

Thousands Of Polish Workers On Strike

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer
WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Thousands of workers struck at the Lenin shipyard in Gdansk today for a second day to protest the ban on Solidarity and were joined by thousands more in the nearby Baltic port of Gdynia, witnesses said.

They said the Gdansk strikers, shouting "Solidarity is alive," resumed their strike early in the morning. The government said police battled rioters in Gdansk throughout the night.

Western journalists, driving out of Gdansk to nearby Elblag to breach a telephone blackout imposed by Communist Poland's martial-law regime, said the Paris Commune shipyard in Gdynia had joined workers at the V.I. Lenin shipyard in Gdansk.

An estimated 5,000 workers could be involved in the Gdansk protest, with several thousand more joining the strike in Gdynia, the reporters said.

They said the strike had resumed in Gdansk at 6 a.m. and that police backed by water cannon had surrounded the giant shipbuilding complex at 9 a.m.

Western correspondents in Gdansk said strikers closed the shipyard to demand release of union chief Lech Walesa and others jailed for violating the martial-law edicts of Dec. 13.

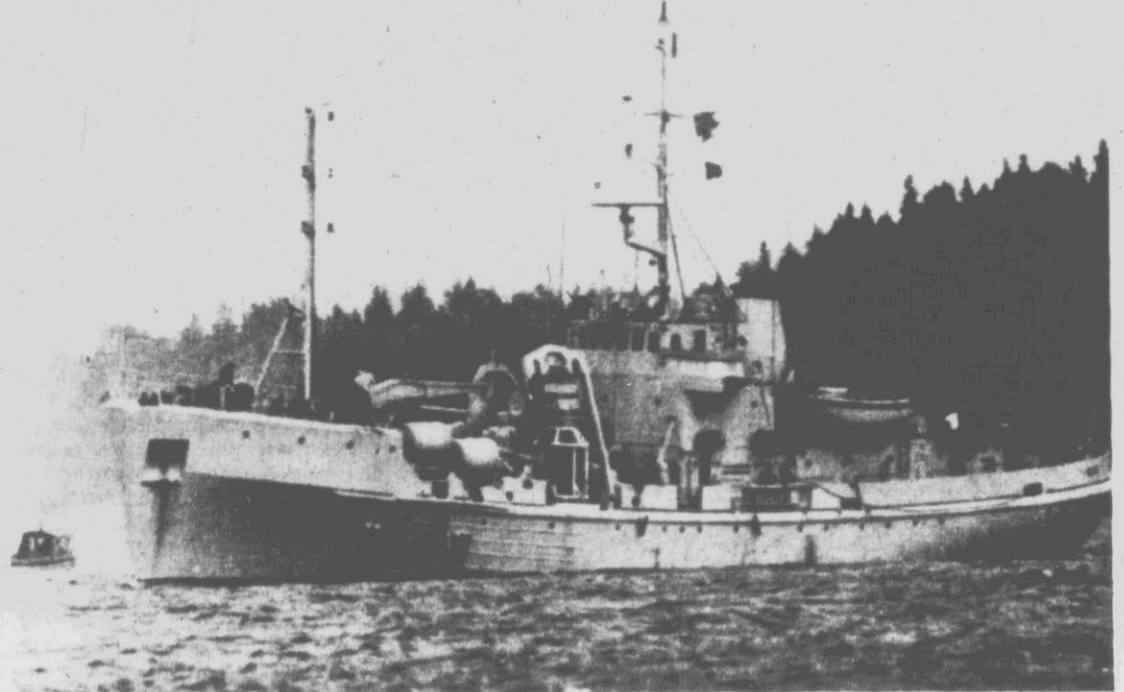

In Warsaw, government spokesman Jerzy Urban told foreign journalists there were attempts at organizing strikes at eight shipyards and factories in the Baltic area Monday, and that police had used tear gas, water cannon and flares to disperse rioters in Gdansk during the night.

Urban said about 600 people fought police on the streets near the Gdansk train station and the city's old quarter Monday night, smashing windows, setting fires and building barricades from streetcar tracks and stones. He said about a dozen people were arrested.

In Washington, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the strike in Gdansk was "an indication the Polish workers feel very strongly about Solidarity and that Solidarity lives in Poland."

Police Role On Hostages Is Defended

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Raleigh police are defending their strategy of waiting out a gunman holed up on a train and passing up a chance to shoot the man although they believed time was running short for an infant hostage.

"The tactics were the only tactics we could have used at that time for the betterment of both children," Raleigh Police Chief Frederick K. Heineman said Monday. "If the situation arose again, with a few minor changes, I would do the same thing we did in this particular incident."

as it continued to wind on rapport was established with the gentleman.

"And certainly we felt as long as we had communications open and as long as we were getting some reaction from him, that certainly there was hope that we could do it peaceful, without forceful means."

Israeli, Syrians Clash

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli troops clashed with Syrian and Palestinian forces in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley today and each side accused the other of firing first.

The Tel Aviv command said Syrian forces and Palestinian guerrillas fired light arms and rocket-propelled grenades at Israeli forces near Yanta, six miles northeast of Rachaiya and four miles from the Syrian border.

The Syrian command in Damascus said the Israelis opened up with tanks and artillery on Syrian forces in the Nita area of the Bekaa about 11:20 a.m. (5:20 a.m. EDT), and that the Syrians and Israelis traded fire for 30 minutes.

The gunman, identified as Mario Evangelista Villabona Navas, surrendered early Monday, ending a three-day siege of an Amtrak sleeping car.

He faced arraignment today on charges of first-degree murder in the deaths of his sister and her 9-month-old baby aboard the sleeper. He also faced a charge of kidnapping her 3½-year-old daughter, who was freed unharmed.

Police said the gunman told them Sunday night the infant had died, but doctors said an autopsy Monday revealed that the baby was dead by noon Sunday. The mother died of a gunshot wound to the head on Friday, an autopsy concluded.

Soon after the gunman took the hostages as the Miami-to-New York Silver Star train pulled into Raleigh, police began trying to negotiate with him, sometimes in Spanish and sometimes in English. They decided to continue talking and waiting as long as there was no imminent danger to the children inside.

Power Agency Buys Interest

The executive committee of the N.C. Eastern Municipal Power Agency has voted to close on an additional 19 percent of its ownership interests in seven generating units on the Carolina Power & Light Co. system.

The purchase will be made Oct. 15, using a portion of the proceeds from the agency's July 16 sale of $450 million in electric revenue bonds. The additional ownership interest will provide NCEMPA with more of its own generating capacity, reducing the amount of capacity the agency must purchase from CP&L to provide service to its participating cities.

Greenville is one of 32 municipal electric systems in eastern North Carolina represented by the agency. Others in this area include Farmville, Ayden, Hookerton, Hamilton and Robersonville.

Over the next year, NCEMPA plans to issue an estimated $350 million in additional bonds and notes to complete its purchase from CP&L. To complete acquisition and construction of all units included in the joint project with CP&L, the agency will issue an estimated total of $2.7 billion in bonds through 1993.

Fire Rating Is Improved

The city announced that it has been notified by the N.C. Insurance Services office of the improved reclassification of Greenville's fire insurance rating.

Effective Nov. 1, Greenville will have a Class 4 fire insurance rating, which may result in decreased fire insurance rates for many commercial properties here, the city reported. Residential properties will not be affected by the improved rating, as residential rates are established by the N.C. Rate Bureau.

The upgraded classification is the result of an extensive fire protection survey conducted in July, according to the city. Rating credits are based on the city's readiness in receiving and handling fire alarms, the adequacy of fire department facilities and equipment, and the department's accessibility to the city's water supply.

Hotline knows of no natural foods cooperatives existing in the Greenville area now, but we would be glad to pass along the information in a later column if we are informed of one.

SUGGS FEEDBACK

The Paul Suggs family and the friends who appealed for donations on their behalf after fire destroyed their home have asked Hotline to thank the many readers who responded. "I was just amazed at how people came out and helped," one friend said. "One lady who'd just moved to town even brought us a brand new toaster oven! Everyone was just wonderful!"

The gunman surprised authorities about 3 p.m. Sunday when he climbed into an open train window, waving to police and reporters. He presented an easy target for 10 seconds to 15 seconds.

Police did not fire, and Heineman later explained that the incident was used to establish trust in the negotiations.

"That was a test, by him, to see what we would do," said Capt. C.L. Price. "We proved good faith."

Police later said they were saddened by the infant's death, but they still defended their strategy.

"It's a judgmental kind of situation," said Sgt. C.A. Watson. "Certainly early on into the taking of the hostages it was difficult to establish rapport.... But then FOUNTAIN — Gov. Jim Hunt will dedicate the new Fountain Library as a national model of private sector involvement in community action.

The dedication, planned for Friday, Oct. 29, will be followed by a fund-raising luncheon sponsored by the Library Commission.

This community needs project has been designated a national model by the President's Task Force on Private Sector Incentive because of its utilization of private and corporate resources to solve local problems. The experience gained here will be used as a guide for other communities facing the same problems and having the same needs as Fountain.

Swedish Frogmen Look For Possibly Crippled Submarine

By ROLF SODERLIND
Associated Press Writer

BERGA NAVAL BASE, Sweden (AP) — Frogmen searched for a possibly crippled alien submarine today after a submerged mine blew up, spreading mud and oil south of where a suspected Soviet-bloc sub was first spotted 12 days ago.

The Swedish navy's chief spokesman Capt. Sven Carlsson said divers from the submarine salvage vessel Belos were hunting the frigid waters of Hors Bay and Mysingen Bay after the powerful mine exploded Monday afternoon.

He told reporters he was "more optimistic than before," that searchers would resolve the fate of the mystery vessel, reversing the navy's earlier gloomy reports that the sub may have escaped.

The mine exploded at the southern outlet of Mysingen Bay, just south of Hors Bay where sonar readings exposed an unidentified submerged vessel lurking Oct. 1 near the top-secret Musko Naval Base.

"The divers are searching a limited area but also wider areas of the two bays," Carlsson told reporters.

The Belos is equipped with a diving bell that can be used to rescue a submarine crew, Carlsson said.

Today's editions of the national Dagens Nyheter newspaper said the mine blew up "right on the object passing the mine field," at the entrance to the Mysingen bay and spread pools of mud and oil on the surface.

The navy said Monday the mine exploded after "indication of a possible submarine" in the southern Stockholm archipelago 19 miles south of Hors Bay.

The explosion, apparently in an outer defense mine field ringing the naval base, came after navy officials for days had been downplaying chances that the sub would be caught and that another alien sub lurked nearby.

No depth charges had been dropped since Friday and the military since Saturday had said it was becoming less likely a sub was trapped in Hors Bay by an anti-submarine mine net.

"It could still be there, but the likelihood is gradually decreasing," said Gen. Lennart Ljung, the armed forces commander in chief.

Ljung said the second sub which the navy said it detected Thursday could have been the first sub after it made its escape.

However, there was speculation Ljung was trying to mislead reporters and keep information about the search from the foreign government that sent the underwater intruder to spy on Sweden's biggest and most secret naval base — the nerve center of its east coast defenses.

Until today's statement, Carlsson said there had been no "firm indication" of the sub's presence since Friday.

Since the navy began hunting the vessel, it has referred to the ship as a foreign submarine, although it is believed to be from the Soviet bloc.

Carlsson said the mine exploded in the same area where the navy detonated four half-ton mines last Thursday. Informed sources said the mine-field operators detected an unidentified vessel passing through the field and set off the mines as a warning.

Since the navy said the sub was detected, warships and helicopters have scanned the waters with sonar, dropped about 40 depth charges and blocked waterway exits with steel nets to force the trespassing sub to surface and identify itself.

Neutral Sweden has reported 10 foreign subs prowling its coast since a Soviet sub believed armed with nuclear torpedoes beached in a restricted zone near the Karlskrona Naval Base 240 miles southwest of Stockholm last October. The sub was towed out of Swedish waters after nine days.

Democrats Rally

KINSTON — First Congressional District Democrats will hold a rally at King's Restaurant here Friday at 7 p.m., at which Gov. Jim Hunt and First District Congressman Walter B. Jones are scheduled to speak.

Among other officials scheduled to appear on the program are Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green, and Secretary of State Thad Eure.

Tickets for the banquet are available from Pitt County Democratic Chairman George Saleeby of Grifton.

Hunt and Jones are scheduled to hold a press conference just prior to the rally.

Community Development Block Grant Policy Reviewed In Ayden

By ANGELA LINGERFELT
Reflector Staff Writer

AYDEN — A public hearing on the review and assessment of the Community Development Block Grant Program was held Monday night at the meeting of the Ayden Board of Commissioners. The hearing was held to receive and consider public comments on the fiscal year 1980 CDBG program.

Dale Holland, a representative for the program, named several accomplishments during the fiscal year 1980 program. He reported that the original appropriation for the program was $451,000 and said that of this money, the most important expenditure was the rehabilitation of 40 dwelling units.

Holland said the program should be closed out within the next three to four months. He added that there are several lots of land that will be put up for sale before the close-out. "If the lots don't sell before close-out, the town will retain ownership and can sell them at a later date for purposes approved by the Community Development Block Grant Program," Holland said.

The board received two proposals on the close-out audit of the CDBG program: Umphlett and Hatcher, Farmville, $1,260 and Lloyd Moody, Kinston, $1,500. The board awarded the contract to the firm of Umphlett and Hatcher.

The commissioners adopted a rent collection policy and repayment plan for tenants in the Ayden Housing Authority project.

The adopted rent policy states that the rent is due within the first five days of each month. If the rent is not paid within these five days, a notice of termination will be sent to the tenant. This notice gives the tenant 14 additional days to pay the rent. If the rent is not paid by the 20th day of the same month, the tenant will receive a notice to vacate.

The rent policy further states that if a notice of termination is sent to a tenant more than six times in any 12-month period of time, the tenant will receive a notice to vacate.

The commissioners passed a 90-day plan for paying back-rent.

The board, which had allocated $20,000 to paint a water tank in Ayden, received bids on the job from five companies.

Steel and Tank Service Company proposed the lowest bid, which was more than the budgeted amount. Through negotiations, the amount was reduced by omitting the brush blast and the primer coat in painting the tank. This reduced the original bid, $22,280, by $3,400.

Members of the board approved the sale of two 1978 Nova police vehicles to the highest bidder, J.E. Byrd Garage in Kinston bought both vehicles for $350.

Gov. Hunt To Dedicate New Fountain Library

Gov. Hunt said, "This is exactly the sort of private-corporate citizen partnership we have been developing in this state to meet our communities' needs. The people in Fountain are to be commended for their efforts and accomplishments."

The fund-raising luncheon following the dedication will be provided by Martin Marietta Corporation. Tickets for the luncheon will be a $5 tax-deductible donation to the Library Commission to provide books and materials for the new facility.

Fountain has looked to its own resources, rather than to state or federal agencies, to meet community needs, Gov. Hunt said. The heirs of George W. and Emma Harden Jefferson gave a building for use as the library and Martin Marietta Corporation, which has a quarry here, contributed $25,000 for the renovation to meet state specifications. The Fountain Woman's Club and the local Ruritan Club provided time and money to complete the structure.

A Fountain Community Day has developed around the dedication and will include a crafts sale by the Woman's Club and Fall Harvest Day sponsored by Branch Bank and Trust Company.

The dedication will be held in front of the library on Main Street at 12:15 p.m., with the luncheon to follow.

Related activities begin at 10 a.m. and will be held in the bank, on the street and in the library.

Hungry Band Members Offend Hosts' Ears

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I hired a six-piece band for our daughter's wedding reception. Naturally we expected to offer refreshments to the band, but we didn't plan on feeding their wives, girlfriends and teen-aged children. (I counted 15 extra!)

We had a very expensive catered affair for which we were charged by the head. When we saw all these extra people heading for the buffet table, we asked them to please leave as we had ordered only enough food and liquor for the invited guests. One of the band members got upset and left!

A spokesman for the band informed me later that the musicians always take their wives, girlfriends and kids along, and we should have ordered extra refreshments for them! Was he kidding? Or is an apology in order on our part?

TORQUED IN TORONTO

DEAR TORQUED: According to a spokesperson for Musicians Union Local 47 in Los Angeles, unless the contract specified that their families should be fed as part of the agreement, the band members had no right to bring their wives, girlfriends and children. In fact, the host and hostess were under no obligation to feed the band members unless it was agreed in the contract.

DEAR ABBY: I've been dating a very attractive fellow for a couple of months, but something is wrong. I feel a certain "distance" between us. When we kiss, nothing happens. (For him.) He seems to be going through the motions, but he doesn't react like he's feeling anything.

I have a genuine interest in him, but this lack of reaction on his part bothers me. When I asked him about it, he said he was getting over a broken heart and couldn't really get "close" now.

OK, I accepted that and didn't get my hopes up. But I have another theory. I think he is a "closet gay" who is trying to go straight but is having difficulty. I don't want to date him anymore but don't know how to break it off without lying to him.

Should I tell him about my suspicions and give him a chance to tell me the truth? Of course, I could be wrong, but I strongly suspect I'm right.

JANE (NOT MY REAL NAME)

DEAR JANE: If you don't want to see him anymore, tell him so, but don't tell him of your "theory." To suggest that he is gay - even if you are correct - would be presumptuous and prying.

DEAR ABBY: I don't know where to turn. My daughter just turned 11, and she tells the most outlandish lies for no reason at all. She told her teacher at school that I hit her on the head with a lead pipe, which is absolutely untrue! (I don't even have a lead pipe!) She tells the neighbors that she is hungry because there is never enough food in the house. Not true! There is always plenty of food here, and she eats well. These are only a few of the lies this child has told that I have heard about. Lord only knows what other lies she's told!

Please tell me what to do. Punishing her doesn't seem to help. She is not a stupid child, and she knows wrong from right.

END OF MY ROPE

DEAR END: Your child's lying is a bid for attention. It could also be symptomatic of a deeper emotional problem. She needs to see a specialist who counsels children. If there is such counseling at her school, please take advantage of it. If not, talk to your pediatrician. The child needs help.

DEAR ABBY: Should the mother of an illegitimate child send out birth announcements? I am the great-grandfather. Sign this...

CURIOUS OKIE

DEAR CURIOUS: She should if she's proud to make the announcement. And by the way, there are no "illegitimate children," only "illegitimate parents."

Collection Of Americana Now In Lifestyle Museum

By MARK D. FRANK
ROCHESTER, N.Y. (UPI) - A lifestyle museum that was 10 years in the making opened this week in downtown Rochester.

The Margaret Woodbury Strong Museum is named for the only child of a well-heeled buggy whip manufacturer. It occupies a dramatic, three-story, $15 million contemporary building on a 13-acre site.

Director Herman J. "Jerry" Swinney, who will retire immediately after the opening, expects "the world will beat a path to our door."

The museum exhibits cover American culture and popular taste from 1820 to 1930, when the nation was transformed from a land of isolated farms, villages and coastal cities into an urbanized industrial nation.

Because of Mrs. Strong's propensity for collecting dolls - she had more than 27,000 when she died in 1969 - many people think the museum houses merely a collection of dolls.

"The dolls are only the beginning," Swinney said. "Mrs. Strong always gave the impression that she collected trivia but there were substantial things that she didn't call attention to."

Still, Swinney calls the doll collection one of the Western World's greatest, although dolls make up only about 7 percent of the exhibit.

Museum officials had access to 300,000 articles from Mrs. Strong's collection, which she began during childhood trips abroad with her parents.

The young Margaret toted a small bag for her dolls and toys. She was permitted to add objects to the bag and soon realized the smaller the items, the more she could cram in.

"She did not collect furniture," Swinney said, "but she collected everything else. We dismissed her collection of seashells and mineral specimens and had to cull the glass paperweights."

Swinney said Mrs. Strong's dolls, dollhouses, toys, miniatures, trade cards, books, valentines and other objects offered insights into the lives, attitudes, values, tastes and status of 19th century Americans.

They also reflected marketplace growth and shifts in technology, advertising credit and the distribution of goods since the beginning of the Industrial Revolution, he said.

Some acquisitions were added to fill in gaps, he said.

The four inaugural exhibits include a look at the nation's growth from isolated farms to the industrialized society of the 1920s. Among the eye-catching items are a mailwagon, wine jugs used by Chinese railroad workers and a cigar store Indian.

The second exhibit, covering household furnishings, 1820-1929, focuses on the form and design of objects Americans chose for their homes during the century of industrialization. Featured are neo-classical furnishings, the use of patriotism in household items and the evolution from Greek Revival up the line.

A third exhibit deals with the everyday life of urban, middle class women who lived in the northeastern United States from 1870-1910. Special emphasis is placed on marriage and motherhood, the woman's role in managing a home and family and the outside interests then open to them.

The fourth exhibit, "Yesterday's Playthings," is sure to delight children. It includes dolls, some from as early as 1776, dollhouses, fire pumps, models of warships, and more.

Most of Mrs. Strong's doll collection is shown in 98 cases on the second floor. It includes Barbie dolls, Kewpie dolls, Teddy Roosevelt dolls and a Princess Grace doll. Another 217 display cases contain "study collections" - china, vases, glassware, silver, pottery, toys, Oriental art, incense burners, military equipment and walking canes.

Dr. Blinson Gives Talk

Dr. Delma Blinson was speaker at the meeting of the Greenville Woman's Club held Friday at the club building. He is superintendent of Greenville City Schools.

"Coterminous Boundaries" was his topic and he stressed the need for Greenville city boundaries and the Greenville City School's district boundaries to coincide.

Mrs. James Harrigan, president, conducted the business meeting and announced the District 15 meeting will be held Oct. 26 in Creswell.

Jeanette Clapp told of plans for a benefit bridge Wednesday starting at 1 p.m. The cost is $10 per table. Table reservations may be made with Helen Liles, 752-9210, or Barbara Hall, 756-6353.

Guests for the meeting were Rachel Harton, Tottie McKnight and Jean Davanzo.

Jessie Little and Lila Murphy were meeting hostesses.

Travel Companies Working To Aid Tourism Decline

By DON WATERS
Associated Press Writer
LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) - Faced with the first drop in foreign tourism to the United States in more than two decades, American travel companies are trying to attract business with inexpensive deals.

That picture emerged last week as some 1,000 tour packagers and travel agents from nearly 60 nations gathered in this resort city to meet with representatives of 625 U.S. tourism-related businesses and promotion agencies from state and local governments.

Although it will take several weeks to compile the figures, officials of the Travel Industry Association of America, sponsor of the 14th annual "Discover America International Pow Wow," said it is likely that contracts worth up to $600 million for 1983 and 1984 were negotiated.

This would mark a 10 percent increase from the 1981 figure, but all of that increase could be attributed to a rise in the dollar's value against other major currencies and the effects of inflation. Thus, there may be fewer actual contracts than last year.

To combat that, suppliers were offering cheaper travel packages.

For instance, William D. Slattery, a vice president of Trans World Airlines, said his carrier came up overnight with a special fare for overseas travelers to the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles - 15 percent above the 1982 peak-season price - after being approached by foreign travel agents at the convention.

According to government and industry statistics, the United States last year attracted 23 million international visitors - nearly two-thirds of them from Canada and Mexico - who spent $14.5 billion and directly or indirectly provided jobs for 700,000 Americans.

But for the first time since the government began keeping those statistics in 1961, the first six months of 1982 showed a downturn in foreign visitors, as arrivals slumped 6 percent from a year earlier.

Japan was one of the few bright spots, posting a 5 percent increase in tourism. Fritz Schmitz, who directs the Commerce Department's Travel and Tourism Administration office in Tokyo, said the Japanese appear to be staying closer to home when they venture into U.S.

territory, visiting Hawaii, Guam and the Northern Mariana Islands more and the mainland less.

Peter Bohlen, Schmitz's counterpart in Frankfurt, said Germans have "become much more conservative in their expenditures" because of that nation's economic problems and are taking somewhat shorter vacations.

The Travel and Tourism Administration was created last October after years of effort by industry lobbyists and the large congressional Tourism Caucus. However, the Reagan administration, rather than increasing spending from the current $7.6 million to $10 million, as its advocates want, is seeking a cut to $5 million.

Two other government issues that have been pressed by the travel industry - the waiver of visas for most foreign tourists and faster Customs clearances at U.S. airports - have shown increased movement in Washington.

If the industry had its way, such procedures would resemble the Western European model.

American citizens traveling to many points in Europe need only a passport for admittance. Once at the foreign airport terminal, they pass through either a "green line" if they believe they have nothing to declare or a "red line" if they are carrying items subject to inspection. A spot check on the green line is designed to keep them honest.

In legislation that makes a thorough overhaul in U.S. immigration laws, the Senate authorized a three-year experiment under which visitors from eight nations with visa-rejection rates of less than 2 percent would not be required to obtain visas. The State Department would choose the countries.

A similar program is included in the House Judiciary Committee's version of the immigration bill, but a final measure may not be enacted this year because Congress is scheduled to adjourn soon.

Law enforcement agencies and some members of Congress have resisted the visa and inspection changes for fear that terrorists or drug couriers could slip into the country more easily.

Eugene Mach, the Customs Service's assistant commissioner for inspection and control, told reporters his agency is trying a variety of approaches to make it easier to get passengers out of airports sooner, including the "green line-red line" in Houston and Chicago and a one-stop, Customs-Immigration-Agriculture check at some others.

But Mach indicated that arriving passengers at the busiest U.S. airports should be prepared to remain patient even with the streamlining. He said Customs' goal is to reduce waiting and processing time to less than an hour.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Americans don't make a move anymore without checking first with research rats.

If coffee makes those little suckers jittery, we stop drinking it.

If they feel better when they jog, we start to run.

If loud noises make them sterile, we turn our radios down.

I find myself reading every scrap of research I can on them. After all, with their affinity for paralleling human biology, they are shaping my entire life.

The other day, I read how a drug used in the treatment of high blood pressure was injected into a rat who was "severely depressed" and lo and behold, his stress disappeared.

I must have reread that article three times before I realized what was bothering me. Then it hit. How in the world can you tell when a rat is depressed?

Does he schlepp around the cage all day in his bathrobe, watching television and refusing to shave? Does he let the kids run over his tail with their bicycles and never suggest they play outside? Do you tell him he's going to have steamed broccoli with boiled onions for dinner and he says, "I'm not hungry"? (People who don't eat have to be severely depressed.)

Maybe it's because I'm a non-medical person, but I honestly can't tell when animals are happy or sad. I knew our dog and our kids were happy when their noses were wet and cold, but beyond that I couldn't venture a guess.

It got me to thinking. You don't suppose all this rat research has been a hoax, do you? Is it possible there never was a rat who wore lipstick and licked his lips and red dye No. 2 was responsible for making him sick? Is there a possibility a teenage rat never went to all those rock concerts and went deaf? What if a rat didn't make a decision to drink soda with saccharine and die thin?

My husband came by as I put the article down. "Do you think research rats could get

Appraisal Day Announced

CHAPEL HILL — Antique appraisal day will be held Oct. 23 here at the Chapel Hill Community Center. It is being sponsored by the Chapel Hill Preservation Society.

All types of antiques may be brought for verbal appraisal by representatives of Christie's, a branch of the London auction house, Christie, Manson and Woods International. Photographs will be acceptable for items too large to carry.

Heading the group of appraisers will be director and senior vice president in charge of museums and special collections, Perry Rathbone.

Accompanying Rathbone will be Jeanne Vibert, Kathleen Harwood and Sarah Kutus.

The event will be held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Marriage Announced

Mrs. William Montgomery and Jimmy Hathaway announce the marriage of their aunt, Kathleen C. Cox, to Johnnie E. Godley on Oct. 8 at eight o'clock. The Rev. depressed?" I asked.
"Sure," he said. "It happens all the time."
I was still suspicious. "What would they have to get depressed about?"
"How would you like to be transferred from the Alcohol and Sex Research division to the top ten disease unit?"

Designing Woman: Why Her Handbags Can Cost $2,000

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Senior Editor
NEW YORK (UPI) — Judith Leiber ranks as the number one bag lady in the nation. Handbag lady, that is.

She's a designer who caters to the affluent, and many prominent women including Nancy Reagan are her customers. Some think nothing of paying $3,000 for an alligator travel bag or $2,000 for a hand-beaded evening purse.

"Look, there's a reason for my price tags," Mrs. Leiber said, as she showed a $2,000 rhinestone studded metal box evening bag. "There are 8,000 to 9,000 tiny stones, hand cut crystals from Austria, all put on by hand."

The Hungarian-born designer manufactures nothing but handbags and belts, the latter equally crafted, but less expensive.

You can pick up a silver-plated, three-row stretch belt with antique-like clasp inlaid with simulated black diamonds and two onyx stones for $260. Or, there's a leather belt with a 1920s-inspired buckle of simulated black diamonds and semi-precious stones to harmonize with the belt color, only $215.

Mrs. Leiber's designs, about 100 each year, are found only at the finest stores and specialty shops in the country. Understandably so, at those prices.

She said the recession hasn't hurt her multimillion-dollar business one whit.

"Instead, there seems to be a resurgent demand for quality," she said in an interview. "More Americans are leaning to the European habit of buying less, but better."

"After all, if an elegant woman pays $5,000 for a (James) Galanos gown, she can afford a $2,000 evening bag. These things endure."

Certainly it's built an enduring business for Mrs. Leiber and her husband, Gerson Leiber, an artist. She is president of the family-owned firm and he is secretary-treasurer. The volume is in the millions annually. She said she doesn't talk about actual figures — but "it has taken time."

She has picked up several designer awards along the way, including a special Coty American Fashion Critics' award in 1973.

Judith Leiber was born in Budapest and learned her trade by doing. She said she was the first woman accepted as an apprentice in the Hungarian Guild handbag system. She rose in the prescribed steps to journeyman and then to her master's book.

About the only clue she can find for her choice of career is the fact that her grandparents had a millinery factory in Vienna.

The designer came to America shortly after World War II as a GI bride. She met her husband while he was on duty in the U.S. Signal Corps with the Allied Control Commission.

Her first job was as designer and sample maker in the handbag industry. Nearly 20 years ago, she launched her own business and remembered that the first success was a gold-plated chateleine evening bag — a tiny pouch shape hanging from a gold chain.

But it isn't even in the shop. "They say you should save one of every design," Mrs. Leiber laughed. "If I did, I'd need a warehouse."

As it is, her showroom and factory are lodged in a vast loft just a block from the Empire State Building.

The elegant showroom is all pale beige walls and carpets with several of her husband's paintings on the walls and antique armoires used to display handbag samples.

In the adjoining, brightly-lit factory, about 75 craftsmen and women sit cutting, stitching, gluing and decorating. "Some of my people are generations in the craft," she said, "but most I've trained. Unfortunately, the craftsmen in Europe are a dying breed."

"I've not branched out into other things — shoes, luggage, perfumes or the like — because I want to do things that stand on their own and this way I can control.

"I suppose that's why my prices sound high. I was trained to use only the best materials and workmanship. That one handbag — she picked up a sunray-seamed envelope shape — has 80 to 100 parts, all hand done."

Materials come from all over the world. A tannery in Switzerland does the initial processing.

"The alligator handbag has come back, because it is an elegant material and the alligator no longer is an endangered species in the United States or New Guinea.

"We get ostrich from a farm in South Africa; they are not endangered. Snake-skins come from India and Indonesia, lizard from Java and Africa ... we're sort of a little United Nations operation."

Mrs. Leiber ticked off names of some of the owners of Leiber designs: Barbara Sinatra, Jacqueline Onassis, Pat (Mrs. William) Buckley, Ann Miller, Claire Trevor, Rosemary Stack, Rosalynn Carter, Pat Nixon, Lady Bird Johnson, Mami Eisenhower, Nancy Reagan.

"I hope to keep collecting first ladies," said Mrs. Leiber.

COOKING IS FUN!

STUFFED CABBAGE
It's a zesty dish.

2-pound head green cabbage
1 pound spicy pork sausage meat
1 1/2 cups cooked rice
1 tablespoon finely grated onion (pulp and juice)
1/4 cup minced parsley

Remove any open leaves from cabbage; cover cabbage with boiling water and boil 15 minutes; drain well, top side down. Mix together sausage, rice, onion and parsley. Open all leaves from center of cabbage without removing core. Beginning at the center of the cabbage, plaster the sausage mixture over the inside of the leaves, folding them back as you do so; fold last bottom leaves toward top to make compact. Cook core side down in a solid bottom steamer, tightly covered, over boiling water until cabbage is tender — 1 hour. Turn out onto steamer lid to drain; remove liquid; turn back onto serving plate. Makes 6 servings.

BACON TROUT
We used commercially frozen trout but fishermen may have their own catch.

8 thick (1/4-inch) slices bacon
1/4 cup (about) fine dry bread crumbs
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
Four 5-ounce frozen (dressed but not boned) rainbow trout, thawed

In a 12-inch skillet gently cook bacon until crisp; drain on paper toweling and keep warm. Pour bacon fat and drippings into a fine-mesh strainer to drain; discard residue; if necessary add enough salad oil to bacon fat to make 1-3rd cup; reserve. On wax paper stir together bread crumbs, salt and pepper; coat trout with mixture. Heat reserved bacon fat (or bacon fat and oil) in the clean dry skillet; add trout and fry over moderate heat, turning once, until golden and opaque through — about 5 minutes on each side. Serve at once with bacon. Makes 4 servings.

Now Face The Problem

It was hardly a surprise, but unemployment in September reached 10.1 percent, the first time there had been double digit unemployment since the 1930s.

In this election year both political parties had been preparing us for the event for some time. The Democrats have been emphasizing the unemployment rate under the Republican administration of Ronald Reagan. The president, himself, has been on the attack blaming the "big spenders", meaning the Democrats, for the economic woes the country faces today.

Thus on the day the double digit figures were announced most of us were reasonably well informed that the unemployment situation was dismal.

The figures mean that 11.3 million people are out of work in this country. It is estimated there are 1.6 million more who have given up on finding jobs and are no longer included in the official figures.

The large numbers of unemployed in this country is a tragic situation. It is a personal trauma for the millions who have been laid off from productive jobs and may soon find their unemployment benefits running out. The situation has great social implications. Unemployed workers become disaffected. Those who are chronically unemployed can turn to crime with all its cost to the nation. Children suffer in homes where one or both parents are unemployed.

The politicians, of course, have to blame each other and perhaps there is blame enough to go around. Blame, however, is far less important than creating the jobs to put those who want to work back to being productive. Once our leaders finish their finger pointing perhaps they can concentrate on the problem.

Building Site Follows Plans

Controversy has erupted on the East Carolina University campus concerning the location of a proposed major classroom facility.

Planning money for the facility was appropriated in the current biennial budget. University officials are hoping that the construction funds will be included in the 1983-85 budget.

Opponents feel that the structure will infringe on the arboretum, destroy some trees and increase traffic in the area. They suggest a site near the library.

It was decided years ago, however, to group the instructional buildings in the central campus location. The site of the new classroom building conforms with this plan and it seems logical to proceed with the chosen location.

THIS AFTERNOON

A Different Story

By PAUL T. O'CONNOR

RALEIGH — This was to be the year that Republicans contested the age-old Democratic control of the Legislature. Fresh from big gains in federal races in 1980, GOP leaders boldly predicted that in 1982 they'd win the state conservative Democrats. At the time, their projections of future glory didn't appear totally unrealistic.

But talk to Republican leaders today and you'll hear a different story. "Maybe they'll gain a seat or two in the Senate. Maybe they'll be able to hold on to their share of the House. Those are optimistic predictions. (State GOP chairman Dave Flaherty still predicts big gains but his colleagues say he's just cheerleading.)

Democrats, on the other hand, are predicting that they'll roll back the 1980 Republican surge which gave the minority party a one-fifth share of each house.

For 58 House and 15 Senate seats, the winning party has already been decided because one party or the other hasn't fielded a complete ticket. Barring a remarkable write-in campaign somewhere or a Libertarian victory, Democrats are assured of 14 Senate seats and 53 House seats. Republicans have the lock on five House seats and one Senate seat.

Republicans have lowered their expectations because while they planned to be on the offensive this year, they'll actually be on the defensive — an odd position for a party which holds none of the executive or judicial offices in the state and only 20 percent of the Legislature.

Republicans had expected to attack the Democrats in 1982 with an issue they were sure would be as emotionally charged as the Panama Canal was in 1978 and 1980 — Gov. Jim Hunt's 3-cent tax increase. The tax increase is mentioned in the GOP's standard legislative brochure and some legislators are using it on the stump. But it really hasn't become an issue in this campaign. "That's not become a big issue anywhere," said one Republican legislator. "It's really a non-issue," said another.

There are two reasons the tax increase has been a political dud. First, the tax went up as gas prices plunged. So nobody really noticed it. Second, the Republicans had hoped their state party would bring the issue to TV with plenty of advertising cash. But practically all GOP money this year is going into congressional races. The best the GOP can do with the gas tax issue, several said, is counter punch Democrats who mention the federal increase in cigarette taxes.

So, instead of an offensive based on a gas tax increase, Republicans this year face the probability of being on the defensive regarding the economy. Even though the economy turns on federal policies, state Republicans could catch the blame if the economy gets worse in the next three weeks, GOP legislators said.

"For the whole Republican ticket, the big question is whether the economy is going to get better or get worse before election time. In any case (legislative) race...some people will decide on the basis of the economy and if the economy were to turn worse" those voters could make the difference, one GOP legislator said.

Of course, in many races, neither the economy nor the gas tax will be the difference. As U.S. House

SORT OF A LONG-ODDS SITUATION!

By JAMES KILPATRICK

They Can't Be Ignored

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department is wrestling these days with a problem as old as Socrates and as contemporary as a speed trap. As an abstract proposition, the laws of the land must be enforced. As a practical matter, the proposition defies easy application. The immediate issue involves young men who have not registered for a potential draft. What should the government do about them?

The Selective Service System says that roughly 8.5 million men affected by the registration law have dutifully signed up. Another 500,000 have not registered, but of those 500,000, about 100,000 are in the military reserves or the National Guard. There presumably is no problem as to them.

That leaves perhaps 400,000 young men in violation of the law. It is a reasonable surmise, predicated upon observed levels of public knowledge, that 300,000 of these men have failed because of simple ignorance rather than willful defiance. If their ignorance of the law can be established, and their willing registrations obtained, it would be a waste of judicial resources to take them to court.

Assuming these figures are more or less accurate, that still leaves about 100,000 prospective registrants who are in knowing, deliberate violation of the law. For them, it seems to me, there can be but one answer. This is to indict a thousand of them at a time, based upon random sampling, and to prosecute them just as violators of other laws are prosecuted. The government cannot ignore them. That way lies destruction of the rule of law on which our democratic freedoms depend.

In San Diego last week, one of the defiant ones, Benjamin H. Sasway, contended that the registration law is unconstitutional. The contention is frivolous. The Constitution expressly vests in Congress the power to raise armies and to provide a navy. It is inconceivable that the Supreme Court would invalidate so plain a manifestation of the delegated power.

Sasway also raised this defense — that he was the victim of selective, arbitrary and capricious prosecution. Of all the thousands of registrants, why had the government picked him? But there is a large body of law that supports the necessity of selective enforcement. Not all highway speeders can be arrested, but radar traps deter some of them. Prosecutors must be granted wide discretion. It is only common sense to go after the open and notorious violators who flaunt their own defiance and seek to provide a lawless example for others.

On the record of his own public statements, Sasway is such a violator. No religious convictions are involved. This 21-year-old simply opposes the registration law and abhors the foreign policies that led to the law's enactment. In a free society he certainly is entitled to his opinions, but it is absurd to suggest that he is entitled to pick and choose the laws he will obey.

True believers in "civil disobedience," unlike young Sasway, do not enter pleas of not guilty and hire lawyers to plot stratagems. Socrates took the hemlock. Martin Luther King put on his go-to-jail clothes before he led a protest march. It is the notion that the young resisters may violate law with impunity that is so offensive. In this regard, we may even admire a young ministerial student in Virginia, Enten Eller, who is prepared to go to prison rather than abide by the registration law. Eller's position is rooted in morality; Sasway's position has no roots at all.

The judge in San Diego, to his credit, refused to play Sasway's game of I-wanna-be-a-martyr. A punishment of five years' imprisonment and a $10,000 fine could have been imposed. The judge gave him 30 months in a minimum-security prison camp, under a provision that could release him in less than 10 months, and freed the defendant on

A New Aura In Germany

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Confidential word has been passed from conservative Chancellor Helmut Kohl to Secretary of State George Shultz that his new West German government no longer will play middle man between Washington and Moscow, as attempted by ousted Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and his leftwing political advisers.

Communicating outside diplomatic channels, senior officials in the new Kohl government also have signaled Shultz to expect "significant and specific efforts" dramatizing changes now in the works. The aim is to cleanse the relationship between the U.S. and its most important European partner that turned rancid during the last few of Schmidt's 13 years in power.

That lays the foundation for restoring health to the foundering Atlantic Alliance. Some formidable issues, such as pipeline sanctions, will not find immediate solutions. But the message sent to Shultz through American specialists in German affairs was clear: The psychology and atmospherics of the U.S.-German partnership will be transformed.

Quite apart from policy changes, purifying the mood of suspicion in Washington about secret West German machinations in Moscow would clear the political air. Schmidt himself was never the prime target of suspicion. It was Egon Bahr and other Social Democratic Party (SPD) operatives with close ties to SPD leader and former Chancellor Willy Brandt who aroused deep suspicions here with private visits to Moscow.

But Schmidt himself was provocative. Squeezed between his own pro-American policy and his party's runaway left wing (fueled by the explosive anti-nuclear peace movement), Schmidt sought political salvation by portraying himself as broker or middle man between Washington and Moscow. That undercut U.S. plans for nuclear rearmament of the North Atlantic treaty alliance (NATO) and President Reagan's START proposal for reducing U.S.-Soviet nuclear weapons. Last week's message to Kohl, West Germany will insist on full partnership with the U.S., but will not make private deals with the Russians that damage the "partnership" or undercut American policies.

Bonn's sudden change from socialist to conservative has not produced universal joy in the U.S. government. Some middle-level American Foreign Service officers, long attuned to the detentist policies of Schmidt, are fearful that the rightward swing in Bonn will strengthen Reagan's hard line on arms control. A Reagan administration official told us that is the only plausible explanation for a cable sent from the U.S. Embassy in Bonn to the State Department last week. It quoted an official in the new Kohl government as praising Eugene Rostow, U.S. arms control director, and ex-coriating "ultra-conservative critics" of Rostow in the U.S.

What made that message unique was its transmission as an "open" cable, not classified. That meant the sender wanted it leaked here as evidence that even the conservative Kohl government worries about hard-line Reaganites. The cable made no impact here.

The senior officials who sent direct word about Kohl's plans to Shultz reeked no concern about Reaganite intransigence. To the contrary, they stressed three targets for quick action by Kohl, all of which the Reagan administration repeatedly pressed on Schmidt without result:

Point No. 1: The Kohl government will spend up to half a billion dollars on long-delayed improvements to U.S. military installations in West Germany, moving barracks and military stores closer to the front.

Point No. 2: Schmidt's buckling under to anti-Turkey human rights pressures from his left wing will be reversed and German help in the modernization of Turkey's army will be resumed. The Reagan administration wants to strengthen Turkey's eastern approaches

Strength For Today

THE WORD IS "GO"
A glance into a concordance of the Bible reveals a frequent use of the word "go" in the New Testament. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." "Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." "Go and do thou likewise." "I go to prepare a place for you."

These statements emphasize that Christianity is a religion of action. Jesus and his disciples were constantly moving about the country, preaching, teaching, healing, helping. People today who criticize the church are almost never those who are active in Christian work. So if you don't get much out of religion, try putting more into it, especially a little more "go." Action may change the whole aspect of religion for you. There are a thousand deeds in any Christian community waiting for a good Christian to do them. Christian faith began with One who was always doing. "Go thou and do likewise!" — Elisha Douglass

Be Careful; Heaters Can Kill

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer
Warning: The heater you buy to save money on your fuel bills this winter could kill you if you're not careful about the way you use it.

Millions of Americans have turned to auxiliary heaters to supplement or partially replace central heating systems as the price of traditional fuels like oil and natural gas has risen. And officials say improper use of the devices is responsible for a growing number of fires, deaths and injuries.

During the late 1970s, for example, the popularity of wood-burning stoves soared. Figures from the Federal Trade Commission show sales went from 200,000 in 1972 to 1.2 million in 1979.

At the same time, according to Bea Harwood of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, the number of fires increased "dramatically," almost doubling since 1978. She said that in 1980, the latest year for which complete figures are available, there were 112,000 fires caused by heaters using solid fuel like wood; there were 350 deaths and 2,800 injuries.

William Overby of the U.S. Fire Administration said the number of fires in one- and two-family dwellings would have declined in recent years "had there not been an increase in the number of fires that are caused by solid-fuel heating devices such as wood-burning stoves and fireplace inserts and fireplaces."

Kerosene heaters now have joined the stoves on the list of best-sellers; the product safety commission says sales rose from 3,400 in 1974 to 3 million in 1981.

Overby said the increased use — or misuse — of kerosene heaters probably will lead to more fires. "I would expect that during this coming heating season and perhaps the next one we would see an increase in the number of fires and possibly deaths," he said.

Many states and some local governments used to ban the use of kerosene heaters because of safety problems with early models, Overby said. Most of those bans have been rescinded as standards have improved. "The current generation (of kerosene heaters) ... are up to standard and the standards are good," Overby said. "It's not so much the way the devices are manufactured as the way people use them."

Before you select a heater, make sure it meets the standards set by one of the national testing organizations like Underwriters Laboratory; if it doesn't have a label indicating it has been approved, don't buy it.

There are several basic rules for the safe use of kerosene heaters:

—Use the proper fuel. "Don't do dumb things like using gasoline as a substitute," said Overby. Stan Worth, a housing technology specialist for the Cornell University Extension Service, said consumers should look for fresh, water-clear, high-quality kerosene identified as ASTM 1-K; do not use kerosene intended for other purposes like diesel engines.

—Refuel the heater properly. Follow the manufacturer's instructions carefully. Store your kerosene outside in a previously unused container; kerosene and other liquids don't mix.

—Make sure you have adequate ventilation. Worth says the air flow through cracks around windows and doors generally provides enough ventilation. People who have sealed up all the cracks in past energy-conservation efforts will have to open a window to get enough air, however. That means kerosene heaters may not be practical in well-sealed, well-insulated homes since the heat they produce may be lost in the effort to get proper ventilation. (Similar ventilation problems can occur with wood-burning stoves.)

—Keep heaters — all kinds — away from things that can catch fire like furniture or drapes. In general, the heater should be at least three feet from anything that will burn and it should be set up so that children and pets are unlikely to bump into it. Do not use kerosene heaters in rooms or areas where you store flammable liquids.

Overby has a final word of advice for anyone buying a space heater: "Buy a smoke detector." The extra few dollars could save your life.

Aides Say Reagan Focus On Economic Successes

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — With unemployment at a record level, President Reagan will focus almost entirely on the successful aspects of his economic program in his campaign efforts over the next three weeks, aides say.

In addition, they say he will stress a traditional campaign theme before the Nov. 2 elections — turning out the Republican vote.

After a long weekend on the West Coast, Reagan arrived in Dallas this afternoon for a 1½-hour stop in Irving, Texas, before his return to Washington. At the stop near Dallas, Reagan was to campaign for Republican Gov. William Clements, running for re-election, and for Rep. Jim Collins, the GOP Senate candidate.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the president will use the political event there to draw attention to evidence of success in battling the nation's economic problems.

Although September unemployment figures released on Friday showed the nation's jobless rate climbing to a 42-year high of 10.1 percent, White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III said he does not think the announcement of the new statistics will be a "dramatic event or watershed event" in the campaign.

The jobless rate was 9.8 percent in August, and 7.4 percent when Reagan took office.

Citing success in reducing inflation and interest rates, Baker said Sunday on ABC-TV's "This Week" program that "the administration has made dramatic progress on two of those problems, and, given time, there will be dramatic progress on unemployment."

"The people who are working, the 99 million plus Americans, are a lot better off, they have a lot more purchasing power," he said. "Those people are not going to be affected because the unemployment rate increased," he said.

Meanwhile, Reagan is planning to address to the nation from the Oval Office Wednesday night. Aides are thinking about the political benefits of signing — before the television audience — a job training bill that the administration is trying to use to answer critics of the rising unemployment rate.

One senior presidential aide said the address was scheduled "because the president has not gone to the public to talk about the economy for some time."

Ed Rollins, Reagan's assistant for political affairs, said during the next three weeks, "The president will try and take his story (about the economy) to the American people. The candidates will have to do the same thing."

As Election Day draws closer, the president will also focus on getting voters to the polls. "There is just not quite the enthusiasm as there is in a presidential campaign," Rollins said. "It's crucial for us to get our voters to turn out."

Reagan's plans for the Texas campaign stop were typical of those he has been making on behalf of Republican candidates, primarily those running for the Senate, since early September.

Reagan will attend a private reception for Collins to which about 200 people have been invited. The same people are expected to attend a $1,000-a-person Collins' fund-raising dinner later this month.

In addition, 2,000 people were expected by White House aides to take part in a public rally for Clements and Collins at an insurance company training facility owned by Collins.

In Texas, unemployment and other effects of the recession, which had been delayed in its impact, are expected to be issues in a debate tonight between Clements, a Republican, and Democrat Mark White, the governor's challenger.

Terence Travaland, of the Texas Employment Commission, described as "a rather remarkable increase" the most recent rise in statewide unemployment — to 8.4 percent, the highest since such figures were first compiled for Texas 12 years ago.

A variety of factors have combined to bring the national recession home to Texas: the state's energy-related economy can no longer handle the influx of workers searching for jobs after finding no luck in the North; the electronics industry has slumped; low prices and bad weather have hurt the farm economy, and the national slump in home building has hurt the local timber industry.

Republican strategists requesting anonymity say that Collins is fighting an uphill battle over Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a Democrat seeking a third term. "You wouldn't predict a victory today," said one political aide holding out just slight hope that Collins could close in on the senator.

But the gubernatorial race is "neck-and-neck," he said. It has attracted a greater share of attention in the state, thus making Collins' task of winning statewide recognition even harder.

When the president returns to Washington tonight, he will have about eight days of campaign time remaining on his schedule before the Nov. 2 election. On this latest trip, Reagan make a political visit to Nevada Thursday before going to California where he met with the president-elect of Mexico before spending the weekend at his ranch.

Electrical Work Is Underway At Winterville

By TOMMY FORREST
Reflector Staff Writer

WINTERVILLE — Alderman Bobby Crawford reported to the Winterville Town Board last night on the electrical system improvements that have been undertaken by the town in order to use electricity from Greenville and Carolina Power & Light Company.

Crawford said in his report Lewis Dibble, of Dibble and Associates was contracted for the installation of the new line. The line was expected to be ready by the middle of this month, but some parts needed were lost in shipment and had to be reordered. The change will be made as soon as possible, Crawford noted.

Town advisor Carl Dean reported the town had contacted the Soil Conservation Service concerning the Langston ditch project. Dean said the ditch, which is to be located north of the Robinson School, is needed to drain parts of Weathington and Robinson Heights. The project will cost approximately $8,600. The board took no action, pending agreements with landowners in the area.

Alderman Leland Tucker said a noise problem at the Depot Grill had been taken care of and there have been no reports since the first incident.

Cecil Mizelle, of Farley, Prescott, Mizelle & Co., presented the audit report saying the town had made good use of investments and the town is in better shape than last year. The accountant read over parts of the 32-page report answering questions from board members.

The board approved the attachment of water lines to the town water system for Johnnie Weathington, Alex Brann and Harry Avery, all outside the town limits. The work and materials would be at the owners' expense.

In further business, the board approved a resolution from the North Carolina League of Municipalities concerning the constitutional amendment referendum on tax increment financing.

The board adopted the resolution.

The board also proclaimed October 16, as Rescue Squad Day and approved the Winterville Rescue Squad's request for permission to sell drinks and concessions, and hold a street dance in front of the town hall.

Protesters In Raleigh Today

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A group of PCB protesters opposed to the state's PCB landfill in Warren County was supposed to arrive in Raleigh today for a noon rally and demonstration in front of the state Capitol.

The marchers, who left Warren County Saturday, were reported to be within 10 miles of Raleigh Monday afternoon. Some of the marchers slept in churches Monday night, while others drove home to Warren County to prepare for today's rally.

The rally today is the latest in almost-daily demonstrations concerning the dump, which opened almost four weeks ago to a chorus of protests from citizens who claim the state located the landfill in Warren County because it has a large black population.

Between 50 and 100 marchers reached the Franklin County line Saturday after leaving from Afton, site of the landfill. They marched 14 miles Monday on U.S. 401 to Rolesville and proceeded to within 10 miles of Raleigh.

The Rev. Leon White, one of the protest organizers, repeated Monday his claim that racism was behind the decision to put the landfill in Afton. White accused the state of subjecting black citizens to scientific experimentation.

"To put PCB in the heart of a predominantly black community was a racist decision regardless of what others may maintain," he said.

Gov. Jim Hunt met with protesters last week and told them that the state will continue to monitor the area for health hazards. But White said residents should set up their own monitoring system — just to be safe.

bail to press his appeal. Martyrs should bear heavier burdens.

For the record, I was lukewarm to the registration law when the law was passed as a response to the Soviets' invasion of Afghanistan. It seemed a feeble gesture, for one thing, and I shared the doubts expressed in Congress that little would be gained in preparedness by registration for an actual draft that may never come. Never mind. The law passed. Fairly, systematically, judiciously, it now must be enforced.

Speaker Tip O'Neill astutely observed recently, all politics are local politics and most legislative races would certainly seem to fit his theory. to Iran to block any Soviet move toward the Persian Gulf.

Point No. 3: The anti-U.S. propaganda line preached by the left wing of the SPD will be transformed by the Kohl government from "Why doesn't the U.S. do something for peace?" to "Why doesn't the Soviet Union do something for peace?" Trifling though it seems, this change could exert profound impact in a country that, like West Germany, lives on television and radio.

This change from skeptical ally to full partner of the U.S. in the East-West struggle is not revolutionary. But in its evolution, both Kohl and the Reagan administration see new strength for persevering against left-wing agitation next year over deployment of nuclear missiles to protect the West.

The Forecast For Wednesday, October 13 ● Low Temperatures

Fronts: Cold Warm Occluded Stationary

WEATHER FORECAST — The National Weather Service forecasts showers for Wednesday from Texas to the mid-Atlantic, and for the Northeast. The West will be sunny. Most areas will be cooler. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
More rain is on the way today.

Skies will be cloudy across the state today. In the west there was some morning fog, and that should be followed late today with light drizzle and an occasional rainshower.

Occasional rain will spread from west to east across the state tonight and Wednesday. The rain may become heavy at times in western sections of the state late tonight and Wednesday. High temperatures today and Wednesday will range from the 60s in the west to the low and mid-70s at the coast.

Tonight's lows will be from the 50s in the west to the low 60s in the east. Winds over inland areas will be light.

Along the coast, winds at 10-15 knots per hour will be northeasterly today, becoming southeasterly tonight. On Wednesday the winds will assume a more southerly direction.

Suspect Still Being Sought

A 24-year-old Route 1, Ayden man was still being sought today by the Pitt County Sheriff's Department on charges levied after two sisters were wounded in a Saturday morning shooting incident.

Sheriff Ralph Tyson said that authorities continued the search for Ivey Louis Conyers, for whom warrants were issued charging him with two counts of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, inflicting serious injury, one count of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, and one count of breaking and entering with intent to commit an assault.

Tyson said Kathy Marie Tyson, 19, and Vivian Tyson, 17, of Route 1, Greenville, suffered head wounds in the incident at their home. Both were transported to Pitt Memorial Hospital for treatment and were later released, he said.

The mother of the two girls, Mrs. Cassie Tyson, told deputies that she was threatened with a gun in the incident, which was reported at 8:11 a.m.

Rescue Day In Winterville

WINTERVILLE — The Winterville Rescue Squad will sponsor Winterville Rescue Day, Saturday, October 16, at the fire station in Winterville.

The competition will begin at 9 a.m. with contests in CPR, first-aid, and extrication techniques (removal of victims from a car). The day will also include an auction to be held at 7 p.m. and a street dance at 9 p.m. featuring the "Talk of the Town".

Seattle Mariners pitcher Gaylord Perry will also be on hand at 5:30 for autographs.

A spokesman for the event said teams from as far away as west of Raleigh have expressed an interest in attending.

THREE SISTERS' PLAYS
CHAPEL HILL — The previous announcement by the staff of the Playmakers Theater that "Star Crossed Lovers" would be presented in October is incorrect. The production currently playing at the Playmakers is a new English version of Chekhov's "Three Sisters," which will be presented Wednesday through Sunday this week with performances at 8 p.m. For more details or tickets call 962-1121.

Hull Of 'Mary Rose' Is Raised

By ANDREW WARSHAW
Associated Press Writer
PORTSMOUTH, England (AP) — Greeted by tooting car horns, flares and cheering crowds, the fragile, wooden hull of the Mary Rose, King Henry VIII's flagship, was back home today — 437 years after the warship sank while sailing into battle against the French.

In the climax of a three-year, $6.8 million salvage operation overseen by Prince Charles, the recovered starboard section was towed triumphantly back to Portsmouth harbor Monday night, the same place where the Mary Rose had sailed on its ill-fated voyage.

The recovery followed two days of tension as the hull was precariously lifted from its English Channel grave by a floating crane. On Sunday, one of four steel legs of the 56-ton lifting frame buckled and had to be cut away.

Charles, aboard the giant floating crane Tog Mor during the lift, said the frame's sudden slip at one point made him feel "slightly horrified. It left a nasty feeling in the tummy."

He is president of the Mary Rose Trust, which conducted the salvage operation.

The most sophisticated warship of its day, the Mary Rose will be moored on a buoy until Friday when the barge will move into a drydock and lay the wreckage down for thorough renovation alongside another famous flagship, the HMS Victory, warship of Lord Nelson, Britain's greatest naval hero.

Eventually, the Mary Rose and 17,000 artifacts reclaimed from it will be the centerpiece of a new maritime museum in a Portsmouth suburb. After four centuries in the thick mud of ocean floor, the 108-foot ship has been called a time capsule of life in Tudor times. Divers have recovered such things as cannons and longbows, combs and early medical equipment.

"It's a dream come true," said Margaret Rule, archaeological director of the Mary Rose Trust. She dived 900 times to the wreckage and was given a standing ovation by members of the recovery team when the barge pulled into harbor.

Car horns, flares and scores of cheering local townsfolk greeted the old oak hull as it arrived by barge in darkness, accompanied by a small fleet of support ships.

"There have been times when I thought the recovery was too long a shot and just despaired. But this is like seeing a long lost friend," she told reporters.

The 91-gun ship, named for Henry's sister, sank in the English Channel in an area bounded by Portsmouth harbor and the Isle of Wight on July 19, 1545, while on its way with 60 other English ships to battle the French off the Isle of Wight. The battle was inconclusive.

Whether it was hit by enemy fire or overcrowded, the Mary Rose sank, taking with it all but 40 of the 700 crew.

Henry was said to have watched horrified from nearby Southsea Castle as it sank. Chroniclers said screams of the victims, many clad in heavy armor, could be clearly heard across the water.

The wreck was finally located by Alexander McKee, a white-bearded, bespectacled writer, amateur diver and archeology buff, who painstakingly searched for clues in maps and charts, and underwater.

He was ridiculed for pursuing the impossible but proved his point when in 1970 he dived into the channel's murky depths and came up with a breech-loading gun.

"People thought I was crackers," McKee said as the ship rose from the water Monday. "It's a boyhood dream come true."

The lifting of the hull was originally scheduled for two weeks ago. But technical and weather problems forced postponements. Newspapers and commentators described the lifting of the Mary Rose as the world's most ambitious underwater archeological excavation.

Expect Record At State Fair

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Officials of the 1982 N.C. State Fair are depending on a traditional combination of entertainment, livestock shows and midway rides to attract record crowds this year.

The fair, scheduled Oct. 15-23, drew more than 643,000 spectators in 1981. "The fair is traditionally the best-attended event in the state because it appeals to people of all ages," said Arthur Pitzer, manager of the event.

"The fair has everything, livestock competition, rides, crafts and food — something for the whole family." The state fair was founded in October 1853 by the state Agricultural Society on a 16-acre tract near the state Capitol. Last year, the huge fair featured 13,255 exhibits from 3,172 exhibitors from the state's 100 counties.

The fair employs more than 650 people. This year's event, with a theme of "A Treasure of Pleasures," will feature entertainers such as country singer Ronnie Milsap and television star Tom Wopat of the "Dukes of Hazzard" show.

Midway rides, junior livestock displays, tractor pulls, chainsaw competition and nightly fireworks also are top attractions in this year's fair.

One of the most unusual exhibits will be the state Department of Public Instruction's education carousel. The display will be housed in a 100-foot geodesic dome.

BUNDTY TO SPEAK
Rep. Sam D. Bundy will speak to the Greene County Kiwanis Club Wednesday at 7 a.m. Friday he will attend a North Carolina State Board of Awards meeting in Raleigh.

Robert Mullen, deputy director of vocational education with public instruction, said the exhibit will show what jobs are available in agriculture and will demonstrate how they are performed.

"People entering the dome will be greeted by a very powerful multimedia show explaining the exhibit," Mullen said.

Another educational feature will be the state Department of Natural Resources and Community Development's outdoor living display that will show a variety of outdoor activities throughout North Carolina.

"When you see what all the fair has to offer, it's no wonder it attracts half-a-million people every year," said Glenn Mays of the state Division of Travel and Tourism. "Every year, the state fair offers more. This year looks like the best fair ever."

Evening Hours

The Eastern Carolina Family Practice Center is offering evening hour visits two nights a week, Tuesdays and Thursdays. Office hours on these two days will be from 8 a.m. until 8 p.m., with service on other weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Dr. James G. Jones, chairman of the Department of Family Medicine at the East Carolina University School of Medicine, says "We believe our new office hours will better serve the citizens in Greenville and Pitt County. There are many patients who work during the day and find it difficult to seek medical care at that time."

Jones said the center will also accept patients without appointments who require emergency care. He emphasized that patients with major trauma or life threatening emergencies should continue to use the Emergency Department at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Jones said the center will consider extending its Tuesday and Thursday hours to other weekday evenings and on weekends if the medical staff discovers it can more effectively meet the needs of the community and if the community is responsive to the evening hours schedule.

The Family Practice Center, located on Moye Boulevard adjacent to Pitt Memorial Hospital, is operated by the medical school's Department of Family Medicine.

SAVE THE LIGHTHOUSE — Workers last week put the finishing touches on a wall of sandbags around the base of the historic Cape Hatteras Lighthouse. The work, financed by contributions, is part of a project to save the historic structure from destruction by the waters of the Atlantic Ocean. John F. Minges, chairman of the Save Cape Hatteras Lighthouse Committee in Pitt County, said Pitt is one of the top 25 counties in the state in the percentage of its county goal.

He noted that $11,452 or 71.5 percent of the $16,000 goal set for Pitt has been collected. Donations from Pitt residents are part of nearly $300,000 that has been raised toward a statewide goal of $1 million to help fund emergency work at the lighthouse. The sandbag project cost $10,000. A $165,000 project to place 5,500 units of artificial seaweed, known as Seascap, in the surf in hopes of building up the beach in front of the lighthouse is scheduled to begin this week.

Protesting Higher School Standards

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Critics of tougher academic requirements that kept more than 1,000 students from being promoted this fall have staged a weeklong sit-in at school board offices, charging the standards are racist.

But Superintendent Thomas Ingram Jr. said Monday the policy is intended to help the district provide quality education.

"My position is that it's a penalty to the children if they are promoted to a grade level we know it's impossible for them to achieve," he said.

"Our school system, just as other school systems in Alabama, has engaged in the practice of social promotion," he added. "We feel it has become a detriment to the children's educational achievement."

Six demonstrators seeking a one-year delay in enforcement of the standards have maintained an around-the-clock vigil at the school board offices since Oct. 5.

"Everybody is in good spirits," said one protester, Charles Steele, as the vigil continued Monday. "We're going to be here until the problem is resolved."

The new policy, adopted last spring, forces students in elementary and middle school to meet minimum standards in reading, writing and mathematics before they can be promoted to the next grade.

As a result, 1,072 pupils — one tenth of the school system's 10,000 students — were held back last year. Many of the students are black.

Critics said black children had received inferior instruction for years, and it wasn't fair to judge them by tougher standards. The protesters also argued the policy was instituted just before the end of the school year, failing to give parents or teachers enough time to prepare the students.

The protest began when five local and national officials of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and one parent began a sit-in at the building, but it heated up Friday when the school board cut off the six from other demonstrators.

The demonstrators can leave the building at any time, but supporters cannot come inside to bring them additional food or clothing, Ingram said. They will not be allowed back inside once they leave.

The Rev. Joseph Lowery, head of the Atlanta-based SCLC, spoke at a Sunday night church rally in support of the protesters.

"We are disturbed, distressed and determined," Lowery said. "This is an assault not only on the black community but on public education."

Area Students Interviewed

Two dozen Greenville and Pitt County high school seniors have been named by the county's four high schools as candidates to be interviewed by the Morehead Scholarship Committee on October 26.

From this group, the committee will select three students to compete in the district level of the competition to be held at a later date in Williamston.

Students and the schools they attend are:

- J. H. Rose High School — Gregory J. Davis, Mahlon A. Dickens, John T. Little, Angela M. Michel, Janet G. Mizelle, and Charlie S. Wille.
- North Pitt High School — Keith E. Coltrain, David L. Davenport, Judson L. Joyner, and Thomas W. Whitehurst.

• Farmville Central High School — Donna L. Costner, David G. Hobgood, Melissa C. Owens, Michael C. Owens, and Lydia C. Worthington.

• D. H. Conley High School — Paul S.D. Braxton, Darlene Cannon, Amy K. Gibbs, Loretta D. Grantham, and Joseph T. Rouse.

• Ayden-Grifton High School — Barbara G. Nobles, Russell L. Tyndall, and David E. Webb.

Bank Fees May Return

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — It is just a matter of time before some banking services which presently are free will cost customers money, state banking officials say.

But some bank officers say they want to avoid bank fees for some services for as long as they can.

They responded to the recent announcement by North Carolina National Bank officials that effective next month NCNB will charge its customers for some services that are free now.

NCNB will charge $5 a year for the use of automatic teller machines and 25 cents for each time the customer checks his bank balance without making another transaction. The charge will not apply to transactions using Visa, Mastercard, Checkmate and World Card.

NCNB officials say they need to charge for those services because the charges are justified and part of a growing national trend among banks.

"The movement toward charges for various services is clear and ongoing and underlies a lot of what we are doing," said Ken Reynolds, vice president of marketing at NCNB.

Jim Brewer, executive vice president of Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., agreed that service fees are in the future — but he did not say how soon those fees would be put into effect at Wachovia.

"You can't go both ways — give away a lot of services and pay full-market rates," he said. "There is no profit left. Just how you get to that balance is something we all will be experimenting with over the next year or two or three."

Byron Hodnett, executive vice president at Northwestern Bank in North Wilkesboro, predicted that a year will pass before Northwestern puts new fees into effect.

"We're still having an opening special ... at our machines," Hodnett said.

REQUESTS APPROVED — Police Chief Glenn Cannon announced the approval of two requests for solicitation permits in Greenville.

Cannon said the requests were submitted by: the Greenville Tennis Association to conduct a door-to-door solicitation Oct. 22 through Dec. 20 to raise funds for expenses; and by the Pitt County Humane Society to conduct a merchant and sidewalk solicitation Oct. 8-29 to raise funds for the society and to make the public aware of the importance of having pets spayed or neutered.

Arms Reattached; Conditions 'Fair'

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Doctors hope to know in about a week whether a marathon operation saved the severed arms of two teen-agers who were injured in a freak hayride accident.

The two 13-year-olds were in fair condition early today and "resting comfortably" in the pediatric intensive-care unit of St. John's Hospital, said Nancy Zimmers, a spokeswoman for the Southern Illinois University School of Medicine.

Two teams of doctors from the school performed an 18-hour operation over the weekend to reattach the arms of Lisa Million of Murrayville and Tim Hutchcraft of Manchester. Lisa's left arm was severed below the elbow and Tim's right arm was cut off above the elbow in the Friday night accident.

Mrs. Zimmers said Lisa was taken into surgery again Sunday for a check of reattached blood vessels. She said some minor adjustment was made to a vessel in the lower part of the arm.

Doctors will know in about a week whether the operations, which began Friday night and ended Saturday afternoon, were successful. Mrs. Zimmers said.

The physicians, led by Drs.

Reid Hansen and Eloi Eriksson of the university's division of plastic surgery, used microscopes and special surgical equipment to reattach nerves.

The Morgan County sheriff's office said the accident occurred about 8:30 p.m. Friday, as the teens rode along a highway on a farm truck carrying 16 children from a Sunday school class at Murrayville United Methodist Church.

The two limbs were severed when a red pickup truck with stock racks to hold cattle passed in the other direction and apparently sideswiped or nearly hit the hayride vehicle, authorities said.

"It is quite possible the driver of the other truck was unaware of what happened and continued on driving," said Wade Hill, a dispatcher for the sheriff's office. The driver was still being sought today.

Police combed the area for about an hour before finding the limbs — one on the edge of the road and the other about five feet away in a small mound of gravel.

Three other children were hurt and two were admitted to Passavant Hospital in Jacksonville with broken arms.

Postal Union Advertising Against 'Competition'

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The postal clerks union, determined to "fight fire with fire," is launching a television advertising campaign designed to counter private competition to the Postal Service.

With the blessing of the U.S. Postal Service management, the American Postal Workers Union will begin its $2.7 million image-building campaign next week in 26 cities.

Moe Biller, president of the 340,000-member APWU, said the message simply is that government-employed postal clerks will be "America's punching bag no more."

The advertisement "will set the record straight — that postal workers are not malingers," he said.

The commercial, produced for the union by the J. Walter Thompson advertising agency, introduces the slogan: "We Try To Be Letter Perfect For You."

It is to commence Oct. 18 in some 26 cities, although the spot has been aired regionally in some Northeast markets during CBS telecasts of NCAA football games.

The union had been considering such a move for sometime, but the spur to action was a television advertising campaign run last spring by Federal Express, a major private competitor of the U.S. Postal Service.

The advertisement depicted two older Postal Service clerks chatting about their pensions and other benefits while a frustrated customer sought vainly to get help in mailing a package.

Federal Express, a private, overnight carrier of mail with its own fleet of airplanes, subsequently discontinued that campaign.

Biller complained that postal workers have been unduly criticized for years and that the only solution was to "fight fire with fire."

Mail workers will be "America's punching bag no more," he declared.

"The Federal Express commercial was the catalyst," said Dan Driscoll, an aide to Biller. "We knew we had to do something now."

Under federal law, the Postal Service is barred from engaging in so-called institution — or image-building — advertising. It is permitted only to advertise the services it offers to the mailing public.

Mary Layton, assistant postmaster general for public employee communications, said, however, "We're always appreciative of efforts to improve the public's perception of the Postal Service."

The advertising campaign is directed at improving postal workers' image during the anticipated heavy mailing demand that accompanies the start of the holiday mailing season.

Two Firemen Visited School

Two firemen from the Greenville Fire Department recently visited first and second grade students at Falkland Elementary School to talk to them about fire safety.

Topics covered by the two included family escape plans and tips on how to successfully escape a burning room. The firemen also showed the fireman's uniform, air tank and mask to the students.

The visit highlighted the school's observance of Fire Prevention Week.

"It gives a human presentation of the situation ... to let the public know we are not malingers," Biller said. "We don't expect a special 'Thank You' for doing our jobs, but we do feel it's time to tell our side of the story."

The National Association of Letter Carriers, a smaller postal union representing workers who deliver the mail, isn't participating in the campaign because mail carriers don't have the same image problem as the clerks.

"One hundred and ten billion pieces of mail a year! Who in the world handles all that?" an announcer says at the opening of the 30-second commercial. The advertisement shows post office clerks sorting and routing packages and letters and concludes with the declaration: "Nobody can match us."

The commercial will run in Chicago; Cincinnati; Cleveland; Dallas-Fort Worth; Detroit; Houston; Seattle-Tacoma, Wash.; St. Louis; District of Columbia; Los Angeles; New York; Boston; Atlanta; Birmingham, Ala.; Milwaukee; San Francisco; and Denver.

Fair Mishap Injures Four

DALLAS (AP) — Fireworks spooked a team of horses pulling a stagecoach at the state fair and four passengers were injured when the driver brought the runaway vehicle to a stop by running it into a tree, police said.

Officer Bill Moser, who was at the scene, said the four people hospitalized after the accident had been riding on the coach at about 8 p.m. Monday when it raced down First Street, a thoroughfare running parallel to the fair's midway.

"The fireworks frightened the horses and they ran away," Moser said.

Hospitalized were Renee Dickerson, 7; Matt Kinkade, 15; Marie Justice, 20; and Joyce Work, 38. All were reported in fair or stable condition at two hospitals with minor injuries. Several other people were treated for cuts and bruises at the scene, authorities said.

The stagecoach, owned and driven by John Brigham of Dallas, was giving free rides to fairgoers, Moser said. Brigham managed to stop the runaway rig by steering toward a tree, forcing the horses to run around it on opposite sides and bringing the coach to a crashing halt.

Before it stopped, the rig clipped a sightseeing bus as three motorcycle officers used their sirens and red lights to push people out of the way.

The horses were unharmed, police said.

Ayden Man Named To Post

MOUNT OLIVE — Wesley E. Beppard of Ayden has been appointed assistant director of admissions at Mount Olive College. His primary responsibilities will be to represent the college in high schools and recruitment within Free Will Baptist churches. He will also be available for home visits to discuss Mount Olive College with interested students and their parents.

A 1978 graduate of Mount Olive, Beppard received the B.S. degree in Business Administration and Business Education from Atlantic Christian College.

Beppard is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J.T. Beppard, Jr. of Rt. 3, Ayden.

Poultry
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) (NCDA) — The North Carolina f.o.b. dock broiler market was steady to firm. Supplies moderate. Demand good. Weights desirable. The dock weighted average price for this week is 38.68 for small purchases of plant grade broilers picked up at processing plants. Estimated slaughter today, 1,821,000.

Hens
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) (NCDA) — The North Carolina hen market was steady. Supplies fully adequate. Demand good. Prices paid per pound for hens over seven pounds at farm for Monday and Tuesday slaughter was 16 cents.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gave ground in heavy trading today, interrupting an explosive rally that had propelled the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks more than 30 percent in the past two months to surpass the 1,000 mark.

The Dow Jones industrials average, up 109.18 points in the past five sessions to a 17-month high, rose slightly at today's opening. But the blue-chip average fell 4.97 points to 1,007.82 at the end of the first two hours of trading. Slightly more stocks fell in price than rose on the New York Stock Exchange.

Big Board volume reached 58.60 million shares at noon EDT, down from the 61.66 million that changed hands at the same time Monday during the second busiest day ever on the NYSE. But trading volume was heavy enough that the NYSE ticker tape was running 38 minutes late at midday. Analysts said selling had been expected from investors seeking to cash in on the rapid rise in stock prices since the market recovered from the 28-month low it slipped to in August.

The surge in stock prices over the previous five sessions reflected drops in interest rates, a belief that rates will continue to fall and expectations that the combination of declining rates and unwinding inflation will revive the economy from recession, according to analysts.

Before the start of today's session, Morgan Guaranty Trust cut its prime rate to 12 percent, the first full point reduction in the short-term business borrowing rate since the prime began falling from 16.5 percent in mid-July. The move to a 25-month low was later followed by Chemical Bank.

In hectic credit market trading, 30-year U.S. Treasury bonds rose $40 for each $1,000 in face value, with yields dropping below 11 percent for the first time since the summer of 1980.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks was unchanged at 76.91. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 1.66 at 305.75.

Sony topped the active list on the NYSE, unchanged at 15, in trading that included a block of 750,000 shares crossing at 15 1/4 a share.

Two drug companies in the news because of tampering with their products were among today's losers. Pfizer fell 1 3/4 to 78 and Johnson & Johnson fell 1 to 42 1/2.

Trial In Pitt Is Requested

SWAN QUARTER — An attorney for Joseph Messer of Washington, charged with murder in the death of Hyde County jailer George Farrow, 71, during an escape attempt in August, has filed motions in Superior Court here to have the trial moved to Pitt County, or have a jury selected from another county to hear the case.

Messer's lawyer, Herman C. Gaskins Jr., said in the motion that his client could not receive a fair trial in Hyde County because it would be impossible to obtain an impartial jury.

Farrow died of injuries received when beaten during the escape attempt. Messer's wife and two other inmates also face charges in connection with the incident.

Lenora Bright, Hyde County clerk of court said the motion for the change of venue will probably be heard at the November 15 term of superior court.

"I think there will probably be a change of venue," she said, "but I can't be sure. No order has been filed."

British March In A Victory Parade

LONDON (AP) — Britain's heroes of the Falklands war marched in triumph through London's financial district today past an estimated 300,000 cheering Britons and a sea of red, white and blue Union Jacks.

It was the biggest military parade through the City of London, the ancient heart of the British capital and its financial district, since World War II. Some 1,250 Falklands veterans paraded before a beaming Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher while overhead, 17 navy and army helicopters and 17 fixed-wing planes roared across the sky.

Church bells pealed and the crowd, huddling under a mid-day drizzle, sang "Rule Britannia" in a display of patriotic fervor spawned by the South Atlantic victory over Argentina last June.

Among the parading servicemen were several of the 146 soldiers, sailors and airmen decorated for their actions in the 74-day campaign to recapture the Falkland Islands, seized by Argentina April 2.

Prime Rate Down Again

NEW YORK (AP) — Morgan Guaranty Trust, the nation's fifth largest bank, today slashed its prime lending rate a full percentage point to 12 percent, the lowest level for the key business borrowing rate in 25 months.

The move followed earlier sharp declines in interest rates and amid growing expectations of further relief, which also have contributed to a massive rally in the stock market.

Just last Thursday, major banks adopted a 13 percent prime rate, and on Friday, Mellon Bank of Pittsburgh cut its prime rate to 12.75 percent. Today's action was the first full point cut since the prime started to fall in mid-July, when it stood at 16.5 percent.

The prime is the base upon which banks compute interest charges on short-term loans to their most creditworthy corporate customers. Many large businesses borrow at rates below the prime, while small businesses typically pay one or two percentage points more than the prime rate.

BUSINESS MEET
 The Ruth Hill Gospel Chorus of Mt. Calvary Free Will Baptist Church will have a business meeting Wednesday at 7 p.m.

'Quality Circle' Session Is Held

Some 130-140 Burroughs Wellcome employees who are members of the local plant's "Quality Circle" network, made up of groups of people who meet regularly to identify, analyze, and solve quality and other problems in their work areas, attended a BW conference here today on quality circle activities.

Larry Williamson, quality circle coordinator at Burroughs Wellcome here, said the employees gathered at the Ramada Inn for training on the various aspects of the in-house problem-solving program.

Williamson, who said that 13 quality circles currently function at the Greenville plant, pointed out that he and other area industry representatives are in the process of organizing a local chapter of the International Quality Circle Association.

Williamson has been elected president of the new chapter, which will meet monthly.

The coordinator explained that a pilot program at Burroughs Wellcome initially involved six quality circles and the success of the venture led to the addition of seven more units as the volunteer employee program proved worthwhile.

Overall objectives of quality circles, which are usually made up of no more than 15 employees in each group, are to: reduce errors and enhance quality; inspire more effective teamwork; promote job involvement; increase employee motivation; create a problem-solving capability; build an attitude of "problem prevention;" improve company communications; develop harmonious manager-worker relations; promote personal and leadership development; and develop a greater awareness of safety.

Williamson said that under the BW quality circle charter, groups of employees who perform similar work meet on a regular basis to identify problems within their areas, analyze them, and recommend possible solutions to management. The structure of a circle includes a steering committee, coordinator, facilitators, and circle members.

Circles, according to the spokesman, identify problems in a variety of areas, including labor reduction; availability of materials; improvement of support services; reduction in rejections, reworks, and wastes; equipment needs and improvement; training procedures; improvement of morale-motivation, problem prevention; and development of safety awareness.

Williamson said that quality circles do not address wages and salaries, benefits, disciplinary policies, employment policies, termination policies, grievances, new product designing, sales and marketing policies, or personalities. He said quality circles provide a way for management to utilize employee expertise in a particular area and indicate to the employee force that the company has an interest in the opinions and ideas of its workers.

Oriental Lunch Wed.

This week has been designated National School Lunch Week in America, and county and city schools are observing the occasion by serving an international meal to school children.

On Wednesday, city and county school lunchrooms, like those in the state and throughout the nation, will be serving a uniform Oriental lunch which will feature Teriyaki chicken, steamed rice, stir fried vegetables, fruit fantasy, a Chinese almond cookie, and milk.

School lunch preparation is a big business in America. In North Carolina alone, school children in a single lunch meal average consuming 67,569 pounds of ground beef, 7,864 gallons of gravy, 41,900 pounds of rice, 84,555 pounds of tomatoes, 125,323 pounds of green beans, 32,463 cans of peaches, and 47,185 gallons of milk.

To provide this vast amount of food to hungry school children requires the services of about 12,000 employees in North Carolina.

Obituaries

Allen
ALEXANDRIA, VA. — Funeral services for Mr. Charles W. Allen, 73, will be held at 2 p.m. Wednesday at Everly and Wheatley Funeral Home in Alexandria. Mr. Allen, formerly of Greenville, was a resident of Alexandria.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Teresa Lawrence Allen of the home; one son; three daughters; and two sisters, Mrs. Doris Allen Crowe of Emerald Isle and Mrs. Nan Allen Harris of Ayden.

Barwick
LA GRANGE — Funeral services for Paul Alvin Barwick, 53, were held Sunday at Community Baptist Church here by the Rev. Dean Hightower. Burial was in Fairview Cemetery.

Barwick was the founder of the La Grange Gazette and worked in newspaper and community relations all his life. A Mount Olive native and a graduate of the University of North Carolina, he started his newspaper career as a column writer on the Goldsboro News Argus and later served as its farm editor. He did public relations work for the state mental health programs which brought him to Greenville facilities like the Jones Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center at regular intervals. Paralyzed by a childhood accident, he was honored by this state as Handicapped Citizen of the Year several years ago.

Surviving him are his wife, Ann, and a sister, Mrs. Lillian Langley of Calypso.

Davis
AYDEN — Brandy Tinelle Davis, infant daughter of Eddie Earl Suggs and Mary M. Davis Suggs of the Scuffelton Community of Greene County, died Saturday at her home.

The funeral service will be held at 1:30 p.m. Thursday at Rouse's Chapel F.W.B. Church, Rt. 1, Ayden with Bishop Robert Gorham officiating. Burial will be in the Whitley Cemetery, Maury.

In addition to her parents, Brandy is survived by a brother, Antonio Davis of the home; her paternal grandmother, Ms. Gladys Suggs of New York; her maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Willie Davis of the home; and her paternal grandfather, Mrs. Delzora Suggs of Rt. 1, Snow Hill.

Advisory Board Holds Meeting

Mrs. Wilbur L. Worthington of Ayden, a member of the N.C. Farm Bureau Women's Advisory Committee, attended a recent meeting of the advisory board in Raleigh.

The principal speaker at the meeting was Mrs. Beth McAllister, director of the Wake County Hospice program. She explained that Hospice is a program of care for the terminally ill and their families.

Mrs. McAllister said persons interested in the Hospice program in Pitt County should contact Pitt County Home Health Care, 758-5932.

Brewers, Cards Set To Open Series

ST. LOUIS (AP) — This riverfront city on the banks of the Mississippi where the Gateway Arch signals the way West, welcomes the World Series for the first time in 14 years tonight as the St. Louis Cardinals face the Milwaukee Brewers.

Baseball could not have come up with a more intriguing matchup to battle for its world championship.

Whitey Herzog's Cardinals are a modern Gashouse Gang, who won the National League championship with speed and defense. They stole 200 bases and Herzog thinks they're capable of 75 more than that. And they hit .67 home runs, fewest in the majors, proving that you don't have to hit the ball over the wall to win ball games.

Don't try to tell that to the Manager Harvey Kuenn and his American League champion Brewers, a team of sluggers that hit 216 homers, tops in the majors. The Brewers live by the long ball and, in tribute to their manager, they are called Harvey's Wallbangers.

So it will be a clash of opposing philosophies.

Right-hander Bob Forsch, who pitched a three-hit shutout in the opening game of the National League playoffs against Atlanta, starts for the Cardinals tonight, while the Brewers counter with lefty Mike Caldwell, who was battered by California in the opener of the American League series.

Two of the Wallbangers are ailing and Kuenn said he would not know until gametime whether outfielders Gorman Thomas and Ben Oglivie could play. Thomas, who shared the major league home run championship with 39, has a sore knee, and Oglivie, who hit 34 homers, has a bruised rib.

"I won't know if they can play until I get to the park," said Kuenn. "If they don't, I've got all kinds of other guys who can."

Marshall Edwards and Mark Brouhard, who both made important contributions to the playoff victory over California, are Kuenn's outfield reserves.

The Game Two pitching matchups will be veteran Don Sutton for the Brewers against rookie John Stuper for the Cardinals.

When the Series shifts to Milwaukee for Game Three Friday night, Pete Vuckovich, traded away in one of Herzog's early remodeling moves, starts for the Brewers against Joaquin Anduar for St. Louis.

"The trade was part of the business," deadpanned Vuckovich, an 18-game winner this season. "Whitey wanted to build a team on speed and I never really ran that well."

The Cards do, though. They are a first-to-third oriented team, seldom satisfied to advance around the bases 90 feet at a time. And their defense is just about flawless with only 124 errors.

"From what I've seen, they're personalized with Whitey Herzog's stamp on them," said Caldwell, the Brewers' first game starter. "They have a lot of similarities to the teams he had in Kansas City. They don't strike out a lot and they hit the ball up the middle and in the alleys."

Herzog's Royal teams reached the playoffs three times but never could get past the New York Yankees. So this will be his first World Series. He's looking forward to it.

"I don't know what it's like," he said. "I've never done it before. But everybody wants to. Now I've got the chance."

The Brewers' big bats don't frighten the Cardinals, who think their spacious ball park will equalize Milwaukee's power and that its artificial surface will benefit St. Louis.

Vuckovich remembered Busch Stadium's roomy dimensions but didn't think that would trouble the Brewers.

"These guys can hit them out anywhere," he said. "The ball doesn't carry well here but if they can hit them in Milwaukee with the wind blowing in, they can hit them anywhere."

As for the Cardinals, Kuenn said he really didn't know much about the NL champs.

"I expect them to run," he said. "They've got great speed. But we have fellows with great speed, too. We might surprise some people."

The Brewers are coming off a remarkable week. After losing three straight games in Baltimore to fall back into a tie for first place in the AL East, they captured the division on the final day of the season by beating the Orioles. Then Milwaukee lost the first two games of the Americhree straight victories to capture the pennant exactly one week after they had beaten back the Orioles.

Robin Yount, Milwaukee's shortstop, was asked if the strain of the hectic week might leave his team drained with nothing left to give.

"When you look at what you're playing for ... that you're in the World Series, something very few players on our team has experienced, well, if you can't get up for these games, you can't get up for anything," he said.

Cecil Cooper, hero of the Brewers' pennant clinching victory over California, sees this all-Midwest World Series as a good thing for baseball.

"It's great to have new blood in the Series," he said. "It's good for fans to see players they don't get to see that much."

The Brewers and Cardinals will be seeing plenty of each other for the next week or so.

Both Sides Appear Ready To Bargain

By The Associated Press

With both sides in the National Football League strike apparently in a mood to bargain and a mediator about to be named, the NFL seems ready to modify its threat to cancel the season if no agreement is reached by the end of October.

As the two chief negotiators were meeting Monday at the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service to decide on a mediator, Commissioner Pete Rozelle was saying the league would be flexible in determining when the strike had cancelled too many games to allow the season to continue.

In the past, Rozelle had said that thirteen was the minimum number of games that could be played to make the season viable. That would mean a settlement would have to be reached in time for the games of Oct. 31 to be played.

But on Monday, he told Associated Press that it would be possible to play the season with 12 games or even less. "None of this is etched in stone, to borrow a phrase," he said, referring to a statement commonly used by union president Gene Upshaw about union contract demands.

Meanwhile, chief management negotiator Jack Donlan and his union counterpart, Ed Garvey, were meeting with Kay McMurray, chief of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. They emerged to say they hoped for a quick announcement naming a mediator to help end the walkout, which enters its fourth week today.

There have been no formal negotiations since Oct. 2, when talks broke off after there was no agreement even on non-monetary issues, let alone the union's demand for a wage scale that is the major issue in the strike.

Since then, much of the verbal sparring has been over a mediator — management has sought federal mediation; the union, while finally agreeing to accept a mediator, has insisted that he not be with the Mediation and Conciliation Service. Last week, they submitted a list of nine men they would accept, but management summarily rejected it.

On Sunday, in an informal meeting in Rye, N.Y., the two sides finally agreed to ask McMurray to choose a mediator. And both said it was time to get on with negotiations.

The length of the season came up last week, when Rozelle was quoted as saying that 13 games was the minimum number that could be played. Each team has each missed three and next weekend's games are almost sure to be scrapped. The league has said it could make up two, which would mean one more weekend — Oct. 24-25 — could be missed before 13 is reached.

Last Saturday, Chuck Sullivan, chairman of the Management Council's executive committee, said "12 or 13 games, somewhere around that," was the minimum. Rozelle echoed that Monday.

"Everyone asks me. Everyone asks Chuck Sullivan. Everyone asks the owners," he said. "Why don't they ask Garvey how long a credible season should be."

Vincent Is Pick Champ

Charles Vincent of 3107 Tucker Dr. is the winner of last week's Daily Reflector Football Contest.

Vincent correctly picked the winners in 27 of the 32 games listed in last Tuesday's Daily Reflector contest pages.

His victory came through his point total guess. He listed 77 as the most points to be scored in any one of the 32 games with 79 being the actual total.

Second place was a tie between Bill Cash of 117 Lee St., and David Floyd of 112 Riverbluff Rd., Apt. #A.

Both of them also missed five games, and both listed 75 as the most points to be scored.

Eight other people also picked 27 correct winners, but were further off the point total.

The next contest in the series appears in today's paper.

Knights Slip By Goldsboro

GOLDSBORO — After two halves and two overtimes, Greenville Christian Academy scored three goals in a shootout to down Goldsboro Christian, 4-2, Monday in a soccer match.

The score was tied, 1-1, after two overtimes, sending the match into the shootout.

GCA's Mike Bragg scored the first goal but Goldsboro's Bill Pruett tied it with a goal. But then, Troy Stox and Chris Harris each scored goals for the Knights to seal the victory.

GCA, now 6-5, took a 1-0 lead in the first half on a goal by Daren O'Brian with 15 minutes gone. Goldsboro tied it up six minutes later on a goal by Robbie Collier.

Neither team scored again until the shootout.

It was the second match this season between the two teams that ended in a shootout.

"It's kind of ironic," GCA coach Dale Thatcher said. "We played 'em earlier in the year and we won in a shootout. I really didn't expect the same thing to happen again."

GCA outshot Goldsboro, 32 to 18. The Knights had 11 saves and Goldsboro had 18.

GCA travels to Ashokie today to take on Ridgescroft Academy.

Alabama Climbs Into 2nd Place; Washington Holds To Top Spot

By The Associated Press

The state of Pennsylvania has had enough of Alabama for one weekend.

The Crimson Tide not only beat Penn State Saturday, but also bumped Pitt out of second place in the Associated Press college football poll.

Penn State plunged from No. 3 to No. 8 as the result of its 42-21 defeat by Bear Bryant's team Saturday. In the process, Alabama moved from No. 4 to No. 2, knocking idle Pitt down to third.

The Crimson Tide received 13 first-place votes Monday from the nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters and collected a total of 1,016 points as the result of its impressive victory. Pitt received nine first-place votes and a total of 996 points.

The Crimson Tide's total left them behind the No. 1 Washington Huskies, who received 31 of the 54 first-place ballots and 1,046 of a possible 1,080 points as the result of their 50-7 triumph over California. It's the fifth week in a row Washington has been on top of the rankings.

Florida State showed up in this year's polls for the first time, moving into the No. 19 spot after trouncing Southern Illinois 59-8. Meanwhile, Clemson, the defending national champion, climbed back into the Top Twenty at No. 20 after routing Virginia 48-0 for its third straight victory. The Tigers had started the season with a loss to Georgia and a tie with Boston College.

Georgia, which received the other first-place ballot, moved up one place to No. 4 following a 33-10 triumph over Mississippi, and was followed in the rankings by No. 5 Southern Methodist, No. 6 Nebraska, No. 7 Arkansas, No. 8 Penn State, No. 9 Notre Dame and No. 10 Arizona State.

North Carolina led the second ten in the No. 11 spot, followed by UCLA, West Virginia, Southern Cal, Illinois, LSU and Miami, Fla. Texas fell to No. 18, while Florida State, No. 19, and Clemson completed the Top Twenty.

Is Washington Really No. One? Computer Rankings Say Pitt Is

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Is Washington really Number One? Do the Huskies deserve their national ranking as the best college team in the Division I-A ranks?

Maybe they do, and maybe they don't. It's really up to the public to decide in the long run.

Several years ago, one of the more prominent coaches in the country proposed a different way of ranking teams — based on strength of schedule.

He proposed that each time a team wins a game, it receives a certain number of points. Then, each time the losing team wins a game against another opponent, it received a lesser number. This is then carried one step further, so that for each game the third team down wins — having lost to the team that lost to the team that is collecting the points — another lesser amount of points is awarded.

Last year, we had the pleasure of serving on the Associated Press' panel which ranks the college football teams of the country and since we knew a friend who owned a home computer, we decided to put that to the test.

With the help of Barry Adams, who did the complicated part of it all — programming the computer — we set up a system which awarded these points. Our picture came out a little different at the end of the season — Clemson was only number three. That was due mainly to Clemson's having played a Division II school to open the year — and we did not award bonus points for winning against a non-Division I-A school.

This year, we've made a few changes in the system. Schools are awarded six points for each game it wins, four for each game its' victims win, and two points for each games it's victims' victims win. Wins over schools in Division I-AA do not extend to the third level, and wins over schools below Division I-AA do not extend past the top level.

In the event of a tie, half the totals are awarded.

For instance, when East Carolina beat Richmond, a Division I-AA school, it got six points for winning the game. It will get four more for each game Richmond wins, but no more points.

Earlier, Pacific played Cal-Poly — it received only the five points for winning, and will get no more since Cal-Poly is below Division I-AA.

So strength of schedule is the whole ball game here.

You may not agree with the rankings — but they are unbiased.

First after six weeks of play is Pittsburgh, with a 4-0 record. The Panthers have beaten North Carolina (four wins—10 second rank wins); Florida State (four wins—nine second rank wins), Illinois (5-6), and West Virginia (4-9), for a total of 160 points.

Washington, ranked first on both the AP and UPI poll, is only tied for 15th on the computer rankings. The Huskies have beaten Texas-El Paso (1 win—1 second rank win); Arizona (1 win—no second rank wins); Oregon (0-0), San Diego State (2-4), and California (3-7) for a total of 82 points.

For local fans, North Carolina ranks ninth. The Heels have beaten Vanderbilt (3-4), Army (2-2) Note: one Army win over non-Division I-A team), Georgia Tech (3-2), and Wake Forest (3-6).

Our first top 20:

1. Pitt (4-0)	160
2. Alabama (5-0)	152
3. Penn St. (4-1)	134
4. Arizona St. (6-0)	124

Series Teams Reflect Their Managers

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

As a mirror reflects the image of man, so do the two teams in the 1982 World Series reflect the image of their

Last Tickets Sold

The last tickets which Milwaukee Brewers said they had available for the World Series were sold Monday to fans standing in long lines at Milwaukee County Stadium. managers.

Harvey Kuenn, 52-year-old Milwaukee Brewers manager, represents the plow-boy image - golden-haired, 6-foot-2 personification of the Midwest farm boy. Kuenn has developed a philosophical attitude of taking one day at a time, influenced heavily by the severe physical problems he has conquered over the past six years.

"I'm used to going one day at a time," says Kuenn.

His laid-back style of managing has been molded to a team of explosive power. Let nature take its course, and sooner or later, the Brewers will cut loose, as they proved in winning their first American League pennant by beating the California Angels in five games.

"We score runs no matter who pitches or how he pitches," Kuenn says.

In contrast, there is Whitey Herzog, 51-year-old St. Louis Cardinals manager. Crusty, abrasive and aggressive, Herzog typifies the street-fighter image of his team, which won the National League pennant over Atlanta with speed, baserunning and defense.

Herzog also was aggressive in the marketplace, trading 13 ballplayers shortly after he took over the team in the winter of 1980 as he began a remodeling in his own image.

Respected by his players, no manager's name is spoken more often in a team's clubhouse. It's as though his players were in awe of the man who took a team that finished 74-88 in 1980 to the World Series two years later.

"Whitey's played a tremendous role as a manager," says reserve shortstop Mike Ramsey, who played nearly as important a part in St. Louis' pennant drive by subbing for the injured Ozzie Smith.

"He came into St. Louis and in three years completely turned the team around until we're one of the best four or five teams in baseball," Ramsey says. "He traded away some big names and came up with some good minor league players."

"There isn't much more you can say about Whitey."

On June 2, Kuenn took over the Brewers as an interim manager, replacing Buck Rodgers. At that time, they had a 23-24 record, but Kuenn guided them to the best record in baseball this season with 95 victories.

It was a team that hit a major league leading 216 homers, including 20 or more by five different players. Gorman Thomas shared the major league lead with 39 homers.

All Harvey had to do was sit back and wait for the big bats to strike - whether they were wielded by Thomas, or Cecil Cooper, or Ben Oglivie, or Ted Simmons, or Robin Yount.

Perhaps it was his one-day-at-a-time attitude. Take things as they come.

Lord knows Kuenn had seen enough trouble in his lifetime to take the good when it arrived. In October of 1976, while the Brewers batting coach, Kuenn underwent open heart surgery for a quadruple bypass. The next year, he was rushed to the hospital with total kidney failure, again needing surgery. And during spring training in 1980, he was stricken with a life-endangering blood clot that forced amputation of his right leg just below the knee.

That would be enough to make a man a little fatalistic. Cecil Cooper, the Brewers first baseman, offers this explanation of the Harvey Kuenn philosophy:

"When he took over, he just said, 'Relax.' The other manager put pressure on some of the people. Harvey just said, 'I have confidence in you as a team. Go out and play baseball.'"

Relax is a word that seems to be missing from Herzog's vocabulary. Nicknamed Whitey for the color of his own hair, it could just as well have been for the color that his style of ball turns the hair of his fans.

Herzog managed the Kansas City Royals to Western Division titles in 1976-77-78, then came cross-state to build a team that would steal 200 bases and successfully execute 87 sacrifice bunts this season, while hitting only 67 homers. The Brewers, meanwhile, stole only 84 bases and sacrificed 56 times.

"I know the Cardinals have the personalized Whitey Herzog stamp on them," says Mike Caldwell, the Brewers' scheduled pitcher in tonight's opening game. "It's a team a lot like Kansas City. A good team on Astroturf with a bunch of speedsters. They don't overswing but make good contact."

Two of Herzog's greatest acquisitions were shortstop Ozzie Smith from San Diego and left fielder Lonnie Smith from Philadelphia. Ozzie may be the best fielding shortstop in baseball, and he stole 25 bases this year. Lonnie, meanwhile, has become one of baseball's most effective and versatile offensive tools, leading the league with 120 runs scored, stealing 68 bases and batting .307.

"We make the most of what we've got," says Cards catcher Darrell Porter, who was imported from Kansas City by Herzog.

"I know Whitey would have liked to have had a few more home runs, but most of our guys are Punch-and-Judy type hitters. Well, I really shouldn't say that. We do rope out some line drives."

"We just don't have anything very awesome."

Series: The Perils Of Pauline

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Baseball's version of the Perils of Pauline goes into its final chapter tonight in St. Louis' Busch Memorial Stadium.

Will the Milwaukee Brewers allow themselves again to be pushed over the edge of the precipice only to grab a limb and hang perilously until rescued by some anonymous passerby?

Or will the law of averages prevail and the limb break, erasing the Brewers from the script and allowing the systematic St. Louis Cardinals to ride off into the sunset, leading characters of a new special?

"We keep getting into life-or-death situations and clawing our way out of them," says Brewer manager Harvey Kuenn. "These are the gutsiest guys I've ever seen."

Certainly the 1982 World Series is one of the most unpredictable of sports events as it takes off on its best-of-seven game journey with all the earmarks of one of those 15-minute movie serials we oldsters used to see as kids.

It shapes up as a battle between two clubs of contrasting styles and philosophies - the Brewers, loose, free-swinging and devil-may-care; the Cardinals, coolly disciplined, methodically cutting down obstacles with textbook finesse.

One of them swings a sledgehammer, the other uses a scalpel.

These are not the two teams that should be in the World Series anyhow - not, that is, if you listened last week to the highly touted statistical wizard Bill James, originator of what publishers call a "mind-boggling analysis of major league baseball."

What James did was throw all the numerical indicators into one big tub, scramble them gingerly and come up with the California Angels and Atlanta Braves as pennant winners, with the Angels a sure-shot to capture the World Series.

The formula, he claimed, was strictly science - no fudge, no room for intangibles. That's where he blew it.

What was there in James' system to account for rightfielder Charlie Moore's rifle throw that nailed Reggie Jackson at third, snuffing out an incipient Angel rally? Or the great leaping catch by Marshall Edwards, filling in for Gorman Thomas? Or Peter Ladd, the unheralded relief pitching ace?

These heroics, linked with a game-winning hit by Cecil Cooper, a .125 hitter in 16 previous at bats, provided the non-statistical, unpredictable quantities that gave the Brewers a 4-3 last gasp victory over the Angels in the showdown American League playoff game.

This is the Milwaukee team that had a three-game lead over Baltimore with four to play but had to win the final game to survive, then lost the first two games to the Angels in the playoff - presenting another cliff-clinging situation.

Given up for dead, the Brewers stormed back to win the next three - an unprecedented feat - without the services of ace reliever Rollie Fingers and with the muscle of their power machine - Thomas, Cooper, Ben Oglivie and Ted Simmons - batting an anemic combined .118.

"I'm not one to panic, I don't push them much," says kindly Kuenn, a June managerial replacement who had undergone three serious operations and lost part of one leg to amputation.

He is no stranger to adversity. "I just give them the ball and let them play," he says. Whitey Herzog, his counterpart on the Cardinals, is the antithesis. He is intense, strict, methodical, respected by players and peers alike. He lays heavy stress on speed, defense and good pitching.

Not blessed with wholesale power, he squeezes out runs as he might toothpaste from a tube. He operates on the theory that you make sure you don't lose a game before you try to win it.

He is a hard-knuckled guy who played for eight years and then tackled baseball's risky managerial musical chairs. He's been fired, rehired, fired again with clubs like Texas, California and Kansas City, having won three division crowns and finished twice as skipper of the Royals.

Joining the Cardinals in 1980, first as general manager and then as field skipper, he set about fashioning a team to his own specifications. At the 1980 meetings, he traded 13 players for 10, concentrating on speed.

Position-By-Position Matchup

ST. LOUIS (AP) - The position-by-position matchups for the 1982 World Series between the St. Louis Cardinals of the National League and the Milwaukee Brewers of the American League:

FIRST BASE
Each team boasts one of its league's finest hitters playing the position. Keith Hernandez of the Cardinals hit .299 this season - failing for the first time since 1978 to hit over .300 - and drove in 104 runs. Cecil Cooper of Milwaukee was a .313 hitter with 32 homers and 121 RBI, enjoying one of his finest seasons.

The fielding edge goes to Hernandez, one of the best glove men at first base, but the overall edge goes to Cooper, who blends a solid job at first with his potent offensive capabilities.

SECOND BASE
This position is tough to call. Jim Gantner hit .295 with 43 RBI near the bottom of Milwaukee's batting order this season, while Tommy Herr batted .266 with 34 RBI and 25 stolen bases in the leadoff spot. Herr's quickness in both fielding his position and baserunning make up for the 30 points he lacks in batting average.

Call it even.
SHORTSTOP
Ozzie Smith of the Cardinals may be the best fielding shortstop in the business. His agility, balance and ability to throw from awkward positions are unparalleled. But how can he compete with Milwaukee's Robin Yount, in the midst of an MVP season. While Smith, sidelined part of the season with a leg injury, hit only .248 with 43 RBI, Yount hit .331 with 114 RBI and 29 homers.

It wouldn't even be close if it weren't for Smith's nonpareil fielding abilities, but Yount still gets a sizable edge.

THIRD BASE
Neither Paul Molitor of Milwaukee nor Ken Oberkfell of St. Louis are particularly smooth-fielding third basemen. Molitor even admits he's not very good at the position, which he assumed only this season.

So, you have to go to their offensive statistics, where Molitor emerges on top. Molitor hit .302 with 71 RBI and 19 homers, while Oberkfell was a .289 hitter with 34 RBI and only two homers.

Despite being a good clutch hitter, Molitor gets the nod.

CATCHER
It's a tough pick, since the Cardinals have Milwaukee's Ted Simmons outnumbered 2-to-1. St. Louis platoons left-handed hitter Darrell Porter and righty swinger Gene Tenace. Both Porter and Simmons have suspect arms, but Porter's problems have been compounded by an off season that saw him hit only .231 compared to Simmons' average of .269. The power is about equal, and all three are fine handlers of pitchers.

It's almost a tossup, but the edge goes to Porter-Tenace.

LEFT FIELD
Two fine athletes - Lonnie Smith of St. Louis and Ben Oglivie of Milwaukee - roam left field for their respective teams. Oglivie has more power and is perhaps the better outfielder, but ...

Smith may be the most versatile offensive threat in baseball. He hit .307 this season with eight homers and 69 RBI, and he still found time to steal 68 bases and lead the league in runs scored with 120.

Smith gets the edge.
CENTER FIELD
Gorman Thomas of Milwaukee shared the major league lead in homers with Reggie Jackson at 39, and normally he would get a substantial edge over St. Louis rookie Willie McGee.

But the Milwaukee slugger has a problem with his knee that has slowed him down in the field, and he is mired in a 3-for-44 slump. McGee, meanwhile, has all the speed and agility to play his position well, while hitting .296 with 56 RBI this season.

McGee gets the call, but it could go the other way if Thomas goes on a tear.

RIGHT FIELD
Charlie Moore of Milwaukee probably was one of the most improved fielders and hitters in baseball this season. He has a good arm, he hit .254 with some power and there's few any better in the clutch.

Speaking of which, George Hendrick comes to mind. With 104 RBI, 19 homers and a .282 batting average this season, the St. Louis right fielder has all the tools.

Hendrick in a landslide.

PITCHING
Only one name need be mentioned: Bruce Sutter of St. Louis.

Milwaukee's pitching staff started the season suspect and wound up that way. Although Pete Vuckovich won 18 games and lost only six, the Brewers will have to go with more than a one-man rotation. Lefty Mike Caldwell gets the opening bid, bringing with him a 17-13 record and 3.91 ERA. Bob Forsch, 15-9 and 3.48, goes for St. Louis.

The Cards team ERA this year was 3.38, while the Brewers were at 3.98. And with Milwaukee's Rollie Fingers inactive since Sept. 2 with a torn muscle, Sutter has the field to himself with his 36 saves and 2.90 ERA.

The Cards get a substantial edge.

MANAGER
Harvey Kuenn of the Brewers took a 23-24 team on June 2 and turned it into the winningest team in baseball, finishing the season with 95 victories. That alone speaks to his effectiveness as a manager.

But the man in the Cardinals' office, Whitey Herzog, has this election all tied up. Herzog took Kansas City to Western Division titles in 1976, '77 and '78 before assuming control of the lowly Cardinals, whom he has in the World Series in his third season. No name is uttered more often in the St. Louis clubhouse than Whitey's when it comes to explaining the Cardinals' meteoric rise.

Give the man credit, and a slight edge over Kuenn.

Pintor Strives To Keep Title

By The Associated Press
Fighting always has been part of Lupe Pintor fights — fighting to collect money for the ice cream he sold as a kid in the streets of Cuajimalpa, Mexico, fighting for the world bantamweight title, fighting to keep it.

Yet, the 27-year-old Pintor didn't have much desire to fight for awhile after the Johnny Owen affair.

Johnny Owen was a frail-looking, 5-foot-8½ Welshman called the "Merthyr Matchstick." An excellent boxer, Owen never had been knocked down... that is until he fought the 5-foot-4½ Pintor, who in the tradition of Mexican boxers fights wars of attrition.

Pintor knocked down Owen in the ninth round, then knocked him out in the 12th round of a World Boxing Council title defense Sept. 19. Owen remained unconscious until he died 45 days later.

Of course there was an outcry.

But there was no negligence involved with the fight. There were boxing people that believed the frail Owen to be in over his head against Pintor, but the Welshman had a 25-1-1 record and was European champion.

To many people, his death cannot be justified under any conditions.

But Owen's father said on the death of his 24-year-old son, "... we knew boxing had its risks."

Johnny Owen died at work, and it is this realization which has enabled Pintor to continue fighting.

"I didn't feel I had the desire to fight," said Pintor. "But that is my business. There's risks you have to take in life. These accidents happen in all sports. But it is business, and you must keep on striving."

The main thing Lupe Pintor is striving for is to be recognized as a great fighter by his countryman — to get the kind of recognition given to the late Salvador Sanchez, who was a good friend of Pintor's. He can take a big step in that direction Dec. 3 when he challenges Wilfredo Gomez of Puerto Rico for the WBC super bantamweight title in the Orange Bowl at Miami underneath Thomas Hearns' bid for the WBC super welterweight title against Wilfredo Benitez.

"I've known Gomez for the last 10 years," said Pintor. "We were amateur at the same time. I've been following his career and I know he's been following mine."

Gomez, who fought a draw in his pro debut, has lost only once while scoring all 37 of his victories by knockout. The loss was on an eighth-round knockout in a bid for the WBC featherweight title against Sanchez.

Pintor has toiled without as much media attention as Sanchez had, but he has toiled well, posting a 49-5-1 record, with 38 knockouts. Eight of those wins have come in title defenses.

Pintor became champion by getting off the floor to outpoint staminate Carlos Zarate, who retired after the fight June 3, 1979.

Zarate had gone into the bout with 53 knockouts in 54 fights. The only man to beat him before Pintor did was Gomez, on a fifth-round knockout in bid for the super bantamweight title Oct. 28, 1978.

It will be a tough fight, but Lupe Pintor knows well that his profession is a hard one.

Brewers Halt Forsch's Dream

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A dream of pitching against his brother in a World Series has been shattered for Bob Forsch, who tonight will instead face his former catcher.

"I feel bad about it," said Forsch, a St. Louis Cardinals right-hander and younger brother of California Angels pitcher Ken Forsch. "But I'm happy that we made it. It's great to be able to go out there and be a part."

Smashed by the Milwaukee Brewers in their comeback victory for the American League Championship Series was the hope of the Forsches for becoming the first brothers ever to duel on the mound in a World Series.

As a result, Bob Forsch's focus has now shifted in part to Ted Simmons, the Milwaukee catcher. The two were St. Louis batterymates for seven seasons beginning in 1974, the pitcher's first in the major leagues.

"Teddy and I went through a lot together," said Forsch, 32, who in April 1978 threw a no-hitter with Simmons behind the plate.

"I'm sure he knows all my weaknesses as well as my strengths. But he's only one of a lot of good hitters in their lineup," said Forsch. "I just hope, really, that I can keep the ball in the ballpark."

In his first postseason game, Forsch fired a three-hitter to spark a 7-0 victory by the Cardinals over the Atlanta Braves in the National League's playoff opener.

The masterpiece, requiring 104 pitches, set the stage for a three-game sweep by St. Louis. Forsch struck out six and walked none, only twice extending to a count of three balls.

"I'm not a strikeout pitcher," said Forsch after restricting Atlanta to three singles and facing only 30 batters.

"My style is ground balls. It may not look pretty, but it works if I have my control. I like to let them just hit it and let the defense have a little fun."

Sturdy pitching will, of course, be a requisite for the Cardinals if they are to capture their ninth World Series title, most by an NL team.

"It's just a good opportunity, because we've worked our tails off all year," said Forsch. "There was some question about our pitching, but we've had good pitching all down the stretch."

Through luck of the draw, Forsch will not be opposing former Cardinals right-hander Pete Vuckovich, the leading winner on the Brewers' staff.

Tonight's Milwaukee starter, Mike Caldwell, was, however, on the St. Louis roster briefly. Traded to the Cardinals in October 1976, he was swapped before the 1977 campaign to the Cincinnati Reds.

Rollie Fingers, the ailing Milwaukee reliever, was also St. Louis property from Dec. 10, 1980, when he was acquired from the San Diego Padres as part of a nine-player deal, until two days later, when he joined the Brewers in a seven-player St. Louis-Milwaukee transaction.

Fingers and Vuckovich each contributed heavily to a near-miss by the Brewers in the 1981 AL East Division playoff. Simmons hit only 214 but came back this year with a .269 average and 23 homers.

In return, St. Louis received pitchers Dave LaPoint and Larry Sorensen and outfielders David Green and Sixto Lezcano.

Although heavily criticized at the time by Cards fans, the deal has proven beneficial to St. Louis. LaPoint this year won nine games, and Green was a valuable young sub who hit .293. Sorensen was ultimately traded along with pitcher Silvio Martinez for outfielder Lonnie Smith and Lezcano for Steve Mura, a 12-game winner for St. Louis.

Darrell Porter has found it tough to fill the shoes of longtime fan favorite Simmons as St. Louis catcher, but has been of greater worth than his .231 batting average.

Interestingly, Porter's professional career began in 1970 as a $70,000 bonus player and first-round Brewer draft choice.

He was traded to the Kansas City Royals in December 1976. Later, after four seasons with Kansas City, he signed a five-year contract with the Cardinals as a free agent.

"It's been a good year; it really has," said Porter, who shrugged off his regular season woes to hit .556 as the Most Valuable Player in the NLCS.

Getting Team Ready No Task

RALEIGH (AP) — Preparing his team for Saturday's battle with 11th-ranked North Carolina won't be too much of a task for North Carolina State Coach Monte Kiffin.

"This is the kind of game which isn't very hard to coach," Kiffin said Monday. "You don't have to worry about the players getting up. The danger is getting them too high."

The Wolfpack, 4-1 overall and 2-1 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, had last week off and took the opportunity to get some of their front-line performers healed.

Tailback Joe McIntosh, sidelined against Virginia by a pair of hip pointers, is expected to start against the Tar Heels. His job won't be an easy one, however, since he'll be facing the nation's stingiest defense overall as well as the second best against the run.

"They have one of the great defenses in the country," said Kiffin. "They are better than they were last year on defense, and they remind me of that defense they had two years ago with Donnell Thompson and Lawrence Taylor."

Kiffin also said the Tar Heels' defense and the offense work in perfect harmony.

"They hammer you on offense and move the ball in long drives," he said. "They go 80 yards on you, giving a chance for their defense to be fresh, and they substitute well on defense, which also keeps them fresh."

The Tar Heels are one of five teams Kiffin ranks as capable of winning a national championship, but he also thinks they're capable of being upset this weekend.

"On any given Saturday, anyone can beat someone else," he said. "We just have to be prepared to play a great game."

Devils Must Play Hard

DURHAM (AP) — If Duke expects to defeat No. 20 Clemson next weekend, the Blue Devils will have to put in 60 minutes of hard work, Coach Red Wilson said Monday.

Duke held a 21-0 lead over Virginia Tech last weekend, only to squander the edge and suffer a 22-21 defeat.

"This game is behind us now and we must learn to work hard and play better for four quarters if we hope to win," said Wilson.

He said Duke played well enough to raise its record to 4-1, but got hurt by two plays. Mike Grayson fumbled near the end zone in the third quarter, while the Gobblers got a late touchdown pass and a two-point conversion to take the victory.

"I've been coaching a long, long time, but that was the most difficult defeat I've ever been involved in," Wilson commented.

To avoid dropping to .500, he said the Blue Devils will have to spend a lot of time preparing for the Tigers, who crushed Virginia 48-0 last weekend and returned to the Associated Press Top 20.

"They have as much talented material as anyone in the country. They are just beginning to come into their own," Wilson added. "They're awesome on defense. Behemoths everywhere."

Over The Line
Anne Audain, 27, of New Zealand, crosses over the finish line Monday at the Bonne Bell 10-kilometer road race in Boston. Audain crossed the finish in record time with a 31:41 time, slicing 22 seconds off the American record. This year's field had a record number of competitors with 7,700 women starting the race. Mediation Being Kicked Around By Both Sides As Strike Goes On

By The Associated Press
Mediation is the football being kicked around by both sides in the National Football League strike. For a long time, the owners seemed to be playing their own kind of game with it.

The owners said they wanted it. Forget it, said the players. Then they relented a bit. Private mediation would be OK, the players said. Forget it, said the owners. Federal or nothing.

Hey, wait a minute, the players said. You told us private mediation might be a possibility. Well, the owners replied, what we meant was...

Finally, both sides agreed to use the chief federal mediator but only to find a satisfactory mediator.

The wheels of justice do, indeed, grind slowly. And so the strike begins its fourth week today.

It had taken Ed Garvey and the union a few weeks to make what appeared to be a major conciliatory move to get the stalled negotiations going again.

It took Jack Donlan, the owners' negotiator, a few hours to junk it, reverting to his insistence on federal involvement.

It didn't take long for Garvey & Co. to give a little more ground, accepting federal mediator Kay McMurray as the means of finding a mediator — private or otherwise — acceptable to both sides.

Garvey is understandably wary of mediation, considering where he says it's taken him in the past.

In 1970, he said, the owners broke off the talks after a mediator entered the dispute. In 1974, they asked for a federal mediator "and then after he entered the NFL tried to break the union. We just have not had good experiences."

Albert Shanker, head of the New York City teachers union, has gone through a few strikes himself. He says Garvey's stance is understandable.

"Sometimes mediators help, sometimes they hurt, sometimes they're perfectly neutral," says Shanker. "A mediator can come in and take up an awful lot of time trying to learn something he knows nothing about. Or, worse, he can come in thinking he knows it all."

"In one of our disputes, back in the late '60s, there was this law professor. He'd just retired, a very prestigious guy... He'd once been on his local school board in some little town in Connecticut or New Jersey or something and here we are, trying to settle a dispute involving 70,000 people."

"Right in the middle of it he comes to me and — right in front of the board of education — he says, 'Look, here's one way you can save some money; why do you have to give the women teachers the same amount of money as the men? They can live on less or else they're probably married. That's what we do in my law firm.'"

"Let's just say this guy wasn't too helpful," Shanker observed.

Sometimes, Shanker said, the issues can be so simple that both sides can fight it out by themselves. Sometimes a mediator can bring a unique kind of expertise on the subject to the bargaining table.

But he doesn't necessarily come up with the package acceptable to both sides. More often he's the punching bag they use to get rid of their frustrations while they inch toward that middle ground of a settlement.

Donlan himself envisioned a scenario in which he and Garvey and their aides each sit in separate hotel rooms with the mediator ambling back and forth.

"The guy goes into Garvey," Donlan said, "and he says, 'Look, I think we can get Donlan to go for this thing if you'll agree to drop that thing. Whaddya say?' Then he goes across the hall to my room and he says to me, 'I think Garvey will go along with this if you stop holding out on that.' And then he goes back to Garvey says, 'Donlan will do this if you do that.' And Garvey says, 'Did he say he'll do that?' And the guy says, 'No, but I think I can sell him on it if you'll do this...' And all the while both sides are dumping their anger on the mediator instead of each other."

There's only one problem.

"The rule on mediation is very simple," said Shanker. "It's a voluntary process."

He can only nudge the parties to an agreement. He can't lay out a settlement and make them both buy it.

USSR Again Is Airing Gripes

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Soviet Union has again complained to the International Olympic Committee's executive board on the conditions for the 1984 games in Los Angeles, according to a published report.

The committee, meeting in Lausanne, Switzerland, on Monday brought up the issues with Joel Rubenstein, a vice president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, the Los Angeles Times reported today.

In a letter written by Sergei Pavlov, chairman of the Soviet Olympic Committee, the Soviet Union objected to the amount the athletes will be charged for room and board, complained that the LAOOC has not made enough information available to foreign Olympic committees on training sites and other facilities.

The letter said the athletes would be housed in areas too far from one another.

Pavlov asked for a full IOC inquiry, but board member Julian Roosevelt of the United States said the letter will be filed and no action will be taken on it.

The committee did however question Rubenstein on the issues and indicated there may be problems with the $45-to-$55-a-day LAOOC plans to charge athletes for living expenses, the newspaper said.

Bolivian Olympian Chairman Jose Zorilla said he believes the fee is excessive.

Pavlov has made the complaints before in talks with the LAOOC and in other countries. They also have been brought up in the Soviet newspaper Pravda.

1. Thirty-two football games are placed on these pages. Pick the winner of each game (not the score) and write the team name opposite the advertiser's name on the entry blank. The entrant picking the most correct winners each week will be awarded $25.00. Second place $15.00.
2. Pick a number which you think will be the most number of points scored by both teams in any one of the week's games listed and write your answer in the space provided on the entry blank. This will be used to break ties. In the event of a further tie the money will be equally divided between the winning entrants.
3. Only one entry per person per week. The contest is open to all except employees of The Daily Reflector and their immediate families.
4. Entries must be in The Daily Reflector office not later than 5:00 p.m. Friday or post marked not later than Friday p.m. Address entries to: FOOTBALL CONTEST, P.O. Box 1967, Greenville, N.C. (Reasonable facsimiles also accepted.)

DUNKEL COLLEGE FOOTBALL INDEX

EXPLANATION - The Dunkel system provides a continuous index to the relative strength of all teams. It reflects average scoring margin combined with average opposition rating, weighted in favor of recent performance. Example: a 50.0 team has been 10 scoring points stronger, per game, than a 40.0 team against opposition of identical strength. Originated in 1929 by Dick Dunkel.

Alabama Dethrones Mandrell With CMA Awards

BIG WINNERS — Alabama accepts the Vocal Group of the Year Award at the CMA Awards event. The group also took home the Instrumental Group of the Year and Entertainer of the Year Awards. (AP Laserphoto)

By JOE EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer
NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The young band Alabama, known for its progressive style, capped a rags-to-riches saga by dethroning Barbara Mandrell as entertainer of the year at the Country Music Association's annual awards show.

"There's a lot of great entertainers," lead singer Randy Owen said after the nationally televised awards program Monday night. "To be the first group to win it, it feels good."

The four-piece band from Fort Payne, Ala., was playing for tips just two years ago and was rejected several times by recording companies until RCA signed it to a contract.

Alabama, which has reeled off a string of hits including "Feels So Right," "Old Flame," "Take Me Down" and "Mountain Music," also won for top instrumental group and top vocal group. They are more progressive than traditional in style, although some of their instrumentals have a bluegrass flavor.

After receiving the bullet-shaped trophies at the Grand Ole Opry House, Alabama led its road crew in a backstage cheer, "Ain't We Having Fun Now!"

Miss Mandrell, who was co-host with Mac Davis of the 16th annual program, won no awards.

The petite singer, who has dominated country music awards shows in recent years, was among five finalists for entertainer of the year and top female vocalist.

Willie Nelson, who was writing songs before members of Alabama were born, won two awards — single of the year for the tender "Always on My Mind" and album of the year for the LP of the same name. He did not attend the ceremony.

"Always on My Mind" also won song of the year for writers Johnny Christopher, Wayne Thompson and Mark James.

Young Ricky Skaggs, acclaimed for his piercing tenor, won top male vocalist over Nelson, Merle Haggard, George Jones and Ronnie Milsap.

"Well, hrm. Didn't plan no speech," said the 28-year-old Skaggs, who has had a recording contract less than a year. Skaggs, who also won the Horizon Award as most promising newcomer, hit the top of the charts in April with "Crying My Heart Out Over You."

Janie Fricke, who toiled in obscurity for years as a backup singer at Nashville recording sessions before making such hits as "Baby, It's You" and "Playin' Hard to Get," was named female vocalist of the year. She beat out Miss Mandrell, Rosanne Cash, Emmylou Harris and Juice Newton.

Singer Marty Robbins, whose gunfighter songs like "El Paso" accented the western style of country music, was chosen for the Country Music Hall of Fame along with the late singer Lefty Frizzell and Roy Horton, a former music publishing executive.

"I never had any idea this would happen," said Robbins, a composer, musician and actor for more than 30 years. "It might not happen again, so I'm going to take it tonight."

Other winners included Chet "Mr. Guitar" Atkins, instrumentalist of the year, and David Frizzell and Shelly West, vocal duo of the year for the second straight year. David Frizzell and Lefty Frizzell, who died in 1975, are brothers.

Davis drew a gasp from the audience of 4,400 when he sang his latest release, "The Beer Drinkin' Song." The song mentions "Reaganomics" as one of the things that would drive a man to drink.

The song has been on the charts for three weeks and mentions by name President Reagan, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Soviet Communist Party boss Leonid Brezhnev as other excuses for drinking.

Winners were picked by the 5,000 singers, songwriters, musicians, disc jockeys and record company employees who belong to the association, which is the industry's trade organization.

The awards show launched a week of special country music-related activities in Nashville, including awards banquets, parties, concerts, a disc jockey convention and a Grand Ole Opry birthday celebration.

The program was also broadcast by about 100 radio stations.

A Review

Praise Earned By 'Das Boot'

Wolfgang Peterson's "Das Boot," the story of a German submarine operating during World War II and the men who served on her, truly deserves the accolade "masterpiece" that critics in Europe and the U.S. have heaped on the film.

"Das Boot" is now playing at Plaza Cinema. It was booked for one week, so there's only three more days left for moviegoers to see it. It shouldn't be missed.

Jurgen Prochnow as the submarine's captain gives an inspired performance that is matched by every other member of a fine cast of men ranging from teenagers to middle age professional military men. But the acting, superlative as it is, is but one of several factors that contribute to making "Das Boot" a film clearly destined to become a classic.

Peterson has made stunning use of the mechanical sounds of the submarine as an integral part of the story. Silence, the creak of metal, the hissing of steam, the dramatic explosion of bolts popping under pressure, and the chaos of a chorus of battle sounds all effectively parallel the expressions of fear, hope, gratitude to be alive, and despair engraved on the faces of the crew who have become attuned to living beneath the sea in a compact metal tube.

Living in these conditions, the men have developed a sensitivity to the needs of their comrades. They support and derive support from each other in the simplest human means, by a touch, a nod, a brief smile. The dialogue (in German with English sub-titles) is terse, meaningful. Every word, every gesture counts. There are no superficial distractions of wordy passages, no praise of the glory of the fatherland, no exultation in the victories they score in sinking Allied ships.

The photography is another strong element in "Das Boot." In quieter moments, the camera lingers on one face or a group of half shadowed faces in studies as compelling as a Rembrandt painting. In sequences where fast paced movement and the babble of shouted order tells the story, the camera brilliantly captures the choreography of men, grim-faced, bodies dirty and glistening with sweat as they respond to the discipline necessary for survival. The battle scenes — ships exploding at sea, flames leaping into the moonlight, the turbulence inside the submarine when depth charges score and toss the men about like helpless dolls, are superbly photographed.

No matter how much one prefers the routine of peaceful existence to the horrors of the death play of war, there's a fascinating wild force of beauty inherent in the brutality men can impose on one another.

"Das Boot" is a trenchant tale of one small group of men carrying out a deadly, specialized role in the total fabric of the complexities of modern warfare. There are no mock heroics. A dramatic victory against Allied shipping is accepted without jubilation, just as their harrowing brushes with death on two occasions are accepted with controlled fear and resignation. In one telling scene, when the submarine has slipped into a Spanish harbor to refuel and resupply, the captain doesn't bother to respond to effusive words of praise from German officers living a life of ease as internees in a neutral port.

The ironic, tragic fate of the submarine and its men clearly drives home the message that in war, there are no winners, only losers.

Rubenstein To Miss Tribute

NEW YORK (AP) — Master pianist and author Arthur Rubenstein will be forced to miss a dinner in his honor Oct. 18 because he is "not strong enough to travel" from his home in Switzerland.

The announcement that the 95-year-old maestro could not attend was made Monday by the Weizmann Institute of Israel, which is giving the dinner here in Rubenstein's honor.

The announcement said Rubenstein's son, actor John Rubenstein, would stand in. The institute, which is devoted to research and graduate training in basic and applied sciences, has invited 1,200 guests, including 17 Nobel laureates. Honorary co-chairmen are orchestra conductor Zubin Mehta and arts patron Avery Fisher.

FIRST MEETING

The Greenville "Sea Level Ski Club" will hold its first membership meeting for the 1982-83 ski season Thursday from 7-9 p.m. at the Phoenix Room nightclub, located behind the Attie.

Upcoming discounted ski trips and social events will be announced, a spokesman said, and ski films will be featured on the club's seven-foot video screen.

The spokesman said interested members and non-members are urged to attend.

Actor Faces Drug Charge

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Academy Award-winning actor Richard Dreyfuss was saved by his seat belt when his sports car flipped over, but faces a drug-related investigation stemming from the accident.

Dreyfuss, who played a sculptor paralyzed by an auto crash in his last movie, "Whose Life Is It Anyway?" was listed in good condition Monday at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center after his car overturned Sunday and slammed into a palm tree in a Beverly Hills canyon.

"It was his seat belt that saved his life," said Police Lt. Russ Olson.

Olson said a small amount of white powder believed to be cocaine was found in Dreyfuss' car and that the actor was "booked in absentia" for investigation of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs and possession of a controlled substance.

The 34-year-old Dreyfuss won an Oscar for best actor in the 1977 film "The Goodbye Girl." He also appeared in "American Graffiti," "Jaws" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

Hospital spokeswoman Tess Griffith said Monday that Dreyfuss was resting comfortably in the intensive care unit. She did not know when he would be released.

Dreyfuss' agent, Meyer Mishkin, told the Los Angeles Herald Examiner, "I've never seen him under the influence of anything. I've always seen him perfectly sober."

PLAYING GRACE — Cheryl Ladd will star in a movie about the late Princess Grace of Monaco, despite the death of the princess and former actress. Instead of calling the film "An American Princess," it will be titled: "The Grace Kelly Story." (AP Laserphoto)

Town Cancels Trick-Or-Treat

SHREVE, Ohio (AP) — Trick-or-treating has been canceled here this Halloween after two recent attempts to lure young girls into a car and the unsolved murder of a child in July.

Fear for the children of Shreve and other towns in southern Wayne County has been growing since the latest abduction attempt, Oct. 4.

In that incident, a man tried to persuade an 11-year-old girl to get into his blue sedan outside Shreve Elementary School, police said.

The girl, whom police have not identified, instead ran into the building crying, and the car was gone by the time a teacher got outside, police and school officials said.

Citing the community fears, Mayor Bruce A. Briggs ordered Halloween trick-or-treating canceled Oct. 31 in Shreve, a rural town of 1,600 people in north-eastern Ohio.

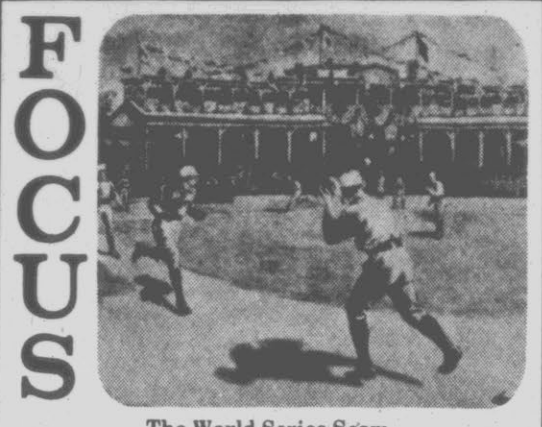

Police Chief Glen Wile said two other students at the school have reported seeing a blue sedan like the one in the abduction attempt.

"The two girls have been questioned and their descriptions of the vehicle match those of the attempted kidnap victim," he said Sunday. "The people are now pretty well convinced that the attempted abduction was for real and not a hoax."

In September, two men allegedly tried to kidnap an 11-year-old girl from the Wayne County Fairgrounds in Wooster, about 10 miles north of Shreve. The men fled when the girl began screaming, officials said.

Sheriff Loran Alexander has declined to say whether he believes the two attempts are related.

He also has not commented on any possible connection between those cases and the July abduction and slaying of Krista Lea Harrison of

FOCUS

The World Series Scam

Today, with the 1982 World Series scheduled to begin, only oldtimers remember the infamous Series of 1919 — the year the "fix" was in. That year it was the heavily-favored Chicago White Sox against the Cincinnati Reds. No one seemed to think it strange that big-time gamblers had bet two million dollars on the underdogs. But eight members of the White Sox knew the reason for the gamblers' faith in Cincinnati. For a fee, these players had agreed that Chicago would go into a Series "slump." Apparently against all odds, the Reds took the title. But the truth eventually came out. Baseball Commissioner K.M. Landis banned the offending players forever, and 1919 became the year of the "Black Sox" scandal.

DO YOU KNOW — Which team has won more World Series titles than any other.

Found Acid In Eyedrops At Colorado Store

By ELLEN HADDOW
Associated Press Writer
GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. (AP) — County officials ordered storekeepers here to remove liquid eye care products from shelves after two drops from a Visine A.C. bottle containing hydrochloric acid burned a man's eyes and sent him reeling to the floor in pain.

"It was like getting hit with a hot poker, I hollered pretty loud," said Larry Martin Tingley, a patient being treated for depression at the Veterans Administration Hospital, after using the eye drops Monday.

After Tingley was injured, police found a second acid-laced bottle of Visine A.C. at a store in Grand Junction, the biggest city on Colorado's Western Slope of the Rocky Mountains. The seals on the bottles had been broken and they contained a yellow, smelly liquid.

"Somebody obviously tampered with it," said Dr. Barry Rumack, director of the Rocky Mountain Poison Control Center in Denver. "What we don't know is whether it was done in the store, the distribution chain or exactly where."

Rumack cautioned consumers nationwide to make sure eye product seals are unbroken and to check for a pale yellow color and a sharp smell indicating acid contamination. Uncontaminated Visine is clear and odorless.

Officials in Mesa County, population 81,000, ordered shopkeepers to take eye care products off the shelves as hundreds of calls from concerned consumers flooded the poison control center.

Investigators feared the eye drops were contaminated by someone influenced by the seven Chicago-area poisoning deaths between Sept. 29 and Oct. 1 from cyanide in Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules.

"A madman can make his way around any kind of precautions that you can install," said Dr. Richard Hopkins, a state epidemiologist.

About 25 of the calls to the poison center in Denver were from people reporting a stinging sensation after using Visine, said Rumack.

"Part of the problem is that the Visine A.C. preparation normally will cause a slight pain when first instilled into the eyes," said Dr. Kenneth Kulig, a toxicologist at the center. "Right on the box there is a warning. The manufacturer called it a tingling sensation."

Local authorities, working with the federal Food and Drug Administration and the Colorado Department of Health, planned to inspect all eye washes before putting them back on the shelves, said Dr. Kenneth Lampert, director of the Mesa County Health Department.

The acid in the Visine A.C. bottle that burned Tingley was "stronger than battery acid," Lambert said.

The contaminated Visine had a "pale yellow color and very, very pungent odor," he added.

"I only used two drops and it dropped me to the floor it hurt so damn bad," said Tingley, 39.

Doctors said Tingley suffered only minor eye damage because a nurse immediately began flooding his eyes with water. He was "doing fine," VA spokeswoman Sheri Yelovich said today.

Grand Junction Police Chief Gary Leonard said acid had been added to a second bottle of Visine at the same store where Tingley had purchased his eye drops.

Tingley bought the drops Saturday while outside the hospital on a weekend pass. He first used it Monday morning, officials said.

Rumack said the bottles came from stock at a Target store at Mesa Mall in Grand Junction. The code number on both bottles was 122 and hydrochloric acid had been added to give the solution a pH of 2, which is very acidic, he said.

George Hite, vice president of public and consumer affairs at Target headquarters in Minneapolis, said the company is checking eye products in other stores to "make sure the bottle seals are unbroken." Target has 161 stores in 18 states.

Joseph Callahan, a spokesman for the maker of Visine, Pfizer Corp., said in New York that the bottles "clearly had been tampered with," and consumers should always examine the seal of any such product.

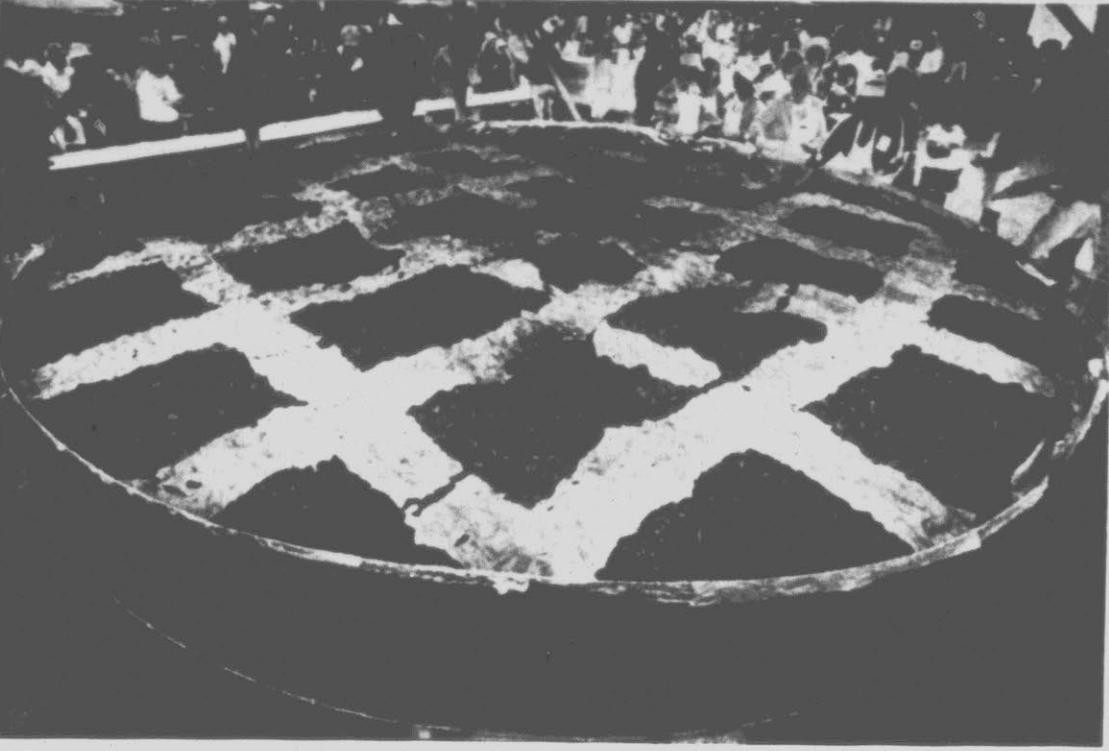

Kulig said a Denver man was sent to a hospital late Monday after he reported burning sensations following use of Visine A.C. But tests of the Visine bottle showed no contamination, Kulig said.

There have been tampering incidents in other parts of the country involving eye care products. In August, three Southern Californians were injured by eye drops and nose drops contaminated with sulfuric acid. At that time, two supermarket chains there took eye and nose drops and nose sprays off their shelves.

Last December, several people in Southern California reported being injured by acid-laced eye and nose medications at several stores.

Last week, a woman in Rialto, Calif., complained of being burned by Visine A.C. However, tests showed the acid level was normal.

BIG APPLE — Workers at the Hilton Apple Harvest Festival begin to cut into what organizers believe is the biggest apple pie ever made. The 10-ton, 18-foot diameter pie was a foot in diameter larger than a pie baked by the Orleans County 4-H Club in 1977 — which holds the record listed in the Guinness Book of World Records. The Hilton, N.Y. pie included 440 bushels of apples and took 24 hours to bake. About a quarter of the pie was consumed over the weekend by 10,000 people at $1 a slice during the festival. Two Wrecks Occurred Mon.

An estimated $2,800 property damage resulted from two traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police Monday.

Officers said heaviest damage resulted from a 10:15 p.m. mishap at the intersection of Forbes and 11th Streets involving cars driven by Carolyn Bright McClendon of Route 2, Ayden, and George Mitchell Duke Jr. of Wendell.

Police, who charged Ms. McClendon with failing to stop for a stop sign, estimated damage at $500 to the McClendon car and $1,000 to the Duke vehicle.

Cars driven by Edith Ann Perkins of 1816 South McClellan St. and Grady Bell Robertson of Route 3, Greenville, collided about 5:08 p.m. at the intersection of Evans and Howell Streets, resulting in an estimated $300 damage to the Perkins car and $1,000 damage to the Robertson vehicle.

Valuable New Hospital Plan Pays Cash Benefits Up To

$1,800⁰⁰ a month

$420⁰⁰ a week

$60⁰⁰ a day

Only ONE DOLLAR covers your entire family for the first month!

Collect up to $60.00 for every day in the hospital

You'll receive up to $60.00 a day for any covered accident or illness beginning with the first day you go into the hospital. You'll continue to collect benefits for as long as you're hospitalized—even for life if necessary.

Up to $240.00 Double Daily Accident Benefits

You'll collect up to $240.00 a day ($120.00 per person) if both you and your insured spouse are hospitalized at the same time as the result of any accident. Depending on the plan you select, this feature could be worth as much as $7,200.00 a month!

$20.00 a day for Home Nursing Care

You'll receive an additional $20.00 a day each time a Registered Nurse or Licensed Practical Nurse spends an 8-hour shift in your home after you have been hospitalized for any covered accident or illness. Nursing care must be ordered by your doctor and begin within five days from the time you come home from the hospital. Home nursing benefits will be paid up to one full year based on the number of days you spent in the hospital.

Up to $5,000.00 for loss of limb or eyesight

The American Citizens Health Plan will pay you an additional $5,000.00 in compensation for the loss of any two limbs or sight in both eyes within 90 days of an accident ($2,500.00 for the loss of a single limb or sight in one eye).

Optional Cash Benefits

All children covered for a single monthly premium
You'll receive up to $30.00 a day for each child hospitalized for any covered accident or illness when you add Children's Coverage to your basic plan. One premium covers all your unmarried dependent children from birth to 19 years of age.

Maternity benefits also available

Your wife will receive up to $60.00 a day for each day she's hospitalized for pregnancy and childbirth when Children's Coverage and Maternity Benefits are added to your basic plan. The mother must be insured for the entire pregnancy. Benefits will be paid from the first day for as long as needed. Miscarriage is also covered.

Cash benefits paid directly to you

All benefit checks will be made out to you and mailed directly to your home. You can use the money to pay the hospital or your doctor—or spend it any way you choose. It's entirely up to you!

Your benefits are not taxable

The cash benefits you receive do NOT count as "income" for tax purposes. This helps to make every dollar go further as you use these benefits to meet your needs.

Unlimited cash benefits

The American Citizens Health Plan will pay you as long as you're in the hospital for any covered accident or illness—even if you're hospitalized for the rest of your life. There are no limits on how long you can collect benefits!

You can never be cancelled

We can never cancel your insurance protection—no matter what your age or how much you collect in benefits—as long as you pay your premiums on time. Only you can cancel.

Pays in addition to any other insurance

To help pay your medical bills and everyday household expenses, you'll receive a check in addition to any other insurance benefits you collect. Even if you're entitled to "free" medical care at a VA or government hospital, we'll still pay you full benefits.

Your premiums stay the same year after year

Your premiums will NOT go up as you grow older and you cannot be singled out for a rate increase. Your premiums will only change if there is a general rate adjustment on all our policies of this type in your entire state.

Guaranteed acceptance (you can't be turned down)

You and your entire family will be accepted automatically in the plan of your choice—no physical examination required. . . no health questions to answer. You cannot be turned down!

Read how American Citizens Health Plan pays in addition to Medicare!

When you reach 65, the American Citizens Health Plan will pay you up to $30.00 a day to tie in with Medicare during the first 60 days of hospitalization. Then, just about the time when Medicare benefits are reduced, we will pay you up to $60.00 a day beginning with the 61st day for as long as you are in the hospital.

Your low monthly premiums include $20.00 a day for Home Nursing Care, Double Accident Benefits, and up to $5,000.00 for loss of limb or eyesight as outlined above.

You are not covered for . . .

In order to keep rates down and guarantee that everyone will be accepted with no medical questions asked, there is a limit of only one policy per person.

Also, some exclusions are required: You won't be covered for pre-existing health problems during the first year (any new conditions will be paid for immediately); losses resulting from acts of war, nervous or mental disorders, or use of narcotics, pregnancy, unless Maternity Benefits have been selected; and confinement in a nursing home or convalescent care facility as defined in your policy.

Economical Monthly Premiums

The chart below shows how little it costs to insure yourself and other family members. Remember, just ONE DOLLAR protects your entire family for the first 30 days from the time your policy is issued. So please ACT NOW—the sooner you apply, the sooner you are protected!

Premiums for FIRST DAY Coverage

Adult Age	$60.00 A Day (Monthly Premiums per Adult)	$30.00 A Day
Under 40	$15.00	$ 7.50
40-49	17.00	8.50
50-59	19.90	9.95
60-64	22.70	11.35

Optional Benefits

*All Children	10.20	5.10
Children & Maternity	15.50	7.75

NOTE: Rates do NOT increase as you grow older.

When policyholders reach age 65 or over both plans provide 50% of the Daily Hospital Benefit selected for the first 60 days of hospitalization and 100% thereafter.

*One premium covers all unmarried dependent children from birth to 19 years of age (regardless of number) for 50% of the Adult Daily Hospital Benefit selected.

Only $1 protects you and your entire family for the first month!

And for your convenience, you may charge your future premiums to:

Here's All You Do To Receive Your Policy

- 1 Check the box on your application for the coverage you desire (either $60.00 or $30.00).
- 2 Complete your application and cut it out along the dotted line.
- 3 Enclose just $1.00 with your application in an envelope and mail it to:
Plan Service Center
919 Sheridan Street, NW
Washington, DC 20011

Your Assurance of Satisfaction

When you receive your policy in the mail, look it over carefully. Discuss it, if you wish, with a trusted advisor and feel free to compare this Plan with other policies of this type. If, for any reason, you decide that you no longer wish to participate in the plan, simply return your policy within 30 days of receipt and we will promptly refund your money. In the meanwhile, you will be fully protected while you are making up your mind.
