Pipes Wail In Warmups

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer
VALLE CRUCIS, N.C. (AP) — The sound of bagpipe music in this small Watauga County hamlet is nothing new to oldtime residents, but the wailing of the pipes sometimes takes visitors by surprise.

For three weeks every summer, the 140-year-old Mission School in Valle Crucis becomes a haven for bagpipers from all over the country. The pipers attend piping classes that prepare them to participate in the Highland Games at Grandfather Mountain in neighboring Avery County.

The games officially get under way at MacRae Meadows Saturday morning.

"Sometime people will be driving by, hear the pipes and come up to investigate," said Sandy Jones, who started the bagpipe school 11 years ago. "People just don't expect to hear bagpipes around here and they can't believe their ears."

This year, 72 people, aged 10 to 70 and ranging from beginners to experts, are enrolled in the piping classes. In addition to playing the bagpipes, they study the history of bagpipes, old pipe music and work on new music.

When the classes are over at the end of this week, the 72 pipers will take their places among hundreds of other bagpipe players at the Highland Games, Jones said.

Jones, who teaches piping at The Citadel in Charleston and is director of piping for the games, said the Highland Games is the largest annual gathering of Scottish clans in the country. Crowds of about 50,000 are expected for this year's games, which will feature traditional Scottish events such as highland dancing, the caber toss and marathons.

Jones said most people have to grow up with bagpipe music to like the unusual sound.

"A lot of people who have never heard bagpipe music before say they can't stand it, that it is too loud," said Jones, who said he has played the pipes since he was a child. "Bagpipe music is something that you grow to appreciate."

Jones said he chose the historic Mission School near Boone as the site of his annual bagpipe classes because of the serene mountain setting.

"You could say it sort of combined the green meadows and mist of Scotland — a perfect place for bagpipers," Jones said.

Lebanon Plans Endangered?

Charges U.S. Is 'Backtracking'

By The Associated Press

Lebanese Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan publicly accused U.S. presidential envoy Philip Habib today of backtracking on when to deploy peacekeepers in west Beirut and said this threatened "every other aspect" of talks on the evacuation of the PLO from the battered city.

At the same time, Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev warned President Reagan that if U.S. Marines were sent into west Beirut "the Soviet Union would build its policy with due consideration of this fact." He did not elaborate, but the Kremlin supports PLO chief Yasser Arafat, who publicly has spurned Reagan's offer to send in the Marines as part of a multinational force to evacuate the guerrillas.

Wazzan said the force, which also would include French paratroopers, should deploy "before or simultaneously with the start" of the evacuation of Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization. "But I have been surprised by a non-Lebanese insistence that the deployment of these international forces should take place after the departure of the Palestinians, which negates much of the need for and the usefulness of these forces."

"All through the talks with Mr. Philip Habib I have been determined to keep the details from official publicity pending the arrival at a final agreement," Wazzan said. "But this new position came as a shock, which I am afraid, would reflect on every other aspect of the talks."

The Wazzan statement was issued by his office and broadcast on the state radio and published in all Beirut newspapers. There was no immediate comment from Habib, who has been trying for three weeks to put together a peacekeeping agreement that would stave off a ground assault on west Beirut by Israeli forces who invaded Lebanon June 6 to crush the PLO.

Wazzan believes the U.S. and French force is needed to shield the estimated 8,000 withdrawing guerrillas and their 12,000 leftist Moslem Lebanese compatriots left behind in west Beirut from reprisals by rightist Lebanese Christian militiamen allied with Israel in mostly Christian east Beirut, said a source close to Wazzan who requested anonymity.

The source said Habib's surprise position was behind the conference Wazzan called Wednesday evening with the PLO leadership, the leaders of leftist Moslem groups and other Moslem elder statesmen and religious dignitaries.

"The Moslems are united behind Wazzan," said the independent Beirut daily An-Nahar. "Wazzan will convey this position to Habib today with a notice that Islamic leaders are not prepared to bring more pressure on the PLO or compromise on the role of the international force."

In Washington, a Defense Department spokesman said "time is of the essence" in Habib's peace effort. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said Israel had given Habib a Sunday deadline, but Israel's Washington Embassy and Weinberger's own spokesman, Henry Catto, later said there was no firm time limit.

The Israelis kept up the military pressure, pounding PLO strongholds in two west Beirut neighborhoods for two hours starting at sunset Wednesday. The Palestinian news agency Wafa said Israeli ground troops made three attempts to advance from their positions near the paralyzed Beirut airport, but were stopped by PLO forces.

Meanwhile, Israel Wednesday eased its blockade of west Beirut, allowing drinking water and electricity into the predominantly Moslem district. The Israelis, who imposed the blockade last weekend, continued to bar food and fuel to the guerrillas and the estimated 500,000 civilians in west Beirut.

Israeli officials said their government was giving Habib additional time, and there was an optimistic mood among ministers at an Israeli Cabinet meeting in Jerusalem Wednesday. The ministers discussed "the political arrangements which will bring about the total evacuation of all the terrorists from Beirut and Lebanon," a Cabinet communique said.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin's spokesman, Uri Porat, said the Cabinet reiterated its refusal to allow the Palestinians to leave a political bureau in Beirut or station two small fighting units with the Lebanese army.

However, Israeli officials, who asked not to be named, said that once the PLO leaves and a strong Lebanese central government is established, Israel could not prevent the Palestinians from applying for permission to open offices on Lebanese soil.

Mother Wins 6-Day Strike

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — A housewife who went on strike against her family for six days is back on the job after the last of her five children signed her list of demands.

Anne Bullington, 36, the mother of four teen-agers and an 11-year-old son, established herself in a lawn chair outside the family's home Friday surrounded by hand-lettered signs reading, "Mother on Strike" and "Have You Hugged Your Mother Today?"

For six days, day and night, she sat there, through heavy rains and sweltering heat in the 90s. She became the topic of a Des Moines radio talk show, and patiently answered questions from curious onlookers.

The strike ended Wednesday night when the last holdout, her 16-year-old daughter, Michelle, agreed to sign Mrs. Bullington's list of demands.

Her objective, Mrs. Bullington said Wednesday, was to bring to the attention of her five children that she is a "human being" and needs a "little affection."

Her other four children and her husband, Tom, signed the contract elevating Mrs. Bullington to that status at various times during the vigil.

Children, she said, "forget that mother has her own life."

"They forget to talk to me. They forget to kiss me. They didn't think of me as a person. They thought of me as a mother, and, therefore, owed them something."

In addition to Michelle, her other children are Frank, 18, Tom, 17, Debra, 13, and Charlie, 11.

Mrs. Bullington said Michelle held off signing so long because she was subject to "peer pressure" and was having trouble signing the document without losing face.

Tobacco Jam

LAKE CITY, Fla. (AP) — Florida tobacco farmers are running out of storage space and money for additional harvests because of the delay in opening the flue-cured market.

"It's working a hardship on us about finances and the whole operation," complained North Florida tobacco grower Marion Mann on Wednesday.

In Florida, where the tobacco crop has arrived early this year, growers wanted the federal government to open the market July 7. Georgia farmers had asked for a July 13 opening date.

But Florida-Georgia tobacco markets probably won't open until July 21 due to congressional debate on a tobacco bill in Washington, D.C. The legislation includes features that would affect the market, so the U.S. Department of Agriculture decided that tobacco sales shouldn't start until the debate is completed.

Markets in Florida and Georgia generally open before those in Virginia, the Carolinas and other flue-cured tobacco states.

Flue-cured tobacco is used to make cigarettes. Florida's crop was worth $37.3 million last year.

Philmont Scout Ranch near Cimarron, N. M., will be the destination for some 42 Scouts and five adults from the East Carolina Council when they leave Friday for the 1982 national Scout Jamboree.

The itinerary for the trip will take the group, which includes approximately 12 from Greenville, through 11 states and Mexico, with a stop at the World's Fair in Knoxville, Tenn., on Saturday.

Trip stops on the way to Philmont also include New Orleans; San Antonio for a visit to the Alamo; Del Rio, Texas, and a visit to the Carlsbad Caverns en route to Clovis, N. M. The Scouts and leaders will arrive at Philmont next Thursday and remain there until July 28 when they will begin their trip home. Stops will be made at Oklahoma City for a visit to the Cowboy Museum, Memphis for a visit to Graceland mansion, and Atlanta where the group will see a Braves baseball game. Their return home is scheduled for July 31.

During the stay at Philmont, the Scouts and adults will hike trails ranging from 50 to 66 miles long, pan for gold, take part in burro racing, and try their skills at mountain climbing, among other activities.

Build A 3-Bedroom House In Under 7 Hours

POST FALLS, Idaho (AP) — Scurrying teams of construction workers wearing color-coordinated T-shirts built a three-bedroom home in six hours and 55 minutes to show that "the building industry is alive and willing to serve as soon as interest rates go down."

Richard and Mindy Galbraith, the couple who bought the home for $39,500, watched with about 3,000 people as the house began taking form soon after the sound of a starter's gun at 8 a.m. Wednesday.

About 250 professional framers, plumbers, electricians, painters and landscapers erected what was billed as the "World's Fastest House," a 960-square-foot structure with three bedrooms, one bath, a living room, dining room, kitchen and garage.

Four Idaho contractors coordinated the event, hoping to set a record by building a conventional home in six hours. They missed by 55 minutes, 23 seconds.

"We took on the project to let the United States know the building industry is alive and willing to serve as soon as interest rates go down," said Jim Crowe, co-supervisor for the project which has been in the planning stages for a year.

"When the rates go down, many new building techniques will be used to increase the efficiency and quality of home construction."

"The quality is as good as a comparable house usually built in 70 days," he said. "The process has just been accelerated."

Only the cabinets were prefabricated. The rest of the house was built from scratch, Crowe said.

The framing, roof, electrical wiring and plumbing were finished within 90 minutes. The quick-drying cement driveway was poured in the second hour of the job.

To make sure the job went quickly, special quick-dry "mud" for covering drywall irregularities was flown in.

The event was sponsored by the North Idaho Building Contractors' Association in conjunction with the Idaho State Homebuilders and the National Association of Homebuilders.

The Galbraiths were elated when the final nail was hammered.

"The quality is probably better since so many people are involved and watching," Galbraith said. "Everyone is using quality materials and we are getting a lot of extras that we wouldn't be able to afford otherwise."

Among those watching were five building inspectors and three engineers who stood by to approve each step of the construction.

When the final rolls of grass sod were laid and movers placed the last stick of furniture in the "fresh" home, the Galbraiths and other project personnel were treated to a catered meal.

A representative from the Home Owners Warranty Corp. issued a 10-year warranty for the house.

Afterward, Galbraith mowed his new lawn.

DOCTOR BEYOND CALL OF DUTY

Brandel Whitehurst of Route 4, Williamston, says he was a patient in the office of Dr. Gene T. Hamilton a few days ago when his wife, who was accompanying him, suffered a heart attack. Dr. Hamilton, he said, quickly called the hospital to request a wheelchair at the emergency entrance and a bed ready, then took Mrs. Whitehurst in his own car to the hospital. While Whitehurst was providing information at the hospital, Dr. Hamilton disappeared to return to the patients waiting in his office. "Were it not for this wonderfully skilled physician and friend, my wife would probably not be living today," Whitehurst said.

Marriages, Divorces Rise In Poland

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer
WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poles are marrying — and divorcing — at a torrid pace these days, an unexpected side effect of martial law and general insecurity.

The pace of marriages was strong enough to merit a story by the newspaper Kurier Polski, affiliated with Poland's small Democratic Party, which is allied with the nation's ruling Communist Party.

The paper said many couples seem to be getting married because "people believe that it is easier and more secure to be together."

Some couples, however, are divorcing because of the martial-law regime's enforcement of a law that forbids one couple from owning more than one home or apartment. In cases where one couple owns two residences, some are getting divorces of convenience so each will own one.

Although Poland is a heavily Roman Catholic country, divorces are easily obtained in state courts. But in the eyes of the church, the couple remains married. The church bans any subsequent marriage by those divorced in state courts.

The desire for security, along with the need for pragmatism when encountering new tough rules, is one of the effects of martial law, imposed last Dec. 13.

Warsaw officials said that the main city wedding palace was "booked solid" for June, and reported that about 110 to 120 couples were marrying there each week.

"The clerks of the palace say that it seems that in these difficult times we are living through now more people decide to get married," Kurier Polski said. "Such a trend has been observed for half a year now."

The start of martial law did indeed have its effect on families and marriages. Some spouses abroad at the time hurried home to be with loved ones, but others stayed abroad, raising questions and eyebrows.

"That's his great love," one woman snarled after speaking to her husband who declared his love for her despite an absence of six months. "Why didn't he come home when it started?"

A report of an announcement that only married sailors could leave Polish ports — which later proved to be rumor — prompted a rash of marriages of sailors who wanted to work.

Another effect of martial law, which has virtually cut off the flow of foreigners entering Poland for tourism and travel is a dearth of marriages between Poles and Westerners.

"Marriages between Polish women and foreigners are extremely rare these days," Kurier Polski said. "This is because the restrictions of the present situation make contacts more difficult."

The added that in these days of uncertainty Poles are seeking comfort in the past.

It said Poles seeking comfort in tradition believe old-wives tales that the marriage is happy if it takes place in a month with the letter "r" in its name which in Polish works out to March, June, August, September, October and December.

The tradition also says that one should not marry on a windy day to avoid quarrels and arguments, but if the weather is beautiful the marriage will be happy and harmonious.

Foggy and inclement weather means the wife will be passionate and loving and the husband will be secretive and grim, and a short rain shower means the couple will be rich and wealthy.

"And it is absolutely necessary to break something for luck," Kurier Polski said, in a last word of old-wives advise.

Donations Are Bothering Wife

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are in our 70s, on a retirement income and with a few health problems. My husband made a contribution to the political party of his choice during the election-year campaign, and now he is being solicited by every political cause, as well as every candidate running for Congress and even minor offices. We get letters by the boxful requesting contributions for any number of political causes — all marked "Urgent."

When our CPA made our tax returns in April, my husband had contributed over $500 (without my knowledge), of which only $200 was deductible. This made me furious because we cannot afford it.

I tried to talk to him about this, but it did no good. I even tried to keep some of that mail from him, but now he goes to the post office and picks it up there.

We even get long-distance telephone calls soliciting money for political causes and candidates. I am worried sick because at this rate my husband will have spent all our savings; then what will happen to us?

GOING BROKE

DEAR GOING: Tell your accountant that your husband tunes you out when you tell him he's spending too much on political causes, so he (the accountant) should get that message to him. (P.S. I hope you're both supporting the party that best takes care of its poor and elderly, because they could be you.)

DEAR ABBY: Concerning the woman who was invited to a bridal shower to be held in a church hall: The invitation read, "Dresses only, please." Her problem — she didn't even own a skirt or dress, but she had a "presentable" pantsuit.

I think it's absolutely gross that a woman would brag that she didn't even own a skirt or dress. She should simply decline the shower invitation and stay home. An "R.S.V.P." invitation does not obligate one to explain the reason for declining. Besides, her explanation would serve only to indicate that she is an ill-mannered clod to even consider coming to a church wearing pants.

APPALLED

DEAR APPALLED: Before condemning all women who opt for pants instead of skirts, consider this: There are women who suffer from psoriasis — a chronic skin condition causing unsightly red patches on the legs. Then there are women who wear leg braces. In such cases, long skirts, pants or pajama outfits are a blessing.

DEAR ABBY: I have a very difficult decision to make concerning my dog, Sheba, a 7-year-old Great Dane who has been with me since her birth. She is getting old and set in her ways and she has bad hips.

I feel I would be betraying her if I sent her to "the great hound heaven in the sky," but I don't want to wake up some morning and find a 165-pound dead animal in my house. If I give her away, I know she will die of a broken heart. She's like a member of the family, but something has to be done. Should I have her put to sleep?

ANIMAL LOVER

DEAR ANIMAL LOVER: A veterinarian can tell you if Sheba's "bad hips" are giving her pain, and if they can be surgically repaired.

If Sheba can be kept alive without discomfort, keep her and love her — as she does you.

If you own silver flatware or serving pieces, don't hide them away for use on special occasions only. The patina that comes with use makes silver even more beautiful.

Camps for kids are big business in this country. And the more mothers who enter the labor marketplace, the more creative they become.

All you have to do is to look at your kids and decide: Are they overweight? Need help in math? Have to improve their tennis game? Learn how to ride horseback? Prepare for survival? Or immerse themselves in two weeks of the newest camp of video games?

In other words, "You send us a bored kid and we'll run his fanny into the ground."

I'm the product of a hundred church camps that majored in Social Interaction (short-sleeved beds), Nature Lore (you too can take home your own tick for a pet), Crafts (macaroni necklaces are not a girl's best friend), Adventures in Food (raw hamburger and burnt marshmallows cooked over a coffee can) and Group Dynamics (the group just ripped off my bathing suit and candy allowance).

I usually arrived home weak from the bites of a million mosquitoes, eyes puffy from lack of sleep and numb from the experience.

The problem seems to stem from the fact that we are feeding a myth. In order to have a good time you have to travel to some godforsaken area, with plumbing that doesn't work, beds with two-inch mattresses, a lake that is frozen over in August and a recorded tom-tom.

Somewhere it is written that every child wants to climb a tree, set the leg of a bird, scrape his knee on a rock and sit around a campfire coughing. Some children do. They grow up to be campers.

Other children have no desire to do any of that.

Why should they leave a house with screens, electricity, $500 worth of toys and a refrigerator stocked with the Stouffer experience?

When you think about it, what's so un-American about a camp at the Plaza where a kid pays the same amount of money and sits in a hotel room all day watching TV and ringing up room service? In the evening, he could play on the elevators and run around the lobby knocking over people.

Just think what an experience like that could mean in a child's life. It could revive our cities.

Engagement Announced

Dr. and Mrs. Gerald W. Fernald of Chapel Hill announce the engagement of their daughter, Susan J., to Scott Monroe Hinson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Hinson of Route 3, Whiteville. The wedding will take place Aug. 21.

British Scale Down Demands For 600 POWs

The Daily Reflector, Greenville, N.C. — Thursday, July 8, 1982 — 3
Ministry said the 35 Argentinians were volunteers.

LONDON (AP) — Britain has scaled down its demands for the release of 600 Argentine war prisoners still held following the Falkland Islands conflict.

The Defense Ministry said the prisoners, including Brig. Gen. Mario Benjamin Menendez, commander of Argentina's vanquished Falkland Islands invasion force, were being held aboard British ships moored off the Falklands capital of Stanley.

A spokesman said the ministry has not yet decided the destination of the prisoners. A government source said they might be brought 8,000 miles to Britain.

The British have returned 11,200 Argentinians captured when the Argentinians surrendered after the fall of the Stanley garrison June 14. Argentina invaded the Falklands April 2 to assert its claim of sovereignty over the British colony 250 miles east of the Argentine mainland.

At first, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government said it would keep the other 600 prisoners — mostly officers and military specialists — until it received an "authoritative" Argentine statement that hostilities were over in the Falklands and their dependencies, and in the air-and-sea corridor between the islands and the Argentine mainland.

But Mrs. Thatcher's government has now watered this demand down to "positive indications" that the new Buenos Aires government considers the fighting over.

It was not clear what this might entail, but one official close to Mrs. Thatcher said: "We need something stronger than a cease-fire. We realize that Argentina may not renounce its claim to the Falklands, but we need to know that Argentina will not Exocet our ships again."

The official was referring to the sinking of two British ships by Exocet missiles during the 74-day undeclared war, and to Argentina's long-standing claim of sovereignty over the islands.

Argentine President Leopoldo Galtieri, who led his nation into the conflict, was ousted by his military colleagues after the fall of the Stanley garrison because he refused to accept defeat.

Nonetheless, reports from Argentina indicate the new military government is in no hurry to give Britain the assurances it wants, hoping the British will agree to negotiate the future of the islands. Mrs. Thatcher ruled out such talks following the British victory.

British officials admit they can't keep the prisoners aboard ships indefinitely and world opinion may soon start to turn against London.

Although there never was a formal declaration of war between Britain and Argentina, the British said they would abide by the Geneva Convention on prisoners of war, and holding the captives is raising some questions about Britain's interpretation of the accord.

Article 118 of the 1949 Geneva Convention says prisoners "shall be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities."

British officials say that, technically, they have not violated this provision because they are not certain if Argentina considers "active hostilities" at an end.

But there has been no fighting on the islands since June 14, and the London Daily Mirror said holding the prisoners "appears to be in breach of the Geneva Convention."

The newspaper, which supports the opposition Labor Party and was lukewarm about the Falklands campaign, added: "Britain's proud standard of civilized international behavior is in danger of being sunk."

The new foreign minister of Argentina, Dr. Juan

Aguirre Lanari, told a news conference in Buenos Aires this week that he considered the prisoners hostages, comparing them with the 52 Americans held in Iran for 444 days until their release on Jan. 20, 1981.

In addition, 35 Argentine prisoners are still on the islands, helping British troops in the dangerous task of clearing Argentine minefields.

U.S. Inviting Troubles

President Reagan's offer to send up to 1,000 American Marines to Lebanon as an escort for the PLO out of Beirut carries with it frightening overtones. All details of the offer have not been made public, and the resulting questions raise justifiable fears: Will the troops be part of a multinational force or there only as Americans? Will they be under the U.S. flag or that of the United Nations? Reagan aides have said they would be armed, so would they fire on Israelis? Or the Lebanese Christians who have supported Israel in its invasion?

The PLO's Yasser Arafat reportedly has rejected the offer. The Soviet Union has denounced Reagan's offer as a proposal for direct military intervention in Lebanon. We tend to agree, especially if American troops go into Lebanon under the U.S. flag.

Reagan has said the offer was made in support of his administration's pledge to stabilize the Mideast. Direct U.S. military intervention, even with prior approval from all parties, carries more risks than advantages. If American troops go into any part of the Mideast under circumstances such as these, it should be part of a U.N. effort — not a unilateral gesture that could cause more long-range harm than any short-range good it could produce.

Enjoying Bountiful Season

The wealth of eastern Carolina gardens is pouring into area households, making one wonder at its profusion.

There are farmers who cultivate special fields for pick-your-own urban dwellers; and others who grow produce for home consumption and perhaps for sale on the Farmers Market.

In urban areas, too, one sees an occasional patch of favorite foodstuffs reminding the viewer of "Victory Gardens" during World War II years.

It is a time for freezing, canning, the making of jellies, preserves and pickles.

The households so involved are not going to go hungry; and most see the results as a real bargain in terms of cost and quality. Pride goes into their work (it's a rare housewife who doesn't show off her work to visitors).

It's a great time of year to live in eastern North Carolina.

MAYBE THAT'LL GET IT GOING AGAIN!

Poor 5-4 Disposition

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, God bless it, has known some glorious, shining hours, but it has known some inglorious, dimlit hours also. It reached one of these on June 24 in its bizarre 5-4 disposition — or non-disposition — of a major case involving public school libraries. The court botched it.

These were the facts: Back in 1975, members of a Long Island school board happened to attend a conference of a right-wing outfit called Parents of New York United. There they obtained a list of "objectionable" books. Returning to their bailiwick, the board members found that nine of the listed books were in their local high school library. After inspecting the books and finding them "vulgar," the board ordered the volumes removed. Several students brought suit seeking the books' return. A district court summarily dismissed the petition, but the 2nd U.S. Circuit reversed. The case came on to the Supreme Court for decision.

Unless you recall last term's decision in the San Diego billboard case, you will find it hard to believe what happened. Justice Brennan wrote a half-baked plurality opinion so poorly reasoned that only Marshall and Stevens could swallow it whole. Blackmun went along with most of Brennan's opinion, but balked at a key section. Justice White copped out; on a procedural issue alone White joined in the judgment that the case should be sent back to the district court for further proceedings. Burger, Powell, Rehnquist and O'Connor all dissented; each of them wrote a separate opinion.

What was actually decided? Nothing of significance. Out of whole cloth, Brennan the book may not be removed without proof of a school board's pure intentions — for example, that "Soul on Ice" is not "educationally suitable" or "appropriate to age and grade level." Otherwise Mr. Cleaver's book takes on tenure, like an old professor; his ideas, once shelved, acquire squatter's right; these ideas cannot be evicted without a full-blown hearing.

All this was too much for the dissenters. "If the First Amendment commands that certain books cannot be removed," asked the chief justice, "does it not equally require that the same books be acquired? Why does the coincidence of timing become the basis of a constitutional holding?" Justice Rehnquist made the same point: "The failure of a library to acquire a book denies access to its contents just as effectively as does the removal of a book from the library's shelf."

The dissenters also argued, vainly as it proved, that no student had been totally denied access to the books at issue. Every one of the books was available in the local public library, which indeed put them on special display in the lobby when the dispute arose. Neither was there any ban on discussion of the ideas contained in the books — for example, we may suppose, Mr. Cleaver's vivid ideas about white men who pay black men to copulate with their wives.

At bottom, the question in the Long Island case dealt with the authority of a local school board to impose its ideas of community values on the books to be retained in junior- and senior-high school libraries. The effect of the court's judgment is to circumscribe that authority, though not to the degree tailored up some new constitutional rights never seen before, among them a "right to receive ideas." As applied in this case, this meant a right of teen-agers to read dirty books in a high school library. But as the dissenters sarcastically observed, this was a most curious right indeed.

This is how the new constitutional right is to work: If a school board decides not to buy "Soul on Ice" by Eldridge Cleaver in the first place, the right does not come into play. This will be true no matter the reasons or motivation for not purchasing the work. But once "Soul on Ice" has been acquired and placed on the library shelves, a problem of different constitutional magnitude arises. Now

Fear Worst Over Policy

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
JERUSALEM — Israel's once-dominant Labor Party is convinced that secret machinations between Alexander Haig and Menachem Begin not only paved the way for the invasion of Lebanon but pushed Israel into an exposed position carrying the danger of boomerang.

Labor Party leaders and political strategists will not speak out — yet — about their suspicions of collaboration on the Lebanon occupation or their fears about its meaning for the future. But bitterness is privately expressed by some top party leaders who themselves had total control over Israel's lifeline to the U.S. until Prime Minister Begin gained power five years ago.

That lifeline is now in the ambitious hands of a more truculent, more demanding political breed. The old Labor Party bosses — the late Golda Meir, Yigal Allon and Moshe Dayan, whose policies are now carried forward by Yitzhak Rabin, Shimon Peres and Abba Eban — never had a master plan for extending the territory of the Jewish state further into Islam. They suspect that Begin and Defense Minister Arik Sharon do have a plan that Al Haig was no innocent bystander.

Haig is finished as secretary of state, but Labor Party strategists have not yet found any change in the administration's treatment of the Begin-Sharon government. They fear that President Reagan's refusal to utter a word of criticism of Israel's bloody romp through Lebanon may not reflect true sentiment in the U.S., where public opinion can make or break the tiny state of Israel.

For the immediate future, the Begin-Sharon triumph in making a co-conspirator out of the Reagan administration in the Lebanon affair is perceived by Labor Party leaders as strengthening Begin's refusal to negotiate real Palestinian autonomy and his contempt for the promises of Camp David.

"Israel must accept U.N. Security Council Resolution 242, including some major withdrawal from the west Bank and must accept the autonomy provisions of Camp David," a Labor Party principal told us. But he views Begin now as not likely to dilute his demand for Israeli sovereignty over the West Bank and Gaza in view of Reagan's "quiescence" over Lebanon.

Another Labor Party principal, former foreign minister Abba Eban, was stunned when U.S. ambassador Sam Lewis described Sharon's invasion of Lebanon with words to this effect: Arik came up with a crazy idea and then made it work.

But leaders of the Labor Party publicly resisted the Begin-Sharon policy of laying waste Lebanese cities and surrounding Beirut. Whatever short-term victory may have been achieved, they believe the last thing Begin-Sharon militancy needed was a shot of Potomac adrenalin. Yet that is exactly what the Israeli government appears to be getting from Reagan.

Israel, just departed from the Suez Canal after heavy pressure from previous American administrations, now stands in physical possession of the most densely populated Mediterranean coastal area in the Arab world. Road signs in Hebrew are only one manifestation of solid Israeli control from the border to Beirut, one sign of the pervasive character of the Israeli occupation.

No one here sees the slightest chance of Israel withdrawing from Lebanon any time soon — perhaps not for years. That is the crystallization of Labor's private nightmare: that under the leadership of Begin-Sharon, new pretexts will always be found to avoid the serious accommodation with Arabs that the Labor Party knows is essential to Israel's statehood.

Strength For Today

SALESMANSHIP IN RELIGION

A very successful salesman once addressed a group of Christian believers as follows:

"The trouble with you Christians is that you don't sell what you have; for, without doubt, you have the best product that ever came on the market. You have truth, eternal life, salvation and joy to sell. You have the Bible — the greatest book ever written. It is your privilege to present to the world the greatest man that ever lived — the wisest, the kindest; so much so that he is acknowledged as the savior of the world. Yet to what extent are you selling what you have to sell? You need to work harder, to realize what your privileges are, and to begin selling what the world really wants."

There is more to religion, of course, than merely selling; but the Church has that to do, as well. The divine commission is that we go forth and be witnesses. There is no greater or more privileged duty than this. — Elisha Douglass

THIS AFTERNOON

Loophole Is Gone

By PAUL T. O'CONNOR
RALEIGH — If there's a hole in the tax laws, you can bet someone will find it. A number of North Carolina tax dodgers will be sorry to learn that the Revenue Department found them out and had their loophole closed.

When you begin a new job, your employer has you sign a card saying how many exemptions you will claim on your tax form. He then deducts taxes from your paycheck accordingly. On federal forms, you name a number of dependents. On state forms, you figure the value of your exemptions in dollars. So, a single man or woman would list one exemption for federal taxes and $2,200 for state.

Several hundred workers had discovered that you could claim the sky on your state form with impunity. As B.W. Brown, director of the State Personal Income Tax Division, explained, it was illegal to misrepresent your exemptions to the state. But, since the form was filed with your employer, these people were not technically breaking the law.

Instead of listing $4,700 in exemptions for a family of four, one of these workers might claim $20,000 — maybe his total yearly salary. The employer, therefore, would not be required to withhold any taxes. Brown said there were some outrageous examples of workers claiming enough exemptions for 100 dependents.

What was the advantage of doing this? Didn't they just end up having to pay the taxes on April 15? Yes and no. If someone didn't plan to stay in North Carolina very long, it was possible for him to leave the state without paying anything in taxes. It would be very difficult to chase this person down after he left the state. For those who stayed, there was the opportunity of taking the money that was due to the state, investing it at high interest rates, and earning money off the state's money.

The number of people doing this didn't amount to enough to seriously hurt the state, Brown said. But, it was unfair to other taxpayers. And, if it became too widespread, it could hurt the state. "How would you like it if your boss said that instead of paying you every month, we'll settle up at the end of the year," he asked as a way of explaining the state's position.

The Department of Revenue brought the matter to the Legislature's Revenue Laws Study Commission. The General Assembly quietly rewrote the law in the June session to close the loophole with a fairly potent penalty.

From now on, anyone found to have deliberately overstated their tax exemptions on their payroll deduction form will be subject to a penalty equal to 50 percent of the tax they failed to pay.

The Department of Revenue has statutory authority to impose this penalty and the taxpayer would have to appeal any department ruling to the secretary of revenue and then to the N.C. Tax Review Board before going to court.

Brown stressed that the law doesn't pertain to people who make honest mistakes in overestimating their exemptions. To impose the penalty, the department must find the worker furnished his employer with an exemption certificate "which contains information which has no reasonable basis and which results in less tax being withheld."

"This is not to penalize people who make an honest error but to deal with people who are filing (untrue exemptions) for various

Other Editors Say The Medical Bills

(News-Herald, Ahoskie)

Ouch! We have just read some statistics on rising health care costs, and they hurt. Discounting inflation, all Americans now pay 124 percent more for health care than we did when Medicare was instituted. Are we twice as healthy? Of course not. Then where has the money gone?

In the present system there is little incentive for doctors or hospitals to keep health care costs down and every incentive for them to balloon costs up. Government health programs and private insurance companies pay on a fee-for-services basis. The providers determine the need for services and the providers set the price of services.

Vulnerability to malpractice suits has made doctors order more tests and procedures, to protect themselves from litigation.

The promise of "free" health care, either through the government or private insurance, encourages many people to abuse their access to doctors for minor complaints. The cost of care has soared, but nobody minded because the tab was picked up by a third party. Americans have fallen out of touch with the economics of healing themselves.

New empty state coffers, a $100 billion-plus federal deficit and an ailing economy have caught us short. The Congressional Budget Office says there are two ways to slow costs:

OUT OF POCKET EXPENSES — Insured users of medical care could be required to pay a larger proportion of their bills themselves. A study shows that when families pay 25 percent of their bills, they used about 19 percent fewer services. Health coverage given by employers to employees could have high deductibles, requiring employees to pay the small bills but protecting them against the high costs of medical catastrophe. Users of Medicare could be required to pay smaller deductibles than working people, but higher deductibles than they have been paying.

PRE-PAID CARE — People could be encouraged to join health, maintenance organizations, HMOs. Instead of paying for each treatment, the HMO member pays a fee for a right to all services, and physicians monitor his health and determine what procedures are necessary. HMOs generally have lower costs than fee-for-service programs because HMO doctors hospitalize fewer patients.

Free Enterprise Does Not Apply, Says East

HAVELOCK, N.C. (AP) — U.S. Sen. John East, R-N.C., says the free enterprise system is a nice idea, but that it doesn't apply when it comes to the tobacco growing industry.

East, referring to the federal tobacco price support program, said at a news conference Wednesday that he would strongly oppose any attempt to eliminate the allotment and quota programs.

A House-approved bill to reform the tobacco support program has been introduced in the Senate.

"Only a reckless and radical person would suggest dismantling the programs," East said. "I will do everything I can to prevent it."

East defended the tobacco supports as a farming institution that, if eliminated, would adversely affect more people than the growers.

"It has been in effect for 40 years and people have acted accordingly," he said. "When people act in reliance to something you can't rip that out."

East delivered his speech at the seventh annual Graduation Recognition Ceremony for Marines at the Cherry Point Marine Air Base.

In his earlier address to the Marines, East said he will be in a position to serve on the Senate Armed Services Committee following the November election.

He said he supports President Reagan's commitment to national defense and he feels Reagan's policies have upgraded the country's image abroad.

Following his speech, East met with reporters and:

— Declined to say whether he would support an American peace-keeping force in Lebanon.

— Said he thinks the proposed balanced budget amendment is an idea whose time has come. He said 60 senators have already lined up behind the constitutional amendment and seven more are needed to pass it. He emphasized that it is time to cut spending rather than look for new ways to tax and considers the proposed eight-cent-a-pack tax on cigarettes a mistake.

— Criticized Sen. Edward

Kennedy's (D-Mass.) approach to a freeze on arms build-up.

— Said the Russians are already ahead in arms and a freeze would leave them in a superior position.

— Said he believes nuclear energy can be safe and it is a vital component of a creative energy policy in this country.

— Declined to say which Republicans he would support across the state, but did offer his support for House candidate Eugene "Red" McDaniel, of Buies Creek.

— Said, when asked about the rumors of a sex scandal in the Congress, that "To the point that they are true and valid charges, it is horrendous."

Doubts Story About Belushi

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police Chief Daryl Gates says he doubts the accuracy of published statements by a woman who said she injected cocaine and heroin into actor John Belushi before he died of a drug overdose.

At an informal news conference Wednesday, Gates was also harshly critical of the late comedian, saying Belushi "was nothing more than a guy looking for something and the only place he could find it was in drugs."

"He died vomiting in the toilet and lay on some bed nude and to me that's a disgusting way to die," Gates said. "Kids need to know that so we don't have this hero worship of a man who abused himself and really abused the public significantly."

A new investigation into Belushi's death was prompted by an article in the National Enquirer. It quoted Cathy Eveylin Smith as saying she administered an injection of heroin and cocaine to the 33-year-old Belushi before he died March 5 in a posh Hollywood bungalow.

Ms. Smith, 35, was questioned after Belushi's death and again last week in Toronto after the Enquirer article was published. "We may be chasing something that is not the truth," Gates said, referring to the Enquirer article. He said he was satisfied with the initial investigation and reopened it only after seeing the published statements attributed to Ms. Smith.

An attorney for Ms. Smith, who was paid $15,000 for the interview, has said she was misrepresented by the Enquirer article.

"After all the very intensive (police) interviewing of Ms. Smith, suddenly, for a fee, supposedly she gives another interview and says a different thing, which tells us maybe we're not pursuing the truth on this occasion," Gates said.

"I trust the initial interview (with police investigators) rather than the paid one," he said.

Enquirer editor Iain Calder has defended the accuracy of the article and said the tabloid would turn over tapes of the interview with Ms. Smith to Los Angeles police.

Police spokesman Lt. Dan Cook said Wednesday that the tapes had not yet been turned over to investigators and he did not know when they would be available.

Cook also said investigators who interviewed Ms. Smith a second time last week in Toronto were satisfied with her statement.

feared by Justice Powell. He lamented a future in which any teen-ager could haul school officials into court so that judges might rule on the ideas to which pupils must have access. It's not quite that bad.

Brennan's ludicrous opinion, with its jesuitical distinction between acquisition and removal of controversial books, is like the jackass, which has no pride of ancestry and no hope of posterity. The court is tired. It has quit for the summer. This too will pass away.

Family Of Saudi Prince Sees Arabian Nightmare

By RANDALL HACKLEY
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Once upon a time in this land of sun and palms, a Saudi prince and his wife's family rolled in on a carpet of wealth. They didn't receive a royal welcome.

Instead, these members of the Saudi royal family became involved in lawsuits, countersuits, police raids, money giveaways and even an allegation of enslavement that have kept them in the media spotlight.

The most prominent of the controversial visitors has been Prince Turki bin Abdul Aziz, a nephew of the late King Khaled, who has sued 12 members of the Metro Dade (Miami) Police Department for $210 million.

Abdul Aziz, 44, said the police acted "outrageously" when they burst into his bayfront condominium on Feb. 26 to search for an Egyptian nanny "allegedly being held against her will."

Police, who had a warrant, failed to find the woman but encountered fierce resistance from the prince's bodyguards. One officer was felled by a kick in the groin. Another injured her head in a fall and said her wrist was slammed in a door by the prince's mother-in-law who allegedly bit a detective's hand.

Abdul Aziz's 25-year-old wife, Princess Hend, angered when the policewoman searched her mother's room, reportedly spit at police and shouted: "Out! Out of my house! I will break your nose!"

Police and prosecutors now say the prince — who returned home last month for Khaled's funeral — is a "stranger in a strange land," and is snubbing the law and his American welcome. The police officers countersued.

Before his departure, the prince and his family sought to end the suit, but the police officers refused.

Police pressed prosecutors to file assault charges. Dade State Attorney Janet Reno wrote federal officials in Washington saying the prince's claim to diplomatic immunity was "a sham."

However, on April 2, the State Department granted diplomatic immunity to Abdul Aziz, who was a Saudi deputy defense minister in the mid-1970s.

In May, the prince offered $100,000 to police if they would drop their countersuit. It was rejected.

Abdul Aziz and two brothers-in-law then began a two-month series of contributions to local hospitals, universities and cultural boards. Some $500,000 was donated. On June 7, the prince dropped his suit.

Abdul Aziz isn't the only member in his family to attract attention.

One of his brothers-in-law, Sheik Mohammed al Fassi, was arrested Tuesday in his suite at the luxury Diplomat Hotel in Hollywood, Fla. The hotel says al Fassi ran up a $1.5 million tab for the months of May and June and hasn't paid.

He was charged with defrauding an innkeeper, a third-degree felony. He posted bond of $1,000 and was released, pending an appearance afe.

Al Fassi had rented two floors of the posh, beachfront hotel for himself, one of his wives, four children and an extensive entourage.

A spokesman for the sheik blamed the unpaid bill problem on the Moslem practice of remaining inactive during the holy period of Ramadan, the distraction of Khaled's recent death and overcharging by the hotel.

The 28-year-old al Fassi, with a fortune estimated at $6 billion, has other problems. He has been sued for divorce by first wife, Dena, who hired celebrity divorce specialist Marvin Mitchelson to seek half her husband's net worth.

His Beverly Hills, Calif., mansion — decorated in garish colors and discreetly painted nude statues — was ruined by an arsonist two years ago.

He also upset Florida residents last year when he hired half the Hollywood police force for round-the-clock protection at the Diplomat.

Hollywood Police Chief Sam Martin halted the $11-an-hour moonlighting, saying some workers were so tired from their extra jobs they fell asleep at work.

Last year, al Fassi's son, Turki, had a fourth birthday, so the proud father recruited the children of 20 Hollywood city officials to serve as friends for a day. He spent a reported $150,000 on the party, including rental of an 85-foot yacht and $100 tips for attending adults.

More recently, al Fassi kept officials in the Miami suburb of Opa-locka waiting nearly three hours in the rain until he and a retinue of 26 arrived to present a $30,000 check to the city which has a faded Azab motif and a city hall which resembles a mosque. The sheik says he became lost driving through the city.

His 19-year-old brother, Tarek al Fassi, flies by helicopter from his fan-shaped estate in Golden Beach to classes and soccer practice at Florida International University.

Last month, the teen-ager was forced to come up with $21,000 after a local car company put a lien on his $78,000 Lamborghini when the youth refused to pay for repairs.

In mid-June, Tarek al Fassi donated $15,000 to his tiny adopted hometown for beautification funds, then threw a party to celebrate his gift-giving and spent nearly $60,000 on flowers.

Cancer Warning On Coffee Is Ignored

BOSTON (AP) — Many coffee drinkers heard about a medical study that links their morning brew with cancer of the pancreas, but a survey says their reaction was generally the same: They ignored it.

The study, made public in March 1981, said people who drink a cup or two of coffee a day are nearly twice as likely as non-drinkers to develop this form of cancer. The Harvard researchers who did the work cautioned that their discovery should be verified by other studies.

The report received wide publicity, and four months later, researchers from the University of New Mexico Medical Center conducted a telephone survey to find out what effect it had on people's habits.

They interviewed 566 people and found that 70 percent were coffee drinkers. Only one person contacted had specifically cut down on coffee consumption because of the article's findings, although 58 percent of the people said they knew about the coffee study.

"Regardless of the intent of the authors and media, the association of coffee drinking with cancer of the pancreas was presented to the public in a fashion that might have affected behavior," the researchers noted. "The data from our survey clearly indicated that this information had little long-term effect."

The survey was directed by Dr. Jonathan M. Samet and published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, which printed the original coffee study.

Gunman Robbed Durham Bank

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — The Guaranty State Bank branch in Durham's Bragtown community was robbed Wednesday morning by an armed man wearing a ski mask who ordered the tellers to fill a plastic bag with money.

Neither bank officials nor investigators disclosed the amount of money taken, and police have made no arrests in the case.

According to a police report, the robber came into the bank about 10:30 a.m.

He pointed a gun at one of the tellers and then threw her a brown plastic bag, the report said. He demanded that she fill the bag with money and also told two other tellers in the bank to fill up the bag, it said. He then left the bank, got into a car and drove away, police said.

N.C. Utility Spokesman Defends Safety Records

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A Duke Power Co., spokesman, defending the utility in light of a recently released government study of nuclear plant incidents that might have led to more serious accidents, says the utility's safety record is "outstanding."

"We have good trained operators who in fact are operating the plants safely," said Ira Kaplan, the Charlotte-based utility's director of community programs. "Because of that we've only had one Three Mile Island. The record speaks for itself."

"We have been operating a commercial nuclear power facility for over 25 years and the safety record has been outstanding," he said.

The study, done for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission by the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee, was issued by the NRC July 1 but was made public Tuesday by Public Citizen's Critical Mass Energy Project, a group founded by consumer advocate Ralph Nader.

Critical Mass said the study found 141 incidents between 1969 and 1979 that had the potential to lead to a meltdown, the most dangerous of nuclear accidents.

Kaplan's remarks referred to the nation's worst reactor accident in 1979 at Three Mile Island in Middletown, Pa. In that incident, a loss of coolant to the reactor damaged 90 percent of the fuel core.

He said all utilities have instituted design changes, new operating procedures, additional hardware and improved operator training since Three Mile Island. He said the large number of changes made the report almost outdated.

The study showed that Carolina Power and Light Co.'s Brunswick Unit 2 had seven of the 141 incidents — more than any other single unit on the list of 58 utilities — according to the Critical Mass version of the report.

The report also said there were three incidents at Brunswick Unit 1, three at CP&L's Robinson Unit 2 in South Carolina, two at Duke's Oconee Unit 1, three at Oconee Unit 2 and two at Oconee Unit 3.

Wayne Ennis, a CP&L spokesman, said he would not have a response until the company had time to study the report.

Wells Eddleman, of the North Carolina Public Interest

Research Group in Durham, said CP&L units had 13 of the 141 accidents — the second highest number of any utility. He said Commonwealth Edison's seven reactors in Illinois had 14 of the nuclear incidents.

"This means that CP&L nuclear operations are unusually dangerous to the public," Eddleman said.

"People know the Brunswick plant has been costing them more on light bills," Eddleman said, referring to outages at the unit that have forced CP&L to buy more expensive power from other utilities. "But most people didn't know how many serious safety problems they were having."

Richard Udell, a Critical Mass analyst, said the study "verifies... that nuclear power plants are riddled with design errors and their operation plagued by equipment failures and human errors."

The incidents fell into four categories — loss of the material used to cool the atomic core; loss of offsite power used as an emergency backup; loss of feedwater, which removes heat from the atomic core; and main steam line breaks, causing heat to be removed too quickly from the atomic core.

The North Carolina utilities with nuclear incidents on the list are:

Robinson Unit 2 — May 1, 1975, loss of coolant
Robinson Unit 2 — Oct. 26, 1977, main steam line break
Robinson Unit 2 — Nov. 23, 1977, loss of coolant
Duke Power Co.
Oconee Unit 1 — Dec. 19, 1975, loss of coolant
Oconee Units 1 and 2 — Sept. 26, 1979, loss of offsite power
Oconee Unit 2 — Feb. 6, 1975, loss of offsite power
Oconee Unit 2 — Oct. 24, 1979, loss of coolant
Oconee Unit 3 — April 19, 1975, loss of offsite power
Oconee Unit 3 — June 13, 1975, loss of coolant

Twenty-Cent Postage Stamp To Last Into 1984, Claims Report

By FRANCES D'EMILIO
Associated Press Writer

SAN BRUNO, Calif. (AP) — The price of a first-class stamp should stay at 20 cents through early 1984, says the head of the U.S. Postal Service, which also gets good marks from an outside panel for cutting costs and improving productivity.

The National Academy of Public Administration released a year-long evaluation, financed by the postal service, at a monthly meeting Wednesday of the postal Board of Governors.

The academy began the $500,000 study in July 1981, the 10th anniversary of the creation of the service as an independent federal agency. Its predecessor, the Post Office Department, had been a cabinet department.

Before his agency was praised by the chairman of the study panel, Postmaster General William F. Bolger told fellow governors that the postal service was $24 million in the black for the 28-day period ending June 11. An $84 million deficit had been anticipated.

The unexpected surplus, largely due to a lower-than-projected increase in consumer prices which held down pay increases, means the 20-cent stamp will stick around a few months longer than expected, Bolger said in an interview.

He predicted no hike in the stamp price "through early 1984." Before the latest fiscal month, the Postal Service was about $600 million in the black, a spokesman said.

Alan Dean, chairman of the study panel and former deputy assistant director of the federal Office of Management and Budget, gave the postal service a "B-plus for improvement" since its creation, but the study summary cautioned: "The USPS, in its successful efforts to reduce costs and increase productivity, seems to have pursued these objectives at some sacrifice in employee courtesy and customer services and needs to redress this imbalance."

The panel, whose 10 members include a university president, a U.S. Army general and a former comptroller general of the United States, also called for a "greater sense of teamwork" among postal workers, and urged "a major effort to simplify the confusing array of subclasses and distinctions within each of the four classes of mail."

The 228-page report noted, however, that letters sorted by machine are more likely to go astray than those sorted by hand.

The panel found that United Parcel Service, a private company, pays higher wages than the Postal Service, does a bigger volume of parcel delivery, and could teach the Postal Service about efficiency.

The panel recommended a bigger budget and staff for research and development of technology, and said better public relations would increase acceptance of a proposed nine-digit ZIP code and soothe customers of tiny post offices that have been shut down.

Octopus His Idea Of Food

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — It has eight tentacles, three hearts, two eyes and no bones, and Brian Hartwick likes it curried.

Hartwick, a marine biologist at Simon Fraser University, says a year-long Canadian government study has proven the Pacific octopus is both palatable and apparently plentiful enough to start a new West Coast fishery.

"There is a bait market for octopus already so I feel the best potential is developing octopus as a food fish," Hartwick said. "The Greeks, Spanish and Italians place a lot of importance on octopus, so why not Canadians?"

Hartwick's research team has established that the octopus can be harvested by traps.

The octopus belongs to the large group of shellfish called mollusks, which includes clams and oysters. But, like squid, it is a mollusk that has no outside shell.

"Octopus can be prepared in many different ways and the people working for me and the fishermen's wives in Tofino (a community on the west coast of Vancouver Island) tried out lots of experiments," Hartwick said.

"I think my favorite is curried octopus," he added. "But we tried all kinds of marinades after pressure cooking the octopus. And I've even tasted octopus flavored so that you could not tell it from smoked oysters."

Predicts End Of Primary Runoff

By The Associated Press
State Elections Director Alex Brock says the development of the two-party system in North Carolina may result in some changes in how runoffs are determined in primary races.

A runoff is required in North Carolina if no candidate gets more than 50 percent of the primary vote and if opponents don't waive the right to a runoff.

Brock says the runoff developed as a safety valve in the days when there were few Republican candidates and a Democratic primary victory was "tantamount to election."

He says the state is developing more of a two-party system, and foresees an eventual change, perhaps making 42 percent of the vote enough to win a primary.

"I don't think you'll ever see a total elimination (of runoffs)," Brock said. "But we're a very cautious state philosophically when it comes to election procedure."

"The runoff system is peculiar mainly to the Southern states," said Federal Election Commission specialist Fred Eiland. "In the other states, it's an obvious thing that the one who gets the most votes is the winner."

Forty-one states do not have runoff in primaries.

Other states that do include South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Texas and Florida.

There have been at least five unsuccessful proposals to change the system in the last 18 years.

It is expected to cost about $500,000 to hold a July 27 runoff for the Democratic nomination in North Carolina's 2nd Congressional District and for two Court of Appeals judgeships. All 100 counties will have to hold runoffs for the judgeships although only about 65 counties have local runoffs.

California elections spokesman Edward Arnold said his state saves up to $18 million per election by having no runoffs.

In Michigan, the state saves about $5 million per election by avoiding runoffs.

"That's one of the benefits of not having a runoff," said Michigan elections spokesman David Peterson. "Cost is a factor, especially when an industrial state like ours is in dire need."

Report Britt Plans Resign

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Associate Justice David Maxwell Britt of the North Carolina Supreme Court has refused to confirm or deny a published report that he has submitted his resignation.

A story in today's editions of the News & Observer of Raleigh said Britt had submitted his resignation effective July 31 to Gov. James B. Hunt.

The newspaper also reported there was speculation that Hunt would appoint Appeals Court Judge Harry C. Martin, 62, to the seat Britt has held for four years.

Hunt chose Martin to succeed Britt on the lower appellate court after naming Britt to the Supreme Court in 1978.

Britt, 65, of Robeson County, would neither confirm nor deny that he has submitted his resignation when he was contacted at his home Wednesday night, the newspaper said, adding that he said he would make a statement at a later date.

Martin told the newspaper he knew nothing about a possible appointment to the high court, but when asked if he would be interested said, "I can confirm that."

Hunt has previously appointed J. Phil Carlton of Pinetops, Burley B. Mitchell Jr. of Raleigh and Louis B. Meyer of Wilson.

Other members of the state's highest court are Chief Justice Joseph Brnach of Halifax County, J. William Copeland of Hertford County and James G. Exum Jr. of Greene and Guilford Counties.

By DON McLEOD
AP Political Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats are hopping mad about a Republican television commercial telling voters that Social Security recipients can thank President Reagan for the extra money in their checks this month.

The latter Social Security checks stem from an automatic cost-of-living increase, which Democrats claim the Reagan administration tried to delay and cut. The increase goes into effect each July.

"The Reagan administration failed to delay this year's COLA for only one reason ... because we in Congress refused to go along with it," House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said Wednesday.

But that's not what the GOP's new $1 million commercial says. The television spot features a grandfatherly postman who smiles fondly into the camera and says he's "probably one of the most popular people in town."

"I'm delivering Social Security checks with the 7.4 percent cost of living raise that President Reagan promised," the mailman says. "He promised that raise and he kept his promise, in spite of those sticks in the mud who tried to keep him from doing what we elected him to do."

"President Reagan has made only a beginning, but he has kept his word and it is a beginning," the mailman concludes. "For gosh sake, let's give the guy a chance."

The commercial started running Tuesday in 58 cities and will continue through July 15. Another 32 cities will be added later.

The Democrats were lining up Wednesday to denounce the Republican postman and his "lies to the American people," as O'Neill put it.

"I don't know why everybody's complaining about it," Republican Party Chairman Richard Richards said. "We've just created a nice little commercial."

But O'Neill likened the new commercials to the note that former President Nixon had inserted with the July checks in 1972, the year that Congress first hitched Social Security benefits to the rising cost of living.

"To attempt to portray this Republican administration as responsible for the July COLA is a blatant act of political hypocrisy," Democratic Party Chairman Charles T. Manatt said.

Pauling Disputes Laetrile Findings

BOSTON (AP) — Nobel Laureate Linus Pauling says there's evidence that Laetrile and metabolic therapy have some value against cancer, despite a major study that found the combination to be worthless.

In a letter in today's New England Journal of Medicine, Pauling criticized the conclusions of a Mayo Clinic study conducted for the National Cancer Institute.

"It is my opinion," he wrote, "that there probably was a beneficial effect, including prolongation of survival."

Pauling, who won the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1954, noted that cancer patients treated with Laetrile and metabolic therapy survived an average of almost five months. He said other studies have shown that people with incurable cancer ordinarily survive about 1½ months.

He also said the study "is marred by other errors and imperfections."

In the study, metabolic therapy included high doses of vitamins and enzymes and was combined with a health food diet.

Dr. Charles G. Moertel, who directed the Laetrile study, responded in the journal that Pauling's support for metabolic therapy was an "obviously fallacious claim."

Moertel said Pauling's survival statistics were based on a comparison of two totally dissimilar groups of patients.

"Dr. Pauling takes venerable dramatic license in claiming that our report is marred by errors and imperfections," Moertel said. "In the single example that he cites, there was no error at all."

Moertel's study, conducted for the National Cancer Institute, found that Laetrile did not cure or stabilize cancer or relieve the victims' symptoms.

Laetrile is a brand of amygdalin, a substance derived from apricot pits. Although it is promoted by some as a cancer cure, Laetrile is generally rejected by the medical establishment.

Tide Of Union

STRAUSBOURG, France (AP) — The European Parliament has overwhelmingly approved a resolution calling for the creation of a European Union that would be able to disperse funds and promote a convergence of policies among member states.

The union would be composed of the present European Parliament — which has mostly advisory powers — and the present council of ministers, which is the only group that can enact Common Market legislation.

Reserve Board Obstacle To Reagan Policy: Kemp

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Congressman Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., stumping for Republicans in North Carolina, says monetary policies enacted during former President Carter's administration are responsible for high inflation.

"I'm blaming the economy we're in on high interest rates and blaming high interest rates on the monetary policy we've followed since 1979," Kemp said.

He also said President Reagan's economic policy is being frustrated by a artificially high interest rate policy of the Federal Reserve Board.

Kemp said he was urging the Reagan White House to change the makeup, if necessary, of the Fed in order to alter its monetary policy. He said the Federal Reserve Board is "following a policy which has destroyed other economies."

Kemp made the comments during interviews upon his arrival Wednesday at the Raleigh-Durham airport, and at a $100 a plate fundraiser Wednesday for Republican congressional candidates.

State GOP Chairman David Flaherty said Republican congressional candidates got to keep half of the money for each ticket they sold to the dinner. About 110 people were in attendance. Flaherty said attendance was low because the GOP did not have much time to publicize the event.

Kemp will go to Asheville today for a fundraiser for William Cobey, the GOP candidate for Congress in the 4th District. Kemp will fly to Rocky Mount later in the day to stump for 2nd District GOP congressional candidate John W. "Jack" Marin.

Kemp, of Buffalo, was a primary author of the Kemp-Roth tax cut bill, embraced by President Reagan and passed by Congress last year. It sat in place a three-part income tax cut, and the second phase — a 10 percent cut — took effect July 1.

Kemp, defending the tax cut in light of the recession, said it had not had an opportunity to work fully because of the Fed's grip on credit.

"There has to be a change in monetary policy if we're to get some liquidity, some oxygen, to the economy," he said.

He said the Federal Reserve should "restore a standard" for money, such as by targeting commodity prices, the price of gold or the value of currency.

Kemp, responding to questions from reporters after his speech, said he advocated a monetary standard based on a combination of indexes rather than a return to a gold standard alone.

Kemp, an architect of the Republicans' supply-side tax cut program, said the cuts are not to be blamed for the current economic recession.

"I would like to have gone further and faster. I don't want to stop until we get the rates down even farther," Kemp said.

"The tax reform is not the problem," he added. "The real problem in the economy is the artificially high interest rate policy of the federal reserve, and therein lies the real secret to whether or not the president is going to be truly successful in turning around the American economy. We need monetary reform."

Kemp also defended Reagan's economic program.

"There's not going to be an American dream if we don't have a Republican Congress and President Reagan successful in 1982 and 1984," Kemp said.

Kemp said the tax cut has also been partially offset by other tax increases, such as for Social Security and "bracket creep," in which higher salaries throw individuals into higher tax brackets.

He said he opposed a tax increase bill passed by the Senate Finance Committee that would raise cigarette taxes, among other items, to partially make up for the federal deficit.

APPEAR FOR ARRAIGNMENT — Six of seven Boston parking meter collectors charged with stealing $500,000 from the city's meters stand at their arraignment in Boston Municipal Court Wednesday as defense attorney Martin Loppo gestures in foreground. (AP Laserphoto)

Investigators Find Hoard Of Cash In Parking Meter Thefts

BOSTON (AP) — Investigators searching for money stolen from city parking meters say they found $135,000 cached in safe deposit boxes owned by one of seven meter collectors arrested in the case.

Assistant District Attorney Leonard J. Henson said

Wednesday that $72,000 and $63,000 in $100, $20 and $10 bills were discovered in two safe deposit boxes owned by Robert Rocha, 31, of Stoughton. He said keys to the boxes were found in a search of Rocha's house Tuesday.

Rocha and five other meter collectors pleaded innocent Wednesday to larceny of more than $100 and were released on $1,000 bail. The seventh man charged, Ralph F. Voto, 43, was taken to a hospital after suffering a seizure in court and will be arraigned later.

City officials estimate the alleged meter-skimming scheme cost the city $500,000 last year, but did not know how many years it has been going on. All seven defendants have worked for the Boston Traffic and Parking Department since at least 1975.

Henson said a grand jury investigation will begin next week.

City officials say the defendants kept about $400 a day — mostly in quarters — as they emptied Boston's 6,200 parking meters.

Six of the seven were arrested Tuesday afternoon shortly after they checked out of work. The seventh man was not working that day, but turned himself.

Also arrested were William R. Burt, 30; Daniel J. Sullivan, 37; Fred J. Girolamo, 54; Ronald A. DeSimone, 28, and William J. Coffey, 42.

Officials said that approximately $1,000 in quarters, including some marked earlier by investigators, were recovered from a car driven by one of the men arrested. Law enforcement officials said they removed 13 bags of coins from Burt's home in Walpole. Officials estimated there was $5,000 to $6,000 in the bags.

Officials said the money had been taken from the parking meter boxes primarily by using pieces of cloth to block a part of the meters' security system.

Meanwhile, the city has hired the Brink's security service to collect parking meter revenue and has opened bids for 10,000 new, vandal-proof meters.

Staff Cutbacks At Roberts' Hospital

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A hospital founded by evangelist Oral Roberts in the face of local opposition is cutting staff due to lack of patients, but the facility still has a bright future, officials say.

The City of Faith hospital will lay off or reassign about 12 percent of its 800 employees due to a patient drop of about 15 percent under what had been anticipated," hospital spokesman Tim Caldwell said Wednesday.

The hospital, which opened in November 1981 with approval for 294 beds, averaged 34 patients per day from November through January and 50 per day in June, Caldwell said.

James E. Winslow, chief executive officer, said the hospital adjacent to the Oral Roberts University campus is "overstaffed in some areas compared to the demand for services."

About 50 support personnel are being laid off while 50 registered nurses will be placed in a "cooperative arrangement" with a guaranteed salary at other area institutions, Caldwell said. Details of the cooperative arrangement are being worked out, he said.

Roberts has said he was instructed by God to build the City of Faith to provide a unique combination of medical care and prayer. He wanted a 777-bed hospital but the Oklahoma Health Planning Commission approved only a 294-bed facility with space for 777 beds.

Roberts won permission to open the City of Faith after a court battle with the Tulsa Area Hospital Council, which claimed Tulsa already had too many hospital beds.

Caldwell said it is a misconception that only Roberts' followers can seek treatment at the City of Faith.

"We are trying to get the word out nationally that it is a major medical center," Caldwell said. "We think that the long term outlook is still very bright."

Roberts had said the hospital would not draw its patients from the Tulsa area but would bring the evangelist's "partners" from around the world to Tulsa to seek medical help.

"People have had more difficulty traveling nationally than we had expected," Caldwell said, adding that the staff of physicians in the first few months was "not large enough or diverse enough" to meet the needs of all the potential patients.

"That's being remedied," he said.

Still Uncertain As To Waterbury's Toll

WATERBURY, Conn. (AP) — Police expect to find still more bodies in the charred wreckage of two apartment buildings, with the death toll in this city's deadliest fire already a tentative 10.

Firefighters and police searched through the rubble of the two five-story buildings in near 90-degree heat Wednesday, recovering one body.

"It was one of the bodies we expected to find in that area, and we expect to find more tomorrow," said police detective Martin Eagan, an arson investigator.

Israel Madera Flores, 29, of Waterbury man has been arraigned on three counts of arson-murder and one count of arson in connection with the Monday morning fire.

Police believe they have recovered the bodies of 10 victims, but they can not be sure until autopsies are performed.

"The only way we are going to know who these people were is if they went to a dentist," police Lt. Valentine Bocchicchio said. "There's no other way of identifying them."

Police said they had a list of tenants, but would not speculate on who might be victims.

"Just because they haven't contacted authorities doesn't mean they died in there," Bocchicchio said.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina f.o.b. duck broiler market was higher. Supplies moderate. Demand good. Weights desirable. The duck weighted average price for this week is 46.21 for small purchases of plant grade broilers picked up at processing plants. Estimated slaughter today, 1,848,000.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined broadly today with bank issues leading the retreat.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which managed a net advance of 2.67 points Tuesday and Wednesday, fell 7.71 to 791.95 by noon.

Losers held a lead of almost 3 to 1 over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said the market in general, and bank stocks in particular, were depressed by concern over the failure of the Penn Square Bank of Oklahoma City, which was declared insolvent Monday.

Continental Illinois, which has said it expects to report a second-quarter loss as a result of its loan dealings with Penn Square, dropped 1 1/4 to 18 1/2.

Among other actively traded bank stocks, Citicorp fell 1 1/2 to 21 1/2, and Chase Manhattan was down 1 1/2 to 35 1/2.

Brokers also said the market was attracting little buying interest in the face of stiff competition from short-term interest-bearing securities such as Treasury bills.

At present levels of interest rates, those securities offer high yields, easy-in-easy-out liquidity, and what most investors regard as maximum safety.

The NYSE's composite index lost .70 to 61.00. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off 2.93 at 243.23.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 25.12 million shares at noon, against 19.18 million at the same point Wednesday.

Federal Ruling That Fetus Is A Person May Set New Precedent

By MARTIN J. WATERS
 Associated Press Writer
HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A ruling by a federal judge that a fetus has the right to sue could have far-reaching effects in abortion cases, says a legal scholar, while a pro-abortion group calls it a "dangerous precedent."

In a ruling Tuesday, U.S. District Court Judge T. Emmet Clarke said a 5 1/2-month-old fetus had the right to sue for damages under an 1871 federal civil rights law.

The judge ruled in a police brutality case that Paul Douglas, now 9 months old, has an equal and independent right with his mother, Rosalee Douglas, to sue the Hartford Police Department and two city police officers.

Mrs. Douglas was 5 1/2 months pregnant in July 1981 when she allegedly was beaten in the yard of her

Hartford home by one officer while the other stood by.

The suit says the fetus suffered unspecified serious physical injuries as a result of the beating, and seeks $250,000 for mother and son. It is not expected to come to trial until next year.

Nancy Lister, a spokeswoman for the National Abortion Rights Action League, called the ruling a "dangerous precedent," but said the battle over abortion is now in Congress and state legislatures, not the courts.

"What the pro-choice majority of this country ... has to be concerned over is a constitutional amendment going through the houses of Congress and coming to the states," she said.

John Mackey, general counsel for the Ad Hoc Committee in Defense of Life, an anti-abortion group, said Wednesday, "I'm hopeful, but I don't see any great panacea."

"What you're talking about is strictly the right to sue. It's a schizophrenic society that gives the unborn the right to sue but not the right to life," Mackey said by telephone from Washington.

He said it would take a constitutional amendment to overturn the 1973 U.S. Supreme Court ruling legalizing first-trimester abortions.

Geoffrey C. Hazard Jr., a law professor at Yale University, said the decision raises important possibilities if it becomes a precedent beyond Connecticut, one of 94 districts in the federal court system.

"This case here involves damage to the fetus without permission from the mother, which is very different from abortion. But now the argument could be raised that once you have a viable fetus, since it is a person, the mother cannot legally give permission for an abortion," Hazard said.

In his nine-page decision Clarke acknowledged that earlier federal court cases have rejected attempts to gain fetuses the right to sue.

"The court finds (however) that recent and well-established trends in the state courts, including those in Connecticut, have expanded the legal rights of the viable fetus in a wide variety of contexts," he said.

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that a fetus becomes viable — able to live outside the mother — sometime in the sixth month of pregnancy.

Arrest Trio In Theft Of Flag

Greenville police early today arrested three young men on larceny charges after they allegedly took a United States flag from a pole at McDonald's restaurant at 301 E. 10th St.

Bond for the three was set at $200 each, pending hearing of the case in court.

Passenger Train Crash Charged Seven Youths

By YVONNE CHILIK

Associated Press Writer
FAIR LAWN, N.J. (AP) — Seven teen-agers were charged today with tripping a switch that caused a passenger train to careen off the tracks at 60 mph and crash into a spaghetti factory, killing the engineer, authorities said.

Police Capt. William Gormann said the youths, all from the area, were charged with manslaughter. Their names and ages were not immediately available.

"It appears that someone threw the switch and that the switch was in the wrong position," Martin E. Robins, deputy executive director of NJ Transit, the state agency that owns the Conrail-operated train. "The train hit that switch at 60 mph and careened off the tracks."

The seven-car train with nine people aboard was en route from Suffern, N.Y., to Hoboken, N.J., when it derailed about 9:45 p.m. Wednesday, said Fair Lawn Fire Department Chief Ronald Grant.

The engineer was identified as John Duffy, in his 50s, of Park Ridge in Bergen County, said Conrail spokesman Art Jensen.

Duffy was killed instantly, said Grant. Listed in guarded condition early today at Barnett Hospital in Paterson was Joseph Sandora, in his teens, of Jersey City.

Two other people were treated for minor injuries, officials said.

The train traveled down a siding and smashed through the brick wall of the Columbia Spaghetti Co. factory, leaving behind a gaping hole and passenger cars strewn about, Grant said.

"Two people were trapped in the front of the train, five or six others walked off by themselves," he said.

Fair Lawn Patrolman Henry Michalski said there were three crewmembers and six passengers aboard the train.

Scores of firefighters, police officers and rescue squad volunteers responded to the accident, which occurred near Route 4, a busy highway through this community about 15 miles from New York City.

The county prosecutor's office is conducting a homicide investigation, Robins said. Rescue workers at the scene said the switch

Hunt Urges Revisions

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt has sent members of the U.S. Senate letters urging them to approve legislation to revise the federal tobacco-support program because the elimination of the program could result in "chaos" for tobacco farmers.

The governor said the bill needs to become law quickly so it can take effect in time for the 1982 marketing season. Hunt opposed adding any amendments to the House bill, which opponents such as Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., have threatened to do.

The Senate is scheduled to consider the tobacco bill immediately after returning from its July 4 recess.

"I cannot overemphasize to you the importance of the tobacco program to North Carolina," Hunt said in the letter. "It is the foundation for the tobacco economy in our state and, thus, our entire economic well-being."

"Without this program we would not have an orderly marketing system for tobacco, and farm communities in tobacco areas would face financial chaos," Hunt added.

Hunt expressed particular interest in the portion of a House-passed bill aimed at making the price-support and production-control parts of the program self supporting.

"Tobacco farmers in our state and across the nation have taken a a courageous step in guaranteeing that their program will not cost the American taxpayer one penny," Hunt said.

'Intervention' In Haitian Ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The release of 1,800 Haitians from detention camps across the country should not be decided by the courts, the Justice Department has said in a brief seeking to overturn a judge's ruling that the immigrants be freed.

The brief filed Wednesday with the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta asks that the ruling last week by U.S. District Judge Eugene Spellman in Miami favoring release of the Haitians be stayed immediately.

The administration calls the ruling "unwarranted judicial intervention into a sensitive area, which, under the separation of powers, has been reserved to the political branches of government," — the executive and Congress.

Refugee relief agencies say they will wait for a decision from the appeals court before entering the camps to help the Haitians get resettled elsewhere.

Page Marsh Has Four Shot Lead On Field In Twin States Girls

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Despite losing her concentration on the 14th hole and taking a double bogey, Jamestown's Page Marsh carded an even-par 72 yesterday at Brook Valley and held a comfortable four-stroke lead at the halfway point of the Twin States Junior Girls Golf Championship.

Marsh, the defending champion, is seeking to become only the fourth-ever three-time winner of the tournament, which attracts a field from the two Carolinas.

The 18-year-old rising sophomore at North Carolina toured the front side at Brook Valley one under par and had picked up another stroke before running into trouble on the 14th hole. Then, she added a bogey on the 15 before recovering to finish at even par.

In second place in the championship flight is April Powers of Charlotte who carded a 76. Powers had a 40 on the front side, but came back with an even par 36 on the back. Third was Leslie Brown, also of Charlotte, in with a 78, while Paula Brzostowski of Pinehurst was fourth at 79.

Greenville's Susan Corbett, the defending club champion at Brook Valley, ran into putting woes during the day and finished with an 80. She rounds out the championship flight.

Four girls are knotted for first place in the first flight. Kim Davis of Elizabeth City, who had a hole-in-one on the 12th hole during Tuesday's practice round, was tied with Paige Cribb of Georgetown, S.C.; Shelley Laney of Charlotte; and Tracy Ouimet, also of Charlotte. They hold a one-shot lead over Elizabeth MacFie of Camden, S.C., who was in at 83.

Lori Perry of Prosperity, S.C. and Barbara Koosa of Columbia, S.C., are tied for the lead in the second flight, both in at 93. Amber Marsh of Jamestown, sister of the championship leader, is third at 94.

In the sub-juniors, Adena Briles leads with a 51, while Greenville's Charles Cox had a 73. Sub-juniors play only nine holes each day.

Marsh also captured a putting contest held at the start of the event, beating her sister, Margaret Will and Powers in a nine-hole playoff on the Brook Valley putting green. All four had been tied at one-under after nine holes, and Marsh finished first in the second round with a two-under score.

In seeking to become the fourth three-time winner of the tournament, Page would join select company. Former three time winners include former touring pro Debra Rhodes (1967-69), and present tour members Donna Horton (1970-72) and Beth Daniel (1973-75).

Marsh won the event in 1979, becoming the first 15-year-old to win, and giving her a chance to win it an unprecedented four times, but she failed to defend in 1980, winning again in 1981.

This year, she's playing with somewhat of a handicap, having had several wisdom teeth extracted last Thursday. "I haven't played in since then, but I'm pleased with the way

I'm playing in the event."

Marsh has been unable to eat normally during the period, and is somewhat weakened and has been allowed to use a golf cart during play.

"I was disappointed in my mental lapse on the 14th hole," she admitted — the low point of her round. On the hole, she had failed to draw the ball around the dogleg-left fairway, ending up in the rough to the right of the cart path. She missed the shot and again ended up in the rough, chipping from there into the edge of a trap guarding the front of the green. After reaching in four, she two-putted for the double-bogey.

She followed that by missing the green on 15 and two-putting. "I really wasn't in that bad a shape, but I didn't hit the ball with a lot of confidence. Then, on the 15th hole, I just didn't get back into the rhythm of the game."

On the front side, Page fell one off par with a three-putt green at four, but birdied five and nine to finish one ahead. At 17, she putted from the fringe

State's Brinson Shuts Out ECU On Fine Four Hit Effort By 3-0

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

N.C. State, one evening after relinquishing its share of first place in the North State Summer League, inched closer to the top and pushed East Carolina further into the cellar Wednesday night.

Led by Hugh Brinson's four-hit, 10-strike out effort, the Wolfpack eased by East Carolina, 3-0, last night at Harrington Field to close to within a half game of idle Campbell.

Campbell, which defeated NCSU Tuesday night to take over first, is 18-7. The Wolfpack is 18-8. The Pirates, on the other hand, are 7-19, two games back of fourth place North Carolina (8-16), which did not play last night.

With Brinson on the mound, NCSU scored all the runs it needed in the first when Tracy Black singled home Artie Hall to take a 1-0 lead. NCSU added a run to its lead in the fifth and seventh.

Brinson, a right-hander, gave up a single to Ricky Nichols to open the first and yielded singles to Robert Langston in the third and fifth. The Pirates' only other hit was a sixth-inning single by Todd Evans.

Along with his 10 strike outs, Brinson, a rising sophomore, walked three en route to his four win in five decisions.

"He (Brinson) is probably the No. 1 pitcher this spring," ECU coach Gary Overton said. "He keeps the batters off balance. He changes speed well. He throws his curve ball at a different speed than his fast ball."

"It was a well-pitched game — by both clubs," Overton continued. "I didn't think it was a matter of either team not hitting the ball well but rather that both pitchers did a good job."

ECU right-hander Charlie Smith gave up eight hits — five of which came in the final three innings. Smith, now 0-4, struck out four and walked two. All three NCSU runs were earned.

"He did well," Overton said. "He pitched himself out of three different jams."

Smith's first test came in the first inning. Hall singled to left to open the game and Chris Baird walked. Black then singled up the middle to score Hall — still with none gone.

But, Terry Woodson grounded to third where John Hallow forced Baird and then threw on to first for the double play. Ray Wojkovich grounded into a force play to end the inning.

Smith set down the next eight batters before encountering problems in the fifth.

Doug Davis sent a short fly to right that Nichols tried to make a shoestring catch on but failed, allowing Davis to ease into second. Hall reached base on an infield single to move Davis to third with one gone. Davis then scored on Baird's sacrifice fly to make it 2-0.

NCSU scored its final run in the seventh. Davis doubled down the leftfield line to start the inning and scored when Hall tripled to right-centerfield to up the margin to 3-0. The Pirates did not get a runner past second all night against Brinson. Only twice — in the first and seventh — did ECU get its leadoff man on base against the Brinson.

ECU left two men stranded twice — in the third and sixth. In the third, Langston singled with one gone and, with two out, Kelly Robinette walked. But, Hallow popped out to end the inning.

In the sixth, Evans singled and Smith walked with two gone, but Jack Curlings struck out looking to end the inning. One inning later, Robert Wells walked to open the seventh but Mike Williams struck out. Langston popped out to first and Nichols flew out to right to end the game.

Hall led NCSU at the plate with three hits in four at bats. Davis was two for three for the Wolfpack.

Despite the shutout loss, Overton was far from disappointed with his team and its effort.

"We're not playing that bad," Overton said. "The main thing is the guys are playing real hard. That's all we ask of them in the summer. If they do that the wins and losses will take care of themselves."

ECU returns to action to-night when it travels to UNC-Wilmington.

Overlooked Tim Lollar Vents Anger

By The Associated Press
Earlier in the day, eight pitchers had been named to the National League squad for the All-Star Game.

But in the steamy visitors dressing room at Veterans Stadium in Philadelphia, the spotlight belonged to a left-hander who had not been named — and was not shy to vent his displeasure.

San Diego's Tim Lollar, who will not be in the NL dugout Tuesday in Montreal, increased his record to 9-2 by scattering six Philadelphia hits in seven innings of work as the Padres stopped the Phillies, 5-3 Wednesday night.

In other NL games, Houston topped Chicago 5-1, Los Angeles beat Montreal 3-1, Cincinnati defeated Pittsburgh 6-3, San Francisco nipped New York 3-2 and Atlanta beat St. Louis 3-2.

"That's his decision," said Lollar, referring to Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda, who will pilot the NL team. "He took what he figured were All-Star pitchers. But I have all the statistics. I'm in the Top 10 in most (pitching) categories."

Lollar, owner of a 2.74 earned run average, leads the NL with an .818 winning percentage. He said he felt the heated rivalry between the Dodgers and Padres influenced Lasorda's decision.

"At the start of the year we beat them four straight in our park and they started throwing at our hitters. They couldn't take it in return. This may come back to haunt them," Lollar said.

Terry Kennedy had three hits for the Padres, while Gene Richards drove in two runs. Gary Matthews and Mike Schmidt hit consecutive home runs for the Phils in the eighth inning before Luis DeLeon came on to pick up his seventh save.

Astros 5, Cubs 1
Houston's Don Sutton became the 33rd pitcher in major league history to chalk up 250 career victories as he four-hit the Cubs.

Sutton, 9-4, wasted no time setting his sights ahead. "It's an exciting milestone," he said. "I'd like to go for 300."

Now that Gaylord Perry has surpassed that milestone, there's a lot of attention about it. It's nice to be included among the bona fide contenders."

Houston's Phil Garner slammed a two-run homer off loser Allen Ripley, 3-1. It was his sixth homer of the season and second in three games.

Dodgers 3, Expos 1
Fernando Valenzuela, named to the NL All-Star team for the second straight year, became the majors' first 12-game winner as he sent the slumping Expos to their fourth straight defeat and their 13th in 16 contests.

Valenzuela, 12-6, scattered eight hits and was buoyed by rookie Mike Marshall's two-run homer in the sixth inning.

"I just go in there and play when I'm asked," said Marshall, who was recalled from the minors on June 25.

Marshall replaced first baseman Steve Garvey, hobbled by a pulled hamstring muscle, in the first inning. Garvey fled out to center field in his only at-bat, keeping alive his 1,029 consecutive-game streak.

Reds 6, Pirates 3
Cincinnati's Wayne Krenchicki belted a three-run homer — the first of his major-league career — to cap a five-run ninth-inning rally that enabled the Reds to snap a nine-game losing streak, their longest since an 11-gamer in 1966.

"We finally got the burden off our shoulders," said Krenchicki, who unloaded against Pirate relief ace Kent Tekulve, 5-3.

Instead of celebrating, though, Cincinnati Manager John McNamara sat quietly in his office.

"It feels very good," said McNamara, who wasn't in the mood for an interview. "Go talk to the players. I've been answering questions for nine straight games."

The victory went to reliever Tom Hume, 2-4, who was named to the NL All-Star team before the game.

Giants 3, Mets 2
Reggie Smith's two-run homer highlighted a three-run Giant uprising in the eighth inning, as the Mets fell to their fifth straight loss and the 14th in their last 18 games.

Smith's blast ruined loser Brent Gaff's major league debut. Gaff had shut out the Giants until the eighth inning.

"I'm satisfied, but naturally, I'd have preferred a win. After all, I could have been gone in the first inning," said Gaff, who was called up from Tidewater of the International league on Monday.

"It would have been a big boost to this club if the kid pitched nine innings," said Met Manager George Bamberger. "This one really bothered me. I have to say we're very consistent. Every time we make an error, the other team jumps on it."

Bamberger was referring to an error by shortstop Ron Gardenhire that began the Giants' rally.

Winner Rich Gale, 3-8, recorded eight strikeouts in seven innings of work. Greg Minton, named to the NL All-Star squad, worked the last two innings to pick up his 13th save.

Braves 3, Cardinals 2
Braves rookie Randy Johnson ended St. Louis right-hander Joaquin Andujar's no-hit bid with a leadoff double in the sixth inning. It keyed a two-run rally as the Braves edged the Cards.

Andujar, 7-7, lost his no-hitter in the sixth, and his cool in the next inning after being ejected for hitting Bob Horner with a pitch. Following his ejection, Andujar threw his hat in the air, flung his glove aside and argued with the umpires for about five minutes before cooling off.

"He (home plate umpire Lanny Harris) just made a decision. But I think he made a mistake," said Andujar of the ejection. "I'm not going to throw to the head. If I wanted to hit somebody, I would throw at his knees. I don't want to hit nobody. The pitch was inside and the ball just got away."

Rick Camp, 6-3, picked up the victory, while Gene Garber notched his 16th save as the first-place Braves maintained a 3½-game lead in the NL West. The loss kept the Cards .002 behind the first-place Phillies in the NL East.

Guidry is 8-3 with a 3.53 ERA. Bannister is 8-4 with a 2.85 ERA and leads the league with 106 strikeouts. Clancy is 7-5 with a 3.33 ERA. Guidry and Bannister are the lone left-handers on the team.

The 14-15's play at SouthWest Edgecombe at 6 p.m. on Wednesday against Tarboro. Pitt County takes on Nash County in the other first round game at 8 p.m., while Greene and Martin counties received byes.

The Senior Babe Ruth event will pit the all-star teams from the southern and northern divisions of the league against each other in a best-of-three series for the regional title. Members of that team have yet to be announced.

NEW YORK (AP) — Boston's Dennis Eckersley will start and relief aces Dan Quisenberry of Kansas City and Rollie Fingers of Milwaukee are being counted on for late-inning support when the American League tries to halt a 10-year dry spell in the major league baseball All-Star game.

They head the eight-man AL pitching staff selected today. Oakland Manager Billy Martin and AL President Lee MacPhail also chose two other bullpen specialists, Mark Clear of Boston and Rich Gossage of the New York Yankees, for the staff that will go against the National League Tuesday night in Montreal.

Joining the four relievers are starters Eckersley, Jim Clancy of Toronto, Ron Guidry of New York and Floyd Bannister of Seattle. Martin said in Oakland late Wednesday night that he planned to start sidearming right-hander Eckersley against the National League's predominantly right-handed-hitting lineup, although no official league announcement was made.

The National League also named an eight-man staff Wednesday, including Fernando Valenzuela of Los Angeles, who leads the major leagues with 12 victories, and Steve Carlton of Philadelphia, an 11-game winner. Also on the NL staff are Steve Rogers of Montreal, who leads the league with 2.04 earned run average, Phil Niekro of Atlanta, Cincinnati teammates Mario Soto and Tom Hume, Steve Howe of Los Angeles and Greg Minton of San Francisco.

Two Braves relievers who did not make the NL squad had some sour words about their omission.

"I deserved to be on it," said Gene Garber. "I'm having the type of a year that I think I should be on it, and I really don't think any National League reliever is having a better year."

"I can't believe it," said Steve Bedrosian. "Who was choosing the team? Lasorda? That figures."

Bedrosian was referring to Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda, who along with NL officials selected the All-Star pitchers.

Among those on the AL staff, Quisenberry, 4-3 with a 2.13 earned run average, leads the majors with 22 saves this season.

Fingers, 5-5 with a 2.50 ERA, has 16 saves and won the AL Cy Young and Most Valuable Player awards last year when he won six games, saved 28 and posted a 1.04 ERA. His 288 career saves are more than any man in history. He was the losing pitcher in the 1981 All-Star Game, won by the National League 5-4 at Cleveland.

Gossage, selected to an All-Star team for the ninth time, was the loser in the 1978 Game when he gave up four runs in one inning as the NL won 7-3.

He is 3-3 with 15 saves and a 2.45 ERA. Clear is 6-3 with 11 saves and a 1.92 ERA.

Eckersley, 9-6 with a 3.25 ERA, is the top winner on the AL staff as Martin chose to pass up Chicago's LaMarr Hoyt and Milwaukee's Pete Vuckovich, both 10-game winners. He has three shutouts and is expected to be the AL starting pitcher, although Martin will not formalize his selection until Monday when he announces his batting order.

Guidry is 8-3 with a 3.53 ERA. Bannister is 8-4 with a 2.85 ERA and leads the league with 106 strikeouts. Clancy is 7-5 with a 3.33 ERA.

Guidry and Bannister are the lone left-handers on the team.

Final Four Battling For The World Cup

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Italy, Poland, West Germany and France — all a bit dazed by their success — took their shots at getting to the final of the 12th World Cup soccer tournament.

Italy and Poland met today at Barcelona in one semifinal match, while France and West Germany played at Seville.

The winners will meet Sunday in Madrid for the championship. The losers play Saturday in Alicante.

The pressure seemed greater on West Germany, the reigning European champion playing in the first all-European semifinals in 16 years, and on the crafty giant-killers from Italy, who beat defending champion Argentina and tournament favorite Brazil to get into the semifinals.

Italy took the world soccer title in 1934 and 1938, while the West Germans did it in 1954 and 1974. Brazil was the only team to win three, in 1958, 1962 and 1970.

France's best finish was third in 1958, matched by Poland in 1974.

"We are very satisfied, but we must want to win. The most important thing is to keep our enthusiasm," French coach Michel Hidalgo said Wednesday in Seville.

"I insist only that the players at this stage must show the determination and concentration that has led to our wins over Brazil and Argentina," said Italian coach Enzo Bearzot. "We deserved to reach the final in 1978 and we missed it. I don't want this to happen again."

"The final would be an unprecedented achievement for our team, an enormous reward for us and for the whole country," said Antoni Piechniczek, the Polish coach. A day earlier he had been saying that Poland's only goal was to get to the semis, and that anything more was gravy.

Wachovia Bank 8

Coca-Cola 5

Second-place Coca-Cola was upset last night, 8-5, by Wachovia Bank in the Babe Ruth League's post-season double elimination tournament. The loss dropped Coke into the losers' bracket, while Wachovia remains unbeaten in two contests.

Coke scored first, getting two in the top of the first, but Wachovia rallied for three in its half of the frame. Coke tied it up with one in the second.

In the fifth, Wachovia struck for five runs, taking the lead for good. Tolm Moore walked and Jeff Howard was hit by a pitch. Dwight Smith singled and a passed ball let Moore score. Ricky Outlaw reached on an error, scoring Howard and Smith, and Duane Roeser was also safe on an error, allowing Outlaw to score. Roeser moved up on an error and scored on a passed ball.

Howard and Smith led the Wachovia hitting with two, while no one had more than one for Coke, which got only four off Smith.

Planters Bank 11

Pepsi-Cola 2

Regular season champion Pepsi-Cola was knocked out of the winners bracket by upstart Planters Bank last night in the Babe Ruth League's post-season tournament, 11-2.

Pepsi drops into the losers bracket with second place Coca-Cola, along with Famous Subs and Brown & Wood, while Planters and Wachovia Bank remain the lone unbeaten.

Pepsi jumped out in the first inning scoring two runs, but that was to be all it could push over.

Planters got one each in the first two innings to tie it up, then scored twice in the third to take the lead for good.

In the third, Monty Atkinson doubled and stole third. Jason Boyd walked and moved up on a wild pitch. Steve Iaboni grounded out, scoring Atkinson, and Gary Scott singled in Boyd.

Planters then added two more in the fourth and five in the fifth to wrap up the victory.

Scott, Clark Stallings and Atkinson each had two hits for Planters. Pepsi got only four off Scott's pitching, no more than one by any one hitter.

Re-Roofing? Buy Now And Save 5 Years.

CertainTeed Fiberglass Shingles are warranted for 20 years — 5 years longer than ordinary asphalt. And they're priced the same.

The fiberglass mat makes the difference. It repels moisture more effectively than the mat under regular asphalt shingles. The result is a tough, longer-lasting roof.

These shingles feature a U.L. Class A rating for fire resistance. Their fiberglass base offers extra protection against external fire. It's another big plus for fiberglass shingles.

Self-sealing adhesive strips are activated by the sun, bonding the shingles into a single, weatherproof shield that can resist winds up to 60 miles per hour. The shingles are also resistant to blistering, warping and "cupping."

Just because they're tough doesn't mean they're not attractive. These handsome shingles are available in a variety of colors, from basic black to rustic earthtone shades.

So, if you're thinking about re-roofing, come on by Lowe's and buy now. Because not only will you get a very rugged, durable and beautiful roof — you'll save five years!

Baines Hits Three Straight Homers

By The Associated Press
Harold Baines may be little a reluctant when it comes to taking a bow. Dave Winfield isn't.
Baines belted three consecutive home runs Wednesday night, capping the binge with an eighth-inning grand slam, as the Chicago White Sox routed the Detroit Tigers 7-0 behind the seven-hit pitching of Dennis Lamp.

Winfield, who has been on a home run barrage of his own over the last nine games, slammed a three-run shot in the first inning as the New York Yankees edged Oakland 5-3 and denied Billy Martin his 1,000th career victory as a manager.

It was the first time the 23-year-old Baines had ever hit three home runs in a game, but his reaction was rather restrained.
"It felt good inside, but I didn't jump up and down," said Baines, who added that his teammates "practically pushed me up the stairs" to acknowledge the cheers of the crowd after the grand slam.

Winfield wasn't asked by the Oakland crowd to take a bow, but he took the opportunity to lash out at Yankee owner George Steinbrenner, who criticized the outfielder as failing to live up to "superstar status."
"I think he spoke too soon," said Winfield of Steinbrenner's comments. "But I want to make it clear to everyone, that this isn't a motivation tool for me."

Winfield also was upset by his failure to gain a starting spot on the American League All-Star team, selected by the fans.
"I'd have voted for me to play," said Winfield, who is hitting .308 with 15 home runs.
In other AL games, Boston downed Texas 8-5, Minnesota outlasted Milwaukee 11-8, Kansas City nipped Toronto 3-1, Seattle defeated Baltimore 8-7 and Cleveland got by California 8-6.

Baines started his home run barrage with a leadoff shot in the fifth inning off Detroit starter Jerry Ujdur to give the White Sox a 1-0 lead. He increased the margin to 2-0 with his eighth home run of the season in the seventh inning, another leadoff blast off Ujdur, 1-5.

Lamp, 6-3, struck out seven and walked none in going the distance for only the second time this season.

Yankees 5, A's 3
Roger Erickson, 6-7, worked seven innings, scattering six hits and striking out six in picking up the victory.
Winfield drilled his 15th homer deep into the left-field stands after a leadoff single by Willie Randolph and a walk to Ken Griffey to give the Yankees a 3-0 lead.

Oakland made it 3-1 in bottom of the first on Rickey Henderson's triple and Dwayne Murphy's groundout. They added an unearned run in the fifth. Jeff Burroughs hit a pinch hit homer for the A's in the eighth.

Twins 11, Brewers 8
Gary Gaetti slammed a three-run homer to highlight a six-run second inning as Minnesota pounded out 15 hits and outlasted Milwaukee to post its fourth victory in the last five games.

The Twins, who have the worst record in the majors this season, also got a two-run homer from Tim Laudner.

Robin Yount and Ted Simmons crashed two-run homers for the Brewers, who slipped into second place in the AL East, a game behind Boston.
Red Sox 8, Rangers 5
Dwight Evans and Jim Rice crashed consecutive fifth-inning home runs to lead a 16-hit barrage and Boston withstood a five-run Texas ninth inning to move back into first place in the AL East.

Boston broke a scoreless tie in the fifth against Texas starter Charlie Hough, 7-6, as Jerry Remy singled, Evans crashed his 10th homer and Rice followed with his 12th.
Boston added four more runs in the seventh and another in the ninth before Texas rallied on Larry Parrish's second grand slam in four days and Bill Stein's pinch homer off reliever Mark Clear.

Indians 8, Angels 6
Rick Waits pitched five-hit ball for six innings to pick up his first victory of the season and Von Hayes belted a two-run homer as Cleveland edged California, extending the Angels' losing streak to eight games and snapping the Tribe's five-game skid.

California scored five runs in the seventh on a two-run homer by Fred Lynn and Reggie Jackson's three-run shot off Dan Spillner, who recorded his 10th save. It was Jackson's 18th of the season and his third in the last five games.

Royals 3, Blue Jays 1
Larry Gura tossed a four-hitter and Willie Aikens and Jerry Martin slammed solo home runs as Kansas City posted its sixth victory in the last seven games.

Gura, 10-4, struck out two and walked one, while giving up Jesse Barfield's seventh home run of the season. Hard-luck Blue Jays starter Jim Clancy, 7-6, yielded five hits in taking the loss.

Mariners 8, Orioles 7
Todd Cruz delivered a two-out, ninth-inning single to score pinch-runner Bobby Brown with the winning run as Seattle beat Baltimore.

The victory pushed the Mariners six games over .500, their best mark ever, at 44-38, giving Seattle its 25th come-from-behind victory.

Baltimore took a 3-0 lead in the second inning on an RBI single by Joe Nolan and Al Bumbry's two-run single. John Lowenstein added a three-run homer in the third.

Seattle's Dave Henderson had a two-run double and scored twice.

Ipock Takes Putt Event

Bobby Ipock captured top honors in the Wednesday night Pro-Amateur Tournament at the Greenville-Pitt County.

Ipock had rounds of 29, 30 and 29 to finished the tournament with an 88, 20 under par.

David Manning took second place with a 91, three strokes off the pace. Manning had been tied for second place after two rounds with Jake Loftin. Loftin finished tied for third with Mike Shane at 93.

Ailing Back Could Keep Casper From Revenge

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — An ailing back may hurt Billy Casper in his bid to get even with Arnold Palmer in the U.S. Senior Open golf tournament.

Casper, who lost last year to Palmer in a three-way playoff, twisted his back earlier this week while hoisting luggage from an automobile trunk.

"Some of us aren't smart enough to have others lift the luggage," he explained.

But Casper, 51, did not seem to be bothered by the back in practice rounds Tuesday and Wednesday. The tournament, which runs through Sunday, starts today.

Casper has the reputation of being one of the best putters ever to play the game. But he said driving might be the key to victory on the par-71, 6,489-yard Portland Golf Club course.

"This is a tremendous driving course," Casper said. "They lengthened 18, which I don't necessarily agree with, and 15 (a par-4 at 460 yards) is going to eliminate a lot of short hitters."

The $150,000 tournament, the top senior golf event in the country, is in its third year. The first tournament, which had a minimum age limit of 55, was won by Argentine Roberto De Vicenzo.

The age limit was dropped to 50 for last year's tournament, which Palmer won in an 18-hole playoff with Casper and Michigan club professional Bob Stone in Birmingham, Mich.

Others in the field include: —Palmer, 52, whose "Arnie's Army" materialized as soon as he arrived and has been crowding the course during practice rounds. Palmer, who has been followed by up to 1,000 people at the course, has won 61 Professional Golfers Association tournaments.

—Gene Littler, 51, last year's leading money winner on the seniors' tour with $137,427.

—Mike Souchak, 55, who set the PGA tournament scoring record with 257 for 72 holes in the 1955 Texas Open.

—Bob Goaly, 53, the senior tour's top money winner this year at $35,550.

Miller Barber and Dow Finsterwald also are entered. Sam Snead, 70, had to withdraw because of eye trouble.

The course, in Portland's West Hills, was designed in 1914. It was the site of the first major victory for Ben Hogan, who won the PGA championship there in 1946.

The 1947 Ryder Cup match was played at the club. Casper won the old Portland Open on the course for three consecutive years.

In addition to being longer, the course has narrower fairways than when Casper last played here.

The winner will get $25,000. If there is a first-place tie, an 18-hole playoff would be played Monday. There are 150 golfers in the field, including some amateurs.

How Tar Heel Senators, Representatives Voted

House
REAGAN VETO — By a vote of 253 for and 171 against, the House failed to override President Reagan's veto of a fiscal 1982 "urgent supplemental" appropriations bill in the amount of $8.9 billion. A two-thirds majority — 270 votes — was needed to overcome the veto. While Reagan was most dissatisfied with the bill's $3 billion stimulus of the housing industry, he also objected to what he viewed as excessive spending for the Postal Service, Corps of Engineers flood control projects, federal highway construction and other programs. The vetoed bill was HR 5922.

Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Ore., who supported overriding the veto, said the $3 billion for the housing industry "is not a bailout of a single industry. This is a life preserver for a cluster of construction industries which have led this nation out of every recession since World War II."

President Reagan, in his veto message, said "we will not promote a housing recovery by going deeper in debt. More red ink spending will only make the housing recession worse."

Members voting "nay" supported the presidential veto.

Reps. L.H. Fountain, D-2, Charles Whitley, D-3, Ike Andrews, D-4, Stephen Neal, D-5, Charles Rose, D-7, W.G. Hefner, D-8, and William Hendon, R-11, voted "yea."

Reps. Eugene Johnston, R-6, James Martin, R-9, and James Broyhill, R-10, voted "nay."

Rep. Walter Jones, D-1, did not vote.

FEDERAL SPENDING — After sustaining the veto, the House passed, 267 for and 106 against, an appropriations bill (HR 6682) virtually identical to the vetoed measure except that it omitted the $3 billion in special aid for the housing industry. The Senate also passed HR 6682 (see vote below). President Reagan then vetoed this bill, too, saying that about $1 billion of its $5.9 billion pricetag was "excessive" spending unwanted by the Administration. Congressional attempts to override the second veto were likely to be made in mid-July. Counting his successful veto of HR 5922 (see preceding House vote), Reagan has had each of the five vetoes of his presidency sustained by Congress.

Supporter Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., said, "We are the people's branch of the government, the House of Representatives, where we are elected every two years — where if the people are dissatisfied, they can make changes ... Are we going to discharge our obligation to the people of the country ...?"

Opponents of the bill did not speak during debate.

Members voting "yea" favored passage of the $5.9 billion 1982 appropriations bill despite the threat of another presidential veto.

Fountain, Andrews, Neal, Rose, Hefner and Hendon voted "yea."

Martin and Broyhill voted "nay."

Jones, Whitley and Johnston did not vote.

Senate

CHALLENGING REAGAN — By a vote of 59 for and 26 against, the Senate passed the $5.9 billion spending bill (HR 6682) despite signals from the White House that the president would veto the measure (see preceding vote).

Supporter Harrison Schmitt, R-N.M., said the programs to be funded by the bill "are important matters already agreed to by the Congress."

Opponent William Proxmire, D-Wisc., said the bill contained "$15 billion more than the president has requested" and that that "is just too much of an add-on for this senator to support ..."

Senators voting "yea" supported $5.9 billion in additional fiscal 1982 spending for a variety of programs.

Sens. John East, R, and Jesse Helms, R, voted "nay."

SUMMER JOBS — By a vote of 55 for and 37 against, the Senate tabled and thus killed an amendment for appropriate an additional $68 million for 1982 summer job programs for youths, primarily inner-city minorities. About 675,000 slots already have been funded, and this would have raised the number to 735,000. The vote came during debate on a short-term spending bill aimed at funding various programs until Congress and the president resolve their battle over longer-term measures (see preceding votes). The bill (HR 6685) was headed for final passage and the White House.

Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., who favored tabling the amendment, said the extra money would invite a presidential veto of the bill and that its approval by the Senate would "raise false expectations" in the cities.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., who sponsored the amendment, said "these teenagers should not be forced to bear the brunt of Reagan's recession."

Senators voting "nay" wanted to spend more this summer to provide jobs for teenagers.

East and Helms voted "yea."

The Forecast For Friday, July 9

● Low Temperatures

Fronts: Cold — Warm — Occluded — Stationary —

WEATHER FORECAST — The National Weather Service forecasts showers Friday for the Southeastern portion of the nation and extending from Texas north to parts of the Pacific Northwest, Northern California, parts of Montana and Wyoming.

While afternoon and evening thunderstorms aren't exactly considered ideal weather, they may provide relief from the forecasts of warm, humid weather today.

The National Weather Service says there will be variable degrees of cloudiness across North Carolina into Friday with scattered mainly afternoon and evening showers and thunderstorms.

Temperatures will range from the 80s in the mountains to the low 90s in the southeast.

Along the coast, winds will be southwest at 10 to 15 knots today and Friday with waves from 2 to 4 feet.

High pressure centered well off shore over the western Atlantic was in control of the North Carolina weather picture this morning. A weak upper level disturbance that has been nearly stationary of the Southeastern states since Wednesday will continue to be the main triggering mechanism for the scattered thunderstorms that were to form across the state by this afternoon.

Another upper level disturbance will move eastward from the mid Mississippi Valley into North Carolina Friday. And this second disturbance will reinforce the one over us, increasing the chances for more thunderstorms Friday.

A weakening cold front through the Ohio Valley will continue to weaken as it moves into northern Virginia

Friday but does not promise to bring any relief to the Tar Heel state.

Around the state Wednesday, there was some patchy dense early morning fog. After the fog burned off, skies became partly cloudy. Scattered showers and thunderstorms developed across the state during the afternoon and lasted into the evening hours.

Generally rainfall with the showers and thunderstorms was light, but Murphy did pick up over an an and a half 1.65.

High temperatures were generally in the 80s but Fayetteville saw the mercury soar into the middle 90s. In the northern mountains, afternoon readings leveled off in the mid 70s.

Officials Disagree On Auditor's Conclusions

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A report issued by State Auditor Edward Renfrow says the North Carolina Council on the Status of Women has conducted programs throughout its 19-year history "without proper authorization."

"We believe many of the activities conducted by the council have been done without the proper legislative authority," Renfrow said in the report, adding that other council programs have been too costly, given the benefits they yielded.

The conclusions in the auditor's report were called "erroneous" in a statement Wednesday by Jane S. Patterson, secretary of the state Department of Administration, which oversees the women's council.

In a written commentary included in the report, Ms. Patterson said the department has "ample legal authority" for each of the programs questioned.

Copies of the report, which was prompted by lawmakers' inquiries, will go to Gov. Jim Hunt, the Advisory Budget Commission and interested legislators, Renfrow said.

The council had a budget of $1.26 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1981, including $321,702 in state funds and $936,440 in federal and private foundation grants.

Primary goals of the council have been to train homemakers attempting to re-enter the work force and those seeking new job skills, leadership conferences and aid for women and children harmed by family violence.

Renfrow questioned their activities in all three areas.

He said he questioned the state budget office's approval of a registration fee for the 1982 Governor's Conference on Leadership Development for Women that exceeded the $30 maximum the state normally pays for its employees to attend conferences. He also took issue with what he called "the political content of the conference agenda."

Renfrow questioned the cost-effectiveness of the council's program to train women in new job skills related to the construction industry.

He said that $602,643 from a CETA grant funded the program and said only about one-third of the students trained got jobs in the fields for which they were trained.

"He and I have discussed this and we disagree," Ms. Patterson said in a prepared statement Wednesday.

She said Renfrow's evaluation did not take into account a decline in employment in the construction industry during 1981.

Renfrow also questioned the council's authority to administer a domestic violence project to aid abused children and their mothers.

Ms. Patterson contended that the authority came from an executive order issued by the governor and signed Oct. 27, 1980, but Renfrow said the agreements on the domestic violence project were made Aug. 7, 1979.

"Therefore, expenditures for 15 months occurred before (the executive order) was signed," he said.

In her statement, Ms. Patterson said $210,000 was appropriated by the Legislature in June to establish additional centers under the domestic violence project.

"The Legislature obviously believes that positive steps are being taken for the people of the state through council activities," she said.

Neither Renfrow nor Ms. Patterson has requested an opinion of the state attorney general's office on the council's overall authority, said Andrew A. Vanore, senior deputy general.

Attend Meet Of FBLA

Six D.H. Conley Future Business Leaders of America members and their adviser, Mary Thompson, attended the FBLA National Leadership Conference held in Indianapolis July 1-4.

The five-member Conley parliamentary procedure team, which captured first place in state competition, competed on the national level at the conference. Delegates and competitors in the 33 events represented chapters from public and private secondary schools throughout the United States and Puerto Rico.

In addition to competition, the 9,300 students and advisers in attendance had an opportunity to meet and hear educators, athletes and business leaders from throughout the nation, including Rocky Blair of the Pittsburgh Steelers, Kathryn Wentworth of "Dallas" and Eric Hilton of Hilton Hotels Corp. and member of the FBLA Board of Directors.

Students attending from Conley included Debbie Hall, Susie Hudson, Penny Joyner, Clark Paramore and Raymond Reddick.

In addition, Jodie Louya, a former Conley FBLA student, attended the Professional Business Leaders Conference in Indianapolis July 5-8.

In celebration of the 40th anniversary of FBLA, the theme for the national conference was "Keeping In Touch with the Business of America."

At the first session of the Southern Region Meeting at the convention, the D.H. Conley FBLA received Hollis and Kitty Guy Gold Seal Chapter Award. The North Carolina chapter was honored with a first place in steno II and a ninth place in accounting.

"The trip was made possible for us by generous contributions from various area businesses," said Mary Thompson, adviser for the chapter. "We had so much support and we're grateful."

Poster Contest Awards Made

RALEIGH — Thousands of North Carolina school children in kindergarten through grade 8 recently dreamed up some creative monikers in the state zoo's "Name the Poster Animal" contest held during May and June.

Sixth-grader Jonathan Davis of Pisgah Elementary School in Buncombe County came up with the best set of names, according to the contest judges. He was awarded a $3,000 trust fund scholarship. In addition another $3,000 was presented to the N.C. Zoological Society.

The awards were donated by Pizza Hut, which cosponsored the contest with the state zoo.

Among 660 students statewide chosen by their schools to submit suggested names for the poster animal contest were 16 from Pitt County and Greenville. Schools represented were Third Street, Eastern, South Greenville and Elmhurst in Greenville, and Grifton, Pactolus, Chicod, G.R. Whitfield, Ayden Middle, Falkland, A.G. Cox, Sam D. Bundy, H.B. Sugg, W.H. Robinson, Farmville Middle and Stokes schools in Pitt County.

Will Help Develop Sanctuary System

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — State officials say they plan to use a donation of the islands and marshes surrounding Bald Head Island to help the state to buy and protect three other barrier islands as part of the National Estuarine Sanctuary System.

Todd Llewellyn, public affairs officer for the N.C. Office of Coastal Management, said the state has asked the federal government for funds to buy and preserve Masonboro Island near Wrightsville Beach, Carrot Island near Beaufort and part of Currituck Banks.

The initial request is for $454,100 with additional requests expected next year.

The islands and marshes, known as the Zeke's Island Complex, is the state's contribution to the project, and would be used to "match" the federal government's investment, Llewellyn said.

The gift was made by Walter Davis, a native of North Carolina and a resident of Midland, Texas.

"When Mr. Davis gave us the one island, we essentially got four through this program," Llewellyn said. "It was a very valuable gift."

Rafts, Not Logs, Now Clog The Rivers Of Maine

By GLENN ADAMS
Associated Press Writer
MILLINOCKET, Maine
(AP) — A raft drifts into the current below the Ripoguenus Dam in northern Maine's wilderness, bobbing toward the first rapids.

"If you don't hold on to the ropes, you'll be in the river," Tom Andrie, a guide, warns the eight novices in the craft. "They call this 'The Exterminator.'"

Rough, but often a memorable introduction to a sport that has soared in popularity since 1977, the year after the log drives ended, opening some of the wildest and most scenic rivers to whitewater rafting.

But now that the sport has caught on, Maine's rivers — once jammed with logs — are quickly becoming clogged with rafts.

That, plus the specter of dams that would tame the state's two most turbulent waterways, threaten to wipe out a new industry which, according to many state officials and outfitters, has grown to its limit and must be controlled.

Whitewater rafting has caught on in about 20 states. A year ago, when an estimated 15,000 people took on Maine's rapids in rafts, there were nine licensed outfitters in the state, said Jim Ernst of Maine Whitewater Inc., one of the 16 outfitting companies now licensed in the state.

This year, Ernst expects 22,000 people to take to the rapids.

The Maine Legislature, with prodding from the Whitewater Outfitters Association of Maine, considered a moratorium on new licenses until a study on the industry is completed next year. The freeze was rejected, but the Legislature agreed to authorize a study.

However, an outfitters association in Maine is regulating the number of rafts each member outfitter can put into the river in a day.

"It's to prevent overuse of the rivers," said Ernst. "This would destroy it for everyone."

West Virginia, another Eastern mecca for whitewater enthusiasts, has passed a freeze. And, says the National Council of State Legislatures, the federal and some local and county governments have issued restrictions on sections of rivers they control in some western states.

The Penobscot and Kennebec rivers in Maine "have a national reputation as premier whitewater rivers," said Dave Brown of the Eastern Professional River Outfitters Association.

On busy days, said Maine Whitewater senior guide Andrie, as many as 50 rafts — each carrying up to a dozen people — head down each of Maine's two most challenging rivers.

The 18-foot, inflated rafts must share the river with fishermen, campers and other boaters, who use some of the placid stretches of the river to find their own piece of serenity.

Rob Gardiner, executive director of the Natural Resources Council of Maine, calls the lack of public access points "a basic, built-in conflict" which the study ordered by the Legislature is intended to settle.

There's also a problem with fishermen on the Penobscot because of the outstanding landlocked salmon fishery, said Gardiner. On a recent trip, several fishermen pulled in their lines while the rafts floated by.

And, while the rivers themselves are open to the public, the outfitters still must depend on the cooperation of landowners to allow picnics, raft launchings and take-outs — and regular releases of water from dams which the power and paper companies own.

So far, say outfitters, the landowners have been fair and generous. But they are still considering building new dams that would put the thrill of riding Maine's roughest rivers into the same category as log drives — history.

The Great Northern Paper Co., which owns vast woodlands in northern Maine, and the Central Maine Power Co., have received preliminary permits from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to study dam projects on the Penobscot and Kennebec Rivers.

Central Maine spokesman Peter Thompson said that the power company, whose dams along the Kennebec keep the flow steady through the summer months, has removed the Cold Stream dam project from its long range plans. The project was devised to forever tame the Kennebec.

Paul McCann, a spokesman for Great Northern, said that the paper company's system of 19 dams on the Penobscot allows whitewater to exist. Great Northern's dam would be built at a section of the Penobscot called Big Ambjackmockamus.

Outfitters now give safety lectures before expeditions, telling riders how to paddle, when to hold onto the ropes in the rafts — and how to swim through the rapids if they are thrown out.

NEW YORK (AP) — Capt. Furillo was more the Barney Miller type, a broader, more comedic character. He wasn't yet the rock-steady center who could keep his head while everybody else was losing theirs.

Lt. Ray Cattetano was a less dignified Hispanic, sounding more stereotypical, running around saying things like "no sweat, man."

Detective J.D. LaRue was not into the bottle yet. In fact, he was so suave and self-assured that it looked like he might wind up with Joyce Davenport.

And Bobby Hill and Andy Renko, whose partnership grew to resemble a bickering marriage, were not squabbling much. By the end of the show, they were fighting for their lives. Gunned down in powerful slow motion, Renko was to die "on paper" from his wounds, although he was later resurrected.

In the beginning, there was "Hill Street Station," the pilot episode of NBC's award-winning "Hill Street Blues." Originally broadcast in January 1981, the first show will be televised again tonight.

And it's grand fun to see how the most multifaceted characters in television looked when "Hill Street Blues" was an unknown quantity and just another new product from the Fred Silverman Farm.

Given the character-introduction requirements of any series-opener, this episode holds up well. But fans of the best show in TV will recognize that some roles needed fine-tuning, and that the program hadn't hit stride yet. Last week's rerun of a 1982 "Hill Street," for example, was closer to the series' highest standards.

"There's no doubt in my mind that every character has expanded enormously and become infinitely more dimensional," says executive producer Steven Bochco, who is preparing to begin filming "Hill Street's" third season next week. "I have tried very hard to make sure that characters don't undergo unrealistic changes. People do change, but usually in small increments."

One character who has gone through pages of personal havoc has been J.D. LaRue, played by Kiel Martin.

"We ran him through the ringer, cleaned up his act, then, in the course of the second season, put him back in the toilet," says Bochco. "We showed him to be a liar and a con artist, not out of any maliciousness, but because alcoholics are addicts, and that's a real aspect of people like that."

At the hub of everything is Daniel J. Travanti's Furillo. Tonight he seems more flappable, although he's still very much amused by the chaos around him. "He couldn't function in that job without a sense of humor," says Bochco.

Bochco says Ray Cattetano, played by Rene Enriquez, has become "much more dimensional, and that's a function of time. You cannot reveal everything in 48 minutes (actual program time). With 14 characters, you have to be patient."

It once almost was 12. In the first draft on "Hill Street Station," Hill (Michael Warren) and Renko (Charles Haid) both died in the line of duty. Bochco's wife, Barbara, who plays the cloying Fay Furillo, wanted Hill to live. "Being a total pushover, I changed that," says Bochco.

"We also wanted Charlie to live, but Charlie made it clear that he was going to do another pilot. So there was no way we could have him live. But I told him if his pilot didn't sell, please feel free to come back."

When Haid's other show died, Renko lived.

Before the first show was broadcast, the original final words were: "One DOA, one critical." Tune in tonight to see the magic of post-production television.

And the beginning of a beautiful relationship — between Hill and Renko, and between 14 credibly evolving characters and "Hill Street's" faithful following.

Jerry Lewis Thriving On His 20-Hour Day

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Reporter

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — "Okay, action!" cried the director.

The star began his comic dialogue with a clerk at the airline terminal counter.

At the conclusion of the scene the director yelled, "Cut and print."

Then the screenwriter leafed through the script to check the next scene.

Director, star and writer were all one man. Jerry Lewis was doing his thing.

Lewis, who disappeared from the screen in 1971 after starring in "Which Way To The Front," returned in 1979 in "Hardly Working," a movie that drew mixed reviews but big box-office returns.

Now the madcap comedian has two movies awaiting release — "Slapstick" with Madeline Kahn and Marty Feldman, and "The King of Comedy," with Robert De Niro.

On this smoggy day Lewis was busy on his newest comedy, "Smorgasbord," an Orgolini-Nelson production, his first in Hollywood in more than a decade.

It was as if someone had turned back the clock. Lewis, brimming with nervous energy, was everywhere on the set, checking every detail — lighting, props, scenery, camera placement and even the caterers.

The rhythm, the pace of a set is Lewis' environment. Some 20 members of the crew were oldtimers he'd worked with through the years. They operated smoothly. The atmosphere, despite the Lewis dynamo, was relaxed.

At the noon break Lewis retreated to his trailer-dressing room to run the dailies (the previous day's film) on a portable movieola, checking which cuts he liked best.

Lewis took a breather and said, "I like to get as many of my old crew together as possible. They're super people. They're loyal and professional. We manage to keep the atmosphere light and have some fun."

Lewis' best comedies are those he's written and directed himself. The demands of wearing three hats at once challenges his creativity.

"This isn't my playground," he said, lighting a cigarette. "When I do it all, each separate job gets tougher. Acting alone is a breeze. It drives me up the wall when all I have to do is act because I can't put in a 20-hour day."

"I'm serious about that. My day begins at 3:30 a.m. and I don't get to bed until midnight when I'm writing, directing and acting. And I resent the three or four hours

Douglas Plans New Production

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Michael Douglas will produce and John Badham will direct "The Star Man," a science-fiction love story for Columbia Pictures due for release during the 1983 Christmas season.

"The Star Man" marks the first feature film production for Douglas since "The China Syndrome." He co-produced the Academy Award winning "One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest."

Badham, who directed "Saturday Night Fever" and "Whose Life Is It Anyway," directed several episodes of "The Streets of San Francisco" in which Douglas co-starred with Karl Malden.

Teamed For New Television Film

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Victoria Principal, one of the stars of TV's "Dallas" series, and Gil Gerard, who played the title role in the "Buck Rogers" series, have been teamed for a new TV movie, "An American Love Affair."

The CBS film will feature Principal as a marine biologist bent on maintaining her virtue until she marries. Gerard, playing a bachelor attorney and ladies man, tests her resolve in a complicated love story.

Steve Stern is directing the cast which includes Robert Webber, Barbara Barrie and Richard Kline.

Lost Peach Crop Hurts More Than Farmers In N.C.

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
WINDBLOW, N.C. (AP) — Pratt Gallimore discusses the destruction of his crop with such detachment that you'd think growing peaches is his hobby instead of his livelihood.

"I'm out," says the stocky, sunburned farmer. "Got 300 acres of peaches and only about 10, maybe, will produce anything worth selling. I guess you'd say I'm pretty wiped out."

Several miles away, Larry Treece props his feet on an upside-down peach basket, one of many empty baskets stacked inside the lean-to fruit stand.

"We get most of our business on weekends, when folks drive through from Greensboro or Roanoke (Va.) headed to the beach.

They see the baskets all full of peaches lined up outside and they stop every time," he says. "But now I don't know how we'll get anybody to stop."

Gallimore and Treece are victims of the same misfortune: the most devastating late spring freeze in nearly three decades.

And they're not alone. The effects have been felt by everyone with even remote connections to peaches — from the laborers who pick and pack them to the customers who savor them.

North Carolina agriculture officials estimate 85 percent to 98 percent of the crop was lost when temperatures plummeted into the teens the nights of March 28 and April 7.

It was a cruel blow to a five-county area of the southern Piedmont region of North Carolina known as the Sandhills, where the rolling, sandy terrain and mild weather are ideal for golfing and growing peaches.

In 1981, the state's 40 million pound peach crop brought $5.2 million. 1982 sales could have reached $9 million, said Clarence Black, superintendent of the Sandhills Research Station in Jackson Springs.

husband Bobby, who run a country store near the crossroads dubbed Windblow.

"Usually we'd be crowded about now," Ms. Williams said to the only customer in her store. "Whole buses full of people coming in to work the peaches stop by, get their lunch and something to drink. Now, well, you can see for yourself. Nobody here."

The freeze also has hurt truckers, says Gallimore's father, D.P. Gallimore. He started the family business in 1936 when he planted his first peach trees, and harvested his first crop in 1940. D.P., 72, also runs a trucking firm and ships peaches and other produce. He says truckers now must look in other states for peaches to haul.

"We're shipping out of southern Georgia, South Carolina, anywhere but here," he said. "You have to go where the stuff is."

Fruit and vegetable stands line the road heading south on U.S. 220 off North Carolina 73. People like Treece and his wife depend on the stands for their livelihoods.

"Well, we're a little better off than some folks because we sell lots of things beside peaches," said Mrs. Treece, who declined to give her first name. "We have a big garden and we grow vegetables and things, so we can stay open. But it's the peaches that get people to stop in the first place. They might buy some cucumbers or cantaloupes once they're in here, but it's the peaches they want."

Customers are snatching up the few available peaches, although many recoil at the prices, which have more than doubled since last year, Mrs. Treece said. Peaches this year are going for as much as $13 a bushel in some areas.

Gov. Jim Hunt has requested federal disaster aid for Sandhills peach growers. A decision may be forthcoming within four to six weeks, said Bill Perry of the Farmers Home Administration.

"No use crying about it," said Gallimore, 47, who says his investment in this year's crop was about $125,000. "I'll just hope for better luck next year. I doubt we'll see anything like this again for 20 years, although it could happen again next year. Who knows?"

Racial Harmony In Fiji Strained By Elections

SUVA, Fiji (AP) — The delicate racial harmony between Fijians and Asian Indians is under increasing strain as this tiny South Pacific island nation prepares for its fourth general election since independence from Britain in 1970.

The contest for the 52 Parliament seats in an election that runs nine days starting Saturday is basically along racial lines. The governing Alliance Party which has held office since independence gets most of its support from the native Fijians, descendants of the original Melanesian warriors who earned Fiji its original name, the Cannibal Isles.

The opposition National Federation Party gets the bulk of its support from the Indian community which accounts for half the population.

Race and land ownership are basic to Fijian politics.

The Fijians are now a minority in their own land, making up 46 percent of the population of about 650,000. The Indians, originally brought here by the British to work the sugar plantations, make up 50 percent. Europeans and others make up the remainder.

The Indians dominate commerce and government service.

But the Fijians own 83 percent of the 7,000 square miles of land on the nation's 500 scattered islands.

Fijian land is held communally and cannot be disposed of by individuals. Thus the Indians face a landless future.

The Alliance Party is led by Sir Ratu Kamisese Mara, 62, the current prime minister and a British-educated Fijian who is recognized as an elder statesman of the South Pacific.

His opponent is Jai Ram Reddy, 45, a Hindu leader who has led the National Federation Party for five years.

Political ideology is playing little part in the campaign. Few political observers care to pick the outcome.

In the last election, in 1977, the Alliance Party was defeated in a shock result. It won only 24 seats, the National Federation won 26 and 2 were taken by Fijian independents.

The defeat was attributed to the emergence of the Fijian Nationalist Party which campaigned on a platform of "Fiji for the Fijian" and a call for the deportation of Indians. The party took almost a quarter of the votes that normally go to the Alliance Party.

But due to a leadership struggle in the National Federation Party and nervousness about trying to govern without a clear parliamentary majority, it was unable to form a government.

The head of state, Governor General Sir George Cakubau, reappointed Mara as leader of a minority government which ruled for six months before another election swept Alliance back to power, with 36 seats and only 15 for National Federation.

The present campaign is further confused by the continued role of the Nationalist Party and by the emergence of a small Fijian party, the Western United Front, which has said it would enter a coalition with the Indians.

Fiji has a complex voting system which adds to the difficulties of election forecasting — each voter gets to vote four times.

The constitution gives 22 seats to Fijians, 22 to Indians and 8 for general voters — people who are neither Fijian nor Indians.

The fragile balance is held by the general voters, who have so far aligned themselves with the Alliance Party.

A voter casts one vote for his communal representative, then one each for the Fijian, Indian and general representative of his choice.

With such a complex voting system and the fact that polling stations are scattered throughout more than 100 inhabited islands, the results won't be known until July 18.

Keep Date Open For 'Kudzu Ball'

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Looking for something new on the social calendar? Then keep Aug. 13 open and get yourself some shears.

That's when the "Kudzu Ball" — a tongue-in-cheek testimonial to the tenacious vine that plagues property owners in the Southeast — will take place.

The site of the ball, a shopping center parking lot, will be festooned with garlands of kudzu. Those who attend will be encouraged to incorporate the vine in their costumes.

Organizers hope to make the ball an annual event. Proceeds are to be given to the Chattanooga Birth Defects Center.

Among invited out-of-town guests are Babe Sharpe, a founder of Knoxville's Kudzu Garden Club.

"We chose to hold the ball on Aug. 13 because it's Babe's birthday and because it's a Friday the 13th — a date we hope will be unlucky for kudzu in Chattanooga but lucky for the ball," said Tex Greenwood, spokesman for the Kudzu Ball's sponsor, the Long-Range Way-Down-the-Road and Out-of-Sight Planning Commission.

Tracking Down 'Referred Pain'

I've always heard the expression "referred pain" but I've never known exactly what it meant. Can you enlighten me? — Mr. M.K., Vt.

Dear Mr. K.: The understanding of pain, its cause, and its distribution has intrigued doctors and scientists for many years. New knowledge in physiology and neurology has given doctors greater insight into the causes and control of pain.

Pain as a predominant symptom is constantly being brought to the attention of doctors by patients. Some kinds of pain are readily identified and pinpointed. Others escape even the most careful attempts at localization.

Nerves run in distinct patterns throughout the body. With long experience and judgment, doctors learn to interpret the meaning of pain even if it is far removed from its source.

For example, gallbladder disease, with or without stones, may refer sharp shooting pains directly to the back and to the shoulders. Ulcers of the stomach may be responsible for pain that shoots throughout the abdomen and even the back. Kidney stones are often identified by the sharp shooting pains that run from the back down into the groin.

Some heart conditions may give symptoms of angina in which pain is referred to the left shoulder down the arm and even to the fingertips.

The pain of pleurisy of the lungs may be referred to the area of the appendix and thus make diagnosis extremely difficult.

The pain of shingles around the chest or waist may follow a band that configures to the course of the entire nerve.

Disturbances of the jaw joint may be responsible for pains to the ear, pains down the side of the neck, and even to the head.

There are dozens more such evidences of referred pain. It is apparent, therefore, that it sometimes takes astute judgment to target the exact origin of pain.

I read about a cure for wrinkles of the forehead. I know it is done with special chemicals. My doctor does not favor this. What do you think about it? — Mrs. R.D., Wis.

Dear Mrs. D.: The use of harsh chemicals, including the dangerous one phenol, has long been abandoned by reputable physicians and surgeons.

In fact, so dangerous is the peeling technique with chemicals that medical societies and public health officials have taken legal action to restrain untrained people from using this dangerous procedure.

Irreparable harm can be done to people who have been caught in the trap of "chemical rejuvenation." Burns and severe scarring and facial disfigurement have resulted from this hazardous technique.

Before getting involved in any such unorthodox procedure, the advice of a plastic surgeon or your own physician is most important.

Answer to Yesterday's Puzzle:

CRYPTOQUIP

ABCCD, EFGI HJ ABCHCK LHEEKJ
MHE ANGFAMKFD GIJ LBFEKN

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — ERRATIC COMPUTER STALL-ED: MESSED UP DAILY COPY.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: F equals T

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

The bidding:
South West North East
1 ♦ Pass 1 ♦ Pass
1 NT Pass 4 NT Pass
6 NT Pass Pass Pass
Opening lead: Jack of ♦.

Look beyond the obvious. Quite often, you can combine your chances to give yourself an extra edge that could make all the difference between success and failure.

The only point of interest in the auction is North's four no trump, which is a quantitative raise, not Blackwood. Since South had full values for his previous bids, he was happy to accept his partner's slam invitation.

West led the jack of diamonds. Because of the unfortunate duplication in that suit, the slam contract was not as good as declarer had hoped. He would have to develop three tricks reasonably quickly to make his slam.

A superficial study of the position might suggest that declarer should rely on the club finesse. If that works and the suit splits 3-2, declarer has twelve tricks. He can improve a little on the odds by first cashing a high club in case East has a singleton queen. As the cards lie, the club finesse, and with it the contract would fail.

However, that is not the limit of declarer's options. There is another chance which is not so easy to spot. Declarer can also make his contract if East has either a singleton or doubleton spade honor!

The winning line is to take the opening lead in dummy and lead a low spade to the eight! West wins the king and knocks out declarer's remaining diamond stopper. Now declarer cashes the king of clubs in case the queen drops. When that doesn't succeed, declarer continues with a spade to the ace. As the cards lie, the queen comes tumbling down and declarer has twelve tricks without having to bother with the club finesse.

And if the queen of spades doesn't drop? Then declarer falls back on the club finesse as his last resort. Note that declarer cannot afford to cash a high club before his first spade play. If he does that, West can return a club on winning the king of spades, and force declarer to make a club guess before he wants to.

Silicon Chips A Shrinking Breed

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — As the world of electronics shrinks, computers and other high technological equipment, silicon chips used to store and process mountains of information also have shrunk.

One of the challenges to engineering is designing a package to hold the miniature chips. At Honeywell's Solid State Electronics Division here, special frames or containers for the chips are designed for particular needs.

Packaged chips tap into tiny electrical channels to put impulses on wires big enough to keep track of a store's inventory, run an airline's reservation systems or operate an oil refinery.

The average chip isn't as big as the pushbutton on a telephone, yet it can handle more information than a computer the size of a room in the old days, according to Dr. Carl Nomura, head of the division.

FOCUS

Calgary Stampede

Calgary was once a small cowtown in the middle of an endless prairie. But today it is Canada's fifth largest city and trade center of the fastest growing province. Like Texas, Alberta is getting rich on black gold — oil. More than 450 oil companies have their headquarters in Calgary. But beginning Friday, Calgary will become a cowboy town again — for ten days. The annual Calgary Exhibition and Stampede is expected to round up over a million visitors for its livestock exhibitions, rodeo, stage shows and chuckwagon races. But for those who want to avoid the trampling herds at this "rangeland Mardi Gras", the majestic Canadian Rockies, just 50 miles to the west, offer serene beauty and splendid isolation.

DO YOU KNOW — What is the capital of Alberta?

WEDNESDAY'S ANSWER — The first space satellite was Sputnik 1, launched by the U.S.S.R. in 1957.

Kelsey Creek: this is an unspoiled stretch, this is how it all once was, before development in the Bellevue, Wash., area.

Here, creek waters private land. Now it's silted where it used to have clear gravel floor.

Straightened, landscaped, Kelsey Creek flows beside busy highway, and serves as a storm sewer.

Dredger gouges out channel as new building forces changes in natural drainage patterns.

Troubled Waters

Photographed by Barry Sweet.

Shopping center parking lot straddles part of creek, now invisible under the grade through which seep oil and dirt.

This is Blueberry Lake at the top end of Kelsey Creek. It's still undeveloped, still the haunt of ducks and other wild birds—but the salmon no longer get as far upstream as this, as they used to.

AP Newsfeatures.

Kelsey Creek flows all of five miles from Blueberry Lake, through the outskirts of Bellevue, Wash., into Lake Washington. A handful of years ago its runs of spawning salmon were a local phenomenon. Now, there are none to be seen, hardly even an occasional small fish. Kelsey Creek is only one small stream. But its loss as a salmon spawning ground, due to creeping urbanization, is being multiplied many times over in the Pacific Northwest. Rivulets such as Kelsey are natural fish "nurseries" but they are losing out to pollution from construction, from industrial drainage, seeping chemicals and gasoline and oil from commercial developments and parking lots.
