Israel Vows Step Up Pressure

By The Associated Press
Israel consolidated its tank positions around the PLO's shrinking west Beirut enclave today, vowed to step up the military pressure and advised the U.N. secretary general not to visit Yasser Arafat.
After 20 hours of fighting Wednesday that left at least 250 civilians and 19 Israeli soldiers dead and 670 Lebanese wounded by official count, Israeli tanks dug in on Beirut's southern outskirts and behind the city's racetrack.
Other Israeli armor pulled back from the harbor area in the north, however, and no tanks could be seen on the road used to storm across the mid-city Green Line into the Palestine Liberation Organization enclave.
A car bomb exploded outside the Alexandre Hotel in Christian-controlled east Beirut, meanwhile, wounding several people with flying glass and setting fire to several cars.
About 100 foreign journalists covering the war are housed at the hotel, but no deaths were reported. It was the first car bombing in east Beirut since Israel invaded Lebanon June 6 to crush the PLO.
In Vienna, U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar appealed to the Israeli government to accept U.N. cease-fire observers in Beirut and offered to travel to Lebanon for talks "with all parties concerned."
Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin said his government would welcome a visit from Perez de Cuellar but only "if there were not a parallel visit to Arafat," a U.N. statement issued in Vienna said.

"The secretary general did not find that position acceptable, as he feels it is his duty to meet with all parties involved in the hostilities," the statement said.
Israel on Tuesday turned back a convoy of U.N. truce observers outside Beirut on grounds the PLO would use them to drag out negotiations on a guerrilla withdrawal from Lebanon.
Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, architect of the invasion, charged U.S. officials in Beirut lied about the scope of Israeli military moves in Lebanon earlier this week, Israel radio reported.
It said Sharon, in an angry conversation Wednesday with William A. Brown, deputy chief of mission at the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv, claimed the U.S. ambassador to Beirut, Robert Dillon, and presidential envoy Philip C. Habib grossly exaggerated the rate of Israeli fire and reported to Washington that Israel was firing 1,000 shells for every Palestinian guerrilla shell.
It said Sharon accused the diplomats of playing sounds of fire over the telephone to Washington without knowing whether it was Israeli or Palestinian fire.
The radio quoted Sharon as calling them "mendacious reports" based on watching the war from afar. Spokesman for Sharon and the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv could not be reached immediately by telephone for comment.
Alarmed by Israel's new offensive, which apparently was aimed at isolating the Palestinians in southern Beirut camps, President Reagan said he wrote Begin to tell him a strict cease-fire is an "absolute necessity."

Sources in Washington said the administration was considering military, diplomatic and economic penalties if Israel does not stop the offensive. The White House avoided mentioning sanctions in its public statements.
The U.N. Security Council voted 14-0, with the United States alone abstaining, to approve a Jordanian-Spanish resolution demanding the prompt return of Israeli troops to positions held last Sunday when the council unanimously called for an immediate cease-fire.
But Begin and other Israeli officials refused to be deterred from their goal of forcing the PLO out of Lebanon.
"Nobody is going to bring Israel to her knees," Begin said in a speech in Jerusalem that replied to a call for sanctions by the chairman of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Charles Percy, R-Ill.
"You must have forgotten that Jews do not kneel but to God," Begin said.
Israel's ambassador to the United States, Moshe Arens, told ABC News that "Israel would be ready to sacrifice economic assets, if it came to that, in order to protect its security interests. ... The military pressure will be cranked up until the PLO leaves."
Reagan said he also contacted the PLO through intermediaries and urged it to withdraw from Beirut right away. But Arafat issued a radio appeal to all able-bodied Palestinians to take up arms "to defend what is left of your nation's honor unto death."

Sounds Budget Amendment Warning

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Ratification of a proposed balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution, narrowly approved by the Senate and sent to the House, could send the economy into a tailspin, Congress was warned today.
Alice M. Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office, told a House Judiciary subcommittee said ratification by the states between now and 1985 would require tax increases and spending cuts far greater than those currently envisioned to pull the economy out of recession.
If the proposed amendment's restrictions on deficit spending go into effect in 1985, Ms. Rivlin said, an additional $170 billion in new taxes or reduced spending would be needed.
The amendment, actively endorsed by the Reagan administration, squeaked through the Republican-led Senate by a 69-31 margin Tuesday, just two votes more than the required two-thirds margin.
Supporters of the amendment expect a more difficult time in the Democratic-led House.
There could be "widespread dislocations if the amendment is implemented at an early date," Ms. Rivlin testified. Under the amendment, a balanced budget would be required after ratification by the necessary 38 states, except in wartime or unless Congress votes by a three-fifths margin of both houses to allow a deficit in a certain year.

Ms. Rivlin, the top budget expert for Congress, added that the economic risks would be reduced if the amendment were not ratified until the late 1980s or later.
Rep. Peter Rodino, D-N.J., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, announced today that despite his personal opposition to the amendment, he plans to permit a committee vote on the measure in the near future.
Denying that he had deliberately "bottled up" the measure, Rodino said: "I saw no need to rush impetuously into amending the Constitution. Now that the Senate has acted, I intend to move ahead."
Supporters are trying to circumvent Rodino's committee, which stalled the proposed amendment since early this year, by petitioning to have it sent directly to the House floor.
As of Wednesday, only 184 of the needed 218 signatures necessary for the petition to succeed had been obtained.
Rodino said he hoped his decision to proceed with the measure would make the so-called discharge petition unnecessary.

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., claimed the effort to bring the measure directly to the House floor "has kind of stalled." He called the Senate-backed amendment "a cowardly vote, an easy way out."
Sponsors of the amendment vowed to work to get the amendment to the floor, citing heavy political pressure to have the issue aired before the Nov. 3 congressional elections.
The proposed amendment would not absolutely require a balanced budget, but would make it more difficult for Congress to permit deficit spending.
The measure would limit Congress' ability to use taxes as a way of balancing the budget. It would restrict tax revenues to the same percentage of increase as the nation's overall economic growth — unless Congress specifically votes to change the formula with specific tax hikes.
The amendment is proving politically popular at a time when federal deficits could run to $140 billion or more.
Senate leaders said last-minute support from Democrats running for re-election this year provided the margin of victory.
Of the 22 Democrats who joined 47 Republicans to vote for the measure in the GOP-led Senate, 11 are seeking re-election.

One of them, Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., said he decided to support the measure because he wanted to "to start a great debate throughout the country" on whether to place a balanced-budget amendment in the Constitution.
"Had this been a secret ballot, there would have been a resounding defeat," fumed Sen. Alan Cranston of California, the chief Democratic opponent of the bill.
Cranston predicted that amendment eventually would die anyway, either in the House or at the hands of the states.
But Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, a sponsor, disagreed.
While conceding that getting the measure through the House would be a tough battle, Hatch said that once that Congress completes action on it, "It will be ratified by the states so fast our heads will be spinning."
Thirty-one states have already gone on record as favoring a balanced-budget amendment. If ratified by 38, the proposal would become the 27th Amendment to the Constitution.
As it passed the Senate, the amendment would also make it harder to increase the national debt ceiling.

Busy Library

By ANGELA LINGERFELT

Sheppard Memorial Library experienced another successful year in terms of service, increased use of various facilities and a high number of loans throughout the system for 1981-82.
According to the library's 1981-82 annual report, approximately 146,626 persons visited the facilities and the library increased the number of registered borrowers.
The volunteer program, which was initiated last September, received a total of 1,506 contributed hours. Volunteers assisted in all areas of operations.
As a result of an effort to increase use while holding down costs, the average cost of making a loan in the library system was reduced 9 percent, the report said.
Staff at the main desk received more reference, directional and card catalogue-related questions. The report said this represented a 7 percent increase in informational services from last year.
The Children's Library reportedly had the highest circulation in history and the largest circulation figures since 1964 were reported at Carver Library. Some programs at the Carver branch during the past year included puppet shows, films, story hours, a summer reading program, special holiday programs and the Carver Preschool Enrichment Program.
At East Branch Library circulation reached an all-time high. An increase of 44 percent was reported. East Branch Library also has several new additions, which include a group of paperbacks and a display of adventure-suspense novels.
The Pitt County Bookmobile reported the highest period of use since 1970 when two bookmobiles were operated. According to the report, the rise in use was produced by adding new materials and increasing the number of stops.
Project CHEER (Children Having Enjoyment and Enthusiasm for Reading), a federally funded project, completed a second-year expansion. CHEER is a program that serves preschoolers in area schools, churches and civic organizations in Pitt County.
"The Bookmark," the monthly newsletter of Sheppard Memorial Library, is illustrated and edited by the CHEER staff. The staff also helped in the production of a puppet show for city, county and state elected officials.
Sheppard Memorial Library succeeded in reaching many of its goals during 1981-82. "I think the success of the past year was due to the cooperation and efforts of the staff and trustees and the support of local governing bodies," said Willie Nelms, director of the library.
Nelms added, "I think Sheppard Library has a good heritage to build upon and I have hope for a bright future."

Reagan Warns Begin Cease-Fire Vital

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, frustrated by Israel's renewed attacks on west Beirut, is telling Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin in a firmly worded letter that a strict cease-fire is an "absolute necessity."
Reagan issued a public statement Wednesday admonishing Israel to stop its assault on the guerrilla stronghold and urging the Palestine Liberation Organization to leave the area without delay. His private letter to Begin was understood to be considerably tougher.
"The president is not an easy man to upset," said one White House official, who did not wish to be identified. But, he added, "It isn't the U.S. view that Israel should be shooting when negotiations are going on."
In another development, Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said today that Reagan received a message, by telephone, from King Fahd of Saudi Arabia, expressing the Saudi concern about the Lebanese situation. Speakes gave no details, except to say that a senior U.S. official took the call from Fahd.
The White House official on Wednesday described

Reagan as "frustrated and very concerned," especially since the White House had been optimistic about U.S. Ambassador Philip Habib's attempts to negotiate a settlement of the crisis in Lebanon before the latest outbreak of shooting began.
He said Reagan's "extreme frustration" stemmed partly from the optimism that had existed earlier. "Habib was a lot farther along than he had been before," the official added.
"We do not believe Israel is out to sabotage the Habit mission, but there is frustration with all sides," the official said.

Officials who asked not to be identified said the president had considered, but deferred, imposing sanctions against Israel. Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes refused to confirm that report.
One source said he did not believe Reagan's letter to Begin specifically threatened Israel with any sanctions, but he did acknowledge sanctions were discussed during a three-hour meeting of Reagan's top foreign policy advisers Wednesday.

"You just couldn't have three hours of meetings without discussing all options," he said.
The Washington Post said today that Reagan's letter contained a clear implication, but not an explicit threat, that Israel's military supply relationship with the United States could be jeopardized.
Moshe Arens, Israel's ambassador to the United States was asked about possible sanctions Wednesday night on ABC's "Nightline" news program. "You can be very sure that Israel would be ready to sacrifice economic assets, if it came to that, in order to protect its security interests," he said.
Sanctions were imposed on Israel after it bombed an Iraqi nuclear reactor last summer and, to a limited degree, after the initial Israeli bombing of Beirut two months ago. Reagan also suspended delivery of U.S.-made cluster bombs after complaints that the devices had been used against Lebanese civilians.
Speakes said the new Israeli push made further diplomatic efforts to end the fighting in the Middle East "virtually impossible."

'Guilty But Mentally Ill' Plea Being Prepared By Commission

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's Criminal Code Commission began working on revisions in the state's insanity defense laws that could lead to a "guilty but mentally ill" plea long before John W. Hinckley Jr. used an insanity defense in the shooting of President Reagan.
The final drafts of the commission's proposals will be ready for consideration by the General Assembly when it convenes in January, officials said.
The 24-member commission has decided that the state needed a law under which criminals would be required to pay their debts to society even though they were mentally ill at the time they committed crimes.
The proposed revisions would add the plea of guilty but mentally ill without abolishing the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity.
Henry Whitesides, a Gastonia attorney and member of the commission, says he expects the commission's final draft of the law to be sent to a legislative committee for further study and be ready for a vote from the General Assembly within the next two years.
Before the commission could begin working on the actual insanity plea, procedures by which the state tries defendants had to be rewritten, Whitesides said.

A plea of guilty but mentally ill would require two court proceedings, according to Whitesides. The court would first decide if the defendant was guilty and then hold a second hearing to determine if the defendant is mentally ill, he said.
A defendant found guilty but mentally ill would be subject to the same sentence for his crime as a sane defendant. However, should the court determine that the defendant is mentally ill, the defendant's initial commitment would be to a residential state mental health facility.
"This recognizes two needs," says Joan Byers, an assistant attorney general. "What's happening is that the mentally ill people would be incarcerated, but prison inmates would be protected from the same type of action that got the guy in trouble in the first place."
"It would also give the courts continuing leverage by forcing the mentally ill defendant to have medication and, in that way, we could keep a handle on people," she said.
"The new law will slide down to where most people are," Ms. Byers said. "And that is that some people are very mentally disturbed. They new law will say 'guilty but mentally ill' and will put these people into a mental institution."

House press secretary Larry Speakes refused to confirm that report.

Reports Soviet Doubling U.S. Sub-Building

LONDON (AP) — The Soviet navy has the lead over the American fleet in many areas, the editor of the authoritative Jane's Fighting Ships says in the 1982-83 edition published today.
Retired Capt. John Moore, while praising President Reagan for building up the U.S. fleet, said in a foreword to the new edition that the Soviets commissioned two submarines for every American sub during 1981 and 1982.
"The future may well hold even more impressive classes of submarine with improved armament in the Soviet fleet," he said, reporting evidence of new forms of propulsion such as high capacity batteries, unconventional fuels and the use of cryogenics in fuel cell propulsion.

About half of the 367 Soviet submarines are nuclear-powered. Of 128 American subs, only six are non-nuclear powered, he said.
"In a period of rising tension, the deployment abroad of even 50 percent of Soviet nuclear-attack submarines could have a disturbing effect on international decision-making," Moore said.
He also said Britain's 74-day conflict with Argentina to recover the Falkland Islands stretched the Royal Navy to the limit.
"Time was on Britain's side — it may not be next time,"

Moore said.
"The excellent and speedy arrangements for the dispatch of the Falkland Islands' task force should not be allowed to obscure the fact that this was an operation targeted against a small navy with four submarines, an effective air force and with the prospect of a comparatively small-scale amphibious landing at the end," Moore wrote.
"Had the U.S.S.R. chosen to interpose a very few nuclear submarines, as they might be expected to do in the case of what they chose to classify as a 'war of national liberation,' the problems of the task force commander would have been greatly increased," he said.

Dear Abby

Express Thanks To Teacher

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: What a thrill I just had! A former student of many years ago just telephoned from across the country to tell me that I had made a difference in his life. He wanted to thank me for not giving up on him.

He began his conversation by saying, "You probably won't even remember me..." How wrong he was. Not only did I remember what he looked like, I even remembered his small, neat handwriting.

Abby, if any of your readers had a schoolteacher who has made a difference in their lives, please urge them to take a few minutes to let that teacher know.

One call from a former student has inspired me to hang in there with students I now have and will have in the future.

ULA PENDLETON, L.A.

DEAR ULA: Thank you for inspiring the following:

Readers: Did you have a teacher who made a difference in your life? A teacher who encouraged you to stay in school when you wanted to quit? A teacher who believed in you and your ability to succeed when you had no confidence in yourself? A teacher who stayed late to give you the extra help you needed? If so, please phone or write that teacher and say thank you. It will make that teacher's day.

DEAR ABBY: I met a very nice gentleman at a social event a few weeks ago. He mentioned where he lived, and I said, "I go by your house very often." Then he said, "Stop in sometime."

Well, I stopped by yesterday, and he seemed surprised (I hope pleasantly) to see me, and he invited me in. We visited for about 15 minutes, and when I left he said, "Thank you for stopping by." He did not say come by again or even ask for my phone number.

Should I take this as a hint to respect his privacy and not to come back again? Or should I drop by again and see what happens? I don't want to be a pest, but I would really like to know him better.

CURIOUS

DEAR CURIOUS: Don't drop by again. If you are ever to see him again, the next move should be his.

DEAR ABBY: A reader asked whether the host or the guest should suggest calling it an evening when the hour grows late, and you said, "Let he who emits the first yawn cast the first farewell."

Dear me! It should have been, "Let him." Oh well, when you recycle, please correct the mistake.

DONALD J. STINSON, SKANEATELES, N.Y.

DEAR ABBY: I was recently at a picnic with several families. A man was sitting at a table, and in front of him was a small portable radio. He turned the radio on and was listening to it when his 15-year-old son came up to him, turned the radio off and said, "That's mine!"

The father didn't say a word but he looked so hurt. My heart just ached for that poor man. I wanted to say something to the boy, but I felt I had better not.

Please print this, Abby. Maybe some teen-agers will see it and treat their fathers a little better before they're gone — like mine is.

WAS THERE IN RITCHIE, MD.

DEAR WAS THERE: My heart aches not only for the father but for his son, who apparently had not been taught to respect his father.

While it's sad to see parents abused by their children, the fault could conceivably lie with the parent who has failed to "train up a child in the way he should go."

DEAR ABBY: Did you ever find out who wrote that beautiful essay "On Youth," submitted by Marie V. in Tacoma?

STILL WAITING IN BREMERTON, WASH.

DEAR STILL: I am still wading through a mountain of mail from helpful readers in response to my S.O.S.

The author is Samuel Ullman, although many wrote to say that Douglas MacArthur wrote it. (MacArthur read it publicly in 1955, saying its author was "unknown.")

Ullman was born in Alsace, France in 1840 and came to the U.S. as a boy, arriving in New Orleans. He fought in the Civil War, was wounded twice, settled in Natchez, Miss., married Emma Mayer, moved to Birmingham, Ala., and died in 1924.

Samuel Ullman was a prominent merchant with a penchant for public service. He became president of the board of education in Birmingham, and a high school in Birmingham bears his name. He helped to organize the Temple Emanuel where he served as a lay-rabbi for three years.

I have received no less than 100 different versions of Samuel Ullman's essay on youth. Mayer U. Newfield, a grandson of Ullman, sent me a copy of the correct version, which appears in "Twilight Time," published by the C.R. Gibson Co. in 1979. It is truly a masterpiece.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

If a foreigner watched American television for an entire evening, he would end up believing the most influential man in our lives is our druggist.

There isn't a person on a commercial who will make a move without him.

Every night, there's a caravan of malcontents who drag in whining, "Gee, Mr. Brewster, do you know how long it's been since I've eaten blueberry pie with these dentures?" He fixes it.

The next one, a militant, registered cavity-fighter says, "I don't care how it tastes, Mr. Harper, my child only had three cavities last month." Then Mr. Harper, that sly old fox, will slip her a tube of toothpaste that will give her child zip cavities.

Or the one I love, where the woman doesn't open her mouth. The druggist just looks at her and says, "Embarrassing itching, Mrs. Milder? Try this."

The steady stream of people into the drugstore who come to worship at the Mecca of quick remedies goes on all night. A throbbing headache? Try this. Indigestion? Try this. Painful sunburn? Try this. Disgusting roaches? Try this.

I have a neat druggist. I don't know his name. I just drop off prescriptions and he smiles and fills them. He wears a white jacket like they do on TV. I have a lot of respect for him because he reads my doctor's handwriting.

I have never discussed my irregularities with him. It's nothing personal. It's just that I have to be married to someone for at least five years before I discuss the subject with them.

We've gone through a lot of trends on television: westerns, police shows, lawyers and doctors. Ever since Quincy broke through with his practice of forensic medicine, druggists have been restless.

I think it's only a matter of time before a druggist will star in his own TV series. Each week he'll deal with a mouthwash that's being recalled or a whole city that becomes constipated. I see it as a Love Boat of sickies.

My druggist would be perfect for the part, but he doesn't wear glasses. I wonder why he doesn't wear glasses. Come to think of it, he has never told me what he takes to go to sleep on the nights he turns and tosses, or even what vitamins he gives his children. And he calls himself a druggist!

High Drama On Budget

Something dramatic with a potential for history-making has been taking place in the Congress.

A constitutional amendment requiring that every dollar spent be matched with a dollar of income is being argued; and the "pros" are winning points.

North Carolina requires a balanced state budget, and it has served the state well. Without it we can imagine the same chaos in state finances as regularly takes place on the federal scene: lawmakers voting pet projects and programs with no thought of how and when the bills would be met. (We are paying for that attitude now, and will be paying for years to come. As the saying goes, "there is no such thing as a free lunch.")

When money is spent as though there is a bottomless wallet, people lose respect for that money. In turn, it loses its value. In a weird sort of way, one might say if you respect it, in turn money will respect itself.

Sen. Alan Cranston (Calif.), an opponent, predicts state legislatures will refuse to approve the amendment "once they understand what it means for them."

The Senator is probably right in many instances; but we suggest the alternative of unbridled spending poses even greater hardships.

The cloud of a trillion-dollar-plus national debt overhangs every taxpayer and every level of government in the land. Small wonder there are forces hoping to sell off many of the vast federal holdings to pay off at least a part of that debt.

For the present, the best we can hope for is to prevent that debt from growing into an all-devouring monster.

Let's Re-Study Tobacco Tax

Hold everything. The doubling of the cigarette tax (from 8 cents to 16 cents per pack) may come in for a second look after it passed the Senate and now is the hands of a House-Senate conference committee.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., reportedly has said he is willing to compromise on the tax increase if other sources of revenue can be found to make up that which is lost.

The alternatives certainly should be considered. Just the prospects of the tax have had adverse effects on tobacco sales. Its enactment can mean disaster for the farm segment which depends on tobacco for income.

We urge tobacco state members of the House to use all their influence to see that alternative revenues are found and that this inordinately high increase in taxes is substantially reduced.

Back To Band Concerts

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Front and center, Colonel Bogey, and attention, all you Yankee Doodle Dandies.

The band concert, absolutely free, costing nothing but a summer evening, is back in style. Bigger this year, they say, than drive-in movies, and almost as compulsive as video space games. We had one in our town park the other evening, and I happily happened on several starlit oompah recitals on picturesque village greens while motoring recently through Vermont.

More vividly than an old photograph album, the scene and the sounds brought back my boyhood on a fond tide of remembrance.

Here was the past in instant replay. Fireflies lighting up the night in a merry dance of sparks. A muted trumpet coyly calling to the tin soldiers to bring down the thundering brass fanfare of the "March of the Toys." Old folks in fold-up chairs fanning themselves with cardboard fans (donated by the local funeral parlor) in cadence with the pulsating tempo. A toddler on uncertain new shoes swaying in tune to the melodic march line. Lovers cuddling close in the silvery starlight sifting through the arched canopy of giant elms lightly ruffled by the breeze and he ice cream vendor almost whispering his wares. Small fry crowding the steps of the circular wooden bandstand, all Victorian curved cornices and gingerbread railings, for a better view of the uniformed instrumentalists, especially the virtuoso on the huge copper drum. The local wisacre sucking lemon in the front row just as the tuba player begins his solo. The bandmaster's precision about-face on incredibly polished shoes and snappy salute to acknowledge the rousing applause that followed every item on the program. The long line at the water fountain during intermission. Giant moths in mesmerized flight around the lampposts. My grandmother reaching into her enormous handbag for the bottle of citronella that kept the mosquitoes at bay.

Some doomsayers say the revival of the free band concert is a sure sign that we are in for another depression. Could be. I prefer to think of it as the pendulum of taste and manners swinging back to the pleasures of a less complicated, more acoustically benign era when megaton amplifiers were invented and the Soupsophone committed the biggest assault on the nation's eardrums.

One of the nice things about living in London was that you could leave your office at noon and find a band, like the Coldstream Guards or the Yorkshire brass ensemble, tooting away in St. James Park or down on the Thames Embankment. The recent IRA

Taiwan Deal Is Very Near

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
WASHINGTON — President Reagan is on the brink of approving a joint U.S.-communist Chinese communique that friends of an independent Taiwan regard as a prolonged death sentence for the island regime and the conservative movement will resist as the president's worst betrayal yet.

From Taiwan's standpoint, all that can be said for the new communique is that it does not end U.S. arms sales on a date certain, as Peking demanded. It does, however, make clear that the weapons supply cannot go on indefinitely and will not be upgraded. While U.S.-Taiwan co-production of the F-5E aircraft is continued for now, the advanced F-5G with sophisticated interceptor capability is embargoed.

This reinforces the 1971 Shanghai communique's recognition of "one China," pointing to eventual control over Taiwan by the mainland communists. Since the phaseout of U.S. arms is not linked by the new communique to reduced tensions between the two Chinas, the long-term prognosis for Taiwan is bleak. In the short-term, that surely discourages international investor interest in the island's enterprises.

Bad as that news is for Taiwan, its importance transcends one small nation that found no permanence in U.S. commitments. To conservatives who have tried to overlook the drift toward moderate Republicanism by the Reagan administration, the betrayal of Taiwan is the last straw.

Reagan, who as a card-carrying conservative has championed Taiwan throughout his political career, has not consciously abandoned his principles. Rather, on this as on other questions he has insensibly followed the lead of the permanent government bureaucracy to postures he never dreamed he could assume.

But in this case, it is not possible to blame Reagan's drift on manipulative advisers. "The president must understand the consequences of this," one crestfallen conservative aide told us. Although pro-Taiwan conservatives in Congress are pressuring the president to reject the communique, it is hard to imagine throwing aside what has been hammered out secretly in Peking negotiations this summer when the communist regime accepted less than anybody ever expected.

This represents a victory from the political grave for Alexander Haig, who during 18 months as secretary of state battled for the paramountcy of the Washington-Peking link over the future of Taiwan. Haig's obduracy on the China question was one of the least publicized and most important causes for his fall.

Haig insisted that good relations with Peking required nothing less than a communique setting a date certain for ending arms shipments to Taiwan. A few days after Haig was sacked, Reagan rejected his communique and instead approved a fuzziest version and shipped it off to Peking. Friends of Taiwan breathed easier, not because they liked the softer version but because they thought China's Deng Xiaoping would reject it out of hand.

Deng disappointed them. The Chinese would accept no linkage of terminating aid to Taiwan with reducing tension between the communist and nationalist regimes, but agreed to a promise that prevent weaponry would not exceed past quality and quantity and would not continue indefinitely. Tentative agreement was reached in Peking July 19, and finishing touches have been negotiated since then.

The communique only continues shrinking the U.S. commitment to Taiwan, a process begun by Richard Nixon and carried forward by Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter. But Ronald Reagan as presidential candidate pledged a different direction on this as on other questions. The 32-year emotional legacy since Chiang Kai-shek fled the mainland makes this one accommodation that is unforgivable for the president's conservative constituency.

Strength For Today

MESSAGE OF MERCY

If we burn the candle at both ends and get to feeling wretched as a result, we usually take a pill and forget about it. If circumstances overwhelm us and we feel that we can endure them no longer, some people try to evade them for the time being, at least, with a glass and bottle.

Probably we are not much different from other generations in our unwillingness to face life realistically. Every problem comes to challenge our powers and test our courage. It seems trite to counsel people to face their problems and have it out with them, then and there, but as a matter of fact, this is the only counsel in which there is any wisdom. Pain-killing pills and the temporary solace of the bottle not only do not solve problems, they make them grow bigger by being temporarily avoided.

We should listen to the message life is trying to convey to us through problem and pain. It is a message of mercy, hope and power, if we will only let it be so. — Elisha Douglass

THIS AFTERNOON

Provided An Issue

By PAUL T. O'CONNOR
RALEIGH — When Jesse Helms walked into the well of the U.S. Senate late last month and voted to double the federal cigarette tax to 16 cents, he presented North Carolina politicians with what will probably be the foremost issue of the next three campaigns.

Although several high-ranking Democrats in Raleigh say Helms' vote won't hurt the Republicans until 1984, others think it will have an effect on the 1982 congressional races. Already Democrat Tim Valentine is using the vote against Republican opponent Jack Marin in the 2nd District. And a group of tobacco farmers sitting over a pile of slow-selling leaf in a Fuquay-Varina warehouse told this reporter they'll extract their first revenge on Sen. Helms in this year's House races.

Undoubtedly, debate on the vote will reach its peak when Helms runs for re-election in 1984 — quite possibly against Gov. Jim Hunt. Last week, one top Hunt aide said the vote might be an indication that Helms has not decided to run again. Why else would he do something so foolish?

Hunt won't criticize Helms personally. But he does say that the tax increase will hurt farmers and that the mere threat of the increase lowered opening prices for tobacco this year.

The farmers at Fuquay split into two camps — both angry. The first says they're finished with Helms. He betrayed them after they supported him. Even though many felt he represents their views on most other matters, he'd sold them on the matter most important to them. He won't win them back.

The second group says they also feel betrayed. But they suspect Helms will have a reason for the vote. Before saying they're through with him, they want to hear his reasoning. They might take him back.

Democrats in Raleigh say their job is to keep Helms from making a persuasive explanation. They must keep hammering home the fact that Jesse Helms and his colleague, John East, switched their votes at the last minute and revived what would have been a dead eight-cent tax increase on cigarettes. One Raleigh reporter summed it up saying, "This was the party loyalty kind of vote that Jesse hasdemogued on the Democrats for so long. You can't blame them for wanting to do the same this time."

Hunt isn't ready to write Helms' political obituary. He says "you can never tell" how a vote will affect a politician. "He might get something next week and they'll think he's the best thing since ice cream." Helms has said there's more coming and a number of the farmers at Fuquay said they expect President Reagan to provide tobacco farmers with some kind of goody to sweeten the bitter pill of the tax increase.

Still many Democrats think Helms has permanently injured his standing with those involved in the tobacco industry. They point to former Gov. Bob Scott, who rode strong agricultural support into office but quickly lost it when he sponsored a two-cent cigarette tax. They also note Hunt's tobacco-farming background and his history of running well in tobacco

Other Editors Say The Milk Debate

(The Salisbury Post)

The recent revelation that retail milk prices in North Carolina are the highest in the South, with the exception of those in Florida, has revived the hot and confusing debate over regulation.

Although farmers perennially gripe about government "interference", dairymen — like tobacco farmers — have few objections to regulation when it lines their pockets. And that, according to most views, is what the price-setting by the State Milk Commission has done.

Oddly enough, organized consumers, who are generally found on the side of more regulation in the marketplace, are in this instance calling for a milk market free of price regulation. The evidence is that the competition of a free market would lower prices to the consumer.

But would it? That's the question that's causing so much debate. Face it. Even under the regulated price-setting system we now have, many good medium-sized dairy farmers in this, the best dairying section of the state, have gone out of business in the last two or three years. What would happen if the milk were deregulated?

The chances are good that with cut-throat competition in the supermarkets the distributors — already approaching a monopoly of a few huge companies — would have to squeeze the producers. Competition is a strong weapon to enforce efficiency on producers, and in this sense market forces work for lower prices.

But there is a limit to the productivity of cows and machinery. After that limit is reached, what then? For the smaller and medium-sized producers, lacking the efficiencies of large scale, it may well mean the end of the road for their dairying.

The immediate effect of more herd sales could mean a lowering of the supply of milk and hence higher prices to the consumers. But the long-range effect might be lower prices. As in chicken and some other forms of farming, the efficiencies of large production could offset the loss of many small producers. All other factors being similar, larger herds do mean lower production costs just as assembly-line broiler production brought chicken prices down.

So it can be seen that the effect of deregulation would be to sacrifice the smaller dairy farms, a trend already in effect. Thus the question of regulation or a free market is not a happy one or an easy one for agricultural economists to answer. They are found on both sides.

Tax-Deductible Trips 'Safe'

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — Perplexing situations.

While Congress attacks the three-martini, tax-deductible lunch, assuming that little business can be conducted in so foggy a climate, luxurious tax-deductible trips seem to sail in the clear.

The technique that makes them acceptable for tax deductions, it seems, is the combination of travel and investment education. You can cruise the Caribbean, for example, while studying real estate investment.

Typically, sessions are conducted by popular investment personalities, some of whom make the rounds of seminars, aground and afloat, to give their versions of why you should invest in their favorite idea.

The biggest of all is now offered, an around-the-world investment tour to London, Zurich, Liechtenstein, Abu Dhabi, Bahrain, Singapore, Sydney, Bangkok and Hong Kong, advertised as an "all-inclusive package that's tax-deductible."

Among those expected to help guests scout investment opportunities is Douglas Casey, highly promoted author of books on crisis investing, a man who forecasts financial upheaval and depression in the 1980s, and suggests people must learn now how to survive them.

If you think the three-martini lunch constitutes luxury, consider what is offered, according to advertisements, on The First Around the World Investment Tour:

"All travel from your home city and back via TWA and Singapore Airlines wide-bodied jets. Luxury accommodations in each city. 54 gourmet meals. All presentations, events and personal consulting. Special gifts and bonuses. Plus much more."

Single occupancy price is $9,747. Presumably including the martinis.

How long will Americans continue to think of the typical or traditional family as one of four members: wage-earner husband, homemaker wife and two children?

Peter Francese, president of American Demographics, Inc., told the American Council of Life Insurance that only one household in 18 now fits the definition, often used by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The American family, he says, is changing rapidly.

Married couples increased 8 percent in the 1970s but married couples with children declined. Women with one or more children and no husband increased more than 50 percent in the same period. There are now 32 million two-earner families, only 19.5 million single-earner families.

Still, the notion persists that a family consists of mother, father and two children. Ideal perhaps, but not typical.

—The house is changing too.

Housing marketers, such as Ric Katz, president of RAMS Marketing, are helping to design and build houses that many people still would consider "far out."

A house, for example, for double or triple owners who share the mortgage for financial reasons. Occupants share a living area and kitchen, but have sole use of their master bedroom and bath suites.

And the satellite house, in which private suites extend on "spokes" from a central living-dining-utility area, an arrangement Katz says offers security similar to that provided by old-time clans.

Katz says pressure from inflation and the need for security are altering forever the single-family suburban home.

—No more than three years ago business executives were urged to maintain a low profile. Don't be seen in public too often, don't show off the kids, avoid being driven in a big car, take courses in kidnap evasion tactic.

Times may not have changed that much in two years, but the attitude of executives seems to have changed. Lee Iacocca, Chrysler chairman, is also the leading advertising in company advertising. So is David Mahoney, chairman of Norton Simon Inc. And Frank Borman of Eastern Air Lines. Many others, nationally and locally, make up the trend.

Has the world become safer for executives? Was the threat to their security overstated? Or, is it simply that the top guy wants to be known as tops, not just the titular head but the personal symbol too?

Proposes Spangler New Education Bd. Chairman

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt has recommended C.D. "Dick" Spangler Jr., a prominent Charlotte businessman, to succeed Dr. David Bruton as chairman of the state Board of Education.

Hunt recommended Spangler after Bruton, a Southern Pines pediatrician, announced his resignation Wednesday to the board in a closed-door meeting at a retreat called at a Chapel Hill conference center. Aides to Hunt said the governor joined the board at the meeting and informed them of his choice for a successor. Spangler is expected to be sworn in at the Aug. 12 board meeting. The board elects the chairman, but it usually follows the governor's wishes.

Spangler, 50, is former chairman of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education board, serving from 1972 to 1976, a period when that school system implemented its controversial integration plan.

In selecting Spangler, Hunt has turned to a businessman to direct the department. Spangler is chairman of the Bank of North Carolina and president of C.D. Spangler Construction Co. He is a graduate of Harvard Business School.

Bruton, chosen by Hunt as chairman in 1977, said he was resigning for a variety of personal reasons. Aides to the governor said the resignation was voluntary, and Hunt issued a prepared statement praising Bruton as "an able and energetic chairman."

Bruton cited the recent death of a partner in his medical practice as a reason for resigning, and said it also was time for new leadership on the board.

"The board now needs a new burst of energy," he said. "I believe that can best be provided by the introduction of a new personality as chairman."

Bruton and the Board of Education have been involved in a number of controversies with the General Assembly in recent years. Most recently, several powerful legislators questioned the board's financial practices and its controller's office.

The board was mired in controversy and deeply divided when Bruton stepped into the job. By law, the governor appoints most board members and recommends a chairman, but allies of Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green in 1977 briefly pushed a bill that would have made the lieutenant governor chairman.

Spangler said he was not familiar with the board's controversies and did not know any of the board members. "I don't have a path laid out I am committed to, nor has the governor."

Spangler said he saw a challenge in directing a state education budget that totals almost $2 billion, and said Hunt referred to his business background in discussing the position. Last year the board's spending estimate proved to be $16 million less than spent, drawing criticism from some key legislators.

Bruton told the board one of his accomplishments was "bringing order from the inter-personal chaos that existed."

Spangler served as treasurer of Luther Hodges Jr.'s unsuccessful 1978 campaign for the Democratic nomination to the U.S. Senate. More recently, he was named by Hunt to head the Task Force on Financing Public School Facilities, a study of how the state should pay for school construction projects. Spangler said he looked forward to the job but was "shocked" when Hunt asked him to take it several days ago.

"It had never occurred to me to be on the state Board of Education," Spangler said in an interview. "I had never thought about it...It's not something I sought, wanted or need."

N.C. Delegation Large Spenders For Offices

By The Associated Press
North Carolina Reps.
Charles Rose and Stephen Neal spent more than their nine counterparts for office expenses the first three months of this year, while U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms spent more than fellow Republican Sen. John East, according to House and Senate records.

And records show items purchased under office expenses by various members of the state's congressional delegation ranged from soda pop to servicing and waxing a car to a book on Reaganomics.

Rose spent $39,685 operating his office between Jan. 1 and March 31, while Neal's office expenses for the same period totaled $32,653.

Those figures do not include the salaries paid to employees in the congressman's Washington and district offices.

Of the 11 North Carolina representatives, Democrat Walter Jones and Republican James Martin were the highest-paid assistants. Both paid their administrative assistants $14,375 during the first quarter of this year.

On the Senate side, Helms spent $414,545 over a longer period of time — Oct. 1, 1981 through March 31, East spent $385,285 over the same period.

Senators are given an allowance each year for office expenses and personnel, depending on the size of their state, population and distance from Washington.

At the time the congressional reports were filed, Helms had 52 staffers and East 51. Some of the employees work in the senators' district office in North Carolina.

Congressmen have discretion over what constitutes an office expense, and their views can and do vary.

Neal, for example, spent $8,948 in government money to print a constituent newsletter. Many other representatives also regularly send newsletters.

Neal also requested and received $4.80 for some soft drinks he bought for constituents visiting his office on Dec. 21, 1981.

Perhaps the most surprising of Neal's expenditures was the $150 he spent for membership dues to the Republican Study Committee.

"I did that just to get their information, to see what they're putting out," he said. "It's another source of information and I've found it to be helpful."

Rep. Ike Andrews, a Cary Democrat, charged taxpayers $53.22 to wax and service a car he leases. In addition, the taxpayers leased a car for Andrews at a cost of $339.59 a month and paid $96.65 in personal property taxes on the vehicle.

Between Oct. 1, 1981 and March 31, East paid the Senate Recording and Photographic Studios $848.90 out of his office expenses for 8-by-10 photos of him with various constituents.

East spent $133.40 at a Washington bookstore last Dec. 16. Among the volumes he bought was a book entitled "Reaganomics."

About 200 Entries For Puzzle Contest

ATHENS, Ohio (AP) — Dinah Adkins' project is lying in thousands of pieces, but she's not concerned — hundreds of people soon will be arriving to help her put it together.

Ms. Adkins is coordinator of the National Jigsaw Puzzle Championships, the first timed puzzle competition to be held in a decade. About 200 people are expected to arrive here for the tournament Aug. 21-22, she said Wednesday.

A letter from a Colorado contestant suggests the competition will be fierce.

"He's been fantasizing for years that jigsaw puzzling will become an Olympic sport," Ms. Adkins said. "We've got a woman coming from Texas that is just a fanatic."

Ms. Adkins said singles and doubles semifinals will be held on the first day, with the first 15 finishers in each category advancing to the finals the following day. The 500- and 1,000-piece puzzles will be identical for each category.

The Hallmark Cards company has designed new puzzles for the contest, but the designs are secret and won't be unveiled until the tournament begins, she said.

"Some people put puzzles together by memorizing the die cuts," Ms. Adkins said.

"They're bagging each one (puzzle) individually and breaking them up by hand" in a Lawrence, Kan., plant, she said. "They're going to be stored down here in the Bank One vault."

First-place winners in each category will win $1,000, with second and third places being awarded $500 and $250, respectively.

The proceeds will be split with the Athens Chamber of Commerce and the Dairy Barn, Southeastern Ohio Cultural Arts Center, Ms. Adkins said. Deadline for registration is Aug. 15.

divided when Bruton stepped into the job. By law, the governor appoints most board members and recommends a chairman, but allies of Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green in 1977 briefly pushed a bill that would have made the lieutenant governor chairman.

Spangler said he was not familiar with the board's controversies and did not know any of the board members. "I don't have a path laid out I am committed to, nor has the governor."

Spangler said he saw a challenge in directing a state education budget that totals almost $2 billion, and said Hunt referred to his business background in discussing the position. Last year the board's spending estimate proved to be $16 million less than spent, drawing criticism from some key legislators.

Bruton told the board one of his accomplishments was "bringing order from the inter-personal chaos that existed."

Spangler served as treasurer of Luther Hodges Jr.'s unsuccessful 1978 campaign for the Democratic nomination to the U.S. Senate. More recently, he was named by Hunt to head the Task Force on Financing Public School Facilities, a study of how the state should pay for school construction projects. Spangler said he looked forward to the job but was "shocked" when Hunt asked him to take it several days ago.

"It had never occurred to me to be on the state Board of Education," Spangler said in an interview. "I had never thought about it...It's not something I sought, wanted or need."

orchestra at the age of 17 and a soloist under the baton of Gustav Mahler and Arturo Toscanini.

Born in Dublin, Victor Herbert had his first big success in New York when Gilmore the Great died and he was asked by the band members to be their new leader. Despite his genius as a composer and his great success in light opera and musical comedy, Herbert never lost his fondness for brass bands. He spent many summers up in the Adirondack Mountains of New York State sitting in with local village bands, who rarely realized they had a world class cellist sawing away at the back of the tiny string section.

Band music probably kept its warm small-town glow because it never quite caught fire in the economics of the entertainment business, despite its great popularity. Sousa sold the rights to "Semper Fidelis" for $35 to a Philadelphia music publisher, who insisted as part of the deal that the march king orchestrate it for piano, band and orchestra.

No one seems to know who Colonel Bogey was, but the famous march was written by a Maj. Fred J. Ricketts, a bandmaster in the British army for 38 years, who wrote another march about himself called "The Mad Major." Among lovers of band music, he won renown under the pseudonym of Kenneth J. Alford.

"Anchors Aweigh" was written for the 1906 Army-Navy football game by Annapolis bandmaster Lt. C.A. Zimmerman and Midshipman A.H. Miles. It was an immediate success. Navy won for the first time in seven years.

"The Caissons Go Rolling Along" was a favorite of bandmaster Sousa, but it did not come from his musical ditty bag. It was composed by Edmund Gruber, a field artilleryman serving in the Philippines in 1908.

The Air Force March, "Off We Go Into the Wild Blue Yonder," used to end with the line, "Nothing can stop the Army Air Corps." Understandably so. The march was the result of a contest sponsored by the then Army Air Corps in 1939, which was won by a civilian, Princeton Professor Robert Crawford.

Lastly, on matters of martial music, the Marine Corps hymn was lifted — or liberated, to use a verb popular with the jarheads — from "Genevieve de Brabant," a now rarely performed opera bouffe by Offenbach. If they had swiped his can-can music instead, the war in the Pacific might have been over in six months.

As George M. Cohan said, "Any tune like Yankee Doodle simply sets me off my noodle," especially on these lovely summer evenings. Grab your fold-up chair and do likewise to add some free fun to our vacation.

territory. Hunt will definitely be the tobacco candidate in 1984, they say.

As for East, his race in 1986 will depend on many things that happen between now and then — including the possible renewal of the eight-cent increase in 1985. But if the issue is successful against Helms, it should work against East, too.

One farmer said Helms' inability to compromise with people in Washington was hurting tobacco. "I think we need strong conservatives and liberals and people in the middle so we get a good mix," he said. "I think we need people like Jesse Helms in the Senate — but we need them from Utah or Nevada or somewhere else, not from North Carolina where they end up hurting tobacco."

Nuclear Freeze Referendum Is Seen For American Public

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — No matter what Congress decides about a nuclear weapons freeze, the American people will have their say, too. One voter in four will be able to express an opinion on the issue at the ballot box this fall.

Referendums are expected to be held in seven states and three big cities on proposals advocating a Soviet-American nuclear moratorium as a first step toward arms reductions.

Together, the populations of those places represent 25 percent of the country and the votes will be one of the largest simultaneous expressions of public opinion the country has ever seen.

The House of Representatives was acting today on a non-binding nuclear freeze resolution. It calls on President Reagan to propose to the Soviet Union that the two superpowers halt the production, testing or deployment of nuclear weapons and the planes and missiles that deliver them.

A close outcome was expected. Freeze advocates hope for a vote this summer in the Senate, too, to force candidates to take a stand on the issue.

The votes will be the first tests of congressional strength of a proposal which demonstrated grass-roots appeal this spring.

According to freeze advocates, 2.3 million signatures were gathered on freeze petitions presented to the United Nations during its disarmament debate in June and more than half a million people marched at a New York City rally.

Reagan opposes a nuclear weapons freeze, arguing it would "undermine our negotiating position...by placing the United States in a dangerous position of disadvantage and removing the incentive for serious negotiation by the Soviets."

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., replying for freeze advocates, said Wednesday, "Enough is enough. The time for a freeze is now, the time for reductions is in the future."

According to the St. Louis-based National Clearinghouse of the Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign, which seeks to coordinate local efforts on behalf of a freeze, referendums have been certified for the Sept. 4 primary election ballot in Wisconsin and for the Nov. 2 general election in California, Rhode Island, Oregon and New Jersey.

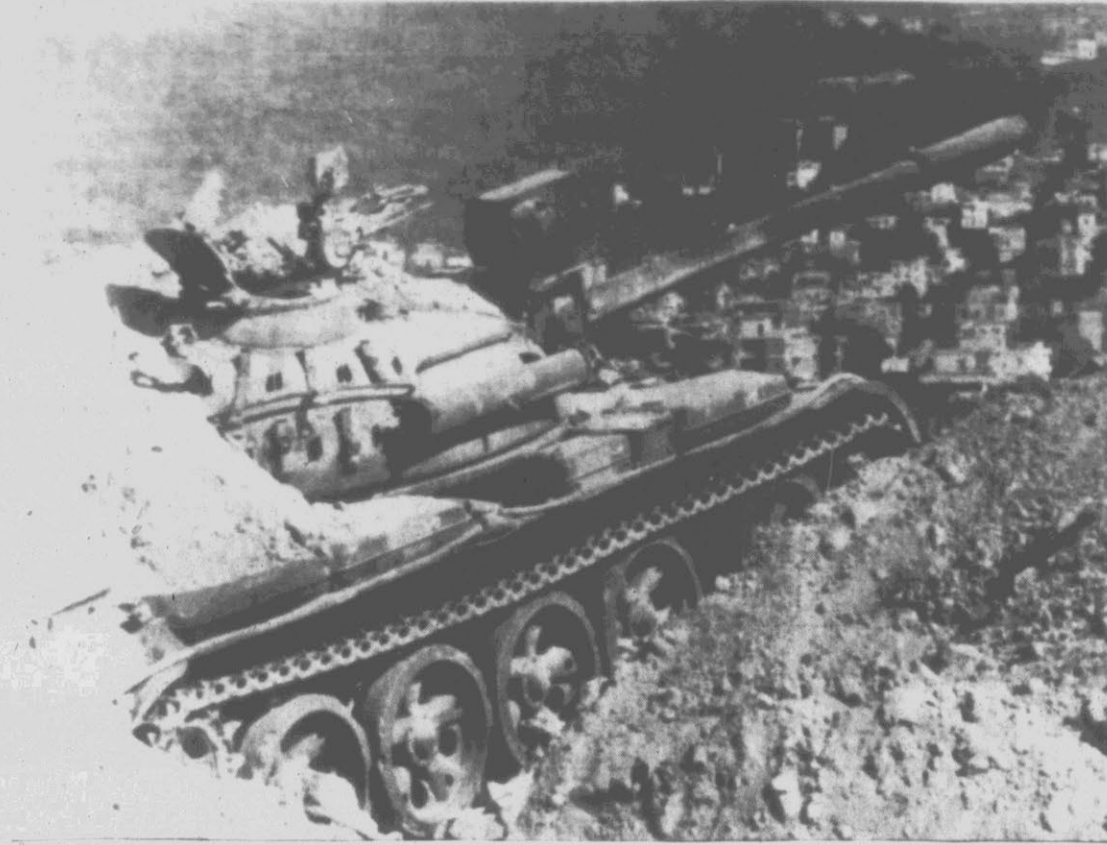

The board of elections in the District of Columbia voted Wednesday to place the issue on the November ballot. Supporters submitted 10,000 more signatures than the 13,500 that were required.

The Nuclear Freeze Clearinghouse said enough signatures also have been gathered to assure a place on the ballot for the issue, in Michigan and Arizona and in Chicago, Philadelphia, Kearney, Neb., New Haven, Conn., Lawrence, Kan., Anchorage, Alaska, Thurston County, Wash., North Star Borough, Alaska and Izard, Stone and Independence Counties, Ark.

In addition, the clearinghouse said, resolutions backing a nuclear weapons freeze have been adopted by the councils of 199 U.S. cities and 43 counties, 444 New England town meetings and the legislatures of Massachusetts, Oregon, Connecticut, Maine, Vermont, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Delaware, Iowa and New York.

Karin Fierke, clearinghouse co-director, said data was not kept on government bodies which rejected or tabled resolutions backing a nuclear freeze, but she said the proposal has been rejected in only a relatively few places.

Beachgoers Caught In A Rain Of Fuel

ENCINITAS, Calif. (AP) — A Marine Corps helicopter pilot, trying to land safely with an engine out, rained aviation fuel over two miles of beaches, stinging the eyes and skin of hundreds of sunbathers, authorities said.

"It sounded like it was raining over the water," said Elizabeth Master, 32, after 1,200 pounds of fuel was dumped Wednesday afternoon.

The Marine Corps said the fuel was jettisoned as the helicopter, carrying a five-man crew of reservists, tried to make an emergency landing after an engine failed on a training mission. The chopper landed safely at nearby Camp Pendleton.

An investigation was ordered, said Capt. Anthony Rothfork at El Toro Marine Air Station.

Lifeguards and fire rescue teams were besieged by complaints of eye and skin irritation. One lifeguard, Jeff Milton, said that from 700 to 1,000 people at Moonlight State Beach were sprayed lightly by the kerosene-like fuel.

"It took a minute for the fumes and smell to reach the beach, and a few people got pretty upset," said Milton. "But they washed it off quickly."

SERVICES

The Rev. Joe Dixon and the choir from Saint John Free Will Baptist Church in Farmville will render services Thursday night at 8 p.m. at Cherry Lane FWB Church.

An estimated 600 beachgoers at Ponto State Beach about two miles farther north were also hit. So were people at Sea Cliff Park Beach.

A young woman telephoned the San Diego Poison Control Center and complained of nausea from fuel-tainted water.

Injections May Miss 'Target'

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer
BOSTON (AP) — A new study says doctors and nurses may be literally missing the mark when they give patients injections in the rear end.

Researchers have found that the standard needles used to give the injections aren't long enough to penetrate a layer of fat surrounding the large muscle called the gluteus, the target for many intramuscular injections.

"We want to make people aware that although they think they are injecting in muscle, they are injecting most often in fat in adults," said Dr. W. Peter Cockshott, who directed the study. Cockshott and other researchers at McMaster University Medical Centre in Hamilton, Ontario, reported in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine that they used CT scans, a kind of X-ray, to measure the depth of fat on the buttocks of 213 adults.

They found the average women between the ages of 30 and 40 has 2.6 inches of fat surrounding the gluteus. Men have slightly less — about 1.5 inches. Yet the needles used for the injections are usually 1.4 inches long.

As a result, they found, the needles actually penetrate the fat and reach muscle in less than 5 percent of women and 15 percent of men.

Cockshott said little is known about how well medicines are absorbed when they are injected into fat.

Sirens, But For The Wrong Fire

ELK, Wash. (AP) — When Ron Landberg's house caught fire, he didn't call the fire department, because he heard sirens in the distance and assumed firefighters were coming his way.

They weren't. Landberg's home in eastern Washington's Spokane County was destroyed by fire Tuesday as District 4 firefighters responded to another fire in Elk, about six miles from his isolated residence.

Landberg told authorities he delayed reporting the 7:22 a.m. fire because he heard sirens and thought fire units were on their way.

By the time the fire was reported and firefighters arrived, the cabin-style home had burned to the ground, said Don Bolin, an investigator with the state fire marshal's office.

Youngsters Are Learning To Be Computer-Literate

By LAWRENCE KILMAN
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Sixty high school students are spending up to 12 hours a day in a cinder block basement, staring at video screens. But they aren't TV addicts or Pac-Man junkies — they're becoming "computer literate." These teens are New York's math and science whiz kids, who are taking an intensive five-week course in a basement classroom at New York University to learn how to program computers. By the end of the session Friday, the students will have learned six computer languages, and will be able to create an air traffic control system, a missile guidance system or a simple video game.

"We try to pick kids without a previous background whatever," said Henry Mullish, a senior research scientist who has run the summer high school computer program for 16 years. "They go back to school, and not only do they teach their fellow classmates, they teach the teachers. "We've reached the point where students know more than teachers, because computers are so attractive to kids," he said. Each spring, more than 300 students compete for the 60 positions in the class. They submit their grades, teachers' recommendations and essays about why they want to learn to program computers. They learn FORTRAN, a scientific computer language; Basic and Pascal, two general purpose languages; SNOBOL, for word text processing; Artspeak, graphic language, and COBOL, business language. Knowledge of the languages allows the students to use computers of various types. For example, knowing COBOL allows them to use business management and planning programs, as well as to create new programs.

"The purpose of the course is to get them completely computer literate," said Mullish, who is assisted by two former students — Ogan Gurel, 18, who will attend Harvard University this fall, and Anna Klein, 19, a computer science student at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y. The students will be exposed to robotics, programming a computer to manipulate the shoulder, elbow and wrist joints of a robot arm. For their final projects, the students were given a list of suggested topics that included writing a simplified air traffic control system, writing a missile guidance system, and writing a program for a computer vs. human game of Tic-Tac-Toe. "Everyone is getting into computers," said Audrey Yee, a 15-year-old from the Bronx High School of Science, who said the course was "fun."

Students who take the course "set themselves up well," Mullish said. "If they have computers at school, they know more about computers than anyone else. Some get jobs in computer stores. Some write programs on a commercial basis."

Robert Wiesenthal, 16, a student at Riverdale Country Day School in the Bronx, already has sold a program for a computerized answering service to a home computer store in New York. Unlike most of his classmates, Wiesenthal has a background in computers, getting his own home system when he was 9. But, he said, "I had a very limited scope in computers. I was limited to two languages. Now I can use different languages or different problems."

Markham Luke, 15, from the Bronx High School of Science, said he hopes the course will "be helpful in my career." He plans to study medicine and biochemistry in college, and his final project for the class is titled "The derivation of amino acid sequence of a colinear polypeptide chain from the base sequence of its mRNA template."

Camp For The Chronically Ill

By MARK DAVIS
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — At first glance, they're just another group of kids out for a week or so in the woods at camp.

youngsters aged 7 to 12 left almost two weeks ago. A second group of campers between 13 and 17 left last Sunday.

And that's exactly what Brandy McDaniel wants. As director of pediatric social work at Duke Medical Center, Mrs. McDaniel is one of the forces behind Camp Kaleidoscope, a special camp that gives chronically ill children a chance to live as other children do.

They go to Camp Graham, located in Vance County and owned by the Pines of Carolina Girl Scout Council. In case an emergency arises, a hospital is just 10 miles away in Henderson.

"If you didn't know these children had serious illnesses, then you wouldn't notice any difference," she said. "They like to run and jump and play just like other children."

The staff at the camp is not the usual camp staff, either, Mrs. McDaniel said. Nurses, doctors and other medical specialists who are familiar with their charges accompany the children to the camp. While the children play, the staff keeps a close eye on them, Mrs. McDaniel said.

But these are special children. Some suffer from cancer, others have sickle-cell anemia. Many have illnesses which could claim their young lives.

The camp program was first tried in late summer of 1980. The first outing was so successful that "we knew we'd have to do it again."

Yet despite their grown-up problems, they're children — with children's wishes to belong, to be part of a crowd. That's what makes the outings at Camp Graham so important, Mrs. McDaniel said.

"They look healthier," she said. Normally weak children seemed to have more vitality and stamina after their trip to camp.

"They really are, on many occasions, taken out of the mainstream," she said. Mrs. McDaniel said special camps exist for children with specific disorders, but camps catering to children with chronic diseases are rare.

This year's excursions may draw the largest groups so far, Mrs. McDaniel said. She said the only problem with the program is the one plaguing other enterprising projects: money.

"We have to go through this every year," she said. "We always have to have a major fund-raising effort to get the money to go."

Hinckley Wants To Pass Up A Hearing

WASHINGTON (AP) — John W. Hinckley Jr. wants to pass up a hearing on whether he should be released from a mental hospital, but a federal judge could force the presidential assailant to appear in court to waive his right to the proceeding.

Despite Hinckley's apparent wish to remain at St. Elizabeths, a federally run facility, only the judge can determine whether Hinckley can be released.

If U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker decides Hinckley must make the request personally on Monday, it would be his first public appearance since a jury found him innocent by reason of insanity on June 21.

If Parker rules Hinckley must remain at the hospital, Hinckley could return every six months to petition the court for freedom.

On Wednesday, Hinckley signed a document that said he had been advised of his right to a hearing to determine whether he is entitled to release from the custody of St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Authority was given to Police Commissioner D.E. Perry to submit an application for the purchase during fiscal year 1982-83 of a new car to be used by the Police Department. Police Chief Jerry Ratley reported that the deadline for the request was Aug. 15 and recommended making the purchase application as a new vehicle is needed.

"I have had an opportunity to consult with my attorneys on this matter, and I have received their advice. After consulting with my attorneys, I made my own decision about whether to exercise my right to such a hearing."

Hemingway reported that he has sent a letter to the secretary of the Department of Transportation, to state Sen. Vernon White and to area representatives asking that consideration be given to improving N.C. 11 between Bethel and Greenville.

"I hereby voluntarily waive my right to that hearing," the document said. Prosecutors are expected to file papers today asking that Hinckley appear so the judge can ask him a series of questions that explain Hinckley's rights to him.

The prosecutors reportedly believe that the written waiver is inadequate and

One Collector Is All Dolled Up

 ALBANY, Ore. (AP) — Little girls no longer bring their broken dolls to Louis Beckner to mend. Beckner has collected and sold dolls for the past 11 years. But he says his eyesight isn't good enough to do any more repair work. And he doesn't have the money for serious collecting, so he is selling his inventory at reduced prices.

Business hasn't been brisk. Most of the dolls that would be considered valuable collectors' items have either already been sold or aren't for sale. But Beckner still has more than 200 dolls, ranging from tiny baby dolls to adult-size mannequins. Every morning he opens for business by rolling up his garage door. Sometimes he puts a display out front to catch the eye of passersby. One recent day it was a life-size mannequin wearing red, white and blue standing with her arm wrapped around the flag pole. Several child-size dolls decked out in bridal gowns stand in a row at the front of the garage. Beckner designed and sewed clothing for many of the dolls he has sold over the years. And it has become almost a neighborhood tradition for little girls to get their picture taken wearing one of the wedding outfits crafted for the life-size dolls. Inside the garage more than 200 other dolls line the walls, greeting visitors with cherubic smiles and unblinking eyes. Every doll has a name, neatly printed on the price tag. Beckner names every doll he acquires, using a book of 3,500 names for reference. One blonde, curly-haired model speaks Japanese when her string is pulled. Another sings a song in German. A little boy doll blows a plastic bubble when his arm is twisted. Little "Baby Thumbs" cries when you pull the pacifier out of her mouth.

It's enough to drive a small child wild, seeing all those dolls within easy reach. That explains the hand-written signs admonishing the browser: "No pay, no play." Beckner, 51, worked at the Bermico Fiber Pipe Products Co. in Corvallis until the business closed in 1975. He got into the doll business by accident. He wanted to sell an old trash-burner to the woman who bought his house, but all she could offer was a box full of dolls.

He accepted the dolls and walked home — and sold half of the dolls on the way. "I decided there was money in the business," he said. He began seriously collecting in 1970. At one time Beckner owned more than 500 dolls, but now he is down to about 225. "I'll never go clear out," he said. "I buy 'em when I've got the money. If I see a pretty one, I feel bad if I don't buy it. If I do buy it, by the time I get home I'm mad as hell."

The people who buy his dolls today are shopping mainly for a toy for their children, but collectors still come by seeking a find. At one time Beckner's home was also a doll hospital. He has a framed certificate in "doll technology" from a Los Angeles correspondence school.

But he no longer repairs dolls. "It's too hard to get good parts these days," he said, adding that his eyesight also isn't good enough.

He does spend a lot of time these days caring for real "dolls" — his grandchildren and his niece.

Tax Bill Offers A Bonus For The Savings Bonds

By JIM LUTHER
 Associated Press Writer
 WASHINGTON (AP) — The big tax-increase bill making its way through Congress contains a bonus for the millions of Americans who own U.S. Savings Bonds.

A Senate-House conference committee agreed Wednesday night to a provision that could result in significantly higher interest earnings on Series EE bonds, whose interest is paid at maturity, and Series HH bonds, which pay interest twice a year. Present law allows the Treasury Department to adjust interest rates on Savings Bonds by 1 percentage point every six months. Series EE bonds now earn 9 percent a year over eight years; Series HH securities yield 8.5 percent a year over 10 years.

The proposed change, which has been endorsed by the Reagan administration, would allow the Treasury to adjust rates periodically to reflect changes in market rates. This would allow Savings Bonds earnings to move more closely in line with more-lucrative investments, but a minimum interest "floor" would be maintained to protect holders of these bonds against major risks.

Treasury's plan would allow issuance of Savings Bonds for 10-year maturities. The yield earned during the first five years would be guaranteed for the full 10 years — no matter what happened to other interest rates during that period.

After the first five years, the rate could rise to as high as 85 percent of the average yields of Treasury's five-year notes, a favorite of investors.

Another major amendment accepted by the conference committee would allow the Internal Revenue Service, when under court order, to share tax information with federal law enforcement officials investigating non-tax criminal cases.

The provision overturns restrictions that were imposed after Watergate-era disclosures that the Nixon administration had made political use of tax return information.

The change has been sought by Sens. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., who contend current law bars the IRS from playing any role in shutting down drug trafficking and other activities of organized crime.

The conferees also accepted a Senate provision eliminating a special incentive for oil companies producing oil from the Sadlerochit reservoir on Alaska's North Slope. The change in the windfall-profits tax will cost the oil industry an estimated $389 million over the next three years.

The panel rejected a Senate farm-state amendment, costing $72 million over the period, that would have allowed a 10-percent investment tax credit for certain expenditures for soil and water conservation.

OH, YOU BEAUTIFUL DOLLS! — Louis Beckner, surrounded by dolls given to him over the years, holds a lifelike baby doll used by hospitals to train nurses. The Albany, Ore., collector at one time owned more than 500 dolls, but now is down to about 225, each of which has a name.

Jobs Training Bill Has Approval From House

By TOM SEPPY
 Associated Press Writer
 WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic-controlled House has voted to replace the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act, which expires Sept. 30, with a bi-partisan multi-million dollar job training program.

Bowing to Republicans, the House brought the measure Wednesday more in line with one passed by the GOP-controlled Senate. Members eliminated specific money figures and stated that at least 70 percent of the funds go for training.

But the House refused to adopt amendments, sought by the Reagan administration, that would have given local business leaders responsibility for drawing up job training plans and would have given states greater authority over program planning and distribution of funds.

If the Senate refuses to accept the House version of the legislation, the bill must go to a conference committee to iron out the differences.

The House passage came on a vote of 356-52 after nearly seven hours of debate and in the wake of a protest march on the White House by steel and auto union workers over the Reagan administration's economic policies and their impact on unemployment.

The original House bill, sponsored by Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., called for an authorization of $5.4 billion, which would have exceeded the administration's 1983 budget for jobs programs by more than $3.5 billion.

Last month, the Senate passed a similar bill which sponsors estimated would cost $3.9 billion.

However, the House accepted an amendment by Rep. James M. Jeffords, R-Vt., which eliminated specific figures and substituted an authorization calling for "such sums as necessary," language which is in the Senate version.

Rep. Carl D. Perkins, D-Ky., chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, successfully sought to provide $650 million for the Job Corps, which also is included in the Senate bill.

The budget resolution in force for fiscal year 1983 limits the appropriation for job training to about $3 billion, so the Congressional appropriations committee could not exceed that figure.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Tex., objected when Hawkins, the bill's floor manager, accepted the Jeffords' amendment to eliminate specific figures.

But Hawkins said, "We're not conceding what we have. We're trying to get what we can. A lot of members will not support a bill authorizing $5.4 billion."

Has Permission To Scare Geese

PORTAGE, Mich. (AP) — Dr. Kurt von Maur took a gander at his front lawn, and finding it had been overrun by 150 to 200 wild Canadian geese, reached for his gun.

But he didn't want to kill the geese — he just wanted to fire blanks to scare them away from his home in southwestern Michigan.

First, however, he had to ask the Portage City Council for an exception to an ordinance that makes it illegal to discharge a gun.

"This may be comical, but I now have 150 to 200 wild geese in my front yard and it's getting out of hand," he pleaded.

The council agreed Tuesday. So after von Maur gets a permit from the Michigan Department of Natural Resources, he can try to frighten off the geese, which he says are harassing his children and damaging his property and lake dock with excrement.

More Canadian geese are concentrating in southern Michigan lakes since hunting has been curtailed in the area, he said.

Volcanic Cloud Has 'Expanded' Future Crop

WASHINGTON (AP) — The dust cloud from the Mexican volcano El Chichon has expanded and may be limit sunlight reaching Earth, government scientists report.

The cloud grew larger and denser from May to June, according to satellite measurements by the National Earth Satellite Service.

Dr. Lester Machta of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's air resources division said Wednesday that the cloud appears to have sharply reduced the sunlight reaching measuring devices at Mauna Loa, Hawaii.

Similar sunlight reductions resulting from the cloud have been reported by Canadian meteorologists, he said.

Theoretically, he said, a reduction in sunlight should lead to lower temperatures, but so far, there doesn't seem to have been any dramatic effect, Machta said.

The volcano erupted in April and the dust cloud now extends in a band around the world.

Bananas Not Future Crop

CLINTON, N.C. (AP) — Despite the banana's growing appeal in North Carolina, agriculture officials say the golden fruit is unlikely to outstrip tobacco as a cash crop.

Marion and Gladys Jordan are among a small bunch of Sampson County banana growers whose hothouses are bearing fruit. But Agricultural Extension Agent Tommy Glover said the project is more for fun than profit.

"It's just a personal fantasy, a whim, so to speak," Glover said. "It's the choice of someone who wants to try something different."

Bananas probably will never be grown commercially in North Carolina because it's not hot or humid enough, Glover said.

"We do have a few days conducive to growing bananas, but not enough days," he said.

Jordan said the trees readily produce fruit as long as they're inside the artificial environment.

"It takes about 15 to 18 months for one to bear if they're kept in a hothouse," Jordan said. He already has gotten one crop of bananas off his trees and says they taste good.

Sale-Leaseback A Funds Source

MIAMI (AP) — Sale-leasebacks are fast becoming a new source of funds for more and more firms.

According to Jay M. Messer, chairman of American Property Fund, a Miami-based real-estate investment firm specializing in sale leasebacks, they are running more than 100 percent over last year's level.

"As soaring interest costs make it harder to raise cash through conventional methods, many companies are selling off part of their real-estate and then renting it back from the purchaser," says Messer.

Messer says this provides cash for expansion of operations at a cost as much as 24 percentage points below the going rate for regular financing.

Store Owner Cancels Debts In Effort To Regain Customers

By ELIZABETH NOYES
Associated Press Writer

DOVER, N.H. (AP) — A variety store owner who was losing patrons because they owed him money has called off thousands of dollars in debts to get back his customers.

Ernest T.J. Peters, owner of E.J.'s Variety Store, took out an advertisement in Foster's Democrat, a Dover newspaper, canceling debts owed him by about 1,200 customers who charged goods at his store.

"To our charge customers," the small ad began. "Your bill is paid in full. Start fresh with us. We will help you through the tough times. Come back and become a customer again. Thanks, E.J.'s."

"It's a way of saying 'thank you' for their past business and telling them that I want them to come back," Peters said. He explained business has dropped off and he believes people who owe him money are steering clear of his store.

"The whole world is in debt," he said. "The country's deficit is so many billion dollars. So I think, what's a way I can get my little business going again? Just say, OK, you don't owe me anything."

Peters, a stocky cigar smoker, says he doesn't want to spend time and money on collecting bills.

He regularly takes out advertising in the paper, but the debt-clearing ad ran only once, he said.

Besides, he confessed, "I don't know all their addresses. Sometimes I just know a first name and I don't know where they live. I don't need to know those things. I'm not a detail guy."

He also doesn't know the exact amount of the debt. But in the past few years it's grown to between $5,000 and $10,000, he said.

"Customers would tell me how they were out of work. I guess I'm susceptible to that kind of stuff," said Peters, 46, who has lived in Dover, a city of about 22,000 people, all his life.

"I would get to be friends with people. They would say they were broke. They'd tell me about their babies ... lots of stories. And people would charge, charge, charge, charge."

About a year and a half ago, Peters hurt his knee while dancing. "When I was hospitalized, that's when things really got out of hand," he said. "Everyone was charging because they had my OK."

He's still letting customers charge, only now he's more careful.

Peters, who has owned the store for six years, said he isn't bitter and has promised not to mention the debt if customers return.

"I wish the whole country would straighten out," he said. "I'm no economist, but I believe business people are overcharging the public."

"I'm not mad or upset at anybody. These are tough times. I really believe that's why they haven't paid me back. I believe in people. I trust them."

Landmark Birmingham Church Is Embroiled In Feud Over Pastor

By BRIAN O'SHEA
Associated Press Writer

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — The Sixteenth Street Baptist Church, a bloody landmark in the struggle for civil rights in the South, is caught in a leadership fight between a dissident pastor and church deacons that has gone from the pulpit to circuit court.

The church, site of a 1963 bombing that killed four young girls during the height of racial unrest in Birmingham, is split over whether the Rev. James T. Crutcher was legally fired in May after 14 years as pastor.

Crutcher and his supporters claim the meeting called by several church deacons to oust him violated the church constitution. James Finch, deacon chairman, and other deacons say Crutcher is no longer pastor.

The dispute centers on the content of Crutcher's sermons and his failure to cooperate with other church leaders, says 88-year-old Rachel Ellis Bishop, the oldest person in the 550-member, all-black congregation.

"His pulpit ethic is deplorable," she said.

Crutcher told the congregation repeatedly it was too materialistic and then solicited funds from area businesses for the church, she added.

"They (the deacons) didn't like it and asked him not to do it," Mrs. Bishop said. "We don't beg at the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church."

The church took Crutcher to court and Circuit Judge William A. Thompson issued a temporary restraining order forbidding the pastor and 12 other supporters from trespassing on church property or interfering with services.

The order was issued last week on a sworn complaint that stated Crutcher had been properly discharged but continued to attend services and intimidate visiting pastors, said Donald Newsom, the church's attorney.

A hearing to decide if the restraining order should be converted to a preliminary injunction is pending.

Crutcher says the battle is a philosophical one. He said he has tried to lead church members to find their mission, which he said includes feeding the poor and healing the sick.

"I expect people to want to find easier ways to get things done," he said. "I see the church as the body of Christ, and the body of Christ must minister to a world that is in need of salvation."

Crutcher, who has served as pastor since coming to Birmingham 14 years ago, said church leaders have come to him over the past several years and complained.

"They didn't like some of the things I said in my sermons. I listened to them, but that was all I could do because I could see none of them was called to preach," he said. "I preach in the only way I know how. They said I said a lot about being too involved in materialism...the sin of materialism."

The deacons called a May 19 meeting at which the 49-year-old Crutcher was fired by a vote of 92-5.

Newsom said the pastor was given three months' severance pay and 60 days to vacate the parsonage.

After the restraining order was issued last week, church services for July 25 were canceled and the church locked. Finch told reporters he took the action to avoid a confrontation with Crutcher. The week before, Crutcher held a service on the church steps.

On July 25, the fired pastor and a group of 75 supporters held an outdoor service across the street in Kelly Ingram Park, the site of many civil rights demonstrations during the 1960s.

During the service, he spoke of the church's current struggles.

"While this situation may get worse before it gets better, that is not important. What's important is that we're following our father.

"The church ain't in no building. The church is in the hearts of people who believe in God," he said.

Crutcher has not hired an attorney, saying he is trusting in God and in the truth to see him through. "The best I can say is that I trust God...I have no qualms about whatever his will is. I will follow that will, wherever it will lead me."

Newsom said the struggle is a challenge to the authority of the deacons and the church members. "It is my contention that he was duly and constitutionally discharged at the meeting on May 19," Newsom said.

If the firing is allowed to stand, Crutcher says he will leave.

"If they feel I ought to go, I want to go. If they cannot sustain me in the right, I don't want to stay where it is wrong."

The church, a red-brick structure fronted by two square towers, was established in the late 1800s and has always been an important religious and community meeting place for blacks. It was in the church's outside stairwell that a dynamite bomb exploded Sept. 15, 1963, killing four girls. More than 18 other people were injured.

Robert Edward Chambliss, a former Ku Klux Klansman, is serving a life sentence for the death of one of the four girls.

Repaid $800 In Jobless Benefits

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — State officials would like to find the young man who repaid $800 in unemployment benefits now that he has a job, saying he was grateful for the help while he was out of work.

On July 26 the man entered the unemployment office here, "threw down an American Express money order and said, 'You can put this back in the fund,'" said Chuck Tanner of the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation.

A bureau supervisor, Bobbie Thomson, said she tried to give the money order back, but he told her, "You folks helped me when I was desperate and in need, and now, in appreciation, I want to pay back what I received."

Tanner said the young man, in his 20s, would not give his name.

Landfill Said Still Best Way To Handle PCB Spill

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) —
Despite advances in treating toxic chemicals, a landfill is the best way to deal with PCBs spilled along North Carolina highways in 1978.

Environmental Protection Agency officials say.
High-temperature burning has proven 99.99 percent effective in destroying polychlorinated-biphenyls, and portable incinerators have been devised, said Dick Stern of the EPA's health laboratories in Research Triangle Park. However, they can't be used for the PCB-laced oil dumped along 210 miles of roadways.

Opponents of a plan to ship contaminated soil to a Warren County landfill have suggested that the state should wait until technology evolves to treat PCBs where they are. But EPA officials said no such technology was in sight.

"We have nothing currently that would enable us to deal with that and probably nothing in the foreseeable future," said Bob Lewis, a chemist at the health labs.
"Technically, it may be possible to incinerate soil and destroy the PCBs," he added. "But because of the bulk of the material involved, we estimate it would take seven years to incinerate all the soil contaminated in the spill."

John E. Brugger of the EPA's Municipal Environmental Research Laboratory in Edison, N.J., said even the most advanced techniques would consume five years and up to $15 million to incinerate the PCBs.
His comments came in an affidavit filed in response to a lawsuit by Warren County residents opposing the landfill and the EPA's approval of the site. A District Court judge ruled Wednesday that the EPA was no longer involved in the suit by the Warren County NAACP and 14 county residents. But other claims lodged by the suit are still pending, said Ruth Bell, an attorney for the EPA in Washington.

The mobile incineration system, not yet approved by EPA for general use, would have to operate 24 hours a day to detoxify the 40,000 cubic yards of soil in five years, Brugger said. The system requires one engineer and two technicians at all times, with a senior engineer on call in case of trouble.
Brugger said in the affidavit that equipment malfunctions would put the incinerator out of operation approximately 25 percent of the time.
Final testing of the system is expected to begin in September, but the results will not be known until 75 days after the conclusion of tests, Brugger said.

Lewis said there was little to fear from the landfill because it was well-built and because the PCBs to be housed there were relatively harmless.
The first evidence of PCB toxicity came in 1968, when 2,000 people in Japan ingested the chemical, Lewis said. Although there was an increase in the incidence of stillbirths and birth defects, they have not been directly linked to PCBs, he added.
There is some evidence that dioxin, rather than PCBs, may be responsible for the toxicity.
One study showed cancer of the liver in laboratory rats fed PCBs, Lewis said, but more recent studies failed to reproduce the study.
"One possible explanation is that it wasn't PCBs themselves, but contaminants contained therein. And the contaminant is the first cousin of dioxin," he said.
High levels of dioxin are found in PCBs imported from other countries, and were found in the oil implicated in the Japanese poisoning case, Lewis said.

"We did not find high levels of these in the North Carolina spill," he said. "We found only about 40 parts per billion."
Dioxin is the most toxic substance known to man. Just 30 micrograms per kilogram of body weight would be enough to kill 50 percent of those who received it, Lewis said. Rat poison is 15 times less toxic, he added.

Files Suit For 'Harrassment'

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — A Williamson woman who alleges that her complaints about sexual harassment by her former office manager were ignored has filed a $1.5 million damage suit in U.S. District Court against the man and the company for which they worked, officials said.

A complaint filed by lawyers representing Rita Gail Sammons contends that Ms. Sammons, while working as a claims secretary in Gay & Taylor Inc.'s Williamson office, was "subjected to sexual harassment and constant insulting remarks and multiple obscene and vulgar actions" by Larry Hardy, her former office manager.

Named as defendants in the suit were Hardy, Gay & Taylor, an insurance adjustment company based in Winston-Salem, N.C., and Equifax Inc., an international concern that owns Gay & Taylor.

Charleston lawyer Stephen P. Meyer, who is representing Ms. Sammons, said Wednesday that the suit was filed after the failure of the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to mediate a settlement between Ms. Sammons and Gay & Taylor.

Ms. Sammons said in the document that she complained to Hardy's supervisors about the allegations listed in the suit, but that no action was taken against him.

The civil suit seeks $1 million in compensatory damages for lost wages and $500,000 in punitive damages.

Ms. Sammons alleges she suffered "severe emotional stress and nervous and physical manifestations."

Bill Brown, president of Gay & Taylor, said Wednesday in a telephone interview from his Winston-Salem office that he was aware of Ms. Sammons' complaints, but was not familiar with specific points in the suit. He said it would be inappropriate for him to comment on the litigation.

Hardy, who resigned from Gay & Taylor in February, could not be reached for comment.

The suit, in part, accuses Hardy of:
— Talking to Ms. Sammons about sex and sexual activities.

— Unzipping his pants in front of her.
— Pulling out and showing his underwear in the office.

— Displaying pornographic magazines in the office.

— Telling Ms. Sammons she could make money by being a prostitute.

Ms. Sammons contends she was dismissed July 20, 1981, after Hardy heard she had complained to the state Human Rights Commission of alleged sexual harassment.

On the date of her firing, the complaint said, Ms. Sammons filed charges of sex discrimination and harassment with the federal EEOC against the defendants.

Links Explosions And Killings To N.C. Gangs

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State Attorney General Rufus Edmisten says a fatal shooting and the wounding of two others in Winston-Salem earlier this week and two recent explosions are linked to rivalries between motorcycle gangs.

Edmisten said the unidentified man who killed Doyle Rogers McMichael and wounded two other men at a Winston-Salem motorcycle shop Tuesday night was "gunning for someone else."

He said the assailant wanted in connection with the shootings — who is still at large — may have been a member of the Pagans motorcycle gang trying to attack members of the rival Hell's Angels gang.

"Motorcycle gang members were not even in there," he said. "Our information is that they were coming to shoot a particular gang member."

The shooting was related to an explosion Sunday night at Cook's Artificial Limbs and Braces Co. in Winston-Salem, Edmisten said.

The owner of the business, Joe C. Smith, is currently an associate member of the Hell's Angels, he said.

A related bombing June 28 damaged the home of Pagans regional leader Michael Grayson, Edmisten said.

"They (the shootings and two explosions) are all related to known motorcycle gang hangouts and people who are prone to violence," Edmisten said.

But Edmisten and Gary Griffith, supervisor of special operations for the state Bureau of Investigations, both declined to say who they thought was responsible for the explosion. Police say there was no bomb, but that they suspect arson in the explosion.

There were no injuries in either explosion. But the shooting at Crossroads Cycle Shop Tuesday night that killed McMichael left Keith M. Wilson, 31, of Lewisville in critical condition Wednesday afternoon at North Carolina Baptist Hospital.

Phillip Wagoner, 28, of Winston-Salem was in stable condition at Forsyth Memorial Hospital.

"A small number of hoodlums commits a lot of eye-catching crimes," Edmisten said. "They lead the public to believe that there are massive hordes of gang members out there raping and murdering."

In fact, Edmisten said, the number of known motorcycle gang members in North Carolina is only 30 to 50.

The Hell's Angels, the Outlaws and the Pagans are involved in fierce intergang rivalries and occasional power struggles within each gang, he said.

Edmisten said he will ask the Legislature next year to enact a package of measures designed to curb the gangs. The proposals include an investigative crime commission with subpoena power and stronger laws on crowd control, stolen vehicles and parts and public display of weapons.

Kidnapped And Slain

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Asheville police have charged a Haywood County man with murder, kidnapping and auto theft after authorities discovered the body of car salesman Terry Sellers early today.

Det. Lt. Will Annarino said Franklin Edward Corley, 19, is being held in the Buncombe County jail after Corley led authorities to Sellers' body about 3 a.m. today.

Corley was taken into custody Wednesday night in connection with Sellers' disappearance. Police had been searching for Sellers since he was reported missing by his wife late Tuesday night.

Annarino said Sellers' body was found under some leaves in the Pisgah National Forest. He said Sellers had been shot in the head with a handgun.

Authorities had little hope of finding Sellers alive after the blood-stained orange Corvette he was last seen in was discovered on a farm Wednesday.

Authorities had been searching for Sellers after his wife, Debbie, reported her husband's disappearance about 1 a.m. Wednesday.

Annarino said Sellers was last seen at David's Autohouse, where he worked, after Sellers had left for a test drive of an orange Corvette with a young man.

Sellers' co-workers said he had apparently had gone on test drives with the man before, Annarino said.

The incident happened only one day after another car salesman had reported to police on Monday that a man had tried to abduct him while going on a test drive, but that salesman escaped after pulling the keys out of the ignition, surprising the man, who ran away.

Sellers' co-workers had said Sellers and the other car salesman had been talking Tuesday morning about what they would do if they were caught in a kidnapping type situation such as the one reported Monday, said David Young, manager of David's Autohouse.

Quintuplets Are Given A Good Chance To Live

PARK RIDGE, Ill. (AP) — Doctors say they're optimistic about the health of quintuplets born to a woman who had been taking fertility drugs, although the infants were listed in critical but stable condition today.

All of the infants — four girls and a boy, born Wednesday — were being fed intravenously and three were receiving oxygen Wednesday night, as doctors had ordered, said Carol Knutson, a nursing supervisor at Lutheran General Hospital.

Dr. Ragbir Benawra, a specialist in newborn children, said it appeared "as if all of them are going to survive." The chief worry in the next few days is that the infants might develop respiratory problems because they were delivered before their lungs were fully developed, he said.

The five are likely to stay in the hospital for "two or three months," Benawra said.

The mother, Amy Chikaraishi, 31, had been taking the fertility drug Pergonal and had been hospitalized for eight weeks in anticipation of a multiple birth. She is listed in good condition.

Hospital spokeswoman Cathy Barry-Ipema said the babies were about two months premature. She said they ranged in weight from 1 pound, 8 ounces, to 2 pounds, 14 ounces.

Ms. Barry-Ipema said the boy was named Ben Jared, while the girls were named Julie Natsue, Kristi Aiko, Kari Chiyoko and Jami Fumiko.

The father, James Chikaraishi, 32, an optometrist, was present for the births just after 8 a.m. Wednesday, doctors said.

"We're holding off on any comment right now because we want to make sure the babies are OK," Chikaraishi said by telephone Wednesday night. "I don't want to say anything until I'm sure." But he gave one word to describe his feelings: "Happy."

Dr. Arnold Berman, an obstetrician who headed a team of four doctors in the delivery room, said the mother was conscious during delivery.

He said doctors and hospital workers shared in the euphoria. "It's once in a lifetime for us," Berman said.

The Chikaraishis already have an 18-month-old daughter, Erin.

Spokeswomen for both the National Center for Health Statistics and the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology said they no longer keep separate statistics on births of quintuplets, grouping them instead among multiple births of three or more.

But a spokeswoman at the obstetrics college said a study published in "Contemporary Obstetrics and Gynecology" in 1975 set the odds of quintuplets at one in 41 million births.

Berman said doctors had suspected Mrs. Chikaraishi would give birth to quintuplets since about two months after she conceived. The existence of five fetuses was confirmed with an ultrasound scan, which uses sound waves to outline the contents of the womb, he said.

Mrs. Chikaraishi had been taking Pergonal for "a couple of months" before she conceived, said Dr. Howard Topel, another member of the delivery team. About 15 percent of the women who take Pergonal have multiple births, he said.

Retail Sales Flat

NEW YORK (AP) — Several large retailers, including Sears, Roebuck and Co., reported today that sales were sluggish in July, when analysts had hoped business would be better because of cuts in federal income taxes and increases in Social Security payments.

Sears, the largest general-merchandise retailer, said July sales inched up 0.8 percent. K mart Corp. sales rose a modest 4.4 percent compared to July 1981, barely keeping pace with inflation in the retail industry. F.W. Woolworth Co. sales tumbled 0.5 percent.

Sears sales for the four-week July period rose to $1.498 billion from $1.486 billion. For the year so far, Sears sales are up 1.8 percent to $9.3 billion from $9.16 billion.

Edward R. Telling, chairman and chief executive of Chicago-based Sears, said sales continued to reflect cautious consumer buying because of the recession.

K mart chairman Bernard M. Fauber said despite his company's modest sales gain in July he was pleased because it followed a 1.2 percent sales decline in June.

"We are generally encouraged by K mart's July sales increase because it compared with a 21.5 percent rise for July 1981," when there was a boom in retail sales, Fauber also said in a release from K mart headquarters in Troy, Mich.

New 'Fallout' After Radiation-Killing Reversal

By MICHAEL WHITE
Associated Press Writer
SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — An attorney says he will seek $100 million for Utah ranchers who claim their sheep were killed by radiation in 1953, after a court ruling that the government was "intentionally false or deceptive" in the original trial.

he heard — in which ranchers claimed that fallout from nuclear explosions at the Nevada Test Site killed 4,390 sheep. He ordered the case reopened.

"It appears by clear and convincing evidence, much of it documented, that representations made as the result of the conduct of government agents acting in the course of their employment were intentionally false or deceptive," Christensen wrote.

Attorney Dan Bushnell, who represents the sheepmen, said federal attorneys have given no sign they will try to settle out of court.

"Normally in a situation like this you say a settlement is always possible, but with the government, I wouldn't even say it's possible," said Bushnell. "They just haven't reacted as normal people would with the information."

Bushnell said the ranchers have the option of seeking a settlement or requesting a retrial of the 1956 suit. He said he will seek $100 million in punitive damages barring offers to settle by Aug. 24, when Christensen has scheduled a settlement hearing.

Should the lawsuit go to trial, Bushnell said, the ranchers' case will be much stronger because evidence concealed by the government would become available.

Ken Clark of Cedar City, Utah, one of the plaintiffs, said, "I have a little more faith in the judicial system now."

U.S. Attorney Brent D. Ward said the government was disappointed in the ruling, but declined further comment.

Christensen said in his 60-page ruling that the government had pressured witnesses into giving false evidence. But the judge said he found "no broad ulterior conspiracy ... nor any other ultimate purpose than to advance the perceived interests of the United States in the unimpeded testing of nuclear weapons."

Christensen wrote that he may have been too trusting of government officials during the original trial.

He noted that in the first trial, ranchers were unable to support their claim that fallout was heavy enough to kill sheep. During the latest four-day trial in May, the ranchers claimed the government concealed the fact that two veterinarians who studied the sheep deaths had concluded that radiation contributed to the deaths.

Scheduled for trial Sept. 13 is a $2 billion lawsuit in which the plaintiffs claim fallout caused leukemia and other diseases in people downwind from the open-air blasts, which ended in 1962.

About 1,000 people in Utah, Arizona and Nevada have filed claims alleging radiation caused deaths and illnesses.

nesses. One of their attorneys, former Interior Secretary Stewart Udall, said Christensen's decision should have far-reaching effects, because "the same people who were carrying out the cover-up on the sheep were doing the same thing where the people were concerned."

Artificial Lung Testing Planned

By STEVE ELLWANGER
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Researchers at Brown University are preparing to implant an artificial lung in a sheep, a crucial step toward a self-contained replacement organ for human beings.

The researchers' ultimate goal is a substitute or "booster" lung that would supplement a weak or diseased organ, offering a better life for people with chronic breathing problems.

The experiment at the school's Bio-Medical Center will take place in September or October. Dr. Pierre Galetti, vice president of the school's biology and medicine program and a pioneer in the field of replacement organs, said in an interview Wednesday.

"The problems we are facing are probably all the problems with the artificial heart, plus some," Galetti said. Regardless of how the sheep fares, a self-contained artificial lung for human beings is at least 10 years away, he added.

Eventually, Galetti said, he hopes to implant an artificial lung in a sheep and then see if the animal can return to a normal life.

But for now, he said, neither long-term survival of the sheep nor rejection of the artificial lung will be a major concern, and he does not expect the animal in the first operation to leave the operating table.

Galetti said he is more interested in successfully implanting a softball-sized patchwork of micro-porous Teflon sponge in the chest and grafting it to the artery and vein that were attached to the original lung.

He says he wants to see if the coiled Teflon tubing can perform the function of a lung — cleaning molecules of carbon dioxide out of the blood and putting in oxygen, which is carried to the rest of the body.

"We want to prove that we can exchange oxygen and carbon dioxide with blood in a device in the natural position of the lung and which is pumped only through the action of the heart," the 55-year-old Swiss physiologist said.

"Rejection by the body is measured in terms of days, weeks and months. We're only concerned with monitoring the sheep to measure how much oxygen transfer capacity we can get," he said.

One of several problems is what to do with fluids that collect in the lungs. In a real lung, the fluids are expelled by fibers known as cilia, but those cannot be duplicated in an artificial organ, Galetti said. "Initially, we'll deal with it as any surgeon would do ... with a drainage tube," he said.

There is also the problem of attaching the device to the pulmonary artery and pulmonary vein — the blood vessels that connect the lungs to the heart — so the heart can provide pumping power.

Innocent Plea By Three Japanese To Conspiracy

Francisco yesterday. Arai and two former Mitsui employees pleaded innocent to charges of conspiracy to defraud the U.S. government. (AP Laserphoto)

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Three Japanese businessmen have pleaded innocent to steel-dumping conspiracy, and the attorney for one says the government seized 800 documents from Mitsui and Co. (USA) without a search warrant.

An employee and two former executives of Mitsui's wholly owned American subsidiary entered the innocent pleas Wednesday at arraignment in U.S. District Court on charges of conspiracy and making false statements.

Attorney James Brosnahan, representing Takeo Teraoka, said he would file a motion to suppress evidence in the case, centering on the 800 documents, which he said were seized illegally.

Mitsui itself pleaded guilty to the charges two weeks ago and paid more than $11 million in civil penalties and criminal fines — the largest civil-criminal settlement in the history of the U.S. Customs Service.

In indictments issued July 20, the government contended that Mitsui and its employees lied about the price of cheap steel imported into the United States in order to avoid duties which the government imposes on below-market-price imported steel.

Katsumi Arai, a current Mitsui employee in the company's Tokyo steel and wire products division, pleaded innocent to 11 counts of making false statements and one count of conspiracy to defraud the United States.

Tsunoo Namiki, a former officer of Mitsui's American subsidiary, and Teraoka, a former deputy head of company steel operations in San Francisco, pleaded innocent to 21 counts of making false statements and one count of conspiring to defraud the U.S. government.

Each defendant was ordered to post a $40,000 bond but not prevented from traveling to and from Japan.

Venezuela Economy Sees Big Setback Due Oil Glut

By DAVID BROWNE
Associated Press Writer
CARACAS, Venezuela
(AP) — The world oil glut is lashing Venezuela's once-healthy economy:

—Talk of devaluating the oil-producing nation's currency, the bolivar, currently 4.28 to the U.S. dollar, is rife both on the street and in financial circles.

—The nation's annual growth rate has fallen from 8.4 percent in 1976, when oil prices were strong, to 1 percent now.

—Central Bank reserves have dropped from $8.6 billion at the beginning of this year to $6.3 billion as of July 16.

—“The country is going through a fiscal crisis and nobody doubts the gravity of the economic situation,” said Haydee Castillo, vice president of the House of Representatives and a member of the governing Christian Democrat (Copei) Party, in a recent newspaper interview.

Commented Rodger Farrell, official spokesman for the Venezuelan-American Chamber of Commerce: “Something has got to happen soon. The government is going to have to cut back on projects, spending and trim the state bureaucracy.”

Falling oil revenues led President Luis Herrera Campins to slash almost $2 billion off the government's projected $20.2 billion 1982 budget in April this year.

Herrera's ax fell mostly on the public sector and he increased the price of gasoline at the pump, doubling the cost of middle octane fuel from the equivalent of 13 to 25 cents a gallon and tripling the cost of high octane from 31 to 88 cents a gallon.

Nevertheless, according to official statistics, the country still faces a budget breach of $3.7 billion this year.

“The government will be forced to adopt even more fiscal austerity measures soon,” said an economist with one international bank here in Caracas.

“State spending will almost certainly have to be reduced further. Taxes on cigarettes, liquor and imports will also probably be raised,” said the economist, who asked not to be named.

According to Castillo, a million Venezuelans, out of a population of 14.5 million, are on the state payroll — which swallows up two-thirds of this nation's income.

A national newspaper said recently it uncovered widespread corruption in the Ministry of Education, claiming to have found that pay checks were going out to “700 dead employees.”

Herrera's administration had estimated Venezuela would earn $18.5 billion in 1982 from oil exports. This figure was scaled down, however, to $13 billion in February because of the oil glut.

A month later, at the meeting of the Organization of The Petroleum Exporting Countries in Vienna, Austria, Venezuela successfully moved a proposal that the oil cartel's members should impose a production quota of 17.5 million barrels a day in a bid to dry up the glut and shore up falling prices.

This seemed to be paying off until June when OPEC members, particularly Libya, Iran and Nigeria, broke ranks and jettisoned the quota agreement.

Despite arguing strongly for a retention of production control, Venezuela responded by raising its petroleum output from 1.5 million barrels a day to 1.9 million barrels a day.

“If Venezuela can hold oil production to around this level for the rest of the year the economic burdens facing the country may lighten, but in a world awash in petroleum it is a big if,” said one financial analyst here.

Meanwhile, devaluation speculation has become a political hot potato as the nation gears up for presidential and general elections in December, 1983.

President Herrera attempted last week to scotch rumors of a devaluation.

“The bolivar is essentially a strong currency and it will continue to be strong and stable,” he said.

VIPs Manicure Kansas City Parks

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas City is putting VIPs to work manicuring its 168 parks and sprucing up the broad boulevards that are the city's hallmark.

The VIPs are not visiting ambassadors but volunteers in Parks responding to cutbacks in government funding for parks maintenance. More than 200 Kansas City residents signed on as VIPs in the initial week of the program, believed to be the first of its kind in the nation.

“The loss of federal support for park maintenance will be translated into dandelions and peeling paint unless we can muster an army of volunteers,” says Jerry John, the park superintendent who invented the program. “The initial response to our VIP recruitment shows Kansas Citizens share a personal interest in maintaining the beauty of their parks and boulevards.”

The volunteers are “paid” for their time with free passes to such attractions as the Kansas City Zoo, the city's stables, and its public golf courses. Other prizes are being donated by four corporate sponsors.

The park superintendent said the VIPs range from youth groups earning badges for civic projects to retired persons lured by golf course passes.

“We've also got a number of professional people in their 30s and 40s who say they're willing to give a couple of hours on Saturdays,” John said.

The VIP program will be a year-round effort, freeing trained park crews from menial but necessary tasks and allowing the crews to spend more time using machinery and power tools.

Based on a $3.35 minimum wage, John figures the volunteers saved the city $700 to $800 an hour during the first weekend of operation.

Canada Economy Making U.S. Look Very Good

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

TORONTO (AP) — Canada is suffering a combination of economic ailments this summer that makes the economy of the United States look pink-cheeked and healthy.

Unemployment has hit a post-war peak at 10.9 percent, compared to 9.5 percent in the United States. Inflation is refusing to follow the American example and crumble under the weight of the recession.

And interest rates are so high that some major corporations — notably Dome Petroleum — are having trouble making payments on bank loans that financed acquisitions and expansions.

In Calgary, where the once-booming oil exploration business has gone bust, real estate developer Len Wong has shelved plans for an exclusive Millionaire's Club.

"All the millionaires are broke," Wong said.

The Canadian consumer has lost confidence.

The Conference Board of Canada's monthly index of consumer confidence in June was at its lowest level ever. One of the findings the business research group used to compile the index was that only 8 percent of the consumers and businessmen questioned in a survey believed the economy will improve in the next six months.

The consumers' lack of confidence isn't surprising:

—On a single day last month — dubbed Black Thursday by the Toronto Star — six companies announced a total of 6,000 layoffs in Ontario. Since August 1981, 382,000 jobs have been lost nationwide.

—The consumer price index in July was 11.2 percent higher than in the same month last year. U.S. inflation was 7.1 percent for the 12 months ending in June, according to the White House.

—The Canadian prime rate has been fluctuating with the U.S. prime rate but usually a point or more higher. The U.S. rate dropped this week to 15 percent, a 21-month low.

—Although it has rebounded recently to about 80 cents U.S., the Canadian dollar plummeted to 76.8 cents on June 28, a record low, in what critics said was an international vote of no-confidence in the economic policies of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's government.

The crunch hurts all the more because it came suddenly. A year ago Canadian inflation was high but unemployment was not much over 7 percent. Since then the western provinces of Alberta and British Columbia have seen their jobless rates double.

In Sudbury, a northern Ontario mining city where the unemployment rate is 30 percent, a national theater chain cut the price of a ticket to the movies from $4.25 (Canadian) to $2 because of the economy.

"We've been in business in Sudbury for many years," said Jerry Dillon, general manager of Famous Players Ltd. "We've made money there, and we know the city is going through some tough times, so we decided to give something back."

The federal government announced a new recession- and inflation-fighting budget in June, including a 6 percent limit on public service pay increases this year and a 5 percent limit next year.

The same 6 percent and 5 percent boundaries are supposed to apply to prices charged by federally owned and regulated businesses — an important sector in Canada, where government plays a large role in the economy. Already Air Canada, the government airline, and Bell Canada, the regulated telephone company, have said they need much higher price hikes to cover costs.

Trudeau is urging businesses and labor unions to follow the same guidelines, but acknowledges that many Canadians will respond by asking, "Why should I be the sucker?"

"And, indeed, anybody who accepts the 6 and 5 is a sucker if the majority of everyone else doesn't," Trudeau told reporters at a news conference.

Among those lining up to fight the prime minister's program are the federal employee unions.

The president of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, Pierre Samson, called the government's approach "discriminatory, punitive, repressive and generally bad legislation."

Business critics and the opposition Progressive Conservative Party say Trudeau's Liberal government has allowed the federal deficit to soar while scaring off investment. Labor unions and the New Democrats, Canada's socialist third party, say more job-creation programs and a government-ordered drop in interest rates would restart the economy.

Agencies providing shelter, food or other social services say they are being overwhelmed, but some of the pain of the recession is eased by government benefits that are generous by U.S. standards.

If a Toronto wage-earner supporting his wife and two children loses his $300-a-week job, he becomes eligible for $210 a week in unemployment benefits. When those checks run out after 52 weeks, the family could get $615 a month in welfare.

There is not much outcry even among conservatives in Canada for Reagan-style cutbacks in social spending or taxes.

"There's a strong demand for government services here," said Tom Maxwell, chief economist of the Conference Board of Canada.

Economic analysts are hoping that a recovery this year in the United States will boost the Canadian economy.

But Wendy Dobson, executive director of the C.D. Howe Institute, a Montreal-based think tank, said, "There are still a lot of scared people who think the bottom hasn't been reached."

Speculate Loch Ness Monster May Just Be An Old Pine Log

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Theories on the Loch Ness monster get stranger every year. The latest suggests that Nessie may not be an animal at all but a Scots pine log propelled from the bottom of the Scottish lake to the surface now and again by a build-up of natural gas.

Robert P. Craig, a retired Scottish electronics engineer, presented his theory in an article that appeared today in the respected weekly British magazine The New Scientist.

Craig said his theory was based on the considerable depth of the loch — 754 feet — and the fact that it is surrounded by Scots pines, which grow to 120 feet and have been around in Scotland for 10,000 years.

As Craig tells it, one or several may have fallen into the loch, become waterlogged, gradually sunk to the bottom and been partly covered in silt.

The enormous pressure at the bottom of the loch resulting from the depth squeezed together the layers of resin-laden trunk to form a strong, waterproof outer skin around the log.

As the log decayed, natural gases built up inside the sealed trunk, driving resin and tar oils in the tree toward the stumps of the branches and the ends of the trunk.

"These resins and oils thus form extrusions or blisters, filled with minute gas bubbles," he wrote. "The process continues and in time the blisters in effect become buoyancy tanks. The log once more can float."

On nearing the surface, the internal pressure of the gas inside the trunk is well above the pressure outside. The log breaks the surface, the buoyancy blisters give out and with a hiss of escaping gas the log sinks back to the bottom to repeat the cycle.

The release of gas and chemicals in the log as it reaches the surface would account for the foaming that large numbers of Nessie spotters have noted, Craig wrote.

He theorized that Nessie's snout and fins seen in photographs of the "monster" were lumps of resin formed on the log's surface.

Craig said he had been told by a retired local schoolmaster that about 40 years ago he found just such a Scots pine log, covered with lumps of resin, in a swamp on the shores of Loch Ness.

Craig said there had been sightings of monsters in several of Scotland's 500 freshwater lochs throughout history, but in three particularly in recent times — Loch Ness, Loch Tay and Loch Morar.

He said it was significant that all three were very deep and surrounded by Scots pines. By contrast, Loch Lomond also was very deep but had no Scots pines nearby — and no monster sightings.

Americans and others have launched costly expeditions to Loch Ness in recent years equipped with submarines, powerful underwater cameras and sound gear to try to establish once and for all the identity of the monster.

Suggests A Debt 'Paid'

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State contractors convicted of bid rigging should be allowed to get back to business once they have made restitution, an official of a contractors' organization said Wednesday.

"Quite frankly I think ... these people have paid their dues and we ought to put the thing to rest," said R. Gene Ellis, executive vice president of the Carolinas Branch of the Associated General Contractors of America Inc. "I think we should kind of get off the backs of these companies and let them get on with the work that's required to maintain our highway system."

Ellis refused to respond to a statement made to the state Department of Transportation that nearly all contractors involved in bidding on highway projects could be linked with rigging bids.

"From an association viewpoint ... we do not have access to this type of information," Ellis said regarding comments Eugene A. Smith, senior deputy attorney general, made Tuesday.

Ellis' association includes highway contractors as well as other types of general contractors.

'Colcor' Investigators Might Probe Possible Burial Ground

By WILLIAM M. WELCH Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Federal authorities believe some human bodies may be buried in an animal "pit" on a farm owned by a man arrested in "Operation Colcor," and they want the state to investigate.

The Columbus County sheriff's department plans to search the pit on the farm owned by Kenneth T. Coleman, who along with his wife, Mary, were among 21 people indicted last week in the federal undercover probe of crime in Columbus County.

Federal prosecutors are seeking to have Coleman's bond raised from its present $200,000 to $1 million because prosecutors have said they have "a real fear this defendant will attempt to take the life of the undercover agent and-or flee."

Federal authorities at two separate hearings involving Coleman have referred to allegations that slaying victims may have been buried in the area.

Lt. Alfred Hayes of the Columbus County sheriff's department said local authorities were discussing the allegations with FBI and State Bureau of Investigation agents, and that "certain technical points" must be resolved before a search can be made.

"Further steps will be taken before the end of the week," Hayes said. "This is in the works."

During a hearing in Wilmington Thursday, Rob Showers, an assistant U.S. attorney, said Coleman had told undercover agents that he had allegedly shot and buried a Cuban drug runner on his "hog lot." At a bond hearing Monday, J. Douglas McCullough, also an assistant U.S. attorney, referred to alleged murders at what he called "the pit" on Coleman's farm.

FBI agent Terry D. Peters told The News and Observer of Raleigh after the hearing that, "If I were the Columbus County Sheriff's Department, I'd be down at the pit with backhoes and forensic analysts."

U.S. Attorney Samuel T. Currin said that because the allegations involved possible violations of state law rather than federal law, the FBI would expect state authorities to pursue the matter. "The FBI would like to see the state investigate that," he said.

DuPont Plant Announces It Will Layoff 250 In November

KINSTON — Du Pont, which employs 2,500 people here, announced today that it will reduce its local workforce by approximately 250 people, beginning Nov. 1.

"We deeply regret the impact this action will have on those employees affected," said Howard A. Kress, plant manager. "The action taken is necessary due to the cumulative effects of the prolonged business slowdown and need to keep our plant competitive."

Kress added, "To help reduce the number of layoffs, a special incentive, designed for situations which involve a permanent reduction of jobs, will be offered to employees who volunteer to leave the work force and thus save the job of an employee who otherwise would be laid off."

The manager explained that employees who are eligible for pensions and decide to accept the special incentive will receive an incentive payment equal to one week's pay for each year of service, in addition to their regular pension and associated company-paid, lifetime benefits.

"The voluntary termination incentive will be especially attractive to employees eligible for pensions and reflects the company policy of considering the needs of employees, particularly those having long careers," Kress said.

He said that employees subject to layoff include those with eight or less years of service. While not eligible for pensions, those employees laid off will receive severance pay of one week's pay per year of company service, a six-month extension of company-paid hospital and medical-surgical insurance, and an extension of certain life insurance benefits.

The Kinston plant, located on N.C. 11, produces "Dacron" polyester fiber for the apparel, home furnishings, and automotive upholstery markets.

Powell Named Bank Executive

JERRY POWELL

Jerry W. Powell has been named city executive in the Greenville office of Branch Banking & Trust Co., the bank announced.

Powell, formerly executive vice president of First State Bank in Greenville, will assume the BB&T position effective Monday.

The bank reported that Carl E. Brown Jr. and Thomas B. Jones will concentrate on the pursuit of business lending in the Greenville area, which BB&T said it considers one of its most rapidly growing markets.

Powell's banking experience includes 17 years with North Carolina National Bank as a city executive and in a variety of management and lending positions.

A Whiteville native, he graduated from high school there and earned a degree from East Carolina University. He is past president of the ECU Alumni Association and a member of the Pirates Club. Powell is also a graduate of the School of Banking of the South at Louisiana State University.

He serves on the boards of directors of the Pitt County Development Commission, the Salvation Army and the chamber of commerce. A past chairman of the chamber board, he was selected outstanding citizen of the year in 1980. Powell is a member of the University City Kiwanis Club and is past president of the Pitt County United Way.

The new city executive is a member of the Coastal Plains World Trade Association, Tobacco Associates of the U.S., and the North Carolina Industrial Developers Association.

Powell is married to the former Carolyn Peal of Chadbourne and they have two children, Greg, 19, and Caroline, 15. They are members of St. Paul's Episcopal Church where Powell served on the vestry and served with his wife as a youth leader.

Fear Hoax In Distress Call

By BRENDAN RILEY Associated Press Writer
PLACERVILLE, Calif. (AP) — About 100 searchers on the ground and in the air failed to find any trace of a little girl whose distress call was heard over a citizens band radio, and authorities feared a hoax.

"The whole thing might be a hoax. It's looking like that more and more," El Dorado County Sheriff's Lt. Terrance Cook said Wednesday as about 100 people searched the rugged high Sierra. "We haven't had anything in the last 24 hours, and we have searched dozens and dozens of square miles. There's still a possibility that there's someone out there, but it's looking more and more like there isn't anyone."

The girl was heard by CB radio listeners Tuesday morning calling for help, saying she was lost with her father "who won't wake up." From her brief words, sheriff's officers speculated that she had been out "jeeping" on back trails with her father when they had an accident, but by late Wednesday night, no one had reported an overdue father and daughter.

Cook said if the call was a hoax, the perpetrator — if caught — could face state charges of faking a police report and federal charges of improperly using communications channels.

But sheriff's Lt. Galen Anderson said, "Until we learn one way or the other, we have to assume it's the real McCoy."

The girl said she was 5 years old and gave her name as Annie or Amy. She mentioned a dirt road, a blue Jeep, and water, trees and ice, and a place called Hell Hole, which was quickly searched — unsuccessfully.

By the time radio direction-finding equipment arrived early Wednesday the

Carter's Homer Ties Series For Pitt

By RICK SCOPPE
 Reflector Sports Writer
 Pitt County stole one from Hamlet last night. Just when Hamlet appeared set to leave down having won the first two games in the Eastern finals of the American Legion state playoffs, second baseman Mont Carter took matters in his own hands — or bat.

After helping his team rally from a three-run deficit to tie the game, Carter blasted a home run with one out in the bottom of the ninth inning to lift Pitt County to a 4-3 victory at Harrington Field.

The win knots the best-of-seven series at 1-1. Game No. 3 is set for tonight in Rockingham. Games four and five will also be played in Rockingham on Friday and Saturday nights.

Pitt County, outplayed throughout much of the night, trailed, 3-1, going into the home half of the seventh but rallied to tie the game on a single by Carter and an error.

It stayed that way until the ninth. Randy Warren struck out to open the ninth to set the stage for Carter's shot — one night after he had signed a grant to play for Chowan.

"I thought about taking the pitch," said Carter, the ball he hit for his home run safely in his glove. "It looked like (Walters) was having control problems. It was a fast ball chest high — a perfect hitting pitch."

Not too long ago Carter probably would not have faced Walters, who relieved starter Bud Loving in the seventh and took the loss. Only last season Carter was platooned at second base, playing usually only when a right-hander was on the mound.

"All my 11th-grade year I had trouble hitting left-handers," he said. "I felt it was mostly psychological. Rocky Walters usually keeps the ball down," he added. "He usually doesn't give you a good pitch to hit. I pretty much made up my mind to look for a fast ball. I probably would have taken it if it was a curve."

Asked if he felt Pitt County stole the win from Hamlet, Carter said: "Yeah. We hadn't played well but they were only up, 3-1. They had some breaks they didn't take advantage of."

Indeed, Hamlet left 12 players on base between the third and seventh innings. Twice it had the bases loaded — in the third and fourth — and managed only two runs to show for it.

Hamlet also outthit Pitt County, eight to five and got a better effort on the mound from Loving than did Post 39 from right-hander Gordon Douglas, who was not sharp but still managed to pick up his sixth win in eight decisions.

Loving scattered four hits before leaving in the seventh after walking a man and giving up a single. Both runners came around to score as Post 39 rallied to tie the game.

Loving, a right-hander, walked three and did not strike out a man but managed to keep Post 39 off-balance.

"I truly don't know what he was doing to us," Carter said. "He didn't have overpowering speed and his curve wasn't that good."

Asked about Loving, Pitt County coach Billy Davis said: "He mixed his pitches well and his location was real good. He kept 'em off-stride and I think the guys were over anxious early."

Douglas, meantime, was having his problems. After giving up a leadoff home run to Walter Gould in the second, Douglas walked two men to load the bases in the third before escaping on a force out at second.

Douglas was not so lucky in the fourth. Consecutive singles by Mike Byrd, Greg Cloninger (who was three for four to lead Post 49) and Loving — the Nos. 7, 8 and 9 hitters — brought home two runs and gave Hamlet a 3-0 lead.

Douglas, who gave up eight hits, struck out five and walked seven in nine innings, walked the next two batters but got a ground out to second to end the fourth.

Hamlet had two men on in the fifth, sixth and seventh (each time with at least one out), but could not score.

Hamlet has now left 22 men stranded in the two games; Pitt County has left 19.

Following Post 49's two-run outburst in the top of the fourth, Post 39 cut the gap to 3-1 in the home half of the inning.

With one out, Greg Briley walked and went to second when Roger William's fly to right was booted by Gould. Then, with two gone, Douglas walked to load the bases and Tom Buie singled to left to score Briley.

Post 39 threatened in the sixth when Williams singled and Douglas reached on an error, but Buie and Sammy Hodges flew out to end the inning. One inning later, however, Pitt County did score.

Warren walked and stole second and Carter followed with a single to right to bring home Warren and chase Loving. Walters came on and walked Briley and Emmett Walsh to load the bases.

Williams followed with a line shot to shortstop Alex Wallace. Wallace then threw to second for the double play but Byrd missed the ball, allowing Carter to score the tying run.

Two innings later it was Carter scoring again — this

Seeking Meals For ECU Players

The Greenville Pirate Club, and other interested fans, are being asked to take part in a "Down East" welcome for members of the East Carolina University football team when they report for practice on Monday, August 16.

Phil Dixon, president of the Greenville Chapter of the Pirate Club, said that the club is hoping to repeat an activity began last year, where fans brought one or more members of the team into their home for a meal, then attended a special program for the team on campus.

"This went over quite well last year, and a number of positive things came from it. Many of us got to know some of the athletes better and we had the opportunity to ask questions about the upcoming season. It also gives us a chance to thank the players for the hard work they put in during the football season."

Dixon said that individuals are being asked to volunteer to pick up one or more athletes at 5:30 p.m. on Monday, August 16, treat them to a meal — preferably in the home — then return them to Mendenhall Student Center for the 8:30 p.m. program. Dr. John Howell, the new chancellor of the university, will welcome the players back at that time, and an inspirational speaker will talk also.

"If anyone would consider feeding one or more athletes, I wish they would call me right away, so we can set up the schedule for this," Dixon said. He noted that some families fed as many as four players last year, and he hoped that some will consider taking this many this year.

Dixon indicated that there has been "fairly good" response to a letter he sent out earlier to some Pirate Club members, but that about half of the athletes still remain to be assigned for the meal.

He emphasized also that non-Pirate Club members can also be a part of this program.

Further information and signups can be made by calling Dixon at 758-6200.

Greg Hines On All-Star Team

BETHEL — Greg Hines, a rising senior at North Pitt High School, recently made the All-Star team at the Prep All-Star Basketball Camp at Elon College.

He completed against top college prospects from all states along the eastern coast, and those in attendance were impressed by his defense and his team oriented offense.

Greg is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Hines of Bethel.

Sonny Randle Primed For Marshall Comeback

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
 AP Sports Writer
 He's been to the mountaintop and he's languished in the valley. Now, Marshall coach Sonny Randle is primed for a comeback in the Southern Conference.

The former National Football League wide receiver led East Carolina, once a conference member, to two championships in three years. Randle admits the rise to prominence went to his head.

"When I came to East Carolina, I was an assistant coach the year," says Randle. "All of sudden, I'm the head man. I win two championships after we struggled that first year and I think I'm God's gift to football."

"I go to Virginia and I realize it's gonna take a whole lot more than Sonny Randle. But when I went there, I thought I could hang the moon," he adds.

Instead, it was Randle who was almost hung. The Cavaliers compiled a 5-17 record under Randle, including a humiliating defeat at the hands of East Carolina.

"There are certain things you gotta have and certain things you gotta do. I wish I had learned that when I came along," he says.

Randle went back to square one, coaching at Massanutten Military Academy in Virginia.

His teams there went 19-3 and he found out what being an apprentice was all about.

"I did everything. I mowed the field, I lined it. But brother, was brought back to Earth ...

and I've been back a while," he says.

Having gained his new perspective, Randle accepted the head coaching job at Marshall in 1978. Following Frank Ellwood's 1-10 record in 1978, Randle duplicated the feat in 1979. In 1980, he managed one more victory and a tie. He was aware of the task before him, but only because the job involved rebuilding a program which hasn't had a winning season since 1964 and hadn't been at .500 since 1965.

"It had just completely gotten away from them," Randle says of the program's status. "There are certain things you gotta do to turn a program around. Marshall made the commitment, but they only made it three years ago when I came there."

Randle is encouraged about 1981 for several reasons, one of which is that the team is comprised totally of his recruits. He thinks this will be the year to reverse the fortunes that some players may have been accustomed to.

"If you knock a guy down enough times, he ain't gonna get up. Those kids had been knocked down so many times, there was no way you could get 'em up. They were just down and out."

"We've got young blood, new blood in there," Randle says of the freshmen and junior college transfers he's relying on to bring about the change.

"They're hungry, they'll do whatever it takes. When you've got some folks with ability, it will fall into place," he adds.

Randle can also go through the season with the knowledge he's not trying to overcome a conference losing streak which had reached 20 games. A victory over Appalachian State broke the string, but Randle says no one wanted to be the first.

"That was a gorilla. Carrying that thing around was unbelievable. Whenever we played a conference team, they played like it was the Super Bowl.

"Now, we ought to be competitive. This fall I think we can compete in 11 games. If we can compete in 11, we can win our share," he says.

Randle says Marshall hasn't turned the corner, but he thinks the time is at hand. Even if it's several years off, however, he'd like to be around to see it. He remembers the victory over the Mountaineers and the reception he received from his church.

Krusen Named As Wake Aide

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Wake Forest has named Herb Krusen as a part-time assistant basketball coach, replacing Herb Cline who earlier resigned to take a head coaching job.

A 1980 East Carolina University graduate, Krusen was a three-year starter for the Pirates, scoring 1,115 points. He played one year in West Germany after graduation before serving as a volunteer coach at ECU in 1981.

Anderson Gets First Major League Win

By The Associated Press
 Britt Burns pitched "decently," Dan Petry pitched "scared," and Bud Anderson just wanted a chance to pitch in a pressure situation.

major-league triumph, was the most thrilled.
 "I couldn't be any happier than I am right now. It's just a feeling you can't describe," Anderson, a former linebaker at Rutgers University, said after pitching 32-3 innings of strong relief in Cleveland's 8-4 victory over the Texas Rangers.

New AL Record

Umpire Drew Coble looks on as Rickey Henderson of the Oakland A's waves the base after his 101st steal Wednesday to set a new American League record. The steal came during the first inning against the Seattle Mariners. Henderson, who broke his own record, is the only player to steal 100 bases in two seasons, and went on to steal two more before the night was over. (AP Laserphoto)

Rickey Wants Record At Home

OAKLAND (AP) — If Rickey Henderson, with 103 stolen bases, has his way, he'll set the major-league stolen-base record before his hometown fans in Oakland this month.

pitched by rookie right-hander Rich Bordi in the opening inning of the A's 8-3 nightcap victory.

Henderson broke his own American League record of 100 Wednesday with three steals in Oakland's doubleheader split with Seattle. And he said he'd like to be well on his way to passing Lou Brock's major league mark of 118 by the time the A's return from a six-game swing through Minnesota and Seattle Aug. 13 to start a 12-game home stand.

On Monday, Henderson became the first player in baseball history to achieve two 100-steal seasons.

"I'm hoping for five steals in each of those series," said Henderson. The A's play three games each on the artificial surfaces of Minnesota's Metrodome and Seattle's Kingdome. "I'm faster on artificial turf than grass," said Henderson.

"The 100th steal was the tough one," Henderson said. "I was pretty tight for that. After the 101st I figured they would start coming easily again. I'm not really feeling any pressure. I don't think the pressure will start to hit me until I get to 116 or 117."

"So if I get on base, getting the steals should be easy for me. That's what I want — 10 steals on the trip. Then I can come home shooting for the record."

Mariner catcher Rick Sweet had no trouble praising Henderson's base-stealing accomplishments. "If there's a better base-stealer, I haven't seen him," said Sweet, who failed to throw out Henderson in four attempts during the four-game series. Henderson was on base only four times.

"He put me in the record books," said Sweet. "Who was the catcher for Henderson's 100th and 101st? Me. I'll be a trivia question forever."

Michael was naive. He had been awarded a three-year contract, starting in 1983 after the faithful Lemon — "old Lem was always there when I needed him," Steinbrenner said — had been allowed to manage a full 1982 season as the Boss promised.

It was a promise lightly given, never kept. Michael should have known better, just as Lemon must have realized that a job with George Steinbrenner hangs by a slender thread — to be snapped at the Boss' first angry whim.

It is getting tiresome to hear the worn refrain: "It's George's ball club. He should be allowed to do with it what he pleases."

True, but with reservations. This is a franchise the spirit of which has been wrecked. When Charlie Finley threatened to destroy a franchise at Oakland, baseball stepped in to prevent it.

Steinbrenner brought a breath of fresh air to Yankee Stadium a decade ago when he spent his shipbuilding money lavishly and restored the team every one of them publicly demeaned in some fashion.

The Boss was known as an impatient and impetuous man, but he outdid himself this time — storming into the locker room at 1 o'clock in the morning, firing Michael on the spot and offering the customers a rain check for the bad performance to which they had been subjected.

As fiery Billy Martin and soft-shoe Bob Lemon before him, Michael, the beloved "Stick" whom Steinbrenner said was like a son, became the third manager twice hired and twice fired.

White Sox over the Yankees 7-0 in the nightcap of a two-night doubleheader. New York became the first American League team to win 7,000 games by taking the opener — Clyde King's debut as Yankee manager — 6-2 as Ron Guidry and Rich Gossage combined on a five-hitter and Graig Nettles and Oscar Gamble homered.

Burns, 12-4, said he "should have been more overpowering. The big thing was that I had a good breaking ball and I was getting it over the plate and keeping it away from those guys."

"I had decent command and I got them to hit some balls right at my fielders. Coming in to Yankee Stadium has a lot to do with how you concentrate. Some guys, it brings out the best in them; I like to think I'm one of those guys. I was not at my best tonight. I feel I can do better but I've felt better and done worse."

Petry beamed Willie Wilson, the AL's leading hitter, in the third inning and it bothered him the rest of the night. Still, he hurled a four-hitter in Detroit's 7-1 victory over Kansas City.

"I can't believe I did that (hit Wilson)," said Petry, 12-6, who said it was the first time he'd ever hit anybody in the head. "After I did it, I was pitching scared the rest of the game. I didn't want to come inside on anybody. I was just trying to strike him out."

Wilson was struck on the right cheek with a fastball and had to be carried off the field on a stretcher. X-rays showed no broken bones, but he was hospitalized overnight for observation.

Chet Lemon sparked the Detroit offense with a three-run homer.

Elsewhere, Seattle split with Oakland, winning 5-2 and losing 8-3 as Rickey Henderson set a league stolen base record; Milwaukee blanked Toronto 8-0, Baltimore beat Boston 4-2, and California edged Minnesota 8-6.

Mariners 5-3, A's 2-8
 Henderson stole three bases, giving him 103 for the season and breaking his own AL mark of 100. With 53 games left, he needs 15 steals to equal Lou Brock's major-league record of 118.

"I was a little tight going after the 100th steal," said Henderson. "And I knew after I stole the 101st base it would be easy again. If I get on base the steals are going to come. There's no pressure in that. The best I can do is keep the pressure off myself as I'm going for Brock's record."

Seattle's Jim Beattie threw a four-hitter to win the first game, but Oakland's three-run first, sparked by Henderson's stealing second and third on successive pitches, got the A's going in the nightcap.

Brewers 8, Blue Jays 0
 Cecil Cooper upped his batting average six points to .321 with a 4-for-5 night, including his 22nd homer and three RBI. Cooper is batting .558 against Toronto, with three homers and 12 RBIs.

"I hit four balls pretty hard and there," he said. "I'm starting to get that feeling again. No matter what they throw, if I've got the feeling, I'm going to get my hits."

The Blue Jays managed only seven singles off Mike Caldwell, who picked up his second shutout and sixth complete game of the season.

Orioles 4, Red Sox 2
 A little trickery worked wonders for Baltimore. With men on first and second and nobody out in the bottom of the eighth, John Lowenstein faked a bunt and singled past where second baseman Jerry Remy had been standing before racing to cover first. The hit broke a 2-2 tie and Cal Ripken Jr. followed with another RBI single.

"That's the old asterisk play...it's great if it works," Lowenstein said. "It's not an easy play to do. You have to make some contact, and enough to get past the mobile infielders. I made the decision not to bunt because of the strategic deployment Ralph Houk (Boston manager) decided to use on the play."

"The bunt was on," Orioles Manager Earl Weaver said, "but John took the responsibility and got the base hit...thank goodness."

Dave Stapleton and Dwight Evans homered for Boston. Al Bumbry drove in Baltimore's first two runs with a homer and an RBI single.

Angels 8, Twins 6
 California scored two runs in the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth innings — the final two on Brian Downing's home run, which broke a 6-6 deadlock — to subdue Minnesota. The decisive homer came off Twins reliever Terry Felton, 0-10.

Tim Laudner had a three-run homer for Minnesota.

Pinstripe Dignity Has Now Source Of Ridicule

By WILL GRIMSLEY
 AP Special Correspondent
 So the Bronx Zoo turns into Animal House or, in the case of Gene Michael, Tommy John and others, perhaps the House of Horrors.

The dignity that was the Yankee Pinstripes through generations suddenly has turned into a source of ridicule.

Boss George Steinbrenner has fired another manager — his second managerial change this year, the ninth in 10 seasons.

Old George is at it again. But this time it is more than a weary cliché. The suddenness of the action and the manner in which it was done — on the heels of an embarrassing doubleheader loss to the Chicago White Sox — added a touch of tragedy to the old scenario.

Steinbrenner, a man of recognized business acumen, is throwing his whole team into a state of disarray — almost every one of them publicly demeaned in some fashion.

The Boss was known as an impatient and impetuous man, but he outdid himself this time — storming into the locker room at 1 o'clock in the morning, firing Michael on the spot and offering the customers a rain check for the bad performance to which they had been subjected.

ductors who played off against each other and absorbed the Boss' wild explosions, largely insulating them from the rest of the team.

The situation worsened over the last couple of years. Boss Steinbrenner broadened the range of fire and left no one immune.

He dumped Reggie. He traded Mickey Rivers and Cliff Johnson. He began a public sharpshooting campaign against his best and most loyal players.

Tommy John, who became a pitching staff stalwart with a restructured arm, is the latest. Upset that John hadn't measured up to previous statistics, Steinbrenner said, "Tommy John isn't the Golden Boy we thought he was."

Steinbrenner complained that Dave Winfield, his $24 million outfielder who has been fielding and hitting splendidly, "can't carry the club the way Reggie did."

Everybody grinned and bore it when he kept shifting water from one shoulder to another in the Billy Martin-Reggie Jackson feuds. It wasn't so bad when he started playing musical chairs with his managers, but there were wags with the mistreatment of the venerable Lemon and young Dick Howser.

Billy and Reggie were con-

Staggering Braves Face Crucial Series Vs. L.A.

By The Associated Press
Is there life for the Atlanta Braves after playing dead in Atlanta Stadium?

"We're not playing as well as we can, but it's time to find out what we're made of," says Torre. "It'll be good showing up at a different ballpark, not the one that has frustrated us this week."

Wednesday night's 3-2 loss to the San Francisco Giants was the Braves' fifth in their last six games at home. It trimmed their National League West lead to 5½ games over the Los Angeles Dodgers, who beat the Cincinnati Reds 8-2 Wednesday.

And it set up a dramatic four-game series with the onrushing Dodgers at Los Angeles starting tonight.

"They have to decide themselves whether they want it," said San Francisco's Joe Morgan of the failing Braves. "If they think they are good enough to win it, they will. It just depends on how good a team they think they have."

Morgan delivered the game-winning run for the Giants in the ninth inning against the Braves Wednesday night with an RBI single off Steve Bedrosian, 5-3, following a two-out pinch single by Champ Summers, a stolen base by pinch runner Max Venable and a walk to Chili Davis.

"I was just trying to hit the ball hard," said Morgan. "Lately, I've driven in a lot of runs with a single. I just try to hit line drives."

The victory went to Gary Lavelle, 5-5, who allowed one hit in one inning of work. Greg Minton worked the final inning for the Giants and gained his 18th save.

The Giants had taken a 2-0 lead in the fourth on a solo homer by Reggie Smith and a run-scoring single by Tim O'Malley. But the Braves tied it in the fourth on Bob Horner's two-run homer, his 23rd of the season.

In other NL games, it was Philadelphia 5, Montreal 4; Pittsburgh 5, St. Louis 2; San Diego 5, Houston 2 and New York 7, Chicago 4.

Dodgers 8, Reds 2

Ricky Wright held Cincinnati to two hits over six innings in his first major league start and doubled in a run, and Steve Garvey slugged a three-run homer as Los Angeles crushed the Reds.

Wright, appearing in only his second major league game, gave up a leadoff single to Tom Lawless in the first inning and didn't allow another hit until Dave Concepcion hit his second home run of the season with two out in the sixth and Rafael Landestoy on base after a walk.

Wright struck out four and walked four before he was replaced by reliever Joe Beckwith, who gave up two hits over 21-3 innings. Beckwith lost his edge during a 40-minute rain delay and walked Dan Driessen and pinch-hitter Duane Walker when play resumed and was lifted for Terry Forster, who finished up.

Youngblood Is Traded; Plays For Each Team

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — when asked about the change. Joel Youngblood started the day as a New York Met, got a game-winning hit, hopped on an airplane and wound up playing for the Montreal Expos before the night was over.

It enabled him to become the third man in major league baseball history to play for two teams in the same day. The others, Max Flack and Cliff Heathcote, were traded between games of a doubleheader between St. Louis and the Chicago in 1922.

Jet travel made it possible for Youngblood, who was traded Wednesday afternoon for future considerations, to become the only player ever to achieve that feat in two cities.

The telephone rang in the New York Mets' dugout during the third inning of their 7-4 victory over the Cubs at Chicago's Wrigley Field. The message was to send Youngblood, who had just ripped a two-run single, upstairs after the inning.

"I felt I was traded," Youngblood said.

And he was right. He went upstairs and was informed of the trade by Mets' General Manager Frank Cashen.

"It's funny," Youngblood said after completing 2-for-3 day with a single in his only time at bat during the Expos' 5-4 loss Wednesday night to the Philadelphia Phillies. "I left in the third inning at Chicago and arrived in the third inning in Philadelphia."

But, he explained, he almost missed his plane after making reservations, packing and checking out of his Chicago hotel room.

"At the hotel I realized I had left my glove in the dugout, so I went back to the ball park to get it," said Youngblood. "I made the plane with 20 minutes to spare."

Youngblood, who had been with the Mets since 1977, was hitting .257 in 80 games with 12 doubles, 3 homers and 21 RBI.

The Expos made room for him on their 25-man roster by designating infielder Frank Taveras for assignment.

"I felt better than I did all year and that includes spring training," Youngblood said

Phillies 5, Expos 4
Steve Carlton pitched his 10th straight complete game and Manny Trillo single home two runs in the sixth as Philadelphia beat Montreal.

Montreal third baseman Tim Wallach accounted for all the Expos' runs with a three-run homer in the fourth and a solo shot in the eighth.

Carlton allowed eight hits, struck out five and walked four as he won the 15th of his last 18 decisions, after losing his first four games of the season. He boosted his record to 15-8, and is the first major league pitcher to win that many games.

Joel Youngblood, who was acquired from the New York Mets Wednesday for "future considerations," arrived from Chicago where he had knocked in the winning run for the Mets Wednesday afternoon. He played right field and contributed a single to the Expos' attack.

Youngblood tied the all-time record for most teams played with in one day (2), set by Max Flack and Clint Heathcote, who were traded by the St. Louis Cardinals and Chicago Cubs between games of a doubleheader in 1922.

Pirates 5, Cardinals 4
John Candelaria pitched a four-hitter over the first six innings and ignited a two-run uprising with a double after two were out in the fifth, leading Pittsburgh over St. Louis.

Candelaria, 94, departed when muscles in his left forearm tightened after St. Louis scored in the sixth. He gave way to Rod Scurry, who posted his ninth save after giving up an RBI single to George Hendrick in the eighth.

"If he can go six or seven innings, that's all we need," Pittsburgh Manager Chuck Tanner said of Candelaria. "He's getting stronger each time out. He's right on schedule."

Candelaria is rebounding from elbow problems last year.

Padres 5, Astros 2
John Montefusco went all the way for his first complete game of the season and Sixto Lezcano and Terry Kennedy knocked in two runs each with sixth-inning hits to lead San Diego over Houston.

Montefusco, 9-6, allowed five hits while striking out three and walking four.

Losing pitcher Don Sutton, 10-8, pitched 61-3 innings, allowing seven hits and one walk while striking out eight.

Mets 7, Cubs 4
Pitcher Craig Swan hit a two-run homer and Wally Backman doubled twice and drove in one run to pace New York past Chicago.

Swan, 7-4, went six innings for the win and had two hits, including his first major league home run in the fourth inning.

"A lot of guys have a lot of pressure on them," said Swan. "We'd like to get back in the pennant drive, but we're pretty far back."

After the All-Star break, the Mets were only four games out of first place in the National League East, but have since fallen to 15 games out.

Searing Temperature Won't Stop Jack

TULSA, Okla. (AP)— Jack William Nicklaus earned the first of his record-tying five PGA triumphs 19 years ago on a frying-pan-hot Dallas course where the temperature lingered above 100 degrees four consecutive days.

"It was the hottest golf tournament I've ever been to," recalled his wife, Barbara.

That was until today's opening round of the 64th PGA Championship on shimmering Southern Hills Country Club.

Temperatures above 100 degrees were predicted each day through Saturday. The high late today was to be around 108 degrees but the irrepressible Nicklaus said he would hardly notice.

"Heat? I practiced three days in Florida when it was 93 degrees with 95 percent humidity...that's warmer than it is here," he said. "I have the stamina to play in this kind of weather. I just wished we could play in shorts like I do at home but the PGA has a dress code, you know."

The 42-year-old Nicklaus, who has been playing in the shadow of Tom Watson this year, was seeking to become the only player in history with six PGA titles. He currently is tied with the late Walter Hagan at five.

"Sure, I'd love to be the only one at six," said Nicklaus. "But I'm really not all that concerned with records."

Asked if he favored the red-hot Watson, who has won the U.S. and British Opens, Nicklaus smiled and said, "Nicklaus is the only guy I can control. I'll be there if I play well. There are a lot of fellows playing well."

Nicklaus hasn't won a major championship since his 1980 PGA triumph which followed his U.S. Open victory. He won Colonial in Fort Worth this May.

"My game is less than I would like," he said. "I got the flu in Britain and I never got my timing or my legs back."

Nicklaus received a break with an early tee time along with Tom Kite and defending champion Larry Nelson.

Watson was to start in the early afternoon along with Masters champion Craig Stadler and Peter Jacobsen. A victory for Watson would give him every major championship and lift him onto a plateau with Nicklaus, Gary Player, Ben Hogan, and Gene Sarazen.

The same goes for 52-year-old Arnold Palmer, who was to tee off around noon seeking the only major title that has eluded him.

Nicklaus labored long and hard on the putting greens, practicing a tip courtesy of Player.

"Player helped me," said Nicklaus. "The way I was going he could have hurt me and still helped me.

"I'm catching the ball more on the base of my putter and starting to get it to the hole."

Nicklaus praised the 6,862 steamy yards of Southern Hills as "very nice but extremely difficult. There aren't many birdies out there. I just had two (birds) in two practice rounds."

Nelson agreed, saying, "It is one of the truest tests we play...of all of the courses I've played this is the best all-around from No. 1 through 18."

Nelson said he loved the heat. "My back tends to bother me in cold weather and that's one of the reasons I got off to a slow start...I like it hot," Nelson said.

Nelson was seeking to become the first player to win consecutive PGA titles since Denny Shute did it in 1936 and 1937.

Watson said he was ready despite the mercury readings. "The heat shouldn't affect you if you are in good shape and I'm in good shape," said Watson.

Palmer scoffed at the suggestion he would wilt because of his advanced age: "I'm fine. I played every day out there in the practice rounds and didn't feel a thing."

Nicklaus predicted the winning score would be right at par or 280.

"Of all the championship tournaments played here it averages out to about even par," said Nicklaus.

Missing from the field was Trevino, who is undergoing treatment for his troublesome back in Dallas.

The first two rounds were scheduled to be televised by ESPN, the all-sports cable network, with the final 36 holes to be broadcast on ABC-TV.

If there is a tie, a playoff would begin immediately unlike the U.S. and British Opens where there are 18-hole playoffs the next day.

Grant, Aides Threaten Boycott Unless Paid For Canton Game

By The Associated Press
An area that has solely belonged to the players in the National Football League is now being considered by the Minnesota coaches.

Coach Bud Grant and his assistants are talking strike.

While it doesn't reach the dimensions of the players' threatened walkout if the owners don't turn over 55 percent of gross revenues, the issue remains money for the Viking coaches.

Grant and his assistants have threatened to boycott Saturday's Hall of Fame Game against the Baltimore Colts in Canton, Ohio, if they aren't assured of getting a paycheck. "Nothing has been resolved," Grant said Tuesday at the Vikings' training camp in Mankato, Minn. "My position remains the same today as it was yesterday. The Vikings coaches may not participate."

Vikings General Manager Mike Lynn said the coaches have no guarantees about being paid for the game. "I don't know anyone who can make that decision," he said.

"I don't think there's any one person in the league who has the authority to make that decision. This game is controlled by the 28 owners in the league and it depends on them. Any changes in the rules that have been made would need approval by 21 of the 28 owners."

The owners don't have that much time since Grant says the league has until gametime make a decision.

"They (the NFL) have until Saturday to decide to pay us," Grant said. "The players get paid. But we get nothing. Coaches get paid in the playoffs and in the Pro Bowl, but not in this game."

The Hall of Fame Game is sponsored by the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio. The Hall of Fame has no legal connection with the NFL.

Elsewhere in the training camps Wednesday, Atlanta wide receiver Alfred Jenkins is reportedly closer to a contract with the Falcons. Prentiss Yancey Jr., Jenkins' agent, said he and the Falcons are "moving closely together and, in fact, hopefully we're there (at an agreement)."

The Falcons are without star running back William Andrews, who is holding out in a contract dispute.

Philadelphia's Charlie Johnson, an All-Pro noseguard, asked to be traded to either San Francisco or Houston and walked out of the club's training camp at West Chester, Pa.

More Americans Going Back To The Countryside

By RANDOLPHE SCHMID
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — After a century and a half of flocking to the cities, Americans seem to be switching directions and are turning to the countryside, researchers say.

"During the '70s — for the first time in more than 160 years — the population growth rate in the United States was higher in rural and small-town communities than in metropolitan areas," reported Calvin Beale of the Agriculture Department's Economic Research Service.

For a nation as highly urbanized and industrialized as the United States, Census Bureau demographers say a movement "may be people following jobs," Ms. DeAre said, adding that there has also been "a lot of growth of employment in very remote areas."

The two researchers said people appear to be moving near metropolitan areas, where people can commute to city jobs, and to an even greater extent to areas more distant from the cities.

The movement has lessened somewhat with the recession, Beale said. Most of the change occurred in the years 1970 to 1978 when the growth in employment took place at a more rapid rate in areas outside major urban centers, he said.

The people moving to the country are not easily characterized, Beale said.

"There are at the one end of the scale the sort of hippie-like, commune-prone back to the land home-steaders ... and then at another part of the scale you have much more sophisticated types, perhaps in parts of New England, who like their level of living and are opening the boutiques and the craft shops and trendy restaurants," he said.

There is also "a broad range of people who are not idealogues, who don't have any articulate philosophy about what they're doing. But there's more work available in the rural areas, and they think it's a better place in which to rear children, and so they have gone to live there," he said.

Both Ms. DeAre and Beale said they expect the trend to continue.

The recession has increased unemployment and cut job opportunities in rural areas, Beale noted, but the social factors affecting the movement still seem to be in place.

The negative view of life in large metropolitan areas remains, he concluded, while "people have developed a more positive outlook toward living in a smaller scale community. They don't feel embarrassed about it any more."

1980 census indicate the urban population has continued to grow, from 73.6 percent to 73.7 percent of the total.

But while that was the smallest urban increase since 1820, the urban population would not have grown at all if the bureau hadn't changed the definition of an urban area.

The Census now considers an urbanized area a population of 50,000 people settled around an incorporated place. Under the new definition, there's no minimum size for the incorporated place. Under the old rules, an urbanized area could only be centered on a city of at least 25,000 people.

Among 32 places that are newcomers to urban America are: Concord, N.C., a city of 16,942 people nestled in an urban area of 71,994; and Monessen, Pa., a city of 11,928, in an urban area of 65,884. Monessen is near Pittsburgh, while Concord is northeast of Charlotte, N.C.

Long and Ms. DeAre published their results in a study in the international population magazine Intercom.

Without that change, the proportion of the nation's population living in urban areas would have dropped from 73.6 percent to 73.4 percent between 1970 and 1980, they reported.

Even without trying to take into account for the change in definition, Ms. DeAre said in an interview that she found "quite a few states," showing increases in both the number and the proportion of the rural population.

Among the states where both rural proportion and total portion grew were Maine, New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Texas, Kentucky, Idaho and Montana.

She said the growth appears to be not only in small towns, but also in the open countryside.

The changes do not indicate, however, that the residents are moving to the countryside to take up farming. Nor does the relatively small change mean the United States is "going to become a primarily rural country," Beale said.

The reasons for the population shift appear to be grounded in the movement of more and more jobs to smaller towns and cities, coupled with the desire for living and raising families away from the cities, Beale said.

Employment has grown in the smaller communities since the 1960s, so the

Most of the archaeologists in the project are veterans of a similar rescue effort in late 1960s and early 1970s.

Archaeologists Racing Time To Save History

By EMEL ANIL
Associated Press Writer
ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Turkish and foreign archaeologists are racing against time to save the remains of ancient civilizations from an area to be flooded by a giant dam in a remote corner of southeastern Turkey.

Ekmel Derya of the Middle East Technical University here, who heads the salvage project, says the area in question is as large as Belgium and completely "virgin territory for art historians and archaeologists."

"It is crucial to the history of Near East," he said in an interview.

The Turkish government plans to complete by the turn of the century a mammoth irrigation and electricity-producing project on the Euphrates River, north of the Syrian border.

The project, whose cost runs to a minimum $4 billion, seeks to triple Turkey's present electricity-producing capacity and to irrigate 4.5 million acres of arid land. It involves two dams and what is intended to be world's largest irrigation canal.

In 1975 Derya's research center initiated an archaeological survey of the area and discovered 220 ancient sites worthy of excavation.

Two years later, foreign archaeologists were invited to join in the effort. Eight teams, financed by their own universities or governments, accepted. Turkey sent 16 teams to the area and excavations began in 1979.

Derya says it is too early yet to know exactly what the area will produce in the next 10 years.

But archaeologists have already found cave dwellings dating back 200,000 years, cuneiform inscriptions and such samples of Turkish-Seljuk art that were believed to have existed but never present.

A Byzantine bridge with inscriptions and two Seljuk mosques were taken apart and rebuilt on higher ground.

Study Disorders In Taste, Smell

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Over a 30-year period Thomas F. Curry gradually lost his sense of smell and taste, but to avoid embarrassment, he pretended his physical condition was normal.

"It's just not a handicap you talk about very much. I was afraid people would think I was crazy," said Curry, a 53-year-old television producer at the University of Connecticut.

Curry was among the estimated 2 million Americans who are believed to have lost their ability to taste and smell. Up to 14 million are believed to have lost some portion of taste and smell senses.

To cure his problem he turned to a group of experts from Yale University and UConn currently working on smell and taste disorders. The researchers are participating in a three-year, $2.3 million project funded by a federal grant.

Distortion or loss of the two senses can be the first indication of serious medical problems, such as strokes or brain tumors. Temporary or permanent loss of taste and smell also can follow head injuries or radiation therapy for head or neck cancer. Some elderly people also report the gradual loss of smell and taste.

Curry's problem turned out to be a typical case. Doctors found small growths called polyps in his nose just below this eye sockets. After two operations, he recovered the senses.

Curry's case also was typical in that he couldn't clearly distinguish between smell and taste.

"It's hard to make patients understand the differences between what we call taste and smell," said Dr. Frank A. Catalanotto, the UConn pediatric dentist in charge of the project. "People assign the sensation of taste to what really are odors."

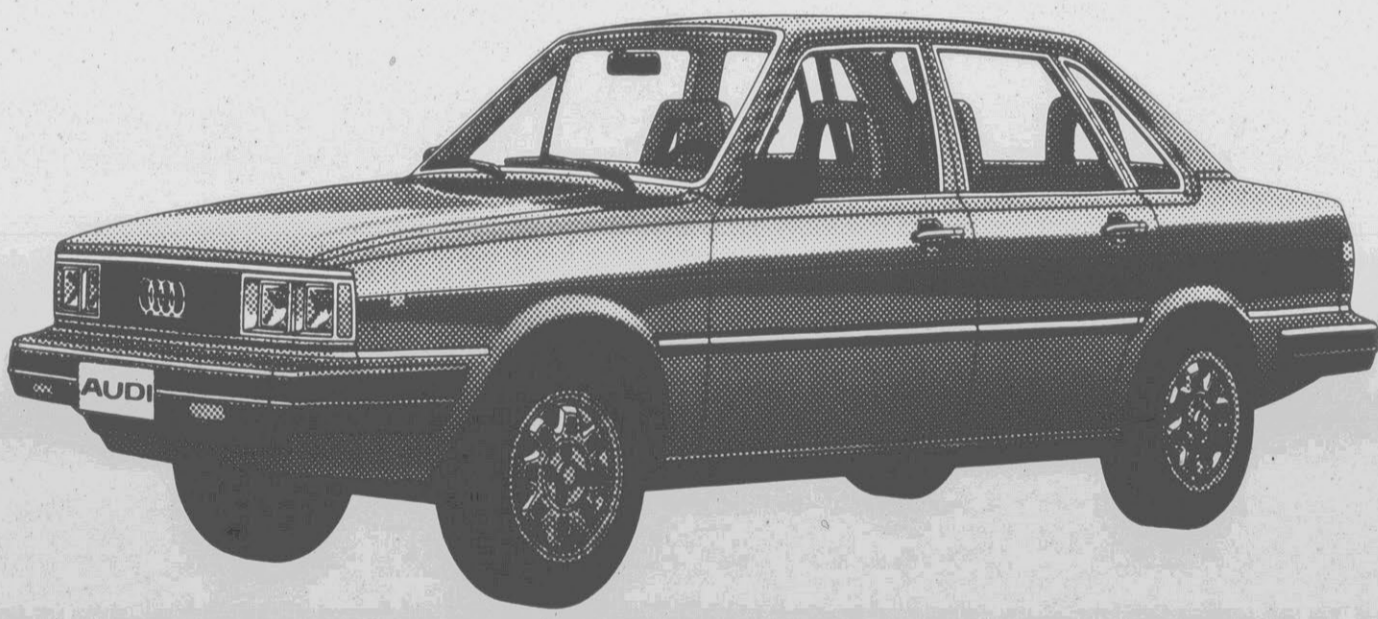

To assist in their work, the researchers are studying patients and volunteers in an effort to define tastes, odors and flavors, and to explain how the appetite functions.

Researchers also are working with animals to understand how the senses function mechanically.

Marion E. Frank, a neurophysiologist in the UConn dental school, is working with hamsters to define the mechanics of taste. How the taste buds work and how the brain translates their signals remains unclear.

She and others are also working on the chemistry of what makes a sweet taste sweet and a sour taste sour.

High School Use Pages Defended By Commission

By PEGGY ANDERSEN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A special House panel investigating the hiring of high school pages for congressional errands appears ready to recommend continuation of the practice, but with tighter supervision.

"It'll be a teen-age group," said Rep. John Myers, R-Ind., a member of the Speaker's Commission on the Pages. "I think the general consensus is that...college students wouldn't fulfill our needs."

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill created the special panel three weeks ago to examine the page system after allegations that some teen-agers had been involved with drugs and illicit sex. The commission's recommendations are expected within days.

"I believe the majority supports continuation of a system using children of high school age," said commission member Charles Wiggins, a former California congressman. Wiggins said he would prefer older pages, "but that's not the way the commission's going."

Lawyer Joel Jankowsky said Wednesday he had been persuaded by the testimony that a high school age system can "be made to function properly and it is probably preferable for a number of reasons."

House Doorkeeper James T. Molloy, whose office oversees the pages, declined comment. His questions and comments indicated he also favors continued use of high-school students, however.

Rep. Bill Alexander, D-Ark., the head of the commission, defended the hiring of high school pages, saying the experience for the "younger, more impressionable" youths "places them on the road to leadership."

"It occurs to me that the nation would be losing a valuable resource if we were to abandon using high school students" and turned to older messengers, Alexander said.

Many panel members appear to favor the continued use of high school students as pages; centralized housing with supervision for the youths, many of whom now live on their own; improved schooling; and limits on the length of time a page may serve.

The youthfulness of the pages, who usually number about 100, has been a dominant concern throughout the commission proceedings. House pages range in age from 16 to 18 and some Senate pages are as young as

14. As an alternative to the page system, some members have suggested using college students, senior citizens, disabled veterans or even a professional message service to deliver messages.

But on Wednesday, the final day the panel heard testimony, it appeared that the commission would reject those options.

The pages perform a valuable service, Alexander said, but "have been exploited and neglected by Congress over the years."

Congress has a responsibility to provide the pages with basic needs, "such as a safe place to live and protection from the threat of crime," he said.

The Capitol architect's office has outlined three options for centralized housing: construction of a new dormitory with an estimated cost of between $7.5 million and $10 million, or the modification of one of two congressional office buildings, with a cost of about $400,000.

Alexander said the panel had discussed specifics on the costs of improving the system, but stressed "the need to economize."

The commission heard its final two witnesses Wednesday — Reps. Lynn Martin, R-Ill., and Caldwell Butler, R-Va. Others have included former pages, members of the House and Senate, House officials, and Capitol Page School officials.

Argentina Moving To Trim Political Parties

By WILLIAM H. HEATH
Associated Press Writer
BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Only six of Argentina's 16 legal political parties are believed likely to qualify under a proposed new law to take part in the national elections the military government promises to hold in 1984.

Under current regulations, a political party needs only 8,000 members to be eligible to participate in national elections. A draft law to reorganize the parties and reduce their number, made public this week, requires a minimum of 30,000 members, or more if the voting population increases.

Of the six parties considered likely to qualify, five are center-left and one, the New Force, is center-right. The center-left five are the Peronists, for more than 30 years the country's biggest political movement; the Civic Radical Union, the Movement for Integration and Development, the Intransigents and the Popular Union.

President Reynaldo Bignone said the statute was evidence that the military regime is "moving dauntlessly toward fulfillment of our promise" to turn the government over to civilians by March 1984.

Most political leaders said they wanted to study the proposed statute before commenting. Jorge Paladino, a leader of the Peronist party, said his initial reaction was that the measure "contains very positive elements."

The last national election was in March 1973, when ex-dictator Juan D. Peron returned from exile and won the presidency. He died the next year and was succeeded by his widow and vice president, Isabel. The military ousted her in a coup in 1976 and has been in power ever since.

A ban on all civilian political activity, imposed after the coup, was lifted last month by Bignone, became president June 27 in a shakeup following Argentina's defeat in the Falklands War.

The draft law is expected to get quick approval from the government's Legislative Advisory Committee, made up of three members from each of the armed forces. It then will go to Bignone to be signed into law.

The statute gives the political parties 13 months to reorganize, hold internal elections and meet the new requirements for recognition by the government and eligibility to participate in elections. The draft statute also requires that 10 percent of a party's members vote in internal elections for the results to be valid.

Mercenaries Lose Appeal Application

PIETERMARITZBURG, South Africa (AP) — A judge today rejected applications by Col. Michael "Mad Mike" Hoare and seven other mercenaries to appeal their hijacking convictions stemming from their aborted Seychelle Islands coup.

Lawyers for the men conferred to decide whether to file a petition to South Africa's highest appeals court to challenge Natal Province Supreme Court Judge Neville James' ruling.

Hoare had applied for permission to appeal against both his conviction and sentence of 20 years in prison with 10 years suspended. At his sentencing last Thursday, Hoare called the penalty "harsh and inappropriate."

James had sentenced the other seven to effective prison terms ranging from one to five years, and they appealed against the convictions only. Thirty-four other mercenaries sentenced to six-month prison terms did not appeal.

James said Hoare's sentence for his conviction on three air piracy counts was severe but appropriate.

"Bearing in mind the fact that a minimum sentence of five years and a maximum sentence of 30 years is laid down by the act in respect of each count, and taking into account the fact that Hoare took a major part in the contraventions in respect of which he has been convicted, I do not believe there is any reasonable prospect that another court would interfere with the sentence," James said.

The mercenaries were found guilty of commandeering an Air India jetliner last Nov. 25 to escape from the Seychelle Islands airport to South Africa after their coup plot was uncovered and government forces attacked them at the airport.

The other seven men are Peter Duffy, 40, a British citizen, Tullio Moneta, 42, an Italian-born South African, Pieter Doorewaard, 28, of South Africa, Mike Webb, 32, a Briton living in South Africa, Ken Dalglish, 32, also British, Charles Goatley, 27, of Zimbabwe, and Vernon Prinsloo, 31, of Zimbabwe.

Arab Women End Their Fast

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eight Arab women, including the wives of some high-ranking diplomats, have ended their eight-day fast to protest the Israeli blockade of Beirut.

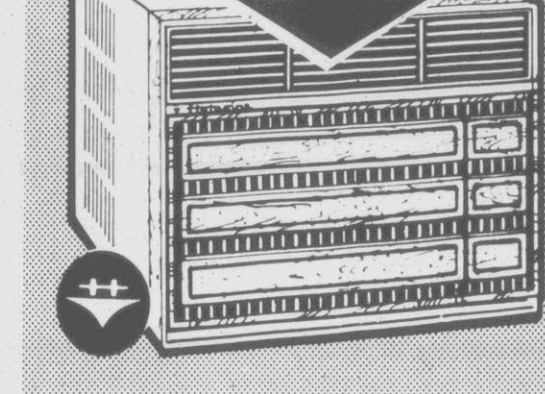

"Events have overtaken our original purpose," said Hala Maksoud, wife of the permanent observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations and an organizer of the fast.

"Israel's latest attack makes us realize it is not the lack of food or water which most endangers the innocent civilians of Beirut, but the rain of bombs. There is not even time for the people of Beirut to die of starvation," she said Wednesday.

The women staged their hunger strike under a tent in Lafayette Park across the street from the White House.

FBI Foils Major Art Robbery

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — An FBI agent posing as a hired gun helped foil a plot by four people to hold up a museum, steal 10 paintings worth $25 million and threaten to shred them unless a ransom was paid, authorities said.

Works by French Impressionist painters Monet, Manet, Degas and American painter John Whistler were targeted for theft, the FBI said Wednesday, also announcing the recovery of about $1.4 million worth of paintings stolen two years ago in Florida.

Four men were arrested for allegedly plotting an armed robbery, which had been set to take place Wednesday, at the stately Hill-Stead Museum in Farmington, a wealthy Hartford suburb.

Two of the suspects were seized at Miami International Airport, allegedly en route to Europe where they planned to negotiate the return of the paintings, the FBI said.

An FBI agent infiltrated the plot and was hired as the gunman who would hold up museum employees while others loaded the paintings into a van, said FBI special agent Richard Farley at a news conference here.

The paintings were to be held for $7.5 million ransom, he said.

The FBI said the conspirators "planned to ransom back the paintings with the threat that the paintings would be shredded, and that the shredded material would be sent to the art editor of The New York Times."

Museum curator Philip Wright said someone "probably came in and took a tour" to get an inside look at the mansion.

Wright, who has been curator for only a week, said the FBI and the museum had been sharing information on the planned theft before his arrival.

The museum, in a sprawling neo-Colonial mansion, houses the private collection of 19th century industrialist Alfred Atmore Pope, who made a fortune in iron manufacturing.

The FBI said the plot called for the undercover agent to take the paintings to New York, where they would be hidden. Two of the men were then supposed to travel to London and begin negotiations with the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, leading authorities to believe the paintings also were in England, said FBI agent Chris Mazzella of Miami.

Two other men were arrested in the recovery of two paintings by Rubens — "Adoration of the Shepherds" and "Presentation in the Temple" — stolen from the home of Jason Witney Jr. in Fort Lauderdale Fla., in 1980.

The FBI identified the target paintings at Hill-Stead as "Guitar Player" and "La Posada" by Manet; "Haystacks" of 1889, "Haystacks" of 1890, "View of Bay in Maritime Alps" and "Boats Leaving the Harbor" by Monet; "The Tubs," "Dancers" and "Jockeys" by Degas, and "The Blue Wave" by Whistler.

Charged in the thwarted Connecticut robbery were Walter J. Kregelstein, 48, of East Hartford, Conn.; his brother, Francis R. Kregelstein, 46, of Rocky Hill, Conn.; and Lighthouse Point, Fla., an investment broker; Israel D. Glassman, 50, of Margate, Fla., also an investment broker; and Philip Shapiro, 41, of Lauderdale, Fla., who owns the Interlude Motel in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Arrested in the theft of the two Rubens paintings were James G. Tortoriello Jr., 37, of Berwyn, Ill., who also listed an address of Lantana, Fla.; and Robert Montanus, 40, of Boca Raton, Fla., an investment counselor.

Agents said Shapiro had been negotiating with Tortoriello about the Rubens paintings. Tortoriello, Montanus and Shapiro, arrested at a Marriott Hotel room in Fort Lauderdale, where the two stolen Florida paintings were recovered, were charged with conspiracy to transport stolen goods in interstate commerce, the FBI said. They were being held in the North Dade County jail pending a bail hearing today.

Francis Kregelstein and Glassman were arrested at Miami International Airport and were also being held pending a bail hearing. Walter Kregelstein, arrested at a shopping mall in West Haven, Conn., was being held at the Danbury federal prison in lieu of $500,000 property bond.

Shapiro was also charged, along with the Kregelstein brothers and Glassman, with violating the Hobbs Act, which prohibits interference, delay or obstruction of foreign or interstate commerce by robbery or extortion.

Speaking of Your Health...

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

Basic First-Aid Kit for the Home

What do you consider to be a near perfect first-aid kit to have around the house? The one we have is in a constant state of clutter. I hate to think what we'd do if we needed to find things in a hurry. — Mr. L.K.B., Calif.

Dear Mr. B.:

A health kit should be "revived" every few months to be sure that it can serve its real purpose if an emergency arises. First-aid kits tend to be unwieldy because so many unnecessary things are piled into them. Their disarray makes them worthless when supplies are needed in a hurry.

A moisture-proof box with compartments is ideal. Items should include:

1. Pair of scissors, safety pins, eye dropper, spoon, tweezers, and rubber tourniquet.

2. Two rolls of bandages, 1 inch and 2 inches wide.

3. Sterile gauze packets, 2x2 inches and 4x4 inches. A dozen of each is sufficient. These bandages and adhesive tape should be replaced once they are used.

4. An antiseptic solution for cleaning superficial wounds. Avoid iodine because it can become highly concentrated as it gets older and may itself cause painful skin burns.

5. Small wooden or metal splints about 12 to 18 inches long and 4 inches wide can rest at the bottom of the kit. These are to be used to support a possible broken arm or leg.

6. A triangular piece of fabric cut from a 40-inch square to be used as a sling or an outer covering of a wound.

7. A flashlight kept in good condition and inspected regularly for bulb and batteries.

Many doctors suggest that every first-aid kit should contain a small amount of ipecac to be used to induce vomiting if there is any suspicion that someone has swallowed a poison.

This is an uncomplicated kit and should be able to handle simple emergencies. Fortunately, the paramedic network that now exists all over America supplies highly trained men and women when a major emergency arises.

The paramedics, working in conjunction with policemen, firemen, and ambulances, are responsible for saving countless lives during emergencies. This vital part of a health team can stay in immediate contact with doctors and with emergency room personnel by short wave for instructions in complicated cases.

Every home and every automobile should contain such a health kit. One of the great possessions that members of a family can have is the knowledge of cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR). These lifesaving courses are given at Red Cross centers, hospitals, universities, and most schools teach the technique of mouth-to-mouth resuscitation and heart massage. There are few more gratifying experiences than the joy of being able to save a life by the knowledge of CPR.

They are very friendly and lively," she said, "but when they think they are alone, their faces often assume a sad expression."

She said they are taught school courses in Arabic, participate in sports and another recreational activities and will be taken on tours to other parts of Switzerland.

Miss Begert estimated the cost of the three-month program at the Pestalozzi home at about $47,000, including return fares flight to Damascus. It is financed by Palestinian organizations, grants from the Swiss government and private groups.

Downpour's Toll

TOKYO (AP) — Torrential rains that ravaged the state of Nagasaki in southwestern Japan last month caused damage to residential, commercial and agricultural areas estimated at the equivalent of $1.18 billion, local government officials said today.

More than 22 inches of rain drenched seven southwestern states July 23-25, triggering flash floods and landslides that left 307 people dead and 43 others missing, according to police. The death toll in Nagasaki alone was 291, with seven people reported missing.

Proposed Amendment's Text

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is the text of the proposed balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution approved by the Senate on Wednesday. Section 6, dealing with the national debt, was added by the Senate on Tuesday.

Section 1. Prior to each fiscal year, the Congress shall adopt a statement of receipts and outlays for that year in which total outlays are no greater than total receipts. The Congress may amend such statement provided revised outlays are no greater than revised receipts. Whenever three-fifths of the whole number of both Houses shall deem it necessary, Congress in such statement may provide for a specific excess of outlays over receipts by a vote directed solely to that subject. The Congress and the president shall ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement.

Section 2. Total receipts for any fiscal year set forth in the statement adopted pursuant to this article shall not increase by a rate greater than the rate of increase in national income in the last calendar year ending before such fiscal year, unless a majority of the whole number of both houses of Congress shall have passed a bill directed solely to approving specific additional receipts and such bill has become law.

Section 3. The Congress may waive the provisions of this article for any fiscal year in which a declaration of war is in effect.

Section 4. The Congress may not require that the states engage in additional activities without compensation equal to the additional costs.

Section 5. Total receipts shall include all receipts of the United States except those derived from borrowing and total outlays shall include all outlays of the United States except those for repayment of debt principal.

Section 6. On and after the date this article takes effect, the amount of federal public debt limit as of such date shall become permanent and there shall be no increase in such amount unless three-fifths of the whole number of both houses of Congress shall have passed a bill approving such increase and such bill has become law.

Section 7. This article shall take effect for the second fiscal year beginning after its ratification.

Refugees On A Vacation

TROGEN, Switzerland (AP) — Forty Palestinian children whose Beirut orphanage was reduced to rubble are spending three months in Switzerland, far from the horrors of war.

The children, 7 to 12 years old, are among 600 orphans flown to various European countries. Their orphanage was bombed shortly after the start of the Israeli invasion June 6, and the staff took the children by road to Damascus, the Syrian capital 60 miles east of Beirut.

Twenty-four of the children arrived Monday in this town in northeastern Switzerland to be the guests of the Pestalozzi Children's Home, which was founded in 1946 to look after World War II orphans.

Beatrice Begert, a spokeswoman for the home, said 15 other young Palestinians who are in summer camps in southeastern Switzerland are expected to come to the home soon.

She said they are taught school courses in Arabic, participate in sports and another recreational activities and will be taken on tours to other parts of Switzerland.

Miss Begert estimated the cost of the three-month program at the Pestalozzi home at about $47,000, including return fares flight to Damascus. It is financed by Palestinian organizations, grants from the Swiss government and private groups.

Fear Impact On Disarmament

WASHINGTON (AP) — The growing tendency to use outer space for military purposes could hurt disarmament efforts and spur a new arms race to secure the "high ground" of the heavens, according to an independent group's study.

The report by the Worldwatch Institute, which usually supports environmentalist causes, said 70 percent of U.S. and Soviet space activity is devoted to the military.

"The militarization of space is a reality and most people don't realize it's happening," said Daniel Deudney, a senior researcher at Worldwatch who wrote the report.

Military space spending in the United States, including that by the Defense Department and the Central Intelligence agency, surpassed civilian expenditures in 1977 and has been widening the gap ever since, he told a news conference.

Deudney said military considerations have overshadowed civilian space projects of both superpowers.

Automakers Say Cannot Meet Seat Belt Deadline

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Two automobile manufacturers say it will be impossible for them to meet a federal court order requiring all new cars to be equipped with automatic seat belts or air bags beginning in the fall of 1983.

spite heated complaints from consumer groups and the insurance industry. A three-judge federal appeals court told the Transportation Department that it must enforce a rule that requires cars to be equipped with either air bags or seat belts which fasten automatically when a person sits in a car. But the court acknowledged that the department's attempt to eliminate the rule has made it impossible for the restraints to be installed by next fall — as originally had been required. Instead, it extended the deadline to Sept. 1, 1983. Within hours after the ruling two manufacturers, Chrysler and American Motors, issued statements in Detroit saying it could not meet the Sept. 1, 1983 deadline. AMC said it could not make automatic seat belts available before 1985. The company also said it considered such belts "unwarranted in light of the fact that we already have an effective system (of belts) on our cars today." Chrysler spokesman Bob Heath said his company would "have to make a detailed study to determine how long it would take to put passive restraints in our new cars," but that the September 1983 deadline was impossible to meet. A spokesman for General Motors said the automaker would not comment until the government makes its next step known.

Robert E. Maugh, automotive safety director at Ford Motor Co., said, "There are a number of practical problems associated with the reinstatement of this standard in addition to its timing." "The effect of the court order is to require us to divert scarce resources in an effort to meet a standard that, at the very least, will require significant change to resolve the many open issues," he said. The ruling was hailed by the insurance industry, which had filed suit to force implementation of the requirement, and other supporters of the passive restraint rule. "It was a victory for auto safety and the American consumer," declared Lowell R. Beck, president of the Association of Independent Insurers, which represents about 500 companies. Consumer advocate Ralph Nader called it "a great victory for saving the lives and limbs of hundreds of thousands of Americans," but predicted continued opposition and attempts at delay from the auto industry. The insurance industry has said that mandatory automatic seat belts or air bags could save 10,000 lives annually and more than $2.4 billion a year in medical and other costs. But the automobile industry has argued that there are continuing problems with air bags and that consumers are not willing to accept mandatory automatic seat belts that could add up to $100 to the price of a car. The three-judge panel gave the Transportation Department until Oct. 1 to tell the court whether the automakers will be able to meet the deadline and, if not, provide "adequate reasons" the September date should be extended. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration rescinded the passive restraint rule last October, prompting the insurance industry to file suit. Two months ago the three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia concluded the agency had failed to support its decision to scrap the rule and violated law by doing so. But it asked NHTSA to come up with better reasons for junking the rule. Wednesday the court rejected the agency's response and issued its deadline. Raymond Peck, the safety agency's administrator, issued a statement saying the court ruling was being "thoroughly examined" and no decision had been made on "our appropriate course of action." The auto industry has vigorously fought the automatic restraint rule which is a holdover from the Carter administration. When Peck said last October he was lifting the rule, critics accused him of caving into pressure from the financially plagued industry. Rep. Tim Wirth, D-Colo., whose subcommittee on consumer protection deals with seat belts, said on Wednesday the latest court decision signaled a "major setback for the administration's capricious attempt at deregulation simply for its own sake without regard to its impact, its cost, or its implications for the health and safety of Americans."

Gene-Splicing Patent Denied 2 Universities By Patent Office

By THOMAS MURPHY
Associated Press Writer
SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A patent that would give two universities control over products developed through a gene-splicing technique has been delayed by the U.S. Patent Office. The licensing fees from such products could be worth millions of dollars to Stanford University and the University of California, both pioneers in the genetic engineering process.

The two institutions learned Wednesday that the government is seeking clarifications in their patent application. But none of the questions raised by the Patent Office poses an "insurmountable" problem, and the universities expect the application to be approved, said Stanford spokesman Mike Goodkind. The universities already hold a patent on the cloning process, and the patent at issue would cover the genetic materials known as transformants that are developed through gene-splicing, he said. Different transformants can produce a variety of compounds that previously were available only through natural processes. Patenting the transformants essentially would give the universities control over all products resulting from them, Goodkind said. But he added it would be "naive" to assume that other researchers wouldn't soon come up with another means of achieving the same results. Since the first patent was issued in 1980, the universities have collected $1.4 million by licensing 73 private companies to use the technique. The cost of an individual license is $10,000 initially and $10,000 per year. Several licensees, which include Genentech, Cetus Corp., Bristol Myers, Dupont and Eli Lilly, plan later this year to market products made through gene-splicing. Among those are human insulin, a growth hormone that might help the victims of dwarfism and a vaccine for a disease affecting swine. Goodkind could not estimate how much revenue the universities might receive from licensing the original patent or the transformants created under it. Some say it could exceed $100 million.

of the processes already occur naturally. But scientists believe the naturally occurring processes happen too infrequently to be useful in commercial gene cloning, Reimers said. The Patent Office also noted a visiting professor involved in the original gene-cloning research — Robert B. Helling — has declined to sign a disclaimer of inventorship. Stanford's patent attorney, Bert Rowland, has asked for more information about Helling's role in the research project. Stanford says the process was invented by Stanley N. Cohen, a professor of genetics at Stanford, and Herbert W. Boyer, a professor of biochemistry at the University of California at San Francisco. The universities applied for the patent on transformants in 1974, but it was not possible to patent life processes at that time. In 1980, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that such matters could be patented and the universities obtained the patent on the basic cloning process, Goodkind said.

The two are currently constructing a 112-foot, all-steel clam boat for Richard Myers of Cape Charles, Va., at their Wanchese firm, the Roanoke Island Steel and Boat Works. Nude Driver Is Gate-Crasher

WASHINGTON (AP) — A nude driver and his companion have been arrested after crashing their car into a White House gate during a chase with police. Joseph Petro, a Secret Service spokesman, identified the driver as Roland Martin, 29, of suburban District Heights, Md. A passenger, Carl Wellman, 35, of Washington, also was arrested, Petro said.

Wellman was clothed and did not scuffle with officers. Petro said Martin was charged with assaulting an officer and that both men were charged with damaging government property. He said he did not know when they would appear in court.

The District of Columbia police communications office said the vehicle had been the object of a police chase just before it rammed the steel gate.

Glaser Back In Movie For TV

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Paul Michael Glaser and Dee Wallace will star in "Wait Till Your Mother Gets Home," an NBC-TV movie about a macho high school football coach's summer as a "househusband." Glaser, the former star of "Starsky & Hutch," takes charge of the household when his wife gets her first job in 15 years. Miss Wallace now is appearing in the summer box office smash, "E.T., The Extra-Terrestrial." The film will be directed by Bill Persky, who won multi-E Emmy awards on the "Mary Tyler Moore Show."

Officer Charles Rhodes said the pursuing cruiser spotted the Martin car speeding about eight blocks northwest of the White House and followed.

APPRECIATION SERVICE

GRIFFTON — The New Covenant Temple Holy Church will give its pastor, Evangelist Ollie Harris, an appreciation service tonight at 7:45 p.m. Sunday at 11 p.m. the Rev. B. T. Williams of Kinston will bring the message and at 3 p.m. the Rev. Ray Fraizer of Jacksonville will be in charge.

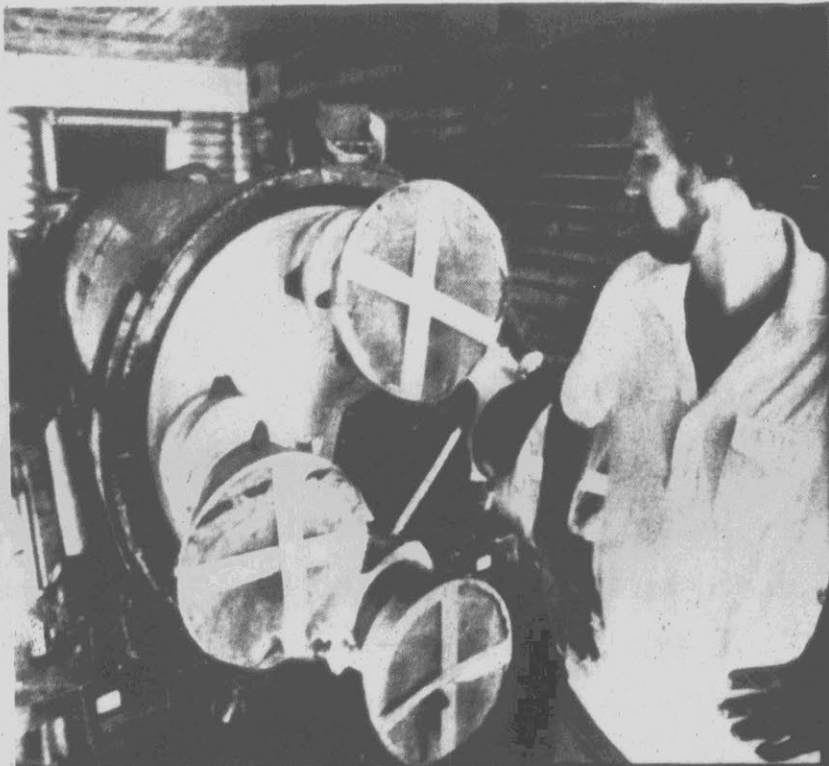

"It doesn't appear there was any real motive," Petro said. "The vehicle turned at a high rate of speed right into the gate."

After the crash, Martin ran bleeding from the car onto Pennsylvania Avenue, where he was tackled and taken into custody by security guards.

No weapons were found in the car, and there was only slight damage to the gate on the northwest corner of the White House grounds, according to Petro.

He said Martin emerged from the car "bleeding profusely from the face. He ran into the middle of Pennsylvania Avenue, where he was subdued. He was nude — not a stitch."

Petro said that "it took six or seven officers to arrest him. It took some time to subdue him." He said that

Economic Woes, Guerrilla War Upset Angolan Life

By BARRY SHLACHTER
Associated Press Writer
LUANDA, Angola (AP) — A Cuban army officer walked into Quintas and Funao, a once-fashionable boutique in the center of this capital city, and asked if clothes like those on a mannequin were for sale. They weren't.

At a counter where French perfumes and American cosmetics once were sold, only two items filled the glass display cases — fountain-pen ink and tissue paper.

The shop on Rua de Salvador Correia was fortunate. Many others had nothing at all to sell.

Seven years after independence from Portugal, Angola's economy is in serious difficulty. Its fertile central highlands, home of the industrious Ovimbundu tribe, are cut off except by air by guerrillas of the South African-backed National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, known by its Portuguese abbreviation, UNITA.

The guerrilla war, plus relatively low world prices for its diamonds and oil, and the lack of material incentives to keep workers on the job, plague the country's Marxist leadership. As a result, the regime is hard-pressed to pay the upkeep for 12,000-18,000 Cuban troops and several thousand Soviet and East German advisers, Western diplomatic here sources said.

Once a net exporter of food, Angola now imports most of its requirements. Its people speak of chronic shortages and complain about exorbitant prices they must pay for essentials on the black market.

The paucity of consumer goods and long lines at ration shops directly hurt productivity.

A foreign engineer here to advise on local tire production said a third of the workers at a Luanda plant may be absent at any time because they will be spending the day seeking food for their families.

The lucky worker rationed one or two cartons of cigarettes or cases of beer at the official price can trade them at values 10 times, and secure what his family needs in fresh fruit, meat or a plumbing-repair job, a Portuguese resident said.

President Jose Eduardo dos Santos, 38, the country's leader since the 1979 death of independence leader

Agostinho Neto, said in a speech June 28 that economic goals were not being met and that a set of "emergency" measures were being considered to replace the current five-year plan.

He also disclosed growing political apathy among Angola's 6.5 million people. The president, complaining of a "demobilization of the masses," told a conference of his governing Workers Party: "We cannot permit our people to stop believing in the party because we have nothing better than (it) at this moment."

The Workers Party is linked with the Population Liberation Movement of Angola, the Marxist guerrilla organization that was victorious in the civil war that followed independence.

In the past, reasons cited for the economic problems have been sabotage by National Union rebels and the threat of destabilization from South Africa, whose troops have carried out a series of raids into Angola in recent years. The incursions were aimed at destroying bases used here by guerrillas fighting for the independence of neighboring South-West Africa, or Namibia, which is administered by South Africa.

But with a settlement on Namibia, now seen likely, many Angolans will no longer tolerate continued hardship in what is one of Africa's most resources-rich countries, diplomats say.

The government will have to come up with workable solutions — or new excuses — for the economic problems, the diplomats maintain.

A Namibian agreement would mean a closing of the southern border, cutting the National Union guerrillas off from South African supplies.

Already there are popular expectations in Angola that normalization of U.S. relations would follow Namibia's independence along with a hefty infusion of American capital, accompanied by a cornucopia of consumer goods.

However, the United States has made a Cuban withdrawal from Angola a condition for full diplomatic ties and, unofficially, for a Namibian settlement. Angola has said that the Cubans would depart when the South African threat disappears.

Peace in Angola would help settle an officially estimated 500,000 people displaced by civil war, and the hundreds of millions of dollars now spent on maintaining foreign troops could be rechanneled into revitalizing agriculture.

Relief officials and others have noted a drop in the level of fighting between the National Union guerrillas and the Angolan army, triggering speculation that negotiations with the rebels might be under way.

Protecting Illegal Users

WASHINGTON (AP) — No contaminated marijuana will reach illegal users in this country as a result of Florida's plan to destroy marijuana fields with the herbicide paraquat, the Justice Department has told a federal court.

The department's assertion came in a brief filed Wednesday in U.S. District Court here in response to a suit by NORML, the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws.

On July 30, NORML asked for an injunction to block spraying of paraquat on marijuana in Florida, saying the government failed to prepare an environmental impact statement on the possible danger to human health from the spraying.

In its response, the Justice Department said an environmental impact statement wasn't required because the spraying in Florida "is not a major federal action significantly affecting the quality of the human environment."

Paraquat kills marijuana plants within 24 to 72 hours of spraying. However, if the plants are harvested immediately after spraying and removed from sunlight, the marijuana remains saleable and some residue of the paraquat may remain on the marijuana, the Justice Department said.

Awarded $700 For A Solution

WHITESBORO, N.Y. (AP) — The state Department of Civil Service has awarded Clifford Leuthauser $700 for finding a $2.31 solution to a problem that has puzzled state engineers for the last 10 years.

Leuthauser, a Utica Psychiatric Center maintenance supervisor, was unhappy with $139 latches the center intended to install on patients' doors to keep them closed but not locked.

"We kept thinking we had to keep them closed with a latch device or a roll device. I've done some cabinet work, and I got to thinking we could keep some of them closed with magnets," he said.

The estimated savings in Utica alone from the magnet door catches, which cost $2.31 apiece, is $7,000.

Karl Felsen, the department's public relations director, said Leuthauser was awarded $700 for his idea.

'Taxi' Team Is Upbeat Over Prospects With NBC

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — "Same time, better station."

That's the on-air promotional pitch for "Taxi," which begins its re-creative season Sept. 30 on NBC after four award-winning years at ABC.

NBC announced last week that the new "Taxi" would be driving the same route. That means Thursdays at 9:30 p.m. Eastern time, giving NBC the best single night on television.

It starts with "Fame" at 8, then a highly touted new comedy called "Cheers," followed by "Taxi" and TV's finest hour, "Hill Street Blues." NBC did us all a favor by moving "Taxi" into the spot held down by "Gimme a Break." Now we don't have to switch the dial to watch "Hill Street."

"I'm really excited about being a part of that Thursday night schedule," says James L. Brooks, executive producer of "Taxi." "It's kind of ambitious for NBC to program a quality night like that."

In fact, NBC plans to exploit that schedule's superiority over other nights at all three networks. The network plans to launch a campaign that will sound like this: "For those who think there's not much good on television, watch NBC on Thursday night."

ABC turned off the meter on "Taxi," which won best-comedy Emmys in each of its first three seasons, because of eroding audiences. One of the only ABC comedies to play up to the public's intelligence, "Taxi" ranked 10th and 13th in the ratings race in its first two seasons. Last year, it was 53rd.

"Barney Miller," the other sophisticated ABC comedy, finished 54th. That show was also dropped from the schedule, but that was because the producers were running out of ideas and they pulled the rug out themselves.

Brooks reacted angrily to cancellation of "Taxi" last spring, calling it "an incompetent decision." After NBC came to the rescue, ABC axed the series' reruns. ABC is allowed two plays on each episode, but the network stopped rerunning "Taxi" June 10. In contrast, "Barney Miller" is getting a full summer showing.

"I guess it was a business decision," says Brooks. "ABC didn't want to do any advertising for NBC. They didn't take a financial bath, but they lost some money."

Brooks is smitten with third-rated NBC and its chairman Grant Tinker. (Brooks worked at MTM Productions when Tinker ran the company.) "Their style sets them apart," says Brooks. "They're not as fat."

There's no difference creatively in producing "Taxi" for ABC or NBC. Brooks says ABC never nixed story ideas or steered the program away from the producers. But ABC had developed an indifferent attitude.

"We were a borderline situation in their minds. They weren't excited about our show in meetings, and we got little support." Not surprisingly, Brooks sees "an infusion of energy and support for us (at NBC.) It's sort of like getting a new job."

In a business driven mostly by ratings, not quality, "Taxi" was an iffy show at ABC. But all this attention might attract more viewers, particularly if "Taxi" wins its fourth Emmy in four years next month.

"I care more about the numbers than ever before," says Brooks. "All of us are more nervous than other seasons." That comes from the added responsibility of performing well for a network that showed faith.

"It's a nice and uncomfortable feeling," he says. "But NBC clearly made a business decision. They weren't doing anybody any favors. They were doing what's best for the corporation."

"This was not an acqui-tion born of desperation. We fit into a certain plan that they have. I just hope this Thursday night thing works."

'Hill Street Blues' Has A Rival For Emmys

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Hill Street Blues," a surprise winner of nine Emmys for television performance last year, found itself waiting next to another NBC rookie, "Fame," in the lineup of today's Emmy nomination hopefuls for this year.

The nominations for the best prime-time television programs and performances of the past year by the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences were set for the Pasadena Civic Auditorium, site of the 34th annual awards ceremony.

ABC will broadcast the awards show from the auditorium Sept. 19.

"Hill Street Blues" is the program many are watching to see whether it will repeat its surprise performance of last year. The NBC police show got a whopping 21 nominations last August and received nine Emmys. But the series may be edged by "Fame," the finger-popping show adapted from the hit movie.

NBC also was likely to get multiple nominations for "Love, Sidney," a comedy series starring Tony Randall, and the mini-series "Marco Polo."

"Taxi" was likely to be nominated for a fourth Emmy as best comedy series, but NBC, not ABC, would be the one to take the bows. ABC canceled the three-time Emmy winner and it was snatched up by NBC for the fall season.

ABC seemed certain to get nominations for at least three of its ABC Theater presentations. One of them, "Divorce Wars," which starred Tom Selleck and Jane Curtin, already has received the prestigious Humanitas Award. The others are "The Elephant Man," an adaptation of the stage play, and "My Boy, My Child," a story about abortion starring Vanessa Redgrave.

The network also could get nominations for "Inside the Third Reich," a mini-series based on the memoirs of Albert Speer, who ran the economy of Hitler's Nazi Germany.

"M-A-S-H," always a favorite both at the Emmys and in the ratings, was sure to pick up some nominations for CBS. The upcoming season is the last for the comedy series and multiple-award winner Alan Alda.

"Lou Grant," the newspaper drama canceled by CBS, may garner a few parting nominations. The show and its star, Edward Asner, have won before, and its cancellation caused a storm of protest.

CBS could also pick up nominations for "Desperate Lives," a strong story of teen-age drug addiction written by Lew Hunter; "Coming Out of the Ice," a movie about an American sent to Siberia by the Soviet authorities, and "The Patricia Neal Story," about the actress' fight to recover from a stroke.

"The American Playhouse," an effort to revive original drama on TV, should bring nominations to the Public Broadcasting Service.

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Faye Dunaway, Alan Bates and Sir John Gielgud star in "The Wicked Lady," a Cannon Films production that has begun production in London, England.

Miss Dunaway plays Lady Barbara Skelton, a real titled lady of 17th century England who, "bored with country life, goes out at night as a highwaywoman, robbing and killing," the films' producers said.

The film is based on the book by Magdalen King-Hall, with a screenplay by Edna O'Brien and Michael Winner.

Facing Facts Of College Life Better Than Acting

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Reporter
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Felice Schachter, the dark-eyed youngster who starred in "The Facts of Life" television series, is facing the facts of college life and liking them better than TV.

At the threshold of a promising acting career, Felice gave up her role in the popular sitcom, electing to enroll at Brown University in Providence, R.I.

Felice, a professional actress since infancy, was doing TV commercials before she could walk.

The 18-year-old beauty, unlike many another movie youngster, never fell victim to the so-called "awkward stage" experienced by such celebrated superstars as Judy Garland and Shirley Temple.

She simply rearranged her priorities, choosing to forego her weekly stint in "The Facts of Life" for occasional appearances when she can fit them in. Jody Foster made the same sort of decision two years ago when she entered Yale as a freshman.

No one is more aware than Felice that teenage performers in youth-oriented movies are in demand right now, e.g., "Porky's," "Fast Times at Ridgemont High" and "The Pirate Movie."

Before matriculating last fall, Felice starred in her first movie, "Zapped."

Felice hopes to broaden her horizons in the event she ever quits show business. She isn't studying acting and hasn't taken part in school productions.

Now that she's completed her freshman year, Felice is more enthusiastic than ever about getting a sheepskin. She revels in the freedom, the college town atmosphere, attending football games and hockey matches.

She lives in a coed dorm on campus with other first-year students. Felice says nothing she has done as a model or actress has been as rewarding as being an undergraduate.

"College is more important to me than my career right now," she said, brushing her long, dark hair to one side.

"This has been the best experience of my life — meeting new people, forming relationships and getting into academics."

"There will always be movies and television, but I'd probably never have gone to college if I hadn't made up my mind to do it last year. I wanted to be with my age group, entering school with my own generation."

"Most of my classmates know I'm an actress, but they don't make any fuss over me. I like the freedom and the loose atmosphere on campus. I have much closer relationships now than I did in Hollywood."

Felice has hedged her bets somewhat. If important and lucrative modeling jobs come up, she cuts classes to go to her native New York to work for a day or two.

Should a major motion picture role be offered, however, Felice would think twice and try to work during summer vacation. There is a slight possibility she would drop out of school to work for a semester.

"Last year I took a couple of weeks off to appear in a few episodes of 'Facts of Life,'" Felice said. "But my studies didn't suffer. I'm a B student and I enjoy my courses."

"I haven't decided on a major. I took required freshman courses and a couple of classes in theater arts."

"Next year I may try out for some of the school plays. My first priority is education, but I'm a career actress."

It was suggested that perhaps Felice might pass up the role of a lifetime by sticking to her studies. The thought had occurred to her. "There will be other parts in the future. If they want me now, maybe they'll want me later."

"I don't think about show business or agents and managers now. I'm still young so I don't have to rush anything. I'll have more life experience when I'm in my 20s and I'll be a better actress."

"I should graduate when I'm 21. I'd like to spend some time traveling in Europe and learning more about life before I get back to work. Some people are too compulsive about acting."

All in the Family

For some families, like the Kennedys, Rockefellers, and Longs, politics seems to run in the blood. Another such dynasty may be extended in today's Tennessee primary. Twenty-six year old Cynthia "Cissy" Baker is bidding for a congressional seat from the 4th District. Ms. Baker has a pretty pedigree — one grandfather was the late Everett Dirksen, minority leader of the Senate from 1959-69, and her other grandfather was a Representative from Tennessee. Cissy's grandmother was also elected to the House to fill out her husband's term after his death. If elected this fall, Cissy will join her father, Sen. Howard Baker, Jr., on Capitol Hill, becoming the fifth family member in 3 generations to serve in Congress.

DO YOU KNOW — Which state has the most congressional seats?

100-Year-Old Piano At Museum Has Experienced Colorful Past

By ROCH THORNTON

Woman Gets A New Heart

HOUSTON (AP) — A surgical team performed a heart transplant operation on a 43-year-old woman early today, a spokesman at the Texas Heart Institute said.

Spokesman Pat Kiley said the team, headed by heart transplant pioneer Dr. Denton A. Cooley and Dr. Barry Kahan of the University of Texas at Houston Medical School, performed the operation at St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital.

It was the second transplant operation here during which surgeons used a new drug to help prevent the body's rejection system from rejecting the transplanted heart, he said.

The recipient, who was only identified by her age and sex, was in good condition following the surgery, Kiley said.

The first patient to undergo heart transplant surgery here in which Cyclosporin A was used, a 43-year-old man, remains in good condition here, making normal post-operative progress, Kiley said. The medication also has been used in several transplants at Stanford University.

Cyclosporin A, an immuno suppressant, has shown encouraging ability over previously used drugs to interfere with the body's rejection system, Kiley said. He said doctors hope that the drug will resolve infection problems that have hindered heart transplants in the past.

senator and the famed Gen. John "Black Jack" Pershing. It survived a fire that wiped out most of Pershing's family at the Presidio in San Francisco in 1915. And then, it disappeared for decades.

The 100-year-old piano now belongs to the Wyoming State Museum, donated recently by a woman who bought the piano 25 years ago from a disgruntled Cheyenne landlady for $100. A penniless soldier had left it in lieu of a rent payment.

"We consider it the greatest donation we've received in 1982," said museum spokeswoman Linda Rollins. "It's in remarkably good condition for its age."

Testimony to the piano's resilience is the fact that pianist Luciano Trebbe played a concert on it to mark its debut at the museum in May.

The piano's eventful history began in 1882. Wyoming rancher Francis E. Warren — Wyoming's first state governor and a U.S. senator for 39 years — bought the piano new that year from the Chickering Piano Co. of Boston, Mrs. Rollins said.

Warren gave it to his daughter, Helen Frances, when she married the 44-year-old Pershing in 1905.

Pershing led the U.S. force that pursued Mexican freedom fighter Pancho Villa in 1916, and also commanded the American Expeditionary Force in France in World War I.

He was away from home on Aug. 15, 1915, when the upper story of his family's quarters at the Presidio burned down and his wife and three daughters were killed. Pershing's 5-year-old son — and the Chickering — survived.

Mrs. Rollins said that the piano eventually was shipped back to Warren's Belvoir Ranch southwest of Cheyenne. After several years at the ranch, the piano disappeared — until 1947, the year 14-year-old Judy Mason became its new owner.

Miss Mason, now married and living in San Diego, said that her mother had given her $100 and told her to buy the best piano available. She answered a newspaper advertisement placed by a rooming house landlady, who told her that the piano was "horrible" and that she probably wouldn't want it. But the young girl knew she had found a bargain.

After taking possession of the piano, she sent its number to Chickering Piano Co. and learned that Warren had bought it 75 years earlier. The senator's old housekeeper also identified the instrument, according to Mrs. Rollins.

Miss Mason moved to California, leaving the Chickering with a friend in Phoenix, Ariz., because the new home in San Diego was too small.

"We didn't contact her," Mrs. Rollins said. "She just came out of the blue last September or October and said she felt the piano should be back home so the citizens of Wyoming could enjoy it."

Invisible Playmate Said OK For Child

NEW YORK (UPI) — An invisible playmate is a sign of a healthy imagination in a child but a troubled mind in an adult, say two university professors.

Their views are described in an article in the July issue of Omni magazine.

Author Patrick Huyghe says both psychiatry professor Humberto Nagera of the University of Michigan Medical Center and psychology professor Jerome Singer of Yale University have studied the subject extensively — Nagera, for more than 10 years in England and the United States, and Singer, for much of his professional life. Singer is director of Yale's graduate program in clinical psychology.

Singer estimates from a third to half of all children have imaginary playmates at some point during their first 5 or 6 years of life.

The experts say these fantasy creatures are constructive devices that allow youngsters to rehearse various roles and prepare for adulthood.

They "help children learn, experiment, deal with stress, and master problems," Nagera says.

Huyghe says a recent study by Singer and two other Connecticut psychologists found children with make-believe companions to be less aggressive and less fearful than other children.

At beginning of ceremony, priest feeds flames with boards inscribed with names and ages of believers.

HIWATARI

The belief is that those whose minds are free of earthly thoughts feel no heat and are not burned—and it's central to the fire-walking ceremony of "Hiwatari" at the Yakuo-in Temple at Mt. Takao, a Tokyo suburb. It's a Buddhist rite, symbolizing hopes for peace and long life, first held in 744; only priests took part until 1950, when it was opened to the public. Priests, followers and tourists watch an 18-foot-square pyre of cedar-wood blaze and then they walk barefoot over the embers. There were more than 100 fire-walkers at the ceremony shown in these pictures and no injuries were reported.

Photographed by Seichi Kanise and Tsugufumi Matsumoto.

The cedar-wood pyre has burnt down: now believers and tourists walk barefoot over the embers.

Attending priests blow solemn notes on their shell trumpets.

A priest leads celebrants in ritual white robes across smoldering ashes.

Heat from cedar-wood blaze blurs view of priest and spectators waiting to begin fire-walking ceremony of Hiwatari.

Suspect Slippery Bar Caused Circus Mishap

By JAY JORDEN
Associated Press Writer
DALLAS (AP) — A slippery bar apparently caused a 19-year-old trapeze artist to lose his grip while attempting a 3½-somersault flip, slamming into his father, plunging 30 feet to a safety net and breaking his neck, the performer's brother says.

The two injured performers — Gino Farfan and his father, Armando Farfan — had checked their rigging before attempting the stunt in front of 15,000 people, said Tato Farfan, 13.

"Right before he went to do his turns, his right hand ripped off the bar," Tato said Wednesday. "We don't know what caused the accident except that the bar must have been slippery."

He said high humidity during Tuesday's performance of the Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus at Reunion Arena could have caused the bar to become slippery an hour into the three-hour show.

"We are always trying to keep the bars dry," said the younger brother, who was not performing with his family — billed as the "First Family of the Air" — because of a dislocated elbow.

He said Gino, who was "very good" at the stunt which few flyers have mastered, may also have had trouble with rigging.

"He was having trouble straightening himself out," Tato said. "One cable could have come loose. My father and brother tried to make sure before the show that everything was OK."

Gino, who has performed the 3½ somersault for the past six years, suffered a broken neck in the fall, said Baylor University Medical Center spokeswoman Elaine Hart.

"We show no paralysis at this time," said Ms. Hart. "There have been X-rays taken, and he does have a break in three places in his neck."

She said the youth was in stable condition. His father was treated for a badly bruised hip.

After Gino fell, the show continued and circus officials brought out clowns to distract the audience while emergency personnel arrived.

"We were all too busy trying to get him out of the net and into the ambulance to worry about how it happened at the time," Tato said.

In the stunt, the young flyer turns 3½ times in the air at speeds up to 60 mph before being caught by the legs by his father, who is on another trapeze.

But Tato said when his brother loosened the grip on his right hand to straighten himself and connect with his father, "it slipped and just dragged the other one off. If he had whipped off the bar sooner, he would have just hit the net. If he had whipped off later, he would have hit the frame. But my father was right in the middle."

"There are only a handful of people, maybe five or less, who perform the 3½ somersault," said Joe Gold, regional marketing director for Ringling Bros.

On July 10, Miquel Vazquez, a 17-year-old trapeze artist with Ringling Bros. circus, became the first person to successfully complete a quadruple somersault from a flying trapeze during a public performance.

Bess Truman To Leave Hospital

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Former first lady Bess Truman, listed in serious but stable condition today for a kidney ailment, may be able to go home by the end of the week, officials said.

The 97-year-old widow of President Harry S. Truman is in the intensive care unit at Research Medical Center because of her advanced age, Dr. Wallace Graham said Wednesday.

He said Mrs. Truman suffers from a diminishing kidney output caused by arterial sclerosis of the blood supply to the kidney. She was taken to the hospital Sunday suffering from hyperkalemia, a buildup of potassium caused by diminished kidney function.

Mrs. Truman's blood pressure, pulse and respiration rate have stabilized, Graham said.

Husband-Wife Plan Bay Area

By LARRY RYCKMAN
Associated Press Writer
SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Dean and Marjorie Macris have big plans. Two counties worth, in fact.

They are the planning directors for San Francisco and Marin counties, which are linked by the Golden Gate Bridge, but have ideas on growth as far apart as the bay that separates them.

The hilly metropolis must wrestle with mass transit, how high the skyscrapers should go and how to attract new business. Marin, which prides itself on the natural beauty of untouched coastlines, redwood stands, rolling hills and beaches, must figure out how to preserve all that as it cautiously grows.

Despite often divergent goals at the office, there's no conflict at home. In fact, the Macrises think having two planners around the house is kind of nice.

"You both know what's going on when you complain," Mrs. Macris joked.

"It's nice to have that available to you on very personal terms, when you have complete trust in the person you're asking for advice," said Macris, who sometimes seeks advice from his wife because "Marge specializes much more in the legal areas than I do."

Planning may become even more of a family affair around the Macris house.

"Our kids (were) very turned off by the subject," Mrs. Macris recalls. "We talked about it so much at home, it was boring for them. But now our girl is thinking about getting into planning — she understands more what's going on."

Macris, 50, is in charge of

Again Going On Vacation

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is scheduled to fly to California on Aug. 11 for a 13-day vacation at his ranch near Santa Barbara, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes says.

The trip will be punctuated with several public appearances, Speakes told reporters Wednesday.

En route to Santa Barbara, Reagan will stop in Billings, Mont., for the 100th anniversary of the city's founding. He will deliver a speech there and attend a fundraiser for the Republican candidate for the Senate, Larry Williams.

In the afternoon, Reagan will stop in Los Angeles to attend another fund-raiser — this one for George Deukmejian, the Republican candidate for governor. Afterward, the president will fly by helicopter to his ranch.

Reagan will return to Los Angeles on Aug. 16 to speak to the Veterans of Foreign Wars convention and for private social activities, Speakes said. After spending two nights at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel, the president will go back to his ranch on Aug. 18.

Cars Collided On Wednesday

Cars driven by Lisa Gail Jones of 109 Fox Run Circle and Anthony Polifrone of Courtney Square Apartments collided about 4:50 p.m. Wednesday on Greenville Boulevard, three-tenths of a mile east of the Evans Street intersection.

Police estimated damage from the mishap at $900 to the Jones car and $100 to the Polifrone vehicle.

Model Making Movie Debut

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Model Christie Brinkley will make her motion picture debut in "National Lampoon's Vacation," a Warner Bros. film starring Chevy Chase.

Beverly D'Angelo will star opposite Chase. Imogene Coca, in a rare film appearance, will play Aunt Edna. Harold Ramis directs from a screenplay by John Hughes, Ramis and Chase. Matty Simmons produces.

San Francisco's planning department, which employs more than 100 people. Mrs. Macris, 47, heads Marin's 25-person department.

All building permits — from small-room additions to towering downtown office buildings — are subject to review by the planning directors. After studying the proposals, they make recommendations to county planning councils, which have the final say.

Both develop county growth policies in keeping with the needs of San Francisco's 665,000 residents and the 225,000 people in Marin County.

"The city's interests are considerably different than they are in Marin County," Macris said. San Francisco encourages growth, while its neighbor across the Golden Gate Bridge would rather see slower development.

"Marin County," Mrs. Macris said, "is a very environmentally oriented county."

The couple met at the University of Illinois in 1957. While he continued his studies, she graduated and landed a job in Chicago's planning department. He soon followed. They were married in 1959 and moved to San Francisco nine years later when Macris was offered a position as the city's assistant planning director. Mrs. Macris eventually landed a job in the Marin planning department.

The couple says they planned to plan, and now they're glad they did.

"Back then, there was a big demand for planners because all the suburbs were growing," Mrs. Macris said. "I was concerned about what was happening, and I wanted to do something. I wanted to be involved in problem solving and social betterment."

"You get a great feeling when you accomplish something," Macris said. "I saved an old 11-story building that the developer wanted to demolish. Not too many people can do that."

"Marin County is a pretty nice area," Mrs. Macris added. "And I hope I'm doing something to keep it that way."
