Rezoning Request Is Rejected 2nd Time

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

A renewed request by a property owner to have a tract of land rezoned to a residential designation that allows multifamily development has failed again to gain approval by the City Council.

J.T. Manning Jr., who owns 4.51 acres south of Fornes Mill Run and Joe Laney's property and west of Tucker Farms development, was unsuccessful six months ago when he sought to change the RA-20 residential-agricultural zoning classification of his property.

The council Thursday night, after hearing objections from neighboring land owners, turned down Manning's petition to change the classification from RA-20 to R-9. The R-9 zone permits both single and multifamily development.

In denying the request, four of the council members actually voted in favor of the zoning change but due to a protest petition that was submitted to the council, five affirmative votes were required for approval.

In reacting to the council action, Manning told the board that, "You are holding back progress. I am disappointed."

Louis Holloway, who said his wife and her brother own property adjoining the Manning tract, said his wife was not notified of the zoning matter. Holloway said they were not against progress but if the rezoning resulted in devaluing the family property, they were against it.

Laney, who said he owns a house opposite the Manning property, said he was disappointed that the city has not taken up a request he made last November to consider creation of an R-9 single family zone. He said he objected to the duplex provision in the present R-9 zone.

Laney asked the council to send the matter back to the planning board with instructions to consider an R-9 zone without duplexes. He said that if the R-9 single family is not considered, Manning could move his development line back 100 feet and leave an RA-20 buffer.

Ellen Flanagan, also an adjoining property owner, objected to the development of multifamily units in the area, saying that home owners are responsible for their properties while duplex occupants are generally temporary residents. She suggested that Manning and the property owners could get together and work something out.

Dr. Harold Deitch, pastor of Red Oak Christian Church, said he did not believe Manning would build anything on the property that would be a detriment to his neighbors. He asked the council to give the request favorable consideration.

Manning's brother, Claude, said that due to the only access to the property being from U.S. 264 Bypass, the only proper zone that could be applied would be R-9. He also urged council approval.

Manning said the "pattern has been set" regarding zoning for his property. He said a natural buffer exists with a 14-foot ditch and he reminded the council that the planning board gave its unanimous recommendation for approval.

In response to a suggestion that a 100-foot setback might remedy the situation, Manning asked, "Why restrict me where I can't use it (property)?" He said it would be detrimental to some of the property to apply the setback to the whole property line.

A motion by Janice Buck to deny the request failed to gain a second. Ms. Buck said she felt more time was needed for work on an R-9 single family zone.

Councilman Louis Clark said that even if a single family district was created, there would be no assurance that Manning would request it.

Mayor Percy Cox said the planning staff has been busy on other matters, especially annexation, but he feels there is a need to consider a single family zone under the R-9 designation.

The council received the endorsement of several local residents in its adoption of an amendment to the Animal Control Ordinance. The amendment stipulates that, "Up to

Wholesale Prices Rose .6 Percent For November

By The Associated Press
Sharply higher costs for natural gas and home heating oil pushed wholesale prices up .6 percent in November, the Labor Department said today.

The gain was up slightly from October's 0.5 percent rise and meant that, for the year, inflation at the wholesale level is running at an annual rate of 3.7 percent.

If the 11-month rate holds through December, the nation would record its smallest full-year wholesale price rise since 1976. Last year, wholesale prices rose 7 percent.

Wholesale fuel oil costs climbed 6.4 percent last month, up sharply from a rise of 1 percent in October and a drop of 1.6 percent the previous month, the department said.

Natural gas prices, which fell 0.9 percent in October, dramatically turned around and rose 5 percent in November.

Still, inflation is at a moderate pace compared with previous years. That, along with falling interest rates, are helping build an imminent economic recovery, many economists say.

The Reagan administration's top economist says unemployment, standing at 10.8 percent of the work force, is "near a peak" but won't fall below 7 percent for five or six years.

Martin S. Feldstein, chairman of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers, told the congressional Joint Economic Committee that Democratic proposals for major public works jobs would only put the economy in worse shape.

"I think it would be wrong to stimulate the economy, especially at a time when there is very widespread professional agreement that a recovery is about to occur," he said Thursday. Unemployment is "a problem that can only be solved with a recovery."

"I think we are near the peak in dealing with unemployment," Feldstein said, but he would not say specifically when the peak would come. In any event, he said, a jobless rate of at least 7 percent should be expected for the next five or six years.

Although a growing number of private and government economists predict an end to the recession by early next year, business executives are planning to cut spending for expansion and modernization, a government survey shows.

The Commerce Department survey released Thursday said business executives now estimate this year's capital spending will be 4.8 percent below last year's after adjusting for inflation. They had estimated a dip of 1 percent early this year but their plans have grown more pessimistic in surveys through the year as the recession continued.

The drop would be the first decline over an entire year since the 1975 recession.

In other economic developments Thursday:

—Chrysler Corp. and the United Auto Workers reached tentative agreement on an immediate wage increase that paves the way for an end to a 5-week-old Canadian strike and a new contract for U.S. workers. UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said he was optimistic the 85,000 U.S. Chrysler workers would accept the new offer.

—The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks tumbled 19.13 points to 1,027.96. Two stocks fell for every one that rose on the New York Stock Exchange. Analysts attributed the stock market's drop in part to disappointing sales projections by two leading producers of video games.

Substation Now Owned By Greenville Utilities

The Greenville Utilities Commission, at 10 a.m. today, became the owner of the 230,000-volt substation formerly operated by Virginia Electric and Power

Co. in the Meadowbrook area of the city.

Purchase of the substation — for $2.66 million — was approved in February 1982 by the GUC Board of Commissioners.

However, "it has taken this long to complete the transaction," GUC director Charles Horne said, because of the number of regulatory agencies required to approve the transfer of ownership.

Horne said local ownership of the substation will save the commission, and ultimately GUC's customers, some $85,000 per month in wheeling charges for power purchased from the N.C. Eastern Municipal Power Agency.

He said that as a result of the purchase, Greenville will receive its electric power directly from the Carolina Power & Light Co. system. That will eliminate the wheeling charge previously paid Veeco to deliver power to the city.

The NCEMPA, of which Greenville is a member, has purchased generating facilities from CP&L, whose lines are now used to deliver electricity to agency members.

Horne, who said the substation includes two 200 MVA volt transformers, said the facility has a life expectancy of some 20 years.

"Our load runs about 150 MVA now," Horne said, adding that one of the 200 MVA transformers "will carry the full load" in the event something were to happen to the other transformer.

The utilities director said the substation "will pay for itself fairly shortly," with the money saved in wheeling charges.

Crime Commission's Package Is Ready For Governor Hunt's Study

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt will get legislative recommendations from his Crime Commission today that call for cracking down on drunken drivers, drug traffickers and income tax evaders.

The 66-page commission report is the result of two years of research, testimony and debate before commission members, who include judges, sheriffs, government officials and citizens.

Hunt may consider the recommendations in preparing his crime message for the 1983 General Assembly.

Hunt spokesman Brent Hackney called the report "tough and comprehensive" but said the governor would have no remarks until he gets the report today.

"The driving under the influence proposals are the most important," said Heman Clark, crime control and public safety secretary. "That's the crime that's costing the most lives and human misery."

Clark predicted that the most controversial proposal would be one allowing electronic surveillance and investigative grand juries in drug trafficking cases. The commission said the two changes would allow State Bureau of Investigation agents to get closer to the leaders of drug operations.

The federal government has used the two methods for years. Clark said the state has not been given such powers in the past because of their potential for abuse.

The panel proposes allowing the SBI to use electronic surveillance only in drug trafficking probes and only after obtaining judicial review under conditions that are more limited than under federal law.

It urges using investigative grand juries only after a district attorney presents to a Superior Court judge details of the felony to be investigated, the witnesses to be interviewed and the basis for the belief that the probe is necessary.

In the report, the commission concludes that drunken driving is so widespread it would be impossible to arrest all offenders, that most drunken drivers are not arrested or involved in an accident and that most accidents involve heavy problem drinkers.

To improve the situation, the commission recommends raising the legal drinking age to 21 over a three-year period, replacing the careless and reckless driving statute with a driving under the influence law that adjusts punishments to the severity of the violation.

Individuals arrested and found by a magistrate to be under the influence could be detained up to four hours under another commission proposal.

Many of the same recommendations were developed by the Governor's Task Force on Drunken Drivers. The commission said it hopes to be able to support those recommendations too.

The commission also recommends making state laws conform with federal laws on the punishment of tax evaders. Fraudulent evasion of income tax now is a misdemeanor under state law and a felony under federal law.

Other commission recommendations would:

- Prohibit the manufacture, distribution, possession and advertisement of imitation controlled substances.
- Give judges discretion to deny bail to people charged with crimes such as first degree rape, first degree arson and heroin trafficking committed while the suspect was free on bail.
- Recommend further study of the insanity defense.
- Allow defendants in Superior Court to elect a trial by judge rather than jury.

BRING MOM APPEAL

Bishop Danny Brew has asked Hotline to appeal for donations to bring the mother of a young woman hospitalized at Pitt County Memorial for testing for a possible brain tumor to be with her.

Dreama Dail has a two-year-old son and is pregnant with a second child. She wants her mother, who lives in Las Vegas, Nev., to come here both to provide emotional support for her and to work out arrangements for the care for her child. Anyone willing to help is asked to send donations c/o Bishop Brew, 301 Lancelot Drive, Greenville, N.C. 27834. Inquiries may be made by calling Brew at 355-6364 or Ms. Dail's room, 757-4153.

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — More than 160 stores in the San Francisco Bay area pulled Maximum Strength Anacin-3 capsules from their shelves as police investigated a possible "copycat" poisoning patterned after seven Chicago-area Tylenol killings.

A San Jose woman, 30-year-old Sue Bowen, became critically ill Nov. 26 after swallowing a tablet of the pain-killer, and an analysis confirmed she had a foreign substance in her blood, authorities said. Later, cyanide was found in Anacin-3 capsules that Mrs. Bowen's husband said he took from the family medicine cabinet.

Police said, however, they could not confirm that Mrs. Bowen had been poisoned with cyanide and the cause of her illness remained a mystery.

"We don't know if a crime has been committed," San Jose Police Chief Joe McNamara said Thursday. "Until we conduct a thorough investigation, we're not going to speculate."

Four Anacin-3 capsules turned over to authorities contained cyanide, including one filled almost entirely with poison, McNamara said.

Longs Drug Store, the chain from which Mrs.

Bowen's medication was reported purchased Nov. 24 or 25, said it was withdrawing Anacin-3 from 19 stores on the San Francisco peninsula. Pay Less Drug Stores announced the medication's removal from 148 stores.

McNamara said his department was giving its investigation of the incident "top priority."

But the investigation was complicated by the fact that Mrs. Bowen's husband, Richard, apparently took apart some capsules before giving them to authorities, McNamara said.

Peter Weisser, a spokesman for the state Department of Health in Sacramento, said "the capsules were taken apart" apparently by Bowen, who then "presented them in plastic bags" to Dr. John Smith, the family's physician.

McNamara said he didn't know why the capsules were disassembled and Smith has declined to talk about the case.

Bowen said that before the state Health Department analyzed the capsules, 10 public agencies and private laboratories turned down his requests to see if his wife was poisoned by tainted medicine.

"Everyone kissed it off,"

he said. "I'm more frustrated with the system than anything else. If my name was Ronald Reagan, things would have been done right away."

Police searched the Bowen house Thursday with Mrs. Bowen's permission, but results of the search were not disclosed.

It initially was thought that Mrs. Bowen suffered a stroke, but doctors ruled that out after blood and urine tests showed a foreign substance in her system, said Glen Lawrence a food and drug specialist with the state Department of Health Services.

"We have indications that symptoms resembled those of a cyanide attack," said McNamara. "But we do not have medical confirmation yet. It is possible, I suppose, that she might have suffered a stroke or a heart attack."

The cyanide was found after Bowen's request on Dec. 1 for a state analysis of the capsules, said Lawrence.

Mrs. Bowen remained hospitalized at Good Samaritan Hospital, where officials described her condition as "stable." She was moved from the hospital's intensive care unit Monday.

The tainted capsules, from lot No. F229 with an expiration date of May 1984, were originally from a bottle of 20.

'Communicator Award' Presented Carol Tyer

CAROL TYER

The Greenville Toastmasters' Communicator of the Year Award for 1982 has been presented to Carol Tyer, Daily Reflector staff writer.

The award is given to a non-toastmaster who has made significant contributions in the community through communication, Toastmasters President Tom Houston said in presenting the award Wednesday night.

"Mrs. Tyer has been a reporter for 'The Daily Reflector' since 1966," Houston said. "We feel she makes significant contribution to the welfare of the community through her work as Hotline editor, Adopt-a-Pet editor, medical community reporter, Farmville area reporter, feature writer and substitute social editor. She and her husband, Ruel Tyer, and daughters, Amy and Olive Tyer, live near Falkland. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Blackley of Farmville."

In her acceptance speech, Mrs. Tyer stressed that responsible communication is both a privilege for oneself and a way to contribute to others.

Charge Mother And A 'Friend'

HAVELOCK, N.C. (AP) — A 7-year-old girl was allegedly raped by a friend of her mother's, and both adults were arrested for rape and a variety of drug offenses late Wednesday night, police said.

Both were being held without bond in Craven County Jail with their first court appearances scheduled for Friday morning.

Havelock police arrested Julianna Strait Batrone and Richard Brian Thrall, both 28 and of Havelock, police said.

Thrall was charged with first-degree rape and Batrone was charged with aiding and abetting the rape of her daughter.

It is all very well to draw inferences from the bidding. However, don't let your imagination take the place of sound technique.

East's three diamond preempt is somewhat unorthodox. However, since his partner had passed in first seat, the chances of game were remote. It seemed wiser to try to interfere with the opponents' auction. This tactic backfired because, without the preempt, North-South might not have been able to reach an excellent four spade contract on their own steam. North had the ideal hand for a takeout double in the balancing seat, and South deemed that his hand warranted a shot at game even opposite a hand that could not open. South's bidding judgment was excellent. Unfortunately, he judged the play of the hand less well.

West led a diamond, East won the king and continued with the ace. Declarer ruffed and cashed the king and ace of trumps. When East showed out, it was obvious that the defenders had their book — West had two high trumps to go with the diamond trick in the bank. Therefore it seemed that declarer would have to guess the location of the queen of clubs for this contract.

Since East had preempted, declarer elected to play him for the shorter clubs. So he ruffed a diamond, crossed to the king of clubs and led a club to the ten for down one.

Had declarer taken time out to count the hand, he would have realized that he might have ten tricks without having to rely on the location of the queen of clubs.

Seek Relief On Mobile Homes

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina Department of Transportation officials will go before the State Transportation Board Friday seeking an easing of restrictions on the length of mobile homes hauled on state roadways.

The department wants the maximum length allowed to be extended from 85 feet to 91 feet. The request would leave the minimum 15-foot length for towing vehicles unchanged, but trailers 72-feet long could be transported.

State Highway Administrator Billy Rose said he approved the recommendation to the board after reviewing an industry request for the change and accident records.

After learning of the trump break declarer should ruff his last diamond on the table. Next he cashes the ace-king of hearts and ruffs a heart.

When both defenders follow, the contract is assured. Declarer returns to dummy with the ace of clubs and ruffs another heart. If the ruff stands up, declarer cashes the king of clubs for his tenth trick. If West overruffs, he is down to nothing but clubs and must lead a club into declarer's king-jack tenace, giving declarer two more tricks in the suit for a total of ten.

To Cooperate In Leaf Probe

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A district director of the Flue-Cured Cooperative Stabilization Corp. has agreed to cooperate with authorities in a probe of alleged tobacco violations after pleading guilty Thursday to conspiracy to illegally sell tobacco.

Walter L. "Dick" Williamson, a Wilson County farmer who has served as vice president of the North Carolina Farm Bureau and chairman of the Governor's Advisory Committee on Agriculture, agreed to cooperate with authorities in their investigation as part of a plea-bargain agreement. Williamson pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court to conspiracy to illegally sell tobacco worth $7,000.

The agreement between Williamson and U.S. Attorney Sam Currin's office also requires Williamson's son, Walter L. Williamson Jr., to cooperate in the probe of operations at the New Dunn Warehouse in Dunn and the Liberty Warehouse in Wilson.

Williamson acknowledged his son's involvement in a scheme to illegally market the tobacco, but Currin's office agreed not to prosecute the son if he cooperates with investigators.

Williamson is serving his second three-year term as a director of the Flue-Cured Cooperative, according to Executive Director Fred Bond. Directors are elected from districts by tobacco growers.

Bond said the corporation's bylaws allow for the removal of a director only when the director has a conflict of interest in other areas of the

N.C. Clinic Expecting Test-Tube Baby Result

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

Doctors expect to know within a few weeks whether in vitro fertilization has been successful at one of the nation's first privately owned test-tube baby clinics.

While there are nearly a dozen such clinics in the United States, most operate in conjunction with major university medical schools or hospitals, said Dr. James Dingfelder of Chapel Hill Fertility Services.

"This is probably the first purely ambulatory, free-standing outpatient in-vitro program in the country," he said in a telephone interview from his Chapel Hill office.

Dingfelder said doctors had placed fertilized eggs into three women in the last three weeks and would have the first sign Monday of how successful the procedure had been.

"You need a minimum of eight to 10 days to check with a blood pregnancy test," he said. "Even then, of those testing positive, a number will then disappear. To really confirm it you need to go two or three weeks after the (menstrual) period was actually missed. Then you can detect the pregnancy sac.

"Of all the new pregnant patients who are seven or even eight weeks along, probably 8 percent to 10 percent of those go on to have a miscarriage," he added.

While the clinic has been offering help with fertility problems for two years, Dingfelder said in vitro fertilization had to wait until expensive modern facilities were purchased.

"What really was holding us back was the lack of a facility to perform the procedure," he said. "Most clinics have access to operating rooms at university hospitals, but that entails a lot of scheduling problems."

Döcfors at Fertility

Services skip one step normally included in the in vitro procedure, Dingfelder said.

"At most clinics they will take a diagnostic look at a woman's ovaries and tubes by going in through the navel," he said. "We've found that we're pretty certain of getting a good egg even if the ovaries look obstructed."

Dingfelder said the actual operation to remove the egg was performed under general anesthesia, but added that he believed it could be done with the patient awake by using a local anesthetic.

Dear Abby

Father Will Pay For Walk

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: John (made-up name) is my husband of six years. I am John's second wife. He has a 25-year-old daughter who was married four years ago. I will call her Sue. Sue's marriage ended in divorce. At the time of her wedding, John wanted very much to walk his daughter down the aisle, but Sue did not allow him that pleasure. He was invited to attend as a guest and sat on the sidelines.

Now Sue is getting married again. This wedding is going to be another biggie. Sue has informed her father that the reception she is planning will cost around $5,000 and John asked Sue, "Am I to have the pleasure of walking you down the aisle this time?" Sue replied, "If you pay for the reception, you will."

John wants more than anything in the world to walk his daughter down the aisle so he has agreed to the deal. I think this kind of trade-off is the pits. How would you handle this?

JOHN'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: What's to handle? If John is willing to pay for the pleasure of walking his daughter down the aisle, and she is willing to sell it, it's a fair exchange for both.

DEAR ABBY: This is the first time I've ever written to you, but after your column on the sexual abuse (rape) of a child, I had to write and tell you what it meant to me.

My 11-year-old daughter, who always reads "Dear Abby," came to me and said, "Daddy has been doing that to me and my brother every time you are gone." (He is their stepfather.)

I questioned my son, who is 6, and he said it was true. I nearly went into shock. I went straight to my husband and asked if what the children said was true, and he said, "Yes, I couldn't help it — you are always sick."

I called the police and had him arrested, but he denied everything, including his confession to me!

I can't understand it. He's walking around free on bail, and we are living in hell.

Please keep campaigning on this subject, Abby. I never dreamed it would happen in our family, but it did.

ARKANSAS MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: There is no reason for you to be "living in hell." If you feel that your husband is a threat to you and your children, take legal steps at once to ensure your protection.

Will Baby Like Simple Michael?

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — When the class of 1999 graduates from high school, the roll call may run from Adorable to Zygmont but there'll still be a lot of Michaels and Jennifers.

In the list of names given last year's Pennsylvania newborns, Michael and Jennifer held onto first place in popularity, but there were plenty of unusual monikers to keep them company, the state Health Department reported Wednesday.

The tally found that parents of 83,070 boys born last year used 4,573 names, while parents of 78,724 girls used 8,193 names.

The passing fancies of modern times were stuck to children named Vogue, Dior, Gaetano and Halston, while the once-popular Dinah, Wilma, Rudolf and Cleatus all were used just once.

The list is compiled "just for information," said Linda Mann of the department's Health Data Center. "Sometimes we get inquiries from parents who can't think of a name."

Some little boys got tough names — Butch, Brick, Nail, Buck and Jock. Other one-of-a-kind boys' names might be tough to grow up with — Sugar, Sunflower, Willow and Zygmont.

Gentle names for girls included Adorable, Flower and Rainbow, while Stormy, Breezy, Icey and Snow identify with the elements.

Some boys got saddled with place names, including Phila, Philly, Carlisle, Cleveland, Camden and Arlington. Going even farther were Dakota, Glasgow, Congo, Holland, Kenya, Tehran and even Eden.

Names for little girls also ranged far and wide, with Atlanta, Britain, Egypt, Guyana, Jamaica, Manila, Montana, Nazareth, Nevada and, of course, Heaven.

Famous names also lived again, with such heroic or legendary figures as Demosthenes, Edison, Gandhi, Homer, Nero, Lancelot and even Jesse James going to little boys.

Greek and Roman mythology was recalled by some parents who named their little girls Aphrodite after the goddess of love; Hera after the queen of heaven; Demeter for the earth goddess, and Leda, the mother of Helen of Troy. One little girl was named Lamia, which in Greek means "devouring monster" and originally was a female vampire.

For the second year in a row, Michael was the runaway winner as the most popular boy's name, going to 4,042 little fellows, 37 more than in 1980. Matthew displaced Jason as the second most popular boy's name with 2,746 infants so named. Jason slipped to 2,281 — 225 fewer selections than last year.

Filling out the top 10 boys' names were Christopher, 2,164; David, 2,090; John, 1,988; Joseph, 1,903; Robert, 1,892; James, 1,889 and Joshua, 1,734.

Jennifer was the top girls' name for the second year with 2,829 babies attached to it, but slipped from its 3,050 appearances in 1980. It still outdistanced Jessica, 2,288, which came in second. Amanda, 1,539, was third followed by Melissa, 1,495; Nicole, 1,344; Sarah, 1,142; Amy, 1,122; Heather, 1,063; Rebecca, 991; and Stephanie, 930.

Rebecca and Joshua were newcomers to the most popular lists, displacing Brian and Kelly.

French Books For Kids

Libraries are becoming more sophisticated places. Once the public library was a place for books and absolute silence. Now they have become information centers with Sheppard Memorial Library offering such things as art works and phonograph records to its patrons. Most recently Sheppard has added a collection of books and records in French in its childrens' room. The collection is on loan from the N. C. Foreign Language Center.

The center has available books, records and cassettes in over 40 languages. Childrens' Librarian Hansy Jones said library officials were "excited about having this deposit collection on hand." She explained that books had been borrowed from the center previously but having the collection on hand can serve more people efficiently. It is an exciting development for the library because it makes available to our young people material they have never had previously.

Military Increases Too Lavish

The White House was stunned by a resounding defeat in the House of the MX missile production plans. The plan, a prime project of the Reagan administration, was defeated by a 245-176 vote, which deleted the $988 million from the budget that would have built the first missiles. The administration does not consider the plan dead and the president has said he will be taking his arguments to the people. Perhaps the president will save the MX missile plan but he should be listening to the message the people are sending him through Congress. That is that the public considers the large increases proposed in military spending to be too high a price to pay in the austere times. The president must scale down military spending increases if we are to avoid crushing deficits.

THIS AFTERNOON

Teacher Shortage

By PAUL O'CONNOR
RALEIGH — The public schools are facing a serious shortage of agricultural and vocational education teachers, a pair of N.C. State University professors say. Already, some agricultural education programs are being scaled down and industrial arts programs are operating with teachers who aren't fully certified. In several other vocational education fields, the teacher shortage could begin damaging programs within three years. Linda Dillon and Larry Jewell, professors of occupational education at NCSU, recently issued a statement about what they say is a fast-declining pool of teachers in vocational and agricultural studies. "It is an irony that as more and more high school students are taking vocational education courses to learn marketable skills, fewer and fewer people are electing to become vocational education teachers," Ms. Dillon says. Enrollment in NCSU's vocational teacher training program has dropped so much that she fears the teaching of some disciplines at the university level may be dropped due to lack of demand. In addition to agricultural education, teacher shortages already exist in North Carolina in marketing and distributive education, occupational exploration and vocational training for the disabled and handicapped. Problems will soon arise in the supply of teachers for home economics, health occupations and industrial arts education. Only in a few areas, such as business and office education, are there enough teachers to meet the demand. "In 1976, over 1,000 people were trained in North Carolina universities who were certified to enter teaching in vocational education areas," she says. In 1988-79 ... the overall number had dropped to approximately 500." Jewell reports that NCSU and N.C. A&T University graduated only 37 agricultural educators last year and only 15 of them went into teaching. There were 50 jobs open. So, some programs did without and others substituted with non-certified teachers. In all, about one out of every nine agricultural education programs in state high schools is short of teachers. Five universities in the state offer programs in industrial arts education but last year they graduated only 10 people — five of whom went into teaching. Ms. Dillon says these shortages mean serious problems for our schools. The health education students receive in school is invaluable, she says. Yet, many schools find trouble when they look for qualified health teachers. As for agricultural education, consider the rapid modernization of farming techniques. Although young people learn from their farmer parents, in these days of new techniques they need farm education also. "Farming is becoming a very technical business and the ones that are closing down ... are the people who assume they don't need an education to farm." Why such a shortage at a time when the unemployment rate is around 10 percent? Several reasons, the professors say. First is the impression that there are no jobs. There has been so much talk lately of an oversupply of teachers that young people aren't even looking at the profession. Second, the salary. "People think salaries are not comparable with private industry. Actually, things are not so bad" in terms of an 180-day work year. Third, the problem has been overshadowed by the shortage of science and math instructors — a problem which is getting attention at the highest levels of state government. Some schools are easing the shortage by hiring teachers from out of state. "But why at a time of such unemployment can't we be filling these jobs with North Carolina people?" Ms. Dillon asks.

Other Editors Say Backward Step

(Rocky Mount Telegram)
The N.C. Criminal Justice Education and Training Standards Commission recently adopted a weird regulation, one that can only be regarded as a step backward in the state's efforts to maintain high police personnel standards. Under the new regulations, a person convicted of drunken driving will remain eligible to become a state law enforcement officer. The new standard, which takes effect Jan. 1, has, quite naturally, raised objections from some law enforcement officers. "With all of the emphasis on fighting drunk driving in the state, I think this was a bad move," said Capt. Dan Wood of the Greensboro Police Department, who serves on the 25-member standards commission. Brent Hackney, a spokesman for Gov. Jim Hunt, said Hunt was unaware that the standard had been changed. Hunt has mounted a campaign to stiffen penalties against drunken driving. The commission, which certifies all state law enforcement officers, voted 14-9 last month to allow those convicted of drunken driving or other serious misdemeanor charges to become law enforcement officers if a municipal police chief, sheriff or state law enforcement agency will hire that person. Current regulations prohibit a person with a misdemeanor conviction within the past five years to be certified as a law enforcement officer. To be included, the misdemeanor must have carried a potential prison term of six months to two years. Police chiefs and sheriffs in large departments said they don't anticipate any problems because their job requirements are stiffer than the state's minimum standards. But High Point Police Chief J.A. Faircloth, also a member of the commission, said he is concerned that the commission is taking a step backward in its work to improve the law enforcement employment standards. At the very least, from a psychological standpoint, it hinders the fight against drunken driving. As Faircloth put it, "It's sort of a tacit admission that drunken driving is not all that bad."

So Move Over, People

Hi-tech industry, particularly computers, is recommended for people who are looking for a profession. For the moment the computer industry is supposed to be recession-proof. Well, up to a point. I heard this story about one of the largest computer companies in America. "Dr. Frankenstein, I want to congratulate you on your new software program which makes it possible for a robot to do the work of 100 human beings in one half the time." "It was nothing. The key was to get a computer to interface with the robot so they talk the same language. Once the robot was programmed to only respond to SAMPSON it learned to discriminate not only colors, but sizes, shapes and verbal orders. One executive sitting in his home in Greenwich, Connecticut, with our 'Artichoke 536,' can now give orders to every SAMPSON-programmed robot in the Western world." "We're aware of that and we're very proud of your work. It has turned out to be better than anything we dreamed of." "Have you sold the system already?" "No, we've been using it in our own company first, to make sure there aren't any bugs in it." "And?" "You're fired, Frankenstein." "I'm fired?" "Yes, the system you perfected made it possible for us to lay off 3,000 employees and still increase productivity by 40 percent." "But it was my idea. How can you fire the person who thought up the idea?" "The SAMPSON Robot has made it possible to eliminate your entire research and development department, which was a big financial drain on the company. We can now instruct the Robot to do the same work you were doing at a hundredth of the cost."

ART BUCHWALD

"It has perfected a new merchandising program, which will eliminate 90 percent of our sales force, and it's already figured out how to cut our taxes and phone bills by 70 percent. Dr. Frankenstein, you created a work of art, and we plan to give you full credit in our next stockholders report." "That's great, but I still need a job." "You should have thought of that when you started developing the SAMPSON Robot. Surely you knew that this labor-saving system would eliminate the need for people." "I was thinking of other companies we could sell it to; not our own." "We would be crazy not to use it ourselves. Our first responsibility is to cut labor costs as low as we possibly can. When you put a human being on the payroll, you not only have to add in his salary but also his Social Security, medical benefits, pension, vacation and coffee breaks. A robot can be depreciated over three years, and then it works for us for nothing." "Well, if you feel that way about it, I'll go to another company and make a better SAMPSON than you have." "I wouldn't do that if I were you. According to SAMPSON, which is now doing our law work, if you go to another firm and work on the same research you will be guilty of giving away trade secrets and our robot advises us to sue you." "But you're taking my livelihood away from me." "We're not taking it away from you. The robot you invented is. If you were as smart as you think you are you wouldn't have programmed it to do research and development. Once you scientists take on a problem, you never think of the consequences of your successes." "Well, if I can't work in R&D give me a job doing something else. I have only two more years before I get my pension. I'll work in the mailroom." "All right. I'll ask SAMPSON, on my computer." (Please Turn To Page 5)

In-Fighting Is Difficult

By EVANS WITT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — What is Ronald Reagan up to these days with unemployment rising, the long-anticipated recovery still just an anticipation, and Congress getting testy? Being a world leader, that's what. Like many a president before him, Reagan has discovered that domestic problems are just unbelievably difficult to solve. Reagan has his economic program pretty much in place, but it hasn't yet produced the recovery he hoped. About all Reagan can do now is direct his troops to keep fighting in the trenches on Capitol Hill to cut social spending more and to protect defense outlays and the tax cuts. Such in-fighting doesn't excite people much, doesn't have many political benefits and doesn't get the incumbent on the evening news doing positive, interesting things. But international relations: now there is something that can make a president look very, well, very presidential.

And Reagan has been looking very presidential lately. He just got back from a trip to Brazil, Colombia and Costa Rica, where he was pictured with the leaders of other nations, denouncing drug traffickers, attacking communist-inspired guerrilla movements and handing out a $1.2 billion loan to tide Brazil over some tight times. Pakistani President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq is here now, meeting with Reagan as part of an eight-day state visit. Denmark's Prime Minister Paul Schuster will be in next Monday for a White House chat. In the last two months at the White House, Reagan has hosted President Suharto of Indonesia, King Hassan II of Morocco, President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon, Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini of Italy, President Luis Alberto Monge Alvarez of Costa Rica and Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany.

And the parade of foreign leaders will continue next year. Japan's new prime minister, Yasuhiro Nakasone, will be at the White House Jan. 18. Austria's Bruno Kreisky will follow Feb. 3. Reagan is also likely to do some more foreign travel next year, including a swing to Japan and the Far East. Presidential involvement in foreign affairs does not, of course, solve any of the nation's domestic problems. But the country's international relationships are clearly part of the presidential duties and, indeed, some would say the most important duties in the age of nuclear weapons. A president's dealings with other countries offer some benefits to the politician who occupies the Oval Office. Foreign affairs is an area where the president can present the image of a statesman, a leader who can reach agreements and sign treaties and one who deals with the big issues of the world, not the niggling, bothersome details of day-to-day government. Such images are usually beneficial to a president, and particularly to one who has other problems. Jimmy Carter had a host of domestic problems — including inflation — that he seemed unable to solve. As a result, his standing with the public plunged for much of his term with two exceptions — after the Middle East peace agreement was reached at the Camp David summit and after Iranians first took Americans hostage at the Tehran embassy. As the Iranian hostage situation and the Bay of Pigs incident with President John Kennedy demonstrated, even international events which are arguably defeats for the United States can at least temporarily benefit the president, as Americans tend to "rally 'round the flag." Reagan has an additional image issue tied to foreign policy. During the 1980 campaign, Carter tried to paint Reagan as a trigger-happy amateur (Please Turn To Page 5)

Strength For Today

EVERYDAY MIRACLES

A great religious figure once wrote: "I was looking out of my window at night and beheld the stars and the whole majestic vault of God, held up without my being able to see the pillars on which the Master caused it to rest. Unbelievers? Poor fools! Is not God always there?" Can anyone tell why the earth revolves on its axis and completes every year the circuit of its orbit? Has there ever been a greater miracle than the fact that male and female cells, microscopic in size, coming together carry within them the heritage of centuries and produce a living being? One reason why we find it hard to believe in miracles is because we are miracle-hardened. Miracles occur about us every day. They are part of our continued existence. The things religious literature terms miracles are only slight advancements on common things that are happening about us all the time. — Elisha Douglass

Profits: Yours And Brokers

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — Big Board brokers who deal with the public earned $497 million in the third quarter, $88 million more than the old record, four times the previous quarter's income, 10 times earnings in the like period of 1981. That information from the New York Stock Exchange, which is the Big Board, is enough to return the Christmas spirit to the financial capitals of America, which have a long-term but interrupted tradition of magnificent bonuses. It probably will have an impact on Main Street too, because much of the brokers' money was earned in buying stocks for the public, which has seen its portfolios swell by scores of billions of dollars since last summer. Morgan Guaranty estimated in its November Survey, a monthly economic analysis, that because of investment market strength "the rise in consumer net worth since July has amounted to more than $300 billion."

A figure that high pales only in comparison with the gross national product and the federal debt. By comparison it even makes President Reagan's budget deficits seem small, which is more than his aides have been able to achieve. It also makes another figure look small, and that figure is probably more important than what the brokers or the customers made. It is the earnings of the companies whose shares made it all possible. How are they doing? Poorly — much worse than a year ago, when things weren't too hot either. To be specific, third-quarter pretax profits were at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $179.9 billion, or 22.9 percent lower than in the same period a year earlier. After-tax profits were down also — 21 percent to $119.1 billion. It would be nice if you could just hide from such a reality, but everyone should know by now that hiding from the financial facts isn't likely to make things any better. The federal government has learned this. Individuals too. During a bear market, for example, you may suspend your reading of the daily stock quotations, the less pain to endure, but by so doing you leave your portfolio to chance. Unobserved, things might deteriorate even more. It's the same with profits — you just can't ignore them; they've been terrible. And because they've been so bad, that brings up the question: Has the stock market forgotten that stock prices need to be supported by profits? Many analysts will tell you it has indeed forgotten. To them, the market has gone on a wild binge that demands correction. In effect, they argue — often in defense of their forecasts gone bad — that stocks must fall back into line. The market, of course, deals in the future rather than the present or past. What matters, it is said, is what is likely to happen to profits next year, and many brokers insist they will soar, vindicating the market as a forecaster. Jack Lavery, Merrill Lynch chief economist, forecasts that after-tax operating profits will rise throughout 1983, and reach a level of 29.9 percent higher (than in the year-earlier period) in the first half of 1984. Edward Yardeni, Prudential-Bache Securities chief economist, is much more conservative in his estimate. He foresees an improvement of roughly 15 percent over this year — a disappointing level in view of this year's low base. What is certain is that unless profits rise next year there can be no real improvement in the job market or in wages or in the overall economic condition. And that probably would mean also the end of that seemingly incongruous situation of brokerage-house profits and a rising stock market existing side by side with the highest jobless rate in four decades.

Error In Death Report Costly For Vet

By BILL OUTLAW
Associated Press Writer
FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.
(AP) — The cost of living is tough enough for Korean War veteran Horace Hall, but erroneous computer reports of his death are killing him financially.

Hall and his relatives have been notified by the Veterans Administration on two occasions that Hall, 53, had died.

While some may find it amusing, Hall doesn't — the second computer notice of his death caused his disability and retirement benefits to be cut off.

"At first I thought it was a joke," Hall said in a telephone interview Thursday night. "But later on I became upset."

He says he has lost an estimated $1,200 in benefits, losses which have forced him to borrow money in order to pay his bills.

Hall says the computer notices of his death were sent after a woman named Mrs. Annie Hall of Atlanta filed claims to receive the benefits as his widow. The claims included Hall's Social Security number and VA claim number.

"How she got them, I don't know," Hall said. "I don't know her."

Hall did obtain a divorce from a Philadelphia woman before marrying his present wife. But he says his first wife, Lorraine Harris, is living in Williamston, N.J. He doesn't think she or anyone in her family is responsible for the problem.

Hall's 78-year-old mother, Rose Bundrage, became hysterical when she received the first letter from the VA in early September saying she was "a designated beneficiary of a government life insurance policy as the result of the death" of her son.

"She just couldn't stop calling me," Hall said, adding that he talked with her at least 15 times that day.

Simultaneously, Hall's 10-year-old daughter, Lisa, was informed she was a beneficiary of a similar policy left by her dead father.

"We are sorry to learn of the veteran's death," wrote G. T. Woodward, adjudication officer of the VA in Atlanta, Ga. "We realize this is a difficult adjustment period for you and your children and wish to offer assistance in applying for benefits to which you may be entitled."

A clerk at the Cumberland County Veterans Service Office helped resurrect Hall in the eyes of the VA. On Oct. 14, the VA's regional office in Philadelphia wrote Hall to say who might get the country into war.

Reagan's trips and the visitors to the White House show Reagan at work on foreign policy as a man of peace, a leader who talks and negotiates, not one who hastily rushes troops into every hot spot.

Being an international statesman has a lot of benefits and very few drawbacks for a president. Reagan will undoubtedly take advantage for every opportunity to be a statesman as thoughts at the White House begin to turn to the 1984 election.

the VA had made a mistake.

"We are sorry, but our letter to your mother was in error," Joseph McCann of the VA's Insurance Operations Division wrote. "We are glad to hear that you are alive. We confused your records with that of another veteran. Your insurance has been restored to its former good standing."

In a Nov. 17 letter responding to a request for an investigation of the mix-up, Richard C. Vaspory of the Disabled American Veterans office in Winston-Salem said the VA "did declare you deceased inadvertently, due to associating a claim for death benefits from a Mrs. Annie B. Hall, who had your claim number..."

The letter added, "From everything I have reviewed in the claim file, I feel that they have made every effort possible to prevent this from ever recurring."

Hall had to furnish "proof of existence" to get his retirement pay started again, but once the checks resumed he thought the matter was cleared up.

But on Nov. 19, just three days after the DAV assurance, Hall got a familiar-looking letter from the VA regional office in Winston-Salem.

"We are sorry to learn of the death of Horace Hall and wish to express our deepest sympathy," wrote Barry M. Barker, VA finance officer. "Any Treasury Department checks which were not endorsed by Mr. Hall before death should be returned to the Department of the Treasury."

Hall returned to the Veterans Service Office in Fayetteville to seek assistance and requested help from the office of Rep. Charles Rose, R-N.C. He says he hopes to start receiving retirement checks again this month — provided, of course, that he doesn't get another computer notice telling relatives of his death.

U. S. Won't Sign 'Law Of The Sea'

By KERNAN TURNER
Associated Press Writer
MONTEGO BAY, Jamaica (AP) — More than 100 countries will sign the Law of the Sea Treaty today, establishing international rules for navigating the seas and mining the ocean floor. A U.S. signature will be noticeable by its absence.

United Nations Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar and more than 220 envoys gathered at a beach hotel overlooking the Caribbean Sea for the ceremony, which was expected to take at least eight hours because each delegation signs the treaty one by one.

U.N. officials said 129 countries including the United States sent envoys, but only 110 nations indicated they would sign the treaty. It was approved April 30 after nine years of U.N.-sponsored negotiations, and goes into force if ratified by at least 60 nations.

The United States confirmed Thursday it would not sign the treaty, although the U.S. delegate will place his name on the final draft of the Law of the Sea Conference which prepared the document. The final draft is a formal record of conference proceedings.

Nations which sign the final draft but not the treaty can participate as non-voting observers on a Preparatory Commission which will establish the International Seabed Authority and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea.

The authority will draft regulations to control the mining of seabeds, rich with trillions of dollars worth of fist-sized manganese nodules and other valuable minerals.

Other nations, including the Soviet Union, warned in formal statements presented at the final conference meeting here this week that they will treat the U.S. decision to remain outside the treaty as illegal.

Timofei B. Gouzenko, Soviet Merchant Marine Minister and the Kremlin's chief delegate to the meeting here, said Thursday that "the United States has chartered a course aimed at torpedoing the convention."

The U.S. refusal to sign is based on President Reagan's objections to the seabed mining provisions of the treaty, which would limit mining production and require industrialized nations to share technology with the underdeveloped world. Third World parties say the treaty is required because otherwise developed nations would monopolize the ocean's mineral riches.

"The deep seabed mining regime that would be established by the Convention is unacceptable and would not serve the interests of the international community," said U.S. delegate Thomas A. Clingan Jr., a University of Miami law professor.

Clingan said the United States agrees with the other treaty provisions on territorial and navigation rights. The pact establishes territorial seas for coastal states running 12 miles offshore and exclusive economic (fishing and drilling) zones out to 200 miles.

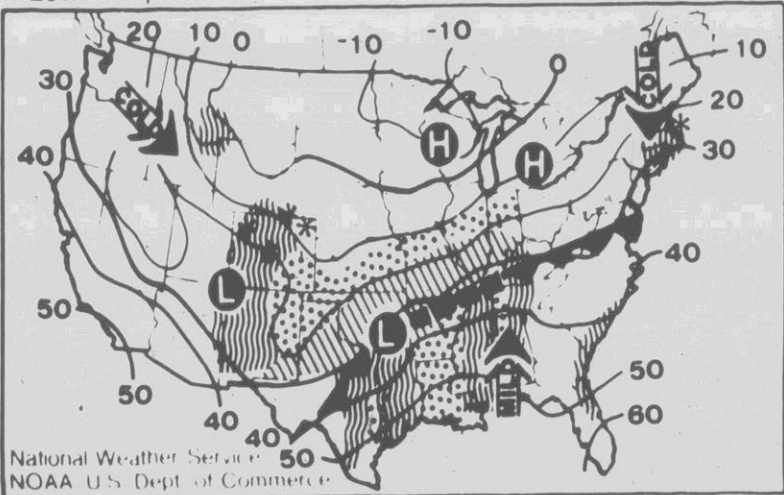

The U.S. position has the support of West Germany, Belgium and England which said they could not sign the treaty because of its seabed provisions.

Japan, also a pioneer seabed mining country, declined to sign the treaty but left open the likelihood of signing it a later date.

Nearly a dozen other countries also declined to sign for a variety of reasons, mostly related to territorial disputes with neighbors.

● Low Temperatures

WEATHER FORECAST — The National Weather Service forecasts precipitation Saturday in a wide band from Utah and Arizona stretching across to Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky and Ohio. Showers are also indicated for parts of the Southeast coast, the Northeast, Idaho and Montana. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
Wet weather is on the way this weekend in North Carolina, including a chance of sleet or snow in the mountain areas.

Skies will become mostly cloudy statewide tonight along with a chance of rain in the west. If the rain does move into the mountains tonight, it may begin as light sleet or snow in the higher elevations.

Lows are going to be in the 40s with 30s in the mountains. Rain will spread over the state during the day tomorrow. The rain may be locally heavy. Highs will be in the 40s and 50s except for some 30s in the northern mountains and 60s near the coast.

Along the coast, a small craft advisory remains in effect. Northeast winds at 15 to occasionally 25 knots will become easterly at 10 to 20 knots tonight. The winds will become more southerly at 10 to 20 knots Saturday except along the extreme northern portion of the coast where northeast winds are going to prevail.

A high pressure system centered over New England covered most of the Eastern United States early today. In North Carolina, skies today were generally clear although a few clouds were scattered across western sections.

Pre-dawn temperatures were in the 20s at most inland locations while 30s were common near the coast.

Oppose Closing Dix Hospital

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Dorothea Dix Hospital's medical staff has voted unanimously to oppose closing of the hospital's psychiatric wards because of concerns about future treatment for the more seriously ill patients.

Staff President C.W. Lynn said opposition was sparked because some patients could fall victim to "opportunistic individuals" who could set up supervised facilities to collect funds made available for alternative care.

SOLD SECRETS? — Coast Guard Reserve lieutenant Derrick "Rex" James, 36, of Miramar, Fla., covers his face with his hands as he is escorted out of federal court in Miami late Thursday after he was charged with selling secrets in the federal government's battle against drug smuggling. Life As It's Lived

A Season That Tests The Covetous Quality

By GAIL MICHAELS
This is the time of year that I sit and pour over the advertisements directed at men. I'm not talking about the ones for Jockey underwear or Brut cologne. I'm talking about the ones that inspire my covetousness with slogans like "Give her something that will last as long as her love. Diamonds." Or, "Mink, the softest way to her heart." Or "Make her dreams come true in an imported lace negligee from Dynasty Originals."

Just once I'd love to find one of these wildly extravagant gifts under the tree on Christmas morning. But I know that I won't. Years ago with one irrevocable act I crossed the fine line between luxury items and gifts from the hardware store. I had children.

It doesn't seem fair that children make such an outrageous difference in the way women are regarded by men in their lives, but they do. Rarely does one see cars in a BMW. Rarely does one see full-length sable in combination with a 2-year-old on a harness — unless, of course, the 2-year-old happens to be a contender in the next Kentucky Derby.

My aunt, who has three children and who received a bandsaw for her last birthday, put the matter into perspective. She and my uncle and their progeny were on their way to a Thanksgiving gathering of relatives when they passed an extremely elegant woman in a blue Mercedes Benz.

"Poor thing," my uncle commented. "She probably doesn't have a family. That's why she's out alone today."

"Poor thing," my aunt said. "And that's why she has that car."

Far be it from me, though, to blame my children entirely. Part of the difference between receiving a knife sharpener or a Frederick's of Hollywood gift certificate is a matter of expectation. I have a friend, for instance, who has let it be known for a number of years that she expects nothing less than Waterford. And her husband, rightly fearing that his house keys may suddenly become obsolete, complies.

But to me the threat of marital discord destroys the fun of receiving a luxury item. In the final analysis, I am not nearly so materialistic as I am romantic. The idea of having something costly doesn't appeal to me as much as the idea of having inspired my husband to envision me in something more than flannel and soft-boiled egg.

Thus, this year, like last year while dreaming of Neiman-Marcus, I made out my Christmas list from the discount store circulars. And this year like last year Phillip looked at it, turned up his nose at the thought of replacing my tattered dish towels (which have been on the list since 1976), and raised my hopes only to dash them.

"Do you know how much perfume costs nowadays?"

For an instant my heart thrilled. "No, but don't tell me."

"Okay, I won't," he said sadly, "but it's a whole lot more than a magazine subscription."

I don't think I'll hold my breath for Cosmopolitan.

N. C. To Fight Sale Of Land

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — State officials say they are prepared to fight federal proposals to include 156 parcels of land near the North Carolina coast for oil and gas exploration if their sale threatens coastal resources.

J.C. Jones, director of the N.C. Office of Marine Affairs, told a panel from the U.S. Department of the Interior at a public hearing Thursday that the parcels should not be included in next summer's planned sale of undersea land for exploration purposes.

"At the hearing two years ago on the first sale of tracts off our coast... we appeared and asked that six tracts within a few miles of Cape Hatteras be deleted from the sale," Jones said.

"The Department of the Interior chose not to follow that recommendation, and Gov. (Jim) Hunt was forced to file suit to protect the best interests of our citizens. I think this shows how seriously we regard Outer Continental Shelf activities."

The suit was later dropped when none of the oil companies participating in the sale submitted bids on the disputed tracts. Those six tracts are not included in the upcoming sale.

The disputed parcels are located 15-to-25 miles from shore and include the wreck site of the Civil War ship Monitor. That site encompasses five parcels proposed for sale and must be deleted to ensure the ship's protection, state officials urged.

Federal estimates show that little if any oil or gas is likely to be discovered on those tracts, Jones said. That means the nation would be giving up little in its effort to develop domestic energy sources by dropping them from the sale, he said.

The spots are included in 5,727 parcels of land that Interior Secretary James Watt has proposed offering in the July 1983 sale, more than half of which are located east of the North Carolina coast. The rest are located along the coasts of South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

Movie Magazine Most Popular China Publication

By LIU HEUNG SHING
Associated Press Writer
PEKING (AP) — It prints inspirational tidbits about stars and fulminates against Western cinematic decadence. It previews dramatic new films, like the rousing tale of an Army dog trainer, and carries color pictures of beckoning starlets.

With a circulation of 9 million, Mass Cinema — Dazhong in Chinese — is China's best-selling publication, surpassing even the People's Daily, the Communist Party newspaper, which has a circulation of 6 million.

Last year, the monthly magazine, which costs about 15 cents an issue, made a profit of $1.8 million, but its editors, who earn the equivalent of $50 a month, turn all proceeds over to the state.

Editor Cui Boquan and his staff of 23 have devised a formula that makes politics palatable by blending it with breezy profiles and what's happening in an industry that produces about 100 films each year by 12 major studios.

The magazine naturally includes denunciations of bourgeois cinema and reports of Chinese film workers enthusiastically studying piles of documents from the 12th Communist Party Congress.

Everyone in China must study them and film workers are expected to declare in political study sessions how they will implement its triumphant spirit.

Of greater interest to most readers, however, was the November issue's report on the American film, "E.T., the Extra-Terrestrial," the story of an alien stranded on Earth. The magazine praised its technology and artistry, mentioned the accompanying T-shirt fad and called the film wholesome fare.

"At present," the article said, "when the American screen is filled with terror, violence, sex, drug addiction and enormous psychological turmoil, 'E.T.' is a film that had to be made."

When Henry Fonda died, the monthly praised his last film, "On Golden Pond," and said in his greatest roles Fonda portrayed "honest Americans, hard-working, strong and oppressed heroes."

The magazine also polls its readers for the "Golden Rooster" awards each year, China's equivalent of the Oscar.

The importance of inner beauty is also a standard topic to prevent readers and movie-goers from becoming too enamored of pretty faces.

Chinese readers, however, sometimes are more moralistic than their editors. When the magazine reprinted the photograph of a kiss from the British film "Cinderella," letters from outraged readers poured in and were published for months. The hate mail keeps coming but it's no longer printed.

"Some people said it was immoral," Cui said in an interview. "We thought it was quite normal. After all, foreigners do kiss, and it is from the film."

Photographs of kisses, however, have not appeared since.

The magazine also has been criticized for being too bourgeois and using too many cover girls to attract readers. Bowing before public disapproval, the editors put the elderly and bespectacled best actor of the year — Zhang Yen — on the cover of the May issue. More than 100,000 issues were left unsold — a loss of about $15,000.

At an emergency editorial meeting, it was decided to turn the magazine around and display the back cover, which featured actress Liu Xiumin. All the copies were sold, and cover girls returned.

The latest issue previews a new feature film, "I Am Among Them" — the story of reforming the management system in stocking and repair factories and the young workers who are striving for modernization.

Another film previewed is "Post in the Birch Grove," the saga of an earnest Army dog trainer jilted by his flighty girlfriend, who belongs to a dance troupe.

The issue also describes the thriving West German film industry and the realism of Italian films. Those movies, however, are not shown to the Chinese masses. Only a handful of privileged cultural workers are admitted to special private screenings.

In a letter to the editor, a distraught reader from Sichuan, apparently a policeman, complains that defective movies do not correctly portray honorable, disciplined police.

The film "She Came Out of the Fog" portrays a public security bureau officer falling in love, wrote Huang Hu. The object of his affection is an educated, unemployed young woman who has returned from political banishment in the countryside and now has gone astray in the big city.

Too many movies give the impression that the police completely disobey regulations, he said. "Everyone knows that love between a policeman and the subject of his investigation is absolutely forbidden."

"Please make your movies more realistic."

A Floating Food Bank

By BOB DVORCHAK
Associated Press Writer
PITTSBURGH (AP) — A floating concert stage, used in balmy weather to bring music to the people, is making a five-city river trip to collect food for the unemployed.

KDKA-TV, sponsor of the floating food bank, will turn over donated canned goods and other non-perishables to the Pittsburgh Community Food Bank, which serves 222 agencies and helps feed 89,000 people each month in western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia.

"This is great. We never have enough food," said Barbara Murock, who works for the food bank and attended launching ceremonies Wednesday.

"If you're unemployed, you might be able to miss a car payment or a house payment, but you can't put your stomach on hold," she said.

The five-day drive began at noon, with people bringing bags and boxes of food aboard the diesel-powered "Point Counterpoint II," which is normally a floating soundstage for the American Wind Symphony Orchestra.

The barge was to visit Sewickley and Bridgewater today, Monongahela on Friday and Tarentum on Saturday before returning to its berth below the Sixth Street Bridge along the Allegheny River for a wrapup collection Sunday afternoon.

The voyage was the idea of Thomas Goodgame, vice president and general manager of KDKA-TV.

"It's going to be a long, cold winter for many of our neighbors. We hope this will ease some of the suffering," he said.

Computer Said A Better Guard

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The computer is a better cop than a human when it comes to protecting the security of a building after hours, according to a fire and security expert here.

"A guard can only be in one place at a time," says Eugene Fuss, manager for Honeywell's fire and security systems.

The answer, says Fuss, is a computerized protection system that detects anyone — intruder, vandal or burglar — the moment he moves into a protected area. A silent alarm is then flashed to a central console where security guards are on duty.

Indispensable One Percent

NEW YORK (AP) — Our oceans contain 97 percent of the world's water, according to Rand McNally's "Great Geographical Atlas."

Of the remaining quantity, 2 percent of the world's water is locked up in the ice caps of Greenland and Antarctica, which leaves only 1 percent on the surface of the Earth, under the ground and in the air.

According to the atlas, the importance of that 1 percent, is, however, inestimable: most life forms could not exist without it, despite the fact that many are threatened by it in the form of storms and floods.

Send-A-Santa Deal Offers Big Variety

MIAMI (AP) — "Ho, ho, ho!" exclaims a bearded Santa Claus, who then doffs his red robe, red longjohns and multicolored underwear.

The stripping Santa offered by Dittysgram for $50 is only one of a host of gimmicks that Miami-area novelty delivery firms are offering for the Yuletide.

There are 10 send-a-Santa services in Miami, and their bearded wonders come in all shapes, sizes and sexes. There are singing Santas, dancing Santas, picketing Santas — and, of course, stripping Santas.

Perform-A-Gram's $55 Saint Nick Santa bares all but briefs, said company president Marilyn LeDee. "It's a good show," she said.

For $75, Atlanticgram will send a Santa who'll strip to red-and-white briefs while singing along to a Christmas tune by Elvis Presley. "It's all done in good taste and it's a lot of fun," said co-owner Roger Hughes, who claims to have pioneered the stripping Santa.

For $80, Strip-A-Gram provides a Santa, male or female, who greets the intended with a "Ho, ho, ho, Santa has something for you," then removes a red-and-white outfit.

"It's a great way to lift someone's spirits," said owner Mark Elkin. "The act is a bit risqué, but it's in good taste" because the Santas wear something to "cover the essentials."

For $80, Geisha-Gram Etc. offers stripping female Santas who perform a "very suggestive" 15-minute act where they sit in a customer's lap and strip to a bikini, owner Ginger Reiter said.

Tamer Santas are still available, fully clothed, and they're popular for children or for parties. They range in price from $40 to $55.

There's also an option for seasonal protest. One firm offers a Santa who will picket outside the home of choice for $30 an hour.

Other Doctors Suggest Artificial Heart Research

By GEORGE TIBBIS
Associate Writer
SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — As Barney Clark regains health with his artificial heart, doctors around the nation are "popping" with suggestions for research on the unique patient, his physicians say.

Clark remained today in critical but stable condition at the University of Utah Medical Center, where officials say he is gradually regaining consciousness after a series of short but intense seizures Tuesday morning. Hospital officials said the 61-year-old retired dentist from the Seattle area has been responding well to treatment and was alert enough Thursday to indicate he wanted nurses to do a better job brushing his teeth. Dr. Chase Peterson, university vice president for health sciences, said Clark would not be taken off the critical list until he can converse with doctors, which might be as long as five days. He said Clark's vital signs were normal, he had no signs of postoperative infection and, although still on a respirator, was showing more ability to breathe on his own. He said Clark's kidneys were functioning better than before the operation Dec. 2, with the help of the mechanical heart. Peterson said Clark's new heart, the Jarvik-7, driven by a compressor linked to the patient by two hoses, "has been an advantage all along" in his recovery from the operation. Doctors are able to separately regulate the output of the heart's left and right ventricles. They turned a dial on the compressor to increase blood flow to Clark's kidneys, helping increase kidney output and speed recovery from mild kidney failure. Removing water from the body often takes days, but in Clark's case the process began almost immediately, Peterson said. The new heart also was used to remove water from Clark's lungs by decreasing blood flow to the lungs and increasing outflow, he said, and the lungs drained within 15 minutes. Peterson said he has received many telephone calls from doctors who are excited about the operation and want to offer suggestions about what might be learned from the unprecedented opportunity to manipulate the heart. "Their minds are popping when they think of things that can be done," he said. He said the suggestions included manipulating other organs as Clark's lungs and kidneys were, and experimenting with drugs that are believed — but not known — to act on the heart muscle and which doctors are reluctant to use because their effects are unclear. But Peterson said the sole concern of doctors now is Clark's recovery from surgery and his years of degenerative heart disease. Beyond that, he said, the only purposes of the first experimental implant are to see if the heart works in a human being, how cumbersome it will be and the quality of life it will afford. Any other tests involving Clark's new heart would have to be approved by the university's Institutional Review Board, which oversees human experimentation. Clark's care and recovery are generating vast amounts of new medical information, Peterson said. But he said the decision to discuss that information publicly will be up to Clark's doctor, William C. DeVries, the only surgeon authorized by the Food and Drug Administration to implant the Jarvik-7. Also Thursday, Clark received a telegram from President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, which said, "God bless and keep you. Our hearts and prayers are with you and your family. You have given us all a great lesson in faith." While not fully conscious as he recovered from Tuesday's seizures, Clark was becoming more responsive to other people Thursday, Peterson said. He said nurses "were brushing his teeth this morning and he wanted it done again, indicating it wasn't done to his satisfaction, which I guess is a good sign." Clark could not speak because of the respirator tube, but waved his hand in front of his mouth in a brushing motion, Peterson said.

Speaking of Your Health...

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

Simple First-aid Kit Can Be Lifesaver

At a recent meeting of medical educators, I again pointed out that there is a vast untapped potential for safety in the trunk of every automobile on the road.

A simple, well-equipped first-aid kit can be lifesaving in emergency situations. Such equipment, coupled with a knowledge of first aid, can mean the difference between life and death.

Every car can be converted into a temporary ambulance to meet an emergency when it arises.

In the case of a serious accident, the contributions that can be made before professional help arrives are enormous.

The fundamental rules of first aid can be learned with less than two hours of intensive training. Such an investment of time can produce dividends as important as life itself.

A great sense of security could be derived from the knowledge that other automobiles passing in all directions also contain safety equipment should a need arise.

A moisture-proof box divided into small compartments can contain sterile packets of gauze pads, gauze bandage, and cotton. Rolls of adhesive tape, scissors, safety pins, tweezers, a rubber tourniquet and a good flashlight should be included.

There is no need to overload such an emergency kit with splints and burdensome equipment. Splints can always be created if a fracture is evident.

The addition of a small canister of oxygen is of vital importance for the treatment of a heart emergency.

An identifying flag attached to the radio antenna can indicate that help is urgently needed. Passing automobiles would be alerted to the call for medical help.

Physicians, paramedical assistants, firemen, police officers, lifeguards and others with emergency training would know that an emergency existed.

The Red Cross is accepted as one of the leading forces in the total problem of safety. Courses in first aid are available to those who have the interest and the foresight to appreciate the value of these programs. Booklets issued by the Red Cross can teach youngsters, adolescents and adults the fundamental rules of saving lives.

SPEAKING OF YOUR HEALTH... Police and fire departments all over the United States capture my admiration. There are few other city, state or federal agencies in which members put their lives on the line each day when they set out for work.

In addition, the police and fire departments are now considered the most important part of the health team. In many instances they contribute enormously in lifesaving emergency situations. We cannot too casually take for granted their importance in the total health structure.

Dr. Coleman welcomes questions from readers. Please write to him in care of this newspaper.

A NEW FACE — Jimmy Reynolds of Veneta, Oregon, is shown before and after surgery to reconstruct his deformed face. At top, Reynolds, 20, apprehensively awaits the operation as a doctor checks him out. Below, he is rolled out of the operation room where he underwent surgery for 14 hours all day Wednesday. Dr. Stephen Miller said the results exceeded all expectations and that today Reynolds was stable and all his vital signs "very good". The operation was at the Oregon Health Sciences University Hospital. (AP Laserphoto)

Two Charged In Marine's Death

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Marine Sgt. Jorge Delgado, 23, of Jacksonville, was found shot to death with his throat slit Wednesday night and his wife and another Marine have been charged with murder, police said.

Delsina Shields Delgado, 25, and Marine Sgt. Willie

James Gladden, 21, were arrested and charged with first-degree murder and were being held without bond, police said.

Onslow County medical examiner Dr. Charles Garrett said the cause of death was three .25-caliber gunshot wounds to the head.

Four Collisions In Greenville Checked

An estimated $25,275 damage resulted from a series of four traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police Thursday.

Heaviest damage, investigators said, resulted from a 10:24 p.m. collision on Cotanche Street, 42 feet north of the Ninth Street intersection.

Officers said a car driven by John Kevin Parolari of Charlotte ran off Cotanche Street, struck a "no Parking" sign and then collided with a parked car owned by A.B. Robin Jr. of Route 4, Laurinburg, which was parked in an East Carolina University off-street parking lot.

The Parolari vehicle then continued on across the corner of the parking lot, crossed Ninth Street and collided with a parked car owned by Velma Cooper Foskey of Route 1, Merritt.

Officers said the force of the impact with the "No Parking" sign knocked the sign 115 feet, while the force of the collision with the Robin car knocked that vehicle almost 29 feet from where it was parked.

Police estimated damage at $5,000 to the Parolari car, $12,000 to the Robin vehicle, $700 to the Foskey car and $75 to the sign.

Parolari was charged with driving under the influence and careless and reckless driving.

An estimated $1,800 damage resulted to each of two cars involved in a 5:36 p.m. collision on Greenville Boulevard, 125 feet west of the Trade Street intersection.

Investigators identified the drivers of the cars involved as Rita Nell Brown of Azalea Gardens and Michael Anthony Purvis of Robersonville. Ms. Brown was reported injured in the crash.

Cars driven by Irwin Kitchen Weeks of Route 2, Scotland Neck, and Gail Elizabeth Gastello of 1602 Brownlea Drive collided about 6:49 p.m. at the intersection of Greenville Boulevard and St. Andrew's Drive, causing an estimated $800 damage to the Weeks car and $2,500 damage to the Gastello car.

A 5:55 p.m. collision at the intersection of Johnston and Billmore streets involved cars driven by Lori Lee Wooten of 1904A E. Fourth St. and Christopher Keith Evans of 202 Williamsburg Drive, officers said.

Damage was estimated at $600 to the Evans car, while no damage was reported to the Wooten vehicle.

Party Set For Patients

A Christmas party for children who have been patients in the neonatal intensive care unit of Pitt County Memorial Hospital will be held Sunday from 2 to 4 p.m. in the physical therapy room of the hospital.

Approximately 900 invitations have been sent to the children who live in the 29-county region of eastern North Carolina which the unit serves. The 33-bed neonatal intensive and intermediate care unit, which opened in 1978, is designated as a tertiary referral center for eastern North Carolina. It is funded by the East Carolina University School of Medicine and the state perinatal program.

Those who would like to attend the party may call 757-4378.

Elks Collect Gifts For Veterans

Greenville Elks Lodge No. 1645 has collected books, playing cards and toilet articles to benefit patients of the Veterans Administration Hospital in Durham.

The gift collection was organized by Elks members James Davenport and Lacy Harrell. They will be presented to the hospital Wednesday by Woodrow Boyd, a member of the Disabled American Veterans organization here.

The collection was made among Elks members and their families and friends. "One of our main efforts as Elks,"

Harrell said, "is to be of service to American veterans. This has always been a major purpose of our organization and it will continue to be."

Fire Destroys Simpson Home

SIMPSON — Fire destroyed the home of the Godfrey Reed family, Lot 6, Wilson Trailer Park, at Simpson Thursday. The loss included several hundred dollars worth of already-purchased Christmas gifts.

Fire Chief Hyman Boyd said the 11:45 a.m. fire appeared to have started near the kitchen sink. He said he believes it was electrical in origin.

The Simpson and Eastern Pines fire departments fought the blaze until 12:58 p.m., Boyd said.

Bethel Council Holds Session

Directors of the Bethel Council of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce held a planning meeting Thursday night, following a dinner for directors and their wives.

Those attending divided into groups to discuss community development, economic and industrial development, organization and membership, and public and government affairs. The results of the planning session will be used as the basis for the Bethel Council's program of work for 1983.

Hunt Announces A Nat'l Task Force

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt has announced formation of a group of governors and national business leaders to focus attention on public education at a time when the U.S. government is "backing away" from its historical support of new initiatives in education.

Hunt appointed the group Thursday as chairman of the Education Commission of the States, a national group of governors, legislators and educators.

The North Carolina governor said 11 task force members would be governors and 11 would be chief executive officers of corporations but he did not release the names of those appointed to the National Task Force on Education.

"America's economy has no greater need than trained hands and educated minds,"

Hunt said in a prepared statement. "To prepare today's students for tomorrow's jobs, we must forge an alliance among government, business and education. We can no longer afford for them to be adversaries; they must be allies."

Educators need the money and advice of business and the best way to meet those needs is to involve business leaders in school planning, Hunt said.

In North Carolina, Hunt said IBM has given computers to each kindergarten class in the Raleigh school system in a reading program.

Quarterly Meeting

Quarterly meeting services will be held at Phillippi Church of Christ at 1610 Farmville Blvd. tonight through Sunday.

The Rev. Randy B. Royal of St. Peter Church at Seven Pines will conduct the Sunday morning worship service, while the Rev. Johnnie L. Lofton, the choir and ushers will conduct the 3 p.m. Sunday program.

Christmas Gifting Made Easier With Beverly Hills Shop Stock

By STEPHEN FOX
Associated Press Writer
BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Need a gift for that pet lover on your list? How about Beverly Hills Kitty Litter — shredded money from the Federal Reserve Board.

A football fanatic might like the Sport Horn, a $49.95 computerized bullhorn which broadcasts insults and also plays college fight songs, marches and various ethnic tunes.

The items are part of the stock in trade of The Price of His Toys, just one of the swank shops of Beverly Hills trying to satisfy the expensive, or simply strange, whims of the well-to-do this Christmas.

The Price of His Toys bills itself as a toy store for men. Indolent duffers might enjoy its Lazy Golfer, a $50 club with a reel holding 50 feet of cord attached to a golf ball.

For the corporate climber there's the Business Booster, a $79 wooden item which resembles an ordinary paperweight but fires off business cards as if they were missiles.

Another big seller is a $16 board game called Mid-Life Crisis, in which players attempt to navigate the shoals of middle age without going bankrupt, getting divorced or cracking up.

Alvin Kupperman, manager of The Price of His Toys, says his most expensive item — a sophisticated home computer and communications system — costs $10,000. But it's gifts in the $25-to-$100 range that are making it a "very good" Christmas season for him.

There are plenty of expensive trinkets for sale on nearby Rodeo Drive. Cartiers, for instance, has an 18-karat gold pendant in the shape of the Disney character "Goofy," inlaid with diamonds and rubies and priced at $3,500.

At Jerry Magnin, solid gold fox-head cuff links with eyes made of rubies go for $1,250.

Even Bausch and Lomb is out for gold this year — selling a limited edition of solid-gold sunglasses with gold-tone lenses. They're $1,890, but you get two cases.

At David Orgell the emphasis is on sterling silver — telephones, stethoscopes and, of course, ping pong paddles with sterling silver handles.

Alfred Dunhill's hand-crafted crocodile attache case with 18-karat gold fixtures costs a mere $25,000, including a variety of Dunhill accessories. Dunhill also has pipes commemorating the space shuttle and a "Show Biz Pipe" shaped like a microphone.

Another gift for the frustrated entertainer is an electronic gizmo from Japan which has taped orchestra recordings of 600 popular songs, an electronic echo chamber and a reverberator. The user warbles into a microphone and The Singing Machine mixes the voice in with the orchestra, adds sound effects and spits out a finished cassette tape. Hal Roach Studios is selling the item for between $350 and $3,000, depending on how sophisticated you want to go.

CHECKING THE FLOW — Emory University's Dr. James H. Wood checks the flow of blood in the brain of a patient. By "thinning" the blood and getting more oxygen to damaged parts of the brain, results of a stroke can be minimized or reversed. (AP Laserphoto)

Promising Therapy For Stroke

By ROBERT BYRD
Associated Press Writer
ATLANTA (AP) — A simple treatment to "thin" the blood of stroke victims could reduce or eliminate the disease's crippling effects, including paralysis, and also drive down the national cost of health care, researchers say.

"We do think we are on a very promising course," said neurosurgeon James H. Wood, one of the researchers at Emory University where the technique has been tested. "It worked in animals, and we're not finding one bit of evidence that it is not working in man."

The results of nine test cases were published today in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The tests showed success that was "greater than we expected" in stabilizing and reversing brain damage, sometimes within 30 minutes of treatment, Wood said Thursday.

Wood, an assistant professor of neurosurgery at Emory's School of Medicine, said the technique could have a widespread effect on stroke treatment in particular and health care in general.

"If our studies prove effective ... it is inexpensive, simple to perform, and does not require equipment that is not already available at most hospitals, even in rural areas," Wood said.

"It could make a major dent in the cost of medical care. One-fourth of the patients in nursing homes are there with stroke, and 50 percent of those paralyzed at home are there because of stroke. So we're talking about a major disease," he said.

The technique, known as hypervolemic hemodilution, thins the blood with safe protein or sugar solutions, Wood said. The therapy appears to work best on patients with blockage or narrowing of key arteries to the brain, he said.

The diluted blood has a lower-than-normal count of oxygen-carrying red blood cells. But because it is thinner, it flows much more rapidly through smaller collateral arteries to reach damaged brain cells. Patients are "weaned" from the solution after the brain's blood vessels enlarge enough to compensate for the blockage.

Patients with poor circulation in the collateral arteries — among those most prone to stroke — and those suffering from strokes in areas of the brain not served by collateral arteries are not good candidates for the treatment, Wood said.

Of the nine patients described in the Journal article, eight improved dramatically within 24 hours after the treatment, showing improved speech and use of limbs within hours. The ninth — who was already unconscious when treated — died.

The treatment is most effective when administered quickly — "the quicker the better," Wood said — but has been effective as long as four days after the stroke.

In an editorial accompanying the article, Dr. John M. Hallenbeck of the Naval Medical Research Institute at Bethesda, Md., said that under usual treatment, only three or four such patients could be expected to improve.

A controlled random study of the technique is needed to determine its effectiveness, Hallenbeck said.

Since the first nine, 30 patients have been given the treatment at Emory and 57 percent showed "substantial improvement," Wood said.

Bulgarians Claim Own Probe Into Papal Assassination Plot

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — The Communist government, outraged by an Italian investigation implicating at least one Bulgarian in a plot to kill the pope, says it will conduct its own probe into the assassination attempt.

The state-run news agency BTA said Thursday that Bulgarian authorities have decided to take "all necessary measures" to investigate, although it insisted no Bulgarians schemed with Turkish terrorist Mehmet Ali Agca in the May 13, 1981 shooting of Pope John Paul II in St. Peter's Square.

The agency also called Western press reports implicating Bulgarians in the shooting a "nonsensical and absurd campaign of slander."

Two weeks ago Italian authorities arrested a Sergei Ivanov Antonov, a Bulgarian airline official in Rome, and press reports have linked two other Bulgarians to the assassination attempt. The developments have severely strained relations between Italy and this East-bloc country.

The Bulgarian news agency also said authorities have detained Turkish national Bekir Celenk, wanted by Italian police in connection with the shooting. Celenk is one of five Turks accused by Italian police of complicity.

The agency did not say how Celenk was found but that he will remain in custody until accusations against him are resolved. Turkish press reports have alleged that Celenk offered Agca $1.2 million to kill the pontiff.

Agca is serving a life term in an Italian prison for the assassination attempt. Italian police say he has maintained he acted alone, but press reports have quoted investigators as saying Agca admitted he had accomplices.

The linking of Bulgarians to the assassination attempt has raised speculation that John Paul was shot in a Kremlin-inspired conspiracy because of the Polish-born pope's opposition to martial law in his homeland. The Soviet Union strongly supported Poland's Communist authorities in their decision to decree martial law last Dec. 13 and crush the independent Solidarity union.

Besides Antonov, the two other Bulgarians said to be linked to the assassination attempt are Teodoro Ayvazov, cashier at the Bulgarian Embassy in Rome, and Juelio Kolev, former secretary to the embassy's military attaché.

Antonov was arrested Nov. 25, while Kolev reportedly is being sought by police for questioning. The Italian news agency ANSA has said that no arrest warrant has been issued for Ayvazov because he has diplomatic immunity.

Italian press reports have called Antonov "the director of the plot" to kill John Paul. Antonov has denied any knowledge of the plot.

Il Messaggero, Rome's largest newspaper, has reported that Agca identified Antonov and Kolev from photographs and claimed they helped him plan the shooting. Police have refused to comment on the report.

Besides Celenk and Agca, one Turk accused in the shooting is jailed in Rome, one is imprisoned in West Germany pending extradition, one is being held in Turkey on an unrelated murder charge, and one is still being sought.

Caucasus Centenarians Is Said Innocent Myth

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Reports that thousands of centenarians live in the Soviet Union, particularly in the mountainous Caucasus region, are nothing but myth, a University of Michigan study says.

"We don't believe the Russian government has set out to purposely mislead anyone," Neil G. Bennett and Lea Keil Garson, authors of the study, said Tuesday. "The reported numbers of centenarians are inflated, due not to exaggeration by the government but exaggeration by the respondents."

Published Soviet reports have put the number of people over age 100 at 20,435 and those over age 120 at 465, Bennett and Ms. Garson said.

But the two researchers, applying a new mathematical model to Soviet census data from 1959 to 1970, calculated that the number of centenarians was closer to 2,900, only 90 people were over 105, and only one at age 110.

Those figures are "more in accord with the commonly accepted life expectancy estimates," they said in a statement.

Bennett, assistant professor of sociology and research associate at the Population Studies Center at the university, and Ms. Garson, a Ph.D. candidate in sociology and demography at the Office of Population Research of Princeton University, said figures cannot be verified because in most cases there are no birth records.

"Within the Caucasus region, the centers of the greatest longevity coincidentally tend to be areas which are the least developed," they said.

Births often were not registered or were registered in local churches whose records were subsequently destroyed, and Soviet census-taking is sporadic, they noted. In some areas of the Caucasus — a region consisting of parts of three union republics near the Caspian Sea — there also could be confusion because of the 10-month Moslem calendar, they said.

The two researchers also blamed the tendency to exaggerate age as people grow older.

"It is a common joke that some people fib about their age to appear younger," they said. "But as one reaches very old age — and especially as one passes the 100-year mark — there is more status in being older."

Of the nine patients described in the Journal article, eight improved dramatically within 24 hours after the treatment, showing improved speech and use of limbs within hours. The ninth — who was already unconscious when treated — died.

The treatment is most effective when administered quickly — "the quicker the better," Wood said — but has been effective as long as four days after the stroke.

In an editorial accompanying the article, Dr. John M. Hallenbeck of the Naval Medical Research Institute at Bethesda, Md., said that under usual treatment, only three or four such patients could be expected to improve.

A controlled random study of the technique is needed to determine its effectiveness, Hallenbeck said.

Since the first nine, 30 patients have been given the treatment at Emory and 57 percent showed "substantial improvement," Wood said.

Treatments usually consisted of three to four pints of intravenous solution every 24 hours for three or four days before the patient is weaned, Wood said.

Famous Bookstore Has Closed Doors

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — A little bit more of old London died at twilight on a recent Friday, when the street door of E. Joseph, the secondhand bookstore, closed for the last time at 48a Charing Cross Road.

"We are the oldest bookshop in the street and the best-known, despite Helen Hanff," said proprietor David Joseph Brass, whose great-grandfather Emmanuel Joseph, founded the business in 1876 and moved to Charing Cross Road in 1901.

Miss Hanff is the New York writer who bought by mail across the Atlantic from booksellers Marks and Co., relating her 20-year correspondence with them in her book, "84 Charing Cross Road."

When the book came out in 1970, Marks and Co. was shut and empty.

Now Joseph's is going. With its drab green frontage stretching round the corner into Great Newport Street, the bookstore was prominently visible to book-hunters emerging from busy Leicester Square subway station. They knew this was the place.

"The world and its aunt come to London to buy books, but times have changed and it's time to go. There are new and better ways of doing things," Brass said in an interview in the inner office, where entry was always by invitation only.

Brass, 35, is giving up general bookselling and is renting offices over a bank on the corner of Vere Street and Oxford Street.

He will deal from his catalogs of mostly rare books. Callers will be welcome but there will be no ground-level windows to gaze in and no outside racks to browse through.

Emmanuel Joseph has been dead since 1929, although the business will continue to bear his name.

Ultimatum For Sewage Plant

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A sewage treatment utility in Dare County has been ordered to cease operations in 90 days or bring the plant into compliance with state water treatment laws.

The ultimatum to Ocean Acres Utility Inc., which serves about 150 customers in Kill Devil Hills, was issued Thursday by the North Carolina Environmental Management Commission.

The action came after Ocean Acres developer W. Grayson Pierce said he had tried unsuccessfully to give the utility to Kill Devil Hills. The state has fined Pierce $4,000 for failure to upgrade the plant and the commission affirmed that fine.

Pierce said the utility didn't make enough money to break even, much less make improvements.

EXTENDED WEATHER OUTLOOK FOR N.C.

Jacobo Timerman And Israelis In A Family Feud

By MARCUSELIASON
Associated Press Writer
TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The case of Jacobo Timerman is taking on the dimensions of a classic family feud — rage, mutual disappointment and hurt feelings.

"Ingrate," Israelis shout at Timerman. "Neurotics," Timerman responds.

Since his release from an Argentine prison and his arrival here in September 1979, Timerman has generated controversy. First it was human rights under Argentina's generals. Now it is Israel's war in Lebanon.

Timerman has just published a book which harshly criticizes Prime Minister Menachem Begin and the Lebanon invasion.

To many Israelis, it is an act of ingratitude. They claim much of the credit for winning Timerman's freedom and giving him a new home.

Timerman was a successful newspaper publisher in Argentina until 1977, when his dissenting opinions got him in trouble with the military government. He spent 29 months in prison before being stripped of his citizenship and deported to Israel.

Here he received a hero's welcome, but he quickly plunged into controversy.

First, he became something of an embarrassment with his loudly expressed criticism of the Argentine regime. Israel has close ties with Buenos Aires, and also fears repercussions against Argentine Jews.

The furor spread to the United States, where his supporters made him a rallying point for opposing American aid to Argentina. Just as that controversy ebbed, the Lebanon war broke out, and Timerman sat down to record his reflections, now published as "The Longest War — Israel in Lebanon" by Alfred Knopf.

Timerman labels Israel an aggressor, insensitive to Palestinian suffering, led by an anti-democratic government that has terrorized its citizens into silence with horror stories about the Arab threat.

Timerman accuses Israel of perverting Jewish morality by razing Palestinian homes, bombing Lebanese cities and sending Israeli soldiers to a supposedly needless death.

"I'm infuriated," he wrote, "with us, the Israelis, who by exploiting, oppressing and victimizing the Palestinians, have made the Jewish people lose their moral tradition, their proper place in history."

He sees Israeli society becoming "more closed, more intolerant, more fundamentalist."

Its occupation of the West Bank, he warns, "demands a social and economic effort that is not only bleeding the country but chaining future Israeli generations to its defense."

He believes most Israelis "want the Palestinians to vanish physically from this region ..."

But all that remains is that "after more than 30 years, after several wars, after so many alliances, so many unutterable sufferings, so many political shifts, the actors remain the same ..."

We have beaten, persecuted and murdered each other, but we remain the same and we are stuck in the same place."

That last assessment is shared by many liberal Israelis who would like an accommodation with the Palestinians. But coming from a man who has been here only three years, and who is seen as having been rescued by Israel, such opinions have aroused the anger of some moderates too.

One of them, Yoel Marcus, wrote in the daily Haaretz: "If there's one reason why I resent types like Mr. Jacobo Timerman, it is that their words and behavior automatically turn me into a fan of Menachem Begin."

Marcus was especially annoyed at Timerman's criticism of Israeli democracy. He believes it is strong and safe. Timerman doesn't. He likens Begin to the late Argentine dictator Juan Peron — "reactionary and anti-democratic."

Israeli reactions have ranged from threatening phone calls to expressions of hurt to denunciation and ridicule.

"He is kicking the very country but for whose efforts he would still be rotting in an Argentinean jail," charges Shlomo Nakdimon, a journalist for the daily Yedioth Ahronoth who was Begin's spokesman during the efforts to free Timerman.

Nakdimon does not deny Timerman's right to speak out as an Israeli citizen, but considers his attitude grossly ungrateful.

"Mr. Begin himself ordered every effort to get Timerman out of jail," he recalled in an interview. "We upended the world for him. We appealed to everyone who knew anyone in Argentinian circles to intervene."

"Here is the paradox," Timerman said in an interview at his Tel Aviv apartment. "When a Jew lives abroad, they say 'Come to Israel, be an equal citizen and then criticize.' Now I'm in Israel and they say, 'Where were you until now?' It's a no-win situation."

He called Israel "a xenophobic, neurotic country," but insisted he won't leave. "I have lost my fantasies about Israel, but not my convictions. I'm going to stay and try to do something better."

Part of the resentment toward Timerman reflects the generation gap between recent immigrants like himself and the younger Sabras, native-born Israelis, who feel that one has to fight here and blend into Israeli society to earn the right to criticize.

At 59, Timerman is too old to be drafted, but his involvement is deep. His 31-year-old son Daniel fought in Lebanon. True to the Timerman way, Daniel Timerman was jailed for 28 days for refusing to do another tour of duty in Lebanon.

Covered By Works Of Tattoo Artists

BOSTON (AP) — Lyle Tuttle keeps his collection close to the chest, not to mention the rest of his body. From the collarbone to the ankles, he is covered with tattoos.

"I've had over 50 tattoo artists work on me, all over the world," he said in a recent interview. "Good and bad. I didn't care. I wanted a collection."

The tattoos include eagles locked in combat, flowers, women, spider webs, his name in several languages, even his Social Security number. Still faintly visible is his first tattoo, a heart inscribed with "Mother." He got it when he was 14.

Tuttle, 51, a tattoo artist who runs two tattoo parlors in San Francisco, was in Boston for a two-week showing of his collection of tattoo designs and memorabilia at the Massachusetts College of Art.

"Body jewelry" is the way Tuttle describes the intricate web of designs on his body. "It's like wearing your fantasies on your skin."

"... The thing that first appealed to me about tattooing was its craft aspect, the fact that tattoo artists made all their own equipment, mixed their own dyes, created their own designs," he said. "You do everything with your own hands."

Asked how he feels now that he's finished his collection, Tuttle said, "It gives you a nice, peaceful feeling, a complete feeling knowing there's nowhere else to go."

Lady Pirates Hosting Appalachian

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

East Carolina University's women bid a farewell to Minges Coliseum for nearly two months Saturday night when they host Appalachian State.

Game time is set for 7:30 p.m.

East Carolina brings in a 3-2 record, and is unbeaten in two previous Minges appearances this year. They have won both of those games by lopsided scores, having downed Fayetteville State, 91-51, and St. Peter's, 81-70.

The Lady Mountaineers come in with an 0-5 record, having not come close to winning a game. Appalachian lost its opener to North Carolina, 114-50, and has seen little improvement. They've since lost to Milligan, 85-64, South Carolina, 95-59, UT-Chattanooga, 86-57, and N.C. State, 91-47. Thus the closest ASU has come to victory is 21 points.

"They're a tough team," East Carolina Coach Cathy Andruzzi vowed. "I think they're a good team."

Andruzzi recalled last year's first meeting of the two. In that, ECU squeezed out a 61-58 win in the first game of the year. Later in the year, however, they topped ASU on the Mountaineer court, 76-45.

The Lady Apps have only one player in double figures, Kay Hampton, who is scoring 12.4 points a game. Besty McLelland and Meana Cusimano are next at 8.8 each, while Susan Cameron is hitting 7.2 points a game.

Appalachian is hitting only 35.0 percent from the floor and 49.0 from the line. They're being outrebounded by 10 a game.

In contrast, East Carolina is being paced by all-America candidate Mary Denkler, hitting 26.2 points a game and pulling off nine rebounds. Loraine Foster is scoring at a 17.0 clip to give the Pirates two in double figures.

Freshman Delphine Mabry is scoring 7.8 points a game and has come on to be one of the top defensive players of the Lady Pirates.

As a team, the Lady Pirates are hitting 46.6 percent from the floor (led by Denkler's 62.1 percent) and 78.2 from the line. They are outrebounding foes by five a game.

East Carolina's biggest problems probably come not from ASU but from its own situation. "We're right in the midst of exams. We're having to practice at odd times, and we have people missing at almost every practice," Andruzzi said. "The kids are putting a lot of their attention on the exams and are missing drills because of their academic obligations."

"But this is an important game for us, and we need to be fully prepared."

The Lady Pirates are also having problems because a number of players are playing out of position. The team has only nine players on the roster, and Loletha Harrison did not dress out against St. Peter's due to illness.

That leaves only three in reserve.

"We have five people playing different positions because of our lack of depth," Andruzzi said. "This week, and after the break, we'll look forward to working with the kids individually. I think you'll see the bench contribute more after the holidays."

East Carolina will take the next 19 days off from playing after the ASU game. They return to action on December 30 at Notre Dame, kicking off a ten-game road trip. East Carolina does not return to Minges until Feb. 2, when it meets nationally ranked Old Dominion.

Carson Forsees Bright Future

Head coach Bill Carson is extremely optimistic about the 1982-83 track forecast as he enters his 17th season as head coach.

Last season, Carson watches as his mile relay squad shattered ECU's long standing 4:40.00 meter record. This year, coach Carson is quite confident that the record will be broken again with a few other school records after the first meet of the 1982 indoor season.

That gets underway this weekend at Fairfax, Va., in the Patriot Invitational.

One reason Carson is excited is because the state of North Carolina produced its finest array of recruits ever this past season. And although Carson and assistant coach Wayne Miller have only three returning veterans, they have managed to acquire the cream to the crop of North Carolina's most talented recruits, for one of the top track recruiting classes in the nation.

The three returning veterans who will be leading the 16 freshmen are juniors Keith Clarke and Ray Dickerson and senior Carlton Bell.

"I expect Bell to break the present ECU 400-meter indoor record of 47.76 seconds, set by Calvin Austin in 1979," says Carson.

Bell has already participated on three record-breaking indoor mile relay teams. Clarke will be expected to add experience to the mile relay team. Dickerson will be providing experience to the 800-meter races.

"I also expect Ray to do extremely well in the 500-meters after recovering from an injury last season," Carson added.

Carson usually streamlines his team toward prominence in the relays and the quarter-mile. But after noticing the abundance of talent coming out of North Carolina, he has decided to expand his team into the field events, specifically the long and triple jumps.

Those former high school competitors who have now become Pirates are long jumpers Chris Brooks, Arthur Burkes, Donell Sheppard and Clifton King. Carson signed four of the state's premier hurdlers also in Anthony White, Walter Southerland, Reuben Pierce and Tony Jones.

As usual, Carson was successful in landing some outstanding half and quarter milers and sprinters.

"Eddie Bradley and Willie Fuller will make tremendous contributions to the 4x400 and 400-meter races," Carson said. "Greg Richardson is expected to develop his potential in the half mile by hanging on to the heels of veteran half-miler Dickerson."

The new Pirate sprinters include Erskine Evans, Rodney Blacknall, Jerry Brown and Joseph Dingle.

"All four are expected to turn out their stiffest competition in the 200," the coach said.

"Nathan McCorkle (just named a High School All-America along with Brooks) will concentrate on the 60-meter races, while also lending talent to the 200 and 400 meters," Carson said.

NASCAR Award Winner

NASCAR driver Darrell Waltrip, right, holds the trophy presented to car owner Junior Johnson, for whom Waltrip drives, prior to the awards ceremony held Thursday night in New York. Waltrip was named Driver of the Year and received his own trophy, commending him for his 1982 season of 12 wins and $878,118 in prize money. Jerry Long, left, president of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., which presents the Winston Cup, helps with the trophy presentations. (AP Laserphoto)

Good Ol' Boys Invade New York; Waltrip Reaps The Big Rewards

NEW YORK (AP) — The Good Ol' Boys came to New York Thursday night and two-time NASCAR Grand National champion Darrell Waltrip reaped a cash bonanza as the stars of stock car racing were honored at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

Waltrip, a 35-year-old resident of Franklin, Tenn., and the Mountain Dew Team, headed by car-owner Junior Johnson, picked up checks totaling more than $187,000. That included $75,000 for winning the Winston Cup title, $25,000 for taking the Busch Pole Award by winning the most pole positions in 1982, and an additional $10,000 from Gillette-Atra for leading the most laps during the season.

The tall, handsome Waltrip, who won his first title in 1981, won 12 races this season and now has 51 victories in his 11 seasons of Grand National racing, placing him sixth on the all-time list behind only Richard Petty (195 in 25 years), David Pearson (105 in 23 years), Cale Yarborough (74 in 25 years), Bobby Allison (73 in 19 years), and Lee Petty (54 in 14 years). All of those driver remain active except Lee Petty, Richard's father.

"It's great to win the championship twice in a row, and I know the $878,000 we won this year broke the record ($693,342) we set last year," Waltrip noted. "But I don't see any reason, with Junior and the rest of the guys doing the job the way they can, that we can't get off to a better start next season and win maybe 15 races and over a million dollars."

"The key to that will be getting off to the good start. We've had to come from behind and clinch the championship in the last race both years, and I'd like to see that change next year."

The quest for that $1 million season could be helped along by Thursday's announcement by series sponsor R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. that the Winston Cup point fund for 1983 will climb to $500,000, with the winner getting $150,000. That overall figure is an increase of $200,000.

Waltrip has overtaken Allison both years in winning his championship, and it was Allison that Waltrip also beat out to win his second consecutive Olsonite Driver of the Year Award. That award, voted on by a national panel of motorsports writers and broadcasters, will be presented Friday in New York.

However, Allison, a 45-year-old from Hueytown, Ala., was not shut out this week. He picked up a check for $76,000 from Union Oil Co. of Calif., as the winner of the company's winners' contingency fund. To be eligible for the Union awards, the competitors must use the company's products in their cars.

Allison also was named Most Popular Driver for the second straight year and the fifth time in his career. That award is voted on by NASCAR members from throughout the United States.

Geoff Bodine of Chemung, N.Y., became the second straight northern driver to win the Champion Spark Plug Rookie of the Year Award, following 1981 winner Ron Bouchard of Fitchburg, Mass. Bodine won two pole positions and finished in the top five four times and had 10 top 10 finishes on the way to winning $247,750. His best finish was a third-place.

The 1982 Buddy Shuman Memorial Trophy, given annually for outstanding contributions and loyalty to auto racing, was presented to Howard Hurd and the Ingersoll-Rand Co. Hurd, who represents Intersol-Rand on the NASCAR circuit, is directly responsible for development of the high-speed impact wrenches used to change tires during pit stops. The Buddy Shuman award recipient is chosen by a special board of accessory company representatives.

Driver Bill Elliott, crew chief Ernie Elliott, his brother, and the rest of the Melling Tool team were honored at the ceremonies as winners of the Ingersoll-Rand — Proto pit crew championship.

Also at the banquet, it was announced that Piedmont Airlines, which sponsors the car driven by Ricky Rudd, has been designated the official airline of NASCAR. Piedmont President William R. Howard said the company will mount an effort to provide chartered flights to NASCAR events, assist travel agencies in developing tour packages to NASCAR events, and cooperate in joint promotions involving racing.

With Kent and Mabry and other recruits brought in by McGuigan, the Lady Bucs will be deeper and should be able to compete for team honors in the big meets this season.

ECU will need help from its youngsters because the Lady Pirates return only two runners — sophomores Liz Graham and Davena Cherry.

McGuigan, whose has coached AIAW national qualifiers, one national champion and one American record holder, isn't complaining, but she is looking for the 12 freshman she brought in to help ECU immediately.

"They're getting used to sprinting and the girls are responding well to my training," McGuigan said. "We'll be doing more weight training this year, since we do have excellent facilities and personnel."

Last year, McGuigan had a goal of at least one team member qualifying for the nationals. ECU fell short of that goal, but McGuigan feels she has the talent this year to qualify not one but two relay teams in the 4 X 100 and the 4 X 400.

One change in this year's program will be the addition of competing in field events. High Point native Kathy Leeper will be counted on to lead ECU in the long jump and South Stokes product Amy Bowen will compete in the shot put and discus.

"Amy is working real hard and her best event will be the shot," McGuigan said.

McGuigan is also optimistic about distance runners Sharon Bartha and Rene Felder. Both will compete in the 1,500, and Bartha will also run the 3,000, McGuigan said.

Adding depth will be Kim Boyles (200, 400), Carolyn Carr (100, relays), Tricia Fowler (400, 800, relays), Teressa Hudson (100, 200, relays), Wendy Lower (200, 400) and Elaine Perry (400, hurdles).

The Lady Pirates' schedule is tougher than a year ago and includes several big meets, including the Eastman Kodak Invitational on Jan. 14-15.

"The best in the country will be there and will provide good experience (for us)," McGuigan said. "I think we'll do well and we should be able to place in a lot of meets. We'll be stronger than last year."

Mixed Reaction As WBC Cuts Length Of Fights

WASHINGTON (AP) — Terry Holland says he is going to enjoy watching John Thompson says it may take him a year or so before he can look back and relish the night.

Holland and Thompson are the coaches for Saturday night's matchup between top-ranked Virginia, led by two-time player of the year, 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson, and No.3 Georgetown, led by its star sophomore, 7-foot center Patrick Ewing.

The game, the first meeting in 29 years between the two undefeated schools, will be played at Georgetown's off-campus home arena, the 19,000-seat Capital Centre in Landover, Md.

A sellout crowd has been guaranteed since the game was announced six months ago. An additional 25 million fans are expected to watch the game on television.

Georgetown is 6-0; Virginia is 5-0.

"I'm looking forward to it. It's a fan's dream," says Holland, who was named Atlantic Coast Conference Coach-of-the-Year after leading Virginia to a 30-4 record last year.

"It's a great spectacle and we should enjoy the game for being exactly that. I'm going to be a little bit of a fan myself," Holland said.

Thompson, who led Georgetown to within one point of North Carolina in the NCAA championship game last year, says he is too close to the game to fully appreciate it.

"I won't enjoy it until next year. When you become part of something, you're not able to appreciate it as much as others," he said. "I haven't been able to appreciate the excellence of the North Carolina game yet."

Although he has said this is just another game to prepare his team for upcoming Big East Conference play, Thompson candidly admits he may alter his starting lineup.

"I may have the courage to let the freshmen go and get the learning experience and then you stop saying it's a learning experience and you say let's go for it. I'm trying to convince myself to let the freshmen start but something inside me keeps telling me 'don't do it.'"

In any case, the fans will be concentrating on Sampson and Ewing.

"You are talking about such a level of excellence that when Ralph Sampson comes out of college he will be the No.1 draft choice in the entire National Basketball Association. And when Patrick Ewing comes out he will be the No.1

regardless of what happens on Saturday," Thompson said.

Holland expects the two giants to neutralize each other. "I don't think either one will gain a great advantage. Both will play well and take some things away from each other."

If Holland is correct, one of the shortest men on the court, Virginia's 6-foot playmaker Othell Wilson, could be the big difference.

"We have to be very concerned about Othell Wilson because he has the ability to do a lot of things that can create problems," Thompson said.

"We plan on doing the things that we do," Thompson said. "I don't think you get to a point where you can play a good team like the University of Virginia and incorporate a lot of new things."

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Ray Mancini called it a farce. Larry Holmes said it was a good idea.

The World Boxing Council announced Thursday that it was shortening its title fights from 15 rounds to 12 — effective in January — in hopes of preventing serious injuries which occur more often in late rounds of such bouts. The WBC also implemented a standing eight-count for fighters in trouble.

Mancini, the World Boxing Association lightweight champion, was not happy with the WBC's decision. Mancini's most recent title defense ended in the 14th round, when he knocked out Duk Koo Kim of South Korea, who subsequently died of head injuries suffered in the fight.

"It's a farce what the WBC did," said Mancini, who was in Washington. "It is a big injustice what the WBC did by limiting the number of rounds. What the WBC did indicates that you can only get hurt in the 14th or 15th round. I do want to unite the title (Alexis Arguello holds the WBC lightweight crown) but I want to fight 15 rounds. I hope the WBA does not give in."

Mancini understood why the WBC made the change.

"What happened (to Kim) was a tragedy," he said, "But the WBA and WBC must stick by their guns and say, 'We're trying to make boxing as fair and as safe as we can.'"

"Boxing has taken a black eye by all the potshots it has received from everybody. The WBC has given in to the public and critics who have called boxing barbaric."

Holmes, the WBC heavyweight champion, did not agree.

"I think it's going to be good for boxers who are going to continue to box," said Holmes, who defeated Randy "Tex" Cobb last month in a one-sided defense of his title. "It won't do me any good because I'm at the end of my rope. But I think it's good for boxing."

"It will cut down on injuries for a lot of fighters but it will take away from the true champions. A true champion can go 15 rounds."

Jose Sulaiman, president of the WBC, said from Montreal that the two measures were approved unanimously on Thursday after 17 of the 21 executive committee members approved it the previous day. He said the WBC would wait for a medical report before deciding whether to implement another rule change — lengthening the rest period between rounds from 60 to 90 seconds.

"We believe that boxing should remain the art of self-defense," Sulaiman said "and that we should try to find ways to protect the boxers and the sport itself."

WBC spokesman Alfredo Lamazont said studies had shown that a number of serious injuries occurred in the 13th or 14th rounds of recent 15-round bouts.

"This decision will change boxing history," he claimed, "because it will prevent boxers from suffering irreparable injuries from the force during the match."

Elias Cordova, director of the WBA's championships committee, said the organization is consulting with its members.

Woody Peele

We're down to the wire with our panel this year, and Tom Baines takes a slim one-game lead into the bowl games, which kick off on Saturday with the Independence Bowl.

Getting a bowl game seems to be less and less of a big deal when teams with 6-5 and 6-4-1 records can get them. Then, a team like New Mexico, which new South Carolina coach Joe Morrison guided to a 10-1 record, has to stay at home.

There's just a lack of identity for some good ball clubs.

At any rate, Baines carries a 98-44 record into these last 16 games. Those will decide the championship for this year. This writer is one back at 97-45, while Vickie Spivey and Rick Scoppe are tied for third with 94-48 records. Our guests and the loveable Joe Jenkins are tied for the final spot with 90-52 records.

There are enough differences on the list this week to account for some shakeups in the final standings — depending on how the games come out.

Our guest for the final week is staffer Mel Lang, who turned in a 9-3 record the first week of the season. While he was tied, no one did better. Our guest the last time out, George Holland, a former pollster on the Reflector Staff, had an 8-4 week.

Our consensus picks for the bowls are: Wisconsin over Kansas State (Independence Bowl); Bowling Green and Fresno State, a toss-up (California Bowl); Texas over North Carolina (Sun Bowl); Alabama over Illinois (Liberty Bowl); Arkansas over Florida (Bluebonnet Bowl); Tennessee over Iowa (Peach Bowl); Nebraska over Louisiana State (Orange Bowl); Southern Methodist and Pittsburgh, a toss-up (Cotton Bowl); Ohio State over Brigham Young (Holiday Bowl); Auburn over Boston College (Tangerine Bowl); Maryland and Washington, a toss-up (Aloha Bowl); Florida State over West Virginia (Gator Bowl); Vanderbilt over Air Force (Hall of Fame Bowl); Oklahoma over Arizona State (Fiesta Bowl); Georgia over Penn State (Sugar Bowl); and UCLA over Michigan (Rose Bowl).

Garvey Hopeful League Officials Will Sign Pact; Players Okay It

WASHINGTON (AP) — Union chief Ed Garvey says he is hopeful National Football League officials will sign the new collective bargaining agreement overwhelmingly ratified by the players, perhaps as early as tonight.

"I sent the Management Council a message today asking when they were coming to town so I could call Gene (Upshaw, union president) and have him come in for the signing ceremony, probably Friday night," Garvey said Thursday night. Upshaw, a guard with the Los Angeles Raiders, is working out on the West Coast.

As of Thursday night, the Management Council, the league's bargaining agent, had not responded to Garvey's message.

"I don't know why they haven't replied," Garvey said. Wednesday night, Garvey announced that the league's 1,500 players had ratified the new agreement by a 3-1 margin.

Following the players' vote, Jack Donlan, the league's chief negotiator, said management would not sign the five-year, $1.6-billion agreement until the union and its members agreed to settle all pending lawsuits against the league and agreed not to sue in the future.

On Thursday, Garvey held phone conversations with Pittsburgh attorney Paul Marsha, who had served as a go-between during the final stages of negotiations to end the 57-day players strike, and Pittsburgh Steeler President Dan Rooney.

Rooney, a member of the owners' executive committee, has been instrumental in ironing out some two dozen issues left unresolved when negotiators announced the tentative agreement Nov. 16.

"I spoke with Paul Marsha and Rooney and worked everything out," Garvey insisted Thursday night. "The contract is now ready to be signed."

Garvey would not comment on what accommodations had been reached during Thursday's conversations for management to sign the agreement. Rooney and Marsha could not be reached for comment.

Earlier, management officials complained that Garvey had reneged on a promise to sign a separate document agreeing to drop unfair labor charges against the league and a legal suit challenging the validity of the standard player contract. The stipulation agreement also calls for the union and its members to agree not to bring suit against the league in the future regarding NFL rules.

Union attorneys have advised against signing the no-suit agreement which it says the union should be prepared to fight in court as both unlawful and unenforceable.

The Management Council insists Garvey agreed to the provision on Nov. 16.

'Husker Center Wins Lombardi

HOUSTON (AP) — The weight of recognition is growing heavy for Nebraska center Dave Rimington, and he's glad the load has gotten a little heavier.

The sweetest 40 pounds Rimington ever lifted came Thursday night when he picked up the Lombardi Award, symbolic of the nation's outstanding college football lineman.

Rimington, 6-foot-3 and weighing 290 pounds, piled up honors last year as a first team All-America and winning the Outland Trophy, given to the nation's outstanding interior lineman.

"This year I tried to repeat what I did last year because I knew people would expect more of me," Rimington said. "After last year, if I didn't blast everyone five yards off the line, something was wrong."

Rimington did repeat as a first team center and became the first repeat winner of the Outland. Now he's added the Lombardi Award to his already bulging trophy case.

"When I came to Nebraska as a freshman, I never dreamed of anything like this," he said. "I just knew that I had to work hard and try to enjoy what I was doing."

The Lombardi Award, a 40-pound block of granite, is named in honor of Vince Lombardi, former coach of Green Bay and Washington who died of cancer in 1970.

Rimington won the honor over three other finalists present at a $125-per-plate dinner, which benefits the American Cancer Society. The three finalists were defensive end Billy Ray Smith, Southern California nose guard George Achica and Arizona State linebacker Vernon Maxwell.

Past winners of the Lombardi Award, beginning with the first award in 1970, are: Jim Stillwagon, Ohio State; Walt Patulski, Notre Dame; Rich Glover, Nebraska; John Hicks, Ohio State; Randy White, Maryland; Lee Roy Selmon, Oklahoma; Wilson Whitley, Houston; Ross Browner, Notre Dame; Bruce Clark, Penn State; Brad Budge, Southern California; Hugh Green, Pittsburgh.

Diggs Phelps feels he must get in his digs.

The Notre Dame basketball coach gave 6-foot-9 freshman Tim Kempton a pep talk after Tuesday night's loss to Indiana. Kempton responded with a career-high 26 points in leading the Irish to a 92-70 victory over Fairfield Thursday night at South Bend, Ind. "I liked getting on him," said Phelps, whose young club raised its record to 3-3 in dealing Fairfield its first loss in five starts. "That's what I like to do. He really takes it well and responds. He's tough and he's going to be a good player."

Notre Dame led 37-30 at halftime when Kempton had 15 of his points.

"We did a good job of getting the ball inside to Kempton and (Ken) Barlow," said Phelps. "I think they were 12 for 14 in the first half. That's the type of team we want to be."

The Irish got 16 points from John Paxson, 15 from Barlow and 11 from Bill Varner, while freshmen Tony George led Fairfield with 20 points.

In the only college basketball game involving the Top Twenty, No. 19 Nevada-Las Vegas beat Nevada-Reno 85-75. Sidney Green scored 23 points and grabbed 18 rebounds for the winning Rebels, while freshman Eldridge Hudson added 16 points and 15 rebounds and Eric Booker scored 15 points and had 11 rebounds.

Northwestern ran its record to 5-0 behind Art Aaron's 29 points — 12 of 17 from the field — in a 75-58 thumping of Northern Illinois, 1-2, which was led by Tom Dillon's 19 points.

Baylor, 6-0 and off to its best start since 1945, defeated Texas-Arlington 74-65 as David Glover hit 19 points and Daryl Baucham added 18. Danny Johnson's 23 points led the 4-3 Mavericks.

California-Irvine, 4-0, beat Loyola of Los Angeles 85-73 behind 17 points apiece from Tod Murphy and Jud Beardsley. Loyola, which got 20 points from Forrest McKenzie, fell to 1-3.

Willie Scott scored 15 points in pacing Bradley (2-2) to a 67-47 triumph over St. Louis (2-4). Scott also led the Bradley defense which forced the Billikens into 21 turnovers.

Tulane scored the game's first 20 points, shot 68 percent from the field and 15 for 16 from the free throw line to lobber Nicholls State 104-48. The Green Wave got 20 points from Paul Thompson and 17 from John Williams in raising its record to 3-3. Nicholls State is 1-1.

Connecticut, 3-2, behind Norman Bailey's 21 points and Karl Hobbs' 20, handed winless Massachusetts its third straight setback, 86-74. Donald Russell, 21 points, and Joseph Hempel, 20, paced the Minutemen.

In West Coast games, Southern California got 18 points from senior guard Jacques Hill and downed San Jose State 72-54. Washington beat Pacific 70-53, and San Diego State beat San Diego 47-45.

30-Race Slate Set By NASCAR

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A 30-race NASCAR Grand National stock car schedule for 1983 was announced Thursday by Bill France Jr., president of the Daytona Beach-based sanctioning body.

The season will open Feb. 20 at Daytona International Speedway with the Daytona 500, the first $1 million race in the history of stock car racing, and close Nov. 20 with the Winston Western 500 at Riverside, Calif., International Raceway.

There will again be a pair of races at each of 15 tracks, including 10 superspeedways — ovals one-mile in length or more — and four short tracks and Riverside, the only road course.

That includes tracks located in 11 states.

There will be more than $8.5 million in overall prize money in 1983, with series sponsor R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. raising its season point fund by $200,000 to a total of $500,000. The Winston Cup point champion will receive $150,000.

To The Editor:

First of all I would like to say that I am a Loyal Lady Pirate Basketball fan, but I'm beginning to wonder about the validity of the reasons given to the press for so many players quitting the team over the last three years.

Miss Andruzzi said, "Darlene would not fulfill her responsibility and obligation as a student athlete in our program." The News and Observer carried this quote about Darlene Chaney who recently quit the team. I'm sure this will tarnish Darlene's named and unjustifiably so. She quit as a result of an argument with Coach Andruzzi which took place at Tuesday's (Nov. 30) practice. How will it look for coaches at other schools to see that Darlene wasn't performing as a student-athlete? I have sympathy for Miss Chaney because I know that she loves basketball and she did love being a Pirate.

Then there's the case of Miss Jenkins wanting to go to ODU; this makes me wonder why she didn't go there to begin with. After all, she was the most valuable player in the state while in high school. I'm sure she was offered a scholarship to go there. The fact of the matter is that Miss Jenkins and Miss Hargett couldn't get along with Andruzzi. They even stated this to a newspaper reporter. It's irrelevant where they decide to go to school now.

This list of people quitting over the last three years would make up an impressive starting five for somebody. This list contains three high school all-americas (Chaney, Jenkins and Fernell).

I think it's time the Lady Pirates' fans be given an explanation.

Maybe the problem lies elsewhere, that is, not in the girls who quit but the elements which made them quit. After all, it's not like this is a new problem.

Harassed Dailey Given Leave By Team

CHICAGO (AP) — No one, not even his fellow rookie roommate, saw it coming. Quintin Dailey joined the Chicago Bulls proclaiming his legal troubles over and his mind set on a sterling inaugural NBA season. With a 15.6-point average early on, the former University of San Francisco All-American seemed on his way.

But while his talent and instincts shone on the court, public hostility dogged him after he pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of assaulting a student nurse in her dormitory room a year ago.

Picketing women's groups denounced him at the Bulls' training camp and exhibition games, calls for boycotting Bulls' games rang out, Chicago-area landlords rejected the million-dollar rookie's deposits because of his past.

Finally, Dailey "lost hope," according to his Boston attorney. He contemplated suicide. Tuesday night, he had a vomiting fit on a freeway heading to a game. He never showed up, and the next day the Bulls announced he had taken an indefinite leave of absence to get psychiatric help.

"He's been harassed so badly, almost on a daily basis," said Bob Woolf, "He was an All-American basketball player, and he's used to people admiring him. To go through something like this at the age of 21 was just too much for him."

Dailey was sentenced to three years probation after pleading guilty to a reduced charge of assaulting a USF student nurse last Dec. 21. Three charges, including attempted rape, were dropped.

In June, the Bulls chose him in the first round of the NBA college draft, signing him to a five-year contract reportedly calling for about $250,000 in the first year with increments of $25,000 in each of the subsequent years.

When Dailey arrived in Chicago, he was asked whether he still thought about the student nurse. "Basically, I don't," he replied. "I had to go through the situation by myself, so I don't concern myself."

That ignited outrage among fans, women and the news media, and the Bulls office was flooded with protest calls.

Some women's groups picketed outside the Bulls' preseason exhibition games and training camp.

Dailey then tried to make amends.

"I want to come back to Chicago and show the people that Quintin Dailey is a human being, not an animal," he said then. "I have been so down it's unbelievable since I saw what the papers said about me."

He explained that he had been so excited about being chosen by the Bulls in the first round that "I thought I could put all that in the past. I have felt plenty of remorse."

The nursing student has since filed a $300,000 suit against Dailey.

Dailey's unexpected show of contrition didn't end his troubles, though.

He continued weathering "an awful siege — harassment and abuse on a daily basis," Woolf said. "He's been in extreme depression. It's been more and more difficult for him to cope with things. He told me he had seriously considered ending his life."

The attorney added that "we couldn't get in at some places in Chicago when we moved him here because he was Quintin Dailey. We put deposits in and were turned down. Even in restaurants."

But no one near him seemed to realize the turmoil inside Dailey, because he was smooth and easy between the lines on the NBA circuit.

"He's been cool," said Bulls forward Dwight Jones, a 10-year veteran. "He never showed any kind of stress. He practiced hard and he played hard. Rookies just want to be one of the guys when they get in this league."

And Dailey was fitting in well. After 19 games, the 6-3, 180-pound guard was averaging 15.6 points a game, hitting on 73 percent of his free throws and compiling 76 assists and 59 rebounds.

"I didn't know anything was bothering him that deeply," said rookie Rod Higgins, Dailey's roommate. "It could be that maybe I was too close to him because we were both looking down the same road, being rookies and all. Our conversations and our actions have been normal."

But another friend, Greg Ross, a summer basketball coach at the University of Illinois-Chicago, saw Dailey at the end of his road — Tuesday night.

"I was following him in my car and I noticed him driving funny on the (freeway) ramp," Ross recalled. "He stopped his car and was throwing up, so he turned around and went back to the house. I helped him get back inside. He vomited a few times outside the house, too. He said he was going to lay down. He was real ill."

Dailey never showed for the game in Chicago against the New York Knicks, and Bulls officials learned later that night from police that Dailey was asleep in his suburban Northbrook apartment.

Dailey has been unavailable for comment since then. His telephone number is unlisted and Bulls officials will not release it.

USF decided in July to drop its basketball program rather than face a National Collegiate Athletic Association investigation into rule violations by players, coaches and alumni. The school said it couldn't control people who insisted on violating the rules to keep the 58-year-old program competitive.

The decision by the Jesuit college followed a semester-long, private investigation prompted by Dailey's disclosures in a probation report prepared for a judge hearing his sexual assault case.

In the report, Dailey said he received up to $5,000 for a no-show job in 1980 and 1981.

Watergate Prosecutor Jaworski Dead At Age 77

WIMBERLEY, Texas (AP) — Leon Jaworski, who began his career as the youngest lawyer in Texas and capped it by obtaining the Watergate tapes that forced President Richard M. Nixon to resign, is dead at age 77. Jaworski died Thursday of a heart attack on his 440-acre Circle J ranch "doing what he liked to do best" — chopping wood, said ranch foreman John Clayton, who was with Jaworski when he collapsed in a grove of Spanish oak trees in the rolling Texas hill country. Jaworski had not been in a courtroom since his dramatic argument before the U.S. Supreme Court in 1974 when, as Watergate special prosecutor, he successfully secured tape recordings linking Nixon to the Watergate scandal.

"You just don't argue another case after you've argued 'the United States versus Nixon' before the Supreme Court," he once said. Jaworski lived and worked in Houston, but came to the ranch several times a month. It was here that he wrote three books, including the Watergate bestseller "The Right and the Power."

Jaworski was about two miles from the ranch house when he collapsed about 3:30 p.m. He was pronounced dead at 5 p.m. by Peace Justice Sonny Gold, after Clayton spent about an hour trying to revive him. "I'm sure if he could have chosen a way to go this would have been it," Clayton said. "He was in high spirits and was doing what he liked to do best."

When Jaworski accepted the job as Watergate special prosecutor, replacing Archibald Cox, who was fired in November 1973, "my friends thought that my mental health had failed me, that my head should be examined," he once said. Cox said Jaworski's death "was a shame. Leon was a great warrior and leader of the bar and he performed great service as special prosecutor." Jaworski said he voted for Nixon and "shuddered" when he heard the White House tapes and realized Nixon "was right in the middle" of a coverup of the break-in at Democratic National Committee headquarters at Washington's Watergate apartment complex in 1972. "For a moment, I wished I'd never been asked to take the job," he said. Jaworski called his successful battle for the Nixon tapes the pinnacle of his varied legal career, but said he never considered fully retiring afterward.

He maintained an office at Fulbright & Jaworski — a Houston law firm he watched grow from 10 to 300 lawyers — and accepted many speaking engagements. Jaworski served as U.S. Army prosecutor during the Nuremberg war crimes trial after World War II, and as special prosecutor in the federal government's contempt case against Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett, who was trying to bar the first black student from the University of Mississippi in 1962.

Jaworski was born in Waco, Texas, in 1905. He became at age 20 the youngest lawyer ever licensed in the state. In 1929, he became a full partner in a Houston law firm. Jaworski was Lyndon B. Johnson's lawyer in 1960 when several Republicans filed an unsuccessful lawsuit trying to keep the Texas senator from running for re-election at the same time he was running for vice president as John F. Kennedy's running mate. After Johnson became president when Kennedy was slain in 1963, Jaworski served as counsel to the Warren Commission investigating the assassination.

He served on the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and other national and international commissions and panels, and was president of the American Bar Association. In 1977, he accepted an offer from House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill to head an investigation into allegations of Korean influence-buying in Congress. Doctors discovered in February that the "Colonel," as he was known to family and associates, had cancer of the pancreas. He was given "a clean bill of health" after completing a series of radiation treatments in May, he said. Jaworski's survivors included his wife, Jeannette; two daughters, Joanie Moncrief and Claire Draper; and a son, Joseph, all of Houston. Funeral arrangements were pending.

Guilty Plea Is Agreed To By Two Defendants

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — COLCOR defendant Kenneth Coleman and his wife Mary Lee Coleman will appear in court today, and one of their attorneys says they will plead guilty to drug and conspiracy charges in a plea agreement with prosecutors.

The Colemans had been scheduled to stand trial beginning Monday on charges of conspiring to smuggle between 200 and 300 kilograms of cocaine from Peru and Columbia, and charges of selling a half-ounce of cocaine to federal undercover agents for $900.

They pleaded innocent to the charges during their Aug. 27 arraignment. If found guilty of those charges, they face a maximum sentence of 45 years in jail, a $75,000 fine or both.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Doug McCullough said the case had been changed to this morning in federal district court in Raleigh, but McCullough declined to say whether the Colemans have agreed to a plea bargain.

James Larrick of Wilmington, Ken Coleman's court-appointed attorney, said on Wednesday that Coleman and his wife, represented by James Ludlow of Durham, have worked out plea agreements with prosecutors.

When asked why the court date was changed, Larrick told The Fayetteville Times, "We're not going to trial. It's supposed to be a change of plea and they will plead guilty. As far as I know it will be a guilty plea."

Ludlow could not be reached for comment and McCullough said he could not comment on the Colemans' case.

"All I can say is they will appear in court on that date," McCullough said.

The FBI is continuing its probe of corruption in Southeastern North Carolina, and the special grand jury is scheduled to meet in Raleigh Tuesday. McCullough says he does not know if prosecutors will seek any new indictments.

Coleman, 42, and his wife,

40, of Cherry Grove, are two of the 26 people indicted thus far in the undercover probe. Nineteen people have admitted their participation in crimes uncovered by the probe.

Four of five other COLCOR defendants whose cases are pending were scheduled to stand trial on Monday, but McCullough said their cases either have been continued or would be.

Judge J. Wilton Hunt Sr., of Whiteville, the last COLCOR defendant, is scheduled for trial in January.

Ex-Officers Bring Suit

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A $9.5 million federal lawsuit against the cities of Greensboro and Burlington has been filed by four black police officers who were fired after an internal drug probe of the Greensboro Police Department.

The four officers were among 11 who resigned or were fired after an in-house investigation of drug abuse among Greensboro police officers. The investigation began last March after SBI agents accused Police Sergeant Warren Armstrong of possessing an ounce of cocaine.

Former officers Alphanza A. Atkins, Virginia E. Plummer, Ronald E. Platt and Berchman L. Grinage charge that the Greensboro Police Department fired them in an effort to eliminate experienced black officers.

The four have also filed a racial discrimination complaint with the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights asking that Greensboro's federal revenue-sharing and law enforcement funds be cut off.

The suit includes as defendants six Greensboro and Burlington police officers as well as the two cities. The suit has received the support of the Greensboro chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which is expected to file a friend-of-the-court brief on behalf of the officers.

The suit says Burlington police officer W.H. Fox, who was on loan to Greensboro, was part of the alleged conspiracy by administering a polygraph test to the four.

Armstrong provided information that led to the firings. He later pleaded guilty to the possession charge and was sentenced to two years in jail.

Eleven officers were suspended in August for allegedly using drugs and lying to department officials about their drug use. Five officers, including the four who filed suit, denied the accusations and requested an administrative hearing.

The hearing board upheld the allegations and the officers were fired.

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

THE CALL OF A PROPHET

THE TITLE OF PROPHET, IN BIBLICAL TIMES, WAS TRADITIONAL. IT CARRIED NO BY-LAWS OR GROUND RULES FOR CONDUCT, BUT IT GAVE GOD WITNESS AGAINST TYRANNY AND SINFUL BEHAVIOR HERE ON EARTH. THE PROPHETS WERE BEYOND THE TEMPTATION OF WORLDLY PLEASURES, NOR DID THEY ASK FOR A REWARD FROM HEAVEN FOR THEIR SELFLESS LABORS. THEY WERE COMMANDED TO PROCLAIM GOD'S LAW. NOWHERE IN ANTIQUITY CAN BE FOUND SUCH A SUCCESSION OF MEN WHO WERE THE SPOKESMEN OF GOD AND THE AUTHORITIES FOR PROCLAIMING HIS WILL. MOST OF THEM SEEMED TO HAVE COME OUT OF THE WILDERNESS WEARING THE ROUGH GOATSKIN GARMENTS OF THE DESERT HERMITS. THEIR HARD, STONY STARE WAS CAPABLE OF PIERCING TO THE VERY SOUL OF THE PERSON THEY ADDRESSED....

THEY COULD GO FOR DAYS WITHOUT FOOD OR DRINK AND THEIR DEDICATION TO GOD HAD NO COMPROMISE. THEY WERE NOT PARTICULARLY WELL EDUCATED MEN NOR DID THEY HAVE TO BE, BECAUSE GOD SPOKE THROUGH THEM. AS A CASE IN POINT, WHEN ELIJAH CALLED ELISHA TO FOLLOW HIM AS A PROPHET (1 KINGS 19:19) WHERE DO YOU SUPPOSE HE WAS...DEEP IN SPIRITUAL STUDIES? OR DELVING INTO MOSAIC LAW? NO WAY... HE WAS OUT IN THE FIELDS PLOWING BEHIND A YOKE OF OXEN.

Ferment Clouding Old Labels

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

AP Religion Writer

Some odd shifts are taking place on the Christian landscape of America, with old labels of "liberal" and "conservative" being thrown askew and with a switch in zones of conflict and conciliation.

In short, church diplomacy has become a higgledy-piggledy affair.

Fundamentalists, seen in the past as narrow, fractious splinters of church life, have become more sophisticated, cohesive and involved in public affairs, with cooperative signs appearing among former battling camps.

"The fundamentalist movement has come of age," says a new, slick monthly, Fundamentalist Journal, edited by the Rev. Jerry Falwell of Lynchburg, Va., television preacher and Moral Majority Leader.

"The conservative religious movement has become the dynamic spiritual force in America today."

At the same time, avowed "liberal" Roman Catholics and "liberal" Protestants have moved to the left, both in substance and style," says a new, independent lay Catholic journal, Catholicism in Crisis, edited by Ralph McInerney of South Bend, Ind.

"National conferences of Protestant ecumenical organizations reflect a leftward swing away from real liberalism.

"Many who used to be liberal have moved decisively to the left, both in substance and style," says a new, independent lay Catholic journal, Catholicism in Crisis, edited by Ralph McInerney of South Bend, Ind.

"National conferences of Protestant ecumenical organizations reflect a leftward swing away from real liberalism.

"Many who used to be liberal have moved decisively to the left, both in substance and style," says a new, independent lay Catholic journal, Catholicism in Crisis, edited by Ralph McInerney of South Bend, Ind.

"National conferences of Protestant ecumenical organizations reflect a leftward swing away from real liberalism.

"Many who used to be liberal have moved decisively to the left, both in substance and style," says a new, independent lay Catholic journal, Catholicism in Crisis, edited by Ralph McInerney of South Bend, Ind.

"National conferences of bishops are bringing political divisions into the church."

An opening editorial also charges a rise of economic-political ideas in the church that would damage freedom and productivity.

Such complaints also are raised by other recently formed Catholic groups in Washington, D.C., which assail the bishops' objections to U.S. nuclear policy.

Similarly, on the mainline Protestant scene, some who term themselves "liberal" have formed the Institute for Religion and Democracy which voices similar criticisms of major ecumenical organizations.

The main target is the National Council of Churches and leadership of the mainline denominations that are members.

Their "pattern of leadership" suggests a "betrayal of the liberal tradition" and "an abandonment of the ecumenical task" of unity, says the Rev. Richard Neuhaus, a Lutheran and an Institute leader.

The Institute claims the mainline churches and cooperative council display a leftist tendency, going easy on Soviet oppression but being overly critical of conditions in democratic America.

The Rev. Edmund W. Robb of Marshall, Texas, a United Methodist who heads the Institute, says the council and mainline churches overlook "crimes of communist despotism" but give "obsessive attention" to U.S. failings.

The Institute sees links between Christianity and American freedom.

The council's president, United Methodist Bishop James Armstrong of Indianapolis, says it's one-sided to think "the United States represents the Sermon on the Mount and the Soviet Union represents the devil."

Noticeably, some participants in the Institute also are associated with Catholicism and Crisis, including Catholic lay scholar Michael Novak of the American Enterprise

Institute and Catholic James

Finn of Freedom House.

Catholicism and Crisis charges a kind of "clericalism" in U.S. Roman Catholicism, usurping the laity's role of dealing with political affairs, while the Institute similarly charges a mainline Protestant bureaucracy out of touch with the laity.

While the friction went on in the customarily more unified ranks of Protestantism and Catholicism, the historically more combative fundamentalists and evangelicals showed signs of greater harmony.

Avowedly conservative, they're sometimes called the religious right. One drastic shift for them is their plunge into speaking out on social issues, something they used to denounce mainline churches for doing. Now virtually all do it, but with different assessments.

"The single most startling change in evangelicalism is its shift toward political and social involvements," says the Rev. Kenneth Kanzer of Wheaton, Ill., retiring after five years as editor of the evangelical fortnightly Christianity Today.

"Growing out of that is the tendency for evangelicals and fundamentalists to join forces. Fundamentalists are sloughing off their extreme right."

Fundamentalism, stressing the Bible and precise doctrinal points, arose at the turn of the century in conflict with historic denominations, splitting off into independent, insular congregations, often called "fighting fundamentalists."

"There have been battles among the brethren, but the war is over," writes the Rev. Raymond W. Barber of Fort Worth, Texas. "Fundamentalists are coming together."

Comments the Rev. Truman Dollar of Kansas City, Mo.: "You can be a gentleman and a fundamentalist."

Youth To Present Live Nativity

The youth of Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church will present a live nativity in the parking lot of the church, at the corner of Greene and South Washington streets, from 5:30-7 p.m. Sunday.

The major characters of the nativity will be represented and some live animals will occupy the stable. Carols will be sung by the youth choir as the nativity scene unfolds.

A&T Choir To Perform

The North Carolina A&T State University Fellowship Gospel Choir of Greensboro will present a concert of gospel music Sunday at 5 p.m. at the Sycamore Hill Baptist Church on West Eighth Street. The concert will be sponsored by the Pitt County chapter of the A&T Alumni Association.

Ervin Crisp of Bethel, a guitarist and singer, will appear as a special guest artist during the concert.

Urges Jews Back Israel

DENVER (AP) — The leader of Reform Judaism urges American Jews "to affirm our own identity, integrity and value as Jews" independent of the state of Israel, but at the same time to "deepen our solidarity" with the Jewish state.

Rabbi Alexander M. Schindler, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, told its board of directors that many American Jews have been "plugged into Israel as if it were a kidney machine, a scientific marvel that keeps them Jewishly alive."

Calling for a "restoration of some balance," he said "we will not survive if all we are about is Israel. And Israel will not survive if the Jews of the world become pale, peripheral extensions of its essence."

He said there is a "greater Israel which sustained our Jewishness throughout the many centuries of the dispersion" and which "we must also nurture if we are to survive."

Meanwhile in New York, Rabbi Gilbert Klapperman, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, representing Orthodox Judaism, urged Jews to stand by Israel which, he said, is being vilified by "anti-Israel propagandists."

He said there is a "greater Israel which sustained our Jewishness throughout the many centuries of the dispersion" and which "we must also nurture if we are to survive."

Growth May See A New Diocese

DENVER (AP) — A third Roman Catholic diocese in Colorado has been proposed to the Vatican by Archbishop James V. Casey because of the state's continuing population growth.

The new diocese would be located in Colorado Springs, formed from nine counties now in the Denver archdiocese and one county in the Pueblo diocese.

'Punk' Songs Of Despair

By RUTHE GRUBER
WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — The windowless student club was smoky and hot and there was a whiff of marijuana as the crowd of mesmerized youngsters chanted along with the band or danced frantically.

"Revolution!" the musicians screamed into the crowd.

"Revolution!" the crowd screamed back, clenched fists raised. "Oi, oi, oi, oi!"

It was Friday night in Warsaw, and the local punk band TZN Xenna was playing a gig.

Punk is big with some Polish young people who identify with the bleak, angry lyrics and the raucous sound. Their black T-shirts are emblazoned with words like "chaos" and "destroy" and "no future."

The state-run recording industry does not record punk music.

"The communists don't like us," one punk rocker said.

But young people latch on to songs like "Empty Cities," "Gray People," "Generation X (Paranoia)" and know them by heart.

Martial law has for many made life in Poland even harder to bear, but times have long been tough in Poland and punk has been popular ever since the late 1970s when the first records by the Sex Pistols and other Western groups filtered in.

"The young punk in London is revolting against the solid middle-class world of his parents," said the government newspaper Rzeczpospolita recently. "In Poland, the world in front of the stage is the world of meat lines."

It urged the establishment to pay attention.

There are scores of punk and would-be punk bands in Warsaw alone. TZN Xenna, playing together for a year, is one of the most popular.

"The strength of our music is created by the people who come to the concerts," said 18-year-old lead singer "Zygzak," who delights the crowd with a shaven head and manic eyes and — like English star Ian Dury — walks with a crutch.

"Nobody can play punk unless he comes from the environment," Zygzak said. "It is a real protest against the environment. All over the world punk music is a rebellion against the same things."

"The political side is secondary — it's more a social thing."

movie on ABC tonight, "Don't Go to Sleep."

Spelling, perhaps best known as the creator of "Charlie's Angels," is the executive producer of six series on ABC this season, all of which do well, but none of which do the medium proud: "Dynasty," "Love Boat," "Fantasy Island," "Hart to Hart," "Matt Houston," and "T.J. Hooker." Almost everything Spelling touches turns to trash, turns up on ABC — and turns a profit for the network.

Tonight, Spelling offers the same priorities for the television movie genre. "Don't Go to Sleep" is a tasteless effort to match the recent success of theatrical hair-raisers such as "The Fog" and the "Halloween" sequels.

But even if torment television is your thing, it takes good writing and creative special effects to accelerate the old ticker. "Don't Go to Sleep" has none of that, resembling in style and sophistication that party gag of coiled "snakes" springing from a peanut brittle can.

For scares and suspense, this effort relies on screams and musical crescendos. Only Valerie Harper and the daftness of Ruth Gordon provide some class. Why they agreed to perform in it is more baffling than the movie.

Miss Harper ("Rhoda") and Dennis Weaver ("McCloud") head a family tortured by guilt over the death, in a car accident, of their eldest daughter, who returns from the grave to console younger daughter Mary (Robin Ignacio).

One by one, members of the family are dying. Grandma (Miss Gordon) dies of a heart attack after the family's iguana climbs in bed with her. And so on and so on, ad nauseum.

The movie ends appropriately enough, with Miss Harper seen shrieking in fear with a close-up of her face frozen beneath the superimposed production credits. The first name is Spelling's. So that's why she was screaming.

CBS takes its turn with a psychological thriller Saturday night, but its effort is even worse than "Don't Go to Sleep." One casting coincidence is that Miss Ignacio also brings her rolling eyes and piercing scream to "Cry for the Strangers."

The movie begins in 1937, with a little boy seeing a cloudy vision of Indians dancing around a stake. It's a surreal picture, seemingly shot through cellophane tape. Then the boy sees his grandparents dead, buried upright in the sand.

These freaks of nature bring thunder, lightning — no rain — and the same stock shot of fast-moving clouds. (CBS spared no expense on this one.) The storms seem to soothe a hyperkinetic child; which is supposed to be a clue to solving the murder mystery.

It takes a long time for the slow-witted Russell to come up with the answer. Duffy, himself seems to be sleepwalking through the role, which fulfilled a contractual commitment to CBS.

While CBS sees ghosts Saturday night, you should see something else.

Karen Valentine Has Title Role

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Karen Valentine will star in the title role of "Jane Doe," a two-hour CBS-TV movie, playing a young woman who suffers amnesia as the result of a near-fatal accident.

Co-starring with Valentine will be William Devane, Eva Marie Saint and David Huffman, with Devane playing a detective investigating the accident case.

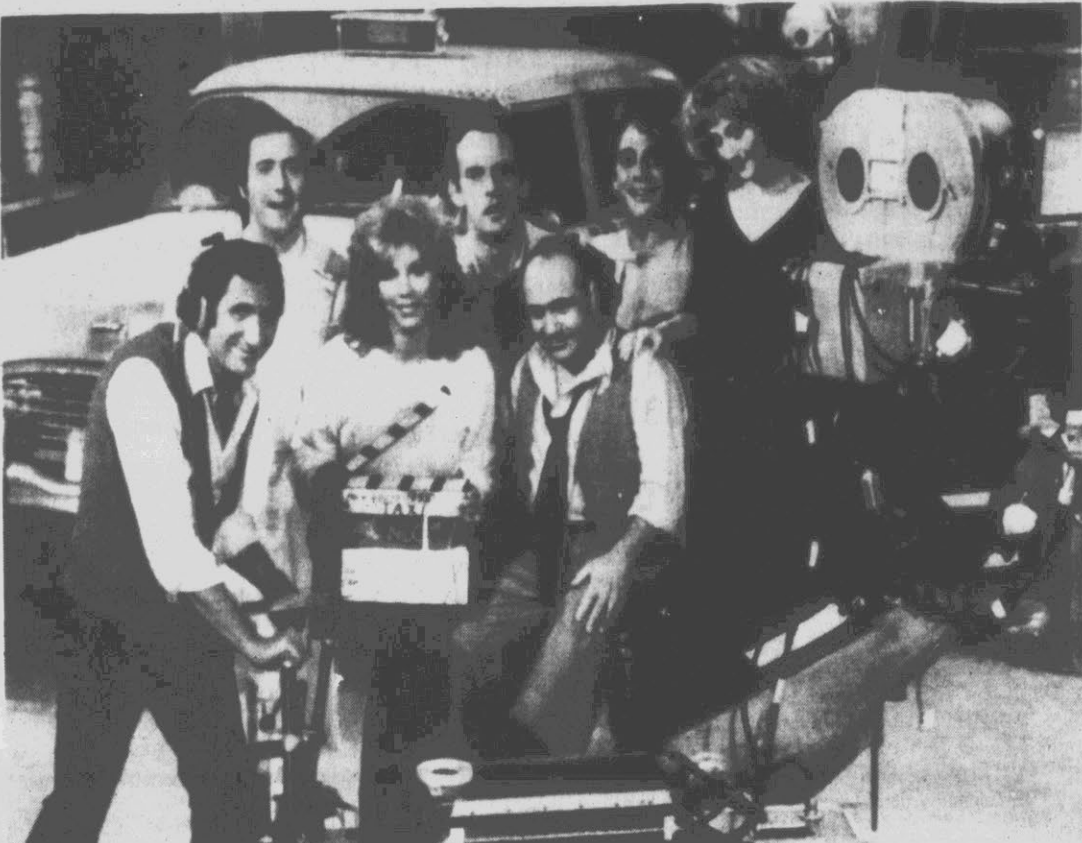

"Jane Doe" will film entirely on locations in Vancouver, B.C., with Ivan Nagy directing for executive producer Dennis Doty.

Cut to the same town, Clarks Harbor, and move to the present. Dr. Brad Russell (Patrick Duffy from "Dallas") is a psychiatrist who buys a home there. On the day he and his wife (Cindy Pickett) arrive, a man is found dead in a fishing net. Soon, others die, their deaths always linked to the nightly storms.

Hagman Playing In TV Movie

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — In a departure from his mean-as-dirt J.R. Ewing role in the weekly "Dallas" series, Larry Hagman will star in "Deadly Encounter," a CBS-TV adventure movie Dec. 18.

Co-starring with Hagman will be Susan Anspach, James Gammon and Michael G. Gwynne.

"Deadly Encounter" affords Hagman the opportunity to play a good guy, on the lam from the law for a crime he didn't commit, who runs a helicopter service in Mexico.

New Daytime Game Show Set

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — NBC-TV will deliver a new daytime game show titled "Just Men," featuring Betty White as hostess, beginning Jan. 3.

"Just Men" is a daily celebrity talk-game show in which seven men from show business and sports will answer questions posed by two female contestants.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — THAT DISREPUTABLE
SCULPTOR CHISELED OUR BOSS.
Today's Cryptoquip clue: P equals C.

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Call Attention To Hypothermia Risk

Pitt County residents were cautioned today to be aware of the dangers of hypothermia — a condition where the body temperature drops dangerously low — now that temperatures in the area are becoming more seasonably cool.

Liz Wilkerson, a spokesman for the Pitt County Medical Society, said with the efforts to conserve energy resulting in lower temperatures in homes and at work, the dangers of hypothermia are increased.

While "the cooler surroundings don't present a health hazard to most people," Mrs. Wilkerson said, "when temperatures are very cold, some people — particularly the elderly and chronically ill — run the risk of developing hypothermia." The most common victims of hypothermia traditionally have been hunters and campers who are exposed to cold temperatures for long periods of time.

Hypothermia is not always recognized, she said, "because the expected symptoms — shivering and turning pale — do not occur."

"In fact," Mrs. Wilkerson said, "the hypothermia victim often feels comfortable while those around the victim complain about the cold."

Slurred speech, irregular heart beat or dizziness are symptoms of hypothermia, she said, and "a special thermometer, which registers below the normal 94 degree mark, is needed to detect" hypothermia.

"If you suspect someone is suffering from hypothermia," Mrs. Wilkerson said, "seek medical attention immediately."

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY, DEC. 11, 1982

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You can gain added strength now by taking needed health treatments. You can also gain advancement by building up your philosophy of life to a loftier level.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Get away from dull routines and find more interesting outlets. Make needed changes to have greater abundance.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) You have the right hunches at this time and you should follow them for best results. Discuss the future with loved one.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Study your surroundings and make plans for improvements. A civic matter should be handled now without delay.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) If you get an early start, you can accomplish a great deal today. Be more economical and save money.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Make preparations now for recreation you wish to enjoy in the future. Tone down your temper and be happier.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Do some entertaining of worthwhile persons today and increase happiness. Strive to please family members.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) A good day to be with close ties and exchange views. Discuss the future with loved one and increase harmony.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Plan how to add to your income so that you need not worry so much about expenses. Seek the advice of an expert.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Make plans to improve your surroundings. You may want to go out for a good time but it's better to stay at home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Make plans to engage in favorite hobby with congenials. Sidestep a foe who is jealous of you. Use common sense.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Try to help a friend who is most deserving of your assistance. Make plans to have increased income in the future.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Purchase new appliances that can make your job easier in the future. Later engage in group activities and express happiness.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will enjoy travel to foreign lands and upon maturity will do well because the thinking is right and the ability is great. Give as fine an education as you can and stress foreign languages and political sciences.

"The Stars impel, they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

Social Security Reformers Finding No Rescue Plan

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Commission on Social Security Reform is facing what may be its last hurrah, the goal of forging a rescue plan for the ailing retirement program apparently beyond its grasp.

On the eve of today's final scheduled meeting, Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., chairman of the House aging committee, accused the White House and Republican leaders of letting the commission reach a stalemate.

Republican economist Alan Greenspan, the commission chairman, was working behind the scenes trying to muster a large majority of the 15-member panel to back a compromise plan of tax hikes and cuts in the growth of benefits.

The start of today's meeting was delayed from the morning until the afternoon to allow more time for backroom maneuvering.

But several members agreed the panel's work appeared dead in the water, and that it was likely to go no further than it did last month when the members informally agreed that:

—Social Security faces a shortfall of $150 billion to $200 billion over the next seven years.

—The system's cost-of-living formula needs to be changed so that benefit hikes don't grow faster than workers' wages.

—It needs a fail-safe mechanism to reduce benefits or raise revenues in an emergency.

—Coverage should be required for new federal workers and all non-profit employees.

Pepper and four other liberal Democrats last month proposed speeding up the payroll tax hikes scheduled between now and 1990; offsetting that with a new income tax credit for workers; delaying the July 1983 cost-of-living hike by three months; extending coverage to new federal workers, and, if need be, slightly raising the payroll tax or reducing benefits in 2020 and beyond.

Pepper, chairman of the House aging committee, complained that neither the White House nor Republican lawmakers on the panel have made any counter-offer.

"It would seem to be appropriate that somebody speaking for the administration in power should offer us a proposal," Pepper said in a telephone interview. "They're trying to throw the onus on the Democrats. They want to wait until we hold hearings (in the House next year), and they want to sit back and shoot at our proposal."

The panel is facing a Dec. 31 deadline to complete its report.

Alexander B. Trowbridge, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, who suggested a compromise earlier this week involving a mix of payroll tax hikes, a six-month delay in the cost-of-living hike, and a one-year increase in the retirement age by the year 2010, said Thursday there was still an outside chance the panel could reach a compromise. "We haven't finished the month of December yet," he observed.

But Trowbridge said the panel did not get "the nod" it needed from the White House and Democratic leaders. "For lots of understandable reasons, people are reluctant to stick their necks out unless they get some comfort that they won't be chopped off by the leadership," he said.

Robert A. Beck, chairman of Prudential Insurance Co. and a Republican, said both sides "really want to save their negotiating for when the battle is joined in Congress."

Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., told a group of state lawmakers Thursday he not only thinks the commission will fail to reach a compromise, but fears Congress will be unable to agree on a rescue plan next year.

Heinz said some of his fellow commission members were still "floating" compromise plans. But he said that until President Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill "take an interest in those plans and some form of shuttle diplomacy takes place, none of those plans has much meaning."

"I believe we need a summit meeting on Social Security between President Reagan and Tip O'Neill," said Heinz.

The commission includes eight Republicans and seven Democrats. Seven, including Heinz and Pepper, are influential members of Congress.

Social Security's old age fund borrowed $581 billion from the disability reserve last month and borrowed $3.4 billion Tuesday to cover benefits checks. It is expected to borrow at least $7 billion more Dec. 31 to keep paying benefits on time through June.

Congress will have to act before July to prevent delays in benefit payments. Extending the temporary interfund borrowing authority will only keep the system going into 1984.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has promised to fashion a reform bill and send it to the floor for action by late March. Rostenkowski, who is not on the reform panel, also has suggested taxing benefits or raising excise taxes for Social Security.

To Britons, Falklands War Continues Emotional Subject

By MARKS SMITH
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — At a cafe in Brest two weeks ago, French sailors taunted a group of British seamen about the damage French-made Exocet missiles did to Britain's ships in the Falklands War. The British were not amused, and fists and furniture flew.

Six months after the Argentine surrender in Port Stanley, the 74-day war to reclaim the Falkland Islands is still an emotional subject for Britons, a source of national pride — and dispute.

The triumphs and tragedies are relived on front pages and in evening news shows, and there's a steady diet of revelations about how battles were won and lost.

Welcome home parades and memorial services still attract thousands, and money still pours into charities for the widows of the 255 British dead.

"The profound importance of this event cannot be overemphasized," says British Energy Secretary Nigel Lawson, who contends that with the success of British troops in the South Atlantic islands, "a new sense of pride in ourselves has been born."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, whose opinion poll ratings soared during and after the war, says the conflict was a turning point in post-Empire British morale.

"A task force showed the way last spring, and our country found its soul," she declared in a speech to London business leaders last month.

Her critics, however, accuse her of cynically capitalizing on the nationalism the conflict aroused.

"She has used dead, dying and maimed people to boost her popularity," says Tony Benn, left-wing leader in the opposition Labor Party.

The death toll included 712 Argentines.

Another Laborite goes further. In his book "One Man's Falklands," member of Parliament Tam Dalyell accuses Mrs. Thatcher of ordering the torpedoing of the Argentine cruiser General Belgrano — with the loss of 368 lives — rather than accept a diplomatic solution under which Argentina might have withdrawn its troops.

"For Mrs. Thatcher, peace with compromise would have been politically disastrous," he alleges.

The prime minister is also under attack from critics who say she could have prevented the April 2 Argentine attempt to regain sovereignty over islands it has claimed as the Malvinas for nearly 150 years.

Mrs. Thatcher counters that she found out about Argentina's intentions too late to stop the landing 8,000 miles from the British mainland. But critics say she had ample warning from intelligence sources and from public statements by Argentine leaders.

A committee appointed by Mrs. Thatcher is investigating this and other questions.

What is beyond dispute is the fascination the subject still holds for the British. Fourteen books and countless newspaper articles on the Falklands have been published and more are in the works.

Thousands turned out to welcome British servicemen back to the south coast port of Plymouth on Nov. 12, and the Falklands featured prominently Nov. 15 in Remembrance Day ceremonies, originally a day for honoring British dead in the two world wars. On Dec. 6, nurses who went to the Falklands were saluted at a memorial service in a London church.

The South Atlantic Fund has collected $22 million to benefit families of men killed in the Falklands.

Anthony Barnett, a liberal writer opposed to the war, says there's no denying "the powerful feeling of nostalgia and solidarity that the fighting engendered, sentiments that apparently engulfed a majority in all social classes."

Two recent events stirred those emotions most strongly.

The first was a United Nations resolution calling for new negotiations on the Falklands, passed despite strenuous British opposition.

What really irked the British was the American abstention. Mrs. Thatcher said it was "incomprehensible and disappointing" that the United States had not backed her.

Then it was disclosed that the French company

Aerospatiale was shipping Exocet missiles to Argentina — the weapon that sank the destroyer HMS Sheffield and container ship Atlantic Conveyor.

"An act of betrayal," bellowed lawmaker Walter Johnson, who called for a boycott of French wine and cheese. "Shameful" and "cowardly" said the London tabloid The Sun, recalling that "twice this century, at bloody cost to ourselves, we have gone to the aid of France in her hour of dire need."

The issue degenerated into fisticuffs in Brest when crewmen from the Hermes — in the French port on a "goodwill" visit — engaged French seamen in two nights of battles that port authorities said began with French taunts over the Exocet.

How durable these emotions will prove in the face of a taxing British defense commitment to the faraway colony remains to be seen.

Government estimates of the cost of maintaining a garrison on the Falklands — now 3,500 troops — and enough ships and planes in the area to forestall any new invasion range between $970 million and $1.3 billion for each of the next three years.

READY TO DANCE — Ballerina Valentina Kozlova, who defected from the Soviet Union in 1979, poses with 100 pairs of ballet shoes made especially for her by the Capezio shoe factory in New York City. They are copies of the shoes she wore with the Bolshoi ballet company, from which she and her husband, Leonid, defected while on tour in this country. Miss Kozlova will wear a pair of the shoes a day for her starring role in the revival of the Rodgers and Hart musical, "On Your Toes", soon to open in Washington, D.C. (AP Laserphoto)

Could Include Tax Boost On Gasoline

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP)

— The chairman of the Advisory Budget Commission says the commission may have to look to a "continuation budget" instead of an "expansion budget," and that could include a 1-cent tax hike on gasoline.

"It's not a matter of what we want to do, but what we've got to do with," state Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, said Thursday.

Royall said that he might support a 1-cent increase in the state's sales tax if the Legislature finds it necessary. He also said he would not as readily favor making the sales tax increase a local option.

He made his comments at a dinner arranged by municipal and county government officials from Orange County for legislators who represent the county.

The purpose of the meeting was to allow the local governments to present some of their problems to the state legislators before the the 1983 legislature opened.

The legislators painted a bleak picture to the government officials assembled for the dinner at the Carolina Inn. But the officials made their pitch anyway for more money and a clarification of local responsibilities from the 1983 session of the North Carolina General Assembly.

Royall noted that Gov. Jim Hunt, Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green and House Speaker Liston Ramsey are committed to not instituting any new taxes. But, he said, the legislature may have to take another look at taxation needs in May when the 1983-85 budget picture becomes clearer.

The only foreseeable expansion of the budget, Royall said, would be if Hunt seeks to lift the freeze on pay raises for teachers and state employees.

Other concerns addressed included the need for funds for capital improvements in the school system and the need to spell out state versus local responsibilities for capital improvements in various areas of local government.

Caught Again In Robbery Effort

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP)

— An Asheboro man who robbed an Asheville convenience store in 1980 was wounded by Roanoke County, Va., officers last week, police said.

James John Poupalas Jr., has been charged in Virginia with attempted capital murder, police said.

Poupalas, admitted Thursday to the State Penitentiary Hospital in Richmond for treatment, was listed in satisfactory condition with wounds in the right arm and right leg, police said.

Police said they fired a total of 10 shots at the man while he was pointing a .357 at them.

Youth Basketball Set In Grifton

A basketball program for boys and girls grades 6-8 will be held at Grifton School beginning Saturday in the gym at 9 a.m.

The program will run for nine weeks and is sponsored by Pitt County Community Schools. Program times for each group will be determined by the number participating.

There will be a $3 registration fee and all participants are required to be from the Grifton School District.

For further information call the Community Schools Program at 752-6106, ext. 248.

Club's Bouncer Seeks Damages

WASHINGTON (AP) — A nightclub bouncer is seeking $10 million in damages from the Brazilian ambassador to the United States, his son and the Brazilian government in connection with a shooting incident involving the son last month.

The suit was filed Thursday in U.S. District Court by Kenneth W. Skeen of suburban Silver Spring, Md. He sought punitive and compensatory damages from the purported assailant, Antonio Francisco da Silveira Jr., his father, Ambassador Antonio F. Azeredo da Silveira, and the Federal Republic of Brazil.

The younger da Silveira, 18, was arrested after the shooting outside a Washington nightclub on Nov. 29, but charges were dropped because he had diplomatic immunity. He returned to Brazil after the State Department indicated it would declare him persona non grata if he did not depart voluntarily.

ALLOW EXCEPTION

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — The U.A.E. federal court ruled this week that non-Islamic foreigners convicted of drunkenness don't have to be whipped. They'll just go to jail.
