Portent Of Things To Come

BETTER WATCH IT! — With Halloween coming up, this white cat is obviously not very superstitious, judging from the fact she nonchalantly crosses in front of a mummy who is about to reach down to grab her. Everybody, even cats, should know that you always pass behind, not in front of walking mummies. Perhaps the cat, aware she has nine lives, is not that overly concerned about her immediate fate. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

President Tells Tar Heels Critics Playing On Fears

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — President Reagan, cheered by a new inflation report, accused his critics today of "playing with people's fears" to improve their own political fortunes.

"The picture of fear and despair they paint on the network evening blues is a picture of where America was, not where she's going," the president said.

Reagan made the comment in a speech prepared for a Republican rally here as he campaigned for Republican House candidates and took aim at a vulnerable Democratic member of Congress.

Before the president left Washington, the government reported that inflation rose 0.2 percent in September, for an annual rate of increase of 2.1 percent.

"I can report to that, as of today, inflation has been knocked all the way down to 4.8 percent so far this year," Reagan said. "It's back to where it was in January of 1977, when Gerald Ford left office."

Sticking closely to his campaign theme that his economic program is already bearing fruit but that he needs more time to overcome the remaining problems, particularly unemployment, the president said.

"We are clearing away the economic wreckage dumped in our laps.

"Now, of course, you would never believe that if you listen to the drumbeat of doom and gloom from our critics," he continued. "They say this economy is on its knees. Well, you know something, if the economy is on its knees, that's quite an improvement because two years ago it was flat on its back.

"The truth is, our critics are playing with people's fears, trying to scare them into believing that things will get worse, so their own political fortunes will get better," he added. "It's time others stopped trying to scare people and subvert recovery."

The president, whose campaign speeches have focused almost entirely on the economy, returned briefly to a theme of earlier speeches when he vowed his continued opposition to abortion and his support for school prayer — two issues of keen importance to Sen. Jesse Helms, the conservative North Carolina Republican.

Reagan's 2½-hour visit to North Carolina marked his only political trip to the South during the current campaign, but he plans to visit four Western states later this week.

His remarks came at a rally and fund-raising reception intended to boost the chances of William Cobey, a GOP House candidate running in one of the few races where Republican strategists think they can dump a Democratic incumbent.

But the president also singled out each of the Republican congressional candidates in the state and mentioned in particular Eugene "Red" McDaniel, a former commanding officer of the aircraft carrier USS Lexington who was a prisoner of war in North Vietnam for six years. He is running against Rep. Charles Whitley, a three-term Democrat.

Cobey is running against Rep. Ike Andrews, a Democrat who represents the 4th District. Andrews was convicted earlier this month on drunken driving charges. Cobey, a former athletic director at the University of North Carolina, has the support of the National Congressional Club, a fund-raising group led by Helms.

"It's a good shot for us," said one Republican strategist who requested anonymity. "In an off-year, it's tough to beat incumbent Democrats."

The GOP strategist, who asked for anonymity, said that in North Carolina, a presidential visit one week before Election Day could add three points to the candidates' performance at the polls. Reagan carried the state in the 1980 presidential campaign.

The trip was the president's only appearance in the Deep South during the election campaign.

"It's an area where he is unusually popular. He's still 55-plus in every state down there," said the Republican strategist, referring to the president's standing in public opinion polls.

In addition to the rally, Reagan was to be the star attraction at a $200-per-couple Republican fund-raising reception.

Reagan planned to pause in his campaign work to give the Medal of Freedom to singer Kate Smith, 75, who lives in Raleigh. She will be honored for her efforts in selling government bonds during World War II. She is perhaps best known for her rendition of the song "God Bless America."

Reagan plans one more campaign trip before Nov. 2. On Thursday and Friday, he will speak at Republican rallies in Wyoming, Montana, Nevada and New Mexico, states where his support is strongest.

"The man will be out three days this week. The rest of the time he will govern," said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes.

Bids Approved By Council

By TOM BAINES

The City Council, meeting in a special call session Monday, approved bids for ball-field and tennis-court lighting and restroom construction at two park locations in the city.

A bid of $30,518 submitted by E & R Inc. of Kinston for field lighting at West Meadowbrook Park was approved, while E & R's bid of $9,771 for tennis-court lighting at Tom Foreman Park gained council approval.

Council members awarded the bid for restroom construction at West Meadowbrook Park to Bill Clark Construction Co. Inc. of Greenville for $6,500.

All of the work will be funded through Community Development allocations.

In other business, the council approved a three-year lease-purchase agreement with the leasing section of Southern National Bank of Charlotte for word processing equipment. The agreement calls for city payments of $20,460 per year for three years to Southern National, which will serve as the lease-purchasing agent in securing the equipment for the city.

The bid for the word processing equipment was awarded to Lanier Business Products for $55,384.44. The council rejected a bid submitted by Gray & Creech for $37,020 since it did not meet the city's specifications.

The council adopted a resolution declaring a used IBM typewriter as surplus to the city's needs and approved the sale of the item to the town of Nags Head. The sale price will be negotiated.

Prior to the call meeting, members of the Tar River Task Force of the Chamber of Commerce met with the council to discuss the status of planning regarding a proposed boat ramp at the Town Common and the overall development of the city-owned property.

Parker Overton, task force chairman, said his subcommittee was asking for the endorsement of the council to pursue funding for the future development of the Town Common project.

Council members agreed that the city is interested in developing a long-range plan for the Town Common that would be a part of an overall master plan for the revitalization of the central city or downtown area. The council agreed that local resources, such as the chamber's task force, will be utilized in developing the comprehensive plan.

An ad hoc committee on comprehensive planning was named recently and will be identifying a number of areas, including the downtown section, that will be targeted for development plans.

Mac McCarley, assistant city attorney, and student intern Tom Marzilli discussed with the council members a draft of a proposed community noise ordinance. McCarley said a meeting to gain public input will be held tonight at 7 p.m. at city hall.

Mart Has Record Season

The Greenville Tobacco Market, which held its final sale of the 1982 season Monday, recorded the highest season average since the market began sales in 1890, according to the Tobacco Board of Trade here.

The board's sales supervisor, J.N. Bryan, said the market finished the season with an average of $178.99 per hundred pounds, up from last year's average of $171 per hundred pounds.

The record figure was established this year in spite of disappointing early sales averages that dipped substantially from initial auction results of 1981. On opening day in July, Greenville warehouses posted an average of $140.45 per hundred pounds, down from the record figure of $162.15 per hundred on opening day last year.

Bryan said the record average for 1982 was achieved through the sale of 44,354,663 pounds of tobacco for $79,388,473. In 1981, the market sold 45,220,065 pounds for $77,324,115.

Monday's final auction activities saw an average of $174.38 per hundred pounds as the market closed out the season by selling 112,505 pounds for $196,183.

Bryan said there were 50 sales days this season, compared with 53 in 1981.

The spokesman said total Stabilization receipts for the season amounted to 13,088,537 pounds, or 29.51 percent of total sales. Last year, the amount of tobacco placed under government loan here totaled 5.68 percent or 2,567,523 pounds.

Stabilization receipts Monday totaled 35,075 or 31.18 percent as offerings involved mostly leaf and nondescript grades, said Bryan.

Bryan urged farmers to designate their tobacco as early as possible for the 1983 season. "Early designation will make the operation of the 1983 marketing season as successful as 1982," he said.

The Greenville Market, which has completed 92 years of sales, has over two million square feet of floor space designated for the handling of tobacco, according to Bryan.

September's Rate Of Inflation Slow

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sharp new declines in mortgage rates helped hold inflation in September to a scant 2.1 percent, calculated annually, the government said today. It was the smallest advance in five months.

Gasoline costs, reflecting abundant supplies of oil, fell 0.1 percent, although food prices were up 0.5 percent, the Labor Department said in its new report on the Consumer Price Index.

Mortgage interest rates fell 1.5 percent.

As a result, consumer prices rose at an annual rate of 4.8 percent for the first nine months of the year. If held to that pace for the rest of 1982, the advance would match the 4.8 percent of 1976.

Inflation was 8.9 percent in 1981 and 12.4 percent in 1980.

The new figures are the last government price announcement before the Nov. 2 elections.

But inflation — already tempered markedly from the double-digit levels of previous years — has not been a political millstone for Republican candidates. Rather, the GOP has taken credit for the improved inflation results and pointed to the figures as a sign the administration's economic program is helping.

Indeed, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said in a statement that the new report indicates "this nation is on a steady course of lower inflation."

"The signs of economic recovery continue to appear in building-block fashion. While the economy is still weak, there is steady improvement and we expect stronger performance in the near future."

Private economists, though, attribute the slowing in consumer price increases to the serious recession, which has sent unemployment soaring to its highest level since 1940.

In addition, oil and grain supplies have been plentiful.

In today's report, the department said consumer prices rose a seasonally adjusted 0.2 percent in September, after climbing 0.3 percent in August and 0.6 percent in July.

Not since April had prices risen at such a slow 0.2 percent.

If prices rose for 12 straight months at September's rate, the yearly gain would be 2.1 percent after seasonal adjustment. The annual rate reported by the department is based on a more precise calculation of monthly changes than the figure the department makes public.

Colorado People Warned As Excedrin Capsules Poisoned

DENVER (AP) — Colorado stores were urged to pull extra-strength Excedrin capsules from their shelves after a man became ill from taking a capsule of the pain reliever laced with toxic mercuric chloride, authorities said.

After the poisoning Monday, state health officials advised residents to stop taking Excedrin and return what they have to the stores.

"I want people at home to put it in plastic bags and not touch it any more than they have to" in case police need to check Excedrin bottles for fingerprints, said Dr. Barry Rumack, director of the Rocky Mountain Poison Control Center.

He said handling capsules containing mercuric chloride, used in mercury batteries, fireworks and dyes, would probably not poison anyone who did not swallow them.

Larry Gomez, Denver district director of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, said he lacked authority to order stores to quit selling Excedrin, but called for voluntary action and said federal agents were checking store shelves for other tainted capsules.

At least one supermarket complied with requests to remove the Excedrin capsules from sale. All brands of medicine capsules were removed from the shelves of an Albertsons supermarket in Denver late Monday, said an employee who asked not to be identified.

The Excedrin incident was the latest in a rash of product taintings around the nation since seven people died in Chicago near the beginning of October after taking cyanide-laced capsules of Extra-Strength Tylenol.

William Sinkovic, 33, was listed in stable condition today, improved from critical, in the intensive care unit at Aurora Community Hospital after taking Excedrin found to contain the toxic substance.

A nursing supervisor said Sinkovic was conscious early this morning and able to speak.

Rumack said Sinkovic took three capsules at about 10 a.m. Monday. About a half hour to 45 minutes later he developed acute stomach pains and began vomiting and bleeding — symptoms of heavy metal poisoning, Rumack said.

Sinkovic's wife and mother both said late Monday they did not know where he bought the capsules. Rumack said the pills apparently were purchased within the past month, possibly at one of two local supermarkets.

Rumack said the bottle of poison capsules bore the lot number OKE 04 and an expiration date of Oct 83 on the bottom.

Tests showed that the unused capsules in Sinkovic's home were about twice as heavy as normal — weighing between 1.47 and 2.25 grams instead of between .61 and .75 grams.

Sinkovic's wife, Karlanne, said her husband was alone when he got sick. He called the "911" emergency number and paramedics from the Aurora Fire Department took him to the emergency room.

Dr. Kenneth Cuiig of the poison center toxicologist, said at least 10 capsules in the 60-capsule container were "abnormal."

Harry Levine, spokesman for New York-based Bristol-Myers, which makes Excedrin, said early today the company no immediate comment on the Colorado incident.

But Rumack said he talked Monday to Ben Lanan, medical director of the company, who hoped the spiking was a local problem and offered the services of Bristol-Myers labs.

On Monday, the Denver poison control center confirmed the presence of rat poison in an Anacin capsule turned in by a Grand Junction consumer two weeks ago after she noticed it looked suspicious. The poison was identified as warfarin and Rumack said at least one other capsule in the 36-capsule bottle was contaminated.

He said the bottle came from lot No. 1J14 that was at least a year old and authorities did not expect to find any more bottles.

In Bradenton, Fla., officials reported finding 30 bottles of laxative with broken seals in 13 stores.

Quieter Than Friedan — Judy's Presiding NOW

By PATRICIA McCORMACK

United Press International Judy Goldsmith, bespectacled former English teacher from the University of Wisconsin, gets a $7,000-a-year raise December 1 when she moves into the president's office of the National Organization for Women in Washington, D.C.

She is soft-spoken, as was Eleanor Smeal, the woman whose term is running out. As executive vice president, Ms. Goldsmith was paid $42,000. As president, she'll get $49,000.

The incoming president also is the first chief executive officer of the feminist organization with several years of on-the-job-training.

Soft-spoken well-paid presidents — such as Ms. Smeal and Ms. Goldsmith — are part of the new style these days for the nation's largest feminist organization. Ms. Smeal, who occupied the office five years, was the first paid NOW president.

As plans for NOW were recited by Ms. Goldsmith, it became plain that the organization is bigger, richer, tougher, a little more polite, and more precisely and professionally directed these days than it was at birth — with husky-voiced Betty Friedan at the helm, shouting out radical slogans that often drew attention by shocking.

A women's strike for equality and other media events — happenings meant to draw press, radio and television coverage — marked the early days. "Don't iron while the strike is hot" was one slogan strike-promoters pushed.

NOW, in refined and intellectualized ways, these days intends to get more legislators — male and female — with feminist leanings elected to state legislatures and national office, especially in states that failed to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment.

There will be no frenetic campaign to get ERA on people's minds again until that fact is accomplished, as Ms. Goldsmith told it.

NOW also will step up its fight on violence against females — spouse abuse.

Neither will NOW let up in its campaign against those who would turn back the U.S. Supreme Court's legalization of abortion on demand. On the hit list: the Catholic Bishops, the Moral Majority.

There will be no surcease either in the drive for economic gains for women — a battle Ms. Goldsmith said aims at insurance companies, Republicans in general and President Reagan in particular.

Ms. Goldsmith said on the matter of equal pay, women are moving backwards. "Ten years ago women averaged 67 cents for every dollar men earned," she said.

"Today, due to the same sex discrimination, women earn only 59 cents for every $1 paid men. That's a drop of 8 cents.

In the old days NOW had "task forces" working on major issues in the women's movement. Task Forces on working mothers, older women, equal pay, reproductive rights.

Ms. Goldsmith, as a former English teacher and lover of plain speech, sounded a bit embarrassed when she disclosed the new name for task forces.

"They are now called 'conference implementation committees,'" she said.

Talking with Ms. Goldsmith shortly after her election at the annual meeting of NOW in Indianapolis, one got the impression NOW will become even more big-establishment oriented — a trend indicated by the name change for "task forces."

Consider:

During Ms. Smeal's tenure, membership rose to 220,000 from 40,000. The budget to $13 million a year from $500,000.

Greater growth — and greater power — is on the NOW drawing board. Ms. Goldsmith said the present target is 1 million members. Dues are $35 a year.

During the convention, out-going President Smeal urged the organization "to tighten up, speed up, get more women elected to public office."

Ms. Goldsmith, who said she was raised a Roman Catholic and has no religious affiliation, was asked what she believes in. She didn't duck the question, but she stammered, not seeming able to put her feelings in words.

"What you believe in, is it something like the golden rule?" she was asked.

"Yes. A golden-ruler," she replied.

The golden rule directs people to do unto others as they would have others do to them.

Women show up poorest in the political arena, Ms. Goldsmith contends.

"The number in Congress is shameful. Two in the Senate, 17 in the House of Representatives. We must change that.

"Nationwide 14 percent of the state legislative posts are filled by women."

Is NOW aiming for representation that would be proportional to the female population — 53 percent women?

"I'd like to see it approach reasonable representation," she said.

Ms. Goldsmith allowed that one mandate from the recent convention doesn't exactly fit the "do unto others" philosophy.

"We are going to attack the Republican right wing for attacking women," she said.

"Are you seeking a meeting with President Reagan, or writing to him of these feelings?" she was asked.

"No. But we are sending messages to him through the press," she replied.

Does NOW, with its ambitious campaign to boost membership, contemplate starting its own political party?

"We have no intention in that direction," Ms. Goldsmith said. She said the effect of such a move would be to separate women from men in society, and that would create a ghetto.

Will NOW endorse a presidential candidate for 1984? It endorsed Jimmy Carter's unsuccessful re-election bid. NOW had not previously endorsed a presidential candidate.

Ms. Goldsmith would not rule out future NOW endorsements of candidates for the White House.

Some of NOW's marching orders, as hammered out at the national convention:

- Standing up against a draft for men or women.
- Supporting a nuclear weapons freeze.
- Fighting expansion of the nation's military budget.
- Taking the offensive against attempts by the far right and the Roman Catholic hierarchy to outlaw abortions and certain forms of birth control.
- Some 1,800 delegates approved a resolution requiring NOW's leadership "to develop comprehensive action and electoral strategy to defeat the far right and other anti-woman legislators."

The resolution said NOW would "continue to expose the role of the Roman Catholic Church hierarchy in the anti-abortion and anti-birth control movement."

Some wording from the resolution:

"The right wing is attempting to repress the victories in reproductive rights of American women by foisting upon us their reactionary views of the place women should have in society. The time has come to take the offensive on behalf of women's lives."

Passage of the resolution came after a lengthy debate over an unsuccessful proposal to draft a constitutional amendment that would "affirm a woman's right to control her own body."

The three-day convention approved four other resolutions, which will become part of NOW's agenda for the rest of the decade.

The resolutions called for an end to discrimination against women by the insurance industry, full recognition of the rights of lesbians, the promotion of feminist consciousness-raising programs and increased efforts to recruit minority members.

The recently-launched million-member campaign of NOW ought to help with the latter. Ms. Goldsmith said the recruitment campaign slogan is: "NOW does not expect every woman in America to join NOW — just the 100 million who are discriminated against."

Australian Family's Lifestyle Not Unlike The American Dream

By RON REDMOND
SYDNEY, Australia (UPI)—Meet the George Noars.

George, 50, works for the telephone company, drives a 1978 Ford, enjoys an occasional beer with the boys and watches rugby football on Sunday.

His wife Ann, 47, does the family shopping at Safeway or Woolworth's, loves Chinese food, hates housekeeping and has gone back to school to become a nurse-midwife.

The Noars, two of their four children, and Mrs. Noars' 73-year-old mother live in a white, two-story brick house on a quiet, tree-lined street in the Sydney suburb of Pymble. They have two dogs, three cats, three television sets and a trailer they take on camping trips to the beach.

"I guess you'd say we're average, middle-class Australians," Mrs. Noar said. "We're not fancy, but we lead a comfortable life." New Zealanders often dismiss Australia as a cheap, imported version of America.

The British also express shock at the "Americanization" of their former convict colony. They tend to look down their noses while casting a jealous eye at Australia's vast wealth, sunshine and relaxed informality.

For more than 3 million immigrants from all over the world, it offers a new, Down Under version of the American dream.

To Americans, the island nation of 14 million people seems like home away from home. They find Big Macs and bowling alleys, hot tubs and highways jammed with gas guzzlers. They also find people with similar gripes and problems.

George Noar is a sales consultant for Australia's government-run telephone company. He makes about $27,500 a year, putting him in what he calls the overtaxed and underappreciated middle class.

"We pay more tax and more percentage of our income than any other strata of income earners," Noar said. "The Australian average income is supposed to be about $300 ($330 U.S.) a week. That's about $15,600 ($17,160 U.S.) a year. No family has any possibility of living on that and doing the things they desire to do, particularly as far as their children are concerned."

"When you work hard and start getting somewhere, say in the $25,000 income bracket, then you begin to have a chance of doing something — of getting established. Instead, they tax you all the more."

The Noars complain they earn too much to qualify for most government assistance programs and not enough to use of tax dodges.

"The present (Liberal Party) government is for the top people in society and the Labor Party (opposition) is for the bottom people," said Mrs. Noars' mother, Mrs. Francis Madden. "That's unfortunate for the people in the middle, who really are the backbone of this country and who are footing the bill."

Mrs. Madden, whose architect husband died 20 years ago, said she feels her standard of living has declined in recent years. Her feeling is shared by many.

Home ownership, once taken for granted, is a fading dream for many young couples.

The median price of a home in Sydney is $91,630. It requires a down payment of about $19,000 and monthly mortgage payments of nearly $900 — or three times the average weekly wage.

A four-door family sedan costs $11,140. Gasoline is 42 cents a liter ($1.59 U.S. a gallon).

In American money, a 15-ounce beer at the corner pub costs $1 and a pack of cigarettes $1.32.

A movie ticket at most Sydney theaters is $6.32 and a meal for two at a moderately priced restaurant easily runs about $25.

A loaf of bread is 78 cents, a kilo (2.2 lbs.) of sugar is 55 cents, a kilo of potatoes 82 cents, and a dozen eggs $1.62. A kilo of rump steak costs $7.

But Australians eat well. "Our eating habits have really changed in the past 10 or 15 years," Mrs. Noar said. "We drink wine with most of our meals and enjoy a lot more variety than the traditional standard fare of roasts and lamb and that type of thing."

"I think the arrival of all these migrants has changed our lifestyle considerably," she said. "You can find just about any sort of restaurant in Sydney. I'd say we go out to dinner about once a fortnight (every two weeks)."

The large migrant population has also contributed to Australia's emergence in the arts and music, said Meredith Noar, 26, a medical student.

She said Australians no longer suffer from a sort of national inferiority complex stemming from the country's isolation and convict background. Britain used the continent as a penal colony until the 1850s.

"Australia is really a cosmopolitan country now," she said. "We were at the stage a few years back where it was really something if any Aussie made a name for himself overseas. Now, our films, writers, bands and artists are gaining recognition around the world."

Meredith's sister, Mandy, 21, attends acting school in Sydney. She said many young Australians gradually came to resent the American influence in particular.

"I used to hate it," she said. "Five or 10 years ago when I was in school it seemed like everything was American and there was a real thing against Americans. Now that we've got a little more confidence in ourselves, the anti-American feeling seems to have settled down a lot."

The Noars' other children are Charles, 27, who lives in Darwin in the remote, far north of the country and Jane, 19, who is making a pilgrimage to London, like thousands of young Australians before her.

Noar said Charles is a fisherman and buffalo hunter and part of a vanishing breed — the outback adventurer.

While most Australians regard the outback as the real soul of their country, few have spent much time in the sun-baked wilds and even fewer live there.

Australia is highly urbanized. About 61 percent of its population live in cities along a narrow coastal strip that runs north from Adelaide to Brisbane.

Noar said the image of the typical Australian — as a tanned and musclebound athlete out to conquer the sporting world to prove himself and his country — is changing with the nation's new sense of self-confidence.

"What we used to do is drink beer, eat meat pies and win everything at sport," he said. "We still drink beer and eat meat pies, but we don't feel we have to win at sport anymore."

The bride is a graduate of Seattle University and the bridegroom attended East Carolina University and Pitt Community College. After a wedding trip to Hood Canal and the Olympic Mountains, the couple will live at 123 SW 208th, Seattle, WA 98166.

Dear Abby

G's Not Committed, So Get Away, M

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I've always been the "Dear Abby" in my group, and now I'm writing to you for advice. I've been living with "G" for nearly two years. He's 29 and has been divorced for three years. I'm 24.

The problem is that "G" refuses to make any kind of commitment to me, but I'm totally committed to him! We never spend any holidays together. He always goes to his ex-wife's to be with her and their 5-year-old son.

He says he cares for me and doesn't want us to break up, but he just can't commit himself to anything yet.

He calls his ex-wife to talk to his son and ends up talking to her for an hour. I have the feeling that "G" is trapped in an emotional bind with his ex mainly because of their son. I make nearly as much as "G," but he is paying off a lot of old debts, plus child support, so I carry the bigger share of the load financially — rent, utilities, groceries, insurance, etc.

What is your advice? I love the guy, but I don't want to waste the best years of my life in a relationship without a future.

"M"

DEAR "M": I don't have a crystal ball, but from your letter I see no "G" in your future. He's not "trapped" in an emotional bind — you are. Your love for him is preventing you from doing what you ought to do for your own sake. Say goodbye to "G," and run like "h!"

...

DEAR ABBY: I have been married and divorced three times, and am engaged to be married to a man who has been divorced. We both have grown children.

We had planned to be married quietly out of state, but a friend of ours wants us to have a big wedding and reception for all our family and friends. Would this be appropriate under the circumstances? Please help us make the right decision. We want to do the right thing.

FORTYISH BRIDE

DEAR BRIDE: For a couple who have been to the hitching post a total of four times, I think a quiet, out-of-state marriage would be more appropriate.

...

DEAR ABBY: Last week I received the following commercially printed announcement in the mail (made-up names):

"James Smith and Nellie Brown are celebrating nine years together with the marriage ritual on Oct. 25, 1982. For this new stage in our lives we have chosen the names of John and Nellie Born. We ask your love."

Abby, can you please tell me what this means? Is it an invitation to a wedding? Is it a legal name change? Or what?

I can't keep up with the younger generation. I don't know whether to send a card, a gift, or just accept it as an announcement of some sort.

NELLIE'S CONFUSED AUNT

DEAR CONFUSED AUNT: Accept it as an announcement. If it were intended as an invitation, the time and place of the "marriage ritual" would have been included.

Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. Write to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Tobacco Needs Accord

Worried tobacco producers filled a meeting hall in Raleigh last week for a U.S. Department of Agriculture hearing.

Under consideration is whether or not the secretary of agriculture will reduce tobacco quotas for next year by 5 percent, 14 percent, authorize no reductions or an increase of 1 percent.

Many of the growers expressed the opinion that reducing the tobacco quota would put some producers out of business and would also increase the competitiveness of foreign-grown leaf.

Some speakers suggested returning to Congress for action to freeze the price support levels up to two years. It was their hope that such action would increase the competitiveness of U.S. grown tobacco with foreign tobacco.

The situation is serious for growers. Hugh Kiger of Leaf Tobacco Exporters Association said the United States' share of flue-cured tobacco exports has shrunk from 52 percent in the 1960s to 26 percent last year. There won't be any easy answers. Tobacco-state congressional leaders are not enthused about returning to Congress for any changes in the tobacco legislation, even if it is for a freeze in support prices. Any legislation which comes before Congress immediately opens attacks by anti-tobacco forces.

Without a quota reduction or a price freeze, there could be more tobacco than needed next year, driving market prices down and sending more tobacco to Stabilization Corp.

It is going to be important that tobacco-growing interests reach some accord on what is needed to best serve their needs. More than ever, tobacco needs to speak with one voice. If it can be determined what is considered the best approach for tobacco farmers, then, certainly, the secretary of agriculture and the congressional delegation will be more than willing to act accordingly.

IT COULDN'T HAVE BEEN ALL RECOIL!

Baby Boom's Generation

By MAXWELL GLEN and CODY SHEARER
WASHINGTON — A well-heeled young friend of ours was drowning his sorrows the other day over drinks, unhappy with his lot as a member of the baby boom generation.

Taking up a familiar complaint, he moaned that "we're never going to be as successful as our parents." If there was an American dream, he said, "it's all over now."

Of course, our friend, 26, is one of millions his age who have arrived at this conclusion. As a card-carrying member of the baby boom generation, he's felt entitled to handicap himself with every ounce of sociological jargon available about high expectations, sheer numbers and diminishing returns. Like so many others, he's embraced books such as Daniel Yankelovich's "New Rules: Searching for Fulfillment in A World Turned Upside Down" as a defense against a creeping sense of failure.

His pessimism reflects a common belief that the baby boom generation's size has not only doomed its members' futures but helped to cause our nation's economic misery, too.

But while his resignation is no doubt useful in eliciting sympathy and monthly stipends from mom and dad, it may be as bogus as the foreign-made taste of Haagen-Daaz ice cream. Though unemployment tops 10 percent and national productivity stagnates, good 'ol dad seems to have been right when he said: "If you think things are bad now, you should have tried growing up in the Depression."

Indeed, as hard as it may be to swallow, the baby boom generation has fared better than its predecessors, according to Louise B. Russell, Brookings Institution economist, in a new book, "The Baby Boom Generation and the Economy."

After comparing the last two generations' access to education, housing and income, Russell concludes the baby boomers have no right to complain.

In education, Russell notes, more money was squandered on post-war kids, per student, than on members of any previous generation. The quality of instruction has also been higher. (In 1930, for example, only two states required that elementary-school teachers have a B.A. degree. By 1961, 44 states did.)

In the broad matter of housing, a higher percentage of young couples own homes today than did 25 years ago. Between 1970 and 1980, for example, "the proportion of homeowners rose from 49 to 58 percent for the 25-through-29 age group, and from 66 to 76 percent for those 30 through 34," writes Russell. (In 1960, 44 percent of all husband-wife couples between 25 and 29 years of age owned homes.)

Though earnings didn't grow as rapidly in the 1970s as they did in the 1960s, baby boomers, according to Russell, have earned real incomes as high as, or higher than, those of any preceding generation.

Russell's conclusions are sure to strike each generation characteristically. For our parents, her work can only confirm a feeling that, by and large, their offspring haven't truly known economic hardship and high incomes — as a means to some end, not an end in itself — are likely to respond to this by saying: "Is that all there is?"

But both generations would probably agree that the future isn't necessarily a golden one. Most likely, says Russell, many of those who've become crestfallen during the '70s are in for even greater frustration down the road. "I can't predict that baby boomers will go on and do as well or better in the future," she said. "In fact, they may end up slipping."

Much of the debate over the baby boom's economic impact seems merely like a demagogue's exercise, far removed from the day-to-day world of Americans young and old. Yet, how this generation plans, spends, mates and dreams today will to some extent determine the nation's future. Already, feelings of disillusionment and disappointment have begun to nurture pessimism, hopelessness and even self-destruction among many young Americans.

What becomes of them and us remains to be seen.

Coops, CP&L Rates Settled

Eighteen electric membership cooperatives went to war by means of newspaper and television ads with Carolina Power & Light Co. when CP&L proposed an 18.7 percent increase in wholesale revenues.

The participants say the ads did not affect things. Nevertheless the coops and CP&L settled the issue with an agreement for rate increases averaging 8.9 percent, with the increases to start Jan. 1.

The cooperatives representatives did what they had to do in pursuing the interests of their customers. It is typical of the negotiating process which is so much a part of our free enterprise heritage.

Fortunately this issue has been settled amicably and, we trust, to the satisfaction of both sides. And those who eventually pay the rates won't bear the cost of a prolonged legal fight.

The Brouhaha At Yale

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK
An altogether splendid brouhaha is brewing at Yale University. The editors of The Yale Literary Magazine have had the temerity to sue Yale's president, A. Bartlett Giamatti, and the academic grove resounds with the clash of intellectual arms.

The Yale Lit, as it is known, was founded in 1836. For a century or so it provided a forum for the literary efforts of undergraduates; it also carried pieces by such notables as Rudyard Kipling, John Dos Passos and Ezra Pound. In the 1960s the magazine began to slide downhill. In 1970 the Yale Banner, publisher of the university's yearbook, bought the moribund magazine for $1. A few years later, the Banner offered The Lit to the Elizabethan Club, which turned it down. Finally, in 1978, three students bought the name, the rights and the non-existent assets for another $1. They raised roughly $600,000 in grants from various foundations, and they transformed the magazine into a quarterly that is downright lovely to look at — excellent presswork, heavy stock, large body type.

But one thing was wrong: The new owners were — shhh! — conservatives. Under the editorship of Andrei Navrozov, the Yale Lit began to carry essays by such writers as (ugh!) John Chamberlain. An advisory committee was formed, including such figures as (aargh!) Irving Kristol, William E. Simon and Eugene V. Rostow. The magazine dared to criticize (oooh!) The New York Times.

Well! These goings-on were perceived as teddible, teddible, teddible by the local literati. One professor fumed that The Lit had become a publication "with a clear anti-Soviet, right-wing slant." Another professor denounced the magazine as "a whore in red." The Yale Daily News complained bitterly that The Lit was supported by rich conservatives "who drive Rolls-Royces," and The News demanded that the magazine be restored to undergraduate custody. "We want our literary magazine back."

Navrozov, who was graduated from Yale in 1978, refused to cave in. He kept publishing writers with a conservative, anti-communist point of view. His father, the celebrated Soviet defector Lev Navrozov, contributed some stinging essays. Yale's liberal establishment found it intolerable that the name of Yale should be associated with such balderdash.

Thus the administration devised a way to rid itself of this impertinent interloper. A revised manual of regulations was whopped up, requiring that any publication with "Yale" in its title must be initiated and controlled by students. "Decisions about the contents of each periodical, the editorial policy and the business policies and practices are to be made by Yale College students."

Navrozov and his associates are Yale alumni. Though they have undergraduates on their editorial board, clearly the new rules and regulations would exclude them. Moreover, the revised manual would prohibit The Lit from the kind of fund raising that subsidizes its hefty bills for printing and engraving.

On Oct. 1 Navrozov erupted with a long letter to President Giamatti. It was not the kind (Continued on page 6)

Move By Gilmore

By PAUL T. O'CONNOR
RALEIGH — In the polls showing Democratic voter preference for the state's next governor, Tom Gilmore is little more than an afterthought. He's way behind most of the major candidates and, on a multiple choice question, he'd easily lose to "Don't know" and "Don't Care."

But in a race that's been dragging on since at least 1979, and which will not be settled until the spring of 1984, there still is no clear front-runner.

There's limited enthusiasm in Democratic quarters for the three leading contenders — Atty. Gen. Rufus Edmisten, Insurance Commissioner John Ingram and Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green — and so there's a host of lesser known candidates running. Gilmore must be figuring he has just as good a chance as any of them.

Gilmore's biggest claim to fame is his work fighting the proposed constitutional amendment that would have doubled the length of legislators' terms to four years. Gilmore spent six months putting an organization together that led to the overwhelming defeat of the proposal in the June primary. It was a brilliant move for the former three-term Guilford County legislator. It was an apple pie issue that got him some exposure and helped him form a statewide organization. At the same time, the only people he made angry were legislators.

Now Gilmore has another project. He's established the

PAUL T. O'CONNOR

Committee on Constitutional Integrity and lined up 34 prominent North Carolinians to serve on it with him. "Forces have been at work in our state to undermine the constitution and to circumvent the rules by which democracy functions," Gilmore said at the announcement of the committee's formation. "We stand on the threshold of a constitutional crisis of great proportions."

Gilmore may be overstating things but he and his committee are about to address a problem that many reasonable students of government will agree is getting out of hand. The separation of powers principle set out in the state constitution has suffered considerably in the past decade.

"The legislative and executive branches of our state government are currently involved in power plays. Each branch is attempting to Ever wondered who decides what pictures will appear on postage stamps and why? Thousands of Americans don't bother with such niggling questions. They simply mail their ideas for postage stamps to Washington and wait for their creativity to appear on the next commemorative stamp. Most of the time it doesn't.

A member of the Postmaster General's Stamp Advisory Committee was interviewed the other day and offered some intriguing information about postage stamps.

At a recent meeting of his committee, an agenda of 89 pages — in other words, hundreds of stamp ideas — was considered. Many of the ideas were respected.

But it was not the committee's worthy entries that interested us. The rejects, throw-aways and outcasts proved far more memorable.

A Palm Springs, Calif. resident sent a photograph of his swimming pool to be memorialized on a postage stamp. Another writer suggested the commemoration of Jesse James, the notorious outlaw who killed and robbed throughout the West.

From New York came a proposal for commemorating a Brooklyn Christmas parade. A grade school group suggested the class cat. Another writer proposed that America's 10 most wanted criminals be commemorated. Our favorite entry, however, came from a man who wanted the devil to appear on a stamp provided the stamp was issued in Hell, Mich.

We have our own exotic ideas for commemorative postage stamps, of course. But none of them will be revealed right now. That treat is reserved for the Stamp Advisory Committee, which probably received our letter yesterday. We'll keep you posted.

Business Didn't Use The Idea

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — It may not be considered fair to recall it, but didn't the White House originally maintain that the economic mess resulted from too much spending on consumption and too little on improving production?

That seems to be the case, but it has almost been forgotten by everyone, including perhaps the people in the White House, who now eagerly await the resumption of consumer spending as the best way out of the recession.

It is not the first time such a change has been made. President Nixon reversed himself and froze prices. President Ford suddenly went from being a booster of growth to a worrier about inflation. President Carter announced several different economic policies during his tenure.

Reagan's shift was dictated by unforeseen circumstances, and seems to be interpreted by him as a surface change unrelated to his basic position that the industrial might of America must be restored and improved.

Industry, however, didn't act on his program. With idle capacity throughout almost every industry, though concentrated in the older, heavy industries of the Midwest, businessmen declined to accept his package of tax incentives.

Business didn't announce that it wouldn't act. In fact, businessmen repeatedly issued statements of support for the general thrust of the Reagan plan. But, with factories already idle, they declined to build new ones.

They blamed the recession, and repeatedly announced that until consumer spending picked up, they weren't about to spend on expansion and would spend only sparingly on improving their existing facilities.

The consumer at first was unable to accept the leadership role, and later he appeared unwilling to do so. The big problem was the recession, a good part of which is considered to be a consequence of the Federal Reserve's tight control over the money supply, a policy that sent interest rates to their highest levels of the century.

Looking back, historians might see something contradictory about the White House urging business to spend and the Federal Reserve making it almost impossible to do so. The Fed won: Neither business nor consumers spent.

Now, according to the statistics, the consumer is becoming better able to buy things. He has cut his installment credit bills, and has even saved a bit of money. Interest rates are coming down too, making it less costly to borrow.

Consumers, however, don't make decisions on the basis of statistics, except those statistics that relate to the number of dollars in their wallets. The statistics say consumers should be spending. But consumers aren't spending.

It isn't particularly difficult to figure out why. Though falling, interest rates are still high. So is unemployment. And so is fear — fear that unemployment will spread, fear that the economy won't be recovering soon.

If the ability to spend is there, the willingness clearly isn't, as almost any large retailer can tell you.

Some retailers, including automobile dealers, see other phenomena at work.

People are making do: The average age of cars on the road is now more than seven years and rising. And some may have concluded they have enough: With two cars, three air conditioners, two refrigerators and three television sets why buy more, especially when you haven't got that much money left in the bank?

The most unsettling possibility for why consumers aren't spending is that they've been told so clearly and firmly that they shouldn't be doing so. The unmistakable message from the White House has been to cut, tighten, conserve.

The president sold them on the idea.

Strength For Today

HAPPINESS HAS TO BE WON

Perhaps the worst thing one can teach a child is that life will be easy on him. If his whole life is centered on the conviction that the pathways must always be kept smooth beneath his feet he will bedevil his parents, later his wife and children, quarrel with his associates, and worst of all, be continually frustrated.

Life is a struggle, and let us never delude ourselves with any false teachings to the contrary. The Declaration of Independence put the matter cogently when it said that among man's inalienable rights are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The Declaration does not guarantee happiness to people. It guarantees them the right to pursue happiness, and this is quite a different matter.

Nobody can give us happiness. We must go through birth agonies first to lay hold on it; and then we must exert constant effort to cultivate it. — Elisha Douglass

NEW YORK (AP) — It may not be considered fair to recall it, but didn't the White House originally maintain that the economic mess resulted from too much spending on consumption and too little on improving production?

That seems to be the case, but it has almost been forgotten by everyone, including perhaps the people in the White House, who now eagerly await the resumption of consumer spending as the best way out of the recession.

It is not the first time such a change has been made. President Nixon reversed himself and froze prices. President Ford suddenly went from being a booster of growth to a worrier about inflation. President Carter announced several different economic policies during his tenure.

Reagan's shift was dictated by unforeseen circumstances, and seems to be interpreted by him as a surface change unrelated to his basic position that the industrial might of America must be restored and improved.

Industry, however, didn't act on his program. With idle capacity throughout almost every industry, though concentrated in the older, heavy industries of the Midwest, businessmen declined to accept his package of tax incentives.

Business didn't announce that it wouldn't act. In fact, businessmen repeatedly issued statements of support for the general thrust of the Reagan plan. But, with factories already idle, they declined to build new ones.

They blamed the recession, and repeatedly announced that until consumer spending picked up, they weren't about to spend on expansion and would spend only sparingly on improving their existing facilities.

The consumer at first was unable to accept the leadership role, and later he appeared unwilling to do so. The big problem was the recession, a good part of which is considered to be a consequence of the Federal Reserve's tight control over the money supply, a policy that sent interest rates to their highest levels of the century.

Looking back, historians might see something contradictory about the White House urging business to spend and the Federal Reserve making it almost impossible to do so. The Fed won: Neither business nor consumers spent.

Now, according to the statistics, the consumer is becoming better able to buy things. He has cut his installment credit bills, and has even saved a bit of money. Interest rates are coming down too, making it less costly to borrow.

Consumers, however, don't make decisions on the basis of statistics, except those statistics that relate to the number of dollars in their wallets. The statistics say consumers should be spending. But consumers aren't spending.

It isn't particularly difficult to figure out why. Though falling, interest rates are still high. So is unemployment. And so is fear — fear that unemployment will spread, fear that the economy won't be recovering soon.

If the ability to spend is there, the willingness clearly isn't, as almost any large retailer can tell you.

Some retailers, including automobile dealers, see other phenomena at work.

People are making do: The average age of cars on the road is now more than seven years and rising. And some may have concluded they have enough: With two cars, three air conditioners, two refrigerators and three television sets why buy more, especially when you haven't got that much money left in the bank?

The most unsettling possibility for why consumers aren't spending is that they've been told so clearly and firmly that they shouldn't be doing so. The unmistakable message from the White House has been to cut, tighten, conserve.

The president sold them on the idea.

Minority Scores Dominate College Board Meeting

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The annual meeting of the College Board is focusing on problems cash-strapped universities are having with poor and minority students, and the problems those students are having with college admission tests.

the board, a private, non-profit body representing 2,500 colleges and high schools which also administers the Scholastic Aptitude Test, featured panelists Monday who said that state colleges are starting to stiffen admissions standards because many freshmen lack basic skills needed for college success.

It's OK, they can make up the skills they don't have when they get to college, is a violation of truth in advertising. It's a cruel trick," Edward Q. Moulton, chancellor of the Ohio Board of Regents, told the gathering. He said campuses in the Ohio university system already are tightening admission requirements.

needed because less than half those who enter public colleges in Ohio complete four years successfully, he said, "and dramatically less than that for minorities."

"Our board in December will consider course prerequisites for admission to all four-year public colleges for the first time," said the panel's moderator, J. Richard Pizzo, director of the Office of High School Relations of the Oregon State System of Higher Education.

But higher standards were criticized as potentially discriminatory by others, especially black and minority speakers.

Hard Choices In Chrysler Vote

DETROIT (AP) — A United Auto Workers leader predicted a close vote today as Chrysler Corp. workers make a "heart-wrenching" choice between working without a quick pay raise or walking picket lines during the holiday season.

The company's 43,200 working UAW members, along with an uncalculated number of the 40,000 workers on indefinite layoff, were eligible to vote in the one-day referendum, which both analysts and UAW leaders said was too close to call.

The workers are deciding whether to strike at 10 a.m. on Nov. 1 or stay on the job under terms of an expired contract until early next year, when talks would resume.

"I hope that they will vote to extend the (expired) contract; I would not like to see a strike," UAW secretary-treasurer Raymond Majerus said in an interview Monday. "However, I respect the right of the membership to make that decision."

"Right now, they favor ... option one" not to strike, Joe Games, president of UAW Local 1183 in Newark, Del., said after chatting to rank-and-file members at the polls as voting got under way today.

Turnout was high for members of UAW Local 47, with 200 of 350 workers casting ballots at the Detroit Forge plant in 3½ hours of voting today, said one union official, who asked not to be identified.

A new round of contract talks stalemated Oct. 18 when Chrysler officials told the UAW the company could not afford an immediate raise for autoworkers.

Majerus, second in command at the UAW, would not predict the outcome of the vote but said: "The decision to strike is a very difficult one. That's a heart-wrenching proposition."

Officials at the nation's No. 3 automaker say a strike could cripple the company, which was saved from bankruptcy over the past three years by worker concessions and government loan guarantees.

Asked whether the coming holiday season would prompt some workers to vote in favor of staying on the job, Majerus said: "Obviously it has to be a consideration, but whenever workers are called upon to strike, there's a sacrifice involved whether it's a Christmas holiday, a Thanksgiving holiday or a weekly paycheck."

Last week, some local union officials predicted workers would vote to extend the contract rather than face the holidays without jobs.

Industry analysts, noting that a strike could have been called without the referendum, said last week that UAW President Douglas A. Fraser had called for the vote to give workers time to consider the consequences.

"He (Fraser) has said he doesn't want to strike Chrysler and that he got the best contract he could get out of them," David Healy, analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in New York said.

"He probably feels the rejection of the tentative contract was kind of a protest vote. The workers made their point. But now their choice includes the possibility of no toys for Christmas, and winter picketing," said Healy.

Majerus said some workers, who "have made tremendous sacrifices," resent Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca.

"I share the view that while Lee Iacocca has been very good for Chrysler, I sort of resent the notion that he has not given the workers the credit they deserve," he said. "He's always talking about the future of the company, what about the future of the workers?"

Chrysler workers, now earn an average $9.07 per hour, about $2.60 less than their UAW counterparts at other auto manufacturers. They rejected by a 70 percent margin an earlier tentative contract that did not provide for an up-front wage boost.

Union leaders have said the pact was rejected, in part, because Iacocca had publicized Chrysler's $1 billion cash reserve, raising worker expectations.

Workers have given Chrysler more than $1 billion in concessions over the past three years to keep the automaker from bankruptcy.

The rejected pact was the first since 1979 that did not contain concessions, and it reinstated cost-of-living allowances and tied wage increases to quarterly profits, both to start in December.

In addition to worker concessions, the company also received $1.2 billion in federal loan guarantees. Chrysler lost $3.27 billion from 1979 to 1981. It made a $256.8 million profit in the first half of 1982.

Cocaine Plane Carried $300 Million Drug Cargo

LAFAYETTE, Ga. (AP) — Law enforcement agents staking out a northwest Georgia airfield "had the whole airstrip covered" when a plane carrying $300 million in cocaine touched down, the FBI says.

FBI agent Al Millard said there was a brief exchange of gunfire, but no one was injured, and soon the agents had seven suspects in custody and had seized 647 pounds of "very high-grade" cocaine, the third major cocaine seizure since July.

Two of the suspects, John Oscar Luck, 52, of Clarkston, Ga., and Franklin Crump, 44, of Alpharetta, Ga., were being held without bond because they already were out on bond on unrelated charges. The other five were being held in $5 million bail each.

All seven — the pilot and co-pilot of the twin-engine Piper-Navajo-Panther and five men waiting on the ground — were charged with violating federal narcotics laws. All were being held in the Floyd County jail.

When the plane landed after a flight from Colombia at about 12:45 a.m. Monday, agents of the FBI, the Drug Enforcement Administration, the U.S. Customs Service, the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, the Georgia State Patrol, the Walker County sheriff's office and the Lafayette police were waiting.

"We didn't know in advance how they were going to unload the drugs," Millard said. "We had the whole airstrip covered."

He said agents exchanged gunfire with three men who tried to flee in one of four cars waiting for the cocaine shipment. One shot hit the suspects' car and the three men ran into the undergrowth, Millard said. One was arrested immediately and the other two were captured with the help of a bloodhound.

Millard said the cocaine, wrapped in plastic, had a wholesale value of $64 million. John Glover, FBI agent in charge of the agency's Atlanta office, put the street value at about $300 million.

In addition to the airplane and the cocaine, the agents seized a small amount of marijuana and four cars waiting on the ground to pick up the drugs, authorities said.

At a bond hearing later Monday, Assistant U.S. Attorney Steve Wisebran asked U.S. Magistrate Clinton Morgan to deny bond for all seven, saying they could afford to leave the country.

After setting the bond, Morgan scheduled a preliminary hearing for Nov. 2.

It was the third major cocaine seizure in the area in four months. In July, state and federal agents seized about 1,100 pounds of cocaine valued at about $400 million in Bradley County, Tenn., just north of the state line. Last month, cocaine valued at more than $500 million was found in containers in a woods near Ellijay, Ga., about 60 miles east of here.

Millard said agents "do not know what connection" the latest seizure may have with either of those cases.

In addition to Luck and Crump, the suspects were identified as Ralph Larry Pace, 24, of Cumming, Ga.; William Page Vicary, 48, of St. Claire Shores, Mich.; Gene Claude Easterling, 50, of Cayce, S.C.; Charles Donald Boldin, 43, of Clarkston, Mich.; and Johnny Ray Moore, 50, of Houston, Texas.

See Bountiful Crop A Loser

By The Associated Press
Rowan County farmer Murray Corriher says it's been almost 10 years since he made a taxable income on his corn crop. That was in 1973, when he earned $10,000, and the next year, when he made $22,000.

"It has all been downhill since," he said, even though this year he just finished harvesting 15,000 bushels of corn on his 400-acre farm.

Corriher and other North Carolina growers are facing a gloomy harvest this year because state officials say a glut in the corn market has kept corn prices down. That, plus limited export opportunities, has depressed the corn market for the past three years, they say.

Corn for grain is the state's fifth-largest agribusiness, generating $260 million in farm income in 1981.

North Carolina is the nation's 13th leading corn producing state. This year, corn production is expected to exceed 157 million bushels, a 4.6 percent increase from the 1976 state record crop of 150 million bushels and 11.3 percent greater than last year's 141 million bushels.

But the bumper crop means farmers are having a harder time making ends meet. Everett Nichols, an agricultural economist at N.C. State University, said farmers this year will spend nearly $3 per bushel to raise corn but will receive about $2.20 per bushel at market this year.

In 1980, farmers received $3.38 per bushel and $2.65 in 1981, he said.

Part of the problem also stems from a lack of foreign business. President Reagan offered two weeks ago to sell the Soviet Union 23 million tons of grain, but some agriculture officials think the Soviets will not purchase the full amount.

Last week Reagan also told farmers that the administration would make available next year $500 million in guaranteed loans to foreign companies and governments in an effort to increase farm exports, including corn grain.

Phil Haas, chairman of the Mecklenburg County Agricultural Extension Service, said developments this year mean tough times for corn growers.

"In short, farmers are taking a beating," he said.

Story Of Treachery In Britain Covers 3 Decades

CHARGED — Geoffrey A. Prime, a former translator charged with spying for the Soviet Union, achieved what American officials consider one of the lengthiest and most damaging penetrations of Western intelligence since World War II. (AP Laserphoto)

By ROBERT GLASS
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Harold "Kim" Philby, Guy Burgess, Donald Maclean — the roll call of treachery in Britain's spy network stretches over three decades of cold war with the Soviet Union.

On Monday, lawmakers demanded that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher answer questions about a possible new addition to the list — a Russian-language interpreter who reportedly spied for the Soviets at Britain's top-secret electronic espionage center.

The United States has long complained of what it called British blunderings that allowed the Soviet Union to penetrate Western intelligence.

Now U.S. officials have leaked to the press what they claim is potentially the most damaging episode of all, one in which Moscow allegedly was fed a rich diet of top-secret information for 13 years.

The scandal focuses on the secret Government Communications Headquarters at Cheltenham, nerve center of a worldwide network of surveillance bases and satellites said to be run jointly by British intelligence and the U.S. National Security Agency.

On July 7, Geoffrey Arthur Prime, 44, reportedly a former translator of Russian at Cheltenham, was arraigned in a British court on espionage charges described by a prosecutor as "of the gravest possible nature."

Britain's stringent 1911 Official Secrets Act prohibits full disclosure of details. Mrs. Thatcher was expected in Commons today in a routine appearance to answer legislators' questions about current issues and was expected to be questioned about the Prime case.

Considering the government's stony silence so far, however, it was not likely she would be willing to reveal many details on the latest allegations, which surfaced Sunday in a New York Times report from Washington.

According to U.S. officials quoted by The Times, Prime worked at the center from 1968 to 1981 and had access to highly classified information on intercepted Soviet communications.

With his help, the Soviets could have altered their secret codes and fed the West misinformation for more than a decade, the account said.

London press reports said the United States requested a comprehensive report on the case and was alarmed and annoyed when Britain failed to produce one.

"If American intelligence is accusing Britain of damaging security leaks to the U.S.S.R., we can be pretty sure they know what they are talking about," The Standard, London's evening newspaper, said in an editorial Monday. "This is one area in which the United States is professional and the British are a bunch of bumbling amateurs," it said.

Britain's spy agencies — the intelligence-gathering MI6, also known as the Secret Intelligence Service, and the counter-espionage MI5, or Security Service — have embarrassed a succession of British governments.

Most of the damage has been traced to a small group of intellectuals at Cambridge University who were converted to communism in the 1930s.

Among them was Anthony Blunt, a world-renowned art historian who acted as a talent scout for the Soviet KGB while serving as a wartime intelligence officer for Britain.

While a professor at Cambridge during the 1930s, Blunt belonged to a shadowy society known as the Apostles. Student members who came under Blunt's influence included Guy Burgess, Donald Maclean and Leo Long. Each was to become a Soviet operative.

Another member was Michael Whitney Straight, who in 1968 confessed to the FBI that he had supplied information to the Soviet Union — naming Blunt as a recruiter and Long as a recruit.

Both Blunt and Long, later a film director, confessed to MI5 in 1964, receiving immunity from prosecution.

By the time the government publicly identified Blunt in 1980 as a former Soviet spy, he was art historian to Queen Elizabeth II.

The government was forced to expose Blunt after he was linked to a treacherous chain dating to 1951, when Burgess, a spy based in Washington, and Maclean, a high-ranking intelligence officer in London, defected to Moscow as investigators closed in on them.

In 1963, Harold "Kim" Philby, then a British spy in Beirut, Lebanon, also fled to Moscow, apparently after being tipped that he was about to be uncovered as a double agent. Blunt, who had met Philby in 1961, denied he had tipped him.

Blunt is believed to have worked for the KGB for 30 years. Details of his operations have not been made public.

The spy scare came to a boil again last year, when espionage specialist Chapman Pincher alleged that a former director-general of MI5, the late Sir

Roger Hollis, had been a double agent for the KGB.

Hollis, who ran MI5 for nine years until retiring in 1965, had participated in Blunt's interrogation.

Mrs. Thatcher acknowledged that Hollis was investigated twice as a possible spy but said neither inquiry produced proof. She ordered a year-long review of the spy agencies, which recommended a general tightening of security.

Demand Report

LONDON (AP) — Opposition lawmakers, charging Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher with covering up a security breach at the secret electronic espionage center, have demanded a government report on Britain's latest spy scandal.

"It is quite clear that the government has not satisfied our U.S. allies that they have investigated the matter properly, and they have certainly not satisfied Parliament," declared Alan Beith, chief business manager in the House of Commons Commons for the small Liberal Party.

Beith demanded the body launch its own probe of security measures in the intelligence network.

Labor Party member Donald Anderson on Monday submitted a formal "question" on the issue to Mrs. Thatcher, meaning she must respond to Parliament within 48 hours.

But she was expected to be faced with questions about the intelligence leaks today when she appears before Commons in the regular period for lawmakers' questions to the prime minister.

In a radio interview, Anderson accused Mrs. Thatcher of a "possible cover-up and an attempt to hide the true facts.... If the prime minister failed to reveal anything like the total picture ... she should be brought before the House to account for that."

Attorney General Sir Michael Havers refused to reply Monday to questions in Commons over allegations that vital secrets from Britain's Government Communications Headquarters at Cheltenham had been passed on to the Kremlin by an employee.

Havers said a man had been charged under Britain's stringent Official Secrets Act and therefore "it would not be right to have further public discussion until the trial has been completed."

On July 7, Geoffrey Arthur Prime, 44, reportedly a former translator of Russian at Cheltenham, was arraigned on espionage charges described by a prosecutor as "of the gravest possible nature." The prosecutor did not give any details, citing the 1911 Official Secrets Act.

On Sunday, The New York Times quoted unidentified U.S. officials as saying that Prime worked at the center from 1968 to 1981 and had access to highly classified information on intercepted Soviet communications.

With his help, the Soviets could have altered their secret codes and fed the West misinformation for more than a decade, the account said.

Sub Escaped

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Defense officials have concluded that the foreign submarine hunted since Oct. 1 escaped more than two weeks ago while the navy dumped tons of explosives into Hors Bay in a futile effort to make the intruder surface, a newspaper reported today.

The Svenska Dagbladet, quoting what it said was an unpublished Defense Staff report, said the government probe of the incident shows that the alien sub escaped through an outlet in the northern part of the Hors Bay search area by maneuvering just above the seabed.

It said the vessel escaped no later than Oct. 7, or one week after its periscope was sighted outside the top secret Musko Naval Base, located on Hors Bay about 20 miles south of Stockholm.

Sonar contacts with a possible submarine were made outside Hors Bay on the night of Oct. 8, and navy helicopters dropped a carpet of depth charges on the suspected vessel's position in nearby Mysing Bay, the newspaper said.

The Defense Staff report was quoted as saying that the sub escaped between helicopter sorties.

Earlier government reports on that sighting said the contact outside Hors Bay might have been a second sub, or the original intruder.

The report, which according to Svenska Dagbladet will be used as a basis for future submarine hunts, said a total of 35 depth charges were dropped and four mines were exploded in the fruitless hunt.

The main reason why the sub escaped was the navy's lack of sufficient technical equipment, such as suitable submarine nets, the newspaper added.

According to the navy, dozens of alien submarines have violated the territorial waters of neutral Sweden in recent years. A Soviet submarine ran aground off a vital naval installation in southeastern Sweden in late 1981, and was escorted from Swedish waters after being held for nine days.

Earlier this month, Sweden warned that alien submarines found in its waters in the future will meet a firmer Swedish response, possibly including being blown out of the water.

Not Honored As Nice Guy

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A Fort Knox soldier named the Army's top drill sergeant of the year is the first to admit that he didn't get the honor by being a nice guy.

Sgt. 1st Class Charles W. Fitzpatrick, 30, a Vietnam veteran who grew up in Morehead, Ky., beat out 1,200 of the Army's toughest sergeants for the Stephen Altes Award.

"I was somewhat surprised, but in a way I wasn't," he said in a recent interview. "I deserved it."

Sporting a short haircut and a humorless demeanor, Fitzpatrick is the epitome of spit and polish, a no-nonsense soldier.

But isn't he really an easy-going fellow beneath that tough exterior? "No," he says.

Fitzpatrick's men say it's his acute observation that sets him apart from other sergeants.

"He'll spot a little loose thread sticking out of your pocket, or if your brass is an eighth of an inch off," said Sgt. Gary Armand. "He doesn't yell at you. He kind of, uh, embarrasses you in front of everybody."

To win the award, presented last month, Fitzpatrick faced batteries of questions from several committees of officers and wrote an essay on "Today's Soldier: Quality, Caliber and Motivation."

Poultry
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina f.o.b. dock broiler market was steady. Supplies light to moderate. Demand moderate. Weights desirable. The dock weighted average price for this week is 42.19 for small purchases of plant grade broilers picked up at processing plants. Estimated slaughter today, 1,741,000.

Hens
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina hen market was higher. Supplies light. Demand moderate. Prices paid per pound for hens over seven pounds at farm for Monday and Tuesday slaughter was 21 cents.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices were broadly lower in mid-session again today but the retreat in prices was modest compared with the plunge in the previous session — the second-worst in Wall Street history.

Declines led advances by a wide margin on the New York Stock Exchange, with more than 1,100 stocks losing ground.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which tumbled 36.33 points Monday to fall below 1,000, lost another 4.33 points after two hours of trading today and stood at 990.80.

Big Board volume totaled 44.13 million shares at noon EDT, against 39.64 million at that hour Monday.

The drop in the Dow Jones industrial average Monday was the measure's largest single-day decline since it plummeted a record 38.33 points on Oct. 28, 1929 in the Great Crash of that year.

Because that calamitous decline occurred from a much lower starting point, however, it was about three times as great as Monday's on a percentage basis.

Before Monday, the measure had risen more than 250 points since late summer amid investors' expectations that interest rates would keep falling.

Those expectations were dashed late Friday when the Federal Reserve Board did not cut its discount rate from 9.5 percent, disappointing many on Wall Street. The rate is charged on Fed loans to private financial institutions.

With renewed fears that interest rates might again turn up, investors rushed to cash in their recent gains, putting further selling pressure on the market.

Today, however, interest rates on short-term Treasury securities edged lower. On the NYSE, Exxon fell 1/8 to 29 3/4. A 1 million-share block traded at 29 7/8.

The NYSE composite index lost 0.53 to 76.12. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 4.46 at 311.96.

New Tower For Charlotte Set

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — The opening of the new Nova Plaza Hotel in the next three weeks will be followed by the building of a $5 million, five-story tower, the builder said Monday.

"We expect to break ground soon - it's in the architect's hands now," said Farley Gharagozou of Swiss-American Corp., the designer and builder of the project for International Property Investment Corp.

The new tower will maintain the Spanish-style exterior design of Courtyard Plaza, Gharagozou said, but will have an oriental motif inside.

Our older citizens are many times the unfortunate victims of fraudulent schemes. Our artists are sick. A free brochure on Defensive Living for Older Adults is available at the Police Department.

Cite Few Clues In Slaying Case

Investigators were continuing a search today for two men who shot A&P Supermarket co-manager Howard Manning Jr. to death in a holdup here Saturday night.

Chief Glenn Cannon said this morning that "we are continuing the investigation," but noted "we have no leads."

Manning and a co-worker were accosted by two masked men about 9:50 p.m. as they walked from the A&P store in Greenville Square Shopping Center to a nearby branch of Branch Banking and Trust Co. to make a deposit. Medical Examiner Stan Harris said Manning was shot in the abdomen with a shotgun during the holdup.

Manning died an hour after arriving at Pitt County Memorial Hospital for treatment.

Commenting on the killing this morning, A&P manager Ernest Willoughby said "the facts" that appeared in Monday's edition of The Daily Reflector "were in error."

Willoughby said "the amount of money is not true," and "no amount of money has been given out," except to investigators.

Willoughby also said Manning was "shot in the back at point blank range and there's no way you can tussle with anybody like that. It's the criminal's fault, not Howard's," Willoughby continued, suggesting that for Manning to have tussled with the robbers would have been "an indication he was asking for trouble."

Cannon, when asked about Willoughby's comments, said the victim's clothing had been "disarranged," which led him to believe "there apparently had been a tussle."

Both Cannon and Willoughby this morning declined to give the exact amount of money taken in the holdup.

However, other sources close to the investigation said today the robbers took about $19,000 in the holdup. A third of that amount was in the remainder in stamps.

Neither Side Weakens As Strike Drags On; No Talks Now Set

By The Associated Press
The National Football League and its players are locked in a defensive battle with neither side showing many signs of weakening.

"There's no reason for me to sit here and say, 'If we just sit in there a little while longer, everything's going to be all right,'" said Atlanta Falcons owner Rankin Smith, adding that the longer the strike drags on, the more likely it becomes the NFL season will be called off.

New Orleans Saints player representative Russell Erxleben says the striking players would give up their wage scale demands if the NFL management came up with an acceptable alternative.

"But we won't take it off the table until they come up with something," Erxleben said. "They don't like it, but they won't give us an alternative. We don't have an alternative."

On Monday, Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL Players Association, talked by telephone to Jack Donlan, management's chief negotiator, suggesting the two groups return to the bargaining table which was abandoned Saturday.

"What for?" Donlan asked, according to Jim Miller, the NFL Management Council's spokesman. "We met for 12 days in Maryland and there was no movement on the economic issues. So unless there's a change in your position, there's not much sense in getting together."

Later, Garvey said he felt the negotiations could resume by the end of this week.

But Chuck Sullivan, chairman of the Management Council's executive committee, said it was "very unrealistic... Based on what he (Garvey) continues to adhere to, there's no basis for negotiations right now. This isn't an argument as to how much. It's an argument as to what."

The strike has wiped out five regular-season weekends thus far. This coming weekend's games could be called off as early as today.

The NFL has said that a 12-game schedule, including two makeup weekends, is the acceptable minimum. Again, the players disagree.

"We could play an extended season until February," said

Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Butch Johnson. "We had a playoff game in 37-degree-below-zero temperatures last year."

Erxleben said the union would consider any offer by management that covered all or the majority of a five-point plan drawn up by the players union in August. The plan called for the league to:

- Provide immediate substantial wage increases for virtually all players.
- Guarantee players a fair share of future NFL revenues.
- Eliminate wage inequities.
- Produce longer careers through elimination of incentives to cut older players for financial reasons.
- Reward performances through significant incentives.

Kuenn Decides To Return As Manager Of Milwaukee Brewers

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Harvey Kuenn, the man who managed the Milwaukee Brewers to the 1982 World Series, is coming back in 1983, and the applause being heard is from team management and players.

The rehiring was "just great," said pitcher Jim Slaton after Monday's announcement.

Brewer President Bud Selig said he was delighted with Kuenn's decision to return.

Said third baseman Paul Molitor: "There is definitely no one on the team that dislikes the man."

"From a personal standpoint, we're all pleased to have him back," said Harry Dalton, Brewers' executive vice president and general manager.

The Brewers announced that Kuenn had agreed to a one-year contract, terms of which were not disclosed.

Kuenn, 51, said he didn't want a contract for a longer period. "I guess I'm different than a lot of people," he said. "I wouldn't want to tie the club down for two years."

Kuenn became interim manager June 2, replacing Buck Rodgers, who was fired after the Brewers had lost 14 of 21 games and had fallen into a tie for fifth place in the American League East.

Kuenn's message to the club when he took over — "Be loose. Have a laugh. Go out and play the game and have fun" — resulted in the team finishing with a 72-43 record under Kuenn and capturing the division title with the best record in baseball, 95-67. They went on to win the American League championship before losing the World Series to the St. Louis Cardinals in seven games.

"He's seen the different managers, and he knows the personalities, and that's the biggest thing about managing," Slaton said.

Kuenn's health had been a consideration in naming him interim manager, Brewer officials said.

He underwent heart bypass surgery in 1976, stomach surgery in 1977 and amputation of his right leg in 1980.

"The only concern Harry (Dalton) and I had from June 2 on was Harvey's health — that was paramount," said Selig. "Once we were fully satisfied that Harvey was well, that was it."

Kuenn said he remained in good health throughout the season.

His wife, Audrey, said Monday that team members had asked her after the season to "keep him healthy because they needed him next year."

Pittsburgh Moves Into No. 1

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh is No. 1 again, edging Washington out of the spot it had held in The Associated Press college football poll for six consecutive weeks, but neither team's coach was particularly excited by the change.

"It's best to be undefeated. If you're winning, everything else takes care of itself," Pitt Coach Foge Fazio said Monday night.

"As I've been saying all year, it's the final poll that counts. The national championship is still our goal," Washington Coach Don James said.

Despite an offensive struggle for Saturday's 14-0 win over unranked Syracuse, Fazio said he isn't surprised his Panthers were back on top.

"Nothing surprises me anymore. Nothing surprises me about how they vote," he said.

The Huskies received more first-place votes in the poll released Monday, but Washington missed the top spot by four points. Both teams remained unbeaten and untied.

The Panthers were No. 1 in the preseason and first regular-season polls, but dropped behind Washington after beating North Carolina and then slipped to third after defeating Florida State.

Fazio and James said they don't emphasize poll rankings.

"I'm sure our team will look at that tomorrow morning and say, 'Wow, that's really great.' But I don't think anyone's going to do cartwheels," Fazio said.

"I really haven't given the polls a whole lot of thought," James said.

Yet, Fazio acknowledged the poll can affect the Panthers' opponents.

"If I was coaching a team and we were unranked and we were playing the No. 1 team in the country, that's an added incentive. It's easy to get up for that," Fazio said.

But James said, "I think we've been getting everybody's best shot, but we may have gotten it anyway."

The Panthers' much-touted offense, with quarterback Danny Marino at the controls, has yet to deliver on its preseason promise for exciting football.

Against Syracuse, it produced just two touchdowns out of its 381 total yards.

Fazio said the win didn't disappoint him, although specific plays may have.

"We may have been ripe for an upset," he said, adding he was glad it didn't happen.

Pitt's first four victories were over teams ranked in the Top 20 when Pitt played them — North Carolina, Florida State, Illinois and West Virginia.

The Panthers received 21 of 58 first-place votes and 1,109 of a possible 1,160 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Washington, which did not score until the final 9:35 and defeated Texas Tech 10-3 Saturday, received 28 first-place votes and 1,105 points.

Georgia and Southern Methodist held onto the third and fourth positions, while Arkansas moved up from sixth to fifth and Nebraska slipped from fifth to sixth.

Georgia, a 27-14 winner over Kentucky, received three first-place ballots and 1,010 points. SMU, which downed Texas 30-17 and knocked the Longhorns out of the Top Twenty, received two firsts and 976 points.

The other four first-place votes went to Arkansas, which thumped Houston 38-3 and polled 909 points. Nebraska, which rallied in the final period to edge Missouri 23-19, received 824 points.

Arizona State, one of six unbeaten-untied teams in the nation, was idle and received 784 points while climbing from eighth to seventh. Rounding out the Top Ten were Penn State, Alabama and North Carolina. Penn State rose from ninth to eighth with 763 points after trouncing West Virginia 24-0. Alabama fell from seventh to ninth with 740 points after a lackluster 21-3 decision over Cincinnati and North Carolina, idle last weekend, remained No. 10 with 642 points.

The Second Ten consists of UCLA, Southern California, LSU, Florida State, Clemson, Miami, Oklahoma, West Virginia, Auburn and Michigan.

Auburn made it back to the Top Twenty after a three-week absence by trimming Mississippi State 35-17 and boosting its record to 6-1, while Michigan reappeared after a four-week lapse by crushing Northwestern 49-14. The Big Ten thus placed a team in the Top Twenty after missing last week for the first time since The AP poll began in 1936.

Pender Tops Valkyries

BURGAU — In a match that featured two undefeated teams, Pender County outlasted D.H. Conley 15-11, 7-15, 15-6 here Monday to advance to the semifinals of the state high school volleyball tournament.

The Valkyries finish the year 20-1 — the best record in the school's history — and tied for fifth in the state. Pender County is now 21-0.

"We did not play very well," D.H. Conley coach Martha McCaskill said. "I felt we had the better team but we didn't play that well."

"Pender County is good, though," she added. "I don't want to take anything away from them."

Pittsburgh Holds Top On Computer

Pittsburgh continues to lead the Daily Reflector's Computer Rankings after eight weeks of play by the nation's NCAA Division I-A teams.

The Panthers lost ground, however, this past weekend, as Penn State picked up a good deal of ground with its victory over West Virginia, moving past Georgia into second place. Georgia clipped to fourth this week.

Most of the top 20 teams remained the same overall, with only three new entries. Washington, Clemson and Michigan moved in, taking over 17th through 19th, respectively. They replace Tennessee, Notre Dame, and Hawaii, which fell from the list.

Washington, which dropped off the top of the AP poll following its 10-3 win over Texas Tech, still holds the lead in the UPI selections. The Huskies were only 22nd on the computer rankings a week ago.

The poll is a strict mechanical listing, awarding six points for each game a team wins. Additional points are added for each game a team's victim wins (four each), and for each game that team's victims win (two points). Ties split points.

Thus the rankings reflect strength of schedule to that point of the season.

North Carolina, which had an open date this past weekend, fell from ninth to 14th place.

Kiffin Warns 'Pack To Look For Fight When It Faces Gamecocks

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina State University's Wolfpack football team had better look for a tough fight this Saturday when it plays South Carolina, says State head football coach Monte Kiffin.

The Wolfpack, still smarting Monday from its 38-29 loss to Atlantic Coast Conference foe Maryland Saturday, takes a 4-3 record to South Carolina this Saturday. But Kiffin said at his weekly news conference Monday that his team should not be misled by South Carolina's 3-4 record.

He noted that the Gamecocks played No. 13-ranked Louisiana State close last week.

"South Carolina gave LSU all they wanted last Saturday night before LSU's fans in Baton Rouge, and believe me, you've got to be an outstanding team to play the way they did down there," said Kiffin. "I look for a tough, tough game."

Kiffin said he also is concerned that injuries may slow the Wolfpack down this Saturday, noting that split end Ricky Wall and right guard Steve Saulnier may not start.

"Saulnier has a bruised shoulder and Wall has a knee injury," Kiffin said. "Wall's knee isn't serious, but it may keep him out a week to 10 days. Then again, he may be back in three days. We don't know yet."

Free safety Eric Williams also may miss action due to a pinched nerve. Also sidelined this week are fullback Vince Evans and left tackle Doug Howard, Kiffin said.

But Kiffin said he has confidence in quarterback Tol Avery, whom he said enjoyed an outstanding afternoon against Maryland. "He was 22 of 33, he had four passes dropped and he could have been 26 of 33," he said.

Kiffin said the Wolfpack defense also learned a lesson Saturday when it realized a team can score points on them — but that doesn't mean the Wolfpack is out of the game.

"Our defense may have gained some confidence because they know they don't have to shut out someone to win," Kiffin said. "They know our offense can score some points. That should make them play more relaxed and play better."

Suit Settled In Rein Death

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Attorneys for the widows of a former N.C. State University football coach and the pilot of the plane in which the coach and the pilot both died did not divulge the amounts of out-of-court settlements given to the women.

Attorney Jack Benjamin of New Orleans, who represented Suzanne Kay Rein of Cary, N.C., wife of coach Bo Rein, confirmed Monday that a settlement had been reached in his client's $10 million damage suit.

Lawyers said the pilot's widow, Patsy Gail Bowen Benschoter, also settled out of court but would not give any figures.

Rein was a former NCSU head football coach who accepted a job to coach at Louisiana State University. He died in a bizarre accident in

Terps, NC TV Game

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS-TV will televise five college football games regionally Saturday, including Florida State at Miami featuring two members of The Associated Press Top Twenty.

The network announced Monday it also will show Texas A&M at Southern Methodist, Maryland at North Carolina and Illinois at Iowa. Those games, along with Florida State-Miami, will begin at 12:35 p.m. EDT with the pre-game show airing at noon.

CBS also will show the Arizona at Washington State game on the West Coast, with the kickoff scheduled for 3:30 p.m. PDT.

Earlier, ABC announced a national telecast of the Washington-Stanford game Saturday with the kickoff at 3:50 p.m. EDT.

Georgia Tech To Be Tough Devil Test

DURHAM (AP) — Duke football coach Red Wilson says the impending game between his Blue Devils and Georgia Tech Saturday will be a tough test for Duke.

Duke, which has dropped its last four games after a roaring start early in the season, must play an "error-free game (with) a 100 percent performance by our players" to win, he said at his weekly news conference Monday.

"Georgia Tech is one of the most rapidly improving football teams in the country," he said. "They've come off two straight seasons of just winning one football game and have already won four this year. This will be their opportunity to win five games for the first time since 1978." Wilson said that Tech quarterback Jim Bob Taylor "is an outstanding passer, and (tailback Robert) Lavette is a top-notch runner. They are able to generate a lot of offense."

Offense also is one of Duke's strong points. The Blue Devils are ranked 14th in the nation with total offense averaging 417.6 yards and fifth in passing offense with 303.1 yards per game.

But that offense was not enough to stop Maryland Saturday in College Park, Md., where the Terrapins racked up 49 points.

Duke got off to a bad start almost from the flip of the coin, Wilson said.

Cav Wing Leads Win

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Virginia football coach George Welsh said Monday the idea of using a winged-T formation on offense "had been floating around in my head for a couple of weeks" before the Cavaliers finally unveiled it against Wake Forest last Saturday.

The winged-T, along with several other new offhepled Virginia roll up 643 yards of total offense and snap an eight-game losing streak in a 34-37 win over the Demon Deacons.

The offensive outburst represented Virginia's second most productive game ever, surpassed only by a 691-yard day by the 1968 Cavaliers against Davidson.

The Cavaliers had over 300 yards both rushing and passing — a "first" for a Virginia team — and recorded their highest point total against a Division I opponent since a 38-28 triumph over William & Mary in 1974.

Spearheading Virginia's balanced attack was junior quarterback Wayne Schuchts, who completed 15 of 30 passes for a school record 320 yards and rushed for 53 additional yards.

"Wayne did very well," Welsh told his Monday news conference. "There was a lot of new stuff, and he handled it well. He broke some tackles running the ball, and threw well on the run."

Springing the winged-T on the fifth play of the game, Virginia repeatedly confused the Wake Forest defense in the first half, when the Cavaliers built a 31-14 advantage.

"We were trying to get some type of three-back offense to get some counter plays," said Welsh. "We'd reached a point where we had to do something, or maybe we weren't going to win a game."

Virginia's initial victory of 1982 after five defeats also was its first win since a 13-10 victory over VMI on Oct. 31, 1981.

Virginia entertains VMI this Saturday, and the Cavaliers will be seeking their 50th victory in the 76-game series with the Keydets.

Sylvester Stallone Entering Ring But It Will Be As A Promoter

By The Associated Press
Sylvester Stallone, who fights on film as Rocky Balboa, is entering the real-life boxing business as a promoter with a show next Saturday night at Las Vegas.

Stallone is to present a cable-television show under the promotional name Tiger Eye Productions.

"There is a saying: 'Each day one must face life with the eye of a tiger,'" says Stallone, explaining the name Tiger Eye.

Well, there is an old boxing saying (just made up) that "In the jungle, an unwary or unlucky tiger can be killed, but in boxing even a cautious promoter can be figuratively eaten alive."

Hold the laughter, you cynics.

Sylvester Stallone's trip into boxing is hardly an ego trip. How many people in boxing are better known? Stallone, through Balboa, the celluloid heavyweight champion of the world, must be a fighter in the minds of many.

"I'm not in competition with (Don) King and (Bob) Arum," Stallone says. "They are far superior to me (as promoters)."

There is a suspicion here that King fancies himself a superior actor, too.

"I'm interested in this on a grassroots level," Stallone says. "I want to see a fighter (develop) from the bottom up."

"I don't have options on anyone and don't want them," says Stallone, adding he wouldn't be upset if he should develop a fighter, only to lose him to another promoter.

"I want to make club cards into super events," he says. "I want to add a different kind of concept to promotion — make a fight like a show, develop an emotional interest in what's happening, not a mechanical interest."

One of the heavyweights in such an event could be a Stallone protege, Lee Canalito, who is managed and trained by Richie Giacchetti, who once worked with Larry Holmes, the World Boxing Council heavyweight champion, and King.

Stallone, sounding every inch a promoter, contends Canalito, who acted with Stallone in the film "Paradise Alley" is the hardest-hitting heavyweight in the world, even harder than Earnie Shavers. And Stallone knows how hard Shavers hits.

Shavers tried out for the Rocky III role of Clubber Lang, which went to Mr. T., Leon Spinks' one-time body guard, and Stallone recalls that while sparring with Shavers, the fighter "hit me on the shoulder and threw out my hip."

Stallone's first promotion will take place at Caesars Palace, site of many important bouts, and will feature a welterweight bout between Sean O'Grady, the former World Boxing Association lightweight champion, and Pete Ranzany and will include a middleweight bout between Vinnie Curto and Jeff McCall.

The show will be part of ESPN's televised "Saturday Night at the Fights" series, and Stallone will be one of the TV commentators.

Baseball's Mr. Fix-It Emerges As Most Wanted, Costliest Manager

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent
Billy Martin is baseball's "Mr. Fix-It." Head-strong, fiercely independent, fiesty and untamed, he has emerged as the most coveted and highest priced manager in the game.

He's worth every penny of whatever he gets. But put him on a short leash. He is impatient and restless. He doesn't like deep roots. He gets the job done — pronto — and then starts looking around for other fences to mend.

There's no manager in the world better able to take a tattered, disorganized and uninspired ball club and turn it into an instant winner. Trouble is he doesn't like to stay around and admire his handiwork. He outwears his welcome. Always he's got to hit the road again.

So now the fractious, pigiron-tough Casey Stengel protege is out of the corral again — a frisky maverick waiting to be grabbed by someone in dire need of help.

And there are a lot of eager grabbers.

Gabe Paul, boss of the Cleveland Indians, is dangling a $1 million, three-year bait under Billy Boy's nose. New York newspapers keep insisting he's coming back to the Yankees for the third time — or is it four? Out on the West Coast, talk is he is owner Gene Autry's choice to replace the highly respected Gene Mauch, who quit after failing to put the California Angels into the World Series. Autry denies it.

What kind of a guy is this wiry, mustachioed rebel who turned sow's ears into silk purses at Minnesota, Detroit, Texas, New York Yankees (twice) and finally Oakland only to be fired when the work was done?

You have to let him tell you himself. When he takes over a ballclub, Billy says, the first thing he does is get rid of what he calls "the clubhouse lawyers, alibiers and complainers."

"When I'm managing, you'd better take your job seriously or you won't be around long," Martin says in his autobiography, "Number 1," written in collaboration with Peter Golenbock.

"If you play for me, you play the game like you play life. You play it to be successful, you play it with dignity, you play it with pride and you play it aggressively."

Billy said when he first came to the Yankees in 1975,

Billy Martin

he found the locker room operating like a country club.

"Players were bringing their friends in... others were baby-sitting their own kids, and I noticed that in the bullpen during the game the pitchers were playing cards and eating sandwiches."

Martin quickly put an end to such informality, confuting this lack of professionalism was reflected in the team's play.

Yet he insists he is not a strict disciplinarian. He is against driving a team in training, one of the few managers favoring brisk one-a-day workouts. He says, going to a new club, he soft-shoes it during the adjustment period, allowing players to sink or rise to their own level.

"I'll go over it four different ways, trying to figure out the right way to talk to a player to get my point across without hurting his feelings," Billy says.

Whatever his methods, they worked in brief tenures with Minnesota then the Tigers, Rangers, Yankees and the A's, where he molded chronic losers into winners. Then suddenly he got the gate.

What is Billy's Achilles heel? Why is it impossible for him to settle down with one club and build a monument of success as did Walt Alston better take your job seriously or you won't be around long," Martin says in his autobiography, "Number 1," written in collaboration with Peter Golenbock.

"If you play for me, you play the game like you play life. You play it to be successful, you play it with dignity, you play it with pride and you play it aggressively."

Billy said when he first came to the Yankees in 1975,

To The Editor:
I am sending this letter to you in order to express my concern over your publication not covering a local event.
I am referring to the kickboxing matches which were held in Greenville, NC at The Carolina Opry House on Monday, October 18, 1982. It seemed odd to me that three local television stations and several state papers, other than the Daily Reflector, covered the matches and gave the results. Six of the fighters were Greenville natives! I was just very surprised that your publication made no mention of this. If your local paper does not back up local events and the people in the events, there isn't much need of even reading it.
I appreciate your time and hope that the next local event will appear in your paper.

Black Cut By Nets

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The New Jersey Nets have announced the release on waivers of two rookie guards, Jimmy Black and Tony Brown, leaving the team still one player over the National Basketball Association limit.
Black, 6-foot-2 and 162 pounds, led North Carolina to the NCAA championship a year ago. He was the Nets' third pick in the June draft and 59th overall pick in the draft, according to Nets spokesman Jay Rosenfeld.

Smaller Lake Catches By Commercial Fishermen

By JACK A. SEAMONDS
Associated Press Writer

ABOARD THE JESSIE K., on Lake Erie (AP) — As the sun's first rays mingle with the mist rising from Lake Erie's glassy surface, Capt. Larry Davis and two mates haul a thrashing net full of fish from the water.

The winch aboard the Jessie K. screams in tune with the gulls wheeling overhead. Muscles strain as the huge trap net, suspended with buoys and anchored in seven spots, is drawn toward the lean work boat.

On the starboard bow and along the stern rail, Bob Owen and Allen Cluckey scoop fish into metal sorting boxes. They pick through their catch, seeking white bass in the frothing mass. This day, the bass will be scarce.

Hours later, docked at a fish house in Sandusky, Ohio, Davis and Cluckey shake their heads in disgust.

The catch of white bass has been small, 360 pounds, worth about 70 cents per pound to the fishermen, and 60 pounds of incidental catfish. When fish houses are buying the catfish, they're worth about 30 to 40 cents a pound.

For the morning's work, Davis and his mates have grossed $300, minus the cost of maintaining the 52-foot boat, fueling it, buying and repairing nets and other expenses.

The men grumble. "This will make 30 years for me out here on the lake, and the big bass just aren't out there any more. Normally, we'd have fish up to the rail," Cluckey said.

Davis and his mates, like their counterparts from Duluth, Minn., to Three Mile Bay, N.Y., are an endangered species: commercial fishermen on the Great Lakes, — many of them second or third generation watermen pursuing the only livelihood they know.

Unlike their fathers and grandfathers, the fishermen plying the often-treacherous lake waters these days find themselves founding in an ever-shrinking net of state-imposed regulations, dwindling species, fears of pollution, and battles with sport fishing interests.

At a time when sports fishing is booming, fewer than 1,000 commercial fishing licenses are now issued by the Great Lakes states.

"We're just a pimple now, and a pretty small one at that," said Ed Parker, an officer of the Pennsylvania Fish Producers Association.

The value of commercial fishing on the lakes to U.S. interests was $12.1 million in 1980, according to the Great Lakes Commission. Canada's catch was worth $20.9 million that year.

In contrast, the Great Lakes Fishery Commission in Ann Arbor, Mich., estimated in 1979 that there were 24 million sports fishermen, contributing nearly $1 billion a year to the economies of the states along the lake shores.

Michigan alone issues nearly 1 million fishing licenses to residents each year. The state, touching on Lakes Erie, Michigan, Huron and Superior, estimates sports fishing is worth $250 million.

Asa T. Wright, manager of the Great Lakes program for the Michigan Department of Natural Resources fisheries division, said the state realizes about $18,000 a year from commercial fishing licenses, but it costs $750,000 to administer the fishery.

"Commercial fishing is not a paying proposition for us," said Wright.

The emphasis on sports fishing has prompted the Great Lakes states to introduce new species, particularly the aggressive coho salmon which can grow to 40 pounds in five years, and spend millions on stocking programs for trout and other fish. Certain fish, usually walleye and coho, are reserved for sportsmen.

The restocking was in part necessary to rebuild the trout fishery, which was severely damaged by the sea lamprey in the 1950s and '60s. The United States and Canada spent millions battling the parasites, which suck the blood of fish. Since the introduction of a chemical known as TFM, the lamprey population has been cut about 90 percent.

Another reason for restocking: the sports fishing catch. "It's not the pollution," said Dr. Joseph Kutkuhn, director of the Great Lakes Fishery Laboratory. "The fish diminish and the fishermen go away. Restocking begins, the fish return and the fishermen come back, too."

A key battle pitting sportsmen against commercial fishermen in most states adjoining the lakes centers on a tiny but tasty species called yellow perch.

Valued by restaurants and prized by sport fishermen on Lake Erie, the tiny perch has long been in demand, bringing as much $1 a pound at the dock to commercial fishermen and over $5 a pound for filets at fish stores.

But historical demand and the subsequent fishing pressure on the species sent the yellow perch population in Lake Erie plummeting.

As a result, Ohio and other states have stepped in, imposing new regulations the commercial fishermen say will put them out of business.

Gill netting, the easiest and cheapest technique for taking perch, was all but outlawed in Ohio. The season was cut from 10 months to five. Net mesh sizes were increased, limiting the fish that could be caught to more mature ones. A gill net is essentially a volleyball net, suspended in the water. Fish swim into the net, are caught by the gills, and can't escape.

Fishing pressure on the valuable species has been cited by other states as a reason for the decline in commercial fishing, and as justification for tighter regulation on the industry.

The Lake Erie waters inside Pennsylvania's boundaries are a prime example. Once the largest fresh water fishing port in the world, Erie, Pa.'s commercial fishing industry has been in decline since the 1960s.

At its peak, 150 tugs would churn out of Erie each day to net blue pike, lake herring, sturgeon, lake trout, whitefish, yellow perch and other species. Each boat could catch six to eight tons of fish a day in the busy season. Back in port, six large fish houses cleaned and packed the fish on ice.

The record catch was in 1949, when Pennsylvania produced 4.4 million pounds of fish worth $712,500. In 1981, the commercial catch inside Pennsylvania waters was but 740,661 pounds worth $333,143.

As a result of depleted populations, the state at the urging of sportsmen has imposed new regulations on fishing for yellow perch, and the commercial fishing industry is on the brink of extinction.

Richard Munch, 27, whose family has been in commercial fishing at Erie since 1939, put his two fishing boats up for sale after the new rules were issued. "We got the shaft," he said.

Commercial fishermen also grumble that Canadians are taking millions of pounds of yellow perch on Lake Erie, while U.S. fishermen are suffering under regulations the Canadians don't face.

According to the Great Lakes Fishery Commission, Canadian fishermen began taking more fish of all species from the lakes beginning in the early 1950s. By 1969, U.S. commercial fishermen caught 11 million pounds of all species, while the Canadian catch had risen to 48 million.

A tiny fish — the freshwater smelt — was a key factor in that growing disparity, according to Dr. Will Hartman, chief of the resource assessment section at the commission's laboratory in Ann Arbor, Mich.

Commercial fisherman in Ontario began catching the smelt on Lake Erie in the early 1950s, while U.S. fishermen mostly ignored the species. Last year, Canada's smelt catch on the lake was 30.3 million pounds, the biggest commercial catch of any species on the lakes and worth $3.3 million.

"They saw a large population of smelt on the lake, and they found markets for the catch," said Hartman. Japan is a big customer.

But in London, Ontario, Harry Orr, a regional biologist with the Ministry of Natural Resources, sounded a familiar warning: "From where I sit, I see smelt as a dwindling species."

Still, the major species in dollar value for both Canadians and Americans has been the yellow perch. And since the boom years of the 1960s, when Canada's catch peaked at 29.8 million pounds, the perch have been disappearing. Ontario is expected to move to a quota system to limit the perch catch next year.

But catch limits are not the only problem confronting the lakes' commercial fishermen. Another factor in their decline has been a legacy of pollution.

A mercury scare in early 1970 led Ohio Gov. James Rhodes to ban commercial fishing in Lake Erie. The ban was lifted a short time later, but restrictions on consumption lasted most of the year.

As a result of the ban, two commercial fisheries went out of business, the industry was disrupted and firms supplying bait, tackle and other items to sports fishermen reported a 50 percent drop in business.

On Sept. 14, 1976, New York state banned consumption of fish from Lake Ontario after discovering such carcinogenic and toxic chemicals as Mirex, PCBs and dioxin in the fatty tissue of fish. Similar bans were imposed by states on other lakes, but gradually have been lifted.

In Oswego, N.Y., on Lake Ontario, Chamber of Commerce director James Guinta says the region only now is beginning to rebound from fear over toxic chemicals in the fishery food chain.

The state's Department of Environmental Conservation has opened an $11 million fish hatchery at Altmar, N.Y., to revive interest in sport fishing on the lake. In 1981, millions of chinook and coho salmon and trout were stocked. The fish have been monitored for contaminants, and the signs are encouraging.

Nevertheless, a fishing guide produced by the state still warns that no fish caught in New York's lake waters should be eaten. Similar warnings are issued in other Great Lakes states.

Archaeologist Resuming Search For First English Colony's Site

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

This summer's search for America's first English colony has turned up five or six areas where 16th century buildings may have rested, prompting further studies of the Roanoke Island site, researchers said Monday.

"There are five or six area anomalies that seem worthwhile checking," Phil Evans, a National Park Service technician working on the project, said in a telephone interview. "They seem to be kind of irregular rectangular things."

If excavations of the site uncover evidence of 16th century buildings, soil resistivity tests and proton magnetometers will have succeeded where nearly 400 years of conventional archaeological digs have failed.

The colony, established in 1585 and resettled in 1587, was found inexplicably abandoned in 1590 when English explorer John White returned with supplies. History and repeated searches have failed to show where the lost colony was or explain the disappearance of its 100 inhabitants.

J.C. Harrington, a park service archaeologist, discovered the remnants of Fort Raleigh in 1965, presuming it to be an outpost of the settlement. It wasn't until this summer, however, that evidence of the colony was found just west of Fort Raleigh, Evans said.

Information about tiny changes in the Earth's magnetic field and electrical resistance in the soil was fed into a computer to define the sites, said Dr. John Ehrenhard, an archaeologist with the Southeast Archaeology Center in Tallahassee, Fla., who returned to Roanoke Island Monday.

"The readings were taken at one-meter intervals and when you put them together the computer interpolates them," he said. "You end up somewhat with a clear picture which may form some kind of pattern, while if you looked at it individually, it wouldn't look like anything."

Researchers plan to dig exploratory holes one meter deep in the most-promising site, possibly extending their work to an adjacent area if time permits, Ehrenhard said. He said that regardless of the findings, work will be halted Nov. 20, but added that digging might resume when the weather improves.

"We're mainly looking for evidence of very early type building techniques, such as houses built on posts, maybe an earth-packed floor," explained Evans. "What you do is excavate this rough rectangle and see whether or not it's an impression made in the ground in the 16th century."

But Ehrenhard was cautious about the possibilities of solving the mystery.

"I would be reluctant to say we'll find anything definite," he said. "There's always the possibility that we'll find some kind of artifact that definitely points to the 16th century, but I don't believe in fairy tales."

DUNKEL COLLEGE FOOTBALL INDEX

EXPLANATION - The Dunkel system provides a continuous index to the relative strength of all teams. It reflects average scoring margin combined with average opposition rating, weighted in favor of recent performance. Example: a 50.0 team has been 10 scoring points stronger, per game, than a 40.0 team against opposition of identical strength. Originated in 1929 by Dick Dunkel.

Realistic TV Operating Table

Wounding Is Closed Case

JENNIFER O'NEILL

BEDFORD, N.Y. (AP) — Actress Jennifer O'Neill, accidentally shot in the stomach as she examined a revolver, may be able to leave hospital within a week to 10 days.

The 34-year-old actress, best known for her 1971 role in "Summer of '42," was found with a gunshot wound to the abdomen after she called police for help Friday night from her 22-room Bedford Hills mansion.

Police said Miss O'Neill, a gun control advocate, fired the gun accidentally while trying to find out if it was loaded.

"As far as we're concerned, the matter is closed," Lt. Ed Wyskida said Monday.

The actress was interviewed by police Monday in the Northern Westchester Hospital Center in Mount Kisco.

She refused to answer some questions about the .38-caliber revolver and Wyskida said authorities would check to see if it was registered.

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Bruce Springsteen is on the radio, and the talk around the table is sex and violence. But it's not the family dinner table or the corner pool table.

What it is is the most realistic operating table in television's long, medical history. Not for graphic slicing and bloodletting, but because thinking, feeling and flawed humans are doing the cutting and pasting.

"Hill Street Blues" turned cops from toy soldiers into human heroes. Now NBC's "St. Elsewhere" doctors the TV persona of the stethoscope set.

"St. Elsewhere," which debuts tonight, takes place in a teaching hospital in Boston. It's the most involving and serious new drama of the season.

Tonight's other new NBC show, starring Robert Urich, sets its sights lower. "Gavilan" is escapist-adventure fluff, but not bad imitation James Bond.

While "Gavilan" is a production of Leonard Goldberg, who helped create "Charlie's Angels," "Hart to Hart" and "T.J. Hooker," "St. Elsewhere" has classical bloodlines.

It's from the MTM stable, which produced "Lou Grant" and "Hill Street." Bruce Paltrow ("White Shadow") is executive producer. Mark Tinker, the show's developer, is the son of Grant Tinker, MTM's founder and, currently, president of NBC.

A hand-held camera, which captures loony life in the "Hill Street" squad room, is utilized nicely here, as viewers accompany doctors on their professional and personal rounds through St. Eligius Hospital, dubbed "St. Elsewhere" because of chronic deterioration.

There's a large cast and plenty of extras, giving the corridors a lived-in look, not studio-set serenity. Several story lines are woven throughout. Like the cops in "Hill Street," the doctors have sex on their minds.

Tonight Dr. Jack Morrison (David Morse) gets personally involved with a young patient, Dr. Wayne Fiscus (Howie Mandel) finds love in the morgue, and Dr. Ben Samuels (David Birney) checks his past connections because he's contracted a social disease.

Presiding over the chaos is the sensible chief, played by Ed Flanders. "None of us is expected to handle everything," he tells Dr. Annie Cavanaugh (Cynthia Sykes). "Not even a woman."

As compared to "Hill Street," true grit dialogue is tougher to do in a hospital because medical shop talk is less universally known. Anyone watching local news knows crime jargon.

"Hill Street" also can capitalize on the emotionalism of police partnerships, the best TV relationships since marriage.

In "Gavilan," Urich, former star of "Vegas," is an ex-CIA agent who gets involved in high adventure and underwater hijinks as an oceanographer with a laser-equipped minisubmarine.

Robert Gavilan is an idealist in a hard world, which is why he's an ex-agent. He hates violence and says he "couldn't tell the good guys from bad guys." Tonight he risks his life for a scientist whose book was inspirational to him. See kids, this superhero reads.

Urich glares, broods, gets playful and plays humble, a la Tom Selleck. He's also irresistible to the ladies, and vice versa.

"I have a weakness for beautiful desperate women," he says in embarking on tonight's implausible, frothy escapade.

This is the kind of show that assumes boarding airplanes the normal way isn't exciting enough, so Gavilan, chased by smugglers, climbs on tonight while the plane is moving.

"Gavilan" is fast, hokey action, and much of it happens underwater. Although that restricts breathing and thinking, it isn't harmful to viewers.

MEETING LORETTA — The San Diego Chicken, played by Ted Giannoulas, gets a hug from country music star Loretta Lynn in New York. They met as Miss Lynn began rehearsals for her Broadway debut at the Majestic

Chicago Symphony Has A Back-To-Work Vote

By F.N. D'ALESSIO
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Symphony Orchestra could be making music again by Thursday night if its 103 musicians approve a new contract agreement with the Orchestral Association.

Members of Chicago Federation of Musicians Local 10-208 were to vote today on a new three-year pact which could allow immediate resumption of the strike-halted symphony season.

Nicholas Bliss, local president, said the agreement with the association was reached Monday evening after nine hours of renewed talks.

"I think both sides are happy it's over," Bliss said of the strike. "Now we can get back to playing music."

Joyce Idema, symphony public relations director, said that if the contract is ratified, the orchestra will perform its scheduled concerts Thursday night, Friday afternoon and Saturday night under the guest baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

The breakthrough in negotiations came only hours after the musicians began picketing in front of Orchestra Hall for the first time since the strike began Oct. 5.

About a half-dozen pickets showed up, said union spokeswoman Billie Webster.

The old three-year contract originally expired Sept. 12, but the musicians agreed to an extension in order to complete the symphony's scheduled Midwest tour.

Despite agreement on the extension, the local members subsequently voted 101-2 in favor of a strike.

Bliss said the Orchestral

Association's offer was rejected at the time because it was "much less generous than recent contract settlements of other major symphony orchestras."

Neither side would comment on the wage structure in the tentative contract until after ratification. The musicians' base pay under the old contract was $650 a week.

"As far as we're concerned, the matter is closed," Lt. Ed Wyskida said Monday.

The actress was interviewed by police Monday in the Northern Westchester Hospital Center in Mount Kisco.

She refused to answer some questions about the .38-caliber revolver and Wyskida said authorities would check to see if it was registered.

Each class will be one hour long. The schedule is: ages 3 and 4, 5:15-6:15 p.m. — ages 5-9, 6:20-7:20 p.m. — ages 10 and up, 7:30-8:20 p.m.

Fee for six weeks is $10. A minimum of 12 people per class is needed. Classes will be taught by Diane Lamb. Preregistration is mandatory and may be made by calling the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, 752-4137, ext. 200 or Diane Lamb at 756-7849.

Offer 6 Weeks Of Classes

Classes in six week sessions for combined modern jazz, tap, ballet exercise and acrobats will be held Tuesday evenings beginning Nov. 2.

Another Movie For Bertinelli

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Valerie Bertinelli, the young actress who has grown up on television in the "One Day At A Time" series, will star in the two-hour CBS-TV movie, "I Was a Mail Order Bride."

The film marks the actress' first co-production at the network through her own company, Tuxedo, Ltd.

Solar Fraction

The solar fraction for this area Monday, as computed by the East Carolina University Department of Physics, was zero. This means that a solar water heater could have provided zero percent of your hot water needs.

PROPERTY IMPOUNDED — Country music star George Jones smiles while onstage at the Salem-Roanoke County Civic Center during a performance Sunday night, but later had a confrontation with the law. Sheriff's deputies impounded Jones' watch and ring as well as the ticket receipts from the concert to cover a court judgement awarded a local promoter when Jones failed to show for a scheduled concert a year ago. Yesterday's Cryptoquip — DAD VALUED A KISSING CONTEST KEEPSAKE: A LOVING CUP.
Today's Cryptoquip clue: N equals A.

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Absentee Votes

Margaret Register, Pitt Board of Elections supervisor, suggested those who plan to be out of the county or who are sick or physically disabled and unable to visit the polls on Nov. 2 that Thursday at 9 p.m. is the deadline to apply for absentee ballots.

Miss Register said absentee applications should be made at the board office, 201 E. Second St., by the voter or by a near relative. All absentee ballots must be in the board of elections office by 9 p.m. on Nov. 1, she said.

ERIC — This is Eric, 30, a Texan found wandering around a parking lot in Daytona Beach, Fla. last February. For months police and social service agencies were convinced he was retarded or culturally deprived, but now have learned he is beset with multiple personalities — at least 27 different ones. Students Mark UN Day

United Nations Day was held at Wellcome Middle School recently and students celebrated by decorating the cafeteria with flags representing the nations belonging to the organization.

Students made the flags during the week-long celebration which commemorated the 37th anniversary of the United Nations. Social study activities during the week focused on issues related to the United Nations.

The celebration was chaired by Wellcome social studies teachers Arlene Murphy and Rickey Byrd.

Signs Law On Drunk Driving

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has signed a law designed to combat drunken driving, which claims the lives of 25,000 Americans annually.

The legislation, signed by the president Monday, offers states $125 million over three years to encourage a crackdown on drunken drivers. It sets up a national driver register and calls for the government to cover a portion of a state's safety budget if it imposes prompt license suspensions on drunken drivers, mandatory jail sentences on repeat offenders and other strict anti-drunken driving measures.

ELECTIONS OVER? — Hardly. John Dozier of the Dallas (Tex.) Street Department removes campaign signs from a street Monday afternoon. With the election still eight days away, Dozier is just removing signs that were illegally placed along the roadway. From the number of his signs in his truck it looks like his work is cut out for him both before and after November end. (AP Laserphoto)

The bidding:

Opening lead: Queen of ♠.

Some suits contain extra chances within the suit that can substantially improve your chances of success. Declarer had the technique to double the winning percentages on this deal.

South was correct to open one heart rather than one no trump. His reasonable five-card suit made his hand worth more than 18 points. The encouragement of a single raise was all that he needed to contract for game.

West led the queen of clubs, and declarer had mixed emotions about his dummy. There seemed to be a sure loser in each minor suit. Therefore, it appeared that Declarer would have to hold his spade losers to one if the contract were going to succeed. The obvious way to tackle the suit was to lead a spade to the king. Equally obvious from a glance at the full diagram was that this line was going to result in a one-trick set.

Fortunately, declarer was alert enough to realize that the spade suit actually offered two chances to make the hand—his contract was safe either if West held the queen or East held the ace of spades!

Declarer won the first trick with the ace of clubs—this was not the time for a holdup, because declarer could not afford to have the defenders shift to a diamond. After extracting two trumps in two rounds, ending in his hand, declarer then led a low spade toward the jack. Had East held the queen, declarer would have had to fall back on leading a spade to the king for his contract. As it was, West won the queen of spades and shifted to a diamond, but too late. Declarer won and led another low spade. East was forced to win the ace. But now declarer could win the diamond return and discard dummy's remaining diamond on the king of spades. So the defenders had to be satisfied with two spade tricks and a club.

Nine Candidates Aided By Congressional Club

By The Associated Press
Nine North Carolina Republican candidates for Congress to the approaching November elections have received $62,487 from the National Congressional Club in contributions and political services, according to recent spending records.

According to the campaign reports filed this week with the Federal Election Commission, in Washington, the club — the fundraising organization of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C. — has raised $6 million and spent $9.6 million during the past 17 months, surpassing the $7.8 million it raised for the 1980 elections and $7.3 million it spent.

The Raleigh-based club, the largest political action committee in the United States, reported that it raised $1.3 million between July 1 and Oct. 13.

The 10-year-old club was founded to help retire the campaign debt of Helms when he was elected to the Senate for the first time in 1972. Since then, it has evolved into the one of the most effective PACs in the nation.

Records show the top recipient in North Carolina was John W. "Jack" Marin, the 2nd District GOP candidate, who received $9,880. Harris D. Blake, the Republican 8th District candidate, received $8,729 and Eugene "Red" McDaniel, the 3rd District hopeful, received $9,499.

William W. Cobey Jr., the 4th District candidate, got $8,966; Anne B. Bagnal in the 5th District received $8,713; 11th District Rep. William M. Hendon, R-N.C., drew $6,163; Thomas C. Gibson, an un-

Eighteen Hurt In Bus Accident

RUTHERFORDTON, N.C. (AP) — Eighteen high school students were treated for injuries and another was hospitalized Monday after their bus overturned and rolled down a 15-foot embankment into a creek.

State Highway Patrol Trooper C.R. Collins said the injuries ranged from scrapes and bruises to a broken collar bone and head injuries. One child was admitted to Rutherford Hospital for observation. The child was in satisfactory condition.

The bus was carrying 26 students to Chase High School in Rutherfordton when the accident occurred about 7:40 a.m. on a rural road off U.S. 221 South.

Collins said the accident may have been related to the cold, rainy weather.

successful Democratic primary candidate in the 7th District, received $4,117; 6th District Rep. W. Eugene Johnston III, R-N.C., received $3,086 and Edward H. Johnson, the GOP candidate in the 9th District, received $2,264.

The club also gave money to help defeat the Equal Rights Amendment in North Carolina. Records show it contributed $1,731 to North Carolinians Against ERA and gave $2,000 to Alice Gatzis, a Rocky Mount resident and state anti-ERA leader.

Across the country, the club gave $1,000 to the campaign of the daughter of Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker Jr., R-Tenn., who is running for a House seat in Tennessee. The club also gave $1,000 to Clevie Benedict, the Republican opponent of Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va.

Republican Florence Sullivan of New York, who is trying to defeat Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, also received $1,000.
