

British Attack By Land, Sea And Air

By The Associated Press

British forces attacked Argentine positions on the Falkland Islands from the land, sea and air today, and suffered their single biggest loss since the conflict broke out — 21 dead in a helicopter crash at sea, British said.

The Argentine joint chiefs of staff said their troops were "repelling British landing attempts on the Falklands. It is still too early to say what has happened or what is happening," a spokesman in Buenos Aires said.

The British fleet was said to be in position off the islands, out of range of Argentine artillery. Argentine forces ashore were reported on full alert.

However, an Argentine communique said the last fighting reported in the area was a British warship's "nuisance bombardment" early Thursday morning near Stanley, the capital of the islands. The communique claimed Argentine coastal batteries drove the attacker off.

Britain reported no fighting after Wednesday night, when it announced earlier that carrier planes attacked Argentine positions eight miles west of Stanley and warships shelled other positions.

But the British Defense Ministry said a Sea King helicopter with a crew of three "got into difficulties in appalling weather conditions" during a reconnaissance mission Thursday and went down near Tierra del Fuego, at the tip of South America and 450 miles from the Falklands.

Chile said the burned wreckage of the chopper was found 11 miles south of the Chilean military base at Punta Arenas, and troops were searching for the crew.

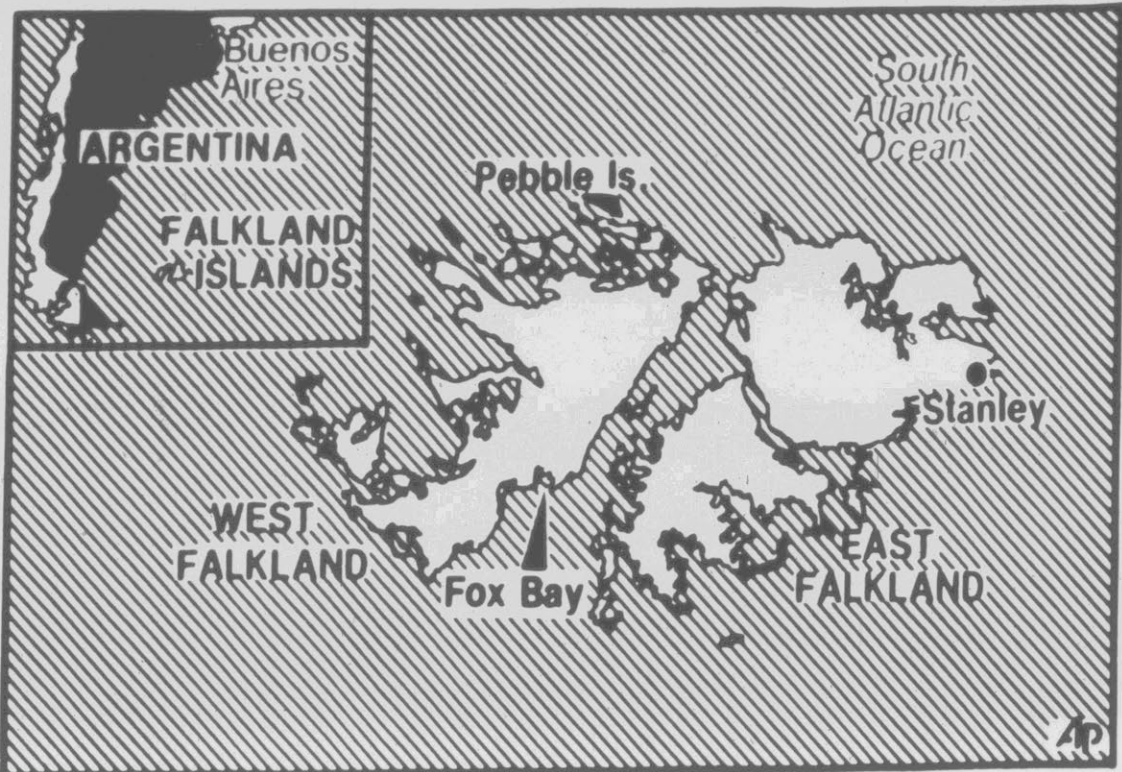

After 12 days of separate talks with British and Argentine diplomats at U.N. headquarters in New York and a final telephone appeal directly to the hostile countries' leaders, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said Thursday night his efforts to arrange an agreement for a cease-fire and further negotiations were over.

With each side blaming the other for the collapse, the secretary-general said he had no "prospect of bringing about an end to the crisis, nor, indeed, of preventing the intensification of the conflict."

Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez said he was studying a new peace proposal offered by President Fernando Belaunde Terry of Peru. He said the proposal also was submitted to the British government, but there was no comment from London.

City Council Selects Gail Meeks As City Manager

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

The City Council followed the lead of East Carolina University today in selecting one of its own employees for its top administrative post.

Gail Meeks

In a special session, Mayor Percy Cox and the six-member council unanimously approved the recommendation of Gail Meeks as the new city manager for Greenville.

Mrs. Meeks, an employee of the city since 1968, has risen through the ranks during her tenure and is currently serving as interim city manager.

The council made the appointment of Mrs. Meeks effective June 1 and set her beginning annual salary at $42,000.

Mrs. Meeks 32, was recommended for the post by a three-member council search committee composed of council members Louis Clark (chairman), Janice Buck and Stuart Shinn. In discussing the committee's choice, Clark said the group had narrowed an initial list of 135 applications down to 13 before "strongly recommending" Mrs. Meeks.

Clark explained that when Mrs. Meeks was named interim manager Feb. 28, she was not a candidate for the permanent post but the search committee "began seeing how capable, how knowledgeable she was about city government. She was aware of everything that was going on."

Clark said Mrs. Meeks' "qualifications just surfaced" and she "gained a tremendous amount of self confidence" as she continued in her interim role. He said the committee invited her for an interview recently and she indicated at that time that she would like to be considered for the job.

"The staff has respect for her and she is cool under fire, cool under pressure," the committee chairman continued.

Saying it was a unanimous decision on the part of the committee to recommend Mrs. Meeks, Clark said Cox and the remaining members of the council also endorsed their choice.

"She knows more about the budget than anyone," Clark said, adding that her ability to "stabilize the ship" during her interim tenure impressed the search board.

Clark said Mrs. Meeks is a "team person" who has the support of the city staff.

"We feel it is in the best interest of the city at this particular time to keep everything intact and running smoothly," the councilman said. "I think we are making a wise move. We feel very comfortable with it."

The new city manager will be one of only "three or four" female managers in the state, according to a spokesman at the N.C. League of Municipalities office in Raleigh. Mildred McDonald, mother of Bill McDonald of Greenville, is currently town manager in Southern Pines.

A Greenville native, Mrs. Meeks began her career with the city following graduation from Rose High School. She was named assistant to the city manager in March 1978 and served in that capacity until July 1980 when she became the city's budget and management officer.

Since the 1980 appointment, she has been responsible for various budget and management tasks and duties including budget preparation, budget analysis and budget control. She also coordinated the city's productivity, efficiency, and economy programs, coordinated and supervised the centralized purchasing program, and served as ombudsman for the Citizen Concern System. Mrs. Meeks also wore the hat as the public information officer here and coordinated the goals and objectives program.

Mrs. Meeks graduated from the municipal administration course at the Institute of Government in 1980 and has attended a number of schools on municipal government. She is enrolled at Pitt Community College in the business administration program and has completed courses in business math, principles of supervision, English grammar, and introduction to business.

The new manager holds a membership in the N.C. City and County Management Association and was appointed last November to the N.C. State Advisory Council for Business and Office Occupations.

Mrs. Meeks and her husband, Frank, reside in Club Pines.

Looking ahead to her new job, Mrs. Meeks said this morning, "I am looking forward to the opportunity to serve the City Council and the citizens of Greenville. The city has a very capable staff who work very well as a team to provide a high level of municipal services and I am looking forward to working toward continued progress of the city government."

Mrs. Meeks was named to the interim post after Ed Wyatt left Feb. 28 to assume duties as city manager of Fairfax, Va.

$50.29 Million Utilities Budget Submitted City

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

A proposed $50.29 million utilities budget for fiscal year 1982-83 was presented to the Greenville City Council at a joint meeting with the Utilities Commission Thursday night.

Met with utilities director Charles Horne a "hold-the-line budget," the list of expenditures is some $850,500 more than the current year's budget of $49.43 million, and includes a one-time capital outlay expense of $2.76 million to purchase the Virginia Electric and Power Co. electric substation here — a move which will eliminate all Veeco wheeling charges and reduce the total cost of power to GUC customers in the years ahead.

The budget also includes a $1.20 million turnover to the city as compared with $1.15 million this year. In addition, the city is expected to receive another $977,000 during the coming fiscal year through franchise tax on electric and gas purchases which comes from electric and gas ratepayers.

The proposed budget provides no new employee positions and no cost-of-living or longevity pay hikes for GUC workers, although it does include a limited amount of money for merit pay increases.

Horne, in his budget message, emphasized that the budgets for the electric, water, sewer and gas funds "have been held to the minimum levels necessary to provide adequate service with limited growth." He cautioned, however, "a sharp increase in requests for service extensions, or a major system failure could create fund demands beyond existing reserves."

By far the largest of the utilities' funds is the electric fund, with a proposed $39.9 million budget for the coming fiscal year, compared to $38.75 million allocated for the present fiscal period.

Major expense items in the electric budget include $3.86 million for operations ($3.65 million this year), $28.73 million for purchased power ($28 million this year), and $4.86 million for capital outlay — including the $2.76 million for the Veeco substation ($2.16 this year).

The money to purchase the substation came from a refund made by Veeco following the settlement of a rate case in 1981.

Pitt Commissioners Hear Requests

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The Board of County Commissioners, in a day-long preliminary budget session Thursday, heard requests totaling $7.88 million in current expense funds and $3.64 million for capital outlay for fiscal 1982-83 from the Pitt County and Greenville city school systems.

During the morning, the city school system presented requests for $2.32 million in current expense money and $541,200 for capital outlay, while in the afternoon, the county system presented requests for $5.56 million for current expense and $3.1 million for capital outlay.

City school superintendent Delma Blinson said the requests represent a "hold the line" approach. However, he said in order to maintain the current level of programs in the city schools, requests represent a "hold the line" approach which maintains the current level of programs in the city system. However, he pointed out that the requests represent a 7.5 percent increase in county appropriations for current expense items for the coming year.

Blinson explained that the increase is due mainly to a request that the county pick up some $195,400 in lost federal aid in programs for the handicapped.

"To keep everyone we have, give them the required salary increment, meet increased cost, offset declining revenue from loss of students, and pick up the Federal cuts will cost $2.4 million. Any significantly lesser amount will cause us to go backward," he emphasized.

The $546,200 in capital outlay, according to Blinson, includes $184,800 for instructional equipment, $132,550 for construction items such as the vocational shop at Rose High School, $18,500 for two trucks, and $210,300 for scheduled renovations and replacement items.

"What is killing us," Blinson said, "is the declining enrollment." The loss of one student amounts to a loss in state funding of about $2,000 a year.

"If we don't do something to offset that, there is no way we can maintain the same quality of education for these kids," he told the commissioners.

If the school system had the 500 students it has lost in the past five years, Blinson said, "we would have over a million dollars in additional revenue. We could add these 500 students at no more than $500,000 in increased costs; thus we would not need to ask for any increase from you this next year."

Blinson continued, "I think you've done a good job. You have done a good job for the youngsters in Pitt County."

"But if we don't deal with some of our fundamental problems, it can't stay that way. We're in a very critical stage. If you sit with what you've got, it won't be that way down the road."

"The solution to what I'm talking about," Blinson concluded "is one school system in Pitt County."

City school board chairman Dr. Jon Tingelstad, urging greater cooperation between the county and city schools said, "I just hope we can maintain what we've got because it's something great."

Acting superintendent Thomas Craft told commissioners the county school's current expense requests included eight new elementary teaching aid positions needed to meet Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools' requirements, one refrigeration and air conditioning repairman, and additional funds to maintain school based equipment.

The capital outlay request, he noted, includes $1.3 million to complete funding of the proposed Ayden Middle School project.

With the requested county funds, the total budget for the county system for the coming year would be about $24 million, while the total current expense budget for the city system would be $10.48 million.

This year, commissioners appropriated a total of $7.05 million for school current expenses — $4.5 million for the county and $1.98 million for the city.

In addition, commissioners appropriated $575,000 in capital outlay funds for the two systems — $172,700 for the city and $402,300 for the county.

Commissioners allocate current expense funds to the systems on a per capita basis, according to the average daily membership, while capital outlay money is appropriated on the basis of need.

To Serve Time For Embezzling

A former Pitt Memorial Hospital official was ordered to serve two months of a three-year prison sentence after he pleaded guilty to charges that he embezzled $53,000 from the hospital.

Superior Court Judge Elbert S. Peel Jr. sentenced Robert I. Barnes Jr. to three years in prison but suspended all but two months and placed Barnes on probation for five years.

Peel recommended that Barnes be placed on immediate work release and set Saturday as the commitment day for the active segment of the sentence. The judge also ordered Barnes to pay court costs and restitution to the hospital.

Barnes, who was suspended Feb. 26 as associate director for general hospital services, admitted writing fraudulent purchase orders for hospital supplies on 28 occasions between February 1980 and November 1981 and converting the funds to his own use.

Barnes could have received up to 20 years in prison.

The former assistant administrator was indicted by a Pitt County grand jury on false pretenses and embezzlement charges on March 16.

Senate Drives To Completing Budget Work

Utilities Budget...

The proposed water fund budget totals $3.42 million, as compared with $2.7 million budgeted this year and projected expenditures in the fund by June 30, of $2.78 million.

The major increase in this fund is the result of debt service payments in '82-'83 of $1.93 million for the new water treatment plant which will go into operation before the end of 1982. Some $1.37 million was budgeted for debt service for 1981-'82, while the projected expenditure for the year is expected to total $1.39 million.

The other big item in the water fund budget is $1.21 million for operations during 1982-'83 as compared with $1.03 this year.

Major expense items in the proposed sewer fund budget of $1.61 million ($1.56 million this year), include $939,700 for operations ($904,400 this year), $213,400 for capital outlay ($272,200 this year), and $257,000 for debt service ($264,900 this year).

Also included is an appropriation of $160,000 from surplus to the sewer capital reserve fund to help finance the construction of the proposed new waste water treatment plant.

The proposed $5.34 million gas fund is down $1.07 million from the $6.41 million budgeted this year. The drop is reflected in the $3.86 million budgeted for 1982-'83 for natural gas purchases as compared with $5.15 million in the current year budget and the projected $3.74 million which will actually be spent this year. Proposed sewer fund operations for the coming year are proposed at $661,400 as compared to $566,200 this year, while capital outlay is proposed at $547,700 ($463,500 this year).

Following the review of the budget, Mayor Percy Cox told utilities commission members "I'm satisfied that you've got a good budget." Utilities chairman Harry Hagerty noted that the commission has met 10 times in preparing the proposed budget.

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Propelled by its Republican majority, the Senate is sweeping aside challenges to President Reagan's tax program in a drive to complete work on a $783.6 billion 1983 budget blueprint.

The full House, meanwhile, was just beginning today to sort through competing budget plans as Democratic and Republican leaders sought to hold their people in line while attracting defectors from the rival camp.

'Ganged Up' On Hijacker

CEBU, Philippines (AP) — Officials and passengers overcame a grenade-wielding hijacker today more than eight hours after he commandeered a Philippine domestic airliner carrying 114 people.

Nobody was hurt, a spokesman for the National Defense Department said. "They just ganged up on him," said Romeo Farol, spokesman for Philippine Airlines.

The man, identified as Ray Valayo, a former sugar farmer about 55 years old, took over the twin-jet BAC-111 during a 30-minute flight from Bacolod to Cebu, the Philippines' second largest city.

Passengers said Valayo, a veteran who is married to a schoolteacher, had a long list of demands including removal of export controls on sugar, back pay for veterans and pay hikes for schoolteachers.

When the plane landed at Cebu, it was parked at the end of a runway and surrounded by specially trained soldiers. A military negotiator and an airline official talked to the hijacker.

After two hours, he freed a sick man, 24 women and four infants. The two stewardesses were then set free, and later at least 10 people managed to escape through an emergency exit.

The passengers who were freed said the hijacker was holding a grenade. They reported he was very calm.

Following two successive late-night sessions of the Senate, it was still unclear whether the chamber would complete work today on the budget outline it has been considering since the end of last week.

After a 16-hour session, Senate deliberations abruptly broke off early this morning amid sharp partisan wrangling with an angry Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., declaring there was "a total failure of consensus on how we should proceed." The Senate was reconvening later in the day.

Outnumbered Senate Democrats, having failed in earlier attempts to pass amendments to increase spending for domestic and social programs, launched an assault Thursday on the tax cuts Congress enacted last year at the president's urging.

Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., offered an amendment to increase government revenues by about $76 billion over the next three years and cut deficits by the same amount. The $76 billion would be in addition to the $107 billion in higher taxes already in the Republican budget plan under consideration by the Senate.

Hollings said the lower deficits would mean lower interest rates. He said his plan would send a message to the financial markets "that the Congress has finally become serious about the problem" of budget deficits.

Republicans, however, said tampering with the tax cut enacted last year would only be "prolonging the recession." White House spokesman Larry Speakes had said the president was lobbying against the move.

Hollings' attempt was turned aside on a 68-32 vote after drawing the support of only five Republicans: Sens. Mark Andrews of North Dakota; Charles McC. Mathias Jr. of Maryland; Robert Packwood of Oregon; Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania and Lowell Weicker of Connecticut.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia then offered a non-binding "sense of the Senate" resolution calling for either deferral of the 10 percent personal income tax rate cut scheduled for July 1983 as part of the $107 billion or some other "fiscally prudent" replacement.

Byrd stressed that move would not result in any higher taxes than the Republicans favor, but said it would lead to a fairer tax system while helping to lower interest rates.

However, that move also lost, 63-35, with no Republicans supporting it.

In the House, budget debate was being kicked off today with consideration of the parliamentary ground rules that the House Rules Committee drew up Thursday.

Under the rules, the main contenders will be a plan drafted by majority Democrats on the House Budget Committee and backed by the Democratic leadership, a plan drawn up by House Republican leaders and a plan by a small coalition of Democratic and Republican moderates.

The rules also will allow dozens of amendments to the three plans — meaning the differences among them could become blurred — leaving the issue to be decided on the basis of which party can exercise the greatest degree of discipline in keeping members within the fold.

Democratic leaders will seek to attract moderate Republicans uneasy with the domestic spending cuts in the GOP plan while Republican leaders again will seek the votes of conservative Democrats who helped with their budget successes last year.

No one is yet predicting victory for any of the plans. The Senate GOP budget plan earlier this week was stripped of a proposal for $40 billion in unspecified Social Security savings over three years.

Instead, it mandates Congress to take whatever steps are necessary after the fall election to restore the giant pension plan to financial solvency.

The Senate plan, which Reagan endorsed after the budget he submitted to Congress last February was rejected, envisions deficits of $115.3 billion in 1983; $91.2 billion in 1984 and $64.2 billion in 1985.

Police Height Rule Reversed

By MARK DAVIS
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — David Blackwell, state assistant attorney general, says North Carolina officials are undecided on what action to take following a ruling that prohibits the use of a minimum height requirement for troopers.

The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., has ruled that there may be good reasons for a 5-foot-6 height requirement, but says North Carolina has not yet demonstrated them.

"The highway patrol has not presented any job analysis of the dozens or hundreds of different tasks performed by the patrol and of the ability of people 5-foot-6 to perform them," the appeals court said, adding that it makes it difficult for women to join the patrol because many are under that height.

"If the state is able to demonstrate the need for the physical requirement, taking into account the myriad tasks undertaken by its highway patrol, it may be able to establish a factual underpinning for a height requirement," the court said. "Our opinion does not prevent the reimposition of such a requirement at some future time."

Blackwell says he hasn't seen Thursday's ruling and that state attorneys won't review it until next week.

Since a 1981 U.S. District Court ruling that the state could not require troopers to be a minimum height, the state has not enforced its minimum standard, Blackwell said.

In 1975, the U.S. Justice Department sued the state alleging it practiced racial and sexual discrimination in its hiring and promotion of blacks and women. There were 30 black troopers and no female troopers on the 1,159-officer force at that time. The state agreed to ease promotion standards for blacks and step up recruitment for minority troopers, but balked at lifting its height standard.

Burley B. Mitchell Jr., then state Department of Crime Control and Public Safety secretary, vowed to fight the decision on the height requirement, appealing to a three-judge panel in Charleston, S.C., in August 1981. The appeal was later referred to Richmond.

Maj. Dan R. Emory of the patrol's administrative services says since then the patrol has hired one woman under 5-foot-6, but she resigned before completing training.

Sarah Vines Weds Anthony Lee Thomas

Sarah Charleen Vines and Anthony Lee Thomas were united in marriage Saturday at high noon in the Sycamore Hill Baptist Church here. The Rev. Luther Brown officiated at the double ring ceremony.

A program of wedding music was provided by Johnny Wooten, organist. Mrs. Alton Harris of Greenville and Wayne Stitt of Charlotte were soloists.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Reubin L. Vines. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Lula Mae Thomas Hurt of Nashville, Tenn.

The bride was escorted by Charles Z. Davis, her uncle. She wore a formal gown of white organza over peau de soie designed with a Queen Anne neckline outlined in ruffled chantilly lace beaded with pearls. The empire bodice was enhanced with beaded chantilly lace which encircled the modified waistline. A satin bow was featured at center back. The full sheer bishop sleeves were appliqued with lace and finished with lace cuffs. The modified A-line skirt and attached chapel train were accented by cascading tiers of organza edged in lace. She wore a waltz length veil of illusion edged in lace and help in place by a caplet overlaid in matching lace. She carried a cascade bouquet of phalaenopsis orchids, white daisies, baby's breath and greenery.

Annette Lloyd of Richmond, Va. was honor attendant and wore a floor length gown of maize polyester with a chiffon capelet. She carried a clustered bouquet of yellow and white daisies accented with baby's breath and tied with greenery and satin ribbons. Baby's breath was worn in her hair.

Bridesmaids included Jacquelyn Davis and Sherry Gallopes of Greenville, Renee Ivey Peeks of Atlanta, Ga., all cousins of the bride, Clarice Hancock, sister of the bridegroom of Washington, D.C., Bernita Johnson of Philadelphia, Pa., Theresa Morris of Buffalo, N.Y. and Anne Washington of Charlotte. Their gowns and flowers were identical to that of the honor attendant.

The best man was Lee Humes of Nashville, Tenn. Groomsman were Thomas Black, Julius Lloyd, Abram Simmons, all of Charlotte, Darrell Davis of Minneapolis, Minn., Charles George and John Williams Jr., cousins of the bride of Greenville, O'Neal and Cecil Thomas Jr., brothers of the bridegroom of Nashville, Tenn.

The flower girls were LuChara Sayles and Joy Williams, cousins of the bride of Greenville, who wore floor length white dresses accented with light green ribbons.

The mother of the bride wore a light green gown and the mother of the bridegroom wore an ecru jacket-dress.

The wedding was directed by Mrs. John Williams and Addie Gore.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall with Irma Casey, Mrs. Charles Davis, Mrs. George Gorham and Rene Foster assisting.

The bride is a graduate of Johnson C. Smith University and a member of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority. She is employed by UNC-Charlotte. The bridegroom attended DeKale Community College, Nashville, Tenn. and is in the U.S. Army stationed in Charlotte.

The couple will live in Charlotte.

The Socialist Club entertained at a breakfast held at the home of Laura Wilson. Mrs. David Barnhill and Mrs. Charles Z. Davis gave an after-rehearsal party and the mother of the bride gave a rehearsal dinner for out-of-town guests.

Pat Hardee, chapter president, introduced Lisa Gordon of Ayden, who will be receiving this year's Pirate Chapter's Scholarship. She is a full time student at Pitt Community College.

Bride-Elect Entertained

The home of Mrs. Wesley Gooding was the scene of a coffee hour honoring Camille Venters, bride-elect of Richard Alan Heins of Greenville Tuesday.

White carnation corsages were presented to the honoree and her mother, Mrs. Dorothy Venters, gifts of the hostess group, Ayden Christian Church Prayer Church. Guests were greeted in the foyer by the honoree, her mother and Mrs. Gooding.

The refreshment table, covered with a white lace cloth, featured an arrangement of white carnations with candles. Arrangements of flowers and candles were used throughout the house. Punch was poured by Mrs. Rockfellow Venters, aunt of the bride-elect, and cake squares were served by Mrs. James Ray McLawhorn.

The bride-elect was remembered with gifts of candleholders and a silver trinket box from the hostesses and the Loyal Women's Sunday School Class.

Ms. George Gives Talk

Admission Counselor Yovonna C. George of Pitt Community College spoke at the meeting of the Pirate Charter Chapter of ABWA Monday evening at Shoney's Restaurant.

"Investing for Profits" was her program topic. She said, "Unemployment compensation, welfare and incarceration are short term costs that society incurs by not providing the resources adequate for education of young people. In the long run, the cost may be even greater. Bearing in mind that each dollar invested in literacy brings a return of $6.00 in national income, consider the import of each dollar that is needed but not provided."

Pat Hardee, chapter president, introduced Lisa Gordon of Ayden, who will be receiving this year's Pirate Chapter's Scholarship. She is a full time student at Pitt Community College.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

Wedding Gifts Require A Written Note

DEAR ABBY: I recently attended a wedding where there were 240 couples, plus 30 singles attending. That means 270 invitations had been sent out.

Now, somebody had to sit down and address all those invitations.

The question on my mind is: Do you think this couple should sit down again and write out another 270 thank-you notes for the gifts received?

Why not just have the band drum up a silence at the wedding reception and have the bride and groom thank one and all for gifts received? What in the world would be wrong with that?

A MAN IN N.J.

DEAR MAN: Nothing. The band could "drum up a silence," at which time the bride and groom could thank their guests for coming, but the wedding gifts require a written note of thanks.

DEAR ABBY: Because you've had so many items about missing silverware in your column, I thought you'd enjoy this piece by Strelsa Schreiber, a columnist with the News Tribune, in Fort Pierce, Fla.

KAREN SHELEY, PORT ST. LUCIE, FLA.

"Last September, my friend, Edith Recht of Port St. Lucie, Fla., entertained a group and used a set of German-made teaspoons of which she was particularly fond. When putting things away the next day she discovered that one spoon was missing!

"After a thorough search and many inquiries, she concluded that it must have been carelessly thrown out with the trash or garbage. Edith was both annoyed and saddened but accepted its disappearance as final.

"Six months later a stranger appeared at Edith's door, saying he had something that might belong to her. Then he produced the long-missing spoon! Edith immediately claimed ownership and asked where he found it. He replied that he had stumbled upon it while scavenging through trash piles.

"Her next question, posed in continuing astonishment, was, 'But how did you know it belonged to me?'

"He replied, 'Because it was mixed in with a bunch of advertising circulars all addressed to you.'

"Edith retrieved the spoon in bewilderment, thanked and rewarded the spoon-bearer in gratitude and closed the door in utter incredulity."

DEAR ABBY: Recently I lost my dear mother, who was 85. The next few days I was kept busy "entertaining" relatives and friends who came to cry. Most of them had not seen Mother in 25 years or more.

Later, as they were leaving, the tears reappeared along with the same utterance from each, "I hope next time we will meet it will be for a happier occasion."

Abby, where were these criers when mother spent her last four years in a nursing home waiting for someone to come and visit her?

BITTER DAUGHTER

DEAR BITTER: Good question. If misery loves company, take consolation in the fact that you are echoing the sentiments of countless others.

A Costly Next Step?

Not many days ago the Gastonia Gazette hailed an organized effort to recruit, train and assign the efforts of volunteers to serve Gaston County.

The newspaper reflected that the ranks of volunteers outnumbered any organization, and represented a rich resource awaiting further development.

They may well be right. Organizing and channeling that torrent of energy is a logical "next step".

On the other hand, we are inclined to fear organizing volunteers would risk losing the spontaneity, the personal pride of contributing to society, and that "amateur" status which is the hallmark of the volunteer.

When one starts "organizing" volunteerism, there is an inherent danger of converting their good works into a job.

We hold to the idea the spirit of volunteering and the secret satisfaction it entails is as important as the product of their work. "Organizing" for greater efficiency might imperil the rewards involved.

Safety Is Exciting News

A number of area industrial and business firms were recognized Tuesday night for their safety records.

The firms were cited by the N. C. Department of Labor for maintaining perfect safety records during the year 1981.

A special award went to Singer Furniture of Chocowinity for compiling 2,278,000 safe employee-hours. Union Carbide of Greenville received its 17th consecutive award.

Before we dismiss such records as unexciting news we should consider that these awards represent many things that didn't occur.

They represent people who didn't receive cut hands on sharp equipment, or mangled feet from dropped packing crates. They represent productive manhours spent on the job rather than laid up in the hospital or at home.

To us, these fine safety records are indeed exciting news.

THIS AFTERNOON

Regional Centers

By PAUL T. O'CONNOR
RALEIGH — The state's eight regional education centers are again under fire in the Legislature and this time a powerful teachers' group is lining up with those who want the centers closed.

At a recent legislative study committee hearing, the 50,000-member N. C. Association of Educators came out against further funding for the centers. It marked NCAE's first official opposition to the centers and the first time NCAE has openly opposed a major program of the Department of Public Instruction.

The centers are located in Canton, North Wilkesboro, Albemarle, Greensboro, Carthage, Knightdale, Jacksonville and Williamston. DPI bases 207 employees in the centers at an annual cost of $5.5 million. The employees work with local schools to develop and operate educational programs for students, teachers and administrators. They also help local schools cope with federal and state paperwork.

The regional centers got close scrutiny during the 1981 legislative session. In the scramble to cut the state budget, the base budget committee zeroed in on the regional centers and cut some jobs. But that wasn't enough cutting for Sen. Bill Redman, R-Iredell, and Sen. Sam Noble, D-Lumberton. The two think the centers are a waste of money and they co-sponsored a bill to study the need for centers.

At the committee's first hearing, NCAE president John Wilson had a pageful of reasons the centers ought to be closed.

They duplicate services already available in the public school offices, Wilson said.

They "do more to create bureaucracy and paper work than service. Our public schools need less bureaucracy and more direct services to children."

Wilson scoffed at the notion that the centers provide teachers with professional training. Teacher development is better provided, he said, by "teachers teaching teachers" in local in-service programs. Training teachers can't provide to their colleagues can be furnished through the state's public universities. Facilities at these schools should be made available to teachers.

Noble and Redman said they'd talked with teachers in their districts who were cally significant because, to this point, most of the criticism directed at the centers has come from conservatives like Redman and Noble. NCAE is considered a liberal organization with an obvious interest in protecting educational programs. NCAE could go a long way towards assuring friends of the public schools, be they conservative, moderate or liberal, that is a good place to save some money in this tight budget year.

DPI spokesman Tom Davis totally unaware of the purpose of the regional centers. DPI Assistant Superintendent Bill Peek countered that the regional offices deal primarily with school administrators who then pass services to the teachers. Noble and Redman said that proved the centers were simply another level of bureaucracy.

Poor-Mouthing Defense

Frederenko, my KGB contact, and I dine about once a month and exchange information on each other's country's defense.

"Haig told me the Soviets have missile superiority to the United States," I said.

"Is big liar," said Frederenko angrily. "By claiming nuclear inferiority, American military is able to spend billions dollars on new weapons. The U.S.S.R. is not going to let you say you are inferior when whole world knows you more powerful than we are."

"You are a victim of your own propaganda, Frederenko," I told him. "The truth is your missiles are much larger and have more throw-weight. Ours are smaller and more vulnerable to a first-strike attack. Soviet know-how is forcing us into an arms race we can't afford."

Frederenko was getting red in the face. "You only know about our successes. You don't know about our failures."

"We're not too thrilled with our nuclear aircraft carriers. Rickover says in case of war they won't last more than six days."

"You must not tell anyone," Frederenko said in a low voice. "But the cameras on our spy satellites take everything out of focus."

"Since you have told me that, I will tell you something. Our AWACs break down after only 25 hours of flying time."

"We can't even fight a war in Afghanistan."

"We couldn't even rescue 50 hostages from Iran."

"We're not even sure the Warsaw Pact countries will be on our side."

"NATO is a paper army," I told him. "In a conventional war, you could capture all of Western Europe in 10 days."

Frederenko said, "You are just saying that to trick us. We know how many tactical nuclear weapons you have planted all over West Germany. You could wipe us out in no time."

"I've seen studies of our war games, my friend. We've lost to the Soviets every time."

"I spit on your war games. We have to keep millions of troops on the Chinese border. We're spread so thin now we can't even defend Moscow."

"And what about our window of vulnerability in the U.S.? Unless we close it, you could blackmail us into a political defeat in any part of the world."

"Reagan made up the window of vulnerability to scare Congress into giving him the biggest defense budget in

"Our Backfire bombers are a joke," said Frederenko. "We only built them to use as a chip in the SALT II talks."

Whatever the reason for them, many authorities on management believe realignments are necessary to put industry back on a fast track.

Few, however, are going well, observes Jennings, professor of business administration at Michigan State University, authority on corporate structures, author, and confidential adviser to several boards or chairmen who have already undergone the total realignment process.

"These things are always to some extent messy situations," says Jennings. But they are especially messy, he contends, if the chief executive officer fails to avoid several insidious traps.

One of trap is the "roll up the sleeves and make things happen" attitude. Says Jennings: "I've had to restrain clients from getting into operations and ceasing to perform their leadership function."

The CEOs function in a realignment, he asserts, "is to develop a concept of the new corporation and insure that it is communicated to various systems personnel." That, and to "facilitate the control, coordination and maintenance of morale and inspiration."

However, a total corporate realignment, Jennings contends, "can create such a whirlwind it draws the chief executive into management and away from leadership," putting him in the situation of "stamping out ants while elephants come over the walls."

If the chief executive escapes that trap — "it takes an exceptional individual to do so," says Jennings — he must then avoid others.

He must avoid the trap of inadequate consequential thinking, which occurs when the chief loses his wideangle, long-term view and instead reacts in kneejerk style, which leads inevitably to costly blunders.

"If he maintains his high perch and wide perspective he can better anticipate the consequences of his delving into management affairs," says Jennings. When he loses that perch he loses his perspective.

Related to that trap is the isolation reaction. Because of his inability to handle the torrent of gripes and grievances within his management staff, the chief executive insulates himself from problems.

In such a situation he declines to accept the messy details without shooting the management messengers. He is tempted then to merely issue orders through others "and withdraw his presence from individuals who are angry or indifferent or who have lost their way," says Jennings.

There is at least one challenge in any corporate realignment that the CEO cannot delegate. He must, says Jennings, spend much time with the troops, out in the departments and divisions and regions, offering workers his vision of the new corporation.

"Most chief executives fail to understand that workers in their offices have no way of understanding the big picture unless they, the CEO, paint it clearly and share it with them," says Jennings.

"Trust, credibility and loyalty become difficult to retrieve if the CEO doesn't saturate the troops with the message of the realigned corporation and what it will look like," he advises.

"Failure to do so makes a messy job all the messier."

Other Editors Say The Only Choice

(The Salisbury Post)

Salisbury, Md., is an attractive town pleasantly located on the Eastern Shore close to the ocean and in the midst of one of the nation's finest farming areas. It is about to celebrate its 250th anniversary, which makes its settlement predate ours by 21 years.

These facts come to life because our older sister wants to include a recipe typical of Salisbury (N.C., that is) in its birthday cookbook.

There really is only one choice possible — Salisbury steak.

There are those who would send our Maryland friends a recipe for making barbecue a la Blackwelder. After all, it was one of North Carolina's finest and North Carolina does offer the world's finest pork barbecue.

Chicken 'n' dumplings a la Liberty Volunteer Fire Department — as served at the county fair — is another suggestion. But chicken dumplings are found wherever the Pennsylvania Dutch ventured, and pork barbecue is a state, not local dish.

Salisbury steak, on the other hand, was the creation of a Salisburian and properly bears the Salisbury label to this day.

Salisbury steak, according to the legend which we refuse to deny, was created in the World War I era in the dining car on the Asheville division. A diner's order for a steak found the chef in an embarrassing position — without a steak. But he was ingenious. He substituted a "Salisbury steak" which he later explained was "just the way they fix 'em in Salisbury, N.C."

Apparently it satisfied the diner for the name stuck to this high society version of the lowly hamburger. It is frequently found on menus, in homes and on frozen food packages over the nation.

Those who call it "hamburger" don't know what they are talking about. Richard Sellers, who operated restaurants here for a number of years, was once asked the difference between Salisbury steak and hamburgers.

He waxed poetic in exposing the ignorance of those who would ask such a question. "There is little comparison," he asserted. "Hamburger is a lowly grade of meat. Why I've even heard they grind up cow's ears into hamburger. But Salisbury steak — ah, that's from the sirloins and the rounds, set off by a touch of onion and a sprinkling of green pepper."

Strength For Today

LIBERATING THE TRUE SELF

Centuries ago the young Michaelangelo came across a rough and shapeless piece of marble, the result of the work of an unskilled sculptor. "There is a beautiful figure in this block," he insisted, "and I must liberate it." He then went to work and brought forth one of the most beautiful statues of the day. When praised because of the statue in later years, Michaelangelo would always say, "The figure was there; I only released it."

We have all heard people talk about "the person I might have been". Everyone of us feels that he has lost great opportunities, that there is something of grandeur in his life which might have come forth were it not for some weakness or thoughtless mistakes.

But the man or woman — the obscured figure — is still there. At any time we can turn life's mistakes into life's triumphs. We may hack at our lives, but if we will let the Divine Artist have his way with us, the beauty and power of our real selves will come out. — Elisha Douglass

A Silence On Tax Shelters

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) — When President Reagan denounced tax evaders in the cash-and-carry underground economy, he threw in a disparaging reference to big money operators using tax shelters.

He didn't say they were wrong, but he certainly wasn't complimentary.

That was before the disclosure that Attorney General William French Smith had invested in oil and gas ventures that offer $176,400 in tax deductions over three years based on a cash investment of $58,800 and liability for potential losses beyond the investment.

The administration hasn't said much about tax shelters since. Nor has anything been said in Congress, which has faced a controversy of its own over the tax breaks members get for their Washington living expenses.

The Internal Revenue Service has been trying to clamp down on tax shelters like the ones in which Smith invested, but lawyers for the firms involved said they were confident the deductions would stand up if the IRS challenged them in court.

Were that to happen, the Justice Department might wind up defending the IRS position in court. Smith's spokesman said the attorney general would disqualify himself from any involvement in such a case.

After the Washington Post reported the Smith transactions, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the attorney general "wants to be sure it's proper and he's looking into it to reassure himself."

That was 10 days ago, and that's where the matter stands. "I think this is something that the attorney general himself would appropriately answer," said presidential counselor Edwin Meese III. "None of the rest of us are speaking about it."

But Meese did say that there was nothing to indicate "that the attorney general tried to cut any corners" in the tax shelter investments, or in accepting a $50,000 farewell payment from a steel distribution firm of which he was a director until Jan. 12, 1981.

"The president has tremendous confidence in the attorney general, as I do," Meese said.

He said the severance payment was made before Smith took office, and that no one had suggested there was anything wrong about the tax shelter.

"It happens every day that the IRS disallows particular deductions that people take," Meese said. It happened to the president, who paid more than $40,000 in tax federal and state taxes for 1978 and 1979 after the IRS disallowed deductions for business loans on his California ranch.

It hasn't happened in the Smith transactions. But IRS guidelines do point to the likelihood of an audit.

Nor, said Meese, was Reagan's tax speech intended to reflect upon such shelters as those in which Smith invested. He said the president was talking about people who deal in cash and evade taxes, knowing it is illegal, not about people who use tax shelters to reduce their taxes.

In that April 24 speech, Reagan said a growing number of Americans are giving themselves a tax cut by not paying what they owe, totaling an estimated $95 billion.

"Now, if your first reaction was that these are big money operators using tax shelters — and there are some doing that — I'm not talking about them," Reagan said.

He said he was talking about an underground economy of mechanics, craftsmen, professional people and others who operate in "a kind of cash-and-carry barter system — no checks, no records or bookkeeping and thus no tax."

Tax shelters weren't the target in that radio speech. But Reagan's reference to them hardly could be read as flattery.

To The Editor:

The city has come in and cut down a hedge that ran across a city parking lot in back of my apartment. It took about 75 years for that hedge to grow. The bulldozer came along and in less than half a day cut it down. Now I am exposed to daytime noise and nighttime glares from cars that are parking there.

I really protest the fact that the city would cut down something that was as beautiful as that hedge, something that really contributed to the beauty of the city.

It seems to me that in the future there should be some regulation about cutting hedges and trees that belong to the city. Having lived here all my life, I am very conscious of how things look on city property as well as on my own personal property. There should be some regulation.

Corporate Realignment Messy

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — One-quarter of the largest U.S. corporations are now in the throes of total realignment, which in some instances is nothing less than building a brand new company out of an existing one.

The massive changes often involve product lines, finance, plants, manpower marketing and other aspects of companies. Some are due to foresight, but others are due to past failures to anticipate change.

IBM's realignment, required because it is in an industry whose products and level of competition are changing radically, is an example of foresight, according to Prof. Eugene E. Jennings.

In contrast, International Harvester and AM International, to name just two, are restructuring with their backs to the wall and their creditors sometimes dictating moves. And others, such as General Motors, Sears, Roebuck and U.S. Steel, the professor points out, are being forced to realign without the luxury of optimal conditions.

Whatever the reason for them, many authorities on management believe realignments are necessary to put industry back on a fast track.

Few, however, are going well, observes Jennings, professor of business administration at Michigan State University, authority on corporate structures, author, and confidential adviser to several boards or chairmen who have already undergone the total realignment process.

Way Cleared For ERA To Be Assembly Issue

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Legislative Research Commission has recommended that the General Assembly ratify the proposed Equal Rights Amendment, but Senate President Pro-tem Craig Lawing says he still doesn't think it will pass.

The Commission, a group of House and Senate members authorized to review various study topics, voted 6-4 for the recommendation, considered crucial to the ERA's chances in North Carolina as it makes the amendment eligible on a simple majority vote of the General Assembly.

The legislature will consider the proposed amendment to the U.S. Constitution during its limited session which begins June 2. Three more states must ratify the ERA before the June 30 national deadline.

House speaker Liston Ramsey said that without the commission's recommendation, ERA would have been eligible for consideration only with a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules.

He said that would have been virtually impossible, since supporters are waging a desperate, last-chance effort to build a majority for ERA in both chambers before the deadline.

Lawing, D-Mecklenburg, said he believes opponents had 28 of the 50 Senate votes.

"As far as I'm concerned it was going to be killed last year, and as far as I'm concerned, unless something happens, it's going to be killed now," he said.

Ramsey and Lawing, commission co-chairmen, did not cast votes and Lawing said he couldn't work for ERA's passage in the Senate until after he spoke to Senate Democrats opposing ERA.

He said he would seek a release from a "gentlemen's agreement" he signed last year pledging not to raise ERA as an issue in 1981 or 1982. He said he signed it to prevent opponents from pushing a ratification bill to the Senate floor, where it would have been killed.

After the vote, Ramsey spoke to a group of ERA advocates.

"That makes the ERA bill eligible for introduction in 1982," he said. "If you have the votes, you can pass it on a simple majority. I would suggest when you get here, you get on with it. We're not going to have that long."

favours ratification of ERA. Betty McCain, Gov. Jim Hunt's designated lobbyist for ERA, said ERA strategists had not decided whether to push the bill first in the House or the Senate. "We're just doing it one hurdle at a time. This one is over and we'll see what to do about the next one," she said.

Admit Woman, Risking Charter

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) — Members of the Sparkling City Jaycees acknowledged they're risking their chapter's charter in the national organization by admitting a woman as a full member.

However, the service club's board of directors, in a 6-0 vote Tuesday, accepted the membership application of legal secretary Meredith Yacavone, 25.

"It will probably result in national and state reconsideration of the charter," said Mrs. Yacavone.

Randy Kindy, a spokesman for the U.S. Jaycees, based in Tulsa, Okla., said the "bylaws state that members ... must be male."

Claim Setback In Damage Suit

BOSTON (AP) — A state Supreme Court ruling allowing a personal damage suit to be brought against Local 274 and the national union of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America has been criticized as a setback for organized labor in Massachusetts.

"It makes a change in a law of long standing," said Robert Z. Lewis, a lawyer for the union. "It won't stop us from organizing."

The court, throwing out a rule that effectively protected unions from personal injury claims, overturned the dismissal of a non-union member's suit Thursday. It alleged she was assaulted while crossing a picket line during a strike at Wesco Electronics in Greenfield.

Convicted In Gun Slaying Want To Leave The Rest Home

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — A Holiness Church preacher was convicted in Craven County Superior Court Thursday of manslaughter in the death of a blind man she housed for nearly three years.

A jury decided Mary White, 66, of New Bern, shot Edward Sawyer, 54, at her home on Feb. 22. Sawyer died eight days later.

Prosecutors said Ms. White was in love with Sawyer and shot him when he said he was moving out of her home. Sawyer stayed with Ms. White in an arrangement with the Craven County Department of Social Services.

Ms. White testified she heard Sawyer fire a shot in her living room and was trying to wrestle a gun from him when he accidentally shot himself. Her defense attorney accused the Craven County Sheriff's Department of shoddy investigative work and said the all-white jury had not been sympathetic towards his client, who is black.

Sheriff's investigators said Ms. White originally told them she had found Sawyer bleeding to death in her home, and subsequently changed her story on the stand.

Ms. White originally was charged with second-degree murder. Her conviction of the lesser charge means she could receive up to 20 years in prison. She was released under $6,000 bond pending a sentencing hearing.

history." "Frederenko, you must take my word for it. We are no longer a superpower. Here is a copy of the Joint Chiefs of Staff testimony to the Senate Armed Forces Committee. It proves you are superior to us in every military area."

"And here are the microfilmed minutes of the last Politburo meeting. The Minister of Defense says we are outgunned and out-missiled on land and sea and in the air."

We exchanged secret papers of the various failures of our defense systems and said goodbye.

When I reported back to my CIA superior at Langley, he said, "Did Frederenko buy it?"

"I don't think so. He kept poor-mouthing Soviet military superiority."

"We'll have to send Haig back up the Hill again to testify how weak we really are. Under no conditions can we afford to let the President discuss 'disarmament with Brezhnev from a position of strength."

Searching for the right townhouse? Watch Classified every day.

LAWDALE, N.C. (AP) — Cleveland County officials say eight residents of a nursing home, whose operator and an employee are charged with mistreating patients, have asked to be moved to different facilities.

F.L. Beam, 57, the home's operator, was charged Tuesday with assaulting a handicapped person. He is free on $30,000 bond and no trial date has been set.

The employee, Sammie Lee Smith, 52, was charged with first-degree sexual assault and was being held on $5,000 bond.

County Social Services Department Director Hal Smith, whose agency is operating the home until other arrangements can be made, said agencies from other counties have asked that three patients be transferred and one family member asked that a relative be moved.

He said one resident moved Wednesday and two others are planning to move. He said his staff is trying to locate other homes for those who want to leave, but added that the department has no plans to move all the residents out.

State Bureau of Investigation agents have testified that some residents at the 65-patient home complained about physical and sexual abuse by rest home employees. SBI agent Wayne Pegrant told the judge that one patient was tied by his neck to a bedpost overnight and choked to death.

Some residents say the accusations are false and rest home employees say complaints come from mentally deficient patients who couldn't be believed.

"I've lived here eight years," said Lorraine Morris, 45, formerly of Lincoln County. "I've never seen anyone beaten up, tied with a rope to a bed and choked to death."

Janelle Phillips, 49, a nursing assistant, says in her five years as an employee she had seen some residents being strapped in their chairs or in their beds with acceptable vest-type restraints to keep them from harming themselves.

"But I've never seen anybody tied with a rope, beaten or any of those things they're saying," Ms. Phillips said. "I think it's just terrible what they're saying about this place."

says the centers are already saving money. If a specialist is helping the Asheville schools, it makes much more sense to base him in Haywood County than it does to put him in Raleigh and pay his travel back and forth across the state.

Davis concedes, however, that that argument doesn't apply if you intend to cut both the centers and the programs they operate. From the way they were talking, and from the arguments NCAE added, a complete chop appears to be what Noble and Redman have in mind.

Doctor Says Hinckley Is Consumed By Self-Hate

WILL BE COVERED — The controversial black and white murals in the House of Representatives in Olympia, Washington's State House, will be walled over to please the lawmakers who called "The Twelve Labors of Hercules" obscene and inappropriate. Because the art works cannot be taken down without WASHINGTON (AP) — The man who shot President Reagan is "quite intelligent," but he is consumed by self-hate, uncomfortable with his sexual feelings and desperate when he has no one to cling to, a psychologist says.

Dr. Ernst Prelinger, testifying Thursday in the trial of John W. Hinckley Jr., also said that only one "normal" person in a million would have scored as poorly as Hinckley did on a test measuring severe mental depression.

Prelinger, a Yale University psychologist called by the defense, said Hinckley's thoughts and feelings came out in interviews and on written tests. The doctor is returning to the witness stand today for cross-examination.

The psychologist was the third defense witness to testify that Hinckley suffered from an extreme mental illness when he shot Reagan and three other men March 30, 1981. Hinckley has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity.

Hinckley, Prelinger said, also volunteered once that he feels he is now the "most infamous person in the world" and "has superhuman stature — not good but bad."

Discussing the tests, Prelinger said Hinckley was asked to complete a sentence on one that began, "A man feels good when..."

Hinckley wrote, "... (when) he manages to impress a woman and gain her admiration... Everything else is secondary because love comes with admiration," Prelinger said.

But Prelinger said Hinckley was underdeveloped in sexuality and aggression. The defendant was uncomfortable with his sexual feelings, the psychologist said, and, "He cannot use aggression in the service of normal assertion."

To the statement, "When they talked about sex..." Hinckley answered, "I always listened and tried to learn. I am slow at some things."

The defense has claimed that Hinckley shot Reagan in an effort to impress Jodie Foster, the movie actress with whom he was obsessed.

To the written question, "The thing I like about myself," Hinckley wrote, "is the way I have so far managed to survive six crises of unbelievable magnitude," Prelinger said.

"Here," Prelinger said, "is a person who hates himself, does not believe in himself, can see no future for himself and has no motivation of his own."

"He is a person who has no sense of himself but can only cling to somebody else. If he has nobody to cling to... he becomes very desperate."

Hinckley's parents testified earlier that they, along with a psychiatrist in Evergreen, Colo., had devised a plan for their son to be living on his own by the end of March 1981.

Prelinger said tests showed Hinckley, 26, is a "quite intelligent man, slightly above the average range of general intelligence." Hinckley's verbal IQ of 117 is considered "bright normal" and his non-verbal IQ of 113 is "slightly above average," the doctor testified.

Prelinger said Hinckley was administered some of the most widely used psychological tests. One test measures, on a scale of 0-to-120, such mental disorders as serious depression, hysteria, paranoia, schizophrenia and hypochondria.

Standing in front of an easel with a large cardboard chart showing test results in graph form, Prelinger told the jury that in the severe depression category Hinckley scored 117. He said that result "would be attained by a normal person only once in a million times."

The defendant scored 109 in the schizophrenia category, also a one-in-a-million result. The three defense experts said the defendant had a severe form of schizophrenia, a disease that caused him to live in a fantasy world.

Earlier Thursday, Hinckley's lawyers dropped an attempt to introduce results of brain scans that they said would show Hinckley's mental illness. Prosecutors argued there was no connection between the scans and Hinckley's mental state when he shot the president.

Hinckley is charged in a 13-count indictment with attempting to assassinate the president and assault with intent to kill Reagan, White House Press Secretary James Brady and two law enforcement officers.

Speaking Fees Provide Boost To Income Of U.S. Senators

WASHINGTON (AP) — One Republican member of the Senate and possibly a second earned more from speaking fees than from their congressional salaries last year, financial disclosure forms show.

Sens. Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, were among 19 Republicans and six Democrats who took advantage of a new rule that eliminated the old Senate ban on earning more than $25,000 a year in speaking fees or similar activities.

Dole, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, collected $66,650 from speaking engagements before various trade associations — and $200 for two newspaper articles. He reported that he kept $36,350 of those proceeds and donated the rest to charities, netting a charitable deduction in the process.

The speaking total not only exceeded his congressional salary of $60,662 a year but easily eclipsed the approximately $36,000 to $48,000 Dole reported earning on his investments.

Hatch, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, said he kept $29,700 earned from speaking to various groups. He also said he donated an undisclosed amount in speaking fees to charities.

That undisclosed amount, combined with other undisclosed charitable contributions by the senator, totalled $33,900, Hatch revealed.

The two were among 25 senators who reported they earned more than $25,000 from speaking fees. Those most in demand as speakers were Republicans, hardly surprising since Republicans now control the Senate.

Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, reported earning $48,000 from 30 speeches. Garn, chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, took in $13,000 from speeches before banking industry organizations.

Others high on the lecture fee circuit in 1981 were Sens. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., who earned $56,250 — all given to charity; Richard Lugar, R-Ind., who earned $40,200 and gave $15,200 to charity; Charles McC. Mathias Jr., R-Md., who earned $39,200; and Steve Symms, R-Idaho, who earned $40,700 and gave $3,500 to charity.

Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nevada, considered President Reagan's best friend in the Senate, picked up $33,500 from speaking, while Sen. Mark Hatfield, the Oregon Republican who chairs the Senate Appropriations Committee, pulled in $31,691 from speeches.

In contrast, 10 senators reported giving no speeches for money.

They are Democrats Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, John Stennis of Mississippi, Edward Zorinsky of Nebraska, Dennis DeConcini of Arizona, Russell Long of Louisiana, Carl Levin of Michigan, John Glenn of Ohio, Lloyd Bentsen of Texas; and Republican John Warner of Virginia and Independent Harry Byrd of Virginia.

It's hard to identify the richest member of the Senate since the reporting forms require only general estimates of holdings.

But at least 20 senators certainly have over $1 million in assets and several are multi-millionaires.

Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., would appear among the richest, if not the most wealthy, member of the Senate.

He reported assets of $5.1 million to $11.7 million or more and said his investments pulled in income ranging from $1.2 million to $2.8 million.

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., an heir to the Ralston Purina Co., reported assets of $3.7 million to $7.3 million and up. He estimated his income from investments to be at least $349,635 and possibly more than $451,222. He had no liabilities.

Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., whose family found a fortune in ketchup and pickles, reported assets of $2.89 million to $4 million and up. Nine of his holdings were identified only as worth $250,000 and up — the highest category on the form and one that allows true wealth to be easily hidden. Heinz said income on his investments was $451,749 to $509,838 or more.

Other certifiable millionaires include Kennedy, who earned more than $250,000 in family trusts worth millions; DeConcini, who reported holdings of $5.9 million to $7.5 million and up; and Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, with assets of $2.1 million to $4.9 million and up.

Others weren't as fortunate. Sen. Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, reported losing $9,615 on his investments and said his assets totalled $68,000. Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., reported earnings of $2,723 and investments of $1,000 to $5,000.

Some reported some unusual sources of income. Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., listed $104,571 in deferred compensation from his basketball playing days with the New York Knicks.

Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., the best-known fiddler in the Senate, reported he earned $74 in royalties from his bluegrass record album.

Democratic Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., earned $32,000 from royalties on his book "The Road From Here," a call to liberals to find new ways to solve the country's

Ask Guidelines On Restitution

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — The state Parole Board has been directed to develop guidelines on how a man who gunned down two policemen 19 years ago now can make restitution to his victims' families.

The ruling Thursday by the New Jersey Supreme Court upheld the parole board's right to require restitution as a condition for parole in the case of Thomas Trantino, 43, convicted in 1964.

However, the high court admonished the board to reconsider whether Trantino had been punished enough for the "vicious" crime. A Death Row inmate until New Jersey's death penalty was overturned in 1972, Trantino said he was disappointed by the latest decision.

economic problems.

And at least one senator reported an unusual outlay. Robert Kasten, R-Wisc., said he paid the Internal Revenue Service between $15,000 and $50,000 in back taxes.

Argentina Says U.S. Will 'Pay' For Backing British

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Economy Minister Roberto Alemann predicts that the United States will pay a heavy price in Argentina for its support of Britain in the Falklands crisis.

Alemann, a former ambassador to the United States who is widely respected in U.S. official circles, said in an interview Thursday: "Bad feeling against the United States is much greater than against Britain. At least the British were in the Malvinas (Falklands) 150 years, and we threw them out, so they have an objective reason to be upset."

He said U.S. facilities at Ascension Island are instrumental to the British military campaign to retake the islands, and the Argentine government suspects U.S. satellites help the British pinpoint targets.

"And there was this switching," he said, referring to the Reagan administration's tilt to support of Britain after U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig tried to mediate a settlement.

"We felt betrayed," he declared. Alemann said the negotiations at the United Nations showed that hope remained after Haig's attempt.

"So why did he suddenly stop and say mediation had failed?" he asked.

U.S. investment in Argentina is more than $2 billion, and the United States has a steady surplus in its trade with the country. American investors have expressed interest in development projects here as well as in state enterprises soon to be denationalized. But the minister declined to speculate on possible repercussions.

"The whole thing isn't over yet," he said. "The Americans might have something to say. They could exert some pressure on Britain."

But he added: "Politically, this will have a long-lasting effect."

Alemann was ambassador in Washington during what he called the last "period of roses" between the two countries, from the 1962 Cuban missile crisis to the death of President Kennedy.

Relations wavered after that and dipped sharply in 1978 when President Carter stopped arms sales because of human rights abuses in Argentina. Resentment over the denial of American arms is worse now that Argentine lives are being lost in military action, Alemann said.

"It is a very sad chapter," he said.

The minister said that in spite of political difficulties, Argentina has had no problems with U.S. financial institutions, governmental or private.

He returned this week from meetings in Helsinki, Zurich and New York at which he assured bankers his country would pay its $35 billion foreign debt despite the conflict with Britain.

"Creditors usually measure your creditworthiness in bad times, not in good," he said. "So far, we have done pretty well. I think we will be rewarded for this later."

Meanwhile, he said, new sources are available if Argentina needs further foreign credits. But he declined to elaborate.

He acknowledged a prolonged conflict will seriously affect the economy, but he said early signs suggest Argentina could weather any eventuality without major disruptions.

"We will always eat, and have energy," he said. "The rest is comfort. People have behaved very well — very moderate, very cautious. Money is coming into the banks, prices are going up very little."

There was a trade surplus of $1.1 billion in the first four months of 1982, he continued, and this, along with emergency import restrictions, exchange controls and new levies, offsets war costs.

Inflation for May is near 3 percent, a sharp drop from January's 11 percent, and Alemann said he expects his anti-inflation program to continue to work in spite of the war.

When the conflict is over, he added, the restrictions will be dropped so his economic liberalization program can be resumed.

The crisis, tragic as it is, could leave beneficial effects, he said.

"Argentina has shown social discipline, with no excesses, no harsh words," he explained. "There was no big hullabaloo when we had victories, no sad words at losses. Sometimes these things act as cathartics."

Elected To DECA Post

Vickie Ellis of Farmville Central High School was elected state vice president of the Distributive Education Clubs of America at the DECA leadership conference held in Asheville recently.

She will represent the state club at the national convention next month.

Farmville Central's DECA scored high in competition with other chapters. Its winners included:

J.T. Willoughby, first place in the Human Relations Event with Jay Tyson as runner-up; Karen Liverman, runner-up in the Selling-Product and Service Technology Event and proficiency winner; Sheila Pridden, Kim Owens, Martha Satterwaite, Valerie Thompson and Mary Stoddard, proficiency winners in the Restaurant Marketing Series Event.

A Creative Marketing Project Chapter Manual designed by Martha McNair, Karen Liverman and Cheryl Edwards was state runnerup and is eligible for national competition.

Farmville Central also received the Three-Star Roses Chapter Award which is given to the chapter with the highest number of points earned for local activities.

Endorsed For Judgeship Post

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's Republican Senators have endorsed former New Hanover County attorney James C. Fox, 53, to fill a vacant U.S. District Court judgeship.

Sen. John East and Sen. Jesse Helms recommended Fox to President Reagan for the post that has been vacant since its creation in 1978.

An East aide, Jerry Woodruff, says if Reagan accepts the recommendation, Fox's nomination for the Eastern North Carolina post will go to the senate Judiciary Committee for review. Committee approval will move the nomination to the Senate floor.

Life As It's Lived

A Star Was Born, But That Was A Year Ago

By GAIL MICHAELS

Last year Meg sang two numbers and recited a poem in her preschool's graduation. This annual production is no fly-by-night affair. It is rehearsed meticulously, and the teacher impresses upon children and parents alike the importance of the venture.

Anyway, Meg's part in the program made her an overnight sensation. She not only belted out "My Favorite Things" with the intensity and accent (if not the exact melody) of Julie Andrews, but her rendition of the Siamese Cat Song from "Lady and the Tramp" made it obvious that she had a natural talent for high comedy.

The moment graduation was over, she was surrounded by a crowd of admiring fans. For weeks people would come up to her in stores and congratulate her for her sterling performance.

She basked in the attention. "Oh, Mommy," she would say, "they were so impressed!"

So when her former teacher called her this year to ask if she could give the welcoming speech, she was determined to accept.

I was not as enthusiastic. "But Meg, that's a bad weekend for us. It will be Zachary's birthday, and we may be out of town. Besides, your teacher wants me to write your speech, and I'm very busy right now."

She patted my arm reassuringly. "You can do it if you try; I know you can. Just think like the Little Engine That Could."

"But you'll have to practice every day," I said, playing upon her disinclination to disciplined activity.

"Oh, I don't mind." In the end, I gave in and rearranged my schedule in order to write her speech and leave graduation night free. Meg practiced diligently, and within two days she had learned her part by heart.

"People are going to love it," she sighed. "I probably won't be able to breathe for the crowd."

I didn't want her to be too disappointed. "Honey," I said, trying to prepare her, "this isn't like last year ... This is just a short speech, and although I'm certain that the audience will think you're wonderful, they probably won't be rushing up to compliment you as they did last year."

"You mean, my part is not real important?"

"Of course it is. You're not the star of the show this year, but you play a very important part. Even very great actors and actresses don't always get starring roles. But they accept smaller parts and they do their best because they know that each part is necessary to make a show good and that everyone else in the show is depending on them. Do you understand?"

"Yes," she said in a resigned voice. "But I'd still rather be a star."

At 75, Inventor Sees Busy Life

By DEBBY HALE

Associated Press Writer
HOPE, Ark. (AP) He got rich off loudspeakers, put three pianos in his living room and collected patents the way some people guzzle beer — which, by the way, is among the cargo on a model train he runs in a backyard shed.

At 75, he's the namesake, owner and president of Paul Klipsch and Associates, a leading loudspeaker manufacturing company. In 1941, he patented the 4-foot, 125-pound Klipschorn — a three-sided speaker that fits in a corner to produce more sound.

He holds 26 patents on everything from geological exploration methods to cornerhorn speakers, has owned nine planes, wears three watches at the same time, has built a scale model of the Milwaukee Railroad and draws diagrams when he talks the way others make gestures. "Rolling Stone" magazine said he was a fanatic scientist, a pilot, a marksman, a millionaire, a mad genius.

Born in Indiana, Klipsch moved to Hope in 1941 because the military assigned him to the Southwest Army Ordnance Proving Ground where he helped test ammunition.

"During World War II, I met a man who was quite wealthy," he said. The man had hired a carpenter to build a loudspeaker based on published drawings by Klipsch, who says his highest high-school grade was a D. "I patched up his holes, and he got his speaker working, and he thought I was a genius."

"About 1943, I told my old boss: 'Don't save my old job. I'm going to manufacture loudspeakers after the war.'"

Begun in a tin shed, his business now spans five buildings on 20 acres and employs 80 people.

Blacks In South Have A Large Untapped Vote

ATLANTA (AP) — The Voter Education Project, reporting that one-third of the counties in 11 Southern states have black populations of at least 27 percent, says black voter drives "could greatly influence Southern politics."

Richard A. Hudlin, VEP's research director, said Thursday that 1980 census figures show that one in every 13 Southern counties has a black majority.

The organization, which works to increase minority political participation, said, "Numerous opportunities are available in the South for meaningful voter registration and voter turnout activities which could greatly influence Southern politics."

Georgia has 90 counties with black populations of 27 percent or higher, the largest number of any Southern state, said Hudlin said.

Following Georgia are Mississippi with 57 counties, Virginia with 47, North Carolina with 42, Louisiana with 37, South Carolina with 33, Alabama with 30, Arkansas with 22, Texas with 9, Tennessee with 7 and Florida with 5.

South Carolina has the largest percentage of counties with black populations of 27 percent or higher, with 72 percent, the study found. Mississippi has 70 percent, Louisiana 58 percent, Georgia 57 percent, Alabama 45 percent, North Carolina 42 percent, Virginia 35 percent, Arkansas 29 percent, Florida and Tennessee 7 percent each and Texas 4 percent.

Mississippi has the most majority black counties, with 22. Georgia has 20, South Carolina 12, Alabama 10, Virginia 9, Louisiana and North Carolina 6 each, Arkansas 3, Tennessee 2, Florida 1 and Texas 0. Mississippi also leads in the percentage of majority black counties, with 27 percent, the VEP said. South Carolina has 26 percent, Alabama 15 percent, Georgia 13 percent, Louisiana 9 percent, Virginia 7 percent, North Carolina 6 percent, Arkansas 4 percent, Tennessee 2 percent and Florida 1 percent.

Mini Marathon Seen Growing

NEW YORK (AP) — A record throng of some 6,000 women is expected to stride around the curves of Central Park this Memorial Day in New York's 11th annual L'eggs Mini Marathon.

When the event was originated in 1972, it drew only 78 entries, practically all from the New York area.

This year the 6.2-mile event for women runners will have contestants from virtually every state in the union plus numerous foreign countries such as Canada, Norway and New Zealand.

Commissions For 14 Cadets

Fourteen recent graduates of East Carolina University who were cadets in ECU's Air Force ROTC detachment have received commissions as Air Force second lieutenants.

The students, residents of North Carolina and Virginia, will be assigned to various Air Force bases to begin training in their respective fields.

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

HOW THE BIBLE VIEWS OLD AGE

WHEREVER ONE COMES ACROSS A MENTION OF OLD AGE IN THE BIBLE, IT IS TREATED WITH GREAT RESPECT. TO BIBLICAL PEOPLE, ADVANCED AGE MEANT THE GAINING OF WISDOM "...ASK THY FATHER AND HE WILL SHOW THEE, THY ELDERS AND THEY WILL TELL THEE." (DEUT. 32:7) TO THESE PEOPLE AGE WAS ALSO CONSIDERED BEAUTIFUL, "THE BEAUTY OF OLD MEN IS THEIR GRAY HEAD." (PROV. 20:29) AND OF COURSE....

...MOSES HIMSELF THUNDERED DOWN FROM THE MOUNT, THUS SAID THE LORD... "HONOR THY FATHER AND THY MOTHER THAT THY DAYS MAY BE LONG IN THE LAND WHICH THE LORD THY GOD GIVETH THEE." (EXODUS 20:12)

Agnostic Finds Faith With Art

NEW-FOUND FAITH — Sylvia Moss, actress, mother, artist, with some of her photographic work on Manhattan's East 56th Street, says through the eye of a camera she has found something he long had discredited — the reality of God. (AP Laserphoto)

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Through passageways, she made her discovery. Through doors, windows and especially through the eye of a camera, she says she found something she long had discredited — the reality of God.

"God works in funny ways to get people to respond," says Sylvia Moss. "To get me he had to use some kind of creative device. His way of pulling me into the church was the camera." Involved, too, were the frequent subjects of her pictures — those archways, portals and windows, and the question of what lay beyond them.

Ms. Moss, 46, actress, mother, artist, with some of her photographic work on exhibit this week on Manhattan's East 56th street, says that ever since her teens she had rejected religion.
But the camera "triggered my spiritual awareness," she said in an interview.

REVIVAL

Revival services will be held at Hopewell Pentecostal Holiness Church Monday through May 30 at 7:30 p.m. daily. The evangelist will be the Rev. Paul Keeter of Enfield.

break in dark treetops overhead.
"They beckon me to come through," she said. "Some are closed, some partly open, and you wonder what's beyond. It pulls you to it, beyond self. Just as in life you're drawn beyond today and tomorrow."
She regards her pictures as a kind of "small ministry to get people to see, to spell out visually the creation, how man is intermingling with it and has a responsibility for it."
"Yet now we seem so close to destroying it. The earth is God's, incredibly beautiful, his gift to us. We're the caretakers. We're renting here and we haven't been doing our job very well."

Settings for her pictures range from high Gothic arches in Manhattan churches to an old rock slave cabin in Charleston, S.C., and from Scotland to her native Kentucky.
There, at about 15, she abandoned her Presbyterian upbringing "as a bore and a lot of hypocrisy." After college she came to New York, studying in the American Theater Wing, appearing in shows.
That phase was interrupted by marriage, two daughters, a subsequent divorce and then a turn at painting and sculpting for which she began taking photographs as guides to details of subjects.
"Then it started happening," she said, citing the intimations she saw through the lens, the surprises it recorded. "From that signal, I was being pulled back to the church."
Behind a camera, she said, "you're totally involved, isolated, shut off from the rest of the world and other outside influences. It's like what the philosophers call emptying the mind so God can tap into you.

"You push the button and you're never sure what you'll get. That's the mystical part. It's the way God was pulling me back."
Of course, she added, the camera only sparked the process. "I went on to take what I'd learned and develop. Others helped on top of what I'd sensed. Once you're in the church, it's a learning experience, learning more about Jesus, about the Bible and being spiritually nourished."
Recently she made a trip back to Kentucky, stopping at the little Ludlow Presbyterian Church in which she was reared and where she'd rejected belief about 30 years before. It was a weekday and the two red front doors were locked.
She slipped around to the side and looked through a window, the memories flooding her, seeing those inner winding stairways, oak doors and aisles—passages like those typical of her work.

"I did a complete recall," she said. "It was an incredibly warm feeling. I didn't resent the place any more. I realized that all the time I actually had believed in God but hadn't seen it."

Behind a camera, she said, "you're totally involved,

Distinctively, many of her pictures in the exhibit are of openings to somewhere else, of doorways, partly shuttered windows, a slit in an ancient castle wall, a bright

$40 MILLION THEFTS? — Former Chase Manhattan Bank loan officer Michael Callandra, left, and New York realty man Marvin Roseman leave court in New York Thursday after being charged with stealing $18 million and funneling it to a Florida developer in the form of unsecured loans. Another bank officer was also charged and a warrant has been issued for the developer District Attorney Robert Morgenthau said. He added that more indictments were expected with total thefts amounting to $40 million. (AP Laserphoto)

Bank Fraud Up To $40 Million

NEW YORK (AP) — A district attorney says an investigation could turn up as much as $40 million in funds stolen from banks and funneled to a developer in unsecured loans.

Two former vice presidents of Chase Manhattan Bank in New York were charged Thursday with stealing $18 million from the bank.

Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau says he expects more indictments in a case, which he says may involve thefts totaling $40 million, including $20 million from Chase.

The pair, Michael Callandra, 52, and Jonathan Levine, 40, allegedly gave the money to a Florida developer, Irvin Freedman, 47, in the form of unsecured loans, getting money and property in return.

Callandra, Levin, and Marvin Roseman, 52, a New York realtor described only as an intermediary, pleaded innocent Thursday to grand larceny, misapplication of bank funds and falsifying bank records.

They were released in $150,000 bond each pending a hearing June 3.

Freedman, of Hallandale, Fla., failed to appear in court Thursday to answer the 94-page indictment and Morgenthau said he would seek a fugitive warrant for his arrest.

The case broke a day after it was disclosed that Chase was involved in the default by Drysdale Government Securities on more than $160 million in interest payments on bonds borrowed from major investment houses.

Jones Named To Board

MARS HILL — Dr. James G. Jones, chairman of department of Family Practice at East Carolina University's School of Medicine, is one of 13 new members named to the Mars Hill College board of advisers by the school's board of trustees recently.

The advisory board is designed to assist the college in achieving its long-range goals. All of the advisers' recommendations are channeled through the board of trustees, which remains the official policy making body for the college.

Jones, a member of Mars Hill's class of 1953, earned his bachelor of science degree from Wake Forest University and his M.D. from Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

A member of Oakmont Baptist Church, Jones is fund raising chairman for the N.C. Heart Association, a member of the legislative committee of the Pitt-Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce and is a campaign manager for the United Way.

British Attack...

Costa Mendez declared that if there is a war, "Argentina will repel it with all our courage and energy." Argentina's official Telam news agency said "all measures necessary to confront any enemy action have been taken."

British military sources said Rear Adm. John Woodward had been given two weeks to recapture the Falklands with his task force of 40 ships, 30 planes and 4,500 marines, paratroops and commandos from the estimated 9,000 Argentine soldiers dug in on the islands.

The sources said Woodward had been told the precise timing and scale of the operation were up to him. But they said he was told to try to avoid high casualties, and an all-out beach assault was considered unlikely.

Instead, British military experts said, the British force will make a string of landings and commando raids in a war of attrition to wear the bigger Argentine force down. Warships and carrier planes will bombard the Argentine positions.

Raiders will hit the 20 or so grass airstrips around the islands, trying to destroy the Argentine planes there. Battalion-size units will be landed to establish land bases for the vertical-takeoff carrier planes to use. Argentine radar bases, ammunition and fuel dumps and outposts will be hit.

Stanley "will be the final objective," said one source. "That's where most of the hardest Argentine units are located. The plan is to slowly isolate them there and squeeze them out."

Costa Mendez said Perez de Cuellar's peace effort broke down because of Britain's "absurd, anachronistic and shameful colonialism." British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher accused Argentina of "obduracy and delay, deception and bad faith."

Both sides said they agreed a cease-fire should be called, troops withdrawn and the islands placed under an interim U.N. administration.

No Charges In Cars' Collision

Greenville police made no charges in a Thursday accident. According to department reports cars driven by Letha Clark Smith of Route 5, Greenville and Frank George Muller of 102 Crestline Place collided at the intersection of Airport Road and Memorial Drive.

Police said the Smith vehicle made a left turn into the path of the Muller auto. Damage was placed at $500 to the Smith car and $200 to the Muller car.

Rose Tops Eagles For Perfect Season

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
They come few and far between, but yesterday afternoon, Rose High School's Rampants gained a 10-0 victory over Northeastern High School of Elizabeth City to complete a perfect regular season.

Now 22-0 overall and 14-0 in Big East Conference play, the league champs next face Raleigh's Millbrook High School in the first round of the State 4-A Playoffs. That game will be held Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. at Guy Smith Stadium.

"We played well today," Coach Ronald Vincent said with a smile. "I've seen Gordon (Douglas) pitch better but we made some fine defensive plays in the game.

"I feel that we've accomplished something that is about impossible to accomplish in our division — an unbeaten season. But this team set its goals at the start of the season and they've accomplished them so far. I've also got to give a hand to William Moye and Randy Phillips for the help they've given the team as coaches, too."

Douglas, who ran his record to 12-0 with the victory, wasn't on top of his game as much as he usually was. He allowed seven hits while striking out six and walking none. And although he did get into trouble from time to time, he was able to pitch out of it.

Northeastern threatened in the top of the first, as the first two batters got hits, only to watch Douglas strike out the next two and get the last on a grounder to first. In the second, the leadoff batter singled and advanced as far as third. Again in the third, the first man to bat got on, and reached third before the Rampants closed them out. That runner, however, was the last to go as far as second base.

Rose, meanwhile, took the lead in the first inning getting one run. Tom Buie led off with a single up the middle and Mont Carter doubled to center. Then, after one out, Roger Williams' sacrifice fly to right brought in Buie.

The Rampants picked up two more in the second. Curtis Evans, subbing for the injured Crowell Pope at catcher, singled up the middle, and courtesy runner Bill Johnson made it to second after he was caught in a rundown on a pickoff, only to have the ball dropped as the tag was made. He then scored on Randy Warren's triple to center. Warren came in when Keith Phillips grounded back to third and the fielder elected to try for Warren, but was too late.

Another run, the fourth, scored in the third. With two outs, Evans singled and runner Jeff Wilson scored on a double by Warren.

Rose then added two more in the fourth. Carter reached on a fielder's choice and Sammy Hodges provided a two-run blast that ran the score to 6-0.

The final four came in the fifth. Evans led off with his third hit of the game, with Johnson again running for him. Terry Smith reached on an infield hit and Bill Kittrell singled in Johnson. Phillips walked to load the bases, and Buie reached on an error, driving in Smith. Carter grounded out, scoring Kittrell, and Phillips scored on Hodges' sacrifice fly.

Evans led the Rose hitting with his three while Carter and Warren each had two. Northeastern's Martin Simpson led his team with three.

The Rampants, who also won the conference championship last year, only to lose in the first round of the playoffs to Wilmington Hoggard, 3-0, after they had been favored to win.

This year, Vincent hopes that the team will take the playoffs a little more seriously. "We have our goal: to win the state championship, but you can never tell what will happen in the playoffs. One bad game, one bad inning and you're through."

Rose, should it continue in the playoffs, has a good road to follow. The Rampants would host the first three rounds of single elimination play, then would have to travel to the site of the western champion for the best-of-three finals, should they get that far.

That road begins Tuesday night.

Chargers Face White Oak Nine

LITTLEFIELD—Ayden-Grifton, fresh off a no-hit performance by Tyrone Gay, will entertain White Oak Monday night in the opening round of the 3-A baseball playoffs.

White Oak, behind Charlie Soos four-hitter, downed North Lenoir, 8-1, Thursday in Kinston in a one-game playoff to determine the Coastal Conference playoff representative.

The Vikings and Hawks tied for the regular season title. White Oak is now 17-3, having won 10 straight coming into Monday's 8 p.m. showdown with Ayden-Grifton.

Soos struck out seven and walked five Thursday in upping his record to 6-1. The Chargers will face either Soos or Richard Sloan, who is 5-2, Monday.

Both Sloan and Soos are right-handers.

Gay, who is 8-4 this season, will start on the mound for Ayden-Grifton.

North Lenoir led, 1-0, going into the fifth yesterday before White Oak rallied for three runs with two gone in the fifth to take the lead.

Shortstop Gary Appleton struck the big blow, a two-run double. Appleton was three for three with three RBI and two doubles.

Soos was two for three with a two-run home in the sixth inning.

This is the second straight year in the playoffs for Ayden-Grifton. The Chargers lost to Roanoke Rapids, 3-0, last season in the opener of the 3-A tourney.

Rampants Pace Qualifiers In Regional Track Meet

WILSON — Henderson Vance pulled past Rose High School in the final event of the day, the mile relay and took first place in the Eastern Regional Track and Field Championships held at Wilson Pike yesterday.

Rose, which finished second with 62 points, failed to qualify its team in the mile relay, and Vance was able to inch ahead with a victory in the event, scoring 65 points.

Rose, however, qualified six individuals and a relay team for next week's state meet in Raleigh. Farmville Central and Williamston also qualified one individual each while Roanoke landed two in the finals.

Rose won three events. Chris McLawhorn took first place in the long jump with a leap of 23 feet, 2 1/2 inches. Roanoke's Sheppard finished second in the event, jumping 22 feet, 10 1/2 inches.

Edward Frazier took the championship of the 200-meter dash in 21.2 seconds.

The 880-yard relay team of Frank White, Tyrone Forbes, Roderick Harrell and Frazier took that event in 1:26.8, rounding out the Rose victories.

Kenny Smith finished second in the 1,600-meter run in 4:16, while teammate Harry Williams was third in 4:17.5. Frazier finished second in the 400-meter dash in 47.8 seconds, while Forbes was second in the 800-meter run in 1:55.6.

Farmville Central's Wesley Carmon took third place in the 100-yard dash in 10.9 seconds, while Roanoke's Donnie Wallace took third in the shot put in 56 feet, 8 1/2 inches.

Williamston's Brian Purvis rounded out area qualifiers for the state meet with a fourth place finish in the high jump with a leap of 6 feet, 8 inches.

The top four in each event qualify for the state finals.

Rose, however, missed out on two good chances to qualify others, and possibly win the meet. Erskin Evans, who was favored in the 100-meter dash, was unable to compete because of injuries which have plagued him throughout the year. Also, Williams, who is the team leader in the 3,200-meter, had to drop out of the event due to illness after his third place finish in the 1,600.

The state meet will be held next Friday at N.C. State University.

Morgan Helps Giants Wake Up With 3-1 Win

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Joe Morgan and his San Francisco teammates have been hearing a lot of boos lately at Candlestick Park. In their past eight games, they have scored just 11 earned runs, while losing five times.

"I don't worry about fan reaction or what's written in the newspapers," says Morgan, who has been slumping right along with the rest of the team. "I know what I can do. You just can't let things bother you when you're between the white lines."

Thursday, Morgan was between those lines when he proved what he could do. In the grips of a 2-for-23 slump, he singled on a 3-2 delivery from Pittsburgh reliever Rod Scurry with two out in the eighth inning, scoring two runs and giving the Giants a 3-1 victory over the Pirates.

Morgan said when the count reached 3-2, "I kind of looked around the park and saw Kent Tekulve (in the Pittsburgh bullpen) waving his cap, letting the Pirates know he was ready. So I knew if I got on base they'd bring him in to pitch to Jack Clark."

Clark had struck out three times already in the game and had only three hits in his previous 29 at-bats.

"I just looked for something to hit," Morgan said.

Around the rest of the National League, St. Louis whipped San Diego 6-3 and Chicago trimmed Los Angeles 8-3.

Although Morgan had been in a slump, he wasn't ready to panic.

"My slump wasn't really a big concern because I had been hitting the ball hard," said Morgan. "I wasn't worried because I had been making contact."

Pittsburgh took a 1-0 lead in the first on Tony Pena's RBI single, and San Francisco tied it up 1-1 in the fifth on a run-scoring ground ball by Dave Bergman. Gary Lavelle replaced San Francisco starter Rich Gale in the eighth and earned the victory.

Cards 6, Padres 3
Tito Landrum and Lonnie Smith drove in two runs apiece, and St. Louis scored four runs in the third inning to beat the Padres. Ozzie Smith drove in the first third-inning run, Lonnie Smith had an RBI on a bases-loaded walk off Chris Welsh, and Landrum batted a two-run single.

Dave LaPoint worked seven innings in his first start of the season, scattering eight hits, striking out five and walking just one. Bruce Sutter pitched the final two innings.

Al Wiggins and Terry Kennedy homered for San Diego.

Cubs 8, Dodgers 3
Ferguson Jenkins limited Los Angeles to six hits and moved within one of his 3,000th career strikeout. The Cubs pounded Fernando Valenzuela for six runs in the first two innings, including Leon Durham's two-run double and a pair of RBI singles by Keith Moreland.

Jenkins came into the contest needing nine strikeouts to join a group of six other pitchers who have fanned 3,000 batters. The 38-year-old right-hander struck out Steve Sax for the last out of the game, leaving him just short, and settled instead for his first complete game of the season and his first victory in more than a month.

Pippen Hurls Tiger Victory

EDENTON — Williamston High School's Ed Pippen hurled a one-hit shutout at Edenton last night, allowing Williamston to have a shot at the Northeastern Conference baseball title.

Tonight, Washington hosts Roanoke Rapids, the latter now just one-half game ahead of Williamston, at 7:30 p.m. Should Washington win, that would throw the league title into a tie, and a coin flip or coaches' vote would then decide which team would represent the league in the State 3-A Playoffs.

Lady Tigs Take Title

EDENTON — Williamston scored two runs in the top of the 11th inning to defeat Edenton, 7-5, and clinch the Northeastern Conference softball championship Thursday afternoon.

Edenton, which finishes up 9-7 in the league, scored three runs in the bottom of the fifth to take a 5-3 lead only to have the Lady Tigs rally for two runs in the top of the sixth to tie the game and send it into extra innings.

Neither team scored until the 11th when the Lady Tigs pushed across two runs and then held Edenton with a run in the bottom of the inning to win.

Williamston ends the regular season at 15-2 overall and 14-2 in the conference and will represent the Northeastern Conference in the playoffs.

Wanda Price led Williamston with three hits in five at bats. Gail Smith was three for six. Wanda Liverman was three for five for Edenton.

Pippen struck out 15 and walked six along the way to his one-hit victory. But opposing hurler Al Bunch did almost as well. He gave up three hits, fanned 12 and walked one.

Williamston grabbed the lead with a run in the third. Roger Barber singled and Tommy Wynne ran for him, stealing second. He scored when Gray Thomas reached on an error.

In the fifth, Williamston added an insurance run. Pippen singled and stole second, moving to third when Reggie Horne reached on an error. Mike Peele then came on to run for Pippen, and he and Horne worked a double steal with the former scoring.

The other Williamston run came in the sixth.

The Tigers finish the regular season with a 14-7 overall mark and an 11-5 league record.

Jamesville Is Champ

WASHINGTON — Bath defeated Jamesville, 8-4, Thursday in a one-game playoff to determine the No. 1 seed from the Tobacco Belt Conference for the softball playoffs.

The win gives Bath the conference's top seed and leaves the Lady Bullets with the No. 2 seed.

Jamesville will play either Gates County or Currituck in the opening round of the playoffs. The game will be on the road and has tentatively been set for Tuesday.

Further details of yesterday's game was not available.

Ripken Takes Out Frustrations On Twins

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Cal Ripken Jr. had been in a horrible slump until last week, but like any good Baltimore Oriole he took his frustrations out on the Minnesota Twins.

The 21-year-old rookie third baseman had a single and a double, driving in three runs, as the Orioles whipped the Twins 6-0 Thursday night on a five-hitter by Scott McGregor.

Ripken has gone 15-for-37 while hitting safely in nine of his last 10 games, a .405 streak that raised his average from .165 to .243. His three RBIs helped Baltimore defeat Minnesota for the 14th time in the last 15 meetings and the Orioles are 18-3 against the Twins since 1980.

"Every day I didn't get a hit my confidence sank lower and lower," Ripken said. "It was starting to get to me. I was trying so many different things — taking everybody's advice and getting confused." He said he also started to uppercute the ball "because home runs were expected of me. I had to realize that I had to go back to what I did to get here. I went back to the beginning and started over. Now I'm driving the ball and my bat is quicker."

In other American League games, the Detroit Tigers clobbered the Oakland A's 11-3; the Boston Red Sox walloped the Seattle Mariners 11-2, the Milwaukee Brewers ended California's six-game winning streak by defeating the Angels 4-1 and the Toronto Blue Jays blanked the Cleveland Indians 2-0.

After getting three hits on opening day, Ripken had only four in his next 55 at-bats as his average plummeted to .117.

"What he was told," said Manager Earl Weaver, "was to get rid of his .139 batting average and do something to keep himself in the lineup."

A homer by Ken Singleton, Ripken's RBI double and a sacrifice fly produced three runs in the second inning off Pete Redfern. An RBI double by Joe Nolan and a two-run single by Ripken made it 6-0 in the fourth and McGregor rolled to his seventh straight victory over the Twins.

"Six runs makes it a lot easier," he said. "You can establish a different kind of game and go after them. I had a good fast ball, which I haven't had for a month. It seemed to be going by them early, and I thought it was the dusk, but I kept throwing it and getting them out."

Tigers 11, A's 3

Designated hitter Mike Ivie drove in four runs with a pair of homers and Larry Herndon had three singles and two triples as Detroit won its eighth consecutive game behind Milt Wilcox's seven-hit pitching. The Tigers also won eight in a row from April 17-24. Ivie's home runs came off Tom Underwood and Bob Owchinko.

"I'm just taking it day by day. I feel like I've got my timing now," said Ivie, who was signed May 6 by the Tigers after he had been released by the Houston Astros. "Of course, it helped that both those guys I took out tonight were ex-Minnesota League pitchers. I had seen them before and knew a little bit what to expect."

Red Sox 11, Mariners 2

Jim Rice drove in five runs with a homer and double, Rich Gedman belted a three-run shot and Carl Yastrzemski hit his 432nd career homer to back John Tudor's nine-hit pitching. The Red Sox launched their 14-hit assault against rookie Mike Moore, who gave up three home runs in the first four innings.

Rice, whose average is up to .282 after a slow start, says he still isn't satisfied. "That's one pitch," he said of his home run. "I'm still not seeing the ball the way I'd like to. I'm not making solid contact, not driving the ball well."

Brewers 4, Angels 1

Don Money's two-run double and Moose Hass' six-hit pitching helped Milwaukee win for only the third time in the last 10 games. Money lined a shot down the left field line in the first inning to score Paul Molitor, who had singled, and Cecil Cooper, who doubled. Ben Oglivie's bloop double scored Money. It was Oglivie's first RBI since

Blue Jays 2, Indians 0

Jim Clancy stopped Cleveland on eight hits while Ernie Whitt and Damaso Garcia delivered run-scoring singles in the seventh inning. Al Woods singled to start the Toronto seventh against Larry Sorensen, advanced on a grounder and scored on Whitt's single. Whitt took second on the throw to the plate and scored when Garcia drilled a single off the second base bag.

Chicod 10

Bethel 4

CHICOD—Chicod defeated Bethel, 10-4, Thursday in a Junior High baseball game.

Michel Elks picked up the win for Chicod, which ends the season at 11-2. Bethel finishes up at 7-4.

Randy Mills, Rusty Dixon and Bryan Evans all had two hits for Chicod.

Todd Lynch and Lenny Langley had three hits for Bethel.

Coming In Hard

Toronto's Al Woods slides into home, spikes high, to score what proved to be the winning run in the seventh inning as Cleveland catcher tags late.

Woods scored from second on teammate Ernie Whitt's single to give the Blue Jays a 1-0 lead. The Jays won, 2-0. (AP Laserphoto)

Sigel In Semifinals

PIEHURST, N.C. (AP)—Jay Sigel, the 1979 British Amateur champion, defeated David Kargetta 7 and 6 Thursday to reach the semifinals of the 82nd Annual Men's North and South Amateur golf tournament.

Sigel, of Berwyn, Pa., seeded fourth, remained the only seeded player in the tournament by eliminating the Clearwater, Fla., native.

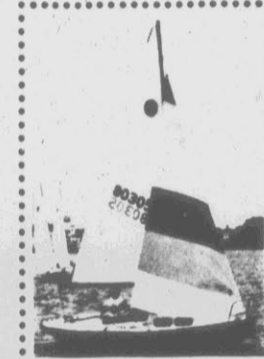

Keith Clearwater, of Provo, Utah, who eliminated top-seeded Corey Pavin of Oxnard, Calif., in earlier match play, advanced Thursday with a 3 and 2 victory over Kevin Sullivan of Williamsburg, Va.

Rose Girls Win Finale

Rose High School got a two-run homer from Janet Mizelle in the bottom of the seventh inning yesterday to pull out a 10-9 softball victory over Northeastern of Elizabeth City.

The game was the final one for the season for both teams. Rose finishes with a 7-7 Big East Conference record and a 9-10 overall mark. Northeastern ends up 5-9 in conference play.

Rose grabbed the lead in the first inning, scoring four times as Niansa Outlaw hit a three-run homer. Northeastern got on the board in the third with two, and added a third in the top of the fourth. Outlaw again struck in the fourth for Rose with a two-run shot, as the Lady Ram-pants scored three times for a 7-3 lead.

The Lady Eagles, however, came up with three in the sixth, as compared to just one for Rose. Northeastern then pushed over three in the top of the seventh for a 9-8 lead, but Rose struggled back.

With two away, Frances Barnhill singled and Mizelle followed with her home run, giving Rose the win.

Mizelle led the Rose hitting with three, while Linda Winstead, Barnhill, Outlaw and Sheila Carmon each had two. Covington had three to lead Northeastern.

1st State Bank 9

Hendrix & Dail scored five runs in the fourth and seventh innings to whip First State Bank, 17-9, Thursday in a Prep League baseball game.

First State led, 2-1, after the first inning but H&D tied the game in the top of the second and then went ahead with a run in the third.

But, First State regained the lead in the home half of the third with three runs. Three walks, a sacrifice fly by Tim Bland and a run-scoring single by Chris Coble highlighted the inning.

H&D erased the deficit in the fourth with a five-run outburst. Greg Jones singled home one run and Jason Galloway two in the inning.

First State came back with a run in the fourth to cut the gap to 8-6 and then scored three runs in the fifth to take a 9-8 lead.

H&D regained the lead in the sixth with four runs and then sealed the win with four runs in the seventh.

Anthony Cobb doubled home one run and Galloway and Tim Clark sacrificed home a run each to spark the outburst. In the seventh, Clay Young tripled home one run and two other runs scored on errors.

Cobb had three hits and three RBI for H&D. Hunter Clark also had three hits for H&D.

Axel Smith had three hits for First State while Bland, Coble and Paul Kelly had two hits each. Kelly had an inside-the-park home run.

Pepsi-Cola 6

True Value used a three-run home run by Bobby Bell to carry it to a 12-6 victory over Pepsi-Cola Thursday in a Tar Heel Little League baseball game.

True Value led, 1-0, after the first inning and upped its lead to 3-0 in the second on consecutive singles by Chris Bender, Bell and Gina Parrott.

Pepsi scored twice in the third to cut the deficit to 4-2.

But, True Value countered with five runs in the bottom of the inning to all but seal the win.

With one gone and the bases loaded, Bender singled home a pair of runs to up the lead to 6-2. Bell then slammed his home run to up the margin to 9-2.

Pepsi scored four runs in the fifth, sparked by Mike Kelly's two-run double, to cut the gap to 9-6. Again, however, True Value answered the challenge, scoring three runs in the bottom of the inning.

The big blow in the inning was a run-scoring double by Bender, who finished the day with four hits. Bell had three hits.

No one had more than one hit for Pepsi.

Coca-Cola 10

Sportsworld 2

Coca-Cola erupted for eight runs in the third inning and went on to capture a 10-2 victory over Sportsworld Thursday in a North State Little League baseball game.

Coke jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first when Tony Evans hit a home run to lead off the game. Coke then scored eight runs in the third to push its lead to 9-0.

The big blows in the inning were two-run home runs by Walter Gatlin and Evans and a run-scoring triple by Sean Frelke.

Coke scored its final run in the fourth. Sportsworld scored a run in the third and the fourth, the run in the fourth coming on a home run by John Thordson.

Evans was three for five to lead Coke. Eddie White had two hits for Coke. No one had more than one hit for Sportsworld.

Simpson 10

Chicod 0

CHICOD—Simpson rolled to a 10-0 victory over Chicod Thursday in a Southern Pitt Little League game.

T. Daniels hurled a three-hitter for Simpson, which ended up with only two hits itself.

The big blow in the game was Ervin Hardee's two-run home run.

Year Of The Laker Continues As L.A. Wins Coin Toss For Pick

NEW YORK (AP) — It's been a dream year for the Los Angeles Lakers — almost.

With the Western Conference championship and the first pick in the National Basketball Association college draft wrapped up, only one hurdle remains: the NBA championship finals, where the Lakers will meet either the Boston Celtics or the Philadelphia 76ers.

Grace In Putt Win

Duane Grace shot a final-round 33 to finish with a five-under-par 67 to win the Thursday Nite Putt golf tournament at the local Putt Putt course.

Grace was third after the first round but came back to win the tournament in the second round as the leaders faltered.

Mike Shane, who had a three-stroke lead at the end of the first round, shot a two-over 38 to finish one stroke behind Grace with a 68.

Randy Edwards, second after the first round, dropped into a tie for third with Robbie Moye. Both finished with 71s. Moye took third in a sudden-death playoff.

John Nichols dropped from third to fifth in the second round, finishing with a one-over-par 73.

Eighteen players competed in the tournament, with 10 in the running for the top spot after the first round.

"It's been Laker year so far," club executive Jerry West said Thursday after Los Angeles won the coin toss from the San Diego Clippers for the first selection in the June 29 draft.

"I told (Coach) Pat Riley if we could win four more games, it would be perfect," West said, referring to the upcoming best-of-seven series.

West said the Lakers will choose either James Worthy of North Carolina, Dominique Wilkins of Georgia or Terry Cummings of DePaul. All three forwards left college before their senior years to turn pro.

"We won't trade our pick," West said. "All three are outstanding kids. We have pretty much determined who we'll take. We have them ranked, but we have to visit the coaches and really zero in on one player."

The player most coveted by the Lakers, 7-foot-4 center Ralph Sampson, decided last Friday to remain at the University of Virginia for his senior year. Before Sampson's announcement, Los Angeles owner Jerry Buss had offered San Diego owner Donald Sterling $6 million to guarantee the Lakers the first pick. The Clippers rejected the offer.

The coin toss is designed to benefit the teams with the poorest records in the Eastern and Western divisions. The Lakers landed the Eastern Conference's No. 1 pick from the Cleveland Cavaliers, the team with the worst record in the East, in a 1980 trade that sent Don Ford and the Lakers' 1980 No. 1 pick to Cleveland for Butch Lee and the Cavs' top selection in 1982.

Clippers' General Manager Ted Podleski said San Diego also is ready to select Cummings, Worthy and Wilkins, even though the team badly needs a guard.

"There was no way we could lose," Podleski said. "As far as I'm concerned, any of the three players are satisfactory ... Our greatest need is in the backcourt, but that doesn't mean we will draft to fill the need. We are thankful and feel blessed we can get any of those (forwards)."

Worthy, a 6-foot-9 second team All-American, scored a career-high 28 points when North Carolina beat Georgetown for the NCAA title. Worthy, likely to be the Lakers' choice, waited until Sampson announced his intentions before deciding to turn pro.

Cummings, 6-foot-10, averaged 12 rebounds and more than 20 points per game

Stephenson Gets Fine From LPGA

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer
DALLAS (AP) — Jan Stephenson has been informed she will not be suspended by the Ladies Professional Golf Association for playing in Japan instead of the Atlanta tournament last week.

Instead, she has been fined $3,000 by LPGA Executive Director John Laupheimer, who announced the action Thursday in Houston.

"Jan Stephenson was in clear violation of...our regulations when she defended her championship at the World Ladies Golf Tournament in Tokyo while our Lady Michelob tournament was in progress," he said.

"Our rules permit players one free exemption per season. Stephenson had already used her exemption. She understands the rule exists to insure the strongest possible fields for our official tournaments. Therefore, the fine."

Ted Harris, information director of the LPGA, said, "She could have been suspended but she won't be."

"To fine me is fair but not $3,000," Stephenson said here Thursday. "That's the first time a top player has been fined that much. I think he (Laupheimer) just wanted to set an example."

"I had no choice but to go to Japan. I had contracts over there."

Stephenson said the Atlanta sponsors would not give her an exemption to go to Japan, despite the fact "I played there (Atlanta) year after year."

"The Japanese pay big appearance money and I had my contracts," she said. "The commissioner is new and he couldn't show favoritism."

Besides the problems with the LPGA, Stephenson has filed a petition in Fort Worth seeking to void or annul her marriage to Larry Kolb. The trial could take place as early as next Monday.

The petition filed in Tarrant County District Court, claims Stephenson is still married to Eddie Vossler.

"I can't say anything about the case," said the blue-eyed, blonde Australian. "I haven't done anything wrong...it just surprises me how easy things can get into such a mess."

Two weeks ago, a judge in Birmingham, Ala., dismissed Kolb's petition claiming Stephenson was mentally ill and should undergo psychiatric treatment.

Stephenson created a furor among some LPGA tour members several years ago because of what some thought was a provocative pose in Fairway, the LPGA magazine.

She said "My personal problems are hurting my game. I'm trying to take it as a joke. I just want to be left alone."

Desire Wilson Short On Time

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Desire Wilson is running out of time and engines in her bid to become the second woman to start in the Indianapolis 500.

"We're down to our last engine," said the 28-year-old South African native who now calls England home. "We've lost three engines here this month. The one we have in the car now has about 250 miles, so it's getting a bit tricky now."

Wilson's Eagle is powered by a Cosworth engine, which sells for more than $40,000.

"We sure could use another engine," said her husband Alan, a former racer who now is general manager and director of Brands Hatch Race Track in England. "But we just don't have the money and Dez will have to qualify and race with the same engine. They're designed to go some 500 miles without being overhauled, so we face quite a challenge."

The team is still seeking a formula for more speed. Wilson was just under 192 mph in practice Thursday and she says she's finding her effort to join Janet Guthrie as the only woman to start here a little frustrating.

"It's just that we've been at it for two weeks. That's a long time. I've never had so much practice and so much time to sort out a car before. Usually it's a quick 20 minute session and you've got to put up with the car as it is," she said.

Wilson said she has no idea what it will take to join the 22 already qualified in the 33-car field for the May 30 race.

"It is quite a process here. First there's the task of passing your rookie test, driving at a controlled speed when you really want to go out. There are cars moving by you at much quicker speeds and you've got to be alert all the time," said Wilson. "But, that's Indianapolis and that's why its so famous because it has a system that everyone has to go through."

The Speedway has been more of a challenge than the veteran of Formula 1 Aurora cars — year-old Formula One racers — anticipated, she said.

Wilson is the first woman to drive at Indianapolis since Guthrie made the race three consecutive years from 1977-1979. While Guthrie received a cold reception from some at the Speedway, the 5-foot-5 newcomer was accepted immediately by the insiders of the sport.

Three-time Indy winners Bobby and Al Unser both have helped set up the car and given suggestions about driving at Indianapolis.

Bobby, the defending champion here and one of the people who did not get along with Guthrie, said, "She (Wilson) is a real racer. I think she'll do a good job here."

Wilson impressed many Wednesday when her Eagle got loose going into the second turn. She took a wild ride at more than 180 mph, as the car looped around 1 1/2 times, skidded more than 800 feet and came to rest in the infield grass.

The car was towed back and, just minutes later, Wilson was back on the track and turned in her fastest lap of the day at 192.472 mph.

"She needed to find the limit of the car, and now she has," explained crew chief Derek Mower. "I was proud of her because she went right back out there and stood on it. I guess it didn't affect her much."

Wilson made one qualifying attempt last weekend. But after three laps in the 190 plus range, she pulled off the track.

"I didn't feel 190 was competitive and the car wasn't handling. I thought we would be able to find some more speed this week," she said.

Practice continued Thursday at Indianapolis, with Wilson and the other non-qualified drivers seeking that elusive mile or two that could be the difference from being in the field.

Dale Whittington had the top speed of the day at 198.807. The time was the best of the month for the 22-year-old from Orlando, Fla., who hopes to give his family the distinction of being the first to have three brothers start in the same Indy 500.

Wilson worked out Thursday under the eye of her husband, who said he was "helping out, watching, observing and keeping out of the way."

The two have been married for seven years and Wilson, 35, said he gave up racing because "you can't afford to run two cars in one family."

Wilson said he experiences the same emotions watching his wife that he experienced in the driver's seat.

"Every time she gets in the car I don't feel an awful lot different than when I got in. I was apprehensive, nervous, uptight. It's exactly the same," he said, adding that he feels the same emotions even at practice."

NCAA Expected To Okay Rules

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — The National Collegiate Athletic Association's basketball rules committee will probably approve the Atlantic Coast Conference's decision to experiment with a 30-second shot clock and a three-point field goal next year, according to a committee member.

"I see no problem in the committee granting the ACC permission to conduct the experiment," said Ed Steitz, a 25-year member of the panel who acts as its secretary.

ACC coaches and officials approved the rules changes Tuesday at the conclusion of their six-day business meeting in Myrtle Beach, S.C.

Steitz warmly endorsed the ACC action in a telephone interview from Springfield, Mass., where he is athletic director at Springfield College.

"I applaud the ACC," he told the Greenville Piedmont. "We're not interested in just maintaining the status quo, like so many people are," he said. "We're interested in what is best for the game, now and in the future. We encourage conferences to research things like the shot clock and the three-point field goal."

The rules committee has also given the Big Ten permission to implement a three-point field goal from 21 feet into its conference games. And, the Southern Conference, which has used 22 feet as the boundary for its three-point shots, has been invited by the rules panel to try 21 feet next year.

"The Big Ten and ACC carry a lot of weight; we're delighted they are conducting research," said Steitz. "If research is successful in the bigger conferences, others will be more likely to follow."

"The committee doesn't want to make changes just for the sake of changing. But we see some problem areas that may eventually decrease the interest."

"We're constantly concerned about one thing: maintaining the balance between offense and defense. We're concerned that scoring went down drastically last season, said the NCAA committee member.

"The North Carolina-Virginia game focused a lot of attention on the situation," he said, recalling the nationally televised ACC tournament championship game in which the Tar Heels held the ball nearly 13 minutes of the second half, a strategy Virginia helped inspire by staying in a passive zone defense.

The ACC experiment will control stalls, except during the final four minutes of a game and in overtimes, when the shot clock will be turned off. It also should discourage zone defenses that allow perimeter shots because better shooters regularly make 20-foot jumpers and coaches will be less inclined to zone if such shots count three points.

"Some people feel 21 feet is a bit too far," said Steitz. "It'll be curious to how the three-pointers works from beyond 19 feet. It should bring the smaller man back into the game; it will bring back the home run of basketball. Some people think the dunk is the home run, but I think it takes more skill to shoot from outside."

Watson Excited

By ED SHEARER
AP Sports Writer
ATLANTA (AP) — Tom Watson wasn't able to finish his day's work, but he saw enough to remain excited about his golf game.

"I'm hitting the ball 25-30 yards farther with my driver," Watson said Thursday after lightning forced suspension of play before completion of the first round of the $300,000 Georgia-Pacific Atlanta Golf Classic.

Watson and 53 other players were still on the course when tournament officials called off action for the day at 7:05 p.m. EDT and were forced to complete their round early this morning. There had been a one hour, 23 minute suspension because of an electrical storm earlier in the day.

Watson, a two-time Masters and three-time British Open champion, stood at 4-under-par with one hole to play.

That left him two shots behind the early co-leaders, Larry Nelson and Keith Fergus, who completed rounds of 6-under-par 66 well before the first suspension.

Two others were within striking distance of the lead at 5-under-par — Scott Hoch, who won at New Orleans last month, and Joe Inman, winless since 1976. Hoch still had four holes to play and Inman three.

Howard Twitty and Great Britain's Peter Oosterhuis, the 1981 Canadian Open champion, completed rounds of 67 on the tight, hilly 7,007-yard, par 72 Atlanta Country Club course.

Parsons Denies Romances Had Role In Resignation

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Former University of South Carolina women's basketball coach Pam Parsons denies that she was forced to resign because of allegations she was romantically involved with players.

"If that were the situation, it was not something that I said to the university is the situation. It is not something the university said to me," she told a radio call-in show audience Thursday evening.

But she repeatedly refused to say flatly whether the allegations of homosexuality themselves were true, insisting that her private life was her own business.

"I don't know whether you can label me that way," she said. "I would label myself as a person who has experienced a variety of things in this lifetime. I became closer to women because I worked so much with them and they were the ones that gave me very good support."

Parsons appeared on the WIS radio "Sportline" show with station Sports Director Jim Forrest and News Director Bob McAlister.

It was her first public interview since published reports following her December departure from USC that she had engaged in homosexual relationships with players.

"I feel as if I was indicted, tried and convicted in the media," said Parsons, adding that the charges had wrecked her personal life.

"I think it's the worst thing that can happen to anybody and the most important thing in life is not to let it be the end of you," she said. "My tainted name has made me a household word."

But Parsons said she hoped to use her notoriety to help women's sports by making a public speaking tour next year to talk about her experience and encourage potential woman athletes.

She said the real reason she got into trouble at USC was that women are not conditioned to play or coach team sports, and the public and the media don't understand woman athletes.

Being a lady and a coach at the same time, she said, meant trying to fulfill two roles that sometimes conflicted. When she encountered problems, she said, "I either withdrew, cried or stomped my feet. I did all the things that a woman does."

And she said women athletes must struggle with a homosexual stereotype, even if suspicions about their sexuality don't always come out in the open as they did with her.

"That has been the inference for as long as I've been in women's sports," she said, adding that women won't be able to compete equally in the sports world until this changes.

Parsons said an agreement she made as part of her contract settlement with USC barred her from divulging details of her departure from the school.

She said she had been a good coach, putting together winning seasons and nationally ranked teams during her career at Old Dominion College in Virginia and later at USC.

Her mistake, she said, was not being tough enough, allowing herself too much emotional involvement with the players.

"There are a lot of things I did off the court that are memories to me in terms of being a mother," she said, explaining that she opened her home to girls who were lonely or altered clothing for players who were too big for standard sizes.

"I never tried to influence them in any way about their values," she said. "I just tried to do for them what we do in men's sports in terms of being foster parents. I was a foster parent for 12 girls or whoever needed it."

When the station opened the show up to callers, a number of critical listeners phoned, but most praised Parsons' record and her willingness to speak out.

"I love the state of South Carolina," she told one caller. "I enjoyed representing it. I enjoyed my work at the university, and I'm sorry it ended."

Droves Of Jobless Wind Up In Bunkhouse 'Life'

By KEVIN NOBLET
Associated Press Writer
HARVEY, La. (AP) — Don Murphy's debt to the company grows a little with each cigarette he smokes, each beer he drinks, each sandwich he eats. He knows he'll pay it back in sweat but says things could be worse.

"It's better than sleeping out in the street and robbing people," said Murphy, 24, of Boston. He shrugged as he sat in the restaurant-bar that gives him ample meals of soft-shell crabs and red beans — and keeps the chits for his bosses to claim-against his pay.

He's among the droves of jobless, sometimes rootless men, attracted from points north to Louisiana by stories of ready work and good pay.

He's among the many who end up in the labor pool bunkhouses that flourished with the oil boom. They're referred there by word of mouth, charity groups and even state employment-files.

A legal version of the "company store" system, bunkhouses are unregulated in Louisiana where officials place them in the same category as boarding houses. No license is needed.

The trade-off is simple but loosely defined. The men usually arrive broke, and are given the shelter, food, hardhats and steel-toed workboots they need right away — each at a charge deducted from the paycheck they get later.

Some companies, including B & H Applicators and Labor Services Inc. here, will even advance their workers money for a little beer, cigarettes, toothpaste and shampoo.

The busiest and most frugal worker can clear $100 or $200 a week after deductions when work is plentiful.

But deductions can sometimes wipe out every penny when work is scarce. Right now it is.

"This is a sad situation," said Don Schnepf, manager of B & H. Its office consists of two desks behind a corner partition in Bob and Louis' Restaurant in this New Orleans suburb.

"We've got guys begging us to give them 60 hours a week. We're lucky if we can get them 30," said Schnepf who calls it a casual labor business.

Most of the jobs contracted by the bunkhouses are linked to oil and gas drilling. Usually it's dirty and backbreaking work — chipping stubborn paint from a tanker in the nearby Mississippi River or loading thick drill pipe onto a grimy barge.

Schnepf said he noted in mid-April a sudden and severe cutback in oil-related business. He pointed only yards away to the Harvey Canal, where scores of barges sat idle along the pipeyards and loading docks.

"Everything stopped dead, practically overnight," he said. "We did $3,900 worth of labor last week. We need $10,000 just to break even."

Schnepf says he goes out and solicits work for the men he takes on as full-time employees. Now the company is turning would-be workers away, leaving about half the 50 bunkhouse beds empty.

"We try to rotate it so that in these hard, hard times everybody gets a few days a week so they can make their expenses and have a few bucks in their pockets," he said.

No one keeps track of how many bunkhouses there are in Louisiana, or how many people they employ. State officials say that drilling boom towns such as Morgan City, Houma, Venice and Harvey probably each have about a half-dozen.

Some bunkhouses attract the shiftless or violent. Deep into the Oil Patch that spreads west from here to Texas, bunkhouse killings occur sporadically.

They are often criticized as havens for men running from the law. Jailhouse author Jack Henry Abbott was captured at a Morgan City bunkhouse after he stabbed a waiter to death in New York City.

Some labor pool operators are accused of bilking the workers, charging high fees for rent, food and workclothes to create a condition of permanent debt.

"I've even seen them deduct 35 cents a day for a knife, fork and spoon," said Michael Moreau of the Travelers Aid Society in New Orleans.

Yet Moreau said his group refers many men to the bunkhouses.

"From our point of view, they're providing a service," he said. "If it wasn't for these bunkhouses, some of these people would be sleeping in the streets."

The workers here said B & H was one of the better companies, charging $25 a week for a bed, $2.95 for an ample supper, and not mistreating its workers about what they were getting into.

"A lot of people see them as milking us," Murphy said. "But they're helping us."

He said it was an improvement over Boston, where the jobs in machine shops had dried up. In his idle time he ran with a bad crowd to be in trouble anymore."

Terry Roach, 23, said he faced a similar dilemma in Walhalla, S.C., because of layoffs in the textile and cotton industry.

He hitchhiked here in early May, his pockets holding $10 and the name of a company somebody said would give him an offshore job. It didn't pan out, so he showed up at B & H.

"They gave me something to eat and a place to stay," Roach said. "Right now, I can't have no plans. I'm just barely surviving."

Job Opening Needs A Strong Stomach

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The state of California has a vacant position that requires only part-time work but perhaps a strong stomach: gas chamber inspector.

The government has been seeking a qualified inspector of the gas chamber at San Quentin Prison for more than a month.

So far, there has been no response to advertisements in the "California State Contracts Register," the semi-monthly publication of service and construction contracts available from state government.

One reason for the lack of response could be the ad's erroneous listing under "office equipment."

San Quentin spokesman Bob Means said future editions of the register will place the ad under "construction trades."

Means said the gas chamber inspector is strictly a part-time job, checking the apple-green chamber about once every three months for leaks and other possible malfunctions.

"Even though we have not had an execution in a number of years, the gas chamber has to be kept in proper functioning order," he said. "It would be very embarrassing to have a malfunction during an execution."

Swiss Mountain Folk Are Still Digging Out Of Winter's Snow

By GEORGE JAHN
Associated Press Writer
GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Winter's end is near for the 40 residents of the mountain village of Goeschneralp. Sometime toward the end of May, snowplows will break through from down below and the annual five months of isolation will be over.

In late November, blowing snow starts blocking the only road and by January the snowbacks are 18 feet deep. They usually are still half that deep by late May, when the plows start to clear them away.

Goeschneralp with its six houses, several barns, a church and an avalanche shelter on a central mountain plateau 5,445 feet above sea level is the only Swiss village to be isolated by snow for so long each year.

Its inhabitants are related by blood or marriage, from the youngest 2-year-old to the community matriarch of 85.

Alice Mattli, a 42-year-old housewife who teaches primary school to the 10 village children while they are cut off from classes in the town below, said in a recent telephone interview she feels that the sense of "being one large family" compensates for some of the isolation of the winter months.

She moved to the village when she was 19 after her marriage to a Goeschneralp man.

"The length of the winter is still hard to take, especially for us women who don't know how to ski," she said. "We cope by playing a lot of cards and getting together for long evening talks."

The long winter evenings contrast starkly with the hectic atmosphere in autumn, when the villagers ready themselves for their extended isolation.

The last trip outside for each family is usually one to stock up on provisions. Then it is long days in the kitchen preserving the food for the long isolation period.

The winter is more difficult for families whose children are away for five months to attend school or learn a trade.

Before November ends, these children say goodbye, returning only for rare visits during the five-month winter, provided the community's old tractor can make it through the snow to bring the children home for a weekend.

"My husband and I have four children and the two oldest are away for most of the winter," said Mrs. Mattli. "We normally don't see them for three weeks at a time."

At one time this winter, it appeared the village would have to scrap the old tractor, with not enough money for a new one.

Bought used two years ago, the vehicle had a series of breakdowns this year, leaving villagers to consider a return to the rescue sled — their only previous way of reaching the town below.

A newspaper campaign, however, collected more than the 50,000 Swiss francs (about $27,000) for a new vehicle and the villagers are to be presented with the check later this year, when the snow is gone.

Television — the staple of families elsewhere on long winter evenings — is also denied Goeschneralp households, which are cut off from reception by the mountain peaks around them.

Only Waldemar and Jobst Mattli, who supervise the village's hydroelectric dam, are able to watch TV because their house near the dam is high enough to allow good reception. Villagers often go to the dam to watch TV but it's an hour's trek.

Then there's the danger of snow avalanches. When that time comes the villagers huddle for three or four days in the community's avalanche shelter.

The concrete shelter was built under an overhanging cliff in 1978, after avalanches threatened the village for several consecutive winters.

The worst was the winter of 1975, when a house and several other structures were badly damaged by a huge snowslide. The avalanche — and the subsequent threats of others — forced several families to live together for almost a week in a house away from the danger.

"After a while, the togetherness became a bit too close for comfort," Mrs. Mattli said, adding that the experience was instrumental in the decision to build the shelter.

There, each family has a private room where it can sleep and store emergency supplies. The villagers cook and eat together, but still have the privacy they lacked before.

Now, said Mrs. Mattli, the threat of snowslides allows families "to come together under different circumstances." The few days spent in the shelter every winter "make life more interesting."

Nominations?

The Pitt County Involvement Council is presently accepting nominations for the third annual Governor's Statewide Volunteer Recognition Awards.

Gov. Jim Hunt's office of citizen affairs is seeking 11 nominations from each county. Individuals or groups selected in each county will receive an award presented by the governor at a ceremony in the fall.

Award categories include: individual human service volunteer, individual community leader, administrator of volunteers, disabled person volunteer, school volunteer, one to one volunteer, community volunteer organization, religious volunteer group and business-industry volunteer.

"We have sent applications and criteria to key agencies and also governmental and civic group representatives in Pitt County," said Alice Keene, chairman of the Involvement Council. "We encourage you to nominate any individual or group that you feel should be considered to receive this high honor."

All nominations must be returned to Ms. Keene, 1717 W. Fifth St., Greenville, by Tuesday. A committee from the Involvement Council will select one nomination from each category to receive the award.

For further information, call Ms. Keene at 752-6106, Ext. 248.

Argentine-Americans Rally Homeland Support

BLOOD FOR A CAUSE — Argentine Dr. Hipolito Barreiro gives blood in a Miami clinic under the watchful eye of Dr. Rupert Williams (right). Barreiro and his group pay the Interstate Blood Bank to collect and process blood for shipment to Argentina. (AP Laserphoto)

By JOHN THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer
MIAMI (AP) — They gather everything from guitars to blood for their countrymen on the front. They pass out thousands of leaflets and mimeographed sheets. They try to play on the cultural roots of Miami's Latin exile community to rally support.

Headquartered in a Miami abortion clinic, a determined group of Argentine-Americans fights a lonely battle for the Falkland Islands.

Sonia Fornoni and Pedro Caccamo, amid typewriters, bumper stickers and tiny paper flags, marshal the effort.

The enemy's caricature is on the wall — he's grizzled, peg-legged and brandishes a cutlass. The caption below him says: "Pirate."

"Are the English anything else?" asks Mrs. Fornoni, a 26-year-old housewife from San Carlos de Bariloche who came to Miami 2½ years ago.

Along with several hundred of their estimated 6,000 compatriots in southern Florida, Mrs. Fornoni and Caccamo gathered in a Little Havana restaurant after the Royal Navy set sail for the South Atlantic, and formed "Ateneo Malvinas Argentinas," the Argentine Malvinas Society.

They say they love America, but their homeland must come first.

"When it's a question of the Malvinas, we are all Argentines," says Caccamo, a 45-year-old wine importer from Buenos Aires.

Headquarters for the society is an empty suite of hospital rooms on the second floor of the Women's Care Center. The nerve center of the fledgling group is a stuffy sunroom whose windows overlook Miami's major artery, Biscayne Boulevard.

There, fortified with frequent demi-tasses of espresso, Mrs. Fornoni and Caccamo are joined by dozens of volunteers. A relief map of the "Republica Argentina" commands the white-walled room. The Malvinas — the Falkland Islands to English speakers — are colored chocolate, like the mainland. Fighting the war for the Malvinas from Miami is a never-ending struggle, they say. The Argentines say they feel drowned in a sea of English speakers and Anglo-Saxon culture. They accuse the American press and television of telling only the British side of the story.

"First, we have to fight all the misinformation. We need to know the truth," says Mrs. Fornoni.

Volunteers telephone a collective of journalists in Buenos Aires daily. Then a war dispatch is typed out and circulated, or fresh news bruted about by word of mouth or telephone.

When the Argentine troops dug in at the Falklands, volunteers scoured attics and basements and went knocking on neighbors' doors. The result? — "hundreds of guitars shipped to the men on the front," says Mrs. Fornoni. Now, she says, Argentine troops will be able to sing serenades around the fire as the Southern Hemisphere's winter grows colder.

"It is necessary for us to keep up morale," says Caccamo.

For "la patria," the Argentines say they are ready to sacrifice time, money, even blood. A Miami blood bank has started accepting pints to be airlifted to Argentine soldiers and sailors wounded in action.

Fighting has brought the war a continent away terribly close for some. Anna Maria Cespedes, a 32-year-old housewife from the seaport of La Plata, has two cousins now on the islands.

Esther Parisi, 39, of Buenos Aires, lost a son when the cruiser General Belgrano was torpedoed by a submarine and sank. She cries softly. "The day the Belgrano went down, things were terrible here," said Mrs. Fornoni.

In picketing, prayer meetings, bumper stickers ("Argentina Keep Strong") and letters to the editor, the Argentines have tried to enflame Greater Miami's 700,000 Latin residents. A portrait of Argentine president and junta leader Leopoldo Galtieri is labeled: "a man for the Americas."

and the Argentines tirelessly repeat that their struggle is that of all Latin Americans opposed to colonialism.

Although some 700 Cuban exiles are among more than 1,000 people who have told Argentine consulate officials here they're ready to fight for the Falklands, the Argentines have been frustrated in their efforts to mobilize South Florida's powerful Cuban community.

"It's an issue that certainly generates interest here, but it's not many people's overriding passion and concern," says Roberto Fabricio, executive editor of El Herald, a 63,500-circulation Spanish edition of The Miami Herald.

Herald. "England had those islands for more than a century, and Argentina suddenly feels it has to attack. Why?" asks Manuel "Tony" de Varona, a former Cuban vice president and head of the Cuban Patriotic Junta. "We think they're fighting for no good reason."

A recent convention of anti-Castro exile groups considered a resolution in support of Argentina, however, as part of a general disapproval of "colonialism in any form." But reports of Argentine flirtation with the Soviet Union and Cuba turned off most Cuban exiles.

On the second floor of the Women's Care Center, truth seems much simpler. "Before the Malvinas crisis, we were Peronists, anti-Peronists, social democrats, radicals, conservatives," says Caccamo.

Artisans Using Ancient Brick-Making Method

By SAMUEL KOO
Associated Press Writer
ORVIETO, Italy (AP) — Handmade bricks and tiles produced by a small group of artisans here are selling like hot cakes as demands increase throughout Italy for quality building material needed to restore historic monuments, churches and squares.

"In Rome alone, our tiles were used in restoring the Colosseum, the Pantheon and St. Peter's Basilica," says Salvo Bernasconi, the 77-year-old scion of a family that has earned its living making bricks for generations.

He says the restorers choose their bricks or "mattoncini" for the resiliency, color and beauty that match the old tiles. Factory-made bricks, he says, are inferior and the idea of using mass-produced material in artistic places seems repugnant to many people.

The bricks produced by 12 families in nearby Castel Viscardo are handmade according to traditional techniques handed down from father to son since Roman times.

"Next time you go to the Colosseum, look around and see if you can pick out the new ones — you probably can't because they almost look alike," Bernasconi says with a grin.

Early this year, nearly 80,000 bricks were used to replace the eroded surface of the beautiful Piazza del Campo at Siena in the hills of Tuscany.

Orders also come from abroad, including the United States and West Germany, but the workers say they are hard pressed just meeting domestic needs.

Despite the booming business, the brickmakers say they have a difficult time persuading their young sons and grandchildren to learn the ancient skill.

"We have only three men under the age of 25 working in the village ... Many have left for the cities," says Mario Ceccarelli, another veteran brickmaster, whose two sons are studying law in Rome.

"To them (the young who left) ours is a life spent in dirt ... I admit the work is not very exciting but it's rewarding," says Bernasconi, who started working at the age of 6.

A brickmaker often works 14 hours a day. He spends winter months collecting clay and repeatedly purifying it with snow and rain water — an essential process that keeps bricks from cracking under heat and cold.

In the summer the clay is spread out for several days under the sun, and water is poured continuously on it so that it becomes like dough. The substance is then placed on work tables where it is pressed into shape by hand, using only wooden forms.

Bricks and tiles are made one piece at a time and displayed to be dried by the sun. An experienced worker can make up to 1,500 pieces a day. After nine days of "rest," the bricks and tiles are placed in an oven and fired for 24 hours at 1,000 degrees.

The oven is big enough to hold up to 20,000 bricks or tiles and used three times each summer, producing 60,000. A brick sells for 25 to 80 cents wholesale depending on the size. An average brickmaker is said to earn at least $8,000 a year.

To dramatize their difficulties in attracting young workers and "underline the importance of our work," the 12 families last October donated 2,000 bricks, all numbered and bearing the image of Italy's patron saint Francis of Assisi and a message of peace, to government and church authorities, artists and museum officials.

Different Outlooks In 2 TV Movies

NEW YORK (AP) — A man with dreams is spiritually free, even in a Soviet prison camp in Siberia. But a 17-year-old New Yorker with limited vision and aspirations can be his own jailer.

These are different outlooks from two upcoming movies.

One, CBS' "Coming Out of the Ice" Sunday night, dramatizes the true story of Victor Herman, an American whose dream of returning to his homeland sustains him through nearly two decades of torture, starvation and imprisonment in the Soviet Union during Stalin's purges.

The other, tonight's "Dreams Don't Die" on ABC, looks at an inner-city kid whose perception of the world causes him to lower his sights and restrict his immense artistic talent to subway graffiti.

Ike Eisenmann plays Danny Baker, who gets his kicks and self-worth from being the best subway scribbler in Brooklyn. His young girl friend, Teresa (Trini Alvarado of "Rich Kids" and "Times Square") wants more for both of them.

For that reason, she is vulnerable to the material handouts from a creepy 15-year-old drug pusher, Capt. Kirk (Israel Juarbe) has a chauffeured limousine and a vile arrogance because he's immune from the law until he's 16. The young Teresa is his hedge against bitterness.

Danny's cartoon world is jarred when a cop catches him defacing a subway. Charlie Banks (Paul Winfield) is looking for drug dealers, so he just warns Danny and suggests he go to art school. But Danny considers art institutions "just another version of the law. Graffiti is pure; it's lawless," he says.

Banks takes Danny and Teresa to the Guggenheim Museum and their first visit to Manhattan, which Banks describes as the "land of surprises." Danny realizes that there could be conventional outlets for his gifts, gaining inspiration from the French graffiti artist, Jean Dubuffet.

But from this point, the movie takes an unreal turn, with Danny and Teresa hatching a plot to nail Capt. Kirk. When the focus was on Danny and the backdrop the cruel inner city, there was a simple, attractive story to tell, with the spirited young actors and stark New York locations moving it along.

When Danny and Teresa turn into superheroes and drugs dominate the plot, "Dreams Don't Die" becomes cliché-filled and tackles more than it can handle.

In a sense, "Coming Out of the Ice" doesn't try enough. Victor Herman's will to live is depicted graphically through torture scenes, his survival on rats and his imprisonment in underground cages. During a brief period of freedom, he shaves a full beard and is shocked because he thought he was younger.

But, dramatically, we're robbed of the legitimate Hollywood ending: his return home. After he's survived 20 years of prison and exile in 1955, the film abruptly ends. An unfulfilling postscript explains that Herman battled Soviet bureaucracy and finally returned to the United States in 1976.

"Coming Out of the Ice" begins with Herman, age 16, arriving in Russia in 1931 with a group of American automobile workers. He's a great athlete who gains attention by breaking the world's parachute jump record in 1934.

But he won't sign Soviet citizenship papers, an apparent affront to Stalin, and is later arrested for alleged "counterrevolutionary activities." Thus begins the account of man's inhumanity to one man.

John Savage ("Hair,"

"Inside Moves") is a strong, stoic victim. Country-and-western star Willie Nelson is quite natural as Herman's philosophizing friend and the symbolic "good man."

Ben Cross ("Chariots of Fire"), Francesca Annis ("Lillie") and exhilarating footage from Finland bolster a surprisingly lethargic production, wrecked by a weak script and bizarre storyline choices.

The bidding: South West North East
1NT Pass 3NT Pass
Pass Pass
Opening lead: Five of ♠.

It is a constant source of amazement how many declarers fail to count their tricks. That was the only requirement for finding the winning line on this hand.

In view of his low doubleton diamond and the fact that his hand was suit oriented because his high cards were all prime, South might have opened one club. But we cannot quibble too strongly with his choice, and the final contract was surely above reproach.

West led his fourth-best heart, and declarer captured East's queen with the king. He led a diamond to the jack, and East made a fine play when he allowed the finesse to "win." Impressed by this early success, South returned to his hand with the ace of clubs to repeat the diamond finesse. This time East took his king and returned a heart. When the diamond suit did not break, declarer was down two tricks.

See what would happen if, before starting the play, declarer simply counted his tricks. With a heart lead, he could be sure of three heart tricks, one spade and two clubs, for six tricks. Ergo, he needed only three tricks from the diamond suit!

The correct play is to lead a diamond at trick two and duck it in dummy. It makes no difference who wins the trick. Sooner or later, declarer will win a trick in a side suit and lead another diamond, this time taking the finesse. That loses, but once both defenders have followed, the diamonds are now set up. As soon as he regains the lead, declarer enters dummy with the king of clubs and takes his three diamond tricks. He has his nine tricks and the contract and, assuming that he has used a time-tested counting method, he still has one finger in reserve.

Festival On Theater Row

NEW YORK (UPI) — Theater Row, the block-long array of Off Broadway theaters which replaced a host of porn shows on 42nd Street four years ago, is holding a special festival June 2-27 to mark the second phase of its development. The eight theaters already operating will take part in the festival of plays, music, cabarets and children's shows. There also will be a June 13 street fair during which 42nd Street will be closed to traffic for five hours between 9th and 10th Avenues.

The first phase of Theater Row consisted of the rehabilitation of a row of buildings between 9th Ave. and Dyre Ave. into theaters, rehearsal and office space. Now work is well under way between Dyre and 10th Avenues, highlighted by the recent opening of the 499-seat Douglas Fairbanks Theater.

London Musical For Broadway

NEW YORK (UPI) — "Cats," the London musical hit by Andrew Lloyd-Webber ("Evita," "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat") based on T.S. Eliot's "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats," is scheduled to open on Broadway Oct. 7, with previews starting Sept. 23.

Fifty years ago today, an ex-truck driver, social worker and writer became the first woman to fly across the Atlantic solo. For duplicating Lindbergh's feat she was named "Lady Lindy." Despite many daring record flights, her luck finally ran out in 1937. In the final stages of an equatorial circumnavigation of the globe she disappeared into the Pacific. Most believe that she died in a plane crash. But others, like Admiral Nimitz, the U.S. Pacific naval commander in World War II, think that she was captured by the Japanese. The mystery of Amelia Earhart's fate remains unsolved, but hopes that she will be found alive have dimmed — she would now be 83 years old.

Peace Pushed By Merchants

By TOM BALDWIN
Associated Press Writer
TRIPOLI, Lebanon (AP) — Merchants are demanding that the dozens of rival private armies, holdovers from Lebanon's 1975-76 civil war, get out of this ancient port city. The businessmen hope their peace movement will spread across this strife-torn nation, once the Middle East's commercial center.

"We hope we are an example," said Rachid Karami, who was Lebanon's prime minister during the civil war and is now the main political leader of Tripoli. The movement is the first of its kind in Lebanon since the civil war between right-wing Maronite Christians and mostly Moslem leftists. Whether the peace movement blossoms or is killed off here, it marks a turning point in attempts by the Christians and Moslems to join hands in what they claim to be seeking — a united Lebanon.

Karami said in an interview he sees Tripoli as Lebanon's last chance for a national reconciliation among the scores of warring militias splintered by religious, politics, economics and personal vendettas. This city 50 miles north of the capital, Beirut, has been the last to suffer Lebanon's conflict. Of Lebanon's major cities Tripoli was the least affected by civil war regimes. The majority of the city's half-million residents are Sunni Moslems who traditionally have gotten along well with the minority Christians in the merchant ranks.

Shiite Moslems, the predominant Islamic sect of Iran but generally underprivileged in Lebanon, are rare in Tripoli. There is only a sprinkling of Palestinians. The economic piston is Tripoli's bustling seaport. The second biggest cash-earner is the provision of services to the trucking trade that rolls north to Syria and Turkey.

For many Tripoli residents, success is measured each evening before sundown prayers when the cash boxes are emptied and the day's profits are tallied on dog-eared ledgers. Furniture-store owner Hajj al-Arab gave one reason why Tripoli never became a major battlefield in the civil war: "When there is fighting we can't make business." Journalist Mohammed Salam said: "Tripoli people are merchants living day to day. They are traditional enemies of insecurity." Since the civil war eroded the authority of the police and army throughout Lebanon, scores of political parties created private armies which exact payoffs from shopkeepers in exchange for protection. In some parts of the country, such as Christian East Beirut, militias have succeeded in imposing order. In Tripoli, no one party grew strong enough to keep the peace. The city's police commandant, Lt. Col. Mahdi Hassan, told a reporter his patrolmen are up against 32 private armies whose gun-battles break out over the simplest disagreement. One recent shootout was said by residents to have started over an unpaid gambling debt. The militia system obviously was not working in Tripoli. Karami said the most telling indictment came in April during one of the nightly firefights recently when a rocket-propelled grenade slammed into a building and set it afire. A map, his wife and their nine children were burned to death in their apartment.

"Is this any way for a population to live? We are humans. We cannot have tyranny," Karami said. The merchants went on strike for three days after the fire. As the city's power bloc, they usually get what they want. This time they demanded the militias remove their guns from the city and close down their offices. Karami and police commandant Hassan claim the merchants' demands are gradually being met. But when the merchants staged a march to demonstrate their solidarity, unknown gunmen sprayed them with bullets. There were casualties but none fatal.

A druggist who asked not to be identified said gunmen in a speeding car shot up his pharmacy and the pinball parlor next door after he refused to pay the usual protection money. The Syrian army, which has 30,000 soldiers in Lebanon under an Arab League mandate to police the shaky civil war cease-fire, withdrew its forces from Tripoli in February.

Market For How-To Books

NEW YORK (UPI) — One-third of all how-to books to reach consumers this year will be sold through home centers and other building materials outlets, says Bruce King, national account manager for a major publisher of such volumes. A report in National Home Center News, a bi-weekly trade publication, quotes King as saying many titles will sell more than 15,000 copies each this year. "The more basic the subject matter, the better the seller," he adds. The best seller to date is on fireplaces, one leading how-to publisher told the News. It has sold 1,485 million copies since publication in 1972. The closest runners-up are a book on kitchens, with total sales of 1,370 million since 1973, and patios and decks, 1,240 million since 1976.

AFTER 15 YEARS KUWAIT (AP) — The first direct negotiations between Marxist South Yemen and pro-Western Oman will begin May 29 after 15 years of strained relations, the radical newspaper Al-Watan reports.

"A New Way Of Life"

Living Like A King Shouldn't Require The Upkeep Of A Castle

In the past, fine homes were often measured solely by size. But, as many of us now know, a home the size of a castle has some rather inelegant ramifications. Like upkeep. Oil bills. Even a simple matter of cleaning can turn into an arduous task.

We've taken care of all that at Treetops residences. Instead of building fine homes the size of a castle, we've carefully constructed elegant homes of more modest size. The many clever floorplans and coordinated exterior wood stains are designed to complement the surrounding grounds. So, the private drives and common areas of Treetops are destined to take on the quiet grace of country estates.

Yet the homeowner is relieved of groundkeeping duties (excepting the area surrounding the home) as the yards and common areas are maintained by the homeowners' association. Neat? Yes. Difficult to keep up? No.

So, if you're more interested in enjoying your home and environment than maintaining your castle and grounds, You'll enjoy your reign.

 Today's Cryptiquip clue: Z equals Y

The Cryptiquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Youth Surrenders In Hostage-Taking

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A Charlotte youth has been charged with nine counts of kidnapping after entering a home for unwed mothers and holding a counselor, four mothers and their babies hostage overnight.

Tyon Davis Caldwell, 16, surrendered to police Thursday after demanding to be reunited with his 9-month-old sister, Sabrina, who was in a foster home. He was being held without bond in the Mecklenburg County Jail.

Police said Caldwell had a 9mm semi-automatic weapon and a foot-long butcher knife when he broke into the Marion Hunter House around 11 p.m. Wednesday. They said he called police and demanded drugs, a car and for police to bring his baby sister to him.

Charlotte Police Chief Mack Vines said Caldwell threatened to kill the hostages if his demands weren't met.

He surrendered about 8:45 a.m. after the last hostage escaped. Police say no hostages were physically abused, although they were forced to stay in one room most of the night.

Vines said no shots were fired, although about a dozen members of the police department's SWAT force had surrounded the house.

Caldwell allowed the women to get bottles and diapers for the babies and to go to their rooms to rest at one point during the evening, Police Maj. E.G. Cappell said.

Caldwell began releasing hostages about 1 a.m. He put the last infant on the porch seven hours later, leaving him with one hostage.

Shortly after 8 a.m., Caldwell could be heard on police radio threatening to kill the hostage and himself if his demand to be given his sister was not met in eight minutes. Police had let Caldwell see his sister earlier, but not hold her.

"We feel fortunate that we had such an explosive situation that lasted all night and no one ended up being injured," Police Cmdr. Sam Killman said.

Howard U. Visited By Pres. Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, continuing his campaign to win over minorities upset by his economic policies, says all Americans wanting a better life must first work together to improve the nation's economy.

"It is time now for all of us together to make a bigger pie for all our citizens and everyone having a bigger slice, and that's what we're determined to do," he said Thursday night at a reception at predominantly black Howard University in the District of Columbia.

Reagan drew applause from the racially mixed crowd of about 200 when he said that although the government must protect the needy, "it's self-defeating to keep cutting smaller and smaller slices of pie from an ever-shrinking pie."

As he arrived and left the fund-raiser where ticket prices started at $1,000, Reagan was booed by a crowd of about 150 people at a demonstration organized by a union representing workers at Howard University Hospital. "The president's visit... comes during a recession that is pulverizing millions of black people unmercifully," said Lawrence N. Anderson, president of Local 2094 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

"Today, nearly a half million more black workers are jobless since Ronald Reagan became president. ... To pay honor to the president can only mean saluting Reaganomics and its racist assault on black Americans," Anderson said in a statement.

Home, Work Ties Studied

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — "Understanding the relationship between family and work is the biggest project we're working on," says Dr. David Fournier, a specialist in family relations in the College of Home Economics at Oklahoma State University.

About importance of the research, he says, "We've known for a long time that problems a person has at home can negatively affect one's productivity, attention, job satisfaction, and relationships with others at work."

"Likewise, problems at work, with the boss, activities at work, or just not getting the job done, affects people's attitudes when they go home. Bringing these conflicts home can create problems with marital or parent-child relationships."

"In effect, these new problems are then taken back to the work place and it can become a vicious circle," says Fournier, an assistant professor in the family relations and child development department.

Fournier and his doctoral research assistant, JoAnn Englebrecht, believe they have developed the first objective instrument to identify the range and impact of work and family conflicts.

The inventory, called PROFILES (Personal Reflections on Family Life and Employment Stressors), lists in more than 200 statements the ways work and family can affect each other.

"People can identify from this range of statements how many conflicts happen in a given year and the perceived effect each conflict has had on their work or family life relationships," Fournier points out.

He explains, "It could be a problem with child care, happening only once or twice a year, but when the problem does occur, it may create an extreme level of tension for that person."

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Richter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Fine day for carrying through with new plans that you have thought up recently. Use a modern approach to gain your goals. Make an effort to enjoy the simple pleasures in life.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) This is the right time to make plans to gain greater abundance in the future. Contact experts for advice you need.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Take time to analyze regular activities and know where to make changes to gain greater benefits. Express happiness.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Obtain data you need to be successful in career activities. Be sure to arrive on time for appointments you have.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Talks with close ties now can prove beneficial. Know what is expected of you. Show more devotion to loved one.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Attend to duties that need your personal guidance. Make plans that will bring you added income later on.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Engage in pleasurable pursuits and make this a pleasant day for you and others. Be more active and more cheerful.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Attending to regular chores early in the day can give you more time to engage favorite recreations later.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) A good time to handle duties which you have postponed earlier in the week. Take time to improve your environment.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Study your financial position and budget your money wisely. Make necessary repairs to your property.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Handle personal duties early so that you attend to more important matters later. Become more interested in outside affairs.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Follow your intuition today and gain your personal aims. Find the right ways to achieve greater happiness.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be always engineering new ways of getting things done, which is fine, but be sure you first teach tried-and-true methods to gain the best results. There is an artistic nature here that should be trained.

"The Stars impel, they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!
