Britain, Argentina Agree On Ending Hostilities

LONDON (AP) — Britain announced today it is satisfied Argentina considers hostilities ended in the undeclared war over the Falkland Islands and said it will return all remaining 593 Argentine prisoners.

The announcement came a month after the surrender of Argentine forces on the Falklands June 14, a period in which fighting had stopped but Britain waited for Argentine assurances that hostilities in the South Atlantic were over.

The Foreign Office announced that following an exchange of messages and "various other indications," Britain is now satisfied that "the Argentine government accepts that active hostilities are at an end."

The prisoners, including Brig. Gen. Mario Benjamin Menendez, commander of the Argentine forces on the Falklands, will be returned "as soon as possible," the Foreign Office announcement said.

The 200-nautical mile war zone imposed by Britain around the Falklands will remain in effect pending "further consideration," as will the 12-mile blockade along the Argentine coast and British economic sanctions against Argentina, the announcement said.

The Foreign Office referred today to 593 prisoners. Previously, Britain had said it was holding 590 Argentines. There was no explanation for the change.

Earlier, a Foreign Office spokesman said the government was studying Argentina's reply to a request for formal confirmation that the undeclared war in the South Atlantic was over.

The spokesman, who declined to be identified, said the message was received Sunday through the Swiss Embassy in Buenos Aires, which has been looking after British interests there since Argentina invaded Britain's Falkland Islands colony April 2.

The Argentine message, released by the Foreign Office in London, referred to "the present state of de facto cessation of hostilities" and proposed that Britain return the remaining Argentine prisoners "still held under harsh conditions."

The Foreign Office said the reference to "harsh conditions" was "offensive and unfounded." It said the prisoners have been held under conditions approved by the Red Cross.

The men have been aboard the 8,987-ton British passenger ferry St. Edmund in Falklands waters for about a week. It will sail for the Argentine port of Puerto Madryn "as soon as detailed arrangements have been made," the Foreign Office said.

Britain had been demanding that Argentina formally acknowledge an end to the 74-day conflict before it would release the last 593 of nearly 11,800 Argentines captured before the surrender of the Argentine garrison at Stanley, capital of the islands 250 miles east of southern Argentina.

Initially, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said Britain would hold the last prisoners — mostly officers and military specialists — until there was an "authoritative" statement from the Argentine government that hostilities were over not only on the Falklands, but also on their dependencies and in the air-and-sea corridor between the islands and the Argentine coast.

The British later reduced the demand to "positive indications" that Argentina considers the fighting over.

The 1,400 British marine commandos who bore the brunt of the ground fighting on the Falklands returned Sunday to Southampton, England, aboard the requisitioned luxury liner Canberra.

U.S. Lifts Economic Bans But Retains Military Bar

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today lifted the economic sanctions imposed against Argentina after it invaded the Falkland Islands and called on all those involved in the conflict between Argentina and Britain to put the dispute behind them "and to work for friendship and cooperation."

The sanctions included withholding new Export-Import Bank credits, insurance and guarantees; and new Commodity Credit Corp. guarantees.

But military sanctions imposed during the Carter administration as a result of human rights policies in Argentina, and continued during the Falkland Islands conflict, will remain.

In a written statement, Reagan said the economic sanctions would end today. They were imposed April 30.

"I have made this decision after a thorough review of the situation in the South Atlantic following the cessation of hostilities," the president said. "It is important now for all parties involved in the recent conflict to put the past behind us, and to work for friendship and cooperation."

"The United States, for its part, will do all it can to strengthen its historic ties among nations of this hemisphere," Reagan said.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan was ending the sanctions "in the interest of strengthening our economic ties with our allies."

"The president took into consideration the situation in the South Atlantic and the importance we place on restoring normal and friendly relations with Argentina," Speakes said.

Speakes said the British and Argentine governments had been told of the decision.

Asked whether those governments had approved, the spokesman said, "I don't know that we asked their approval, but we have informed them."

Speakes said that the most important factor in the president's consideration of the issue "was that the hostilities have ended" and that Reagan assumed they would not resume.

Earlier in the day, the British government announced that it was satisfied Argentina considers the hostilities ended in the undeclared war and it would return all remaining 593

Argentine prisoners.

The announcement in London came almost a month after the surrender of Argentine forces on the Falklands June 14. Although the fighting had stopped, Argentina had not given Britain assurances that hostilities would not resume.

The 200-nautical-mile war zone imposed by Britain around the Falklands will remain in effect pending "further consideration," as will the 12-mile blockade along the Argentine coast and British economic sanctions against Argentina, the British announcement said.

The U.S. military sanctions left in place include a suspension of military exports to Argentina, including U.S. arms transfers. Those sanctions were under review when the Falklands conflict began, said Lyndon Allin, another deputy White House press secretary, who said that Argentina had not been certified to receive arms when the fighting erupted in April.

Argentine troops occupied the British-held islands April 2.

The withholding of the Ex-Im Bank credits meant that some $230 million worth of pending loans to Argentina were frozen.

Six loans were involved. The primary ones were for the supply of locomotives and energy equipment by General Electric and General Motors.

The Ex-Im Bank makes loans to firms and governments overseas at reduced interest rates to foster the export of U.S. goods.

The sanctions also cancelled a $2 million credit line by the Commodity Credit injured, but they run into the dozens," Morales said.

Mexican television said in unconfirmed reports that the death toll could be as high as 50.

District attorney spokesman Alfredo Ruben said the train crashed sometime between 1 p.m. and 1:30 p.m. Sunday near Station Corte, 19 miles north of Tepic.

Tepic is 476 miles northwest of Mexico City.

"Frankly, we do not have any precise information on the number of victims, but we have people checking the hospitals and other aid stations," Ruben said.

The attorney general's office is in charge of investigating accidents involving federal property. The train from Nogales to Guadalajara belongs to the state-owned Pacific

Train Crash Kills 35

TEPIC, Mexico (AP) — A passenger express train known as The Bullet jumped the rails near this Pacific coast city and plunged into a deep ravine, killing as many as 35 people, authorities said today.

The train was bound Sunday from Nogales, across the border from Arizona, to Guadalajara, 332 miles northwest of the Mexican capital, an official of the federal district attorney's office here said.

There was no word on whether there were Americans aboard.

"We've worked all afternoon Sunday and all night, and rescue squads are still trying to pry the wreckage loose. We have no firm figure, but I believe there may be as many as 35 people killed," Red Cross spokesman Manuel Morales said in a telephone interview.

"We also don't know about the number of

TEEN SUMMER EMPLOYMENT?

I am 16 and have nothing to do this summer. Do you have any ideas of what I can do — jobs, volunteer or paid. C.M.

The Volunteer summer program at Pitt County Memorial Hospital is completely filled and the Candystriper programs at Greenville Villa Nursing Home and University Nursing Center are well under way. However, Virginia Baker, activities director at University Nursing Center, says she can always accept more teen-agers who are serious about working — not who're just trying to fill leisure time. Cathy Wright, assistant activities director at Greenville Villa, says a few more Candystripers can be accommodated at Greenville Villa, but only on weekends and early evening hours. Daytime hours during the week are covered. She also stressed the need for real commitment to working with the residents. The payoff, of course, is the satisfaction on doing the job well, the friendships, and being able to document real volunteer experience on future applications for employment, college entrance, scholarships, etc., she and activities director Terry Fuller stress.

Also, you might like to make application for listing with the Dial-a-Teen program of the Real Crisis Intervention Center, 312 E. Tenth Street, which can refer teen-agers to jobs as they become available. Visit the center to make application. Persons wishing to hire teen-agers are encouraged to make use of Dial-A-Teen. Again, only those teen-agers seriously interested in working should apply.

Anyone knowing of other employment opportunities for teen-agers — paid or volunteer — are asked to call Hotline, 752-1336.

Haul Set At $400 Million

CLEVELAND, Tenn. (AP) — A six-month investigation ended with the largest narcotics seizure in Tennessee history — 1,200 pounds of "nearly pure" cocaine valued at $400 million, authorities said.

District Attorney General Richard Fisher said nine people, ranging in age from 19 to 59, were arrested Sunday after the cocaine, almost $450,000 in $100 bills and a machine gun were seized.

Agents from the federal Drug Enforcement Administration and Tennessee Bureau of Investigation tailed three cars and a van on Interstate 75 near Cleveland, then arrested four people when the vehicles stopped at a convenience store, Fisher said.

Five others were arrested at a motel in nearby Loudon, he said.

The cocaine, believed to be from Colombia, was found in the van, he said.

Arrested at the scene were David A. Warren, 42, Holly

Hills, S.C.; James C. Trammell, 56, Atlanta; Robert S. George, 59, Atlanta, and Marvin Lee Echols, 29, Smyrna, Ga.

Arrested at the motel were Jackie Wayne Scarborough, 41, of Rockwood, Tenn., and his son, Marcus Wayne Scarborough, 19, also of Rockwood; Jennifer Oxedine, 19, Lumberton, N.C.; Jackqueline D. Gurley, 20, Chattanooga, and James Gurley, alias Michael Edward Briggance, 27, Chattanooga.

Those arrested were taken to Hamilton County Jail in Chattanooga and held without bond for investigation of violating federal drug statutes, Fisher said.

A hearing before a federal magistrate on formal charges was scheduled today, he said.

Sunday's seizure was almost double the quantity of cocaine found at a Sevier County airport in March 1981, when authorities confiscated 614 pounds worth $200 million, Fisher said.

Sen. John East seemed optimistic today about the passage of the tobacco bill in Congress, saying there is "broad-based" support for the measure.

"Obviously, it is an extremely important piece of legislation... of great significance for the whole state of North Carolina," East said from his Greenville home. "We're working very hard to get this measure through with what we feel is the best possible condition... reflecting the interests and needs of the tobacco producer and the problems of the industry as a whole."

The senator said, "There are not only diverse points of view in terms of national attitudes, but within the state there are diverse points of view between producers, buyers, exporters, and manufacturers," which he noted "makes a united tobacco front more difficult to achieve."

Even so, East said "it is our feeling" that the proposed bill "is a very good bill and deserves to be supported in the form that it's in."

"It preserves the fundamentals of the program... the right to hold and sell allotments, and recognizes the property right in allotments. It preserves the allotment and quota concept... keeps those components of the (tobacco) program."

As far as allotments are concerned, East said the proposed bill "requires corporations to sell theirs." But he noted, only about 2 percent of the tobacco allotments are owned by corporations.

Dies In Rescue

A 14-year-old Greenville girl who pushed her 17-year-old companion out of the path of the vehicle died Saturday night of injuries she received after being struck by a truck on Greenville Boulevard 115 feet east of Holiday Court.

Chief Glenn Cannon, who said the mishap occurred about 9:50 p.m., said Angela Marie "Cookie" Radford died in Pitt County Memorial Hospital about 11:30 p.m. from severe head and other injuries suffered in the collision.

Cannon said Toria Lynn Lloyd of Greenville told investigators she and Miss Radford had crossed the two east-bound lanes and the center turn lane of the roadway when Miss Radford said "Toria Lynn, push me."

It was then that Miss Radford was struck by a pick-up truck driven by Leham Sutton of 109 Pearl Drive.

Miss Radford, who would have been in the eighth grade at Farmville Middle School in September, was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Radford of Shady Acres Trailer Park.

Officers, who made no charges in connection with the accident, estimated damage to the Sutton truck at $1,200.

East Optimistic Over Tobacco Bill

East said the proposed bill also "encourages" the allotment holder who is not a producer to sell the allotment by "allowing him to see the allotment off the land."

Another major provision of the proposed legislation establishes "assessor fees... mandated by Congress last year," which requires that "all costs to the government be removed from the program except administrative costs. That means that loan defaults be paid from assessor fees," rather than by the federal government, a move which should "reduce political criticism" of the tobacco program, East suggested.

The act also empowers the secretary of agriculture "to reduce by no more than 35 percent the price support formula" in order to give greater flexibility and encourage exports, which East termed "a positive step."

"We hope to move this bill through relatively quickly," East said, "and keep the essentials of the bill in place."

"The bill is critical in terms of allowing markets to get open and functioning."

The senator, who said the tobacco legislation should be taken up by the Senate on Wednesday, said the bill has been given top priority. It's "a bi-partisan, non-partisan issue" with "strong supporters on both sides of the aisle," and enemies on both sides as well.

There is "a broad-based feeling among legislators that this is a vital issue and everyone is committed to see the thing stays on a steady and solid course."

East said that "tobacco couldn't have stronger friends" than North Carolina's Sen. Jesse Helms or Kentucky's Sen. Walter D. Huddleston, the Senate minority leader.

Army Private Found In Tank

MANNHEIM, West Germany (AP) — A 20-year-old U.S. Army private who stole an ammunition laden tank and went on a rampage through downtown Mannheim was found drowned inside the tank after it plunged into the nearby Nectar River, police said.

The soldier, whose identity was withheld pending notification of his family, was trapped in the 60-ton tank after it fell from a bridge Saturday and came to rest bottom up in 16 feet of water.

West German rescue teams found his body Sunday when they pulled out the M-60 tank with a barge crane.

Army officials refused to speculate on the motive for the rampage, which injured four people and left the U.S. Army with a bill for property damages estimated by Mannheim police at $810,000. The Army said it would pay.

The soldier, stationed with the 8th Infantry Division Battalion attached to the U.S. Army's 3rd Brigade, stole the tank from a base about six miles outside Mannheim after passing through a security check dressed in full uniform Saturday afternoon. Army officials said.

They said the tank was carrying "its normal combat ammunition load" but that this presented "no danger" since firing mechanisms are kept separate while the tanks are on the base.

The Army said the tank damaged eight cars, a trolley, three light posts and various sidewalks as it careened through Mannheim. But local police said residents have reported 14 cars damaged, 11 of them beyond repair.

The tank plunged into the river after being trapped on the bridge by convoys of U.S. military police at both ends. Seeing himself cornered, the driver rotated the tank's turret a few times, witnesses said, before aiming his guns at the military police.

WRECK CAUSES INJURIES — Members of the Winterville Rescue squad and the Eastern Pines Fire Department pull one of the victims from a car in a Sunday night accident about five miles south of Greenville on N.C. 43. According to North Carolina Highway Patrol records, a car driven by Edward Bruce Dunn of Route 1, Ayden, was traveling west on rural paved road 1700 when he made a left turn into the path of a north-bound car driven by Steven Ray Johnson of 106A Eastbrook Apartments, Greenville. Reports said two passengers in the Johnson vehicle were injured. They were listed as Charles Eugene Mills and David William Leech of Greenville. Investigators charged Dunn with driving under the influence of alcohol. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Creature Said In Chesapeake

BALTIMORE (AP) — A Maryland man says he has a videotape of a 30-foot snakelike creature swimming in Chesapeake Bay, and experts from the Smithsonian Institution plan to examine it.

Robert Frew, a businessman who was trained in wildlife management at the University of Maine, said he filmed the creature on May 31 from his bayside home at Love Point on Maryland's Eastern Shore.

"Our conclusions are, number one, it's big, and number two, it sure as hell doesn't belong here," he said.

George Zug, chairman of the department of vertebrate zoology at the Smithsonian's Museum of Natural History, said the largest water snakes and eels common to the bay usually grow no longer than about four feet. He said the videotape will be viewed sometime next month.

A Baltimore-based group that investigates claims of "paranormal" occurrences, the Enigma Project, has examined the four-minute videotape.

"I've heard reports of these sightings — unsubstantiated — back to the 1930s," said one of the group's founders, Mike Frizzell. "Up to this point, it's been a myth."

The creature caught on film was 30 to 35 feet long, Frew said. In girth, he said, "it's about the size of a good sized person's thigh" — about 10 inches in diameter.

"My mind says it's a snake," Frew said, but the shape of its head — "a little more round than a football" — makes him doubt that hypothesis.

Asked about other characteristics, Frew said with a laugh, "It seemingly doesn't eat people, because it swam within 50 feet of them."

On the tape's sound track, Frew, his wife and two friends were heard shouting to a group of swimmers that the creature was nearing. The creature dived and then re-appeared beyond them.

"If they'd seen it at eye level, there would have been mass panic," Frew said, adding that he used a zoom lens to film the creature from about 200 feet as it repeatedly broke the surface.

"The first time up, we saw its head and about four feet back ... the next time about 12 feet ... the next time about 20," he said.

Most of the animal appeared to be beneath the water and the creature appeared to have humps along its back, he said.

Queen Calmed Intruder In Bedroom

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II found a prowler sitting on her bed in Buckingham Palace and chatted with him for 10 minutes to keep him calm until she could summon a footman to take him away, the Daily Express reported today.

It said the 56-year-old monarch was unharmed and "unruffled by her ordeal."

"The queen was very brave," the Express quoted an unidentified senior police detective as saying. "By being calm she did not alarm the man — or he would have panicked and it might have been a completely different story."

The report of the bizarre encounter Friday prompted calls from legislators for a government inquiry into security for the royal family. Workmen spent the weekend stringing barbed wire atop the old iron spikes on the brick wall around Buckingham Palace.

A palace spokesman appeared to confirm the Daily Express report, saying: "We cannot add any more (because) a man has been charged." Once a person is charged with an offense under British law nothing can be reported about the suspect beyond what is said in court.

Police said Michael Fagan, a 30-year-old vagrant, was charged Saturday with breaking into the palace on June 7 and stealing a half-bottle of wine. Police said he was arrested inside the palace again at about 3 a.m. Friday, apparently after his late-night encounter with the queen.

The defendant, who appeared in court Saturday barefoot and wearing a dirty tee-shirt and jeans, was ordered held without bail pending trial. Scotland Yard refused to say why Fagan was not immediately charged with the second break-in.

Other publications, including the respected London Times, picked up the Express report. The tabloid Mirror newspaper said Police Commissioner Sir David McNee was "furious" at the breakdown in palace security, which includes military units, police, servants, burglar alarms and closed-circuit television.

The Daily Express said an unidentified intruder entered the queen's second-floor bedroom and sat on her bed. The queen talked to him quietly for about 10 minutes until she gained his confidence, then summoned a footman on the pretense of getting the prowler a cigarette, and the servant hustled him away, the report said.

The queen's husband, Prince Philip, was sleeping in a separate bedroom at the time of the incident, it said.

A Conservative Party member of Parliament, Harry

Greenway, said he would question Home Secretary William Whitelaw today in the House of Commons on whether security is adequate for the royal family.

"It seems utterly incredible and breathtaking that someone should be able to worm his way into Buckingham Palace and the queen's own private apartment in this way," Greenway said.

Scotland Yard said Police Commissioner McNee had named Assistant Commissioner John Dellow, 51, to investigate security breaches at the palace following the fifth intrusion in the past 12 months.

In June 1981 three West German students scaled a wall and camped on the 51-acre palace grounds, claiming they thought it was a public park.

Two months later, a man was found wandering in the grounds claiming he was in love with Princess Anne. He was found to be mentally disturbed and went unpunished.

John Laurence, 25, who has a history of mental disorders and violence, was put on probation for three years at a court hearing Friday for using a knife to force his way past the main-gate police on June 17. He was disarmed by a guard at a door to the palace.

Much of the silver mined down through the ages has been lost. In the first half of this century, people lost an estimated 100,000 tons of silver coins. Another 3,000 tons are estimated to be in X-ray films filed for years in hospitals and doctor's offices.

Senate To Consider Shultz Appointment

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Congress returns today from its Fourth of July recess, senators are preparing to give President Reagan's second nominee for secretary of state a two-day grilling on his business ties with the Arab world.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee is scheduled to open its confirmation Tuesday for secretary-designate George P. Shultz, whom Reagan tapped for the top job at the State Department after accepting the resignation of Alexander M. Haig Jr.

The committee also reserved the hearing room for Wednesday, anticipating lengthy questioning by some senators about Shultz's role as president of the Bechtel Group, a multinational engineering and construction firm with large contracts with Arab states.

Both houses return today — the House after a recess of more than two weeks and the Senate after a 10-day break. They are scheduled to remain in session until Aug. 27, when they will quit until after Labor Day.

The first order of business in the Senate is a proposed constitutional amendment that would require a balanced federal budget unless both houses voted by a three-fifths majority to permit spending in excess of revenues.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., a co-sponsor of the amendment, said he believes it will pass. A count by The Associated Press showed 66 senators either committed to vote for the measure or learning toward support of it. It requires a two-thirds majority, which is 67 votes if all 100 senators vote. The AP count showed 13 senators still undecided.

The amendment faces a tougher fight in the House, where it is co-sponsored by 221 members, a majority of the 435-member body but substantially less than two-thirds. Among the opponents is Rep. Peter Rodino, D-N.J., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, where the measure is now being considered. If approved by both houses, the amendment would have to be ratified by three-fourths of the state legislatures to become part of the Constitution.

The House is scheduled to take up, probably on Tuesday, Reagan's second veto of a supplemental appropriation bill to keep parts of the government running in the current fiscal year.

Opponents did not muster the two-thirds majority needed to override the first veto and are not expected to this time either. The House will then have before it a third version, passed by the Senate just before the recess, which has the blessing of White House Budget Director David A. Stockman.

The House Ways and Means Committee is expected to wait until next week to begin work on its version of a $21 billion revenue raising bill that the Senate Finance Committee approved before the recess. The Senate bill would increase taxes on cigarettes and telephone services and restrict deductions for medical expenses and casualty losses.

Bruce Davie, chief tax economist for the House panel, predicted Congress will approve a bill before the Labor Day recess. He said it is likely to resemble the Senate committee measure, but added that the House may favor a more liberal provision for medical and casualty losses.

Shultz also is expected to face questioning about his views on U.S. policy in Latin America, a part of the world that he has conceded that he knows relatively little about.

PERIODONTAL DISEASE-EARLY DIAGNOSIS

You have just completed your regular dental checkup. You breathe a deep sigh of relief. "No cavities, but your gums are in poor shape." You are mistakenly relieved. The sad fact is that more teeth are lost because of periodontal disease (gum disease) than from any other factor, including cavities.

Fortunately, it can be treated successfully if it is diagnosed early. Unfortunately, you have no way of knowing of its onset other than by dental examination because there is normally no pain or other symptoms in its early stages.

Once this silent disorder advances, though, the gums and even the jawbone may become inflamed and eventually break down. But this extreme can be avoided if the dentist regularly examines your mouth both visually and with x-rays. He can determine whether there have been any changes in the mouth tissues or the bone around your teeth. He will also look for early tooth decay, impaction, tumors in the jaw area and abscesses in tooth roots. To insure healthy gums and teeth, you must combine regular dental examinations with effective brushing and flossing.

Wedding Vows Said Sunday Afternoon

FARMVILLE — Rachel Ann Nelson of Greenville and Johnnie Mitchell Patterson of Rocky Mount were united in marriage Sunday at 3:30 p.m. in the Farmville Church of God. The Rev. Ronald Buchanan performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Harvey A. Nelson of Greenville and the late Mr. Nelson. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Johnnie R. Patterson of Bailey and the late Mr. Patterson.

A program of wedding music was performed by pianist Katrina Gray of Pactolus. Randall Nelson, soloist and cousin of the bride, sang "If," "We've Only Just Begun" and the "Wedding Prayer."

The bride, given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Wesley Earl Craft of Farmville, wore a gown with an underskirt of peau de soie. It was overlaid with alencon lace. The lace bodice was accented with beads over the shoulders and a V-front. The gown was styled with a high neckline, empire waist and pointed tapered sleeves that were closed with covered buttons. Rows of vertical lace trimmed the sleeves and the chapel length skirt featured a ruffled hemline. She wore a Queen Anne headpiece that was covered with alencon lace. She wore a shoulder length veil. She carried a bouquet of white carnations and pom poms accented with white streamers.

Wanda Parker of Farmville, niece of the bride, was the matron of honor. Carolyn Knox of Greenville, cousin of the bride, served as bridesmaid. They each wore formal gowns of blue polyester knit with stand-up collars and ivory-colored front and back yokes with scalloped edging. Each carried a nosegay of pom poms and baby's breath accented with blue streamers. They wore matching flowers of daisies and baby's breath in their hair.

MRS. JOHNNIE MITCHELL PATTERSON

Kimberly Stokes of Greenville, cousin of the bride, served as junior bridesmaid. She wore a floor length light blue dress with an overlay of white lace and a white sash. She carried a pomandra of pom poms and baby's breath accented with white streamers. She wore baby's breath in her hair.

Walter Lamm of Rocky Mount was best man. Timmy Patterson of Bailey, brother of the bridegroom, served as usher. Wesley Allen Craft of Farmville, nephew of the bride, was junior usher.

The mother of the bride wore a two-piece ensemble of light blue. The mother of the bridegroom selected an ensemble of aqua blue and white. They both wore corsages of white carnations. Mrs. Margaret May of Farmville directed the wedding.

The bride is a graduate of J.H. Rose High School and Pitt Technical Institute. She is presently employed by K-Mart Corp. of Greenville. The bridegroom is employed at Hardee's Food Systems of Rocky Mount.

The couple was entertained by a cake-cutting Saturday evening following the wedding rehearsal. The cake was served by Mary Lou Strider of Greenville and punch was served by Bertha Nelson, aunt of the bride of Greenville.

The refreshment table was covered with a lace cloth and centered with an arrangement of white and yellow pom poms, baby's breath and greenery.

After a wedding trip, the couple will reside in Salisbury.

Dear Abby

Sister Covets Silver Service

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: When I was divorced 15 years ago, I gave my sterling silver tea set to my sister to use until I remarried. She lived in Iowa and I lived in Missouri.

Well, three years ago I remarried and asked my sister to return my silver tea set. She said, "I have grown to love it so much, I just can't part with it." I could not believe she was serious, but shortly after that she sent me a cheap silver-plated tea set to replace the sterling silver set that belonged to me! I returned the silver-plated set and told her she could keep it — I wanted my own set back!

Would you believe she ignored my request? I wrote to her four times and called her at least a half-dozen times asking her to return my set, but she still has it. This has ruined our relationship and I am sick over it. I still want my set back.

Last year my sister moved to California and took my set with her. What can I do? I consulted a lawyer and he told me I could sue her, but I would have to go to California and hire a California lawyer to handle the case. I really can't afford to go to California to sue her, but if that's the only way to get my set back, I guess I'll have to do it and save somewhere else.

What would you do if you were in my place?
SICK OF FIGHTING

DEAR SICK: Your sister obviously covets your tea set more than she values your friendship. If I were you, I'd write the loss off and forget it.

DEAR ABBY: This is going to be a "first" for you. Vera (not her real name) and I have been happily married for nearly two years. Vera is 24 and I'm 33, and we enjoy a healthy, normal sex life.

About six months ago she asked me if I would mind "paying her" every time she had sex with me. Now, don't get me wrong, Vera is a nice girl from off a farm, and she really doesn't need the money because she works and so do I. She doesn't ask for much — just a few dollars. She says it makes her feel like a "wicked" woman and that "turns her on," so I go along with her little game.

I suppose I shouldn't complain because this hasn't hurt our sex relationship. If anything, it's improved it. If I don't have the cash, she lets me charge it. She won't take a check. She wants to see the cash.

Have you ever heard of anything like this before? Do you think Vera is bonkers? Or am I, for going along with it?
CASH "CUSTOMER" IN CANADA

DEAR "CUSTOMER": About sex: Anything that is agreeable between two consenting adults, done privately and hurts no one, is OK.

DEAR ABBY: A few years ago you had something in your column about chastity belts. I believe you said that they were coming back in style. I would very much appreciate it if you would give me some information on where I might get one. According to what I read in the newspapers, this town has become the rape capital of the United States. Thank you.

DEAR NEEDS: A woman threatened with rape should be more concerned about her life than her chastity. Call your local rape crisis center or police department and find out what courses are available for women who need to learn how to protect themselves against rape. It will be well worth your time.

Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. Write to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Cedrick Pierce at the home of the bridegroom's parents. A program of wedding music was presented by Randy Buck, who also sang "Always and Forever" and "The Wedding Prayer."

She carried a tapered formal bouquet of lavender orchids and agapanthus tied with matching satin ribbon.

The attendants each wore a formal gown of candy organza over taffeta designed with an open squared neckline, narrow shoulder straps and an off the shoulder elasticized bertha collar. The sleeveless gown was encircled at the empire waistline with candy satin ribbon. The modified A-line skirt was enhanced by a flounce at the hemline that extended up to the back of the gown to the waistline to form a bustle. The honor attendant carried a natural wicker garden basket of summer flowers tied with blue satin. Bridesmaids carried baskets designed like that of the honor attendant.

Both mothers and

grandmothers wore white daisy corsages.

The walkway leading to the house was flanked by hurricane lamps with blue bows and greenery. An altar was improvised in the enclosed pool area. The pool was accented by floating candles and summer flowers. An arch was decorated with pink fuchsia, lavender, yellow and blue flowers. The bride couple knelt on a decorated prie-dieu.

After a wedding trip to Nags Head, the couple will be living near Greenville.

The bride is a nursing student at Pitt Community College. The bridegroom is a graduate of D.H. Conley High School and is engaged in farming.

A reception followed the ceremony. The front entrance was decorated with ivory bows, baskets of flowers and palms. The refreshment table was covered with a white cloth with an arrangement of assorted summer flowers in a four branched silver candelabra with yellow candles.

Edna Mills served cake and Jackie Williams poured punch. Andrea Cox presided at the register.

The wedding was directed by Jean Evans.

An after-rehearsal pig pickin' as given by the parents of the bridegroom at their home Friday night.

Perhaps A Variable Figure?

Poverty is different things to different people.

To the federal government, $9,200 was the official poverty level for a non-farm family of four.

With the help of some questioning here and there, combined with observations and experience, some sort of consensus emerged on that $9,200 income. With that figure, a non-farm family of four should have:

A car, a television set, a clock-radio, a washing machine (in addition to basic furnishings), a plain but adequate diet, a couple of insurance policies, a small bank account, a more remote likelihood of alcoholism, a few small debts, reasonable clothing (no designer jeans), and not many weekend outings.

A rural family, by virtue of gardening opportunities, would fare better.

As a poverty benchmark, $9,200 does not equate with true poverty as we know it. In fact, compared with most parts of the world, it carries an image of wealth.

A more realistic "poverty" figure is in order ... perhaps a variable, tied to regional need. A number of programs are based on that data.

There are inflationary areas in our country where the disputable figure would apply; but it is not suited to eastern North Carolina, for sure.

Computer Is Here To Stay

Computer systems are everywhere and getting into everything. The gadgetry is all-pervasive and spreading into unlikely fields faster than you can compute.

They were found invaluable to government and big business early-on; moved into echelons of research, record-keeping, small business, and into private homes. They can augment the human brain and hands like nothing else...even to the extent of playing games. Farmers found out about computers years ago, and no big agricultural operation is without one.

So what else?

The "what else" is a conclusion by a panel that agreed computers enrich society, and that pronouncement was soon followed by announcement that four high schools in Mission Viejo, Calif. their students soon will be required to take a computer course before they can receive their diplomas.

It makes sense. The computer is here to stay. People who are going to work in today's world (not tomorrow's) are going to have to be familiar with the systems and their operation.

Watch out! Those four high schools in California are just the fore-runners of a requirement that may well be nationwide within a relatively short period of time.

The purpose of the schools is to educate so that their products meet the needs of their times; and a familiarity with computers is going to be all-important in their lives.

Tax Battle Still Looms

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK WASHINGTON

Having agreed in detail to the largest tax increase in the nation's history, Ronald Reagan must now decide whether to battle a revolt against it by Reaganites in the House led by the president's old protegee, Rep. Jack Kemp.

"Unbelievable!" was Kemp's description when Sen. Robert Dole, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, pulled off the decade's greatest legislative sleight of hand by passing a $98.6 billion, three-year tax increase. Kemp's disdain is shared by one Reaganite on the White House staff who told us, "This bill violates everything we stood for on the campaign." Indeed, a key presidential aide who is no Reaganite predicts the president's support will be lukewarm.

But perhaps insensibly, Reagan has drifted away from the 1980 campaign. Brilliantly executed though Dole's unexpected triumph was, he had support at every step from the administration. Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan and Assistant Secretary Buck Chapoton visited every Republican on the finance committee to lobby higher taxes.

The president himself was no disinterested observer (as portrayed by aides) during the making of Dole's miracle. Over the telephone he vetoed a gasoline tax increase, sending Dole scurrying back to the drawing board for other revenue. Specifically, if incredibly, Reagan approved the resurrection of Jimmy Carter's withholding of taxes on dividends and interest.

Over the last six months, Reagan succumbed to budget director David Stockman and chief of staff James Baker in accepting a policy of austerity in the teeth of the recession. Whereas in February the president spit out a $9 billion gnat in rejecting higher excise taxes, in July he swallowed a $99 billion elephant.

He also swallowed a pledge. In a mid-June meeting at the White House, Reagan answered Rep. Ed Bethune of Arkansas by promising only a $20 billion tax hike, limited to one year. The Dole package raises taxes forever.

Furthermore, its emphasis on "fairness" adopts the zero-sum philosophy that a rich man's tax benefit is a poor man's loss. Yet, the package still avoids confrontation with super-lobbies — particularly oil. Dole's early suggestions of an energy tax collapsed under threats from oil men back in Kansas.

Instead, the bill hits cigarette smokers, telephone callers, airplane passengers and hospital patients. Its emphasis on enforcement concentrates on hounding waiters and waitresses to pay a tip tax and abandons successful Republican opposition to President Carter's proposed multiplication of IRS tax sleuths. All this dilutes the impact of the July 1, 10 percent personal income tax cut (on top of the $12 billion Social Security tax hikes).

The bill seems headed for early Senate passage while bemused Democrats witness this painful Republican answer to the recession. But the House is another matter. Even loyalist House Republican whip Trent Lott is tiring of unfulfilled promises that successive exercises in austerity would bring down interest rates.

Another member of the Republican leadership, conference chairman Kemp, will oppose the administration in full cry for the first time. More than half the 12 Republicans on the ways and means committee could vote no. Only Reagan's intervention for higher taxes may stem the Republican revolt brewing from fear that the tax bill would assure a Democratic landslide.

After Dole's triumph, one Republican member of the finance committee up for reelection this year commented in relief: "I was surprised how painless it was." Pain will come later if the president truly embraces this bill as Reagan's tax increase — pain for the taxpayer and pain for the Republican Party as it follows Herbert Hoover's path to the political graveyard.

Teacher Shortage

By PAUL T. O'CONNOR

RALEIGH — While the world is moving into a technological and communications revolution, North Carolina's public schools are facing a severe shortage of teachers to train students for that new age. A large number of math and science classes in grades seven through 12 are being taught by people not certified to teach in those fields and North Carolina colleges are not producing nearly enough new science and math teachers to begin filling the need.

Figures released by the state Department of Public Instruction show that 40 percent (1,691) of the people teaching math in grades 7-12 in North Carolina in the 1980-81 school year did not have a math certification. Of those teaching science, 29 percent (1,033) weren't certified in science. Of all science classes, 27 percent were taught by "inappropriately certified" people. Of math classes, 26 percent had that distinction.

Paul Taylor, chief of the DPI's science department, says that doesn't mean all those people are bad teachers. But studies have backed up the common sense deduction that if a teacher is well-trained in a field, there is a much greater chance he or she will be good at teaching it.

DPI's statistics show that the largest concentration of the inappropriately certified teachers comes in the grades where the most students are taking math and science courses. Almost three-fifths of the state's enrollment was in grades seven through nine.

PAUL O'CONNOR

That, says DPI, is an indication that students are taking only the science they need for graduation. In these grades, half the teachers were inappropriately certified.

On the math side, a bit more than a third of the enrollment was in Junior High math and three-fifths of the people teaching these courses were not certified math teachers.

The prospects for narrowing the gap between demand and certified teachers is not good. There just aren't very many people getting into math and science education these days. In 1970, North Carolina colleges produced 299 math education majors and 257 science education majors. In 1981, these colleges produced 83 math education majors and 120 science education majors.

It gets worse. Of those people, only about half decide to go into teaching. The rest probably will figure who needs the grief of low pay and student discipline when Burroughs-Wellcome and IBM pay so well. Then there are the drop-outs — those who get into teaching in these fields and leave either during the first year or immediately afterwards. There's a 15 percent drop-out rate nationally for all first year teachers. In science, in North Carolina, the rate is 24 percent. In math, it's 18 percent.

Another woe is the education level of the certified teachers. While 50 percent of the nation's math and science teachers go on to get their master's degrees, the percentage in North Carolina is only 23 for math and 24 for science.

Both at the state and national levels, the performance level of students in math and science has declined. Although statistics show that today's best math and science students are doing just as well, if not better, than the whiz-kids of years past, enrollment has also declined.

Strength For Today

THE POWER OF GOOD WILL

A man distinguished for his ability to raise money for good causes said "I have an unyielding principle that says you can never get a man to give you money unless you bring yourself to like that person."

Most of us would say it's the other way around. You have to get a person to like you before he will give you any money. But this man regards money-raising as a spiritual project. He feels that to raise money he must establish between himself and the donor a proper spiritual relationship. Therefore, he says "I must like that fellow."

Relationships between people are spiritual in essence. Money marriages, passion marriages, convenience marriages, all fail because they lack the proper spiritual basis.

Project love to others, and love and many other benefits will come back to you. — Elisha Douglass

New Mortgages More Complex

By JOHN CUNIFF AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The cynical principle of complications posits the notion that simplicity, one of man's most elevated concepts, inevitably is doomed by complexity, one of the perversities of economic life.

You need not believe in the principle, but if you are a homebuyer, builder or loan officer you might accept it on the evidence. The evidence is what has happened to the once-simple home mortgage.

Less than a decade ago most mortgages looked alike except for minor variations in maturity and interest rates. Generally, the buyer could be certain of fixed monthly payments for about 300 months or so.

That old fixed-rate mortgage now is referred to by the acronym FRM, to distinguish it from many scores of others.

Your new mortgage, should you qualify for one, may involve a variation of nine basic loan types, whose natures recently were clarified by the National Association of Home Builders.

They are: Adjustable rate, graduated payment, graduated payment adjustable, shared equity, shared appreciation, growing equity and zero-interest mortgages, and buydowns and land leases. You might also become involved in mortgage insurance, which can lower your down payment.

The adjustable rate mortgage — ARM — or adjustable mortgage loan is a catchall for about 60 new mortgages with fluctuating interest rates. The interest rate fluctuates with certain indexes, and are adjusted at intervals ranging from as little as 6 months to as much as 5 years.

In the graduated payment mortgage — GPM — payments increase year by year until they reach a fixed rate after 5 years or 10. Suitable for those with rising incomes. Note: Because early payments may not cover interest charges, "negative amortization" can occur.

The graduated payment adjustable mortgage loan simply — well, in a relative sense — combines the ARM and the GPM. It allows low monthly payments in the early years, with the negative amortization added to principle. The same note of caution as in GPMs applies.

The shared equity mortgage brings together an investor with a buyer who cannot afford a home on his own. The investor may provide part or all the down payment, a portion of monthly payments, or both.

There are many varieties of SEMs, but generally the investor receives a proportionate share in the property. SEMs generally run 5 years. In theory, the buyer will be able to buy out the investor or the home will be sold, providing the investor with his profit and his former partner with sufficient money for the downpayment on another home.

With a growing equity mortgage, or GEM, the monthly payments increase each year for a number of years or for the entire term of the loan. Increases may be pegged to an index or set by a fixed schedule.

Unlike increases on an adjustable rate mortgage, when GEM payments rise the entire increase goes to reduce the mortgage principal. Thus the buyer accumulates equity at an increased rate.

As its name suggests, you pay no interest on the zero-interest mortgage. These mortgages involve large downpayments, often one-third of total price, with the remainder paid in equal monthly installments over 5 to 7 years.

Interest rate buydowns have become a common method for builders to help buyers qualify for mortgages. The buydown to a lower interest rate than generally prevails may run for one year or three years or the full term of the mortgage, and involve one percentage point or several.

Land leases allow lower downpayments. The buyer lives in the house and is responsible for taxes, insurance and maintenance. The land is leased. The homebuyer generally has an option to purchase it later.

Mortgage insurance, bought by the homebuyer, reduces the lender's risk. In return, the buyer is allowed to make a lower downpayment.

No, there's nothing simple anymore about applying for, getting and understanding a home mortgage loan.

But there is something positive to be said, too. That is, the multiplicity and complexity of the new loan instruments presents the buyer with many more options than were available before.

To the editor:

In January of this year, my 21-year-old son, while under the influence of LSD, committed an armed robbery in Carteret County. Mr. Don Hicks of Greenville was appointed as his defender by the court.

I had heard before that court-appointed lawyers often do no more than they have to do and generally have little interest in the outcome of their clients' trials.

During the subsequent court appearance and trial of my son, no lawyer could have better represented him than Mr. Hicks did. He is an extremely competent, empathetic, conscientious Public Defender. My son received a reasonable (14-year) sentence, considering the seriousness of his crime and previous record. Also, I am certain that at least partially due to counsel and support given by Hicks, my son has made a complete turn-around in his life and is positively oriented toward paying his debt to society and becoming a useful citizen again.

The citizens of Greenville can be justifiably proud to have Don Hicks as one of their citizens and their Public Defender.

Recordings May Show If Plane Got Warning

By DAVID McCORMICK
Associated Press Writer

KENNER, La. (AP) — Cockpit recordings from a Pan Am jet may show whether the crew heard control tower reports of potentially dangerous wind currents before the plane took off in a thunderstorm and crashed minutes later, investigators say.

The National Transportation Safety Board said two wind shear alerts were issued about a minute apart, 7½ minutes before Flight 759 crashed after takeoff Friday just outside New Orleans, killing all 145 people aboard and eight on the ground.

But the board refused Sunday to speculate whether wind shears — unpredictable downward bursts of wind that disrupt normal air currents — caused the nation's second-worst plane crash.

Jefferson Parish Coroner Dr. Charles Odom said the identification of the dead should be nearly finished today, and the bodies released to relatives.

The victims, laid out in refrigerator trucks in a huge Delta Air Lines hangar at Moisant Airport, were examined by a team of pathologists, medical experts and the FBI's identification unit.

"There probably will be some that will be almost impossible to identify, but once the fingerprints are in, indications are 90 percent will be identified," Odom said.

The flight of the Boeing 727 originated in Miami and was headed for Las Vegas, Nev., and San Diego.

NTSB spokeswoman Barbara Dixon said it was possible the crew never heard the wind shear alerts. The pilot could have switched radio frequencies from ground control, which governs taxiing planes, to local control, which instructs takeoffs and landings, she said.

But the presence of wind shear alone does not warrant cancellation of a flight, said NTSB vice chairwoman Patricia Goldman. "Wind shear is but one of the pieces of information" the pilot uses in deciding whether to fly, she said.

Mrs. Goldman said when wind shears occur, "what happens is you get a change in wind direction and velocity which can create turbulence."

Investigators will learn more when the "black box" cockpit voice recording is processed by an FBI lab, she said, adding that it would be about six months before the board issues its report on the apparent cause of the crash.

The recorder's container was damaged by fire after the crash. The tape was not affected, but it contains background noise, such as sounds of the plane's windshield wipers, and the quality is poor, Mrs. Goldman said.

Investigators plan to use sophisticated recording equipment to try to eliminate the background noise.

"It will take longer than we anticipated" to interpret information from the voice recorder and the other tape in the flight data recorder, said Carol Roberts, chief of the safety board's lab service division.

She said weather would be looked at as a potential cause of the crash, adding, "We're not ruling anything out."

The co-pilot, Donald Pierce, 32, of Miami, apparently was at the controls during takeoff, Mrs. Goldman said. He had logged more than 6,000 hours of flight time.

One of the injured survivors, 7-year-old Rachel Schultz, was transferred Sunday in critical condition to the Shriners Burn Institute in Galveston, Texas.

Her mother, Barbara Schultz, remained in critical condition at East Jefferson Hospital with burns over 80 percent of her body. Mrs. Schultz' 11-year-old daughter, Jennifer, was killed.

In the Morningside subdivision, where the plane devastated 11 houses along a quarter-mile strip, the process of demolition continued.

City housing inspectors condemned the structures, and bulldozers on Sunday scraped up a block of former houses into a pile of rubble up to 15 feet high. The wreckage is to be trucked to the city dump.

Concrete slabs where four houses once stood were covered by cakes of black mud, loose wires, scraps of wood and other debris.

For the third straight night, police cordoned off the streets for five square blocks and turned on searchlights. Gov. Dave Treen called out the National Guard to help the efforts. Several people have been arrested for trespassing in the crash area.

Searchers found $35,000 in cash and checks on one of the bodies, and smaller amounts on two others, deputies said. Many of the victims had been bound for the gambling mecca of Las Vegas.

"The cleanup process begins now," said Kenner Police Chief Salvador Lentini. "That's why we're anxious to get the wreckage out of here, so people can go back to living a normal life."

But he added: "There will always be a scar there ..."

Archbishop Phillip Hannan of New Orleans held a funeral mass Sunday at Our Lady of Perpetual Help, the parish church for the people on the ground who died.

Meat And Radio Taken In Break-In

Greenville police said a quantity of meat and a radio were taken from Bojangle's Restaurant at the intersection of Chestnut Street and

Wind Shears May Be Deadly

By The Associated Press

Just minutes before doomed Pan Am Flight 759 took off from New Orleans' Moisant Airport in a rainstorm, the tower broadcast two alerts warning of potentially hazardous wind shifts.

Two minutes after it took off Friday afternoon, the Boeing 727 crashed into the residential suburb of Kenner, killing 153 people, including eight on the ground.

The National Transportation Safety Board hopes cockpit recorders recovered from the wreckage will yield clues to whether the crew of Flight 759 heard the warnings of the phenomenon called "wind shears," which were broadcast about a minute apart, 7½ minutes before the plane went down.

While the board has not pinpointed the cause of the crash, the mysterious winds that can shoot from storm clouds and play havoc with airplanes are the subject of a $2.2 million study at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colo.

Wind shears — also called microbursts by scientists — are "insidious, like a shark," says Dr. John McCarthy, a principal investigator for the project called "JAWS," for Joint Airport Weather Studies.

James Wilson, another investigator for the project, described microbursts as explosive downdrafts, often invisible to the eye and often quite small — as little as a mile in diameter — that cause an airplane to lose flying speed.

The scientists blame wind shears for the crash of an Eastern Airlines jet in 1975 that killed 113 people in New York.

On the hot, smoggy afternoon of June 24, 1975, several weak thunderstorms formed in northern New Jersey and began drifting over Manhattan toward Kennedy Airport. Within an hour, the clouds were absorbed by a giant cloud formation that blackened and began dropping rain — and strong bursts of wind — to Earth.

One of those vertical winds caused the Eastern jet to lose lift and fall from an altitude of 200 feet into the runway lights.

Dr. T. Theodore Fujita of the University of Chicago in 1979 described wind shears as deadly avalanches of air that roar straight down at 50 to 60 mph. The downbursts, he said, are often three to five miles in diameter and last only 10 to 15 minutes.

"In my view the season for downbursts is summer," he said. "Early summer through September seem to be the downburst months. The storms are not as big as tornadoes, and some pilots may think they can fly through safely, so I just want to say, 'beware.'"

Fujita's study focused on the New York crash as well as one in Denver in 1975.

In the New York accident, he said, the plane lost speed suddenly, then flew into the downburst's center, causing the wing to hit the landing lights on the ground.

In the Denver crash, he said, a strong tailwind caused a loss of airspeed. The plane lost its lift and simply sank to the ground.

Car Smashes Into Building

An estimated $2,200 damage resulted Saturday when a car driven by Rudolph Brown of Riverbluff Apartments ran into the front of Bob Barbour Honda at 117 W. 10th St.

Police, who said the mishap occurred about 10:45 p.m., said the Brown car ran into the front of the building after he swerved to avoid colliding with another vehicle.

Investigators said an estimated $400 damage resulted to the Brown car, while damage to the front of the building and two vehicles inside the showroom was estimated at $1,800.

Senior Cabinet Post

Tomorrow the Senate begins hearings on whether to confirm George Shultz as the 60th Secretary of State. George Washington appointed three department heads — the Secretaries of State, Treasury, and War — as his Cabinet, or closest advisers. Six Secretaries of State, including Thomas Jefferson, the nation's first, were later elected President. U.S. law makes the Secretary of State fourth in line for the presidency behind the Vice President, Speaker of the House, and the Senate President pro tempore. During the past decade, three Secretaries of State have resigned, in part, over conflicts with the National Security Advisor about foreign policy.

Israelies And PLO Agree To Still Another Truce

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A U.S.-mediated cease-fire held today after silencing the fiercest Israeli-Palestinian fighting yet around Beirut, a rocket and artillery duel that Lebanese police said left 83 people dead and 211 wounded.

The thunderous day-long bombardment Sunday came as Israeli officials said time was running out for a political settlement and accused the Palestine Liberation Organization of stalling.

The PLO claimed 100,000 shells, the equivalent of 2,000 tons of explosives, were fired into west Beirut by Israeli artillery and tanks dug in on the hills surrounding the city's southern and eastern outskirts.

Lebanese police said 166 buildings were destroyed by shell fire and the Soviet Embassy in west Beirut was hit for the third.

Shelling was so intense that it halted peace talks with U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib, who on Sunday arranged the sixth cease-fire since the Israelis invaded five weeks ago.

Lebanese Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan was prevented from delivering to Habib an 11-point peace proposal by PLO chief Yasser Arafat — a plan that reportedly falls short of meeting Israel's demands for a full PLO pullout from Lebanon.

Former Prime Minister Saeb Salam, a key intermediary between Habib and Arafat, said the talks were stalled over how to disengage Israeli and PLO forces and where the guerrillas will go after leaving Beirut.

The military command in Tel Aviv said three soldiers were killed and 28 were wounded the fighting Sunday. The PLO claimed 70 Israelis were killed or wounded, but it gave no source for its account. Lebanese police reported 11 Israelis killed, but they, too, gave no source.

The deaths raised the Israeli toll since the invasion began to 285 dead, a spokesman said.

A series of Israeli artillery barrages pounded the PLO nerve center in the slums of Moslem-held west Beirut, while Israeli gunboats offshore shelled the Palestinian Bourj el-Barajneh camp near Beirut's paralyzed airport.

Correspondents saw Palestinian-fired rockets crash into the pine forest surrounding U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon's residence in Yarze, and another volley of Katyusha rockets and artillery shells slammed into the glass-and-stone presidential palace in suburban Baabda.

Shells also hit the foreign press center at the Hotel Alexandre and other areas of Christian-held east Beirut for the first time since Israeli troops laid siege to the PLO stronghold four weeks ago. Israeli officers said the shells came from Palestinian positions, but the PLO denied firing on east Beirut.

The bombardment stopped about 9:30 p.m. (3:30 p.m. EDT).

Lebanese state radio said Habib's negotiating team arranged the cease-fire after Wazzan pleaded for intervention to "stop this mad bombardment."

The renewed fighting underscored the Israeli Cabinet's increasing impatience with the siege of west Beirut, which began after Israel invaded Lebanon on June 6 to crush the PLO guerrilla army and drive it from Lebanon.

"The negotiations are going on, but time is not unlimited," Cabinet Secretary Dan Meridor said in Jerusalem after the regular Sunday meeting of Prime Minister Menachem Begin and his ministers.

Meridor said "nothing yet has been decided" on a deadline for departure of the estimated 8,000 PLO guerrillas trapped in west Beirut. The Israeli media reported Habib had set Aug. 1 as "an informal target date" for reaching a settlement on an evacuation.

Israel Radio said several ministers told Begin they thought Habib's negotiations were going too slowly and expressed doubt they would succeed. The radio said the ministers were convinced the Palestinian leadership was stalling for time by complicating the talks, and keeping Israel embroiled in a costly war of attrition.

Israel has been saying for weeks that the PLO guerrillas must leave Lebanon and a strong Lebanese government must be established before its forces will withdraw.

"Our demand lays down that all foreign troops leave Lebanon, down to the last man," Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon said in an interview published by a West German newspaper Sunday.

Israel has threatened to assault west Beirut and drive the PLO out if diplomatic efforts fail. There has been widespread public opposition to such a move in Israel and elsewhere because of the high casualties likely in house-to-house fighting.

Sources in Beirut indicated Arafat's new proposal is not likely to allay Israeli suspicions. They said the document emphasized the creation and deployment of a U.N. force to supervise an Israeli-PLO disengagement, rather than a PLO evacuation from Beirut.

Israel has endorsed the idea of a multinational peace force, but only to get the Palestinians out and keep order during establishment of a reunified Lebanese government. The Israelis have criticized the existing U.N. peacekeeping forces for not preventing the PLO from using southern Lebanon as a base for attacks on Israel.

President Reagan told reporters Sunday that he stood by his offer of 1,000 U.S. Marines to aid an evacuation, but he is "wary" of the idea and has had no formal invitation from the Lebanese government.

"The only way we would do that is if it was essential to bringing peace to the area," he said. Reagan added he hoped an agreement could be reached soon, but said, "We've been disappointed before."

Paper Reports Research Probe

DETROIT (AP) — Federal investigators are probing allegations that two Japanese drug companies tried to buy information on cancer research from employees of U.S. pharmaceutical firms. The Detroit News has reported.

The investigation began this month after authorities received unconfirmed reports that Japanese businessmen offered "substantial payments" to employees of several U.S. drug firms, according to an unidentified Justice Department source quoted by the newspaper in its Sunday editions.

The Japanese businessmen allegedly wanted trade secrets on recent research to produce interferon, a cancer-fighting drug, by genetic engineering, the Justice Department source told the News.

One of the two Japanese firms was identified as Midori Juuji, or Green Cross Corp., makes blood products and is Japan's major developer of interferon, according to an anonymous U.S. trade official cited by the newspaper.

Green Cross, based in Osaka, Japan, today denied it had tried to steal technology. A spokesman for the Osaka-based company said in Japan its officials were "quite surprised" by the News report, calling it groundless and "absolutely false."

The other firm was not identified by the U.S. trade source, the News said.

The American drug company employees reported the offers to their employers, who relayed them to federal investigators, the newspaper said. The Justice Department source told the newspaper a sum of money "well into five figures" was involved.

County Officials To Hear Reagan

By DON MCLEOD
Associated Press Writer

BALTIMORE (AP) — County officials from across the nation will hear directly from President Reagan on Tuesday about his "new federalism" plan, but they have already expressed reservations about the program.

The National Association of Counties' board has approved resolutions for consideration later in its annual convention that take issue with key points in the Reagan plan. Several differences already have been resolved in five months of negotiations between the White House and state and local leaders.

The board members were warned Sunday by a White House official that if they fail to support Reagan's plan, they may find federal funds shrinking anyway for the programs involved — without help from Washington to carry them through the transition.

Richard S. Williamson, Reagan's adviser on intergovernmental affairs, said the program calls for federal support for the programs to remain at the levels in Reagan's proposed fiscal 1983 budget. But he said "unless we have a deal" for local officials to back the plan, the White House would feel no obligation to maintain those funding levels.

"I would suggest to you if this federalism initiative doesn't come forward, if we're not successful, and you're trying to plan ahead in your county the next 5 or 10 years, you better assume that there are going to be cuts," Williamson said.

That would force state and local governments either to cut off borderline programs or to raise taxes to keep them going, he said.

A major concern of state and local leaders is that Reagan is already cutting federal programs before turning them over to lower levels of government — forcing them to choose between running "new federalism" programs at reduced levels or raising the missing money.

The package Reagan will discuss in his Tuesday speech to the association would provide a $20.4 billion trust fund to help pay for 30 programs the states will have to take over. It predicts savings for the states of another $18.3 billion through Reagan's offer for the federal government to assume most costs of the Medicaid program of health care for the needy.

Reagan will send the "new federalism" details to Congress within the next two weeks and formal legislation already is being drafted, Williamson said. But he said the president has no illusions about getting a bill passed this year, although he hopes to get congressional hearings started.

"The president will reintroduce it in 1983 and push vigorously for seeking enactment in the opening months of the next Congress," Williamson said.

Wood Rot Is Threat To Pitt Homes

By MIKE LEVI
RALEIGH — Warm, wet weather makes a lot of things grow faster. One that most people don't think about until it's too late is wood rot. Sam Uzzell, Pitt County agricultural extension agent, says that most home owners are quite familiar with termites and the damage they cause. However, wood rotting fungi are more likely to damage homes in Pitt County than termites.

Fungi can occur in any part of the house that stays moist, and especially in floors, door frames, porches, roof trim and decks.

To control rot, Uzzell says a person must get rid of the moisture and allow the wood to dry. Pressure treated wood should be used where moisture can't be eliminated such as on a deck or fence. Spraying wood with preservative chemicals will not control rot when the wood stays moist.

Rot commonly occurs when the crawl space under the house is poorly drained and ventilated. A lot of people didn't realize the importance of the small vents around the house at ground level. They must be open from spring through fall, otherwise water can condense on the wood joists causing rot. In addition to good ventilation, a plastic sheet placed on the soil is a relatively cheap and effective way of keeping moisture in the soil and out of the house. Four mil polyethylene can be used to cover about 70 percent of the soil. Check the plastic after a heavy rain to make sure that water doesn't drain on top of the plastic. If that happens, you may have to improve drainage around the house. With polyethylene on the soil, you should have at least one vent about every 15 feet around the house. Without the polyethylene, there should be a vent about every eight feet. The exact spacing depends on the size of the house and the free air space through the vents. Many homeowners are installing automatic vents. According to NCSU specialists these are a convenience because you don't have to worry about opening and closing the vents. However, regular vents will do just as good a job providing they are opened.

Other suggestions from

Uzzell are that you keep gutters and downspouts clear, and have the house inspected at least once a year for plumbing leaks, evidence of rot, as well as for termites and other insects.

In a well built and maintained home, rot will not be a problem. Unfortunately, there seem to be an increasing number of homes that have been either poorly built or poorly maintained. Lack of good building sites and the tightening up of houses for energy conservation are adding to the problem. It's relatively cheap and easy to avoid rot problems if you know what to look for. Detailed information on how to prevent rot is available at the County Office, and there are several teletips on wood rot and its control.

Study Indicates Forest Management Beneficial

By JAMES B. KEA
"I am not interested in investing in forest management because I probably won't live to see the results." This is a common response when forest landowners are asked why they don't manage or reforest their timber.

A recent study sponsored by the Small Woodlot Forestry Research and Development Program at N.C. State University showed that forest management can result in some early benefits. Premerchtable pine plantations increase the net worth of forest landowners because professional appraisers assign higher market values to forest land which has not been replanted. This conclusion is based on the results of a questionnaire sent to rural land appraisers and forestry consultants in North Carolina, Virginia, and South Carolina. Most appraisals were carried out to establish security for loans or in sales or purchase transactions, confirming the cash value of premerchtable timber. Another important reason for appraisals was to establish a cost basis for land separate from timber following the acquisition of land with premerchtable timber. This is essential for tax purposes when timber is sold, or if there is a casualty loss involving timber.

The results of the study are one more reason why more of our landowners are showing interest in management of their forest land. State and federal cost-sharing programs for reforestation and timber stand improvement, and the various tax incentives now available combine to make forest management not only an excellent long-term investment, but also a useful method to build equity in the short term.

Although actual land values are increased by good management practices, property tax values are not. Cut over poor quality forest land and ready for harvest, well managed timber stands are taxed by counties at the same value.

For more information, contact the County Extension Office or forest ranger.

Deported Aliens Often Return

HOUSTON (AP) — A Rice University economist says up to 40 percent of the illegal aliens deported after a series of raids in April may have been back at work in the United States within six weeks.

Immigration and Naturalization Service agents arrested 5,400 undocumented workers in Houston, Dallas, Los Angeles, San Francisco, New York, Chicago, Detroit, Denver and Newark, N.J., during the week-long "Project Jobs" operation.

Donald L. Huddle, a specialist in Latin American relations who is studying the operation, estimated Friday that at least 20 percent and possibly as many as 40 percent of the aliens were back in the country within six weeks.

Firm Told To Clean Waste Dump

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — A judge has ordered the company that is trying to take over a low-level radioactive waste dump in Barnwell, S.C., to improve pollution controls on its own conventional dump in the Lowcountry.

Circuit Judge Julius Baggett has ordered Waste Management Inc. of Chicago to impose certain controls on its dump near Ridgeland in addition to rules already set down by state health officials.

The new rules were worked out in negotiations between the company and area residents who sued the firm. They were presented to the judge, who signed them last week.

Baggett, who held hearings on the matter in May, never issued a formal ruling on whether citizen complaints were justified. Last month, Waste Management offered to buy a controlling share of Chem-Nuclear Systems Inc., which operates the Barnwell dump. However, the Seattle firm is fighting that takeover bid in federal court.

Waste Management was sued shortly after it opened its 140-acre sanitary landfill in Jasper County. Area residents charged the company wasn't taking steps to prevent decomposing garbage from washing into nearby Hazard Creek.

They also feared decaying matter from the site — located in a swamp — could spread into groundwater in the area, attorney Thayer Rivers said. He represents Citizens for the Preservation of Jasper County and other plaintiffs.

Waste Management operates 59 solid waste and 16 chemical waste dumps across the nation, but has not operated a radioactive waste site.

The Jasper dump opened in mid-spring and was scheduled to receive 80,000 tons of garbage a year from Beaufort County, Rivers said.

The creek is a tributary of the Broad River which is used both for recreation and as a commercial fishery.

The firm has agreed to hire an independent laboratory to monitor the quality of groundwater draining from the dump and to build containment dikes around each separate garbage pile in the landfill.

In addition, the company agreed to install a system of gravel and pipes under each garbage pile to trap runoff seeping underground and then pump that runoff back onto the top of the pile.

Farm Scene

By MIRIAM W. NANCE
Agricultural Extension Agent

Good stands of grasses and legumes don't just happen. They depend upon careful planning, adequate soil fertility and planting the correct amount of seeds at the proper depth during a favorable season.

The climate and soils of North Carolina are variable and significantly different from west to east. These differences make it necessary to alter planting dates from area to area.

Preparation of the seed bed is important. The perennial cool season forages can best be established by planting in the fall. They should be sown on a firm, smooth, weed-free seed bed. It is essential that the sod be grazed or mowed to one-half inches before sod seeding legumes. There are also other very important management practices (herbicide, insecticide and fertility) required for successful sod seeding.

Forage crop planting and management takes time and thought in order for a successful stand to result. Now is the time to prepare for fall planting of forages. Take a soil sample in order to know the proper fertilization necessary for the specific forage to be planted. Soil preparation should take place after you receive the soil test.

For further information on pastures and forages contact the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service, 752-2934.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) (NCDA) - The North Carolina f.o.b. dock broiler market was steady. Supplies moderate. Demand moderate. Weights desirable. The dock weighted average price for this week is 47.00 for small purchases of plant grade broilers picked up at processing plants. Estimated slaughter today, 1,824,000.

NEW YORK (AP) - The stock market posted a broad gain in heavy trading today, resuming the rally it began late last week. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 17.13 last week, rose 6.28 to 820.40 by noon. Gainers held a 3-1 lead over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues. Analysts said a sharp decline in open-market interest rates Thursday and Friday provided the initial spark for the rally. A further plus was the Federal Reserve's report at the weekend of a $3.7 billion drop in the money supply for the week ended June 30. The Fed statistics eased fears that a July surge in the money supply would translate into upward pressure on interest rates. With open-market money rates falling, there were widespread hopes of some reductions soon in major banks' prime lending rates. One notable exception to the market's overall strength was the energy group, which sold off following the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' failure to reach agreement on either pricing or production levels. Standard Oil of Indiana dropped 2 1/4 to 35 1/2; Schlumberger 2 1/4 to 36 1/2; Atlantic Richfield 2 1/2 to 33 1/2; Getty Oil 1 1/2 to 46 1/2; and Standard Oil of California 1 1/2 to 26 1/2. The NYSE's composite index gained .26 to 62.80. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 1.37 at 249.87. Volume on the Big Board totaled 37.19 million shares at noontime, up from 29.73 million at the same point Friday.

Reagan Says May Find Solution In Lebanon

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan, conceding that he is wary about sending U.S. troops into Beirut, says there are "reasons for some optimism" for a settlement to the crisis in Lebanon. Speaking to reporters aboard Air Force One as he flew back to Washington after an 11-day vacation in California, Reagan said the situation between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization is "still just iffy and too touchy."

"I think there are reasons for some optimism," he said. But he added, "We've been disappointed before." Asked if he believed Americans were wary of his plan to dispatch 1,000 U.S. combat forces to evacuate the PLO from its remaining stronghold, Reagan told reporters, "I would expect them to be."

"I'm wary myself," the president said. "That's why we want to impose certain conditions." U.S. special envoy Philip Habib is attempting to mediate an end to the fighting between the Israelis, who have surrounded west Beirut, and trapped PLO guerrillas. Artillery and rocket dueling between the two sides delayed negotiations Sunday, until a new U.S.-arranged cease-fire went into effect late in the day.

The president was putting aside the Mideast crisis temporarily today to pledge his support for a constitutional amendment that would require a balanced budget. He scheduled a White House luncheon with key sponsors of the amendment. Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan "wants to get a feeling from the leaders to see where chances for passage stand and to indicate his full support." Senate debate on the amendment begins today.

When Reagan's offer to contribute troops to the force in Lebanon was revealed a week ago, Speakes said the United States would try to guarantee their safety as much as possible by requiring agreement from all nations involved before sending them in.

Reagan also said he would await a formal request from the Lebanese government before sending U.S. troops there. The president, who spent most of his vacation at his isolated ranch 20 miles from Santa Barbara, Calif., refused Sunday to divulge details of the peace negotiations. "It's still too touchy to talk about," he said. Reagan said he will tell bipartisan congressional leaders on Tuesday that "our goals have always been the same" in Lebanon. "Lebanon wants again a central government and ... all foreign troops out of the country," he said. The United States wants assurances that Israeli villages across the Lebanese border will be safe from PLO attacks, he added.

On a related topic, Reagan was asked if George P. Shultz, his nominee to replace Alexander M. Haig Jr. as secretary of state, would favor Arab nations over Israel because Bechtel, the multinational corporation he headed, had extensive business dealings with Saudi Arabia. "I think he's as fair a man as I know," Reagan said of Shultz. He added that he hopes Shultz will be confirmed by the Senate "as quickly as possible." Confirmation hearings before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee open Tuesday.

Haig submitted his resignation two weeks ago and remained on the job until last week. Reagan denied published reports that he told Haig then his services were no longer needed, saying only that he had felt "duty bound to get that over the transition) as quickly as possible so as not to be imposing on him." "He was being very helpful; he really was," Reagan said of Haig. "It was just a case of I didn't want to impose because he was being very generous." The president flatly denied another published report that he was looking for ways to ease trade sanctions imposed on the Soviet Union after it invaded Poland. "Let me give you a friendly warning," he said emphatically. "A lot of those so-called leaks - they don't know what the hell they're talking about."

The president said his holiday had been "just fine" and initially told reporters he didn't want to talk about anything but horses. Having left his mountaintop ranch and his daily riding only hours earlier, Reagan already seemed to miss it. "I just regret that I'm still not out there clearing brush," he said, referring to another of his favorite ranch activities. Although White House chief of staff James A. Baker III, had told The Associated Press that Reagan's aides tried to bother him as little as possible when he's vacationing, Speakes said the president had been more personally involved in the Lebanese crisis than in any other during his administration.

Speakes said Reagan sent letters to heads of state in Europe and the Middle East seeking support for U.S. goals in Lebanon and attempting to convince the countries involved to stop fighting and observe the cease-fire.

Italy Captures World Cup

MADRID, Spain (AP) — World Cup champion Italy headed home to a hero's welcome after beating powerful West Germany with a goalkeeper who was supposed to be too old and a star who was supposed to be rusty from a two-year suspension.

"This is the happiest day of my life, one that I have worked towards for many years," said coach Enzo Bearzot, who was carried across the field on his players' shoulders after Italy captured its first world championship in 44 years with a 3-1 win over the West Germans on Sunday.

Paolo Rossi, Marco Tardelli and Sandro Altabelli scored second-half goals to fashion the triumph for Italy. Dino Zoff, the 40-year old goalie, played superbly and came within seven minutes of being the first to record a shutout in a World Cup final. Paul Breitner netted the lone German goal after the game was out of reach.

Rossi is Italy's newest superstar after rebounding from a two-year suspension for his alleged involvement in a game-fixing bribery scandal, become the tournament's leading scorer with six goals.

It was the first time in four years that the West Germans lost to a team from Europe.

Italy, having also won the cup in 1938 and 1934, now shares Brazil's mark of three world championships.

The victory touched off delirious celebrations throughout Italy, with more than 300,000 people parading and dancing through the streets of Rome.

Sandro Pertini, Italy's 86-year-old president, leaped to his feet and cheered after each Italian goal, ignoring West German chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Spanish King Juan Carlos, who were seated nearby.

The 110,000 fans, most of them rooting for Italy, went wild with joy as it became clear their team would win. They roared "Italia" in unison and waved patriotic flags, their din rocking the stadium. The mezzanine tier was draped with scores of banners honoring Italian soccer clubs and cheering on the national team with such slogans as "Forza Italia, Sei Magica" (Onward Italy, You are Magic).

The West Germans, who lost a $50,000 per player bonus, left Santiago Bernabau Stadium stunned and shaken.

said ashen-faced striker Klaus Fischer as he walked to the team bus.

The match had not started well for the Italians, who lost forward Francesco Graziani, injured after only seven minutes of play, and then watched Antonio Cabrini squander a 26th minute penalty shot — the first penalty shot missed in a World Cup final.

"They pumped me up at the end," McEnroe said after he had gone on to win.

McEnroe Beats Wilander As U.S. Downs Sweden

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The United States staggered a bit before continuing on its way toward retaining its Davis Cup title.

It was John McEnroe, withstanding a record-breaking effort by the leader of the young Swedish team, who paced the Americans into the semifinals of the international tennis competition. For McEnroe and the U.S., it was not an easy task.

"It (the match) became an emotional thing at the end because it was so long and I really wanted to win," McEnroe said Sunday after he outlasted Sweden's Mats Wilander 9-7, 6-2, 15-17, 3-6, 8-6.

McEnroe and Wilander met in the fifth and final match of the quarterfinal round with the score tied 2-2. And it took a record-breaking 6 hours, 32 minutes for the left-hander from New York to overcome the brilliant shot-making youngster.

"It was the longest match I've played and I can tell you for a fact that my body's not feeling very good," McEnroe said afterward.

The third set was the second longest in U.S. Davis Cup history, bettering only the 34-game marathon in which Dennis Ralton defeated Iyo Pimental of Venezuela 18-16 in 1963. The match was the seventh longest Davis Cup men's singles match in number of games played by a U.S. Davis Cup squad, and in time it was the longest since the challenge round format was dropped in 1972.

"Davis Cup fifth matches in the fifth set is what tennis is all about," said Arthur Ashe, captain of the American squad.

Ashe said the McEnroe-Wilander encounter was one of the best five matches he has seen. "Of course, since John and Bjorn (Borg of Sweden) starting playing, they've started pushing out other matches that were in my mind."

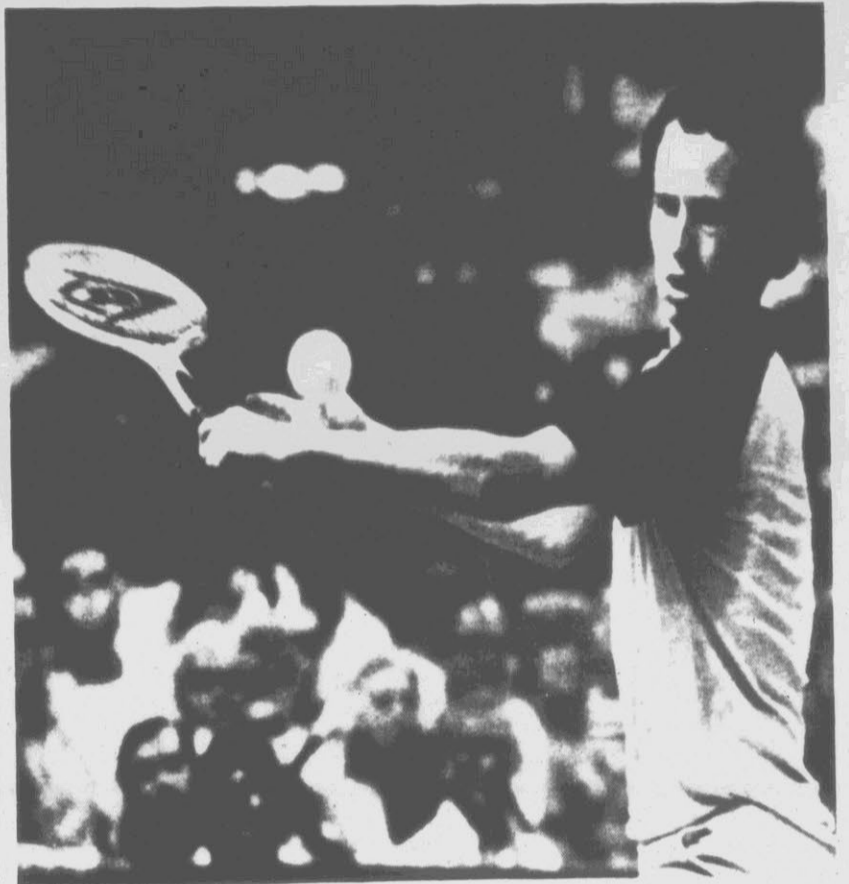

Wilander has been compared with Borg. The 17-year-old right-hander captured the French Open last month, beating Borg's record as the youngest ever to win that Grand Slam event. Like Borg, Wilander possesses an accurate two-fisted backhand and an unruffled on-court appearance.

"Yes, there was a similarity" between playing Wilander and Borg, McEnroe admitted. "He (Wilander) is quick and very mature for 17."

McEnroe was leading 5-4 at one point when the crowd began applauding and stomping its feet. McEnroe, emotionally charged, thrust his fist into the air. The Rocky-type move charged up the crowd even more.

"They pumped me up at the end," McEnroe said after he had gone on to win.

Lee Withdraws Name From Running For ECU Head Job

A Staff Report

PEMBROKE — Ex-East Carolina assistant coach Billy Lee has withdrawn his name from consideration for the ECU head coaching job, left vacant after Dave Odom's recent resignation.

Lee is presently head basketball coach at Pembroke State. He has won 152 games in nine years as a college head coach and has a winning percentage of over 70%.

Odom left ECU in June to take an assistant coaching job at the University of Virginia. In three years at ECU, Odom was 38-72. ECU was 10-17 this past season.

"My name is no longer in consideration," Lee said in a prepared statement from his office at Pembroke State. "We

Peete Eases Frustrations With Milwaukee Victory

MILWAUKEE (AP) — It had been a frustrating year for Calvin Peete, one of the few blacks who plays the American professional golf tour.

"I have been playing well all year. I had expected to win earlier. It's been frustrating playing so well and not winning. That's the tough part of the tour," he said.

Perhaps for that reason, the 38-year-old veteran admitted his biggest case of nerves ever before he pulled away on the next-to-last hole Sunday with a birdie to win his second Greater Milwaukee Open.

"Today was the tightest I've ever been on tour," he said. "I felt more pressure than when I went through my third PGA qualifying school in 1975."

Peete shook his head, broke into a grin and said: "I wouldn't recommend this life for anybody."

Peete's 3-under-par 69 gave him a 72-hole total of 274, 14-under-par for four trips around the 7,010-yard

Tuckaway Country Club layout.

Peete savored his best payday of $45,000 in seven tour years. He won $36,000 in the 1979 Milwaukee tournament, his only other victory.

"I played super, but had to work hard for it. There were so many good players behind me. I couldn't afford any lapse in concentration. It would have cost me," he said.

Peete admitted his four-iron approach shot to within six feet of the 17th hole was his biggest shot of the closing round.

It enabled him to post a birdie. Co-leader Terry Diehl three-putted for a bogey — a swing of two shots for the eventual margin.

"It helped to see Terry three-putt. It took the pressure off of my putt," said the champion.

Victor Regalado of Mexico shook a year-long slump with a closing 71 for 276, two shots behind Peete in second place.

Diehl wound up third with 71-277 while Jim Colbert, the 1972 Milwaukee champion, was fourth at 72-278.

Canadian rookie Dick Zokol, the sensation of this $250,000 tournament through the first three rounds, buckled in the stretch.

The 23-year-old newcomer, listening to the soothing sounds of a radio headset for the fourth straight day, went bogey-double bogey-bogey, starting at 15.

His 75 dropped him into a fourth-place deadlock with Larry Ziegler and Morris Hatalsky.

San Fran Downs Slumping Expos

By The Associated Press

The San Francisco Giants don't scare you with their speed or power, though you'll never convince the Montreal Expos of that.

The Giants entered Sunday's game with the Expos ranked fifth in the National League in homers and had only 56 stolen bases in 88 games. Yet they got five of each in edging the slumping Expos 9-7 in 10 innings.

"We're not the best club speed-wise, but if you were to ask me if I thought we'd have a better chance of hitting five homers or stealing five bases, I'd say stealing five bases," noted Giants catcher Milt May. It was May, with two of the five homers, who paced the San Francisco victory.

May's solo homer with one out in the 10th provided the winning margin, handing Montreal its 15th defeat in 20 games.

Reggie Smith, May and Champ Summers hit consecutive home runs in the second inning, all off Montreal starter Scott Sanderson. Joe Morgan homered in the third.

But Montreal catcher Gary Carter, who was victimized on the stolen bases — by Smith, Jim Wohlford, Chili Davis and two by Johnnie LeMaster — had a solo homer, RBI single and a sacrifice fly to tie it in the ninth.

Then May won the last game for the teams before the All-Star break.

"We weren't stealing on Gary Carter, we were getting our steals on the pitchers," said Giants Manager Frank Robinson. "If you want to put it in terms of numbers, it's definitely our most aggressive game of the season on the basepaths. We've been trying to play that way for the last few weeks, things like taking the extra base and forcing the other teams into mistakes."

The Expos have been making plenty of mistakes lately.

"We don't need three days to think about this loss or any other in the last 20 days," claimed Montreal Manager Jim Fanning.

Padres 6, Mets 2
Tim Lollar won his 10th game to raise his league-leading winning percentage to .833, belted his third home run of the year — second against the Mets — and singled to up his batting average to .296.

Yet, despite those impressive statistics, Lollar, 10-2, is not an All-Star.

The Padres, 50-36, entered the All-Star break second in the NL West, two games behind first-place Atlanta.

"I think he (Lollar) should have gone," said Padres Manager Dick Williams about the All-Star Game.

"along with (Ruppert) Jones, who will go, and (Garry) Templeton and (Sixto) Lezcano."

Pirates 3, Braves 1
Former Brave left-hander Larry McWilliams beat Atlanta for his third straight victory since joining Pittsburgh. He allowed seven hits in seven innings.

"They knew my whole repertoire and how I would use it," McWilliams said of the Braves' hitters. "When you play with guys every day you get to know their weaknesses, too. I was a little nervous for the first couple of innings. But after going through the lineup for the first time and seeing all of them, I settled down. I started thinking of it as just another game."

Astros 4, Cardinals 2
Bob Knepper, who had gotten no offensive support in five of his last six starts, was staked to a 4-0 lead and held off St. Louis with a five-hitter. Houston has won six of nine against St. Louis this year.

"They've got a couple of pitchers we can't hit," Herzog said. "When we came down there at the beginning of the season, Joe Niekro beat us 3-2 and Knepper beat us 1-0. When you can't score, you can't win. In four games here, we scored only six runs."

Phillies 4, Dodgers 3
Fernando Valenzuela was foiled in a bid to win his 13th game — he leads the majors with 12 victories — as the Phillies, who are 2-0 lifetime against the Dodger star, moved into first place in the East Division by .001 percentage points.

"We got a couple errors (by Los Angeles). Against that guy (Valenzuela), you need those extra outs," said Philadelphia Manager Pat Corrales.

In the fourth, Phillies' shortstop Ivan DeJesus walked and took second when Valenzuela picked him off first, but first baseman Mike Marshall threw wide to second. Bob Dernier singled home DeJesus for his third game-winning hit this season.

Reds 6-2, Cubs 5-9
The Reds won the suspended game on Wayne Krenchicki's sacrifice fly in the 13th inning. Then the Cubs rode a homer and three RBI by Bill Buckner and three hits apiece from Bump Wills and Ryne Sandberg to the decision in Game 2.

"I enjoy hitting more with men on base," said Buckner, who followed Wills and Sandberg in the lineup. "Having those guys in front of you really makes the job easier."

Cincinnati's Tom Seaver lost for the 10th time in 14 decisions.

Stacy Takes Classic In Sudden-Death

WHEELING, W.Va. (AP) — History supposedly doesn't repeat itself, but don't tell that to Hollis Stacy. Kathy Postlewait or anyone associated with the $125,000 LPGA West Virginia Classic.

For four straight years, the Wheeling tournament has ended in a playoff and for the last two years, Stacy has been the winner.

How does Postlewait fit into this scenario? Well, for the second straight year, the nine-year LPGA veteran lost Sunday in a playoff — continuing her career winless streak on the women's tour.

"I thought the outcome was going to be different this time," said Postlewait, who bogeyed the playoff hole, the 350-yard, par 4 10th hole.

Stacy, who earlier had broken out of a five-way logjam at the top of the leader board, made a foot-long par putt to collect the $18,750 paycheck and move into fourth place on the 1982 money leaders' list.

Stacy, who also had a second-place finish one year in Wheeling, took a one-shot lead into the final round but at one point trailed by two shots after bogeying three holes on the front nine of the mountainous, par-72 Speidel golf course.

"But I never thought I was out of it ... I thought the last three holes would decide it," said Stacy, winning her fifth tournament in an 11-month span. "Those holes are so tough and it's easy for some shots to swing on those holes."

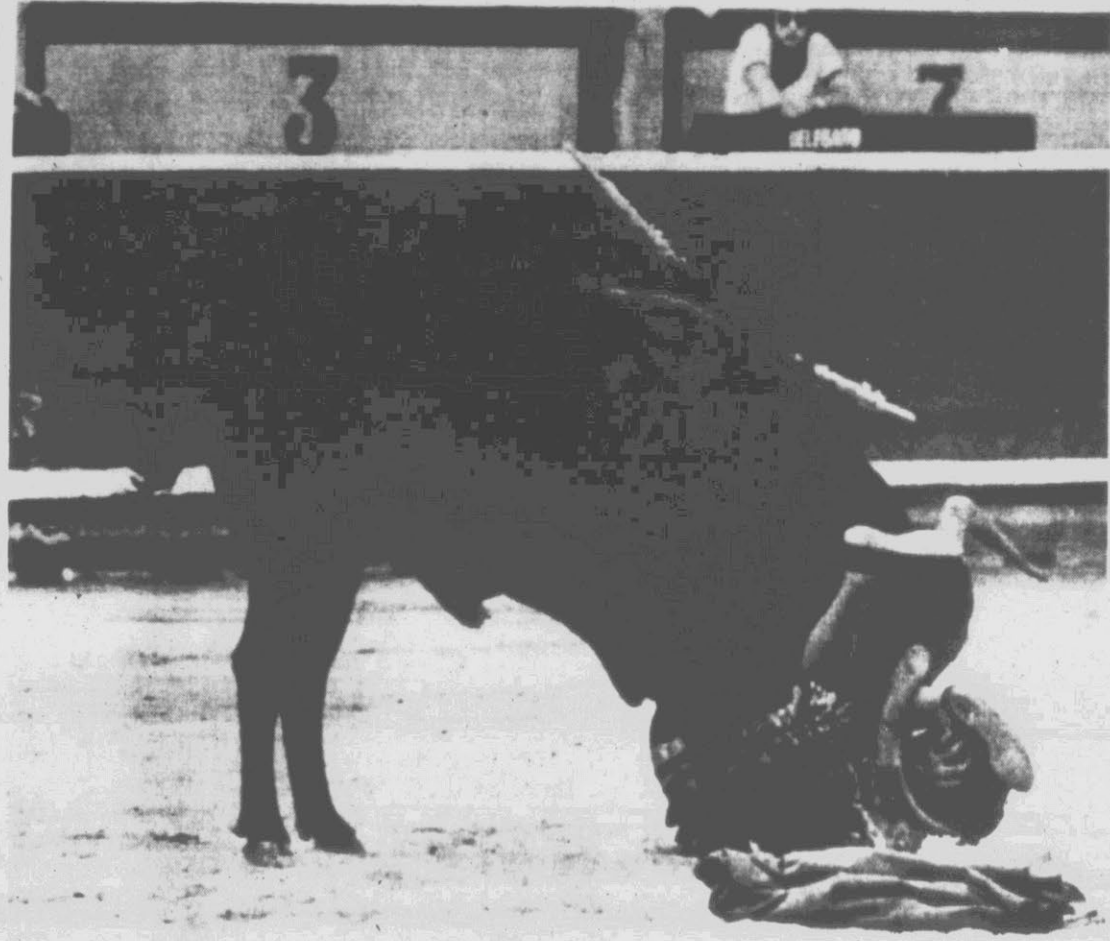

Stacy was right. There was a swing on the par-4, 370-yard 18th hole — but in Postlewait's favor.

After Stacy birdied the 450-yard, par-5 17th hole to move into a one-shot lead, Postlewait retaliated with a birdy on the 18th hole with a 12-foot putt. Stacy, who had forced a playoff in 1981 when she three-putted the 18th, parred it this time to set up the fifth playoff in the tournament's history.

Postlewait, losing an LPGA tournament playoff for the third time, quickly got into trouble on the playoff hole when she pushed her drive into some small trees on the left side of the dogleg hole. Her second shot landed well short of the green and after pitching onto the putting surface, she missed an 18-foot putt for a par.

Stacy got a routine par on the hole, two-putting from 25 feet.

Alice Miller and Cathy Morse wound up in a tie for second place at 6-under 216.

Waltrip Gains 'Must' Victory

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — It was a must win situation for Darrell Waltrip. At least that's the way he felt about it.

The defending Winston Cup stock car champion dominated the field Saturday night in charging to an easy victory in the Busch 420 Grand National race at Nashville International Raceway.

But that victory, accomplished with so much ease, ended a victory drought that had Waltrip, car owner Junior Johnson and everyone else involved with the Mountain Dew Team upset and tense.

"Something just seemed to go wrong in about every race after we won here in May (in the Cracker Barrel 420)," Waltrip said. "There was a broken axle and a rear (oil) seal going out, and we had the engine let go a couple of times."

"Historically, Junior Johnson's cars do not blow up. When they do, he's just sick about it. It's a matter of pride with him."

"But, after Daytona (a week earlier when Waltrip went out after just 45 laps with a blown engine), Junior felt he had found something. I know when I was out there so far ahead with just 20 or so laps to go, I was saying to myself, 'C'mon baby, finish for me.'"

The sleek green and white Buick Regal did finish, more than a full lap ahead of second-place Terry Labonte, whose sixth runnerup finish of the season gave him the Winston Cup season point lead.

Labonte, driving a Chevrolet Monte Carlo, moved 29 points ahead of Bobby Allison, who had mechanical problems and finished 19th in the 28-car field. Waltrip remained third, but moved within 136 points of Labonte.

Waltrip was 196 points behind Allison after winning this race a year ago. That victory was a springboard, starting a sizzling comeback in which Waltrip won seven races and finished second five times in the last 14 races to win his first national championship.

"Everything is better this year," Waltrip said. "We're not down as bad as we were a year ago in the points or in our morale, and I feel real good. We know this is a real second half team."

Harry Gant, who gave Waltrip a bit of a push midway through the race when he nearly got back on the same lap with the leader, wound up third. He was followed by Ricky Rudd's Pontiac Grand Prix and Tim Richmond in a Buick.

The 35-year-old Waltrip, a resident of nearby Franklin, Tenn., lapped the rest of the field by the 151st of the 420 laps on Nashville's treacherous 596-mile banked oval.

Babe Ruth All-Time All-Star

MONTREAL (AP) — When you attempt to pick an all-time all-star major league baseball team you start with Babe Ruth or end with him, insists the game's highest authority.

"The Babe was so extraordinary, both in his all-around ability and his tremendous impact on baseball as a whole, that he has to be given special status," said Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

"You recall he was a great pitcher before he became a great home run hitter. So, on my team, I would have to name him 'Designated Everything' or 'Super Player.' I wouldn't list him with the others."

With the annual All-Star Game to be played in Montreal's Olympic Stadium Tuesday night, everybody is playing the comparison game.

Who is greater than who? Should this guy be on the All-Star team and this one not? Should selection of the team be left to the fans or would it be fairer to let the players and managers do the picking to avoid ballot stuffing and giving personal popularity a priority over performance?

Are modern players, with the advantages of better diets and more scientific health methods, better than the rough and tumble guys who struggled through the primitive years?

It was in this sort of climate that we asked the commissioner, onetime scoreboard keeper at the old Griffith Stadium in Washington, D.C., who was a baseball fan before he got into the legal and administrative aspects of the game, to give us his personal version of an all-time team.

It's a chore that a man in the commissioner's position might shun, fearing the normal backlash, but the 6-foot-5 Princetonian, 19 years attorney for the National League before ascending to the commissioner's office in 1969, warmed to the idea.

"Just as I could not consider Babe Ruth in the light with everybody else, neither could I limit myself to one team," he said, "so, I have to pick two. Even then, I have to omit so many great players it hurts."

With a few scratches of his pen, these are the two teams the commissioner came up with, not in any definite order:

Team 2: Catcher, Bill Dickey; 1b, Pete Rose; 2b, Rogers Hornsby; 3b, Pie Traynor; ss, Robin Yount; lf, Ty Cobb; cf, Willie Mays; rf, Roberto Clemente; rhp, Satchel Paige; lhp, Steve Carlton.

Designated Everything (both teams), Babe Ruth.
Kuhn noted the dramatic all-around skills of Willie Mays, the enormous peaks of Clemente and the fierce pride of Pete Rose.

"All have a distinguishing feature of greatness," the commissioner added.

Brewers On Top In East

By The Associated Press

After knocking on the door for the last month, the Milwaukee Brewers have finally broken through to the top of the American League East.

"We not only made first place after being 8½ games out, we had to climb over five clubs to get there," says Charlie Moore. "And we did it in just over a month. I think everybody has to respect us now."

While jumping into first place by percentage points with an 8-5 victory over the Kansas City Royals Sunday, the Brewers did it in typical fashion with four home runs.

That gave Harvey Kuenn's terrors 125 homers for the first 83 games, putting them slightly ahead of the pace of the 1961 New York Yankees, who hold the major league record for a season with 240.

"I like their chances to break the record," said Kansas City relief pitcher Dan Quisenberry, who gave up Moore's homer. "Those guys are just nasty — all the way up and down the lineup."

The Brewers hit seven homers in their three-game series sweep of the Royals and have developed 67 homers since Kuenn replaced Buck Rodgers as manager June 2. In that period, the Brewers have had a 25-11 record and recorded a .303 team batting average.

Twins 7, Red Sox 3
Gary Gaetti hit a game-tying, two-run homer in the sixth inning and Minnesota jumped on All-Star reliever Mark Clear for two deciding runs in the seventh to beat Boston.

Brad Havens, 5-6, and Ron Davis combined on a nine-hitter as the Twins took the rubber game of a three-game series and finished their most successful road trip of the season with a 5-2 mark.

Ron Washington, Kent Hrbek and Tim Lardner had three hits apiece in leading the attack on Boston starter John Tudor and Clear.

White Sox 16, Blue Jays 7
Harold Baines homered twice, including his second grand slam of the week, and Tom Paciorek and Tony Bernazard each hit three-run shots in a 17-hit attack that powered Chicago over Toronto. Winner Britt Burns, 9-4, scattered six hits, walked two and struck out two in five innings. Relievers Dennis Lamp and Salome Barojas finished up for the White Sox.

Angels 2, Yankees 1
Brian Downing's home run leading off the eighth inning, his 13th of the season, carried California over New York. Downing slammed a 1-2 fastball over the right field fence at Anaheim Stadium off loser Rich Gossage, 3-4.

Andy Hassler, 2-0, picked up the victory in relief of starter Steve Renko. Don Aase pitched the ninth for the Angels, gaining his fourth save.

Orioles 8, A's 7
Eddie Murray drove in four runs with a three-run homer and a single to help Baltimore beat Oakland. The Orioles used five pitchers, including starter and winner Storm Davis, 2-1. Tim Stoddard pitched the last 11-3 innings for Baltimore and gained his ninth save despite giving up a three-run homer to Davey Lopes in the ninth.

Rickey Henderson stole one base for the A's, giving him 84

ROCKY MOUNT — A number of Brook Valley and Greenville Country Club women golfers played in the Eastern Carolina Ladies Golf Association at Northgreen this weekend.

Among the winners were: Championship flight — Maxine Hawley (Brook Valley), low gross.

Second flight — Mary Bruton (Brook Valley), low putts.

Third flight — Janet McGlohan (Greenville), low net.

Fourth flight — Ellen Fleming (Brook Valley), low gross.

Wilander had mixed emotions.

"I was very, very pleased with my game," he said. "But of course I'm disappointed. You should always be disappointed when you lose."

Then, the Swede said: "McEnroe won all of the big points. That's why he's McEnroe."

The U.S.'s semifinal foe, Australia, advanced by eliminating Chile. In the other semifinal, which will be held in October, France will take on New Zealand.

France upset

Czechoslovakia, while New Zealand ousted Italy.

Australia advanced to the semifinals with a 4-1 quarterfinal victory over Chile. The series was clinched Saturday with a doubles victory by Wimbledon champ Peter McNamara and Paul McNamee.

Yannick Noah rallied to beat Ivan Lendl Sunday to give France a surprising quarterfinal victory over Czechoslovakia at Paris. Noah trailed two sets to one before coming back to win 6-2, 3-6, 7-9, 6-3, 6-4 in a match that lasted three hours, 58 minutes.

France ended up with a 3-2 victory when Thierry Tulasne, made ill by the heat, defaulted his match with Tomas Smid.

Chris Lewis put New Zealand in the Davis Cup semis by downing Italy's Adriano Panatta 6-4, 6-3, 6-2 in the quarterfinal clincher. The final score of the best-of-five was 3-2, as Corrado Barazzutti stopped Bruce Derlin 6-2, 6-3 in the meaningless final match.

The France-New Zealand semifinal will be played in Paris Oct. 1-3.

In European Zone B semifinal play, Hungary beat Israel and Denmark ousted Egypt.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Every afternoon, Stuart Watt catches his favorite soap opera, "One Life to Live," on somebody else's television set.

It's free, convenient and comfortable. He has his choice of a Sny, Zenith, RCA or any other make. He can pick a small screen, conventional model or big projection.

He usually watches in peace and quiet, although sometimes a shopper will interrupt and ask for some help.

You see, Watt works in the housewares department of the Abraham & Straus store in White Plains, N.Y. But he takes his lunch hour, precisely at 2 o'clock, in the television department.

"I'd rather do this than walk the mall," says Watt, 23, from Monsey, N.Y. "I was unemployed for a year and got hooked. Then when I began working here, I asked to take lunch at 2. Knock on wood, they let me do it."

Watt is one of the legions of regular and irregular viewers who see programs — and advertisements — in department stores. The A.C. Nielsen Co. only surveys households, but advertisers and TV networks know that, in addition to the uncounted sports fans in bars and country clubs, there are additional viewers shopping and staring in TV departments.

The big TV attractions are space shots, royal weddings, soaps and sports.

"The ladies make a point of coming around for their favorite soap operas," says Phil Rogers, a salesman at J.C. Penney in the Galleria mall in White Plains. "On the weekend, children come by in the morning and men in the afternoon."

"Last year, when the Giants played Dallas, the crowd was so large it spilled into the microwave ovens."

Usually, viewers act like they're in somebody else's home, so they're on their best behavior. "Our regulars are quiet and don't move around much," says Rogers. "But we've had to ask some people to leave because they turn up the sound too loud. Children also can be problems when they lie in the aisles."

Eva Martino of the Sears in White Plains says some customer-critics think "they have an inherent right to sit wherever they want. When we clean the sets, our regular sitters sometimes get offended when we ask them to move."

All the stores sampled keep sets on the same channel, the one with the best reception. "It's good for a uniform appearance and for comparison shopping," says Ms. Martino. "People switch the channels to whatever they want. As soon as they leave, we switch back."

"Our job is to have things neat, but a lot of loafing around can damage business by giving the store a lackadaisical look."

The general feeling of the merchants is that the crowds promote business.

"Anytime a crowd gathers, it's attractive because more people might see something they want," says a salesman at the Alexander's in Yonkers who asked not to be identified. "We don't have a corporate policy, but we have the televisions on to create interest for the consumer," says Robert Skrobialak, the general merchandise manager at J.C. Penney. "We don't encourage or discourage it."

"But it's a fact that a husband shopping with his wife on Sunday would get the heck out of her if he couldn't watch football. This way, he'll let her shop all afternoon."

Watt thinks department-store viewing keeps him off the streets. Besides "One Life to Live," he watches 20 minutes of "The Edge of Night" during his afternoon break. But on the weekends, he's lost.

He may watch a little baseball, but more often he'll wander through the mall, watching time like regular shoppers who spend money, play video games, sample perfume or stare at the mannequins.

Salesman Hooked On 'Life To Live' On Afternoon TV

Children Play Role In Books

By ELISSA MCCRARY
Associated Press Writer

TRYON, N.C. (AP) — When author Carole Marsh Longmeyer plans a new book for youngsters, she turns to experts — her three children. The kids, ranging in age from 10 to 17, handle public relations, business and editing.

Ms. Longmeyer, 35, credits her family's talent for helping make Gallopade Publishing Group, a fast-growing producer of children's books. The family has turned out about a dozen books that have sold thousands of copies all over the country.

"We've taken our crazy, zany ideas and turned them into quality books for children of all ages," said Ms. Longmeyer, who began publishing children's books three years ago. "And the children have not been sitting idle. Their ideas and their research go into the books..."

A teddy bear — Theadorable Bear — greets visitors on the porch of the white Victorian-style house that serves as Gallopade's corporate offices.

Wendy, 15, presides over the first-floor gift shop, Gallopade Galleries, and is in charge of public relations.

Michael, 10, who reads the copy to make sure it appeals to children, looks over some research for an upcoming book, then dons a baseball hat and heads for the baseball field.

Michele, 17, on summer vacation from the North Carolina School of Math and Science in Durham, is helping her mother convert Gallopade to a computer system.

"We have found that we can be tough when business decisions call for it," said Ms. Longmeyer, who writes and researches the books. "But fun is mostly what we're about. We have fun doing our books and kids have fun reading them. Luckily, we've managed to be successful along the way."

The company's income has reached "several hundred thousand dollars," she said.

The children began their publishing careers by carrying out trash and sweeping floors.

"But we've always helped with the books, too," said Michael, who designed the cover for the recently published "The Mystery at the Biltmore House."

Ms. Longmeyer, who also heads her own public relations company, Marsh Media Methods, has written a "Tomorrow's Books for Today's Children" series that includes "Go Queen Go," on chess; a book on computer analysis and "Six Puppy Feet," instruction on bridge for children.

"Reading is something kids should do for enjoyment and information," she said. "But they should be encouraged in their reading, not discouraged by being told that reading is hard."

Her mystery stories, which she calls "history mysteries," use historic sites such as the Biltmore House in Asheville as settings.

Actors Play Where Theater Began

By KERIN HOPE
Associated Press Writer
ANCIENT EPIDAUROS, Greece (AP) — As the midsummer sun climbed high over the stone amphitheater at this ancient sanctuary, a robed actor pulled off his tragic mask to reveal a ruddy British face, bathed in perspiration.

"It's wonderful to be rehearsing in a place where theater began. And it'll be so moving to perform here you can't complain about the heat," said Kenny Ireland, from Britain's National Theater.

In a unique theatrical event, an all-male cast of 16 played two performances here recently of an internationally acclaimed version of Aeschylus' "Oresteia" trilogy, directed by Sir Peter Hall.

They were the first foreign theater company to perform at Epidaurus, where ancient Greek plays are staged on summer weekends among ruins once sacred to Asklepios, Greek god of healing.

"I've always been obsessed with the Oresteia. It's been a dream for almost 10 years to direct the oldest Greek trilogy here," Hall said in an interview between rehearsals.

The bearded director sat on one of 14,000 lichen-covered stone seats, surrounded by villagers extracting spring weeds from crevices, and dozens of curious tourists.

"Greek theater is like a mask," he said. "The action happens offstage, behind doors. Then they open, like a mouth, and reveal something terrible."

The Oresteia, first staged in 458 B.C., when Aeschylus was over 70, is a spectacular, gory thriller of murder, vendetta and eventual justice set in mythical times after the fall of Troy.

It won first prize in the ancient Athens spring tragedy festival, and survived, along with four others of Aeschylus' 70-odd plays, in manuscripts copied by Byzantine scholars. In modern times, the trilogy is more respected than performed.

But the National's scheduled 20-performance run in London last year proved so popular it was extended to 66 shows.

Segal To Entertain

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — George Segal, best known for his movie acting, will be entertaining Israeli troops in Lebanon by playing the banjo and singing.

Plans for Segal to visit Israel were made before the war in Lebanon, but he refused to cancel his trip and says he now is caught up in the national spirit.

"One is Israelized here. I really have been in the last two days. Everybody pumps you full of history and why we're here and what we're doing here," the Jewish actor said at a news conference Sunday.

On Saturday, Segal visited Beirut and said he saw "a lot of people who were really glad that it was starting to get peaceful over there. Everybody seems very relieved that the Israelis are there, doing their work and getting the foreign peoples out of Lebanon."

Another surprise Segal had in Israeli-occupied Lebanon was to find one of his movies playing in Sidon — a 1975 thriller film called "Russian Roulette," about terrorists trying to kill a world leader.

Grads See Best Chance In Engineering, Sciences

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Engineering, health care and computer sciences offer the most promise of employment for prospective job hunters just out of college, officials say.

"We get constant inquiries for physical therapists and nurses. They can practically name their salary," said Doris McCauley, associate director of the University Placement Center at UNC.

And the situation for engineers is "pretty much open across the board," said Sharon Richards, career counselor at N.C. Agricultural and Technical University in Greensboro.

As far as computers go, "They're everywhere," said Betty Vetter, executive director of the Science Manpower Commission in Washington. And computer jobs are, too.

However, not all science fields are faring so well. People with degrees in physics, biology and mathematics are experiencing some employment problems, Vetter said.

"We rarely get a call for a biology major," McCauley said.

Relatively few students with bachelor's degrees in biology, chemistry, physics or math go directly into the job market, says Walter Jones, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center at N.C. State University in Raleigh. Instead, they go to graduate or medical schools. Those with only a bachelor's degree usually end up in technical sales.

While health, computer science and engineering jobs are available, they vary drastically in salary. Beginning petroleum engineers with bachelor's degrees are getting top salaries, from $24,000 to $30,000 annually, according to 1982 nationwide figures, said Vetter, who compiles figures and information about jobs from sources such as the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the College Placement Council. The average annual starting salary for engineers with a bachelor's is roughly $25,000.

In contrast, the average annual starting salary for engineering professors with PhDs, who are desperately needed, is only up to $17,953 this year, Vetter said. "The salary structure makes it so that getting a PhD to teach engineering is not cost effective."

Health workers, such as nurses, who often spend the same amount of time in college as engineers, can expect to make only about $15,000 their first year.

Beginning biologists with bachelor's degrees make slightly more, at $16,776 annually, according to Vetter's latest figures.

Here's a closer look at the fields where the most jobs are available:

— Engineering: Most of the offers for engineers are coming from industry, Vetter said. The greatest numbers of offers come from public utilities and companies that produce chemicals, drugs, petroleum products or electrical equipment. "There is a tremendous demand for electrical and electronic engineers," she said. Though there is still a demand for chemical engineers, it has dropped from last year because the oil and chemical companies have reduced hiring.

Electrical engineering jobs in North Carolina are growing faster than other engineering disciplines, said Robert Cottrell, employment research analyst with the Employment Security Commission in Raleigh.

The Employment Security commissions in the Carolinas prepare reports on projected occupational growth, based on surveys, about every two years.

Mechanical engineering is North Carolina's next-highest growth field, followed by industrial, civil and chemical engineering.

South Carolina trails North Carolina in the number of engineering jobs predicted to be available by 1985.

Civil engineers originally were rated second only to electrical engineers in North Carolina, Cottrell said, but the downturn in the economy coupled with the slump in the construction industry probably will slow growth in that profession.

— Computer Science: Computer use has increased dramatically in North Carolina, Cottrell said. With the development of minicomputers and microcomputers, many businesses are joining the computer generation. A conservative estimate of the number of new programming jobs in North Carolina, for example, is 222 available jobs each year through 1985. South Carolina predicts 150 new programming jobs per year, according to a report soon to be published. Cottrell expects that his projections for the number of programmers needed through 1985 could easily triple.

— Health Care: Every occupation in the medical field is projected to grow at least 5 percent per year, and most are growing at 6 percent each year, Cottrell said.

That's the highest growth rate for science-related jobs in North Carolina. Growth there is high partly because the average age of the population is increasing, furthering the need for medical services. Also, community clinics and medical centers in rural parts of the state are proliferating.

— Other Sciences: Of biology, chemistry, mathematics and physics, chemistry probably fares best at all degree levels, Vetter said. Physicists have been "in trouble" in the job market for several years, she said, but the number of physicists with PhDs has been dropping since 1969 and the supply is about to balance the demand.

In North Carolina and South Carolina, the number of jobs in these fields is relatively small. According to the Carolinas employment security commissions, only five jobs for physicists will be opening per year through 1985 in either state.

Tar Heels Cut Back On Maryland Leaf

By The Associated Press

Congressional action aimed at curtailing the growth of Maryland tobacco has done its job in North Carolina, where the total number of acres planted dropped to about 150 this year after more than 9,900 acres of the air-cured leaf were planted in 1981.

But the congressional action has upset some North Carolina tobacco farmers who had invested money to grow the Maryland-type leaf.

Congress acted to restrict

Maryland tobacco last fall as a result of pressure from grower interests, who viewed the spread of the crop as a threat to the stability of the federal tobacco price-support program.

The 1981 Farm Bill requires farmers in states participating in the federal tobacco program to subtract the amount of Maryland-type tobacco they grew from their flue-cured quota. Since flue-cured tobacco brought a higher market price than Maryland-type tobacco, most farmers had to stop growing the Maryland leaf.

The restriction has angered farmers who have been growing Maryland-type tobacco.

"We wouldn't mind if it was limited to counties that didn't grow burley or even to farms with a history of growing Maryland," said Howard Moye of Pitt County, who said he has planted 100 of the 150 acres of Maryland-type tobacco under cultivation in North Carolina this year.

"But the 1981 law was retroactive. It said you couldn't grow Maryland unless you'd grown it in 1965. What about farmers who have invested money in equipment to grow it — legally — since then? It isn't fair," Moye said.

Maryland tobacco, an air-cured leaf blended into cigarettes because of its long-burning properties, closely resembles burley tobacco and often is used as a substitute for burley.

"It was the fear of the congressmen from burley growing areas that if Maryland tobacco was allowed to increase in the kind of rates that it was increasing in North Carolina, it could very soon have a very significant impact on the burley market," Rep. Charles O. Whitley, D-N.C., said in a telephone interview last week.

He said restrictions on growing Maryland tobacco were necessary in order to win the backing of the Maryland delegation for preserving the tobacco price support program.

Since 1965, Maryland farmers have voted against participating in the federal tobacco program. That means that Maryland tobacco — unlike flue-cured and burley leaf — is not tied to geographical regions by government-granted allotments and can be legally grown almost anywhere.

In the late 1970s, a few North Carolina farmers began experimenting with the leaf in the face of a bull market for Maryland tobacco. The amount of the leaf planted in the state has soared since then.

Earlier this year, a group of Tar Heel farmers sought unsuccessfully to get U.S. District Judge John D. Larkins to issue an injunction against the new planting restrictions.

Churches Avoid Smoking Issue

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — While many churches in the United States are taking strong stands against smoking, North Carolina churches are steering clear of the issue.

"If we're going to take a stand against tobacco, we'd better find another source of income," said the Rev. M. Dewey Tyson, minister at St. James United Methodist Church in Greenville. He noted that Methodist-affiliated Duke University was founded on tobacco money.

"There are other moral issues that ought to be pointed out if we're going to indict tobacco," Tyson said.

"Economics has kept this one off the front burner in all churches in the state," said William H. Boatwright, director of communications for the Baptist State Convention.

Religious groups nationally, however, are taking stands against smoking in light of medical findings that smoking may be harmful to health. Protestant, Catholic and Jewish groups have passed resolutions against smoking.

North Carolina Baptists are far from recognizing the issue as a moral one.

"The anti-tobacco movement from a moral standpoint has never been strong," Boatwright said.

The Methodist Book of Discipline, which outlines Methodist beliefs, holds that the use of tobacco is not "a morally indifferent issue" and calls on smokers to "show that their use of it is consistent with the highest ideals of Christian life."

The N.C. United Methodist Conference, which covers 56 Eastern counties, has not taken a stand on smoking, said Beanie Kelly, director of communications for the conference.

The Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina has not taken a stand on smoking either, said Robert L. Milks Jr., communications assistant for the synod.

The Rev. Joseph Vetter, communications director for the Catholic Diocese of Raleigh, called smoking "a minor moral issue." He said the diocese will leave the issue up to the individual.

Jews and Mormons have taken stronger stands, however.

"Since it is injurious to the health, it would be a violation of Jewish law to smoke," said Rabbi Abe W. Schoen of Beth Meyer Synagogue.

"We abstain from tobacco in any form," said Bishop Amos M. Howard of Deep Run, minister at Woodington Ward Chapel of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latterday Saints. "We feel like it's not good for the body."

Blacks Protest Arrests

UNION, S.C. (AP) — A group of black residents who allege police brutality in the arrest of two black men want the results of a state investigation released before any action is taken against the two.

Charges of resisting arrest against Wallace Rice III and Ralph Eugene Rice, both of Santuck, were expected to go to a Union County grand jury today, officials said.

Meanwhile, about 45 people marched down Main Street here Saturday to protest what they say was police brutality in the arrests.

The brothers were arrested early May 8, according to warrants. Both were charged with resisting arrest and disorderly conduct. Ralph Rice was also charged with assault and battery.

Because of the incident, Wallace was hospitalized for three days, while Ralph spent four days in the hospital, according to their father, the Rev. Wallace Rice Sr. The two men suffered bruises and cuts. Ralph Rice required 11 stitches to the back of his head, Barnett said.

Wallace Rice III pleaded guilty to the disorderly conduct charge and was fined $100 on May 8, according to Carlisle-Santuck Magistrate Stanley Vanderford.

He said Ralph Rice will appear in magistrate's court on the charge the week of July 26.

"Nobody seems to know what is to happen," the Rev. James Barnett said during protest activities Saturday. Barnett, a Charlotte, N.C., minister, organized the protest and said "we don't want any trial until the SLED report is back."

Duplin Winery Produces Legal Batch Of Liquor

ROSE HILL, N.C. (AP) — A North Carolina winery last week produced the first legal batch of liquor brewed in the state in more than 73 years, taking advantage of a 1979 law relaxing statewide prohibition.

"I'm sure there is still some illegal corn squeezing," said William F. Hester, administrator for the Alcoholic Board of Control, "but this is the first licensed North Carolina distillery since (before) Prohibition."

The brandy is distilled from wine into a potent 80-proof (40-percent alcohol) beverage by Duplin Wine Cellars. David G. Fussell, president of the winery, said a fifth would sell for about $6.75 in ABC stores once the brandy is bottled.

Distilleries were outlawed in North Carolina when statewide prohibition took effect in January 1909 — 11 years before federal Prohibition. After Prohibition ended in 1933, the state allowed breweries and wineries to operate, but banned the production of more potent spirits.

Fussell hopes to produce about 20,000 gallons of brandy a year, with plans to step up production "if we see it really starting to take off."

Hester said state officials anticipate interest in the brandy because it is made in North Carolina and because the "price range is good."

Brandy making, requiring five gallons of wine to produce each gallon of brandy, could be a boon to the state's grape producers as well, Hester said.

Duplin Cellars is one of four wine-producing companies in the state. A farmer-owned cooperative formed in 1972 in response to low prices for grapes, it began marketing wine about six years ago and offers 15 products, including wines, champagnes and sherries.

"This will do it," Fussell said. "This will round us out. We will be producing everything that can be produced."

We care about keeping classified affordable.

From the very beginning we've been intent on keeping classified in the hands of the public—to operate effectively as a vehicle for exchanging information. For buying. For selling. For making life more convenient. And we've been successful.

You see, we know that to keep a good thing like classified going strong, the price has to be right. So while all around us prices have been going up, up, up, we've held the cost of classified down to keep it working for you. And that makes us awfully proud.

Builder Prohibits 'Trailer'

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Nick St. George, president of the Greensboro-based company called Oakwood, believes product image and affordability are what manufactured housing is all about.

And because of that philosophy, "trailer" is a dirty word around his business. How dirty? Just ask his employees, who are fined 25 cents each time they use the word in lieu of "mobile home" or "manufactured housing."

Changing perceptions about mobile homes has been an item on St. George's marketing agenda since he took over the job following the death of Jim Levasque, the former Oakwood president who died in a 1978 airplane crash.

St. George says the mobile home has been associated with depreciating value, with things popping out of walls and with gypsies living in them.

"The key has been to get the people here to see a home," he said.

To combat the negative image, St. George says Oakwood has paid attention to consumer preferences and construction materials.

Salesmen also are given manufacturing and classroom experience to understand all phases of the business.

The theory must have worked as Oakwood has prospered in the face of prohibitive economic conditions that have beleaguered home builders.

In the second quarter this year, Oakwood reported net income of $804,000 on sales of almost $11.9 million, up from net income of $722,000 on sales of $9.95 million in the comparable period of 1981.

The earnings come at a time when much of Oakwood's competition in the industry's medium range — sales of about 5,000 units or less each year — are either losing money or barely breaking even.

The 250 homes Oakwood sold during the first quarter made it the leading mobile home retailer in the state. North Carolina ranks fourth in the nation in both mobile home sales and manufacturing.

St. George sees continued prosperity in the future for his company because he maintains that traditional site-built housing no longer will sell regardless of price and interest rates. He sees mobile home filling the gap.

"Those days of inexpensive site-built housing are gone now; it's a buyer's market," he said. "Now, the bottom line is price."

"Although a mobile home may not look appealing on the outside to some people, it is affordable. The time is coming when something has got to be done. Price is the ultimate amenity," he said.

Oakwood started in 1946 as a retail sales operation and by 1969 had moved into manufacturing mobile homes. The company has 44 sales centers in six states and operates three manufacturing plants in North Carolina — two in Richfield and the other in Rockwell — that produce about 3,000 single-wide units a year. The homes range in price from $10,000 to $20,000.

Oakwood also has interest in seven mobile home parks.

Appointments

The City Council, meeting last week, made several appointments to local boards and commissions.

The appointments included: Frank Grooms to a four-year term on the Greenville City School Board; Marvin K. Blount Jr. to his second, four-year term on the Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority; Barbara Fenner, who has served as an alternate on the Planning and Zoning Commission, named a regular member; and Rick Miller, named an alternate on the planning board to fill the seat vacated by Ms. Fenner.

Judges Finding Races Tough

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — As if running for an office that few people are interested in wasn't enough, consider the task facing four Democratic candidates for the state Court of Appeals this month:

—They are in a runoff primary, with the normally low turnout for such elections compounded by the lack of any other statewide race to draw voters.

—It's an election held in the last week of July, of all times, thanks to the Legislature's delays in winning federal reapportionment approval.

—There are no real issues, and the candidates are legally bound from talking about much of substance.

—It's hard to get a lot of enthusiasm when you can't talk about issues," said Sidney Eagles, a Raleigh attorney who finished in second place for one of two court seats on last month's primary ballot. "It's very tough to get enthusiasm."

Eagles called for a July 27 runoff with Wayne District Judge Paul M. Wright, who led the first primary. The runoff for the other judicial seat is between Winston-Salem attorney Eugene Phillips, who led the first voting, and Pitt District Judge Horton Rountree. The winner of the Wright-Eagles race will face a Republican opponent in the fall; the winner of the other race will have no GOP opposition.

In calling for the runoff, Eagles voiced frustration with the state Supreme Court's Code of Judicial Ethics, which contains a canon that has been interpreted as preventing candidates from talking about issues they might face as an appellate judge.

"We don't know anything about their feelings because we're not permitted to ask and they're not permitted to answer really anything," said Alan Briggs, lobbyist for the N.C. Academy of Trial Lawyers. "These candidates can't speak on any issue that may come before them in the course of their duties, and that could be anything."

The canons even prevent the candidates for judge from soliciting campaign contributions, although that prohibition is easily circumvented by having a committee of friends do the asking.

But Eagles complains, and his opponent Wright agrees, that if North Carolina is to choose its judges by popular election, the candidates ought to be able to tell people their positions. The code of ethics should be changed, Eagles said, or else judges should be chosen another way.

"I agree with Mr. Eagles. As Americans, we should have freedom of speech to talk about principles," said Wright. "The only thing he and I disagree on is who will win the election."

The ethics code that bans debate was adopted by the Supreme Court in 1973, with legal authorization from the General Assembly. Court officials say it was taken largely from a model code of the American Bar Association.

It is enforced by the Judicial Standards Commission, a group appointed by the governor and Supreme Court chief justice. It hears complaints, investigates them and recommends discipline to the Supreme Court. The commission keeps cases confidential until they reach the Supreme Court.

The commission refuses to issue advisory opinions, so candidates can't even ask whether they are permitted to speak out on a given issue.

The idea, says Debbie R. Carrington, executive secretary of the commission, is to prevent a judge from prejudging himself before he hears a case, to preserve his role as an impartial arbiter.

"Sure, you'd like to know a judge's feeling on an issue," she said. But, she adds, "How relevant is that to his performance as a judge?"

In practice, it is up to each candidate to decide how far he can go, and the application is uneven. Wright has felt free to talk about restitution for the victims of crimes, though he acknowledges that isn't likely to be an issue for a judge on the Appeals Court.

Eagles says he can't go that far. "He goes further than I believe I'm entitled to go," Eagles said of Wright.

There is support for the ethics code among Phillips and Rountree, in the other runoff, however.

"Without restraint, the judicial races could be an absolute travesty," said Phillips. "Once you crossed the line, like a girl who doesn't know where to stop...candidates for the judiciary would find themselves in a position of pandering to public views that might not be in the best public interest."

Says Rountree: "That's the reason they put a blindfold on the lady holding the scale," he said. "They are blind to issues until they hear the facts."

Board Meets Tonight

The information meeting of the Greenville City Board of Education will be held at 8 p.m. tonight at Greenville Middle School.

Action items on the agenda include second readings on policy papers for nepotism and promotion-retention, the fiscal '82-'83 budget resolution and consideration of a request for a field trip.

Army Toughens Parachute Rules

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — Stringent new safety regulations for parachuting exercises have been implemented by the U.S. Army following the deaths of six Fort Bragg soldiers during the Gallant Eagle '82 exercise in March.

One of the new safety regulations requires that a scheduled jump be canceled when surface winds, excluding gusts, exceed 13 knots during a 10-minute period before the jump.

The new rule permits canceling a jump as late as one minute before it is to take place.

A military investigation into the six deaths and 154 injuries that occurred during the exercise at Fort Irwin, Calif., was recently concluded but the one-foot thick report has not been made public.

The report acknowledged that winds gusted above Army safety limits at one of five drop areas just before 1,700 82nd Airborne Division troops jumped and six of them were killed and 154 were injured. But the report concludes that winds subsided below the 13-knot limit minutes before the airborne assault.

Another change will require that safety officers monitor winds from at least two locations on the ground before a parachute jump. In the past, they have been required to check the wind from only one location.

The 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg put some of the new rules into effect May 26.

Lt. Col. Patrick Cannan, a Fort Bragg spokesman, said the Army has not put such wind monitoring rules into effect sooner because the jump at Fort Irwin was the first time the Army had encountered such freak weather conditions.

Coastal Seizures Increase

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (AP) — The Coast Guard says it seized 72 tons of marijuana off the Virginia and North Carolina coasts in the first six months of this year — 60 percent more than was seized in all of 1981.

The seizures from fishing and pleasure boats support the Coast Guard's earlier predictions that tighter surveillance around Florida would push drug boats further up the coast.

Last year, Coast Guard vessels seized nearly 45 tons of marijuana from fishing boats in the mid-Atlantic region, including 19 tons aboard a boat in the York River.

The Coast Guard has 10 vessels that patrol an area from the southern tip of New Jersey to North Carolina, the same number it had last year.

A spokesman estimated, however, that only 10 percent to 15 percent of the drug boats on the East Coast are found.

Because patrol units are so few, officials here say they depend more on intelligence reports than random boardings of suspicious vessels to make arrests on the high seas.

The Navy has stepped up its use of radar planes to spot possible smugglers.

The Air Force is also expected to take a more active role in detecting ship and airplane smuggling in the near future. Plans are to use the sophisticated AWAC (airborne warning and control) radar airplane, which can see very long distances to monitor air and sea activity.

The information would be relayed to Coast Guard patrol units.

There were two marijuana catches last week, including one Wednesday about 50 miles southwest of Bermuda when a team from the Coast Guard cutter Unimak boarded the 55-foot sailboat, Jacquelin M., and found seven tons of pot.

On Thursday, the Coast Guard seized a drug-carrying fishing boat, the Bobby M., near the Moorehead City, N.C., port terminal. The shrimper had an estimated 20 tons of marijuana aboard. No one was aboard the sailboat when it was apprehended.

The street value of the drugs seized aboard vessels so far this year is $72 million, the Coast Guard said.

Collision

Cars driven by Clifton David Rouse of Route 13, Greenville, and Allen Thomas Anderson of Route 1, Winterville, collided about 6:25 p.m. Sunday at the intersection of Evans Street and Arlington Boulevard.

Police department investigators estimated damage from the collision at $800 to the Rouse car and $300 to the Anderson vehicle.
