August Tax Take For N.C. Continues Poor

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt planned to take steps today to further limit state spending and freeze more jobs, following the Revenue Department's report of poor state tax collections last month.

North Carolina's general tax collections increased by only 3.09 percent during August, below the growth rate counted on in the current state budget, Revenue Secretary Mark Lynch reported today. General fund tax collections amounted to $286.6 million, he said.

After the report, administration officials said Hunt planned to issue an order taking several steps designed to reduce the amount of money going to state agencies in an effort to keep the state budget in balance in the face of lowered revenues.

Hunt's order was expected to:

— Reduce the allotments of money going to state agencies to 94 percent of the appropriation provided by the General Assembly. Earlier, Hunt had cut the departments to 95 percent of budget.

— Increase restrictions on filling vacant jobs in state government. Budget officials said the number of jobs that have been required to remain unfilled in each department will be increased by 25 to 30 percent.

— Change the distribution of money to each department by distributing it on monthly rather than quarterly.

Deputy state budget officer Marvin Dorman said the steps were being taken because of "concern over this year's budget."

He called the August revenue report a "surprise."

"I did not think any month this year would be at the level of 3 percent," he said.

Dorman said even if taxes grew by 5 percent by the end of the fiscal year, the state's budget would still be $120 million short.

Lynch said the growth in tax collections was also smaller than the rate of increase during July, and means the state's tax collections have increased 4.3 percent for the first two months of the current fiscal year.

The state budget passed by legislators in June assumes that the state's tax collections will grow by 8.9 percent over the course of the year ending next June.

Lynch, in releasing the monthly revenue report, said the figures "clearly indicate the economy was not picking up as had been hoped" during August and July.

"I don't see any sign that the recession has ended," he said.

The state's gasoline tax collections declined 8 percent during August. The collections were up during July, however, resulting in a 1 percent increase for the two-month period compared with the same two months last year.

Lynch said the main reason for the decline in general tax collections was a lower level of income tax collections. Individual and corporate income taxes combined were down 1.3 percent in August.

Sales taxes, an indicator of consumer spending during July, were up 4.4 percent. New car sale taxes were down 5 percent and taxes on lumber and building materials were down 8 percent.

New President Chosen By Lebanese Parliament

By The Associated Press

The Lebanese Parliament today elected Christian Amin Gemayel to replace his slain brother as president-elect, and Israel's Cabinet endorsed the planned return of 800 U.S. Marines and other foreign peacekeepers to Israeli-occupied west Beirut.

Israel also proposed a committee of five nations — Israel, Lebanon, the United States, Italy and France — to ensure "the bloody terror will not return" to Beirut, where the Red Cross has recovered 160 corpses from a massacre at two refugee camps in the Moslem western sector.

The Red Cross said it fears hundreds of victims of the slaughter, blamed on Christian gunmen, eventually will be found in the Chatilla and Sabra camps.

In an unusual show of Moslem-Christian cooperation, the 39-year-old Gemayel was elected by a vote of 77-0 in a special session of the 92-member Parliament, held in the Lebanese military academy outside Beirut. Three of the 80 deputies who attended abstained.

His election came one week after his brother, militia commander Bashir Gemayel was killed by a bomb and Israeli troops moved into west Beirut in what Israel said was a peacekeeping move after the assassination.

The new president-elect made a short address to Parliament, pledging to "shoulder the monumental responsibility ... of reunifying and reconstructing Lebanon in the fashion my martyred brother hoped to accomplish."

Amin Gemayel's main rival, 82-year-old former President Camille Chamoun, had withdrawn Monday, saying he was afraid Israel would try to force a new president to sign a peace treaty with Israel as it had done with Bashir Gemayel.

Lawmakers Take Up President's Plea To End Railroad Walkout

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is asking Congress to quickly approve legislation ordering an end to the crippling strike against the nation's freight railroads.

Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., called Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis and other witnesses before his House Energy and Commerce Committee today to testify on Reagan's request for congressional action.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, called a separate session of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, which he chairs, to take up the matter as well.

Lewis said the president wants Congress to approve legislation that would impose on the railroads and striking engineers the recommendations of a special presidential commission established during a 60-day cooling off period that ended Sunday.

Efforts to end the 3-day-old strike by locomotive engineers moved to Capitol Hill when talks between union and management negotiators broke off after a three-hour session Monday.

Freight traffic has been stopped across most of the nation. Amtrak passenger service has halted throughout the South and west of Chicago, causing major traffic jams in Chicago and San Francisco as rail commuters switched to their cars.

The Chessie System Railroads, which serves coal mines and factories in 13 states, was operating at half its capacity, and the Burlington Northern, the nation's longest rail line, was running at about 20 percent of capacity.

A Chessie executive, Walter B. Vander Veer, predicted widespread layoffs in Michigan's automotive, steel and chemical plants by early next week if the strike continues.

Already, General Motors Corp. has closed a truck assembly plant in St. Louis because of a shortage of rail-shipped parts, and Armco Steel announced it was closing eight coal mines in West Virginia and laying off 1,400 workers because of a lack of coal cars.

Chairman For Drive Chosen

Frank Grooms has been elected campaign chairman of the 1982 United Way drive, organization officials announced today.

Grooms is employee relations manager for Eaton Corp. He holds an undergraduate degree in secondary education from Tennessee Tech and a master's in guidance and counseling from Middle Tennessee State University.

He served as a counselor in the Metropolitan Nashville, Tenn., school system prior to entering the field of personnel. For the past 13 years he has worked in the field of human relations, serving as employment manager, training manager, safety-security supervisor and personnel manager.

He is on the board of directors of the American Society of Training and Development, serves on the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, Junior Achievement, Pitt County United Way, the East Carolina University Advisory Committee on Continuing Education, Pitt Community College Coop Advisory Board and Greenville School Board. He is chairman of the Pitt-

Greenville Chamber of Commerce Education Committee.

Grooms and his wife, Lana, moved to Greenville in 1977. They have a 7-year-old daughter, Shannon, who is a student at Third Street School.

Local Industry Not Hurt By Rail Strike To Date

Local industries surveyed today say they aren't feeling the effects of the nationwide railroad strike to any great degree — yet.

John McConney, plant manager of Burroughs Wellcome, said he expects no great inconvenience to his company to be caused by the rail strike. "Most of our shipping is done by truck," he said, "with only occasional railway shipments to our warehouse on the West Coast, so I don't think we'll be greatly affected — unless it lasts a long time."

A spokesman for Texasgulf in Aurora said, "The strike comes at a relatively good time for us, because we're not shipping now nearly as much as we were 30 days ago. Our railroad cars loaded with our product are still moving out because of supervisory railroad personnel at work, we understand. If the strike doesn't end quickly there may be a problem, when these same cars have been unloaded at their destinations, about getting them back. But we hope it doesn't last that long.

Du Pont reported that its Kinston plant is feeling no effect so far. "We knew the strike was probably coming, so our inventories are built up and it will be quite a while before we'd feel any effect on our materials supply," Joe LaMott said. "Most of our shipping out is done by truck, so that's no problem."

Fred Webb Elevator Inc., a local buyer of grains, reports that the strike has seriously hampered the shipping out of grain. "We've filled all the railroad cars we have in," grain merchandiser John Edwards said, "so, unless we get more in, our only choice is to store the grain we buy. Fortunately, we have a good bit of storage space, but we hope the strike ends soon."

There was no answer to telephone calls placed this morning to both local railroad offices.

Social Security Plight 'Glum'

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration's optimistic forecast for Social Security is "as phony as a four-dollar bill," according to the chairman of a presidential panel seeking financial solutions for the system.

Alan Greenspan also said Monday that even the most pessimistic alternate scenarios used by Social Security's trustees were not grim enough.

He exhorted fellow members of the National Commission on Social Security Reform Monday to try to solve the program's problems in a way that will buffer it against economic downturns.

Unless Congress takes some action, Social Security will run short of cash to pay old age benefits on time next July.

Despite Greenspan's warning, commission members differed on the severity of the crisis.

Former Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball, a liberal who said he was "not the greatest supporter of the administration here," asked why the panel did not hear more about the administration's own forecast — called II-A — that Social Security's trustees used last year.

Greenspan replied: "I am a supporter of the administration. I think that II-A forecast is as phony as a four-dollar bill. I think it has very little probability of materializing."

Robert J. Myers, the panel's executive director, presented figures showing that Social Security needs to save $73 billion over the next five years to keep a 15 percent reserve level in its trust funds.

Robert Beck, the head of the Prudential Insurance Co., said it was "the height of folly" to try to keep only a 15 percent reserve level in the trust funds "when you need at least 9 percent to cover the checks that go out each month." Beck said he favors slowing down the growth of benefits for current and future retirees.

Greenspan said later that the panel will hold a marathon three-day meeting Nov. 11-13 at which the members will consider a long list of alternative reform packages.

He said the options "still remain to be put on paper," adding the sessions will involve "a lot of negotiations" and "trade-offs."

The commission members also got a staff memo indicating that an accelerated payroll tax hike might allow the program to escape its impending financial crisis.

In addition, Myers told the panel that the old age fund sank to between $2 billion and $3 billion — its lowest level in memory — after sending out $11.7 billion in checks in early September.

He said it will build back up this month as payroll tax receipts come in and there will be enough on hand to pay the next round of checks in October. But after that it will have to borrow from the disability and Medicare funds, he said.

Seek Estimate On Access Road

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners Monday voted to ask the state Department of Transportation to give the county an estimate of what it would cost to pave the access road at the county landfill off Allen Road west of Greenville.

County Manager Reginald Gray said estimates to pave the more than 1,300 feet of roadway from private firms amounted to some $21,000. He told the board that the DOT price should be less than that.

Commissioners have been considering paving the access road to make it easier for trucks and other vehicles to use the landfill.

The DOT has already agreed to pave the landfill road from Allen Road to the county's property line at state expense. The county would have to fund any paving on county-owned property.

Commissioners also agreed to give the DOT 300 square feet of property at the intersection of the Stantonburg Road and the hospital emergency room access road for right of way for the new U.S. 264 project.

Gray, who presented the request, told commissioners that the property is unseizable by the hospital and said hospital officials, including director Jack Richardson, have approved the DOT request.

The board also appropriated $22,600 for the purchase of a new ambulance for the Pitt Ambulance Service. The new vehicle will replace an old vehicle that has traveled some 200,000 miles.

Her Career Achievement In 13 Years Is Extraordinary

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — The scene was a packed Royal Albert Hall, the occasion a BBC Promenade festival performance of "The Trojans" by Berlioz. The singer in Dido's death scene was the black American soprano Jessye Norman.

Rapturous applause filled the hall, turning it into yet another Norman conquest of Europe.

"Ravishing, grandiose, luminous and voluptuous" were some of the words critics found to describe Miss Norman's portrayal of one of French opera's noblest heroines.

For a singer born 36 years ago in Augusta, Ga., where as a teen-ager she took part in civil rights sit-ins, Jessye Norman's achievement in a 13-year career has been extraordinary.

Critics and conductors recognize her as one of the most idiomatic exponents of the shimmering world of French opera and chanson, ideal for her silvery voice which covers three octaves from E-flat below middle C to E-flat above high C.

To Wagnerians, she is the answer to a prayer. Not since Kirsten Flagstad and Birgit Nilsson has there been a soprano who can ride the storms of Wagner's orchestration and still sing with beauty.

She performs Bach to Boulez and brings a Marian Anderson-like sincerity to black spirituals. Herieder recitals at the Edinburgh Festival are legend, her Haydn and early Verdi recordings a hit.

Voluminous in size but statuesque and graceful, this great opera singer rarely appears on the stage and won't make her American opera house debut until November when she sings the "other" Dido—Purcell's—in Philadelphia. Her debut at the New York Metropolitan, as Cassandra in "The Trojans," is scheduled for the opening of the 1983 cen-

SOPRANO SHINES — Jessye Norman, the operatic soprano, converses at her home in London where she resides, despite her tenary season. Miss Norman lives alone in an elegant mews house not far from Harrods department store in London's exclusive Knightsbridge quarter. Houseplants, stereo equipment and a baby grand greet the visitor, as does Miss Norman's infectious laughter.

After studies at Howard University and with French baritone Pierre Bernac at the University of Michigan, success came with a 1968 singing competition in Munich.

"I was very lucky because they let me win." A three-year contract with the Deutsche Oper in Berlin ensued, her first role being Elisabeth in "Tannhauser," one of Wagner's Teutonic maidens.

But returning from a recital in London, she suddenly decided the Leonoras and Vitellias ahead were wrong for her voice. She squirmed out of a renewed contract and settled here.

"It was a great risk. My parents thought I was mad to leave a place where I had a job."

Choosing her appearances with care, an international career soon blossomed with a repertoire stretching from contralto and mezzo parts, to those for lyric or dramatic sopranos.

"I stay away from labels. It's very funny, my voice. You couldn't say it's a small voice, but it won't carry over anything no matter what."

Born into a middle-class family of five children, all of whom went to college, she retains a love for black music and looks forward to taking part in "Great Day in the Morning," a musical on the evolution of the spiritual, in Paris this October.

Critics often praise the spirituality of her singing. "I'm ill at ease singing something that doesn't have an element of truth in it somewhere. I'd be saying, 'Come on, Jessye, you're just having them on. You don't mean a word of this.'"

One of her earliest memories is of segregated 1950s Augusta.

"I couldn't have been more than 5 years old and at the time train stations were segregated. I always wanted to sit where it said 'white'. There was always a little bit of the rebel in me."

She doesn't have much time for playing rebel now. She relaxes with yoga and Chopin's piano music, likes to go shopping or take walks on London's Hampstead Heath. "I'm longing to take the Orient Express."

She sings Schubert songs for her own pleasure, "with my incredible piano playing, which only a mother could love. Somehow it puts everything in perspective."

Was Comment Harassment?

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: One of my professors jokingly said, "I wish you'd wear a skirt instead of jeans once in a while so I could see your legs, because if they're anything like the rest of you, they're nothing to be ashamed of."

I took it as a compliment. But when I told my friend about it, she said, "No way, that's sexual harassment!"

Abby, I thought sexual harassment was when a male boss threatened to fire his female employee if she didn't go to bed with him.

So how should I take it? As a compliment or sexual harassment?

OK LEGS

DEARS LEGS: If you consider your professor's remark a "compliment," no harm done. Had you felt that he was out of line or offensive, it would have been sexual harassment.

DEAR ABBY: I don't often write letters, but I have to write this one. I am a 29-year-old single male parent. I've been divorced for seven years and have full custody of my 8-year-old daughter. I'm a marketing consultant for an international concern, so I am by no means stupid.

I'm no Robert Redford, but neither am I a Frankenstein. I am honest, open, loving and have always been completely truthful with the women in my life. I want very much to get married, but where is the woman who wants a man with a daughter?

Are all women turned off by men who have custody of a child? Maybe I've been looking in the wrong places, but I'm too young to give up. Any ideas?

PACKAGE DEAL

DEAR DEAL: I don't know where you've looked, but don't give up until you've looked into Parents Without Partners. Also, don't forget your church and PTA.

And if your neighbors, co-workers and relatives don't know that you're in the market for a wife, get the message to them. My mail tells me that there are more women looking to marry decent men than there are decent men to marry. Hang in there!

DEAR ABBY: Since the birth of our child three months ago, my husband seems to have lost interest in sex. It started when I was about five months pregnant. At the time we discussed it, and he admitted that although he knew there was no basis for it, he felt it was "improper" to make love to a pregnant woman. Even after my doctor assured him that it wouldn't hurt either me or the baby, my husband couldn't seem to shake the feeling, so I accepted it, thinking that after the baby came everything would return to normal.

Unfortunately, the baby is now 3 months old and my husband is still turned off. He says he still loves me, but doesn't know why he doesn't want to make love to me anymore. He was with me during the birth of our child, so maybe seeing me give birth has put me in a different light, and he no longer sees me as a lover, but a mother.

I've tried everything I can think of to turn him on again, but nothing works. Before my pregnancy he couldn't get enough of me. Please ask your readers how common this problem is, and what they did to cope with the situation.

WAITING IN BED

DEAR WAITING: What's been turned off can usually be turned on again. I recommend professional counseling for both of you. Your husband may require some psychotherapy in order to restore his former interest in sex. Honest dialogue is of the utmost importance now, and if he loves you as he says he does, he will do whatever is necessary to overcome this problem. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for printing the letter from "Learned Too Late." We also learned too late. We didn't lose our child, but our child lost an eye while standing up in a car that came to a sudden stop. He was thrown against an open metal ashtray on the dashboard and cut his little eye so badly it couldn't be saved. Had that child been buckled into a seat belt as he should have been, it never would have happened. We will always feel a terrible sense of guilt, because it was our fault, not his.

ALSO LEARNED TOO LATE

Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. Write to Abby, P.O. Box 38823, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Groups Get Clout In Battle Against Drugs

By DAVID E. ANDERSON WASHINGTON (UPI) — For Joyce Nalepka, the turning point came when she attended a rock concert in suburban Maryland with her children and found local police unmoved by the open and extensive use of marijuana and cocaine.

"Up to that point I was convinced that if you were a good parent, you didn't have to worry about your kids getting involved in drugs," she said. "But there I saw that it didn't make any difference what kind of parent you were. It won't ensure that they don't get involved in drugs."

From that experience, and a generally unsuccessful experience lobbying both officials at the rock concert site and local police, Mrs. Nalepka and friends launched the National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth.

So far, it has been one of the most successful organizing efforts in the rapid growth of parents groups lining up against advocates of marijuana decriminalization, spokesmen for the drug paraphernalia industry and anyone else who suggests that alcohol, marijuana or other drugs may not be seriously harmful to young people.

Mrs. Nalepka points to a whirlwind 51-day city council campaign against drug paraphernalia in Washington, D.C., as an example of the clout the parents' groups across the country are beginning to wield.

The result was legislation that effectively shut down the city's head shops and street vendors selling a range of drug paraphernalia from rolling papers to roach clips to pipes. Thirty-one states now have legislation either banning or regulating the sale of drug paraphernalia.

Founded only two years ago, the National Federation was put together by leaders of a large number of the 2,000 local parents groups that have sprung up in recent years to fight drug abuse among teen-agers. Some 370 of the groups are affiliated with the national federation.

It sees itself primarily as a coordinator, facilitator and resource for local groups fighting drugs on any number of fronts.

Currently, the organization is taking up the fight over the controversial proposal to use paraquat, a herbicide, on marijuana crops in Florida — a use the parents' group strongly supports.

"Not a single case of marijuana-related paraquat poisoning in humans has been confirmed according to the National Institutes on Drug Abuse," said Mrs. Nalepka. "But there is clear evidence that thousands of our children have been seriously harmed by marijuana use."

"Kids use marijuana because it is so readily available," said Mary Jacobsen, president of the organization. "Anything we can do to remove the supply must be done — both domestically and internationally."

The group also supports the "total eradication of domestic cultivation of marijuana." It opposes proposed federal legislation which would reschedule marijuana to make its medical use legal.

"This is the single piece of legislation that must be defeated because it would establish a dangerous misconception about marijuana," the organization said.

According to the parents' group, "attitudes are just beginning to change away from drugs" and the use of marijuana as medicine "falsely legitimates marijuana."

"Making marijuana and its 421 chemical compounds available to medical patients will in no way be beneficial," the organization said.

Mrs. Nalepka said the organization had "lobbied very, very hard" against the proposed legislation. "I don't think it is Congress' role to approve anything" for medical use, she said. "It is up to the Food and Drug Administration to label something 'safe and effective.'"

She said that attitudes — both those supporting marijuana use and those opposed — have gone through stages and changes.

"In the 1940s and 1950s, it was a moral issue. In the 1960s and 1970s, it was a legal issue. Now, in the 1980s, we have it where it belongs. It is a health issue and there we have to keep it."

The parents groups are convinced that marijuana and other illegal drug use among young people is of epidemic proportions. They are convinced the health hazards are serious and substantial.

Mrs. Nalepka recalls hearings by Sen. Charles McMathias, R-Md., in 1980. "The health hazards were made very clear at those hearings," she said, citing testimony that indicated marijuana was dangerous for pregnant women, that it causes lung damage, possible brain damage and a lack of motivation.

"This is stuff we see over and over again in our communities," she said.

Mrs. Nalepka and the parents groups reserve special scorn and their most passionate opposition to NORML — the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws.

Founded a dozen years ago to lobby for decriminalization — removal of criminal penalties — of possession of marijuana for personal use, NORML has emerged as the chief spokesmen and activist group within the drug culture.

Mrs. Nalepka called them "the parasites of the drug society," accuses them of glamorizing drug use and says that in every state where decriminalization passed, NORML was the initiator.

But, she said, "NORML has had its day."

"It is remarkable what

Kitchen Remodeling Is Completed

NEW YORK (UPI) — Kitchen remodeling was the most frequently completed home renovation project tackled by do-it-yourselfers in the past 12 months, says a new consumer study.

The survey by National Home Center News, a trade publication, and the National Association of Home Builders, shows about 2,264,000 homeowners with single-family dwellings renovated their kitchens themselves.

The average cost of such projects was $1,550, the study showed.

parents have done in the last two years," she said. "Since the parents movement began, not a single state has relaxed its drug laws."

She also is unhappy about the way legitimate business operations glamorize drugs and drug use, specifically citing Squibb pharmaceutical's subsidiary Charles of the Ritz and its marketing of a perfume called "Opium."

Against all of these threats, Mrs. Nalepka and the parents she has united believe the most effective weapon is education — of parents, of young people, of school teachers, administrators, counselors and of legislators.

"It is parents accepting responsibility for their kids," she said. "Kids need and want guidelines — at home and at school. They function better. This is a time when parents have more to watch out for and less time to do it than any time in history."

"I really can't say it strongly enough," she said. "There is no group, no economic strata in which the child is safe from drugs."

"Parents have got to be retrained to take responsibility for their children."

But she said, "This is the most rewarding work a mother can have."

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Americans can't resist naming inanimate things. They buy a home and right away it has a name: "Dun Roamin'," "Dew Drop Inn," "Bonnie and Wilbur's Mi Casa, Su Casa."

The check hasn't cleared for the new camper when it becomes, "The Five Vagabonds" or "Mortgage-on-Wheels."

Some people spend more time naming a rowboat than they do picking out names for their children: "Frank's Folly," or "Q.E. III."

You see names on apartment buildings that make you fantasize (La Dolce Vita and Bali Hai) and housing developments that carry out themes (Friar Tuck's Retreat and God's Little Acres with Heavenly Financing).

Even hurricanes are given human status by dubbing them with first names of men and women in alphabetical order.

The most intriguing names, however, are to be found on menus. Any food or drink worth its salt has to have a cute name.

Can you remember when you last saw a menu with the plain word, "Hamburger" on it?

The informative burgers are easy to interpret: Baconburgers, Cheeseburgers, Avocadoburgers and Chiliburgers.

The regional burgers are fun: Yankeeburger, the Pilgrimburger, Y'all Come Backburgers, the Sidewinderburger, and the Make-You-a-Starburger.

But the vague ones make me suspicious: Solarburger, Polyesterburger, Spaceburger, Aphrodisiacburger, and the really scary one: THE ORIGINAL HAMBURGER!

I never sit in a restaurant and read a menu that I don't think of a great group of authors who sit at a desk day after day trying to come up with another name for a fish sandwich or a bowl of clam chowder.

America is fast becoming a bilingual country: English and Menu.

The other day I must have stared at a menu for 20 minutes. The names didn't give me a clue as to what the food was. Finally, I took the plunge, "I'll have the Mt. Helena Eruption, the Denture Stain Under a Blanket and the Hair of the Dog malt."

I got a bowl of oatmeal, a blueberry cobbler and a vodka martini.

A lot of people don't have that for breakfast.

Middle East Dilemma

The news which came through over the weekend was unbelievable, even to a world which had long ago become accustomed to the bizarre in the wars of the Middle East.

Hundreds of Palestinian refugees had been massacred in camps near Beirut.

Israel's government, sensing that it had a tremendous atrocity on its hands, was quick to deny any guilt in the killings.

It is almost certain that Israeli troops didn't do it, but it might have been the forces of Maj. Saad Haddad, a Christian ally of Israel, who reportedly had entered the refugee camp. There were also reports of a little known terrorist group, which wanted all foreign forces out of Lebanon, taking credit for the carnage.

The killings brought virtually universal condemnations from the capitals of the world and, since Israel represents the mightiest force in the area, it took the blame.

We would like to think that this tragedy would bring all the warring factions of the Middle East to their senses. We would like to believe that all parties would come to the peace table convinced that now is the time to end the ill will and bloodshed and killing.

It won't be that way. The massacre is certain to harden the resistance of the Palenstians. It is the way of that part of the world to seek revenge and that will come in the way of terrorist attacks in far-off nations and probably in Israel itself.

There is little that can help in this situation. Israel can pull its troops out of Lebanon, but that won't wipe out the hatreds this tragedy will stir.

It is, indeed, a dark time for the Middle East.

IF ONLY SOMEONE COULD FIGURE IT OUT!

Torpedo By Predecessor

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
WASHINGTON — Shocked by former Secretary of State Alexander Haig's attack on President Reagan's Mideast peace plan, successor George Shultz proposed an immediate counterattack but then thought better of it after a hot debate at the State Department.

Shultz's plan was to assemble former secretaries of state dating back to Dean Rusk in the 1960s in behalf of the Reagan plan. Under Secretary Lawrence Eagleburger, one of Haig's closest aides, argued that such a headline-grabbing reaction would draw unwanted attention to Haig's $25,000 speech in New York to the United Jewish Appeal.

When Shultz's other aides agreed, he backed off. He swallowed his anger at Haig. Nevertheless, he won't forget that the first torpedo fired at George Shultz was triggered by his predecessor.

Reagan in '84
State leaders of Ronald Reagan's 1980 presidential campaign will reassemble in the Bahamas to review the results of the 1982 mid-term elections and make plans for 1984 — under the assumption that President Reagan will seek another term.

No signal has been flashed from the White House as to Reagan's intention. But the president's political aides are aware of the Bahamas meeting and may attend it.

A footnote: The White House wants Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis to take over as Republican national chairman for the 1984 campaign, replacing Richard Richards. Lewis is not enthusiastic about the assignment but would take it if the president asks him.

Duberstein's Folly
Ken Duberstein, President Reagan's top Capitol Hill lobbyist, was enjoying the Farnborough air show in England when votes were being sought in the unsuccessful effort to override Reagan's veto of a "budget-busting" supplemental appropriations bill.

Duberstein told friends he was confident the veto could not be overridden in the Senate and probably would not be in the House. He returned here with his wife on an Air Force jet Sept. 8 after six days as Sen. John Tower's guest at the air show. On Sept. 9, the House administered the worst defeat yet suffered by Ronald Reagan, overriding the veto with 22 votes to spare. The coupe de grace came the next day when the Senate also overrode by 60-30.

Duberstein has received high marks for his record as Reagan's chief muscleman in Congress. But his absence in England, during the critical hours before the override on the money bill, blotted that record.

Steinbrenner's Solicitation
New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner, who was convicted in federal court for making illegal contributions to the 1972 reelection campaign of President Richard Nixon, has been soliciting corporate contributions for Democratic Rep. Mario Biaggi.

A solicitation letter on Yankees stationery asks for contributions for Biaggi's "future local political activities" — presumably a race for mayor of New York if Mayor Ed Koch is elected governor. Since corporate contributions to federal candidates are illegal, Steinbrenner wrote: "None of these funds are to be used in his (Biaggi's) federal political campaigns. As a result, contributions may be accepted in the form of corporate checks up to $5,000 each." Contributors met Biaggi over cocktails and dinner at Yankee Stadium, prior to the Sept. 8 game with Baltimore.

In recent years, Steinbrenner has been a generous donor to Democratic politicians — including Sens. John Glenn, Daniel Patrick Moynihan and Bill Bradley.

Purging Percy
The biggest threat to 1984 prospects for Republican renomination of Sen. Charles H. Percy, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, is former Gov. Richard Ogilvie.

Ogilvie, a prominent Chicago lawyer since his defeat for re-election as governor in 1972, has passed

Ruling Bad For Athletics

A federal judge, viewing the NCAA television contracts for showing of college football as an anti-trust issue, has ruled that all schools are free to sell their television rights without restriction.

Perhaps the judge is on firm legal grounds, but his ruling will have the effect of putting the power of televised games into the hands of a few football schools.

The only restraining force in keeping some order in inter-collegiate athletics has been the NCAA, and its television contracts have been designed to assist the lesser known colleges as well as to show the major match-ups of the season.

If this court ruling stands we can be certain that only a handful of schools will be shown on television and inter-collegiate athletics will be drastically changed.

THIS AFTERNOON

What Discipline?

By PAUL O'CONNOR
RALEIGH — The Governor's Advocacy Council on Children and Youth has conducted a survey of discipline in the state's 144 school districts and found that in some places enforcement of the "golden rule" is handled quite haphazardly.

Discipline is no trivial matter in public education. A 1981 Gallup Poll showed discipline is one of the three top concerns of parents and citizens. A state survey of teachers found 75 percent complaining that their students had undisciplined attitudes toward education. And lack of discipline is seen at the root of the absentee problem which each school day sees 80,000 state youngsters out of the classroom when only 2,000 — on average — are thought to be ill.

Council chairman Herb Stout concedes that much of the discipline problem stems from things the schools can't control: handicaps, poor upbringing, poor attitudes. Other problems the school could address: adequate classroom facilities and instructional materials.

But he also maintains that school boards have been less than disciplined themselves in developing discipline policies that comply with state and federal law. Little can be done to improve school discipline, he says, until the schools do a better job of writing out the rules.

The council surveyed 83 school districts and found almost a quarter of them without a written code of conduct that conformed with the requirements of state law. Half the school districts do not have disciplinary policies and procedures which ensure due process for students and two-thirds don't have a written policy regarding corporal punishment.

In some public schools, a student can be suspended for breaking a rule written by the school principal. This policy is illegal, Stout says. A 1977 state law says a student can be suspended only if he defies a rule written by the district school board.

Six school districts allow individual schools to draft codes of conduct for students — a policy that defies state law. And five districts were criticized for having policies that are either out-of-date or worthless. ("Yadkin County — Code doesn't list what acts are prohibited.") that will last more than 10 days, strict due process guidelines are required by state and federal law. The council study found that 42 school districts have policies which comply with those laws. 24 have policies which do not. Three districts fail to comply with state law because they allow policy to be decided in individual schools and 14 districts don't have any written policy which means that they too are breaking the law.

(On the issue of suspensions

The council's study further found that neither the State Board of Education nor the state Department of Public Instruction reviews the local school district discipline procedures to assure that they comply with state and federal law. The result, the study says, is that "many students in the public schools of North Carolina are being punished in ways that do not

Other Editors Say A Lawyer Glut

(The Raleigh Times)

With lawsuits as prolific as wild onions in April, with lawyers taking on cases like suing a cracker-jack company for not including a prize in the box, with laws requiring that every lawbreaker who wants one be furnished a court-appointed attorney at taxpayer expense...how could the legal fraternity be lacking for work?

But Raleigh lawyer Sam Johnson insists it is. He says he received an average of one call a day from a lawyer looking for a job. Every August, when the bar association holds a skills course for young lawyers who have just passed the bar exam, 40 percent report they are unemployed.

North Carolina has 7,500 practicing attorneys to serve the state's 5.9 million population, according to Allan B. Head, executive director of the N.C. Bar Association.

Kentucky, which has 7,000 lawyers for only 3.6 million people, obviously faces a far greater lawyer glut. Officials there are considering closing one of the three law schools to ease the financial burden and oversupply of lawyers.

Tar Heel lawyers may be coming up against the same kind of surplus that put thousands of schoolteachers pounding the pavement for teaching jobs. For decades, a teaching certificate had guaranteed a job — not much of a job paywise, but a job. With limited professional opportunities, women flocked into teaching.

Undoubtedly the vision of lucrative practices and high incomes has lured many people into law. And young women, finally scaling the job barriers, have found it especially attractive.

A 1978 N.C. Bar Association economic survey of 4,800 lawyers with 37 percent responding showed that 43.4 percent earned less than $25,000 a year, 35.1 made between $25,000 and $50,000 and 21.3 percent earned over $50,000. A new economic survey is being conducted this fall.

Johnson's suggestion that the trustees study the lawyer glut and consider doing something about it is not without merit. But solutions are limited. Outside of closing one of the state's five law schools and limiting class size, neither of which Johnson advocates, what can be done?

Conscientious college and high school counselors can help a little by steering students away from professions with over-supply. In the case of lawyers, some leverage on supply can be exerted through the state bar exams.

But we suspect that the only significant solution will be achieved through the painful route of supply and demand. Meanwhile, let us pray that the over-supply of lawyers will not drive the starving attorneys into preying further on a society already hardpressed and harassed by waves of frivolous litigation.

There Are The Names

WASHINGTON — Jan Scruggs telephoned a few days ago and asked me to meet him on a Friday morning down at the site of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. I had seen an architect's rendering of the memorial, and I had seen a small scale model of the project, and I had written a dozen times of the plan to list the names of 57,692 who gave their lives in that tragic endeavor in Vietnam.

Now the memorial is about two-thirds complete, Scruggs told me, and a clay model has been approved of the bronze sculpture by Frederick Hart that will add the final element. The landscaping is yet to be done, and decisions have yet to be made on the placing of a flagpole, but he wanted me to see how the work was progressing.

We met by the temporary board fence that surrounds the site, close by the Lincoln Memorial, and chatted for a few minutes about the whole remarkable undertaking. If you have forgotten, Scruggs is the former corporal who returned from Vietnam with a body full of shrapnel and a head full of dreams — dreams of a memorial to companions who died there, and to the neglected and often ostracized veterans who survived. He came back to his obscure office in the federal bureaucracy, and three years ago he resigned to devote his full time to the project. The story of Scruggs' dedication and determination is a story in itself.

"Come on," he said. We walked across a few yards of trenches and ditches, through the usual litter of a construction site, and gradually the long walls of the memorial came into view. Nothing I had heard or written had prepared me for the moment. I could not speak. I wept.

There are the names. The names! The names are etched in white on polished black marble. The names are arranged chronologically by the date of death, running from July 1959 to May 1975. Where the two walls come together, forming the point of a V, the first and the last names meet.

Arthur C. Alterwisher, Glendon L. Ammon, Frank Arrey Jr., James R. Bauder, John O. Freeman, Joseph A.

Friel, Carlton Griffin, Louis C. Hines, Norman L.R. Hoyt, Robert L. Hyde... They died on Sept. 21, 1966. We walked on.

Victor P. Andreozzi, Robert S. Baird, William J. Balfour, Jeth C. Barker, William A. Berry, Conal J. Byrne Jr., Charles M. Castillo, Raymond Clay, Troy W. Cokley, Joseph A. Coomes... They died a year later.

This memorial has a pile driver's impact. No politics. No recriminations. Nothing of vainglory or of glory either. For 20 years I have contended that these men died in a cause as noble as any cause for which a war was ever waged. Others have contended, and will always contend, that these dead were uselessly sacrificed in a no-win war that should never have been waged at all. Never mind. The memorial carries a message for all ages: This is what war is all about.

Before work could begin last winter, an artistic controversy had to be resolved. Critics on Capitol Hill and in the Interior Department felt the design was just too — well, too unconventional. They insisted on a piece of monumental sculpture in a more traditional vein. The conflict has been happily resolved. Frederick Hart, who conceived the figures of

FACING THE TRUTH

A psychiatrist recently said to a group of ministers and other church leaders, "People would rather come and pay me $50 an hour to let them talk about themselves than go to ministers and get similar service for nothing. The reason is that they get relief from a sense of sin when they lie on the psychiatrist's couch and talk; but when they are dealing with ministers they have to confront their sins and be convicted by them — and they don't like that."

This does not mean that there is no value in psychiatric therapy; it only means that talking about one's self and one's troubles can result in further involvement with the troubles and less possibility of solving them.

Actually, there is no such thing in one's life as unsolved problems — there are only deferred solutions. At some time the consequences of what we are and do will have to be faced. And if we do not face them here, we will have to face them hereafter. — Elisha Douglass

The Public Is Dreaming Again

By JOHN CUNIFF

AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — Undeterred by the pessimism of many so-called experts, Americans are dreaming again.

They are dreaming again of soaring stocks, of homes, of cars and boats, of at least a couple of years of single-digit inflation and maybe single-digit loan rates too, and maybe even of $50,000 personal incomes.

All this and more, as they say. When Americans dream they dream well, notwithstanding some vicious nightmares in the past few years.

The stock market going to 1,000 points on the Dow Jones industrial average? Who says so? Many big-name forecasters. Some say it might go much higher.

"You can buy stocks to double in value by 1986," says Arnold Bernhard. "I think there are few opportunities as in the stock market," he says. And with a degree of credibility. During the depths of the Great Depression of the 1930s he founded Value Line, the country's biggest stock advisory service.

Real estate agents will tell you of the renewed interest in homes. Sure, the lookers consider it great entertainment to have an agent drive them around for an afternoon. But they're dreaming. At least they're dreaming again.

They're getting some encouragement too. Jack Carlson, executive vice president of the National Association of Realtors, says the housing market — sales and construction — appears poised for a recovery.

"This recovery from record low levels of activity is expected to be slow but of long duration," said Carlson a few days ago. Moreover, he said, the inventories of homes on the market represent real bargains.

Cars? We have a authority on the subject the chairman of General Motors, Roger Smith, who foresees domestic and imported automobile sales approaching an annual rate of 14 million units by late 1983.

Of course, with sales running at an annual rate of 5.3 million units early in September, and with GM sales down the most of the Big Three domestic carmakers in the same period, you might think that forecast only a dream.

Only a dream? You need search your memory but a second or two to recall that a few weeks ago only the President of the United States dared dream in such dimensions. A dream is an improvement. It is up from despair.

Why, people are even daring to dream of big boats again. At least you would judge that from the crowds attending a boat show in nearby Connecticut. True, boatshows attract dreamers, not necessarily buyers. But psychologists will tell you that when it comes to spending big bucks the dream precedes the action.

Nourishing the dreams, of course, is the decline in interest rates. Forget that they might turn around and run the other way like a football player who's been hit on the head. As they say, "a window of opportunity" has appeared.

Herman Kahn's optimism isn't a window; it's a vast panoramic view of an economic landscape, one that most visionaries cannot see but which he assures us is out there waiting for us.

It is a land of zero inflation and decreased interest rates, of the disappearance of poverty in the United States, of $50,000 incomes becoming commonplace. Of peace. Of economic, political and social boom.

The dream of Kahn, founder and chairman of the Hudson Institute, a think tank, so drained him of imagination, it seems, that his book is called simply, "The Coming Boom," which makes it sound like a Wall Street promotion.

But it's all there, the biggest, most vivid dream of all, in the midst of some of the most disconcerting economic news since the 1930s.

Which is not so unusual at all. Some of the most vivid dreams, it is said, come during the worst of times. And that brings up the final consideration:

Are these grand dreams of the future a consequence of the inability to do much more than dream? Or are they the forerunner of action that will make the dreams come true?

Dump PCB Despite Protests

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer
AFTON, N.C. (AP) — The yellow state trucks hauling in 250 loads of PCB-contaminated soil every day to the Warren County landfill keep two bulldozer operators busy pushing the dirt into a gaping hole. The soil doesn't look any different from other dirt, but the trucks bringing it in have canopies over the truck beds that aren't taken off even when the soil is being dumped. And the access road leading to the landfill is guarded 24 hours a day by state highway patrolmen to keep trespassers away from the dump site. Warren County residents are protesting the dumping of the PCB soil in their county, saying the state chose Warren for the waste disposal site because most of the county's residents are black and poor.

State officials say they chose the site because of its terrain and because it was available. "Just look at that clay," said Heman R. Clark, secretary of the state Department of Crime Control and Public Safety, pointing to the packed red clay around the five-acre dump site. "It's perfect for this kind of disposal." "The state has been accused of picking on Warren County because its residents are poor or black, but that had nothing to do with our selection process," he added. "We picked this location because it had the type of soil downhill from the hole is a holding pit for water when it rains to keep the water from flowing into a nearby stream. "This landfill is so safe you could put liquid chemical wastes in here, if that was even allowed by the government," Clark said. "It is approved by the EPA, built by EPA standards and will be monitored by state, federal and local agencies. "I can understand people being concerned about environmental issues, and I understand that these people have concerns," he said. "But (the) state has acted responsibly to protect the people of Warren County. The landfill is very safe and everything has been done to protect lives. I frankly think we have a little bit of overkill in our operation here." Environmentalists and county residents have said the dump is only five feet from the water table. Phillips said the bottom of the pit is at least 15 feet above the water table. "I'll tell you how safe I think it is," Clark said. "I wouldn't mind if the soil were dumped in my front yard."

Speaks On Sickle Cell

The Pitt County branch of the NAACP, meeting at Mount Shiloh Church Winterville recently, heard educator-counselor Mildred Council speak on sickle cell anemia. She pointed out that September is Sickle Cell Anemia Month and that the public needs to know about it. One out of every 625 babies born have this inherited condition, she said.

Anyone having questions about the disease or wishing to donate blood for the use of sickle cell patients may contact the local health department or Ms. Council, 756-1343, she said.

Clarence Moore was honored with a medallion from the National NAACP for his service to this branch. He enrolled 100 members in 1980.

Willie Hawkins, treasurer, was announced as a new member of the executive committee.

It was announced that the state convention of the NAACP will be held in Fayetteville Oct. 15.

A report on a communication with Greenville Utilities Commission was given. The local branch had questioned whether GUC is an equal opportunity employer and has been sent a letter stating that it is.

The next meeting will be held the second Sunday in October at Holy Trinity Church, Greenville.

Who are the three figures? They could be Moncrief, Kelly or Campbell; or McSorley, Martinovsky or Grottko; or Gonzales, Mondy or Schofield; or Swain, Isaac or Higgins. Islanders Don't Want 1992 Fair

KEY BISCAIYNE, Fla. (AP) — Property owners on this island in Biscayne Bay would be pleased as punch if Chicago outbids Miami in the quest for the 1992 World's Fair.

The Key Biscayne Property Taxpayers' Association has sent letters to Chicago Mayor Jane Byrne, Chicago newspapers and President Reagan, saying the fair, if held in Miami, would cause massive traffic jams and endanger the environment. They also said the manatee, a docile seagoing mammal, would be threatened.

"Other groups have joined with us, and many questions remain unanswered as to the impact this proposed fair would have on those of us who live in Key Biscayne," letters from the association said.

The letters were dated Sept. 1, the same day Miami officials were in Washington, D.C., trying to convince Commerce Department officials to hold the fair in Florida.

Chicago was the only U.S. city making a major pitch for the 1992 exposition until Florida officials began a drive a few months ago. A 1,100-page proposal to hold the World's Fair on Virginia Key, across Biscayne Bay from Miami, is pending with Chicago's proposal before the U.S. Department of Commerce.

After Commerce officials evaluate the plans, Reagan will make an endorsement to the international world's fair committee.

"That letter isn't going to help our cause, that's for sure," David Culley, executive director of 1992 Florida World Exposition Inc., said of the Key Biscayne groups efforts.

"I can understand their concerns, but what we'd like to see is a spirit of cooperation," he added.

Connie Shaw, the president of the taxpayers' association, said the group wasn't trying to ally itself with Chicago.

"We thought it was the right thing to do," she said. "I hope it isn't misinterpreted."

Officials estimate the six-month exposition would attract 53 million visitors to southern Florida, with between 280,000 and 600,000 a day.

A platoon of ferries, each carrying 500 passengers, would ease traffic on the single causeway connecting Miami with the proposed fair site, local officials say.

Planners concede there would be traffic problems.

"There are going to be traffic bottlenecks and there are going to be transportation problems wherever the fair is held," said Randy Coleman, a planner for the exposition.

Local school districts should be required to submit their school discipline policies and procedures to the state board for review every year. The board should be required to review those policies for compliance with state and federal law. And, if the state board finds policies which need to be changed, local school districts should be bound to follow their orders.

Deny Danger From Paraquat In Creek

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — State officials say the toxic herbicide paraquat that seeped into a Charlotte creek after last week's chemical fire poses no danger to people, animals or plants.

And, in a related development, 35 firefighters and police officers involved in fighting the fire have been treated for headaches, eye, nose and throat irritations, nausea and skin irritations.

Samples of paraquat taken from Little Sugar Creek Monday showed paraquat levels have continued to drop, although Sunday's levels were 20 times higher than the federal drinking water limit at some points.

"It can't hurt anybody. It will not affect the vegetation," said Mike Raver, a safety engineer for Chevron Chemical Co. in San Francisco.

"I have to agree with them," said Rex Gleason of the N.C. Division of Environmental Management.

In testing Monday, Gleason said he found detectable amounts only at the first of three temporary dams built near the fire scene, where the level there was eight times the federal limit for drinking water.

Doctors are trying to determine if the firefighters and police officers treated for minor irritations will suffer from long-term health problems.

Although no paraquat was found in the residue of the fumes from the fire, officials think the fire contained byproducts of another chemical — sodium hydrosulfite — that burned at the warehouse.

However, doctors said those byproducts aren't likely to cause long-term effects.

The hydrogen sulfide and sulfur dioxide produced by the burning sodium hydrosulfite produce sulfuric acid when they come in contact with moist surfaces like eyes, skin, or mucous membranes lining the respiratory tract.

The acid produces a burnlike reaction that should only last a few days, said Dr. Basil Delta, Mecklenburg County Health Director. The burn resembles a rash.

Paraquat is dangerous if swallowed in concentrated form, but there is "little increased risk for pulmonary disease from inhaling paraquat," Delta said.

Hunt Urges Business To Support Education

NEW YORK (AP) — North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt has issued an appeal to business leaders to provide more support for public education. Hunt, chairman of the Education Commission of the States, said Monday he wanted that commission to promote involvement by top national business leaders in improving public schools. "To make a profit, businesses need intelligent minds and trained hands," Hunt said. "So I believe the best investment business can make is in good public schools."

Hunt made the comments in remarks prepared for his appearance before a meeting in New York City of the Contributions Council of The Conference Board, a group of business leaders. He said business will demand more science and mathematics knowledge in the future and that children today are not learning enough in those areas. Hunt said nearly every state has a critical shortage of science and math teachers. He said New York had only 32 college graduates planning to teach high school science and math courses this year, and that in North Carolina in 1980 only 55 percent of the math teachers were certified to teach math. He cited the North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics, a state residency high school in Durham for students gifted in science and math, as an example of how business can help public education. It received $4.6 million in gifts and pledges from business and industry last year, he said. Hunt said he was appointing a Task Force on Education for a High Technology Economy, to be headed by Lewis M. Branscomb of IBM and Delaware Gov. Pete DuPont.

Onslow Education Bd. Votes Keep Tuition Fee

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The U.S. Justice Department and eight military men have filed suit in federal court challenging the constitutionality of a state law requiring local school boards to charge tuition to students whose families live outside their school district. Meanwhile, the Onslow County Board of Education, which was named as a defendant in the suit along with Gov. Jim Hunt, approved a resolution at a meeting Monday night to continue charging tuition despite the filing of the suit.

State education officials have contended that military personnel often pay no taxes where they are stationed and, therefore, do not shoulder their share of the costs of their children's schooling. In 1981-82, the state received an estimated $6 million in impact aid. The amount is expected to go even higher this year. Dotson said the 2,800 tuition bills mailed in Onslow County to the children of military families would help offset the loss of federal funds. Dotson said Monday night that the school board would not back down from its decision, and that a meeting would be held soon with the U.S. Attorney's office and the state Attorney General's office to set a trial date. The board passed a resolution Monday night saying any student whose family lives outside the district that has not paid the tuition by Oct. 1 would be suspended. The suit alleges that the 1981 law violates the supremacy and equal protection clauses of the U.S. Constitution and breaches contracts made between the board and the U.S. government for construction of school facilities. The complaint asks the court to prohibit the local school board from implementing its $245 annual tuition requirement for "non-domiciliary students" and to bar the board from "failing or refusing to provide a free public education to any (such) child who resides in Onslow County and whose parents are employed at Camp Lejeune, the Marine Air Corps Station and other federal facilities."

Building Activity In May Shared Another Decline

Building activity in Greenville during May, which was down from April results, mirrored the rest of the state as the number and value of new construction units dropped.

While Greenville recorded permits totaling $2,666,933 in April, the figure fell to $1,105,347 in May, according to state Labor Commissioner John Brooks.

Permits valued at $6,699,617 were issued here during the first five months of 1982, Brooks reported.

In Pitt County, construction authorized during May amounted to $1,220,282, down from $2,811,152 the previous month. The May total included $583,011 for 13 single-family units, $60,000 for two multi-family units, $223,296 for 17 non-residential units, and $353,975 for 63 additions and alterations.

Brooks said the state's 44 cities of more than 10,000 population authorized 3,133 new construction units in May, down 19.3 percent from 3,881 in May 1981, but a 7.1 percent increase from April's 2,926.

Estimated value of the building activity in the 44 cities, at $85,608,740, fell 7.4 percent from the May 1981 total but rose 6.1 percent from $80,697,412 in April.

Permits for single-family homes, at 516, declined 2.1 percent from the previous year, while value dropped 2.5 percent to $21,728,552 from $22,281,356.

Compared to May 1981, the average construction cost for a single-family home in fell less than 1 percent. Brooks said, to $42,110 from $42,280.

Building values for May and for the first five months of 1982 in several eastern towns included: Elizabeth City, $421,888, $3,172,985;

Goldsboro, $655,046, $7,035,170; Jacksonville, $1,310,083, $8,669,980; Kinston $295,600, $2,327,662;

New Bern, $552,750, $2,585,823; Roanoke Rapids, $322,480, $1,230,581; Rocky Mount, $275,329, $4,269,068; Tarboro, $368,400, $10,759,040; and Wilson, $333,852, $6,122,553.

Charlotte led individual cities in May permit value with $30,942,503, followed by Raleigh with $13,166,344, Winston-Salem with $5,664,628, and Durham with $4,180,531.

Local Rainfall A Boon To N.C. Forest Service

The nearly two and one-half inches of rain that soaked Pitt County since early Sunday morning has given forestfire fighters a "padding" against the approaching fall fire season, say local Forest Service officials.

"With the fall fire season coming up next month (October) we'll have some problems," said Tom Harris, assistant county forester. "This rain has given us a bit of padding against that season."

"We haven't had any difficulties so far," he added,

"but the rain has helped." Harris said if the area has another long dry spell, problems with fires will be inevitable.

The Greenville Utilities Water Plant measured 2.46 inches of rainfall between midnight Saturday and 8 a.m. today, the most precipitation the county has had the entire month of September.

A whopping 1.40 inches fell Monday, following a weekend rain that totaled 1.06 inches. Prior to Saturday, the last measurable precipitation in September, according to GUC, was .01 inch on Sept. 12. On Sept. 4, .96 inch was recorded.

The showers will also benefit peanut growers in the area, said Sam Uzzell, Pitt extension agent.

"First of all, it has softened the ground, making digging easier," he said. "But most important, there's now enough moisture in the ground for the pods to take up moisture and fill out the kernels."

Soybeans, particularly late-planted ones, will grow because of the rain, added Uzzell. "Those that are still green will continue to add weight," he said.

Registration Continuing

Registration in the Recreation and Parks Department needlework class for girls 8 years old and up, to be held at Jaycee Park, is continuing. Classes will be on Wednesdays and Thursdays from 3:30 to 5 p.m. For full details, call 752-4137, extension 200.

Hunger Not Inevitable, Says Jennifer Baughan

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

"More than 250,000 people living near West Java's Galunggung volcano face starvation when the monsoon season arrives in the next few weeks, according to the director-general for social aid," a filler article in Monday's Daily Reflector reported.

"This was information about the well-being and even the survival of a quarter of a million people, yet most of us read it and promptly tuned it out," local Hunger Project volunteer Jennifer Baughan said.

"We do this," she said she believes, "because we feel there's nothing we here can do about them there. We want to be asleep, because it hurts less to think there's nothing we can do than to know there is something we can do and do nothing. Starvation of some is inevitable, we tell ourselves. People have been dying of starvation and malnutrition since at least the beginning of recorded history and they will continue to do so."

"But," she asks "is the fact that it's always happened a true test of inevitability?"

There have been four separate major studies by four different commissions — the Brandt Commission in Germany, the Carter Commission in the United States, the Heritage Foundation and the Nobel Laureates study from which was issued the Manifesto on Hunger. Mrs. Baughan said each of these prestigious groups agreed: There are enough resources and enough know-how already existing in the world to feed all the world's people. We can grow enough, store enough, and distribute enough to provide for every person on earth to be nutritionally self-sufficient from now on.

What's holding us back then? "The 2,250,000 of us enrolled in the Hunger Project believe that the only thing missing is the will of the world community, both in the countries that still have starvation and in the countries that have alleviated it," she said. "We've got to begin to look on it as unacceptable, just as this country now looks on slavery as unacceptable."

"The Hunger Project was started by three men — Buckminster Fuller, Werner Erhard and John Denver — in direct response to the reports by the four commissions mentioned above. They saw enrollment of as many people as possible, each doing whatever he or she felt was appropriate, as the way to end hunger on the planet. And they set a goal — an end to starvation by 1997 — 20 years from the time the project was begun in 1977."

There are 38 countries in the world that offer proof that hunger can be eliminated as a basic issue. They've done it since World War II, Mrs. Baughan said. She and her husband, Dr. David Baughan, are taking responsibility along with a number of other Greenville citizens for sharing with their neighbors this weekend facts about world hunger and what the individual can do about it.

A seven-hour briefing on World Hunger will be held at the First Federal Building on Greenville Boulevard Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mrs. Baughan says she has attended such a briefing elsewhere and that it was one of the most powerful experiences of her life.

"The world's experts on hunger have spent thousands of hours putting together a synthesis of information that gives the most true and therefore the most potent picture of hunger on our planet and how we're all involved in its elimination. Those who attend won't be told what they can do. They'll know that each has a choice," she said.

"People are capable of doing whatever is needed when they understand a situation. We didn't allow Nazi Germany to continue to exist for very long after we knew the extent of the devastation. There's a holocaust going on now, too, but it's been with us so long we've become numb to its existence. This briefing is about waking up to the fact that hunger exists and that it doesn't have to, that it's my problem and your problem," Mrs. Baughan said.

Anyone wishing to attend the briefing may make a reservation by calling David or Jennifer Baughan, 355-6855.

Employers See Hiring Decline

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Employers in Winston-Salem and Forsyth County are predicting a sharp decline in hiring for the next quarter, according to the latest quarterly survey by Manpower Inc.

"Overall, 20 percent of the area employers polled planned to hire additional workers during the fourth quarter of 1982," said Leroy Truell, director of the survey.

That's down 43 percent from the previous year.

Commuters, Industry See Rail Strike Hardships

RAILS STILL — The Chicago skyline looms behind a crowded Burlington Northern railyard, the result of a national strike by locomotive engineers, causing a virtual shutdown of most rail service across the country. (AP Laserphoto)

By The Associated Press
Commuters braced for a second workday of traffic jams and delays caused by a nationwide rail strike, and freight shipments chugged closer to a standstill today, prompting plant and mine closings — and hopes for a quick settlement.

"If the strike ends in 48 hours, it won't have any effect," said Denise Clark, spokeswoman for Monsanto Chemical Co. in Chicago. "At this point, we're still optimistic the work stoppage will be short-lived."

About 26,000 members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers walked off the job at 12:01 a.m. Sunday, locked in a dispute over pay and a proposed "no-strike" contract clause.

On Monday, only about one-fourth of the trains ran on many of nation's major railroads, most hauling high-priority cargo such as fuel, perishable farm products and mail.

President Reagan asked Congress on Monday to call for a halt to the strike. Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker said the House and Senate would begin separate hearings on the request today.

The administration says the walkout could cost $80 million a day.

Passenger traffic in the Northeast was largely unaffected because Conrail is not involved in the dispute, but most everywhere else, train riders used other ways to get to work, were stranded in mid-vacation, or postponed travel altogether.

With supervisors at the controls, enough freight trains moved to allay fears — for the time being — by most U.S. automakers, and many farmers and industries.

But General Motors Corp. closed a truck assembly plant in St. Louis after the day shift Monday and said many plants might have to be shut in 48 hours if the strike continued. About 2,350 workers were laid off after running out of rail-shipped autoparts.

In the West Virginia coalfields, Armco Steel announced it was closing eight mines in Raleigh and Boone counties and laying off 1,400 workers because of a lack of coal cars.

Walter B. Vander Veer, Michigan-Ontario division manager for the Chessie System, said he hoped to have his trains running at about 30 percent of capacity.

"The trucking companies may pick up some of the slack, but unless the locomotive engineers return to work immediately, Michigan's automotive, steel and chemical plants soon won't be able to get enough raw materials by rail to keep producing," he said. "The result probably would be widespread layoffs, beginning by the end of the first week."

In California, growers "don't seem too concerned yet because the largest part of the shipments of fresh fruit and vegetables are by truck," said Don Lockhart of California's Market News Service in Sacramento.

A man was shot Monday evening while carrying a picket sign near an office of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad in Evansville, Ind. J.D. Haley, 60, was shot in the neck, police said. A shop steward at the rail yard who refused to be identified said the shooting was strike related. Haley was in fair condition.

On Monday, huge traffic jams developed in Chicago, where 120,000 commuters who normally ride trains were forced to use cars or buses. Traffic flow improved by afternoon rush hour and was slower than usual but "very, very smooth," said Marilyn O'Regan of the Chicago police. Many commuters who were confused in the morning had figured out how to get around by afternoon, she said.

The 19,000 commuters who usually reach Boston by train "adjusted really well," a transit spokesman said as traffic thinned out Monday evening. Bus service was increased, but delays were still common.

In the San Francisco Bay Area, some roads were jammed as 8,000 train commuters along the San Francisco-San Jose corridor drove to work.

A spokesman at the Cleveland offices of the Chessie System Railroads, which has extensive operations at coal mines and factories in 13 states, said the railway was operating at half of its capacity.

Eight Traffic Mishaps Here Are Investigated

An estimated $12,850 property damage resulted from a series of eight traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police Monday.

Officers reported heaviest damage resulted from a 5:15 p.m. collision on 14th Street, 21 feet east of the East Rock Springs Road intersection in which a car driven by Walter Connor Eagles of 1102 E. 14th St. collided with a utility pole.

Police, who said Eagles was injured in the mishap, estimated damage to the car at $6,000.

Cars driven by Robert Luke House of 2208 Charles St. and Timothy Craig Kirkland of 1307B Dickinson Ave. collided about 6:59 p.m. at the intersection of Sixth and Maple streets, causing an estimated $1,500 damage to the House car and $300 damage to the Kirkland vehicle.

Kirkland was charged with failing to stop for a stop sign following investigation of the incident.

An estimated $500 damage resulted to each of two cars involved in a 9:26 a.m. mishap on 10th Street, 35 feet east of the Washington Street intersection.

Drivers of the vehicles involved were identified as Carlton Gray Wiggins of Ayden and George Robert Mills of 2709 Tryon Drive. Police said both men were injured in the collision.

A 5:13 p.m. collision on Memorial Drive, 200 feet south of the Fifth Street intersection involved cars driven by Irene West McDowell of 114 For Run Circle and Cindy Benita Ballance of 105 W. Corbett Ave.

Damage was estimated by investigators at $50 to the McDowell car and $1,000 to the Ballance auto.

Police said an estimated $1,000 damage resulted to a car driven by Jane Cutler Roebuck of 602F Ernul St. when it struck a large rock in the roadway at the intersection of Evans Street and Lakewood Drive about 9:07 p.m., while an estimated $400 damage resulted to a car driven by Carlton Olander Clark of 105B Jarvis St. when the vehicle struck a rock in the roadway on 10th Street, 30 feet west of the Forest Hill Drive intersection about 10:07 p.m.

Cars driven by Doris Ward Blount of 709A Mills St. and Donald Wayne Wilson of 704 E. Gum Road, collided about 6:19 p.m. at the intersection of Gum Road and Powell Street, causing an estimated $600 damage to the Blount car and $300 damage to the Wilson car.

Kenneth Alan Rush of High Point was charged with failing to see his intended movement could be made in safety following investigation of a 4:07 p.m. collision on Lawrence Street near the Ninth Street intersection.

Police said the Rush car collided with a vehicle driven by Gina Denise Gibson of Lumberton, causing $200 damage to the Rush car and $500 damage to the Gibson vehicle.

Find No Wrong In Pacemaker Audit

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — The Department of Health and Human Services has sent a letter to Duke University Medical Center saying that an audit on pacemaker procurement at the hospital has turned up no indication that the hospital or physicians there had participated in "corrupt practices."

In a letter from Emil A. Trefzger Jr., regional audit director of the agency in Atlanta, to hospital officials, Trefzger apologized for any negative publicity the hospital or physicians received as a result of the probe.

"I want to assure you that our report does not implicate your hospital or physicians who practice there as participants in corrupt practices. The scope of our work at your hospital was simply to obtain pricing data and we made no efforts to expand our scope beyond that issue," Trefzger said. The hospital was among 25 hospitals being audited as a result of a report that showed heart pacemakers charged to Medicare cost 70 percent more than the going rate. The report alleged that companies making pacemakers may have paid surgeons kickbacks in return for overpricing the implants.

Dr. John Gallagher of Duke's Division of Cardiology confirmed that Duke was involved in the audit, but said the medical center had done nothing wrong.

Don Seaver, a hospital spokesman, said Monday that officials were satisfied with the letter.

WANTED HIS GUN
LIMA, Peru (AP) — A policeman guarding the East German Embassy was killed Monday night when three attackers shot him in the face to steal his machine gun, police reported.

Hardee's Founder Stricken Monday

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — Joseph Leonard Rawls Jr., founder of the Hardee's restaurant chain, was found dead Monday at his home. He was 51.

Dr. Robert Zipf, a forensic pathologist, said Rawls apparently died of heart disease.

Rawls founded the restaurant chain because he liked the books and food at a Greenville, N.C., restaurant and wanted to start another one.

Rawls was born in Rocky Mount and worked for his parents at the N.C. Hyde and Fur Co.

After two years in the Army, he founded a public accounting practice. One of his clients was Wilber Hardee of Greenville, who opened a restaurant by that name. Rawls offered to help finance a second restaurant.

The chain grew to become at one time the fourth-largest fast-food hamburger restaurant chain in the nation.

Rawls was chief executive officer of Hardee's Food Systems Inc. until 1975; chairman of the board until 1980 and was a major stockholder until the chain was purchased by a Canadian company in 1980.

Survivors include his mother Mrs. Lallah M. Rawls of Rocky Mount; a son, Joseph L. Rawls III of San Francisco; a daughter, Mrs. Vivian R. Tefft of Raleigh; a brother, William Rawls of New Bern, and three grandchildren.

More Pass Nursing Test

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Passing rates for nursing graduates at three traditionally black University of North Carolina campuses rebounded this year in the wake of stricter admissions standards and tougher instruction.

At North Carolina Central University in Durham 11 of 12 graduates taking the exam, or 92 percent, passed, a spokesman for the UNC System said. All six test-taking graduates at Winston-Salem State University passed, while eight of 12 from N.C. A&T State University, or 67 percent, were successful.

In 1981, 56.5 percent of N.C. Central grads passed while 63.7 percent of Winston-Salem State graduates and 33.3 percent of those from N.C. A&T passed.

"We're very happy with the results," said Arthur Padilla, associate vice president for academic affairs with the UNC system. "I think the hard work at A&T, Central and Winston-Salem is beginning to pay off."

A&T, which remains under a mandate from the N.C. Board of Nursing to improve by 1983 or face closing, must pass 70 percent of its graduates to return to the board's fully accredited list.

The exams are given in February and July, with most graduates taking them in July.

NFL Players Go On Strike

NEW YORK (AP) — Striking players and team owners both say they are willing to lose the rest of the National Football League season if it means winning at the bargaining table.

Fans, dismayed by the first regular-season strike in the sport's history, are about to be barraged with Canadian and college football, along with movies, as television networks scramble to fill the air time.

Gene Upshaw, president of the 1,500-member NFL Players Association, announced the strike Monday after the union's executive committee voted unanimously in favor of a walkout. The strike began about eight hours later, after the Green Bay Packers beat the New York Giants 27-19 to complete the season's second week.

"At the conclusion of tonight's game, the league will be struck," Upshaw, a Los Angeles Raiders guard, said Monday. "No practices, no workouts, no games will be played until management engages in good-faith bargaining."

He later added the players were ready to hold out "one day longer than management."

But Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council, countered that team owners were prepared to "go as long as necessary, including the entire season, to prove their point."

He made his remarks after a Monday night meeting of the owners' executive committee, held in New York.

The first game to be affected by the strike will be Thursday night, when the Atlanta Falcons were scheduled to play in Kansas City against the Chiefs. ABC, which was to televise the game, announced it will instead show Peter Falk in "The Cheap Detective."

It's the second time in just over a year that a strike has interrupted American professional sports. Baseball players struck last summer for 50 days in a dispute over free agency. NFL players staged two training-camp strikes, in 1970 and 1974.

The football strike centers on money and how the NFL's billion-dollar income should be distributed.

Players, who originally sought 55 percent of the gross revenues of the NFL's 28 teams — estimated at $3.6 billion over five years — changed their stand last Friday and asked for 50 percent of the clubs' $2.1 billion television contract, plus a minimum-wage scale based on length of service. The proposed contract would run for four years, as opposed to the five-year pact offered by the owners.

Donlan says owners are "unalterably opposed" to guaranteed percentages and wage scales for the players. They have offered a package containing $10,000-a-year bonuses for veterans, plus base salary hikes.

Both sides have reached basic agreement on how much a new contract should cost —

$1.6 billion. The length of the contract, where the money comes from and how it will be divided are the sticking points.

Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFLPA, said he hoped the strike "will force the owners to start bargaining in good faith."

Mark Murphy, a member of the union's executive committee and a Washington Redskins defensive back, said it was "vital" for NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle to step into the talks. Rozelle so far has not participated in the bargaining, and Donlan said Monday night that the commissioner should remain on the sidelines.

Negotiations between the management council and the players union broke off Friday and no further talks were scheduled.

"I knew it was coming," said George S. Halas Sr., the Chicago Bears' 87-year-old owner and the last surviving founder of the NFL.

"I'm sorry to see it, of course," he said Monday as he signed the team's last pre-strike paychecks. "And so are the players — or so they will be."

Green Bay Rally Crushes Giants In Second Half Monday, 27-19

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Green Bay Packers quarterback Lynn Dickey likes a winning season — even if it's only two games.

"If there's going to be a strike, I'd rather be 2-0 than 1-1," Dickey said after the Packers pulled another second-half comeback and thrashed the New York Giants 27-19 Monday night.

When the clock ran out, the National Football League players strike had begun.

James Lofton, whose 83-yard end-round touchdown run late in the third quarter swung the momentum to the Packers, said the players were distracted by the announcement of a strike hours earlier.

Lofton said he was sorry the strike had been announced before the game. "It kind of took some of the air out of us," he said.

Coaches of each team warned their players to forget the strike as they prepared for the game — the only NFL contest played after the strike was announced.

But players on both sides met at midfield and exchanged union solidarity handshakes just before the game began as the crowd jeered loudly.

Dickey would not blame the strike for the Packers' slow start.

"There was some mild talk about the possibility of a strike, but it had nothing to do with our performance. Once we got on the field all the talk and joking stopped. We were ready," said Dickey, who completed 13 of 20 passes for 203 yards.

course. And so are the players — or so they will be."

"These things really are heart-rendering, they just really are sad," said Cincinnati General Manager Paul Brown.

"It's a very sad day for pro football and all the people that make it tick — the players, the owners and especially the fans," Cleveland owner Art Modell said in an interview with ABC Radio Sports.

What will the coaches do this weekend, if they don't have any players to work with?

"We have no plans," said Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll. "We have no plans other than coming to work and going home in the evening."

Cincinnati Coach Forrest Gregg, on the other hand, is going to get ready for the Bengals' next scheduled opponent. "We're going to prepare a game plan for Cleveland," he said. "We have all the film and everything. We'll work (Tuesday) as always."

On the possibility of playing games with free agents, Bear Coach Mike Ditka said,

Reactions To Strike Come From All Areas: Players, Owners, Fans

By The Associated Press

At Giants Stadium, where the Green Bay Packers beat the New York Giants 27-19 in the final game played before the National Football League Players Association went on strike, a banner read "Gifford, Huff, Robustelli, Tittle ... real Giants don't strike."

"Let them strike," said electrician Bob Sawyer, who hosted a tailgate party before Monday's game. "If there's no game, we'll do this in my backyard."

Everyone — players, owners, coaches and fans — had their say in the aftermath of the first midseason players strike in pro football history, which became official with the players' strike vote Monday and took effect today.

"I knew it was coming," said the NFL's patriarch, 87-year-old Chicago Bears owner George Halas Sr. "We made a more-than-reasonable offer. If the players fell they can reject that, then I guess they're justified."

"I'm sorry to see it, of

"Would you pay to see free agents play? I can't imagine it. We worked six weeks in camp, played four exhibition games and still can't execute. How are you going to get free agents to do it?"

"We have raised people — your sons, yourself, me — to think that when things aren't right they ought to strike," said Philadelphia Coach Dick Vermeil. "School teachers do it. Everybody does it. Now, because a football player does it, that is considered degrading to the profession."

And what of the players?

"We're looking for a reasonable contract, better living expenses, and a raise in salaries, and generally to make things more comfortable to play professional football," said veteran Minnesota linebacker Matt Blair. "I hope this thing is over tomorrow. I'd like to play Dallas Sunday. I've been looking forward to that game for a long time, since the last time they were here."

"A year ago, I'd have never thought it possible to strike during the regular season," said St. Louis center Dan Dierdorf. "I never thought it'd come to the point where players would be discouraged enough to walk out in the middle of the season. A year

Washington Holds To First Place; Pitt Slips From Second To Third

By The Associated Press

Washington held onto first place today in The Associated Press college football poll, while unbeaten Pitt, the preseason No. 1 team, slipped from second to third despite its second consecutive victory.

In addition, defending national champion Clemson (0-1-1) dropped out of the Top Twenty following a 17-17 tie with Boston College. Notre Dame vaulted into the Top Ten by defeating Michigan 23-17 and Illinois made the rankings for the first time in six years.

Washington defeated Arizona 23-13 and received 25 first-place votes and 1,045 of a possible 1,100 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

However, Nebraska's 68-0 rout of New Mexico lifted the Cornhuskers from third place to second with 12 first-place votes and 1,011 points. Pitt, despite a 37-17 triumph over Florida State, dropped from second to third with 10 firsts and 989 points.

The remaining eight first-place ballots went to Alabama, which trounced Mississippi 42-14 and held onto fourth place with 945 points.

Florida, idle last weekend, remained No. 5 with 832 points, followed by Southern Methodist, Georgia, Penn State and Arkansas, all of which stayed in the same positions as last week.

SMU, a 31-10 winner over Texas-El Paso, received 802 points; idle Georgia totaled 783; Penn State had 732 for a 49-14 rout of Rutgers and Arkansas, a 29-17 victor over Navy, received 595.

Notre Dame made the biggest jump, shooting from 20th to 10th after opening its season in impressive style against Michigan. The Wolverines fell from 10th to 20th.

The Second Ten consists of North Carolina, UCLA, Ohio State, Arizona State, West Virginia, Miami, Texas, Southern California, Illinois and Michigan.

Last week, it was North Carolina, Ohio State, Arizona State, UCLA, Miami, Clemson, West Virginia, Texas, Southern Cal and Notre Dame.

Illinois replaced Clemson in the Top Twenty with a 47-10 victory over Syracuse that boosted its record to 3-0. Illinois had not made the rankings since the second regular-season poll in 1976.

Cardinals Start Count Down

By The Associated Press
With 12 games to go, it's possible to start putting the words "St. Louis Cardinals" and "magic number" in the same sentence. But just eight days ago, the Redbirds were a half-game out of first place, having lost seven out of ten games.

Then came the streak. Seven days. Eight games. Eight victories. And suddenly, the magic number is eight.

Behind a combined nine-hitter by Joaquin Andujar and Bruce Sutter, the Cards won their eighth straight game Monday night, beating the Philadelphia Phillies 4-1. They extended their lead in the National League East to 5½ games over second-place Philadelphia, and any combination of Cardinal victories and Phillie losses adding up to eight will give St. Louis its first divisional title in history.

In other NL action Monday, Houston edged Atlanta 4-3, while Chicago topped Pittsburgh 3-1. Rain washed out the Montreal-New York contest at Shea Stadium.

"If we win tomorrow, it will put serious pressure on them," Cardinal third baseman Ken Oberkfell said of Philadelphia, which has lost seven of nine coming into tonight's game at Busch Stadium. "It's exciting. It will be a big game. The fans are getting revved up. It's like a 10th player on our side."

"Probably our starting pitching over the last nine games has been the best I've ever seen," said Cardinal Manager Whitey Herzog. In their last eight contests, the Cards' starters have given up seven runs.

"I just try to do my best. Right now I'm giving it 200 percent," said Andujar, 14-10, who pitched the first 62-3 innings. Sutter came on in the seventh to post his league-leading 34th save.

George Hendrick's two-run fifth-inning double off John Denny, 0-2, was the game's decisive hit.

"I felt that we had a real good chance of winning a championship. I'm not saying we're out of it yet," Phillie skipper Pat Corlles said. "I've seen strange things happen in this game."

Astros 4, Braves 3
While the Cards were assuming a commanding position in the NL East race, the Braves, who led the NL West by as many as nine games in late July, fell three full games behind first-place Los Angeles with 12 games to play.

Dickie Thon's ninth-inning double to left-center off reliever Gene Garber, 7-9, won the game for the fifth-place Astros.

"This was the toughest loss of the season for us," said Atlanta's Jerry Royster. "It's late in the season, and we had a chance to pick up a half game. It's real tough to take."

"I'd much rather be in our position than the Astros," said Atlanta manager Joe Torre. "They are relaxed and have nothing to lose. We've been picking ourselves up off the floor all season. Any time you lose in the last 12 or 13 games, it's tough. Every loss is monumental and very critical to our pennant hopes."

Cubs 3, Pirates 1
Dickie Noles, 9-12, doubled and scored a run to back his own pitching, as he scattered five hits and struck out eight in seven innings of work. Dick Tidrow earned his sixth save as the Cubs won their fifth straight game.

The Cubs' last loss prior to the winning streak was a 15-5 drubbing to Pittsburgh in which Noles was the losing pitcher.

"I told Bo (Cubs shortstop Larry Bowa) I was feeling like part of the team again," Noles said. "I was mostly joking, but I lost the last game this team has lost in a while and it was nice to come back."

"He had the best stuff I've ever seen him have, and he's won some big ballgames," said Pittsburgh manager Chuck Tanner.

It Took Some Doing To Bring NFL To Halt

By The Associated Press
It took some doing for the National Football League, the most successful and prosperous professional team sport in the history of the universe, to grind to a halt.

"It took Ed Garvey, point man for the players, who has yet to negotiate a contract for the union without some sort of disruption of games. 'He's great at bringing the players to the edge. What he's not good at is negotiating," said Ted Kheel, who used to be the owners' negotiator and Garvey's adversary.

"It took Jack Donlan, now the trigger man for the owners, whose previous negotiating was done on behalf of strike-ridden National Airlines. A former airline, that is, Pan Am absorbed it a while back.

"It took Pete Rozelle, the smiling but silent commissioner. His grounding is in public relations. He was a flack for the Los Angeles Rams decades before Al Davis dreamed of setting up shop in the Memorial Coliseum.

"Where is he? Where has he been?" Davis said of Rozelle, his chief antagonist (or is it the other way around?). "He represents both the players and the owners. We have a commissioner who refuses to get involved."

But perhaps as much as anything, it was television which turned America onto this game, turned it into a billion-dollar business and turned the players against the owners.

It wasn't that long ago, only a generation or so, that one of the players was one of the owners, and the coach as well.

In 1921, George Halas had the Chicago Bears — they were called the Decatur Staleys back then — deposited in his lap by A.E. Staley because his starch business wasn't doing all that well. Here, he said. Take it. Goodbye.

Mr. Halas and his heirs, dependents and creditors now share with the other franchisees a $14-million jackpot for each full season of NFL television.

In 1939, somebody over at NBC had a great idea. Why not lug a camera over to Ebbetts Field and see what this game looks like on our 10-inch screens?

Now, a $2.1-billion contract later, the question is: Who controls this game?

Duke Can't Take Virginia Lightly

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Duke's first chance to get off to a 3-0 start since 1971 is staring its football team in the face, but Coach Red Wilson won't allow his Blue Devils to think about a victory over Virginia.

The Cavaliers are 0-2, their latest tragedy a 21-17 loss to Division I-AA opponent James Madison. Such a loss could lead to high optimism among Blue Devil squad members, but Wilson will have no part of it.

"The last two games have been very close," Wilson said Monday. "Our people realize this. I can assure you we won't take Virginia lightly. We will not allow complacency to set in."

Duke has every reason to become overconfident. The Blue Devils faced Tennessee in 90,000-seat Neyland Stadium and came away with a 25-24 victory. Last weekend, they stopped South Carolina's winning streak at two games with a 30-17 triumph.

Based on the last two years, however, nothing is certain about Saturday's game, Duke's home opener.

Last year, Ron Sally threw two fourth-quarter touchdown passes to give Duke a 29-24 victory in Charlottesville. In 1980, Pat Chester's punt return gave the Cavaliers a 20-17 victory.

"We have to avoid being overconfident," Wilson added. "But how many times has a Duke team been overconfident lately?"

Virginia has proven it can move the ball, outgaining its opponents by nearly 2-to-1. The problem has been reaching the end zone. On at least 12 occasions, the Cavalier offense drove the ball into James Madison territory; three times they came away with scores and five times they gave the ball back to the Dukes.

"It is amazing," said Wilson. "You make a lot of long gains and then you have trouble getting into the end zone."

Wilson said he has respect for the Virginia offense, led by quarterback Mike Eck and Wayne Schuchts, as well as running back Quentin Walker.

"Virginia has a super running back in Walker. Eck and Schuchts are very good," he said. "Both are capable of throwing an excellent pass."

Duke hasn't produced much offense from its ground game, but junior Ben Bennett has been impressive as a passer. In his first start against the Gamecocks, he completed 15 of 21 passes for 177 yards and a pair of touchdowns to Chris Castor.

later, when it's come to pass, every guy in this locker room is walking out. There's not gonna be one guy who's not going."

"I will be honoring it," said Viking backup quarterback Steve Dils. "I think it's a shame that it came to this. But I think that this is about the only way that the players are going to get anything. The owners don't seem to be willing to come up with something that's going to improve our salary structure at all."

But Pittsburgh rookie defensive back Rick Woods added, "All my life I've worked for this opportunity. Now they're striking on me. It's such a touchy thing. I wish I didn't have to make a decision. This is an awesome game we're playing and I hate like hell to think there won't be football next week."

"I'm not going to break a strike," said Pittsburgh quarterback Terry Bradshaw, who has been quoted as saying that he opposed a strike. "What am I going to do? Come in here and work out? If they vote to come in, I'll lead them. I'll be the pied piper."

Are America's football-crazed fans looking to a season-long strike?

"God, don't say that," said Chicago bar owner Jerry Ranalli, who presided over more than 100 customers who watched the Packers-Giants game on television.

"I think the average fan, going back to the baseball strike and now the football strike, is basically fed up with the amount of money that the players are making and the owners are making," said Ray Taylor of Los Angeles. "It's a two-sided coin. I think they are both wrong. Where does that leave me? It leaves me with Saturday college football."

"I'm going to miss the games, I really am," said hairdresser Diane Walters, a Cleveland Browns fan. "I side with the players. They're the ones bringing in the money."

Strike Marks New Trend In Bigtime Sports Arena

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

The pro football players' strike is more than just another labor-management standoff and temporary inconvenience to armchair quarterbacks — it marks a significant new trend in bigtime sports.

The gold rush is on. The players are determined not to be left lagging in the race for the mother lode — the rich vein of TV monies now flowing from the three commercial networks and the mushrooming cable systems, all offering fortunes to fill empty screens.

The National Football League Players Association has taken the initiative in flatly demanding half a slice of the TV loot. You can bet that major league baseball, basketball and hockey players are watching developments with intense interest.

In fact, almost unnoticed by the media, a suit has been filed in the U.S. District Court in Chicago which may have far-reaching consequences for every sport which subjects itself to the big, rich and roving TV eye.

The suit was filed by the Major League Player Relations Committee, headed by Ray Grebey, who went head-to-head with Marvin Miller, executive director of the baseball players' association in last year's midsummer baseball strike.

"We learned that the players were seeking to establish full ownership of their picture, number, and likeness and the legal right to claim a fixed percentage of the proceeds every time they are shown on television," Grebey said.

"We don't think that is realistic, so we, the Player Relations Committee, filed suit, asking for a declaratory judgment. We chose Chicago because we were meeting there at the time, and it is a convenient location for our scattered owners."

Waltrip Cuts Into The Lead

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip of Franklin, Tenn., used his Sunday victory in the CRC Chemicals 500 at Dover, Del., to take a 46-point chunk out of Bobby Allison's lead in the NASCAR Winston Cup Grand National point standings.

But Allison still holds a 101-point lead over Waltrip after 24 races, 3,574 to 3,473. Allison finished 10th in the race at Dover International Speedway after being plagued with overheating problems.

Terry Labonte of Corpus Christi, Tex., is next with 3,372, and Harry Gant has moved into fourth with 3,043. Buddy Arrington follows at 2,370; Dave Marcis has 3,029, Richard Petty 2,999, Dale Earnhardt 2,900 and Ricky Rudd has 2,799.

Waltrip still leads in terms of winnings, with $543,460. Allison is next with $484,905, followed by Petty at $319,250, Earnhardt at $313,430, Labonte at $280,005, Bouchard at $257,885, Jody Ridley at $237,370, Benny Parsons at $228,245, Cale Yarborough at $213,165 and Buddy Baker at $200,220.

Owners, players and fans speculated on how long the strike would last.

"That could be the season," said San Diego Chargers owner Gene Klein, a member of the owners' executive committee.

Russell Erxleben, the New Orleans player representative, advised the Saints Monday night to be prepared to sit out the whole season.

He said he expected his teammates to soon "scatter like quail."

Some fans were angry with the strike.

"I resent the fact they're playing with my days off," said Randy Turley, a credit supervisor from Plum Boro, Pa. "I don't sympathize with either side."

At the Packers-Giants game, a rain-soaked crowd of 68,405 booted the two teams as they met at midfield for a pregame solidarity handshake. A banner at Giants Stadium invoked the memory of former New York football greats with the words, "Tittle,

Oglivie's Homer Helps Brewers Nip Bosox, 4-3

By The Associated Press
With two outs and two strikes on their last batter in the ninth inning, the Milwaukee Brewers looked just about dead.

Then Ben Oglivie brought them to life.

"This has to be one of the greatest moments of my career because it meant so much to this team," said Oglivie after his dramatic home run on an 0-2 pitch from Dennis Eckersley tied the game 3-3 in the ninth against the Boston Red Sox Monday night.

After Oglivie rescued the Brewers, they won it 4-3 in the 11th on Gorman Thomas' sacrifice fly.

"We could've been only one up, but we're still two up, and that's very nice," said Oglivie, whose Brewers maintained a two-game lead in the American League East over the Baltimore Orioles, 3-1 winners over the Detroit Tigers.

Meanwhile, the California Angels beat the Kansas City Royals 3-2 to take over sole possession of the lead in the AL West. The two teams had been tied for first going into Monday night's opener of their big, three-game series.

Robin Yount beat out a single to open the Milwaukee 11th off reliever Bob Stanley, 11-7. Cecil Cooper followed with a single and Ted Simmons' sacrifice moved both runners up. After Oglivie was intentionally walked to load the bases, Thomas, who earlier hit his 38th homer, delivered his game-winning sacrifice fly.

Oglivie's game-tying homer, his 31st, was one of only seven hits off Eckersley.

"With the count 0-2, I had to be ready for anything in that situation," said Oglivie. "I knew he might want to waste a pitch, but I couldn't let anything go by."

Pete Vuckovich, 18-4, went the distance for his eighth straight victory, tying a club victory. He scattered 11 hits, walked four and struck out two.

"There's no one I'd rather have out there in a big game than Vuke," said Thomas. "He's just awesome."

Orioles 3, Tigers 1
John Lowenstein's two-run homer in the ninth inning lifted Baltimore over Detroit. It was the 27th victory in 32 games for the red-hot Orioles.

Lowenstein's blow, only the sixth hit off Jack Morris, 16-16, followed a leadoff single by Eddie Murray.

Sammy Stewart, 9-7, pitched the ninth inning in relief of Jim Palmer to earn the victory.

The Tiger had taken a 1-0 lead in the first on Larry Herndon's RBI double but the Orioles tied it in the eighth when pinch-runner John Shelby scored from third on a double-play grounder by Terry Crowley.

Angels 3, Royals 2
Tim Foli's two-out homer in the fifth inning snapped a 1-1 tie and Geoff Zahn won his 17th game as California beat Kansas City. The two teams entered the series with identical 84-65 records.

Zahn, 17-8, gave up eight hits, walked four and struck out two before needing relief help in the ninth from Luis Sanchez, who gained his third save after giving up John Wathan's RBI grounder.

Foli's blast broke up a pitchers' duel between left-handed ace Zahn and Larry Gura, 17-11, giving the Angels a 2-1 lead.

They scored their eventual winning run in the seventh inning as Bobby Grich led off with a walk, took second on Bob Boone's sacrifice and, after Foli reached first on shortstop U.L. Washington's throwing error, scored on Ron Jackson's double.

Twins 4, Blue Jays 1
Randy Bush drove in three runs with two homers to lead Minnesota over Toronto. Bobby Castillo, 11-11, scattered nine hits before needing relief help in the ninth inning from Ron Davis, who recorded his 21st save.

The Twins took a 1-0 lead in the third on a run-scoring single by Kent Hrbek, his 86th of the season, tops on the Twins. Bush made it 2-0 with his third homer of the season in the fourth and added a two-run shot in the eighth, both off loser Luis Leal, 11-14.

Toronto's only run came on a homer in the sixth by Jesse Barfield, his 15th.

Rangers 10, A's 3
Mike Richardt's three-run homer and Buddy Bell's two-run triple sparked a six-run first inning that carried Texas over Oakland.

Left-hander Frank Tanana, 7-18, snapped a personal five-game losing streak with the victory, allowing solo homers to Rickey Henderson, Kelvin Moore and Mike Heath before getting relief help in the eighth from Danny Darwin.

The Rangers sent nine batters to the plate in the first inning, collecting five of their 14 hits off loser Matt Keough, 11-18.

Mariners 5, White Sox 2
Joe Simpson scored once and drove in the go-ahead run with an infield single in the fifth inning as Seattle downed Chicago.

Bryan Clark, 4-2, struck out five over 52-3 innings, getting relief help from Rich Bordi and Ed Vande Berg, who earned his fourth save.

Simpson legged out a bouncer between first and second to score Julio Cruz, who had tripled to open the fifth off LaMarr Hoyt, 16-15. Simpson also sparked a two-run first with a single.

Dancin' Home

Detroit Tiger Glenn Wilson appears to be dancing his way home when actually he is trying to avoid the tag about to be placed on him by Baltimore Oriole catcher Rick Dempsey during action in the third inning of their game in Baltimore on Monday night. Wilson tried to score from first on a double by Larry Herndon but was cut down by right fielder Gary Roenicke's throw. (AP Laserphoto)

Nothing Beats Experience

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer
Gene Tenace was supine on the dugout bench, striking a Mae West pose and resplendent in the glory that has befallen the St. Louis Cardinals.

are fighting for their first pennant since 1968.

"There's no substitute for experience," Tenace said. Tenace and the other catcher, Darrell Porter, are two of the few Cardinals with a playoff or World Series experience. Tenace was in five championship series and three World Series with the Oakland A's, while Porter played in three league series and one World Series with the Kansas City Royals.

"Last year at this time, the clubhouse was like a morgue," Porter recalls.

Only a few players were in the ballpark that sunny morning when New York Mets coach Jim Frey came to inquire: "How's the head?"

"Still on my shoulders," Tenace replied — a good spot for one's head under such conditions.

The Cardinals finished second in both halves of last year's split season. They led the National League East on Sept. 29 of 1981, only to fall a half game short of Montreal on the last day of the season.

DUNKEL COLLEGE FOOTBALL INDEX

EXPLANATION - The Dunkel system provides a continuous index to the relative strength of all teams. It reflects average scoring margin combined with average opposition rating, weighted in favor of recent performance. Example: a 50.0 team has been 10 scoring points stronger, per game, than a 40.0 team against opposition of identical strength. Originated in 1929 by Dick Dunkel.

Approaches To Audience Differ

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — At 6 and 6:30 in the morning, the source of TV levity is off-the-wall-Street news, business and the economy. The weather fun begins later.

Different audiences cause the networks to take different approaches with their early-morning news broadcasts and, later, newscasts on entertainment-conscious "Today" and "Good Morning America."

Weatherman Willard Scott can't compare on NBC's "Early Today," at an hour when business analyst Alan Abelson calls gold by its scientific initials, AU, and says: "I have trouble rooting for gold. It's like rooting for Adolf Hitler."

Over at ABC, John Coleman's fast tongue and sliding weather panels aren't on

yet. "ABC News This Morning" has Linda Gialanella, her computer maps and no banter, leaving it to business reporter Stephen Aug for light moments.

But after 7 a.m. EDT, Jane Pauley does the all-business "Money Matters" on "Today" and Aug says he does his most straightforward report on "GMA."

Viewers watching before 7 probably care more about business news, networks say, and their interest in the weather amounts to whether they need an umbrella, or the temperature in a shuttle city.

"The philosophy is to present the weather and not get involved in a lot of yukking," says Robert Frye, executive producer of "This Morning." "On the economy, we wanted someone to do a column, as opposed to the straight business news presentation on "Good Morning America." You don't need stock tables. Newspapers do that. So does TV the night before."

Steve Friedman, executive producer of "Today" and "Early Today," says he wanted a distinction between NBC's morning broadcasts. "There's a finite amount of time. We save the other Willard for later."

But the economy is also a different kind of story. "Business news is dry and hard to understand," says Friedman. "And you can't keep telling people they're going broke. That's too depressing."

So the networks are bullish on inside information and irreverence on the new early morning shows.

Both programs, which began this summer, borrowed from the print world, disdaining experts from Wall Street or the big financial houses. "We didn't want a broker," says Friedman. "They're boring and push stocks."

Abelson, who writes a column for Barron's, banters with newscaster Bryant Gumbel and says outrageous things: The nationalization of banks by Mexico was "Montezuma's revenge." Last week, after Chrysler's labor settlement, Abelson said he owned a Chrysler once and never had to worry about head-on collisions; a tow truck was always attached to his front.

"You might say he treats these finance people with a little lack of respect," says Ron Steinman, producer of "Early Today."

Aug, business editor at the Washington Star when it folded, is not your typical television reporter, either. When he says "Good morning," his New York accent reminds us of racetrack announcer Fred Capossella, famous for his nasal advisory, "And they're off."

Aug's reports, rich in substance, are stylish and spicy. With shoulders and eyebrows rocking, Aug explained last week how the Civil Aeronautics Board had raised the liability limit for lost luggage on airlines. But he was careful, he warned. It doesn't go into effect yet.

"If someone told me two years ago that I'd blow-dry my hair, wear make-up and go to a voice coach," says Aug, "I would say he was out of his mind."

New Complications In Janet Gaynor's Injuries

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Former film star Janet Gaynor suffered "new complications" and she was in critical but stable condition in the intensive care unit of San Francisco General Hospital today, authorities said.

Miss Gaynor, 75, winner of the first Academy Award for best actress in 1928, was "awake and alert," early today, said nursing supervisor Leonard Jones.

A hospital spokesman was scheduled to hold a news conference today to elaborate on the complications that caused Miss Gaynor's condition to be downgraded from serious to critical, Jones said.

"There was no drastic, sudden change from when she was listed as serious," Jones said. "But there's concern because of some new complications yesterday."

"This is one of those things that you have to expect when someone has been injured so badly," he added. "It's something the doctors warned about after her surgery. I don't think her age is the major factor here."

Miss Gaynor underwent a 4½-hour operation for a perforated bladder and extensive internal bleeding following the Sept. 5 taxi-van crash that also injured her husband, producer Paul Gregory, and actress Mary Martin. Killed in the accident was Miss Martin's business manager and longtime companion, Ben Washer.

Miss Gaynor also suffered 11 broken ribs and a broken pelvis. She needed a transfusion of 10 pints of blood during her operation, Jones said.

Miss Martin, 68, and Gregory, 62, were released from the hospital last week. Miss Martin, the award-winning star of "Peter Pan," "South Pacific" and "The Sound of Music," suffered a broken pelvis and punctured lung. Gregory had two broken legs.

On Monday, Robert Cato, 36, the driver of the van, pleaded innocent to charges of vehicular manslaughter, felony drunk driving and reckless driving. Municipal Court Judge Dominique Olcomendy scheduled a Nov. 3 preliminary hearing.

Burton, Taylor Teamed In Play

NEW YORK (AP) — Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor will appear next spring in a production of Noel Coward's comedy "Private Lives," it was reported today.

The New York Times said the two stars will portray a divorced couple who meet again when each is honeymooning with someone else. Burton and Miss Taylor, who were twice married to and divorced from each other, recently separated from their spouses, Susan Hunt and Sen. John W. Warner, R-Va.

They have performed in several films, but have not acted together on stage since 1966 in Burton's production of Christopher Marlowe's "Dr. Faustus" in England.

Zev Bufman, who is producing "Private Lives," will announce the production on Thursday in Los Angeles, the Times said. The revival will be performed in Washington, New York and Los Angeles, the newspaper said.

Pendergrass To Leave Hospital

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Teddy Pendergrass, whose singing career was interrupted by injuries from an automobile accident, will be released from the hospital this week, his doctor says.

"He knows he can sing," said Dr. William Staas. He noted that the 32-year-old singer's legs are paralyzed and he is just now regaining use of his arms.

"I don't see his walking again," Staas, director of Magee Memorial Hospital, said Monday. "But that won't have any effect on his

We have signed. In the hand that accompanied our tribute to the late Herman Filarski, we inadvertently cut out the line of play adopted by Filarski and left in the alternative that would have failed. We hasten to correct our mistake.

Against Filarski's four spade contract, West led the king of clubs and continued with the ace. Declarer ruffed and tried two high spades, and the contract seemed hopeless when East showed out on the second round. But declarer came up with a beautiful line of play.

Filarski abandoned trumps, cashed the ace of diamonds and ace-king of hearts, then led a low diamond and ran it to West's king. West did the best he could by returning another club, forcing declarer to ruff. This was now the position:

Declarer led the queen of diamonds. West ruffed and led his last club. Declarer sluffed dummy's remaining diamond and ruffed in his hand. Now he led his last diamond, and West was helpless. If he ruffed, dummy would overruff and the queen of hearts would score declarer's tenth trick. If he sluffed his heart, the diamond would win and the nine of trumps would be declarer's fulfilling trick.

Quiz Suspects In Liberace Theft

MINDEN, Nev. (AP) — About $9,000 in valuables were stolen in a burglary at the home of entertainer Liberace, and three suspects were being questioned in the case, officials say.

Douglas County sheriff's Sgt. Doug Struthers said items taken from the pianist's home in Zephyr Cove last week included two video recorders, two stereo speakers, a silver bowl and some liquor. He said Liberace was not at home at the time.

The three were arrested Saturday for "numerous thefts" in the Lake Tahoe area and were being held in South Lake Tahoe, Calif. on $20,000 bail each, said El Dorado County sheriff's Sgt. Jim Roth.

Hospital Patients To School In Bed

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Many of the youths undergoing treatment at Duke Hospital are receiving special tutoring, and the makeshift education program can sometimes be just what the doctor ordered.

"If a child is well enough to have school, maybe he is not as bad off as he thinks he is," says Linda Lane, principal of the program, which employs four teachers who tutor students on the kindergarten level through high school.

The school is intended to help children keep up with their school work and to serve as a morale booster, helping to maintain a normal environment for patients.

The students come from all over the country and several foreign nations. Their stay may be as short as five days or as long as several months.

The four teachers serve Duke Hospital North, Duke Hospital South and Ronald McDonald House, and are employed by the Durham city schools.

Lane and Lottie Kee teach middle and high school students and Helen Kojanis teaches elementary-age children. Gail Wingfield teaches emotionally-disturbed adolescents in a classroom at McDowell Unit.

Hospital teachers deal with 45 to 50 children of widely varying backgrounds suffering from appendicitis on up, Ms. Wingfield said.

Some students suffer from "school phobia," a fear of school and anything associated with it, Ms. Kojanis said. Others have never been in school.

"It's definitely a unique teaching situation," Ms.

Heart Of A City

New York has the Statue of Liberty. New Orleans its jazz. And San Francisco its cable cars — that is except for the next 20 months. The nation's last operating cable car system shuts down today for a $58 million overhaul of its propulsion system. In 1873 Andrew S. Hallidie invented cable cars to cope with San Francisco's hilly streets. Soon their use spread across the nation. But by the 1930s more efficient bus systems replaced cable cars everywhere except San Francisco — where buses proved no match for the city's notorious hills. Today the cars symbolize San Francisco, and the loss of ridership alone will cost the city by the Bay an estimated $20.8 million during the shutdown.

Wingfield said. "You wear many different hats." The teachers say they must be flexible and tolerant. "You have to adapt materials and teaching style to what they can do," Ms. Wingfield said. If a student cannot write, he dictates to his teacher.

Lessons must be read to blind students. Materials are photocopied for those too weak to hold a book. Teachers try to visit their students each day, but physical conditions and time constraints may mean skipping a day of class.

Helms' Image As 'New Right' Hero Seen Damaged

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Little more than a year ago, Sen. Jesse Helms was the seemingly invincible hero of the New Right who appeared destined to lead a reversal of national policy on abortion, school prayer and busing. With the 1980 election of a Republican-controlled Senate and the inauguration of conservative president, Helms' success on those issues seemed assured during the 97th Congress. Now, with the Senate's long-delayed debate on the so-called social issues almost over, the North Carolina Republican's reputation as a legislative magician has been tarnished. After 18 months of discussion on Capitol Hill, the Senate last week rejected a watered-down anti-abortion bill on which Helms believed he had the votes. Today, liberals are still successfully battling school prayer legislation. The measure that would put prayer back in public school is now given only a 50-50 chance of clearing the Senate in the closing days of the congressional session. And in the House, legislation designed to end busing for racial desegregation that the Senate approved months ago is going nowhere. That is happening, in part, because liberals blocked action in the Senate for 10 months so that there was not enough time for the House to work on the bill.

Why was Helms unable to get what he wanted? Some of Helms' opponents contend that except for a remarkable grasp of the Senate rules and the following of a small band of hard-line conservatives, the North Carolina Republican didn't have any real power. "For all of his huffing and puffing, the emperor has no clothes," said William Hamilton, Washington director of Planned Parenthood, one of a half-dozen organizations which helped blocked Helms' abortion proposal. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., the assistant Democratic leader in the Senate, said that initially there was a perception that Helms was riding the crest of a conservative wave. In the end, Cranston said, "He didn't have any clout to use. It was all a myth."

But in fact, Helms does have some real clout. Conservative direct mail fund-raising operations, including the North Carolina-based Congressional Club, has raised millions of dollars and used much of the money to defeat senators and House members who vote against Helms on social issues. In the 1980 elections, Senate Democratic liberals like Birch Bayh of Indiana and Dick Clark of Iowa, felt the sting of opposition campaigns aided by the New Right. Analysts attributed their defeat in part to their votes on abortion and other social issues. After the vote on abortion last week, Helms said that although he was disappointed, the result of the abortion vote gave him ammunition to use against senators who support a continuation of legalized abortions. "I wanted a vote to put the brethren on the record," Helms said. Helms insists that he plays no direct role in the operation of the conservative fund-raising operations, but conceded in an interview Monday that he expects his opponents' votes "will be of interest" to recipients of the mailings. His own efforts to end legalized abortion and put prayer back in the classroom are born of genuine belief, he said.

Asked if his leadership on social issues reflected ambitions to succeed Ronald Reagan in the White House, Helms replied: "I cross my heart and say that I do not have any such ambitions." Helms was criticized by sources close to Republican Senate leaders for his actions on the anti-abortion measure. The sources said Helms reneged on an agreement to vote on one version of his anti-abortion bill when it appeared that he would lose. As a result, liberals waged a time-consuming, ultimately successful, filibuster against the measure. "More and more," one senior Republican official said, "Helms is getting a reputation as an obstructionist who never gets through legislation of his own."

Among the highly charged anti-abortion groups, there was also deep division over whether the Congress should enact a difficult-to-pass constitutional amendment, or take a statutory approach urged by Helms. That split gave Helms' opponents an advantage they hadn't counted on. Until last spring, Majority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee and President Reagan joined to keep the Senate's attention focused on the president's economic program, so Helms' social issues debate was postponed for months. When discussions began, liberals like Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., and Bob Packwood, R-Ore., showed they could use the Senate rules as effectively as Helms. And Reagan, who has openly supported quick action on the social issues, has confused the situation, in some cases. For example, Reagan is supporting a constitutional amendment on school prayer at the very moment when Helms is caught in a liberal filibuster against his own statutory approach. Asked Monday if he is disappointed in the president, Helms said he did not blame Reagan, but, "I am disappointed at the president's staff and spokesmen." Should all the social issues die with the 97th Congress, some conservatives say they will push again next year.

New Catholic Satellite Network Inaugurated

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Catholic Dioceses of Charlotte and Raleigh have unveiled a new satellite telecommunication program.

Church officials said Monday they hope the programs will match efforts by other religious broadcasters such as the Christian Broadcast Network and the PTL Club in North Carolina. Father Joe Vetter said the church also plans to use the satellite link to conduct church business, as well as handle radio programs.

"It will give us the ability to transmit information by television, audio, phone, data, facsimile, and teletype. It's a distribution system we are setting up," Vetter said.

Vetter said the network, called Catholic Telecommunications North Carolina, also will carry national Catholic programming from the Catholic Telecommunications of America.

He said the network is videotaping programs to distribute to churches. But he said the network hopes to make arrangements through cable companies for wider distribution.

"Locally we will decide how we will distribute the signal once we receive it. Also as we develop the distribution network we want some way we can originate some of our own information, and feed to the local network through the churches of North Carolina."

He said one option would be to establish satellite receivers in each parish, and receive signals from New York. He said some programs may be distributed to existing stations.

Original programming will be television and radio programs that have been produced nationally.

"Some will be educational, some will be informational, and some will be dramatic and arts related," he said.

"Any type program we feel would support Christian values and help do our job in the church better."

He said the church also plans a half hour of television news, talk shows, and documentaries on issues such as world hunger, racism, and agnosticism.

Would Curb Ocean's Use

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ocean disposal of low-level nuclear wastes would be forbidden for two years, and afterwards could be carried out only by special permit, under legislation approved by the House.

The bill, passed Monday on a voice vote and sent to the Senate, would require environmental assessments at the end of the two-year period before a permit for ocean disposal of low-level radioactive wastes could be issued.

Congress would be given 45 days to review and block issuance of each permit.

The Reagan administration which opposed the bill on several grounds, said the veto provision may be unconstitutional.

But Rep. Don Clausen, R-Calif., said it was essential to focus congressional attention on the issue and ensure that radioactive materials would be dumped at sea "only with the strictest environmental safeguards, if at all."

The government halted disposal of low-level wastes in the ocean in 1970.

Backers of the two-year dumping moratorium said it was designed to head off expected administration efforts to resume use of the oceans for disposal of low-level wastes, such as outdated submarines and contaminated soils.

The legislation renews a program first enacted in 1972 to require permits for ocean disposal of non-radioactive wastes such as sewage sludge. But it would impose new requirements on the Environmental Protection Agency in that area as well.

The EPA would be required to designate specific ocean locations for dumping after performing detailed analyses on the sites. It would then monitor the sites and take steps to protect them and nearby areas.

The administration said the monitoring provision was too strict and costly and questioned the provision allowing courts to order the EPA to designate disposal sites.

Now and them.
