

Assaults Turned Back House Okays Big Defense Bill

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The House has approved a record Pentagon spending bill after turning back attempts to trim research for the MX missile, and cut money for the B-1 bomber and a new nuclear-powered aircraft carrier. President Reagan says those three weapons are crucial to his defense buildup.

The House approved the bill 346-68 and sent it to the Senate, where Reagan has promised to reverse Wednesday's House decision that pared almost $1 billion from the measure. The funds were to buy the first five of the planned 100 MX weapons.

The $230.75 billion measure is a $25 billion increase from the Pentagon spending authorized by Congress for the last fiscal year.

Although it is about $18 billion less than the White House requested, it provided an increase of about 6 percent above the rate of inflation. Reagan has proposed defense spending increases of 7 to 8 percent.

The Senate is expected to consider the bill next week during its lame-duck session. Senate opponents of the missile have said they have enough votes to deny procurement money for the MX.

The House, during four hours of debate Wednesday, gave unanimous voice vote approval to a provision in the bill that provides $2.45 billion for research on the MX. But it also says that $560 million of the basing research can't be spent until April 30.

Reagan, contending the current U.S. force of land-based atomic missiles is vulnerable to a Soviet first strike, wants to build 100 MX missiles and put the nuclear weapons into a "dense pack" arrangement in "super-hardened" silos near Cheyenne, Wyo.

But "dense pack" has many critics, who argue that there is no proof that it will work and who say that Congress shouldn't buy the weapon until it has a home.

Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y., was unsuccessful in his effort to cut $3.5 billion from the funds marked for one of the two aircraft carriers the Navy wants. He also failed in a move to delete all $4 billion for the B-1. Both amendments lost on voice votes.

Addabbo noted the recent British ship losses in the Falklands Island war and said a large carrier is just "a floating football field waiting for a missile."

But Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, said the war proved otherwise. If Britain had had a large-deck carrier, its planes would have protected the British ships. "There aren't enough missiles in the world to sink our carriers," he said, listing the sophisticated U.S. defenses.

"Apparently, some people think we can defend ourselves with slingshots and rowboats," said Rep. Del Latta, R-Ohio.

Addabbo criticized the B-1 as an "expensive toy of the Air Force," noting that it will be superseded in the early 1990s by the radar-evading "Stealth" bomber. Reagan and the Pentagon want to build 100 B-1s and the "Stealth" planes to replace the aging B-52 bombers.

But opponents, noting the nation's 10.8 percent unemployment rate, noted the B-1 will employ thousands of people.

Before passing the bill, the House voted 411-0 to restrict the Pentagon and the CIA from providing aid to anti-Sandinista guerrillas who want to overthrow the leftist government of Nicaragua.

NATO Reaffirms Deployment Plans

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer
BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The NATO allies today reaffirmed their intention to deploy U.S. missiles in Europe in 1983 unless there is "a concrete agreement" on arms control with the Soviet Union.

They also endorsed the Reagan administration's proposal to the Soviets for an agreement to eliminate all nuclear missiles from Europe — known as the "zero-zero" option.

The agreements came at a meeting of the so-called Special Consultative Group, which reviewed the status of U.S.-Soviet arms control talks in Geneva.

The group met in conjunction with the two-day NATO foreign ministers meeting, which opened today with a call from Denmark's foreign minister for the Soviets to withdraw their troops from Afghanistan.

"The situation in Afghanistan has not changed for the better," said Uffe Ellemann-Jensen, who heads the NATO session. "We hope that the Soviet leadership would now agree to accept a political solution which would bring to an end the sufferings of the Afghan people."

The Soviets poured tens of thousands of troops into Afghanistan three years ago to help the pro-Moscow regime battle anti-communist Moslem insurgents.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz is representing the United States at the NATO meeting, which is being held behind closed doors. A major item on the agenda is to develop a coordinated allied approach to dealing with the new Soviet leadership, headed by Yuri V. Andropov.

The consultative group issued a statement saying there would be no review of the 1979 NATO decision to deploy U.S. Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Europe unless there was an agreement with the Soviets in Geneva. The missiles are to be put in place beginning in late 1983 to counter Soviet missiles aimed at Europe.

"Steps to implement the deployment part of the NATO decision will be moving forward and the negotiations will continue in Geneva," the statement said.

"The only instance which would prompt a review of the scope of NATO modernization requirements would be achievement of a concrete agreement in Geneva."

The statement was read to reporters by Richard R.

WAVED TO POLICE — Norman Mayer, his features concealed by a ski suit and carrying a purported radio device to "explode" his van of dynamite, was killed during his hostage-taking of the Washington Monument. (AP Laserphoto)

Death Ends A Lengthy Siege At Monument

WASHINGTON (AP) — A nuclear weapons protester who held the Washington Monument hostage for 10 hours died with a police bullet in his head at the wheel of a van as empty as his threat to blast the monument to rubble.

Norman D. Mayer was killed Wednesday night after trapping nine people in the monument and holding police at bay with threats to detonate the explosives he said were packed in the van at the base of the obelisk. There were none.

The monument itself remained closed today as workers cleared the remnants of tear gas fired by police to flush out what they thought was a second person involved in the incident. No one was found.

Elsewhere, the capital returned to normal. Thousands of federal workers evacuated during the siege were at work; traffic and the city's subway flowed normally.

Mayer, a White House protester whom no one had much noticed, had been obsessed by a conviction that mankind is drifting toward nuclear extinction. He died in a final gesture for, as he had put it earlier, "a national dialogue on the nuclear weapons question."

An autopsy conducted on the 66-year-old man by the city's medical examiner's office today showed he had died from a single shot to the head. City police spokesman Joseph Gentile, who released the findings, would not say what type of bullet was used.

Sgt. Gentile quoted the chief medical examiner, Dr. James Luke, as saying the wound had not been self-inflicted. Luke said Mayer had also been wounded by one shot in the face and two wounds in the right arm.

City police officer James Battle said the shot that killed Mayer had not been a ricochet.

The Miami Beach handyman, still dressed in a blue jumpsuit, was shot in the head in a barrage of police gunfire after he started driving his van from the monument. He got only a few yards.

"If the truck had become mobile, we would have had a moving time bomb in the city of Washington," said Chief Lynn Herring of the U.S. Park Police, explaining the decision to open fire. The White House was six blocks away.

Mayer, wounded, took down a flagpole. The van flipped onto its side. When police got to him, Mayer was still alive, still warning that the vehicle was loaded with TNT. Police handcuffed him to his steering wheel; minutes later he was dead.

He had claimed to have

NORMAN MAYER dynamite in his white van, and he demanded that the newspapers and broadcasters devote 51 percent of their space and time to discussing the fear that obsessed him.

"I said to him that it took a lot of guts to do what he was doing," recalled the Associated Press reporter who acted as a day-long middleman between Mayer and police. "And he said: 'If you know you're going to die tomorrow it doesn't take guts.'"

As it turned out, Mayer's threat had been empty — the van was loaded with nothing but routine personal effects and detonators with nothing to detonate.

Police thought Mayer might have had an accomplice, and they hurled tear gas into the 555-foot monument, then made a cautious, fruitless search that ended after midnight. Mayer had acted alone, officials said.

Aubrey Mayer said his brother wasn't a leftist. "He's more for 'hey, give the little guy a break and get off my back.'"

Mayer had given Washington a scare; forced the city to take notice of his message, emblazoned on his truck: "No. 1 Priority, BAN Nuclear Weapons."

President Reagan shifted a luncheon to avoid the side of the White House that would be most likely to receive shrapnel if the truck had exploded.

Late Wednesday, Reagan telephoned city and park police officials to express his appreciation for the work of those involved and their "handling of what was obviously a very difficult situation," presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said today.

Recreation Commission To Consider Agreement

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

A Recreation and Parks Commission committee has been named to study the possibility of a joint agreement with the Eastern Carolina Vocational Center in the use of the center's newly opened recreation facility.

Recreation and Parks Commission chairman Lib Proctor, the Rev. Dan Earnhardt, Dr. Carl Wille and Mrs. Sydney Womack will serve on the committee that will meet with personnel of the center to discuss a possible use agreement. The committee will give their report to the full commission in January or February.

One of the problems that would be entailed in using the facility would be that of transportation, it was noted.

In discussions on the center, and later in an overview report of athletic activities presented by athletic director Ben James, the idea of scheduling one of the city's GREAT buses to transport people to athletic events came up.

James said that in most instances it was difficult for students to get to scheduled programs on time because they first had to ride school buses from their schools to their homes, then get transportation to the recreation center where programs were being held. James suggested that if arrangements could be made to have a GREAT bus pick up students from school and transport them to recreational activities, it would facilitate planning programs for young people.

Recreation and Parks Department director Boyd Lee was instructed by the commission to contact City Manager Gail Meeks to discuss the idea of possible GREAT use in that capacity.

In an old business agenda item, Dr. Wille gave a brief report on his committee's progress in looking into the idea of joining the Greenville Foundation. Wille noted that in meeting with the city attorney, several questions were raised. "I feel we need to investigate the idea further," Wille said. "It might be a vehicle we will be able to utilize, but we need to look at this some more before making our report. We should have this in January or February."

The report on athletic programs made by James reveals that the popularity of many of the programs, both for youths and adults, has created a situation where every available gym and playing field is booked up tight all the time. "It's a non-stop process from three in the afternoon until eleven at night," James said. "Free time play, except on Saturday mornings, has been squeezed out."

James mentioned that the staff is delighted that for the first time girls are now participating in programmed sports activities.

Lee informed the board that at the recent annual meeting of the North Carolina Recreation and Parks Society held in Asheville, three of the Greenville staff was elected to state positions. "Charles Vincent was named chairman of the Municipal Division of the society, Walter Stasavich was named chairman-elect of the Parks Division, and Chip East was named to membership on the Publicity and Publications Division. We're proud that our people have received this statewide recognition in leadership," Lee said.

UNICEF CARDS

As Christmas approaches, I wonder: Is there any place local where I can get UNICEF cards? I like the idea of benefiting others as I send Christmas greetings. C.T.

A-1 Imports in Greenville Square Shopping Center here has UNICEF cards, gift items and wrapping paper which are sold at no profit to the store proprietors. All proceeds go to the United Nations Children's Fund for its programs of long-range benefit to children. "The possibilities for making a difference in the lives of other people by using UNICEF cards are tremendous," store owner Usha Gulati said. "For instance, proceeds from four boxes of cards can pay for enough baby fish to stock a village pond and thus provide a potential protein supply for the entire population."

Albert Harris of Greenville has asked Hotline to thank everyone who responded to the recent Catholic Social Services appeal on his behalf. He said he is filled with gratitude for the people who assisted him in furnishing the trailer in which he lives.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I wondered when someone would get around to blaming video games for inciting violence in children.

So far the electronic screen has been blamed for loss of appetite, tennis wrist, sexual transference, and seduction of a minor.

Adults are like that. Every time a kid is having a good time, eating something that tastes good, or wearing something that's comfortable, there has to be something wrong with it.

Frankly, I don't see video games as being any more mind-controlling than their fathers sitting spellbound before 86 football games a week or their mothers mesmerized by four hours of soaps a day.

You want to talk violence? I can tell you stories about games past that will make your hair stand on end. In 1943, my mother grabbed a Chinese checkers board with both hands, threw the marbles all over the kitchen and crashed it over my father's head, claiming, "I will not play with thieves!"

In 1954, my husband and I were playing Monopoly with a few friends. Knowing full well that I was down to my last $50, he demanded $3,060 when I landed on one of his utilities. When I tried to reason with him he snickered and said, "You're out! Why don't you just go out and get the chip dip and snacks?"

Had we not had children to consider, I don't like to think what would have happened.

There are so many things in our lives that have an effect on children, I wouldn't know what to take away. If you don't want them to see violence, you better hide Hansel and Gretel. If you don't want them to see sex, don't let them see a pregnant woman. If you don't want them to know terror, protect them from Halloween; or hypocrisy, tell them Santa Claus doesn't exist.

If you don't want them to be frightened by monsters and things that go bump in the night, cut down the lar tree in front of the house that makes weird shadows on their walls when the lights are out and brushes against the spouting. If you don't want them to see war and suffering, throw your body in front of the TV set for the six o'clock news.

The other day I saw two brothers fighting for control. One boy yelled, "It's my turn!" The other one said, "Would you flake off?" The first one said, "I'm telling Mom!" and gave him an elbow in the ribs. The second one said, "Get out of my face," and ground his foot into his.

A video game? Nope. A fight over a hymnal in church!

Dear Abby

His Tune Sets Heart To Tapping

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I've always been the "Dear Abby" in my group, and now I'm actually writing a letter myself because I need advice.

I'm 34, have been divorced for three years and recently moved to another town to start a new life. I like it here and have a lot of friends, but they're all married. They take me places and I have a good time, but I want a boyfriend of my own.

One night my friends took me to a club and I noticed one of the guys in the band looking at me in a very special way. I looked back and smiled and from that minute on he never took his eyes off me. At the break he came over and introduced himself, and my heart started to pound so fast I thought I was going to faint.

To make a long story short, I've seen him (only at the club) and he says he is in love with me. The problem is he's married. He says he and his wife are breaking up, but all the married men I meet say that.

Abby, I know I could care for him a lot, but I don't want to fall in love with a guy I can't have. He's begging me to meet him on Sunday — his day off. I really want to. What should I do?

MIXED UP IN MICHIGAN

DEAR MIXED UP: Congratulations on (a) being able to recognize a hopeless situation when you see one, and (b) being smart enough to hold off.

Don't meet him anywhere at any time. Run the other way as though your very life depended on it. If you want a taste of hell on earth, get "mixed up" with a married musician.

DEAR ABBY: Please help me before I explode. My husband calls me "Mamma" and I hate it. I am not his mother!

I have told him how I feel about this, but he says he can't help it — he is used to it. Abby, our kids are long gone from this house, and it's time he got out of the habit.

I have never called him "Daddy," and this "Mamma" business is getting on my nerves. Please print some suggestions for him. He never misses your column.

NOT HIS MOTHER

DEAR NOT: I have no suggestions for him, but I have one for you. You're not going to change your husband, so you'd better change your attitude. "Mamma" is a loving title — one that you should cherish. Accept it as a compliment.

DEAR ABBY: Please print this letter so my sister and brother will read it and see themselves.

Abby, why do grown children give their mother a check for special occasions such as Mother's Day, her birthday and Christmas? They hand it to her and say, "Here, Mom, I never know what to buy you."

Meanwhile, Mom is in a wheelchair — where she has been for the last three years — and she can't go shopping to buy anything. Mom depends on one daughter for everything. As you may have guessed, I am that daughter who is already run to death. I'm not complaining, but when someone gives her a check, I am the one who has to go to the bank to cash it and then go shopping.

What's the matter with flowers, candy, a pretty housecoat or a cake? Thanks for hearing me out. I feel better already. Sign me ...

THE ONE WHO DOES EVERYTHING

DEAR ONE: There's nothing wrong with flowers, candy or a cake. But if "the pretty housecoat" is the wrong size, you will have to exchange it!

DEAR ABBY: I had to chuckle when I read the letter from that women's libber signed "Letting It Grow."

I'm a female and I haven't shaved my legs or armpits for 15 years. I'm a senior high school teacher, bus driver and part-time college instructor, and I'm lucky if my laundry gets done and my socks match.

As for my love life — it couldn't be better. He doesn't shave his legs or armpits either.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) —

Technology and automation may be putting some Americans out of work, "but they are also creating jobs for many workers and helping to retrain others for the jobs of the 1980s," according to Tom W. Miller of Control Data Corp.

As an example, Miller says, former assembly line workers in Detroit are already being taught, through computer assisted instruction with a system called PLATO, to build and maintain the robots which will increasingly assemble most American automobiles.

Futrell Fought For ECU

Ashley Futrell, who has been a trustee of East Carolina University since 1969, resigned as chairman of the board last week.

Futrell will remain on the board until his term expires, but the chairmanship now falls to Ralph Kinsey Jr., a Charlotte attorney and alumnus of ECU.

In stepping down as chairman, Futrell, who is editor and publisher of the Washington Daily News, said the university's future is important to all. "If we must fight for recognition, then let us be ready to do battle," he said. "The greatness we see ahead will only be stilled by a lack of greatness in the hearts of those in command."

The outgoing chairman has long been willing to do battle for the institution which is so much a part of eastern North Carolina.

When he ran for the N.C. state

Senate in 1964 he strongly supported the institution, which was not even in the district he sought to represent. Then when he became a member of the Legislature he was embroiled in all the fights that have brought East Carolina University to its present level. He was a leader in the fight to establish the nursing school, which today is proving to be of such tremendous value to our state. Futrell fought for the establishment of the medical school and was at the forefront in the fight for university status. As chairman of the board he has helped guide the university through the era of two chancellors following the retirement of Dr. Leo Jenkins.

Ashley Futrell has given a great deal of his time, energies and finances to East Carolina University. There is no one who loves the school more.

Social Security Study

WASHINGTON — Talk continues on Capitol Hill about the Social Security system, but until this past week all the talk had been along familiar lines: The system could be bailed out only by increasing revenues or by decreasing future benefits, or by a combination of both.

We have heard these old refrains over and over. I have sung a few of them myself. But last week came a proposal for Social Security reform so sound, so wise, so feasible that it cries out for serious consideration by leaders of both parties.

This new plan comes from the National Taxpayers Legal Fund, a small but spirited think tank in Washington. The basic idea is to preserve Social Security benefits for persons now retired or about to be retired, but gradually to phase in a new system of private retirement accounts for younger workers in the labor force.

Such an approach is not wholly new. Sen. Barry Goldwater and former Treasury Secretary William Simon have advocated such reforms in the past. During the recent campaign in California, Sen.-elect Pete Wilson gingerly mentioned the possibility. Professor Milton Friedman endorsed elements of the plan more than 10 years ago. Such economists as James Buchanan and Colin Campbell have defended the concept. What the National Taxpayers Legal Fund has done is to wrap the whole proposition into a single cohesive and comprehensible package. It makes great good sense.

heavily taxes, at that — to support persons now retired.

The authors of last week's proposal would cut boldly through the fogs of sham and illusion. One part of the existing program, they point out, is thinly disguised public welfare: For many old persons, Social Security is all they have to live on. Another part offers the form, but not the substance, of a truly funded insurance plan. Why not split the two functions?

Under this approach, that which is welfare would be treated as welfare. It would be financed under the existing Supplemental Security Income (SSI) program from general revenues. But this is the wonderfully attractive aspect: That which is insurance gradually would be financed by the investment of Social Security taxes in individual retirement accounts administered through the private sector.

This is how it would work: Assume that a worker, now 35 years old, will have earnings that average $25,000 a year. He and his employer continue to pay a combined tax of 13.4 percent, or $3,350 a year, but the money goes into the worker's own Future Security Individual Retirement Account. Now assume a real rate of return of 8 percent, compounded over the 30-year period before retirement. At age 65 the worker would have a balance of $380,000.

Unlike the mythical funds of Social Security, such individual retirement accounts would be real money. In the example given, the worker could draw tax-exempt interest of $30,400 a year (Please Turn To Page 5)

JAMES J. KILPATRICK

By this time, almost everyone must be familiar with at least the large dimensions of the problem. The major Social Security trust fund is broke; it is spending $30,000 more a minute than it is taking in, and it is maintaining benefit payments only by borrowing from the health and disability funds. Though the system theoretically is regarded as a plan of "insurance" financed by "contributions" to various "trust funds," the theory is bogus. The present system is purely and simply a system for redistribution of current income, by which productive workers are taxes — and

Where Was Sec. Shultz?

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — A dressing-down of one of Secretary of State George Shultz's lieutenants by national security adviser William P. Clark over the telephone from Brazil last week shows rising White House alarm over State Department failure to make President Reagan's Mideast peace plan work.

For Shultz, the failure is institutional. ("You win some, you lose some," one insider at State confided.) But for Ronald Reagan, failure is coming close to making him a laughing stock in the world and in the U.S. Senate. "That was a great speech on Middle East peace the president made Sept. 1," Sen. Bennett Johnston told us, "but it's been one long fizzle ever since."

A key member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, Johnston voted to add $475 million extra in U.S. aid for Israel Dec. 2. The increase was uncontested on the committee, raising this question: Where was George Shultz? He did nothing to prevent that vote until all but two senators on the committee had pledged support for Israel.

Therein lies the conversion of President Reagan from architect of the get-tough policy on Israel laid down Sept. 1 to the laughing stock he seemed after the Senate's pro-Israel tilt last week. He can thank months of State Department pussyfooting in the face of Israel's contemptuous rejection of Reagan's Sept. 1 peace plan.

That was the subject of Clark's telephonic dressing-down of Under Secretary of State William Schneider, Shultz's man in charge of foreign aid. Under orders from Shultz, Schneider gave the Senate Appropriations Committee only this limited warning about increasing aid for Israel: It would distort the U.S. security assistance program, causing compensating declines in aid for front-line U.S. allies Turkey and Pakistan.

Shultz directed Schneider not to raise the question of damage to Reagan's peace plan from the huge increase in Israeli aid. It was that directive that infuriated the White House — and the normally phlegmatic Judge Clark. Even though Shultz was with Clark and the president in Brasilia, Clark placed the phone call to Washington to give Schneider his dressing-down.

Clark should have saved his nickel and taken Shultz, not Schneider, to the woodshed. For months, Shultz and his State Department have been aware that pro-Israeli senators were planning their money-raising coup for Jerusalem. They knew that one purpose was to give Israel a congressional clean bill of health after the Lebanon invasion and the Beirut massacre.

Many senators honestly wondered whether the president "had any objection to a windfall dropped in Israel's lap at a time Prime Minister Menachem Begin was planting new colonies on the West Bank against Reagan's repeated appeals."

Far-in-advance word was sent to Foggy Bottom by Republican senator Bob Kasten, chairman of the appropriations subcommittee handling the matter, that he planned to sweeten the Israel pot. Nevertheless, senators heard nothing from Shultz until just hours before the vote. By then, only two Republicans on the committee — Chairman Mark Hatfield and James McClure — would vote "no."

At that point, Shultz issued his directive to Schneider to ignore the president's peace plan during testimony against the Israeli windfall. When Schneider duly denied that Reagan's peace proposals would be set back by the windfall, Chairman Hatfield whipped out and read aloud a handwritten note from Clark warning that sweetening the Israeli pot would poison Reagan's peace plan.

The contrast between Clark's direct approach and Shultz's pussyfooting while Israel systematically rounded up pro-Israel votes the last six months helps explain why the president's peace plan is a "fizzle." Shultz, not Clark, is Reagan's point man for Mideast peace. In that role he has unlimited authority. "There is nothing Reagan would not do if Shultz (Please Turn To Page 5)

Death Penalty Concerns All

Charlie Brooks Jr., who was convicted in Texas of murder, was put to death Tuesday. He was only the sixth person to be executed in this nation since the death penalty was reinstated in 1974, and it was the first execution in Texas since 1964.

Even using an injection to bring on death, it was not a pretty scene, according to witnesses. The body struggles against dying.

There are few of us who are entirely comfortable with state executions ... and yet, given the senseless murders taking place today, what is the alternative?

Those sentenced to execution have all the avenues of the courts open to them, so much so that some who commit heinous crimes are often spared the death penalty while others are put to death. That is the most unfair part of our death penalty concept.

THIS AFTERNOON

A Difficult Task

By PAUL T. O'CONNOR

RALEIGH — The legislators who want to end all foreign purchases of North Carolina farm and timber land found just how difficult their task is going to be last week. At their first study meeting, they heard that their proposal contains several debilitating loopholes, and that there are economic interests back home who'd strongly oppose their bill. The next day, Gov. Jim Hunt made things worse when he said he was outright against the idea.

Sen. Vernon White of Winterville and Rep. Vernon James of Elizabeth City have been working for more than two years on the bill. They say that purchase of North Carolina farm and timber land by foreigners is driving up the cost of land to the point where young people can't get into farming. They also question the wisdom of allowing farmers to control increasing amounts of food-producing land in this country.

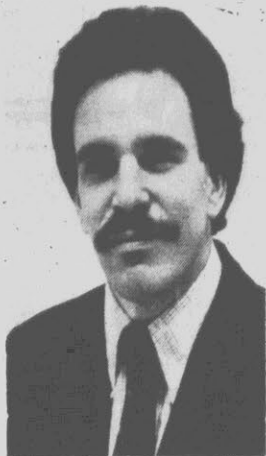

The two had no longer opened their study committee meeting on a bill they plan to present in the 1983 session when the bad news started rolling in. Committee counsel Bill Hale told them that any law they'd write would not apply if it conflicted with international treaties the United States government had signed. So, for example, if a U.S. treaty with England guarantees British citizens the right to buy American land, North Carolina is powerless to stop them.

Fayetteville's Sen. Tony Rand, a lawyer, found a gigantic loophole in the proposal. If a foreign industry is to locate here, they must be able to buy land. The proposal recognizes that need and exempts such purchases from the bill. But Rand, saying we'd have no real way of knowing the purposes of landbuyers, got that clause

With that clause, however, you have to ask if the bill accomplishes what the Legislature set out to do in the first place. Foreigners would be able to hold land 10 and maybe 20 years. If, as the legislators contend, they're buying it for investment purposes, what does the bill accomplish? Foreigners could derive income from the lease of the land and then sell it for a capital gain when their time ran out.

The following day, Hunt was asked why he opposed such legislation in the past. "Unless there's a real threat, which I am not aware of, it would be a real mistake to the economy of this state and our efforts to bring jobs here. It sends a signal that North Carolina doesn't want capital coming in. Some years, foreign investment equals 10 percent of all investment in the state."

He has several good points. Latest figures show 422 square miles — 270,000 acres — of North Carolina's 52,386 (Please Turn To Page 5) taken out of the bill on the grounds that it makes the whole bill meaningless.

The committee expanded a similar clause that allows foreigners to buy and hold land for five years if they have non-agriculture intentions for it. Several committee members said five years wasn't enough time for a large international corporation to plan a facility and get it built. So they increased the limit to 10 years and allowed for an extension to 20 years if the state Board of Agriculture agrees.

Other Editors Say Some Won't Pay

(Washington Daily News)

One of the very great problems besetting many hospitals in many communities over North Carolina today is that so many people able to pay their hospital bills just seem to ignore them.

Perhaps when pressured, they will pay finally; but even then they may find reasons to delay.

It just stands to reason that some people needing to be in a hospital just cannot pay their hospital bills. We all know that; and we all know that they must be cared for without regard to financial status.

But we are directing what we say here to those affluent people who go to the hospital, receive the prescribed treatment, run up bills, then leave without paying. It is an affliction hitting much of North Carolina today where there are community hospitals, if we can believe what we have been reading.

In Durham County for instance, the Durham General Hospital is taking the hard line in dealing with patients who can but who just will not pay their bills. In Durham these delinquent accounts are being turned over to the small claims court.

We cannot say how successful the Small Claims Court will be in collecting the delinquent accounts, but at least it is a step in the only direction that could be taken. Again, we have great sympathy and compassion for those who need help but who are unable to pay for it. They must be served as well as the rich and prominent.

It is the fellow able to pay but who just refuses that we are talking about here. And every community apparently has many of this type.

What so many others may not realize is that hospitals have to gear their costs with the number of patients and the services to patients available and needed. It might cost a lot of money to treat a person unable to pay. And we do not complain about this. But hospital rates are set with all the patients, their upkeep and medical costs involved and without regard to their ability or readiness to pay or whether they have insurance or not.

Those who cannot pay have their bills in a real sense added to the costs of those who can pay in the sense that the hospital rate must include all — payers and non-payers.

It is no disgrace not to be able to pay a hospital bill. Many of us have been in that very category. But when a loved one needs hospital care we all demand it whether we can pay for it or not.

Fewer Jobs For Uneducated

By JOHN CUNIFF

AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) —

Nearly one in every four teen-agers in the work force is without a job. If the youngster is a black male, the ratio rises to more than one in two. Many are school dropouts. They could become life dropouts too.

That such a fate awaits them is almost foreordained unless they receive training, because within the jobless statistics is a story of economic change that suggests the future may have even fewer crumbs for the uneducated.

The new era is called by several names, most often "post-industrial" or "advanced industrial," words that have far more significance when explained succinctly by Libby Howland of ULI, the Urban Land Institute.

The new world's guiding force, says Ms. Howland, is information, "a force analogous to energy in the industrial, and labor in the preindustrial eras." Dropouts, need it be said, would be pitifully little to offer in that world.

The new world is already here too, the result of a merging of computers and communications technology. By some estimates, about half the workforce already is related to some aspect of information — gathering (research), processing (programming), manipulating (building data banks), selling, transmitting, etc.

It has developed swiftly in recent years. In 1890, Ms. Howland says, only 4 percent of workers were in information; machine energy and muscle power still dominated. By 1920 it was still only 17 percent. But now the rush is on.

Nearly 70 percent of total employment growth in the past two decades has come from new professional, technical, managerial and clerical jobs. At the same time, the relative number of blue-collar and farm workers has diminished.

The information age demands information, and for most youngsters the most successful way to get it is in

Strength For Today

THE NATURE OF REVOLUTIONS

Some years before the Civil War the great anti-slavery reformer Wendell Phillips wrote, "Revolutions are not made; they come. A revolution is as natural a growth as an oak. It comes out of the past. Its foundations are laid far back."

Incidents in history seem to cause revolutions. But they do not cause them — they set them off. Huge charges of revolutionary dynamite have been planted through centuries of injustice. The latest incident merely sparks the explosion.

There is nothing more revolutionary than a person's conversion from evil life to good, from scepticism to Christian faith. Events of this sort do not occur in an instant, much as they appear to do. The event of the instant touches them off. Far behind lies the providence of God and the teachings of parents and the effect of environment over the years. Revolutions — including spiritual revolutions — come out of the past. Their foundations are laid far back. — Elisha Douglass

Poor Reaction Greet Senate TV Proposal

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A plan for televising Senate sessions is up for cancellation, the victim of poor ratings from senators.

With time dwindling, Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., has reportedly abandoned for this year his hopes of winning approval for the proposal to permit TV and radio coverage.

House sessions have been televised since early 1979, but so far senators have proven camera-shy, unwilling to go along with Baker's proposal.

The Republican leader has been seeking Senate action on his plan for two years, but his efforts have been repeatedly frustrated by parliamentary delaying tactics used by opponents, led by Sen. Russell Long, D-La.

Opponents claim the plan would lead to grandstanding by members and provide a free platform for would-be presidential candidates. And some critics have cited the high cost of the system, estimated by the Senate Rules Committee at between $2.5 million and $3.5 million.

"My objections to having taxpayers pay for televising proceedings of the United States Senate have not changed," Long said, suggesting senators could make better use of the time remaining in the current lame-duck session.

But Baker claims that TV and radio coverage of the Senate is a desirable way to "extend the public gallery electronically to all the nation."

If Baker follows through with his plan to bring the measure to the floor in the next few days, Long has announced that it will again be met with spirited opposition.

A renewed talkathon by Long and other opponents could easily tie up the Senate for the rest of the year — something Baker says he's not willing to do for a single issue.

If he could ever get a straight yes or no vote,

Baker contends a majority of the Senate would probably vote to put itself on TV.

Baker told reporters Wednesday that he may still make one last effort to bring up the TV bill before the session's end.

square miles of land in foreign ownership. Last year, foreign investment here totaled $99 million. Hunt said he'd oppose the bill even with liberal time limits for those planning future industrial plants.

A major northeastern real estate developer testified that the proposal is strongly opposed back home. Foreign timber and agricultural firms have made good employers. Also, the law might bring down the price of buying a farm for new farmers but it would also bring down the price a retiring farmer could get for his land when it comes time to sell out.

year, leaving the principal untouched to be inherited by his children. Or he could purchase a straight life annuity that would pay him nearly $60,000 a year for as long as he lived.

The proposed reforms would be phased in over a period of 40 or 50 years. No person would be worse off under this plan. Each succeeding generation would be better off. Billions of dollars in private capital would be created. The package contains other elements that accord with the American ideal, by which society collectively looks after the needy but individuals who can care for themselves are expected to do so. Simply as a concept, what's wrong with that?

asked him," a White House insider told us.

But cautious George Shultz, backed by super-cautious Foreign Service desk officers burned by Israel under past secretaries of state, asks nothing. He tiptoes through Israeli minefields, dropping one little toothless appeal after another to Israel.

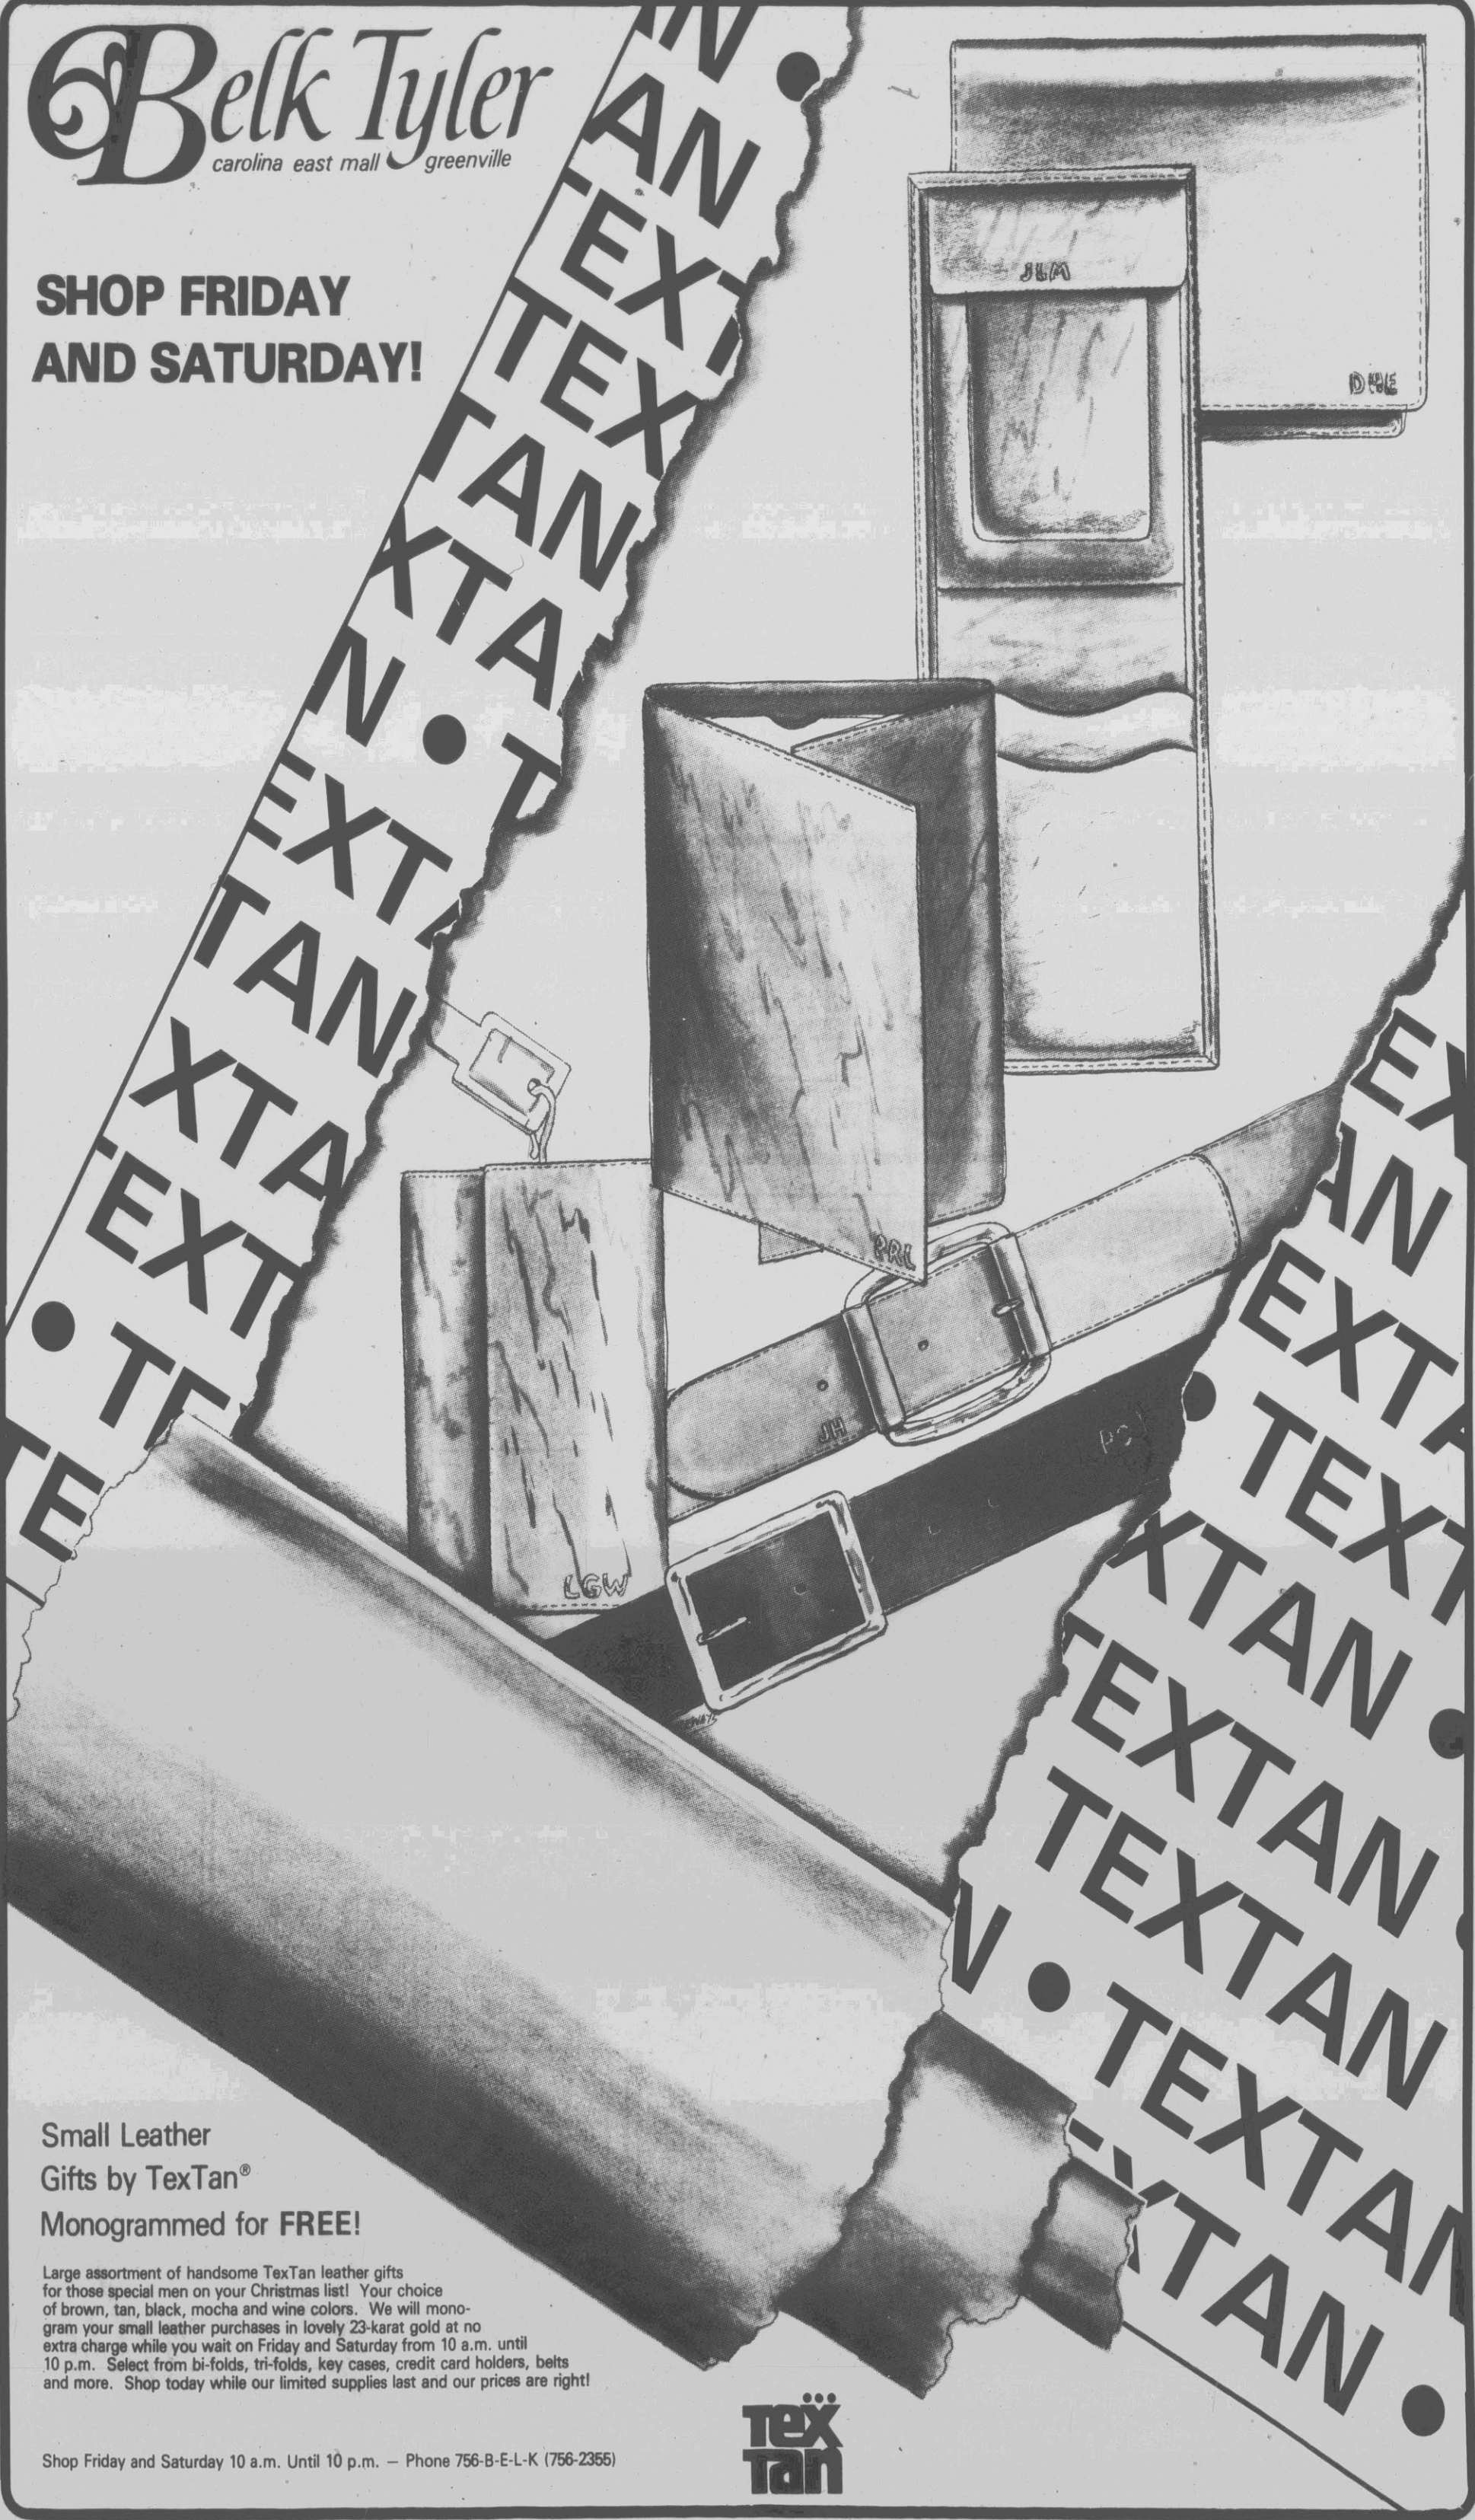

The effect on the Senate — as on the world around it — is that Reagan's Sept. 1 speech now seems to be just words. "It looks like he was playing games three months ago," Sen. Dennis DeConcini, an appropriations committee member, told us. DeConcini voted for the higher Israeli aid; Shultz did not ask him not to until far too late.

Barney Clark Begins Second Week With Artificial Heart

By DONNA ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer
SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Barney B. Clark today began his second week of life sustained by an artificial heart that has "worked beautifully," with doctors hopeful he may soon leave the critical list after treatment for seizures.

Clark has been responding well to diet and medication aimed at correcting a chemical imbalance blamed for a series of seizures early Tuesday, said Dr. Chase Peterson, vice president of health science for the University of Utah.

The 61-year-old retired dentist can be moved off the critical list in a day or two if no more complications develop, Peterson said Wednesday.

"Dr. Clark is not now primarily an artificial heart patient. He is simply a seriously ill post-operative surgical patient," Peterson said. "The pump, in all cases, has worked beautifully. It hasn't missed a beat. It's been an assist."

But Peterson said doctors are still cautious. "He's had a number of complications and could have more," he said.

Clark was near death from an inoperable degenerative heart disease Dec. 2 when his heart was replaced with a polyurethane device powered by compressed air — the world's first permanent artificial heart.

Still on a respirator, Clark is "two-thirds of the way out of this last" complication, able to respond to words and to "point and raise his arms and legs," Peterson said.

Doctors were giving Clark a thin, "semi-digested" gruel of natural nutrients through a stomach tube in an attempt to balance his body chemistry.

"What we want to do is give him a range of foods and salts from which he will pick up what he needs," Peterson said.

Peterson on Tuesday had called the substance "old-fashioned" chicken soup, but said Wednesday he was speaking metaphorically.

As soon as Clark recovers enough to eat solid foods, "I'm going to buy him some real honest-to-God chicken soup and sip it with him, and then I'll be an honest man," Peterson said.

Valium, a muscle relaxant, and Dilantin, a seizure-suppressing drug, were administered to Clark on Tuesday, but were withheld Wednesday as fears of further seizures decreased, Peterson said.

The drugs were slow to leave Clark's system because his liver and kidneys, impaired by his heart disease, have not completely recovered, Peterson said.

The Jarvik-7 heart — unaffected by drugs or anesthesia — aided doctors in dealing with the seizures and with surgery Saturday to seal air leaks in Clark's lungs, Peterson said.

When Clark's lungs were congested last weekend, doctors simply adjusted the heart's controls to decrease blood flow to the lungs and increase the flow out. The fluid in Clark's lungs cleared out within minutes, Peterson said.

Clark's kidney function was at a safe level Wednesday and had improved since Tuesday. Clark had suffered minor kidney failure which doctors thought might have caused a chemical imbalance that led to the seizures.

The dose of penicillin substitute — at one time listed among possible causes of the chemical imbalance — probably was too low to be blamed for the seizures, Peterson said. More serious possible causes, such as hemorrhage or blood clots, are considered unlikely but haven't been completely ruled out, he said.

Doctors don't know whether the mechanical heart's ability to pump as well as a healthy heart could be bad for organs accustomed to the lower output of a faulty heart, Peterson said.

"If you have a worn-out car and you put a new engine in it, you may burn out the transmission," he said.

The Firing Of Deputies Is Tradition

By The Associated Press
As this year's wave of newly elected sheriffs entered office in North Carolina, hundreds of deputies have been dismissed in an action that has become a state tradition.

"The sense on the part of many newly elected sheriffs is that they want to appoint deputies that they know, they trust and they know are dedicated to their policies," said Mike Smith, assistant director of the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill. He said an average of five to eight deputies per office were relieved when 26 sheriffs took over Monday.

In Watauga County, new Sheriff James "Red" Lyons dismissed all but nine of his department's 25 deputies Monday.

"I feel like the large majority that I won by shows the people want some changes," explained Lyons, who defeated 16-year Sheriff Ward Carroll by 800 votes. "What I tried to do was get the best qualified men I could get."

Since the 14th century, the ax has fallen regularly on constitutional officers, which include the governor, secretary of state, attorney general and county sheriffs. The tradition derives from English common law and has been passed down to the state constitution.

Courts generally have upheld the right of sheriffs to fire deputies. Successful court challenges usually have involved constitutional violations, such as the firing of a deputy solely because of his political beliefs.

The North Carolina Sheriff's Association, the state attorney general's office and the Institute of Government report no statewide efforts to improve deputies' job security. There is no advocacy group for deputies, officials said.

"The whole situation sometimes bothers me," said Cumberland County Sheriff Ottis Jones, who spent 20 years as a deputy and 10 as a sheriff.

"There's a lot to be desired, more especially for a career-type officer," said Jones, executive committee chairman of the sheriff's association. "From the officer's standpoint, it puts them in a kind of a bad situation when the sheriff gets in a real heated-type campaign and everyone is called upon for their loyalty."

Catawba County's newly elected sheriff, David Huffman, said he plans to press a "career status" policy for his deputies.

The policy would make deputies below a certain level, such as captain, safe from firing without a hearing before an appeals board. Huffman said a county ordinance or local General Assembly bill probably would have to be enacted to make the change.

Wind Energy

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A private utility has agreed to buy power produced by 36 big wind turbines planned for the hills of Solano County — part of the nation's largest wind energy project.

Pacific Gas & Electric Co. announced Wednesday that it signed a 30-year contract with Denver-based AeroTurbine Energy Corp., which plans to install the generators some 25 miles northeast of San Francisco.

AeroTurbine plans to have the generators operating by 1985, providing power for about 65,000 households. Each of the Boeing-built turbines can generate 3,500 kilowatts.

Under the contract, the utility will pay AeroTurbine most of what it would cost PG&E to produce the power itself.

Town Mourns Kidnapped 100

By JOSEPH B. FRAZIER
Associated Press Writer
SAN SEBASTIAN, El Salvador (AP) — Gloom pervades this town of 4,000 people famous for its colorful textured cotton cloth because about 100 residents have not been heard from since leftist rebels kidnapped them five days ago.

The rebels interrupted a soccer match at gunpoint last Sunday and seized up to 200 people, taking them to their base in nearby hills in an attempt to seek new recruits for their 3-year-old war against the U.S.-backed rightist government. About half the captives escaped or were freed, but the fate of the others is unknown.

"There are tears and there is anger here. They were taken off by force and people are furious," Lt. Jose Antonio Sosa, head of a national guard post here, said Wednesday.

Most people in this town 30 miles east of the capital San Salvador live by weaving fine cotton cloth for shirts, drapes, bedspreads and curtains. San Sebastian's colored textiles are famous because of their texture.
Most of the missing are between 15 and 25 years old, and their absence has affected the weaving business sharply. Many looms and spinning wheels sit idle. Skeins of yarn spun from newly harvested cotton hang uncollected along cobbled streets, bleaching in the sun.

It was the first mass kidnapping by the guerrillas to recruit fighters for their ranks, depleted by months of government harassment campaigns. Up to now, they abducted individuals for ransom or to execute them for what they call "anti-revolutionary activities."

"Two of my weavers are up there," one master clothmaker said. Like many others, he requested anonymity for fear of reprisal.

Jose Pablo Gonzalez, 21, kidnapped while playing soccer, escaped Monday afternoon after what he said was a 14-hour march with the guerrillas. He said he doubted rebel claims they were not forcing anyone to join their ranks.

"They told us they didn't want to keep anyone by force because those people might turn on them and kill them later. But what happened? They didn't let us go," he said.

Gonzalez said there was a hospital and communications equipment but little food in the guerrilla camp. "They have weapons too, but they need people to carry them. There was no place to sleep and they barely fed us. Animals are treated better than they are," he said.

"They told us they were taking us a little way for a meeting to talk to us but when we kept asking when we would get there they kept saying, 'Not yet, keep going,'

"he recalled.
Gonzalez said he recognized several guerrillas from the San Sebastian area but did not further identify them. Other townspeople have said most people in the region do not sympathize with the rebels and want to be left alone because many of their loved ones have been killed in fighting.

Human rights groups say an estimated 38,000 people have died since the war erupted in 1979, many of them civilians caught in crossfires or slain by right-wing terrorist paramilitary gangs that allegedly collaborate with the army.

"A great many of those taken are the elder sons of women living without husbands," said a schoolteacher whose 18-year-old is missing. "They depend on their boys for a living and now there is nobody. If someone doesn't help us only God can say how we will get out of this."

She said her son took care of four younger brothers and sisters while she taught at the local school. "My husband disappeared some time ago. In one case a woman with two small crippled children had her two elder sons taken. Now there is nobody to support any of them."

About 150 relatives and friends of the victims had gone to San Salvador on Monday and asked the International Red Cross to intercede with the guerrillas.

"Right now we are willing to wait," the schoolteacher said. "We are asking the military not to put their feet into it yet, because if they do the victims will end up in the middle of a shootout."

Defend Training Of Guatemalans

By ROBERT PARRY
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon is defending the training a U.S. Air Force officer gave to Guatemalan military pilots last summer, saying it didn't violate a 5-year-old ban on U.S. military aid to the Central American nation.

A Pentagon statement said Lt. Col. Benjamin Castro, an Air Force officer attached to the U.S. Embassy in Guatemala City, "on his own time lectured Guatemalan student pilots on instrument flying and safety."

But congressional critics argue that the instruction last summer might have violated restrictions against security assistance, including military training, for countries considered "gross and consistent" violators of human rights.

"It is highly irregular to say the least and quite possibly without proper authorization," said Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., a House Foreign Affairs Committee member. "The notion that he's doing it on his own time is ridiculous. He's an officer of the U.S. Air Force."

Amnesty International and other human rights groups have accused Guatemala's army of slaughtering thousands of Indian peasants in a counter-insurgency campaign against leftist insurgents. Guatemala's government has denied those charges.

In a statement made in response to a reporter's question, the Pentagon defended Castro's lectures as proper.

"It has long been considered a responsibility of all qualified U.S. pilots — civil and military — to assist host-nation aviators in understanding and complying with international safety procedures," the Defense Department said.

The Pentagon said Lt. Col. Castro's lectures covered such skills as "advanced instrument flight, use of navigational instruments ... mission planning, altitude chart reading and flight plan submission."

All 17 students pilots in the class were in the Guatemalan air force, the Pentagon said.

Since taking office, the Reagan administration has moved gradually to relax the Guatemalan aid cut-off.

In June 1981, the administration permitted Guatemala to buy $3.2 million in military trucks and jeeps, and last October,

Donors Give 73 Pints Of Blood

A Bloodmobile "mini-visit" Wednesday at the Empire Brushes Inc. plant resulted in the donation of 73 pints of blood, according to Ruth Taylor of the Pitt County Red Cross.

Mrs. Taylor said 11 persons were deferred for various health reasons during the four-hour drive for plant personnel. The visit was coordinated by Leon Wright, personnel manager at Empire Brushes, and Anita Eakes, personnel clerk.

The next Bloodmobile visit will be the third annual countywide Christmas blood drive on Dec. 29 at the Moose Lodge. Mrs. Taylor said there is always an added need for blood during the holiday season, mainly as a result of increased traveling.

Solar Fraction

The solar fraction for this area Wednesday, as computed by the East Carolina University Department of Physics, was 55. This means that a solar water heater could have provided 55 percent of your hot water needs.

The Washington Post reported that a Green Beret attached to the U.S. Embassy as an English teacher was training Guatemalan army cadets in anti-guerrilla warfare.

After his recent Latin American trip, President Reagan said he was convinced the Guatemalan government was getting "a bum rap" and he was inclined to resume aid. But State Department officials said no final decision had been reached.

A Guatemalan request to buy $2 million in helicopter parts has been pending for more than two years. And Solarz predicted "fierce opposition" in Congress to any aid resumption as long as there were recurring reports of massacres by Guatemala's army.

U.S. military aid to Guatemala stopped in 1977 when the country's conservative government objected to human rights restrictions that Congress inserted into the foreign assistance law.

ACTOR DIES — Will Lee, a veteran actor who gained a loyal following as Mr. Hooper, the kindly shopkeeper on "Sesame Street," died of a heart attack Tuesday night. Lee, 74, succumbed at Manhattan's Lenox Hill Hospital, according to an official of the Children's Television Workshop which produces "Sesame Street." (AP Laserphoto)

Mexico Facing More Taxes, Less Spending

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexicans can expect less government spending, high inflation, higher taxes and a further devaluation of the peso in the coming year before the country's deepening recession starts bottoming out in 1984, President Miguel de la Madrid says. In a message he sent to the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday together with the proposed 1983 budget, de la Madrid said the government must reduce its spending sharply if the nation is to survive its worst economic crisis since the 1930's. The budget deficit alone is being cut from 17 to 8.5 percent of the gross national product — more than the 7 percent level of 1978 to 1980, and about half its estimated level this year.

Economic growth which averaged six percent annually since 1976 will drop to zero — and maybe below, the president's message said.

"The relevant question now is not how much we should spend but how much we can, at what rate and how best to use it," the message said. "The principal causes of the crisis are internal and its definitive solution is up to us.

"We should expect neither a magic cure nor gratuitous foreign aid."

De la Madrid's statement said his six-year administration, which began Dec. 1, would continue negotiations to secure a $3.8 billion bailout from the International Monetary Fund.

The budget cuts are in line with a series of tough conditions the IMF is setting, including the elimination of subsidies on food, transportation and basic services and relaxing state controls on the economy.

An IMF loan could enable Mexico to borrow another $6 billion from private banks and help the country resume payments on its $81 billion foreign debts, highest in the Third World.

Mexico is critically short of foreign currency. Reserves are down to almost nothing. An estimated $14 billion of next year's $16 billion export earnings — most of it from oil — will go pay interest on the foreign debt.

Foreign creditors gave Mexico a three-month grace period and extended it for another 180 days on Nov. 21, with Mexico promising to continue interest payments.

The size of the budget will not be made public for several days but local newspapers reported it to be 7 trillion pesos — $100 billion at the official rate of 70 pesos to the dollar, or more than twice the 3.3 trillion pesos estimated for this year's outlay.

Grifton Man Killed In TV Tower's Fall

One of the five men killed in the fall of an 1,800-foot television tower in Missouri City, Texas, Tuesday was from Grifton and another victim was from Kinston.

Authorities in Fort Bend County, Texas, identified two of the dead as Johnny Braten Jr., 26, of Route 3, Grifton, and David Stewart, 21, of Kinston. Both were employed by Worldwide Tower Services Inc., Pitman, N.J.

All of the five men killed died of multiple injuries after they either rode the tower to the ground or jumped. They had just lifted a second antenna atop the tower when a gin pole being used as part of a pulley mechanism failed and caused the antenna to fall and cut through a guy wire.

"When the wire got struck, it probably put a twisting motion in the tower and brought it down," Bill Cordell, chief engineer for radio station KIKK, said. "The tower could have withstood hurricane-force winds, but it couldn't take the twist."

The gin pole is a bar to which a pulley mechanism is attached.

The tower was operated by the Senior Road Tower Project, a consortium of UHF television station KTXH and nine radio stations scheduled to use the tower.

U.S. Treasurer Will Have Baby

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasurer of the United States says family comes before work — so that means she's moving to California to have her baby, due in January, and to be near her husband. But she's not quitting her job in Washington — at least for a while.

Confusing? It might be, but Angela M. Buchanan, at 33 the youngest U.S. Treasurer ever, says she's always been willing to do things a little differently.

Ms. Buchanan, once an energetic Ronald Reagan campaign worker, now is the official whose name appears on the U.S. currency.

On Wednesday, she told reporters she might be leaving her job before very long — but she would not say for sure when.

Ms. Buchanan has been coping with a "bi-coastal marriage" since last March, when she married lawyer William Jackson, who has continued to work in southern California.

But after the baby arrives, she said, "We'll see how long that lasts."

The baby is due Jan. 28, so "I'm going to be working in January out of the Internal Revenue Service office in Santa Ana" in California, she said.

That would put her close to her husband. But not for long.

When the doctor says she can fly with the baby, she said, she will return to Washington to resume her job in charge of the minting and engraving of U.S. money and the selling of U.S. Savings Bonds.

Jackson will remain in California, except for visits to wife and child every two weeks or so. He'll be taking the long coast-to-coast flights that she's been taking up to now.

But eventually, she said, she will join her husband, because, "I'll have a child and husband, and they'll have to come first."

District Scouts Held Camporee, Competed

GRIMESLAND — Pitt District Scouts participated in a "backpack and feathers" camporee recently featuring patrol-against-patrol competition among some 130 participants.

The camporee, which borrowed Indian terminology in designating the gathering as a "coupstick" event, was held for the first time on a 300-acre site on the Robert L. Wilson farm just west of Grimesland.

Scouts were given equal numbers of feathers prior to competition in seven events and losing patrol members passed along feathers to winning patrols.

The Flaming Arrow patrol of Troop 340, sponsored by St. James United Methodist Church, was the overall winner of the competition. Each member of the winning patrol received a copy of the Scout field book.

Finishing second was the Eagle Patrol from Troop 25 of Farmville. Steve Worley and Chris Powell serve as patrol leaders for the Flaming Arrow and Eagle units, respectively.

Troop 200 of Grimesland won the camporee-wide tug-of-war event and received a cake baked by Lucy Adams, wife of Heber Adams, the camporee registrar. Troop 340 won the volleyball tournament.

The Grimesland troop prepared the camporee site for use by the Scouts and Troop 25 handled the cooking for the camporee adult staff.

A Saturday night campfire featured skits and songs. The Rev. Scott Eains, a registered Boy Scout chaplain from Grimesland, had Sunday morning services.

Bill Plueddemann served as camporee chief and other staff members included Tom Harwell, district chairman; Terry Payne, events chief; and Bob Moseley, district executive.

Dr. John Waeltz from East Carolina University did the artwork on certificates that were presented to winning patrol members.

Premier Is Finn Visitor

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — Soviet Premier Nikolai A. Tikhonov was greeted with full military honors at the Helsinki airport today at the start of his three-day official visit to Finland, Moscow's wary Western neighbor.

Tikhonov, the first high-level Kremlin visitor in Finland since 1977, was met at the airport by President Mauno Koivisto and government ministers led by Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa.

Official talks are expected to center on economic relations and ways to trim a $636 million trade imbalance in Moscow's favor.

The talks are scheduled to begin this afternoon after a welcoming luncheon given by Koivisto.

"The fact that both (Koivisto and Tikhonov) are economists by background gives a good starting point for the official talks," the independent newspaper Helsingin Sanomat said in an editorial.

"The exceptionally large imbalance in the Finnish-Soviet trade is due largely to the changes in the price of oil which have been very difficult to foresee. This forces both sides to look for new areas of economic cooperation."

Testifies Jaycee Funds Were Diverted

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer
CONCORD, N.C. (AP) —
The executive secretary of the North Carolina Jaycees testified Wednesday that traveler's checks issued to former Jaycees president Johnny Lee Fletcher were used to pay membership fees for fictitious chapters.

Phyllis Councilman of Asheboro said during Fletcher's year as president in 1977 to 1978, checks for $631 and $1,161 were made out to Fletcher, then used to pay dues in bogus Jaycees chapters statewide. She said Fletcher had a travel-expense account of $11,000.

"And some of that expense money was used to pay off false and fictitious chapters, wasn't it?" prosecutor Lester Chalmers asked Ms. Councilman. She said it was.

Ms. Councilman said Maurice H. Wilson, former executive director of the state Jaycees, told her to write the checks. She said that as far as she knew, Fletcher didn't know Wilson ordered the travel checks made out to him.

Fletcher, 41, of Concord, is charged with eight counts of misapplying $26,480.50 in Jaycees funds raised from the sales of grape jelly to be used for the N.C. Burn Center in Chapel Hill. If convicted in the so-called "Jamscam" case, he faces up to 80 years in prison.

The Jamscam scandal surfaced in the spring of 1980, and a probe by the State Bureau of Investigation showed that nearly $250,000 from the Jaycees Foundation Inc. had been misapplied.

Prosecutors allege the money was used to create phony Jaycees chapters so Fletcher could win awards for membership growth.

Defense attorneys contend that Fletcher didn't know anything was done wrong during his year as president until a meeting of past Jaycees presidents in 1980.

Ms. Council was the sixth witness for the state to testify in the three days of the trial in Cabarrus County Superior Court. The case is being heard in a specially called weeklong session of court, but Wednesday presiding Judge Donald L. Smith of Raleigh said he expects the trial to go into next week.

Prosecutors have subpoenaed about 29 witnesses. Defense lawyers are expected to call dozens of character witnesses to the stand.

In testimony Wednesday, Ms. Councilman said Wilson withdrew as much as $10,000 at a time from their charity account and used the money to cover overdrafts in the organization's operating fund.

Ms. Councilman said she turned over all charity checks to Wilson.

She testified that in January 1978, Wilson withdrew $10,000 from the N.C. Jaycees Foundation Inc., the organization's charity arm, to cover overdrafts on the Jaycees operating account. She said another $5,000 was withdrawn from the foundation account in March 1978, also to cover insufficient funds.

Ms. Councilman said that in December 1977 and April 1978, 75 new chapters were reported statewide, but that her records showed that only 14 ever paid dues or charter fees.

She also testified that Wilson told her to write checks for travel to various Jaycees officials, including Fletcher, but to hold the checks and turn them back into the bank in what she called "paper transactions."

Under questioning by Chalmers, Ms. Councilman said the transactions were done "to make accounts receivable look good; to have a high amount of accounts receivable on the books."

In cross examination by defense attorney Randall Hastings, Ms. Councilman said Wilson was in charge of all financial operations of the N.C. Jaycees Inc. and the Jaycees Foundation Inc.

"The procedure for extending credit to new chapters in John's year as president was no different from any other year you had been there," Hastings asked Ms. Councilman. "John never instructed you to write any checks for travel, did he?"

son pleaded guilty last year in the case and agreed to testify for the state. He originally was charged with more than 70 felony counts.

Bragged Of His Threats

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A teen-ager who murdered his girlfriend, then showed her body to groups of friends, has told cellmates that he planned to kill the rest of her family, police say.

Anthony Broussard, serving 25 years to life for the Nov. 3, 1981, slaying of 14-year-old Marcy Conrad, reportedly bragged last month that he planned to kill her brother, 17-year-old Kevin Conrad, and her mother, Susan Houghland of Milpitas, said Sgt. Ronald Icely of the Milpitas Police Department.

Miss Conrad had been strangled and her partially clad body was dumped in a ravine in the remote foothills of Milpitas. Broussard brought groups of disbelieving friends to see the body, but it was several days before the discovery was reported.

He pleaded guilty this summer to first-degree murder.

In prison, Broussard "said he was going to 'do' Kevin or take care of Kevin," said Icely, quoting one of Broussard's cellmates. "I said what do you mean by 'do'?" And he said, 'Kill him.'"

Broussard, who turned 18 on Tuesday, reportedly made his comments to at least three cellmates in Juvenile Hall.

Based on his interviews with the youths, Icely said Broussard threatened also to kill Ms. Houghland, who had not approved of her daughter's relationship with Broussard.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The U.S. Department of Transportation has approved a grant for more than $1 million to repair the William B. Umstead Bridge, which has been out of commission for more than a month.

The 2½ mile bridge that crosses Croatan Sound, connecting Roanoke Island to the mainland, was closed last month after a barge struck a support pier.

The state has estimated the total cost of the accident at $1.03 million, which also includes engineering work, construction of ferry docks and ferry service.

The $1.031 million grant from the transportation department's Energy Relief Fund was announced on Wednesday by the office of U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

State Highway Administrator Billy Rose says that without the grant, the state would have to take money out of its highway maintenance fund.

The state has estimated the total cost of the accident at $1.03 million, which includes engineering work, construction of ferry docks and ferry service. The money was requested the money after Gov. Jim Hunt declared a state of emergency.

Chicago Doggie Deli Permits Pooches To Eat High On Hog

By CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — There's pupcakes, liver pound cake, beef chews and steak-kidney ragout on the menu at "Famous Fido's Doggie Deli," where pampered pooches can eat high on the hog.

The deli is owned by Gloria Lissner and Bridget O'Connell, who say they'll also cater a "Bone-A-Party" — a big meal for the stay-at-home pet set.

Ten years ago, Miss Lissner opened "Happy Tails" grooming shop on the Northwest Side, where dogs can be attired in tuxedos, leopard pajamas, silk robes and custom-made suits in the clothes annex.

"I got the idea for a doggie deli when customers kept asking me for treats or food made with ingredients especially needed in a pet's diet. Something that would look good and taste good," she said. "They said they were tired of buying them hamburgers and french fries at fast-food places."

At the deli, pets can look in the glass showcases at natural foods shaped like steak, pot pies and frosted cupcakes.

Selections are served in bowls set on little white tables, complete with napkins and a vase of flowers — or the food can be bought to go, ready-to-eat or frozen.

Also on sale are personal dog mugs, ceramic pill boxes and treat jars. Dog food resembling pieces of candy are in glass jars, country-store fashion, selling from 5 cents to 59 cents each.

Items include dog boots, dog stationery, and dog reminder notes that say: "Have you hugged your dog today?" or "It is 10 p.m. — do you know where your dog is?"

Two-pound cakes are made of liver, bone meal, flour, honey and other ingredients. Lettered on the frosting are inscriptions such as "Fido Loves Fifi."

"Business is fantastic," said Miss Lissner, 30, who has 2,000 regular customers on file for the grooming business alone. "In the last two weeks we've done several caterings, sold 50 takeouts and about 75 cakes. Next we are going to have health shakes for pregnant dogs and dietetic dinners."

All the food is homemade, Miss Lissner said.

"I have five women working most of the time preparing it in their kitchens at home," she said.

A menu of culinary suggestions includes:

—Appetizers: Liver pate, tuna treat, cheese logs. $1.50 each.

—Entrees: Shepherd's pie (baked ground beef in a casserole molded into a pastry shell of mashed potatoes); Steak and kidney ragout (bites of beef and kidney braised in a sauce); Vita Loaf (fresh ground beef blended with egg, garlic, cheese, whole wheat bread crumbs and a nutritional supplement), $2.99 each.

—Desserts: Cookies (chocolate chip, liver chip and cheese chip); pupcakes (available in liver, beef and chicken). Cookies $1.89 a bag, pupcakes 50 cents.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina f.o.b. dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 40.50 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2 1/2 to 3 pound birds. 18 percent of the loads offered have been confirmed, with a final weighted average of 39.61 cents f.o.b. dock or equivalent. The market is higher and the live supply is moderate for a very good demand. Weights mostly desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Thursday was 1,645,000, compared to 1,622,000 last Monday.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market staged a broad retreat today, extending Wednesday's late selloff, amid concern over prospects for the Christmas shopping season, a period critical to hopes for an economic recovery.

A surprise announcement of slumping sales from a leading video-game producer, Warner Communication's Atari Inc., helped trigger the losses, especially among related issues.

More than three stocks fell in price for every one that rose in the midday tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down 9.85 points Wednesday, tumbled another 8.27 to 1,038.82 in the first two hours. The blue-chip average had been off 13.61 points earlier.

Stock prices fell late Wednesday after Warner Communications said earnings would be substantially below earlier estimates because of disappointing sales of its Atari video-game products. Warner also said a top Atari official had been relieved of his duties.

Martin Feldstein, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, said no one can estimate with certainty when a recovery will begin. But he said conditions are encouraging and offer hope for a recovery.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks fell .61 to 81.12. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 3.15 to 335.55.

Big Board volume reached 36.48 million shares a third of the way through today's session, down from 40.80 million in the same period Wednesday.

The opening of trading in Warner stock was delayed on the NYSE this morning because of an imbalance in orders, and it was highly volatile in heavy activity in over-the-counter markets, falling 1 1/2 to 37.

Chrysler, which announced an economic agreement with striking Canadian autoworkers, rose 1/4 to 14 1/2.

Cosmonauts To Return Friday

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet cosmonauts Anatoly Berezovoy and Valentin Lebedev will end their record-setting space flight Friday and return to Earth after nearly seven months aboard the Salyut-7 orbital station, Tass reported.

Berezovoy and Lebedev spent their 210th day in space Thursday checking the systems of the Soyuz-T-7 vehicle that will carry them home and mothballing the Salyut station, the official news agency said.

The two cosmonauts have completed their research program "and will return to Earth tomorrow," Tass said. In spite of Soviet reports that Berezovoy and Lebedev are in good health and feeling well, Soviet space officials appear to be concerned about the effects of the long period of weightlessness.

Medical Gazette, a bi-weekly newspaper, in its latest edition quoted a Soviet space official as saying that the "unique length" of the space flight prompted them to choose the location of the soft landing with "special" care.

"Special attention" would also be paid to weather conditions for the cosmonauts' return, Medical Gazette further quoted the official as saying.

Soviet space flights usually end with soft landings in the central Asian republic of Kazakhstan.

On Nov. 14, Berezovoy and Lebedev exceeded the 185-day space endurance record set by their countrymen Leonid Popov and Valery Ryumin, who returned to Earth on Oct. 11, 1980.

The longest American space flight was 85 days in 1974 when astronauts Gerald Carr, Edward Gibson and William Pogue piloted the Skylab space station.

Autistic Children's Week Proclaimed

Gov. Jim Hunt proclaimed Dec. 5-11 as Autistic Children's Week in North Carolina.

Autism is a severe disorder of communication and behavior. It is a developmental disability which seriously impairs the way the brain processes information sent from the senses.

According to the North Carolina Society for Autistic Adults and Children Inc., which was organized in 1970 to promote the general welfare of people with autism in the state, five to 20 of every 10,000 persons are affected by autism or autistic-like symptoms.

The organization said that autism is four times more common in males than females and occurs throughout the world among all races, nationalities and social classes.

Jo Anne Jeffries of Wake Forest, president, said the society is focusing now on the development of group homes, supervised apartment living arrangements, respite care, job skill training and job opportunities.

Division TEACCH (Treatment and Education of Autistic and Related Communications Handicapped Children and Adults), based in the medical school at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill, leads the nation in pioneer research, treatment and services for autistic children and their families, according to Ms. Jeffries.

Dr. Hal Shigley is clinical director of the Greenville regional center for autistic children, one of five centers in the state. Ms. Jeffries said that one of 38 public school classrooms for autistic children is located in Greenville.

Ginny Cooper is president of the parent group in Greenville.

Man Takes Tray Of Loose Gems

WILLIAMSTON — Peele's Jewelry Store on Main Street in Williamston was robbed of a tray of loose diamonds at about 2 p.m. Wednesday. Estimated value of the approximately 100 to 150 stones in the tray has been placed in excess of $20,000.

According to the clerk from whom the diamonds were taken, a young black male came into the store, asked to look at a diamond for a ring he displayed which had a stone missing. When the clerk turned around for a moment to get something else, the man took the tray, and ran from the store.

Chase was given, but persons involved in the foot chase were unable to apprehend the thief. He was spotted getting into a yellow vehicle and driving away.

The robber reportedly made no threatening gestures and did not display any type of weapon. The Williamston police force was investigating the robbery.

State Rallies To Nip Pirates, 57-49

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

RALEIGH — Freshman Ernie Myers came off the bench to score 11 points, two of them following a key loose ball that helped N.C. State hold off a determined East Carolina squad, 57-49 last night.

The 18th ranked Wolfpack had their hands full with the pesky, smaller Pirates, trailing much of the ball game. It wasn't until Thurl Bailey hit a short jumper with 10:47 left to play that State took the lead for good, 38-36.

Four minutes later, ECU's Barry Wright started down court on a fast break, but lost the basketball. Myers scooped it up and drove back to the State basket for a score, running it to 44-38 after the Pirates had a chance to cut it back to two once more. After Harold Thompson scored with 6:01 left, making it 46-38, State went to the four-corners for the rest of the game, and the Pirates missed on several opportunities to cut it down in the time remaining.

State's final nine points all came on the foul line as the Pirates were forced to foul, helping State move out to as much as a ten-point lead, 51-41, before the Pirates pulled back by as little as six.

"In the years I've been coaching, as an assistant at Connecticut, as head coach at Iona and here," N.C. State Coach Jim Valvano said, "this is the best East Carolina team I've ever seen in terms of enthusiasm, defense, discipline, and running the offense. Charlie Harrison has done a great job. They'll beat some people before this year is over."

Valvano, whose Wolfpack was having to play by NCAA rules for the first time, couldn't seem to get his team on track early on. Neither team shot that well either. ECU hit only 40.9 percent for the game while State made 48.9 percent.

Much of that could be attributed to the sticky defense played by both teams.

"We sure didn't take them for granted," Valvano added. "We saw them against Duke and that was no accident. But we needed a game like this badly. We've had three 30-point games and we needed a tough game and we got it. With the rules changing (from ACC 3-pointers and the shot clock to "regular" rules) I hope we don't lose a game learning how to switch from one style to another."

The loss was a big disappointment for Harrison. "I knew we'd have to execute extremely well to control the tempo, and I think we did so at times. We had a chance to build a lead in the second half, but we didn't take advantage of it."

"The kids did some good things, but we have to be more disciplined. We're getting there, but we're still a step slow. But this is a young team; we're all young because we're new to each other."

Harrison said the noise created by the 11,500 fans in Reynolds Coliseum caused some communications problems for the Pirates. "Later we'll be able to take care of ourselves out there without me clapping at them like a big seal."

The Pirates were hampered by having their number six and seven players sidelined. Guard Curt Vanderhorst was not dressed for the game, and Thom Brown, although dressed, played only for less than a minute. That put more pressure on Tony Robinson at the point, who went the entire 20 minutes. John Williams came in when Bruce Peartree got two early fouls and played 18 minutes. Aside from that, it was mostly the starters all the way.

In contrast, State used ten players, with only three playing over 30 minutes.

For a while there, it looked like Johnny Edwards would be the star of the night. Edwards poured in the first 11 points for the Pirates as they streaked out to an 11-5 lead in the first five minutes of play. He scored the opening basket, then after a tie, put ECU back out. Derek Whittenburg hit on a three-point play for a 5-4 State lead, but Edwards made a jumper from the lane, then hit on the first of two free throws. He followed that with a steal and a dunk and then tapped in another missed shot for the 11-5 margin.

Bailey and Whittenburg rallied State to an 11-11 tie, but Barry Wright hit a free throw and then got a basket by goaltending for a 14-11 lead. Charles Green extended that to 16-11 on two free throws.

East Carolina held to the lead until Alvin Battle made two free throws with 5:12 left to tie it at 20-20, then Bailey hit a jumper put State back up. Two free throws by Wright and a basket by Edwards put ECU back up, 24-22, but Myers scored twice to return the lead to State, 26-24, at the half.

Edwards finished the first half with 15 points, and State made an adjustment in the second half, holding him to four free throws.

"We decided not to front him," Valvano said. "He's a strong player and does a good job of getting loose and they do a good job of getting the ball to him. We decided to let him get the ball and then try to let our superior height keep him off the mark." Valvano was referring to Edwards being 6-6 and being guarded by a 6-11 player.

"Johnny's a talent," Harrison said, "and it's a credit to his teammates that they recognize this. Charles Green was in a shooting position last year, and this year he's in a different situation. He's on the assist end of a lot of Johnny's baskets."

After Myers put State up by four on the opening basket of the second half, baskets by Tony Robinson, Green and Wright put ECU back up, 30-28 with 17:45 left. They extended that by two more, but couldn't break away from the Pack despite several opportunities.

Sloan, Unhappy At Ole Miss, Accepts Duke Job

RALEIGH (AP) — Steve Sloan became head football coach at Duke University Wednesday, saying he was leaving the University of Mississippi because of the pressures placed on the coaches and players.

Sloan takes over for Red Wilson, whose last two Blue Devils teams finished 6-5 and gave Duke its first back-to-back winning seasons in 20 years. Wilson was fired Nov. 20 following a 23-17 upset victory over rival North Carolina.

Sloan resigned his Mississippi job Wednesday morning and met later with his players and assistant coaches, many of whom are expected to be on his Duke coaching staff.

"There's no reason for us to be under this much pressure and I think our players will be more relaxed here, and I think they (the players) will play much better and the new coaches who come here certainly will not be under as much pressure," Sloan said at an Oxford, Miss., news conference.

"It's just not appropriate for the players to be under as much pressure as they are," he said. "There's always a time (to leave) that would help the university and be beneficial to the coach and coaches — this is the time."

Sloan, 38, quarterbacked two national champions at Alabama in the mid-1960s and as a coach, has a 55-55-3 record with three teams making bowl appearances.

"We are delighted that coach Sloan has accepted our offer," said Dr. William Bradford, head of the Duke eight-member selection committee that chose Sloan unanimously. "We are confident that we have made the right choice."

"He is a man who is an unusually-talented coach and a man of principle," Duke Athletic Director Tom Butters said of Sloan. "Steve Sloan's association with Duke University will produce benefits that will be far reaching."

Although Sloan's contract terms were not announced, he had said earlier that Duke would offer a five-year pact. He had recently received a two-year extension of his Mississippi contract, reportedly receiving about $100,000 annually in salary and benefits.

Sloan said he wouldn't try to sign players being recruited by Ole Miss and urged current Rebel players to not transfer to Duke.

Sloan's record at Mississippi was 20-34-1, including a 4-7 mark this past season.

The Cleveland, Tenn., native played for the Atlanta Falcons for two years before serving as an assistant at Alabama, Florida State and Georgia Tech. He became Vanderbilt's head coach in 1973 and, in 1975, took over at Texas Tech for three seasons.

In 1974, his Vanderbilt team tied Texas Tech, 6-6, in the Peach Bowl while his Tech teams lost a 1976 Bluebonnet Bowl appearance to Nebraska, 27-24, and a 1977 Tangerine Bowl decision to Florida State, 40-17.

Deans Is Picked For All-Star Post

BETHEL — North Pitt High School Coach Cobby Deans has been chosen to be an assistant coach in the East-West All-Star game in Greensboro this summer.

Deans will be assisting Bobby Davis of South No. 1 in the game.

The honor marks the first time Deans has been selected for all-star game honors.

Deans has been the head basketball coach at the school since it opened in 1971, taking over at mid-season that year. He also coached the girls team in 1971.

A native of Falkland, Deans graduated from East Carolina University in 1965. He began his coaching career at Farm Life High School at Vanceboro in 1965 as baseball coach and assistant football coach and girls' basketball coach.

The following year, he went to Bethel High School as baseball coach and girls' basketball coach. In 1969, he also took over the boys' basketball coaching duties at Bethel.

Bethel merged with Belvoir-Falkland and Stokes-Paculus to form North Pitt in 1971.

Deans has won or shared in three Eastern Carolina Conference championships at North Pitt. His teams have been in state competition five times, including once at Bethel. His 1977 team was the state runner-up in 3-A competition.

"One of my biggest pleasures has been working with and coaching against some of the fine athletes in Pitt County," Deans said.

Sampson Leads Cavs By Duke, 104-91

DURHAM (AP) — It's too early to evaluate the impact of the 30-second shot clock and three-point field goal in the Atlantic Coast Conference this year, but with Ralph Sampson

Ralph Goes For Two

Virginia's Ralph Sampson (50) hooks the ball over Duke's Jay Bilas (21) as he goes for two points during Wednesday night's ACC game played in Durham. Sampson scored 36 points to lead his team to a 104-91 victory over the Blue Devils. (AP Laserphoto) playing center those things may not matter. Sampson made just about every shot conceivable for a big man Wednesday night as top-ranked Virginia, 5-0, overcame an early Duke lead to down the young Blue Devils 104-91 in the first ACC game played with the new rules.

The 7-foot-4 inch All-America hit 18 of 23 field goal attempts, mostly on dunks and sweeping hooks, to finish with 36 points and 14 rebounds. He made one incredible shot by catching a pass in the air with his back to the basket, and banking it over his shoulder without ever looking.

And Virginia's opponents in conference play may see more of that this year, as the 30-second shot clock could mean Sampson will have more chances to work his magic. "The 30-second rule obviously increases the possessions, which gives him that many more opportunities," said Virginia coach Terry Holland after the game.

While Sampson clearly dominated play, the Cavaliers did have trouble in the early going against a young Duke team which started four freshmen.

Led by freshman center Mark Alarie, Duke, now 2-3, jumped out to a 12-point lead midway in the first half. But Virginia fought back to tie the score at 34 on Sampson's stuff of a missed shot with 4:15 to go in the first half.

The Cavaliers added another bucket seconds later on a layup by reserve guard Ricky Stokes and never trailed again.

They built an 81-65 lead in the second half after Sampson took control of the game. He also received strong outside shooting help from guard Rick Carlisle, who finished with 24 points.

Duke fought back to within 85-77 on a 17-foot jumper by freshman guard Johnny Dawkins with 5:35 to play, but several more baskets by Sampson and free throws by Stokes and Carlisle enabled the Cavaliers to pull away.

Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said he thought the game was aggressively played, adding that his team ran out of gas at the end of the first half (after building a 12-point lead).

"Virginia played well, they're very physical," he said. "We tried a couple of different things to stop

Sampson, but that didn't help. Dawkins led Duke with 21 points, while Alarie had 19 points and 10 rebounds.

Penalties Handed Out For Flagrant Fouls

NEW YORK (AP) — Stan Blinka says his one-game suspension for a flagrant foul would not have been assessed if television cameras had not focused on the New York Jets linebacker on that particular play.

Blinka said he thought the punishment was severe because "it was so well displayed on television. People make shots like that all the time and nothing is made of it. I'm not embarrassed by all this because I wasn't trying to hurt anyone."

National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle suspended Blinka without pay and fined Leonard Thompson of the Detroit Lions $1,000 Wednesday for committing flagrant fouls.

Rozelle said Blinka's hit "ranks with the worst infractions I have witnessed in an NFL game." The suspension will keep Blinka out of the Jets' game Sunday against visiting Tampa Bay and will cost him about $4,500 in pay.

Blinka hit Green Bay wide receiver John Jefferson in the face with a forearm during the Jets' 15-13 victory at Shea Stadium Nov. 28. Thompson, on Detroit's punt-coverage special team, leveled Leon Bright of the New York Giants with a forearm to the throat while Bright was waiting for a punt late in the Giants' 13-6 Thanksgiving Day victory at the Pontiac Silverdome.

Jefferson and Bright each left the game — Bright on a stretcher — following the respective incidents. Neither was seriously injured and neither Blinka nor Thompson was ejected from the game.

"I was trying to knock him down but by no means was I trying to hurt him with a blow to the head," Blinka said Wednesday.

Blinka said he didn't know whether he would appeal the suspension, adding that he would confer with Jets' President Jim Kensil before making a decision.

The Lions said Thompson would not appeal. "We'll take our medicine," said Detroit Coach Monte Clark.

"I really didn't deserve the fine, in my opinion," Thompson said. "It wasn't intentional. It was a close play."

Greene Cen. Rebuilds After Co-Title Season

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
SNOW HILL — Last season, Greene Central went 10-2 in the Eastern Carolina Conference and tied North Pitt for the championship.

This year, the picture would seem to be a bit dimmer. Coach Lewis Godwin has only two starters back from that co-championship team, 5-10 junior guard Bonerree Johnson, and 5-9 senior guard James Thompson. There are several lettermen, but only two of those got in extensive playing time: 6-3 junior center Theodore Edwards and 6-2 junior forward Tracy McLawhorn.

Other lettermen include Darius Warren, 6-0 senior forward; Louis Joyner, 5-7 senior guard; Clifton Joyner, 5-9 senior guard; and Shawn Edwads, 6-1 senior forward.

They are joined by newcomers Mike Fulton, 5-9 junior guard; Mike Cogdell, 5-9 sophomore guard; Elmer Dixon, 6-0 junior forward; and Anthony Thompson, 6-1 freshman forward. Thompson, however, is currently sidelined with a broken wrist sustained during football season. He is not expected to join the team until after the Christmas break.

Currently Godwin is starting Johnson, James Thompson, Warren, Edwards and McLawhorn. "There's not a lot of difference in the people who didn't start last year," Godwin said.

"Our experience is weak. Only four people really played much last year, and that lack of experience is telling now," Greene Central is off to an 0-2 start, having lost to Beddingfield and South Lenoir.

"If we don't lose our confidence, I think we'll be okay," the coach said. "We have a tough non-conference schedule. So by the end of the season, you can never tell how far you can go."

Because of the lack of height, Godwin is concerned about rebounding. "So far, it's been weak. I hope that it will come around or we're going to be hurting."

The Rams shot around 40 percent in their first two outings, but again, Godwin looks for improvement. "We have good outside shooting, and that could be one of our strong points. And I don't think we're going to have to depend on one or two people to do the scoring for us, we're pretty well balanced."

Defensively, the Rams are improving. "We've spend most of our time on offense and rebounding," Godwin said. "We still have a long way to go, but I think we'll be okay."

As to the ECC race this year, "We're trying to be realistic. Having a winning season is one of our goals. If we could come in fourth that would put us back into the district, and I'd be happy with that."

Godwin sees Farmville Central, North Pitt and SouthWest Edgecombe as the league leaders, and feels Ayden-Grifton is improved also. "Those four are probably the top four right now," he said.

The Rams play host to North Lenoir in a non-conference game on Friday night.

JV Program Aids Lady Rams

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
SNOW HILL — When one has no starters back and only three letterwinners, one would normally look for a rebuilding year.

But at Greene Central, coach Brenda Dail's Lady Rams don't feel they are in that position at all. Their 2-0 start would seem to bear it out.

She gives most of the credit to the fact that Greene Central started a junior varsity program last year, something many schools do not now have.

"We played mostly against 4-A schools, so that helped us a lot," she said.

Because of this, most of the "newcomers" have quite a bit of experience, enough to give the Rams cause for some celebration.

Greene Central concluded the regular season with a 6-6 league and 13-9 overall record last season, and Dail sees no reason why that couldn't be improved on this year.

"I'd have to give the nod to SouthWest Edgecombe (in the Eastern Carolina Conference race). Aycock will be strong too. But I think the conference will be more even than it has been in several years.

"I'd like to think that we could finish third or fourth in the conference. To do better, we'll have to see how fast our sophomores mature," Dail said.

Three letterwinners are back this year, 5-7 sophomore guard Cyndi Hicks, 5-8 sophomore forward and 6-4 junior center Bobbi Jo Beaman.

Currently, Hicks and Bowen are starting along with Saraphenia Cox, a 5-5 senior guard; Antonette Wilkes, a 5-8 sophomore forward, and Cynthia Jones, a 5-9 sophomore center.

Others on the squad include Sharon Wilkes, 5-9 junior center; Allison Battle, 5-4 junior guard; Felicia Streeter, 5-0 junior guard; Cynthia Hooker, 5-3 sophomore guard; Sharon Myatt, 4-5 sophomore guard/forward; Denise Warren, 5-6 freshman forward; Dalen Herring, 5-5 freshman guard; Lisa Radford 5-4 senior guard; and Julia Bottoms, 5-7 junior forward.

"It's not like coming in cold," Dail said of the experience the girls got on the JV team. "I'm pleased with the way they've handled the situation. They were behind against Beddingfield, but they hung in there and won."

Because of this, too, she feels that she has good depth on the team. "I think by midyear, we'll have quite a bit of depth. We will be able to go to our bench with confidence."

Shooting hasn't been as good as hoped for, but Hicks has been consistent. "We're not dependent on one person for our scoring as we have been in the past," Dail said. "Two or three are doing the scoring for us so far this year. That's the way I like it."

Antonette Wilkes, Sharon Wilkes (sisters), Bowen and Hicks have all four done well on the boards, and while Dail said that her girls are not "all that tall, they are physical."

"We have good quickness but sometimes we get overanxious on defense. This is worried me some. But I'd say that our defense has been pretty good so far."

Greene Central returns to action on Friday, traveling to North Lenoir.

NCAA Checking On State Program

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina State's football program is under investigation by the NCAA, but former coach Monte Kiffin says as far as he knows, the probe involves only one possible minor violation.

On Wednesday, N.C. State Chancellor Bruce R. Poulton acknowledged that the National Collegiate Athletic Association was investigating the program and that school officials expect sanctions. He also said that the program "was not meeting the mark academically."

The NCAA would neither confirm nor deny reports of an investigation, saying it was standard policy not to comment on such matters.

"The NCAA contacted me in September regarding a possible minor violation of recruiting practices," Kiffin said. "This had to do with one student-athlete on our football team — and I emphasize one — regarding the number of contacts (coaches had with the athlete). I was frank and honest in my remarks to them then, and I will continue to do so if contacted further by the NCAA."

Poulton released a statement Wednesday saying the NCAA contacted the university on Sept. 22, giving notice that rules violations may have occurred during the 1981-1982 academic year.

The statement said N.C. State had cooperated in the NCAA's preliminary investigation and that the NCAA determined that the allegations appear to have "sufficient substance and reliability" to warrant an official inquiry.

The investigation became public Tuesday night when Poulton made reference to it during a N.C. State alumni dinner in Morganton. A Morganton News Herald reporter was in attendance as an invited guest of the local alumni association.

"We will go before the NCAA in February for violations committed and we'll have sanctions," Poulton said at the dinner.

"I don't believe that our sanctions will compare with the severity of Clemson's," Poulton said. "In fact, I believe that we will impose sanctions upon ourselves, but we will still have sanctions."

Poulton, who said the remarks were made to alumni and not intended for publication, declined Wednesday to give details about the investigation, including identifying the player allegedly involved.

Tommy A. Nance, principal at West Columbus High School near Whiteville, said an NCAA investigator asked questions about the coaches who recruited current Wolfpack freshman Reggie Singletary, a former West Columbus star.

However, Singletary said N.C. State violated no rules in his recruitment.

Singletary's mother, Notre Dame Singletary, and West Columbus supporter Bobby Floyd, of Cerro Gordo, said they were questioned by NCAA investigators about Singletary's recruitment by Clemson and N.C. State.

Mrs. Singletary said her son spent the night prior to signing with the Wolfpack at Floyd's home to avoid Clemson's recruiting efforts.

NCAA regulations do not prohibit a player leaving home before his signing, but do prohibit schools from "hiding" players in an attempt to prevent other recruiters from talking to a prospect.

"I just left home," Singletary said. "It was my idea entirely."

Kiffin and Clemson coach Danny Ford had a heated discussion following the Tigers' victory over the Wolfpack on Oct. 24. Much of the conversation was recorded by a local television station.

On the tape, Ford told Kiffin that the NCAA had "been up here three times." Kiffin denied that he had contacted the NCAA, saying, "I never turned you in. They came up here. I don't know how they got here."

"I don't know if he (Kiffin) did (turn Clemson in) or not," Ford said at a later news conference. "If he did, it's his business, and if we turn him in, that's our business."

tioned by both the NCAA and the Atlantic Coast Conference. Its NCAA punishment included being stripped of 20 football scholarships and being banned from television or bowl appearances for two years.

Poulton hinted that Kiffin's Dec. 1 resignation was related to recruiting violations. Poulton said that he had "considered many, many facts," while deciding to accept Kiffin's resignation, adding "And obviously, I knew that this situation (the NCAA probe) existed."

NFL Players Approve New Playing Contract

WASHINGTON (AP) — National Football League players have overwhelmingly approved a new $1.6-billion collective bargaining agreement with only the initialing of a separate document by management standing in the way of apparent labor peace in professional football for the next five years.

With 26 of 28 teams reporting, union officials reported Wednesday night that the league's 1,500 players had approved the new agreement by a 3-1 margin.

"We are delighted by the ratification," said Ed Garvey, executive director of the National Football League Players Association.

Union officials refused to disclose the exact vote Wednesday or give a team-by-team breakdown.

Among the teams responding to an Associated Press survey, the Minnesota Vikings, San Francisco 49ers, Washington Redskins, New York Giants, Dallas Cowboys, Tampa Bay Buccaneers, Houston Oilers, Atlanta Falcons and Baltimore Colts all voted to approve the new contract. The Detroit Lions and Chicago Bears both voted to reject it. Two other teams, the Philadelphia Eagles and Miami Dolphins had not voted by Wednesday night. Results of other clubs were not immediately available.

The ratification vote comes three weeks after negotiators reached a tentative settlement and the players returned to work ending a 57-day strike that interrupted the NFL's regular season for the first time in history.

Union officials say the ratification vote was delayed to clarify language in the final document and to iron out unresolved issues — problems management says still exist and may yet stall a final settlement.

"We're happy that the players have ratified, but we have to make sure that the agreement the owners ratified (on Nov. 17) is the same agreement that the players ratified," said management's chief negotiator, Jack Donlan.

"As far as we are concerned it is over," Garvey said. Union and league attorneys failed again on Wednesday to agree to the language of a separate "memo of understanding" calling for a withdrawal of unfair labor practice charges pending before the National Labor Relations Board and at the same time prohibit both sides from engaging in similar activities in the future. The owners also are pressing the union to drop an action before the National Labor Relations Board in which they have charged the league with unfair labor practices.

Without the separate agreement the overall contract will not be signed, Donlan insisted late Wednesday.

"They know that legally they cannot stop a collective bargaining agreement once it has been ratified for dismissal of unfair labor practices," Garvey countered.

"The contract will not be implemented until both sides sign it and the stipulation agreement on the NLRB, which is part and parcel with the overall agreement," Donlan said.

The immediate aftershocks of the new contract not going into effect would be the failure of the players to receive $60 million in cash bonuses, the possible cancellation of one weekend of games originally wiped out by the strike and later rescheduled for the weekend of Jan. 2-3, and a return to the 10-team playoff format as opposed to the 16-team tournament now scheduled for the strike-shortened season.

Garvey, who along with the player reps, who voted 19-9 to recommend ratification on Monday, said the union had gone as far as it could in pressing its demands.

"Quite frankly, there was no one on our side who thought we could have a 57-day strike. A 57-day strike in a seasonal industry like this is a tremendous strike in the sense of money lost and the risks for all involved," Garvey said.

As a result of the strike, Garvey said the greatest lesson to be learned by the league was never again to take lightly the union's threat to close down the game.

State Rally...

State stayed close until Myers finally hit a jumper to tie it up, 36-36, and then Bailey put the Pack ahead to stay. Sidney Lowe and Whittenburg both followed with long jumpers, giving State a 42-36 lead with 9:02 left.

Then, after Edwards hit two free throws cutting it back to 42-38, Wright had the chance to cut it to two again, but lost the ball and Myers went in for his score. After that, the Pack played keep away, winning at the foul line.

Edwards finished the game with 19 points for the Pirates, while Wright hit 15. Edwards led all rebounders with ten.

State was led by Myers with 15, while Lowe had 11 and Whittenburg had 10. Myers also added eight rebounds.

East Carolina stayed with State on the boards, each team with 28 rebounds, despite a tremendous height advantage. State started a lineup of 6-11, 6-11, 6-8 across the front, while ECU started 6-7, 6-6, 6-5.

"I was disappointed with our first half play," Valvano said, "but there was an excellent...I didn't say good...I said excellent, team out there against us. They were tremendously active out there on defense," he praised.

The win boosted the Wolfpack to 3-0 on the season, while the Pirates drop to 2-2.

East Carolina is now idle until Friday, December 17, when it faces hosting Southwestern Louisiana in the first round of the Cajun Classic in Lafayette, La.

Iowa Rolls Past Marquette By 87-66

By The Associated Press
The Iowa Hawkeyes don't care if they have to beat you from the inside or from the outside, as long as they beat you.

Seventh-ranked Iowa did the job from both areas Wednesday night, taking an early lead and staying safely in front the rest of the way against No. 16 Marquette. All five Iowa starters scored in double figures in the 87-66 victory, with 6-foot-10 Greg Stokes contributing 19 points and 6-11 Michael Payne getting 12 and 16 rebounds.

That was Iowa's inside game. Outside, Steve Carfino put in 17 points and assisted on 10 other baskets as the Hawkeyes showed the kind of balance Coach Lute Olson is looking for.

"We've had our moments this year when we've played better than any team we've had," noted Olson about his 50 team. "We've never before had two big guys inside with the potential of Stokes and Payne.

"Our two wing players have outstanding overall ability to pass and shoot the ball and when Carfino gets to the level of confidence he should have for his ability, he can be as good as anyone we've had."

Stokes and Payne are a pair of tall sophomores, with the one-inch shorter Stokes manning the middle because he is beefier. Payne, who played center for most of last season and was named Big Ten newcomer of the year, is now a power forward.

"Stokes is playing now with confidence," said Warriors Coach Hank Raymonds. "He gets good position. It's hard to keep him from getting the basketball. That's how they hurt you; if you keep the ball from getting inside, they shoot from outside and make it. If you keep them guarded outside, they take the ball inside and make it.

"Carfino is a heck of a basketball player," he added. "He's the one guy Iowa would really have trouble replacing if he were to get in foul trouble or have to leave the game at a critical point."

"I think the secret (of beating Iowa) is to get ahead of them and then see what happens."

But the Warriors, now 2-1, couldn't get the jump on Iowa. Dwayne Johnson had 20 points for Marquette.

Top-ranked Virginia and No. 3 Georgetown tuned up for their big meeting on Saturday, with the Cavaliers taking Duke 104-91 in an Atlantic Coast Conference opener, and the Hoyas beating Alabama State 99-76.

Missouri, ranked eighth, mauled Jackson State 86-51, ninth-ranked Houston defeated Auburn 77-65, No. 10 Villanova routed Marist 97-69, 12th-ranked St. John's, N.Y., beat Fairleigh Dickinson 87-65, No. 13 Louisville belted Eastern Kentucky 82-53, No. 14 Tennessee had an easy time with Arizona in a 92-73 victory, and 18th-rated North Carolina State beat East Carolina 57-49.

Ralph Sampson poured in 36 points and Rick Carlisle added 24 for Virginia, 5-0, which fell behind by 12 points in the first half. Freshman guard Johnny Dawkins hit 21 points in the first ACC game played with a three-point basket and a 30-second shot clock.

"We obviously got a great game from Sampson," said Coach Terry Holland. "I thought they still packed around him and I'm not sure how much the three-point rule had to do with him having room in there."

Bill Martin scored 30 points as Georgetown, 6-0, went on a 20-6 scoring blitz in the second half after Alabama State, which is 3-1 in its first season of Division I play, bottled up Hoyas center Patrick Ewing with 6-6 Lewis Jackson, who also scored 30 points.

Missouri, 4-0, used Steve Stipanovich's 24 points and the long-range marksmanship of Jon Sundvold to down Jackson State. Sundvold, a guard who scored 16 points, hit three bombs to lead a 15-2 Missouri spurt.

Houston rallied in the second half behind Michael Young, who scored 16 of his game-high 22 points after intermission. Auburn's tenacious zone defense kept things close in the first half.

John Pinone scored 21 points for Villanova, which ended matters early by scoring 25 straight points in the first half. Freshman Harold Pressley added 10 points and 10 rebounds as Villanova upped its record to 2-1.

St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca was a winner for the 300th time in 15 seasons. Kevin Williams led the way with 21 points and David Russell had 20 for the 6-0 Redmen. Michael Payne was FDU's high scorer with 20.

Louisville, 5-1, used 14 points by both Rod McCray and Milt Wagner to roll over Eastern Kentucky. Dan Federmann scored 20 points and Tyrone Beaman added 17 for Tennessee, 3-0. Federman, a 6-10 junior center who averages under five points per game, also had eight rebounds. Arizona's Frank Smith was top scorer with 23.

Freshman Ernie Myers had 15 points and eight rebounds but it was Thurl Bailey's bucket in the second half that put North Carolina State, 3-0, in front to stay.

Emission Regulation Of N. C. Power Plants To Tighten Up

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina is "writing off" part of its population by not imposing tighter standards for power plant emissions, the executive director of the Conservation Council of North Carolina says.

However, the assistant director of the Division of Environmental Management says emission standards expected by January would make some sections of the regulations stricter.

John Runkle of the Conservation Council said Wednesday that particles from coal-fired power plants present a serious danger to the elderly, children and those with breathing problems. He and other environmentalists have opposed proposals to increase the number of particles that may be emitted by power plants.

"These particles are microscopic," he said. "They get into the lungs and can't be coughed out or gotten out of the system. They have been shown to be a contributing cause to cancer. They pose a danger to the elderly, children and those with breathing problems, but the commission seems to be writing off that section of the population.

"We believe that essentially the commission will hold things as they are and come back next year to check it again," Runkle added. "We believe this is too important to put on hold."

The Environmental Management Commission was to release a report on those changes today, but Paul Wilms of the division said late Wednesday the report's release would probably be delayed until the full commission meets in January.

Wilms said the report will create some restrictions even stronger than before the utility companies were granted a variance in 1979. He said some emission levels would become effective immediately, and others would set annual standards.

Wilms said the report would probably contain a provision for the utility companies to return in one year, but that the provision was not a delaying action.

"The resolution would require the companies to return in one year to show the commission why the standards should not be made stronger," Wilms said.

Runkle said the Conservation Council would pass out material at today's meeting of the commission showing that power companies can reduce particle emissions even more.

"We're using the companies' own figures, which may not be valid, but they show that emissions can be lowered," Runkle said. "What we have recommended is that the allowable levels be cut in half."

The utility companies have argued that present standards for particle emissions are too costly.

Runkle said the Conservation Council would also push in the next session of the General Assembly for stronger enforcement of the air emission standards.

Santa Tries Extortion

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A man wearing a Santa Claus costume and claiming his Santa doll was a bomb attempted to extort $110,000 from a bank, police said.

Lt. Gene Young said a man in a Santa Claus outfit entered Union Bank about 5:45 p.m. Wednesday and left a Santa doll about 18 inches high, a Christmas card and candy in the bank.

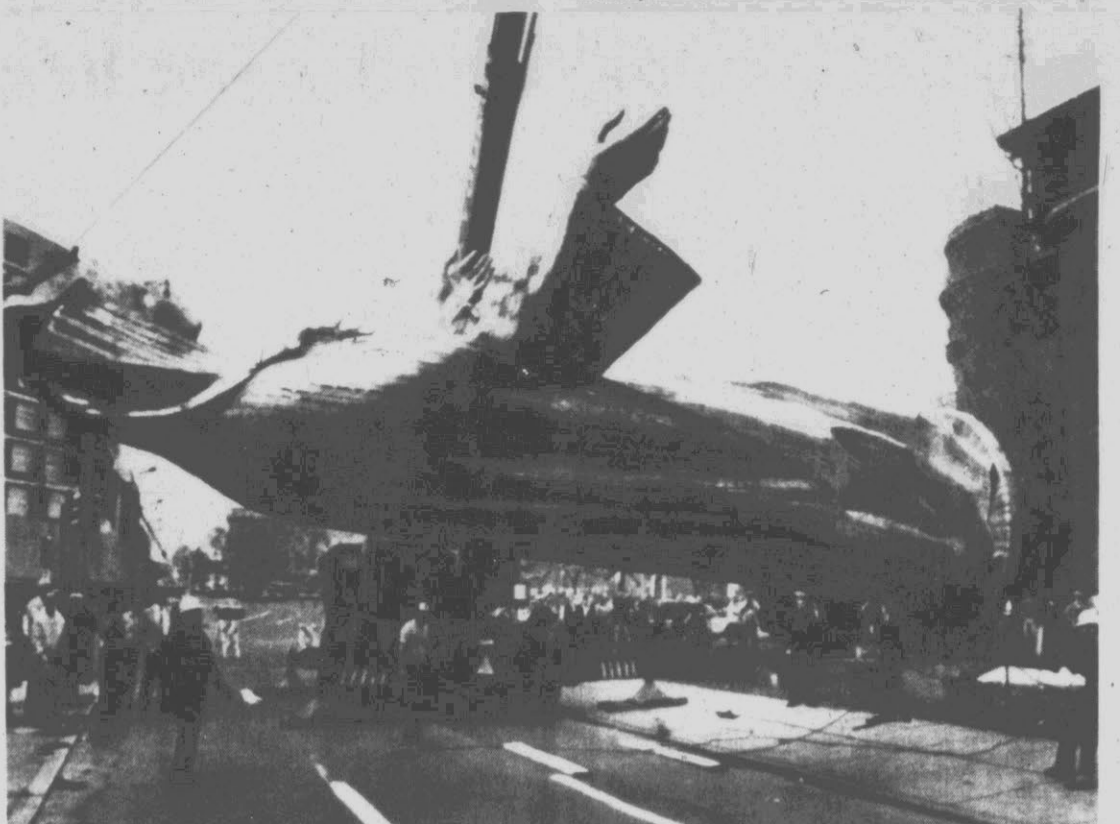

Young said the man left the building, then approached Dean Johnson, an usher at the nearby Trolley Corners Theaters, and asked him to help him jump-start his car.

"We walked to my car and drove to where he said his car was parked," said Johnson 18.

"He then pulled a gun on me and said, 'This is no joke. I've got three bullets for you here if you don't do what I say,'" Johnson said.

Johnson said the man gave him a piece of paper to deliver to the bank manager.

Police were called about 6:08 p.m. and as they approached, the man apparently fled in Johnson's car, which was found abandoned in a parking lot at Trolley Square, a shopping center where both the theater and the bank are located.

Weary Flood-Fighters Watch And Hope For Relief

By RAY FORMANEK
Associated Press Writer

WEST ALTON, Mo. (AP) — The haggard men wore expressions as dull as the drizzling December sky as they huddled around a fire sipping coffee and orange juice and eating ham sandwiches.

"Don't even mention rain," said Don Steinhoff as he warmed his mud-caked hands Wednesday. "If it rains we've had it."

As Steinhoff spoke, floodwaters of the Missouri River were lapping at the top of a three-foot-high wall of sandbags which lay on the saturated levee — the only thing protecting this farming community about 20 miles northwest of St. Louis.

Flooding in Missouri already has forced an estimated 25,000 people to flee their homes since late last week. But West Alton has special problems — it is located on a peninsula between the Missouri and Mississippi rivers, just below the confluence of the Mississippi and the Illinois rivers.

Residents have stacked nearly three miles of sand-filled plastic and burlap bags in four-high layers on the Missouri levee hoping to stay the flooding.

"All we can do now is watch the bags and plug the leaks," Steinhoff said.

"The river's dropped almost 2 inches since last night, but the Mississippi's backing up and she's staying pretty steady," he said.

For Steinhoff and the two dozen other men manning the line, it was another long day of around-the-clock work as they scrambled to save their homes.

"Some of these guys have worked 34 hours straight," said Steinhoff as he motioned to the men lined up at the Red Cross van taking a break for lunch. "We're tired but we're holding up."

Frantic sandbagging is also standard procedure along the Mississippi these days.

South of St. Louis, county officials issued an emergency call earlier this week for volunteers to construct floodwalls.

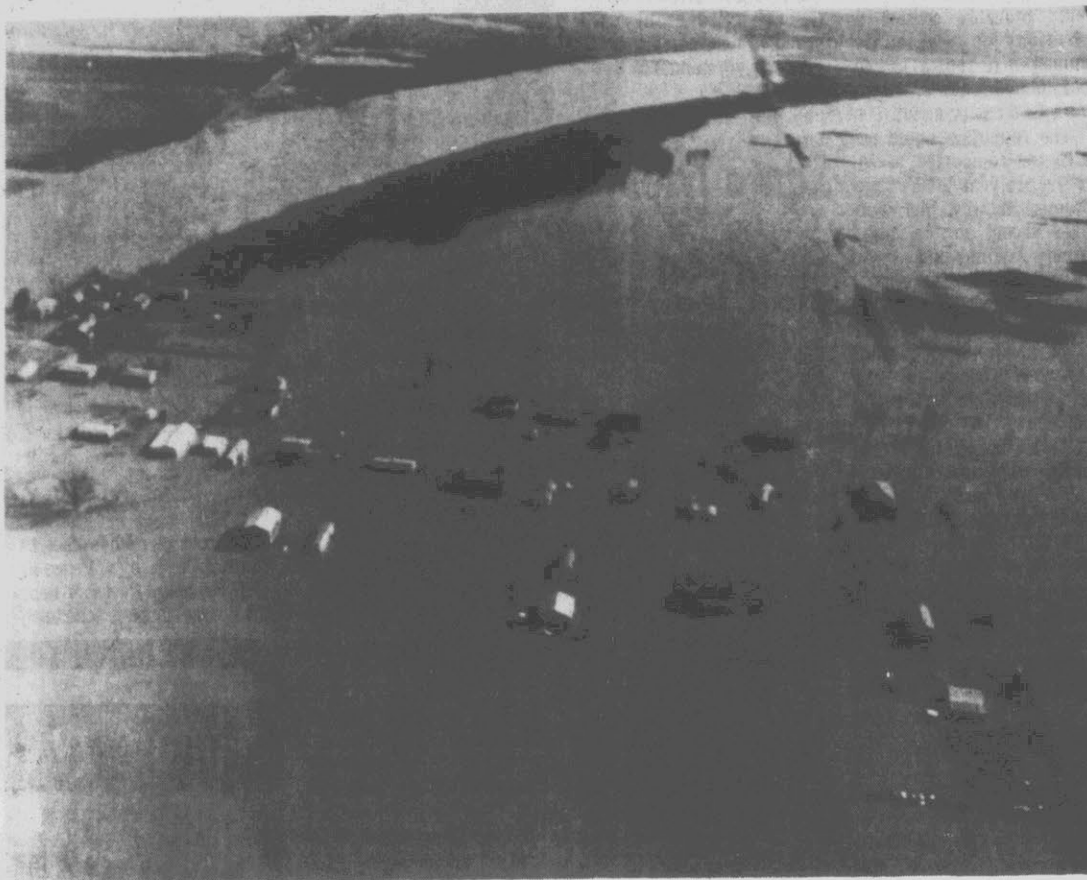

The Missouri National Guard has been helping local officials to the south, in Herculaneum, reinforce an earth dam needed to protect a trailer park.

Even further south, in Ste. Genevieve, levees protecting the old section of town were holding, although about 300 homes on the outskirts are partially underwater and have been evacuated.

Levees also were holding on Kaskaskia Island, a farming community in the river near Ste. Genevieve that was devastated by a flood in 1973.

"My kids asked me yesterday if Santa Claus is coming by boat," joked Jim Grunwaldt, one of the volunteer sandbaggers.

"If we hold," responded Steinhoff, "it'll be Santa Claus coming early."

FLOODED FROM BOTH SIDES — The farming community of Machens, just north of St. Louis, was inundated by floodwaters from the Missouri River to the south and the Mississippi River to the north. The town sits on a floodplain between the two rivers. (AP Laserphoto)

Safety Tips For Buying Toys

A spokesman for the Pitt County Medical Society said today that shoppers buying toys for children for Christmas should buy with safety in mind. Liz Wilkerson, the medical society's administrative secretary, said children "don't often recognize the hazards in some toys."

She suggested that toys for babies should be too large to fit into the mouth and should be lightweight and non-breakable. She also said the eyes of dolls and stuffed animals should be attached tightly enough so they can't be pulled out and swallowed.

According to Mrs. Wilkerson, toy buyers should also be sure play things don't have rough or sharp edges. She also suggested that electrical toys and equipment for school age children should carry the Underwriters Laboratories label of approval, and said chemistry sets should be given only to children mature enough to understand how they are to be used.

Second Man Is Charged

Greenville police Wednesday arrested Rudy Gardner Pearce, 25, of 1225 S. Washington St. on charges of possession of stolen property in connection with the alleged theft of material and tools from White's Insulation Service on Alley Street.

Chief Glenn Cannon said Pearce was charged after officers found about $1,500 worth of insulation and tools in a garage at 504 E. 10th St. Monday night. A second man was charged earlier in connection with the incident.

House Sets Stage For A Major Debate Over Immigration Laws

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The stage is set in the lame-duck House for an expected long and emotional debate on the first thorough overhaul of the nation's immigration law in 30 years.

The massive measure faces a difficult time, with opponents promising to introduce scores of time-consuming amendments.

The House Rules Committee set the ground rules Wednesday for the debate. It placed practically no restrictions upon House floor consideration of the legislation, which is supported by the Reagan administration.

Attorney General William French Smith, who has called the measure his top legislative priority, has said the bill would enable the United States to regain control of its borders.

By voice vote, the rules committee gave opponents leeway to introduce an unlimited number of amendments as long as the proposals were submitted in writing in advance.

Rep. Romano Mazzoli, R-Ky., the bill's chief sponsor, said he hopes the House will begin to consider the measure Friday and complete action by next Tuesday.

The Senate has already passed a similar bill and, if the House acts in time, a conference of House and Senate members will be called to iron out the differences.

Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., chairman of the rules committee, told Mazzoli "I think you're going to have real trouble."

The rules committee itself spent two days hearing all the members of Congress who wanted to testify on parliamentary procedure governing the bill. Many said the matter was too important and too complex to be considered in haste in a lame-duck session.

By winning the right to nearly unlimited debate, opponents could kill the bill for this year if the House leadership decides that other matters are more pressing and interrupts action on the immigration proposal.

The bill would establish fines and jail terms for employers who hire illegal immigrants and would also grant amnesty to millions of illegal aliens who have been living in this country for several years.

The Senate's lopsided 80-19 approval of a similar measure last August was a surprise.

But since then controversy has intensified as various interest groups have mustered forces against the bill.

Rep. Edward R. Roybal, D-Calif., testified Wednesday that members of the Hispanic caucus in the House intend to offer 75 amendments to the legislation.

Hispanic groups are lobbying to kill the measure because they say it would discriminate against job applicants who appear to be foreign-born. They argue employers will refuse to hire Hispanics for fear they might have entered the country illegally.

Opponents of amnesty are also vowing to press for elimination of that feature. Many have said that, with a 10.8 percent unemployment rate, now is not the time to make it easier for illegal aliens to compete for jobs.

Rep. James H. Scheuer, D-N.Y., said Congress should postpone granting amnesty until the government can prove it can prevent wholesale illegal immigration.

"It's a time bomb," he said. "We're talking about a billion people out there, virtually all of whom would give their right arm" to come to the United States.

Economic Stagnation Continues To Plague Poland

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Despite official reports of improved industrial production, Poland's economy has shown few signs of recovery one year after the imposition of martial law.

Economic stagnation, except for increased coal production, is in fact seen by some Western observers as a major factor in the political decision to lift or suspend martial law, possibly by the end of this month.

"Poland's economy is very much Western-oriented," a Polish journalist who specializes in economic matters said. "It needs new Western credits and spare parts. That is one reason for lifting martial law."

Communist Party leaders and government officials have said repeatedly that Western economic credit sanctions imposed after the crackdown began Dec. 13, 1981, will be overcome through greater assistance from the Soviet Union.

Their claim that Poland will solve its economic crisis, with or without Western help, is based on new projections that the country will suffer only a 1 percent to 2 percent decline in production this year. A 14 percent drop had been predicted last December.

"But the situation really wasn't much better this year than last," one Western economic observer said. "The industries still aren't producing enough consumer goods, supplies in the stores are shrinking, there is too much money in circulation and the post-December 1981 reforms haven't begun to work."

Officials battling to institute self-financing and self-management, a means of decentralizing the economy, note that martial law has already had positive results in production figures for most industries.

Coal mining, the lifeblood of the economy and a major generator of the hard currency income needed to help other industries, has climbed from a disastrous 163 million tons in 1981 to an estimated 190 million tons this year.

Both Polish and Western analysts say this increase, attributed to the reinstatement of the Saturday workday, has raised sagging figures in other industries and allowed Poland to project a minimum decline in overall production this year.

Western diplomats discount the increase, noting that despite the rise in coal production, improvement per man-hour has lagged.

"There's been no real change over last year," one Western diplomat commented. "This is an astounding fact when you take such a key industry as coal production and listen to the authorities blame strikes last year for the 1981 figures."

"In fact, when you look at man-hours, production could probably be lower," the diplomat said. "Surely, there is no sector in the economy that shows a real improvement ... in production per man-hour."

The question of production efficiency is central to the debate over martial law's impact on the economy.

State officials say that "militarization," or enforcing strict work discipline in mines, ports and many factories was responsible for "peaceful work" and improved production.

Some Western diplomats, however, argued that martial law had a negative effect on the economy because, as one said, "It clearly can bring no improvement, or solutions to any of the problems that were the root of last year's unrest."

Although there have been improvements in food availability, prices are now 300 percent to 400 percent higher than a year ago, and many of the conditions that sparked labor unrest and led to the creation of Solidarity still exist.

Carters Tour In Caribbean

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, making a stopover on their Caribbean cruise, joined about a dozen other tourists to tour the city in a small bus.

The former president was among 1,147 passengers who had boarded the cruise ship "Song of America" in Miami for the ship's maiden voyage in the Caribbean. After making a stop in Nassau, in the Bahamas, the ship stopped in San Juan on Wednesday and left later in the day for St. Thomas in the U.S. Virgin Islands.

One passenger, Jay Fichera of San Francisco, called Carter "a first class gentleman. I took his picture this morning and shook his hand."

Carter, 58, dressed in a 'Guayabera,' a Latin American shirt, and answered questions on the pier. He repeated that he has no intention of seeking a second term, saying "I've had my chance."

Surgery Failed Marty Robbins

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer Marty Robbins, a two-time Grammy winner whose ballads about gun-fighters helped shape the western style of country music in a 30-year career, died six days after surgery for a massive heart attack.

St. Thomas Hospital spokesman Lamar Jackson said the 57-year-old entertainer died of cardiac arrest late Wednesday as his wife, Marizona, and son and daughter waited in a nearby room.

Robbins, who had a triple-bypass operation in 1970 and a heart attack last year, underwent an 8½-hour quadruple-bypass operation a week ago after being hospitalized with chest pains.

The singer, who won the first of his two Grammy awards in 1960 for "El Paso," had been listed in extremely critical condition with a heart pump and respirator aiding his circulation and breathing.

Dr. Larry Thomas, a cardiac surgeon at St. Thomas, had said it was "a miracle" that Robbins survived last week's operation because he was having a major heart attack in the middle of it.

Robbins, the 1982 inductee into the Country Music Association Hall of Fame, was a guitarist, pianist and songwriter. He was a frequent performer on the Grand Ole Opry since 1953.

Many of Robbins' songs and albums were about gun-fighters. Cowboy ballads like "El Paso," his biggest hit, influenced the western style of country music.

In an interview last year, Robbins said of his long career, "I've done what I wanted to do. I'm not a real good musician, but I can write (a song) pretty well. I experiment once in a while to see what I can do. I find out the best I can do is stay with ballads."

Chuck Morgan, host of the all-night radio show "Music Country Network," said today that Robbins' death was "like losing a father or brother."

Morgan said that when Robbins last appeared on the show, Nov. 1, "he was so excited about the things that were happening."

"He was just coming off 'Some Memories Just Won't Die.' 'Tie Your Dreams to Mine' was working real well. He was all excited about 'Honky Tonk Man.' He was just inducted into the Hall of Fame," Morgan said.

"There were so many good things happening — that's just what makes it hard to believe now that he's not going to be around any more," Morgan said.

Robbins was born in Glendale, Ariz., and got involved in music in the early 1950s.

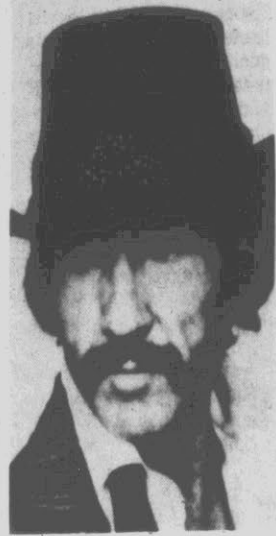

Besides "El Paso," his other hits included "White Sport Coat," "Devil Woman," "Don't Worry," "El Paso City," and "My Woman, My Woman, My Wife," for which he received his second Grammy in 1970.

Robbins was a devoted stock car fan and began racing the cars part-time in 1965.

As an Opry performer, Robbins often sang last on the show and was the last person to perform at the Opry's final show at the downtown Ryman except for Ricky Skaggs," the 1982 Country Music Association male vocalist of the year.

After Robbins' hospitalization, fans nationwide sent thousands of cards and letters to him. President Reagan sent a telegram Wednesday.

Auditorium in 1974. The show is now performed at a new Grand Ole Opry house northeast of downtown Nashville.

In a recent television interview, Robbins said, "There's no one doing country music any more Another 1.5 Million Viewers Have Fled The Network Shows

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Another November has come and gone, and an additional 1.5 million viewers have fled the networks.

Where have they gone? "The assumption, until we know better, is that they're going to non-network sources," said Bill Behanna, director of press relations for the A.C. Nielsen Co. "That would mean pay cable, basic cable, independent stations, public stations and cassette recorders."

In November, Nielsen figures showed that the same percentage of TV households — 63.1 percent — watched an average minute of television during the prime evening hours as did last year. But only 81 percent of those homes, or 42.6 million, were watching ABC, CBS and NBC, compared to 85 percent, or 43.6 million, of the homes in November 1981. Nielsen computes 1.5 prime-time viewers per household.

November is a significant measuring month. It is one of the so-called sweeps periods, when the networks load up on glitter programs to attract viewers because ratings in November establish advertising rates at the local stations for the next three months.

"I don't know where they went, either," said Gerald Jaffe, NBC's vice president for special projects. "But when we find out, we won't find a smoking gun. We're losing it in dribs and drabs." "Clearly cable is drawing audiences," said Jay Campbell, president of Cable Ad Ventures, a cable consulting company. "With a box full of channels, the viewer is flipping around. Cable is offering unique programs that give viewers alternatives."

In the past year, new cable services have focused on health, women, news and entertainment. That's in addition to movie channels, all-sports services and the distant signals of stations like WTBS in Atlanta. Individually, they may not account for a lot of viewers, but collectively they explain some of the network erosion.

Public broadcasting also seems to have profited from network losses and, ironically, from cable TV's growing popularity. In many areas, the clarity of the public TV station's signal has improved significantly by a cable hook-up.

PBS' prime-time programs are attracting 50 percent more viewers this fall than last year, according to ratings measured in five major markets by Nielsen.

The biggest beneficiary, however, appears to be independent stations, those not affiliated with a network. These independents survive on an assortment of sports, movies and successful network reruns, like

"M-A-S-H," "The Odd Couple" and "The Mary Tyler Moore Show."

"Maybe the success of the independents prove that viewers want quality programs," said Grant Tinker, president of NBC. "Viewers are saying the shows you did five or eight years ago were better."

Viewers, tiring of the cookie-cutter program philosophy, have been saying that all season long.

The ratings of CBS and ABC are off, while third-place NBC, helped by the World Series, is improved slightly. Only two new shows are in the top 35 — "Newhart," which benefits from following "M-A-S-H," and "Gloria," which has "Archie Bunker's Place" as a lead-in.

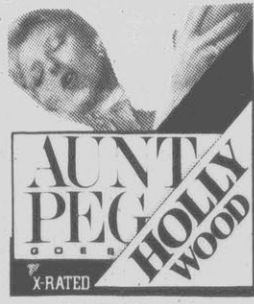

November 1982 showed a 4 percent decline in TV-viewing households, to 81 percent. Some industry analysts predict a decline to 59 percent by 1990.

The networks feel the decline will be less steep; CBS predicts a drop to 70 percent. "We recognize that the long-term decline is there; we're just arguing about its severity," NBC's Jaffe said.

HBO, the most popular pay service with penetration in 11.5 million homes, hasn't attracted more viewers recently, either.

Many Wonder If L. Ron Hubbard Is Alive Or Dead

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer
CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) — Sailor, wordsmith, philosopher, seer — L. Ron Hubbard has been all of these. But is the man who 28 years ago created the now embattled religion called Scientology still alive? No, contends his son.

"I think he's dead, or become as mentally incompetent as a cigar-store wooden Indian or a bowl of Jell-O," said Ronald E. DeWolf, 48, an apartment manager in Carson City, Nev. "I've known for years that the person writing me and other members of my family, and sending presents, was not L. Ron Hubbard."

DeWolf, who changed his name from L. Ron Hubbard Jr. when he fled his father's church in 1959, is petitioning a Superior Court in Riverside, Calif., asking to be appointed trustee of Scientology's far-flung holdings. DeWolf contends church officials are saying Hubbard is alive to maintain control of his assets.

"The only way he can contest all of this is to show up physically in court," DeWolf said of his father, who would be 71 this year. "But I expect he may have trouble doing that because I don't think he is alive." A probate court hearing on his petition is scheduled for Dec. 30.

Frizzell Clegg, a spokesman at Scientology headquarters in Los Angeles, labeled DeWolf's petition "crazy" and "a joke." But when asked how Scientologists knew Hubbard was alive, Clegg said: "As far as the church is concerned, he's alive. I've not seen him personally. His writings are pretty much what I'm going on."

But where is L. Ron Hubbard? His wife, Mary Sue Hubbard, admits she has not seen him since 1979 but, according to her lawyer, "hears from him on a regular basis and is comfortably supported by her husband on a monthly basis." Mrs. Hubbard has filed notice to try to stop her stepson's petition.

One of the last sightings of Hubbard by any outsider was apparently in 1977, on a California ranch owned by the church. Anne Rosenblum, a former official in the St. Louis branch of the church who has since abandoned Scientology, said that when she encountered Hubbard at a ranch near La Quinta, he had grown obese and had graying, shoulder-length hair.

Hubbard's disappearance is the most recent puzzle in the life of the Tilden, Neb., native who in 1954 founded a faith that has spread to 55 countries and claims 2.5 million adherents.

Current Scientology literature boasts that Hubbard was, "at various times, top sergeant in the Marines, radio crooner, newspaper reporter, gold miner in the West Indies and a movie director-explorer, having led a motion picture expedition into the South Seas aboard an ancient windjammer."

DeWolf laughed when the passage was read to him. "I can say that 99 percent of what my father wrote about his past life was false," he said. "He and I used to joke that we would write a new bio each week."

Michael Flynn, a Boston lawyer involved in numerous anti-Scientologist lawsuits, said, "Hubbard's bios also used to falsely claim he was a medical doctor, a doctor of nuclear physics, a doctor of divinity and a civil engineer. In fact, he flunked out of schools left and right and was a failure until he wrote the book 'Dianetics,' on which Scientology is based."

Hubbard wrote "Dianetics: The Modern Science of Mental Health" in 1950. Flynn said letters indicate that by 1952, Hubbard was considering "the religion angle" as a way to protect his Dianetics Foundation from lawsuits and the Internal Revenue Service.

In one letter to Helen O'Brien, a founder of the foundation, Hubbard wrote, "I await your decision on the religion angle," which he said was being considered to "knock psychotherapy into history" and "make enough money to ... keep HAS (the Hubbard Association of Scientology) solvent."

Scientology offers counseling, called "auditing," that claims to free believers from harmful mental imprints, called "engrams." Anyone delivered of such illogical thoughts, which can extend into past lives, is called a "clear."

By November 1959, when DeWolf quit, Scientology was under investigation in the United States, France, Britain and Australia, chiefly for claiming that Scientology could heal ailments from cold sores to cancer, Flynn said. Later editions of "Dianetics" have backed away from such claims, the lawyer added.

In 1973, a criminal court in France sentenced Hubbard in absentia to four years in prison for fraudulent business practices.

Three years ago, 11 church leaders, including Mrs. Hubbard, were convicted in California on charges ranging from obstructing justice to conspiracy to theft in a plot to infiltrate federal agencies and steal documents.

Today, Flynn alone is handling 27 suits involving Scientology. He said they break down into two basic types: those filed by defectors who claim the church kidnapped them, left them with lasting emotional or mental damage, failed to meet its promises or kept their money when they left, and countersuits filed by outside critics who have themselves been sued by the church for published stories and other investigatory activity.

For seven years, from 1968 to 1975, Hubbard lived chiefly aboard a huge yacht, the Apollo, drifting around the Mediterranean with a crew made up of members of the church's elite corps, "Sea Org." Flynn said ex-members would testify in court about church activities during that time.

In 1975, the church executed a scheme it dubbed "Operation Goldmine," covertly buying an aging Clearwater, Fla., hotel and other downtown property to give Scientology a land base for Sea Org. According to church papers seized in a 1977 FBI raid, the church represented itself in Clearwater as the United Churches of Florida. In one of the documents, a church official suggests that the church could continue to lie low, continuing to use the UCF front, or could surface at some later date as the Church of Scientology.

Hubbard's last known residences, according to court documents filed by DeWolf, were in nearby Dunedin, Fla., and in California, on ranches near La Quinta and Hemet and at the resort of Gilman Hot Springs. At La Quinta, say defectors from the church, Hubbard twice required hospital care and asked to be buried under the date palms.

"Ron got off direct communication lines in '66," said church spokesman Hugh Wilhere in Clearwater, meaning Hubbard abandoned direct command. "But I see the results of his ideas at work around me every day."

Declare Hoffa 'Legally Dead'

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Former Teamsters President James R. Hoffa, who disappeared more than seven years ago, can be presumed legally dead, a judge has ruled.

Oakland County Probate Judge Norman Barnard said Wednesday that Hoffa's "presumptive date of death" was July 30, 1982, seven years to the day after he disappeared from the parking lot of a suburban Detroit restaurant. Hoffa's body was never found.

Under state law, in another three years, he will be "conclusively presumed dead" for the purposes of settling his estate.

At the time of his disappearance, Hoffa, then 62, was attempting to regain the presidency of the nation's largest labor union after his release from prison. FBI agents have said in court papers they believe he was the victim of an execution by organized crime.

Hoffa, convicted of jury tampering and mail fraud in 1964, went to federal prison in Lewisburg, Pa., in March 1967. He was sentenced to 13 years but pardoned by President Richard Nixon in December 1971.

Barnard's ruling was in response to a petition filed by Hoffa's son, James P. Hoffa, 41, shortly after the seventh anniversary of the labor leader's death. Barnard named the younger Hoffa and his sister, Barbara Ann Crancer, heirs to their father's estimated $1 million estate and named the younger Hoffa personal representative of his father's estate.

The elder Hoffa's wife, Josephine, died in 1980. No will from Hoffa has been found.

After the younger Hoffa petitioned the court for a presumption of death, a notice was published once a month for four months to notify anyone who may have claims to the estate. None has been made.

The FBI continues to investigate Hoffa's disappearance, FBI spokesman John Anthony said Wednesday.

Let It Snow, Let It Snow, Let It Snow

No matter what your grandfather used to say about past super-snowfalls, the fact is that average annual snowfalls in the U.S. have remained about the same since the mid-1800s. And yet the good old days had their record blizzards. In January, 1911, Tamarack, California, got 390 inches of snow in one month, and in April of 1921, Silver Lake, Colorado, picked up 76 inches of the white stuff in only 24 hours. But you don't have to remember that far back to recall some record snowfalls. In 1970-71, the Rainier Paradise Ranger Station in Washington measured 1,122 inches for the season — that's almost 94 feet of snow. How would you like to have shoveled out the ranger's driveway?

The 1960s was probably the Golden Age of bridge. The Italian Blue Team was in its prime, and rising to the fore was a crop of young American experts that would soon leave its mark on world bridge. A recently published booklet, The Bridge World: Best of the Early Sixties (available from Bridge World Magazine, 39 West 94th St., New York, N.Y. 10025, $4 post free) has collected some of the outstanding material of this period.

The late Albert Morehead ranked high on our list of favorite bridge journalists. He was a lexicographer as well, so when he used a particular word you knew it wasn't by accident, but was meant to convey a subtle point. He was also a collector of oddities, and some of this material appears in the booklet. This deal because, in spite of its apparent simplicity, had experts arguing about it for months. According to Morehead, it was "a problem... with no supportable answer."

South's 27 HCP and balanced distribution are a powerful argument for a three no trump opening bid, but the club suit is unstoppped. But if South doesn't open three no trump, what other alternative is there?

When this deal cropped up in a duplicate game, nine of 14 pairs ended in three no trump down one. The other five managed to languish in a part score for an excellent result. With the clubs stacked against him, South couldn't make three no trump—or, indeed, any other game contract against best defense. A reasonable alternative contract is four hearts, but if the defenders lead trumps at every opportunity, that too must fail.

Those who ended in three no trump argued vehemently that the opponents would be able to cash five tricks only once in a hundred hands. The conservative players argued that it pays to be careful. The argument has been raging for more than 20 years, and there are no signs that it will ever stop. What is your opinion?

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. Quality Calves By The Score

By DONNA LEMONS
The Weatherford Democrat
Distributed by UPI

WEATHERFORD, Texas (UPI) — The Spring Creek Embryo Farm in southern Parker County is pioneering new techniques in livestock genetics that could mean prize hybrid cows will produce as many as 20 calves a year instead of only one.

It's done by implanting their fertilized embryos in foster cows, either from the same herd or provided by the farm.

Dr. Brad Stroud, founder of the farm, said embryo transfer allows a cattleman to increase his breeding stock much faster than ordinarily.

Under normal conditions, an outstanding breeding cow produces only one calf a year. Through embryo transfer and the use of hormones, the superior donor cow may produce 10 to 20 calves a year without actually giving birth to any.

The embryos are transferred from her to a foster cow seven days after breeding, and the recipient cow carries the embryo to birth, nine months later. About 50 to 70 percent of the transfers result in live births.

Stroud said timing is critical. One of the most difficult and expensive aspects of embryo program is getting the foster cows into reproductive synchronization with the donor cow. This is done with the help of hormone injections.

The embryos may also be frozen on the day of collection and thawed at a later date — up to 20 years later — for transfer. They are frozen and stored in liquid nitrogen at a temperature of minus 196 degrees Centigrade. Embryos may even be split before transfer to produce identical twins.

Young, large-framed cows which are heavy milkers and have gentle dispositions are generally good foster cows, Stroud said.

The procedure is harmless to the cattle if professionally-trained personnel are doing the work.

Most donor cows will average 5 to 10 embryos per collection. The record at Spring Creek is 49 transferable embryos out of one flushing. The donor cow was a Chianina of Black Champ Farms in Waxahachie.

Stroud says embryo transfer currently is too expensive for the commercial cattleman, but is a real boon to the breeder. One day it may be feasible for commercial beef production.

Gallantry Cost A Lover $300

LAWTON, Okla. (AP) — A bit of gallantry on lover's line has cost Marty Wayne Palmer $300. But that's better than a jail sentence he could have drawn for giving his girlfriend time to put her clothes back on.

Palmer was convicted of trying to elude police in July 1980 after an officer shined a light on his car, which was parked on a country road. The driver was clad in his undershirt and his female companion was unclothed, authorities said.

During his trial, Palmer told the court he sped away to give his girlfriend a chance to dress. The trial judge wanted to send him to jail for four months and fine him $500.

But an appeals court ruled Tuesday that while Palmer broke the law, the punishment was too severe and reduced the sentence.

Rapid Growth Is Giving Seoul A Different Look

By EDWIN Q. WHITE
Associated Press Writer
SEOUL, South Korea (AP)
— When the 1950-53 Korean war broke out there were two bridges over the Han River in Seoul, one for vehicles and pedestrians and the other for trains. The first was destroyed quickly, and the second damaged and put out of operation.

Today there are 17 bridges spanning the broad river in the South Korean capital, four of them for rail services. Four more are under construction, and another four on the drawing boards. The bridges over the River Han provide a graphic illustration of the growth of a city that throughout its history has been subjected to invasions and war. It was devastated during the Korean conflict, changing hands three times during the course of the bitter fighting. Located only 25 miles from the demilitarized zone that separates South Korea from the hostile north, Seoul continues its headlong growth, now spurred in part in its development by selection of the city as the site for the 1986 Asian games and the 1988 Olympics. A recent United Nations' demographic report listed Seoul as the world's fourth most populous city, behind only Shanghai, Mexico City and Tokyo in size. That report put the population of Seoul at 8,366,756. City officials said their latest official count came to 8,676,037, but that tally was made in October 1981, and no estimate was available of the current total. Five years ago Seoul's population was 7.2 million, and the projection for five years from now is 9.5 million. As part of the effort to slow the city's growth, the cabinet of president Chun Doo-hwan recently adopted a draft law that divides the capital zone into five areas for carrying out a policy of decentralization. In Seoul, established as the nation's capital a century before Columbus discovered America, construction has gone on at a dizzying pace, despite a lingering recession. Old buildings are tumbled to make way for new, multistoried structures. Miles of subway construction throughout the city have turned many streets into corridors of noise and a maze of traffic tieups. Traffic patterns are complicated. Motorists are not noted for their lane discipline, nor pedestrians for their observance of walk regulations. The search for parking space is often an endless quest. Services of a driver are a necessary way of life, not a luxury. The upheaval of the subway work and other construction adds a chaotic dimension to seemingly simple movement. Seoul's first subway was opened in August 1974. There now are 14.7 miles of subway lines in operation with 56.7 miles more under construction. The target date for completion is the end of 1984. At present, an estimated 700,000 people use the subways daily.

Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Seven years after he took control of South Boston High School during a bitter busing struggle, U.S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. is preparing to withdraw from Boston's historic desegregation case.

"It is the beginning of the end," says Robert A. Dentler, a former Boston University education dean and Garrity's aide as court-appointed expert on racial desegregation. "That's a relief."

Boston school officials agree. "I'd like to see him out by the end of the year," says Jean Sullivan McKeigue, president of Boston's five-member elected School Committee.

"We can move faster without the judge," says Robert R. Spillane, the city's fourth school superintendent since Garrity became involved in running the system.

Garrity, satisfied that the system has been desegregated and busing is working, is planning to transfer much of his court's responsibilities for monitoring desegregation to the Massachusetts Board of Education, according to Dentler.

The board says its new role in overseeing the city's schools will be only temporary, and the city eventually will take over.

"The state board has no desire to supervise permanently the operation of the Boston public schools, nor to impose permanently an added layer of bureaucracy," Robert H. Blumenthal and Robert Bohn, attorneys representing the state, wrote in a brief submitted to Garrity.

The judge virtually has ruled the Boston system since June 21, 1974, when, in a case brought by a group of black parents, he said the Boston School Committee "knowingly carried out a systematic program of segregation ... and intentionally brought about and maintained a dual school system."

His order initiated the busing of students to balance school population and sparked violent opposition, especially in predominantly white South Boston.

Garrity placed South Boston High School in federal receivership Dec. 9, 1975, and did not lift that order until August 1978.

The judge routinely turns down requests for interviews, but on Nov. 21, in his first public speech on the subject in three years, Garrity said he had started drafting an order to turn over his powers as monitor. That order has not yet been released.

Despite the hope of Boston officials that he will withdraw completely, Garrity has reserved a role for himself.

"I hope to be with you, more or less working behind the scenes," he told the Citywide Parents Council, a multiracial group he founded in 1974 to monitor desegregation.

"There's not a way out of the court remaining the arbiter in the case," said Dentler in explaining that Garrity will not withdraw completely. "Unresolvable disputes will have to come back to the court. You can't delegate judicial authority."

Dentler said the Board of Education's willingness to assume monitoring ended two years of Garrity's looking "quite assiduously ... to begin withdrawal of the court from the case."

The turnover comes as "some of the basic objectives of court intervention have been fulfilled," he said.

"Staff and students have been systemically desegregated ... there is no dual system in which blacks could go to only a few schools."

In fact, the school system has seen a reversal of black and white roles over eight years.

White student enrollment already was declining in 1973 when 53,528 whites attended public schools. There were 31,807 blacks and 12,013 other members of minority groups, including Orientals and Hispanics.

By November 1982, the total school population, ravaged by a declining urban population, a lower birth rate and what Garrity's critics have called "white flight," was down to 58,742.

Whites no longer were in the majority. In the system were 17,707 whites, 28,167 blacks, 8,904 Hispanics, 3,711 Orientals and 253 American Indians.

"One of the great ironies of the years of desegregation is that there has been a significant resegregation of public schools," says Spillane.

However, Dentler claims that even if Garrity had not intervened, declining birthrates and white migration from Boston would have resulted in a minority white student population in 1982.

"I am not saying that a heavily minority school system cannot produce excellent education for all its students," says Spillane.

The view of the black parents also has shifted since the days when the use of busing to balance the school system was considered a victory.

By March 1982, a decade after their suit was filed, 80 percent of the 626 black parents questioned in a Boston Globe survey said they preferred open enrollment — usually expressed as "freedom of choice" — instead of court ordered student assignments and busing.

The shift has created a split between parents and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, whose general counsel, Thomas I. Atkins, was president of the Boston School Committee to Garrity, the black parents said that the experiences of blacks in Boston schools over 200 years "inspire fear" over what will happen when the court withdraws.

"The good schools that we were trying to get our kids into aren't good anymore," says Barbara Gray, chairman of the black parents group.

U.S.-Based Clinic Brings New Hope

SANTAREM, Brazil (AP) — Out of the dreams of an American Catholic missionary sprang "Esperanca," the Portuguese word meaning "hope" and the name of the U.S.-based health service that treats thousands of ailing villagers along the isolated shores of the Amazon River.

Started in 1969 by the Rev. Luke Tupper, a Franciscan father, Esperanca has grown into a full-fledged clinic that provides everything from nutritional advice to surgery in the sleepy little river town of Santarem, which lies 1,652 miles northwest of the inland capital of Brasilia.

"He started by vaccinating the people, mostly a mixture of Indians and whites," said DeAnne Messias, a 35-year-old native of Bloomington, Ill. "Now we have trained villagers to take care of their own."

Tupper died in 1978, but a group of mostly young people have carried on his work in the heart of the Amazon. The non-profit organization maintains fund-raising headquarters in Phoenix, Ariz.

"There are hundreds of villages that we visit, and each has between 50 and 200 families," Ms. Messias said. "These are simple people, subsistence farmers and fishermen."

These are people who are dying from malnutrition, parasitic diseases, malaria and tuberculosis, she added.

Ms. Messias, coordinator of community health, says Esperanca has trained 14 rural health aides, people who work in their own villages after having undergone a six-month training program to handle examinations and first aid.

Another 20 to 50 villagers are called health promoters, and they offer very basic care in the outlying areas, he said.

Nicaragua Avers It Can Live With Its Troubles

By ELOY O. AGUILAR
Associated Press Writer
MANAGUA, Nicaragua
(AP) — Harassed politically and militarily, the leftist government of Nicaragua says it can live under those "war conditions" and survive the isolation it claims the United States is encouraging.

"We have lived under those conditions for three years," junta member Sergio Ramirez Mercado said in an interview with The Associated Press. "It is not a desirable situation, but we had no alternative."

The government, led by the Sandinista National Liberation Front that spearheaded the revolution that overthrew the authoritarian Anastasio Somoza, has been under attack by dissident groups within Nicaragua and abroad ever since taking over in July 1979.

Political parties, private groups and the Roman Catholic Church have turned against the front and its Marxist leaders. They accuse them of discarding its promises of political pluralism and democracy and, instead, are turning the country into a totalitarian society aligned with the Soviet Union and other communist countries.

Relations with the United States have been strained for more than two years and attempts by the two countries to discuss their differences have failed to produce results.

The Sandinistas have ruled the country for more than a year under a state of economic and social emergency that abolished political activities, imposed strict news censorship and limited other rights.

Economically, the country's exports are not bringing in enough foreign exchange to maintain current levels of production. Sugar, rice and other products are rationed. So is gasoline.

"Already, there is talk of massive arrests in some parts of the country," said Marta Baltodano, director of the Permanent Human Rights Commission.

"Obviously, there is a margin of discontent," admitted Ramirez. "But the margin of support for the revolution is large."

"Everyone has his machete out," said Conservative Party leader Adolfo Calero Portocarrero, one of the few opposition leaders still in the country. "There are rumors of war and the government is helping spread those rumors."

The government has reported clashes along the 400 miles of jungle and mountains that make up the ill-defined northern border with Honduras.

According to Nicaraguan officials, more than 100 border guards, militiamen and peasants have been killed this year by well-armed groups of counter-revolutionaries in raids from camps in Honduran territory.

In some cases the attackers came in groups of more than 100 and penetrated as deep as 60 miles into Nicaraguan territory, officials said.

Had To Abort Winning Skein

WARWOOD, W.Va. (AP) — A video game player says his record-setting streak on Missile Command had to be aborted because of fatigue on the part of store managers.

Gregory B. Hinerman said he racked up 5,773,435 points on the game last Friday night at the Warwood Shopping Plaza. He said the record Missile Command score in a book of video games is 3.9 million points.

The object of the game is to protect six cities from attack by invading aircraft, missiles and bombs. The player has a limited amount of ammunition with which to repulse the invaders. The game is over once the six cities are destroyed, but for each successful defense, the player earns bonus cities and is able to continue.

By the time Hinerman quit, he had amassed "at least 100 bonus cities" and could have gone on indefinitely, said Dave Nesbitt, assistant manager of the store where the game was being played.

"The only reason he stopped then was because it was 10:30 p.m. and I and the other manager had been here since 8:30 in the morning and we didn't want to stay all night," Nesbitt said.

militiamen can be seen leaving Managua on the way to the northern border, which has been declared a "military zone." Travel in the area is restricted.

Ramirez, while blaming the United States and the Honduran military for abetting the activities of the anti-Sandinista groups, says he does not expect a full-scale invasion by the counter-revolutionary groups "unless the United States can get Honduras involved in this."

A U.S. source familiar with Central America who declined to be further identified commented, "The Sandinistas have successfully tainted the groups along the northern border as former national guards and Somocistas (Somoza followers) who are not likely to get any popular support inside Nicaragua."

Thousands of former national guards, Somoza's army, fled into Honduras at the end of the war in 1979. At least 4,000 were arrested and many have been tried.

Ramirez claims the former guards may be part of a "global U.S. strategy."

"They are the battering ram. The U.S. fresh troops that are not involved in the dirty work at the moment are elsewhere," Ramirez said, referring to former Sandinista commander Eden Pastora and former junta member and political leader Alfonso Robelo, both of whom are in self-imposed exile in neighboring Costa Rica.

In an interview in Costa

Rica, Robelo said recently there is "no coordination or contact" between the group there and the anti-Sandinistas in Honduras.

"We will make our presence felt in Nicaragua soon," Robelo said.

Sources in Nicaragua said the Pastora-Robelo group could draw support inside the country.

But Pastora, former commander of the Sandinista militia and a popular leader during the insurrection, "has some Marxist sympathies that may not be acceptable to everyone, especially some people in the U.S. government," said a diplomatic source who asked to remain anonymous.

External and internal pressures are seen here as part of the U.S. campaign to pressure Nicaragua into negotiating and what a U.S. source called "a change of attitude on the part of the Sandinistas." Ramirez claims it is the United States that should change its attitude.

"We feel that the United States has failed in its campaign to destabilize Nicaragua," he said.

The United States claims Nicaragua provides military assistance to leftist guerrillas in El Salvador and says it should stop. It also calls for "political pluralism" inside the country and an agreement with other Central American countries on a reduction of military tensions in the area.

Nicaragua blames the tension on the United States and on the Honduran and Salvador military commands. Internally, the Sandinistas reject demands for what the official newspaper Barricada recently called "paper democracy" and claim they alone represent the will of the people.

Old Bones Show Early Britons Suffered Arthritis

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Inhabitants of Roman Britain suffered from gout, polio, arthritis and spinal malformations. They also had lead poisoning.

This has been determined by archaeologists who studied skeletons taken from a 1,700-year-old burial ground in Cirencester, 93 miles southwest of London.

"Nearly half of the adult males had arthritis in most joints of the body," said Alan McWhirr, director of excavations in Cirencester. "It was the most common complaint but we don't know the cause."

Doctors in several branches of medicine have spent years analyzing the 450 skeletons, dug up from a burial ground outside the Roman town wall since 1969 and now stored in the local museum.

"We are beginning to look at people more than objects," said McWhirr, 45, a lecturer in archaeology.

"There were a number of congenital defects affecting the spine and five had spina bifida (malformation of the spine). Three showed evidence of gout, the earliest cases to be identified in Britain," McWhirr said in a telephone interview from Cirencester.

"This was a normal cemetery for townspeople who died naturally, but three or four of the skeletons appeared to have been decapitated. There were 144 bone fractures in 60 of the skeletons, mostly breaks to the ribs. Teeth were well preserved and there was no evidence of leprosy or syphilis, which one might expect to find in early populations."

Cirencester, in Gloucestershire, was called Corinium Dobunorum by the Romans, who occupied Britain at the time. By the 4th century, it had become next in importance to London because it stood at the hub of a network of Roman roads.

During the first four centuries of the Christian era, the period of the Roman occupation, people were a little shorter than today. Men averaged 5 feet, 6½ inches and women 5 feet, 2 inches. The tallest woman was only the height of the average man.

The mean age at death was 40.8 years for men and 37.8 for women. At least one man lived to 65 and the oldest woman was also 65.

"The lead must have come in the diet somewhere, so they may have used cooking utensils made of lead, in which liquids, acids and alcohols heated up would perhaps have caused the lead to dissolve. The snag is that we haven't found any lead pots in our excavations and there are none in the local museum.

"The Romans knew about lead poisoning. Vitruvius, one of their chief architects, wrote that lead was dangerous because it contaminated water. But that was in a book in Italy and whether it was relayed to a distant province like Britain we don't know."

The Cirencester graves have not turned up anything as interesting as the skeletons.

There was a bracelet or two, rings and a necklace, mainly buried with the children.

The archaeologists found the graves in 1969, when they began a trial dig to the west of the Roman town after hearing that a planned ring road would wreck the area.

"The Romans had a law forbidding burial within town walls, so we dug outside the Bath Gate and our first trench was full of skeletons," McWhirr said.

AAM Divided As It Matures

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — In early 1978, members of the fledgling American Agriculture Movement turned 82 goats loose on the Capitol grounds to draw attention to the financial plight of agriculture.

In the winter of 1979, the group got thousands of farmers to drive their tractors to Washington to protest low prices and demand "parity," a complicated formula designed to stabilize the buying power of farmers.

Now, supporters say the nation's youngest farm movement has matured. The AAM has incorporated, established a Washington office and even has a political action committee that gave $90,000 to candidates for Congress.

they had have gone to other farm organizations."

Cryts, a candidate for AAM national chairman, favors focusing the movement's efforts on Washington, as does its present chairman, Marvin Meek of Plainview, Texas.

"Chances are I will be the national chairman," claims Alvin Jenkins of Campo, Colo., credited with being among the half-dozen farmers who first formed AAM in late 1977. He says the group's current direction is "a pitiful deal" and vows to fight to focus efforts back on rural activism. "There's nothing healthier for the movement than a good brawl," he said.

Jenkins and his supporters are talking about channeling farm frustration into a new uprising. Tactics mentioned include a mass movement to stop payment on government debt, or to repay it only in produce at parity prices. They may also encourage "penny auctions," where friends of a bankrupt farmer crowd out legitimate bidders at an auction of his farm.

"If we keep trying to do the same thing again and again, well, it's kind of pathetic," says Senter. "We don't need another mob. What the hell can you do with a mob out in the country? I've never seen a law passed in Campo, Colo."

"We have succeeded in accomplishing in five years what some of the old-line farm organizations have spent 50 years in doing — getting name recognition, credibility and access to the policymakers in Washington," said David Senter, AAM's lobbyist.

But that very boast is at the heart of the organization's problems. It has become divided, with some members devoted to working the political system and others to grass-roots activism. The tug-of-war is likely to spring into public view when the movement holds its national convention in January in Nashville, Tenn.

Cowboys Help Roundup Strays

ELMER, N.J. (AP) — A couple of rodeo cowboys took their act on the road after a truckload of bulls overturned, sending about 10 tons of trouble onto U.S. Route 40 and into neighboring cornfields.

The accident Tuesday morning near this south New Jersey city freed 10 bulls that were en route to the slaughterhouse, authorities said.

State police contacted officials with the Cowtown Rodeo in Piles Grove Township, who sent two cowboys on horseback to help round up the animals.

It took about five hours to corral the cattle, officers said.

The accident occurred when the cattle truck rammed the back of a car and overturned, police said. The truck driver was not injured but the driver of the car was hospitalized with a broken arm, authorities said.

"We have succeeded in accomplishing in five years what some of the old-line farm organizations have spent 50 years in doing — getting name recognition, credibility and access to the policymakers in Washington," said David Senter, AAM's lobbyist.

But that very boast is at the heart of the organization's problems. It has become divided, with some members devoted to working the political system and others to grass-roots activism. The tug-of-war is likely to spring into public view when the movement holds its national convention in January in Nashville, Tenn.

"Farmers are worse off now than we were then," said Derel Fillingim of Hico, Texas, chairman of the organization's Parity Trust Fund, who said many of the movement's initial backers are disillusioned. "Some of us are re-looking at this thing."

One member of the House Agriculture Committee was more harsh. "It's played out," said the congressman, who spoke only on condition that he not be identified. "Most of the good people

Much of the work on the skeletons was done by Dr. Calvin Wells, an international authority on the analysis of bones of ancient peoples. He died in 1978.

By examination of pelvic bones, Wells calculated the average woman living in Cirencester had four to five children.

"Some doctors believe it may be possible to work out blood groups from bones," McWhirr said. "If so, we can start looking at cemeteries in terms of families instead of individuals."

People were heavily exposed to lead during their lifetime. In some cases, their bones contained 10 times as much lead as contemporary man. Children had high concentrations of lead in their bones and some may have died from lead poisoning, although that cannot be proved from skeletal studies.

"It's something of a mystery where the lead came from," said McWhirr.

"The Romans used lead for water pipes but the Cirencester water leaves a deposit in the pipes, like fur in a kettle, which prevents the lead dissolving. Also, the Romans tended not to use too many taps. The water flowed through pipes to fountains and open tanks, so it wasn't in contact with lead for long periods.

Unique Lab Identifies Long-Dead GIs

By PATRICIA PATTON HONOLULU (UPI) — Little in his retiring manner would indicate that Dr. Tadao Furue is an ardent sleuth engaged in one of modern military history's most complex and continuing mysteries.

Furue, physical anthropologist at Hawaii's Central Identification Laboratory, is in charge of the identification of the remains of American servicemen, some missing for decades, that are recovered from throughout the globe.

His mission has centered in recent years on the final identification of the remains of servicemen recovered from Southeast Asia.

For the record, and for the sake of any next of kin, the armed services regard positive identification of fallen servicemen as of paramount importance.

The lab, the only one of its kind in the world, is dedicated to ensure that the remains assumed to be those of Lt. John Smith are actually those of John Smith.

To aid in what often seems like a real "Mission Impossible," sometimes stretching over a 20-year period, Furue invented a unique identification method called the Cranial-Facial Superimposition System.

His complex system has a long history.

"I was first asked to work in identification during the Korean conflict," he said. "Quite a mess, identification-wise."

Using a 35mm camera, lights, mirrors, a wire screen and control switch, Furue can superimpose a skull and a photograph believed to be that of the deceased, in an attempt to match the skull's bone structure with the contour of the face in the photograph.

If they match up, it is a strong indication that the cranium belongs to the person in the photo. Furue then uses a similar camera and mirror arrangement to check teeth against dental X-rays.

Even if they check, says to Maj. Johnie Webb, laboratory commander, the cases often are monumental puzzles with few clues.

"In one case we had, the pilot of an F-111 aircraft had gone in very hard," Webb said. "Everything we had, the bones, were shattered. Dr. Furue worked on the case for several days.

"He found that four vertebrae in the back were fused together. Because of that we felt doubtful that the remains were those of a pilot, since it would have been very difficult for him to sit in a cockpit for any period of time."

But medical records showed the pilot in fact had had fused vertebrae from the start.

"He had just never reported it for fear of being taken off flight status," Webb said.

Though most of the remains that come into the lab are skeletal, there's a lot can be learned, according to Furue.

"Take, for instance, one bone, the tibia. From this I can tell race, sex, male or female," he said. "Also, I can estimate the height quite accurately and age at the time of death."

Positive identification is not always possible.

"There have been cases where we just did not have enough," Webb said. "When we cannot separate the identities of the remains, we go back in and recommend a group burial. But this happens seldom."

Whatever the laboratory's recommendation, the results are forwarded to the Armed Services Grave Registration Office in Washington, D.C. A board reviews the lab's evidence and, if they accept the report, the identification is considered legitimate.

On occasion the lab's findings have been disputed.

"We've been challenged, but we've always won," said Webb.

Webb said Furue has been working in the field for more than 32 years.

"You've heard of perfectionists," he said, "He's at the top of the list."

"I'm very careful," Furue said. "I don't trust myself. I only trust the facts."

Earlier this year, remains returned to U.S. custody were identified by the lab as those of a Navy pilot shot down over Laos in 1970.

The identification of Lt. Cmdr. Nicholas Brooks, of Newburgh, N.Y., brought to 80 the number of remains returned to the United States since the end of the war in Southeast Asia in 1975.

About 2,500 Americans listed as missing in Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia have not yet been accounted for. Of them, 111 men still may be being held as prisoners.

Asks Exception In Town's Vendor Fee

WILLIAMSTON — Sam Hocutt, manager of Belk Tyler's in Williamston, has asked the Williamston Town Board to exempt vendors who offer truckload sales connected with a retail firm such as Belk's from the town's $100 vendor's fee.

Hocutt contends that such vendors do not fall into the classification of peddlers.

Several commissioners pointed out that there was considerable reverse sentiment relative to such truckload sales, that other merchants have expressed an opinion that such sales are harmful to their businesses, and that they feel the $100 fee is not enough to charge the outside merchants who come in with truckload sales of items.

Mayor Robert Cowan expressed the opinion that making an exception would make Williamston's ordinance controlling vendors useless and would in essence give carte blanche authority to sales from trucks or other means without a fee.

Hocutt noted his main desire is for the ordinance to give some leeway in deciding who are itinerant merchants and who qualify as merchants as a regular part of local businesses.

The board agreed to study Hocutt's request.

In other business, Police Chief James Thompson, in his report to the board, commented on the rash of break-ins and added that strategy is being planned to help solve the situation. Several board members are to meet with the police department to discuss the situation and possible moves to take.

The sale of six lots in the North Central Community Development area was approved. Bids for the six lots totaled $29,960. Also, a bid of $1,150 for a cemetery lot was approved.

Even if they check, says to Maj. Johnie Webb, laboratory commander, the cases often are monumental puzzles with few clues.

"In one case we had, the pilot of an F-111 aircraft had gone in very hard," Webb said. "Everything we had, the bones, were shattered. Dr. Furue worked on the case for several days.

"He found that four vertebrae in the back were fused together. Because of that we felt doubtful that the remains were those of a pilot, since it would have been very difficult for him to sit in a cockpit for any period of time."

But medical records showed the pilot in fact had had fused vertebrae from the start.

"He had just never reported it for fear of being taken off flight status," Webb said.

Vatican Art Restorer Rediscovering Michelangelo

By MILESSCHUMAN
VATICAN CITY (UPI) — A graying man high on a scaffold in the Sistine Chapel carefully runs his hand over a figure painted more than 450 years ago by Michelangelo.

He takes a cloth and confidently begins to wipe the ashen surface of a fresco, following Michelangelo's sweeping curves as if he had painted them himself.

The fresco slowly changes. Colors hidden under layers of dirt come alive. The surface is reborn with an explosion of reds, violets and greens that had been muted by time.

Giancarlo Colalucci, 51, the Vatican's chief art restorer, is "rediscovering" Michelangelo.

In the Vatican's most extensive restoration effort, Colalucci is cleaning the complete series of Michelangelo's frescoes in the Sistine, dulled for centuries by layers of dirt.

The 12-year, $3 million project is in its second year. Already it has produced revolutionary results.

"We are going to have to completely rewrite the history of this Renaissance genius," Walter Persagatti, secretary of the Vatican Museums, said in an interview.

Michelangelo's Sistine frescoes include the monumental "Last Judgment" on the altar wall, nine panels containing scenes from the Book of Genesis on the barrel vault, spandrels depicting the lives of New Testament saints and 14 lunettes of Christ's ancestors.

So far Colalucci has finished cleaning eight of the half-moon shaped lunettes. The difference between them and those yet to be restored is astonishing.

"What is evident now is Michelangelo's use of color," said Fabrizio Mancinelli, director of the Vatican Museum's Department of Byzantine, Medieval and Modern art. "Scholars spoke of toned-down, muted Venetian colors and dark shadows. They wrote this because it is exactly what they saw."

"Cleaning the frescoes, we realized it was nothing like the Venetians, but the colors of the Mannerist painters Rosso Fiorentino and Pontormo."

The colors reveal a new dramatic connection between Michelangelo and the very personal style of painting that developed in the late high Renaissance, especially characterized by the use of bursting colors adjacent to each other.

In the lunettes, radiant reds and yellows are now clear. Brilliant violets and greens pulsate with expressive energy side by side.

But most shocking to the Vatican experts is the extent that Michelangelo used color to create the illusion of volume.

"Instead of chiaroscuro (the use of light and shadow to create plasticity) we have discovered that Michelangelo used a specific color for the shaded areas of a figure," Colalucci said.

"With chiaroscuro, you're dealing with the same color scheme. Michelangelo used different colors, like greys and reds, to complement each other and create the form."

The extent of Michelangelo's revolution in color is clearest when comparing his lunettes to Sistine frescoes painted before him.

"The 25 years from Ghirlandaio and Botticelli to Michelangelo seem like centuries in light of the new discoveries," Mancinelli said.

"He is violent and aggressive like Dante. The forms he created anticipate future artists. He could now be compared to the Impressionists and Picasso in his use of line and color."

"Of course, people today might say this is not so extraordinary, but you can imagine the shock people had then when they saw the change from the 15th century style."

Colalucci, speaking on a scaffold in the Sistine, said the restoration has revealed the total confidence Michelangelo had in his technique when he began the lunettes.

Only a general outline of the figures is visible beneath the virtually transparent paint.

"For the lunettes, he had absolutely no preparation," Colalucci said. "He made a general outline on the plaster before he began to paint so he could have an idea of the shapes. But there was no detailed outline put on the wall."

When Michelangelo began the Sistine project with the ceiling in 1508, he had never finished a fresco. One of his main problems was foreshortening, making the figures realistic as seen from the floor.

"The lunettes were done after the ceiling, and we can now tell as never before how that exposure developed his confidence," Colalucci said.

He has also discovered that each of the three groups of figures contained in a lunette was painted in one day. Since frescoes are done on wet plaster, Michelangelo had to work very quickly to finish before the plaster dried.

Contrary to previous theories, Colalucci has found no evidence that Michelangelo reworked the frescoes "a secco" — on dry plaster.

"He finished his day's work and left everything as it was. There was no going back," Colalucci said.

The greatest problem Colalucci faced was a lack of knowledge about the frescoes' surface.

"I had no idea at first what was underneath all the grime," he said. "Everything was hidden — the strokes, the type of paint, everything."

Colalucci and three assistants spent 6 months testing a cleaning solution on other 15th century frescoes in the Sistine before cleaning the first Michelangelo lunette.

Their technique involves a fast-working solution that remains on the dirty surface and is washed off with distilled water. The process is repeated every 24 hours until the fresco is clean.

When the restoration began, no one really knew what type of scaffolding Michelangelo used to paint the ceiling.

Colalucci found holes in the walls which Mancinelli thinks Michelangelo used to support a wall-to-wall platform below the ceiling. With the new information, Mancinelli used Michelangelo's method to design a platform where Colalucci will work when he begins restoring the ceiling in about two years.

"Basically we're using Michelangelo's idea," Mancinelli said. "This is the best possible solution and our model will be almost exactly like it."

Though centuries divide them, Colalucci the master restorer says he has developed a spiritual affinity with Michelangelo the master painter.

Sometimes when he is working, the soft-spoken and unpretentious Colalucci says he can even foretell what he will find. He said he sometimes can foresee where Michelangelo corrected a line or a curve.

"To be able to see how Michelangelo laid down the paint and then corrected the outline with a base color, to see where he started something and then reworked it, this is a revelation," Colalucci said.

"I've been able to identify with him in certain ways. Sometimes when I'm up here I can see him, actually see him working. "And there is fury in his soul."

Swearing-In At Martin Session

WILLIAMSTON — Four new members were sworn in and a chairman and vice chairman named at the December meeting of the Martin County Board of Education.

Members taking the oath of office for four-year terms were Warren Ward, David Whitley, Denyse Smith and Larry Chesson.

Macon M. Holliday of Jamesville and Zack Gurkin of Williamston were elected to continue as chairman and vice chairman, respectively, of the board.

Finance Officer Jerry Barnes reported that Roberson Products Co. will contribute $13,454 to pay for the yearly lease fee for computers utilized for remediation and instructional purposes in math and other subjects at Roanoke High School.

An agreement was reached to make every effort to maintain a 180-day school year, despite a recent law which permits school boards to omit up to five days without makeup if necessitated by inclement weather.

The board agreed to assume control of a student exchange program between Martin County schools and a school in West Germany. The agreement is based on the fact that local control will be less expensive than handling the exchange through a travel agency.

Information, requested at an earlier meeting, on projected costs for installing air conditioning in lunchrooms at two schools, shows that it would cost about $11,500 per school if work was done by county maintenance personnel.

Hopeful News in Medicine

The CAT scan has offered many revolutionary approaches to the diagnosis of many medical conditions. Now a new scanner known as PETT, named for positron emission transaxial tomography, will soon be used in humans for the establishment of complex diagnoses. Experimental studies with animals have already indicated its value, especially in hidden lesions of the brain.

Untold possibilities lie in this new type of scanning. It is said that the instrument has a greater possibility to examine smaller and smaller parts of the brain in shorter and shorter periods of time.

Research workers even suggest that this new generation of scanners will be able to recognize and outline neurological structures in the brain and spinal cord that never before were visualized.

The concept of "apheresis" is beginning to intrigue physicians and scientists in all phases of medicine. In essence, this approach is based on the ability to remove substances that circulate in the bloodstream, substances that may be responsible for a variety of conditions.

Experimental studies on rheumatoid arthritis is being tried at various hospitals in America. One is being undertaken at the Cleveland Clinic Foundation by Dr. Randall Krakauer and his associates.

Immune substances can be filtered out of the blood and can be removed by complex techniques. The remainder of the blood plasma is reheated and returned to the patient's body. This treatment is done twice a week for about five weeks.

Dr. Krakauer says that his observations are still preliminary but exciting. Patients who have undergone apheresis have had remissions of their rheumatoid arthritis. Some patients in the study have had lessening of morning stiffness with reduced joint swelling and tenderness.

This approach to the "cleansing" of the blood has tremendous possibilities in many areas of medicine. Investigation is in high gear to better understand exactly how the mechanism works.

Active research at the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center is in an ongoing phase about a method of stopping the formation of atherosclerosis. A complex compound, 26-hydroxy-cholesterol, is normally produced by the liver. Dr. Normal B. Javitt and his colleagues have found that the compound can effectively check cholesterol production.

It is not yet completely known how this substance works to control atherosclerosis, yet there is strong evidence that points to the fact that much will soon be known about it. The clues that are derived from active study will undoubtedly yield remarkable secrets and eventually will alter heart attacks and strokes.

RED EYED MONITOR

CANOGA PARK, Calif. (AP) — A "red eye," no bigger than a collar button, is being developed here to help the Navy look for and destroy low-flying targets.

The eye is an improvement in the infrared technology now being used in missile-guidance systems. The button-sized elements consist of some 4,000 detectors that sense infrared radiation and convert it to electronic charge.

Still the only cigarette that delivers the taste of 'Enriched Flavor'TM smoking.

It broke all the traditional rules of cigarette-making by concentrating on the tobacco end—not the filter end—of smoking.

MERIT. The cigarette that made history by delivering the taste of leading brands having up to twice the tar.

It's the first and only 'Enriched Flavor'TM cigarette.

We made it for you.

Nothing halfway about it.
