102ND YEAR NO. 45

Greenville School Bd. Votes RIF Policy

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

A recommendation by Superintendent Delma Blinson that the Greenville Board of Education adopt a proposed Reduction In Force (RIF) policy which includes a provision for competence as one of four factors was approved by the board at its action meeting Monday night.

Approval included the addition of a statement that the "regulations should also provide for the protection of the interests of the school system in areas of critical shortages of personnel."

Monday night's action constituted the second reading of the policy in conformity with a requirement that two readings be given to any policy matter adopted. The first reading, with pro and con input from teachers, was made at the Feb. 14 information school board meeting.

The policy voted into force, prepared by a liaison committee of teachers from all city schools, provides an instrument for reduction in force in the event financial considerations or continued loss in enrollment makes it necessary not to renew one or more teacher contracts.

The RIF policy is based on four factors, each carrying a maximum of 25 points in a total evaluation of 100 points. The four factors are: years of service in the teaching profession, one point per year for service to a maximum of 25 points; years of service in Greenville schools, one point per year for service to a maximum of 25 points; certification based on North Carolina teaching certificate (with various point counts for A, G, advanced and Ph.D. certification), maximum of 25 points; and performance, based on a scale worked out on 33 indicators on an evaluation form, maximum of 25 points.

The inclusion of the performance factor was a point of contention for a considerable number of teacher personnel, who opted for a RIF policy based solely on seniority. Their viewpoint is that seniority should be the sole factor in determining who to keep, who to let go, if reduction becomes necessary. This group maintains that performance and seniority are two distinct entities and should not be combined into an instrument on which loss of jobs is based — that loss of a teaching job with performance included would unavoidably raise questions and carry a stigma.

In a prepared statement to the board, Blinson outlined his opinion on supporting the inclusion of competence as one of the RIF factors.

"I believe the variables to be considered in determining which individual is to be separated ought to be: training

Offers Guarantee On Israeli Border

By MAUREEN SANTINI
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says the United States is ready to "take all necessary measures" to guarantee the security of Israel's northern borders if the Israelis withdraw their forces from Lebanon.

At the same time, the president is urging Arabs to accept Israel's right to exist and to let Jordan negotiate the future of the West Bank.

Reagan made the statements in a speech reviewing his foreign policy at mid-term, prepared for delivery to the American Legion today. The White House made several excerpts of his remarks available in advance.

In the speech, the president contends past U.S. policy-makers "had lost touch with changing world realities," and "ignored our responsibility to work for constructive change, not simply to try to preserve the status quo."

He also declared that the "ultimate Soviet goal in Europe is to force the nations to accommodate themselves to Soviet interests on Soviet terms."

On the heels of allegations that U.S.-Israeli relations have worsened substantially over the situation in Lebanon, the president pledged:

"This administration is prepared to take all necessary measures to guarantee the security of Israel's northern borders in the aftermath of the complete withdrawal of the Israeli army."

He was referring to U.S.-led efforts to get the Israelis and all other foreign forces out of Lebanon, which Israel invaded last summer.

So far, Israel has refused to set a timetable for withdrawal.

In advance of the speech, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said the security of Israel's northern borders would not be guaranteed unless there were a specific request and would not necessarily involve further use of American troops.

Speakes said Reagan's border assurance "has been a principle that's been stated from the outset," and was just one of "many, many options," none of which have been decided.

Reagan also repeated his call for Arabs "to accept the reality of Israel and the reality that peace and justice are to be gained only through direct negotiation."

"King Hussein (of Jordan) should be supported in his effort to bring together a joint Jordanian-Palestinian team to negotiate the future of the West Bank, Gaza and Jerusalem," Reagan said.

Reagan has long urged Hussein to enter talks with Israel, and Secretary of State George P. Shultz said last week he sees a "reasonable possibility" the Jordanian leader will do so.

The president's speech came three days after Moshe Arens, who is replacing Ariel Sharon as Israel's defense minister, contended that some Reagan administration officials have "idealized notions" about how fast a settlement in Lebanon can be negotiated among all parties involved.

Arens, Israel's ambassador to the United States for the past year, said in an interview with The New York Times that the level of "frustration and impatience and anger" in U.S.-Israeli relations was perhaps the worst in history.

Reagan earlier this month said he believed Israel was "delaying unnecessarily" in withdrawing its forces from Lebanon.

The president's reference to the Soviet Union apparently was aimed at Moscow's rejection of his proposal to cancel deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles in exchange for the Soviets removing their intermediate range nuclear-armed missiles from Europe.

Instead, the Soviets proposed bringing their total missiles in Europe down to 162, which is the number of British and French missiles based in Western Europe. The United States rejected that proposal.

Reagan reiterated that Vice President George Bush, on his recent European trip, "conveyed my willingness to meet anytime and anywhere with (Soviet leader Yuri) Andropov to sign an agreement that would eliminate an entire class of weapons from the face of the earth."

The president said, "Every nation has the right to determine its own destiny" through democratic principles.

Supreme Court To Rule On Windfall Profit Tax

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court agreed today to decide whether the government may continue to collect billions of dollars under the 1980 windfall profits tax on oil.

The court said it will review a ruling that declared the tax unconstitutional. The justices' decision is not expected until next year.

The government has continued to collect the tax pending the outcome of the appeal acted on today. The levy produced an estimated $26 billion in revenue as of last Oct. 1 and is expected to yield more than $40 billion more over the next five years.

In other cases, the court:

—Ruled, 7-2, that refusal to take a sobriety test can be used as evidence in court against an accused drunken driver. Seven states now disallow the use of "breathalyzer" and other such test results, but the court said using the information as evidence does not necessarily violate a person's right against self-incrimination.

—Left intact a lower court ruling that the Parker Brothers toy company no longer enjoys an exclusive right to use of the word "Monopoly" on its board game. The justices said the term had become a "common descriptive name" and could legally be used by the makers of a board game called "Anti-Monopoly."

—Left intact a lower court ruling that forces the Columbia, Mo., Daily Tribune to defend itself in trial against negligence charges for publishing the name and address of a crime victim before the criminal was caught. The victim sued the newspaper for negligence, claiming that publication of her name led to harassing and threatening calls from the man later arrested for the crime.

—Left intact a $400,000 libel case award against a Chicago attorney falsely accused by being a communist by a John Birch Society magazine.

Persian Gulf Producers Weigh Oil Price War

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — OPEC oil ministers from four Persian Gulf countries met privately today to consider matching or undercutting price reductions by three other nations trying to beat an international oil glut.

A Saudi newspaper reported the Arab oil producers planned to slash their prices by as much as $7 a barrel.

Today's emergency meeting was supposed to include all six members of the Saudi-led Gulf Cooperation Council states, according to a council announcement. But only oil ministers of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates and Qatar attended. Bahrain and Oman, which are not OPEC members, did not show up.

The absences sparked predictions of an immediate price cut.

Such a move could ignite a worldwide price war, lowering gas prices for American motorists but making it harder for Third World oil-producers to repay their foreign debts.

To be competitive, industry analysts say, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries must drop its price of $34 a barrel. The 13-nation cartel controlled international oil prices in the 1970s but has lost some clout since then because of internal rivalries and a smaller market.

Nigeria was the first OPEC member to break ranks when on Sunday it lowered its price by $5.50 to $30 a barrel. Its decision came after non-OPEC members, Britain and Norway, cut their price to $30 a barrel for North Sea Crude, the African nation's main competitor in the European oil market.

The state-run Saudi Press Agency reported that ministers of the Gulf Coordination Council meeting here would discuss "current trends in the petroleum market" because of the action taken by Nigeria, Britain and Norway.

Saudi sources said the official announcement that the entire council would meet clearly indicated a price cut is planned.

The council includes four OPEC members — Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, and the United Arab Emirates — as well as Bahrain and Oman.

Without saying when the action would take effect, the authoritative Saudi newspaper Asharq al Awsat said the council's ministers would cut prices between $5.50 and $7 per barrel "to maintain competitive levels after the North Sea and Nigerian reductions."

"The present structure has been debilitated after Nigeria violated it in a manner that surpassed all expectations," the newspaper said.

The report also said OPEC's troubleshooting committee — composed of Algeria, Indonesia, Venezuela and the United Arab Emirates — might meet soon "to define a general framework for OPEC's future movements, since its present price structure has become vulnerable to total collapse as a result of Nigeria's decision."

The looming price war would help U.S. consumers because each $1 drop in the price of a barrel of crude oil represents a 2½-cent drop at the pump. Third World oil-producers, however, would be hurt by price reductions because income from petroleum sales are used to pay off foreign debts.

In Mexico, the state oil monopoly Pemex said it would announce official prices no later than Friday after negotiations with its oil customers. Mexico, not a member of OPEC, set its price for its lighter crude at $32.50 a barrel on March 1, 1982. Previously it was $35.

Pearce said Hunt also will attend the winter meeting of the National Governor's Association in Washington, which begins Sunday.

Hunt underwent an appendectomy Feb. 11 at Wake Medical Center. He was released Feb. 15, but continued to recuperate at the Executive Mansion.

'Hogan Family Curse': A Hereditary Killer

By ROSE POST
Salsbury Post
CHINA GROVE, N.C. (AP) — You can't shake your fist at God.

You can't turn back the years either, like flicking the rewind button on a tape recorder.

Ruby Hogan Cannon says you can't influence the future, because the young won't listen.

Even when she tells them the curse of the Hogan family is relentless, generation into generation, "they won't listen."

She holds out her empty hands in front of her the way her nieces and nephews show off new babies.

"They come in and say, 'Aunt Ruby, look what I've got,' and all I can see is a bundle of Huntington's disease," she said.

The disease is officially known as Huntington's chorea. It is hereditary, and has killed the rich and famous as well as the meek.

Singer Woody Guthrie died of it.

It also killed Mrs. Cannon's father, her sister and her brother.

Now it's destroying her youngest brother, Mayland, who was stricken in 1968.

"He's the fourth one in my family dying with it. They're all gone," she said.

The disease is a neurological affliction that destroys the bodies and minds of its victims. It is characterized by emotional outbursts, depression and problems with physical mobility. Victims lose control of their bodies and their movement and suffer severe personality and emotional changes.

Last month, Mayland destroyed Mrs. Cannon's car because she wouldn't let him have a beer. Her frustration bubbled over and she had to yell at somebody.

She wrote a letter to President Reagan, because Mayland saw television scenes of the president drinking a mug of beer in a Boston pub and thought he should be able to have one too.

"Can you find it in your heart to help me out in any way at all?" she asked, sending Reagan pictures of her car.

Just what she expects from Reagan she doesn't know. So far, she has received no reply.

Usually symptoms begin to appear when the person is between 18 and 40, but death comes gradually, taking from five to 20 years.

The chances are 50-50 that a child of a person with Huntington's disease will also be a victim.

Mrs. Cannon said Mayland keeps complaining that he has nothing to live for, and would like to at least be able to enjoy a beer. She won't let him have it, because of the medication he's taking.

In July, Mrs. Cannon plans to go to Duke Hospital for a physical.

"I want to do something before I become violent like he did," she said. "I've seen a couple of symptoms on myself, like my equilibrium's off."

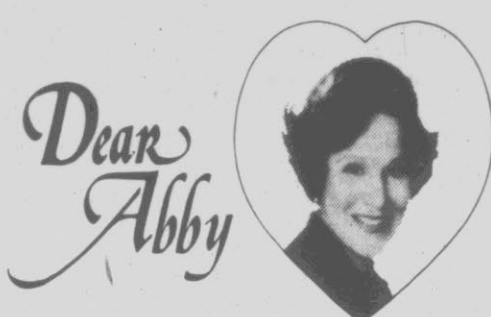

Whatever happens, she knows she won't pass the family curse on to another generation because she has no children.

She had a child, but it was stillborn.

"I said, 'My baby's dead, ain't it?' Thank God."

"It's a terrible curse on the family," she said. "If I've got it, I want to stop before I get this way. I don't want them to carry me out of here hollering and screaming."

"The young ones, you can't tell them nothing. They think it'll be all right."

Public Restrooms Cause Dilemma

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Today my jaw dropped! While sitting in the local cafe having coffee with my husband and our 2½-year-old daughter, "Cindy," we were approached by the owner of the cafe, who told us of a complaint he had about us the previous evening.

My husband, who has always shared in the care of our daughter, had taken Cindy to the "potty" in the men's room. There is only one stall, and while they were occupying it, another gentleman had need for the facilities, so he poked his head in. My husband informed him that they would be out in a minute.

The other customer promptly complained to the owner, saying little girls should use the women's facilities. The owner then told my husband that in the future he should not take Cindy into the men's room — either I would have to take her to the ladies' restroom or she would have to go alone.

What is the rule on this? Is it written somewhere that only women are allowed to take their children to the bathroom in a public place? And then only to the women's room?

How do mothers of sons — or single fathers of daughters — handle this?

NO IDENTIFICATION, PLEASE

DEAR NO: Very young children should never be sent into a public restroom alone. And men should use the men's facilities and women should use the women's when taking a child of either sex to the restroom.

DEAR ABBY: I've been reading about when a cowboy should take off his hat. Most men who wear western hats (and they're not all cowboys) wear them indoors.

When you invest $100 in a hat and $50 in the band, you don't take it off indoors. If you do, someone invariably sits on it, steals it, or some drunk wanders up, puts it on, and you have to dismantle his body to get it back.

In the movie "Smokey and the Bandit," Burt Reynolds, who always wore a cowboy hat, said, "I take my hat off for only one thing."

What do you think that "one thing" was?
OREGON TRUCK DRIVER

DEAR DRIVER: To scratch his head. (Would I lie to you on Washington's birthday?)

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I attended a holiday party given by a couple we had met socially at several other parties.

When we got there, we found the other guests were mixing drinks at a "bar" that had been set up on the kitchen table — a common practice among our circle of friends. About halfway through the party, I was informed by a complete stranger that this was a "bring your own bottle" party, and I was drinking his scotch!

Abby, I haven't heard of a "BYOB party" since my college days. I know we are in an economic depression, but our hosts are comfortable, middle-class professionals — not rich, but surely far from poor. Also, I was raised to believe that if you couldn't afford to entertain your guests, you should wait until you could.

Was I brought up wrong, or have times and the rules of common courtesy changed that much? (I'm only 30.)
BEWILDERED IN BOSTON

DEAR BEWILDERED: In many circles, the BYOB party is S.O.P. (standard operating procedure). Your hosts were remiss in not informing you what kind of party it was when they invited you.

Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. Write to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Bridesmaids included Tammy Cannon of Ayden, Julie Hall of Greenville, Tammy Hinton of Princeton, stepsister of the bride, Monica McLawhorn of Ayden and Kim Wise of Southern Pines, niece of the bridegroom. The junior attendant was Ginger Evans. The flower girl was Kelly Evans. Both are cousins of the bride from Smithfield. Elizabeth I, the daughter of King Henry VIII and Anne Boleyn, was crowned in 1559. During her reign, England's maritime strength reached unprecedented proportions and in 1588, a mighty Spanish fleet was defeated by a small but skillful English force. Her rule also saw the country flourish in industry, commerce, culture and colonization. At her death in 1603, having left no heirs, the Tudor line of British royalty ended.

Quilt History Is DAR Program Topic

A program on the history of quilting was given at the meeting of Susanna Coutanch Evans Chapter DAR held Thursday at the home of Mrs. Larry Whitlow.

During the depression years interest was revitalized and in the '80's, this craft was enjoyed by many." She showed several antique and modern quilts. The speaker was introduced by Beth Winstead.

Sara Lipscomb was welcomed as a new member and a ceremony was conducted by Mrs. Everett Ballengee, chaplain. During the business session conducted by Mrs. Donald McLane Jr., regent, Dr. Lois Staton gave the national defense report.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

It's a question that has plagued parents for generations.

Is it worth all the aggravation, the nagging, the varicose veins of the neck to get your kids to do dishes?

Parents argue it builds character.

Kids say it's the only job in the world where nepotism is a curse.

Frankly, I've seen some side effects that maybe parents should know about. I always perceived the kids doing dishes together every night as a sharing experience where everyone pitched in and made it a better world.

This myth exploded the night we took a steak knife away from one of the boys who was using his brother as a dart board.

We moved right along to Plan B where each of them would have their night in the kitchen and then be off two. However, there was so much trading and paying back, the bookkeeping became unwieldy and we moved to a new house to start fresh.

We called them the Three S's. Each had his own personality in the kitchen.

One was a "Soaker." Everything soaked. The only thing that wasn't put in the sink and filled with water was the spaghetti pot which always looked clean and hung with spaghetti hardened in it for three years.

One was a "Saver." No leftover was too small to store in its original serving dish: a peach pit, a french fry, a wad of gum on a dinner plate. All were preserved for whoever was on for dishes the next night.

The other one was a "Cyclone." She cleared. She stacked. She washed. She dried. She put away. In 15 seconds. And at great expense to the management.

All three, however, had one trait in common. The moment the meal was over a biological urgency would come over them and they would disappear into the bathroom until they were sure the food on the plates was in a solid state.

The children swear they carry the scars of our enforced labor. It's possible. But I like to think the three S's came out of the experience with some advantages as well as disadvantages. The good news is none of them ever needed therapy. They got out all of their hostility over dishes every night.

The bad news? To this day they can't hear a dish rattle without instinctively going into the bathroom and shutting the door.

Treating Kerosene Stains On Carpet

Kerosene heaters have brought added warmth to North Carolina, but they have also brought a new problem. People are not filling the heaters outdoors and kerosene makes a nasty stain on a carpet when the inevitable spill occurs. It also has a very unpleasant odor.

"If you have spilled kerosene on your carpet, treat it as a grease stain," says Wilma Hammett, extension furnishings specialist at North Carolina State University.

There are several products on the market which can be used on the smaller spills. They include dry cleaning fluids like Carbona, Renuzit or Energine; nonliquid dry cleaners such as Host; and perchloroethylene, which is the fluid used by dry cleaners.

Perchloroethylene is available from a local drycleaning establishment. You may have to call around to find one that will sell the fluid to you. Carbona, Renuzit and Energine are available at grocery, drug and hardware stores. Whichever fluid is used, the technique is the same. Using a clean cloth or sponge, blot the grease solvent on the stain. "The idea is to get the surface of the rug damp, but not wet," Dr. Hammett says. If the fluid is allowed to soak the rug, it will damage the latex backing of the rug.

Then, using an absorbent material, such as a clean cloth or paper towels, blot up the kerosene that the grease solvent is breaking up. Then let the spot dry.

It may take several applications to get all of the stain up, but it is necessary to let the spot dry out between applications.

"If you are dealing with a larger area, you might want to try one of the nonliquid dry cleaning products on the market, like host. The absorbent is in the product, along with the grease solvent. It is spread over the rug with a machine and then later vacuumed up," says Dr. Hammett.

Dr. Hammett doesn't recommend renting a steam rug cleaner to try to get up the kerosene stain. "You just don't have enough hot water to remove all of the grease. If the stain is very large, you may have to call in a commercial carpet cleaner. Some homeowners policies will cover the cost of cleaning the rug."

The only way to get rid of the odor of the spilled kerosene is to use a room deodorizer and increase the ventilation by opening a door or windows.

Sometimes, Truth Hurts

Ninety-nine and 99/100ths percent of the public interest in the Loch Ness "monster" has always been whether it was real or a waft of that ambrosian brew originating in Scotland.

Up to now, the world of science has stayed remarkably aloof, with only isolated opinions given when asked — and those opinions liberally salted with "ifs", "maybes" and warnings one could only conjecture.

The fact is (or, was?) that the sages had no concrete facts on which to base an opinion, and were too preoccupied with more pressing problems than coping with myths and tall-tale tellers.

So the "monster" thrived on ignorance; became even somewhat beloved by the locals who gave him, or her, an appropriate name that was easy to remember: Nessie.

But bad times lie ahead for Nessie. Either the nosey technician searching Loch Ness finds something that fits the Nessian mythology, or determines his sonar scanner is faulty or created an echo from something that was not alive. If he finds nothing, Nessie comes to an untimely end.

If he photographs a strange creature some skeptics will proclaim it was produced in a darkroom; or, worse: Nessie will be captured and put in a zoo for the researchers to do their thing, and for the public to see bared to the naked eye. There goes the mystique.

The world becomes a poorer place.

Battle Will Be Long

Copyright suits are developing in paper-copying machines which can reproduce material from books, taped music and taped television programs.

There is mounting concern by those who hold the copyrights on written material, television and movies and recorded music that their material is being used without full compensation.

All this will create knotty problems for the courts. Is it acceptable to make a copy of a few pages of a reference book for later use in a scholarly paper? Can we tape television shows or music off the air for later viewing or listening? Most would agree that sale of such material without paying royalties is questionable. There have already been limitations on distribution of free television which have restricted our viewing. It will probably take years and many court cases before all the issues are resolved.

Mice Join The Solons

WASHINGTON (AP) — The scurrying sounds in the new Hart Senate Office Building aren't just of senators scrambling to a vote, but from other creatures that inhabit the new $137 million structure — ones with four legs and beady eyes. Mice.

As senators moved into the new marble building, they found their spacious, high-ceilinged offices already well occupied by the rodents.

The unwelcome roommates joined a growing list of complaints registered by senators finding the Hart building not quite as plush as billed.

Mousetraps soon joined the usual complement of office equipment throughout the building.

Workers in the office of Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., were having little luck with their traps and tired of complaining to the building superintendent. So they tried a time-tested means of coping with the problem. A cat.

"We had the cat for about a week. We haven't seen a mouse since," said Rick Cocker, a Jackson aide.

Next to the mice, the biggest headache for Hart dwellers seems to be the subway system. Some senators have protested that the one-car train, which makes an intermediate stop at the Dirksen building before ending up in the Capitol basement, is slow, creaky and unreliable.

The subway is intended to rush senators to the Capitol, especially when their presence is needed for a vote.

But senators with offices in the portion of the Hart building furthest from the Capitol have complained that they can barely make it to the floor in the 15 minutes allotted for roll-call votes.

Several times the subway has been headed for the Hart building, only to be turned around and headed back to the Capitol at the request of a senator who got on in the Dirksen building, Hart occupants are grumbling.

The Senate Rules Committee is considering ways of streamlining the system — including possibly extending the time for votes.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., has complained that the acoustics in his Hart office are great — for eavesdroppers.

Dole said he has trouble hearing people talking to him a few feet away in his private office — while everyone outside the door in his reception area can apparently hear every word of the conversation.

Some elevators in the new building never work and others have a reputation for getting stuck.

And the roof leaks. During a recent heavy snowstorm, a large puddle of water accumulated on the marble floor of the vast atrium.

Meanwhile, two 6-by-6-foot panes of thick tempered glass on the interior, facing the atrium, have cracked, apparently because of stress.

"We are conducting an investigation to determine why the glass cracked," said Elliott Carroll, executive assistant in the Capitol Architect's office.

RALEIGH — In some of the more remote areas of North Carolina, senior citizens' groups can't conduct field trips, picnics or other social functions because they can't provide their members with transportation. It's not that they aren't willing to pay to hire a bus or a van. Their problem is that no bus companies serve their counties.

At the same time, school buses sit idly in school parking lots. Maybe it's summertime or a weekend and the buses aren't needed to transport school children. The senior citizens paid taxes to help buy those buses but state law says they can't use them.

A bill moving through the General Assembly attempts to help those senior citizens. Sponsored by Rep. Gus Economos, D-Mecklenburg, the bill would give local school boards the authority to rent their school buses to senior citizens' groups. But as innocuous as that proposal sounds, it ran into some trouble in the House Committee on Aging from a pair of legislators, senior citizens themselves, whose concern was with their fellow politicians on local school boards.

The bill is not designed to compete with private bus companies. The senior citizens' groups will have to pay the schools' costs for use of the buses. As Ernest Messer, director of the N.C. Division of Aging, said, "There won't be any savings versus private transportation when you put all the costs together but in some places private is not available." Economos predicted that a dozen small rural counties, at most, would use the buses.

Rep. Edith Lutz, D-Cleveland, and Rep. D.R. Mauney, D-Gaston, argued against the bill, however, on the grounds that it would make life difficult for school board members.

"This puts a lot of pressure on the school board — a lot of pressure other people don't want to take. As soon as you open it, you'll have the Y, the Boy Scouts, everybody, wanting to take advantage of this," Mauney said.

Rep. Lutz joined the argument. "I know they need it and I'm for the senior citizens ... It would put a lot of pressure on those in other counties. You're causing a lot of pressure." She said this was the first she'd heard of the bill and asked, "Let's postpone this so we can talk it over with our local school boards."

The proposal's been around for five years and several legislators said they were tired of waiting to pass it.

Economos and Messer both argued that school buses shouldn't be left sitting idly while there's a community need for them. "It's better to wear them out than to have them sit there and rust," Economos said.

Rep. Bruce Ethridge, D-Onslow, said the argument against the bill sounded like selfish turf-fighting to him. "Since I've come down here, I've learned that various agencies are very jealous. They don't want to share their computers, their facilities. They don't want to share anything," Ethridge said.

Rep. Peggy Stamey, D-Wake, chastised the argument made by Mauney and Lutz. "I'm not so concerned about the pressures that will be brought to bear on the school board ...," she said. "When they ran for the job, they knew they'd be getting pressure and they can handle it."

Rep. Charlie Hughes, R-Henderson, said, "If they can't accept the responsibility, they shouldn't take the job."

Mrs. Lutz quickly retreated. As the meeting neared its end, she informed the committee that she'd read the bill during the debate and could support it because it assured that the schools would get first use of the buses. When the vote came, the committee endorsed it unanimously.

Public Forum

To the editor:

A German journalist has published an explanation of President Reagan in a Munich newspaper. Journalist Herbert Von Borch finds Reagan's roots in Herbert Spencer (1820-1903), an English philosopher. Spencer preached "Social Darwinism." Spencer, says Von Borch, developed the notion of "survival of the fittest" six years before Darwin published his theory on natural selection. Von Borch says Spencer saw human misery and poverty as stimuli for the human race. These conditions resulted in the selection or survival of the fittest while the weaker souls merely died off. Von Borch sees the New Right as a 20th century echo of this 19th century philosopher. Spencer believed that when the state "contributes to some of its citizens in order to lessen their poverty, it loses its true function and diminishes the liberty it was set up to protect ... sick workers, widows and orphans should be left to their fate."

In the January 1983 World Press Review, Von Borch cites Reagan's views that unemployment insurance is a "prepaid vacation plan for beggars" and progressive income taxation was created by Karl Marx.

Strangely, Reagan and the New Right claim a concern for God, the Bible, etc. But the Bible teaches us to care for the widow, the orphan, the stranger, etc. Can a president really have it both ways and all at the same time? You bet!

Then there's his search for peace via nuclear weapons. "Survival of the fittest?" There could be a problem even for the fittest.

Strength For Today

When Sir Walter Scott was lying on his death bed, he said to his son-in-law: "I have but a minute to speak to you. Be a good man, be virtuous, be religious. Nothing else will give you any comfort when you come to lie here."

Scott was admired not only as a great novelist, but for those qualities above. As one of his friends wrote: "If anywhere in another world the blessings which men have conferred are taken into account in distributing rewards, surely the chiest in the store of the Most High will be reserved for his servant, Scott."

It is never good for people to worry about the inevitability of their own death. It is very beneficial if they can face their passing in equanimity. Such a state of mind will not only obviate anxiety, but will increase the creativity of the last years.

There is no triumph in life so great as to be able to confront death with the peace and assurance of Sir Walter Scott.

Western Unity Is Threatened

BONN, West Germany — The March 6 West German elections offer these melancholy prospects for Washington: a "calamitous defeat" (in the words of a senior U.S. diplomat here) if the Social Democratic Party (SPD) regains power or deepening trouble if the Christian Democratic Party (CDU) conservatives stay in power.

President Reagan can kiss goodbye deployment of Pershing II missiles on West German soil if the most divisive election campaign since Bonn joined NATO restores the Socialists to power. The U.S. has no contingency plan whatever to deal with the possible defeat of the plan to modernize NATO's nuclear missiles — modernization that an SPD government specifically asked for only four years ago.

But even if conservative Chancellor Helmut Kohl wins — with or without the aid of his small Free Democratic (FDP) coalition partner — new controversy planted in this campaign threatens Western unity in the days and years ahead.

The Left's growing emotionalism against Pershing IIs — which would no more than balance Soviet SS-20 missiles still being deployed week by week against Western Europe — has become the driving force behind the peace movement. That is unlikely to change after the election.

As of today, the conservatives are strong but not prohibitive favorites. If Kohl wins, deployment of the new Pershings here — and of ground-launched cruise missiles in Italy and Britain — seems assured, more or less on schedule. But the SPD, prodded by the pacifist Green Party it has been assiduously courting, will exploit the nuclear modernization issue into the future, trying to undermine Kohl's government.

SPD leader Hans-Joachim Vogel scored a political triumph here when Soviet leader Yuri Andropov gave him the longest audience granted any foreign leader he has met. Perhaps unfairly, CDU leaders say Vogel has allowed himself to be perceived as "Andropov's candidate," or at least the architect of a policy of "equidistance" between Washington and Moscow. No previous candidate for chancellor of West Germany dared risk such epithets.

the SPD's expert on Soviet affairs. Bahr wants west Germany to find a new East-West perch closer to Moscow to advance the reunification of the two Germanys.

Bahr publicly accepted the Soviet position on nuclear modernization recently in Oslo; he complained that the official West German-U.S. demand for dismantling the SS-20s as the price for "zero" Pershings was not a "true" zero option. It would, said Bahr, leave 162 French and British medium-range missiles in place, thus giving NATO an unfair advantage. That parroted Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko's line here last month.

Vogel himself is stealing peace-movement rhetoric from the Greens, who are plotting a national campaign of mass demonstrations and lie-ins to prevent Pershing deployment. Socialist leader Horst Ehmke told us that the SPD "has not joined the peace movement," but critics disagree. They claim that the party of Vogel and Bahr will never again return to what in retrospect is the hard-headed realism of SPD Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. Early last month, Schmidt himself privately admonished Vogel to "stiffen up" on his dealings with the Soviets.

Arms Sales Rush Is On

NEW YORK (AP) — The ad shows a sleek multimillion dollar fighter plane, outfitted with missiles, waiting in a hangar. The sales pitch reads, "While others get older, Eagles get better."

The advertisement for McDonnell Douglas Corp.'s F-15 fighter is one of several placed in newspapers, magazines and scholarly journals by arms builders in a growing battle to influence political and military leaders, according to industry officials and analysts.

"It's symptomatic of the times," Raytheon Corp.'s Van Stevens said of the proliferation of ads.

Once such ads were seen only in a few military journals. Now, several American arms builders regularly advertise their aircraft and warships in major newspapers such as The New York Times and The Washington Post, and in popular news magazines, such as Newsweek and Time. Foreign Affairs Quarterly, read around the world as a guide to U.S. policy, recently had an ad for Grumman's Hawkeye early warning plane.

Advertisements for weapons differ little in approach from those for cars or washing machines. With vivid pictures and catchy slogans, they promise efficiency, satisfaction and prestige.

Leo Schefer, vice president of public affairs for British Aerospace of North America, which markets the Harrier jet of Falklands fame, said ads can provide a potential customer's first and lasting impression of a weapon.

Weapons advertising in the United States is usually not aimed at selling, since the government sets specifications for weapons and invites corporations to build them. But advertising can promote an image of competence to garner government contracts, analysts say.

An official of Aviation Week, who asked not to be identified, said a plan for a missile can run to thousands of pages of complex technical detail. A vivid ad can have more impact on some of the legislators and senior officers who select arms, he said.

Art Buchwald

Shouts For The President Are Part Of The Job

smiles, shrugs his shoulders, and puts his arm around Nancy, it may not be a news story, but at least it's something to go with the film."

"Why can't he go to Camp David on the weekend without us having to watch it on the evening news?"

"Because the American people should know where their president is at all times. The White House doesn't need the media covering his departure when he is going to Camp David because he's usually in a good mood. He's in an even better mood when he comes back. But you can't expect the press corps to just stand there like dummies when Reagan is getting on and off the helicopter. They owe it to the public to find out what is really on his mind. That's why they shout those questions at him."

"I think it's a very dangerous way to gather news. Half the time, with the helicopter motors whirring, he can't even hear the questions," she said.

"I don't think the president objects. Frankly, I think he prefers that type of questioning to a press conference. I know his staff does."

"But suppose someone yells a question and he says 'Yes' instead of 'No.' Isn't that scary?"

"Not really. Because if he gives the wrong answer, the press secretary can always say he didn't understand the question. What you have to realize is that Ronald Reagan, before he went into politics, attended an awful lot of movie premieres, so he's used to reporters shouting at him. He's an old pro when it comes to running a press gauntlet. Look at the way he waves his arm as he approaches the helicopter. He's a natural when it comes to saying goodbye."

"But the TV networks show the same scene every weekend. They could probably use stock footage from their files and save a lot of money."

"You don't understand how the White House communications people work. This is what is known as a photo opportunity. It shows off the president at his best. He's usually wearing a cowboy outfit and boots and he doesn't look as if he has a care in the world. That's the image of Ronald Reagan they want to project. And frankly I believe that's the image the American people want to see. Would you feel any better if he came out of the White House to board the helicopter scowling and refusing to talk to anyone?"

"I guess not," she admitted. "But I don't know why the networks can't just say he went to Camp David and leave it at that."

"That's okay for the print people. But the electronic media can't just say it. They have to have the pictures to go along with the story. If they showed Sam Donaldson or Leslie Stahl or Chris Wallace standing in front of a darkened White House saying, 'The president is not here tonight,' you'd be worried sick."

"Maybe you're right. What are they yelling at him now?"

"They want to know if he's going to fire Ann Gorsuch of the EPA."

"Does the press really expect him to answer that when he's leaving for Camp David?"

"Not really. But if you have to stand out in the cold for an hour, it's worth a try."

Airport To Improve Antenna System

The Pitt Greenville Airport Commission will open bids March 4 for the construction of an earth mound 250 feet from the end of a runway on the south side of the airport, near N.C. 11-U.S. 13 and the Tar River.

Airport Manager Jim Turcott said the mound, about 60 feet long and six to eight feet high, will be used as a base for an improved localizer navigation system to be installed as soon as the mound is completed.

Turcott said the new six-mast antenna system will replace the present four-mast antenna localizer system located on a pole-supported platform 310 feet from the end of the runway.

The total project, including the new electronic equipment, is estimated to cost about $30,000. A state grant is expected to cover half the cost, with the other half being paid by the airport authority.

Jones Named To Committee

Dr. James G. Jones of Greenville has been appointed to represent the American Academy of Family Physicians on the Residency Review Committee for Family Practice.

This committee reviews and acts on all family practice residency programs. Dr. Jones is chairman of the department of family medicine of the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

Society Forming Local Chapter

The American Society for Personnel Administration will hold a charter banquet Thursday at 7 p.m. in Mendenhall Student Center, Room 244. For information, call Brad Edwards, 757-3066.

Educators To Attend Session

Three area educators will participate in the annual state convention of the International Reading Association meeting to be held in Winston-Salem March 6-8.

The three are Dr. Beverly Swanson, assistant professor in early childhood education at East Carolina University; Irene Pollard, third grade teacher at Sam D. Bundy Elementary School in Farmville and Maureen Shannon, a learning disabilities specialist with the Greenville schools.

The association is devoted to the improvement of reading and reading instruction. The theme of this year's conference is "Aiding and Abetting Children in Reading."

Warning On Explosives Issued

Greenville Police Chief Glenn Cannon said this morning that local police have had no problems with war souvenirs, but warned that such things as hand grenades and other explosives can pose a danger.

Cannon's comments came after a Durham youth was seriously injured Saturday when he apparently hammered a nail into a practice grenade to see what was inside, and the grenade exploded.

Cannon suggested that persons having possibly explosive military souvenirs should be extremely cautious with them. He said such items could be turned in to the police department, which in turn would turn them over to military disposal personnel.

He said such items should not be thrown away because someone else might be injured. The best thing, Cannon suggested, is to turn the items over to a law enforcement officer.

Students To Make Presentation

H A presentation by third grade students who call themselves the Tiger Talkers will be given during a meeting of the Third Street PTA Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

Guidance counselor Shirley Peel will explain the guidance program of the school and Dr. Delma Blinson, city schools superintendent, will be the guest speaker.

League Begins Fund Drive

The League of Women Voters of Greenville-Pitt County has begun its annual finance drive for funding for voter assistance and good-government promotion efforts.

Members of the league met recently to celebrate the birthday of Susan B. Anthony and to assemble mailings of requests for contributions from league members, community leaders and individuals. Finance director Pat Anderson said that dues go chiefly to the state and national league for their work, so contributions are needed for local projects.

League members will call on prospective contributors after March 1. Anyone wishing to contribute who is not contacted may get in touch with Pat Anderson, 534 Crestline Blvd., Greenville.

Opening lead: ♠

We have always stressed that there is no such thing as a blind opening lead—only deaf opening leaders. Here's a classic case from the recent World Team Olympiad in Biarritz, France.

Toward the middle of the last decade, a pair of young Scots began to make an impact on the British bridge scene, and soon began winning every major event in sight. One of them, Michael Rosenberg, emigrated to New York. The other, Barnett Shenkin, is a stalwart of Scotland's international team.

Shenkin held the West cards on this hand from the team event. He heard his left-hand opponent open the bidding with one heart and rebid one no trump over South's one spade response. South's invitational jump to three spades was passed out.

You have all the facts. Before reading on, decide what you would lead, and why.

It took only a few moments' thought for Shenkin to select the best attack. From the bidding it seemed that, if either opponent had the king of clubs, it was more likely to be dummy. So Shenkin chose to lead the queen of clubs!

Not surprisingly, declarer elected to duck the first trick in dummy. Shenkin continued by cashing the ace of clubs and giving his partner a club ruff. Since the defenders still had to come to two heart tricks by force, that was down one.

FOCUS

The City of the Big Shoulders

In today's primary elections, voters in Chicago will decide whether incumbent Jane Byrne, Richard M. Daley, or Harold Washington will be the Democratic nominee for the April mayoral race. And in this Democratic stronghold, the winner of the primary almost invariably becomes Mayor. Chicago is one of the nation's most important cities. Second only to New York in population, Chicago is America's leading industrial and transportation center. Its 14,000 industrial plants rate first in the manufacture of steel and electrical equipment, and its port handles more than 40 million metric tons of goods every year. Trucks and trains carry more goods in and out of Chicago than any other U.S. city.

DO YOU KNOW — Who was Mayor of Chicago from 1955 until his death in 1976?

MONDAY'S ANSWER — Benjamin Franklin published the first regular newspaper in the U.S.

Jessalyn Woods and Tom Ricks, both of Ayden Middle School, were the winners of the Optimist Club of Greenville Oratorical Contest held Monday night.

Club members heard the six finalists competing deliver their speeches on the topic, "Serve with Pride."

Karen Williamson of Wahl-Coates School placed second in the girls' division and Lisa Kirkland of Farmville Central High School was third. Blake Stallings of Wahl-Coates School was second in the boys' contest; Bob Rodebaugh of Ayden Middle School, third.

The first-place winners go on to the Zone 17 contest, contest chairman Charles Ross said. If either wins there, he or she will advance to the regional and then the district (North Carolina) contest. The two district winners each receive a $1,000 scholarship.

Judges for the contest Monday night were Dr. Joyce Pettis and Dr. Erwin Hester, both of the East Carolina University Department of English, and Dr. Gerald Haskin of the ECU Department of Speech and Drama.

Gossip Curb Is Imposed By Buckingham Palace

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Four million readers of the Sun were promised today's edition would make them privy to "when barefoot Di buttered my toast." Monday's helping of gossip was "Queen Koo's romps at the palace."

But Queen Elizabeth II decided she and the readers had had quite enough of the steamy memoirs of a former Buckingham Palace pantry worker, and royal lawyers Monday won an injunction banning the tabloid Sun from publishing the rest of spicy story.

It is the first known attempt by the palace to place a legal bar on former employees' disclosure of the intimate doings of the royal family.

From the royal yacht Britannia, moored off Mexico, the Queen ordered the palace to go court to stop the publication of the reminiscences of Kieran Kenny, 20, who, the Sun said, worked in the kitchen for 2½ years before leaving the lowly job three weeks ago.

The injunction said Kenny had broken a promise he signed when he went to work for the royal family that he would keep confidential everything he saw and heard at the palace. All royal staff reportedly sign such a document.

Under a huge page one headline, "Queen gags the Sun," the tabloid commented: "We are amazed ... We intend to contest this vigorously ... Our solicitors (lawyers) ... have been instructed to study the order and evidence so as to apply for its discharge."

Arthur Brittenden, a spokesman for the Sun's owners, News International, said "The article will be held over until the result of the (court) action."

Lawyers said the case against Britain's biggest-selling newspaper was expected to come before the High Court in London in the next few days.

If the paper prints the gossip serial in the meantime, Kenny and Sun executives could be jailed indefinitely for contempt of court.

In Monday's installment, Kenny told of breakfast in bed at the palace for Queen Elizabeth II's second son, Prince Andrew, 23, and his American-born girlfriend Koo Stark, a 26-year-old actress, who once starred in "soft" pornographic movies.

Kenny said that Miss Stark regularly spent nights at the palace with Andrew while the queen and her husband, Prince Philip, were away.

The story said Andrew would hang a "Do Not Disturb" sign on his bedroom door and order footmen to leave bacon and eggs for two outside in the morning after they gave a "discreet knock."

The account said Miss Stark was so at home in the palace she would raid the pantry, organize picnics from the kitchen and help herself to the queen's favorite chocolates.

Tuesday's installment was to have featured 21-year-old Princess Diana, wife of Prince Charles, 34-year-old heir to the throne.

The Sun complained that it wasn't told about the injunction hearing before it was held and was not represented at it. The ban will remain until the Sun can persuade a high court judge to lift it or until a full court hearing is held.

The Daily Express said the Sun was believed to have paid Kenny about $2,300 for his story.

The London Times said several palace employees have been threatened with similar injunctions if they sold their accounts of palace life.

There have been several breaches of the confidence rule by ex-employees. The royal family reportedly call it "doing a Crawfie," in reference to the Queen's former governess Marion Crawford, who, in 1950, told a newspaper about their relationship.

Accept Bids

The City Council on Monday approved the sale of three disposal parcels located in the central business district to Bill Clark Construction Co.

In a brief special call session, the council accepted bids submitted by the company totaling $112,000 for the three parcels, which Clark indicated will be utilized as sites for the construction of 56 one-bedroom townhouse units.

Clark offered bids of: $54,600 for a 31,767-square-foot parcel, located along the western right-of-way of Reade Circle, from the intersection of the southern right-of-way of Dickinson Avenue; $30,904 for a 17,958-square-foot tract, and $26,496 for a 17,764-square-foot parcel, both located on the north side of Eighth Street.

Mubarak On Sudan Visit

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak arrived today for talks with President Jaafar Nimeiri, who warned that Libya was still flexing its military muscle near Sudan's borders.

Mubarak's visit comes during tensions which were heightened last week by reports that Libya was bolstering its military strength near the junction of its borders with Egypt, Sudan and Chad.

Egypt and Sudan have a mutual defense pact, and the two leaders were expected to discuss the buildup, which Sudanese and American officials have said was aimed at Sudan.

The United States sent radar surveillance planes to Egypt and moved the nuclear-powered carrier Nimitz, the anchor of several battleships in the Mediterranean, closer to Libya.

On Sunday, U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz said it appeared that Libya had gotten the message of armed readiness that the United States intended to deliver by the placement of the planes and ships.

"As far as we know, the threat that was clearly present has receded," Shultz said in a television appearance.

Egyptian officials also said on Sunday that the tension had eased.

But the same day, Nimeiri's government accused Libya of continuing to mass troops, supported by soviet-made bombers.

P & G Is Recalling Workers With Test Sale Of New Product

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

A move by Procter & Gamble earlier this month to enter the catamenial market with a new line of external feminine protection products has already had an encouraging impact upon operations at the company's Greenville facilities.

Procter & Gamble here has begun the initial production of "Always," which is being introduced in a selected test market in the Minneapolis, Minn., area.

Robert Griffin, P&G plant manager here, said that "Always" maxipads, minipads and pantliners are now being produced at the Greenville plant. Griffin said that P&G is "projecting beyond the test market" in making its production plans.

In conjunction with the new production activity, Griffin said the company has begun recalling the 50 employees who were involved in the temporary layoff here late in 1982. Griffin said expectations are that the first employees recalled will report as early as Feb. 28 with the balance returning during "the next few months."

The plant spokesman said that while all 50 employees will be given the opportunity to return, some of them may not and Procter & Gamble will hire new workers to fill the balance of the local employment needs. He said that P&G will again have an employment roster of slightly over 500 with the completion of the recall.

"We are recalling people with the expectation of expanding beyond the test market," Griffin said in discussing the hopeful implications of the new product. P&G has applied no particular time frame as far as product testing is concerned, he said.

Griffin said "Always" will be produced in existing "free space" at the local site, utilizing part of the expanded section that currently houses production lines for "At-tends," the company's successful product line of disposal briefs for people beyond infancy. He said the local plant is the major national supplier of "At-tends."

Interior renovations and alterations will allow for independent production of the two products, said Griffin. No new construction is necessary for the "Always" production, he added.

According to Griffin, "Always" maxipads and pantliners will be offered in two versions, non-deodorant and deodorant, while the minipads will be available only in a non-deodorant version.

The manager said Procter & Gamble is excited about the new product line, which he said underwent extensive testing and research prior to its introduction in Minneapolis.

The 1982 reduction of the work force at the Greenville plant by about 10 percent, P&G's first layoff in its seven years here, coincided with the curtailment of local Pampers production. Griffin explained that Pampers made in Greenville were shipped to international markets and those production needs were being met by other plants.

Griffin said that while the 50 employees were not needed for production after Nov. 19, the company kept them on the payroll for an additional two weeks to give them "free time" to look for other jobs.

N. C. Senate Considers Additions To Budget Panel

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt, the state Senate and House each would have another representative on the Advisory Budget Commission under a bill being considered in the Senate.

The measure won unanimous approval, 109-0, Monday night in the House.

There was little other legislative action, but more than 200 radiologic technologists lobbied lawmakers in support of a bill introduced Monday by Rep. Martin Lancaster, D-Wayne.

The bill would establish a board for licensing radiologic technologists and radiation therapy technologists — those who give X-rays and perform radiation therapy.

The bill expanding the Advisory Budget Commission membership from 12 to 15 also would require the governor to appoint an equal number of House and Senate members if he names legislators to the commission.

Current members of the commission, which helps write the state's budget, are the House and Senate Finance Committee chairmen, House and Senate Appropriations Committee chairmen, two House appointments, two Senate appointments and four appointments by the governor.

Rep. Allen Barbee, D-Nash, said he introduced the bill because there is too much work now for the 12 members.

House Speaker Liston Ramsey has said he may use his additional appointment and a vacancy left by the death of Rep. Sam Bundy, D-Pitt, to name a black and a woman to the commission. He has not said who those appointees would be.

Lancaster said his bill stemmed from a Legislative Research Commission report to the 1983 General Assembly.

"It is to protect the public from persons who are improperly trained on how to operate radiation equipment," he said. "I could take your X-ray this very minute if I could find a machine."

Janice Keene, president-elect of the North Carolina Society of Radiologic Technologists, said the bill is needed because only recently have the dangers of low-level radiation become known. She said there also is an increasing use of X-rays.

"There are individuals operating X-ray equipment whose qualifications we really know little about," she said. "I think the public assumes the individual operating the equipment is qualified."

The bill would set up a six-member Board of Medical Radiation Technology Examiners to examine and determine qualifications for license applicants. The board also would issue, renew, suspend or revoke licenses and adopt criteria for educational programs.

The bill would make it a misdemeanor to practice medical radiation technology or radiation therapy without a license.

In other legislative action:

Day Care

The House gave tentative approval to a bill specifying that pre-school age children of a day-care provider must be counted in the number of children served by that provider.

Such small providers, with up to six children, must register with the state while larger providers are licensed.

The bill also requires that the registered day-care provider be the one supplying the service.

Building Code Re-Examined In Wake Of High-Rise Apt. Fire

By ELISSA MCCRARY
Associated Press Writer

State fire officials say North Carolina's building code doesn't go far enough to protect high-rise apartment buildings from fire.

They hope to see state and federal laws changed to allow them to inspect individual rooms and apartments and to have sprinkler systems installed in older buildings.

Officials voiced concerns about the code in the wake of a fire last week at a Wilmington high-rise housing project for the elderly and handicapped. Three people died and at least 160 were forced from their apartments when fire broke out on the top floor, filling the building with smoke.

to be stricter because it would save lives and make our jobs a lot easier," said Assistant Fire Chief E.B. King of Raleigh. "Anytime you talk about adding sprinklers, anything to help prevent or put out fires, we're all for it."

Firemen want a tougher state building code that would force owners of buildings constructed before 1975 to update with sprinklers. But a spokesman for the state Department of Insurance, which administers the code, was not optimistic that the code will be strengthened.

Oscar Smith said Insurance Commissioner John Ingram has twice tried and failed to get that portion of the law changed.

buildings have smoke detectors. In facilities built after 1975, sprinklers are required to be installed every five feet. The sprinklers cover 10 square feet of space. Fire drills, conducted by local fire departments, are required by the state, and each building must post a diagram of emergency exits.

Firewalls also are required, with the average one able to keep a fire from spreading for at least one hour.

"In the building that burned in Wilmington, the smoke alarms apparently worked well and the one-hour firewall held back the fire. Fire damage wasn't very great, smoke inhalation was the big problem," Smith said.

Wilmington Assistant Fire Chief T.D. Eason said a sprinkler system may have prevented last Tuesday's fire.

"There's a good possibility if there had been a sprinkler in that room, things would have been a lot different," he said. "All those kinds of buildings definitely should have sprinklers in them, regardless of when they were built."

Fire officials say high-rise buildings, particularly those housing the elderly, pose special problems for firefighters. They answer hundreds of alarms at the dwellings each year.

"The code just isn't as strong as it should be," said Charlotte Fire Chief Richard Blackwelder. "It doesn't go far enough, particularly in buildings where elderly people live. The law should require more sprinkler systems, more early warning devices, things that would save lives."

"We're not allowed to go into people's rooms and check for fire hazards — things like heaters with paper on them, frayed (electrical) cords, things like that," Blackwelder said. "And that's where fires start, in the rooms, not in the halls."

In the Wilmington fire, inspectors said Christmas wrapping paper piled on an electric heater in an 11th floor apartment started the blaze.

The state building code is established by the Building Code Council.

"North Carolina is unique because it is one of few states that have a state building code instead of a lot of individual ones," Smith said. "Some of the larger cities have their own local ordinances, but in those cases the local laws have to be as strong or stronger than the state law in order to be allowed."

Smith said state law requires that all rooms or apartments in a high rise ing where 300 elderly and handicapped people live. Blackwelder said in Charlotte, which has four high-rise buildings catering to the elderly, firefighters respond to "dozens and dozens" of calls each year.

Fowler, who directs fire-safety classes at Glenwood Towers, says most of the calls are for smoke alarms triggered by smoking food.

"I'm responsible for the safety of these people, and every call is responded to like an emergency," he said. "We've only had one fire in the Towers that did any real damage in 10 years, and I want to keep it that way. I don't want any lives lost."

"Most of them are false alarms — malfunctioning smoke alarms, that type of thing," he said. "But we don't mind. We'd rather go out and find out there really isn't a fire. This kind of fire, where you have old people, maybe handicapped people, trying to get out is a nightmare for a fireman. We'd do most anything to try to prevent something of this type."

The 10-year-old building, Solomon Towers, had no sprinklers because such systems weren't required by the state building code at the time it was designed. Each of the rooms had smoke detectors and the building had firewalls, firemen said.

Suspended For Killing

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — A New Bern police officer shot and killed a Kingston man late Sunday afternoon after answering a domestic disturbance call.

Randle Quinton Battle, 19, was dead at the scene of the shooting, according to Dr. T. Reed Underhill, a medical examiner at Craven County Hospital.

David Edington, a one-and-a-half-year veteran of the New Bern force, answered a call around 5:30 p.m. at 1020 North St. When he arrived, Battle, who is black, left the house wielding a knife and threatened Edington, according to Police Chief John Worsham.

Edington was apparently about 10 feet from Battle when he shot him in the chest with his .38-caliber Police Special, according to several eyewitnesses, who also claim Battle had dropped his knife before the officer shot him.

Edington was placed on non-disciplinary suspension with pay pending the outcome of a State Bureau of Investigation probe, Worsham said.

Clyde Best, local president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said Monday there is concern as to whether Edington used excessive force. Best also questioned sending a lone white officer into the predominantly black area.

Measles Spread Through Nursery

FLORIDA CITY, Fla. (AP) — A week-old measles outbreak that spread to the crowded nursery of a migrant labor camp has grown to 20 cases in Dade County, officials say.

One of two new cases logged Monday was a child living at the Everglades camp, while the other was a pupil at Everglades Elementary School, said the county's Health Department director, Dr. Richard A. Morgan.

Health officials last week inoculated 598 children in the Everglades and Redlands migrant labor camps to keep the illness from spreading.

(certification), service (experience), and performance. I believe performance ought to be the predominant criterion, except where there is an insignificant difference in the performance of the individuals being considered.

"My reason for this position is simple. I believe whenever we employ personnel, or whenever we must RIF personnel, we ought to select and retain the best from among those we have available. I believe we have a responsibility to the children that exceeds all other responsibilities.

"It is true that there are procedures, other than RIF, to deal with incompetent personnel. These procedures should be used assertively and fairly. But unfortunately, RIF most often comes where all the affected employees within a category are competent, and even exceptionally good."

With adoption of the policy, Blinson and his administrative staff will now be required to develop regulations applicable to the terms of the RIF policy.

Two budget amendments were approved. Budget Amendment No. 3 to the schools' federal budget is for $42,928 in allocation of Chapter 2 federal funds to support special instructional and instructional staff support programs. Budget Amendment No. 4 for the local current expense budget is for an increase of $369 in adjustment of state funds for the vocational education programs.

Two reports were presented to the board. The first was an overview of the dental program in North Carolina, given by Kathy Taft. Ms. Taft gave a history of past and current efforts in dental health in North Carolina schools, using slides to illustrate her lecture. The second report was a brief explanation by school board member Sue Zadeits of a publication of recommendations by a state select committee on legislative matters pertaining to education. Two copies of the publication are being placed in the schools' central office for board members.

In executive session, the board approved a list of persons qualified as substitute teachers for the city schools.

—Said it will rule, in a California case, whether communities can ban the posting of political signs on all public property.

—Said it will decide whether the government can ban photographs and works of art depicting U.S. currency.

In the windfall profits case, U.S. District Judge Ewing T. Kerr ruled last Nov. 4 in Cheyenne, Wyo., that the 3-year-old tax is unconstitutional. But he allowed the government to continue collecting the revenue while his decision was appealed.

Kerr said the tax is illegal because it exempts new oil produced above the Arctic Circle, thereby excluding the giant Prudhoe Bay Field on the North Slope of Alaska.

The Constitution requires all federal taxes to be uniform throughout the nation, Kerr said.

Government lawyers argued that the exclusion is legitimate in order to encourage exploration in a remote area.

"Because of its remote location, fragile environment and extreme climatic conditions, the production of North Slope oil involved risks and costs that were far greater than the risks and costs of developing domestic oil properties elsewhere," the government's appeal said.

It also noted that Congress anticipated that the wellhead price of North Slope oil would be $8 or $9 less per barrel than the prevailing prices in other producing states.

In January, the Supreme Court turned down a Justice Department request for emergency consideration of the case. The government had hoped the court would announce a ruling on the tax's constitutionality by July.

The Justice Department said then that "the magnitude of the sums at stake" had created "fiscal uncertainty (that) threatens to disrupt the federal budgetary process."

The original lawsuit against the government was filed by a small oil company, Calvin Petroleum Corp. of Fort Lupton, Colo., and three Wyoming oil royalty owners. More than 30 other parties joined the challenge, including the major oil-producing states of Louisiana and Texas. They say the law violates states' rights.

The 1980 tax was imposed on oil when decontrol of prices was accelerated. The tax actually is applied to sales prices rather than to oil industry profits. The oil tax takes as much as 60 percent of each price increase above 1979 levels.

Budget subcommittees are looking for ways to cut about $100 million from the 1983-85 budget to provide enough money for lifting the freeze on state workers and teachers salaries. They say they may be able to avoid the cuts if the economy picks up and state revenues increase.

Friday and members of the joint House-Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Education said they could not accept all the possible cuts. The committee accepted the plan as information.

"It would be the most devastating thing to happen to the university in my experience," said Friday, a 35-year veteran of the budget-writing process.

"We have tried very hard over the past four years never to touch the teaching faculty," he said. "But there is no way you can prevent this time if you are talking in terms of $18 million (in cuts)."

Under the plan, the number of teaching positions could be reduced by 143 in 1983-84 to save $4.8 million, or 1 percent cut; by 285 jobs for a $9.6 million, a 2 percent savings; or by 427 jobs for a $14.4 million, a 3 percent savings.

Friday said some of the positions were vacant and he could not say how many layoffs might occur. But he noted that 427 teaching positions are more than the entire faculty at each of 10 institutions, including Western Carolina University.

Other possible areas for reductions were Area Health Education Centers, administrative programs, agricultural research and extension programs, support for North Carolina Memorial Hospital and related educa-

Balk At Proposal For Layoff Of UNC Profs

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A legislative budget committee today balked at proposals to raise the student-faculty ratio in the University of North Carolina system, a move that would force some teacher layoffs.

The plan for cutting up to $18 million from the proposed 1983-85 budget was worked out by House and Senate budget leaders with the help of legislative fiscal staff members and UNC President William Friday.

It offers cuts in three categories, each worth about $6 million or 1 percent of the university budget. No cuts will be made until the full House-Senate Appropriations Committee meets later.

RALEIGH — Col. John T. Jenkins, commander of the North Carolina Highway Patrol, said Monday he plans to retire June 30.

Jenkins will reach the mandatory retirement age of 62 — the age he helped established for all members of the patrol — on June 30. He has headed the Highway Patrol since shortly after Gov. Jim Hunt took office in 1977.

A Warren County native,

Jenkins joined the patrol in 1947 and was stationed in Craven County until promoted to the rank of corporal and transferred to Rocky Mount in 1959. He moved to Greenville as corporal in 1960, then was promoted to sergeant in 1961 and transferred to Goldsboro.

In 1967, Jenkins was promoted to the rank of lieutenant and served from 1967 until 1969 as executive officer of Troop B, with headquarters in Fayetteville. He was then promoted to the rank of captain and assumed command of Troop C, with headquarters in Raleigh.

Jenkins was transferred to Greenville in 1973, where he commanded Troop A until Hunt appointed him patrol commander in April 1977, bypassing several senior officers.

At the time, the governor characterized Jenkins as an officer "with great qualities of leadership."

Hunt said "I was looking for a strong leader ... fair ... who understands how the troopers feel about things on the road ... a disciplinarian," who would "lead in a positive kind of way ... by being an example."

N. Pitt, SWE Girls Advance

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer
LITTLEFIELD — North Pitt is on a roll and it could not have come at a better time for the Pant-HERS.

Led by Delores Pittman's 22 points and 11 rebounds, North Pitt downed Greene Central, 47-29, Monday evening in the opening round of the Eastern Carolina Conference post-season tournament.

The win knocked Greene Central out of a chance at the districts and gave the Pant-HERS a near-lock on the ECC's final seed. North Pitt, which has won five straight and is 11-13 overall, will get the No. 4 seed if Ayden-Grifton fails to make it to the ECC tournament finals.

A-G, which finished sixth in the conference, must beat Southern Nash tonight and SouthWest Edgecombe Thursday to advance to the finals.

In other tournament action Monday, SouthWest Edgecombe slipped past Southern Nash, 71-69, in two overtimes in boys' first round action while the SWE girls whipped Farmville Central, 77-48.

In games tonight, Southern Nash and A-G tangle at 5:30 followed by two boys' games: North Pitt faces winless C.B. Aycock at 7:15 and Ayden-Grifton battles Greene Central at 9 p.m.

"I think we're playing the best basketball we've played all year going down the stretch," North Pitt coach Randy Avery said after his team outscored the Lady Jaguars 15 to 2 over an eight-minute span in the second half.

The Pant-HERS scored eight straight midway through the opening quarter for a 12-4 lead before Greene Central cut the deficit to 14-8 going into the second period.

The Lady Rams sliced the lead to 16-15 with 2:29 to go in the half on a pair of free throws by Saraphine Cox, but a layup and a follow shot by North Pitt forward Sherri Bradley made it 20-17 at the half.

Greene Central, which never led, closed within one (24-23) on Cynthia Hick's jumper with 4:15 left in the third quarter, but Pittman maneuvered inside for two buckets as North Pitt scored the final seven points of the period to open up a 31-23 lead.

The Pant-HERS put the game away in the early minutes of the final quarter as they scored nine straight to go up, 40-25, with 4:04 remaining. Pittman keyed the spurt with a three-point play, a follow shot, a layup and a pair of free throws.

"We got a great game from Delores Pittman," Avery said as he looked at his stat sheet which had Pittman nine of 11 from the field. Added Avery: "Peggy Latham really had a good game. She was three for five from the floor, but she was mentally in the game the whole way. She did a good job breaking the press for us."

Pittman was the lone Pant-HER in double figures. Regina Cox aided Pittman on the boards with eight rebounds.

The Lady Rams, who end their season at 13-10, were led by Hicks with 13.

"We are just tickled to death to have this chance at the districts," Avery said. "We were in nearly the same situation as last year and lost this game, and I just felt it wasn't our destiny to do that again."

Kiffin Joins Green Bay

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Monte Kiffin, who resigned Dec. 1 as head football coach at North Carolina State University, was named linebacker coach for the Green Bay Packers of the National Football League Monday.

Kiffin, 42, who compiled a 16-17 record in three years at North Carolina State, succeeds John Marshall, who left the Packers Feb. 11 to become defensive coordinator of the Atlanta Falcons.

Kiffin, who played tackle at the University of Nebraska from 1960-63, later served as defensive line coach and defensive coordinator at Nebraska.

He was defensive coordinator at the University of Arkansas from 1977-79. The Razorbacks led the nation's major college teams in scoring defense in 1977.

Kiffin's appointment fills the last vacancy on Coach Bart Starr's Packer staff.

"Monte has an excellent background and has been with some great programs at Nebraska and Arkansas," Starr said. "We feel he will be an excellent addition to the defensive staff because his enthusiasm and dedication to teaching are very much in evidence."

John Meyer, Packer defensive coordinator who played a major role in Kiffin's selection, said, "We are very pleased to have a man of Monte's capabilities. He is a very experienced, energetic and turned-on coach."

Twin Bill Set For Greensboro

GREENSBORO (AP) — Replacing the Big Four Tournament, the "McDonalds Classic" will feature Wake Forest and North Carolina State in a college basketball doubleheader starting next December, officials said Monday.

Sponsored by the national fast food chain, the event will match the host teams against Virginia Tech and North Carolina-Charlotte in the first installment Dec. 2-3 in Greensboro Coliseum. Visiting teams will be changed each year.

The doubleheader was an attempt to replace the Big Four event, which featured Wake Forest, N.C. State, Duke and North Carolina, said Wake Forest Athletic Director Dr. Gene Hooks. The tourney ended its 10-year run in 1980 when North Carolina pulled out.

Both N.C. State and Wake Forest have worked hard to get good opponents and put something like this together," said Hooks. "We have searched for some time for an adequate replacement for the Big Four."

The doubleheader will not be televised, and tickets will be made available to all four participating schools.

"We'll range out further than just this area of the country to find good opponents," said Hooks. "We have been talking to the Big Five in Philadelphia and to the Big 10. We have contacted quite a number of schools about playing in the Classic."

Wake Forest Coach Carl Tacy said the Classic will give his team an early indication of its ability next season.

"I know it will be an awfully good couple of days of basketball," said Tacy. "I hope we can rekindle some of the spirit and enthusiasm we had in the Big Four."

N.C. State Coach Jim Valvano, whose team upset third-ranked North Carolina Saturday, agreed with Tacy.

"It's gonna be a good tournament," Valvano said.

Pirates Face Madison

East Carolina's Pirates travel to Harrisonburg, Va., Wednesday night to face James Madison in the final ECAC-South regular season game of the year for the Bucs.

ECU comes into the game with a 3-6 league record, while JMU is 4-3. The Pirates are battling to stay out of the conference cellar where they are battling with Richmond, while JMU is trying to hold onto second place — and the bye that goes with it for the league's post-season tournament.

William & Mary downed Navy, 75-55, last night and wrapped up the top seeding for the March 10-12 tournament, but the remaining positions are still somewhat up for grabs, with JMU in the drivers' seat for the second spot. In addition to the ECU game, Madison still has a game remaining with Richmond on March 5.

East Carolina will be led into the game by Johnny Edwards, who was named yesterday for the fifth time this year as ECAC-South Rookie of the Week. Edwards, SouthWest Edgecombe scored 19 straight points in the final five minutes of the opening half and Farmville never got closer than 14 points the second half as SWE rolled into the ECC tournament semifinals.

SouthWest (20-3) meets the winner of tonight's Southern Nash-Ayden-Grifton in the semifinals Thursday at 6:30.

"They have a lot of quickness and a good nucleus and they've got experience. That makes a whole lot of difference," Farmville coach Hilda Worthington said after seeing her team end its season at 4-20.

SouthWest, which was upset by North Pitt and struggled past Greene Central in its prior two outings, had its problems early against Farmville. SouthWest led 10-4 on a layup and two foul shots by Janice Draughn, but Farmville rallied to cut the lead to 12-10 with 1:23 left.

The Lady Jaguars cut an 18-14 first-quarter deficit to 19-18 on a follow shot and two foul shots by Stephanie Newton. SouthWest pushed the lead to 24-20 but Farmville, which never led, sliced the bulge to 25-24 with 4:35 remaining on a jumper by Kim Smith.

It was as close as Farmville got — and it was the final point of the half for the Lady Jaguars.

SouthWest used an aggressive full-court press to spark a 19-0 spurt that gave SWE a 44-24 halftime lead. The Lady Jaguars turned the ball over nine times in the final five minutes, which led to five SWE layups.

"There's not much you can do about it," Worthington said.

Melody Jenkins' three-point play started the spurt, and Draughn and Edmondson kept it going. Both hit two layups and Draughn added a free throw as SWE built a 20-point halftime lead it expanded to 32 after three periods.

Farmville was led in scoring by Newton with a game-high 20 points while Rhoda Harris added 10.

Joining Draughn in double figures for SWE were reserve Michelle Dupree with a team-high 15 points, Jenkins with 14 points, Edmondson with 11 and Teresa Mayo with 10.

6-2 guard Charles Fisher with a 10.4 mark.

Madison will be out for revenge over the Pirates, who handed them their first ECAC-South loss of the season back in January, taking a 43-41 win. In that game, 6-7 forward Keith Bradley scored 12 points to lead the Dukes.

However, Coach Joe Campanelli has been trying to find the fight lineup, and no one on the team has started all 24 games. Prior to the William & Mary game, only Ruland had started in 22 with Fisher was the only other player to have started in as many as 20. Next is Bradley with 15 starts, while Derek Steele, a 5-9 junior guard with an 8.0 average, began 14 games and David Dupont, a 6-5 guard, began 13. Darrell Jackson, a 6-6 sophomore has been in on 11 starts. Dupont is averaging 5.7 points a game, while Jackson has a 3.9 average.

The game is the final road contest for the Pirates, who have two more home games left on their schedule, with UNC Wilmington on Saturday, and Penn State-Bernd on March 3.

Lady Patriots, Hawks Advance

HAVERLOCK — North Lenoir's boys and West Carteret's girls advanced into the second round of the Coastal Conference 3-A tournament in play last night at Haverlock High School.

North Lenoir's boys nipped hosting Haverlock, 54-53, in the battle of the fourth and fifth place teams. Number four seeded North Lenoir will now face top-seeded D.H. Conley in Wednesday's semifinal round. Haverlock's boys are now through for the year.

In the girls' contest, West Carteret downed West Craven, 48-40, in another battle of number four vs number five. West Carteret, the fourth seed, advances to face top-seeded North Lenoir in Wednesday's other semifinal contest. West Craven has now completed its season.

Tonight, Haverlock's girls, seeded third, meet the number six White Oak girls, while West Carteret's third ranked boys take on number six White Oak in the other game.

The top four seeds advance to the district tournament next week at Conley unless a lower seeded team wins the tourney title.

Happy Sullivan Winner

Long distance runner Mary Decker Tabb reacts after she was anmed the 1982 Sullivan Award winner in Indianapolis Monday night. Tabb broke seven world records and ten American records in distances ranging from one mile to 10,000 meters in 1982. (AP Laserphoto)

Runner Tabb Is Sullivan Winner

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Track star Mary Decker Tabb, recognized as the nation's outstanding amateur athlete for 1982, sees her selection for the Sullivan Award as a boost for all women in sports.

"The Sullivan is the most prestigious award anyone can win," Tabb said after Monday night's announcement at the Indianapolis Convention Center. "My career is so young still, and I haven't reached my potential. So winning this is a great honor. Men have dominated the Sullivan for so long, but that's because until recently there haven't really been many women in sports."

Tabb, 24, also named the 1982 Associated Press Female Athlete of the Year, is the sixth woman to win the Sullivan Award, named for a founder of the U.S. Amateur Athletic Union and has been presented annually since 1930 by the AAU.

The first female winner was swimmer Ann Curtis in 1944. Others were diver Patricia McCormick in 1956, track star Wilma Rudolph in 1960 and swimmers Deborah Meyer in 1968 and Tracy Caulkins in 1978.

"There are a lot of young girls out there in athletics," Tabb said. "They should be able to look up to someone, and I'm proud they can look up to me."

Tabb, a native of Flemington, N.J., who now lives in Eugene, Ore., received 1,723 points in the nationwide voting by sports writers, members of the AAU and past winners. Second place, with 1,037 points, went to distance runner Alberto Salazar, and finishing third for the second time in three years was skier Phil Mahre with 979 points. The point totals for only the top three finishers were announced.

"The only thing beyond this would be an Olympic medal," said Tabb, who broke seven world records and 10 American standards last year. "But it's gratifying just to be among a group of athletes like this."

Other finalists — all world champions in their respective sports — were Tyrell Biggs (boxing), Scott Hamilton (figure skating), Mary T. Meagher (swimming), Greg Louganis (diving), Greg Gibson (wrestling), Tracie Ruiz (synchronized swimming), and Melanie Smith (equestrian).

Tabb, 5-foot-6 and 103 pounds, set world records in the mile three times during the indoor season last year. She also topped world and American indoor records at 3,000 meters.

Over a 41-day span starting June 5, Tabb set three world and six American records. The world marks were for 5,000 meters, the mile and 10,000 meters.

She already is setting her sights on the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles, running some 50 to 70 miles a week. She rests on Sundays.

"LA is going to be my magic Olympics. I just have these good feelings about it," she said.

Of a more immediate concern, however, is the upcoming world championships in July.

"The competition should be just as stiff as in the Olympics," she said. "To me, running is a profession. To be as good as I am, you have to look on it with a professional attitude. Not monetarily, but in your approach."

Tabb said she started running when she was 11 year old "out of boredom. I was with a girlfriend, and we went to a parks and recreation cross-country meet. It was three-quarters of a mile, and there were probably about 20 people in the race. She dropped out and I won."

"I got recruited by an AAU coach and just started doing it. Running started out just as fun, and it became something I really want to do."

Salazar, 25, winner of the Boston and New York marathons, placed first in the U.S. cross country trials and captured the silver medal at the world meet in Rome. He also set American records for 5,000 and 10,000 meters.

The Sullivan Award, he said, is "very important, but I set my goals in terms of specific things, like running certain times, winning certain races, running against certain competition."

Maryland Tops Duke; Tech Downs Mounties

By The Associated Press
Maryland coach Lefty Driesell says his team held a psychological edge going into Monday night's Atlantic Coast Conference college basketball game against Duke.

The Blue Devils earlier this season defeated the Terrapins 86-67 on their home court in College Park, Md., but Maryland turned the tables Monday, handing Duke a 101-90 drubbing in Cameron Indoor Stadium.

"We lost by 19 at home, and if I was playing for Duke, I'd say 'These guys can't be that tough,'" Driesell said after his team's triumph. "After that (loss at home) I don't think we've lost but one game."

"At the time I was about ready to commit suicide," Driesell said. "But we fooled them tonight."

Monday night's game had been scheduled ten days ago, but was postponed due to a winter snow storm in the Washington area.

In the only other action involving an ACC team Monday, Georgia Tech got off to a slow start, but then swept past Appalachian State 83-72.

Driesell said after his team's performance against Duke and their victory over North Carolina last week, he'd be surprised if Maryland wasn't ranked in the national polls.

Duke coach Mike

Krzyzewski said inside play was the key to the game, and the Blue Devils just didn't have it.

"We had the ball inside during the first half, especially in the first part of the first half, and didn't score," Krzyzewski said. "We got it in there and no one put it in the basket. Because of that, people stopped looking inside."

He said play on the boards makes the difference for the Blue Devils.

"If we play hard on the boards at both ends, we can play well," he said. "We have at times this year, but we didn't tonight. We didn't deserve to win and we didn't."

In their non-conference game, the Yellowjackets were behind seven points with just over six minutes left in the first half, until Mark Price exploded for 13 points, boosting Tech to a 47-37 halftime lead. Georgia Tech held its edge easily through the second half.

The next conference action comes Wednesday with Virginia at Clemson, North Carolina State at Duke and Maryland at Georgia Tech.

Machine May End Ailment

ATLANTA (AP) — The battle against the dreaded rotator cuff injury pushed Atlanta Braves' trainer Dave Pursley to create a machine specifically designed to prevent the ailment, which has ended many major league careers.

Hank Aaron, the Hall of Famer and vice president and director of player development for the Braves has ordered seven of the exercise machines for the Braves and their farm clubs.

Five Atlanta pitchers took them home and used them during the winter, and the Los Angeles Dodgers, Cincinnati Reds, Philadelphia Phillies and St. Louis Cardinals each ordered one.

Pursley, the head trainer of the defending National League West Division champions, said he began toying with the idea nearly two years ago and finally came up with the finished product last fall.

"He admits he had 'selfish reasons' for inventing the 'Rotator Cuff Machine,' which is designed to strengthen the four muscles which make up the rotator cuff in the shoulder where the socket connects with the arm."

Pursley, who has been the Braves' head trainer for 14 years, said he didn't design the invention to make money, he said, but "to help our problem, the arms of the players."

"If it just helps one person in our organization and gives him a chance to be a Warren Spahn or a Sandy Koufax, it will be well worth it," Pursley said recently before the Braves left for spring training.

He said the machine is more valuable in preventing a tear to the rotator cuff than in treating the injury.

"Nobody that has had surgery for the injury has been very successful," Pursley said. "A lot of players have come back but they have not been the same."

In addition, the injury has virtually ended the careers of promising pitchers such as former Kansas City ace Steve Busbee and Cleveland's Wayne Garland.

Pursley said he has shown the machine, which sells for about $300, at a convention of the National Collegiate Athletic Association in San Diego and "there was a lot of interest."

He believes it can be a valuable tool not only to major leaguers, but more important, at the Little League, high school and college levels.

"I think it's especially important for young arms," said Aaron. "Our minor league teams don't have enough exercising machines to help them during the course of a year. I ordered them for that purpose. It seems like a good machine and there's nothing else on the market any better."

Aaron said there have been a number of rotator cuff injuries in the past few years in the Braves' system and he said, "It will certainly help them strengthen their shoulders and might even help them throw a little harder."

Braves' catcher Biff Pocoroba underwent rotator cuff surgery in 1978 and has seen only limited playing time, being used mostly as a pinch hitter.

His tear was termed one of the worst by Dr. Frank Jobe, who has performed the surgery on many professional athletes, Pocoroba said.

"The machine is a good one," said Pocoroba. "It isolates the rotator cuff muscles and everything around it and strengthens the shoulder."

"The exercises Dr. Jobe gave me with weights uses the same principle as Dave's machine. He put together his machine on the basis of those ideas and talking to a lot of doctors," Pocoroba said.

Right-hander Tommy Boggs, who came back during the final weeks of Atlanta's stretch run last season after missing most of the year with a slight tear to his rotator cuff, was one of the five Braves to purchase and use the machine over the winter.

"I used it pretty regularly, about three times a week," said Boggs, who did not undergo surgery. "It's really too early to tell if it's helped. It's not going to heal my arm, it's just going to strengthen it."

"I feel stronger this year but as far as it actually helping my arm, I don't know yet. It's bound to strengthen it and that has to help," the right-hander said.

Dr. Rankin Cooter, director of the physical fitness center at Georgia State University, has been performing tests on the machine, but the results are not in yet.

"Physiologically the machine looks as though it would improve the entire shoulder with pitchers, but it's too early to tell," he said.

"One thing we are looking at as well as the strength, is improvements in speed. I'm not saying it will improve a pitcher's speed but if it does, it could turn into something very interesting," Cooter said.

Pursley agreed it's too soon to assess the machine's effectiveness, although he's convinced the machine will help prevent the injury.

"There's no way we'll know for sure now," he said. "But in 10 years if there are a lot less, or no rotator cuff problems, there's no question I'd say it's successful."

Forsees End To Conferences

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Athletic conferences may be split apart and many of the lesser lights of college athletics could disappear from big-time competition if NCAA controls of football television are wiped out by court order, a panel on football television was told Monday.

"I think if there is no NCAA-controlled television package the pressures for splitting up of conferences are going to be greater than they have ever been," said Wiles Hallock, retiring executive director of the Pac-10 Conference. "There will be increasing pressure within the conferences on those who are not generating revenue."

Hallock, University of Alabama vice-president Charley Scott, and Kevin O'Malley of CBS-TV and Terry Hanson of the Turner Broadcasting System spoke to a group of sports editors and sports columnists on "the future of football television."

By necessity, almost everything they said was speculative. Last fall, U.S. District Judge Juan Burciaga in Oklahoma City ruled in a suit brought by Oklahoma and Georgia that the NCAA was in violation of antitrust laws in compelling its members schools to abide by the NCAA television plan and controls. The decision has been stayed pending an appeal to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver.

The appeals court could hand down its ruling any day. The Burciaga decision specified that every school was free to make any deal it wanted with any broadcasting company for the televising of its football games.

O'Malley and Hanson both said the lack of controls and the accelerated growth of cable television could force the networks out of the college football business.

"We feel uncontrolled television would threaten the network base," said O'Malley, executive producer of CBS Sports. "We feel the very future of college football on network television could be threatened."

The Burciaga decision specifically invalidated four-year contracts the NCAA has with ABC and CBS for the televising of football games. Hallock, chairman of the NCAA's football television committee, said NCAA schools realized $66.4 million from the first year of the network contracts last season, as opposed to $30 million they received under the old contract in 1981. In addition, Hallock said, almost every conference had more appearances during 1981 than they had ever had previously.

O'Malley said the uncertainty because of the pending court action is working a hardship on the networks because they are unable to sell advertising on next fall's telecasts.

The University of Nevada at Las Vegas, the nation's only undefeated major college basketball team, held onto first place today in the The Associated Press college basketball poll for the second week in a row, while Houston climbed into second place and defending national champion North Carolina dropped out of the Top Ten.

The Runnin' Rebels of UNLV, 24-0, received 41 of 57 first-place votes and 1,110 of a possible 1,140 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Houston, 22-2, received five first-place votes and 1,040 points in jumping from fourth place to second. Virginia, 21-3, rose from fifth to third with seven first-place votes and 976 points.

The other four first-place ballots went to Indiana, which totaled 939 points but dropped from second place to fourth.

Louisville climbed from ninth place to fifth with 842 points, followed by Arkansas with 827 points, Villanova 777, UCLA 743, St. John's 707 and Kentucky 637.

PARENTS & TEACHERS: Use Newspapers In Beginning Reading

(This public service ad is one in a series published for national Newspaper in Education Week, sponsored by the International Reading Association.)

One way to help ensure enjoyment and success in teaching reading with newspapers is to deal with sections of the newspaper that your children or students have shown interest in. Comics, sports and advertising inserts are proven favorites among young children.

Gather newspapers, colored pens or crayons, and scissors and glue so your children will have materials on hand when asked to circle, underline or cut out items from the newspaper.

● Old Mother Hubbard must stock her cupboard if her children and dog are to be fed the proper foods. Have children choose foods from the grocery ads, and discuss why the foods are or are not the best for the children and the dog.

● Have the children go through the advertisements and circle all the "B's" or "M's" or whatever letter you are teaching. Also help them find the letters in their names.

● Read comic strips and have the children provide the ending.

● Let the children "read" the pictures in the comic strips and "rewrite" the captions.

● Select a picture of a scene and paste it on paper. Ask the child to tell what is happening, to whom, where and why. Write the child's story under the picture as it is dictated.

● Turn to the sports page. Tell the children, "All of the things I read will be about a sport. Listen carefully and name the sport." Read from the report of a game or tournament.

● Select three pictures. Read three headlines to stories and ask the children to match them with the appropriate picture.

● Read the weather reports daily. Have children underline key words such as cold, cloudy, windy, etc.

Boston College Slips Past Huskies

By The Associated Press
After beating St. John's and losing to Syracuse, a pair of Top Twenty teams, last week, Boston College may have had trouble getting psyched up for lowly Connecticut.
"Not the coaches," BC's Gary Williams said Monday night after the 19th-ranked Eagles' hard-earned 86-80 victory over Connecticut. "With players, no matter what you say, sometimes it becomes a problem. Maybe subconsciously that's a factor and we just have to remember that every win this time of year is a big win. It's not who you beat. It's how many you beat."
Boston College has beaten 19 opponents in 24 games and is 9-4 in the rugged Big East Conference. Connecticut, 9-15 and 2-11, lost for the 13th time in its last 15 games.
In the only other game involving a member of The Associated Press Top Twenty, No. 12 Wichita State needed a tip-in at the buzzer by Xavier McDaniel, the nation's leading rebounder, to nip New Mexico State 72-70.

At Newton, Mass., Jay Murphy scored 20 points and pulled down 13 rebounds as Boston College survived a first-half scare. Connecticut led 34-31 at halftime before dropping its seventh consecutive game — four in eight days to Top Twenty teams — as BC used two eight-point spurts and a 10-point streak in the second half to open a comfortable lead.
"We were coming off a very tough stretch," Williams said. "We had to get this win, and I thought we gutted it out. The end of the game was an indication of how tough it was to concentrate," he said, noting that the Eagles led 86-72 with 41 seconds to go and let Connecticut score the final eight points.
Trailing 36-33, Boston College launched its first eight-point rally on baskets by Martin Clark, John Garrison, Dominic Pressley and Michael Adams. Connecticut closed the gap to 41-40, but Clark touched off another 8-0 burst with four free throws and baskets by Garrison and Adams made it 49-40. With the lead at 51-46, Murphy's basket triggered a 10-point run.

"You can't lose your concentration against Boston College. They're coming in with fresh troops and they'll hurt you," Connecticut Coach Dom Perno said. "We did lose our concentration some and they got a 10-point spurt and we were struggling after that."
At Las Cruces, N.M., Wichita State upped its record to 21-3 overall and 13-1 in the Missouri Valley Conference, while ending New Mexico State's four-game winning streak.
McDaniel just beat the buzzer with the winning basket after Antoine Carr and Gilbert Wilburn missed shots in the final seven seconds. Carr led the Shockers with 27 points and eight rebounds.

New Mexico State led 70-63 with 4:24 left — the Aggies led by 10 in the first half — but missed free throws and turnovers allowed Wichita State to climb back to a 70-70 tie as McDaniel scored seven of his team's final nine points. A backcourt violation on New Mexico State's Gillis Williams with seven seconds left set up the winning basket.
Elsewhere:
—At Athens, Ga., Gerald Crosby scored 18 points and James Banks added 16 as Georgia took control early and rolled to an 80-65 victory over Florida, which dropped its 19th consecutive Southeastern Conference road game. In other SEC games, Leonard Mitchell's 25 points and 13 rebounds paced LSU over Mississippi State 86-73 at Baton Rouge, La., while at Oxford, Miss., Carlos Clark scored 15 points and Roger Steig added 11 — including a pair of free throws with 11 seconds remaining — to lift

Mississippi past Alabama 56-52.
—At Norfolk, Va., Keith Thomas converted all 10 free throw attempts, including four in the last 42 seconds, as Old Dominion's Sun Belt Conference leaders held off South Florida 82-74.
—At New Orleans, substitute John Williams hit three free throws down the stretch and scored 15 points to lead

Tulane to a 68-54 victory over Cincinnati and undisputed possession of second place in the Metro Conference.
—At Greenville, S.C., Willie White's 14 points helped Tennessee-Chattanooga edge upset-minded Furman 52-51 in a Southern Conference game. The winners are 20-3 overall and 13-3 in the conference.
—At Normal, Ill., Hank Cornley scored 20 points to lead Illinois State over West Texas State 74-59 in Missouri Valley action.

—At Los Angeles, Cedric Bailey's 20-foot jumper with three seconds remaining gave Southern Cal a 55-53 Pacific-10 victory over California.
—At South Bend, Ind., Notre Dame's John Paxson scored 24 points and the Irish held Joe Jakubick, the nation's leading scorer, to 19 points in crushing Akron 80-45.

Jakubick came into the game averaging 28.3.
—At Deland, Fla., a layup by Dion Brown with four seconds left gave Southwest Louisiana, 20-4, a 74-72 triumph over Stetson.
—And VMI lost for the 22nd time in 23 outings when Marshall, trailing 32-29, went on a 30-13 binge and trounced the Keydets 110-91, their 17th consecutive setback.

NCAA Looks At Walker

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — The Herschel Walker affair has taken another confusing turn.
NCAA enforcement chief David Berst told The Associated Press on Monday that it was against NCAA policy to comment on whether his organization planned to investigate Walker's alleged signing of a professional football contract. However, the New York Times quoted him as saying the NCAA would look into the matter and an investigation would begin soon.
However, Berst told The Associated Press Monday night, "I don't remember saying it that way, although I have hedged on saying that the whole matter is concluded. "As I recall, the Times asked me that if we were going to look into something like this would we wait forever or try to resolve it quickly. I believe I said that it would not be as immediate as some other things as a result of the national (football) signing date last week."

Berst did say he is satisfied that Walker, the University of Georgia's Heisman Trophy winner and three-time All-American running back, had not signed a multimillion-dollar contract with the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League last week.
Walker held a news conference last Friday and denied reports that he had signed with the Generals. Under NCAA regulations, he would be ineligible next year, his senior season, if he signed the contract, even if he later changed his mind and exercised a reported 24-hour escape clause.

"Herschel, his coach, Vince Dooley, and Georgia officials have maintained good communications with us throughout Herschel's career. As far as I'm concerned, he's eligible. I'm inclined to believe him when he tells me something, but that also doesn't mean we wouldn't look at a matter we're supposed to look at. We always have an interest in seeing that our regulations are complied with."

But the Times said that when pressed on the matter and asked if it would be wrong to assume that the NCAA would investigate, Berst replied, "No, it would not."
"I didn't comment on whether there would be an investigation," Berst told The AP. "Certainly I talked with him (the Times) about how we operate, but I didn't indicate whether or not there would be an investigation."

Former basketball star Walt Bellamy scored more than 20,000 points during his pro career but never made the NBA All-Star Team.

Pee Wee Champions.
The Wolfpack captured the championship of the Pee Wee League of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department this season. Members of the

Attempt Ease Any Problems

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee has been asked by the international Olympics director to become acquainted with the new president of the Soviet Olympic Committee, the Los Angeles Times said today.
Monique Berlioux suggested Los Angeles committee president Peter Ueberroth visit Russia soon to meet his Soviet counterpart, Marat Gramov, and invite Gramov to pay a similar visit to Los Angeles in an effort to cement ties between the two nations' Olympic movements as they approach the 1984 Games in Los Angeles.
Ueberroth had visited Russia last spring on a tour that also included East Germany, Poland and Yugoslavia.
His offices were closed for the holiday Monday, and he was unreachable for comment on Ms. Berlioux's proposal from Lausanne, Switzerland.

Gramov, a former propaganda ministry official, replaces fired Soviet Olympic president Sergei Pavlov, a bitter critic of Los Angeles' Games. Gramov has made no definitive public comment on Los Angeles' preparations for the 1984 Olympics.
European newspapers are reporting Pavlov was fired because of alleged involvement in illegal currency traffic, the Times said.

Motivation And Detail Stressed In TV Version

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Television remakes many old movies, but it's rare when a TV production and a feature film are released at about the same time. Comparisons between "Frances" and CBS' "Will There Really Be a Morning?" therefore are in order.

What the TV movie based on the tragic life of actress Frances Farmer lacks in depth of emotion is offset by greater attention to detail and motivation. The result is a stronger understanding of the relationship between Miss Farmer and her bitter, domineering mother.

Based on Miss Farmer's 1972 autobiography, "Will There Really Be a Morning?" also concentrates more than "Frances" on Miss Farmer's upbringing than her downfall. Some especially wrenching scenes that occur late in the theatrical film — notably, the graphic portrayal of Miss Farmer's treatment in a mental hospital — are treated in a less sensational way in the CBS movie.

Susan Blakely plays the starring role on CBS. Although she doesn't match the soulful depth of Jessica Lange's performance in "Frances," she is no slouch, and her Frances is a powerful and convincing character.

A major theme in Frances' life is the influence of her mother (Kim Stanley in the theatrical film, Lee Grant in the TV movie). The CBS version focuses more on their love-hate relationship, dating to Frances' early childhood. "She courted the limelight while I hid in the shadows," Frances says in narration on the TV movie. Both films establish Lillian Farmer's culpability in pushing Frances into a film career she didn't want and couldn't handle. It's clear that Lillian enjoyed Hollywood's trappings more than Frances.

Lillian Farmer's desire for self-gratification is clear in both pictures, but the CBS movie emphasizes another motivational facet of her character — her unwillingness to let the child go. "Hollywood is closer than New York," she tells Frances, who argues for a stage rather than movie career.

Why this bright and creative young woman allowed herself to be dominated in this way is not totally clear in either picture. It's evident from the CBS version that her father's weak-kneed relationship with his wife influenced Miss Farmer's own behavior.

"She'll humiliate the hell out of you," Ernest Farmer (Royal Dano) tells his daughter in the CBS movie, "but you'll come back for more." And Frances does, over and over again.

The two films don't vary much in plot. Frances grows up in Seattle and gains national attention at an early age by winning a contest with an essay about the death of God. She eventually turns to acting, and achieves immediate success in motion pictures in the 1930s.

But Frances, a perfectionist in a Hollywood community that specializes too often in fast-food films, rebels against the system. She finds artistic happiness for a while on Broadway, starring in "Golden Boy" and suffering a traumatic affair with the show's playwright, Clifford Odets.

RUNS FOR SHOW — Tenor Placido Domingo dashes to the stage door entrance of the Metropolitan Opera at Lincoln Center in New York Monday night. He sang the aria "L'Anima ho stanca" from Cilea's "Adriana Lecouvreur" in the first act, and then ran, still in costume, through the concourse level of Lincoln Center to the stage of the New York State Theatre, where he sang the same song for taping of a public television special, "Gala of Stars, 1983". He then ran back to the Metropolitan Opera to sing the second act. (AP Laserphoto)

John Heard is a sarcastic, sadistic Odets, who exploits Frances' movie fame for his own purposes. In "Frances," Odets is treated more sympathetically.

After she leaves Broadway for Hollywood, Frances' life deteriorates in alcohol, drugs, a failed marriage, bouts with the law, continuing conflicts with her mother and a series of severe psychological breakdowns, resulting in commitment to mental institutions.

The theatrical movie dwells more on her drastic treatment and the inhumane conditions.

As is the case in any drama based on reality, it's hard to know what's real and what's fiction. One main character in "Frances" never turns up tonight. The man who loves Frances and even springs her from the hospital on one occasion was a supportive thread throughout "Frances."

Perhaps it's television's need for neat endings, or just Miss Farmer's personal view of the truth, but "Will There Really Be a Morning?" reaches a more hopeful resolution.

Helen Reddy Says She Now Is 'Taking Control' Of Her Life

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Reporter
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Helen Reddy, who gave the feminist movement its anthem more than a dozen years ago with "I Am Woman," was considerably less liberated than the lyrics might have had her fans believe.

At the time of her greatest hit and until last fall, Helen in private life was the wife of Jeff Wald, a shrewd, tough and extraordinarily able talent agent who became her personal manager.

In many respects, her talent notwithstanding, Helen's success could be attributed to Wald. Although they worked as a team, Jeff relieved his wife of the tough negotiating down in the pits.

Contracts with record companies, television deals, road company bookings, theaters and arena agreements were Jeff's milieu.

He was a feared, intense negotiator who got top dollar for his wife. He became an almost legendary figure for his tough bargaining.

Nobody was ever heard to say, "I got the best of Jeff Wald."

The couple's partnership was enormously successful. Of Helen's 18 albums, three became platinum, nine gold. Her concerts sold out. They earned millions. Their home in Brentwood is a showcase.

But the marriage came apart for many reasons, not the least of which was Jeff's acknowledged drug problem.

The Walds were divorced last December. They are still in the throes of a bitter property settlement that may take years to unravel.

The end of one lifestyle and the beginning of another has been an eye-opener for Helen. Like most Australians, Helen has a strong will and an independent nature. She also is resilient.

"I've taken more charge of my life," she said the other day on the eve of the release of her new album, "Imagination."

"I'm learning about finances and keeping up on them. I'm more aware of what's coming in and what's going out. I find it hogwash that women can't understand finances. Once you learn the definitions of the convoluted terms, it's fairly easy." Helen has converted one of the rooms in her home to an office where she finds herself behind a desk making business decisions that Jeff once made.

Gets 127 Years For 3 Murders

ELIZABETHTOWN, N.C. (AP) — Attorneys say they'll appeal sentences totaling 127 years in prison that Tony Ginor Sampson received for the murders of two Elizabethtown children.

The 22-year-old Clinton man was sentenced Monday after pleading guilty to second-degree murder in the 1982 drowning deaths of Regina Devone, 3, and her sister, April, 2.

Superior Court Judge Robert Hobgood gave Sampson consecutive 50-year sentences for the two murder pleas and two consecutive 12-year terms for first-degree kidnapping. Sampson also received a three-year term for auto theft to run concurrently with the second kidnapping sentence.

Bladen County sheriff's deputies last April 13 discovered the bodies of the two girls, still in night clothes, in a swamp near White Lake.

The deputies contend Sampson led lawmen to the bodies but denied murdering the children.

Clinton police arrested Sampson about 12 hours after the children were kidnapped. Deputies found him locked in the trunk of a relative's car.

Judge To Challenge Proposed Removal

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — District Court Judge J. Wilton Hunt, convicted earlier this month on bribery charges, will challenge a recommendation that he be removed from office, an attorney says.

The N.C. Judicial Standards Commission this month unanimously moved to take away Hunt's position for accepting $9,000 in bribes. The commission recommends action to the North Carolina Supreme Court, which has the power to discipline judges.

Hunt's lawyer, A.H. Gainey Jr. of Southport filed a petition for a hearing before the high court, contesting the commission's decision.

A hearing probably would be held in April, said J. Gregory Wallace, Supreme Court clerk.

The commission's recommendation was not connected with Hunt's conviction in federal court Feb. 2. The commission, which conducts its own investigations, had access to the same evidence presented in Hunt's trial, including tape recordings and video tapes.

Commissioners concluded they had found Hunt had taken $9,000 in bribes from undercover FBI agents, "fixed" traffic tickets, discussed drug deals and agreed to set low bail if the agents were arrested.

Sentencing for Hunt, who was found guilty of accepting bribes from the agents and helping them call a bookmaker so they could gamble on sporting events, was delayed until March 14 in U.S. District Court in Raleigh.
