Schools Merger Study Is Recommended

By MARY SCHULKEN
and
STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writers

Members of the Pitt County Board of Education recommended today that a feasibility study on merger of the county and Greenville city school systems be conducted by an independent agency and that this agency present conclusions at the end of the study.

At a noon meeting with county commissioners and the city board of education, the school board announced that they wanted data on consolidation of the two systems collected "to ensure wise decision-making about what is best for the children of Pitt County."

In a policy statement, the board recommended that the Research Triangle Institute do the research and that the county commissioners fund the study.

The board also recommended that the two boards of education "review the results of the ... study at the earliest possible opportunity following its completion in order that such information might be made public and shared with respective constituents and judicious deliberation by each body can occur."

The county board's recommendations were contained in a prepared statement which said "while interest in merger by the city system is opposed by the county system, the issue must inevitably be addressed and decisions pertinent to it made. Data collection," the statement continued, "which would provide citizens, parents, staffs and board members objective information about the feasibility of a consolidated

Pitt County system and common sense analysis, has not occurred."

Commenting on the proposal, county school superintendent Eddie West said he would "guess" such a study would take about a year and cost $30,000 to $35,000.

Such a study, West noted, will "answer three things:" first, if consolidation is not feasible; second, if it is feasible; and third, if it is feasible, what are the points that need to be resolved.

He said the study will also "enable people to make judgments in a rational way, looking at the cause and effect relationships."

West indicated that the statement in the recommendations which suggests that the county school system is "opposed" to merger, is "an acknowledgement that the two boards do differ ... have different points of view."

However, West emphasized that the recommendations also point up the fact that the boards "care for children" and want what is best for the students.

According to prepared material distributed at the meeting, the proposed study would deal with and compare such things as school facilities, properties, capital outlay, attendance lines and transportation, personnel and staffing, finances, plant operations, food services, and instructional requirements, for both systems.

The data generated by the study, the material said, will enable decisions to be made on the basis of "economic ... (and) common-sense rationality," and provide an "analysis of alternatives and consequences, and an analysis of the value of alternatives."

WEAPONS ON PARADE — The Soviet military paraded these T-72 tanks, the latest Soviet medium tank deployed in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, through Red Square Sunday to mark the 65th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution. The tank's main weapon is a 125mm gun. The U.S. Defense Department says 9,000 such tanks were built between 1976 and 1980. Massed ranks of troops and missiles, personnel carriers and other gear were also displayed. (AP Laserphoto)

Brezhnev Extolls Peace; Rattles His Big 'Sword'

By STEVEN R. HURST
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — President Leonid I. Brezhnev, celebrating the 65th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution, extolled Soviet military might and warned that aggressors would face "a crushing retaliatory strike."

But, in a tough speech at a Kremlin reception attended by U.S. Ambassador Arthur A. Hartman, Brezhnev added that the "essence of our policy is peaceableness, the sincere striving for equitable and fruitful cooperation."

Revolution Day, commemoration of the 1917 revolt that led to the founding of the Soviet state, was celebrated in Moscow Sunday with the traditional display of the Soviet Union's military brawn.

Hundreds of thousands of Muscovites jammed Red Square to watch the display of military hardware rumble across the cobblestones. Soviet generals displayed two weapons never seen before at the parade — an improved surface-to-air missile and an updated armored personnel carrier reportedly used against insurgents in Afghanistan.

Defense Minister Marshal Dmitri F. Ustinov, 74, presided over the military ceremonies, standing beside the 75-year-old Brezhnev atop the red marble mausoleum of revolutionary leader

Vladimir I. Lenin.

He told the troops massed on Red Square: "The aggressive forces of imperialism, primarily the U.S.A., have led the intensity of their military preparations to an unusual level, are fanning the flames of armed conflicts in different regions of the world, and irresponsibly are threatening to use nuclear weapons."

At the Kremlin reception, Brezhnev said:

"We shall do our utmost to see to it that those who like military ventures should never take the land of the Soviets unawares, that the potential aggressor should know: a crushing retaliatory strike will inevitably be in for him. Our might and vigilance will cool, I think, the hot heads of some imperialist politicians."

Neither Brezhnev nor Ustinov explicitly mentioned President Reagan in their remarks, in which they reiterated Soviet intentions to seek negotiated arms reductions.

Brezhnev said, "The Soviet Union will continue persistently fighting for detente, for disarmament. We shall be building up efforts to avert the threat of a nuclear war..."

"Addressing the foreign representatives, present here, I should like to emphasize that the essence of our policy is peaceableness, the sincere striving for equitable and fruitful cooperation with all who want such cooperation."

Countdown Proceeds For Shuttle Launch Thursday

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The countdown for space shuttle Columbia's first operational mission fell seven hours behind schedule today because of a small leak in a helium regulator. But a test director said the deficit could be made up in time for a scheduled Thursday morning launching.

Test director Gilbert Whittaker termed it "no real problem" and noted the five-day countdown includes more than 20 hours of planned holds to handle such problems.

Gene Thomas, a project engineer, said the leak was discovered in a regulator in one of 30 small jets used to steer the spaceship in orbit. He said the faulty system had been taken off line and a backup system switched on in its place.

Helium is used to pressurize fuel lines. Whittaker reported the weather outlook was good for a Thursday launch. The forecast calls for good visibility, light winds and a temperature of 72 degrees.

On the pad, crews were busy today washing Columbia's windows, pressurizing fuel tanks, activating power-producing fuel cells and reviewing flight software stored in computer memory banks.

The fiery liftoff, scheduled for 7:19 a.m. EST Thursday, will be Columbia's fifth trip into space, but the first for "business" for which the space shuttle was intended, said veteran astronaut Vance Brand.

After four previous test flights, the shuttle will carry its first payload — two commercial satellites to be launched into orbit.

Satellite Business Systems Inc. and Telesat Canada, Ltd. each is paying the National Aeronautics and Space Administration $10 million to carry the two communications satellites.

The SBS satellite is scheduled to be released eight hours after liftoff. The Canadian payload is to be ejected Friday.

"The four earlier trips tested the vehicle and proved it works; our job is to make it start paying for itself," said Brand, who will command the four-man crew aboard the upcoming mission.

The four astronauts who will make the journey were in Houston today concluding months of training at the Johnson Space Center. They will fly here Tuesday morning to make final preparations for the launch.

The crew will be the largest ever launched in a single spaceship. Never have more than three people left Earth together, although as many as five have been together in orbit in linked-up vehicles.

Brand was on one of those five-person flights — the 1975 joint journey by three American astronauts and two Soviet cosmonauts. With him this time will be three space newcomers: Pilot Robert Overmyer and mission specialists William Lenoir and Joseph Allen.

Lenoir and Allen will monitor the payloads, each weighing 7,200 pounds, conduct 90-minute countdowns for each and trigger the spring devices that will fling them out of the ship's cargo bay into orbit.

On Sunday, Lenoir and Allen are to take the first space walks of the shuttle program and the first by American astronauts in nine years. They will spend 3½ hours in the open cargo bay, testing space suits and shuttle systems and evaluating tools and techniques for future crews.

The four men will spend five days crowded into a space not much roomier than a large motor home. "We'll probably line up at the water fountain," said Brand.

The launch falls on Veterans Day, and sheriff's deputies will be scurrying to clear spectators from the area before an American Legion parade blocks traffic at 11 a.m.

The legion refused to cancel the parade despite the launch. "Asking the veterans to delay the parade would be like canceling Mother's Day," said Brevard County Sheriff Jake Miller.

27 Dead In Prison Fire

By DAVID McCORMICK
Associated Press Writer

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — A fire set by a mentally disturbed prisoner in a padded cell filled the Harrison County Jail with thick, black smoke today, killing at least 27 prisoners and injuring 46 people, authorities said.

Six of the injured were in critical condition.

Some prisoners, awakened in the middle of the night by the choking smoke from the plastic cell stuffing, put rags beneath their cell doors in a desperate attempt to save themselves. There were 95 prisoners in the jail when the fire broke out.

"The smoke was really bad," said Biloxi Fire Chief Guy Roberts. "The fire wasn't real bad. We extinguished it right away, but the jail became filled with smoke and the jailer who was trying to let the prisoners out became overcome."

By the time officials got the keys from the jailer, the one-story brick-and-concrete building was filled with thick, black smoke and trapped prisoners were overcome, he said.

"The lights were still on but they weren't doing any good. All we could do was feel our way; feel under the bunks or wherever people were huddled," said Deputy Fire Chief Bruce Marie. "Some of them were trying to block the cells with rags to keep the smoke out before we got there."

Harrison County Coroner Ed Little said 25 men and two women perished.

The prisoner who set the fire was not badly hurt and was taken to a hospital for observation, officials said. The inmate was not identified.

The fire was started by a mentally ill inmate who had been brought in Sunday night pending a sanity hearing, said George Zatzko, the assistant warden.

Zatzko said the man ignited the padding which was "a type of polyurethane, I believe. I don't know exactly what it consists of."

The jailer, Tom Miller, was rescued shortly after the fire broke out at 1:31 a.m. and he was one of those in critical condition.

Marie said firefighters with air packs crawled on their hands and knees dragged many prisoners out, and Roberts said wreckers had to be used to pull bars off windows.

Marie said he could not hear the prisoners shouting and that most were unconscious when rescuers reached them.

"We were carrying them out like flies," Roberts said. He said he did not know why the prisoner ignited the cell.

Balloonists Off On Global Trip

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) — Maxie Anderson waved and said, "Let's go," and his red, white and blue gondola shot off the launch pad for his third daredevil attempt to soar around the globe in a balloon.

Under the glare of about 15 floodlights, the Jules Verne lifted off at 11:53 p.m. EST Sunday and quickly disappeared into the cold South Dakota sky to the cheers of about 800 people who came to watch.

Rising about 2,000 feet in 30 seconds, the ship quickly sailed out of view.

Anderson, who became the first balloonist to cross the Atlantic Ocean and North America, and co-pilot Don Ida were sailing across the northern United States and Canada early today and expected to arrive over the Atlantic Ocean somewhere off Nova Scotia about 24 hours after liftoff.

The liftoff was delayed about three hours when one of two hoses used to fill the translucent polyethylene envelope with helium cracked. "We were down to one lifeline, so to speak," said Jim Mitchell, project press officer.

If both tubes had ruptured, the liftoff would have been postponed, he said.

The balloon's envelope — about as thick as two dry cleaning bags — was finally filled with 250,000 cubic feet of helium that will expand to 490,000 cubic feet when the sun hits it, Mitchell said.

Anderson and Ida waved from the gondola and shouted, "Let's go! Thanks for everything," and they took off.

The Jules Verne is named for the science-fiction writer of "Around the World in 80 Days." But if their plans hold up, Anderson and Ida will complete their 17,000-mile flight in eight to 10 days.

Anderson, 49, a mining executive from Albuquerque, N.M., flew with two others across the Atlantic in the Double Eagle II in 1978. Anderson and his son, Kris, flew the Kitty Hawk across North America in 1980.

He tried twice previously to circumnavigate the globe.

Coast Guard Launches Probe Of Umstead Bridge Collision

MANN'S HARBOR, N.C. (AP) — The Coast Guard will launch its probe today to determine who was responsible for Friday's collision which has forced the temporary closing of one of the most heavily used bridges to the Outer Banks.

The William B. Umstead bridge, a three-mile, two-lane span connecting Roanoke Island and the Outer Banks, was apparently struck by a tugboat early Friday. The bridge remained open for another 40 hours before Department of Transportation officials closed it.

Officials said the bridge was in danger of toppling into the Croatan Sound at the time it was closed.

Coast Guard investigators said they still aren't sure what happened.

"We just don't know who did it," said Lt. M. J. Pontiff of the Marine Safety Office at the Coast Guard's 5th District headquarters in Portsmouth, Va.

Coast Guard spokesmen said there had been sketchy communications early Friday morning with a man identifying himself as the "captain of the tug Columbia."

"I think I hit the bridge and knocked off a piece of concrete," the tug captain told an officer on watch at Oregon Inlet, about 15 miles from the bridge, according to Petty Officer Fred W. Parsons.

Parsons said the tug captain reported he was continuing northward.

Coast Guard and DOT officials could not explain why the investigation was delayed until a fisherman spotted the shattered support piling and alerted the state Highway Patrol.

Marc Basnight, state Board of Transportation member, said it was a miracle the bridge didn't collapse while it remained open.

"You have to see the damage to believe it," said Basnight. "It (nearly) took the whole thing down."

"I guess the only thing that prevented a terrible collapse of the whole structure was the fact most heavy trucks weren't running over the weekend. The cars that used the bridge were passenger vehicles. We just don't think about what might have happened."

"We'll never know what held that bridge up," he added. "It was sort of a miracle."

The bridge carries U.S. 64-264. DOT engineers estimate the span carries 2,000 cars a day, and more on weekends. It will be closed up to 60 days.

The other direct route into Dare County is U.S. 158 through Currituck County and across the Wright Memorial Bridge into Kitty Hawk.

A ferry service for local residents with a capacity of 12 vehicles will operate between Manns Harbor on the mainland and the Manteo Airport launching ramp, said Ben O'Neal, state ferry operations director.

Cole-King Vows Spoken

Joanne Lisa King and Bobby Cole Jr. were united in marriage Sunday in a four o'clock candlelight ceremony. The garden ceremony featured a prie-dieu flanked by candelabra decorated with white satin bows and greenery, while wedding bells adorned the trees. The Rev. Hal Melton officiated at the formal double-ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Robert Davis King, Sr. of Sag Harbor, N.Y. The bridegroom is the son of Bobby James Cole of Greenville. Given in marriage by her brother, Robert Davis King Jr. of Sag Harbor, the bride wore a formal white gown of dry silk lined in taffeta and fashioned with a Queen Anne neckline, full-length lace sleeves and fitted cuffs. Pearls and lace adorned the bodice. The skirt, trimmed with lace, formed a chapel-length train. The bride chose a fingertip silk illusion veil attached to a Camelot cap featuring pearls and lace, with matching lace trim. She wore an opal necklace, a gift from the bridegroom. She carried a classic bouquet of pink and white pixie carnations, white sweetheart roses and baby's breath tied with pink and white satin with a cascade of springerli fern.

Sandra Cleasby, sister of the bride of Bridgehampton, N.Y., served as maid of honor. She chose a formal gown of burgundy silesta featuring an empire bodice and V-neckline. The gown was accentuated by a sun-spray pleated skirt and highlighted with a high necked capelet of matching knit lace. She carried a semi-nosegay of mauve flowers, pixie carnations in shades of pink and pom poms nestled in baby's breath tied with mauve satin.

The matron of honor, Gwen Moore of Kinston, and bridesmaid, Theresa DiBlanca, sister of the bride of Gardiner, N.Y., wore formal gowns of frosty rose silesta. Their gowns, similar in design, featured double spaghetti straps, sunspray pleats falling from an empire bodice and see-through lace capelets. Their flowers were identical to that of the maid of honor.

The father of the bridegroom served as best man. Ushers included Michael James Cole, brother of the bridegroom, and Charles Quentin Brown, both of Greenville.

Amy Leggett, cousin of the bridegroom of Greenville, served as flower girl. Attired in a burgundy floor length dress of dry silk over taffeta which featured a tie bow and ruffles. She carried a white basket tied with a mauve bow. Robert Cleasby, nephew of the bride of Bridgehampton, N.Y., served as ring bearer.

Susan Yost, sister of the bride of Greenville, was honorary bridesmaid and presided at the bridal register. She chose a formal gown of light pink silesta and matching knit lace.

The bridegroom's grandmother, Mrs. Callie Cole, selected a street length dress of pale gray and was remembered with a white orchid corsage.

Teresa Jordan was the organist. She presented "We've Only Just Begun" and "You Needed Me" as vocal selections.

The wedding, directed by Earlene Coghill and assisted by Beulah Jordan, was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J.C. Hamill, aunt and uncle of the bridegroom.

A reception was given by adults of the bridegroom following the ceremony. Hollie Hamill, Mary H. Cole, Beulah Jordan, aunts of the bridegroom, and Sandra Squires, cousin of the bridegroom, were hostesses.

The reception table was decorated with candelabra adorned with magnolia leaves and ivy. Mattie Cole, aunt of the bridegroom, and Cheryl Cole, cousin of the bridegroom, served the wedding cake after the bridal couple had cut the first traditional slice. Wanda Cole, cousin of the bridegroom, served champagne.

Lorraine Sullivan performed guitar selections during the reception.

Brigitte and Katherine DiBlanca, nieces of the bride of Gardiner, N.Y., distributed rice bags.

The bride is a graduate of Pierson High School, Sag Harbor, N.Y., and attended Dominican College of Blauvelt. The bridegroom was graduated from Rose High School, Greenville. Both are employed by East Carolina University.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip.

An after-rehearsal dinner was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Cole, aunt and uncle of the bridegroom, given by the father of the bridegroom.

Dear Abby

She Loses Mind As He Loses Hearing Ability

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Your reply to "Miserable," whose husband refuses to wear his hearing aid and says he hears "just fine," shows that you have no idea what it's like to live with someone who has a hearing problem. You said, "Quit nagging him. Maybe he's trying to tune you out. One of the most precious rights a person has is the right to be left alone."

My husband also claims he hears "just fine" — that everyone else mumbles. Meanwhile he turns the TV volume up so high, the rest of the family is forced to leave the room.

In social situations he asks me to repeat everything that's being said. Consequently, I miss half the conversation because I'm busy yelling in his ear. I could go on and on.

I think you owe that woman an apology, Abby.
ANOTHER MISERABLE WIFE

DEAR WIFE: I owe her more than that. I owe her a more helpful answer, and here it is: "Dear Miserable: Go right on nagging your husband until he consults an audiologist who will evaluate his hearing disorder and help him correct it medically, surgically or with a hearing aid."

Anyone who wants up-to-date information about hearing loss and available hearing help should write to: Hearing, Box 1840, Washington, D.C. 10013. The information is free, but please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

DEAR ABBY: With Christmas coming soon, our problem must be faced, and we don't know how to handle it. To lay it right on the line, with the economy the way it is, my husband and I can't afford to send Christmas gifts this year. (To tell you the truth, we still owe for last year's Christmas gifts.)

We don't want anybody to give us gifts this year because we can't afford to give any. But how do you tell people that, Abby?

OVERDRAWN IN DETROIT
DEAR OVERDRAWN: Come Thanksgiving, write a note saying, "We are thankful for folks with whom we can be honest. We're not in a position to send Christmas gifts this year (nor do we expect gifts), but please accept our love and sincere good wishes for a joyous and blessed holiday."

DEAR ABBY: My cousin is getting married for the second time. At her bridal shower she passed around a box of envelopes and asked everyone to address an envelope to herself. She said they were for thank-you notes. I've never heard of this before, have you? What do you think of my cousin's behavior?

APPALLED IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR APPALLED: I am appalled, too. I'm all for doing things the easy way, but I think your cousin overdid it.

DEAR ABBY: OK, so New York is known as "The Big Apple," but I'll bet you don't know what the city of Cleveland is called.

G.T. IN SHAKER HEIGHTS
DEAR G.T.: Oh, yes, I do! It's called "Plum City," and I have a T-shirt to prove it. Now, is there any city that is known as "The Pits"?

You're never too old (or too young) to learn how to make friends and be popular. For Abby's booklet on Popularity, send $1, plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I heard a man remark the other day that he did not know how his wife could go to the supermarket, purchase $85 worth of groceries, come home and have nothing to cook for dinner. Isn't that just like a man? Men like that probably don't even understand why a woman has a closet full of clothes and still has nothing to wear. Grocery shopping is one of the last of the little-known sciences in the world. All the experts know is it demanding, requires great concentration and split-second timing. Researchers a few years back tried to pin down why women bought as they did in supermarkets. They discovered that when women entered the store and their hands curled around a cart handle, something happened. Their "eye-blink" rate dropped to 14 a minute, putting them into a hypnotic trance, which is the first stage of hypnosis. (One researcher said it was incredible how women passed by friends and neighbors without realizing they were even there.) At the check-out, however, their consciousness seemed to be triggered by the cash register bell which brought their "blink-rate" up to 45 a minute. (Which is normal.) Women spent 20 seconds on each aisle, tossing and throwing. The list-makers went around mumbling, "Do I have oregano?" and answering themselves, "What kind of question is that? Of course, you have oregano. You're Italian, aren't you?" Every woman has her "system." I am not a list-maker. I found that when I made out a list of everything I needed for well-balanced, attractive meals I had to arrange for financing at the check-out. I tend to stick to the basic things I've been buying for the past 20 years and hope that something wonderful will happen to them during the week. As for not having anything to cook when you've just returned from the supermarket, I have a rather interesting theory about that. I equate shoppers with the pioneer hunters who dragged home a 300-pound moose, lugged it to the log cabin door and said, "I shot it. Now YOU cook it!" If you don't understand that, then you deserve to have frozen pizza, a set of cookware, a room deodorizer, and an encyclopedia for your dinner!

WILLIAM C. WOOD, SPECIALIST PEWTER DESIGNER FOR ONEIDA, LTD. SILVERSMITHS, WILL BE DEMONSTRATING PEWTER SPINNING AT BELK TYLER, GREENVILLE ON WEDNESDAY, NOV. 10th AND THURSDAY, NOV. 11th FROM 10 A.M. 'TIL 5 P.M.!

Pewter spinning is an art that was developed with the introduction of 'Britannia Metal' around the year 1825. Prior to this time, all pewter was cast of an alloy that contained varying degrees of lead. 'Britannia Metal', a harder, lead-free alloy amenable to spinning, made it possible to produce lighter, completely safe pewter goods in a greater variety of shapes.

In the spinning process, the craftsman places a pewter disc on the lathe and carefully shapes it with special forming tools. Great skill is required to transform the shapeless pewter disc into graceful, useful household objects. Spun pewter goods made it possible for many more people to enjoy the rich, warm look of this metal. Although the use of pewter declined after 1850 with the introduction of inexpensive chinaware, the remarkable intrinsic beauty of pewter assured its recent resurgence in popularity.

Today, Oneida Ltd. manufactures an outstanding collection of pewter inspired by the classic, uncluttered lines of the works of the 18th century master craftsmen of the Hudson Valley area. Each piece bears the Hudson Valley touchmark, a symbol of pride in craftsmanship and design. A former mechanical engineer with Oneida Silversmiths, Mr. Wood is now combining his skills in mechanics with his talent in sculpturing as an apprentice in the pewter design program.

Fixing Social Security

The results of Tuesday's election will be debated for weeks, but the administration and both the old and the new Congress must soon turn their attention to the difficult problems the nation faces.

One requiring immediate attention is the financial plight of Social Security. No matter what was said during the campaigning, Social Security needs fixing and it is going to take the cooperative efforts of the administration, Democrats and Republicans to cure its ills.

If there were any lessons in Tuesday's elections one of the surest is that Social Security is popular. People plan a lifetime for its benefits, feel they pay for them and expect them. The problem is the system is paying out more money than it is taking in and that can be corrected only by adjusting benefits or raising the Social Security tax.

Adjusting benefits is not as unpalatable as it might seem, since changes in the retirement age to take effect far in the future could be one way of bringing expenditures in line with anticipated income. The shrunken inflation rate may also help since cost-of-living increases are automatically tied to the inflation rate.

Social Security has short and long term financial problems but it is certainly not beyond repair. In fact no politician in his right mind would allow the system to collapse. Some hard decisions will have to be made soon, however, and whatever was said in the heat of campaigning may have to be forgotten if the proper cooperation is going to be developed for making the system financially sound.

Risk In Police Work

The shooting of city police officer Charles M. Futrell dramatically illustrates once again that law enforcement people do their job at considerable personal risk.

This assault appears wanton, with police believing that it might have been part of a gang initiation ritual.

Fortunately Officer Futrell is expected to recover from the gunshot wound in the leg, although the injury was serious enough. In the meantime we have no doubt that an intensive investigation is underway in an effort to solve the case.

What's Really Going On

LAS VEGAS, Nevada — Every columnist has to go to the typical American town every fall to tell his readers what is really going on in the country. This year I chose Las Vegas, a nice friendly community situated in the desert somewhere between Salt Lake City and Phoenix.

I dropped into Caesars Palace, the local hangout, and sat around a crap table drinking coffee with some of the locals. They told me Las Vegas has not been immune to vicissitudes of the economy. Business is way off, and unemployment is above the 10 percent mark.

"They're closing down blackjack tables left and right," a bearded dealer told me, "and half the roulette wheels have stopped turning."

Another old-timer said, "Our slot machines used to go day and night. Now we're lucky to have one shift working in the evening."

"A few years ago you used

People are staying home and saying, 'Maybe next year, if things pick up, we'll go to Las Vegas and lose all our money.'"

"What is really killing us is Wall Street," a pit boss said. "When there was no action there, everyone came out here to shoot crap."

"Now the high rollers would rather gamble on the stock market than come to Las Vegas and bet on a sure thing."

"Another reason we're hurting," a cocktail waitress said, "is Atlantic City. They shouldn't have allowed casinos in New Jersey. It corrupts the people."

"It was a rotten thing for Jersey to do," the pit boss agreed. "When Bugsy Seigel built this town out of sand, he was given everyone's solemn word that Nevada would be the only state to have legalized gambling. Then Bugsy was hardly cold in his grave when Jersey reneged on its promise."

"We're not just worried about Atlantic City," the blackjack dealer said. "New York is talking gambling, Florida is talking gambling, even California is talking gambling. Every state that can't meet its bills is trying to find a new way of taking a taxpayer's money away from him."

"Maybe you're being too pessimistic," I suggested. "Surely most Americans have a sentimental attachment for Las Vegas that they don't have for any other town. After all, you replaced Niagara Falls as everyone's favorite tourist attraction."

to have to wait two hours to get a seat in a poker game. Now you can walk into any place and they'll deal you a hand before you can take your money out."

"Things are that bad?" "They've never been worse," a fellow in a cowboy hat said. "We got hoofers that haven't worked in a year."

"I thought Las Vegas was recession-proof," I said.

"So did we. We always figured that no matter how bad things got people would come here to see Wayne Newton and forget their troubles. But we were wrong."

THIS AFTERNOON

Looking To 1984

By PAUL T. O'CONNOR
RALEIGH — Less than three weeks after the 1982 elections, state Republicans will be holding an unusual fall convention in Raleigh on Nov. 19 and 20 to get themselves organized for the 1984 elections. Plans to hold the convention, which is expected to draw 500 delegates, were put together only this summer. The party's regular bi-annual convention slated for May will still be held — although the date may be pushed back.

State Republican Chairman Dave Flaherty says the GOP wants to revise its plan of organization and put together its 1984 platform. He also suspects that the convention will serve as a victory party for the GOP's winners and as a consolation prize for its losers.

Several major changes in the plan of organization are slated. Flaherty says a committee has looked at GOP plans in several other states but has decided to copy, in large part, the form the state Democratic Party follows. A plan of organization lays out a party's structure and rules.

The GOP has been hamstrung in recent years by the inadequacies of its organizational plan, Flaherty says. The plan was written when the party was still very small and ineffective. At recent conventions, specific problems have been addressed when they arose but that has left the party with a patchwork plan, he says.

In the new plan, Flaherty wants the relationship between the state and local parties better defined. He wants specific responsibilities laid out for auxiliary groups such as the county Republican teens and a standard county party plan of organization for those counties which have not written one of their own yet.

He also wants the state party given the right to discipline its misbehaving party officers. If a GOP vice-chairman were to openly criticize a Republican candidate, for example, the party would have no recourse against the critic. Flaherty wants that changed. He'd also like a procedure for disavowing unwanted candidates running under the Republican label — for example, self-avowed Nazi Harold Covturn the convention into a real rip-snorter, he says. "A lot of Jesse's strongest conservative supporters don't agree with him on abortion," Flaherty conceded.

Although all 10 Republican senators voted against the Equal Rights Amendment in the state Senate this year, there is still ERA support within the GOP and that is likely to be another issue for debate on the convention ington who sought the GOP's nomination for attorney general in 1980.

The current plan is vague in many spots. Flaherty wants definite answers to questions like "Can a party officer run in a primary without first resigning?"

Platform debate could get fiery. "I think there'll be an effort to go for a real hardnosed platform by Jesse Helms's supporters who will be positioning themselves for the election in two-years," Flaherty says. The question of banning abortion could

Other Editors Say Performed Well

(Henderson Dispatch)

When Energy Department Secretary James Edwards became a member of President Reagan's Cabinet early in 1980, one of his prime objectives was to close the department down and "work myself out of a job."

Abolishing the Energy Department was one of Reagan's campaign pledges. However, the administration's bill to close it out and transfer most of its functions to the Department of Commerce is still floundering in Congress, with little prospect of action soon.

In the effort to do away with his own job, Secretary Edwards has failed. But he earned high marks indeed in his handling of the department and energy policy.

The secretary is leaving his Cabinet post to return to his home state of South Carolina. The former S.C. governor is leaving Washington to become president of the Medical University of South Carolina.

In a farewell to Washington, Edwards told the National Press Club "I am just as convinced as I was in December, 1980, that we don't need a separate Department of Energy."

"I don't see where we need a Department of Energy any more than a department of steel or cotton."

Although he did not succeed in abolishing his department, he said "We have already dismantled the most objectionable parts of DOE. I am going to claim victory and leave town."

His cost-cutting efforts have trimmed the department's work force by 17 percent. And the secretary noted that the department will have saved the taxpayers $10.4 billion over three years if Congress approves the proposed energy budget for 1983.

Prior to his taking office, the department had "grown like Carolina's kudzu," Edwards remarked. "There was more money than anybody knew what to do with. In the solar area, in particular, the department couldn't even manage to spend all the money Congress appropriated."

His contributions are benefitting American taxpayers in a material way.

Next Thursday, Nov. 11, 1982, is Veteran's Day. American Legion Posts 160 and 39, as well as city officials and other organizations will participate in a Veteran's Day ceremony on the Pitt County Courthouse steps at 3 p.m.

It is my sincere feeling that America became the "land of the free and the home of the brave" because its citizenry had a great love and respect for freedom and one another. We have gone to war in order to protect our land and freedom. Thousands of our young men have died and/or become disabled as a result of war. I can still see the grief-stricken faces of families who lost loved ones during the Vietnam Conflict.

This country now appears to be suffering from a "Me Syndrome." We seem to be more concerned about doing what's right for "me" instead of first thinking about whether our action will adversely affect someone else. It would really be great if, on this very special occasion called Veteran's Day, the citizens of Pitt County would take a few moments to pay respect to those men and women who sacrificed themselves so that this country might remain free.

Aver Helms Vulnerable

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms and his political organization received their "comeuppance" in last week's elections, making the conservative warrior vulnerable to defeat in 1984, Democratic officials say.

Helms was not on the ballot in last week's elections, but he and his active National Congressional Club backed four Republican challengers to Democratic incumbents, one GOP candidate for an open seat and two GOP incumbents in the state. All lost.

The defeats left the Republicans with only two North Carolina congressional seats — down from the current four. And all that despite the Congressional Club's raising and spending more than $9 million, although most of that money went to direct mail and fundraising expenses, not campaigns.

It even left some Republicans calling on Helms to make some adjustments.

"I'd say he better come back and mend some fences, stop being whatever he is that's so ideological," said Cass Ballenger, a Republican state senator from Hickory, one of the few Republicans who won reelection this year.

State Democratic Chairman Russell Walker said, "You got to know that Jesse Helms knows he got his comeuppance."

The picture of Helms in 1982 is far different from two years ago when his Congressional Club helped elect John East over Democratic Sen. Robert Morgan and helped carry North Carolina go for Reagan against most predictions.

And even earlier this year, that view was the prevailing one. Republican National Chairman Richard Richards visited the state three times, declaring it the GOP's most "fertile ground" in the country.

The optimism was based, in part, on the money and media skill of the Congressional Club, the nation's wealthiest political action committee. Helms and East are honorary chairmen of the group, formed from the remnants of Helms' 1972 campaign organization.

Helms' organization gave money and provided campaign services — such as television advertising — to four Republicans who were challenging incumbent Democrats and one other seeking an open seat.

The Congressional Club's influence was strongest in the 4th District, where Republican William Cobey was considered a shoe-in to unseat five-term Democrat Ike Andrews, convicted of drunken driving a month before the election. Andrews' own poll showed him 7 points behind 10 days before the election, and Cobey spent over $500,000.

Reagan even visited Raleigh a week before the election in what state GOP Chairman David Flaherty said was a move aimed at improving Reagan's election scorecard with a sure win. But Cobey lost by a slim amount and the other Congressional Club challengers were trounced by three-to-two margins. In addition, freshmen GOP Reps. Gene Johnston and William Hendon lost, even with Helms' backing.

Strategist Tom Ellis, a Raleigh attorney and chairman of the Congressional Club, blames Reagan's visit to Raleigh for Cobey's defeat. "It made Cobey more a part of that referendum on Ronald Reagan," Ellis said.

Others, though, pointed to the use of hard-hitting, often negative, television commercials by the club's candidates.

"I think the message is the tactics of the Congressional Club are not appreciated by North Carolinians," said Democrat L. Richardson Preyer, who lost his congressional seat to Johnston in 1980.

The defeats came after a bad season in Washington for the two-term senator.

After months of Senate debate and legislative maneuvering, Helms and the New Right lost on all their social initiatives. They failed to win reversals of national policy on abortion, school

LIFE, LOWER AND HIGHER TYPES

C.S. Lewis, in one of his remarkable books, "Beyond Personality," points out a spiritual truth which is well for us to remember.

The Bible teaches that Christ is "begotten" but that all of us are "made." We are sons of God, but not in the way that Christ is the son of God. He alone is begotten. He has in his nature spiritual life expressed in the Greek word "zoe," while we have only "bios," or animal life, which will finally run down and die.

Jesus Christ came to share his life with us. He will give us eternal life (zoe) if we will allow him to do so. Then, and only then, we will share with him the type of life which was begotten by God the Father, not just made by God acting as our Creator.

C.S. Lewis declares that the whole purpose of becoming a Christian is simply to share that eternal life. We can begin to live the higher life right here on earth. Real living is ours when we do so. — Elisha Douglass

Minimum Deposits Rule Urged

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Savings and loan officials, worried about losing money in savings accounts that pay low interest, are urging federal regulators to require a minimum of at least $2,500 in a new high-interest account mandated by Congress.

The officials have joined other groups in lobbying federal regulators who are scheduled to meet Nov. 15 to decide its features.

Congress passed a bill this year ordering regulators to create the account so that banks and savings and loans could be more competitive with the money market mutual funds which hold $230 billion. The account, Congress said, should be "directly equivalent to and competitive" with the funds.

The account will be free of an interest rate ceiling. No minimum balance was set in the legislation, although legislators suggested it be no more than $5,000.

Some, including an S&L regulator, want the institutions left to decide for themselves the entry fee. But the financially strapped S&L industry is worried that too small a minimum will draw money from low-paying passbook accounts and boost its costs.

Money market funds, concerned the new account might offer unfair competition, say no minimum balance requirement should be imposed by regulators. But they want the interest rate on the account pegged to a market rate, such as three-month Treasury bills.

They also question whether the new account should be given federal deposit insurance, contending that an unrestricted account could put the insurance funds at risk.

Banks and S&Ls, however, feel the federal insurance, provided up to $100,000 per depositor, will give them an edge in luring back money they've lost to the funds. The funds don't carry that insurance, although the Investment Company Institute, which represents some 700 of them, hinted recently it might be looking into some type of an insurance program.

While other features of the account must be decided by the regulators, debate seems sharpest over the amount of money investors should be required to make for an opening deposit.

The U.S. League of Savings Associations, which represents about 4,000 savings and loans, is urging an initial minimum of from $2,500 to $5,000 to protect S&Ls from large shifts of money from passbook accounts. Savers earn interest of 5½ percent on those accounts at savings and loans, and 5¼ percent at banks.

If a lower initial balance were set, institutions would have to pay a higher rate of interest on more accounts, the S&L officials said. "For savings associations, this is a matter of current concern, given the poor earnings of most associations."

But their competitors, bankers, contend that no matter the minimum set, the money market funds will lower their entry fees.

"It is important to emphasize that the initial investment requirements of the money funds cluster around $1,000, and that the money funds will certainly undercut any minimum," said the American Bankers Association, which has a membership of some 13,000 banks.

The association doesn't recommend a set minimum, noting some bankers suggest entry levels of $1,000 to $2,500.

Rather, it calls on the regulators to "work to free" the institutions from imposed minimums.

S&L regulator Richard Pratt, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, wants the institutions freed to decide their own minimums.

He said in an October letter to Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, chairman of the regulatory panel that will make the final decision, the account could lose "substantial attractiveness and marketability" if a minimum deposit were set by the government.

But Regan told a group of bankers, also last month, that the panel "will put a minimum (on the account) ... It seems to be coalescing around $5,000 but that's not a certainty."

Under the legislation, savers will be allowed to write up to three checks and authorize three automatic transfers a month on the account.

The account is to be authorized by Dec. 15.

Flurry Of Environmental Laws Didn't Brake Industrial Growth

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The landslide of environmental laws passed in the 1970s has not blocked construction of new oil refineries, steel mills and other industrial plants, according to a study released today.

The Conservation Foundation, after a three-year investigation, said it could find no credible evidence that U.S. environmental laws had created insurmountable obstacles or caused large numbers of companies to locate plants overseas.

"A significant number of industrial facilities in the United States are being built relatively quickly with few or no environmental problems," the study said. "These success stories are often overlooked in the clamor over celebrated siting battles."

The study also branded as a myth the belief that industries were playing one state off against another state by threatening to locate where environmental laws are weakest.

"We could unearth no evidence that environmental and land-use laws had caused a major movement of industry from states perceived to have strong environmental laws to those thought to be more permissive," the study said.

In the vast majority of cases, the study said, environmental regulations were of "very minor influence" in choosing a plant location.

"Traditional locational factors — access to markets, wage rates and transportation costs — are far more influential than environmental regulations in determining plant locations," the study said.

California, which has some of the strictest environmental laws in the country, "outstripped all other states in total gain in manufacturing employment during the 1970s," the study said.

"The final location of controversial projects was more likely to be a result of opposition pushing them away from a particular site, rather than weak laws luring them to another," the foundation said.

The foundation said it did find states with less stringent environmental and land-use regulations making slight gains in employment in high-pollution industries. These states, however, had made even bigger gains in manufacturing as a whole — a category which covers industries unaffected by environmental regulations, the foundation said.

"This suggests that states with less stringent laws or lax regulatory environments may also have other advantages — low labor costs, Sun Belt location, low unionization — that are attractive to industry," the study said. "It may be these advantages, rather than regulatory laxity, that attracts pollution-intensive industry."

The foundation said the few companies that had located overseas had run afoul of workplace health standards rather than pollution controls. It said this was particularly true in the metal processing industries and those producing highly toxic chemicals such as asbestos and benzidine dyes.

After Standard Oil Co. (Ohio) abandoned a three-year effort to build a major crude oil terminal in Long Beach, Calif., President Jimmy Carter responded in 1979 by proposing an Energy Mobilization Board which would have the power to expedite big energy projects by overriding state and local governments.

Congress refused to go along with the proposal and the foundation's study said such "radical solutions" are not necessary. Instead, it said governments should focus on ways to streamline existing environmental reviews.

The foundation, founded in 1948, is a nonprofit environmental research organization which receives financial support from private foundations, corporations and individuals.

'Nothing New' In Investigation

Greenville police and agents of the State Bureau of Investigation are continuing their investigation of the shooting last week of police officer C. M. Futrell, but "nothing new has developed," Capt. John Briley said this morning.

Futrell was shot in the right leg Thursday night by four men who he said abducted him at gunpoint from his downtown beat, and drove him to the Town Commons where they told him they had to shoot an officer with his own gun.

Futrell, 25, a member of the police department since February, said the four chanted "pigs must die," and said they acted like the shooting "was a great joy and thrill."

Futrell described his assailants as between 24 and 28 years old, with shoulder length brown hair. He said at least three wore gold earrings in their left ear and that they wore military-type coats with a patch showing a pig with a knife stuck through it.

firestorm of criticism at home when he and East cast crucial votes that gave Reagan's tax-increase bill initial Senate pass sage. It included a doubling of the federal tax on cigarettes — a political sin in a state where tobacco is a $1 billion crop.

All of this has boosted Democrats hopes that Helms can be beaten.

"The prince of darkness is going to be retired by a leading Democrat," predicted Democratic National Committee chairman Charles Mannatt in a speech Thursday.

The Democrat Mannatt was talking about is Gov. Jim Hunt, who worked hard to insure Democratic victories and possibly lay the foundation for a race against Helms in two years.

"What Hunt did in the congressional elections was tantamount to the first real shots of the 1984 campaign," Eugene Eidenberg, DNC executive director, said in a Thursday speech.

Helms was not available for comment, but Ellis contends the losses were part of a Southern trend resulting from unemployment, Social Security and President Reagan.

"Did his people win? No, they didn't," Ellis said. "But I don't interpret this in any way as a referendum on Jesse Helms ... It just went like that throughout the South."

floor.

The propriety of the convention itself is likely to be challenged on the floor. The party had to hold county conventions this summer to set the stage for this unusual November convention and some Republicans are complaining that they were held without proper notice. There is talk about challenging the credentials of some delegates elected to the state convention.

Flaherty dismisses such talk. "Whenever you do anything new, there are always people who are going to be skeptical." He says the convention will end up being a big party that will get some work done and raise some money for the party.

"Do you people blame Reaganomics for the lousy shape the town is in?" I asked.

"What's Reaganomics?" the waitress wanted to know.

"It's President Reagan's plan for getting America back on its feet. It includes tax cuts for everyone, incentives for industry, a big cut in government spending, and eventually a balanced budget."

"What are the odds in Washington he can do it?" the pit boss asked.

"Right now they're 10-to-1."

Suspect Wound Was Accidental

A 66-year-old Winterville man was injured Friday afternoon in what Pitt County authorities are investigating as a possible accidental shooting by a hunter, according to Sheriff Ralph Tyson.

He said that Simon Barrett of Grimes Street was struck in the hip by a bullet as he sat on a couch at the home of Alice Mae Langley on Route 1, Grimesland. Tyson said the bullet apparently passed through a wall and then went through one end of the couch before striking Barrett.

The sheriff said Ms. Langley told officers that she had heard several shots during the afternoon that were apparently fired by hunters. Tyson said it appears the bullet could have been fired by a hunter and went through a wall of the structure. He said deputies found part of a bullet inside the house.

Barrett was transported by the Eastern Pines rescue unit to Pitt Memorial Hospital. A hospital spokesman said this morning that Barrett was not a patient there today and apparently was not admitted Friday.

The incident was reported at 5:26 p.m.

Smugglers' Ship Forced To Stop

BOSTON (AP) — Coast Guardsmen had to fire across the bow of a 240-foot freighter to get it to stop, and when the ship was boarded, investigators found about 30 tons of marijuana.

The cutter Duane came upon the Biscayne Freeze about 400 miles southeast of Cape Cod on Saturday and boarded it after forcing it to stop. The ship was being escorted to Boston with a crew including one Cuban, one Spaniard and 22 Colombians.

The Coast Guard had to await Washington's permission to board the freighter.

Begin Declares He Shared No Advance Knowledge

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer
JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin testified today that he did not know in advance of his defense minister's decision to send Lebanese Christian militiamen into two Beirut refugee camps, where they killed hundreds of Palestinian women, children and men.

Begin's testimony, before a three-man Israeli commission probing the massacre, confirmed Defense Minister Ariel Sharon's earlier statement that he decided to send Israel's Christian allies into the camps to hunt out Palestinian guerrilla diehards. Sharon said he acted in line with a Cabinet decision to give the Christians greater involvement in the Lebanese operation, which began June 6 with Israel's invasion to rout the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Identifying himself for the record at the start of his 47-minute testimony, the 69-year-old Israeli leader said in Hebrew: "My name is Begin, Menachem, and my function is prime minister."

He declined to make an opening statement and began answering questions that focused on the Sept. 14 assassination of Lebanese President-elect Bashir Gemayel, and the subsequent decisions to send Israeli troops into west Beirut Sept. 15 and the Lebanese militiamen into the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps Sept. 16.

One of the commissioners, Supreme Court President Yitzhak Kahan, asked when Begin first discussed the Lebanese entry into the camps, and another, Supreme Court Justice Aharon Barak, refined the question: "When did you hear they were going in?"

"That was told to us at the Cabinet meeting on Thursday" — a meeting Sept. 16 that started a few minutes after the Lebanese entered the camps.

"It never occurred to me," Begin said, that the Lebanese would carry out a massive atrocity in the camps. Before that attack, he said, the militias had mounted operations with Israel's agreement and nothing untoward had happened.

Begin said he first learned of the massacre on a British Broadcasting Corp. radio broadcast Saturday afternoon Sept. 18. Sharon has testified that Begin spent the day in synagogue, observing the Rosh Hashana holiday as is his custom.

Begin said he called military Chief of Staff Lt. Gen.

Raphael Eytan and was told the operation had been stopped and the Christian forces had left the camps.

Begin's testimony was broadcast live on Israeli radio. Though the prime minister initially opposed a judicial inquiry, huge street demonstrations and pressure from his junior coalition partners forced him to reverse the decision.

Kahan, flanked by Barak and retired Maj. Gen. Yona Efrat, asked Begin about a meeting he had with Sharon and Eytan after the Israelis learned that Gemayel, Israel's ally and head of the Christian Phalange militias, had been assassinated.

Begin said he authorized the army's takeover of mostly-Moslem west Beirut.

"I counseled my two colleagues," he said, that the army should take "the main points in order to prevent vengeance attacks by the Christian population against the Moslem population in west Beirut."

Barak asked whether the task of the rightist Christian militia had been discussed, and Begin replied: "No, not at all."

However, Begin confirmed Sharon's testimony about an earlier decision in principle to seek greater Christian militia involvement in the fighting. The prime minister said the Cabinet discussed the issue on June 15 and wanted the Lebanese army and the Christian militias to "play their part. They must participate in fighting to bring about reunification of their capital."

Begin had previously denied that Israel bears any responsibility for the Sept. 16-18 slaughter at the camps, surrounded at the time by Israeli troops. Israel contends Phalange Party militiamen were responsible for killing civilians in the camps.

In testimony Sunday, the Israeli army commander in Beirut, Brig Gen. Amnon Yaron, indicated that the militiamen were allowed to continue their sweep through the camps long after suspicions of a slaughter had surfaced.

Yaron's testimony contradicted Sharon's account.

The general said he began receiving vague, fragmentary indications that something was amiss within hours of the Christians' entry into the camps in the afternoon of Sept. 16.

But he implied under questioning that permission to continue the operation was given by Eytan at a meeting in Beirut at 4 p.m. on Sept. 17.

Sharon told the commission Oct. 25 that the sweep of the refugee camps was ordered stopped at midday on Sept. 17 — four hours before the meeting.

Sole Survivor Tries To Cope

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Mike McMichael, whose entire family was wiped out in an automobile accident last month, is trying to cope with their deaths and start his own life over.

"It's really hard," said McMichael, a chemist at Research Triangle Institute.

McMichael's parents, William and Ethelyn McMichael, his wife Cathy, 36, and their children, Andrew, 12, Rebecca, 10, and Aaron, 8, were killed instantly Oct. 22 when a tractor-trailer truck struck their car broadside at the intersection of U.S. 70 and Airport road near the Raleigh-Durham Airport.

He was the sole survivor and is still recovering from a broken collarbone, three broken ribs and a broken pelvis he suffered in the wreck. Flowers, a stack of mail and a brief condolence from the President and Nancy Reagan surround his hospital bed.

His adjustment has been helped by visits and letters from family, friends and concerned strangers.

"All these people want to help, but there's so little they can do. But just knowing they are there helps," he said.

McMichael, 37, has received visits from friends in Hillsborough, where the McMich's lived, the state trooper who responded to the accident and numerous Raleigh residents he didn't know before the accident.

"His big problem is to make some plans for his new life — a new life is what it amounts to," said a neighbor, the Rev. Martin L. Stirewalt. "But he's a very strong-minded man. He expresses his grief and goes ahead with his plans for the future."

The wreck occurred after the family had picked up Cathy McMichael, an amateur archaeologist, at the airport following her two-week excavation trip near St. Louis.

Driving the family back to Hillsborough, McMichael's father apparently became confused at the intersection. McMichael was riding on the passenger side of the front seat.

"I've gone through a phase of thinking, what if I had changed the timing at that intersection," McMichael said.

"I sort of blamed myself," he said. "But I've kind of worked that out and I feel a little better about it. I think today I bottomed out emotionally. Before, I hadn't even had the strength to even deal with what had happened."

After his release in about two weeks, McMichael will return to his parent's home in Alexandria, Va., with his brother and sister.

"We figured it would be better if we all went through the house together," said his sister, Jeannine Callahan from Georgia. She said McMichael's brother-in-law plans to go back to Hillsborough with him.

Police Probe Weekend Theft

Greenville police are investigating the theft of some $581 in cash from Eastern Construction Co. on N.C. 11, Sunday.

Capt. John Briley said the break-in was reported about 10:27 a.m. He noted that entry to the Eastern Construction building was gained by prying open a door.

Briley said $381 was taken from a desk, while $200 was taken from a fire safe the robbers pried open.

Also missing were two checks, one for $253 and the second for $126.50.

Investigating Property Loss

A break-in at Sam Stewart's Body Shop at 3012 S. Memorial Drive Saturday resulted in the loss of some $875 in property from the building, police department Capt. John Briley said this morning.

According to the officer, thieves gained entrance to the building through a rear door and took a box containing assorted tools, a paint spray gun, two air grinders, a sander and an air drill.

The incident was reported at 1:27 p.m.

Gunman Robs Local Store

Greenville police are looking for a lone gunman who took an undetermined amount of money from the Stop-N-Go on Dickinson Avenue about 9 p.m. Saturday.

Capt. John Briley said a man wearing a scarf as a mask, and armed with a .12 gauge shotgun, entered the store, ordered the clerk to open the cash register, and ran out with a portion of the cash.

Mummy Still Keeps Secret

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A 20th century X-ray machine costing $1.2 million couldn't unravel the death secret of Wenuhotep, a 2,500-year-old Egyptian mummy.

The corpse was placed in Methodist Hospital's temperature-controlled mobile scanner by officials of the Indianapolis Children's Museum who hoped to determine a cause of death for the woman wrapped in a linen shroud.

Wenuhotep is on loan from the Oriental Institute of Chicago.

"They treated her like she was worth a million dollars," said David L. Brown, a hospital radiologist who conducted the CT — computerized tomography scan.

Four packets in which body organs were embalmed were found by the X-ray Sunday and Brown also discovered that the brain and heart were missing. He found that the left knee was thicker than the right, indicating early arthritis or unusual stress on the left leg.

The Oriental Institute will examine a videotape recording made of the videotaped scan. They hope the packets may pinpoint the year Wenuhotep died and under what circumstances.

"It was one of those things that may not have added anything, but it was a fun venture," Brown said. "Who knows? The CT may give us one more piece of fact that may date it. I suspect within the next 20 to 50 years we'll really learn what they did back then."

Tiring Pope Continues Travels

By DENNIS REDMONT
Associated Press Writer
VALENCIA, Spain (AP) — A visibly weary Pope John Paul II visited flood-stricken eastern Spain today, capping the next-to-last day of his tour with a Mass for 100,000 people and the announcement of $25.2 million in aid to the disaster area.

In Poland, meanwhile, martial law chief Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski agreed today to allow the pope to visit Poland next June 18, the official PAP news agency said.

There was no immediate comment on the report from the papal party in Spain. The visit has been stalled by the pope's objections to the Dec. 13 imposition of martial law in his homeland.

After an early-morning flight from Madrid to Valencia, Spain's third-largest city, the 62-year-old pontiff announced that the church would provide $25.2 million in emergency aid for Spain's flooded Levant region.

At an open-air Mass in Valencia's broad Paseo de la Alameda, the pope offered condolences "to people and families who suffered the consequences of devastating floods and who have lost their loved ones. I trust that the necessary solidarity and Christian help will efficiently reach you."

The pope, who also ordained 130 priests here today, was to fly over the stricken area in a helicopter.

John Paul in Barcelona. The Spanish news agency Europa Press quoted Red Cross officials as saying about 1,000 people were treated for exposure after traveling across the rugged mountains in sub-zero temperatures to see the pontiff.

Police in Montserrat reported two teen-age girls killed in a rock slide when they returned to their bus after the ceremony.

In Barcelona, the pope celebrated Mass for 120,000 worshippers at the new soccer stadium and addressed thousands of workers in the Montjuic district, where he called for a new economic order based on business-labor cooperation.

Jamie Said Recovering

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Little Jamie Fiske, the 11-month-old girl who received a life-saving liver transplant, continued her steady recovery today, the University of Minnesota hospitals said.

A statement by the hospital said Jamie, listed in satisfactory condition in the pediatric intensive care unit, could be removed from a respirator today.

"She is continuing to show signs of improvement," said the release. "Doctors continue to monitor her closely and have indicated they are pleased with her progress."

The youngster is the daughter of Charles and Marilyn Fiske of Bridgewater, Mass. Born last Nov. 26, she was somewhat jaundiced at birth and the disease was traced to biliary atresia, in which bile backs up into the liver.

Physicians said she would have died by her first birthday if she had not received the new liver. The transplant was performed Friday.

After Fiske made a desperate plea for help, a family in Utah offered the organ from their child, killed in a car-train accident. The vital organ came from Jess Bellon, a 10-month-old boy. The parents, Lared Bellon, and his wife Leann, approved the donation.

Bellon, who had heard Fiske's televised plea for help, said later, "I had no idea it would ever affect me."

At least 40 people died in the flooding, which began Oct. 19 and lasted nearly a week. An unknown number of others are missing.

There are no overall figures for damage, but agricultural officials say the loss in damage to Valencia's famed citrus groves and rice fields exceeds $40 million. The national rail system RENFE estimates it lost $20 million worth of track and equipment.

In northwest Spain, fire officials today reported that six people had died and three others were missing after two days torrential of torrential rains there.

Despite the tragedy, the pope's welcome in Valencia was one of the warmest of his Spanish tour, first ever by a reigning pontiff. Valencia is the 15th of 16 Spanish cities on the crowded, 10-day papal itinerary. The pope is scheduled to return to Rome on Tuesday.

On Sunday, he prayed in the morning rain before the Shrine of the Black Madonna at the mountaintop monastery of Montserrat before being driven to Barcelona — the second-largest city in Spain and industrial center of the northeast Catalonia region.

The shrine, said to date from the 12th century, is the focus of Roman Catholicism in autonomous Catalonia.

Simulated Attacks By Soviet Navy Bombers

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet navy has sent its advanced supersonic Backfire bombers on simulated missile attacks against U.S. aircraft carriers for the first time, according to American naval officials.

The officials also report that "just recently, the Soviets began conducting Backfire operations over the Sea of Japan, adding a new dimension to the threat to the sea lanes in that area."

Navy officials said this when asked recently about persistent reports that Soviet naval leaders have begun making wider use of the twin-engine Backfires, the most modern long-range bombers in use today.

Since these planes first appeared in the mid-1970's, U.S. naval strategists have warned that the sophisticated swing-wing Backfire bombers and their air-to-surface missiles pose a potentially serious danger to U.S. carrier battle groups and other warships protecting vital sea lanes.

The Backfire maneuvers simulating missile attacks occurred in late September and early October during a major U.S. naval exercise involving 15 U.S. ships, including the nuclear powered carrier Enterprise and the conventional carrier Midway in the Northern Pacific.

At the time of those exercises, Adm. Sylvester R. Foley, commander of the U.S. Pacific fleet, told of repeated buzzing by Soviet warplanes and described such Soviet activity as common during naval exercises.

Navy reports then also mentioned older Soviet naval bombers, but there was no mention of any appearance of Backfires.

Senior Navy officials appeared reluctant to discuss the Backfire operations publicly, but decided to respond to questions.

"It is the first time that Backfires operated in relatively close proximity to a carrier," Navy Lt. Cmdr Tom Jurkowsky said.

But Jurkowsky declined to go into any detail on the number of Soviet Backfires that took part in the simulated missile attacks, or to provide any other specifics.

However, intelligence sources said eight Backfires staged a total of two practice attacks against the Enterprise and the Midway on Sept. 30 and Oct. 1.

According to these sources, who asked to remain anonymous, the bombers came within 120 miles of the carriers, which is well within the range of the AS-4 Kitchen missiles carried by such planes. The Kitchen has a reach of between 150 and 250 miles, according to a naval intelligence report on the characteristics of Soviet weapons.

It could not be learned whether any Navy fighters scrambled in response to the appearance of the Backfires. However, Foley said on Oct. 1 that carrier-based F-14 jets had been sent out to intercept Soviet planes which had appeared in the general maneuver area.

The Soviet naval aviation arm has more than 70 Backfire bombers in service. The planes can reach a maximum speed of 1,600 miles per hour, according to U.S. naval intelligence.

New Energy 'Czar' Will Face A Hostile Congress

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Donald Hodel is the country's newest energy czar, but the way the Reagan administration views energy policy — energy corporal might be a more appropriate title.

Whatever the title, he may have the toughest job in Washington.

He has been picked to head an agency President Reagan has already trimmed substantially and wants to abolish altogether.

He will face a hostile Congress which delighted in raking his predecessor over the coals for perceived policy failures. The most unkind critics claim the administration doesn't even have an energy policy.

Both critics and supporters readily agree that energy policy has changed dramatically from the days when President Carter rallied the American people to conserve and develop solar and other renewable energy sources with his "moral equivalent of waf" speech.

Gone is the multimillion-dollar program to ration gasoline during shortages.

Gone is the program under which the federal government regulated the thermostats in 2.8 million office buildings and stores.

Gone or trimmed substantially are government programs set up to nurture dozens of energy technologies ranging from windmills to ocean currents.

The Reagan administration has moved aggressively to get the government out of the energy business and let the marketplace work.

Departing Energy Secretary James Edwards counts that as his greatest achievement.

"We changed the crisis mentality of the American people over energy policy and redirected government's role," he said in an interview before leaving office.

To the administration, the signs of success are everywhere:

—Gasoline prices, which climbed to $1.40-a-gallon after Reagan's decision to remove the remaining price controls, dropped 18-cents-a-gallon in the next year.

—Oil imports this year are 16 percent below the 1981 level and 53 percent below the peak reached in 1977.

—The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is in disarray with members struggling to prop up a $34-a-barrel oil price in the face of increased cheating among some countries.

Despite the current rosy outlook, Hodel will have to deal with an increasingly restive Congress which has stymied many of the administration's initiatives of late.

One of the reasons Hodel was picked for the job was his record of strong support for nuclear power while serving as head of the Bonneville Power Administration.

tion.

The White House is counting on Hodel to shepherd through Congress bills to finally solve the problem of disposing of high-level nuclear wastes and streamline the current licensing procedure for nuclear plants.

Also on the administration's agenda is a renewed attempt to speed the de-control of natural gas prices and get a reluctant Congress to buy Reagan's plan to abolish the Energy Department it created only five years ago and move most of its functions to the Commerce Department.

The administration is also under attack from outside experts who say the current supply surplus could evaporate quickly, plunging the country once more into gasoline lines.

"The substantial reason for the current fall in energy demand is not conservation but the effects of the worst recession since the Great Depression," says Harvard energy expert Dr. Daniel Yergin.

In a new study, Yergin predicts the world could be hit by a third oil crisis as early as 1986 as the economy improves and supplies tighten.

However, Edwards and other administration officials don't see another oil shock on the horizon. An Energy Department study released the week before Edwards left office forecasts a 43 percent drop in net energy imports over the next 20 years.

The difference in the two projections revolves around how much of the current decline in energy consumption is due to permanent conservation efforts — such as more fuel-efficient cars and factories — and how much of it is due to a depressed economy.

Optimists say 75 percent of the energy decline is permanent while the pessimists say only 25 percent is lasting.

Edwards is firmly in the optimistic corner, maintaining that the country won't go on another energy binge once the economy picks up.

"For the next decade or more we are going to become increasingly more efficient as the economy continues its transformation from heavy to light industry," he says.

"The truth is that we have not yet begun to switch to more energy efficient technologies."

NEW DESTROYER CLASS — The U.S. Navy has released this artist's drawing of the new Burke class multi-mission surface combatant destroyer. Navy Secretary John Lehman said the class was named after retired Admiral Arleigh Burke, 81, a former Chief of Naval Operations and World War II hero. It marked the first time in U.S. history that a class of ships has been named after an individual during his lifetime. (AP Laserphoto)

Views On Dental Health

Kenneth T. Perkins, D.D.S. P.A.
PAUL REVERE - THE DENTIST

How about a little dental trivia? History records Paul Revere as the man who made the important ride on the night of April 18, 1775, as well as being a skilled silversmith. But the history books never mention the fact that Paul Revere was a practicing dentist. A student of John Baker, the first English dentist to come to America, Paul not only carved false teeth from ivory but concocted a dentifrice that contained abrasive substances and various mixtures such as cuttlebone, brown-sugar candy, saltpeter and gunpowder, butter and bread crumbs. We don't know if it sold too well.

How far back does the use of nitrous oxide (laughing gas) go in the annals of dentistry? In 1884, Dr. Horace Wells, an American dentist, demonstrated the properties of nitrous oxide by using it on himself while having his own tooth extracted.

How much dental care is needed today? It has been estimated that if every dentist spent 24 hours a day, every day of the year, just filling cavities, there would still be one billion cavities left unfilled in the United States.

Prepared as a public service to promote better dental health. From the office of: Kenneth T. Perkins, D.D.S. P.A. Evans St., Phone: 752-5126.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina f.o.b. dock broiler market was steady. Supply moderate. Demand good. The dock weighted average price is 39.53 per pound this week for small purchases of sized plant-grade broilers picked up at processing plants. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina today was 1,651,000.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market took a sharp drop today amid uncertainty over prospects for further cuts in the Federal Reserve's discount rate.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials tumbled 17.10 to 1,034.68 by noon.

Declines outnumbered advances by about 3 to 1 among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Since last week's election, there have been widespread forecasts of a new reduction in the discount rate, which has been lowered in five steps from 12 to 9 1/2 percent since mid-summer.

Some observers had thought the Fed would cut the rate on loans to private financial institutions after the market closed on Friday, but it took no action at that time.

Analysts voiced some concern that a reduction had already been taken into account in stock prices with their rise to record levels last week. They theorized that if the Fed didn't announce a cut of at least a half a percentage point soon, stock prices could give up more of their recent gains.

Among actively traded blue chips, American Telephone & Telegraph was down 5/8 at 61 1/2; International Business Machines lost 1 1/4 to 83 3/8, and Sears Roebuck 1 to 30 1/4.

The NYSE's composite index dropped 1.17 to 80.66. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off 3.58 at 334.08.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 32.92 million shares at noon, against 45.71 million at the same point Friday.

Begins His Prison Stay

WHITEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Edward Walton Williamson, a former Columbus County commissioner who pleaded guilty to accepting a bribe, has begun serving a 10-year sentence in a federal prison in Springfield, Mo.

Williamson, who departed for Missouri this weekend, is the first elected official charged in the FBI's undercover investigation of corruption in southeastern North Carolina to begin serving a federal term.

Former state Rep. Ron Taylor of Bladen County, who pleaded guilty to racketeering charges, is scheduled to begin serving a five-year federal sentence Dec. 1 in the same Springfield institution.

Taylor already is serving a 20-year state term for ordering the burning of three warehouses owned by state Sen. J.J. "Monk" Harrington, D-Bertie.

U.S. District Court Judge Franklin T. Dupree ordered Williamson to serve his term in Springfield because of the prison's medical facilities. Williamson suffers from emphysema and heart trouble.

Williamson is eligible for parole, but it could not be determined how long he will serve before a commission considers releasing him.

Garvey Hopeful Despite Stalled Talks

NEW YORK (AP) — Ed Garvey, chief of the National Football League players union stayed behind after management's chief negotiator Jack Donlan and mediator Sam Kagel had checked out of the hotel where they had endured eight fruitless days of talks.

While the gloom created by the continued inability to settle the players strike extended into Commissioner Pete Rozelle's office, with the commissioner talking Sunday about releasing the block of hotel rooms reserved for the Jan. 30 Super Bowl Game, Garvey continued to sound hopeful about the season being resumed.

The union leader's optimism that a settlement will be reached is based on pragmatic view: "You don't throw away a $600 million industry."

Garvey also says he thinks the future of the season could be decided by midweek. "I think we will set up a meeting with Jack and one or two others within the next three days," he said. "I think someone will have to put a deal together and then see if it flies with us and it flies with them. I don't say it will be an easy sell, but it will happen."

Among those who seemed to disagree with him was Art Modell, the owner of the Cleveland Browns, who said, "Speaking for the Browns, I would rather give up the season than make a deal which I can't live with downstream."

"Some club owners are very unhappy with the offer we have already made," he added. "If we go any further, we would be committing suicide."

Garvey does not envision a settlement coming in a media-besieged surroundings of previous negotiations. It won't be a formal, mediated session. "I think we are beyond that now," he said.

When the strike talks collapsed again on Saturday night, for the second time in two weeks, and when the Management Council, bargainers for the owners, packed up and left the hotel, and Kagel followed them Sunday, the union vowed to stay until the negotiations resume.

"The players will stay out until they get a fair collective bargaining agreement," said Garvey. "They just aren't going to put up with the old ways any longer."

Garvey spent part of the day, the 47th day of the strike, waiting for the phone to ring. It didn't. Finally, he called Donlan, at the Management Council office. Donlan was home, spending the day with his family.

"If he wants to bargain," Garvey said, "he knows where to find us."

If Garvey sticks to his word, he'll also be on the phone sometime today — with the National Labor Relations Board, taking the necessary steps to get an unfair labor practice complaint issued against the management council.

Garvey and the union didn't take kindly to the management council decision to send out to the 28 teams a 4½-page synopsis of a 75-page document it gave to the union, one delineating its latest proposal. Any interested players, the owners say, can call their teams and get one.

That, Garvey says, is an attempt to bypass the union and negotiate directly with the players. And that, it continues, is illegal. Garvey is expected to advise the players that the synopsis — even the 75-page document — contains loopholes.

Donlan and Sargent Karch, the union's chief counsel, say the latest union move in the NLRB's direction will only hinder the already staggering bargaining process.

"It won't prevent the two sides from negotiating, but it will make it very difficult," Karch said. "Obviously I'll be involved as a witness or a lawyer or both. Jack will be involved. The same thing goes for their side. Ed will be involved. So will (union chief counsel Joseph) Yablonski."

"We're not talking about weeks," Donlan added. "It could be months. It could be years..." And even then, Donlan added, a ruling against the management council wouldn't substantially change the negotiation process.

Rozelle Sunday talked about the Jan. 30 Super Bowl date.

"Week by week, it is just trickling away," he said. "Theoretically, the Super Bowl could be moved. We don't have to have hotel rooms to play a Super Bowl game; all we need is a stadium and getting the Rose Bowl would not be a problem. But there are a lot of other factors involved with changing the date and every one of them is negative."

Rozelle added that sometime this week the league would inform the Los Angeles Convention Bureau that because the regular season might not resume, the NFL would release its commitment to approximately 5,500 hotel rooms it reserved for players, owners and members of the news media.

Staying behind in the hotel with Garvey were some of the player representatives. Among them was Mike Ozdowski, linebacker for the Baltimore Colts. He made about $14 in tips for an hour's worth of work.

That's considerably less than he used to make in autumns past, when he was careening around the field for the Colts.

Points Title On Allison's Mind 'All The Time'

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — Bobby Allison admits he has been thinking about little else in recent weeks than winning his first Grand National stock car championship.

Allison said his mind already was drifting two weeks ahead to the Nov. 21 season finale as he took the checkered flag in the Atlanta Journal 500 Sunday at Atlanta International Raceway.

"There's no question it (the championship) is on my mind... all the time," said the 45-year-old driver from Hueytown, Ala. "It's important to me and to the (DiGard) team. Winning would mean a lot to all of us."

"When I saw the checkered flag, my mind was already on that last race (at Riverside, Calif.) and the possibilities."

However, despite Sunday's confidence-building triumph, Darrell Waltrip, who finished third here, still is king of the hill going into the 500-kilometer race at Riverside International Raceway.

Waltrip, who came from far behind Allison in the point standings in 1981 to win the Winston Cup title by 53 points — clinching the title with a conservative run for a sixth-place finish at Riverside — still is 22 points ahead of Allison.

"We're not worried about the ifs," said the 35-year-old Waltrip. "We'll go to Riverside looking for second and third. And we'll win that sucker if somebody (Allison) doesn't want it worse than we do."

Waltrip can clinch the title, no matter what Allison does, if he finishes third or better. And he can also clinch it with a fourth-place finish if he picks up the five-point bonus for leading at least one lap.

But Allison isn't conceding a thing. "We're close enough that he has to pay attention," Allison said. "There's no way he's going to be able to go out there and cruise around like he did last year. And we know that the only job we have is to win it."

The victory Sunday was very important to Allison, and not just because of the points.

"It's true, things haven't been going very well for us in the last few races," he noted. "We had some bad luck in four straight races, then I made a mistake last week (Oct. 31 at Rockingham, N.C.)."

During that five-race stretch, Waltrip won four times and turned a 147-point deficit into a 37-point lead.

Allison's car overheated and quit one race after leading most of the way and dropped out of three straight races with blown engines. Then, at Rockingham, he was in the midst of a hot duel with Waltrip when he spun leaving the pits late in the race and wound up second to Waltrip by about seven seconds.

Still, Allison said, "I don't believe in any of that snakebit stuff."

He might have reconsidered that opinion early in Sunday's race when his throttle started sticking and "things got a little thrilling out there at times." But the crew managed to fix the problem during an early pit stop and Allison led the 328-lap race seven times for 107 laps.

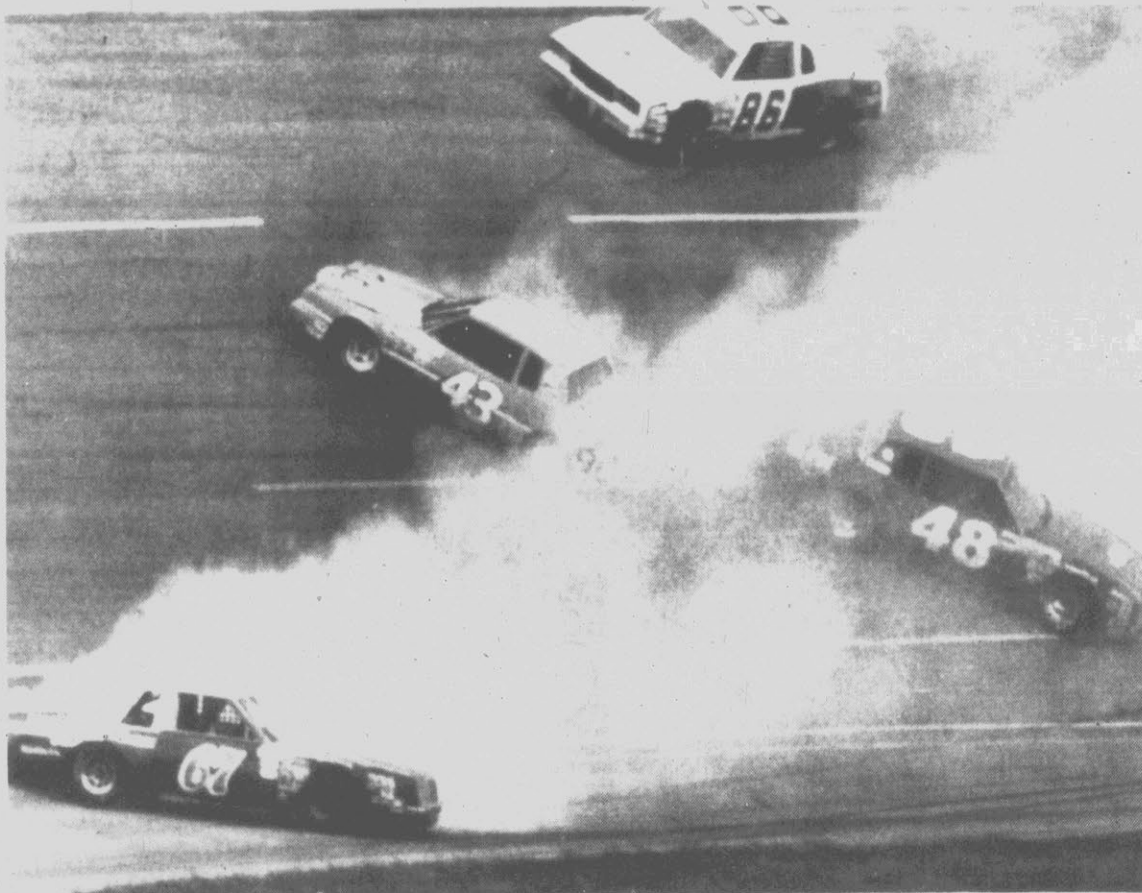

In all, there were a race record 45 lead changes among 14 drivers, but Allison led the last 23 laps. He averaged 130.885 mph in picking up first-place money of $45,500.

The last of 10 caution flags came out with just 15 laps remaining when Richard Petty, battling for third place, lost control in the fourth turn, hit the wall and spun into the infield. That set up a final 10-lap sprint to the finish when the green flag came out again.

"I could never get a decided advantage on him (Waltrip), so I decided not to go banzai on him until the last 10 laps or so," Allison said. "Then, it was time to hang the laundry out."

Waltrip tried to take Allison on the low side when the green flag dropped, but his final tire adjustment was a bit off and he faded. Harry Gant passed him for second and finished just 0.66-seconds behind Allison's Gatorade-sponsored Chevrolet Monte Carlo.

"We lost our radio contact early in the race and we didn't communicate as to the extent of the wedge (tire adjustment) to put in on the last pit stop," Waltrip explained. "There was no time to adjust the way we would have liked to, so we couldn't keep up at the end."

Trio Looking To Take Over No. 1 Spot

By The Associated Press
For the second year in a row, Pitt has surrendered the driver's seat in the race for college football's national championship. And Southern Methodist, Georgia and Arizona State, all of whom have been riding shotgun, are in a three-way scrap for the prize.

Besides top-rated Pitt, a 31-16 victim of Notre Dame, fifth-ranked Arkansas also suffered the first blemish on its 1982 slate, losing to Baylor 24-17. That reduced the ranks of teams with perfect records to the aforementioned three — second-ranked SMU, a 41-14 winner over Rice; No. 3 Georgia, which pounded No. 20 Florida 44-0, and fourth-ranked Arizona State, a sluggish 30-16 victor over winless Oregon State.

"The most important thing to us is who is No. 1 on Jan. 2. We intend for that to be us," said SMU tailback Craig James, who rushed for 130 yards and a touchdown and teamed with split end Gary Smith on a 62-yard scoring pass. Smith also caught a 28-yard TD pass from Lance McIlhenny, while Eric Dickerson rushed for 102 yards, including a 19-yard touchdown.

"Our players knew the Notre Dame score at the half," said Coach Bobby Collins. "I told them we can't go out and let down. As far as being No. 1, these kids are No. 1 in my heart, and I think they deserve to be No. 1."

But even Collins would be hard-pressed to argue with Georgia, whose supporters chanted "We're No. 1! We're No. 1!" after the Bulldogs shellacked Florida in what was supposed to be a close game.

Herschel Walker, who led the way with 219 yards and three touchdowns on 35 carries, low-keyed the No. 1 talk.

"I can't say we should be on top yet," Walker said. "SMU is still hanging in there. We can't let our ranking go to our heads. We still have to play at Auburn next week."

And there was little talk of a national championship at Arizona State, which must face Washington next Saturday.

"After last week's emotional game against Southern Cal, it was hard getting up for this one," said quarterback Todd Hons, who ran for one of the Sun Devils' three touchdowns against Oregon State — Alvin Moore and Darryl Clack scored the others — while Luis Zendejas booted three field goals.

The three unbeaten-untied teams don't lack for challengers. Saturday's setbacks are the only losses for Pitt and Arkansas, while sixth-ranked Nebraska (8-1) trounced Oklahoma State 48-10, No. 7 Penn State (8-1) crushed North Carolina State 54-0, No. 10 Washington (8-1) nipped ninth-ranked UCLA 10-7 and No. 11 LSU (7-0-1) knocked off eighth-ranked Alabama 20-10.

Part of Notre Dame's storied heritage is bumping off No. 1-ranked teams, and Pitt became the latest to join the list. The Irish rallied for three

Bannister Tops List That Includes Kemp, Lowenstein, McRae, Garvey

NEW YORK (AP) — Pitcher team that signs a Class A Floyd Bannister of the Seattle Mariners is expected to be the top pick when baseball's annual free agent bidding begins on Wednesday.

The 27-year-old left-hander hit .286 with 19 home runs and 98 runs batted in, while Lowenstein hit .320 with a respectable 12-13 record and 24 homers.

The other biggest names in ballparks and led the American League in strikeouts.

Bannister is one of three Class A players who will be this year's free agent draft.

The others are outfielder Steve Kemp of the Chicago White Sox and outfielder-designated hitter John Lowenstein of the Baltimore Orioles.

A Class A player is one rated in the top 20 percent of his position in his league. Any Chet Lemon of Detroit signed for $3.25-million spread over five years; Rick Cerone of the New York Yankees, $2.4 million for four years, and Larry Herndon of Detroit, $2.8 million for four years. But there still will be plenty of players available.

ECU Drops 2 Of Three

DURHAM — East Carolina suffered two losses in three matches at the Duke Quad Volleyball Tournament this weekend.

ECU, now 24-15, fell to Duke, 15-10, 7-15 and 9-15 and to Georgia, 7-15, 11-15. In between, ECU beat Virginia, 15-5, 14-16, 15-5.

"I'm disappointed about losing to Duke," ECU coach Lynn Davidson said. "We lost our intensity a little and that allowed them to go ahead in the last game. Overall, I think these games helped us prepare for our match with State."

Bird Keys Boston By Nets

By The Associated Press
Larry Bird and base-stealing champion Ricky Henderson have two things in common — they wear green uniforms and they always get a green light.

"Not giving Larry a green light to shoot is like not giving Henderson the green light to steal," Boston Celtics Coach Bill Fitch said Sunday night. "It's just not something you do."

Bird, who went in the game shooting 45.5 percent after five National Basketball Association games, hit 15 of 20 shots and scored 38 points Sunday night to pace the Celtics to a 102-100 victory of the New Jersey Nets.

But Bird took only one shot and scored three points in the fourth quarter, when the Nets rallied from a 14-point deficit with a 17-5 spurt midway through the period and three straight three-point goals in the final minute.

"I was getting tired in the fourth quarter," Bird said. "We had a tough game Friday night against Washington and played two overtimes against Philadelphia Saturday. But the way I was shooting tonight gave me a lot of confidence. For some reason, I always shoot better when I'm tired."

The Nets' 17-5 spurt cut an 87-73 Boston lead with 7:54 left to 92-90 with 2:23 remaining.

Two free throws by Bird made it 98-91 with 51 seconds to go, but the Nets fought back again on two three-point goals by Darwin Cook and one by Albert King to trim the margin to 101-100. Bird, who also had 12 rebounds and six assists, then hit one of two free throws with four seconds left and the Celtics prevented the Nets from getting off a shot in their last possession.

Spurs 101, Suns 100
George Gervin was not as hot as Bird, hitting 16 of 31 shots, but his 14 straight successful free throws gave him 47 points in San Antonio's narrow victory over Phoenix.

Gervin's last point was a free throw with nine seconds left that gave the Spurs a 100-98 edge. But since the Suns fouled Gervin away from the ball, San Antonio also kept possession of the ball.

Artis Gilmore hit another free throw with eight seconds left for a 101-98 edge before Larry Nance's followup basket for Phoenix closed the scoring.

Sonics 102, Bucks 90
Seattle improved its record to 6-0 as Fred Brown scored 20 points in relief of flu-stricken Gus Williams.

Lonnie Shelton added 20 points for the SuperSonics, while Sidney Moncrief led Milwaukee, also with 20.

Lakers 103, Blazers 89
Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 22 points and grabbed 11 rebounds to pace Los Angeles over Portland.

The Trail Blazers kept the game close for 32 minutes, but a 13-4 spurt in the last four minutes of the third quarter gave the Lakers a 72-62 lead. Then eight straight points by Los Angeles early in the fourth period made it 82-66.

Garvey's Days As Dodger Numbered

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It seems certain that Steve Garvey's days as a member of the Los Angeles Dodgers are in the past. Such a development really isn't too surprising when the past is considered.

Garvey isn't the first prospective, prominent free agent that the Dodgers haven't kept in recent years. He joins pitchers Tommy John and Don Sutton in that category.

Dodgers' President Peter O'Malley perhaps indicated the direction in which the club would go in the Garvey case last April.

"With salaries today getting as high as they are, if you have confidence in a younger player coming up, you're much better off to go with him than a 35-year-old veteran," O'Malley was quoted as saying at the time.

Garvey, who will be 34 next month, and the Dodgers were unable to reach agreement on a new contract Saturday night. The club had to sign Garvey by midnight EST Saturday to keep him from going through this Wednesday's major league baseball re-entry draft.

Garvey, who has played with the Dodgers for the past 12 seasons, had declared his intention to become a free agent last Tuesday. Potential free agents had to declare such an intention by last Thursday night and their teams were then given 48 hours to sign them.

A spokesman for the Dodgers said Saturday night that, following club policy, they wouldn't retain rights to Garvey in the re-entry draft, something they're allowed to do.

trying to sign Steve."

Brock, 25, hit 44 home runs for Albuquerque this year. He belted 32 homers for San Antonio of the Texas League in 1981 and had 29 homers for Lodi of the California League in 1980.

If he's successful, Brock will definitely fulfill the Dodgers' need for a left-handed power hitter.

Garvey's voice quivered and he was near tears after Saturday night's fruitless negotiations at a downtown Los Angeles office building.

"This has been a very disappointing evening, probably the saddest of my life," he said. "There is sadness in the fact that this has been many years of an association that has been very special, not only to me personally but to the many fans and friends and neighbors that I have, not only in the city but in Southern California and throughout the country."

"It is a very low point in my life. It's a very sad evening and there will be many, many people who I will miss."

O'Malley said the Dodgers did what they could to sign Garvey. Length of contract was believed to be the major stumbling block in negotiations; Garvey wanted at least a five-year contract while the club reportedly offered a three-year deal.

Greg Brock, who had an outstanding year with Albuquerque of the Pacific Coast League last season, is expected to replace Garvey at first base.

"We know that Greg Brock has been playing very well in winter ball," said Dodgers' vice president Al Campanis. "We feel he will make a very satisfactory replacement for Garvey at first base, but that did not deter our efforts from trying to sign Steve."

Richmond Coach Tarrant To Speak At Sports Club

University of Richmond basketball coach Dick Tarrant will be the featured speaker at the Greenville Sports Club's biweekly luncheon Tuesday.

The meeting has been switched from the Holiday Inn, which is being remodeled, to the Ramada Inn. This is the only meeting that will be affected.

Lunch begins at noon and Tarrant will speak beginning at 12:30.

Tarrant, a graduate of Fordham University, came to Richmond as an assistant to Lou Goetz in 1978 and replaced Goetz in 1981. Under him, the Spiders went 18-11 and earned a bid to the National Invitational Tournament.

Tarrant first coached at St. Cecilia High in Englewood, N.J. and later coached at Passaic (N.J.) High School before becoming an assistant at Fordham.

ECU Kicker Heath Gets Honor

East Carolina University kicker Jeff Heath, off his record-setting effort Saturday night, has been selected as the Speciality Team Player of the Week and tackle John Robertson and strong safety Smokey Norris have been named offensive and defense players of the week.

The selections were announced this morning after the ECU coaching staff viewed films Sunday night of the Pirates' 40-24 win over Texas-Arlington. It was ECU's first road win of the year and left ECU at 5-4.

Heath, a freshman from Virginia Beach, Va., kicked four field goals, including an ECU-record 58-yarder, against the Movin' Mavs. Heath also kicked field goals of 53, 42 and 45 yards.

The four field goals also tied an NCAA mark for most field goals made over 40 yard in a game. Heath just missed the freshman field goal mark of 59 yards, set by Texas A&M's Tony Franklin and Marshall's Barry Childers.

The NCAA record is 67 yards, held by three players.

The 58-yard field goal was the second for Heath in his football career. Heath also kicked a 58-yarder while at First Colonial High School. "It's my first over 50 yards this year," Heath said after the game. "But I didn't think that much about the distance. I have been trying to overpower the ball on some long tries earlier," he added. "I just tried to stay smooth and keep the same motion" on his kicks against UTA.

Norris, a 6-0, 181-pound senior from Clinton, had four solo hits, two primary and one assist for seven tackles. Norris also caused a fumble and broke up a pass.

Robertson, a 6-6, 250-pound junior from Eden, had one of his best games of the year, ECU coach Ed Emory said.

ECU travels to William & Mary Saturday looking for its first winning season under Emory, who is in his third year at ECU and was recently given a two-year extension on his contract.

It will be the third of four straight road games for the Pirates, who finish the season in two weeks against Temple.

Woody Peele

This coming Saturday afternoon, East Carolina's Pirates travel to Williamsburg to face the Indians of William & Mary.

The game means a lot to the Pirates. First, they can assure themselves of their first winning season under Ed Emory.

And perhaps more important, they can avenge themselves of a loss they had to carry with them for nine months. Last year, in the closing game of the season, the Pirates were in much the same position they find themselves in now. They were shooting for a winning season, and it appeared that William & Mary would be a certain victim. It didn't turn out that way.

A "Hail, Mary" pass on the final play of the first half gave the Indians the momentum they needed to pull out a 31-21 win over the Bucs. It was an embarrassing loss — one in which the Pirate pass defense was shredded to pieces.

This year, William & Mary comes in with only a 2-7 record in the contest, having beaten only VMI, 24-12, and Dartmouth, 24-16.

But — the Indians are a passing team. Prior to their loss to Brown on Saturday, they had passed for over 2,000 yards, completing over 60 percent of their passes. In comparison, they had run for less than 600 yards.

So the Indians will again be putting the arrow to the bow in attempts at unseating the Pirates.

It will be interesting to see how East Carolina responds to the threat. Several times this year, they have been picked clean by good passing teams — and the memory of last year is still with them.

The Saturday night performance by freshman Jeff Heath of East Carolina was an outstanding one to say the least. Heath broke the school record of three field goals in a single game — set by a number of players — with four. And his booming 58-yarder shattered by nine yards the old record of 49 set last year by Chuck Bushbeck.

Emory prophesied last year during recruiting season that the Pirates would be getting a good one if Heath could be brought to Greenville, and apparently it is proving true.

Heath has been perfect with his extra points, and is steadily improving with his field goals — as witnessed by his Saturday game.

Needless to say, Jeff will be a valuable part of the Pirate offense in the next three years too — with possible All-America status in his future also.

The only unfortunate thing about the evening is that it came nearly 2,000 miles from Greenville.

East Carolina's men's and women's basketball teams will be given public displays over the next two weeks.

Tuesday night, Coach Cathy Andruzzi will hold a public scrimmage game in Minges Coliseum at 6:30 p.m. as the Lady Pirates take on Louisville. This will give ECU fans a chance to see the newcomers to the team — and how the team will respond to the loss of Sam Jones and Lillian Barnes.

Then, a week from Wednesday, Charlie Harrison will put his first team on display against a Canadian college team, Carleton University. Harrison, who replaced Dave Odum after the recruiting season was over, is beginning a building program for the school — hoping to become competitive among the ECAC schools this winter. Despite a number of problems, Harrison is hoping to whip the team into shape to play the best basketball it is capable of.

Reaction Is Varied Over NFL Prospects

By The Associated Press
With the resumption of the National Football League season in such serious jeopardy and millions of dollars already fumbled away, reaction to the latest breakoff in negotiations varied from expressions of hope to warnings of careers ended.

The strike has cost both the league and its striking players nearly $275 million through seven weeks. And, according to Tom Condon of the Kansas City Chiefs, who is a member of the NFL Players Association Executive Council as well as a lawyer, it might cost "a lot of players" their careers.

"Any time, a player has to be ready to give up his career," Condon said on ABC-TV's "Sportsbeat." "And so, a lot of players are in that posture, that this may be the end of their careers and they want to stick it out because they feel that we deserve a fair agreement."

To get any type of agreement, Baltimore Colts player rep Mike Ozdowski said, "one side or the other is going to have to give. I don't think the talks have reached a stalemate."

But Mike Lynn, general manager of the Minnesota Vikings, wasn't so optimistic. He called the current impasse "the grimmest it's ever been with the negotiators and the mediators packing up and leaving. Lynn added that the next two or three days would be crucial to the fate of the 1982 season.

It was Lynn's estimation that the strike was costing the Vikings about $1 million a week. It's hurting the three television networks which broadcast NFL games because substitute programming has not drawn the kind of high ratings the NFL attracts. Cities where games are scheduled are losing an estimated $2 million a week in hotel and restaurant revenue and concessionaires are losing an additional $2 million a week.

Pasadena, Calif., which is to host the Super Bowl on Jan. 30, already has committed a substantial amount of money to fixing up the Rose Bowl.

"We have stepped up our five-year plan and gone ahead with $5 million worth of improvements at the Rose Bowl and surrounding area," Mayor Loretta Glickman said. "This was done in anticipation of revenue from the Super Bowl game."

The monetary losses become almost staggering when you add in an uncounted fortune in ancillary sales for the league of NFL products — footballs, pennants, dolls, clothing, etc.

Still, neither NBC or ABC seem willing to shuffle their programming lineup if the strike is settled and the season extended beyond Jan. 30.

"We have commitments," said Arthur Watson, president of NBC Sports, which is supposed to televise the Super Bowl and has lined up advertisers for the game at $385,000 per 30-second spot. "The advertisers are an important part of this relationship."

"If the season is extended, it creates some rather difficult problems," said ABC Senior Vice President Jim Spence.

Terps, Tigers Share First Place In ACC — For Now

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Clemson and Maryland are alone at the top of Atlantic Coast Conference football, but they have just five days to share the glory.

The 13th-ranked Tigers nipped No. 18 North Carolina 16-13 on Bob Pauling's 46-yard field goal in the third quarter and after Tar Heel receivers dropped two passes which could have led to a touchdown in the final minute.

Maryland needed Rich Badanjek's scoring run, a two-point conversion and a Jess Atkinson field goal to rally and stop Miami, Fla., 18-17, and run its record to 7-2.

With identical 4-0 conference records, the Tigers and Terps will go head-to-head next week in College Park to break the tie.

Duke and Wake Forest ripped apart school and conference books, but the Blue Devils put up the most impressive numbers in a 46-26 victory as Chris Castor set two conference records by himself.

Seventh-ranked Penn State, trying to impress Sugar and Cotton bowl scouts, got quick touchdowns from Jon Williams and Curt Warner on the way to a 54-0 thrashing of North Carolina State, which meets the pass-happy Blue Devils next week.

Robert Lavette set a Georgia Tech record for touchdowns in a season as the Yellow Jackets took a 38-32 victory over Virginia.

After Pauling's third-quarter kick established what turned out to be the final score, Clemson and North Carolina battled for more than 12 minutes. The Tar Heels took final possession 80 yards from a touchdown with 2:38 left.

Scott Stankavage, replacing an injured Rod Elkins, moved his team 65 of those yards, but the chances to score literally dropped out of their hands. Mark Smith dropped what appeared to be a sure touchdown and Tyrone Anthony dropped a swing pass on a fourth-and-four situation.

"The pass was catchable. I should have caught it," said Anthony.

North Carolina dropped to 5-3 and 2-2, the first time they've carried such a mark since 1979. Coach Dick Crum said he was not playing for the tie, however.

"What's the sense in going for a tie? We were there and thought we could win," said Crum.

Danny Ford said the Tigers, 6-1-1 overall, are not playing consistent ball, but added, "In recent games, we've been consistent winners."

Elkins reinjured the ligaments and cartilage he sprained earlier this season. Before the injury, he'd completed seven consecutive passes.

"Football isn't your whole life and I guess I've got to figure out what I'm going to do with the rest of mine because there may not be much more football for me," said Elkins.

Badanjek's second touchdown came with 7:10 left. Boomer Esiason followed the score with a two-point conversion pass to Mike Lewis to narrow the gap to 17-15. Five minutes later, Atkinson followed with his 38-yard game-winner.

"The victory wasn't pretty, but I think it showed we played with a lot of character," said Maryland

Coach Bobby Ross.

Castor caught 11 passes for 283 yards and three touchdowns. The scores give him 13 in 1982, beating the record of 12 set by Kenny Duckett of Wake Forest in 1980. His yardage snapped the record of 271 set by Demon Deacon Wayne Baumgardner, also in 1980.

Quarterback Ben Bennett completed 21 of 37 passes for 407 yards and set a Duke single-season mark at 2,447 yards, eclipsing Leo Hart's 2,238. Demon Deacon quarterback Gary Schofield also got into the act, surpassing a school record for completions in a season as well as his third consecutive 300-yard game, a conference mark.

With all the passing marks to fall, it took John Tolish's two field goals to break a 26-26 tie and open the way for Duke's second conference victory in four games and a 5-4 overall mark. Wake Forest fell to 3-6 and 0-5.

"It was a game I sort of predicted it would be like," said Duke Coach Red Wilson. "A lot of scoring, a lot of fine passing, a lot of fine receiving."

N.C. State, 5-4, saw plenty of offense from the Nittany Lions, who scored 17 points in the first quarter and coasted to their eighth victory in nine games.

Rosettes Get Year Off To Good Start

CHARLOTTE — The Rosettes, the Greenville gymnastics club, got off to a good start this weekend as one girl qualified for the state meet and another just missed in a Class 1 and 2 meet here.

It was not only the first meet of the season for the Rosettes but it was also the first state qualifying meet of the year.

Debbie Sigler, competing in the Class 2 12-14 group, finished first with an overall score of 63.75, easily bettering the 58.0 mark needed to qualify for the state meet.

Sigler took two firsts, in floor exercise and the uneven bars, and a second place in vaulting. She was third on the balance beam.

Peggy Becker, competing in the Class 1 12-14 group, was third all-around at 58.0. Class 1 girls need an overall score of 62.0 to qualify for the state. This is the first year the Rosettes have had girls competing at the Class 1 level, the highest in the state.

Becker was first in vaulting, second on the uneven bars and third on the balance beam.

Jenny Johnsrude, competing in Class 1 15-and-over group, was third on vault and had an overall score of 53.75.

Kerri Moreno competed in the Class 2 12-14 group and finished fifth on the floor exercise and sixth in vaulting and balance beam. She had an overall score of 57.35, a mere .65 off the state qualifying mark.

Nancy Johnson also competed for the Rosettes but did not place.

A team that loses a Class B player — the second 10 percent — is compensated by two amateur free-agent draft choices. There are four Class B free agents this year; Ashby, Nolan, Falcone and Almon.

Russia Preparing Construct Huge Space Station

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — The world's most powerful space rocket, emblazoned with the Red Star of the Soviet Union, is to be test-fired for the first time next year, according to authoritative sources here. The Russians hope to perfect it by 1985 to hurl into orbit the 110-ton core of a mammoth manned space station.

Russian officials won't officially acknowledge that they are developing the huge rocket, code-named "G". But they speak openly of their concept for Cosmograd — or "city in the sky."

Sources — all of them involved in the nation's space program — provided a rough outline, and a few details, of the massive project that has long been a Soviet dream.

It would be occupied year in, year out, by rotating crews of medical researchers, astronomers, workers making pure drugs and materials, satellite repairmen and cosmonauts conducting reconnaissance and other military chores.

Some would inhabit this weightless world for perhaps years in long-term research projects. Others would man high-technology construction crews, assembling manned and unmanned rockets destined for the planets and other parts of the solar system.

The sources, who asked to remain unidentified, provided these statistics about the "G" rocket: It will stand more than 300 feet tall, generate about 11 million pounds of liftoff thrust and be able to boost more than 300,000 pounds into orbit.

The largest rocket ever launched successfully was America's Saturn 5, which propelled astronauts to the moon in the late 1960s and early '70s and then was retired. It departed Earth on 7.5 million pounds of thrust and could carry more than 200,000 pounds into space.

"The plan calls for a series of test flights leading to an operational launch of the new rocket after two years," said an official who asked not to be identified.

He said the goal is to launch a 220,000-pound cylindrical station in 1985 and to initially have 10 to 12 persons on board, conducting scientific and defense assignments. American military analysts are concerned the station could serve as a launching platform for satellite-destroying laser weapons.

Such a platform would be 10 tons heavier than America's long-dead Skylab station and would be considerably larger than the 42,000-pound Salyut station now operated by the Soviets.

Cosmonaut Konstantin Feoktistov, discussing future space station plans without going into dates or other details, said an initial platform could be enlarged by adding modules.

"There will be observatory modules and whole plants for manufacturing products in zero gravity," he said. "Lounge modules will be the living quarters for cosmonauts to take a rest after the heavy workload they will handle in space."

Feoktistov said such a station "will accommodate enough people to man a whole scientific laboratory." He predicted there eventually will be many such platforms "carrying rotating resident crews."

NASA and the U.S. Air Force want very much to build a large space station but so far have received only a vague commitment from the Reagan administration and a few million dollars to continue studies.

"The Soviet space station activity is very intense and it is growing," said NASA administrator James M. Beggs. He predicted first elements of a U.S. permanent station would be in orbit by 1990.

"It would be nice if the Soviets launched one," Beggs said. "It would probably make it a lot easier for us to get a go-ahead."

He said the Russians' current Salyut 7 station represents "another step forward in the Soviet Union's quest for dominance in near-Earth space. It is imperative that the United States and the free world meet the challenge effectively and soon."

Success is by no means assured for the "G" rocket.

The Soviets have had problems in the past with a large booster. Three failures in as many launches in the late 1960s and early '70s forced them out of the man-to-the-moon race with the United States. The behemoth they plan to launch next year is a much improved model of that ill-starred rocket.

Until the Soviets achieve their big station they will continue gaining long-term orbit experience with their very successful Salyut series.

Cosmonauts Anatoly Berezovoy and Valentin Lebedev have been aboard the station since May 13, and next week they will exceed the old space endurance record of 185 days set by Soviet space travelers aboard Salyut 6 in 1980.

"The cosmonauts aboard the Salyuts are gaining much knowledge on the effects of long-term weightlessness on the human body and they are learning how to operate effectively up there," reported Dr. Roald Sagdeyev, director of the Soviet Institute of Space Research.

The Salyut station is serviced periodically by unmanned Progress transports which ferry up fresh food, fuel, water, oxygen and mail.

The cosmonauts devote considerable time to material processing experiments, hoping to manufacture products that cannot be made on Earth because of gravity.

"If we could develop manufacturing in space for materials and pharmaceuticals, it would make a space station very practical," Sagdeyev said.

Sagdeyev said Soviet planners also are considering developing a space platform as an energy station, collecting the sun's energy, converting it to electricity and transmitting it to Earth for distribution.

Loggers Die In Freak Accident

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Freak accidents took the lives of two loggers who had been cutting trees in separate counties, sheriff's deputies said.

William Tal Patterson Jr., 28, of Rowan County, died Friday when a heavy branch fell about 30 feet and struck him in the head, said Stanly County Sheriff's Detective Eric Thomas.

Moore County Coroner A.B. Parker said 19-year-old John Henry McIntosh of Moore County also died Friday of internal injuries after he was struck by a tree and knocked about 20 feet.

Fundamentalists' Legislation To Fail, Says Study

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Religious denominations such as Southern Baptists and United Methodists will help prevent fundamentalist groups from getting legislation passed in North Carolina on issues such as abortion, a study says.

The study, conducted by two sociologists at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, also says the North Carolina Moral Majority is the creation of fund-raisers who have received extensive media coverage. It says the Moral Majority actually has no grass-roots membership or organization.

"The mailing list of (N.C. Moral Majority) ... is no more than just that, a direct mail list out of Lynchburg (Va) through which funds for the national (Moral Majority) are solicited and 'Congressional Update' are mailed out," the study says.

Those materials are simply "reprints from the Moral Majority Report and other right-wing (political action committee) publications."

The study was written by Anthony R. Oberschall, a sociology professor, and Steve Howell, a graduate student, following a year and a half of research into the state's fundamentalist movement.

Titled "The Old and New Christian Right In North Carolina," the 23-page paper was presented at the annual meeting last month of the Society for the Scientific Study of Religion in Providence, R.I.

One major finding of the study, Oberschall said, was the power of mainline denominations, such as Southern Baptists and United Methodists, to head off the fundamentalists efforts.

However, at least one minister associated with a mainline religious group disagrees that the mainline religions will serve as a check on the fundamentalists.

"There may come an issue where the new right and the old right will join hands together," says the Rev. Coy C. Privette of Kanapolis, executive director of the Christian Action League.

"I'm very hesitant to say that one group will hold another in check."

For the study, the sociologists divided conservative religious groups into two camps: the old Christian Right, made up mainly of denominations such as the Southern Baptists and United Methodists, plus the Christian Action League; and the new Christian Right, comprised of groups such as the Moral Majority and Churches for Life and Liberty.

"The relationship between (the new Christian Right) and the old religious right is one of competition, rivalry and suspicion mixed with hostility based on the accumulation of past rivalries and conflicts," the paper says.

It further concludes that the new Christian Right is going to have a tough time getting established and will ultimately fail and retreat into narrower religious concerns.

Its concerns include social-moral issues such as abortion, prayer in the schools, the Equal Rights Amendment and Christian schools, the paper says.

In the future, the fundamentalists will move to narrower goals such as dealing with pornography, gambling, and liquor-by-the-drink on local levels and protecting gains made by Christian schools.

Leaders of the fundamentalist groups have taken issue with the study.

"It's dead wrong," said the Rev. Daniel Carr, executive director of Churches of Liberty and Liberty, a Raleigh based lobby for Christian Schools. "The whole thrust there is wishful thinking."

Moral Majority leader Lamarr Mooneyham also disagrees.

"Fundamentalism is the coming thing in this country. Our churches are growing and our schools are growing. It is the mainlines that can't seem to keep their doors open," Mooneyham said.

Held In Slaying Of Aged Woman

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — A 23-year-old Durham man was charged with murder after an elderly woman was sexually assaulted and strangled.

Gordon Devon Moore was charged and held in the Durham County Jail without bond, said public safety Detective T.A. Hester. Moore was scheduled for a court appearance Monday.

The body of Irene Rogers, 87, was found near her home in downtown Durham on Friday night. Moore was the person who reported finding Mrs. Rogers' body, police said.

Claims Injury During Search

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — A $650,000 suit has been filed against Durham County, the county ABC board, the ABC police, chief and one of his officers by a man who claims he was injured during a search of a house.

Leroy McNeil Jr. said in the suit he was permanently injured when ABC officer R.D. Allen hit him with a flashlight during the search at the Durham residence of McNeil's mother.

Allen and ABC officer J.A. Rivers reported they went to the house to search for evidence of possible liquor law violations.

McNeil was convicted last January of obstructing and delaying the officers.

VILLAGE SHELLED

BANGKOK (AP) — About 110 Cambodians were killed last week in a Vietnamese artillery attack on a village near the border with Cambodia, the English-language Bangkok Post reported Sunday.

Reynolds To Disclose Plan For Minorities

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — R.J. Reynolds Industries Inc. is expected to announce today a national program in support of minority business.

Officials for R.J. Reynolds Industries have declined comment, but the company has scheduled a news conference today.

The giant corporation inherited a five-year minority business development contract when it bought Heublein Inc. last month, and Reynolds' officials say they will honor the program.

That contract calls for Heublein to buy more supplies from black-owned businesses, borrow more from black-owned banks, increase its use of black law and accounting firms and increase the number of Kentucky Fried Chicken franchises owned by blacks.

Operation PUSH, the civil rights organization headed by the Rev. Jesse Jackson, signed the minority business contract with Heublein in March with the aim of pumping about $180 million into the black community. Jackson, 41, is a graduate of N.C. A&T State University and is on the university's board of trustees.

Earlier this year, Heublein shifted $42 million of its employees group life insurance to North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Co., a black-owned firm based in Durham.

Reynolds has a history of guarding its image among blacks. The company has given millions of dollars to black education, worked to increase its subcontracting to black-owned companies, taken out $10 million in loans from black-owned banks and trained blacks for internal promotions.

Minorities make up 24.3 percent of its workforce, compared with an average 18.6 percent among other U.S. corporations.

In 1980, the company elected Vernon Jordan, former president of the National Urban League, to its board of directors. In April, it elected Marshall B. Bass, a retired U.S. Army officer, as its first black corporate vice president.

"I think we stack up pretty well," Bass said of Reynolds' minority efforts. He noted that Reynolds has raised its subcontracting to minority business from $3 million in 1975 to $81 million in 1981.

PUSH has called on blacks nationwide to boycott companies that failed to reach similar agreements, including the Anheuser-Busch Co.

Frank Watkins, a spokesman for the Chicago-based PUSH, points out that blacks are major consumers of Heublein's chicken and liquors while only 14 of 4,421 Kentucky Fried Chicken franchise outlets are owned by blacks.

Watkins said PUSH wants to be a catalyst in breaking down "private sector lock-out of blacks" by selecting certain companies for reform.

"When corporate America pulls down its racial barriers, it allows both the corporation and black America to benefit," Watkins said. "Our fundamental appeal is that it makes good economic sense...It's also morally sound."

A Better Fare For Your Better Half.

Recently, some airlines have come out with programs that allow frequent flyers to earn free trips.

Perhaps you've been planning such a trip for your spouse.

The drawback is you have to take a lot of trips to earn a free one. Which can take months, or even years.

On Piedmont, you don't have to wait to take along your better half.

Piedmont's Take-

The-Family Fare is the next best thing to free. And to get it, all you have to do is buy a full-fare adult ticket.

Whenever you hold a full-fare ticket on Piedmont, you can take along your wife or husband (and your kids under 18) for $29 each, each way.* Simply buy your ticket by March 31, 1983.

Leave and return any time you like, as long as you travel together. Except around certain holidays, this fare is good on every flight to every Piedmont city.

So, pack your bags. You've waited long enough.

*$49 to Colorado or Texas. For details, call your travel agent, or call Piedmont in Kinston at 522-4544 or 1-800-672-0191 toll-free.

Big Losses Due To False Claim

DETROIT (AP) — Claims of finding assorted pieces of metal in Ball Park Franks has cost Hygrade Food Products Corp. $300,000 already, and the company says losses from the reports could climb higher.

At least 15 people had reported finding razor blades, nails and other metal in the hot dogs. By Nov. 3, much of the scare had passed, mostly when two of the people admitted to hoaxes and two others refused to take lie detector tests while standing by their claims.

But until then, Elaine Maldonado, a packer at Hygrade's Livonia plant, said she lost 5 1/2 pounds from worry, and Charles Ledgerwood, vice president of operations, said he hardly slept for a week.

Final Episode Of M*A*S*H* Filmed

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Reporter
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Alan Alda, Loretta Swit and other members of Mobile Army Surgical Unit 4077 were on Stage 9 at 20th Century-Fox, filming the final chapter of the "M-A-S-H" saga. The set was closed.

There was emotional trauma at breaking up the old gang that has churned out 260 episodes of TV's sitcom about doctors under fire in a Korean War outpost.

While the cast was absorbed in the two-hour finale — in which the war ends, sending Colonel Potter, Corporal Klinger, Hawkeye, Hotlips and the rest back to civilian life — the man responsible for ending the show had lunch in the studio commissary.

Burt Metcalfe, the show's driving force as writer-producer-director, said it was time to strike the tents and quonset huts. "M-A-S-H" has run its course.

Metcalfe was the brilliant casting director and associate producer at the beginning 11 years ago. When producers Larry Gelbart and Gene Reynolds bowed out four and five years into the show, Metcalfe took over.

A tall, slender, balding man of serious mien, Metcalfe has focussed his complete professional attention on "M-A-S-H," refusing to produce other shows for fear of diminishing quality.

His dedication to the series and determination to maintain the integrity of its characters are in large part responsible for "M-A-S-H" becoming an American TV tradition, as popular in reruns as it is in first runs.

It is a tribute to Metcalfe and his cast that "M-A-S-H" will command the highest commercial prices in television history when the two-hour finale is telecast next Feb. 27.

CBS will collect $450,000 for each 30-second commercial, a total of more than $10 million for the single two-hour episode. Not even professional football's super bowls bring in that kind of money.

Why, specifically, with ratings consistently high, is "M-A-S-H" folding?

"We're stopping because the actors want to get on with their careers and go on to other things," he said. "Also because I'm tired. We'd like to go out on top. And we've exhausted the story lines."

"At production meetings I found myself telling writers, 'We've done that' nine times out of 10. We don't want to be repetitive."

"Over the years we interviewed 200 doctors who served in Korea, taping them in person and on the phone for their experiences, looking for bits and pieces or tiny incidents that could be built into stories."

"For the past couple of years doctors told me tales I'd already heard. We asked every doctor to refer us to another."

In addition to exhausting story lines, Metcalfe said the interrelationships of the characters were wearing thin.

Metcalfe gave meticulous attention to the development of every role over the years, endowing each with fine-tuned characteristics that stamped them indelibly in the minds and hearts of viewers.

"Alan Alda was the linchpin of the cast," he said. "His creative input was enormous. He was a role model for the others — his caring, his sensitive concern and his feelings for the show."

"If anyone had a right to a large ego it was Alan, but he was a pussycat. His example was such no cast member could exercise his ego at the expense of the others."

"Alan's been a great guy and so have all the others. And I include Loretta Swit who is one of the finest actresses on the screen."

The show was so strongly entrenched it survived the third year departure of two or its four leading stars, MacLean Stevenson and Wayne Rogers. There was no hitch when Gary Berghoff and Larry Lindville left later on.

The final "M-A-S-H" show is being filmed out of sequence. There are several other segments to be completed before the show breaks up forever. At that time, in December or January, there will be a farewell party on the set.

Metcalfe expects it will be an emotional mixture of joy and sorrow.

"It will be like breaking up a family," he said, "with all that implies."

Geo. Burns Will 'Do His Thing'

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The old-time comics all had some trademark. Jack Benny was cheap. (He really wasn't.) Bob Hope never won an Oscar. (He never deserved one.) And 86-year-old George Burns is a sex symbol. (He's not so sure.)

Tonight, NBC milks Burns' broadening appeal into a one-hour variety show, and the veteran trouper turns it into a mildly amusing evening.

"George Burns and Other Sex Symbols" isn't the kind of program that makes sparks, or even waves. It's the type of show that can be watched while reading a book. It's good background music. It wouldn't much matter if you missed pieces here and there, but when you do pay attention, Burns is Burns.

And besides, you shouldn't pass up opportunities to see a national treasure do his thing. The next time he does a special, who knows where you'll be?

Burns, once the straight man for his dizzy wife, Gracie Allen, has turned into a comic in his middle years. That's in addition to turning into a sensitive dramatic actor, something he proved in a recent TV movie called "Two of a Kind," in which he played an old man who had given up on life.

One repeated joke tonight is that he may be a sex symbol, but nobody told his parts. "Confidentially, only my big toe works," he says in that TV prerequisite, the opening monologue. He then says wistfully that his feminine appeal should have happened in another era, when at least he could have done something about it.

Since this is his show, Burns, a self-proclaimed country-and-western singing star, gets to finish a tune. During a decidedly different rendition of "As Time Goes By," camera shots, ostensibly of women in the audience, capture them gazing longingly at Burns.

As standard props for these specials, there are quickie appearances by other celebrities, each designed to lure another segment of the viewing audience. John Schneider and Linda Evans each are trotted out for some very light banter with Burns, then a song.

Burns introduces Schneider as the "hottest new sex symbol in television," according to one survey. He doesn't mention that Schneider, who left the "Dukes of Hazzard" because of a contract dispute, is no longer on television.

In the meantime, Schneider has grown a beard and does his most wistfully sincere version of "I Need Someone to Miss."

The most talented visitor is Bernadette Peters, dubbed a special guest star while Schneider and Miss Evans are only listed as stars. Miss Peters plays a daffy Gracie Allen in a routine with Burns. Some people play simpletons, and look silly. Miss Peters pulls off eccentricity with style.

NBC believes Burns is a proven ratings winner. In 1980, his special, "George Burns in Nashville," attracted a very respectable 30 percent of the viewing audience. It was repeated five months later and pulled in a surprisingly high 27 percent of the homes watching TV.

There's one thing evident about George Burns. He ages well.

BHTIBZVP?

Saturday's Cryptoquip — OWL RESTING HIS CLEAR VOICE WON'T GIVE A HOOT.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: H equals L.

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠72 ♠AQJ1063 ♠A6 ♠1095

The bidding has proceeded:

North East South

1 NT Pass 3 ♠ Pass

4 ♠ Pass 4 ♠ Pass

4 ♠ Pass ?

What action do you take?

A.—Although partner has shown a maximum no trump with heart support, he has denied the ace of spades—with that card he would have cue-bid three spades rather than four clubs. But partner might have the king of spades, in which case a small slam is still possible. You can convey this to partner by bidding five hearts. That confirms that you have two fast spade losers, and allows him to make the next move.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AQJ7 ♠J1062 ♠6 ♠AKQ9

The bidding has proceeded:

North East South

1 ♠ 4 ♠ ?

What do you bid now?

A.—East's barrage has made a scientific auction impossible. You might ask for aces, but will it really help you to discover that partner has one ace—or, for that matter, two aces? We would simply bid six hearts—a contract that should depend on no more than a finesse, and could be cold. Sometimes you simply have to give up on a grand slam.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AK873 ♠A5 ♠Q1073 ♠K9

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

1 ♠ Pass 1 NT Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Game is a distinct possibility, but showing your second suit is not the way to make your move. Since half of your strength is in your short suits, we feel that a raise to two no trump is the most descriptive game try.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AKJ4 ♠AJ632 ♠85 ♠94

What is your opening bid?

A.—This is one of those rare occasions where you should make an unnatural bid. Open one spade. You want to show both suits, and if you choose one heart and partner bids one no trump or two of a minor, you are not strong enough to reverse into spades. Opening one spade will provide an easy rebid in hearts.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠72 ♠K83 ♠85 ♠AQ9764

The bidding has proceeded:

North East South

1 ♠ 2 ♠ ?

*preemptive.

What do you bid now?

A.—We are going to ask you to do something that doesn't come easily to most bridge players—you must suppress your six card suit. If you respond three clubs, you would almost surely catapult your side to game, and your hand isn't good enough for that. Bid three hearts. If partner has anything extra, you will hear from him again.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠62 ♠AJ8 ♠K10954 ♠KJ5

The bidding has proceeded:

West North East South

1 ♠ Pass Pass ?

What action do you take?

A.—Double. In the passout seat, you have adequate values for this action—in fact, you could have somewhat less. The double is superior to a balancing bid of two diamonds because it gives partner several options, including the possibility of passing for penalties should he have length and strength in the enemy suit.

FOCUS

Good Pun-manship

Need a good laugh? Why not join the pun-demonium and celebrate Punsners' Day, a day of tribute to the celebrated form of word play that is usually looked up-pun as the lowest form of humor. Actually, great writers from Shakespeare to Vladimir Nabokov have often used puns to punctuate their literary efforts. And Sigmund Freud believed that unintentional verbal slips could o-pun the way to the subconscious. Our tradition of groaning at a particularly pun-gent play on words goes back to the ancient Greeks who apparently viewed the pun as a form of cruel and unusual punishment.

DO YOU KNOW — Who wrote Finnegans Wake, a modern novel devoted to elaborate multilingual puns?

FRIDAY'S ANSWER — Leon Trotsky was Lenin's second-in-command.

Furnishings To Fit Their Dwarf Child

GONZALES, Calif. (AP) — Mindy Wells is learning to live in a world she must always look up to, but the doll-sized 5-year-old can now sleep easy in a scaled-down bed to match her Lilliputian dimensions.

Mindy — just 31 inches tall and weighing only 15 pounds — suffers from a rare birth defect that will keep her a dwarf forever. She must use a stool to climb onto her parent's furniture.

But a civic group helped her family buy a home where one room could be modified for Mindy, and enlisted an amateur woodworker to build a diminutive four-poster bed.

When she first saw the bed, Mindy climbed on top, crossed her arms and hugged herself. "It's her little gesture of saying, 'This is mine,'" said her mother, Pat Wells.

"She sits on it, stands on it, pulls the bedspread off... She really understands that it was built for her," Mrs. Wells said.

Mindy, who is unable to speak and attends a school for handicapped children, suffers from a chromosomal disorder called "46 XX 4R," that affects about one child in a million. The disorder is a form of dwarfism, and the few known sufferers tend to be among the smallest dwarfs, said Dr. Luigi Luzzatti, director of a birth defects program at Stanford Medical Center.

Mindy uses a primitive sign language to communicate, and her mother says the girl understands much of what she hears.

"We don't know whether she'll ever be able to talk, but you can tell that she wants just by looking at her face," Mrs. Wells said. "And she studies peoples' faces, she reads people really good."

Mindy graduated from crib to bed three weeks ago, at the same time her parents moved into their new three-bedroom home in this community about 14 miles from Salinas in northern California.

Unable to convince their landlord to modify part of their rented house for Mindy, Pat and Mike Wells began thinking about buying a home last year.

But Wells, who operates a forklift seven months a year during lettuce season, could not qualify for a loan because of his seasonal earnings. Mrs. Wells has not been able to work since Mindy was born because the little girl requires full-time supervision.

But the Salinas Lions Club found a government-assisted mortgage program, "helped arrange papers and cut through some red tape," Mrs. Wells said.

At the same time, the Lions enlisted Paul Dollarhide, a retired businessman and an amateur woodworker, to build Mindy's bed — just 18 inches off the floor, so she can get in and out by herself.

Others have donated small furniture to match, and some well-wishers sent stuffed animals that loom over Mindy's tiny bed.

Mindy also has a tiny rocking chair made by a relative and lots of stepstools so she can reach normal-size furniture. "She's learning to adapt herself to larger things, and she'll try anything once," her mother said.

Mindy loves to play with other children and after school follows her normal-sized 10-year-old sister Michelle everywhere.

"Michelle is her idol, she wants to do everything she does," Mrs. Wells said.

Small Computer Firms Draw Attention In North Carolina

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The development of small companies that work with computers may hold the key to attracting more of the microelectronics industry to North Carolina, state officials say.

Donald S. Beilman, president of the state-funded Microelectronics Center of North Carolina, says the creation of new computer companies could accelerate as major microelectronics companies build research and production facilities in the state and employees split off to form their own firms.

"The entrepreneur will show up a little later, in terms of providing a large number of jobs," Beilman said.

Industry seekers in the state say much of the microelectronics industry's growth in the state will come from small companies that work with computers.

Larry K. Monteith, dean of the N.C. State School of Engineering, said the Silicon Valley grew up near Stanford University from the same kind of beginnings — basement workshops started by young graduates.

Two such companies founded by North Carolina State graduates have received nationwide attention recently for their innovative computer products. Micro Technology Unlimited of Raleigh, owned by David B. Cox and H.A. "Hal" Chamberlain Jr., has developed an advanced personal computer.

Ikonas Graphics Systems Inc., founded by J. Nicholas England and his wife, Mary C. Whitton, has developed an advanced computer terminal for color graphics.

The five-year-old Micro Technology has 14 employees who manufacture about 50 of the MTU 130 computers each month, just keeping up with demand.

The $5,000 computer has received favorable reviews in recent trade journals and was named one of the best personal computers on the market in the November issue of Money magazine, a publication about financial matters.

Cox said the company could double production by adding three or four new workers. But beyond that, expansion would require more capital from outside investors.

Cox and Chamberlain were classmates at N.C. State's School of Engineering. Four years after graduating, they developed an innovative word processor and had run up a large debt. To break even, the men sold the word processor design.

The two friends contributed $800 each to start Micro Technology Unlimited and began producing accessories for other companies' computers. The business was an immediate success and the partners each earned $4,800 from the company the first year. The MTU 130 went into production last December. Now the men face a potential conflict between the need for capital to finance an expanding business and the desire to remain company owners.

The need for capital also has plagued England and Ikonas Graphics System. England developed the machine, used in computer-assisted design and manufacturing, while studying at N.C. State.

Fulcrum Computer Group Inc. of Raleigh acquired Ikonas early in 1981 and paid $2.5 million for product development and initial production of the computer terminal.

Fulcrum ran out of money before long. It and Ikonas were acquired this fall by Adage Inc. of Billerica, Mass. Production of the Ikonas computer terminal has been moved to Massachusetts and sales have grown steadily.

Some Help By Knoxville Fair

By The Associated Press
Tourism revenues in North Carolina are expected to reach $3 billion this year for the first time ever — thanks in part to the exposure the area received from the World's Fair in nearby Tennessee.

"The way tourism is off in other parts of the United States, the World's Fair had a definite impact," said Dick Trammell of the Asheville Chamber of Commerce.

Merchants and innkeepers in western North Carolina say the fair didn't make them wealthy, but it did help keep their revenues up while tourism was dropping in other parts of the country.

Travel overall was down about 6.5 percent nationwide through August and vacation travel was down 9.5 percent, according to the U.S. Travel Data Center. In parts of the nation, tourism was off 12 percent to 13 percent this year compared to 1981, state travel officials said.

However, travel expenditures in North Carolina were up 16 percent through September, compared to the same period last year, said Charles Heatherly, director of the state's Division of Travel and Tourism.

In October, traditionally a good month because of autumn colors, travel increased in the mountains. Merchants there are gearing up for what's expected to be a good ski season.

Jerry Douglas, of the Western North Carolina Associated Communities and the group's World's Fair project, said the fair was "really successful."

"I'm glad we had it because, without it, I think we all would have been suffering this year," Douglas said.

The World's Fair, held in nearby Knoxville Tenn., ended on Oct. 31.

Tourism officials said those who did not aggressively seek visitors suffered, pushing their travel volume below expectations.

"So many people overestimated the effects of the fair on their business and didn't do the things you have to do," Heatherly said. "Just because you have additional traffic doesn't mean you will get it at your place of business. You've got to advertise and promote."

State tourism figures showed that visits to the state's Welcome Center on Interstate 40 in Haywood County, at the North Carolina-Tennessee line, rose 40 percent during summer months.

In addition, monthly totals for visits to the North Carolina portion of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park were up as much as 36 percent and attendance at Billmore House in Asheville was up nearly 50 percent over the summer.
