Sunbird Plans Upgrade Greenville Air Service

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Sunbird Airlines, which began commuter service to the Pitt-Greenville Airport in August 1980, announced Wednesday the upgrading of the service with a new 15-passenger airplane and improved scheduling which includes the addition of a direct flight to Richmond and Baltimore and non-stop service to Charlotte.

Hugh Bingham, executive vice president of Sunbird, said the airline's eight-passenger Cessna based in Greenville has been replaced with a 15-passenger turbo-prop Beechcraft C-99. The new $1.5 million plane, with a maximum cruising speed of 300 mph, "can carry much additional luggage," Bingham noted, including 800 pounds of baggage in a cargo pod underneath the aircraft and 600 pounds in the nose of the plane.

"Today, we have three departures and three arrivals," Bingham explained. "Effective September 15, we will have four departures and four arrivals" at Pitt-Greenville.

The new schedule, according to the official, will include a non-stop flight to Charlotte, direct flights to Richmond and Baltimore (Baltimore-Washington International Airport, with a stop in Raleigh), and two non-stop flights to Raleigh.

In all, the new scheduling provides direct or non-stop service to Baltimore-Washington and Charlotte twice each day, non-stop flights to Raleigh-Durham three times a day, and direct service to Richmond once each day.

"We've spent a great deal of time in trying to make the right connections," Bingham emphasized, as he pointed out the benefits of flying out of Pitt-Greenville on Sunbird. "The fare structure ... joint fares" and other considerations make it less expensive.

For example, Bingham said "the combination of fares" will allow a person to fly one-way from Pitt-Greenville to Boston for $145, while the cost of flying from Kinston would be $190. One-way flights to Charlotte from Greenville are $70, compared with $75 from Kinston, while flights from Greenville to New York's LaGuardia Airport are $95, as compared with $127 from Kinston.

However, Bingham pointed out that the price of the ticket is not the only advantage in using Pitt-Greenville. He pointed out the "convenience ... the free parking — you cut down on the parking fees, the driving time and cost of gas."

Bingham acknowledged that the upgrading of services is a "calculated risk" for the airline, but noted that replacing the smaller and slower Cessna with the twin-engine turbo-prop Beechcraft provides "better utilization of aircraft and crews (two crews are based in Greenville with the plane)."

In light of the present economic clim, Bingham said

Sunbird has "had a pretty tough time of it. It hasn't been easy for us, but I feel like we can make cuts and adjust where we have to in order to survive. We're determined to make it work. We're going to make it work."

According to Bingham, one plus for Sunbird is its affiliation with Mountain Air Cargo, one of the largest and a "very profitable" air cargo carrier which hauls freight for United Parcel Service, Federal Express, Purolator and other firms. Sunbird, he pointed out, is able to "cost share" Mountain Air on a number of expenses.

Both Mountain Air and Sunbird are based at Little Mountain Airport at Denver, N.C., 30 miles north of Charlotte.

Higher Taxes, Spending Cuts Said Required

WASHINGTON (AP) — Contrary to claims by the Reagan administration and Republicans in Congress, congressional economists say tax increases and spending cuts will be needed again next year to produce steadily declining budget deficits.

The effect of this year's $98.3 billion tax hike and nearly $30 billion in spending cuts will be to stabilize the deficit at slightly over $150 billion for each of the next three years, the Congressional Budget Office said Wednesday.

"In order to achieve significant reductions in the budget deficit, further spending cuts and tax increases will be necessary," the CBO added in a report to Congress.

The CBO forecasts for 1983, 1984 and 1985 are for deficits of $155 billion; $152 billion and, again, $152 billion. The deficit for the current fiscal year, ending Sept. 30, was pegged at $112 billion.

Those estimates are far above the ones contained in the Reagan administration's most recent prediction this summer, as well as the budget plan Congress wrote in June.

Both the administration and Congress say the tax increase and spending cuts enacted this summer, as well as other future steps required by the budget, will reduce deficits from year to year.

Middle East Peace Proposal Rejected

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's new peace initiative for the Middle East sends Israel an unmistakable message that victory on the battlefield should be followed by compromise at the bargaining table.

"It is not unknown in human history that in the wake of victory comes magnanimity and compromise," a senior official told reporters Wednesday night.

Reagan is asking Israel to give up its claim of overall sovereignty over the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip which the Israeli leadership wants to keep.

While the plan holds out the promise of a lasting peace for Israel as the chief incentive, Israel would have to yield most from its previous positions.

But the Israeli Cabinet today rejected the president's proposal. Deputy Prime Minister David Levy called it "one-sided, anti-Israel."

Secretary of State George Shultz said he found it difficult to believe "that Israel would reject the idea of peace, ... reject the idea that they should be recognized by their neighbors as a state, ... reject the pledges of support for their security that the president gave."

The secretary's remarks were in an interview on the ABC-TV program "Good Morning America."

The president called on Israel to immediately declare a freeze against any new or expanded Jewish settlements in the West Bank or Gaza Strip, among the lands it occupied in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Reagan did say — significantly — for the first time that the United States would oppose creation of a separate Palestinian state on the West Bank and Gaza Strip as many Palestinians have demanded. But Israel has said it would never allow creation of such a state anyway, and clearly has the military might to prevent it.

Reagan also said that while Israel's military successes in Lebanon have proven its military superiority in the region, armed force "alone cannot bring just and lasting peace to Israel and her neighbors."

Reagan's plan envisions giving self-rule to the 1.3 million West Bank and Gaza Palestinians "in association with Jordan," saying this offers the best chance "for a durable, just and lasting peace." The nature and degree of Jordanian control isn't spelled out and is left for negotiations.

A senior administration official said the borders of the West Bank would have to be redrawn to reflect Israel's security needs, which he said remain a paramount consideration.

Reagan appeared far more sympathetic to Palestinian needs than he has been previously and appeared even to show sympathy for Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas whose evacuation from Beirut was completed Wednesday.

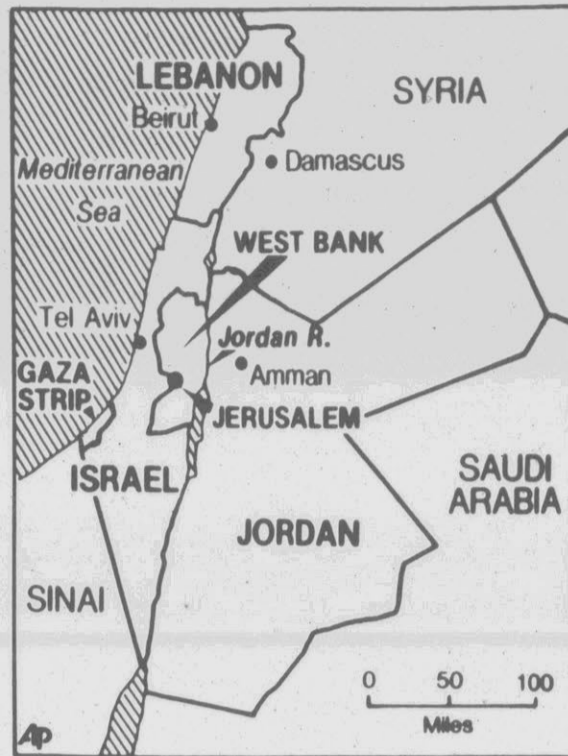

He did not differentiate between the PLO and Palestinians when he said, "The departure of the Palestinians from Beirut dramatizes more than ever the homelessness of the Palestinian people."

"Only through broader participation in the peace process — most immediately by Jordan and by the Palestinians — will Israel be able to rest confident in the knowledge that its security and integrity will be respected by its neighbors," he said.

Reagan also made what could be a key concession to the PLO, which in the past has refused to accept U.N. resolution 242 on a Middle East solution in part because it dealt with the Palestinian problem as a "refugee problem."

Said Reagan: "Palestinians feel strongly that their cause is more than a question of refugees. I agree."

Unmistakable Message For A Compromise

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan stood ready today to send Secretary of State George Shultz to pursue any encouraging response to his "fresh start" formula for giving self-government to the Palestinians and achieving peace in the Middle East.

The first formal response from Israel was far from encouraging. Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Cabinet, meeting in Jerusalem, rejected Reagan's proposals as expected.

Deputy Prime Minister David Levy called the president's plan "one-sided, anti-Israel and contradictory to the spirit of the Camp David accords."

A key element of the Reagan plan was his call for "self-government by the Palestinians of the West Bank and Gaza in association with Jordan," an arrangement he proposed to be negotiated by all parties.

The 1978 Camp David framework, which Reagan described as "the only way to proceed," called for self-determination by the Palestinians but made no mention of ultimate association with Jordan.

Reagan also called on Israel to freeze further settlements in the West Bank of the Jordan River.

But Levy, speaking at a dedication ceremony today for the West Bank settlement of Maale Adumim, said, "Settlement in the land of Israel will not stop."

In Washington, Shultz said he found it difficult to believe "that Israel would reject the idea of peace ... reject the idea that they should be recognized by their neighbors as a state ... reject the pledges of support for their security that the president gave."

The secretary's remarks came in an interview on the ABC-TV program "Good Morning America."

Earlier, a senior administration official who insisted on anonymity said that while there are no immediate plans for Shultz to go to the Mideast, the secretary would do so if there were indications it would be "propitious and fruitful."

Asked today about Israel's refusal to halt its West Bank settlement program, Shultz said that "if what is wanted is a chance for peace ... there has to be some statement of intention to negotiate about what is going to happen in those territories."

The secretary said King Hussein of Jordan "has taken the president's proposals and is taking them seriously and is studying them."

Resistance By Poles Goes On

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Protesters set two buildings on fire and fought with police in the southwestern copper mining center of Lubin Wednesday night, the official PAP news agency reported today.

It was the second straight day of street riots in Lubin that have left at least two people dead and dozens injured. Official reports said

4,050 people were arrested during protests in Lubin and 11 other cities Tuesday, the second anniversary of the founding of the suspended Solidarity labor union.

PAP said two groups of "several hundred people" gathered by Lubin's post office and hospital Wednesday morning and then marched on the local Communist Party headquarters, building barricades and fighting with police into the night.

It said two buildings were set on fire, but did not provide further details.

PAP and sources in Lubin said the city was calm today, but there was no word on injuries or arrests in the daylong protests. One mine official said the city's copper operations were working "normally," but would not comment further.

Official reports said police opened fire during protests in Lubin Tuesday, killing two demonstrators and wounding 12, three of them seriously. Twelve police officers also were reported injured.

The government said late Wednesday that a body had been found "in the area of disturbances" in the Baltic port of Gdansk, birthplace of Solidarity, but did not say whether the 22-year-old man was a victim of the riot there.

Witnesses arriving in Warsaw said a man fitting a description of the victim was seen laying on the ground in a pool of blood after being hit on the back, but the reports could not immediately be checked.

Candlelight Wedding Held

In a candlelight, double ring ceremony, the marriage of Barbara Stokes Williams and William E. Whitehurst was solemnized Saturday at 8 p.m. in Hollywood Presbyterian Church. The Rev. C. Wesley Jennings, pastor of the couple, officiated at the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Guy R. and Ruby Stokes Cutrell of Route 2, Greenville. She is also daughter of the late John B. Stokes. The bridegroom is the son of the late Earl E. and Mozell G. Whitehurst of Elizabeth City.

A program of organ music was presented by Mrs. R.M. Stewart of Greenville. Mack and Elaine Dixon, brother-in-law and sister of the bride, sang "You Light Up My Life," "Love The World Away" and "The Wedding Prayer" as the benediction.

The bride, given in marriage by her sons, Stephen and David Williams, was escorted by Stephen Williams. She wore a formal gown of light blue polyester styled with a yoke of sheer polyester with lace inserts and a high neckline edged in lace. The flared skirt fell from a natural waistline. She wore a spray of baby's breath in her hair. Her bouquet of white silk carnations and baby blue silk roses were tied with white streamers and centered her lace-covered childhood Bible.

Attending her sister as matron of honor was Brenda Stancil of Tarboro. She wore a formal gown of pink polyester with a print organza overskirt in shades of pink, blue and white designed with a square neckline and empire bodice. Ruffled caplet sleeves on the print organza accented the gown. She wore a spray of baby's breath in her hair and carried a long-stemmed white silk chrysanthemum tied with baby blue ribbon.

William E. Whitehurst Jr. of Nags Head served his father as best man. Ushers were Steven Whitehurst of Winterville, son of the bridegroom, David Williams of Grimesland, son of the bride, and James C. Stokes of Greenville, brother of the bride.

The mother of the bride wore a street-length dress of mauve polyester with a matching lace jacket. She was remembered with a white silk carnation. Erlene Revell of Shallot and Shirley Godfrey of Elizabeth City, sisters of the bridegroom, were given white silk carnation corsages.

Ruth H. Stokes, sister-in-law of the bride, directed the reception which was held in the church fellowship hall. Bette Mills, aunt of the bride, and Lucille Diener poured punch. After the couple cut the first slice, cake was cut by Zula Rouse. Rice bags were passed out by Sheri Stokes, Laura Stancil, nieces of the bride, and Rebecca Revell, niece of the bridegroom. Eleanor Farr presided at the bridal register.

After a wedding trip to the mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee, the couple will live near Grimesland.

The bride is employed as a deputy clerk with the Pitt County Clerk's Office and the bridegroom is a magistrate for Pitt County.

Of course no business lunch would be complete without the post-lunch check fumble. Two hands meet over a check and begin tugging it back and forth like a Ouija board while each fights over the tax deduction.

Maybe it's my age, but I've been leaning toward the Nobody's Business lunch. We just meet and skip Part I and Part III and concentrate heavily on Part II.

I don't have to lie about how my book is coming along. They don't have to lie about how their business is. Our

The business is usually a one-liner like, "Then it's agreed. We invite Alan Alda to speak at the Mother-Daughter Sodality breakfast. Does anyone have his address?"

I gave up the "business lunch" five years ago during Lent and never got back to it.

I did this when I realized I was sitting through three-hour lunches that were called to reach a decision on something and the decision was made to postpone any decisions until a luncheon meeting could be called for the following week.

Male or female business lunches are all the same. They're essentially divided into three parts.

Part I is the "You look wonderful" speech. It's a business lunch staple. It doesn't matter if you've just taken a cab over from a recovery room, you'll still get the "You look wonderful" speech.

Part II is "What are you going to have for lunch?" This consumes a good 3/4 of the business lunch as everyone has to justify what they are ordering. They are on a diet. They're going to be eating dinner late. They've been eating at their desk all week. They never get croissants FRESH! Eating with you is a special occasion and they're going to pig out.

Part III is the business speech. You have to be quick to catch them as they're sandwiched in between. "I've got to have your recipe for the cake you brought to Evelyn's anniversary party" and "Don't anyone move. I can't find my parking ticket to validate."

Dear Abby

Love Can't Be Bought With Money

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Perhaps there's no answer for me, but I must try. Because of multiple medical problems, I'm dying much sooner than I should. My heart, however, is dying faster.

I was divorced from my daughter's mother when my daughter was 3. Since that time I have given my daughter everything she ever wanted. She is now 19, attending college locally — five miles from my home, and one mile from her mother's home.

My daughter drives a beautiful sports car — a gift from me. She doesn't pay one cent for fuel, upkeep, repair, taxes, etc. I do. She has no money worries, thanks to the trust fund I established for her. She wears beautiful clothes and jewelry — gifts from me. Everything I own has been willed to her with no strings attached. All these years I have remained unmarried, and have skipped in order to give my daughter all these things.

My daughter doesn't come to see me. She drove over here seven weeks ago and stayed five minutes. She's never spent a holiday with me. Christmas Eve she came to pick up her presents and didn't even sit down. When she talks with me on the phone, it's always in a sarcastic, hateful manner. Once she came right out and told me she didn't care if she never saw me again!

I am barely able to move around and must remain on oxygen 22 hours a day due to cardiopulmonary disease. I am going into a VA nursing home because I can no longer care for myself physically. My daughter won't even consider handling things for me. She wrote saying, "I don't want you to talk to me about death." I haven't, but I do use the phrase, "If I'm not around anymore."

If anyone has any suggestions, I would appreciate them. However, don't tell me to tell my daughter I love her. I've told her a million times.

BROKENHEARTED IN ABILENE, TEXAS

DEAR BROKENHEARTED: Your story is not new. ("How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child!" — Shakespeare.) If there's a message in your sad letter, it's this: Love cannot be bought with money.

***

DEAR ABBY: There have been many theories explaining why some people are always late for appointments, meetings, engagements, etc., but do you have any idea why some people have a mania for being early?

C. IN THE BRONX

DEAR C.: People with a mania for being early probably have a phobia about being late.

***

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Bill in Columbus, Ohio": My sympathy, Bill, for I suffer an advanced stage of "quatro-genarianism" and, what's more, I've been exposed to "quinigenarianism" through my husband.

It could be worse, I guess, as it's well-known that if these conditions persist, one can develop centenarianism, and the prognosis is not too terrific!

ELIZABETH IN SEATTLE

DEAR ELIZABETH: Rejoice! Your chances for developing centenarianism (translation, "making it to 100") are vastly better today than they were 50 years ago. And I think that's pretty terrific.

***

DEAR ABBY: Your column about men and women in the service who rarely wrote home, much to the dismay of their parents, brought back memories. During World War II, I served aboard the U.S.S. Salomonie.

I didn't write home, so my mother wrote to Franklin D. Roosevelt, then the president of the United States!

Capt. Holbrook called me in for a little talk and requested that I write to my family. He also requested that I ask them not to write to the president again.

That did the trick. I wrote home every week thereafter.

COOKING IS FUN!

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: I've bought croutons, seasoned various ways, in packages. Now I'd like to make the croutons myself. Have you come across a recipe that tells how? — HOME COOK.

DEAR HOME COOK: I found a recipe for seasoned croutons in "Herbs: From Cultivation to Cooking," compiled by the Herb Society of Greater Cincinnati. The recipe is the sort you want because it gives three different ways of seasoning the croutons.

In the introduction to the book, the editor comments on the use of herbs: "In our recipes, we suggest using fresh herbs whenever possible. There is no doubt they are more flavorful than the dried ones. However, remember the rule-of-thumb-equivalent of fresh versus dried is: USE TRIPLE THE AMOUNT OF FRESH HERBS TO DRIED HERBS. That is because dried herbs are much stronger in flavor. Dried herbs should not be stored in bright light and should not be kept for more than one year."

CROUTONS,
HERB SEASONED

One half of a 1-pound loaf of bread will make about 3 cups of croutons. Day-old French bread is the best, but other may be used. Slice bread and cut in 1/2-inch cubes. Spread on a rimmed baking sheet. Bake in a 300-degree oven for about 10 minutes. Then coat croutons with one of the following herb butters, and bake at 275 degrees for about 30 minutes, turning occasionally until brown and crispy. Store in covered jar. Croutons are excellent additions to salads and soups and make marvelous casserole toppings.

GARLIC BUTTER

1/4 cup butter
1 clove garlic, finely minced
2 tablespoons minced fresh parsley

Emphasis Is On Defense

Conventional wisdom says that the day a political candidate is elected, his or her attention is devoted to winning the "next" election.

In the various administrations and in the Congress, particular attention is given to legislation of tangible benefit to constituents; and in times of economic hardship it has become almost mandatory to support measures broadly labeled as "social programs" — increasing their funding as troubles mounted.

We point now to a change. During our present recession (depression?) there have been efforts to avoid creating additional hardship in the public sector by keeping most of the old programs in place but getting more out of them with smaller appropriations. Rather than increased public spending, reductions are on most people's minds.

Tradition has been upstaged in another sector.

While the administration and Congress try to trim social program spending, they have also committed the nation to a large increase in spending for the oft-postponed catch-up on national defense requirements.

True, once those huge sums are put into the economy, there will be more job opportunities, more income among the workers (and more tax revenues) than would otherwise be available. Parenthetically, the time-lag is considerable; but the new emphasis in times like these has not been seen since World War II.

It suggests people elected to responsible posts at the national level are increasingly concerned over national security ... to an extent that self-interest is relegated to the back-burner.

That would be an eye-opener.

Wisdom To Tell Difference

"The only good news I can bring you ... is that in spite of Jim Hunt and Jesse Helms, the Cape Hatteras Lighthouse is reshaping itself," Congressman Walter B. Jones, tongue in cheek, told a Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce breakfast Tuesday morning.

He was referring to the Save The Lighthouse effort which brought adversaries GOP Sen. Helms and Democratic Gov. Hunt together on television and elsewhere. As the Lighthouse fund raising got under way the sand mysteriously began building up around the lighthouse.

Everything the politicians get into doesn't turn out that well, but perhaps God will grant them the ability to do something about the things they can do something about, and leave alone those things that they cannot help ... and the wisdom to tell the difference.

Postal Reg: 15:9

By DAVID WIGGINS
Elkin Tribune

The envelope reeks of government.

You may have found one in your mailbox recently.

Don't be fooled; the United States Testing Authority survey is a scam.

The notice on the envelope says "official testing survey" in capital letters. Elsewhere, the envelope promises that a gift worth $260 to $2,000 "has already been awarded to you."

The envelope says, "Your name was selected and computer printed as part of an important television testing survey. This testing survey is to be opened by the addressee or a family member only." Big deal, huh?

So big, so urgent, in fact, that it came stamped bulk rate, not first class.

With a return address marked as 1681 Kennedy Causeway, North Bay Village, Fla., and a business zip code to boot, the thing looks legitimate, even to the notice to the postmaster: "Contains: Dated material. If undeliverable, follow Postal Reg: 15:9."

You didn't know you could get so many words on the front of a No. 10 window envelope, did you?

That's small potatoes compared with the stuff inside.

A reader from Thurmond sent me the whole bundle last week and asked me to check it out. I did.

By the way, the seemingly urgent message to the postmaster about following regulation 15:9 is the U.S. Testing Authority's way of saying, if the envelope is undeliverable — believe it or not — "throw it away."

Inside, I found a manila card made to look like a computer card, but it's not.

There were eight test questions, real toughies, like: Do you like to watch sports or news? And What type of TV entertainment do you enjoy most? Check one or more boxes: comedy shows? musical variety? dramatic shows? game shows? talk shows? They left out cartoons and commercials.

On the flip side, we are warned not to fold, bend or staple because the card will be "computer scanned." Then there's a brief message to the recipient who doesn't want to collect a fabulous prize. U.S. Testing tells the recipient to "destroy this computer card so that it is rendered unusable. Do not pass this test response form to a friend. It will not be accepted by anyone other than the addressee or a family member."

Wow! Such an honor to be among the chosen few asked to provide such insight into TV viewing.

Of course, I left out the best part. Just below this message is a "make check or money order payable to U.S. Testing" in the amount of $14.80 (nice round figure) to "Cover shipping, handling, registration, processing and postage."

And the gifts? Why there are 20 of them, ranging from a $274.99 Farberware continuous clean convection turbo oven and $75 cash to a $2,000 cash gift. In between, some lucky testee has already been awarded a Sony Betamax video recorder, or a Zenith color television ... and because "you have been computer selected to participate" in the test and "your answers to the test questions are of such importance to us ..." The letter never says why your responses are so important.

I'll wager it has something to do with your $14.80 check or money order.

If you receive or already have one of these official-looking envelopes in the mail, why don't you make like the postmaster and follow postal regulation 15:9.

Other Editors Say Queens Die Proudly

(The Raleigh Times)

Queens, they say, die proudly. So went Ingrid Bergman, the queen of film queens and a pioneer 20th-century liberated woman.

For nearly 50 years, from "Intermezzo" to "Golda" Bergman's strength had equalled her beauty. It had to, to prevail over the worst that time and fickle fame and cancer could do. Her stormy life, memorable face, compelling personality were wrenching symbols of emotion amid social change.

A male fan says he had in the 40s and 50s put her on a high pedestal of purity — as had most Americans, male and female. Her cropped hair and virginal face in "For Whom the Bell Tolls" touched a yearning for feminine honesty and simplicity. In "Casablanca" she was all heart-breaking romance and high-mindedness. The idealized American dream of womanhood fit the Swedish beauty like a glove. She was married to a doctor and she loved her little girl.

Then "Stromboli" erupted — her illicit liaison with Italian filmmaker Roberto Rossellini, whose child she conspicuously carried before her divorce or his. "It confused us terribly," says her male fan. "All our training said 'Reject her!' but our hearts didn't want to. Instead we resented the people, especially women who were so vicious about her."

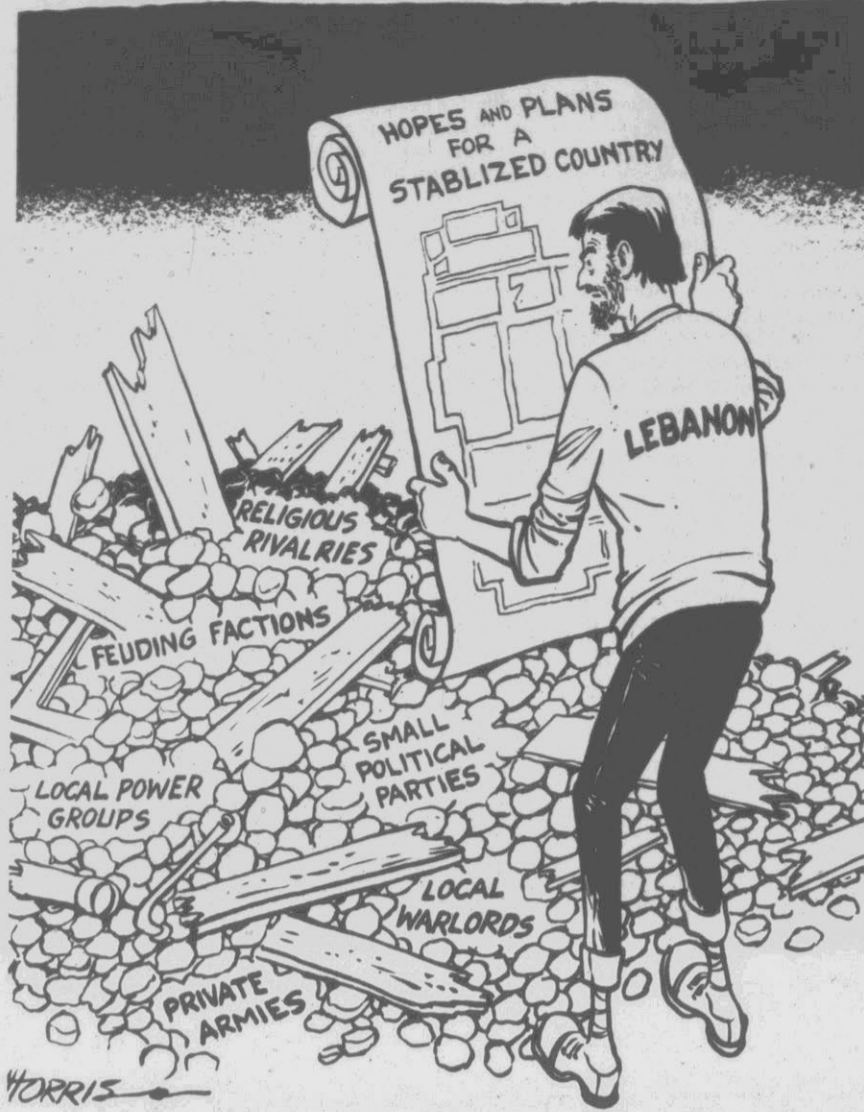

Today, people under 35 can't imagine that viciousness. The last scene of "Joan of Arc", showing Bergman crying to Christ as flames leaped round her, was cut when theater owners protested at this blasphemy from an adultress. "I didn't think it would upset the whole world, but it did," said Bergman. "It was absolute hell.... I felt the newspapers were right. I was an awful woman, but I had not meant it that way."

A successful comeback in the more tolerant 1960s brought more detachment. "I've gone from saint to whore and back to saint ... you never know when people will change their minds again."

This time they didn't. And unlike Greta Garbo, the earlier Swedish film enchantress, Bergman did not flee to the shadows when her face grew lined. Staying power was predictable from a woman whose refusals to compromise were legendary — who had declined to pluck her eyebrows, change her name, cap her teeth or lose weight to suit Hollywood's whims.

"Our days are counted," she said not long before her death. "You can't worry about them." It is a message as memorable as the rest of Ingrid Bergman.

NOT THE IDEAL BUILDING MATERIALS!

EDUCATION CRISIS

Attrition In Teachers

By MAXWELL GLEN and CODY SHEARER

LOS ANGELES — It may be time to rewrite the old maxim that "those who can, do; those who can't, teach." Today, a more appropriate adage might be: "Those who can teach, quit."

Such is the conclusion of a recent federal study, which has confirmed what many of us have long feared: The public school environment discourages creativity and encourages attrition among the best teachers. For millions of Americans on their way back to class this month, the implications are obvious.

Teachers have had to contend with a calamitous mixture of the old and new. On top of the continuing burden of prickly parents and prowling principals, they've encountered unprecedented limits on salaries and resources and a dwindling student population. It's the milieu that sends so many of them packing.

Moreover, many of those who have left entered the teaching ranks with high ideals only to find that success doesn't come easy. For teachers of all ages, says the study, the classroom environment has made once-routine achievements all the more difficult.

"Schools are organized today in such a way that people who are bright and able can't survive more than 10 years," said Phillip Schlechty, an associate dean of the University of North Carolina's Education School and co-author of the federal study.

As opportunities for math and science whizzes in the technology field expand, further teacher attrition may be inevitable. Teaching is also no longer one of the only career options open to women and understandably loses, dollar for dollar, in competition with professional schools for the best minds.

But the apparent crisis that's jeopardized the education of American children may have a silver lining. Over the next five to 10 years, the teaching ranks will undergo a dramatic turnover. During this period, close attention to the roots of attrition might yield changes that could make schools the meccas of learning they're meant to be.

Barring the improbable — namely big boosts in operating revenues — it's reasonable to suggest that affordable incentives exist. Some of them would include:

- *Indexing wage scales and linking tenure to student performance;
- *Allowing teachers to have collective control of departmental curricula, free (as is legally possible) from outside forces;
- *Encouraging academic competition between schools, in the hope of engendering respect for the learning environment.

Though these approaches would guarantee school boards a host of headaches with teachers' unions they might help shift the point of teaching from career preservation to learning. The better teachers would thrive, not suffocate, in a system where the ultimate measure is the students themselves.

Perhaps best of all, though a more long-term byproduct, a deliberate rejiggering of the classroom environment would reverberate at the sources whence new teachers come. As the measure of quality changes, one might presume, so will education students.

But all this will fail or succeed on the basis of how well Americans reprogram education into the national agenda. "Until this nation gets serious about its educational system and begins to look to bright, young people who are well-motivated, the situation isn't going to improve," J. Myron Atkin, dean of Stanford University's School of Education, told us recently. "If we articulate some sense of national purpose, then Americans are going to rediscover the role of schools in helping achieve their objectives. But if we don't, and remain a fragmented, special-interest society, I can't have much confidence in the future of public schools."

Indeed, whom we encourage to teach will probably say a lot about where the nation is headed. It's a selection process that could be as important as any presidential election, if not more so.

No Privacy For Reagan

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) —

The mountaintop overlooking President Reagan's ranch has been dubbed "Violation of Privacy Peak" by White House staffers irritated at network camera crews trying to take pictures of the vacationing chief executive.

Each day, crews from ABC, CBS and NBC trek up into the Santa Ynez Mountains and focus powerful lenses down on Reagan's ranch, about 2½ miles away, hoping for a picture of the president horseback riding or doing ranch chores.

The competition for the closest spot has been gradually escalating with the arrival of more and more powerful equipment on each Reagan vacation.

One network correspondent privately calls it "the silly millimeter war."

This trip, there is unanimous agreement among the crews that CBS took top honors with a motor powered reflector telescope lens usually used for astronomy work.

CBS cameraman Greg Amadon said the network was renting the lens, rated at a maximum 40,000 millimeters, for $600 a week from a company in San Francisco.

On a recent clear morning, CBS was able to zoom in on the president walking from his ranch house to his stables. Viewers saw the president brushing down his horse and riding away.

The CBS pictures are so good that ABC producer Leo Meindlinger said he is thinking about using a similar lens on future trips.

NBC producer Jim Lee said his crew's lens, while not as big as the one used by CBS, is so powerful that it can't be used at full strength because heat waves and haze distort the picture. ABC and CBS have a similar problem, and it shows up with a wavy picture on the news.

The Reagan staff is not alone in its concern about the loss of Reagan's privacy.

"It offends my sensitivity to privacy," admits CBS producer Susan Zirinsky. However, she argues Reagan gave up his right to privacy when he ran for president.

Even so, she said the crews stay on the mountain long enough only to get a shot of Reagan's activity, usually four or five hours a day, and are not camped out at the observation post around the clock.

The networks' lens and camera equipment stood underneath a tent on the mountaintop to shield it from the sun during the day. At night, all the equipment is protected by a guard who also watches over a microwave transmitting dish.

For his part, the president is not concerned about the intrusion, according to one aide.

"I think he thinks it's a little silly," said the official. "It's the same stuff every day. He feels sorry for the guys (cameramen) who have to go up there every day."

A powerful white Arabian thoroughbred named El Almain has taken over at the ranch as First Horse, replacing Little Man, who died earlier this summer at age 20.

The new First Horse was a gift to Reagan before his inauguration from Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo.

There was concern about El Almain because he was so spirited that he used to rear up on his back legs and paw the air when he was saddled up, and he caused the other normally good natured horses on the ranch to kick and bite.

However, El Almain recently underwent surgery transforming him from a stallion to a gelding, and that has made a big difference.

"The president rides El Almain everyday now," says an aide. "It's calmed down a lot. The president has had no problem with him."

Strength For Today

READY TO GIVE

"Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it." Strange as it may seem, these words are found in the Bible (Ps. 81:10). This is but a specimen of the oft-repeated Biblical declaration that God is more anxious to give to us than we are to receive. Jesus was constantly calling upon men to ask, seek, and find. Paul called upon converts everywhere to ask for God's gifts with confidence, to pray without ceasing, to open their minds and hearts to the divine presence.

One cause of frustration, however, is that some Christians want to hand God a time schedule and a list of the gifts which they think they particularly need. But God has a time schedule of his own, and a list which is an improvement on those of self-interested supplicants. Blessings will come when God wants them to come, and they will be of his own choosing. And we should never forget that God does care and that he is eager to provide for us bounteously. — Elisha Douglass

Economy Given Mixed Signals

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Bright signals have been transmitted from many directions of late — Wall Street and the White House, especially — and now the question is whether the display has any more economic meaning than the northern lights.

It does if you believe in the Index of Leading Indicators, which in July rose for the fourth straight month. It might have less significance, however, if you look at a few other measures, such as the business illiquidity.

The leading indicator measurement does indeed give reason for optimism. As Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said, it offers "encouraging evidence that economic recovery is about to get under way." But how much "recovery?"

That term is one of the most overworked and least understood in the entire dictionary of economics.

Statistically, you can have what is termed a recovery when economic expansion is at a rate of only 1 or 2 percent a year. But it would be such an anemic recovery that people other than economists might not even feel it.

A healthy recovery would be in the range of 5 to 7 percent a year, and for at least a few months it might even reach a rate close to 10 percent. Nobody of prominence in government or Wall Street has made that kind of claim.

When you refer to "recovery" you must also refer to the depth from which recovery is coming. Like the geographer, you don't begin measuring the mountain peak until it rises above water level.

And you must also make clear how long the economic recovery is likely to last. Economists are still debating, for example, whether the country ever really recovered from the 1980 recession before falling back into the next one.

There are consumer recoveries and producer recoveries. The recovery that the White House and most people refer to now is a consumer recovery, no matter that the administration campaigned on a thesis that Americans were consuming too much in relation to the amount they were producing.

Some of the most responsible business economists are on record as seeing the promised consumer recovery petering out after a few months of relatively weak gains, to be followed, they hope, by a more sustainable recovery in production.

In forecasting any recovery, there are also factors that nobody really can anticipate. Not just wars or monetary collapses or enormous natural disasters, such as droughts, but attitudes of both producers and consumers.

There is, for example, a measurable tension in the business community, due in large part to illiquidity. Many companies are skating on thin ice, making little profit and carrying expensive short-term loans that must be refinanced.

Repeatedly, the business sector has stated that its first order of business is to get its financial house in order — to get rid of those high costs and short-term debts by retiring or refinancing them — and only then consider expansion.

If you can deal with all these imponderables, then you can deal with the question of whether the lights in the sky are short-lived, as are the northern lights, or beacons leading to the promised recovery.

Heart Stopped, Woman Revived; Baby Girl Is Born

By BRUCE DALLAS
Associated Press Writer
PHILADELPHIA (AP) —
The revival of a woman who died a half-hour before her baby was delivered was the first time in the 2,200-year recorded history of post-mortem Caesarean sections that both mother and child survived, doctors say.

The woman, a Chinese immigrant from Hong Kong, gave birth to a daughter 2½ years ago at Hahnemann University Hospital. When the woman's heart stopped, doctors performed a Caesarean section, removing the baby by surgery.

As soon as the baby was delivered, the woman's heart began beating again, said Dr. Nicholas DePace, a cardiologist in Hahnemann's cardiovascular unit, and Dr. Joel Betesh, an associate professor of internal medicine.

The two physicians wrote about their experience as medical residents in April 1980 in the Sept. 3 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The woman, who speaks no English and who wasn't identified, and the child show no ill effects from the incident, DePace said.

"We see her in the clinic. She rides her bicycle by, but she doesn't understand the impact of what happened," DePace said. "But in my medical career, I've never seen a case as astounding as this."

"It's pretty close to being a miracle," he said Wednesday.

"We are the first to claim the dual survival of the mother and infant in a sudden-death situation," DePace said. The physicians waited more than two years to be sure the mother and child were healthy and to determine no other such survival had been recorded.

The woman was 27 years old and 36 weeks pregnant when she went to the hospital because she was coughing up blood.

DePace was examining her when "her eyes rolled back" and her heart stopped. DePace immediately began cardiopulmonary resuscitation, but after 30 minutes without a spontaneous response, he became convinced she was dead. Doctors decided to perform a Caesarean section to try to save the baby.

"Dr. DePace began CPR

the moment the pulse stopped. If unwitnessed, there would have been brain damage in four minutes," Betesh said. "This (survival) is surprising, but possible because a physician was there" when the woman's heart stopped.

The moment the baby was delivered, the mother's heart began beating, Betesh said.

"It turns out it can be explained physiologically. But it never happened before, and to us, it was a miracle," Betesh said.

The woman, who had been showing no signs of labor, suffered a common problem in that her swelling uterus pressed against the major vein returning blood from the legs, the doctors said.

"Combined with her coughing up blood, it almost cut off all the blood to the heart," stopping it, Betesh said.

When the baby was delivered, the pressure on the vein was relieved, sending blood to the heart, which resumed pumping, Betesh said.

Having to choose between saving the baby or keep trying to save the mother "was a terrible decision," DePace said.

The woman was coughing up blood because her lung was bleeding, and she eventually lost the lung, DePace said.

The first successful Caesarean section on a dead woman occurred in 237 B.C. in the Roman Empire, the doctors said. The baby grew up to be Scipio, the Roman general who defeated Hannibal in 202 B.C. According to legend, Julius Caesar was also born in this fashion, and gave his name to the procedure.

Throughout history, 154 successful post-mortem Caesareans have been recorded, the doctors said.

Until the 19th century, the mother seldom was saved even if she was alive when the operation was performed because the risk of infection was so high. But since then the operation has become routine in cases of healthy women where normal delivery is difficult or dangerous.

In one of the post-mortem cases, which also occurred in Philadelphia, a baby boy was delivered to a 15-year-old mother who jumped to her death from a burning house in 1978. The young woman, who died from a fractured skull, had landed head first on the sidewalk. A 7-pound, 4-ounce boy, apparently cushioned from the impact, was delivered by Caesarean section.

Find Cheaters

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts has caught 613 welfare recipients who have more money in bank accounts than the law allows, including one who had $89,000 stashed away, officials say.

The 613, however, may represent only the tip of the iceberg, according to Secretary of Human Services William Hogan Jr., since accounts at only 23 of the state's 1013 banks were cross-checked with recipients' Social Security numbers.

Hogan said the check involved the Social Security numbers of 547,385 people, some of whom received more than one kind of welfare benefit.

Hogan said if the pattern held true for all the state's banks, there could be as many as 20,000 to 30,000 recipients with substantial bank accounts.

The computer check found 11 recipients who have more than $40,000 stashed in bank accounts — one of which contained $89,000.

Families with more than $3,000 in the bank are prohibited from receiving food stamps, and the cutoff is even lower for recipients of general assistance and most other forms of welfare, according to officials.

Payments to about 50 of the 613 have been terminated and their cases brought to court for recovery of the money paid them, officials said.

The state estimates $2.2 million could be recovered in paid benefits from these 613 recipients alone and $400,000 a year saved by cutting these people from the rolls.

The state expects to have 75 percent of Massachusetts' banks cross-checked during the next month. If the results of the first sample repeat themselves, the state could recover as much as $195 million in illegally-obtained benefits when all banks are checked, according to Human Services spokesman Kermit Morrissey.

Of the 613 cases, 157 involved Aid to Families with Dependent Children, 149 involved Medicaid, 163 involved food stamps, 61 involved general assistance and 83 involved supplemental security income.

Procedural

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Sen. John East, R-N.C., says his vote in favor of the federal tax package doubling the excise tax on cigarettes was mostly "procedural".

East appeared at a news conference Wednesday prior to a reception in which he was expected to support 7th Congressional District candidate Ed Johnson, who is trying to unseat U.S. Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C.

East said he and Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., cast their votes so the tax package could go to a conference review, adding that Rose voted the same way in the House. He said no one in North Carolina supports the increased cigarette tax and it should not be made a partisan issue.

East also said the recent upswing in the index of leading economic indicators shows that President Reagan's programs are taking hold of a shaky economy.

Plight Has A Reaction In Congress

By The Associated Press
The plight of a Greensboro woman who says her husband hasn't paid child support since the government hid him in 1975 has drawn the attention of Congress.

Congress is considering a requirement that people given new identities under the federal witness protection program pay debts incurred from a previous identity. Hearings on the proposal begin next week in Washington, D.C.

Patsy Thomas of Greensboro and her husband, then known as William R. Thomas, separated in 1974. Thomas at the time agreed to pay his wife $125 a month to support their child, now 12.

The next year Thomas dropped out of sight and Ms. Thomas has not heard from him since or received any child support payments. In 1981, while trying to have her husband declared legally dead, Ms. Thomas learned that he had been granted a new identity in 1975, to protect him after he testified in a federal gambling case.

Ms. Thomas now has a suit pending against the federal government seeking at least $52,800 plus interest for child support. The suit accuses the government of violating the law by failing to provide for her and her child's "health, safety and welfare."

Government studies show many relocated witnesses are skipping out on old debts and alimony and child support payments.

A proposal before Congress would require that relocated witnesses pay debts through an intermediary — the U.S. Attorney General's office — which in turn would distribute the funds to ex-wives and creditors.

Howard Safer of the U.S. marshal's office in Washington said Wednesday that Thomas was single when he entered the relocation program and that the government didn't know he had child support obligations.

Thomas "left the program in 1977 and we have had no contact with him since," Safer said, adding that Thomas might be traced through his new Social Security number and new name.

Safer said the witness protection program had resulted in thousands of convictions by reassuring witnesses who otherwise might have kept silent.

He said William Thomas was 1,100th person to enter the program. The number now totals about 4,000, Safer said.

Ms. Thomas, 45, said she was not criticizing the merits of the relocation program, but said the government should have acted as an intermediary between her husband and his family.

Firefighter Charged In Drugs Probe

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A Greensboro firefighter was charged with six felony counts Wednesday that include sale and possession of cocaine.

Timothy Matthew Patterson, 31, a firefighter for three years, was released from the Guilford County Jail after posting $3,000 bond. He was assigned to Fire Station 4.

The arrest coincided with the first of a series of police internal hearings for five city police officers suspended because of suspected drug use.

An agent with the State Bureau of Investigation said the arrest of Patterson was not connected with the police department investigation.

Fire Chief R.L. Powell said Patterson has been suspended without pay, pending the outcome of court proceedings on the charges.

SBI Agent W.M. Campbell charged in warrants that Patterson sold him cocaine on July 20 and again on Aug. 10; he further said that on July 20 Patterson possessed two grams of cocaine with intent to sell, and on Aug. 10 possessed one-half ounce of cocaine with intent to sell.

Patterson was also charged with conspiring to sell cocaine.

Also charged along with Patterson was Darrell Lipford, 27, of Lenoir, who faces similar charges.

A spokesman for the Caldwell County Sheriff's Department said Lipford is a former Western Carolina University football player who listed his occupation as self-employed at the time of his arrest.

During hearings into alleged use of drugs by police, Sgt. Alphanza A. Atkins appeared for nine hours before a five-man board that met in a police classroom Wednesday.

The board members will tell Chief W.E. Swing whether they think Atkins is guilty of having used illegal drugs.

Swing will have the final decision over Atkins' guilt or innocence. Should he find Atkins guilty, the chief also will decide what discipline to impose.

Atkins and his attorney, Douglas Harris, called nine witnesses to testify in his behalf. Police officials called five witnesses to testify against Atkins.

One of the department's witnesses was Warren J. Armstrong, a former police sergeant who faces two felony drug charges in Forsyth County.

On Aug. 16, Swing suspended 11 officers after Armstrong's arrest prompted a departmental investigation.

Of those 11, four officers have resigned, two have waived their right to a hearing, and the remaining five chose to appear before the board.

Harris said four clients he represents at the hearings plan to sue the department in federal court if they are not cleared.

Harris said Swing agreed not to rule in any of the cases until all of the hearings are finished. He said the hearings are expected to end next week.

Long Sentence For Shoplifter

MONROE, N.C. (AP) — A South Carolina mother of seven involved in a shoplifting spree that netted more than $3,000 worth of merchandise has been sentenced to 7½ years in jail.

District Court Judge Walter Lampley Tuesday sentenced Mary Price Nelson, 32, of Bishopville, S.C., to 15 six-month jail terms to run consecutively on charges of larceny and possession of stolen goods.

Mrs. Nelson also was ordered held for the next term of Union County Superior Court for grand-jury action on charges of felonious possession of stolen goods.

Mrs. Nelson, along with another Bishopville woman, was arrested Aug. 11 at the Monroe Mall after police noticed four large trash bags in a car parked behind the mall. Police found three more trash bags in the trunk of the car filled with merchandise taken from stores in Monroe and Pageland, S.C.

Chapel Hill Prof's Earn Top Salaries

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Professors at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill earned an average of $41,500 in 1981-82, exceeding the average at other schools in the state, a recent study of 2,500 institutions showed.

Within the 16-campus UNC system, professors at UNC-Greensboro were second with an average salary of $38,500, followed by North Carolina State University in Raleigh at $38,100, the American Association of University Professors reported.

Among the state's private institutions, professors at Duke University in Durham earned an average of $38,100; Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem $33,400, and Davidson College $32,600.

The salary figures, published in the Sept. 1 edition of The Chronicle of Higher Education, applied to full-time faculty members and did not include fringe benefits.

The salaries were compiled by an Alexandria, Va. firm and were based on data collected by the National Center for Education Statistics.

A full professor at Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass., earned an average of $68,500 to top the study's list. At Stanford University in Stanford, Calif., the average was $46,000. Yale University in New Haven, Conn., averaged $44,800, while salaries at Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge, Mass. were $44,500.

Other average salaries included: University of California, Berkeley, $42,800; the University of Chicago, $32,700; University of Virginia, Charlottesville, $41,800; University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, $39,800; Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., $36,600; Howard University, Washington and the University of Maryland, College Park, $35,500.

"We are in pretty good shape nationwide," said Raymond H. Dawson, the UNC System's vice-president for academic affairs. "But for good people in any discipline, there's always competition. Right now, people in fields such as engineering and computer science can pretty well write their own ticket."

This year, as part of its budget-cutting efforts, the state Legislature froze the salaries of state employees including faculty members in the UNC system.

State lawmakers also barred the use of non-state funds by UNC officials to boost faculty salaries this year.

Those moves have been criticized by university officials who said they could damage the system's ability to attract and retain talented faculty members.

"I know of a few instances already where the freeze has prevented us from keeping people in fields such as neurosurgery and instrumentation in the medical field," UNC President William C. Friday said in a telephone interview.

He said he would ask the 1983 Legislature to permit the use of non-state funds to keep UNC campuses in competition for faculty members.

Face Grand Jury For Trafficking

MONROE, N.C. (AP) — Two New Jersey men have been ordered held for grand-jury action on charges of trafficking in marijuana.

Thomas Ritz, 45, and Samuel Coffey, 39, were ordered held under $400,000 bond each after State Bureau of Investigation agent Luke Bume testified Tuesday in a hearing that fingerprints of both men were found on marijuana bales delivered to the Monroe airport.

The two men were arrested at the Raleigh-Durham airport Aug. 2 after their plane was tracked by radar from Monroe.

The men had been free under $200,000 bond each. Union County District Judge Walter Lampley ordered the men back to jail and their bond increased Tuesday.

Compromise... Donovan Investigation Doors Not Yet Closed

Shultz said the king has not committed himself to joining the peace talks, but that, if he does, "presumably, he would speak, at least initially, for the Palestinians. And there are Palestinians on the West Bank that should be represented and that's something that has to be worked out."

Shultz also predicted that those Palestinians would never agree to be governed by Israel.

"Whenever you have someone represent you, you want that person to be legitimately your person. It isn't reasonable to expect the Palestinians to go along with representation of them by someone picked by the Israelis. That won't work."

Earlier, Jordan's ambassador in the United States, Abdul Hadi Majali, said on ABC's "Nightline" that the Reagan proposal contained "very good, positive points." He added his government is studying the plan.

In his nationally broadcast speech, Reagan said details of his plan had been outlined to the governments of Israel, Egypt, Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

Asked if there had been any response, a White House spokesman said, "We don't have any reaction we're willing to characterize yet. We hope they'll give it serious thought."

Reagan's plan included these elements:
-Elections in which West Bank and Gaza Palestinians would choose a self-governing authority to serve during a five-year transition period in which they could demonstrate ability to run their own affairs while posing no threat to Israel's security.

-The peaceful and orderly transfer of domestic authority from Israel to the Palestinian inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza. At the same time, such a transfer must not interfere with Israel's security requirements.

-A call for immediate adoption of a freeze on new settlements by Israel. The United States has long opposed Israel's settlement policy.

-Refusal to support either the establishment of an independent Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza or the annexation and permanent control of the area by Israel.

-A call for an "undivided" Jerusalem with its eventual status to be decided by negotiations. Israel has held the ancient city since 1967.

The president also said it was time for the Palestinians and WASHINGTON (AP) - The Federal Election Commission has not officially closed its investigation on whether Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan or his associates broke the law in raising money for President Reagan's 1980 campaign, a FEC spokesman said today.

FEC spokesman Fred Eiland said he was prohibited by law from commenting on a commission investigation. "All we can do is to acknowledge that we did receive that referral from the Justice Department," Eiland said.

Special Prosecutor Leon Silverman, who is looking into alleged connections between Donovan and organized crime, revealed in June that his investigation turned up no violations of federal election law that could be prosecuted. But he did refer the matters to the FEC for possible civil action.

Eiland explained that the FEC makes public the records of an investigation after the probe is officially closed by an affirmative vote from four FEC commissioners. The Donovan case is not in the public record, he said, and thus has not been officially closed.

"At the point whenever the commission ends it, it all goes on the public record," Eiland said.

New Jersey supporters contributed more than $275,000 to the Reagan campaign, much of it raised by Donovan, who was then an executive of Schiavone Construction Co. of Secaucus, N.J., CBS News reported Wednesday.

Reagan's 1980 campaign, a FEC spokesman said today. "I am not about to ask Israel to live that way again."

The president flew from his ranch near Santa Barbara to a Burbank television studio to deliver the nationally broadcast speech.

He opened by noting that the day marked the completion of evacuation of Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas from Beirut.

"It seemed to me that, with the agreement in Lebanon, we had an opportunity for a more far-reaching peace effort in the region - and I was determined to seize that moment," he said. Reagan said there were two key lessons from the fighting in Lebanon:

"First, the military losses of the PLO have not diminished the yearning of the Palestinian people for a just solution of their claims; and second, while Israel's military successes in Lebanon have demonstrated that its armed forces are second to none in the region, they alone cannot bring just and lasting peace to Israel and her neighbors."

"So, tonight, I am calling for a fresh start."

He said that the 800 U.S. Marines he sent to Lebanon to assist in the evacuation would leave that country within two weeks.

Middle East...

The administration has said repeatedly recently that if the PLO will recognize Israel's right to exist and accept resolution 242, it would be willing to talk with its leaders, such as PLO chairman Yasser Arafat.

Whether the new plan goes anywhere beyond Reagan's speech remains to be seen. A senior official who briefed reporters had no next step to disclose, saying only he hoped those involved will take Reagan's plan seriously. He insisted it was entirely consistent with the 1978 Camp David peace accords, and he apparently was correct in that those accords don't rule out anything that Reagan proposed.

While there is no timetable for actual negotiations, the official stressed that Reagan wanted to move quickly in the wake of the war in Lebanon to propose a new negotiating framework.

"It was important that we put the U.S. views out there before others get frozen into their positions," the official said, stressing that Reagan's plan is subject to negotiation.

Not only is the Israeli reaction important to whether anything comes of Reagan's ideas, but also the reaction of the Arab world.

The special prosecutor's report included an indication that reputed organized crime figure William Masselli may have given money to Reagan at Donovan's behest. Masselli's name was listed in the section of the report dealing with fundraising, but no further information was included at that point.

The special prosecutor's report did include a transcript of a wiretapped conversation between the elder Masselli and Jack Frost, a fellow executive of Donovan's at Schiavone Construction.

According to the transcript, Frost said to Masselli:

"There's no problem with the legality of it. You can make a $1,000 donation, ah, Ronald Reagan for president, legally."

Masselli replied, "No problem."

If it were properly solicited and reported, a $1,000 contribution from Masselli would violate no federal law. There is no provision of federal law that prohibits felons from contributing to campaigns.

Masselli has been questioned in another investigation of Donovan being conducted by a special prosecutor. Masselli's 31-year-old son, Nathan, who was cooperating with the prosecutor, was recently slain.

Commission Fears Injury If Steel Finding Is 'Erroneous'

By BOB FICK
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Imposing penalty duties on subsidized steel imports could cost U.S. consumers hundreds of millions of dollars without helping troubled domestic steelmakers, a Federal Trade Commission attorney says.

"An erroneous finding of injury could lead to losses for United States consumers and the economy of up to $480 million annually," FTC attorney Benjamin Cohen said Wednesday.

Cohen testified before a U.S. International Trade Commission hearing on the possible steel trade duties. America's major steelmakers have requested that the United States impose the financial penalties.

Apart from Cohen's remarks, the FTC took no formal position on whether the U.S. International Trade Commission should impose so-called countervailing duties on imported steel from several foreign nations to offset subsidies the foreign governments grant their companies.

Representatives of foreign steelmakers, who say the U.S. government provides similar subsidies to its own companies through tax incentives, were scheduled to present the ITC with their response to the charges late today.

Cohen said that the ITC, before setting any duties, must be positive that subsidies have caused many of the domestic industry's problems. Otherwise, he suggested, duties will increase consumer costs even as the domestic manufacturers continue to encounter difficulties.

Moreover, imposing duties could prompt foreign governments to retaliate by blocking products exported by the United States, he said.

During the opening day of hearings on the steelmakers' request, however, industry spokesmen pressed for the duties. They warned that without relief from steel subsidized by foreign companies, the domestic industry will crumble, eliminating tens of thousands of jobs.

"I know of no privately funded steel company that can continue to sustain this," said Dale Armstrong, senior vice president for United States Steel Corp. "We have a bottom, and we're under it now."

Industry spokesmen said the subsidies, verified last week by the Commerce Department, have allowed foreign competitors to unfairly undercut the prices of American producers. Because of the price disparity, the foreign share of the U.S. steel market rose from 19.1 percent a year ago to nearly 23 percent, they said.

The commission is scheduled to reach a decision by month's end. If it agrees with the steelmakers, duties likely would be imposed within weeks. They would be equal to the amount of subsidy provided by the individual foreign governments.

Last month, the Commerce Department found that steel products shipped to the United States by 13 foreign manufacturers were benefiting from government subsidies of up to 26 percent of their value. The subsidies came through a variety of means, including low-cost loans.

The nations involved were France, Italy, Luxembourg,

Great Britain, West Germany and Belgium. All are members of the European Economic Community and are cited in the complaint filed by the U.S. companies.

Also in August, the Commerce Department and the European Economic Community proposed a plan limiting European steel imports. But the American steelmakers, pressing their accusations of unfair trade practices, rejected it.

In presenting their case, the steel companies acknowledged the flagging U.S. economy has hurt their profitability.

In addition to U.S. Steel, the other companies involved in the subsidy complaint are Bethlehem Steel Corp., Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., National Steel Corp., Republic Steel Corp., Inland Steel Corp. and Cyclops Steel Corp.

Portillo Delivers Grim News

By PETER EISNER
Associated Press Writer
MEXICO CITY (AP) — Americans and other foreigners entering Mexico must convert their currency into pesos under a tough new policy to stop capital from leaving the country during the worst economic crisis in 70 years.

All banks were closed through Friday following President Jose Lopez Portillo's nationalization of private Mexican banks. Only banks are allowed to change currency now, and officials did not say how the new policy would be implemented or enforced.

Regulations issued shortly after Lopez Portillo's state of the union address Wednesday said the government will control all currency exchange transactions. The regulations go into effect upon publication in the official newspapers, which was expected today.

All unauthorized currency transactions will be illegal and considered the same as trafficking in contraband, the government said.

Mexicans leaving the country will be forced to apply for permission to buy dollars, while people entering the country will have to declare how much money they are bringing with them and convert that currency into pesos.

That means Americans will have to convert their dollars into pesos at the port of entry. They will get a receipt and can change leftover pesos back into dollars when they leave Mexico, the government said.

The peso is the only legal tender in Mexico now and only banks can cash in dollars.

In his last state of the union message before leaving office Dec. 1, Lopez Portillo said the headline measures were intended to prevent the flight of dollars by investors who own up to $25 billion in U.S. real estate. He said Mexicans have opened as much as $14 billion in foreign bank accounts recently.

Foreign banks are not affected by the nationalization order.

The presidential decree came as Mexico, strapped for cash because of falling oil revenues, faced its worst economic crisis since the 1910-1920 revolution.

The economic trouble includes 60 percent inflation, an $81 billion foreign debt — largest in the Third World — and a recession that is feeding chronic unemployment and underemployment now gripping 40 percent of the nation's work force.

The nationalization will halt the free flow of money from Mexico, in part caused by banks "that are sacking us," the president said in his 3½-hour speech delivered before a joint session of Congress.

President-elect Miguel de la Madrid, former budget and planning minister under Lopez Portillo, was among the dignitaries attending.

"The critical conditions now require and justify (these measures)," Lopez Portillo said. "It is now or never. They have already sacked us. Mexico is not finished. They will not sack us again."

Lopez Portillo also reviewed the nation's foreign relations, chiding the United States for a "threatening and ostracizing" attitude toward communist-ruled Cuba.

He said such an approach was not in keeping with "the beautiful tradition of liberty and tolerance of the American people."

Response to the presidential speech was generally reserved. Lopez Portillo occasionally daubed his eyes as he spoke emotionally about the nation's problems. He received a standing ovation from legislators and bankers when he announced the nationalization and exchange controls.

Well-placed financial analysts said some smaller banks are near collapse because of the shortage of credit and the exodus of money during the current economic recession. Government control of those banks could guarantee their survival with the backing of the Bank of Mexico, the nation's central bank.

The economic crisis developed as a result of declining prices for oil, silver and other commodities, which brought a shortfall in revenues of more than $10 billion this year. Mexico no longer was able to pay for a series of ambitious development projects begun in its petroleum-powered boom of the late 1970s, and faced problems with raising the $25 billion to $28 billion it needs for payments this year on foreign debt.

Last month, Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog negotiated a 90-day moratorium in debt payment with international banks as the nation came to the brink of defaulting on its debt. A bail-out plan includes billions of dollars in credits and advance oil payments from the United States.

The government also devalued the Mexican peso in August, the second devaluation of the year. The peso has lost 65 percent of its value, closing at 130 to the dollar Wednesday in New York trading.

Space Base Inaugurated

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — The Air Force's new Space Command was inaugurated with assurances from a Reagan administration official that it was not a step toward militarization of space.

Edward C. Aldridge Jr., undersecretary of the Air Force, told about 1,000 people at Peterson Air Force Base on Wednesday that the command was "a firm commitment to a space program to strengthen national security and to maintain U.S. space leadership."

The command will serve to warn against surprise attack, he said, noting that the Soviet military space program include an anti-satellite system.

"We should look upon the Space Command as a major step toward the preservation of peace," he said.

G. James V. Hartinger, head of the North American Aerospace Defense Command, was also named commander of the Space Command.

Hartinger said at the dedication that the new command is a "crucial milestone in the evolution of military space operations."

The Space Command will be an operational command which will manage, control and protect space assets, Hartinger said. It will operate the Consolidated Space Operations Center, to be built nine miles east of Peterson Air Force Base.

Groundbreaking for the center is scheduled next March. The center will be completed sometime in 1985.

The center, to be staffed by 1,800 people, will control both satellites and space shuttles. Hartinger said the command already has been assigned its first two operational space systems.

Probably Losing Over $30 Billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Private non-profit organizations, including hospitals and universities, probably will lose as much as $33 billion in federal funding by 1985 under the Reagan administration's latest budget plans, a new study says.

The study, released Wednesday by the Urban Institute, said the loss is a 20 percent reduction in support from federal programs.

The institute said that because of the funding cutbacks and an expected drop in corporate contributions in financially hard times, the private organizations will be unable to provide services to replace corresponding reductions in federal programs.

Amendment To Tax Bill May See Surge In Services By Hospices

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — When Pat Baker's husband developed a malignant brain tumor, the couple agreed on two things: he would not undergo difficult life-prolonging treatments, and she would care for him at home as long as possible.

Because of a Los Angeles hospice, Mrs. Baker was able to keep both promises. Her husband died at home.

"I feel like I did something for him," she says, less than two months after his death. "It has been a comfort to me since. There was nothing he liked better than his home."

Although almost 1,000 hospice programs have emerged since the first one opened 11 years ago in Branford, Conn., the movement in home care for the dying has been stunted because few insurance plans cover homemaker, counseling and other of its integral services.

But a major growth spurt is expected because of a provision in the $98.3 billion tax bill passed last month by Congress.

The amendment, lost in the furor over the tax increase, makes hospice care reimbursable for the 29 million elderly and disabled Americans in the Medicare program.

With around 300,000 Medicare cancer deaths reported annually, the new benefit is expected to give hospices their first large stable funding base.

"It will definitely make it a lot easier for hospice programs to stay alive and provide a full range of services. It will also encourage home health agencies and hospitals to develop hospice programs," said Claire Tehan, vice president of the National Hospice Organization.

Pain control, family involvement, home care and emotional support for the terminally ill patient are the cornerstones of hospice care in the United States.

While some hospices have their own buildings or wards, most are agencies that provide visiting nurses, therapists, social workers and volunteers to help relatives care for the patient at home.

Supporters, including many who have cared for dying relatives with hospice assistance, believe hospice programs offer a simpler, more personal alternative to the high-technology hospital environment.

"I feel sorry everybody doesn't know about it," says Sara Hallam, whose 55-year-old husband Bill died three years ago of prostate cancer. "It's uplifting. It's comforting. They help you face it. They help you deal with it. They make it very bearable."

The hospice amendment was a sudden and late addition to the tax bill by Sen. John Heinz, chairman of the Special Committee on Aging.

"This represents a choice that more people ought to have," said Heinz, R-Pa.

"Most people think of hospice as having to do with dying. I think of it as having to do with living on one's own terms — albeit the last three, six or 12 months of your life. They can be the most important," he said.

To get the amendment into the tax bill, Heinz had to overcome the resistance of Sen. Russell Long, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. He did it by lining up 67 Senate co-sponsors.

"It's a new idea and new ideas require a considerable amount of time for acceptance," Heinz said.

One argument proved particularly persuasive: cost effectiveness.

The Medicare system spends $4 billion or 11 percent of its annual budget on the last 40 days of life. The Congressional Budget Office projected that hospice coverage would save $58 million over three years after an initial $1 million start-up outlay.

"If you can keep people at home, there's definitely a savings," said Mrs. Tehan, who directs a hospice program at the Hospital Home Health Care Agency in Los Angeles.

Mrs. Baker's case is a dramatic illustration. She said insurance paid 80 percent of a $19,000 bill for a one-month hospital stay early in her husband's illness. The total insurance bill for more than five months of home hospice care: $1,500.

Soviet Housing: Millions Necessarily Share

By VERONIKA MINTHORN
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — Viktor, a 39-year-old mechanic, has been divorced for more than three years, but he is still living in a cramped one-room apartment with his former wife Tatyana and their daughter.

His predicament is not uncommon. The Soviet Union is suffering from a housing shortage caused by the destruction of two world wars, rapid urbanization and — for decades — official neglect of the housing sector.

Viktor could move into a dormitory at his factory, but he prefers to remain in the apartment, hoping that he will eventually be allocated one of his own. He didn't want his last name used for fear of spoiling his chances.

In the Soviet Union, three quarters of all apartments are built by the state and allocated by local authorities or state factories. The rest are built by collective farms and housing cooperatives heavily subsidized by the state.

Millions of Soviets still live in dormitories or "communal flats," sharing kitchens and bathrooms with other families, despite a national construction program that claims to build 5,600 new apartments a day.

Many of these new apartments exist only on paper, however.

A rare glimpse of the problem was given in April in a People's Control Committee report published in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda.

It said that an apartment block, "long finished on paper," turned out to be uninhabitable because it had no doors or windows, no floors, no sanitary installations and no heating.

Officials admit that only 80 percent of the urban population and "the majority" of rural dwellers have apartments or cottages of their own.

"It will take at least another eight to nine years to do away with the housing shortage," Gennady Fomin, chairman of the State Committee for Civil Construction told the English-language Moscow News in early August.

Western experts doubt those predictions.

"They only think of the existing shortage, not of future needs," a Western diplomat said. "Every year newlyweds want their own apartments and divorcees want to move out of the family flat."

In 1981, 2.5 million weddings and more than 800,000 divorces were registered in the Soviet Union.

Most Soviet newlyweds start married life in already cramped apartments of one or the other set of parents. Divorced couples, like Viktor and Tatyana, may be forced to live together for years before one of them finds another place.

The shortage is aggravated by poor maintenance and the low quality of repair work.

Large-scale renovation is a major problem, judging by continuous newspaper reports of tenants' complaints.

Vechernaya Moskva, the newspaper of the Moscow city Communist Party and the mayor's office, recently reported on a case of renovation.

"When people moved back into their flats, they found that doors and windows wouldn't close, floors had large cracks and in some apartments electrical cables were hanging out of the walls," it said.

"Not long ago, one tenant, walking down the front stairs, missed his step, fell and was almost run over by a bus. Why? The renovation brigade built the front stairs in such a way that they came right to the curb."

Soviet citizens automatically assume that if they get a new apartment with bathroom and kitchen they will have to do all the finishing work themselves and that shoddy workmanship may require immediate repair work.

Many Soviet tenants still want to move to a bigger and better-equipped apartment. But the "living space norm," established in the Soviet housing law, of 100 square feet per person is no guarantee they are on the list to be assigned new accommodation when it is built.

The norm is often modified or ignored by local housing officials, resulting in far less space for each individual.

The typical Soviet family consists of husband, wife and one child. Frequently a grandmother also lives with the family.

"It is mistaken to think that every family which has less space will automatically be put on the list of those needing better housing," the newspaper Socialist Industry reported earlier this year.

In Moscow, for example, only families with less than 60 square feet of "living space" per person will be put on the emergency list, the report said.

The law also states that boys and girls over 9 years should not share a room, but this does not apply to families already "close to the living-space norm," the newspaper explained.

There is one bright spot in the gloomy housing situation.

Trying To Heal C-of-C Breach

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Chamber of Commerce is trying to repair a break in its upper ranks that left the business lobbying group bitterly divided over the tax increase bill Congress passed last month.

The chamber's top two officers had taken opposing positions on the tax bill and their personal struggle to set policy for the 260,000-member organization produced a split that was unprecedented in chamber history.

Chairman Paul Thayer, who favored passage of the three-year, $98.3 billion tax increase, and President Richard L. Leshner, who lobbied against passage, sought to put aside their differences Tuesday at a special meeting of the chamber's board of directors.

In a statement issued afterward, the chamber said: "A satisfactory resolution was achieved internally and a more clear-cut, definitive relationship between the chairman and the president was established."

CLIFF CARVINGS

PEKING (AP) — Cliff carvings of people hunting and gathering food, dating back at least 3,000 years, have been found in southern China's Yunnan province, the official news agency Xinhua says.

GM Offers Incentives

DETROIT (AP) - In an effort to clear dealer stocks before the new model year arrives, General Motors Corp. announced new dealer incentives on 1982-model subcompact, compact and intermediate cars and the Cadillac Seville.

The incentives, announced Wednesday, range from $500 to $2,500 and will be in effect through Sept. 22, the start of the new model year.

The announcement came one day after previous dealer incentives on the cars expired and one day after the nation's No. 1 automaker announced price freezes and reductions on the 1983 car models.

Loan Approved

Pitt County's request for a $370,000 literary loan from the State Board of Education has been approved, say county school officials, and long-awaited bids on the Ayden Middle project will be let Sept. 30.

The Ayden Middle project, in limbo for a number of years because of funding difficulties, will replace the 55-year-old Ayden Middle School with a new facility.

"The state board approved the literary loan," said Associate Superintendent of Pitt County Schools Tom Craft, "and it appears we will have the funds available to let bids by Sept. 30."

The blueprints for the project were also approved by the state board late in August, noted Craft. They had been submitted and approved earlier, but needed re-endorsement because of the time between approval and actual bid-letting.

CAUTIONS BUDGET

N.C. Symphony Is Lining Up Season

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) - Televised concerts, fireworks displays and guest conducting by composers will all be part of the North Carolina Symphony's 50th season, officials say.

The symphony's 50-performance schedule was released at a news conference Wednesday, during which executive director Thomas McGuire read a letter from President Reagan congratulating the group for its "half century of service to the citizens and guests of North Carolina."

musician-management strife and financial troubles, reflects new artistic director and conductor Gerhardt Zimmermann's preference for a wide variety of music.

"The more varied the programs are, the wider audience you bring in," Zimmermann said. "We have to build up our audience, not just the Beethoven lovers of our audience. I want to make the North Carolina Symphony accessible to everyone."

Zimmermann said the program, including many modern works, "takes a stand in support of new, American music that few orchestras in this country have taken. Many orchestras live in the past. I think we are obligated to become artists of today."

The symphony will open the season Sept. 15 with a re-enactment of the orchestra's first performance. In January, three American composers will conduct a performance of their works.

Officials also released schedules for the symphony's third annual pops concert series, including a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture complete with fireworks, and more than 200 youth concerts.

The first pops concert, set for Sunday in Raleigh, will be broadcast simultaneously on local television and radio stations.

Rose Hosting Cards In Season Opener

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
"We need to play. We're ready to get into the season."
Thus spake Rose High School coach Ronald Vincent on the eve of the 1982 season's beginning, albeit a week after many of the teams have begun play.

The Rampants open the 1982 season against the same team they opened and ended the 1981 year against, the Jacksonville Cardinals. The two played twice last year, with Rose taking a 15-14 win in the season-opening game and bowing 20-0 in the first round of the state playoffs.

"I like playing a team as good as Jacksonville," Vincent said. "It gives us a good yardstick to measure our development and personnel by."

The Cardinals will be playing their second game of the season, having opened last week against White Oak with a 23-0 victory.

"Two of their scores came because of their defensive play in the first half, and the other came in the second half when they just stuck it to 'em," Vincent said. "They have a very solid defensive team and are ground-oriented on offense."

Sr.), regarded by many as the fastest player in the state. He is the defending state 200-meter champion in track and was the national second place winner in the Junior Olympics in the same event. Frazier started at flanker after Donnell Lee was injured.

Sr.) will get the nod at quarterback, but Vincent said that Bobby Buie (5-10, 170, Sr.) will also see a good deal of action in the game. "We feel that we've got to have two quarterbacks," the coach said.

Rose High Rampants

The Rampants, for the second straight year, will be using the I-formation, and will be relatively pass-oriented. "I really look for us to run and pass about equally," Vincent said. "But we have outstanding receivers and we have to take advantage of them."

Lee (5-8, 155, Sr.), who moves to tailback this year, started in that position the last game of the season. Rounding out those back is Roderick Harrell (5-10, 170, Sr.), who played tailback last year, but moves to fullback this year. He is currently sidelined with a bruised knee and is not likely to see action on Friday.

Backups at fullback will include Cyrus Blackwell (5-11, 160, Jr.) and Tim Shank (5-9, 165, Sr.), with Rodney Smith (5-7, 135, Sr.), Blackwell and Randy Moore (5-6, 140, Sr.) backing up the tailback position.

Name Opening Quarterbacks

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Two teams that wavered before choosing their starting quarterbacks and a third sold on their man as one of the best around lead the Atlantic Coast Conference into football combat this weekend.

North Carolina State opens the season against Southern Conference champion Furman, while Duke travels to Tennessee. Western Carolina meets Wake Forest in the third game, all of which are at night.

When N.C. State's athletes reported to school early last month, coach Monte Kiffin wasn't sure who his starting quarterback would be. But several weeks of work seem to have moved senior Tol Avery into the front, as Kiffin named him to start Saturday against the Palidans. Providing the main punch will be tailback Joe McIntosh, 1981 freshman of the year and conference rushing champion.

The Wolfpack defense will be at less than full strength, however. Already missing linebacker Sam Key, Kiffin received more bad news this week when linemen Mitch Rushing and David Shelton were injured and listed as doubtful for the 7 p.m. kickoff at Carter-Finley Stadium. Both Rushing and Shelton have knee injuries.

"Just when we get everyone back on the offensive line, the defensive line gets banged up," says Kiffin. "But injuries are a part of football."

Furman is one of the favorites in the Southern Conference title chase, but lost seven all-conference picks to graduation. Junior quarterback David Charpia leads the attack along with 1,000-yard rusher Stanford Jennings and SC freshman of the year Dinky Williams.

Tennessee sports world-class sprinters at the wide receiver positions. Willie Gault, Mike Miller and Darryl Wilson all turn in sparkling times as do the Volunteer defensive backs, but center Phil Ebinger isn't too worried. "They've got a lot of team speed defensively and overall," says Ebinger. "But I think we match up with them physically pretty well."

Duke assistant coach Steve Spurrier announced Wednesday that head coach Red Wilson had decided to start Ron Sally this weekend. Tennessee's Johnny Majors says it doesn't matter whether Sally or Ben Bennett gets the nod — they're both good.

"Defensively, I'm very concerned," says Majors. "But we are improving and have shown a better effort and more leadership on the practice field."
Wake Forest's Al Groh says Western Carolina has a potentially explosive offense which could cause problems for his inexperienced defense.

"They scored 31 points against Florida State last year," Groh says. "They have long-range touchdown ability. They are good on third-and-long."

Seven of Wake Forest's 11 defenders have never started, while three offensive linemen are newcomers. Groh says there's work to be done on both units.

"We haven't demonstrated improvement yet. That will come on Saturday night. We hope to be better on defense," Groh adds.

Gary Schofield, touted as a potential all-America, can spark some excitement of his own and Groh expects it.

"He's refined and expanded, he's understanding of the concept of the offense," says Groh. "I think what he has developed is a knowledge of defenses. I think he's the time he's finished, he'll be one of the top two or three quarterbacks in the country."

Stadler Wants To Keep Smithson Dodges Flying Bats

A Good Thing Going

ENDICOTT, N.Y. (AP) — What is Craig Stadler, the burly 29-year-old who dominates professional golf this year, doing in a low-key tournament like the B.C. Open?

Simple, Golf's season money champion with $428,101 wants to keep a good thing going after winning the World Series of Golf last weekend.

"My credo is the Jack Nicklaus philosophy: winning breeds winning. When I get in position (to win), all I think about is winning," he said before today's first round of the $275,000 PGA tour event.

His presence and that of four others from golf's top 10 money-winners underscore the growth of the B.C. Open, which got onto the tour in 1973 by assuming a vacancy on the busy Labor Day weekend.

The tournament field today was a record 156 players seeking the $49,500 first prize.

"It's the best we've ever had or may ever have again ... How many of the 38 flavors of Howard Johnson's can you eat at one time?" said Tournament Director Alex Alexander.

He said the par-72, 6,966-yard En Joie Golf Club course was in its best shape ever, both fairways and greens. The tournament committee this year oversaw installation of a new pond and a spectacular, 12-foot waterfall on the 406-yard 18th hole.

The tournament is one of only two on the 42-event PGA tour played on municipal links.

Along with Stadler, one of the top draws in the tournament is sure to be Lee Trevino, whose $14,300 paycheck at En Joie in 1980 contributed to his career-high, one-year earnings of $384,814.

Last year, Trevino aggravated a pinched nerve, dropped far down the money list but finally underwent treatment last July 31.

By The Associated Press

It was Lucky 7 night in the American League, and Texas rookie Mike Smithson made out best of all — once he got done ducking the flying bats.

Four AL teams scored seven runs Wednesday night and each won. One of those clubs was Texas, which downed the Kansas City Royals 7-3 behind the six-hit pitching of Smithson, who recorded his first major-league victory.

The bats that Smithson had to elude weren't the flying animal kind. Instead, they were the wooden ones Kansas City's Amos Otis was tossing.

In the third inning, Smithson hit Otis and Frank White with pitches. And when Otis came up in the sixth inning with the Royals down by five runs, the trouble began.

Otis flung his bat on three straight swings, once into the stands behind the Texas dug-out, then into short left field and then to the left side of second base.

Both benches emptied as Otis was ejected, but no punches were thrown.

"I didn't mean to do it, but I'm not going to tell him (Otis) that," Smithson said. "It's part of the game. The ball got away from me."

Along with offering no apologies, Smithson, now 1-1, said he wasn't about to leave the game.

"I told the umpire, 'This is my first big league win and nothing short of a hurricane is going to upset me,'" Smithson said.

Otis had left the stadium by the time the game ended, but Rangers Manager Darrell Johnson was talking.

"In my opinion, he should be suspended," Johnson said of Otis. "It was one of the bushest things I've ever seen. I'd just like to be around this team next year when we see Kansas City — I'm talking about one man."

It was the second consecutive loss for Kansas City, but the Royals retained a 1½-game lead in the American League West over California, which lost 5-3 to Detroit.

In other AL games Wednesday, Minnesota topped New York 7-2, Milwaukee beat Seattle 7-3, Boston defeated Oakland 7-4, Detroit topped California 5-3, Chicago shut out Cleveland 6-0 and Baltimore beat Toronto 5-2.

Orioles 5, Blue Jays 2

Jim Dwyer hit a solo homer to trigger a four-run second inning that carried the streaking Orioles past Toronto. Baltimore won its fifth straight and 12th of its last 13 behind Dennis Martinez, 14-10. Dwyer also had a run-scoring single in the third.

Brewers 7, Mariners 3

Cecil Cooper and Paul Molitor each belted two-run homers to key the Brewers' victory. Doc Medich, acquired from Texas Aug. 11, upped his record to 3-0 with Milwaukee and 10-11 overall. Mike Stanton, starting his first game since 1975 after Jim Beattie was scratched because of a sore shoulder, took the loss for Seattle and fell to 2-4.

Red Sox 7, A's 4

Carney Lansford doubled and homered to highlight Boston's victory in a game interrupted in the sixth inning for one hour and 15 minutes by rain. Carl Yastrzemski singled to join Hank Aaron as the only players ever to get 100 hits in 21 seasons.

White Sox 6, Indians 0

Jerry Koosman hurled the 30th shutout of his 15-year career and sent the Indians to their seventh straight loss. Koosman took a one-hitter into the eighth inning and settled for a four-hitter.

Twins 7, Yankees 2

Gary Gaetti had a two-run triple and Kent Hrbek added a two-run double to back the six-hit pitching of Al Williams.

Williams, 6-7, gave up a first-inning homer to Jerry Mumphrey and then settled down. Minnesota racked four New York pitchers for 15 hits in pinning the loss on starter Dave Righetti, 8-7.

Tigers 5, Angels 3

Alan Trammell drove in three runs with a triple and squeeze bunt and Detroit starter Milt Wilcox, 9-7, got final out help from Pat Underwood, who retired Rod Carew with runners on first and second. Reggie Jackson, Doug DeCinces and Bobby Grich homered for California.

Rose Hosting Cardinals...

Backing up Frazier at the slot will be Randy Warren (5-8, 145, Sr.) and Ed Farley (5-7, 146, Jr.).

Starting at tight end will probably be Tommy Bennett (6-0, 170, Sr.), although Marvin Barrett (5-10, 160, Jr.) and Maurice Smith (6-0, 175, Jr.) will also see action. At the split end position, Burney Carraway (5-11, 155, Sr.) will open, backed up by Tony Clemons (5-9, 140, Sr.) and Tyrone Smith, one of two sophomores on the varsity.

Handling the starting jobs at the tackles will be Frank Layne (6-2, 180, Sr.) and Greg Britt (5-8, 160, Sr.). Handling backup duty at tackles will be William Rhodes (5-10, 230, Sr.) and David Lineberry (6-3, 185, Jr.), while Andrae Wooten (5-7, 185, Sr.) will add depth at guard and either Layne or Frank Norris (5-10, 184, Sr.) will backup the center.

Rose will continue to use the four-four alignment on defense, and Vincent said that the unit has shown a great deal of improvement since its scrimmage with Washington two weeks ago.

"Our linebackers are not real big and this worries me, but we do have a great deal of quickness and we hope that overcomes our lack of size."

Playing the inside linebacker positions will be two who saw a lot of action last year, Reggie Clark (5-10, 163, Sr.) and Craig Dupree (5-10, 169, Sr.).

They are joined by three other starters, Judas Best (5-11, 260, Sr.) and Rhodes at the tackles, and Tommy Sparkman (6-0, 180, Sr.) at end.

Either Norris or Frankie Carr (6-1, 187, Sr.) will start at the other defensive end, with the non-starter as the primary backup.

Reggie Anderson (6-0, 271, Sr.) and Marc Gatlin (5-7, 208, Jr.) will backup the tackles.

Battle Emory, the only other sophomore on the team besides Smith, will hold down one of the outside linebacker slots along with Chuck Whitner (6-0, 169, Sr.) Backing them up will be Lee, while Shank could be moved over from his starting spot at cornerback if needed. Emory, along with Blackwell, will be the inside linebacker backups.

Joining Shank at the corner will be Roswell Streeter (6-0, 165, Sr.), with Horace Barrett (6-1, 170, Sr.) and Enoch Reid (6-2, 175, Sr.) at backups.

Warren will start at safety, with Reid backup here too.

The kicking game leaves Vincent somewhat unsure. "It could be the best we've ever had," he says, "or..." his voice trails away.

"We have some strong legs, but we just don't know how they're going to do," he said.

Handling the kickoffs will usually be Barrett, but he's nursing an injury and probably will give the duties over to Willie Levitt (5-9, 152, Sr.) for the opening game. Levitt is expected to be the leader when it comes to placements.

Norris is likely to get the call on punts. "He's really been kicking the ball well the last two weeks," Vincent said.

Elsewhere in the Big East Conference, Rocky Mount, the preseason favorite, will be out to win its second game. The Gryphons downed Eastern Wayne, 21-6, last week and host Tarboro, a 27-8 loser to Northern Nash last weekend.

Northern, meanwhile, entertains Southern Nash, which lost to Hunt, 35-0. Hunt travels to Charles B. Aycock.

Northeastern, which lost to Ahsokie, 7-0, in its opener, entertains Edenton, while Fike, a 14-7 loser to Goldsboro, is host to Athens Drive of Raleigh.

Beddingfield opens its schedule by traveling to Greene Central and Kinston is call on punts. "He's really been kicking the ball well the

Mets End 15-Game Losing Streak, 5-1

By The Associated Press
The New York Mets have been anything but a championship contender lately. Still, as Pete Falcone pitched the ninth inning against the Houston Astros, he felt as if he was a part of something very special.

"It was like a World Series game," Falcone said Wednesday as the Mets registered their first victory since Aug. 15, a 5-1 triumph which snapped a 15-game slide, the longest losing streak in the major leagues this season. The smallest crowd of the year at Shea Stadium — 4,408 — was in attendance but, as Falcone noted, "They were very loud."

For once, the Mets' bats were loud, too, with George Foster leading the way with a two-run homer. Falcone went the distance, surrendering Houston's only run with two out in the ninth on a homer by Alan Ashby.

"Sure, I wanted the shutout, but if you're going to lose it, I'd rather it be on a homer like that than on three singles, and they get a rally going," said Falcone, who pitched a six-hitter and was helped by some brilliant — for once — fielding.

"This is the best we've played defensively in a long time," he admitted. "They really showed me something by not laying down."
Foster also was proud that the Mets did not quit.
"We didn't give up," he said. "As a losing streak progresses, I think it puts more pressure on the team you're playing than the one in the losing streak. It was good to get this out of the way. Now we can go out and play spoiler."

As for his two-run shot in the third inning, Foster explained: "It's an indication of what I am able to do. But even though I've done it before, I know I still have to do it now."

Elsewhere in the National League, it was Atlanta 4, Philadelphia 0; San Diego 4, Pittsburgh 1; St. Louis 6, Los Angeles 5 in 13 innings; Chicago 7, San Francisco 6, and Montreal 2, Cincinnati 1.
Braves 4, Phillies 0

Atlanta blanked Philadelphia for the second straight night, with Rick Camp going seven innings and Gene Garber picking up his 27th save by pitching the eighth and ninth. Bob Horner broke out of a slump with an RBI single and run-scoring double. Pete Rose went 0-for-3 to set a major league record for lifetime outs, passing Hank Aaron, who had 8,593 outs.

"There is no way you can rest now with 29 games to go," said Camp, who has a bone spur in his arm. "There is no way I can miss a start. I feel OK after I loosen up. I take 10 minutes longer warming up before the game."

Cardinals 6, Dodgers 5
St. Louis blew a 4-0 lead built in the first inning, had to rally to tie the Dodgers in the ninth, then won it on an infield hit in the 13th. The Cardinals got four runs against Jerry Reuss as Willie McGee singled home Lonnie Smith, David Green's single brought in Keith Hernandez and Steve Sax's error allowed two more runs to score.

The Dodgers chipped away, helped greatly by Ron Cey's solo homer and McGee's error in center field. In the eighth, Mike Scioscia beat out a high hopper as Pedro Guerrero scored the go-ahead run.

But the Cards rallied in the ninth, tying it on Tito Landrum's RBI single, then won it on Ozzie Smith's infield single in the 13th.
Rookie Kelly Paris, in his first major-league appearance, singled to lead off the 13th, was sacrificed to second and scored from there when Smith rapped a shot toward center that second baseman Sax could only knock down.
Cubs 7, Giants 6

Jerry Morales pinch hit a two-run double in the sixth as the Cubs rallied with the help of two errors by Giants first baseman Reggie Smith, who had homered earlier. After one-out singles by Keith Moreland and Jay Johnstone, Steve Henderson's grounder was fumbled by Smith for one error. Then he fired the ball into left field trying to get Johnstone at second base. Morales followed with his decisive hit.

Leon Durham had a two-run homer for the Cubs.
Expos 2, Reds 1
Montreal scored both runs off Reds' ace Mario Soto in the fourth inning. Warren Cromartie walked and Andre Dawson blooped a triple to short left field that eluded a diving Mike Vail. Al Oliver drove in Dawson with a sacrifice fly.

Randy Lerch, the first of four Montreal pitchers, won in his first start since being acquired from Milwaukee Aug. 14. Jeff Reardon got the final two outs to record his 21st save. Soto gave up only five hits and struck out nine in going the distance for the 10th time.

Padres 4, Pirates 1
Juan Eichelberger gave up eight hits in his first start since July 9 and Joe Lefebvre drove in a pair of runs with a single and home run.

Eichelberger spent three weeks on the disabled list with a shoulder injury but managed his seventh complete game of the year.
Jason Thompson's 29th homer leading off the sixth gave Pittsburgh its run.

Martina Follows John's Orders Wins Match In Only 44 Minutes

NEW YORK (AP) — Martina Navratilova had express instructions from John McEnroe as both top seeds prepared for their opening matches at the problem-plagued U.S. Open Tennis Championships.
"John told me to keep it under 47 minutes," said Navratilova. "He wanted to get on."
Their Wednesday night tournament debuts were stalled by a 1½-hour downpour and when she finally took the court, Navratilova followed directions, playing hurry-up tennis and defeating Laura DuPont 6-1, 6-1, in just 44 minutes. The match was interrupted by a 17-minute rain delay, but Navratilova couldn't help that.

It turned out not to be fast enough, though. McEnroe and Tim Gullickson were tied at 3-3 in their first set when a section of stadium lights at the National Tennis Center went out, delaying the match. The lights still had not been restored when 25 minutes later, it began to rain again. That was when officials suspended and postponed the completion of the match until today.

Earlier, Vitas Gerulaitis, seeded fifth, was eliminated by Fritz Buehning 6-4, 7-6, 6-3, and No. 7 seed Jose-Luis Clerc bowed to Kim Warwick 3-6, 6-4, 1-6, 6-1, 7-6 in the day's major upsets.

In other important pairings, Wimbledon champion Jimmy Connors, the No. 2 seed, survived a first-set tie-breaker and defeated Jeff Borowiak 7-6, 6-2, 6-3, third-seeded Tracy Austin, the defending women's champion, defeated Catherine Tanvier, who retired in the second set with an ankle injury, and Andrea Jaeger, No. 4, beat Lena Sandin 6-1, 6-1.

Navratilova, who carried a sizzling streak of 64 victories in her last 65 matches into the Open, said she was confident that she can win this tournament for the first time.

Martina bristled at the suggestion that she had put pressure on herself with her confident statements.

"I believe I can win," she said. "There's nothing wrong with saying you believe that. Coming in, I'd rather be in my shoes, having played so well and won so many tournaments. It's a good record, if I may blow my own horn."

Connors, who celebrated his 30th birthday today, got no gifts from Borowiak. He struggled through a tough first set and attributed his troubles to jitters, a problem that has affected several of the top players here.

"I started off pretty slow but it is like all my first matches in a big tournament," he said. "I start off pretty nervous and I work my way into the matches."

Gerulaitis, who reached the semifinals in this tournament a year ago, explained his loss to the unseeded Buehning in simple terms.

"I couldn't serve, volley, hit a forehand or a backhand," he said. "That's pretty much it. There was nothing there. I tried to go different ways, but nothing clicked. I couldn't have played much worse."

Gerulaitis warned interviewers that he would talk only about tennis and said he would leave the interview area if there were any questions on any other subject, such as recent reports linking him to a drug probe.

Buehning said he thought the headlines might have interfered with Gerulaitis' mental preparation.

"A few guys in the stands said a few things and maybe he got upset. I don't know," he said. "I'm sure it had a little bit to do with it. It's tough to defend the semifinal finish from last year."

Buehning said the tie-breaker in the second set was the turning point of the match. Gerulaitis lost the first three points of the tie-breaker but battled back to tie the score. Then Buehning went on to win 7-4.

Pirate Aerial Attack!

ECU's Pirates are calling in the aerial attack this fall. The pass is back. Both quarterbacks, Kevin Ingram and Greg Stewart, will be passing out of the new "I" formation. And, that spells wide-open football. With a front line measuring 6'3" and 254 pounds, Ingram and Stewart will have time for some downrange bombing. And, plenty of help from big fast running backs Earnest Byner and Jimmy Walden will keep opponents guessing.

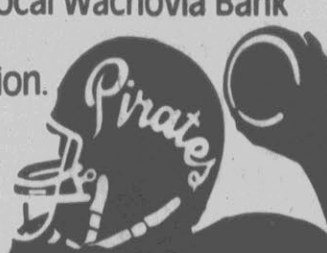

Watch when the aerial attack connects with blistering Ricky Nichols (4.35 sec. — 40 yds.) and Carlton Nelson (4.5 sec. — 40 yds.). They're the fastest split ends ever to wear purple and gold.

So, get ready for the Pirate's aerial attack this fall. Reserve season tickets now to all the Pirates' home games. Simply call the Athletic Ticket Office at 919-757-6500, or drop by your local Wachovia Bank and pick up an order form.

When the Pirates attack by air, catch the action.

Dallas Again East Choice

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys, despite shortcomings in the secondary and at linebacker, are heavily favored to repeat as champions of the National Conference Eastern Division.

Coach Tom Landry hasn't spared the whip in training camp, hustling the Cowboys through one of their toughest six weeks in years.

"Coach Landry was sending us a message and the message is that he didn't like the way the last two years ended," said All-Pro defensive tackle Randy White.

The Cowboys lost by a point to San Francisco last year in the NFC title game and were denied their sixth Super Bowl visit the year before when they fell to the Philadelphia Eagles.

"The coach has been particularly tough on conditioning," White said. "We'll be in shape. I'll guarantee you that."

Landry has been concerned about the retirements of weakside linebacker D.D. Lewis and strong safety Charlie Waters.

"We lost a lot of experience there," Landry said.

And he is concerned that his 12-4 Cowboys of 1981 may have to be better in 1982 just to win the division.

"If everything remained the same as in 1981, we wouldn't have to be better to win the division," Landry said. "But I see a major improvement in the division teams."

The NFC East provided an NFL first in 1981 — three playoff teams, the Cowboys, the Eagles and the New York Giants.

Landry said the 10-6 Eagles "will rebound this year, mainly because they are the top defensive team in the NFL."

He said the 9-7 Giants, who reached the playoffs for the first time since 1963, "have improved greatly and will be tough."

Landry said the 8-8 Washington Redskins "are coming on now with their new system" and the 7-9 St. Louis Cardinals are a threat "because of Neil Lomax's emergence at quarterback."

"I think last year's Cowboys' team was the best we've had since the 1978 team that went to the Super Bowl," Landry said. "Now we have to get better."

Coach Dick Vermeil is 54-45 in six seasons and needs 12 more victories to tie Earle "Greasy" Neale as the winningest coach in the team's history.

The Eagles will be celebrating their 50th anniversary in 1982. They lost four of their last five games in 1981 to stumble into the playoffs.

"We were a better team but everyone evaluates whether you were a better team on the basis of wins and losses," Vermeil said. "I don't know whether we're going to win any more games (in 1982), but physically and mentally, right now it's the best football team I've ever had. Now, whether it's going to end up being that will be determined by how our level of motivation and attitude say as we go through training camp. But physically it's by far our best team."

Washington Coach Joe Gibbs got his NFL indoctrination with five straight losses in his first head coaching job, but the team rallied to finish at .500.

"The most rewarding thing about last season is that we found we have players who just won't quit," Gibbs said.

The Cardinals will start Lomax in place of 17-year veteran Jim Hart this year.

"We've added quite a few new players but not for the sake of change," St. Louis Coach Jim Hanifan said. "Most, if not all of them, won their jobs outright."

St. Louis' defense yielded an NFL-high 408 points last year and new assistant head coach Floyd Peters has changed the Cardinals from a 3-4 to a 4-3 defensive front.

The Giants must decide on a quarterback — either Scott Brunner or Phil Simms to run their fast-improving offense.

The Cowboys' offense should again carry the team, with Tony Dorsett some five pounds heavier but still as fast as ever. Dorsett gained more than 1,600 yards last year.

"Our offense should be better," Dorsett said. "If our defense comes along, we'll be hard to handle."

Lockout For NFL Players

By The Associated Press
If the National Football League owners' decision against a lockout puts pressure on the players, it suits Ed Garvey just fine.

In the latest chapter in the league's ongoing labor dispute, the NFL owners on Wednesday ruled out a lockout of players even if no agreement is reached on a new contract by the time the season opens Sept. 12.

In announcing the decision, Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council, said, "From a labor relations standpoint, a lockout makes quite a bit of sense. But after a free discussion of that issue, the owners decided that they owe it to the fans and to the players who have been through the two-a-days (workouts) to open up the season."

Contacted by Cable News Network after Donlan's announcement, Garvey, the executive director of the NFL Players Association, said, "The owners have put it (the pressure to settle the dispute) back on us and that's where we wanted it all along. I never thought they'd seriously lock out, though there's a difference of opinion on our staff about that."

"The deal we made with Ted Turner made it impossible for them to lock us out. But things have a tendency to change, and I'll believe it when we get to the point of striking."

Broadcast executive Turner has signed a contract with the players' union to televise games from a "Player's League" over his "SuperStation", WTBS, should a strike occur.

Donlan said that the decision not to have a lockout was made unanimously by the six NFL Executive Committee members who attended the meeting: Jim Kensil of the New York Jets, Leonard Tose of Philadelphia, Dan Rooney of Pittsburgh, Mike Brown of Cincinnati, Chuck Sullivan of New England and Hugh Culverhouse of Tampa Bay. The committee's seventh member, San Diego's Gene Klein, did not attend.

Donlan concurred that the decision against a lockout would put the onus for any failure to start the season on the union.

"The owners have said they wanted to give the players more money and better benefits, and we think that's what the players want," said Donlan. "And I believe we are going to get this resolved without a work stoppage."

Earlier Wednesday, the Players Association urged resumption of negotiations with the owners — they haven't met since Aug. 26 — but on terms only agreeable, so far, to the players.

Garvey noted that the union's board of directors, which met Monday in Chicago, unanimously reaffirmed the union's five demands:

- Immediate substantial wage increases for all players.
- Guarantee players a fair share of future revenues.
- Elimination of wage inequities.
- Lengthening of careers through elimination of incentives to cut older players for financial reasons.
- Rewarding performance through significant incentives.

Robbie Erhmann had rounds of 28, 25 and 28 on his way to claiming the honors in Wednesday night's Pro-Am Tournament at the Greenville Putt-Putt Course.

Erhmann's 27-under-par 81 was nine strokes better than his closest challenger, Johnny Carrow, who finished the three-round event with an 18-under 90.

The end of the tournament found Danny Pollard, Allen Elder and Jake Loftin in a three-way tie for third at 91, ten strokes off the pace set by Erhmann.

Walker Won't Play Monday

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — All-American tailback Herschel Walker will be in uniform Monday night for Georgia's football game against the Clemson Tigers — but Coach Vince Dooley says his uniform won't make it past the sideline.

Walker, who suffered a broken thumb in practice Aug. 21, will dress out for the nationally televised season opener against the national champion Clemson Tigers, but Dooley reiterated Wednesday that his star running back will not play.

"Herschel worked Tuesday for the first time with a pad so thick that there was no possible way he could get hurt, but it's something he could not play in," Dooley said. "Hopefully he'll be ready to play for the Brigham Young football game." Georgia takes on BYU on Saturday, Sept. 11.

Replacing Walker at tailback will be Carnie Norris, with Tron Jackson playing backup.

"Carnie is a solid performer who's answered the bell on a couple of other occasions and responded well," Dooley said. "He'll do a good job, but he's not Herschel Walker."

Earnhardt Sees Vets Leading Darlington Pack

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Qualifying for the Southern 500 stock car race opens today and driver Dale Earnhardt is predicting that the NASCAR veterans will capture the top five spots for the Labor Day race.

"The guys who are usually the first five are usually the ones with the most experience and they're not as likely to get in trouble," said Earnhardt, who won the Rebel 500 at Darlington International Speedway in April.

Qualifying, which continue Friday, were scheduled to begin at 3:00 p.m., and Earnhardt says he will be going all out for the pole.

"Anytime you go to the racetrack, you want to go the fastest," he said. "It's important here to start in the top five or six, or at least the top 10."

"And the track is so narrow, if you're back in the field and somebody spins, you could be in for trouble." Earnhardt may have had the last win at Darlington, but Buddy Baker says he's got a vision of victory Monday. "I just feel I'm going to win it," he says of the 33rd annual event. "Every once in awhile it comes over me. I just see myself in victory lane."

Baker has a special reason for wanting to win. His father Buck Baker will be inducted into the National Motorsports Press Association Stock Car Racing Hall of Fame Saturday.

"That whole weekend is going to be very special for the Baker family and to win the Southern 500 on Monday would be the perfect ending to a perfect week," Baker said.

"Darlington has always been a special place for the Bakers and that is now even more true with dad going into the Hall of Fame," he said.

The elder Baker has won the Southern 500 three times. Buddy, 41, won it in 1970. "Winning Darlington is still the dream of every driver on the Winston Cup Grand National circuit because of its reputation," the younger Baker said. "But I think I want to win it even more because of what it has meant to the Bakers. And I think I'm going to do it."

Labonte, who has never finished lower than fourth in the race, said, "I just seem to run good at Darlington, especially in the Southern 500. The car we are taking there is the car that has run the best for us this season and with a little luck, we can win it."

Elliott, 26, is still looking for his first Grand National win.

"I wouldn't be surprised if it came at Darlington," said the Dawsonville, Ga., driver. "My luck has always been pretty good at Darlington and I just seem to run well there."

USS Iowa On Its Way To $500 Million Facelift

By DON BEMAN
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The USS Iowa, largest battleship ever built by the United States, is on its way to a $500 million facelift after a 24-year rest in mothballs.

The giant warship, flying the flag of its namesake state, inched slowly away from the docks Wednesday to start a 15-day journey to a southern shipyard.

Once the pride of the Navy with 16-inch guns that could hit a target at 23 miles, the Iowa will be refitted as a missile ship. Armament will include 32 Tomahawk and 16 Harpoon missiles. The big guns will also stay.

"She's got at least 15 years of good life left in her," said Adm. Julian Becton, who lives in retirement near the Philadelphia Naval Shipyard where the battleship has been in storage.

Becton, 74, was the last skipper of the 57,000 ton vessel before it was mothballed on Feb. 28, 1958, after being recommissioned for the Korean conflict.

"That was a sad day indeed," the admiral said, recalling the decommissioning. It was also Becton's last sea command before he retired from active duty in 1966.

The admiral was among 100 civilian and military personnel who watched as six tugs eased the 887-foot ship into the channel of the Delaware River. With the warship's engines still idle and the mainshafts welded, it will be towed the entire 1,700-mile trip.

The overhaul will take 18 months to two years and will be done by Litton Industries at Avondale Shipyard, New Orleans, and Litton Shipbuilding, Pascagoula, Miss.

The Iowa-class battleship is topped in size only by the Japanese battleships Yamato and Musashi.

"Just seeing the Iowa would have to have a stabilizing effect on an aggressor," said Becton.

The Iowa was commissioned in 1942 and served in the Atlantic and Pacific theaters during World War II. The battleship participated in strikes against many Japanese-held islands in the Pacific, but was hit by enemy fire only once. The Navy said damage was minimal.

The Iowa also carried President Franklin D. Roosevelt to Casablanca, Morocco, on the first leg of his journey to Teheran, Iran, to meet with the Soviet Union's Joseph Stalin and Great Britain's Winston Churchill during World War II.

Said by Becton to be the only ship in the Navy so fitted, the Iowa has a square bathtub with an inside railing for the invalid president.

Angered Judge Diverts Fines

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — A county library apparently is benefitting from a judge's displeasure with the City Council over the size of his paycheck.

East Lansing District Judge Daniel Tschirhart is diverting most of the fines assessed in his court from the city to the county library.

"I'm the only city employee with no raise this year," Tschirhart said Tuesday. "And that's happened twice in three years."

Tschirhart said his $51,252 salary makes him one of the lowest-paid district judges in the area.

The judge said he's diverting fees to the Ingham County Library because "the city has a lot of money, and the library needed money." The switch means a loss of about $55,000 a year for the city—and a similar gain for the library.

District court judges in Michigan can decide how to divide their fines between court costs and penal fees. Court costs go to the local government's general fund, while penal fines go to the county library.

In the past, 95 percent of the fines levied by Tschirhart were deemed court costs and went to the city. Now, 95 percent of his fees are called penal fines and go to the county library.

Mayor Larry Owen said there was "just no justification for that kind of behavior."

"There's no other possible explanation than that he's angry he didn't get a small raise," Owen said. "Even though I'm for his getting a 5 percent raise like the other city employees, I'm not going to submit to that kind of arm-twisting."

Deputy state court administrator Bruce White said he suspected that the change in fine allocations actually was "coincidental" with the salary flap. He said it could have been done to bring East Lansing into line with a recent state Court of Appeals ruling on court fees.

District judges in Michigan earn from $44,780 to $60,720. The average salary is $56,403, according to the administrator's office. In addition to his salary, Tschirhart receives a $720 annual car allowance.

Judge Drafts Four To Serve On Jury

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Four Mecklenburg County employees were forced to do public service of a different sort when Superior Court Judge John Friday ran short of jurors.

When only nine jurors were available for a misdemeanor trespassing case Tuesday because earlier cases had drained the jury pool, Friday ordered sheriff's deputies to round up some more citizens.

Deputies took him at his word, marching next door to the county office building and returning with the four employees.

Donald Ratliff, a Mecklenburg personal property tax supervisor, thought it was a joke when two deputies came into the tax office and said, "Come on, we need you and two more. The judge is waiting."

But by 4 p.m. Ratliff, clerks Julie Herrington and Gigi Richardson, and budget analyst Delores Foster were in the jury box.

"We didn't even have time to grab our pocketbooks," said Ms. Herrington.

After an hour of testimony in the appeal of a misdemeanor trespass conviction, Friday recessed court for the day, telling all the jurors to report back at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday. They did.

The trial ended about 11:15 a.m. when the defendant changed her not guilty plea to no contest.

Friday, who lives in Lincolnton, had a matter-of-fact attitude about his legal but unorthodox action.

"A judge likes to keep the court running, that's all," he said. "Everybody was here and ready for the trial and we didn't have a jury."

The four draftees said they didn't mind the disruption to their routines, even though they are required by the county to return the $8-a-day jury pay.

Arafat, PLO Leaders Discuss Reagan Initiatives

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent
ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Yasser Arafat discussed President Reagan's Middle East peace initiative today with nearly half of the Palestine Liberation Organization's executive committee. Some members appeared pleased with several points.

There was no immediate official reaction. PLO foreign affairs spokesman Farouk Kaddoumi was first briefed on the initiative by reporters when he arrived at the Apollon Palace hotel, Arafat's headquarters since he arrived in Greece on Wednesday.

"That's good," he said when told Reagan opposed Israeli sovereignty on the West Bank and Gaza and a called for a freeze on new settlements.

He reserved comment until he could study the plan, but said he saw "room for movement." He would not elaborate further. Arafat received a telexed copy of Reagan's full text and he arranged to watch televised coverage of European reaction.

Several members of the 15-man committee expressed some positive reaction but would not comment until an official position could be taken.

Since Wednesday, Arafat has met intermittently with top aides to map out future PLO strategy, Palestinian sources said. Arafat told a news conference after arriving Wednesday that he would consider setting up a provisional Palestinian government in exile when the time seemed right.

He was welcomed to Greece with a hug from Premier Andreas Papandreu. Aides said Arafat chose to make Athens his first stop because Greece offered more help to the PLO during the Israeli siege of Beirut than Arab governments.

Greek authorities discouraged comings and goings by Arafat around Athens, in order not to attract attention during French President Francois Mitterrand's visit here.

In welcoming Arafat, Papandreu committed Greece to the Palestinian side, but officials kept the visit low-key. French tricolor flags were seen across Athens, but the PLO flag flew only at the small port.

Arafat's low profile was in sharp contrast to his triumphant three-day visit last December, when he conferred at length with Papandreu, arranged for full diplomatic status for the PLO and went away an honorary citizen of Athens.

Greek officials said Arafat could spend 24 hours in Greece but would have to limit the official portion of his stay to avoid upstaging Mitterrand, who arrived on a state visit six hours after Arafat.

Arafat is expected to establish his new headquarters in the Tunisian capital of Tunis, where the Arab League secretariat is based.

A television reporter asked him if he was beaten after Israel succeeded in driving the Palestinian guerrillas from west Beirut — their stronghold for 12 years.

"I am with the people. No people can be defeated," Arafat replied.

"With the people of Lebanon and the people of Beirut, we succeeded in protecting the city from being invaded and occupied by the Israeli savage, barbarian troops.

"And we succeeded in preventing their decision to smash the city and carry on with their genocide as they had declared," he said.

"Struggle is not only by one means," he said. "We are under occupation, they (the Israelis) occupied our land. We have the right to use all methods and means to continue our struggle."

Arafat would not say what form the battle would take, but the PLO has vowed to wage an underground war on the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip, home of 1.3 million Palestinians.

As he stepped onto the Greek dock, the 53-year-old

PLO chief was instantly recognizable by his standard gear: a long black and white checkered headscarf, a scraggly beard and a pistol at his side.

He fell on his closest aide, Farouk Kaddoumi, for a long embrace, tears in his eyes reflecting emotion not expressed Monday when he left Beirut.

Cars driven by Darvin Purvis of 604-B W. 14th St. and Jorge Issacs Lopez of 1003 Taylor St. collided about 7:45 a.m. Wednesday at the intersection of Memorial Drive and Monroe Street.

Police investigators, who estimated damage to each car at $400, charged Purvis with driving while his license was revoked, and charged Lopez with failing to see his intended movement could be made in safety.

Vocational Teachers In N.C. Hit Ten-Year Low

By MARK DAVIS
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The number of vocational education teachers in North Carolina is at a 10-year low, and as many as 1,000 more are needed, a state official says.

Daniel Hardee, associate director of support services for the state Division of Vocational Education, told the State Board of Education Wednesday that several fields of vocational education need more teachers.

Hardee referred to a 1981 study of 13 vocational fields. That study concluded that demand for vocational teachers outstrips supply and that trends indicate the gap may grow larger.

"There's enough of a trend to see we've got some shortages," he said.

Hardee said many students no longer find vocational education courses attractive and enroll in other education curricula. "There aren't enough kids interested enough," he said.

Agriculture and marketing courses do not have enough qualified instructors and often have to rely on instructors who are provisionally certified, or who lack sufficient training to be fully certified, Hardee said.

Hardee said part of the shortage springs from the comparatively low salaries vocational instructors make. He said the average vocational-education instructor in North Carolina makes about $16,000 a year — in some cases, far less than the amount of money a qualified instructor could make plying his or her trade in the private sector.

"Anybody (vocational teacher) worth his salt can pull down $25,000 to $30,000 in a year," Hardee said. "In teaching, even with the highest degree... it would be just about $20,000 or so. When you can't put bread on the table your commitment to education and mankind in general wavers."

The study suggests that the state board and the University of North Carolina Board of Governors and other education officials work together to make vocational education a more attractive college curriculum.

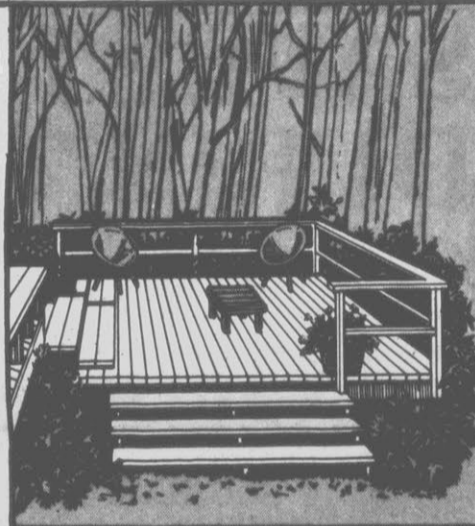

Hardee also said more money is needed to expand training programs, recruitment and facilities in vocational education.

Publication For The Quasi-Scientific

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer
HIGHLAND PARK, Ill.
(AP) — Mary and Curtis Fuller have never spotted a UFO or chatted with a ghost. But they relish telling the nation about people who hunt for dinosaurs, travel outside their bodies and commune with their dead parakeets. The Fullers' vehicle is Fate magazine, a monthly ma-and-pa publication packed with quasi-scientific articles, book reviews, features and personal "mystic experiences."

who owned a pub, the civil servant who experienced out-of-body travel and the military man who sighted a mysterious glob of glass in the sky. Among the pages of personal testimony in the magazine is a section called, "My Proof of Survival," featuring, among other choice selections, a woman who "talked mentally to her dead parakeet."

Fate's advertising, too, frequently borders on the bizarre. Among the variety of goods peddled in Fate are the "Unlink Augmenter," a device that claims to amplify your psychic power for a cost of $59.95 and Mo-Su-Bong Prayer Ritual Kits, a unique way to try to gain one's desires for just $4.

Even though the magazine is eccentric, the Fullers emphasize that Fate, which they say has about 150,000 readers, is not fiction.

As they say each month on the magazine cover, Fate is the place to find "The World's Mysteries Explored."

"We think we're dealing on the frontiers of science," said Fuller, Fate's 70-year-old publisher and a monthly columnist.

His wife, Mary, 68, associate publisher and editor, says Fate's policy "is to take the lunatic fringe and make it believable."

Tales of paranormal phenomena may seem kooky but one has to ask, Mrs. Fuller said, is "it capable of belief?"

And, she said, when it comes to testimony of ghosts and contact with dead relatives, "There's no proving what you dreamed last night."

In fact, not all of Fate is so outlandish. It has focused on archaeologists' research and scientists' views of acupuncture.

And the task of Fate's four editorial employees, Mrs. Fuller said, is to take "sensational material and try to authenticate it."

"Subjective" articles appearing in Fate must be accompanied by an affidavit signed by the author, testifying to its veracity.

Associate Editor Jerome Clark says that Fate passes on many proposed stories, including those people who "say they have contact with benevolent beings of another world."

Once an article is accepted, Fate often tries to authenticate the contents but does not go out in the field to do research.

Clark said that Fate has done its share of debunking, too. In one issue, a Fate writer investigated the story of an African town where it supposedly rained beads and discovered the tale was nonsense.

The Fullers say that Fate has been duped, but they also say they know how to weed out a hoax. "You get a feeling which ones are true, and which ones aren't," Fuller said.

Fate's first issue in 1948 told the tale of a pilot who said he saw disk-shaped objects while flying over the Cascade Mountains. It's believed to be the first modern UFO sighting.

These topics, the Fullers say, were laughed at years ago.

Many scientists still regard Fate as inferior and refuse to talk about it, fearful of expanding its readership.

There are, however, a smattering of scientists who are Fate fans, including J. Allen Hynek, professor emeritus of physics and astronomy at Northwestern University and head of the Center for UFO Studies.

Fate "would not be considered a scientific journal," he said. "But on its own level, it's the best thing going in its field."

Indeed, Fate is rife with outrageous offers in its ads, including a Govinda fortune stick, promising riches, power and joy for $3.95; and Negajinx, claiming to wipe out jinxes in one day flat for $3.

But if that seems absurd, these are ads that have been screened.

Mrs. Fuller says Fate rejects cancer cures, get-rich-quick schemes, or vanity press ads. "We won't advertise things that hurt you," she said. "We don't expect to stop you from wasting your money."

The Fullers see Fate as a serious magazine.

"We believe we don't understand the world we live in and no one does," Fuller said. "We don't use the word proof around here. We use the word evidence."

Sees Energy In Chicken Manure

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A N.C. State University professor says he knows how to meet the energy needs of 100 families indefinitely. All they need, he says, is a standard henhouse — with 50,000 hens. Dr. Jason C.H. Shih, associate professor of poultry science, says he's developed a process of converting chicken manure into methane gas. His waste digester is economically feasible and efficient — and could bring poultry farmers thousands of dollars in extra income, he says.

The process of converting animal waste into methane gas is not new. In Shih's native Taiwan, it has been done for years with swine waste.

"Chicken waste is better because it is more concentrated and confined," he said. "The whole system is easy to adapt to a farm situation. There is a very high potential for methane production."

What is new is the development of a simple, cheap, well-controlled method of maximizing methane production. Anaerobic bacteria, coupled with temperatures of 120 degrees Fahrenheit, break down the waste.

Higher temperatures allow the waste to digest more quickly, Shih said.

"Our system is not so sophisticated," he said. "The material is inexpensive and the process is simple."

In Shih's experimental digester, the waste is mixed with hot water. The mixture then flows into a plastic bag, where it is broken down by bacteria and converted into methane gas and carbon dioxide. The gases inflate the bag until enough pressure builds up to allow the gases to flow out into gas lines for metering.

In an actual farm operation, the gas could be used directly from the bag for heating needs or pumped into a pressurized tank for long-term storage.

The liquid runoff is piped into a holding pond, where fish could be raised.

Shih says a typical farmer could generate $20,000 profit per year from the electricity produced from the methane gas and $7,000 from the leftover sludge if it is used to make fertilizer.

His estimates are based on a hypothetical henhouse with 50,000 hens, producing 300 cubic meters of methane gas per day. That translates roughly into 3,000 kilowatt hours of energy per day.

Western Canada's Spirit Of Separatism Is Growing

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer
RED DEER, Alberta (AP) — The Western Canada Concept, an angry rural-based movement once seen as a fringe, right-wing organization, wants to split Canada's four Western provinces into a new country.

After winning a seat in the Alberta Legislature, the group is growing and gaining respectability in Canada's energy-rich West.

The WCC recently ended a long and draining battle by choosing Gordon Kesler to head the party, which has its strongest support in the provinces of Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

The 37-year-old Kesler, an oil company employee, stunned Canada, Alberta and very likely himself by winning a seat in the provincial Legislature in a special election in February. The victory suggested that the Western separatists could become a political force.

Canada's diverse regions often have less in common with each other than with neighboring sections of the United States. Although various secessions have been suggested or threatened, the only real threat to the federation has emerged in French-speaking Quebec, which elected a separatist government in 1976, but voted against separation in a 1980 referendum.

When the WCC met to choose its leader in Red Deer, a small city midway between Calgary and Edmonton, the party also spelled out its policies for the first time.

It called for lower oil and gas taxes, a return to capital punishment, replacement of gun control with a U.S.-style right to bear arms, and an end to federal policies enforcing official bilingualism and the use of the metric system.

In his victory speech to the 535 delegates, Kesler promised that the party would make sure "that the federal government of this land can no longer rape and pillage us into poverty."

The group's official strategy is to win control of the Alberta government in the next provincial election — which could come as early as October or as late as 1984 — then call a referendum on separation.

If the referendum passed, the separatist Alberta government would tell Canada it could either mend its ways — abandoning the policies that WCC adherents usually describe as "socialist" or "communist" — or say goodbye to Alberta.

"The position of the party is to give Canada one more chance to recognize Alberta as an equal," Kesler said in an interview. "It depends on how valuable they think we are."

Although the Western Canada Concept was founded two years ago in British Columbia, it has not had much success organizing outside Alberta. Canada's fourth largest province, where widespread opposition to the Liberal government of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau has degenerated into anger.

The train carrying Trudeau back to Ottawa Aug. 15 from a vacation in the Rockies was pelted with eggs as it approached Calgary. The week before, Trudeau's train was hit with tomatoes as he was traveling from Vancouver to Banff, Alberta.

Alberta has not sent a Liberal representative to the federal Parliament since the Trudeau-mania election of 1968, when the dashing new prime minister captured Canada's heart but only four of Alberta's 19 seats.

In the most recent campaign, in 1980, Trudeau's Liberals lost every district west of Winnipeg but won a majority in Parliament because of their support in populous Ontario and Quebec.

Anti-Trudeau sentiment here strengthened after the National Energy Program was unveiled in October 1980, raising federal royalties on oil and gas production. Many residents of Alberta — and not just separatists — blame the new federal policy for shutting down a thriving oil and gas industry in the province.

Although Alberta has the highest per capita income in

The separatists say Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed — a Conservative seen in the east as a fierce defender of his province's interests against those of oil and gas consumers — has caved in to Ottawa.

The party's strength has been among farmers and oil industry workers — not executives. It has had little success in white-collar sections of the two main Alberta cities, Calgary and Edmonton.

"It really started with mad farmers and mad oil people," said Diane Alblonczy of Carstairs, one of the few attorneys active in the party. She said professionals sympathetic to WCC goals ask her, "Can you get your act together? Are you going to be a party we'll be proud of?"

The latest convention drew high marks for what the weekly magazine Alberta Report called "almost unnatural gentlemanliness" in a spirited leadership campaign won by Kesler on the second ballot.

The party is well-organized that all but three of Alberta's 79 election districts were represented at the convention. WCC President Hal Schultz, a Calgary real estate investor, said he did not have exact figures but believes the party has "in the neighborhood of 15,000" members.

Not all the members are committed separatists.

"I really hope that it won't be necessary," said Frank McGill, president of the party organization in a northwest Calgary district. "But we want freedom and we want fairness and if we don't get it we're prepared to go our own way."

INDEPENDENCE, A BETTER WORD — The Western Canada Concept party's Gord Kesler, during his successful campaign last February, told crowds he didn't like the word separatist because it was associated with radicalism and violence. Independence is a better word, he said. (CP Laserphoto)

Canada, feeling runs so strong that Kesler can say, "If we can't get rid of the National Energy Program, we'll continue to live in poverty in Alberta."

Free Folder On Car Care

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (UPI) — A free folder telling car owners how to help keep their automobiles in good condition by inspecting them carefully for a few minutes each month is available from the Automotive Information Council.

The folder, entitled "Give Your Car a Driveway Inspection," points out that many easy-to-fix troubles with cars are overlooked in their early stages because of the longer periods for such things as oil changes in new cars and because many drivers now patronize self-service gasoline stations which provide no car checks.

The folder notes that a modern car has about 15,000 parts, some 5,000 of which are moving parts, and cautions, "Without proper care, something is going to have a premature failure."

Single copies are available without charge by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to Automotive Information Council, 28333 Telegraph Rd., Southfield, Mich. 48034, or they can be ordered in quantity for $6 per hundred copies.

Getting A Patent Wasn't Easy

By IKE FLORES
Associated Press Writer
CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Mike Benjamin thought a cheap, do-it-yourself solar collector would be a boon to homeowners tired of heating bills, but he found himself steaming as he tried to patent and sell his invention.

"I probably would do it again," said the 33-year-old inventor, who quit his job, sold his home and moved from Iowa to Florida for the sake of his device. "But only after keeping the day job and making sure I had a shrink for a friend."

Benjamin took a 2-by-8-foot piece of Styrofoam, etched its length with acid, covered it with a clear plastic and used it as a solar panel, which produces heat from the sun. In Iowa, he said, five or six panels would heat an average home during a sunny day at zero degrees. Benjamin says his solar collector is cheap, easy to make, and does without the copper and aluminum panels, high-temperature insulation, glass glazing, metal frames and other materials that can boost the price of the usual panel to thousands of dollars.

His idea almost four years ago was to get a ready-made solar system on the market for $300 to $1,000, or to provide plans for a do-it-yourselfers for much less. The ready-made price would be about one-tenth that of sophisticated solar energy systems.

"I became paranoid," he said. "Surely someone, somewhere had already done this. If not, someone just happened along when I had it, outside, took photos and bugged my phone."

So he consulted a friend, lawyer Vic Ines, who decided they needed a disinterested opinion because the idea did seem too simple. They showed the collector to scientists from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, who liked it.

"It made me feel real good that real inventors didn't think I was crazy," Benjamin said. "With all of this support, I decided to put my money where my mouth was" and get a patent to protect his invention and help interest potential investors.

"I had some money saved up, and I figured I would be a millionaire shortly, so I quit the day job and moved to Florida. There is lots of sun in Florida and I figured that even though it is hard to find work, I would be rich so soon it wouldn't matter," he said.

Benjamin moved to Cape Canaveral, but soon spent his savings and wound up painting houses, making deliveries, and working as a part-time radio announcer while waiting for patent approval.

Help came with a $23,000 grant from the federal Department of Energy to show how the collector could be used by the public — and he received thousands of inquiries after an Associated Press story on his work.

So he got into the mail-order business, selling detailed plans for do-it-yourselfers, but wound up in legal difficulties with the U.S. Postal Service. By the time they were resolved, the grant money was spent and the publicity had faded.

Then, Benjamin's patent lawyer called and said his application had been rejected. So he tried again, was rejected again, and finally applied in person — his invention under his arm — and won patent No. 4,331,503 on May 25.

Primary Examiner

Jerome Massie at the Patent Office in Washington said he could not comment on individual cases but confirmed Benjamin had received a patent for his invention.

"And it only took three years, a house, an airplane, a car, a sailboat, a motorcycle and most of my sanity," Benjamin said, still happy. "Now I have to go get financing, maybe $2 million, to start manufacturing."

It is our pleasure this month to have Earl Jones minister to us. Earl owns and operates Earl Jones' Music Studios in Jacksonville, North Carolina.

He is associated with the singing group, "The Jones Brothers". They gave their testimony at our Full Gospel meeting in May, 1980. Everyone that heard them thoroughly enjoyed their singing and testimony.

Earl, and his brothers, spent most of their lives pursuing a career as professional entertainers, playing and singing in nightclubs, on radio, T.V. and making recordings. They were raised by Christian parents. After accepting Jesus as their personal Saviour, and being baptized in the Holy Spirit, they left secular entertainment. They are now businessmen in the Jacksonville area and minister together, and separately, in song, testimony and teaching.

Earl is married to Kathy and they have three sons: Jimmy, Tony and John. We look forward to Earl speaking and singing for us, and ministering to our needs, by the power of the Holy Spirit. Earl's music appeals especially to young people, and those "young at heart"!

Light Pollution May Cost View

COMET COULD MISS ALAMOGORDO, N.M. (AP) — Halley's comet arrives in the earth's area of the solar system only once in most human lifetimes. Millions of people expect to share the sight of a vast stream of radiance flowing across millions of miles of space in late 1985 and 1986.

But according to an astronomy expert, this generation may be the first in the past 2,500 years to miss the spectacle. The problem is light pollution. Present levels of artificial illumination will make Halley's comet invisible from most cities and barely perceptible from many suburbs.

Fred Schaaf, an astronomy writer and author, proposes the public join astronomers now to encourage local governments to agree to turn down the lights for at least a short time when Halley's comet is at its best.

Agricultural Teams Combining Aid To The Poor

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Sixteen years ago, Makaza Kumanyika marched through Mississippi with Martin Luther King and dreamed of uniting the urban and rural poor in one self-help program.

Today, cold winds are blowing for Agricultural Teams Inc., which Kumanyika cofounded to help poor black farmers market their produce in the inner city.

"The need for that is so clear," says Kumanyika. "King didn't just say, 'I have a dream,'" Kumanyika says, recalling the 1966 march. "He also spoke to the practical — about food. After all, Jesus said, 'Feed the hungry.'"

"We can't let the small farmer die on the vine, and urban people can't grow food on concrete," says Kumanyika, a huge, graying black man who was born in New York 49 years ago as Herbert Callender.

He said his present name means "Cold Winds Are Blowing Out Here for Black People Who Belong to the Land" and was given to him by the Shona tribe on a visit to Zimbabwe.

Kumanyika and 10 other Cornell University graduates founded Agricultural Teams Inc., a Raleigh-based company, in 1974. For years, the group received funding from the federal government and from a variety of churches as it sponsored markets in Miami; Atlanta; Washington; Indianapolis; Youngstown, Ohio, and several North Carolina cities and sent teachers and researchers to Africa and the Caribbean.

Last year, the federal government provided $190,000 — about half the group's budget. This year, Reaganomics has cut all those funds and the recession has bit into other contributions.

Kumanyika hopes to operate this year on $70,000 by moving out of his office into his home, by cutting the number of market days and by working without a salary for the first time in 19 years.

"Ironically, I found myself in a position where I found it hard to eat," says Kumanyika, who has a bachelor's degree in animal science.

The group's board of directors laid off all staffers on July 9. Kumanyika is awaiting word on several funding prospects. Meanwhile, he's going ahead with plans for markets in Washington and in Raleigh in October.

He said the goal of Agricultural Teams is two-pronged: to show struggling farmers how to open alternative markets for their crops and to give poor consumers a chance to buy fresh food in areas many supermarkets have abandoned.

By cutting out several layers of middlemen, farmers are able to get more profit for their produce while consumers often pay up to 33 percent less. The money crunch will reduce that discount to about 15 percent, Kumanyika says.

The first Farm-to-Market project was in Miami in 1980, shortly after the Liberty City riots.

"It was very critical because at that point, many stores — mostly Mom and Pop stores — were destroyed," Kumanyika says. "The fresh food that was brought in was extremely needed. The social services were bringing in McDonald's hamburgers and Kentucky Fried Chicken."

Miami now has its own market sponsored by a community group, he said.

In Atlanta, volunteers sold 60,000 pounds of produce in six hours. And in Indianapolis, about 2,500 people were waiting for the food to arrive at 7 a.m.

"The response was tremendous," Kumanyika says. A core group of about 75 farmers in Piedmont North Carolina has provided most of the produce. Recently, a group of 50 farmers in western North Carolina has participated, and 10 farmers in Warren County are expected to join this fall. Agricultural Teams helps them plan their crops and transports the produce in a refrigerated truck after it is harvested.

Not all the farmers are black. Several are white and some are Lumbee Indians, Kumanyika said.

The markets are also designed to provide jobs, although most help in the markets so far has come from volunteers. Kumanyika says the Reagan administration should recognize the projects' potential for making farmers and inner-city residents more self-sufficient.

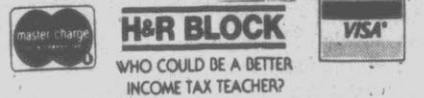

"If we were interested in trying to help people to help themselves, they would make funds available," he said.

Washington is one of the best markets because about half of the city's blacks are originally from North Carolina and yearn for the greens, sweet potatoes, corn and watermelons of home, he says. And North Carolina is one of the best areas to develop Farm-to-Market strategies among small farmers because it is becoming harder to profit from tobacco, he said.

Auto Emission Plan Said Sham

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A plan to combat automobile pollution in Mecklenburg County is a "sham" that will cost time and money, car dealers and service station operators say.

But state officials stand by the program, ordered after the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency found that Mecklenburg County was the only area in the state where air pollution exceeded EPA standards.

The state has recommended that motorists pay $8.50 for an annual safety inspection and an emissions inspection. But dealers and station operators say it will cost them more than $8.50 to conduct the inspections.

Richard McDougall, president of the Charlotte Auto Dealers Association, called the inspection "a sham that people are paying money for."

"We feel that this fee they're talking about is not sufficient to cover the actual expense of the inspections," added Joseph M. Clark, executive director of the Greater Charlotte Automobile Dealers Association.

"I wholeheartedly agree," said Ted R. Bost, president of the local chapter of the N.C. Service Station Association and vice president of the state organization. "We're not even going to break even."

Robert Pruett of the state Division of Motor Vehicles defended the fee. "We looked at the cost of the equipment, the amount of time it will take to perform the exhaust emissions inspection," said Pruett. "If stations get their fair share of the market, then they should recover their investment in 12 months to 15 months. I'd say the extreme is 18 months."

Of the total inspection fee, $2 will be returned to the state, and service stations and auto dealers will keep the remaining $6.50.

Bost said emissions-inspection equipment will cost a minimum of $2,500 and some equipment is priced as high as $10,000. State officials say the equipment will last about five years.

Clark said consumers could be hurt by the program because the emissions program will give service-station operators and car dealers an opportunity to sell additional repairs and services.

"We feel this too can lead to abusive practices," he said.

But state officials say they'll provide free emissions checks to motorists who feel they've been treated unfairly.

Served Wife's Prison Term And Then Learns She's Leaving Him

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Bruce Swain says he can't understand how his wife could leave him after he served her prison sentence on a drug conviction.

"I can't see how she can do it — not after me serving all this time in jail for her and everything else," Swain, 26, said Wednesday from his mother's home in Wilson, N.C.

A prosecutor had called it "a stroke of genius" when Swain, of Virginia Beach, agreed to serve his wife's sentence on a drug charge.

Swain was released from Henrico County jail Sunday after serving more than six months for his wife, Carmen, 25, only to discover she had gone to North Carolina with their 1-year-old son — and is seeking a divorce.

"Why, I would love for the judge to tell her to serve all the time I served, because she sure has done me rotten," he said.

It was on March 25 that Henrico Circuit Court Judge E. Ballard Baker told Swain he could serve the 10 months left on a 12-month jail sentence imposed on his wife for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute it.

Swain's wife — who retained her maiden name of Carmen Bernice Marino after their May 20, 1981, marriage — already had served two months but was pregnant when sentenced and was released after presenting evidence that hers was a high-risk pregnancy and that she had psychological problems.

Judge Baker agreed to let Swain finish out the sentence when he told the court that the drug, although found in his wife's purse in her car, actually belonged to him.

The judge said although he'd never seen such an agreement in 16 years on the bench, "It struck me as the best way to do justice."

Swain thought so too — then. Now he's changed his mind.

"I regret serving the first day. I got letters in there that say how she can't wait until I get home. If I knew this was the way she felt, I would have never stayed in that jail.

"I've cried every day since I been out. I'm just stuck in the middle. I need some help."

Swain said his desire that his wife and young son not be in jail was the major reason he agreed to serve the time left on his wife's term.

By telephone from her parents' delicatessen in Jacksonville, N.C., about 75 miles from Wilson, Ms. Marino said Wednesday:

"I feel bad the way I did it, but I just couldn't see staying with him because I don't love him. It wouldn't have been fair to him or to the child or anyone."

"One reason...I married Bruce was because I was carrying his child and I didn't know if they'd send me away for half of my life.

"He's really hurting, and I can understand that because I've been in jail, too, and it's really disgusting — it's a whole different world to me, the kind of world I don't want to be in."

"But I just feel like I've been through enough. Besides, I'm the one that took the blame for him."

Swain said he learned of his wife's plans Saturday night, less than 24 hours before his release, when she told him she wouldn't be at the jail to greet him when he walked out, a free man.

"She said she don't love me no more, I guess," Swain said. "They served papers on me. She wants custody of the baby and all. I'm going to fight it."

'Hill Street' Is A Sure Thing

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Looking for a sure thing? Bet your local patsy that somebody from "Hill Street Blues" will win an Emmy for best supporting actor when the awards are handed out Sept. 19.

It's a lock. All five nominees in this category come from NBC's classy cop show: Taurean Blacque (Neal Washington), Michael Conrad (Phil Esterhaus), Charles Haid (Andy Renko), Michael Warren (Bobby Hill) and Bruce Weitz (Mick Belker).

This is another example of how "Hill Street," which received 21 Emmy nominations, is exceptional. Most dramatic series are star vehicles. Tom Selleck is "Magnum, P.I." Jack Klugman is "Quincy." William Shatner is "T.J. Hooker."

The supporting casts in these shows are not memorable. They may be moaners, cynics or cheerful helpers, but they never get to develop as characters. They serve primarily as foils for the main man, or because it wouldn't look good to have Magnum always talking to himself.

But "Hill Street" is a true ensemble show of 14 living, screaming and kicking characters. Executive Producer Steven Bochco says only Capt. Frank Furillo, played by Daniel J. Travanti, is indispensable.

"The precinct is a collection of loonies, and he's the only sane one," says Bochco.

The acting on "Hill Street" certainly contributes to its quality, but so does the writing. Characters who are credible and identifiable need to be nurtured on paper before becoming real on screen.

And, more than anything else, that's what sets "Hill Street Blues" apart from the rest of the TV world, making the program a good bet to win its second consecutive Emmy as best dramatic series.

No other show can spur cocktail party conversation about the qualities and quirks of its characters. These players are real people on film, receiving loyalty, compassion and understanding from their viewers.

NO LONGER LITTLE — Melissa Gilbert, who starred in NBC's "Little House on the Prairie," is shown hard at work during her weekly dance class. Melissa, who still will be playing Laura when "Little House" premieres its ninth season this month, says she would love to star on a musical variety show some day and wants to be ready if and when she gets the chance. (AP Laserphoto)

And no other show can boast supporting characters who are so multidimensional that a string of adjectives can describe their usual patterns of behavior and the kinds of people they are:

Renko is cynical, callous, childish, chauvinistic, bigoted, vulgar, lackadaisical, insensitive and vulnerable.

Belker is raunchy, crazed, gentle, devoted, alienated and vulnerable.

Esterhaus is clownish, authoritative, unflappable, pompous, urbane, compassionate and vulnerable.

Hill is warm, understanding, sensible, dedicated, tolerant and vulnerable.

Washington is calm, patient, loyal, serious, diplomatic, compliant and vulnerable.

And these are just the five male nominees for best supporting actor. The same word game can be played with every character:

Furillo is sympathetic, tough, decisive, assured, fair and sensitive. Joyce Davenport (Veronica Hamel), is bright, blunt, aristocratic, aloof and alluring.

Travanti and Ms. Hamel have been nominated as outstanding lead actor and actress.

Two other "Hill Street" players were singled out for Emmy nominations: Barbara Bosson (Fay Furillo) and Betty Thomas (Lucy Bates) for supporting actress. Again, their characters are distinctive from the other 12.

Compensation Rates Revised

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina Rate Bureau on Wednesday filed revised workers compensation rates that would reduce current premiums an average of 3.6 percent. The bureau filed the rates with the state Department of Insurance to become effective Jan. 1, 1983. State law requires, with some exceptions, employers with four or more employees to have workers compensation insurance coverage.

FOCUS

The Utopian Turtletop?

In the mid-1950s, Ford Motors began work on the ultimate automobile, code-named "E-car." At first, executives wanted to name it after the late Edsel Ford, son of Henry Ford. Edsel's sons objected, however, and so the search for another name was on. An advertising agency offered thousands of suggestions. Ford officials even asked poet Marianne Moore for ideas. She proposed the "Intelligent Bullet" and the "Utopian Turtletop." In frustration, Ford went with its first choice, and, 25 years ago this week, the Edsel was unveiled. Unfortunately the public was not enthusiastic. When Ford stopped producing the car just two years later, the Edsel had cost the company $250-million.

The bidding:
 North East South West
 2 ♠ 4 ♠ 6 ♥ Dble
 Pass Pass Pass
 Opening lead: Ten of ♣.

We are often asked to give a bidding sequence for freak hands. Usually, we reply quite honestly that there is no right or wrong way to bid those hands. We simply have not had enough experience with eight-, nine-, or ten-card suits to know how to handle them. A correspondent from abroad swears that this hand was dealt in an Italian tournament, and that the bidding shown actually occurred at the table. Knowing the volatile nature of bridge players, he is probably right.

Certainly, after the two club opening bid, East's jump to four spades cannot be faulted. And South might have been warned by his wasted values in spades that a heart slam would need some luck. We are inclined to agree with West's double.

Since he could not lead a spade even if he wanted to, West's decision to lead a club is hard to fault. He reasoned that there was a good chance that his partner would be void in clubs and would get a ruff. Logical, but only half right. East was indeed void in clubs; unfortunately, he did not have a trump with which to ruff.

Declarer was quick to seize his opportunity. He took all four of dummy's high clubs, discarding a diamond and a spade from his hand. Next came the king of diamonds. Had East not covered, declarer would have discarded his remaining spade. When East produced the ace, declarer ruffed and entered dummy with the ace of trumps. On the queen of diamonds declarer pitched his remaining spade, and he conceded only one trump trick.

Obviously, declarer would have gone down three had West led a diamond — the defenders would have scored a diamond, a spade, a spade ruff and the king of trumps. Equally obvious is the fact that South's judgment to bid over four spades was correct in one aspect — East would have made four spades, losing only a trump trick and two diamonds.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. ## Questionnaire Puts Survey In Reverse

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A legislator says the questions are "dehumanizing, insulting and offensive," but he's the one asking them — quizzing state capitol reporters about their sex habits, finances and personal lives.

Democratic Assemblyman Art Agnos of San Francisco said Tuesday that replies to the 97-question survey, sent to about 100 reporters, will be used in an article he is writing this fall for California Journal magazine.

"We're just reversing the process to give you an experience of what it's like to get questions of that nature," Agnos told a reporter.

"Hopefully, it will sensitize them to what it's like to be asked such questions. They're shocking, and that's what I'm trying to do — shock the media with what they do."

Among the questions on Agnos' survey:

"Do you cheat on your spouse?"
 "Have you had an extracurricular affair with a co-worker on your newspaper or TV or radio staff? May we have the name of this co-worker for confirmation and performance report?"

Security At Plant Upheld

PARK, N.C. (AP) — IBM officials defended their security system in the wake of disclosures that they were threatened prior to a shooting rampage at their facility but didn't have Leonard D. Avery arrested.

Durham County Sheriff's Department officials said Wednesday they told IBM security personnel at least twice to take out warrants against Avery, who was charged with murder and seven counts of assault after the shootings Monday that left a man dead.

In a prepared statement, IBM officials acknowledged Wednesday that the sheriff's department said the man could be arrested but said deputies warned that it was "probably not a viable option."

A man dressed in military fatigues walked into the IBM complex Monday and opened fire with an automatic weapon, killing Ralph Glenn and seriously injuring another employee, Richard D. Martin.

Avery, a fired IBM employee, was apprehended on a Raleigh thoroughfare after a high-speed chase. He apparently shot himself in the head prior to his capture and remains hospitalized.

Sources have said Avery was fired because he had failed to attend some therapy sessions on days he did not report for work. Other sources said Avery was fired for excessive absenteeism.

Durham County deputies said Wednesday that IBM security officers told them twice in recent weeks a man named L.D. Avery had threatened employees.

Durham detective R.D. Seagrove said he also received a call that a man identified as Avery also had threatened an IBM doctor.

"I recommended to (IBM) security that they approach it one of two ways — swear out a warrant for communicating a threat or, if the doctor felt like it, he could look into commitment papers," he said.

Deputies increased patrols in the IBM parking area after an Aug. 23 threat, Seagrove said.

"But I had never seen that person (Avery) and how in the world would I know who's supposed to be out there and who's not?" Seagrove asked.

IBM spokesman Dave Benevides said in a statement, "The sheriff's department pointed out that he (Avery) probably could be held for a short time and that an arrest might serve to incite him further."

Benevides said the company also took additional security measures after the threats.

He said the measures included "consultation with the sheriff's department and the FBI, immediate deactivation of Avery's access badge to the premises, identification of his vehicle to alert security personnel, increased security tours in parking lots and buildings, IBM security officer presence in public access areas, and mailroom attention to suspicious parcels. "In addition to the above, certain individuals who might have been targets of Avery's threats were advised to take special security precautions," Benevides said.

Meanwhile, employees who witnessed the shootings continued to react Wednesday.

Charles J. Thompson, an IBM employee, said he narrowly missed death when bullets from a semi-automatic weapon whistled past his head.

Thompson, who suffered superficial wounds, said he yelled a warning to others — and almost paid for it with his own life.

"He had already shot Ralph (Glenn). Then he fired at me, and I ducked," Thompson, of Garner, recalled.

Glenn, of Durham, died at Duke University Medical Center several hours after he was shot. Martin was listed in stable condition at Duke.

About 400 mourners attended funeral services for Glenn at Bethesda Baptist Church in Durham on Wednesday.

"Over the years he had become a brother to me," the Rev. Toby Stone said in his eulogy. "He was faithful, loving, gentle, kind, meek and long-suffering."

Arrested 28 In Wilson Roundup

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — Forty police officers and North Carolina alcohol law enforcement agents arrested 28 people Wednesday in the largest undercover drug operation in city history.

The five-month long operation resulted in 45 warrants for arrest and court orders to seize eight vehicles allegedly used to transport drugs for sale.

A report will be issued to the N.C. Alcoholic Beverage Control Board regarding drug sales in five downtown taverns, Wilson Police Chief Thomas Younce said.

Employees of one downtown tavern have been arrested for selling drugs, while other employees are still being sought, police said.

Charges for the 28 people include possession with intent to sell such drugs as marijuana, methaqualone, LSD, Valium, hashish, barbituates, amphetamines and heroin. A total of 158 charges are pending against the 45 suspects.

REQUEST APPROVED
Police Chief Glenn Cannon announced the approval of a request by Pitt County Chapter No. 37 of the Disabled American Veterans to conduct a sidewalk solicitation Sept. 10-11 to raise funds to help needy, disabled veterans and their families.

The height you seek, the oak you love and a pendulum you can see from three sides.

Half the fun of owning a clock like this is watching the gleaming lyre pendulum swing to and fro. So, a total of three glass panels are provided to assure your pleasure. A deeply embossed carved pediment design over-covers the handsome Tempus Fugit dial with its individually mounted Arabic numerals and elaborate corner ornaments. The weight-driven movement plays the beloved chimes of Westminster each quarter hour and counts on the hour. Being 77 1/2" tall, this clock will be easy to find when you visit our store.
