Inflation Index Up By Mere 0.2 Percent

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Labor Department, rejiggering its major measure of inflation, said today that consumer prices rose a scant 0.2 percent in January. Had the old calculation been used, consumer prices would have been unchanged.

Housing costs rose substantially, as had been expected under the new formula, but heating oil prices posted a record drop and gasoline prices were also off sharply. The old calculation had been widely criticized for over-emphasizing the effect of homeownership costs. Under the new Consumer Price Index formula, the department said housing costs rose 0.5 percent in January.

Under the former calculation, housing costs tumbled 0.8 percent in December.

Gasoline prices last month fell 3.3 percent. As of January, gasoline prices were 10.6 percent below their peak level of March 1981. Home heating oil prices plunged 4.1 percent. Prices for both fuels fell in December.

The fresh declines in energy prices are largely the result of the continuing worldwide oil glut. Analysts expect even further declines as some major exporting nations have cut their wholesale prices and others ponder similar price slashing.

Assessing the record fall in heating oil prices — the sharpest drop since such records were first kept in 1952 — department analysts cited the lingering surpluses and recession, increased conservation efforts and the mild winter.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said the new inflation report "indicates price increases in the United States are continuing at a very moderate level."

"It's good news because it indicates this factor, coupled with potential energy price decreases, makes the inflation picture for 1983 look increasingly favorable," he said.

Food prices, meanwhile, climbed a tiny 0.1 percent after holding steady in the two previous months. Medical care costs, which soared throughout 1982, rose a sharp 0.8 percent.

Inflation last year was 3.9 percent, the smallest rise in a decade. Under an experimental measure similar to the new one, 1982's inflation at the retail level would have been 5 percent.

For the 12 months ending in January, prices rose 3.8 percent under the new formula. If last month's 0.2 percent seasonally adjusted rise held steady for 12 straight months, the yearly gain would be 2.1 percent. The annual rate reported by the department is based on a more precise calculation of monthly prices than the figure the department makes public.

Under the old measure, consumer prices fell 0.3 percent in December, only the second decline recorded since 1965. The department, revising its calculations for the two preceding months, said today that prices held steady in November and rose 0.4 percent in October.

The department, in refiguring the housing cost component of the index, is attempting to measure what homeowners would charge themselves if they were renting their homes. By no longer considering current home prices and mortgage rates, the department is eliminating the investment value of a house.

Analysts in and out of government said the old formula gave too much weight to swings in mortgage rates and home prices. Skyrocketing interest rates and home prices tended to skewer the index upward while recent falls may have understated inflation.

Under the new "rental equivalence" formula, the department said that a typical homeowner have seen his costs rise 0.7 percent in January, while a typical renter's costs were up 0.6 percent.

The new calculations are reflected only in the department's Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers.

They won't be made for two more years in a companion index — the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers — which is widely used in collective bargaining agreements and in adjusting Social Security and other government payments.

Fire Damages A Landmark

LANDMARK DAMAGED BY FIRE — Darwin Water's Service Center, 1114 N. Greene St., a popular gathering place in the Meadowbrook area for several years, was damaged by fire late Thursday. According to former owner Darwin Waters, the structure was erected in the 1930s. The building, which was renovated several times, contained a grill, gas pumps and store. Fire-Rescue Chief Jenness Allen said the fire caused extensive damage to the interior of the building and damaged the roof. Allen said a short circuit in an extension cord providing electric power to a video game apparently caused the blaze, which spread quickly through the building. No injuries were reported in the fire. Sheriff Reports Arrest In Double-Murder Probe

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County authorities have arrested a Route 4, Greenville, woman and charged her with being an accessory after the fact of murder in the deaths of two men whose weighted bodies were recovered from the Tar River near Falkland.

Sheriff Ralph Tyson said Carolyn Pippins, 20, who resides in the area behind the Pitt-Greenville Airport, was arrested at her home around midnight Thursday. No bond had been set this morning, he said.

Area rescue units pulled the body of 31-year-old Leslie L. Thorbs, a Grifton minister, from the rain-swollen Tar River just before 10:30 a.m. Thursday, Tyson said. A body identified as that of Ray Herring, 27, of Goldsboro was recovered from the river Wednesday afternoon.

Dr. Stan Harris, Pitt County medical examiner, said Thursday that an autopsy on Herring indicated that he died of a gunshot wound to the head. Harris, who also conducted an autopsy on Thorbs, was out of his office this morning but other sources reported Thorbs also had been shot.

Tyson said authorities believe Herring and Thorbs were robbed before they were murdered and dumped into the river. Both bodies were found in water 20- to 30-feet deep near the N.C. 222 bridge about a mile east of N.C. 43, he said.

According to Tyson, a cement block was found tied to Herring's body with a length of clothesline, while a chain had been used to secure a block to Thorbs' body. Both victims were clothed, Tyson said, and their pockets were empty when they were discovered. He said the State Bureau of Investigation is conducting tests on stains that appeared to be blood that were found on the N.C. 222 bridge.

Tyson said Herring, who was married and resided at a trailer park near Goldsboro, and Thorbs, who operated florist shops in Greenville and Ayden, apparently were friends and had met at Thorbs' residence in the Lenoir County section of Grifton last Friday night.

Thorbs, pastor of Gateway to Heaven Interdenominational Church in Tarboro and a member of Zion Temple AME Church of Grifton, was reported missing early Saturday afternoon when he failed to show up to conduct a wedding, authorities said. His wallet was found Saturday behind the airport here and his drivers license was discovered in the same area Tuesday.

Authorities said that Herring's wife had reported him missing last Friday night.

According to Tyson, Herring's car was found in Lenoir County Saturday but authorities are still looking for Thorbs' 1980 black Cadillac.

Rescue units from Farmville, Fountain and Greenville took part in the Tar River search, which began Wednesday.

Giant Gaseous Cloud Drifting Among Galaxies

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Astronomers have found a giant gaseous cloud drifting among the galaxies and say it may be linked to the much-sought-after missing mass of the universe.

Cornell University scientists announced Thursday that they discovered the huge cloud by accident last month while using the world's largest radio telescope, located in Puerto Rico.

The body of neutral hydrogen is the first of its kind ever found outside a galaxy, they added. Neutral hydrogen has no electrical charge and won't chemically bond to another element.

Gas clouds are common inside the Milky Way and other galaxies, but none of substance has been detected in the space between galaxies until now. However, astronomers have long believed that some gases must be drifting in these spaces.

"The nature of the cloud is unknown," said Dr. Yervant Terzian, chairman of the university's astronomy department. "We have never seen anything like this before."

Terzian said in a telephone interview that the cloud has the size and mass of a large galaxy, and may be the primitive material of such a body that never formed normal stars. Galaxies are concentrations of millions of stars.

"The gas cloud is a billion times more massive than the Sun and is 300,000 light years long — a few times larger than our entire galaxy, the Milky Way," Terzian said. A light year is the distance light travels in one year, about six trillion miles.

The behavior of the cloud, located about 30 million light years from Earth in the direction of the constellation Leo, may be an important clue to an even more important find, he said.

The surface of the elongated cloud is rotating at about 50 miles per second, fast enough to scatter it if the gravity of something else was not holding it back, he said.

"Something must provide the gravitational pull to keep the newly discovered cloud together, in spite of its rapid rotation," Terzian said.

"The mass for this is about one hundred times larger than the mass of the gas cloud itself, indicating the presence of some form of 'invisible matter,' he continued.

This "invisible matter" is important because it may represent some of the reputed missing mass of the universe, a point of great debate among astronomers. Many scientists believe the universe was born about 15 billion years ago in the "Big Bang" primordial explosion.

If there is enough mass in the universe, gravitational forces eventually will stop its expansion and it will begin to collapse back onto itself, says one theory. If there is too little mass, as some believe, the universe will expand forever, says another.

Since the universe's visible mass, including stars and galaxies, does not appear to have enough gravitational pull to stop the expansion, believers in the collapsing universe theory think there must be "invisible matter" present to provide the extra pull.

The Cornell team that discovered the cloud included Terzian, Stephen Schneider, George Helou and Edwin E. Salpeter. The researchers used the 1,000-foot radio telescope at Arecibo, Puerto Rico, which is operated by Cornell for the National Science Foundation.

Reduced Prime Rate

NEW YORK (AP) — First National Bank in Chicago and Mellon Bank in Pittsburgh cut their prime lending rates a half percentage point to 10.5 percent today, the rate's lowest level in more than four years.

The reductions by First National, the nation's eighth-largest commercial bank, and Mellon, ranked 15th, reflect recent declines in open-market rates, which reduces banks' cost of acquiring funds for lending.

The prime lending rate has not been at 10.5 percent since November 1978. Major banks last lowered the charge on Jan. 11, to 11 percent from 11.5 percent, and it stood at 12 percent last October.

Winter Misery At Its Worst Early Last Year, Says Index

By RANDOLPH SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new government "measure of misery" indicates that one of the worst winter weather to afflict Americans in this century occurred early last year.

Meteorologists at the National Weather Service and the University of Delaware developed what they call the "weather stress index" to measure how winter affects people. The index, which includes humidity, air moisture, wind and temperature, shows that areas east of the Rocky Mountains suffered the most uncomfortable days of the century on Jan. 10-11, 1982.

On Jan. 10, Norfolk, Neb., had a temperature of minus 23 degrees Fahrenheit, but it felt like minus 58 when the wind and humidity were calculated. On Jan. 11, Philadelphia's minus 3 felt like minus 14 and Atlanta's minus 4 felt like minus 20, the weather service said.

The new index assumes that people adjust to "normal" weather for the season in their area, and calculates the stress index based on how the weather differs from what would be normal.

Thus, the discomfort criteria for New Orleans and Bismarck, N.D., would be quite different, with each index designed to measure stress in the individual city.

For example, residents of New Orleans would be expected to be very uncomfortable on a winter day with a temperature of 15 degrees, 80 percent humidity and a wind of 15 mph. The same conditions in Bismarck, however, would be considered just about normal.

The new index is generally expressed as a value ranging up to 100 indicating the number of days the local population would be less uncomfortable than under the conditions indicated.

For example, in the theoretical conditions shown for New Orleans, the index would be 99, meaning that 99 days out of 100 would be expected to be less severe in that city at that time of year. For Bismarck, the same conditions would yield a value of about 30, meaning that 30 days out of 100 could be expected to be less severe.

Nationally, the number of days of extreme stress this winter has been much below normal, the weather service reports, except for Florida and central Idaho.

Report Eastwood Tipped President On Laos Raid

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Clint Eastwood told President Reagan in advance that former Green Beret James G. "Bo" Gritz planned a raid into Laos to find American prisoners of war, the Los Angeles Times reported today.

The newspaper said Eastwood told Reagan he had given money to the rescue effort, and that the government should be officially involved, according to testimony before the Senate Intelligence Committee.

When Reagan asked his advisers about Gritz, Robert McFarlane, chief deputy to National Security Adviser William P. Clark, told the president the government should not get involved with the decorated Vietnam War veteran, according to an unidentified administration official quoted by the Times.

"The president said, 'Fine,'" the official added.

However, Gritz team members said messages they received in Southeast Asia advised that Reagan supported them completely, the newspaper said.

The White House said today there would be no immediate comment until a copy of the article could be examined.

Former Green Beret Charles J. Patterson, 37, of Dinuba, Calif., told the Times he heard Eastwood say he could get help from Reagan if necessary.

"He said he could get in contact with the president," said Patterson, who was part of the rescue effort. "He (Eastwood) had the phone number. And when we supposedly got a prisoner, he was going to call the president and tell him we did have one and that we needed help to get the rest."

Eastwood has declined comment on the matter.

The Times said that in a November telephone call to Reagan at his Santa Barbara ranch, Eastwood told the president he had contributed $50,000 to the Gritz mission. Gritz's associates have put the amount at $30,000. Actor William Shatner also contributed $10,000 to Gritz, which Shatner has said was only for rights to Gritz' life story.

Gritz, 44, a retired lieutenant colonel, led a patrol of Americans and anti-communist guerrillas on a futile search into Laos last Nov. 27, but hostile forces killed one guerrilla and wounded three others. Gritz led a second raid Jan. 30, and another guerrilla died.

Gritz, who was reportedly on another mission in Laos, told the Times in a message dated Feb. 12 that he has "some POW ID." He did not say if the "ID" was from a living prisoner.

Government involvement in Gritz's failed missions has been the subject of closed hearings before the Senate Intelligence Committee.

DUMPSTER FIRE SOUNDOFF

I see all the recent fires in county-provided public refuse containers around the county as a terrible waste of time and effort for our volunteer firemen. There were five last weekend. These fires are costly to the county and our volunteer fire departments in terms of containers damaged and equipment used. I urge people not to put smoldering trash containers and pig cooker remains in our public dumpsters and I ask that anyone who sees someone doing this report it to me or the sheriff's department. Also, anyone who spots a smoldering dumpster should report it and absolutely not push trash in on top. These fires are extremely hard to extinguish and sometimes rekindle after firemen are gone. The containers cannot be taken to the landfill if there's any smoldering at all for fear of causing damage to the truck that tows them or even setting the landfill on fire. There seems to be no solution to this problem but to rely on each citizen's taking responsibility not to start such a fire and to report anyone else known to start one. — Bobby Joyner, Pitt Co. Fire Marshal.

Older Woman's League Ready To Fight

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Health Editor

Women in a movement led by Californian Tish Sommers refer to themselves as "coming of age" and use such slogans as "age is becoming," "don't agonize, organize."

She heads "OWL" — Older Women's League — an advocacy group that now counts 70 chapters nationwide and more than 5,000 members, most of whom are women 45 to 70 years of age.

"But there are no age or gender requirements," Ms. Sommers, OWL president, said.

The membership roster includes younger women and men.

The more Ms. Sommers, of Oakland, talked, the plainer it became the OWL movement is wise as an owl.

Consider:
"We're moved national headquarters in the nation's capital this month," Ms. Sommers said.

"We'll be close enough to pound our message into the ears of all those people who make decisions that affect older women."

"We intend to be the voice of a sizable group of constituents who have been invisible until now."

"In the whole aging field, few have considered how women are affected by public policy, whether in connection with Social Security, pension policy or other issues impacting on middle age or older women."

Ms. Sommers is down in history for coining the term "displaced homemaker" in the 1970s. It refers to women who lost their jobs as career homemakers through separation, divorce, or death of a spouse.

They had no job, few skills and, unless disabled, could not collect their Social Security until age 62. For some, there was no Social Security benefit. The displaced homemaker campaign, waged through the movement Ms. Sommers founded, led to legislation on the issue.

She became a displaced homemaker at the age of 57 as the result of divorce.

"I knew all the problems from experience," she said.

Peppery but gracious, Ms. Sommers smiles easily but is adroit at looking and sounding stern when the occasion demands. The stern front is rooted in deep convictions about wrongs she says must be made right.

Peers say Miss Sommers' gifts include great energy, enabling her to be slow to tire from her almost constant motion. She's a familiar figure at hearings in the nation's capital and anywhere there is a chance to beat the drum for the causes of mid-life and elderly women.

Hers is the name that pops up most often when television hosts want someone to speak out on issues involving older Americans.

The national agenda for OWL, she said, includes three continuing issues — defense and reform of Social Security and pension equity.

New issues she cited included:
—Care-givers: respite care, adult day care and other services designed to encourage independent living and to keep people out of nursing homes.

—More jobs for older women: by combatting age and sex discrimination and by working for a fair share of employment programs.

—No more budget cuts for human services and entitlements: Security for persons in need versus increased military expenditures.

Ms. Sommers receives no pay as president of OWL.

"I grew up during the Great Depression of the 1930s," she said, "and my style of living is quite modest."

Tall and blessed with thinness, Ms. Sommers looked striking as she talked with a visitor, describing the cause she intends to spend the last third of her life on.

She is in her late 60s, but there is something school girlish about her — both her dress and manner. Her homespun skirt was topped by a softly-constructed, rust suede vest and long-sleeved tan blouse. Her stockings were stylishly dark.

The salt and pepper hair is sheared close to the scalp and curly. The glasses have dark frames.

"The problems of mid-life and elderly women are OWL's targets," Ms. Sommers said.

When does mid-life start and end? When does elderly start?

"There is no way you can put a chronological age on mid-life or elderly," she said. "Problems hit at different ages."

Ms. Sommers hopes OWL will grow swiftly and be a political force in five years.

"Television depicts most older women as pitiful or comical," Ms. Sommers said.

"Some older women are working. Some are quite happy, healthy and having a great time free of the blues. Of course, some are having a miserable time and some are in nursing homes."

"The media should show that diversity without stereotyping. We're not all slim. None of us is unwrinkled. What's wrong with wrinkles? They can be a very interesting roadmap of life."

"The most unfortunate image of older women is not created by media, by the way. That is an older woman denying she is growing old and trying to look 30!"

Ms. Sommers said OWL is getting mainstream support. The Rockefeller Family Fund, Levi Strauss Foundation, Hancock Foundation, CBS Inc., and the Ms. Foundation provided grants that helped OWL open national headquarters in Washington.

The Ad Council in New York and Young & Rubicam in San Francisco linked up to field a national public service ad campaign that's just been launched. Ms. Sommers said the print and radio campaign aims to heighten awareness of problems facing the nation's fastest-growing population segment — older women.

A "liberties" print ad was designed to highlight the general situation facing America's older women. A "Mother's Day" ad focuses on financial and health insurance issues.

The radio ads supplement the print campaign with statistics and testimonials from OWL members.

The "liberties" ad shows a closeup of the face of the Statue of Liberty. Tears stream from the right eye.

"In a country that prides itself on equality and humanity," the ad says, "it's frightening that older women are so deprived."

The ad makes these other points:

—2.8 million women over 65 live in poverty, compared with fewer than 1 million men.

—12.2 million retirement age women have no access whatsoever to pensions.

—60 percent of women over 65 living alone have Social Security as their only income.

—4 million women between 45 and 65 have no health insurance.

A picture spanning the top of the "Mother's Day" ad shows a pocketwatch, stocks, bonds and other financial instruments. Letters across the top proclaim:

"For men, they created retirement plans, medical benefits, profit sharing and gold watches."

In smaller print, running below the pension picture, words say:

"For women, they created Mother's Day." The picture that goes with those words shows a puny-looking box of candy.

Ms. Sommers suggests thinking about the following:

—Women over 65 are four times as apt to be widowed as men. Men in that age group are twice as apt to be married as women.

—Of 26.3 million Americans aged 63 or older as of July 1981, 15.7 million, or 65 percent, were women.

—About 7.5 million elderly lived alone in 1981. Six million — 80 percent — were women.

—The rate of poverty for black and Hispanic women in 1980 was more than double that of white women.

—Two-thirds of elderly black women in 1980 were officially poor and 82 percent were either poor or near poverty.

—Women in 1981 comprised 75 percent of the officially poor over age 65.

OWL was created in October 1980 at the White House Mini-conference on Older Women, held in Des Moines, Iowa.

Ms. Sommers' record of public service includes her appointment by former Gov. Edmund C. Brown Jr. to California's Commission on Aging, and appointment by President Reagan to the National Advisory Committee on the White House Conference on Aging.

For her pioneering efforts on behalf of women's causes, Ms. Sommers received several awards, including the San Francisco Examiner's "Ten Most Distinguished Persons" award in 1974; the Western Gerontological Society Award in 1979, and the Unitarian Universalist Women's Federation "Ministry to Women" award in 1981.

Artichokes With Hollandaise

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor
DEAR CECILY: My husband loves artichokes with Hollandaise. Can you tell me how to prepare the artichokes and make the Hollandaise? — NEW COOK

DEAR NEW COOK: Use a heavy sharp knife to cut off about 1 inch from each artichoke top. Pull off a few of the bottom leaves and cut off the stems so the artichokes will stand straight. With a kitchen scissors cut off the tip of each leaf. Rinse the artichokes in cold water. Stand the artichokes upright in a saucepan — preferably one into which they will just fit. Add enough boiling water to come half-way up the artichokes and drop in a tablespoon of olive oil. Bring the water to a boil; cover and boil gently until the artichoke bases are barely tender when pierced with a fork — about 35 minutes for medium-size artichokes. (If water gets very low during the boiling, add a little more.) Remove artichokes and turn them upside down to drain. Gently pull out the small soft inner leaves attached to chokes (thistle portion) and discard. With a sturdy teaspoon, scoop out chokes and discard. Serve warm or at room temperature.

Now to the Hollandaise Sauce. I have an easy method I have given to many new cooks and it has always worked. The recipe follows and I hope you, too, will be successful with it. If there is any Hollandaise left over, refrigerate it in a covered jar. It's marvelous added to hard-cooked eggs for a sandwich filling. Or you can use the spread for canapes and sprinkle it with minced parsley. — CB

EASY HOLLANDAISE
1/4-pound stick (1/2 cup) refrigerator-firm

unsalted butter
2 large egg yolks
1 1/2 tablespoons lemon juice
Salt and white pepper
Cut butter into 4 equal pats. In a 1-quart mixing bowl with a whisk slightly beat egg yolks; whisk in lemon juice until blended. Add one butter pat.

Place bowl in a deep 8-inch skillet and add enough hot tap water to have it come up as high as possible. Remove bowl. Bring the water in the skillet to simmering; return bowl to simmering water. Adjust heat so water simmers and never boils; whisk until the pat of butter blends with the egg yolk mixture. Whisk in a second pat of butter the same way, then a third pat and last the fourth. Continue beating until the sauce is a little thinner than mayonnaise consistency. Beat in salt and pepper.

Serve the Hollandaise as soon as it is thickened. Or make it a few hours before serving and turn it into a wide-mouth vacuum jar and cover tightly. Uncover at serving time and the Hollandaise will be pleasantly warm — the temperature it should be. Makes about 2-3rds cup.

ARTICHOKES — They should be well drained, up-sidedown, after cooking. For a classic combination, serve them with Hollandaise.

Dear Abby

Abby's Book Was Source Of Consolation

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Just this last December, I lost my best friend — my mother. Her death was really unexpected. Since it was the holiday season, I had already bought her Christmas presents and had them wrapped, ready to give to her. Among the gifts was your book, "The Best of Dear Abby."

After she died, I donated her gifts to the church, which I'm sure she would have wanted. I don't know why, but I kept your book for myself. I must say that reading it made the holidays without my mother a little easier to bear.

My mother would have loved it. Just wanted you to know. And thank you, Abby.

FAITHFUL READER

DEAR READER: My condolences on the loss of your beloved mother. Knowing that my book helped in some small way to comfort you in your time of grief warms my heart. Thank you for writing.

DEAR ABBY: I am going to be maid of honor at the wedding of my best friend. (I'll call her Karen.) It will be held in a church and Karen is wearing a gown and veil. She's having bridesmaids and everything a bride dreams of. The wedding had to be postponed for 5 1/2 months because Karen's fiancé, who's in the Navy, had his leave cancelled due to a mixup. Meanwhile Karen found out she was pregnant.

Well, to make a long story short, Karen's baby came early and will be 7 weeks old at the time of the wedding. Karen wants to walk down the aisle with her baby cradled in her arms. My mother thinks it's a dumb idea and she's nagging me to talk Karen out of it. Some think it's a wonderful idea. It's never been done before as far as I know, and I don't think it's my place to take sides either way.

AND BABY MAKE THREE

DEAR AND: Since it's going to be a church wedding, I think Karen and her fiancé should confer with the clergyman who will perform the ceremony and abide by his (or her) decision.

DEAR ABBY: The "redhead" has been discussed in several of your columns. Permit me to remind you and some of your readers that it's the hair — not the head — that is red!

However, the most apt descriptive term may be "Red" — the commonly used nickname for the person rather than just the part.

OLD ENGLISH MAJOR IN LONG BEACH

DEAR MAJOR: A minor correction: My Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary defines "redhead" as "a person having red hair," so let us not split hairs of any color.

DEAR ABBY: The letter signed "Aching Heart," who wants to tell "Tammy" that she is her natural mother, is a situation familiar to me.

I was a happy, well-adjusted young lady in college when I received a birthday card from my "aunt" notifying me that she was really my natural mother! I knew I had been adopted, but I had never asked for, nor did I want, this information.

I was so shocked and upset that without the help of a dear friend, I would have been a mental case. I no longer hate my "aunt" for divulging this information, but I would be happy never to see her again. She did a very selfish thing to tell me.

I hope "Aching Heart" takes your advice and goes through a third party to find out first if her natural daughter wants to know her natural mother.

Please don't use my town or state, because I never told my mom. I consider the mom who raised me my "real" mom, and I wouldn't hurt her for the world.

Cuts Would Be Disastrous

We share the concern of ECU Chancellor John Howell, UNC President William Friday and other higher education administrators around the state at the prospects of major cuts in the base budget of the UNC system.

Dr. Howell said the report prepared by legislative fiscal analysts would be "quite a blow" if it were enacted.

The report suggested that $18 million might be cut from the higher education budget if state revenues do not improve. It could involve eliminating 427 teaching positions.

Howell noted that cuts were made in the present operating budget after it was enacted. "I don't want to talk about where I'd pick (to cut 3 percent)," Howell said. He said he would prefer to contemplate an improvement in the economy so that cuts will not be necessary.

Cuts of the magnitude envisioned by the legislative fiscal analysis would be catastrophic for ECU and particularly for its developing medical school.

So far the cuts are only proposals. It will be months before final state budget decisions are made, and like Dr. Howell, we prefer to remain optimistic that nothing so disastrous will afflict East Carolina University.

Contamination Is Costly

The federal government's plan to buy-out dioxin-tainted Times Beach (Mo.) puts the cost of soil contamination in better perspective.

The Love Canal case was bad enough, the PCB-dumping in N.C. was only a nuisance by comparison (and it took years to get around to that); but the plan to buy out an entire town and relocate its 2,400 inhabitants is expected to cost $33 million, and maybe more.

The weird part of the story is that the dioxin was spread throughout the community when it was mixed with waste oil and sprayed on the town's unpaved roads to control dust a decade ago.

Who mixed the road spray, and who applied it to the roads is not clear. Our impression is that it has to be unlikely the federal government would be involved in a local dust-settling operation. Other towns used the same treatment.

The story poses possible questions and possible answers that should make your hair curl. For example:

Is the federal government wholly responsible (and must provide the clean-up and/or removal money) for all contaminated areas in the country? (It only shared costs in the Love Canal case.)

If waste oil was used to spray only the unpaved roads of Times Beach it might be regarded an acceptable expense; but other small towns used the same method of dust-settling over the years. How many were similarly contaminated?

Hundreds? Thousands?

EPA detectives have a vast job on their hands just determining possible victims, determining proofs of contamination and its extent. Then the bills for buy-outs and removals pose a federal expense of multibillion stature.

Add to that the potential contamination by other-than-dioxin contaminants, and pretty soon there would be no money left to pay for other costs of running the government.

And you think it couldn't happen?

Personal Feelings Count

WASHINGTON — A major reason why Kenneth Adelman's nomination as arms control director was blocked in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was the pique of Sen. Larry Pressler, a maverick Republican from South Dakota, when President Reagan did not quickly agree to speak at his 41st birthday dinner.

The president, in a telephone conversation with Pressler, said he would let the senator know about the dinner. But that was not good enough for Pressler, who was visibly miffed. Senate insiders link that anger with Pressler's decision to break party ranks and oppose Adelman, who consequently fell one vote short of the majority needed on the Foreign Relations Committee.

A footnote: Personal considerations also may have affected the vote by the committee's other defecting Republican, Sen. Charles Mathias of Maryland. He has an abiding respect for Secretary of State George Shultz and was offended when he learned that national security director William P. Clark pushed through Adelman's nomination without clearance from Shultz.

Contrary to speculation that Ariel

Sharon's successor as Israeli defense minister might have an easier time with the U.S. government because of his diplomatic familiarity, the fact is that Moshe Arens during his tenure as ambassador to Washington never was able to establish personal contact with President Reagan.

Except for ceremonial visits, White House staffers barred the Oval Office door to Arens when the Israeli envoy wanted to see the president, he was given national security director William P. Clark instead. Such treatment puzzled Arens, who often complained to friends in the Reagan administration.

But the barred door never opened, partly because Reagan's aides did not want the president to be perceived as playing footsie with Israel. In addition, Arens was perceived as sharing in full his government's opposition to the Reagan peace plan for the Mideast. As a member of the Israeli parliament, Arens opposed even the old Camp David peace treaty between Israel and Egypt.

Chilly relations between Democratic front-runner Walter F. Mondale and New York's newly-inaugurated Gov. Mario Cuomo dropped a few more degrees when the former vice president did not show up in Manhattan for the most recent cattle show of presidential candidates.

Mondale begged off on grounds he had to work on the speech announcing his candidacy to be given two weeks later. But politicians present in New York divined the real reason to be that at this cattle show, the entrants were not given the chance to make a speech. Mondale's no-show did not sit well with Democrats who had been conned into forking over $500 a plate for the dinner, sponsored by the Democratic National Committee, in the belief that he would be there.

But the dinner was really Cuomo's show, with a fullscale address by the governor making him the star of the evening. Consequently, Mondale's absence did not endear him to Cuomo insiders; they still feel Mondale should have backed Cuomo against Mayor Ed Koch in last year's hardfought primary for governor in return for Cuomo's support of the Carter-Mondale ticket against Sen. Edward M. Kennedy in 1980. Mondalites respond that Cuomo never asked for help.

Beleaguered black Republicans were momentarily overjoyed by the appointment of a black to become No. 2 man in Secretary James Watt's Interior Department, but were soon devastated to learn the awful truth: He is a Democrat.

Professor Says Teacher Shortage Lies Ahead

RALEIGH — North Carolina is on the verge of a serious shortage of public school teachers. The first signs of that teacher shortage are showing up now in the areas of science and math instruction. By the 1990s, the shortage will spread to almost all disciplines.

That's the view of a University of North Carolina education professor who is working to develop career opportunities for teachers in a pilot project sponsored by the Charlotte-Mecklenburg school system.

Phil Schlechty, director of the Metrolina Educational Consortium in Charlotte, told educators and politicians gathered for an education policy seminar in Raleigh recently that, "We're going to have a major teacher shortage. There's no way around it." He lists four points in making this prediction.

First, "Right now, we're not hiring new high school teachers, with the exception of those in areas of math and science, for the next seven or eight years." Because of this lack of hiring young teachers, the average age of current teachers goes up every year. Soon, we'll be losing a sizeable portion of our teachers to retirement every year.

Second, "There are fewer college students today than there were several years ago and we're getting fewer of them going into the study of education because there are no jobs open now." So, not only is the pool of new college graduates dwindling, the percentage of college graduates studying education is dropping. In some universities, this drop means that education programs are being eliminated in an effort to save money. (Several N.C. State professors recently lamented the shortage of agriculture and vocational education instructors and the paucity of college students for preparing for careers in those areas. They expressed concern that lack of student interest could lead to the closing of some university programs in those fields.)

Third, "Teaching has always been a profession that provided upward mobility for young men." The GI Bill after World War II sent young men to college who would have otherwise lacked the money to do so. But teaching is not a profession which the children of college-educated people get into, he says. First-generation college graduates want their children to go into professions which are held in higher esteem by society, jobs which pay better.

Fourth, while all indications are that fewer people will be getting into education, demographic charts show a baby boom coming in the next decade. Many teachers will be retiring and fewer people will be getting into teaching. That won't hurt in the short run because there are fewer children to teach now. But, when the school-aged population begins to rise again, as he suspects will happen in only a few years, there'll be more kids than teachers. And, he fears, we'll be without the education programs in college to adequately gear up for a major catch-up effort.

Schlechty thinks the way to combat this coming shortage is to make teaching a more desirable career. "Teaching has never had to provide a career for people because you had captive fields of people from whom to draw — women and minorities. They had no other choice, in the past. Now, they have other options."

Making teaching into a desirable career, he says, means providing teachers with greater opportunity for promotion, economic gain and public recognition.

Cheaper?

NEW YORK (AP) — Your first thought after hearing that crude oil prices are falling may be that gasoline and heating oil are sure to be cheaper. That's probably right, but those prices are unlikely to fall as fast as they rose in the 1970s.

Several major oil producers, including Nigeria and Great Britain, have cut their crude oil prices drastically. The $5.50-a-barrel reduction by Nigeria was one of the biggest cuts on record, and it sets the stage for a broader drop in prices.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain why consumer prices are unlikely to fall as much as might be justified by the declining price of crude oil:

Q. Who sets crude oil prices?

A. In the United States the price of crude oil is determined mainly by the forces of supply and demand. An oil refiner, which buys crude oil as the raw material for making gasoline, diesel fuel, home heating oil and other oil products, will declare a "posted price" for crude oil. That is the price the refiner is willing to pay an oil producer. For the standard grade of U.S. crude, that price currently is $30 a barrel. But if, for example, overall demand for U.S. crude went up and the supply went down, the refiner might be forced by competition to offer a higher price.

Q. How does it work elsewhere?

A. In the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which sells about two-fifths of the world's oil, the price is set by the governments of each country. Theoretically, OPEC prices are determined by a schedule that each government has agreed on. In practice, few if any members are adhering to that schedule. Instead they are setting their prices in accordance with market forces, which means they are beginning to recognize that their prices are too high.

Q. How is that translated into lower gasoline prices?

A. If this were a perfect world, you could figure that each $1-a-barrel drop in crude prices would result in about a 2½-cent-a-gallon drop in retail gasoline prices. That is a simple calculation based on the fact that there are 42 gallons in each barrel. But the retail gasoline market is not so simple. There are other forces at work that make any simple calculations useless.

Q. What are those special forces?

A. In a word, competition. The retail gasoline market is more competitive than it was when oil and gasoline prices skyrocketed in 1974 and again in 1979-80. During those years the government had price controls in place. Those controls were removed in January 1981, leaving the forces of supply and demand to operate more freely.

Q. What does that mean for gasoline prices now?

A. It means that competition has forced gasoline dealers to cut their prices more during the past year or so than would normally be justified by the level of crude oil prices. Dealers saw their sales falling, not because their prices were economically "too high," but because people were using less gasoline. That was due partly to the recession, partly to the greater fuel efficiency of automobiles and partly as a lingering reaction to the huge fuel price increases of the 1970s.

Q. Won't the dealers and refiners be forced to cut their prices more now?

A. That depends in part on demand. The current level of gasoline prices reflects a crude oil price of about $30 a barrel. So if demand picks up a bit, refiners and dealers might not cut their prices at all even as OPEC prices fall from the official level of $34 a barrel. Instead the dealers and refiners might keep the savings for themselves.

Q. Are there other factors that influence gasoline prices?

A. One of the most important is politics. Gasoline prices vary around the nation in part because each state can set its own tax on gasoline. Also, the federal government takes a tax bite, and on April 1 the current 4-cent-a-gallon federal tax goes up to 9 cents. Because the tax is levied on refiners, it is impossible to know how much will be passed on to consumers.

Q. What about prices of other products such as heating oil?

A. Retail prices of heating oil have been falling rapidly in recent months, mainly because a warmer-than-usual winter has depressed demand. Any further decreases probably would not be large, unless crude oil prices fall several dollars a barrel.

Foreign Policy Draws Focus

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is in the midst of a series of steps that are turning a spotlight on his foreign policy.

During his first two years in office, Reagan's focus was clearly on the economy, while he also made quick foreign trips and occasional speeches on arms control, Central America, and the U.S. relationship with the European allies.

In recent weeks, there has been a surge in public diplomatic activity, marked by foreign travel by Reagan's advisers and speeches by the president.

Reagan devoted one of the longest speeches of his presidency, with the exception of his State of the Union addresses, to foreign policy Tuesday. And he is likely to turn to the same subject next week when he addresses the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco.

Foreign policy? "Some people have said we don't have one," the president said, as he took the delegates to the American Legion annual conference on a "round-the-world tour of trouble spots."

Acknowledging that controversies and misunderstandings have touched his policies, the president said Vice President George Bush, who made a 12-day, seven-nation European tour, "helped clear up many misconceptions about American policy."

Others who have just come back from overseas trips include Secretary of State George Shultz, who went west, to China; U.N. Ambassador Jeane S. Kirkpatrick, who went south, to Latin America; and William Clark, the national security adviser, who made a quick trip to Europe for conferences with the U.S. arms control negotiators.

Tuesday's speech was intended as a midterm review of the president's accomplishments in foreign policy.

Referring to the travels of his aides, the president said the reports they brought back were encouraging, marking "substantial progress."

He said that in 1980, "the international situation ... was truly alarming for all who cared about America and the cause of peace and freedom."

Then, the president focused on arms control and U.S.-Soviet relations; the ties with China and his commitment to maintaining a relationship with the people of Taiwan; Central America and his promise to "not allow Marxist terrorism and subversion to prevail" there.

And then, to the Middle East.

"This administration is prepared to take all necessary measures to guarantee the security of Israel's northern borders in the aftermath of the complete withdrawal of the Israeli army," the president said.

In saying that, Reagan guaranteed something else: that his spokesmen would have a busy day.

Even before Reagan spoke, but after excerpts from his speech were distributed, the address that was intended to clear up some questions was raising questions instead.

The bottom line was this: Reagan was offering a guarantee of secure northern borders, but that did not mean U.S. troops were being offered.

As Larry Speakes, the chief deputy White House press secretary, put it, "the president was underscoring the continued U.S. concern for Israeli security in the context of the ways to achieve the withdrawal of foreign forces" from Lebanon.

Strength For Today

Someone once suggested to the English writer and poet, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, that children should not be prejudiced in favor of religion. Their minds should be kept open and when they reached the age of discretion they should have all religions presented to them so that they could make a rational choice.

Coleridge's response was to take the person making the suggestion into a garden which had been allowed to make its own choice of what it would grow. It was, of course, full of weeds. Coleridge then declared that, as far as he was concerned, he preferred to impose his prejudice for roses and strawberries upon the garden.

We can imagine what would be the result if we adopted a "hands off" approach to our growing children. Suppose we gave them no training or advice regarding the social amenities, or morality, or basic honesty.

The end result would be to build bigger jails for the children, and more psychiatric wards for the parents.

Taking The 'Awe' Out Of Audit

NEW YORK (AP) — Nothing awes the typical taxpayer more than the thought of an audit.

When the annual ritual of filing one's income tax return is completed, there should be time for a moment of quiet satisfaction. Perhaps in a few weeks there will even be a refund on its way.

But the occasion can be marred by a nagging doubt. Maybe one's annual reckoning with the Internal Revenue Service is not over with after all. Maybe one day, months from now, there will be an audit.

"Most people become very uneasy, to say the least, when they receive any communication from the IRS, much less a notice that they are to be audited," says Matthew Bender & Co., a New York publisher of legal and tax information, in a booklet entitled, "How Not to Fear the IRS Audit."

The firm says audits — actually called "examinations" by the tax-collecting agency — are indeed nothing to be taken lightly. But it also argues that it is neither necessary nor wise to get panicky about the subject.

No tax return, no matter how simple and straightforward, is absolutely immune to audit. However, Matthew Bender points out, the statistical chances of any particular return's being singled out are small. In 1981, just one out of every 56 returns was audited.

Some taxpayers are much more likely targets than others. "The more you make, the greater the chance there is for an audit," the firm notes.

Other common red flags at the IRS: tax-shelter investments; returns carrying the name of a professional preparer who is on the agency's "problem" list; deductions for travel, entertainment, business use of a car, casualty losses or a home office; barter income, and losses from what the government might see as a hobby rather than a bona fide business.

An audit may not necessarily be a grueling, weeks-long inquisition into every entry on the entire return. Some are confined to single points which the agent involved thinks may be questionable.

Furthermore, not every audit turns its target into a pauper overnight. Matthew Bender points out that on the 1981 scorecard, 21 percent of audits resulted in no change of the total tax due. In another 6 percent, it was found that the taxpayer had actually paid too much.

After an audit, there are several avenues of appeal you can pursue. In rare cases, these can lead as far as the Supreme Court.

If you have committed a fraud such as failing to report a huge amount of hidden income, the firm says, there is reason to fear an audit greatly. If the government can prove fraud, it may be able to exact heavy penalties over and above the tax due, plus interest — and seek a criminal conviction involving more fines and a possible prison sentence.

Otherwise, the booklet advises, "Don't lose your cool. Remember, it's only money. We don't mean this in a facetious manner, but in the sense that you don't have to worry that the first agent is trying to put you in jail. He is only trying to determine your correct tax liability."

"The more calm and collected you are in handling the audit the better the results. If you can't trust yourself to handle it in this detached manner, then by all means get outside assistance."

Forbis returned to the bus station at 310 W. Fifth St. and called police.

Piedmont Airline Cuts Fares On Its Flights From Kinston

KINSTON — Piedmont Airlines, which has four departures daily from the Kinston Airport, has announced a reduction in fares beginning March 3.

Piedmont spokesmen said beginning next Thursday, the fares from Kinston, as well as airports at Jacksonville, Fayetteville and Wilmington, will be the same as fares charged for flights from Raleigh-Durham Airport.

At present the lowest weekday roundtrip fare to Washington, D.C., from Kinston is $125. The new weekday low will be $118.

The lowest weekend roundtrip to Washington is now $148, while the new low will be $78.

The lowest roundtrip fare from Kinston to Atlanta will be $138 as compared to $191 at the present time, while the low weekday roundtrip to New York will be $10 less than the present $180. The lowest weekend roundtrip to New York, now $203, will be cut to $110.

Rosalyn Chostner said from Piedmont's home office in Winston-Salem today that the changes are being made because many customers in the east have found it cheaper to drive to Raleigh-Durham to catch flights.

"We want to keep travelers from the Kinston-Goldsboro-Greenville area at the Kinston airport where it's more convenient for eastern North Carolina travelers," she said. "We have a big investment in eastern North Carolina and it is a very important market to us."

Piedmont serves 21 different states, plus the District of Columbia, and employs about 8,000 persons, half of them in North Carolina.

Don McGuire, Piedmont's vice president for public affairs, said the airline hopes to make up for the loss in revenue by attracting more customers to Kinston and the other eastern airports.

The new lower rates will apply only on flights to cities served directly by Piedmont. Charges for flights originating on Piedmont but connecting to cities not served by the airline may not be the same as fares from Raleigh-Durham.

Rescue Twelve From Avalanche

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rescuers dug out twelve survivors, including two women in labor, from an avalanche that buried a ski resort and chalets in the Cedars of Lebanon mountains, police said today.

It was not known whether the avalanche had buried any other people, police said.

But 10 frostbitten Syrian soldiers said Thursday that 135 of their comrades, who disappeared a week ago when the blizzard struck, had perished in snow 19 feet deep, police reported.

The missing soldiers were presumed dead, said police, after hearing accounts survivors told inhabitants of the village of Ainata, 50 miles north of Beirut. Lebanese army helicopters and civil defense rescuers found no trace of the missing Syrians after a week's search.

At least 66 people, excluding the soldiers, have died in the worst blizzard in 40 years in northern Lebanon.

"It is snowing heavily up there," said Capt. Youssef Atrishi, a Lebanese army spokesman. "They open a road and manage to advance a bit only to find that road had been blocked behind them."

The snowfall was preventing helicopters from making relief flights and slowing land rescue, Atrishi said.

Earlier, U.S. Marines helicopters brought canned food, milk, bread and heating oil to Kartaba, 31 miles northeast of Beirut.

Italian and French soldiers also helped the Lebanese. The Western troops are in Lebanon to monitor the withdrawal of Israeli forces, who invaded Beirut last June.

The avalanche on Thursday buried the Grand Cedars Hotel in Bsheri, the provincial capital of the Cedars region, and a cluster of houses and chalets.

Police today retracted an earlier statement that 10 people perished in the avalanche on the 6,400-foot-high slopes.

Army helicopters flew the avalanche survivors to hospitals. Among those rescued were two pregnant women, who were in labor and needed Caesarean sections, said police, who didn't know if the operations had been performed.

Meanwhile, snow kept falling, and the army said motorists could not drive on any roads and highways in the northern and central mountains.

Solar Fraction

The solar fraction for this area Thursday, as computed by the East Carolina University Department of Physics, was 1. This means that a solar water heater could have provided 1 percent of your hot water needs.

The Forecast For Saturday, February 26

Low Temperatures

WEATHER FORECAST — The National Weather Service forecasts sunny skies for most of the nation on Saturday. Cold weather is predicted across the northern tier and mild weather through the southern half. Rain is indicated for the Pacific Northwest. (AP Laserphoto)

By The Associated Press

The storm system pulling cold air southward into North Carolina and bringing some snowfall, sparked a travelers advisory today for the northern mountains, the National Weather Service reported.

The chilly air will be supplied by a large high pressure system that was centered northwest of Lake Superior. As the cold air spills over the mountains, occasional snow will fall in the northern mountains where accumulations of up to 3 inches are likely.

East of the mountains, most of the rain will end before cold air can enter the storms circulation. But in the northeastern corner of the state, the rain was expected to become mixed with or change to snow before ending later today.

By tonight the storm will be moving northeast away from the area as the cold high pressure system begins to dominate North Carolina's weather.

Lows tonight will dip into the 20s and there will even be some teens mainly in the mountains.

Mostly sunny weather will return to North Carolina Saturday, but there will be a few clouds along the north coast. Highs will be in the 40s except for 30s in the northern mountains and near 50 in the southeast.

Along the coast, a small craft advisory will be needed later today due to northwest winds which will increase to 15 to 25 knots and gusty.

Bill Would Change Health Laws

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State control over migrant housing, adulterated consumer goods and communicable diseases would be tightened under a bill rewriting North Carolina's public health laws.

The bill, filed Thursday in both houses of the General Assembly, incorporates suggestions by state Health Director Dr. Ronald Levine and commissions that studied the laws, said Sen. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland, a sponsor of the measure.

"This hasn't been done in 25 years, and unless something controversial comes up, it should make it through," Harris said.

Levine said one potentially controversial issue — the control of midwives — will be covered under a separate bill. But there is room for debate on many of the changes recommended, he said.

"My experience has been that any time anything of this magnitude goes before the legislature it is open to controversy," he said.

Harris said the Senate version would go to a subcommittee including Sens. Gerry Hancock, D-Durham, William Redman, R-Iredell, Rachel Gray, D-Guilford and Aaron W. Plyler, D-Union.

The bill would let state or local health directors impose administrative penalties for sanitation sewage violations in migrant housing, where formerly they could apply only criminal or injunctive relief.

The bill would also give the Commissioner for Health Services authority over all migrant housing, instead of those housing 10 or more workers under current law.

In addition, the authority to inspect migrant housing would be shifted from state and federal Departments of Labor and the Employment Security Commission to local health departments.

"We thought it was important to prevent overlapping by OSHA (the Occupational Safety and Health Administration), the ESC and local government in that area," Levine said, adding that examining housing of fewer than 10 workers would be a "significant" change.

"There are numerous examples where employers have put six here and four there and so on to avoid coming under the law," he said. "This (bill) will entail considerably more work and the Legislative Study Commission on Migrants recommended appropriations to assist local governments."

While the bill would give local health directors and the secretary of the Department of Human Resources the power to embargo and destroy items that are "adulterated or misbranded" in a way that could cause injury, Levine said the change was not in response to recent tampering with consumer products.

"We just felt it to be necessary for the health agencies to be able to embargo dangerous products," he said.

Stricter rules would be applied to control venereal disease, tuberculosis and rabies if the bill is passed in its present form.

While the old law requires anyone infected with VD to report for diagnosis and treatment, the new law would apply to anyone "reasonably suspected" of having VD. It would also protect confidentiality of VD records, except in cases involving child abuse.

"This is basically conforming with current practice," Levine said. "If an individual diagnosed as having VD reported having sexual contact with another person it is customary to have the other contact examined. The way the law was worded, they didn't have to cooperate."

Anyone suspected of having TB would be examined and treated and the health director would have access to all TB records under the bill. Currently only those who have communicable TB must be examined.

The bill also requires rabies shots for domestic cats.

Among the other changes, the bill:

— Broadens the definition of "mass gathering" and allows the human resources secretary to charge sponsors of such gatherings for the cost of additional police, fire and medical services.

— States that birth, death, marriage and divorce records are not public, limiting access to the subject, family members, attorneys representing the subject or his family, and some researchers.

— Makes the Commission for Health Services the only rule-making authority for public health, removing the rule-making role of the Department of Human Resources.

— Allows the human resources secretary or local health director to inspect premises where imminent danger to public health or environment exists without a warrant.

PEKING (AP) — A small Chinese plastics factory that had lost money for 11 consecutive years, made a profit last year after requiring its 200 workers to buy shares in the plant, the China Daily reports.

The English-language newspaper said the workers receive dividends at the end of a profitable year, but otherwise must bear the losses.

Under the new plan, the paper said, the workers no longer are indifferent to mishandling or theft of factory property.

Farm Bureau Votes 'No' On Changing Program

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Rejecting a proposal by Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C., the North Carolina Farm Bureau Federation's board of directors voted Thursday against any changes in the federal tobacco program this year.

"We oppose any changes in the tobacco program that would affect 1983," said federation President John Sledge. "We suggested that they seek no other changes. It could place the entire tobacco program in jeopardy and we would come out worse."

Rose, who chairs the House Tobacco and Peanut Subcommittee, introduced a bill repealing a new fee on tobacco allotment holders because he said several landowners pass the fee on to growers through higher cash rents.

Growers complained unless changes are made, they'll have to pay the 7-cents-per-pound government fee twice this year — when they pay higher cash rents, and when they take the tobacco to market, Rose said.

His proposal was sparked after Congress last July passed a law creating an assessment on farmers to pay for future losses in the federal tobacco program.

Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green Thursday urged the federation to outline a plan of action to fight changes in the federal tobacco program and decreases in grain prices.

"I lamented the fact we are now faced with a 14 cents a pound assessment for flue-cured tobacco at a time when expenses are depressing prices for sweet potatoes, corn and soybeans," Green said after his speech.

"I don't know anything we can do at the state level about grain. Surely for the tobacco situation to improve we will have to export leaf and we face fierce competition from foreign competition. We are losing more and more to exports," he said.

"I advised them to work closely with each other, and offer the best advice they can so we can relay their consensus. The economy is the major culprit. I don't know anything else we can do except conserve and make sure we don't diminish our level of service."

Ban Lifted; Shellfish Harvest May Resume

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — State officials will reopen some of North Carolina's oyster and clam beds Saturday after banning shellfishing a week ago.

The beds were closed when high levels of fecal coliform bacteria were discovered in water around the shellfish beds. The bacteria, which is concentrated in clams and oysters, creates serious illness when ingested.

State officials say they are relieved the first statewide ban on shellfishing is over.

"For the fishermen, it was like being on an unpaid furlough," said Jay Langfelder of the state Department of Natural Resources and Community Development. "They depend on that $7 million dollar a year industry to pay their car payments and mortgages. It's certainly been an economic burden on them."

The high bacteria readings were blamed on heavy runoff from streams and rivers into the coastal sounds. Langfelder said that indicates the need for strong water quality standards in the state.

"The water standards do have an economic impact," Langfelder said. "That's why we're fighting proposals to loosen federal water quality requirements."

Langfelder said there had been some discussion of extending the shellfishing season by a week to make up for the loss during the ban. But he said any decision on the season would have to be made by the Marine Fisheries Commission.

Bob Benton, supervisor of the Shellfish Sanitation program of the state Department of Health Services, said Thursday he had recommended beds north and east of Beaufort be reopened.

"Everything will still be closed from Morehead City south," Benton said, "but we'll be doing extensive sampling trying to determine if any of those beds can be reopened."

The bacteria levels did not climb as high as state officials had originally expected, he added.

"It didn't get as bad as we thought it would," Benton said. "There were some bad spots originally, but they cleared up in large bodies of water."

Seeking Erase 'Contributory Negligence' System

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina would join the growing number of states doing away with the "antiquated" contributory negligence system under legislation introduced in the General Assembly.

Under a bill filed by Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, the state would adopt a comparative fault claims system. A similar bill to be introduced by Rep. Paul Pulley, D-Durham, has collected signatures of at least a third of the House membership.

Existing laws allow accident victims to recover damages

New Hurdle For Safe Roads Act

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt's drunken driving bill, already facing possible roadblocks in the state Senate, encountered another when Gov. Jimmy Green asked the Insurance Committee chairman to study it.

In a letter, Green told Sen. Cecil Jenkins, D-Cabarrus, to "carefully review the Governor's Safe Roads Bill to determine what impact it will have on the insurance needs of our citizens, and then determine what legislation, if any, will best suit those needs."

It was unclear from Green's letter, dated Feb. 23, whether he intended formally to refer the bill to the Insurance Committee. A request to interview Green was denied Thursday afternoon.

Senate sources said the move suggested the bill was headed for weeks of further committee perusal, dashing hopes of proponents who are hoping it will reach the Senate floor soon.

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, bill sponsor and chairman of the Senate Judiciary III Committee which approved an amended version last week, said he opposed sending the bill to the Insurance Committee.

"I would not oppose anyone's inspecting the bill, be it an individual or a group," he said. "But I would definitely be against sending it to another committee. It's been to enough committees and it's time to get it to the floor."

Brent Hackney, Hunt's deputy press secretary, said he wasn't worried by Green's request.

"The lieutenant governor is on record as supporting the Safe Roads Act, and we're sure he will do all he can to get the bill passed as quickly as possible," said Hackney.

The bill would rewrite drunken driving laws, creating a new "driving while impaired" offense to replace driving under the influence and existing charges. It would require sentencing hearings, eliminate plea bargaining, and raise the minimum age for drinking wine and beer from 18 to 19.

Introduced Jan. 12, the opening day of the legislative only if they can show that the injuries were entirely the fault of the individuals or businesses they're suing.

Attacks on the system were renewed recently when a jury ruled against a Raleigh woman whose husband was killed as the truck he was driving to a garage for repairs accelerated uncontrollably and crashed.

The woman sued the automobile dealer, alleging that her husband had taken the truck there several times to have the accelerator fixed. The jury ruled that the dealer had been negligent but that the victim also had been negligent by driving a defective truck.

Thus, the existing contributory negligence system prevented the widow from being awarded damages.

Under the Barnes and Pulley bills, a victim's damages may be reduced if he was partly at fault, but he still can collect if he can prove the other party was mostly to blame.

The existing system "is antiquated and lengthens the court process," said Barnes. "We very much need to adopt this new system, which most states have already done."

Pulley introduced a similar bill last year. It passed the House but lost in the Senate by four votes.

In other legislative action Thursday:

Victim Compensation

A proposal to create a state system for compensating crime victims was delayed when the House Finance Committee decided another panel needed to study it first.

The bill, introduced by Rep. Tom Womble, D-Forsyth, drew praise from Finance Committee members. But the committee voted to recommend that it be referred to a judiciary committee, which could examine its legal aspects before sending it back to Finance for consideration of fiscal matters.

"I had thought that this might happen, and I'm not worried," Womble said in an interview. "Victim compensation is an idea whose time has come, and with the support it's getting throughout the nation, I'm confident it will pass as many committees as take it up."

The bill would create a Crime Victims Compensation Commission within the state Department of Crime Control and Public Safety, which would be supported by raising criminal court costs by $2 to $5.

The commission would be in charge of processing and investigating claims for compensation from crime victims.

Awards would range from $100 per case to $20,000 per case and would average $3,000, Womble said. Based on estimates of 26,000 violent crimes and 364 claims per year, he said the program's annual cost will be $1,092,000.

In other legislative action Thursday:

Full Retirement

Sen. Cecil Jenkins, D-Cabarrus, introduced a bill that would allow state employees and teachers to retire with full benefits after 27 years of service instead of 30 years, the present requirement.

Jenkins said the change was suggested to him by state workers who said it would help compensate for the lack of a pay raise. Many teachers and state employees suffer from burnout and would appreciate being able to retire earlier than they do now, he said.

Jenkins added that the bill could provide an alternative to laying off state employees if the need arises.

Minors-Alcohol

Everyone buying alcohol from retail establishments would be required to produce proof of age under a bill introduced by Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee.

"I think it will help in-house enforcement of the legal drinking age," Wicker said. "If they (minors) were required to produce an ID before they purchased it, it would deter them."

He said enforcement has been especially difficult for clerks in convenience stores who may be confronted by teens trying to buy beer or wine late at night.

"The clerks never ask for identification, maybe because they're scared or because they don't want to inconvenience them," Wicker added.

Wicker proposed that anyone who sells alcohol to someone who does not produce proper identification would be guilty of a misdemeanor and could face up to two years in prison.

Education Review

Sen. James D. Speed, D-Franklin, filed a bill seeking a review of North Carolina's education laws.

Speed said statutes governing education are often contradictory or superfluous. If the review finds it necessary, the General Assembly may end up recodifying all the laws.

Ridge Law Effort Curtails Project

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) —

The South Carolina developers of a 10-story condominium complex atop Little Sugar Mountain in Avery County have presold all but a dozen of the 320 units, but plans for further development have been halted.

There is "no chance" U.S. Capital Corp., of Columbia, S.C., will build beyond the 320 units at the Sugar Top complex near Banner Elk, said company President Don Tomlin in a telephone interview Thursday.

"We're not going to run a bunch of trucks up there and start something new," he said. "We just want to build what we started."

Tomlin said the prospect of exclusive living in the mountains spurred sales of the condominiums.

Harry Lyons, the firm's representative in Banner Elk, said Tuesday only 12 of the 320 planned units were left for presale. They range in cost from $119,000 to $150,000.

Avery County residents who support a Ridge Law had hoped to prevent U.S. Capital Corp. from starting construction on more units at the complex before a moratorium on building

There are now 240 units under construction — all that Ridge Law proponents hoped would be built, said Avery County Commissioner Charles VonCanon. Not even a foundation exists yet for the remaining 80, he said.

Tomlin said the company holds an option to build atop Big Sugar Mountain, and had planned to build another condominium there. But he said that plan has been canceled in light of the Ridge Law movement.

Construction of the 10-story, $22 million building on a ski country mountaintop sparked a rush in several counties and the Legislature to regulate ridge-top construction of buildings over three stories tall. One environmental group is calling for a regional Ridge Law to be adopted by legislatures in several Appalachian states.

Ridge Law proponents say such construction is an eyesore, inaccessible to emergency vehicles in bad weather and hazardous to air traffic. They also say mountain-top construction poses an undue burden on municipal waste treatment and water-pumping ability.

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

THERE WERE GIANTS IN THE LAND

THROUGHOUT THE OLD TESTAMENT THERE ARE SEVERAL REFERENCES TO GIANTS AS INDIVIDUALS AND AS A RACE. ONE RACE WERE THE ANAKIMS WHO HAD CITIES IN CANAAN. WHEN HEBRON WAS CAPTURED BY THE HEBREWS THE ANAKIMS ESCAPED DESTRUCTION BY FLEEING TO THE CITIES OF THE PHILISTINES. BUT UNTIL THAT TIME THEY RULED THE LAND, TAXING THE OTHER INHABITANTS AND, IN GENERAL, CONTROLLING THEIR LIVES. THE NOTORIOUS GOLIATH OF GATH, WHO WAS KILLED BY DAVID, WAS ONE OF THE ANAKIMS. AFTER THIS INCIDENT WE HAVE NO FURTHER RECORD OF THE GIANTS.

Healing Of Old Split In Sight

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer
At the place in Georgia where they parted company with their Northern brethren over slavery 121 years ago, Southern Presbyterians this week turned a corner that promises to put the two branches of the church together again.

It was at Augusta, Ga., on Dec. 4, 1861, at the start of the Civil War, and at Macon, Ga., at war's end in 1865, that the fracturing occurred, and there, the Augusta-Macon Presbytery decided to mend it.

The decision by that area unit of the Presbyterian Church in the USA gave the Southern denomination the needed three-fourths of favorable presbytery votes — the 46th of 61 — to ratify merger with the United Presbyterian Church.

The reunion, rejected by the Southerners in previous tries and the subject of long, rocky and uncertain negotiations, now appears a foregone conclusion, even though some area units have yet to vote.

Already, by the decision Tuesday on the old battleground, the rapprochement was confirmed. The larger, more nationally spread Northern branch previously had achieved its needed two-thirds ratification majority.

That had been expected. But in the Southern branch, the outcome was considered a cliffhanger. Until Tuesday, only 40 presbyteries had approved and eight disapproved.

But on that one day, six of the area units in several Southern states voted, all of them favorably, and the final one to do so was the Augusta-Macon meeting where lay and clergy representatives voted 50-15 in favor.

After that clinching vote, a long-time, retired clergyman, the Rev. Dan Churkton of Augusta, remarked that he had expected a lot of funerals before the step finally was taken, but he was glad he had lived to see it.

The mood of the gathering was described as subdued, serious, without cheers of victory or Rebel yells, but a sense of a new road being taken.

It was at Augusta, a few months after the Confederate States attacked Fort Sumter at Charleston, S.C., that the Southern church separated as the Presbyterian Church of the Confederacy. At Macon, after the war, the denomination was renamed and the rift perpetuated in peacetime.

With the official authorization for reunion now achieved, the event is to be formalized June 7-17 in Atlanta. There assemblies of the two denominations will meet separately for three days, winding up their business as separate entities.

Then after a celebratory parade and joint service of Holy Communion, the two assemblies will move together for a week of joint proceedings as one church.

It will have 3.2 million members, 2.4 million from the Northern, more generally spread body, and 840,000 from the Southern denomination, making the new church the fifth ranking denomination in size in the country.

Larger bodies are the Roman Catholic Church, with about 50 million U.S. members, the Southern Baptists, totalling 13.7 million, the United Methodists, numbering 9.6 million and the mainly black National Baptist Convention of 5.5 million.

Efforts at reuniting the divided Presbyterians has gone on periodically through much of the present century, previously without success, sometimes approved by Southern assemblies, but turned down by area presbyteries.

The last time that happened was in 1958 and at the time, the aftermath of failure was so bitter that both sides reasoned it was best to avoid the issue for at least 10 years.

The present effort began in 1969 when a joint commission was authorized by both assemblies to draw up a plan. Through 13 years of work, that commission has been jointly headed by the Rev. J. Randolph Taylor of Charlotte, N.C., and the Rev. Robert Lamar of Albany, N.Y.

The plan, repeatedly drafted and revised through the years, finally won approval by both assemblies

Misogyny Said A Fact In U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — A Lutheran pastor in charge of a study of women in the church says misogyny — contempt for women — is a "pervasive cultural fact" in the United States.

The Rev. Paul Hinlicky, who heads the study being made for the Lutheran Church in America's 1984 convention, says the root of the attitude is a revolt against "our humanity and creativeness and therefore against God."

RESETTLEMENT AID
KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — The United States is giving $600,000 to help resettle returning Ugandans who fled to neighboring Zaire and Sudan during the 1978-79 war that overthrew dictator Idi Amin, a Ugandan official says.

Centenarian Has Marriage Goal

MONROVIA, Md. (AP) — At age 100, Gurney Brashear still looks forward to hand-spading his strawberry patch, fishing in his favorite place, and getting married again.

Brashear, who turned 100 on Jan. 29, has eight children, 36 grandchildren, 63 great grandchildren and 11 great-great grandchildren — but he'd like to have a third wife, if the right woman comes along.

"I don't have a special woman in mind, just a good woman," said Brashear. "You tell a woman if she wants to get married just to last year, thereby relaying it to the area presbyteries for rejection or acceptance, that last hurdle now crossed.

Staying apart, says the Southern church's chief administrator, the Rev. James Andrews, is "against the nature of the Gospel."

Sets Provisions For Resignation

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Roman Catholicism's new code of canon law provides the first specific provisions for a pope to resign.

Although the pope's right to resign has been generally recognized in the past, the new Canon 332 spells it out as follows:

"Should it happen that the Roman pontiff resigns his office, for validity it is required that the resignation be freely made and duly manifested, but not that it be accepted by someone."

That is from unofficial translations of the Latin text. The law is still to be issued in English.

Anson Dam Considered

WADESBORO, N.C. (AP) — Boise Cascade Corp. has filed for a permit to study whether a hydroelectric dam on the Pee Dee River in Anson County would be economically and environmentally sound, says a company spokesman.

Doug Bartels, a spokesman for the Idaho timber firm's headquarters in Boise, said Boise Cascade applied for a permit from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Boise Cascade owns 11,883 acres of timber in Anson County. Building a dam would create a lake spanning nearly 3,000 acres — about a fifth the size of High Rock Lake, the largest of six major lakes on the Yadkin-Pee Dee.

The earthen dam, 40 feet high and 1,700 feet long, would be just upstream of the South Carolina line, in one of the most scenic stretches of the 400-mile river.

Anson County manager Taron Jones said he thought most people in the county would welcome the dam project.

Robert Batton, president of the Anson County Chamber of Commerce, said the chamber probably will come out in favor of the dam.

Reward For Waste Role

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Burlington Industries will be rewarded next month for its efforts to recover dangerous wastes.

Governor Jim Hunt will present the company with the first North Carolina Governor's Award for Excellence in Outstanding Achievement in Waste Management.

Burlington was one of nearly 20 companies that were nominated for the award, designed to encourage North Carolina hazardous waste generators to find ways to reduce, treat or recycle problem wastes.

The Governor's Waste Management Board chose Burlington, which took its wastewater, ran it through a recovery process and used the yielded solvents to fuel the recovery system as well as provide steam for plant operations.

"Companies seem to be very excited about it," said Cathy Visocki, assistant to the board's executive director. "What's really important about this project is that Burlington not only is recovering a hazardous waste, but it's saving money doing it."

"That should send a signal to a lot of other companies that there is money to be made in this (hazardous wastes) while they protect public health and the environment."

Linda West, the board's new executive director, said a recent study of the state's hazardous wastes indicates the most serious volume problem is untreated or "wasted" solvents.

Tar Heels Rip Wake, 100-85

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer
CHAPEL HILL (AP) — Coach Dean Smith wouldn't point a finger at those responsible for 11th-ranked North Carolina's recent three-game losing streak, but he found plenty of people to praise when the Tar Heels ended that slide.

With Michael Jordan's 22 points leading the way, North Carolina blasted injury-riddled Wake Forest 100-85 in an Atlantic Coast Conference showdown Thursday night. Not only did the victory break the streak, but it also kept the Tar Heels in a tie with Virginia for first place at 9-2.

"We did things this team is capable of doing," said Smith of his 22-6 Tar Heels. "All of our starters played well, as did Steve Hale, Curtis Hunter and Warren Martin."

Sam Perkins followed Jordan with 20 points, while Jim Braddock added 19 and Matt Doherty scored 14. Smith said Perkins might have come up with more.

"Perkins was almost too unselfish, but our whole team was unselfish," said Smith. "Braddock did a good job of handling the ball and Matt's passing was excellent."

Smith said the team had several good practice sessions prior to the Wake Forest game, but he noted that the practices were meant for improvement and not punishment.

"I'm not blaming the players for what had happened prior to this game," Smith said. "I won't tell you who I blame for the loss at North Carolina State."

With the score tied at 12, a Jordan tap-in at the 15:24 mark ignited a 12-2 Tar Heel run which put the Demon Deacons out of contention.

"We had intensity," said Jordan. "We went out there and played good fundamental basketball for 40 minutes and the score showed it."

Pirates Host Seahawks; Seek Winning Season

East Carolina's Pirates seek to insure a winning season Saturday night when they play host to the UNC-Wilmington Seahawks in a 7:30 p.m. game in Minges Coliseum.

East Carolina comes into the game with a 13-12 record and has one more game remaining following the Wilmington contest. That game will be next Thursday against Penn State-Behrend.

The meeting of the two teams will be the second this season. Earlier, East Carolina rallied from behind to take a 50-47 overtime victory over the Seahawks in Wilmington. That game, too, was played without the services of Charles Green, who has since returned to the lineup for the Pirates.

The Seahawks, however, have won their last two games played in Minges Coliseum, losing 58-49, last season and 57-55 the year before.

UNC-W brings an 11-13 record into the game, having beaten Campbell, 63-47, in a home contest on Thursday. East Carolina will be coming in following a loss to James Madison, 76-56, in its final ECAC-South game of the regular season.

Coach Charlie Harrison described the play of his Pirates as 'emotionless' against Madison — an unusual characteristic for the 1982-83 ECU unit.

Former Washington High School player Shawn Williams is the key man for the Seahawks, scoring at a 15.9 clip on the season. He's also averaging 5.1 rebounds a game. The 6-4 senior guard scored 18 points in the first meeting of the two schools.

The Seahawks have two other players in double figures also. Tony Anderson, a 6-0 junior guard is hitting 11.2 points per game and has a season high of 24. Carlos Kelly is a 6-4 junior forward with a 10.5 average and a 5.6 rebound average.

The other two starters are expected to be Terry Shiver, a 6-4 junior forward with a 6.5 scoring mark and a team-leading 6.3 rebound average; and Scott Prudhoe, a 6-7 senior center, averaging 6.5 points per game.

Lady Pirates On Final Road Trip

East Carolina's Lady Pirates, seeking to shore up a winning record for the season, and keep their hopes of a post-season ECAC tournament berth alive, hit the road for their next two games, Saturday and Sunday.

Saturday afternoon at 2 p.m., the Lady Pirates visit George Mason, then take on George Washington in a Sunday afternoon game, also at 2 p.m.

The Sunday game with GWU will be carried over the Pirate Sports Network, with air time at 1:50 p.m.

East Carolina enters the two-game road series with an 11-11 mark and a sweep of the two contests would insure a winning record for the campaign of 1982-83. Following the two contest, they have one more game remaining, a home stand against UNC Charlotte on March 5.

"Every game is important from now on," Coach Cathy Andruzzi said. "How well we do in those will determine whether we get an ECAC bid or not. It will be a real important test and challenge. We need to play good basketball with guts and intensity."

George Mason entered the week with a 10-11 record following a 77-66 win over Liberty Baptist on Tuesday night.

The Lady Patriots are led by their 6-2 junior forward Jeanie Daunoras, hitting 19.3 points per game. She's also leading the team in rebounding with a 9.0 mark.

Valerie Douglas, a 5-11 junior center, is scoring 13.9 points a game and hauling 8.5 rebounds, while 5-10 senior guard Norma Horne has a 11.3 scoring average. The other starters are expected to be 6-2 freshman forward Tracey Martin, 9.6 scoring and 8.4 rebound average; and Linda Jones, a 5-6 sophomore guard, averaging 6.9 points a game.

George Washington, meanwhile, is 8-16 following a loss to James Madison earlier this week. The Colonials are led by 5-10 freshman forward Kelly Ballentine with a 20.89 average. She is the only player in double figures. Other starters are expected to be 5-9 freshman forward Ruth Moses, 4.7 ppg; 6-0 senior center Anne Markle, 8.9 ppg; 5-7 freshman guard Patty Kinghorn, 8.3 ppg; and 5-8 sophomore guard Kathy Marshall, 7.9 ppg. Markle is the leading rebounder with an 8.3 average.

East Carolina, as they have been all year, is led by 6-0 senior forward Mary Denker, averaging 21.2 points a game and 7.4 rebounds. Sophomore center Darlene Chaney, 6-2, is the team's leading rebounder with an 8.4 average, and is the second leading active scorer with a 9.7 average.

She's followed by freshman forward Sylvia Bragg at 9.0 points a game.

The ECAC will hold a post-season tournament for women, it has been announced, and ECU is hoping to become one of the teams involved. Plans for that event, however, are still uncertain as are the number of teams to be selected.

Harrison expects no easy game for the Pirates. "There haven't been any easy games for us," he said. "We've got to play better than (we did against Madison) in these last two games if we have any hopes of winning."

The Pirates will close out the regular season in their Thursday meeting with Penn State-Behrend, then will enter the ECAC-South's post-season tournament in Richmond on March 10-12. The winner of that event receives an automatic bid into the NCAA's tournament field.

Those were the words of Ayden-Grifton coach Bob Murphy after his team lost to North Pitt in the semifinals Thursday night. The Chargers could do little right and the Panthers could do little wrong on this night as North Pitt advanced into tonight's finals against South West Edgecombe with a 64-35 win.

SouthWest Edgecombe defeated Southern Nash, 59-46, in the girls' semifinal and will play C.B. Aycock for the championship tonight at 7:00. The winner will be the top seed in next week's District II Tournament.

Ayden-Grifton had trouble early, as it could only manage two points in the first period. The Chargers only totaled five in the third period and were outscored by 14 in the final quarter.

Ayden-Grifton shot 29% (14-48) from the floor while North Pitt hit on 45% (25-56) of their shots, led by Greg Hines with 18 points. Dennis Bradley had 13 and Eriley had 10 for the Panthers.

Redskin Teams Advance

ROANOKEVILLE — Roanoke High School, winners in both the boys' and girls' regular season championships in the Northeastern Conference, drew a step closer to the league's tournament titles last night with a pair of wins.

The Roanoke boys disposed of fourth-seeded Tarboro, 70-52, while the girls downed number four Edenton, 43-27. The wins push the Redskin teams into the finals of the tournament on Saturday night.

Their opponents will be known tonight when number two Tarboro and number three Plymouth meet in the girls' contest, and when number two Plymouth and number three Bertie collide for the boys' other final berth.

Roanoke's boys doubled the score on Tarboro in the first period of the game, taking an 18-9 lead by the end of the first eight minutes. The Redskins were never headed after that. They outscored the Vikings, 23-15, in the second period and pushed out into a 41-24 lead at the half.

Tarboro tried to rally in the third period, outthitting Roanoke, 15-10. That cut the lead back to 51-39. A 19-13 advantage by the Redskins in the final quarter, however, sewed up the victory for Roanoke.

Greg Everett led Roanoke with 24 points, while Ricky Highsmith added 12 and Spencer Bryant had 10. Alonza Williams had 11 and Chris Bryant had 10 for Tarboro.

Roanoke's girls didn't quite match the boys in the first period, pushing out into a 15-9 lead during that frame. The action came close to a total stop in the second period as Edenton outthit Roanoke, 4-3.

Conley inched away in the third quarter, holding a 14-10 advantage. That gave the Valkyries a 42-32 lead to take into the last period. In that, Conley outscored Havelock, 20-13, to wrap up the win.

Darlene Cannon led Conley with 20 points, while Mechio Kornegay had 18 and Irish Barnhill and Karen Barrett each added ten.

Fullerton Ends Nevada-LV's Streak

By The Associated Press
The Runnin' Rebels finally ran out of gas.
After 24 straight victories that shot Nevada-Las Vegas to the top of the Associated Press college basketball poll, the nation's No. 1 team finally went down the tubes with an 86-78 loss to unheralded Fullerton State Thursday night.
"Fullerton State outplayed us the entire game but the big factor was the second half," said UNLV Coach Jerry Tarkanian. "They came down and scored the first two times they had the ball. Fullerton played a great game. Give them all the credit."
Leon Wood scored 21 points and had a game-high 12 assists in leading the Titans over the nation's last major college unbeaten. UNLV, which has already clinched the Pacific Coast Athletic Association title, is 14-1 in the league.

"On the East Coast we're known as Fullerton State Who?" said Fullerton Coach George McQuarn. "But I thought we could play with them all along. I thought if we played hard for 40 minutes we could beat them."
"This is absolutely the biggest win in my career, no question about it. It's definitely the biggest win in our players' careers."
Guard Ricky Mixon added 20 points for Fullerton, which is unbeaten in its 15 home games this season. The Rebels led at halftime 46-41 but the Titans went ahead to stay by outscoring them 17-6 at the outset of the second half.

The Rebels' defeat was one of four upsets of Top Twenty teams Thursday night. Michigan shocked fourth-ranked Indiana 69-56, Michigan State edged No. 15 Ohio State 104-94 in triple overtime and Vanderbilt knocked off 20th-ranked Tennessee 69-68.
Also, No. 8 UCLA routed Southern Cal 77-60; No. 11 North Carolina whipped Wake Forest 100-85; No. 12 Wichita State tripped Creighton 81-71 and No. 17 Iowa hammered Wisconsin 93-63.

Top Ten
Tim McCormick scored 18 points, including nine in a crucial 3:22 stretch during the second half, to lead Michigan's upset of Indiana. Michigan led 41-40 with 13:47 remaining in the game when McCormick sparked an eight-point Michigan outburst by scoring six points to give the Wolverines a 49-40 advantage. The Hoosiers got no closer than five points the rest of the way.
"We had to go with McCormick, with them going with a little lineup," said Michigan Coach Bill Frieder. "I thought he was super. We're doing a better job of getting the ball inside."
Scott Skiles sparked a late rally with six straight free throws in the game's final minute to lead Michigan State over Ohio State. Skiles, who finished with a career-high 35 points, sent the game into the third overtime on a jumper to tie the game at 89-89.

"Apparently he was better than anyone else we've played against," said Ohio State Coach Eldon Miller of Skiles. "It was a great game by Michigan State. They did one or two crucial little things you have to do right to win the ballgames."
Vanderbilt guard Phil Cox sank both ends of a one-and-one free throw opportunity with one second remaining to lift the Commodores over Tennessee. The victory was Vandy's second in a row over their intra-state rival.
"Ballgames are never over until time runs out and you don't win unless you're ahead," Tennessee Coach Don DeVoe said. "They got the ball in the right hands and Cox did what he had to do. We were never in position at the end with much of a lead and time running out."

Darren Daye and Kenny Fields combined for 45 points to lead UCLA over Southern Cal. Daye scored 24 points before suffering a knee injury late in the game and Fields added 21.
Second Ten
Michael Jordan scored 22 points and Sam Perkins added 20 as North Carolina ripped Wake Forest and snapped a three-game losing streak.
"We went back to the fundamentals," Jordan said of this week's practice sessions. "Coach (Dean Smith) felt we weren't fundamentally sound the last three games."
Antoine Carr scored 24 points and Wichita State overcame first-half turnovers to cruise past Creighton. The victory was the 16th straight for the Shockers at home.

Bob Hansen scored a career-high 24 points to lead Iowa past Wisconsin. Hansen became the 16th Iowa player to go over 1,000 points, with 1,007.
"For us, Bobby Hansen came out playing very aggressively," Iowa Coach Lute Olson said as he credited the Hawkeyes' defense for the victory. "If you play great defense, it's amazing how good your offense goes. I think our defense took the wind out of their sails early tonight."
Others
In other action, Melvin Mathis scored 19 points and Drake converted 10 foul shots in the closing four minutes as the Bulldogs downed Indiana State 73-56; LaVerne Evans had 13 points and 13 rebounds as Marshall posted a 69-61 victory over The Citadel; Troy Lee Mikell fired in 25 points to lead East Tennessee State to a 102-83 victory over Western Carolina; John Hempel scored 29 points to lead Massachusetts to an 85-81 victory over Duquesne; Shelton Gibbs scored 24 points and Tommy Best had 19 as St. Peter's defeated Iona 70-69 and David Maxwell scored a career-high 25 points to lead Fordham to a 74-65 victory over Manhattan, the Rams' 12th victory in the last 13 games.

Also, Herbert Johnson scored 29 points as the Tulsa Hurricane came from behind to upend West Texas State 93-86; Jim Stack pumped in 18 points to lead Northwestern to an 83-66 victory over Minnesota; Lamar guard Lamont Robinson scored 12 of his 16 points in the second half to lead the Cardinals over North Texas State 71-63; Brad Duncan scored 15 points to lead Illinois State to a 63-54 victory over Southern Illinois and David Little scored 32 points and Wayman Tisdale added 27 as Oklahoma ripped Nebraska 84-71.

The victory raised Hampton's record to 20-6 while Central went home with an 11-14 mark.

David Binion led the Eagles with 20 points.
Donald Carroll scored 24 points as St. Augustine's overwhelmed Fayetteville State's Broncos.
The Falcons, 21-4 and ranked sixth in the NCAA's Division II, hit 49.3 percent of their field goal attempts while holding Fayetteville to 29.6 percent accuracy.

The Broncos, 9-19, also were outrebounced 61-43.

The Broncos were led by Marvin Hardy's 17 points.
Winston-Salem was led by Cliff Whitfield's 36 points in its victory over Virginia State's Trojans.

It was the 699th career win for Rams Coach Clarence "Big House" Gaines. The Rams stand 15-11 and the Trojans 19-10.

Virginia State grabbed a 29-20 lead in the first half, but the Rams tied it four times before the half ended with Virginia State leading 52-50. The score was tied five times in the second half before the buzzer ended regulation play at a 92-92 deadlock.

In overtime, the Rams went ahead 96-95 when James Mitchell hit two free throws and twice widened the lead to five points before settling for the 103-99 final score.

Winston-Salem also got 26 points from Danny Womack and 15 from Rodger Mason.

Belhaven Is Upset

WASHINGTON — Belhaven's girls, unbeaten throughout the regular season, was upset by Bath High School last night in the Tobacco Belt Conference tournament semifinals, while unbeaten Mattamuskeet's boys kept rolling on.

Mattamuskeet topped number five seeded Belhaven, 80-56, in the upper bracket of the tournament's semifinals. Tonight, Aurora, seeded second, goes up against third seeded Chocowinity, to determine Mattamuskeet's foe in Saturday's finals.

In the girls' game, Bath gained a 46-43 win over Belhaven, handing the Lady Bulldogs their first loss of the year. The two meet in a rematch next week in the first round of the District playoffs. Bath will now meet the winner of tonight's Chocowinity-Bear Grass game in the Saturday finals.

round I've had all year," said Wadkins, a three-time winner last season and a runner-up in the first two events this season.

"My putting was kind of suspect on the west coast. If I'd putted like this, I'd have won the first two tournaments in a cakewalk."

Ken Green, who had the best tournament of his brief career last month in the Bing Crosby, also had the putting touch. He holed five times from the 25-foot range — two of them for par — for a 67.

Tom Kite, seemingly ever-present in the top 10, had a 68 and was tied, three shots off the lead, with Jim Booros and Peter Oosterhuis, a Briton now living in California.

Defending champion Andy Bean and Lee Trevino topped were among 18 golfers at 69. Masters title-holder Craig Stadler matched par 72 on the 7,065-yard Blue Monster course at the Doral Country Club and PGA champion Ray Floyd, twice a winner of this event, was one stroke better at 71.

Jack Nicklaus shot a 70 that included a double-bogey 5 on the 13th hole, where he missed the green, played a poor pitch and eventually missed a 3-footer. "Just kind of a blank spot in the day," Nicklaus said.

Gove, 27, who hasn't challenged seriously in three previous seasons on the PGA Tour, one-putted 11 times and pitched in once as he established two career firsts. The 65 represented his low score as a pro and it marked the first time he'd led or shared the lead in a Tour event.

"I had to re-qualify for the tour (at the Tour school) last fall. I was 36th out of 50 so I haven't had a lot of chances to play this year. But I've been playing well ever since the school last fall and I was looking forward to playing here."

Fiori, who acquired his third Tour title in last year's Bob Hope Classic, was even more positive about his no-bogey performance.

"I've got all the confidence in the world in my game right now," he said. "I've been playing well all year and I've just been waiting to get to Florida. "I'm expecting to play well here. I like the golf course. I've got everything in line."

"I should be able to make a good run at 'em."

1983 Newspaper In Education Week Special Series

PARENTS & TEACHERS:

Use Newspapers In Reading Comprehension

(This public service ad is one in a series published for national Newspaper in Education Week, sponsored by the International Reading Association.)

Haven't you noticed differences in newspaper stories? You'll find straight news, features and editorials. Each serves a different purpose and takes a different approach to topics of interest.

Straight news is factual; the writer gathers facts and explains what is found without expressing his own point of view. Feature writers often interpret events; they draw conclusions and describe people. Editorials evaluate events or policies; editorial writers discuss why a course of action is desirable or not.

Encourage children to think on different levels by pointing out the differences in newspaper writing and by asking questions that require them to do more than call words or look for answers given in print. Model this approach: gather the facts, interpret the meaning, and then judge the value of what is read.

- Straight news:
- Who is involved? What took place? Where did the events take place? (Literal)
 - What led to the events? What did those interviewed mean? What is likely to happen next? (Interpretive)
 - What do you think should be done? (Evaluative)
- Features:
- What is the subject of the story? (Literal)
 - Why do you think the writer chose this subject? How does he seem to feel about it? (Interpretive)
 - How do you feel about the subject? Do you feel as the writer does? (Evaluative)
- Editorials:
- What problem is discussed? (Literal)
 - Does the writer suggest a solution? (Interpretive)
 - Do you agree or disagree with the writer's analysis of the problem? Why? (Evaluative)

Walker To Accept Millionaire Fate

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Herschel Walker dropped his head into his hands for a moment before answering the question. What did he regret most about the controversy over his exit from college football?

"I guess I feel bad that the kids who look up to me will see me leave under this situation and feel let down. I hope that doesn't happen. It all depends on how the adults in their lives feel about it," Walker told The Atlanta Constitution on Thursday.

The Heisman Trophy winner, breaking his silence on his jump to the United States Football League, stepped outside his Athens apartment to face reporters and photographers and granted a brief interview with the Atlanta newspaper.

"I may have made some bad judgments in the past but enough has been said," Walker said. "There's more to this than meets the eye and that's all I'm going to say about it now. I've made my decision and I'm ready to go on with my life."

The three-time All-

American tailback reportedly will earn $5 million over three years with the New Jersey Generals in the richest pro football contract in history. The contract was signed just hours after the University of Georgia declared him ineligible for his senior season.

"I've been down a little, but I'll be OK as soon as I get out of this atmosphere. It's kind of gloomy," Walker said.

He said he would head for his home in Wrightsville today before reporting to the Generals' camp in Orlando, Fla., on Saturday.

"I guess I should already be there (in Orlando), but everything happened so fast," Walker said.

"I'm in shape because I've been running track, but that's not exactly football shape," he said.

Asked about the Generals' season opener March 6, Walker said, "If I'm there, I expect to play. I don't think they hired me to sit on the bench."

"I don't know much about my new team but I'm looking forward to getting down there."

The team's fans were looking forward to Walker. Season-ticket orders came in a pace projected to reach 3,000 tickets in the two days following his signing.

The signing ended five days of controversy in which Walker initially denied reports that he had signed a contract with the Generals last week. Georgia Coach Vince Dooley said he was convinced Walker was telling the truth because "Herschel's never lied to me."

Dooley, however, declared Walker ineligible Wednesday after discovering that Walker actually had signed a contract, a violation of NCAA rules.

Criticism of the contract, which made Walker the first underclassman to turn pro before his collegiate football eligibility, continued Thursday.

The American Football Coaches Association said it plans to meet within a week with the NCAA Pro Relations committee and USFL officials.

"I'm mad and upset," said AFCA Executive Director Charlie McClendon.

Three colleges have barred the USFL from their campuses, including Georgia Tech.

Dooley said, "What hurts is that knowing Herschel the way I do, I know this isn't what he wanted. I think he thought he'd be able to handle it, but at age 20, he was no match for what he became involved in. He got no guidance from his family. The people close to him did a great job of keeping him away from me."

But Walker did consult his parents, said his father, Willis Walker.

"Herschel, as always, has kept in constant touch with me throughout this, and there have been no surprises," he said.

USFL Commissioner Chet Simmons issued a statement in New York saying the league initially was approached by Walker's attorney, Jack Manton, and then by Walker himself about playing in the league.

Simmons said Walker told the league he had made similar overtures to the NFL and Canadian Football League.

Manton, 39, of Cumming, Ga., confirmed he contacted the NFL hours before Walker signed with the USFL.

"I told them the deal New Jersey had offered and asked if they would both match it and provide the same market opportunities as the New York area," he said.

The NFL turned him down and Commissioner Pete Rozelle said the league remains committed to its policy of not drafting undergraduates.

CFL spokesman Greg Fulton denied Walker or a representative approached the league and said league rules prohibit signing an import who is an undergraduate.

Walker said he would return to Athens later this year to complete work on his degree. Simmons said J. Walter Duncan, owner of the Generals, "insisted" that Walker agree to complete his education.

"Although our eligibility rules remain intact, the USFL invites thoughtful input from all colleges and universities, the NCAA, the NAIA, the CFA, and any other appropriate entity to suggest a reasonable and rational set of rules which would be considered to be legal and would balance the desires of the colleges against the obvious rights of an individual to seek employment," Simmons said.

Manton said he expects to be the scapegoat in the affair "but the only thing I have done is to serve as an adviser until it became evident that Herschel had made up his mind which way he wanted to go. I did not push him into making the decision to leave Georgia and play professional football."

Manton would not disclose his fee. It was reported he will receive less than 2 percent of the contract and will earn a percentage of the fees Walker receives for endorsements.

Walker's father said he and his wife, Christine, were "very happy" about their son's contract but didn't take time off from work to celebrate. "Yes, I'll be going to work at 4 this afternoon. Herschel is the one that signed the contract, not me," the elder Walker said with a laugh.

In three years at Georgia, Walker rushed for 5,259 yards, 823 shy of the NCAA-career standard held by Tony Dorsett. He led the Bulldogs to a 33-3 record, including the school's only national championship in 1980.

'Walkergate:' They Ask 'Why,' Call Out 'Shame'

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

It takes only two words to capsule this week's football shenanigans which will hereafter be known as "Walkergate." One is a question: "Why?" The other is an admonition: "Shame."

Shame on Herschel Walker, possibly the greatest ball-carrier we'll see in our lifetime, who allowed his himself to be tarnished by an overly zealous agent and who engaged in devious tactics that belie the image of a nice, level-headed kid the country had come to know him.

Shame on the agent, attorney Jack Manton of Atlanta, who, while his purposes were understandable, must be criticized on his unsavory methods. Shame on the U. S. Football League, which violated announced principles and then raised its arms in a show of false "Not Me!" innocence.

Shame on the University of Georgia and the NCAA which, confronted with reliable reports of a signed contract, did a cursory, brushover check and said it's not so.

Walker insisted he had signed no contract and was remaining at Georgia — statements which he later said were false and for which he apologized.

The NCAA and Georgia administrators gave him a clean bill of health. They acted as if they just hoped the problem would blow away.

Then came the smoking gun.

Now the 'whys?' Why was this deplorable cover-up necessary in the first place? Who was stupid enough to propose a written contract, knowing such a paper was flagrantly against NCAA's rules, archaic as they might be in modern times.

Why did the U. S. Football League, just a-bornin', use silly excuses to try to violate a promise its administrators made to follow the National Football League's code of not tampering with college players until the players' class has graduated?

Nobody can blame Herschel Walker for considering — and even ultimately accepting — lifetime security with a pro contract from the USFL's New Jersey Generals, offering him an estimated $5 million for three years.

Here's a kid from a middle class Georgia family who had given three of his best years to the University of Georgia, winning the Heisman Trophy and leading the team to the national championship. His obligations had been fully paid to the university and now were only to himself.

He could go to Harvard a dozen years, do graduate work at Oxford and never in all his years make that kind of money.

It's the way he did it that cast an odor over the entire scenario. Some can blame his actions on youth and naivety. But, even under stiffest pressure from his agent, they were inexcusable. Even at age 20, with three years of college under his belt, Herschel must have been aware of the rules.

If he and his agent thought going pro was a wise move — and it probably was — he should have made the move openly. Magic Johnson and Isiah Thomas did it as undergraduates in basketball, and nobody raised an eyebrow.

Having signed the contract without study and later changing his mind, he might have wiggled out of it if he hadn't waffled and told fibs.

If he had openly said, "I goofed. Forgive me. I want to finish college. I want to run in the Olympics," he would have found a lot of sympathy among the NCAA hierarchy.

Instead he tried to cover up while his agent was seeking to get a better deal from the NFL. Greed raised its ugly head. The NFL didn't bite — much to the credit of the league and Commissioner Pete Rozelle.

The same sort of credibility was not displayed by the USFL. Who can doubt, despite its loud protestations, that landing Walker, the greatest of his time, was in the league's game plan from the beginning?

It's logical and understandable — although the lame excuses are not.

The USFL and its TV sponsors needed a player of Walker's prominence to give the new league a bigtime aura, just as the signing of Joe Namath by the New York Jets legitimized the old American Football League.

The USFL gained credibility in one way and lost it in others. It has now declared open war with the powerful NFL.

PBS-TV Calls For Additional Programming Funds

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP)—Pinch Channel 13 and public TV cries, "Ouch!"

New York's 13, the primary producing station for non-commercial television, is asking its 300,000 members for more money. And that means some major programs and series — like "Nature" and the upcoming "Heritage: Civilization and the Jews" — could be in trouble. The appeal for additional support went out on Feb. 18, less than two weeks before public TV's Festival '83 fund-raising drive, during which Channel 13 hopes to raise $2.5 million in pledges and add 60,000 members.

"Unless at least $1 million can be raised in the next few weeks from members like you," John Jay Iselin, president of WNET-13, said in a letter to members, "we may have to cut back on the variety and quality of our programming."

And that would affect every station in the system. WNET and WGBH in Boston combined produce or present about 80 percent of the programs offered Public Broadcasting Service member stations.

Channel 13 is in no danger of collapse, says Iselin, whose objective instead is "working capital" for future programming.

Up to now, WNET's approach has been to embark on a major project in the belief that money to pay for it could be arranged down the line.

"We undertook 'Civilization and the Jews,' an $8.5 million production, with only $1 million in hand," Iselin says. "In the past, we could go into a project anticipating income."

Continuing series produced or co-produced by the New York station, like "Great Performances," "American Playhouse," "Frontline" and "Non Fiction Television," do not appear to be in jeopardy.

Part of 13's financial squeeze has to do with public TV's practice of reimbursing stations only after a project is completed. A station like Channel 13 has to pay for a series like "Civilization and the Jews" before it can recover all available production money.

That has helped boost 13's debt to about $6 million while it waits for reimbursement. And federal funding for public television has declined from $172 million for 1982 to $137 million this year and $130 million next.

Public TV's audience, however, reached a record 49 million viewers during the first week of the current season, Oct. 11-17.

Viewer membership, once 20 percent of the WNET budget, now represents about one-third of its annual outlay, which was $47.4 million for fiscal 1982-83.

Corporate underwriting accounted for about 27 percent of that budget with state and federal financing at about 19 percent. The rest came from miscellaneous sources including special auctions and rental of studios.

Life As It's Lived

Sleeping Behind Bars Is Still The Best Solution

By GAIL MICHAELS

Meg was the first to propose that Zachary move out of his crib and into his "big bed." "You kept me in my crib too long," she explained. "You kept me in till I was embarrassed."

I have to admit that I am an advocate of keeping children behind bars for as long as possible. Of course, with Meg it was a mere formality. Almost as soon as she could walk, she began to shimmy out of her crib with the agility of a spider monkey.

But after accomplishing the same feat several times, Zachary must have decided that the risk was too great for a child of his build, and he has stayed put ever since in spite of Meg's persistent efforts to introduce him to the vast pleasure of escape.

Phillip had no particular bias in the matter until after Christmas, when we found that we could no longer get to the far side of Zachary's room without crawling under the crib. "Let's do put Zachary in his big bed," he finally suggested, "before we lose him in there."

I was aghast. "You have got to be kidding. We're still potty training the child. You want too many major adjustments at the same time." "Do you really think it's going to make him feel insecure?" "No, I'm the one it's going to make feel insecure."

Preparing For Conventions

BOSTON (AP) — This historic city, where patriots once reached a meeting of the minds as to their future course in history, is now preparing to become a major national host for business meetings.

Meeting space is such in demand that some 2,500 new hotel rooms and 4.5 million square feet of office units are now under construction at a cost of $1.4 billion.

Two hotels yet to be completed in the huge downtown Copley Place development — the 1,145-room Marriott and the 804-room Westin — already are accepting bookings as far as 10 years ahead, according to Mayor Kevin H. White.

When Copley Place is fully operational in 1984 it will encompass four buildings, in addition to the two hotels, with a total of 845,000 square feet of office space, 100 mixed income residential units, a 385,000 square-foot retail mall plus indoor parking facilities for 1,432 cars.

Collector Item Legal Tender,

HONG KONG (UPI) — A special 22 karat gold coin struck by the British Royal Mint in honor of the Chinese New Year of the Pig, Feb. 13, is legal tender in the British Crown Colony — but is more apt to end up with coin collectors worldwide.

The coin is the eighth in an ongoing series depicting the 12 animals of the ancient Chinese Lunar Calendar.

Coins figure importantly in the Chinese New Year celebration. A money tree of cypress branches is decorated with coins and flowers and displayed prominently in the home to bring good fortune.

Also for good luck and year-long prosperity, children arrange copper coins on colored string in the shape of a dragon near their beds.

Medallion For Bicentennial

DETROIT (AP) — A medallion, featuring Methodist founder John Wesley, has been turned out for the bicentennial observance in 1984 of the beginnings of Methodism in the United States.

A United Methodist planning commission announced that the medallion, minted by the Medallion Art Company of Danbury, Conn., bears the words of Wesley's memorable comment, "The world is my parish."

"You're exaggerating as usual."

"And you are blindly optimistic as usual. You think that he's going to climb out of bed in the morning and come running into our bedroom. But Zachary is not like that. Zachary is going to climb out of the bed in the morning, i.e., some time after 1 a.m., and he is going to head for the kitchen. He is going to push a chair up to the light switch and turn it on, and then he's going to push a chair up to the counter and help himself to whatever he can find, be it potato chips or Brasso."

"You can't know that."

"The heck I can't. That kid's heart is in the kitchen. Yesterday, I left the supper preparations to answer the doorbell, and when I got back, he had pushed a chair up to the counter and had eaten all the black olives off the pizza. Last week he poured dishwashing detergent in the water can and dosed every plant in the kitchen. He is simply too dangerous to be left loose at any time, but especially at night."

"Well, I'm going to give him the choice anyway," Phillip said stubbornly.

And he did. Before naptime he asked Zachary if he would rather sleep in the "big bed" or in the crib.

"Sty-up," Zachary answered in his Southern drawl.

"You can't sleep on the steps. You can either sleep on the bed or in the crib. Now what do you want to do?" "Sty-up," Zachary repeated.

With Phillip looking completely befuddled, I condescended to translate. "He's saying 'stay up,' not 'step.' It's an ill omen if you ask me."

He didn't. Instead, he put Zachary down in the big bed. Ten minutes later Zachary appeared in the kitchen. "I can get up all by myself," he announced proudly.

"But you're supposed to stay in bed until you finish your nap," Phillip said as he led him back toward the stairs.

Five minutes passed before we again heard the thud of little feet. I looked hostile. Phillip looked sheepish.

"Well," he said as we watched our delighted son come bounding down the stairs, "perhaps I was a bit hasty."

Opening lead: Five of ♦.

There is one rule that, if you observe it unfailingly, will save you a fortune over the years. Before playing to the first trick, pause to count your tricks and plan your play.

We do not like jumping to three no trump on anything except a hand that has a 4-3-3-3 pattern. However, we must admit that we, too, would make an exception with this North hand. South's jump to slam was a reasonable shot — his partner's 16-18 points were all outside spades, so they had to fill in the minor holdings.

West led the five of clubs, and those declarers who can't wait to get a hand over with will probably go down. They will draw trumps and plan to discard a diamond on the ace of hearts, and then rely on the club suit to produce three tricks. Depending on how they timed the play, they could easily end up losing two club tricks.

However, the club lead should alert declarer to the possibility that the suit might not break. He can count 11 tricks in top cards, and there is another way to score a twelfth trick — via a diamond ruff in dummy.

The correct line is to win the first trick in hand and then cash the king-queen of diamonds before touching trumps. Now declarer can afford to draw two rounds of trumps before ruffing a low diamond on the table. He can then return to his hand by ruffing a heart to draw the outstanding trumps, and the slam is in the bag.

GROWING NUCLEAR POWER — The first nuclear power plant built in Czechoslovakia is in operation in Jaslovské Bohunice, western Slovakia. The first two reactors were put into operation in 1978 and 1980. In the 1980s another ten units of this type will be put in operation in southern Slovakia and southern Moravia. In 1985, nuclear power plants will account for more than 18 percent of electricity generated in Czechoslovakia. Photo by Tass. (AP Laserphoto)
