

British Frigate Fires On Surface Ship

By The Associated Press

Britain said one of its warships fired on a surface vessel early today in the body of water separating the two main Falkland Islands, and Argentina threatened to attack any British ship or plane approaching the South Atlantic war zone.

British Defense Ministry spokesman Ian McDonald told reporters in London that the British ship was in the five-mile-wide Falkland Sound, just off Bold Cove, West Falkland, when it opened fire. He said a "large explosion" occurred.

It was the closest naval engagement to the Falklands since Argentine forces seized the islands from Britain April 2, and McDonald said: "The incident and its location show how tight our grip is on the Falkland Islands." He gave no other details.

Other reports identified the target vessel as an Argentine supply ship or tanker, and said it was fired on by the radar-controlled, 4.5-inch gun of a British frigate, which was said to have been accompanied by other British warships in the Falkland Sound.

British correspondents with the armada, whose dispatches are subject to censorship, said the ship that was attacked was thought to be carrying supplies and possibly troops to Stanley, capital of the Falklands.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher convened her inner "War Cabinet" in London amid growing speculation that British marines would soon attempt to storm the Falklands capital of Stanley.

Argentine retaliated with an announcement that any British ships or aircraft approaching the South Atlantic war zone or considered a threat to Argentine security would be regarded as "hostile" and subject to "consequences."

Britain, which last week extended its 200-mile blockade around the Falklands to within 12 miles of the Argentine coast, said the Argentine threat "will in no way affect" the operations of its task force.

British military sources said the liner Canberra arrived Monday night off the Falklands bringing 2,500 British marines and paratroopers. The sources said the liner was accompanied by five landing craft carrying helicopters, the 4,100-ton destroyer

Exeter and two frigates armed with French-made Exocets, the missile that set the British destroyer Sheffield afire last Tuesday.

Military analysts in London said reinforcements due today would give the task force "all it needs" for a major landing to challenge the estimated 9,000 troops Argentina poured into the islands after seizing them April 2.

British military sources said about 100 British commandos have been on the islands for "some time" pinpointing "key targets" on East Falkland, the island where most of the Argentine forces are concentrated.

Writing from the aircraft carrier Hermes, the flagship of the British battle fleet, correspondent Peter Archer of the British domestic news agency Press Association said British naval bombardment Sunday and Monday "was seen as a softening-up process before an eventual landing by British troops."

Some of the destroyers and frigates of the task force moved closer to shore early Monday to shell positions around Stanley, the Falklands capital.

Rose High May Know By Week's End Ponder Commencement Site

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Rose High School Principal Howard Hurt said this morning "we hope to know by the end of the week" where the school's graduation exercises will be held June 8.

Rose High's commencement program has, in the past, been held in East Carolina University's Ficklen Stadium. This year, however, the university is seeding the football field and the stadium won't be available.

Hurt said university officials notified him last month of the conflict, but not before graduation invitations were printed.

"We've made arrangements with the printers to put an insert" in the invitations, giving the new location, Hurt noted.

"It's to our benefit," Hurt said, that the football field is being reseeded. Rose High uses the stadium for its football games, and will play on the field more next fall than the ECU Pirates will.

Hurt emphasized that ECU officials have "been very cooperative" in helping find another site for the graduation ceremonies. He said school officials were scheduled to meet this afternoon with representatives of the university in an effort to work out an agreement for use of Minges Coliseum.

The major problem in using Minges is the cost. Depending on what facilities the high school wants, the price could be as much as $2,000.

However, university officials said the cost could be "very minimal."

Vice Chancellor C. G. Moore said the university has known since last fall that the football field needed improving and notified high school officials in April that the work would get under way as soon as the ECU graduation program was held. Moore said work began on the field Monday.

Moore said the high school is more than welcome to use Minges. But, he said, the university has to be reimbursed for "out of pocket expenses." The $2,000 figure, Moore noted, would include placing mats on the floor, the use of the stage and the setting up of chairs so some 6,000 people could be accommodated, as well as the clean-up afterwards.

"If they just want to put a podium on the floor and use the bleachers and clean up afterwards, the cost would be very minimal."

He explained that before the university moved from the quarter system to the semester school calendar, the Rose High graduation program was a week or 10 days after the ECU commencement. Then, he said, the university left both Ficklen and Minges (used in case of rain) set up, so there was no cost to the high school.

However, since there is now a month's difference in the two programs, it's not possible.

Rudolph Alexander, director of university unions and associate dean for student activities at ECU, said — depending on what facilities the high school needs — the cost for Minges could be no more than $100, "if they use their own podium, chairs and clean up."

He emphasized that the high school would not have to pay rent for the facility. The only charge, he said, would be for labor and possibly utilities, if the stage is not needed and the floor covering is not used.

Alexander explained that both the Minges stage and the floor mat are owned by the students, not the university. "The matting cost over $9,000 and the stage $15,000," and a use fee has to be charged for them.

He said that some 2,200 to 2,500 persons could be accommodated in the north bleachers, with the podium and seats for the speakers and special guests located on the floor.

"We can even pull out the end-zone bleachers if they need them," Alexander said. "It all depends on what they want."

Recommend Safety Body

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

The Ad Hoc Committee on Public Safety, established in January to investigate the feasibility of creating a permanent public safety commission here, is unanimously recommending such a board to the mayor and City Council.

The 10-member committee, chaired by Dr. Wallace Woole, recommended in its report to the city that the permanent public safety board consist of five persons, each serving five-year terms, appointed by the mayor and council, with the chiefs of police and fire-rescue serving as ex-officio members.

In its report, the committee suggested that the commission would "establish policy" for the police and fire-rescue departments "in consultation with the chiefs of each department" and would recommend policy to the council.

In addition, the board would be charged with the "responsibility to review and approve the budget prepared by each department and to present and recommend approval of the budget before City Council."

According to the group, the commission would "be responsible for review and approval of all promotions made in either department" and would "periodically review promotions and hiring procedures and ... make necessary recommendations to insure such procedures are in keeping with state and national standards and are fair to all personnel."

The new board would also "act as a buffer between the departments and the public," according to the committee. "In this capacity the commission can receive complaints from the general public, investigate these complaints, if warranted, and report back to the public, the departments and the administration the results of the complaint. The commission should represent the view(s) of each of the departments to the public."

The commission would be charged, the board recommended, with acting "as a long-term planning board to study and recommend new approaches to providing protection to the public."

The board wrote, "We are convinced that in the decade of the 1980s with shrinking federal support and increasing demands upon the city budget, it will become necessary to seek more efficient ways of providing protection to the public. It will be necessary to look to new ways to provide service and not to depend upon a continuation of what has been done in the past."

The committee reported that its members "thoroughly discussed and understood" that a public safety board "should have no statutory authority and should not be independent of City Council in any of its actions. The committee recognizes that such a commission would be advisory and that any action taken or recommendations made is subject to review and approval by the City Council."

The committee contended that, "A public safety program in its simplest form involves cross-training of police and fire personnel. In cities where it has been successful, it has not led to a reduction in the total number of personnel of the police

Reagan Summons Business Leaders

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top business leaders are being summoned to the White House to hear President Reagan lobby for lower interest rates and congressional approval of the Republican budget alternative.

About 100 businessmen were scheduled to see the president over a three-day period starting today. They also are getting pep talks from budget director David Stockman and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan.

"The major thrust is for the president to appeal to leaders of the business community to help get the budget through the Senate and House," said Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman.

"Also, the president is doing everything he can do to see that interest rates are lower. He believes that is a key element in getting the economy moving."

The GOP budget plan calls for $40 billion savings in Social Security expenses and $95 billion in new taxes over three years.

On today's schedule were leaders of the Chamber of Commerce, the Business Roundtable and associations of wholesalers, contractors and cattlemen. Reagan plans to meet with financial experts Wednesday and commercial bankers on Thursday.

Hit By Storm Front

By The Associated Press
Thunderstorms loosed a barrage of tornadoes late Monday and early today that wrecked homes and buildings in central Nebraska and western Minnesota, but there were no reports of injuries.

Hail the size of golfballs pelted some communities in the region, accumulating six inches deep just north of Central City, Neb., where officials said 3 inches of rain fell in an hour.

"We had water running over the roads in places I'd never seen water over the road before," said Merrick County Sheriff Dan Schneiderheinz.

Snow and sleet fell in parts of the Nebraska Panhandle.

One twister hit the western Minnesota town of Tintah on Monday night, heavily damaging an empty elementary school, several homes and a church.

"We won't have school for a number of days," said Delmer Voss, principal of the school attended by 136 children. "Part of the roof is gone and all the windows on the south side are broken. The hallways are loaded with glass."

Four school buses were damaged when the bus garage was destroyed. In addition, four farms were damaged and a parish hall was flattened. A grain dryer, three steel bins and a pickup truck were destroyed at the Tintah Grain Co., and several Burlington Northern grain cars were tipped over.

Many homes and farm buildings were damaged when several tornadoes whipped through western Nebraska, mainly in Hall, Merrick, Nance and Howard counties.

Rains continued in Utah, where floodwaters on Sunday washed out a 450-foot section of a private road in Salt Lake County and deposited the muck in a gravel pit, covering equipment owned by Concrete Products Co. Company officials estimated the damage at up to $1 million.

Showers and thunderstorms today spread over Upper Michigan and from southern Minnesota to eastern Nebraska, and also in the Nebraska Panhandle and northeast Colorado.

There were widely scattered showers and a few light show showers over Wyoming. There were some showers over Maine. Clear skies prevailed from the southern and mid-Atlantic coast to the lower Mississippi Valley.

The forecast called for temperatures today in the 50s from the Sierra Nevada to northern Minnesota, and over Maine. Readings in the 80s were expected to extend from southern Lower Michigan to the southern Atlantic Coast and westward to the Rio Grande Valley.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 a.m. EDT ranged from 33 in Lander, Wyo. to 79 in Brownsville, Texas.

Electricity-Use Credit For Ayden Customers

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

AYDEN — Electric customers will get a surprise — a credit of $12.50 per 1,000 kilowatt hours used — when they receive their June bills.

The Ayden Board of Commissioners voted Monday night to refund to citizens the over $80,000 the town recently received as a reimbursement of overpayment from Carolina Power and Light.

The refund, based on a rate of $12.50 per 1,000 KWH of usage, will be in the form of a credit on the June bill. The remainder of the money will be repaid in September in the same manner.

"We have discussed this for some time and decided that a credit is the cheapest, fairest and most efficient method to give back what electric customers paid," said Mayor Ross Persinger. "Everyone here (on the board) seems satisfied with this solution and we hope the customers will be, too."

The $80,000-plus refund was announced unexpectedly by CP&L earlier this spring and came on top of another nearly $100,000 reimbursement for excessive charges to the town.

In other business, the board voted to:

- Draft a letter to the Pitt County Mental Health Board signed by all board members expressing the town's appreciation for the newly instituted one-day mental health service the board provides. The program is funded through June 30, according to Town Manager Don Russell, and the letter will request continued funding next fiscal year.

- Schedule a public hearing concerning annexation of seven parcels of land for May 17 at 7:30 p.m. at the town hall.
- Accept two bids totaling $15,000 for renovation of two houses under the Community Development Program.
- Void a petition submitted four years ago requesting curb and gutter on Allen Drive. Forty percent of the families signing the petition,

Russell said, no longer reside on the street. If a new petition is submitted, he added, the town will consider the project "for budget purposes."

Saved Family In Burning Car

ST. PAULS, N.C. (AP) — A Fayetteville family of three was saved Monday by an unidentified man who pulled them from their car moments before it exploded in flames.

Authorities said the man identified himself only as a Vietnam veteran. Moments after pulling Darrell Lee Davenport Jr., his wife, Janet, 21, and their daughter, Jessica, 2, from the wreckage, the man disappeared.

The accident took place on Interstate 95 early Monday. The Davenports were all in fair condition with multiple injuries at Cape Fear Valley Hospital in Fayetteville Monday afternoon.

State police said the crash occurred when Mrs. Davenport apparently fell asleep at the wheel, and their car drifted into a bridge abutment at Little Marsh Swamp about four miles north of St. Pauls.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Aerobics classes usually happen without incident.

You just drag in and do it before you wake up and realize where you are.

But this morning was different.

Someone took my "spot."

It's one of those things where you know someday it will happen, but you're never really prepared for it when it does.

Actually no one is assigned to any one place. It's all on a first-come-first-served basis, but your "spot" is "understood," like your row at church or your booth in the restaurant where you eat lunch every day.

Mine is the best spot in the whole room. Back row, right next to the door. You get a breeze from the fan, you don't have to worry about bumping into someone behind you and it's right next to the water cooler. I eyed it for months and when the woman who had it before moved to Pittsburgh, I moved right in.

College was all "open seating," yet wherever we sat on that first day, we sat for the rest of the semester. No one would have dared take my place in History of Russia (8 a.m., Mon., Wed., and Fri.). They all knew I was working on a tan and needed the Eastern exposure.

I promised myself I wouldn't get paranoid about staking off unmarked areas as my own ever since I used to ride the bus. I got on at the Loop and for four years rode in the same seat, left hand side, four back, window. I cannot tell you the frustration I felt when I boarded the bus one day and discovered another person in "MY SEAT!"

Of course, I don't get upset about those things now that I'm older and more mature. Someone took "my parking spot" the other day at the grocery and it hardly bothered me at all. What can you expect when you see a bumper sticker from someone who's against the school levy?

Hey, I don't own the spot, right?

Besides, it's not really important. It's not like I'm a seal in mating season. If someone doing aerobics in "my spot" for an hour upsets me, then I've got a problem. It's all so silly. I mean, it's not worth getting excited about.

And it's certainly not worth doing a whole column on!

question, Sally, and I hope no reader will hesitate to ask any question on needlecraft because that is the main reason for this column. I well remember when I was a young mother of four, teaching myself to knit and crochet, seldom able to get out for instructions. I relied solely on "how-to" books and often wondered what was right and wrong. Even though I rarely have time to answer letters personally, I try to use any that are of general interest in the column.

Afghans can be knitted, crocheted or woven from a wide variety of yarns in any stitch that appeals to the needlecrafter. Some are open and lacy, others closely woven. None can be classified as "right" or "wrong."

The term, "afghan stitch," refers to a crochet stitch, worked with an afghan hook. That is a long hook with a cap on one end somewhat resembling a knitting needle. Except for a very narrow strip, you cannot use a regular crochet hook when working this stitch as the loops are held on the hook all across a row as explained below.

To work the basic afghan stitch, chain any desired number of stitches. Then draw up a loop in the second chain from the hook and in each remaining chain, keeping all loops on the hook as shown in Figure 1. When you have a loop in every chain, you have completed the first half of the first row.

Next, wrap the yarn around the hook and draw through one loop then (yarnover and draw the hook through two loops) as shown in Figure 2. Repeat the steps in parentheses across the row. The single loop that is on the hook at the end of Row 1 counts as the first stitch of the next row.

For the second row, draw up a loop in the second vertical bar formed by a loop of the previous row — as shown in Figure 3 — and in each vertical bar until one vertical bar remains. For the last stitch only, insert the hook through the last vertical bar and the stitch directly behind it as shown in Figure 4. This last step is important to give a firm edge on this side. If you have worked correctly, you should have the same number of loops as in the first row.

The second half of Row 2 is worked exactly as the second half of Row 1. Repeat Row 2 over and over for desired length.

This stitch gives you neat little squares that are ideal for cross-stitch embroidery. It also gives a very closely woven "fabric" and is often used in garments when a firm, dense texture is desired.

BAKED SCALLOPS
A restaurant chef asked for this recipe.
6 ounces shredded (1 1/2 cups) process Gruyere cheese
1 cup real mayonnaise
1/4 cup dry white wine
4 tablespoons butter
1 pound bay scallops
1 medium onion, chopped medium-fine (1/2 cup)
1/2 pound mushrooms, sliced
1/2 cup soft bread crumbs mixed with 1 tablespoon melted butter
Stir together the cheese, mayonnaise and wine; reserve. In a 10-inch skillet over medium-high heat, melt

2 tablespoons of the butter; add the scallops and cook, stirring, just until they are opaque through — a minute or so. With a slotted spoon remove scallops to paper toweling to drain. Add the remaining 2 tablespoons butter to the skillet with the onion; cook gently until yellowed; add the mushrooms and cook rapidly, stirring, so they do not release their liquid — a few minutes. Off heat stir in the reserved cheese mixture and the scallops. Turn into 4 individual baking dishes and sprinkle with the bread crumbs. Broil 6 inches from high heat just until browned — 2 to 4 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

Dear Abby

Weddings Don't Always Stand On Ceremony

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Having been a Lutheran pastor for over 40 years and having performed more than 1,200 marriage ceremonies, I was shocked that you accepted without question all the statements made by "Ohio Lutheran" concerning Lutheran wedding practices.

"Ohio Lutheran" stated: "No secular music is allowed; the floral arrangements must conform to specific regulations; the bride and groom may not write their own marriage vows."

While the above is true in some Lutheran churches, it is not true in all of them.

I personally have officiated at weddings where the soloist sang "Because," the couple wrote their own vows and a friendly neighbor brought in the flowers. There were even guitars and jeans. In some cases, the bride was obviously pregnant. But I'm sure there was just as much rejoicing in heaven over those marriages as in marriages where the strictest regulations were enforced.

A LOVING LUTHERAN

DEAR LUTHERAN: After "Ohio Lutheran" had his say in this space, I learned that under the umbrella of the Lutheran church are 11 different kinds of Lutheran churches, each operating under its own rules. My apologies.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I had houseguests over the Easter holidays. They were my husband's cousin and his wife. Another couple made the trip with them, but they stayed at a nearby motel because we couldn't accommodate them at our house.

This other couple did everything but sleep here. They came for every breakfast, lunch and dinner. A day after the two couples left, my husband and I received a very nice bouquet of flowers. On the card was, "Thank you for being the world's greatest host and hostess." The names of both couples were on the card.

I thought it was very nice of them to thank us for our hospitality by sending flowers.

Next thing I know, my husband tells me that his relatives were still waiting for a "thank-you" for their flowers.

Abby, is it necessary to send a thank-you for a thank-you? The flowers were their way of thanking us, so why should I have to thank them for their thank-you?

If you think I should thank them, I will. But personally I can't see why. Thank you.

BEWILDERED IN MINNESOTA

DEAR BEWILDERED: Your guests expressed their thank-you with flowers. To thank them for their thank-you would be gilding the lily.

DEAR ABBY: Last Mother's Day everyone told a favorite story about his mom, and this was mine:

Mom and Dad had some friends (acquaintances, really) who made a habit of dropping in at dinnertime so they could get invited to stay for dinner. Mom was bighearted and she always asked them to stay. Finally, it got to be a little too much, especially when the wife (I'll call her Mrs. Jones) always ran off without offering to stay and help Mom with the dishes.

One night while the Joneses were here for dinner, Mom decided to do the dishes while they were still eating. She calmly put all the dishes on the floor and whistled for our dog whose name was Nanny Goat. Nanny Goat came into the dining room and proceeded to lick every plate clean. Mother then picked up the dishes and nonchalantly placed them directly into the cupboard!

Needless to say, the Joneses never dropped in at dinner-time again.

COOKING IS FUN!

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Camouflage cookery has been around in the United States for a long time. You may have encountered such amusing dishes and beverages as Mock Duck (made from a shoulder of lamb) and Mock Champagne (made from ginger ale and muscatel).

But one of the most enduring camouflage recipes comes from China — an authentic Shanghai dish. For it, water chestnuts are carved into "mock shrimp" and used in a delicious but simple stir-fry. Chef T. T. Wang and Michael Tong of New York City's Shun Lee restaurants — lauded by food writers — gave me this recipe. My recipe tester and I found it fun to make and to eat. Best of all, you don't need the skill of an accomplished "food decorator" to concoct it. Even cooks new to the kitchen have every chance of successfully preparing "Mock Shrimp with Green Peas."

MOCK SHRIMP WITH GREEN PEAS

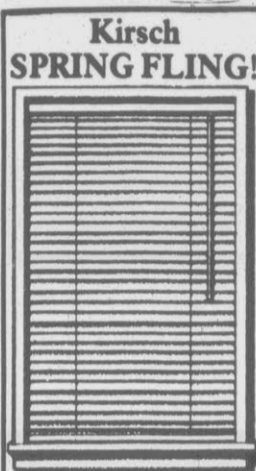

8-ounce can water chestnuts (about 20)
1 large egg white
2 teaspoons cornstarch
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon sugar
1/4 teaspoon sesame oil
1 teaspoon water
2 tablespoons medium sherry

2 cups peanut oil for frying
1-3rd cup frozen tiny green peas, thawed
Cooked rice
Drain water chestnuts. Cut each in half lengthwise. Scoop out the center of each water chestnut half from the cut side, in crescent fashion, so that each half resembles a shrimp.

With a fork, blend the egg white with 1 teaspoon of the cornstarch and 1/4 teaspoon of the salt. Dip each "shrimp" in the mixture and reserve.

In a small bowl stir together until blended the remaining 1 teaspoon cornstarch, the remaining 1/4 teaspoon salt, the sugar, sesame oil, water and sherry.

Heat the peanut oil in an electric wok to 450 degrees. Add the "shrimp" and stir-fry for a minute. Remove the "shrimp" and pour the oil from the wok. Return the "shrimp" to the wok and add the peas and the cornstarch mixture. Stir-fry about a minute. Serve at once with the rice. Makes 2 servings.

A. It is 85% complete now, we are hoping to raise the funds no later than September 30th so we can complete the building.

Turn To Churches

President Reagan paid his political dues last week by calling for a Constitutional amendment to allow voluntary prayer in the public schools.

He called it restoring a "freedom our Constitution was always meant to protect."

Sorry Mr. President, we have no confidence at all in today's politicians delving into the greatest document ever written, the United States Constitution.

If the amendment the president proposes is written as he announced, it will accomplish nothing. Voluntary prayer is already a right granted us by our Constitution. Any of us can pray at any time, so long as it is not disruptive of the activities of other people.

So an amendment as outlined by the president is no more than superfluous wording which modern day politicians would add to a superb document that has served us for over 200 years.

If the proposed amendment says more than what the president outlined, a distinct possibility, it will undermine other rights guaranteed by the Constitution and destroy forever the principle of separation of church and state.

Our nation has a unique institution as a cornerstone of our religious beliefs. It is the local church which stands on a neighborhood street, at a rural crossroad — anywhere that people live. Its congregation gives its efforts and resources to support it. Its members can determine at any time how what they offer is being used. Its hard working ministers and priests don't wear $800 suits or ride in limousines.

It is to these churches that we should turn for our spiritual and moral guidance — not to the government.

President Reagan should put his full trust and faith in these churches which have served this country so well, and forget about turning prayer over to a government entity.

Shed Not A Single Tear

WASHINGTON — Let us shed not a single tear over last month's rejection by the United States of the proposed treaty on a new Law of the Seas. The treaty is a bummer. We are well removed from this arrogant grab for power by those Third World nations who suppose that the rest of the world owes them a living.

For the record: Ten years of one-sided negotiations came to a head in the United Nations on April 30. On the table was a proposed treaty running to 175 pages of tightly printed provisions. In the history of diplomacy, a more presumptuous document scarcely can be recalled — but the Third World nations thrive on presumption as cats thrive on milk. The vote was 130 nations for the treaty, four against and 17 abstaining.

The United States was joined only by Venezuela, Turkey and Israel in spurning this prerequisites for a successful undertaking would be handed to them free. This is the Something for Nothing Treaty. No wonder that when the roll was called up yonder, they all cried "yes."

Without U.S. participation, the future of this grab for undersea sovereignty will remain in doubt. Not surprisingly, the whole elaborate administrative structure is to be financed at the outset by assessments "based upon the scale used for the regular budget of the United Nations." That is to say, U.S. taxpayers had been expected to put up the largest share of the expenses for a new "Assembly." By refusing to ratify, we have been spared at least this imposition.

The treaty projects an International Sea-Bed Authority headquartered in Jamaica. All ratifying nations will belong to the Authority. Under the Authority, the treaty calls for an Assembly, a Council, a Secretariat, and a small colony of associated tribunals and subsidiary offices. The 36-member Council, functioning as the executive organ of the Authority, is to run the operation. The United States would not even have been guaranteed a seat on this executive body.

The basic idea is for this new Authority to proclaim its sovereignty over two-thirds of the surface of the planet Earth. We are talking, among other things, about 2 million square miles of accessible ocean shelf thought to contain 500 billion barrels of oil and 1.5 quadrillion cubic feet of natural gas. In the Pacific

Plenty To Do On Budget

President Reagan and Republican leaders are patting themselves on the back for the compromise changes they have agreed on for the proposed budget.

The concessions forced by the Republican leaders are admittedly an improvement over the ill-thought-out budget originally submitted by the administration.

That is not to say, however, that a good budget compromise has been reached. This budget needs considerable improvement, and it will take the watchful eyes of the Democratic leaders in Congress to assure that our nation has a budget that will serve its needs.

We hope the budget will be thoroughly explored and changes forced wherever they are needed.

THIS AFTERNOON

Shortened Terms

By PAUL O'CONNOR
RALEIGH — House Speaker Liston Ramsey, in his push for legislative changes in state utility laws, has released legislative staff research which shows North Carolina's utility commissioners have the second longest terms of any regulatory commissioners in the United States. Only members of Pennsylvania's Public Utilities Commission, with 10 year terms, serve longer.

North Carolina utility commissioners serve eight years. They are nominated by the governor and approved by the legislature. Gov. Jim Hunt has appointed all current members of the commission and has never had an appointed rejected. Gov. Jim Holshouser, a Republican, had several nominees rejected.

Ramsey said he'll seek legislation in the 1983 session to have commissioner terms shortened. Rather than introduce it himself, he'll probably have the bill put in by one of his powerful lieutenants.

Ramsey says North Carolina utility commissioners, by serving eight years, become too distant from the public. They get "cozy" with the utilities and become "complacent." Cutting their terms in half would make them more responsive to the public. If after four years the governor re-nominated them, the legislature could decide if they deserve another term.

According to the report released by Ramsey, North Carolina is the only state with eight-year terms. Forty state regulatory bodies — in a total of 32 states — have six year terms. The shortest terms — three years — are on the District of Columbia Public Service Commission and the Michigan Board of Transportation. The issue of shorter terms hasn't been raised in recent memory and Ramsey's interest apparently came as a surprise. Gov. Jim Hunt says he hasn't given the matter any thought. Bob Koger, utilities commission chairman, says he won't comment one way or the other. "I don't want it to look like I'm arguing for my job."

There are a number of arguments for the eight-year term. It insulates the commissioner from political influence. If he doesn't have to

Other Editors Say Synfuels S.O.S

(Greensboro Daily News)

When the quasi-public Synthetic Fuels Corporation was created by Congress in 1980, it had a strapping $15 billion budget and an ambitious goal: to produce the equivalent of 500,000 barrels a day of synthetic fuel and two million barrels per day by 1992. But even the energy crisis has fallen on hard times these days (oil products are temporarily plentiful and cheaper), and so has the great synfuel rush.

Synfuels, as they are known in energy jargon are liquid and gaseous fuel products like oil extracted from shale rock. With the promise of government guarantees, the major energy companies embarked upon colossal projects to tap the attractive new market for shale oil. Exxon in late 1979 created waves in the oil industry by calling for development of an eight million barrel per day synfuels industry with a giant oil shale project in Colorado as its center piece.

Exxon bought a majority interest in the Colony Project in western Colorado from Atlantic-Richfield two years ago and, with Tosco Corp., the country's second largest refiner, pushed construction of a huge plant to mine, crush, cook and extract oil from the shale rock.

But then world oil prices recently stabilized and in fact began falling. Energy demand has slacked. Costs of projects have mushroomed. The Colony project, originally to have cost less than $2 billion, was creeping up to $4 billion and could have run to as much as $5 billion. One by one the projects were shelved. Citing the enormous cost overruns on Colony, Exxon last week backed out of the project and dropped its plans for producing synfuels.

That leaves only one remaining commercial oil shale project under construction a 10,000 barrel per day Union Oil Co. plant just a few miles from the Colony plant. It is tempting to say that if Exxon cannot do it, then extracting oil from shale rock should be the preserve of the government. But the government already has a sorry track record of directly sponsoring alternative energy sources — like the failed windmill at Boone.

Perhaps the small plant still under development by Union Oil will prove that developing synthetic fuels is both feasible and profitable. In a world rapidly consuming its non-renewable energy sources, synfuels will eventually be needed. The energy crunch, after, all is only on a temporary leave of absence.

can of worms. The only Western nations to ally themselves with the ragtag gaggle of claim-jumpers were France, Canada and Japan. The Soviet bloc, prudently looking after its own best interests, passively abstained.

What all this rigamarole means is that in December, representatives of at least 60 nations will queue up in Caracas to deposit instruments of ratification. The treaty will become operative a year later. Most of the ratifying nations have not the slightest capability of actually mining the sea floor. They lack the capital, the know-how and the managerial and technological skills, but under this treaty all these they were protesting the income-diminisher that was the most severe at the time. "They were not signaling a different preference in income-diminishers. They wanted none at all," he states.

To have no income-diminisher at all might have been expecting far too much, but many Americans at the time did expect to get just that. And a review of the political rhetoric at that time gives evidence that such notions were spread wide and far, and in fact, were actually promised.

Which is worse? Looking back, Americans are still likely to say inflation. But for 10 years or so many people didn't think it was bad at all. Borrowers, for example, repaid their loans in cheaper dollars, and thus transferred assets to themselves in a perfectly legal way.

But inflation gradually eroded the lives of more and more people, and for the decade of the 1970s the average real income barely rose. Eventually, when people reached for the brass ring their feet went out from under them and they missed the big prize.

A new plague, 9.4 percent unemployment, has been substituted. In a sense, says economist James Griffin, inflation has merely been exchanged for unemployment. And so, he says, in a sense there has been no victory at all, and therefore no rejoicing in the streets.

To Griffin, who heads Aetna Life & Casualty's corporate economics department, the plagues are sides of the same coin. "Each, in its own way takes bread off the table, each is an income diminisher," he says.

When people were insisting on a lower rate of inflation two years ago, he reasons,

Reagan Asks Exiles Visit

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
WASHINGTON — Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the self-exiled Nobel laureate who was barred from former president Jerry Ford's White House, has been invited to a private talk with President Reagan May 11 before a small White House lunch to be attended by eight other Soviet expatriates.

It was uncertain whether the great Russian author would attend. He has told intimates that he fears his visit might "make a fuss" because of Ford's refusal to invite him. Solzhenitsyn lives with his wife in the remote community of Cavendish, Vt.

The other expatriates will join Reagan and Solzhenitsyn for lunch under present planning. Pushed by Reps. Jack Kemp and John LeBoutillier and Sen. Roger Jepsen, all Republicans, Reagan privately agreed several weeks ago to be the first presidential host of Soviet expatriates. Ford, under prodding from his top foreign policy adviser, Henry Kissinger, refused to invite Solzhenitsyn to the White House to avoid offending the Soviet Union.

Teddy's 1984 Move
By reaching into the Deep South for his new political director, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy virtually announced his intention to make another run for the Democratic presidential nomination, in 1984.

The senator's choice of South Carolina Democratic Party executive director Bill Carrick (to replace the resigned Carl Wagner) has almost nothing to do with Kennedy's 1982 re-election campaign in Massachusetts. Carrick handled Kennedy's losing pre-convention 1980 bids in both South Carolina and Texas. Dixie Democrats nevertheless give him good marks as a political technician. His membership on the party reform commission headed by North Carolina governor Jim Hunt, coupled with his 1980 work for Kennedy, have given Carrick a touch of the national exposure he will need in the next two years.

No Stopping Billy Graham

Despite a personal letter from Vice President George Bush advising strongly against the trip, evangelist Billy Graham is taking his Baptist revivalism to the heart of religious darkness in the Soviet Union.

Graham quietly informed intermediaries that nothing could dissuade him from his Soviet trip except a personal request from President Reagan. The president is as much opposed to the trip as Bush and every other top administration official. He declined to use his influence, however, to veto it.

Reason for the opposition is the certainty that the Kremlin will exploit Graham for political purposes, claiming that his tour shows religious tolerance in the Communist Bloc and using Graham to promote the Soviet peace offensive. Graham's private feeling is that he is answering a higher summons to duty.

Supply-Side Peace
The simmering feud between two of the nation's leading supply-side Republicans, Rep. Jack Kemp of New York and New York governor hopeful Lewis Lehrman, was quietly patched up over lunch recently.

Cool relations, became frigid early this year when Kemp endorsed State Controller Ned Regan for governor. In the weeks since Regan withdrew from the race, friends prodded Kemp and Lehrman to get together and settle their quarrels.

They finally met late in April over lunch at the Republican Capitol Hill Club in Washington with nobody else present. The conversation was amiable, but Kemp will not be endorsing Lehrman or anybody else in the governor's race for the time being.

Clark Nixes Dips
William P. Clark, President Reagan's national security assistant, is not available to see foreign ministers and other high diplomats from abroad on official visits to Washington.

That change in the way the national security assistant used to conduct business in

Strength For Today

THE LAMPLIGHTER

Sir Henry Lauder, the Scotch comedian of a previous generation, used to tell how as a child he went to the window every evening looking for the lamplighter. The street would grow dark and he could not see the lamplighter approaching, but he knew when he had come and gone because of the string of lights he left behind him.

How much we wish that we knew more about the life of our Lord here on earth and how many things he said and did which we know are not recorded. As the Evangelist John wrote, "And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they could be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books which should be written" (John 21:25).

But we know enough to be aware that he has left behind him a string of lights which are the only guides for humanity in a dark world. The things he said, the acts he performed, the ideals he established, continue to be the world's great hope. — Elisha Douglass

No Cheers For Inflation Dip

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — When consumer prices were rising at nearly 15 percent in the spring of 1980 there might have been dancing in the streets if it were known that in two years the rate would drop to under 7 percent.

It is there now, but there is no dancing. Nor are there expressions of gratitude for having been saved from what, two years earlier, had been considered one of the worst economic plagues in modern times.

A new plague, 9.4 percent unemployment, has been substituted. In a sense, says economist James Griffin, inflation has merely been exchanged for unemployment. And so, he says, in a sense there has been no victory at all, and therefore no rejoicing in the streets.

To Griffin, who heads Aetna Life & Casualty's corporate economics department, the plagues are sides of the same coin. "Each, in its own way takes bread off the table, each is an income diminisher," he says.

When people were insisting on a lower rate of inflation two years ago, he reasons, they were protesting the income-diminisher that was the most severe at the time. "They were not signaling a different preference in income-diminishers. They wanted none at all," he states.

To have no income-diminisher at all might have been expecting far too much, but many Americans at the time did expect to get just that. And a review of the political rhetoric at that time gives evidence that such notions were spread wide and far, and in fact, were actually promised.

Which is worse? Looking back, Americans are still likely to say inflation. But for 10 years or so many people didn't think it was bad at all. Borrowers, for example, repaid their loans in cheaper dollars, and thus transferred assets to themselves in a perfectly legal way.

But inflation gradually eroded the lives of more and more people, and for the decade of the 1970s the average real income barely rose. Eventually, when people reached for the brass ring their feet went out from under them and they missed the big prize.

Sustained, inflation might have destroyed the nation's productive ability. Productivity dropped from an annual rate 2.8 percent in the 1960s to 1.5 in the '70s, and only 0.9 percent from 1975 to 1980.

The economy wasn't growing any more; you could obtain a bigger piece of the pie only by cutting into your neighbor's portion, and then he'd try to do the same to you. Leverage won by wage increases was lost to higher prices.

That battle seems to be over for the time being. Wage demands are lower, givebacks are commonplace, in labor-management talks. Consumer prices actually fell in March, the first monthly decline since 1965, just prior to President Johnson's guns-and-butter spending policy.

But those affected by unemployment or reduced hours now total more than 17 million workers — those without jobs, those working fewer hours, and those who have dropped out of the labor force and no longer look.

Bankruptcies are up, and it is widely believed that some big names might be added to the list this year. Profits are down. Nearly 30 percent of the nation's production capacity is idle. Capital spending in new plant and equipment shows very little growth or none at all.

The longer such a condition exists the less likely it seems that disinflation will remain the national purpose. Disinflation, it was widely promised and believed, was the basis for a new economic advance.

If the economic advance does rise up out of the existing inertia, the purpose might be reinforced. If expansion fails to develop it might conceivably lead to the feeling that inflation really wasn't so bad.

Jim Griffin says it well. "If disinflation is the national purpose, the present policy mix is an effective, although unfortunate, means to that end." It has, he says, effectively slowed price increases.

But in the absence of any economic improvement, which is the real goal of any economic policy, he suggests people may view disinflation as just a "transmission device" for unemployment and lower incomes.

Yes, the parents of Rose High graduates are upset with East Carolina University. After 12 years of school, Rose High seniors have to find a place other than Ficklen Stadium to graduate because of the reseeding of a field. Since when has a blade of grass become more important than getting a high school diploma? The last six weeks of school are here; announcements have been printed; and the pride that should be theirs on graduation day is tarnished. There are many future ECU students in this class, maybe it's not important to the university, but it is important to the 82 seniors and their families.

Counting Your Blessings

Bad economic news is no news to us nowadays. Unemployment is at 9%, personal bankruptcies reached new records in 1981, and American consumers are $1.4 trillion in debt. But if we look back over the last 30 years, the picture looks a lot brighter. After-tax buying power has risen in real dollars from $4,682 to $8,770 per person and average net worth is up 86% to $39,600. Today 66% of all housing units are owner-occupied — up from 55% in 1951, and 84% of those households own a car — up from 60% thirty years ago. But the best news is that we now have more time to enjoy all this wealth. Work weeks have dropped from 42.2 hours to 35.2 hours and life expectancy has risen from 68.4 to 73.6 years.

RARE COASTAL PLAIN FLOWER — Martin County's grove of mountain laurel that thrives on the 90-foot-high Rainbow Banks bluffs overlooking the Roanoke River near Hamilton is now in peak bloom. Usually found only in mountainous regions, rare stands of the shrub, sometimes growing to a height of 20 feet, are known in Martin County and at Medoc Mountain near

Rocky Mount, both high elevation points in the flat terrain of eastern North Carolina. This cluster of white and pink-laced flowers was photographed within the Civil War Fort Branch compound, located in the Rainbow Banks area. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

1 NT	Pass	3 ♥	Pass
3 ♦	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	4 ♥	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	6 ♥	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♠.

We have often stressed the importance of counting out the hand. By doing so, seemingly spectacular play can become routine.

North-South bid aggressively to reach six hearts. After South had jumped in hearts, both players cue-bid their controls. When North moved beyond game, South felt that slam would have good chances, so he went there directly. This was an odds-against contract, but only because the hands were near mirror distribution.

West made his normal lead of the top of his spade sequence—a club lead would have given declarer no chance as the cards lie. Declarer won, drew trumps in two rounds then cashed his remaining spade honor and ruffed a spade. The ace and king of diamonds cleared that suit, followed by a low club from dummy. East played "second hand low," and declarer ducked. West was in with the jack of clubs, but was forced to lead a spade or a diamond. Either would allow declarer to ruff in dummy while discarding a club from his hand. Declarer would then finesse the queen of clubs for his contract.

Declarer played the hand well, but his line was, of necessity, revealing. If he held a third diamond, he could have ruffed it in dummy, so declarer was marked with five hearts and four clubs.

Had declarer's clubs been as good as A-Q-J-x, the contract could not have been defeated—declarer would simply take two club finesses. Therefore, East should have based his defense on the premise that his partner had either the singleton jack or queen of clubs. In that case, East had to prevent his partner from being end played in clubs. When South led a low club from dummy, East should have hopped up with the king, "swallowing" his partner's club jack—a play that is known in the trade as a "Crocodile Coup." No matter what declarer did thereafter, East would have to come to two club tricks for a one-trick set.

alone, we are talking of 16 billion tons of mineral nodules rich in manganese, nickel, copper and cobalt.

The recovery of these natural resources will demand large capital and it will pose large risks. Under our free-enterprise system, a successful operation would return large profits. But under the bureaucratic inhibitions of this treaty, the Council would control everything — sites, permissions, technology, profits, volume, fees, taxes, royalties. Indeed, the Council would have its own "Enterprise," a supranational mining corporation with power to compete with private consortiums and to share their technology.

Apart from its utterly unacceptable provisions on mining, the treaty is not without merit. The agreement codifies a substantial body of international law dealing with sea lanes, 12-mile limits, 200-mile economic zones and the like. The United States, though not a signatory, will observe those provisions.

For the rest, forget it! For the past 20 years, a General Assembly in New York has been kicking the U.S. around. The last thing we need is for a second such outfit to kick us around in Jamaica.

who've had the opportunity to learn their jobs over time. (It doesn't insure they will learn the job, of course.) And then there's continuity. If the complexion of the board isn't radically changing every couple of years, state utility policy will be more stable.

One other argument. Utility commission jobs are political plums. They pay well and commissioners are fairly powerful. If you cut the term in half, the politicians have less to give away to their friends.

Another alternative — no one is advocating it yet — is to make utility commissioners run for office statewide as in some other states. That might make them more responsive to the public, or it could put them in political debt to the fundraising capabilities of the utilities.

The current furor over the utility rate increases has already produced one bit of evidence that commissioners are becoming more responsive — even with their eight-year terms. A source in the Dobbs Building, where the commission is located, reports that commission members are now directly answering complaint letters and telephone calls concerning rate hikes. Previously, the source said, the commissioners pushed the public complaints off on the Public Staff.

Psychiatrist Claims Hinckley Had No 'Psychosis'

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — John W. Hinckley Jr.'s psychiatrist says the man accused of shooting President Reagan didn't show any "psychosis or thought disorder" in the months before the attack on the president.

Dr. John Hopper of Evergreen, Colo., also testified under cross-examination Monday that his young patient may have exaggerated his "anxiety spells."

But Hopper, a defense witness, maintained Hinckley was unable to sort out his life, and was concerned with his failure as a writer and inability to get a date with actress Jodie Foster.

Hinckley has admitted firing the shots that hit Reagan and three other men outside the Washington Hilton Hotel on March 30, 1981, but he has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity.

Hopper said he held 12 counseling sessions with Hinckley between Oct. 28, 1980 and Feb. 27, 1981. Questioned by prosecutor Roger M. Adelman, Hopper said he saw "no psychosis or thought disorder" in Hinckley.

Hopper spent Monday on the stand and was returning today. Hinckley's sister, Diane, and brother, Scott, were expected to be called as the next witnesses.

Although he was called by the defense, Hopper is not one of the "expert" witnesses that Hinckley's lawyers plan to call to testify that their client was insane at the time of the Reagan shooting.

Hopper also said Hinckley's father, John W. Hinckley Sr., was so concerned his son might be addicted to Valium that he wanted to send him to a treatment facility outside Phoenix, Ariz.

But Hopper said he dissuaded the elder Hinckley from doing that because he felt the Valium dose the younger Hinckley was taking was not enough to cause addiction.

Hopper said he tried to get Hinckley off Valium with "biofeedback" treatment. The therapy uses a machine that gives a patient an aural indication in headphones of how tense he is, thus teaching him to relax.

Adelman also showed the jury a form signed by Hinckley that showed he was at an indoor target range in Lakewood, Colo., at 11:30 a.m. Jan. 26, 1981. At the range, Hinckley practiced firing at human silhouette targets.

That form contradicted an entry in Hinckley's diary, which the presidential assailant kept at the request of Hopper. In the diary, Hinckley wrote that he was meditating at a shopping mall on the same day. The diary said he "got weak at noon. Sat down in mall and meditated."

On Jan. 29, 1981, Hinckley wrote, "I felt weak and woozy most of the time ... But that's the way everyone wants it, so weak and woozy. I'll continue to ... try, try for normalcy. Believe me, I'll try."

When asked by Adelman if he believed Hinckley's diary after seeing the form from the rifle range, Hopper replied: "I don't know whether this proves one thing or another ... I guess it casts some doubt on this entry."

However, Hopper said he still believed Hinckley had "anxiety spells" where he became very nervous in crowds.

The 13-count indictment accuses Hinckley of attempting to assassinate the president and assaulting with intent to kill White House Press Secretary James Brady, Reagan, Secret Service Agent Timothy McCarthy and former Washington policeman Thomas Delahanty. He could face life imprisonment if convicted.

Adelman also asked Hopper just how serious Ms. Foster's rejection was to Hinckley.

"Striking out is a fairly common phenomenon among young men, isn't it?" Adelman asked.

A. Yes.

Q. It's one of the common disappointments of young adulthood, isn't it.

Yes.

In a biographical report, separate from the diary but also written at Hopper's request, Hinckley wrote that he was near the breaking point ... that he had suffered "unparalleled emotional exhaustion."

Adelman and Hopper then had this exchange:

Q. When you examined him, he wasn't totally at the break point.

A. No.

Q. Unparalleled emotional exhaustion, you didn't find that.

A. No, I didn't.

Q. He exaggerated in some degree in his self-description.

A. It's fair to say, there was more intensity in writing than I was aware of.

Shortfall Told State Workers

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt met with teacher and state employee representatives for 45 minutes Monday, and then asked them to get back in touch with him with some of their suggestions.

Brent Hackney, Hunt's deputy press secretary, said Hunt laid out the budget situation for the representatives.

"He asked them to get back to him with any suggestions they may have," said Hackney, who said budget projections and a possible wage-freeze for state employees were discussed at the meeting.

Lobbyists and officers of the North Carolina State Government Employees Association, the North Carolina State Employees Association and the North Carolina Association of Educators attended the meeting.

State budget officials say they expect a shortfall of $100 million or more in the 1982-1983 fiscal year, which begins

July 1. The budget has already been approved by the General Assembly for that year and to meet that budget, Hunt has said legislators will have to find cuts in personnel expenses or other state spending.

Aides to the governor say the administration is considering a proposal to effectively freeze employee and teacher wages in the next year by canceling merit pay raises they otherwise would receive. Officials say that would save an estimated $90 million.

The upcoming budget does not include money to continue the 5 percent across-the-board pay raise workers and teachers received Jan. 1, but Hunt has said he wants to avoid having to roll back that pay raise.

GOP Women Hold Meeting

The Pitt County Republican Women's Club held its luncheon meeting at Sweet Caroline's. Plans are being made for a September social.

The group's trip to Washington, D.C. was postponed until next spring. Alice Bost and Barbara Ellis, of the parliamentary authority committee, drafted by-laws and distributed copies.

The next meeting is scheduled for Sept. 1 at Sweet Caroline's at 11:30 a.m.

Chairman Jackie Beatty conducted the meeting.

Forced To Cancel Benefit Bike Ride

East Carolina University student David Hicks announced today that he had been forced for medical reasons to cancel a 1,500-mile bicycle ride to benefit the local Eastern Lung Association.

On April 14, Hicks announced plans for a bike ride from Greenville to Syracuse, N.Y., and back. He sought sponsors to make contributions to Eastern Lung.

However, on May 3, at the time he reached Baltimore, on the outbound trip, Hicks developed problems with a knee and was told by a doctor not to continue the planned bicycle trip.

Hicks said he hopes to be able to attempt another fund-raising trip at a future date.

Speaking At Meeting Today

Parents of gifted Pitt County students will meet today from 7-9 p.m. in the second floor conference room at the Pitt County Office Building with guest speakers Dr. Smith Goodrum, Dr. Paul Berghoff and Dr. Beth Berghoff.

All interested parents and their children are encouraged to attend by Mary Alice Yarbrough, coordinator of Pitt County Gifted-Talented Programs. For further information contact Ms. Yarbrough at 752-6106, ext. 225.

Refunds Doubled.

Right now, if you're getting a refund from Uncle Sam, you may be wondering what to do with it. Frankly, we can't think of any way to make more of it than investing in an NCNB IRA. In fact, it's like getting tax refunds every year from now until you retire.

First, as you can see by the chart, it doesn't take long for your money to double, redouble and double again with the interest an IRA pays.

Second, you pay no taxes on the interest your IRA earns until you start withdrawing. Then, you'll probably be retired and in a lower tax bracket.

Finally, any money you add to your IRA each year can be deducted from your taxes.

For more details, stop by and see the people at NCNB. And find out why more people have been opening IRAs with us than any other place in the neighborhood.

Working individuals can contribute as much as 100% of their salary or wages, up to a maximum of $2,000 ($4,000 total for working couples). Substantial interest penalty for early withdrawal. All depositors insured to $100,000 by FDIC.

Graham Asks Respect For Faith Rights

By STEVEN R. HURST
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) —
Evangelist Billy Graham today urged "all governments to respect the rights of religious believers" in his first comments on human rights since he arrived in Moscow four days ago.

Graham made a brief reference to the rights of Christian believers in a speech prepared for delivery to a conference of Soviet and foreign churchmen concerned over the nuclear arms buildup.

"We need to reaffirm our commitment to mutual respect among religions, such as we are practicing here," he said.

"In connection with this, we should urge all governments to respect the rights of religious believers as outlined in the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights. We must hope that some day all nations (as all those who signed the final act of Helsinki declared) will recognize and respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practice, alone or in community with others, religion or belief acting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience."

In sermons Sunday at Moscow's only Baptist church and a Russian Orthodox cathedral, Graham, a Baptist, avoided the delicate issues of human rights in the Soviet Union and the Soviet government's persecution of religious believers. Western churchmen claim that those in Soviet jails for religious activities include at least 300 Baptists.

Before addressing the conference of "religious workers" for saving the sacred gift of life from nuclear catastrophe, Graham also spoke publicly for the first time since his arrival about the six Siberian Pentecostals who have been living in the basement of the American Embassy for four years.

The six, four members of the Vashchenko family and two from the Chmykhalov family, charge that their sect is being persecuted and are demanding permission to emigrate to the United States. They wrote to Graham before he came to Moscow and urged him not to attend the conference.

The evangelist told reporters he discussed the Pentecostals' desire to emigrate with "top Soviet officials" and believes "there is some little movement toward a resolution of the problem. Hopefully my own suggestions have helped in that regard at least to some extent."

He said he was "advised by some Western contacts, both at the Vatican and some other places, that the private approach is much better than making a media event out of it."

American Embassy spokesman Frank Tonini said Graham would visit the Pentecostals at the embassy tonight before dining with U.S. Ambassador Arthur A. Hartman.

Graham in his address to the conference urged a summit meeting "in which the leaders of the major powers do not come together just to sign a prepared document, but simply to get to know one another as human beings" and a moratorium by the major powers on hostile rhetoric.

"Peace does not grow in climate of mistrust, in which each side to a greater and greater degree is constantly accusing the other of false motives and hidden actions," he said.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE PUBLIC:

"MADE IN JAPAN."

There was a time, about twenty to thirty years ago, when the phrase "Made in Japan" meant consumers could expect a cheap, shoddy imitation of an American product with poor quality. In fact, "Made In Japan" was kind of a punch line in a joke — and Japanese industry was constantly referred to as unoriginal copycats cranking out everything from TV sets to transistors to cameras to computers and radios that looked a lot like U.S. products, behaved badly and were not nearly as good. They just didn't have that "good old-fashioned U.S. know-how" and quality behind them.

THEN A PECULIAR THING HAPPENED TO US ON THE WAY TO THE 21ST CENTURY.

The Japanese not only began beating us Americans at our own game, but they began beating us in the one industry that the U.S. had clearly dominated for the entire 20th Century — the automobile industry. The Japanese actually began making better products in the automobile industry — models that were more in keeping with the needs of the American people — better than we were producing here at home. What's more, they were selling them at prices that the U.S. competition found hard to match. It was a classic case of free enterprise. And some of us, having grown soft and self-complacent, were being overtaken by a leaner, hungrier, much smaller competitor who was more interested in producing good results than in relying on past reputation. The ultimate winner, of course, was the American consumer because the open competition led to better, more efficient products at lower prices. Up until then, the U.S. automobile industry had always been the winner. However, the Japanese had studied U.S. methods and technology hard and long. And they had added innovations of their own, including management-labor philosophies that helped make every member of a Japanese automobile company feel personal responsibility and pride for the company's products and its quality. Twenty to thirty years ago, the principle of teamwork between labor and management working together to achieve common goals and mutual prosperity seemed as American as apple pie — what happened to it?

RIVALRY AND COMPETITION BETWEEN THE JAPANESE AND U.S. AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRIES IS ONE OF THE BEST THINGS THAT COULD HAPPEN TO AMERICA — AND ESPECIALLY AMERICANS.

The entire framework of the U.S. free-enterprise system has been, is, and always should be built upon the idea of creative competition in a free and open marketplace.

In 1957, its first full year of operation in the U.S., Toyota sold a grand total of 300 cars in this country.

By 1980, Toyota established itself as the first importer to exceed 700,000 in sales in a single year.

Toyota is a success story in the best of American traditions. There are now more than 1,000 Toyota dealerships in the country. Together the company, its distributors and dealers employ more than 32,000 people. Toyota investments in land and facilities are valued at more than $1.2 billion in the U.S. Another $1.3 billion was spent on U.S. goods and services alone in 1980 by the Toyota group. And more than a quarter of a billion dollars was spent by Toyota on U.S.-made parts.

Toyota dealers annually sell more cars per outlet than any other make, domestic or imported. To do this, they have got to have the right cars for the most people.

Most of all, contrary to some people's belief, Toyota is not darkening the outlook for America's economy; it's one of the few bright spots in that economy today. Even the recent restrictions placed on imported Japanese cars haven't added even one additional U.S. car sale. They've simply helped prove what a lot of people have been saying all along. The American car-buying public won't settle for anything less than quality products at fair prices. Restrictions have, however, cost the American consumer $4.5 billion in additional costs for automobiles and have not put one U.S. auto worker back to work. The American automobile industry will come out of its slump when it starts making cars that are equal or close to equal in value and quality.

Now the troubled American automobile industry is starting to do something about its present problems. They are starting to pay attention to the techniques and work principles that have made Toyota successful with the American people. General Motors — the world's largest producer of automobiles — has expressed interest in "Japanese know-how" by announcing it has entered into merger discussions with Toyota about the possibility of a joint production of cars, in the U.S., at General Motors' plants — maybe one on the West Coast and one on the East. We hope it is finalized very soon — and I believe it will be.

HIGHER PRODUCTIVITY MEANS LOWER PRICES AND MORE CAR SALES FOR THE U.S. AND JAPAN.

Japanese productivity has become to the 1980's what American ingenuity was to the 30's, 40's and 50's.

Japanese automobile manufacturers — Toyota in particular — have turned productivity into a science and a quality state of the art. Toyota bases its production on defect prevention. They work closely with suppliers to make sure every part has zero defects. Another key to Toyota's efficient production methods is something called "just-in-time" scheduling. Components and parts are scheduled to arrive at the time they are needed for assembly, thus eliminating the need for stocking millions of dollars in inventories of parts in assembly plants. This reduces manufacturing costs considerably.

Every worker on every assembly line in Japan is a quality-control inspector, and Japanese workers are conscientious about their responsibility for quality and keeping defects to almost zero. That means no work has to be redone, adding expense to the entire manufacturing process and the price consumers pay for their cars.

Surely, both labor and management in Detroit can learn something from the Japanese employees' loyalty to their companies. And from Japanese management's dedication to seeing that workers achieve financial security, good working environment, and basic job satisfaction that makes them feel a part of something very important rather than alienated — and sometimes hostile to the company and the cars they build.

WHY THE JAPANESE ADVANTAGE?

Below is a factual comparison which shows the differences in the rates of productivity between the U.S. and Japanese automobile industries.

(All Japanese automobile companies compared with American companies)

		Japan	U.S.
MANUFACTURING (Machine stamping operations)	Parts stamped per hour	550	325
	Manpower per press line	1 man	7-13 men
	Time needed to change dies	5 minutes	4-6 hours
	Average production run	2 days	10 days
	Time needed to build a small car	30.8 hours	59.9 hours
Source: Harbour & Assoc.
PERSONNEL (Average automobile plant)	Total workforce	2,360	4,250
	Average number absent (vacations, illness, etc.)	185	500
	Average absentee rate	8.3%	11.8%

THIS AD WAS "MADE IN THE U.S.A."

And if you think the writer of this message is presenting a biased case in favor of Japanese cars over American cars, consider this: I own and operate the largest volume General Motors Pontiac dealership in the world. I'm a U.S. businessman who believes wholeheartedly in the American system of free enterprise. That means we can learn from each other, improve our products and give benefits to the consumer when competition is free and vigorous.

The U.S. taught the automobile business to the Japanese, and they in turn were interested enough to learn from us, improve and go on from there. Now it's our turn. We can learn a lot about automobile production from the Japanese in the 1980's. It wouldn't make good business sense not to.

"HOW CAN WE DO IT BETTER?"

America can and will again resume a position of leadership in the automobile industry. There are optimistic signs right now that U.S. Labor and Management have come to realize that "What's in it for me?" isn't nearly as productive and profitable a philosophy as "What's in it for us?" — if we do it right. They should come to understand the truth and wisdom of the Toyota worker's slogan... "How can we do it better?"

We all are for a better U.S. car market, more employment, profitable U.S. car companies and quality products for the retail car buyer. It can be done with the "3 C's" — Consideration, Cooperation and Communication. It can't be done with belligerence, arrogance and an attitude of "just let it alone, it will correct itself." People die from that attitude — so can business and labor.

Charge Driver In Mishap

Earl Anderson of Bell Arthur was charged with failing to stop for a stop sign following investigation of a 9:50 a.m. collision Monday at the intersection of Third and Davis streets. Police Department investigators said the Anderson car collided with an auto driven by John Cherry Johnson of 1209 W. Third St., causing an estimated $1,800 damage to the Anderson car, $2,000 damage to the Johnson vehicle and $100 to the yard at 906B W. Third St. Investigators reported Johnson and a passenger in the Anderson car were injured.

Probe Break-In At Grier Bldg.

Greenville police were investigating a break-in today at the Grier Building at 401 W. First St. Chief Glenn Cannon said the intruders forced open a rear door to gain entrance, then broke into and ransacked a half-dozen offices in the building — including the office of Rep. Ed Warren. Several items were reported missing, including a television set, and an estimated $1,000 damage caused.

Warren, who operates a land consultant business, said nothing was taken from his office. The break-in was reported about 6 a.m.

and fire departments but has seemed to result in greater utilization of personnel and more men 'on-the-street' providing protection."

The ad hoc board reported that it "did not have adequate time to study the concept of public safety but what we did learn convinced us that the idea is worthy of further careful study. Otherwise, it will never be known if it will be of value to Greenville."

The committee told the council, "We are aware that morale in fire-rescue is now beginning to rise after reaching a low point two to three years ago. This we found was due to the hard work and good will of both the leaders and the men of fire-rescue. We wish to do nothing to disturb this growing morale and efficiency. Therefore, we encourage members of the public safety commission in their study of public safety to be sure to include representatives of the services involved in their study group, to insure the study be done with as much visibility as possible and with wide public input, and that sufficient time between the end of the study and implementation of the program be allowed, preferably three to five years."

The committee suggested that "one of the major reasons for problems in the police and fire-rescue departments is the lack of continuity in Greenville city government." Committee members said they supported and reaffirmed the recommendation of the Mayor's Advisory Committee in its June 1981 report that the terms of council members be changed to four-year staggered terms in order to foster a degree of continuity.

The group suggested that the lack of continuity is also reflected in the city manager position where, "In the time in which we have had one and not more than two chiefs of police and fire-rescue, we have had no less than 13 city managers."

It said, "Clearly it is time to change a system which is guaranteed to produce starts and stops, abandonment of commitments, instability and insecurity of personnel, and a climate in which long-term planning is discouraged."

"The establishing of a permanent commission on public safety," the committee reported, "would do much to create vitally needed stability and security and will allow long-term planning and implementation of programs. Such a commission could accomplish this even in the absence of any positive action by City Council to provide longevity and continuity of our elected officials."

The study board added, "If, for any reason, City Council is reluctant to create and confer the necessary support and authority to make the commission on public safety a strong commission, it would be better not to create a commission but to commit the city ... to a continuation of the actions and policies of the past."

The committee will discuss its full report with the council in a workshop scheduled for May 24 at 5 p.m. at city hall.

Organizing New Council

A group of eastern North Carolina's top management in industry will gather here Thursday night to organize the Eastern North Carolina Industrial Council.

He is a former president of North Carolina National Bank and served as deputy secretary of commerce in the Carter administration.

"A planning committee started meeting a year ago to plan the organization," explained James A. Hackey III of Washington, acting chairman of the industrial council. "The organization will have an annual meeting each year and a 15-member executive committee will handle details."

Hackey said the purpose of the organization will be largely fellowship.

Mets Enjoy Pinch-Hitting For Wins

By The Associated Press
For the second straight game, the New York Mets pinched hard — and this time it hurt the San Diego Padres.

"Pinch-hitting is the hardest thing there is in baseball," said Bob Bailor after doubling home two runs with two out in the last of the ninth inning to lead the Mets to a dramatic 3-2 victory over the Padres Monday night. "I've only done it once before this season, and I can't recall the last time I got a hit as a pinch-hitter."

On Sunday, the Mets beat the San Francisco Giants 6-5 on a tie-breaking home run with two out in the ninth by pinch-hitter Rusty Staub.

Bailor hit a 2-2 pitch from Gary Lucas — a slider — down the left-field line at Shea Stadium to drive in Ellis Valentine and Wally Backman. Valentine had singled to open the inning and moved to second on a groundout by Staub. Lucas intentionally walked George Foster, and Backman ran for Foster.

"I wasn't looking for any particular pitch with the count 2-2 on me," Bailor said. "All I was looking for was a ball to hit."

The hit made Bailor an instant hero with Met fans, but his reaction to their affection was a little awkward, he felt.

"I know I gave a bad performance on the curtain call," he said. "That's the first time it's ever happened to me."

"The fans kept calling for me, and I had to be pushed out of the dugout. I just gave a wave of my hand. I only stayed out about three seconds. I've seen Reggie (Jackson) out there as long as five minutes."

The Padres had taken a 2-1 lead in the top of the ninth on a run-scoring double by Terry Kennedy with two out.

Randy Jones, 4-2, scattered seven hits and gave up only one earned run while beating the team for which he once won the Cy Young Award.

Phillies 9, Dodgers 8
Pete Rose singled home Greg Gross from third base in the 10th inning to lead Philadelphia over Los Angeles. The game-winning hit atoned for an error by Rose in the first inning that led to two Dodger runs.

With one out in the 10th,

Gross drew Philadelphia's 10th walk of the game and stole second. Bob Dernier then singled just past the outstretched glove of Ron Cey at third as Gross stopped at third. Rose then hit a 3-2 pitch off reliever Steve Howe for the game-winning hit.

Warren Brusstar, 2-1, pitched two innings of one-hit relief while Tom Niedenfuer, 0-1, took the loss.

The Dodgers rallied for six runs in the eighth to tie the game 8-8. Two of the runs came in on a single by Mike Scioscia.

Astros 7, Pirates 3
Ray Knight doubled and tripled in the first two innings as Houston built a five-run lead and cruised past Pittsburgh.

After Pittsburgh took a 1-0 lead, Knight's double triggered a two-run first for the Astros that was capped by Art Howe's two-run single. Knight's two-run triple off Rick Rhoden, 1-4, keyed a four-run uprising in the second as the Astros took a 6-1 lead.

Don Sutton, 5-1, went the distance to record his first complete game of the year and only the Astros' second. The veteran right-hander allowed nine hits, struck out six and walked none.

Reds 3, Cardinals 1
Johnny Bench's solo home run capped a two-run rally in the first inning, leading Cincinnati, over St. Louis. Frank Pastore, 4-2, Joe Price and Tom Hume combined on a seven-hitter for the Reds, with Hume earning his seventh save.

Bench's homer, the 366th of his major league career, came off John Martin, 3-4.

"He threw a fastball down the middle," said Bench.

"I'm going to hope that it's a good omen," added the 34-year-old Bench. "I'm usually a hot-weather player. I guess the aches and pains go away with the heat."

Bench scored his second run of the game in the ninth to nail down the victory.

Expos 5, Giants 4
Tim Lincecum's two-out double off the glove of San Francisco third baseman Tim Lincecum drove in the go-ahead run and capped a three-run Montreal rally in the eighth inning.

Consecutive throwing errors by Montreal pitcher Charlie Lea and left fielder Terry Francona had helped the Expos to a three-run seventh inning and given them a 4-2 lead.

The Expos tied the game with two outs in the eighth on Dan Norman's two-run, pinch single. Raines then hit a shot down the left field line that caromed off O'Malley's glove and brought home Chris Speier from third base with the decisive run.

Pirates Sign Jabo Fulghum

East Carolina University head baseball coach Hal Baird announced today the signing of Louisville College star Jabo Fulghum to a baseball grant-in-aid.

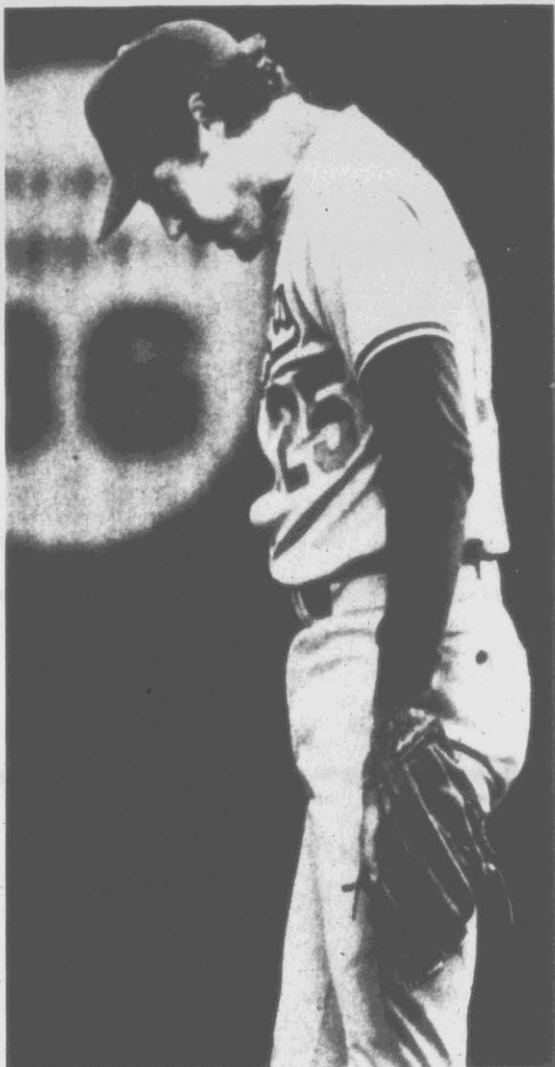

Fulghum, described by Baird as, "the finest defensive catcher available," was recently selected as Louisville's "Student-Athlete of the Year."

Fulghum, who stands 6-0, 175, hit .385 and made all-Eastern Tarheel Conference the last two years while at Louisville. Fulghum was the award last season as the designated hitter.

Fulghum was a member of the 1980 North Carolina state 3-A championship team at Greene Central High School, which was coached by his father, James Fulghum.

"Jabo is a very solid defensive catcher," said Baird. "He has a great deal of baseball in his background. And he does have some offensive punch."

Fulghum will have two years of eligibility at East Carolina. He is the second recruit signed by Baird this year, joining Fayetteville Cape Fear star David Horne, a second baseman.

Charger Title Hopes Jolted As Gay Sidelined With Finger Injury

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

Ayden-Grifton, its hopes of strengthening its place atop the Eastern Carolina Conference torpedoed Friday night by Greene Central, was further shaken when on Monday the Chargers learned ace pitcher Tyrone Gay will not be available for duty tonight.

Gay, Ayden-Grifton's top pitcher the past three seasons, injured the middle finger of his throwing hand in Friday's 12-3 loss to the Rams and, after an examination yesterday, was told he should not pitch tonight when the Chargers play host to Farmville Central.

"We went to the doctor in Grifton and he told us it might be best if he did not pitch (tonight)," Ayden-Grifton coach Allan Wilson said. "I'm a little bit worried — I'll be honest with you."

Wilson said the injury occurred in the second inning Friday, but at the time did not appear serious.

"I think he went to throw a fast ball and his finger bent back and he pulled something in his arm or neck," Wilson said. "He says that when he grips the ball he feels (pain) in his arm."

Gay, who is 6-4 and leads the ECC in strike outs with 89 in 63 innings, was slated to start tonight and next Tuesday when A-G ends the regular season at home against North Pitt. Now, Wilson must turn to sophomore Doug Coley, a right-hander

Well-Wishers Include Advice For Leonard To Quit The Ring

BALTIMORE (AP) — The flood of get-well messages following Sugar Ray Leonard's eye surgery has included advice from fighters and trainers that the world welterweight champion retire from boxing.

"I wouldn't fight, I wouldn't risk my eye," said Roger Stafford, who had been scheduled to fight Leonard Friday night in Buffalo, N.Y. "Ray's made it, he shouldn't fight anymore."

The 25-year-old champion was listed in good condition at Johns Hopkins Hospital today where he continues to recuperate from weekend surgery performed to repair the detached retina in his left eye.

Get-well telegrams poured into the hospital Monday, where the switchboard was flooded with calls, including one from President Reagan, who spoke with Leonard.

Doctors who performed the two-hour operation on Sunday say it's too early to predict whether Leonard will fully regain the vision in his left eye. But Dr. Ronald G. Michels, the ophthalmologist who headed the surgical team, said he was optimistic that Leonard would be fully recovered in four to six months.

Several fight trainers and doctors, meanwhile, publicly urged Leonard to give up his boxing career.

"I hope and pray that he does retire," said David Jacobs, one of Leonard's early trainers. "He doesn't have to fight to survive and he has time to do something else."

Dr. Bernhart Schwartz, a veteran ringside physician in Los Angeles, said Leonard "would be crazy to fight again."

"He would be in real danger of going blind in that eye," Schwartz told the Los Angeles Herald Examiner. "Outside of brain damage, a detached retina is as serious as any injury a fighter can receive."

Former heavyweight champ Floyd Patterson also urged Leonard to retire. "Once you have created a weakness in the eye, it could very easily happen again," Patterson told the Washington Post.

"It ain't never going to be as good as God made it," said Dr. Ferdie Pacheco, a sports medicine expert and a boxing consultant for NBC. "The world is full of old fighters who can't see right."

Pacheco said the nature of boxing would prevent a full recovery and increase the likelihood of another detachment.

Leonard's doctor, however, said there would be little danger of another retinal detachment if the eye fully recovered from the surgery.

Several years ago, Michels successfully repaired a damaged retina for boxer Earnie Shavers, who continues to fight. Shavers' retina was more seriously detached than Leonard's, Michels said.

"We have every reason to believe the eye will be more sound after the operation," said Leonard's agent and attorney Mike Trainer, who was in Buffalo to arrange refunds for 14,000 fans who had bought tickets for Friday night's fight.

"Dr. Michels said it is almost impossible that the retina would tear in the same place as before," Trainer said.

"I've heard a lot of promoters are going around trying to figure out some kind of box-off" for Leonard's title. "They can do what they want. Ray is the champion."

Leonard told Playboy during an interview published in the magazine's June issue that he injured his left eye while training for last September's title bout with Thomas Hearns in Las Vegas.

"My eye started to swell up right away, and it hurt so much every time Tommy touched it that I was reluctant to let him get near it," Leonard told Playboy during the interview he gave while training for his Feb. 15 bout against Bruce Finch. Leonard knocked out Finch in the second round.

Stafford said he was disappointed by the cancellation of Friday's fight against Leonard. "I could cry. I have trained for 16 hard weeks ... but I'm also concerned about Sugar Ray. I hope that he recovers fully."

Meanwhile, the medical director for the New York State Athletic Commission says he wants to know why Leonard's eye injury wasn't reported sooner.

"We should have been notified immediately," Dr. Edwin A. Campbell said. "We received no notice at all. I'm very upset about it. There definitely will be an investigation."

"It is a regulation that anytime anyone who is scheduled to box in the state of New York receives an injury of this type, they must make the commission aware of it," Campbell said.

Campbell told a reporter for the Buffalo Courier-Express that he learned of Leonard's previous treatment from news reports and that he still has received no official notice from Leonard's camp.

Asked whether the state commission should have been notified on April 22 when it became known that Leonard was having problems with his eye, Campbell said, "Absolutely."

Campbell said he didn't think the investigation would result in any penalties.

Dirty Al Says Charge Untrue

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Al Gallagher has left management, players and fans with one of two feelings — either you love him or you hate him.

"That's a fair assessment because you can't be non-committal about me," Gallagher said recently. "I'm outspoken. I'm different. Al Gallagher is there for everybody to see. You can see the way I am. I'm not hiding anything or beating around the bush."

Gallagher thinks that is why he was fired by the Atlanta organization after managing the Durham Bulls the past two summers. Atlanta's farm director, Hank Aaron, gave Gallagher his first managing job five years ago, and fired him last year.

"It was one of the toughest decisions I've ever made," Aaron told a Durham newspaper. "But I had to do it. I think it came down to the fact that Al wanted to win more than he wanted to develop players."

Gallagher, now managing a Class AA team for Cleveland's Indians, denies that charge.

"I think it was just something for them to say when they let me go, which was fine," he said. "They can say I want to be a winner. I'm not going to be ashamed of wanting to be a winner. I still want to be a winner."

Until 1981, every Gallagher team in the east. He demanded that his teams play to win as well as improve, often including unpopular extra morning workouts among his demands.

Gallagher met with Aaron in Atlanta, telling him he was tired of Class A ball, but says Aaron told him there was no place to advance in the Atlanta organization.

Gallagher said his philosophy of development through winning must have worked; six of his former players are now with the Braves — including shortstop Rafael Ramirez and centerfielder Brett Butler.

Butler, with whom Gallagher often feuded in 1980, is now quoted to praise Gallagher for pushing him to become a better ball player.

"A lot of players that went up in the Atlanta organization did not like me as a person, but I think they respected me," Gallagher said. "I have to separate these feelings into Al Gallagher as a person and Al Gallagher as a manager."

"You can't worry about those guys that don't like you as a manager. You just can't worry about them because I know in my heart that I have never, never treated a player unfairly," he said. "My judgement may not be right, but it's fair."

"One of the penalties of being visible like I am, is that you are often disliked," he added. "I can live with that."

To Investigate Leonard Injury

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — The medical director for the New York State Athletic Commission says it will conduct an investigation into world welterweight champion Sugar Ray Leonard's eye injury to find out why it wasn't reported sooner.

"We should have been notified immediately," Dr. Edwin A. Campbell said. "We received no notice at all. I'm very upset about it. There definitely will be an investigation."

Leonard was treated by an eye doctor before a scheduled April 22 sparring session in preparation for a title defense set for Friday here. Leonard's lawyer, Mike Trainer, said then that Leonard may have caught a thumb in the eye while sparring.

The retina of Leonard's left eye was reattached during a two-hour operation Saturday at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore. The title defense against Roger Stafford of Philadelphia was cancelled.

"It is a regulation that anytime anyone who is scheduled to box in the state of New York receives an injury of this type, they must make the commission aware of it," Campbell said.

Campbell told a reporter for the Buffalo Courier-Express that he learned of Leonard's previous treatment from news reports and that he still has received no official notice from Leonard's camp.

Asked whether the state commission should have been notified on April 22 when it became known that Leonard was having problems with his eye, Campbell said, "Absolutely."

Campbell said he didn't think the investigation would result in any penalties.

Flag Pole Halts Amos Otis' Long Ball

By The Associated Press
Amos Otis is as patriotic as any other American, but you'll have to forgive him if he doesn't go around whistling "The Stars and Stripes Forever" for a while.

Leading off the bottom of the ninth inning Monday night, Otis jumped on the first pitch from Milwaukee relief ace Rollie Fingers and sent soaring it in the general direction of Interstate 70.

It might have become the first fair ball to be hit out of Royals Stadium, but it hit about two-thirds of the way up the flagpole behind the left-center field fence, giving the Royals a 3-2 victory over the Brewers.

"It's a shame it hit the flagpole," said Royals Manager Dick Howser. "That ball had a legitimate chance to get out of this stadium. That is the hardest ball I've ever seen Otis hit."

Otis, whose six game-winning RBIs lead the league, said he was just trying to make contact against an old nemesis. "Nobody hits Fingers good. He's gotten me out about nine times out of 10," Otis said. "I thought it was a hanging slider, but the guys on the bench said it was a fast ball."

Otis' homer made a winner of Vida Blue, who scattered six hits. A two-run homer by Kansas City's Johnathan tied the score in the third inning. Milwaukee scored in the first on Robin Yount's double and in the second on Mark Brouhard's homer.

Red Sox 9, Twins 5

Jim Rice drove in three runs and rapped out three hits, including a two-run homer, as Boston won its third game in a row and 17th in the last 20. Minnesota has dropped five straight and 18 of 23.

The Red Sox exploded for six runs in the third inning. Rich Gedman opened with his first home run of the season off loser Roger Erickson. One out later, Jerry Remy singled, Dwight Evans doubled and Rice drove in a run with a single. Carl Yastrzemski followed with a double that scored Evans. After Carney Lansford was intentionally walked, Dave Stapleton drove in a run with a grounder and Glenn Hoffman added a two-run double. Rice's homer in the fourth made it 8-0 and offset a grand slam home run by Minnesota's Gary Ward in the bottom of the fourth.

Kent Hrbek, the Twins' first baseman, opened the fourth inning with a double, extending his hitting streak to 20 games, seven short of the major league record for a rookie.

White Sox 6, Blue Jays 3

Steve Kemp slammed a two-run homer in the seventh inning to put Chicago ahead and Tony Bernazard and Greg Luzinski added solo shots in the ninth as the Chicago White Sox extended their winning streak to seven games. Joey McLaughlin relieved starter Luis Leal to start the seventh and walked Bernazard with one out. Kemp followed with his third home run of the season.

Angels 2, Yankees 1

Brian Downing's eighth-inning single drove in the winning run in support of Geoff Zahn's five-hit pitching. With one out in the eighth, California broke the tie on consecutive singles by Tim Lincecum, Bob Boone and Downing off Rudy May. It was the second victory over the Yankees this season for Zahn, who shut them out April 29 on seven hits.

The Angels took a 1-0 lead in the second inning when Reggie Jackson led off with a double, was sacrificed to third and scored on Ron Jackson's single. The Yankees tied it in the fourth on Dave Winfield's fourth home run of the season.

Tigers 3, Rangers 1

Designated hitter Mike Ivie's first AL homer, a two-run shot in the first inning, backed Milt Wilcox's eight-hit pitching. It was the Rangers' third loss in a row and 15th in the last 16 games, while the Tigers snapped a three-game losing streak. Ivie, signed as a free agent late last week after the Houston Astros released him, drilled a pitch from knuckleballer Charlie Hough deep into the left field stands after Kirk Gibson walked with two out.

A's 7, Orioles 6

Pinch-hitter Jeff Burroughs and Rickey Henderson delivered run-scoring singles with two out in the bottom of the 10th inning as Oakland won a three-game losing streak. Baltimore took a 6-5 lead in the top of the 10th on Dan Ford's sacrifice fly. But Tim Lincecum, Baltimore's fourth pitcher, walked Joe Rudi to open the bottom of the 10th and threw one ball to Wayne Gross before being relieved by Ross Grimsley.

Gross bunted toward the mound and pinch runner Jimmy Sexton beat Grimsley's throw to second. Grimsley

Weaver Injured

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Boxing's injury list continues to grow and World Boxing Association heavyweight champion Mike Weaver appears to be his latest member.

Weaver sustained a shoulder injury during a recent workout and he may have to postpone his June 2 title bout against Randy "Tex" Cobb for 30 days, the challenger's manager said Monday night.

Joe Gramby said he was informed about Weaver's injury Monday afternoon by Ron Weathers, a spokesman for TOPCO, which is promoting the fight at the Atlantic City, N.J. Convention Center.

According to Gramby, Weathers said Weaver would be examined in Los Angeles today and a decision on whether to postpone the fight would be made then.

Phil Weidinger, a spokesman for Caesars Tahoe where the champion is training, said Weaver worked out at the Nevada resort last Tuesday and Wednesday and left for Los Angeles on Thursday.

Tolson To Regionals

Freshman Katherine Tolson, the No. 2 singles player this year at East Carolina University, will be playing in the AIAW Regional Tournament at the University of Tennessee-Martin.

The tournament runs from May 13 through May 15.

Tolson qualified for the tournament with a win in the No. 2 singles at the North Carolina AIAW meet.

Tolson is the first ECU player to ever reach the regionals. "It's even more amazing because Katherine is a freshman," ECU coach Carolina Brown said.

"This will be a good opportunity for her. She is a player of exceptional ability and she has a good future," Brown said. "If she performs at the regionals like I know she can, she'll go to the national meet at the University of Colorado."

Katherine is the daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Hubert Tolson, 5100 Trent Woods Drive, New Bern, N.C.

Pair Captures Putting Event

Jake Loftin and Robert Beacham captured the Monday Night Best Ball Tournament at the Greenville Putt-Putt last night.

The two recorded a three-round total of 75.

Finishing six strokes back were Rodney Hooks and Eric Nelson with an 81.

Decision Time Is Near For Big Ralph

By MARSHALL JOHNSON
AP Sports Writer
CHARLOTTEVILLE, Va. (AP)—Terry Holland is about to lose his star tenant, but the University of Virginia basketball coach's only worry is how far away Ralph Sampson plans to move.

By midnight Saturday, the 7-foot-4 Sampson, who has spent the past year in a basement apartment in Holland's home, must decide whether he'll reside next year on The Lawn, the University of Virginia's most prestigious living quarters, or in a National Basketball Association city.

You'll pardon Holland and everyone else associated with Virginia basketball if they ask: "Isn't this where we came in?"

After his 1979-80 freshman season in which he led Virginia's Cavaliers to a 24-10 record and the National Invitation Tournament championship, the Boston Celtics promised to make Sampson their No.1 pick if he would declare hardship and become a professional.

"I don't want to leave school," Sampson finally told Boston General Manager Red Auerbach a mere two or three days before the deadline for deciding whether to turn pro.

In his sophomore season in 1980-81, Sampson led Virginia to a 30-4 record and third place in the NCAA tournament and was named college basketball player of the year.

Detroit and Dallas tied for last place in the NBA and each promised to make him the No.1 pick if he would forgo his last two years of college. Each team met with Sampson and submitted financial offers.

"I figured I was winning here and I figured I would stay with a winning situation that I was already in," Sampson finally announced just 24 hours before the deadline.

Despite being eliminated in the NCAA East Region semi-nals, Virginia again was 30-4 this past season and Sampson again was college basketball player of the year.

The Los Angeles Lakers, who have a 50-50 chance at the NBA's first pick but have been unable to work out a deal with San Diego to be assured of the No.1 spot, have made no secret that they want Sampson.

Sampson, who has become a friend of the Lakers' Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, has made no secret that he would like to play in Los Angeles.

But the NBA has changed the rules since last year's bidding war for Sampson. Now, teams are prohibited from any contact with college undergraduates thinking of turning pro.

"They (the NBA) have tried three different things the last three years. They're experimenting, and I'm the one they're experimenting with," says Sampson.

On his decision this year, Sampson says: "LA's special.

If it was somebody else, I wouldn't be giving it the consideration it's getting."

At the same time, Sampson says he doesn't want to gamble — and that's what it amounts to unless the Lakers are assured the No.1 pick.

"We don't know what he'll do," admits Holland, who has served as an intermediary between Sampson and pro teams in the past. Other than that, Holland has kept a low profile and declined to discuss Sampson's decision.

"He's staying. Don't ask me how I know because I don't know. It's just a feeling," says Virginia Tech Coach Charlie Moir, who tried to recruit Sampson out of Harrisonburg High School three years ago.

Doug Elgin, the sports information director at Virginia who has to deal with the situation each year, says "it's too close to call."

"It's really difficult to read Ralph," Elgin says. "He hasn't hibernated, but he has stayed away from the media pressure."

Sampson himself says the media pressure "hasn't been nearly as bad as last year," although it could pick up this week.

"He's giving no clues to anyone. It's just a matter of him putting the pressure on himself, sitting down and making the decision based on the facts he has in hand," says Elgin.

"In my heart, I feel he wants to graduate. He's on schedule. He knows he'll be living on The Lawn. I think that has an awful lot of meaning to Ralph."

The Lawn consists of single rooms on the school's original campus. It is reserved for about 50 outstanding seniors.

Elgin says the situation this year "has been easier in that there have been no developments, (but) it may be a little unfair to Ralph in that he cannot determine his value."

While Sampson has been playing softball, dating and otherwise enjoying life until he has to make his decision, the annual ritual is keeping everybody in Charlottesville buzzing.

"It's a very popular topic of conversation. I hear everybody talking about it all over town. It's a big deal for people who follow UVA basketball," Elgin says.

One of those people is Ralph Lee Sampson. At age 21, it could be the biggest deal of life.

Lakers Watch High Scorers

LOS ANGELES (AP)—The eyes of the Los Angeles Lakers will be on San Antonio's high-scoring duo of George Gervin and Mike Mitchell as they enter the second game of the Western Conference championship series tonight.

Los Angeles holds a 1-0 lead in the best-of-seven series after taking a 128-117 decision over the Spurs on Sunday in the National Basketball Association playoffs.

"Gervin and Mitchell are gonna get theirs" as far as points, Laker Coach Pat Riley said.

But, he added, "It's important for us to contain the guys that live off of them."

The Lakers couldn't completely contain the Gervin and Mitchell on Sunday, as the two combined to score 59 points. Los Angeles did hold Gervin to eight in the first half and Mitchell to nine in the second, but Gervin finished with 34 and Mitchell with 25.

Los Angeles center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar adds, however, that the Lakers have more to worry about as the Game 2 approaches.

"San Antonio is a very physical team and can score any time they like. If we don't get a good defensive effort from the team, we won't win the series," the 7-foot-2 veteran said.

After whipping Phoenix four straight, the Lakers had some rest time while San Antonio measured Seattle four games to one.

"I feel the layoff really did help us," Riley said. "The first win was important for momentum. We have to win at home to keep our home court advantage. It's going to be an interesting series."

Los Angeles also received a first-round bye, making this series the second time in the championships that the Lakers had a break while their opponents continued to play.

The winner plays in the finals against the victor of the Boston-Philadelphia series. Boston holds a 1-0 advantage.

after a 121-81 victory on Sunday.

Abdul-Jabbar scored 32 points for the Lakers in Game 1, but the surprise came from Bob McAdoo. He came off the bench to score 21 and contribute good defense, a part of the game for which he is not noted.

"Our inability to contain McAdoo coming off the bench really hurt us," said Spurs' Coach Stan Albeck. "If we're going to do anything in the series, we will have to find an answer to him."

Albeck said he didn't know the answer, but added, "We will find one. We just have to work harder. McAdoo was shooting with rhythm. When we first played here and he was new, I think he lacked some confidence. I think that time has passed."

Jr. High Results

Chicod and Wellcome split a pair of junior high school games yesterday.

Chicod won the boys' baseball game, 13-2 behind the pitching of Randy Mills, who got the win, and Mike Mills, who received a save.

Mike Elks led the Chicod hitting with four, driving in six runs. Shane Adams and Benji Beacham each had three hits for Chicod. Wellcome's hitting was led by H. Rountree with two.

Chicod is now 10-1 on the season.

In the girls' softball game, Wellcome took an 8-7 victory. No further details were available.

Decision Time

Virginia's Ralph Sampson, shown in action this past season, must decide soon if he is going to stay in college or leave to join the pros. The 21-year-old, 7-foot-4 basketball star has been in the same spot before. Last year, he decided against joining the pros, but hasn't announced his decision this year. The deadline is Saturday. (AP Laserphoto)

Celtics Expect To See Different Philly Team

BOSTON (AP)—How badly did the Boston Celtics beat the Philadelphia 76ers in the opener of their National Basketball Association semifinal playoff?

The 40-point bulge in Sunday's 121-81 romp was eight more than the total margin of the Celtics' seven previous victories over the 76ers.

There was still 3:11 left in the third quarter when Gerald Henderson's layup gave Boston its 82nd and 83rd points, more than Philadelphia would get in the full 48 minutes.

The 76ers made only five of 27 field goals in the third quarter and 26.5 percent of their attempts in the second half.

How will Philadelphia do in Wednesday night's second game of the best-of-seven series?

"I guarantee you, you'll see a different Philly team," said Boston backup center Rick Robey.

Players from both teams agreed that the blowout would have no psychological effect in the second game, but they said the 76ers would have to make some changes.

"We might have to give up some things in this series, like making sure we keep a man back for their fastbreaks and also helping out more on defense," said Philadelphia's Bobby Jones, who went scoreless in 21 minutes in the opener.

"We went into this (first) game and our strategy was to box out our own men, but it wasn't effective. They were getting offensive rebounds and second shots."

The Celtics had a season-high total of 67 rebounds, including 25 off the offensive boards. Philadelphia's big men, Caldwell Jones and Darryl Dawkins, were handcuffed by foul trouble.

Boston held a 42-27 edge in defensive rebounds, in part because the 76ers' errant outside shooting enabled the Celtics to congregate around Philadelphia's basket.

"They're going to need somebody other than (Andrew) Toney hitting from the outside to make us play outside more," said Celtic forward Cedric Maxwell.

Boston won a physical, slow-paced series against Washington last Wednesday, while Philadelphia didn't finish its series with Milwaukee until Friday. Henderson said the 76ers may have been tired.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip: ODOROUS OLD SKUNK RENDERED DRESS USELESS.
Today's Cryptoquip clue: R equals G

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Tony Award Nominations Announced

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — As expected, Britain's "The Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby" and two American musicals, "Nine" and "Dreamgirls," dominate this season's Tony award nominations.

And two actors from the same family — Christopher Plummer and his daughter, Amanda — are believed to be the first father-daughter duo nominated for Broadway's top honor, the Tony, in the same season.

The 1981-82 nominations, were announced Monday by a panel picked by the League of New York Theatres and Producers. Ten musicals and 23 plays were eligible for consideration, with the show "Nine" just making the deadline. It opened Sunday, the last day of eligibility.

Plummer was nominated in the best actor, play, category for his flamboyant Iago in "Othello," while his daughter was nominated twice, as best actress in "A Taste of Honey" and best supporting actress in "Agnes of God."

"Dreamgirls," the new Michael Bennett musical about a trio of black pop singers, got the most nominations of any musical, 13 — one more than "Nine," which was based on Federico Fellini's surreal film about a disturbed director, "8½."

The Royal Shakespeare Company production of "Nicholas Nickleby," which played a 12-week, $100-a-seat run and was favored to lead in the nominations for a play, received eight — the most for any play.

More than 600 theater professionals and journalists will vote for Broadway's best, the result to be announced June 6 during the 36th annual Tony awards show being televised by CBS.

The nominating panel had to make four choices in each of 19 categories. In one case, in the category of supporting actress in a musical, the panel gave the nod to three of the 21 women in "Nine."

They are Karen Akers, Lillian Montevecchi and Anita Morris, with Laurie Beechman of "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" the fourth contender.

There was one mild surprise. David Alan Grier, who made his Broadway debut as Jackie Robinson in "The First," a short-lived, critically roasted musical about the late ballplayer, was nominated as a supporting player, not a lead.

A league spokesman said this was because he wasn't billed as the show's star. For that matter, he said, no one was Grier's contenders in the category of supporting actor in a musical are Obba Babatundé and Cleavant Derricks of "Dreamgirls" and Bill Hutton "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."

The last two shows were nominated as best musical, along with "Nine" and "Pump Boys and Dinettes," a country music revue.

Best-play nominations went to "Nicholas Nickleby"; "Crimes of the Heart," Beth Henley's Pulitzer-winning comedy; "The Dresser" by Britain's Ronald Harwood, and "Master Harold ... and the boys" by South Africa's Athol Fugard.

In addition to Plummer, nominations in the best actor in a play category went to Tom Courtenay of "The Dresser"; Roger Rees in the title role of "Nicholas Nickleby," and Milo O'Shea as a comfort-loving priest in the two-character "Mass Appeal."

In the best actress in a play category, nominations went to Katharine Hepburn, an Oscar-winner for "On Golden Pond," for "The West Side Waltz"; to Miss Plummer for "A Taste of Honey"; to Zoe Caldwell for her "Medea"; and Geraldine Fitzgerald for "Agnes of God."

Best-actor in a musical nominations: Raul Julia in "Nine"; Ben Harney in "Dreamgirls"; Victor Garber in "Little Me"; and Herschel Bernardi in a revival of "Fiddler on the Roof."

Best-actress in musical nominations: Jennifer Holliday and Sheryl Lee Ralph, "Dreamgirls"; Mary Gordon Murray, "Little Me"; and Lisa Mordente in "Marlowe."

Nominations for best director of a play went to Trevor Nunn and John Caird, "Nicholas Nickleby"; Melvin Bernhardt, "Crimes of the Heart"; Athol Fugard, "Master Harold ... and the boys"; and Geraldine Fitzgerald, "Agnes of God."

The four nominated for best director of a musical were Tommy Tune, "Nine";

Michael Bennett, "Dreamgirls"; Tony Tanner, "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat"; and Martin Charnin, "The First."

The awards, established in 1947, are named for the late Antoinette Perry, secretary of the American Theatre Wing during World War II.

Iacocca's Style Is Imitated

DETROIT (AP) — If imitation is flattery, then Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee A. Iacocca might be forgiven if he blushes.

His straightforward, no-nonsense style in national television ads for his company's cars is being copied in local radio ads by a fur company, Wrubel & Kozin Furs Inc. of suburban Birmingham.

Iacocca says: "Me? I'm in the car business." Harvey Wish, owner of Wrubel & Kozin, declares: "Me? I'm in the fur business."

Asked why he copied Iacocca, Wish said "it's a strong ad. It's excellent. It's so good we sold a couple (Chrysler) LeBarons along with some furs," he quipped.

A Chrysler spokesman said he hadn't heard about the ads and was not aware that Iacocca might be starting an advertising trend.

Protest Loss Of 'Lou Grant'

By LAURINDA KEYS
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — A protest against the cancellation of the CBS television show "Lou Grant" turned into a shouting match between supporters of actor Ed Asner and demonstrators who backed U.S. involvement in El Salvador.

John Ichinaga, one of about 200 demonstrators picketing CBS studios Monday night, chanted "Stop the blacklisting. Save 'Lou Grant.'"

Asner supporters carried signs saying they were protesting the CBS decision to drop the TV series after ratings dropped sharply. In the drama, Asner portrayed the city editor of a Los Angeles newspaper.

The protesters, who marched at the busy corner of Fairfax Avenue and Beverly Boulevard, contended the cancellation was prompted by Asner's support of guerrillas battling the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador. CBS denied the accusation in a statement last week.

Five men stood on the opposite street corner with a huge sign quoting Bible verses. One man, using a megaphone, shouted across to the 'Lou Grant' demonstrators, "... America should be in El Salvador to fight the communists. You say you want free speech; there's no free speech under communism."

Asked if CBS had a right to cancel the show, Linda Ballentina of the American Civil Liberties Union said, "Not when it's based on political motivation."

Asner, who was elected president of the Screen Actors Guild last year, has feuded publicly with actor Charlton Heston and other conservative members of the guild over what Heston termed inappropriate politicization of the union.

Asner conceded a drop in "Lou Grant" ratings, but blamed it on lack of promotion, pre-emptions by other programming, positioning against specials and Monday night football games, and a drift by viewers to cable TV.

Construction Begins On Microelectronic Center

And Now Abigail Admits Rerunning Old Letters

CHEROKEE, Iowa (AP) — A group of Mother's Day letters appearing in the "Dear Abby" newspaper feature tripped up Abigail Van Buren one week after her twin sister, Ann Landers, admitted rerunning old letters in her advice column, it was reported today.

In a copyright story, the Cherokee Daily Times said letters to Miss Van Buren praising an unwed mother for putting her child up for adoption and inquiring about the significance of a single carnation on Mother's Day were reprints.

A check of the newspaper's records found the letters had been used previously — one on May 12, 1979, and one on May 7, 1977.

Additionally, The Arizona Republic reported today that a reader, Sara Baird of Phoenix, Ariz., had recognized the letter about the unwed mother as one she had read before in Miss Van Buren's column.

The Daily Times said today that Miss Van Buren had issued a statement through Universal Press Syndicate acknowledging the reprints and promising that "henceforth every reprint will be labeled."

An investigation by the Pontiac (Ill.) Daily Leader and The Associated Press found that Miss Landers had been recycling 15-year-old letters and answers in nearly identical language over the last 18 months without telling readers or newspapers who subscribe to her column. Miss Landers acknowledged the recycled letters and promised to label reprinted portions of columns.

Efforts to reach Miss Van Buren by telephone in Beverly Hills, Calif., Monday were unsuccessful.

Lee Salem, editorial

director of the Universal Press Syndicate, said, "All the information isn't in. I'm sure there will be further discussions between (Miss Van Buren) and the syndicate."

A syndicate spokesman, who asked not to be identified, told the Daily Times Monday that officials had not been aware that Miss Van Buren was reprinting items without labeling them as such.

"I've made an effort to label reprints except for special holiday columns or subjects ... I didn't think some of the reprints on the special subjects needed labeling," Miss Van Buren said in her statement.

Of the 394 most recent letters published or received by the newspaper, 10 were labeled as reprints, the newspaper said.

When asked last week if Miss Van Buren ever used recycled material, her secretary, Katie Beal, quoted her as saying that if she reruns an item "it is clearly labeled as such."

Miss Van Buren and Miss Landers were born in Sioux City, Iowa, on July 4, 1918, and graduated from high school there. Miss Van Buren, whose real name is Pauline Esther Phillips, has been writing the "Dear Abby" column since Jan. 9, 1956. Miss Landers — Esther Pauline Lederer — has written her column since 1955.

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Construction of the Microelectronics Center of North Carolina started only last week, but already participating universities are united by a central computer and new industry is being drawn to the state.

Construction on the $24 million center began May 7, although the official groundbreaking ceremonies will be performed by Gov. Jim Hunt on Thursday, said W. Holt Anderson, director of the center's administrative services.

But organizers have been far from idle since plans for the facility were announced by Hunt in 1980. Courses in microelectronics have been offered for the past two years at North Carolina State University in Raleigh, and participating schools are hooked into a new computer at Research Triangle Institute in Research Triangle Park, Anderson said Monday.

"An interim facility at N.C. State should give us chip fabrication ability sometime this fall," he added.

Computer chips, fingernail-sized components that perform work once requiring several hundred thousand transistors, are the lifeblood of the microelectronics industry. N.C. State, Duke University, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, North Carolina A&T State University and the University of North Carolina at Charlotte are training potential employees for the microelectronics industry.

"Our goal is to increase the knowledge and resources available within the state for microelectronics education and research," Anderson said. "Through that we hope to achieve the goal of making North Carolina a national center for microelectronics."

Some 1,000 microelectronics firms located in the 25-mile Silicon Valley, Calif., have overburdened available housing, transportation and waste-handling facilities there. They are among the companies targeted by North Carolina.

Thus far, Anderson said North Carolina's efforts have been successful in wooing companies.

Earlier this year, General Electric Corp. announced it would construct the headquarters for its semiconductor division at Research Triangle Park, said Steve Meehan, assistant secretary of commerce.

"They could have selected other locations," he said. "In fact, they do other semiconductor work in other parts of the country. But the state's commitment to microelectronics had an impact."

The expansion of Analog Devices of Massachusetts at its Greensboro site and the relocation of Verbatim Corp. from Silicon Valley to Charlotte also were related to the center, Meehan said. But he emphasized that companies in fields other than microtechnology were also being attracted.

"Firetrol (a maker of electrical motors) announced earlier this year plans to build a plant in Cary," he said. "The center is a sign that this state will produce top-quality people in various fields of high technology."

"For a facility we haven't even broken ground on and that wasn't even funded by the General Assembly until July of last year, we feel that's a pretty good record," Meehan said. "It hasn't been that long that the word has gotten out nationally that North Carolina has become heavily involved in the microelectronics field."
