QUIETNESS ON THE CHICOD ... A swirl from a jumping fish breaks the quietness of lower Chicod Creek, near Grimesland, next to a recently rebuilt herring pier. Once Volatile, The Chicod Is Now Quiet

GRIMESLAND — On the lower end of Chicod Creek, nameless fishermen have refashioned herring piers abandoned long ago. The piers reach out into the seemingly still, dark water and bear scars of recent catches.

Toward the channel of the stream, a fish makes a silent circle without breaking the surface and on the bank a small brown snake pops into the water.

"It's hard to believe that anyplace this peaceful could create such an uproar," said Albert Coffey, district soil conservationist in Pitt County. "It sure got a lot of people riled up, though, at one point."

Generate controversy it did, pitting environmentalists against conservationists, fishermen against farmers, for nearly 10 years until a solution arrived that affected not only Pitt County but the nation.

Early in the 1960s farmers in the Chicod Creek watershed asked for help from the U.S. government with drainage problems. A plan calling for 66 miles of stream channel excavation, the use of bulldozers and draglines to carve a meandering, natural stream bed into a deeper and straighter ditch for more efficient drainage, was prepared by the Soil Conservation Service.

In November 1971, 20 days after the SCS asked for bids on the project, a lawsuit was filed in federal court by a group of five local and national organizations who feared the results of channelization on fish and wildlife populations and water quality of the wetlands in the watershed.

The groups — Natural Resources Defense Council, the North Carolina Wildlife Federation, the National Wildlife Federation, Friends of the Earth and the Pamlico-Tar Conservation Coalition — claimed channelization would increase sediment in the water, decreasing fish populations and reducing recreational desirability of the stream.

The environmentalists alleged that the project would violate the Watershed and Flood Prevention Act, the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, the River and Harbor Appropriations Act of 1899 and various SCS rules and regulations.

After a five-year lawsuit heralded as a landmark case in the United States, the courts ruled in favor of the environmentalists and a settlement was reached that substituted clearing

British Stage Ground Raid In Falklands

By The Associated Press

Helicopter-borne British commandos blew up as many as 11 Argentine planes and a big ammunition dump in their first ground assault on the Falkland Islands, British officials said Saturday.

Argentina issued a communique saying three planes were damaged when a British warship shelled a recently constructed airfield, but made no mention of a commando raid or an ammunition dump.

Diplomatic efforts aimed at resolving the Falklands crisis continued, with Argentina reporting "some optimism" and Britain's ambassadors to the United Nations and Washington briefing the government in London on the latest round of U.N.-sponsored peace talks.

The Defense Ministry in London said commandos raided the airstrip on Pebble Island just north of West Falkland Island Friday night, and laid explosive charges that destroyed "a number of aircraft on the ground and a large ammunition dump." Ministry sources said the destroyed planes included Pucara ground-attack aircraft.

While British warships pounded the shore, the raiders returned to the Falklands armada at dawn, suffering "two minor casualties" and leaving an undetermined number of Argentine wounded, British officials said.

The ministry described the raid as a "limited military action" designed to enforce the British air and sea blockade around the islands where an estimated 9,000 Argentine troops dug in following Argentina's seizure of the archipelago from Britain April 2.

It was the first ground assault Britain acknowledged making on the Falklands. British forces landed on the Falklands dependency of South Georgia Island and retook it April 25-26. The Argentines had occupied South Georgia April 3.

Argentina did not mention casualties in its communique and a spokesman would not say what kind of planes were damaged. The communique said the airstrip was near Elephant Seal Bay, which is on Pebble Island, but referred to the island as Puerto Calderon. The Argentines, who call the islands the Malvinas, have renamed many spots on the Falklands.

An Argentine military spokesman said the airstrip "is one of those recentlyconstructed" by Argentine forces but would not say how many strips had been built since the invasion.

British Harrier jets attacked the airstrip at the Falklands capital of Stanley, 65 miles southeast of Pebble Island, Friday. Argentina said anti-aircraft gunners repelled the attack.

The Argentine military also reported Friday night that 20 crewmen were dead, 301 missing and 770 rescued from the General Belgrano, the cruiser torpedoed and sunk by a British submarine May 2 in icy waters near the tip of the South American continent. The announcement put the total number of Argentines acknowledged dead or missing in the fighting at about 400. The British list 23 dead, 20 of

New Chancellor Says ECU Will Move Ahead Harmoniously

Howell: 'I Know The People... How They Work'

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

In his 25 years at East Carolina University, Dr. John Howell has been a political science professor, a department chairman, dean of the college of arts and sciences, dean of the graduate school and provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs.

He is now chancellor of the third largest university in the state, elected by the University of North Carolina Board of Governors last week to fill the vacancy resulting from the resignation of Chancellor Thomas Brewer last year.

Howell, who has been acting chancellor since January, said he forsees no major changes in the operations of the university.

Since appointed acting chancellor by UNC President William Friday, Howell has been out meeting the public, suggesting his feeling that a chancellor needs to get out and bolster the university's relations with the external community.

"I've spent more time with external relations than I have with internal matters," the new chancellor said several weeks ago. And again, after his election as chancellor, Howell pointed out, "I don't have to spend as much time with internal matters. I know the people ... know how they work."

The school's vice chancellors make many of the decisions and many others are made further "down the line," Howell explained.

"A university is entirely too diverse for any one person to be in control. It's a matter of setting an atmosphere. We're going to move ahead harmoniously."

According to Howell, "One thing that I've been trying to establish in a few places, especially with alumni groups, is that the direction the university will take in the future will depend much on the initatives of the faculty and the administration below the chancellor. It's not a personal fiefdom" for the administrative head of the university.

In the past, when East Carolina was expanding, Howell explained, "Many ideas were generated by the president or chancellor, or people brought ideas to him and he pushed them forward almost as his own. This sort of leadership has developed the breadth of the university and the range of programs ... take an idea from somebody and get the immediate staff to push it. But most of that sort of work has been finished."

Howell noted, "I don't have a list. I've been involved with the operation of the university for a long time and a lot of my pet projects are already in place. So what I'm saying, generally, is we're at a level of sophistication now where the new ideas are going to come to improve and adapt these programs to changing situations."

Medicine Man Paved Way For Modern Medicines

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Modern medicine in the Western world, especially in America, is based to a great degree on herbs and medicines long used by American Indians, according to Dr. Lionel H. deMontigny.

"Seventy percent of medicine used in America today is derived from herbs and other sources long associated with Indian medicine. Another important contribution from Indian medicine is the use of plaster casts," Dr. deMontigny said during a visit to Greenville.

A native of North Dakota and a member of the Ojibway Indian tribe, Dr. deMontigny is an assistant surgeon general of the United States. His visit to Greenville was sponsored jointly by the philosophy and family medicine departments of East Carolina University. He gave a lecture Thursday at Pitt County Memorial Hospital on "The Indian Medicine Men, Then and Now."

Concepts and approaches to medical treatment in Western civilization and in traditional Indian medicine entail basic differences, too, he said.

"In Western medical practices, until recent years at least, the emphasis has been largely on symptomatic care in most instances. An example that comes to mind is treatment of an ulcer, how to treat it once it already exists, which sometimes involves surgery," deMontigny said.

"The Indian medicine man's approach is different. His method has always been to try to find out what is out of kilter with the suffering individual, what it might be in his work, his lifestyle, that leads up to this condition."

DeMontigny pointed out that, despite basic differences in approaches, "Those who practice Indian medicine do rely in many instances on Western techinques in efforts to cure sick persons. We take from the West just as they have taken certain things from us.

"Indian medicine is perhaps a misnomer," he commented. "Our tradition of medicine and medical treatment is inseparable from the total environment of our lives — physical, spiritual, communal."

This encompassing viewpoint in dealing with illness, deMontigny says, has in recent years come more to the forefront in Western medicine. "Now, the big push is in preventive medicine, in searching for ways to make our total environment more healthful, in understanding the causes behind many illnesses.

"What I feel is most fortunate is that in our society we have access to both the Western and the traditional native American practices and viewpoints. It makes a good combination."

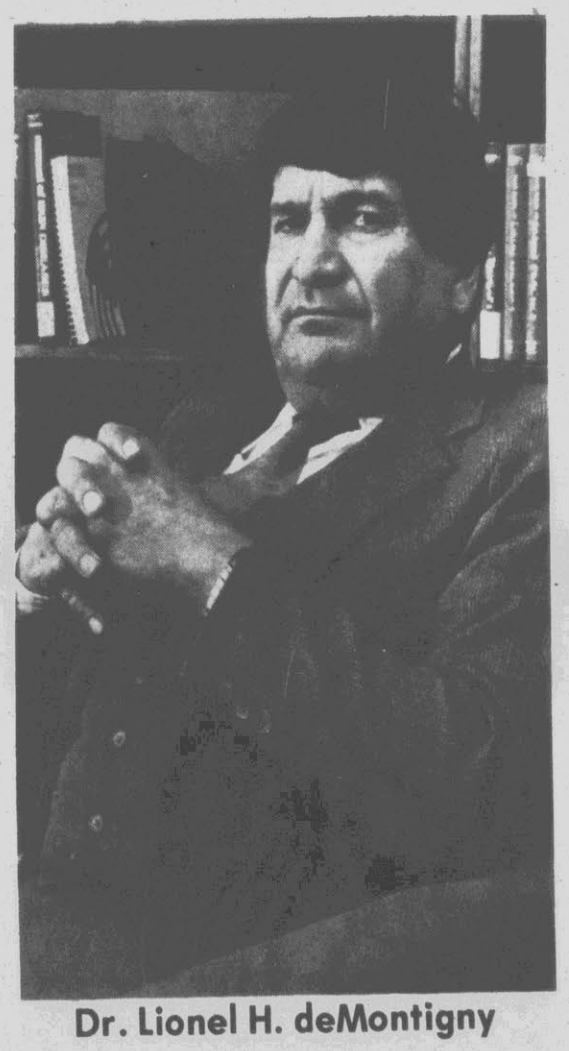

DeMontigny observed that he had expected to be faced, "in your community here," with questions about the harm or lack of harm in smoking tobacco. A light smoker himself (cigars), he said his opinion is that "excessive smoking, like excessive alcohol or excessive eating, is harmful. Undeniably, over a period of years it does real damage to the human body.

"I don't think that stronger warnings on tobacco products, or denial of advertising rights, is the answer. Teaching the harmful effects of excessive indulgence of anything is, I feel, a role for the family, the community to take."

DeMontigny, whose name is derived from the period in the 1700s when French frontiersmen and trappers covered the land that is now the Dakotas, was named an assistant surgeon general in 1977, the first American Indian to hold that position. He was born in 1935 on the Turtle Mountain Indian Reservation in North Dakota and spent his early life on the reservation.

The common language spoken was that of the tribal group. His father, however,

Rose Graduation Plan To Be Set Monday

Howard Hurt, principal of J.H. Rose High School, confirmed Saturday that a tentative plan has been worked out for a graduation site for Rose High students.

Hurt said the proposed plan will be presented to members of the Greenville Board of Education Monday night for consideration. At that time, according to Hurt, full details of the plan will be made public by city school Superintendent Delma Blinson.

Although he declined to verify whether the proposed site will be on the East Carolina University campus, Hurt acknowledged that he and other staff members from Rose High had met Thursday afternoon with officials at ECU.

For a number of years the annual Rose High graduation ceremony has been held at Ficklen Stadium on the ECU campus. Several weeks ago, ECU officials informed city school officials that the site would not be available for the June 8 graduation this year due to reseeding work on the football field.

Since that time, school board members and school staff personnel have been attempting to find a suitable alternative site, one that would not require a considerable outlay of funds.

Haig and Papandreau End Talks

ATHENS, Greece (UPI) — Secretary of State Alexander Haig Saturday pronounced his talks with Greece's Socialist leader "extremely constuctive," but Premier Andreas Papandreou summed them up with a blunt "No problem was solved."

Haig, the first American official to visit Greece since the restoration of democracy in 1974, arrived earlier Saturday from Ankara, Turkey, where he held two days of talks with government officials.

Police clamped heavy security on Athens airport as Haig arrived for a two-day stay in the Greek capital. The Greek Communist Party Friday staged protests against Haig's visit, plastering city streets with posters depicting the him as the "General of Death."

Papandreou conferred with Haig for 3½ hours, then told reporters, "I would like to make it clear that no problem was solved."

In separate briefings with reporters, neither Papandreou nor Haig offered details on the delicate status of lease renewals on four American bases in Greece or Athen's concern about the U.S.-financed modernization of Turkey's armed forces.

Haig, however, was more charitable than his host in assessing the first round of talks on U.S.-Greek relations.

"The discussions were extremely cordial, constructive and far-ranging," he said. "My own personal assessment is that we made progress on all key substantive topics that involved U.S.-Greek relations.

"Thus far,it has been a very productive visit."

In his election campaign last year, Papandreou suggested the four NATO bases be closed and Greece loosen its ties with the alliance. But the issue has cooled since he assumed office and Haig indicated it was not a major topic of the early discussions.

Papandreou's government has called for a guarantee by NATO that Greece's territorial sovereignty will be honored by alliance members — a clear reference to Turkey. Haig played down the issue.

"I didn't expect it to be a big issue here and I still don't," he said. "It is not a big issue. I do not mean to suggest by that it is solved."

In his statement, Papandreou said he hoped further discussions with Haig would lead to "a solution that will guarantee the territorial integrity of our country."

Turner Networks Report Heavy Quarterly Losses

ATLANTA (AP) — Turner Broadcasting System Inc. lost $5.3 million during the first quarter of 1982 due to high interest rates and the start-up cost of its second news service, CNN2, the company announced.

Chairman Ted Turner on Friday also revised an earlier prediction that the company's first news service, Cable News Network, would break even in the second quarter.

Broadcasting system losses for the first quarter were 26 cents per share on revenues of $24.6 million, compared with a net loss of $6.4 million, or 31 cents per share, on revenues of $13.7 million in the same quarter in 1981.

The broadcasting system continues to lose money, and advertising revenues for CNN are "sufficiently below forecasted levels," Turner said. But he expects CNN to become profitable "within a reasonable period of time."

Turner Broadcasting owns WTBS television in Atlanta, which is beamed by satellite to cable television systems nationwide, and CNN and CNN2, news services also beamed by satellite to cable systems. Turner also owns the Atlanta Braves, a baseball team which is drawing large crowds this season as it leads the National League's Western Division.

Industry analyst Bonnie Cook of the Robinson-Humphrey Co. Inc. said revenues from the Braves are more than making up for the slack in anticipated advertising revenue from the news service.

"They are still on target" to turn a profit this year, she said in an interview with The Atlanta Constitution.

Turner Broadcasting has suffered losses in four of the last five years, but Mrs. Cook said she believes the company will earn 55 cents a share by year's end.

Two Accidents Investigated

No injuries were reported in two Saturday collisions in Greenville.

Greenville police charged Edward Nicholson White of Bethel with driving a vehicle with improper equipment after his steering wheel apparently locked and sent his car into a guard rail on the Greene Street bridge. Officers estimated the damage at $1,500 to White's car and $300 to the guard rail.

In aother collision police said cars driven by Dennis Tyrone Walston of 507 Sedgefield Drive and Mary Hunter Tyson of 119 Holiday Court collided at the intersection of Dickinson Avenue and 14th Street.

Officers said the collison caused an estimated $1,250 damage to the Walston vehicle and about $700 to the Tyson car. No charges were made.

Actor Beaumont Dies In Munich

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Hugh Beaumont, who played the stern-faced but understanding father of Beaver Cleaver on the long-running television series "Leave It to Beaver," has died at 72 of an apparent heart attack.

Beaumont's death in Munich, West Germany, was announced Friday by his sister, Gloria Bussman, who said the Methodist minister-turned-actor was stricken Thursday night while visiting his oldest son.

Beaumont played Ward Cleaver on the series which ran from October 1957 to September 1958 on CBS and from October 1958 to September 1963 on ABC.

The series also starred Jerry Mathers as Beaver, Tony Dow as Wally Cleaver and Barbara Billingsley as their mother, June.

Mrs. Bussman said Beaumont was visiting his son Eric, 40, a college psychology professor in Munich.

"We understand it was quite sudden," she said. "By the time the doctor arrived, he was dead."

Born in Lawrence, Kan., Beaumont attended the University of Chattanooga, but transferred to the University of Southern California, where he graduated in 1946 and later received a master's degree in theology. He became a Methodist clergyman, serving before graduation at a church in a poor section of Los Angeles.

Chicod Creek ...

and snagging (removing fallen trees and other debris from the channel) for excavation in the eight-mile lower end of Chicod Creek. The settlement also stipulated that intense pre-construction and post-construction studies on fish, wildlife and water quality be done.

Construction on the project was completed in December of 1981 and the work was officially accepted by Pitt County Drainage District No. 9 early this month.

The chapter it claimed in conservation history, however, is far from over. Studies continue, and will for years, to determine how the project influenced water quality and fish and wildlife populations in the 35,100-acre watershed.

"This is the first spring run of herring since the project was completed and, based on what we've seen this year, it's approximately the same as last year," said Phil Edwards, soil and conservation biologist for North Carolina. Edwards is conducting the population study on migratory fish (herring and shad) in the creek mandated by the September 1977 court settlement. He says present information is "sketchy."

"In general herring runs altogether in the Tar River basin were declining before construction began on Chicod," he added. "We've tried to evaluate Chicod Creek in terms of this."

The comprehensive data gathering will be done five years from now, he said, in accordance with the settlement, and will be compared to the data compiled five years before construction began.

"At the beginning of the first study, we saw a steady decline in fish populations," explained the biologist. "Now if in five years we still see decreases, it will merely mean the project had little effect on the herring. On the other hand, if there is an increase, the project has actually benefited fish populations."

Sedimentation of the slow-flowing stream, one of the fears of the environmental groups opposing the project, increased dramatically during construction but is lessening since completion, according to Ed Simmons, a hydrologist with the U.S. Geological Survey who tests surface water quality on the creek.

"It's hard to believe that anyplace this peaceful could create such an uproar. It sure got a lot of people riled up, though, at one point." — Albert Coffey, district soil conservationist in Pitt County.

"The amount of suspended sediment increased three-fold when the project was under way," said Simmons, "but so far since it's completed, we've seen concentrations decrease toward more normal levels."

Changes in chemical quality of the water have also spurred concern, said Simmons. "We are looking closely at these minor increases in pesticides ... they may be seasonal," he noted. "We don't think they're serious, but we're going to keep a tight watch."

In a report filed in October 1977, Simmons noted that streams in the Chicod Creek basin were "relatively free of pesticide contaminants ... only a few samples showed measurable concentrations."

Concentrations of nitrogen, phosphorus and dissolved solids which Simmons said were "generally greater than natural background levels" in 1977 have not changed drastically, noted the hydrologist.

"The big change is in the amount of water flowing in the creek," he said. "There is more water flowing, even during dry periods. The low flows in the creek do not go dry now"

Simmons said present USGS data was "highly interpretive."

"All in all we just don't know for sure yet what changes may have occurred," said Simmons. "It's just too soon ... maybe in another year." In six months, he added, the first post-construction study on water quality at Chicod will be released to the public.

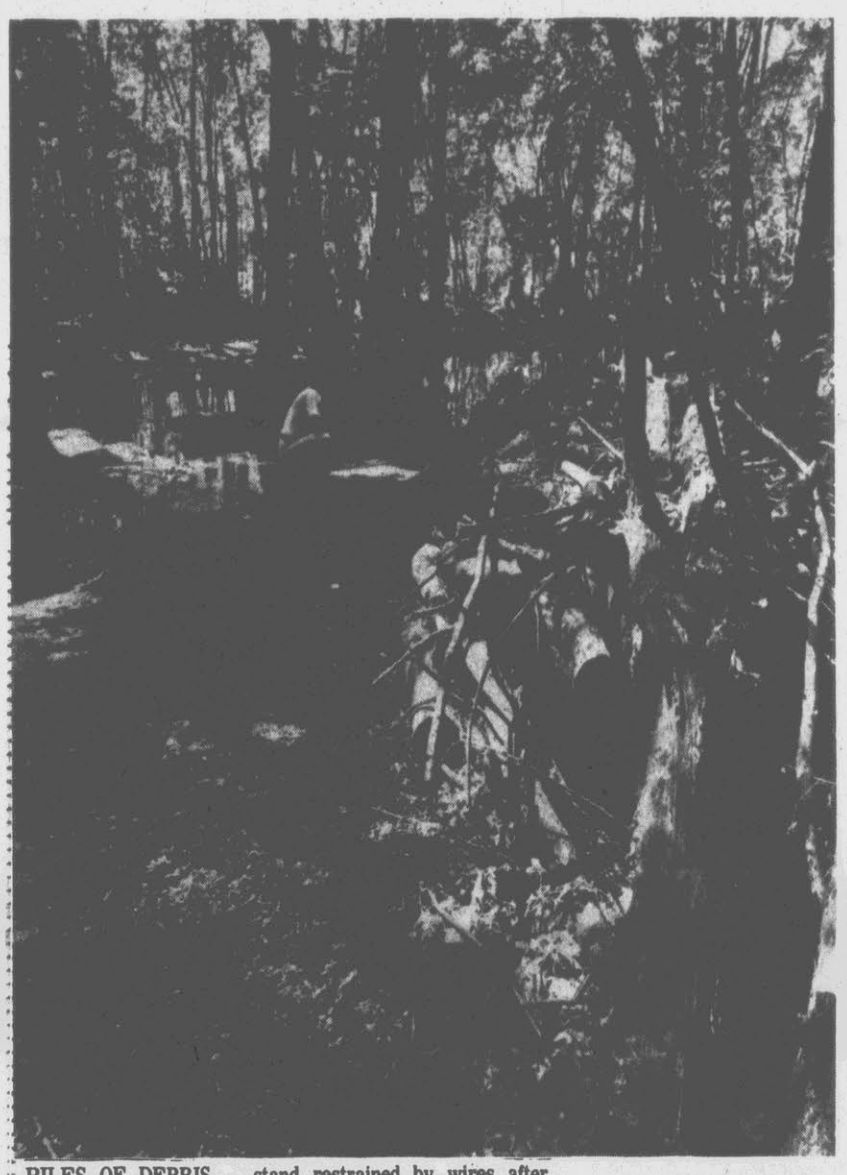

Environmentalists say they feel their purpose has been served by the project. "I think our actions were beneficial," said W.B. Carter Jr. of the Pamlico-Tar Conservation Coalition. "The project was a pork barrel to begin with but the end result was something with far-reaching environmental effects ... Yes, I think we were successful."

Farmers in the watershed are content with the project, although they wanted more channelization, says Bobby Stokes, local landowner and chairman of the drainage district.

He says he can tell a difference on his farm since the completion of the project. "Sure, it's taking off water better than it was before," he noted. "We have ditches that were completely filled but now flow."

Stokes said he was currently cultivating acres that were unusable before the project. "We had some marginal land near low areas that we're able to use now," he said.

"On the whole, we hoped to get some of the main channel done," Stokes added, "but it's low swamp anyway and we can understand why they (environmentalists) don't want all the water going down (the creek) at once ... We can live with what we've got."

Helms Renews Attacks Against 'Liberal Elites'

GROVE CITY, Pa. (UPI) — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said Saturday the uniting of the silent majority is more important than ever due to the crumbling of values brought on by "the liberal elites."

In remarks to 3,000 people at Grove City College graduation ceremonies, Helms blasted liberals, one of his long-time favorite targets since his pre-Senate days as a Raleigh, N.C., television commentator.

"In our country, the most determined and implacable proponents of this destruction are the liberal elites in the judiciary, and in the media particularly," Helms said, "who have carried on for the past three decades a ferocious assault on the fundamental institution of the family — which is, need we say, the very basis of social order."

"So the issue before us today is, simply stated, whether the government or the family should be the formative social principle in America," Helms told 536 graduates prior to being awarded an honorary doctor of laws degree.

Helms said that in the last decade Americans began to realize that "leftists and liberals" pushed radical change that destroyed people's homes, families and children. "That is why a groundswell of opposition has arisen to stop that revolution right in its tracks," he said.

Mizell May Get U.S. Job

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wilmer D. "Vinegar Bend" Mizell, former 5th District congressman and major league baseball pitcher, is in line for a job with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

Helms said the Winston-Salem, N.C., Republican may be appointed assistant secretary for government and public affairs by USDA Secretary John R. Block.

The post has remained open since early in 1981 because Block had been unwilling to choose between Mizell and Morgan Williams, a candidate backed by Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., Helms said.

In May 1981, Block considered splitting the $52,750 job into two positions, but Helms said he blocked the move because it would be a waste of taxpayers' money.

If chosen, Mizell would be responsible for lobbying on Capitol Hill for the Reagan administration's farm policies.

Mizell served three terms in Congress and is a former member of the House Agriculture Committee. He was assistant secretary of commerce for economic development in the Ford administration.

Mizell, 51, played major league baseball for nine years, ending in 1962. He played for the St. Louis Cardinals, the Pittsburgh Pirates and the New York Mets, finishing his career with a 90-88 pitching record.

Cosmonauts Begin Work In Space Lab

MOSCOW (AP) — Cosmonauts Anatoly Berezovoy and Valentin Lebedev on Saturday activated systems aboard the new orbiting Soviet space station Salyut-7, the official news agency Tass reported.

According to the report, the two cosmonauts adjusted the life support, power, temperature-regulating and radio communication systems during their first full day of work on the space laboratory.

The cosmonauts, who on Friday night docked their Soyuz T-5 spacecraft with the space station, were said by Tass to be adjusting normally to weightlessness and were described as "feeling fine." They were sent into space Thursday and were the first cosmonauts to board the space laboratory, sent up last month.

Sunday Opinion

New Directions To Be Opened

Friday the UNC Board of Governors formally approved the appointment of Dr. John Howell as chancellor of East Carolina University.

Dr. Howell had been recommended for the post by President William Friday. That followed a search by the ECU Chancellor Selection Committee and consideration by ECU's trustees which led to the submission of three recommended names to Dr. Friday.

Howell's assumption of leadership of East Carolina University will require no transitory period for him, the faculty, students or the community. He has been serving as acting chancellor since the departure of Dr. Thomas Brewer. Dr. Howell also has long years of service in many positions with the university. Until 1979 he was provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs.

To say that a period of transition will be unnecessary for Dr. Howell is not to say that there will not be considerable changes in his approach to the position. As acting chancellor, he was limited in instituting long-range programs and changes which could be binding on a new chancellor to the chosen in a few months. Now he is free to look years into the future as he makes decisions and determines directions for the university.

There is an incredible amount of work to be done. The university still has a large part of the development of its medical school to be carried out. There needs to be a strengthening of undergraduate programs and refinement of graduate studies. Ways must be found to attract still more superior students to the campus. Various services offered to the public through institutes and divisions must be studied to determine how the university can be of greatest service. The athletic program is in the verge of developing to major proportions and this must be dealt with.

We are heartily in accord with the appointment of Dr. John Howell as chancellor of East Carolina University. He is thoroughly familiar with internal and external affairs of the institution, and he has proven that he has the administrative ability to continue East Carolina's academic development and to expand its service to the people of North Carolina.

Natural Gas Use Is A Proper Move

In this time of cancellation of alternate energy projects it is most encouraging that Greenville Utilities plans to go on with the conversion of 31 vehicles to the use of compressed natural gas for fuel.

The contract was approved last week. Studies have shown that conversion of all 65 vehicles will mean a savings as high as $30,000 annually. The commission will be using a fuel it already purchases. The converted vehicles will also be fitted to use gasoline if necessary.

Recently there have been several projects canceled nationally that were designed to develop alternate fuels. We will regret it in the future. In a year's time we can have a problem as severe with gasoline supplies as we have had in the past.

We should be using this lull in problems with petroleum products to develop new energy sources.

James Gerstenzang — Help

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the bright sunshine of the spring afternoon, President Reagan's allies were painting a sunny picture about the Republican budget proposal and the work they will do for it.

They had just heard the president's pep talk. It could have been one pulled from the files of last year's budget rallies.

"The passage of the budget will be a signal that we're on a different course and that we intend to stay on that course," Reagan was said to have told them. "We need your help, all of you, all of us, working together."

But there are few signs that the president's modified spending plan, now blessed by the Republicans on the Senate Budget Committee, will attract the kind of support that was crucial to passage of his first budget a year ago.

For more than a week, the president's aides have said that Reagan is about to meet with just those Democrats — at the White House they are called "responsible" Democrats and "enlightened" Democrats — who helped push the budget through the House last year. For more than a week, the meetings never happened.

The Democrats must have been caught in traffic between Capitol Hill and the White House. On Tuesday, Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary, said that Reagan had spoken by telephone with one of them, Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas. But any contact with the so-called "Boll Weevils" from the Southern Democratic delegation in Congress was falling behind the unofficial schedule set at the White House.

Without identifying any of those Reagan was about to deal with, Speakes said "you'll recognize them from years past."

At the same time, some moderate Republicans from the Northern states were invited to the White House for a pep talk. But they told Reagan's aides that they had strong reservations about the budget plan.

Meanwhile, the House Republican leader, Robert Michel of Illinois, said Congress just would not go for a plan that would reduce the budget deficit by making changes in the Social Security System.

The Reagan budget plan, as worked out among the Senate Budget Committee Republicans, called for $40 billion in unspecified cuts in Social Security spending or tax increases through 1985.

Michel said he has told White House officials that they shouldn't expect the same kind of support from the House Republicans as they have seen in the Senate.

"Don't expect the same game that's being played over there in the Senate to be played over here," he said he told them.

Still, the president's visitors — businessmen all — said they were gearing up to apply pressure on the members of Congress.

"We'll crank up our phone banks," said Bernard J. O'Keefe, vice chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers.

That was the system that worked a year ago, when Gramm and Rep. Delbert L. Latta, R-Ohio, teamed up to produce the Gramm-Latta bill that was the vehicle for the spending side of Reagan's economic plan. The president and his aides skillfully applied pressure, through constituent groups, on any members of Congress who were reluctant to vote for the legislation.

The telephones may start ringing again at the Capitol, in a lobbying effort encouraged and blessed by the president. But this year, they may not be answered with the same readiness on the part of the conservative Democrats and some of the Republicans to vote the Reagan line.

Alvin Taylor — Sunday Morning Notes

Both Ann Landers and Dear Abby have admitted recently to recycling letters, although neither felt that they had done anything to break faith with their readers. That is probably correct. In fact the two advice givers have often rerun columns that were particularly acclaimed.

As everyone knows, television programs are rerun. Some start early after the first of the year, and by summertime we are in a jungle of programs which have been aired before.

The television reruns are almost totally not by popular demand. Nevertheless, they are with us until the new offerings of the fall.

Not too often does this column feature reruns ... can't recall anyone ever asking to see one a second time.

East Carolina University is out now, and it is a good time for us permanent residents to see what things would be like if the university weren't here.

There is clearly less traffic, less money spent and less activity.

Things will pick up some when the summer session begins, but it will be beginning of fall semester before the bustle returns to normal.

Note to the city and the utilities: Please, guys. Do the work which requires ripping up streets now — not as the traffic peaks next fall.

And Rose High at this writing has no place to hold its commencement.

Ficklen Stadium has been used in the past, but that is out this year because the field is being reseeded.

A Rose official pointed out that the reseeding is to Rose's advantage.

"It's to our benefit," Principal Howard Hurt said. Rose will use the field next fall more than the ECU Pirates since the university has only four home games.

Anyway, the Rose class of 1982 may be known as the one which had no place to graduate.

Somehow, though, that slip of paper which proclaims that a young person has completed the high school course of study will find its way into the proper hands. And that is all that counts.

Paul T. O'Connor — Main Street Program Helps Small Cities

RALEIGH — In the downtown blocks surrounding the Cleveland County Courthouse in Shelby, merchants are remodeling their stores and the old Masonic Temple is scheduled for a major renovation. The historic Washburn House is being reshaped into a medical office building and the city is conducting an inventory of historic properties. A $1 million commercial loan pool is planned and local leaders have formed the Uptown Shelby Association to try to bring boom to the area.

Shelby is one of five cities in North Carolina that were selected last year to participate in the Main Streets Program. Federal, state and private money is used to bring top-flight experts into the city but it is up to the private communities to do most of the work themselves. Salisbury, Tarboro, Washington and New Bern are the other North Carolina participants. The state is now looking for five more small cities to add to the program next year.

Under the program, the state coordinates efforts for downtown development, says Oppie Jordan, program coordinator. But the interest must already be there when a city applies. The city must agree to hire a project manager — or to assign a staff member to the project full time. There must be enough interest among local businessmen and professional workers to form private development organizations. If the city can show the state that the interest is there, the state can begin to help, she says.

The state's funding for the program is limited to Ms. Jordan's salary and expenses, to the costs of conducting seminars for the participants and the expense of bringing experts to the cities.

At the seminars, project managers learn about new tax laws that work as incentives for property restoration. They are trained in promotional techniques and in dealing with some of the problems that arise when such a problem is undertaken. It is expected that they will be able to help the private leaders deal with city government on matters like zoning of construction permits.

Individual merchants, businessmen and professionals can get design help from an architect hired through a grant from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation. Jo Ramsey will visit business sites and sketch out new storefronts with the owners. Then, using the money provided by the Reynolds Foundation, a small grant of as much as $500 can be provided to help defray the cost of remodeling.

Ms. Jordan has been searching for private developers. She says she recently showed the New Bern development area to a private developer who has agreed to undertake a major project there. In other cities, she has sought out local developers to undertake smaller projects.

In June, Ms. Jordan will be leading a conference of private bankers hoping to enlist their help in providing a pool of capital for such projects.

The secret to the program's success, Ms. Jordan says, is the limited role the goverment plays. State government is there to stir up interest. City government is there to assist with local ordinances and public services. The rest is done by community leaders. If left totally to government, the program would be a flop. Government does not have the creativity to renovate a city, she said.

"City hall just can't do it. It has got to be done in partnership because the city has a responsibility to all of its community and can't be dedicating itself solely to downtown at the expense of the shopping centers out by the bypass," she said.

Dick West — Perhaps A Little More Thievery Might Help

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Senate subcommittee has been hearing testimony about how the Soviets buy or steal American technology to enhance their own military capability.

If the Russians ever develop a modern, neurotic consumer society, they will find a rich lode for civilian expropriation, too.

Besides war-related electronics, this country has a wealth of technology that caters to the qualms and anxieties that alarm us.

The state of that art is nowhere more vividly and fetchingly displayed than in the catalogs of mail order houses that specialize in expensive gadgetry.

A good way to mirror the society we live in, as well as grasp the scope and direction of technical innovations, is to skim over some of the captions.

"A computer for losing weight."

"Now. A television that answers your doorbell."

"Stress control at your fingertips."

"Lung power. Now measured outside the hospital."

"Protect yourself against killer salt."

One relatively thin catalog I recently examined contained no fewer than six types of electronic pulse and blood pressure monitors, including a $259 exercise bike "that shows every beat of your heart."

These items, let me stress, were gleaned not from a police department or nursing home order form, but from a catalog designed to appeal to your basic, well-heeled, upwardly mobile consumer.

James J. Kilpatrick — What's In A Name? Could Be Censorship

WASHINGTON — Romeo and Juliet were having the famous balcony conversation, and Juliet asked a good question. "What's in a name?" she wanted to know. The U.S. Supreme Court is puzzling over the same inquiry. The name is "censorship." What's in it?

The high court heard argument last month on a case from Long Island that appears to present for the first time, oddly enough, an issue that must have arisen 10,000 times before: What are the limits, if any, upon the powers of a local school board over the removal of books from a school library?

This particular case arose in September 1975, when the Board of Education of Island Trees Union Free School District yielded to the hit list of a parents' organization and removed nine books from the high school library. Five students latched onto a libertarian lawyer and raised cries of "Censorship!" and "First Amendment freedoms!" A U.S. District Court threw out the students' complaint on summary judgment, but the 2nd Circuit reversed, 2-1, and sent the matter back for trial. Now the case is in the high court's lap.

It's a difficult case, both semantically and constitutionally. "Censorship," let us face it, is a dirty word. Just about everyone opposes "censorship." The noun carries all the heavy connotations of bluenosed committees, sniffing about for something they find morally, socially or politically objectionable. "Editorial judgment," on the other hand, has a nice sound. "The informed judgment of a trained librarian" is an even happier combination of words. One hears overtones in this semantic dispute from Orwell's "Animal Farm." Censorship is ba-a-ad. Librarians are goo-o-od.

In the case at hand, to quote from dissenting Judge Walter R. Mansfield in the 2nd Circuit, there was undisputed evidence that the banned books contained "indecent matter, vulgarities, profanities, explicit sexual descriptions or allusions, sexual perversions, or disparaging remarks about blacks, Jews, or Christ." Counsel for the local school board argued that the elected board members have both a right and an obligation to see that school libraries reflect local mores and do not trample upon local values.

How far does this supposed authority extend? Justice O'Connor wanted to know if a local board, composed of Democrats, could ban all books containing favorable references to Republicans. No, indeed, said the board's counsel. Justice Stevens asked if the board could remove all books that contain disparaging remarks about blacks and Jews. "Absolutely not," said the counsel. Well, then, asked several justices, what guidelines control the removal of even one book? It turned out that the local board had no guidelines.

When opposing counsel began to argue for the students' right to read, Justice Rehnquist leaped on the constitutional issue. What First Amendment right was at stake?

"The right to receive information," came the reply. "The right to read a book is clearly inherent in First Amendment analysis."

But is there a right for every high school student to read every book? Is there a right, asked Chief Justice Burger, "to a particular book in a particular place?"

"Absolutely not," said counsel.

Well, then, the court wondered, how do we constitutionally determine which books the students have a right to read, and which books the students have no right to read? Do students have a right to read Orwell's "Animal Farm," which the librarian presumably approves, but no right to read Orwell's "1984," which the board has ordered removed? In the case at hand, the board banned one book because of "bad taste." Justice Stevens wanted to know what "bad taste" means. If this is a constitutional standard, whose ideas of bad taste should prevail — the board's, the librarian's, the students' or the objecting parents'?

"These cases get us into a First Amendment quicksand," one of the attorneys remarked. And sure enough, these cases do just that. In a free country, teen-agers have a right to read anything they can get their hands on. But the notion that teen-agers have a right to read "vulgar" books in a tax-supported school library is a notion that, constitutionally speaking, must have James Madison spinning in his grave.

George Gallup

The Massachusetts senator is the top choice of Democrats of 15 persons mentioned as possible contenders in 1984. Kennedy wins the vote of 45 percent to 12 percent for former vice president Walter Mondale, 11 percent for former president Jimmy Carter, 6 percent for Gov. Jerry Brown of California and 6 percent for Sen. John Glenn of Ohio. All the others on the list receive 2 percent of the vote or less.

For observers of the political scene, the present line-up is a case of deja vu. At this point in each of the four previous presidential compaigns Sen. Kennedy either led or was in a virtual tie for the lead.

Here are the questions asked:

"Which one of these persons (respondents were handed a card with the names and titles of 15 possible nominees) would you like to see nominated as the Democratic Party's candidate for president in 1984. And who would be your second choice? And how would be your third choice?"

Here are the first choices:

Possible Democratic Nominees
(First choices of Democrats)

Edward Kennedy	45%
Walter Mondale	12
Jimmy Carter	11
Jerry Brown	6
John Glenn	6

The others on the list each receive 2 percent or less of the vote of survey respondents who classify themselves as Democrats. These are Jay Rockefeller, Pat Moynihan, Robert Strauss, Bill Bradley, Alan Cranston, John Y. Brown, Gary Hart, Reubin Askew, Ernest Hollings and Bruce Babbit.

When first, second and third choices are combined, the results are as follows:

Possible Democratic Nominees
(1st, 2nd, 3rd choices of Democrats)

Kennedy	70%
Mondale	42
Carter	36
Brown	24
Glenn	24
Rockefeller	10
Moynihan	7
Bradley	5

All others receive less than 5 percent of the vote.

The findings reported today are based on in-person interviews with 1,593 adults, 18 and older, or whom 653 are Democrats. The interviews were conducted in more than 300 scientifically-selected localities across the nation during the period April 23-26.

For results based on the sample of Democrats one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be five percentage points in either direction.

Reagan Is Mending Racial Fences

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan recently has been making a determined effort to win over blacks with dramatic personal gestures. His goal is to offset some impressions, created by budget cuts in social programs, that he is not concerned with the poor and disadvantaged.

He made a surprise visit to the College Park, Md., home of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Butler, who were harassed by a cross burning after they moved into an all-white neigborhood, received crank calls and had garbage dumped on their lawn. Reagan said he wanted to tell them that "this kind of thing doesn't happen in America."

He also upgraded the role of Melvin Bradley, his black adviser in the White House, and hired another black, Woodrow Wilkie Gunn, a former Pepsico executive, for his domestic policy staff. And in a sudden turnabout, the administration decided to support a strong extension of the Voting Rights Act.

The cuts in welfare and other benefit prorams were not the only acts that diminished Reagan's image in the eyes of blacks.

The real crunch came when Reagan, on Jan. 8, approved a Justice Department decision that would have given tax exempt status to schools that restrict black enrollment or practice racial discrimination. He was forced to retreat under a firestorm of criticism from black and white leaders.

During a quiz session with students at Providence St. Mel High School, an all-black private catholic school in Chicago, Reagan was asked to reveal the last political decision he had made "that didn't get the results you expected."

"I have a beaut I'd like to tell you about," a relaxed Reagan told the student assembly.

"I was under the impression, and maybe I was wrong. I didn't know there were any court cases pending. But I was under the impression that the problem of segregated schools had been settled — that we have desegregation."

He said that he had been getting complaints even before he became president that Internal Revenue agents were "harassing some schools even though they were desegregated ... and threatening to take away their scholarships" if they did not speed up scholarships for minority students.

"And that one went wrong," he said, "and this is the first time anyone's ever publicly asked me to try and explain what I was doing."

Presidents have a lot on their minds, to put it mildly, and sometimes their memories may be a bit faulty. But since Reagan also told the teen-agers: "Don't let me get away with it. Check me out. Don't be the sucker generation," it was thought a check might be enlightening. It was.

A check of the record showed that last Dec. 22 aides told Reagan in a memo that Rep. Trent Lott, R-Miss., had written regarding pending court cases concerning the tax exempt status of church schools. They said that the Supreme Court had agreed to review the case of Bob Jones University against the United States "and urges you to intervene in this particular case."

Reagan wrote in the margin of the memo, "I think we should."

As for no one ever asking him to publicly explain his actions in the matter, at a news conference on Jan. 19, ABC correspondent Sam Donaldson asked Reagan about the decision regarding tax exemptions "of certain schools that clearly gave aid and comfort to racial discrimination."

"My question is: What happened?" asked Donaldson.

"Sam," said Reagan, "no one put anything over on me. No, Sam, the buck stops at my desk. I'm the originator of the whole thing, and I'm not going to deny that it wasn't handled as well as it could be."

Reagan won only 15 percent of the black vote in the contest with Jimmy Carter. The high unemployment, particularly among blacks, has widened the gap. Public opinion polls indicate his remaining support is dwindling. To broaden his base of support, Reagan has embarked on a fence mending campaign and he is taking stronger stands in support of minorities.

Social Security Is Still In Politics

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said he hoped to take Social Security out of politics once and for all, but it's still there, high on the Democrats' campaign agenda.

A bipartisan study commission, created at Reagan's urging, is studying the whole system, with a report due at the end of the year. In theory, that would shelve the issue until after the 1982 congressional elections. In fact, there is no way to keep politics away from a program that taxes almost every working American and pays benefits to one citizen in seven.

And the Democrats are not about to leave it alone now that Reagan has embraced a compromise budget that is supposed to save $40 billion in Social Security costs over the next three years.

Reagan has not said how that will be done, only that current beneficiaries will get their 7.4 percent cost-of-living increase on July 1 and that "we will continue to protect the basic benefits of Social Security recipients in the future."

That assurance covers people now receiving benefits, not those who are still paying taxes into the financially troubled government retirement system. Reagan said he would make the system solvent and cut costs at the same time.

So something will have to give. "It could come from an entire restructuring of the program, actuarily looking back down toward people who are just beginning in the program," the president said.

Details were left open, while the 15-member National Commission on Social Security Reform studies the system. Reagan did say he doesn't think the commission will recommend cutting future cost-of-living increases for current beneficiaries.

"I don't think that the people who are dependent on Social Security should be frightened any more than they have been by the political demagoguery that's been going on about this issue," Reagan said Thursday. "The people who are presently dependent on Social Security must be assured that they're going to continue to get their benefits."

Reagan was having political trouble over Social Security long before he began dealing with it as a budget matter. His earliest objections, dating back 15 years, were philosophical. As a conservative Republican campaigner, he called Social Security "the flagship of the liberal cause" and said it should be made voluntary. He disavowed that view long ago, and now calls it a canard.

As Democrats raised the issue against him during two presidential campaigns, Reagan said repeatedly that no one dependent on Social Security need be concerned that he would curtail benefits, that he would restore the system to financial healtH. He never said exactly how he'd do it, but promised to put the problem before a panel of experts with instructions to find a long-term solution.

A year ago, Reagan sought to delay a cost-of-living increase and curtail some benefits for future retirees, but dropped those proposals in the face of vehement congressional opposition. Instead, he asked the Republican Senate and the Democratic House to join him in appointing the bipartisan study panel.

The Democrats eventually agreed, although they were reluctant to help Reagan find a way out of a troublesome issue. The commission is in business, and holds its third meeting today — with little more than six months until it is supposed to produce a permanent answer to Social Security problems.

That's a tall order, but even so it probably is less ambitious than Reagan's suggestion that the commission study would take the whole subject out of politics.

Within hours of Reagan's announcement that he intends to save some money on Social Security, two Democratic members of the commission accused him of breaking faith and jeopardizing the status of the panel.

Regan Can Blame His Boss For The Slight

WASHINGTON — Donald T. Regan's failure to make the May 10 cover of U.S. News & World Report is directly connected to Ronald Reagan's reluctant endorsement of a $95 billion blank check for Congress to increase taxes.

The secretary of the Treasury was not on the cover because (to his own astonishment) he finished out of the top 10 in the magazine's ninth annual "who Runs America" survey. It was no surprise to administration officials who have watched the former titan of Wall Street eclipsed by faceless White House aides in the shaping of the president.

Sanitized from outside contacts, President Reagan embraced the budget pn of Senate Republicans that confirmed the GOP's well-deserved reputation as the not-sobright party: slicing Social Security and raising taxes in an election-year recession. Don Regan, the presumed counterweight to that conventional wisdom, was out of the play at the end.

Advice to Regan from Treasury staff experts that raising taxes is no answer to high interest rates was not even passed on, much less presented to the president with. passion. The supply-siders enlisted by the Treasury 16 months ago have been supressed and might soon be gone. The Treasury has ceased to function inside the administration as an effective proponent of Reaganism.

That the president must rely on his own instincts and a few outside supply-siders to fight for his program is an irony. When budget director David Stockman's flaming meteor seemed to burn out in the Atlantic Monthly interview last November, Regan privately predicted a different future: Stockman would still crunch numbers, but Regan would make policy.

Since then, however, Regan has become the neutralized man in the Treasury. He has given way to White House chief of staff James Baker, who in turn has embraced Stockman's determination to cut defense spending and raise taxes.

Furthermore, Treasury officials have been lectured by the White House — without protective intervention from the secretary — that it is disloyal to tell the truth about the government's current cash flow. Admission of the fact that the deficit for the current fiscal year is running $13.5 billion below expectations would undercut the Stockman austerity campaign based on dolorous economic assumptions.

When Regan last year seemed the stalwart champion of a forward-thrusting economic policy, he said he was merely carrying out the president's wishes. To be a great Treasury secretary such as Andrew Mellon, a constructive one like Douglas Dillon, or even an influential one like John B. Connally, requires shaping, not just acquiesing in, a president's policy. Instead, Don Regan's passive role has contributed to Ronald Reagan's exotic transformation into a tax- increaser.

Patchwork Economy

NEW YORK (AP) — In a patchwork pattern that seems to make little logical sense, some parts of the American economy have been "indexed" to inflation while others have not.

Social Security benefits are calculated by a formula that takes inflation into account. But a private pension plan, annuity or individual retiree's nest egg may offer no similar protection.

Some groups of employees have been able to secure cost-of-living escalators in their contracts — a cushion not available to other workers, such as many owners of small businesses.

Income taxes are scheduled to be adjusted for inflation starting in 1985. But at least until then, the infamous "bracket creep" is free to continue, swelling the tax bills of many people whose real earnings have not increased.

As many homebuyers of years past found to their delight, mortgages with fixed interest rates gave the borrower a free ride where inflation was concerned. Now many mortgage lenders, badly burned, are turning to mortgages with interest rates that can be adjusted periodically.

To date, however, the biggest borrower in the country — the federal government — has still had access to loans with a fixed cost.

The Treasury sells its various interest-bearing securities to investors under stated terms, leaving them to bear the market risks afterward. Because there was no better credit risk anywhere than Uncle Sam, the investors went along.

Now, however, proposals are surfacing to permit the government to issue bonds whose value would be linked to an inflation index. If these bonds were successful, it is argued, they could help solve a lot of the current problems posed by high interest rates and big federal deficits.

For one thing, proponents say, they could sharply reduce the interest costs the government must pay on its borrowing. In a discussion of the subject, Carl Alan Batlin, economist at New York's Chase Manhattan Bank, provided this example:

Assume that investors considering buying a bond expect inflation to run at 10 percent annually over the bond's life. They would then demand 10 percent interest to compensate for this.

Since they aren't interested in loaning their money out free, they would presumably require another 3 percent or so as a return. Put the two together, and the interest rate the government must offer is about 13 percent.

But if investors are promised that the bond's value will be adjusted upward by 10 percent each year should inflation run at that rate, the interest rate could be just 3 percent.

Investors, meanwhile, would no longer have to worry about the risk of inflation running even higher than 10 percent. Take the inflation guesswork out of the game, and maybe the bond market could begin functioning more effectively. Private companies could also latch on to the indexing idea.

The suggestion has its critics, Batlin pointed out. "First," he said, "if inflation does accelerate again, issuers could face a massive refinancing problem when the principal comes due." An issuer of an indexed bond does not know, until it matures, how much it will cost to pay it off.

Batlin also acknowledged that many people object to indexing in any form as "a surrender" which only solidifies inflation's pernicious grip on the economy.

But he argued that indexed bonds sold by the Treasury would give the government a vested interest in holding inflation down. "By exposing itself to a potentially large liability if inflation is not controlled," he said, "the government expresses confidence that future inflation rates will recede.

"In fact, indexed bonds will provide the government with an incentive to actively pursue non-inflationary policies."

Whether this kind of theory would prove out in practice may be an open question. But it would be a striking irony if the bond market, which has been so severely battered by inflation, produced an innovation that helped to tame it.

Fuels

WASHINGTON — When it comes to synfuels, Exxon's interest may yet prove to be our own.

Admittedly, many Americans were surprised to hear last week that the world's largest company was closing its Colony Oil Shale Project on Colorado's western slopes. Only a few years ago Exxon's synthetic fuels venture — the most ambitious effort to convert shale rock to oil ever attempted in the J.S. — looked like a winner.

For one, Exxon was willing to put its name and capital behind the Colony project (along with a partner, Tosco Corp.). Public paranoia about oil embargoes also overrode lingering environmental and technological uncertainties about synfuels. In fact, the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp. was born out of such desperation in 1979.

Yet, more than $900 million and a half-built company town later, the harsh realities of oil gluts and interest rates have outweighed the political imperatives of synfuels. Despite what Exxon says now about the bright future of oilshale conversion, its departure has signaled to most that "synfuels" is dead for the moment.

Not surprisingly, Exxon's decision has provoked a flurry of denunciations from critics of the free market, not to mention the displaced fortune-seekers in and around Parachute, Colo. And many Americans may wonder' "If not Exxon and synfuels, what?" After all, oil and gasoline prices appear to be on their way up again.

Fortunately, the momentary demise of synfuels might prompt us to refocus our energy concerns on more cost-efficient, decentralized alternatives: solar, hydroelectric and alcohol-generated power, to name a few. These energy sources are relatively cheap, clean, renewable and dependable. The only problem is that they're out of favor with the administration.

As do many of his Democratic colleagues, House Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill Jr. faces the consequences of espousing liberal ideas and living like a Republican fat cat.

A frequent visitor to the posh Bruning Tree Country Club in nearby Chevy Chase, Md., O'Neill was recently confronted and heckled by fellow linksmen for his opposition to President Reagan's budget program.

Yet, as uncomfortable as O'Neill might feel, he deserves what he gets. Chances are that the speaker wouldn't confront such criticism on a public golf course.

According to a White House aide who coordinated the president's Illinois swing this week, Reagan's visit to a Metropolitan Chicago YMCA luncheon was more than three months in the planning. "You're going to see a lot more of these events in the future," the aide confirmed, leading us to believe that the Task Force on Private Sector Initiatives is mostly a traveling sideshow.

Blind leading the deaf? More than 8,000 children born deaf as a result of the 1963-65 rubella epidemic are reaching college age. Yet they're finding federal aid for post-secondary training for the handicapped reduced by 30 percent from last year's appropriation.

The National Technical Training Institute for the Deaf, for example, may be forced to reduce its planned enrollment next year from 1,600 to 1,200 students.

Unfortunately, without adequate training, "rubella babies" may only make a bigger contribution to the federal welfare burden.

Why do some people still talk about surviving a nuclear war? "These people"' says Dr. Howard H. Hiatt, dean of Harvard University's School of Public Health, "may not have thought about it realistically."

Writing in the Harvard Medical School Health Letter, Hiatt asks the optimists to "consider what is involved in the care of a single burned, crushed or radiated patient under ideal conditions ....

"An example I have used," writes Hiatt' "is the case of a badly burned 20-year-old boy who was treated at the Massachusetts General Hospital. In 33 days he required continuous monitoring by specially trained medical teams; 500 pints of blood and blood products; and six operations, each of several hours' duration and requiring two teams of surgeons and other skilled personnel. Despite extraordinary care, he died after 33 days. One of his doctors likened his condition to that of many Hiroshima victims. He also pointed out that care of this one patient stretched the resources of the hospital."

Liberals Call For Action Now By All Democrats

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A national coalition of liberal Democrats lashed out Saturday at what they called "wait-and-see Democrats" who are waiting for Reagan administration policies to fail rather than working now to develop alternatives.

"The Democratic Party is sitting back and waiting for Ronald Reagan's economic programs to elect us," said Marjorie Phyfe, a member of the national political staff of the International Association of Machinists. "But even Reagan's economic policies aren't going to do it for us."

About 300 members of the Democratic Agenda coalition, founded in 1975 by author Michael Harrington and other activists in labor, political, feminist and consumer organizations, met at a hotel here for one of a series of regional conferences.

The conferences are aimed at developing grass-roots support for Democratic Party programs and candidates who offer voters clear alternatives in upcoming elections, Harrington said. He described the group as being composed mainly of those from the party's left wing.

The coalition plans to push for adoption of the group's programs as party policy during the Democratic mid-term conference scheduled for June 24 in Philadelphia, said one of the conference organizers, Jim Bruni.

"We plan to build fires in terms of programs and hold candidates' feet to the fire," Harrington said. The group is pushing for legislation to eliminate corporate tax deductions, deal with plant closings, protect gains for minorities and women, slash defense spending and promote employment, he said.

"We feel very strongly that with ... '84 coming up — in so far as (mainstream) Democrats are waiting back for Ronald Reagan to self-destruct then they'll take over — that's a disastrous point of view," Harrington said.

Democrats trying to avoid the party infighting over policy have adopted the wait-and-see attitude, Ms. Phyfe charged.

"When the political system is unwilling or unable to respond to the true needs of people, movements arise outside to force change," said Andrew Maguire, a former Bergen County congressman campaigning for the New Jersey Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate.

"You have seen this with the Vietnam War, civil rights and the nuclear freeze and that is what gives me hope," Maguire added.

Among those participating in the conference was Edwin Vargas, president of the Greater Hartford Labor Council of the AFL-CIO, which represents 72 Connecticut labor union locals.

"It is very important that trade unionists move to ensure the investment workers have made in the Democratic Party does not go to waste," said Vargas. "For the Democrats to succeed in '82 and '84 (elections), they need to clearly separate themselves from the Republicans and present a clear alternative."

But, he added, "If the Democratic party rolls over like it did during the last Congressional session (on Reagan's budget), Democrats will not develop as an alternative."

Reagan Gives Armed Forces 'A Job Well Done'

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan took the occasion of Armed Forces Day on Saturday to applaud the nation's military personnel and their families "for a job well done."

In the seventh of a series of 10 radio broadcasts, the president said the nation's military forces have difficult jobs and work long hours.

"Many serve far from their homes and families, prepared, if need be, to make the ultimate sacrifice for our nation. In short, they give us their all," he said.

Reagan said he wanted to assure the armed forces that "their government and their fellow citizens are determined to provide them with the equipment, training and, just as importantly, the respect they have so richly earned."

"With their help, the United States remains at peace," he said.

In the Democratic response to Reagan's address, Rep. Parren Mitchell of Maryland complained that the president "said nothing at all" about what happens to military personnel once they leave the armed services.

"He said nothing about their retirement security, nothing about their educational opportunities," Mitchell said. "Last year the president ruthlessly slashed funds from veterans programs. Vietnam veterans already feeling ill at ease were hurt even more deeply."

Reagan, devoting his five-minute broadcast to noting the job performed by the armed forces and honoring them for doing it, never mentioned his proposed military buildup by raising defense spending 7 percent a year after inflation.

But, in his response, Mitchell said Reagan's commitment to spend $1.5 trillion on defense over the next five years "simply cannot be done."

"The military-industrial complex in this nation simply cannot absorb $1.5 trillion over the next five years," he said. "All of us want a strong defense and certainly that's important.

"But we do not want that at the cost of making the poor poorer, at the cost of frightening our senior citizens, at the cost of denying people safe and sanitary and decent housing," Mitchell said.

Klan Marches In Two States

By The Associated Press

Riot-equipped state troopers kept the peace Saturday as Ku Klux Klan members were shouted down by a crowd of 150 Klan opponents at a recruitment rally in rural Vermont, while about 100 Klan members staged a march and rally in LaGrange, Ga.

No violence was reported at either event.

Hours before the recruitment rally at Wilmington, Vt., four Klansmen, including the Connecticut Grand Dragon, were jailed in nearby Woodstock, Vt., after their early morning arrests on charges of carrying a loaded gun.

And five men were arrested at the Georgia rally on weapons charges.

At the Wilmington rally, 15 Klansmen riding in three cars and a pickup truck were escorted onto a municipal field by 10 state police cars at about 1:15 p.m., more than an hour later than scheduled.

Klan opponents, many reportedly representing communist groups, screamed: "Death to the Klan!" and "Go away!" as Klansmen tried to address the crowd with a megaphone from the back of the pickup.

"We have a right to freedom of speech," said one Klansmen, who was one of two wearing business suits. The others, including six women, were wearing long white robes with pointed hoods and flanked him as he tried to shout over the din of the protesters.

The crowd, which included people of all ages, yelled "Get out of my state!" and pressed toward the Klansmen, but there was no trouble.

About 75 state troopers in riot gear were on hand to keep order.

The Klansmen, who couldn't be heard over the shouts, were escorted off the field by state police an hour after they arrived.

Several protesters said they were disappointed that the confrontation did not turn violent.

"That's disappointing. There's nothing else that can stop them," said Kevin Whitfield of the International Committee Against Racism. "If we had made a move, it would have triggered a really violent police response. They were ready to go."

But he added, "They didn't get their message across. That's important."

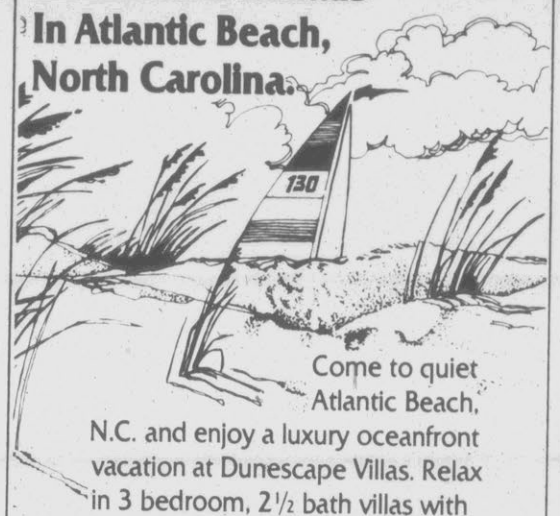

Wilmington High School's student council had voted to issue black armbands and circulate a petition opposing the KKK, and townspeople strung across Main Street a banner reading "Hate Does Not Grow Well in the Rocky Soil of Vermont."

At LaGrange, about 100 Klan members — outnumbered by state and local police and agents of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation — marched peacefully to the city hall for a rally.

The four Klansmen arrested in Vermont were held in lieu of $500 bail each after their arrest at 1:30 a.m. They were spotted tearing down anti-Klan posters, and a search of their car turned up several guns, including a loaded rifle, police said.

After Abscam, Kelly Is Bent But Not Broken

By PAT LEISNER
Associated Press Writer

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — The Abscam scandal has taken a heavy toll on former Rep. Richard A. Kelly, who has become pale, thin and unemployed. But Kelly, who has been cleared of all charges, says he is a survivor.

"I may be bent, but I'm not entirely broken," said the 57-year-old Republican conservative, who has weathered stormy battles before.

Today, Kelly is a shadow of the man the FBI videotaped stuffing $25,000 in $100 bills into his pockets in January 1980 in what undercover agents claimed was a bribe for political favors.

On Friday, a federal judge in Washington threw out Kelly's Abscam bribery conviction, calling the FBI's tactics in the case outrageous.

During the long ordeal Kelly dropped at least 50 pounds. He's pale and thin. And he's unemployed.

Since he was booted out of office amid the sweeping "sting" investigation, Kelly says he has spent his time working "for myself" as a law clerk, doing research and taking notes.

Financial problems have forced him to live "meagerly and frugally," and sell off properties. He has had bouts with depression. He's alone, recently divorced from his 29-year-old fourth wife, Judy, his former secretary.

After 18 years as a federal prosecutor and judge, then six years in Congress, Kelly says his life as a public official is over. He doubts running for public office again "would ever be a possibility."

When word came that U.S. District Judge William Bryant had overturned the verdict and erased the threat of 15 years in prison, Kelly didn't seem jubilant.

"I am really kind of a bomb around here because I'm not feeling very elated ... very happy about it," he said at a news conference in the offices of his attorney and friend, Anthony Battaglia.

It was the victory Kelly all along had predicted would come. The FBI persecuted him, he said.

"Everyone in this country believed there was a crime in progress, that there was a corrupt politician. That I was a corrupt politician and that they set a trap for me and they caught me. And none of that was true. The FBI knew I wasn't engaged in any kind of corruption ... The FBI is a world class intelligence-gathering agency that just did a super good job snookering everybody," he said.

Kelly swore he took the money from undercover agents posing as Arab sheiks as part of his own investigation. He's not bitter, and blames no one, he says. And he doesn't know what he will do now that he's been acquitted.

Graham Gets Mixed Reviews On Moscow Trip

By MARC ROSENWASSER
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — During six days in Moscow, the Rev. Billy Graham conferred with church leaders, ate caviar with Communists, spoke at a state-sanctioned anti-nuclear conference and praised what he called Soviet religious freedom.

Some clerics said the 63-year-old Southern Baptist's visit was constructive. Others said he allowed his Soviet Communist and Russian Orthodox hosts to manipulate him, and that he left Moscow with distorted views.

"I think there is a lot more freedom here than has been given the impression in the United States," the Montreat, N.C., native told reporters Thursday before departing.

All religious activity in the Soviet Union is monitored by the State Council on Religious Affairs. Believers must worship in state-registered congregations. Recruiting members for a church and holding religious classes for children are banned.

Graham, who once denounced Communists as Satan worshippers, said the visit was "one of the most memorable events of my life." He said he was ready to return for a Christian crusade "from Siberia to the Black Sea."

The Soviet government has capitalized on Graham's kind words for his hosts. He has been extensively quoted by state-run Radio Moscow, which beams broadcasts primarily at Western listeners. Coverage in the media aimed at Soviet readers, viewers and listeners was more limited, however.

"He said he had full freedom as a believer and preacher like all other believers in the Soviet Union," Radio Moscow reported Saturday.

Graham visited several of the 50 worship places that serve Moscow's 8 million residents, and found most to be jammed with faithful. He preached to a packed house of officially invited guests in the capital's only Baptist church.

Later he spoke at a Soviet-organized international conference to avert nuclear war, where he repeated his conviction that God and history would condemn religious leaders unless they worked to avert a nuclear catastrophe.

"He clearly enunciated the importance of Christian people in particular, and religious people in general, of raising the level of discussion about the nuclear disarmament question," said David W. Preus, bishop of the American Lutheran church, who also attended the conference.

Participant Arie Brouwer, general secretary of the New York-based Reformed Church in America, said Graham's presence had been "good for the believers in the Soviet Union. The believers were encouraged by the presence of a person so many of them had heard of."

But some Western diplomats privately criticized Graham for attending a conference they thought might be used to denounce the United States as a nuclear warmonger.

An American churchman who asked not to be identified said he thought Graham barely mentioned Soviet human rights questions so he would not jeopardize chances of returning to preach.

Graham said he had not sought permission to return but added that the way the government officials "are receiving me this time would indicate possibly a positive reaction" to a request to authorities from Soviet church officials. "The churches would like us to come," he said.

Graham visited six Soviet Pentecostalist refugees living under humanitarian refuge in the U.S. Embassy. But he offered them no help in their four-year struggle to emigrate.

John Howell ...

And, according to the chancellor, being responsive to new situations is becoming "ever more complicated and requires some expertise in that specific field" which a chancellor doesn't have.

The chief executive officer, Howell suggested, is the one that "tries to facilitate that sort of thing" and creates an atmosphere for improvement, as well as "assist in getting resources, travel money, research money ... equipment." The faculty and staff, he continued, "have to be the ones, first of all, to say what it is they need and the chancellor has to be the one to assist them ... set the stage for that to happen."

A university — not just East Carolina — "is a self-perpetuating thing. After a while, it reaches a certain level of maturity, then it proceeds." And Howell feels that ECU has reached that level of maturity.

About all a chancellor can do now at ECU, Howell said, is take steps to correct problems when they arise.

And, according to Howell, "It's useful for the people to regard the university in that way, in a time where presidents or chancellors move on after four or five years. If we feel the university is the chancellor, then when a chancellor moves on, we have the feeling the university goes. That's not the case. The university continues."

Howell emphasized, "it's really inefficient" for a new chancellor "to come in and redirect the university according to his personal interests. It's more efficient to let the university move ahead in its direction if it's a good direction. The chancellor should not get involved in it unless something is not working right. It's not a personal operation.

"I'm not coming in saying I have ideas to make East Carolina a good university. It is already on a course where it will be a better university every year.

"A lot of my work will be dealing with various publics that support that development."

The new chancellor feels a university is obligated to move out into the surrounding countryside and communicate with the people it serves to provide the kinds of programs that are needed.

"If a university doesn't reach out that way, it doesn't complete its function. American universities have developed to serve the needs of the community. This is an area where the chief executive officer has a much more immediate influence with what's going on than in internal matters," Howell said.

One of the main bridges the university has to the public, Howell suggests, is the alumni, which he describes as "a major constituent of the university."

Like members of the ECU Board of Trustees, Howell views alumni as "a part of the university proper — family — and at the same time, members of the community at large."

Alumni, he said "are uniquely situated to interpret the university to the outside world and to speak for it. We intend to build on that strong family tie, to help improve the image of the institution in the eyes of the external world."

ECU's reputation, both with other universities and the general public, "is of primary importance to us," Howell said. While that reputation can be improved in many ways, he suggested the "two major avenues of demonstrating high academic quality are through the activities of the faculty, and through the accomplishments of alumni.

"By research, presentations at professional meetings, publications and creative preformances the faculty can carry the reputation of the university outside, but mainly to others in the academic community.

"By their successful careers, graduates who publicly identify with East Carolina University can demonstrate to the general public the high quality of this institution.

"East Carolina University is not just the campus, the buildings, the professors and students. It is much more," Howell said.

"The future of East Carolina University is limited only by our imagination in dealing with problems and the skill and hard work that we apply to putting our solutions to problems into effect."

Pointing to the school's impact on the local community, Howell said, "I am convinced that the town and gown relationship between ECU and the Greenville area is one of the best in the country. In fact, although some on the campus may occasionally complain about the town, we all know that the town and surrounding countryside have been unusually tolerant and supportive. They have recognized that the things a university brings to a community far outweigh the irritations that come with it.

"There is no limit to what we can accomplish together."

Candle-Fed Fire Kills 10 In House

BALTIMORE (AP) — Ten people relying on candles and kerosene lamps for light died Saturday as fire swept their cramped row house hours after the electricity was shut off for non-payment of an $808 bill.

Seven victims were children, including a 7-month-old baby asleep on a sofa where investigators believe the fire began when a candle toppled over. The baby's mother was outside and saw her daughter on fire, but could do nothing to save her.

It was the worst single-dwelling fire in Baltimore history, said fire Capt. Patrick Flynn. Three people were injured, and all but one of the 13 killed or injured were believed to be related.

Charles Franklin, a Baltimore Gas & Electric Co. spokesman, confirmed that the utility shut off electricity in the home at mid-day Friday for non-payment of a $808 bill owed by Delores Williams, one of the dead.

He said the company sent termination notices to the family in March, April and May, and "apparently we had given this customer the usual winter protection policy, not to turn off service prior to April 1st."

The blaze was reported at 12:30 a.m. and was declared under control an hour later, said Fire Chief Francis Ticha.

Tunnel Cracks Halt Rail Service

BALTIMORE (AP) — An Amtrak tunnel south of the Baltimore station was closed indefinitely Saturday, causing a major bottleneck for trains from Boston to Florida, after inspectors heard ground cracking above them, an Amtrak official said.

Four houses over the tunnel appeared to be in danger of collapsing, forcing the evacuation of the occupants, a fire offical said.

"One of them is definitely going to go," said Fire Capt. George Lloyd. "It looks like it's just a matter of time."

Thousands of passengers were believed to have been affected by the tunnel closing, Amtrak officials said. All southbound trains leaving Baltimore and northbound trains leaving Washington had to be held.

Among those affected by the shutdown were Washington-area race fans who took the train to Baltimore to see the 107th running of the Preakness.

Lloyd said the problem with the houses was first reported to the fire department Saturday morning. "Someone noticed a building with a crack in it, and things kept getting worse with time," he said.

Amtrak officials were notified and rushed to the scene, leading to the discovery of cracking sounds and the closing of the tunnel within minutes.

Amtrak officials used buses to carry passengers between Baltimore and a station at Baltimore-Washington International Airport, and shuttle trains to get riders between BWI and Washington.

The 108-year-old tunnel is the main passenger train route connecting Baltimore and Washington. "Every passenger train between Washington and New York uses that tunnel," said John McLeod, Amtrak spokesman in Washington.

All Amtrak passenger service north of Baltimore is on electrified tracks, he said, and other available tracks connecting Washington and Baltimore can only accommodate diesel trains.

Heavily Guarded Pontiff Ends Trip To Portugal

OPORTO, Portugal (AP) — Sharpshooters, bulletproof glass and a locomotive checking tracks for bombs protected Pope John Paul II in Portugal's northern wine country Saturday as he ended a four-day visit marred by a rebel priest who tried to bayonet him.

After delivering a major statement on labor rights, the pontiff boarded an Air Portugal jetliner at the Oporto airport for the flight to Rome.

The Boeing 707 carrying John Paul and his 65-member delegation landed at Rome's Leonardo Da Vinci airport at 1:07 a.m. Sunday — 7:07 p.m. EDT Saturday. The pope was greeted by church officials in a brief ceremony and then flew to the Vatican in a helicopter.

"Viva o papa!" screamed a wild crowd of more than half of Oporto's 1.8 million residents as the pope rode triumphantly through streets. He later gave a speech Vatican sources called a major statement on labor rights.

Well-wishers sang hymns, brass bands played and a 10,000-member chorus sang birthday greetings in Portuguese for the pontiff, who turns 62 on Tuesday.

John Paul, wearing white vestments and his sombrero-shaped red hat, repeatedly nodded, smiled and made the sign of the cross in the largest and most enthusiastic welcome he received during his four-day visit.

A special locomotive traveled two minutes ahead of the papal train, checking the track for possible sabotage, railroad officials said. It was the first time the locomotive was used since the death of Portuguese dictator Antonio de Oliveira Salazar in 1970.

Arriving near wine cellars on the edge of the harbor where ships load port wine for the world, John Paul was driven under threatening skies to a rectangular plaza where thousands of workers spent the night awaiting him.

But mindful of the attempt on his life Wednesday at the Shrine of Fatima, authorities erected a bulletproof shield for the pope on the square, police sharpshooters were posted on nearby rooftops and a tight cordon of security guards ringed the pope.

The Rev. Juan Fernandez Krohn, the 32-year-old arch-conservative Spaniard accused of trying to kill the pope, was visited in his Lisbon cell by his parents and an unidentified priest accompanied by a lawyer, police said.

Church sources said the parents wrote a letter to the pope saying their son had no known political or religious motives to harm him.

The sources, who asked not to be identified, said the parents indicated in the letter that Fernandez Krohn might be suffering from a mental disorder.

They did not elaborate.

The Spaniard has been ordered held without bail pending trial. If convicted of attempted homicide, he could be sentenced to a prison term of 15 to 20 years.

In his speech in Oporto, the pope said materialism may be turning workers into "faceless robots" which "powerful forces" can manipulate.

"Machines now dictate their rhythm to man...and there no longer is time for anything or for anyone," the pontiff said.

John Paul said the Roman Catholic church supports workers' struggle for "social justice...and fair human rights, but never through hatred and violence." Two people were killed and 77 wounded in May Day riots in Oporto.

Earlier in the day at the university of Coimbra, John Paul told thousands of scholars and students that the world situation appears desperate, "but for humanity in the year 2000, there is clearly an exit and many reasons for hope".

The students laid their capes along the pope's route in a special gesture of reverence and army trumpeters played a victory march as the pope entered the elegant university square.

Mexican Students Free Valuable Insect Larvae

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Agriculture students demanding more money for their school released 15 million insect larvae Saturday, along with the school administrator, who had been held captive in his office for five days.

The students had held the valuable larvae at a laboratory in nearby Zaragosa since Tuesday, threatening to kill them if federal agriculture officials did not provide more money to the Hermanos Escobar agriculture school.

The students released the larvae Saturday just after midnight as a goodwill gesture. But with the release of administrator Rigoberto Delgado Perez late Saturday morning, the students lost their last trump card in their dispute with the government.

The protesters — as many as 2,000 took part at the height of the protest — said they would continue to demonstrate, but the movement was in disarray Saturday afternoon.

"The only reason they were keeping me here was so that no harm would come to the students," Delgado said Saturday. "They don't want me to be a victim any more nor another cause for repression ... It feels good to be free."

Some students said they feared the Mexican government would act against them because they had no hostages.

At 2:45 a.m. Saturday, between 500 and 800 federal police and soldiers ringed the school and towed away seven government vehicles the students had captured. No violence occurred and the troops left after 15 minutes.

The students had said they would burn the vehicles by or on Monday if government officials refused to negotiate. On Thursday, the students demolished and burned two pickup trucks.

The insect larvae are raised in the Zaragosa laboratory and released as full-grown predators that devour boll weevils, which endanger the area cotton crop. The students had threatened to disconnect a cooling system that keeps the larvae alive.

Local farmers and school alumni had asked the students not to kill the insects because it would cost farmers millions of dollars.

Soldiers armed with automatic weapons guarded the insect laboratory after the students left.

About 1,200 students met after midnight at a captured office in Juarez and decided to abandon all of the hostages and buildings they controlled, except the school itself. Reyes said the students were afraid soldiers would intervene.

The students had taken over the school, the lab and a local agriculture office Tuesday. They overran two other downtown agriculture offices Wednesday, using buses to block streets during the siege.

The students wanted the school board to get the agriculture department to provide $4.9 million in cash and farm equipment the Mexican Secretary of Agriculture had promised the school in March. The students began the protest when the money did not arrive.

French Leader Calls For Negotiated End To Falkland Dispute

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — French Premier Pierre Mauroy, addressing the Franco-British Council Saturday, urged Britain to negotiate an end to the conflict with Argentina over the Falkland Islands.

He noted France had supported Britain after Argentina seized the islands April 2, but added, "Since then, the development of the situation has been a subject of constant concern to the French government."

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who has been meeting daily with her "War Cabinet," also attended the meeting of French and British politicians, academics and businessmen and praised French President Francois Mitterrand's quick backing of Britain.

In Brussels, senior foreign ministry officials of the 10 European Common Market countries failed to decide whether to extend a ban on Argentine imports past Monday.

But Mitterrand and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt issued a statement after a two-day meeting in Hamburg reiterating their support for England and saying they expected the trade ban to continue.

Britain's U.N. envoy, Sir Anthony Parsons, and the British ambassador to Washington, Sir Nicholas Henderson, met with officials in London on the progress of U.N.-sponsored peace talks. The diplomats were recalled Friday for consultations, but Parsons said he would be back in New York on Monday.

Mauroy told the council banquet that "France, for her part, will always stand up against violations of international law."

"She will also advocate negotiations rather than the use of force," he added. "We indeed set store by a negotiated solution to this conflict."

Mrs. Thatcher, in her response, said, "The president of France understood at once the principles which were at stake: That if an aggressor succeeded in this case, no small country or territory anywhere would be safe."

France has several "overseas departments" around the world, including French Guiana in South America, the Caribbean islands of Guadaloupe and Martinique, and areas in the Antarctic.

Neither Mauroy nor Mrs. Thatcher referred to the publication by the Paris newspaper Le Figaro of a confidential note signed by French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson that talked of Britain's "conceit" and "basic, instinctive scorn for Latinos."

Cheysson said later in a television interview that France should be judged by its actions, not his words. "Our support is total," he said.

After the banquet, Mrs. Thatcher talked for an hour with Mauroy and went to her country residence at Chequers near London. She is to confer in London Monday with Mitterrand, who is touring the capitals of the 10 Common Market countries in advance of next month's economic summit at Versailles.

In the Brussels talks, officials of several Common Market delegations said Italy, Ireland and Denmark expressed reservations about renewing the trade ban, and other countries felt any such decision could only be approved by foreign ministers. Those ministers were to meet Sunday or Monday to discuss the issue, most likely in Luxembourg.

Mitterrand and Schmidt, speaking to reporters after their meeting in Schmidt's hometown of Hamburg, stressed the need for a peaceful solution.

But Mitterrand said Argentina "is trying to gain right through might" and there was no indication the Common Market had changed its mind about supporting Britain with sanctions against Argentina.

Schmidt said, "As long as the conflict lasts, we will express our solidarity with our comrade and ally Great Britain."

Argentines Say British Stalling

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Officials said Saturday that British warships shelled another Falkland Islands airstrip. They also accused Britain of stalling U.N.-sponsored peace talks by recalling their ambassadors to Washington and the United Nations.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff issued a communique saying British naval guns struck a newly constructed airfield at dawn, damaging three Argentine warplanes. The communique did not mention casualties or Britain's claims that its commandos landed Friday night on Pebble Island and blew up at least 11 warplanes and an ammunition dump.

The Argentine navy said the search for seamen from the cruiser General Belgrano, torpedoed and sunk by a British submarine May 2, "can be considered terminated" with the rescue of 770 men and the recovery of 20 bodies from the icy waters off the tip of South America.

It said 301 men were missing from the General Belgrano. Argentina has acknowledged about 400 dead or missing in the fighting over the Falklands, while Britain lists 23 dead.

On the diplomatic front, Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez said the return to London of Britain's U.N. ambassador, Sir Anthony Parsons, "demonstrates that the responsibility for the procrastination or prolongation of the negotiations certainly does not lie with Argentina, but with Britain."

But Foreign Ministry spokesman Hernan Massini Ezcurra told The Associated Press that talks in New York led by U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar "have been advancing in recent hours" and the government had "some optimism."

"Things aren't marvelous, but now there appear to be better chances of clarifying something," Massini Ezcurra said. He did not elaborate, but other government sources said Argentina might offer "new ideas" to end the conflict.

British officials said they recalled Parsons and Sir Nicholas Henderson, the ambassador to the United States, for consultations.

"These talks do not denote panic, but there will be a general expectation that when I get back to New York on Monday that things will move very rapidly one way or another," Parsons told reporters at Heathrow Airport.

The talks reportedly have been stalled by Argentina's insistence that the negotiations lead eventually to Argentine sovereignty over the Falklands, and British insistence that Argentina withdraw its troops from the islands before peace talks begin.

them in an Argentine missile attack that shattered the destroyer HMS Sheffield.

An Argentine navy spokesman said rescue efforts for the crew of the General Belgrano "can be considered terminated," adding that "the chances of finding someone alive in a lifeboat after two weeks in that zone are very slight."

Another Argentine military communique held out "little hope" for the civilian merchant ship Isla de los Estados, reported missing on a supply run to the Falklands.

Argentine military sources speculated that the ship, with a crew of between 30 and 40 aboard, may have been hit by a British missile. The British reported May 11 that a frigate fired on an unidentified tanker or supply vessel in the strait separating East and West Falkland and had seen a large explosion. Argentina did not acknowledge that report.

Meanwhile, Argentine Foreign Ministry spokesman Hernan Massini Ezcurra told The Associated Press in Buenos Aires that talks led by U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar "have been advancing in recent hours" and that the government had "some optimism."

"Things aren't marvelous, but now there appear to be better chances of clarifying something," Massini Ezcurra said. He did not elaborate, but other government sources said additional Argentine representatives could travel to New York this weekend to offer "new ideas" on a possible solution to the conflict.

Argentina's official Telam news agency said that President Gen. Leopoldo F. Galtieri told a Mexican television interviewer that Argentina "so far as possible has made its position more flexible," but will fight "to the final consequences if Britain insists on its belligerent attitude."

Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez told reporters that the return to London of Britain's U.N. ambassador, Sir Anthony Parsons, "demonstrates that the responsibility for the procrastinations or prolongation of the negotiations certainly does not lie with Argentina, but with Britain."

Parsons, arriving in London shortly after Britain's U.S. ambassador, Sir Nicholas Henderson, told reporters at Heathrow Airport that his talks with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher would be of the "greatest importance."

"These talks do not denote panic, but there will be a general expectation that when I get back to New York on Monday that things will move very rapidly one way or another," Parsons said.

British Foreign Minister Francis Pym, addressing fellow Conservative Party members in Perth, Scotland, said if the Argentines "make the wrong choice they must face the consequences." He added that Britain's aim in U.N. talks was "not compromise but to establish areas of flexibility."

The talks have been hung up Argentina's insistence that the negotiations lead eventually to Argentine sovereignty over the Falklands, and British insistence that there be no pre-conditions for a truce.

The Soviet Union — a major buyer of Argentine wheat and beef — charged Friday that Britain's blockade of the Falklands was "unlawful." The United States has backed Britain in the Falklands crisis and imposed trade sanctions against Argentina.

Nation Needs To Double It's Housing Units

By MARGARET SCHERF
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation will need 2 million new housing units per year during the decade — twice the number now being produced, according to a congressional study released Saturday.

"There were 1.1 million housing starts in 1981 and the rate so far in 1982 is the worst on record — less than 1 million units projected for the year," said Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, which released the study.

"If we continue at that pace, we would be 10 million housing units short of demand in this decade, and all because high interest rates have plunged the housing industry into a depression," Reuss said. "This will condemn millions of young American families to overcrowded, group living in the 1980s."

The study, conducted by the Congressional Research Service, examines the effects of demographic changes in the 1980s on such areas as the federal budget, housing, cities, income maintenance, Social Security and health programs.

The study said the increased pressure on housing inventories "could take the form of conversions of single-family houses into multi-family structures, sharing of houses, and group living arrangements."

The federal government may be faced with requests to support such changes through grants, loans or other types of assistance, according to the study.

The House on Tuesday approved a $1 billion emergency appropriation for a new program to subsidize mortgage interest payments of families who buy new homes. The program is meant to help prop up the sagging housing industry.

The Senate is at work on similar legislation, but President Reagan opposes it as too costly. Budget director David A. Stockman says he will recommend that the president veto the authorization bill.

Other findings in the committee's study included:

—Wives will contribute about 40 percent of all family income by 1990, compared to about 25 percent in 1980.

—There will be about 10.5 million children in need of day care by 1990 because of the increasing number of women entering the work force. Even assuming that the proportion of children receiving federally subsidized care and the cost per child remained constant, federal costs would increase by 71 percent to $2.4 billion.

Charlotte-Mecklenburg Schools Test Sobriety

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — Officials at most high schools in Charlotte and Mecklenburg County are using a chemical test to determine whether some students are attending classes while under the influence of alcohol.

The test contains a chemical that turns green when it comes in contact with alcohol on a person's breath, school security director Roland Smith told The Charlotte Observer.

Ten of the tests, which also indicate whether a person's blood-alcohol content exceeds .10 percent, are in a $12 kit. Under North Carolina law, a person whose blood-level content shows .10 percent or more is considered legally drunk. But school officials told the newspaper they consider a student under the influence if the test shows any alcohol.

The tests are voluntary, and only principals and assistant principals give them. Unlike the Breathalyzer used by law enforcement officers, Smith said, the Alcolyser test does not require formal training. At least seven of the 10 high schools have the test, which principals said they have used only two or three dozen times this year.

Some high schools have used the tests for several years but it was not until this year when school board members adopted a strict discipline policy that the kits were offered to principals at all the schools.

The policy prohibits "possession, use or being under the influence of alcohol or illegal drugs on school property ..."

First offenders must take a drug counseling course. Second offenders are excluded from regular classes for the remainder of the semester and the next one.

About 325 junior and senior high students were first offenders this year and another 26 were guilty of second offenses, officials said.

Superintendent Jay Robinson said he felt having the tests were good for the students psychologially. He said the tests could act as a deterrent.

Several principals said they have seen drinking problems decreasing with the new discipline guidelines, but Rank Rozzelle, principal at Myers Park High, said he has noticed an increasing problem with alcohol as students seem to be switching from drugs to liquor.

State Assistant Superintendent Dudley Flood said the tests probably do not violate students' rights because they are voluntary. But the North Carolina Department of Instruction recommends school systems expel or discipline students on the basis of specific behavior rather than for things that cause it, he said.

Teen-Age Drinking Out

CHICAGO (UPI) — Village officials in suburban Glen Ellyn are trying to head off the drunken teen-age bashes that often accompany the end of the school year, and the effort is being taken seriously.

The village board last week unanimously adopted an ordinance that threatens parents with arrest if they allow teen-age drinking on their property.

One teen-ager said the ordinance already has resulted in the cancellation of several parties originally scheduled for this weekend.

"I don't think it's any more of a problem in Glen Ellyn than in any other community," village President Michael Formento said. "The intent was to draw attention to the parents' responsibility and the kids' responsibility."

Formento and village Administrator William Dixon said they don't think parents encourage teen drinking parties; rather, they are reluctant to throw out party crashers who bring their own liquor and get rowdy.

"What happens, very frankly, is the party expands from 40 kids to 200 kids," Formento said. "The streets become congested. Should there be an emergency it would be impossible for emergency vehicles to reach other homes. Then there's the litter and acts of vandalism.

"What develops is peer pressure. The kids tell their parents not to do anything because they have to deal the crashers again at school.

"What we're saying to parents is that they have a direct responsibility to ask those kids to leave. If they don't (leave), then the parents can ask for police assistance.

"The kids are going to have to make a decision, too: Are they going to allow friends to bring alcoholic beverages on the property and place their parents in a position of potential violation or are they going to take the initiative themselves.

"We believe it is a reversing of peer pressure."

Dixon said the law gives police a tool to control drinking parties. He also likened the ordinance to a similar measure that makes parents financially responsible for vandalism committed by their children.

"In both cases both ordinances do have the effect of making parents more accountable for the actions of their children," Dixon said.

Mental Health Month Leaders Are Announced

May is membership month for the Mental Health Association in Pitt County and Dr. Frank Fuller is chairperson and Dr. Ray Minges is honorary chairperson.

Both have been active in the county association since its beginning in 1955. Dr. Fruller is the former chairman of the department of counselor education at East Carolina University. Dr. Minges is a retired physician.

Some activities of this month include a legislative breakfast, a picnic for Cherry Hospital patients, presentations in Greenville and Farmville by Chris Sizemore (Eve of the "Three Faces of Eve"), a three-segment educational spotlight lecture series, a phon-a-thon, a picnic for Flynn Home residents, participation in Western Day at Wilson Special Care Facility, and a mental health display at Carolina East Mall. The theme for the month is "Mental Health Is for Everybody."

For more information on how to become a Mental Health Association member and/or volunteer, call the MHA office, 752-7448.

College Grads Hear Speakers Decry Cutbacks

By The Associated Press

Speakers at college commencements in North Carolina Saturday decried federal cutbacks in education funds and told graduates to keep their standards high.

"A cutback of 35 percent in higher education is not in the national interest," Paul Simon, chairman of the U.S. House subcommittee on post-secondary education, told 1,906 graduates at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. "You cannot build a nation without higher education."

Simon warned that no nation can remain stagnant.

"A nation, and university alike, that doesn't have dreams is a nation not going in the right direction," he said.

At North Carolina State University in Raleigh, 3,418 graduates were urged to support the "sound values" of this country by speaker Claude S. Ramsey Jr., chairman of the board and president of Akzona Inc. of Asheville.

"We have not sneered at the person who takes pride in his work," he said. "We have not laughed at ambition. We have not been repelled by the man or the woman who works hard and is not ashamed of working hard.

"If this changes, if it becomes unfashionable or unpopular for a person to take his work seriously, then we are in deep trouble," Ramsey added.

Ramsey warned the graduates against being too pessimistic in demanding social change and different government policies.

"We have the machinery of government, the machinery of industry and commerce, the educational machinery, the professional machinery needed to solve our domestic problems and to do it fairly quickly — provided the generation now approaching maturity doesn't get trapped into rejecting some of the fundamental values upon which our society is based," he said.

University of North Carolina President William C. Friday addressed 679 graduates in ceremonies at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, where education activist and Dallas Herring received an honorary doctor of laws degree.

Herring, who served as chairman of the State Board of Education for more than two decades, was cited for helping to establish the state's system of community colleges and technical institutes. Herring was also recognized for working toward North Carolina's first public kindergarten program and for helping the then two-year Wilmington College obtain four-year status.

"Your continued support for the development of this institution culminated in 1969 in the uniting of Wilmington College with The University of North Carolina, whose direction and purpose we not share," the citation read, in part. "Thus, you are known as a Man of Vision and we as the beneficiaries of that vision."

In Wake Forest, 208 degrees were conferred on graduates of the Southeastern Theological Seminary, where Thomas H. Graves, associate professor of philosophy of religion was keynote speaker.

In other commencement activities around the state, Ben Fisher of Campbell University addressed 280 graduates of Gardner-Webb College in Boiling Springs and more than 200 women graduated from Peace College in Raleigh.

Smith To Speak To Accountants

The Eastern Carolina Chapter of the National Association of Accountants will meet at the King & Queen Restaurant Wednesday at 6:15 p.m.

Guest speaker will be Ken Smith, assistant athletic director for public relations at East Carolina University. Smith will speak on "Financing University Athletics."

The eastern chapter, headquartered in Greenville, is a member of the Carolinas Council of the National Association of Accountants. Anyone interested in the goals and services of the association may call Paul Setliff at 752-4126 for further information.

SPECIAL SERVICES

Joy Temple Holiness Church, at 410 Howard St., will hold special services at 8 p.m. Monday through Saturday with different speakers and choirs for each service.

The schedule: Monday, minister Vance Clark and choir; Tuesday, Elder Anderson and Choir of Winterville; Wednesday, Missionary Debrew and Saintsville Choir; Thursday, Elder Lanier and choir of Parmalee; Friday, Elder Smith and choir of Chocowinity, and Saturday, Elder Dennis Wooten and Brown's Chapel Youth Choir.

Study Seeks Origins Of Spotted Fever

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Researchers are studying North Carolina's Piedmont region in an effort to discover the biological and geographical origins of Rocky Mountain spotted fever, which strikes more often there than anywhere in the nation.

Of 1,165 cases of the disease reported across the nation last year, 301 were in North Carolina, where at least three victims died of the malady this year. Only seven deaths due to spotted fever were reported nationwide in 1981.

An organism called rickettsia rickettsia — neither a virus nor a bacteria — is always found in affected individuals and is commonly believed to be carried by ticks, said Dr. J.N. MacCormack, chief of the communicable disease section of the N.C. Department of Human Resources.

The reason the ticks congregate in parts of North Carolina is believed to stem from the preponderance of areas called transition zones in the state. Those areas like between cultivated farms, suburbs and small towns and the denser vegetation of surrounding woods, said Dr. Dan Sonenshine, a biologist at Old Dominion University in Norfolk, Va.

Ticks live in the transition zones in dense, low vegetation such as honeysuckles, which provides cover for mice, rats and squirrels upon which the ticks first prey, he said. Dogs, which tend to forage along the edges of transition zones, are more likely to pick up the parasitic ticks there.

Sonenshine's research is borne out by history. The first documented case of Rocky Mountain spotted fever was in those mountains in 1932, when developers first began cutting a fresh swath through wooded areas.

While research has helped define the regions occupied by the ticks, efforts to isolate the disease-producing organism itself have been less successful.

Although ticks are known to transmit the disease, rickettsia rickettsia was found in only one of the 2,000 ticks collected and studied in North Carolina.

Once inside the human body, the organism lives in the cells of blood vessels and can be treated easily with antibiotics if diagnosed early. Often, however, victims fail to distinguish the symptoms of the disease from influenza until it is too late.

Medical Training Could Leave Debt Of $250,000

It's Costing More To Become A Doctor

By CHARLES S. TAYLOR

ATLANTA (UPI) —The cost of attending a Southern medical school is skyrocketing at a time when financial aid for both schools and their students is drying up.

Some students face huge debts of up to $250,000 after completing their four-year medical education and residencies.

Medical schools are finding it more difficult to provide financial aid to needy students. And there appears to be a trend among medical students to marry early, usually to a mate who is holding down a job.

Most Southern medical schools actively seek to enroll minority students but find it difficult to find qualified applicants. But none of them said they juggle their entrance requirements to attract minorities.

These insights into the problems and tribulations of southern medical institutions came to light in a check of schools in the seven states of Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee.

There are 20 medical schools in the seven states. And interviews with their deans revealed that finances, not surprisingly, represented their major concern.

There also was a virtual consensus that no more medical schools or physicians (except in rural areas) are needed at the present time in the South.

An exception to this viewpoint, however, was voiced by Florida medical officials who said the influx of tourists and elderly people to that state requires existing medical school enrollment be sustained to meet the state's projected needs in 1990.

Internal medicine and family practice are by far the more popular specialties, followed by surgery. Many schools have programs either to encourage students to set up practice in rural areas upon graduation or at least to familiarize them with one of medicine's big shortcomings — the doctor shortage in rural and ghetto areas.

There are four Southern medical schools — Morehouse in Atlanta, Mercer in Macon, Ga., East Carolina in Greenville, N.C., and Meharry in Nashville, Tenn. — whose primary mission is to encourage students to practice in rural or ghetto areas. Other larger medical schools require their students to work for a period of time with rural doctors or in clinics that serve rural areas.

By far the most-often mentioned concern voiced by the deans, however, was the cost squeeze facing the schools and their students.

At Emory University School of Medicine in Atlanta, Dean James F. Glenn said tuition for the next class of students in September will total $8,500, with another $7,000 tacked onto that for fees and living expenses, making the tab $15,000 per year.

Glenn said interest on loans to students could run as high as 19.9 percent, pegged on treasury bill rates. If the principal and interest is forgiven until after the student has been practicing for one year, he could face a debt of one-fourth of a million dollars, he said.

A federal program started in the 1950s to encourage medical schools to train more physicians began a phase-out three years ago and was dropped totally this year, Glenn said, cutting support for the school by $900,000 annually.

"Federal loan programs for students have been discontinued or sharply curtailed," Glenn said. This, he said, poses a serious threat to medical schools.

A trend has developed, he said, for medical students to live off campus and to marry early. "Most of them are married," he said." This is true for most medical schools. "And a lot of the medical students have working wives."

An example of what federal financial aid means to students was pointed out by Dr. Stuart Bondurant, dean of the University of North Carolina Medical School at Chapel Hill, N.C. At that school, about two-thirds of the 636 medical students were getting $2.17 million in federal and state financial aid. By far the biggest aid program were the federal loans, which went to 372 students and amounted to $1,396,649 dollars.

Tuition at Morehouse Medical School in Atlanta, one of three black medical schools in the nation, will increase $1,000 this year, going to $8,000 for the September class, said Dr. Louis Sullivan, dean and president of the school.

Costs of tuition at the private schools such as Emory and Morehouse contrasts sharply however, with the charges at state medical institutions. Tuition at the University of South Florida Medical Center is $1,900 for state students. At the University of Alabama School of Medicine in Birmingham it is $3,900 for Alabama students, and in Mississippi the tuition is $3,000 at the state medical school in Jackson.

All schools surveyed sought to discourage out-of-state medical students by charging higher tuition fees ranging into the thousands of dollars. For instance, the fee for out-of-state students at the University of Alabama Medical School was $12,000, some $8,000 more than for Alabama residents.

"The country's financial situation has to be the biggest problem facing the medical schools now," said Barbara Austin, public relations officer for the University of Mississippi Medical School. "Our congressmen keep advising ups it's not going to be as bad as we've heard. But there's going to be some cutbacks and any reduction in funds will hurt us."

Federal budget cutbacks will mean a smaller freshman class at the University of Tennessee Center for Health Sciences Medical School in Memphis. "We've been admitting over 200 a year, but the class coming in September will number only 180," said Dr. Pat Wall, dean of admissions.

"There are too many medical schools," said Dr. Robert L. Summitt, dean of the college of medicine at the Memphis school. "There are not enough applicants. There's an insufficient qualified faculty and there's not enough money and we're faced with a surplus of physicians."

Other Southern medical schools, however, apparently had no lack of applicants. None of the others reported a shortage of aspiring doctors and at some schools the number applying far exceeded the available places. At Emory University Medical School over 4,000 applicants applied for the 110 freshman class openings.

Most of the schools said they had problems getting qualified minority applicants.

"We make an attempt to go out and find qualified minorities and have a summer health careers program to attract them," said Dr. Marcus Newberry, acting president of the Medical University of South Carolina in Charleston. "We would like to have more qualified minority applicants. We have no quota and we will not admit someone unless we believe they are qualified. Fewer blacks are applying. That's not just true here, but nationwide. But the number of all students applying to medical schools nationally is down.

MUSC has accepted an average of five black pre-med students a year since 1978.

The shortage of qualified minority students also was voiced by Wall, spokesman for the University of Tennessee Center for Health Sciences school. "Our problem has been in the past a very shallow pool of qualified minorities," he said. "We're trying to increase our pool of minorities so we can be more selective in our recruitment."

The medical school deans did not feel physician fees were out of line, compared to other medical care costs but some offered suggestions as to how they could be contained.

"One thing medical schools can do is start making students and residents (doctors) more aware of the costs that are incurred when a physician orders tests for patients," said Newberry. "Those in education have an obligation to point out to physicians the financial consequences of decisions they make."

He said the federal government was trying to keep people out of hospitals by cutting back the number of days the hospitals will be reimbursed under Medicare and Medicaid.

Emory's Dean Glenn said doctors at that school's hospital receive copies of patients' bills, a practice designed to impress on them the costs of tests and drugs that the patient must bear.

Newberry praised Southern medical schools for gearing up and increasing the number of graduates at a time when the South was near the bottom in that category.

"They helped develop new schools and met the public's request for more physicians," he said. "That's a major accomplishment. We have not sacrificed quality."

ECU Costs

North Carolina students attending the East Carolina University School of Medicine pay a tuition of $950. But, just as is the case at other state medical schools, the tuition jumps sharply for non-resident students — to $3,020.

Added to both is a fees levy of $298. ECU officials estimate that an unmarried student living "skimpily" will need $5,200 to $5,400 for subsistence during the school year.

Added together, that would mean an in-state student would need about $6,600 while a student from another state would face a cost of about $8,700.

A Reflector Review

'Deathtrap' and 'Conan' Offer Different Looks At Escapism

Two movies now playing in Greenville, "Deathtrap" at Plitt Theater, and "Conan The Barbarian" at Plaza Cinema, offer movie fans two vastly different forms of escapist entertainment. "Deathtrap" features a small cast confined to one location. "Conan" makes use of what must be half the total population of Hollywood extras and a battalion of body builders in locales that suggest a geographical round-robin.

•Deathtrap, billed as a comedy-mystery, is much stronger on the mystery angle. In a plot-within-a-plot within another plot story line, there's plenty of developments to keep even the keenest observer busy trying to guess "what next?".

Based on the successful stage play, the movie version is as near to a stage play as a movie can be — the action is confined to one house, mostly within the living room.

A middle-aged playwright, Sidney Bruhl (Michael Caine), wants another play that will bring him the measure of fame and money an earlier play had brought him. He devises a complicated plot with a would-be-playwright, an ex-student of his, Clifford Anderson (Christopher Reeve). The two, who secretly are lovers, scheme an elaborate plan to kill, through sheer fright, Bruhl's wife Myra (Dyan Cannon), who suffers from a chronic heart ailment.

While these brilliantly conceived story developments unfold, an erratic third force intrudes on the scene. An utterly captivating elderly neighbor, Helga ten Dorp (Irene Worth), on the surface a muddled physic, barges in and out of the house, complicating the intrigue-laden plots and counterplots concocted by the two male lovers. Her dire predictions mesh with uncanny precision into the twists and turns of the suspenseful, cat-and-mouse sub-plots.

Much of the fun of "Deathtrap" is attempting to decipher what is real and what applies to the make believe of the play the two collaborate on.

As Helga ten Dorp, Irene Worth gives a stunning performance as the sweet little woman whose pixieish innocence conceals a diamond hard core of shrewd cunning. Dyan Cannon is superb as the wife who is at first confused, then unbearably frightened by her husband's diabolical cleverness. Reeves brings a cool aggressiveness touched with stereotyped gay swishiness to his role, and Caine provides the pivotal core around which the other forces gravitate.

•"Conan The Barbarian" undoubtedly is intended to have a plot. After sorting through all the possibilities, I have concluded it has something to do with pre-medieval evil perpetrated by a widespread cult of snake worshipers.

"Conan" is touted as the Dino de Laurentiis epic that cost $18 million and required considerable time to put together.

That's believable. The assortment of costumes alone must have run into millions — it looks like they were garnered from the greatest yard sale in recorded history. Whatever one's fancy in costumes, it's there — in sheer and coarse cotton, plain leather, metal studded leather, helmets simple and helmets ornate, primitive furs, billowing capes, feather cloaks, Greek robes, barrels of costume jewelry, and even outrageously gorgeous body paint jobs.

Funds left over from costuming were obviously earmarked for a veritable spree of ancient travels. Snow scenes in dark forests, dunes like New Mexico's White Sands, parched, rock-strewn countryside, rugged mountains, fortified mud villages (in Tashkent?), mysterious burial caves and underground temples where giant snakes guard fabulous jewels — all are thrown into the scenic brew.

The hero, Conan (body champion Arnold Schwarzenegger), sole survivor in childhood of a barbaric attack on his village, grows to Samson-like manhood chained to a huge revolving wheel that seems to serve no purpose other than to keep him going around in circles in the sand.

Eventually, he is taken away from the wheel to become a traveling strong man to crush other muscle-bound specimens for the glory of a bearded chieftan. During this tenure as gladiator-slave, Conan is exposed to the mysteries of the East — the art of reading and some esoteric form of mental-physical discipline that resembles karate.

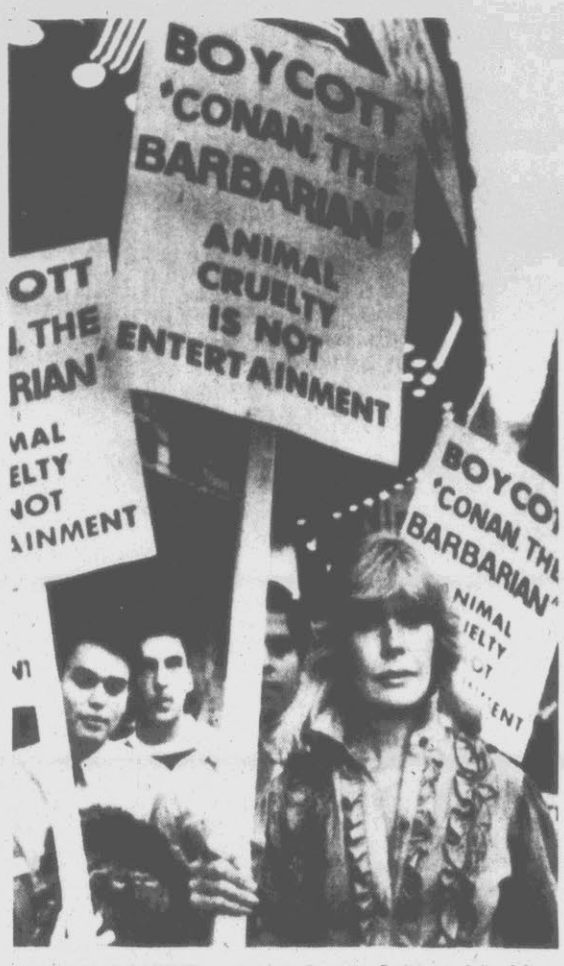

Freed from slavery for no obvious reason, Conan hits the road and strikes up a friendship with a wily young wanderer — the two jog off into the sunset, headed for new adventures over the hills.

Conan's luck with lady loves is a miserable track record. His first wandering encounter is with a siren who beckons from a stone hut. Their thrashing love scene is cut short as the seductress is transformed into a wailing, snake-beast. Her released spirit instantly becomes a fiery meteor that sprials all over the landscape. The real love of his life (Sandahl Bergman), a six-million rupee marvel, meets a woeful fate when a stiffened viper is shot like an arrow into her body. We never discover what success he has with the beautiful princess rescued from the evil snake king (James Earl Jones) ... (a good pickup point for "Conan II?")

If you can imagine bits and pieces patched together from grand opera, Bruce Lee movies, the Medusa legend, Armenian travelogues, Viking epics, and ancient Arabian mythology, you have a basic idea of what "Conan The Barbarian" is like.

But this colorful potpourri, coupled with dialogue that vacillates wildly between body-builders' grunts and scholarly outbursts of philosophy, never gives an inkling of a plot. Except for some excessive violence, much of "Conan" is great fun in the best Grade B movie tradition.

If the American Dream of affordable homeownership is to be preserved, your help is indispensable.

Somehow our country's leadership decided that the ability of the average American to own a home would no longer be a matter of national priority. That decision does not reflect my wishes. The children of this country must be allowed the Dream that has so enriched my life.

Lifegate Sets Two One-Act Plays Thursday

CHICOD — Two modern one-act plays are to be presented beginning at 7 p.m. Thursday by students of the Lifegate Christian High School in Chicod.

The school is adjacent to Lifegate Baptist Church, across the road and a short distance from Chicod Elementary School.

Lifegate's principal, Carl Morgan is directing both plays.

The first play, Dorothy Russell Murphee's "The Black Sheep," is about a Christian mother whose husband is more interested in business than his children. One son is the family's black sheep, and a daughter has everyone fooled about her brother's commitment to Christ. The play has a surprise ending.

Cast members for "The Black Sheep" are Terry Duncan as George Platt; Ronda Gaskins, Grace Platt; Teresa Duncan, Ellen Platt; Karlos Hartley, Jack Platt; and John Glenn, Tom Jackson.

The second play, "He Sees and Knows All," by G. Elton Cooke, depicts the story of a family preparing for the new pastor's visit, unaware that Jesus has already come to visit.

Cast members for this play are: Karlos Hartley as Edward Davis; Tammy Duncan as Edna Davis; Donna Edwards as Jamie Davis; Tammy Godley, Jan Davis; Martha Harding, Lisa West; Terry Duncan, as Rev. Barnett; and Earl Edwards in the role of Jesus.

No admission will be charged but an offering will be taken at the conclusion of the plays.

Soil Science Expert To Talk

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Dr. J.W. Gilliam, professor of soil science at North Carolina State University, will speak at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at the Beaufort County Courthouse in Washington.

The topic of his talk is "Agriculture and Estuarine Water Quality." His speech is planned in connection with an exploration of the relationship between agricultural activities and water quality in North Carolina's estauries.

Gilliam, author of 55 publications, has done extensive research dealing with the effects of drainage and agricultural development on nearby waters, environmental impacts of fertilizer use and loss of nitrates from fields.

He is a member of the Governor's Task Force on Coastal Water Management.

School Board Meets Monday

The May action meeting for the Greenville School Board will begin at 8 p.m. Monday at Whal-Coates Laboratory School.

Action items on the agenda include first reading of two policy papers — on professionalism and on grouping for instruction.

Other agenda items cover personnel actions in executive session, and a number of reports on various topics.

CORRECTION

The recent article on the reunion for the 1972 North Pitt High School class reunion listed the name of Lionel Carnell as one of the contact persons. The name should have read Lionel Carney. The number given, 752-9869, is correct.

Young Democrats To Honor Bundy

Pitt County Young Democrats, along with other friends and supporters of state Rep. Sam D. Bundy will honor the Farmville Democrat at an appreciation dinner May 24 at 7 p.m. at the Casablanca Restaurant in Greenville.

Proceeds from this event will benefit the Sam Manning Scholarship Fund. The fund is set up in memory of Manning, a Greenville lawyer who died at age 31 a few years ago. A $300 scholarship is to be awarded annually to an East Carolina University rising senior majoring in political science.

Tickets should be purchased no later than May 20 from Betsy Leech, 756-9947, or Lee Walton, 758-0905.

Adopt-A-Pet

The Adopt-a-Pet of the Week are six puppies, two of which are pictured here with their mother, a collie-retriever combination. All seven were rescued from the dog pound and are being sought homes. To adopt the adult dog or any of her puppies, call Mrs. June, 756-9621 — home; 758-5200 — work.

Also being sought homes by the Pitt County Humane Society are the following:

- Two 6-week-old long-haired kittens — one yellow and white, the other black and white.
- Found on Greenville Boulevard, a male boxer-terrier. Call and describe. 757-3674.
- A female 2-year-old solid white long-haired spayed female and declawed cat. 756-3517.

Officials Say Crisis Relocation Plan Will Work

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer

For thousands of North Carolinians living near military bases or large industrial cities, a nuclear attack would mean collecting a three-day supply of food, getting into the family car and driving to a fallout shelter.

The crisis-relocation plan, drawn up by federal and state Emergency Management Agency workers, could be used only with advance warning of a nuclear attack. In the case of a surprise attack, residents would have to find shelters near them or dig a hole and cover themselves with dirt.

Critics say the crisis-relocation program fails to consider weather conditions, panic and the sheer numbers of frantic people who would be swarming to evacuation routes. They say fallout shelters are often inadequate and sometimes nonexistent.

Officials in the state Division of Emergency Management, however, say their plan is the best possible way to save lives in a nuclear war.

"The critics are trying to make it look like we're for nuclear war because we're trying to make some plans for it," said Dan Isom, a planner with the state emergency management office in Raleigh. "Our plans have been approved by the Department of Defense, and we think they will work if people will follow them. We're betting they'll save lives."

About 80 of North Carolina's 100 counties have emergency-management offices, Isom said. The state emergency-management division has a two-man team that studies each area's crisis plan.

Defense Department officials say 12 areas in the state pose potential targets for a nuclear attack, led by the Goldsboro area, where Seymour Johnson Air Force Base houses some of the B-52 bombers considered vital to America's defense.

Other military bases, such as Fort Bragg in Fayetteville, Camp Lejeune in Jacksonville, and the port city of Wilmington, are believed to be high-priority targets. Urban and industrial complexes like Raleigh-Durham, the triad area of Greensboro and Winston-Salem and Charlotte also face potential devastation.

Those areas not listed as target areas are designated "hosts" for people who would be forced to evacuate during an attack, Isom said.

"According to the plan, these host areas would take in the evacuees from the target areas and share food and shelters with them," he said. "With each target area, there are several surrounding counties that would be hosts."

For example, residents of Asheville would be evacuated to 15 surrounding counties in the western part of the state if that city came under attack.

Marilyn Braun of the Guilford County civil defense division is critical of the plans, saying they require perfect weather, 100 percent cooperation among both evacuees and hosts, and the ability of the populace to follow confusing instructions.

"First of all, you start off with the assumption that you're evacuating a cooperative public and that everyone can afford to get a three-days' supply of food," Ms. Braun said. "Then you assume that the host areas will be willing to take in thousands of refugees from other areas.

"Then you have this ridiculous assumption that people are going to be able to get to shelters in time to be protected from radioactive fallout or if they get caught, they can cover a building with dirt or dig a hole and cover themselves with dirt," she added. "What if it's winter and the ground is frozen? Parts of the plan make no sense."

Ms. Braun, who has headed Guilford County's Emergency Management Assistance Agency since 1978, balked last year at filing a report on the county's fallout shelters in exchange for federal funds. Ms. Braun told the Federal Emergency Management Agency all the shelters listed in her area were either nonexistent or ineffective and she removed them from the federal list.

Last month, she told a House subcommittee studying the Reagan administration's request to speed up FEMA's Crisis Relocation Plan, that it was "no plan at all."

"What the state and federal plan assumes is that everything will still work after a nuclear attack, that rescue and emergency equipment, hospitals, everything will be there to care for the sick and wounded. That's an impossibility," she said.

Dr. Gerald Meisner, a physics professor at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and head of the 26-member Greensboro-Guilford County War Planning Evaluation Committee, says a nuclear attack in the Greensboro area would destroy most buildings, including hospitals, leaving more victims than there are facilities to care for them in the entire country.

"In fact, there would be no way to medically care for people in a nuclear attack, and a plan telling people they could count on medical treatment is unbelievable," he said. "The plan really doesn't even begin to address the fact of radiation and the sickness and disease that would be caused from it."

Officials say they know their plan isn't perfect but say the country has to have some type of program to follow in a nuclear attack.

"Maybe it wouldn't work 100 percent as we hope it would," Isom said. "I disagree with the critics who say it wouldn't work at all. We say it will work. Unfortunately, only a nuclear war will prove whether we're right or wrong."

ECU Gains NCAA Bid With Tourney Win

HARRISONBURG, Va. — East Carolina earned its second NCAA playoff bid in three seasons Saturday afternoon as the Pirates defeated Catholic University, 8-4, to win the ECAC-South tournament.

The tournament title carries with it an automatic berth in the NCAAs, one of 24 automatic bids given to league champions across the nation. Eight at-large bids complete the 32-team field.

ECU, now 33-12, went through the tournament unbeaten. ECU beat James Madison, 8-2, in its opener Thursday and then downed Catholic, 7-4, Friday to advance into the finals.

Catholic rallied from a 5-0 deficit to defeat Old Dominion Saturday to earn its right into the championship game. Catholic finishes the year with a 21-14 record.

ECU scored twice in the first inning to take a lead it never lost. Catholic closed to within one run twice, but could never overtake the Pirates as they had ODU earlier in the day.

"Naturally, the players are elated and I'm happy, too," ECU coach Hal Baird said after the win. "I thought we played exceptionally well in the tournament.

"We had a lot of intensity throughout the game," Baird said. "I could tell about the fifth inning the players were starting to look around and say, 'Hey, we're four innings from being ECAC champions.'"

"I felt we were capable of playing well in the tournament and I thought after the first win (over James Madison), we had a lot of confidence," Baird said. The tournament was played on James Madison's home field, where the Dukes were 24-1 before the tournament began.

Freshman Bob Davidson started for the Pirates and went seven innings before being relieved by Charlie Smith. Davidson struck out nine and walked six en route to his fifth win in eight decisions.

"He was a little nervous at the beginning, but he had good stuff today," Baird said. "He did get a little wild and that's why we had to bring in Smith."

The Pirates, as they did in the first two games of the tournament, scored in the first inning to take the lead.

With one gone, Mike Sorrell walked and went to third on a wild pitch. After John Hallow grounded out, Todd Evans doubled to score Sorrell. Evans later scored on a wild pitch and an error.

Catholic cut the lead to one in the second when, with the bases loaded, Dan Cassidy singled home Bob Ebner, who reached to open the inning on an error by Sorrell.

ECU got the run back in the third. David Wells walked and moved to second on Sorrell's sacrifice. Wells then went to third on an error and came home on Hallow's sacrifice fly to center to make it 3-1.

Catholic countered with a run of its own in the bottom of the inning. Mark Siciliano tripled to open the inning but Davidson then struck out Mike Tryon looking and Don Kemp swinging.

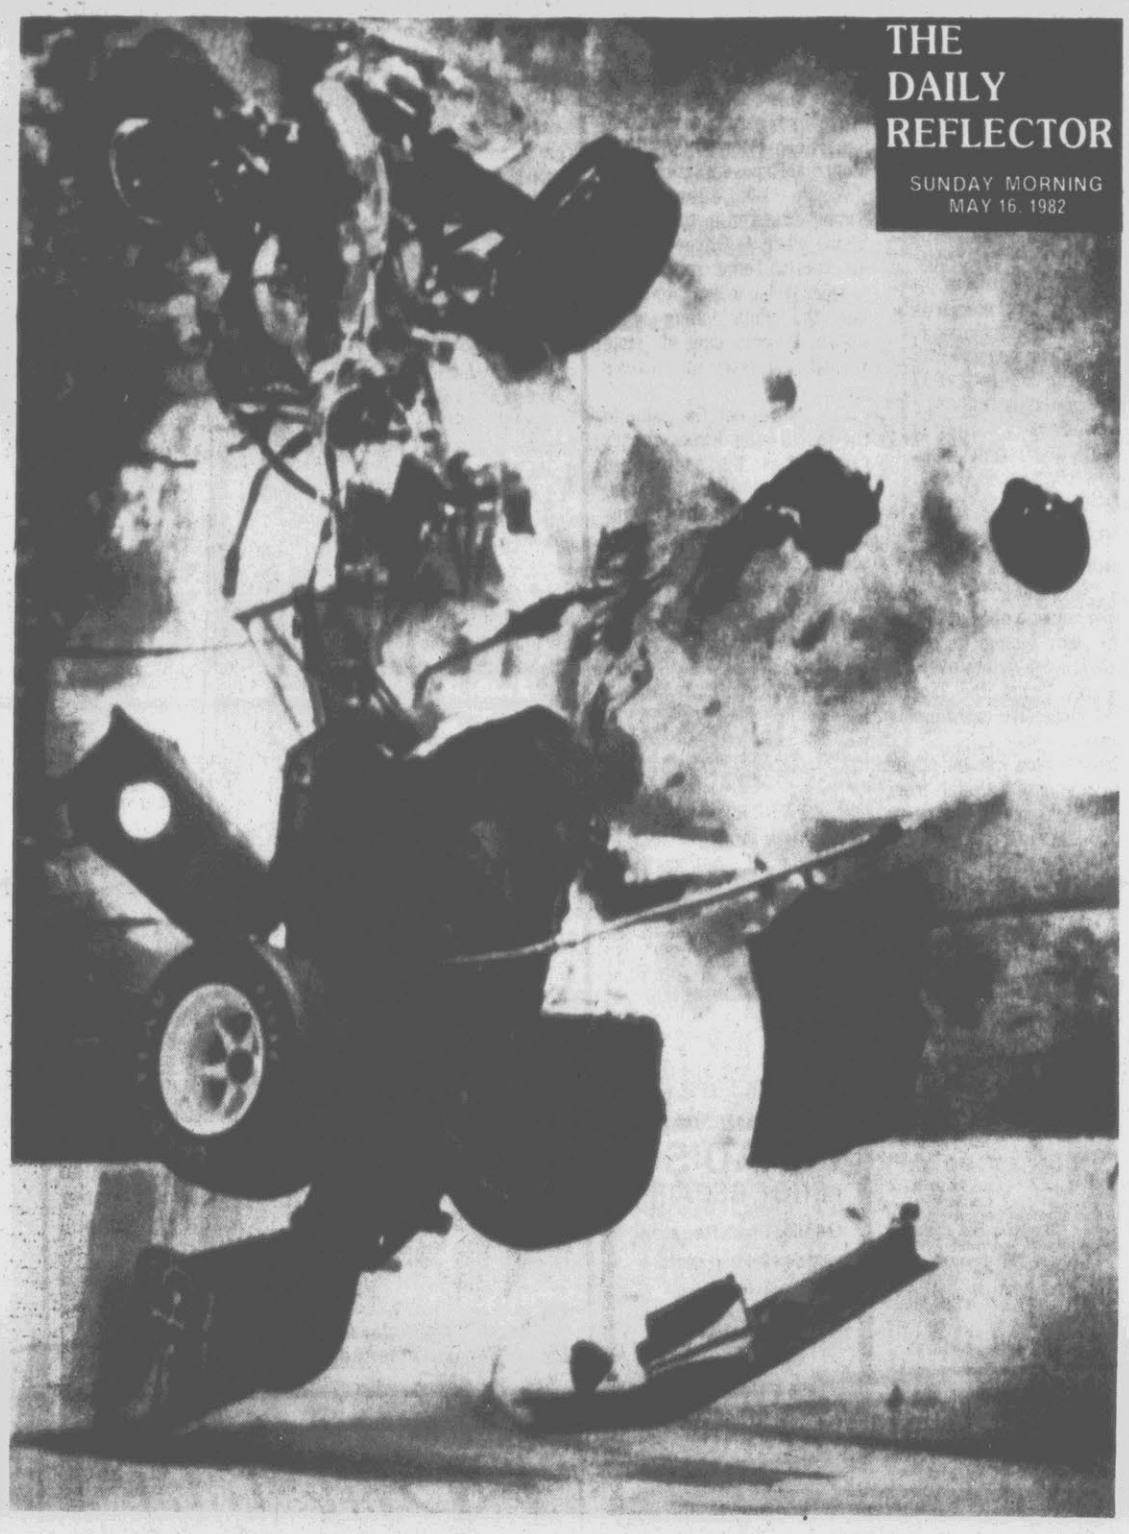

But, just when it appeared Davidson would get out of the inning without giving up a run, Bob Ebner singled to right to score Siciliano and make it 3-2. The Pirates, however, upped their lead to 5-2 with two runs in the fifth — a decisive period, according to Baird.

"I felt like that (was a crucial period)," Baird said. "Each time Catholic would get a run, we were able to come back the next inning and get it back."

Hallow doubled to rightfield to open the inning. Then, with one out, Fran Fitzgerald hit a 2-1 pitch over the centerfield fence for his eighth home run of the season.

The Pirates upped their lead to 6-2 in the sixth when Jack Curlings singled up the middle and went to second on Robert

Aloma's Ruler Races To Preakness Stakes Title

BALTIMORE (AP) — Kentucky Derby winner Gato Del Sol was missing, but the Preakness at Pimlico Saturday turned out to be a storybook race when 16-year-old "Cowboy" Jack Kaenel rode lightly raced Aloma's Ruler to a front-running victory.

Youth was served, for Aloma's Ruler, trained by 35-year-old Butch Lenzini, beat favored Linkage, ridden by 50-year-old Bill Shoemaker and trained by 77-year-old Henry Clark.

"I'm just very happy to have accomplished such a thing at such a young age," said Kaenel, the youngest jockey ever to ride in a Triple Crown race in modern times. He will be 17 on July 27.

Kaenel won the first time he and Shoemaker rode in the same race, beating his senior in the Selima Stakes at Pimlico last year. "I am 1-for-1 against Shoemaker," Kaenel said before Saturday's racing card began. "And tomorrow, I'll be 2-for-2."

Well, Kaenel is only 2-for-3 agaist Shoemaker, having finished behind him in the City of Baltimore Handicap before the Preakness Saturday, but it is a 2-for-3 he should be able to live with.

After fulfilling his prophecy with Aloma's Ruler's one-half length victory, Kaenel said: "It's an honor to beat him twice.)He's still Mr. Shoemaker to me."

The victory set up a possible showdown with Gato Del Sol in the 1½-mile Belmont Stakes June 5. Gato Del Sol is at Belmont Park, where he worked out Saturday in preparation for the final race of the Triple Crown. He was held out of the Preakness because trainer Ed Gregson said the race didn't fit his plans.

That was the reason given by Clark for holding Linkage out of the Derby.

In the winner's circle after the race, Nathan Scherr, a Baltimore building contractor who owns Aloma's Ruler, shouted: "This is for Baltimore and Maryland." Then, he said a start in the Belmont is a "definite maybe."

Lenzini said, "If he comes out of this well, we'll definitely think about running in the Belmont."

Aloma's Ruler was the most lightly raced member of the seven-horse field, making only his eighth career start, but Kaenel had him on the lead shortly after the start. The dark bay colt was still there at the end of the 13-16 miles, reached in 1:552-5, far off the record of 1:54 set by Canonero II in 1971.

"I slowed the pace down as much as I could," said Kaenel, who sent the winner through the first half mile in 48 seconds, three quarters in 1:12 and a mile in 1:362-5. "Speed held up on this track. They just couldn't catch us."

Briefly, it looked as if Linkage, who moved into contention on the final turn, might catch Aloma's Ruler.

"Kaenel had a real fresh horse," said Shoemaker, who has won this race twice, the last time with Damascus in 1967, before Kaenel had reached his second birthday.

"He had to have it to beat me. I thought I could take him anytime, but we

Lady Bucs Finish 4th In Tourney

GRAHAM — Florida scored on a solo home run in the fourth to eliminate East Carolina, 1-0, Saturday afternoon in the AIAW National Slow-Pitch Softball Tournament.

Florida defeated UNC-Charlotte, 11-6, to advance to the tournament finals. In the finals, however, Florida State whipped Florida, 9-4, to capture the title. The Lady Seminoles were unbeaten in the tournament.

ECU threatened in the sixth when the Lady Pirates had a runner on third with one out, but failed to score.

ECU ends up at 42-13 and finishes fourth in the nation. ECU was third in the nation a year ago.

Rightfield Cynthia Shepard and centerfielder Mitzi Davis earned all-american honors, it was announced after the tournament finals. Shepard and Yvonne Williams were named to the all-tournament team.

UNC's Worthy Decides To Go Pro

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — All-America James Worthy, who led North Carolina to a 32-2 record and a national title this season, said Saturday trying to decide whether to turn professional was difficult, but he felt it was time to leave the collegiate ranks.

"It's been a tough decision," Worthy said at a news conference at the Charlotte International Airport. "I've thought about it really ever since the season was over in April. I really haven't had any pressure on me.

"I thought about the things that would make me stay, about my senior year and being the leader of the team. But I feel like the timing is right. I feel like maybe I could be injured next year and then I would not know what the future holds," said the 6-foot-9 forward who suffered a fractured ankle during his freshman year.

The Gastonia native's announcement came one day after Ralph Sampson, a 7-foot-4 junior and a two-time national player of the year, said he would return to Virginia for his senior season rather than accept a multi-million dollar pro offer.

That decision practically assured Worthy of being the top pick in the National Basketball Association college player draft on June 29.

Sampson's decision apparently canceled NBA negotiations between the San Diego Clippers and the Los Angeles Lakers, who are tied for the No. 1 draft choice. Early last week, Lakers owner Jerry Buss offered to pay $6 million for the Clippers' first-round selection.

Some people had speculated Worthy, a 6-foot-9 junior, would turn professional if Sampson decided to stay at Virginia, but the 21-year-old Worthy said Virginia player's decision had no influence on him.

"Ralph's decision really had no affect on mine," he said. "I was confident I would do very well in the draft anyway. It would not be wise for me not to take advantage of it now."

Worthy led North Carolina to the NCAA championship in March, scoring 28 points in the Tar Heels 63-62 victory over Georgetown and catching an errant Hoya pass with about eight seconds remaining and the game's outcome still in doubt.

He paced North Carolina in scoring with 532 points for the season, averaging 15.6 per game, and was named the outstanding player in three championship tournaments. Worthy finished the season with a 67.4 percent free-throw average.

His decision means the Tar Heels will lose their most consistent scorer and inside threat.

In a statement read by Rick Brewer, North Carolina sports information director, Tar Heel coach Dean Smith said he "fully supports" Worthy's decision and he looks forward to working with him.

"I've enjoyed a good relationship with James in the past and I expect to continue that relationship," said Smith, who was at an Atlantic Coast Conference meeting in Myrtle Beach, S.C., and could not attend the news conference.

Worthy said Smith "sat me down and told me about the consequences I would be facing. He told me I would be on my own and it would be a lot different than playing in college. He really encouraged me to go if the time was right. He was honest with me and I appreciate that. I have a good possibility of going first and that's good."

At least eight other college juniors, however, have served notice that they want to be eligible for the NBA draft on June 29.

Texas center LaSalle Thompson, last season's Division I rebounding leader, was among the players who said they want to cut short their college careers. The 6-10 Thompson pulled down 365 rebounds in 27 games for a 13.5 average and averaged almost 19 points per game.

Others who have said they want to relinquish their senior seasons were San Francisco's All-America guard Quintin Dailey, the nation's fifth leading scorer with a 25.2-point average and 54.6 percent field-goal accuracy; 6-0 Boston College guard John Bagley; 6-7 Ohio State forward Clark Kellogg; 6-8 Wichita State forward Cliff Levingston; 6-9 DePaul forward Terry Cummings; 6-3 Houston guard Rob Williams, and 6-7 Georgia forward Dominique Wilkins.

Erving Block Preserves 99-97 Victory

Philadelphia Holds Off Boston

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Coach Billy Cunningham of the Philadelphia 76ers said he was afraid to look up in the final seconds.

The 76ers almost blew the last two points of a 14-point lead in those final ticks of the clock. But a shot by the Boston Celtics' Cedric Maxwell bounced off the back of the rim and when he grabbed the rebound, his follow-up shot was blocked by Julius Erving.

The ball again came back to Maxwell, but Philadelphia's Maurice Cheeks stripped it loose and ran out the clock.

It added up to a 99-97 victory for the 76ers and a 2-1 lead in the National Basketball Association's best-of-seven Eastern Conference finals.

The fourth game is here Sunday afternoon and the fifth will be in Boston Wednesday night.

Erving scored 19 points and Cheeks and Bobby Jones each added 18 to lead the Sixers' offense.

Erving described the closing sequence.

"Maxwell's first shot bounced off the back of the rim. The second, I was able to block. And when he came down to go up again, Maurice just stuck his hand in," Erving said.

"I didn't gant to to do it," said Cheeks, who obviously was afraid of a foul call. "But I didn't have much choice. I saw him shoot, saw Doc (Erving) block it. He was going up again. If I hadn't stuck my hand in, he might have scored."

Maxwell was despondent.

"I had a shot I should have made," said the 6-foot-8 forward. "I got another and had it blocked. We lost. There was no foul (called). I guess it was a good play."

Cunningham described the game as a typical Philadelphia-Boston matchup.

"It's a funny game. I never felt we had control even with a 14-point lead. We hung in there and did what we had to do to win."

Robert Parish, the Celtics' leading scorer and an excellent rebounder, didn't play the last quarter, even though there was nothing wrong with him. Coach Bill Fitch just felt the team he had in the game was playing well.

Larry Bird, who had 15 points, 13 rebounds and 11 assists, scored on a jumper from the top of the key with 43 seconds remaining to bring Boston within 99-97, setting up the final flurry.

In the first period, the Celtics took a 15-14 lead on a layup by Henderson with 5:32 remaining. Boston then outscored the Sixers 13-5 for a nine-point margin at 28-19, which was the Celtics' largest lead of the game.

Philadelphia, however, scored five straight points in the final minute of the period to reduce the margin to 28-24.

In the second quarter of this extremely physical, defensive contest, Boston led 45-41 on a basket by Bird with 3:19 to go before the Sixers scored eight straight points and took a 49-47 lead at halftime.

Lakers Sweep Past San Antonio, 128-123

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Earvin "Magic" Johnson and Jamaal Wilkes sank two free throws apiece and Bob McAdoo stole an inbounds pass and scored in the final 17 seconds Saturday night as the Los Angeles Lakers downed the San Antonio Spurs 128-123 to advance to the National Basketball Association championship series.

The Lakers eliminated San Antonio in four straight games for the Western Conference championship after downing Phoenix in four straight in the conference semifinals. The eight straight playoff victories are a feat matched only by the 1950 Minneapolis Lakers, who hold the NBA record with nine consecutive playoff victories.

Norm Nixon scored 30 points, McAddo came off the bench for 26, and Johnson and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar had 22 each in the balanced Los Angeles attack.

San Antonio tied the score four times and the lead changed five times in the last five minutes, until the Lakers pulled it out in the final seconds. The last tie was at 122-122 when San Antonio's Johnny Moore hit an 18-foot jump shot with 1:50 left.

The score remained tied for the next 1:23 until Johnson was fouled by Mark Olberding and put the Lakers ahead to stay with two free throws.

San Antonio scored only once after that, on a free throw by Mike Mitchell, which made the score 124-123.

On the next possession, Mike Bratz

8th-Inning Homers Lift Phils To Sixth Straight Win

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Gary Matthews and rookie Bob Dernier slammed home runs in the eighth inning to give Philadelphia a 5-3 victory over the San Francisco Giants Saturday night, the Phillies' sixth straight triumph.

Dernier tied the score at 3-3 with his first major league homer, off Dan Schatzeder. One out later, Schatzeder was replaced by Greg Minton, 2-3, who walked Mike Schmidt and then gave up Matthews' third homer on a 3-1 pitch.

Matthews, who also singled in a run, now has 13 hits and 10 RBI in his last 25 at-bats and has improved his average from .220 to .280.

Right-hander Larry Christenson, 3-3, allowed seven hits in eight innings for the victory, striking out five and walking none. Sparky Lyle pitched a scoreless ninth to gain his first save of the season.

ATLANTA (AP) — Gene Garber's throwing error allowed Ken Oberkfell to score the go-ahead run in the 10th inning and Lonnie Smith followed with a three-run homer, and the St. Louis Cardinals went on to a 7-6 victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday night.

Oberkfell led off the inning with a single and went to second when Willie McGee bunted for another hit. Bruce Sutter also bunted, but Garber, 4-2, trying to force Oberkfell, threw wide of third, allowing him to score.

Smith, who was 3-for-4 with three runs scored and four RBI, followed with his fifth homer, off Rick Camp, making the score 7-3.

Sutter, 2-0, got credit for the victory although he gave up a three-run homer to Chris Chambliss in the bottom of the 10th.

The game was played before a crowd of 48,481.

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's Don Sutton fired a three-hitter to become the National League's first six-game winner and Phil Garner knocked in two runs as the Astros downed the Chicago Cubs 4-1 Saturday night.

Sutton, 6-1, yielded singles to Ryne Sandberg and Bump Wills in the third inning. Sandberg stole second, moved up on Ferguson Jenkins' bunt and scored on a groundout by Steve Henderson before Wills got the second hit off Sutton.

Sutton, who struck out six and walked two, retired 11 in a row until Wills singled again in the ninth. Sutton got 19 of the last 21 batters he faced.

Denny Walling hammered the first pitch by boser Jenkins, 2-4, for a first-inhing triple. Tony Scott's sacrifice fly gave Houston a 1-0 lead.

The Cubs tied the score in the third, but Garner's single to left in the fourth drove in Ray Knight, who had walked and advanced to second on a groundout, to put Houston in front.

Danny Heep's run-scoring single in the sixth made it 3-1, and Garner doubled home Knight, who scored three runs, in the eighth.

NEW YORK (AP) — Joel Youngblood's three-run homer and a strong relief stint by Pat Zachry propelled the New York Mets to a 6-4 triumph over the Los Angeles Dodgers Saturday night.

Zachry, 2-1, allowed three hits and one run in four innings after replacing Mets starter Charlie Puleo in the fifth inning. Puleo was forced out of the game with stiffness in his right shoulder.

Hubie Brooks' two-run single in the fifth inning accounted for the decisive runs.

With the Mets leading 4-3, catcher John Stearns walked, George Foster singled and Youngblood was hit by a pitch. Brooks then drilled a 1-1 pitch off Dodgers reliever Dave Stewart to right field, driving in Stearns and Foster.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Tony Perez triggered a five-run Boston outburst with a fifth-inning double Saturday, leading the Red Sox to an 10-5 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Jim Rice's run-scoring double and Perez's RBI single gave the Red Sox a 2-0 lead in the first, and Dave Stapleton hit reliever Jim Wright's second pitch for a solo home run in the second.

Dwight Evans doubled home Rick Miller and sent Jerry Remy to third in the fifth and, one out later, Perez doubled both runners home. Carney Lansford's RBI double and catcher John Wathan's errant throw allowed the Red Sox to take an 8-0 lead after five.

George Brett, celebrating his 29th birthday, tripled leading off the sixth and scored on a grounder. Brett slugged a towering three-run home run to chase winner Mike Torrez, 3-2, in the Royals four-run seventh.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Johnny Ray and pitcher Rick Rhoden each homered during a nine-run third inning, and Rhoden pitched eight strong innings as the Pittsburgh Pirates outslugged the Cincinnati Reds 12-9 Sunday.

Rhoden, 2-4, took a five-hitter into the ninth inning when Cincinnati scored five runs. He left after yielding three hits, icluding a two-run triple to German Barranca, and Alex Trevino singled off reliver Enrique Romo to score Barranca. Mike Vail followed with a two-run homer to make it 12-9.

Ray belted a three-run homer that chased Cincinnati's Frank Pastore, 4-3, during the Pirates' barrage. Ray added a two-run single in the fourth inning for a career-high five RBI. Rhoden smacked a double and a two-run homer in the third as the Pirates sent 12 batters to the plate.

With one out in the third, Rhoden doubled and scored on a double by Omar Moreno, who stole third and scored on a single by Lee Lacey.

Lacey stole second, took third on a throwing error by catcher Trevino and scored on Bill Madlock's sacrfice fly.

Jason Thompson walked, and Mike Easler singled before Ray hit his second home run of the season. Dale Berra doubled and scored on Steve Nicosia's single. Rhoden followed with a two-run homer, his second of the season.

DETROIT (AP) — Lance Parrish belted a one-out homer in the 10th inning to power Detroit to a 5-4 victory over the Minnesota Twins, the Tigers' second successive extra-inning triumph.

Parrish's blow into the upper deck came on a 2-2 pitch from Darrell Jackson, 0-4, the fourth Twins pitcher in the game.

Tiger reliever Elias Sosa, 2-1, who came into the game in the 10th after Detroit starter Milt Wilcox had gone the first nine, got the victory.

The Twins got one in the second when Detroit starter Milt Wilcox threw a wild pitch that allowed John Castino to score from third.

Tom Brunansky hit his first major league home run of the season, a solo shot in the Twins' third, and Randy Johnson's sixth homer of the season with Bobby Mitchell on board in the Minnesota seventh tied the score 4-4.

San Diego 6
Montreal 2

MONTREAL (AP) — Chris Welsh threw a four-hitter and drove in two runs to help the San Diego Padres defeat the Montreal Expos 6-2 Saturday.

Welsh, 1-0, allowed the Expos' first run in the second inning when Al Oliver slugged his fourth home run of the season. Welsh took a two-hitter into the ninth inning when Andre Dawson singled, stole second and score on Oliver's single.

The Padres tied the game in the fourth after Expos starter Charlie Lea, 1-2, had retired the first nine batters he faced. Leadoff hitter Alan Wiggins beat out an infield hit, stole second and scored on Ruppert Jones's two-out double.

Aloma's Ruler Jockey Comes Of Age At Preakness

BALTIMORE (AP) — Jack Kaenel, ruled off the tracks last year for being too young, came of age Saturday by winning the Preakness Stakes at Pimlico Race Course.

In riding Aloma's Ruler to victory in the 1 3-16-mile classic, the precocious 16-year-old became the youngest rider to win the race in modern times and held off a stretch bid by 50-year-old Bill Shoemaker aboard the favored runner-up Linkage.

Asked his reaction after whipping the dean of all riders, just as he predicted earlier in the week, Kaenel said: "It feels great. That's the second time I've done it."

Kaenel referred to his triumph aboard Snow Plow over Shoemaker and Ambassador of Luck in the Selima Stakes for 2-year-old fillies at Laurel last October.

Kaenel was out of action for 81 days last year, starting just before the Preakness, when Maryland racing officials confirmed a published story which revealed he was only 15 and below the minimum age of 16.

At the time of his suspension, Kaenel was tied for the lead at Pimlico with 37 winners. When he returned on his 16th birthday at Timonium, he won three races.

Asked if he could have won the Preakness last year if he hadn't been put down, Kaenel quipped: "I didn't have a good horse."

After the race Saturday, and before they dismounted, Kaenel said Shoemaker "congratulated me and said I rode a fine race."

But the two victories in two big races hasn't dimmed Kaenel's respect for the world's all-time winning jockey.

"He's still Mr. Shoemaker," Kaenel said.

Kaenel earned the Preakness ride after winning the Withers Stakes at Aqueduct last Saturday, after three other jockeys were unable to fill the commitment and his agent, Bill Vuotto, offered his services.

Before the Preakness, Kaenel said, he was instructed to hold the pace down as much as he could.

"I got to three quarters in 1:12," Kaenel said, "and I had a lot of horse left. They couldn't catch me from there on in. My horse relaxes very well."

Even when Linkage made his bid at the top of the stretch, Kaenel insisted he wasn't worried.

"He (Aloma's Ruler) really felt sharp," Kaenel said. "I knew he couldn't catch me."

Shoemaker said he thought he was in good position throughout the race, and was confident at the quarter pole that he would overtake the frontrunner.

"My horse was trying and I was gaining on him at the finish," Shoemaker said. "But I ran out of time."

Kaenel said Aloma's Ruler had galloped out gell, indicating the colt who had never run farther than one mile was working up well toward the 1½-mile Belmont Stakes on June 6.

"They (owner Nathan Scherr and trainer John Lenzini Jr.) were worried about a mile and about a mile and three-sixteenths," Kaenel said. "I'm not worried about a mile and a half."

Jockey Jerry Bailey, aboard 41-1 shot Cut Away which finished third, said his colt for much of the time was stuck behind Bold Style, who was running second and apparently content to keep it slow.

"When he got clear," Bailey said, "he finished well."

Leroy Moyers, aboard Bold Style, said of the 26-1 shot: "I wanted to put him on the lead, but we couldn't get there."

Sampson: Staying Makes Me Happy

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — For these basketball players in the future who might have to face the college vs. professional decision three years in a row, Ralph Sampson says, "They'll have to look at their own situation."

"I'm in a unique situation because I go to the University of Virginia and I have good people around me," Sampson said after announcing Friday that he was passing up the National Basketball Association draft for the third straight year to finish his college career with the Cavaliers.

"This is what makes me happy — having the opportunity to get my degree and be in school another year ... You only go around once when you're in that situation," said the 7-foot-4 two-time Player of the Year.

In his three years at Virginia, Sampson twice has been named to the All-American team and has led the Cavaliers to an 83-18 record. That includes the National Invitation Tournament title in 1980 and third place in the NCAA tournament in 1981.

After each season, he has had to make a decision whether to remain at Virginia or turn pro.

After his freshman season, the Boston Celtics were making a pitch for him. Last year, the Dallas Mavericks and Detroit Pistons — the last-place finishers in the NBA's two conferences — made financial offers.

Under a new rule this year, no NBA team could approach him, but the Los Angeles Lakers traded for one of the first two picks and tried to work out a deal with the San Diego Clippers for the other.

Under those circumstances, is it hard to be a Ralph Sampson?

"Not really. I have to go through it, and I realize it," Sampson said. "You just have to deal with it in different ways than other people. A lot of people sometimes don't understand what you have to go through, and sometimes that causes a problem."

Sampson felt he was being used as an experiment by the NBA and the National Collegiate Athletic Association because of the rule change about talking with collegians.

"They were playing with a lot of different rules and didn't know how to really deal with it. There are still a lot of questions to be answered and a lot of ways it could be done," he said. "The rules have changed every year, basically. They're going to change it until they get it right."

The Lakers reportedly offered San Diego $6 million in a trade for its No.1 pick that could have given them a shot at Sampson, who had made no secret of the fact he would like to play for Los Angeles.

San Diego owner Don Sterling said the NBA office had notified the Clippers that any deal with Los Angeles would have to be presented to Commissioner Lawrence O'Brien.

Aloma's Ruler Wins...

Linkage finished 6¾ lengths ahead of Cut Away, the longest shot in the field. Cut Away was two lengths ahead of Bold Style.

It had to be a disappointing defeat for Clark, who skipped the Derby after Linkage had beaten Gato Del Sol in the Blue Grass Stakes April 22. After Clark decided to skip the Derby, Gato Del Sol became the first Derby winner not to start in the Preakness since Tomy Lee in 1959.

Now, the Belmont looms as a showdown between Gato Del Sol and Aloma's Ruler, who missed the Derby because of an injury. Aloma's Ruler was entered in the Preakness after his first-place finish in the Withers Stakes.

After Kaenel guided Aloma's Ruler in the one-mile Withers last week at Aqueduct, Scherr said in the winner's circle: "Next week, we will win the Preakness." And, with a crowd of 80,724 cheering him on, Aloma's Ruler did just that.

Before the race, Lenzini said, "I honestly feel that if he didn't get hurt, I'd have the top 3-year-old right now. I still believe he's the best, but now we have to go out and get it (the division championship)." The son of Iron Ruler took a big step in that direction Saturday.

Aloma's Ruler earned $209,900 from a purse of $279,900, both Preakness records, for Scherr and paid his backers $15.80, $4.60 and $3.60.

Linkage, owned by Jane DuPont Lunger, returned $2.60 and $2.60. Cut Away, the longest shot in the field, owned by Herbert Allen, was $6 to show.

Completing the order of finish were Laser Light, Reinvested and Water Bank. Reinvested was not nominated to the race and cost owner Louis Wolfson $10,000 to supplement. Eight 3-year-olds were entered Thursday, but the filly Cupecoy's Joy was scratched Friday after co-owner Roberto erez became upset about the handling of his ticket request.

Upon arrival at Pimlico, Lenzini had said: "I know we are at a disadvantage as far as preparation is concerned, but this colt might be good enough to overcome it."

Kaenel put Aloma's Ruler on the lead before the field reached the clubhouse turn on the run past the stands the first time, and the colt was good enough to stay there.

Aloma's Ruler led Bold Style, ridden by Leroy Moyers, through the clubhouse turn and into the backstretch, with Cut Away, ridden by Jerry Bailey, third and Linkage fourth. They ran that way down the backstretch and into the turn, then Shoemaker, seeking his third Preakness victory, moved Linkage, the 1-2 favorite, up to challenge.

Smiley Dies In Grinding, Fiery Wreck At Indy

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A grinding, fiery crash involving Gordon Smiley Saturday cast a pall over a day when Rick Mears won the pole position with a speed of 207 mph and seven other drivers topped 200 mph as time trials began for the May 30 Indianapolis 500.

The accident marked the first fatality at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway in nine years.

Smiley, 33, an Indy veteran from Grapevine, Texas, died instantly of massive head injuries when he lost control of his race car and slammed head-on into the third-turn concrete wall during a warmup lap for what was to be his qualifying attempt.

That came about an hour after Kevin Cogan and Mears led off what began as a festive day, with an estimated 200,000 people at the mammoth Speedway.

Cogan, and then Mears, produced the sizzling speeds they expected and shattered the official Speedway records for four-lap qualifying runs on the historic 2½-mile asphalt oval.

Mears, 30, from Bakersfield, Calif., followed the 26-year-old Cogan, from Redondo Beach, Calif., onto the track. Through the luck of the qualifying draw and Cogan's misfortune in blowing an engine in his regular car during the morning's practice, the Penske teammates were the first to attempt to qualify.

Cogan, who trailed only Mears in the speed parade after seven days of scorching practice laps, hopped into the team's backup car, which had drawn the early qualifying position, after his own car had to be towed in. He got in a few practice laps then led off the time trials with a 10-mile qualifying set averaging 204.082 mph, with a one-lap high of 204.638.

Mears, second in the qualifying line after a few competitors chose to pass their turns, then knocked his teammate off the pole position with a qualifying run averaging 207.004. His fast lap was a scorching 207.612 mph.

Those eight laps, lasting less than six minutes, ended Tom Sneva's reign as the Indy speed champion. Sneva set the old records of 202.156 for four laps and 203.620 for one lap in 1978.

Smiley, trying for his third straight Indy start, was going about 185 mph on his final warmup lap when he lost control, over-steered to the right and veered squarely into the concrete wall. The new Cosworth-powered March race car burst into flames and scattered debris several hundred feet down the track.

Photos showed Smiley's helmet flying out of the wreckage on impact with the wall. He was pried out of the vehicle and taken to the Speedway infield hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

Smiley was the first fatality at the Speedway since 1973, when drivers Art Pollard and Swede Savage and pit crewman Armando Teran died in separate incidents. Thirty-eight drivers are among 62 who have died at the Speedway since it opened as a test track in 1909.

"You never get used to something like this," said Smiley's car owner, Bob Fletcher, who, ironically, was also Pollard's car owner in 1973. "You hope it doesn't happen, but you have to realize that it can happen.

"It wouldn't have made any difference if he was going only 170 (mph). Anytime you hit a brick wall head-on, it's not going to make a difference."

Defending champion Bobby Unser, who now is team manager for Josele Garza and has not yet decided if he will compete here this month, said, "Most people think race drivers are pretty cold. We are just professionals. We get very sad when something like this happens, but it's won't ruin the weekend. No matter how bad you feel, it (the death) is permanent. Nothing can be done afterward."

Nine drivers qualified before Smiley's wreck. Among the qualifiers after a three-hour delay for repairs to the gouged pavement at the crash site was four-time winner A.J. Foyt, who earned a record 25th consecutive Indy start.

Foyt, 47, took the outside spot on the front row at 203.332, giving him a record seventh front-row start — four from the pole and three from the outside position. He later said he did not expect he would be able to match Mears' and Cogan's speeds during the race.

"To be honest with you, they have done such a fantastic job, the only thing I can hope for is to stay up with them all day and hope Lady Luck falls my way. We would need to make some changes in the race car (to catch the two Penske cars), which we can't do at this late date," Foyt said. "All I want to do is finish 500 miles."

Foyt, who was seriously injured in a crash at the Michigan International Speedway last July, called Smiley's death "a terrible tragedy."

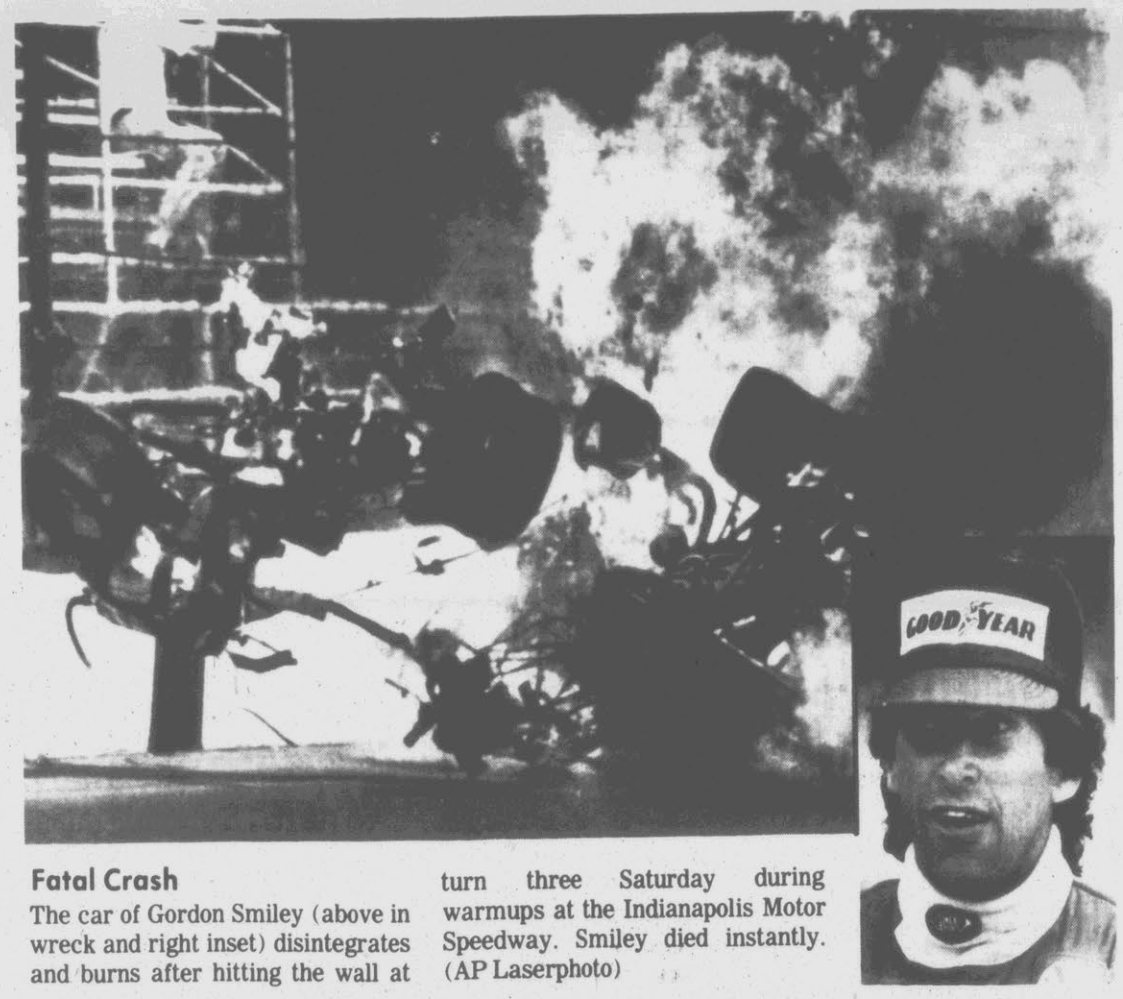

"You're never ready for something like that, at least I never am," said Foyt. "These cars are safe, until you just hit wrong. It's just like the old (race) cars. I don't care if you're in a Sherman tank, if you hit wrong, it's all over."

In all, 20 drivers qualified on Saturday, the first of four days of time trials. The tentative field includes seven rookies. The fastest first-year driver was Chip Ganassi, 23, of Pittsburgh, who qualified in the middle of the fourth row at 197.704 mph.

Another session of time trials is set for Sunday from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. EDT, with two more days of qualifying scheduled next weekend. When the 33 spots on the grid are filled, the slowest of the qualifiers, no matter their position, can be bumped by a faster car. The 33 fastest qualifiers start the race.

North Seizes Six-Stroke Advantage At Colonial

(Scores, page B-8)

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The third round of the $350,000 Colonial National Invitation Tournament Saturday was like old times for former U.S. Open champion Andy North.

"It's nice to be leading a tournament again ... it's been awhile," he said, after seizing the 54-hole lead with a 6-under-par 204.

North holed a 35-foot birdie putt on the final green to post a 2-stroke lead oveb Jack Nicklaus, Danny Edwards and Jerry Pate.

It was the first time North had led a tournament after 54 holes since he won the 1978 U.S. Open at Cherry Hills in Denver. That was the last time he took first place.

He was tied for the lead after 54 holes of the Hawaiian Open, but finished fourth.

"I'm hitting the ball very solid and I've been very pleased with my play," said North. "I have no idea what I must shoot tomorrow. I can remember watching a tournament on television here one year when Gene Littler came out of the pack and finished an hour ahead of everyone and won."

Nicklaus, who had 35 putts, said, "Tee to green, I played the best round of golf I have played all year. And that ended it. That's about as good a round as I can play ... I just didn't make a putt."

Nicklaus came home in even par 70 and Pate shaved a shot off par with a 69.

Edwards carved out the day's hottest round with a 4-under-par 66 as he joined Nicklaus and Pate at 206.

Succumbing to the pressure of playing with Nicklaus was 36-hole leader Lennie Clements, who staggered to a 75 and was six shots back at even par 210.

Tom Kite, the leading money winner on the 1981 Professional Golfers' Association tour, faded to a 4-over-par 74 and was at even par.

North went out in 1-under-par 34 and came home in 33 on the backside. He made a 10-foot birdie putt on the 14th hole and saved par by getting it up and down out of a bunker on 16.

North then sank a 35-foot snake on the final hole for birdie, raising his arms in triumph before the ball disappeared because he knew he was on target.

Defending qhampion Fuzzy Zoeller had the day's most bizarre effort with a 31-41—72 and was 3-over 213.

North, who finished second in two tournaments last year, has won $34,961 on the tour this year. He best finish was fourth in the Hawaii Open.

Whitworth Seeking Record Win

ATLANTA (AP) — Kathy Whitworth, seeking an all-time LPGA record 83rd victory, shot a 4-under-par 68 Saturday and took a one-shot lead after the second round of the $150,000 Lady Michelob Golf Tournament.

Whitworth, who recorded her 82nd victory one month ago, is tied with one of women's golf's all-time stars, Mickey Wright, at the top of the LPGA victory list.

Whitworth, 42, is ahead of rookie Kelly Fuiks and Julie Stanger Pyne, who had shared the first-round lead with matching 68s.

Fuiks, who turned professional 10 months ago, had a 70 Saturday and was alone in second place at 6-under-par 138, one shot behind Whitworth.

Pyne had a 71-139, and two other players were deadlocked at 140, Pat Bradley and Barbara Moxness. Bradley, winless this season, got back into the hunt with a 68 and Moxness had her second consecutive 70.

"I'm just trying to play as well as I can," said Whitworth. "If I play well enough, I'll win. If I don't, I won't. Winning takes care of itself."

Whitworth had a bogey-free round. She had her first birdie on the fourth hole from four feet, and got another when she sank a 15-footer on the ninth green of the 6,123-yard Brookfield West Golf and Country Club course.

Whitworth knocked in a 15-footer on the 11th green and came back with a 25-footer at No.12 before parring in the rest of the way.

"I felt like I could have shot lower today," she said. "I got a bad break on 10 when I hit the pin and it rolled back off the green."

Whitworth also said she failed on potential birdie putts in the 12-15 foot range on the 13th, 15th and 16th holes.

"I let two or three of them get away real quick and that got me real hot," she said.

Asked if she were nervous going into Sunday's final round, Whitworth said, "Absolutely. I'm always nervous when the final round comes around. I think if you ever lose that, it ceases to be fun."

Beverly Klass and Sue Ertl each fired 70s for 141 totals and Janet Coles and Myra Van Hoose were deadlocked at 142.

Boston Loses Archibald

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Guard Nate Archibald of the Boston Celtics dislocated his left shoulder Saturday in the third game of the National Basketball Association's Eastern Conference playoff finals against the Philadelphia 76ers and was lost for the remainder of the series.

Dr. Thomas Silva, the Celtics' team physician, said Archibald would not be able to play in the rest of the best-of-seven series.

The playmaking guard, who averaged 13.5 points and 36 minutes played in the first two games of the series, was hurt two minutes into the first quarter when he dove in a race for the ball with Philadelphia's Maurice Cheeks.

This is how much diesel you should expect for $12,400 today.

From the second-largest carmaker in Europe comes the Peugeot 505 Diesel. So high is its quality—and so well is it equipped—that some observers think it may well be undervalued in today's market.

The $12,390* price of the Peugeot 505 Diesel includes this impressive roster of equipment:
- Power-assisted steering
- Power-assisted 4-wheel disc brakes
- Reclining front seats
- 4-speed gearbox
- 4-wheel independent suspension
- Michelin steel-belted radial tires
- Bronze-tinted windows
- Electrically heated rear window

Also available: turbocharged-diesel and fuel-injected gasoline models, priced from $16,175 to $10,990.

See your dealer for details of Peugeot's limited warranties.

Manufacturer's P.O.E. suggested retail prices. Actual prices may vary according to dealer. Destination charges ($255), state and local taxes, dealer preparation, if any, and license fees are extra.

Re-Roofing? Buy Now And Save 5 Years.

Installation extra. Ask us about arranging an installer. Stop by today!

CertainTeed Fiberglass Shingles are warranted for 20 years — 5 years longer than ordinary asphalt. And they're priced the same.

The fiberglass mat makes the difference. It repels moisture more effectively than the mat under regular asphalt shingles. The result is a tough, longer-lasting roof.

$7.33 Per Bundle
$21.99 Square

Self-sealing adhesive strips are activated by the sun, bonding the shingles into a single, weatherproof shield that can resist winds up to 60 miles per hour. The shingles are also resistant to blistering, warping and "cupping."

Just because they're tough doesn't mean they're not attractive. These handsome shingles are available in a variety of colors, from basic black to rustic earthtone shades.

So, if you're thinking about re-roofing, come on by Lowe's and buy now. Because not only will you get a very rugged, durable and beautiful roof — you'll save five years!

Coca-Cola Suffers No-Hitter, But Wins Anyway

Babe Ruth

Coca-Cola 6
Brown-Wood 4

Coca-Cola struck for five runs in the third inning to erase a three-run deficit en route to a 6-4 victory over Brown-Wood Saturday afternoon in a preseason Babe Ruth baseball game.

Tony Taylor and Brian Bridges combined for a no-hitter for Brown-Wood, but errors and walks cost B-W the gmae.

Brown-Wood took a 3-0 lead in the first inning on Tony Taylor's three-run home run. The score remained at 3-0 until the third when Coke rallied for five runs.

Tyrone Barrett walked to open the inning, Billy Overton reached on an error and Paul Hill walked to load the bases. Billy Michel walked to force home Barrett.

Tray Fuqua then walked to bring home Overton to make it 3-2. Hill then scored on an error to tie the game at 3-3. Tony Rosche followed with a sacrifice fly to score Michel to break the tie. Fuqua later scored on a wild pitch to make it 5-3.

Brown-Wood cut the deficit to 5-4 in the fifth when William Smith walked and came around to score. Coke got the run back in the bottom of the inning and held on for the win.

Brown-Wood was led by Kirkland with two hits.

Planters Bank 9
Wachovia 9

Planters Bank rallied for four runs in the fifth inning and came away with a 9-9 tie with Wachovia in a preseason Babe Ruth baseball game Saturday afternoon.

The game ended in the fifth with the score tied. League officials decided before the game ties would not be continued into extra innings.

Jordie Smith had two hits for Planters Bank. Wachovia was led by Dwight Smith and Ricky Outlaw with three hits. William Ward had a solo home run in the first inning.

Famous Subs 8
Pepsi-Cola 7

Tommy Warren singled in Steve Wall in the top of the sixth inning to give Famous Subs an 8-7 victory over Pepsi-Cola Saturday afternoon in a preseason Babe Ruth baseball game.

The score was tied at 7-7 going into the sixth. Wall reached on an error to open the inning, stole second and went to third on sacrifice fly by Chris Hillard.

Warren then singled to bring Hillard home with the go-ahead run. Pepsi-Cola had a man on second in the bottom of the inning but could not get him across the plate.

Pepsi scored three runs in the first to take a 3-0 lead, but Famous Subs came back to score two runs in the first, sparked by a solo home run by Van Austin. Subs then scored three runs in the second to take a 5-3 lead.

Pepsi tied the game with two runs in the third on singles by Sterling Edwards and Lane Odom.

Pepsi then took the lead with two runs in the fifth but Famous Subs countered with two runs of their own to tie the game once more.

Pepsi was led by Edwards, Odom and Kelly Parrisher, all of whom had two hits. Famous Subs was led by Austin with two hits.

Prep League

1st State Bank 18
Shop-eze 3

First State Bank scored seven runs in the third inning and coasted to an 18-3 win over Shop-eze Foodland Saturday afternoon in a Prep League baseball game.

First State scored three runs in the first inning to take a lead it never lost. Tracey Johnson led off with a double and stole third. With one gone, Jimmy Gillihan walked to put runners at the corners.

Eric Jarman followed with a single to score Johnson and Gillihan. Jarman then moved up on a passed ball and scored when Mike Wooten reached on an error to make it 3-0.

Shop-eze got one run back in the second but First State erupted for seven runs in the third to put the game away. A triple by Tim Bland and doubles by Jarman and Axel Smith keyed the uprising.

First State added three more runs in the fourth and fifth and scored two runs in the seventh. Shop-eze scored once in the fifth and once in the sixth for its three-run total.

Cam Evans had two hits for Shop-eze and Tim West had a double. Jarman had four hits, including a two-run home run in the seventh. Johnson had three hits and Gillihan two.

Auto Speciality 16
Hendrix & Dail 13

Tom Taylor scored on an error in the sixth for the go-ahead run and Auto Speciality scored twice in the seventh to come away with a 16-13 victory over Hendrix & Dail Saturday afternoon in a Prep League baseball game.

H&D took a 3-0 lead in the first, keyed by Anthony Cobb's double, but AS then scored nine runs in the top of the third to take a 9-3 lead. H&D scored three more runs in the third to close the gap to 9-6.

AS upped its lead to 13-6 with four runs in the fourth before H&D started its extended comeback. H&D scored once in the bottom of the fourth and then added six runs in the fifth to tie the game at 13-13.

AS took the lead again — this time for good — in the sixth. Taylor singled to open the inning and, with two gone, went to second when Tim Joyner walked. An error then allowed Wiley Hines to reach and Taylor to score to give AS a 14-13 lead.

AS scored two runs in the top of the seventh when Rodney Harris tripled home Travis King and Harris came home one a double by Chris Meeks.

Greg Jones and Clay Young each had three hits for H&D. Anthony Cobb had two hits for H&D, including a solo home run in the fifth. Meeks and Chuck Doaks both had three hits for AS. King and Harris had two hits for AS.

Harris had a double and triple while Doaks had a triple. Meeks had two doubles.

Little League

Lions 3
Optimist 1

Pitcher Jarvis Groome allowed Optimist only two hits, both singles. One came in the second and the other ame in the third.

The Lions took a 1-0 lead in the third when, with two outs, Tom Moye doubled and came around to score on two wild pitches. The Optimist tied it up in the fourth when David Tinglestad reached on an error, went to second on a passed ball and stole third. He scored on a wild pitch.

The Lions regained the lead for good in the fifth. Barwick walked to open the inning, stole second and went to third on a wild pitch. Then, with two gone, Harris singled to score Barwick and the Lions led, 2-1.

Coca-Cola 5

Union Carbide rallied from a four-run deficit to defeat Coca-Cola, 7-5, Saturday afternoon in a North State Little League baseball game.

UC took a 1-0 lead in the top of the first when Billy Turcotte tripled and scored on Abram Lang's double. But, Coke came back to score four runs in the home half of the inning to take a 4-1 lead.

The inning was sparked by Eddie White's two-run home run and singles by Andy Miller and Mike Smith. Coke upped its lead to 5-1 in the second when Tony Evans singled and came around to score on a wild pitch.

UC began its come back in the third when Morris Johnson hit a three-run home run to make it 5-4. UC tied the game in the fourth when Andre Hopkins walked, went to second on a balk and to third on a passed ball. He scored on a ground out by Paul Powers.

UC then took the lead in the fifth. Kevin Fisher singled to open the inning and went to second on Jonathan Powell's single. An error allowed both runners to move up a base before Johnson walked to load the bases.

A second error in the inning allowed both Fisher and Powell to score to give UC a 7-5 lead — a lead it never lost.

Fisher and Lang each had two hits for UC. Jay Sorles and Eddie White had two hits for Coke.

Exchange 4

Wellcome scored 13 runs in the third inning and then coasted to an easy 21-4 victory over Exchange Saturday afternoon in a Tar Heel Little League baseball game.

Wellcome got all the runs it needed in the second when it scored six times. Three straight walks loaded the bases and Judd Crumpler then reached on an error to score two runs.

Dallas McPherson then walked to force home another run. Greg VanScoy then reached on a fielder's choice to score another run before McPherson scored on a wild pitch. Chris Brown doubled home the final run of the inning.

Wellcome then sealed the win with 13 runs in the third. Exchange scored two runs in the fourth and sixth.

Wellcome scored two runs in the fourth.

McPherson had two hits for Wellcome. Dwain Williams had two hits for Exchange.

Pepsi-Cola 15
Moose 10

Pepsi-Cola scored nine runs in the third inning to erase a two-run deficit and beat Moose, 15-10, Saturday afternoon in a Tar Heel Little League baseball game.

Moose took a 2-0 lead in the second when Rob Barnes singled home L.L. Everett and Jay Mattox, but Pepsi came back to score nine runs in the bottom of the third to take a lead it never lost.

Mike Kelly doubled home two runs in the inning to tie the game at 2-2 and later scored on a single by Eric Huber to give Pepsi-Cola a 3-2 lead. Three straight walks, an error and a wild pitch brought home three more runs to make it 5-2.

Rivera singled home two more runs with a double and Kelly followed with a two-run double of his own to make it 9-2.

Moose cut the gap to 9-5 in the top of the fourth before Pepsi scored four runs in the fourth to make it 13-5. The lead went to 15-5 in the fifth before Moose scored five runs in the sixth to cut the gap to five.

Kelly had four hits to lead Pepsi. John Carawan had two hits for the winners. No one had more than one hit for Moose.

Ex-DHC Wrestler Earns A-A Honors

CINCINNATI — Ex-D.H. Conley wrestler James Johnson earned All-Amerian honors for the fifth time here by finishing fourth in the National AAU championships.

Johnson, who is a 1976 graduate of D.H. Conley and the Vikings first state champion, lost to Mike Evans, 9-4, of Athletes in Action in the third place match to end up fourth in the 220-pound class.

Johnson pinned John Schulz (1:09) and Mike Ferrara (0:14) in the first two rounds before losing to Greg Gibson, 10-2. Gibson, who competes for the U.S. Marine team, is a world and national champion in three different wrestling styles.

Johnson then pinned Jeff Simans at 1:26 before losing to Evans to finish fourth in the Greco style tournament.

The fourth place finish not only earns Johnson all-american honors but also earns him a tryout in August for the World Games. Johnson, after graduating from Conley, attending the University of Kentucky. He graduated from UK in 1981.

Johnson also earned All-American honors in 1975 by winning the Eastern Junior National title of the U.S. Wrestling Federation. He wrestled freestyle in the event.

Then, in 1976, he was the first North Carolina wrestler to be named a high school All-American when he finished third in the USWF Junior Nationals.

In 1977, he was named to the freshman honorable mention team by Amateur Wrestling News.

Then, in April of this year, he finished fourth in the USWF nationals in Greco-style wrestling.

DHC Wrestlers Finish First

DURHAM — Three D.H. Conley wrestlers finished first and a fourth was second in a U.S. Wrestling Federation tournament held at Southern Durham Saturday.

D.H. Conley coach Milt Sherman beat Vincent Bynum, 6-4, of N.C. State and Scott Williams of Durham to win the 142-pound open division class title.

Lorenzo Strong and William Bridgett also took first places in 154 pounds and 165 pounds respectively. Willie Greene was second at 178 pounds.

Strong pinned Ricky Smith of Durham at 2:32 and then defeated Paul Smith, 9-0, for the title. Smith won the state championship for Wilson Beddingfield this past season.

Bridgett pinned Kenneth Jones (2:20), Tony Harris (2:15) and Bernard Weiger (2:45) of Durham en route to his first place finish.

Greene, meanwhile, pinned Jason Faucette of Burlington at 2:27 and decisioned Chris Moore of DUnn, 9-4, before losing in the title match to Jay Stainback by a pin at 2:59.

K.C.'s Blue Injures Leg

The Royals said Blue, 32, pulled his adductor muscle on the final pitch of the top of the first inning as he struck out Carney Lansfordof the Red Sox.

Blue, who missed two starts earlier this season with a sore left shoulder, went to his hands and knees after delivering the pitch as catcher John Wathan threw to second base to nail Tony Perez attempting to steal.

Pirates Advance Into Finals

HARRISONBURG, Va. — John Hallow and Todd Hendley each hit solo home runs and East Carolina turned three double plays as the Pirates withstood a 15-hit attack by Catholic to capture a 7-4 victory Friday afternoon to move into the finals of the ECAC-South Tournament.

ECU, now 32-12, was to have played the winner of the Old Dominion-Catholic game yesterday afternoon. ODU defeated James Madison, 5-4, Friday, to set up the noon meeting with Catholic.

A victory Saturday would have given the Pirate an automatic berth in the NCAA playoffs. A loss would forced a second game Sunday in the double-elimination tournament.

ECU jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the home half of the first when Hallow hit a 2-0 pitch over the rightfield fence for his second home run of the season. It was a lead short-lived, however.

Catholic came back to tie the game in the second when Dan Cassidy singled up the middle to score Bob Lewindowski. Cassidy then tried to steal second, but ECU catcher Fran Fitzgerald gunned him down. It was the first time a Catholic player has been thrown out in 40 steal attempts this season.

Catholic, now 20-13, then took the lead in the third when Mike Tryon singled down the leftfield line to score Mark Siciliano. Siciliano had singled with one gone in the inning.

The Pirates, however, regained the lead in the third for good, thanks to an error by Siciliano at shortstop.

David Wells walked to open the inning and went to second on Mike Sorrell's single. Then, with one gone, Todd Evans reached on a fielder's choice, with Sorrell being forced out at second.

Fitzgerald then grounded to Siciliano, who misplayed the ball allowing both Wells and Evans to score and give ECU a 3-2 lead. Fitzgerald subsequently scored on Kelly Robinette's single to up the lead to 4-2.

A solo home run by Hendley upped the lead to 5-2 in the fifth and the Pirates then pushed their lead to 6-2 in the sixth.

With one gone, Robert Wells singled. David Wells followed with a double but Robert Wells was cut down at the plate on a throw from right. Sorrell then doubled to score David Wells to make it 6-2.

Catholic came back with two runs in the top of the seventh to cut the deficit to 6-4. With one gone, Cassidy singled and went to second when Geoff Mack reached on an error.

Siciliano then singled to left to load the bases. Tryon followed with a single to score to score Cassidy. Don Kemp then singled home Mack to narrow the gap to two runs.

It was as close as Catholic got, however. ECU scored an insurance run in the eighth when David Wells doubled into the left-centerfield gap to score Jack Curlings, who singled to open the inning.

David Wells, Sorrell and Hendley all had two hits for ECU. Cassidy had three hits to lead Catholic.

ECU pitcher Bob Patterson went the distance for the win, striking out eight and walking none. It was the second straight game in which an ECU pitcher has gone the distance and not allowed a walk.

Patterson gave up 15 hits and two of Catholic's four runs were earned, but Patterson was helped by the three ECU double plays — the most in one game this season for the Pirates.

A bases-loaded walk to Tony Morris with two out in the ninth inning forced home the winning run as top-seeded Old Dominion rallied for a 5-4 victory that ousted two-time defending champion James Madison in the opening game Friday afternoon.

Host James Madison, the No. 2-seeded team which finished 40-15-1, scored four runs in the eighth inning of the first game to take a 4-3 lead over Old Dominion, but the Monarchs battled back against starter Joe Hall and reliever Justin Gannon, who took the loss.

Hall was relieved by Gannon after Terry Bell's second double and third hit of the game. Bob Bailey beat out a bunt and Lennie Koperna singled home Bell to tie the score. A sacrifice and a strikeout followed, but Joe Millis was walked intentionally and Morris unintentionally to force home the winning run.

The Dukes put runners on first and second gith one out in the bottom of the ninth, but Jim Ambrose, 10-3 — who scattered 11 hits while walking two and striking out five — got the next two batters.

James Madison loaded the bases with two out in the eighth. One run scored when Dennis Knight beat out an infield hit and two more scored on a wild throw on the hit. Randy Faulconer's single drove in the fourth run.

Morris hit a two-run homer in the eighth to give Old Dominion a 3-0 lead at that point. A walk, an infield out and Bell's first double accounted for ODU's other run in the fourth.

OUTDOORS With Joe Albea

WITN-TV IN WASHINGTON has begun a unique service for fishing and hunting enthusiasts by offering the "Fish and Game Forecast," a graphic display of wildlife activity.

Devloped by two avid fisherman dissatisfied by available indicators, the forecast uses the computerized combination of nearly all known long- and short-range factors which cause fish and wildlife to become active on an hour by hour basis.

Long range predictable factors are based on invisible forces, such as the sun's and moon's graviational pull, and visible forces, like daylight and darkness and transition period between the two. Also used are daily factors that have become established as fact through biological reserarch studies.

Weather conditions, mating rites and seasonal spawnings come under the category of short-term factors. For example, a coming storm causes a period of high activity among all wildlife, so fishing is best within 24 hours of the storm's arrival.

This is also a time of high bird activity due to increased insect movement and generally high atmospheric pressure. Conversely, several days of unchaning weather causes fish activity to slow down.

In combination, the long- and short-range elements work like this: the long range is fed into a computer, establishing the basis for the "Biological Timeclock" by which most living things run. Then, the computer uses local weather, mating habits and spawning patterns native to the area in question to adjust predictions for the area.

The results are shown on a graph that illustrates the peak activity time for game and fish for each 24-hour period. The desired outcome from this scientific prediction should be an increased success rate of 66% if hunting and fishing are restricted to the good and excellent zones shown on the graph during a given year.

TV-7's Fish and Game Forecast will be a part of each weathercast weekdays in Almanac and Monday through Saturday inthe 6 and 11 p.m. editions of EyeWITNess News.

NATIONAL HUNTING & FISHING POSTER CONTEST — Youngsters can win one of some 52 national national prizes, including a $1,000 U.S. Savings Bond by taking part in the fifth annual National Hunting and Fishing Day Poster Contest. Hundreds of additional prizes will be awarded in local NHF Day Poster Contests throughout the country.

The National Grand Prize of a $1,000 bond will be awarded to the youngster who best illustrates the 1982 contest theme — "Sportsmen and Conservation Working Together." The NHF Day Poster contest is designed to foster an increased awareness of the need to conserve natural and wildlife resourses and the important role sportsmen splay in America's conservation efforts.

In order to be considered for the national awards, posters must first be winners in a locally sponsored National Hunting and Fishing Day Poster Contest. On the local level, contests can be organized by schools, sportsmen's clubs, conservation or civic groups, newspaper, etc. To give youngsters time to research and prepare their posters, it is preferable that contests be organized as soon as possible.

NHF Day Headquarters suggests that entries in local contests be displayed and judged at nearby NHF Day programs on Sept. 25, if possible. Prizes for local winners may be awared by sponsoring organization. Winning posters should then be sent to NHF Day Headquarters for national judging. The deadline for submission of local prize-winning posters for the national contest is Nov. 1, 1982.

For information on how to sponsor or participate in a local National Hunting and Fishing Day Poster Contest, please write: NHF Day Poster Contest, P.O. Box 1075, Riverside, Ct. 06878.

FISHING REPORT

Salterwater — Grey trout have started migrating through Wallace Channel off Portsmouth Island. Try a Boone's Shad rig with a small piece of shrimp. If the trout are thick you won't need any shrimp.

Blue fish (10-12-pound class) have been a nuisance with the drum fisherman near Oregon Inlet.

Small flounder and croakers are biting (moderately) on Core banks.

Freshwater — Fishing has picked up since the weather settled. Reports from around eastern Carolina show good catches of largemouth bass and bluegills. Live crickets are the hottest bait going.

What's The Law On . . .

What's the law on...motorboat numbering requirements:

Every motorboat on the waters of this State shall be numbered. The term "motorboat" means any vessel equipped with propulsion machinery of any type, whether or not such machinery is the principal source of propulsion: Provided, that "propulsion machinery" as used in this section shall not include any electric motor when used as the only means of mechanical propulsion of any vessel: Provided further, that the term "motorboat" shall not include a vessel which has a valid document issued by the Bureau of Customs of the United States or any federal agency successor therto.

All boats must be numbered and the assisgned numbers affixed, as required by law, before they are operated with any motor or other mechanical type of propulsion, except:

1. Motorboats operating under a valid temporary certificate of number;

2. Racing motorboats, the operation of which on the waters of the State of North Carolina consists exclusively of competing in boat races which have been authorized by the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission or the U.S. Coast Guard;

3. Vessels documented by the United States Bureau of Customs or any federal agency successor thereto;

4. Foreign vessels using our waters temporarily;

5. Boats owned by the United States or by a state, county, or municipality;

6. Ships' lifeboats;

7. Boats propelled solely by electric motors. (This exemption does not apply when such boats are operated on the waters of another state, nor does the federal law permit the exemption when they are operated on waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States within this State.)

Boats which are propelled manually or by sail alone are not required to be numbered, although they may be numbered in accordance with established procedure if the owners so desire.

The responsibility for having a boat numbered rests upon the person or persons who own the boat. This does not include a person who rents or leases a boat from another person, or one who holds a mortgage on a boat. However, it is the duty of the rentee or lessee not to operate a motor on any unnumbered boat which he rents or leases.

Next week: What's the law on...obtaining a motorboat certificate of number.

Hines Leads Tigers Past Pam Pack, 4-3

WILLIAMSTON — Tim Hines tripled home a pair of runs to key a three-run rally in the sixth and lead Williamston to a 4-3 win over Washington Friday in a Northeastern Conference baseball game.

Williamston, now 11-7 overall and 8-5 in the league, saw a scoreless tie broke in the fifth when Washington struck for two runs. Williamston countered with a run in the bottom of the inning, but the Pam Pack got the run back in the top of the sixth.

The Tigers then took the lead in the bottom of the inning and held on for the win.

James Ward singled to open the inning and went to third on Keith Bryant's double. Hines then tripled home both runs to make it 3-3. Keith Perry then singled home Hines with the go-ahead run to make it 4-3.

Hines led Williamston with two hits in three at bats. He had a double and triple. Seth Edwards was two for three for Washington.

Ed Pippin went the distance on the mound for the win. He struck out 10 and walked seven and allowed the Pam Pack only five hits.

ECU Women Stay Alive In Slow-Pitch Tournament

GRAHAM — East Carolina slipped past Western Carolina, 6-4, Friday to remain as one of four teams still alive in the chase for the AIA National Slow-Pitch softball title.

ECU opened the day with a 10-6 loss to UNC-Charlotte but came back to down Western Carolina and stave off elimination.

The Lady Pirates, now 42-12, were to have played the University of Florida yesterday morning. A loss would eliminate ECU.

A win, however, would have put the Lady Pirates up against UNCC, with the winner playing Florida State for the title. Game one of the championship matchup was set for 2 p.m. with a second game, if necessary, scheduled for 3:15.

UNCC took advantage of five ECU errors and scored four runs in the first inning to defeat the Lady Pirates in the opener Friday.

UNCC, up 4-2, after the first inning, scored three runs in the third en route to the win. ECU rallied to within 7-6 with three runs in the fifth but UNCC scored twice in the sixth and once in the seventh to seal the win.

Cynthia Shepard was three for four with a double to lead ECU, Yvonne Williams was two for four with a double. Mitzi Davis had a home run.

Sharon Croker, Rita Barrett and Jackie Johnson all had two hits in four at bats for UNCC.

In the second game, ECU scored two runs in the bottom of the sixth to down Western Carolina.

The game was tied, 2-2, at the end of one inning, but ECU took a 4-2 lead with runs in the fourth and fifth. Western came back with a run in the sixth, but the Lady Pirates then scored twice in the bottom of the inning.

Maureen Buck singled and went to third when Shepard reached on an error. Both runners scored on Williams' double.

Western scored its final run in the seventh.

ECU was led by Williams, who was three for four with four RBI. Fran Hooks, Buck and Jeannette Roth were all two for three. Davis was two for four with a double and triple.

Cindy Green led Western with two hits in three at bats.

"It was a good win, I'll tell you that. We just put everything together. I know Ayden-Grifton will be tickled to death."

— Farmville coach Billy Davis

Surprise! Jags Stun CBA, 9-2

FARMVILLE — Farmville Central, three days after losing to Ayden-Grifton, turned around on Friday afternoon and may have presented the defending Eastern Carolina Conference champions with the ECC title.

With Billy Godley scattering six hits and Godley, Wade Corbett and Bobby Carraway driving in two runs each, the Jaguars shocked Charles B. Aycock, 9-2, in a victory that could shatter any hopes the Falcons had of winning the ECC title.

The Falcons went into the game at 8-2 in the conference, one-half game behind Ayden-Grifton, which was idle Friday. The loss drops Aycock to a full game back and gives the Chargers a chance to clinch the title with a win Tuesday night at home against North Pitt.

"It was a good win, I'll tell you that," Farmville Central coach Billy Davis said. "We just put everything together. I know Ayden-Grifton will be tickled to death."

The Jaguars lost the Chargers, 7-3, Tuesday night to start a week that would see them play the top two teams in the conference. The split leaves the Jaguars at 5-13 overall and 3-8 in the league.

Godley led the Jaguars, holding the powerful hitting Falcons to six hits. He struck out eight and issued four walks four en route to upping his season mark to 3-6.

"Godley threw the ball well," Davis said. "He threw a lot of breaking balls early and that sort of got 'em of stride. We got out to the lead early and I think that kind of surprised them."

The Jaguars wasted little time in letting Aycock know they were ready, scoring three runs in the first inning.

Nat Norris singled to open the inning and went to second when Corbett reached on an error. Bobby Carraway then singled to score Norris and Farmville led, 1-0.

After a passed ball allowed both runners to move up a base, Godley followed with a single to score both Corbett and Carraway to up the Jaguars lead to 3-0.

Carraway singled home Norris in the second to build the lead to 4-0. Norris walked to open the inning and went to second on Corbett's single.

Taylor Walston's single in the third pushed the lead to 5-0. Eddie Jones reached on an error and Alvin Baker walked. Both runners moved up a base on Randy Daniels' sacrifice before Walston singled home Jones.

The Falcons finally broke through against Godley in the fourth when Gray Thomas singled home two runs to make it 5-2. But, the Jaguars came back with three runs in the fifth to seal the Falcons' fate.

Baker walked, Daniels single and Sam Sumrell walked to load the bases. Norris then walked to force home Baker and Corbett followed with a single to score Daniels and Sumrell and Farmville led, 8-2.

The Jaguars scored their final run in the sixth.

Andy Bunn led CBA with two hits in four at bats. Farmville was led by Corbett, who was three for four. Carraway was two for four.

Rampants Capture Sectional Crown

TARBORO — Greenville Rose took four first places to easily outdistance some 20 other schools and win the Eastern Sectional Track Meet here Friday afternoon at Tarboro High School.

The Rampants finished with a team score of 133 points to outgun second-place Tarboro, which ended up with 70 points. Wilson Beddingfield was next with 58 points followed by Wilson Fike with 50.

Erskin Evans capture the 100 meters (10.44), Kenny Smith the 1,600 (4:19.70), Harry Williams the 3,200 (9:31.4) and the 800-meter relay team won to lead the Rampants to the win.

Running in the relay team were Frank White, Tyrone Forbes, Roderick Harrell and Edward Frazier.

Farmville Central's Wesley Carmon took one first place, winning the 200-meter dash with a time of 21.89. Carmon was also second in the 100 with a time of 10.81.

Williams also was second in the 1,600 with a time of 4:19.92. Other second places for Rose were: Chris McLawhorn in the long jump (23-4½), Edward Frazier in the 400 (48.8) and Tyrone Forbes in the 800 (time not available).

The Rampants also had five third places. White was third in the high jump (6-6) while Ashley Ferrell was third in the pole vault with a 12-6 leap. Ferrell actually tied for second in height but finished third because he had more misses.

Robert Brown was third in the triple jump (46-4½) while Marty Barnes was third in the high hurdles (no time available). Harrell was third in the 100 with a time of 10.8.

The Rampants' mile relay team was also third.

Those placing in the top three advance to the regionals next Thursday at Wilson Fike.

Willaimston's Brian Purvis was the only other area athlete to finish among the top three. Purvis was second in the high jump with a leap of 6-8. He tied for first with the height but had more misses.

Summary:

High jump — Jackson (NE) 6-8; Purvis (Will) 6-8 (more misses); White (R) 6-6.

wrapped his arms around Wilkes under the basket to prevent an easy layup and Wilkes converted the two free throws for a 126-123 Los Angeles lead with eight seconds left.

San Antonio called a timeout to set up a three-point shot, but McAdoo stole the inbounds pass and drove for the stuff to ensure the Lakers' victory.

The lead changed six times early in the first quarter until Nixon scored nine points and Los Angeles took a 36-27 lead.

George Gervin scored 14 points in the second quarter as the Spurs rallied to cut the lead to 66-64 at halftime.

San Antonio outrebounded the Lakers, 45-40, but the Lakers outshot the Spurs, 58 percent to 50 percent.

Earnhardt Hoping To Capture 500

RACING NEWS

DOVER, Del. — Because Ford products have won the last four Mason-Dixon 500s, Dale Earnhardt believes he can put an end to the recent domination by Darrell Waltrip and Junior Johnson of the NASCAR Winston Cup circuit.

"Dover seems to be a track where the Fords seem to have a slight edge," Earnhard said.

Earnhardt, who ended a 39-race winless Winston Cup streak with his truimph in the CRC Chemicals Rebel 500 at Darlington last month, will be piloting the Bud Moore-prepared Ford Thunderbird here.

"Bud's cars always run well at Dover and it seems to be a track where the Fords do well," Earnhardt added. "And the Wrangler Jeans Machine is going to need that edge to stop Darrell and Junior."

Waltrip, who has won five of the 10 Winston Cup Races run this year in the Johnson-owned Buick, is the only driver to have posted more than one victory on the circuit in 1982.

Waltrip, however, has never won the Mason-Dixon 500.

"It may have been a few years since Junior won a race at Dover, but I have confidence that will all change this time around," said Waltrip, who joined the Johnson-Mountain Dew team at the start of the 1981 season. "The crew has done a great job in preparing the car all year and we could have won two or three more races with a little luck."

Waltrip's second consecutive triumph in the Johnson Buick in last Saturday night's Cracker Barrell 420 at Nashville, increased his belief that he can achieve his 1982 goal of winning 15 races and $1 million.

"I know that sounds like an impossible dream," Waltrip said, "but this team can do it. If we are able to win the Winston Cup championship again we've got a chance to win $1 million.

"I won (a record) $693,342 last year and that didn't count the $70,000 I got for winning the Busch Clash. With the increased Winston money for winning the title, we can hit the million dollar mark."

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. boosted the 1982 Winston Cup point fund to $300,000 an revised the payoff format. If Waltrip can overtake point leader Terry Labonte by the midway point and go on to repeat as the champion he will receive a check for $100,000 from Winston cigarettes, the series sponsor.

Last year he won $60,000 from Winston.

Entering the Mason-Dixon 500, Waltrip trails Labonte by 60 points, 1,580 to 1,520. With a third of the season gone, Waltrip has won $252,040. In the first 10 races last year, he took home $157,085.

While Waltrip ranks as the favorite for the Dover event, the success for Ford products at the track have lifted the hopes of Earnhardt, Neil Bonnett and defending champion Jody Ridley.

"We haven't run as well as we thought we would this year," Ridley said, "except at Rockingham and Darlington. Hopefully, since Rockingham and Dover are both mile tracks that means we will run good a Dover.

"It sure would be nice to win it again. Our luck is due to change. It has been bad so far this year."

GCA Rally Falls Short In State Playoffs

WILMINGTON — Greg Walker hit a three-run home run and Kerwin Christian Academy held off a furious seventh-inning come back by Greenville Christian Academy to defeat the Knights, 12-11, Friday in the first round of the N.C. Christian Association state playoffs.

Kerwin, now 8-1, led, 12-4, going into the seventh; but the Knights rallied for seven runs to close within one before reliever Tom Ball induced catcher Jerry Simpson to pop out for the final out.

Steve Dilda and John Parnell walked to open the top of the seventh. Simpson then followed with a single to score Dilda and move Parnell to third. Simpson then stole second and Troy Hudson walked to load the bases.

Joel Mason then walked with two gone to score Parnell and chase starter Jim Page. Ball did little better, however, as he walked Joseph Sasser and Billy Stancil to force in two more runs.

Dilda then reached on an error to score another run. Walks to Parnell and David Hollingsworth scored two more runs and made it 12-11. But, Ball then forced Simpson to pop out to second to end the game.

GCA, which ends the season at 8-5, jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the top of the first when Daren O'Brien singled to score Simpson and Hudson. With two gone, Simpson reached on an error and stole second. Hudson followed with a single and also stole second before O'Brien's single.

Kerwin battled back with three runs in the bottom of the inning to take a 3-2 lead — a lead that was threatened but never lost. Kerwin added three more runs in the third to go up, 6-2.

The lead went to 7-2 in the fourth before the Knights, seeded fifth in the tournament, rallied for two runs in the fifth to make it 7-4.

Kerwin, seeded third in the tourney, then struck for five runs in the fifth, sparked by Walker's three-run home run, to make it 12-4, and Kerwin appeared headed for an easy win over the Knights.

As it turned out, however, it was anything but easy as the Knights rallied for seven runs in the seventh.

Hudson led GCA with three hits in three at bats. Walker was three for four for Kerwin. No one else had more than one hit.

Two Homers In 7th Sink Rams, 7-6

STANHOPE — Elvis Perry's solo home run with one gone in the bottom of the seventh — the second of the inning — gave Southern Nash a come-from-behind 7-6 victory over Greene Central Friday afternoon in an Eastern Carolina Conference baseball game.

Southern Nash went into the home half of the seventh trailing, 6-5, after the Rams had broke the tie in the top of the inning. But the Firebirds would not be denied.

Carl Brightman led off the inning with a home run off Greene Central's Donald Warren to tie the game at 6-6. Warren had replaced starter Elmer Dixon in the fourth.

Perry, with one out, then hit his solo shot off Warren to give the Firebirds the victory over the Rams.

Southern Nash jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first and upped its lead to 4-0 on a three-run home run by Terry Best in the third. The lead went to 5-0 in the fourth before the Rams finally scored.

The Rams rallied for five runs in the fifth, sparked by Chris Ginn's grand slam home run, to tie the game.

John Mayo, who was three for three on the day, singled and Ritchie Chase and Dana Harrell both reached on fielder's choices to load the bases. Mayo then came home on a wild pitch to make it 5-1.

The Rams took the lead in the top of the seventh only to see the Firebirds come back with two in the home half of the inning to win.

The loss drops Greene Central to 12-10 overall and 6-5 in the ECC.

Brightman was two for two for Southern Nash. Best and Perry were both two for four.

First Federal 8
True Value 2

First Federal struck for all eight of its runs in the fifth to erase a two-run deficit and beat True Value, 8-2, Friday in a Tar Heel Little League baseball game.

True Value jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the second when Bobby Bell doubled and scored on an error. True Value upped its lead to 2-0 in the third when Chris Bender singled, stole second and later scored on a passed ball.

The lead stayed at 2-0 until the fifth when First Federal sent 12 batters to the plate and scored eight runs.

In the inning, First Federal had five straight batters get singles: John Bolen, Mark Holloman, Stacy Best, Frankie Pugh, Trey Dunsey. It was those five singles that keyed the uprising.

Holloman had two hits for First Federal. Bender and Bell each had two hits for True Value. Both players had a double.

Kiwanis 17
Sportsworld 1

Kiwanis scored at least two runs in every inning to wallop Sportsworld, 17-1, Friday in a North State Little League baseball game.

Kiwanis scored four runs in the first inning — all it needed for the win. With one gone, Charlie Cradell singled and came home on Jon Chambliss' double. Chambliss later scored on a wild pitch.

Robbie McDonald reached on an error and Curtis Jones walked and both runners moved up on wild pitches. McDonald subsequently scored on an error and Jones came home scored on an error also.

Kiwanis scored three more runs in the second, two in the third, four in the fourth and three in the fifth.

Sportsworld's only run came in the fifth.

Kraig Butler was two for three to lead Kiwanis.

Waltrip Takes M-D Pole

Waltrip's top speed of 139.308 mph broke Cale Yarborough's record of 138.814 mph set in May 1980.

On the second qualifying lap, Waltrip again topped Yarborough's speed with 139.171 mph.

Benny Parsons, who took the second qualifying position for Sunday's race on the grueling "Monster Mile" at Dover Downs International Speedway, also broke the 1980 record with 138.980 mph.

The race is set for 12:05 p.m. with total posted awards of $224,300 and more than $17,000 for the first-place finisher.

Waltrip and Parsons were followed by Bobby Allison, Ricky Rudd and Morgan Shepherd for the first five positions in the 32-car field.

Waltrip, with a qualifying time of 25.842 seconds in Junior Johnson's Buick, was excited with the pole, but he wasn't exactly surprised.

"There ain't no secrets. We ran 25.90 (seconds) yesterday afternoon and thought we'd run pretty good this morning. I'm just pretty happy to get that speed," he said. "We felt we would probably win the pole if everything went well."

Waltrip, who now has four poles and five wins on the Grand National circuit this year, gave much of the credit to the track conditions.

"The sealer has picked the speeds up, obviously," he said. "The track's in much better shape than it's been in the last two or three years."

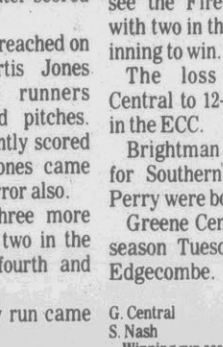

Track spokesman Keith Beebe agreed.

"Last year, we sealed turns 1 and 2, but we didn't seal 3 and 4 and the cars didn't stick as well," Beebe said. "This year, we sealed 3 and 4, making it an even track. All of the drivers apparently appreciate what we've done. You can see the first two positions blew the track record away. It has made a difference."

Meanwhile, defending Mason-Dixon champion Jody Ridley wasn't happy with the No. 17 spot in the qualifying runs. Ridley's victory last year was his first on the Grand National circuit and he's been winless since.

"It wasn't good enough," said Ridley, who posted a speed of 136.101 in 26.451 seconds. "It wasn't as fast as I wanted to go, but the car's running well. Qualifying doesn't mean anything, and if you ain't got the pole, you might as well start anywhere."

Lakers Defeat Spurs, Up 3-0

Reaches For Dribble

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The red-hot Los Angeles Lakers go for their eighth straight National Basketball Association playoff victory tonight when they attempt to eliminate the San Antonio Spurs from the Western Conference final series in four straight games.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar poured in 26 points and snared 10 rebounds Friday night to spark the Lakers to a 118-110 triumph that put the Spurs within one defeat of elimination.

The game wasn't as close as the final score indicated, because the Lakers dominated the contest and held a 17-point lead, 117-100, with 1:18 left when San Antonio coach Stan Albeck dejectedly emptied his bench.

"We've got our backs to the wall," the frustrated Albeck said. "But we're not packing it in. We'll be here (tonight) and play the best we can. We are playing one of the greatest teams in the league and most of those guys have been through this before. We're not going to give up. We've got to go out and win a game."

Jabbar said Los Angeles wants to eliminate San Antonio in four straight games, the same fate the Lakers dealt the Phoneix Suns in the semifinal series.

Eight straight playoff victories would move Los Angeles within one of the NBA playoff record of nine compiled by the 1950 Minneapolis Lakers.

"I don't remember a Los Angeles team playing this well," Abdul-Jabbar said. "We're going for it (tonight)."

"What happened last year was a fluke," the towering center said of Houston's defeat of the Lakers in a 1981 first-round mini-series. "We're a lot different team now than then. We've been turning in a consistent team effort, that's the key."

Part of the consistency Friday night was Earvin "Magic" Johnson, who pulled off another "triple double" with 10 points, 10 rebounds and 10 assists. Guard Norm Nixon and backup forward Bob McAdoo also hit 22 points apiece as six Lakers scored in double figures, running their fastbreak almost at will.

"We're a team, on and off the court, and it shows," taking us seriously, so we're just trying to play good basketball."

"We're playing real hard," Nixon added. "The key has been our intensity. The secret is that there has not been one minute in our past 7 or 8 games that our guys have relaxed. That's what happened to Phoenix; they relaxed for a few minutes and we blew them out. We just have to keep playing that hard."

"We are going to try and stop the break by putting the ball into the basket," said George Gervin, who led San Antonio with 39 points on 15 of 31 shooting. "If you believe anything, anything can happen. You can't use the word never until it's all over. . . ."

Los Angeles led 29-24 after one period, 61-48 at halftime and 89-79 after three quarters. San Antonio never got closer than 7 points after halftime.

Holzman Retires As N.Y. Coach

NEW YORK (AP) — Red Holzman retired as coach of the New York Knicks for the second time in his illustrious career and this time he probably won't return.

Holzman's announcement Friday opened the way for the restructuring of the National Basketball Association team that suffered through a last-place finish in the Atlantic Division with a 33-49 record last year, after winning 50 games and making the playoffs for the first time in five years in 1980-81.

The Knicks' new regime could take shape next week with the naming of former Atlanta Hawks Coach Hubie Brown to succed the 61-year-old Holzman.

Although no successor was named by the Knicks, and the club said no announcement is planned, The Associated Press reported earlier this week that Brown, now a basketball commentator for cable television, will succeed Holzman.

Holzman, who coached the Knicks to NBA titles in 1970 and 1973, stepped aside gracefully Friday.

"There comes a time when changes have to be made," said Holzman, who has one year remaining on his contract and will serve it out as a consultant.

"I'm sure some changes will be made and things will get back to where everyone will be in a happy situation. I'm looking forward to some great years that will bring the people back into the building and give them something to cheer about again. I'm ready to help in any way the organization wants me to."

The organization does need help as there was a steep drop in attendance for home games at Madison Square Garden. The average crowd during the season, according to team officials, was only about 55 percent of capacity, compared with better than 65 percent the previous year, for a gate receipt decline of more than $600,000.

WHAT TO DO IF YOU SMELL GAS.

Call Greenville Utilities immediately. Anytime day or night. We'll get a serviceman to your home or location to correct the problem.

While you're waiting for him to get there, open a window, make sure you use no electrical switches. Extinguish any open flames and evacuate the area.

If you don't know what natural gas smells like, stop by our office and pick up a scratch and sniff leaflet.

Because even though natural gas contains no poisonous ingredients, a leak can become hazardous if combustible gas pockets are allowed to form, which makes it important for you to know what natural gas smells like.

Islanders Remain Cautious Despite 3-0 Advantage

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Mike Bossy refuses to admit that his New York Islanders practically have a lock on their third straight Stanley Cup. Nor will the leading contender for the Conn Smythe Trophy even consider the likelihood he will skate off with that award as the most valuable player award.

Bossy leads the National Hockey League playoff scoring parade with 15 goals. He has played superbly at both ends of the rink after a regular season in which he scored 64 goals and 147 points, both second to Wayne Gretzky of the Edmonton Oilers.

But he prefers to play it cautious when broaching the subjects of Stanley Cups and Conn Smythes.

"I won't say we've got a hand on the Cup," said Bossy, whose team leads the Canucks 3-0 in the best-of-seven finals with Game 4 set for here Sunday night. One more victory would make the Islanders the first U.S.based team to win three consecutive NHL crowns.

"When you win the first game of a series, you're scared of the second. When you win the second, you're scared of the third. Now, we've won three and we'll be scared of the fourth game.

"You never know what can happen if you let them back in. We once were down by three games (against Pittsburgh in the 1975 quarterfinals) and won the series.

"We'll jut go out thinking we have to win."

Only one team ever has rallied from a 0-3 deficit in the finals, the 1942 Toronto Maple Leafs. The Canucks were hoping their tremendsouly supportive fans and home ice would help alter this series after they dropped the first two games in New York. But all the towel-waving and singing of the team's new theme song, "Kiss 'Em Goodbye," didn't bother the Islanders a bit Thursday and they shut out the Canucks 3-0.

Bossy scored one of those goals, a magnificent effort in which he swatted the puck at Vancouver goalie Richard Brodeur, who made a save. Then, while he was on his way to the ice — and both of his skates were airborne — Bossy backhanded the rebound into the net.

Efforts like that should earn him the MVP honors.

"I'd be elated to win it," he admitted. "It's something every player would want to win. You always like to be considered the MVP on your team and if you win the Smythe, it usually means your team won the Cup.

"But I'm one of 20 guys who play hard every game on this team. This is no one or two-man outfit."

Bossy's only real competition for the award would seem to be linemate and close friend Bryan Trottier, who is the top point man with 26 in the playoffs.

"You think about the Conn Smythe but it can't be the sole thing in your mind," said Trottier, who won the award in 1980, the first year the Isles won the Cup. "Our philosophy — which every player holds — is that we've got to sacrifice and dedicated ourselves for the others. We're all after one thing and it's not an individual award."

Trottier knows who should win the Smythe — and he is saying.

"We all should," he insisted. "It's too bad there can't be 20 co-winners."

Paul Top Name In Camel GT 500 Field

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Young racing superstar John Paul Jr. is the top name in a field of 110 drivers in Sunday's Camel GT 500 after setting a Charlotte Motor Speedway track record in qualifying.

Paul, 22, has taken five victories in his last six races, including triumphs shared with his father, John Paul Sr., in the 24 hours of Daytona and the 12 hours of Sebring.

But the younger Paul surprisingly did not win the pole position in Saturday's qualifying. He finished third, with a time of 116.533. The pole for Sunday's race was grabbed by Jim Adams in a Lola, with a time of 117.616.

Ted Field, also driving a Lola, will start on the outside of the first row, having qualified with a time of 117.524. Bob Akin, in a Porsche, was the fourth-fastest qualifier Saturday at 112.772. Dave Cowart, driving a BMW, was fifth at 112.511

On Thursday, young Paul, driving a turbocharged Porshe 935, set a track mark of 169.146 mph on the 1.5-mile oval, winning a $5,000 bonus.

Porches, Lolas and several American-made cars are expected to reach speeds of 200 mph on the speedway's 2.25-mile road course, said H.A. "Humpy" Wheeler, speedway president.

"We believe some of the racers will be able to reach 200 mph on the straightaways," he said.

The start of the Camel GT is set for 3:30 p.m.

DHC Whips Lady Eagles

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley maintained at least a share of first place in the Coastal Conference Friday with a 14-5 victory over West Craven.

The Valkyries are now 15-4 overall and 6-1 in the league. North Lenoir went into Friday's game with Havelock at 5-1. If the two teams tie for the regular season title a playoff game will be held to determine the champion.

The Valkyries were led Friday by Karen Barrett. Barrett hit two homes runs, a three-run shot in the second inning and a solo homer in the sixth as Conley erased a 2-0 deficit to win.

West Craven jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the top of the first but the Valkyries came back with five runs in the bottom of the inning. The Lady Eagles fought back with two more runs in the top of the second, but the Valkyries, sparked by Barrett's home run, scored four in the home half of the inning to take a 9-4 lead.

Conley added three more runs in the fourth and two in the fifth. West Craven's final run came in the fifth.

Barrett and Helena Barnhill were both three four four. Lisa Hardy was two for three while Irish Barnhill, Lori Kandrotas, Sherri Waters and Darlene Cannon were all two for four.

Ann Moore was three for three for West Craven.

Conley closes out its regular season Tuesday when it plays host to Havelock.

SNOW HILL — Southern Nash clinched at least at tie for the Eastern Carolina Conference softball championship Friday afternoon as the Lady Firebirds slipped past Greene Central, 11-7.

Southern Nash, now 10-1 in the league, can clinch the title with a victory over Farmville Central Tuesday.

Greene Central, now 14-6 overall and 7-4 in the ECC, fell behind, 2-0, in the top of the first but rallied for three runs on Pat Woodard's three-run homer in the bottom of the inning to take a 3-2 lead.

Both teams scored four runs in the third, but the Lady Firebirds took the lead for good with two runs in the fifth and two in the sixth. Southern Nash scored its final run in the seventh.

Greene Central did not score in the final four innings. The Lady Rams did not help their cause with 12 errors.

No one for the Lady Rams had more than one hit. Lynn Daughty, Melissa Morgan and Kay Manning all were two for four for Southern Nash. Carol Wilkerson had a three-run home for Southern Nash.

Greene Central plays host to SouthWest Edgecombe Tuesay in its season-finale.

Farmville Golf and Country Club

The Farmville Golf and Country Club is holding its annual Member-Guest tournament this coming weekend.

A total of 31 teams have signed up for the event, and the deadline for signing up is Friday at noon.

Greenville Country Club

A four-club social was held at the Greenville Country Club this week, with Nancy Anderson, Ethel Linton, Winnie Stroud and Joyce Sawyer taking first place with a 51. Second place was won by Kay Ellington, Elaine Phelps, Sue Castellow and Grace Merritt with a 51. A playoff was held on the card for first and second. Women from Greenville, Ayden, Washington and Brook Valley participated.

Ayden Golf and Country Club

Thomas Heath scored a hole-inone on the fourth hole at the Ayden Golf and Country Club while participating in the Proctor & Gamble Tournament. He used a 9-iron for the shot. He was playing with Mike Schneider, Ron Janocha and Howard Barnes.

The tournament was won by Jeff Wingate, Scott Tufts, Greg Devoe and Andy Williams.

Brook Valley Country Club

On Saturday and Sunday of next week, the Brook Valley Club Championship will be held. The deadline for signing up is Wednesday.

Milton Harrington, a Greenville native and former president of Liggett and Myers Tobacco Co., recently shot a 72, one stroke under his age, at the club. Now a resident of Durham, he was playing with W.L. Allen, Reynolds May and Dave Creighton, former resident pro at Hope Valley Country Club at Durham, now retired.

Grand Slam Single Highlights Victory

By The Associated Press

Call it a grand-slam single — an over-the-wall, bases-clearing, game-winning boo boo. Lee Lacy of the Pittsburgh Pirates would call it a mistake of grand-slam proportions.

In the eighth inning of Pittsburgh's game against Cincinnati Friday night, Lacy came to the plate with the bases loaded, no one out and the Pirates trailing by a score of 7-5. He blasted a pitch from Reds reliever Tom Hume over the wall at Three Rivers Stadium, then accidentally passed teammate Omar Moreno between first and second.

Home plate umpire Ed Montague called Lacy out, and he was credited with a single and three RBI, giving Pittsburgh an 8-7 victory.

"It was a very unfortunate mistake, but thank goodness we won," Lacy said. "You rarely see that. I hope it doesn't happen again."

The Pirates trailed 5-0 after the first inning, but came back with a run in the third, another in the sixth and three more in the seventh before Lacy slugged the longest single of the season.

Lacy said he felt Moreno should have given him "a little more room," but Moreno said he was concerned that the ball wouldn't go out of the park.

"With nobody out, I was making sure the ball wasn't caught," Moreno said.

Phils 2, Giants 0

Steve Carlton tossed a two-hitter, pitching 7 2-3 innings of no-hit ball, to hurl the Phillies to their fifth straight victory and 11th in their past 12 games.

Carlton struck out eight and walked just one. He now has a league-leading 63 strikeouts.

Carlton, 4-5, lost the bid for his first no-hitter with one out in the eighth when Giants rookie catcher Bob Brenly singled. Carlton also yielded a single to Johnnie LeMaster.

Expos 8, Padres 7

Andre Dawson hit a two-run single, and Montreal scored three unearned runs in the eighth inning to beat San Diego. Padres third baseman Luis Salazar allowed the leadoff man in the eighth, Tim Wallach, to reach second when he fielded his grounder and threw it into the Expos dugout.

Braves 2, Cards 1

Biff Pocoroba belted his first home run since 1980, a solo shot with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning to boost Atlanta over St. Louis. The Braves also scored their first run on a homer by Rafael Ramirez in the seventh inning.

Dodgers 4, Mets 1

Cubs 6, Astros 3

Chicago scored five of its runs in the sixth inning — on doubles by Bump Wills, Bill Buckner and Gary Woods and a triple by Larry Bowa — to hand Houston its fifth loss in seven games.

Wells' sacrifice. David Wells singled to move Curlings to third before Wells scored on a fielder's choice by Sorrell to make it 6-2.

Catholic cut it to 6-4 in the bottom of the inning, but that was as close as the Cardinals could get. With two gone, Cassidy walked and Geoff Mack then hit a 3-1 pitch over the rightfield fence for his third home run of the season.

ECU got both those runs back in the eighth. Robert Wells singled and David Wells walked. David Wells was forced out at second, however, when Sorrell reached on a fielder's choice.

Robert Wells scored on the play. Hallow then walked to load the bases and Evans followed with a double to score Sorrell and the Pirates led, 8-4, and were well on their way to the ECAC title.

The fourth-seeded Cardinals gained the title game with a 7-6 victory over top-seeded Old Dominion, with the winning run coming on a bases-loaded single in the ninth by Ebner.

Old Dominion, which finished 37-12-2, built a 5-2 lead in the first six innings of the semifinal game, but the Cardinals took a 6-5 lead with four runs in the seventh, two each scored on singles by John Arensmeyer and Ebner.

A sacrifice fly by Tony Morris pulled ODU even in the eighth, but Ebner won it for Catholic in the ninth. Kemp had a two-run home run in the sixth for the Cardinals' first two runs.

Philadelphia remained in front throughout the third quarter and outscored the Celtics 16-8 in the final 4:38 of the period to build an 80-70 advantage after three quarters.

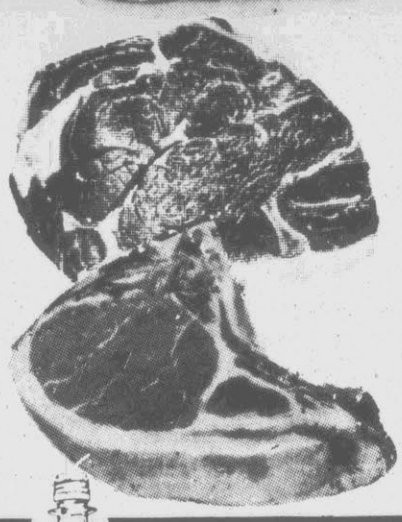

Philadelphia started its surge after a 16-foot jumper by Bird had brought Boston within 64-62. Caldwell Jones started Philadelphia's finishing third-period rally with an 18-foot jumer and Bobby Jones made a pair of foul shots that made it 68-62. After M.L.Carr made two Boston free throws, the Sixers ran off six points for a 74-64 lead.

Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham's strategy of putting Caldwell Jones on Boston's 7-foot Robert Parish and Bobby Jones opposite Bird paid off for the second straight game.

Brawls Add To Detroit's List Of Disabled

By The Associated Press

Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson wants everybody on his team participating whenever there's a bench-clearing brawl because it adds team spirit. Unfortunately for Anderson, it also can add to his disabled list.

"When something like this happens, I want everybody off the bench. It builds team unity," said Anderson after the Tigers beat the Minnesota Twins 4-2 in 11 innings Friday night.

The game ended on a two-run homer by Kirk Gibson just moments after the second of two wild brawls, which resulted in the ejection of five players and a season-ending knee injury to winning pitcher Dave Rozema.

"The pitchers must be a part of it," said Anderson. "I want them out there, too, when there's a fight."

Gibson, a 6-foot-3, 215-pound former football star at Michigan State, said, "In a fight, people always go for us big guys first. As soon as I went out there, I was sure people were going to come after me and they did."

But Gibson added that the 11th-inning fight "got some adrenalin going through my body. I let it all out when I got up to the plate the last time."

The first brawl occurred after the Tigers tied the score 2-2 in the fourth inning on Mark DeJohn's RBI single.

The next batter, Lemon, charged Twins' starter Pete Redferh after being hit on the left wrist by a pitch, the sixth time he has been hit this season, and triggered a bench-clearing brawl that lasted about five minutes. Lemon was ejected by the umpires and Redfern was removed from the game suffering from what the club trainer described as minor injuries.

After Lynn Jones hit a one-out single in the 11th, the second brawl of the game erupted when Twins pitcher Ron Davis, 1-3, brushed back Enos Cabell. The ball actually hit Cabell's bat, running the count on him to 1-2, but he headed for the mound anyway.

"Cabell's just hot-tempered," Davis said. "I don't walk that many, but when it does get away from me it's high and tight. I was never trying to dust anybody."

Brewers 2, White Sox 1

Gorman Thomas belted his fifth and sixth homers of the season as Milwaukee snapped a four-game losing streak by beating Chicago.

Jim Slaton, 3-0, with relief help from Rollie Fingers, got credit for the victory. Slaton was making his first start of the season, replacing the injured Bob McClure.

Rangers 4, Blue Jays 3

Doug Flynn tied the score with a single in the ninth inning, then won the game for Texas in the bottom of the 11th with a sacrifice fly.

Angels 5, Indians 2

Doug Corbett earned his first save since being traded by Minnesota this week and Brian Downing had three hits and scored a pair of runs as California beat Cleveland.

Orioles 11, Mariners 4

Dan Ford belted a three-run homer and Jim Palmer pitched four innings of hitless relief as Baltimore bombed Seattle.

Ford got his second homer in as many nights when he connected off Mariners starter Gene Nelson, 1-6, in the first inning.

Yankees 7, A's 4

Dave Winfield climaxed New York's five-run seventh inning rally with a three-run homer, hitting Oakland relief pitcher Dave Beard's first pitch over the fence.

Eagles Upend D.H. Conley, 6-1

HOLLYWOOD — Steve Wood hurled a two-hitter and Ronnie Brown blasted a three-run home run to lead West Craven to a 6-1 victory over D.H. Conley on Friday afternoon in a Coastal Conference baseball game.

Wood did not allow a hit until there was one out in the fourth inning when Mike Gurkins singled. The only other hit by the Vikes was a double by Dixon Page in the sixth.

The Eagles, now 3-14 overall and 3-6 in the league, broke open a scoreless ballgame in the fourth with four runs. Randy Adams and David Farburn singled to open the inning and Adams scored when Wood reached on an error.

Brown then hit an 0-1 pitch over the leftfield fence for a three-run home run and give the Eagles a 4-0 lead.

West Craven upped its lead to 5-0 in the sixth, but the Vikings scored once in the bottom of the inning when Page doubled home Jeff Cox. Cox walked and stole second to open the inning.

West Craven's final run came in the seventh.

Conley, now 4-15 overall nad 0-9 in the league, did not have anyone with more than one hit.

Elton Moore was three for four to lead West Craven. Chris Daugherty was two for three while Adams and Andy Brown were two for four.

Redskins Pound Jackets, 10-4

ROBERSONVILLE — Roanoke scored nine runs in the first three innings and coasted to a 10-4 victory over Roanoke Rapids Friday night in a Northeastern Conference baseball game.

Roanoke, now 7-11 overall and 6-8 in the league, took a 3-0 lead in the first — a lead the Redskins never lost.

Joey Early walked, stole second and went to third on a passed ball to open the first. Joey Ross then singled home Early with one gone. Greg Casper doubled to score Ross and Casper later scored on an error.

The Redskins upped their lead to 7-0 in the second. Terry Griffin reached on an error and went to third on Early's single. Darius Hudgins then singled home Griffin.

Ross followed with a single to score both Early and Hudgins. Ross later scored on Angelo Spruill's single to make it 7-0. Roanoke added two more runs in the third to make it 9-0.

Roanoke Rapids scored a run in the fourth and two in the fifth before closing out its scoring with a run in the seventh. Roanoke's final run came in the fifth.

Ross was four for five to lead Roanoke. Casper was two for four with a double while Hudgins was two for five.

Ross held Roanoke Rapids to three hits.

Roanoke travels to Williamston Monday.

Futures Prices End Week Mixed

By KEITH E. LEIGHTY
Associated Press Writer

Livestock and meat futures prices were mixed Friday with nearby delivery months advancing strongly as cash prices for live cattle reached a new high.

Cash prices for wholesale dressed beef reached a new record and prompted higher futures prices for the contract for delivery in June, said Bob Kuhn a livestock analyst in Chicago with Merill Lynch Commodities.

However, Kuhn said sentiment among traders seems to indicate that prices may be approaching a peak and contracts for delivery in later months were weaker as a result.

Kuhn also noted that the cattle on feed report released Thursday by the Department of Agriculture was neutral and many traders were buying contracts prior to the release of the report to protect against a bullish reaction to the report.

But with the report out of the way, he said, there was no new pressure to cover short positions.

Live hogs also were influenced by stronger cash prices and by indications that hog supplies will continue to be light, Kuhn said.

Live cattle for delivery in June were .13 cent higher, settling at 71.80 cents a pound; May feeder cattle were .03 cent higher, settling at 68.35 cents a pound; June live hogs settled 1.10 cent higher at 61.82 cents a pound; and May frozen pork bellies settled .93 cent higher at 89.30 cents a pound.

Wheat, corn and soybean futures prices were higher and oats were lower in active trading on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Weather appeared to be the major concern in the market, sources said, as the western corn belt is too wet and the eastern corn belt too dry and the forecast calls for more of the same in each region.

Jim Tometz, a grains analyst with Cargill Investor Services, noted that wet conditions in the western corn belt have brought planting to a near standstill while in the eastern corn belt, "they're making fantastic planting progress but they need some good rains to germinate the corn."

Concern about the weather also prompted some traders to cover their commitments, as there is fear that because of the weather, prices could rise next week, Tometz added.

Wheat for delivery in May settled 4½ cents higher at $3.49¼ a bushel; May corn settled unchanged at $2.69¼ a bushel; May oats settled 2 cents lower at $2.09½ a bushel; and May soybeans settled 6¾ cents higher at $6.63¼ a bushel.

Powell's Gardens: Loving Labor By Lolita Powell

For 12 years prior, she had enjoyed teaching high school English, but once her second child was born she made the decision not to leave her children and go away from home to work.

"I've loved plants since I was very young, even drew up detailed garden plans as a child," the Duplin County native said. "Once our daughter, Angela, was born, though, it was so difficult to leave her and my plants and go back to school. After our son Eugene was born, I decided I had to do what I had to do and that was stay home with my children."

Partially out of need for money and partly out of the love of plants that's so evidenced by her gardens from which she sells irises, day lilies and a large variety of other perennials, Mrs. Powell began her home business on a quarter of a block in Princeton. She and her husband, George, have since built a house one mile east of Princeton with more acreage for the gardens.

"I'd especially loved irises," she said, "ever since I'd fallen in love with this variety of flowers at Meredith College when I was a student there. I went to work breeding them."

Principal tool: tweezers

Her principal tool for breeding iris is a pair of tweezers worn on a cord around her neck. She delves into the center of an iris that has just bloomed, grasps an anther near its base and snips. Then she takes the anther to the flower with which she wishes to combine characteristics of the first and rubs the pollen on the stigma of the second plant. She then watches the pollinated flower till seed pods develop. These she "shells like peas" and keeps the seeds safe and dry till she can sow them in November. She then waits until the following spring to see if the characteristics she sought have developed. If not, she tries again.

Using basically this process, Mrs. Powell has developed dozens of new varieties of irises. She has given them imaginative names, many beginning with Carolina. Examples: Carolina Gold, a beautiful iris with gold petals and deeper gold beard; Carolina Pride, a blue iris; and Carolina Blue, a blue of another shade; Carolina Top Hat, a deep purple.

"The iris is my favorite flower," she said. "And everything else I do revolves around irises. I also have many varieties of day lilies, which bloom at an entirely diferent time from irises.

A rule of thumb, Bobbi Shirley of Farmville, a devoted customer of Mrs. Powell said, "is to go see Mrs. Powell around Mother's Day for irises, around Father's Day for day lilies."

Mrs. Powell confirms her statement: the second Sunday in May is usually peak blooming season for irises; the third Sunday in June peak blooming season for day lilies. Don't go on Sunday for either, though, if you want to buy any. The gardens are open on Sundays, but Mrs. Powell won't do any digging that day. If you want something dug for you to buy, go on a weekday or Saturday.

Perennials Her Specialty

Irises and day lilies are perennials (plants that come back and multiply year after year), and Mrs. Powell has many other perennials.

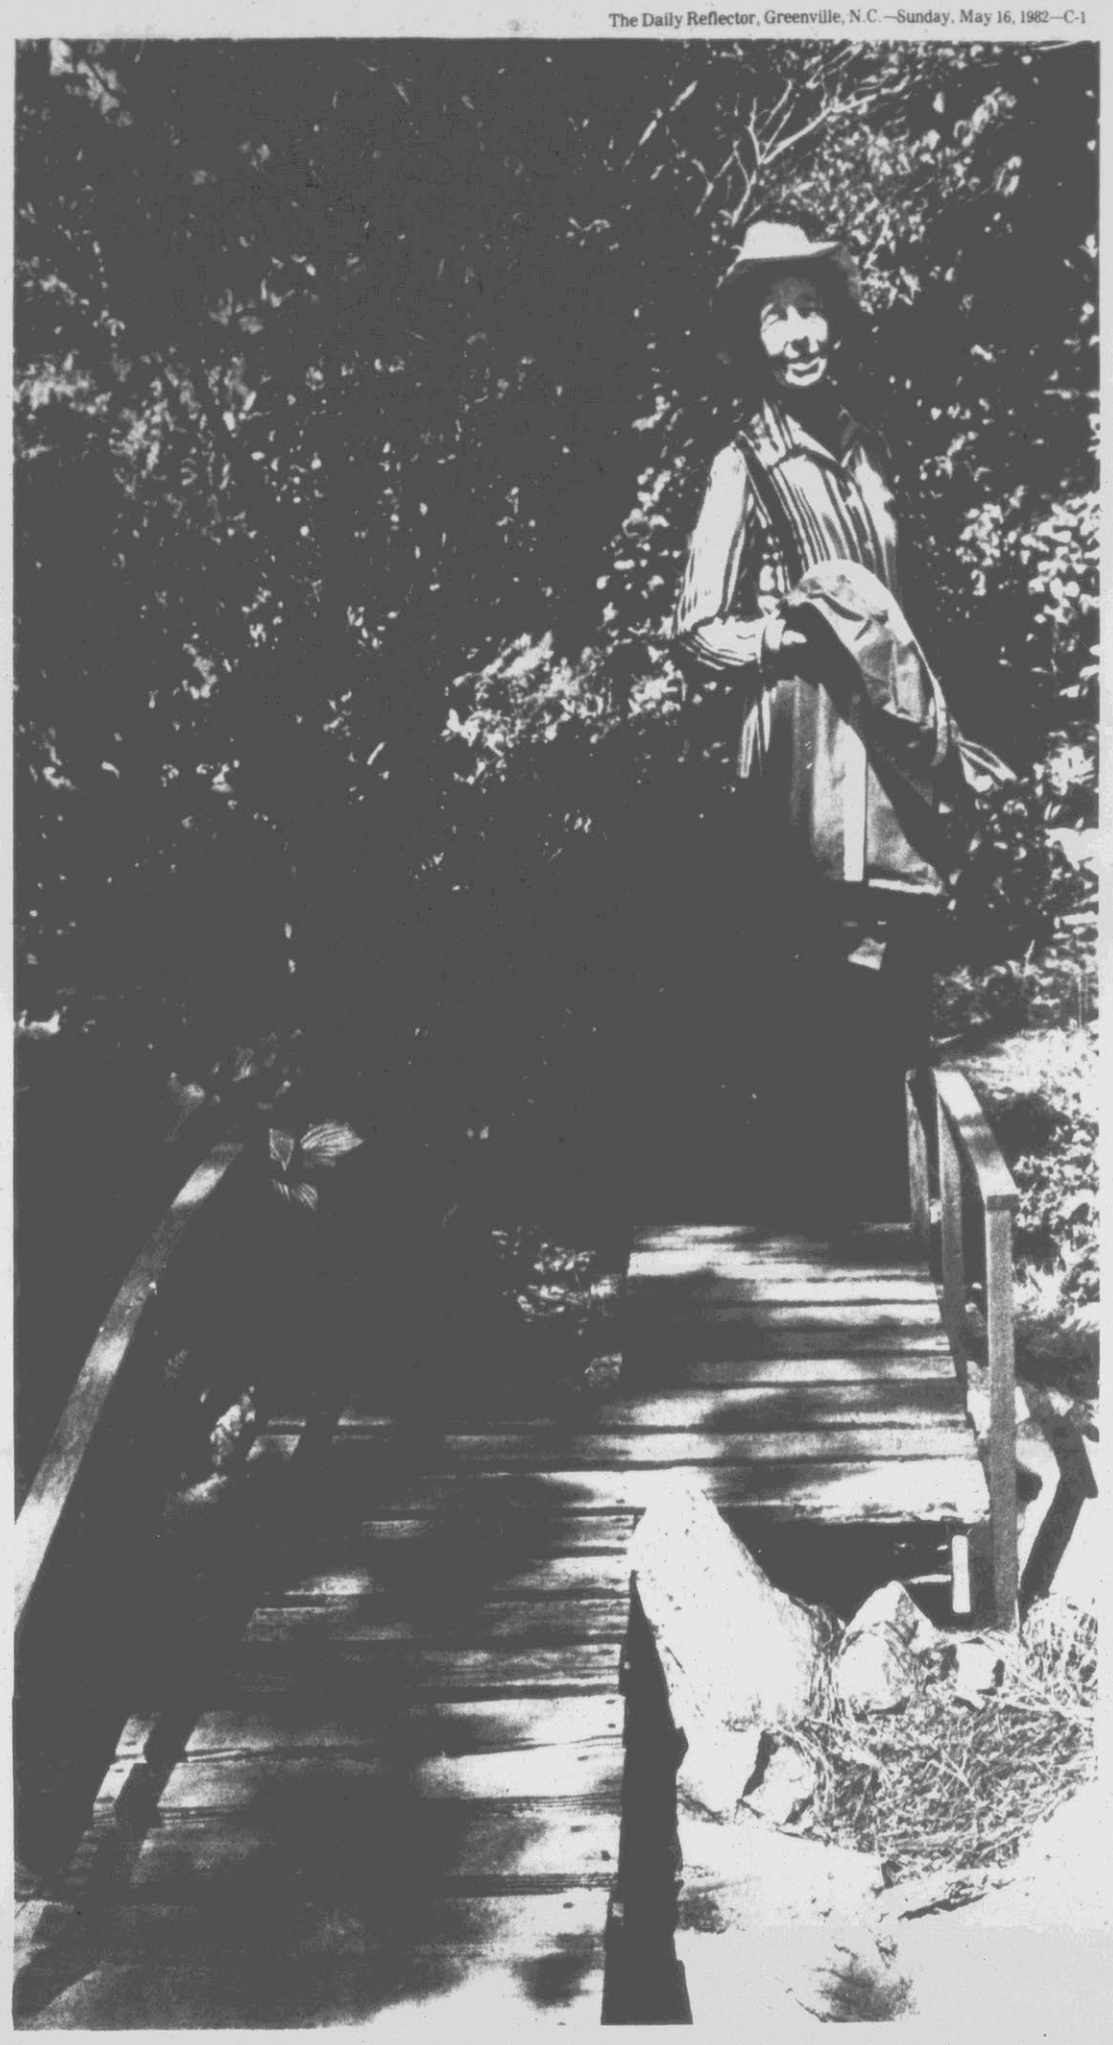

A member of many national and international organizations for the study and propagation of various types of plants, she occasionally goes abroad on horticulture tours. A few years ago she was in a famous garden in England and heard the head gardener assert that that garden held a larger variety of perennials than any other in the world.

"I mailed him my catalog immediately after I got home," she said, "because I saw only one plant there I didn't have here and I bought that one so I would have it."

The gardens are located behind and beside the Powells' home and their cats, including a beautiful white Persian and her kittens, have the run of the place. Their children and four grandchildren often come to visit, too. Their children — Angela, Eugene and Monica — live in Goldsboro, Raleigh and Myrtle Beach respectively.

The back yard is devoted mostly to an Oriental garden with many evergreens, succulents, ground covers, irises and a wooden bridge. Monica was married on that bridge during the height of iris season a few years ago. A side yard is devoted to hostas. (The national meeting of the National Hosta Association will be held at Mrs. Powell's in early June.) Out to the other side and back is an expanse of seedling irises, other digging areas, groups of potted plants and many individually landscaped areas.

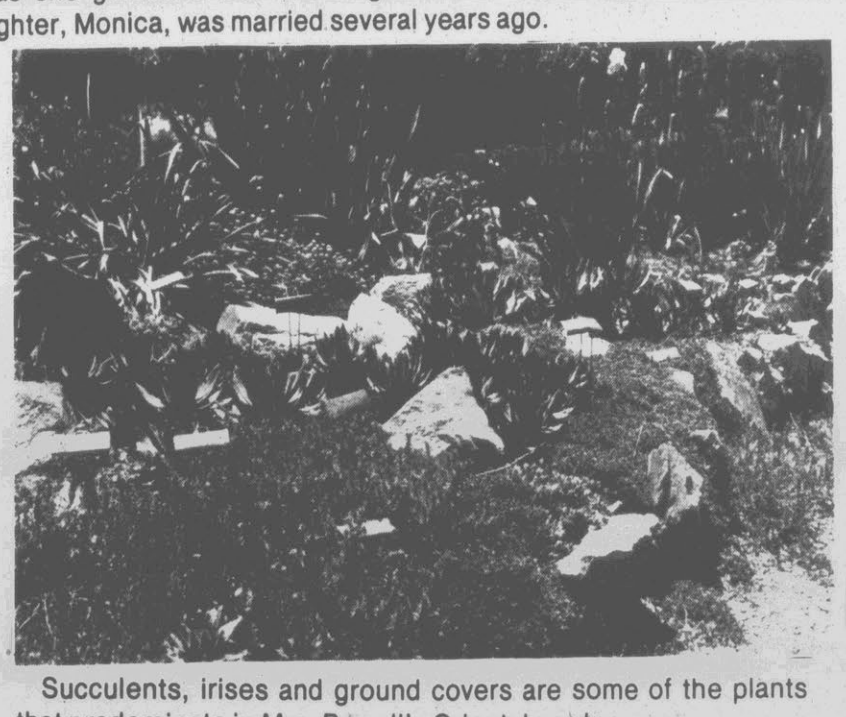

Mrs. Powell supervises every activity of the gardens and does much of the work herself. "I enjoy every minute of what I do," she said. "I love my plants, of course, and I also enjoy my customers. Most are knowledgeable about plants and come here to learn as well as to buy. I like sharing what I can with them."

Mrs. Powell pauses as she guides a tour of her gardens at the bridge in her Oriental garden where her daughter, Monica, was married several years ago.

Catalogs from Powell's Gardens may be obtained by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope and $1.50 to Powell's Gardens, Route 2, Box 86, Princeton 27569. The location is 12 miles west of Goldsboro on U.S. 70.

Succulents, irises and ground covers are some of the plants that predominate in Mrs. Powell's Oriental garden.

Mrs. Powell digs an iris fan for a customer. Irises are her favorite flower, she says, and she's bred many new varieties with interesting combinations of characteristics.

Seedling irises bloom in late April and early May and are available for purchase by customers during the time they can see the bloom and know what they're getting.

Sawyer-Clark Vows Solemnized Saturday

Barbara Layne Clark and George Rodney Sawyer were married Saturday afternoon at four o'clock in a double ring ceremony performed in St. James United Mehtodist Church.

The Rev. Dewey Tyson conducted the ceremony. A program of nuptial music was presented by Mrs. Frances Cain, organist, and the Rev. Charles Smith, soloist. Barry Shank played the trumpet.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Oliver Clark of Greenville and gave their daughter in marriage. She was escorted by her father. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George Henry Sawyer of Greenville. The father of the bridegroom served as best man.

The bride wore a formal gown of white chantilly lace over peau de soie designed with an open V-neckline outlined in chantilly lace beaded with pearls. The fitted bodice was overlaid in chantilly lace and embellished with miniature clusters of seed pearls. The back bodice was enhanced with button closures. Chantilly lace fashioned the long fitted sleeves which were finished with lace cuffs and button closures. The full bouffant skirt and attached cathedral train were accented with cascading tiers of chantilly lace flounces. She wore a cathedral length veil of illusion edged in chantilly lace held in place by a caplet overlaid in matching lace beaded with pearls. She carried a cascade bouquet of phalaenopsis orchids, stephanotis and accented with ivy.

Kathryn De Vine Clark, sister of the bride, was honor attendant and wore a cherry silk taffeta gown styled with a fitted bodice with a gathered ruffle off the should which dipped to a scoop design in back. The waistline was accented with a cummerbund. She carried a clustered bouquet of pink tulips, gerbera daisies, miniature carnations and purple statice tied with greenery and satin ribbons.

Bridesmaids included Amy Clifton of Alexandria, Va., Belinda Judkins Landis of Chapel Hill, Jeannie Hooks Kokes of Virginia Beach, Va., Jane Spry of New Bern, Stephanie Sawyer Elks, sister of the bridegroom, Penny Clark Taft, cousin of the bride, and Diane Hutchins, all of Greenville. Their gowns and flowers were identical to those of the honor attendant.

Ushers included Ken Clark, brother of the bride, Mike Mosely, Pete Harrell, Bobby Allen and Carlton Elks, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, all of Greenville, Doug Sawyer of Roanoke, Va., brother of the bridegroom, and Ted Mosely of Nags Head.

MRS. GEORGE RODNEY SAWYER

The mother of the bridegroom selected a formal gown of blue silesta and wore a white phalaenopsis corsage.

A lawn reception was held at the home of the bride's parents after the ceremony. The reception area was decorated with pink geraniums and hanging baskets. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Bruce Sugg and Mr. and Mrs. Donald Theo McGlohon greeted guests and directed them to the register which was presided over by Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Baker.

After a wedding trip to the Florida Keys, the couple will live in Emerald Isle. The bride is a graduate of East Carolina University and was employed at Caswell Center of Kinston. The bridegroom is a graduate of ECU and is employed with the Bank of North Carolina in Jacksonville.

Mr. and Mrs. Don McGlohon, Mr. and Mrs. William Jordan, Mr. and Mrs. Julian Vainright and Mr. and Mrs. William Neal Howard gave a cocktail party after the rehearsal at the home of the McGlohon's. A rehearsal dinner was held at the Beef Barn given by the bridegroom's parents and Mr. and Mrs. Carlton Elks. A dance followed at the American Legion and was given by friends of the bridal couple.

Couple Has Anniversary

Curtis and Bessie Simpson were honored on their 40th anniversary at a dinner given by their children, Jean and Edward Carter and LaVonne and Garrie Moore.

The buffet dinner was served on the lawn at the home of the Moores. The luncheon table was centered with an arrangement of spring flowers.

Tributes and toasts were made by the children. Entertainment was provided by their grandchildren, Regina, Tonya, Tamu and Garrie Jr. The Rev. Arlee Griffin gave a blessing and remarks were made by Willie Barnes.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

You can tell a lot about a person just by how he or she gets up in the morning.

You show me a woman who hears the alarm, reaches over, shuts it off and gets out of bed and I'll show you a wonderful woman with a practical head on her shoulders who is able to face reality.

On the other hand, you show me a man who hears the alarm, pounds it senseless with his fist, resets it and shouts, "Ha! Ha! Scum! I lied to you last night. I got another five minutes!" and I'll show you a lunatic.

There are some people in this world who refuse to give in to routine. They should never marry and above all should never have children.

Have you any idea what it's like to hear an alarm go off four or five times in a single morning? It's like sleeping in a bus station.

People who can't get up in the mornings have an entire metabolism that is out of sync. The only time my husband ever felt at home was at the Cincinnati zoo when we walked into a house for nocturnal animals. His eyes adjusted to the pitch dark within seconds and as he looked at the hamsters, bats and owls, he said sadly, "Why can't it be this way for me?"

Night people go through their lives bumping into the shower, grappling for the soap, shaving with the wrong aerosol can, stabbing at their eggs and kissing anything that stands still goodbye.

When the sun goes down they come to life. They're animated, bright-eyed, make phone calls, cook, play games, play with the dog and consider Carson "prime time."

Their lives would be a visit to Shangri-la were it not for that small clock by the bedside with an alarm that shatters their sleep like a knife twisting in their eyeballs. It is their only natural enemy and stands between them and five more minutes of morning slumber.

The other night as I slept, I opened one eye to the room flooded with light. My husband sat playing with the alarm clock. Finally, he laughed and turned off the light.

"What's so funny?" I asked.

"I've really put one over on it this time," he said. "I set the alarm for 3:30. And here's the kicker! I didn't turn the alarm on!"

The man is certifiable.

Miss Snodgrass Is Bride Of Mr. Olive

MRS. KENNETH EVERETT OLIVE

Diana Lynn Snodgrass and Kenneth Everett Olive were married in a double ring ceremony Saturday afternoon at Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church. The Rev. John Olive, father of the bridegroom, and the Rev. David Goehring, associate church pastor, conducted the service.

Music included organ arrangements by Adelaide Miller. Barbara Minter was soloist. Mrs. James Proctor directed the wedding.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Snodgrass of Ocala, Fla. The bridegroom is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. Olive of Burlington.

The bride as given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father. She wore a floor length gown with a chapel train of chiffonette and sculptured chantilly lace over taffeta. The fitted lace bodice featured a Queen Anne neckline outlined with scalloped lace etched with seed pearls, full length tapered sleeves and a natural waistline accented with a satin bow and ribbon streamers. She wore a waltz length mantilla of bridal illusion bordered with scalloped chantilly lace and accented with lace motifs flowing from a chantilly lace cap etched with seed pearls. She carried a bouquet of silk white and yellow roses and daisies, orange blossoms and greenery accented with satin ribbons.

The maid of honor was Jeannette Snodgrass, sister of the bride of Ocala, Fla. Bridesmaids included Darlene Olive, sister of the bridegroom of Burlington, Anna Perkins of Asheville and Linda Gilbert of Greenville. They each wore a floor length maize gown of polyester with chiffon capelets. They carried colonial bouquets of yellow daisies, carnations, sweet peas and baby's breath tied with satin ribbon.

The best man was Reid Harris of Durham. Groomsmen included Nathaniel Jr. and Kurt Snodgrass, brothers of the bride of Ocala, Fla. and Jim Olive, brother of the bridegroom of Burlington.

The flower girl was Virginia Lamerton of Goldsboro, who wore a floor length white dress with puffed sleeves and a garland of blue silk flowers in her hair. The ring bearer, Jack Edwards of Greenville, carried a cross stitch satin pillow.

A reception was held in the fellowship hall of the church. Jan Brewington of Greenville presided at the guest book and poured punch. Mrs. James Procter assisted in serving.

Several pre-nuptial showers were given for the bride. A rehearsal party was held Friday evening. A bridal breakfast was given by Ms. Joann Haislip of Greenville.

The bride is a graduate of Camp Lejeune High School and East Carolina University where she obtained a B.S. in nursing. She is presently employed at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The bridegroom is a graduate of Washington High School, Duke University and the ECU School of Medicine. He will begin a residency program in internal medicine in July.

The couple will live in Dayton, Ohio, after a wedding trip.

Engagement Announced

BETTY LOU TRIPP...is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Harold Tripp of Greenville, who announce her engagement to Kenneth Lyn Beacham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Kenneth Beacham of Washington. The wedding will take place Aug. 7.

PEACE OFFERING

NEW YORK (AP) — Some 350,000 persons will have a Dutch treat this spring in Grand Central Terminal.

They will see more than a million multicolored tulips growing near a quaint Dutch village through the medium of Eastman Kodak's latest colorama "Spring Tulips," high above the main concourse of the station. The world's largest color transparency also commemorates 200 years of uninterrupted diplomatic relations between the Netherlands and the United States — a span representing the longest period of unbroken peace between this nation and any country in the world.

MRS. ROBERT WAYNE WILSON

Couple Weds On Saturday

THOMASVILLE — Rebecca D. Snider and Robert Wayne Wilson were united in marriage Saturday evening at six o'clock in the Liberty Baptist Church here. Carl Etchison conducted the double ring ceremony.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C.L. Snider Jr. of Route 11, Lexington, the bride was given in marriage by her father. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis R. Wilson of Cary.

A program of wedding music was presented by Mrs. Dennis Reidl, organist, Dale Davis, soloist and guitarist, and Mr. and Mrs. Reidl, soloists. All are cousins of the bride.

Maids of honor for the ceremony were Debbie Snider of Greensboro and Suella Snider of Lexington, sisters of the bride. Bridesmaids included Mrs. Jack Grimes of Havelock and Dana Wilson of Cary, both sisters of the bridegroom.

The flower girl was Jennifer Barbee of Lexington, cousin of the bride.

Ushers were Rick Barrow, Alan Keys and Chuck Ziehr, all of Greenville and Carl Luther Snider III of Lexington, brother of the bride.

The bride wore a formal gown of organza designed with a Victorian neckline, long fitted sleeves with Brussels lace down the center and a yoke of seed pearls with matching lace. The A-line skirt featured a ruffle of chantilly lace which extended into a chapel train. Her fingertip mantilla was edged with Brussel's lace. The bride carried a cascade of sonia roses, carnations, daisies and baby's breath.

Each attendant was dressed in a teal green sundress of crepe de chine accented with a jacket of scalloped lace styled with a stand-up collar. They each carried a lace fan with flowers matching the bride's flowers.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall and was given by the bride's parents. Guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Everett Barbee.

Assisting in serving were Susan Cope, Mrs. Donnie Hedrick, Mrs. Everett Barbee, Mrs. Greg Miller and Mrs. Ronnie Covington.

The bride is employed by the East Carolina School of Medicine. The bridegroom is a graduate student at ECU.

An informal barbecue was given by the bridegroom's parents at the home of the bride's parents Friday evening after the rehearsal. Guests included members of the wedding party and out-of-town relatives.

Son's Older Love Ages His Parents

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I never thought I'd be writing to you, but I'm so heartbroken I don't know where else to turn.

Our handsome 19-year-old son, whom I'll call Rick, graduated from high school at 17 and went to college 200 miles from home. He came home for the Easter holiday with a 34-year-old woman he has been sleeping with for the last year, unbeknownst to us. The woman (I'll call her Lucy) is a widow with a 2-year-old child! Lucy and Rick say they are in love and want to marry.

Abby, my husband is 38 and I am 37 — just three years older than Lucy. Rick told us that she is the only woman he has ever slept with, so it is obvious that she seduced him.

My husband and I want so much for Rick at least to try dating girls his own age instead of tying himself down to a woman who's old enough to be his mother.

This is tearing us apart. How can we get our son out of Lucy's clutches?

HEARTBROKEN

DEAR HEARTBROKEN: Don't try. The more you talk against her, the more fiercely Rick will come to her defense. That's the surest way to drive them into an early marriage. Get to know Lucy better and give her a chance. Most important, try not to show your "heartbreak" and disappointment. Let nature take its course. Regardless of the outcome, it's not the end of the world. And here's a day-brightener for you: At least 98 percent of the things we worry about never happen.

DEAR ABBY: My college-educated 23-year-old daughter is ruining her life, and I am helpless to stop her.

She says she is in love with a married man who plans to divorce his wife and marry her.

Abby, the man has three grown children and a grandchild. And he's 54 — that's 10 years older than her father! I didn't know what to do so I rang up this man's wife. She was shocked and said she had no idea her husband was planning a divorce.

I'm so afraid my daughter will get mixed up in an ugly scandal. I can't talk any sense into her head. I tried to teach her right from wrong, but I must have failed. She lives in an apartment with two other girls and thinks that just because she supports herself, she can live her own life without any interference from me. What can I do?

A MOTHER WHO FAILED

DEAR MOTHER: A 23-year-old self-supporting woman can't be controlled by her mother or anyone else. If you tried to teach her right from wrong, you haven't failed, she has.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from a middle-aged professional woman, married with a grown family, who had become involved with an alcoholic, prompts this letter.

As a retired hospital teacher and rehabilitation counselor, I have seen many such unfortunate situations. As noted, the alcoholic is often a charming, intelligent, personable individual when sober, but weak, manipulative and sometimes dangerous when drinking. My mother once told me that in the old country they had a saying to the effect that no girl should marry a man until she has seen him drunk. Somewhat cynical, but realistic, as then she will know what she is getting and getting into. Alcohol is a fairly effective truth drug — it strips off the veneer and shows what is beneath.

HAROLD J. IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR HAROLD: About that old country saying: I'd rather marry a man I had never seen drunk than marry one I'd seen drunk too often.

Couple Marries In Jarvis Church

Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church was the scene of the wedding ceremony Saturday afternoon at four o'clock of Frances Clair Noell and Daniel Paul Blank. The Rev. James Bailey performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Dorothy Noell of Clemmons and the late Mr. Archie Noell. She was given in marriage by her brother, Buzz Noell. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Curry Blank of Princeton, W. Va.

Bonnie Adams of Atlanta, Ga. was the honor attendant and Kelly Harris of Charlotte and Debra Barbour of Greenville were bridesmaids.

The father of the bridegroom was best man and ushers included Mike Lewis of Atlanta, Ga. and Paul Britton of Raleigh.

A program of nuptial music was rendered by Adelaide Miller, organist, and Charles A. Noell Jr., cousin of the bride, played the trumpet.

The bride wore a formal gown of ivory organza over peau de soie designed with a high neckline encircled with beaded Brussels lace. The gown was enhanced with a sheer yoke of illusion accented with Brussels lace. The bodice featured tucks of organza and lace. A satin ribbon encircled the waistline with a bow at center back. Organza tucks and matching lace fashioned the sheer bishop sleeves which were finished in cuffs of illusion and lace. The full circular skirt and attached chapel length train were accented with lace edging. She carried a bouquet of white orchids.

The attendants were each dressed in a formal gown of apricot lustrelgo designed with an open neckline, miniature rolled shoulder straps, fitted bodice and a flared accordian pleated skirt. The sleeveless gown was complemented with a chiffon jacket fashioned with a high neckline accented with matching chantilly lace. The full sheer sleeves were enhanced with matching lace. A double corded tie sash encircled the waistline from which fell the chantilly lace peplum. They each carried a cluster bouquet of white daisies, peach miniature carnations and baby's breath.

A champagne dinner and reception was held at the American Legion Home. Music was rendered by the Breakers. A rehearsal dinner Friday was held at the Beef Barn and was given by the bridegroom's parents.

The bride graduated from East Carolina University and is an administrative assistant at McDonald's here. The bridegroom attended ECU and is manager of McDonald's on Memorial Drive here.

The couple will be living in Greenville after a wedding trip to St. Thomas, Virgin Islands.

COME FOR DESSERT

STRAWBERRY PIE

A lovely version of one of our favorite desserts.

- 1-3rd cup sugar
- 2 tablespoons cornstarch
- 1 cup milk
- 1 cup sour cream
- 1½ teaspoons vanilla
- 1 cup sliced strawberries
- Baked Graham Nut Crust (8-inch)

In a 1½-quart saucepan stir together the sugar and cornstarch; gradually stir in the milk, keeping smooth. Over medium heat, stirring constantly, cook until mixture shows it is boiling because it bubbles and sputters and mounds slightly when dropped from a spoon. Off heat, with a wire whisk gently stir in the sour cream and vanilla until blended. Fold in the strawberries. Turn into the Graham Nut Crust. Refrigerate to set — several hours or overnight. Just before serving, garnish with extra strawberries. Makes 6 servings.

DINNER FOR FOUR

Roast Beef Potatoes
Brussels Sprouts Salad
Apple Turnovers Coffee

LINDA ANDERSON'S BRUSSELS SPROUTS

- One 10-ounce package frozen brussels sprouts
- ¼ cup mayonnaise
- 1 tablespoon grated Parmesan cheese
- ⅛ teaspoon celery seed
- ⅛ teaspoon curry powder

In a medium saucepan cook the sprouts according to package directions; drain in a colander. In the empty dry saucepan stir together the mayonnaise, Parmesan, celery seed and curry powder. Add the sprouts; over low heat, with a wide rubber spatula, toss until hot. Makes 4 servings.

On The Young Side

By Lisa Wang

Sophomore Marc Shannon placed 18th among North Carolina's top 20 math students at the North Carolina High School Mathematics Contest.

Participants in the contest, which was conducted May 6 in Raleigh, were administered a 40-question test of comprehensive math. Rose sent six students, who all ranked highly in the regional contests, to the state contest.

Three bus drivers were honored May 12 at the annual bus driver's banquet held at Greenville Middle School. Named adult bus driver of the year was Josephine Brown while Todd Lovett and Michael Worthington shared the honor of being named student bus driver of the year.

Selections, which were made by principals of Greenville City Schools, were based upon three criteria: minimum of 120 days driving experience; no record of wrecks or violations; and no validated complaints by citizens or parents. Each of the drivers has two elementary school routes and one high school route. Fifty dollars was awarded to the winners in each category.

Officers for the Senior Club for the upcoming year were named May 12 including: Susan Corbett, president; Barbara Little, vice president; Catharine White, secretary; and Kipper Hair, treasurer. The Senior Club was established this year to help seniors make a smooth transition from high school to college by touring campuses, inviting guest speakers from various colleges, etc.

Keywannettes also elected new officers including: Tracy Garris, president; Jessica Perry, vice president; Hayes Warren, secretary; Marsha Tart, treasurer; and Michelle Dudley, historian; Keywanettes is a community-service club open to any 10th, 11th or 12th grade girl.

Bridal Policy

A black and white glossy five by seven photograph is requested for engagement announcements. For publication in a Sunday edition, the information must be submitted by 12 noon on the preceding Wednesday. Engagement pictures must be released at least three weeks prior to the wedding date. After three weeks, only an announcement will be printed.

Wedding write-ups will be printed through the first week with a five by seven picture. During the second week with a wallet size picture and write-up giving less description and after the second week, just as an announcement. Wedding forms and pictures should be returned to "The Daily Reflector" one week prior to the date of the wedding. All information should be typed or written neatly.

21-Year Old Senior Is Math Genius, Magician, Master Of Chutzpah

By KAY BARTLETT
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Faster than a speeding microchip (sometimes), a consummate show-off (always), a crack backgammon player (compulsively), Arthur Benjamin is also somewhat of a lyricist, a magician, a comedian, and a master of chutzpah.

This 21-year-old cluster of hyperactivity is a senior at Carnegie-Mellon University where he's studying mathematics — and the school is studying him.

Arthur ("You can call me Art") Benjamin, it seems, can multiply 462 times 318 (or any other three-digit combination times a three-digit combination) faster than a calculator. He can also spout out the square of a three-digit number in about one second and grinds down to 30 seconds when he's asked to come up with the square of a four-digit number.

All, of course, without pencil or paper.

His mother, back in Cleveland, once told a reporter Arthur was a genius and he still grimaces about that, apparently unaware of a mother's inalienable right to label her first born as such. Arthur insists he is not a genius, but having been interviewed once or twice already, has learned to say "no comment" when pressed about exactly what his IQ might be.

He was in the top 10 percent of his high-school class and remains there at the more competitive Carnegie-Mellon.

Arthur came to be studied when a professor in a cognitive psychology class began lecturing about "lightning calculators," people who can perform amazing mathematical gymnastics. Some of the stunning acrobatics of the mind — such as telling the day of the week of a given date centuries ago in a matter of seconds — are simply tricks. Others are true lightning calculations.

The professor asked if anyone knew any tricks.

Arthur didn't do tricks. He did real lightning calculation, multiplying, dividing, squaring any numbers his classmates hurled at him.

He wowed them. Or, as the ever-reserved Arthur put it: "It stood the class on its ear."

None of them, you see, had ever been to his nightclub act where his magic-mathics are just one part of his routine, a routine that is often hilarious, closing with "The Raisin," a wonderful spoof of Edgar Allan Poe's "The Raven."

Arthur's career began when he was 14 and billed himself as "The Great Benjamini." He did magic shows for kids.

"I would make them scream and laugh," he recalls. "Not screaming in fear, but in glee. I would tell the story of 'The Three Little Pigs' and they would growl like the wolf. It doesn't take a wizard to be able to confuse 5- and 6-year-olds.

"To make them laugh, that's the magic," says Arthur.

The eldest of three children, Arthur was a real "pain in the neck" kid. He drove Mom crazy with questions, mostly about relationships between numbers and geometric figures. Once he got to school, he took to correcting teachers.

Arthur was given medication to slow him down some, but his memory never rested. He figured out, for instance, that if he multiplied the numbers on the dart board above his head in any way, they always came out to 3,628,800. He memorized the states' names and can still say them in one word that starts out: "Alabamaalaskaa..."

As a result of his classroom displays, Arthur was introduced to William Chase, professor of psychology at Carnegie-Mellon. Arthur is now his research assistant and subject. Chase was interested in how Arthur's brain worked as the numbers came pouring out.

The first thing Chase discovered was that Arthur could retain 18 digits, well above the normal seven unrelated digits a person can remember. This was explainable by a system of mnemonics. Arthur assigns letters to numbers, thus creating words. So if you give him your Social Security number, followed by your telephone number, followed by your age, Arthur can spit it back for you.

But Chase figured that would not allow him to perform the kind of calculations he does. And Arthur had been doing it for so long, he couldn't explain it. He just did it.

Chase asked him to square five digits — something he had never tried — and then tell him what he was doing. Arthur calculates from left to right, which he maintains is the more efficient way. It takes a little longer to learn, but it's better in the end, he says.

"I figured out a lot of relationships with numbers before I was prejudiced by school," he says.

Chase also learned that Arthur constantly clears his memory as he works. Let's say he comes up with the first three numbers of a five-digit square, such as 462 million. He says it out loud, content to let the audience remember it and clearing three more spaces in his brain for memory. When Arthur hits numbers he must reuse later in his calculation, he stores them in the order in which he will need them. Thus, he's constantly making room in his mind for more numbers.

Chase has programmed a computer to simulate Arthur's techniques and the work could lead to new ways of teaching arithmetic as well as better programming of computers.

Controversy Rages Over Restoration Of Famed Bayeux Tapestry

A PRICELESS TREASURE . . . The Bayeux tapestry, the pride and major source of income for the town of Bayeux ,is the object of harsh differences between French officials. A controversy is raging about the need for proper restoration measures versus the desire to keep the famed 900-year old tapestry on display. A small section of the tapestry is shown here. (Photo Courtesy Hearst Magazines Public Relations)

A Hearst News Release

NEW YORK — The 900 year-old Bayeux tapestry, one of the world's most unusual and precious art objects and a major treasure of France, is in danger — and a bitter quarrel among French officials is delaying measures which must be taken if the tapestry's deterioration is to be halted.

The Bayeux tapesty is a 232-foot-long, three-tiered frieze of detailed embroidery which unfolds an epic narrative of the Battle of Hastings, which gave Duke William of Normandy the English throne and his place in history.

"Of the entire French Patrimony," according to an article in the May issue of Connoisseur, a leading art magazine, "it is one of the most prized possessions, and for the 15,000 citizens of Bayeux a source of pride and enormous tourist revenue."

Last October, a group of art experts and French officials gathered in Normandy in a 17th century seminary that was being converted into a museum to house the tapestry. They expected to discuss its display and future protection. They foresaw a need for cleaning the treasure and for making minor repairs.

But when a panel of its glass case containing the tapestry was opened, there was the smell of vinegar — a sign of decomposition in the old cloth. All was consternation.

Harsh words were exchanged by the expert who was to do the restoration and by the chief architect of the Bayeux project, whose plans for display and protection had already been approved. Bayeux's mayor, whose town's fortunes are at stake, made clear that he wanted no disruptions that would keep tourists away.

"No one will know for sure how much restoration is needed, or how urgently, until comprehensive scientific tests and sophisticated photoanalysis have been carried out," Connoisseur reports. These are not scheduled to begin until after the end of the tourist season of 1982.

"But the Bayeux project is at an impasse. Nerves are shattered; back-stabbing and low blows have supplanted calm scholarship; personality clashes have become matters of national pride. The ministry of culture is looking for compromise and is promising important decisions. But when, no one can say."

Adventure Filled Life

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

ABOARD THE PLUS ULTRA (AP) — He's battled pirates on the high seas, and awaited execution before a communist firing squad.

For everyone's fantasy of exotic adventures, Bob Moran has a true-life story.

He's soared through the air in a twin-engine plane and zoomed around racetracks in sportscars. Now, at the age of 53, he heads a large team of divers and treasure hunters minutely scouring the bottom of the Florida Straits for the remains of the Santa Margarita and the Nuestra Senora de Atocha.

The two ships, headed for Spain with their hulls stuffed with gold and silver, went to the bottom of the sea when a hurricane struck in September, 1622.

"He's driven to find that treasure," says Bruce Etshman, diver-crewman on Moran's 47-foot twin-engine diesel yacht, which serves as seaborne operational headquarters for Treasure Salvors, a company formed by Key West treasure hunter Mel Fisher.

Moran, who has known Fisher for 16 years, is mainly responsible for salvaging over $40 million worth of gold, silver, jewels and artifacts from the two sunken ships since this particular search began 12 years ago.

Quiet and reserved, Moran doesn't fit the braggadocio barroom brawler depiction of soldiers of fortune found in films and pulp novels.

His lifestyle — which included having his own SWAT team to recover hijacked yachts from modern day pirates — has cost him a marriage. And although he misses his children, he says he doesn't miss a "normal" life.

"Too many people are wrapped up with making a living," he says. "Everyone should experience adventure. I recommend it for everyone, even if they are the milktoast type."

As a child in Lockport, N.Y., he was a natural all-round athlete with a penchant for the sea. He also was fascinated with airplanes and learned to fly at 16.

Moran joined the Navy when he was 17, traveling the world for nearly a decade. During those years, he became an aerial photographer and scuba diver. He also raced motorcycles and sportscars.

After the Navy, he studied business administration at the University of Buffalo. But he became "impatient and bored."

Moran eventually became part-owner of a salvage vessel. He and a crew of eight were taking it to the Dominican Republic in December, 1962, when a violent storm sank the boat in the Atlantic Ocean.

"The nine of us drifted four days and five nights," Moran said.

Their lifeboat landed on the northern coast of Cuba near a Soviet-built missile site. They were arrested and imprisoned in Havana for 68 days — spending most of their time in solitary confinement.

"It was rough," Moran said. "They accused me of being a CIA agent, and said I had come to blow up the missile base."

He finally was taken before a kangaroo court, where a witness testified that Moran had killed an agent of Cuban President Fidel Castro in Guatemala. Moran was found guilty and sentenced to die by firing squad the following day.

"I heard the guards coming the next morning, but they took out a Cuban prisoner a few cells away," Moran said. "I heard him screaming when they shot him."

Moran and the others were eventually released and allowed to return to the United States, after successful negotiation by lawyers in Washington.

Moran met Fisher in 1964 and helped him salvage a 1715 Spanish fleet that sank off Fort Pierce. He purchased an old three-masted schooner and spent a year converting it into a replica of a Spanish galleon. For several years, it was used to display the golden treasures recovered by Fisher.

Reception On Tuesday

Students in the Pitt County schools will display examples of their art in the annual spring show of student art May 14-28 at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 S. Evans St.

The show will feature work by school children from schools in all areas of the county.

A reception for the student show, open to the public, will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday at the museum.

Aycock School Held Festival

Several of the arts were incorporated into the recently held Aycock Junior High School Festival of Arts. Poetry, poetry reading, creative prose writing, poster art and entertainment were all featured in the festival for eighth and ninth graders. Winners in the various competitions were:

Literature

•Youth poetry — Sarah Burden, "The Dancer," first place; Jeff Bray for "Salmon" and Claire Pertalion for "Rain Is Glistening," tie for second place; Michele Hursey, "The Little Girl" and Jill Whitehurst, "Senior Card Party," tie for third place.

•Creative writing category — Glenye Cain for a short story, "Josef and the Giant."

Judges for poetry and creative writing were Gerda Nischan, Claire Pittman and Sheila Turange.

Poetry reading (of other poets' work) competition — Aaron Nieman, reading poems from "Chocolate Factory," first place; Kelly Jones, poems from "Jest 'Fore Christmas," second place; and Philippe Aronson, "Slave Song," third place.

Art

•In the art category, the competition was held for a poster design submitted by students. Winners were:

•Best lettering — Jeff Bray, first; Bobby Woolard and Amy Moore, tie for second, and John Lutz, third.

Entertainment

For the entertainment category of the Aycock Arts Festival, student presented individual and group performances. Winners were:

•Laura Wallace, violin performance, first place; the Go-Go's featuring Lisa Trevathan, Sherra Franklin, Layne King, Karen Wainwright, and Eleanor White, second place; and the Radiation Band with Leroy Barnes, Rubin Hyman, Shenandoah Turnage, and Churchill Thomas, third place.

Jane Lambert Among State Poetry Winners

SOUTHERN PINES — Cash prizes amounting to $360 were awarded to North Carolina Poetry Society Spring Contest winners

The awards were presented by Lois Holt of Durham, contest chairman, and by the Rev. Sam McKay of Broadway, editor of "Award Winning Poems 1982."

First place winners in 10 separate categories included one Pitt County poet, Jane K. Lambert of Grifton, in the haiku category. Other first place winners were: Anthony S. Abbott of Davidson; Ann Raper Martin of Elon College; Leona Chunn of Black Mountain; Virginia Shearer Hopper of Chapel Hill, and R.T. Smith of Auburn, Ala.

Boots Not For Walking

NEW YORK (UPI) — A New York podiatrist and foot surgeon has a warning for urban cowboys who are joining the national craze for cowboy boots — those boots were made for riding, podner, not walking.

"There's a flood" of new patients coming to podiatrist's office with problems caused by heavy hiking in cowboy boots, says Louis Shure, D.P.M., in the May issue of American Health magazine. The flood is the biggest, he said, since jogging became a national craze.

The podiatrist said the boots' shallow toe boxes cause corns and calluses on the tops of toes, and also hammertoes. The curled-up toes also lead to calluses underfoot from poorly aligned metatarsal joints striking an inflexible boot sole. And the toe boxes cause bunions while the irritation causes bursitis.

FIRST EVOLUTIONIST — Roger Mortimer, in charge of the University of South Carolina rare book collection, examines a copy of an essay by a Charleston-born physician which was the first systematic espousal of human evolution, four decades before Darwin's "Origin of Species." Two other South Carolinians played key roles in development of evolutionary theory. All are featured in the exhibition Mortimer designed. (AP Laserphoto)

A LITTLE BIT DISAPPOINTED — It rates as a fish catch, but the eel that Chris McDowell pulled from the Tar River on Thursday afternoon is not the big bass he had wished for. Chris, a junior majoring in business at East Carolina University, said he had had better luck at other fishing sites in the area. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By MARGARET CLARK

"Private Smiles, Private Tears," Helen Van Slykes's 10th and final novel, was left half finished at her death in 1979. The book has now been completed by James Elward, who followed her original outline.

Ms. Van Slyke's breed of independent-but-feeling woman endures in this novel about Beverly Thyson and her extraordinary rise in the ruthless world of New York fashion merchandising. The conflict against love becomes the stigma of Beverly's life, with fulfillment found only in her work and with disappointment and frustration the result of her relationship with men.

Also, this is the story of an entire generation of women who find themselves in a world where traditional standards and rules no longer work. There is Ruth who follows the rules, Marion who breaks them, and Sylvia who creates her own. Here too are the men who loved them, used them and hurt them. The result is a novel that is sure to captivate and move Helen Van Slyke's readers just as her previous books have done.

From the best-selling author of "The Cardinal Sins" comes yet another novel about scandal and sin and the Catholic church today.

In "Thy Brother's Wife," Andrew Greeley tells the story of a young priest who falls hopelessly and fatefully in love with his sister-in-law. The priest's father had high expectations for his two sons: one was groomed to be the president of the United States and the other a prince of the church. How these patriarchal wishes are frustrated and partially fulfilled, how the brothers' love for the same woman complicates their progress up the political and religious ladders, and how the family's dirty little secrets are ultimately revealed form the basis of Greeley's tale.

Recognized as "one of the 10 most influential Christian thinkers of the world," Andrew Greeley has again proved himself to be a powerful storyteller.

In "Deceptions," an enthralling novel by Judith Michael, two women dare to trade identities for just a week hoping to come to terms with the choices each has made in her life. And it's easily done; for who, in so brief a time, would distinguish the identical Sabrina from her twin sister Stephanie? But when an accident forces them to continue the week's deception, both women are caught in an infinite spiral of lies and delusions extending across continents and twisting fate into a final unalterable deception.

This glittering novel blends the exotic vistas of Europe and its gossipy, jet-set art conniseurs with common place loyalties of a Midwestern suburban academic circle.

High School Art Show On View

That is the size of the exhibition of art by high school students now on view in the front section of Gray Gallery, Jenkins Fine Arts Center, on the East Carolina University campus.

ECU School of Art faculty members who juried the 220 entries entered are Dot and John Satterfield, Betty Petteway, and Norman Keller. Michael Ehlbeck is coordinator of the event.

The show has only a few sculptural pieces, but is well represented in drawings, paintings, and mixed media work. People and animals are very much in evidence as subject matter, with a strong representation of fantasy creatures. A viewer will be led to believe that a number of the artists perhaps are fans of Dungeons and Dragons.

"This event will showcase the best artwork of our high school students and will ecourage the efforts of both students and teachers of art," Elhbeck comments.

In conjunction with the show, one four-year Alumni Honor Scholarship in Art is available to a qualified participant entering the competition. The scholarship is in the amount of $700 to $1,500 per year to a student selected from competition participants by the School of Art and the E.C.U. Admissions Office.

Additionally, three cash prizes totaling $150 have been awarded, and eight honorable mentions have also been given.

Gray Gallery is open to the public weekdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. There is no admission charged and the public is invited to view this show of high school student art which will be up until May 23.

Brilliant Colors Revealed In Frescoes

NEW YORK (UPI) — The careful, slow cleaning and restoration of Michelangelo's famed frescoes in the Vatican's Sistine Chapel is revealing the great painter to have been even bolder and more brilliant than previously imagined, the chief of the restoration work says.

Cleaning of the ceiling paintings by the great 16th Century master, which are reckoned among the world's most important art treasures, began in 1980 and is expected to be finished about 1992, according to a report in the May issue of Connoisseur Magazine. So far three of the 14 lunettes, the semi-circular portions mostly above windows, have been cleaned of the grime of 400 years.

On seeing the restored portions, which gleam with unsuspected color, Pope John Paul II is reported to have said, "Fantastic, fantastic, absolutely marvelouos."

The chief conservator of paintings at the Vatican, Gianluigi Colalucci, who is in charge of the work, said the restored lunettes "look as though they were executed yesterday."

Colalucci first swabs an area of the painting with distilled water. Then a chemical solvent is brushed on, and wiped off three minutes later. The process is repeated in the worst areas. Colalucci leaves an imperceptible film of dust as a protective shield against pollutants in the air and seals it with a chemical preservative.

Eastern Carolina Fish Catches Noted

RALEIGH — Jim Tyler of the Division of Marine Fisheries has provided some interesting details on the reports of fish catches and other marine activities of eastern North Carolina that took place during the spring.

The overall picture of fish catches shows an encouraging increase in most types of fish. Indications of work being done in the oyster rehabilitation program also offer promise of an improvement in future harvest of oysters.

Selected details from Tyler's report shows:

•Herring catches were good in the upper Chowan River from Holliday Island to Winston, with 20,000 to 45,000 pounds reported per boat daily during the last week of April.

•In a comparison report of catches — March 1982 with March 1981 — the report shows: (Increase in catches) — river herring, up 19 percent; catfish, up 10 percent; croaker, up 129 percent; flounder up 52 percent; grouper up 5 percent; scup-porgy, up 17 percent; shad, up 25 percent; snapper up 52 percent; spot, up 72 percent; and striped bass, up 102 percent. Fish and seafoods with a drop in 1982 in amounts caught are: bluefish, down 40 percent; seabass, down 9 percent; grey trout, down 25 percent, and scallops, down 61 percent.

•Eel catches in Currituck Sound were very good, with fishermen reporting up to 600 pounds a day.

•The 1982 oyster rehabilitation program began April 20 in the southern area (Shallotte River, Brunswick County); and on April 29 in the Northern area (Turnagan Bay, Carteret County). The volume of shells and seed oysters will approach 500,000 bushels. Many owners of leases wre relaying oysters to private beds in late April. In the newly opened seed area of Virginia Creek, Pender County, 10 oyster boats were noted relaying oysters on April 26.

•In the category of a top record fish catch, marine fisheries personnel caught a 4.8 pounds, 21 inches long croaker in a gill net set at the mouth of Rose Bay for pot bait.

•Crab potting has gotten off to a slow start this spring, not in the number of pots set, but in crab landings. At mid-April, the harvest of crabs in the Neuse River was poor.

•In an effort to continue to determine the cause of the flounder kill during the past winter, some flounder were caught and shipped live to the Oxford, Md., lab for viral tests.

Boat Population

According to a report based on zip code tabulations, the 13 towns in North Carolina with the highest number of commercial fishing boat licenses are:

•Wilmington, 1,899; New Bern, 941; Beaufort, 608; Newport, 567; Shallotte, 526; Morehead City, 491; Jacksonville, 483; Swansboro, 381; Kinston, 353; Supply, 345; Harkers Island, 328; Sneads Ferry, 309, and Hampstead, 303.

•Wednesday through Sunday, all day — The Tall Ship "Providence" arrives Wednesday and will be docked at the Beaufort Waterfront. The ship will be open for touring by school children and other public groups.

•Thursday, noon — The Thursdays at Twelve series this week is basket weaving with natural materials, with demonstrations by Madeline Flager, Beaufort Restoration hostess.

For A Week, Chicago Is The World's Art Capital

By MARLA DONATO

CHICAGO (UPI) — Chicago has become the art capital of the world — for a week.

From across the United States, Europe and Japan, 112 major art dealers brought their wares to what has grown in three years to become a premier contemporary art exposition.

Billed as "Art 1982 Chicago," the commerical trade fair May 13 to May 18 — transformed Navy Pier's giant hall on Lake Michigan into a peninsula museum.

With some 20,000 works of art offered, pre-set prices ran from $60 prints to $150,000 for a 1929 Joan Miro. Among works to be represented in the fair's 307 booths were some signed by Moore, Picasso, Lichtenstein, John, Hockney, Oldenburg and Tworkow.

Several are controversial. One piece, "Bust Moscone," by Robert Arneson, is the sculpture of slain San Francisco Mayor George Muscone that was rejected by the city.

The show features painting, photography, drawings, prints, ceramics, collages, video and performance art, and panel discussions. Attendance estimates were for 50,000, including collectors, curators, critics and the general public.

A special attraction is Chicago Mayor Jane Byrne's Mile of Sculpture — 55 pieces running the length of the pier. Included is Red Groom's wacky animated tribute to Chicago on loan from the Art Institute. The show's feature artist is internationally known Chicago painter Seymour Rosofsky, who died last year at the age of 56.

There are modestly priced works. But the show is geared to more sophisticated tastes and purses. Last year, New York's Andre' Emmerich Gallery reportedly sold a Morris Louis for $250,000 and several dealers claimed sales of more than $500,000.

Show organizer, John Wilson, a Lakeside, Mich., print dealer, said the first two shows were a "commercial success for everyone in attendance." But they were a financial flop for Wilson's sponsoring Lakeside Group, which is now running $250,000 in the red and hopes just to break even on this year's million dollar budget.

"But selling is not the important factor of this show," Wilson said. "It was a critical success because of the quality of the work shown. You realize we're talking about a very small percentage of the art dealers when we talk about the type of dealers involved in this type of show." That small percentage represents the upper crust of art dealers, the perhaps 5 percent who deal in "serious art," rather than interior design decorations sold in department stores, he said.

Being particular has paid off. The Chicago art expo has received rave reviews from the likes of New York dealer and contemporary art pacesetter Leo Castelli. He called it "one of the best... better than the ones in Paris, Cologne, Basel."

The Basel Kunstmart in Switzerland has had the reputation as the most prestigious of art expositions. But art trade shows are a relatively young phenomenon. Basel, considered the "Granddaddy," is only about 10 years old. And such shows were started in this country in New York, San Fransico and Washington, D.C., only about five years ago.

But quality, not age, appears to be the decisive factor.

The location helps, said Chicago art dealer Richard Gray, noting the city's status as a U.S. art center, its convention halls, restaurants and hotels. But he said the art work shown is what gives the exposition prestige.

Gray, currently showing Louise Nevelson's sculpture in his gallery, was interviewed as he sat in his office besides a Jean Dubuffet work.

One of Dubuffet's acrylic prints, Psycho-Sites: E 103, will be on display at the expo. Gray said although the art works reach back to some of the 20th century masters, the Chicago show is decidedly avant garde in flavor — making it an exciting "hot" happening — something not to be missed.

Those looking for the new "hot" trends will find something old made new. A consensus of art dealers agreed with Gray that realism, use of recognizable forms, and expressionism, use of symbols to give objective expression to inner experience, are making a comeback from Europe — Italy, Germany and Holland.

Gray said there was no single strong trend.

"There's a lot of parallel things happening," he said, naming new realism, figurative expressionism, pattern painters and others.

Gray said the art world focusted on the United states in the late 1940s but that has changed.

"America's influence is becoming dispersed now and the focus is shifting back to Europe."

——— He said the works of today's European artists reflected the impact of what he called "a unique social time." He said the postwar generation of artists was affected by such things as the divisions and upheavals in life caused by the Soviet iron curtain and "a lot of national guilt there, especially in Germany."

AF, Army Navy Air Power To Be Shown At Pope Open House

THE AIR FORCE'S F-15 "EAGLE" ... is one of the latest Air Force fighters to be shown Saturday at the joint Air Force, Army, Navy open house to be held on the flightline at Pope Air Force Base near Fayetteville. Gates will open at 9 a.m. and will close at 5 p.m. There is no admission charge. (U.S. Air Force Photo)

FAYETTEVILLE — The Air Force, the Army and the Navy will showcase some of the finest combat techniques and aerial artistry seen anywhere as Pope Air Force Base and Fort Bragg, both near Fayetteville, host their annual Open House on the Pope AFB flightline on Saturday.

The flightline will be open to the public from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. An air show is scheduled to begin at noon, with Military Airlift Command C-130 "Hercules" transports to demonstrate their capabilities to air-land troops on short dirt airstrips and to airdrop troops and equipment.

The Navy will show its new F-14 "Tomcat," a sweep-winged fighter that is one of the latest additions to the American military flying arsenal. The "Tomcat" is capable of achieving speeds twice that of sound.

The A-10 "Thunderbolt" close support fighters will fly air cover for members of the Army's elite 82nd Airborne Division as they demonstrate an air assault operation.

Pope AFB officials note they have also requested demonstrations by other fighter aircraft as well. A variety of military aircraft will be displayed on the ground, including the C-5 "Galaxy," the world's largest aircraft.

Other highlight activities scheduled for the open house day include an aerial refueling, formation flyovers, a parachute demonstration by members of the 82nd Airborne Division Sport Parachute Club and Pope's Combat Control Team, an air rescue by the HH-3 "Jolly Green Giant" helicopter, and a low-altitude parachute extraction of heavy equipment.

Activities to appeal to children, such as a jump tower and a jeep ride, will be conducted.

Entertainment will be provided by a concert to be given by the Highlander's British Brass Band and the 82nd Airborne Divisin. Refreshment booths will be installed in the area.

Carolina Today

The herb lady and a spree on the Pasquotank River are among coming attractions on Carolina Today, the early morning 6 to 8 a.m. program aired over WNCT-TV, Channel 9, with hosts Slim Short and Susan Roberts. The calendar for the coming week is:

• Monday — 6:45 a.m., a return visit by Bobby Denning; 7:15 a.m., details on herbs by Mrs. Manning, the herb lady; 7:25 a.m., Tal Lackey and Susan Little with facts on Kinston's "A Day in the Park;" and 7:40 a.m., a preview of the river spree on the Pasquotank River.

• Tuesday — 6:45 a.m., Healthbreak; 7:15 a.m., Vandale Hudson on the Evangelism Explosion Class; 7:25 a.m., Vanceboro Rescue Squad; and 7:40 a.m., to be announced.

• Wednesday — 6:45 a.m., Tommy Payne and Don Renes discuss adolescence and alcohol; 7:15 a.m. through 7:40 a.m., Fred Lilly heads a Social Security call-in.

• Thursday — 6:45 a.m., John Maola is the guest; 7:15 a.m., Christa Sauls, the Little Miss N.C. Hemisphere; and 7:40 a.m., home economics extension agent Addie Gore.

• Friday — 6:45 a.m., a spokesman from the Belhaven Chamber of Commerce; 7:15 a.m., color in the home is the topic of Dr. Hammett; and 7:40 a.m., Arron Atkins on alfresco dining.

WOOW Classics

A piano concerto is the major work to be heard tonight on Karen Hause's weekly Sunday evening program, "WOOW Classics," broadcast over Radio Station WOOW, 1340 on the radio dial. The program airs for a two hour period, 10 p.m. to midnight.

A 20th century work will open the program, Bernstein's "Overture to Candide," with Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic.

Rudolph Serkin is pianist with the Cleveland Orchestra conducted by George Szell in the evening's major work, the "Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Major" by Brahms.

Three other compositions are being featured on tonight's program — a collection of Italian Renaissance songs and dances by the Waverly Consort; Rvel's "Trio in A minor for Piano, Violin and Cello" with Rubeinstein, Heifetz and Piatigorsky; and the "Concerto for Horn and Orchestra in F Major" by Telemann, with soloist James Stagliano.

Hospitality House

WASHINGTON — Professional modeling, photography and mental health are the topics on Kay Currie's "Hospitality House" weekly Sunday program, airing from noon until 1 p.m. today.

Kathry Jason, a former Wilhemina model and a graduate of East Carolina University, will share some pointers on the modeling profession. Ms. Jason is also the author of a new book, "The Power to Change Your Life."

A Greenville photographer, Dean James, and his wife, Karen, will show some old photographs they have restored in conjunction with the 75th anniversary of East Carolina University.

Two persons are guests today with comments on mental health. The two are Dr. Boone Morea, president of the Beaufort County Mental Health Association, and Nancy Furlough, chairperson for Mental Health Month.

STARS AS MARCO POLO — American actor Ken Marshall stars in the title role of "Marco Polo" in a 10-hour mini-series to be seen on NBC Television beginning Sunday, from 8 to 11 p.m. "Marco Polo" was the first Western dramatic presentation filmed in the People's Republic of China. The film is a co-production of RAI Radiotelevisione Italiana and The Procter & Gamble Company.

Professor Named Editor

Hal Daniel III, professor of speech and auditory pathology and adjunct professor of anthropology at East Carolina University, has been named regional editor for a new poetry publication due to make its debut early this summer.

The publication, A Fine Madness, is to be published in Seattle under the auspices of the University of Washington.

As a regional editor, Daniel will scout for new poetry from poets in the Southeastern states to submit for possible inclusion in issues of the magazine.

The first issue of A Fine Madness is scheduled to contain poems by William Stafford, Nelson Bentley, Davis Waggoner, Tess Gallaher, Ian Caws and others, including the British poet Leslie Norris. Also, a couple of poems by Daniel are tenatively scheduled for inclusion in this premiere issue.

Almanac Calendar

WASHINGTON — Hosts Dick Jones and Jim Mallory will be covering water activities and highway safety on their upcoming "Almanac" show, which airs over WITN-TV, Channel 7, each weekday morning from 6 to 7 a.m. The calendar is:

•Monday — Foil McLaughlin, executive director for the N.C. Crop Improvement Association, will discuss new seed regulations and how they affect the Tar Heel farmer.

•Tuesday — Elizabeth City and the city's annual "River Spree" is the topic for Tuesday.

•Wednesday — Sgt. Glenn Swanson of the N.C. State Patrol will share safety tips to help avoid accidents.

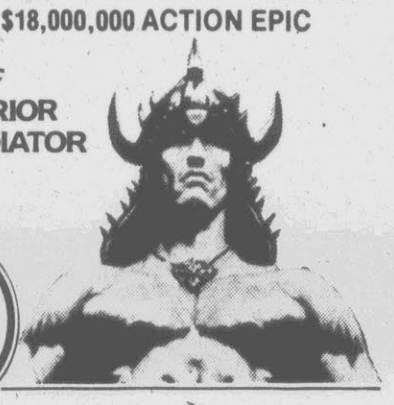

•Thursday and Friday — Jones and Mallory will be on the road visiting the Islander Motel and Restaurant on Emerald Isle. They will talk with Captain Gene Maddox and will tour his boat, the "Tripoli." Other topics for the two-day road trip include video games, spring and summer fasions and a look at what the coast offers vacationers.

Church In Hamilton Celebrating 100th Anniversary Today

HAMILTON — At 2:30 this afternoon, the Historic Hamilton Commission Inc. will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the consecration of St. Martin's Episcopal Church. The consecration took place on May 17, 1882.

Because of its unaltered condition, good state of preservation and relatively elaborate architectural treatment, St. Martin's is one of Hamilton's outstanding architectural landmarks and is significant as a fine example of late 19th century rural churches in North Carolina.

The Rev. James R. Horton, rector of the Church of the Advent in Williamston, will conduct the special commemorative service, assisted by the organist and choir from his church. Prior to the service, special music will be presented by Don Edmondson, who regularly serves as the organist for the annual community Christmas Eve service presented at St. Martin's.

During the service, musical offerings will be performed by Joann Bath, violinist, and Dr. Charles Bath, organist, both of Greenville.

Following the service, the Historic Hamilton Commission will entertain all guests at a reception in the churchyard.

The Historic Hamilton Commission, in cooperation with the Episcopal Diocese of East Carolina, seeks to maintain and preserve the St. Martin's Church building and has established the St. Martin's Fund which it administers for that purpose. At the present time, interior restoration work is in progress. A thorough cleaning of the walls and ceiling has just been completed by professional cleaners and the plaster walls have been repainted.

Additional interior restoration work scheduled includes painting the ceiling, repairs to the leather doors opening from the vestibule and window replacements.

Other Attractions

The commission also invites the people coming to Hamilton for the St. Martin's celebration of the church's 100th consecration anniversary to allot time to visit a couple of other historic sites at the conclusion of ceremonies at the church.

One of these is the Conoho Masonic Lodge building, where early stages of restoration work is now in progresss. At this time it's possible to see the original lathwork and beams of the sturdy two-story building. The Lodge has been moved from its original site on a small dirt back street to its new location facing N.C. Highway 125 that leads to Oak City.

The other historic place to be open to the public today is Fort Branch, the Civil War fort located in the Rainbow Banks area on the banks of the Roanoke River. The fort, with its well-preserved earthen ramparts, is located about three miles from Hamilton, just off the paved back road that winds through the Poplar Point Commuinity between Hamilton and Williamston. At this time, the stand of mountain laurel is still in bloom in the Fort Branch compound.

100TH ANNIVERSARY TODAY . . . A celebration ceremony begins at 2:30 this afternoon to mark the 100th anniversary of the May 17, 1882 consecration of St. Martin's Episcopal Church in Hamilton. The small chapel, surrounded by old magnolia trees and containing a small cemetery, is basically unaltered and isconsidered a fine example of 19th century church architecture. The public is also invited to stroll through the tree-shaded streets of the town, and to visit two other outstanding sites — the Conoho Masonic building now being restored, and the Civil War compound at Fort Branch, a few miles from Hamilton. Dance Festival Programs Funded

NEW YORK — Participants in two new programs of the American Dance Festival's National Choreography Project have been announced by Charles L. Reinhart, president of the ADF, which is based in Durham.

Danny Buraczeski's Jazzdance, Jim Self and Dancers, and the Charlie Vernon Performance Company, along with composers David Felder, Frankie Mann and Eric Valinsky, have been named for the ADF's Young Companies in Residence Program.

Buraczeski, Vernon and Self, along with their dancers, will spend five weeks in Durham taking classes, working and collaborating with composers Felder, Mann and Valinsky. Their residences will culminate in performances to be given on July 12 and July 14.

Choreographers Johanna Boyce, Charles Moulton and Kei Takei, and composers Norma Dalby and Richard Munson were chosen to participate in the festival's Ascending Generation program.

Works by the choreographers will be performed in late June in Durham.

Announcement of the programs were made at a symposium hosted by the Exxon Corp., which contributed $60,000 to the new ADF programs. The National Choreography Project has also received funding from the National Endowment for the Arts and the Jerome Foundation. Participants at the symposium included choreographers Merce Cunningham and Paul Taylor.

NCMA Gallery Talk

RALEIGH — "Stories and Legends," a gallery talk by N.C. Museum of Art docent Katherine Poerschke, will be given at 2:15 p.m. Sunday in the museum, located at 107 E. Morgan St., downtown Raleigh.

Among works to be discussed is "Esther's Feast" by Dutch Artist Jan Lievens. There is admission charged for the talk or for viewing the works of art displayed in the museum. Sunday hours are 2 to 6 p.m.

Premiere For Locklair Work

CHARLOTTE — The world premiere of "Prism of Life," composed by Charlotte native Dan Locklair, was performed Wednesday in Ovens Auditorium. Mezzo-soprano Diane Curry was guest soloist.

Locklair won the 1981 Howard Hanson Award from the Eastman School of Music for "Prism of Life," an orchestral work with vocal passages. He was also one of five finalists in the 1981 Kennedy Center Friedheim Awards for his composition, "Constellation."

Ms. Curry is a principal artist of the New York City Opera and the Lyric Opera of Chicago.

A COLOSSAL RIDE . . . The nation's largest ferris wheel, standing nearly 17 stories at its highest point above ground, 162 feet, is the fair's most distinctive feature at night when it is a whirl of turning lights. For the adventurous, it is also a thrilling ride.

Overall View Of The Fair

Scenes From The 1982 World Fair

All is not rosy in the early days of the 1982 World's Fair in Knoxville, Tennessee — as officials willingly admit. However, they add that things are off to an encouraging start.

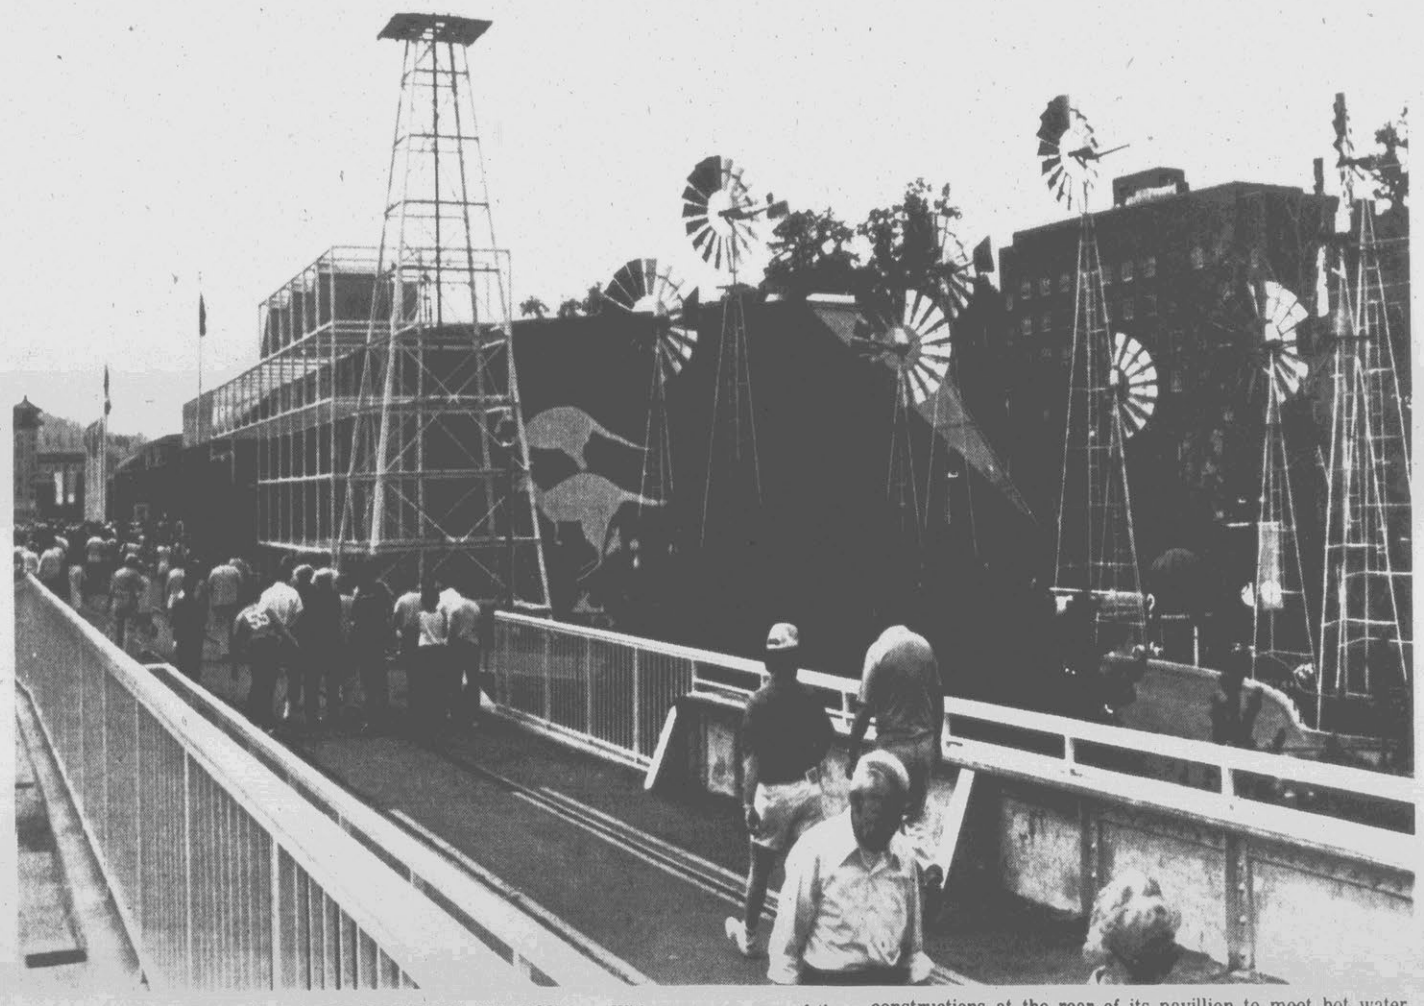

In the first days, many complained about the long lines to get into some exhibits, but steps have been taken to make that less of a chore. To help make waiting time more pleasant, "atmospheric entertainers" — mimes, magicians and ventriloquists roam about entertaining those who wait.

Fears expressed about parking and accommodations have not materialized to any considerable degree. Rooms are scarce, but surrounding communities have an abundance of hotel and motel space. Parking is not difficult either, and many visitors are utilizing shuttle buses or tours to circumvent parking problems.

Once at the fair, there's an abundance of enjoyable things to see — pieces of the ancient Great Wall of China; art and archeaological treasures from exotic countries such as Egypt and Peru; the latest innovations in 20th century energy conservation exhibited by Australia and the United States; and electronic marvels from Japan and other countries.

North Carolina has its own attractive exhibit at the state's Lifestyles and Technology Center; and for visitors of all ages there are exciting rides and an array of top entertainment in the Family FunFair area.

Through May 10, official attendance figures since the fair's opening shows a total of 657,754 visitors.

Windmills For Energy

WINDMILLS FOR ENERGY . . . With energy as one of the principal themes for the 1982 World's Fair, Australia is displaying efficiently functioning windmills and a pair of solar constructions at the rear of its pavillion to meet hot water needs. The U.S. pavillion is also an energy-efficient one.

Era Of Action Furniture May Be Coming Next

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

The ability of human beings to come up with new ideas on an old subject was demonstrated at the spring furniture market at High Point, N.C.

Many of the new designs showed that while art is still a major influence in furniture construction, technology is becoming more important. New developments suggest an era of action furniture is about to be launched. It was the rare company that did not show at least a few pieces combining multiple uses and movable parts.

Several firms, for example, introduced a new idea in cabinetry that employs an automatic lift device to raise and lower a shelf or storage compartment. Bernhardt Furniture's television, electronic equipment and record-storage piece is an example.

The cabinet, priced at about $2,400 retail, works on a kind of scissors device, according to a company spokesman. A push of a lever brings the storage compartment into view for use and another sends it out of sight.

Tomlinson Furniture had a similar mechanism in a bar-television cabinet and so did Thayer Coggin. Tomlinson also showed another piece that employed seeming magic — a lighted glass-fronted china cabinet with a touch-sensitive switch on the outside. To light or darken the display cabinet, one simply touches the panel, which is responsive to the heat and moisture of the skin.

Another example of furniture on the move is sleep sofas with inflatable mattresses. Pinnacle Furniture showed the sofas, but a company executive said other firms would probably offer them in the future.

The sofa opens in the conventional manner, but the thin mattress is inflated several inches for greater sleeping comfort. A small electrically-powered hand pump provides the air in about 45 seconds.

Tom Collins, merchandise manager, said comfort was the greatest advantage of what he called an "air flotation system" mattress. But a longer-lasting mattress may be another benefit. Pinnacle is offering the system as a $200 option in all its sofas.

Another development in sleep sofas known as the trifold mechanism makes it possible to build a longer 78-inch bed into a sofa, instead of the usual 72-inch unit. The trifold mechanism is not new. Europeans have been using it for years. But it was improved and widely introduced into the United States only in the past year or two, according to Leonard Eby, an executive with Super Sagless Corp., which offers one version of the unit.

The trifold mechanism makes it possible to fit a folding bed into a low-back or backless piece of furniture, such as a coffee table, ottoman or buffet cabinet.

Both retailers and manufacturers at the market, where new designs are introduced and ordered for resale several months later in retail stores, agreed the new sleep sofas meet an important new consumer need.

Many Americans are using such sofas every night, not simply as an occasional extra bed, according to Collins of Pinnacle.

Another area where technology is affecting furniture is home electronic components.

There is still room for creativity, but, at the least, consumers can expect wall systems, cabinets and armoires to be fitted with swiveling slide-out trays for television or record players, open backs for wires, and in some instances phone jacks installed in bed headboards.

One of the more interesting new wall systems came from a German firm. Planum's wall system, imported by Wernermeier Inc. of New York, features a ceiling-mounted track and several units that can turn a corner.

One corner-turning unit contains a fold-down table. The wall system has many storage options for household equipment, home-entertainment components or office supplies and, thus, can turn a bare room into a highly specialized functional space.

The system will sell for up to about $20,000 in the deluxe solve-any-problem installation.

Other examples of technological improvements to watch for in new furniture include new finishes and extension tables. One firm was showing a highly decorated wood-furniture group with the look of intricate hand-painted Chinese scenes on table tops and cabinet fronts.

Bernardt's Ni Chin wood-furniture group is not made in the traditional way, however. Instead, an etching process creates the raised design in a layer of synthetic material.

New extension tables shown by American of Martinsville owe something to technology and something to history. The tables store their own leaves and extend with a simple mechanical system. Though highly suited to today's small interiors, the tables are based on an antique that dates from 1840, according to Richard Simmons, president.

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I heard that there was a special kind of vinyl tile that never wears out and never shows marks of any kind, yet I have tried everywhere and nobody seems to have heard of it. They all say I don't ever have to worry about solid vinyl tile wearing out, but that nobody can guarantee that tile of any kind will never show marks, because anything can be damaged if certain things are dropped on it or dragged along it. Have you heard of such a tile? A friend of mine says he read it in a magazine about six months ago but doesn't remember which one.

A. — The answers you were given were reasonably accurate. Present-day resilient floor tile of all kinds is more resistant than years ago, both as to wear and marks. This is especially true of solid vinyl and even more especially if the vinyl is embossed or otherwise textured, thus helping to disguise marks.

Q. — We have a slate floor just inside the front door of our house. Can we give it a coat of polyurethane varnish?

A. — Yes.

Q. — I want to make a birdhouse for wrens. What size should the hole in the front of it be?

A. — One inch is the size to keep out larger birds.

Q. — Within the next year, we intend to have a house built on property that we have owned for some time. Is it wise to act as my own contractor for the purpose of saving money?

A. — Definitely, no, unless you have had considerable experience in doing so. Even then, it can be a huge headache. The details and complexities are so many and so varied, most people who attempt the subcontracting regret it sooner or later.

Q. — The terms used in stories about roofs and roofing materials are sometimes confusing. Can you straighten me out on what the various special words mean?

A. — All of them are in the dictionary. However, so that you and other readers will have them in one place, here are some: Coverage — the degree of weather protection by a roofing material; single, double or triple coverage. Deck — the roof surface or platform to which roofing materials are applied. Drip edge — weather-resistant metal edge installed along eaves and rakes to facilitate shedding of water at the edges. Eaves — parts of a roof that project beyond, or overhang the face of the wall at the lower edge of the roof. Exposure — specifically, exposure to weather; the distance from the butt edge of one shingle to another. Felt — a building paper of strong, tough base saturated with asphalt. Flashing — strips of metal or roofing material used in making watertight joints on a roof, especially in valleys or where inclined and vertical surfaces intersect. Gable — the end of a wall of a building which comes to a triangular point under a sloping roof; also, a type of roof. Hip — an external angle formed by the meeting of two sloping ends of the roof, from the ridge to the eaves; also, a type of roof. Rake — the inclined edge of a pitched roof over an end wall. Ridge — the apex of the angle formed by a roof, or the peak, where the common rafters meet. Square — the amount of roofing material required to cover 100 square feet of roof surface. Valley — an internal angle or water runway formed by the intersection of two slopes in a roof.

(You can get a copy of a booklet, "Guide to the Selection of Quality Roofing," which includes an asphalt-shingle color guide, by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.

PLAN YOUR HOME — The Landorf

Three Bedroom Ranch Plan Conserves Space

By Jerry Bishop

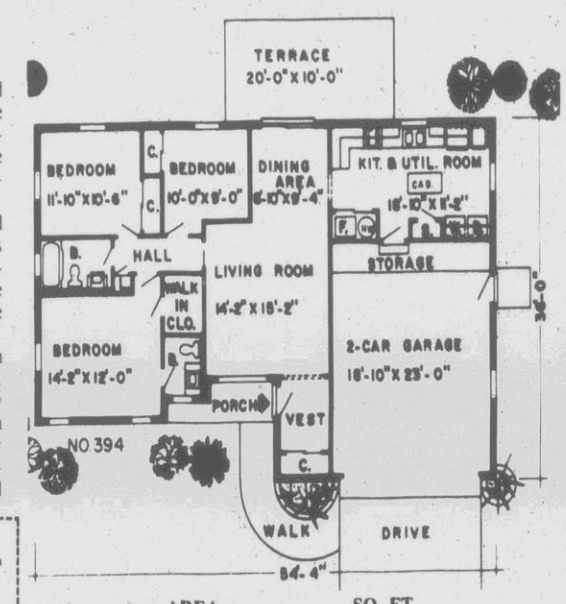

Save money without sacrificing livability. The Landorf, a carefully arranged three bedroom ranch style, accomplishes just that. For carefree family living, the design shows sizable rooms, a dining area with sliding glass doors to the terrace, a work center kitchen, and ample storage space.

Brick and stone layer the exterior of this trim home, and vertical siding adds an interesting contrast to the horizontal brick.

A feature not often found in budget plans is the entry, set apart from the living room and framed by a coat closet. To enlarge the design visually, the entry is open to the living room and dining area, and the view is one of open space, climaxed by sliding glass doors that bring in the outdoors and complete the effect.

Large enough for family and guests, the living room provides the focus of the home. It is comfortable, accessible from the sleeping areas, and close to the kitchen for entertaining.

Bordering the dining area is an excellent work center kitchen. Besides containing all necessary kitchen equipment, the area carves a laundry niche and utility area. A central work island offers additional cabinet space, and a garage entry allows for ease in unloading groceries. In fact, the adjacent garage storage area provides a logical location for a pantry if one is desired.

AREA	SQ. FT.
First floor	— 1,244
Garage	— 466

For effective zoning from everyday noise, bedrooms are clustered to the left of the living areas. The master bedroom, which measures over 14 by 12, merits a half bath and walk-in closet. The second bath, edged by a linen closet, is near bedrooms and living room.

With three outside entrances for flexibility, the long double garage is a welcome feature and shows useful storage space.

Do-It-Yourselfers Turn To Unfinished

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — Unfinished furniture, bought fully assembled, or in kit form, fills a gap for the budget-minded and the creative "do-it-yourselfer," says Clark Garner, a specialist in design and environmental analysis for Cornell Cooperative Extension.

Garner says consumers can save from 30 to 45 percent by buying unfinished furniture, with the greatest savings realized in buying pre-assembled pieces available locally, rather than ordering kits which must be assembled.

He advises doing comparative shopping, looking for pieces of high quality, with good construction, woods and craftsmanship. If the wood is tacky or resinous, rather than smooth, it will affect the appearance of the finish, he warns.

Pieces assembled with screws are of better quality than those assembled with glue or staples, Garner points out, and dovetail and rabbet joints are preferable.

Doors and drawers should fit and open and close easily, and the piece should sit solidly on the floor. Stacking units, such as book shelves and stereo units, should fit together squarely.

Before undertaking furniture finishing, consumers should make sure they have the skills necessary to complete the piece to their satisfaction, the time to do so and a controlled place to work, Garner advises. The work space, for best results, should be well ventilated, dust-free and reasonably child-proof.

Q. Last year, my snapbeans bloomed but I didn't get any beans. How can I avoid the same problem this year? (C.G., Mount Airy)

A. Hope that the temperature does not exceed 90 degrees during the time the beans are blooming. Snapbeans do not set fruit well during hot weather.

Q. Why does the tall fescue in my lawn die in small patches during hot, wet weather? (M.M., Raleigh)

A. The problem described is a disease called brown patch. It is caused by a fungus that grows rapidly during hot, wet weather. The best control for this disease is to use a good management program to maintain low nitrogen in the summer (fertilize in fall and spring), mow fequently at two and one-half to three inches high when the grass is dry and remove excess shade if present. Several fungicides can be used if the disease becomes severe.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Storage space is where you find it — or where you make it.

Either way, extra storage space is there even if you haven't noticed it. The simplest method of noticing it is to make a room-by-room inspection of your house with a pencil and pad in your hands. As you move along (and don't neglect the halls) with the deliberate intention of "finding" space, mark down each place that might be usable even if it appears unlikely that it really can be utilized.

Your bathroom, for instance, might appear to be too small to hold another thing, but look a little longer. There probably is at least one corner where shelves can be placed. Is the space under the sink being fully utilized? How about the wall over the toilet tank?

In the bedroom, boxes on wheels or with movable bases can be constructed low enough to fit under the bed so that acrobatics are not necessary to retrieve toys and whatever else is pushed under there.

You may already be using some of the space under the attic eaves, but there is probably a lot more that can help solve your storage problems. If you have a basement, is the space under the stairway shelved or otherwise organized so that it can hold a lot more than things pushed under there without any plan?

Are the garage walls doing more than enclosing your car or cars? Wouldn't plenty of easy-to-attach shelves take care of dozens of cans and other containers now scattered about in helter-skelter fashion?

How about a pegboard wall with appropriate hooks for taking care of tools and garden equipment? And, if your storage troubles are especially acute, consider how you might build a large hanging shelf or something similar in the space far above the top of the auto.

There is space waiting to be used in nearly every closet. In a clothes closet, for example, you can nearly always make a few changes to accommodate additional garments. In the average closet, there is considerable space between the bottoms of the jackets and shirts and the floor. You could install a shelf on the side where the shorter garments are hung and one on the side where the trousers and-or dresses are.

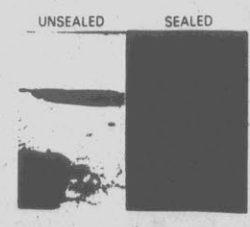

In a job recently done in a man's closet, the horizontal rod was raised just a few inches, the shelf above it being raised the same distance. All the trousers, which were cuff-hung, were placed on the pole towards one side; all jackets and shorter garments towards the other side. Since the trousers usually hang down 44 to 46 inches and the jackets 38 to 40 inches, that left plenty of extra space under the jackets. Another horizontal clothes rod was then installed below the shorter garments, ending at the middle of the closet. Presto, there was extra space for hanging a dozen or more jackets or a mixture of jackets, shirts or anything else which didn't reach the floor.

This rearrangement did not interfere with the placement of shoes on the closet floor, as is often done, since there was space for them under the trousers. And if you double-hung rather than cuff-hung the trousers, you would have space to extend the lower rod all the way across the closet, presuming that you had some other place to keep the shoes.

In another closet, the home owner was more in need of shelf space than rod space. He decided on a second and higher shelf above the one already there, specifically to store blankets during the warm weather. It worked fine, although he admitted some difficulty with placement of the new shelf to be certain he had enough room to get the blankets in and out comfortably.

In still another arrangement, a vertical divider was placed in the closet so that drawers could be installed on runners in the area under the section where the shorter garments were hung.

Use your imagination and you'll find plenty of extra space. But don't be surprised if, in about a month, the newly found space is jammed to capacity and you have to look around for still more space.

Hosteling Offers Chance For Inexpensive Travel

By FRED FERGUSON

NEW YORK (UPI) — That night in Scotland, when there was no room at the bed-n-breakfasts, was a turning point in her life, Stacy Landau will tell you.

"It was my first trip to Europe. I was 21. I'd just graduated from college," says Miss Landau, now all of 24.

Having set out to travel through Scotland on a British rail pass and a limited budget, she found herself in Aviemore "and all the bed-n-breakfasts were full."

"Somebody told me about the youth hostel and I lugged my suitcase there. It was dinner time. There were a bunch of kids, sharing the cooking. They welcomed me like I was a long lost friend.

"I wound up staying a week there. Then I threw away my suitcase, bought a backpack and for eight months I hosteled through Scotland, England and Europe."

It had started as a summer excursion. "I'd planned to stay until my money ran out. Because of hosteling I could stay a lot longer."

She said a night at a hostel generally costs about a third the cost of one at a bed-n-breakfast, let alone a hotel.

She wrote a glowing letter to American Youth Hostels on her return and wound up with a job promoting hosteling for the Metropolitan New York AYH Council, with 17,000 members largest of 33 councils.

Miss Landau, a Brooklyn, N.Y., native, found the experience exhilarating. Her eyes sparkle when she tells of it. She preaches hosteling with evangelical fervor.

"It's not just for kids. It's open to all. Something we're working on is more accommodations for couples."

Now, she says, "We have all sorts of tours. And that has many advantages. But I had set out almost on the spur of the moment, (five days from decision to take-off) and was soloing, traveling as an independent.

"But after I began hosteling, I was never really alone unless I wanted to be.

"You always meet people. Often, you travel together for a day or more. The people I met at a hostel in Stockholm, I met again in Italy."

In all, she visited 15 countries. She recalls the hostels in castles in Scotland and Germany; those in chalets in Switzerland, one with a sauna and steambath in Norway, one you could only hike to on foot in Wales and one on a ship in Stockholm harbor.

Except for a hostel in Venice, which she feels suffered from the building's age and too much togetherness — "there were about 50 people a single huge dorm," she says the hostels were clean and well managed.

After all, as she put it, "We clean them. It's part of the routine. When you get up in the morning, you are assigned a chore by the house parents. Everybody pitches in. It's not a big job and kind of fun."

"Often we could buy breakfast for a very nominal amount." She remembers with relish "fresh churned butter, home baked bread and hot chocolate" at a hostel in Switzerland.

But AYH tours are the thing for many. The advantages include a tour leader who is an experienced hosteler and has taken an AYH training course in such things as handling travel problems and arrangements, first aid, bike repairs and group leadership.

A majority of the tours, of which there are scores, are for bikers. But some are for hiker-campers and some utilize public transportation. They range all over the United States and Europe. There are tours to Canada, Cuba, the Peruvian Andes, Japan and now even bike tours to China.

Author Cites Winning Rules

COLUMBIA, Miss. (AP) — Jo Foxworth, author, public speaker and advertising specialist, gave her "Nine Commandments for Women in Business" when she spoke here recently.

Appearing at a celebration christened "Jo Foxworth Day" by Marion County, an area settled by her ancestors before the Civil War, she recited her commandments:

—Thou shalt know when to zip thy lip and listen quietly.
—Thou shalt not attempt to hide behind thine own petticoat.
—Thou shalt speak softly and carry no stick except lipstick.
—Thou shalt serve thy lady boss as graciously as thou servest any man.
—When success cometh, thou shalt not get too big for thy bustle.
—Thou shalt watch thy language; there may be gentlemen present.
—Thou shalt not match martinis with the men.
—Thou shalt save thy sex appeal for after five, even though thy C-cup runneth over.

The business world is still male turf, she said, adding that "the men invented business and the men run it. They have no intention of relinquishing any part of their own territory to anybody, regardless of the biology involved, and if we expect to get anywhere in their world, we've got to learn our way around in it."

Reinstated, But No Explanation

DETROIT, Mich. (AP) — The Rev. Anthony Kosnik, one of the Roman Catholic authors of a controversial 1977 study on sexuality, has been reinstated to the faculty of Sts. Cyril and Methodius Seminary.

He had resigned under pressure, and three other faculty members had resigned in protest. They also were reinstated, the National Catholic Reporter says. It says the seminary explained neither action.

OPEC Finds Solidarity

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When OPEC ministers agreed two months ago to cut and ration oil production to regain control of oil markets, many people scoffed. OPEC had always been a band of rags-to-riches nations that spent more time fighting each other than cooperating.

The scoffing has stopped.

When Mana Saeed Oteiba, the cartel's president, announced details of that March 20 decision, most people ignored his bold claim that "the market ... from this moment will consolidate and start to be put on the right track."

Oil prices had been tumbling for weeks and many analysts said only a huge production cut by Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest oil exporter, could halt the hemorrhaging.

The ignoring has stopped.

"OPEC has accomplished what it wanted to accomplish," said Thomas Burns, an economist at Standard Oil Co. of California.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, given up for dead by some Western analysts earlier this year, has found a new sense of solidarity that may help it regain control of the world oil markets.

"The obituaries people were writing for OPEC have proved to be premature," said Daniel Yergin, an energy expert at Harvard University's Energy and Environmental Policy Center. "They have shown much greater cohesion under a lot of pressure than most people would have thought."

The cartel will try to bolster its strength when the 13 ministers meet at their spring conference Thursday in Quito, Ecuador. A special OPEC committee will meet two days earlier in Caracas, Venezuela, to review market conditions and discuss recommendations for Quito.

Burns said he thinks OPEC may decide to raise its production ceiling from the current 17.5 million barrels a day in anticipation of an upturn in demand this summer and fall. Other analysts disagree.

"They've got something that's working, so why change it?" said Steven Smith, director of Data Resources Inc.'s domestic energy service.

Since the cartel adopted the first production-sharing plan in its 22-year history, the price of crude oil on the open market has risen sharply, relieving pressure on OPEC to lower its official prices — those for crude sold by contract to oil companies and governments.

On the spot market, where individual cargoes of crude are sold to the highest bidder, Arab Light has jumped from about $28 a barrel in early March to about $33, or only $1 less than the Saudi contract price. The price increase for other OPEC crudes on the spot market has been even more dramatic.

As a result, U.S. crude prices also have stopped falling, and some industry officials say they expect some domestic producers to raise prices soon. Also, gasoline prices have begun to rise after tumbling about 20 cents a gallon on average over the past year. More increases are expected.

Although OPEC appears to have avoided the disaster many people predicted for it, the double-barrel effects of conservation and recession in the industrialized West still are dampening its oil sales.

OPEC production is thought to be about 16 million barrels a day, down nearly 50 percent from its 1979 peak.

As a result, OPEC's current-account surplus will fall from $110 billion in 1980 to perhaps zero this year. The current account is the broadest measure of the value of goods and services flowing in and out of the combined OPEC economies.

Barring a major disruption in oil supplies from Saudi Arabia, the cartel may never again relive the heyday of the 1970s when political upheaval allowed it to force a ten-fold increase in prices over the decade. But neither is it likely that OPEC will lose its influence on oil prices.

"The assessment of the oil markets is that OPEC is getting its act together," said Sanford Margoshes, an energy analyst at Bache Halsey Stuart Shields Inc.

The choreographer of that act is Saudi Arabia, holder of 30 percent of the free world's oil reserves and producer of 40 percent of OPEC's total output.

The Saudis have shored up the March agreement in three important ways:

—Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi oil minister, said that while his country was not party to the production-sharing agreement it had decided on its own to cut its output by 500,000 barrels to 7 million barrels daily. That lowered the lid on OPEC production to 17.5 million barrels daily.

—In the days following the March meeting, Saudi Arabia pounced on several Western oil companies that told Nigeria they planned to stop buying its high-priced oil. Saudi Arabia, aware that Nigeria's weak economy might force it to acquiesce to the oil companies, threatened to blacklist those oil companies from Saudi oil if they left Nigeria. The issue is not settled, but the companies have backed off for now.

—The Saudis reportedly also engineered a financial aid package from other Arab members of the cartel. It has been reported that Nigeria received assurances of emergency assistance totaling as much as $2 billion, although Nigerian government officials recently dismissed the reports as "mere speculation."

Despite those support measures, Saudi Arabia may not be able to extinguish what is perhaps the greatest threat to OPEC's pricing system: a quick end to the Iran-Iraq war. The fighting has reduced their combined production to about 2 million or 2.5 million barrels a day compared with capacity of perhaps as much as 7 million barrels a day.

Bethel Report Planned

BETHEL — The Bethel Council of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce is preparing an updated progress report on the town's effort to win a Governor's Community of Excellence Award.

Details on the program will be presented at a banquet scheduled for 7:30 p.m. June 3 at the Bethel Elementary School cafeteria. The banquet is being developed around the theme of "Progress Report — Bethel's Chamber of Commerce on the Move."

The council, at a meeting last week, was told by its organization and membership committee that the banquet will include an update on the program of work and an audio visual presentation on which is to be presented to the Governor's Community of Excellence Award Committee.

The "Citizen of the Year" award also will be presented to a Bethel citizen at the banquet.

Accepted by the board as new members were: Ken Manning, Tom Carson Farms, David G. Lee, Carson Gas Co., James Gallman, George Worsley, Sam Wilson Farm, Maranatha Ministries, Sam Keel Farm, C.X. James Farm & Son, Ralph Highsmith, Jamie L. Barnhill, Tom L. Arvin, Dixie Everett and Bethel Elemetary School PTO.

Vietnam Is Using Labor To Pay Debts

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam is sending thousands of workers to the Soviet Union and other Soviet-bloc nations under an expanding labor-export program to help pay off debts to those Communist countries, according to official statements and diplomatic sources here.

Western diplomats say Vietnamese officials in Hanoi privately acknowledge that about 60 percent of the earnings generated by these workers is used to repay debts or finance imports from the Soviet bloc.

Some refugees fleeing to Southeast Asian points from southern Vietnam claim that coercion is used to muster recruits and that some Vietnamese are being subjected to "slave labor" conditions. These refugees claim that among those destined for places like Siberia are former officers of the fallen South Vietnamese regime who had been placed in harsh "re-education camps" after the 1975 Communist victory. Also targeted, the refugees claim, are urban residents unwilling to move to remote "new economic zones" which the Communist government in Hanoi established to reduce the populations of congested cities and build up agriculture.

Recent refugees from northern Vietnam, interviewed by The Associated Press in Hong Kong, claimed that one third of the wages earned by the laborers goes to them in the form of an allowance while the rest is channeled to the state to use as it deems necessary.

Health Care Changes May Lower Costs

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In a few years, a woman who wants a pregnancy test may be able to flip through a consumer guide that lists prices, services and whether the doctor has ever been sued for malpractice.

An elderly couple may receive a letter offering the choice between staying on Medicare or using federal money to buy private health coverage. A blitz of advertising follows from companies wanting their business.

A man scheduled for his second heart operation may not be able to have the surgery at the hospital near his home, where he had his first one. That hospital now sends its heart patients to another facility, 10 miles away.

Tomorrow's medicine, experts say, will more resemble shopping for grapefruit in a supermarket than today's system of health care in which the patient usually accepts his doctor's dictates.

Patients will have more choice about how much health care they want and more doctors may woo them, but they may have to pay a bigger chunk of the bill themselves and take the risk of making the wrong choices.

At a recent seminar sponsored by the Washington Journalism Center, officials from government and private industry predicted changes in the way health care is financed that will affect millions of Americans.

Some are already in the works, spurred by inflation. Some are being pushed by the administration, which says the rise in health care costs — 15 percent last year, including a 19 percent hike in hospital rates — is unacceptable.

Americans spent $247.2 billion on health care in 1980. The General Accounting Office estimates Americans spent $278.5 billion on health care last year. Health care expenditures have soared, from $82 per capita and 4.4 percent of the gross national product in 1950, to $1,067 in 1980, and 9.4 percent. By 1990, the government predicts, they will rise to $3,309 per capita and 10.8 percent of GNP if someone does not put on the brakes.

Michael Bromberg, head of the Federation of American Hospitals, predicts half the nation's 7,000 hospitals will be run by chains by the end of the decade — sharing equipment, bookkeeping services and insurance coverage to save money.

That means not all hospitals will do everything. A patient who needs heart surgery or a total-body X-ray may have to travel to a hospital a few miles away that is equipped to do the work.

With the doctor supply growing, some predict increasing competition. Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., chairman of the Senate Health subcommittee, says in a few years a woman wanting a pregnancy test will be able to look through a guide listing charges, services and any malpractice claims.

One near certain move will be to change the way hospitals are reimbursed for care of Medicaid and Medicare patients to a "prospective" system, rather than "retrospective."

That means the government will give hospitals a flat fee in advance for their Medicaid and Medicare patients instead of paying normal charges for each service after the patient leaves. If the hospital holds down costs and length of stay, it can keep the leftover money. If it doesn't, it must absorb the loss.

Carolyne Davis, who heads the Health Care Financing Administration that runs Medicare and Medicaid, says she anticipates "significant movement" on the proposal this year.

For patients, that may mean fewer weekends in the hospital waiting for Monday surgery. It may mean fewer tests. The Reagan administration and many outside experts believe doctors order every test in the book to protect themselves against malpractice suits and because they know they will be reimbursed.

"It will be the single biggest change," Bromberg predicts. "It will change the way hospitals think about everything."

The administration is pursuing a strategy to encourage more competition, which it says will hold down costs, and to give a break to lower-cost forms of health care.

New AutoTerm® Plan makes possible...
• No Money Down!
• $132.81 Per Month!
On New '82 1301 Tercel
9 Colors To Order From

• 3 Year/45,000 Mile TEMA Available!

Explanation: The remarkable new AutoTerm plan—available now at Toyota East in Greenville—brings down the high cost of transportation. AutoTerm is less costly than the conventional way of buying a car... and it's better than any lease you've ever seen.

Imagine, a new Toyota for under $133 per month...and with no money down! The savings on your monthly payments and down payment add up to hundreds of dollars. That's money in the bank...earning you money!

All vehicles qualify for TEMA (Toyota East Maintenance Agreement)—3 year, 45,000 mile extended service plan.

Term is 48 months. To calculate total of payments, simply multiply 48 by the monthly payment amount. First monthly payment and a refundable security deposit in that same amount required at beginning of lease. You have no responsibility at end of term... you may purchase the car or walk away... your option. Prices shown require approved credit and do not include tax and license.

Examples:

2-door Corolla 5 speed $159.29 per month

Half-ton Truck $155.24 per month

WANTED FRIENDS

If you are in the market for a new or used car or truck, you owe it to yourself to shop at F & D Motor Co., Inc. before you buy.

We at F & D, sell and service new and used cars and trucks and make friends. We don't advertise special deals or special prices. Each customer is special to us. We do try to make a profit on each unit we sell and at the same time give the customer the most value for his dollar that is possible. If we don't make a profit, we won't be here long to serve you, and if we don't give you value for your dollars you won't come here for us to serve you.

No dealer can: 1. Buy at lower prices. 2. Offer better service. 3. Be better friends. You owe it to yourself. Call or visit us.

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

- Should your shelter money build equity—not just leave your pocket in rent?
- Could you use the big, big tax advantages of homeownership?
- Would your family spend more time together if you owned your own home?
- Are you cramped and need bigger quarters?
- Do you want to beat out inflation with a quality investment?

If you answered yes to any of these questions, CALL US. You need our help. We want your confidence—and your business.

- Effective mortgage interest rates in the majority of housing transactions are below quoted rates. People-to-people financing can lower those rates by four to five percentage points.
- Depressed market conditions allow buyers to purchase property at 1980 prices. When interest rates begin to recede, the pent-up appreciation will increase dramatically.
- Home ownership continues to be today's best investment and provides a better hedge against inflation than other investments like stocks, bonds, gold, or silver.
- Allowable tax deductions can help qualified buyers meet a higher monthly mortgage obligation.
- Preferential tax treatment enjoyed by certain types of real estate investments counts as one of the significant financial advantages of owning real estate.
- The vast variety of alternative mortgage instruments available in today's high-interest-rate market can lead to advantageous financing arrangements for the buyer-borrower.

Life As It's Lived

By GAIL MICHAELS

Last weekend on Mother's Day I read all the tributes to mother with a pang in my heart. These testimonials were so sweet, so loving, so genuine. I wondered if Meg would ever feel that way about me.

Although I may not be the best mother in the world, I don't think I'm the worst either. I feed Meg, I try to keep her reasonably clean, I read to her, I hear her prayers, I play games with her, and I try to discipline her. I listen to her, and listen, and listen, and listen.

But Meg's attitude toward me has always been somewhat warped. When she was in preschool, her teachers published for the enlightment of the parents a Mother's Day list of what each child's mother did best. Many mothers were the best kissers or the best cuddlers. I was the best wicked witch.

I have been at various times the best pirate, the best dragon and a passable orphaned big sister. Occasionally, Meg will declare to her playmates that I can also yell louder than just about anyone.

I don't mean to imply that Meg doesn't admire any of my more conventional skills. She does. We not only celebrated Mother's Day last week; we celebrated Zachary's second birthday, and when Meg and I made a birthday cake for him, Meg was amazed at my aptitude for baking.

She showered me with compliments. She was especially dazzled by the way I greased the cake pan. "Boy, you sure spread that butter fast."

Several days later, she and a group of her friends, inspired by all the Mother's Day hoopla, held a conference on our front porch.

"My mother grows the prettiest flowers," Amy said.

Meg sighed. "My mother doesn't know the first thing about gardening. Last year she tried to help me plant a vegetable garden, and she weeded up all the baby carrots and left the crabgrass."

"My mother has the prettiest hair," said Courtney.

Meg shook her head. "Mommy keeps cutting hers off."

All the children replied in unison. "Yuk!"

Then there was the child whose mother could sew.

"Poor Mommy," Meg said. "She tries."

One child's mother was a great housekeeper.

"Mine's not too clean," Meg said.

"My mama buys me presents," Meg's best friend, Maura, said.

Meg had reached the depths of despair. "Everything is too expensive."

"Can't your mother do anything?" Jill asked.

I waited for Meg to say something about my baking. Surely that had not slipped her mind. It hadn't.

Medical Society Awards Grants

Four scholarships for persons planning to enter health professions have been presented by the Pitt County Medical Society.

Recipients of the $350 scholarships were Frances Pender, Donald G. Easley, Robert R. Ehinger and Jeffrey T. Prescott.

Mrs. Pender is a first-year nursing student at Pitt Community College. A prospective graduate in August 1983, she says she hopes to work in the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit of Pitt County Memorial Hospital. She is married and is the mother of a 14-year-old daughter and a 3-year-old son.

Easley is a rising senior in the bachelor of science in nursing program of the East Carolina University School of Nursing. He said he plans to concentrate on critical care nursing or go into anesthetist work upon graduation. He is a member of Sigma Theta Tau National Honor Society in Nursing.

Ehinger, a senior at D.H. Conley High School, plans to attend the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and pursue its premedical program. He hopes to attend medical school and perhaps go into medical research. A member of the National Honor Society, he is a Morehead Scholarship finalist and has been involved in Pitt County Project Exodus for students to learn about various professions while still in school.

Prescott, a senior at Rose High School, says he plans to pursue a medical career in medical research or family practice. He is a member of the National Honor Society and is a Presidential Scholar finalist and a National Merit finalist.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
©1982 Tribune Company Syndicate, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—I read in "Sports Illustrated" that the Katz-Cohen suit against the American Contract Bridge League for their expulsion from the League for cheating had been settled. Katz and Cohen had been paid some large sum of money, and Katz is quoted as saying that this proves that the ACBL was wrong all along. Is that indeed the case?—W.E., New Canaan, Conn.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—Hardly, although it might look that way. First of all, Katz and Cohen were not expelled from the ACBL—they signed a letter of resignation and apologized for what they had done. (The ACBL had accused them of signaling illegally by sniffs and coughs, and suspended the International Team Trials in Houston in 1977 where they were allegedly caught using those methods.)

It took them two months to realize that they had been "coerced" into signing the letter of resignation. Some people might find it strange that anyone could sign what was tantamount to a confession and then take two months to discover that he was "innocent" and had been "coerced."

Secondly, while the ACBL readmitted Katz and Cohen to the League with full privileges, one of the stipulations of the agreement was that they would wait two years before applying to the ACBL to play together as a partnership—hardly a declaration of innocence, especially since the ACBL Board probably won't grant their request even then.

Thirdly, the amount paid to them was not by the ACBL, but by the League's insurance company. The $75,000 they are getting toward their legal expenses is only a fraction of what they have spent over the last five years in trying to get readmitted. The insurance company is paying the ACBL an even larger sum.

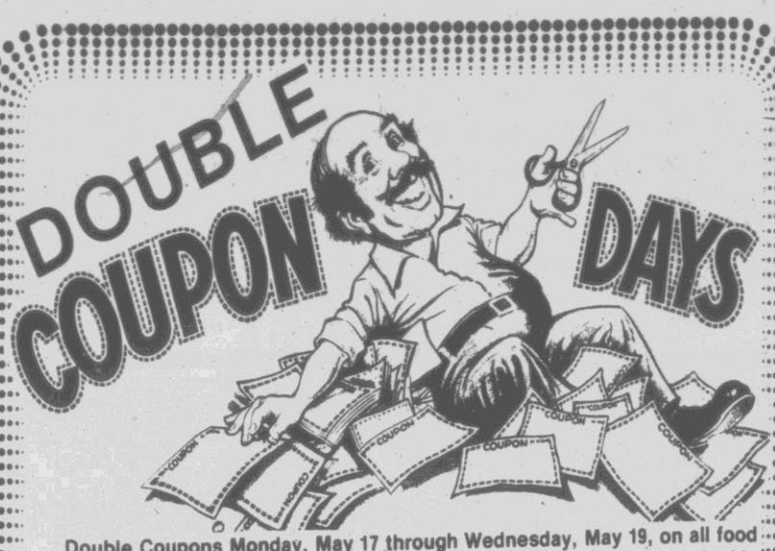

But even the fact that they have been readmitted after what is virtually a five-year suspension sits badly with a large number of ACBL members. It would be interesting to see what course the ACBL would pursue should, at some tournament, a member refuse to play against either of the two players involved in the scandal.

Q.—Is there a penalty for revoking from dummy? Someone in our game occasionally fails to follow suit from dummy when it is inconvenient to do so. When we try to penalize him, he says: "Dummy can't revoke." Is he right?—C. Armstrong, Cleveland, Ohio.

A.—Dummy can revoke, but there is no penalty for dummy revoking. However, that does not mean that declarer can deliberately revoke from dummy. That is against the proprieties and the spirit of the game. In addition, either defender can require that the revoke be corrected, and that dummy follow suit as is required by the Laws.

Send any questions for this column to: Charles Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Bridge Complete," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged the best received.

Charles Goren and Omar Sharif personally cannot undertake to answer all questions submitted.

Double Coupons Monday, May 17 through Wednesday, May 19, on all food orders $10.00 or more. Manufacturer's coupons will be redeemed for double the face value on purchase of the product as stated. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

"Everyone pays for spoiled produce."

FOR JOHN R. BLOCK, Secretary of Agriculture

● When there is a loss in transit, the cause of that loss determines who bears the cost — the shipper, transportation company or buyer. If the loss resulted from a fruit or vegetable disease that originated in the field, the grower bears the cost. In general, however, losses that reduce supplies also increase consumer prices, so all of us bear the costs. And those expenses are high. According to a study conducted by this department, spoiled fruit and vegetables cost supermarkets alone as much as $500 million a year. We have also found that soft fruits, such as strawberries and peaches, and leafy vegetables, such as lettuce, are the most perishable products.

FOR ELIZABETH POST, author of The Complete Book of Wedding Etiquette (Harper & Row)

What's the worst breach of etiquette you ever saw at a wedding? —G.B., Albany, N.Y.

● Once at a reception which took place aboard a pleasure boat docked in a harbor, the men in the wedding party threw the groom into the water. Another inappropriate practice is when both the bride and groom squash wedding cake into each other's faces.

FOR DARYL ANDERSON, star of TV's Lou Grant

Is it true you almost didn't get the role of Animal because you auditioned dressed shabbily? —J.I., Easton, Pa.

● I auditioned wearing ragged jeans, a hole showing my bony knee. Later I felt I had erred. Animal is seedy, but he's not that bad. I did get the part, though. On the first day of shooting the director was dissatisfied wth my wardrobe — not wrinkled enough. He sent me home to get the jeans I had auditioned in.

FOR DYAN CANNON, star of Deathtrap

What has been your most blood-curdling experience? —Z.M.A., Dover, Del.

● Not being able to pay my rent, which is exactly what happened to me when I took my four-year leave from Hollywood. Other than being faced with death or great physical violence, I can't think of anything more frightening. And I used to have an awful fear of the dentist, but now I don't dread him as much.

Sci-fi star treks to China.

FROM THE "ASK" EDITOR

REVELATIONS: Leonard Nimoy, of Star Trek fame, spent five weeks in Peking for TV's mini-series Marco Polo, which starts tonight. He claims Chinese inscrutability is a myth ("There's plenty of emotion and energy — just a little below the surface"); the people are friendly, curious, shy ("Their lives are so routine, anything unusual attracts a big crowd — a street accident, a photographer"); cashmere is high in quality, low in price ("Sweaters for $25, scarves for $8"). And the best Chinese hotel isn't as concerned with clean carpets as the most modest American one ("Daily cleaning isn't the norm"). Communication, though, is difficult. When he gave an interpreter the address of a restaurant seven blocks away, Nimoy was directed to the seventh floor of his own hotel. . . . ODDS AND ENDS: Warren Beatty denies that no gal can resist his charm, confesses that this sort of thing is nice to hear, but admits he's had his share of rejections. . . . As Liz Taylor's beautician puts the finishing touches on his famous client's coif, he deadpans: "Not bad for a plain-looking girl." . . . John Schneider, of The Dukes of Hazzard, is not one of those stars preferring anonymity to autograph hounds. He says he went to Hollywood to be a star, to see and be seen, and doesn't want to hide away in an ivory tower. . . . Songwriter Irving Caesar (famous for Tea for Two) enjoys signing his name also, but does it this way: Irving Caesar — T-4-2. . . . QUICKIES: To keep the evening from becoming a sleeper, Woody Allen and Mia Farrow don't waste time while waiting for their order in a restaurant. They pull out a portable chess board. . . . Margaret Truman's novel, Murder in the Supreme Court, not even available in bookstores yet, is already generating interest in movie circles. . . . Christina Onassis pays regular visits to Christian Dior in Paris, not because she has become terribly fashion conscious, but because her weight keeps changing. . . . DOWNGRADING: Breck Wall, impresario-star of the Las Vegas revue, Bottoms Up '82, won't touch a Polish joke these days (talented he is, stupid he isn't). But because all revues feature ethnic jokes, he includes Russian gags instead. One of his favorites: "They had to close the Moscow National Zoo, because the clam died."

PRO AND CON

Is a Federal Bill Needed for Educational Benefits for G.I.'s in Peacetime?

PRO Representative Bob Edgar, (D.-Penn.) chairman, Veterans Affairs subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment

G.I. Bill benefits have always been an incentive for the soldier and an investment in the citizen. We spend billions on super-weapons, yet the number of 18-year-olds ready to serve and maintain those weapons in the 80's will decline sharply. The answer is not the draft. The Vietnam-era G.I. Bill ended in 1976, and the quality of recruits dropped immediately. Substitute programs have been a "make-do" disaster, underutilized and inequitable.

Send questions of national significance, on a postcard, to "Pro & Con," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $10 for those published.

CON Senator J. James Exon (D.-Neb.), ranking minority member, Armed Services subcommittee on Manpower and Personnel

A new G.I. Bill is not the answer to our military manpower problems today. I'm concerned that a G.I. Bill, offered to people joining any branch of service, would make it even harder for the Army to compete with those other branches in recruiting. It could encourage people to leave the service earlier to use their benefits. Finally, a new G.I. Bill would be very costly and may not compete effectively with current student loans.

WIN $50,000 BY WATCHING MARCO POLO

"WATCH'N WIN" INSTANT WINNER GAME

Here's how to find out if you are an Instant Winner of one of the four "Watch'N Win Instant Winner" prizes of $25,000 each:

1. The Official Entry Form on this page contains four (4) "Marco Polo Instant Winner Facts" relating to the "Marco Polo" television program which will appear on the NBC television network, May 16, 1982, through May 19, 1982. Each fact relates to an event which will appear on the program on the date indicated (or see Rule No. 4 below). If one of the "Marco Polo Instant Winner Facts" appearing on the entry form is revealed to be correct during the appropriate evening's television broadcast, you are an Instant Winner of $25,000. Odds of winning one of our prizes are a function of the newspaper circulation used to distribute the offer, estimated in 1981 at 51,723,776. Odds of winning a prize are one in 12,930,000.
2. If any of the "Marco Polo Instant Winner Facts" on the entry form is revealed to be correct, hand-print your name and address in the spaces provided and mail the entire winning entry form, VIA REGISTERED MAIL ONLY, to: Marco Polo Instant Winner Claim, P.O. Box 4036, Blair, NE 68009.
3. Any unclaimed Instant Winner prizes will be awarded in a Second Chance Drawing from among all Second Chance entries received (it is not likely that all Instant Winner prizes will be claimed). To enter the Second Chance Drawing, hand-print your name and address on a separate, plain piece of 3" x 5" paper and mail your entry to: Marco Polo Second Chance Drawing, P.O. Box 4040, Blair, NE 68009.
4. You may receive a copy of the winning facts and an additional set of four facts by submitting a separate, self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Marco Polo Facts Request, P.O. Box 4045, Blair, NE 68009. RESIDENTS OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON ONLY may receive this material by hand-printing their names and addresses on a separate, plain piece of 3" x 5" paper and mailing their requests to: Marco Polo Facts Request, P.O. Box 4045, Blair, NE 68009. Requests must be received by June 30, 1982. Limit: one request per envelope.

"WATCH'N WIN" MARCO POLO SWEEPSTAKES

Here's how to enter the Marco Polo Sweepstakes. One (1) Grand Prize of $50,000 and 500 Second Prizes of an array of 32 Procter & Gamble products (estimated retail value of $50.00 for each prize) will be awarded.

5. On the Official Entry Form, or a plain piece of 3" x 5" paper, hand-print your complete name and address and indicate your answers to each of the four questions. The correct answers to each of the questions will be revealed during the NBC television network broadcast of "Marco Polo" on the night indicated. (Or see Rule No. 8.)
6. Each entry submitted must be accompanied by the UPC Code Number cut from a package of any Procter & Gamble product or a separate, plain piece of 3" x 5" paper on which you have hand-printed the words, "Watch'N Win Marco Polo Sweepstakes."
7. Mail your completed entry to: The Watch'N Win Marco Polo Sweepstakes, P.O. Box 4029, Blair, NE 68009. Enter as often as you wish, but each entry must be mailed separately in a hand-addressed envelope no larger than 4½" x 9½" (#10 envelope).
8. You may receive a copy of the correct answers to the "Watch'N Win" questions appearing on the entry form by submitting a separate, self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Watch'N Win Marco Polo Sweepstakes Request, P.O. Box 4025, Blair, NE 68009. RESIDENTS OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON ONLY may receive the answers by hand-printing their names and addresses on a separate, plain piece of 3" x 5" paper and mailing their requests to: Watch'N Win Marco Polo Sweepstakes Request, P.O. Box 4025, Blair, NE 68009. Requests must be received by June 30, 1982. Limit: one request per envelope.

GENERAL RULES FOR BOTH SWEEPSTAKES

9. ALL PRIZE CLAIMS AND ENTRIES MUST BE POSTMARKED BETWEEN MAY 20 AND JULY 26, 1982, AND RECEIVED BY AUGUST 6, 1982. Watch'N Win "Instant Winner Game" prize claims are subject to verification by the D.L. Blair Corporation, an independent judging organization whose decisions are final. Any Instant Winner claims received that are defaced, mutilated or altered in any way will automatically be deemed null and void. Winners of the Watch'N Win Marco Polo Sweepstakes will be selected in a random drawing from among all correct Watch'N Win Marco Polo Sweepstakes entries received. Random drawings will be accomplished on or about August 9, 1982, by the D.L. Blair Corporation. All sweepstakes winners will be notified by mail on or about September 30, 1982. Correct answers and facts are based solely on the content of the "Marco Polo" television broadcast and correct answers and facts on file with the D.L. Blair Corporation.
10. Open to residents of the United States, except employees and their families of Procter & Gamble and its affiliates, advertising agencies, and judging agencies. Watch'N Win Marco Polo Sweepstakes is void via entry forms available at retail stores in the State of Wisconsin and wherever prohibited by law. Limit: one prize per name and address. All prizes will be awarded. Taxes are the sole responsibility of winners. All federal, state and local laws and regulations apply. No substitution for prizes.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Spying on Soviet Spies

Several hundred Russian agents are now operating throughout the United States. You may even spot one in, of all places, your local library.

By Ernest Volkman

In the fall of 1980, the public library in Ely, Nev., was the setting for some purely comic horse-opera. Two men dressed in cowboy garb, complete with Stetson hats, arrived at the library one morning before it even opened. After identifying themselves as F.B.I. agents, they told assistant librarian Irene Carson that two Russians would probably show up at the library that day and ask for some specific materials. The agents advised Ms. Carson to give the Russians everything they wanted, but to remember exactly what they asked for so she could inform the F.B.I.

Hours later, two men matching the descriptions given to Ms. Carson by the agents showed up. Describing themselves as "travelers" from Washington, D.C., they spoke with accented English and wore cowboy clothes in the manner of people who seldom wear such outfits. Indeed, they looked exactly like what they were — two Soviet diplomats trying to blend into the Western landscape.

Well, not diplomats exactly. Although their official titles were assistant military attaché and civilian employee of the attaché's office at the Soviet Embassy in Washington, the first man, Vladimir Kvasov, was a lieutenant commander in the Soviet Navy and a high-ranking operative of the G.R.U., Soviet Military Intelligence; the other, Vladimir Militsyn, was a member of the K.G.B., the Soviet Union's counterpart to the C.I.A.

The purpose of their visit to Ely was not to enjoy the town's famed Western scenery. Ely just happened to be one of the locations the Air Force had been examining as a possible site for the new American MX missile. What were the Russians looking for? No one knows exactly, but the two men photocopied a 300-page environmental-impact statement filed in the library on the Nevada Test Site — where our country tests nuclear weapons — for a total cost of $47.

With that, the Russians left Ely, dogged at each step by teams of F.B.I. agents, who carefully interviewed every American with whom the Russians had had any contact.

The citizens of Ely found the whole incident pretty comical, but there was nothing funny about it to the F.B.I. The little drama of cold-war espionage was simply another indication of a situation the Bureau already knows about: The Soviet Union has mounted a major espionage offensive in the United States.

This Soviet drive is unprecedented and growing. Its highest priority is uncovering the secrets of American military technology — the cutting edge of the current U.S. military superiority over the Soviet Union. The Russians, however, are also trying to peek at just about anything they can get their hands on: civilian technological advances, economic developments, political information and business data. A recent emphasis seems to be Congress, where the K.G.B. has mounted a major effort to cultivate key Congressional staffers.

"They're like vacuum cleaners," quips one F.B.I. official. "They just suck up everything that's around, because even an insignificant piece of information might offer a clue to something more important."

Such overt spying under diplomatic or official cover constitutes most of the Soviet spying efforts in this country. A second type of espionage, known as "deep-cover spying," is much more difficult to assess. Deep-cover agents infiltrate the U.S. under assumed identities. Some remain inactive for up to 20 years until they reach an important position with access to classified information. Such agents are known as "sleepers."

Though deep-cover spying is the stuff of books and movies, overt spying is where the action is today because it's the best way to obtain certain technological information. F.B.I. Director William Webster recently told a Senate committee that 30 to 40 percent of the nearly 600 Soviet-bloc diplomats, correspondents and trade officials in this country have intelligence-gathering duties. Webster also warned of the Soviet espionage offensive against Congress, dryly noting at one point: "It might be of interest . . . to know that this morning there was an official of the Russian Embassy present at these hearings."

Webster's comment provoked nervous titters, but F.B.I. officials are aware that for at least a year, the Russians have put strong emphasis on tapping the rich intelligence field that Congress represents. During the past few months, Congressmen, Senators and staff members have found Russian diplomats of all descriptions — most of them actually K.G.B. agents under diplomatic cover and immunity — strolling into Congressional offices seeking information or assiduously cultivating relationships with various Congressional experts in order to obtain intelligence data through casual conversation.

Often, it's done quite brazenly: One Soviet diplomat walked into the office of Representative David F. Emery (R.-Me.) and asked John Rabb, Emery's legislative aide, for the Congressman's statements on alternative deployment plans for the MX missile. Rabb threw him out of the office, then told the F.B.I. Agents showed Rabb a photograph, which Rabb identified as the man who had come into his office. The agents then told Rabb that the man in question was Yuriy Petrovich Leonov, a Soviet diplomat who was an agent for the G.R.U.

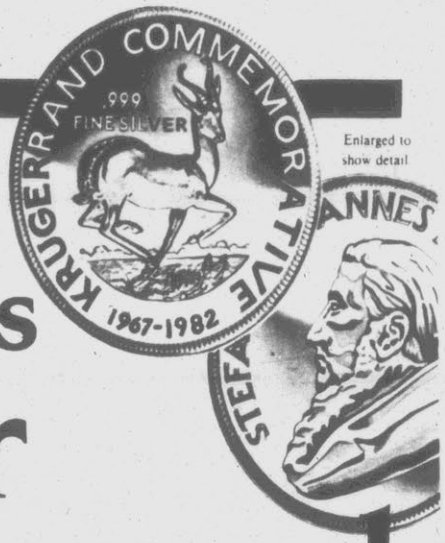

Other Congressional staff members tell similar tales, and although they tend to regard such instances as funny — along with the odd sight of Russians attending just about every Congressional hearing on the calendar, no matter how obscure the subject — the F.B.I. and the rest of the American intelligence community take a dimmer

Mint Releases Silver Krugerrand

Just $25 For The Next 30 Days Only

May 1982, Philadelphia. International Monetary Mint announced today the release for sale of a special silver Commemorative Krugerrand honoring the 15th anniversary of the fabulous Gold Krugerrand. Struck in pure .999 fine silver, featuring the springbok — the African Antelope — on one side, and the likeness of Stefans Johannes Kruger on the other, the SILVER KRUGERRAND was inspired by the original Gold Krugerrand and is now being released at the Special Investor Opportunity price of $25 each. You may never have a better opportunity to own pure silver in a special limited edition Commemorative. None will be struck beyond December 31 of this, the fifteenth anniversary year of the Krugerrand. The Silver Krugerrand measures the same size as the famous Gold Krugerrand and seems certain to command high premiums over the original issue price as silver resumes its upward movement in price, and as the rarity of this Commemorative issue becomes apparent to the growing body of numismatic collectors.

Investors who respond from this publication may purchase from 1 to 10 individual SILVER KRUGERRANDS at this price. Orders from this announcement will be accepted on a first-come, first-served basis for the next 30 days only. A strict limit of 10 pure Silver Krugerrands has been imposed. ALL SILVER KRUGERRANDS are accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity and are fully guaranteed by International Monetary Mint. To qualify for this offering, call Lee Collins toll free at 1-800-345-8502, Dept. SAH-1524 (Pa. residents call our special operator at 1-800-662-5180) for credit card orders. Or if you would prefer, mail check or money order in the full amount to: International Monetary Mint, Dept. SAH-1524, 390 Pike Road, Huntingdon Valley, Pa. 19006. An additional $2.75 is requested to cover insurance, postage and special handling per order. If not completely satisfied, you may return your SILVER KRUGERRANDS in their original condition any time within 14 days for a full refund.

view. There is no such thing, in their view, as a casual or innocent encounter between Americans and highly trained Soviet intelligence officers. Theodore M. Gardner, F.B.I. special agent in charge of the Washington field office (his job includes keeping tabs on an estimated 200 known Soviet spies in the capital) puts it this way: "Our people [Americans] tend to be very honest and open. They do not appreciate or want to believe the ends the Soviets want to achieve. We see the danger because we work with it every day."

It is important to understand that the modern K.G.B. or G.R.U. agent is a very different breed from the clumsy oafs who used to make up the bulk of the Soviet espionage in this country. The new K.G.B. man has not only been highly trained in espionage tradecraft, but has also spent a decade perfecting his English (many speak the language better than most Americans) and has been schooled in American customs and culture. The average K.G.B. operative in this country is indistinguishable in appearance from a typical successful American businessman, complete with an expensive suit and a carefully fashioned, open-handed joviality.

These are the so-called "thin-cover" agents of the Russians, usually diplomatic personnel who are actually functioning K.G.B. or G.R.U. officers. According to the C.I.A., they're involved in intelligence operations at just about all levels of the American public and private sectors, with major operations centers in New York City (where more than 150 Russian employees of the United Nations work as spies under diplomatic cover) and Washington, D.C., where the Soviet Embassy is located. That embassy, by the way, features an array of electronic gear on its roof that includes such devices as a vertical quarter-wave antenna that allows agents to eavesdrop on radio conversations from American Government limousines, especially the President's, and a high-frequency antenna used to monitor Pentagon and State Department communications.

This is all worrisome, but a current major concern is the K.G.B.'s drive to obtain the secrets of American military technology, particularly the latest developments in the military electronics industry. "Make no mistake," C.I.A. Deputy Director Admiral Bobby R. Inman warned at a meeting of American scientists recently. "Specific data on technical subjects is high on the [K.G.B.] wanted list. . . ."

To that end, both the K.G.B. and the G.R.U. have mounted a strong effort, featuring elaborate operations. In the past several years, they have met with a series of major successes, a fact that clearly alarms the American intelligence community, which has been trying to set tougher classification standards for military development work and to foster greater security awareness in American scientific and technical communities. As evidence for the need, the F.B.I. in particular notes some of the more prominent K.G.B. recruitment successes in the past few years:

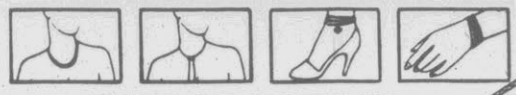

- Christopher John Boyce, a young worker in a company that produced top-secret spy satellites for the C.I.A. Lax security allowed him to walk out of the company with all the satellite secrets and sell them to the K.G.B.
- William Holden Bell, an electronics engineer/radar expert who was carefully recruited in a K.G.B. operation. Ultimately, he gave away the top American radar secrets for cash.
- David Barnett, an ex-C.I.A. officer who sold information on American spy satellites to the K.G.B. and later offered to penetrate the Senate Intelligence Committee for the Russians.

The list goes on. The incidents are alarming to F.B.I. counterintelligence experts, who argue that almost all these betrayals were aided by lax security on the part of the people supposedly safeguarding the secrets against such operations. From Webster on down, F.B.I. officials have been asking industry leaders to take greater precautions to keep secrets safe in the face of the strong K.G.B. effort to uncover them. There are also efforts to write tougher laws governing security of classified material.

Some Congressional experts argue that there may be too much of an emphasis on security, and that the price for an open society like this one is the inevitable leaking out of some secrets. Besides, they claim, most of the K.G.B.'s information comes from open American sources, anyway. Representative Don Edwards (D.-Calif.), for example, a former F.B.I. agent himself, warns that this country must not go overboard in trying to keep all its secrets. "As Jefferson told Madison," Edwards says, "our liberties get chipped away because of our fear of enemies, whether real or perceived." FW

CAMPING '82

"We Hear America Singing"

Camping out with a young couple who spent five years discovering the rugged pleasures of America and the rugged Americans who really make the country work.

By Peter and Barbara Jenkins

A decade ago while I was still in college, I realized that I was tired of the gloom and doom and cynicism I encountered each night on the 6 o'clock news. I decided to take things into my own hands. Rather than listening to everyone else about the condition of the country — and its future — I would form my own opinions.

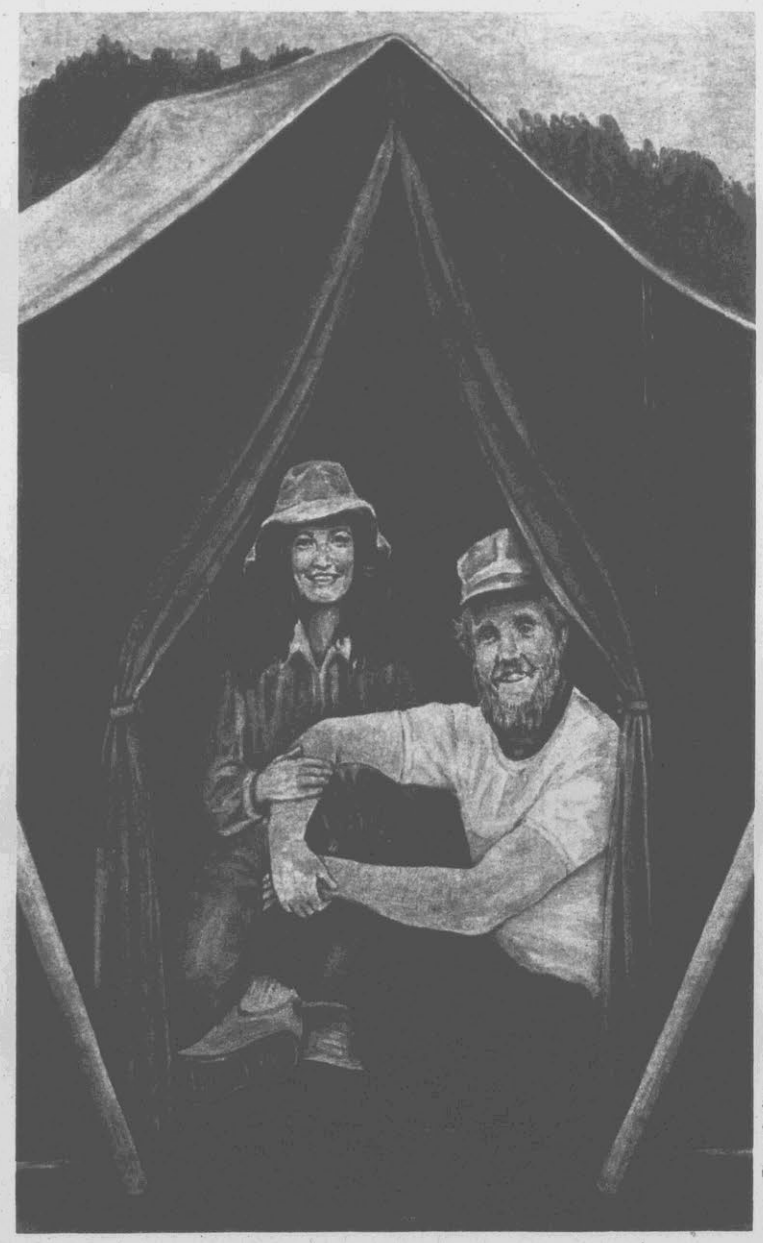

And that's what I did. I decided that the only way for me to get to know the country was to walk across America. I would pass slowly through the different regions, sometimes camping out, sometimes living in people's homes and working alongside them at their jobs.

But instead of taking six months, as I had originally planned, my journey took me over five years. I began in upper New York State, on a crisp fall day in 1973. I walked through the Appalachian Mountains and into the Deep South. The states of New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi passed under my feet. It took me a year and a half just to get to New Orleans.

In New Orleans, by the swirling Mississippi River, I met a beautiful Southern belle and graduate student, Barbara Jo Pennell. We fell in love, got married and she and I continued the walk, together. Near the Gulf of Mexico, we walked west along the bayous of Louisiana, across the vastness that is Texas, over the Rocky Mountains and the Utah deserts, along the Oregon Trail and finally to the Pacific — a total distance of almost 3,000 miles.

Walking across America gave us the chance to see the profound beauty of our land. Before I'd begun my journey, I'd seen photographs of the American landscape and had even driven across the country — in just three days. But instead of considering America a nation of amazing beauty and diversity, my vision of it was associated with oil slicks, polluted rivers, desecrated forests, parking lots and endless urban sprawl. Headlines and contemporary song lyrics helped shape that depressing image.

But our trip changed all that. We spent more than a week walking across the New Mexico prairie. It was 108 miles between towns, and herds of pronghorn antelope were our only companions. We drew water from the windmills that clattered and sang in the wind. Golden eagles hunted for jack rabbits, never worrying about our presence. It was thrilling to think that there were more antelope than people on this massive chunk of prairie.

Elana Amity

I remember being paddled through the swamps and bayous of southern Louisiana, somewhere between Lafayette and Lake Charles. We glided as effortlessly as the alligators through acres of cypress trees smothered with hanging moss. I was with a Cajun man who knew the hundreds of miles of waterways so well that he could have paddled for days till we reached the Gulf of Mexico. He shared with me his chunk of America.

Anyone would be renewed heading west from Colorado Springs into the seldom seen canyons, barren rock peaks and mountain hideaways of the bull elk and mountain lions. You would have to wait until midsummer to travel so you could cross the highest mountain passes. But then you'd be headed into some of the most beautiful mountains in the world. The spring water would bubble frigid and pure. You could catch enough trout to get fat. The sun would shine on you like pure energy, and the blue spruce groves would add their scent to the air. You'd surely spot a mother deer and her newborn fawns. At night the coyotes would howl around your campsite.

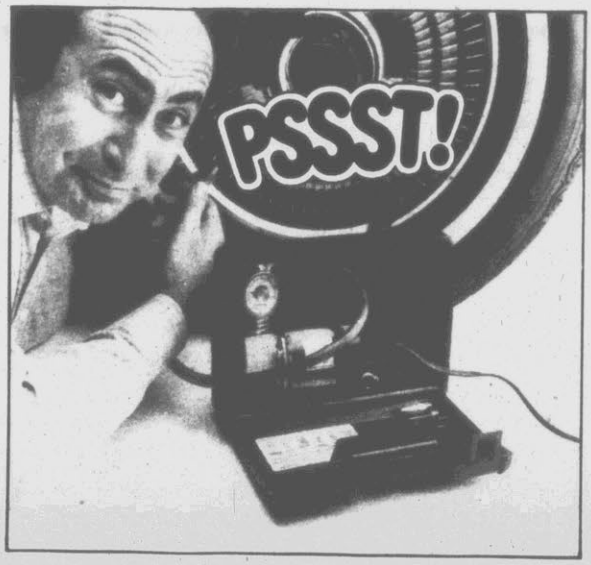

Seeing these parts of our country gave us a better perspective, a more balanced viewpoint, of America. Of course, there are cities that have pollution problems but there are more cities that don't. There is urban sprawl in America but there is also seemingly endless desert, pristine swampland and spectacular vistas.

It wasn't just the scenery that was wonderful, however. It was also the folks we met. Not only did we meet people in big cities and small towns, but also on farms and in weathered country stores. We found them living in the hollows and along the coast and out in the desert. Many of these Americans took us into their homes, whether those homes were trailers, mansions, shacks, apartments, standard three-bedroom houses or log cabins. They fed us whatever food they had. Sometimes it was a feast of corn bread, fresh buttermilk, canned ham, home-cured bacon and fresh, cut green beans. Other times it might have been fried alligator, a huge T-bone steak, chilled shrimp caught only minutes before, tacos or a couple of delicious red apples. And sometimes it was just a glass of cold water. The Americans we met told us the stories of their lives. And in many instances, we worked side by side with them.

AMERICA

On the first part of my journey, before I met Barbara, I stopped in the sleepy town of Murphy, N.C., where Mary Elizabeth Lloyd and her three sons, Zak, 18; Bruce, 16; and Eric, 14, took me into their home. I lived with them for five months in their trailer, was nicknamed "Albino" and went with them to their red brick Mt. Zion Baptist Church every Sunday. That first Sunday I had to wear a suit borrowed from one of the boys which was flourescent green and would have glowed in the dark.

While becoming a part of this black community, called Texana, I worked in a sawmill, built pigpens and learned how to dribble a basketball behind my back. I ate chitlins, greens and great fried chicken and sang gospel music. There were run-ins with some of the local bootleggers — selling alcohol was illegal there — because the bootleggers thought I must be an undercover agent spying on them.

Although the Lloyd family had little, if anything, to spare, they took me — a stranger — into their home, fed me and sheltered me. In essence I became a part of their family. The fact that this took place in the South, and that I was white and they were black would surprise a lot of people. Yes, there are still examples of racial problems all over this nation, but there are many examples of places where the races have overcome past problems.

Growing up in a Connecticut suburb near New York City, I always thought of life in medium-size cities, small towns, farms and ranches as horribly boring. In the cities and farming communities across this nation that Barbara and I lived in, we were astounded at how many friends people had. They seemed to know more about hundreds of people than some of the people in the big cities knew about their own next-door neighbors. And life was never boring. I'll never forget driving a herd of cattle through the sagebrush-studded canyons in Idaho: I was riding on a quickfooted quarter horse, always looking for that feisty cow and calf hiding behind some building-size boulder; gazing up to see a golden eagle launch from a gnarled juniper tree; trying to anticipate the moment when my horse might jump out from under me; and discovering the feeling you get at the end of a day from breathing in dust and squinting because the sky's so blue. It could startle a city boy's senses.

Skeeter Hagler

Living on the W.T. Williams Ranch, "ridin', ropin' and bein' free," as one Country and Western song puts it, seemed to place me a million miles away from depressing news.

W.T. was born in 1901. The stories he told me about his life made some of the pioneering history of this country come alive. W.T. described how he couldn't wait till he turned 21 because then he'd be old enough to homestead 160 acres of free ground. Of course the ground was so burnt by the sun and devoid of water that the Government had to give it away. Still, all W.T. could think about was having his own place. He built a shack out of scrap wood, covered it with almost worn-out tar paper and stuffed the cracks with old newspapers. When it got colder than 15 below zero, he used his two sheep dogs like extra blankets.

After W.T. met and married Viola Green, a tiny rancher's daughter from somewhere between Goat Springs and Soldier Creek, Idaho, they lived in the shack together and she homesteaded her 160 acres. For a Christmas tree they used a sagebrush. They were 'poor,' but they felt rich.

As W.T. often said to me while we rode around his ranch, "This whole thing started with only a horse, a dog and my strong back." Today, you can stand on his back porch and look south toward Nevada, about 15 miles, and your eyes are still on his land. There are now four generations of Williamses living and working the land. The water flows out of the mountains to their land in ditches and they drive their thousands of cattle with horses and dogs just like the ones W.T. began with.

"Ya know, Pete, this here country of ours is supposed to be going through tough times right now," W.T. once said to me. "On a ranch it ain't never easy, but people got a hundred times more things and more comforts today than they ever dreamed of 40 years ago. A lot of the people, they're just plain spoiled. Just like some of the cow dogs they use today. The dogs ride around most of the time in the back of pickup trucks. The will to work being bred out of these cow dogs. A lot are just for show."

Then he switched over to politics. "We ain't got time to worry about what they're doin' in Washington, or listen much to what they're shoutin' 'bout on TV. All we can try to do is keep our cows healthy, pray for weather and keep the family happy and home. The main thing, Pete, is we're all free."

Just being around W.T. made me feel secure. Living on the land and depending on its moods had taught him all he needed to know about getting through the constant changes in life.

Before we went out to look for America, we heard a lot about the "me generation." It sounded as if all families were breaking apart and that everyone was going to stop having children. Kids were supposedly too much of a hassle; marriage, too much of a responsibility. But what we discovered is that the "me decade" is dying out. Families are trying to understand each other, helping care for each other and sticking together. We found ourselves listening and learning from our elders, a group that we had at one time rejected and neglected.

We had also heard that God was dead but found the opposite true. People all over America are worshipping and learning about God. We saw them at Southern Baptist churches in Texas, Episcopal churches in New York, Assembly of God churches in Oregon, Catholic churches in New Mexico, Mormon churches in Utah and Jewish temples in Pennsylvania. The country we've seen seems to be rediscovering its roots — and this has filled us with hope and optimism. FW

GO FISH

Hanson Carroll/Alpha

Herbert Hoover did it and so does Prince Charles. Trout fishing has hooked millions. The lure? Scenery and serenity far from the madding crowd.

By Lamar Underwood

When Samuel Johnson described the fishing rod as "a stick with a line and hook at one end and a fool at the other," the author probably had the trout angler in mind. Imagine this scenario, most of which was probably as true in Johnson's time (the 1700's) as it is today.

An already pudgy figure, further bulked by enough clothes to outfit the Klondike gold rush, stands hip deep in a flow of black water torn into sudsy rips by protruding rocks and bearing countryside debris held in storage by winter snows: sticks, leaves, tires, the occasional beer can. For hours our man alternates between making casts, peering intently at the jaunty little flies that ride the current like miniature galleons, fumbling with stiffening fingers through his fly box in search of new offerings.

Gradually, the hours of fruitless effort erode the intensity of each cast and all sense of finesse in the manipulation of the flies. Finally, the stiff fingers seem unwilling to tie on another Royal Coachman or Quill Gordon. The will to continue has been broken. By 3 P.M. our angler has gained the solace of the lodge, where the fire, firewater and kindred snake-bit companions await.

Fishing is a sport embraced by kings and Presidents. Prince Charles took Princess Diana fly fishing on their honeymoon. President Eisenhower escaped to the trout stream as often as he could and even created a new fly, the House and Lot. Herbert Hoover wrote a charming little book on the sport (Fishing for Fun & To Wash Your Soul), and it was while fishing that Jimmy Carter came face to face with the infamous killer rabbit.

Books on fly fishing for trout and salmon number in the thousands, more than for any other category of sport. Images of trout are found in the work of such poets as John Donne, William Butler Yeats and Ezra Pound — and novelists Ernest Hemingway and Rudyard Kipling.

Since the Romans knew nothing about split-cane rods and matching the hatch, they created a calendar that starts the new year from the pit of winter. But for some 10 million American trout fishermen, however, the real new year began with the opening of trout season, in most states a day last month but as early as March in the mountains of the South.

The objects of the angler's desire are the five major species of trout that grace American waters. There's the colorful Eastern brook found in New England and small Appalachian streams; the rainbow of the mountainous West and the upper West Coast and Great Lakes (where they're called steelhead); the ubiquitous and feisty brown trout, which can live in warmer waters than any other species; the cutthroat, native fish of the Big Sky country; and the beautiful golden trout, confined to jewel-like lakes in the High Sierras.

Finding good trout water is not always easy. Productive streams and lakes can be crowded. Still, pristine fishing in solitude can be enjoyed by enterprising anglers with camping skills. By backpacking to remote lakes, or canoeing and floating down wilderness rivers and lake chains, you can experience stirring angling adventures the crowds never will.

New England is famous for its brook-trout fishing; New York for its legendary Catskill streams and the burly rivers of the Adirondacks; Pennsylvania for its numerous waters, many of which are privately held and fished, such as Jimmy Carter's beloved Spruce Creek. The entire Appalachian chain, running from Maine to Georgia, has trout in thousands of mountain streams so remote they are fished only by backpackers. The tailwater streams below the Tennessee Valley Authority dams in the mid-South are another prime resource. Middle Western hot spots include the Great Lakes area and the famed Upper Peninsula of Michigan, setting of the most famous trout-fishing story of them all, Hemingway's Big Two-Hearted River. Far West anglers work streams and lakes from the Cascades down into the Sierras and especially love the action in the great river highways that the shining steelhead follow from the sea.

And, yes, a Mecca for trout does exist. Stick a pin in the town of West Yellowstone, Wyo. For 150 miles in every direction, taking in Idaho, Montana and Wyoming, you will find thousands of streams, rivers and lakes that are the best in the world. The area is a trouter's paradise; its streams

Catch of the Day

PAN-FRIED TROUT

1 (8 to 10 oz.) pan-dressed trout
1 tablespoon flour
¼ teaspoon salt
Dash ground black pepper
⅓ cup vegetable oil

1. Cut off head from trout. Dredge or coat fish with flour mixed with salt and pepper. 2. In skillet large enough to comfortably hold fish, heat oil until medium hot. Place fish in oil and fry about 5 minutes per side or until fish flakes easily with a fork. Keep oil at medium temperature while cooking so as to cook fish throughout without overbrowning skin. 3. Place trout on paper towels. 4. After boning, place fish on warm serving plate and pour on Lemon Butter Sauce or simply garnish with a parsley sprig and lemon wedge. Makes 1 serving

LEMON BUTTER SAUCE

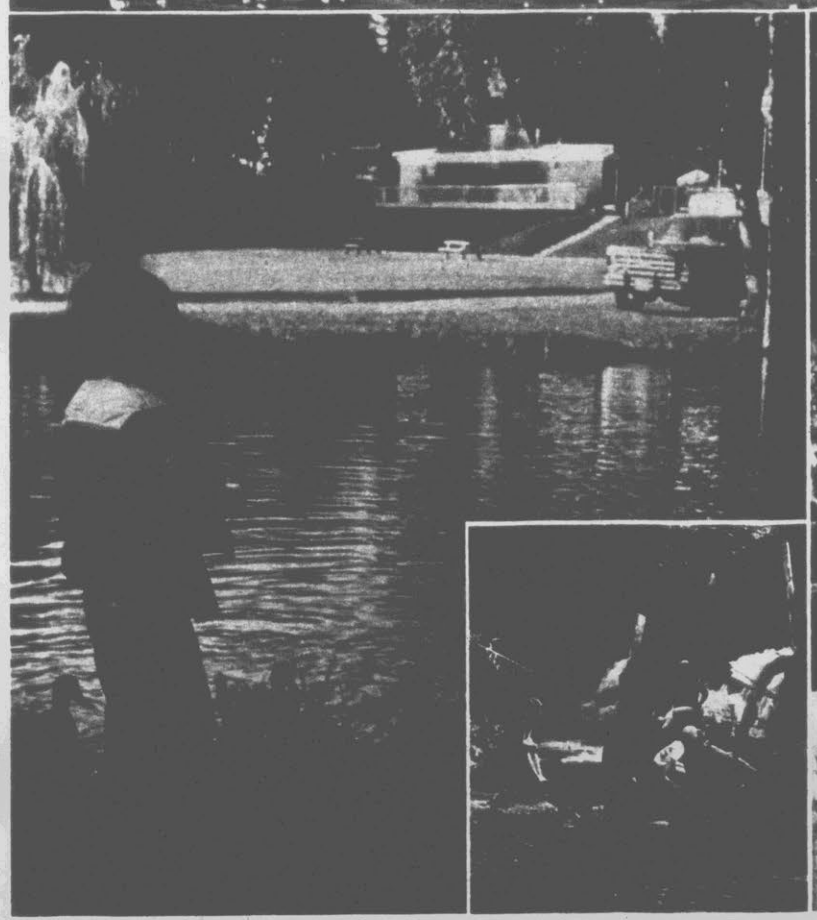

2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 teaspoons minced parsley

1. In small skillet, melt butter. Stir in lemon juice; heat to boiling. Add parsley and stir. Pour over individual serving of Pan-Fried Trout. Makes 1 serving

Can't Bear to Miss This Picture? Read On

By Betty Page

So you've mastered indoor photography with the camera you received on Christmas Day. With a camping trip coming up this summer, you probably can't wait to ply your skill outdoors.

Well, don't wait. But remember, photography is a different game outdoors, and you'll need different skills. Give yourself a chance to learn the adjustments you'll need to make the switch.

"You're not just shooting against a white wall," cautions Lori Ayre, a New York film maker and freelance photographer who has roamed with her camera from the woods of Canada to African savannahs.

The first step is to adapt to the sun's light. Outdoors, lighting becomes tricky to judge, especially in the woods. It filters through the trees and falls unevenly in the camera's range. A camera with a light meter should be adjusted according to the amount of light falling on the subject — not where the photographer is standing or behind the subject. Ayre recommends that cameras without light meters be used only where the lighting is even. Otherwise, she says, "the camera gets confused and you get an overexposed or underexposed picture."

Shooting into the sun can produce interesting special effects, but it may also leave your subject covered with glare or hexagonal spots. Rivers, lakes, sand and pale rock formations also can bounce an unexpectedly heavy dose of light through the lens.

To get some understanding of how your camera works, shoot at least one roll of film and look at the results before you take your trip. With each practice shot, copy down the light conditions. If your camera has shutter speed, aperture and focusing adjustments, list those settings as well. Shoot the same subject several times at different angles and settings. By experimenting with these variables, you'll learn which effect each adjustment produces.

"Remember, you also have depth of field to consider," says Ayre. "You can focus on a nearby tree or the mountain in the background." Adjusting the depth of field will determine the focal point of a photo. A shallow field softens the foreground and background to make the main image very sharp, while a deep field gives a wide, clear image, best for panoramic nature scenes.

Wide World

With the right lens, you'll never be caught up a tree.

If you hope to take a picture of a still animal, use a telephoto or zoom lens with your camera mounted on a tripod so that you can take the shot from a distance without scaring the animal. For a moving animal, use fast film (400 speed) and a fast shutter speed (1/250 or 1/500) to stop the action and produce a clear image.

The kind of film you buy can make a difference in the colors you bring back home. Film stores usually sell slide and print films specially color-balanced for outdoor lighting. "Indoor films are slightly balanced toward blue," Ayre explains. "Since outdoor colors are predominantly blue, using indoor film means everything will come out a little too blue."

Always remember that photography is a chemical process and is sensitive to temperature changes. Keep film out of direct sunlight, or in bags, cars or campers that will absorb heat during the day and cool off at night. Both film and camera must be kept dry. To be safe, Instamatic or cartridge film should be wrapped in a watertight plastic bag. Film for 35-millimeter cameras should be kept in the manufacturer's plastic container.

Ayre hikes with her camera strung around her neck and hugging her side. "I want it out so I can take a quick shot, but I also want it somewhere I can protect in case I fall." FW

Taste Debate Ends.

Former higher tar smokers report MERIT "Best-tasting low tar I've tried."

Can a low tar cigarette provide the taste incentive to switch smokers from higher tar brands?

Research consistently proves that MERIT can.

MERIT Taste Sparks Switch.

Nationwide survey reveals over 90% of MERIT smokers who switched from higher tar are glad they did. In fact, 94% don't even miss their former brands.

Further Evidence: 9 out of 10 former higher tar smokers report MERIT an easy switch, that they didn't give up taste in switching, and that MERIT is the best-tasting low tar they've ever tried.

MERIT Landslide.

In addition, extensive unmarked-pack tests confirm that MERIT delivers a winning combination of taste and low tar when compared with higher tar leaders.

Confirmed: The overwhelming majority of smokers reported MERIT taste equal to—or better than—leading higher tar brands.

Confirmed: When tar levels were revealed, 2 out of 3 chose the MERIT combination of low tar and good taste.

Year after year, in study after study, MERIT remains unbeaten. The proven taste alternative to higher tar smoking—is MERIT.

are shrines. Names like the Madison, the Yellowstone, the Firehole, the Big Hole, Henry's Fork and Silver Creek are the stuff fishing dreams are made of.

Like so many simple pleasures, it seems, the quality of angling for trout is going downhill. Perhaps it has always been going downhill. Describing angling in the south of Scotland in 1860, writer/sportsman Andrew Lang cried, "'Tis gone, 'tis gone: Not in our time will any man. . .need a cart to carry the trout he has slain."

Today, the problem is more basic. Explains Ernest Schwiebert, author of Trout, a 1,745-page opus on the subject and a must for the serious angler, "The streams and lakes are being devoured by an explosion of people fishing for trout without any background or understanding of either the character of the trout or centuries of tradition surrounding the sport.

"And these hordes will have no one to teach them its gentle truths in future years, no father or grandfather or uncle in baggy tweeds and worn sweater, with a closetful of exquisite split-cane rods and a library of well-thumbed fishing books."

Schwiebert sees catch-and-release fishing as the best hope for trout fishing's future. He is not alone. The idea has been tried on sections of many trout rivers, and it seems to be working. When restricted to fly fishing on a no-kill basis only, trout populations have climbed and the quality of the fishing improved vastly.

"Nonfishermen seldom understand why we fish when we usually release our catch," says Schwiebert, "and too many fishermen sadly share their myopia. They fail to grasp that live trout, lying in their sun-dappled riffles, rising over bright gravel shallows and fighting the delicate rod, give our sport its entire meaning. Unlike bait or lure fishing, catching trout on flies seldom injures the fish."

The heart of the catch-and-release philosophy is not based upon any sense of nobility, notes Schwiebert, but on simple economics. As angler-writer Lee Wulff puts it: "Some fish are just too valuable to be caught only once." FW

A good way to get involved in trout fishing is to join a chapter of Trout Unlimited. Its quarterly magazine, Trout, is excellent and contains loads of information on guides and where-to ideas. Write Trout Unlimited, Box 1944, Washington, D.C. 20013. Even more information on guides, places, equipment and technique can be found in the newsstand magazine Fly Fisherman, published eight times a year. For information on fishing in various states, write to the Department of Tourism in the state capital.

Many new anglers coming into trout fishing are taking advantage of a new wrinkle in fishing — fly-fishing schools. Several are run by Western outfitters (listed in Fly Fisherman), and two outstanding ones in the East are the Orvis Fly-Fishing School, Manchester, Vt. 05254, and the school owned and run by noted angling writer/film maker Lee Wulff and his casting-champion wife, Joan Salvato Wulff. Write the Joan & Lee Wulff Fishing School, Beaverkill Road, Lew Beach, N.Y. 12753. — L.U.

CAMPING '82

The Care and Feeding Of the Outdoor Family

By John Hitchcock

Barbara Flore

To keep away nosy animals, hang supplies from a tree branch.

My friend turned to me as the two of us stood halfway up a gravel slope in Oregon's Cascade Mountains. His hands were rust colored from handling the volcanic rock. His loosely fitted pack dangled from his back. His feet, bound in tennis shoes, surely hurt.

"Shouldn't I have done something to prepare for this," he asked, "like camp out in my backyard?"

He was right. The lure of a camping vacation is happiness at a reasonable price, but to stay happy, you've got to prepare. I can think of three conditions to avoid on any vacation — being hungry, being wet and/or cold and being lost. The trick when camping is to avoid this trio without adding a lot of expense to the vacation and weight to the load.

Grub: Packing food that is light, tasty and easy to prepare is simple. "Trail food" is also guaranteed to please children because most of it would be banned as junk food back home. Take gorp, for example, a homemade mix of raw oatmeal, peanuts, raisins, chocolate bits, sunflower seeds, shredded coconut and anything else that can be tossed into a plastic bag and easily scooped out by the fistful. Gorp serves primarily as a snack to be munched on during pauses along the trail. But it is nutritious enough to pass for lunch and with a little extra oatmeal can be cooked for a hot breakfast.

A camping vacation is not the time to diet. The key to staying warm is wrapped up in the food you eat. Trail food calories are quick-burning rather than muscle-building. They heat your body as you sleep through cool nights and fuel you on long hikes during the day.

When packing, throw in cheese, peanut butter and crackers for lunchtime variety. Longhorn and Cheddar cheeses are good, as they won't spoil easily outside a refrigerator. They also blend in well with one-pot pasta and rice dishes, which I recommend for dinner. With the right pinch of spice, you can dish out such campfire ethnic specialties as curried rice, chilled macaroni and chicken noodle soup. Add several heaping teaspoons of peanut butter to beef bouillon and you have a close cousin of African groundnut stew.

Drinks are easy, too. Instant coffee, tea and powdered fruit drinks are lightweight and take up little space. Same goes for the iodine-based purification tablets necessary when drinking unboiled stream water.

Remember, animals wander where their noses take them, so take along a plastic or canvas bag in order to hang provisions for the night from a tree branch. A camping vacation is not the time to unwittingly feed woodland creatures.

A key to keeping away four-legged visitors is to make sure your pots, dishes and utensils are scrubbed clean. Steel wool pads nicely remove campfire grit and grease, but leave you with a messy nonburnable you have to carry out of the woods. Sand (or coarse dirt) and water work fine as a substitute. Call it nature's scouring pad.

CAMPING TIPS

Clothing: Add wool and cotton clothing and a large rain poncho to the high-calorie diet and you'll have the wet-and-cold problem beaten. Cotton is cool on hot days and dries quickly after wet ones. Wool will keep you warm even if you're damp. A poncho will keep you dry on the trail and serve as a utility cloth in camp. Cheap, light and foldable into a small pocket of your pack, a poncho can be used to cover firewood, bag food, or protect sleeping bags from ground moisture in tents without floors. It can even serve as the waterproof roof of an emergency shelter.

Barbara Fiore

Even on cool nights, jumping into your bag au naturel is usually your best bet.

Gear: Cotton sleeping bags are warm enough for most summer nights. A 3-by-5-foot dense foam rubber pad underneath is good insurance against the chill of the earth. A down- or fiber-filled "four season" sleeping bag may be a bigger investment than you want to make, but remember that down, while less bulky and often warmer than artificial fillings, loses its warmth when wet. Fiber-filled bags retain their warmth-giving properties even after a dunk in a river.

Whatever bag you choose, you'll be cozier if you sleep in the buff. Yes, in the buff. Sleeping fully clothed is tempting on cool nights. But clothing keeps body heat from circulating through the bag and leaves you rank and itchy in the morning.

As for proper footgear, wear hard rubber-soled boots with ankle support to protect the foot and prevent sprains on rocks or along rugged trails. Thick ragg socks will help prevent blisters.

Safety: Schedule a light hike your first day out so you can adjust to your pack and get comfortable navigating strange trails. Should you lose your way, a compass and a candle become quick comforts.

With compass in hand, pick two natural land features that are in sight and on your map. Measure the number of degrees each is off magnetic north, then draw lines through the feature map at their respective angles to north. Where the lines intersect on the map is where you stand in the woods.

If that fails and darkness falls, you still have the candle. (To make a suitable camp candle, pour melted wax into a small chewing-tobacco or tuna fish can. Buy a wick or use a piece of twine.) Burned inside a makeshift shelter, it can give off enough heat to prevent hypothermia. It also acts as a beacon, signaling those who might be out looking for you.

Which brings us to the last tip for a happy, no-hassle camping. Let the park or forest ranger know that you've arrived, where you're going and when you plan to leave. FW

Lose up to 20 lbs. the 1st Week

(Average fat & fluid loss: 10-12 lbs.)

Lose up to 40 lbs. in just a Month

(Average: 20-25 lbs.)

Doctor guarantees fast weight loss of 20, 50, 100 lbs. or more!

As much as YOU need, as fast as YOU can without regular visits to his office.

★NO PILLS★NO DRUGS★NO DEVICES

SAY GOODBYE TO FAT, FOREVER!

"It's true! I don't care how fat you are (Some of my patients are hyper-obese). I don't care how many diets you've been on in the past, or how many times you've thrown away your money on the latest weight-loss fad or gimmick. If your only health problem is fat, your problem is over.

"My Wean-Away™ Plan will take that excess weight off fast and keep it off without pills, drugs, devices, or injections. My plan allows your body to lose the most weight it is capable of losing in a short period of time without regular visits to my office.

"You can lose 5 to 8 lbs. in 48 hours, 20 lbs. in a week, or 40 lbs. in a month. But even if your loss is only average, your clothes will start feeling loose this week and your pants or skirt will be falling down within 30 days!"

FAT BURNING FORMULA

"You'll start out on my specially developed Wean-Away™ Formula, a tasty and nutritious mixture that will help turn your body into a fat-burning furnace from glassful to glassful. You will literally burn up fat, melt away excess weight and reduce bulging body measurements THE VERY FIRST DAY!

"This is the fastest medically sound over-the-counter plan to reduce weight and waistline, EVER. With just the formula alone, you will lose more weight than hours of running, calisthenics, weight-lifting, or swimming. Of course, I recommend exercise with my Wean-Away™ Formula. This combination is the fastest, most permanent weight loss method known to medical science—the same method that results in losses up to 20 lbs. the first week!"

TAKE OFF EVERY EXTRA POUND—AND KEEP IT OFF!

"Step by step, I'll repattern your eating habits. In just a short time, I'll "wean" you off the formula and you'll be eating 3 full meals, plus a snack!

"Now, the food you eat no longer turns to fat. Thanks to my Wean-Away™ Plan, you will actually reverse your body's process for building up fat! You will stop excess fat-building calories from entering your system. And, you will keep them from being turned into ugly bulging fat!"

IT WILL WORK FOR YOU—COMPLETELY AT MY RISK!

"That's right. You can lose weight fast. And, you don't have to pay me for personal visits to my office. You see, my Wean-Away™ Plan is completely safe. Of course, as with any weight-loss plan, check with your own doctor. But no matter how many pounds overweight you find yourself right now, if you're in good health, my Wean-Away™ Plan will let you take it off fast and keep it off—or your money back in full (less postage and handling, of course).

"So, try it. Take your choice of tasty chocolate, delicious vanilla, or new strawberry and banana. Use my formula for five full days. You will be trimmer. You will be slimmer. You will be lighter. And, you will see the difference in your mirror and by the fit of your clothes. Just the same, if you're not happy with my plan for any reason, simply return the unused portion within 30 days for a prompt refund, no questions asked!"

DON'T DELAY!

"Send me your order now. I guarantee that if you follow my plan compared with any other over-the-counter plan, you will lose the most weight that you're capable of losing in a short period of time. And, you will continue to lose as much weight as you want to. Best of all, you will keep that weight off!

"But don't just take my word for it. Try it. Order now, at my risk. Mail in the coupon today!"

Dr. Morton W. Levine, Plastic Surgeon and Bariatric Specialist

"My individual plans have been successful with over 10,000 patients, some of whom are pictured here. Now, I've created an over-the-counter plan that will work for you. In 4 easy steps, my Wean-Away™ Plan will help you take it off and keep it off or your money back in full (less postage and handling, of course)."

"Take a look at some of my patients. Though you may not lose as much or as fast, remember . . . compared with any other over-the-counter plan, your body will lose the most weight it is capable of losing in a short period of time!"

THE COLT .45 PEACEMAKER

bringing the beauty of a legendary firearm to your office or favorite room.

Available exclusively from The Franklin Mint.
Please enter your order by
May 31, 1982.

The Colt .45 was more than a weapon. It told the world a man was independent and proud.

And when a Westerner admired a man and wanted to honor him, he often presented him with a Colt .45 as a gift—a symbol of the West's timeless values of courage and pride.

Now, the Colt .45 Peacemaker—legendary weapon of the American frontier—has been masterfully re-created as an authentic and bold wall display by the skilled pewter craftsmen of The Franklin Mint. With painstaking care, they have created this new work in dramatic high relief. Molded from the original weapon. Finished in fine pewter, with a protective backing. And hand rubbed to bring out all its rich detail.

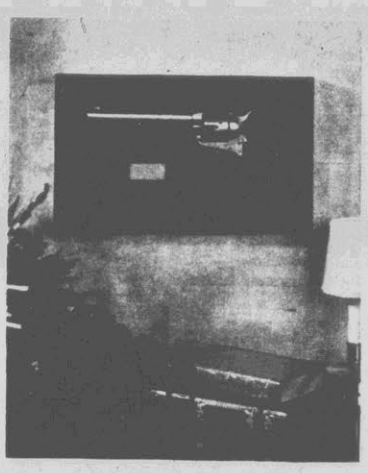

Furthermore, this powerfully masculine work will be 'presented' much as these famous guns were once presented to collectors of fine firearms—set against a plush background in a handsome wood frame. Thus, as soon as it arrives, The Peacemaker will be ready to take a commanding place on the wall of your office or den.

A work of exceptional detail and fine craftsmanship, The Colt .45 Peacemaker is available only by direct order from The Franklin Mint. The work will be issued with a Certificate of Authenticity which attests to its status as a re-creation authorized by Colt. And because this famous weapon is so closely connected with the history of the West, each owner will also receive an engrossing background commentary describing the story of the Colt .45 and the lives and times of the men who made it their weapon.

Power. Dignity. Authenticity. The Colt .45 Peacemaker embodies all these. It is also a work of strength and authority that bespeaks the traditions of the Old West. A work you will be proud to display in your office or home, or to present as a very special gift.

Take note, however, that the order form at right is valid only until May 31, 1982. To acquire this outstanding work, be sure to mail this form to The Franklin Mint, Franklin Center, Pennsylvania 19091, on or before that date.

PEOPLE QUIZ

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. You're more apt to reveal your secret self to someone you love than to someone you merely like.
2. Women reveal more of their inner thoughts and feelings than men do.
3. The more you reveal about yourself, the more likely you are to tell untruths.
4. A woman tends to disclose more in the company of one other person than she does in a small group.
5. High blood pressure tends to go hand in hand with keeping personal thoughts and feelings bottled up.
6. Telling others your secrets can be indicative of either good personality adjustment or neurosis, depending on whom you confide in.

ANSWERS

1. True. A North Texas State University study explored the relationship between self-disclosure and intensity of feeling in dating couples. The results revealed that "the average strength of relationship between self-disclosure and loving is over 25 times as great as that between self-disclosure and liking."
2. True. Studies at the State University of New York have shown that although males and females do not differ in the depth of their disclosure on some subjects (politics is one example) females do reveal significantly more than males on the topics of sex and religious beliefs.
3. False. Boston University studies found that "high revealers not only disclosed more information to others, but were also more sincere, as compared to their low-revealing counterparts, who not only disclosed less but were also less candid about themselves."
4. False. At the Ohio University School of Interpersonal Communication, findings of a study on self-disclosure in female undergraduates showed that "Women . . . not only self-disclosed significantly more in a small-group setting than did men, but they also disclosed more in the small group than they did in pairs."
5. True. Behavior specialists at Saint Louis University made a study of hypertension and self-revelation and concluded that a relationship exists between hypertension and unwillingness or inability to share personal thoughts and feelings with others.
6. True. Studies show that indiscriminate revelation of intimate feelings is likely to be an indication of a personality problem. On the other hand, as findings reported in a University of New Mexico investigation show, appropriate, discretionary self-disclosure to good friends "can result in increased trust . . . and increased mental health." NEW WONDER-FORMULA—HAILED ON

PEELS OFF PAINT JUST LIKE PAPER!

LIFTS • PEELS • STRIPS AWAY UP TO 18 COATS OF PAINT WITH ONE SINGLE 60-SECOND APPLICATION!

- Simply apply—let dry—peel away paint like paper in one single action
- Ends sanding—scraping—spraying—chipping—steel-wool FOREVER!
- Amazing European discovery turns layers of paint to a single sheet of 'paper' so it peels away just like you'd lift and turn the pages of a book!

WORKS ON ANY SURFACE... WOOD, BRICK, METAL, PLASTER, GLASS, STONE, ANTIQUES!

Amazing new formula actually penetrates old paint (varnish and lacquer, too), in minutes. Transforms it into a soft, plastic-like film. Then simply let set... lift, roll, strip up to 18 coats of paint away in a single peel-away action! Yes, years of built-up paint peel away as quick and easy as you'd turn this very page! Ends sanding, scraping, chipping and foul-smelling chemicals ONCE AND FOR ALL!

SO EASY EVEN A CHILD CAN DO IT!

Called 'Peel-Away', this new wonder-formula has been officially registered with Gov't. patent offices throughout the World. It is completely odorless—completely safe! Reacts only with paint, varnish, lacquer or shellac . . . nothing else! So you can use it on even finest furniture, precious art frames, why even delicate wicker or valuable painted-over marble. In fact, it is so safe, so gentle, it is used by London's British Museum and world-famous art galleries to strip old art frames and century-old paneling. Even used by antique dealers to strip down priceless furniture treasures for restoration. Yes, 'PEEL-AWAY' literally lifts away every last layer of old paint even from hard-to-get-at places such as impossible-to-reach windowpane corners . . . grooved molding . . . finely tooled woodwork, etc., etc.

SIMPLY COAT IT ON—SEE IT TURN PAINT TO "PAPER" IN JUST MINUTES . . . AND PEEL IT AWAY IN A SINGLE LIFT-OFF ACTION!

Best of all this new wonder-formula is so easy to use. Simply mix with water and coat onto any painted surface. Then press down special 'Peel-Away' magic-fibre Lift-tex strip-away cloth, (included free) . . . let dry and adhere to surface . . . and without even dirtying your hands, lift away old paint, just like you'd peel a banana. It is as simple and easy as that. No mess. No fuss. No odor. Old paint lifts away like a single sheet of paper. Original bare-wood finish comes through like new again.

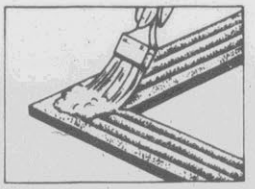

SO ECONOMICAL TOO! MERE PENNIES PER JOB! AND THE PEEL-AWAY MAGIC-FIBRE CLOTH IS COMPLETELY RE-USABLE, GOOD FOR YEARS TO COME!

Peel-Away is every home-owners dream come true. Ideal for indoors on walls, windows, furniture, etc.—plus 101 outdoor uses too. And it costs only a little more than a penny per foot coverage. Homeowner's size alone gives enough coverage to strip away as much as 500 to 750 feet of wall and door trim, window frames, furniture molding, stair railing, patio furniture, roof-gutters . . . its uses are almost endless.

So for the new low-cost, super-fast way to peel away old paint . . . lift away old lacquer, varnish and shellac . . . order PEEL-AWAY today on full money-back guarantee. REMEMBER: You must be able to simply coat . . . peel . . . lift and strip away up to 18 layers of old paint in a single peel-away action . . . without sanding, scraping, chipping or steel wool . . . or purchase price refunded in full. Order today.

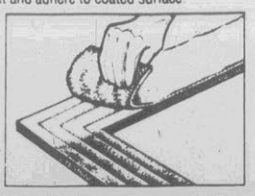

CLEAR & FREE 1-2-3!

STEP 1: Simply coat 'Peel-Away' wonder-formula over old, encrusted paint; (up to 18 layers thick)—

STEP 2: Cover treated area with magic-fibre 'Lift-tex' stripper-cloth, (included FREE). Let set and adhere to coated surface.

STEP 3: Right before your eyes paint turns to "paper" lifts, peels, strips away IN A FLASH!

CRAFTS

Create Gifts For Special Occasions

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Summer is coming, and with it a host of special occasions — summer christenings, Father's Day, graduations, weddings — that you'll want to commemorate with homemade gifts. To help you and your loved ones celebrate the season, here are some clever craft ideas.

For that special newborn about to be christened, make a bonnet from a lacy handkerchief. Our instructions will tell you how the bonnet can be taken apart once the baby has outgrown it and kept to be used as the "something old" item for a future wedding day.

A christening bonnet is made easily from a lacy handkerchief.

Here's an idea for Father's Day: Give Dad a laugh and a useful gift without busting your budget — two pairs of socks that come fastened together to resemble "long johns." Kids on piggy-bank budgets can give him a special family photo or one of their own drawings in a frame they can make themselves with yarn and cardboard.

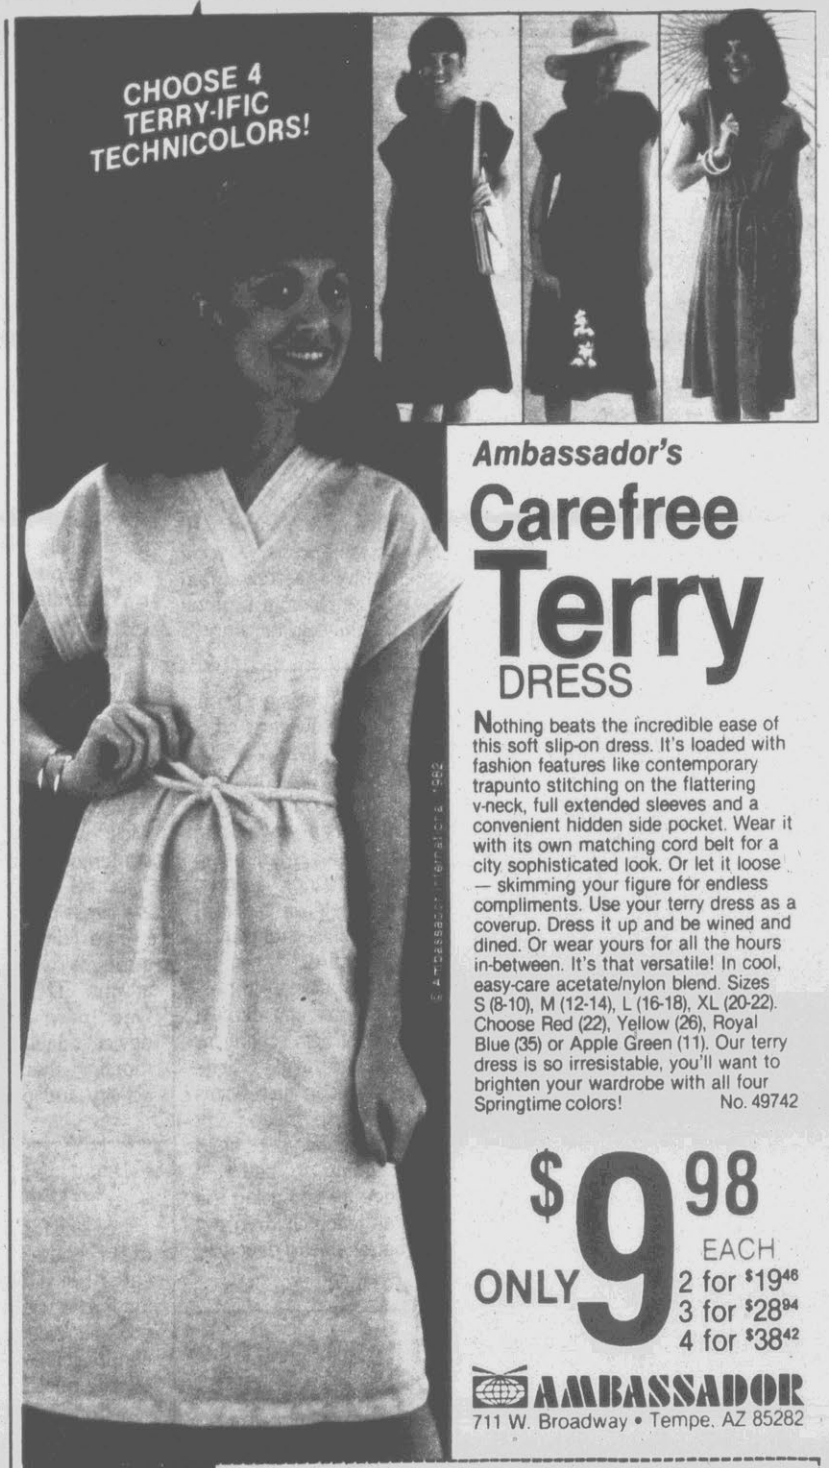

Or a child can decorate a balloon with felt-tip pens and paper to make a special greeting for Dad, or to congratulate a college or high-school graduate.

For a bride-to-be, create a shower centerpiece doll out of foam; decorate the doll with paper, lace and net. Then decorate the table at the shower with place cards and umbrella-shaped candy and nut dishes made from paper muffin cups and pipecleaners. You can make all of these decorations, as well as a special nosegay for the guest of honor, for as little as $2.

Detailed instructions, along with photos and illustrations, are included in the booklet "Craft Fun for Special Events" (#356). For your copy, send $1.25 plus 25 cents postage and handling to:

WHAT IN THE WORLD

By Eliot Kaplan

WHEN YOUR PET DIES

When a pet dies, our grief may be as deeply felt as if it had been a relative. But society regards mourning a pet as silly. Thus, we dangerously bottle up our feelings.

So contends Dr. Herbert Nieburg, a psychotherapist specializing in grief therapy and co-author of the new book Pet Loss. "We've been trained not to acknowledge grief over human loss," he told us, "much less pet loss. We say, 'It's dumb. Why do I feel so sad? It's only a dog.'"

Eileen McKeating

But deep down, he adds, we're experiencing strong feelings of grief that, if left unresolved, will manifest themselves in the future.

It's especially important to properly explain pet death to children, and Nieburg warns against using such terms as "put to sleep." (It could make the child fear going to bed.) "I believe that by using the pet death experience," he says, "we can teach children not to be afraid of grieving, and they'll be better able to deal with death later on."

UNLOCKING THE MYSTERY OF TMJ

Help is finally becoming available for some 10 million Americans — most often, driven career women — who suffer from a puzzling, painful disorder known as TMJ (temporomandibular joint) Syndrome.

Some 800 doctors met in Philadelphia recently to discuss the ailment, which involves an imbalance of the jaw, usually brought on by unconsciously clenching and grinding your teeth. Symptoms include headaches, earaches and sore, clicking jaws, and TMJ can lead to an inability to open and close the mouth.

"TMJ can be caused by a blow to the jaw or even arthritis," Dr. M. Franklin Dolwick, who moderated the conference, told us later. "But 80 percent of cases are stress related."

Two diagnostic breakthroughs were introduced at the TMJ conference. One new calculator-size device enables patients to monitor their jaw-muscle activity and perhaps figure out what situations are causing the teeth clenching. And an arthrogram, which involves injecting dye into the joint and is often used with knee injuries, can now pinpoint damage in the jaw.

Dentists, oral and maxillofacial surgeons, orthodontists and psychologists are involved in TMJ treatment, which may consist of removable orthodontic appliances, filing teeth to change the bite, stress-management techniques and, in rare cases, reconstructive surgery.

TOP CALIBER CLOTHING

And now comes a fashion idea that's hot as a pistol.

A line of designer bulletproof clothing was recently introduced in (where better) New York City. Manufactured by EMGO U.S.A. LTD., a division of the company that makes the Israeli Army's bulletproof wear, the vests and jackets come in a variety of colors, styles and fabrics.

Each contains a removable, lightweight bulletproof panel that lets you maneuver quickly and easily, whether on the disco floor or while avoiding terrorists.

Effective against weaponry ranging from a .22-caliber rifle to a .357 Magnum, the jackets will retail for about $250. "Clothing has always protected people against the natural elements," says EMGO president Abraham Silbershatz. "Now it can guard against the unnatural elements as well."

An explosive fashion trend.

CHEAP SUNBELT PROPERTY

Looking for a deserted stretch of land on which to build that dream house? How about 14,000 acres on the planet Mercury? For a $25 donation, The Astronomical Society of the Pacific will send you a deed entitling you to a "nice recreational site in a pollution-free environment." You'll even get a satellite photo of your plot. Needless to say, the Society owns no land on Mercury, but who does? And, by the way, if you decide to visit your new real estate, bring summer clothes. The temperature is around 700°F.

MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD

Ever wonder how some of our greatest movie scenes are created? Is it the director's touch, the writer's nuance, the actor's charisma? Well, sometimes, it seems, you can simply credit dysentery.

Recently, Raiders of the Lost Ark director Steven Spielberg revealed that the famous fight between Harrison Ford and the fearsome Arab swordsman was supposed to be part of a long chase scene. But Ford came down with the local North African version of Montezuma's Revenge. "He couldn't stand up," recalled Spielberg. "He was virtually bent over. I figured it was going to be a disaster . . . he would be out for at least 24 hours. So I said just shoot the guy."

"You look ill, Indiana Jones."

Give your children The Britannica Advantage...

It's a tough world out there.

That's why you should give your child all the advantages you can. Especially the tools for success. (That's what a parent's love and responsibility are all about.)

Certainly there's no better tool for improving school grades and assuring future achievement than The New Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Good things just seem to happen when Britannica 3 arrives in the home. It's so clearly written and so well-organized that young minds find it the perfect homework helper. The older child will explore entire fields. Research term papers and projects. Enjoy a competitive edge in high school and college. Britannica 3 is a Home Learning Center no child can ever outgrow.

Of course you too are "growing"...and will use Britannica 3 perhaps as often as your youngster. You'll find Britannica 3 filled with knowledge about everything from economics to home decorating. Sports to politics. Art to music. Health to religion.

What makes Britannica 3 unique?

Britannica 3 is more than an encyclopaedia. It's a revolutionary Home Learning Center...America's only encyclopaedia arranged into three distinct parts.

1. The 10-Volume Ready Reference lets you get at facts quickly and easily. Ideal for homework.
2. The 19 Volumes of Knowledge in Depth for readers who want to explore entire fields of learning.
3. The One-Volume Outline of Knowledge—your guide to the entire encyclopaedia...permits you to plan your own course of study on any subject under the sun.

When you judge by its 43 million words, you'll agree Britannica 3 delivers more value per dollar than any other accepted reference work.

Marco Polo Explores The Far East

Pre-Renaissance Europeans knew virtually nothing about the Orient until Marco Polo, in the final years of the 13th century, wrote of his travels to China, India, the Middle East and Southeast Asia.

Until about 100 years ago, there was no other authoritative Western material on many parts of Central Asia which Polo visited during his 25 years in the Orient.

NBC will present a spectacular 10-hour miniseries, "Marco Polo," based on the life of the adventurer, premiering May 16 (8-11 p.m.). Parts 2 and 3 will air from 8-10 p.m. on the 17th and 18th, followed by a three-hour conclusion on Wednesday, May 19 (8-11 p.m.).

Polo was born in Venice in 1254. His father, Niccolo, and uncle, Matteo, were traders and navigators who had already established significant trade patterns with Persia and the Far East. In 1266, they became among the first Europeans ever to visit the royal court in Peking, then called Cambuluc.

In 1271, Polo joined his father and uncle on a second expedition to China — Cathay, as it was known then. Four years later they reached Peking, carrying with them a personal message from Pope Gregory X to the court of Kublai Khan. It was there that the younger Polo learned the Mongol language and was sent throughout China, India and Southeast Asia as Khan's emissary.

In 1291, Polo left China acting as an escort for Princess Kokachin, the promised bride of a Persian ruler. It took two years for Polo to arrive in Hormuz, now part of Iran. They stayed for nearly a year,. traveling west through Constantinople, arriving in Venice in 1295, nearly a quarter of a century after their departure.

Back home, Polo joined the Venetian forces fighting a naval battle against the neighboring city-state of Genoa, and was taken prisoner a year later in Genoa. He was placed in the same cell as Rustichello da Pisa, a writer. During his captivity, Polo dictated the account of his travels to Rustichello, later telling him, "What I have told is not even half of what I have seen."

After hostilities between Venice and Genoa abated, Polo was freed from the prison. He returned to Venice, a comparatively well-to-do man because of the book, known either as "Il Milione" (The Million) or "The Travels."

KEN MARSHALL (l) STARS IN THE TITLE ROLE OF "Marco Polo" with China's most admired thespian Ying Ruocheng (r), appearing as the mighty Mongolian warlord, Kublai Khan, in NBC's "Marco Polo," the first Western dramatic presentation ever filmed in the People's Republic of China. The show premieres on Sunday, May 16 (8-11 p.m.), and airs over the next three nights.

The Best Of Comics

A PIE IN THE FACE is one of comedy's classic laugh-getters, and lovely Loni Anderson has just gleefully delivered same to Burt Reynolds, serving as a co-host of ABC's "Hollywood: The Gift of Laughter," airing Sunday, May 16 (8-11 p.m.). The special spans the entire history of Hollywood comedy and features a wealth of footage supplied by all the major studios.

In the tradition of "That's Entertainment," Carol Burnett, Dom DeLuise, Jack Lemmon, Walter Matthau, Richard Pryor and Burt Reynolds host a salute to film comedy in "Hollywood: The Gift of Laughter," airing Sunday, May 16 (8-11 p.m.) on ABC.

Spanning the entire history of Hollywood comedy — and with a wealth of footage supplied by all of Hollywood's major studios, the special offers a rich display of movie mirth. From the gems of the silent era through the screwball comedies of the '30s and '40s to today's box office hits, virtually every great comedian and comedic actor is spotlighted.

Clustered into such comedic categories as "Comedy Teams," "Funny Actors," "The Clowns," "Occasional Teams," "Broadway Stars" and "Funny Ladies," the show includes tributes to Mel Brooks, the Marx Brothers, Laurel and Hardy, Cary Grant, Peter Sellers, Woody Allen and the slapstick stars of Mack Sennett.

Also well-represented are such all-time-favorite funny men and women as Barbra Streisand, Danny Kaye, Jimmy Durante, Gene Wilder, Abbott and Costello, Martin and Lewis, Mae West, Goldie Hawn, Carole Lombard, Lucille Ball, Cheech and Chong, Charlie Chaplin, Burns and Allen, and Bill Murray. There are surprises, too, in the form of rare sequences of familiar stars in seldom-seen films.

Celebrating the Los Angeles Bicentennial, "Hollywood: The Gift of Laughter" is produced in collaboration with the Motion Pictures Association and with the cooperation of the Screen Actors, Directors and Writers Guilds. All proceeds from the special will be donated to leading film schools.

TO THE MANY FANS OF BRENDA BENET:

It is always sad to see someone we admire pass away, especially someone as lovely and youthful as actress Brenda Benet. Tragically, she took her own life with a gun at age thirty-six. Brenda, who most recently starred on NBC-TV's "Days of Our Lives," as Lee Williams, was formerly married to actor Bill Bixby. They married on July 4, 1971, and had one son, Christopher. The Bixbys divorced in 1979, and in 1981 tragedy struck when their six-year-old son died from an illness described as a "rare bacterial infection." Evidently, Brenda was unable to cope with the turmoil of her personal life, and now sadly she is gone too!

Q: In the opening theme of "All In The Family," Edith and Archie are seated at the piano singing "Those Were The Days." Is the last line of the song "Gee, our La Salle was great," or "Gee, there were no sour grapes"? EMY SIMS, CONNELLY SPRINGS, N.C.

A: The last line was — "Gee, our old La Salle was great." La Salle refers to an automobile of that period.

Q: I would like to write to the Dallas Cowboys to see if they would send me some pictures of them. What is their address? MRS. C.W. ECKARD, HICKORY, N.C.

A: You may write to the Dallas Cowboys at 6116 North Central Expressway, Dallas, Texas, 75206.

Q: Did Wendy Schaal of "Fantasy Island" portray one of the waitresses on "It's A Living," now "Making A Living," on ABC? MICHAEL TISDALE, FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

A: Yes, she did. Wendy co-starred as Vicki on "It's A Living" before landing the role of Julie on "Fantasy Island." She has been married for four years to Stephen Michael Schwartz, a singer-songwriter who also is an actor and writer. Her father is actor Richard Schaal.

Q: I would like to know exactly when and where Roger Moore was born. Also, where can I write to him? FRED PEYTON, ROANOKE RAPIDS, N.C.

A: The suave "007" was born October 14, 1928, in London, England. His father, George Moore, was a policeman. Roger maintains several residences. We suggest you contact him through his agent, Chasin-Park-Citron, 9255 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif., 90069.

Drug Run Out Of Control

A ruthless crew of drug smugglers pursues a trio of amateurs whose dream of sudden wealth becomes a desperate battle for their lives, in "Who'll Stop the Rain," to be broadcast on The CBS Wednesday Night Movies, May 19 (9-11 p.m.). The movie was originally released theatrically in 1978.

In the drama, Michael Moriarty portrays John Converse, an embittered, war-shocked reporter for "alternative" newspapers who, in the chaotic days before the fall of Saigon, agrees to help a mysterious well-connected woman (Gail Strickland) transport heroin to the United States. He asks a bold, adventurous friend, Ray Hicks (Nick Nolte) to carry the drugs to the States. Meanwhile, he tells his wife Marge (Tuesday Weld) in San Francisco only to pay Hicks some money he supposedly owes him.

When Hicks gets to San Francisco, he realizes that Marge's house is being watched. With things not as expected, Hicks chooses to flee, taking the bewildered Marge and the drugs with him. A pair of menacing thugs, Danskin and Smitty (Richard Masur, Ray Sharkey), are in close pursuit. The chase is complicated when Converse falls into the hands of a Federal agent, Antheil (Anthony Zerbe), with more than a legal interest in the aborted transaction.

"Who'll Stop the Rain" was directed by Karel Reisz from a screenplay by Judith Rascoe and Robert Stone based on Stone's best seller "Dog Soldiers."

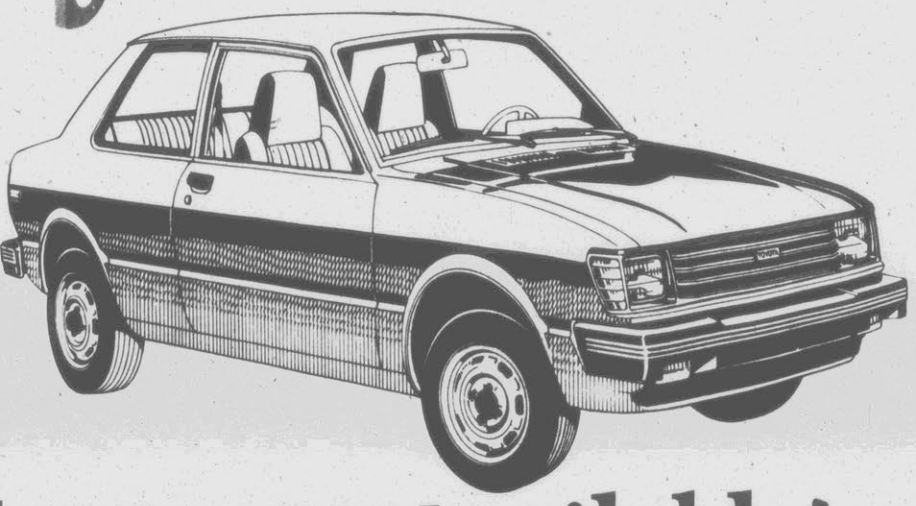

The film also stars Charles Haid (of "Hill Street Blues") as Eddie Pearce, David Opatshu as Bender, and Joaquin Martinez as Angel.

Award For Jim

Jim Henson, creator of the Muppets, will receive the March of Dimes Jack Benny Memorial Award in recognition of his outstanding and original contributions to the world of entertainment for the past 25 years.

Series Airs In Fall

Anne Archer and Frank Converse, two of the most accomplished and versatile performers in American theatre, motion pictures and television, will star in "The Second Family Tree," a limited series to be telecast on NBC in the fall.

Converse will star as Kevin Tree, a divorced man with a young son who marries Sally (Archer), a divorced woman with three children, including an 11-year-old deaf son. The series will dramatize their attempts to handle the emotional ups and downs as the youngsters adjust to stepparents as well as new brothers and sisters.

Clark In Role

Production has begun in Atlanta on "Maid in America," a two-hour romantic special starring Susan Clark and Alex Karras which is slated for CBS's fall schedule.

GEORGE C. SCOTT, TRISH VAN DEVERE and Red Buttons are featured in a spoof of the '30s backstage musical — only one half of "Movie, Movie," a playful remake of the classic Double Feature, airing Friday, May 21 (8-10 p.m.), on NBC-TV.

'Barney' Exits

"Barney Miller" will end its eighth and final season on ABC-TV with a three-part episode, "Landmark," now in production.

'Movie, Movie's' A Spoof-Spoof

Two vintage Hollywood film genres — boxing and musicals — are spoofed in a double-feature, "Movie, Movie," which will make its network television premiere as the NBC Movie of the Week, Friday, May 21 (8-10 p.m.).

In "Dynamite Hands," George C. Scott stars as Gloves Malloy, a crusty manager of professional boxers who meets Joey Popchik (Harry Hamlin), a law student with a potent street fighter's punch. After the young man's sister is found to need prohibitively expensive eye surgery, he agrees to fight for Malloy only long enough to raise funds for the operation. As a neophyte, he is spectacularly successful, but he and Malloy are soon entangled with the underside of the fight business after they become associated with mobster Vince Marlowe (Eli Wallach).

In "Baxter's Beauties of 1933," George C. Scott portrays Spats Baxter, a Broadway producer who rushes a play into production — hoping for one last hit — after he learns that he is terminally ill. Concerned about the future well-being of a daughter he has never seen, Baxter attempts to meet an opening night deadline based on the medical report that he has only a month to live. When his temperamental star, Isobel Stuart (Trish Van Devere), balks at appearing unless new music is written, Baxter faces the first in a series of crises that makes his goal appear increasingly impossible.

"Movie, Movie," which was directed by Stanley Donen, uses many of the same actors in both halves of the film, including Red Buttons, Art Carney and Jocelyn Brando. The film was written by Larry Gelbart and Sheldon Keller, and was originally released theatrically in 1978.

Animated Musical

The pictures features the voices of Lorne Greene and Sammy Davis Jr. and contains seven original songs by lyricist Sammy Cahn and composer Burton Lane. Robert Taylor directed the story based on the Johanna Spyri classic about little orphan girl in the Swiss Alps.

It's Still NBA Playoff Time

Like Old Man River, the NBA playoffs just keep on rolling along. To remind us that there's plenty of basketball left, CBS will present a playoff game on Sunday, May 16 (1-3:30 p.m.).

Although the playoff road to the World Championship series is long and fraught with potholes, many times the pothole in the road rears up before the playoffs even begin. Such was the case for Mitch Kupchak of the Los Angeles Lakers, when in mid-December, he broke toward the basket, was bumped, and crumpled to the hardwood clutching his right knee.

The result was a rim fracture of the tibia, torn cartilage and a damaged ligament. "The first thing that flashed through my mind was my parents," said Kupchak. "I knew I hurt myself badly and I didn't want them to see how much pain I was feeling. Then I thought, this is it, this could be the season."

The North Carolina All-American was playing excellent basketball as a Laker before the accident and was making a place for himself in the Laker line-up. "I was improving my rebounding, passing better, and really working hard on my defense," he said. "I was really close to sustaining the level players work hard to reach at mid-season."

In recent months, Kupchak's tibia healed properly, the damaged cartilage was removed and repaired, and the ligament responded to therapy. "I guess the one thing that frightened me was the ligament damage," he said. "It takes the longest to heal because of its delicacy."

Kupchak admitted that adjusting to life on the bench was difficult. "I can cheer, make a suggestion, and pat a guy on the back. But you can't tell me I have to like it," he added.

Nevertheless, Kupchak is not feeling sorry for himself. "I have never thought why does this have to happen to me. It doesn't help to pout over an injury. I've learned that in the past. It happened and now you have to work to come back," Kupchak said.

Injuries have seemed to plague this six-year NBA veteran. In his previous five years, he had surgery to remove a herniated disk, torn ligaments in his right thumb, and has battled back problems. "I don't feel jinxed or injury prone," said Kupchak. "Sure you could elude injury by not mixing it up with the big men or just jog up and down the court avoiding action. That's not me. I play the way I was taught."

Clooney Story Airs

Sondra Locke stars in "The Rosemary Clooney Story," a new motion picture-for-televison for CBS based upon Miss Clooney's book, "This for Remembrance: The Autobiography of Rosemary Clooney."

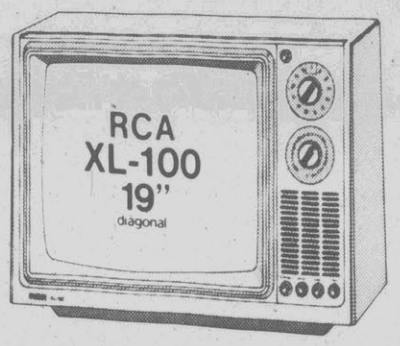

Also starring in key roles are Tony Orlando, Penelope Milford, Katherine Helmond and Joey Travolta.

HOLLYWOOD — One of the regular viewers of the new daytime soap, "Capitol," is YUL BRYNNER. He watches the daytimer takes notes and phones critiques to series co-star CONNIE TOWERS. CONNIE, his leading lady in "The King and I" ('77-'80) and he have remained good friends.

Vocalist BILLY JOEL is recovering after a traffic accident involving his motorcycle and a car. BILLY suffered a broken wrist — an injured thumb and cuts — though he required surgery his doctor reports that the accident will in no way impair his piano playing ability.

"Trapper John" nurse, MADGE SINCLAIR, is overcome with joy with the response of the celebrities who jam her newly opened Jamaica Gallery on La Cinega Row.

If anyone can bring PRINCESS GRACE out of retirement for a film role — it should be her brother, JOHN, who is planning a movie dramatizing the life of their father which will include JOHN SR'S being barred from participating in England's Henley Regatta because he was once a bricklayer.

The Beauty of Hand Weaving

The appeal of a Corbin sport coat is enhanced by characteristics found only in hand-woven fabrics. Subtle weaving and color variations are features which cannot be found in machine-woven fabrics. Corbin madras is actually pit-loomed and dyed. You'll also be pleased with Corbin's quality and precise fit. This distinctive, one-of-a-kind addition to your wardrobe is one we know you will enjoy.

● MONEY TALK$! Money can be puzzling in more ways than one, as this verse suggests in two short lines: "Of fact about money, this is the worst—OT EKAM TI TSAL, UOY TSUM EKAM TI TSRIF." Read capitalized words backwards in place, one by one, for sense.

"—to make it last, you must make it first."

● Identify these European capitals via their names: 1.—drid has a motherly start. 2. —ris has a fatherly start. 3. Mos— ends with a farm animal.

1. Ma-drid 2. Pa-ris. 3. Mos-cow.

● Time Out! If 27 minutes ago it was half an hour before midnight, what time is it now?

It's eleven fifty-seven.

● Riddle-Me-This, if you can! Whom should you see for a job if your name begins with the letter L? Give up? The person L director.

MIXED UP BOUQUET!

A make-believe bouquet of nine flowers is contained in the diagram above. Each flower's name has two parts: Example: Prim and rose for primrose.

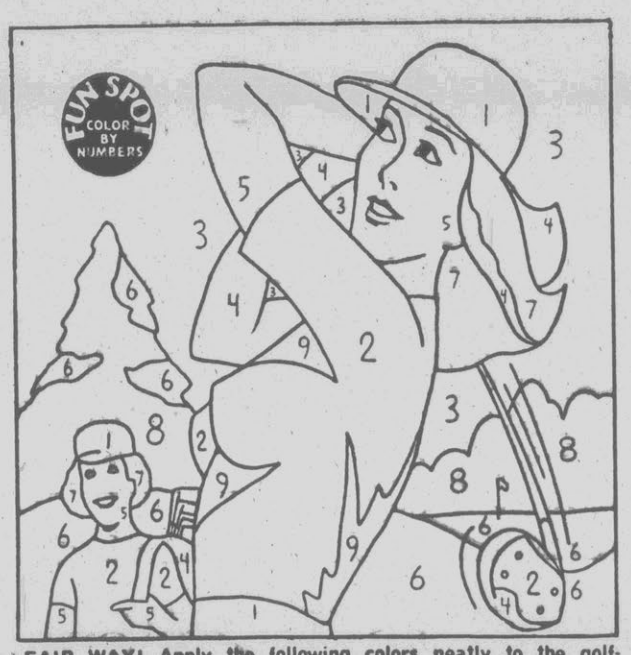

You are asked to unite the separate parts of the remaining eight flowers to complete the bouquet:

ON A ROLL! What can you draw to complete the amusing scene above? To find out, insert lines 1 to 2 to 3, etc.

Prince® Valiant IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: STREWN WITH THE SMOLDERING WRECKAGE OF A ONCE GREAT FLEET, THE BAY STEAMS LIKE SOUP. BELISARIUS PULLS HIMSELF ONTO THE THREE GRACES. NO MALICE FLASHES IN HIS EYES, NO ANGER. ONLY DUTY DEMANDS THIS LAST GESTURE. HE SQUARES OFF WITH PRINCE VALIANT. THE CONTEST BEGINS.

THE SEA BATTLE HAS CHURNED THE WATERS AND THE BIRDS FEAST. A GULL PLUCKS A CRAB FROM THE SURFACE. NOW TO BREAK IT OPEN.

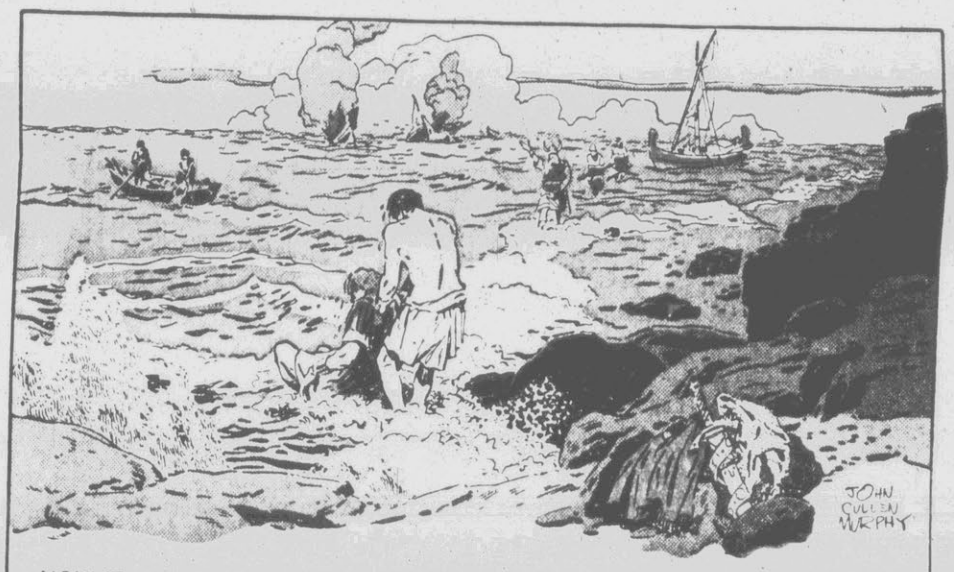

VAL DOES NOT RELISH THIS FIGHT. HE HAD ENCOUNTERED BELISARIUS BEFORE. FOR EVERY THRUST THERE IS A PARRY AND COUNTERTHRUST. SUDDENLY FATE INTERVENES AS VAL LOSES HIS FOOTING IN THE SLIME. JUST THEN BELISARIUS IS STARTLED BY A NOISE BEHIND HIM.

THE GULL HAS DROPPED THE CRAB FROM HIGH ABOVE TO CRACK ITS SHELL. IN THAT MOMENT'S DISTRACTION, PRINCE VALIANT GATHERS A DANK BOUQUET OF SEAWEED AND HURLS IT. BLINDED BY THE SALT, BELISARIUS STAGGERS BACK.

HIS BODY BOUNCES ONCE ON A SMALL LEDGE, THEN ROLLS HELPLESSLY INTO THE CURRENT.

NOW IT IS VAL WHO MUST DO HIS DUTY. HE STRIPS AND PLUNGES AFTER BELISARIUS, PULLING THE GENERAL'S LIMP FORM TO THE SURFACE. THE MAN IS BARELY ALIVE. FRANTICALLY PRINCE VALIANT SIGNALS SVEN FORK-BEARD. BEFORE LONG, BELISARIUS IS IN A PHYSICIAN'S HANDS.
