each of their six years in the National Basketball Association and have won the Midwest Division title four times, including this season. But they have yet to advance to the league's championship series.

"I think that we've taken the 'choker' tag off," Albeck said as the Spurs prepared for Sunday's opener of the best-of-seven Western Conference championship series against the Los Angeles Lakers. "Tell me we're chokers. I'm tired of hearing it."

The Spurs obviously didn't choke against Seattle in their Western Conference semifinal series. They beat the SuperSonics in five games of the scheduled best-of-seven series. That might have surprised some observers, but not the Lakers.

"They're a better team than Seattle," said Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley. "San Antonio has a great team. They don't have the marquee names, but they have some players. You don't beat Seattle four games to one with tuna salad."

One reason why many thought the Sonics would beat the Spurs was because San Antonio only managed to split its last 40 games of the regular season. But the club seemed to play a high level against Seattle.

"What we did was play consistent, keep our poise and concentration and win with defense and rebounding," said Albeck, who also might have mentioned the exceptional play of reserves Dave Corzine, Mike Bratz and Gene Banks.

The Lakers, who swept Phoenix in fowr games to advance to the Western Conference championship series, are heavy favorites over the Spurs, but Riley isn't convinced.

"I don't think we have the edge," said the Lakers' first-year coach. "Their character was tested during the last few weeks of the regular season. They started losing a lot and could have gone south. But they battled back and fought their way out. That scare, I think, made them a better team."

As has been the case since they joined the NBA, the Spurs are led by George Gervin, the league scoring champion four times who averaged 32.3 points per game this season.

However, the Spurs have other scoring threats, mainly Mike Mitchell, who scored 41 points in a San Antonio victory over the Lakers March 21.

Indy Practice Runs Begin

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Gary Bettenhausen, a veteran of 13 starts in the Indianapolis 500, sped past Pete Halsmer Saturday to earn the distinction of being first on the track as practice for the 66th running of the race began at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

"This was all planned out," said Bettenhausen, the 40-year-old son of the late Tony Bettenhausen who was killed in a crash during practice here for the 1961 race. "We're here to race. We worked on the cars all winter. Lindsey Hopkins (the car's owner) has been coming here for years. We didn't run in the first two races this year and began thinking about being first on the track last month.

"We worked long and hard to accomplish it. We're hoping its the start of a series of firsts."

The track opened at approximately 1:15 p.m. with about 12 of the record 109 entries making a quick appearance although most of the top drivers in champ car auto racing kept their cars in the garage for the opening day.

Bettenhausen's speed for his first lap only was around 83 mph — more than a 100 mph slower than the time he thinks it will take to qualify for the 33-car field in the May 30 race.

"It's going to take over 200 to get in the front row and I think the slow speed, if the weather conditions are good, will be in the range of 190-195," said Bettenhausen, whose best finish here was a third in 1980 when he started the race in the 32nd position.

Rick Mears, who won here in 1979, has finished first in both races this year and was in the front of the pack for most of each race. Mears, 30, is considered the early favorite in his new Penske PC10.

"He hasn't been catchable in the past two races this year," said Bettenhausen. "But 500 miles is a long way and you can't count on anything here."

Among the drivers who were out early Saturday were rookie Desire Wilson, the 28-year-old South African native who hopes to join Janet Guthrie as the only women to qualify at Indianapolis.

Chip Ganassi, Bobby Rahal and Hector Rebaque — members of a record rookie field of 28 entered in the race — also were out early.

UNC Takes Carmichael Cup

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — For the fifth time in the past six years, the University of North Carolina has captured sole possession of the Carmichael Cup, the symbol of all-around athletic excellence in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The Tar Heels, who tied with North Carolina State for the coveted award one year ago, edged past Clemson by a single point, compiling 70 points to 69 for the Tigers, to win the cup for the 10th time outright. Maryland has also won the cup 10 times.

North Carolina captured the cup on the strength of a first-place finish in lacrosse, a sport in which Clemson does not field a team. The Tar Heels won their share of the cup last year in the same manner.

North Carolina took championships in basketball and baseball and lacrosse and finished second in four others. The Tar Heels were first, second or third in all 11 sports except soccer and outdoor track.

Clemson captured four championships, tied for a fifth and finished out of the top two in four others. N.C. State took swimming and wrestling crowns while tying in track. Duke took the tennis title.

Mancini Pounds Frias For Title

But Mancini recovered quickly enough to floor Frias with a left hook of his own, then pounded him into submission to win the title when referee Richard Green stopped the fight at 2:54 of the first round.

"I was just hoping to get through the round," the newly crowned champion said. "Art came out and he stung me early."

"He was right on top of me," said Mancini. "Who knows how long it would have went? It would have been brutal."

Frias, who was cut under the left eye and bleeding heavily, didn't protest when Green stopped the fight, but said afterward he felt he should have been allowed to continue.

"I was stunned, but I knew what was going on," he said. "I felt it shouldn't have been stopped. It would've been an even round."

Frias had tried to cover up, but Mancini pursued his relentless attack, hitting the champion with 25 to 30 punches to the head before Green moved in to stop the bout.

The fight was all action from the beginning, as both boxers went directly to the center of the ring and started trading blows.

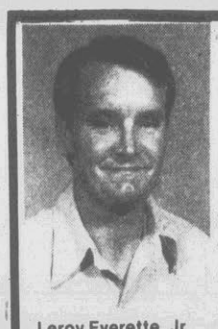

Mancini captured the title in his second attempt in only seven months. He suffered his only defeat last October when World Boxing Council lightweight champion Alexis Arguello knocked him out in the 14th round.

The fight went just as Mancini had said it would earlier in the week when he predicted that neither fighter would have any trouble finding the other.

"We'll be doing business in the center of the ring," he said at the time.

Frias, who captured the title with an eighth-round knockout of Claude Noel last December, was making his second title defense. In his first defense in January he stopped Ernesto Espana in the ninth victory.

Mancini, 135, was cheered on by a large contingent of supporters from his hometown of Youngstown, Ohio. He earlier dedicated the fight to his father.

Boston Slips Past Rangers; Phils Whip Padres

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Chuck Rainey and Mark Clear combined on a six-hitter and Jerry Remy scored the winning run after reaching base on an error in the sixth inning as the Boston Red Sox edged the Texas Rangers 2-1 Saturday night.

Rainey, 3-0, who gave way to Clear with one out in the eighth and a runner on third, struck out six, walked one and allowed all the Texas hits. Clear, who earned his fourth save, struck out Mark Wagner and George Wright to leave the potential tying run on third.

Texas' Jon Matlack, 0-2, getting his first start of the season, surrendered six hits and only one earned run. He struck out five and walked none.

Trailing 1-0, Boston scored its runs in the sixth. Reid Nichols opened with a single and Remy sacrificed, but was safe when first baseman Pat Putnam dropped the throw. Nichols went to third on the play and scored on a double by Dwight Evans. Remy scored when Jim Rice grounded out.

It was the 15th victory in the last 18 games for the Red Sox and gave them a 2½-game lead in the American League East. The Rangers had snapped a 12-game losing streak Friday night.

ST.LOUIS (AP) — Lonnie Smith walked to lead off the bottom of the ninth inning, stole his second base of the game and scored on a sacrifice and error to give the St. Louis Cardinals an 8-7 victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday night.

Smith's run pinned the defeat on Atlanta relief ace Rick Camp, 3-2, the Braves' fourth pitcher. St. Louis bullpen ace Bruce Sutter, 1-1, was the winner desite yielding an Atlanta run in the eighth.

Lonnie Smith started the bottom of the ninth by walking on a 3-2 pitch and swiped second on the next pitch with Ozzie Smith at bat. Ozzie Smith then bunted to the left of the mound. Camp's throw got away from first baseman Chris Chambliss for an error and Lonnie Smith sped home.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mike Schmidt hit a home run, two singles, drove in three runs and stole a base as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the San Diego Padres 5-1 Saturday night for their sixth consecutive victory.

While Schmidt provided the offense, including his third home in six games since returning from the disabled list, Dick Ruthven, 1-3, checked the Padres on four hits. John Montefusco, 1-4, was the starter and loser for San Diego.

The Phillies took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Bob Dernier walked, stole second and third and scored on Schmidt's single. San Diego tied the game in the second when Terry Kennedy ripped a 2-0 pitch over the right field fence for his second homer of the season.

Schmidt got that run back with two out in the third when he hit a high drive into the left-center field seats.

MONTREAL (AP) — Dusty Baker spearheaded a 15-hit Los Angeles attack with five hits and five runs batted in as the Dodgers outslugged the Montreal Expos 10-8 Saturday.

Baker stroked a pair of home runs, including a solo shot in the first inning and a three-run drive that highlighted a four-run third inning.

Bill Russell added a run-scoring single with two out in the third.

The Los Angeles rally wiped out a 3-1 Montreal lead which came on a two-out, three-run homer by Gary Carter in the bottom of the first inning.

Los Angeles increased its lead to 9-3 with four more runs in the fourth inning. Steve Sax opened the inning with a single and Steve Garvey then lofted a ball over the left-field wall. Rick Monday walked, Pedro Guerrero singled and both runners moved up a base on an error on the play by left fielder Terry Francona. Monday and Guerrero both came home on a single by Steve Yeager.

NEW YORK (AP) — Chili Davis and Jack Clark each drove in two runs as the San Francisco Giants scored six times in the eighth inning to beat the New York Mets 8-3 Saturday.

The Giants started their late rally with one out against Ed Lynch 1-2, when Jim Wohlford singled up the middle and Johnnie LeMaster followed with an infield single. Lynch walked pinch-hitter Dave Bergman to load the bases.

That brought on Mets' reliever Neil Allen, and Davis hit a two-run single into right field. Pinch-runner Jeff Leonard wound up at third and Davis took second on Ellis Valentine's throw. Allen then walked Joe Morgan intentionally and on his way to walking the next batter, Tim O'Malley, a wild pitch by Allen allowed Leonard to score.

CHICAGO (AP) — Bump Wills scored one run and drove in another and pitcher Dickie Noles knocked in a run Saturday to lead the Chicago Cubs to a 3-2 victory over the Houston Astros.

It marked only the second time this season that the Cubs had won two games in a row.

Wills beat out a bunt single in the first inning, stole second, went to third on a passed ball and scored on a single by Keith Moreland.

The Cubs added two unearned runs in the second inning. Junior Kennedy reached on an error by third baseman Ray Knight, went to third on a hit-and-run single by Ryne Sandberg and scored on Noles' sacrifice fly.

Steve Henderson then drew a walk off loser Joe Niekro, 3-2, and Sandberg scored on a single by Wills.

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Miguel Dilone drove in three runs with a pair of doubles and scored twice as the Cleveland Indians beat the Oakland A's 8-5 Saturday.

Len Barker, 4-1, pitched six innings and got the victory from Neil Allen. Bill Laskey, 1-2, took the loss.

"I felt strong enough to go the distance," said Puleo, "but the manager (George Bamberger) felt he had to go to his bullpen. But when you have relief pitchers like Allen it's like money in the bank."

with help from Dan Spillner, who earned his third save with three innings of one-run relief.

The Indians took a 4-0 lead against Mike Norris, 2-3, in the second. Roy Hassey led off the second with a single and went to third on Rick Manning's double. Norris walked Jack Perconte to load the bases, and after an infield grounder by Mike Fischlin drove in the first Cleveland run, Dilone doubled home two more runs.

The Blue Jays took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Damaso Garcia doubled and scored on Upshaw's third triple of the season. Toronto scored its eventual winning run in the fifth when Ernie Whitt tripled with one out and came home on Alfredo Griffins' sacrifice squeeze bunt.

Stephenson Up By Two

SUFFOLK, Va. (AP) — Defending champion Jan Stephenson birdied three of the first five holes in firing a 6-under-par 67 to take a 2-stroke lead over veteran Kathy Whitworth Saturday after two rounds of the 54-hole $125,000 LPGA-United Virginia Bank Classic.

The Australian native, who won last year with a tourney-record score of 14-under, completed 36 holes at 68-67—135, 11 under regulation. Whitworth, bidding to become the first LPGA player ever to win 83 tournaments in her career, is at 68-69—137.

Beth Daniel, who won the Birmingham Classic last week and is the only player with three victories this season, remained in contention with her second straight 69 for a 138, three shots behind Stephenson.

Although 10 players still were under par over the 6,174-yard Sleepy Hole Golf Course, there was a 3-shot dropoff after Daniel to this year's leading money winner, Sally Little, at 72-69—141.

Deadlocked at 142 were Beverly Klass and Pat Bradley, both 71-71, and Penny Pulz, 73-69. Vicki Tabor, who had a 3-under 70 Friday, shot a 73 Saturday and was alone at 143.

But the day belonged to Stephenson, who had started Friday's first round with two eagles on the first five holes to go 5 under par.

On Saturday, Stephenson birdied the par-5 No.2 from 4 feet, dropped an 8-foot birdie putt on the fourth and two-putted from 35 feet after reaching the green in 2 on th par-5 fifth.

Chips For Lead

Bob Shearer chips from the third green in the third round of the Houston Open Saturday. Shearer goes into today's final round leading by five strokes. (AP Laserphoto)

Shearer Shoots 64 To Open Up 5-Stroke Lead

HOUSTON (AP) - Australian Bob Shearer, who gave himself a deadline of this year for making it big on the PGA tour, couldn't explain why he's running far ahead of schedule Saturday as the hottest golfer on the tour.

"If I didn't make the top 125 this year, I was going home and play in Australia and Japan," Shearer said after he fired a 7-under-par 64 Saturday and charged to a 5-stroke lead in the $350,000 Houston Open at Woodlands Country Club.

"But I wouldn't have played in the country six years if I didn't think it was the best place to play. The people in Australia seem to judge your ability by the way you play in this country."

Shearer would be judged superior in any country the way he played Saturday's round.

"The first 15 holes today were the best I've ever played," Shearer said. "I hit a lot of them close and I was able to scrape them in. There's not a lot to say. I'm just happy to be here.

But Shearer, 33, could not explain his progress.

"I haven't made any changes in my game, but I am putting better," he said. "If you're putting good you don't worry about missing a green or putting from 12 feet."

Shearer's withering pace left second-round leader Ed Sneed in his wake. Sneed shot an even-par 71 and finished the day still in contention, despite losing his 2-shot lead at the start of the round.

Defending Houston Open champion Ron Streck, who started the day 3-under, made up four shots with a 4-under 67 to move into third place, six shots behind Shearer.

Shearer, now 13-under-par for the tournament, has a run of sub-par performances in 13 of his last 14 rounds dating back to the Tallahassee Open, which he won with four sub-par rounds and a 16-under-par total.

Shearer, 33, finished second at the rain-shortened New Orleans Open with three more sub-par rounds, had three of four rounds under par at the Byron Nelson Classic, and fired opening rounds of 69 and 67 prior to Saturday's par-breaker.

Shearer bogeyed the final two holes in Friday's second round for a 4-under 67.

The Rampants, their eyes on not only a second straight league crown but an unbeaten season as well, pounded out 17 hits to roll by Wilson Beddingfield, 16-0, at Fleming Stadium.

The win leaves Rose at 18-0 overall and 10-0 in the conference and needing only a win over Kinston Tuesday to clinch the league title. Wilson falls to 5-12 and 3-6.

"I thought we really played well tonight," Greenville Rose coach Ronald Vincent said after the nearly three-hour affair came to an end. "This was probably the best we've played all season.

"We hit the ball real well tonight," Vincent said. "I don't know why. I wish I knew."

The 16 runs and 17 hits were both season highs for the Rampants. Their best previous performance was 13 hits and 13 runs, coming against North Lenoir in separate games this season.

Three Rampants had three hits and all but two Rose starters had at least one hit.

Catcher Crowell Pope led Rose with three hits in three at bats. Pope also had two RBI. Sammy Hodges and Tom Buie were both three for four. Buie had two runs batted in and Hodges scored four runs.

Roger Williams was two for four with two RBI and Keith Phillips was two for three. Gordon Douglas was two for five. Bill Kittrell led the Rampants with three runs batted in.

Rose, which downed Beddingfield, 11-0, earlier this season, wasted no time in wasting the Bruins, scoring two runs in the first inning and then erupting for eight runs in the second and send Vincent to his bench.

"I expected a pretty tight game," Vincent said afterward. "We always have tough games with Beddingfield, but we always seem to hit the ball well here (in Fleming Stadium)"

The Rose hit parade provided more than enough support for Douglas, who hurled a two-hitter to run his record to 9-0. Douglas has now given up three hits in his last 21 innings.

Douglas struck out nine and walked five and did not allow a hit until the fifth when Joe Hill singled to rightfield with two out. Beddingfield's other hit was a lead-off single by Chris Williams in the sixth.

"Gordon really threw the ball hard in the first two or three innings. But I think he lost some of his zip in the last few innings," Vincent said. "He threw seven innings Monday and he threw a lot of pitches tonight."

Douglas six of the first nine batters he faced but did not strike out another until the seventh. Nonetheless, Douglas was able to notch his sixth shutout of the season.

With Douglas on the mound, Rose tallied all the runs it needed in the first inning. Tom Buie singled to open the inning and went to third on Sammy Hodges single.

Hodges later stole second and when the throw went into centerfield Buie came home. Rogers Williams followed with a single to score Hodges and the Rampants were on their way.

Rose sent 13 batters to the plate and Beddingfield made three errors in the second as the Rampants exploded for eight runs. Kittrell and Phillips walked and Buie singled to score Kittrell to open the inning.

Phillips then scored on Mont Carter's sacrifice fly. Three straight errors allowed Hodges, Williams and Douglas to reach. Buie and Hodges scored when centerfielder Bobby Boswell dropped Williams' sinking line drive.

Crowell Pope then walked to load the bases and was replaced by Terry Smith, a courtesy runner. Kittrell then ripped a triple to right-centerfield to score all three runners and make it 10-0.

Rose added another run to its lead in the third when Pope singled home Hodges, who singled to open the third.

A 420-foot triple to dead centerfield by Williams and singles by Douglas and Phillips keyed a three-run fifth that moved Rose's lead to 14-0.

Rose, with Douglas the only starter remaining in the game in the last two innings, scored a run in both the sixth and seventh for its final 16-run total.

Beddingfield threatened three times to end the shutout. The Bruins loaded the bases in the fifth and appeared ready to score when Douglas uncorked a wild pitch. But Curtis Evans, in for Pope behind the plate, took the careem off the concreate backstop and tagged Billy Boswell out to end the inning.

In the sixth the Bruins had runners at first and third with one out but Bill Owens, in at first for Kittrell, knocked down a sharp grounder by Tommy Boswell and tagged first for the final out.

The Bruins' final threat came in the seventh when they loaded the bases only to have Douglas strike out the last two batters to end the game and send Rose home one win from clinching a second straight conference championship.

Errors Help Rams Roll Past Chargers By 12-3

LITTLEFIELD — John Mayo and Elmer Dixon drove in three runs apiece and Greene Central took advantage of 10 Ayden-Grifton errors to roll to a 12-3 victory Friday night in an Eastern Carolina Conference baseball game.

The win denied the Chargers a chance to strengthen their lead in the ECC and left them only one-half game ahead of Charles B. Aycock. The Falcons were idle Friday night.

Greene Central, which lost to North Pitt earlier in the week and appeared all but out of the ECC title race, is now 6-3 in the conference. The Rams are 12-8 overall.

Ayden-Grifton, now 13-6 overall, fell behind, 1-0, in the first inning and never got closer than a run the rest of the game as the Chargers committed 10 errors and saw their ace left-hander Tyrone Gay leave in the third with an injury.

"It was a nightmare," Ayden-Grifton coach Allan Wilson said. "It's the worse game I've ever seen. I'm just trying to forget about it."

Greene Central jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first when Chris Suggs singled home Tommy Goff. Goff led off the inning with a single and moved to second on Chris Ginn's sacrifice.

The Rams upped their lead to 2-0 in the second and made it 3-0 in the third when Suggs scored on James Moore's fielder's choice. Suggs reached on an error and stole second to open the inning.

Gay was replaced in the third by freshman Terry Garrett after injuring his middle finger on his pitching hand. Gay was the loser, dropping his fourth game in 10 decisions.

Ayden-Grifton made its only serious threat to catch the Rams in the bottom of the third when the Chargers scored two runs.

Chris Strickland singled and moved up on a passed ball. Bernard Ricciarelli then reached on an error and stole second. When the throw went into centerfield Strickland scored.

Ricciarelli later scored on Terry Locust's sacrifice fly to make it 3-2. The Chargers never got closer.

The Rams built their lead back to three (5-2) with two runs in the fourth. Mayo singled and went to second on Ritchie Chase's sacrifice. Dixon then singled home Mayo and went to second on an error.

Goff followed with a double to score Dixon and the Rams led, 5-2. Greene Central scored three more runs in the fifth and added two runs in the sixth and seventh for their 12-run total.

Chase struck out three and walked three while scattering six hits in seven innings to take the win.

Mayo led Greene Central with four hits in five at bats. Goff was two for four and Suggs two for five.

Centerfielder Art Rouse led A-G with three hits in three at bats. Strickland was two for four as he and Rouse accounted for five of A-G's six hits on the evening.

Ayden-Grifton returns to action Tuesday night when the Chargers play host to Farmville Central. The Chargers then close out their 1982 regular season the following Tuesday at home against North Pitt.

Walking Rose Was A Big Mistake

By The Associated Press

San Diego Manager Dick Williams knows what many others know in baseball — that Pete Rose is tough with a man in scoring position.

So when the Philadelphia Phillies had the potential winning run on second base in the ninth inning Friday night, Williams ordered the clutch-hitting first baseman to be intentionally walked.

Turns out, it was a big mistake.

Mike Schmidt was the next batter, and he promptly belted a pitch from reliever Luis DeLeone into the left field seats at Veterans Stadium for a three-run homer that gave the Phillies a 5-2 victory.

Despite the backfire, Williams says he'd make the same strategic move again.

"It wasn't a difficult decision at all," Williams insisted. "You set up a force at any base. And Pete Rose is one of the best hitters ever to play the game. I have a right-handed reliever in there and Schmidt is hitting .167."

Schmidt has been having trouble getting his hits since returning to the lineup May 1, after being out since April 13 with an injured rib. Schmidt and Rose both agreed with Williams.

"Pete Rose is the best hitter around with a man on second," Schmidt said. "I'd have walked him. I'm hitting under .200. You've got to walk Pete."

Rose: "He played the percentage and when a manager does that he usually comes out in the end. Personally I was glad because of the way I was swinging."

Braves 6, Cardinals 3

Chris Chambliss' three-run double with one out in the 10th inning powered Atlanta over St. Louis. Chambliss' hit, his second of the night, came off Jim Kaat, who relieved John Martin, 3-3, with a 2-0 count on Chambliss.

The Braves had tied the score 3-3 in the top of the ninth inning on a fielder's-choice grounder by Biff Pocoroba with the bases loaded off Cardinal relief ace Bruce Sutter.

"He's embarrassed me more often than I have him," Chambliss said of Kaat. "It was a low fastball. I didn't try to pull it. He had to throw a strike."

Cubs 12, Astros 6

Keith Moreland drove in seven runs with two homers and a single and pitcher Randy Martz doubled in three runs as Chicago routed Houston.

Moreland hit a three-run homer in the first inning off loser Nolan Ryan, 2-5, who came into the game with an 8-1 lifetime record against the Cubs. Moreland hit another three-run homer off reliever Frank Lacorte in the sixth. His other RBI came on a single in the third, when the Cubs scored six times to knock Ryan out of the game.

"There's no question that the ballpark helps me," Moreland said of Chicago's Wrigley Field. "The ball carries well. On certain days the park plays big and on certain days it plays small. The wind was blowing from right to left today and the ball carried well."

Reds 5, Pirates 0

Mario Soto blanked Pittsburgh on five hits and Ron Oester hit a two-run double as Cincinnati beat the Pirates. Soto, 2-2, struck out 11 in his second consecutive complete game. His season total of 54 strikeouts leads the National League.

Paul Moskau, 0-2, was the loser.

Mets 3, Giants 2

Dave Kingman capped a two-run first inning with his 10th homer of the year and Mookie Wilson belted two hits and scored twice as New York defeated San Francisco.

Dodgers 6, Expos 2

Dusty Baker knocked in four runs, two with his fourth home run of the season, and Bob Welch scattered seven hits to lead Los Angeles over Montreal.

Welch, 4-1, struck out three and walked one after failing to last the first inning against the Expos last Sunday. The only runs Welch allowed came on Gary Carter's fourth-inning sacrifice fly and Andre Dawson's homer in the ninth.

Williamston Praises Perry

WILLIAMSTON, N.C. (AP) — People in Gaylord Perry's hometown of Williamston say he's a "down to earth" guy, but like him, they were flying high after he recorded his 300th major league baseball victory.

Mayor Robert Cowen said Perry, who captured victory No. 300 Thursday by pitching the Seattle Mariners to a 7-3 victory over the New York Yankees in Seattle, is strictly a "good old boy."

"He and his family are down to earth, the salt of the earth," Cowen said. "He and his brother Jim both went to school here.... They've never forgotten how they were brought up."

Perry owns a tobacco and peanut farm near Williamston, a town of 6,560. His parents still live nearby. His daughter plays on the high school basketball team.

"Everybody here is awfully proud of Gaylord," Cowen said. "The town sent him a message this morning. Several people called him last night."

Cowen hopes the 43-year-old Perry can visit for a celebration May 17th during the Mariners' East Coast swing.

"He's been invited to lead our annual Christmas parade at least a dozen times, but he's always refused," Cowen said. "Sometimes he'll ride a horse, but he won't go in the car as the honored guest.

"Gaylord suggested we have a fish fry at his farm," Cowen said. "But there'd probably be more people than could be accommodated."

Perry pitched five straight no-hitters as a junior in high school and was all-state in football, basketball and baseball. But, in his senior year, the long, cold winter shortened his pre-season workouts.

"His senior year he didn't show well at all," said his wife, Blanche. "He didn't throw as well because he wasn't prepared as well. He didn't even get most athletic boy in his class. Isn't that cute?"

Farmville Races Past Panthers, 17-5

BETHEL — Billy Godley drove in three runs and Wade Corbett hit a two-run home run to lead Farmville Central to an easy 17-5 victory over North Pitt on Friday in an Eastern Carolina Conference baseball game.

Farmville, now 4-12 overall and 2-7 in the league, struck for three runs in the first two innings to take a lead the Jaguars never lost. The loss drops North Pitt to 7-10 overall and 2-7 in the ECC.

Nat Norris walked to open the first and stole second. Bobby Carraway then walked but Norris was forced out at third when Joey Steppe reached on a fielder's choice.

Godley then singled home Carraway and stole second. Eddie Jones then singled to score Steppe and Godley to take a 3-0 lead.

North Pitt pushed across one run in the bottom of the inning but the Jaguars came back with three more runs in the second.

With one gone in the second and Taylor Walston on second and Norris on first, Carraway walked to load the bases. Steppe then walked to force home Walston and Godley then reached on an error to score Norris and Carraway.

Steppe also scored on the play but was called out because he missed third base.

Farmville upped its lead to 8-1 in the top of the third. North Pitt scored once in the bottom of the inning but the Jaguars then sealed the win with three runs in the fourth.

Both teams scored three runs in the fifth. North Pitt's three runs came on a two-run home run by Greg Briley and a solo shot by Ken Whitehurst.

Farmville scored two more runs in the sixth on Corbett's two-run homer, and one in the seventh for its 17-run total.

Godley led Farmville with three hits in four at bats. Jones was three for five while Carraway was two for three and Corbett two for five. Briley and Mike Brown were both two for four for North Pitt.

Farmville travels to Ayden-Grifton Tuesday.

Cheeks Helps Eliminate Bucks

But Maurice Cheeks' offense certainly did.

Cheeks, a point guard whose job normally is to set up scoring chances for his teammates, poured in 26 points Friday night to lead the 76ers to a 102-90 victory over Milwaukee, eliminating the Bucks from the National Basketball Association playoffs.

Cheeks, constantly beating the Bucks' Brian Winters to the basket, sank 10 of 16 shots and passed for six assists as the 76ers won the best-of-seven Eastern Conference semifinal series four games to two.

"Maurice was able to run wild," 76ers' forward Julius Erving said. "He ran by Brian and drew fouls on their big people. We made their guards work and our guards, Maurice and Andrew Toney, got a lot of point production for us."

Cheeks, who had been averaging 13.4 points per game in the series, said 76ers' Coach Billy Cunningham had told him to drive to the basket.

"It was stressed to me in the pregame warmups to go the basket more, to make Brian Winters play me," Cheeks said. "I utilized my quickness by going to the basket. When I did that, it opened up other things."

Cunningham said that Cheeks "almost carried us by himself in the third quarter." But, Cunningham said, an even bigger factor was the 76ers' pressure defense, which time and again forced the Bucks to take hurried shots with the shot clock winding down to a few seconds.

The Bucks' inability to run their offense drew frequent booing from the Arena's capacity crowd of 11,052.

"We set up a 1-3-1 trap, which forced them to wind down the clock a lot," Erving said. "They wanted a slower tempo to begin with because they were short of people. But once you get over the halfcourt line, you don't have a lot of time to shoot if your initial pass is denied, and our trap did that several times."

"We wanted to make them use as much time as they possibly could, to force them to go to a perimeter game and keep it away from Bob Lanier inside," Cunningham said.

"We knew they had the trap," Bucks' Coach Don Nelson said. "But they disguised it by also using the man-to-man press.

"They consistently forced us to run eight or nine seconds off the shot clock, and that would take away our first or second options on many of our plays," he said. "We had too many shots with the 24 second clock down, and they weren't good shots."

The Bucks broke to a 27-21 lead, making 13 of 22 field goal attempts in the process.

But they made only 22 of 66 shots the rest of the way for a final percentage of 39.8. The 76ers shot at a 52.6 per cent clip.

Release fish right — Your fishing techniques may be fine, but how is your release technique? Careful handling can make the difference between survival and death for a released fish, and, with the growing numbers of anglers, in the future fish may be too valuable to be caught only once.

"Fish often die from stress after being caught, but anglers can reduce stress considerably by handling fish properly," said Fred Harris, assistant chief of the Wildlife Commission's Division of Inland Fisheries. "If fish are released gently they will survive to fight again."

Harris says the best way to hold a fish is by the lower jaw. This temporarily immobilizes the fish and prevents it from thrashing about. It is also best to leave the body of the fish in the water while removing the hook and keep the fish from the side of the boat.

"Fish often die from damage to internal organs after being released," Harris said. "That's why it's best to hold fish by the lower jaw when removing a hook, and keeping the body of the fish in the water prevents internal strain. Avoid grasping a fish by the body and avoid squeezing."

Harris says there is some controversy about whether to handle fish dry or wet hands. He feels that since most mortality in released fish is caused by damage to internal organs it is better to hold them gently with dry hands than to squeeze the body cavity.

Holding fish in live wells should also be avoided if possible. "When the water temperature is below 70 degrees, fish can survive for quite awhile in live wells. But, in warmer water they quickly suffer from the stress, and live wells have to be very well aerated for them to survive."

Even deeply hooked fish may be released with good chances for their survival. Harris says if a fish has swallowed the hook the angler should cut the leader as far down the throat as possible. Eventually, the hook will dissolve.

How a fish is handled when caught, however, is not the only factor that affects survival rates. Some fish are more tolerant of rough treatment than others, and how long a fish is fought can also make a difference.

"Fish have varying tolerances of stress," Harris said. "For example, catfish can survive almost anything. Bass are fairly hardy, trout must be treated with care, and striped bass die very easily.

"When a fish is caught, lactic acid builds up in the bloodstream while it is fighting," Harris added. "Some fish, like striped bass, succumb to this acid buildup."

However, if a fish is quickly landed and released immediately, it stands a good chance of survival. This is why small striped bass can be released and survive. Larger stripers are usually exhausted by the time they are landed and their chances of survival are slim."

Used boat guide available — Most of us have been burned at least once buying a used car or some other item, but if you're in the market for a used boat you can save yourself a lot of grief and a few dollars — by reading a publication called "How to Buy a Used Boat" produced by the UNC Sea Grant program.

The publication includes information on buying used powerboats and sailboats. Separate sections show how to evaluate the condition of the hull, engine, sails, rigging and other items. Also included is a complete checklist for evaluating the condition of a used boat — if you fill it out faithfully, you have no one to blame but yourself.

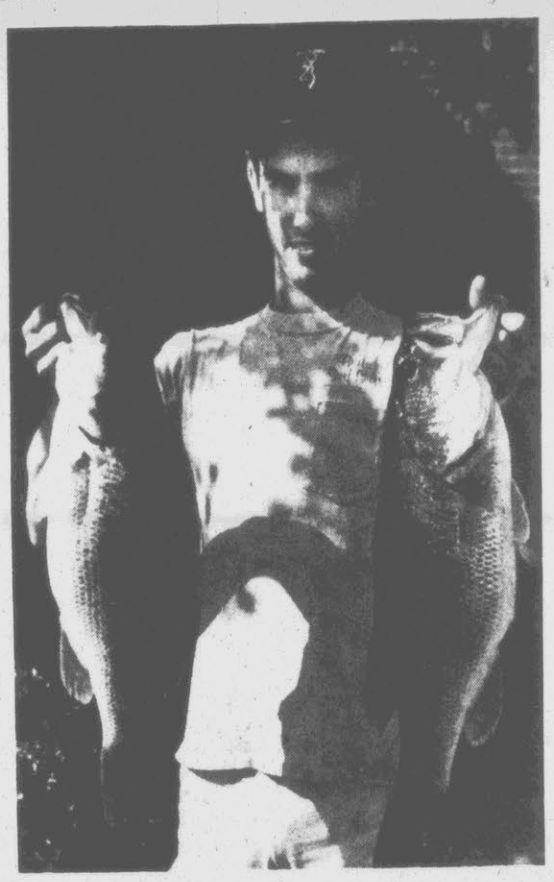

"How to Buy a Used Boat" (UNC-SG-81-10) can be ordered free from the Sea Grant Program, North Carolina State University, 105 1911 Building, Raleigh, N.C. 27650.

Fishing Report

Freshwater — The weather improved last week and so did the fishing. Reports from around eastern North Carolina show good catches of bass, bream and a few stripers. Bass have started hitting well on topwater plugs and poppers.

Saltwater — Reports from the coast show an improvement. Good catches of small croakers and flounder on Core Banks were reported. Catches of Red Drum and bluefish are also on the increase from Portsmouth Island to Hatteras Inlet.

Local News — Howard Vainwright of Greenville landed two nice largemouth bass last week. The largest weighed in at 7½ pounds and the second at 5½ pounds. The fish were caught on a spinner bait.

Conley got only two hits off two White Oak pitchers during the afternoon, and that resulted in the only run scored by the team.

The run came in the fourth after White Oak had already run out to an 8-0 lead. Todd Rouse singled and moved up on a passed ball after two were out. He scored when Jeff Manning singled to right.

White Oak grabbed the lead in the first inning with a single run. Joe Hopkins walked and Israel Meadows reached on an error. A wild pitch then plated Hopkins.

In the second, White Oak got what proved to be the winning run. Charles Soos walked, stole second, and with two away, scored when Gary Appleton reached on an error.

Rangers Snap 12-Game Loss Skein

By The Associated Press

"This might be the happiest I have been over a win in my whole lifetime," Zimmer said after the Rangers, although outhit 12-4, edged the Boston Red Sox 1-0 Friday night to snap a 12-game losing streak. "That's what I've been looking for. Son of a gun, we played great.

"They have taken this thing like men, stayed loose and not blamed each other. They wanted this one."

Although Doc Medich and Danny Darwin were tagged for 12 hits — 11 singles to go with a double by Dave Stapleton — and issued three walks, the Rangers reeled off five double plays, tying a club record, while rookie Bobby Johnson provided the only run they needed with a fifth-inning homer.

Medich surrendered 10 hits in 7 1-3 innings and was constantly in trouble. But the Red Sox failed to break through, while Johnson, giving regular catcher Jim Sundberg a rest, produced the game's only run with a leadoff homer in the fifth, only his seventh time at bat this season. The Rangers managed only three other hits off Boston's Dennis Eckersley.

"That was a good one," said Darwin. "This kind of win is better than a blowout because we had to concentrate more and show we were tough."

Asked what went through his mind when he whipped a called third strike past Rick Miller to end the game, Darwin replied, "I just thought, 'Finally.'"

"We were sitting in the dugout with chill bumps," said pitching coach Jackie Brown. "It was like a World Series, or something."

Mariners 5, Yankees 2

Todd Cruz homered and Jim Maler drove in two runs, while Mike Stanton, Ed VandeBerg and Bill Caudill pitched out of an late-inning jams. Widner Floyd Bannister was replaced by Stanton after Willie Randolph opened the eighth with a double and Jerry Mumphrey singled him to third. Stanton struck out Dave Winfield and VandeBerg got John Mayberry to ground into a double play, Seattle's third of the game.

Caudill came on with runners at first and third and one out in the ninth and retired pinch hitters Oscar Gamble and Bobby Murcer. New York's Lou Piniella hit into an inning-ending double play with the bases loaded in the first inning and Rick Cerone rapped into a double play after the first two runners reached base in the eighth as the Yankees suffered their fourth consecutive setback.

Orioles 5, Angels 3

Cal Ripken Jr., batting .162 at gametime, broke a 1-1 tie with a solo homer in the fifth inning, his first since opening day, and Scott McGregor beat California for the 11th consecutive time, with eighth-inning help from Tippy Martinez. Gary Roenicke and Dan Ford also homered for Baltimore, while Reggie Jackson hit his third of the season for California.

Indians 15, A's 6

Andre Thornton hit his seventh home run of the season as the Indians erupted for seven runs in the fourth inning and went on to snap Oakland's seven-game winning streak. The Indians came from behind after spotting the A's a five-run lead in the first inning when Cliff Johnson hit a two-run homer and Rob Picciolo hit a two-run single off Rick Waits, who failed to finish the inning.

Thornton's homer off Rick Langford, 2-4, drove in the first two runs in the fourth. The Indians' designated hitter increased his RBI total to a league-leading 25 with a run-scoring single in the seventh. Toby Harrah had three of Cleveland's 19 hits off four pitchers and took the league batting lead at .383. Bake McBride and Von Hayes had three hits and three RBIs apiece for Cleveland.

White Sox 8, Tigers 5

Chicago's Jim Morrison clouted two home runs, Greg Luzinski belted one and Harold Baines slammed a two-run triple, while unbeaten Lamarr Hoyt recorded his sixth victory, tops in the majors. Hoyt, making only his third start of the season, pitched 62-3 scoreless innings. Detroit scored all its runs in the last two innings against Chicago's bullpen before 32-year-old rookie Ernesto Escarrega earned his first major league save by striking out Larry Herndon and retiring Lou Whitaker on a foul pop with the bases loaded in the bottom of the ninth.

Brewers 4, Twins 1

Ted Simmons cracked a two-run homer and Gorman Thomas and Cecil Cooper added solo shots, while Milwaukee's Jim Slaton, a starter until last September, earned the first save of his 11-year major league career. Simmons, who hit two three-run homers against the Twins last Sunday, broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth with a two-run shot off Al Williams. Thomas had given the Brewers a 1-0 lead in the second inning and Cooper added a solo shot in the sixth inning. All of Simmons' and Thomas' home runs this season have come against Minnesota.

Blue Jays 6, Royals 4

Willie Upshaw, who drove in Toronto's first run with a fourth-inning single, singled again off Dennis Leonard in the seventh to snap a 4-4 tie. Ernie Whitt homered in the eighth for an insurance run. Damaso Garcia also homered for Toronto, while Hal McRae connected for Kansas City.

North Pitt Nips Jags

BETHEL — North Pitt pushed over a run in the bottom of the fifth inning and held off Farmville Central for a 5-4 softball victory Friday afternoon.

The win boosted the Lady Panther record to 3-7 in the Eastern Carolina Conference and 5-11 overall. Farmville drops to 1-8, 1-15, respectively.

North Pitt got the early lead with one run in the first, then added two in the second on a homer by Betsy Staton.

Farmville rallied to tie it up with three in the third, but North Pitt went back out by one in the fourth. The Lady Jaguars tied it up with one in the top of the fifth, 4-4.

North Pitt then got the winning run in the bottom of the inning. Frances Woods singled, moved up on an out and scored on Marilyn Sutton's hit.

Wanda Hines led the North Pitt hitting with three, while Woods, Delores Pittman and Staton each had two. P. Walston had two hits for Farmville.

Union Carbide 13
Kiwanis 8

Union Carbide won its second straight North State Little League game Friday, downing the Kiwanis, 13-8. It was the first loss of the year for the Kiwanis.

The Kiwanis scored first, getting two in the top of the first on a Robbie McDonald home run. But Union Carbide came back with four runs in its half of the inning, then added three more in the second for a 7-2 lead. The Kiwanis came back with one in the third, then added five in the top of the fourth to edge back into the lead, 8-7. Kraig Butler sparked the inning with a grand-slam homer.

But in the bottom of the fourth, Union Carbide rallied for six runs to push ahead for good. Kevin Fisher led off reaching on an error, moving up on a wild pitch. He scored on Abram Lang's double, tying it up. Morris Johnson then put UC ahead with a two-run homer.

Greg Davis kept it going with a double, moving to third on a passed ball before Darryl Joyner walked and stole second. That was a double steal, with Davis scoring on the play. Andre Hopkins singled and a wild pitch scored Joyner. Hopkins, who had stolen up, took third on the play and scored on Michael Fletcher's ground out.

Johnson led the UC hitting with three, while Lang added two. Butler had two hits for the Kiwanis.

First Federal 20
Moose 5

First Federal remained unbeaten after two games by rolling to a 20-5 victory over the Moose Friday in the Tar Heel Little League. It was the first loss for the Moose.

First Federal took the lead with four runs in the first, never losing it. Maurice Dyer walked and moved up on a passed ball, then stole third. He scored when John Bolen reached on an error. Mark Holloman walked and Stacy Best reached on a fielder's choice that scored Bolen. Franlin Pugh singled, and an error let Holloman and Best score.

First Federal went on to score one in the second, 11 in the fourth, one in the fifth on a Dyer homer, and three in the sixth.

The Moose scored twice in the third and three times int he fourth.

Pugh led the First Federal hitting with five, while Best had two and Dyer and Bolen each had two. No one had more than one for the Moose.

VICE PRESIDENT

Greenville native James M. Ward Jr. was elected a corporate vice president of Cone Mills Corp. by the company's board of directors on May 4 in Greensboro.

Ward, formerly director of quality control and technical services, will continue to head those functions as vice president, Cone Mills reported.

Rise In Cattle Prices

By KEITH E. LEIGHTY
Associated Press Writer

Cattle prices rose and live hog and frozen pork belly prices were mixed Friday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, although nearby delivery months for pork bellies continued to show strength.

Jack Weaver, a livestock research analyst in Chicago with ContiCommodity Services, said beef prices were supported by higher prices being paid at the wholesale level for carcass beef, which touched a record high Friday.

Demand for beef products at the retail level has been good all week, possibly as a result of promotional advertisements being run by the beef industry, Weaver said.

Don Trott, a livestock analyst in Chicago with Thomson McKinnon Securities Inc., said commercial firms were strong buyers in cattle.

In the hog and frozen pork belly markets, prices were supported by the reasoning that cash prices at the wholesale level, which were mixed Friday, would be stronger next week, Trott said.

Live cattle for delivery in June were 0.43 cent higher, settling at 71.80 cents a pound; May feeder cattle were 0.05 cent higher, settling at 68.87 cents a pound; June live hogs were 0.18 cent higher, settling at 60.55 cents a pound; and May frozen pork bellies were 1.50 cents higher, settling at 89.60 cents a pound.

Wheat prices were lower while corn, oats and soybeans were higher in moderate trading on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Wheat prices were sharply lower in response to a report on crop production released Thursday by forecaster Conrad Leslie, which said the winter wheat crop, which is nearing harvest, would be above the record level of last year, said Al London, a grains analyst with ContiCommodity Services Inc.

Wheat for delivery in May fell to its life-of-contract low.

London said weather, which is providing good conditions for wheat, corn and soybeans, also put downward pressure on prices.

Soybean prices were supported by a report from the Department of Agriculture that the soybean harvest in Brazil would be less than previously expected, sources at the floor said.

Wheat for delivery in May settled 5¾ cents lower at $3.43 a bushel; May corn settled at $2.72½ a bushel, ½ cent higher; May oats were 3½ cents higher and settled at $2.13 a bushel; and May soybeans were 2½ cents higher and settled at $6.54½ a bushel.

Quilt Symposium To Unfold Thursday

Pitt Community College has combined forces with the Greenville Quilters Guild, the Pamlico Quilters of Washington, N.C. Quilt Symposium Inc. and Greenville Recreation and Parks Department in sponsoring the event, which will continue through Saturday.

Over 300 women and some 25 instructors will gather on the campus of East Carolina University at Mendenhall Student Center from many states and Canada "to share their expertise and excitement for an artform which has been an important part of our nation since it was founded on the eastern shores of North America," said Pat Reep, president of the Greenville Quilters Guild.

Three categories of quilts will be displayed: invitational quilts loaned by professional artists; antique quilts of Pitt County and other areas, and quilts exhibited by symposium participants.

The invitational show will include a special quilt wall hanging of North Carolina, commissioned by the N.C. Welcome Centers. The creator of the wall hanging is artist Susanne Yowell, visiting artist for Durham Technical Institute. Ms. Yowell used 100 percent cotton wherever possible and hand-dyed the velveteens to get specific colors.

Tar Heel cities, crops and industries are designated either by embroidered symbols, hand-painted pictures or profound objects. For topography, the quilting takes on different heights of relief for each region of the state.

Others are a Star Wars quilt depicting all the characters from the movie and designed for her grandson by Mary Robinette of Greenville. Effie Bell of Hamstead is showing the American hostage quilt featuring a "freedom star" and commorating the release of the Iranian hostages. A quilt made by the sister of Dr. Linus Pauling in Lake Oswego, Ore., is being loaned for the show. It is entitled "The Molecule" and in the future will hang in the Pauling Institute of Science and Medicine, Palo Alto, Calif.

One of the most obvious quilts will be the largest quilt in the world, made by Maco Crafts of Franklin. Its dimensions are 19 by 23 feet. The quilt will be displayed at the World's Fair in Knoxville, Tenn., during August and will be shown on the world's largest bed. It was assembled from approximately 3,500 separate pieces, contains over 80 square yards of fabric and more than half a million hand-sewn stitches.

Participants in the symposium will be studying in workshops taught by leading fabric artists such as Carter Houck, editor of "Ladies Circle Patchwork Quilts" magazine and Myron Miller, magazine photographer. Nancy Halpern, who recently had several works displayed in a fiber arts show in Gray Gallery at East Carolina University, Helen Kelley and Patricia Cox from Minneapolis, Minn., Barbara Brackman of Lawrence, Kans., Anna Marie Tucker and Nancy Garver from upstate New York are also included.

Two lectures will be given at Hendrix Theater and will be open to the public for a $1.50 fee. Ed Reep will speak on "The Importance of Color in Quilt Making." He is an artist in residence of the ECU School of Art. His presentation will be at 7:30 p.m. Thursday. Georgia Bonesteel will lecture on "Granny Taught Us How" Friday at 8 p.m. She has been seen in this area on the PBS TV show "Lap Quilting." She is also a quilt teacher and lecturer from Hendersonville.

To open the show Thursday, Flavin Glover of Auburn, Ala., will speak on "Quiltaholism, No Known Cure." She is widely known for her mountain and lace scenes designed in the log cabin patterns. To close the symposium Saturday, Ms. Houck will present a talk designed to inspire and given new ideas.

The quilt show will be open to the public Thursday and Friday from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Saturday from 10 a.m. until noon. The admission fee will be $2 at the door. A merchants' mall will be held on the second floor of the student center and will also be open to the public at no charge. Several quilt companies, suppliers and shops will be represented and will be showing their designs.

The first N.C. Quilt Symposium was held at Meredith College in May 1979.

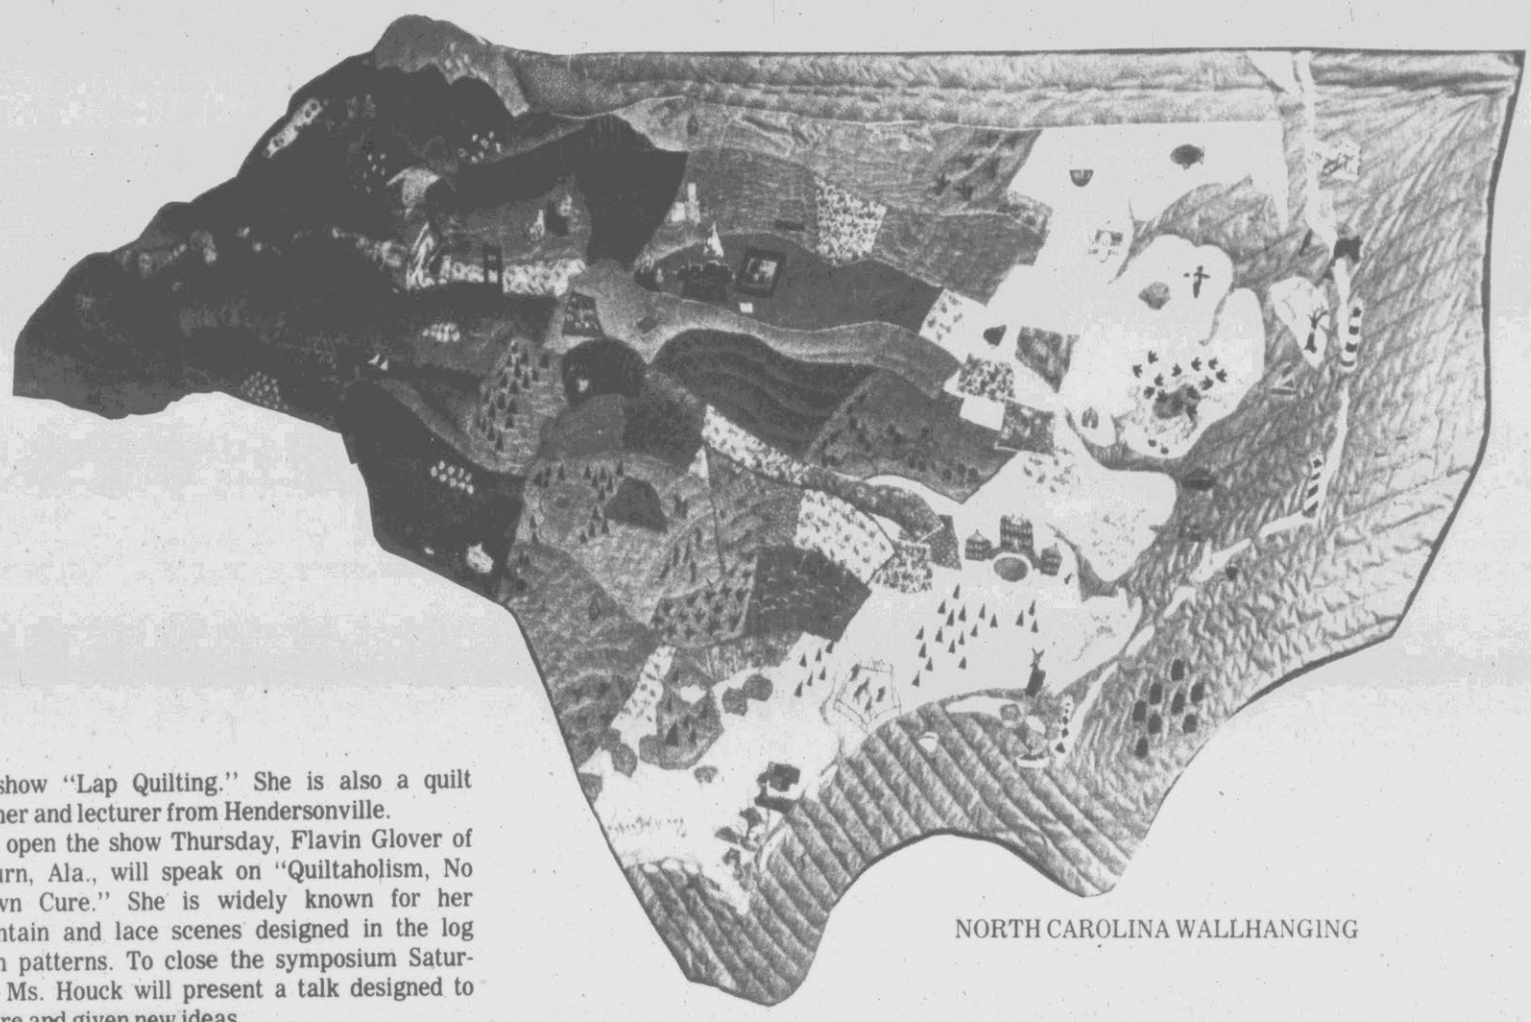

"At one time most pieced quilts were composed of the same design unit repeated over and over on the surface of the quilt. Today there is a freer approach by many quiltmakers with an emphasis on color, patttern and movement," Mrs. Reep said.

"Our ancestors left us a great legacy to build on and I have the greatest admiration for the ladies of yesteryear — they showed great ingenuity and originality. They conceived quilt patterns that have stood the test of time.

"There are so many lovely designs that we will never tire of. However, I feel very strongly that for a craft to grow it must be innovative and ever changing. Not for change's sake alone but in order to keep the art alive. It should reflect the ideas of and feelings of the times. In other words, what ever motivates the quiltmaker and gives her inspiration is possible. Contemporary quiltmakers approach the making of a quilt much as a painter does a canvas," said Mrs. Reep.

"In my opinion one of the fundamental reasons behind the new creativity and interest taking place in the quilt world is the fact that we no longer need quilts for utilitarian reasons. Instead the making of them provides a responsive and creative outlet which gives the maker a great sense of accomplishment and a feeling of history all at the same time," she said.

Couple Marries In Saturday Ceremony

FARMVILLE — Beverly Jo Taylor and Marty Eric Miller were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at three o'clock in the Farmville Presbyterian Church. The Rev. William N. Gordon officiated at the candlelight, double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Tull Taylor of Farmville. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. James H. Miller of Plymouth and the late Mr. Miller.

A program of nuptial music was presented by Mrs. Alma House, organist of Pinetops and Dr. Chester Conner of Plymouth, who sang "The Lord's Prayer" and "The Wedding Prayer."

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal candlelight gown of qiana and Venise lace featuring a V-neckline and empire bodice with detailed cap sleeves. The formal skirt flowed into an attached chapel train. She wore a chapel length fingertip mantilla veil edged in matching lace and carried a cascade bouquet of silk pink and white carnations, daisies, stephanotis and baby's breath accented with white satin streamers.

Tammy Frizelle of Farmville was maid of honor and bridesmaids included Tommi Lynn Rigsbee of Durham, cousin of the bride, Jane Conner and Colleen Harrison of Plymouth, sisters of the bridegroom.

The honor attendant wore a formal gown of pink lustreglo designed with an open neckline and miniature rolled shoulder straps. The gown was fashioned with a pink chiffon blouson bodice accented with a floral print. The semi-flared skirt was enhanced with an asymmetrical overlay. A self-rolled tie sash encircled the fitted waistline. She carried a nosegay of silk miniature pink and white carnations, daisies and baby's breath with pink and white streamers. The bridesmaids' dresses and flowers were identical.

Ashlee Conner of Plymouth, niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl and wore a sleeveless gown of flowered chiffon over matching pink lustreglo styled with an open neckline and full skirt with a center back bustle. She carried a white basket of miniature pink and white carnations accented with pink and white streamers.

MRS. MARTY ERIC MILLER

Latham Darden of New Bern was best man and ushers included Sonny Jay Fisher of Farmville, cousin of the bride, Jimmy Miller of Plymouth, brother of the brtidegroom and Robert Rasberry of Plymouth.

The bride's mother chose a plum chiffon dress and the mother of the bridegroom selected a long-sleeved dress of melon. The bride's grandmother, Mrs. Keturrah Allen, wore a peach dress. They each wore silk corsages to complement their dresses.

After a wedding trip to Myrtle Beach, S.C., the couple will live near Farmville.

The bride is a graduate of Farmville Central High School and is employed at Collins and Aikman, Farmville. The bridegroom is a graduate of Lawrence Academy, Merry Hill, and East Carolina University with a degree in political science. He is employed by WRQR Radio, Farmville.

Insulate Windows Correctly

Much energy is lost through windows and choosing the correct product to insulate your windows can be complicated.

There are three major divisions in window insulators, according to Dr. Linda F. McCutcheon, extension housing specialist at North Carolina State University.

These three types are exterior shades or shutters, vertical exterior rolling shutters and interior shades and shutters. These latter types can be custombuilt or purchased in standard sizes and installed.

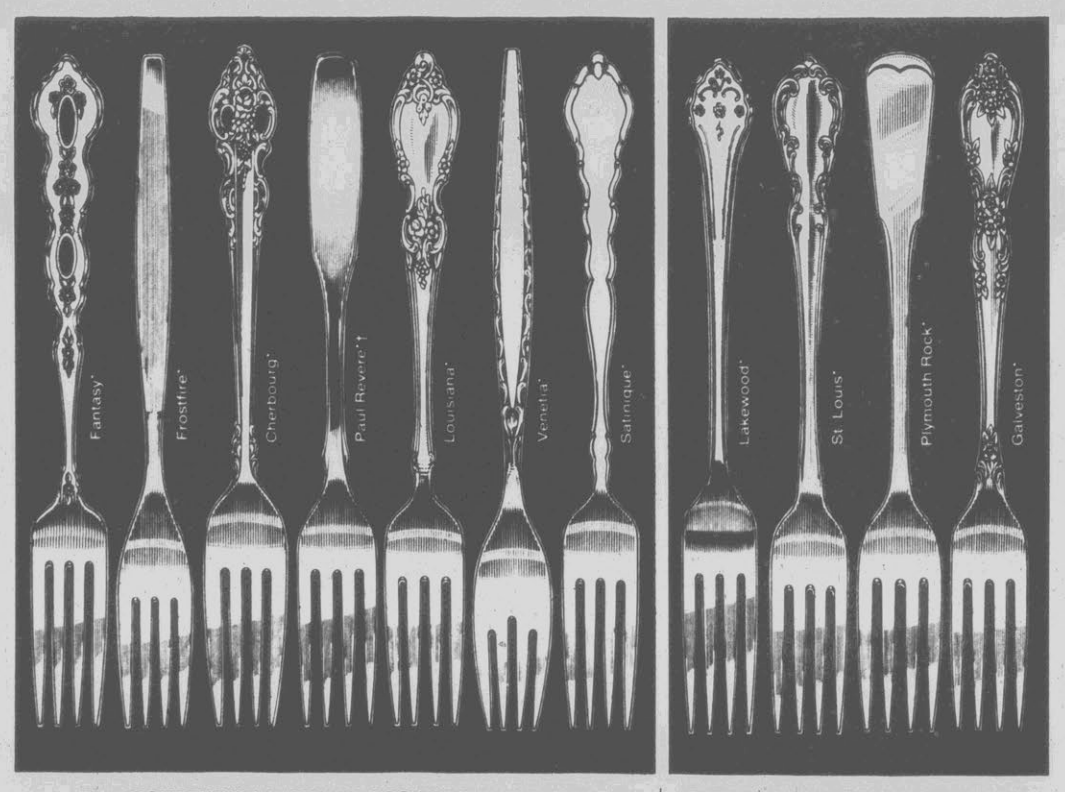

Dr. McCutcheon says that if we could design the ideal window insulator, it would be low in cost, in a package including hardware for installation, with simple instructions for the do-it-yourselfer.

It would have a medium R-factor (R-2 to R-4), an integral vapor barrier and good perimeter seal. The material would be durable, non-toxic and non-flammable. And the device would allow easy operation to insure use and safety in an emergency.

An estimated 50 million Americans are enrolled in retirement plans otherthan Social Security, according to the American Council of Life Insurance. They include half of all full-time workers in commerce and industry in the United States and three-fourths of all government civilian personnel, it says. These programs include profit-sharing plans that provide retirement income.

COOKING IS FUN!

BLUEBERRY TART

1¼ cups all-purpose flour
½ cup (4-ounce stick) butter
2 tablespoons sour cream
1½ cups frozen sugarless blueberries, rinsed
Topping, recipe follows

In a food processor with the metal blade, process the flour and butter until no butter is visible. Add the sour cream and process just until dough forms a ball. Remove and flatten into a disc; place in the center of an ungreased, round 9 by 1½-inch cake pan with a removable bottom. Press over bottom and sides of pan. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until set but not brown — about 20 minutes. Reduce oven temperature to 350 degrees. Spread blueberries in the pastry shell — it does not have to be cooled. Pour the Topping over the berries. Bake in the 350-degree oven until top is golden and meringue-like — 45 to 50 minuts. Cool on a wire rack. Remove sidewall of pan. Serve warm or at room temperature. Makes 8 servings.

Topping: In the processor, without washing bowl or blade, process together until smooth 3 large egg yolks, 1-3rd cup sour cream, ¾ cup sugar and ¼ cup all-purpose flour — a matter of seconds (scrape down side of bowl midway).

Meringues come out fluffier if a few drops of white vinegar are added to egg whites.

Miss Robinson Weds F.R. Sanders III

CHAPEL Hill — St. Joesph CME Church was the scene Saturday at 3:30 p.m. of the wedding of Audrey Denise Robinson and Freager Richard Sanders III. Dr. Jessie R. Robinson performed the double ring ceremony.

Gift Is Breath Of Fresh Air

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: One week ago today I gave up cigarettes for good. It's got to be the hardest thing I have ever done, but I've got it licked this time.

Why? Because my mother and I quit together. This is my chance to do something very important for someone I love very much, and I know if I stick to it, so will she.

We have both tried to quit before, but failed. This time it is working because even though I am not as hooked as my mother, I'm quitting more for her sake than my own.

What better gift could we give each other? Happy Mother's Day!

L. GAYLE SMARRITO, CHERRY HILLS, N.J.

DEAR L. GAYLE: Beautiful! Please send a progress report in September, and if you're still "clean," have I got a present for you!

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I hope you will use my letter on Mother's Day as a tribute to all those brave, unselfish mothers who gave up their babies.

I am a new mother whose heart is overflowing with gratitude to a 15-year-old girl I have never seen. I understand that she is a beautiful, intelligent person who became pregnant accidentally and decided on her own that her baby should have a better life than she was able to provide, so she put up the baby for adoption.

As soon as our son is able to understand, I shall tell him about his "real" mother and what a courageous person she is.

BLESSED

DEAR BLESSED: Thank you for an appropriate letter for Mother's Day. I agree that giving up a child for its own good is the ultimate in unselfishness. God bless those mothers who did.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: My mother just finished reciting the same speech she recites every year just before Mother's Day. It begins, "Now please don't throw your money away on a gift for me . . . I don't need anything."

Abby, I know my mother doesn't need anything, but I enjoy giving her presents, and it takes the pleasure out of it for me when she takes this attitude. I wish you'd tell mothers that children of all ages enjoy giving gifts on Mother's Day, so please accept them graciously.

SOMEBODY'S DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: Don't blame your mother. Her attitude is typical of most mothers. They don't want their children to deny themselves anything in order to buy a gift.

I know. When I was a child I recall vividly my own beloved mother (now gone 37 years) saying, "Please don't buy me any presents. I have everything I need." So instead of buying a gift, I gave her something money couldn't buy. I wrote a poem or a letter telling her how much I appreciated her. Years later I realized how much they must have meant to her, because after she died I found them tucked away among her souvenirs — all neatly bound together with a ribbon. She had saved every one of them!

* * *

"The Best of Dear Abby," featuring the best answers and favorite responses during the past 25 years, is now available. You can obtain a copy of this new best-selling book by sending $9.95 plus $1 for postage and handling to "The Best of Dear Abby," in care of this newspaper, 4400 Johnson Drive, Fairway, Kan. 66205. Wedding Vows Exchanged

GREENVILLE, S.C. — The Saturday evening wedding ceremony of Sherry Marie Bird and James Norland Gorsline, both of Greenville, S.C., was conducted by Dr. Walter E. Handford, pastor of Southside Baptist Church here where the wedding was held at seven o'clock.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bird of Route 8, Greenville, N.C. and Mr. and Mrs. Donald L. Gorsline of Greenville, S.C.

Martha Christine Thompson, sister of the bride of Glen Burnie, Md. was the honor attendant. Sisters of the bride, Bonita Kay and Rosemary Bird, both of Greenville, S.C. were bridesmaids. They wore formal gowns in lilac. Their bouquets and floral crowns, the bride's bouquet and floral arrangements in the church were of white, pink and shades of purple flowers.

Ron Gorsline was best man for his brother. Groomsmen were Doug Gorsline, brother of the bridegroom, and John Bird, brother of the bride, all of Greenville, S.C.

The bride's gown was fashioned in white chantilly lace overcast with pastel and clear sequins with long sleeves and a sabrina neckline. The full bouffant skirt had tiers of ruffles from the waistline to hemline and formed a chapel train. The illusion veil was attached to a crown of pearls and iridescent prisms.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Knudsen were vocalists. Glenn Christianson presented organ music. Philip Bird, brother of the bride, played the trumpet.

The bride is a graduate of Bob Jones University, Greenville, S.C. with a B.S. in office administration and is a secretary for Daniel International. The bridegroom is also a graduate of Bob Jones University with a B.S. degree in accounting. He is a certified public accountant for Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Co.

After a wedding trip to Florida, the couple will live in Greenville, S.C.

Increasing Intelligence

Increasing intelligence is not something that stops when one leaves school or youth behind.

"It has been shown that intelligence can actually increase into the mid-80's if a person is very active mentally," says Isabelle Buckley, extension aging specialist at North Carolina State University.

Intellectual ability may decline with age, Miss Buckley says, but actually very little and very late in life.

"The relationship of normal aging and intelligence is insignificant," the specialist says. "If it does occur, it only involves memory and speed of response, not overall intelligence."

At night, you can come home to a lighted house by using a timer to turn the lights on when you want them, rather than leaving them on all of the time you're away.

REUNION PLANNED

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Some children remember their mother's words of wisdom, times she has saved them from disaster with her advice, moments when one word made the path infinitely easier.

I guess if I had to pick the quality in my mother I have come to admire the most, it's the times she did absolutely nothing and said absolutely nothing. Those moments of silence when she allowed me to fall on my face, fail, make bad judgments and take stands I'd have to pay for.

Only the Lord knows the golden opportunities I made available to her to protest, rave, grimace, cringe, critique, and try to turn me around, but she never took the bait.

The time I signed up for $800 worth of silverware before my wedding when I didn't have a pot to cook in.

The decision to buy a car with 86,000 miles on it.

The times I shouted, "You don't know anything! These are my friends!"

The time I loaned my camera to a friend I had known for two days and never saw either again.

The time I listened to "everybody else's mother" who were letting them go swimming in April when the temperature was 59 degrees.

My decision to take calculus when I couldn't divide a recipe in half.

My stand to buck the principal and believe my own child who would never lie.

The time I knew a hot iron wouldn't hurt my new blouse.

A decision to tell my boss to "take the job and shove it, I could find another one."

Thinking back on it all, it must have been the most difficult part of mothering she ever had to do . . . knowing the ending, yet feeling she had no right to keep me from charting my own path.

So, thanks, Mom, not only for your silence, but for the greatest virtue a mother can possibly have . . . for never once having said, "I told you so."

When bathing a cat or a dog in the tub, a piece of steel wool placed in the drain opening will catch any stray hairs and prevent clogging of the drain.

Group Joining Peace Rally

President Reagan and some Greenville residents are traveling next month to the second United Nations Special Session on Disarmament to speak for peace.

Reagan will fly to New York from Brussels or Washington. The Greenville delegation will use three other modes of travel: motor vehicle, bicycle and foot.

Most will leave June 11, by cars, van or bus. A half dozen others will leave May 30 and spend eight days riding bicycles with night stopovers arranged in Ahoskie, Williamsburg, Va., Stratford, Va., Annapolis, Md., Newark, Del., Philadelphia, Princeton, N.J., and Staten Island, N.Y.

One is walking. Andy Rector started from New Orleans New Year's Day and is now nearing Washington, D.C., along with a dozen companions. The group expects to arrive in New York June 7, the first day of the U.N. Special Session slated to end July 9. Reagan will speak June 7.

Fourteen special activites are scheduled in New York in connection with the extraordinary meeting of the U.N. General Assembly. Rector and the cyclists plan to take part in eight, including the ceremony mentioned, an International Religious Conference June 8-10, a Witness for Survival June 11, and an International Religious Convocation, also June 11. June 12 a rally will be held in Central Park.

Anyone interested in taking part in the activities for peace in New York may call 758-4906 for more information, Greenville Peace Committee member Carroll Webber says.

ECU Program Is Accredited

ECU News Bureau

The master's degree program at the East Carolina University School of Nursing has been awarded full accreditation for six years by the National League for Nursing. The ECU master's program in nursing is the only one in eastern North Carolina and has 130 students currently enrolled.

Robert H. Maier, ECU vice chancellor for academic affairs, said accreditation of the master's program means that "all the professional educational nursing programs offered by our school of nursing are accredited at both the state and national levels. This is an achievement we are very proud of."

The ECU School of Nursing also offers a generic baccalaureate degree program in nursing with a curriculum track for registered nurses returning for the bachelor's degree.

South's Prisons Improve

By MARK MAYFIELD and RHONDA COOK

REIDSVILLE, Ga. (UPI) — Fear runs through the Georgia State Prison like the bugs that infest its cells, and court-ordered reforms have not stopped the bloodshed inside the decaying walls.

The stark white prison surrounded by hundreds of acres of farmland in southeast Georgia gained a national reputation as a bloody hell hole in the summer of 1978, wheninmate rioting killed six and injured 31.

Forty-six inmates werestabbed and 38 staff members assaulted at Reidsaville last year, and there have been three killings and six knifings this year.

"It's going to be a long, hot summer," said Reidsville Warden Charles Montgomery.

There are, however, indications that conditions may improve at Reidsville and other Southern prisons where overcrowding, understaffing, inadequate funding and antiquated facilities have created similar conditions.

The reforms are being ram-rodded by a handful of federal judges who have threatened everything from releasing inmates to jailing balky officials.

U.S. District Court Judge Robert Varner did more than threaten. He released 277 inmates from Alabama prisons last year to make room for hundreds more backlogged in county and city jails.

Alabama officials responded by building two new prisons and planning several others.

Prison overcrowding has reached crisis proportions in most southern states — creating a powderkeg that could explode under the summer sun.

State legislatures, fearing they will be called "soft on crime" and not wanting to dip deeper into taxpayer's pockets to aid common criminals, have been the major obstacle to prison reform.

"It's really frustrating," said Florida Attorney General Jim Smith after legislators rejected a $20 million emergency plan for temporary prison space. "We've been telling them this was coming, but you have to have a crisis before they'll do anything."

Florida's Legislature did approved a $6 million plan that includes construction by June 1 of five plywood prison barracks and the eventual addition of 2,000 temporary beds, with the first 200 to be installed at the Florida State Prison at Starke in mid-May.

Florida officials agreed under the settlement of an overcrowding lawsuit to hold its total prison population to 25,000. That number, which wasn't expected projected until 1985, has already been surpassed.

Florida, like Alabama, could be forced to turn loose inmates. Georgia and South Carolina officials say also face the same dilemma.

Reidsville's population has been reduced by court order from 2,000 to 1,200 — the figure now established as capacity — but the dangerous open dorms will be used until single cells are built.

Complaints from county sheriffs have forced Georgia officials to begin moving almost 2,000 state inmates backlogged into county jails to Georgia's other prisons.

In South Carolina, a bill before the Legislature would force the prison system to operate at its capacity of 5,821 prisoners instead of the 8,000 inmates now behind bars in state facilities. The proposal could force the release of hundreds of nonviolent convicts.

South Carolina's prison system last exploded in 1968, when inmates rioted at the Central Correctional Institution in Columbia. But prison officials got a scare last March when inmates went on a 45-minute rampage at the Perry Correction Institution in Greenville and wrecked the prison store. That fracas followed an inmate protest against prison conditions.

Despite intense opposition, Mississippi prison officials won legislative approval of a 1,450-inmate addition to the Parchman Prison, which is under a federal court order setting minimum living conditions.

The new unit will allow officials to remove hundreds of state prisoners from county jails.

Tennessee officials are also wrestling a court order to reduce prison crowding, but the violence continues. In one incident, a group of white prisoners shot and killed two black inmates and wounded two others after overpowering guards at Brushy Mountain State Prison.

North Carolina's prison system, designed for 14,800 inmates, currently has 16,007 convicts. But help is around the corner with the construction of a maximum security prison and medium security facilities in Montgomery and Greene counties.

Despite the recent bloodshed, Georgia State Prison has made important strides since the late 1970s, when the most dangerous prisoners lived in open dormitories, black and white inmates taunted each other openly and some guards were as violent as the inmates.

In the summertime, with no ventilation, the temperatures inside Reidsville reached 100 degrees and Montgomery said violence "was almost predictable."

"You do not put a buffalo in a child's playpen and not expect there to be some damage," Montgomery said.

The violent inmates were put in small single cells and are allowed out of their cells — one at a time — for less than 1½ hours, and then only to take a shower and to walk in a 100-foot-long corridor.

"It is dangerous," guard Larry Fore said as he watched while a stout inmate paced the hallway in front of him.

A $50 million construction has begun to create single cells for all prisoners.

Thanks Greenville, for stopping by our booth at the Better Homes Fair and seeing that...

There are a lot of little reasons for the big difference in our furniture.

We don't have to put walnut towels in our chair arms. But we think it's a nice touch. Because you get a little something extra at no extra charge.

Our unique manufacturing process enables us to use a larger leg stock. This provides strength while maintaining an openness of construction that makes it easier to move around and clean under.

We make the tops of all our tables flat. That's so you can put anything you want on the table anywhere you like.

Little things do mean a lot, but they don't cost any more at Cargo. Subtle differences in design make Cargo furniture better looking and more functional at an economical price. We make it a little different to be a lot better.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

1982 Tribune Company Syndicate, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—In our rubber bridge game the other night, this auction occurred:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	Pass	1 ♠
Dble	Pass	?

Since my partner was a passed hand, I decided that the double could not be for takeout. I passed, and the result was a disaster. My partner insisted that I had to bid, and he received some support from our opponents. I feel that I am right, but we have agreed to turn to you for judgement.—Mrs. M. Black, Birmingham, Ala.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—I think that you might be confusing two auctions. This is the other:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ♠	Dble	Pass	?

Here, too, North has passed on first turn and doubled on his second. This is clearly a penalty double. Had North wanted his partner to bid, he would have made takeout double over one spade. Obviously, North must have a good hand with spades as his best suit.

The situation you submit is different. Here, North did not have a chance to make a takeout double at his first turn – he simply said that he didn't have what he considers to be an opening bid. Now the situation has changed. With the opponents having opened one spade, North has a near opening bid and support for the other suits, and he would like to hear a suit from you in an effort to compete for a partscore. A typical hand he might hold would be:

♠x ♡ Axxx ♢ QJxx ♣KJxx

Although this hand is worth 13 points, it has only 1½ defensive tricks. Therefore, I would not consider it worth an opening bid, especially since I am short in spades. But when fourth hand opens the bidding with one spade, it is an automatic takeout double. If you don't get into the act now, it might be too late on the next round. This could easily be your hand, or you might have a cheap sacrifice should the opponents get to game.

Q.—My partner tells me that, unless I rebid a suit, I am denying five cards in that suit. Is that correct?—W. Williams, Tampa, Fla.

A.—It is difficult to answer such a question with a simple yes or no. By and large, however, experts will go to great lengths to avoid rebidding a five-card suit. A rebid in a lower-ranking suit, for example, usually implies that opener's first bid suit was at least five cards in length. Most often, when an expert freely rebids a suit at his first turn, you count on him having a six-card suit. About the only exception to this is when the bidding space has been restricted; i.e., South 1♡; North 2♢; South 2♡. With a minimum opening bid, South has little option except to rebid a five-card suit.

County School Lunch Menu

Fence Is Gone But Oak Ridge's Past Lives On

By STEVE HOLLAND

OAK RIDGE, Tenn. (UPI) — Alvin Weinberg was among the best and the brightest when he moved to Oak Ridge at age 30, one of a handful of men who knew The Secret of the most awesome killing device ever developed.

His work helped end World War II and create a nuclear peril that still hangs dreadfully over the world today.

There were thousands of people in Oak Ridge in the 1940s working on different parts of The Secret — the atomic bomb that laid waste to Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Weinberg was of the few who knew how all the parts fit together.

"We didn't think much about atomic power then. We mostly thought about atomic bombs," said Weinberg, a slight, bespectacled man who belies his 67 years of age.

"We recognized it was a very heavy thing we were getting into. We had no choice during the war. We ended the war," said Weinberg, now director of the Institute of Energy Analysis, an Oak Ridge think tank.

Oak Ridge was selected in September 1942 as the town where the wonders of the first controlled nuclear fission reaction, which was sustained on the squash courts at the University of Chicago, would be put to practice.

At the time Oak Ridge did not exist. Instead there were the farm towns of Wheat, Robertsville and Scarborough and 3,000 people lived in a 95-square mile area protected by ridge and valley.

"It went from not being a city when selected by the Army, and by the middle of 1945, it was the fifth largest city in Tennessee with 75,000 people living there behind a security badge," said Energy Department spokesman Wayne Range.

Today, the fence that once protected the secrets of Oak Ridge is gone. So have most of the people who made the bomb, either dead or moved away.

The city's main claim to fame these days is the production of nuclear weapons components, the making of nuclear reactor fuel and research into peacetime use of atomic energy. Oak Ridge is the proposed site of the $3.2 billion Clinch River Breeder Reactor.

Standing among the buildings left over from the war is the old graphite reactor, which Weinberg designed to produce the world's first grams of plutonium for the bomb. It is a national monument, its atomic waste decaying in big tanks buried nearby. The Oak Ridge National Laboratory continues important nuclear and non-nuclear research.

Oak Ridge today is a quiet city of 28,000 people, overshadowed by Knoxville 20 miles westward, East Tennessee's biggest city and the home of the 1982 World's Fair. Knoxville has always been bigger but Oak Ridge is the home of the best and the brightest.

That led to conflicts at times between the Oak Ridgers, the scientists who migrated from the northeast to work on the Manhattan Project, and the Knoxvillians, who looked scornfully upon the "invaders."

"During the war there were terrible shortages," said one who remembers the conflicts, Mary Jane Hibbs, wife of Union Carbide president Roger Hibbs.

"You couldn't get meat or milk or shoes or gas. Since Oak Ridge was a secret town and wasn't supposed to be here, there was no allotment of these things. We would go to Knoxville when we couldn't buy them.

"Of course the Knoxvillians resented that very much. We just shortened their supplies of everything. And we at the time were probably paid better," Mrs. Hibbs said.

The iron fence encircled Oak Ridge in 1945. Billboards cautioned those who ventured outside to remember, for national security, not to discuss the work they performed. Guards waited at gate outposts and you had to have a badge to get in and out.

It was a lively time, most of the people being aged 20 to 35, and the future of America was at stake.

"Patriotism has not been known since," Mrs. Hibbs said.

"It was a fun place to be," she said. "Most of us married in Oak Ridge and had families. We all met in the lab.

"I don't think people thought very much about an atom bomb. But there weren't too many people who didn't know what was going on. When somebody asked, we said we were making Wilkie buttons. Everyone refused to talk abut what we were doing. Anybody who had diarrhea of the mouth was in trouble," she said.

"A handful of people knew precisely what they were doing. Another group had a pretty good idea what was going on but never pinned it down. You were half afraid to. All of us were half afraid and were uneasy about it," Mrs. Hibbs said.

"We worked seven days a week and we realized we could end the war, which we did," said Weinberg. "We were scared that the Germans would get it first.

"I don't think in retrospect the decision to drop the bomb was the proper decision. We could have made it a demonstration and ended it," he said.

The aftermath of the bomb led to some peacetime research using radiation. From 1957 to 1974 government scientists at the Oak Ridge Institute of Energy Analysis bombarded 186 leukemia-stricken people with radiation to see if their cancer would recede.

The scientists passed on what they learned to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to help the space agency study the effects of radiation on astronauts. Of the 186 people exposed, only about a dozen are still alive.

A Kingsport, Tenn., woman whose son died after being bombarded with a massive dose of radioactive cesium-137 filed suit against the "cancer hospital" last month, charging her son was used as a guinea pig for space research.

The man who was head of the cancer hospital at the time, Clarence Lushbaugh, has denied giving 6-year-old Dwayne Sexton an abnormal radiation treatment for the space agency.

During testing of the first atomic bomb in 1945, cattle grazing in the hills near Alamogordo, N.M., were accidentally exposed to a cloud of radioactive dust. These cattle were bought by the federal government and shipped to Oak Ridge for lifetime observation of the effects of radioactive fallout.

This was the beginning of the Comparative Animal Research Laboratory, where all sorts of animals are either exposed to radiation or given doses of toxic chemicals to see what happens and determine how humans would be affected.

Dr. Pete Walburg, director of the lab, said most of the research into radiation exposure has been completed and the facility now leans toward the effects on man of America's new wave of energy — synthetic fuels.

"We have toxic materials in the environment that we don't even know is carcinogenic. People are afraid of radiation, but in fact the problems are chemical. We feel and find funding in the direction that chemical toxicology is the big problem," he said.

"We can't do experiments on people, so we use experimental animals to get a fix on what kind of effects might occur and at what levels of toxic agents," Walburg said.

The lab includes 1,000 acres, most of which is pastureland for raising sheep and cattle. There are facilities for handling rats, mice, guinea pigs, pigs, marmosets, burros and other animals.

Walburg said the animals are given small amounts of toxic chemicals, not enough to cause deformities in offspring.

"Generally speaking we don't do any kind of surgery," said Walburg. "We don't zap them with anything that makes them sick. We work at environmental levels where they're going to be happy and grow.

Tar Heel Mountain Area Seeks Fair Travelers

By CANDEE WILDE

BLACK MOUNTAIN, N.C. (UPI) — Tourist officials in western North Carolina are hoping to siphon off an extra $100 million this year from World's Fair visitors who "come to our side" of the Appalachian Mountains.

"There are so many more things to do in western North Carolina than in eastern Tennessee," said Dick Trammell of the Asheville Convention and Visitors' Center.

More than 10 million tourists are expected to visit Knoxville during the World's Fair, which President Reagan opened May 1.

"If at least 10 percent of them come through western North Carolina — and there may be twice that many — if only 1 million people come and spend just $100 each, that's $100 million dollars," said Charles Heatherly, of the State Department of Commerce's Travel and Tourism division.

Nearly $445 million dollars were spent by travelers in the western part of North Carolina last year, he said. That's an average of $500 per tourist.

Most hotels, whose registrations already are running from 30 to 70 percent ahead of last year, are offering World's Fair packages that include travel arrangements to and from the fair and accomodations.

Businesses have increased advertising this year, spending more money and increasing the market area.

Trammell said 10 western counties pooled their resources to form Western North Carolina Associated Communities, which raised about $300,000 for a "piggy-back" World's Fair advertising campaign.

"We hope to bring visitors to our side of the mountain during the World's Fair," he said. "A family of four can take an inexpensive vacation to this area and have something different to do every day of the week."

The major drawing card of the mountains are the mountains themselves. The Smoky Mountain National Park on the North Carolina-Tennessee line is one of the nation's most heavily traveled national parks. This year, 10 million people are expected to pass through its gates.

Local businesses have made the most of their beauty by building a wide variety of attractions — some in keeping with a natural scene, and others that seem almost ludicrously out of place.

For travelers seeking an inexpensive, back-to-nature trip the area boasts numerous campgrounds ranging from sophisticated RV-oriented facilities to those aimed at the backpacking-sleeping bag crowd.

Hiking is excellent, with peaks ranging above 6,000 feet near the Tennessee border, including Mt. Mitchell, which is the highest mountain east o the Mississippi. For the less adventuresome, there are well-marked footpaths whose easy grades usually pay off with a spectacular view or waterfall.

Fishermen will be pleased to note the mountain streams are stocked with rainbow trout, and the timid or unlucky will find many roadside restaurants around Cherokee and Maggie Valley that feature the local specialty.

Other outdoor attractions include horseback riding and whitewater rafting.

The Cherokee Indian reservation, located at the southern entrance of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and the Blue Ridge Parkway, is home of about 8,000 eastern tribe members.

Life As It's Lived

By GAIL MICHAELS

There is nothing more difficult than teaching a child the value of honesty. We all want our children to be honest, but we also want them to be courteous. Unfortunately, to a child who sees the world in black and white, the two behaviors are all too often incompatible.

Reconciling the two would be simpler if courtesy could be achieved by teaching a child to keep his mouth shut. This is usually what early lessons in good manners are all about. The child is instructed not to tell the lady with 16 cartons of Twinkies in her grocery cart that she is too fat. He is not supposed to say that one man's nose is temendous, or that the lady in the tight pants is wearing bikini underwear, or that the department store manager looks just like Dracula. He doesn't have to lie. He merely has to refrain from stating the truth.

This is difficult enough. Meg is 6, and she still blurts out whatever is on her mind more often than not. But at least she is beginning to understand that she shouldn't do this. What she cannot fathom is the need to prevaricate occasionally for the sake of good manners.

The manners-morality issue is especially confusing to Meg right now because lately Phillip and I have had to reprimand her repeatedly for stretching the truth in order to protect herself. If she walks through a mud puddle in her patent leather shoes, she will swear that she was looking up at the sky and didn't see the water until it was too late. If she leaves her marbles down for Zachary to taste-test, she states adamantly that she's certain she put them up and that it is entirely possible that he suddenly learned to open the door to her room and to climb on top of her bookshelf.

"The offense is bad enough," I tell her, "but the lying makes it worse. You know that you left those marbles down when you played with them last."

"I forgot."

"That's a lie, too. You cannot lie just because you're afraid to be punished. You may fool me a few times, but in the end you'll be in worse trouble."

"Why?"

"Because I might learn not to trust you. I might never believe you then, even if you were telling the truth. And if you go on telling lies to people, you'll soon be unable to tell the truth from the falsehood yourself. You'll destroy your character."

She obviously has taken conversations like this to heart because this week when I picked her up from a playmate's house, she could repeat my words almost verbatim. This playmate is not a favorite of Meg's, and their relationship has never been more shaky, but on this particular afternoon thay finally reached the breaking point. The playmate's mother met me at the door with a harried expression on her face. "I'm afraid Patricia has not behaved herself while Meg has been here."

"Meg!" I exclaimed with a sinking heart. "That's not nice! You tell Patricia's mother you had a good time."

Meg stood her ground. "But I didn't."

"I don't care," I hissed. "You still say you enjoyed yourself."

"Why? It's a lie. I don't want them to get the idea I want to come back here when I don't."

"I'm positive they won't get that idea, but you need to display good manners anyway."

"Why should I be the one to have good manners?" she insisted. "Patricia treated me like a squashed pea. Was that good manners, to treat a guest like a squashed pea?"

"No," Patricia's mother said. "Patricia's manners were not good, but she's going to improve them now, aren't you Patty? Now tell Meg you were glad she could come."

Patricia stuck out her tongue. "No!"

"Now, Patricia, do you want me to punish you again?"

"Patricia's mom even had to take her into the bathroom, and you should have heard what she said to her!" Meg interrupted.

"I don't want to hear," I sighed. "I just want you to say that you enjoyed yourself."

"But no one will ever believe me anymore!" she wailed.

"We'll have to take that chance."

Under duress the two exchanged their pleasantries with scowling faces. When we got home, Meg insisted upon reviewing the situation with her father.

"And do you understand now what Mommy was trying to do?" he asked her.

IS YOUR FAMILY AS IMPORTANT AS HIS?

You can learn a lot about home security from someone who has a lot of home security.

Take our new home security system. It's run by electronic controls identical to the ones that operate the system in The White House.

But it's also available at a price virtually any family in America can afford. (In fact, it's available at less than one-third the price of many systems now on the market.)

It's a sophisticated, completely modular system that can protect your home when you're there—and even when you're not. It's specifically designed to stop intruders before they enter—and to warn you and your family before a fire reaches dangerous levels. It can even protect a woman alone in her yard at night.

We'll be happy to send a security professional to your home for a free home security inspection. He'll give you all the facts.

This year, more than 2.5 million homes in America will be burglarized. Hundreds of women will be attacked on their own property. And more than 12,000 Americans will die in fires.

It's time you found out more about home security. Because first families aren't the only families that need protection.

To find out more about our free home inspection plan, just call or write.

May Is The Month For The Beginning Of Summer Explorations

A PITT COUNTY CANAL . . . in May presents an exciting annual challenge of the possible discovery of baby frogs, snakes and other creatures favored by young explorer boys.

No matter how quickly May seems to return in the cycle of passing years, there's always a resurgence of the longing to put aside indoor activities and get back into the open.

For some people, May — the prologue to summer month — means the chance to shed shoes and feel the warmth of newly ploughed earth against feet made tender by winter. For others, it is the time for casual strolls, alone or with friends, down a dirt lane to breathe in fragrances of blooming clover and early honeyusuckle; to be beguiled by the flash of bird color through boughs of new tree green.

May is also the ideal time to finish up April's efforts go get a garden planted or to complete the final round of yard work before the onset of June's rampant growth. Dedicated gardeners are rewarded in May with the riches of roses and irises.

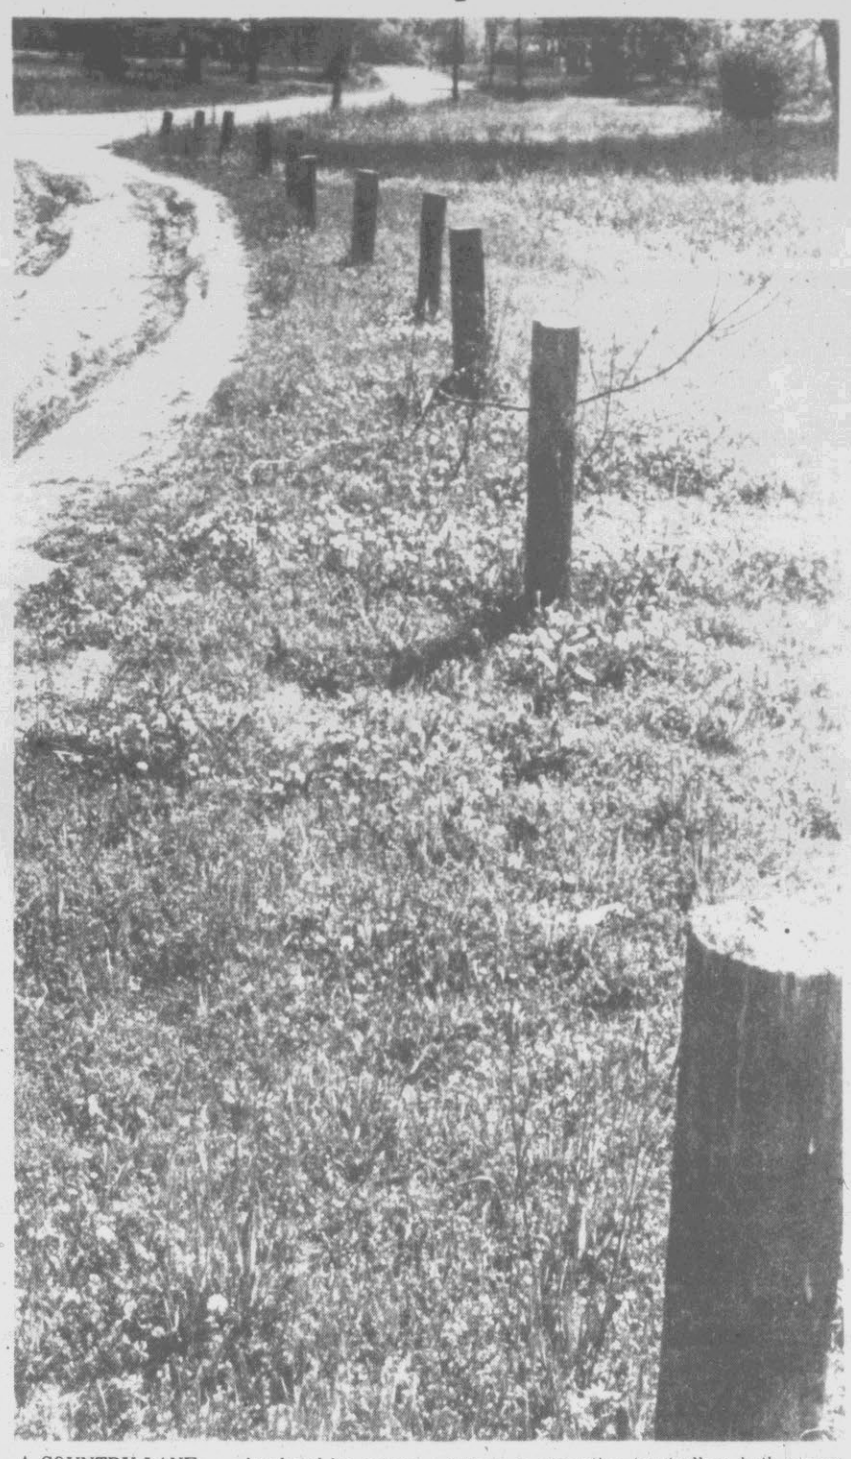

Everywhere in rural eastern North Carolina, fishermen of all ages turn their thoughts once more to the abundance of fish to be caught from shore or boat in a wide choice of waterways — winding tree-shaded creeks, farm ponds, canals, rivers and the open waters of bays, sounds and ocean.

People who find pleasure in eating outdoors begin planning picnics in parks or at some favored private secluded spot; and for the backyard cook, May days means cleaning up outdoor grills and accessories.

The pleasures of getting outdoors in May are innumerable — from a few minutes spent watching ants at their daily toils to the first of weekend trips to river and ocean beaches.

May is one of the magic months of the year — and few places are more ideally blessed than eastern North Carolina when it comes to outdoor things to do in this last full month of spring.

Text And Photos By Jerry Raynor

A COUNTRY LANE . . . bordered by grassy areas blanketed with sweet clover and dandelions is attractive to strollers both young and old. The scene here is in Martin County.

AN OUTDOOR PICNIC SHELTER . . . in a park setting, neglected during cold winter months, will be housecleaned during May of winter's leaves and dust and put into readiness for use by families, community groups and young couples. Places such as this enclosed picnic shelter near Seven Springs in Wayne County are popular for shared food, talk and games.

FISHING TIME AGAIN . . . in eastern North Carolina, and throughout the countryside, all who enjoy trying their luck in the ponds, lakes, creeks, canals and rivers that lace eastern North Carolina are putting forth in boats again. Here, a father, his son and a son's friend get ready for an outing in one of the dark water canals in Tyrrell County.

By JIM TYLER
Div. Marine Fisheries
N.C. Department Of Natural Resources

RALEIGH — On April 28 commercial fisherman John L. Cherry of Williamston lifted a part of his gill net out of the waters of the Roanoke River — and the rainy day was suddenly silver.

Almost 30 silver fish, quarter-pounders, were tangled in a yard square of nylon webbing. A friend with Cherry exclaimed "Hey! That's a herring blanket!" Indeed, the fish called river herring were thick enough on that morning to blanket the webbing of the net.

This is quite a different story from the spring of 1981. That spring, Cherry did not catch any herring. He was not then allowed to fish the river near Williamston with a stationary gill net because of a new regulation in effect at that time.

But this year, on Feb. 24, the North Carolina Marine Fisheries Commission changed the regularion to allow herring stationary gill netters to fish the area again this season.

Anyone who follows fishing history in eastern North Carolina probably has kept track of the diminishing spring spawning runs of river herring throughout Albemarle Sound and up on the sound's river tributaries.

Chowan River, which empties into the Albemarle at Edenton, is the main North Carolina track for river herring. The Roanoke River, which has its mouth in the sound just east of Plymouth, is the premium spawning river for another fish called striped bass or rockfish. Rockfish, too, are on the decline, even more so than river herring.

Cherry and his fellow commercial fishermen were not allowed to set stationary gill nets in the spring of 1981 as the result of an effort to ease pressure on striped bass, especially during the critical time of the spring spawning run.

Cherry and another dozen or so fisherman had always set a few short stationary gill nets (not more than 15 yards long) in the 70-odd mile stretch of the Roanoke River from its mouth to the highway bridge at Scotland Neck. Some 20 years ago all fishermen of the Roanoke used only stationary nets, according to a marine fisheries law officer who works the river. Drift gill nets became the popular style shortly after. Stationary nets are still used along portions of the river not suited to drift a gill net; too many snags and such.

After the new regulation prohibiting stationary gill nets during the spring spawning run was initiated last year, the small group of stationary herring gill netters began a campaign to change the law. The law was passed to protect striped bass, but herring fishermen said they were not catching enough incidental stripers to make any difference.

The group carried their complaint to the North Carolina Fisheries Commission and the North Carolina Division of Marine Fisheries. Sure enough, the law needed some fine tuning. Actually, two kinds of stationary gill nets were used in the Roanoke River during the spring spawning run — small mesh for herring and a larger mesh to catch larger striped bass.

A recently published scientific report on the Roanoke River estimated only 125 striped bass were caught by stationary gill nets in the 25 years from 1956-1980. Total commercial catch of striped bass in the river for that time period averaged about 11,000 fish a year; total catch by sportsmen with rod and reels averaged some 35,000 fish a year from 1970 to 1980.

In 1980, the commercial catch was down to some 2,000 fish, and the sport catch was down to some 15,000 fish.

The stationary striped bass gill net catch averaged about 8,000 per year during the past 25 years, so the original intent of the law was valid. The 1980 stationary striped bass gill net catch was 85 percent of the total commercial catch.

A RIVER WHERE THE HERRING ARE ... The Roanoke River, one of the tributaries emptying into the Albemarle Sound, is a prime source of the silver herring fish during its annual migration from the ocean to upstream breeding grounds. The view of the Roanoke here was taken from the riverside platform adjacent to the Williamston Community Building on the grounds of Moratoc Park. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

WOOW Classics

Jim Rees of the East Carolina University Department of Drama and Speech is joining Karen Hause tonight as the two co-host a program of classics and near classics that have become familiar to radio and television listeners in America through adaptation into commercials.

The weekly Sunday program airs from 10 p.m. to midnight tonight over WOOW Radio, 1340 on the radio dial.

"This is a fun program," Mrs. Hause comments. "Jim and I had a fine time selecting and putting it together, and I think our listeners will get a kick out of trying to remember and match up the music with the commercials."

Among the large selection of musical bits and pieces the two will present on tonight's show are Gounod's "Funeral March for a Marionette," the opening theme music for Alfred Hitchcock's old radio show; "Eine Heildenben," the theme music for "Our Girl Sunday"; the music by Pachebel for the old "GE Commercial;" two selections of music long associated with productions of "The Lone Ranger Show," — "Les Preludes" by Lizst and Rossini's "William Tell Overture;" and the "Overture to Donna Diana" by Rezcinek, the lyrical music used in the action show "Sergeant Preston of the Yukon."

Many other pieces of radio and television theme music drawn from the repertoire of classics will be played and discussed on tonight's special "WOOW Classics" show.

Music Contest

TINLEY PARK, ILL. — The annual Kentucky Fried Chicken competition in original country music songwriting is now open. Persons who wish to enter are to record the song on a cassette of no more than 3½ minutes in length. Cassettes are to be accompanied by a written version of the lyrics and a statement attesting to the originality of the work.

These are to be sent to: Kentucky Fried Chicken Country Music Songwriting Contest, P.O. Box 1014, Tinley Park, Ill., 60477. Entries must be postmarked by July 2. Tapes will not be returned.

BIG SPENDER — Country music singer Ricky Skaggs borrowed $75,000 last fall to promote his career. It apparently helped because he has just had a song, "Crying My Heart Out Over You," to hit the No. 1 spot in the country charts. Skaggs appeared at a concert at The Carolina Opry House in Greenville during April. (AP Laserphoto)

We put our foot down about apartments being within walking distance.
Wedgewood Arms apartments are within walking distance of three shopping centers, a nursery school, a junior high school, doctors' and dentists' offices and an athletic center.
As if that wasn't enough, three major traffic arteries, 264 Bypass, Arlington Blvd., and Charles St. are close enough to be seen and not heard.
Fact is, no apartments in town can legitimately claim to be more convenient to more things than Wedgewood Arms.
And, that's not all. Because Wedgewood Arms is not only convenient, it's different in other ways, too.
Take the floorplans: they're different from anything you've ever seen. And when you add in high energy efficiency, tennis courts, swimming pool, and the neighborhood "feeling" that these apartments will give you — well, you'll just have to see for yourself.

Greenville City Schools Art Show On View Through Friday

Two of the principal stages of children's art development is once more amply demonstrated in the annual spring show of art by Greenville City Schools students now on view at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 S. Evans St.

The first stage, which can be termed the intuitive stage of artistic expression, is disciplined only by the acquisition of minimal techniques required to use the materials of art. This time span begins early, with the first awareness of a child of his world, and continues through about the fifth or sixth grade age levels. These are the years in a child's life when emotional outpouring has not yet been significantly inhibited, when any idea or subject is confidently translated into artistic expressions.

With rare exceptions, such expressions — whether in making art, playing games, or learning music — are joyful ones, reflecting that period of life when each day is a magic kingdom to be explored.

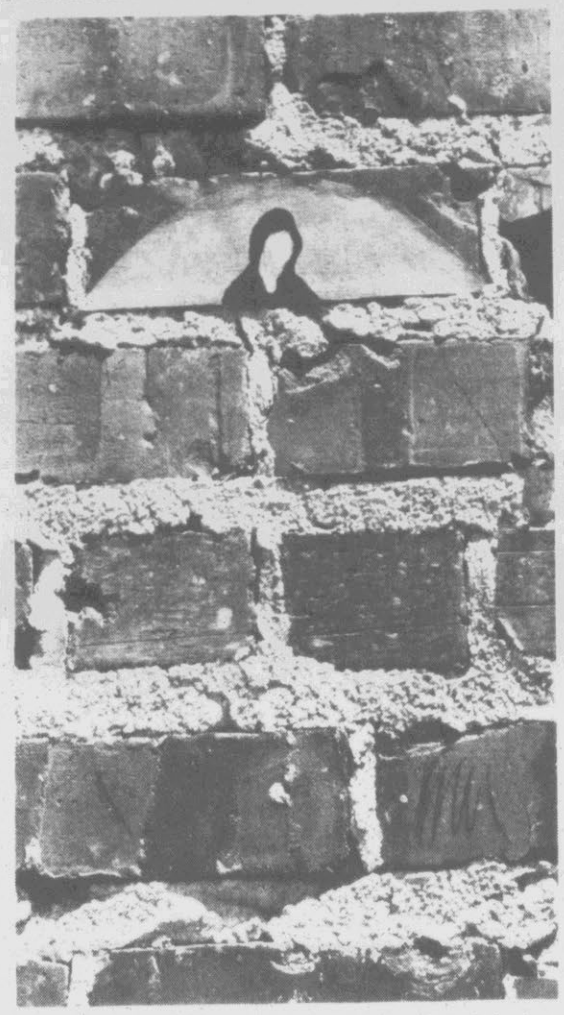

The second stage of a young person's artistic expression comes in the years when a child's viewpoint of art, along with all other outlooks on life, is first channeled into a recognition of discipling his means of expression. It is a time of early orientation in skills based on selectivity, of formulating concepts and ideas in order to forge the creative instinct into something far different from his initial efforts.

There is, in a very real sense, justification for regret that the earliest joyful abandon in creative efforts inherent in a child must be curbed, directed to art achieved through selectivity and increasingly sophisticated application of skills. However, in our complex civilization, this process is essentially necessary. A child cannot remain a child forever. Even in art, he must eventually venture into the mainstream of the adult world.

Fortunately, as this delightful exhibition clearly demonstrates, this does not equate to the abandonment of imagination, nor lessen the possibility of creating work that is visually and emotionally rewarding.

The exhibition of art by students in the Greenville schools will remain on view through Friday. This exhibition will be followed from May 18-28 by a show of art by students in the Pitt County schools.

Wins Kinston's Best In Show $1,000 Award

KINSTON — A sculpted pewter box by Greenville artist Betsy Markowski is the winner of the $1,000 Best in Show award in the recent 1982 Community Council for the Arts' Competitive Art Exhibition held at the Kinston Art Center at 111 E. Caswell St.

More than 320 quality pieces of art were entered in the competition, with entries coming from as far away as New York City and Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Markowski's winning entry, chosen by the show's juror, Bob Dance of Winston-Salem, is a small, jewelry-styled box made from pewter and entitled "Mad Hatter Tea Chest." Dance noted the craftsmanhip and creativity in theme and design of the piece.

Three substantial cash awards were also given to works judged as first, second and third places entries in the categories of oil-acrylic, watercolor, mixed media and three-dimensional.

Greenville artist John Quinn took third place in the three-dimensional category with a work entitled "Sylvia." Dan Morgan was another Greenville artist whose work was selected as one of the 76 pieces being exhibited at the Kinston Art Center through May 13.

"I really wish we could keep this show much longer," said Susan Jones, Art Center coordinator for the Community Council for the Arts. "The most common response I have heard from those viewing the show is that it is the largest volume of quality art work under one roof in Kinston. We hope the idea catches on further, and that we have more people entering next year."

ECU Choral Group To Tour West Coast

ECU News Bureau

Because of a friendly bus driver's urging, East Carolina University's select choral group will cross the country on a whirlwind three-week tour to the West Coast and back this month.

The ECU Choir and its conductor, Dr. Brett Watson, have a concert itinerary of 17 performances in 13 states, primarily in large churches. To save expenses, the choir members are literally "singing for their supper" in some cities, where host churches will provide beds and meals for the 30 singers and their conductor.

"Our favorite bus driver, A.J. Sherrod, suggested the West Coast tour to us," said Watson. "A.J. has driven for us on nearly all our previous tours because after we got to know him, we always requested the Trailways Company to assign him to us.

"He's really a super guy; always in a good mood, so we have a nice rapport with him. He even brings along an extra pair of black shoes to lend in case one of the boys forgets his."

Sherrod, a resident of Nashville who drives regular bus routes as well as charter tours, told Watson that while a West Coast trip would be expensive, it could be managed, if the members engaged in intensive fund-raising beforehand. Other groups in this area have done it, he told Watson.

With encouragement and support from the school of music administration, Sherrod's urging and the members' own enthusiasm, the tour idea will shortly become reality.

Even with 10 nights of free lodging in church members' homes and 22 free meals provided by churches and their members, the cost of the tour totals nearly $20,000, Watson explained.

To raise that sum, each member is contributing $300. They've also formed teams to wash windows for Greenville residents and sold copies of their Christmas carol album, "The East Carolina Choir Sings at Christmas."

"We have still not raised quite all the money we'll need," Watson said. "Some of the churches will be collecting a voluntary offering at our performances, which should help us meet the cost of the bus, the meals and lodgings we have to buy, and the printing expense for our programs and posters."

The choir's program for the tour includes several early and contemporary sacred works: "Salve Regina" by Josquin des Prez, "Super Flumina Babylonis" by de Victoria, a Heinrich Schutz setting of Psalm 128, Igor Stravinsky's "Ave Maria," "How Excellent Thy Name" by Howard Hanson and "At the River" by Aaron Copland.

The program also features the Johannes Brahms "Love Song Waltzes" and choral settings of Irish, Scottish, English, Czech and American folk songs.

The tour includes appearances in Nashville, Tenn.; Little Rock, Ark.; Muskogee, Okla.; Amarillo, Tex.; Albuquerque; Los Angeles, Pacific Palisades, San Francisco and Eureka, Calif.; Reno, Nev.; Aspen, Colo.; Omaha, Neb.; St. Joseph, Mo.; Jacksonville, Ill.; Hamilton, Ohio, and Washington, D.C.

Watson is an East Carolina alumnus with a master of music degree in composition from the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., and a doctor of musical arts degree in choral music from the University of Southern California.

He was twice selected as one of 24 choral directors from North America, Europe and Asia to conduct at the International Bach Academy in Stuttgart, West Germany.

Historic Bogue House For Sale

THE BOGUE HOUSE ... near Hertford, built in 1802, is for sale through the Historic Preservation Fund of North Carolina. This gambrel-roofed house is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places. The house, along with eight acres of land, is being offered under restrictive covenant for $46,000.

HERTFORD — The historic Bogue House near Hertford is being offered for sale by the Historic Preservation Fund of North Carolina Inc. Ideally located near Albemarle Sound, this house has excellent potential as a vacation home.

The Bogue House is being nominaed to the National Register of Historic Places and will be sold to a buyer who will restore it under protective covenants.

Built in 1802 by a prominent Perquimans County merchant, John Bogue, the one and one-half story frame house on a pier foundation features a gambrel roof and shed porch.

A double-shouldered, Flemish bond chimney stands on the west end of the house bearing the date 1802. The east end of the house had a similar chimney which has been taken down but could be easily rebuilt.

Modern Addition

A one-story, gable-roofed wing and porch project from the south elevation of Bogue House. Added in modern times, the wing consists of two rooms.

The interior originally followed a hall and parlor plan, but his was revised to a center hall plan with the addition of an interior wall in the west room. The enclosed stair, with a closet underneath, rises from an entrance to the rear of the central hall.

Two Upstairs Rooms

The upper floor has two rooms and a hallway. Dormer windows project from these rooms on the north and south walls.

The Bogue House, surrounded by farm. land, is about five miles north of Hertford. The house and approximately eight acres of land are for sale at $46,000. The acreage provides ample space for gardens and/or a small stable.

Near Outer Banks

Elizabeth City and the Outer Banks of North Carolina are 15 and 30 miles, respectively, east of Hertford. Edenton, with is historic district, is only 13 miles to the west.

The major rehabilitation needs of the Bogue House are foundation and roof repairs, reconstruction of the east chimney, mechanical systems, and bath and kitchen facilities.

Since the Bogue House is small, a buyer may wish to add onto the house by incorporating the existing wing or removing it and building an entirely new section. The buyer would have considerable design flexibility for such an addition, particularly since this rear, south facade has solar energy potential.

Covenants

The property will be sold subject to protective covenants to be administered by the Historic Preservation Fund of North Carolina Inc. The restrictions will allow the buyer flexibility in the use of the property, while protecting the structure from demolition, inappropriate exterior alterations or insensitive additions.

If the property is used for income-producing purposes, the purchaser will be able to take advantage of the income tax incentives which are available for the rehabilittion of historic structures under the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981.

Nonprofit Fund

The Historic Preservation Fund is a nonprofit revolving fund which was brought into being by the Historic Preservation Society of North Carolina. The fund has purchased historic properties and resold them to private citizens under protective covenants in 20 North Carolina counties.

People wanting more information about the Bogue House should contact The Historic Preservation Fund of North Carolina Inc., P.O. Box 27632, Raleigh, N.C., 2766-7632, telephone 832-3652.

Pitt Students Made Tours Of Eagles Museum

During the past week, about 450 students from grades two, six and seven in the Pitt County schools toured the buildings and examined the artifacts at the Connor Eagles Homestead and Museum located on the grounds of the Pitt County Fairgrounds.

Eagles, who took the children on tours of the facility which he has been instrumental in founding and which bears his name, noted some of the favorite places and artifacts of the young people.

"The buggy fascinated all the children," Eagles said. "I wish we had several of them as well as horses to hitch to them so that we could give the children rides. So many of them expressed a wish to take a buggy ride."

Other children's favorites mentioned by Eagles included the mannequin installed in the museum's outhouse; and the restored one-room schoolhouse. The schoolhouse is the latest building addition to the museum. It was moved to the sste from its original location between Fountain and Saratoga, in Wilson County a short distance across the Pitt County line.

"It's a pleasure to have children tour the homestead," Eagles said. "I'm really pleased to see them so enthusiastic about these things from the past."

Dance Grant

NEW YORK (UPI) — A $150,000 Philip Morris Inc. grant to the Joffrey Ballet for its 25th anniversary national tour, March 1-July 25, is the first major corporate grant ever awarded an American dance company for touring purposes. Philip Semark, president of the Joffrey, said, "We hope the Philip Morris grant will serve as a model for private sector action in taking up the arts-support slack created by federal cutbacks." The current tour, which also is partly funded by the National Endowment for the Arts, reaches Pittsburgh, Washington, Boston, Chicago, Minneapolis, Iowa City, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Houston, San Francisco and Portland, Ore.

The possibility of placing an artificial satellite in orbit was first raised by Sir Isaac Newton in 1687.

Summer Work Will Be Scarce In Most Areas

By LORRAINE CICHOWSKI
AP Business Writer

Grab the suntan lotion or a cook's apron if you need summer work. Jobs that survived state and local cost-cutting and recessionary pressures best are at the beach, camp or fast-food restaurant.

Otherwise, summer employment prospects for high school and college students generally are bleak, despite the efforts of businesses, colleges and public and private agencies to find openings, a nationwide Associated Press survey found.

The federal government has sharply reduced summer jobs funds; companies saddled with heavy debt have little extra money to hire summer interns — especially with so many of their regular workers on layoff — and out-of-work adults are competing for the low-paying jobs that otherwise would go to teen-agers.

"It is difficult to create a summer position in a plant that is cutting production or in a business that is retrenching, and that is what's happening," said Willie Johnson, executive director of Philadelphia's Office of Employment and Training.

Some of the sharpest government cutbacks have been in the Comprehensive Employment and Training Agency summer program, which provides jobs for disadvantaged youths, whose unemployment already is high. Among blacks, the teen jobless rate is nearly 50 percent, while unemployment for all youths aged 14 to 19 exceeds 20 percent.

CETA's summer jobs aid to states and cities was cut to $685 million this year from $769 million last year. Baltimore, for example, says it will have only 5,000 CETA-funded jobs this year, down from 17,000.

One exception to the generally bleak outlook is Oklahoma, where the unemployment rate is half the national average. "They're screaming for people. We have a lot of opportunities," said Suzi Newkument, job location specialist at the University of Oklahoma.

In New England, there will be summer jobs for students at Cape Cod, Mass., which apparently has been little affected by the recession. "People still have the money for it (vacations)," said William Branton, manager of the state job-matching center in Hyannis.

Branton said most summer jobs are at restaurants and motels, but gas stations and nearly every other service enterprise needs help.

Fast-food restaurants coast-to-coast expect to hire the same number of summer workers this year. And with exceptions like Detroit, Salt Lake City and other municipalities facing budget squeezes, summer employment was expected to be near normal in parks, camps and beaches. Experienced lifeguards are in demand.

More typical of what's happening is the problem facing Highland High School in Salt Lake City, where a daily television program is designed to tell students of available jobs.

"It used to be we had one or two jobs on a broadcast," said high school spokeswoman Marie Barker. "Now we are lucky if we have one every two weeks."

—Manpower Inc., the temporary-help agency, estimated a 17 percent decline in the number of workers it will use this summer — down to 50,000 from last year's 60,000.

—Disneyland in Anaheim, Calif., said it will hire only 1,500 workers, down 500 from last year.

—Al Stone, chief of the Nevada Transportation Department, which once employed as many as 250 summer workers, said only a handful will be hired this year.

—Olson Brothers & Sons Construction Co. in Chicago said although it normally hires summer help, it didn't last year and won't this year because many of its regular workers are on furlough.

—Bob Jones, spokesman for Columbus & Southern Electric Co. in Ohio said, "We have a hiring freeze that affects permanent and temporary employees. We will not be employing any persons for summer jobs."

—At General Motors Corp., "there may be a few jobs as summer replacements," said spokesman Bill Winters in Detroit. "But with all the layoffs, I seriously doubt it."

Walter Jones, North Carolina State University's director of career planning and placement, said word of openings from prospective employers has decreased by at least a third.

The College Placement Council, based in Bethlehem, Pa., said its latest survey showed fewer job offers are being made this year to college graduates.

New York's Chase Manhattan Bank is hiring the same number of summer interns as in past years, but for the first time is requiring graduate students who want jobs to have work experience.

Towson (Md.) State University spokesman Daniel Walsch said that a result of recession and high unemployment is that more youths are willing to take volunteer interships.

"The older people who have been deprived of the opportunity to get a job have reached down to take some of the less-important jobs," said George Boerner, work-experience coordinator at Hollywood, Calif., High School.

"There are guys working in newsstands now who never thought they would, and they're knocking the kids out of the job," he said.

Poor work prospects for youth are cause for concern in some quarters. Florida Commission on Human Relations recently warned this could be a long, hot summer in the cities because of widespread youth unemployment, especially among minorities. Riots in Miami two years ago this month left 18 people dead.

"I'm scared to death about this summer," said Charles Jones, director of resident development for the Tampa, Fla., Housing Authority. "Desperate people do desperate things."

San Francisco-based Bank of America is co-sponsoring a Youth Opportunities Unlimited program, which hopes to provide 9,500 jobs for Los Angeles high schoolers this summer. But the bank is trimming its own summer internship from 66 to 40 students.

"Our corporation is trying to increase its support over previous years for summer youth employment, but the problem is we have less jobs than before because of cutbacks," said Robert Corbin, a spokesman for Atlantic Richfield Co. in Philadelphia.

"This year, because of economic conditions, we are finding it more difficult to bring high school kids into our own organization so we are working with the city administration to provide cash, which will allow the city to hire high school boys and girls."

Baltimore instituted the Blue Chip-in Summer Jobs '82 campaign, where business and industry cooperate with city agencies to provide money, jobs or services to put youths to work. Businesses provided 89 jobs for low-income youths between the ages of 12 and 21 last year, but this year the number is up to 660.

The city, United Way and private industry in Kansas City, Mo., hope to raise $2.1 million to replace 675 lost CETA jobs. Albuquerque, N.M., is beefing up its "Dial-a-Teen" jobs program.

UNC Television To Benefit From Premiere Of Movie

CHAPEL HILL — The movie "Annie," adapted from the hit Broadway musical, has adopted North Carolina public television and this is making people at The UNC Center for Public Television happy.

The movie will premier at theaters across the country within several weeks. In an unprecedented cooperative effort between public television and the Hollywood film industry, the producers of "Annie" have agreed to donate the proceeds from the movie's opening night to local public television stations.

In North Carolina, the UNC center has scheduled four premieres of "Annie" — at the Oleander Theaters in Wilmington on May 31; at the Mission Valley Theaters in Raleigh on June 1; at the Hanes Mall Theaters in Winston-Salem on June 2; and at the Biltmore Theaters in Asheville on June 3.

The UNC center plans to make a festive occasion of each premiere. Joe Layton, the film's executive producer, and Aileen Quinn, who plays the title role, will attend the Raleigh premiere. (Layton is also director of "The Lost Colony" outdoor drama.)

At the other premieres, guests will include several North Carolina natives featured as dancers in the movie.

Each premiere will be followed by an optional champagne reception. Tickets for the premieres are $25 per person, with an additional $25 for the reception.

Writers Will Meet Tuesday

The first meeting of the Greenville Writers Club for the month of May will be held at the home of Patsy Baker O'Leary, 2813 Ellsworth Drive, Lake Ellsworth Subdivision, beginning at 8 p.m. Tuesday, May 11.

All persons interested in any form of creative writing are invited to attend the twice monthly meetings of the Writers Club, held on the second and fourth Tuesday nights of each month.

Poems To Be Published

Poems by Jim Rivers of Greenville are scheduled to be published at a future date in the "London Magazine," a British magazine of long standing.

About a dozen poems by Rivers from a collection entitled "From the Scattered Poems of Esterhazy" are to be included in the magazine.

A volume of poetry by Rivers is also due to be published this autumn by the University of Georgia Press.

Riemenschneider Book

RALEIGH — A book on the noted Gothic sculptor, Tilman Riemenschneider, written by Dr. Justus Bier, has been published by the University Press of Kentucky.

The book is Dr. Bier's first major English-language work on the art of Riemenschneider, whose delicate, unpainted carvings in wood and stone are viewed by many critics and art lovers as the apex of late Gothic sculpture during the late 15th and early 16th centuries.

The book is illustrated by more than 140 photographs and includes commentaries on individual sculptures in North American public collections.

Penney Supports Concerts

The final in the series of four White House Concerts, "In Performance at the White House," has J.C. Penney Company Inc. as one of the major underwriters.

The event will be broadcast at 9 p.m. on May 19 over UNC-TV, Channel 25, Greenville.

The program, which began in November 1981, has showcased outstanding artists and talented young performers in a variety of arts. Among those who have appeared on the programs have been dancer Gene Kelly and pianist Rudolf Serkin.

The May 19 broadcast will feature country singer Merle Haggard and a 20-year old fiddler, Mark O'Connor. President and Mrs. Reagan and their guests will be dressed in Western style clothing and seated on bales of hay for this performance, hosted by Beverly Sills.

Selections to be performed include "Silver Wings," "Workin' Man Blue," and Haggard's current hit song, "Rainbow Stew." Haggard is supported by his band, The Strangers.

William of Orange was proclaimed King of the Netherlands in 1815, following Napoleon's final defeat. Belgium, a nation which had once been Austrian, was placed under Dutch rule, a move which caused irreconcilable differences between the Belgians and the Dutch. When revolution broke out 15 years later, British mediation led to the establishment of the kingdom of Belgium under Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, an uncle of Victoria, the future queen of England.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By WILLIE NELMS

The growth in sales of the Nissan Motor Corp. and its Datsun line of automobiles has been a genuine success story. A new book at Sheppard Memorial Library, "Nissan/Datsun," by veteran automotive historian John B. Rae, traces the development of this Japanese company from 1960 to 1980..

How was Datsun able to enter the strong U.S. car market and in the relatively short period of 20 years become a leading factor in face-to-face competition? The answers are neither simple nor obvious. However, the author examines the internal operations of the Nisson Corp. to show the complex strategies contributing to its success in the United States.

The reader can review the many aspects of the Nissan Corp. Included are examinations of the dealer and marketing organizations, the parts, service and engineering groups and the administrative sections of the company.

The author emphasizes that Nissan has been able to perceive the opportunities and to seize them on short notice. By correctly analyzing the impact of the Arab oil embargo and swiftly reacting to it, Nissan was able to meet the need for compact, energy-efficient cars in the United States.

The book also analyzes the entire auto import market from the viewpoint of Nissan. In this way, the reader gets a good general overview of the structure and competition in the automotive industry.

One excellent selection of the book describes the development of the American automotive scene in the 1950s. One sees the attraction of the large cars produced by domestic manufacturers at this time; by the same token, the reader is shown how Datsun was able to address the early interest in small cars. Throughout the volume, the reader is shown how Nissan was able to establish a firm foundation for its product and to react at the proper moment to enlarge its share of the market.

Not content to chronicle merely the past, Rae looks at the future of Nissan. He speculates the company's future and describes the prospects for its continued success.

Because of the current interest in Japanese management techniques and methods of production, various sections of this book will be of special interest to American businessmen.

Albert Speer's Look Into History

Born and raised in Mannheim, Germany, Speer was the son of an architect, a bright student who went on to become an architect himself. He was a family man who began his working life as an assistant to his old college professor when he was unable to get commissions as an architect. He was an admirer of Beethoven, a champion of simple, functional approaches to building.

Unexceptional. Unexceptional, that is, until January 13, 1931, when Albert Speer, at age 25, became Nazi Party member No. 474481, and began a descent into hell that would lead to his trial as a war criminal at Nuremberg and a 20-year sentence at Spandau prison.

"If Hitler had had any friends," he wrote "I would have been his friend. I owe to him the enthusiasms and the glory of my youth as well as belated horror and guilt."

The blind enthusiasm and the horror that followed come to the screen in two parts — Sunday, May 9 (8-11 p.m.) and Monday, May 10 (9-11 p.m.) when ABC presents "Inside the Third Reich," a dramatization of Speer's story. The telecast stars Rutger Hauer as the sensitive artist who became Hitler's personal architect, confidant and protege; seduced and destroyed by the hypnotic influence of The Fuehrer (played by Derek Jacobi).

Marvin Chomsky, winner of two Emmy Awards for his powerful and unblinking recreations of "Holocaust" and "Attica," directed "Inside the Third Reich" from a script written and produced by E. Jack Neuman.

"I wasn't looking for 'history'; history is well documented on film and on paper," Newman says. "I was looking for views and insights into Speer's character. The picture should really be the story of one man who sold his soul to the devil."

"The picture, like the book, can give a warning to our modern world," Neuman believes. "There are a lot of Hitlers emerging all the time. I think — and Speer thought — that if you know your enemy you might be able to spot him before he gets the power to kill millions."

Albert Speer died September 1, 1981, two months before production began on "Inside the Third Reich."

RUTGER HAUER (r) stars a Albert Speer, the idealistic young architect whose ideals rotted away as he became first a follower and then a colleague of Adolf Hitler (played by Derek Jacobi), in "Inside the Third Reich," which also stars Blythe Danner as Speer's fiercely anti-Nazi wife. The film airs as a special two-part presentation on ABC, Sunday, May 9 (8-11 p.m.) and Monday, May 10 (9-11 p.m.).

The Waltons Reunite

Many of the regulars from "The Waltons" reprise their roles from the long-running television series (1972-1980) in "Mother's Day on Waltons Mountain," a film to be broadcast on NBC's Sunday Night at the Movies, May 9 — Mother's Day — (9-11 p.m.).

The romantic drama, set just after World War II, focuses on three separate stories — Mary Ellen Walton's auto accident during her honeymoon, which produces injuries that may prevent her from having children; the meddling of Cindy Walton's mother, who disturbs the young marrieds' household; and Elizabeth Walton's interest in a college student, who is also being pursued by a determined rival.

After her marriage to veternarian Jonesy (Richard Gilliland), Mary Ellen (Judy Norton-Taylor) takes a drive in their jeep and is seriously injured when she tries to avoid a deer in the road. The mishap may have long-term effects on Mary Ellen's marriage.

When Ben and Cindy Walton (Eric Scott, Leslie Winston) encounter financial problems, Mrs. Norris (Penelope Windust) offers to help — but complications arise as Ben and Cindy grapple with more than they had expected.

Young Elizabeth Walton (Kami Cotler) has her first beau, but she soon learns that Drew (Tony Becker) — a college student — has also attracted the attention of Aimee Godsey (DeAnna Robbins), daughter of the couple who operate the local general store. Rebellious Aimee also begins to taunt her mother, Corabeth (Ronni Claire Edwards), when she learns that she wants to pursue her interest in becoming an artist.

JUDY NORTON-TAYLOR, who portrays Mary Ellen Walton, is comforted by her husband (Richard Gilliland) after being seriously injured in an auto accident, in "Mother's Day on Waltons Mountain," a World Premiere drama to be broadcast on Sunday, May 9 (9-11 p.m.), on NBC-TV.

Keeping Busy

In addition to her daytime role as attorney Kathy Taper on "Search For Tomorrow," Nicolette Goulet will play the part of Wren in Max McGahey's off-Broadway production of "Sweet Sound of Trumpets," beginning in May at the American Theatre.

Hudson In Series

Rock Hudson's new series, "The Devlin Connection" is back in production. The show, to have premiered last season, was cancelled when the actor required by-pass surgery. It will now premiere this fall.

Black Ent. Television

Black Entertainment Television: Movie: "Brothers" Starring Bernie Casey. An innocent man is convicted of a crime he didn't commit and must win his release from prison.

THE Rook Look AT GARMENT CARE

DICKIE ROOK

Outlook for Spring and Summer

The fashion words for this Spring and Summer are soft, light, and bright. The fabrics are lightweight and will provide comfort in the warm months to come.

The colors in the new Spring/Summer fashion line-up are bright. Bright prints on a dark background are very popular with garment manufacturers, as well as bright tweeds, open weaves, plaids, and sheer designs.

A Cleaner World Garment Care Center advises that you have all of your new Spring garments professionally cleaned. Professional cleaning can help to restore a clean, new look to your garments, and it will keep your clothes looking newer longer.

Michele Will Tell

Q: Could you please tell me how to write to Barbara Mandrell and Dolly Parton? A FAN IN GOLDSBORO, N.C.

A: We've answered this before, but we'll oblige once again. Write to Barbara Mandrell in c/o "Barbara Mandrell and the Mandrell Sisters," NBC-TV, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, N.Y. 10020, and Dolly Parton, c/o ICM, 8899 Beverly Blvd., Los Angeles, Calf., 90048.

Q: I am writing you because I want you to settle a disagreement between my sister and me. My sister claims that Erica of "All My Children" and Dorian of "One Life to Live" are sisters and that their mother is the famous actress Phyllis Diller. Well I disagree with her, tell me who's right. MARCIA YARLISIO, FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

A: You are! Phyllis has three daughters, Sally, Suzanne and Stephanie Diller. They are actresses, however, they do not portray either character mentioned. Susan Lucci appears a Erica Kane on 'AMC". Robin Strasser stars as "One Life To Live's" Dr. Dorian Callison.

Q: Is Dr. Friedman on "M*A*S*H" also Belker on "Hill Street Blues"? FURMAN IVEY, ORRUM, N.C.

Q: Could you please tell me if JM J. Bullock of "Too Close For Comfort" plays Big Bird on "Sesame Street"? THE BRAXTON FAMILY, AYDEN, N.C.

Q: My son-in-law, who is a fan of "The Fall Guy," collects hats. Can you tell me how I can get one of the hats from that show? REBECCA CRAIG, CONOVER, N.C.

A: If you're looking for a hat like Colt Seavers', try contacting the series and let them know what you're after. Address inquires to "Fall Guy," ABC-TV, 1330 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y., 10019.

Q: Would you please tell me if Hayley Mills is married, and if she has any children? Also, what is her full maiden name? JOY WELLS, HENDERSON, N.C.

A: Hayley is divorced from director Roy Bouting — they have two children. She was born Hayley Catherine Vivian Mills, April 18, 1946, in London, England.

Bootleg Music

Bootleg recordings, equipment and related materials with an estimated value in excess of $20 million were confiscated following a raid at a warehouse in Stuart, Fla. Located during this search were over 100,000 45-RPM singles and LP albums by various artists.

Lot Of Paperwork

Life After The White House

Jean Stapleton stars as Eleanor Roosevelt who, following the death of her husband, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, is torn between her family and her responsibilities as a mother and grandmother, and the opportunity to become an influential public figure in her own right, in "Eleanor, First Lady of the World," to be broadcast Wednesday, May 12 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS.

The story concerns Mrs. Roosevelt's search for her own happiness, following the death of her husband in April 1945. The former first lady is a private citizen for the first time in many years and her family hopes she will settle down with them and take a much-earned rest.

While her daughter Anna urges her to retire from the public eye, President Truman appoints Mrs. Roosevelt as a delegate to the fledgling United Nations. So at age 64, Eleanor finds herself in the midst of a new career as a diplomat in the face of family pressures, political criticism and diplomatic infighting led by her very powerful rival John Foster Dulles (E.G. Marshall).

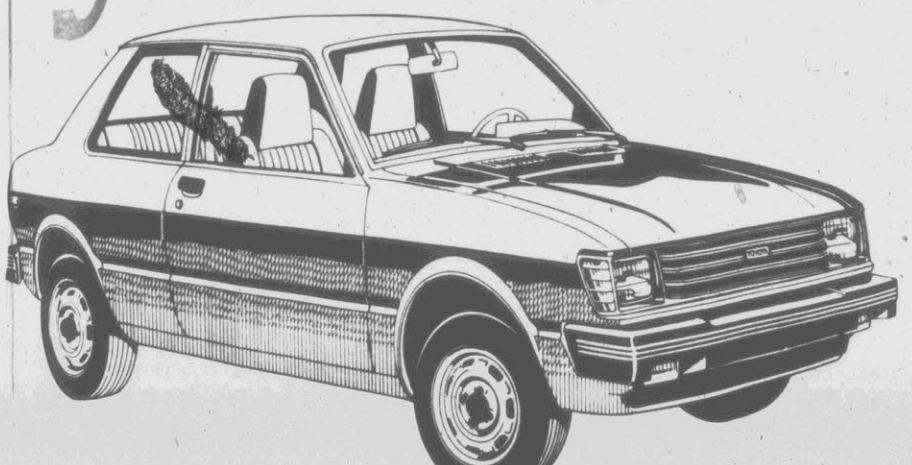

She has to feel her way with care when a U.N. committee is created for her with no mandate or agenda. But her friend, Lady Reading (Coral Browne), helps her find a cause to fight for — the world's cold, hungry and homeless — and Mrs. Roosevelt throws her energies into the creation, development and ratification of the U.N.'s Declaration of Human Rights.

A Russian filibuster, a move by Dulles to dominate her committee, and the demands of delegates from differing cultures all play a part in Mrs. Roosevelt's struggle to blaze a trail of concern and compassion for the weak by the powerful.

Miss Stapleton once met Mrs. Roosevelt when the latter visited the cast of "Come Back, Little Sheba."

Thrill Of Lifetime

The Great Wall of China, the only man-made monument American astronauts could see from the moon, was first constructed in the early 5th century B.C. to ward off barbarian invaders from the North. Over the centuries as many as a million laborers constructed the 3,000-mile stone curtain that today can be visited about 40 miles outside Peking.

For Ken Marshall, who stars in the title role of "Marco Polo," filming atop the Great Wall was one of the highlights of his young career. "It was incredible," he recalls. "We were up there on ponies riding through these archways. I kept wondering how those guys got all those stones up there."

Learned Touches Television Viewers

She has her hand on the pulse of the patient and is enormously successful in touching the pulse of the television viewing public. She is actress Michael Learned, who stars with Robert Reed in the second season of "Nurse," which airs on CBS, Fridays (10-11 p.m.).

That Michael Learned is a particular favorite of TV viewers can be attested to by the fact that the actress was recently nominated for Favorite Female Performer by the People's Choice Awards for her portrayal of Mary Benjamin, R.N., in "Nurse."

Ms. Learned is certainly no stranger to nominations and awards, since receiving critical acclaim for her portrayal of Olivia Walton in the highly-praised series "The Waltons." For her performance in that long-running series, she won three Emmy Awards and a Photoplay Award.

"Like 'The Waltons,'" explains Ms. Learned, "'Nurse' also deals with everyday human drama. In 'Nurse,' the tension and conflicts occur both inside and outside the hospital. I know in the past two years I've learned a great deal about the workings of a hospital and the suffering and joy that surrounds the daily life of a dedicated nurse. And I believe that most nurses are extremely dedicated to making a hospital stay more pleasant for a patient and to helping their patients get well as soon as possible.

"I think that everyone on the 'Nurse' series is affected by working in a hospital situation. We learn to be patient with sick and disturbed people. And what's most important, we learn to become more tolerant of our fellow human beings."

Ms. Learned is optimistic about the future of "Nurse." "The most recent shows are about the best we've done. The excellent scripts deal with real problems that viewers can relate to.

CBS Airs More Playoff Action

The NBA playoffs are rolling along in high gear toward the Championship Series, a best-of-seven affair. CBS Sports is covering the action and will be broadcasting a doubleheader on Sunday, May 9 (1 p.m.-conclusion).

Because they won their respective division titles, four teams (Boston Celtics, Milwaukee Bucks, Los Angeles Lakers and San Antonio Spurs) won a bye through the first round of the playoffs. The importance of a bye is evinced through the fate of the Houston Rockets. Houston finished this season only two games behind San Antonio; consequently, the Rockets had to play the Seattle SuperSonics in a best-of-three series to advance to a conference semi-finals matchup with the Spurs. Houston came up short and are out of the running until next year.

The Celtics are the NBA defending champions and ended this season with the best record (63-19) in the League. Still, the competition will be stiff as Boston tries to be the first team in 12 years to repeat as NBA World Champions.

The Lakers, who had the best record (57-25) in the Western Conference, are gearing up to spoil Boston's fun. Los Angeles knows the importance of earning a bye through the first-round playoffs; last year, they stumbled in the opening series and were knocked out of the post-season competition by Houston.

Los Angeles' Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the man former Laker coach Paul Westhead referred to as "the Babe Ruth of basketball," admits that winning is a tremendous morale booster. "I think success makes everybody like each other," he said. "You just seem to get along better with everyone and you really make the effort to get along." Which is why any sportswriter will tell you it's a lot more fun to cover a winning team than a losing one.

Boston Coach Bill Fitch has come up with what he calls his "football lineup" — Robert Parish, Rick Robey, Kevin McHale and Larry Bird — to fend off any team that thinks too strongly about winning when playing the Celtics.

Commenting on the value of center Parish, teammate Bird said: "You get the ball to Robert when he's in position and so many things can happen. His turnaround jumper, with that high arc, can't be blocked. If he's overplayed, it's a drive for a stuff. And if the other team double-teams him, the whole court opens up for the rest of us."

HOLLYWOOD — SUZANNE SOMERS will be back with "Three's Company" — in a one-hour ABC special, "The Best of Three's Company." The show will be hosted by LUCILLE BALL on May 18th. Negotiations took one week to clear SUZANNE for the show which is a retrospective of the show's first five years.

A new career could develop for EDIE ADAMS. Her guest appearance on "As the World Turns" turned out so great she has been asked to join the cast as a regular.

Buoyed by the ratings the two-hour musical special delivered on "The Love Boat" in February — plans are underway to offer a two-hour country music special next season — starring in the special are Nashville stars MINNIE PEARL, MEL TILLIS, TANYA TUCKER and DOTTIE WEST. Taking it a step further, producer DOUGLAS CRAMER has filmed a 90-minute Dog Show special featuring 30 of trainer FRANK INN'S canines — because as he says: "everyone loves dogs."

And speaking of ratings, FRANK GORSHIN'S debut as a new character on "Edge of Night" a few months back has resulted in the series achieving its highest rating in more than two years.

FOR DR. JOYCE BROTHERS, psychologist, author of What Every Woman Should Know About Men (Simon and Schuster, 1982)

You said a man in his 40's is in his prime—at what age is a woman in hers? —J.S., Simi Valley, Calif.

● A woman is in her prime at every age, because she is generally comfortable about being a woman. Women don't worry about their femininity as much as men worry about their masculinity. If you ask a man to look back on his life, the period he seems to feel best about is his older years. On the other hand, all of a woman's years — from the time she reaches adulthood — are prime years for her. She has already learned all about herself, her body and her world and is comfortable with the knowledge.

● A lot of people on the show do research by sitting in a hospital, but my background saves me the trouble of doing homework. I was an Army medic in Germany for two years. Although there was no war on, I was called upon in emergencies to perform first aid.

FOR MILLICENT MARTIN, star of Broadway's 42nd Street

What do you miss most and least about your homeland, England? — H.H., Auburn, New York

● What I miss most are the Sunday papers, all six of them. I prefer six little papers, silly ones, to one big serious one. Sunday is not a day for concentrating. I don't miss the strikes, which go on constantly, or the British summer which doesn't resemble summer.

Is it true that peanut butter speeds the blocking of the heart's arteries? — J.M.M., Winterville, N.C.

● Television ads emphasize that peanut butter is high in protein. But most people aren't aware that peanut butter is 50 percent fat. Because the fat is monosaturated, it should not elevate cholesterol levels or contribute to atherosclerosis. I believe that peanut butter is a safe and nutritious food.

FROM THE "ASK" EDITOR

MOTHER'S DAY MIX: How does a gal know if it's real love or just infatuation? If you're TV actress Marilyn Sokol, and you have a very smart mom, you'll be lucky enough to get this advice: "A small voice will whisper urgently in your ear, 'This is it. This is the real thing.'" Recalls Marilyn: "Very soon after my mother told me this, I met a man who was gorgeous, best described as a composite of Clark Gable, John Travolta, Robert Redford, Chris Reeve. As we danced to some romantic music, he stated in a loud, clear tone, 'Shall we go to your place or mine?' With my mother's words still fresh in my mind, I answered, 'If it's all the same to you, please repeat what you just said, in a small voice in my ear.'". . . Were it not for their mothers, you would not be familiar with the names of Ernest Borgnine and Edward Villella. After WW II, Borgnine was floundering. "My mother packed my lunch each day, and I went out to look for work. I was always unlucky," he recalls. "Much later, when I was 28, I told my mother the solution was to rejoin the Navy. Out of the clear blue sky she asked, 'Have you ever thought of becoming an actor? You like to make a fool of yourself in front of people — give it a try.'" Said Villella: "One day my mother saw me playing a rough baseball game in the street. She was convinced I'd never stay in one piece if I continued. To protect me she would take me along to my sister's ballet lessons. I was fascinated and asked Mom if I could take lessons, too. At 10 years old I knew what I wanted to do." . . . Horn-player Chuck Mangione tells a favorite story about his mother: "One night I called and said, 'Mom, I'm bringing 35 musicians home for dinner.' She wasn't fazed and when we got home, a meal was ready." . . . And this is our favorite Mother's Day story for 1982: Wilfredo Benitez' mom, Clara, saw her son fight for the first time when he challenged Maurice Hope for the junior middleweight championship last year. At ringside, a spectator needled, "Get out of the ring you bum." Demanded Clara of the 6-foot-4 heckler, "Why are you saying those awful things to Benitez — he's my son." The man lost his anger. "Maurice Hope," he explained, softly, "is my brother." (P.S. Benitez knocked out Hope in the 12th round.)

Mom sees importance of Ernest.

PRO AND CON

Should There Be a Constitutional Amendment To Balance the Federal Budget?

(Question submitted by L.M. Lalko, Brownsville, Tex.)

Send questions of national significance, on a postcard, to "Pro & Con," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022.
We'll pay $10 for those published.

PRO Senator Don Nickles (R.-Okla.)

Today's national debt is over $1 trillion, caused by runaway spending. The amendment would make deficit spending possible in only the rarest of circumstances, i.e. war, and hold politicians fully accountable for tax increases. It would demonstrate the first serious commitment to Government living within its means. Any other method would be subject to easy change by Congressional whim. We must limit spending and return our priorities to allowing individuals more discretionary income.

CON Senator Gary Hart (D.-Colo.), member, Budget Committee

We should work to balance the budget, but a Constitutional amendment to do so would be bad economics, bad politics and bad law. The Constitution establishes the Government's structure and shouldn't endorse an economic policy or viewpoint. An amendment would limit the Government in a national emergency or economic downturn and still not tell us how to balance the budget or where to cut. It will not balance the budget automatically, and cannot substitute for Congress's fiscal discipline.

HOPES FOR MY CHILDREN

By Stephani Cook

There was a time, not so long ago, when the response to the idea of motherhood was as simple and straightforward as the images associated with it: kitchens smelling of apple pie; the cool hand of comfort on the forehead when one was sick as a child; the beaming face in the audience as one recited a poem, or sang, or graduated.

But we live in a time when the idea of motherhood is more ambiguous, when the traditional idea of family itself is threatened. We live in a time when young people are choosing not to marry as early as they once did, or not getting married at all; when they are deciding to postpone childbirth (sometimes indefinitely) and then are having fewer children per couple than in any period of history except the Great Depression (the average number of children under 18 per family is 1.03). And we live in a time when over half of all mothers work outside the home.

As pressures of all kinds mount and changes occur, the "Mom" whose image we have long carried with us becomes a rarity: Fewer than one in five American families are now the Father-Knows-Best families of our (or at least my) youth, with a Daddy who went off to work and a Mommy who stayed at home to iron the crisp frocks that little girls were expected to wear, and to bake cookies (with the help of the little girls) for the little boys who would dash in after school on their way to the sandlot, where they played variations of the games their sports heroes played, or stalked each other in mock war maneuvers, with sticks for guns.

Clearly a great deal more has changed than just our idea of Mom. Our idea of ourselves has changed, and so have our ideas of parenting: how it should be done, what it means — in 1982 — to do it well, whether to do it at all. Sex-role stereotyping — in spite of the New Right — will never again be as rigid as it was right up until the latter third of the 20th century. . .if for no other reason than that for the first time in history, women need not play baby roulette. For the first time, a woman has the right (and the responsibility) to choose whether or not she wants to be a mother, as well as what kind of mother she wants to be.

Choice like this is inevitably coupled with ambivalence. When one is no longer simply forced by circumstance to adapt to the inevitable but required to struggle with the elements of the choice itself, something new and powerful comes into that process and the acceptance of its consequences: a kind of fierceness that does not exist where choice does not exist — a fierceness of loving, a fierceness of determination, a fierceness of obligation to the choice made.

There is, of course, no a priori "right" choice about whether to be a parent or not, any more than there is a "right" choice about how to raise a child once that first choice has been made; I ache for friends who are approaching the end of their childbearing years and haven't yet made a commitment to having children — even by a kind of default, as I did, falling into what was expected of me with as little questioning or thought as I once gave to falling in love.

And although this affair of children has lasted much longer than even my marriage, still, I view it with a kind of astonished ambivalence. Because while I adore my children, while they are certainly the center of my life around which everything else revolves, I think it likely that had I not had them when I did, in my early 20's, I might never have had them at all.

I cannot pretend to come to terms with the paradox, and it simply stands: I love my children enormously, voraciously, and would never wish not to have had them; at the same time I think I would never have become a mother had I not done it before I knew any better. That said — and it is saying a lot — what are they to me, what have I

It has been through learning who my children are that I have learned who I myself am. My daughter, Alexandra, 13, in that strange me-and-yet-not-me tension that exists between mothers and daughters, has shown me wonderful things about the femaleness we share that I suspect I would never have grasped without her. I once heard someone say that one has no sense of having been a daughter until one becomes a mother, and in many ways it is true. There is a rolling down of the generations that is lovely to behold, and as I look at my daughter and see myself in her, I can see my own (now dead) mother in myself. And on. . .and on.

And how much I have learned from my son, Zachary, 11 — in his sweet innocence — about the problematic relationship between men and women! How much more I understand about the profound, conflicted attachment little boys have to their mothers, which becomes the profound, conflicted attachment of male to female, the endless search of the strong, independent male spirit for the safe place that he has never gotten over leaving.

A child jars one out of all forms of sticky and complacent thinking. Mine did it to me when they were babies, making me re-examine what I saw as liberation from stereotypes; they do it now with their careful questions that convey how seriously they take the choices open to them. I am surprised that I am even surprised: I should have seen the incipient skepticism and individuality long ago. Being a mommy who only wanted what was best for each and both — being a mommy who struggled valiantly with what it meant to be liberated from stereotypes — I dutifully provided each with both trucks and dolls, presented without prejudice. As many other equally "equal" mommies have discovered, babies seem to know something about trucks and dolls without having to be told, and although Alexandra never took to dolls, preferring paints and her blanket, she never took to trucks either. Zachary, on the other hand, rolled his tiny cars with appropriate motor noises, only much later responding to his anatomically correct boy doll — from which he was finally inseparable — by carrying it around under his arm like a football.

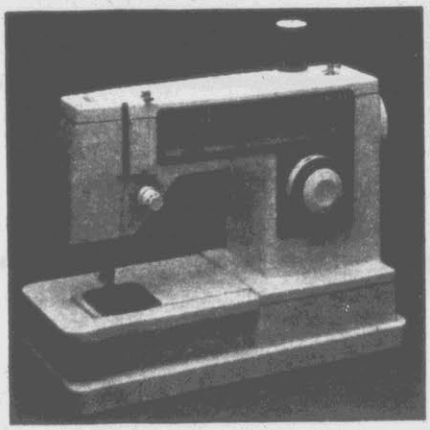

What do I hope for my children? I hope for them love, of course, and a beautiful world, and friends worth the name, and meaningful work and children of their own — if they want them. I also hope for them an expansion of their lives, reflected in their babyhood options in and choices of playthings which I did not have, drawing — as I did — my ideal image of women and men, girls and boys, from Dick-and-Jane primers and TV, from girls-don't-play-ball-or-make-models comments (my particular furies at my prescribed role) and from the admittedly overworked theme that boys don't cook or cry. I hope neither of my children feels limited in what he or she wants to do, or be — whatever that is — by the accident of that single sex chromosome that can turn up either X or Y.

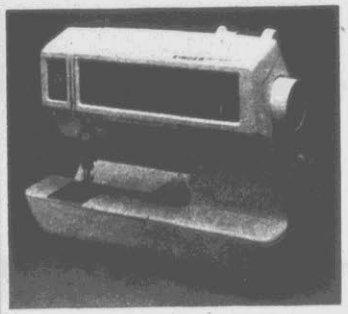

For Alexandra, the dearest of daughters: I hope that she is able to take charge of her life in a way I wasn't able to take charge of mine, that she has dignity and integrity and force of character where I had only the abject, pitiful desire to please. I want her to have strength and guts and daring — in her professional as well as personal life — and to see herself as unlimited in both.

I would also not like to see her give herself over to anyone — man, woman or child — with the mistaken notion that her identity comes solely from her service to others. . . unless, of course, she decides on the occupation of saint. Already a child with enviable perspective, she was able to say recently to her grandmother — in response to an observation by her grandfather about women's potential unsuitability to the workplace because of their regrettable tendency to cry under stress — that she saw no reason why women shouldn't cry, if they felt like it. Which prods one to consider why it is considered inappropriate. . . or put another way, why women's expression of emotion bothers men so much.

I hope for Zachary, the sweetest of sons, that he never fears those tears in a woman or in himself and does not automatically interpret them as either a manipulative act or a revelation of weakness. And I want him never to forget (because surely he knows it now) the enormous comfort of being in someone's arms, never to forget that it takes great courage to give oneself wholeheartedly to another person. Holding and kissing and crying and being vulnerable — and cooking and sewing and child-rearing, for that matter — are all activities to which an enlightened man can bring something unique from his very maleness without threatening that same maleness.

Yes, times have changed, and concepts of mothering and family have changed, but I still want for my children what parents have always wanted: a sense of mastery, fulfillment, even — dare I say it? — happiness. And because I am a modern woman, I also wish for them what I have found to hold onto (and what they have been instrumental in giving me) in a world with new rules and new roles: the expansion of myself, through them. They are the single most significant, defining aspect of my life, and I am endlessly reminded that having kids is like climbing a precipitous, twisting mountain road: The way is arduous and one stops often for breath, but the view is worth it.

I asked Alexandra last week whether she wanted to have children.

"Why?" I asked.

"Because they're fun."

"Why else?"

"Because they're a pain."

"Why would you want kids if they're a pain?"

She looked at me slyly, not sure what effect her answer might have. She took a deep breath. "Because it teaches parents a lesson," she said.

And then she hugged me, tight, with arms that used to be as delicate as dragonfly wings and are now long with adolescence and muscled with gymnastics.

"I'll tell you what I like," I whispered in her ear. "If you have a kid, you always have someone to hug." FW

Shouldn't he be a Surgeon?

One good sign that a physician is qualified to practice surgery is certification by a surgical board approved by the American Board of Medical Specialties. All board-certified surgeons have, after medical school, satisfactorily completed years in approved surgical residency programs and have passed a rigorous specialty examination. Surgeons who are, in addition, Fellows of the American College of Surgeons have also demonstrated their commitment to high standards of ethical conduct, as well as professional competence in practice.

Unmasking Yankee Catcher Rick Cerone

By Mark Goodman

© Richard Pilling/F.O.S.

Cerone: On the spot again.

Now that perennial leading man Reggie Jackson has packed his bags and headed west, the question arises, "Who will assume his role on center stage of the New York Yankees? Who will be the target for owner George Steinbrenner's ritual barbs?"

It most likely will not be a voluntary position, but several names have come up. There's the new captain, third baseman Graig Nettles, he of the miraculous glove and acerbic wit. An early favorite is Lou Piniella, whose quick temper brought a few run-ins with Steinbrenner during spring training. And then there's Rick Cerone, the cocky kid catcher who staked his claim last October with the incident of the epithets heard round the world.

It came during the mini-playoffs vs. Milwaukee after Steinbrenner had delivered a fiery clubhouse oration following a bitter 2-1 loss. His discourse was suddenly interrupted by Cerone. The weary young catcher was fed up, too — and he told his boss in graphic terms what he could do.

Steinbrenner was, by all accounts of Cerone's stunned teammates, furious. "I pay the bills around here," he yelled. "I'll say whatever I want. And we'll see where you're playing next year."

Of course, it is now the stuff of history that Cerone came back to hit the home run that led the Yankees over the Brewers. Said Cerone afterward, "If we had lost, it might have been my last game as a Yankee."

Fortunately for all concerned, it was not. So, although the eventual World Series loss to the Los Angeles Dodgers was bitter gall to Steinbrenner, Cerone is still his general on the field for the 1982 season.

October's was not the first flap between Cerone and the Bossman. After his first year with the Yankees, when Cerone stepped mightily into the void left by the death of catcher Thurman Munson, his agent, George Kalafatis, asked for a salary of $440,000 (up from $110,000). Steinbrenner offered $350,000 — and Kalafatis submitted the matter to arbitration. Cerone won and Steinbrenner lashed out on cue. "I'm disappointed," he said. "Not in losing the arbitration, but in the young man. I don't think he showed much loyalty."

Odd words from a man who preaches and practices checkbook devotion, but it is all part of the endless front office/clubhouse farce that distinguishes Steinbrenner's Yankees. The incident even gained Cerone a new and jocular nickname — "Brutus," as in Et tu.

But Cerone, 28 a week from Wednesday, is no stranger to the hot seat. In 1980 he stepped into a position that bears the stamp of sanctity: catcher of the New York Yankees. It is a tradition that dates back to the great Bill Dickey. It was carried on by Yogi Berra (still a Yankee coach) and his successors, Elston Howard and Munson.

It was the summer of 1979 when Munson — the pride of the Yankees and the team's first captain since Lou Gehrig — went down in a tragic plane crash. Soon after, Steinbrenner began scouring the majors for a replacement.

He found him in Toronto, where Cerone had toiled for the Blue Jays for three seasons. He wasn't big (5 feet 11 inches, 185 pounds) as catchers go these days. But he had a strong, sure arm and a serviceable bat, and he had proved to be a tough and canny competitor behind the mask.

That first pinstriped summer, under the ceaseless barrage of questions, Cerone, who grew up just across the Hudson River in Newark, gently said, "I'm not here to make people forget Munson, because they won't. . . . I'm more interested in getting the respect of my teammates."

That acceptance came quickly. He showed the rare ability to take charge without arrogance. That is no small feat, considering the talented

BY R.C. WEBSTER

WASHINGTON—Establishment of a new world record for fuel economy —an incredible 1,368 miles per gallon achieved in the Shell Motor Mileage Marathon by a special three-wheel vehicle with 90cc engine—has touched off a stampede among car manufacturers and tinkerers to drastically increase the gas mileage of cars.

They are attempting to achieve this with the Pogue Carburetor, a device which the Ford Motor Company has shown can deliver over 200 mpg to an ordinary sedan.

The Pogue is covered by several patents issued by the United States Patent Office here, but a recent book asserts that the patents are invalid, that anyone can now build the Pogue without legal restraint.

As a result, vendors, parts manufacturers and entrepreneurs are racing to mass-produce this peerless fuel conserver.

COPIES AVAILABLE

The book, called "Secrets of the 200 MPG Carburetor," contains full details, instructions and diagrams on how to construct the Pogue. It states that anyone can build the carburetor, even in a home workshop.

Copies of "Secrets of the 200 MPG Carburetor" are available from Premier Distributing, P.O. Box 7777-F, New York, N.Y. 10001, at $4.95 (plus $1 postage and handling; total, $5.95).

205 MPG

The Ford Motor Co. of Canada, in a test that is documented in "Secrets of the 200 MPG Carburetor," proved that the Pogue Carburetor does indeed achieve a remarkable 25.7 miles per PINT—or 205 miles per gallon.

Allan W. Wallace, author of "Secrets of the 200 MPG Carburetor," says the Pogue's gas mileage is not all that remarkable.

He says that others have invented carburetors with exceptionally high gas mileages, too, but that the American people have been kept in the dark about them by the oil companies, which are seeking to preserve their gasoline sales.

To support his assertion, Wallace documents several instances of stupendous gas mileages, including 84 mpg achieved by Ralph Moody of Oak Hill, Fla., with a Ford Capri, and 100 mpg by Thomas W. Ogle of El Paso, Texas, with a Ford Galaxie.

Wallace says he has amassed enough case histories "to fill a set of volumes the size of an encyclopedia." He includes construction details for the most interesting and feasible systems in his book.

"I feel the public has a right to know how to produce its own high-mileage systems," he says.

"If enough people are tooling around in 100-mpg cars, the auto and oil industries will have no choice but to offer fuel-efficient carburetors in all production models."

Wallace says that the average car burns only 20 percent of the fuel it consumes. The rest is lost, unburned, and is emitted through the car's tailpipe as air pollution.

"The carburetor of today is little changed from what it was 50 years ago," he says. "I'm hoping that my book will spur a change—to the benefit of the nation, the ecology, and the consumer."

veterans on the Yankee pitching staff. As he recalls, "When I got traded, all my friends from Newark said, 'What are you gonna do if Ron Guidry or Tommy John shakes you off? You gonna go home?'"

Well, he didn't, and as John quickly observed, "My feeling is that a catcher should be on a higher level of intelligence, which Thurman was, which Cerone is."

Hank Londoner

At the plate Cerone did not disappoint either. He led the club in games played with 147, drove in 85 runs, hit a solid .277 (.315 with runners in scoring position, thus filling Munson's clutch-hitter role), with 14 home runs. More importantly, he led the league's catchers in defense, throwing out 47 percent of the runners who tried to steal on him.

Last year a thumb injury and the strike made it a lost season for Cerone — until the playoffs that is. He played in only 71 regular season games, hitting just .244.

In his two seasons, the hometown fans have come to love him. After all, there hasn't been a bonafide local star in pinstripes since Whitey Ford. Cerone started out as a catcher in the Newark Little Leagues even though, for a while, he was so small he had to stand behind the plate rather than crouch. He soon hefted up, however, and starred as a quarterback at Essex Catholic High. At Seton Hall University he was twice named all-American as a catcher and was Cleveland's first choice in 1974's free-agent draft. The Indians traded him to Toronto in 1976, where he performed handsomely enough to catch the eye of the desperate Yankee management.

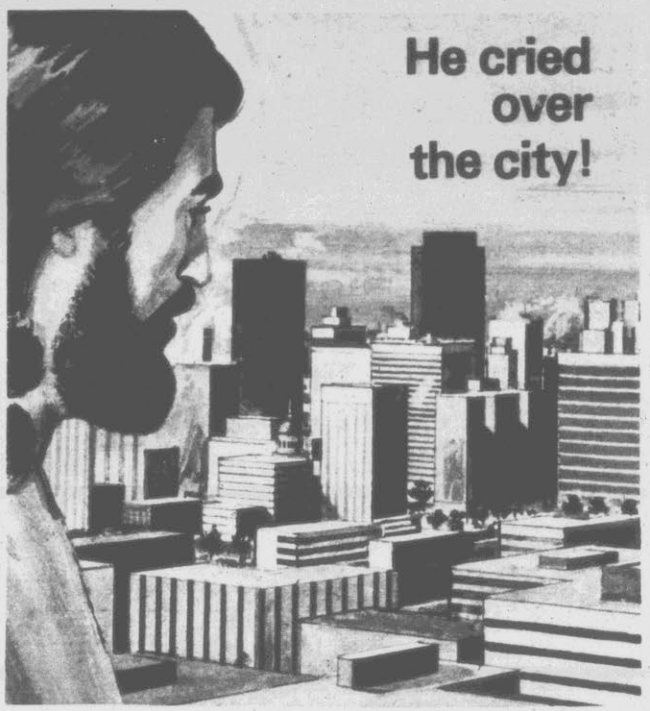

Of his burgeoning popularity he says now, "It's fun. New York fans like a personality and maybe that's what I consider myself, a personality. It's amazing how you can catch on in New York. Two years ago they were saying, 'Who is that guy?'"

The handsome, curly-haired bachelor has made quite a hit off the field around New York. The number "10" he wears on duty was translated into a cute routine for "10" jeans, done with a lissome model. Cerone has appeared at Gotham's favorite night spots with several such models, making him a regular in the gossip columns.

Cerone shrugs this business off with a laugh. Though he does get around town a bit, he lives in northern New Jersey (and owns a home in Dunedin, Fla.). "A lot of that stuff isn't true," he says. "I don't know where they get it. They had me buying a $200,000 yacht one day and I had never even been to a boat show."

His extracurricular activities aren't all frivolous, though. After the terrible round of earthquakes that rocked Italy, paesano Cerone hosted several fund-raising baseball clinics for the victims. "I didn't realize at first how close to home it hit. My grandparents were born there, so we could have had relatives caught in it."

But with his third Yankee season underway, Cerone's chief concern is taking charge on the diamond and rounding back into his 1980 form. The pressure of Munson's shadow has been replaced by the more formidable specter of his owner's wrath. Cerone is on the spot, and he knows it. Still, as he aptly sums up: "All I can do about it is go out there and perform." FW

There's a startling passage in Luke's gospel where we read that Jesus came within sight of Jerusalem and suddenly burst into tears. He loved the place and all that it stood for, and yet he saw it slipping away from its great destiny.

If it were still possible for Jesus to shed tears, he might well weep over all our cities today and suburbia besides. He did not weep over brick and mortar, of course, but over the people, created by God for the high purpose of loving God and neighbor. They were falling short of the mark, as indeed many of us are today.

The cry of the prophets in Old Testament and New Testament times has always been the same: "Repent and turn back to the Lord your God." We need to listen. Sometimes, we need help to hear God's message. Why not try our pamphlet: Christian life in the Modern World? It's free. No one will call on you.

FOOD

In Praise of Mayonnaise

By Marilyn Hansen

Creamy, smooth mayonnaise brings zest to any meal. . . and you can make an irresistible spread right at home by giving your blender or food processor a whirl and whipping it up fresh.

BLENDER MAYONNAISE

1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon dry mustard
Dash Tabasco sauce
1 tablespoon lemon juice or white wine vinegar
1½ cups olive oil or half olive oil and half peanut oil

1. Place in container of blender the eggs, salt, mustard, Tabasco and lemon juice. Process at high speed for only 5 seconds.
2. Remove center of blender cover and, with blender at high speed, add the oil very slowly, pouring in a teaspoon or two at a time. Continue adding the oil very slowly in a thin stream, still at high speed.
3. As the sauce thickens and emulsifies, you can add the oil more rapidly. You may also wish to scrape down the sides of the blender once or twice when sauce thickens and before all the oil is added.
4. Spoon out of blender container and serve immediately. If making ahead and you wish to serve later, spoon into jar or bowl, cover and refrigerate.

Makes about 2 cups

FOOD PROCESSOR MAYONNAISE

1 whole, large-size egg
1 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon white wine vinegar or lemon juice
¼ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper or 1/8 teaspoon Tabasco sauce
1½ cups olive oil, peanut oil or half olive oil and half peanut oil

1. In bowl of food processor, with metal blade in place, add the egg, salt, vinegar and pepper. Process until blended, about 2 to 3 seconds.
2. Continue processing and pour in the oil very slowly, a little at a time, especially at first. As sauce thickens and emulsifies, you may add the oil a little more rapidly. Do not over-process. Stop machine when all oil has just been incorporated.
3. Taste mayonnaise and add additional salt, vinegar or pepper to your liking. Spoon out of food processor and serve immediately. If making ahead to serve later, spoon into jar or bowl, cover and refrigerate.

Makes about 2 cups

BLENDER AIOLI

2 whole, large-size eggs
4 good-sized cloves garlic, minced
1 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons white wine vinegar
Dash Tabasco sauce
⅛ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1½ cups olive oil or half olive oil and half peanut oil

1. Place the eggs in container of blender. Chop garlic very fine. Sprinkle with salt and rub with flat side of knife blade to a paste. Add to blender. Add vinegar, Tabasco and pepper.
2. Remove center of blender cover and, with blender at high speed, add the oil very slowly, pouring in a teaspoon at a time at first. Continue adding the oil very slowly in a thin stream, still at high speed.
3. As the sauce thickens and emulsifies, you can add the oil more rapidly. Also, you may wish to scrape down the sides of the blender once or twice when sauce thickens, and before all the oil is added.
4. Spoon out of blender; serve immediately. To serve later, spoon into a jar, cover and refrigerate.

Makes 2 cups

Note: Aioli is the garlic mayonnaise of Provence, France. It is excellent served with freshly steamed vegetables, served as a sauce for cooked, chilled vegetables or as a dip for fresh vegetable crudités. You can also use it as a unique sandwich spread.

TIPS ON MAYONNAISE

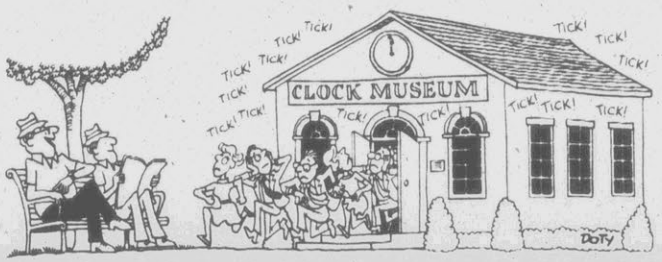

- If mayonnaise curdles or separates, it means you have added the oil too rapidly. To remedy: In a clean blender or food processor, beat 1 egg yolk, add ½ teaspoon oil; beat. Add separated mixture slowly, beating at high speed. Beat until smoothly blended.
- Refrigerate mayonnaise promptly after making or serving. To prevent a "skin" from forming on the surface of the mayonnaise, place sheet of plastic directly on surface.
- Olive oil, although traditional, has a distinctive taste, which you may or may not like. Peanut oil is a good substitute; sunflower seed oil or clear non-Oriental sesame oil would give a milder, more bland flavor.
- Vinegars may be varied also for subtle flavor differences. Please use fresh, clear vinegars for best results.

Observations

Remember mummy. What ever happened to "Whistler's Mother"? Where can you look in on another sort of mummy–the King Tut kind? Or dinosaurs–know where you can still find them? How can you touch the moon? And what holds the treasures of America but must pinch pennies? Go to America's museums for the answers: pieces of national and natural history, paintings and sculptures, even chunks of the moon on display. The Whistler riddle is a little tricky (though the painting hangs in Paris, you can see it on a three-cent stamp–issued on Mother's Day 1934–at a Smithsonian exhibit in Washington); but the big puzzle for America's 5,500 or so museums is: how to cope with inflation, recession, and federal budget cuts. If you believe in spreading culture widely, help your local museum with a membership subscription, or in other ways. How? Read on.

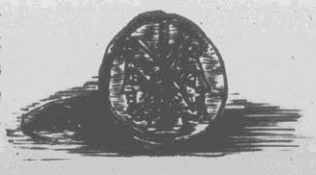

Dolls and dollars. You know about the famous art, science, and history museums, but have you checked out Wisconsin's wood-carving museum, or Vermont's two maple-sugar museums, or the nine fire-fighting museums from Maine to California? Or the costume museums, lock museums, money museums, sports museums, wax museums, and zoos ("living museums" where you can find everything from ant-eating aardvarks to zebras)? New York State has the most museums–403–including two of the nation's 10 toy-and-doll museums and a comedy collection with costumes, cartoons, and joke files.

How to make money fast? Glue it down, the joke book says. But museums spend it. For schoolchildren, they bring textbooks to life. For adults, they provide ongoing learning. For the blind, Braille books and "touch-me" exhibits. For scholars, a place to work. For families, a bargain outing. For every one of the half a billion visitors a year, entertainment and education and esthetic pleasure. And they do all that on little money: Most museums are small, often historic houses or local historical collections, with annual budgets of less than $50,000. Only four percent spend over $1 million a year. All need more, some of them desperately.

When times are tough...what can you always count on? Your fingers. But museums count on you... to donate your money or gifts-in-kind, or to volunteer your time. You know where you can always find "money," don't you? In the dictionary. Finding a museum to help is almost as easy: They're so evenly spread that all but one of the nation's 435 congressional districts are thought to have at least one. And isn't it worth it to support America's natural, scientific, and artistic heritage? The answer's the same as for, *"What word contains every vowel?" Unquestionably.

It's a fact: Business contributes the biggest single chunk of its arts-support money to museums.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

By Eliot Kaplan

HOW JUDGES DECIDE

Pam Sommers

So reveals a survey, headed by Boston University's Kevin Clancy, of 264 Federal judges. After giving the judges facts about a hypothetical crime, such as the defendant's age, criminal record, plea and the amount of money involved, he asked each for his sentence. The results varied dramatically. For instance, in one armed-robbery scenario, the typical sentence given was seven years in prison, but ranged from one year to 25.

Perhaps most distressing, Clancy found that next to the nature of the offense itself, the most important factor affecting the sentence — more vital even than the criminal's record — was the judge's background. The key influential factors were what a judge sees as the goal of punishment, how well he thinks the system achieves that goal, his political ideology and the region of the country he's from. (Southern judges gave out the harshest sample sentences; Northeastern ones the most lenient.)

"If not a call for fixed sentences," Clancy told us, "this study seems to suggest the need for guidelines to lessen the autonomy and leeway judges now have."

DIAL-AN-ALIBI

Richard Bennett

If the old, "Honey, I'm still at the office" routine isn't conning 'em anymore, help is on the way. Mason Zelazny and Larry Welch, two Dallas-area entrepreneurs, have come up with a phone booth that provides two minutes of realistic, taped background noises. For instance, you want to say you're stuck in the auto-repair shop. Put in a dollar (and a dime for the phone) and on comes the clanging of tools, the revving of engines, the swearing of mechanics. The Italian-restaurant tape serves up strolling violins and clattering dishes; the airport, jet engines and names being paged. There are even tapes of "the office" and "church." Fourteen excuses are available in all, including the exotic strains of battlefield gunfire and stampeding cattle.

The $4,750 booths have been set up in several bars around the country and, naturally, are quite popular. In fact, Welch told us, "One guy tried to call his wife from a bar to say he'd be home late for Thanksgiving dinner. On his way out of the booth, he passed her waiting in line."

BEST YEARS OF THEIR LIVES

These days, 7-foot centers and 280-pound linemen aren't the only ones being wooed by college recruiters. As fewer students become available, schools are fighting for the top ones, and are offering a variety of novel inducements. For instance, last year Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute gave each of 21 blue-chip freshmen (average S.A.T. scores almost 1500) his own $4,000 Atari computer on which to do advanced work (or, of course, play video games). And Virginia Polytechnic Institute is offering a select group of incoming students their choice of $2,000 or a free trip to Japan. Not surprisingly, in these days of dwindling financial aid, roughly 90 percent have chosen the cash, applying it directly to their tuition bills.

ROCKY REDUX

Nelson Rockefeller, as portrayed in former speechwriter Joseph Persico's intriguing, anecdotal new book, The Imperial Rockefeller, emerges as a man down to earth, yet lost in space. He loved Oreos and Fig Newtons, All in the Family and Mannix, and stirred his coffee with the stems of his glasses. Yet he once began a tax proposal by saying, "Take an average family with an income of $100,000." When he was assigned Secret Service protection, someone kidded him about traveling "like James Bond." Replied Rockefeller, "Who?" And Rockefeller once gave a young, unknown, pleading Orson Welles some money just to make his little movie and get out of the office. That movie, of course, turned out to be Citizen Kane, and Rocky never even bothered to see it.

UPI

THE BIRTH OF MOTHERHOOD

Trudi Smith

In their first few years, girls and boys seem to be equally attracted to babies (and dolls). But at age 3, a dramatic change occurs, Dr. Henri Parens, a psychiatrist at The Medical College of Pennsylvania, recently explained to us. "Boys now find babies cute; they enjoy poking and playing with them, an attitude displayed by adult males in many cultures. But around babies, girls now show a striking softness, tenderness, warmth, as if they're discovering the most beautiful thing in the world." (And by the way, Parens says that if your young son is playing with dolls, let him — the nurturing behavior he is expressing may make him a better father later on.)

HOCUS-FOCUS

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: 1. Shirt is different. 2. Letter is missing. 3. Wig is different. 4. Mirror is missing. 5. Jar is smaller. 6. Pen tie is missing.

● NICE TRY! Have you said something nice to your Mom today? Or to a friend? A Chinese proverb has it: "A — word warms for three winters." Fill blanks with missing word. P.S.: It rhymes with mind.

● Sum Code! Crack code and compute, if you can: DHFGS LNQD SGZM NMD GTMCQDC. Clue: Each letter stands for the next letter of the alphabet.

1. Fiddle. 2. Drum. 3. Horn.

● Rare Bunch! Which flowers are fitting for Mother's Day? 'Mums. Which flowers are fitting for Father's Day? Poppies. Which flowers are fitting for Children's Day? Or-kids.

DOUBLE-CROSS THE SENSES

Invite a friend to cross wrists and to clasp hands as shown above. Then direct him or her to twist arms inward and upward, as indicated by the dotted line.

Now for some fun. Point to one of your friend's clasped fingers and ask him or her to wiggle that finger. Savor this moment, for it will take some time for the person to figure out which finger is which.

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

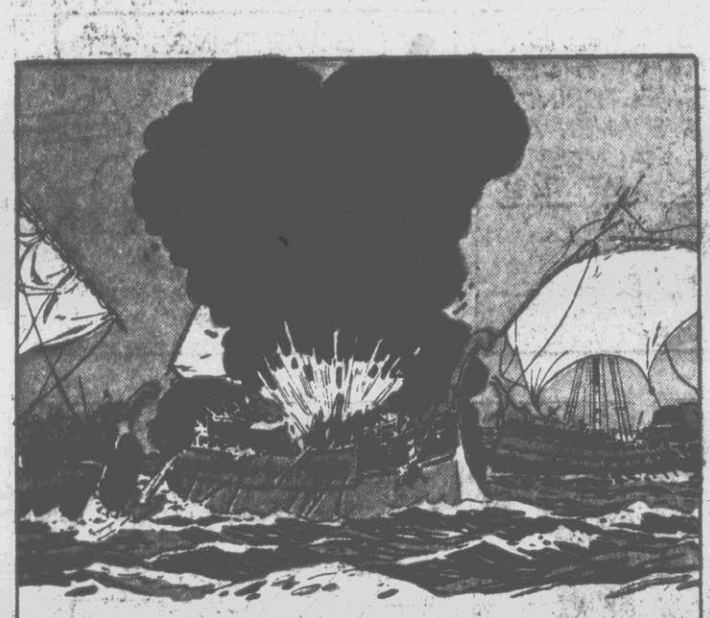

Our Story: ON ONE THING ALL OF THE CHRONICLES AGREE: SVEN FORKBEARD WAS A SKILLFUL ADMIRAL, EVEN WITH HIS RAGGED FLEET. BUT BELISARIUS HAS NIMROD'S POWDER. HE KEEPS HIS WARSHIPS AT A DISTANCE AS FIERY PROJECTILES ARC OVERHEAD. SVEN'S SHIPS ARE HELPLESS. FIRST ONE AND THEN A HALF DOZEN ARE BLOWN FROM THE SEA.

HIS FOE IN DISARRAY, BELISARIUS COMES FORWARD FOR THE KILL. AT THAT MOMENT THE CLOUDS PART. NIMROD'S CRYSTAL PUFFS WITH LIGHT.

THE DEADLY MISSILES HAD ALL BEEN LAUNCHED FROM A SINGLE WARSHIP. THERE NIMROD'S POWDER IS STORED. AS THE VESSEL GLIDES BY THE "THREE GRACES" PRINCE VALIANT TRAINS THE SUNLIGHT ON ITS SAIL. IT IS NEARLY OUT OF RANGE WHEN A PUFF OF SMOKE IS FOLLOWED BY FLAMES.

THE IMPERIAL SAILORS PANIC AS THE FIRE SPREADS. OTHER CAPTAINS TRY DESPERATELY TO MOVE THEIR SHIPS AWAY. UNABLE TO MANEUVER, JUSTINIAN'S FLEET IS KNOTTED AROUND THE FLAMING VESSEL. THE FIRE REACHES NIMROD'S POWDER.

THE FORCE OF THE BLAST SENDS CRACKS RUNNING THROUGH THE PALACE WALLS. MEN ARE BLINDED AND DEAFENED. HALF OF BELISARIUS' SHIPS WALLOW STRICKEN IN THE BAY. OTHERS HAVE FOUNDERED ON THE SHOALS. SVEN'S SMALL SHIPS DART COYLY THROUGH THE CHAOS STRIKING FAST AND HARD. THE INVADERS WHO CRAWL ASHORE MEET A SEETHING POPULACE.

FOR PRINCE VALIANT THE BATTLE IS NOT YET WON. DRIPPING WITH SEAWEED, BELISARIUS HAS PULLED HIMSELF ONTO THE ROCKS.

NEXT WEEK: Duel
