Afternoon Ceremony Howell Installation On Friday

Dr. John Howell will be formally installed as chancellor of East Carolina University during ceremonies in the 1,600-seat Wright Auditorium on the campus Friday.

Gov. Jim Hunt is scheduled to be the keynote speaker at the 4 p.m. installation program, to be presided over by University of North Carolina President William Friday.

University officials said today that the installation program is open to the public. However, free tickets will be required.

The tickets may be obtained by calling Edgar Loessin, coordinator of the program, at 757-6390.

In addition to the governor and Friday, other platform speakers will include faculty chair Carolina L. Ayers, ECU Alumni Association President John C. Lennon Jr. of Raleigh, ECU trustee Chairman Ralph Kinsey Jr. of Charlotte, UNC Board of Governors Chairman John R. Jordan Jr. of Raleigh, ECU Student Government Association President Eric Henderson and N.C. Court of Appeals Judge Gerald Arnold, an ECU alumnus.

The chancellor installation program will end a two-day symposium sponsored by Phi Kappa Phi on the theme "Toward the New Millennium: Changes and Dreams." Speakers for the installation have been requested to tailor their messages to the theme.

Howell, a founder of the annual ECU Phi Kappa Phi symposium, had requested that his formal installation be scheduled as part of the 1983 symposium program.

Howell was named chancellor last spring and assumed the post July 1. He had served as acting chancellor since the resignation of Dr. Thomas Brewer.

Howell, opening the symposium this morning, said Phi Kappa Phi is "the most prestigious honor society on campus."

The chancellor told about 100 people attending the first session it is "good for us to hear different approaches" to the possible solution of problems. He also said that, while there may be many different opinions on how something should be done, there is "unity of purpose" on the ECU campus.

Reagan Advisers Agree Ponder Emergency Programs

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — At the urging of Republican congressional leaders, President Reagan's top advisers are considering a federal jobs program and emergency relief for homeless victims of the recession.

White House Chief of Staff James Baker held preliminary meetings with members of the White House staff earlier this week, but no specific proposals have been agreed on, Republican sources say.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee and Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., general chairman of the Republican Party, also talked about proposals for dealing quickly with the recession with presidential counselor Edwin Meese III, according to the sources, who spoke on condition that they not be identified.

The discussions reportedly took place with Reagan's blessing, despite the president's continued public opposition to any large scale public works projects intended to reduce the 10.8 per cent unemployment rate.

The president's economic spokesman testified on the administration's 1984 budget blueprint again on Wednesday, and said the quickest way to reduce unemployment was to reduce the federal deficit by enacting Reagan's program.

"What we are striving for is to get the economy moving again," said Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan.

The president said on Tuesday he opposes a federal public works program, but without elaboration added: "That doesn't mean that there aren't things that need doing."

The most likely jobs program would involve federal projects already planned like repair of federal buildings, highways, bridges or water projects already planned but lacking money.

House Democrats led by Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill are planning an emergency package of their own, expected to cost at least $5 billion.

O'Neill, of Massachusetts, said although the administration's most recent economic report issued Wednesday "rejects the need for jobs legislation, its dismal employment forecast is itself the best argument for a Democratic jobs bill."

O'Neill said Senate Republicans are "already eyeing the next election" and predicted they would not only back a jobs bill, but would attempt "to sell the president ... they're the one's who have to turn the president around."

Senate leader Baker has asked Republican committee chairmen to assemble a program designed to show congressional concern for the more than 12 million people out of work.

In testimony before the Senate Budget Committee, Budget Director David Stockman indicated some willingness to add recession relief to the president's program.

"If this committee comes up with something that is reasonable in its cost and is targeted (to hard hit parts of the country), I'm sure there is room in the budget for it," he said.

Stockman was also publicly conciliatory to critics urging deeper cuts in Reagan's $238.6 billion military budget for next year.

He said White House officials will listen to proposed spending reductions. Noting the attacks on Reagan's defense budget, Stockman said, "The differences between us are far less than they would appear in the extreme rhetoric of the last few days."

There was less willingness to compromise on defense from Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who said not only should there be no cuts for 1984, but cuts made last year already have "reduced the security of the nation in a way that we much rather would not have had."

Regan was asked by the House Budget Committee why the president was not willing to negotiate on tax policy, including the third year of Reagan's tax cut scheduled to take effect in July.

"If you show us your cards, we will show you ours," replied Regan, adding: "This might be possible when we see what you want to compromise to."

But Treasury spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said later Regan was not willing to delay the final reductions of the tax package enacted on Reagan's urging in 1981.

Stood Up To Three Tanks

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Marine captain who stared down an Israeli tank commander at gunpoint probably will be commended for behaving "with extreme courage," says Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger.

Three Israeli tanks sought to push past a Marine checkpoint in Beirut Wednesday, but were stopped by Capt. Charles B. Johnson of Neenah, Wis. who jumped atop an Israeli tank with pistol drawn and said it could proceed only over his "dead body," said Weinberger.

The incident appeared certain to add to the steady souring of relations between Israel and the United States over the continuing presence of Israeli soldiers in Lebanon nearly eight months after they invaded.

It was the sixth and most serious incident yet involving Israeli soldiers and the 1,200 U.S. Marines who are members of the international peacekeeping force in Beirut. Both the United States and Israel claimed the incident occurred in an area subject to their jurisdiction.

In an appearance Wednesday before the House Armed Services Committee, Weinberger called it "basically damaging to the president's efforts to secure peace in that whole area," and made it clear he held the Israelis solely responsible.

But Israel's charge d'affaires, who was summoned to the State Department to be told of the "gravity" with which the Reagan administration viewed the incident, denied that the Israelis had done anything wrong.

"The Israeli patrol went ... into an area which we understood had been agreed upon earlier as territory to be patrolled by Israel," said Ebanjamin Netanyahu. "There was no attempt whatsoever to cross or challenge the American Marines, or the territory they are holding."

The confrontation between the Marine captain and the Israeli tank commander occurred near the Beirut University library when three British-made Centurion tanks clanked toward the Marine position.

According to the U.S. account, the lead tank approached to within a foot of the Marine checkpoint when the Capt. Johnson stepped out and asked to talk with the senior Israeli officer present.

Weinberger said the Israeli officer "insisted they were coming through, the Marine captain said they were not." Johnson next "climbed onto the lead tank, said that if they were coming through they'd have to do it over his dead body," Weinberger added.

Three Suspects Arrested For Shooting At Trucker

NORTH WILKESBORO, N.C. (AP) — Two men and a woman were arrested after they allegedly pulled up alongside a moving truck and fired several shots at it, officials said today.

The Wilkes County Sheriff's Department said the three were charged in connection with shots fired from a car late Wednesday night at a truck driven by Warren Pope of Jonas Ridge. The driver was unharmed, but the truck sustained minor damage.

Authorities said they had no idea if the shooting was related to a nationwide strike by independent truckers protesting rising fuel taxes and fees.

The shots were fired at the rear of the truck from a car which passed Pope on U.S. 421 in northwestern North Carolina, according to Wilkes County sheriff's dispatcher Claudia Stamey.

She said Pope, operating the rig for Cell-U Products Co. of Patterson, was able to get a good look at the car and describe it to authorities.

Wilkes Sheriff's deputies later stopped a car fitting the description, arrested its three occupants and confiscated a 12-gauge shotgun, a .32 caliber pistol and a .25 caliber pistol, she said.

Charged with shooting into occupied property were Ricky R. Ball, 33; Cyrus V. Perry, 39, and Deborah A. Miller, 29, all of North Wilkesboro, the dispatcher said. She said Ball was also charged with drunken driving.

The three suspects were being held today in the Wilkes County jail.

Officials Report More Than 300 Trucks Damaged In Violence

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

A Milwaukee brewery cut back operations and California growers warned that Valentine Day roses might wither because of the nationwide strike by independent truckers, whose working counterparts demanded federal protection from snipers, arsonists and vandals.

Officials reported more than 300 trucks have been damaged, one driver slain and 27 people injured in violence stemming from the shutdown, which was called by the Independent Truckers Association on Monday to protest higher fuel taxes and fees.

Food shipments to some Eastern cities were curtailed Wednesday, and some produce prices rose.

Bennett Whitlock, president of American Trucking Associations, sent a letter to Attorney General William French Smith, demanding the Justice Department and the FBI play a greater role in fighting the widespread bloodshed and intimidation.

"There's an absolute need for strong federal leadership. ... Federal law enforcement officials must make their intentions known and their presence felt," he said.

U.S. attorneys across the country have been told "to be on the alert" for any violations of federal law, said Justice Department spokesman John Russell, who said he was not aware of Whitlock's letter.

Meanwhile, Florida offered Highway Patrol protection to truckers if more requests are received and if truckers can organize convoys of 15 to 25 trucks. And Alabama said Wednesday it would use state liquor agents, revenue agents and game wardens to help state troopers patrol the highways during the strike.

"It looks like war out there," said Chief Deputy Edmory Rush in Colleton County, S.C., who urged sheriff's departments in surrounding counties to step up patrols of major truck routes. "We don't want this to be a bloodbath."

Mike Parkhurst, head of the ITA, called the strike to protest scheduled increases in fuel taxes in April and highway use fees in 1985. The association claims to represent 30,000 of the 100,000 truckers who own and operate their own rigs — a claim that is disputed by other trucking groups.

While the independents make up about a fifth of the nation's truckers, they haul about 90 percent of its fresh food and much of the steel.

Drivers who idled their trucks, either out of sympathy with the strike or from fears for their safety, caused anxiety for produce growers.

California flower growers desperate to reach East Coast markets in time for Valentine's Day scrambled Wednesday to find trucks, and some shipments were being sent on more costly railroads and planes.

If the flowers don't reach their destinations on time "we would have to absorb the total loss. Just like other perishable agricultural crops, our product has a limited life," said David Ninomiya, a rose grower from Richmond, Calif.

The availability of trucks at Florida vegetable packing houses was off 80 percent, with packers "concerned" about being able to make their shipments, said Steve Hull, a spokesman for Gov. Bob Graham.

"Many truckers are now into a daylight-only schedule," said Terry Rodes, president of the New England Produce Center.

In Tennessee, truck traffic on five major interstate highways rose 46 percent Wednesday, and state police Sgt. Dale Page said he thought truckers were "running a little more legal and are trying to stick to the primary routes for safety."

Some Pabst Brewing Co. workers in Milwaukee were told to stay home today because a shortage of trucks had caused a lag in the company's beer shipments.

Jobless Claims Seeing Decline

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some 465,000 newly unemployed Americans put in claims for jobless benefit payments in the week ending Jan. 22, the lowest number since September 1981, the government said today.

The Labor Department said it was the third consecutive week of declining first-time claims, in which people seek to determine their eligibility for unemployment insurance compensation protection.

While declines in new claims for unemployment benefits may signal that businesses are laying off fewer people, they don't necessarily portend a decrease in the nation's 10.8 percent unemployment rate. The labor force figures for January will be released Friday by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

In its report today, the Employment and Training Administration said that in the week ending Jan. 15, the seasonally adjusted figures showed that approximately 3,942,000 people got benefits under basic state-run 26-week programs, an increase of 12,000 over the previous week.

Under the 13-week program of extended benefits, which are paid by 20 states and Puerto Rico with the federal government picking up half the costs, some 343,200 people were getting up to 39 weeks of unemployment checks, an increase of 3,500 over the week ending Jan. 8, according to these figures, which are not adjusted for seasonal variations.

City Building Permits Again Among Top Ten

Greenville was one of nine North Carolina cities of more than 10,000 population recording over $2 million in building permits for October, according to state Labor Commissioner John Brooks.

He said Greenville issued permits during the month valued at $2,023,321, down sharply from $5,042,119 in September, when Greenville ranked fourth among 44 cities.

Permits issued here for the first 10 months of 1982 amounted to $18,255,185, Brooks reported.

Pitt County issued permits totaling $2,049,821 in October, including $1,140,440 for 37 single-family units, $60,000 for four multifamily units, $483,425 for 14 non-residential units, and $365,956 for 47 additions and alterations.

Brooks said that building activity authorized in the 44 cities during October increased 20.7 percent from the previous year, with value up 27.1 percent. He pointed to a gain of 119.8 percent in permits issued for single-family homes.

Total authorizations in the first 10 months of 1982 remain considerably off from the comparable 1981 period, the commissioner said. He said the 1982 figure was down 13.5 percent to 28,945 units from 33,473.

Compared to October 1981, the average construction cost for a single-family home decreased 10.6 percent, he said, to $39,689 from $44,408. The average was down 11.1 percent from September's $44,633.

Building values for October and for the first 10 months in several eastern towns included: Elizabeth City, $136,150, $4,966,300; Goldsboro, $348,875, $8,983,761; Jacksonville, $1,965,250, $19,737,563; Kinston, $72,000, $3,208,365;

New Bern, $1,842,820, $10,814,669; Roanoke Rapids, $461,925, $2,585,390; Rocky Mount, $1,218,978, $10,320,510; Tarboro, $405,000, $12,909,258; and Wilson, $775,502, $9,825,345.

Fascination With Private Foibles

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — In a country where pamphleteers first wrote about the escapades of kings and politicians in the 18th century, gossip is still helping to sell British newspapers with Andy and Diana, and Charles and Diana as the main targets.

The Daily Mail's Nigel Dempster, dean of the scandal-mongers, says Britons are hooked on gossip because the country is so homogeneous. "In this country, everyone's heard of everyone. And we're all interested in each other."

In the United States, gossip columns don't have the same impact because the population is so large and diverse, he said. "A lot of American gossip columns are about people who nobody's heard of."

While scandal remains the bread and butter of tabloid gossip-tellers here, the three high-brow national newspapers eschew sex and concentrate on political foibles in their "diary" columns.

Dempster recalled that when he began work at the rival Daily Express 20 years ago, "people hid their peccadillos so it was big news if you reported that a member of Parliament was sleeping with his secretary and divorcing his wife."

Now, no one gasps at extramarital affairs and a child born out of wedlock "is no longer a bastard but a love child," he said.

"People lead more open lives because of my kind of column. If a husband says he's going to put his wife out of the house without a penny, she says, 'OK, I'll ring up Nigel Dempster.' In a way, we're sort of social policemen, aren't we?"

Other journalists disagree. Jocelyn Stevens, former managing director of the Daily Express, once said that Dempster's reports are rich in the three I's: "intrusion, innuendo and inaccuracy."

Alexander Chancellor, editor of the right-wing political weekly, the New Statesman, took a wider swipe at the antics of the aristocracy, he said in an interview. "Now all that's over and the upper class is much more merged and they aren't mysterious to anyone. So I think it's less thrilling to read about a duke's daughter doing something naughty."

The Daily Mail and the Daily Express, whose gossip column is published under the name of a somewhat scandalous 19th century essayist named William Hickey, find no lapse in demand.

Dempster said his column is read by nearly 6 million people and Jane Slade, the only woman on the William Hickey reporting team, put the column's readership at about 10 million.

William Hickey broke the news last October that 22-year-old Prince Andrew was on a Caribbean vacation with Koo Stark, a 26-year-old American actress who had appeared in several soft porn movies.

Miss Slade said the story came from a "royal contact" and boosted the Express' circulation.

Last November, Dempster was the first to report that 34-year-old Prince Charles was "desperately unhappy" and 21-year-old Diana who had turned into "a fiend and a little monster" after 16 months of marriage.

Buckingham Palace branded Dempster's remarks "rubbish" and his rivals dismissed the story. But Dempster said that after Diana's display of petulance on the ski slopes earlier this month, "every newspaper that attacked me is writing the same thing."

Dempster said his story came from inside Kensington Palace, Charles and Diana's London residence.

"The situation got so out of hand in November that I spoke out... The queen couldn't say anything. Prince Charles is... not in control of the situation. There's nobody there to spank her. The person who has to reprove the Princess of Wales is me," he said.

Three days after he criticized Diana for never wearing the same dress twice, she appeared in a dress for the second time "and that's not just coincidence," Dempster said of his impact.

Miss Slade said that when the Hickey column reported that the queen's husband Prince Philip was planning

Nor yet the last to lay the old aside."

I don't care what Alexander Pope said, computers aren't for everyone, and there's no doubt in my mind that I will be the last person in the world to acknowledge a terminal as anything more than where you catch an airplane.

There are maybe a dozen or so throwbacks to the gaslight era roaming the earth today and I am one of them. I can't load a cassette into a camera. I could break into a bank easier than I could follow instructions for the 24-hour teller. I manually lift old dirt out of the sweeper bag rather than replace it with a new one. I once poured $2 worth of to attend a dinner in Los Angeles at a club where blacks are banned, he canceled the appearance.

Dempster claims to have been first with news that Labor Prime Minister Harold Wilson would resign in 1976 and that Princess Caroline of Monaco and her husband Philippe Junot were getting divorced.

Miss Slade said William Hickey was first with Diana's inaugural royal appearance at Princess Margaret's 50th birthday party and with Richard Burton's surprise attendance at the 50th birthday party of ex-wife Elizabeth Taylor.

Dempster admits dropping a few bricks among the 1,820 items he reports each year.

Last summer, Sir Dawda Jawarra, president of the small west African country of Gambia, won a libel suit against the Mail because of a Dempster item.

Dempster said he loses an average of one lawsuit a year, costing the paper between $10,000 and $20,000. But he quoted his ex-boss at the Express, Lord Beaverbrook, as advising him to "sow the seeds of discord." And he does.

gasoline on my feet because I had the wrong nozzle in a self-service station. And I will only say this once, my ironing board has been up since 1953.

It's nothing I'm proud of, it's just that I don't know how I am going to survive the computer age. I have had only one computer experience in my lifetime. I carried on correspondence for three months once with a computer in Columbus, Ohio, that insisted I had not made my quarterly payment for my cleaning woman's Social Security when in fact I had.

The computer wrote a nice letter. It should have been. It was the same one every time. We didn't seem to be communicating, so one day I called and asked to speak to it personally. The person told me that computers don't talk. (I understand that since then they have found a voice.) I figured anything that didn't talk couldn't testify so I wrote the computer one final letter and said, "Stop bothering me with all this crappo," and that was the last I heard from it.

Mercifully, my children did not inherit these inept genes from their electronic klutz of a mother. It's a certainty that their children will be educated by computer, attend church electronically, write books and letters by machine, order their groceries from a terminal, be diagnosed and treated by computer, mate and date by machine, be married by a series of belches, pay bills, shop and have their menus planned by machine and depend on it for their social life.

Their computers will duly note that their grandmother never bought a battery, never owned a chip, and went into the 20th century kicking and screaming. "I don't trust anything that can't laugh or cry or acknowledge that the check is in the mail!"

Maybe I'm just not ready to trust my memories to a machine yet. They're too important and on some days they're all I've got.

Learning To Live With Siblings

By DENNIS O'SHEA
SOUTH BEND, Ind. (UPI)

Brock, a nervous 7-year-old, clutches his Mortimer Snerd doll. Worried by the screaming infant just down the hall, he asks his mother, "Will ours cry like that?"

Later, after a tour of the hospital's maternity floor and a look at a nursery full of newborns, Brock is so reassured he becomes more worried about whether it'll be a boy or a girl than whether it'll be a pain in the neck.

Reassurance is the point of sibling orientation class or, as Barbara Blaschke calls it, a class for future big brothers and big sisters.

"Our main purpose is to tell them what's happening to their mom, that she's coming back and that she's coming back with a baby," said Ms. Blaschke, head nurse in South Bend Memorial Hospital's Family-Centered Maternity Care Unit.

"They really want to know where mom is and what's happening to her, and they get scared," added Carol Bartosik, the hospital's director of recreational therapy and co-teacher of the twice-monthly sessions.

About a dozen kids and their parents meet in a hospital waiting room early Saturday mornings for a brief talk, the videotaped story of a 4-year-old's experience with a new sister, and a walk around the maternity unit.

Then there's a peek into the nursery and a semiprivate room like the one mom will be staying in — the kids all get a chance to adjust the electric beds. They seem even more fascinated by remote control TV. Then they return to the waiting room for diapering lessons and distribution of diplomas.

They tour the maternity unit in operating gowns. Afterwards, each is given a surgeon's mask and hat and some extra diapers to practice with at home.

The class was inspired by an article Ms. Blaschke read in a medical journal. It was started in November 1982 and is already paying off with better prepared, better adjusted older brothers and sisters, the teachers said.

"They know just where they're going" when they come to the hospital to visit, Ms. Blaschke said. "They feel real comfortable about seeing mom in a (hospital) room. They're just prepared and they feel better about the whole thing.

"The hardest part is when the mother is absent from the home, and right after she gets back and there's a lot of visitors just to see the new baby. There's that whole upheaval of activity."

Ms. Bartosik said both parents should remember to devote full attention to the older siblings for part of the time during these crucial periods. She said parents should also be realistic in discussing the new baby with older kids.

"If they address it from the angle of playing, some kids might think they're getting a grownup playmate," said Ms. Blaschke. "Some kids don't realize that babies cry, that they get up in the middle of the night, they can't do anything for themselves, they don't sit up."

"If the child is old enough," I don't think it hurts to talk about responsibility, to say, 'You're old enough to be a big help to me.'"

The teachers said most children wait until they get home to ask questions — particularly the inevitable "Where do babies come from?" — but some queries seem to pop up every class, especially after the nursery visit.

"They all seem to think the poor nurse has to stay in there all her life and never gets out," a smiling Ms. Blaschke said.

There are also a few misconceptions to set right — for example, the little girl who asked for a rubber band during diapering practice so she could wrap a blanket more tightly around her baby doll's neck.

The lessons were particularly useful when one expectant mother left class early to have her baby.

"That was like a baptism of fire for us," said Ms. Blaschke, who cared for the woman's 3-year-old son while the father was called to the hospital. "Her little boy did really well. He wasn't frightened. He wasn't uncomfortable." At last report, both the boy and his baby brother were getting along just fine.

Weight Loss Benefit Set

Quilting Winners Named

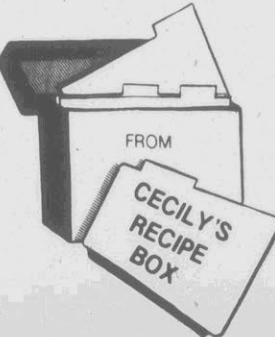

Phyllis McLawhon of Greenville is the winner in a recent quilting contest sponsored by Calico Square of Greenville.

Her entry was a quilted jacket made of bone white polished cotton. She adapted Oriental designs in an all over quilting pattern.

Suzanne Woolard of Greenville received second place with an original pieced portfolio bag that included several stripe piecing methods. Third place was awarded to Augusta Ferguson of Washington for a small quilt of pieced sail boats.

Receiving honor mentions were Gloria Windley of Bath for a small child's quilted coat and bonnet, Grace Karnes and Bertie Hengeveld of Greenville for quilted vests. Judges for the show were Jane Hall and Kathy Sullivan of Raleigh, members of the N.C. Quilt Symposium board of directors.

The quilt exhibit is open to public Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. through Feb. 14 at Calico Square. Articles being exhibited include small quilts, wall hangings and a variety of quilted clothing and accessories.

Dear Abby

He Feeds Self And The Dogs

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our dining area is near a sliding glass door that opens onto the patio. We eat all our meals there. My husband continually opens and closes the door while we're eating to feed the dogs from the table and tend to their needs. He's up and down constantly. It drives me crazy!

I have told him and told him how annoying it is to have him feed the dogs from the table, but he pays no attention to me. Every mealtime is a nightmare, and it's very hard on my digestive system to eat while I'm aggravated.

What's the matter with this man? And what should I do about it?

FED UP

DEAR FED UP: If his inconsiderate behavior is something new, he should see a doctor to determine whether he's sick or just plain ornery. If he's ornery, tell him (in a loving way) how upset you are. If that doesn't work, set a place for yourself in another room where you can enjoy a calm and peaceful meal. Tell him he's in the doghouse, and let him eat with the dogs!

DEAR ABBY: What can a mother do when she knows her son cannot afford to get married but his girlfriend keeps nagging him to marry her?

She has not finished school, she's not trained for anything, and she's very childish for a girl of 20. My son is 22 and up to his neck in debt — he owes me money and also owes the bank. He knows he can't afford to get married now, but this girl is constantly trying to get him to change his mind. I tried to talk to the girl, but you can't tell her anything. They would like me to help them. What should I do?

THE BOY'S MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Make it plain that they can expect no help from you. A man has no business on the sea of matrimony unless he can paddle his own canoe.

DEAR ABBY: I do not have sex very often with my husband, but on one of those rare occasions, he infected me with herpes. I didn't know what I had until I started having trouble and visited a doctor.

When I confronted my husband with this news, he swore up and down that he hadn't been with anybody else and must have gotten it off a toilet seat. Is this possible? Or is it a lot of bunk?

Now, the problem: I am having an affair with a wonderful married man I once worked for. Should I tell him about my herpes? I think the world of him and don't want to lose him.

HAS HERPES IN CHICAGO

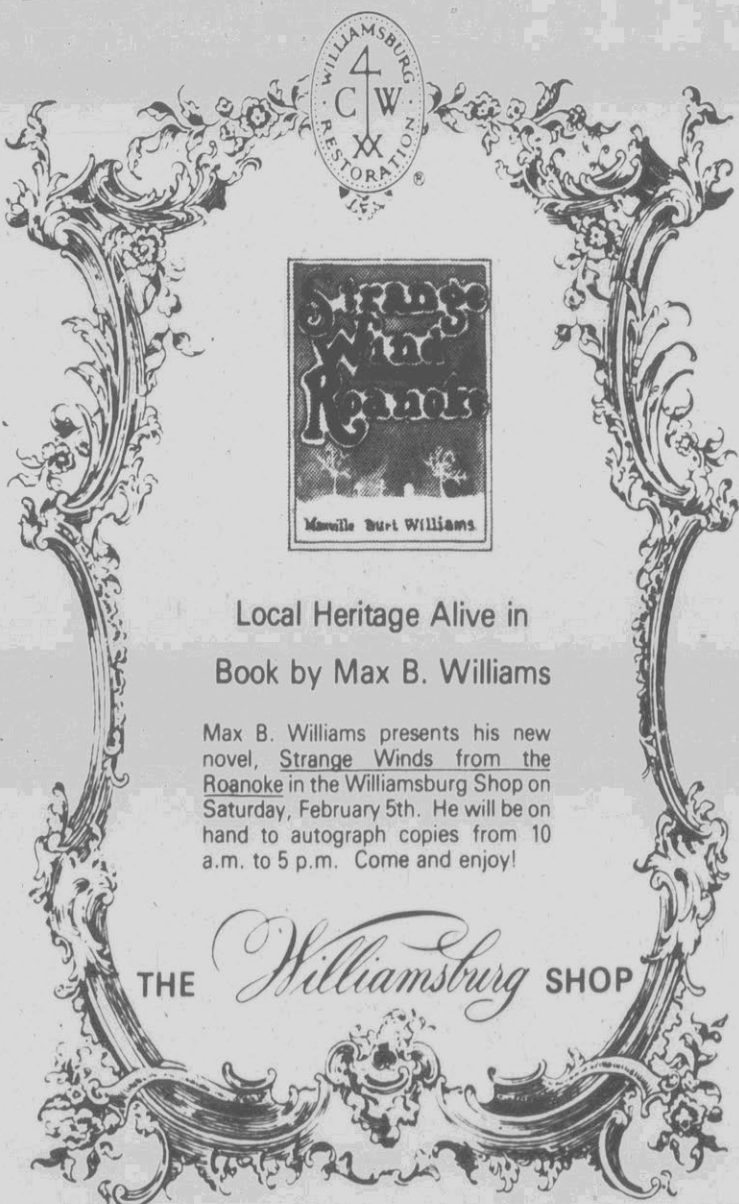

DEAR HAS HERPES: Recent studies show that the Herpes Virus II (affecting the genitals) can survive on a toilet seat, hands, clothing and elsewhere for hours, and theoretically can be transmitted to an innocent party, so your husband could be telling the truth.

About your "wonderful married man," tell him! He should be examined immediately by a physician. It is imperative that he use protection during any future sexual encounters with you.

Exciting Possibilities

Eaton Corp. last weekend announced a unique restructuring of its industrial truck division which directly involves the division's Yale production line of forklift trucks that are manufactured in the local plant.

Eaton said the division will become an independent company. Once the transition is completed the Yale company will be owned by a partnership of Eaton Corp., Jungheinrich of West Germany and Sumitomo Heavy Industries of Japan. An important part of the ownership will be the new company's employees, who through an employee stock option plan, will own a portion of the stock. Remaining shares will be distributed to present holders of Eaton stock.

Officials of the company made it clear that the Yale division is not being wound down. And local plant spokesmen said no changes are anticipated in the plant operation where 315 are employed.

Alfred M. Rankin, Jr., president of the Eaton materials handling group, will be board chairman and chief executive officer of Yale. He said Eaton is making a financial commitment to Yale's future "by creating a new and imaginatively structured company."

The development of the new Yale company is an intriguing and exciting one for our community which is concerned in the company's success through the local manufacturing operations.

The involvement of employees through the stock option plan is no doubt something that will be watched by other corporations. There have been efforts in the past by employees of plants to assume ownership and operate them. This has usually been done without the benefits of major corporation management and financing, however. In the case of the new Yale corporation employees will be joining with Eaton, Jungheinrich and Sumitomo Heavy Industries and other stockholders in a venture that could set new patterns of management for industries.

The reorganization of the Eaton industrial truck division is obviously the result of extensive study. Now it will be up to everyone connected with the venture to make it operate efficiently and profitably.

Groundhog Makes Forecast

How's the weather? It was a lousy day for Punxsutawney Phil, the groundhog of Punxsutawney, Pa., but that's good news for the rest of us.

The groundhog came out for the 97th time Wednesday and faced a dreary, rainy day. In groundhog folklore this is good news for, if the groundhog doesn't see his shadow on Groundhog Day, we will see an early spring. A spokesman for the club which oversees Punxsutawney Phil said his movements indicate that "just like the economy of the nation, the worst is over."

"Spring is on the way," the spokesman said.

Of course it must be said that the National Weather Bureau has issued its 90-day forecast calling for unusually cold and wet weather for a large portion of the nation.

You can take your choice, but our money is on Punxsutawney Phil.

THIS AFTERNOON

Campaign In N.C.

By PAUL T. O'CONNOR
RALEIGH — Proponents of the nuclear arms freeze will be stepping up their activity in North Carolina this month and they've enlisted some prominent North Carolinians to help them.

They're advocating a verifiable freeze on all new nuclear weapons, research, development and deployment by both the United States and the Soviet Union. To get their message across to the public, they plan a three-pronged media campaign.

Dean Smith, basketball coach at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, has cut a radio spot advocating the freeze and it is scheduled to begin running on three Charlotte radio stations this week, said Jean Wood, coordinator of Charlotte-Mecklenburg SANE, a pro-freeze group. Radio listeners in most of the western Piedmont should be able to hear Smith's message, and a similar spot recorded by actor Ed Asner, she said. Radio stations in other parts of the state will be contacted soon, she said, in the hope that they'll also run the spots.

In the radio messages, Smith and Asner give a national hotline number which private citizens can call to learn more about the freeze. By calling that number, you can also enlist yourself in lobbying campaigns aimed at congressmen, legislators and President Reagan. If you agree, freeze organizers will put your name on a preprinted post card and mail that card to any public official you designate.

That telephone number will also be printed on billboards scheduled to go up in Charlotte and Asheville, and possibly Raleigh during the month. In all, 12 billboards have been guaranteed to freeze coordinators. They consist of a satellite picture of earth and the statement, "There's only one world. Support a U.S.-U.S.S.R. bilateral nuclear weapons freeze. Call 1-800-364-1518."

Newspapers across the state will also be hearing from freeze proponents. They've established a series of "Speak-Out Letters" in which prominent North Carolinians will advocate the freeze in letters to the editor. First letter was written by Helen Goldstein of Cary, North Carolina's current "Mother of the Year" as chosen by the N.C. Mother's Association. The next letter will be signed by the John Stevens family of Asheville, current "N.C. Family of the Year."

Dale Everts, coordinator for "North Carolinians for the Freeze" in Raleigh, says (Please turn to Page 5)

Other Editors Say Why Tamper?

(Salisbury Post)

If it ain't broke, don't fix it. Somebody should remind certain key Democratic legislative leaders in Raleigh of that old admonition. In their recently announced effort to seek yet another change in the gubernatorial succession law, they are trying to "correct" a situation that gives no evidence of having anything wrong with it.

The president pro tem of the North Carolina Senate, Craig Lawing, D-Mecklenburg, said the other day that he will introduce a bill calling for a referendum on the question of succession.

The state's voters would have three choices: (1) Keep things as they are, with the governor and lieutenant governor eligible for two four-year terms; (2) Establish a single six-year term; or (3) Go back to the single four-year term.

The governor and lieutenant governor have been permitted a second term only since 1977 when the voters approved a constitutional amendment to that effect. Gov. Jim Hunt and Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green, both elected in 1976 and re-elected in 1980, are the only people to have taken advantage of the provision.

Lawing has been joined in seeking another change by Senate Majority Leader Ken Royall, D-Durham, and Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir.

Those behind the mini-movement may have their own political futures foremost in mind. It has been noted frequently in recent years that the second gubernatorial term has thwarted upward mobility of other people, keeping legislative leaders cooling their heels in their jobs longer than before.

But that is for politicians to worry about. The main question is what would be best for the people of North Carolina, and succession does not seem to have caused any problems along those lines. In fact, Jim Hunt has done a creditable job so far, and it is probably to the state's advantage to have had the opportunity to keep him in office.

A single four-year term was overly restrictive, because it did not permit the voters to retain a good man. A single six-year term would be no improvement, because it would not allow them to get rid of a bad one soon enough. One four-year term with an option for a second — the still-new procedure now in effect — seems like the best solution. Why tamper with it?

NOT LOOKING GOOD FOR OUR SIDE!

By JAMES KILPATRICK

Election Ills And Cures

WASHINGTON — What will Congress do about the ballooning costs of running for federal office? The answer, I fear, is not much, and that prospect troubles me — for the costs are both visible and invisible, and the invisible costs may be greater.

The problem has been with us forever. More than 75 years ago, Theodore Roosevelt was plumping for federal financing of federal campaigns. In the 1920s, Teapot Dome set off cries for election reform. The Watergate scandals intensified the demand for disclosure of political contributions. Now that some sobering figures are floating in from last November's elections, the subject is once more a matter of public concern.

Let me sketch my own ambivalence clearly. I am not greatly worried by the dollar amounts as such; as a people we annually spend more on toothpaste, mouthwash and liquor than we spend on our biennial elections. Except for the weakening effect they have on our two-party system, I am not much troubled by the proliferation of political action committees (PACs) in the private sector.

Neither am I persuaded that with all this money floating around, incidents of outright bribery are likely to multiply. There may be times, as the Abscam cases demonstrated, when some member of the House or Senate sells his influence for a few thousand bucks, but these felonies are exceedingly rare. A while back we had a congressman who remarked cheerfully that his vote couldn't be bought, "but it might be rented." The gentleman, I think, was kidding. Outright bribery is too crude, and it carries too many risks.

But when all that has been said, much remains to be said. By any yardstick, the costs of running for high public office are getting out of hand. We now have reliable estimates, drawn from reports to the Federal Election Commission, that last November saw more than $300 million spent on House and Senate campaigns. Mark Dayton spent $7.1 million on his losing Senate race in Minnesota; Frank Lautenberg spent $5.2 million on his winning race in New Jersey. The two Senate candidates in California spent more than $12 million between them. Five candidates for the House spent more than a million dollars each.

Large chunks of this money came from the roughly 3,500 PACs that have popped up like dandelions on our hustings. About 1,500 of these have been formed by corporations, another 600 by trade associations, 350 by labor unions. Collectively, the PACs have become more important than the old-line party committees.

As I say, these facts in themselves are not particularly alarming. Campaign contributions in essence are extensions of our right of free speech; we put our money where our mouth is. And if Dick Lugar's campaign in Indiana cost $3 million, so what? We got a man of integrity back in the Senate.

Yet the question has to be asked: What were the contributors buying with their $300 million? The high-minded answer is that the contributors were trying to elect men and women with compatible attitudes — conservative or liberal, as the case may be. The uncomfortable but inescapable answer is that the contributors were hoping to buy access, and in Washington access is very nearly the be-all and end-all.

To be able to get into a senator's private office, to speak on a first-name basis with him, to present one's legislative argument personally to a committee chairman — this is what counts. And let us not be naive: The person who has contributed $2,000 has better access than the fellow who has spent 20 cents on a stamp.

In the long haul, of course, the member who sees only his fat cats, and brushes off the common folk with a form letter, is likely to be turned out of office. But long hauls can get to be very long hauls indeed, and meanwhile the frenetic pursuit of money — big money — absorbs an inordinate amount of time.

I don't know the answer. Public financing has its drawbacks. To impose tight and enforceable limits on campaign spending, in the British fashion, gives a well-

Europe Cuts Its Welfare

By HENRY GOTTLIEB
Associated Press Writer
BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Western European governments have awakened from their post-war dreams of creating perfect welfare states.

From Denmark, where some old-age pensions are being cut, to Italy, where subsidies for medicine have been lowered, almost a dozen governments grappling with recession will try to spend less on social programs this year.

If unemployment gets worse, as experts predict, the search for cuts may continue for several years.

"Whether they're socialist or not, the governments are now following the same path," said Philip Calderbank, an economist in the European Common Market's social affairs department. "They are all trying to find ways to save money on social security."

Since imperial Germany established Europe's first nationwide pension system 96 years ago, European governments have been outdoing each other to expand social benefits, often to a point Americans might think lavish.

In the Netherlands, where every family with two children gets a $50-a-month stipend, almost one-third of the gross national product goes for social benefits.

One can get public money in Western Europe — usually at rates higher than those available in the United States — for being pregnant, a child, a student, handicapped, out of work, sick, old, or a widow.

But the recession has cut into tax receipts, and unemployment has left fewer people paying into social welfare funds — just when governments need to pay more benefits to the growing number of jobless in Western Europe, now totaling more than 16 million.

Calderbank says European, like American, officials also are worried about the impact of population changes on social security. For every recipient of an old-age pension there are now three workers paying into the funds. Within 20 years, there will be only two workers to support the aged.

Calderbank's department urges ingenuity in meeting these new challenges. Rather than cut health benefits, for example, it says governments should lower doctor's fees and the length of hospital stays, and stop paying unquestioningly for prescriptions and tests.

Here is how the governments are reacting to their individual problems:

NETHERLANDS
The center-right Dutch government cut 10 different categories of social benefits in December. The government expects to save $324 million, for example, by scaling down a yearly increase in old-age benefits and civil service pay.

ITALY
Within a month of taking office in December, Italian Premier Amintore Fanfani called for a $1 billion cut in government contributions to old-age insurance and a $1.5 billion reduction in upper-scale pension benefits.

Changes in medical benefits, including a $1.05 tax on prescriptions, have led to protest strikes by Italian health workers.

BRITAIN
The British government's social spending has risen sharply because of the rise in unemployment — now at 3 million people, 13 percent of the work force.

But the Conservative Party government cut social welfare payments 5 percent and began taxing unemployment benefits. Inflation has further eaten into the purchasing power of a welfare family of four living on the government's $126-a-week dole.

Opposition Labor Party member Jeff Rooker contends the government is expressing concern about unemployment, "but of concern at the actual plight of the unemployed and their families there is no evidence."

BELGIUM
Unemployment benefits to Belgians who are not heads of household have been cut. The government also proposes taxing social benefits for the first time.

WEST GERMANY
Under new rules adopted in January, automatic raises in old-age pensions will be lower, and retired people are contributing to health-insurance premiums. Unemployed West Germans, who once got 68 percent of their last salary for the first six months of joblessness, will now receive that amount for only four months.

Strength For Today

NATURE OF FAITH

What is faith? The Epistle to the Hebrews answers by stating, "Faith is assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen" (11:1). Or as another translation has it, "Faith is the giving of substance to things hoped for, a test of things not seen."

Let us observe the latter translation. Faith as the giving of substance to things hoped for is a God-like quality in the human soul which enables one to make his dreams and aspirations come true. Faith is not something man works up in his own nature, but something which God gives to man when man shows himself capable of handling it and willing to receive it. This faith becomes a creative power in a person's life.

As a result of faith, people take on new stature. The weak become strong, the blind receive their sight, and the prisoners of sin know the ecstasy of emancipation. People of faith can begin to perform some of the wonderful acts of their Lord and Master. — Elisha Douglass

A Frightened Credit Market

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP)

Beneath the seemingly calm acceptance of more big budget deficits lies a frightened, jumpy credit market.

Some home mortgage rates have turned a bit higher. Earlier this week the yield on Treasury borrowings rose. And so, as a consequence, did the rate that savings banks can pay on six-month certificates.

Dealers in money and credit link such activity directly to the realization that in just two fiscal years, 1983 and 1984, the federal budget deficit is likely to total about $400 billion.

That deficit has to be financed. There is only one way in which to finance it, and that is by borrowing money in the same marketplace where you borrow money to buy a house, a car of anything else on credit.

Mammoth federal deficits can sop up most of the money into the credit pool, leaving little for others. And if the others insist on a share, then there is only one way in which the price of money can go. That is, up.

It is such fears, money people say, that leave credit markets so edgy, no matter what the economic seers say about a continued fall of inflation and interest rates.

Most scenarios of lower inflation and interest rates, including that of the Reagan administration, are based on a disturbing assumption — that the recovery will be weak or, as it is more euphemistically stated, modest.

Students of credit say a weak demand for money — that is, a weak recovery in the consumer and business sector — might allow the government to have the credit pool mostly for itself. Like an elephant in the water hole.

But what if the other credit-using creatures also seek to take a dip? With the federal government already planning to take a huge portion of the credit pool, the demand for money could be greater than the supply.

"Projections now indicate that the federal government will pre-empt nearly three-fourths of new private saving for the year 1983," says a report from the Center for the Study of American Business at Washington University, St. Louis.

The center, headed by Murray Weidenbaum, recent chairman of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers, concludes that "precious little" is left with which to finance an enduring private-sector recovery.

At least three conclusions can be drawn from this predicament. Many already have been.

1. The recovery isn't likely to expand very far or fast.

2. If by some set of circumstances it tries to do so, higher interest rates might intervene.

3. If interest and inflation rates continue to decline, in spite of big federal deficits, the explanation would lie in the weakness of the private sector economy.

If it wasn't clear before it is now: Many and probably most forecasts of lower interest and inflation rates are based on the assumption that the recovery is going to be weak.

That doesn't rule out an unexpectedly strong recovery. But if a strong recovery develops, then it would seem to rule out falling interest and inflation rates.

Already the credit markets are nervous.

School Break-In Cases Increase

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Break-ins at Greensboro's public schools have risen 107 percent — from 26 to 54 — since last January, causing school officials to tighten campus security. The prime target of burglars over the past six months has been school lunchrooms, officials say. From July 1, 1982, to Jan. 31, 1983, thieves hauled off $3,520 in food, mostly meat, said Darrell Boyd, operations manager. Boyd said the loss amounts to an 829 percent increase over the same six months in 1981-82, when burglars took $379 in cafeteria food.

his group hopes the General Assembly will pass a resolution supporting the freeze during the 1983 session. Such a move, he says, would have a great impact on the state's congressional delegation.

"We've got several people, at least in most of the counties. In some, we have hundreds. They're calling their legislators urging them to address the issue in the General Assembly ... That would really send a message to our congressional delegation and to the president that this is an issue that North Carolinians are concerned about and which they want something done about — something which is more significant than Reagan's START talks", Evarts said.

So far a number of Democrats have indicated they will support the measure. And two Republicans, Rep. Maggie Keesee Forrester of Greensboro and Sen. Bill Redman of Stitesville have said they can support the freeze if it is verifiable on site.

Even if the assembly doesn't support a freeze resolution, Evarts thinks there's merit to pushing the issue here. "We're continuing to focus on this issue, to keep the debate going about nuclear weapons and nuclear war until we come up with a solution. The more people talking about it, the more likely we'll come up with a solution."

FRANCE

French President Francois Mitterrand, one of the few socialists in power in Europe, has cut unemployment benefits in order to rescue the government-backed unemployment insurance program from an estimated $2 billion deficit this year. Workers now get 80 percent of their salaries when first unemployed, rather than 90 percent.

DENMARK

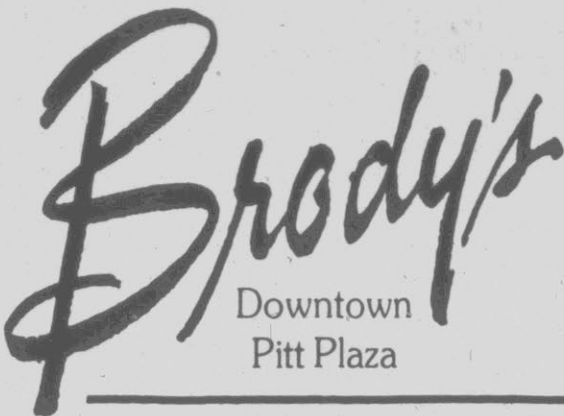

The new center-right government has slashed many benefits, stirring angry debate. For more than a month, Danish ports have been closed by spontaneous strikes by dock workers protesting benefit reductions for colleagues who must work part time.

"What do people do when they are told that from now on they will have to make do with 10 kroner ($1.20) per day per family member for food, clothes and other necessities?" asks social worker Erik Smith.

But Social Welfare Minister Palle Simonsen counters, "Unlike the 1930s, no one is faced with the problem of mere survival, but rather of adjusting themselves to a lower level of consumption."

FOUND GUILTY — Columbus County Judge J. Wilton Hunt Sr. and his wife Pamela leave the Federal Building in Raleigh Wednesday after a U.S. District Court jury convicted him of racketeering and interstate gambling. (AP Laserphoto)

Columbus County Judge 'Guilty'

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Columbus County Judge J. Wilton Hunt Sr. faces up to 25 years in prison and $35,000 in fines when he is sentenced March 14 following his conviction Wednesday on racketeering and interstate gambling charges.

Hunt's attorney, Kenneth Robinson, says he will appeal the conviction after sentencing.

Hunt was convicted of taking $7,000 in bribes from undercover agents to fix traffic tickets and reduce bonds. He was also convicted of conspiring to violate interstate gambling laws by giving undercover agents the phone number of a book-maker in South Carolina.

The eight-man, four-woman jury deliberated for seven hours before reaching a guilty verdict on both charges. On one occasion, they asked for information on the definition of entrapment. They also asked to hear tapes of Hunt's first meetings with undercover FBI agents and to see the videotape of the judge taking a payoff.

Hunt was among 21 people arrested in July on federal charges stemming from the federal investigation into corruption in Columbus County, named COLCOR.

The 50-year-old judge, suspended from the bench at the outset of the trial, shook his head as each juror was polled about the verdict. Hunt's family, sitting behind him, remained impassive.

Later, as his family gathered around him, Hunt said he was innocent and that he was "certainly entrapped" by the FBI undercover probe.

"I don't believe you can print what I think about the FBI," Hunt told reporters after the trial.

U.S. Attorney Sam Currin said he was "satisfied" with the verdict, adding that the jury's decision "lays to rest the issue of entrapment in COLCOR."

After the trial, defense attorney Kenneth Robinson, who defended U.S. Rep. John Jenrette, D-S.C. in his Abscam trial, said he thought the jury might not have shown Hunt leniency because he is a district court judge.

"Across the land, I find that juries are much firmer when judging public officials," he said.

Robinson was not contesting the bribery charges against Hunt. Instead, he tried to convince the jury that his client was entrapped into taking payoffs and was not predisposed to commit a crime before being induced to do so by FBI agents.

The prosecution based its case on secret videotapes and tape recordings made by undercover agents. The strongest evidence came in a videotape of Hunt taking payoff money from an undercover agent. In several tape recordings, FBI agents can be heard counting out money and the judge thanking them for it.

N.C. Reward Is Matched

A $5,000 reward offered by the governor's office for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible for the Monday night shooting death of a North Carolina truck driver has been matched by the Fountain of Life ministry in Greenville.

The Rev. Jim Whittington, head of the non-profit television ministry, said today that he sympathizes with both sides of the nationwide independent truck drivers strike "but it is my feeling that we do not need this type of violence to solve problems and prove points."

Whittington said his ministry logs about 150,000 miles per year by private coach and he pointed to "several threats on my life in my work." He said there have been times in other states where pranksters threw objects off bridges and struck his bus, including an incident in Delaware where the front of the vehicle was dented.

"I relate to the fear and trauma of not being able to go under an overpass without fear of having something thrown at you," the minister observed.

In offering the $5,000 reward, Whittington said, "Something needs to be done to keep more of this from happening. I feel like this is a gesture toward mankind."

Saying the reward is a reflection of what Gov. Jim Hunt is doing, Whittington commented, "We feel it is in good taste to do this. We want to see a peaceful nation."

Reunited With Abducted Baby

MIAMI (AP) — Hospital staffers were "delighted" that a 3-day-old baby and her mother were reunited just one day after the infant was abducted from the facility, a spokeswoman says.

The child was found unharmed in a housing project Wednesday after police received an anonymous telephone tip. Debra E. Brown, 29, was taken into custody and charged with false imprisonment.

"Everyone here's delighted," said Jackson Memorial Hospital spokeswoman Betty Baderman. "The hospital should thank the media for getting this story out so fast."

Court Rebuffs Palimony Claim

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The state Supreme Court has rebuffed the long-time mistress of Alfred Bloomingdale, who wants $10 million for devoting herself to the late department store magnate.

The court Wednesday refused to reinstate three crucial portions of the "palimony" suit brought by Vicki Morgan, a former model who says she took up with Bloomingdale after they met in 1970 when she was a 17-year-old and he was in his 50s.

She alleges that Bloomingdale, the department store heir who died Aug. 20 of cancer at age 66, had promised her lifetime support and a home in return for her loving attention.

Jurors Deliberating In Trial Of Federal Judge

By ANNE S. CROWLEY
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Jurors resumed deliberations today in the bribery-conspiracy trial of U.S. District Judge Alcee Hastings and the foreman said the jury was making a list of all its questions about the complex case.

U.S. District Judge Edward T. Gignoux sent the 12 jurors back to the jury room this morning with the chalkboard they had requested after deliberating just over an hour late Wednesday. Hastings, Florida's first black U.S. district judge, is accused of selling light sentences in return for a $150,000 bribe.

"You look fresh, rested and in good spirits," Gignoux said with a smile. "I'm very happy to observe that."

The jury forewoman, Elizabeth Keller of Naples, told the judge: "We're compiling a list of things we still have questions about."

Hastings, 46, is charged with conspiracy to solicit a bribe and obstruction of justice. He is the first sitting federal judge ever tried for crimes allegedly committed while on the bench.

The defendant and defense attorney Patricia Williams waited Wednesday in Hastings' chambers, from which he has directed his defense.

Hastings' friend, attorney William A. Borders Jr. of Washington, D.C., was convicted on similar charges last year and sentenced to five years in prison. Justice Department attorneys Reid Weingarten and Robert Richter also prosecuted that case.

Hastings, appointed to the bench in 1979, has said he won't resign if convicted on the indictment issued Dec. 29, 1981. He could face impeachment proceedings by Congress or suspension by the chief judge of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Maximum penalty for each count is five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

The prosecution maintains that Hastings and Borders teamed up to solicit a $150,000 bribe from an FBI agent posing as one of two men convicted of racketeering before the judge.

In return, the government charges, Hastings was to reduce the defendants' three-year prison terms and return some of the $1.2 million in cash and property he ordered seized by the government.

In closing argument Wednesday, Miss Williams criticized the government's case as "riddled with reasonable doubt."

"They haven't shown that there was any knowledge (of the conspiracy) on his part, ever," she said. "You're supposed to surmise it, infer it, feel it, because it helps the government's case."

Weingarten said the judge's charming exterior hid a man who committed a crime, then lied on the witness stand to cover it up.

"It's his word vs. the circumstances," Weingarten told the jury, noting that a government witness had contradicted Hastings' story about what he did after learning Borders had been arrested on Oct. 9, 1981.

"If you find him in one lie, his whole defense collapses around him like a house of cards," Weingarten argued.

He said Hastings needed the money to satisfy his expensive tastes.

"Alcee Hastings led a fast life with fast friends. He stayed at the best hotels and ate at the best restaurants. He was frustrated by his lack of money and he knew where there was a lot of it."

The prosecution assembled a complicated circumstantial case by tapping telephones and taping Borders' meetings with the FBI agent.

Jail Terms For 4 'Protesters'

NEW LONDON, Conn. (AP) — The refusal of four nuclear protesters to pay $1,386 each for damage they caused to a Trident submarine has resulted in one-year jail terms for each of them.

Superior Court Judge Seymour L. Hendel revoked suspended sentences Wednesday and ordered the jail terms for the demonstrators involved in a July 5 protest at the Electric Boat shipyard.

The four had been ordered to begin making $100 monthly payments starting Dec. 1. They were arrested Jan. 10 after they refused to comply. Five other people who took part in the protest against the nuclear missile armed submarine have already been jailed.

Cemetery Has Space For More Confederate Dead

By LINDA DUFFIELD
Associated Press Writer
HAGERSTOWN, Md. (AP) — Although the Civil War ended more than a century ago, the bodies of Confederate soldiers who fell in bloody western Maryland battles would still be accepted at a cemetery here.

Since the cemetery's dedication, the bodies of more than 2,000 rebels, most of them unidentified, have been exhumed and moved there.

The well-tended grassy knoll which is their final resting place is marked by a statue depicting "Hope," and a directory of the dead buried therein.

But the most recent burial of a Confederate at the Washington County Confederate Cemetery took place in 1932, when workers constructing a portion of the Sharpsburg Pike found the remains of an unidentified rebel soldier, according Samuel Pruett, a local expert on the cemetery.

"Right now, there is still some space available," said

Pruett. "If somebody finds a Confederate lying in his backyard and wants him moved, we will be happy to arrange it."

The cemetery was dedicated in 1877, five years after Maryland agreed to provide money for a burial area for Southern soldiers who died at the battles of South Mountain and Antietam.

Until then, the remains of Southern soldiers had been buried in unmarked graves in cornfields, creeks and yards near here because of anti-Southern sentiment.

By then, there were a few more Confederate sympathizers and moderate state legislators "who were willing to do something and not get hung up on the idea of whether it was a dead Confederate or a dead Union soldier," said Pruett, a Washington County state employee.

"The Union sympathizers didn't allow the Confederates to be buried in the Antietam cemetery although the regulations drawing it up permitted them to be buried there," he said.

"Then finally, the state of Maryland put up money," and dictated the cemetery should be built here, he said.

"Some were buried in creeks, some buried in orchards," he said. "They were buried where they fell in many cases."

Once money was appropriated for a cemetery where the fallen Confederates could be buried decently, Pruett said, men were hired to find the soldiers' bodies, exhumed them, attempt to identify them, and bring them by wagonload to the cemetery.

"They did a right good job," said Pruett. Using a list compiled in 1866, the workers "went around and tried to get together all of the information concerning the (original) burial spots."

Among the bodies were men who fell in the Battle of South Mountain, which pitted the Union forces of Gen. George B. McClellan against the Confederate forces of Gen. Robert E. Lee on Sept. 14, 1862.

Three days later, on Sept. 17, the armies of the North and South clashed at Antietam, where 23,000 men were killed or wounded, giving the fight the distinction of being the bloodiest single-day battle of the war between the states.

The map at the Confederate cemetery lists 2,451 rebel soldiers as being buried on the grounds. But Pruett said the figure, by his calculations, is actually 2,468. Of those, the identities of 2,122 have not been determined.

'Reservations' Over Nominee

WASHINGTON (AP) — AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland says his union has "grave reservations" about the nomination of Donald Dotson to head the National Labor Relations Board, although it is not actively opposing the nominee.

Kirkland, in a letter to the Senate Labor Committee, said the information the union has "is not sufficiently documented to meet our standards for actively opposing a nominee."

Kirkland said President Reagan's appointments to the NLRB "are rewards ... to the reactionary businessmen and to the far right wing that administration delights to serve."

Urge Prize For Walesa

WASHINGTON (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa and seven other human rights activists in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union should be awarded this year's Nobel Peace Prize, the U.S. Helsinki Commission is urging.

The Helsinki Commission — formally known as the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe — was established to help monitor compliance with human-rights and other provisions of the 35-nation Helsinki accords signed in 1975.

Signing a letter Tuesday to the Nobel Institute in Oslo, Norway, were the commission's co-chairmen, Rep. Dante B. Fascell, D-Fla., and Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., along with nine other congressional members of the panel.

In addition to Walesa, the commission cited Soviet dissident leaders Yuri Orlov, Anatoly Shcharansky, Mykola Rudenko and Viktoras Petkus; playwright Vaclav Havel of Czechoslovakia, and Polish dissidents Jacek Kuron and Adam Michnik. Except for Walesa, who was released from detention late last year, all of them are currently imprisoned.

Offer Reward In 'Missing' Case

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The state is offering a $5,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible for the possible kidnapping and murder of Meriman Cayle Hill.

Hill was reported missing Dec. 18, 1982, and blood stains were found in both his home and car, police said.

The Forecast For Friday, February 4

• Low Temperatures

Fronts: Cold Warm Occluded Stationary

WEATHER FORECAST — The National Weather Service forecasts snow and showers for Friday in the Southwest. Snow flurries are indicated in the Northeast. Cold weather is forecast for the northern Plains and Mississippi Valley. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
Colder weather is on its way to North Carolina tonight.

Partly cloudy sky cover will be the rule in most parts of the state tonight with a few lingering snow flurries over the mountains.

Temperatures tonight will drop to the colder 30s and 40s east of the mountains while mercury levels will dip to near 20 over the northern mountains.

By Friday, partly cloudy skies will be the evident, with temperatures ranging from the 30s over the mountains to near 50 over southern and eastern areas.

The spell of rain, heavy in some areas, that fell Wednesday had ended in most parts of the state by early today.

The heavy rains that moved into the mountains Wednesday caused some flooding. Rainfall amounts of 3 to 5 inches occurred over that area of the state. One of the reported heavier amounts was 5.7 inches that fell at East Fork in Transylvania County. Some flooding was reported along streams in Buncombe County.

Thunderstorms were also reported Wednesday over sections of the Piedmont and coastal plain, and one isolated damage from winds was reported. A tornado watch was issued Wednesday afternoon for the Sandhills and coastal plain. Temperatures pushed well into the spring-like 60s to low 70s.

Arrest Suspects In Big Theft

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — An armored car company guard charged in an $11 million theft, the largest cash heist in U.S. history, was "sunning himself by the pool" in Puerto Rico when FBI agents moved in, authorities said.

Although a second man was also taken into custody in New York, none of the money from the Dec. 12 theft at Sentry-Armored Car-Courier Co. has been found, the FBI said Wednesday, adding that a search was continuing for more suspects.

Christos Potamitis, 24, a guard at Sentry, was arrested Wednesday by FBI agents at the Holiday Inn in San Juan's Condado beachfront district.

George Legakis, 21, a student and part-time cook, turned himself in to the FBI Tuesday night in New York.

The pair, charged with larceny in the theft from the Sentry building in the Bronx, were "two of the more important players" in the heist, said Lee Laster, assistant director in charge of the FBI's New York office.

"We spoiled (Potamitis') vacation," Laster said. "He had been sunning himself by the pool most of the afternoon." Legakis, described as Potamitis' "associate," was arraigned Wednesday.

"My client is a scapegoat in this matter," William Spanakos, Legakis' lawyer, told U.S. District Judge Lee

P. Gagliardi. The attorney said Legakis had "an absolute alibi" on the night of the robbery.

Legakis was ordered held on $1.5 million bail. Potamitis was awaiting extradition proceedings in Puerto Rico.

Laster said the two men were "not acting alone," but did not elaborate.

Three Sentry executives have been charged with skimming $100,000 from deposits at the firm in a separate scheme. Asked if they were implicated in the $11 million heist, New York chief of detectives James Sullivan replied, "We are dealing with two separate cases."

Potamitis told police after the robbery that two men entered Sentry's building by piercing the two-story brick building's steel-and-tarpaper roof. They then used a crowbar to pry their way into a vault-like money room, he said.

A co-worker reporting for work found Potamitis handcuffed to a pipe. A spokeswoman for an alarm company confirmed later that Sentry's intrusion alarm had not been set when the robbery occurred.

Authorities began to doubt the guard's story after it was learned that a garage door to the warehouse had been opened between 10 p.m. and 11 p.m. the night of the heist, said Ira Block, an assistant U.S. attorney.

The door's controls were in a dispatcher's room, where Potamitis had been watching television, Block said. But Potamitis said he never let anyone into the building after 9 p.m.

Law enforcement officials said neither suspect had a criminal record. Asked by reporters how the two men had the sophistication to commit the crime, Sullivan said, "It doesn't require any great brains to pull a larceny like this in such a poorly guarded place."

Sentry went out of business last month following a series of disclosures of other losses after the Dec. 12 heist. First, $225,000 in Yonkers Raceway receipts was discovered missing about three weeks after the $11 million robbery.

While investigating both those losses, police discovered an additional $100,000 had been stolen in June.

Three Sentry officials were arrested and charged in the alleged skimming operation, including John Jennings, Sentry's president and a former New York City police detective.

On Jan. 18, Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola said at least $500,000 had disappeared from Sentry before the Dec. 12 heist. Two days later it was learned that $4,500 in equipment had been stolen from the company.

'Baby Doe' Is Claimed And Renamed By Couple

By NANCY BENAC
Associated Press Writer
LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Ray and Judy Stiver returned home to claim and rename "Baby Doe," confident the 3-week-old boy born with a birth defect is their child — not the son of a man who hired Mrs. Stiver as a surrogate mother.

"For now, I do feel he is my son," said Stiver after he and his wife came back from Chicago, where it was announced that blood tests proved the child could not have been fathered by the sperm donor, Alexander Malahoff, 46.

"We want to bring him back home," Stiver said.

The child is in a temporary foster home. The Stivers are scheduled to appear Monday in Ingham County Probate Court for a custody hearing.

The baby was born with microcephaly — an unusually small head which often indicates mental retardation.

Mrs. Stiver, 26, gave birth Jan. 10 at Lansing General Hospital after being hired for $10,000 by Malahoff, of Middle Village, N.Y., to bear his baby through artificial insemination.

Mrs. Stiver said she apparently got pregnant by her 41-year-old husband before she was artificially inseminated.

The Stivers said they obeyed their contract strictly, adding Mrs. Stiver could have conceived the child only because they were not instructed to abstain from sex in the days immediately before insemination.

"There were no winners. Everybody suffered," Malahoff said Wednesday after he and the Stivers received the test results while taping a segment of the nationally televised "Donahue" show.

"I'm surprised, but not disappointed," Mrs. Stivers said.

When the child was born, doctors said the baby's retardation was "severe" and he might live just days, according to Malahoff's attorney, William Leininger of New York.

Malahoff, a Roman Catholic, had the newborn christened Alexander to "prevent him from being thrown into Limbo," Leininger said.

But Stiver declared Wednesday, "It's not going to be Alexander coming home with us. It's going to be Christopher Ray."

Stiver said they had not yet made a decision on whether to file suit over the situation.

Malahoff was to reclaim his $10,000 payment, which was being held in escrow by Noel Keane, a Dearborn lawyer who set up the surrogate arrangement.

Leininger refused to say if Malahoff would drop a $50 million suit he filed last week against the Stivers for breach of contract and loss of a child's love. Leininger did say "we have no intention of hurting the Stivers."

Malahoff hopes to recover from the Stivers $30,000 he has already paid out in expenses for the arrangement, Leininger said.

"Baby Doe" first attracted attention when Malahoff allegedly refused to authorize certain medical procedures after the child's birth.

Lansing General Hospital won a temporary court order to continue treatment.

Put A Bite On Suspect

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A policewoman put the bite on a robbery suspect when he tried to grab her gun, and the wound led to his arrest when he sought hospital treatment, authorities said.

Patrolwoman Azell Smith, 39, was leaving a post office when she saw a man grab a woman's purse, said Sgt. Chip Pippen.

Ms. Smith gave chase in her car and found the man behind a nearby lounge, looking through the purse. She identified herself as a police officer and attempted to arrest the man, Pippen said, but he tried to grab the gun.

As they struggled, the gun discharged, shooting the patrolwoman in the right foot. Then Ms. Smith bit the man in the cheek.

"She said she was doing everything she could to get him off of her," Pippen said. The man fled without the gun, and Ms. Smith fired one shot but missed.

Security officers at University Medical Center later notified police that a man had sought treatment for a bite wound.

Police Tuesday arrested Simon Buckhalter, 23, of Jackson, on charges of strong-armed robbery and aggravated assault on a police officer, Pippen said. He added that Ms. Smith's foot injury was not serious.

Peru's War Against Inca Guerrillas Embarrassed

By FENTON WHEELER
Associated Press Writer
AYACUCHO, Peru (AP) — Mountain roads are littered with stones big enough to wreck a car or stop a bus. Soldiers eat with one hand on their soup spoons and the other on their automatic rifles. Not even dogs are seen after curfew.

And to be a stranger in Ayacucho is to risk becoming a casualty in the government's war against an Inca guerrilla movement.

This city 13,500 feet high in the Andes was the birthplace of the Shining Path insurgency; where 1,000 government troops hunted house-to-house for guerrillas in December; and the capital of the district where nine Peruvian journalists were found hacked to death last week.

Witnesses said 400 peasants attacked the reporters with slingshots, stones and machetes in Urcunaccay, 50 miles from Ayacucho. One body was found tied to a crude cross.

Senate President Sandro Mariategui ordered a congressional probe after a peasant told reporters civil guard members gave orders "to massacre any strangers because they would be terrorists."

The peasant said the paramilitary civil guards had told peasants to torture and mutilate "any stranger."

It was a sharp embarrassment for the government in the battle against an estimated 500 to 700 guerrillas, a battle it had claimed to be winning in the 4,000-square-mile area around Ayacucho.

Considered one of the South America's leading democrats, President Fernando Belaunde Terry last year bowed to criticism both inside and outside of the Peruvian armed forces in ordering troops to back up police against the guerrillas. On Dec. 29, he ordered 1,000 troops to sweep Ayacucho. Since then, Belaunde has said, peasants around Ayacucho have refused to pay "revolutionary taxes" to guerrillas.

When there were reports earlier of guerrillas being hacked to death, Belaunde dismissed them as "transcendental." But after the deaths of the journalists, he ordered an investigation.

People in Ayacucho, where Peru won its independence from Spain 158 years ago, live a double life.

By day, women, students, vendors and bootblacks jostle in the Plaza de Armas, which opens on the University of Huamanga, a hotel, the government building and a cathedral — the nation's noblest ensemble of Spanish colonial architecture. But the plaza is deserted by sunset, four hours before the 10 p.m. curfew.

Ayacucho's tourists are gone, its streets criss-crossed by armored personnel carriers and its 60,000 inhabitants, 80 percent of them Inca descendants, are under suspicion.

"We have been under a state of emergency, off and on, for almost two years. Nobody expects it to end soon," says one resident. Typically, he does not want his name known.

In the paramilitary civil guard post at Pampa Cangallo, 50 miles from Ayacucho, Capt. Elias Sierra said recently that he has told peasants to fight back against the guerrillas with anything at hand.

When reporters asked for casualty figures, Brig. Gen. Roberto Noel y Moral, the armed forces commander in Ayacucho, responded: "There is not time to pick up the bodies."

The three units of police fighting the guerrillas — the National Police, the Civil Guard and the Republican Guard — have reported killing more than 50 guerrillas since the first of the year, compared with 34 in all of 1982.

More than 350 are reported imprisoned in Lima.

Two days after a machete attack on guerrillas, two village officials and two peasants were killed in reprisal. Scores of others have been threatened with death.

Sendero Luminoso, or Shining Path, was founded by Abimail Guzman, 58, a Communist dropout and philosophy professor at the University of Huamanga.

Guzman went underground in 1978, preaching an Andean version of Maoism and recruiting guerrillas for five-stage war: propaganda, sabotage, violence, support bases and insurrection in the cities.

Students of Shining Path says the guerrillas are in stage four, often controlling roads and villages in the area around Ayacucho, 350 miles from Lima, the Peruvian capital. There have been more than 2,000 terrorist attacks in the past two years.

The guerrillas have also attacked a government building near Belaunde's palace in Lima, and blacked out the capital for more than an hour last August by blasting power installations.

Followers of Guzman, code name Comrade Gonzalo, include many teen-agers, women trained as nurses, ex-students and peasants.

His philosophy preys on the poverty of Ayacucho, one of poorest of Peru's 24 states, where infant mortality is more than 140 per 1,000 births, illiteracy 52 percent and corruption a way of life. Per capita income is $30 a year, although many peasants live purely in a barter economy.

Speaking Quechua, the Inca language, the guerrillas have spread both politics and terror, forcing more than 20 government officials to resign under threat of death.

Peru's Roman Catholic bishops denounced the civil guards for breaking the arm of Edmundo Cox Beuzeville, a guerrilla suspect, in Si-cuani, more than 250 miles from Ayacucho.

In Ayacucho, Russel Wensjoe was pulled from a hospital bed a year ago with other guerrilla suspects and shot dead. An investigation is said to be continuing. The socialist newspaper El Diario has published photographs alleging mutilation deaths of two guerrillas by police.

Speaking of Your Health...

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

Typical Questions From Readers...

Q. Is it just a myth that people with arthritis can foretell wet or rainy weather?

A. Many people with arthritis, migraine and bursitis seem to have built-in weather-vanes. For some strange, unaccountable reason, they really can anticipate the onset of damp and sticky weather. A sudden increase in their general aches and pains warns them.

Most people with arthritis seem to feel more comfortable in warm, dry climates. Certainly climate and humidity play a role in the severity and intensity of the discomfort of arthritis.

A related peculiarity of climate occurs in many parts of the world. A wind that blows into southern France, the mistral, produces all sorts of strange complaints in sensitive people. Another, the sirocco, is a hot, dust-laden wind that temporarily affects the physical health and emotions of people in Italy and Malta. Similar winds in Switzerland, in the area of the Sahara and India affect the comfort and emotions of those who live there.

The body has many strange and exciting reactions, many of which still remain in the dark recesses of mysticism.

Q. Can anything be done for the stretch marks on the abdomen that happen to women after childbirth?

A. These stretch marks are sometimes called the "hash marks" of mothers. When the skin of the abdominal wall and breasts are expanded during pregnancy, these stretch marks of the skin become evident.

There's virtually nothing that can be done to erase these marks short of a surgical procedure.

Many people fall into the trap of quackeries and are exploited by special hormone creams, exercising gadgets and electrical devices that are expensive and worthless.

Q. Can exercise burn off the excess calories of a heavy meal?

A. This is a delightful fantasy that keeps people in a deluded but happy state of mind while indulging in their favorite exercise — chewing food.

To begin with, no one sensibly exercises after a heavy meal and enjoys both. In the second place, exercise before eating makes one hungrier and tends to add calories rather than subtract them.

And here is the third misconception.

It takes about one hour of running or four hours of walking to burn up part of the calories of a "piece of Danish" and an ice cream soda that takes about four minutes to consume.

The only exercise that affects caloric intake is that known as "pushing away" from the tempting table of goodies.

Exercise undoubtedly is a great contribution to health. But in no way does it substitute for sensible, well-controlled patterns of eating and calorie counting if loss of weight is the objective.

Offshore Oil Posed Challenge

STAVANGER, Norway (AP) — It took eight years to build the giant Ekofisk offshore oil production complex 162 miles from the shoreline here.

Workers battled storms in the cold North Sea to erect structures in water about 230 feet deep. The offshore complex now includes seven oil fields, 27 oil-drilling platforms, four pipeline booster stations and two long-distance sub-sea pipelines.

Peddlers vs. Pedestrians For Control Of NYC Sidewalks

NEW YORK (AP) — The Port Authority Bus Terminal is encircled by them and the theater district is lined with them. Canal Street has them 24 hours a day and even Park Avenue matrons must dodge them.

Peddlers seem to be taking over the sidewalks of New York, say pedestrians tired of squeezing past them and store owners who don't like the cut-rate competition in front of their own doors.

The peddlers' foes have been pushing their way past the pushcarts to a series of hearings by the city's Consumer Affairs Department, which is considering new restrictions on vendors limiting them to certain areas at certain times.

The open hearings began Monday and are continuing all week around the city. Dominating the testimony have been private citizens, merchant associations and community groups eager to put a cap on the sidewalk entrepreneurs.

But peddlers interviewed at their stands argued that they should not be made scapegoats for street congestion, and say they just want to make some money.

"Thank God I can come out here," said one 62-year-old vendor who identified herself only as Stella L., as she tried to interest passersby in jewelry laid out on a trash can on Park Avenue in midtown Manhattan.

She said her husband had been out of work since last February and she has to make between $10 and $50 a day to supplement her $320-a-month Social Security check.

At least she is not on welfare, Stella said, adding that police should have better things to do than chase vendors off corners.

Nearby, on Fifth Avenue, a vendor who identified himself as Bob was selling the latest in sidewalk novelties, a soft plastic octopus that crawls down walls.

"They say we clog the sidewalks. What about that?" he said, jerking his thumb toward a construction site that was forcing pedestrians through a narrow passageway.

Joan Ramer, director of the community board for mid-Manhattan, wants the area where Stella was working to be declared off limits to peddlers between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m.

"Park Avenue looks like a bazaar," she testified at the hearings. "The peddlers even regard the street as their personal property."

Last year, one vendor told an architectural tour group to get off his corner, she said.

Lt. Fred Stinner of the Port

Authority of New York and New Jersey police force described the 42nd Street bus station as besieged by vendors. "We are completely surrounded," he said.

Witnesses said Canal Street is so popular with peddlers that some spend the night at choice locations to hold onto them.

George Wachtel of the League of New York Theater and Producers said the theater district is congested by peddlers, whom he called "antithetical to the way of life here."

The peddlers attract customers because they offer merchandise such as stereo equipment, clothes or novelty items at competitive prices, usually free of taxes, officials said.

Although they often spill into restricted areas in their quest for customers, most of the vendors "just want to make an honest living," said Leroy Watkins, the Consumer Affairs department's deputy general counsel.

They run afoul of the law in other ways too, police say.

There are 458 non-food vendors with licenses but a greater number are unlicensed, avoiding a requirement to put up a $2,500 bond, buy a $25 license and pay sales taxes, police say.

Before Christmas the city began a crackdown on peddlers in Manhattan, issuing 2,542 summonses. But it seemed to have little impact.

Even when their wares are seized, the peddlers usually have a "second stash" that lets them return to the streets in a few hours, said Officer Ernest Fazio.

Reagan's Health Care And Service Package Defended

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard S. Schweiker, on his last day as head of health and human services, is defending the Reagan administration's health care package that would raise consumers' out-of-pocket expenses.

Schweiker is scheduled to appear before the House Ways and Means Committee to outline the administration's plans for overhauling the way Americans pay their health bills.

A former Pennsylvania senator, Schweiker is leaving as secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to enter private business. Margaret Heckler, a former Massachusetts congresswoman, has been nominated to succeed him.

Two of Schweiker's predecessors, Arthur S. Flemming and Wilbur Cohen, called the administration package, which is aimed at cutting federal payments for Medicare, both "indefensible and unfair."

Flemming headed the old Department of Health, Education and Welfare under President Johnson, and Cohen was secretary during the Eisenhower administration.

Their criticism was directed at a series of changes in Medicare, the health program for the elderly which is expected to cost $64.7 billion this year.

President Reagan wants to charge Medicare patients part of the hospital bill during each of the first 60 days they are hospitalized. In exchange the government would pick up the tab for the cost of catastrophic illnesses, those lasting longer than 60 days.

Under current law, a patient pays hospital charges the first day and after the 60th day. Seven million Medicare patients are hospitalized for relatively short stays each year and about 200,000 suffer catastrophic illnesses requiring hospitalization.

Flemming and Cohen said: "The purpose of this proposed change is not to insulate Medicare beneficiaries against long-term illness. The purpose is to cut Medicare expenditures."

The administration also wants to collect higher rates from beneficiaries who buy Medicare insurance to cover doctors' bills, and offer optional Medicare vouchers where beneficiaries could buy health care coverage in the private sector with Medicare dollars.

The American Public Health Association also criticized the plan. Karen Davis, speaking for the association, said the changes are "the unfair tax of all" because they are a tax on the sick and vulnerable.

Ms. Davis, a professor at Johns Hopkins University, administered Medicare and Medicaid in the Carter administration.

Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., a member of the Senate Finance Committee, also criticized the proposals when Schweiker appeared before the panel's health subcommittee on Wednesday. He said they would "cut the heart out of Medicare benefits."

Schweiker came before the Senate panel to describe just one feature of the package of health care reimbursement changes — prospective payment for hospitals.

That revision would set national Medicare payment rates based on a patient's diagnosis and age. The plan, which would be adjusted to reflect regional labor costs, is designed to help slow the growth in hospital costs, which rose 12.6 percent last year compared to the general inflation rate of 3.9 percent.

"Right now the system lacks incentives to control costs," Schweiker said. "We pay whatever they (hospitals) spend."

Medicare will cost $64.7 billion in 1984. Medicare and Medicaid, the health program for the poor, pay for 40 percent of all hospital bills in the United States.

Pinewood Derby Is Held By Pack 205

Cub Scout Pack 205 of Memorial Baptist Church held its monthly meeting Monday night with Den 3 performed the opening and closing exercises.

Sam Mullis and Phil Martin conducted an awards ceremony. An Arrowpoint Award was presented to Jimmy Beckman. Chris Smindell was given a Bobcat Award and a Wolf Award was presented to Chad McGehee. Sam Mullis earned a Bear Award.

Jerry Tester, director of the recent Pinewood Derby, explained the race and introduced the judges: Ken Mayor, Stan Garren and John Weaver.

The race winners of the 8-year-old division were: speed, Chad McGehee, first, and Scott Hardison, second; best construction, Jason Hines, first, Chris Swindell, second, and Chad McGehee, third; most unusual, Scott Tester, first, Scott Hobson, second, and Jeff Garzick, third.

The 9-year-old division winners were: speed, David Higdon, first, and Marty Whichard, second; best construction, Will Stanley, first, Marty Whichard, second, and David Higdon, third; most unusual, Jimmy Beckman, first, Rocky Thurston, second, and Hollis Gunn, third.

For the 10-year-old division, Sammy Mullis won first place in speed, best construction, and most unusual.

The best overall trophies were presented to David Higdon for speed, to Jonathan Martin for construction and to Matt Carroll for the most unusual car.

The Blue and Gold Banquet will be held Feb. 28 at the church.

Urge Rejection Of 3 Closures

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five senators have urged Congress to reject the Federal Trade Commission's request to close regional offices in Boston, Seattle and Los Angeles.

The bipartisan group said in a letter, "We believe a strong FTC regional office structure is vital to ensure that consumers and small businesses are protected through strong enforcement of federal antitrust and consumer protection statutes."

It was sent to Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., chairman of the Senate appropriations subcommittee on state, justice, commerce and the judiciary.

The letter to Laxalt was signed by Sens. Warren Rudman, R-N.H.; Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.; Lowell P. Weicker, R-Conn.; Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii; and Arlen Specter, R-Pa.; according to a spokesman for Rudman.

Suggest Gas 'Donations'

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Public Staff of the state Utilities Commission says North Carolina's natural gas companies should donate up to $200,000 each to help people pay their winter heating bills.

The staff, which represents consumers in rate increase requests, said Wednesday that Public Service, Piedmont and North Carolina Natural Gas each should donate $50,000 and provide an additional $150,000 in matching money for contributions from employees, stockholders and customers.

Under the proposal, none of the money would come from ratepayers, and all money would go directly to the state Division of Social Services to help low-income, elderly and handicapped people pay energy bills.

"This is a modest proposal, but it should be a big help to those who need aid," said Public Staff director Bob Fischbach.

Fischbach said the gas companies had received a windfall that could boost donations. The state Supreme Court last week overturned a Utilities Commission order requiring refunds to customers of about $1.3 million in overcollections.

The donation proposal is patterned after programs currently being offered by electric utilities in North Carolina, he said.

A 'Big Bird' Is Missing

MUSKOGEE, Okla. (AP) — Anyone who happens to see a creature that looks like a refugee from Sesame Street might call Tim Goss. He's lost a big bird.

The gray ostrich, 5 feet tall, disappeared Jan. 13 when a dog got into a pen where Goss kept five ostriches. Three were killed and one was seriously injured. The fifth got away.

Efforts to track the bird and newspaper ads offering a reward have failed to turn up the creature, still missing Wednesday.

"I'm attached to them just like someone would be with a big, old racehorse," Goss said. "It's just like a chicken running around the place."

But Goss said anyone who sees the elusive fowl shouldn't try to apprehend it. "Ostriches use their feet as weapons. It's just like being hit with a fist," he said.

The wings are fragile, and an inexperienced person "might break a wing if they try to catch it," Goss said.

He got the birds, shipped from San Antonio, Texas, when they were 5 days old. For the past two years he kept them on his land south of Muskogee.

"I just wanted to get more of them into the country," he said. "There are very few of them left."

Mondale Buys A Quiet Retreat

NORTH OAKS, Minn. (AP) — Former Vice President Walter Mondale and wife, Joan, have bought a secluded house, described as a place they can use as a retreat.

The home is in a wooded area near Pleasant Lake in this suburb north of St. Paul. A family spokesman said the Mondales "plan to use the dwelling as a retreat, a location for meetings and as a place to entertain friends."

The purchase price was put "in the neighborhood of $200,000."

The Mondales live in Washington, but their son, Teddy, a student at the University of Minnesota, will live in the home while attending classes.

Neighbors describe the house as modest in size but an "architecturally interesting" rambler.

Prepared For Fire Emergency

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — When the University of Minnesota decided to build a new mineral engineering laboratory more than 100 feet underground to conserve energy, planners had to consider how to handle a fire.

In case of fire, occupants would have to run up a flight of stairs the equivalent of 10 stories to exit the structure.

To give people a chance to catch their breath on the way out, a fire room with its own air supply is located halfway up each stairwell.

Housed in a 48,000-square-foot space 110 feet below the university campus, the new laboratory meets all fire codes.

Storms Expected Bring Foot Of Snow To Midwest

By KIM MILLS
Associated Press Writer

A storm that dumped two feet of snow on Southern California mountains left 42 schoolchildren stranded today, while a foot of new snow was forecast for parts of the Midwest, where 21 people have already died in the region's worst blizzard of winter.

In Florida, thousands of people lost power temporarily after a record string of tornadoes swept the state and left three people dead.

As the Midwest storm moved east, winds gusting to 74 mph Wednesday in Pennsylvania toppled trees and overturned two tractor-trailers in Erie. The National Weather Service urged local residents to stay indoors.

Heavy rain was forecast today in the north Atlantic states, and the weather service issued a flash flood watch for southern New England. Streets were already flooded in Mobile, Ala., and western North Carolina.

The weather service predicted another 6 to 15 inches of snow would fall today in parts of Michigan, Minnesota and Iowa.

Meanwhile, a new Pacific storm hit waterlogged Southern California with rain, gusty wind and snow.

In eastern San Diego County, nearly 100 pupils were temporarily stranded at their junior high school in Pine Valley after buses were unable to get through two feet of snow to take them home, the county Disaster Preparedness office said. All were picked up Wednesday night by their parents after roads were sufficiently cleared, said duty officer Carolyn Harshman.

Another 30 children were staying at a community center in Alpine, also in the mountains east of San Diego.

At Acton, about 30 miles north of Los Angeles, 25 teachers and 12 pupils were stranded early today at a schoolhouse that was without heat because of the storm. The children were kept at the school after two buses skidded off roads Wednesday.

Gale-force winds capsized four boats in Lower Otay Lake near San Diego as the fishing season opened Wednesday. No injuries were reported.

About 40,000 San Diego residents were without power during the storm, but "no major areas were blacked out," said Tom Larimore, a spokesman for San Diego Gas and Electric.

Forecasters warned of mudslides in coastal areas battered by four storms last week, but said the latest storm had less punch.

Florida was hit by 26 tornadoes on Tuesday and Wednesday, scouring the state and overturning cars and mobile homes before heading out over the Atlantic. The previous December record for Florida twisters was set in 1975, when 10 struck in one month.

At least 10,000 homes in the Orlando area and 6,000 in Jacksonville were left without power Wednesday, but electricity was restored today.

About two dozen people were injured, including eight hurt when a twister slammed into an apartment complex in Orlando. At least 200 people were left homeless, the Red Cross said.

A 64-year-old man was killed in Hawthorne when his log cabin collapsed during a tornado. In Dover, a tornado tore homes from their foundations, injuring two women, and a man was hospitalized in New Harmony for injuries suffered when a twister flipped over his trailer and left him pinned beneath a refrigerator.

A Miami Beach woman was electrocuted when lightning struck a high-tension pole, causing a 4,000-volt power line to drop into a puddle she was crossing, police said.

Walter L. McCurdy, 77, was electrocuted in Jay, in western Florida, when he became entangled in a downed power line while trying to cut limbs from a tree felled in the storm, a Santa Rosa County sheriff's dispatcher said.

The Midwest storm has been blamed for 21 deaths since Monday. Kansas, Missouri, Michigan and Iowa each reported two deaths in traffic accidents. In Oklahoma, one woman died in a traffic accident and a 76-year-old man was killed when a road grader rolled over him. The machine's operator had been about to climb down to help a stranded motorist.

Five people died in accidents in Texas and four died of heart attacks while shoveling snow in Kansas. In Nebraska, an 82-year-old woman died of exposure and an 18-year-old youth died in a traffic accident.

Forecasters said the blizzard was the worst of the winter for parts of the Midwest because the storm came in from the southwest, instead of losing moisture in the Rockies.

In Iowa, a second blast of snow and high winds hit Wednesday afternoon. Winds up to 40 mph blew snow back onto roads as fast as plows had cleaned them. A foot or more of snow fell on Nebraska, and winds gusting to 40 mph made the temperatures feel like 20 below zero.

Snowdrifts and blowing snow made driving hazardous in Minnesota, and police reported 160 accidents in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

In Omaha, Neb., high winds and icy roads caused a semi-trailer truck to plunge 70 feet off a bridge on Interstate 80. The driver was hospitalized in fair condition with a possible concussion.

Troopers closed all state and federal highways into Wichita, Kan., on Wednesday, and roads remained impassable in the Texas Panhandle though sunshine melted down the snowdrifts.

In western Oklahoma, motels were booked solid as troopers shut down all roads because of nine-foot drifts and winds caused by the state's worst blizzard in 26 years.

May Ask Arrest Power For Wildlife Officers

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Wildlife Resources Commission may ask the 1983 General Assembly to give its officers powers to arrest people similar to those of other law enforcement officers, says the commission's executive director.

The proposal might solve some of the complaints voiced by wildlife officers and echoed Wednesday in the Senate Committee on Natural and Economic Resources and Wildlife.

Vernon Beville, executive director of the commission, said one of his group's legislative proposals would seek "full law enforcement authority" for wildlife officers who now make arrests only for fish and game law violations.

He said many times the officers stumble on fields of marijuana, drug dealers or other illegal situations in which they are not authorized to make arrests.

The proposal would mean that "if they come up on a significant violation there would be no grey area involved as to what they should or should not do," Beville said.

Sen. Don Kincaid, R-Caldwell, noted Wednesday in the Senate Committee that wildlife officers had told him about a list of complaints they have and the possibility of organizing to resolve the problems.

Kincaid said the need for full arrest powers was among the officers' concerns. He said the wildlife officers also complain that although their qualifications are identical to those for state Highway Patrolmen their pay is several steps lower.

Kincaid said the officers also complain that they may work 55 hours a week while Highway Patrolmen work only 40 hours.

Beville said the commission began working with the state personnel office last year to list the duties of wildlife officers "with an eye toward a strong justification of the need for higher pay if there is one."

The study should be completed by May, he said. But he acknowledged that starting pay for one type of officer is about $12,000 a year, almost $2,000 lower than for Highway Patrolmen. That salary also is 8 percent to 12 percent lower than for similar officers in this region, Beville said.

"We are working within the process of state personnel," he said.

Other problems cited by Kincaid were the need for better equipment and vehicles.

Beville said the commission, like other agencies in state government, is strapped for money.

"I'm not indicting anyone ... I'm just taking his (the officer's) complaints to the proper authority," Kincaid said.

He acknowledged that money and action by the Legislature could clear up some of the problems.

Gov. Hunt At N.Y. Meeting

NEW YORK (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt met Wednesday with 50 of the nation's political, business, labor and science education leaders.

The meeting's purpose was to discuss how the country should meet the education and training needs of a modern technology economy.

"We are trying to create a greater understanding of the link between economic growth and education," Hunt said. "We must have a massive effort in this nation to rebuild our economy, and a major part of our strategy must be education."

Poultry
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) (NCDA) — The North Carolina f.o.b. dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 43 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2-2 to 3 pound birds. Too few for final weighted average. The market is higher and the live supply is moderate for a good demand. Weights mostly desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Thursday was 1,681,000, compared to 1,741,000 last Thursday.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market moved ahead today amid continuing hopes for a recovery from the recession.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 5.15 to 1,067.79 by noon.

Advancing issues held a 9-5 lead over declines in the midday count of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

On Wednesday, Martin Feldstein, President Reagan's chief economic adviser, said he saw "stronger and stronger signs that recovery is imminent."

Separately, Chairman Paul Volcker of the Federal Reserve said a business upswing "may be taking its first steps."

Pan American World Airways led the active list, up 1/4 at 5 1/2 in trading that included a 600,000-share block at 5 1/2.

Among actively traded blue chips, American Telephone & Telegraph rose 1/4 to 68 1/2, Exxon 1/4 to 30, and International Business Machines 1/4 to 95 1/2.

The NYSE's composite index gained .48 to 83.15. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 2.02 at 360.59.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 36.29 million shares at noon, against 33.46 million at the same point Wednesday.

Overtune Order Barring Cutback

CHICAGO (AP) — A state Supreme Court justice has overturned an order that blocked Illinois from making $160 million in emergency budget cuts, but he called the case a "cruel and painful dilemma."

Justice Daniel Ward said his decision was temporary pending a hearing before the full Supreme Court. At issue is a Cook County judge's order Monday blocking cuts in state medical programs which Gov. James R. Thompson says are needed to help avoid big deficits.

Ward ruled Wednesday, as Thompson's budget office announced the state's projected cash shortage has reached $255 million, even after the $160 million in cuts are counted.

Poland Orders United Press International Halt Activity

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Communist authorities today ordered United Press International to suspend news gathering activities in Poland and withdrew the accreditation of its remaining correspondent, Bogdan Turek, a Pole.

It took the step to retaliate for the expulsion of the Polish government's correspondent in Washington.

The chain of events began Jan. 13 when the Polish government withdrew the accreditation of UPI's sole Warsaw-based American correspondent, Ruth Gruber, and expelled her, and calling it "a warning" for other foreign reporters in Poland to watch their step.

The regime alleged she was involved in activities of an "intelligence character," charges denied by Ms. Gruber.

Washington repented to the expulsion by ordering Stanislaw Glabinski, the sole correspondent of PAP, the official Polish news agency, to leave the United States.

The Polish Foreign Ministry said today that UPI could resume normal operations in Poland as soon as a new PAP correspondent is accredited in the United States, and Miss Gruber's replacement arrives in Warsaw.

After Miss Gruber left Poland, UPI continued to send dispatches by Turek. Turek was summoned to the Foreign Ministry today and informed of the latest decision. He sent his final dispatch 90 minutes later, a report on the withdrawal of his accreditation.

The UPI office in Warsaw will remain open, Turek said, to handle bookkeeping and administrative affairs, but will be barred from sending news.

The Associated Press bureau in Warsaw was not affected by the Foreign Ministry action. About 19 American reporters are accredited in Warsaw, including TV networks, newspapers, magazines and The AP.

Dixon Guides ODU Past Lady Pirates

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
It didn't turn out to be a slugging match — or even the most physical game of all — but the outcome was no different that the first time around as Old Dominion's Lady Monarchs rolled up a 76-37 win over the Lady

Pirates of East Carolina last night. Earlier in the season, the two teams met and when the ODU had finished off the 92-52 win, Coach Marianne Stanley charged that ECU's women had used dirty tactics in the game, playing far more physically than called for. She especially took aim at Mary Denkler, accusing her of "manhandling" her 8-inch taller foe Anne Donovan.

Denkler held Donovan to below ten points for only the second time this season in that game, and last night repeated that performance, holding her to nine. Denkler, held to under double figures for the first time this season in that game, came back with 13 last night.

Those 13 enabled her to become the number two career scorer in ECU history, passing Debbie Freeman with a total of 1,571 points. The number one scorer, Rosie Thompson, with over 2,300 points, remains out of reach for the senior forward.

After this game, however, there were no repeat charges, and both coaches seemed to feel that the contest was well-officiated and that the officials were in firm command of the game all the way.

In the previous encounter, ECU's Cathy Andruzzi had been whistled for two technicals, while Stanley drew one. Last night, only one tech was called, that on Donovan, who complained once too often for the liking of referee Bill Franklin. It was the first career technical against the 6-8 giant.

The Lady Pirates — as in the first game — got the first two points, as Sylvia Bragg hit a jumper. Then, as in the first game, the Lady Pirates went ice cold, not scoring again for over eight minutes. Old Dominion, playing not quite the same way, however, ran off 16 straight — as compared to 20 in the first game — to take the lead for good.

Donovan, Helen Malone and Medina Dixon each scored two baskets during the string that ran them out to a 16-2 lead. After that, East Carolina never came closer than ten points.

Throughout the first half, ODU held as much as a 17-point lead, 24-7, on two free throws by Alpha Jenkins, former SouthWest Edgecombe star, and by as little as ten, 16-6, after Caren Truske hit a jumper.

The half ended with ODU leading 30-16.

East Carolina cut the lead back to 12, scoring the first points of the second half, but ODU quickly pushed out to a 20 point lead behind the play of Dixon, at 40-20. ECU later cut it back to as little as 16 — from 23 — but the Lady Monarchs surged away again, running their lead out to the final 39-point margin by scoring the final six points of the game.

ECU shot poorly in the contest, hitting only 29.3 percent for the game — as compared to 49.2 percent for the Monarchs. ODU also held a 2-1 rebounding edge, 50-25.

"Old Dominion is a very good team," Andruzzi said afterwards. "You can't underestimate their ability or talent. They're sixth in the country, and we're a very young team with severe injuries, not that the injuries would have made any difference. But we have people in different positions and people playing who haven't been playing."

Andruzzi said that the Lady Pirates, despite being outmanned, "played their hearts out. We tried to get people open and get good shots, and we tried to press but they just flew right by us."

"I told them (in the dressing room afterwards) that they have to rise to the occasion. They have to believe in themselves. They don't know what they can do yet. They're still looking for someone to spark them, but there is no one. They have to do it as a team."

If there was a dominant factor in the game, it was the play of Dixon, who originally began her career at South Carolina, then transferred to ODU. She scored an ODU career high of 24 points in the game, sinking 12 of 18 shots from the floor, while pulling down 12 rebounds and having four assists. "She was the most highly recruited player in the country two years ago — just as Donovan was four years ago. We just don't have the caliber to handle the Top 20 teams this year. That's nothing against our kids, just the truth."

Andruzzi said the loss wasn't an embarrassment for the Lady Pirates. "We're just so young and we're playing tough opposition. To be 8-9 with the schedule we're playing is tremendous."

Andruzzi also praised the crowd of 1,750 attending. "The people have been with us all the time like always and we need them. We've had some great years, but this is a rebuilding year, and we need their constant support."

Meanwhile Stanley said she didn't envy Andruzzi in her situation. "Considering the situation, they are playing good basketball."

Asked to compare this game with the previous meeting, Stanley said she didn't think the first meeting had an effect on this one. "The last game was atypical of women's basketball with the physical play."

In addition to Dixon's scoring, ODU got 14 points from Regina Miller and 12 from Malone. Donovan, held to nine points, did pull down 12 rebounds.

The win boosts the sixth ranked Monarchs record to 16-3 on the year. For East Carolina, the game was the first home contest in two months. They hit the road again on Saturday, however, traveling to James Madison. Sunday evening at 6 p.m., however, they'll be back in Minges against Richmond. That game was originally scheduled for Richmond, but was moved to Greenville due to a conflict in Robins Center.

COACHES' CORNER

By CHARLIE HARRISON
ECU Men's Basketball Coach

As the season begins downhill, the struggle for ECU basketball team continues to be up-hill. Although we're two-thirds of the way through our schedule, I'm still quite honestly in awe of what our players have done and how they've performed with a very difficult and demanding schedule, and how they've reacted when one of the top performers on the team went down with an injury. I'm also in awe of our league and quite honestly surprised by its strength. Here in the midst of the ACC mystic fans forget that there are other teams that are very good college basketball teams. The ECAC-South has as much balance as most any league around and if fans will check the record, I'm sure they'll discover that the ECAC-South has already proven itself as a reputable group of basketball teams.

Recently, I was talking with Carl Tacy at Wake Forest and he kept shaking his head about William & Mary. They have no highly publicized players but they systematically beat a very good Wake Forest team by an easy 16 points. They highly publicized Sun Belt — promoted in their brochure as the "Best Coaches League in the USA," is now 2-6 against the ECAC-South.

Everyone can beat everyone else in the ECAC-South but each team has also proven it can play and compete with the Big Boys of College Basketball and most of the time it's on the Big Boys' home floor, with the Big Boys' own league officials, and in front of a screaming mob of the Big Boys' fans. Old Dominion, Wake Forest, South Carolina and Virginia have ventured onto the ECAC's home floors and the record book shows that the ECAC has won three and lost one.

The teams and coaches have proven themselves as good teams — teams that can compete with the so-called "Biggies" and the ECAC Tournament in Richmond, although shadowed by the ACC-Hoopla, promises to be a great and interesting three days of very good basketball. To fans (unless avid ECU or ECAC supporters) they ask, "Who cares?" In the movie Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, Paul Newman kept asking about the posse in hot pursuit — "Who are those guys?" (By the way, they eventually caught them.) The same question has been asked by Old Dominion, Wake Forest, Iowa, South Carolina and Temple to name a few as they left the site of a game against the ECAC-South's teams. "Who are those guys?" They, too, discovered that "those guys" are teams to be respected and never taken for granted.

Borg Unlikely To Change Mind

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Don't bet on Bjorn Borg getting the competitive itch two years from now, picking up his rackets and heading for the tennis courts. His decision to retire is — in tennis jargon — game, set and match.

But just before he leaves, he'll give his fans in the U.S. a taste of the skills that made him a five-time winner at Wimbledon and a six-time champion at the French Open.

Borg, 26, thrilled a capacity crowd at the Charlotte Coliseum Wednesday night by wearing down and eventually whipping Roscoe Tanner in an exhibition match. After fighting to beat Tanner in a pair of 7-6 tiebreakers, Borg opened the throttle and administered a 6-2 whipping.

It wasn't vintage Borg, especially since he's been off the circuit for several months. He admitted to reporters that he's out of shape because of his layoff, but he added that not even the matches he'll play in the next four weeks will change his mind.

"That's the final decision," he told reporters during a news conference prior to the exhibition. "I have four weeks left now and I would like to make the best of it."

The beginning of the end came in Stockholm. Borg had sat out the latter portion of the 1981 season, and his efforts to return in 1982 were thwarted when it was determined that he would have to play qualifying matches in order to become eligible for tournament play. Suddenly, he said, it dawned on him that there's life after tennis.

"I woke up and I told Mariana that I probably would retire from tennis. She didn't really believe me. She thought I would start to play and was trying to convince me to play," he said.

During the forced layoff, Borg had been attempting to regain his edge, he found that the thrill was gone and nothing he tried could get it back.

"It was very difficult to come back. I didn't have the motivation and I really didn't enjoy it as much as I did before," he said. "I just hoped that maybe my feeling would change later. Actually, it just got worse and worse."

Another sign was Borg's temperament. Victories and losses took the same priority and he discovered that life away from the court wasn't so bad.

"When I took my rest in November 1981, that was the first time in 10 or 11 years. I had a break, I was ready to come back in April 1982, then I had the problem with qualification. Even if I had started playing in April, maybe I would have felt the same as I feel right now."

Several theories were introduced as reasons for his departure. Tanner suggested that Borg might have wearied of the constant shots at his No. 1 status, not to mention the weekly grind of travel and tournaments.

"Unless you go someplace out in the wilderness, you see what the other guys are doing, so you're still really involved in it. In Bjorn's position, there was a great deal of pressure on him to play every week," said Tanner.

However, Borg says pressure did not move him to quit.

"You can feel the pressure when you're on the top. You'd like to stay on the top all the time. But that had nothing to do with my retirement."

Tanner said there's nothing in the rules of tennis that says Borg has to keep going just because he's 26. "That's his personal decision. If he wants to stop, he certainly ought to be able to."

Stopping must have opened Borg's eyes to things he'd never thought possible, things like vacations, time with his wife and careers in fields not directly related to tennis.

"Right now, I will try different things. I can do public relations, I can do a ton of things," he said. "I'd just like to find something I really enjoy. I want to have ambitions in other fields. We'll just have to see what those will be."

Tanner also suggested that Borg's decision, although not devastating, would have some effect on the popularity of the game. Borg disagrees.

"I hope the people will miss me. I will miss them. Still, there are quite a few good players out there."

Heels Squeak By Tigers; Duke, NCS, Terps Win

By The Associated Press

No. 1 ranked North Carolina State went to the free throw line to silence a late rally by Georgia Tech.

The game developed into a scoring battle of two outstanding freshmen — State's Ernie Myers and Tech's Mark Price. Each drilled a quartet of three-point goals as Price won the individual battle with 30 points to Myers' 25, but the State star had more help.

Thurl Bailey scored 13 of his 17 points in the first half and also grabbed 11 rebounds for the Wolfpack, which took the lead for good on a three-point goal by George McClain 3:43 before halftime.

State surged to a 12-point lead twice in the second half, but Tech rallied in the final 1:25, cutting a 66-56 deficit to 69-64 with 55 seconds remaining on rebound layup by Danny Pearson.

The victory lifted State to 10-7 overall and 4-4 in the ACC and Tech fell to 8-9 and 1-6. Johnny Dawkins sank two free throws with nine seconds left to give Duke a 73-71 non-conference college basketball victory over William & Mary Wednesday night.

Duke, 9-9, maintained control until Tom Emma scored on a driving layup at the 1:28 mark and, following an Indian miss, Mark Alarie scored on a dunk to boost the margin to four.

Adrian Branch scored seven of his 19 points during a 15-point Maryland streak Wednesday night as the Terps pulled away in the stretch to defeat Old Dominion 87-67.

Maryland, 13-5 after winning its sixth in a row, led 49-33 with one minute left to play.

Thurl Bailey scored 13 of his 17 points in the first half and also grabbed 11 rebounds for the Wolfpack, which took the lead for good on a three-point goal by George McClain 3:43 before halftime.

State surged to a 12-point lead twice in the second half, but Tech rallied in the final 1:25, cutting a 66-56 deficit to 69-64 with 55 seconds remaining on rebound layup by Danny Pearson.

The victory lifted State to 10-7 overall and 4-4 in the ACC and Tech fell to 8-9 and 1-6. Johnny Dawkins sank two free throws with nine seconds left to give Duke a 73-71 non-conference college basketball victory over William & Mary Wednesday night.

Duke, 9-9, maintained control until Tom Emma scored on a driving layup at the 1:28 mark and, following an Indian miss, Mark Alarie scored on a dunk to boost the margin to four.

Adrian Branch scored seven of his 19 points during a 15-point Maryland streak Wednesday night as the Terps pulled away in the stretch to defeat Old Dominion 87-67.

Maryland, 13-5 after winning its sixth in a row, led 49-33 with one minute left to play.

At Atlanta, North Carolina State went to the free throw line to silence a late rally by Georgia Tech.

Trotter Coach Arrested

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Drug agents who "didn't want to disappoint" fans of the Harlem Globetrotters allowed the team's player-coach, Nate Branch, to play in a game here before booking him after on drug charges, authorities said.

Branch, 38, was arrested Wednesday evening when he claimed his luggage at Tucson International Airport after a flight from San Francisco.

State Department of Public Safety agents acting on a tip from the federal Drug Enforcement Administration in San Francisco found two grams of cocaine and two ounces of marijuana in Branch's luggage, Sgt. David Gonzales said.

Although Branch was arrested, he was not immediately booked into Pima County Jail and instead was driven by two agents to the Tucson Community Center, where the Globetrotters had a scheduled game, Gonzales said.

"It's very uncommon," Gonzales acknowledged. "But a lot of people came to see him play and we didn't want to disappoint them."

Branch, of Palo Alto, Calif., has coached the Globetrotters since 1978. He joined the team 15 years ago.

Night Of Struggle For Top 20 Teams

By The Associated Press
If 18-3 equals No.1, how come 7-14 doesn't equal 1-A?
Don't ask North Carolina Coach Dean Smith.

"If you look at the way Clemson played, they should be right behind us," Smith said Wednesday night after his defending national champion Tar Heels "celebrated" their return to the No.1 position in The Associated Press poll by coming from behind to win Atlantic Coast Conference rival Clemson 84-81.

Six other members of the Top Twenty were in action and three of them also struggled. Tenth-ranked Missouri nipped Colorado 68-65 in a two-overtime Big Eight game,

No.12 Louisville staved off a late Cincinnati rally to post a 79-73 Metro Conference victory and No.17 Minnesota needed two overtimes to turn back Ohio State 89-80 in Big Ten action.

Meanwhile, in Southwest Conference routs, eighth-ranked Houston trounced Baylor 86-69 and No.9

Arkansas whipped Rice 70-43, while No.20 Syracuse wiped out Connecticut 89-69 in a Big East contest.

In winning its 15th consecutive game, North Carolina erased a three-point deficit at Clemson with less than five minutes remaining. Sam Perkins, the game's high scorer with 30 points, led a rally that took the Tar Heels from a 75-72 deficit to a 79-73 lead with one minute left. The Clemson had erased a 49-41 halftime deficit and led by up to five points in the second half.

North Carolina boosted its ACC record to 7-0, while Clemson is 1-7. Murray Jarman kept the Tigers in the game in the first half and finished with 19 points before fouling out. Jarman and freshman Warren Wallace, who had 18 points, led Clemson to a 69-64 lead before Perkins and Michael Jordan, who had 24 points, paced North Carolina's rally.

"We've still got a lot of work to do, but we're a pretty good team," Smith said.

Top Ten

At Houston, Clyde Drexler scored 29 points, hitting 13 of 16 from the floor, to lead the Cougars, 17-2 overall and 8-0 in SWC play, over Baylor for their 12th straight triumph. Drexler hit his first 11 shots and the Cougars used a full-court press during a five-minute stretch to sprint to a 42-31 halftime lead. Substitute Benny Anders added a season-high 15 points, while Houston's shot-blocking specialist, Akeem Abdul Olajuwon, rejected nine shots. Drexler told Coach Guy

Lewis before the game that he was ready for a big night. Besides his sharp shooting, he grabbed 12 rebounds and dished out two assists.

"He was ready to start playing well, he told me that the other day," Lewis said.

At Fayetteville, Ark., Darrell Walker led a balanced Arkansas attack with 14 points, while Joe Kleine had 13 and Leroy Sutton and Alvin Robertson 10 apiece. The Razorbacks jumped to a 23-9 lead in the first nine minutes and boosted it to 38-19 at the half. It was 63-30 with 6:19 left.

Arkansas improved its record to 18-1 and remained in second place in the SWC at 7-1. The Razorbacks' only loss was to Houston.

At Boulder, Colo., Jon Sundvold scored 25 points and Steve Stipanovich added 17 as Missouri edged Colorado. Colorado led by eight with 5:20 remaining but Missouri caught up on two free throws by Stipanovich with 1:14 left. In the first overtime, Missouri built a four-point lead, but Colorado's Kevin Cornish tied it with a tip-in at the buzzer.

Second Ten

At Cincinnati, Milt Wagner scored 22 points and Rodney McCray added 18 to lead Louisville over the Bearcats. Louisville, 6-0 in the Metro Conference and 17-3 overall, took a 42-30 halftime lead. But Cincinnati, winless in six conference games, was led by Dwight "Jelly" Jones with 16 points and reserve Marty Campbell with 15.

Louisville stretched its lead to 67-47 midway through the second half. But Cincinnati trimmed the deficit to 75-72 before Louisville's Charlie Jones sank two free throws and Lancaster Gordon scored on a slam dunk as time ran out to complete Louisville's 14th straight victory over the Bearcats.

At Columbus, Ohio, Roland Brooks' four points starting the second overtime gave Minnesota the lead and the Gophers, paced by 7-foot-3 Randy Breuer's 26 points, went on to take over the Big Ten lead with a controversial victory over Ohio State. Tommy Davis sank two free throws with no time left on the clock after the first overtime to pull the Gophers even at 72-72. Minnesota, 6-2 in the Big Ten and 14-3 overall, broke a first-place tie with 5-2 Indiana.

Ohio State appeared to have the game won when Troy Taylor hit two free throws with four seconds left in the first overtime. But, Davis, who scored 20 of his 24 points after halftime, was fouled on a three-point field goal attempt just before the buzzer ending the first overtime. Despite the boos of the partisan Ohio State crowd, Davis sank both free throws to force the second overtime.

"I've been in coaching 21 years and I haven't seen many like that one," Miller said of the personal foul call against Ohio State guard Larry Huggins. "They may ban me from this league, but that's a farce."

Minnesota's Jim Dutcher saw it differently. "We've got the best officials in the country," he said. "Of course he was fouled. Seriously, I've got the poorest seat in the house. But if it hadn't been a foul, they wouldn't have called it."

At Syracuse, N.Y., Erich Santifer and Tony Bruin sparked an early surge as Syracuse crushed Connecticut. Santifer and Bruin each scored six points as the Orangemen bolted to a 14-4 lead, which also happens to be their record. They finished with 18 and 14, respectively. Leo Rautins had 15.

Watson Torn Between Duty And Golf Game

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — It is a time of frustration for Tom Watson.

The man who has dominated world golf for the past five years is torn between what he wants to do and what he feels he should do.

He's a disciplined man. So duty won.

"I'm eager to play, anxious to play golf. But at this time, I feel my duty is to my family, to be with them as much as possible," Watson said.

The family includes 2-month-old Michael, Watson's second child and first son. His birth in December, and the attendant duties of parenthood, have restricted Watson's early season schedule.

"I just hope I don't get out of the gate too slowly," he said. "Usually, I play five of the seven tournaments in the West. This year I'm playing only three."

As a result, he isn't playing as well as he'd like coming into today's scheduled first round in the 42nd Bing Crosby National Pro-Am.

"I don't give myself much chance here," Watson said. "I'm forcing the club, not swinging the club very freely."

Still, Watson ranks among the game's greatest, most intense competitors. Although he wasn't playing to his usual standards, he tied for sixth in his only previous start this season and ranks as one of the men to watch in this storied old tourney he's won twice.

He will play the last two rounds at Pebble Beach, where he turned back Jack Nicklaus with that dramatic chip-in birdie on the 71st hole of the U.S. Open six months ago.

Nicklaus, a three-time Crosby winner, also is among the 168 pros scheduled for one round each on Spyglass Hill, Cypress Point and Pebble Beach before the final round Sunday at Pebble Beach.

He was scheduled to play with former President Gerald Ford as his amateur partner, but Ford withdrew for medical reasons.

The three courses on the Monterey Peninsula have been lashed by a series of storms and received almost six inches of rain in the last week. More rain is in the forecast for Thursday and Saturday.

"I've never seen it so wet here," said Clyde Mangum, deputy commissioner of the PGA Tour. He announced that players would be allowed to lift, clean and place balls in the fairway.

In addition to Nicklaus and Watson, some of the standouts include Masters titleholder Craig Stadler, defending champion Jim Simons, Tom Kite and Lanny Wadkins, along with Rex Caldwell, a playoff loser in each of his last two starts.

Portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday will be televised nationally by CBS.

Schools Launch Radio Program

"Pitt County Schools Viewpoint," a radio program produced by Pitt County Community Schools, will be aired for the first time this weekend over several local radio stations. The program will be hosted by Barry Gaskins, the school system's public information director.

Stations carrying the program include WRQR-FM, WITN-FM, WGHB-AM, WOOW-AM, WBZQ-AM and WNCN-AM this weekend. Gaskins said WRQR-FM will air the show at 8:30 a.m. Sunday and other times will be announced later.

The three-to-five-minute show will spotlight one aspect of Pitt County schools each week. Gaskins said the first show will be introductory and will feature school Superintendent Eddie West.

Toll-Free Line Is Added

Persons facing the problems of unplanned pregnancies can receive free counseling services from the Children's Home Society on a new toll-free number, 1-800-632-1400.

The toll-free line was added this week to make the services of the Children's Home Society in Goldsboro more available to individuals who need them. Last year the society was contacted by 409 persons seeking counseling about a problem pregnancy.

Caseworkers are available from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. At other times, persons can leave messages on a recorder and someone will call them the next day. The Children's Home Society is a United Way agency and works with clients in eight offices, including one in Greenville.

Christ's Temple Plans Service

The Rev. C.H. Parker from Cherry Lane will render a service at Christ's Temple on the Bethel Highway Fridays. The service will start at 7:30 p.m.

Evangelist To Speak

Evangelist Ann Baines and the Crusade Team of Rocky Mount will conduct services Friday and Saturday nights at Tabernacle of Faith Revival Center. Services will start each night at 7:30 p.m.

Artist On TV Show

Beverly Cotten, former visiting artist-in-residence at Pitt Community College, will be a guest on the television show "Hee Haw" on Feb. 19. Ms. Cotten, who clogs and plays banjo, is now visiting artist-in-residence at Piedmont Technical College in Morrisville.

A rerun of the "Hee Haw" episode is scheduled for Aug. 20.

Playwrights Plan Workshop

The Playwrights Fund of North Carolina will hold a "table reading" workshop at 10 a.m. Friday at 120 Oxford Road in Brook Valley. New scripts are to be read aloud and critiqued, with suggestions offered to help the playwright with revisions.

The workshop, which will be free, will be open to anyone interested in development of new scripts. Each playwright bringing a script should provide copies for each character in the play.

For more information, call 756-8253.

Youth Choir To Rehearse

Choir members in the Youth Department of Sweet Hope Free Will Baptist Church will hold a rehearsal Saturday at noon. Friday night officers will attend a business meeting at 7 p.m.

Joyner Attends Fire Conference

Pitt County Fire Marshal Bobby Joyner recently attended the National Fire Safety Education Conference in Arlington, Va.

He represented the National Volunteer Fire Council on the conference planning committee. He also is treasurer of the North Carolina State Firemen's Association.

Social Work Cluster Formed

A Greater Greenville Social Work Cluster is being formed in Pitt County, with membership open to anyone in the social work field, employed or unemployed. Plans are being made to celebrate March as National Social Work Month.

Interested social workers may send their names and addresses to Jane Walden, Patient and Family Services Department, Box 1082, Greenville.

Tax Receipts Top $300,000

Net sales and use tax collections in Pitt County in November amounted to $324,557, according to state Revenue Secretary Mark Lynch.

Totals in several neighboring counties for November included: Beaufort, $133,445; Carteret, $174,080; Craven, $251,205; Edgecombe, $152,887; Greene, $18,556; Lenoir, $204,532; Martin, $76,437; Nash, $278,741; Wayne, $288,373; and Wilson, $255,398.

Net collections in the 99 participating counties during the month amounted to $20,727,159, Lynch said.

Gillam Named To Committees

Rep. John B. Gillam III, D-Windsor, has been appointed vice chairman of five committees in the 1983 General Assembly. Gillam, who represents the 6th House District, holds the No. 2 spot on the Agriculture, Appropriations Base Budget, Justice and Public Safety, Appropriations Expansion Budget on Justice and Public Safety and Local Government I committees.

Other committees on which Gillam will serve as a member are: Banks and Thrift Institutions, Commercial Fishing, Corrections, Courts and Administration of Justice, Health and Judiciary IV.

Solicitation Requests Approved

Police Chief Glenn Cannon announced the approval of two requests for solicitation permits in Greenville.

He said the requests were submitted by: St. Timothy's Episcopal youth group to conduct a door-to-door solicitation Feb. 5, 12, and 19 to sell doughnuts to raise funds for youth group projects; and by Gamma Sigma Sigma national service sorority to conduct a sidewalk solicitation Feb. 18-19 to sell lollipops to raise funds for donation to the Lupus Foundation and other projects.

Board Seeks Typical 1908 Home

The Greenville-Pitt County Board of Realtors is conducting a search to find the most representative local home built in 1908 to enter in a nationwide competition sponsored by the National Association of Realtors.

President Thelma Whitehurst said the board will use its records and those of the historical society and any other available sources to locate a 75-year-old home that will best represent the area in the "Diamond Jubilee Homes Competition" to honor the finest examples of 1908 American homes.

Ms. Whitehurst said all suggestions from anyone in the area will be welcome. She asked that anyone who owns a home built in 1908, or knows of someone who does, contact Jean Hopper, "Make America Better" chairman, at 756-3500. The deadline for nominations is June 1.

Social Security Rescue Is Threatened

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The fragile support for a bipartisan Social Security rescue plan is threatened by a dispute over raising the retirement age, with a key congressman saying he will oppose the entire package if that is done.

That issue and other problems facing a $168 billion package drafted by the National Commission on Social Security Reform have cropped up during House Ways and Means Committee hearings which began Tuesday.

He'll Pay If Tax Boosted

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Gov. Jay Rockefeller already pays hundreds of thousands of dollars in taxes, but he'll have to pay a lot more if his proposed state tax hike is approved.

Rockefeller paid $15,912 in state sales tax alone in 1980 — nearly twice as much as West Virginia's per capita income.

The information came from a financial disclosure statement filed with the U.S. Senate Commerce Committee. The panel is holding confirmation hearings this week on the nomination of Sharon Rockefeller, the governor's wife, to the board of directors of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

The statement puts the governor's gross income for 1981 at $2.7 million, and his federal taxable income at just over $2 million.

Under current law, the state would impose $186,637 in income tax on the $2 million, although the figure might vary because of different state deductions, said state Tax Commissioner Herschel "Ned" Rose.

Rockefeller has asked the Legislature to approve hiking the personal income tax for those in higher income brackets. Under the proposal, Rockefeller's state income tax on the same salary would be $265,360, Rose said, an increase of $78,723.

West Virginia's first family has assets totaling $98 million, including $66 million held in a trust established by the governor's grandfather, John D. Rockefeller II, the statement shows.

The governor paid $375,799 in state taxes in 1980, including $4,441 in real estate taxes, $15,912 in general sales taxes, and $2,677 in personal property taxes, according to the statement.

Judge Closes 11 Massage Houses

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A Superior Court judge shut down 11 Charlotte massage parlors in response to lawsuits charging that the parlors operate as houses of prostitution.

Judge Frank Snapp issued temporary restraining orders Tuesday.

Mecklenburg County deputies began serving restraining orders on the businesses Tuesday night.

The lawsuits seeking a permanent injunction were filed Monday on behalf of county District Attorney Peter Gilchrist. Gilchrist contends the massage parlors are public nuisances under state law.

Believed Victim Of Setting Fire

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Arson investigators say a fire that killed a Charlotte man last week was set intentionally by the man but died accidentally.

Eric Lockwood Bultman, 31, was killed in the Jan. 25 fire at his home.

Arson investigators said Bultman apparently used kerosene to set the fire in a bedroom and it ignited prematurely, trapping him inside the house.

Bultman was vice president of Metro Oil Co. of Charlotte.

Outgoing Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker and Social Security Commissioner John A. Svahn were testifying today on the retirement system's financing crisis, which the administration has said will leave Social Security without enough money to cover benefit checks after June.

The reform commission's proposal calls for payroll tax increases, a six-month delay in July's cost-of-living increase, a levy on benefits going to middle- and upper-income retirees and other steps to produce $168 billion over seven years, as well as wipe out two-thirds of the system's long-term deficit.

However, the commission was divided on how to close the remainder of the financing gap. A Republican majority on the 15-member panel recommended raising the retirement age from 65 to 66 by 2015 then indexing it to longevity. But five liberal Democrats urged instead an increase in the payroll tax in the next century.

The dispute flared Wednesday at the Ways and Means Committee as Rep. Claude Pepper vowed to drop his support for the compromise plan if Congress adds a provision to raise the retirement age in the next century.

"Raising the age of eligibility is nothing but a cut in benefits," the 82-year-old Florida Democrat told the tax writers.

"If you put one item in there cutting benefits I cannot support this bill," declared Pepper, the chairman of the House Rules Committee and a key member of the reform commission.

Congressional leaders consider Pepper's support essential to passing a Social Security bailout plan because he has been such a vigorous advocate for the system.

Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, the 69-year-old chairman of the Ways and Means subcommittee on Social Security told Pepper that raising the retirement age was "an absolute inevitable development in the history of our country as I see it." He asked Pepper not to be intransigent about future changes in benefits, saying, "I could take just as intractable a position as you."

Pepper responded, "I don't make any distinction between the present and the future. ... When I say, 'Don't cut benefits,' I mean now or hereafter. Leave the law as it is."

The exchange reflected a division in Congress over how to handle the problem.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Dole, R-Kan., appeared before the House committee Wednesday saying, "People live longer, there's not much question about that." Dole and other senators have introduced separate legislation to raise the retirement age.

Meanwhile, other legislators have said during the hearings that they are uncomfortable with various provisions of the bipartisan plan, including the higher taxes, benefit freeze and a plan to include newly hired federal workers under Social Security.

Congressional leaders have said that moves to make major changes in the reform commission recommendations could sink the compromise, which both President Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., support.

Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., has declined to disclose which course he favors, saying, "I don't intend to blink my eyes, or move my head vertically or horizontally about any of this until such time as I feel the package is whole and we can move with it."

Rostenkowski declined to comment whether he thought cracks were appearing in the support for the rescue plan. But he acknowledged, "There's a whole host of people who want to jump off that vehicle."

In other developments related to Social Security:

—Rep. Jim Wright, D-Texas, said he has run into a twist in trying to get congressmen covered by Social Security. That move, which would require members of Congress to pay Social Security taxes, could also apparently lower taxes for some, Wright said.

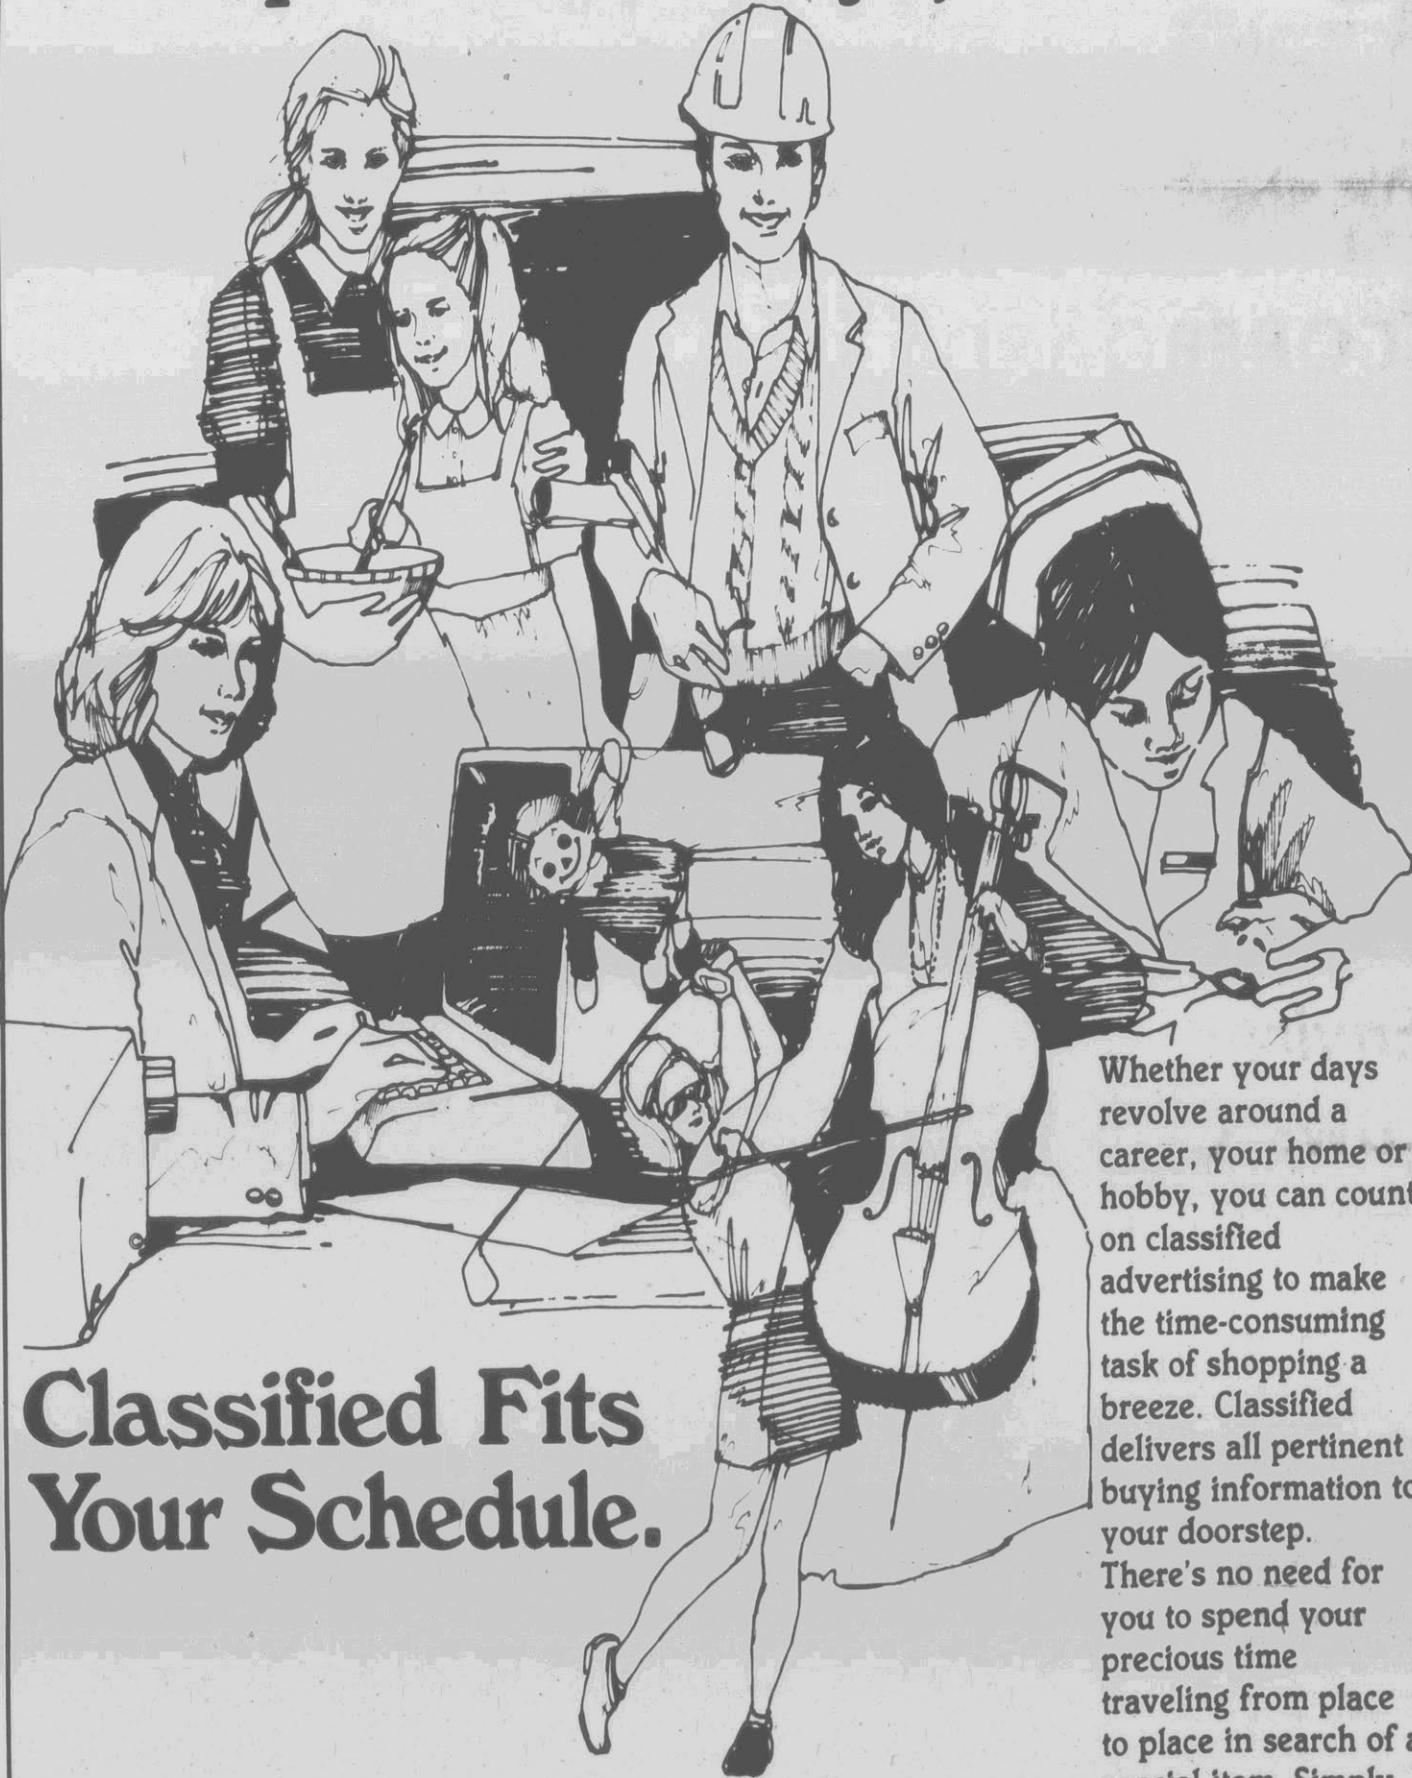

—Rep. G. William Whitehurst, R-Va., said he would introduce legislation to prohibit illegal aliens for receiving Social Security benefits. Whitehurst released a General Accounting Office report which said the government could eventually pay out $1 billion in benefits if only 10 percent of the illegal aliens qualified for Social Security.

FREEDOM MEDALS — From left, Averell Harriman, Coretta Scott King, Robert McNamara, Jacob K. Javits and Joseph R. Schlesinger Jr. have all been named 1983 recipients of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Freedom Medals. According to Arthur Schlesinger Jr., chairman of the Centennial Commission and the Four Freedoms Foundation which conferred the medals, "These five great Americans epitomize the four freedoms enunciated by President Roosevelt 42 years ago." (AP Laserphoto)

Bankers Nervous Over Bad Loans Disclosure Rule

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers will get a chance this summer to find out the amount of bad loans their banks are carrying under a new federal rule that is being resisted tooth-and-nail by the banking industry.

Federal banking regulators want the information made public partly as a way of placing checks on risky banking activities now that federal controls are being eased. Customers will better be able to evaluate the banks they deal with, they say.

But bankers — some of whom have asked Vice President

George Bush for help in their fight — contend the release of the information could seriously damage their institutions if the bad-loan figures are misunderstood by "unsophisticated users" of the data.

They also don't like being forced to reveal the information when savings and loans don't have to.

"No data is better than the limited data that would be available to the public in the new (financial) report," says Mark Serepea, spokesman for the 13,200-member American Bankers Association.

The regulators argue that public disclosure — which is to start with quarterly reports filed June 30 — is necessary in an era of deregulation when banks are freed of tight federal restrictions on their activities.

C.T. Conover, comptroller of the currency, summed up the arguments:

"On the one hand, banks will say: 'If we have to disclose our problems, disclosure will only erode confidence and make our problems worse.'

"On the other hand, regulators will argue: 'If you knew that information about problems would be disclosed, maybe you would act to avoid them.'"

Under the rule, each bank is required to give the total amount of its real-estate, commercial and industrial, consumer and farm loans that are delinquent. Banks with foreign branches have to give the total number of bad loans in those offices.

No confidential information will be given out on individual loans, but aggregate figures will be publicly disclosed for loans that are 90 days overdue or have been renegotiated with a reduction in either the principal or interest rate. Data on loans past due 30 to 89 days will not be released to the public.

Roughly 14,500 commercial banks are affected by the new rule. Publicly held bank-holding companies already make public similar information under federal securities laws.

The regulators expect the information to be beneficial to a bank's stockholders, large depositors who have money above the $100,000 insurance limit and some other customers.

Conover, like other regulators, contends that most banks are well-run and "have nothing to fear from this kind of disclosure."

The Independent Bankers Association of America, which represents 7,100 small community banks, sees it differently.

In an appeal to Bush, who is heading a task force on supervision of financial institutions, the group contended that the well-being of small community banks will be "irretrievably damaged" by the disclosure.

Robert McCormick, the group's president, argued that the loan information is technical and can be "easily misconstrued by laymen or the media which will unfairly undermine the public trust in our banking system."

He also said banks are likely to tighten up on their lending practices and that might mean they won't be able to carry farmers and small-business owners through bad times.

Another banking official, who agreed to discuss the new rule only on condition that his name not be used, argued that loans considered delinquent at a certain time are often still repaid.

"There isn't a great deal of correlation between loans that go into that category and ultimate losses," he said.

Events Scheduled By 10 Schools To Mark Career Planning Week

Nine Pitt County schools and one Greenville school are scheduling events for Career Planning Week, Feb. 7-11.

The Career Planning Week ties in with the year-long observance of the "Year of the Public Schools in North Carolina," which will feature a particular theme for each month of the calendar year, including the summer vacation months.

Career Planning Week is in conjunction with February's statewide theme of "Preparing for the Future." The career planning program is aimed at students in grades seven and eight.

The Greenville school with students to participate is Greenville Middle School. The nine county schools taking part are Farmville Middle, Wellcome Middle, Bethel, Chicod, Whitfield, A.G. Gox, Grifton and Ayden Middle. Approximately 1,285 students are expected to attend the activities offered by local and area groups in various occupational fields.

Occupations to be covered, and representatives to make presentations are:

- Architecture — Jimmy Hite of Dudley, Shoe, & Hite Architects & Planners.
- Agriculture — Ralph C. Tucker Jr., Tucker Farms.
- Child care — Tammy Dale, Kinder-Care.
- Computers — Carl Schnier, Radio Shack and Sandra Cayton, Vermont American Corp.
- Cosmetology — Dale Chalmers, Mitchell Hair Academy.
- Engineers — Jeanne Gamber and Bill Williamson, both Eaton Corp.
- Graphic Communications — Sherrill Duncan, Curry Copy.
- Law Enforcement — Sgt. Doug Thurston, Greenville Police Department.
- Manufacturing (production) — Arthur Wright, Procter & Gamble.
- Manufacturing (machinist) — Sheila Needham, Union Carbide Corp.
- Medical — Mary Yahaker, Pitt County Memorial Hospital.
- Military — Air Force, Sgt. Bruce D. Barry; Army, SFC

Charles Washington; Marine Corps, S/Sgt. Bob Richards; and Navy, NCC Johnny Stevenson.

•General Office Technology — Anne Harrington, CPS, TRW, Inc.

During the month of January, the "Year of the Public Schools" theme was "The Basics and Beyond."

In the Greenville Middle School program for February, concepts of activities will be based on (1) focus on the career guidance component of the master guidance program for the city schools; (2) a public forum on vocational education program; and (3) TV coverage.

Impetus for the "Year of the Public Schools" was provided last year in a proclamation issued by Gov. Jim Hunt calling on schools to focus on the role of public schools and their accomplishments over the years.

Environmental Laws Confusing

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Confusion about the impact federal environmental laws have on parallel North Carolina ordinances sparked debate Wednesday in a state House committee.

Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, once defended a rule approved several years ago that keeps state laws on hazardous waste and clean air and water from being stricter than federal laws.

But he argued Wednesday that the state should be allowed to take whatever action necessary to protect its citizens, despite the relaxation of federal regulations.

"Looking at some areas we see movement away from environmental issues," he said.

Mavretic, who has introduced a bill to ban the use of landfills for the most hazardous wastes, said it should pose no problem because there is no similar federal statute.

"The absence of federal standards on landfills presents no conflict with the bill because there is no yardstick by which to measure those standards," he said.

However, Mavretic said a bill pending in Congress would do much the same thing as his proposal. He said he would bring researchers from Washington next week to talk about the bills and wastes covered under them.

Milton Heath of the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill told the House Committee that the federal government has taken the lead in establishing clean air and water standards.

But Heath said hazardous waste regulation is more recent and in some cases states and local governments may be ahead of the federal government in passing laws.

Hazardous waste laws also raise a question about Mavretic's bill because they say state laws may be no "more comprehensive" than federal laws. However there is a clause exempting rules that deal with location of the wastes in relation to population centers and water supplies.

Brown Lung Ass'n Is Planning A Public Campaign

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer
Members of the Brown Lung Association say they have started a public campaign to protest federal proposals to ease national cotton dust standards.

"We want to make it known to the public that we don't want the standards changed," says Florence Sandlin, president of the Brown Lung Association for North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and Alabama. "We're writing to our senators and congressmen, we're appealing for support on the radio and television, anything we can do to let people know what the government is trying to do."

Ms. Sandlin said syndicated columnist Jack Anderson recently taped an interview with Brown Lung Association members in Greensboro about the proposed changes. She said the program will be aired later this month.

Officials of the U.S. Department of Labor announced last month that they might ease cotton dust standards in textile mills to spare the textile industry the expense of installing equipment to control cotton dust.

Thorne Auchter, assistant labor secretary, said the department would make its proposals by mid-February. Federal standards originally were imposed to protect textile workers from brown lung disease, or byssinosis.

Auchter, who heads the Labor Department's Occupational Safety and Health Administration, would not discuss specific changes his department proposes. He did say the cost of dust-limitation devices should be weighed against potential benefits.

Textile-industry officials have said it will cost millions of dollars to install the control devices.

North Carolina plants employ about one-third of the country's textile workers.

Ms. Sandlin says federal officials have refused to discuss the proposed changes with her organization.

"They have been secretive about this and we don't know exactly what their plans are," said Ms. Sandlin, a former textile worker. "But any changes will set us back at least three years."

The cotton dust standard requires companies to provide workers with periodic lung tests, issue plans for decreasing cotton dust, test cotton dust levels every six months, keep medical records on employees for 20 years and require workers to wear protective masks until the dust level is lowered.

The standards were imposed after the government was sued in 1975 by the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union.

Scientists have linked brown lung disease to prolonged breathing of cotton dust.

In 1981, an occupational disease committee of the state Industrial Commission defined brown lung disease as "an occupational lung disease caused by exposure to dust from cotton, flax or hemp fibers."

Last week, a team from the Harvard School of Public Health said in a report that installing equipment to control cotton dust is the most effective way to prevent brown lung disease.

"Studies show that cotton dust needs to be controlled, doctors say it but the federal government just doesn't listen," Ms. Sandlin said.

"The courts have given the textile mills four years to clean up," she said. "We have two years of that four years to go. I don't understand why the government wants to change the standards when the mills haven't even complied with court orders. They (the mills) just keep breaking the law and the government isn't doing anything about it but making it easier on them."

She said some of the state's large textile mills are trying to control cotton dust, but she said "most of them are just waiting to see what the Reagan administration is going to do."

Meanwhile, a Labor Department spokesman says it would take three months to put any cotton dust changes into effect.

Labor Department spokesman Kono Shima says it will take at least three months to take comment from interested parties, hold hearings and adopt any new regulations.

Drop Plans For Ten New Ships

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger says the Pentagon has dropped plans to order an additional 10 guided-missile frigates because the 75 it has already ordered "will provide us with an adequate level through the end of the decade."

The Perry-class frigates are used for escorting convoys and for use in amphibious operations. A report on the Reagan administration's defense plan, submitted to Congress this week, contains a paragraph disclosing no more are being requested this year.

Last year the administration proposed a five-year shipbuilding program that contemplated building 10 more frigates in 1984 through 1987. In 1973 the Navy estimated the frigates would cost less than $50 million each. Now, the Navy says they cost more than $236 each.

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A time not to resent slights or make sudden changes, or you could fail to gain your objectives. Accept conditions as they are and don't become irritated with others at this time.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Try to please your friends today instead of talking about personal worries. Show more consideration for the one you love.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Don't irritate a higher-up or you could have more trouble than you can handle. Show increased devotion to family members.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Be alert to opportunities but don't jump into anything hastily. Studying old situations that need clarification brings right answers.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Use care and tact in attending to promises and gain the respect of others. A new outlet can be profitable.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) You have to be tactful with an associate and prevent some action that could be detrimental to you both. Think constructively.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Quietly straighten out any errors at work and avoid getting panicky. A co-worker could be distraught so give words of encouragement.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) You have to be more sensible where practical matters are concerned to gain your aims at this time. Be poised.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Any situations that arise today should be considered from a standpoint of how they will affect you and family members.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Attend to duties that must be done early in the day so you'll have time for social activities later. Be cheerful.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You need to apply yourself more now to gain your cherished wishes. Sidestep one who will impose on you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Use good sense today, especially in the face of a possible emergency. Also, be sure to show thoughtfulness for others.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Carry through with original plans even though you may be limited in some way. Use diplomacy in your business dealings.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be one who has to be taught to seek sensible solutions for whatever is puzzling and thereby avoid trouble. Direct education along lines of entertainment since there is talent in this chart. Don't neglect ethical training.

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — In a more perfect and sentimental world, Cupid's arrows always land in the right place and Hallmark's viewer Valentine, "Thursday's Child," would be on tonight, and not two days ago.

That was the preference of Hallmark, the card company that has offered warm, mushy greetings and full sponsorship of exemplary television programs for over three decades.

Hallmark believes the best time for its commercial messages is Thursday night, 10 days before the holiday. If an advertisement is going to inspire somebody to buy Christmas or Valentine's Day cards, it should be closer to the weekend shopping period, the cardmaker reasons.

Since CBS generally broadcasts movies on Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday nights, Thursday, actually, was not a strong possibility. But Wednesday night probably would have meant more "I love you's." Joseph Curran, Hallmark's corporate vice president, understands, however, that television accommodates advertisers, when possible, but not at the expense of larger station profits.

"Thursday's Child," about a courageous 17-year-old with a degenerative heart condition, is the kind of sentimental family entertainment that appeals to Hallmark and establishes the right climate for cheerfully solicitous prose.

But it was judged too sweet by CBS to attract the heavy viewership required in the February sweeps, when ratings fix local stations' advertising rates for the next three months. (The Arbitron ratings service began its sweeps Wednesday night. Nielsen's sweeps measurements begin tonight.)

"If we had a choice, we'd want to position ourselves at the beginning of a peak selling period," says Curran.

The last "Hallmark Hall of Fame" presentation also came too early for Hallmark. "Witness for the Prosecution" was on Saturday, Dec. 4, too late in the weekend for viewers to hit the stores, and a full three weeks before Christmas.

Originally, Hallmark's Christmas movie was going to be CBS' homage to Prince Charles and Lady Di. But, in an effort to beat ABC's version to air, CBS broadcast its show three months ahead of schedule, and you can't sell Christmas cards in September. (ABC beat CBS by three days anyway.)

In any case, Hallmark needed a new Christmas vehicle. CBS pushed "Witness for the Prosecution," although it wasn't conventional Hallmark fare, that is films of inspirational human achievement, like "Thursday's Child" or "The Marva Collins Story," about a teacher who taught inner-city kids Shakespeare.

Getting involved in the project after "Witness for the Prosecution" had been filmed prevented Hallmark from influencing the script, a privilege it exercises as full sponsor, strongly suggesting changes "not to act as censors," says Curran, "but to make sure it's family entertainment and it doesn't have unnecessary language, violence or sex."

In any event, the film worked for both CBS and Hallmark. Effectively counterprogrammed against ABC's usually dominant escapist fare, "Love Boat" and "Fantasy Island," "Witness" finished 17th in the week's ratings, and ranked higher than any other Saturday show.

"Witness" broke all the TV commandments," says Steve Mills, a CBS vice president for TV movies. "Thou shalt not do movies with British actors, or in confined courtrooms, or remakes, or films for older audiences."

"We were happy with the results, the ratings and critical acclaim," says Curran. "For our purposes, the program did very well." He says Hallmark had strong Christmas sales, although he offered no data linking profits to program success.

But, even so, Hallmark's

TV involvement goes beyond selling mass notes. Like the institutional underwriting by the oil companies on public television, in this type of advertising, the medium is very much the message. "The purpose of our advertising," says Curran, "is not only to stimulate sales, but to put a quality image in front of the public."

Less Time 'Posturing' For N. C. Representatives

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State representatives will spend more time at their desks and less time posturing for their constituents under rules changes proposed Wednesday.

Changes recommended by the House Rules Committee would require House members to vote from their seats, would limit debate on some measures and would prohibit representatives from using questions of privilege to extend the courtesy of the House to the gallery.

Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake, said the rule governing privilege was intended to answer attacks on the House or its members, "not to recognize your wife's aunt or to extend the courtesy of the House to the gallery."

If the changes are adopted by the House, only the Speaker would have the power to recognize members of the gallery.

In addition, debate on the adoption of a minority report would be held to 20 minutes per member and no representatives would be allowed to speak on a bill during the first of its three readings.

The rule on voting was proposed because many members during last-minute lobbying tend to bypass the electronic voting system during the 20 seconds when votes are tallied.

"It's really not uncommon to see 20 people scattered about," said John J. Hunt, D-Cleveland, committee chairman.

But Rep. George W. Miller Jr., D-Durham, was unhappy with that rule.

"After all, there are times when you need to have discourses," he said.

Other changes recommended would:

- Change the time allowed for changes of committee assignments from 10 legislative days after the committee is created to 10 days.
- Require that once a substitute bill is adopted by a committee, the original bill must be put to a vote to decide if it receives an unfavorable report.
- Require that if members wish to delete an amendment, they should have it reconsidered instead of filing an amendment deleting it.
- Require reporters, but not television cameramen, to wear a coat and tie or suitable dress in the case of women when present on the floor of the House.

In other legislative action:

Plea Bargains

Rep. Gus Economos, D-Mecklenburg, introduced a bill that would prohibit plea bargaining in drunken driving cases.

We are not addressing the problem in the courtroom as we should be," he said.

Economos acknowledged that Gov. Jim Hunt's package to fight drunken driving includes a proposal to eliminate lesser alcohol-related offenses that have been used in plea bargains in the past. Hunt also wants to force judges and district attorneys to explain in writing why they chose to use plea bargains.

But Economos said Hunt's plan "doesn't change a thing." He said plea bargains should be outlawed whether or not Hunt's package is enacted.

Ingram

State Insurance Commissioner John Ingram wants revisions in the state's insurance laws to "prohibit price fixing" and promote industry competition.

Ingram told the House Insurance Committee he sought the repeal of a 1977 law stripping him of his authority to halt insurance rate increases without going to court.

Until his office reached a compromise last month with the North Carolina Rate Bureau, Ingram said, the law prevented him from getting a single rate decrease. He said the compromise on workers compensation insurance had fostered free enterprise.

"Real competition would allow business and industry to shop for the lowest possible workers compensation rates, just like businesses do for all other needs," Ingram said.

But he said rates remain too high despite the compromise, which he said would reduce workers compensation rates by 10.6 percent beginning April 1.

Ingram also proposed that people convicted of drunken driving should pay three years' worth of insurance surcharges, that the money should go to the N.C. Reinsurance Facility regardless of whether the driver is in the facility, and that recoupmnts shouldn't be surcharged without the insurance commissioner's approval.

Drunken drivers outside the reinsurance facility, which provides coverage for high-risk drivers, pay about $200 less than drunken drivers inside the facility, Ingram said.

Ingram also called for:

- A reinsurance facility law for collision insurance;
- Changing the safe driver plan so that Division of Motor Vehicles points are used as the basis of safe driver insurance points and surcharges;
- Eliminating territorial categories used by insurance companies in the ratemaking process;
- Prohibiting the companies from including lobbyists' fees in their expenses for ratemaking purposes; and
- Abolishing the "monopolistic" N.C. Rate Bureau.

Education

Chancellors of University of North Carolina campuses continued to plead for money from the Joint Appropriations Base Budget Committee on Education.

John Thomas, chancellor of Appalachian State University, said his school's liberal arts programs needed continued funding despite increased emphasis on technical curricula.

Utilities

State Commerce Secretary D.M. "Lauch" Faircloth told the House Public Utilities Committee that North Carolina needed a period of growing electric power supplies, but without rate increases that would put unfair burdens on the consumer.

"We cannot force on the present-day consumer a rate he cannot pay," Faircloth said. "But we must also recognize that the industries we are trying to attract ... will want to know whether we can provide an uninterrupted supply of power."

In an interview, Faircloth said he would not call for any changes in utility regulation. Last summer, the Legislature passed a number of laws widely viewed as crackdowns on rate increases.

Water

Natural Resources and Community Development Secretary

Joe Grimsley told a Senate committee that the availability and quality of water is his department's primary concern.

He told the Senate Committee on Natural and Economic Resources and Wildlife that another problem is guaranteeing public access to public lakes and rivers.

Taxes

The House unanimously approved and sent to the Senate a bill that would change the amount of state taxes corporations pay.

Rep. Dan Lilley, D-Lenoir, said the bill "would allow corporations to recover their investment credit (on state taxes) the way they do under federal law." He said the bill would cost the state about $20,000 a year.

Tickets

Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, introduced a bill that would shorten the length of time that records are kept for driving offenses, like speeding tickets.

Wicker said those violations stay on the books for 10 years now and his bill would reduce that time to seven years.

Another bill introduced by Wicker would allow the state to sell vehicles or car parts it picks up from the roadside. In the past, Wicker said the state has been forced to hold that property.

Mental Patients

Rep. Martin Lancaster, D-Wayne, introduced a bill aimed at closing the "revolving door" at mental hospitals. The bill would make it easier for judges to involuntarily commit outpatients who fail to take their medication or follow treatment plans.

"This is aimed at the people who are feeling well and say I don't need to take my medication, I don't need to go to the health clinic ... and then they become dangerous again," Lancaster said.

Opponents are concerned because the bill would allow patients to be committed without privilege of legal counsel. Lancaster said the patients are not being denied personal liberties and so counsel is not required.

License Tags

Vehicle owners would be able to register them by mail under a bill introduced by Rep. David Bumgardner, D-Gaston.

The bill would levy a charge of $1 per vehicle for postage and handling.

It also would allow one-day title service for $25, with the money to go the state highway fund.

Deny 'Vendetta' In Tax Proposal

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — An effort to tax commercial video games can't be equated with the desire of critics to zap the games out of existence, state lawmakers say.

Sen. Cass Ballenger, R-Catawba, has introduced a bill that would enable state and local governments to tax the games, with proceeds going to public schools.

Several years ago, Sen. Bob Swain, D-Bumcombe, introduced similar legislation which wasn't passed.

Ballenger said in an interview Wednesday he didn't want to run video game arcades out of the state. Swain said he also didn't think the games were inherently evil, despite claims of some officials that they're addictive and bring out violent tendencies in the young.

"I have nothing against video games, except that they take lots of money from schoolkids," said Ballenger. "This is an attempt to put some of it back."

"Some say they're a plus in that they get you used to computers," he said. "I can't quite see that. But I also don't think they're that terrible, either though some children are using their lunch money to play and that's bad."

Despite his assurances, some merchants and lobbyists aren't convinced and say they'll fight the bill, Ballenger said.

"I got a call from one (game operator) who asked if I was trying to destroy him," he said. "I'm not. I've heard that some of these games bring up to $400 a day, so that gives you some idea of their profitability."

William Rustin, president of the N.C. Merchants Association, said Wednesday he hadn't decided whether to oppose the bill, though there were parts that concerned him.

The bill would require operators of the games to buy a $100 privilege license for each machine, starting July 1. Cities and counties would be allowed to levy an additional $10 per machine.

Ballenger estimated that there are 20,000-35,000 video game machines in North Carolina, and that his bill would produce $2.5 million to $3 million in revenues.

Swain said he wasn't familiar with Ballenger's bill but might not support it because of changes in the video game industry since Swain introduced his legislation.

Seek Crackdown On Animal Thefts

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State Sen. Julian Allsbrook, D-Halifax, called Wednesday for a crackdown on animal thefts, which he said are becoming more common in North Carolina.

Allsbrook introduced a bill that would place animal thefts in the same criminal classification as stealing other property. Presently, all animal thefts are misdemeanors.

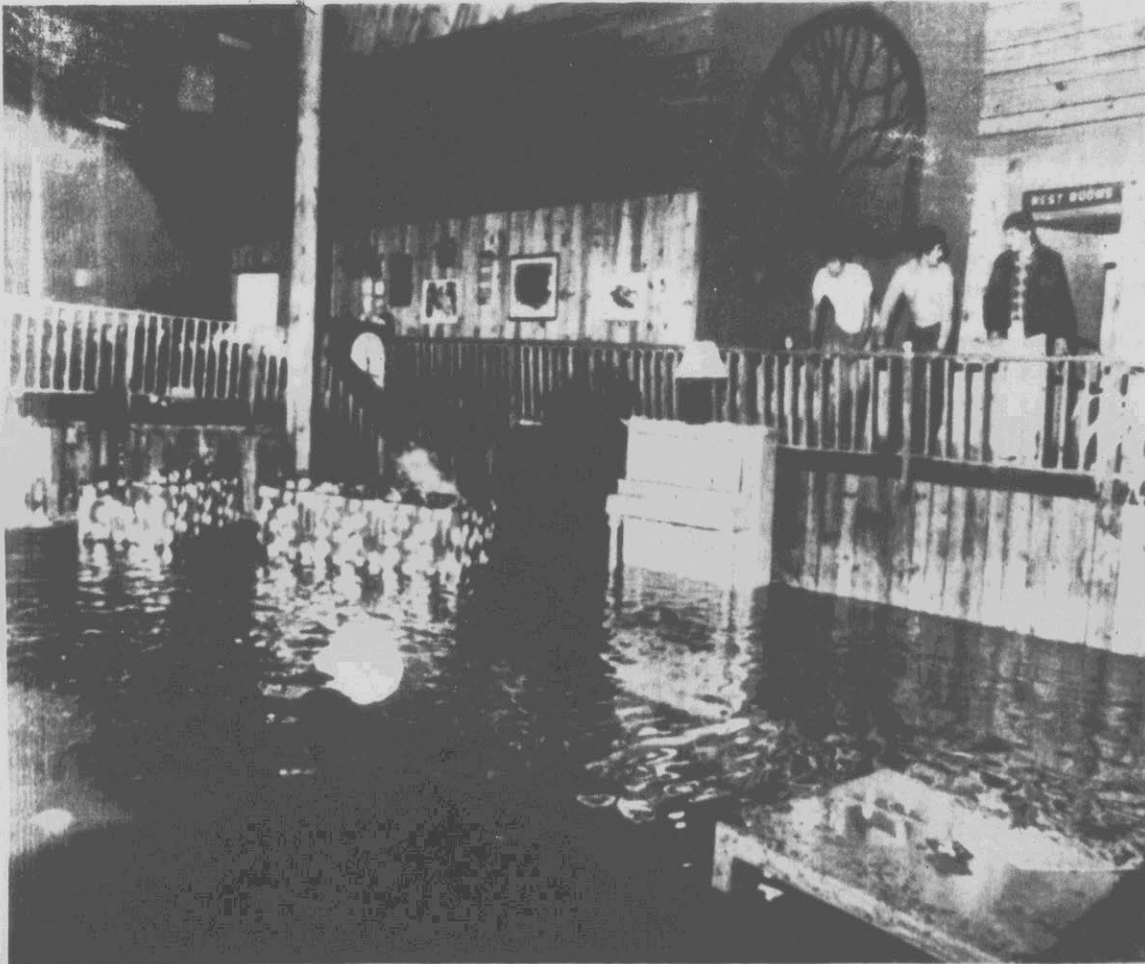

"Animal theft can involve more than just stealing a cat," he said. "Often the animals that are stolen are worth thousands of dollars."

While there have been some reports of rustling of farm animals, such as cattle or horses, Allsbrook said he was especially concerned about thefts of purebred dogs used for commercial breeding.

"Under this bill, if you steal a $1,000 horse your punishment will fit the crime," he said. "No more getting off with a misdemeanor and a maximum of two years (in prison). I certainly do think this will curb the problem."

The bill would make thefts of any animal worth more than $400 a felony, the same cutoff point for other property.

FLOODED MOUNTAIN LODGE — The kitchen, dining room and lobby of Smoketree Lodge were flooded when water from an overflowing stream broke through a back door Wednesday morning. The water reached a depth of 3 feet in the lobby before a door and window were broken to allow the water to escape. The lodge is located south of Boone in Watauga County, N.C. (AP Laserphoto)

FLOODED CHARLOTTE STREET — Torrential rain wreaked havoc with rush-hour traffic in Charlotte Wednesday morning. Low-lying streets leading into Charlotte were flooded by more than an inch of rain. Police said they had reports of motorists stranded in up to four feet of water. Pictured are vehicles in deep water on Charlotte's South Boulevard. (AP Laserphoto)

Police Report Four Collisions

An estimated $5,300 damage resulted from four traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police Wednesday.

Heaviest damage resulted from an 11:45 a.m. wreck at the intersection of Fifth and 10th streets involving cars driven by Mary Grace Pate of 113 Riverbluff Drive and Emily Moye Hadley of 408 W. Fifth St.

Damage was estimated at $1,500 to the Pate car and $800 to the Hadley vehicle. Cars driven by Bobbie Horton Brown of Route 2, Greenville, and Belva Hardee Stocks of Route 1, Winterville, collided about 11:22 a.m. at the intersection of Memorial Drive and Arlington Boulevard, causing an estimated $600 damage to the Brown car and $800 damage to the Stocks auto.

A 5:13 p.m. mishap on 10th Street, 125 feet east of the Cotanche Street intersection, involved cars driven by Boi Lap Thai of 113 W. 9th St. and Susan Baskett Seymour of Route 1, Winterville.

Police estimated damage at $300 to the Thai car and $800 to the Seymour car.

MEETING

A district meeting of Alpha Delta Kappa will be held Saturday at the New Bern Country Club. The organization's Alpha Iota Chapter will hold its next meeting March 15 at the Three Steers Restaurant in Greenville.
