Spy Satellite's Point Of Return Is Still Unknown

Entry Today

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A crippled and radioactive Soviet spy satellite hurtled toward a fiery doom Saturday at a speed which indicated to U.S. experts that it probably will re-enter Earth's atmosphere Sunday — according to one federal agency, probably before 6:50 p.m. EST.

The North American Aerospace Defense Command, which has been tracking Cosmos 1402 since it developed its fatal problems in late December, estimated the nuclear-powered space ship's hulk should penetrate the atmosphere sometime between 12:53 p.m. EST Sunday and 12:53 a.m. EST Monday.

Pentagon space specialists said it was likely that re-entry and the hoped-for burn-up of most of the radioactive vehicle would occur Sunday evening.

"If you look at the mid-point of these re-entry windows, it looks pretty solid for an evening re-entry (Sunday)," said a Pentagon spokesman, Maj. Douglas Kennett.

But Kennett said it was still too early to predict where the satellite would hit.

"You can't predict a place until you can predict a time," he said. "It's traveling at about 17,000 miles an hour. If you're off by 15 minutes, you're off by 3,000 to 5,000 miles."

As of 8:18 a.m. EST Saturday, the satellite was traveling in an orbit which brought it within 102.2 miles of Earth's surface. That was about 4.7 miles lower than a report late Friday.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency sent messages to the governors of the 50 states at about 6:50 p.m. EST Saturday saying it expected the satellite to "reach the earth's atmosphere within the next 24 hours."

Dr. Richard Wagner, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's nuclear adviser, said in a telephone interview it is still "hard to predict" just when the satellite will hit the heavy atmosphere and where.

However, the Pentagon stood by its prediction earlier in the week that there was only a 2 percent chance that the satellite would come down over the United States and a 3 percent possibility

Pro-Con Abortion Forces Rally

By LINDA WEINSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

Abortion foes donned black armbands and held a mock funeral Saturday on the 10th anniversary of the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion, while advocates of abortion rights held their own rallies celebrating "10 years of reproductive freedom."

The day was marked by rallies and marches, receptions and prayer meetings in cities from Washington to Los Angeles as both sides used the day to get their messages across.

"The pro-life people have had it with 10 years of killing babies ... This is a dastardly thing that is going on," Nellie J. Gray, president of the national "March for Life" organization, said at a Washington press conference.

She said that "despite what we have been seeing in the press lately," the movement is unified in support of an anti-abortion constitutional amendment sponsored by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Rep. Henry J. Hyde, R-Ill.

Rallies were held in Boston; Buffalo, N.Y.; Cincinnati; New Orleans; Los Angeles; San Diego; Detroit; Madison, Wis., and Pierre, S.D.

"We must not tire. We must not become discouraged," Holly Sexton, president of the Lincoln, Neb., Right to Life Association, said as an estimated 2,000 abortion foes marched through the city. Some demonstrators wore black armbands, while others wore green armbands symbolizing hope.

In New Jersey, where the National Organization for Women planned an evening reception in honor of the decision, NOW spokeswoman Linda Dennis said, "We're celebrating 10 years of reproductive freedom." She added that NOW wants "to

Car Buying Brings Out Confused Wheeling, Dealing

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Wheeling and dealing is a constant in car bargaining, but current changes in interest rates and the economy are bound to have some buyers confused.

The most common misconception involves the drop of 4 percentage points in the nterest rates from six months ago. "A lot of people think that all cars are going at cheaper prices because of the drop, but that is not so," Seaton Howell owner of Seaton's Auto Sales said.

"I'll be right frank with you, with the market prices dropping, people are just not that anxious to buy a used car," he explained. "They are more interested in fixing up what they've got or buy a new car because interest rates are better on new vehicles."

According to a local banker, interest rates from 13 to 13 1/4 percent can be expected on a new car loan while used car loans run from 14 to 15 percent. "Banks are all different, but most will look at the age of the car being bought and will consider if the person borrowing is a customer or not. Of course, a customer should have a lower rate," he said.

The banker said loan rates could go down in the first half of 1983 and go through a slight increase adjusting period in the later part of the year. "At the beginning of 1984 or end of '83, we will probably see stabilization at about the same figures we are seeing now."

Car dealers also offer financing, some at much lower rates than local banks. Rex Smith, owner of Rex Smith Chevrolet in Ayden, said his company can provide financing for new cars at 11.9 percent.

Smith said he had no idea what the future will bring on interest rates but that the 11.9 rate was guaranteed through March 31.

New car sales are going well at the Bob Barbour dealership on Memorial Drive, Manager Chuck Murray said. "Hondas are selling the best this season as are Volvos. There has been a heavier interest in foreign cars with us for some time," he said.

Barbour salesman Jerry Ward said a large variation in list prices is why people are more interested in foreign vehicles. "Some people think that it's the same with American and import vehicles, but it's not that way at all," he said. "American cars bring in two-thirds more of a profit than imports. I think there's something like a $3,000 mark up on American made cars as compared to a Honda."

A car owner who asked not to be identified commented that even though she did know about the American and import vehicle price difference she would always buy a car made "at home."

"You may be saving money, but if you do invest a lot of money in foreign goods, you are just contributing to the downfall of the American economy," she said.

Safety considerations are not concerning buyers as much this year as before another salesman said. "People used to be worried

Attorneys Disagree

Is County Legal Corps Too Plentiful For Pitt?

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Do you need a lawyer? You shouldn't have too much trouble finding one. There are nearly 100 engaged in private practice in Pitt County.

The telephone book's Yellow Pages lists 84 in Greenville, five in Farmville and two in Ayden. The Pitt County Bar Association mails out notices of meetings to 92.

But that's not all of them. Some attorneys are privately employed full-time by local firms, while others teach at East Carolina University. And some are semi-retired, practicing only on a limited basis.

Are there too many attorneys in the county?

A number of lawyers were asked that question last week. Most agreed that there are not.

Hugh Cox was one of the exceptions. "I think probably there are too many," he said.

But Cox said "I think the thing that helps Greenville though is the influx of people" because of industry, East Carolina University and the medical school. "Greenville is growing," in number of people and economically. "Chapel Hill has a real glut," he suggested, because many of the graduates of the law school at the University of North Carolina want to stay in Chapel Hill.

The lawyer also suggested that there may be too many lawyers in North Carolina.

"I think the law schools will continue to turn out the same number" they have in the past, which will add to the number of attorneys already practicing.

The solution? "I think lawyers will eventually have to specialize. There are now a great number of general practice lawyers," Cox said.

Another way Cox thinks attorneys will compensate is by "cutting costs ... competition" for such "run of the mill things as wills, divorces."

Others took the position of Danny McNally. He said, "I haven't given it much thought, but I don't feel the number of lawyers in the county has affected my practice or the practice of my firm."

M.E. Cavendish said, "I don't really have an opinion. I've been reading in some of the national publications that that's the fact, but I haven't been made locally aware that that's the fact. If there's a problem locally, I'm not aware of it."

"I don't think there's too many," attorney Mickey Herring said. "I think that Greenville can support the number of lawyers we have in the area."

"The number of lawyers in Pitt County has started slowing down some," Herring suggested. "Several years ago we had

Pupils Treat School Staff

By MARY SCHULKEN

Last week 60 staff members at Ayden-Grifton High School were treated to lunch — by the students of the school.

The faculty-staff day, held by the school's Key Club to honor the teachers, administrators and staff of the high school, was a project club co-sponsor Bill Dorey called "a five-year goal."

"It's something I've wanted to do for a long time and I felt this year like I had a club that could pull it off," he said.

On Thursday the club did just that.

Staff members formed a line in the school's cafeteria at noon and had their plates filled to order by students with barbeque and fried chicken. Before the serving began, lunchroom staffers gave students instructions on how much to put on each plate.

Students greeted staff members at the door; others decorated and poured apple punch. While everyone was eating, Key Club members refilled tea glasses at tables.

But the club wasn't satisfied with just serving food: they also presented each staff member with three-color certificates of appreciation and pencil holders in the shape of apples that were made by the carpentry class.

For dessert the home economics class decorated squares of cake with apples.

"Basically our goal was to make the staff feel they are appreciated," said Joey Kennedy, co-president of the club. "The Key Club is honoring the custodial staff, the teachers and the administration because through their hard work we (students) have a healthy, clean and challenging environment to live in."

Kennedy said the Ayden-Grifton staff had

Elvis Mimic Is Charged

LIVERMORE FALLS, Maine (AP) — An Elvis Presley impersonator was being held Saturday in the shooting of a drummer who was part of his act, authorities said.

Michael Conley, 34, of Portland was arrested Friday on a charge of aggravated assault for the shooting late Thursday. He is accused of wounding David Tate, 25, of Mexico, during an argument in Conley's car, police said.

Tate was shot in the head and neck, and was listed in good condition at Central Maine Medical Center in Lewiston.

District Attorney Janet Mills identified Conley as a Presley impersonator and Tate as a drummer who had been part of his act.

Conley was being held in lieu of $25,000 bail at the Androscoggin County Jail pending an appearance Monday in Lewiston District Court.

City maps are available at the Engineering and Inspections Department. Call 752-4137 for information.

Mom Of Slain Hijacker Says He Wanted To Die

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The mother of a retarded man who was shot to death after hijacking a jetliner said he did it because he wanted to die.

"He got on that plane to get killed," said Lena Tripp, mother of hijacker Glen Kurt Tripp.

"He knew if he made a move he'd get killed," she said. "He didn't want to harm nobody, but he did the family harm."

Mrs. Tripp lives in Escondido, Calif. Her son, who was 20 and one of 17 children, lived in Stanwood, Wash., and hijacked the plane in Seattle, demanding to be taken to Afghanistan.

Tripp was shot and killed by an FBI agent Thursday afternoon aboard a Northwest Orient jet at Portland International Airport. He took over the plane as it prepared to land here. It was the same flight he had attempted to hijack in June 1980. During that incident, he reduced his demands from thousands of dollars to three cheeseburgers, a fast car and a head start.

Mrs. Tripp was interviewed Friday by telephone by the Everett (Wash.) Herald.

Tripp, she said, was depressed since he wasn't allowed to leave the state of Washington because of probation from the previous hijacking attempt.

"He said 'Mama, what is life good for if I can't even see my folks? I'm better off dead,'" she said.

"If Washington had given him the right kind of care, he wouldn't have gotten killed," Mrs. Tripp said. "They threw him out in the blue. He should have been counseled more. He needed help."

Mrs. Tripp criticized state probation officers for failing to allow her son to return to California when his father died in December 1980.

Dick Paulson, a spokesman for the Washington Department of Corrections, said Tripp never asked to go to his father's funeral.

Paulson said a judge denied Tripp's request to move to California, but only temporarily, and instructed Tripp and his probation officer to work out a detailed plan of what Tripp intended to do once he returned to California.

Paulson said Tripp changed his mind about a California move in November.

An autopsy Friday showed Tripp died of a single shot to the chest.

"They didn't let him give up or nothing," Mrs. Tripp said of the FBI. "They just planned their shooting and killed him."

The FBI said its agent fired the shot when Tripp made a threatening gesture with a shoe box he claimed was a bomb but contained only paper. The FBI also said it did not know Tripp's identity or background until after the shooting.

After the first hijacking attempt, Tripp spent a year in Victoria Village in Stanwood, a training center for the developmentally disabled. Officials there said Tripp never took advantage of followup counseling following his release.

Tripp used the name E. Smith when he boarded the plane Thursday and during his talks with FBI negotiators.

District Attorney Michael Schrunk said "there is no reason to believe from any source that anything was done other than in a professional manner, but any time there is a death it is tragic."

Schrunk said Portland police will interview those involved in the episode and determine by this week whether a grand jury investigation is necessary.

"loyalty to the student body" and noted he was "glad to see them get some recognition."

"We are sincere in our appreciation," said co-president Patricia Carter. "We need them (staff) a whole lot more than they realize."

The community also participated in the day. Local businesses and industries donated items and members of the Ayden-Grifton Kiwanis Club, which sponsors the Key Club, attended the dinner.

Along with Dorey, the Key Club is sponsored by two other Ayden-Grifton teachers — Peggy Hill and Monty Riggs. The club was chartered in 1975 and merged with the school's Keywanette Club in September of 1982.

"So many times we only hear about the negative things kids do," said sponsor Dorey. "Here is something that's very positive and I feel that it deserves recognition.

five to seven or so new lawyers per year. Recently that has slowed down some."

But Herring said, "I think North Carolina as a whole is getting to the point there are enough lawyers for the number of people," in the state.

"I think there are plenty of lawyers in Greenville," Allen Hahn said, "but there's always room for a few more.

"From what I've seen, a lot of lawyers have gone into private industry. The rapid expansion of the number of lawyers has created that."

Hahn suggested that "the larger Greenville grows, the more lawyers we'll need, obviously."

"When I came here to practice 10 years ago, seven new lawyers came with me. There were 70 in the county at that tine. Now there are probably 120," Hahn said.

Mark Owens, whose firm has offices in Greenville and Farmville, said, "I think that as with any profession, that supply and demand ... the quality of work a person does," will regulate the number of lawyers involved in private practice.

Satellite ...

that debris would land in Canada, as occurred on Jan. 24, 1978, when a similar Soviet ocean surveillance satellite broke up and rained pieces over a sparsely settled area in the far North.

The official betting still is that there is a 70 percent likelihood that the satellite will enter the atmosphere over water.

Cosmos 1402 was launched from the Soviet Union Aug. 30 on a mission to monitor U.S. and other naval movements on the globe's oceans through nuclear powered radar.

Normally, such satellites stay on station for five to six months, according to U.S. officials.

U.S. space watchers detected troubles on Dec. 28 when the Soviets apparently tried to send the reactor section, containing about 100 pounds of enriched uranium fuel into a high "parking orbit" where it would stay for an estimated 500 years.

The maneuver apparently failed, officials have said, and the satellite began to tumble end over end, falling gradually from its original orbit which brought it within 160 miles of Earth's surface.

A relatively small part of the satellite, believed by space experts to be an antenna, broke away and burned up in the atmosphere while the rest of the space ship kept falling slowly.

Sunday Opinion

Choose Person Who's Qualified For Legislature

Inevitably the death of an elected leader initiates the process of choosing a successor.

Thus it is following the death of Sam Bundy, who had served in the state Legislature since 1971 and had just begun a new term in a new session of the General Assembly.

Rep. Bundy will be difficult to replace. He was well liked in Raleigh, held a seat on the Advisory Budget Commission and served on several committees which are important to our area.

Nevertheless, a choice will soon be made and someone will be chosen to represent the district which includes Greene and Pitt counties with the exception of the Bethel and Stokes areas.

A committee composed of two members from Greene and two from Pitt will make the choice with members having votes based on each 300 population. New members of the committee had not been named from Pitt County since the county was divided in reapportionment. Thus the new members will have to be appointed.

Names abound. They included Walter Jones Jr., who reportedly has the active support of his father the congressman; former Farmville Mayor Linwood Mercer; present Farmville Mayor Rusty Duke; Mark Tipton, Greenville realtor, and Dr. Leo Jenkins, former ECU chancellor.

No doubt there will be other names circulated by the time this is read. Obviously the choice will depend to a great extent on who is chosen for the District House of Representatives Executive Committee by the Pitt County Democratic Executive Committee.

Clearly, however, the ultimate choice should be someone who is qualified and willing to devote an adequate amount of time to the position. It is important to all of us in Pitt and Greene counties that an outstanding person be chosen, and that should be placed above all the political maneuverings that are certain to go on.

Pitt UW Success Will Be Continued

United Way has been highly successful in Pitt County in recent years.

It has been meeting its goal in record times, even in the recent recession years. That is in contrast to some counties where the United Way campaign has been slow meeting its goal.

The credit belongs primarily to the citizens of the county who understand the purposes of the United Way's participating organizations and willingly give.

We can also thank people like Frank Grooms of Eaton Corp, who was the 1982 campaign chairman; Reid Hooper of Wachovia, the incoming president; Harry Leslie of Burroughs Wellcome, outgoing president; Robert Griffin, manager of the local Procter and Gamble plant who is the 1983 campaign chairman and Lou Folger, the executive director.

The volunteer officials changed at the annual meeting last week. It was an upbeat meeting based on the success of the 1982 campaign. We expect the campaign will go as well in 1983.

Sunday Morning Notes

Alvin Taylor

A balmy winter gave way to cold last week. The temperatures dropped below freezing, then into the 20s and finally into the teens. It was more typical January weather for this area after a balmy period which at times saw area residents walking around in shirt sleeves.

The cold weather was to be expected, of course, at this time of the year. The only solice was that last week we passed the midpoint of January. In a couple of weeks January will be gone and, after all, February is a short month.

But back to the frigid temperatures of last week. The old timer dropped by to discuss things and naturally the conversation turned to the cold weather. We asked him how he was staying warm.

"Well, mostly by keeping close to the fire at home," he said with a shiver, allowing that he only ventured out when necessary.

"Seems to me I recall better ways to keep warm in my young days," he said with a twinkle, "but now I just throw another log on the fire."

Well, old timer, at least the logs don't talk back.

Mary Schulken of The Daily Reflector staff is our weather reporter and also a regular runner.

Tuesday was a cold day and by the time Mary got to running the temperature was in the high 20s. Nevertheless she did it.

On Wednesday Mary told us she had decided not to run after checking the thermometer which showed another cold afternoon. Your columnist, who runs some, too, told her that the decision had already been made on our part to skip running on that cold day.

Dedication should only be carried so far.

Your columnist has a diesel automobile and extreme cold weather adds to our chores.

Some diesels won't start when the temperatures drop to very low levels. For our car there is an electric heater which must be plugged in to heat up the oil so the engine will turn over fast enough to ignite the diesel.

That meant rolling out before daybreak on the cold mornings last week to crank the engine. If it hadn't started the additional time was needed to heat the engine electrically so that we could get to work on time.

Spring, where are you?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan will be a man in search of many compromises in the next two years if he wants his presidency to work.

At midpoint in his White House career, Reagan has had to reassess his own hard and fast positions as he watches his supply-side economic policies founder on the shoals of failure.

Reagan would be the last to say his three-year tax cut combined with his monetary policy is not working.

Although, he was warned that it was not the way to go if he planned a trillian dollar defense buildup, his economic advisers had convinced him that the tax slash would wipe out the recession.

Today, the nation is still in a slump and Reagan has approved a three-year $99 billion tax increase and a four-year $20 billion gas tax hike, wiping out any of the advantages of the tax cut. And that's not all. Social Security taxes will be accelerated under the reform plan and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan has let the cat out of the bag that the president will propose a whole new package of tax hikes in the forthcoming 1984 fiscal year budget.

Some past presidents who have now been sidelined may be smiling at all this, particularly as one remembers Reagan's campaign battle cry against those who "tax and tax and spend and spend."

The president came into office promising a balanced budget and a job for everyone who wanted to work. In his two years as president, the deficit looms at around $200 billion and unemployment has spiraled from around 7.5 million to close to 12 million.

Confronted with the facts and a continuing sluggish economy, it appears that he can no longer hang tough. Under strong pressure from Republican leaders who have gone public on the subject, Reagan has been displaying more flexibility. Much against his druthers he sent Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger back to the drawing board and Weinberger came up with $$11.3 billion in military spending cuts.

His top GOP lieutenants on Capitol Hill are telling him that is not enough, but he passed the word that his bottom line.

Reagan is enough of a politician to know that he has to make concessions if he expects his programs to pass. It is difficult for him to bend, particularly when it involves his political convictions. But he also sees the handwriting on the wall and what is being called the "paralysis of confrontation" if he chooses to do battle with Congress on the major issues.

When he was governor of California, Reagan had pronounced himself "in concrete" on a given issue. Later when he had to compromise, he jokingly told reporters, "You see the concrete breaking around my feet."

Direction is one thing, rigidity another, and Reagan can see some of the fruits of his philosophy in the right turn the country has taken.

In the area of nuclear arms control, Reagan is being reluctantly pushed to change tactics and positions.

Although he is sticking with his "zero option" in the nuclear arms field — meaning no intermediate range missiles on the European continent or aimed at its capitals — the president and his advisers realize they are losing ground in the field of public opinion as Soviet President Yuri Andropov drops new proposals for cuts in nuclear weaponry.

Another area where Reagan has bowed to outside pressure and image has been the administration's apparent acknowledgement that it has not placed many women in high-visibility or policy-making top government jobs.

Extra Legislative Sessions Were Widespread

Paul T. O'Connor

RALEIGH — The General Assembly's seven sessions during 1981 and 1982 may have been unusual for North Carolina. But around the country, other Legislatures were showing the same need for extra sessions.

In 1981-82, state legislatures met longer and more often that ever before, the Naional Conference of State Legislatures reports. In all, 34 Legislatures called special sessions during the biennium. Virginia with 14 special sessions and Arizona with seven led the states. The North Carolina assembly came back to Raleigh four extra times and also held two regularly scheduled sessions. A seventh, one-hour-long session, was really part of the first extra session.

Most of the extra sessions were necessitated by redistricting — the 14 in Virginia, for example, and three of North Carolina's. The recession, which badly broke state budgets, also brought many legislatures back into session. Norty Carolina had one budget-finishing session.

The extra sessions weren't any more popular with legislators in other states than they were in North Carolina.

The question of a state lottery is apparently in limbo, according to the lobbyist who suggested it last year.

Charles Dunn, executive director of Child Watch, suggested a statewide lottery to raise money for children's programs.

Now, he says, there are no plans to introduce enabling legislation. There's a lot of support across the state for a state-run lottery, he says. But so far, the political support has not solidified.

Dunn says members of his staff came up with an interesting idea should a bill be filed. Maybe someone should drive to Washington, D.C., buy 170 of the district's lottery tickets, and distribute one to each legislator. You couldn't measure the political benefit if someone won.

The idea would probably be illegal, Dunn said. And, no one wanted to donate the $170 plus mileage that would have been needed.

John Glenn Seeks National Concensus

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The hundreds of California State Democratic Convention delegates who waited in line for Sen. John Glenn's handshake and autograph were demonstrating both strengths and weaknesses in his strategy to overhaul presidential front-runner Walter F. Mondale.

None of the other six hopefuls at the season's first presidential "cattle show" attracted such attention. But along with curiosity and hero-worship that impelled party activists to be photographed with the first American Earthorbiting spaceman were suspicion and latent hostility. "Why are you anti-environmentalist?" he was asked repeatedly by delegates moving through the reoeption line following Glenn's speech.

Glenn is patently not anti-environmentalist, but simply did not mention the environment in addressing the convention. Indeed, his speech consciously missed several items on the liberal laundry list customary for Democratic cattle shows. In a party that is evermore a coalition of special-interest groups, Glenn seeks a national consensus in the belief that this is the way not only to beat Ronald Reagan but win Democratic primaries.

With the exception of Sen. Ernest F. Hollings (whose South Carolina accent and fiscal austerity proved indigestible here), all other candidates recited the full laundry list. By far the best recitation was Mondale's. His stem-winder surpassed even his triumph at last summer's Philadelphia mid-term convention, exuding new confidence now that Teddy Kennedy's long shadow is gone.

This was Fritz Mondale's convention. Sen. Alan Cranston won the meaningless "straw vote" of delegates after pleading that they not humiliate him in his home state. But no influential California Democrat takes Cranston's candidacy seriously, and most are inclined to Mondale — if he does not become "another Muskie," with his masterful performance here, Mondale avoided Edmund S. Muskie's 1971 feat of arriving in Sacramento as a clear front-runner and leaving as a putative also-ran.

Mondale would have had the convention to himself were it not for the last speaker: John Glenn. The delegates, surfeited by oratory, were pleasantly surprised by the new platform style of the supposed "brown and boring" candidate. In a disciplined 15 minutes (half the time of all others, save for Hollings), Glenn attacked President Reagan's economic and foreign policies considerably less stridently than his competitors.

Glenn did not follow Mondale and most other hopefuls in promising to call a summit with Yuri Andropov the moment he was inaugurated. While Cranston pledged rights for "gays and lesbians" and Mondale for "homosexuals," Glenn ignored them. "I see myself as somewhat centrist, I guess," Glenn told a press conference after supporting present military aid to El Salvador and enforcement of draft registration ("I don't think you can pick and choose the laws you want to obey").

Silence here about Soviet despotism and expansionism, about Afghanistan and Poland, was not broken by Glenn. He was not about to alienate the convention by challenging the overriding impression here that Washington, not Moscow, is responsible for the nuclear arms race (Cranston concluded his speech by quoting peaceful rhetoric from Marshal Nicolai Ogarkov, head of the Soviet high command).

But neither did Glenn pander to the delegates, who are not even a microcosm of California Democrats. Most were appointed by overwhelmingly liberal office-seekers, with perhaps 40 percent controlled by Assembly Speaker Willie Brown. Of the delegates elected, the biggest single bloc belongs to Assemblyman Tom Hayden's radical Committee for Economic Democracy. Glenn was talking over the heads of these party activists seated before him.

To do so invites complaints about not punching the environmental ticket or some other liberal ticket in every speech. Glenn will get more of the Sacramento corridor comment, fanned by Mondale operatives, that he is insufficiently pro-Israel and pro-arms control. That is inherent in any Democratic campaign that, foregoing a bidding war for the Democratic coalition's interest groups, is openly "centrist." But this is John Glenn's only chance.

It's Got To Be Good For Us? Yes?

James J. Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — The package of recommendations on Social Security that emerged last weekend may remind many of us of an old assumption for cough syrup: if it tastes that bad, it must be good for us.

Virtually no one, it may be confidently assumed, will like the whole of the package. The ink on the signatures had not dried before the special interests, led by the American Association of Retired Persons, were ganging up against it. Federal employees, postal workers, charitable foundations, self-employed businessmen and the Chamber of Commerce of the Untied States began to dig in their heels.

My own unhappy feeling, for whatever it may be worth, is that the compromises worked out by the Greenspan Commission probably are the best that can be politically achieved. At some point, unless we are to exhaust our energies in bickering, leadership must be accompanied by followship. Let us swallow the bitter draught and get on to other matters.

Any consideration of the Greenspan proposals must begin by acknowledging the problem at hand. The Social Security System is in fact in serious trouble. The levels of promised benefits have outstripped the prospective income from Social Security taxes. It is captious to quibble over whether the shortfall is $160 billion or $180 billion or $200 billion over the next seven years. The shortfall is there, and it cannot be wished away.

Once that threshold is crossed, the responsibility resting upon Congress is clear: Revenues must be increased, or benefits must be lowered, or some combination of both approaches must be adopted. The Congress is not about to abandon the system as such, and the sensible but radical "private option" plans are at once too sensible and too radical for political consideration.

The commission's plan is to raise revenues in several ways. A tax increase that had been scheduled for 1985 would be moved forward to 1984, but the impact would be cushioned by the granting of a tax credit for the full amount of the increase in 1984. Retirees with outside income of $20,000 or more ($25,000 for a married couple) would pay income tax on half of their Social Security benefits. Certain new federal employees would be folded into the system. The tax on self-employed persons would be raised, but again, a tax deduction would soften the impact.

On the benefit side, the major recommendation is to postpone the next cost-of-living increase for six months. Retirees now are scheduled for a COLA next July. This would be postponed to January 1984. In future years, whenever the balance in the so-callled trust fund dropped to less than one-fifth of a year's benefits, the COLA would be reckoned by the annual rise in prices or the annual rise in wages, whichever was smaller.

The package contains many other provisions, including one that is specially attractive: After 1990, workers who delayed their retirement until after 65 would get an 8 percent bonus for every year of delay. This recommendation gives some sensible account to increased longevity, a factor that has contributed significantly to the problem before us.

Some of these proposals will be painful, but none of them will be unbearably painful, and the alternatives are worse. The accelerated tax increases will be one more burden for business that will have to be passed on to consumers in marginally higher prices if profits are to be maintained. The COLA delay will cost the single retiree $20 a month for six months; it may seem mere pocket change to the well-to-do, but for a widow who depends wholly upon Social Security it is not so easily minimized.

Face it: In politics, as in so many areas of our lives, the choice seldom lies between the good and the better alternatives. More often than not, the choice lies between the bad and the worse. That is the case here. There simply is no politically feasible solution that would satisfy everyone. The howling of objectors already has begun — that is to be expected in a free society — but the howling ought not to drown out the small voice of reason: Something has to be done, and this plan is most probably it.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Every concerned citizen is aware of the economic impact of tobacco on the welfare of the people of this county.

The problems facing tobacco growers are nationwide. Many people have worked many long hours to save the tobacco program.

I believe some of our representatives in Congress are using this issue as a political football.

If we farmers are to save the program, we must cooperate and present a united front before our enemies.

The lease question is a Pitt County issue. We can solve it among ourselves.

Farmers must decide if the future of tobacco is worth saving the present program. It's really up to us.

Craig Webb — Life Can Be Oh, So Comfortable In Raleigh...

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — From the private dining room to the members-only lounge, a North Carolina legislator's life has never before been so comfortable.

General Assembly members who once worked without even a desk to call their own now have private offices, secretaries and a support staff of hundreds. Some legislators question the need for the perks, but others argue they are fitting for a group running a government with a $6 billion annual budget.

This session's new benefits include a members-only dining room in the Legislature Building cafeteria. The room contains 50 of the 150 seats available in the facility, so legislators usually have no trouble finding seats at times when the public is scrambling for a chair.

One floor above, a former lunchroom has been converted into a lounge reserved for legislators, with curtains at the door to shield them from prying eyes. The lounge ostensibly provides a temporary home for legislators whose offices are in the adjacent Legislative Services Building, but it also provides a place for private strategy sessions.

"Most legislative facilities have areas where a member can go to be totally away from who he wants to be away from, but amongst other members," said Rep. Charles Evans, D-Dare and a member of the Legislative Services Commission that authorized the lounge. "There are some days, you know, where it's somewhat chaotic in here."

The lounge's opening also means the legislative chapel probably will return to its original use. During 1982, opponents of the Equal Rights Amendment met secretly in the chapel to plot strategy.

The amenities for legislators cannot be called plush. But when the working conditions include brass drinking fountains and restrooms with both cloth and paper towels, it is easy to see legislators aren't the typical group of people on the state payroll.

One veteran senator worried about the effect of the trappings on legislators unaccustomed to power.

"Some of these people have never had a secretary," he said recently. "They don't know how to use them. And can you imagine what having your own office does to the way you think?"

Rep. Dwight Quinn, D-Cabarrus, recalled that when he took office in 1951 he found himself crammed into the old Capitol's chamber for 120 House members.

"The only space the state provided for me was a portion of a desk 18 inches wide and a chair," he said. "We had no secretary, no postage allowance, no stationery. We got paid $75 a day for 90 days and after that you didn't get a penny.

"One year session we got involved in some wrangle and were in for 140 days," he said. "We had to serve 50 days without pay."

Today's General Assembly members receive $578 a month in salary, $172 a month for expenses and 25 cents per mile for transportation. They spend about six months in session on odd-numbered years and no more than a month in session during even-numbered years.

The expense money rarely has to be spent on dinners. Various organizations have reserved Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights into May to entertain legislators and make their pitch for various programs. There are similar breakfast invitations for about one day every week.

And when General Assembly members travel the state, they often are invited to stop into various sites. Charlotte's Discovery Place science museum gave all 170 legislators family passes recently, for example.

General Assembly members can automatically deduct $50 a day from their federal taxes to cover expenses while the Legislature is in session — weekends included. The state now allows the same deduction only for weekdays, but Rep. Charles M. Beall, D-Haywood, has introduced a bill expanding it to Saturdays and Sundays.

Rep. Martin Lancaster, D-Wayne, once was head of the House paes at the old Capitol. He once remarked that the typical legislator had to work at desks where the paper were piled a foot and a half high.

Those piles vanished when the opening of the Legislature Building in the mid-1960s brought General Assembly members their own offices. Only major committee chairmen got their own secretaries then, but within a few years every legislator had one — although most House and Senate members had to share their offices with the clerk-typist.

With the opening of the Legislative Services Building, half the members were moved to the new structure while the other half remained in expanded offices. Now every General Assembly member has a two-room suite.

The new building also left room at the Legislature Building for a lounge for lobbyists. The press corps has kept its old quarters, but conditions are relatively spartan — as evidenced by the daily fight over who gets to use the tree for hanging coats.

Steve Gerstel — Dollar Gap Widens

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Democrats, despite signal successes in the elections, are deeply concerned about their inability to even keep up with the Republicans in the vital area of fund-raising.

The Democrats made sizable gains in the House, added a parcel of new governors and held the GOP to a dead heat in the Senate although Republicans raised and spent much more.

The House Democratic Study Group, after sifting through the financial records at the Federal Elections Commission, found the outlook bleak.

The Study Group found that "the dollar gap between the two parties widened substantially ... both in total receipts and in the amount of financial help the parties provided their House and Senate candidates."

The comparison between the Democrats' and Republican three party committees — national, Senate and congressional — lends no encouragement.

The GOP party committees outraised their Democratic counterparts $180.4 million to $27.4 million — an astounding $153 million. Both parties raised more than in the past but the gap widened, from $109 million in 1980 and $47 million in 1978.

The Study Group said that in terms of financial help to candidates, "the bottom line in campaign fund-raising," the disparity is worse for Democrats.

The party gap more than doubled, growing from $6 million in 1978 to $15.4 million in 1982.

And as fund-raising begins for the 1984 elections, the Republicans are in much, much better shape.

The GOP starts out the year with a $8.5 million surplus and $2.2 in debts, for a net seed money of $6.3 million.

The Democrats, on the other hand, have only $876,000 on hand and $3.1 million in debts, for a net minus of $2.2 million.

Fund-raising efforts may be prove even more difficult this year and next for the Democrats as the multitude of presidential candidates siphon off potential money.

One of them, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., is considered superb at raising political money and for the last two years conducted a one-man foray for Democratic mega-bucks. His adroitness is shown by the fact that he already has qualified for federal matching funds for his presidential campaign.

But he's not the only one plumbing the same source. There's former Vice President Walter Mondale, Sens. Ernest Hollings, Gary Hart and John Glenn, former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew and maybe Rep. Morris Udall.

Republicans have no such problem. If President Reagan seeks a second term, he will not be seriously challenged.

But even if Reagan steps down, there remains all sorts of Republican money around the country — recession or no recession.

In a bow to the GOP, the Study Group says, "The growing money gap between the parties is due to the phenomenal effectiveness of the Republican fund-raising machine rather than to failure on the part of the Democratic fund-raisers.

The Study Group pointed out that the Democrats raised $8.5 million more in 1981-82 than in 1979-80 but Republicans increased their haul $52.3 million.

"Thus, the persistently widening dollar gap raises serious questions as to whether it will be possible, as has been hoped, to significantly reduce the difference over the next decade — if ever," the Study Group concluded.

But in the very next sentence, the Study Group showed the reason why the gap cannot be narrowed and puts into question the Democrats' hope that the difference could grow smaller by the end of the decade.

The Study Group said the Republican committees have nearly 4 million contributors and growing while the Democrats have 300,000. And if history is a guide, the Republicans have the richer donors.

And, to make the future look even grimmer, the Study Group report does not even include money channeled to candidates by the mushrooming numer of special interest political action committees — where the GOP also does far better.

Joey Ledford — ...And Spacious In D.C.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Several Southern senators aren't too happy about the new Hart Senate Office Building and its $137 million pricetag.

The Senate's 100 members were housed for years in two office buildings beside the Capitol, the Russell and Dirksen Buildings. But growing Senate staffs and a dizzying array of committees and support staff soon bumped Senate personnel into annex space.

In 1972, when more and bigger government was deemed best, the Senate planned itself the ultimate office building. Construction began in 1976 and is now nearly complete. Fifteen senators have already moved in and eventually 50 will call Hart home.

But things have changed and austerity is the key word on Capitol Hill. Fiscal conservatives have not taken the Hart building to heart.

A rooftop restaurant and private gym have been eliminated, even though the space for both remains in the 12-level marble building.

Space is the key word in discussing Hart. Thousands of Hart's 1.1 million square feet are wasted. The atrium, for example, which stretches from the ground floor to a skylight ceiling, is big enough for a touch football game.

"The atrium is all wasted space," moaned Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., one of Hart's most outspoken critics. "It's large enough to make it a military parade ground. Can't use it for that, though, because the floor is so slick that you can't do an 'about face' on it."

Elliott Carroll, executive assistant in the Capitol Architect's office, said the atrium would have housed landscaping and a "major work of sculpture," but the Senate scrapped those plans in its economy move.

Carroll said he believes the original plans will eventually be completed, even if the money is raised through private donations.

"Not only is it ugly, the interior design is extremely awkward for offices," said Sen. Mack Mattingly, R-Ga. "More space is wasted than used. There's room to hide a battery of MX missiles."

The Senate Rules Committee apparently believed senators would be anxious to move into the new building. Not so. The committee has had to twist arms to fill the modernistic complex.

"Most of the senators moving into the Hart building are doing so only under duress," said Mattingly, who will relocate his staff there, probably in March.

Heflin and his staff are moving in this month. He and other senators, like Tennessee's Jim Sasser, are quick to note they fought against funding Hart.

"It wasn't approved on my shift," said Heflin of Hart, which was dubbed the 'Marble Mausoleum' by one Senate staffer.

"I opposed the construction of the Hart Building when it was first approved because I felt it was too expensive and an unnecessary extravagance," said Sasser.

"We in Congress have to set an example for austerity throughout government, and this building does not do that," he said.

Sasser and his staff will remain in the Russell Office Building, which will house 36 senators. Only 14 will remain in Dirksen.

Each senator in Hart will get at least a "basic suite," which will cover from 3,600 to 4,000 square feet. Senators from larger states — including Florida — will get even more room.

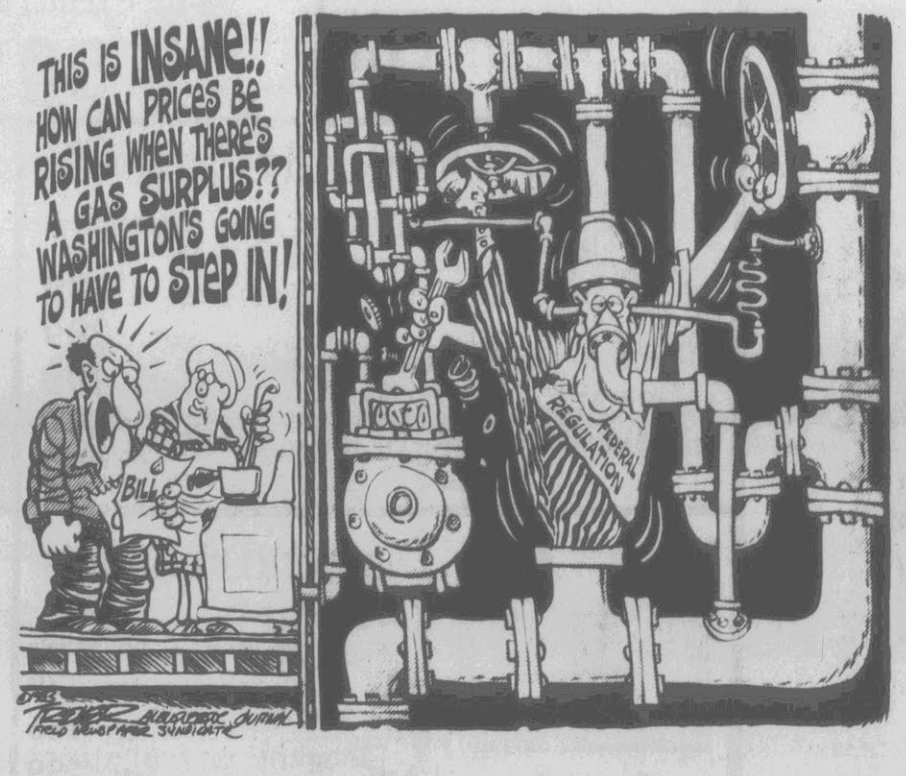
Most suites cover two floors, which are connected by private spiral staircases. The senators' offices are spacious, with ceilings at least 15 feet high. Each office has private woodgrained cabinets and private restrooms.

Heflin finds fault in nearly every part of the building plan, including the fact the offices lack safes for confidential papers.

"The individual offices are not designed for a senator's use," he said, explaining that he will have to come and go through staff office space.

"It is overdone from an architectural point of view," he said. "Too much marble. Too much wasted space."

"It is incredible that for over $137 million, the government didn't even get a decent office building," said Mattingly.



George Gallup — Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — President Reagan begins his third year in office amid broad public speculation that he will seek re-election in 1984. Although no more voters than a year ago indicate they would welcome such a move, three in four (74 percent) now say they expect Reagan will try for a second term, up sharply from the 59 percent who expressed this view last March.

In the latest Gallup survey, only about a third of all voters (37%) say they would like to see President Reagan seek a second term, virtually unchanged from the 35 percent recorded last March. Conversely, 56 percent of the public now say they would not support a re-election bid by the President, a marginal increase from 52 percent in the earlier survey.

Predictably, the public's expressed desire to see Reagan run next year follows party lines, with far more Republicans (69 percent) than Democrats (18 percent) or Independents (40 percent) feeling this way. These figures represent little change from those recorded in the March 1982 survey, with Republicans backing a Reagan re-election bid as strongly as ever.

Aside from Republicans, greater opposition than support is found in almost all major population groups, including those with a Republican bias. College-educated respondents, for instance, oppose a Reagan bid for re-election by 50 percent to 44 percent. Even persons whose family income is $25,000 a year or more are narrowly divided, with 49 percent saying they would like to see President Reagan run again, compared to 46 percent who would not.

Expectations Transcend Party Labels

While public opinion on wanting Reagan to run for a second term is sharply divided along political lines, no such division is found on whether or not he will run. In the latest survey, 78 percent of Republicans, 73 percent of Democrats, and 74 percent of Independents say they think Reagan will try for another four years in the White House.

Following are the questions asked and the key findings:

"Would you like to see Ronald Reagan run for President in 1984, or not?"

Like To See Reagan Run I '84?
(Percent who would like Reagan to run)

	March	August	December
NATIONAL	35%	36%	37%
Republicans	68	65	69
Democrats	19	19	18
Independents	33	35	40

"Regardless of whether or not you would like to see him run, do you think Reagan will run for President in 1984, or not?"

Think Reagan Will Run In '84?
(Percent who think Reagan will run)

	March	August	December
NATIONAL	59%	67%	74%
Republicans	62	68	78
Democrats	56	68	73
Independents	62	69	74

The latest results are based on in-person interviews with 1,509 adults, 18 and older, conducted in over 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period December 10-13. Sub-samples are comprised of 389 Republicans, 671 Democrats and 408 Independents.

For results based on the total sample, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be three percentage points in either direction. For the sub-samples of Republicans and Independents the margin of error is plus or minus six percentage points and for the Democratic sub-sample, five points.

Harry Rosenthal — Early-Bird Strategy Takes Over

WASHINGTON (AP) — The building that houses Walter Mondale's campaign headquarters is so new that the street number is hand-lettered on a piece of paper taped to the front door. But there is nothing slapdash about the activity within.

More than a month before he announces formally that he is a Democratic candidate for president, Mondale's basic staff is in place, a budget is drawn, legalities are taken care of and the kind of campaign he'll run is taking shape.

For his pursuit of the Democratic Party's nomination, the former vice president expects to raise $18 million on his own and get another $8 million in taxpayer matching funds. He plans to spend $3 million to $5 million this year — mostly for fund raising — with the rest targeted for the 1984 primary campaigns.

Mondale spent the months before last November's congressional elections stumping on behalf of Democratic candidates, banking IOUs for 1984. With that, Mondale followed the path trod successfully in 1966 by another former vice president who wanted to be president, Richard M. Nixon.

Although Mondale registered as a candidate with the Federal Election Commission on the first business day of the new year, he won't make his ceremonial announcement until late February. The setting will be the Minnesota state capitol in St. Paul.

The first-opportunity registration with the FEC is a practical necessity because all money raised after the first of the year may be matched by the U.S. treasury. The early announcement of his candidacy is a different matter.

It establishes Mondale immediately as the front-runner — subject to the searching scrutiny that it provokes. In 1980, Edward M. Kennedy was an automatic front-runner and was hurt by it. From day one of his campaign, the Massachusetts senator was under a microscope provided by two planeloads of reporters.

The longer the campaign trail, the more the possibility of road hazards. Remember Edmund S. Muskie and George Romney?

There are exceptions. Jimmy Carter went on the road just as early for the 1976 election. But he wasn't taken seriously and he was able to work out the kinks before anybody caught on to his strength.

Early announcers run the risk of peaking too soon. Mondale's team is confident that won't happen to him.

"We think our candidate is one whose preparation for the race is exceptional," says a campaign insider. "He has the kind of political skills and substantive approach which is likely to wear well over a long period of time. And we welcome the opportunity for him to get as much scrutiny as possible and to have as many opportunities as possible to put himself and his views forward."

Two days after registering with the FEC, Mondale had met the requirements for matching funds by raising $100,000 in amounts of at least $5,000 in 20 different states, and the campaign staff was being fleshed out.

Even the choice of a national headquarters is in line with Mondale's determination to stay the course. By necessity, most candidates start with small quarters and move to larger ones as the campaign matures. Mondale's staff got options to expand the telephone switchboard and the office space in the building right up to convention time.

The Mondale staff hopes to attract some of the Kennedy people, especially the organizers and his efficient fund-raisers. Until Kennedy announced last December that he would not run in 1984, Mondale figured to have a hard time attracting minorities. He hopes it's easier now.

Mondale's campaign isn't spending money yet on polling, his handlers say. Nor have they worked out the strategy for the all-important early primaries in 1984, because so many changes are yet to be made in the calendar of caucuses and primaries.

After the disastrous loss in 1980, politicians wonder how Mondale is going to handle his tie to Jimmy Carter. Will he act if he never existed, as the Republicans have done with Richard Nixon?

No, say Mondale aides. He feels that Carter gave him more opportunity as vice president than any president in history and that the experience gave him a unique perspective.

"He will not in any sense walk away from Carter," said an aide. "He'll welcome Carter's support."

Cars ...

about injury, but with the gas problems, people just decided that smaller cars were worth it."

James Piephoff, a local engineer, said he considered both safety and gas mileage. "When I'm buying a car for my wife, I look for safety features and generally buy a larger car. For myself, I buy smaller gas-efficient cars because I work so far away."

Whatever kind of car you intend to buy — used, new, import or "homemade" — haggling over the price is always a good idea, according to Piephoff.

Piephoff, who was out looking at cars for his son, said he spends a lot of time haggling over the price.

"You can usually bring down the price of a $14,000 car by $3,000 and the price of a small car by $1,000," he said.

Ward said he expects customers to haggle over the price of vehicles. "Honestly, it's really some of both, but more people are willing to buy a car wihtout arguing than there are those who really want to haggle," he said.

Although Ward would not comment on the profit margin a salesman expects to make on a deal, he did say income is very erratic. "Usually used cars make more money because the margin of profit is not as great on a new car."

Asked how the value of a used car is determined, Ward said other than traditional guidelines like the condition of the interior, exterior and motor of the car, the value is flexible.

"Nothing has any value except to the person that wants it," he said.

Abortion ...

reiterate that the majority of people are pro-choice."

An anti-abortion march in Washington drew an estimated 26,000 demonstrators from across the country, according to the U.S. Park Police. Carrying placards with such slogans as "Abortion Is America's Holocaust" and "Babies Today, You Tomorrow," they rallied on the Ellipse, adjacent to the White House, before parading to the Capitol.

Rep. Mark D. Siljander, R-Mich., declared at the rally: "We're in a very vicious fight, and that's a fight for life. ... I think there's no doubt that God is on our side — and we are going to win."

Siljander said President Reagan was continuing to pay "lip service" to the anti-abortion cause, but he criticized Reagan for "not being as fully bold as he could be" on the issue.

Reagan, in his weekly radio address, reiterated Saturday his opposition to abortion, saying: "I, too, have always believed that God's greatest gift is human life and that we have a duty to protect the life of an unborn child.

"Until someone can prove the unborn child is not a life, shouldn't we give it the benefit of the doubt?"

Governments Leaving Social Security

By JOEY LEDFORD

WASHINGTON (UPI) — More than a dozen state and local government agencies in the Southeast are putting an additional financial strain on Social Security coffers by withdrawing their employees from the ailing system.

State and local governmental "entities" have been allowed to withdraw from Social Security since 1959, but few exercised the option until serious doubts arose about the survival of the system in the 1980s.

Social Security spokesman Jim Brown said 14 government bodies in the Southeast notified agency officials in 1982 of their intention to withdraw from the system — 11 from Georgia, two from Florida and one in Tennessee representing 8,700 employees.

Nationwide, 100 government agencies have announced their intention to withdraw from the system, a move Brown said would drain $150 million to $200 million from Social Security coffers.

"If all of the state and local governments left the system, it would cost about $18 billion," Brown said.

The National Commission on Social Security Reform, as part of its proposed $169 billion Social Security bailout plan, suggested a ban on further withdrawals from the system by local and state government entities. The commission's proposal is expected to get quick attention from Congress.

City employees in Ocala, Fla., are among those considering dropping out of Social Secuirty.

"It began three years ago when a member of the city council felt very strongly that the amount withheld could buy better coverage than we were getting from Social Security," said city manager Scotty Andrews.

"Social Security was not stable and he pushed for us to get out," Andrews said.

Andrews said the city's 700 employees bought themselves more time to make the decision, but he believes they will eventually opt out of the federal system because a retirement compensation plan presented to city workers was superior to Social Security benefits.

"Next time we take a vote, it should pass," he said. "But I would not be surprised if Congress does not pass a law to prohibit groups like ours from withdrawing."

The Marietta, Ga., Board of Education's 600 employees withdrew from Social Security effective Jan. 1. Personnel director Harlon Crimm said their employees are contributing only 3 percent of their income to the new plan, compared to 6.7 percent under Social Security.

The Gwinnett County, Ga., Board of Education has also withdrawn from the system, putting its 3,600 employees on privately operated retirement and disability plans.

"We can do better by ourselves for ourselves," said Dannie Reed, the Gwinnett board's director of staff benefits.

Officials said younger employees in most of the groups considering dropping Social Security want out because they do not have confidence in the government retirement system.

But many employees who are 55 or older are afraid of losing out on the benefits they have paid for all their working lives.

The East Tennessee Development District bailed its 35 employees out of the Social Security system Jan. 1 and executive director Allen Neel said he believes "we made the right decision."

"It looked like by opting out and going to another policy, the employee would have more funds available to him when he retired. The figures still look good to us," Neel said. "The money put into the (private) retirement program will be invested and we'll get whatever the interest rate is at the time."

Brown said private firms trying to sell retirement programs are helping intensify workers' doubts about the future of the Social Security system.

Lesson Number 9

Q. Who invented the first type of computer?

A. The first "computer" was probably the abacus used by the Chinese, Hindus, and Egyptians. It is classified as a computer because it was used to compute arithmatic functions. Blaise Pascal, in 1642, invented a tariff collecting devise similar to today's odometer. In 1694 Gottfried Wilheim von Leibnitz created a device that not only added and subtracted but multiplied as well. These "computers" were known as the first era computers because they automated mathematical functions.

The second era of computers could complete mathematical functions and store data. In 1801, Joseph Jacquard used punch cards to program a machine in the textile industry in France. He and Charles Babbage (1884) designed programmable machines that could store information.

Public Servants To Be Honored

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Eli Bloom, who closed out a 49-year career as a solicitor, prosecutor and district attorney in Pitt County on Jan. 1, will be one of eight retiring public servants from the 1st Congressional District honored here Friday night.

Several state dignitaries, including Gov. Jim Hunt, will gather with area business, education and government leaders for the recognition banquet at Beaufort Community College.

Pitt County citizens who are interested in attending may contact George Saleeby, Pitt Democratic Party chairman, at 524-4191 in Grifton for tickets.

Bill Hodges, chairman of the 1st District Democratic Executive Committee, said tickets are available at $6 each but he emphasized that none will be available at the door.

In addition to Bloom, the group will honor Bessie Cherry, retiring clerk of court of Beaufort County; Sadis Edwards, retired clerk of court in Pamlico County; Louise Allen, retired Washington County clerk of court; Frank Cahoon, retired Dare County sheriff; Charles Cahoon, retired Hyde County sheriff; Bertie Lilly, retired Washington County register of deeds, and C.S. Meekins, retired register of deeds in Dare County.

Joining Hunt will be Chief Justice Joseph Branch, Rep. Walter B. Jones, and several Council of State members, judges and legislators.

Hodges said the affair, which will begin with a social hour at 6:30 p.m., is non-partisan.

OPEC May Be Near Agreement

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Key OPEC members Venezuela and Iran softened resistance Saturday to cutting cartel-oil sales as a way to prop up prices.

Their statements, on the eve of an emergency meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, indicated the group could reach an agreement that would avert a collapse of oil prices.

"This is the most important meeting we've ever had," said Humberto Calderon Berti, oil minister of Venezuela. "We are willing to cut (production) if the others are willing to sacrifice, too."

Earlier, Iran's state-run Tehran radio quoted the Persian nation's Oil Minister Mohammad Gharazi as saying if Saudi Arabia cut production, Iran "would be prepared to revise, as far as it is able," its own output.

Delegation sources said Venezuela and Iran have been two of the main holdouts on a production-sharing agreement proposed at the OPEC meeting last month in Vienna.

In another sign of possible compromise, Mana Said Oteiba, the United Arab Emirates' oil minister, said "there is a better chance this time," of reaching agreement on limiting each member's production.

"The market is convincing those who (earlier) were not prepared to accept quotas," Oteiba said. He predicted that "there will be a quota agreement."

A standoff over production quotas between Iran and Saudi Arabia at OPEC's meeting last month left that session stalemated and forced Sunday's emergency meeting.

Iran has demanded a bigger share of OPEC's oil market at the expense of Saudi Arabia. The Saudis have accused Iran of violating OPEC principles by undercutting prices and pumping more oil than entitled by previous OPEC agreements.

Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi oil minister, stayed out of public view Saturday. He had said earlier in the week that he did not believe that OPEC would lower its official prices during Sunday's conference.

Janice Faulkner To Chair Arts Festival

Carolyn Powell, president of the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, has announced that Janice Faulkner, assistant director of the Regional Development Institute, will serve as chairman of the 1983 Eastern Carolina Arts Festival.

The festival is a two-week event that highlights the cultural resources and activities in Pitt County for the period April 9-24. This year marks the third year of sponsorship by the Arts Council.

More than 30 organizations took part in 1982 and 80 arts events were produced during the festival.

Committee members include: Rudy Alexander, Jake Dove, Jean Duff, Nancy Fillnon, Alice Keene, Richard Laing, Katherine Lewis, John McConney, Ann Riggs, Charles Russell, and Charles Vincent.

Soup Kitchen Opens Monday

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (UPI) — The Salvation Army Monday will open its first soup kitchen in this troubled steel mill city since the Great Depression and its officers are convinced attendance will be substantial.

The most recent federal statistics showed unemployment in the Youngstown-Warren area at 22.5 percent, but Salvation Army Capt. Jay Goforth quotes his own statistics.

"In 1981 we put up a list for people to sign for the free Christmas dinner and on the first day 35 people signed," he said. "This year 600 people signed."

When members of a local Catholic Church announced last week they had 1,200 20-pound bags of potatoes to distribute, they ended up turning away people. Giveaways of surplus federal butter and cheese have been swamped.

But Goforth and his wife, Debbie, also a Salvation Army officer, do not worry they won't be able to feed a crowd.

"Jehovah provides," said Goforth, who believes God showed him the soup kitchen was a good idea. Within two days of proposing the idea, he said, he received unsolicited phone calls from two donors who contributed $8,000.

Implanted Bus

A Trailways bus lies partially inside a tractor-trailer after the two vehicles collided on the New York State Thruway near Kingston, N.Y., killing three people and injuring 22 others. The side of the bus was ripped away and its front was peeled back. Authorities said Saturday a grand jury may be asked to investigate the collision. (AP Laserphoto)

Baker's Exit Signals New Race

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Howard Baker's decision not seek a fourth Senate term opens the way for a two-year race to succeed him as Senate Republican leader, with no apparent front-runner.

Whether the Tennessean's successor will take office as majority or minority leader depends on the 1984 elections in which 19 Republican seats, including those of several contenders, are at stake.

Much could also depend on whether the Republicans retain control of the White House, although presidents traditionally do not intervene in the election of Senate leaders.

By tradition, Senate leaders are expected to have served at least one term and shown an ability to compromise and negotiate with the various factions they want to lead.

Speculation on a successor began a little more than a week ago when stories first broke that Baker would not seek re-election.

The most prominently mentioned are Sens. Robert Dole of Kansas, Pete Domenici of New Mexico, Richard Lugar of Indiana and Paul Laxalt of Nevada. Each has some pluses and minuses. All are considered conservatives of varying degrees.

Dole, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, is the best-known Senate Republican nationally next to Baker. Dole, 59, first came to the attention of the public as Republican national chairman and later as Gerald Ford's vice presidential candidate in 1976.

In the last two years, Dole proved adept at shepherding major bills — among them two major tax packages — through the Senate, aided no little by his rapier wit and a penchant for brevity. He is not up for re-election but hungers for another run at the presidential nomination.

Domenici, the chain-smoking New Mexican, won his spurs as chairman of the Senate Budget committee, a difficult and delicate task that won a good deal of admiration from colleagues. Solid on legislation, he showed the ability to fashion compromises, an integral part of a leadership position.

But Domenici, 50, is up for re-election in a state that just booted out his Republican colleague, Harrison Schmitt.

Onslow Native Is New Co-Host On Channel 9

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Onslow County native and actress Shauna Barnaby is the new co-host and co-producer of WNCT-TV's early morning television show, Carolina Today, the Slim Short guest and public interest show that has been aired over channel 9 for the past 23 years.

Ms. Barnaby, whose first day on the show was Jan.17, succeeds Susan Roberts, who resigned recently to take the position of marketing manager at Carolina East Mall.

Perhaps best known for her performances in the lead female role of Mary Ormand in Stuart Aronson's outdoor drama "Blackbird: Knight of the Black Flag" at Historic Bath, Ms. Barnaby is also remembered for her appearances in a number of stage productions — dramatic and musical — at East Carolina University.

"I'm going to miss being in 'Blackbeard,'" she said in an interview. "The role of Mary Ormand was a different type of role for me, an acting challenge to make her character grow. I loved the role, felt she was a real person."

Ms. Barnaby said that, during four summers spent working in Bath, "I learned to love Bath as a very special place. I would like to go there and hibernate."

A 1980 graduate of ECU with a major in drama, she has been seen in "The Streets of New York," "The Children's Hour," "The Student Prince," "Richard the Second," "Hedda Gabler," and "Lady House Blues," among other shows.

For the past couple of years, she has been working with children. "For one summer I worked with the Children's Theater sponsored by the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department. We did a children's play, 'Trimbolli,' which was great fun. I chose it because it had enough roles for all the children enrolled in the program. The play came with lyrics for the songs, but no music, so I had to write the music. Somehow I managed to do it."

Additionally, she has worked with children as a nursery school teacher for 4 year olds and as a teacher's aide. "I really like being around children. Working with them has taught me to have patience and how to organize. There're many things a child can teach you if you are attentive to them, if you listen."

She is married to Roger Barnaby Jr., an ECU graduate now working as a geologist with the Institute of Coastal Marine Resources. d

Referring to her home town, Shauna said "It's truly a rural place that few have ever heard of, the Rhodes Town community between Richlands and Jacksonville in Onslow County. Where I grew up we had a big pasture with cows and horses, and we had chickens. I enjoy living in a rural area, and someday I want to live again in a place like Rhodes Town, which by the way, used to be known as Quail Roost."

SHAUNA BARNABY

Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. Billy Hudson. She has an older sister, Debra, who is married and expecting her third child, and a younger, adopted brother, Jeffrey.

Commenting on her new role as a television personality, Ms. Barnaby said, "I'm having a ball, I love every minute of it. I had no idea it would be so much fun. I'm beginning to get into the producing part of the program, and I'm fascinated by that part of the work."

One thing that poses a bit of difficulty for her is the early morning hours. "I'm still not quite acclimated to being up so early," she said, "I'm by nature a night owl, and I must learn the art of going to bed earlier."

Tar Heels Favor Reagan, Mondale

By ROBIN P. TEATER
Associated Press Writer

North Carolina members of the Republican National Committee say President Reagan should run again in 1984, while the state's Democratic committee representatives are pushing for former Vice President Walter Mondale.

Jerry Woodruff, spokesman for U.S. Sen. John East, R-N.C., said East, one of three North Carolinians on the GOP committee, believes Reagan will run for re-election in two years.

If Reagan does run, East would support him, Woodruff said Friday in a telephone interview from Washington, D.C.

Another Republican committee member, Mary Alice Warren of Winston-Salem, said she also would back Reagan and said she had no other GOP candidate in mind if he didn't decide to run.

"I support the President fully and I expect him to run again," said Mrs. Warren, the newest North Carolina committee member. "President Reagan has always had strong support in North Carolina and I have not seen any erosion."

Mrs. Warren said she was optimistic that Reagan would be re-elected.

State GOP Chairman David Flaherty was unavailable for comment.

Meanwhile, Democratic National Committee member Clarence Lightner of Raleigh said Mondale would be a frontrunner for the Democratic bid for president. He said numerous Democratic candidates, including Mondale, California Sen. Alan Cranston and Colorado Sen. Gary Hart were well received during recent visits to North Carolina.

"Former Vice President Mondale seems to be out in front just a bit at this point," Lightner said. "I believe that Mondale will have a slight edge (in North Carolina)."

Lightner, a former mayor of Raleigh, said the Democratic Party was trying to prevent the nomination race from being decided before the national convention.

Betty R. McCain of Wilson, another North Carolina Democratic committee member, said the party's rules have been changed to make the convention more open to party members who don't have to declare their choices ahead of time.

Mrs. McCain said she believed a Democrat would be overwhelmingly elected president in 1984.

"I have worked very closely for Mr. Mondale throughout the years. But none of us (committee members) have made a firm choice," she said. "I think it's too early to tell. We do know with (Sen. Edward) Kennedy stepping down, it has helped Mr. Mondale a great deal."

Kennedy, a Massachusetts Democrat, has "polarized" the Democratic Party in North Carolina, Mrs. McCain said.

Democratic committee representative Wallace Hyde of Asheville, who serves on Mondale's steering committee, said he thinks Mondale's chances of being nominated in 1984 were very good.

He said a Democrat would be elected in two years and that Mondale would receive strong support in North Carolina.

"There's just not time to turn this mess around in the next two years," Hyde said. "I think the Reagan administration people see that we're entering the next two years with a large deficit and high unemployment. People are going to do what they normally do when they're unhappy and change it."

Linda Ashendorf of Charlotte, the fourth North Carolina committee member, could not be reached.

The Democratic National Committee plans to meet in Washington, D.C., Feb. 3 to discuss plans for the convention, Hyde said. The GOP committee will meet in the nation's capital on Jan. 26.

Banks Seeking Support For Repeal Of Tax Law

By The Associated Press

North Carolina bankers are urging customers to support repeal of a law forcing banks and savings and loan associations to withhold taxes from savings accounts and dividend payments.

Spokesmen for financial institutions say they hope customers will get aroused when they realize the withholding requirement will reduce the money they otherwise would earn on their savings accounts.

Bills have been introduced in the current session of Congress to do away with the law, included in the Tax Equalization and Fiscal Reform Act passed last fall.

The act, effective July 1, requires the withholding of tax at a rate of 10 percent on payments of dividends and interest to individuals, partnerships, estates and trusts.

Bankers, using inserts in monthly statements to customers, are urging customers to ask their congressmen to support repeal. The banks include Wachovia Bank and Trust, First Union National and First Citizens Bank and Trust.

Wachovia Bank, the state's second largest, estimates reprogramming its computers, collecting the money and sending it to the Internal Revenue Service will cost $3 million to $3.5 million in operational and administrative expenses.

Alvah D. Fuqua Jr., executive vice president of the North Carolina Bankers Association in Raleigh, said the requirement is "going to be a problem not just for the banks, but for their customers, too."

Most savings account customers now leave monthly interest payments in the account to earn more interest in the future, he noted. But the 10 percent deducted quarterly for taxes will not be available for compounding, he said.

In addition, the banks are unlikely to absorb entirely the costs of collecting the taxes.

"A lot of these costs will be passed on to the investor in the form of lower interest payments and service charges and things like that," he said.

Fred Willetts, president of Cooperative S&L in Wilmington and chairman of the North Carolina S&L League's Committee Against the Imposition of Withholding, said congressmen are receiving 100 to 150 letters a day.

Five Held In Big Robbery In Spain

MADRID, Spain (UPI) — Five people have been arrested in Spain's biggest bank robbery, a $15 million heist from a bank on the southern coast, police said Saturday.

Authorities said the suspects were arrested in Spain and Italy on charges of involvement in the robbery at Marbella on the Costa del Sol.

Two people, an Italian and a Frenchman, were still being sought, police said.

The arrests Friday night and Saturday came less than four weeks after the robbery of the Marbella branch of the Bank of Andalusia.

Thieves had taken advantage of the three-day Christmas holiday to break through the bank wall from an empty apartment next door, cut into the vault with acetylene torches and clean out some 200 safe deposit boxes of cash, securities, jewels and art treasures.

The exact value of the heist may never be known because owners of safe deposit boxes often keep their contents a secret, but bank sources unofficially estimated the booty at $15 million.

Authorities said the gang chose their target well because the bank was a favorite place for aristocrats and jet setters who frequent the posh resort to deposit their valuables.

In Rome Friday night, police arrested Stefano Sbordoni, 26, Giorgo de William Pinca, 23, and Silvana Zito, 35.

Early Saturday Ms. Zito's brother, Fabio Zito, 44, went to police headquarters to ask about his sister and was also arrested. A fifth person, Modesto Cecilia Soto, 29, said to be Fabio Zito's girlfriend, was arrested in Marbella later in the day.

Italian police said they seized $2.3 million in gold, gems, cash, watches, necklaces and other jewelry at Silvana Zito's Rome apartment and at a house where her brother was staying.

Storm Dumps 19 Inches Of Snow In N.C. Mountains

By UPI

Western North Carolina began digging Saturday out from a winter storm that dumped up to 19 inches of snow in the mountains, but forecasters said more snow might fall Sunday.

Temperatures climbed above freezing over much of the state Saturday, as light rain and drizzle fell. Traveler's advisories remained in effect for the mountains and sections of the northern Piedmont.

Forecasters said predicted rain for most of the state Saturday night and Sunday, possible turning to snow Sunday in the mountains.

Scattered power outages involving thousands of homes and businesses were reported throughout western sections of the state.

In the northern mountains, where snowfall accumulations were the heaviest, road crews finally were finally able to begin clearing highways from snows that began Thursday night.

"There's vehicles abandoned everywhere," said Lt. Steve Edmisten of the Watauga County Sheriff's Department. "It fell so hard and so fast" snow plows could not keep up."

"I had 19 inches at the house when I left," said Edmisten. His four-wheel drive vehicle barely got out and Edmisten, a cousin of Atty. Gen. Rufus Edmisten, doubted he would be able to home until work crews plowed his street.

The Highway Patrol reported main roads from Greensboro west were open, but icy in spots. Hazardous driving conditions were reported on many secondary roads that had not been plowed, the patrol said.

Duke Power Co. reported between 75,000 and 100,000 customers in North Carolina and South Carolina were without power Saturday because of power lines downed by snow or ice-covered tree limbs.

"Unlike other times where we had big blocks out, most of them are scattered," said Duke spokesman Alex Coffin. He said the problems were generall confined to the western parts of Duke's service area and mostly in North Carolina.

Towns affected included Hendersonville, Shelby, Hickory and Rutherfordton, he said.

Carolina Power and Light Co. also reported outages in its service area near Asheville. About 400 customers in the Black Mountain area and 200 in Gerton, a town on the Buncombe-Henderson county line were without power Saturday, said CP&L spokesman Wayne Ennis.

Ennis said snow-covered roads Saturday morning presented problems for repair crews, even with four-wheel drive vehicles.

Power outages affected the Highway Patrol's radio station in Newton and the Hickory FLight Service Station of the Federal Aviation Administration.

The National Weather Service said snow that began falling Thursday changed to rain in most areas Friday night, but continued in the mountains until early Saturday. Freezing rain was reported in Piedmont counties near the Virginia border.

Ice-covered transmitters forced weather radio stations off the air in western and northwestern North Carolina. A transmitter on Mount Pisgah went off the air early Saturday, but service was restored by late morning — the same time a transmitter in Stokes County stopped transmitting because of ice accumulations.

Snow, Freezing Rain Hit Deep South

By The Associated Press

More than 170,000 homes across the Deep South were without electricity Saturday after a winter storm snapped power lines with freezing rain and forced paramedics in Texas onto snowmobiles.

Eighteen people were reported killed in traffic and sledding accidents.

Meanwhile, southeastern Wisconsin received its first significant snowfall of a winter that turned out milder than expected, and a storm spawned in Alaska punched Northern California with snow and winds that were expected to reach gale force.

Winter storm watches were posted for most of Pennsylvania and New York state.

Freezing rain and snow began in Dixie on Thursday, but by Saturday the "disorganized" storm system that ranged across much of the Midwest and South was diffusing to light rain and drizzle, according to the National Weather Service in Kansas City.

The storm left behind dangling power lines and icy streets. Fifteen people died in the Carolinas, Alabama, Georgia and Texas; in the upper Midwest, where the storm Saturday glazed streets and sidewalks with rain, two people died in traffic accidents in Illinois, and another was killed on an icy Wisconsin highway.

Ice-laden tree braches crashed into power lines across the South. Two thousand homes and businesses were still without power in South Carolina, 24,000 in Alabama, 40,000 in Georgia and 100,000 in western North Carolina.

In Alabama, crews worked around the clock to restore heat and light to homes, but power was not expected to return to some parts of Alabama and Georgia until Sunday.

"We've got a lot of tired employees," said Alabama Power spokesman Ed Crosby.

In Gaffey, S.C., where 5,000 homes were without power overnight, "a lot of old-timers are saying it was the worst they'd ever seen," said Dick Crater, manager of the city-run utility.

Hundreds of people rushed to stores to stock up on kerosene for space heaters.

In Texas, residents of the southern Plains found their recent snows had broken records. Eighteen inches of snow blanketed Lubbock, raising its January total to 24.9 inches. The winter total of 32.2 inches is almost double the snowfall of any previous winter.

Volunteers in four-wheel-drives helped get doctors and nurses to work at Lubbock hospitals. Citizens donated snowmobiles to the paramedics at the city's three ambulance stations.

"We have chains on all our ambulances but they are still real slow," said Emergency Medical Service spokeswoman Tawny Walser.

Snow continued across northern Texas on Saturday, and blanketed much of Oklahoma. The snowfall kept postmen in Lubbock, Texas, from their appointed rounds for the first time in the town's history, a postal service spokesman said.

At least 3 inches of snow was forecast in southeastern Wisconsin.

Most of the northern half of California was a sheet of rain and mountain snow. Three feet of snow was expected in Sierra Nevada, and the Highway Patrol urged motorists to stay off mountain roads.

Hubcap-deep rainwater flooded dozens of roads around San Francisco, the East Bay and Marin County, but no serious problems were reported.

FIRST SNOW FOR PALMETTO STATE ... Anderson, S.C., received its first snowfall of this winter Friday. A winter storm covered most of western South Carolina and North Carolina with snow. North Carolina's mountains received up to 19 inches of snow. (AP Laserphoto)

Now you can get higher earnings on all the money in your checking account, and still write as many checks as usual.

If you keep a substantial balance in your checking account, the Wachovia Money Market Checking Account may be a good choice for you.

With an average balance of $2,500 or more you earn interest based on current money market conditions. The rate is established by Wachovia and subject to change daily, so your earnings keep pace with other short-term rates. And your interest is compounded every day.

Even if your average balance falls below $2,500 during any month, your account will continue to earn interest at the 5.25% rate Federal regulations allow.

You can use your account exactly the same way you use any checking account, writing checks as usual or making unlimited withdrawals at Teller II.®

Your monthly service charges are based on the activity in your account. There is a $2.00 maintenance fee, plus 20¢ per item paid.

Of course, the money in your account is insured up to $100,000 per depositor by the F.D.I.C. and backed by Wachovia.

The Wachovia Money Market Checking Account. A new way to earn money market interest on all the funds in your checking account.

NOW Sets Up 1982 N.C. Legislative Priorities

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A legislative agenda designed to give women their slice of the economic pie has gained the support of the North Carolina chapter of the National Organization for Women.

Supporters in the General Assembly predict at least some of the package will pass, though many of the programs it champions will be caught up in a mad scramble for scarce funds.

"There's a basic sense of fairness, especially in the House, that I think will prevail in getting many of these items through," Rep. Louise Brennan, D-Mecklenburg, said in an interview Friday.

Rebuffed by the Legislature last summer on the Equal Rights Amendment, the NOW has vowed to involve ERA supporters in the lobbying effort for this year's legislation.

"Without the ERA, the need for such legislation is urgent," said Johanna Ettin, state NOW president.

The platform is based on the findings of the Legislative Study Commission on Women's Needs, which submitted a report last December. Warning that poverty in North Carolina "is becoming increasingly feminized," it said 50 percent of the state's households below the poverty level are headed by women, many of whom have been hurt by federal aid cuts.

The platform calls for:

— Changes in property laws, making the 1982 Tenancy by the Entirety Act retroactive and making pensions marital property under the Equitable Distribution of Property Act of 1981.

— Revision of child support laws by making the clerk of court, not the former spouse, collect payments and by limiting judges' authority to forgive delinquent payments.

— Permanent fundinng for the Domestic Violence Program.

— Continuing state funding of abortions for poor women.

— Equitable treatment and training opportunities for female prison inmates.

— A state Fair Employment Practices Act to be modeled after title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act.

— Elimination of alleged discrimination against women by the insurance industry.

Under the Tenancy by the Entirety Act, men and women who jointly own property have equal rights to the rent it produces. Before its passage in 1982, the husband automatically retained control over the profits.

The law took effect this month but was not retroactive, which supporters hope to change this session.

"We're going to push it," said Sen. Helen Marvin, D-Gaston, co-chairman of the study commission.

Including pensions among property to be divided in the event of divorce particularly would help women who haven't held jobs, Ms. Brennan said.

"Even if the wife hasn't worked, she's supported her husband and helped advance his career," she said. "It's only right that she share in that protection."

Rep. Paul Pulley, D-Durham, has introduced legislation to require that child support be paid even if a ruling is being appealed.

Ms. Brennan said that bill, plus legislation taking the burden of collecting from the spouse, would be "an excellent way to help children who are frequently the innocent victims in divorce cases."

Gov. Jim Hunt rankled some lawmakers by failing to include in his 1983-85 budget funds for spouse abuse centers. Ms. Brennan, calling the decision "astounding," has introduced a bill that would allocate $250,000 for the purpose, up from $210,000 last year.

The 1982 funds were distributed among 53 centers throughout the state. Only about half the centers that requested funding got it.

"The centers need about $5 in private donations for every $1 they get from the state," Ms. Brennan said. "What we're able to give is a pitiful amount, but some centers are in poor counties and they're able to get little else."

In its report, the commission recommended a study of what Ms. Brennan called "across-the-board" insurance industry sex discrimination. Legislation to that effect has yet to be introduced.

The commission said companies base rates for women's life, annuity and pension plans on different life spans than those used to calculate benefit payments.

It also said women are charged up to twice as much as men for medical insurance although "there is significant evidence ... that women have shorter hospital stays than men."

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the playbook of the Washington Redskins, it is called the "Gut Series," and it's not terribly complicated.

You simply hand the football to John Riggins, he covers it with both arms, protecting it like a fragile flower, lowers his head and plows into the defense, sometimes left, sometimes right, sometimes straight ahead.

Saturday, the Riggins Series produced a National Football League record third straight 100-yard playoff game for the thick-legged running back, who carried Washington into Super Bowl XVII by leading the Redskins to a 31-17 victory over the Dallas Cowboys.

He carried 36 times for 140 yards and two touchdowns and had nine of those carries in succession for 43 yards at the end of the game as the Redskins ran out the clock on the Cowboys.

"Riggins has been super," said Coach Joe Gibbs. "On game days, John tells us, 'Hey, just get the wagon out, hitch it up, and I'll pull it. Everybody get on it.'"

That's exactly what happened, and the wagon headed due west, straight toward Pasadena, Calif., where the Redskins will face the winner of Sunday's American Conference championship game between the New York Jets and Miami Dolphins.

Can the longshot Redskins go all the way? Gibbs thinks so.

"When I talked to our players last night (Friday)," he said, "I told them that history has provided us with a thumbnail sketch of what Super Bowl champions are all about. When I got through listing everything, I said, 'This is really a thumbnail sketch of our team — defense, offense with a strong running game, special teams and mental toughness.'"

Riggins was the classic power-running fullback in this game, smashing straight into the teeth of the Dallas defense, often dragging tacklers for extra yards.

A week ago, when he rushed for 185 yards against Minnesota, he had bowed grandly as he left the field. There was no time for that this week, because the frenzied RFK Stadium crowd of 55,045, stormed over the field and tore down the goal posts with 12 seconds to go, celebrating the victory over the Cowboys, Washington's fiercest rival.

"I've waited a long time for this," Riggins said. "I'm real thrilled. After the (57-day players') strike (during the regular season), I wasn't sure I wanted to continue the season. I was ready to pack my bags and head for Kansas. Boy, what a mistake that would have been."

The crowd, at a fever pitch all day, sensed trouble in the second half when seldom-used Gary Hogeboom replaced injured Danny White at quarterback for the Cowboys and steered Dallas to a pair of touchdowns in a furious rally.

But Hogeboom came up short in the fourth quarter. First, Mel Kaufman picked off one of Hogeboom's passes, setting up a 27-yard field goal by Mark Moseley.

"We were in a combination zone and man-to-man (defense)," said Kaufman. "It is my job to take away the outside. I saw Hogeboom's eyes and I just moved that way."

Moseley's field goal made it 24-17, and on Dallas' next offensive play, Hogeboom went back to pass again. This time, the ball was tipped by Dexter Manley, whose devastating sack had knocked White out of the game earlier. The ball was intercepted by defensive tackle Darryl Grant.

"After a few steps, I felt it was going to be a screen," said Grant. "I didn't apply pressure, but waited for him to throw. Dexter put on a big rush and got his hand on it, and I was there."

Grant grabbed it at the 10-yard line, tucked it under his arm in a perfect rendition of Riggins' Gut series and rumbled into the end zone. In 17 seconds, Washington had scored 10 points.

"I just made too many mistakes in the fourth quareter," said Hogeboom. "We could have beaten them. We had some momentum going, but we just couldn't put it over."

The next time Washington got the ball, there were 4 minutes, 26 seconds to play, and the Redskins went back to basics.

Riggins ran for 2 yards. Riggins for 8, Riggins for 4. Riggins for 12. Riggins for 5. Riggins for 6. Riggins for 1. Riggins for 3. Riggins for 2.

The Gut Series deserves a new name. From now on, call it the Riggins Series.

The third-year quarterback from Central Michigan University never had thrown a pass in his first two years and was only 3-for-8 in this strike-fragmented season, playing behind White.

But he looked like a seasoned-pro, tossing touchdown passes of 6 yards to Drew Pearson and 23 yards to Butch Johnson as Dallas came roaring back from a 14-3 halftime deficit.

Riggins interrupted Hogeboom's heroics with his second touchdown of the game following a record 76-yad kickoff return by Mike Nelms, whose fumble on the second half kickoff had helped Hogeboom get good field position for his first series and the TD to Pearson.

The seldom-used passer had Dallas in striking distance, behind 21-17, when he made two fatal mistakes. First, he tried to hit Tony Hill on a down-and-out pattern, but linebacker Mel Kaufman picked it off, giving the Redskins the ball at the Dallas 40.

Mark Moseley, the NFL's most valuable player, converted the turnover into a 29-yard field goal, giving the Redskins a 24-17 lead with just over seven minutes to play.

ECU Men Whip Campbell; Lady Bucs Win

Women Edge Mercer, 71-67

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Senior Mary Denkler poured in 25 points to spark East Carolina University to a 71-67 win over Mercer College Saturday afternoon in the consolation game of the South Carolina Invitational.

Denkler, who was named to the All-Tournament team, keyed an 8-3 run in the final 2½ minutes of the opening half as ECU opened up a 35-30 lead at intermission. ECU extended its lead to seven twice early in the second half before Mercer rallied to tie at 54-54.

Denkler put the Lady Pirates on top for good with an eight-foot jumper from the baseline with 9:05 left. ECU preserved its bulge at the foul line in the final minutes.

With her effort yesterday, Denkler has scored 1,519 points in her career — third best ever. Denkler canned nine of 19 field goals and all seven of her foul shots — four in the final minutes.

Joining Denkler in double figures were a pair of freshman: Lisa Squirewell, starting her first game, and Sylvia Bragg. Bragg chipped in 16 points while Squirewell added 14.

Denkler and Squirewell both grabbed off nine rebounds as the Lady Pirates outrebounded Mercer, 36-28.

Guard Alison Davis led Mercer with 17 points. Mercer forward Emma Mumphery scored 15 points and guard Anita Meadows added 13.

ECU is now 7-7 this season. Mercer falls to 8-9.

"This is a great win for us," ECU coach Cathy Andruzzi said. "They're an excellent team. They're very fast and real powerful. But we showed a lot of heart out there."

Andruzzi pointed to three keys to the win: the play of Denkler, the work of Bragg, Squirewell and Delphine Mabry and the effort of Fran Hooks. Hooks was called on to take over at point guard for the injured Loraine Foster, who is out for at least two weeks with a knee injury.

"Squirewell put on a real clutch effort. She had a great game," Andruzzi said. "And Mary was tremendous. But a lot of credit has got to go to Fran Hooks.

"Fran gave us more than we could have expected as far as leadership on the court. She took over at point guard and really controlled the tempo for us," Andruzzi said.

Hooks, a 5-8 senior from Goldsboro, scored eight points and dished out six assists.

"Today, we got the ball to the players we want to shoot," Andruzzi said. "Sylvia Bragg, for instance, got the ball

Pirates Defeat Camels, 73-55, To Even Season Record At 8-8

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Two weeks ago, East Carolina rolled over Campbell University, 67-54, in Fayetteville. In that game, Coach Charlie Harrison said his Pirates put on a clinic at both ends of the court in the first half, then got sloppy in the second.

Last night in Minges Coliseum, the two teams met in a rematch, and for the first few minutes, the Pirates again put on a clinic, but slacked off a little sooner in rolling to a 73-55 win over the Camels.

The victory evened up the Pirate record at 8-8, their second straight win, while Campbell drops to 5-10, losing for the fifth time in their last six games.

This time, Harrison wasn't as pleased with the overall play as he was in the first meeting of the two, however. "I wasn't pleased with the way we played, period," he said afterwards.

"I know that sometimes you play well and sometimes you don't. We were coming in off a big win (over South Carolina Wednesday) and I knew they'd be loose. It's the nature of the game."

The Pirates — who never trailed and were never tied — scored the first two baskets and quickly pushed out into a 19-6 lead near the midpoint of the first half.

"We came out and jumped on them early. We played good defense and they took some terrible shots and we got some easy ones. I guess they thought it would come easy after that.

"But basketball is a game of momentum. One team will spurt and then the other will. The team that has the most spurts usually wins," Harrison said.

"It was a strange game, it really was. We got most anything we wanted when we executed. The thing that concerned me was that we got lackadaisical. Instead of jumping on somebody and putting them out of their misery, or me out of mine, we got careless.

"There's more to this game than W's and L's, but I guess winning is more important."

Harrison said that Campbell's "soft defense" made the Pirates hesitant. "They (ECU) wasn't as patient as we were against South Carolina." And while Harrison said there was a good deal of individual play in the game, he said that in some cases, the Pirate plays are designed to isolate individuals — and that's what they did.

Campbell came out in a zone defense, something the Pirates haven't had much luck against recently. However, the Pirates played with it and had pretty good luck, hitting 56.5 percent of their shots in the first half. It wasn't until late in the half that the Pirates pulled the Camels out into a man-to-man.

"We were getting the ball inside and getting good shots. I thought that if we held it to get them out, we might get even more passive than we already were," Harrison said.

Thom Brown, who had his best game of the season, got things started with a 10-footer and Johnny Edwards followed with a layup for a 4-2 lead. Then, after Larry Cannady scored for Campbell, Tony Robinson hit on an outside shot.

Juan Austin hit for Campbell to cut the lead to 6-4, with the Pirates following that with nine straight points. Edwards got four of those on a basket and two free throws while Brown added three on a basket and a free throw. Barry Wright got the other basket, making it 15-4 with 11:50 left.

Then, after Ron Williams broke the ice again for Campbell, Wright and Bruce Peartree both scored, running the lead to 19-6 with 9:24 to play in the half.

Campbell rallied over the next few minutes, led by Williams, cutting the lead back to as little as six, 27-21, with 2:58 left in the half. But Peartree scored just before the half on a jumper to give the Pirates a 31-23 lead to take into the dressing room.

ECU scored first in the second half, and Campbell twice cut the lead back to eight before Robinson sparked an eight-point streak, scoring six of those on two baskets and two free throws, to run the lead out to 16, 43-27. After a Campbell basket, scores by Wright and Brown upped it to 18, 49-31 with 14:37 to go.

While the lead never got above 18, the Pirates toyed with Campbell the rest of the way, allowing the Camels to cut the lead back to as little as 12 before building it back to the 18 point margin again at the end.

For Edwards, it was another fine game, as the 6-6 freshman dumped in 17 points on seven of 11 shots from the floor and three of four from the line. He also pulled away ten rebounds.

Brown also jerked in 10 loose balls and contributed 11 points, while both Wright and Robinson had 12 points.

"What pleased me most about Tony's play," Harrison said, "was that when he got the open shot he took it. And he doesn't look to score."

Campbell was led by Harvey Smith with 18, while Williams added 12.

ECU finished the game with a 58.8 shooting percentage, while holding

Jordan, UNC Shoot Down Duke

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.

CHAPEL HILL — A career-high 32 points and a 103-82 rout of Duke wasn't enough to please third-ranked North Carolina's Michael Jordan.

Jordan hit 13 of 19 from the field, including three of five beyond the three-point line, but he said a closer examination of the game could find some flaws.

"It may look good to the fans, but on the films I do mess up," Jordan said. "I've got to eliminate a lot of mess ups."

"Jordan worked as hard as a player works, especially an excellent player," said Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski. "He just set the tone for the second half and never gave us a chance to get back into it."

But the sophomore guard said he needed some defensive errors to let him score.

"The back doors were there. I guess they didn't see that and we ran a lot more," he said.

Freshman Brad Daugherty added a career-high 18 points as the Tar Heels won their 11th straight game and improved to 14-3, 3-0 in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

However, coach Dean Smith said his Tar Heels haven't reached full speed.

"We haven't peaked. No team has. We can get better," Smith said.

The Tar Heels held a 39-15 lead late in the first half, but poor ball handling and cold shooting by North Carolina gave the Blue Devils a glimmer of hope.

Mark Alarie scored four points and Chip Engelland added five in the last six minutes to pull Duke to within 43-32 at halftime.

Jordan led the Tar Heels on a 9-2 spurt to open a 52-34 lead with 17:51 left. Using its superior speed and its height advantage, North Carolina did most of its damage inside, with Jordan scoring on layups and dunks.

The Tar Heels held a 29-point advantage on two occasions, the last at 100-71 before coasting to the final margin.

Buzz Peterson scored 13 points and Jim

Deacs Rout NCSU; Cavs Whip Tigers

GREENSBORO (AP) — Delaney Rudd didn't feel the pressure in Saturday's 91-73 victory over North Carolina State, but the Wake Forest sophomore provided plenty for the Wolfpack.

Rudd scored a career-high 22 points and sparked a Wake Forest defense that ignited the Demon Deacons' fast breaks. Four of Rudd's field goals came on fast breaks following turnovers, and he finished with five steals and five assists.

"I just had one of those good games where everything fell into place," Rudd said. "I made some good cuts and everybody got the ball to me real well. Good movement is the key to it.

"The key to our defensive game was the backcourt pressure," he said. "It got us some key turnovers."

"They have a very quick team," N.C. State Coach Jim Valvano said. "They are going to beat teams with quickness. They are tailor-made for the game with our (Atlantic Coast Conference) rules."

"The reason that Wake was so good at the transition was our turnovers," N.C. State forward Thurl Bailey said. "We had a lot of mental mistakes."

"Changes here and there kept them out of their offensive rhythm pretty well," said Wake Forest Coach Carl Tacy, who raised his Division I coaching record to 200-120. "But it was more of the transition game with the fast breaks that came in the second half that really spelled the difference."

Rudd scored 16 of his points in the second half and along with John Toms turned back the Wolfpack's final bid. The Wolfpack cut a 10-point lead to 57-51 early in the second half before Wake Forest caught fire.

Rudd hit two short jumpers, Toms added another and then Rudd came up with a dunk on the end of a fast break to push the Deacon lead to 65-51 at the 9:11 mark. After the Wolfpack's Terry Gannon hit a 3-point field goal, Toms countered with a 3-point play to clinch the victory.

Toms finished with 16 points, Alvis Rogers 14, Danny Young 12 and Kenny Green 10 as the Deacons raised their record to 13-2, 4-0 in the ACC.

Sidney Lowe led N.C. State with 17 points, while Bailey added 16, 12 in the first half. The Wolfpack, which has lost four of its last five starts, fell to 8-5, 2-3 in league play.

"I thought we got off to a very good start, which we wanted to do," Tacy said. "Our offense looked a little bit sharper and we executed a little bit better. We knew the defense would have to be equal to the task. I thought it was. It gave us the fast breaks and steals that we got."

"Their speed and quickness and our lack of ball handling were important," Valvano said. "But, as I've said before, I prefer to get our butts beat while we're on the road. We're going to improve and get better. We have a lot of our home games later in the season when we will be better."

Virginia 105
Clemson 87

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Coach Terry Holland said the key to seventh-ranked Virginia's easy 105-87 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory Saturday over Clemson's Tigers was the fact the Cavaliers "got off to such a good start."

Starting guards Rick Carlisle and Othell Wilson, bearing out Holland's statement that "our starting group did such a good job," combined for 46 points in the Cavaliers' romp.

Carlisle, a transfer from the Universitry of Maine, matched his career high with 24 points and Wilson added 22. Sophomore forward Tim Mullen added a season-high 14 points for the Cavaliers, who upped their ACC record to 5-1 and their overall mark to 15-2.

Clemson, now 0-5 in the conference and 6-11 overall, was led by reserve Marc Campbell with 18 points. Chris Michaels added 16, Anthony Jenkins 14 and Raymond Jones 12 for the Tigers.

Despite the ease of the victory, Holland said "I saw enough three-point plays to last the rest of the season." The Tigers put up 23 and hit 15.

"They were a little tentative," Holland said of the Tigers. "They're obviously struggling at this point. Our defense was able to control the tempo."

Virginia hit Clemson with a pressing defense early, and Tiger Coach Bill Foster said "when you're not playing well and you've got two freshmen out there and you're 6-10 and they throw a press at you, it looks like they've got seven guys out there. We didn't attack their press at all."

Two-time national player of the year Ralph Sampson, content to let his teammates do the scoring, finished with a season-low four points. Sampson grabbed six rebounds, giving him 1,313 for his career and moving him past former Clemson star Wayne "Tree" Rollins into third place on the ACC list.

"He felt a whole lot better," Holland said of Sampson, who was said to be tired after seeing limited action in a 74-64 victory Wednesday night over 17th-ranked Virginia Tech. "He wanted to have a good game, but we didn't need him a whol lot. The second half, he was pressing a bit trying to get back in the groove."

Forcing the struggling Tigers into 14 first-half turnovers and 43 percent shooting from the field, Virginia assumed control of the game early. Leading 13-9 with only over five minutes gone, the Cavaliers ripped off 16 straight points.

Carlisle, Jimmy Miller and Ricky Stokes had two baskets each in the surge, while Mullen and Dan Merrifield each scored one. A 15-footer shot by Carlisle at the 10:16 mark ended the string and gave Virginia a 29-9 advantage.

Clemson, which has lost five straight games and eight of its last nine games, began to fire up three-point field goal attempts in an effort to get back into contention. The Tigers connected seven times from beyond the three-point circle in the first half, closing the gap at halftime to 52-38.

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Cory Blackwell scored 18 points, including 12 in the second half, leading Wisconsin to a 65-62 Big Ten upset of 10th-ranked Iowa Saturday.

Freshman Ricky Olson added 17 points, 13 in the first half, and Brad Sellers had 16 points for the Badgers, 7-8 overall and 2-4 in the conference.

Steve Carfino almost single-handedly brought Iowa back from a 51-41 deficit, hitting four second-half 3-point baskets and scoring 14 second-half points. He finished with 22 points, including six 3-pointers for the Hawkeyes, 12-3 and 3-2.

Maryland Ho... Notre Dame...

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Notre Dame came teasingly close after trailing by seven points with 1:38 left, but Maryland held off the Irish to score a 68-67 victory Saturday.

Ben Coleman scored 19 points and Adrian Branch 18, combining for 23 in the second half to put Maryland in command. But the Terps needed four free throws by Herman Veal in the final 11 seconds to seal the triumph.

"I didn't worry about missing," Veal said. "I just worried about having good form to give the ball a chance. After I made the first one, it was all down hill after that."

Baskets by Tim Kempton and John Paxson pulled Notre Dame to within one point in the final 18 seconds, but Veal twice responded with two free throws, the last time with two seconds left.

Maryland's Jeff Adkins then inbounded the ball directly to Notre Dame's Tom Sluby, who scored as time ran out.

"We said we had to stop Branch and Coleman," said Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps, "and they went 11-for-18 so they did a pretty good job."

Phelps was surprised by Maryland's 26-for-35 from the foul line, including 19-for-22 in the second half after coming into the game with a poor 66 percent average.

"That was a gamble we took," Phelps said of the fouling to get the ball back. But he was more upset that Maryland tried 35 free throws to Notre Dame's 12, calling it "too much imbalance."

Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell said the key to winning was the defensive job done on Paxson, who was held in check until scoring six of his 14 points in the final 44 seconds.

Deacs Rout NCSU; Cavs Whip Tigers

GREENSBORO (AP) — Delaney Rudd didn't feel the pressure in Saturday's 91-73 victory over North Carolina State, but the Wake Forest sophomore provided plenty for the Wolfpack.

Rudd scored a career-high 22 points and sparked a Wake Forest defense that ignited the Demon Deacons' fast breaks. Four of Rudd's field goals came on fast breaks following turnovers, and he finished with five steals and five assists.

"I just had one of those good games where everything fell into place," Rudd said. "I made some good cuts and everybody got the ball to me real well. Good movement is the key to it.

"The key to our defensive game was the backcourt pressure," he said. "It got us some key turnovers."

"They have a very quick team," N.C. State Coach Jim Valvano said. "They are going to beat teams with quickness. They are tailor-made for the game with our (Atlantic Coast Conference) rules."

"The reason that Wake was so good at the transition was our turnovers," N.C. State forward Thurl Bailey said. "We had a lot of mental mistakes."

"Changes here and there kept them out of their offensive rhythm pretty well," said Wake Forest Coach Carl Tacy, who raised his Division I coaching record to 200-120. "But it was more of the transition game with the fast breaks that came in the second half that really spelled the difference."

Rudd scored 16 of his points in the second half and along with John Toms turned back the Wolfpack's final bid. The Wolfpack cut a 10-point lead to 57-51 early in the second half before Wake Forest caught fire.

Rudd hit two short jumpers, Toms added another and then Rudd came up with a dunk on the end of a fast break to push the Deacon lead to 65-51 at the 9:11 mark. After the Wolfpack's Terry Gannon hit a 3-point field goal, Toms countered with a 3-point play to clinch the victory.

Toms finished with 16 points, Alvis Rogers 14, Danny Young 12 and Kenny Green 10 as the Deacons raised their record to 13-2, 4-0 in the ACC.

Sidney Lowe led N.C. State with 17 points, while Bailey added 16, 12 in the first half. The Wolfpack, which has lost four of its last five starts, fell to 8-5, 2-3 in league play.

"I thought we got off to a very good start, which we wanted to do," Tacy said. "Our offense looked a little bit sharper and we executed a little bit better. We knew the defense would have to be equal to the task. I thought it was. It gave us the fast breaks and steals that we got."

"Their speed and quickness and our lack of ball handling were important," Valvano said. "But, as I've said before, I prefer to get our butts beat while we're on the road. We're going to improve and get better. We have a lot of our home games later in the season when we will be better."

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Coach Terry Holland said the key to seventh-ranked Virginia's easy 105-87 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory Saturday over Clemson's Tigers was the fact the Cavaliers "got off to such a good start."

Starting guards Rick Carlisle and Othell Wilson, bearing out Holland's statement that "our starting group did such a good job," combined for 46 points in the Cavaliers' romp.

Carlisle, a transfer from the Universitry of Maine, matched his career high with 24 points and Wilson added 22. Sophomore forward Tim Mullen added a season-high 14 points for the Cavaliers, who upped their ACC record to 5-1 and their overall mark to 15-2.

Clemson, now 0-5 in the conference and 6-11 overall, was led by reserve Marc Campbell with 18 points. Chris Michaels added 16, Anthony Jenkins 14 and Raymond Jones 12 for the Tigers.

Despite the ease of the victory, Holland said "I saw enough three-point plays to last the rest of the season." The Tigers put up 23 and hit 15.

"They were a little tentative," Holland said of the Tigers. "They're obviously struggling at this point. Our defense was able to control the tempo."

Virginia hit Clemson with a pressing defense early, and Tiger Coach Bill Foster said "when you're not playing well and you've got two freshmen out there and you're 6-10 and they throw a press at you, it looks like they've got seven guys out there. We didn't attack their press at all."

Two-time national player of the year Ralph Sampson, content to let his teammates do the scoring, finished with a season-low four points. Sampson grabbed six rebounds, giving him 1,313 for his career and moving him past former Clemson star Wayne "Tree" Rollins into third place on the ACC list.

"He felt a whole lot better," Holland said of Sampson, who was said to be tired after seeing limited action in a 74-64 victory Wednesday night over 17th-ranked Virginia Tech. "He wanted to have a good game, but we didn't need him a whol lot. The second half, he was pressing a bit trying to get back in the groove."

Forcing the struggling Tigers into 14 first-half turnovers and 43 percent shooting from the field, Virginia assumed control of the game early. Leading 13-9 with only over five minutes gone, the Cavaliers ripped off 16 straight points.

Carlisle, Jimmy Miller and Ricky Stokes had two baskets each in the surge, while Mullen and Dan Merrifield each scored one. A 15-footer shot by Carlisle at the 10:16 mark ended the string and gave Virginia a 29-9 advantage.

Clemson, which has lost five straight games and eight of its last nine games, began to fire up three-point field goal attempts in an effort to get back into contention. The Tigers connected seven times from beyond the three-point circle in the first half, closing the gap at halftime to 52-38.

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Cory Blackwell scored 18 points, including 12 in the second half, leading Wisconsin to a 65-62 Big Ten upset of 10th-ranked Iowa Saturday.

Freshman Ricky Olson added 17 points, 13 in the first half, and Brad Sellers had 16 points for the Badgers, 7-8 overall and 2-4 in the conference.

Steve Carfino almost single-handedly brought Iowa back from a 51-41 deficit, hitting four second-half 3-point baskets and scoring 14 second-half points. He finished with 22 points, including six 3-pointers for the Hawkeyes, 12-3 and 3-2.

Maryland Holds Off Notre Dame, 68-67

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Notre Dame came teasingly close after trailing by seven points with 1:38 left, but Maryland held off the Irish to score a 68-67 victory Saturday.

Ben Coleman scored 19 points and Adrian Branch 18, combining for 23 in the second half to put Maryland in command. But the Terps needed four free throws by Herman Veal in the final 11 seconds to seal the triumph.

"I didn't worry about missing," Veal said. "I just worried about having good form to give the ball a chance. After I made the first one, it was all down hill after that."

Baskets by Tim Kempton and John Paxson pulled Notre Dame to within one point in the final 18 seconds, but Veal twice responded with two free throws, the last time with two seconds left.

Maryland's Jeff Adkins then inbounded the ball directly to Notre Dame's Tom Sluby, who scored as time ran out.

"We said we had to stop Branch and Coleman," said Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps, "and they went 11-for-18 so they did a pretty good job."

Phelps was surprised by Maryland's 26-for-35 from the foul line, including 19-for-22 in the second half after coming into the game with a poor 66 percent average.

"That was a gamble we took," Phelps said of the fouling to get the ball back. But he was more upset that Maryland tried 35 free throws to Notre Dame's 12, calling it "too much imbalance."

Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell said the key to winning was the defensive job done on Paxson, who was held in check until scoring six of his 14 points in the final 44 seconds.

Jim Dolan scored 20 points to lead Notre Dame, which had beaten Maryland, 9-5, in their last three meetings.

With the National Football League's NFC championship game being played in nearby Washington, D.C., attendance was cut to 7,210 with 6,290 no-shows. Many of the fans who showed up brought radios and televisions and the crowd reacted noisily to news of the Redskins' good fortune.

The crowd at Cole Field House wasn't very attentive to the basketball action until Washington had defeated Dallas 31-17. The school band struck up the Washington's victory song during a time out with Maryland ahead 47-45.

Aroused Jets Out To End Dolphins' Ministreak

MIAMI (AP) — The first time the New York Jets and Miami got together during the 1982 season, the Dolphins had something to prove. They hadn't beaten the Jets in the past eight games.

They beat them that day, 45-28. The Jets felt Miami Coach Don Shula went for touchdowns when field goals might have sufficed, that he tried to show up New York by pulling trick plays out of his hat (quarterback David Woodley catching a touchdown pass), that the Dolphins rubbed the Jets' noses in the Shea Stadium dirt.

Fourteen weeks later, in the Orange Bowl, the Dolphins won again, this time 20-19 on Uwe von Schamann's 47-yard field goal with three seconds to play. The margin of victory was Pat Leahy's missed extra point after New York's first TD.

Now Shula has a chance to beat the Jets a third time in the same season, in Sunday's American Conference championship. Shula knows the feeling. When he was Baltimore's head coach in 1965, Green Bay beat the Colts 20-17 and 42-27 during the season and again 13-10 in overtime in the playoffs.

Shula shrugs off all references to the Dolphins' three-in-a-row prospects. "We're trying to beat them for the first time in 1983," he quipped.

But if he is downplaying Miami's ministreak, the Jets are not. They say they are as aroused as ever. And at least one of them says the Dolphins' talk about how they're looking forward to playing New York again is just that — talk.

"We're got a lot more to prove than they do," said cornerback Bobby Jackson. "They beat us twice and they're probably confident that they can do it again. They beat us because we weren't as disciplined as they were and because they put in all that trick stuff.

"But both teams will be pulling out all the stops this time ... They said they wanted to see us again, but they don't. They're going to be nervous, even more nervous than us," added Jackson, who could have preserved the Jets' lead in final minute of the teams' second meeting but didn't, dropping a "sure" interception.

The three-in-a-row theme pervades most of the Jets' thinking.

"I don't see us losing three times in a year to any team," said Scott Dierking, the running back whose 1-yard dive in the closing minutes in Los Angeles eight days ago vaulted the Jets over the Raiders 17-14 and into this AFC title game.

"The first game (against Miami) we just didn't seem emotionally ready and we hit a lull in the third quarter of the second game. But I think we should have won both times."

"I feel great to get the chance to get back at them for the last two games," said linebacker Lance Mehl, whose two interceptions in the closing minutes preserved the victory over the Raiders.

And defensive tackle Marty Lyons added: "I think we've got something to prove and there's no better place to prove it than down in Miami since they beat us twice."

"We've got the revenge factor," said Jets quarterback Richard Todd. "We know them; they know us ... If they can beat us three times they deserve to go to the Super Bowl ... But it's still hard to say why they beat us twice, just like it's hard to say they couldn't beat us in eight games.

"Whatever the Dolphins do, they do it well. They defense everything so well. They're probably the most well-coordinated defense in the league. They'd have to be if they're No. 1 in the whole league. I think ours would have been if we hadn't had all the injuries."

Shula said Todd can "do a lot more things than just the dropback," a comparison to San Diego quarterback Dan Fouts, intercepted five times and intercepted three times in the Dolphins' 34-13 playoff romp against the Chargers last Sunday.

"You know where Dan's going to be all the time; taking three-, five- and sometimes seven-step drops back," Shula said. "But Todd will give you a lot more movement, he'll roll out and he'll run the bootleg. He's at the point of his career where he's at the top of his game." Todd ranked second in the conference and sixth in the league in passing, finishing with 14 touchdown passes and eight interceptions. Woodley threw seven touchdowns and was intercepted eight times.

And in a reference to New York's Freeman McNeil, the National Football League's regular-season rushing champion who rolled up 202 yards against the Cincinnati Bengals and 105 against the Raiders, Shula commented: "They'll do a lot more things than just throw the football, the way the Chargers do."

McNeil, with 786 yards during the season, finished just 85 yards ahead of Miami's Andra Franklin in AFC rushing.

Two of the players summed up the intensity the teams are bringing into the game.

"When we play them," said Miami safety Mike Kozlowski, "it's always a bloodbath."

And All-Pro tackle Marvin Powell of the Jets said: "It's a game the fans can sit back and really enjoy; two divisional rivals going for the jugular on every play."

4th-Ranked DHC Wins Two Matches

FARMVILLE — Fourth-ranked D.H. Conley, preparing for the most important week of the year, rolled to a pair of victories in wrestling matches Saturday afternoon.

D.H. Conley defeated Washington, 48-16, and downed Farmville Central, 42-21. In another match, Washington beat Farmville, 42-26.

D.H. Conley is now 12-1. Farmville falls to 3-8.

The Vikings split the first four matches against the Pam Pack and then put the match away by winning eight of the last nine.

Against Farmville Central, the Vikings were tied, 21-21, going into the 157-pound match. DHC won that match and the remaining four matches to down the Jaguars.

Conley returns to action Wednesday against Coastal Conference foe Havelock in Hollywood and Thursday the Vikings play host to West Carteret. The two matches will decide the league title.

"Both teams are ranked in top 20 in the state," DHC coach Milt Sherman said yesterday. "The conference championship is coming down to last week of the season."

West Carteret is ranked 11th in the state and Havelock 19th.

USC Slips By Idaho, 56-54

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Senior guard Gerald Peacock stole an inbounds pass and fed Kenny Holmes for a 15-foot jumper with a second to play to lift South Carolina to a 56-54 basketball victory over Idaho Saturday afternoon.

Peacock's steal came with nine seconds left after the Vandals had called two timeouts to set up an attempt at the winning basket.

Gamecock Brad Jergenson had tied the score at 54 with 44 seconds to play after Idaho had gone ahead on a three-point play by Brian Kellerman and a free throw by Kelvin Smith.

Houston Knocks No. 4 Arkansas From Unbeatens

HOUSTON (AP) — Forward Larry Micheaux carried foul-laden Houston through a tense first half and finished with 26 points as the 14th-ranked Cougars knocked No.4 Arkansas from the unbeaten ranks with 75-60 victory in a key Southwest Conerence basketball games Saturday night.

The Cougars, 15-2, remained unbeaten in conference play while the Razorbacks, 14-1, fell to a 4-1 mark.

Micheaux, nicknamed "Mr. Mean" by his teammates, scored 16 of his 18 first half points after the Hogs had pulled within two points at 14-12.

The Hogs, trying to break Houston's string of nine-game winning streak, were led by guard Darrell Walker, who hit 25 points.

Micheaux had to shore up the Cougar attack in the first half when forward Clyde Drexler went to the sidelines with three fouls and center Akeem Abdul Olajuwon picked up three.

Drexler, counted on to brunt the swirling Walker, drew his third foul 5:26 into the game and spent most of the first half on the bench. Olajuwon got his third infraction at 10:34 and went to the bench.

That left Micheaux to carry the inside load and he did itn admirably as the Cougars took advantage of a 16-5 surge for a 30-17 lead and Micheaux kept them up by 44-31 at intermission.

Micheaux hit the first two Houston baskets of the second half before he too drew his fourth foul and spent much of the second half on the sidelines.

Michael Young added 17 points for the Cougars and guard Alvin Robertson added 12 for the Hogs.

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Eighth-ranked St. John's, sparked by aggressive rebounding and the free-throw accuracy of Billy Goodwin, knocked off No.15 Syracuse 68-57 Saturday in Big East Conference basketball before 32,382 fans.

The crowd was the largest ever to watch a college game in an on-campus arena, topping the 31,327 set here Jan. 10 against Georgetown.

St. John's led only once in the first half but broke away quickly in the second half for its 16th triumph in 17 games. The Redmen improved 6-1 in the Big East.

Syracuse dropped to 4-2 in league play and 13-3 overall.

Goodwin paced all scorers with 21 points — eleven of them coming on 12 free throws.

Michigan.....76

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Randy Wittman and Ted Kitchel scored 22 points apiece Saturday as No.2-ranked Indiana rolled to a 93-76 win over Michigan in Big Ten Conference basketball action.

Indiana, winning its fourth straight game since losing at Ohio State, took over first place in the Big Ten with a 4-1 record and raised its overall mark to 14-1 for the season. Michigan, which never has won in 12 games at the Hoosiers' Assembly Hall, fell to 2-4 and 11-5.

Indiana went without a field goal for six minutes after the Wolverines led 16-14, but the Hoosiers took control with a 16-4 burst starting with a pair of free throws by Kitchel.

Wittman hit two foul shots, Kitchel hit four straight, and Dan Dakich and Tony Brown each hit a pair before a steal by Brown and a fast-break layup by Dakich gave the Hoosiers a 30-20 lead with 4:30 before halftime.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Milt Wagner scored a career-high 32 points and teamed with Rodney McCray to score all but four of Louisville's second-half points in the No. 9 Cardinals' 63-48 victory over Southern Mississippi in Metro Conference basketball Saturday.

Louisville, 15-2 and 5-0, played sluggishly in the first half of the regionally televised game, committing 10 turnovers and holding only a 34-31 lead.

Southern Mississippi, 7-7 and 2-5, was within 43-42 with 9:42 left after a three-point play by James Williams.

Louisville outscored the Golden Eagles 20-6 over the remainder of the game.

Villanova.....72
LaSalle.....71

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Ed Pinckney's layup with two seconds left gave 13th-ranked Villanova a 72-71 victory over Big 5 rival LaSalle Saturday in the first game of a Palestra college basketball tripleheader.

It was the 10th straight triumph for the Wildcats, 12-2, their longest streak since 1971.

John Pinone, Villanova's high scorer with 22 points, made two free throws with 41 seconds left to put Villanova ahead 70-67. However, Ralph Lewis connected on a jump shot with 30 seconds to go, and an eight-footer by Dallas Philson with 16 seconds left put LaSalle ahead 71-70.

After a timeout, Villanova worked the ball to Pinckney, who scored the game-winner.

Georgetown.....78
Providence.....70

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Patrick Ewing scored 18 of his 26 points in the second half when 19th-ranked Georgetown staged a comeback to beat Providence 78-70 Saturday in Big East basketball.

Led by sharpshooting Ron Jackson's 23 points, Providence grabbed a 34-31 halftime edge over last year's NCAA tournament finalist. But the Hoyas, 13-4 overall and 4-1 in the Big East, held Jackson to six second-half points and took advantage of foul trouble against Providence big men Otis Thorpe and Ray Knight.

With the score tied for the ninth time, 48-48, Ewing finished off a fast break with a stuff to give Georgetown a lead it never lost with 11:30 left.

Aurora Defeats Bullets

JAMESVILLE — Jamesville High School, trying to win its first game of the season, couldn't quite to the trick last night as second place Aurora gained a 68-63 Tobacco Belt Conference victory. Jamesville's girls did upset Aurora, however, 46-44, on two late free throws by Kim Floyd.

The loss left the Jamesville boys with an 0-9 league and 0-12 overall record and mathematically eliminated them from the league race. Aurora is now 7-2 in conference play and 10-4 overall.

Jamesville inched out into a 16-14 lead in the first period, but Aurora came back with an 18-7 edge in the second quarter to take a 32-23 lead at the half.

The Bullets tried to rally, cutting the lead to 51-45 in the third period, and again outhit Aurora, 18-17, in the final period, but couldn't quite pull it out.

Jeffrey Blango led Aurora with 20 points, while Richard Coffey added 17 and Willie Williams had 10. Jamesville was paced by Kenneth Moore with 17, while Tracy Peele had 15, David Biggs had 11 and Richie Ange and Rex Bell each had 10.

Aurora's girls held a slim 14-13 lead after one period of play but Jamesville outhit them 13-10 in the second frame. That made it 26-24 for the Lady Bullets at halftime.

Jamesville outhit Aurora once more, 9-4, in the third period, making it 35-28. Aurora rallied in the final period, tying it at 44-44 before Floyd hit her two free throws with 22 seconds remaining.

Floyd finished with 26 points to lead all scorers. Bernadetta Simpson had 22 and Leandrea Smith had 11.

Jamesville and Aurora both are now 4-5 in the league and 4-8 overall. The Bullets travel to Belhaven on Tuesday.

RALEIGH — Wake Christian Academy rolled up a pair of basketball victories over Greenville Christian Academy yesterday. Wake took the boys' game, 70-42, and won the girls' contest, 60-26.

In the opener, Wake inched out into an 11-7 lead, then pushed over 20 points points in the second period while holding GCA to just six. That made it 31-13 at the half.

GCA could not get on track in the third period either, scoring just three points, while Wake added 19, running the lead to 50-16. Both teams scored ten points in the final quarter.

Pam Wilder led Wake with 26 points, while Annette Stone had 18 and Karen Mann had 10. Kathy Vernelson led GCA with 13.

In the boys' game, Wake ran up a 17-8 lead in the first quarter, and continued to pull away in the second frame. Wake outhit GCA in that, 14-6, taking a 31-14 lead into intermission.

The Knights were able to rally a little in the third period, outhitting their hosts, 16-13, but still were far down, 44-30. Wake then raced away in the final period, 26-12, to complete its victory.

James Buffaloe led Wake with 16 points while Joey Cockrell and Alex Muse each had 12. Dan Andrews had 20 for GCA.

The Knights are not 4-8 while the Lady Knights a 5-5.

Lendl, McEnroe In Volvo Finals

NEW YORK (AP) — Ivan Lendl had something to prove Saturday. John McEnroe hopes to prove the same thing Sunday.

Lendl and McEnroe moved into Sunday's final of the $400,000 Volvo Masters tennis tournament, Lendl crushing top-seeded Jimmy Connors 6-3, 6-1 and McEnroe eliminating second-seeded Guillermo Vilas of Argentina 6-3, 6-3 in the semifinals Saturday.

Lendl's victory was revenge for the Czech, who had lost to Connors in the final of the U.S. Open last year.

While Connors has dominated Lendl, who won this tournament last year, Lendl has dominated McEnroe, winning their last six official tournament meetings.

"I want to play Lendl because I haven't beaten him in a major match in a long time," McEnroe said. "If Lendl serves well, it's hard to return his serve, and vice versa."

Lendl feels the same way.

"It will be a question to how well I can return his serve," Lendl said of McEnroe. "If I can do it well enough and set up my serve for medium or easy passing shots, I will be able to win."

Lendl, who was seeded second, and McEnroe, the tournament's No.4 seed, had little problems in the semifinals.

"As long as I can hit harder and deeper, I don't have any problem with Jimmy," said Lendl, who needed only 62 minutes to dispose of Connors.

"He served well," Connors admitted. "That's the best thing he did today. He kept a lot of balls out of my reach.

"I came out hitting the ball pretty good but he started whacking a few. Those can go out as well as they can go in, and they were going in today."

The winner of Sunday's final, scheduled to start at 3 p.m. EST, will collect $100,000, while the runner-up will pocket $60,000.

Lendl had little problem posting only his second career victory over Connors, the reigning Wimbledon and U.S. Open champion.

The first break came in the fifth game when Connors made three unforced errors and Lendl ripped off two winners, running around his backhand and firing a forehand cross-court into the far corner, then whistling a backhand passing shot down the line.

Connors tried to break right back, pulling to deuce in the sixth game before the Czech right-hander took the next two points and increased his lead to 4-2.

Lendl wrapped up the first set when he broke Connors at love in the ninth game, finally unleashing his fabled forehand, one of the most powerful shots in tennis.

He took the first point when, with both players at the baseline, Lendl powered a forehand cross-court that Connors could only watch. On the next point, Connors reached the forehand but was able only to put a weak backhand into the net.

Lendl dinked a sharply angled chip shot after Connors tried to surprise his for with a drop shot. Two points later, Lendl had another break and the first set.

The big Czech then rolled to his victory behind eight aces as Connors' only point of the second set came when he broke Lendl at 30 in the fifth game.

Vilas opened the match with a double-fault, and McEnroe took advantage of the opening. He broke the Argentine at love, then held serve at 15 for a 2-0 lead.

McEnroe broke Vilas again in the fifth game while incurring the wrath of the crowd. The feisty New Yorker took a 40-15 lead before Vilas fought back in an attempt to hold serve.

The 30-year-old Vilas pulled to deuce when his running backhand looped down the line and landed on the baseline. McEnroe became incensed over the call, arguing that the ball had been long.

While the 24-year-old New Yorker argued with the linesperson and then umpire Charles Beck, the crowd of 18,309 shouted for McEnroe to continue play. The longer he argued, the louder the crowd booed.

Vilas netted a backhand volley, giving McEnroe the advantage. But McEnore continued to berate the linesperson who had made the earlier call.

When Vilas put an easy smash into the bottom of the net, McEnroe had a 4-1 lead.

Vilas broke back in the next game, but the talented, tempermental McEnroe held his next serve to go up 5-3, then broke Vilas again in the ninth game to clinch the 39-minute set.

With both players showing flashes of brilliant shotmaking along with shaky serving, they stayed on serve through the first seven games, although Vilas had to stave off one break point in the sixth game.

McEnroe broke Vilas' service in the eighth game, converting the second break point, then held serve at love to close out the 82-minute match.

Marino Lifts North Past South, 14-6

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Dan Marino fired a pair of 11-yard touchdown strikes in the second half as the North trimmed the South 14-6 in the 34th Senior Bowl college all-star football game Saturday.

Marino, who was named the most valuable offensive player in the game, erased a 3-0 deficit by connecting with Wayne Capers of Kansas on the first 11-yard scoring strike with 6:40 left in the third period and then the Pittsburgh star connected with Nebraska's Jamie Williams from the same distance with 11:45 left in the game.

Marino, who had connected on only three of 12 attempts for 24 yards in a lackluster first half, finally got the favored North's offense untracked on its second poasession in the second half.

The strong-armed Marino unleashed a long pass covering 74 yards to Capers to set up the first score at the South four. Capers caught the long ball on the South 20 and dragged defender Jeremiah Castille of Alabama an extra 16 yards.

The first touchdown came two plays after Oklahoma's Weldon Ledbetter was nailed for a 7-yard loss by Eddie Lowe of Alabama.

Marino steered the North 60 yards in 11 plays for its second score, hitting on five of seven passes for 47 yards in the drive.

Marino finished with 11 completions in 25 attempts for 178 yards.

The South took a 3-0 lead on a 24-yard field goal by Dana Moore of Mississippi State early in the second quarter after Clemson's Terry Kinard intercepted a Marino pass at the North 43. Kinard was named the game's most valuable defensive player.

Florida's James Jones had 19 yards on three carries and Earnest Jackson of Texas A&M added 16 on six in the 37-yard drive to the field goal.

Hanging Tough

Fought Retains Classic Lead

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — John Fought turned back a series of challenges with a 2-under-par 70 and retained a one-shot margin Saturday after four rounds of the marathon, five-day, $375,000 Bob Hope Desert Classic.

Fought played in something approaching privacy at Tamarisk, some 15 miles away from La Quinta, where most of the merry-making gallery gathered to watch the antics of the show-business celebrity friends of the host comedian and sing a day-late "Happy Birthday" greeting to Jack Nicklaus.

Fought, who last season was in such a slump he abandoned the Tour for 3½ months, finished one round over each of four courses in this desert resort area in 269, a distant 19 shots under par.

The format for this, the longest tournament on the Tour, calls for the pros to play one round on each course, each day with a different, three-man team of amateurs. The amateurs completed their play Saturday and the field was cut to the low 70 pros for Sunday's final round at La Quinta.

Among the casualties was Arnold Palmer, 53, a five-time winner of this title. Palmer, who evoked a massive outpouring of nostalgic affection with his gallant but futile effort in Los Angeles last week, couldn't keep it going here. He shot a 73 at La Quinta and finished four days' play at 291, three over par.

A single shot back of the surprising Fought, who hasn't challenged seriously since winning twice in his rookie year of 1979, were PGA champion Ray Floyd, Masters title-holder Craig Stadler, Keith Fergus and Rex Caldwell, tied at 270.

"With five players on the doorstep, we can expect a shootout tomorrow," Floyd said.

Fergus scored consecutive eagles in his round of 65 at Tamarisk. Caldwell matched that 7-under-par effort under cloudy skies and brisk temperatures at Bermuda Dunes. Floyd birdied the 18th hole, shortly after the national television cameras had ended their coverage for the day, completing a 68 at La Quinta. Stadler shot a 69, also at La Quinta, which, he said, could have been much better.

"It could have been a 65 or 66, easily," said the 1982 leading money-winner. "but I just couldn't get the ball in the hole. Nothing seemed to fall into place. I was fighting myself to make a putt all day."

Floyd also complained of putting difficulties, but found plenty of consolation after playing his back nine in 32, including a chip-in birdie on the 14th and a 22-foot birdie putt on the 18th.

"I'm close enough," he said. "I've certainly given myself a chance to perform tomorrow. I'm in the hunt, and that's gratifying."

Two shots back of the foursome in second place was Chip Beck, who had a 69 at Bermuda Dunes and a 272 total.

Doug Tewell, with a 66 at La Quinta, and Bob Gilder, with a 68 at Tamarisk, were next at 274.

The group at 275, six shots out of the lead going into the final 18 holes of the chase for a $67,500 first prize, were Brad Bryant, Dave Eichelberger, Hal Sutton and John Cook. Bryant shot 69 at Indian Wells. Eichelerger had 68 at Tamarisk. Sutton had a 71 at Bermuda Dunes and Cook 70 at La Quinta.

Nicklaus, making his first start of the season, had a 69 and was greeted at the 18th green by the gallery singing "Happy Birthday." He was 43 Friday. At 278, Nicklaus was nine shots off the pace and apparently out of th title hunt. But he was in position to acquire $7,929 he needs to become the game's first player to go past $4 million in career earnings.

Fought, who had taken the top spot Friday with a spectacular 62, had to work hard to stay ahead of the pack.

"It took over five hours to play and it's hard to keep your concentration that long," he said.

He got it two under par for the day, despite a pair of 3-putts, by the seventh hole, then hung on for dear life.

He saved his day with a string of 11 consecutive pars, but was in almost constant trouble. He drove into the trees on one hole. He came within 10 inches of driving out bounds on another. He drove into the deep rough on three more. He had to one-putt four of his last eight holes to save par.

Rose Boys' Swim Team Ties Jordan

DURHAM — Rose High School's boys' swimming team drew — at least temporarily — with Durham Jordan yesterday, while the Jordan girls downed the Lady Rampants.

In the boys meet, the final score came out 40-40, while the Jordan girls came away with a 47-34 victory. However, following the meet, a check of the scoresheets revealed an error and a protest was filed. Should the protest be upheld, the scores would change to 58-53 in Rose's favor in the boys' meet and 67-50 in Jordan's favor in the girls' meet.

Rose travels to Chapel Hill next Saturday to face Chapel Hill, Jordan and Ravenscroft.

Summary:

Girls

Lisa Wallace, first in 100 free in 1:00.7, first in 200 individual medley in 2:33.3; Maria Kelly, first in 100 butterfly in 1:11.3, first in 100 breaststroke in 1:24.3; Danny Radeka, second in 100 backstroke in 1:20.8; Stephanie Quinn, third in 100 breaststroke in 1:25.99; Luanne Wallace, second in 200 free in 2:22.2, second in 50 free in 28.77; Susana Perea, fourth in 50 free in 33.19; third in 500 free in 8:10.0; Judy Benson, fourth in 100 backstroke in 1:33.27; second in one-meter diving; Margaret Cox, third in one-meter diving; Quinn, Kelly, Radeka and Wallace, first in 200 medley relay; Perea, Radeka, Quinn and Wallaced, third in 400 free relay.

Kentucky Wins In OT

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Eleventh-ranked Kentucky rode junior Jim Master's 26 points to an 82-77 overtime Southeastern Conference victory over Vanderbilt Saturday night.

Kentucky's victory gave the Wildcats sole possession of first place in the SEC with a 5-2 record. The Wildcats are 13-3 overall.

The Commodores dropped to 4-3 in conference play and 13-5 overall. Auburn's took over second place in the SEC last night with a victory over Georgia and Vandy fell to third place.

Master put on a long-range shooting display in the second half and scored his 26 points by hitting 12 of 16 field goal attempts and a pair of free throws. He also led Kentucky on the boards with six rebounds.

The Wildcats got four free throws by Derick Hord and baskets by Master and Charles Hurt in the overtime period to seal the victory.

Wildcat freshman Kenny Walker also played a vital role after Kentucky's Melvin Turpin fouled out, hitting a jumper with 1:10 left in overtime to give Kentucky the lead for good at 76-75.

Auburn 66
Georgia.....64

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Alvin Mumphord hit Charles Barkley alone under the basket for a slam dunk with two seconds remaining to give Auburn a 66-64 Southeastern Conference college basketball victory over Georgia Saturday night.

After Georgia tied the game on a Vern Fleming layup with seven seconds left, Darrell Lockhart threw a long inbound pass to Mumphord, who dribbled once and passed to Barkley for the game-winning score.

Barkley led Auburn scorers with 21 points. Lockhart had 17.

Georgia was led by James Banks with 16 points, Fleming with 14 and Terry Fair 13.

The victory raised Auburn's SEC record to 5-2 and its season record to 11-4.

Georgia dropped to 3-3 and 12-3.

Tulane 64
Va. Tech 45

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — John Williams scored 16 points and Paul Thompson added 14 as unranked Tulane whipped No. 17 Virginia Tech 64-45 in Metro Conference basketball play Saturday.

The Green Wave led all the way, opening a 26-24 edge with 2:49 in the first half to a 10-point halftime advantage and to 43-24 before the Hokies' next basket at 15:02 in the second half.

Tech never got closer than 13 points in the rest of the game.

White Hurt
Dallas quarterback Danny White (11) is hit hard by Washington's Dexter Manley (72) just before the half in their NFC championship game. White was hurt on the play and left the game. Washington went on to beat Dallas, which played without White in the second half, 31-17, to advance to the Super Bowl next Sunday. (AP Laserphoto)

Landry: We Lacked Intensity

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was the team that got no respect against the one that calls itself America's team, and Dallas wide receiver Drew Pearson summed it up best: "We were playing for the Super Bowl, and the Redskins were playing for respect. They got both."

"I just hope they go on and win the Super Bowl and keep the title in the National Conference," Pearson said.

Pearson, like many of the other Cowboy players, was very conscious that Washington's 31-17 victory for the NFC title was the third straight time the Cowboys have made it into the championship game only to lose.

"I'm quite sure we're going to get the label as a team that can't win the big one," running back Tony Dorsett said. "We've lost three years in a row to up-and-coming teams. That makes it a lot harder to take."

The Cowboys entered the second half with No. 1 quarterback Danny White sitting on the bench, knocked groggy from a sack by end Dexter Manley in the closing seconds of the first half, but Coach Tom Landry noted that his team played better in the second half although two crucial mistakes enabled the Redskins to salt it away.

"We didn't have the intensity we needed to stop them in the first half, but we picked up a great deal in the second half and had a chance to win, but then we turned around and gave it away," Landry said. "If they had made mistakes, maybe we would have won."

Landry said he was pleased with the way third-year quarterback Gary Hogeboom performed, filling in for White, despite the young quarterback's two interceptions. He said the two misfires actually weren't badly thrown balls. One was a screen pass tipped by Manley and taken in for a 10-yard touchdown by Darryl Grant.

Hogeboom, nonetheless, said his mistakes were responsible for the team losing.

"When the first string quarterback gets hurt, the team tends to rally around his replacement," he said. "We had a good thing going. We just couldn't get it done. The momentum turned when I threw two bad passes."

White, who did not play at all in the second half, was clearly still not up to par after the game. As a crowd of reporters pushed in to interview him, he mentioned being "dizzy" and said things looked "blurry."

At that point, Cowboys General Manager Tex Schramm pushed through the reporters and planted himself in front of White's dressing cubicle to bar further questions.

"It's not fair to ask him questions when he doesn't know what he's saying," said Schramm.

Hogeboom said he felt good directing the team and got a lot of encouragement from Landry and his teammates.

He quoted Landry as telling the team before he took the field for the second half, "Let's go and get them. It doesn't matter who's playing quarterback."

Running back Tim Newsome said Hogeboom "did not need a lot of encouragement. He was throwing the ball real well. It looked like he'd been in there all year."

The Redskins ran against the Cowboys' defense in the first half, but had difficulty running it in the second half until the game was out of reach. Cowboys defensive end Ed Jones explained: "In our defense, when one guy makes a mistake, there's going to be daylight, and a good running back like (John) Riggins can take advantage of that. I guess that was what was happening in the first half."

Riggins, who wound up with 140 yards on 36 carries, got much of his yardage in the first half against the right side of the Cowboy line, specifically defensive end Harvey Martin and tackle Randy White.

Explaining why he and White had a little more success against Riggins in the second half, Martin said, "We just went after him. We were doing that in the second half, but you just can't make mistakes and win."

Redskins Gain Both Respect, Super Bowl

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the Washington Redskins, a team searching for respect all year, just beating the rival Dallas Cowboys was enough. Doing it for a trip to the Super Bowl was icing.

"It is a dream come true," Redskins quarterback Joe Theismann said after Saturday's 31-17 victory in the National Football Conference championship game.

"We waited a long time for this one and there was no way we were going to come up empty," said Theismann, who had been much maligned for his inability to lead Washington to victory over Dallas in previous meetings.

Beating the Cowboys — much less for a trip to the Super Bowl — might have been enough for the Redskins. They said they intend to savor that for now and wait to find out Sunday if they'll meet the New York Jets or the Miami Dolphins in Pasadena.

"Definitely, this is like a Super Bowl for us," said tackle Mark May. "Right now, we're just going to cherish this win tonight and work on next week's Super Bowl tomorrow."

Second-year Coach Joe Gibbs echoed that.

"I don't think it has really hit me," he said. "The only thing I have thought about was the fact that this was the way it was supposed to work out — us against Dallas. We haven't beaten Dallas since I've been here, and it comes down to the championship game against Dallas. With all those things rolled into one, this game was everything."

Added George Stark, a member of the Redskins' only other Super Bowl team in 1972: "This was Super Bowl I. Next week in Super Bowl II, we're just going to have to manufacture some more emotion."

The last time the Redskins played in a championship game was 10 years ago, on the same field and against the same Cowboys.

During the interim, the Redskins fell on hard times, switching coaches three times. The Cowboys, meanwhile, remained Super Bowl contenders.

"It's a great rivalry," said Redskins safety Mark Murphy. "There are a lot of differences. They're South, we're North; they're computer-select, we're computer-reject."

Despite an 8-1 regular season and two playoff victories, the Redskins came into the game as underdogs.

"Nobody outside of Washington thought we had a chance against the Cowboys," said guard Russ Grimm. "But we knew what we were capable of and now so do the Cowboys."

As they have throughout the playoffs, the Redskins went to John Riggins early to establish their running game.

Riggins responded with 140 yards, the third straight game he has gone over 100 yards, setting an NFL playoff record.

"Riggins has been super," Gibbs said. "On game days, John tells us, 'Hey, just get the wagon out, hitch it up, and I'll pull it. Everybody get on it.'"

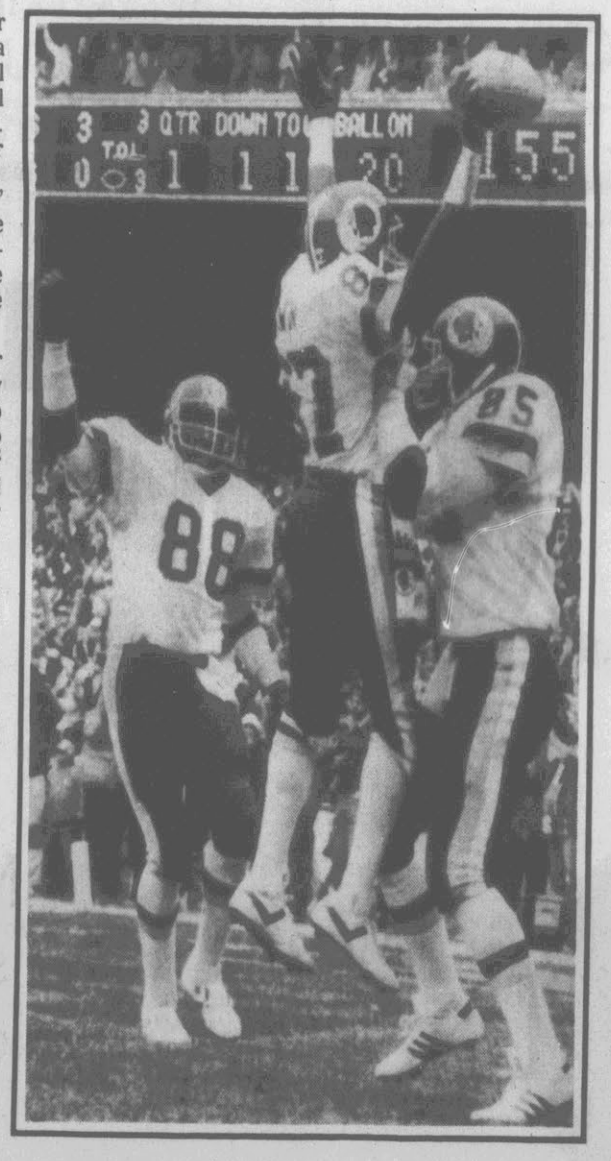
Gibbs, who had tried to downplay the game for the better part of a week, met with his players Friday night and for the first time told them he felt they were a Super Bowl team.

"I told them that history has provided us with a thumbnail sketch of what Super Bowl champions are all about. When I got through through listing everything, I said, 'This is really a thumbnail sketch of our team — defense, offense with a strong running game, special teams and mental toughness.'"

The Cowboys, refusing to fold despite the loss of starting quarterback Danny White to a concussion at the end of the second quarter, trailed 21-17 midway through the fourth quarter when the roof fell in.

An interception by Mel Kaufman set up a Mark Moseley 29-yard field goal and 17 seconds later the Redskins were on the board again as defensive tackle Darryl Grant intercepted a tipped pass and ran it in from 10 yards out.

"After a few steps, I felt it was going to be a screen," said Grant of the play. "I didn't apply pressure, but waited for him to throw. Dexter (Manley) put on a big rush and got his hand on it, and I was there."



High Five!

Georgia Romps Past ECU Women Behind Harris

COLUMBIA, S.C. — All-American Janet Harris, a 6-2 sophomore forward, led the University of Georgia to an 80-61 victory over the Lady Pirates of East Carolina Friday night in the first round of the South Carolina Invitational.

The hosting Lady Gamecocks downed Mercer in the other game, setting up a meeting with Georgia in the championship contest. ECU and Mercer met Saturday afternoon in the consolation game.

Harris dumped in 38 points, tying the Carolina Coliseum women's record, and her 18 field goals set a new coliseum standard. She missed only three shots all night, and was 12 of 13 in the first period. Ironically, her only miss was an uncontested layup.

"She's a helluva player," East Carolina coach Cathy Andruzzi said. "She's one of the best in the country. She was an all-American as a freshman. She's the best post player we've come across by far. She can shoot from the outside, play the wing or post. She obviously hurt us inside."

Harris, in addition to her 38 points, pulled off 10 rebounds. She was joined in the double figure scoring category by Wanda Hollowell, Georgia's 6-3 center, who scored 12 points and had nine rebounds. Lisa O'Connor, a 6-1 forward added nine points and played exceptional defense for the Bulldogs.

"We closed off other parts of their game," Andruzzi continued. "I thought Fran Hooks did an excellent defensive job on Theresa Edwards, who is one of their key players (holding her to six points), but we couldn't stop Harris, and we tried a lot.

"Georgia is a powerful team, but I was pleased with the effort of our girls. They've lost only to UCLA and Tennessee, and are averaging close to 90 points a game. They outrebounded up, but the margin wasn't too bad for our kids. Nineteen points may seem like a lot too, but we were in the game all the way. We had more turnovers than I like, but I credit a lot of that to Georgia's defnese."

The Lady Pirates played without the services of point guard and number two scorer Loraine Foster, out with a strained ligament in her knee. Lisa Squirewell came off the bench to play well in the game, playing for only the second time since Christmas after being sidelined with an injury. "She did a super job, and Mary (Denkler) also played a excellent, excellent game. Delphine (Mabry) really smoked on defense, too."

The Lady Pirates, now 6-7, led at 6-4, 8-6 and 10-8 before Lou Sims made two free throws with 15:27 left to tie it up. Harris then hit a six-footer to put the Lady Bulldogs ahead, and they were never caught again.

Denkler pulled the Pirates back within two, 20-18, but Georgia, after a time out, pulled away, outscoring ECU, 25-15, the rest of the half. Georgia led at intermission, 45-33.

In the second half, the Lady Pirates had a couple of rallies, cutting the lead to as little as seven, 52-45 on a rebounding basket by Darlene Chaney, but Harris sparked another pullaway that led to the final 19 point margin.

Denkler, held under ten points in her last two games, came back with a 28-point effort, hitting 12 of 21 shots from the floor and four of four at the line. She lost two more points from the line on lane violations by her own teammates.

Georgia climbs to 13-2 on the season with the win.

Following Saturday's consolation game, the Lady Pirates are idle until next weekend when they make a two-day trip into the mountains, playing East Tennessee State on Saturday and Appalachian State on Sunday. The two game bring to an end their long ten-game, two month hiatus from Minges Coliseum.

Jaguars Power Past Winless Aycock, 74-33

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

FARMVILLE — Farmville Central needed this.

After being knocked from the ECC undefeated ranks Thursday night, the Jaguars came back with vengeance Friday evening as they rolled past winless Charles B. Aycock, 74-33, in an Eastern Carolina Conference basketball game.

Earlier, in the girls' game, C.B. Aycock downed Farmville, 58-35.

"We had fun tonight," Farmville coach Mike Terrell said. "We needed a good game tonight. We were very low and down from (Thursday) night."

Farmville Central, coming off a 50-44 loss to Ayden-Grifton, overcame a stall by the Falcons to go up, 10-4, after the first eight minutes. The Jaguars then outscored CBA, 16 to 2, in the first 5½ minutes of the second period to take a 28-9 halftime lead.

Farmville (10-5 overall and 4-1 in the league) extended its lead to 36 in the third quarter and the Falcons never got closer than 31 as they dropped to 0-14 and 0-6.

"We jumped on them real hard to begin with. I thought our aggressiveness set the tone early," Terrell said. "We knew we had to come out and play hard and not let them into the game."

"The key was we got ahead early and never gave them an opportunity to get in the game," Terrell said. "We made them play our game and they don't have the talent to play with our kids."

Farmville placed four players in double figures, led by forward Tony Hargrove with 12 points. Center Terrance Pettway added 11 points while Gary Hobgood and reserve Barry Boone scored 10 each.

Andrew Edwards led Farmville off the boards with 10 and Pettway grabbed seven as the Jaguars outrebounded CBA, 34-18.

The Falcons were led by reserve center Mark Radford, who scored 13 points and pulled down five rebounds. None of the Falcons starting five scored more than four points.

Farmville canned 49.3% (35 of 71) from the floor; Aycock hit 35.9% (14 of 39). The Jaguars ended up with 16 turnovers — half of which came in the final eight minutes. CBA had 27 turnovers.

The Falcons opened the game in a spread offense, which worked briefly before turnovers wrecked the plan. Four turnovers in the last 2½ minutes helped lead to three Farmville buckets — two by guard Bobby Carraway — for a 10-4 lead at the end of the first period.

"I didn't expect (the slowdown)," Terrell said, "but it was probably the best thing they could do. If they could have gotten ahead (early) they could have probably made it a lot closer game."

Farmville scored the first 10 points of the second period — all five buckets being scored by different players — to extend its lead to 20-4 with 5:32 left in the half.

During that 10-0 run, the Farmville full-court press forced five consecutive turnovers. Moments later, Farmville scored six straight points — three by the ever-present Pettway — to go up, 26-5.

Farmville led at the half, 28-9. Aycock ended the first 16 minutes having hit just four of 17 field goals and with 13 turnovers.

"The key was we got ahead and got the opportunity to press," Terrell said. "Once we got command we got real loose."

The Jaguars scored the first nine points of the the third period to push the lead to 39-9. The Falcons did not reach double figures until the 4:51 mark of the third quarter.

Farmville's biggest lead was 47-11 with 2:53 left in the third quarter. CBA never got closer than the halftime spread of 19 in the second half.

"It seemed like we were more alive tonight," Terrell said. "Of course, the competition had a lot to do with that."

In the girls' game, conference-leading Charles B. Aycock outscored Farmville Central, 16 to 2, over a six-minute period en route to its 12 victory in 15 outings.

The win leaves the Lady Falcons at 5-1 in the league, one-half game ahead of SouthWest Edgecombe. SouthWest beat North Pitt, xx-xx, Friday night. The Lady Jaguars are 2-3 and 3-13.

"They're a good darn team," Farmville Central coach Hilda Worthington said after seeing her team's modest two-game winning streak snapped. "They've got good shooters and they work the ball so well together."

In a slow first period, Farmville jumped out to a 5-2 lead early and held it until two minutes remained. The Lady Falcons then went to work, scoring eight straight points to take a 10-5 lead after the first period.

"That hurt," Worthington said.

Aycock center Sheri Williams, who led all scorers with 23 points, hit a pair of jumpers and forward Brenda Montague stole the ball twice to key the surge, which continued into the second period.

The Lady Falcons outscored Farmville, 8 to 2, in the first 3½ minutes of the second quarter to up their lead to 18-7. Farmville never got closer than nine the rest of the way.

C.B. Aycock led, 31-19, at halftime and upped its bulge to 43-26 after three periods.

"Our inexperience hurt us, but they are just a good team. Sheri Williams is one of the best shooters for a center I've seen in many years," Worthington said.

Forward Stephanie Newton led Farmville with 10 points. She and Williams were the only player in double figures.

Rampants Run to 90-62 Upset Of Fike

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Playing what Coach Jim Brewington called "probably the best executed game since I've been here," Rose High School's Rampants romped to a 90-62 upset of Wilson Fike Friday night, evening their Big East Conference record at 2-2 on the year.

The win was the second in a row for the Rampants, who lost seven of their first eight games before finally putting a pair of victories together.

Earlier in the evening, Fike's girls pulled away from Rose in the final quarter and gained a 43-30 victory over the Rampettes.

Turnovers and the fast break were the keys for Rose. The Rampants played almost flawless ball, having only seven turnovers on the evening while Fike was tagged with 21 — some of them unforced.

And the Rampants made basket-after-basket on the fast break, racing up and down the court with seeming ease. Fike, meanwhile, appeared lethartic at times.

Shooting was also a key for the Rampants, who blitzed the nets for 57.4 percent of their shots — hitting 31 of 54 tries. The fast break was a factor in this, too. Fike, able to get the ball inside a number of times, shot well, ending up with an even 50 percent on 25 of 50.

Rose worked the ball well, getting it to the inside and drawing foul after foul — another key factor in the contest. The Rampants canned 28 of 33 attempts at the line, while Fike — working against the quick Rampant zone — made good on 12 of 17.

"This is the best game we've played this year" Brewington said. "We did everything right tonight"

Brewington admitted that he was surprised that the Rampants got as many fast breaks against Fike. "Usually you don't get that kind of stuff on a team like Fike. They usually play us a much closer game."

Brewington felt that Fike's having played cross-county rival Beddingfield on Wednesday might have taken something out of the Golden Demons. "They appeared flat for us," he said.

Fike only twice put together more than two points at a time in the first half — once early in the second period and again at the end of the quarter. Rose, meanwhile, was steadily putting points together as it pulled away. The Rampants got the first three points of the game on a free throw by Donnell Lee and two more by Alan Dickens, who played his best game of the year. Fike cut it to 3-2 before Rose ran off six straight points, making it 9-2. Tony Clemons hit a jumper in the lane to make it 13-5, and after another Fike basket, Mac Walston hit a three-point play and then scored on the give-and-go to run the lead to 18-7. Mike Hilliard hit with two seconds left to cut it back to 18-9 at the horn.

After Rose scored two more at the stripe, Fike finally managed to put together four points, trimming the lead to 20-13, but Rose came back with two baskets to counter that. Then, after another Fike baskets, Clemons scored two on the fast break and Alan Dickens added two free throws for a 30-15 lead.

Minutes later, Donnell Lee made a three points, followed by another running one-hander by Clemons to make it 37-19. Two free throws by Dickens and a rebound — off the first missed shot of the quarter — by Jay Mahoney made it 43-23 before Fike scored the final four points of the half to cut it back to 43-27.

In the second period, Rose made good on eight of ten from the field and nine of nine at the line, not missing a shot in the first 6:50.

Early in the third period, Fike cut the lead back to 12, 47-35, but Walston scored seven points during the final five minutes of the half to lead Rose back to a 20-point lead, 62-42 at the end of the frame.

In the final quarter, Rose outscored Fike, 10-2 in the first three minutes of play, running the lead out to 72-44, including four each by Walston and Clemons. After that, Brewington went to his bench and finished off the Demons.

Walston finished with 18 points, while Dickens and Lee each had 16 and Clemons had 14. Fike was led by Hilliard with 26, while Bud Powell added 16.

"I don't think these two will tend to make us overconfident," Brewington said. "When you've only won three and you're going up against one of the best around, you can't afford to be overconfident."

Brewington was speaking of Rose's next foe, Wilson Hunt, to be faced in Wilson on Tuesday.

Rose's boys are now 2-2 in the league and 3-7 overall. Fike falls to 2-3 and 6-7.

For three-quarters, the Rampettes stayed right with Fike's girls — one of the co-favorites in the Big East. Fike took an early five-point lead, but Rose came back and forged as much as a three-point lead of its own, and trailed only 27-26 going into the final quarter of play.

But the bottom fell out that. Rose connected on only two for 18 shots from the floor in the period — and didn't go to the foul line. Rose missed ten straight shots from the field while Fike, using the foul line to great advantage, ran off 11 straight points. Then, after Rose scored its first basket, the Lady Demons pushed over five more before Alma Atkinson hit the final basket of the evening.

Fike broke open a 4-4 tie, getting a three-point play from Elizabeth Barnes and a jumper from Lavern McIver for a 9-4 lead. Rose cut that back to 9-6 by the horn.

Rose then ran off six straight points to take a 12-9 lead in the second period, four of them by Frances Barnhill. Fike regained the lead at 13-12, but Rose pushed back ahead on a basket by Sheila Carmon and added two Atkinson free throws for a 16-13 lead. Fike trailed, 16-15, at intermission.

Fike scored the first basket of the third period and the two teams swapped points until Linda Barnes made two straight to push Fike into a 23-20 lead. Rose cut it back to one several times, and trailed 27-26 as the period ended.

With it ended the Rampettes' hopes.

"We were pretty evently matched out there," Rose coach Dennis Gibson said. "It was just a matter of who made the most mistakes, and it turned out to be us. We were so cold in the fourth quarter. Frances (Barnhill) and Alma (Atkinson) neither one had a good game, and that killed us. But you just don't overcome a two-for-18 quarter."

Rose finished the game shooting 22 percent, while Fike made good on 35 percent of its shots.

Linda Barnes led Fike with 16 points, while Barnhill had ten to lead Rose.

Rose is now 2-2 in the league and 4-7 overall. Fike is 4-1 in the conference and 10-3 overall.

Bear Grass Surprises Creswell

Bears Use Foul Line In Final Period To Down Tigers, 55-49

CRESWELL — Phil Peele scored 20 points and Bear Grass used the foul line in the final period to surprise Creswell, 55-49, Friday night in a Tobacco Belt Conference basketball game.

Earlier, in the girls' game, Bear Grass ripped winless Creswell, 68-22.

Bear Grass trailed, 36-34, going into the final period, but the Bears hit nine of 12 free throws in the final eight minutes to rally for the victory. Lawrence Watson, who scored 12 points, hit six of eight foul shots in the fourth quarter to lead the Bear Grass charge.

Bear Grass hit 17 of 25 free throws for the contest, compared to just three of 10 for Creswell.

Bear Grass is now 3-6 in the league and 4-7 overall. Creswell falls to 4-4 and 6-5.

The game started slowly and the two teams ended the first quarter tied at 8-8. The Bears outscored Creswell, 18-10, in the second quarter to take a 26-18 lead at halftime.

Creswell rallied in the third period with a 17-8 run that sent the Tigers atop the Bears, 36-34, going into the final period.

Creswell was led in scoring by Durrell Mercer with 18 points. Ezroe Webb added 11 points for the Tigers.

Joining Peele and Lawrence in double figures for Bear Grass was Timmy Williams with 11.

In the girls' contest, the Lady Bears jumped out to a 12-6 advantage after the first period and upped their lead to 24-12 at the half.

Bear Grass outscored Creswell, 17-6, in the third quarter to go up, 41-18. The Lady Bears then ripped the Lady Tigers, 27-2, in the final eight minutes to win by 44.

Bear Grass' Angie Mizelle led all scorers with 25 points. Aria Williams scored 18 points and Mary Rawls 13 for Bear Grass, which is 7-3 overall and 5-3 in the league.

The Lady Tigers, now 0-8 and 0-11, did not have any one in double figures.

Bath Slips Past Bullets, 46-41

JAMESVILLE — Bath High School swept a pair of Tobacco Belt basketball games from Jamesville Friday night. The hapless Bullets fell in the boys' game, 46-41, while the Lady Pirates topped Jamesville, 31-25.

Jamesville inched out into a 7-4 lead in the first period of the boys' game. Bath rallied in the second quarter, however, 14-12, but still trailed, 19-18, at intermission.

The Pirates slipped into the lead with a 15-13 advantage in the second period, leading 33-32, as the final quarter opened. In that, Bath outhit the Bullets, 13-9, to gain the win.

Kelvin Cutler led Bath with 17 points. David Biggs had 14 and Richie Ange and Tracy Peele each had ten for Jamesville.

In the girls' game, Bath took a 10-6 lead in the first period and extended that to 17-12 by halftime. Bath ran that lead out to 23-14 in the third period, then allowed Jamesville an 11-8 rally in the last quarter.

Kim Floyd led Jamesville with 11 points and was the game's only scorer in double figures.

Jamesville's girls are now 3-5 in the league and 3-8 overall. Bath is 5-3 both overall and in the conference. Jamesville's boys falls to 0-8, 0-11, while Bath is 4-4 both overall and in the Tobacco Belt.

Jamesville travels to Belhaven on Tuesday.

Rose Wrestlers Nip Wilson Fike, 38-37

WILSON — Rose High School overcame three forfeits and nipped Wilson Fike High School, 38-37, in a Big East Conference wrestling match Friday night.

The Rampants spotted Fike a 12-point lead with forfeits in the second and third matches after a double forfeit in the opening weight. But the Rampants came back to take the lead for good with four weights left, when Frank Corey won on a forfeit at 169. Marvin Fleming then provided the final margin when he took a majority decision over Eddie Barnes at 197 to give Rose a seven-point lead. The Rampants then forfeited the heavyweight match, closing the score to one point.

Rose is now 7-3 overall and 3-2 in Big East competition. The Rampants play host to Hunt on Tuesday.

Last-Second Shot Misses As Vikings Hold On

D.H. Conley Escapes A-G Charge To Win, 63-62

By ALAN WOOTEN
Reflector Sports Writer

LITTLEFIELD — Keith Gatlin poured in 23 points and D.H. Conley withstood a last-second shot by Ayden-Grifton to take a 63-62 nonconference win Friday night. The Vikings snapped a nine game-winning streak by the Chargers.

The Valkyries extended their winning string to six with a 43-36 win over the upset-minded Lady Chargers in the girls game.

"It was one of the better high school games that could be played," Conley coach Shelley Marsh said afterwards. "It was anybody's ballgame. The ball just happened to roll our way at the end."

Ayden-Grifton coach Bob Murphrey agreed. "It was a pretty good game to watch. I was real proud of the way we fought back," he said.

The game started at a fast tempo, with both teams netting 19 points in the first period. The Vikings gained an advantage, 16-10, in the second quarter to go ahead at halftime, 35-29. Ayden-Grifton rallied in the third quarter, 15-10, to close within 45-44. The Vikings then staved off the Chargers to claim the victory in the final quarter.

The Chargers led, 41-31, on a bucket by Reggie Smith with 5:17 to go in the third quarter. The Chargers then put together a 13-4 run that had them on top once but left them behind, 45-44, after three periods.

Marvin Smith scored inside to start the spurt. Two jumpers in the lane by Thomas Anderson cut the lead to 41-35 with 4:11 left. Smith added a free throw and Tyrone Gay followed with a steal to bring the Chargers to within 41-40 with 3:20 remaining.

Mitchell Cox drove the lane for a layup with 3:04 left but the Chargers answered with two buckets, one of which was a spinning move underneath by Gay that put Ayden-Grifton ahead, 44-43, with 1:39 left. Alvin Clemmons scored the final basket of the quarter to give Conley a 45-44 lead entering the fourth quarter.

"We slowed the tempo down in the third quarter," Murphrey said. "This enabled us to get better shots. It was also a little more to our liking."

Said Marsh: "Our offense just stopped clicking. Of course, Ayden-Grifton had a lot to do with that."

The Vikings took a 51-48 lead with 6:27 to go on a drive by Gatlin. The Chargers came back to go up, 52-51, when Gay manuevered inside for a layup at the 3:47 mark.

The teams alternated baskets at an up-tempo for the next two minutes. Then Gatlin made both ends of a one-and-one with 1:40 left to send the Vikings into a 61-58 lead. Gay hit from the lane on the ensuing trip down floor to close the gap, 61-60, with 1:28 left.

The Vikings elected to go to a stall offense after that. Anderson came up with a steal but missed the layup with 1:10 left. The ball went out-of-bounds to Conley on the rebound.

The Vikings remained in their stall. The Chargers were finally forced to foul. But when they did, it was the wrong man. They sent Gatlin to the line with :39 left. The lanky 6-5 senior hit both ends of the one-and-one to give DHC a 63-60 lead.

Ayden-Grifton came back to cut the lead to one on a feed from Gay to Anderson with 23 seconds left.

Following a timeout, the Chargers fouled Cox with :17 left. Cox, however, missed the front end of the one-and-one and Gatlin grabbed the rebound. Gatlin looked for a teammate to throw to but, instead, he found the hand of Anderson, who batted the ball away. It eventually went out of bounds to the Chargers.

Ayden-Grifton brought the ball down and got it to Anderson. Anderson drove the lane for the layup that went in and out. The rebound was grabbed by Smith, who tried to get off a shot but had it knocked away. Conley's Donald Wilson picked up the loose ball as the game ended.

"I think the big difference was our inability to come up with the big defensive play near the end," Murphrey said. "We came down on offense and scored but they did, too."

"Everything fell into place at the end," Murphrey continued. "We fouled who we wanted to (Cox) at the end. We got the ball to who we wanted to also but the shot just wouldn't fall."

The Chargers left Marsh impressed. "They have a very quick team. We knew they would come back at the end," Marsh said. "They have the shooters and the quickness to do that."

Both teams held four-point leads in the first quarter. The Vikings scored the game's first four points. Ayden-Grifton came back and went ahead, 12-8, on a layup by Gay following a steal by Anderson.

Conley took a 17-16 lead with 1:53 left on a layup by Otis Payton. The two teams alternated baskets from there to the end of the quarter and ended tied at 19.

Conley opened up a 27-20 bulge with 4:44 remaining in the first half on a 22-footer by Arthell Ruffin. Ayden-Grifton fought back to within 27-25 on a bucket in the lane by Anderson with 3:29 to go.

But the Vikings surged back and opened up a 35-27 lead with :49 left on a tip-in by Payton and led at half, 35-29.

Marvin Smith scored the first basket of the second half for Ayden-Grifton. Reggie Smith came back with six straight to give Conley a 41-31 lead before Ayden-Grifton started the comeback drive.

In addition to Gatlin's 23 points, Payton had 14 and Smith chipped in 10 for Conley now 11-3 overall. Anderson and Gay scored 17 points each to pace Ayden-Grifton, now 10-4. Smith added 13.

The D.H. Conley girls nearly saw their winning streak get broken by the Lady Chargers. Mechio Kornegay led the way with 18 points for the winners. Karen Barrett added 13.

Linda Brown led A-G with 20 as the Lady Chargers fell to 5-9 overall. D.H. Conley is now 14-1.

Conley grabbed an 8-6 lead after one quarter. The Valkyries pushed the lead to 24-14 at the half. Ayden-Grifton closed to within two in third quarter but the Valkyries regained control and led 37-28 after three periods. They held off a rally by the Lady Chargers in the final quarter to win by the final, 43-36.

After the slow first period, the Valkyries opened it up in the second period. The running game shifted into high gear as DHC spurted to a 20-7 lead. Kornegay did most of the damage, gaining room on the right baseline to get open for a short jumper. She scored the first six points of the 12-1 spree. The teams traded baskets to end the half with DHC leading 24-14.

Ayden-Grifton came out firing long range shots in the third period. Every field goal, except one, was from beyond 20 feet in the opening minutes of the quarter. Brown hit on four of those as A-G closed to within 28-26 on a jumper by Josie Braxton.

Conley came back with six unanswered points to extend its lead to 34-26 with 1:08 left. A three-point play by Karen Barrett with :07 to go gave Conley a 37-28 lead entering the final quarter.

A-G closed within four (40-36) with 1:37 left in the game but could get no closer.

"We had a rough first half with our shooting," Ayden-Grifton coach Kathy Frazier said. "We came out shooting a lot better in the second half and played much better offensively."

Ayden-Grifton plays host to North Pitt Tuesday night in an important Eastern Carolina Conference game. The Vikings travel to North Lenoir Wednesday night in a Coastal Conference game.

Panthers Whip SW Edgecombe

PINETOPS — North Pitt's Panthers remained hot on the heels of Ayden-Grifton in the Eastern Carolina Conference race with a 55-43 victory over SouthWest Edgecombe Friday night.

At the same time, SouthWest Edgecombe's defending state champion girls stayed a half-game off the pace of Charles B. Aycock with an 81-37 romp over the Pant-HERS.

North Pitt pushed through 13 points and held the Cougars to only six in the first quarter of the boys' game. SouthWest rallied, 12-10, in the second quarter, cutting the lead to 23-18.

North Pitt eased out again, 10-7, in the third period, building its lead to 33-25. The Panthers then pulled away, 22-18, in the final quarter.

Charles Harris led North Pitt with 14 points, while Greg Briley had 13 and Dennis Bradley hit 12. Elmo Savage and Tim Walker each had 10 for SouthWest.

The win boosts the North Pitt record to 4-1 in the league and 11-4 overall. The Cougars drip to 1-4 in the conference and 9-6 overall.

In the girls' contest, SouthWest, twice state champs, jumped away to a 26-9 lead in the first quarter and was never in trouble against the Pant-HERS. The Lady Cougars added a 22-10 margin in the second period, making it 48-19 at the half.

Things got no better for North Pitt in the second half. SouthWest boosted its lead to 66-30 in the third period and outscored the Pant-HERS, 15-7, in the last quarter.

Janice Draughn led SouthWest with 25 points, while Melody Jenkins had 23 and Kim Edmundson had 14. North Pitt was led by Linda Harrell with 10.

North Pitt's girls are now 1-4 in the ECC and 6-10 overall. SouthWest is now 4-1 and 13-2.

North Pitt travels to Ayden-Grifton in a key game on Tuesday.

ECU Women Win...

and Fran also got the ball to Lisa (Squirewell)."

ECU started quickly, taking an 8-2 lead via a layup by Mabry, one of three freshman who led the Lady Pirates Saturday. Mabry scored eight points as the three first-year players combined for 38 points.

Mercer got its running game going moments later and tied the game at 12-12 with 10:47 left on a layup by Mumphrey. Mercer then opened a 17-14 lead on a bucket by Meadows.

ECU regained the lead, 18-17, on a field goal by Squirewell. The two teams fought nearly even for the next eight minutes before Davis' fast break bucket gave Mercer a 26-24 lead with 3½ minute to go.

A three-point play by Squirewell sent ECU back on top, 27-26, and after a tie at 27-27, the Lady Pirates used two free throws by Denkler to key an 8-3 run that put ECU ahead, 35-30, at the half.

Denkler's 12-foot jumper with 15:35 left pushed ECU's lead to 45-38 and the Lady Pirates matched their biggest lead of the game moments later at 47-40. But, from there Mercer rallied.

Mercer outscored ECU, 14-7, over the next four minutes and tied the game at 54-54 on a bucket by Meadows. But Denkler canned a shot to send ECU on top for good and ECU hit its foul shots down the stretch to win.

"I feel like we're on the right track," Andruzzi said. "We worked hard to get the right shots. We're shooting less but we're taking better shots. The kids know what we want now and we're optimistic."

Joining Denkler on the all-Tournament team were Georgia's Janet Harris and South Carolina's Evelyn Johnson, Marsi McAlister and Sharon Rivers. Rivers was named the MVP of the tournament which was won by Georgia, 74-72. Media covering the event selected the team.

ECU returns to action next Saturday when the Lady Pirates travel to East Tennessee State.

Everett Scores 32 As Redskins Win

ROBERSONVILLE — Forward Greg Everett pumped in 32 points to lead Roanoke to a 60-51 victory over Washington Friday evening in a Northeastern Conference basketball game.

In the girls' game, Roanoke downed Washington, 45-37.

Roanoke, ranked sixth in the state in the latest AP poll, got 50 points from Everett and Ricky Highsmith, who scored 18 points. Everett had 12 field goals and hit eight of nine from the foul line.

Roanoke upped its league-leading record to 8-1. Roanoke is 10-2 overall. The Pam Pack falls to 5-10 overall and 3-6 in the league.

The game started slowly and the first period ended with the two squads tied, 9-9. The Redskins outscored Washington, 19-15, in the second period to go up, 28-24, at the half.

Roanoke then put together a decisive third period run. The Redskins finished the period with 15 points to 10 for the Pam Pack to extend their advantage to 43-34.

The two teams each scored 17 points in the final quarter as Roanoke held on for the victory.

Washington was led by William Simmons with 14 points and Curtis Guilford with 11 points.

In the girls' game, Roanoke rallied from a 21-20 halftime deficit to capture its ninth victory in 14 outings. Roanoke is now 8-1 in the conference, tied for first with Tarboro.

Both team scored 10 points in the opening quarter, but Washington went up, 21-20, at the half but the Lady Redskins tied the game at 28-28 after three periods.

Roanoke then outscored the Lady Pam Pack, 18-10, in the final eight minutes to win going away.

Shelia Howell scored 11 points and Gloria Duggins 10 to lead the Lady Redskins. Robin McLean led Washington with 16 points.

Roanoke travels to Edenton Tuesday.

Rams Defeat Firebirds

STANHOPE — Greene Central won its second straight Eastern Carolina Conference basketball game Friday night, downing Southern Nash, 70-63. Southern Nash's girls topped the stumbling Lady Rams, 57-32.

In the boys' contest, Greene Central opened up a 14-9 lead in the first quarter of play, then extended that with a 21-16 margin in the second period. That ran the lead out to 35-25 at halftime.

In the third period, Southern Nash managed to cut two off the lead, 16-14, but still trailed by 49-41. In the final quarter, Southern again outhit the Rams, 22-21, but it wasn't enough.

Theodore Edwards led the Rams with 20 points, while James Thompson had 16 and Daruis Warren had 12. The Firebirds were paced by Terry Battle with 22, while David Spivey had 21.

Greene Central's girls got off to a good start in the first period, moving out to a 15-9 lead. But in the second period, Southern came back with a 16-12 advantage, and trailed 27-25 at the half.

Greene Central then fell apart offensively in the second half, scoring only five ponts in the third period — and none in the fourth. Meanwhile, the Lady Firebirds pushed over 13 in the third period, taking a 38-32 lead. Southern scored 19 in the last period to win handily.

Melissa Morgan led Southern with 19 points while Rhonda Lamm and Cynthia Brown each had 14. Cindy Hicks had 11 to pace the Lady Rams.

Greene Central's boys are now 2-3 in the league and 3-11 overall. Southern drops to 2-3 and 3-10. The Southern girls are 2-3 and 8-5, while Greene's girls are 2-3, 9-5.

The Rams travel to SouthWest Edgecombe on Wednesday.

Have You Registered? — Just a few short weeks remain to register for the Bass Fishing Institute (BFI) to be held at the University of North Carolina - Greensboro, during teh weekend of February 5-6, 1983.

BFI, a product of Indiana State University, is recognized as the nation's top angler education program. It's not just another clinic or seminar but a comprehensive course of instruction utilizing the talents of America's foremost professional fishermen as instructors.

The Institute scheduling provides a perfect opportunity for the sportsman, and other family members, to relieve those mid-winter tensions by going to school for two short days — two days that could mean so much to their angling success for the rest of their lives.

Although dubbed "Bass Fishing Institute," the course of instruction will make better anglers of all who attend no matter what their favorite species. Young or old, novice or experienced, there's somthing to benefit everyone. Women and youth receive a little extra attention as there are special classes and activities for each throughout the two-day program.

Best of all, it's affordable. The adult registration fee covering the entire program is $40. BFI encourages family participation by permitting a regular paying adult to register any youth (aged 10-15) free. In addition, the spouse of a regular paying adult may enroll for half the fee ($20), qualifying for an additional free registration of a youngster. A family of four can enjoy the entire weekend at the low cost of $60.

The availabilitiyu of on-site registration cannot be guaranteed so register as soon as possible by contacting the Office of Continuing Education, University of North Caroina - Greensboro, Greensboro N.C., 27412, or phone (919) 379-5414.

Shad Fishing Conest Opens — January 1 marked the opening of the annual Grifton Shad Festival Hickory Shad Contest. All hickory shad taken on hook and line in the Grifton area are eligible for the competition.

Trophies will be awarded to the fisherman who enters the first shad of the season, and to the adult and to the youth who catch the largest shad. While the contest opens in January, the first shad is not usually caught until February, and the peak of the shad season is in March. The Shad Festival is held in April each year, adn this year the dates are April 13-17.

To be considered for trophies, shad must be weighed and recorded at the Sport Shop in Grifton. Trophies will be awarded just after the Saturday morning Shad Festival parade on April 16.

Plymouth Crushes Williamston, 73-56

WILLIAMSTON — Plymouth High School swept a pair of Northeastern Conference basketball games from hosting Williamston last night. The Plymouth boys took a 73-56 decision, while the Plymouth girls outlasted the Lady Tigers, 43-41.

Plymouth's boys zoomed out to a 23-14 lead in the first quarter of their game, then outscored Williamston, 17-9, in the second quarter. That left the Vikings in firm command at the half, 40-23.

Williamston rallied in the third period, 14-10, but still trailed, 50-37. Plymouth then outhit them, 23-19, in the final quarter to wrap up the victory.

Tom Brown led Plymouth with 22 points, while Myron Bell had 12 and Lonnie Ford added 10. Tony Speller led Williamston with 10 points.

Plymouth is now 7-2 in conference play and 11-3 overall. Williamston is now 2-7 and 3-9.

Plymouth's girls jumped out to a 14-8 lead in the first period, only to see Williamston rally for the lead in the second quarter. Williamston outscored the Lady Pirates, 13-5, and took a 21-19 lead into intermission.

In the third period, Williamston continued to pull away, 12-8, building a 33-27 margin. But in the final quarter, Plymouth rallied, and its 16-8 margin just nipped Williamston at the wire.

Odessa Blount led Plymouth with 16 points, while Bonita Bell had 12. Williamston was led by Lynn Mills with 15, while Timberly Rodgers added 13.

Williamston's girls are now 3-6 in Northeastern play and 3-9 overall. Plymouth climbs to 6-3, 9-3.

Williamston travels to Ahoskie on Tuesday.

Soccer Tourney Planned At ECU

East Carolina will hold an indoor soccer tournament Saturday, January 29, in Minges Coliseum.

Twelve teams will compete in the tournament, which will begin at 8:30 a.m. and continue throughout the day.

ECU will field three teams plus an alumni squad. Other teams scheduled to play are UNC-Wilmington, Atlantic Christian, North Carolina Wesleyan, Duke, Elon, Pfeiffer, Campbell and a Buies Creek team.

The tournament is divided into three divisions, with four teams being placed in each bracket. After completing round-robin play, the top two teams in each division and two wild card teams will compete in a single-elimination event.

For more information, contact ECU soccer coach Robbie Church at 757-6236.

Houston's Stemrick Arrested

HOUSTON (AP) — Incomplete laboratory tests delayed a grand jury hearing on a cocaine charge against Houston Oilers All-Pro cornerback Greg Stemrick.

Assistant District Attorney Jim Mosley said Friday the substance undercover narcotics agents confiscated from Stemrick after his arrest outside a private club Jan. 12 was sent to police laboratory.

Mosley said it might be one or two weeks before his office receives a report.

Stemrick, 31, was arrested outside the Sportsman's Lodge, a private club that was being monitored by narcotics officers.

Lady Knights Romp, 50-14

HOOKERTON — Greenville Christian's girls romped to a 50-14 victory over Mt. Calvary Academy Friday night.

There was no varsity boys' contest.

The Lady Knights got nearly all they needed in the first period as they zoomed out to a 13-2 lead. They followed that period with a 3-1 advantage, building up a 19-3 margin at the half.

In the third period, Greenville Christian made it 35-9, and finished off the romp, 15-5, in the final quarter.

Kathy Vernelson led Greenville with 25 points, while Beverly Hurst added 10. No one scored in double figures for Mt. Calvary.

Jordan Best Ever At UNC?

CHAPEL HILL (UPI) — Sportscaster Al McGuire recently predicted that Michael Jordan could become the best basketball player ever to come out of the University of North Carolina, and that's pretty strong talk.

It puts the 19-year-old sophomore out in front of some fast company with names like Len Rosenbluth, Billy Cunningham, Charlie Scott, Phil Ford, Walter Davis, Bobby Jones, Mike O'Koren, Bob McAdoo and James Worthy.

But the way Jordan sees it, the former Marquette coach overstated his case with the remarks, ones he has made more than once on national television.

"I'm happy he said it. It's a nice compliment," said Jordan in a recent interview. "I hope that by time I graduate I can live up to those predictions."

Jordan, a 6-foot-6, 195-pound scoring machine, may never fulfill the McGuire prophecy, but he's off to a good start at becoming among the best who ever wore the North Carolina uniform.

As a freshman it was Jordan's 17-footer that lifted the Tar Heels to a one-point victory over Georgetown in the NCAA tournament championship game. As a sophomore this season, he blocked a shot against Maryland for a victory, and hit a 25-footer against Tulane with four seconds left to send the third-ranked Tar Heels into overtime in a game they eventually won.

He came into this weekend's game leading the team in scoring with an 18.1 point-per-game average, second in the ACC only to Virginia's 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson, and hitting at a 56.9 percent rate. He averages 5.7 rebounds, while leading the defense with 41 steals, including six in a key victory over Virginia a week ago.

He's the wheels that make the third-ranked Tar Heels go. And that's not bad for a young man who grew up in Wilmington as a North Carolina State fan.

"Up until the 10th grade I was a North Carolina State fan. I hated North Carolina," said Jordan. "In my 11th-grade year North Carolina became interested in me, and they were the first ones who contacted me. I visited both universities and I really enjoyed Carolina's campus, the players and the coaches. I'm not putting State down or anything, I just decided to go there."

At North Carolina he joined Ford, O'Koren and Worthy as the only freshmen to start their first game on a Dean Smith-coached team.

"He could be one of the best defensive players we've ever had," said Smith. "He's smart, and he's quick."

The Jordan story began when his father built a fullcourt in the back yard where Jordan would play his brother, Larry, one on one. That's where he forged the skills that eventually made him a star at Laney High School. Jordan's father, a foreman at a General Electric plant, hasn't missed a game his son has played, including a tournament in Hawaii earlier this year.

"He (his brother) was taller than me at the time and we used to play every day," said Jordan. "He would beat me every day and it really made me mad. I played against him every day, every week just to beat him once. Then I started dominating him a little bit. I worked hard and then I started beating him."

Laney coach Clifton Herring recalled that as a sophomore Jordan didn't really stand out that much.

"You wouldn't really notice a lot about the young man because he didn't have the height," Herring said. "But he was always a scrapper, and he was always on the move. By his junior year he put on some height and at that stage you could probably tell he was going to be a great basketball player.

"Aside from his ability, he loves the game. Many times he would call me on the weekends to open the gym. He lived in the gym and he always wanted it open," he said. "He's always felt there is very little he can't do. He wanted to be the best among the best. He still feels in himself that he has a lot to prove. The national championship, he's not satisfied with that."

If the Tar Heels continue on the present track, another final four appearance may be in the cards. While the Tar Heels started off the season with a pair of losses and vanished from the Top 20, Jordan said he isn't suprised that the team is now considered a definite contender.

"Beginning the season there were a lot of individuals playing," said Jordan. "Now I see more of a team effort. Everyone is helping each other. It's a team concept that is helping us out a lot."

He said this team may even be playing as well as last season's national champions.

"We have a good enough team to repeat, it's just a matter of improving all the time. It really doesn't suprise me what we've done."

At this point, Jordan has plans to play out his four years at North Carolina. He said he won't even consider turning hardship for the pros until after the Olympics.

"I admit I think about it," Jordan said.

On defense is where Jordan has improved the most this year, and he said it came through plain old hard work this summer.

"All summer all I did was play basketball, every day," Jordan said. And in his back yard, the court his father built is still there.

'Skins In Super Bowl...

The next time Hogeboom got the ball, he dropped back to pass on first down. The ball was tipped by Manley and grabbed by tackle Darryl Grant at the Dallas 10. He tucked it under his arm and rumbled into the end zone, looking very much like Riggins had all afternoon, for the touchdown.

The two touchdowns within 17 seconds made it 31-17 and Washington was on its way to the Super Bowl.

As the clock ran down, the Redskins called Riggins' number nine straight times, and he plowed into the Dallas defense, churning up more yards and killing valuable time that the Cowboys needed desperately.

With 12 seconds left on the clock, the frustrated Redskins' fans, who had been hungry for Dallas after Washington had lost to the Cowboys earlier in the season, swarmed on the field. They began tearing down the goal post as players from both teams left the field, but referee Jerry Seeman stood impassively, arms folded, at the Dallas 23-yard line and the players were summoned back from their locker room so that the final seconds of the game could be played.

The entire Dallas team was in the dressing room, but the officials called them out to complete the entire 60 minutes. As the Cowboys straggled back on to the field, they were loudly booed by the capacity crowd of 55,045, the 122nd consecutive sellout at RFK Stadium. At the same time, it started to rain.

Hogeboom finished with 14 completions in 29 attempts for 162 yards, after White had gone 9 for 15 and 113 yards in the first half.

Running behind the offensive line Washington fans call the "Hogs," Riggins was devastating. Over and over, he drove through the right side of the Dallas defense, behind the blocking of Joe Jacoby and Russ Grimm, often carrying tacklers with him for extra yards.

By halftime, Riggins had rushed for 68 yards. He had only 26 yards the whole game the last time Washington played Dallas, when the Cowboys dealt the Redskins their only loss of the regular season, 24-10.

There were other differences, too. In the first game, the Cowboys built a 17-0 lead at halftime. This time, the Cowboys were behind 14-3. And it could have been worse.

Dallas started crisply, moving methodically down the field after taking the opening kickoff. Three times, White faced third down by managed to complete short passes in the flat to keep the Cowboys moving.

The Cowboys has their problems scoring, however. First, Tony Dorsett fumbled, but the ball was recovered by tight end Doug Cosbie. Then, White had Drew Pearson at the goal line, but the pass was broken up by Jeris White. On fourth down, Rafael Septien kicked a 27-yard field goal, extending his record to 15 straight in playoff competition, for a 3-0 Dallas lead.

Now, it was Washington's turn, and Riggins began banging out the yards. There was nothing mysterious about the Redskins' offense. Riggins was the lone set back, and he was moving the ball, running right into the eye of the Dallas defense.

He carried for 12 yards on the first two plays and 17 on his third run. In betwe Theismann softened Dallas secondary with completions of 9 yards to Rick Walker, 15 to Don Warren and 11 to Alvin Garrett.

Riggins' 17-yard r positioned the ball at the owboys' 19, and on the ext play, Theismann hit Charlie Bro at the goal line on a p pattern in front of Dennis Thurman for the touchdown.

After the Redskins receivers — they are called the Fun Bunch — did their high five celebration in the end zone, Mark Moseley added the extra point for a 7-3 Redskins' lead.

On their next possession, the 'Skins gambled on a fourth-and-1 at the Dallas 40. There was no mystery about who would carry, and Riggins got the needed yard on second effort. But the drive stalled and Moseley, who set a record with 23 straight field goals over the last two seasons, missed a 27-yard attempt when his kick struck the left upright.

Dallas, meanwhile, could go nowhere. On three straight possessions, the Cowboys failed to get a first down — once after a second-and-2 situation and once after second-and-1.

Washington wasn't through. After Jeff Hayes was forced to punt, receiver Rod Hill misplayed the ball at the Cowboys' 11, and Monte Coleman recovered for Washington. At first, the Redskins thought they had the touchdown on the play, but the officials ruled that Hill had muffed the ball, and the kicking team could not recover beyond the first point of touching.

It was nothing more than a technicality. Riggins barreled 8 yards on two carries, came out for a breather while Joe Washington dove for a first down at the 1, then returned to plunge into the end zone for a 14-3 lead.

The game was a rematch of the 1972 NFC championship contest, which the Redskins won 26-3. That sent Washington into its lone Super Bowl, a 14-7 loss to the Miami Dolphins.

The victory marked the fourth NFC title for Washington. Since 1933, Washington has played in this game only six times, and Sunday's appearance was only the second since 1945 for the Redskins.

Dallas, on the other hand, was playing in its 10th NFC title game in the past 13 years and was bidding for a record sixth Super Bowl berth. The Cowboys have enjoyed 17 straight winning seasons and had posted six consecutive victories against Washington.

The Redskins had won six straight games since losing to the Cowboys Dec. 5. The 'Skins have now won 19 of their last 23 games since an 0-5 start in Coach Joe Gibbs' first season last year.

It was Washington's first victory over Dallas since Nov. 19, 1978.

Reagan Calls 'Skins

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan on Saturday invited the Washington Redskins, fresh from a National Football League playoff victory over the Dallas Cowboys, to give him a hand in dealing with Congress. He implied the political task was easier.

"I just want to congratulate and all that great gang of yours. What an afternoon this has been!" Reagan told Gibbs.

"Well, listen, I just wanted to say if the fellows feel like, when the season is over, letting down easy, I could use them helping me up there with the Congress."

Livestock, Meat Prices Rise

By KEITH E. LEIGHTY
AP Business Writer

Livestock and meat prices were higher Friday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

The cold storage report released by the Agriculture Department Thursday was supportive for pork prices, said Art Paulsrud, a livestock analyst in Chicago with Cargill Investor Services, Inc. He noted that the amount of pork products in storage, particularly frozen pork bellies, was less than market analysts had expected.

Cash prices on wholesale markets were higher Friday, giving additional support to futures prices, he said.

Cattle prices were firm and gained back part of the losses of Wednesday, when prices broke sharply lower. The selloff in futures Wednesday was preceded by a cattle on feed report that showed fewer marketings of cattle in the last quarter of last year. But after the cash failed to follow futures lower, Paulsrud said, traders bid the price of futures back up.

"The major factor is that cash did not break this week," Paulsrud said.

Anticipation of stormy weather over the weekend, which will impede movement of livestock to market terminals, also was supportive for prices, he added.

Live cattle settled .48 cent to .57 cent higher with the contract for delivery in February at 59.52 cents a pound; feeder cattle were .45 cent to .90 cent higher with March at 68.65 cents a pound; live hogs were .12 cent lower to .58 cent higher with February at 58.90 cents a pound; and frozen pork bellies were .05 cent to 1.57 cents higher with February at 85.62 cents a pound.

Corn and soybean futures prices were higher and wheat was mixed on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Prices were under pressure throughout the session with pressure from outside markets, where gold and financial instrument prices were sharply lower and the U.S. dollar was stronger against foreign currencies, sources said.

"These markets are married to the metals," said one trader about the similar price movements of grains and metals prices.

Volume was light after an initial round of heavy trading at the opening.

Bob Lekberg, a grain analyst in Chicago with Shearson American Express, said there was little to push prices up or down aside from the external markets.

He noted that prices showed strength Thursday after declining sharply on Wednesday and that was a stabilizing influence on Friday.

One factor in trading Friday was anticipation of the Agriculture Department's grain stocks report, which was relased after the close of trading. Lekberg said the report showed grain stocks about as expected and should have little affect on prices.

Wheat settled ¼ cent lower to ½ cent higher with the contract for delivery in March at $3.33¼ a bushel; corn was ½ cent to 2¼ cents higher with March at $2.58 a bushel; oats were ¼ cent to 1 cent higher with the contract for delivery in February at $485 a troy ounce; silver settled 22 cents to 26 cents lower with March at $12.77 a troy ounce. Copper set-tled .05 cent to .30 cent lower with January at 71.95 cents a pound.

Precious metals prices drifted lower on the Commodity Exchange in New York.

Concern that long-term interest rates might increase is prompting much of the selling in the metals markets, said Len Alpert, a metals analyst in Greenwich, Conn., with Merrill Lynch Commodities, Inc.

Alpert said the failure of the Federal Reserve to cut the discount rate, the interest rate charged by the fed for loans to member banks, has prompted much of the selling.

The selloff Friday also was spurred by the decline in interest rate futures, which move inversely to interest rates, and in the stock market, Alpert added.

He said many small speculators have increased their holdings in metals during the recent rally and a sharp break in prices could invite a substantial selloff.

Gold settled $7.20 to $7.50

Reynolds Offers Bonus To Leave

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (UPI) — R.J. Reynolds Industries is asking its Winston-Salem workers to retire or quit their jobs for a year's pay — as much as $25,000 — in an effort to avoid layoffs.

About 10 percent of the company's 17,931 full-time employees are eligible for the offer, which was approved by the board of directors last week.

Workers who will be 55 years old and have at least 10 years with the company by March 1984 or those who will be 65 by then can receive a year's salary for leaving. Workers who retire will get normal retirement benefits.

The company set a Feb. 17 deadline for workers to decide.

"We're going to be monitoring the whole situation closely," said David B. Fishel, a Reynolds spokesman. "At this point, we're trying to do everything we can to avoid layoffs."

Of those eligible for the company's offer, about 1,580 work for R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., the cigarette subsidiary and the nation's largest cigarette producer.

Reynolds Tobacco also plans to cut its production schedule to four days this week. The schedules will be determined on a week-by-week basis.

Wayne Holland, a Reynolds worker, said four people in his office were eligible for the offer and two planned to accept.

"It means a $25,000 bonus (a year's pay) for some people," Holland said. "I'd do it if I were eligible. If you work until you're 65, you won't make up that incentive money."

Reynolds' moves were apparently sparked by an 8-cent increase in the federal excise tax on cigarettes that went into effect Jan. 1, tobacco analysts said. The increase, approved by Congress last year, doubled the tax from 8-cents a pack to 16 cents.

Analysts said the announcement by Reynolds may mean the company expects a greater drop in sales than previously expected.

Reynolds spokesman Nat Walker said wholesalers stocked up on cigarettes to beat the tax increase and "the distribution pipeline has been pretty well clogged."

Business Notes

RETIREMENTS

Union Carbide Corp. announced the retirement of two of its Greenville employees.

Fred T. Edwards retired after 31 years of service in the maintenance department and Gladys B. Hardee retired from the inspection department with 27 years of service.

Both retirees were honored at the plant.

INCREASE IN EARNINGS

NCNB Corp. reported a 24.3 percent increase in per-share earnings before securities transactions for the fourth quarter of 1982. Earnings were 92 cents, up 18 cents from the 74 cents earned in the comparable quarter of 1981.

Income before securities transactions for the quarter was $22.2 million, up 26.7 percent from the $17.5 million earned in the fourth quarter of 1981.

Consolidted income before securities losses for 1982 was $77 million, up 22.5 percent from the $62.8 million earned in 1981. Net income was $76.1 million, compared to $69.6 million in 1981.

RECORD OPERATING EARNINGS

Branch Corp. reported consolidated income before securities transactions for 1982 of $14,738,000, an increase of 12.8 percent over the $13,063,000 for the previous year.

Consolidated net income was $11,428,000 compared with $12,020,000 in 1981.

For the fourth quarter, consolidated income before securities transactions was $4,314,000, compared with $2,696,000 in the final quarter of 1981.

Consolidated net income for the quarter was $2,546,000, compared with $2,695,000 in 1981.

NEW DISTRIBUTOR

Filmco Inc. announced that James Michael Mills of Greenville is the new area distributor for the company in eastern North Carolina, serving an area from Greensboro to the coast.

The company, based in Torrance, Calif., is in the premium incentive industry, dealing with film processing.

SALES INCREASE

Tandy Corp. (Radio Shack) reported that consolidated sales for the second quarter of its 1983 fiscal year were $778,155,000, a 22 percent increase from sales of $638,269,000 the previous year.

Net income for the three months ended Dec. 31 rose 26 percent to $92,982,000 from $73,834,000 in the Christmas quarter of fiscal 1982.

Sales for the six months ended Dec. 31 increased 22 percent to $1,295,266,000 from $1,063,290,000 for the first six months of fiscal 1982.

Net income for the first half was $146,676,000, 26 percent above the $116,706,000 earned last year.

QUARTERLY DIVIDEND

The board of directors of Vermont American Corp. declared a regular quarterly dividend of nine cents per share on the company's Class A and Class B common stock.

The dividend is payable Feb. 25 to shareholders of record Feb. 1.

Vermont American, which has a plant here, manufactures cutting tools, power tools accessories, and hand tools for consumer and industry.

Exporters Sue Over Direct Sales

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Tobacco exporters are suing in an effort to keep the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp. from selling stored tobacco directly to foreign buyers.

The suit by the Leaf Tobacco Exporters Association, filed last week in U.S. District Court, seeks a court order to stop U.S. Agriculture Secretary John R. Block from allowing the sales of loan tobacco.

The suit says Block's authorization of the sales was "arbitrary, capricious and an abuse of his discretion."

U.S. District Judge W. Earl Britt may set a date next week for a hearing in the case, attorneys said.

The exporters' association contends that when Block announced direct sales Nov. 30, he illegally repealed a USDA rule in effect since 1946. The rule prohibits producer cooperatives in the tobacco price-support program from selling directly to foreign buyers.

The Stabilization Corp. buys tobacco that has failed to get at least 1 cent per pound above the support price and later resells it when the market improves.

On Nov. 30, USDA described direct sales as an "additional option" for selling off the Commodity Credit Corp.'s huge surplus. Stabilization handles flue-cured tobacco under loan with the CCC.

Block's action bypasses dealers such as the exporters group, the suit says. The effect would be to hurt such businesses which "have devoted substantial amounts of time, effort and money to developing a sales force and foreign customers and markets for the sale of U.S. tobacco," the suit says.

The association and its companion organization, the Tobacco Association of the United States, buy about 70 percent of the domestic flue-cured crop. The suit says Block's order forces them into competition with producer cooperatives who could buy tobacco for sale abroad.

Hugh C. Kiger, exective vice president of both assocations, said in an interview Friday that this sort of competition is wrong since Stabilization is a "quasi-government agency."

The suit further contends that Block and the CCC violated the Administrative Procedure Act, which requires federal agencies to seek public comment before making or repealing rules.

Block's action was taken without public notice or without the opportunity for public comment, the suit states.

Kiger said he and his assocaties traveled to Washington on short notice to ask U.S. Sen. Jesse Helm, R-N.C., to delay the direct-sales authorization until the exporters could be heard. But the USDA's announcement came before Kiger could meet with Helms.

"We felt like fifth-rate citizens," he said. "It was a slap in the face as far as we were concerned."

Tobacco Taxes Top $6 Billion For Fiscal '82

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — American smokers paid $6.8 billion in federal, state and local taxes in fiscal 1982, according to figures released Friday by a Washington-based trade group.

The Tobacco Institute said cigarette taxes generated more than $6.7 billion, while the remaining tobacco products accounted for $85 million.

"Wrap the equator with dollar bills once every 15 days for a year and you would visualize the U.S. tax receipts on tobacco products for fiscal 1982," an institute release said.

The U.S. Treasury grossed $2.49 billion from the federal excise tax of 8 cents per pack of 20 cigarettes in the year ended June 30, 1982, a spokesman said. The doubling of the tax, effective Jan. 1, is expected to make cigarettes the largest contributor of any product subject to excise collections in 1983, he added.

State-imposed cigarette taxes generated $4.04 billion in fiscal 1982, a 2.2 percent increase over 1981 collections.

Sweden, America Closer Because Of Tina

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Lund, Sweden, and Greenville, N.C., seem to be worlds apart. But, according to a Rotary exchange student living in Greenville, the two cities are similar in many ways.

Eighteen-year-old Gerd Christina Cecilia (Tina) Mansson is living with Mr. and Mrs. John R. Farley of Greenville and attending J.H. Rose High School. She previously lived with Mr. and Mrs. Joe Taft and will live with one other Greenville family before returning to Sweden in June.

Lund is a university town of about 80,000 inhabitants in southern Sweden. The University of Lund is the one of the oldest and largest universities in Sweden. The town is historical because of the Battle of Lund, fought in 1776.

Lund is on the southern coast of Sweden in an agricultural area. The crops grown are wheat, oats, rye, grain, potatoes and sugar beets. Average temperatures in the summer are about 70 degrees Farenheit and there is snow on the ground most of the winter. "When people in Greenville are talking about how cold it is, I am usually warm because I am used to being colder," Tina said.

Tina speaks English fluently; she has studied English for nine years, beginning in the third grade. "Swedish is spoken by nine or 10 million people but you are not expected to know Swedish outside of the country," Tina said. "Most Swedes take English lessons, but you can take French, German, Russian, Spanish, German and several other languages."

Schools in Sweden are different from American public schools. The student in Sweden must attend nine years of school, then he can chose whether or not to go to high school. Before entering high school, the student can decide on the courses he wishes to take for all three years, perhaps concentrating on languages or mathematics.

"It is getting harder to get into universities in Sweden," Tina said. "There are so many people around my age because of the 'baby boom' in the 1960s and the universities cannot accept them all."

Tina would like to go to college and have a career in business or languages.

Her father, Nils, is a bank lawyer and an insurance agent. Her mother, Anita, is a nurse and a teacher at Lund University Hospital. She also has a 12-year-old brother, Lars, and a nine-year-old sister, Anna.

Tina's grandfather was born of Swedish parents in Boston. He moved back to Sweden when he was 12. She has relatives in New York, Massachusetts and Florida, but has not gotten in touch with them yet.

Hanging out on the phone and wearing monogrammed sweaters are two "Americanizations" of Tina since she's been a Rotary exchange student here.

Teens Seen Similar

There are differences between American and Swedish teen-agers, but there are also many similarities, Tina related.

"People in the United States dress up more than people in Sweden. Most people wear jeans in Sweden, although they are more expensive to buy there. People wear LaCoste shirts but not Polo. Turtlenecks aren't popular and people don't wear monogrammed sweaters.

"Marriage is coming back in Sweden, but most people live together before they get married; it is acceptable and everyone does it. It is nothing upsetting to the parents. Most people live together between the ages of 18-25. In Sweden, you never marry a person without knowing him first. Sweden doesn't have the divorce problem that the United States has."

"In Sweden, we listen to the same music that you hear in the United States," Tina said. "Swedish music is getting better (five or six years ago the Swedish group Abba was popular) but everyone listens to American and English music." Some groups that are popular in Sweden are Fleetwood Mac, The Clash, Simon and Garfunkel, Adam and the Ants, The Talking Heads, Rod Stewart and Men at Work."

"There are three radio stations in Sweden and they are public service stations. No one can own a private radio or television station," Tina said. "The Swedish Radio and Television Company is not owned by the state, but it has no competition. It is free and you can say anything you want to say on it, but it is the only broadcasting company.

"If you want to listen to popular music, you buy records or tapes," Tina said. "Records cost about the same as they do here.

Big, Free, Plastic

When asked about what Swedes think about the United States, Tina hesitated. "My view of the country has changed since I got here," she said.

"People in Sweden view the United States as 'the big, free country,'" Tina said. "They think of the United States as a plastic country with computers and big cars. The values in the United States are different than in Sweden, I guess, because the United States doesn't have the long history that Sweden has.

"Most Swedes are interested in coming here," she said. "But with all the trouble in Poland and the news of the submarines off the coast of Sweden, people are afraid of war; they have been afraid for the past two years. They are afraid the United States is pushing for war."

Tina said Sweden requires all 18-year-old men to go into the army for one year. There are also military courses for everyone, such as hospital work, and programs on what to do if a bomb is dropped.

American television and movies are partly responsible for the Swedish view of the United States. "There are only two television channels in Sweden and they don't begin broadcasting until the afternoon," Tina said. "We see mostly American television shows, like Dallas, Kojak and Barretta. Old westerns are very popular.

"When I left, J.R. had just been shot," Tina said. "It takes a while for the shows to be shown in Sweden."

Tina said that she liked watching television in the United States, but it was hard to keep up with all the shows. "In Sweden, everybody watches all the TV shows and since there are only two stations, you can keep up with them all."

American movies with lines of Swedish text at the bottom of the screen are shown in Sweden. "There are not many films made in Sweden because they are so expensive to make, and the people want to see American movies," Tina said. "Old American movies are popular in Sweden." Favorites are James Bond and Goldie Hawn movies.

"E.T. is showing over there now," Tina said. "My friends there who have seen it have really liked it."

Tina pursues her studies at Rose High School in English, but enjoys reading in her native language, Swedish.

"Clothes are about the same price, although jeans are more expensive. Gas is expensive so people drive little cars. Gas costs four crowns per liter (There are seven crowns in a dollar). There are taxes on perfumes, deodorants, tobacco (cigarettes are twice as expensive in Sweden).

"I miss eating Swedish meatballs, but I like eating hamburgers," Tina said. "There are not as many hamburger restaurants in Sweden. There are a few McDonald's and Wimpey's, but most places to get hamburgers are locally owned.

"People don't take (illegal) drugs in Sweden but people drink like in the United States," she related. "There are three classes of beer; one without alcohol, one you can buy at age 18, and one class that is wine and liquor bought at a alcoholic beverage store owned by the state." She said that Danish and German beers are popular in Sweden.

Tina has already graduated from high school in Sweden. She is attending classes at J.H. Rose High and hopes to receive a diploma from Rose as well. She is taking English, library-media science, computer math, speech, Western cultures and government. She enjoys Western cultures and has problems with English grammar and understanding some of the new English words in the computer math course.

"At the beginning, I tried to study in Swedish and translate to English, but that took too long," she said. "In computer math I can't understand a lot because the words are so unfamiliar.

"I was taught British English and I had a little trouble understanding Southerners when I first got here," Tina said.

"The teachers have helped me a lot," Tina said. "Speech class has helped me be a better speaker. I also think that Americans learn more about history than we learn in Sweden."

Interesting Experiences

Tina has had some interesting experiences in the United States. "I went hunting in Hyde County with the Farley boys. I got up at 6 in the morning . I had on lots of sweaters and a down jacket and I was still freezing. I sat in a ditch in a blind and it was raining; water was pouring around my feet. They shot two geese and that was all the excitement. It was fun but I couldn't understand it."

Since arriving in the United States, Tina has traveled to the World's Fair in Knoxville, Biltmore House in Asheville, the beach and the mountains. She recently took a trip with the Farleys to Washington, D.C. She toured the Smithsonian Institutes, visited the Library of Congress, the Lincoln Memorial and the Jefferson Memorial.

"I went up in the Washington Monument two days before the man threatned to bomb it," Tina said. "I also met Sen. John East and went on a VIP tour of the White House and Congress. It was interesting to see the House and Senate voting."

A Rotary Club in Sweden sponsored Tina's trip to the United States and the Greenville Noon Rotary Club is sponsoring her while she is in Greenville. "This is a great experience for me," she said. "I have learned English better and I have learned about the United States. I also have learnedhow to take care of myself away from home.

"I think the United States is one of the few places in the world that is still a place of opportunity. The atmosphere here is completely different from that of Sweden. I know when the time comes to leave, I would'nt like to do anything but stay in the United States. I love it here."

Network For Divorced Being Formed By S.C. Man

By DAVID TOMLIN
Associated Press Writer

SUMTER, S,C. (AP) — A Sumter tire dealer is trying to start a statewide organization for refugees from broken marriages who are as shell-shocked as he was after he got his own divorce two years ago.

"I was looking for this sense of relief. I thought everything was going to be great," recalls James Livingston. "All of a sudden I realized that all I have is this feeling of emptiness and loss with a certain amount of guilt. It's a worse-than-death feeling."

Livingston couldn't discuss his problems with his parents. He felt alienated from his church. He didn't feel "sick" enough to seek counseling. And he was dismayed to find there was no organization to help divorcees adjust to their loss.

Last summer he mentioned the problem to his attorney, Jan Warner, himself once divorced. The pair soon found themselves planning After The Fact Inc.

Bankrolled It Himself

At the moment, After The Fact consists of a $25,000 bankroll from Livingston and a small group of investors, a single paid staff person and about 750 mailed responses to newspaper advertisements Livingston placed around the state last month.

But Livingston's simple need for someone to talk to has grown under divorce attorney Warner's practical influence into something very different from the emotional support group Livingston envisioned.

The pair hope to gather enough backing among the state's divorcees to form a group with the clout to bargain for discounts on everything from health insurance to banking services to fast food.

"Every divorced daddy who spends the weekend with his kids takes them out for a hamburger," Warner says. "You take 4,000 fathers on 4,000 Sundays, that's a lot of damned hamburgers. It's a segment of their business they need to reward."

According to Warner, the same goes for banking, insurance, moving and storage, auto repair, employment agencies, real estate, health spas and any other service a divorced person might need.

He says the group might even become strong enough to get interested in lobbying for changes in the divorce and child custody laws.

"We're looking into all of it," he says. "I think the potential of helping these people in the marketplace is going to be what sells the organization."

After The Fact is starting small, with a newsletter to be distributed free next month to people who answered the ads.

It will contain columns by professionals on such topics as how to get credit, who should take the tax exemptions for the kids, how to get child support payments modified, how to deal with emotional stress and anger, how to handle bankruptcy and so forth.

Anyone who likes the first issue can subscribe for a year and join the organization for $40.

A Sympathetic Network

When the newsletter gets rolling, Livingston says it will include a letters column and a list of phone numbers in each region of the state that divorced people can call any time if they need a sympathetic ear.

"There will be ways members can have access to each other," he says. "We want them to get involved with each other."

Livingston figures that if the need is as great as he thinks it is, membership fees and newsletter advertising should have the organization paying its own way in four or five years, especially if members contribute volunteer labor to it.

Again, Warner is thinking bigger. "If it went nationwide, and you had, say, 200,000 members, it would be a whole different story."

Psychiatrist Bob Schnackenberg, one of the professionals who will write for the newsletter, says he thinks just about anything the organization offers would be healthy for its members.

"Divorce is a time of opportunity as well as crisis," he says. "The personality is in a state of flux, and there are opportunities for growth. It's good to have a lot of options. There really aren't enough things for divorced people to utilize and get involved in."

Potty-Like Pod Calming Retreat?

By STEPHEN FOX
Associated Press Writer

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — For burned-out businessmen or harried housewives, a world of gentle lights, massage, scented air and motivational tapes is only a step away — for a $9,000 price tag.

It's the Environ Personal Retreat, a computerized fiberglass cocoon that resembles a high-tech portable potty. Its developer hopes to see the oval devices in executive suites, airports and shopping malls, helping Americans deal with the stresses of life.

The retreat "is a calm and nurturing environment ... designed to enhance your own learning and retentive potentials while fine-tuning your personal resources," according to the manufacturer, 3-year-old Environ Inc. of El Toro, Calif.

When the door glides shut, the Environ user settles into an orthopedically designed lounge chair with lumbar massage, adjustable footrest and digital pulse monitor. Filtered, ionized air with a pleasant scent is piped in as the subject selects one of 36 self-improvement tapes such as "Relax and Affirm," "You and Food: New Scenarios" and "Self-Motivation for Winners."

The pod also features colored lights keyed to the tape being used. For example, a stress-reduction program is accompanyed by soothing blue and green hues, while "Positive Expectancy to Win" bathes the listener in stimulating shades of orange and red.

"The motivational tapes aren't designed to relax. They're designed to help someone close that sale or meet that adversary in a confrontational situation," Charles McHenry, executive vice president of Environ, said Wednesday.

McHenry said stress reduction is the main selling point for the retreats, which were invented by Environ's president, Frank Italiane.

"We hope that our biggest market is going to be large corporations," McHenry said. "American industry loses billions of dollars every year to burnout, from the rank and file all the way up to the executive suite, people taking 'mental health' days and so on. And that's crippling our ability to compete."

Environ, which attracted a steady stream of visitors during a Pasadena computer show this week, has sold 10 pods so far. Among the buyers are health clinics and beauty salons.

"The salons put it next to the tanning booths and use a series of programs dubbed 'Inner Beauty Conditioning' that deal with self-image, personal affirmation, that kind of thing," McHenry said.

Although Environ thinks its biggest market is industry, McHenry also said the retreats could be set up for individual use at $2 or $3 per 20-minute session, adding they may be the coming thing in electronic amusements.

"We feel that the video game and video arcade phenomenon is about to burn out — I mean you can only defeat so many armies of Space Invaders," McHenry said. "... We'd like to see (the pods) in hotels, shopping malls, airports, all around the country. They are a new-age vending machine."

The pod is distantly related to flotation tanks already on the market, McHenry said, but the approach is different. "The flotation tank works on sensory deprivation and ours works on sensory stimulation, so there's a considerable difference ...," he said.

Matchmaking's Underway in China

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press Writer

PEKING (AP) — In a crowded, icy room in Sun Altar Park, young people in winter wraps are poring over political biographies, studying studio photographs and calculating potential income.

Before the lunar new year in February, the traditional season for marriage, there's an air of desperation and last resort here at the Chaoyang (Sun Altar) Matchmaking Service as the clientele rustle through the photographs and forms seeking perhaps not the perfect mate, but a comfortable compromise.

A silver-haired, childless "auntie" puts her arm around a plump woman of 30, scrutinizes the clutched snapshot of a prospective husband.

"Forget it. He's too skinny. And don't be so fussy about education in a man. Find yourself a nice worker," counsels the widowed, 68-year-old Deng Hui Qiang.

"What counts is that you can talk to each other. Know yourself, my dear, and lower your standards."

The young woman grabs two more cards, one in each fist.

"No, no," auntie advises. "One at a time, be patient."

Then an agitated young worker rushes in and declares that the attractive woman he has been dating — handholding only — for half a year finally has revealed herself to be a shrew.

"He just found out she has a bad temper and he can't bear the idea of living with her," says Ju Zhengyi, the service's director. "Now he wants to find a truly sweet woman."

Here the Chinese Communist Party bows to tradition and plays cupid to thousands of workers and intellectuals — a group marked by taller, older, better educated women and short, young men who are manual laborers. The men want pretty, young women, and the women demand talented professional men with good earning potential.

In the main, they reject arranged marriages and believe in love — meticulously nurtured and rarely at first sight.

In the ancient Chinese way, however, the emancipated younger generation still must be decorously introduced, if not by the village matchmaker who gets a ham as a fee, then by the Communist Party's Youth League.

The family remains the major marriage bureau in China, but since 1980 matchmaking services have started to unite lonely hearts in wedlock.

The Chaoyang Matchmaking Service is the largest of six in Peking and perhaps the biggest in China, according to Ju, a 25-year-old bachelor.

About 9,000 men and women have registered but the success rate is not high. Since September 1980, only 400 of its couples are married, engaged or dating steadily. Only 30 percent even get dates.

Citywide statistics are equally bleak: more than 15,000 have registered but only 600 have married.

The problems are the demands of those seeking an ideal mate, especially in a clientele who are not the most eligible.

Most would be mortified to admit they resorted to a matchmaking service. If they meets mates here, they swear they met through friends. Secrecy pervades the room as young people enter, some furtively, and whisper: "Comrade, have you found someone for me? Please keep it a secret."

The men's priorities are good looks and a height of at least 5 feet, 3 inches. Then come profession, education, culture and age — the younger the better.

Women's priorities are profession, education and enterprise, height over 5 feet, 6 inches and family background of intellectuals, officials or Communist Party cadres. Many women also want the "four things that go round" — bicycle, washing machine, sewing machine and wristwatch.

"The biggest problem is that women have more advantages than men and they want mates like themselves," Ju said. "But most men are manual laborers and many are short. It's a big problem now that women wear high-heeled shoes."

Matchmakers use a lot of persuasion.

"We try to get them to adjust their requirements, but it is hard when she likes opera and he digs ditches," Ju said.

The clientele reflect the political and social changes dating back to the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution.

Many women were liberated activists, who spent years becoming professionals and answering the party's birth control call for late marriage. Now they find the societal and biological clocks ticking by. To be a spinster at 30 is a sad thing in China.

Some are divorced and have children from previous marriages. Some have physical handicaps or live with their parents and relatives. Some work for collectives that give fewer benefits than state jobs. Some were branded rightists during the Cultural Revolution.

To play the dating game, one pays 2 yuan ($1) to register. That fee entitles them to three or four dates. The registrants provide a photograph, work and household registrations and complete a form asking political background, income, hobbies and requirements for an ideal mate.

Then Communist cupids either match cards if the registrants don't want to be bothered or people come in to browse. There are different days for men and women to avoid embarrassment.

If both parties see potential on paper, then a date is arranged. But the backs of many cards are covered with rejection X's.

"People are too choosy," says Ju.

Another service in the Chongwen district reports similar woes: An ordinary looking, 29-year-old factory technician rejected 10 women from their photographs. He demanded a woman be beautiful and much younger than he and have a straight nose and ivory skin.

Parents, too, complicate the ritual. One worker went along with his 23-year-old daughter, a kindergarten nurse, to register, dictating the answers to the form. His requirements: honesty, ability to keep a family budget and not more than three years older than his daughter.

When a potential suitor was found, the father went along to check his file. He also went along on the first date.

One of the easier matches was a 29-year-old middle school teacher, 5 feet, 8 inches tall, a college graduate, earning 56 yuan ($28) a month, interested in sports,

Woods Wed Friday

Deborah Collie and Jim Woods III were united in marriage Friday evening.

The Rev. Gordon Conklin of Oakmont Baptist Church, Greenville, officiated at the candlelight ceremony held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Woods, parents of the bridegroom.

Mrs. Woods is the daughter of Robert K. Rooks and the late Mrs. Elease Massey of Rocky Mount.

Following a wedding trip to Florida, the couple will reside in Rocky Mount.

Cats and dogs do have dreams. Scientific studies show that when these animals first go to sleep they fall into a quiet state — and then start to dream. While dreaming, dogs are more active than cats. They probably are acting out exciting or frightening experiences.

10 Years Late— Abortion Issue Rages

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

Editor's Note — Ten years after the Supreme Court legalized abortion, the political, judicial and moral debate surrounding the issue rages on. In the following article, the AP's chief Supreme Court reporter examines the impact of one of the most controversial decisions in the court's 192-year history.

WASHINGTON (AP) — It began with an unmarried woman, known only as "Jane Roe," who was too poor to leave Texas to end her unwanted pregnancy. So she stayed home and gave birth. Then she challenged the state law that outlawed the abortion she would have preferred.

Jane Roe didn't know it when she went to court, but she was setting off a social earthquake that is still shaking America 10 years later.

It was a decade ago that Justice Harry A. Blackmun, a quiet, meticulous conservative from Minnesota, used Jane Roe's appeal to write the Supreme Court's majority opinion legalizing abortion. He said it was "a no-win case," and he was right.

Since the court's ruling, by a 7-2 vote, was announced Jan. 22, 1973, American women have had 10 million lawful abortions. In recent years, the rate has been one abortion for every three births.

Statistical studies indicate that before 1973, American women underwent 200,000 to 1 million illegal abortions annually.

The rancorous legal and moral debate over the issue continues unabated a decade later — in church pulpits, editorial pages, the halls of Congress, even in the White House Oval Office.

Letters by the tens of thousands, more than the Supreme Court has gotten on any decision before or since, have descended on the justices. Most of them are critical, and most are addressed to Blackmun.

He still gets eight or 10 letters a day and, ignoring the advice of his colleagues, he reads them all. Blackmun says he's been called a "Butcher of Dachau," a "Pontius Pilate," a "King Herod" who murders innocent babes.

Blackmun told a television interviewer in 1974 that the decision he wrote "will be regarded as one of the worst mistakes in the court's history or one of its great decisions, a turning point." He never doubted it would be highly controversial.

"I still think it's a correct decision," he said recently in a rare, for-the-record interview with The Associated Press. "We were deciding a constitutional issue, not a moral one."

He added, somewhat ruefully, "We all pick up tags. I'll carry this one to my grave."

Janet Benshoof, director of the American Civil Liberties Union's Reproductive Freedom Project, said it was the most important decision in Supreme Court history for women. "They no longer are criminals for controlling their own reproduction," she said.

On the other side — the "pro-life" side — is Nellie Gray. She has organized a Jan. 22 march on Washington every year since 1974 to protest the decision. "It's murder, pure and simple," she said. "Abortion means killing babies."

The abortion decision, including a companion case and two appendices, consumes 104 pages of the Supreme Court's official reports. It tells little, however, about the Dallas County woman who took the fictitious name of "Jane Roe" to pursue her legal battle against the Texas anti-abortion law.

The state prohibited any woman from ending her pregnancy unless it threatened her life. Jane Roe did not want a baby. She could have traveled to Mexico, Puerto Rico, New York or a few other states for an abortion, but she couldn't afford to leave home.

Rather than have an illegal abortion, she gave birth and put the baby up for adoption. Lawyers eager to challenge the state law took up her cause, and she sued Texas authorities in 1970. She lost in a federal trial court but won in the Supreme Court.

Blackmun's opinion, in 52 pages with 67 footnotes, focused on a woman's constitutional right to privacy. He said that included the right to end an unwanted pregnancy.

The opinion acknowledged, at the same time, that states have legitimate interests in protecting health and "potential life."

To balance those competing state and individual interests, Blackmun crafted a remarkable formula that reflected his background as an honors student in mathematics at Harvard University and chief counsel for the Mayo Clinic, the renowned medical center at Rochester, Minn.

The formula embodied in his opinion was this:

A woman's decision to have an abortion in the first three months of her pmed — must be left to her and her doctor. The states can require only that medical procedures be carried out by a licensed physician.

The states may interfere, through varying forms of regulation, to protect a woman's health only in the second trimester of pregnancy. They may not take steps to protect the life of the fetus until the final three months.

Justice Byron R. White, in a dissenting opinion for himself and Justice William H. Rehnquist, said: "The court simply fashions and announces a new constitutional right for pregnant mothers and, with scarcely any reason or authority for its action, invests that right with sufficient substance to override most existing state abortion statutes."

White's criticism was supported by some legal scholars who, in an ironic twist, leveled a charge of "judicial activism" against a high court that included four justices nominated by President Richard M. Nixon for their conservative inclinations. One of the four was Blackmun.

Anti-abortion forces thus far have failed in their attempts to undo the 1973 decision. Two measures aimed at achieving that goal — one by amending the Constitution and the other by declaring a fetus a "person" — have foundered in Congress.

National opinion polls indicate that most Americans support abortion rights. In an Associated Press-NBC News poll last year, 77 percent of the people responding said they agreed with the statement that "the decision to have an abortion should be left to the woman and her physician."

If the anti-abortion movement represents a minority, however, it is a vocal and active minority that has kept the issue on the Supreme Court agenda.

A succession of cases has required the justices to decide whether proposed state and federal regulation complies with the 1973 guidelines. Each new case underscores the commitment and zeal of the people on both sides of the debate.

"It's that kind of an issue," Blackmun said in the interview. "Fifty years from now, depending on the fate of the proposed constitutional amendment, abortion probably will not be as great a legal issue. I think it will continue to be a moral issue, however."

In trying to fine-tune their 1973 decision, the justices have since:

— Ruled that states cannot give husbands of pregnant women veto power over the abortion decision, nor can they give absolute veto power to parents of any young, unmarried girl.

— Said states have no legal obligation to pay for "nontherapeutic" abortions.

— Reaffirmed their intention to give physicians broad discretion in determining the "fetal viability," or the time when a fetus can survive outside the mother's womb. The states may seek to protect a fetus that has reached viability, the court said, but that determination is up to physicians and not courts or legislatures.

— Ruled that states can require a pregnant minor to obtain one or both of her parents' consent for an abortion if state law provides an alternate procedure, such as letting the minor seek a judge's consent instead.

— Said the federal government and the states have no legal obligation to pay for even medically necessary abortions sought by women on welfare.

— Ruled that states may require doctors to try to inform parents before performing abortions requested by some girls — those still dependent on their parents and deemed too "immature" to decide such matters for themselves.

By July, the court will be asked again to clarify how far government authorities can go in making abortions more difficult to obtain.The questions posed in abortion-regulation cases from Virginia, Missouri and Akron, Ohio, include:

— Can states or local communities require that all abortions on women more than three months pregnant be performed in a hospital?

— Can "mature" young girls be required to have the consent of one parent or a judge before obtaining abortions?

— Can doctors be required to tell patients seeking abortions that the fetus is a "human life" and to give graphic descriptions of the abortion procedure?

— Can governments require doctors to wait at least 24 hours after a woman signs a consent form before performing the requested abortion?

Faye Wattleton, president of the "pro-choice" Planned Parenthood Federation of America, says foes have tried through "legislative mischief" to undo the 1973 decision. "The cases now before the Supreme Court could define the future shape of the battle," she said.

For its part, the Reagan administration is asking the high court to give "heavy deference" to the efforts of state and local governments to regulate abortions.

That approach, says the ACLU's Ms. Benshoof, "would result in absolute chaos," with "every judge in the country ... ruling on personal views." Ms. Wattleton said it would mean a return to the pre-1973 era, when "a woman's right to an abortion depended on where she lived."

Daniel Donehey of the National Right to Life Committee said such an approach would signal "a welcome retreat from an ethic that devalues human life."

"There are a lot of things going on in the abortion industry today that would curl your hair," Donehey said. "There's a great need for increased regulation."

Blackmun anticipated deep disagreement over the issue when he wrote in the 1973 opinion that views on abortion are influenced by "one's philosophy, experiences, exposures to the raw edges of human existence, religious training and moral standards."

Ten years later, he said: "I think (the observation) had a place in that opinion. I think it still would if written today."

A Review

Rivers' Poetry, Music Of Words

Proud and on My Feet. Poems by J.W. Rivers. Athens, Georgia. The University of Georgia Press. 1982. 86 pages. Paper, $4.95, clothbound, $8.95.

The question arises. To what extent is a poet or other creative person influenced in his work by the places in which he lives, as a child and as an adult.

In reading the poems of J.W. (Jim) Rivers in "Proud and on My Feet," the obvious answer is that in his case it has been considerable — and as it turns out, a blessing.

Now living in Greenville, Rivers has traveled extensively, with years of living spent in Chicago, Mexico and Rock Hill, S.C., before coming to make Greenville his home.

Rivers' poems are in four sections — I — "from The Chicago Notebook: Memories of the South Side;" II — "from The Scattered Poems of Esterhazy;" III — "from Machetes: Poems of the Mexican Revolution;" and IV - "from Culpepper of the Low Country."

In a verbal context, these different sections of poems are like the movements from a symphony. Each section has its own music of word sounds, variations dictated by the poet's experiences of responses to contacts — with people, weather, landscape, moods.

These variations, nonetheless, are anchored to one predominating central element, Rivers' inventive image building with words. In some poems, the word structures are vertical, taut, as in "Otilia Colunga on Her Knees in Line Outside the Basilica of the Virgin of Guadalupe," from the Mexican group.

"The way is slow,
the virgin, far.
On my head
The sun is a crown of maguey thorns."

In other poems, the structure of lines is horizontal, long casual lines that luxuriate in a flow of words to slow-spin an expanded image. An example are these lines from "The Office Suite Sequence, 1965" from the Esterhazy section.

"Agnes thumbs through my statistical analysis charts with a camera in her left breast she photographs data on improved alfalfa tolerance to salt stress on Roi Namur, replicated Sudan grass hay in Texas, thirty-eight-inch baby rainbow trout at the Esterhazy-Tennessee Hatcheries."

Rivers has the gift of explicitly revealing the suffering that man is capable of inflicting on his fellow man. Few poems can match in starkness and brevity a condition of tragedy as that set forth in a 13-line poem, "Jose, Age 8," in the Mexican section.

"Men came on horses,
with rifle butts.
My father hid among trees
in the jungle.
They put my mother on the ground
and hurt her.
She still cries.
They took the cows and hens.
Hungry, I look for caterpillars, find bones and sandals beneath a tree."

Rivers is a keenly observant poet, a man now in middle years able to recall in vivid terms the bittersweet disappointments of youthful years. In "Sunday Morning Sandlot Football," Rivers enumerates the advantages of the "Scotties" who play against the understaffed team he belonged to. The opponents . . . "They never go to church/ must be at least nineteen/ (why aren't they in the Marines?)/ not one of them without a beard/ or hair on his arms/ clear down to his hands ..." In contrast, his team is one in which ... "We've got one substitute/ his parents/ took him to church today.

A flair for the comic is another element that appears in a number of Rivers' poems, particulary the more recent poems rooted in his observations while living in the Carolinas. Any Southerner will recognize the slighly outrageous character, Culpepper, the subject of a number of poems, one of which is entitled "Culpepper Redeemed."

"He emerges from the First Foursquare
Church of the Divine Apogee, saved forever from sin,
corruption, the Devil and Rebel Yell ...

Singing and clapping, clapping and singing.
Culpepper and the Devil
ain't friends no more."

One of the most enjoyable things about Jim Rivers' poetry is, that as in a fine piece of music, there's some mysterious quality that can never be completely pinned down. These are poems to be read time after time, with the realization that an unexpected flash of beauty will refresh our senses, because he has told us of the magic that takes place in the world about us in lines like . . . "birds transform cold church towers/ into music boxes."

A Dedicated Fan Of Zane Grey

By HARIHAR KRISHNAN

KEENE, Texas (UPI) — Dr. Joe L. Wheeler is hooked on Zane Grey.

His purple calling card carries the legend, "A Specialist in Zane Grey," and gets its color from the "Riders of the Purple Sage," the best known of Grey's 109 Western novels.

Wheeler's home in Keene, a small town 40 miles south of Fort Worth, houses the largest collection of Zane Grey books in the world.

Wheeler, 46, son of a Seventh Day Adventist missionary from California, teaches English and directs the cultural affairs department at Southwestern Adventist College.

He is recognized as the foremost authority on the times and works of Zane Grey.

Since Wheeler picked Grey as the topic for his doctrate at Vanderbilt, he has read about every word Grey wrote — more than 12 million words in 109 books, letters and articles from 1903 until his death in 1939.

For his forthcoming biography on Grey, Wheeler has done 11 years of research. He is one of the growing legions of fans around the world who buy Zane Grey volumes at the rate of 2 million every year.

Zane Grey books outsell every book except the Bible and McGuffey's readers. They are in the bookracks of almost every major airport and railway station in the world. Even in impoverished Third World countries, adolescents avidly form Zane Grey exchange libraries and dream one day of traveling to Texas, Wyoming and Kansas.

"No other popular writer mirrored the age in which he lived so powerfully and so eloquently as did Zane Grey," says Wheeler. "Zane Grey is the logical successor to James Fenimore Cooper as the last chronicler of the frontier which began vanishing at the time Grey began to write."

Fans in Australia say Grey loved and visited their country so often because he believed it was where the frontier ended, Wheeler said.

"Zane Grey's American West, I suppose, has elements of escapism we all look for and that may account for his popularity not only here, but throughout the world. We lead lives where things are so predictable. His books take us to a world in which man is not so circumscribed by a complex society, and is able to accomplish heroic things.

"His books basicaly are morality plays and he is deeply indebted to the scriptures and epic legends of the world."

Wheeler says Grey was a loner, a difficult person to get along with and the possessor of an enormous ego.

"But that ego helped him achieve what he did. From his childhood he knew he was going to be the greatest author in the world. Once he quarreled with a man and told him, 'Some day you are going to be glad to admit you knew Zane Grey.' He made millions, but he blew most of it away on his other passion, fishing."

Wheeler says Grey's wife, Dolly, stabilized the couple's life. Grey is reported to have earned about $37 million, but he was so careless of money that, if it had not been for his wife, the couple would have starved during the Depression.

"Some 130 movies have been made of Grey's books," Wheeler said. "There's no other author who has had so many movie adaptations of his writings. During his peak years, Grey was making $575,000 a year. That is about $9 million in today's money."

Wheeler's immediate concern is to save the Zane Grey Museum and the estate in Lackawaxen, Pa., where he wrote his first novel.

At age 72, curator Helen Davis, who operates the museum with her husband Al and has lived in the home since 1948, is ready to retire. But the future of the museum's collection worries her.

Earlier this year, Mrs. Davis offered the home, its contents and the remaining 1.7 acres of the Grey estate for sale. There were no buyers.

"It will be an international tragedy for that place to be lost," Wheeler said. "I'm convinced that if I can reach those around the world who come to visit the museum, I can collect the money needed to save the place."

Wheeler has less than six months. He needs $500,000 immediately and another $4 million to create a permanent endowement fund for the museum. He is confident he can do it.

Feb. 1 Manuscript Competition Deadline

RALEIGH — Feb. 1 is the deadline for submission of manuscripts to the Literary Competition and Writers Workshops of the North Carolina Cultural Arts Coalition Inc. of Raleigh.

The competition, designed to encourage the development of black writers in North Carolina, is being offered in conjunction with the Carolina Wren Press and Fayetteville State University.

The winner will received a $500 cash award and have his work published in a paperback edition of 1,000 copies by the Carolina Wren Press of Chapel Hill in the fall of 1983.

Pertinent rules governing submissions are:

• There is no entry fee involved.

• The competition is open to black writers who have resided in North Carolina for at least the past two years (since Jan. 1, 1981). Students with established residence in North Carolina can also apply.

• A book-length manuscript of poetry, fiction, drama or other creative prose is to be submitted. (Poets are to send at least 60 but no more than 120 pages of poetry. Fiction, drama and other prose writers should submit at least 120 pages but no more than 300 pages of typescript.)

• Writers may submit more than one manuscript if additional entries are of comparable quality.

• Manuscripts must be typed, double-spaced. The original manuscript or a copy may be submitted. The manuscript should not be sent to other publishers until the contest winner is announced (after April 8).

• Manuscripts should not have been previously published in book form. If parts of novels, or invidiual poems have been published elsewhere, the writer should submit permission to reprint these materials.

• The manuscript is to be clearly titled with page number and title on every page. Since entries are to be judged anonymously, the writer's name is not to appear on the manuscript.

• The following three items are to be enclosed with manuscripts: (1) A 3 x 5 card with name (last name first), address, phone number, and title(s) of entry(ies) — (2) A self-addressed, stamped postcard for notification of receipt of manuscrips, and — (3) A self-addressed, stamped envelope with sufficient postage for return of manuscript.

• All entries must be postmarked no later than Feb. 1. Late or incomplete entries will be returned without being considered for the competition.

• Manuscripts are to be submitted to: Literary Contest, NCAAC, P.O. Box 1310, Raleigh, N.C., 27602.

Books About The Bible

The .World .of .the .New Testament; All the People and Places of the Bible; The World of the Old Testament; and Daily Life in Bible Times, edited by James I. Packer, Merrill C. Tenney and William White Jr. (Thomas Nelson Publishers, $5.95 each)

Thomas Nelson Publishers, the world's largest publisher of Bibles headquartered in Nashville, has produced a four-volume set of reference-study books aimed at giving the ordinary person a better understanding of the times in which events in the Old and New Testaments occurred.

The editors say they call upon the latest knowledge of archaeology, history, lauguage and theology to deal with the specific cultures in which the Bible was written.

In the Daily Life in Bible Times, from the Patriarch Abraham onward, the cultures of the people dealing with family, marriage and divorce, birth and infancy, childhood and adolescence, disease and healing, eating habits, clothing and cosmetics, architecture and furniture, music and religious ritual are discussed.

Some of the questions answered by the volumes include did Old Testament women ever pray in public; was polygame sanctioned by God; were diseases such as cancer, polio and smallpox ever known in Bible times and did the law of Moses allow the use of wine.

The four books taken as a whole provide an excellent secular background for people who want to know the historical and cultural background of biblical times. (UPI)

—— "An illustrated Life of Jesus from the National Gallery of Art Collection," By Richard I. Abrams and Warner A. Hutchinson. (Abingdon Press, $40.00)

The Life of Jesus has been told many ways over the centuries.

Abingdon Press, the publishing arm of the United Methodist Church headquartered in Nashville, and authors Richard I. Abrams and Warner A. Hutchinson have provided one using the works at the prestigious National Gallery of Art in Washington.

The writers use the narrative portion retell in popular language the event depicted in the work of art along with an historical description of the piece.

Some of the works, such as Dali's priceless Last Supper, are recognizable by almost everyone.

Other reproducions by Flemish, Renaissance and Baroque masters are less well known.

The objects reporduced include paintings, sculptures, manuscripts, drawings, engravings and etchings, metalwork, tapestry and ceramics.

There are 94 illustrtions, including 61 in color.

Some of the artists represented include Botticelli, El Greco, Durere, Rubens, Rembrandt, Van Eyck and Brueghel.

The National Gallery Collection is one of the world's most interesting in terms of events in the life of Christ, the publishers say.

The Illistrated Life of Jesus is a beautiful addition to any bookshelf. Jim Lewis (UPI)

N. C. Foreign Language Center Provides Specialized Services

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department Of Cultural Resources

What do English-only librarians do when a Japanese patron asks for a title in his own language?

They turn to the new N.C. Foreign Language Center card catalog.

The N.C. Foreign Language Center (FLC) housed at the Cumberland County Library (Fayetteville) has compiled the nation's firt multilingual card catalog on microfiche and distributed it free to all user libraries statewide.

The six-year old FLC offers more than 22,000 foreign language titles in all the major languages and many minor ones, circulating more than 40,000 books annually to patrons in the state and southeast.

Each independent public library system such as regional or municipal, and each county library now has a microfiche copy of the center's entire card catalog. College and technical school libraries statewide have copies also, thus offering the public multiple copies in some counties, explained FLC librarian Patrick Valentine.

The microfiche card catalog system, two years in the making, consists of 100 fiche with 50,000 entries.

Dr. Valentine explained that the microfiche set includes author, title and subject reading cards, with languages arranged in alphabetical order. All cards are filed first by language, then alphabetically within the language, with subject headings in English.

Valentine said North Carolina libraries are enthusiastic about the microfiche catalog. A 1979 survey indicated that such a bibliography would be the single greatest aid to using the FLC collection.

"Now," he said, "the Japanese-speaking patron can look up 'Dressmaking Pattern Books' and find the 15-volume 'Misesu yosai shiriizu' listed, or under 'Landscape Gardening' to find the 'Nichiyo niwashi 12 kagetsu.' He can even find his favorite mystery author or some long-forgotten title," Valentine said.

The librarian went on to explain that FLC patrons most often include those who are fluent in a foreign language — usually limited English speakers. These patrons use the books, magazines, tapes and filmstrips primarily in two ways — to read or listen to materials in their native language and to learn English as a second language.

However, the FLC is extensively used by patrons all over the state and southeast whose first language is English.

Besides immigrants and foreign visitor users, he pointed out that native North Carolinians use the center, too. Among these might be graduate or other students preparing for a semester abroad; a military family researching culture and customs before being transferred overseas; or a library requesting several books for its season migrant workers.

"And," he added, "many North Carolinians are avidly studying a second language."

The new microfiche catalog simplifies all these services for librarians all over North Carolina, Dr. Valentine said. He cited several advantages listed by librarians in using the system.

"Mircofiche can be more easily handled than microfilm by librarians and patrons alike in looking up a particular item. Mircofiche can duplicate exactly the entire catalog card — including author's name and book title in the original script. Microfiche can be easily updated with new book additions in the various langauges without redoing the entire catalog."

When a patron calls for a title, the librarian can note the precise call number and order the correct book for the patron. Valentine explained that the librarian, can, of course, still make subject requests as in the past, giving him the useful information and let the FLC make the selection of titles.

He said he hopes that librarians and patrons throughout the state, with their copies of the North Carolina FLC catalog, can make better use of their multilingual "branch library" — "just like your own public library — only in languages other than English."

From all indications, the Japanese and all other foreign langauge users are indeed making good use of the extensive Foreign Language Collection — with the help of the new card catalog in mirocfiche.

Baker's Photos

Howard Baker's Washington. By Sen. Howard Baker. W.W. Norton & Co. $19.95

As many people know, Tennessee Sen. Howard Baker is a camera bug.

He and his publisher have put together a coffee table volume reproducing some of his photographs taken in and around the nation's capital.

The Senate majority leader, as the collection will show, is interested in practically everything.

For example, his subjects range from a Secret Service agent setting up the presidential seal to President Reagan talking on the telephone and to the Capitol in the snow. The subjects also include other photographers and hearing rooms.

Baker's text tells how he has been a camera buff all his life. "It's a great saving grace. It permits me to relieve my anxieties and to escape from the frustrations or the disappointments or even te exhilaration of the moment."

He adds that the hobby permits him to "re-establish fresh perspectives."

The Republican lawmaker said that most important is that his hobby gives him a record of his life, a sort of diary of his activities.

One of Baker's color shots is of former Presidents Carter, Ford and Nixon chatting after the funeral of former Vice President Hubert Humphrey.

The photographs are both black and wite and color and for the most part excellent. (UPI)

Andy Griffith Tries To Change His Image

DOUBLE IMAGE — Silhouetted against sun and sea are two sea gulls at Wrightsville Beach. The weather was cold at the time this photograph was taken, so the two birds may have chosen their perches on a fence post as a place to find some warmth. (AP Laserphoto)

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Soon after he quit portraying television's easy-going sheriff of Mayberry, Andy Griffith dreamed he beat up deputy Barney Fife.

He slugged the puny deputy again and again, mutilating Barney so badly that Griffith awoke in a sweat and frantically telephoned actor Don Knotts — who played Fife — to make sure he was safe.

"I asked my psychiatrist when I got back to California," Griffith recalled recently. "He told me I was killing my image."

The notoriety of Sheriff Andy Taylor still dogs Griffith, 15 years after "The Andy Griffith Show" left prime time airwaves as America's top-rated program and is currently in syndication in 98 television markets.

The show's popularity, however, didn't help Griffith's career. Typecast as a good ol' boy, he couldn't find work for a year. Then he set out to fight the good-natured image by playing characters Sheriff Taylor would have slapped behind bars.

He portrays a Southern land baron, for example, in the movie "Murder in Coweta County," set to air on CBS at 9 p.m. EST Feb. 15.

"It was based on a real case," Griffith said shortly after filming ended in Georgia. "This fellow owned hundreds of acres. It was called The Kingdom, and it was a feudalistic system. He took care of his own people, but if anybody crossed him, he'd kill 'em.

"He made a mistake," Griffith added. "His emotions ran from here to there, and he got real hot and killed a man — in another county. And the sheriff of that county was a good man, and he went after him and got him."

During his post-Mayberry period Griffith also has portrayed a motorcycle gang leader, a script-stealing cowboy actor and an insatiably political Lyndon Johnson.

But he also occasionally gets the hero's role, as was the case when he played a demonologist in another recently completed television movie purchased by NBC. And in early February, he sets sail to tape a "Love Boat" segment.

"If there's a role that fits a man my age, I'm going out for it," said Griffith, now silver-haired and in his mid-50s.

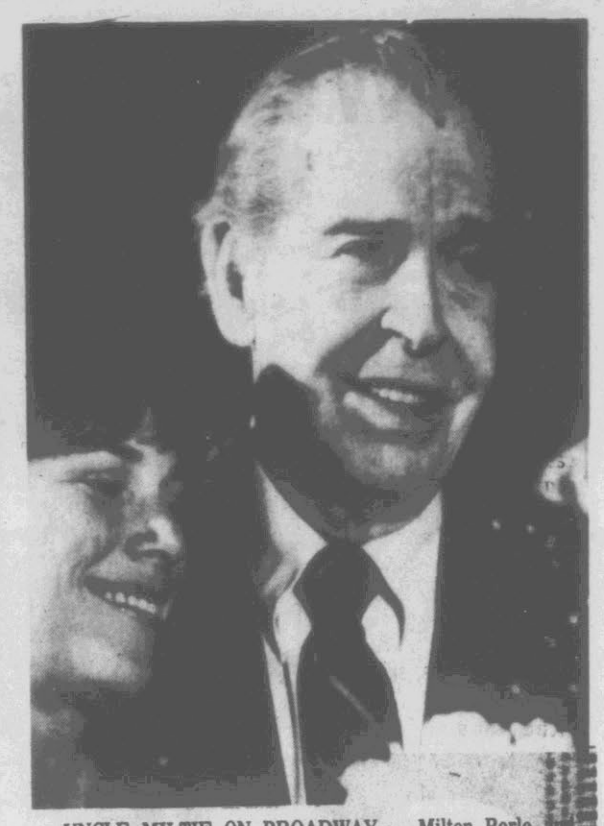
Griffith also serves as board member for a group planning North Carolina's celebration of the 400th annniversary of England's first colonization efforts. He lives part of the year on Roanoke Island in the Outer Banks, where Great Britain tried to plant its "Lost Colony" from 1584 to 1588.

He views the directorship as one more way to pay back North Carolinians for their help to him since his first performing days, when his monologue "What It Was ... Was Football" established the former high school music teacher as a humorist. He is just as anxious to sing the praises of Elia Kazan, who he says taught him how to act while giving him his first national fame in the movie "A Face in the Crowd."

He is less affectionate about television's treatment of the South.

"I have a friend who lives in Rutherfordton who loves that Boss Hogg character, and I won't discuss it with him," he said. "I think 'The Dukes of Hazzard' is trash. It's very popular, I guess. Well, it goes for that 3-year-old kind of mentality. I never cared for it.

"I never considered our show a country show. It was a regional show. When I started with the old Taylor character on the Griffith show, I was hired because of a rural background," Griffith said. "Gradually, I changed that over and was less and less and less rural."



UNCLE MILTIE ON BROADWAY — Milton Berle and actress Laurie Heineman, sprinkled with confetti, rehearse a scene from "Goodnight, Grandpa." The play, which will mark Berle's first Broadway appearance in 15 years, is scheduled to open at the Entermedia Theatre in New York on February 23. Berle will celebrate his own 75th birthday in July, 1983. (AP Laserphoto)

CAPE COD EVENING — This painting by Edward Hopper entitled "Cape Cod Evening," done in 1939, was among nine works acquired by the National Gallery of Art in Washington recently. The work was donated from a charitable trust set up by the late newspaper publisher John Hay Whitney. (AP Laserphoto)

A Review

Face A Continued Fight

"Now That The Buffalo's Gone", By Alvin M. Josephy Jr. (Alfred A. Knopf Inc. $15.95)

Most Americans take freedom of religion for granted. After all, it's guaranteed by the constitution. But to Indians, the native Americans, they are faced with a continuous fight for freedom of religion.

This is only one aspect of the Indians' continuous struggle to survive that Alvin Josephy Jr. covers in his book, which traces the treatment of seven Indian tribes or groups from the arrival of the white man in North America to the 1980s.

It shows how U.S. history taught in most schools fails to cover how the white man has abused Indians in every region, not just the West. He tells how Spanish explorers took the Indians for slaves and killed them when they would not cooperate.

He also details the barbaric way English colonists in New England treated the Indians because they were not Christians and governed themselves differently.

Although Josephy's pro-Indian feelings are often evident in his writing, his graphic reports on the massacres at Indian villages, the often brutal methods used in an attempt to convert Indians to Christianity, and the herding of them onto reservations emphasizes how inhuman humans can be to each other because of greed and the desire to eliminate those who are different.

He notes that even in the 1950s non-Indians were still trying to keep Indiansfrom practicing their ancient religions and customs.

The book also details how treaties continue to be broken and how the Indians' traditional land, water, hunting and fishing rights are still violated. Even in the 1970s, Josephy wrote, Indians were still subjected to oppression and discrimination — "... treated as incompetents, second-class citizens, and faceless members of a conquered and irrelevant minority." (Debra Williams-UPI)

A Museum For Dogs

By CATHY BURKE

NEW YORK (UPI) — Canines of every description — panting, pointing, growling, even pipesmoking — are enshrined in the world's only museum dedicated to educating humans about man's best friend.

But you need not leave Fido behind. Even dogs are welcome at the new Dog Museum of America, where the current exhibit is on the history of dogs in art.

Two galleries are well-stocked with oils, sculptures, books, coins and stamps of dogs that have left their paw prints on art and literature — from Anubis, an Egyptian sculpture dating to 700 B.C., to a 1980 photograph of a friendly black lab by William Wagman.

In between, there are dogs on Irish sixpence; dogs studied in De Canibus Britannicis, Liber Unus, by Johannis Caius, 1570; dogs smoking pipes ("Bob," an 1871 oil painting); dogs at market ("Dogs at Market," an oil by Jean-Baptiste Oudry, 1677), and dogs of the Orient (two pieces from the Edo Period, late 17th Century, Japan).

"There's no point doing it if it isn't serious," says William Secord, the 30-year-old director of the museum.

Secord, one of three staffers working fulltime at the museum, sits in a bare-bones office with a larger-than-life sculpture of Nipper the RCA dog pointing his snout quizzically at him.

Formerly of the American Museum of Folk Art and holder of a masters degree in arts administration from New York University, Secord is indeed serious about the direction the Dog Museum of Art is taking. He says he plans at least four exhibits a year, as well as two traveling shows.

Though Secord admits liking dogs — he owns one — the Canada native came to the Dog Museum of America with a background in art history.

"If you know about art, you know about dogs in art," he said. "But my friends think I'm kidding. I've heard the joke, 'You've gone to the dogs' a million times — at least."

In the world of dog lovers and in museums here, no one is laughing.

"What convinced me to take this on was the seriousness of the project, and its affiliation with the American Kennel Club," he says. "The response to us has been good."

"Every show has an educational aspect," Secord says.

Hundreds of humans and "three or four" dogs have gone through the museum since it opened, the director said. News of its existence has been primarily kept among dog breeders, pure breed owners and art museum buffs.

Secord hopes within the next two years, however, as the museum launches a $2.5 million fund drive, to expand the museum's reputation among mutt lovers as well.

A children's exhibit, which opened Dec. 15, may help.

An upcoming exhibition, "Fidos and Heros in Bronze," will preview in February.

Special TV Report

RALEIGH — An investigative report entitled "88 Seconds in Greensboro" on the so-called "Greensboro Massacre" will be aired at 8 p.m. Monday over PBS's new Frontline series. (UNC Center for Public Television, Channel 25, Greenville).

The one-hour documentary recounts events surrounding the confrontation of Nov. 3, 1979, in which five Communist demonstrators were fatally shot.

The event, labled a massacre, assassination, melee or shootout — depending on the source, has been exposed to extensive reportage, yet little is publicly known about why or how it happened.

The film includes an exclusive interview with police informant Ed Dawson and raises the question of whether different conduct by certain government agencies might have prevented the killings.

Lew Gitlin, producer and co-anchor of Stateline, is co-producer of "88 Seconds in Greensboro."

Would-Be Beach Bum Is A Chess Master

By TERRY FINN

SEATTLE (UPI) — If you picture the world of chess as two recluses hunched over a board in a musty basement, look again at the U.S. champion.

Yasser Seirawan, 22-year-old international grandmaster from Seattle who once considered a career as a beach bum, comports himself like a professional sports figure, traveling to exotic places like any jet-setter.

His friends live on every continent. He plays a good game of tennis and racquetball. He surfs, skis and scuba dives.

And women, well, Seirawan loves them almost as much as a good endgame.

The current U.S. Chess Champion, Syrian-born Seirawan is ranked the 19th best player in the world. Based upon his tournament victories of the past year, he says he should move up to 12th when the 1983 rankings are published.

He admits to traces of the hustler and says there's nothing quite so satisfying as exploiting the weaknesses of opponents who underestimate him.

"All the world's great players saw me and figured they would be able to lunch on a tender morsel," he laughs, looking back on his early grandmaster tournaments. "They got a surprise."

Carried out of Damascus by his parents during a civil in 1963, Seirawan had never picked up a pawn until 10 years ago. His family settled in Seattle, moved to Virginia Beach, Va., then returned to Seattle.

Seirawan says he could have become a beach bum at Virginia Beach had the family stayed.

A handicapped neighbor confined to a wheelchair taught young Seirawan how to play chess. He started hanging out around the "Last Exit," a bookish coffeehouse near the University of Washington that attracted the city's better players. Seirawan was soon beating the best in the house.

He organized a chess club at Seattle's Garfield High School. The team's six frontline boards — the first team — were played by "three black guys, a Chinese guy, a white guy and a Syrian. Of course, we were a novelty," he says.

In his freshman year the team won the Metro championship and finished second in the state championship. By his sophomore year, when Seirawan already was Washington State Champion, the team "chewed everybody up" by winning all three tournaments — city, regionals and state.

After graduating from high school in three years, Seirawan lit out for New York City and hustled bets over speed or "blitz" games on the streets and in the city's chess clubs.

Yasser, or "Yass," as his friends call him, began entering tournaments all over the United States and abroad, racking up a string of victories over international players. He achieved International Grandmaster status in January 1980 when he clobbered Soviet defector Victor Korchnoi on his way to winning a tournament in Wijk ann Zee, Holland.

He captured the U.S. championship in March 1981 by emerging with the most total points at an interzonal tournament in South Bend, Ind.

Because of chess's low profile in America and its high popularity abroad, Seirawan is out of the country more than he's in. He spent 11 months on the road in 1981 and nine months in 1982 and plans to be gone about nine months in 1983.

He unabashedly promotes his game and recently finished up a national tour with stops in seven cities, including Seattle, where he took on 39 engineers and other members of the Boeing Co. chess club at once.

For all of his success at the game, Seirawan only recently has begun to make enough money to live well — about $50,000 this year, he estimates, with the prospects of more in coming years.

A fourth-place finish in an "interzonal" tournament in Toluuca, Mexico, last August edged Seirawan out of a chance to enter the world championship tournament in 1984. His next chance will be in 1987. Still, he astounded observers last year by playing Karpov to a draw in one match and beating him in another.

Recruiting Artists For Residencies

RALEIGH — Artists are now being recruited by the N.C. Arts Council for residencies in communities throughout the state.

The visiting artist program, which the Arts Council co-sponsors with the Department of Community Colleges, places artists at technical and community colleges to serve groups within the county in workshops, lecture-demonstrations, exhibitions, in-school activities, readings, concerts and productions.

Application deadline is March 1.

Of the 58 technical and community colleges in North Carolina, 52 currently participate in the program. Once selected into the program, artists are chosen by the individual schools and may participate as a visiting artist for a period of up to four years.

Application is encouraged in all art forms.

Artists must be willing to relocate to any part of the state. Positions in the program are full-time. Once hired, artists cannot commute but must work and live in the community of the residency.

Salaries for residencies generally range between $11,500 and $16,500 for the nine to 12-month period.

Minimum requirement for participation in the visiting artist program is a master's degree or equivalent training and experience in the applicant's art form. Applications are reviewed by arts professionals in the appropriate discipline, and an audition may be required. Artists who pass the initial screening may then be interviewed and selected by participating institutions.

• The Arts Council is also looking for applicants for its artists-in-schools program, in which artists generally serve semester-long residencies in elementary and secondary schools. There is also a March 1 deadline for these applications. The number of positions is limited.

• For more information and application forms for either program, artists are asked to contact the: Artists-in-Residence Coordinator, N.C. Arts Council, Department of Cultural Resources, Raleigh, N.C., 27611 — telephone 733-7897.

Arts Council staff will be available to help disabled people or others who may require assistance in completing application forms.

Prime Minister Hua Kuo-feng was appointed chairman of China's Communist Party in 1976, succeeding the late Mao Tse-tung.

On Thursday At Gray Gallery

Dole Show Opening This Week

New collages by William Dole, artist and a faculty member at the University of California, Santa Barbara, will go on view Jan. 27 at Gray Art Gallery on the East Carolina University campus.

Called by Alfred Frankenstein, art critic of the San Francisco Chronicle, "the greatest master of collage to appear on the world scene since the death of Kurt Schwitters," Dole's collages are characterized by his keen sensitivity to the more precious aspects of paper and writing. He uses fgraments from ancient documents in distinctive typefaces, such as German, Latin and Greek. These he combines with carefully washed or stained watercolor papers, and marbelized end papers from discarded books.

He is interested in materials that have an instrinsic attractiveness — old fashioned handwriting, Japanese and Chinese papers.

Dole cites as influences on his own aesthetic a range of artists from the history of art including Uccello, Vermeer, Paul Keel, Kurt Schwitters, Georges Braque, Max Ernst and Joseph Cornell. Additionally, he has met and has been influenced by well known writers such as Gertrude Stein and Ford Maddox Ford. Artists he has worked with are Moholy-Nagy, Gyorgy Kepes, Yasuo Kunioshi and George Rickey.

Represented by the Staempfli Gallery in New York City and the Scully Gallery in Los Angeles, Dole's work is in the collections of numerous major art museums in America, among them, the Brooklyn Museum, Fogg Art Museum at Harvard University, the Hirshhorn Museum in Washington, D.C.,. the Fort Worth Museum of Art and the Walker Art Center, Minneapolis.

A video tape, one hour in length, that deals with the artist, his theories, methods and his studio, will be shown to the public in Gray Gallery on three Sundays at 2 p.m. — Jan. 30, Feb. 20, and March 13.

A public reception will take place from 7 to 9 p.m. Jan. 27. Dole's show will be on view through March 18. Gallery hours at Gray are 10 to 5 weekdays and 1 to 4 on Sundays.

Sculpture Show Set

The Art Gallery of Mendenhall Student Center will display "A Collection of African Sculpture" Jan. 30-Feb. 13 as a part of the Black Arts Festival Week. The show is a division of more than 3,500 art and craft items of Africa which comprise the North Carolina Agricultural and Technical State University Heritage Center's collection.

Mattye Reed, director and curator of the Heritage Center, will be the guest speaker at the show's reception at 6:30 p.m. Feb. 2. Mrs. Reed will discuss the show, and the relationship of sculpture and African life, as well as answer questions about the show. Admission to the gallery and reception is free.

The Mendenhall Student Center Art Gallery is located in th second floor lobby and is open Mondays through Thursdays from 8:30 a.m. to 11 p.m.; Fridays from 8:30 a.m. to midnight; Saturdays from noon to midnight, and Sundays from 1 to 11 p.m.

ECU To Host Portfolio Day

ECU News Bureau

East Carolina University will serve as host for the first Regional Portfolio Career Day for art students at the N.C. School of the Arts in Winston-Salem Feb. 6.

Visiting students may meet with faculty representatives of approximately 20 art institutions from noon to 4 p.m. Informal interviews will be held in the NCSA Department of Visual Arts.

Joining ECU School of Art faculty members will be representatives of the nation's leading art schools, among them the Corcoran School of Art, the Kansas City Art Institute, the Parsons School of Design, the Pratt Institute, the Rochester Institute of Technology, the schools of the Chicago Art Institute and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and the Kendall School of Design.

Participating students may discuss preparation for careers in all phases of art and design, including advertising, architecture, bio-medical illustration, fibers and textiles, film, industrial design, theater design and other fields.

ECU School of Art officials said the event is planned not only for high school and community college art students, but for individuals interested in beginning or continuing professional preparation in an art-related field.

Further information about Portfolio Day is available from the ECU School of Art, telephone 757-6665.

WONDERLAND SERIES

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Producer Irwin Allen, best known for such disaster films as "The Poseiden Adventure" and "The Towering Inferno," is deveoping a four-hour miniseries of "Alice in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking Glass."

The miniseries will be filmed for Columbia Television for the 1983-84 season, probably sometime before next Christmas.

Said producer Allen, "Alice's madcap, sophisticated adventures have delighted the world for more than 100 years.

A Review

Songs from Green Pastures; Mountain Songs. Text by Jill and Stuart Broscoe. Thomas Nelson Publishers. $9.95 each

Thomas Nelson Publishers of Nashville, the world's largest publisher of Bibles, has produced two absolutely beautiful volumes of color photographs, depicting scenes illustrating the Book of Psalms.

Alongide each picture is the Psalm in question and a homily-type explanation of the Bible verse.

For example, the New King James Version Psalm 30 refers to Joy Comes in the Morning, shows a photograph of a young person watching a breathtaking sunrise on a mountain lake. (UPI)

WAGNER STARS

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Lindsay Wagner, nee "The Bionic Woman," will star in "I Want to Live," a two-hour television movie in which she will recreate the role for which Susan Hayward won the 1958 Academy Award for best actress.

Miss Wagner, who recently starred in a pair of highly-acclaimed TV films, "Memories Never Die" and "Calley and Son," will be directed by David Lowell Rich beginning later this month in Hollywood.

Down Home, Down Town, Down East.

If you're looking down home for a place to retire, look down east to The Albemarle, in the heart of historic downtown Tarboro.

Enduring values and a sense of grace distinguish the town of Tarboro. From the beautiful 16-acre Town Common, established in 1760, to The Albemarle, the gracious new retirement community now under construction, Tarboro combines the best of traditional values with modern concepts in retirement living.

The Albemarle is the most complete and thoroughly developed retirement community in the whole Down East area. From efficiency to deluxe two-bedroom apartments, The Albemarle accommodates a wide range of budgets and living arrangements. And they're all part of The Albemarle's "life care" retirement program—a comprehensive financial and medical plan that provides for independence and freedom from worry.

Residents pay a Life Occupancy Fee and a Monthly Maintenance Fee. Both fees vary depending on the type of residence selected.

Life Occupancy Fees begin at $26,300 and assure the resident of housing, health care and security. The monthly cost of care begins at $545 and includes maintenance, all utilities, housekeeping and laundry services, emergency call assistance plus the main meal of the day.

The Albemarle is now taking reservations for July 1983 occupancy.

Come visit The Albemarle in Tarboro. Find out how nice retiring down east can be.

Trust Established For Sheppard Library

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Sheppard Memorial Library has joined with the Greenville Foundation to establish the Sheppard Memorial Library Trust. As seed funds for the trust, the Greenville Foundation has made an initial donation of $100 following approval of the trust by library trustees.

Individuals, clubs, groups and businesses will be encouraged to make donations to the trust. Donations are tax exempt.

Librarian Willie Nelms said "at this time there is no formal campaign planned by the library's board of trustees, however, we are encouraging donations to the trust, as we always have needs that cannot be met by our budget."

Funds from the trust can be used in any way deemed appropriate by the board of directors — for special projects or purchases, library operation, maintenance — there are no restrictions on the manner in which trust funds may be used.

"I personally would prefer that the funds be used for some purpose other than general operations and maintenance," Dr. Louis H. Zincone, currently president of the Sheppard Board of Trustees, commented. Zincone indicated this was his personal feeling and did not necessarily represent the opinion of other board members.

One of the factors emphasized both by library and foundation officials is that the establishment of the Library Trust in no way precludes a donation from anyone for any specific purpose.

"It's important that the public realize that the foundation, as well as the library, will welcome donations to the library for any purpose, either as a private donation or to the library through the foundation," said Dr. Herbert W. Hadley, chairman of the foundation.

Hadley and Rick Cox, CPA and voluneeer executive director of the Foundation, were both present at Sheppard Library on Wednesday when foundation and library officials gathered to announced the finalization of the Shkeppard Library Trust.

Nelms said the trust is especially welcomed "at this time of tight budgets and increasing needs. We have been fortunate that so far county and city funds allocated for our budget have not been cut. However, this is the final year we will receive federal money to provide service to day care centers, nursery schools and the rehabilitation center, so that's one field where we are going to need additional funds.

"Another example," Nelms added, "is our bookmobile. It's now 11 years old and sooner or later it will have to be replaced."

Under guidelines approved to govern use of funds in the trust, authority to dispense funds from donations and from interest earned rest solely with the library's board of trustees. The only restriction on the fund is that the level be maintained at a minimum of the initial $100 donated by The Greenville Foundation.

All involved in establishing the fund expressed hope that eventually it will grow to the point where proceeds realized from investment of the principal fund will be sufficient to provide a significant supplement to the library's regular budget.

Nominations Invited

Know someone you think deserves the highest award by the state of North Carolina? Nominate him or her by April 1 for a North Carolina Award.

The N.C. Awards are the highest awards presented by the state — not by a private group or individual — to its own citizens. They recognize outstanding accomplishments in four categories: science, fine arts, literature and public service.

"The N. C. Awards are and deserve to be the most prestigious honors our state can bestow," according to Gov. Jim Hunt.

"They are special because they recognize people who have devoted their lives to excellence in their chosen fields, and they are special because the idea came from citizens, nominations come from citizens and selections come from citizens."

Anyone may submit a nomination for N.C. Awards. Nominations, including biographies, resumes and letters of support, should be sent to Dr. Lawrence Wheeler, deputy secretary of the Department of Cultural Resources, Raleigh, 27611, by April 1.

The N.C. Awards Committee, made up or citizens representing each of the four categories, reviews nominations during the summer and selects recipients for awards to be presented at a banquet in Raleigh in the fall.

The committee's chairman is former governor and N.C. Award recipient Terry Sanford of Durham, now president of Duke University. Other members are past N.C. Award recipients Doris Betts of Chapel Hill, writer and senior faculty member at the University of North Carolina; Sam Ragan of Southern Pines, writer and former secretary of the Department of Cultural Resources; and Elizabeth D. Koontz, former assistant superintendent for teacher education in the Department of Public Instruction. Also on the committee is H.F. Robinson of Cullowhee, chancellor of Western Carolina University.

The General Assembly established the N.C. Awards by statute in 1961. The first N.C. Awards went to John N. Couch, Inglis Fletcher, John Motley Morehead, Clarence Poe and Francis Speight.

GAPA To Meet Tuesday

The Greenville Area Preservation Association will host Elizabeth Copeland at the January meeting of the association at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday. The meeting will be held in the downstairs meeting room of Planters Bank.

Miss Copeland will talk about the recently published history of Pitt County, the "Chronicles of Pitt County," which was compiled under the editorship of Miss Copeland. She will discuss stories about Pitt County and how the book came to be written.

The Pitt County history was undertaken under the auspices of the Pitt County Historical Society, which is now over half a century old.

Non-members are welcome to attend. In addition to Miss Copeland's talk on the book, future plans for the association will be discussed.

STAR ROUNDUP

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — The "Happy Trails" episode of TV's "The Fall Guy" will resemble a reunion of oldtime horse opera stars when it is televised later this season.

Among the guest stars in the weekly series will be Roy Rogers and the Sons of the Pioneers, who first worked together in 1934. Also included in the segment will be James Drury and Doug McClure of "The Virginian" series.

Joining the congregation of oldtimers will be Jack Kelly of the "Maverick" series and Pat Buttram, Gene Autry's long-time sidekick.

By MARGARET CLARK

Suspense, intrigue and espionage fill the pages of the following well-plotted novels.

In "Friends in High Places," John Weitz's protagonist is German-born Charlie (originally Karl) Dorn, a popular figure in the American social circuit of the 1950s.

When Dorn's application for U.S. citizenship is turned down on the grounds that he had been a Nazi, the author takes the reader back to Germany of the '30s and '40s to show with fascinating detail how good people, including Dorn, allowed and contributed to Hitler's rise. Business pressure forced Dorn to join, believing anti-Semitism was a passing phase of Nazism, while his wife became a central figure in an anti-Hitler conspiracy.

"Friends in High Places" is a novel that is hard to put down because the author recreates those dramatic times with such convincing realism. He also personalizes their principal (and unprincipaled) characters — including Hitler. In addition, he includes a bibliography at novels for those incited to explore further.

James Carroll's "Family Trade" begins when Jake McKay, a college freshman, accidentally sees his CIA father meet two women in a Washington art gallery in 1960. Then, when shortly afterward, his uncle defects to Russia as a counterspy, Jake is both dismayed and perturbed by the resulting scandal. Since intelligence work is more or less a family specialty, Jake also senses that there has been some further breach of loyalty, perhaps within his immediate family. These suspicions, however, will be confirmed, expanded and cruelly reversed nearly 20 years later when Jake himself becomes involved in the family trade.

Another suspenseful tale of espionage is "The Shattered Eye" by Bill Granger.

The author shrewdly scrambles the espionage networks of the United States, Britain, France and Russia. Treacherous agents, indecisive political bureaucracies and infallible computers all contribute to an extensive plan to outwit the United States. This grand U.S.S.R. conspiracy involves the assassination of France's Francois Mitterrand (faked to look like a CIA operation), as well as the tricking of the West into premature World War III moves.

Granger deftly manipulates places, action and agents, while persistently maintaining suspense.

ECU News Bureau

A duo piano recital will be performed Wednesday by Drs. Everett Pittman and Charles Stevens of the East Carolina University School of Music faculty.

The recital is scheduled for 8:15 p.m. in Hendrix Theater and is free.

Works to be performed include Schubert's "Andantino varie," Opus 84, No. 1; Mozart's "Sonata in D major, K. 448;" Luboschutz transcription of the Prokofieff "Opus 99 March;" Ravel transcriptions of two Dubussy nocturnes; the Miller arrangement of Albeniz's "Triana" and "Ritmo" from Infante's "Danses Andalouses."

Both pianists have performed extensively on the South. Dr. Pittman, a former dean of the ECU music school, studied and taught at Florida State University, the University of Texas and Birmingham-Southern College.

Dr. Stevens, associate dean of the music school, is a specialist in the field of Moravian music, particularly of the works of composer Christian Latrobe. He has been a public school music teacher and choral director in the Washington public schools.

Stevens is an alumnus of East Carolina University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Mrs. King To Speak Jan. 31

CORETTA SCOTT KING ... widow of the late Martin Luther King Jr., will be a guest speaker at 8 p.m. Jan. 31 in Hendrix Theater, Mendenhall Student Union Center, ECU campus. Tickets are priced at $5. Her appearance is in conjunction with ECU's Black Festial.

Coretta Scott King, wife of the late civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., will speak in East Carolina University's Hendrix Theater, in the Mendenhall Student Center, at 8 p.m. Jan. 31.

Her appearance will be under the sponsorship of the Department of University Unions Lecture Series Committee and will be in conjunction with the Black Arts Festival. The subject of her lecture will be the "Living Legacy of Martin Luther King, Jr."

Since the death of her husband, Mrs. King has focused her attention on the King Center for Nonviolent Social Change, an organization she founded in 1969 and serves as chief executive officer. The center is a memorial to her husband and promotes the concept of nonviolence through seminars, workshops and institutes for teachers, community leaders and governmental officials.

Mrs. King is the author of "My Life With Martin Luther King Jr.," which has been translated into 16 languages since its publication.

Tickets for the lecture are on sale at the ECU Central Ticket Office and are priced at $5. Tickets may be purchased in groups of 20 or more for $3.50 each. All tickets at the door will be $5. For additional information contact the ticket office at 757-6611, ext. 266, weekdays between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Named Director Of 'Lost Colony'

MANTEO — Mark R. Sumner, director of the Institute of Outdoor Drama at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, has been named producer of the Joy Layton production of Paul Green's symphonic outdoor drama, "The Lost Colony."

Sumner succeeds Emma Neal Morrison, long-time producer of the drama.

The 43rd production season of "The Lost Colony" will open June 10 and run through Aug. 27.

An actor, director and playwright, Sumner is the recipient of numerous awrds, including the Morrison Award and the Amoco Oil Co. Gold Medal award of Excellence for work with the American Coliege Theater Festival.

WOOW Classics

Music performed on sundry instruments and music for dance, to celebrate the Thursday opening performance of the ECU Dance Theater performances on campus, is being offered by hostess Karen Hause on her WOOW Classics program today.

The weekly broadcast of classics is broadcast each Sunday from 4 to 7 p.m. over WOOW Radio, 1340 on the radio dial, and also over Channel 9, cable television.

Music selected by Mrs. Hause to be heard on today's program is:

- Offenbach's overture to "Orpheus and the Underworld," the New York Philharmonic conducted by Leonard Bernstein.
- "Concerto in C for Mandolins, Flutes, Oboes and Strings" by Vivaldi, E Solisti Veneti, Claudio Scimone.
- Handel's "Concerto in B for Harp and Orchestra," the Orchestre de Chambre, conducted by Paul Kuentz, with Nicanor Zabaleta, harpist.
- "Trio in C for Two Oboes and English Horn," by Beethoven, with Heinz Holligen and Hans Elhorst, oboes, and Maurice Bourque, English horn.

Sibelius's "Violin Concerto in D minor," violinist Tossy Spivakavsky with the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by Tauno Hannikainen.

- The introduction and allegro for Ravel's work for harp and string orchestra, Nicanor Zabaleta, harp, with the Orchestre de Chambre, Kuentz, conducting.
- Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique Symphony," the Berlin Philharmonic conducted by Herbert von Karajen.

Music to be performed in honor of the upcoming ECU Dance Theater program to be presented by Mrs. Hause is:

- Kanacek's "Brass Fanfare for Sinfonietta," Seiji Ozawa conducting the Chicago Symphony.
- Darius Milhaud's "Creation of the World," with the composer conducting the Orchestre de Theatre de Champs Elysees.
- Aaron Copeland's "Music for Theater," (Parts 1 and 2), Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic.

Mrs. Hause also plans to conduct a brief quiz program on the air with the first correct answer to receive a courtesy ticket to a performance of the ECU Dance Theater.

Soprano Concert Next Sunday

WILLIE JORDAN WILLIAMS ... a spinto soprano and native of New Bern, will appear in concert at 3 p.m. Jan. 30 in Hendrix Theater, Mendenhall Student Union Center, on the ECU campus. Tickets to her concert are priced at $1.

Spinto soprano Willie Jordan-Williams will appear in concert in Hendrix Theater at East Carolina University on Jan. 30 at 3 p.m.

The concert is under the sponsorship of the ECU Student Union Minority Arts Committee and is the first event of the Annual Black Arts Festival.

Ms. Jordan-Williams is a native of New Bern. She did her undergraduate studies at Virginia State College and graduate studies at Eastern Michigan University.

The artist has performed as guest soloist, recitalist and opera soloist at colleges and universities throughout the country. She was a participant in the Opera Studio of the 1980 Summer Vocal Institute, American Institute of Musical Studies, Graz, Austria. Her appearance there included major performances in Deutschlandsberg, and the AIMS Artist Recital Series of Graz. Ms. Jordan-Williams was "heartily acclaimed" by Austrian music critics for her renditions of "Tosca" from Puccini's "Tosca", and "Negro Spirituals."

Recently the artist was instrumental in organizing "People For The Arts," a statewide organization devoted to promoting the awareness of the cultural arts at the grassroots level. The organization has members in some 40 communities throughout the state. An annual concert is held by the organization in Memorial Auditorium.

N.C. Dance Grants Announced

THE FIRST IN THE RING — "Das Rheingold," the first opera in Richard Wagner's The Ring of the Nibelung cycle, will be broadcast from 9 to 11:30 p.m. Monday over PBS (UNC-Center for Public Television), Channel 25, Greenville. The opera deals with the story of the theft of the Rhine gold by the dwarf Alberich, and a ring made from the gold that gives its wearer great power. Singers in the opera include Donald McIntyre, Herman Becht, Hanna Schwartz, Carmen Reppel, Heinz Zednick, Matti Salminen and Fritz Hubner. The production is made possible by a grant from EXXON, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and by public television stations.

RALEIGH — A touring program supported with funds from the National Endowment for the Arts and the N.C. Arts Council is assisting six North Carolina organizations in presenting dance companies.

The Arts Council, a division of the N.C. Department of Cultural Resources, approves and administers grants under the program. Grants include funds from the Dance Touring Program of the National Endowment for the Arts supplemented with state funds from the Arts Council.

Grants include:

- $68,062 to the American Dance Festival in Durham for 11 separate residencies during the festival's summer seasons.
- $11,850 to the Triangle Dance Guild to assist with a residency by the Alvin Ailey Repertory Ensemble in February ($5,115); and $6,735 for a residency by the Ohio Ballet Company in April.
- $6,800 to the High Point Theater to assist with a residency by the Cincinnati Ballet in March.
- $3,600 to the Community Arts Council of Western North Carolina to help support a residency by the N.C. Dance Theater in May.
- $2,000 to UNC-Asheville to assist with a residency by the Houle/Wibaux Mime Troupe in February.
- $1,800 to Spirit Square Arts Center, Charlotte, to help with a residency by Crowsnest in Febraury.

The N.C. Arts Council is revising its dance programs for the coming grants application period. For details, interested groups or orgnizations are to contact: The Music/Dance Coordinator, N.C. Arts Council, 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh, N.C., 27611, telephone 733-2111.

Hospitality House

WASHINGTON — Kay Currie's Hospitality House show today focuses on dying and death. The weekly show is airing from noon to 12:30 today over WITN-TV, Channel 7, Washington.

Her first guest, Steve Bryan, funeral director of Bryan-Lee Funeral Home in Garner and also a lecturer on dying, talks about the changing attitudes toward death and how to handle the topic of death with children.

Another guest, John Book, evangelist from Maitland, Fla., and Host of Christian Viewpoint (which airs over WITN-TV form 8:30 to 9 a.m. Sundays), comments on what the Bible says about death and dying.

Three guests, Helen Burleson, Beverly Burnette and Carol Pullen, talk about eastern North Carolina's Hospice programs. Ms. Burleson is director of the Roanoke-Chowan Hospice; Ms. Burnette is director of Hospice East Carolina, and Ms. Pullen is director of Craven County Home Health Hospice. The three comment on the services offered by hospices.

'Private Lives' Next For Dinner Theater

"Private Lives," the famous Noel Coward comedy about second honeymoon misadventures because of the presence of the ghost of the first wife, is next in the 1983 season for the East Carolina University Unions Dinner Theater.

The play will be presented by the Alpha-Omega Players for a four-day run beginning Feb. 15 and continuing through Feb. 18. All performances will be given in Room 244, the Mendenhall Student Center Auditorium.

Alpha-Omega Players, a professional touring company, was seen earlier in Greenville in productions of "Same Time, Next Year" and "Chapter Two."

The Feb. 15 date is a dessert performance at 7:15 p.m., and is open only to ECU students and staff.

The performances on Feb. 16, 17 and 18 are open to the general public. On these nights, dinner begins at 6:30 p.m. with the play to follow dinner. Tickets are priced at $12.50 per person, and must be paid for no later than 72 hours after reservations have been received by the Central Ticket Office. The ticket office is open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Mini-Concert On Wednesday

Clyde and Patricia Hiss, members of Greenville's Vocal Chamber Ensemble, will perform at the Greenville Museum of Art lunchtime concert at noon on Wednesday.

The concert is free. The museum is located at 802 S. Evans St.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiss will be accompanied by Alisa Wetherington and Barbara Caspar. Their program will feature music composed by Purell, Bach, Mozart and Rossini.

Both are widely known for numerous appearances in recitals and opera productions, both on the East Carolina University campus and in the local area.

The museum suggests that patrons bring lunches. Refreshments will be provided by the museum.

Anthony Quinn To Perform On Broadway

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — He's played many men. A Mexican revolutionary. The French painter Gauguin. A shifty Arab chieftain. Barabbas. A punched-out pug. Henry II. The pope. He also once had a chance to play God on Broadway, but said no dice.

Anthony Quinn chuckles. "God wasn't a very good part," he says.

But he's due on Broadway late next season in what for him was a very good film part in 1964 — the exuberant, hedonistic, knockabout peasant he played to acclaim in the movie, "Zorba, The Greek."

His stage "Zorba" is a new version of the 1968 Broadway musical that was adapted from the novel by Nikos Kazantzakis, starred Herschel Bernardi and had a score — still in the show with some new tunes — by John Kander and Fred Ebb.

Because of his lusty, memorable film Zorba, Quinn "owned" the role, as they say. But he turned down the chance to do it on Broadway in 1968, he says, for one reason: "I hated the opening line."

Which was?

"Which was, 'Life is what you do waiting to die.' I said that's completely the antithesis of what Zorba says. Zorba says 'You live every moment!'"

Which is what Quinn has done all his life since his birth in Chihuahua, Mexico, 66 years ago during Pancho Villa's revolt.

Raised in poverty in the barrios of East Los Angeles, the son of a Mexican woman and an Irish-American father, he's had a robust life.

As a kid, he shined shoes, sold papers, toted a water bucket for workers building the Los Angeles water system, preached with Aimee Semple McPherson. Later, he tried boxing, sparred with Primo Carnera.

He became both an actor and a young intimate of the greats, the colorfuls, or both in Hollywood. Guys like John Barrymore, the painter John Decker, and newspaperman-screenwriter Gene Fowler.

Quinn's made 119 films, from two Bing Crosby-Bob Hope "Road" comedies to "Zorba." And won two Oscars — for his Gauguin in "Lust for Life," the other for his revolutionary in "Viva Zapata!"

He's been on Broadway before, first in 1947 in a flop comedy, "The Gentleman from Athens," then twice in the early Sixties, in another comedy, "Tschin-Tschin," then "Becket" opposite Laurence Olivier.

Wealthy, twice married, father of seven, he owns a manse in Italy where he usually lives and pursues his second career and first love — painting and sculpting. He'd be happy just doing that.

Why, then, "Zorba"? Quinn shrugs.

"Like Muhammad Ali, I've got to realize that I'm going to hang up the gloves one day," he says. "I'm not a young man anymore. ... Sure, I still have a lot of fight, run five miles a day, swim a mile in the evening.

"I don't know when it" — retirement from acting — "will happen, if at all. But before it does, I want to do one good play."

He and the show, its offending opening line changed and the upbeat emphasized, start an eight-month tour Jan. 25 in Philadelphia and head for Broadway in late fall, if all goes well.

'Amadeus' At Stewart Monday

RALEIGH — "Amadeus," Peter Shaffer's play focusing on the early death of composer Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, will be presented in one performance only at 8 p.m. Monday in Stewart Theater.

The play, which examines the intense rivalry between Mozart and Antonio Salieri and reveals Salieri as the force responsible for Mozart's early death, won five Tony Awards including best play.

For ticket reservations call 737-3104 between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m.

In a typical snowy year, an estimated 100,000 avalanches occur in the United States' mountain West. The worst U.S. avalanche buried two snowbound trains near Stevens Pass in Washington in 1910, killing 96 people. The nation's worst risk area for future avalanche disasters is Alaska's capital city, Juneau, according to National Geographic.

Young Pianists Concert Today

Thirty-two young pianists, students of teachers in the Greenville Piano Teachers Association, will be in concert at 3 p.m. today. The recital will be presented in Room 105, Fletcher Music Center, on the East Carolina University campus.

The recital is free and open to the public.

Students to perform are: Sarah Barnes, Gin-Gin Hsu, Le-Ann Williams, Nicole Williams, Sara Guertin, Maggie Fleming, Niki Peaden, Tracy Stancill, Amanda Vincent, Missy Ratcliffe, Leslie Gray, Jenny Fleming, Dawn Crosier, Amy Blizzard and Natalie Weaver.

Also, Carla Barnes, Stacey Mewborn, Nicole Lanier, Jennie Flake, Kimberly Colson, Nancy Riley, Lorie Lewis, Geoffrey Clayton, Darby Thomas, Miriam Fulford, Shelley Harris, Jenny Jones, Stephanie Creech, Christy Garrison, Nicci Williams, Mary Paul Castellow and Christopher Marks.

Heston hosts

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Charlton Heston will make his debut as a television host on "When Will the Dying Stop?" an hour-long documentary dealing with the international agency World Relief.

Greece Subject Of Next Travel Film

The ancient Mediterranean country of Greece will be the next stop in the East Carolina University Unions Travel-Adventure Film Series.

"Greece," by Kenneth Richter, a well-known maker of travel films, will be shown at 8 p.m. Thursday in Hendrix Theater, Mendenhall Student Center, on the ECU campus.

Tickets are priced at $3.50, and for groups of 20 or more, at $3 per person. Tickets can be purchased in advance at the Central Ticket Office between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. weekdays.

Greece, the cradle of ancient Western civilization, has been called by some the land of the gods. Kenneth Richter has succeeded in capturing the stunning beauty of the islands and mainland, and juxtaposing the country's scenic grandeur with both the ancient and modern civilizations of the country.

Richter shows vistas from points high above the blue Mediterranean. He takes the viewer to intimate visits with an urban middle class executive, a small town politician and businessman, and an elderly couple at their farm.

DEMONSTRATES A POSITION ... Choreographer Petrus van Muyden shows students working out in the ECU dance studio a position he wants from his girl dancers in "The Nutcracker," one of two dances he has choreographed for the three evenings of ECU Dance Theater opening Thursday.

Gives Students Some Pointers

Dancers, Choreographers, A Composer, A Sculptor, A Lighting Technician, And A Costume Designer Join Talents To Commemorate ECU's 75th Anniversary Year

—A Celebration In Dance—

Text And Photographs By Jerry Raynor

Three dozen young dancers, four choreographers, a composer, a lighting technician, a costume designer and an artist are all busy this week rehearsing, getting everything in stage readiness for a big celebration in dance to commemorate East Carolina University's 75th anniversary.

The dance concert will be presented at 8:15 p.m. on three evenings, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, in McGinnis Theater on campus. Tickets for the dance concert are priced at $4, with all seats reserved. They can be purchased in advance at the McGinnis Theater Box Office from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on week days. For telephone reservations, call 757-6390.

For this gala 75th anniversary program, the East Carolina Dance Theater is presenting a concert of traditional, modern, folk-inspired and classical dances in a diversified program that encompasses stage art designed from local bamboo and original music by an ECU composer.

Most of the dancers are students in dance at ECU. A few dancers from the community have been chosen to supplement the student dancers.

Dr. Otto Henry, composer on the faculty of the ECU School of Music, has composed music for a dance being choreographed by Patti Weeks.

"The music I've written for the dance is electronic music or electronic combined with tape recorded sounds," Dr. Henry commented. "This is the first time I've composed music for dance at ECU," he added. Henry has previously composed stage music for Edgar Loessin to use in several ECU theater productions, among them "Macbeth" and "A Midsummer's Night Dream."

Sculptor Tom Grubb, a candidate for the M.F.A. degree in art at ECU, is well-known locally and in North Carolina for his sculpture of bamboo and colored rope, mostly large pieces displayed in outdoor settings.

"For the dance program, I've worked with the choreographers to create sculpture on stage as well as a piece that goes out over the audience," Grubb explained.

Lighting director David Downing is making use of the theater's computerized lighting control system to create special mood effects, and costume designer Patrice Alexander has designed costumes ranging from simple to elaborate creations.

Four choreographers, all dance faculty members in the drama department at ECU, are each contributing dances to the program.

• Paula Johnson's two dances are "A Streetcar Named Desire" and "A Tongue-Cut Sparrow."

"For 'Streetcar' I've used music from Darius Milhaud's 'The Creation of the World,'" Ms. Johnson said. "It's basically a mood piece, not intended to tell the whole story of 'Streetcar.' I'm featuring four dancers, two men and two women. I think the audience will get an idea of the relationships I'm trying to establish in this piece."

For "A Tongue-Cut Sparrow," Ms. Johnson notes "it's a big-scale dance, with a cast of 22 dancers. In this dance, I've incorporated a number of traditional Asian folk songs and folk music to create a work with elements of folklore."

• Choreographer Petrus van Muyden is presenting two works in the classical vein, Act II of Tchaikovsky's famed ballet, "The Nut Cracker," and the pas de deux from Ricardo Drigo's "Le Corsaire."

"This is my version of the second act of 'The Nutcracker,'" van Muyden explained. "I think the audience will enjoy seeing this scene as well as the pas de deux from 'Le Corsaire.' Both are favorites with many audiences."

• Choreographer Patricia Pertalion, a long-time dance instructor at ECU, is offering two creations — "Dimensions of Time and Space" and "Pastiche."

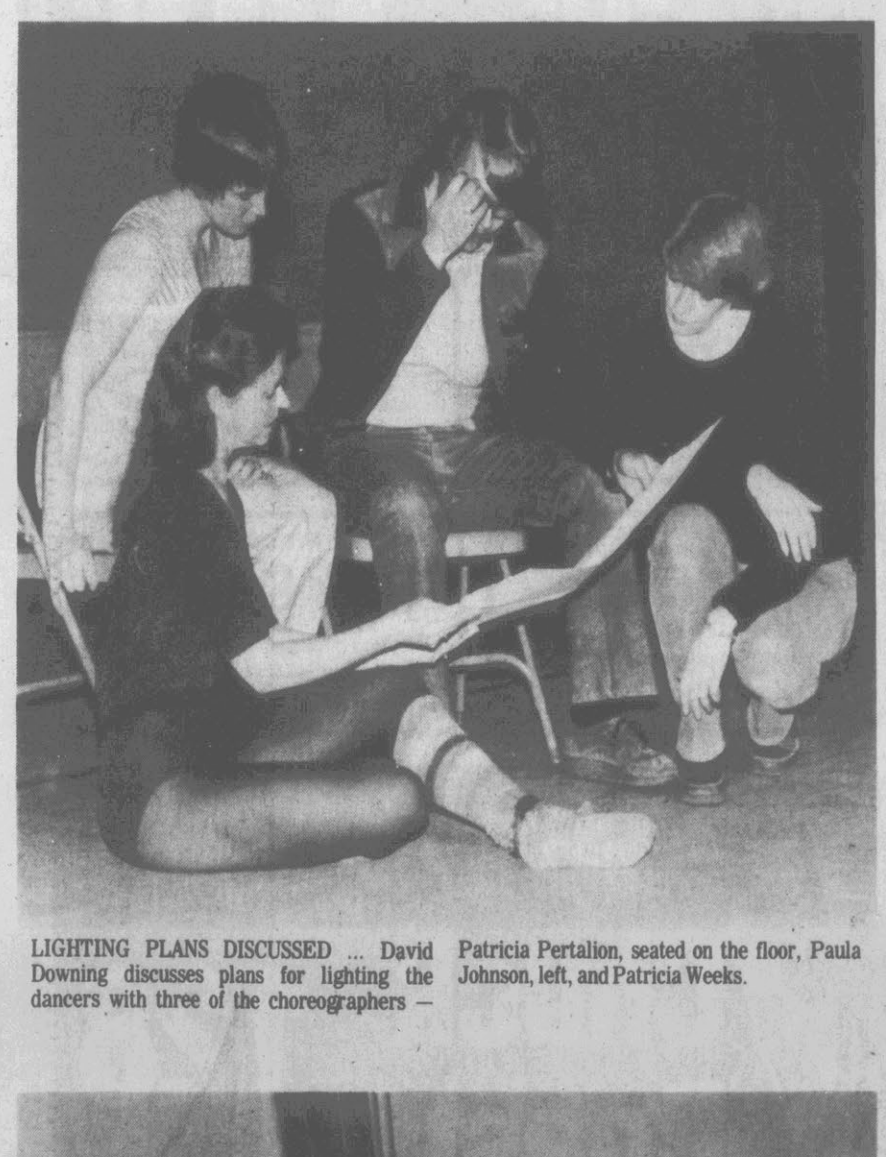
"The music I've chosen for 'Dimensions' is Janacek's 'Brass Fanfare for Sinfonietta.' This dance is a modern work that fits in with Tom's kinetic sculpture, and is danced by five male dancers."

Ms. Pertalion's second piece is entitled "Pastiche," which uses music from Aaron Copland's "Music for Theater," parts 1 and 2.

• Patti Week's piece, "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep . . .," has music composed by Otto Henry. Of this piece the choreographer says, "is about dreams, many different kinds of dreams, good ones and nightmares. It's basically a mood piece, in which I attempt to show how people react to dreams. This dance is a new step for me, a dramatic modern work as opposed to a dance of pure movement."

Ms. Weeks said "it began as a 12-minute dance, but in working with Otto and his music I find I'm ending up with a piece that runs for about 20 minutes. The piece has 10 dancers, male and female."

As part of the renovation of McGinnis completed last year, dancers have their own special dance floor, one that can be put down on top of the regular stage floor. All involved agree that the floor, the sophisticated lighting system, and the spacious new stage make a world of difference in bringing dance to theater patrons in eastern North Carolina.



LIGHTING PLANS DISCUSSED ... David Downing discusses plans for lighting the dancers with three of the choreographers — Patricia Pertalion, seated on the floor, Paula Johnson, left, and Patricia Weeks.

CRYPTOQUIP 1-22

QDSI HJXHVSJAXHV HMSHVSJI HMXBF IWGYY ARBF WD HDZHYRIGDZI?

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — YOUNG POLITICIAN WINS BIG; CELEBRATES WITH HUGE PARTY.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: H equals C.

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—I think I could win a tidy sum of money even at the modest stake at which I play—if I never had to make an opening lead. It seems that every time it is my opening lead I find the one card that gives my opponent the contract. I would gladly make you an absentee partner in my game if you could help me out. — R. Mallozzi, Bridgeport, Conn.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—Thank you for your offer, but I am not sure that I can afford it! I can only presume that you are inclined to take an occasional nap at the table, because being a good opening leader simply means you must listen to what the opponents tell you during the auction and act on it.

I do not intend in this column to go into anything as plebian as which card to lead—top of a sequence, fourth best, etc. Instead, I'll try to show you what to look and listen for to dictate whether you should lead a trump or a plain suit, a long or a short suit, and so on.

Some auctions cry out for a trump lead. If your side has shown a considerable amount of strength but the opponents still push on to game, they must have distributional assets. A trump lead could gain you a tempo and enable you to cut down on their ruffing power. Similarly, if the opponents have bid two suits and end up in a third, they might intend playing the hand along crossruff lines. Again, lead a trump.

Here's another obvious case for a trump lead. Suppose that declarer, after having had his suit raised, bids no trump and gets corrected back to his suit. Obviously, dummy expects to score some ruffs, and a trump lead might thwart that.

I have often heard defenders say: "When in doubt, lead trumps!" That is the worst reason for leading a trump that I can think of. However, in cases where no other lead looks attractive, a trump is a reasonable choice—it is the least likely to do harm to your cause.

Lastly, if you have to decide whether to lead your suit or partner's, choose partner's. If you lead your suit and his suit would have defeated the hand, you have struck a mortal blow to partnership confidence. But if you lead his suit and yours would have defeated the hand, it is simply unlucky.

We have run out of space and the subject is not finished. We will continue in two weeks.

Send any questions for this column to: Charles Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Bridge Complete," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged the best received.

Life As It's Lived

By GAIL MICHAELS

After asking repeatedly what activities Knoxville offered aside from the World's Fair, Phillip and I began to get wary when all our new neighbors echoed the same sentiment.

"We like to do things as a family," we kept hearing. I knew that could mnean only one thing. The ratio of babysitters to the procreative couples in the area was exceedingly low.

I hate to sound cynical, but let's face it. Going to the supermarket is a family outing. Granted, zoos and picnics are somewhat more attractive, but just how much they aid in the recuperation of a parent with terminal battle fatigue is questionable. No matter how much a normal parent enjoys being with his kids, he enjoys a few hours without them better.

My suspicions were soon confirmed. The neighborhood held one 11-year-old girl who was attempting unsuccessfully to make her schedule accommodate 50 sets of desperate parents and two teen-age boys whose unwavering refusal to change diapers severely limited their usefulness. It was only too apparent that, as reluctant as we were, Phillip and I would have to choose between cabin fever and family entertainment.

Phillip's first suggestion was ice skating. I convinced him, however, that Zachary and I had no hope whatsoever of cutting any figures but our own upon the ice.

Phillip's next suggestion was the movies. Naturally, this delighted Meg. I was more apprehensive about Zachary's reaction, but armed with enough supplies from the concession stand, I figured we could get him to sit through anything from the Muppets to "Ghandi."

My strategy was remarkably successful — for awhile. Zachary can intone "E.T. phone home" along with the best of the 7 and 8 year olds, and the secret of N.I.M.H. remains safe with him, probably because he never did comprehend it.

Perhaps that's why he behaved so well — he may have been mesmerized by the succession of incomprehensible images. We had no such luck with "Peter Pan." Zachary understood all of it.

Phillip's failure to come along didn't help matters any. After explicitly promising the kids he'd take us all to the theater that evening, he called that afternoon and, with profuse apologies, explained that he just had to work late.

Armed only with good intentions and money enough to buy a week's supply of M&Ms and buttered popcorn, I kept the promise. The movie was preceded by a cartoon featuring Donald Duck, Zachary's very favorite character. Zachary was enraptured. He was so enraptured that when Peter Pan and Wendy usurped the screen, he tried to call Donald back for an encore.

He simmered down when the crocodile and Captain Hook made their appearances. "Eat him!" he kept shouting.

This I didn't mind so much. After years of going to the movies with Meg, I am used to attempted dialogues with cartoon characters. But when the movie was over, Zachary refused to budge. "Let's see it again," he said.

I had to carry him kicking and screaming from the theater. When I put him down in the parking lot and told him to walk, he attempted to walk back into the building. I tightened my grip on his wrist. He tried to bite my hand.

That's when I spanked him, right in the middle of the road in the dark of night. That must have also been when my watch flew off. I barely had time to run back from the car after depositing him and grab it from under the wheels of a speeding van.

Cabin fever is beginning to look like an attractive alternative.

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY, JAN. 23, 1983

YOUR DAILY Horoscope
from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A very good morning to consider just what you can do to be more helpful to your close companions and to put such a plan in effect without delay. Make plans for the future.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) You need to apply yourself more if you wish to gain your most cherished aims. Be more understanding of loved one.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Try to please those who have done you favors in the past. Don't waste time with those who have an eye on your assets.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Handle routine chores early in the day so you'll have time for social activities later. Make this a worthwhile day.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Try to be of help to family members before seeking personal pleasures. Be active and you are happy.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Study new interests that can give you greater abundance in the future. Take a little time for meditation. Be calm.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) You have to be more practical now to gain your most cherished aims. Save time to engage in favorite hobby.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Handle little tasks around the house early in the day and then join congenials for recreation. Be clever with others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Study your environment and do something to improve it. The afternoon and evening are fine for much sociability.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Know what your true aims are and then go after them in a positive manner. Show thoughtfulness to others.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Do whatever will add prestige to present standing in your neighborhood. Show increased devotion to family members.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Study some new philosophy of life and put it to use for your betterment in life. Avoid one who brags too much.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Use your hunches as well as your good judgment to solve problems today. Show more consideration for the one you love.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY . . . he or she will be one who can easily comprehend what others are thinking and upon reaching maturity will become a most determined person with a strong will. Be sure to give ethical and religious training early in life.

"The Stars impel, they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

FORECAST FOR MONDAY, JAN. 24, 1983

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Make sure that you do nothing today that could upset one who has authority over you. Strive to make progress in your line of endeavor. Secrets come to light at this time.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Do nothing that could cause a severance of connections with an associate. Be sure to keep an important appointment.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Concentrate on the future and then make concrete plans to improve it. Take modern treatments to improve your health.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Try a new approach with friends and reach a better understanding with them. Know what is expected of you by associates.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) You have to be tactful and clear thinking to patch up a problem of long standing. Take no risks with money at this time.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) You can get along better with associates by adopting a new attitude. Take no chances with one who has harmed you in the past.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Study your duties well and figure out a way to handle them more efficiently. Don't do anything that could anger loved one.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Use a different approach in a civil matter and get excellent results. Avoid one who is detrimental to your best interests.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Make work the keynote in your activities today and accomplish a great deal. Not a good day to engage in new outlets.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Be extra patient in the face of any pressures today and you win out. Strive for greater prestige in civic affairs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Be tactful with family members and maintain harmony at home. Take no chances with a well-known troublemaker.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Use good judgment in the handling of problems connected with regular routines. Come to a better understanding with loved one.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Your monetary prowess is better now than for some time so make the most of this now. Obtain data you need from the right sources.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY . . . he or she will be a capable person who can study new ventures and understand them well. But it's important to teach to finish one thing before going on with another. Don't neglect ethical training early in life.

Man Makes House From Bottles

SHELBY, N.C. (AP) — Charlie Yelton spent five years building a house he never planned to live in.

And when he finished it, he built two more — all for no other reason than to have something to do.

What makes Yelton's houses special is that they are made of bottles. Thousands of them. In the big house alone there are 11,987 pint, quart and half-gallon bottles in every imaginable shape, size and color.

Yelton keeps the extra-special bottles, those that had no place in the structure, inside the houses with the rest of his glass collection.

In 1970, Yelton found himself with plenty of time to kill. He was 63 at the time, and he had broken his leg while trying to level a house trailer on his land. His 25-year career with Cone Mills came to an end.

Then he remembered a house in Texas he'd seen years before on television, and he liked the idea.

Yelton spent the next four winters collecting and washing bottles. In the summers, he set them in concrete. The bottle house grew.

"I had an old toe sack that would hold seven quart bottles. It was a mile to the river, and I used to walk down there and fill up that sack and walk back with a cane. I reckon I made 900 trips," he said.

Farming and mill work hadn't prepared him for the work that was ahead, but somehow he managed to figure things out.

"I never built nothing in my life. All I had was a hammer and a saw."

Colorful glass patterns grew and formed walls.

Green 7-Up bottles surround the window frames he built, and a blue cross made from Phillip's Milk of Magnesia bottles adorns the front eave.

The house was finished in 1975. By that time, Yelton was 68 and he still had time to kill, so he started on another house. He built a third house, a wishing well and flower beds out of bottles also.

Yelton said there are too many bottles to count in his complex.

Yelton said he is surprised at the number of visitors who come to see his houses. "I had no idea anybody would come," he said.

"I had eight cars here at one time — and buses. I guess the highest I've had here was 65 at one time."

Yelton winces when someone calls him an artist, but he likes for people to visit and see his handiwork.

"It's prettiest when the moon's full and there's no leaves on the trees. It lightens up there just like daylight," he said.

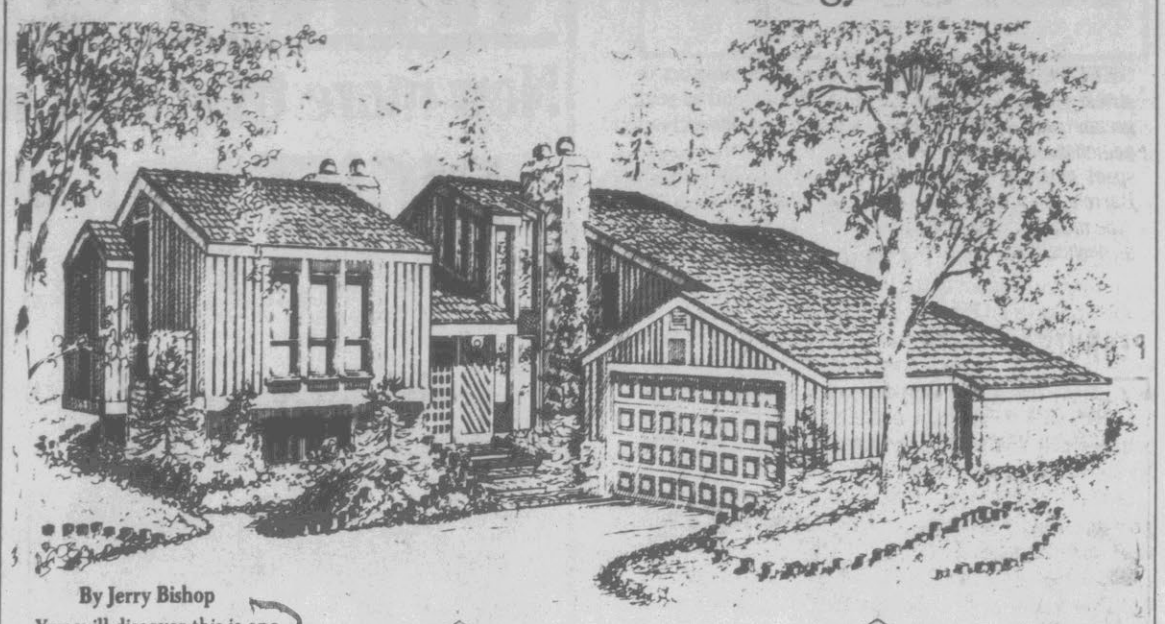
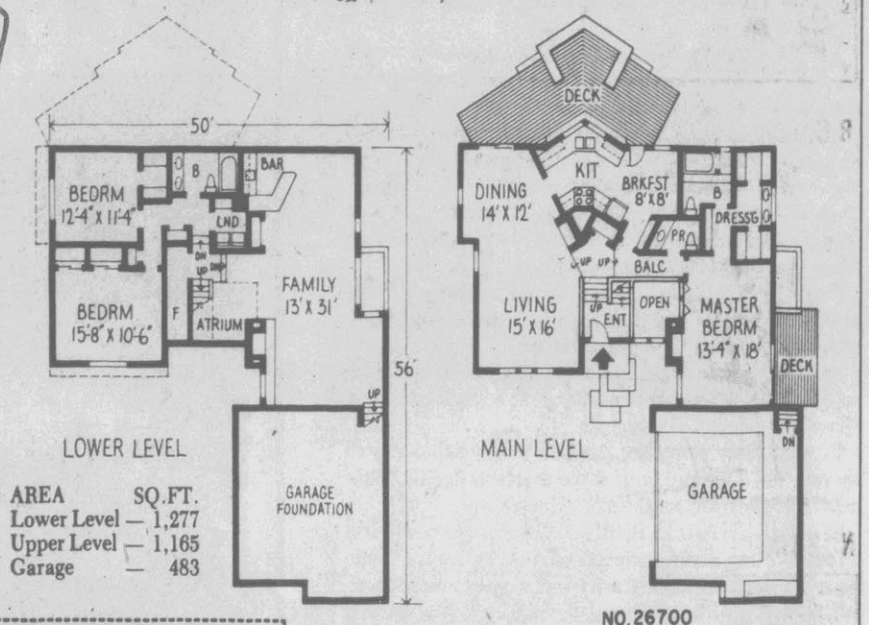
PLAN YOUR HOME — The Seneca

Wood Construction Contributes To Energy Conservation



By Jerry Bishop

You will discover this is one of those rare homes that actually encompasses rather than intrudes on or obliterates the natural surroundings of its site. This has been accomplished through generous use of windows and sliding glass door. Though contemporary in mood, this excellent family oriented home will be an asset to any neighborhood. The modern lines of contemporary architecture are dramatically expressed on the exterior of this three bedroom multi-level design. All wood construction and natural wood siding applied vertically on the exterior and with the windows facing the street-side held to a minimum, the floor plan inside offers informal living that many young families will find to their liking.



AREA	SQ.FT.
Lower Level	1,277
Upper Level	1,165
Garage	483

NO. 26700

The entry way combines practicality with beauty by adding a two story atrium.

The main level houses the dining/living room area. The dining area has sliding glass doors that open to a large deck, the living room has a built-in fireplace. The remarkable kitchen has a bow window with a window box for flowers and overlooks the deck. The whole kitchen is very conveniently planned with the cook in mind. A breakfast nook adjacent to the kitchen is light and airy. The master bedroom is extra large and has a private deck with sliding glass doors. The private bath is luxurious in design, with a double vanity and double closets separate from the main bath area. A built-in fireplace is included for those cozy evenings at home. A louvered window looks out over the atrium. A separate powder room is shown in the hall. The lower level features the spacious family room with built-in fireplace. The laundry room and another bath with a double vanity is shown on this level.

Q. My houseplants are suffering because of the low humidity in my apartment. What is the best way to raise the humidity for my plants? (D.T., Winston-Salem)

A. There are several ways to increase the humidity. Grouping the plants together will help. Misting the plants will also help. Plants can be put in shallow, water-tight trays filled with a few inches of crushed stone or sand. The stone or sand material should be kept moist, but the plants should not sit in water. Pans of water placed on radiators will increase the humidity as the water in them evaporates. Humidifying devices on hot air furnaces should be kept filled with water. Plants that require excessively high humidity should be gwon in a terrarium.

Q. Some of the leaves on my potted palm developed many faded, mottled spots. Underneath the leaves I found a few tiny insects moving. Are they the cause and, if they are, how can I get rid of them? (K.R., Madison)

A. What you saw were spider mites, and they are the cause of the spotting. Spider mites are not insects, but plant pests more closely related to spiders. Spider mites can be controlled by spraying with Kelthane or washing the plant with an insecticidal soap. Follow all directions on the label when applying any pesticides.

Q. What are the maintenance requirements for an aloe (burn plant)? (G.S., Graham)

A. Aloes are very tolerant plants, but they prefer bright light or full sun, dry soil and night temperatures between 65 and 75 degrees F.

Q. What are some of the best new varieties of tomatoes for 1983? (S.P., Ayden)

A. Some of the most heralded varieties are:

•Super Beefsteak VFN — smooth, large red fruits averaging 17 ounces each with very little blossoms and scar. This variety is tolerant to verticillium and fusarium wilts and root-knot nematodes. Non-hybrid variety. Harvesting starts 80 days from setting out. Available from W. Altee Burpee Co., 300 Park Ave., Warminster, Pa.

•Champion Hybrid — an early producer of large, tasty fruits. It is resistant to verticillium and fusarium wilts as well as nematodes and tobacco mosaic virus. Available from Nichols Garden Nursery, 1190 Pacific Highway, Albany, Ore.

•Florida Petite — grows in pots for decorative purposes. Six to eight inches tall. Available from Gurney Seed and Nursery Co., Yankton, S.D.

Here's the Answer

Q. — I am a typesetter for a daily newspaper and have set your column for use in our paper. I was especially interested in your reply to a reader's query about holding mitered corners together in the making of picture frames. Your suggestion to use a vise or certain clamps undoubtedly will work out all right, but I have another method that is very simple.

The easiest and best way for putting picture frames together and holding them in place until the glue dries is to bind them together with string. Simply glue the mitered edges, place the sides in place and then proceed to wrap the outside edges of the assembled picture frames together with string. In doing this, I generally use about 15 turns of the string around the frame, stretching it tight on diagonal corners. This is done, of course, on a flat surface like a kitchen table.

You will find that when 14 or 15 turns of the string have been wound and pulled tight around the assembled frame, it is very tightly secured for a strong glue joint. After the joints have dried, the string can be removed and Nos. 3 or 4 finishing nails can be driven through the joint to provide additional strength. When the frame has sufficient wrappings of string around it, the end can be tucked underneath the several wrappings to keep it snug and tight.

Having been a printer for 35 years, I got this idea from the trade, since printers for generations have used string to tie up type forms to keep them intact and to prevent piling or spilling. The "hot metal" days of printing have given way to "cold type" where everything is done by phototypesetting and computers, and we no longer use string in the composing room. Let me know what you think of this idea. In the meantime, I enjoy reading your column, as you come up with some very good ideas for do-it-yourselfers.

A. — An excellent idea. I should have thought of it myself. Many is the time I have stood across the table from a printer and watched him put the type in place and "tie up" the form. Thanks a lot.

Q. — We want to knock down an inside wall in our house in order to combine two rooms. We have been warned to be sure the wall is a nonbearing partition, which presumably means a wall that isn't supporting anything. We are fairly certain this particular wall is not supporting anything, but we aren't positive. How can we tell whether it is?

A. — To be positive, you will need the services of a professional, who must make an inspection before he can give you a decision. Yes, you can make a fairly accurate guess. For example, if you can determine which way the floor joists run, you may solve the problem — but then again, you may not. When the joists run at right angles to the partition, the chances are it is a loadbearing partition. When the joists run the same way as the partition, the chances are it is a nonbearing wall. But I have seen a nonbearing wall which ran at right angles to the joists. It is too important to make a guess that might be wrong. A professional has several different ways to check whether a wall is nonbearing. While you are at it, have him determine, also, what other complications might develop should you attempt knocking down the wall yourself. Even when a wall is nonbearing, it houses various kinds of equipment that must be handled with care.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find many tips in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Whether you are applying varnish to unfinished wood or to a surface from which a previous finish has been removed, the vital first step is preparation.

You never will achieve a first-class finish with varnish unless you recognize it will not turn a bad surface into a good one and that the finish can be ruined by its mortal enemy, dust.

Varnish can, in fact, accentuate the faults in a piece of wood. And it should never be applied to a dusty surface or in a room where dust is likely to travel, as would be the case when there is a movement of air from a nearby window, a hot air duct, an air conditioning unit or anything else.

Don't even start varnishing until you are sure everything in the room is dust-free and that nobody will even walk in the room until the varnish is thoroughly dry.

These precautions are necessary when using regular varnish, which is called natural-resin varnish, or polyurethane varnish, which is a synthetic of high quality but more expensive.

It cannot be emphasized enough that it is important to read the label on the container carefully and follow the directions carefully, since there are differences among the various brands on the market as well as between the two principal types of varnish.

This applies not only to the manner of application, but to such things as to whether and how much the varnish should be thinned and what undercoat is recommended. Generally, shellac can be used as an undercoat with regular varnish but not with polyurethane.

The brush should be dipped into the varnish about one-third the length of the bristles, wiping off the excess by tapping lightly against the inside of the container and not by dragging it across the inside of the can. This latter practice and shaking the can often cause bubbles as the varnish is spread.

Flow on the varnish in the direction of the wood grain. Use light, long strokes. Immediately cross-stroke against the grain. Complete the application by stroking lightly with the bristle tips in the direction of the grain, using an almost dry brush.

In working with a table top or any other large surface, brush from the center of the top towards the edge, lifting the brush the instant the edge is reached. As with all brush-stroking when using varnish, do not bear down very much, which is still another way to get bubbles on the surface.

For an extra fine finish, sand each coat of varnish lightly, just enough to smooth out any irregularities but not enough to remove any of the new coat. Use a fine grade of sandpaper or steel wool. Be sure the coat is thoroughly dry before you do this and be certain to wipe off any grit or dust after you complete it.

In doing any varnishing, always keep what is called a "tack rag" on hand. This is a clean cloth sprinkled with turpentine and then further moistened with the varnish that is being used. Or you can buy one at most stores that sell varnish. It is excellent for removing dust from the surface before you begin work.

Some wood finishers also keep a clean wooden toothpick nearby. It can be used for picking up specks of dust from a finish that is still very wet. A tack rag can be used again and again if, after each use, it is wrung dry and placed in an airtight metal container.

Varnish can be left as is after the final coat or rubbed with pumice and rottenstone powders or some other rubbing compound, followed by a coat of wax.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, stain, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743.)

Once 'Magic,' Booze Becomes A Monster

EDITOR'S NOTE — An estimated 9 million Americans are stricken with alcoholism, a disease that cuts across all age groups and social classes. Attempts to overcome the addiction often end in despair. AP Writer Donna Anderson spent more than 100 hours over five months with Maria Barrote, an alcoholic seeking freedom from what she calls "the monster." She found that for Maria, and for many other alcoholics, it is a monster indeed

By DONNA ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Liquor tasted good, even when Maria Barrote was a little girl, sneaking it at weddings. At age 13, she was taking it to school in tiny bottles to drink between classes.

"The booze was magic," she said.

But at age 30, Maria has seen the magic in the glass spawn a monster of terrifying proportion. Maria is one of an estimated 9 million Americans addicted to alcohol — by far the nation's most commonly abused drug.

Last spring, Maria entered Salt Lake City's House of Hope, an alcoholic recovery center for women, which had been recommended by a Wyoming hospital where she had been treated for drug and alcohol abuse.

Her story since then is a microcosm of the alcoholic experience: sobriety, drinking binge, detoxification, sobriety, another brutal brawl with the bottle and — at last contact recently with a friend — another treatment program in California.

Her decision to seek help last year came after harrowing days when her hands trembled too badly to hold a glass, when she would place the glass on a chair, fill it to the brim and sip enough to calm her nerves so she could hoist it.

"I was really lost, and I'm tired of being lost," she said. "I'd look in the mirror and think, 'You sick bitch.' But I knew I wasn't. I was Maria."

The House of Hope offers an intensive live-in program that requires residents to eat together, study, clean house and abstain from liquor. Drinking colas and smoking in group sessions, they resembled a group of college coeds.

But their words revealed lonely, often ignorant, victims of a disease. Maria was one who grappled with a lifetime denial of her alcoholism.

The youngest of six children of an affluent couple who immigrated from Portugal before she was born and settled in Eureka, Calif., Maria is the only daughter — and the only alcoholic.

Hooked first on booze and then on drugs, she had lurched through a wrecked marriage and years in California's seamy, sex--and-drugs subculture.

"I used to say, 'I know I drink a lot, but I don't have a drinking problem, because I can stop any time,'" Maria told the other women. Her family especially wanted to believe that — for a long time, she said, her father didn't understand that she couldn't stop drinking on her own.

The other residents laughed in recognition as Maria told of always shunning literature on alcoholism with questions designed to help people recognize the symptoms. "I could answer yes to every one of them," she said.

Many of the women seemed surprised to share an illusion common to alcoholics, that everyone was staring at them in public. "I used to be afraid to walk in stores," Maria said. "I can still see people's faces looking ... their eyes."

Many also shared an ignorance of their own disease. "I'd never heard of any young alcoholics," Maria said. "They were always older," and in Maria's mind, denizens of skid row. In fact less than 5 percent of alcoholics are derelicts.

Maria and the others sometimes acted like teenagers, as if catching up on years robbed by alcohol.

They developed best-friendships, staying up nights giggling. And like adolescents, they were vexed over blemished skin, caused by taking Antabuse, an aversion drug that causes nausea and choking when combined with alcohol.

At the House of Hope, Maria learned to perform simple tasks that had been beyond her while drinking. Just mowing the grass was meaningful.

"It might seem silly," she said, "but it's something I can do well. I wasn't drunk this time and I did have straight lines."

There was a newness to things, like leaving sober for a date.

Dressed in a pale-green sun dress, her shining black hair brushed over her shoulders, Maria spoke animatedly about her fears of an evening out without alcohol.

"I haven't been on a date sober since I was 15. It's really a trip for him, too, dating an alcoholic," she said.

In addition to her date, who became her steady boyfriend, Maria turned to recovered alcoholics for friendship, going to movies and dancing at a non-alcoholic tavern. She clung to Alcoholics Anonymous, which held two sessions a day at House of Hope.

Maria was asked what she would do when she re-entered a world that included drinking for others. "I used to think," she replied, "what am I going to do if I stop drinking? What am I going to do with my time? Right now, the only people I can be around are people that know of my problem, counselors and addicts or alcoholics with a lot of sobriety. I have to be around people that are safe to me."

Long days were spent simply keeping herself from running — "I'm a professional 'runner'" — checking off another day of sobriety. She was depressed by a psychologist's comment that it could take her two years to feel good about herself.

"What do I do about the times in between? It's the times in between that scare me to death," she said.

As treatment progressed, the women probed the reasons they drank. Maria sobbed as one woman described a mother who had never complimented her, even for high marks in school, and who had given her a tongue-lashing as she drove her to the treatment center.

"I'm so glad you got here," Maria said, grasping the woman's hand.

"Sound familiar, Maria?" a counselor asked. "You never did have a mom you could talk to."

"I tried hard," Maria recalled. "Whatever she did, she did well. I could never do anything."

In session after session, the counselor relentlessly pushed into a past Maria had tried to bury with every bottle.

"My parents always made sure we were clean," she recalled, describing a childhood in which she was well looked after and provided for. "So why wasn't I OK?"

As a child, she never was allowed to dust or help with the dishes because of a fear she might break things.

"My family always expected me to screw up," she said.

As the weeks passed at the House of Hope, Maria attended a job rehabilitation program and made plans to begin college. Then the whole treatment process began unraveling.

She left the House of Hope on a weekend pass to stay with a trusted friend, a recovered alcoholic, then decided to move in.

Two weeks later, the friend, discouraged about a pending divorce, brought home a pint of vodka. Maria shared it.

The next day, Maria's boyfriend, scratched and bleeding from trying to rip another bottle of vodka away from her, stood tearfully in the living room. Sounds of Maria heaving into the toilet filled the house.

"Maria's in the bathroom finishing off a pint of vodka," he said.

Talking wildly, making little sense, Maria nevertheless called the House of Hope and spoke to a counselor. She hung up the phone.

"I'm going to detox," she mumbled.

But then she stalled, taking more than two hours to dress.

"It's a monster," she mumbled over and over. "The monster's got me."

At the detox center, Maria insisted she smoke a cigarette before going in. She spilled her purse onto the lawn, pawing through it in a frenzied search for cigarettes.

"Maria, they want you to go in," a companion said quietly.

She put her head in her hands and wept, then dragged herself to the door and entered.

Three days later, back at the House of Hope, she was subdued but proud she had accepted help even when drunk.

"I did what was natural for an alcoholic to do — drink," she said softly. "Something snapped and I wanted it. I feel like I haven't lost anything that I've learned — the genuine concern that I've had for myself."

Group Wants To Restore Life To Crumbling Cities Of Dead

By BILL CRIDER
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Voodoo and black magic are alive and well in the old cemeteries of New Orleans — not to mention people who might kill you for a dollar if you look like an easy mark.

If possible, the Archdiocese of New Orleans and Save Our Cemeteries Inc. want to change all that.

The first step, a drive to raise $1 million for restoration work, begins next month.

"We want to bring more life to the cemeteries," said Tom Finney, spokesman for the archdiocese. "But we are not talking about a carnival, absolutely not. We have no intention of creating anything but a reverent atmosphere."

Reverent or not, old cemeteries have become part of the city package for attracting tourists who, next to the port, are the main business of New Orleans.

They also are important to voodoo cultists, who need dust from a grave and a spooky atmosphere for their hidden rituals. After all, one cannot do voodoo on a front lawn somewhere.

These cemeteries developed their unique character because New Orleans sprang up on a low hump of dry earth encircled by river, lake or swamp, and all graves had to be above ground — for those who could afford it.

In this soggy area, just a few feet higher than the swamps, you couldn't dig a decent grave. It would fill with water and mud before the casket could be lowered. The best alternative was a marble tomb or a vault in a thick brick wall, looking rather like a pizza oven.

That kind of burial was expensive, the French devised a practical system. Vaults in a tomb were designed with a hole in the floor and a space below, rather like the ash pit of a stove.

When another family member died, the remains of the predecessor were scraped into the pit to make room for inserting the newcomer into the vault.

Retired mortician John Avery said it worked out fairly well, so long as there was a decent interval between occupants so that time and whatever else could do its work.

Tourists who found this way of death rather odd often went around to look at St. Louis Cemetery No. 1 or No. 2, both on the rim of the French Quarter. But in recent years it has been risky.

Muggers on the narrow paths gave the marble cities of the dead a reputation of being dangerous places.

Save Our Cemeteries, Inc., intends to restore No. 2 to a tourist attraction before the 1984 World's Fair.

"There is a tourist draw to our cemeteries because of the above-ground tombs, the walled vaults, the brick, marble and iron work and its entire architectural value," said Mary Lou Christovich, director of the organization.

"Our cemeteries would not be unsafe if it was just the dead there. It is the living that make it unsafe," she added.

Scholars say the dead in St. Louis No. 2 include a legendary voodoo priestess, Marie Laveau. She still attracts people. Police arrested about 20 "punk rockers" at the grave a couple of months ago on charges of trespassing after they made the night hideous with loud and raucous ritual.

Actually, voodooism does not rank anywhere near potential violence or mindless vandalism as a threat to the cemetery program. The blood in voodoo is chicken blood, not human.

Intent may be ferocious, but the means are magic, not a bullet, a blade or a club.

Instead, one might find in the cemeteries what Joseph Guillotte, an anthropologist for the University of New Orleans, found: a couple of sacrificed chickens and a voodoo rag doll stuck full of pins, its belly slit, a piece of bright red crayon gleaming in the opening.

The illegal intent of the doll-maker was to kill some enemy — but through sorcery. Guillotte said the strange rituals are a form of religion that still persists.

Guillotte and fellow archivist, Clive Hardy, are pretty careful these days when they poke around in No. 1 or No. 2.

"Clive was checking through No. 2 last year when he and two women with him were held up by two young thugs," Guillotte said. "They took a thousand dollars worth of cameras from one lady. After that, he had someone riding shotgun with him when he went in there — I literally mean a deputy with a shotgun."

Study Seeks Depression's Effects

ATHENS, Tenn. (AP) — Volunteer researchers are using the memories of senior citizens, yellowed newspaper clippings and old records to compile an account of how the Depression affected two eastern Tennessee counties.

Historian Charles F. Bryan Jr., who is overseeing the publicly funded project from his Knoxville office, says the research so far has turned up some grim reminders of the suffering the Depression caused. And, he said, some of the stories seem similar to current troubles of some families left unemployed by the recession.

"The stories that we get today of suffering families and people out of work, you see some similarities," Bryan, executive director of the East Tennessee Historical Society, said in a telephone interview.

Volunteers in Bradley and McMinn counties are pooling their efforts until late March or early April to interview senior citizens and research old records from churches, businesses and local governments. The researchers include volunteers from the two county historical societies along with college and high school students.

Bill Akins, president of the McMinn County Historical Society, and Bill Snell, past president of the Bradley County Historical Society, are the project's local coordinators. Historians have trained and are overseeing the volunteers, who began their work last October.

The data gathered in the project, called "Hard Times Remembered," will be used to compile and publish booklets that will be donated to schools and libraries in the two counties. Bryan hopes to have the histories published and available by this fall.

"The people that are doing it are enjoying it, finding it an incredible experience," he said. "But it is a sobering experience."

The researchers are finding that Etowah, a rural McMinn County town built early this century by the old Louisville & Nashville Railroad to house its employees, was overwhelmed by droves of hoboes when hard times hit.

"Many of the businesses collapsed and many people left the town during the 1930s. Being a railroad town, it was inundated by hoboes. In some instances, that created a problem," Bryan said.

A railroad detective shot and killed one hobo who was caught stripping wooden siding off railroad boxcars. The man had intended to burn the siding in a fire to warm himself, Bryan said.

"We really didn't know what to expect. In all honesty, I thought we'd go into these two counties and there wouldn't be much to tell," he said.

Wagner's 'Ring' Spurs Imagination

"Unprecedented" is the word for the presentation of Richard Wagner's "The Ring of the Nibelung" over PBS in the months ahead. To be telecast in its entirety, the "Ring" is the highlight of the 10th anniversary season of "Great Performances."

Friedelind Wagner, Richard Wagner's granddaughter, will play host for the series, which opens over PBS, Monday, Jan. 24 (9 p.m.), when the curtain goes up on "Das Rheingold."

"Die Walkure" follows, with all three acts to be telecast in February.

The third opera in the "Ring" cycle, "Siegfried," is scheduled for an April airing. "Gotterdammerung" is at present planned for June release.

"Das Rheingold" ("The Rheingold"), "Die Walkure" ("The Valkyrie"), "Siegfried" and "Gotterdammerung" ("Twilight of the Gods"), though four separate operas, are interrelated. Taken as a whole, the "Ring" cycle tells an epic story of gods and men engaged in a titanic struggle over the Ring, whose magical power enables its owner to control the world. The "Ring" has become one of opera's most controversial works since it was first performed in 1876 in Bayreuth at the theatre which Wagner designed for its premiere.

The "Ring" has also challenged directors and scenic designers to stretch their imaginations to the utmost limits of their art. As a result, Bayreuth has become one of the world's great laboratories for theatrical experimentation.

The productions that are to air on "Great Performances" are extraordinary even by Bayreuth standards. Directed for the stage by Patrice Chereau and conducted by Pierre Boulez, this Wagner centennial production is mounted on a scale that even Wagner might have heartily approved. Director Chereau has set the cycle in the 19th century — a reinterpretation of the Teutonic myth which reflects the impact of the industrial revolution. In setting this ancient saga in Wagner's own time, the turmoil of the period is paralleled by the vast machinery that dominates the stage, representing forces of creation and destruction as potent as the gods themselves.

"Das Rheingold" features Donald McIntyre as Wotan, Hermann Becht as Alberich, Hanna Schwarz as Fricka and Heinz Zednick as Loge.

"DAS RHEINGOLD," the first opera in Richard Wagner's "The Ring of the Nibelung," airs on PBS Monday, Jan. 24 (9 p.m.). It is the story of the theft of the Rhine gold by the dwarf Alberich, and the forging from it of a Ring that gives the wearer power over heaven and earth.

Marriage Turns Rocky

Sun, sand and surf form a glittering backdrop as a young Midwestern couple encounters temptation, seduction and deception among the wealthy, famous and glamorous denizens of one of California's beach towns, in "Malibu," airing in two parts on ABC, Sunday, Jan. 23 and Monday, Jan. 24 (9-11 p.m.).

After renting an over-priced house in the exclusive colony section of California's fabled beach community from savvy realtor Billie Farnsworth (Kim Novak), Milwaukee junior executive Stan Harvey (William Atherton) and his wife, Linda (Susan Dey), temporarily transferred to the West Coast, have high hopes for an exciting season in the sun.

Plunging into the social swim, they soon become involved with their exotic new neighbors. Among them are Dee Staufer (Valerie Perrine), a rich, sensuous divorcee; Art Bonnell (Chad Everett), a womanizing tennis pro and his sympathetic wife, Laura (Bridget Hanley); and Gail Hessian (Ann Jillian), an ambitious television journalist trying to advance her career by exposing ruthless lawyer Tom Wharton (James Coburn), even if it means having an affair with him, and thus adding to the long-standing chagrin of his wife, Mary (Eva Marie Saint).

Representing the film world are a frentic writer-producer, Charlie Wigham (Richard Mulligan), and his spaced-out girlfriend, Cindy (Jenilee Harrison), who are trying to interest aristocratic director Wilson Mahoney (Anthony Newley) and rock star Lane Ponds (Brad Maule) in Wigham's new script. On the fringe is the mysteriously reclusive Clint Redman (Troy Donahue).

Immediately intrigued by Stan, Dee attempts to ensnare him while Art and macho TV series star Rich Bradley (Steve Forrest) ply their wiles on Linda. Meanwhile, both Stan and Billie are mesmerized by the slick suavity of high-living con man Jay Pomerantz (George Hamilton).

CHAD EVERETT AND VALERIE PERRINE

As the various relationships become more and more entangled, Stan and Linda find their traditional values — and perspectives on life and love — severely tested. Especially unsettling is the discovery that their marriage hasn't been as solid as they had thought. Now, here in a supposed earthly Eden, they face the frightening, almost paradoxical possibility that it may be shattered forever.

None of the stars of "Malibu" is a current resident of the town. But all agree that the area has tremendous appeal, particularly the prestigious, guarded enclave known as The Colony. They are also aware of Malibu's darker side — the periodic brush fires, floods and landslides — and the fact that it's a long way to the studio via the perpetually crowded Pacific Coast Highway.

"Malibu, to me," observes Coburn, "means a 45-minute drive at 6:30 in the morning." Adds Ms. Dey: "In the winter, you drive to work in the dark and drive home in the dark. But to the people who live in Malibu, the inconvenience and potential danger are worth it. But I find it claustrophobic. On one side of the highway is the ocean, but on the other are the Santa Monica Mountains. They make me feel cut off. There is something about Malibu people though. They seem more relaxed than most. Maybe the outdoor life makes for a better balance."

Kanaly To Guest

Steve Kanaly, currently starring on "Dallas," has been set to guest-star in the "Revenge of the Forgotten" episode of "Fantasy Island."

It's A Brett!

Beautiful actress Denise Pence, who plays the part of nurse Katie Parker on "Guiding Light," is expecting her second child in April, and has already solved one of the main questions that pregnancy presents — what to name the baby. She and her husband, actor/choreographer Steve Boockvor, have decided on the name Brett. "We think it's a terrific name for a boy or a girl," says Miss Pence, "and now, if anybody wants to give the baby a personalized gift, they won't have to wail until the last minute."

Two Acerbic Southern Belles

They are dubbed "the characters you love to hate." In literature, on the stage or in a television series, they are the people you really don't like but you can't wait to see what they will do next. Somehow they are the most fascinating if they are the most cunning, deceitful and nasty.

"Filthy Rich," the CBS comedy series airing Mondays (8:30-9 p.m.), features two beautiful "love-to-hate-'em" characters — Carlotta and Kathleen, played by Dixie Carter and Delta Burke, respectively.

Carlotta, the wife of the eldest son of the Beck family, a fabulously wealthy Tennessee family, is a vision of sugar-coated haughtiness with a demeanor that would put the best head waiter in his place. Kathleen, a former beauty queen who was married to the much-moneyed, now deceased patriarch of the clan for a scant 10 months, is catty, ambitious and extremely well endowed.

These two lovely ladies cook up some of the most outlandish plans to destroy their opponents since J.R. Ewing came to "Dallas." While the audience will enjoy their on-screen antics, the two actresses creating the roles are having a ball.

Miss Carter has never played anyone quite like this part and she sees her as one of a kind.

"She's a real acid-tongued shrew and I love her," she says. "It's so much fun to play her and you can't imagine what she will come up with next. If she ever becomes human, the audience will fall apart."

Dixie, a native of McLamoresville, Tenn., has extensive experience in musical comedy theater and the dramatic voice sweeping gestures of Carlotta come naturally to her.

Miss Burke also has the background training to enhance her portrayal. She is a former teenaged beauty contest winner, Miss Florida, who went on to study for two years at the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Arts.

"I base Kathleen on some of the girls I met at the contest," she says. "She has a Scarlett O'Hara pattern and is very involved with her looks. But she's also a real snip. She's not as smooth as Carlotta but she's working at it."

Delta Burke, Anne Wedgeworth And Nedra Volz (c)

Both actresses agree that part of the fun of playing this kind of role is it lets out a few feelings that polite society frowns upon.

"It's wonderfully outrageous to be nasty and get away with it," says Delta.

"You're always taught to be nice but it gives you a great feeling of satisfaction to get in a few catty digs and unsavory schemes like Kathleen and Carlotta," says Dixie.

Pehaps that's the secret of why this kind of character has always captured the audience — everyone probably has a little hidden villain in them.

Novel Scheduled

"The Thorn Birds," the nine-hour "ABC Novel for Television" based on Colleen McCullough's romantic best-seller, has been scheduled to air on four consecutive nights, beginning Sunday, March 27.

The sweeping saga stars Richard Chamberlain in his first television appearance since "Shogun," and the beautiful young British actress Rachel Ward. Also starring in key roles are (in alphabetical order) Philip Anglim, Bryan Brown, John Friederich, Earl Holliman, Ken Howard, Richard Kiley, Piper Laurie, Sydney Penny, Christopher Plummer, Jean Simmons, Barbara Stanwyck and Mare Winningham.

Mills In 'Sahara'

Sir John Mills has been signed by producers Menahem Golan and Yoram Globus to star in "Sahara," the $15 million production which headlines Brooke Shields in her first feature film in two years. The epic is being filmed in England, Israel and Egypt, with Andrew V. McLaglen directing.

Michele Will Tell

DEAR MICHELE: Would you please tell me something about Valerie Bertinelli, who plays the role of Barbara on "One Day at a Time," and also where could I write to her? ANGIE KEENER, CONOVER, N.C.

TO ANGIE IN CONOVER: Twenty-two-year-old Valerie was born on April 23 in Wilmington, Delaware. Her father, a General Motors executive, was transferred to the Van Nuys, California, plant and the family moved to the West Coast in 1971. About that time, she developed a desire to be an actress and enrolled in an acting class. The actress has started her own production company, and is searching for properties to fit her current interests. On April 11, 1981, Valerie married rock artist Eddie Van Halen. They live in Los Angeles, where in her spare time she enjoys playing football, swimming, tennis, racquetball and listening to classical music — I wonder if Van Halen is aware of that? Fans may write to Valerie in c/o "One Day at a Time," CBS-TV, 51 W. 52 Street, N.Y., N.Y., 10019.

DEAR MICHELE: I would be most grateful if you would clear up something for me. On the show "Cagney & Lacey," is the lady who plays Chris Cagney new for this season? If so, what is the name of the lady who played this role last season? THOMAS O'NEAL, FARMVILLE, N.C.

TO THOMAS IN FARMVILLE: Yes, Sharon Gless replaced last season's Meg Foster as Chris Cagney on the series.

DEAR MICHELE: A friend and I have a bet. She says Andy, who plays on "The Young and the Restless," is former President Nixon's son. I say he is Gerald Ford's. Who is right? VELMA, PEMBROKE, N.C.

TO VELMA IN PEMBROKE: Andy, Steven Ford, is the son of former President Gerald Ford. Nixon has no sons — just two daughters, Julie and Trisha.

DEAR MICHELE: Please tell me if the actor Demond Wilson, who portrays Oscar on "The New Odd Couple," is related to the comedian Flip Wilson. B. STREATER, LUMBER BRIDGE, N.C.

TO B. STREATER IN LUMBER BRIDGE: Although these two entertainers share the same surname, they are not related.

(FOR ANSWERS TO YOUR QUESTIONS ABOUT TV SHOWS AND PERSONALITIES, WRITE TO 'MICHELE,' c/o The Greenville Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 30, Hopewell, Va. 23860.)

Family Jolted By Mother's Return

After abandoning her husband and daughter 12 years earlier, a young woman returns in hopes of reestablishing a relationship, in "Running Out," a GE Theater presentation, airing Wednesday, Jan. 26 (9-11 p.m.).

In the story, Elisabeth St. Claire (Deborah Raffin), the American-born daughter of French immigrants, arrives in New York City from Paris to serve as an interpreter for an influential French businessman. Although she has lived in France for 12 years, Elisabeth is not unfamiliar with New York.

It is the city in which, at age 15, she fell in love with and married Paul Corsini (Tony Bill). The couple had a daughter, Jenny (Ari Meyers). But at such a young age, Elisabeth had enormous difficulty adjusting to marriage and motherhood. When Jenny was 4 months old, her mother fled to France, sought psychiatric help, and built a new life.

Her return to New York, however, creates a pressing need to rekindle the bond with her former husband and daughter. For 12-year-old Jenny, a promising violinist, the reunion with her mother is initially disturbing. Paul, who specializes in restoring vintage cars, is indignant that Elisabeth should attempt to impose herself into their lives. Further, Paul's father, Sal, suffers a broken hip. And Paul's relationship with his girlfriend, Shelly, is strained by Elisabeth's reappearance.

But Paul and Jenny eventually soften to Elisabeth's sincere need to reacquaint herself with her former family. However, when a business commitment promises to prevent Elisabeth from attending Jenny's violin recital, past resentments soon reemerge.

"I don't condone what she did," says Miss Raffin of her character, Elisabeth. "But there's a reason she did what she did at that time of her life. She was only 16, and had no one to turn to — no mother, no real relationship with her father, no aunt or uncle — no one."

Commenting on the script by Elissa Haden Guest, Miss Raffin said: "I like relationship stories dealing with people instead of gimmicks. Honest pieces like 'Running Out,' in which everyone's point of view is expressed — the mother's, the father's, the child's. There are so many pieces where just one is expressed. I always feel cheated when I don't see the other person's point of view."

Search Near End

MGM's search these past four years to recover lost Laurel & Hardy films appears to be coming to a fruitful end. Recently, two have been recovered from collectors in India and Czechoslovakia and another was found in a locker under a skating rink in the Yukon. Only one more film is needed to make the collection complete.

Bach Doesn't Play It Safe

Here are a few words to describe Catherine Bach. Daisy Duke of CBS' "The Dukes of Hazzard": attractive, fun-loving, friendly, tall, musical. Add brave to that list.

After finishing her fourth year on the stunt-filled "Dukes" last season, one would think Miss Bach would choose a quiet, safe, innocuous TV movie to occupy her vacation time.

Not so. She chose to star in "White Water Rebels," which aired earlier this month. In it, she played Trish Parker, a right-out-of-college photo-journalist whose job, as Miss Bach describes it, is to write "weirdo sports" for a magazine. Sent to do a story about a man who loves kayaking down a dangerous river, she ends up uncovering a cover-up about how commercialism is killing the white-water paradise.

It was a strenuous role that required Miss Bach to work with an Olympic kayak racer. She first began paddling in her pool at home, then in a lake and finally on California's Kern River, where they spent six weeks filming the movie.

Life wasn't much easier when Miss Bach returned to "The Dukes" this season. Series stars John Schneider and Tom Wopat had left the popular series due to a contract squabble and their replacements, newcomers Christopher Mayer and Byron Cherry, lacked the public sympathy and charisma it takes to be a creditable Duke.

The show has dived in the ratings. Recently, filming was halted for two weeks after they completed 16 out of the season's 24 shows.

"We've done 37 shows back to back," Miss Bach explained. "The writers need time to regroup. We've done 100 shows now. Everyone realizes it's hard to not fall into a formula. Now we're trying to get away from it and deal more with human relationships."

Don't fret, fans of car crashes, aimless plots and Miss Bach's abbreviated Daisy Duke costume, though scripts for the final shows are being revamped, present retooling will not result in the debut of "Hill Street Dukes."

Miss Bach believes the show's currently sagging ratings may be revived by the return of the exiled Duke boys, Schneider and Wopat, who would then team up with Mayer and Cherry.

"The General Lee will be crowded," says Miss Bach of the familiar orange car that many — the series producers included — feel is the real star of the series. "Maybe we'll get a station wagon."

Ghosts Return

Horrifying legend becomes reality when sailors arise from watery graves to wreak vengeance on the descendants of their killers in "The Fog," to be rebroadcast as The ABC Friday Night Movie, on Jan. 28 (9-11 p.m.). The film was originally released theatrically in 1979.

In the drama, a ghost story becomes a screaming reality when shipwrecked sailors rise from their ocean graves to exact a terrible vengeance on descendents of their murderers. Before the ghastly tale can become prophecy, the scene is set by Mr. Machen (John Houseman), an old seaman who delights the local children with the legend of a group of dead sailors who will return to the village one day with the fog.

Machen's story recounts the fate of a ship lured to its grim destruction in the fog by scavengers, greedy of its cargo of gold. For 100 years, the story has been told ending with the promise that when the great fog returns so will the drowned men demanding vengeance.

On the eve of the centennial festivities of Antonio Bay in northern California, a pea-soup fog, defying nature by moving against the wind, mysteriously engulfs the village, and ghostly mariners rise from the ocean's waves.

Real-Life Drama

Come this May, John Aniston of "Search for Tomorrow" will march down the aisle with longtime sweetheart Sherry Rooney. The couple met several years ago on another daytime drama.

Back To School

Popular daytime actress Colleen Zenk, known to serial fans as the beleaguered Barbara Stenbeck on "As the World Turns," will be heading for her home town of Barrington, Ill., for an event that's very special to her. Miss Zenk will host and perform at a special variety show at her old alma mater, Barrington High School, to benefit their arts department, along with several Chicago arts figures who are also graduates.

Hope Begins PGA Coverage

How can things possibly get any better on the PGA Tour than in the past couple of years? The great four-man money chase of 1981, which wasn't decided until the season's final event, was drama enough. And 1982 provided more than its share of thrills, including Tom Watson's "miracle at Pebble Beach," Bob Gilder's televised double-eagle at Westchester, Jerry Pate's TPC aquatic act, and money leader Craig Stadler's nerve-racking playoff victories in the Masters and World Series of Golf.

With the taste of these exciting moments still fresh in their mouths, golf enthusiasts everywhere are eagerly awaiting the start of the 1983 season on television. NBC will try to satisfy the fans on Sunday, Jan. 23, when it broadcasts the final round of the 24th annual Bob Hope Desert Classic.

The $429,000 star-studded extravaganza, a unique 90-hole tournament in which a professional forms a foursome with three amateur golfers, will be contested at one of the four host clubs — Bermuda Dunes, Indian Wells, La Quinta and Tamarisk — which are located in the Palm Springs (Calif.) area. The final round will be played at La Quinta.

In addition to tournament host Bob Hope, celebrity golfers such as former President Gerald Ford, singers Andy Williams and Sammy Davis Jr., and Speaker of the House of Representatives Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill are expected to participate.

Equally impressive is the list of pro golfers, a glowing line-up that features nine of the top 12 PGA 1982 money winners, including Stadler, who won the event in 1980. Other notables include defending champion Ed Fiori, 1982 PGA winner Ray Floyd, last year's Hope runner-up Tom Kite, and former Desert Classic champions Jack Nicklaus (1963), Arnold Palmer (1960, 1962, 1968, 1971 and 1973), Johnny Miller (1975 and 1976) and Bruce Lietzke (1981).

The 44 official events on this year's PGA Tour feature the new All Exempt format, which dramatically alters the decades-old system of filling tournament fields.

Under provisions of the All Exempt Tour, the dreaded ritual of Monday Qualifying has been eliminated, and all PGA members will be free to enter the events they wish with exempt status, provided the fields are not already filled by players with higher priority rankings.

Since every player is now exempt from qualifying, travel schedules can be confirmed earlier and wasted expenses can be eliminated. For tournament sponsors, the All Exempt format is also of benefit, since tournament fields will now be determined nearly a week earlier than has been the case, allowing several additional days during which sponsors can publicize their events.

"Grace Kelly," the dramatic two-hour movie based on the life of the beautiful princess, will air Monday, Feb. 14, starring CHERYL LADD. Her Serene Highness had graciously consented to assist in the pre-production of the film approximately six weeks before her tragic death. Contrary to other reports, her participation and input had been ongoing from that time until her death.

RICHARD PRYOR, a man of many talents, is now turning to producing. His new contract with Columbia Pictures calls for him to star in a specified number of films for the next five years and to co-produce at least one movie a year.

ROBIN WILLIAMS is refusing all out-of-town engagements for the month of April. The Williamses are expecting their first child at that time and Robin has promised Valerie he will be there!

JANE SEYMOUR has signed a six-figure contract with Max Factor to endorse their new fragrance, "Le Jardin de Max Factor" — this will be the British beauty's first venture in the commercial field.

There is still some magic left in Hollywood — DON MESSICK, currently only recognized as the voice of Papa Smurf, was signed by producer Hal Landers to make his acting debut as Harold Lloyd in the multimillion-dollar movie "The Harold Lloyd Story." Expecting to audition actors for weeks, Landers was surprised to spot Don at the studio. He not only looks like Lloyd but also has his mannerisms, his slim build and can act.

DICK VAN DYKE is still laughing — while on location at the downtown L.A. library for his aged, bewhiskered and seedy character role in "The Wrong Way Kid," Dick went from floor to floor during breaks in filming to beg money for a cup of coffee — He not only went unrecognized, but also couldn't raise a single dime.

What do you dread most? — J.D., Vancouver, Wash.

Loneliness. To me there is nothing more horrible than being completely alone, not having my adored ones around me. In my most frightening nightmare, every single person I know has vanished, leaving me all by myself in the world.

JACK LA LANNE

As far as exercise goes, what do you think of jogging? — J.G. Texarkana, Tex.

Why not ask me, "What do I think of carrots?" Jogging is one part of exercising the way carrots are one type of vegetable. Most joggers make the mistake of not going through supplementary exercises. The rest of the body needs work along with the knees, feet and legs. Most marathon runners are emaciated. They need building up in other areas. Joggers will find that their legs get worn out and other parts of their bodies, like their hips, need help. So it's O.K. to jog if you do other exercises, too.

The dimming of a superstar: Was Elvis going blind?

FROM THE "ASK" EDITORS

LOS ANGELES — Barbra Streisand wants nobody to rain on her parade. She has emphatically told M.G.M./United Artists that she'll need one full year to edit Yentl, the movie she produced, directed, wrote and starred in — and may even control the popcorn concession of. The film has long since finished its shooting in Czechoslovakia and London, but Barbra has told the studio not to expect a print of Yentl until November. The picture has gone way over its original $14 million budget, and Streisand's salary, pledged as a guarantee against cost overruns, is gone. Still, she will be cutting the picture in leisurely fashion at her ranch in Malibu. M.G.M./U.A. is understandably trying to sell part of Yentl to a tax-shelter group in England.... As if they need the money, Catherine Deneuve will be getting $1 million to do commercials this year for Alfa Romeo sports cars (she's made more than $1 million on her Chanel perfume ads). And Tom Selleck will break the million-dollar mark with his next feature film, Lassiter.... Mick Jagger tested for the role of Antonio Salieri in the movie version of Amadeus. Although "Amadeus" refers to Mozart, the role of his conniving rival, Salieri, will be the leading role in the movie as it was in the play. Of Jagger's screen test, director Milos Forman would only say, "Not bad, not bad at all."

—Robert Windeler

NEW YORK — Here's a possible new explanation of why Elvis Presley turned to the drugs that eventually claimed his life. "Elvis was going blind," says actor Vaughn Armstrong, a friend of the late rock 'n' roll idol. "When he learned he was losing his sight, he started using drugs and alcohol." Armstrong says that Elvis suggested to the pastor at his Memphis church that the congregation pray for his failing eyesight.... Says Faye Dunaway, whose next film is a remake of The Wicked Lady: "My 20's were not enjoyable. My 30's were a period of transition. That's why I intend to enjoy my 40's."... About his scene in My Favorite Year when he was made up to look 27, Peter O'Toole sighs, "I don't think I ever looked 27 in my entire life — not even when I was 27."... This gem somehow got left out of Life with Jackie, Irving Mansfield's upcoming Bantam book about his late wife, novelist Jacqueline Susann. In 1952, at the Concord Hotel in the Catskills, Jackie and Irving's TV viewing was interrupted by a knock on the door. Jackie opened it and almost fainted: Standing there, without a stitch of clothing on, was Sarah Churchill. Winston Churchill's daughter then asked nonchalantly, "May I borrow a cup of vodka?"

WASHINGTON — Remember Paula Parkinson, the Washington lobbyist and Playboy magazine nude model who shook Congress during the summer of '81 with claims that she had videotaped lawmakers frolicking in her boudoir? Although the videotapes never surfaced, the names of several prominent, married Congressmen did — largely because the legislators pointed accusing fingers at one another, while denying any relationship with the blonde. Well, just to show she harbors no hard feelings, Parkinson recently sent Mailgrams of condolence to three of the lame duck lawmakers: Rep. Thomas Railsback (R.-Ill.), Rep. Thomas Evans (R.-Del.), Rep. Thomas Hagedorn (R.-Minn.). "Sorry I can't be there to help clean out your desk," said Parkinson's Mailgram, which was signed, "With fond memories, Paula."... That other notorious Washington blonde, Rita Jenrette, has finally gotten her big movie break. Jenrette made no secret of her hope that telling about her life as a Congresswife and revealing almost all in Playboy would lead to a show biz career. Now, after two years in Hollywood pursuing acting jobs, she has landed a part in a thriller, The Picnic, which stars Saturday Night Fever's Karen Lynn Gorney. Meanwhile, her ex-husband, John Jenrette, one of the Abscam Congressmen convicted of bribery in 1980, is working in the import-export business in south Florida.

A N HOW MAD

By Mario

I suppose it began in the morning, with the letter I didn't get. Then, in the afternoon, my boss said he wouldn't have time to discuss the project I'd been giving my all to — things were just too hectic. Later, walking to my car at the end of the day, a group of guys standing on the street corner sent a few obnoxious "Hey, chick" comments my way.

It was almost 7 o'clock when I finally stopped at the supermarket to buy dinner. As I stood at the checkout counter, the man behind me announced — in a nasty tone of voice — that I had no right to be in the express checkout line, that I certainly had more than 10 items in my lousy shopping cart! Then he started to name them aloud: hamburger, tomato soup, Triscuits. . . . Suddenly I felt burning hot, almost faint and absolutely furious. What I wanted to do more than anything was shove the guy's teeth down his throat.

We all have the capacity for anger. Whether we tend to explode with rage or are able to cloak our fury with seeming calm, each of us has within him a ferocious beast capable of great destruction.

Anger is arguably almost a contemporary American style: We seem to live in a time of punk-rock rages, John McEnroe tantrums and Incredible Hulk cataclysms. And if these phenomena do indeed represent a widespread trend, then current research findings pose disturbing questions for angry individuals and for our culture itself. In recent years medical researchers have found conclusive evidence that intense anger can have disastrous effects on our physical and emotional health. Experts once advocated releasing anger, much as you'd release steam from a pressure cooker, but new findings indicate that anger can also be deadly whether you suppress it or vent it.

"Depending on whether you express your anger or hide it, you'll get different kinds of sickness," says Dr. Redford B. Williams Jr., of Duke University. "But in either case your anger will have adverse health consequences."

Marion Long is a journalist who writes for a variety of publications.

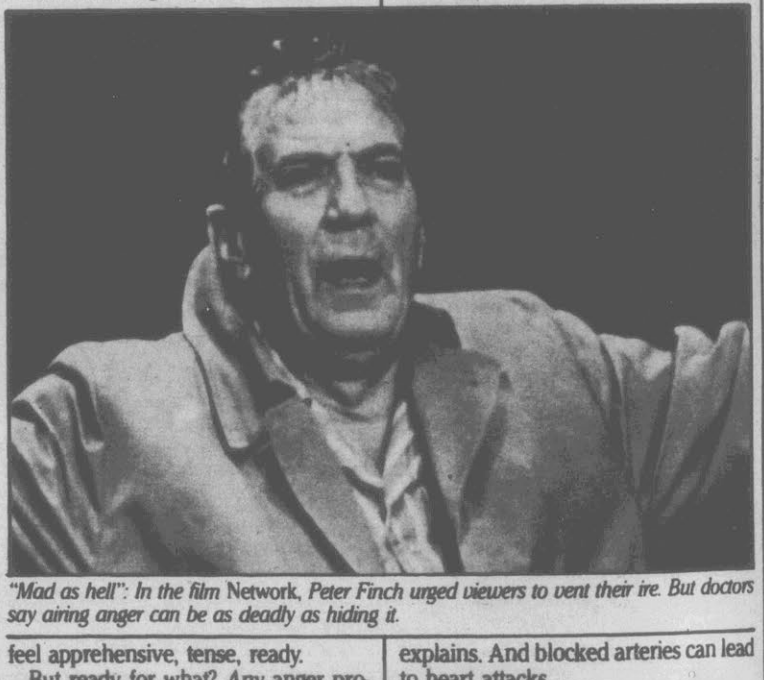
The physical hazards of being a hot-tempered, short-fused, hard-driving competitor were first documented by cardiologists Meyer Friedman and Ray Rosenman. In 1960, they administered tests to 3,500 men, ages 39 to 59, in 10 California corporations, in an attempt to gauge these men's level of anger and response to stress. They found that many of them were very angry indeed, and that underlying their anger was an attitude of deep hostility, an elemental distrust of other people. These characteristics were summed up as a "Type A" personality, compared to a more relaxed "Type B."

Anger helped cavemen survive. But when the sabertooth is your boss, you can neither run nor fight.

Drs. Friedman and Rosenman have followed this population of men for the past 22 years, and they have found that an appreciably greater number of men with high levels of anger have died than have other members of the test group. The subjects died from heart failure, cancer, accidents and suicide — and the death rate for those men with scores in the highest fifth on the anger scale was 50 percent higher than the mortality rate of those with scores in the lowest fifth.

Recently Dr. Williams administered a test known as an arteriogram to many of the subjects who are still living. (This procedure involves injecting dye into the coronary artery of the heart through a tube to see how badly blocked the subject's arteries are.) Williams found that those people with high scores on the original anger scale proved to have far more severe arteriosclerosis than did those men with lower scores.

You don't need to have a Type A personality to experience the negative effects of anger. In every angry situation, an individual experiences biochemical changes in the body, which can have long-term consequences. Adrenaline, a hormone so powerful it can sometimes flood the body with superhuman strength, is secreted in greater-than-normal amounts by the adrenal gland, electrifying the system for quick action. More blood, containing needed nourishment, is circulated. The heart races. The cholesterol level rises. The liver releases stored blood sugar and our blood pressure shoots up, forcing that sugar to the muscles and brain. The pupils dilate. The intestines shut down. Breathing is short and rapid. We feel apprehensive, tense, ready.



Movie Still Archives

"Mad as hell": In the film Network, Peter Finch urged viewers to vent their ire. But doctors say airing anger can be as deadly as hiding it.

But ready for what? Any anger produces these changes, not only true crisis situations that call for a quick response. Being stuck in traffic. An upsetting story in the newspaper. The faultfinding remark of a husband or wife. And when you initiate all these biochemical changes on a frequent basis, you're in trouble.

"Think of it in an evolutionary perspective," suggests Dr. Charles Spielberger, professor of psychology and director of the Center for Research in Community Psychology at the University of South Florida. "Our caveman ancestors were endowed with capacities for anger and fear. These were adaptive mechanisms and helped them survive a hostile environment. When the caveman met the sabertoothed tiger, feelings of anger would enable him to attack or escape from the situation. But when the sabertooth is your supervisor at work, you can neither run nor fight. You just sit there and stew in your own biochemical juices."

Even if you choose not to stew, and explode instead, those juices pour into your bloodstream nonetheless. If they are dispensed often enough, they can accumulate in the arteries, Spielberger explains. And blocked arteries can lead to heart attacks.

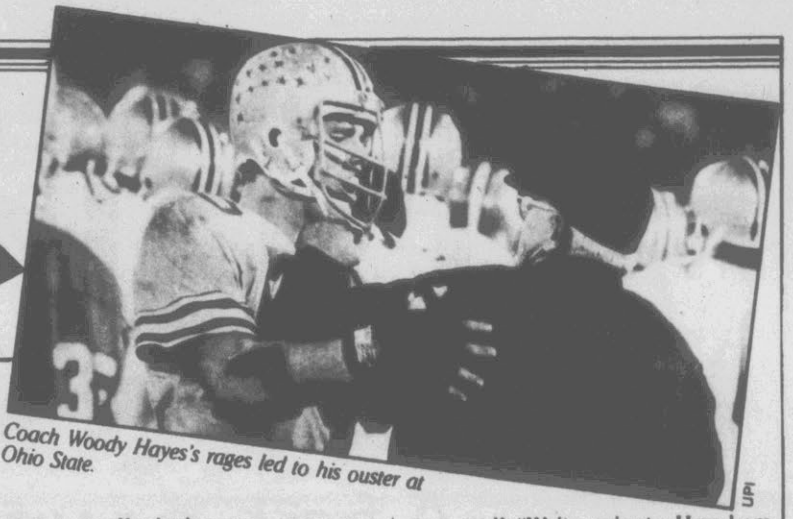
The solution to the problem, however, is not simply keeping a lid on your anger. People who regularly ignore or totally suppress aggressive feelings — particularly out of fear, guilt or a wish for approval — often become victims of chronic high blood pressure, also known as hypertension. A rise in blood pressure is a commonly recognized effect of anger. If the stress or anger continues, the rise in blood pressure persists, eventually resulting in a long-term state of hypertension.

"Feelings of repressed anger are also associated with migraine-headache attacks in many people," says Dr. Ken-

G E R

Long

IS BAD?



Coach Woody Hayes's rages led to his ouster at Ohio State.

neth Pelletier in his book Mind as Healer, Mind as Slayer (Dell). "Very often these feelings of anger are so well concealed that the patients themselves are not aware of them."

Dr. Pelletier also cites a number of other studies indicating that many people afflicted by certain diseases, including rheumatoid arthritis and ulcerative colitis, share particular personality traits. One of the most prominent of those traits is a difficulty or inability to express hostility or anger directly.

Some scientists now believe that repressed anger is related even to the development and progression of cancer. Dr. Marjorie Brooks of the National Society for Autistic Children in Philadelphia, has reported that a research team of which she was a member "looked at the life history patterns of about 400 cancer patients. We found that the patients had some very interesting similarities. Many of them seemed unable to express anger or hostility in defense of themselves."

In addition to a whole range of physical problems, there is, of course, a broad spectrum of emotional disturbances that result from anger. Hidden hostilities can lead to frustration and depression, whereas venting anger can lead to an escalation of conflicts in our personal and professional relationships.

If both venting anger and suppressing it are bad for us, what's the solution then? First of all, it's important to recognize that anger is not an abnormal emotion. It can be an appropriate emotion for anyone under certain circumstances. There are times for all of us when we reach the absolute limit of our patience. Once in a while, well-focused anger carefully handled can be a very effective tool in coping with a difficult situation. What we need to control is constant, excessive anger.

Restoring a state of balance to Type A, chronically angry adults is no easy matter. Dr. Rosenman, who has worked at trying to modify the behavior of cardiac patients for 25 years, says it can be all but impossible to get at these people's anger because of the severity and scope of the problem.

Rosenman believes drugs will ultimately be part of the answer. We will see, he suggests, a use of drugs to block the effects of the body's "anger hormones" at the coronary artery level. Such drugs would presumably be capable of preventing a great deal of coronary heart disease.

For those of us with less severe anger problems, it has been discovered that we can live more calmly and more reasonably through a technique known as cognitive therapy. The word cognitive means knowing or perceiving, and the idea, explains Dr. Spielberger, is to get people to rethink their angry responses, to deliberately reconstruct their attitudes.

"You see, it's the perception of each situation, the state of mind of the individual, which sets off the anger and the angry reaction," Spielberger says. "Change the state of mind and then you don't experience the anger."

Dr. David Burns of the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine, and author of Feeling Good: The New Mood Therapy (Wm. Morrow), writes: "The first step is to realize that it's ultimately your own thoughts, not what other people do, that cause your anger. Ask yourself whether your anger concerns something you can take action to resolve. If the cause of your anger cannot be changed — like the weather, or a traffic jam or another person's honest mistake, for example — you are simply expending fruitless energy."

It might work this way, suggests Dr. Williams: "Let's say you're in a bank line, and someone a few customers ahead of you can't find his bank card. You're getting more and more angry and you think to yourself, 'What is he doing here?!!! He came in here specifically to drive everyone crazy and keep us all from getting our business done.'"

You should admit to your anger in a detached way without becoming openly hostile.

But then you can take conscious control of yourself, Williams says, and say to yourself: "Wait a minute. Here I am getting all riled up and imputing all these evil motives to that poor fellow. I should quit doing that. He didn't come in here to sabotage my day. Maybe there's a good reason he's having difficulty." You shouldn't be a patsy for people who are actually mistreating you, Williams says, but you can train yourself to curb some of this needless rage: "You literally talk yourself out of it."

Sometimes your anger will be legitimate, but rather than blowing up or seething, there is a kind of safety-valve mechanism that should be your next choice of action. If you're angry because you've been unfairly put down by your employer or spouse or parent or local policeman, simmer down instead of letting off steam, says social psychologist Carol Tavris, author of Anger: The Misunderstood Emotion (Simon and Schuster).

Scientists at the University of Michigan School of Public Health studied the blood pressure of people who became angry when unfairly confronted by authority figures. Those who bottled up their anger had the highest blood pressure and those who became openly hostile had the second highest blood pressure. People who took action to resolve their anger had the lowest, the researchers noted.

This kind of constructive action means that you acknowledge your anger, in a detached manner, and explore possible solutions — without being openly hostile.

A long-range solution to controlling unnecessary anger may involve changing the way we live. Certainly anger has always been with us, but to many people it seems to have escalated over the past few decades.

There are many reasons for this, suggests Dr. James Comer, associate dean of the Yale Medical School. "Even 50 years ago," Comer says, "this country was much more rural. People knew each other and trusted each other. Now we are mainly an urban population and much of our sense of direction has been lost. People have a feeling that the world is closing in on them. They feel there are too many people around now — people feel powerless and ripped off. Some explode from anger and frustration."

The recently published atlas of the National Institutes of Health includes a group of maps showing rates of mortality in each state from strokes, high blood pressure and coronary disease. "It's intriguing to see," says Dr. Rosenman, "that you have by far the highest rates of death in the areas where there are high manufacturing levels and high population levels. Also, there has been a significant decline in death due to heart attack and stroke both in California and Florida, despite the fact that in both states you have a constantly increasing migration of older people who are at greater risk because of age alone. I believe the mortality decline has occurred because in those areas you've had social changes aiming at a more relaxed and easygoing way of life."

There are those who think anger is

Says one expert, "Where you have crowding and socioeconomic ills, you are going to find more anger."

learned behavior and others who feel a person is born angry. These state-by-state sociological studies make some convincing arguments about the causes of our anger. "Aggression and anger are not instinctive," Rosenman insists. "Where you have crowding and socioeconomic ills, you are going to find more anger and aggression and more crime and destructive behavior."

One group of studies suggests that meaningful differences in care during childhood have some effect on a person's later potential for anger. Dr. Williams points out that cross-cultural studies of child-rearing practices in Japan and the United States have shown that Japanese mothers hover over their infants with great alertness. American mothers, by contrast, go in and comfort their babies if they cry but do not try so much to prevent them from becoming distressed. (This may be in keeping with our Protestant ethic, which holds that you must train children to be independent.) The incidence of coronary disease in Japan, Williams points out, is much lower than in the United States. "The Japanese people are certainly not less ambitious or alert or quick than Americans," Williams says, "but one characteristic they appear to possess more commonly than do Americans is the sense of trust in and dependence upon one's fellow humans."

Regardless of the reasons, we do seem to live in an angry age, and it's up to each one of us to find a separate peace. Concludes Dr. Williams: "The Bible, from the Old Testament to the New Testament, is filled with all these injunctions: to love rather than hate people, to not let the sun set on your anger. I'm not saying that you shouldn't get angry just because the Bible says you shouldn't, but because you should realize that if you let your anger get the better of you, it's going to be bad for you. It's going to make you feel worse emotionally. It's going, perhaps, to make you sick. Maybe it will kill you." FW

PEOPLE QUIZ

DOES IT PAY TO LOOK SOMEONE IN THE EYE?

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. The impression you make on others is more often influenced by what you do for a living than how you look and act.
2. We don't see ourselves as others do.
3. The most successful people are also the shrewdest judges of human nature.
4. People seldom make judgments about your personality from your facial features.
5. Looking steadily at the person to whom you are talking affects the way that person sizes you up.

ANSWERS

1. True. A Rutgers University study on social perception demonstrates that your occupation often plays a more important part in the impression you make on others than your real personality, general attitude and the way you speak and behave. In one of the experiments, for example, subjects watched a videotape of a woman who was identified either as a waitress or a librarian. The subjects more aptly remembered characteristics of the woman that were consistent with their concept of either a waitress or librarian, rather than the woman's actual self.
2. False. As investigators observed in a study conducted at Harvey Mudd College (Calif.), most of us probably have wondered at one time or another whether we appear to others as we appear to ourselves. To find out the answer, behavioral scientists had undergraduates fill out personal-inventory questionnaires rating themselves on behavior, attitudes and general personality characteristics. The results were compared with the ratings given by their peers and showed that self-ratings and ratings by others tended to be in general agreement.
3. True. How successful a person is in achieving his goals depends to a large extent on his ability to size up situations accurately and take advantage of the opportunities they offer, as well as being able to size up individuals. Psychological studies at Austin Peay State University (Tenn.) show that individuals who are efficient at recognizing and understanding the attitudes and motivations of others are also effective in making social evaluations.
4. False. Studies of individual differences in face perception, conducted at the University of Illinois show that we do judge others by their facial features. The researchers found that when undergraduates were asked to make personality judgments from front-view facial photographs, selected from 100 different faces, facial characteristics played an important part in the judgments. Some features that were rated the most desirable — being perceived as relaxed, honest, pleasant, calm, nonthreatening, attractive, sensitive, likable and social — were normal chins (compared to double chins) and narrow foreheads (versus wide foreheads).
5. True. Studies of the effects of nonverbal behavior conducted at the College of Charleston (S.C.) show that those who gaze steadily at a person during some interaction are judged to be more sincere. And at North East London Polytechnic, a team of investigators using 80 men and women, between ages 20 and 60, as subjects, studied the effects of a steady gaze in a real life setting in which a person soliciting money for charity either looked a possible donor in the eye or looked at the money tin. Significantly more money was donated in the former situation. PW

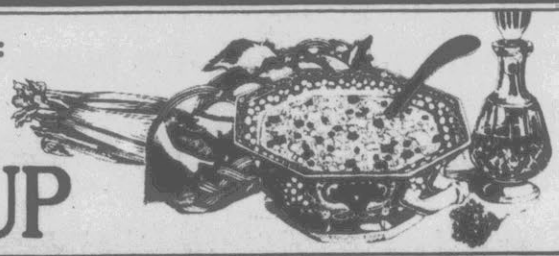
FOOD

From a Famous American Restaurant:

FABULOUS BLACK BEAN SOUP



By Marilyn Hansen

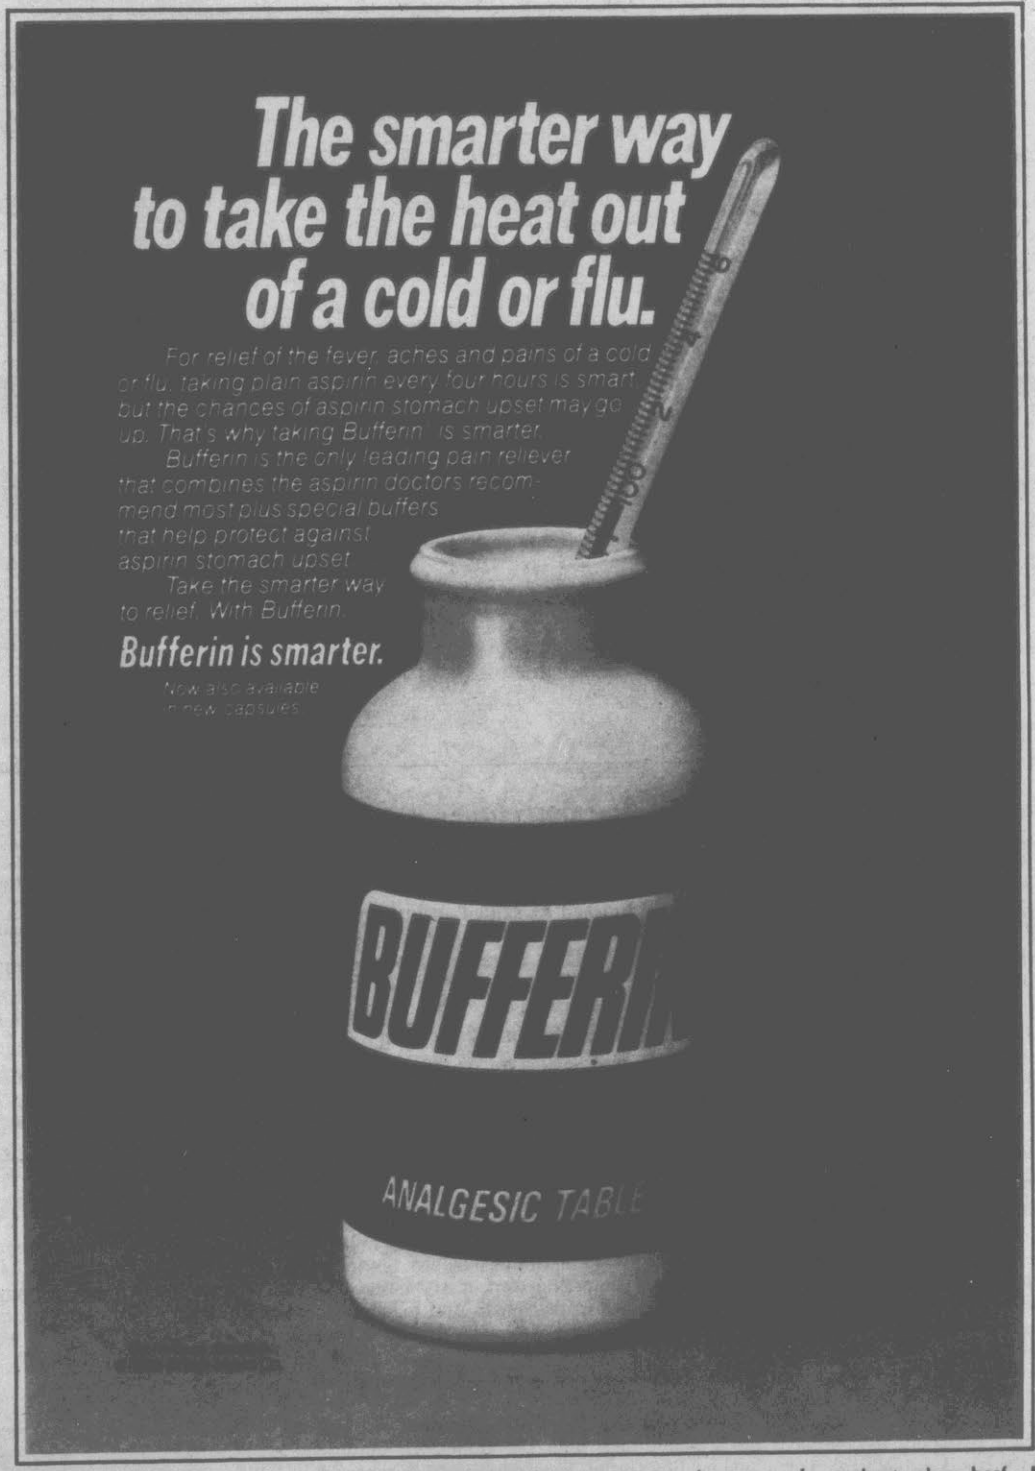
Soup, wonderful soup: It's one of the most comforting of foods. But some soups are created more equal than others. Most likely, at the top of everyone's list is black bean soup: dark, thick, smooth and steamy, with just a hint of sherry adding to the richness of its flavor undertones. To find the ultimate recipe for this delicious soup, we consulted noted food authority and cookbook author James Beard. Without hesitation, he told us we'd find it at a favorite restaurant of his, The Coach House in Greenwich Village, New York City.

Snugly situated in a former 19th-century carriage house, this restaurant is world famous for its traditional American foods served for over 33 years. "Here at The Coach House we have perfected a civilized soup, taming the earthy ingredients," says owner Leon Lianides. "First we start with a rich stock, then in goes the pearl-sized black bean itself and, finally, the pureeing and garnishing. People come from all over to taste the soup, to look at it and at the beans we make it from."

At the restaurant, black bean soup is most often served to start a full-course meal, but it also makes a wonderful main dish in itself.

MENU

The Coach House Black Bean Soup
Hot Corn Bread with Blue Cheese
Mixed Greens Salad
Beaujolais Villages or California Cabernet Sauvignon



THE COACH HOUSE BLACK BEAN SOUP

- 3 lbs. beef bones
- ¾ lb. beef shin
- 3 lbs. smoked ham shank with bone and rind
- 15 cups water
- 3 cloves
- ¼ teaspoon black peppercorns
- ¼ teaspoon celery seed
- 2½ cups dried black beans
- 10 cups water
- 1 cup chopped onions
- ½ cup chopped celery
- 2 cups water
- 9 cups stock
- 2 large cloves garlic, chopped
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
- ¼ cup sherry or Madeira

Garnishes: thin slices lemon, chopped parsley, chopped hard-cooked egg, chopped watercress, sour cream

1. Make stock a day before ready to use. In stockpot, place beef bones, beef shin, ham shank, 15 cups water, cloves, peppercorns and celery seed. Bring to boiling, reduce heat and simmer half-covered, 8 to 10 hours.

2. Strain stock and reserve meat for other uses; discard bones. Refrigerate stock.

3. Soak beans in 10 cups water overnight in refrigerator.

4. Next day, remove fat from surface of cold stock. In stockpot, place onions, celery and 2 tablespoons of fat from the stock. Cook, stirring, until soft.

5. Add drained soaked beans, 2 cups water, 9 cups stock and garlic; add water if needed. Bring to boiling, reduce heat and simmer uncovered 2½ to 3 hours, stir now and then. Keep beans covered with liquid; if necessary, add water.

6. When beans are very soft, puree the soup. Use a food mill, food processor or a blender, pureeing a little at a time until fairly smooth.

7. Return pureed soup to the stockpot. Add salt, pepper and sherry. Heat until soup boils and is piping hot. Ladle into warm soup bowls and garnish with lemon slices, chopped parsley, and chopped hard-cooked egg. You can also use chopped watercress and sour cream.

Makes 12 servings

Note: Black Bean Soup can be made several days before and refrigerated or labeled and frozen until ready to be used.

THE COACH HOUSE CORN STICKS

- ½ cup yellow cornmeal
- 1½ cups unsifted all-purpose flour
- 4 tablespoons sugar
- 1 tablespoon baking powder
- ¾ teaspoon salt
- ¾ cup milk
- 2 eggs
- ½ cup vegetable shortening

1. In a large bowl, combine cornmeal, flour, sugar, baking powder and salt.

2. Add milk and beat until blended. Add eggs one at a time, beating well after each addition.

3. In a small skillet, partially melt shortening. Mix well into batter. Cover bowl and refrigerate batter 1 hour.*

4. Preheat oven to 500°. Grease cast-iron corn-stick pans (each mold 5×1½ inches) well with shortening and place in oven until very hot, about 5 minutes. Fill pastry bag (without tip) and pipe batter into hot molds.

5. Bake corn sticks until tops are golden brown, about 15 minutes. Quickly turn out of pans and serve immediately.

6. Alternate method: Grease a 8×8×2-inch pan with shortening and heat in 425° oven until very hot, about 5 minutes. Pour in corn-stick batter; smooth surface with wet spatula. Bake for about 20 minutes, until top is golden brown. Cut corn bread into squares. Serve immediately, with butter.

Makes 2 dozen corn sticks or 12 corn-bread squares

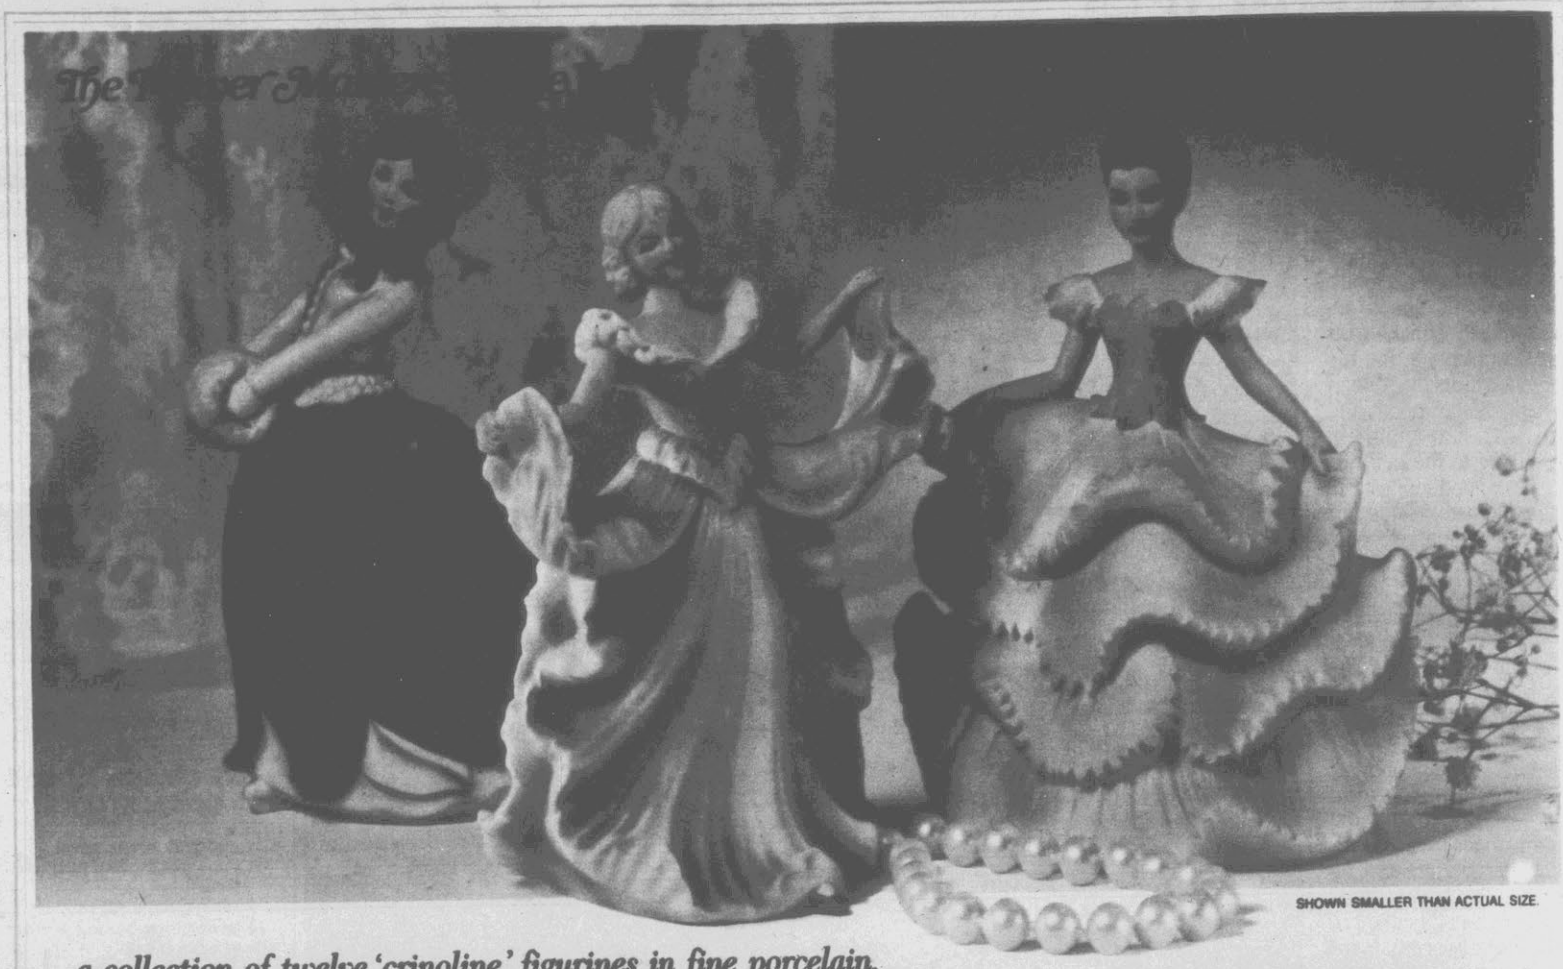
Build your own beautiful collection of enchanting hand-painted porcelain figurines—for just $35 each.



SHOWN SMALLER THAN ACTUAL SIZE.

a collection of twelve 'crinoline' figurines in fine porcelain, each representing the flower of a different month of the year.

Available only by direct order.

For earliest shipment, please mail your order by February 28, 1983.

These are The Flower Maidens of the Year, delicate beauties in a great collecting tradition. For each is a porcelain figurine, finely crafted and completely hand-painted, in a style treasured by collectors for over two centuries.

Hand-painted porcelain figurines in a great collecting tradition

Fine hand-painted "crinoline" figurines such as these have brought pleasure to collectors through many generations. Indeed, the early crinoline figurines of such great porcelain houses as Royal Doulton, Dresden and Royal Worcester are cherished heirlooms, eagerly sought-after in antique shops all over the world. And now you can build your own collection of these elegant figurines from the very beginning ...

Here in deep red is Jocelyn, lovely Lady of the Poinsettia ... and there in delicate pink is Victoria, Lady of the Carnation ... and Elizabeth, in rich purple, the majestic Lady of the Iris. A virtual garden of beautiful flower maidens, each representing a different month of the year.

Each individual figurine is crafted of fine bisque porcelain, painted entirely by hand in true-to-life colors and hand-finished by skilled artisans in Japan. Each measures approximately 5" in height. And the reasonable price of $35 is guaranteed to you for each of the twelve hand-painted sculptures in the collection, despite any rise in our costs.

Convenient acquisition plan

Your figurines will be sent to you at the rate of one every other month, beginning with Elizabeth the Lady Iris. And you may pay for each on a convenient monthly basis. With each individual figurine, you will also receive an interesting commentary about the work of art portrayed and the flower for that month.

A pleasure to collect ... a joy to display

In your home, family and friends alike will delight to the beauty of these enchanting maidens. For individually, each is a compelling work of art—fascinating to the eye, pleasing to the touch. And together, they form a collection that will be a focal point of beauty for any room in which they are placed. A gallery of artistic treasures to be enjoyed and admired throughout the years to come.

Please note that The Flower Maidens of the Year are available only from The Collectors Studio and only by direct order. To assure earliest shipment, it is important that you mail your order by February 28, 1983. Simply mail the attached order form to The Collectors Studio Inc., 800 Third Avenue, New York, New York by February 28th.

Skater Scott Hamilton

NEW HEIGHTS OF COURAGE ON ICE

By Barry Wilner

It's a long way from a childhood in a wheelchair to the men's world figure skating title. Just ask Scott Hamilton, who has triple-jumped to the top of the skating world after spending four years of his youth battling a rare disease that stunted his growth.

Now, at 24, the 5-foot-3, 112-pound whirling whiz on ice is about to defend the U.S. and world crowns he's won the last two years — the first American with successive world titles since Tim Wood in 1969-70.

Actually, skating was more therapy than anything else for Hamilton while growing up in Bowling Green, Ohio. When he was 5 years old, he began suffering from a rare ailment called Schwachman's Disease. "The disease is similar to cystic fibrosis," he explains, "and it paralyzes the intestines, which stopped my growing. I'd eat and become bloated. I had a big stomach and skinny little legs." He spent the next four years traveling among hospitals in an unsuccessful search for a cure.

Then Hamilton went to a rink to watch his doctor's children skate and decided it was something he'd like to try. So he got up out of his wheelchair one day in 1967 and took his first steps on the ice. Ten months later, he was skating in competition.

"The more I skated, the more muscles I got," he says. "One year, I grew seven inches. I went from tiny to small."

Hamilton developed knee problems from his rapid growth, but today that's all behind him, he says. One look at him performing all his twists, turns and jumps, soaring and spinning through the air like a hyperactive munchkin helicopter, and it is clear that here is a master in action. In fact, in a sport where most of the attention through the years has been focused on women — from Sonja Henie to Peggy Fleming to Dorothy Hamill — Hamilton today is probably the most popular skater, male or female, in the world.

"Scotty is a tremendously exciting competitor and always turns on the crowd, which lifts his performances even higher," says former skating champ Dick Button. "He thrives on the competition, the difficulty of his routine and the reactions of the fans."

Skating fans will have plenty of chances to see Hamilton in action. Next week, he'll defend his national title at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships in Pittsburgh. Then in March it's off to the World Championships in Helsinki, where he'll be challenged by topflight bladerunners Norbert Schramm of West Germany, Brian Pockar of Canada and Jean-Christophe Simond of France.

Hamilton: Everything's comin' up roses.

And then, of course, come the 1984 Olympics in Yugoslavia. Hamilton was a surprise choice to the 1980 U.S. team; only a strong performance in the nationals helped him sneak in. He wound up fifth at Lake Placid, but those Games hold a special place in his heart because he was chosen by his fellow athletes to carry the American flag in the opening ceremonies. "That was about the greatest thrill anyone could have," he recalls. "Whenever I think about it, I get a lump in my throat."

The few times during the year when he's not on the road, Hamilton lives in Denver. Aside from hinting that he might like to coach skating someday, he remains mum about his future — a future that could no doubt include a lucrative contract on the pro tour. "Right now the Olympics are in my future — I hope," he says. "I don't want to think about turning pro until after that. The Olympics are a big step even though I've already been there, because I might wind up going this time as the world champion."

In the pressure-packed, political world of international figure skating, Hamilton's popularity among his peers is unusual. Image is almost as important as skill because judging is so subjective — and often nationalistic. But, as Button says, "Scotty seems to cut across the nationalistic bounds. He's not considered an American out there. He's simply a champion." FW

MONEY

HAVE A MERRY, PRO$PEROU$ NEW YEAR

By Merrie Spaeth

Susan Bondy

The start of a new year is always a good time for resolutions, and what could be more important than good resolutions about money? For direction on what makes sense for 1983, FAMILY WEEKLY spoke with financial consultant Susan Bondy, author of How to Make Money Using Other People's Money (Bobbs-Merrill).

Q: Ms. Bondy, what should a family's first financial resolution be for the new year?

A: To start an automatic-savings plan. If you actually have to think about how much to put away each month, it's too easy to be distracted by a birthday, a quasi emergency or something else. But if the money "disappears," you can't procrastinate. The amount doesn't have to be large; $10 each month will do for a start. The money can be transferred later into stocks, I.R.A.'s, saving certificates or money market funds. Automatic payroll savings plans are available to most Americans, and automatic transfers of funds from checking into savings are provided by almost all banks.

Q: What are some cost-cutting resolutions a family can make?

A: The most obvious is refinancing a house if less expensive mortgage money exists. The second largest budget item for many families is college tuition. Yet people often don't pay enough attention to outside sources of funds. It's estimated that 43 percent of private scholarship money went unclaimed last year because parents didn't know how to match up the special talents or characteristics of college-age offspring with available funds. Scholarships sponsored by church groups, corporations and other organizations should be looked into.

Q: What about managing bills?

A: I have a plan called a "homemade bill consolidation loan." A big expense is interest on credit-card accounts, auto loans and the like. Take advantage of cheaper money, such as a credit union, if you have access to it, and pay off those other expensive loans. This can mean hundreds of dollars in savings for 1983.

Q: Are there any other overall guidelines?

A: The homemade bill consolidation loan illustrates an important maxim. Pay attention to dollars. Too many people spend hours in the supermarket, shaving cents when they should be focusing on decisions which would total thousands of dollars. FW

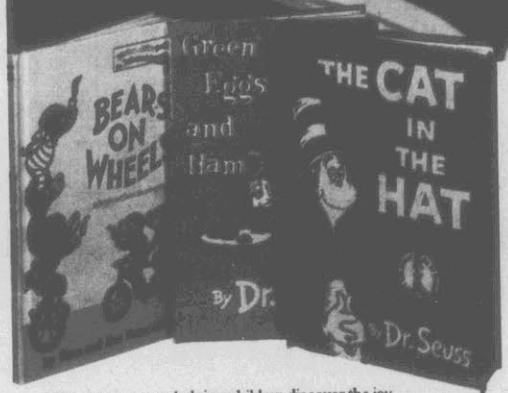
THERE IS ONLY ONE DR. SEUSS.

Here's how he turns a child on to reading.



When it comes to helping children discover the joy of reading, nobody does it like Dr. Seuss. His marvelous stories, appealing characters, and colorful illustrations are so full of fun, kids return to them again and again.

The words are just right for young readers, too. They're in large, clear type. They often tell the story in rhyme. And they're so closely related to the pictures that, with a little help from Mom or Dad, even pre-schoolers can start reading all by themselves. And the best part is that when a child is turned on to reading by Dr. Seuss and his friends, he generally stays turned on to reading for life.

A HAPPY START FROM THE ONLY BOOK CLUB WITH DR. SEUSS.

This is a wonderful time to introduce your child to Dr. Seuss and his friends, and these three books are ideal starters: "The Cat in the Hat" by Dr. Seuss, "Green Eggs and Ham" by Dr. Seuss and "Bears on Wheels" featuring the famous Berenstain Bears. We'll send your child all three, which cost $14.85 at the regular retail price, and bill you for only $1.00 plus shipping and handling.

PLUS BIG SAVINGS, A FREE GIFT.

So send now. And along with three introductory books for less than the price of one, we'll include, free, The Cat in the Hat canvas tote bag shown on this page. It's a gift your child will love and it's yours to keep free even if you should decide to return the three books and tear up the bill. Please read full details in the order form, then fill it out and mail it today.

WINTER FITNESS GUIDE

Exercise photos by Don Hunstein; Showscape, Four by Five.

EASIEST EVER (HONEST!) EXERCISES
TIPS FOR STAYING HEALTHY
THE BEST BOOKS AND RECORDS FOR GETTING IN SHAPE NOW

By Charles Kuntzleman

If you're tempted to just sit back and take a break from your exercise routine this winter, consider this: Not only will your shape suffer, but you'll also be more vulnerable to the chills of winter. In a study of military infantrymen, researchers found that after the soldiers became physically fit, they had warmer skin temperatures when exposed to the cold than before they got into shape. What this study shows is that increased physical fitness produces good adaptation to the cold weather, concludes Steven Horvath, Ph.D., professor of exercise physiology and biomedical engineering at the University of California, Santa Barbara.

You don't have to brave the elements to perform many of the exercises we're recommending — swimming, weightlifting, gymnastics, calisthenics, racquetball, squash — but if you do enjoy winter sports such as skiing and skating, you should exercise some caution.

Dr Kuntzleman is the national director of Living Well, a corporate wellness program with headquarters in Texas. This article is based on his new book, Aerobics With Fun (Arbor Press).

Preparation

As your metabolism speeds up through exercise, you produce body heat. Outdoors, you need to keep heat close to your body in order to stay warm. Do that by adding the right kind of clothing.

How you dress depends on the sport. For instance, in very cold weather many joggers wear running shorts as well as two pairs of sweatpants, one light, the other heavy. On the upper body, a thin turtleneck and a T-shirt followed by a sweatshirt will offer good protection. (Several thin layers are better than one heavy article of clothing because air gets trapped in between the layers like insulation.) Add a light nylon parka on windy days. Mittens are warmer than gloves. For snow sports, you'll want your outermost layer to be waterproof. And wear a hat — or you'll be like a thermos bottle without a lid — because 80 percent of your body heat is lost through the head.

Some people avoid exercising in cold weather because they think breathing cold air will freeze their lungs. Not so. Even in the coldest weather, your body can warm the air as it enters the lungs. If you experience discomfort in the throat and chest when breathing hard, and you're sure it is not related to a more serious health problem, wear a scarf over your mouth.

Another concern is hypothermia, in which body temperature drops below 98.6 degrees. Dehydration and exercising in high altitudes lower body temperature and make you more susceptible to hypothermia, as do wet clothes and overexertion. Cold weather is not the only cause: It is possible to suffer hypothermia in temperatures of 50 degrees depending on certain factors. You needn't worry about this if you dress properly and return to a warm environment immediately after exercising (never remain outdoors in wet clothes). The real danger of cold air is that it slows down the heart rate, reducing the flow of blood to the heart. For people with heart disease, this can be hazardous and produce chest pain. These individuals may want to exercise inside when the temperature drops below 32 degrees.

Whether you exercise outside or indoors, your workout should consist of three elements: a warm up to prevent injury and prepare the body for activity; a peak period to condition the heart, lungs and muscles while burning a significant number of calories; and a cool down to allow the body to return to a near-normal resting level.

The Warm Up

Indoors or out, going quickly from a sedentary state into vigorous exercise isn't wise, so spend a few minutes on warm-up exercises. Drs. Fred Kasch and John Boyer, both formerly of San Diego State College, have found that a good warm up prepares the joints for further action by increasing the synovial fluid — the fluid that lubricates the joints — and by thickening the joint tissue. A proper warm up increases the elasticity of the muscles and tendons, helps prevent strains, begins to open up blood pathways to the muscles being used and gradually increases the heart rate. It also raises the temperature of the muscles and helps biochemical reactions that supply energy to the muscle tissues.

How important is warming up? Very. A study by Dr. R. James Barnard of U.C.L.A. tested healthy policemen and firefighters, focusing on their responses to the sudden, hard exercise of running on a treadmill. The subjects showed striking electrocardiograph changes which meant that their hearts were not getting enough oxygen. (If you start exercising strenuously without warming up, your body's demand for oxygen will be greater than what the heart can supply.) Subsequent tests, preceded by a warm up, revealed normal electrocardiographs. The study has implications for winter exercise: One reason people suffer heart attacks while shoveling snow is because of an inadequate warm up.

Warm up slowly as you move the limb or body part through its full range of motions. As the body warms up, the repetitions can be done more rapidly. (See our warm-up exercises.)

A good rule of thumb is to warm up for eight to 10 minutes. Devote five to seven minutes to joint preparation and the remaining time to light aerobic activity. Walking and gradually quickening your pace is a good cardiovascular warm up, and one that's especially effective when joint-preparation exercises are done while you walk.

Warm-Up Exercises

1) Swing arms alternately forward and backward. The hands should reach at least shoulder height on the forward swing. Reach higher as your program continues. This exercise improves shoulder flexibility.

2) While walking, clasp your hands overhead, then bend alternately to the left and right. This helps stretch lateral muscles of the trunk.

3) Swing both arms across the body, then reverse the action by swinging both arms sideways and back as far as possible. This helps prevent a round-shouldered appearance.

4) While walking, twist the upper half of your body from left to right. This improves trunk flexibility.

5) Walk erect with eyes forward, chest elevated and shoulders and arms in a relaxed position. Toes and heels should point straight ahead. Raise the left knee to waist height, then return it to the floor. Repeat with the right foot. This exercise strengthens leg muscles, stimulates the cardiovascular system.

6) Stand with feet together. First, do a quarter knee bend. As you do, move both arms to the right as though you were using ski poles on the side. Second, return to starting position. Third, do a quarter knee bend and move both arms to the left. Note: Arms actually make figure eights across the body from right to left.

"Oooooooo!" "Aaaahhhh!" "Mmmmmm!"

"Heyyyyyy!" "Yeahhhhh!" "Sayyyyyy!"

FITNESS GUIDE

Peak Work

This is the most important and most beneficial part of your workout. You may decide on one regular sport or form of exercise for winter or several types (for instance, jogging on a few days during the week and cross-country skiing on the weekends), and you may wish to vary outdoor with indoor activity. But you must spend at least 15 minutes a day, three days a week working out in order for it to be beneficial. People who are fit can exercise for a considerable length of time at a high level of intensity. For beginners, the duration may be only 10 minutes, with lower intensity. If you've decided on a calisthenics program, lengthen the exercise period 30 seconds to a minute with each new session. Through proper physical training you'll eventually improve the efficiency of your cardiovascular system by 20 to 30 percent. Keep in mind that some sports will meet your physical fitness needs better than others: Jogging and cross-country skiing are good for the cardiovascular system; squash helps weight control; calisthenics promote flexibility; and skating and downhill skiing increase your sense of balance.

Most people think that becoming physically fit through aerobic exercise is hard work, but that's not the case. Many forms of continuous, rhythmic exercise — such as swimming and calisthenics — improve aerobic fitness and aren't difficult. The only requirement: Your activity must be performed during nonstop sessions, and you must do it at least three times a week.

The following chart will help you determine how high you should keep your pulse rate during the peak work section of your workout. The lower numbers are for the less fit, the higher numbers for the more fit. Note: To take your pulse, place your forefinger and middle finger on your wrist or throat. Multiply the number of beats you count in 15 seconds by four. This will give you your pulse rate.

When taking your pulse, only stop your workout for 15 seconds or your heartbeat will begin to drop and the reading won't be accurate.

Age	Exercise Heart Rate Range
10	147-178
15	143-174
20	140-170
25	136-166
30	133-161
35	129-157
40	126-153
45	122-149
50	119-144
55	115-140
60	112-136
65	108-131
70	105-127

The chart is only a guide, so use the information judiciously. If working at your exercise heart rate seems too difficult, back off some. If it seems too easy, push yourself a little more.

Cool Down

When you stop exercising abruptly, your heart continues to pump vigorously. But because the muscles are no longer active, the blood tends to pool in the muscles and veins. By cooling down you allow the heart to slow down gradually, you avoid a traffic jam in the circulatory system and you are less likely to feel light-headed following the workout. To slow down your body, begin by doing some of the warm-up exercises you did before. Then, spend the final few minutes of the cool down on stretching exercises. The rapid muscle movements you perform during the peak work phase can cause soreness and tight muscles. By stretching you reduce the chances of having tight, sore muscles following the workout. Get into the position the exercise calls for, then stretch to the point where you feel a "tug" on the muscle. Hold that position and concentrate on relaxing the muscle. As you relax, stretch even further. Hold for 10 seconds. (See our cool-down exercises.)

Cool-down exercises help reduce the chance of tight, sore muscles.

After you've completed the cool-down activities, sit and relax for several minutes. This helps reduce overall stress and tension and helps to lower your pulse and blood pressure.

Cool-Down Exercises

Don Hunstein

1) Stand with hands behind the head, fingers interlocked. Draw your elbows back as far as possible and hold. Draw elbows forward and try to touch them together. Hold and repeat. The first part of this stretch benefits the chest muscles; the second, your upper back.

2) Kneel on the floor, sit back on your heels and look at your knees as you reach forward with your hands. Keep your seat down and continue to focus on your knees. Once you've reached as far forward as possible, press down against the floor with your hands and you'll feel your shoulders stretch. Hold and repeat.

3) Sit on the floor with your left leg straight and right leg bent. Tuck your SYNOMETRICS...an Olympic Champion's Discovery!

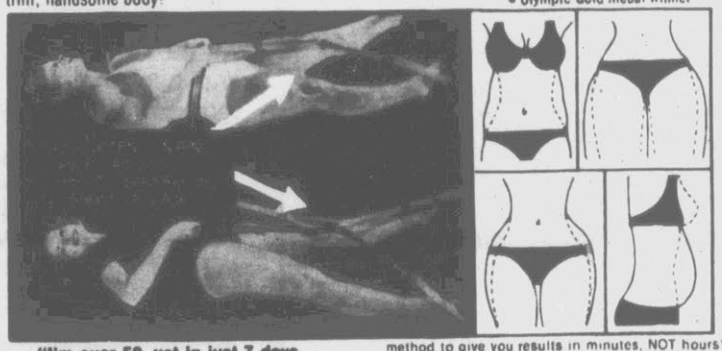
Turn Belly Fat into a Rock-Hard Lean Stomach

...in 7 short minutes a day with the "miracle" of SYNOMETRICS... the fantastic new discovery for speed shaping away ugly, embarrassing fat and flab...to reveal a brand new rock-hard, lean, trim, handsome body!

Introducing IKE BERGER Olympic Champion and truly one of the world's great athletes
• Olympic Gold medal winner



"I'm over 50, yet in just 7 days SPEED SHAPER™ 'burned' off the fat and flab I've lived with for thirty years."
"I thought my fat and flab was with me for life ...SYNOMETRICS "burned" it off in only 7 days."
HY HARRIS, New York, N.Y.

IKE BERGER explains SYNOMETRICS
You already know about the Isotonic and Isometric principle of body dynamics. Millions of people use one or the other in their daily exercises. One day I accidentally discovered that if I used BOTH methods together in one single exercise, I automatically speeded up the results tremendously and I reduced my daily exercise hour down to only 7 short minutes.

THE SCIENCE OF SYNOMETRICS
I later learned the scientific reason for this amazing result. It's called SYNERGISM—meaning that when you combine two methods the result is greater than the both of them separately. I now called my new discovery SYNOMETRICS and developed a special exercise unit I call the SPEED SHAPER. And that's just what it is...a speed method to give you results in minutes, NOT hours! Now...build yourself a "fantastic looking body" with the incredible SYNOMETRICS—the invention that works on the exciting new scientific concept of ISOTONIC + ISOMETRIC.

IRON CLAD MONEY BACK GUARANTEE
In just a few days you must actually begin to see measurable, real results...or your money back promptly and without any question.
• No diet needed if daily caloric intake does not add to present body weight.

right foot into the groin. Bend from the waist, reach forward and clasp your left ankle. Pull your chest toward your left knee. Hold. Repeat with the right leg. This stretches the muscles at the back of your thighs (hamstrings) as well as the lower back.

4) Sit with your legs crossed. Place your arms out to the side with the palms facing forward. Push your arms back as far as possible, keeping the arms straight and at shoulder height. Hold and repeat. This stretches the chest muscles.

5) Stand with your right leg forward and left leg back. Keep your left leg straight and bend your right leg. Keep both feet pointed straight ahead. Lean forward, keeping the heel of your left foot on the ground. Hold. Repeat for the right leg. This stretches the calves and Achilles tendons.

A Word About Burning Calories

When exercising at peak work levels you burn eight calories a minute if you weigh around 120 pounds, 10 if you weigh 150 and 12 or so when you weigh 170. For exercise to be effective in weight control, work at the exercise heart rate level for 30 minutes four or more times per week. The key factor is nonstop exercise. Keep your body moving.

The best winter peak work activities are cross-country skiing, ice skating and snowshoeing. They allow you to get outdoors and navigate the snow and ice. If cabin fever hasn't gotten to you, stationary bicycling, gymnastics, treadmill walking and running and rowing machines are also great. To find the exercise that bests suits your needs — weight loss, improved muscle strength, flexibility, etc. — consult the chart at the bottom of the page. FW

This chart shows how seven fitness experts in conjunction with the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports rated the various sports and exercises discussed. Ratings in each category are on a scale of 0 to 3, thus a rating of 21 indicates maximum benefit (a score of 3 by all 7 panelists). Ratings were made on the basis of regular (minimum of 4 times per week), vigorous (duration of 30 minutes to one hour per session) participation in each activity.

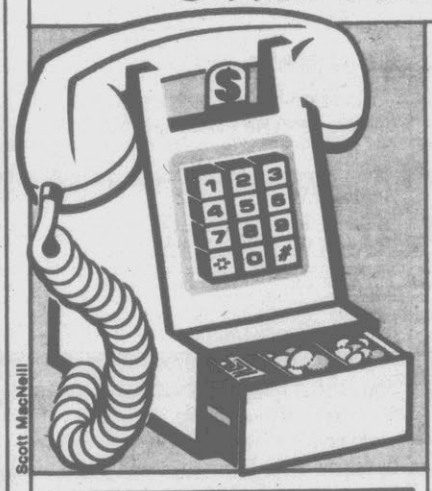
THE PROS AND CONS OF BUYING YOUR OWN PHONE



Scott MacNeill

By Andrea Pawlyna

If you want to save money on your telephone bills, one often-overlooked way to cut costs is to stop renting your phone and buy one instead.

Even though the majority of the 110 million home telephones currently in use are still rented from American Telephone & Telegraph (A.T.&T.) or from its phone company subsidiaries, a landmark Federal Communications Commission ruling five years ago brought competition into the marketplace.

Since then, dozens of manufacturers, including A.T.&T., have eagerly sought to carve out a share of the potentially huge retail phone market. Telephones are now routinely sold in department stores, discount outlets and specialty and electronics shops as well as through mail-order catalogues.

"Most of the people who walk in here don't know they can actually buy their own phones," says Reese Rosenbloom, manager of the Public Phone Store in Towson, Md. "But we're doing our best to educate them as fast as we can." In Maryland, for example, a Baltimore resident pays $3.90 a month to rent a Trimline touch-tone telephone. Rosenbloom sells a similar model, although reconditioned, for $49.95. The purchased phone would pay for itself in slightly over 12 months; in five years, a customer would save $184.05 in rental charges. (Even if you own your phone you must still pay a monthly service charge for using telephone company lines — about $9 a month.)

However, there is a potential hitch to owning your own phone. Unlike phones rented from Ma Bell (where repairs and replacements are free), store-bought phones will cost you money if you want to have them fixed. Furthermore, the phone company won't do the repairs. If something goes wrong, you must bring the phone back to the store where you bought it, or ship it to a factory for repairs.

In general, most purchased phones carry a 90-day to one-year warranty. General Telephone and Electronics (G.T.E.) offers a 12-month warranty, for instance, that allows customers to exchange their phones for any reason during the first 90 days. After that, phones are shipped to a G.T.E. repair facility, a process that may leave the customer without a phone for a week or more. Once the warranty expires, you pay for any repairs, at prices ranging from $12.50 to $30, not including parts.

Fortunately, telephones are remarkably trouble-free. Their average life expectancy is about 20 years, according to one study.

When shopping for a phone, it's best to compare prices carefully. They vary significantly according to the style.

The cheapest models are usually reconditioned, standard rotary dial phones. At some stores, they sell for as little as $19.95. Certain decorator models can run more than $200. At A.T.&T.'s 1,500 PhoneCenter stores, only decorator phones are sold (not the standard models which are rented) at prices that start at around $60.

Once you've selected a phone, make sure that an F.C.C. registration number is stamped on the bottom of it before buying. This assures that the model you want is compatible with the phone company's telephone lines. The registration number and the ringer equivalence number next to it should be reported to the phone company before you plug your phone in at home.

Most retail phones are designed to plug into Ma Bell's new modular jacks, but if your home doesn't have them, you can buy an adapter or pay the phone company to install the jacks.

A.T.&T. is planning to ask all operating companies to develop plans to sell phones that currently are being rented to its customers. In several states, such as New York, Oregon and California, customers can already buy their rented phones. (Bell servicemen, however, do not make house calls to repair these phones — they must be taken to one of A.T.&T.'s phone stores.) FW

WHAT IN THE WORLD

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

KING REMEMBERED

Fifteen years after Martin Luther King Jr.'s death, photographer and close friend Flip Schulke recently recalled their first meeting, in 1956.

"We spoke of Gandhi and nonviolence," the white photographer remembers, "and an immediate trust developed between us which lasted until his death in 1968."

Schulke, whose historic collection of King photos is part of an exhibit at the New York State Museum in Albany until

© Flip Schulke

April 3, also was there when King made his most famous speech. It was just after the 1963 civil rights march on Washington. The Reverend was the last speaker and much of the press had left. "I photographed him standing on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial as he made his eloquent 'I have a dream' speech," Schulke told us. "He was a force to reckon with after that."

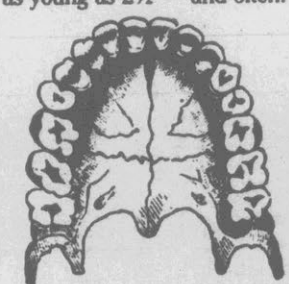
Following the civil rights movement during the 50's and 60's, when rubber hosings and beatings were part of the action, Schulke says he often had trouble restraining himself. Once in Selma in 1965, he rushed to the aid of some kids being roughed up by a sheriff's deputy. "King later reprimanded me, saying, 'It's more important for you to stand back and show the world what's happening here to us, than to stop a fight.' I've never forgotten that lesson."

GUM DISEASE INHERITED?

Juvenile periodontitis, a gum disease that can rapidly cause teeth loss, affects up to 10 percent of U.S. youngsters, usually girls. Now new research indicates the disease might be inherited, with susceptibility passed on through the mother's side of the family.

An eight-year study at the University of Virginia Hospital traced one Virginia family's dental history back to a maternal great-grandmother and found a history of juvenile periodontitis among several female family members.

U. Va.'s Dr. Thomas Leinbach advises that children with a family history of the disease be examined early — as young as 2½ — and often.



"The disease can be slowed down through treatment," he says, "but it's almost impossible to stop."

THE GIFT OF LIFE

There are currently some 5,000 Americans waiting for kidney transplants. So reports Don Denny, one of nearly 100 U.S. organ-procurement coordinators who race the clock trying to match dying patients with healthy donor organs.

Denny, affiliated with the University of Pittsburgh's Health Center, is in constant touch with over 100 hospitals. They are urged to notify him when they have a "brain dead" patient whose heart, liver or kidneys are suitable for transplants because they are similar in blood and tissue type. The victim's family is then asked for consent to remove the organ, and if granted, the organ is rushed to the victim if there is to be any chance of success. Doctors have mere hours to transplant a liver or heart, up to two days for corneas, three for kidneys.

"Four out of five families grant permission," Denny says, "but those who don't rarely cite religion as a reason. They usually don't want the body surgically violated, or they lack awareness that a transplant will really help extend another person's life."

Although transplants of the pancreas and small intestine are still in the experimental stage, Denny says he expects these organs will begin to be donated within the next three or four months.

You can obtain a donor card, which gives legal permission for organ donation upon death. Check with your doctor or local hospital.

SOME HAIRY QUESTIONS

You fellas have certainly come a long way. According to the latest Merit public opinion poll, 59 percent of U.S. males find self-sufficient women more appealing than dependent ones.

The poll also gathered opinions on other critical issues pertinent to life between the sexes — like blind dating and shaving.

When it comes to meeting "Mr. Right" on a blind date, only 25 percent of women think it's a great idea, while 39 percent of the guys are willing to take the chance. And as far as facial hair, women seem to be giving men with whiskers the brush off. Over half (56 percent) of the women polled found clean-shaven men most attractive, 27 percent dig moustaches and 9 percent go bonkers for beards.

SWAN SONG FOR GEESE

Bogus swans are successfully thwarting Canada geese from alighting on golf courses and in parks where they've become persistent pests.

Patrick Lucas, a golf-course superintendent in Old Greenwich, Conn., has developed life-size foam replicas of swans to ward off geese, who love to eat the fairways, litter greens with droppings and clog irrigation pipes with feathers.

Although many people don't know swans can be dangerous, geese certainly do. Swans are territorial and vicious, says Lucas, so geese avoid them. (In fact, with their menacing beaks and flapping wings, swans have been known to go for humans who stray too close.)

Lucas is marketing his "floating scarecrows" at $130 for a family of five — two white adults and several brown babies. They're anchored in the course's pond, letting the geese know to keep on flying south.

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: Ear flap is missing. 2. Scarf end is missing. 3. Grade sign is missing. 4. Coat is shorter. 5. Neckline is different. 6. Folder is missing.

● PET SET! "Pets" of a sort are the subject of this quiz: 1. Which pets play in a band? 2. Which pets attend teas? 3. Which pets run races? 4. Which pets are bought by the yard? 5. Which pets featured Punch and Judy? 6. Which pets star Kermit and Miss Piggy?

Mop pets. 1. Trum pets. 2. Crum pets. 3. Whip pets. 4. Car pets. 5. Pup pets. 6.

● Sum Fun! Double the number of coins in your pocket (assuming you have some), add 18, divide by 2, subtract the original number of coins and multiply by 79. Answer is below.

Seven eleven.

● Fruit Cup! Find the name of a fruit in each sentence: 1. The tape arrived. 2. Damp lumber was dried. 3. The swap pleased all. 4. We passed the problem on.

1. Pear 2. Plum 3. Apple 4. Lemon

● Tongue Twists! Say fast and repeat: A shy little she said shoo to a flea. Eugene's ugly uncle Otto ogled Olga. Portia Potter's papa picks pawpaws.

AN AGE-OLD WITS TEST

Winter is an appropriate time to quote this verse-riddle that is said to date back to the Middle Ages:

A bird flew without wings,
Sat on a tree without leaves.
There came a power without hands,
Climbed up without feet,
Cooked it without fire,
Ate it without mouth

What is the solution?

P.S.: Lines do not rhyme because they are an adaptation of the original Old World tongue.

A snowflake falls on a tree branch, and the sun comes out and melts it

SEA HERE! What have our fishermen friends hooked on to above? To find out, insert lines from 1 to 2, 3, etc.

ROLLER DERBY! Add colors neatly to this amusing home decorating scene: 1—Red. 2—Lt. blue. 3—Yellow. 4—Lt. brown. 5—Flesh. 6—Lt. green. 7—Dk. brown. 8—Dk. blue. 9—Maroon.

Prince® Valiant IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

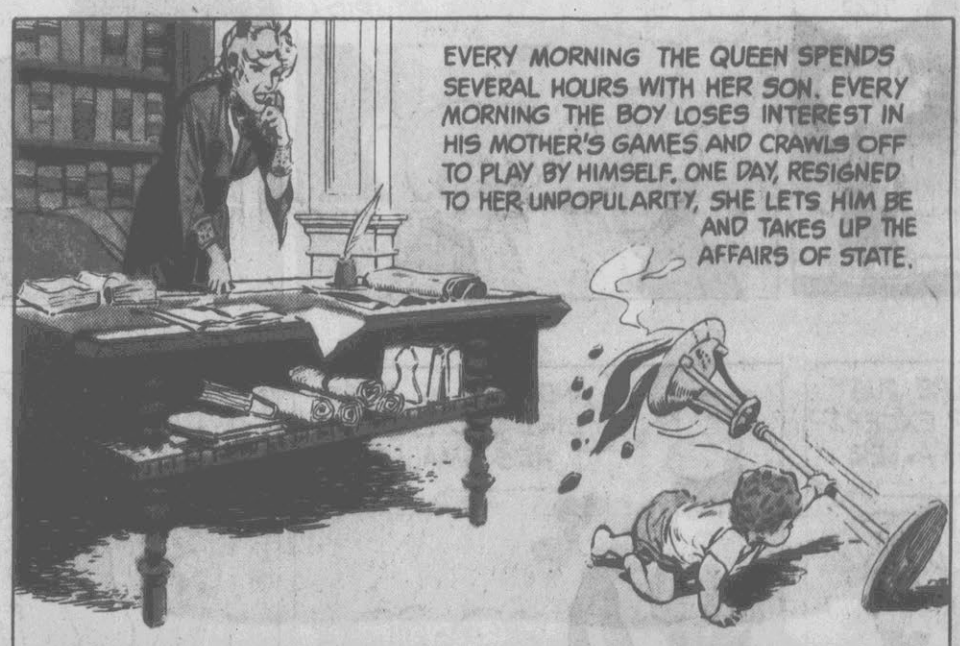
CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: IN THE BLISS OF A FAMILY REUNION ALETA DROWNS HER ENVY. SHE IS GRATEFUL TO JUDITH AND MATTHIAS FOR THE GREAT SACRIFICE THEY HAVE MADE, AND JUDITH IS TAKEN ON AS NATHAN'S NURSE. PRINCE VALIANT OFFERS HER HUSBAND A COMFORTABLE POSITION IN THE PALACE BUT MATTHIAS DEMURS. "I WORK THE SOIL," HE SAYS. VAL SURPRISES THE COUPLE WITH THE GIFT OF A NEARBY FARM.

YOUNG NATHAN IS DELIGHTED WITH HIS BROTHER AND SISTERS AND FEELS SECURE IN HIS FATHER'S CALLOUSED HANDS. SO MUCH COMPANY IS NOVEL INDEED.

BUT EACH TIME THE BOY LEAVES JUDITH'S ARMS FOR HIS MOTHER'S HE SCREAMS WITH DISPLEASURE. ALETA HAD DECIDED BEFORE THE CHILD WAS BORN THAT A SON WOULD BE CALLED EGIL AND SHE INSISTS THAT THE HOUSEHOLD USE THAT NAME. BUT TO NATHAN "EGIL" IS JUST A FUNNY SOUND. HE NEVER LOOKS UP.

OVER THE WEEKS ALETA'S TEMPER WORSENS. ONCE A LAD IS BROUGHT BEFORE HER ACCUSED OF STEALING A PIE FROM THE PALACE PANTRY. SHE SENTENCES HIM TO 20 YEARS HARD LABOR IN THE COPPER MINES. AFTER THEY LEAVE THE ROYAL PRESENCE, THE BAILIFF REDUCES THE PENALTY TO A BRISK SPANKING.



A FEW MINUTES LATER THERE IS A LOUD CRASH AND ALETA WATCHES IN HORROR AS NATHAN REACHES FOR THE PRETTY COALS. "EGIL!" SHE CRIES. THE BOY IGNORES HER.

2398 © 1983 King Features Syndicate, Inc. World rights reserved. 1-23

"NATHAN, NO!" JUDITH HAD COME RUNNING AT THE SOUND. NATHAN STOPS IN HIS TRACKS. HE TURNS HIS HEAD AND SMILES. "MOMMA," HE GURGLES.
