Transitional Dawn ...

The rising of the sun Saturday morning brought with it an unusually peaceful scene. Delicate pink covered the horizon, painted here and there with purple while a glowing camelia-colored sun rose from it's bed. In juxtoposition to the fairy tale scene were rounded, pearl gray clouds of winter that slowly rolled by as the sun reached it's zenith. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

3 U.S. Agents Killed In Wreck

By CATHERINE WILSON
Associated Press Writer

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. (AP) — Three Secret Service agents were killed and two sheriff's deputies were injured in a traffic accident Saturday as Queen Elizabeth II's motorcade headed up a winding mountain highway to Yosemite National Park.

The agents, part of an advance security team, were killed in the head-on collision of their car and a car from the Mariposa County sheriff's department, state trooper Jim Fulton said.

The accident occurred on California 132 "miles ahead" of the royal party, which detoured around the crash and continued into the park, state police said.

A 15-vehicle motorcade was taking the queen and her husband, Prince Philip, from Castle Air Force Base to Yosemite, where they were to spend a quiet weekend after a full week of pomp and ceremony.

The 2½-hour drive from the base to the park follows a winding, scenic highway that cuts through the Sierra Nevada foothills.

The victims were part of a security team assigned to detective duty at Castle Air Force Base, Fulton said. It was unclear which vehicle crossed the center line, he said. A sheriff's sergeant was in stable condition and an injured deputy suffered minor injuries.

"The queen has heard about this very sad accident and she's of course very saddened by the news," said Michael Shea, her press secretary. "We had to divert to drive around where accident was. And as I say, she's very upset to hear the news."

Shea said the queen's doctor, Norman Blacklock, traveling with the royal couple, offered his assistance, but "local medical authorities had everything in hand."

The royal couple paused for about five minutes at Inspiration Point, a part of the park that affords a spectacular view of El Capitan, a 7,569-foot-high granite monolith, and Bridalveil Fall.

At Yosemite, the royal party took over the entire Ahwahnee Hotel. The couple's sixth-floor room has a view of Glacier Point, Yosemite Falls and the Royal Arches.

In Los Angeles, Nancy Reagan said: "I feel so terrible, I'm heartsick," according to White House spokesman Anson Franklin.

"It was with profound sadness and sorrow that I learned of the tragic deaths ...," President Reagan said in a statement aboard Air Force One en route from Oregon to Washington. He called the wives of each of the agents. "Nancy and I extend our deepest sympathy to their wives, children and families."

In Washington, Secret service spokesman Joseph Petro identified the dead agents as: George P. La Barge, 41, a 14-year veteran assigned to Dayton, Ohio; Donald W. Robinson, 38, a 12-year veteran assigned to Newark, N.J., and Donald A. Bejcek, 29, a veteran of 1½ years service assigned to Chicago.

The queen, on her first visit to the West Coast, left San Francisco on Saturday morning after a dockside celebration attended by several thousand people. Caterers dressed in Elizabethan costumes dispensed Cheerios cereal and doughnuts to those who braved rain to say "cheerio" to the royal couple.

Farm Exports Proving Point Of Frustration To Reagan Team

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agricultural exports, the lifeblood of many American farmers, rose every year for 12 consecutive years before John Block took office as secretary of agriculture. Then the bottom fell out.

It wasn't for lack of effort by Block. An Illinois hog farmer and former state director of agriculture, Block considered one of his main goals to be boosting exports. The unexpected decline occurred largely because of events over which he had no control — the global recession, huge crop harvests and lagging consumer demand.

At midterm of the Reagan administration, two years after he assumed command at USDA, Block is deeply frustrated.

In 1981, Block's main concern was to lift the partial embargo that former President Carter had placed on U.S. grain sales to the Soviet Union. President Reagan lifted the embargo that April.

"What can be said about the embargo? We'd like to forget it," Block says now. "It was a bad decision, a totally ill-advised decision, and it'll take years to repair the damage."

ECU Trustees Honor Dead Student

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The East Carolina University Board of Trustees adopted a resolution Friday afternoon expressing "deep sympathy" to the family of David B. Martin of Raleigh, an ECU senior killed in an explosion at an apartment complex here last Wednesday morning.

The resolution said the university "is proud" of Martin's "excellent achievements during his short life," and said the honor student "left a warm and lasting impression on all who knew him."

Chancellor John Howell told trustees the Wednesday disaster was a "unique illustration of cooperation," and said family members of those students injured in the blast had expressed satisfaction with the assistances that had been given to them.

Dr. William Laupus, dean of the school of medicine, said the apartment explosion presented the "first major trauma activity" for the medical school's department of emergency medicine. "I believe the program functioned extremely well," he said.

Dr. Elmer Meyer, vice chancellor for student life, said the response from the community offering aid to those who were displaced because of the explosion was excellent. "A tragedy occurs and everybody pulls together," Meyer said.

He noted that a Village Green Emergency Fund has been established in the university's student financial aid office to handle contributions to help students who lost clothing, furniture and other possessions.

Dr. Angelo Volpe, acting vice chancellor for academic affairs, told trustees that the spring semester enrollment of 12,415 undergraduate students set a record at ECU. He also said the enrollment of graduate students for the spring semester is up 2 percent over the spring 1982 level.

Howell reminded trustees that graduation exercises will be held May 16 at 10 a.m. Former U.S. Sen. Robert Morgan, who served on the ECU Board of Trustees and as N.C. attorney general, will be the speaker.

The next meeting of the board was tentatively set for May 5 at 4:30 p.m.

Veterans Split In Views On M-A-S-H

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

M-A-S-H — the saga of the 4077th Military Army Surgical Hospital during the Korean War — ended an 11-year run on television last week.

The show was a situation comedy. "It made us laugh," Associated Press television writer Fred Rothenberg said. But M-A-S-H also "made us sad, and it made us feel."

Rothenberg said the series "dealt honestly and realistically with the Korean War, its consequences and the shear irrationality of surgeons saving lives just so they could be splattered again."

Korean War veterans in the Greenville area had varying opinions of the show. And it brought back memories for some of them.

Charles Reid of Greenville, though not a regular viewer, said "I enjoyed it," and "I think it was realistic."

He was not wounded and had "no contact with any MASH units," but Reid said it brought back memories; "mostly I remember the children over there ... stuff like that."

Thomas Underwood, who spent four years in Korea, said the show was "all right as a comedy," but, he said, "I sure did not think it was realistic."

> "It was too much of a comedy to be the situation that I was in." — Marine veteran Oscar Moore, who was wounded three times in Korea.

He said for him, M-A-S-H did not bring back many memories because it was "so unrealistic."

There were no civilian clothes as depicted in the TV series, and "not much discipline" in the show. And the "association between enlisted men and officers ... males and females" depicted "didn't exist," Underwood said. "To me, it was not the Army."

Underwood had no contact with a MASH unit in Korea, but he said at one point he was wounded and taken to an "evacuation hospital ... in a rear area."

"It was not quite that lax in the Army," Ralph Belue, who was in Korea in 1952 and 1953, said. "I liked the show all right," he said, but it didn't bring back any memories.

Marine Corps veteran Oscar Moore watched the show "sometimes; sometimes not."

"It was too much of a comedy to be the situation that I was in," he said. Moore was wounded three times in Korea and won two Silver Stars and a Bronze Star along with other medals.

"It was a lot more serious than they put it," in M-A-S-H, according to Moore. "I did not find much in common" with it, although Moore said "I was hauled out by helicopter and jeep" after being wounded.

The first time, Moore said, he was "medivacked out to a field hospital and a hospital ship in 1950."

The second time, in mountainous terrain, he was carried 10 miles by stretcher, then helicoptered to a field hospital, then on to Japan.

The last time, Moore said, he was "in Chinese territory in North Korea," and was "medivacked back" to the United States.

Marines in Korea, Moore said, generally had no contact with Army MASH units. "The greatest salvation Marine units had were Navy hospital corpsmen. They were the man on the spot," and "those boys were good."

Moore also said the use of helicoptors in Korea was "a good thing for wounded men. There would have been a lot more dead ones if we hadn't had them."

According to Moore, "You never know what goes on in an operating room. They (the doctors) may be joking that much. But those people did a good job. I know that much, and with the conditions they worked under, they had to have some humor or lose their minds.

"They were bound to be the most skilled surgeons in the world in field hospitals ... working under the most adverse conditions in the world. They did a good job and saved a lot of people."

Moore said his family liked the show, but admitted "the humor bothered me more than anything else. To me a man being hauled in there, it ain't funny a bit."

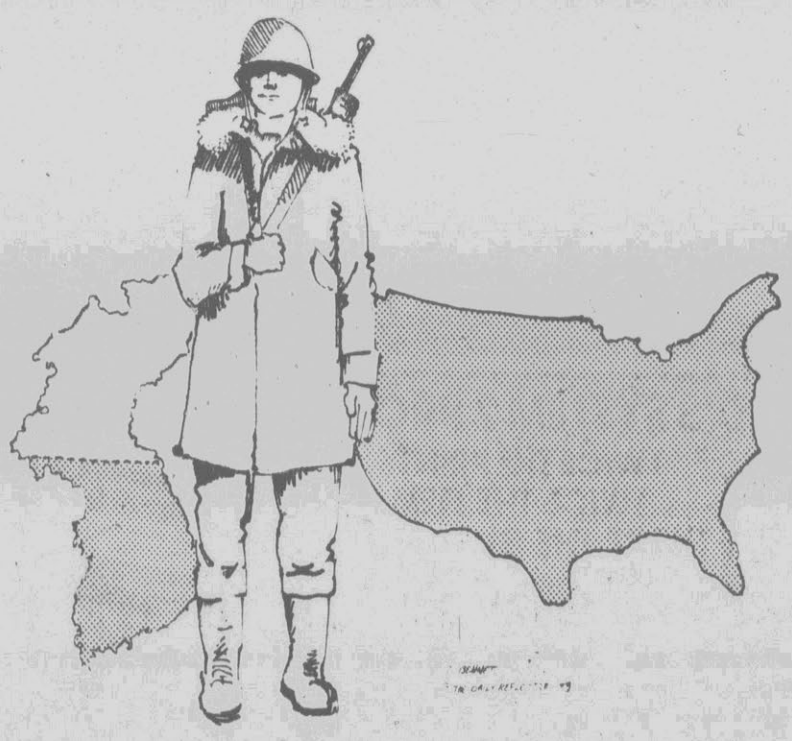

Richard Coleman was not wounded, but he was injured several times and treated by MASH units in the 24th Division area.

"I watched M-A-S-H all the time. It brought back memories ... the living conditions, tents ... the old MASH ward where they kept patients looked about the same, rather primitive," Coleman said.

"I got good treatment. The people knew what to do."

Coleman said many "active duty people think" M-A-S-H "was a kind of farce, but there was a heck of a lot of realism," in the television series.

"I enjoyed the series. It brought back a lot of memories. I married a Korean girl. There was a lot of language, Korean writing. The realism I thought was real good."

Morgan, Jenkins To Get Degrees

East Carolina University will confer the first honorary degrees in its history — the doctorate of letters — on Chancellor-emeritus Leo W. Jenkins and former U.S. Sen. Robert B. Morgan at the university's 74th annual commencement May 6.

As a team, with Jenkins as president and chancellor and Morgan chairman of the trustees, the two leaders fought political battles and shaped ECU's role as a university during the decades of the 1960s and 1970s.

Chancellor John M. Howell, announcing approval by the board of trustees of the honorary degrees, said: "It is indeed heartening to me that we have initiated this practice with two people so well qualified and deserving. It sets a fine standard for future awards."

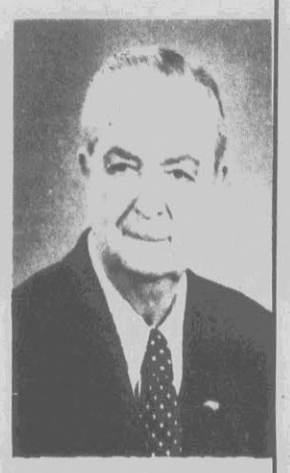

In keeping with the practice of many institutions of askng an honoree to deliver the commencement address, Howell invited Morgan to be the commencement speaker. Morgan accepted.

Both Jenkins and Morgan were approved for honorary degrees by the board of trustees last year. Both were nominated by C. Ralph Kinsey Jr. of Charlotte, chairman of the ECU Trustees.

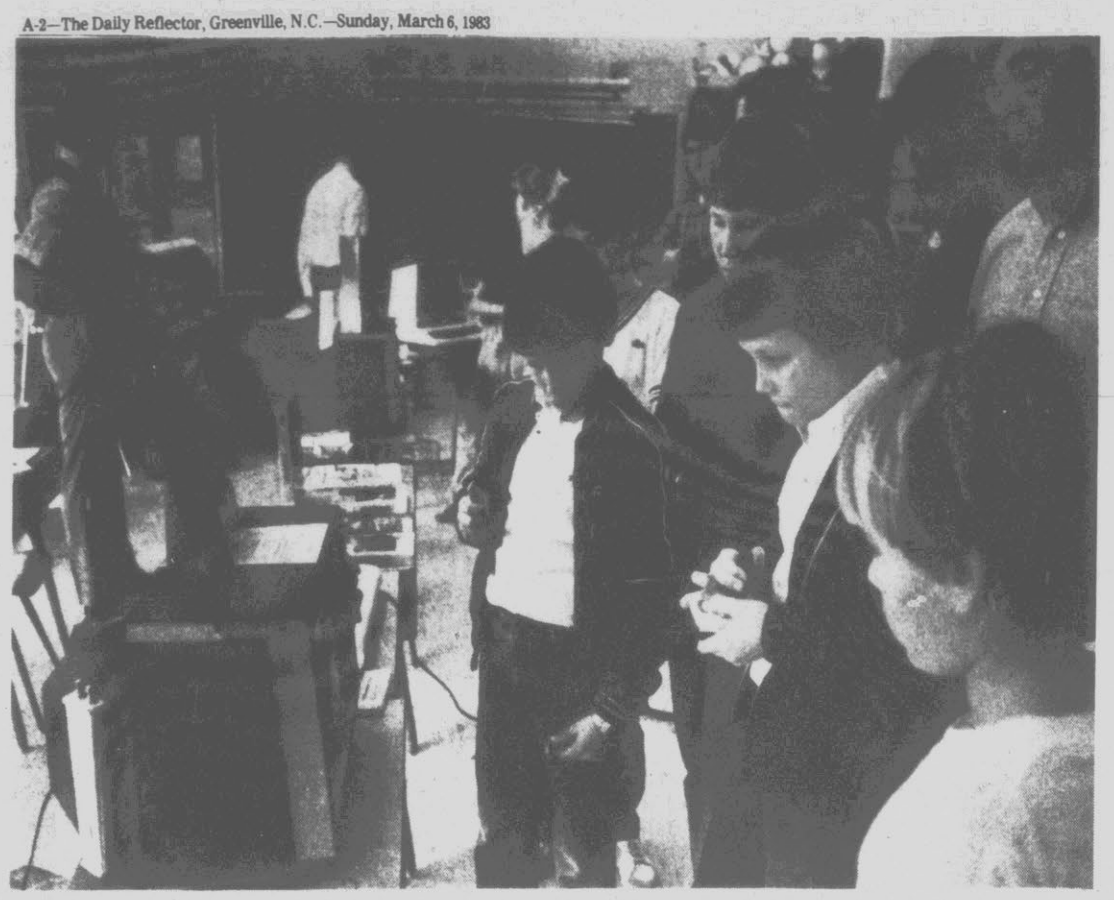

"Unprecedented growth occurred during more than three decades of leadership by Leo Jenkins," Kinsey said. "In this period, approximately 85 percent of the alumni graduated. Enrollment was 1,600 students when Dr. Jenkins arrived in 1947. This figure had grown to more than 12,000 when he retired in 1978," he said.

"Morgan is among East Carolina University's most distinguished graduates," Kinsey said. "He has maintained a close relationship with this institution for almost 40 years, and has given vital support and lead-

Farm Exports ...

exports dropped to $39.1 billion in 1981-82. They are expected to decline further this year to $36 billion.

What happened to exports is symbolic of what has taken place in agriculture in the past few years.

"The world is in the grips of a recession," Block told a Senate hearing recently. "Industrial economies barely grew last year, and the U.S. economy declined. Developing countries, which offer the greatest potential for export development, experienced growth of only about 2 percent in 1982, well below that experienced in recent years."

Nevertheless, the 48-year-old Block is an optimist; he sees the bright side even when surrounded by dark statistics.

"In 1983, we expect the picture in the agricultural sector to steadily improve," he said. "We believe that general economic conditions, both at home and abroad, will be somewhat better, as policies to promote a sustainable recovery take effect. Inflation rates should remain low and interest rates should continue to decline."

The situation confronting farmers and the administration is formidable:

— Net farm income may range from $17 billion to $21 billion this year, probably not much different from the $20.2 billion net in 1982.

— Inventories of major crops, mainly wheat and corn, are at record levels, and there is no likelihood Americans will consume and export enough in the near future to ease the pressure.

— Land values have declined after increasing annually for many years. Partly as a result, the 5.8 million Americans who live on the land have seen their equities decline.

— Farm debt, at record highs, continues to grow. Many families have had to sell some of their livestock and drastically alter planting plans to pay bills.

Block, a staunch advocate of free-market agriculture and minimum federal control, has had to watch that philosophy twist out of shape.

After failing to persuade the European Economic Community to ease its subsidies on exports that compete with U.S. sales abroad, Block retaliated with a new "blended credit" program aimed at selling farm products to selected foreign customers at competitive prices and terms.

One result was a big U.S. wheat flour sae to Egypt, whose market had long been dominated by France's subsidized sales.

But perhaps the most bitter pill for Block to swallow was realizing that the huge U.S. crop surplus could not be brought under control without vast federal intervention.

Thus, the Reagan administration devised a payment-in-kind program — PIK — to give eligible farmers surplus wheat, corn, sorghum, rice and cotton in exchange for reducing acreage of those crops this year.

Block has zealously promoted the PIK program in hopes that two things will result: The huge crop surplus will shrink, and prices will eventually rise as free-market forces take over.

Block is characteristically optimistic that farmers will accept the PIK program.

ership during an era of unprecedented growth. He also established an outstanding record of public service on the state and national levels."

Since his retirement as chancellor in 1978, Jenkins has served as a special assistant to Gov. Jim Hunt for economic development and other projects. He lives in Greenville.

As state senator for five terms in the 1950s and 1960s, Morgan spearheaded the lengthy legislative fight that won university status for East Carolina in 1967.

He also served four terms as chairman of the ECU Board of Trustees during the 1960s and early 1970s. He received a bachelor of science degree from East Carolina in 1947 and his law degree from Wake Forest College in 1950.

In 1968, he was elected attoreny general of North Carolina and served as the state's highest legal officer until his successful campaign for the U.S. Senate in 1974. He was defeated in 1980 by Republican John East, a former political science professor at East Carolina.

Morgan now lives in Buies Creek and practices law in Harnett County and Raleigh.

Writing Can Be Fun... As 1st Graders Learn In A Special Seminar

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Colored pencils lay scattered on the floor along with the children. At first glance the 6-year-olds appeared to be playing. They would screw up their faces, smile and then burst out in laughter. Actually, they were learning to write.

The youngsters, students of a Greenville elementary school, were participating in a seminar, along with local teachers and administrators, given at the Willis Building on Reade Street by Dr. Donald Graves and Mary Ellen Giacobbe, a New Hamshire University teacher whose classroom was chosen to participate in the writing program initiated by Dr. Graves and collegues from several Northern universities.

"All right, who wants to read their story to the class?" Ms. Giacobbe asked the squirming first graders.

"I do, I do," the whole group chorused.

One child was chosen. Dutifully, and a bit shyly but with gaining confidence, she recited a tale of feeding time for baby brother.

"Now, will someone tell her what she told us," Ms. Giacobbe asked.

The story was related almost word for word. "OK, now students, let's ask questions about material she didn't tell us that will help to form a more complete picture in our heads."

Question upon question was fired until everyone had a clear picture of the little girl's baby brother fighting off mother's attempts to feed him.

"Let's see now, he screws up his face, refuses the spoon, and sometimes spits out food he doesn't like," Ms. Giacobbe said. The children giggled even harder. "See, writing can be fun," Ms. Giacobbe said, laughing.

Until recently, Dr. Graves said, teachers have been giving students too much information with which to write papers. "From the second grade on we won't let them learn to choose topics. Instead, the child goes on writer's welfare, dependent on the teacher for everything," he said.

"You remember it," he said. "Your teacher would give you a topic and you wouldn't know what to write; you didn't know anything about it."

About 10 years ago, studies by Graves and his colleagues revolutionized theories in writing eduction. The method is still growing in popularity today and has not only caught on in the United States but in England and Australia as well.

"The process involves early, frequent practice at writing, with children spending days, perhaps weeks, writing and revising drafts of a single essay, then 'publishing' it in booklet form for classmates to read and criticize," Graves said.

"The method works with students of all ages," although it is harder to do in high schools where class time "is more rigid and the writers may be set in their ways," he said. "Basically, the concept of teaching this way is based on much the same method a professional writer might use. Write, write again, and again and again until it's finished. With this method, we follow and help the student through every phase of writing instead of just grading the final product.

"The result is children who love to write, can't wait to write, instead of children who recoil everytime they are asked to write something," he said.

Learning to write the right way when you are young can make all the difference in the world, according to New Hampshire educators Dr. Donald Graves and Ms. Mary Ellen Giacobbe. Ms. Giacobbe, at far right on the floor, assisted Dr. Donald Graves at a recent seminar held at the Willis Building. Dr. Graves and Ms. Giacobbe told teachers that following students from choice of a topic through revisions all the way through to the finished product helps students become more proficient and entertaining writers. Dragging: 'It's Not Something We Like To Do'

By ANGELA LINGERFELT
Reflector Staff Writer

Two bodies were weighted down with concrete slabs and dumped into the Tar River recently. They were just two of several bodies that have been recovered from rivers, ponds and waterways in Pitt County.

The Greenville Fire-Rescue Squad has about eight people who "drag" for missing bodies and all of the squad personnel are qualified to assist.

Besides being certified emergency medical technicians, each "body dragger" participates in advanced training on the Tar River about twice a year. In this way they become familiar with dragging methods, the boats, steering and safety measures.

"We train during the warmer months of June and July when most drownings take place. We use a (bed) sheet weighted down with concrete blocks, then we drag for the sheet. By doing this, we get the feel of dragging the bodies and learn how to unsnag them," Skip Eure, a member of the squad, said.

The equipment consists of several kinds of drags, squad member Allen Hill said. The standard drag is designed like a "V" with chains attached to it. Three metal hooks are attached to the chains, Hill said, and the equipment can be used in water from six to 30 feet deep.

Assistant Chief Don Mills said the rescuers drag for bodies systematically. They drag in a criss-cross method in the area the body was last seen. Mills said they search one area at a time, then move on to another area.

"If we have a general idea of where the body is, we concentrate on that area. One important factor in looking for a body is knowing if the person could swim. If a boat went down and the missing person could swim, the body might be further away from where we think it is," Hill said.

Another important factor is the type of water that a body is missing in, Hill added. Farm ponds are deeper in the middle, which is where the body will usually end up.

Most of the rescuers agreed that the work was not enjoyable and they had to stay "personally unattached."

"While I'm looking for a body I have mixed emotions. It's depressing and the sight of a body is an awkward feeling. There's no joy in finding a body. It's not a game of who can find the body first. It's a job that has to be done and done well," Eure said.

Squad member Barry Sutherland, who helped drag for two missing bodies in the Tar River recently, said, "I went for the first ... (Feb. 23-24). It was right much different from practice. We kept hooking trash and started pulling it up. Each time, I had a bad feeling in the pit of my stomach. The worst part is thinking what it's going to look like when it comes to the top. After the initial shock of seeing it the first time, I was all right."

After the body is recovered, the rescue squad's part is over. A medical examiner is called to the scene and does a preliminary examination of the body. Eure said the body is then taken to the hospital morgue for further examination.

"It's a long, drawn-out process," said Eure, "and it's boring at times, but we just have to keep going at it. It's not something we like to do."

$100 Million In Cocaine Seized

STUART, Fla. (AP) — Sheriff's deputies seized 337 pounds of cocaine estimated to be worth more than $100 million Saturday after officers making a routine airport check spotted a man hiding in a light plane.

Authorities said the Cessna 310's pilot may have been lost and landed at the Stuart airport by mistake.

The plane landed about 3 a.m. and taxied to the fuel pumps, but was spotted by Martin County deputies making a routine check at the airport, said U.S. Customs spokeswoman Kitty Pryor.

Ms. Pryor said the deputies asked the pilot, John Frederick White, 47, of Miami, where he was going.

At the men chatted near the plane, a deputy saw a man lying behind the Cessna's seats. The deputy ordered the pilot out of the plane, and found two men inside.

"The deputy then saw there were packages inside. Round packages that looked like the typical cocaine shipment," said Ms. Pryor.

The deputies obtained a search warrant and, accompanied by Customs and Drug Enforcement Administration agents, seized 337 pounds of cocaine from the plane.

The rear seats had been torn out, Ms. Pryor said, and buckets of fuel stowed aboard to lengthen the aircraft's range.

According to Ms. Pryor, a flight plan filed in Colombia showed the men were flying to Big Whale Key in the Bahamas. "I don't think they knew where they were," she said. "That's why they landed."

Election Tests NATO Stance

BONN, West Germany (AP) — A slow economy and West Germany's future role in NATO are the major issues Sunday in what the Soviet and Western blocs are calling the most important elections in the country's 34-year history.

In his final campaign speech Saturday, Social Democrat challenger Hans-Jochen Vogel called the arms race "an intolerable scandal" and urged voters to give him a mandate "to do everything possible to make the stationing of further (U.S.) missiles superfluous."

Chancellor Helmut Kohl said during his final campaign appearance that a vote for his conservative Christian Democratic Union would show West Germans "want to remain a part of the Western world."

The wrapup speeches in the two-month campaign underscored the importance of defense issues in a country with an active peace movement and thousands of foreign-controlled nuclear weapons on its soil.

Commissioners Should Serve As Volunteers

Experienced government watchers have to be leery of a bill which was introduced in the Legislature last week to allow members of Greenville Utilities Commission board of directors to set their own compensation.

Presently the board members receive $50 per month and anyone who is aware of the time it takes to serve on this commission would agree this is only a token amount. But shouldn't it be?

The board serves to set policy for Greenville Utilities and as such it is made up of citizen representatives of the public which owns the utilities system. From the first day of operation of Greenville Utilities the board positions have attracted some of the city's most outstanding people. The result has been a utilities system which has been operated efficiently. As we are seeing today, the local utilities have performed more efficiently than some privately owned utilities.

Thus, those who serve on the board now and in the past deserve all the credit we can give them. That does not, however, extend to the point of providing an open-ended invitation to set their compensation at any level they choose.

There are many other citizens serving on Greenville and Pitt County boards and shouldering awesome responsibilities. Many serve without any compensation and others serve with only token compensation. In a democracy, that is the way it should be. We as citizens give of our time to become involved in government. That, in turn, gives us the most responsible government we can have.

What ever is done about the bill to give the commissioners the power to set their own compensation, they should bear in mind that they are citizens first. It was never intended that Utilities Commission members should be salaried and any large increase in their compensation could set a bad precedent for all the other volunteer boards and commissions of the city and the county.

A Hundred Years Being Celebrated By Grifton Citizens

One hundred years have passed since the town of Grifton was established and citizens of that community have begun a celebration which will continue through their traditional Shad Festival April 13-17.

The community was established as Bell's Ferry in 1883. Six years later on March 9, 1889 the name was changed to Grifton.

Now Grifton is a thriving town on the Pitt County line with Lenoir County. Part of it, in fact, is in Lenoir.

Community leaders have adopted the slogan "100 Years of Progress and Growth" as they celebrate their 100th birthday.

Grifton will be conducting its annual Shad Festival for the 13th year this year which is a major indication of the industriousness and community interest of its citizens.

All of us in Pitt County are as proud of the town of Grifton as its citizens are. We wish the community a happy 100th birthday.

Sunday Morning Notes

Alvin Taylor

Collards are a Southern delicacy. Expert cooks can make them taste like the finest of dishes and, as most of us know, the town of Ayden has developed its Collard Festival around them.

It is at that time of the year that people come from far and wide to participate in fun events and pay tribute to the leafy vegetable. The festival is climaxed by a collard-eating contest at which the winner is chosen by the amount of collards he can eat.

With all that in mind we turn to a story told to us by Jim Holmes who, as a member of the Air Guard, flies to Europe on training missions. The stopover point is the Azores.

"There's not a lot there," Jim says. Lajes field is on the main island and there is a town nearby. "Across the island is a town called Angra and one of the places we go to eat there is called the Lusitania, a neighborhood-type restaurant."

He said the restaurant has seafood and soups. "Someone suggested that I try the vegetable soup," said Jim. "The things in it looked familiar and I thought I spotted something that looked like collards."

Jim talked to the waiter and he came back with the raw plant. Sure enough, it was collards.

Jim took the bus back and he noticed that there were collard plants all over the place. He said he hadn't seen them on previous trips because he took local taxis. The way the taxi drivers drive "you keep your head down and your eyes closed," Jim laughed.

The soup, by the way, was good. It contained the collards, cabbage and something similar to great northern beans.

The island is Portugese-settled and that is the language spoken there. It has a rooster coat of arms because a crowing rooster apparently saved it from invasion along the way. It has 14th century churches and the populace still hunts whales. "It's a nice place to be for about 24 hours," Jim said.

He is an electronic warfare officer in the Air Guard.

The Azores are composed of 10 major islands in the North Atlantic. They are approximately 740 miles east of Portugal. The air bases were important facilities for the United States in World War II and since the 1970s, by agreement with Portugal, the United States has maintained a military presence there.

Tip

Walter Mears

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan isn't yet saying whether he'll seek a second term — but a rejuvenated Tip O'Neill is running for a 17th. He's also running the House in a fashion that has silenced sometime Democratic critics who used to say the speaker was out of touch with his troops.

O'Neill says he definitely and absolutely plans to run for another House term in 1984. That makes it almost as definite and absolute that he'll get it. He won last time with 75 percent of the vote in his Boston area congressional district.

Two years ago O'Neill was down, and there were Democrats who said he should be out as their ranking leader in Washington. Reagaonomics was taking shape over the futile protests of loyalists in a divided House Democratic majority.

During Reagan's first White House springtime, while the administration lobbied for budget cuts, O'Neill spent a House recess traveling abroad. While the president and his spokesman sought every opportunity to promote their program on radio and television, O'Neill declined network invitations.

He conceded early, albeit correctly on the first Reagan budget, anticipating that Democratic votes would make the president the victor. "I've been in politics an awful long time and I know when you fight and when you don't," he said. Some Democrats thought that an overdose of candor.

The complaints gave rise to speculation that O'Neill would be stepping out as speaker in a session or two. That, in turn, gave rise to speculation about a possible successor, with Majority Leader Jim Wright of Texas and Rep. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, rated likely rivals. The word from the speaker now is no vacancy.

Republicans hired a lookalike actor to appear in campaign advertisements taunting O'Neill. Not long ago, O'Neill turned actor to play himself in a brief appearance on the television comedy series, "Cheers."

He also played himself as a campaigner for Democratic House candidates last fall, raising money and hunting votes in eight campaign missions across the nation.

At the same time, he began making more appearances on radio and television, and mounted a barrage of statements and speeches assailing the Reagan program and extolling Democratic alternatives.

The Democrats gained 26 seats in the House, and O'Neill emerged as something of a campaign hero.

After a season of losing to the Republican-conservative coalition that approved Reagan's tax and budget cuts, the House Democratic leadership started winning on economic issues. And that was before the reinforcements won in November arrived to take their House seats.

The speaker was, and is, the spokesman, and the grumbling of liberal Democrats was silenced. In a labor speech this winter, O'Neill recalled that he had been described as on the ropes two years ago, then as a revived political leader. He said neither was true.

"I am not any different than I was two years ago," O'Neill said. "But the House of Representatives is a lot different. It is firmly Democratic."

He wants more.

"To be honest, I am a little tired of compromising with a Republican president and a Republican Senate," he said Monday. "Democratic control of the House is not enough. We need a Democrat in the White House and Democrats in control of the Senate to get this country moving again."

Legislature Opens Door On Video Games

Paul T. O'Connor

RALEIGH — When Sen. Cass Ballenger, R-Catawba, proposed a tax on video arcade games, the Raleigh press corps knew it had a good topic for irreverence.

Why stop with a tax? The state could get right into the software business using some of our political heroes as the subjects of video games. There won't be any deficit once the state starts collecting royalties on some of these games.

One reporter anonymously posted his game proposals on the press room bulletin board. Others added theirs. Here are a few samples of the games which Atari, Intellivision and Coleco will soon wish they'd copyrighted.

"Hunt Man: Multifaceted contest in which the player advances from pink-cheeked farm boy to executive, then collects and spends state's surplus fund.

"Party Man: Also called Round Rufus. Object is to avoid or jump obstacles (issues, positions) in quest of goal, called Ultimate Bash.

"Green Man: Attempts to eat power dots while dodging ghost investigations which will eat him if he's caught. Object is to survive.

"Solon Invaders: In alternating years, 170 Neandergoths invade otherwise quiet city of 150,000 leaving it covered with tobacco juice, shrimp peelings and study commissions. Object: Get them to leave in less that six months.

The five female members of the Senate are using their feminine charms on the Senate's leadership this year.

First they took Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green out for dinner and dancing. Then they spent a similar evening with Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, Senate majority leader.

Royall says he had an enjoyable, albeit tiring, evening. "I had five to dance with," he said. Finally, some lobbyists came by and gave Royall a chance to rest.

The highlight of both evenings, Mrs. Woodard said, came with the singer's final number: "I Am Woman, Hear Me Now."

Reagan Risks Taxpayers' Wrath

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON — Just as economic recovery has dramatically improved his political prospects, President Reagan is risking taxpayer wrath by following the advice of Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan and Senate Finance Chairman Robert Dole, instead of his own instincts, in insisting on tax withholding for interest and dividends.

The president lost his last chance to escape the withholding trap last Thursday when he sent a letter to Dole strongly opposing repeal of the withholding provision tucked into last summer's tax increase. Reagan resisted Dole's pressure to threaten a veto, but that scarcely reduces odds that Reagan will veto any repeal bill.

A veto would further alienate Reagan from the anti-tax sentiment that helped carry him to the presidency. To avoid that, the administration wants to block repeal legislation until withholding actually takes effect July 1. But that will not silence millions of overwithheld taxpayers, railing against "Reagan's Tax." Not accidentally, two Democratic presidential candidates — Sens. John Glenn and Gary Hart — have leaped on the repeal bandwagon. What's more, the fight to preserve withholding threatens to link Reagan with brass-knuckle tactics so characteristic of Bob Dole, but not the president.

The avowed reason why the president, suddenly grown conciliatory on public works spending, cannot relax on withholding is the $10.5 billion in revenue it is supposed to pick up over three years from presumed tax-avoiders. That figure is not only insignificant in a booming economy; it may be grossly exaggerated. The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) estimates current interest and dividend compliance at 90 percent and, in a 1981 study, guessed that matching up reporting forms with tax returns could result in 97.3 percent compliance.

Thus, the tax withholding trap for Reagan results from neither economic necessity nor moral imperative. Rather, in an illustration of how Washington works, the president is yielding to two determined men — Don Regan and Bob Dole — unwilling to abandon what each regards as a personal achievement.

When Dole was shaping his 1981 legislative coup d'etat of a $100 billion tax increase, he snapped up that old chestnut of withholding taxes on savings to bring in a tenth of the total. The president confided to protesting lawmakers last summer that he did not much like withholding, but "they" had told him it "as necessary.

"They" included the secretary of the Treasury, who came down from Merrill Lynch two years ago with no notion he would carve his niche in history with dividend withholding. In retrospect, Regan now proudly reminds associates how everybody laughed when he sat down at the withholding piano and then sang a tune that eluded a generation of "revenooers." Little wonder, then, that the old Marine Corps colonel vows a fight to keep his tune playing.

Seeing no "people issue," the administration seeks to delay a vote until banks have installed costly new computers and, therefore, have lost their will to fight. Meanwhile, Dole is using the same blackmail tactics that succeeded last year in getting the restaurant industry to withhold taxes on tips as a lesser evil to an expense-account crackdown. There are grins in high places at the White House over Dole's threats of higher taxes on banks and hints of no bailout from improvident Third World loans.

Cowed by Regan and Dole, the banks might like to cry uncle. But Kasten and a lengthening bipartisan list of lawmakers say it is too late for bankers to turn off the popular protest. If so, Ronald Reagan has mindlessly wandered into an easily avoidable political trap.

Sun Is Now Shining For American Navy

James J. Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — Our town feeds on flubs, follies and failures. Let a president foul up his figures, and it is Page One stuff for the morning Post. The hounds of the House are baying after Anne Burford, administrator of the EPA. In the midst of the gloom and doom, it's rare that a success story comes along, but I have one today. The sun is shining on the U.S. Navy.

Two years ago, the picture was quite different. More than half of the ships in the U.S. fleet could not be fully manned. Hundreds of career petty officers were leaving the service. Naval aviation was in deep trouble. The fleet was suffering from serious problems of morale, made worse by the use of narcotics aboard ship.

John F. Lehman, secretary of the navy, isn't going to contend that everything is hunky-dory now, but in an interview last week he made a convincing case in support of his view that smoother sailing lies ahead.

The critical problems of personnel, he says, are plainly on their way to solution. Several factors have contributed to the brightening picture. A hefty raise in pay has helped. Severe unemployment in the private sector has made naval service more attractive to young men. Two years ago, the figures on re-enlistment rates were appalling: The Navy simply could not hold its expensively trained technicians after a first or second hitch.

Things are looking up. The re-enlistment rate, overall, has climbed to 79 percent. More than half of the first-termers are signing on for a second term. As one consequence, the Navy is now able to get rid of its troublemakers and non-performers; more than 12,000 men have been effectively sacked in the past two years by denying them a chance to sign on again. The drug problem hasn't been cured, but Lehman is satisfied that it has been greatly relieved. To be sure, the Navy is still short about 14,000 petty officers, but this number will steadily decline as younger and less experienced sailors climb the ladders of promotion after time in grade.

Today, says Lehman, "All of our ships and all of our forward deployed marine units are fully manned, and all of our aircraft squadrons are very nearly at full manning levels."

At the moment, Lehman's particular pride and joy is the recommissioned battleship New Jersey. She was brought on line in December, five weeks ahead of schedule and $11 million under budget. For a total outlay of $326 million, he contends, the taxpayers have bought a handsome bargain.

The refitted New Jersey may be 40 years old, but the old girl has had a facelift. She is newly equipped with formidable weapons — Tomahawk missiles, Harpoon canister launchers and sophisticated systems of communications. Her awesome 16-inch guns are capable of throwing 2,700-pound shells at targets more than 20 miles away. In a span of 30 minutes, Lehman points out, a battleship can deliver as much destructive gunfire as 18 or 19 destroyers could provide in the same period — and it can deliver at much longer range.

A year hence, the New Jersey will be followed by the refitted battleship Iowa. On down the line, the Missouri and the Wisconsin are in prospect. And lest anyone suppose that the old wagons are slowpokes at sea, Lehman has a reassuring word: At 33 knots, despite her displacement of nearly 58,000 tons, the New Jersey can keep up with any capital ship afloat.

Lehman also is pleased with the progress on two new Nimitz-class aircraft carriers. Every effort in Congress to scuttle these ships has been defeated, and work on them is on schedule at Newport News, Va. Over the next seven years, the taxpayers will put out $7.5 billion to buy the carriers, but the investment, he says, is indispensable. "There are now 700 Soviet ships in the Pacific that weren't there 10 years ago. We can't let the Pacific go by default."

Lehman doesn't want to overdo the impression of good cheer. He is concerned, as he must be, by the ominous buildup of the Soviet navy. He is concerned that congressional efforts to reduce prospective deficits will focus upon his orderly program of rebuilding the fleet. As the unemployment picture improves, it may be more difficult to obtain highly qualified recruits. Higher sea pay would be a great incentive. But taking one thing with another, these are relatively sunny days for the fleet. In our town, you hardly ever hear a good word said, but in Lehman's office, thumbs are up.

Farm Bureau Official Says Joint Effort Is Needed

A Reflector Guest Columnist

In the early 1930s, farmers across the nation struggled with economic conditions which drove many into bankruptcy. The farmers of eastern North Carolina were particularly hard hit because both of their money crops were in jeopardy. The boll weevil was making it impossible to produce cotton and the shift to tobacco was causing over-production of that crop. The situation was critical, as it is today, and something had to be done quickly or private ownership of farm land would soon end.

A few brave souls (several Pitt Countians among them) decided that if anything worthwhile was to be accomplished in the way of relief, it would be necessary to attack their problems through an organized effort. The organization eventually created for such purpose was the North Carolina Farm Bureau.

As quickly as possible after its formation, this organization set out to accomplish what has proven to be the most successful commodity program ever devised — the tobacco quota program. Later, the price support feature of the tobacco program was added and tobacco production since that time has been profitable for most serious, businesslike farmers.

Recently, tobacco, along with other U.S.-grown commodities, has encountered difficulties at the market place. Several causes have contributed to this situation. U.S. inflation, along with the value of the American dollar, are certainly a part of the problem. Recently, the increase in most states' tobacco tax, along with a sizeable cigarette tax increase on the national level, has caused great cencern over potential loss in cigarette sales by tobacco manufacturing companies.

Cheaper (subsidized) tobacco coming into this country to compete with our product has become more attractive to buying companies. Higher tariffs applied to U.S. tobacco going into most foreign countries make U.S. tobacco less attractive.

Today, the N.C. Farm Bureau, as it did almost 50 years ago, is doing all it possibly can to protect and preserve a tobacco program which has in the past, and can in the future, make tobacco production, tobacco processing and tobacco manufacturing sound and solid industries despite the efforts of anti-tobacco forces which hope to divide and conquer the entire tobacco industry. Decisions are not made by this great organization without long and thoughtful consideration.

A careful analysis of the expected impact on the tobacco economy is made by neutral and well-qualified parties prior to any request for action. Recently, (state Farm Bureau) President Sledge appointed two ad hoc committees of 10 members each (mostly young, active tobacco growers) to meet and study all information available concerning our current situation. After three lengthy meetings of these committees, they presented their findings to the N.C. Farm Bureau Tobacco Advisory Committee. This committee has representation from every major tobacco-producing county in the state.

Together, these three committees were to decide what, if any, legislative action was to be requested for tobacco in 1983. The decision reached by these committees was, although some changes probably will have to be made eventually, that it was best not to seek action until we as growers are united in what we wish in the way of change. This committee report was presented to the board of directors of N. C. Farm Bureau and ... (it) concurred in this opinion.

I may add that N. C. Farm Bureau does not stand alone in this position on flue-cured (tobacco). Also, the burley tobacco-producing states, upon whom we must depend for support if legislation is attempted, express great reluctance to go back to Congress so soon.

At present N.C. Farm Bureau, with support from the American Farm Bureau, is extending every effort to retain the privilege we have been granted to sell tobacco directly from Stabilization stocks to overseas customers. This privilege recently granted by Secretary of Agriculture Block is being contested in court by several tobacco companies. Likewise, Farm Bureau is very involved in tariff-related action which,if accomplished, could make us somewhat more competitive in the world market.

Efforts to increase cigarette taxes by 25 cents per pack in Arkansas has caused all tobacco-producing state Farm Bureaus to solicit Arkansas Farm Bureau opposition to such tax, even though they grow no tobacco. This is an example of what a multicrop farm organization has going for it. Agricultural subsidies paid to foreign growers (which help them under-sell our growers) by countries receiving financial aid from the United States are being investigated by Farm Bureau. These are such causes as must be pursued if we are to survive as tobacco producers.

Certainly no one organization pretends to have the answer to all problems of the tobacco industry. We must, however, be careful that we, through a lack of knowledge or bitterness caused by prsonal problems, do not criticize and render ineffective those who attempt always to work for the welfare of the great majority.

There is no dubt that other organizations are giving serious consideration for what is good for tobacco. They are to be commended for the time and effort they give and doubtless their in-put will help. N.C. Farm Bureau, through its broad base of activities, is in a position to negotiate with non-tobacco producing states who need our help with their commodities.

This affords it an opportunity to give greater aid to tour cause. Tobacco companies, manufacturers, warehousemen and producers will either prosper or collapse together and we had as well realize that. It is time for the bickering to stop and we get down to business together.

Atlas Wooten, a Pitt County resident, is a member of the American Farm Bureau Federation Tobacco Committee, the North Carolina Farm Bureau Federation Tobacco Committee, a director of the Flue-Cured Tobacco Stabilization Corp., vice president of the North Carolina Farm Bureau and is past president of the Pitt County Farm Bureau. He also is a member of the board of directors of the Tobacco Growers Committee.

Public Forum

To the editor:

The government commission is saying, after 40 years, the Japanese should not have been rounded up and placed in camps. Some are also saying the U.S.A. government, our tax money, should pay a large amount to each Japanese that was interned.

First, we should be reminded of the past. Just prior to the fatal strike, the Japanese ambassador went to the White House and told President Roosevelt everything was OK. However, on the morning of Dec. 7, 1941, the Japanese murderers in sneak attack killed hundreds of military personnel, civilians and destroyed most of our Navy and Army air force in unprovoked war. I didn't approve much that President Roosevelt did but, in my opinion, he was absolutely right in removing all Japanese in order to eliminate the possibility of sabotage and for the protection of the Japanese people.

I wonder if it occured to the commission and others that every American that served in the armed forces had been removed from his home, his family and his job for years, like three to six. They were not interned in safe quarters with their families, plus food and some recreation for free. The American military personnel had to fight, were killed and captured and imprisoned. The fate and risk of our military was materially greater than the Japanese in the camps.

Remember, President Truman made the decision to drop the atomic bomb. I know he was right — thousands and thousands of us are alive today because there was no invasion of Japan.

The greediness of the Japanese was evident at Pearl Harbor; through all the years after the war and now today, they are doing everything to destroy our American business health. Japan wants free trade for all products they sell to America, but to maintain very stiff and prohibitive regulations to keep out American goods in Japan.

America has been extremely good to all Japanese and we hope they will reciprocate one of these days.

My friend Hassellover is always asking me questions that I can't answer. Here's one: "If a man goes into a dramshop and orders a scotch and soda for himself and three packs of cigarettes to take home to his wife, and if, in the following week, his wife's doctor discovers that she has lung cancer, what will the State do to the dramshop owner?"

Another question he asks: "If the president is right in his assertion that pollution is caused by trees, should the government offer a subsidy to the Very Rich to breed and train dogs to trickle on trees? Wouldn't the dog's trickle rightfully poison and kill the offending trees? And wouldn't the subsidy trickle down to the man who scavenges in the dumpster behind Eckerd's these days, ferreting out lunches of damp Nabs and discarded bacon bits?"

And still he goes on: "Are you aware that there are 9,192,651,720 vibrations of a cesium beam clock in one second of time? If we are fortunate enough to have, here on earth, a senator who knows right down to a single vibration just when gametes have become zygote, zygote has become homo, and homo has become sapiens in the womb, and who can positively assert that personhood has begun at that very vibration, Himself determining that a desperate woman may not have an abortion after that vibration, do we really also need God?"

Hassellover! Hush yo' fuss!

To the editor:

In 1982 $67 million was estimated to be sufficient to operate the tobacco program. The flue-cured program used over $500 million.

Flue-Cured Stabilization receipts were in 1982 were 10 cents per pound above the average support price. USDA suggested a 10-cent-per-pound assessment in 1983 to realistically comply with the no-net-cost obligation of the 1982 law.

The compromise seven-cents-per-pound assessment, coupled with estimates of more than $300 million being needed to operate Stabilization in 1983, caused us to be skeptical of our members of Congress's ability to secure appropriations for 1983.

The failure to secure funds approval for Stabilization's 1983 operation will cause loss of price support, thus default on Commodity Credit Corporation obligations.

Reform of the tobacco program in 1983 is the only solution which can satisfy most members of Congress.

A realistic commitment to operate the tobacco programs at no cost to the federal treasury is required to assure the tobacco program's continued existence.

EPA Cloud Hangs On

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan is finding that the cloud over the Environmental Protection Agency "just won't go away," as one aide put it.

So the investigation will go on, even though the president has tried to cut his losses by some firings and replacing of officials in the middle echelon.

His aides say he is fully committed to supporting EPA Administrator Anne Burford even though there are some rumblings at the White House that he should make a clean sweep of the EPA hierarchy.

It has been Reagan's style to remain loyal to beleaguered top aides who have been loyal to him.

Mrs. Burford has gone along with EPA budget cuts and the policies of the administration, which some of the career personnel have severely criticized as detrimental.

The president has long felt that the questions of environment were overly exaggerated by environmentalists. During his campaign, he suggested that trees were the cause of air pollution and that the continuing oil slicks off the Santa Barbara, Calif., coast purified the sea breezes.

On his first trip to his California mountaintop ranch, the president looked down from his helicopter window on the oil rigs off Santa Barbara and proclaimed them "a beautiful sight."

Since he has been in the White House environmental issues have not been of prime concern except when a disaster forced recognition of the dangers as in the case of the dioxin scare at Times Beach, Mo.

But what the president did not bargain for is the heightened understanding and fear of the dumping of toxic wastes by the public at large. There is no question that what once was viewed as strictly a concern among youth has now reverberated throughout the country and the threshhold of protecting the public health against nuclear and toxic wastes and pollutants has increased with each passing year.

Since Mrs. Burford had voted against anti-pollution measures when she was in the Colorado Legislature, there was some question about her appointment.

Preoccupied with his economic program, Reagan did not give the EPA top priority consideration in the early days of his administration.

He left the policy guidance to counselor Edwin Meese and Cabinet Secretary Craig Fuller.

But the neglect has led to big problems and allegations of mismanagement and conflict of interest that now deeply concern the White House.

Reagan has ordered White House counsel Fred Fielding to conduct a review of contacts between White House aides and EPA officials in view of allegations that there may have been political considerations in the management of the $1.6 billion Superfund to clean up hazardous waste dumps.

The struggle over turning over documents to congressional committees and the invoking of executive privelege by Reagan led to days of conflict and suspicion.

The charges, forced resignations of top officials and the inquiries, not to mention reports of document shredding, have hurt morale in the agency.

As a result, chief of staff James Baker has moved in to assess the damage and to help Reagan to clean house.

The president has indicated that some of the problem may be with the probing media in dealing with the headline making story.

But it is hard for the media to ignore six congressional committees investigating the same story.

George Gallup

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — With the stage in Washington now set for a showdown between the Reagan Administration and the Congress over the size of the defense budget for fiscal 1984, there is stronger public support today than has existed in a decade for a reduction in military spending.

In the latest Gallup survey, a 45 percent plurality says the government is spending too much for defense compared to 14 percent who say too little. A continuation of the present level of military spending is favored by 33 percent of Americans. Not since 1973 has public opinion been as supportive of a reduction in defense spending as it is today.

Only two years ago, the situation was the reverse. In an early 1981 survey, 51 percent of Americans said they believed too little was being spent on defense while 22 percent felt the budget was adequate and only 15 percent thought that too much was budgeted for military purposes.

A substantial part of the public's strong resistance to greater military spending stems from their apprehension about the projected federal budget deficits.

As reported recently, six in 10 Americans (57 percent) approve of cuts in defense spending as a means of reducing the deficit while 41 percent favor further cuts in government spending for social programs. Far fewer chose the other two options for deficit reduction presented in the survey: raising income taxes (18 percent) and making cuts in "entitlement" programs (12 percent).

President Reagan's proposed 1984 budget asks for a 14 percent increase in military spending and a virtual freeze on spending for domestic programs.

Political Overtones

As might be expected, there are strong political overtones to public opinion on defense spending. Far more Democrats (51 percent) than Republicans (32 percent) feel the government has budgeted to much for military purposes, although only 17 percent of Republicans say too little is budgeted.

Following is the question asked and the results among key population groups:

"There is much discussion as to the amount of money the government in Washington should spend for national defense and military purposes. How do you feel about this: do you think we are spending too little, too much, or about the right amount?"

Cooperation Shows Up On Economic Scene

NEW YORK (AP) — Something we haven't seen much of over the past few years, cooperation, has reappeared on the economic scene, sometimes in very unlikely places.

In the White House and Congress, for example, where there seems to be some understanding about the nature of a jobs bill, and in the ranks of steelmakers and steelworkers, where each have made concessions for the mutual good.

Cooperation is international, too.

Japan has agreed to extend its restraint on automotive exports to the United States, and the big central banks and commercial lenders are working to ease the problems of their foreign borrowers.

The underlying assumption in all instances seems to be that there is a common goal to be achieved, and that former antagonists had better hang together or else they might hang separately.

That is another way of saying that all the groups involved have had a glimpse into a future as bleak as a black hole, and therefore have become strongly committed to letting in the light of reason.

Argus Research Corp. commented in a report last week to big investors that "the level of cooperation in recent months between debtors and lenders and between the private and public sectors is unprecedented."

The economists at Argus referred mainly to efforts to forestall collapse of the international financial system, but their comments could apply also to the agreement between steelmakers and steelworkers.

The U.S. steel industry has been closing down, by management design and because of the realities of foreign competition. Last year the industry operated at less than 50 percent of capacity — a diminished capacity at that.

That meant losses to both management and labor, a situation that these traditional antagonists agreed could be alleviated by 266,000 workers taking an immediate $1.25-an-hour paycut.

Adding to the urgency was what some in the industry considered to be an ultimatum from General Motors and other carmakers for steel people to settle up and avoid strikes or face additional loss of business to foreign competitors.

Such cooperation is rare in labor negotiations, especially over the past decade, when hundreds of major agreements in various industries were reached without consideration for the impact on productivity.

Most economists would likely find a connection between this oversight and the consequences that overtook U.S. industry:

Foreign competition that underpriced domestically produced goods, the almost total loss to the Japanese of some industries and reduction in the size of others, a severe recession and unemployment, and the prospect that many workers would never get jobs again.

It is still quite early to say how far cooperation will proceed in any of these instances, but it isn't too early to comment on the amazing contrasts with earlier behavior.

Cooperation isn't pervasive by any means, but neither is destructive competition and antagonism as prevalent as it was.

Congress and the White House seem to agree that it is better to work together on a jobs bill than do nothing at all.

Japan seems ready to recognize it cannot operate freely in U.S. markets if the United States cannot do so in Japanese markets.

Lenders — from the great international banks to the smallest savings and loan associations — seem more aware of their dependence on borrowers, and have offered to accommodate them.

And the United Steelworkers union, which had sought bigger and better terms in every contract, and steelmakers, who were closing plants and diversifying into other industries, have recognized they have a common concern and future.

Nurses Have Found A Niche Among Legislative Lobbyists

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Patrice Solberg pointed proudly to the empty chairs lining the hotel room where the North Carolina Nurses Association was hosting a reception for legislators.

"Our members were kind of shy when we did this last time and they would just sit on the side," recalled Ms. Solberg, a Chapel Hill attorney who lobbies for the association. "Now our nurses are less nervous ... we're extremely interested in the political process."

Nurses aren't the only health care professionals taking greater interest in the Legislature this session. Lobbyists for several other health groups say they are more actively involved than ever in state lawmaking.

Some believe this surge of activity has trimmed the influence of the powerful North Carolina Medical Society, but others say the various groups have been able to co-exist.

Probably nowhere is the increased politicking more obvious than among nurses. Two years ago they flooded the legislative halls to push through a bill that gave them more control over their own profession.

This year, despite the lack of a comparable issue, a capacity crowd of 250 attended a recent nursing association seminar on the Legislature and 500 people came to the reception. The association also has three lobbyists following bills, an unusually large team considering the group claims only 2,500 members.

The Medical Society and the North Carolina Hospital Association have doubled their lobbying staffs to two people each. Chiropractors, nursing home owners, podiatrists, physical therapists and dentists are among the dozen health groups that have hired representatives.

The groups still differ radically in the amount of campaign contributions. During 1982 the North Carolina Medical Society Political Education and Action Committee spent nearly $60,000, almost all of it in campaign contributions, according to state records. The Chiropractic Political Action Committee of North Carolina spent over $31,000 during the last half of 1982.

In contrast, the nurses' PAC doled out about $2,300.

Despite that difference, Ms. Solberg believes the medical society's power "has strikingly deteriorated."

"I think they sort of took it on the chin (in 1981) with the Nursing Practices Act, but most of their beating came from the chiropractors and the trial lawyers," she said.

Chiropractors and physicians battled two years ago over a bill that would have allowed chiropractors to expand their practices. The Senate passed the bill but the measure died in the House. Trial lawyers were more successful, however, in their ability to see passed a bill changing the rules regarding the use of the hypothetical question in court cases.

Labor Wins In Australia

SYDNE , , Australia — Former union boss Bob Hawke and his opposition Labor Party on Saturday defeated Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser's conservative coalition, which had angered voters by failing to reverse Australia's high inflation and unemployment rates.

The jubilant Hawke, a onetime world-champion beer drinker, said he would celebrate his election victory with lime juice and mineral water.

Belushi Probe Nearly Completed

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A prosecutor said Saturday he was nearly completed preparing evidence to present to a grand jury in the death one year ago of comedian John Belushi. Deputy District Attorney Michael Montagna said he expexts the jury investigation to result in a criminal indictment later this month.

Belushi, 33, who gained fame playing a series of characters on TV's "Saturday Night Live," was found naked and dead on the bedroom floor of his bungalow in a Sunset Strip hotel March 5, 1982. The coroner's autopsy report described his final days as a haze of drunkenness and drug use.

Moscow Ignores Stalin Anniversary

MOSCOW — The 30th anniversary of the death of Premier Josef Stalin was virtually ignored Saturday by the nation that has tried to forget the dictator denounced as a madman by his successor Nikita S. Khrushchev.

Most traces of the man who ruled the Soviet Union for more than a quarter of a century before his death March 5, 1953, have been removed.

Guerrillas Release Journalist

SAN SALVADOR — U.S. reporter Michael Luhan, missing for three weeks in El Salvador, appeared Saturday at an army post and said he had been freed by leftist guerrillas who had kidnapped him, the U.S. Embassy announced.

A spokesman said Luhan, 30, of Bloomington, Ind., was unhurt but tired, covered with mosquito bites and 25 pounds lighter after a long trek with the guerrillas. He said Luhan, a freelance reporter for the Dallas Morning News, was left by guerrillas in a small town north of the capital after he told his captors he was too tired to march any farther.

Official's Aide Questioned

ROME (AP) — Two top investigators on Saturday questioned an aide to Labor Minister Vincenzo Scotti in connection with an alleged plot to murder Solidarity leader Lech Walesa with a bomb during his trip to Rome in January, 1981.

Police sources said the aide is one of eight people, including four Bulgarians, being investigated in the alleged plot. The others include Mehmet Ali Agca, the Turkish terrorist serving a life sentence for the attempted murder of Pope John Paul II in May 1981.

OWINGS MILLS, Md. (AP) — Hours after his wife died of cancer, a 62-year-old physician and his son were killed in a fire that swept through his suburban Baltimore home early Saturday, police said.

Dr. Ernest C. Brown Jr. and his 31-year-old son, Randolph, died of apparent smoke inhalation during the fire that broke out about 5 a.m. Brown's 56-year-old wife, Jean, died Friday.

French Hold Elections Sunday

PARIS — President Francois Mitterrand's Socialist-Communist government tests its popularity Sunday in the first round of nationwide municipal elections. At stake are six-year terms for city councils in France's 36,433 communities — local contests that have blossomed into a nationwide referendum on the left's performance since it swept into power 22 months ago.

Reagan: Burford Has Job 'Long As She Wants'

DENVER (AP) — Environmental Protection Agency chief Anne M. Burford, given a fresh pledge of support from President Reagan, said Saturday she was "fairly confused" over the Justice Department's withdrawal from her case. But she added she would "always follow the directions of this president."

Mrs. Burford gave no signs Saturday of any plans to resign her job at the embattled agency and President Reagan added his own endorsement of her.

At a stopover at a plywood mill in Klamath Falls, Ore., the president was asked how long Mrs. Burford could keep her job. He responded, "As long as she wants to."

Asked if he had complete confidence in her, Reagan said, "Yes."

Mrs. Burford did not refer to the president's remarks in her speech to the Colorado Federation of Republican Women, where she defended the administration's "solid record of achievement" in cleaning up toxic chemical waste dumps.

"I am pictured as being personally responsible for every drum of hazardous waste in the country," she said.

But what never gets reported, she said, is that the Reagan administration "is the first administration to do anything about cleaning it up."

"We have met the challenge, but it is unfortunate that there is a cloud over the program," she said.

Noting last week's announcement that the Justice Department will no longer represent her in the contempt of Congress case against her, Mrs. Burford said, "This leaves me in a fairly confused state."

But she continued, "I will always follow the directions of this president. He is a wopnderful man."

Mrs. Burford, who received two standing ovations, said she was "a little tired" from all the turmoil in Wahington but was "glad to be among old friends." Before joing the Reagan administration, she was a Republican member of the Colorado legislature.

Despite the president's public statement, CBS News said Saturday night that unidentified "sources" were saying privately that "Reagan has begun to come around to the view that Mrs. Burford has to go" because of her remarks criticizing the way the White House has handled the controversy. "Aides are saying privately now that one way or another she will be gone in a few days," the network said.

The president's public pledge of support came after another hectic week at the agency with new accusations surfacing that Mrs. Burford had particpated in the political manipulation of a $1.6 billion "superfund" cleanup program.

The week also saw the number of present or former EPA officials being investigated grow to four, including Mrs. Burford.

There were also growing calls from Republican leaders in Congress for the EPA chief to resign. Representative Robert Michel, the House GOP leader, and Sen. Robert Stafford, chairman of the Senate Environment Committee, both said on Friday that Reagan should fire Mrs. Burford.

But Mrs. Burford stuck to her guns and a busy speaking schedule over the weekend. She received an enthusiastic response Friday night from a group of Republican women in New Orleans.

On the flight to New Orleans, Mrs. Burford told The Associated Press she was "fine," but she refused talk about the growing trouble besetting the EPA.

"You guys (reporters) have given me hell," she said. "I am just going to sit back and enjoy the flight."

One of the signs of possible Reagan administration disenchantment with Mrs. Burford was the Justice Department announcement Friday that it will no longer defend her against a pending contempt of Congress citation or any future such citations against her for refusing to turn over documents subpoenaed by six subcommittees investigating the EPA.

Mrs. Burford's aides have expressed shock at this decision, saying their boss was only carrying out the president's orders when she refused to release the documents. They said she personally disagreed with the orders.

Mrs. Burford has made it known through her aides that she doesn't feel Reagan's current offer of access to EPA documents goes far enough.

Reagan has said he will not allow the congressional committees to make copies of the 70 or so "enforcement sensitive" items he is holding back. He has offered to let members of the panels have edited versions, and to inspect the originals if they are not satisfied.

Mrs. Burford, according to her aides, will urge the president at a private meeting, possibly Monday or Tuesday, to go farther and give Congress full access to the unedited documents with the only restriction being that they be kept confidential.

There was new evidence Friday that the three-month struggle over the documents and widening allegations of wrongdoing at the EPA were reflecting on the president.

Shultz Says Problems Continue Over China

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz on Saturday praised what he called China's "constructive regional role" but warned that "frustrations and problems," especially over the future of Taiwan, will continue to trouble Sino-American relations.

Shultz said the relationship can be managed and progress made if both sides resolve disputes at the bargaining table, not through unilateral actions.

Shultz emphasized the Reagan administration's view that "progress in US.-Chinese relations need not come at the expense of our other friends in the region, including our close unofficial relationship with the people of Taiwan."

He said the key to managing U.S-Chinese differences over Taiwan's future lies in observing commitments already made "and allowing the parties themselves to resolve their differences peacefully with the passage of time."

The secretary's comments followed a series of highly critical statements by Chinese leaders about U.S. ties to Taiwan.

His remarks came in the text of a speech prepared for the World Affairs Council of San Francisco. The text was made available by the the State Department in Washington.

Although the dinner was held in honor of the U.S. Middle East peace envoy, Ambassador Philip C. Habib, Shultz in his prepared remarks focused on U.S. policy in the Far East, not the prospects for an Arab-Israeli peace.

Shultz, who visited Japan, China and South Korea at the beginning of the month, praised Peking for beginning to seek closer cooperation with a number of its neighbors and to play "a constructive regional role," especially in opposition to Vietnam's occupation of Cambodia and the Soviet military presence in Afghanistan.

But he cautioned that although the United States welcomes this "new, more constructive though guarded role," the future will not be without friction.

"They will arise not only out of differences concerning Taiwan, but out of the differences between our systems," he said. "We believe that these prblems can be managed and that the community of interests that promises further progress is real."

"Our relationship with China has brought tangible results and can be a potent force for stability in the future of the region," he said.

He said in order for U.S.-Chinese relations to improve, "we must both work to reduce impediments to expanding trade in technology, as well as other economic relations, consistent with our long-term security needs."

"We must also seek to resolve any misunderstanding or dispute through consultations and negotiations rather than by unilateral action," Shultz said.

Actress Debbie Reynolds Collapses On N.Y. Stage

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Debbie Reynolds collapsed on stage Saturday during a performance of the Broadway musical "Woman of the Year," possibly from exhaustion, the show's publicist said.

Miss Reynolds "blacked out" at about 3:30 p.m., five minutes before the end of the first act. Paramedics took her to Roosevelt Hospital, according to publicist Diane Judge.

Ms. Judge said doctors suspected that exhaustion and a recent virus led to her collapse.

Hospital spokeswoman Anne Burton said Miss Reynolds was admitted for observation and was listed in stable condition. "The doctors said there is no clear diagnosis yet," she said.

A standby, Louise Troy, took over for the remainder of the matinee and also appeared in the Saturday night performance at the Palace Theater. Ms. Judge said it was unclear whether Miss Reynolds would be able to perform in the Sunday matinee.

"The show opened on March 29, 1981, and this is the first time the standby has gone on. She was very nervous," said Ms. Judge.

Miss Reynolds took over the role from Raquel Welch on Feb. 12. Lauren Bacall had the original role.

Alternate MX Plan Prepared

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Air Force, accepting a fallback position on MX basing, has drawn up a $16 billion plan to deploy the missile in existing Minuteman silos that would be superhardened to withstand Soviet nuclear warheads.

The open-ended plan envisions deploying 100 of the missiles initially with the option of enlarging the system if Congress approves a basing mode more certain to survive a Soviet attack, Air Force officials said.

Unlike a basing idea rejected by the Senate Armed Services Committee in April, this plan is not designed to build a temporary home for the MX until a permanent home is found for it but "will be part of a permanent basing mode," an Air Force official said.

Official said no site has been selected for the missiles although the choices would center on existing Air Force bases in Wyoming, Nevada and Arizona. The final choice would be open to negotiation between the administration and Congress, the officials said.

The Air Force always has regarded the Minuteman plan as a fallback in the event Congress rejected its "dense pack" concept for the 10-warhead MX, they said. But they emphasized the Air Force prefers dense pack.

The Minuteman plan gained new prominence, the officials said, after Congress turned down the administration's $26 billion proposal in December to deploy 100 MXs in 100 closely spaced, superhardened silos at Warren Air Force Base near Cheyenne, Wyo., beginning in late 1986. Congress deemed dense pack unworkable.

The Senate Armed Services Committee earlier rejected an interim plan put forward by the administration to deploy 40 MXs in hardened Minuteman or Titan silos until a more permanent basing method was found, saying it would not ensure the survivability of the missile.

A presidential commission studying basing modes for the MX is looking at the new Air Force plan as one of three or four options it will recommend to President Reagan, the Air Force officials said. The commission has another month to make its decision.

FIREMAN INJURED IN WRECK — A Winterville fireman was seriously injured Saturday morning in a wreck while his vehicle was en route to a fire near Grifton. Trooper Walter Featherston said a Winterville fire unit driven by Lynwood Ray Hines of Winterville collided with a vehicle driven by Frank Leslie Derebery, also of Winterville, on N.C. 11. The trooper said Hines was unable to stop the water truck in time to avoid a collision with the rear of the Derebery vehicle, which had changed lanes. Hines was not injured. Derebery was transported to Pitt County Memorial Hospital by members of the Ayden Rescue Squad. Investigation into the accident was continuing, according to Featherston, and no charges had been filed. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Clark Battles New Ailments

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (UPI) — Artificial heart patient Dr. Barney Clark remained on a respirator Saturday, battling his second attack of pneumonia since his Jarvik-7 artificial heart was implanted.

The surgeon treating Clark said his "good strong heart" — the first plastic pump every implanted in a human — should help him through the ailment, which was compounded by chronic emphysema.

Anne Brillinger, University of Utah Medical Center spokeswoman, said Clark was suffering from aspiration pneumonia caused by accidentally inhaling pieces of food during a bout of nausea Thursday.

He remained in fair condition at the research hospital.

Playwright Is Buried

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Tennessee Williams, who once called St. Louis residents "stupid and provincial," was buried here Saturday beside his mother.

A gathering of family, friends, and the curious spilled out from under a green canvas tent during a light rain at Calvary Cemetery as the mahogany casket containing the body of the two-time Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright was laid to rest.

Earlier, some 1,200 mourners attended a funeral Mass at the St. Louis Cathedral.

Rev. Jerome F. Wilkerson, pastor of Our Lady of Lourdes Catholic Church in St. Louis and a friend of the Williams family, eulogized Williams as as someone whose writing "seemed to be so much more therapy to others than for himself. He did a lot of dying and apparently had very little difficulty with hating life in this world."

A mile-long cortege wound to its way to the cemetery, passing through neighborhoods where the playwright grew up and started his writing career.

It was the second service for Williams, who died Feb. 24 when he apparently inhaled a plastic cap from a medicinal spray bottle. A prayer service was conducted Tuesday in Manhattan before the body was returned to St. Louis.

Williams younger brother, Dakin, of Collinsville, Ill., said he had arranged to bring the body back to St. Louis for burial in spite of his brother's wish to be "sewn up in a clean white sack and dropped overboard 12 hours north of Havana so my bones will rest not far from those of Hart Crane."

Crane, one of Williams' favorite poets, committed suicide by leaping from a ship between Havana, Cuba, and Key West, Fla.

"I'm sure he'd disapprove of being buried here," Dakin Williams said earlier this week. "But I'm his only survivor and this is where I think he should rest. Where else would you put him?

"This way he'll be in a centrally located spot for people to pay their respects to the world's greatest talent since Shakespeare," he said.

Tennessee Williams, author of such plays as "Streetcar Named Desire" and "The Glass Menagerie," was born in Mississippi and lived in small Southern towns until 1918, when the 7-year-old boy moved with his family to St. Louis.

"Tennessee had grown up in the South, treated like a king and it was an awful shock to come to St. Louis and be treated like dirt by all those rich kids," recalled Dakin.

"We lived in the only apartment on Westminster Place, and everbody else had two cars and went to Country Day (a private school). He thought St. Louis was a very snobbish place."

In a 1947 newspaper interview, the playwright recalled that other children used to follow him home from school and yell "sissy" at him. "I found St. Louisans cold, smug, complacent, intolertant, stupid and provincial."

Mormons Debate Sex Films

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Bills that would ban sexually explicit movies from cable television have catapulted the mostly Mormon state Legislature into an intense, emotional debate over church doctrines on obedience vs. the right of free choice.

On the floor of the Senate, lawmakers have hurled scriptural salvos at one another and quoted from the writings of leading figures in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The proposal that has aroused religious fervor in the Legislature would prohibit repeated showing of films on cable TV involving nudity and the verbal description or enactment of sexual activity. The legislation has been passed by the Senate and is scheduled for House consideration Monday.

The debate over cable television also has raised questions about the influence of the church on the Legislature. Mormons comprise about 70 percent of the state's 1.5 million population.

"There is a religious control here, I guess I want to call it indirect," said Sen. Terry Williams, the Legislature's only black and one of the few who is not a Mormon.

"It's not improper to state one's belief in regard to morality and decency. But the doctrines on the floor spoke to a specific religion. I believe that's inappropriate," said Williams, who supports cable regulation.

Williams, a Democrat, does not believe there is actual manipulation of lawmakers by the church. Most of the state's legislators are Mormon, he said, and therefore have been steeped from childhood in church teachings. When they come to the Legislature, their votes usually conform to those teachings.

No records are kept on the legislators' religious affiliations, but both houses are well over 90 percent Mormon.

Pope Pledges Aid To Peasants

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Pope John Paul II told Central America's peasants Saturday "you must not follow" guerrilla movements that promote class struggle. He assured them they would not be abandoned by the Roman Catholic church in their search for social justice.

The pontiff said the church recognizes an urgent need for reform but rejects armed struggle to accomplish it. "You can be sure that the church will not abandon you .... It will continue rejecting the suppression of injustice and inequality," he added.

It was the pope's strongest admonition on his Central American tour against violent rebellion.

"There are those who are interested in seeing you abandon your work, grasping the arms of hatred and struggle against your brothers. You must not follow them," he declared in a speech prepared for some 40,000 poor farmers gathered in Revolutionary Stadium.

Throughout his tour, John Paul has pleaded for nonviolent social change and reconciliation to overcome the area's deep hatreds.

Earlier Saturday at an outdoor Mass where 300,000 people gathered in sweltering heat, the pope urged the faithful to renew their commitment to marriage and reject divorce, which he called "unacceptable" and "against the will of God." He also told the assembled to "say no" to contraception, abortion, sterilization and living together outside marriage.

Addressing the farmers later, he said, "In the search for a better form of justice and lifting yourself up, you cannot let yourselves be seized by the temptation of violence, by the armed guerrilla movement or by egoist class struggles, because that is not the way of Jesus Christ, neither of the Church nor of your Christian faith."

The earlier outdoor Mass was held at Albrook Air Field in the former U.S. Canal Zone, which reverted to Panamanian control in 1979.

People in the crowd carried umbrellas to ward off the broiling sun. One policemen said the temperature soared to 110 degrees and Red Cross workers could be seen taking away scores of worshippers who fainted. Dust rose above the field where vendors sold pineapple slices, cotton candy and hot dogs.

Schoolchildren sang a song for the pope in his native Polish. A man wearing a baseball cap held up a sign in Spanish quoting Abraham Lincoln: "God must love poor people. Otherwise he wouldn't have made so many of them."

The pope was to return Saturday night to a temporary base in Costa Rica and set out Sunday for war-ravaged El Salvador, where there were reports a new attempt might be made to kill the pontiff, the target of two previous assassination attempts.

Panamanian President Ricardo de la Espriella welcomed the pope to Omar Torrijos International Airport and decreed a "joyous fiesta of faith." As the pope beamed, the president said, "Through God's generosity we do not suffer from the extremes that afflict much of the rest of this region."

De la Espriella said Panamanians hope the pope can persuade warring factions in Central America "to seek dialogue and conciliation."

The Vatican took the unusual step of releasing a report of Friday's closed-door meeting between the pope and Nicaragua's ruling Sandinista junta, saying the pope felt used by the Sandinistas, who greeted him with anti-U.S. speeches, chanted Marxist slogans, and failed to place a cross at a Mass site.

Normally, private meetings between the pope and heads of government are off the record.

Panama City's archbishop, Monsignor Marcos Gregori McGrath, called the Nicaraguan handling of the Friday Mass "a profanation of the Eucharist and the sacraments of the Lord."

According to the Vatican, the Sandinistas told the pope, who is on an eight-day, eight-nation mission to Central America, that the United States was planning full-scale military intervention in El Salvador. They asked him to persuade the Reagan administration to stop the alleged action, the Vatican said.

The pope replied there must be "a political, not a military solution" to Central America's conflicts, the Vatican said, adding the pontiff felt very strongly about his position, which "was not a mere declaration of principles."

The Vatican said the Nicaraguan junta also attacked President Reagan's intention to put more American military aid and advisers in El Salvador. Reagan has said he fears that if guerrillas succeed in overthrowing the center-right Salvadoran government, other Central American republics will topple to leftist insurgents.

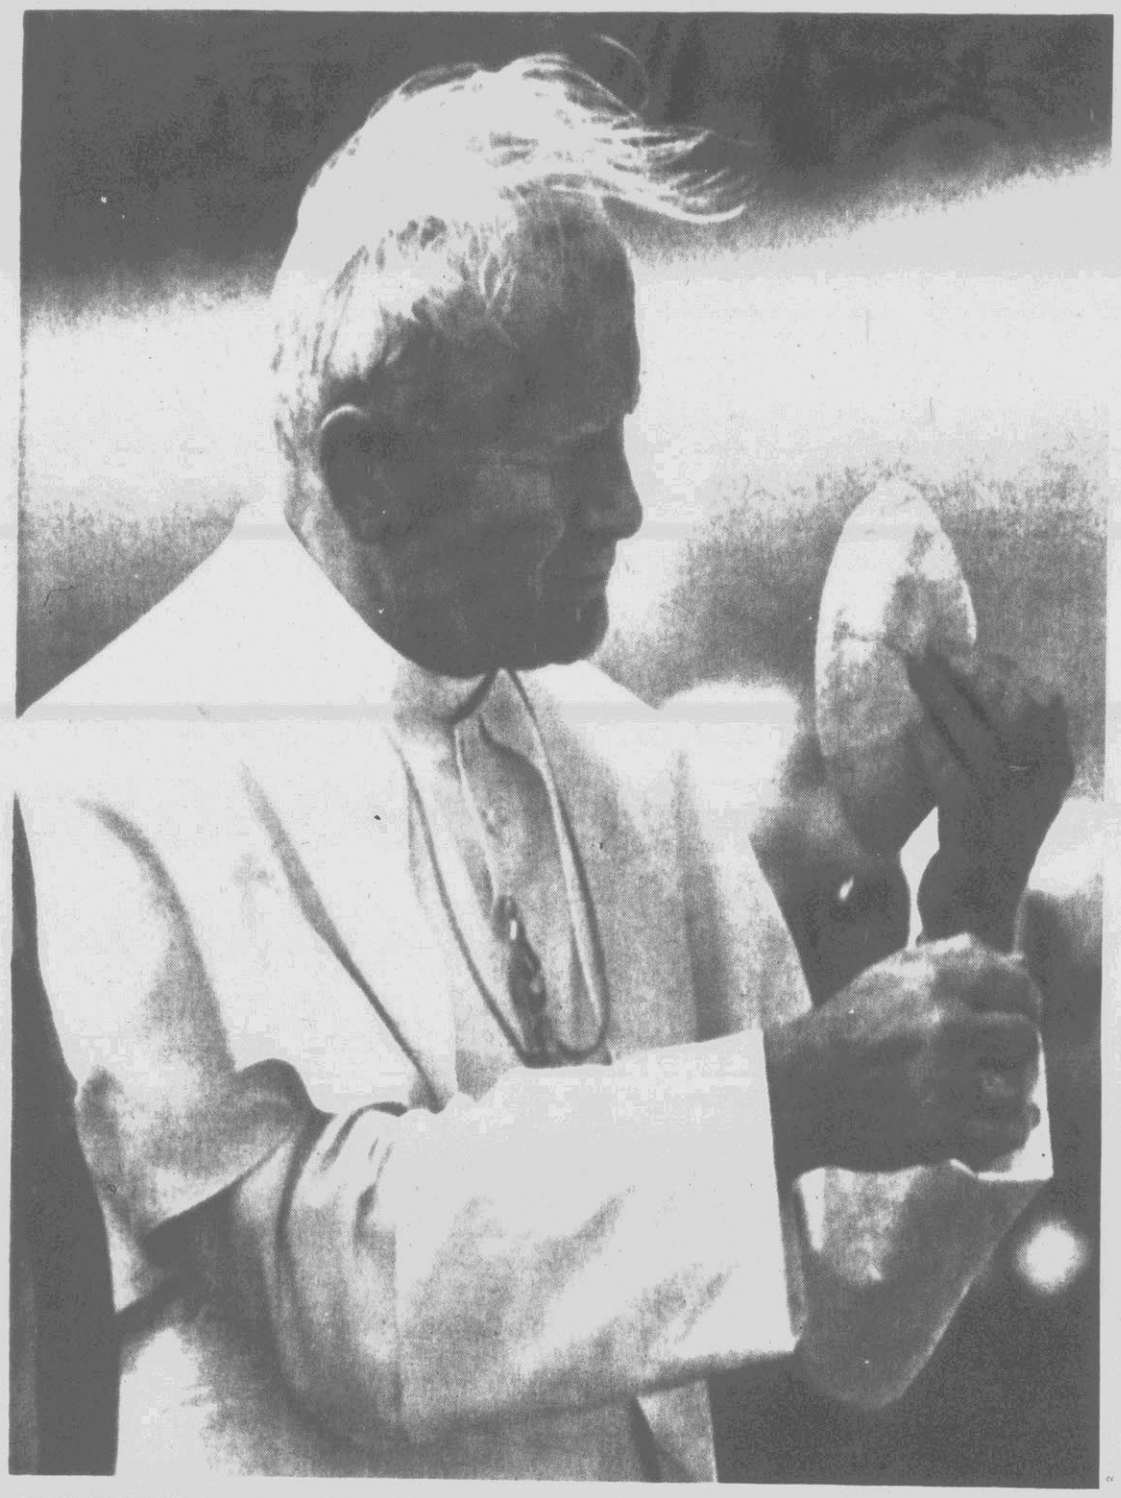

The Sandinistas took power in 1979 after a civil war against the late dictator Anastasio Somoza.

The Vatican also announced the pope would go ahead with his trip to Guatemala, scheduled for next Monday, even though he was "immensely grieved" about the firing squad execution there this week of six convicted terrorists, despite a papal plea for clemency.

The president of Guatemala, Efrain Rios Montt, whose military regime is under attack by leftists, said he was obliged to "carry out the law."

Vatican Chastises Nicaraguan Leaders

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican denounced Nicaragua's left-wing leaders Saturday for their treatment of Pope John Paul II, saying they debased his mission for political reasons, profaned the Mass and prevented thousands from seeing him.

The statement broadcast by Vatican Radio described the pope's one-day tour on Friday as "a difficult trip because of the attempts of political instrumentalization" by the ruling Sandinist junta. The statement underlined the pontiff's "pilgrimage of faith, peace and fraternity."

Nicaragua was the second stop in John Paul's nine-day tour of Central America and Haiti. He visited the capital Managua, where he said Mass despite shouts and chants by Sandinista supporters.

The commentary also criticized the anti-U.S. tirade by Sandinista leader Daniel Ortega at the airport welcoming ceremony for the pope.

John Paul officiated on an altar devoid of a cross, flanked by eight portraits of Nicaraguan revolutionary heroes, in front of a billboard exalting armed struggle.

Zimbabwe Pulls Bloody Raids

BULAWAYO, Zimbabwe (AP) — Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's security forces arrested hundreds of people Saturday in a bloody raid that left at least two dead and two wounded in the black suburbs where opposition leader Joshua Nkomo is under virtual house arrest, police sources and witnesses said.

Plainclothesmen searched Nkomo's house for arms, an aide said in a telephone interview. "After the police left we heard 10 to 20 shots," the aide said. "We don't know what happened or who did what. But there's the body of a man in the street 100 yards from us."

The other man was shot after he attacked police with an ax, police sources said, speaking on condition they not be identified. They said at least 600 men were seized in the initial roundup before dawn, and that hundreds of others were picked up later in the day.

Witnesses said a member of Parliament from Nkomo's party plus a party vice chairman were among those seized in the crackdown on the suburbs that form the opposition powerbase.

The sweep began shortly after midnight with house-to-house searches and a dragnet mounted by police, soldiers and paratroopers who were ferried into the area aboard nearly 30 trucks, witnesses said.

There was no government comment on the sweep, but bursts of automatic weapons fire could be heard in the area.

"There's a lot of shooting going on in there," a soldier told reporters at one of several roadblocks sealing off Bulawayo's so-called western suburbs. "They (dissidents) have more guns than we do."

Nkomo, head of the Zimbabwe African Peoples' Union, which is made up mainly of minority Ndebele tribesmen, was "confined to bed with flu on doctors' orders" and did not get up to talk to police, the aide said.

Dole Says Retirement Bill Gaining Momentum

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The $165 billion Social Security rescue plan is on a roll, barreling through Congress with such momentum that opponents may want to get out of the way, says Sen. Robert Dole, head of the Finance Committee.

"I think this is the wrong one to get in front of," said Dole, who also served on the presidential commission that recommended ways to protect the solvency of the retirement system. "It's moving."

In an interview with The Associated Press late last week, the Kansas Republican said he believes the measure eventually will include a provision for raising the retirement age beyond 65 after the turn of the century.

The full House will dispose of the legislation this week when it votes on the delicately balanced package of payroll tax hikes, a curb on benefits, a levy on retirees benefits and mandatory coverage for new federal and Postal Service employees.

The spotlight then will shift to Dole's Senate Finance Committee, which will draft its version this week, and later to the full Senate.

"I guess our only real timetable is to have it passed and on the president's desk before we leave here on March 26" for the Easter recess, Dole said. "And I think that goal can be attained."

The recommendations of the National Commission on Social Security Reform — carrying the endorsement of President Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. — have been on a fast legislative track ever since the reform panel sent its report to Capitol Hill in January.

Partisan bickering that accompanied the issue in Congress over the past two years has virtually evaporated — as demonstrated by the startling 32-3 vote last week by which the House Ways and Means Committee propelled the package to the House floor.

"I just think as soon as the president and Tip O'Neill got on board, you had a pretty good head of steam," Dole said.

The widespread bipartisan support the legislation won from House tax writers is being taken as evidence of the strong support the plan will have on the House floor, where the only controversy will be whether a higher retirement age should be part of the package.

Dole said some obstacles still remain before the legislation reaches Reagan's desk. But he didn't foresee any attempts to scuttle the bill.

"I don't see anyone trying to block this with a talkathon, filibuster, extended debate or with a number of amendments," he said. "Everybody knows we've got a Social Security crisis. I try to think under what circumstances I'd like to get up and delay this program — I can't think of any. I don't know how many people will vote against it in the Senate, maybe 10."

Dole said he felt the most serious obstacle to Senate passage of the legislation would be a move to attach a repeal of a new law requiring banks to withhold taxes on interest and dividends.

The Ways and Means Committee sidestepped the issue of whether to raise the retirement age as one of the measures to wipe out a Social Security deficit projected to range to $1.9 trillion over the next 75 years.

That panel accepted instead a provision mixing a 5 percent benefit cut for new reitrees 25 years from now with a payroll tax hike in 2015.

But the question is not settled, and the full House will vote on whether to raise the retirement age or raise the payroll tax again in the next century.

Dole said he favors raising the retirement age.

"It's a real reform," he said. "It recognizes the change in longevity that's taken place since we passed Social Security. I think it would restore a lot of confidence in the system."

Helms Sticking To Guns In Social Security Fight

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Republican Sen. Jesse Helms testified recently before a Senate committee on his Social Security bill, he admitted he didn't expect the proposal to be passed by Congress.

But the North Carolina legislator said he won't back down from the fight to get his plan approved.

"All I know to do is what I think is right," Helms said in an interview after his testimony. "I may not win, but I'll fight for it."

Helms has gained a reputation in Washington as a man who sticks up for his ideas, no matter how unpopular they may be. In recent months, Helms:

—Held out for two weeks last December against passage of the nickle-a-gallon gasoline tax, keeping his fellow Senators in Washington long after they wanted to leave for the Christmas holiday. The tax eventually was approved over Helms' objections but not before some of his peers nicknamed him "Scrooge" and the "Grinch Who Stole Christmas."

—Supported Kenneth Adelman as arms control director even though the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, on which Helms sits, has urged President Reagan to withdraw Adelman's nomination.

—Backed a tobacco bill putting a new fee on tobacco allotment holders. Opponents of the bill, including Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C., want it repealed and say landowners will pass the fee onto farmers in the form of higher rents.

—Introduced his own Social Security program, saying the current one is inadequate.

—Argued for allowing prayer in schools.

Helms' conservative stands on such controversial issues have made him unpopular in some circles. The National Democratic Committee has labeled him "The Prince of Darkness." The National Organization for Women, angered by his opposition to the Equal Rights Amendment, called him "Public Enemy No. 1."

"It seems that people either love Sen. Helms or hate him, there's no in between," said Helms' field worker Robert Caudle after his battle against the gasoline tax.

Helms doesn't pretend that the attacks don't bother him, but he says he doesn't let them stop him.

"Everyone would like to be popular, well-liked and respected by their peers," he said. "And I have to tell you that sometimes I'm amazed by reaction to what I say. But I'm here to represent the people of North Carolina to the best of my ability and that's what I'll keep doing, whether it wins me any popularity contests or not."

Political observers say Helms faces the toughest battle of his 10-year Senate career next year, when Gov. Jim Hunt is expected to challenge him for his Senate seat. Neither man has officially announced his candidacy, but the race already has been called "a struggle for the soul of the South."

Helms filed papers last month with the Federal Election Commission setting up his 1984 reelection campaign committee.

Early polls show Hunt leading Helms by between 8 and 16 percentage points. Hunt has refused to comment on the figures. Helms challenged Hunt to a public debate on the issues but Hunt turned him down.

Helms has denied speculation that he may decide to run for president in 1984. Some observers say they expect Helms to announce his candidacy for president if Hunt appears to have a decisive lead in the polls.

"I'm not going to run for president, period," Helms said. "I don't want to be president, nobody's asked me to run for president and I'm not going to run for president. The Senate is where I want to be."

The senator says his main interest right now is pushing his Social Security plan as far as it will go. Helms' proposal calls for gradually replacing the current Social Security retirement program with a private investment plan, "Individual Retirement Security Accounts."

North Carolina Democrats, including Hunt and Rose, have charged that Helms' plan will take Social Security benefits away from the elderly.

"This issue is being used like a political football by the Democrats, and I think it's irresponsible," Helms said. "This is a serious issue, one that will mean the difference whether old people and young people have any Social Security benefits when they need them. That's what my plan will guarantee — that the money will be there when you need it.

"I may not be the most well-liked fellow up here, but I don't think I can be accused of playing politics with important issues," he said. "I'm dead serious about doing my job as a senator."

State Says Jobless Fund Still Strong

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Despite a potentially crippling fund shortage, North Carolina's unemployment compensation system remains among the nation's strongest, state officials say.

"Our fund is the third most solvent in the United States," said Glenn Jernigan, chairman of the state Employment Security Commission. "It has served us well. The fact is, we've managed it conservatively in order to prepare for a rainy day, and now we've got a rainy day."

"It's remarkable that with the severity of this recession, the program has taken this long to start to hurt," added state Sen. Robert Jordan, D-Montgomery, chairman of the Senate Base Budget Committee.

North Carolina's jobless rate hit 10 percent in January, and a record $56.3 million was paid to the unemployed. The balance of the fund has dropped from $594.5 million in early 1982 to to $327 million last week.

Unless unemployment subsides or more money is pumped into the fund, it could go broke by April 1984, officials say. But Gov. Jim Hunt says he will see to it that the system survives.

"I'm determined that North Carolina not get into the kind of situation some other states are in," Hunt said in a news conference last week. "I don't intend for us to have to go and borrow from the federal government and then have to come back and pay off a big debt."

Jernigan, echoing a point Hunt made in his news conference, said North Carolina's policy of caution on increasing benefits has proven helpful.

"We haven't run our rates up and down," he said. "We haven't yielded to the temptation to give our more money than we could spare."

The unemployment fund is financed from payroll taxes which employers pay every three months. In January, Congress raised the tax by 15 percent by boosting the amount of income taxed per employee, which had been the first $6,000, to the first $7,000.

The tax rate ranges from 0.1 percent to 5.7 percent, depending on the number of people the employer has laid off.

Officials indicate that before they'll let the maximum payment to the jobless, $166 a week for 26 weeks, they'll go to the employers for more money.

"We've historically tried to protect the employers from increases, but it's their fund and they should pay for it," said Jordan in an interview Friday.

Employment Security Commission staffers have prepared a list of alternatives for helping the fund, which will be discussed at a commission meeting Tuesday. Once the commission decides on a plan, it will pass it along to the Legislature.

Jernigan wouldn't divulge details of the proposals. Jordan, however, said he expected to see a request for a temporary increase in the amount each employer pays, which would be in effect until the fund reaches a satisfactory amount. At that point, the assessment would drop back to its present level.

"I really don't think we'll need this adjustment for longer than six months or so," he said. "What we have is a short-term cash flow problem."

Jordan and Jernigan said they expected to see unemployment decline gradually in coming months, which should ease the strain on the jobless fund.

But Jordan said the key to ensuring that the system never goes broke is helping the state adjust to changes in the national economy that are creating new jobs and eliminating old ones.

"Some plants are closing down and aren't going to reopen, with or without a recession," he said. "That's because the industrial face of the nation is undergoing tremendous change. We need to retrain people who have lost manufacturing jobs to handle new, service-oriented jobs, or else we're going to have a permanent unemployment problem."

A Reflector Review

Film 'Frances' Offers Strong Performances

Universal's film "Frances," now showing at Plaza Cinema Theater, is strong on excellent performances and weak on story line.

The film is based on the real life story of actress Frances Farmer, who achieved an unenviable reputation as Hollywood's tough girl in the late 1930s and 1940s. Jessica Lange gives a stunning performance as the girl who from high school days fought conformity to act and express herself as an independent being who valued her own judgements above all else.

Frances' headstrong determination in the film works two ways — at times we sympathize with her determination when her rebellion makes common sense; at other times her willfulness goes against the grain when it's obvious that a measure of consideration for others or compromise would have been a saner approach.

The script for "Frances," written by three writers (Eric Bergren, Christopher Devore and Nicholas Kazan) may be responsible for the film's lack of unity. Just when it seems the director, Graham Clifford, has the plot headed in one clear-cut direction, it suddenly veers off on a tangent.

Eventually, the distinction between whether or not Miss Farmer might be suffering mental imbalance is blurred. Just when it seems established that she might indeed be guilty of irrational conduct, there's a sudden switch to make it seem that the actions of others (policemen, judges, her mother, etc.) are totally irrational.

For much too long the plot (and camera) linger on sub-human conditions depicted in the institution to which Frances' mother has her committed. It's like watching a segment of "The Snake Pit" wedged gratitously into the film. A strong suggestion of the horrors of the place would have sufficed. On the other hand, several events that could have been more prominently treated are mentioned off-hand, but never shown — her trip to Russia, her New York stage performance in "The Golden Boy," are examples.

Despite the rambling, uncoordinated plot, "Frances" is a film very nearly redeemed by excellent performances. Kim Stanley as the mother who cannot give up her unreasonable desire to fulfill an unrealized dream for fame and glory through her daughter and who becomes vindictive when thwarted; Sam Shepard in the role of Harry York, the one man who never stops loving Frances; and Jeffrey DeMunn as playwright Clifford Odets, who manipulates Frances to help him achieve an early success and then ditches her; these are all convincing portrayals of people important in the actress' life.

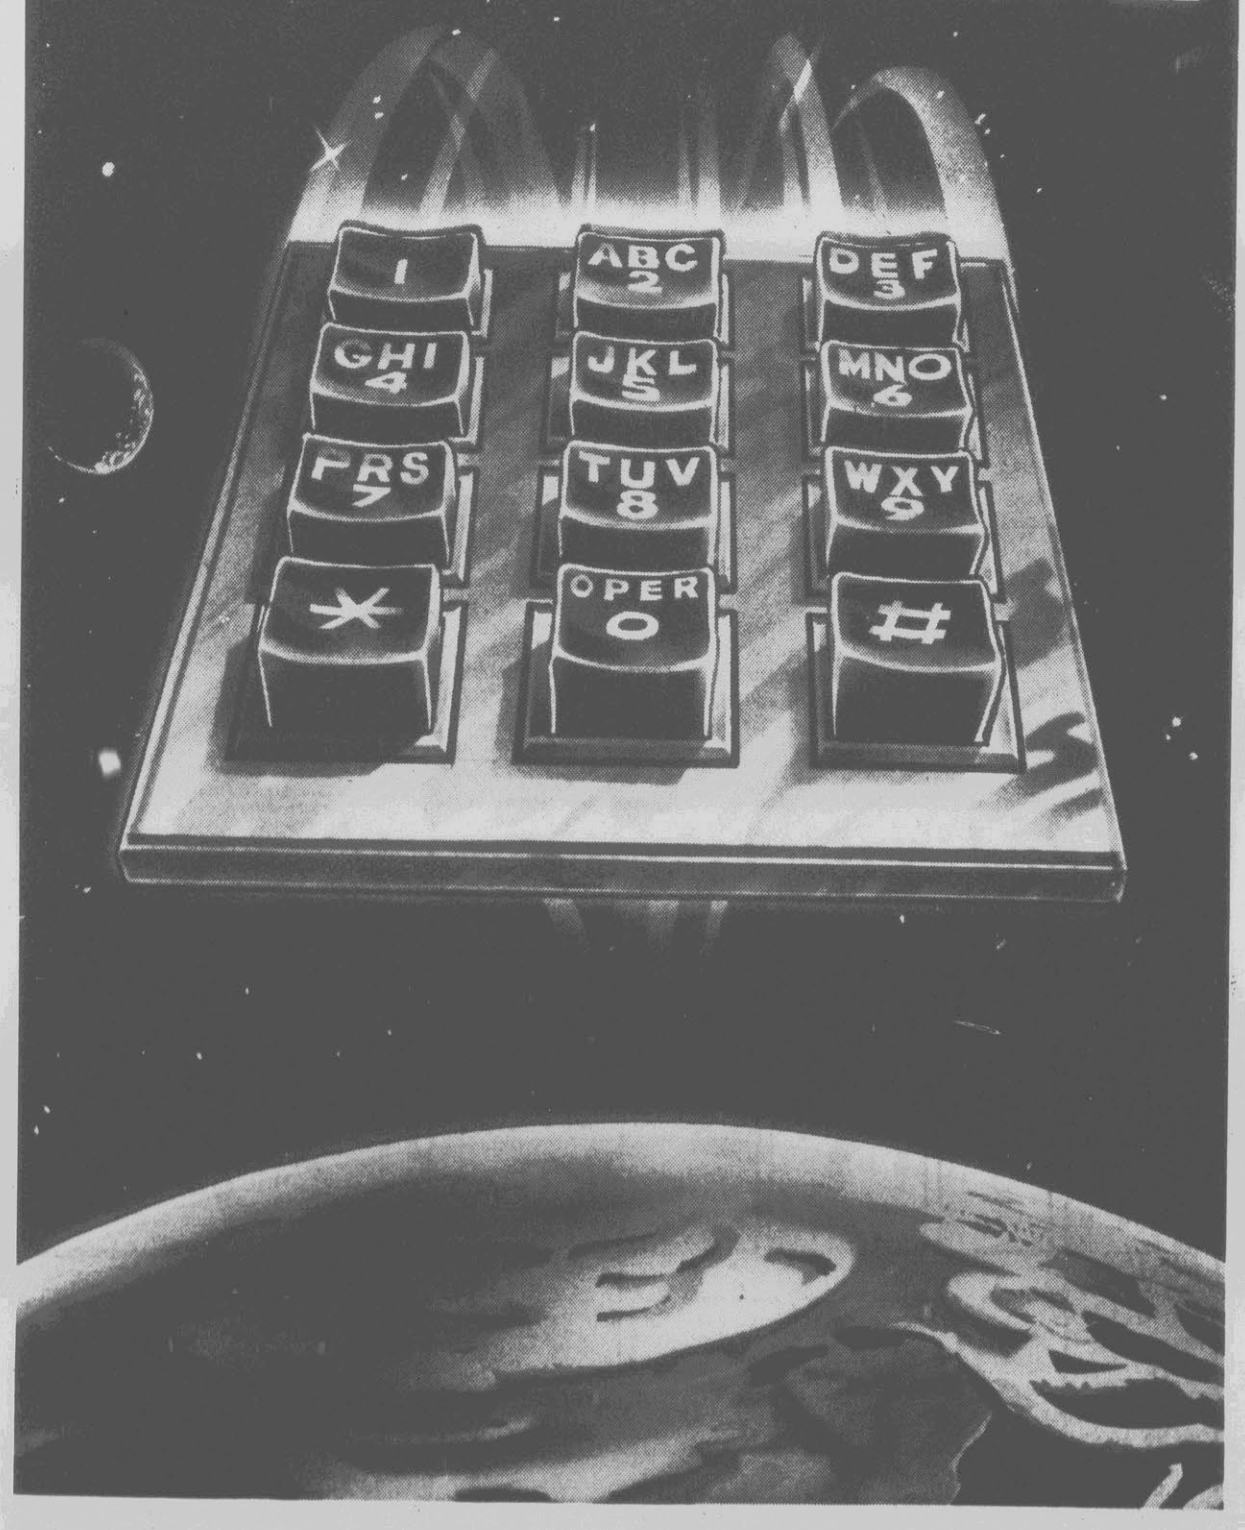

"Frances" now and then comes close to being a finely etched dramatic story of the life of a fascinating woman who happened to be a rebel. It's a pity the film doesn't succeed in telling that story with more conviction.

SALISBURY — An SBI investigation failed to produce evidence to support allegations of misconduct within the Salisbury Police Department, District Attorney James E. Roberts reported Saturday. The investigation centered on allegations of possible firearm or drug thefts, he said.

Disease

ROSMAN — Students and teachers at Rosman high and middle schools were vaccinated Saturday for spinal meningitis — one day after health officials confirmed three students had the disease. Inoculations and capsules were given in an effort to keep the disease from spreading, officials said.

Judge

RALEIGH — A spokesman for Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. says it could take several weeks before a replacement is chosen for J. Wilton Hunt, who recently resigned as a District Court judge. The district's bar must nominate at least two people for the seat, and the governor must chose one of the nominees.

Hunt was convicted last month of accepting $7,500 in bribes from undercover FBI agents during a federal investigation into alleged corruption in Columbus County, codenamed Colcor. He has appealed the conviction and has said he expects the appeal to "be long and arduous."

Trucks

CHARLOTTE — Large profits that can be reaped from selling tractors and trailers, their parts and the goods they contain have led to the expensive rigs being stolen at an unprecedented rate in the Carolinas, the FBI said.

The bureau said the recovery rate for stolen tractor-trailers is at its lowest level in 20 years because the thefts are growing at such a rapid rate and because the thieves are becoming more clever in the way they steal, camouflage and resell the vehicles and their parts.

Delayed

GREENSBORO — Sentencing for Gary Alan Bray, convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the deaths of four friends in an automobile crash, has been delayed until April 8. Bray pleaded guilty in connection with the Feb. 5 crash and could receive up to 40 years in prison.

Greensboro police officer Doug Schmidt testified that Bray's blood alcohol level was 0.14. It is illegal to drive with a blood alcohol level of 0.10 or more.

Glenn

RALEIGH — Democratic presidential hopeful John Glenn plans to come to North Carolina later this month in an effort. The Ohio senator will host a fund-raiser March 25 at the Raleigh Hilton, and will have a reception at 7 p.m.

Tickets are $50 per person.

CHARLOTTE — Coors beer will make its North Carolina debut Monday as kegs begin rolling off delivery trucks and into Charlotte bars and restaurants.

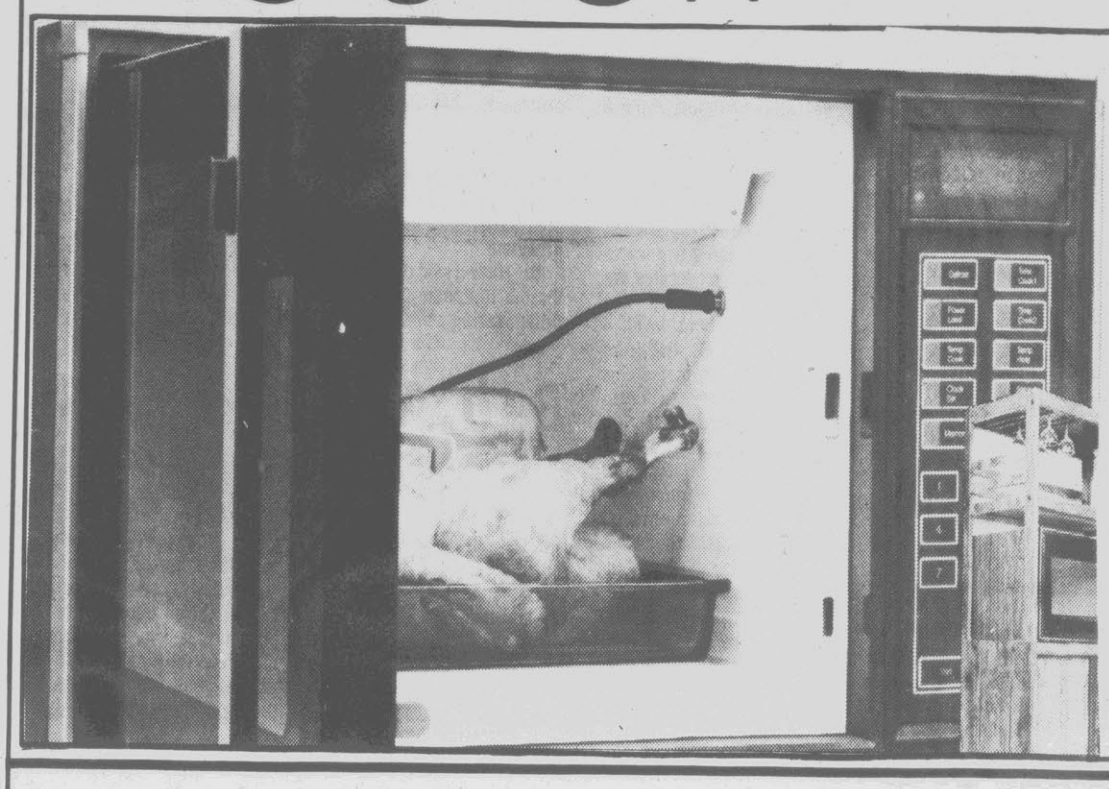

North Carolina is part of Colorada-based Adoph Coors Co.'s southeastern expansion, which will increase the number of states in which the nation's sixth largest brewer sells beer to 27.

Baptist Group Formed

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — A group of Southern Baptists have begun organizing to counteract a conservative swing in their denomination.

Calling themselves the North Carolina Group of Moderates, the Baptists plan to organize supporters of their cause as messengers (delegates) from state churches to the national Southern Baptist Convention annual meeting in June.

The Rev. Lamar King of High Point's First Baptist Church says the group wants to ensure that moderates are fully represented at the convention's national level.

He said 167 Baptist from around the state met at his church Thursday to begin their organizing efforts.

"There has been what I call a takeover of control of the national convention by a radically fundamentalist group of pastors," King said. "The agenda of the fundamentalists is to deny leadership to anyone other than fundamentalists."

Since 1979, the convention presidency has been won by conservatives. The president of the convention controls many appointments to Baptist agencies, including Southern Baptist colleges and universities.

In general, conservatives believe the Bible is literally true, while moderates accept a broader view of biblical interpretation.

King said Thursday's meeting was an outgrowth of a December meeting in Charlotte attended by about 20 Baptists concerned with the fundamentalism issue.

Dr. Glenn Hinson, a Wake Forest University religion professor, said Friday the theological swing in the convention came in 1979 when the Rev. Adrian Rogers of Bellevue Baptist Church in Memphis, Tenn., was elected president.

But Hinson said the denomination felt some fundamentalist stirring as early as the 1960s. He said the current convention president, the Rev. James Draper, has made appointments that indicate he is trying to be fair.

Hinson said the major issue in the controversy is whether historic Baptist principles like cooperative world missions projects, religious liberty and support of the separation of church and state will survive under fundamentalist leadership.

He said studies show a major leader of the national political and religious right, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, is "the single most influential person" in shaping the views of Southern Baptist pastors. Hinson said Falwell is not a member of the denomination.

He said it could take 15 to 20 years to settle the differences between the two groups, and the battle could even lead to a split in the denomination. He said to avert the schism, moderates must be willing to enter the political side of the denomination.

King said the moderates hope to maintain diversity in the denomination, "not by conformity in viewpoint, but by mutual respect and having tolerance."

Bell Allowed To Sell Phones

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The N.C. Utilities Commission will allow Southern Bell to sell telephones to its customers, but at prices lower than those sought by the company.

In an order issued Friday, the commission approved telephone sales by Southern Bell beginning April 1. The commission approved two sets of prices for the phones, with one price for phones already leased by customers and another price for new or refurbished phones from company inventories.

Prices will range from $17.40 for standard-dial telephones to $61.54 for a Princess Touch-Tone phone purchased from inventory.

Customers can continue to lease their phones from Southern Bell, and company officials say purchasing phones will not be mandatory. Customers can also purchase the phones from Southern Bell or buy from another supplier.

Police Credited For Conviction

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — The prosecutor in the murder case of Gary E. Goldman says tenacious police work was responsible for finding the evidence that led to the convicton, eight years after a North Carolina State University student was killed.

William P. Hart noted late last week that two key witneeses in the case were not found until 1981 — six years after the May 1975 incident.

Those witnesses were Tracy Current and Franklin E. Adams. In 1975, Miss Current was a resident of a drug rehabilitation center located near the area where the body of Elizabeth Parks Rosenberg, 24, was found. Adams worked in a leather shop at a Georgia prison where he and Goldman were inmates.

During the trial, Miss Current testified she saw Goldman less than two hours after the slaying. She said he appeared unusually quiet and had more money than usual. He complained of scratches on his arms but made unexplained comments such as, "She got worse," Miss Current said.

Adams said Goldman admitted in September 1981 to beating a woman to death in North Carolina.

He said he agreed to cooperate with prison officials in 1981 when they asked him whether he knew anything about Goldman's involvement in a North Carolina killing.

Mrs. Rosenberg was robbed and bludgeoned beyond recognition by a heavy metal pole sunk in a piece of concrete after leaving the university's library. Her body was found in a secluded driveway near the campus.

Goldman, who is serving a life sentence for the 1976 death of a Georgia man, was given another life sentence after his conviction for first-degree murder Friday.

Goldman, 24, asked Wake Superior Court Judge Wiley F. Bowen to let his two life terms run concurrently. He said since going to prison in 1976 he has finished high school and some college and he is working "a lot toward rehabilitation."

Bowen denied the request. He ordered Goldman to begin serving his life sentence in North Carolina after he is paroled from his life term in Georgia.

Mrs. Rosenberg's 1975 slaying had been one of Raleigh's most well-known unsolved killings when Goldman was indicted for the death in December 1981. He was transferred from a Georgia prison a few months later to stand trial.

The jury convicted Goldman on evidence that relied heavily on the testimony of people who knew him between 1975 and 1981.

Dives For Out

Yanks Nip Baltimore

Other results, standings, page B-4

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Jerry Mumphrey hit a two-run homer in the third inning to give the New York Yankees a 2-1 victory over the Baltimore Orioles in the opening game of the 1983 exhibition season.

Three Yankee pitchers — Doyle Alexander, Rudy May and George Frazier — limited Baltimore to six hits.

With two out in the third inning, Orioles right-hander Jim Palmer walked Willie Randolph and Mumphrey homered over the right-center field fence to give New York a 2-0 lead.

The Orioles scored their only run in the fourth off May, a left-hander. Eddie Murray doubled and scored on a single by Ken Singleton.

Alexander, 1-7 last season, pitched the first three innings, allowing only an infield single by Cal Ripken Jr., the first of his three hits. Frazier shut out the Orioles over the last four innings.

Palmer worked the first three innings for Baltimore, and Storm Davis pitched the next three, retiring all nine Yankees he faced. Tim Stoddard pitched the final three innings for Baltimore, which was playing its first game under new Manager Joe Altobelli, who replaced the retired Earl Weaver. Weaver, 15 years the Baltimore manager, watched from the stands as an Orioles scout.

The Yankees also were playing their first game — for the third time — under Manager Billy Martin. Martin, twice a Yankee manager previously, replaced Clyde King after last season.

The Yankees benefited by one close call in the fourth inning. Rookie third baseman Leo Hernandez hit what appeared to be a three-run homer high over left field fence, but umpire Greg Kosc ruled it foul. Altobelli argued the point in vain.

Jordan-Led UNC Downs Duke For Share Of Title

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
Associated Press Sports Writer

DURHAM — At the start of the season North Carolina coach Dean Smith wasn't sure which direction his team would go, but after several setbacks the 8th-ranked Tar Heels have battled to the top of the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Behind Michael Jordan's 32 points, North Carolina took a 105-81 victory over ACC rival Duke and clinched at least a tie for the regular-season league title.

"That was certainly one of our goals, and it didn't look easy back in November," Smith said. "It's a real tribute to this team after James Worthy and Jimmy Black left. (The team) got together, had a great season and now the new season begins Friday."

The victory gave Smith his 11th 25-victory season, tying him with former UCLA coach John Wooden.

North Carolina, 25-6 and 12-2 in the ACC, is a half game ahead of Virginia, but claimed top seed in the conference tournament by virtue of two victories over the Cavaliers. Virginia meets Maryland in the league's regular-season finale Sunday. The Tar Heels will play Clemson to open the tournament, while Virginia will meets Duke.

"The No. 1 seed itself is insignificant," Smith said. "Clemson is playing as well as anyone in the league."

Duke rallied from a 42-31 deficit late in the first half, pulling within 47-43 with 35 seconds remaining. Tom Emma hit two free throws following a technical foul on Smith to spark the rally.

Two Matt Doherty free throws then gave North Carolina a 49-43 halftime lead.

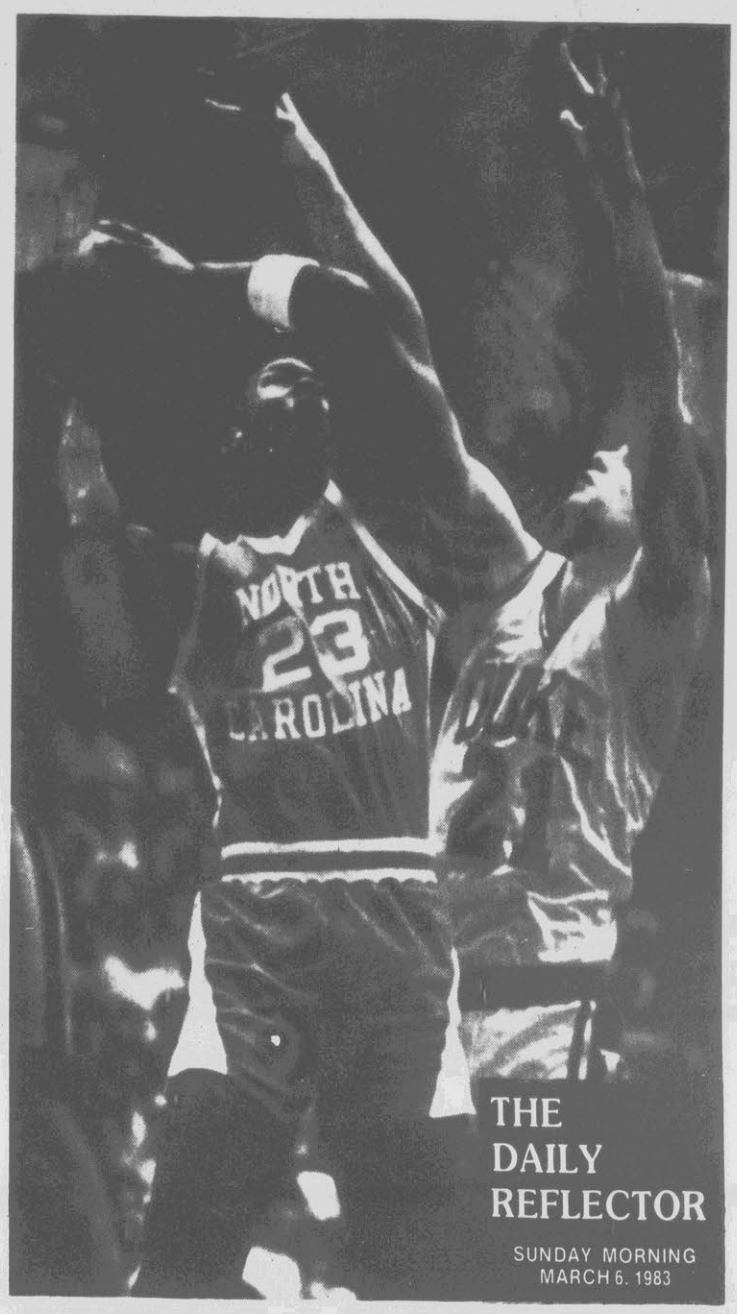

A Johnnie Dawkins jumper pulled the Blue Devils to within 57-51 at the 14:26 mark, before Jordan hit from outside to open an 11-2 Tar Heel spurt that put Duke out of contention.

"There was a point in the second half where I thought the whole game got unglued," Duke coach Krzyzewski said. "Neither team was very sharp. ... (North Carolina) scored and broke it open for that good working margin."

Jordan capped the spree with a short jumper at the 12:38 mark to make it 68-53.

Argentina Leads U.S. In Davis Cup, 2-1

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — John McEnroe and Peter Fleming defeated Argentina's Guillermo Vilas and Jose-Luis Clerc 2-6, 10-8, 6-1, 3-6, 6-1 in a marathon doubles match Saturday and kept American hopes alive in first-round Davis Cup action.

The victory by the world's top-ranked doubles duo cut Argentina's lead to 2-1 in the best-of-five series with two singles matches to be played on Sunday.

Clerc overcame a rally by McEnroe earlier Saturday and won a suspended singles match 6-4, 6-0, 3-6, 4-6, 7-5. The match, which followed Vilas' 6-3, 6-3, 6-4 opening singles victory over Gene Mayer, had been halted Friday night due to darkness with Clerc leading 5-2 in the final set.

McEnroe will play Vilas and Mayer will meet Clerc in Sunday's reverse singles matches, with the winner of the series to meet the victor in the Italy-Ireland series in second-round action beginning July 8.

McEnroe and Fleming, playing on slow clay courts before a partisan crowd of 14,000 fans at the Buenos Aires Lawn Tennis Club, failed to put on their usual brillant performance against Vilas and Clerc, who rarely play together.

McEnroe, trapped into unforced errors in the first set, dropped his opening service and two more service breaks followed. Clerc was the first to hold his service in the fourth game, helped by good smashes by Vilas, playing close to the net. Fleming dropped his service and Argentina took the set 6-2.

Vilas, who had served as anchor man for Argentina in the first set, faulted in the second set and had his service broken three times. But the Americans, with McEnroe dropping service twice, lost a 3-0 lead before clinching the set 10-8 after 90 minutes of fairly even play.

McEnroe walked off the court to argue with a spectator during the second set, with the score tied 5-5, and referee Nicola Pietrangeli of Italy threatened to suspend the match unless the crowd behavior improved.

The second-set victory seemed to stimulate McEnroe and Fleming and they built a 5-0 third-set lead, breaking Clerc for the first time in the match and winning 6-1 in only 30 minutes.

McEnroe dropped his service as Argentina took a 3-0 lead in the fourth set and went on to win 6-3 as both teams won their service games fairly easily.

In the fifth and deciding set, both sides again won most of their service games easily, but both Clerc and Vilas were broken once and this was enough to clinch a 6-1 set victory for the United States.

The McEnroe-Clerc singles match resumed Saturday morning with the American winning the first game 2-love to reduce the Argentine's lead to 5-3.

McEnroe, 24, the world's third-ranked player according to the Association of Tennis Professionals, then broke Clerc — helped by three unforced errors by the Argentine — and held his service in the next game to even the set at 5-5 after saving three match points.

Clerc, also 24 and ranked fifth by the ATP, held his service for a 6-5 lead and then broke McEnroe to win 7-5.

In other Davis Cup action, India clinched a victory in the Eastern Zone Davis Cup quarterfinals in Colombo, Sri Lanka, after the Amritraj brothers, Vijay and Anand, defeated Sri Lanka's Frank Sebaratnam and Arjun Fernando in doubles 6-2, 6-4, 6-1.

Having won two singles matches Friday, the Amritraj brothers secured India's victory in the team competition by demolishing the Sri Lankan duo in 96

Wolfpack Pounds Deacons

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina State coach Jim Valvano didn't want his club to run the score up on Wake Forest, but the Wolfpack had a lot of frustrations to release and got rid of most of them in Saturday's 130-89 victory.

"The entire year has been somewhat of a frustration, and a lot of pent-up emotions," Valvano said. "I don't want anyone to think we were running the score up. We got on a roll and things just kept going."

Terry Gannon and Dereck Whittenburg scored 25 points each and Thurl Bailey added 23 as the Wolfpack tied its fourth highest scoring total ever and set a school record for an ACC game, topping the best set in a 121-100 victory over the Demon Deacons in 1965-66.

The 130 points was also the most in the conference this year, under the experimental 30-second shot clock and 3-point field goal, and the 41-point margin was the league's widest this season.

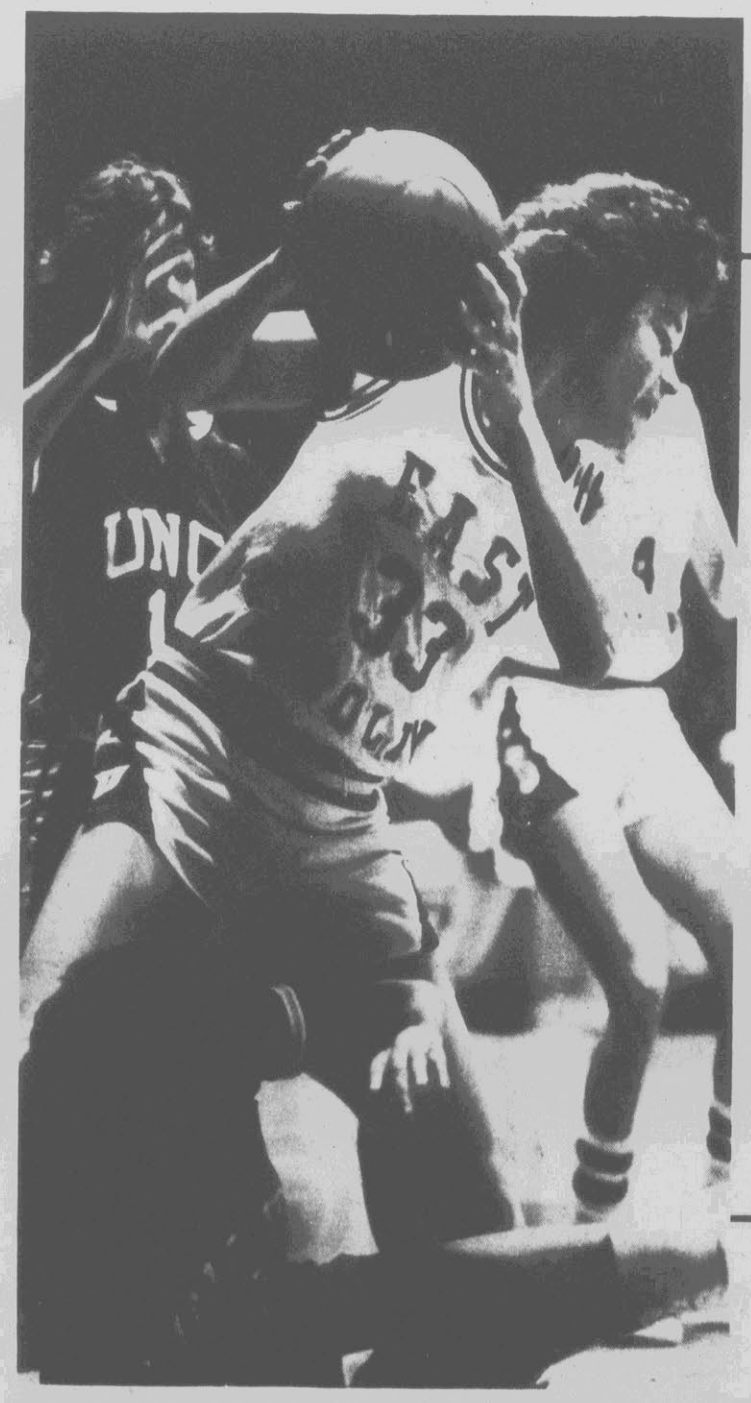

The victory avenged a 91-73 loss to the Demon Deacons earlier, and extended Wake Forest's losing streak to four games. Coming on the heels of a 107-74 loss to Virginia, the margin of defeat became the largest for the Deacons since 1949.

"That's exactly how I felt we were playing Jan. 7 when Derek got hurt (and missed 14 games)," Valvano said. "Then Whit comes back, so now we're starting to put it together again."

Bailey and Gannon, who scored his career high, started the romp just before the midway point in the first half. Bailey scored twice and Gannon connected on consecutive 3-point field goals to make it 25-16 at 11:38.

Moments later Lorenzo Charles scored

As Seniors Have Final Hurrah In Minges

Lady Pirates Bomb UNCC

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

It was the last hurrah for Mary Denkler, Fran Hooks and Caren Truske in Minges Coliseum, and they and their underclass cohorts put together one of their best efforts of the year and routed UNC Charlotte, 72-58, Saturday night.

The game wound up the regular season — and possibly the whole season — for the Lady Pirates, who wind up with a 14-12 mark.

Still to come might be a possible berth in the first-ever ECAC women's basketball tournament. A committee is scheduled to meet sometime today to decide which four teams from the whole ECAC's Division I group will be selected. According to reports reaching Greenville, ECU is considered one of the top contenders for the tournament.

Denkler went out with a flurry, scoring 31 points and pulling down 13 rebounds — game highs in each category. Hooks and Truske each scored two points as they closed out their careers.

For Denkler, an All-America candidate, it climaxed a career that has seen her score 1,789 points, the second highest total for a Lady Pirate. She connected on 13 of 23 shots from the floor and five of six from the line.

While the game was in doubt during the early part of the first half, the determination to pull out the victory became obvious in the late stages of the period when the Lady Pirates pulled out to a ten point lead and increased that to as much as 22 in the second half.

"The kids did a hell of a job tonight," Coach Cathy Andruzzi said. "After the George Washington game (a surprising 79-75 loss), when we didn't play well I didn't know how we'd react to this game.

"And there's no stronger critic of this team than I am. I don't want them to settle for mediocrity, and tonight they certainly didn't," Andruzzi said.

"Actually, we got a lot of mileage out of this team. I know there have been times when I said we could have done better, but look, we're starting two freshmen, girls who were supposed to be reserves this year. But circumstances forced us into having to play them, along with these three seniors, and they've been playing close to 40 minutes a game."

Andruzzi said that if the year has come to an end for these seniors, it came with a good game. "Hey, Charlotte is not a bad team. They are coming off wins over

ECU's Brooks Takes IC4A Long Jump

PRINCETON, N.J. — East Carolina University freshman Chris Brooks missed by a quarter-inch of setting a meet record while winning the long jump at the IC4A Track & Field Championships here Saturday.

Brooks, from Raleigh, leaped 25-6¾ to win the long jump at the two-day meet, which concludes today. The jump was just off the meet record, held by former Olympian Bill Ray.

The jump was the second longest in the meet's history.

Two other ECU freshman will be in action today. Nathan McCorkle will compete in the semifinals of the 55-meter dash and Craig White will take part in the semifinals of the 55-meter high hurdles.

The ECU mile relay team will also run in the semifinals today.

Georgetown Routs No. 4 Villanova, 87-71

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Georgetown Coach John Thompson, setting his sights on another run at the Final Four, showed his team is primed for the postseason play as the 16th-ranked Hoyas trounced fourth-ranked Villanova 87-71 Saturday in a Big East Conference game.

Despite the victory, Georgetown, 20-8 overall, remained an also-ran in the Big East with a 10-5 conference mark.

"We are going to the tournament," said Thompson, who guided the Hoyas to the championship game of the NCAA tournament last year. "There is no way the NCAA will pick 48 teams without us."

Patrick Ewing, the Hoyas' seven-foot center provided most of the firepower for Georgetown Saturday, scoring 21 points and grabbing 15 rebounds.

Following the game, however, Thompson saved his highest praise for sophomore Anthony Jones who came off the bench to score 15 points and grab eight rebounds as the Hoyas reversed an earlier loss to Villanova.

"Anthony showed up today and I thought that was the difference," Thompson said. "He went in and did some things we needed, including going in and fighting on the boards."

Despite the outcome of the game, Thompson felt that Villanova remained the class team of the Big East Conference.

"I still think Villanova is a better team than we are. Villanova and St. John's are the two best teams in the conference."

Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino: "Georgetown played very well and and our execution was not as good as should have been. Depite our finish, I still pleased with our regular season and I'm sure the kids will bounce back for the tournament."

Thompson admitted he was worried going into the game following a tough overtime loss earlier this week to Boston College.

"I told them it was extremely important not to lose confidence. We have been losing a lot of close games because we couldn't close."

Georgetown had no trouble closing Saturday, outscoring the Wildcats 17-2 in the first six minutes of the second half to extend a 32-28 halftime advantage to 49-30.

Ewing, who was held to eight points when Villanova edged Georgetown 68-67 in an earlier meeting, scored seven points in the opening minutes of the second half as the Hoyas took command of the game.

The lead ballooned to 21 points, 62-41, with nine minutes remaining before the Wildcats staged a mild rally to close to 64-53 with 8:12 on the clock.

It was Ewing again, however, who slammed the door on the visitors, scoring six of the game's next eight points as Georgetown increased its lead to 72-53.

Villanova, 12-4 in the Big East and 21-6 overall, was led by Dwayne McClain who scored 13 of his team-high 17 points in the first half.

Ed Pinckney, who scored 27 points in the first meeting between the two teams, was held to 10 points before fouling out of the game.

John Pinone had 12 points for the Wildcats. Gene Smith scored 15 for Georgetown, including 11 of 12 from the foul line, where the Hoyas converted 32 of 38 for the game.

Villanova, which trailed 32-28 at halftime, stayed close shooting 10 of 12 from the foul line before intermission.

The victory was Georgetown's 23rd in its last 26 outings at the Capital Centre.

Boston College....81
Providence.....66

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — John Garris and Michael Adams scored 20 points each Saturday night to lead 15th-ranked Boston College to the Big East title with an 81-66 victory over Providence.

The win put Boston College into a first-place tie with Villanova and St. John's, all 12-4 in the Big East, for the conference title. But Boston College earned the top seed in next week's Big East tournament because it beat St. John's twice and Villanova once.

Boston College, 22-5, rolled to a 26-8 lead in the first 10 minutes and a 37-24 advantage at halftime.

But the Friars, who fell to 12-18 overall and 4-12 in the conference, rallied to close the gap to 45-38 with 13 minutes remaining. Adams and Garris then helped Boston College regain command and breeze to the win.

Jay Murphy added 14 points for the Eagles, who were outrebounded 47-30. Providence was led by Otis Thorpe with 20 points and Ray Knight with 11 points and 13 rebounds.

Indiana.....67
Illinois.....55

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Indiana forward Randy Wittman scored 20 points Saturday night and the 11th-ranked Hoosiers, hitting nine of their 11 second-half field goal attempts, rolled over Illinois 67-55 to clinch at least a tie for the Big Ten Conference basketball championship.

Indiana is now 22-5 this season and 12-5 in the Big Ten, one game ahead of Ohio State, which beat Purdue earlier Saturday. Both teams have one game left this season, a showdown here next Saturday afternoon.

Indiana grabbed the lead for good with 9:04 left in the opening half when Wittman hit a jump shot to trigger a 6-0 spurt that gave the Hoosiers a 22-16 advantage. They stretched to margin to 32-23 late in the half and took a 32-25 advantage into the locker-room.

Indiana, which hit 23 of 33 shots in the game, maintained a lead between seven and 11 points most of the second half, with most of its scoring coming from the foul line. The Hoosiers connected on 17 of 24 foul shots in the closing 20 minutes.

Jim Thomas and Winston Morgan added 13 points apiece for Indiana, which has now won or shared seven Big Ten titles in Coach Bob Knight's 12 seasons. Center Uwe Blab added 10 points.

Illinois, now 19-10 overall and 9-7 in the conference, was topped by Derek Harper and Bruce Douglas with 14 points each.

S. Florida.....71
Jacksonville.....58

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Cinderella-minded Jacksonville had its bubble burst 71-58 Saturday night by South Florida in the semifinals of the seventh Annual Sun Belt Conference basketball tournament.

South Florida will play in Sunday's championship game against the winner of the late Saturday night contest between Alabama-Birmingham and Virginia Commonwealth.

Jacksonville, which got to the semifinals by upsetting No. 1 seed Old Dominion 63-59 Friday, appeared headed for another upset by jumping to an early lead against South Florida on a layup and foul shot by Otis Smith at the 12:22 mark. A Smith jumper at 3:45 made it 29-21.

But South Florida rallied and a layup and foul shot by Keith Douglas brought the Bulls within two points 30-28 at halftime.

Jacksonville was held scoreless the first five and a half minutes of the second half as the Bulls took a 36-30 lead, with Douglas scoring on a jump shot, Lewis Card on another jumper, and Charles Bradley on a stuff and two free throws.

Jacksonville managed to re-tie the game 39-all on a three-point play by Maurice Roulhac, who hit a layup and was fouled by Bradley.

But Bradley hit a three-point jump shot that put the Bulls ahead for good at 42-39.

South Florida, 21-8 and 10-6 against Sun Belt teams, defeated South Alabama 66-59 to reach the semis. The Bulls were led Saturday night by Bradley, the conference's co-most valuable player, who scored 16 points. Bradley averages 29.

Top-Ranked Houston Defeats Baylor, 93-64

WACO, Texas (AP) — Michael Young and Clyde Drexler scored 21 and 20 points, respectively, and the top-ranked Houston Cougars overcame a sluggish start Saturday to whip Baylor 93-64 and finish the regular Southwest Conference season unbeaten.

Houston's 20th consecutive victory gave the Cougars an unblemished 16-0 SWC season. It was only the 11th time a school had gone unbeaten through the regular campaign and the first time since Arkansas did it in 1977.

Houston now has 24 consecutive SWC victories, tying a league record established by Rice 1926 through 1928.

The Cougars, who had clinched the SWC title Thursday at Arkansas, shot only 37 percent from the field in the first half and led the Bears 40-32.

Freshman Alvin Robertson, who had a career-high 14 points, kept the Cougar offense perking.

Houston ripped off a 12-0 streak early in the second half and ran away from the Bears, who finished in seventh place in the SWC standings with a 4-12 ledger. Baylor is 12-15 overall and will travel to Lubbock Monday night in a first round SWC tournament game.

Houston will not play in the SWC tournament in Dallas until Friday night.

Larry Micheaux scored 15 points and seven-foot center Akeem Olajuwon added 10 points in out-muscling the Bears.

Daryl Baucham was high for Baylor with 19 points and Ozell Hall added 12 points for the Bears in the regionally televised game in Heart O' Texas Coliseum.

Arkansas.....82
Rice.....55

HOUSTON (AP) — Arkansas' Darrell Walker scored 22 points and the fifth-ranked Hogs had their hottest shooting half of the season en route to an 82-55 Southwest Conference victory over the Rice Owls Saturday night.

Walker's points gave him the SWC scoring championship with 292 points in league play over Houston's Michael Young, who finished with 289 points.

Arkansas closed out its regular season campaign with a 25-2 record with losses only to the No. 1 ranked Cougars. Arkansas finished 14-2 in league games while Rice closed out at 8-19 and 2-14.

The Razorbacks, rallying from a 74-66 loss to Houston on Thursday night, hit 18 of their first 21 shots in the first half and finished hitting 75 percent from the field for their best half of the season.

Freshman Ivan Pettit led the Owls with 14 points.

Rice, a 70-43 loser to the Hogs earlier this season, put up mild defensive resistance at the start of the game but Arkansas outscored th Owls 16-4 over an early stretch and ran off to a 40-20 halftime lead.

Mississippi.....62
Vanderbilt.....51

OXFORD, Miss. (AP) — Senior Carlos Clark led a second-half charge Saturday night to help Mississippi beat Vanderbilt 62-51 in a nationally televised basketball game and earn a second-place tie in the Southeastern Conference.

The 14-point surge gave Ole Miss a 46-28 lead with 9:30 left to play. Clark added three baskets in the spree, and gave the Rebels their biggest lead, 50-31, with a driving layup at 6:52.

No. 7 Kentucky Defeated By LSU

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Howard Carter and Leonard Mitchell combined for 43 points Saturday in leading Louisiana State University to a 74-60 victory over seventh-ranked Kentucky that gave LSU the runnerup spot in the final Southeastern Conference regular season standings.

Kentucky clinched the SEC crown last week and four teams were tied for second going into Saturday's play.

Although LSU will still be tied at 10-8 with at least one other team, Saturday's regular season split with Kentucky gave the Tigers the second place seeding in next week's SEC tournament in Birmingham, Ala.

LSU took a 10-0 lead in the first five minutes of play Saturday, with Carter and Jerry Reynolds each getting 4 points in that opening spurt. Kentucky made 10 trips down the floor without being able to score in those opening minutes.

Carter finished with 23 points and Mitchell had 20. Johnny Jones had 12 for LSU and Reynolds finished with 10.

Jim Master led Kentucky with 19 points, most of them from outside. Mel Turpin had 13 for Kentucky, getting his points from inside.

Kentucky winds up its regular season with a 21-6 mark overall and a 13-5 mark in the SEC. LSU is 19-11 and 10-8 in the conference.

Ohio State.....76
Purdue.....65

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio State, led by Larry Huggins, took advantage of six scoreless minutes by Purdue to run off 12 straight points in the second half and beat the Boilermakers 76-65 Saturday to remain in the race for the Big Ten Conference basketball title.

The 14th-ranked Buckeyes were leading the Boilermakers 46-44 with 14:46 remaining when they went on their tear to take a 56-44 lead with 9:23 left.

Ohio State pushed its league record to 11-6 with only one game remaining at Indiana next Saturday. The Buckeyes are 19-8 overall.

The regionally televised loss all but eliminated Purdue from the Big Ten race. The Boilermakers are 9-7 with two conference games remaining. They are 18-8 for all games.

Huggins, who scored 14 points, hit eight in the Ohio State stretch that gave it the 12-point lead. Tony Campbell, who had 14, scored the other four points in the winning spurt.

The Buckeyes, avenging an earlier 64-57 loss at Purdue, wrapped up the victory at the free throw line in the closing moments. The Buckeyes sank 13 of 14 free throws in the last five minutes.

Substitute guard Ron Stokes, who had a team-leading 18 points, sank all nine of his foul shots, six of them coming in the waning minutes.

St. John's.....91
Pittsburgh.....73

NEW YORK (AP) — David Russell scored 27 points and helped St. John's jump to leads of 10-0 and 22-3 to rout Pittsburgh 91-73 and gain a tie for first place in the Big East Conference Saturday.

The 10th-ranked Redmen, who finished their league schedule tied with Villanova at 12-4, also got 20 points from Chris Mullin, who became only the third St. John's player to reach the 1,000-point mark in two years.

Clyde Vaughan had 22 of his game-high 31 points in the second half for the Panthers, who wound up in sixth place at 6-10 and dropped to 13-14 overall.

Mullin, a sophomore guard, now has 1,019 points. The only other Redmen to reach that lofty plateau in two years were Bob Zawoluk (1950) and Mel Davis (1971).

Billy Goodwin added 13 points for the Redmen, who are 24-4 overall, and Kevin Williams followed with 12. George Allen had 12 for Pittsburgh, Keith Armstrong added 11 and Bryan Mitchell had 10.

The Redmen took their 10-0 lead at 4:11 with Mullin hitting two jumpers and Russell a pair of free throws. After a three-point play Allen at 5:00, the Redmen got 12 more points in a row with Russell, Mullin and Goodwin each getting four to make it 22-3 after 8:46 had been played.

St. John's grabbed its biggest lead, 37-17, on a three-point play by Kevin Williams with 4:13 to play in the half. At halftime, St. John's led 41-25.

Pittsburgh got as close as 11 points on two occasions — 48-37 on a layup by Billy Culbertson at 4:37 of the second half and 63-52 on a rebound basket by Keith Armstrong at the 10:36 mark.

Mullin then had six of St. John's next eight points to run the lead to 75-57 with 4:30 to play.

St. John's shot 66.7 percent from the floor in the first half, while Pittsburgh hit only 37 percent of its shots. The Redmen outrebounded the Panthers 37-29.

Georgia.....74
Tennessee.....59

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Vern Fleming scored 22 of his career high 28 points in the second half Saturday to spark the Georgia Bulldogs to a 74-59 Southeastern Conference basketball victory over Tennessee.

The Volunteers, led by Dale Ellis' 18 first-half points, went to the locker room at halftime down only 34-33. And at the start of the second half, Dan Federmann scored a basketball to give Tennessee a 35-34 lead.

But Georgia scored the next nine points, five of them by Fleming, to take a 43-35 lead. After another basket by Federmann, Fleming answered with four more points to give Georgia a 47-37 lead with 16:18 to go.

Tennessee managed to pull to within nine at 56-47 on a jumper by Tyrone Harper with 10:06 to play, but the Volunteers never got any closer as they failed repeatedly to get the ball into Ellis, who scored only four points in the second half.

Tennessee had 26 turnovers in the game, 18 of them coming on steals by Georgia, a season high for the Bulldog. Georgia finished the game with 18 turnovers.

The victory gives Georgia a 9-9 record in the SEC and an 18-9 record overall. Tennessee dropped to 9-9 in the conference and 17-10 overall.

In addition to Fleming's 28 points, Georgia was led by Gerald Crosby with 18 points, and James Banks and Terry Fair with 10 each. Willie Burton, with 12 points was the only Volunteer other than Ellis to finish in double figures.

Clemson Edges Illinois-Chicago

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Clemson center Raymond Jones hit for 18 points Saturday night to lead his team to a 92-88 non-conference win over Illinois-Chicago in college basketball.

The Tigers, with six players in double figures, hit seven of eight free throws in the waning minutes to hold off a rally by the Illinois-Chicago Flames.

Clemson wound up the season with an 11-19 record, and will continue play next Friday against North Carolina in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament. The Flames finished the season with their best record ever, 16-12.

The Tigers struggled to a 42-41 halftime lead after squandering an 18-12 lead early and trailing by as many as five late in the first half.

Point guard Craig Lathen, who finished with 24 points, and guard John Ellis, who had 19, kept the Flames close through the first seven minutes of the second half.

But Clemson went on an 18-6 scoring tear to take a 75-62 lead with eight minutes to play.

Freshman Warren Wallace scored eight of his 10 points during that stretch, while senior Fred Gilliam added six more of his 16 total points.

Illinois-Chicago came back behind hot outside shooting and a pressure defense to cut the deficit to three points, 85-82, before Clemson hit critical free throws to seal the win.

Clemson coach Bill Foster had predicted the Flames would be a tough opponent, and said after the game that they had not disappointed him.

"This was a better team than most people believed they were," he said. "Every time we tried to go to a zone, they came down and hit a jumper. They kept the heat on us all night."

Illinois-Chicago coach Tom Meyer said several factors contributed to the loss.

"Maybe we didn't get the right whistle at the right time," he said, "or maybe it's because we don't have any seniors.

"Anyway, we got 16 wins, the most in the school's history and we're proud of that. We didn't play as well as we could have though," he said.

Meyer conceded the loss hurt the team's chances for a bid to the National Invitational Tournament.

"We needed this one to be considered, I think," said the Illinois-Chicago coach.

Missouri Gives Stewart 300th Coaching Victory

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Senior Steve Stipanovich and sophomore Greg Cavener each scored 18 points to lead 13th-ranked Missouri to an 84-66 victory over cold-shooting Iowa State in the regular-season basketball finale for both teams.

The victory was the 300th of Coach Norm Stewart's 16-year coaching tenure at Missouri. Stewart's total career mark is 396-194.

Missouri finished the regular season on top of the Big Eight with a 12-2 mark in the conference and 24-6 record overall. Iowa State finished at 5-9 in the Big Eight and 13-14 overall.

The Tigers jumped out to an early 14-5 lead, but Cyclones forward Barry Stevens connected on two quick field goals to close the gap to 14-9.

The Tigers, however, scored 20 of the next 24 points to take a 34-13 lead with 4:25 left in the half. Cavener led the onslaught with 10 points during that stretch.

The Cyclones scored seven of the final nine points of the half to go into the locker room trailing 36-20.

Missouri shot 66 percent from the field in the first half, while Iowa State hit just 36 percent of its shots from the floor.

Stevens opened the second half with a 20-foot jumper to pull Iowa State within 14, but that was as close as the Cyclones could get the rest of the way.

Stevens led Iowa State with 17 points. Jon Sundvold added 12 points for Missouri.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Stanford Strickland sank five of six free throws in the final 31 seconds as No. 19 Tennesseee-Chattanooga staved off Western Carolina 76-73 Saturday night in a Southern Conference basketball game for its 11th straight victory.

Willie White scored a game-high 26 points, including 18 in the second half, and Strickland added 14 as the defending Southern Conference champion Moccasins came from behind to raise their season's record to 23-3 and their conference mark to 15-1. The Mocs also defeated Western Carolina 74-62 a week earlier to clinch the conference's regular-season championship and the No. 1 seeding in the league's championship tournament which starts Thursday in Charleston, W. Va.

Western's Catamounts had built a 35-27 halftime lead and rolled up the game's biggest edge at 47-38 with 14:45 remaining on Kenny Trimier's jumper.

But White scored 15 of his points in the remaining time and sank a three-point shot with 3:47 left to put the Mocs ahead for good 63-60.

Quinton Lytle paced the Catamounts, now 16-11 overall and 9-7 in the conference, with 23 points, including 19 in the second half, and Trimier contributed 20.

Wilmington, 11-16, jumped out to a 17-6 lead and led 41-39 at halftime. The score was tied five times early in the second half before Andre Motley hit a basket to give the Buccaneers their first lead at 51-49 with 15:05 left.

After three more deadlocks, Motley gave East Tennessee State the lead for good at 60-58 with a long jumper at the 6:06 mark. The Buccaneers then outscored the Seahawks 10-2 in the final 3:10.

Sonny Vinson added 15 points for East Tennessee State and Marcus Reese had 10 as the Buccaneers improved to 20-7

Last-Second Shot Lifts Connecticut By No. 18 Syracuse

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Larry Blucher dropped in the rebound of Karl Hobbs' missed layup with three seconds left as Connecticut upset 18th-ranked Syracuse 55-54 in Big East college basketball Saturday.

Connecticut held Syracuse — the nation's highest scoring team with an 87.3 average — to its fewest points of the season.

Freshman Earl Kelley sank the first foul shot of a one-and-one with 25 seconds left to tie the game at 53-53. But Kelley missed the second shot and a free throw by Leo Rautins 15 seconds later gave the lead back to Syracuse.

Hobbs took the inbounds pass, ran the length of the court and went for a layup. Blucher, trailing the play, tapped in the rebound.

A long pass from Rautins to Erich Santifer for a final Syracuse shot failed as the game ended.

The victory gave Connecticut, 12-15 for the season and 5-11 in conference play, an automatic berth in the Big East basketball tournament. The Huskies play Villanova, the nation's fourth-ranked team, in Thursday's quarterfinals.

Syracuse, 19-7 and 9-6 in the conference, will play Georgetown in its first Big East tournament game.

The lead changed hands 11 times in a sloppy first half as each team committed 11 turnovers. But Syracuse held on for a 30-26 halftime lead.

Hobbs was the game's high scorer with 15 points. Bruce Kuczenski added 13 for Connecticut.

Rafael Addison had 12 points and Rautins and Waldron each had 10 for Syracuse.

State Women, Maryland In ACC Finals

FAYETTEVILLE (UPI) — Lea Hakala scored 24 points to lead Maryland to an 88-69 win over North Carolina in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament semifinals Saturday.

In an earlier game, Linda Page scored a tournament record 42 points in North Carolina State's 103-87 victory over Clemson.

Maryland and North Carolina State meet in the tournament finals Sunday.

North Carolina came within three points, 66-63, with 4:14 left to play, but from there, Maryland outscored the Tar Heels 22-6 for the final 19-point margin.

Maryland, 24-4 overall and 12-3 in the ACC, led 35-27 at halftime.

Joining Hakala in double figures for Maryland were Jasmina Perazic with 22 points, Chequita Wood with 18 and Marcia Richardson with 10.

Pam Leake and Kathy Crawford paced the North Carolina, 11-4 in the ACC and 22-7 overall, with 20 points each and Tresa Brown contributed 10.

In the first semifinal matchup, Page's 42 points broke the single-game record of 36 set last year by Clemson's Barbara Kennedy. North Carolina State, now 22-6 overall and 14-1 in the ACC, also got 22 points from Angie Armstrong and 12 from Priscilla Adams.

Clemson, which trailed from the time the score was 6-3, was paced by Debbi Oraczewski with 25 points, Jacqui Jones with 18 and Mary Anne Cublic with 12.

Leading 52-42 at the half, North Carolina State went up 56-42 when Page scored four straight points in the opening minutes of the second half.

The Wolfpack led by as many as 21, 81-60, when Page scored a field goal with 8:25 remaining.

STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP) — Guard Jeff Malone led Mississippi State with 27 points Saturday night as the Bulldogs closed their season with a 73-62 basketball victory over Florida in Southeastern Conference play.

Malone, the SEC's leading scorer, scored 21 of his points in the second half as the Bulldogs pulled away.

Malone, a senior from Macon, Ga., who set a new school career scoring record a week ago, broke Jim Ashmore's long standing school season scoring record Saturday. Ashmore had 708 points during the 1956-57 season, while Malone finished his senior campaign with 726 points. His new school career record is 2,091 points.

Mississippi State took a 2-0 lead on a turnaround jumper by Kalpatrick Wells and never trailed. The game was tied four times in the first half. The last time at 10-10 with 12 minutes left. The Bulldogs led 25-22 at halftime.

Expos Edge Braves, 4-3

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Brad Mills' single drove in the winning run in the eighth inning as the Montreal Expos defeated the Atlanta Braves 4-3 Saturday in the exhibition baseball opener for both teams.

Mills' hit followed singles by Jim Wohlford and Mike Gates and an error by Atlanta reserve shortstop Paul Zuvella which allowed the Expos to tie the exhibition contest.

Atlanta scored in the first inning when a Terry Harper single drove in Brett Butler, who singled and stole a base. In the fifth, Rafael Ramirez singled to drive in Larry Whisenton, who had doubled.

An error and a balk in the eighth put Atlanta pinch-runner Albert Hall in position to score on a Dave Tomlin wild pitch.

Montreal scored twice in the sixth, aided by a Ramirez error and an RBI single by Tim Wallach.

Tomlin, 1-0, was credited with the victory. Gene Garber, 0-1, took the loss.

The White Sox scored six runs in a second-inning rally, keyed by a two-run single from Harold Baines and a two-run double from designated hitter Greg Luzinski.

Ron LeFlore and Rusty Kuntz were the only Chicago players to pick up two hits in the game.

Baseball's Back

A Time Of Untainted Optimism For Teams, Players

By The Associated Press

Baseball's exhibition season has begun, like ground-hog predictions and the Farmer's Almanac heralding the imminence of spring.

And, like spring itself, it is a time of untainted optimism, for the first official loss of the season is yet to be recorded. It is a time of year when every team, with varying degrees of righteousness, can lay claim to baseball's throne.

Even the most cynical fan can shade skeptical eyes with rose-colored glasses and make outlandish predictions about the success of the hometown team.

Spring training, which opened for pitchers and catchers on Feb. 17, moved into its exhibition season in Florida on Saturday, with the Arizona-based teams joining Tuesday.

The 1983 exhibition season includes 356 games, two in Puerto Rico. It will last until Sunday, April 3, one day before the beginning of the regular season.

Eighteen teams are training in Florida, seven in Arizona and one — the California Angels — in Palm Springs, Calif.

Ten of those teams opened training with managers who were not around one year ago, and others pinned their hopes on new players — most visibly the San Diego Padres, with first baseman Steve Garvey and the Chicago White Sox, with pitcher Floyd Bannister.

Seven of the new managers were named in the off-season. They were Joe Altobelli at Baltimore, Doug Rader at Texas, John McNamara at California, Mike Ferraro at Cleveland, Bill Virdon at Montreal, Billy Martin at the New York Yankees and Steve Boros at Oakland. Harvey Kuenn at Milwaukee, Bob Lillis at Houston and Russ Nixon at Cincinnati were named during the 1982 season. Six managers — Kuenn, Lillis, Nixon and rookies Ferraro, Boros and Rader — are handling their first spring training assignments.

For these teams, hope for a new beginning started at the top. Others approached the subject of new beginnings from another angle.

"Obviously, we're very optimistic," says San Diego Padres President Ballard Smith. "Steve Garvey not only is going to be a fine ballplayer here, but he'll be a great part of our community. He's exactly what we were looking for — a first baseman with right-handed power."

Besides Garvey, who left the Los Angeles Dodgers as a free agent, and Bannister, whose 209 strikeouts at Seattle led the American League last season, there were other old names in new camps.

The Philadelphia Phillies traded Manny Trillo and a host of others to Cleveland for outfielder Von Hayes, then acquired 39-year-old Joe Morgan from San Francisco, reuniting him with former Cincinnati teammate, 41-year-old Pete Rose. They later added another ex-member of the Big Red Machine, 40-year-old Tony Perez.

The New York Yankees begin the exhibition season with Steve Kemp, a free-agent acquisition from the White Sox, in the cleanup spot in a batting order that also includes Don Baylor, a former Most Valuable Player acquired as a free agent from California.

The New York Mets traded for pitchers Tom Seaver and Mike Torrez, the Chicago Cubs acquired Ron Cey from Los Angeles and the Houston Astros signed Pittsburgh free agent Omar Moreno.

Personal goals also will figure heavily in the upcoming season. At least two major records appear headed for extinction.

The first probably will be the all-time strikeout record of 3,508 by Walter Johnson. Nolan Ryan, the tall right-hander from Houston, begins the season just 14 shy of tying that mark, with 3,494.

Also likely to fall early will be the National League record for consecutive games played, 1,117 by Billy Williams. Garvey is only 10 away from that mark, and Padres Manager Dick Williams says he will do everything possible to see that he breaks the record.

Koch Leads Inverrary

LAUDERHILL, Fla. (AP) — Gary Koch said "a couple of newspaper articles" are at least partially responsible for his lofty — and surprising — position as the leader after three rounds of the $400,000 Honda-Inverrary Golf Classic.

"Sure, they got me pumped up," said Koch, for five long years a non-winner and now seeking his second consecutive PGA Tour triumph.

"I read these articles and I thought that (Ray) Floyd had already won the golf tournament. They almost gave him the tournament. He could have called his banker and cashed the check.

"But that was with 36 holes to go. That's a lot of golf left to be played. And with 18 holes there's still a lot of golf to be played.

"Ray is a great player. One of the best we've got. But," he lectured the assembled press, "there are a lot of good young players out here and you guys have to recognize it."

Floyd, the current PGA champion and recognized as one of the game's premier frontrunners, had established a 3-shot lead through Friday's play.

Then, in a wind that gusted to 35 mph down the condo canyons of Inverrary, Floyd blew to an uncharacteristic 78, by five shots his highest score of the season. It sent him reeling back into the pack at 212.

Koch took full advantage of the suddenly-opened door. He manufactured a 68, including a 32 on the back nine with birdies on his last two holes, and moved from five shots off the pace into the lead at 207, nine under.

"Those two birdies at the end were a bonus," said Koch, who broke his long non-winning string with a 5-shot victory last week in Doral.

"I figured if I could shoot a good, solid round I had a chance to put myself in position again," he said. He had to have Floyd's reluctant help to do it, but, said Koch, "that's just a good example of what can happen out here."

Wayne Levi, who took over second place with a 208 total, a single stroke off the lead, agreed.

"It's unexpected," Levi said of Floyd's highest score of the season. "He's a good frontrunner, but he's human like anybody else. That can happen.

"And let me tell you, it was tough out there. If you get it going bad, you can shoot some bad scores."

Levi, a two-time winner last season, spiced his round with a 65-70 foot putt for an eagle-3 on the 15th hole. He had a share of the lead until he bogeyed the 18th, putting his approach over the green.

Peete Withdraws

LAUDERHILL, Fla. (AP) — Calvin Peete, reportedly miffed over harrassment from a spectator, made an abrupt withdrawal from the Honda Inverrary Classic golf tournament.

Milton Stewart, a physical education teacher from nearby Fort Lauderdale who is a friend of the golfer, said he was following Peete at the Inverrary Golf and Country Club Friday when the incident occurred.

Stewart said he was not close enough to hear what was said. But he said Peete was greatly distressed by what the spectator said to him.

He said it was a "personal matter. It had nothing to do with the golf tournament."

After Wrecks Halt Race

Earnhardt Wins Shortened C-C 200

ROCKINGHAM (AP) — Bubba Nissen suffered a broken leg and facial lacerations when his car went out of control and slammed into a guardrail, causing two other wrecks during Saturday's Coca-Cola 200 late model sportsman race.

Dale Earnhardt was declared winner of the race, a preliminary for Sunday's Warner Hodgdon Carolina 500 Grand National, at North Carolina Motor Speedway.

The front end of Nissen's Pontiac Ventura was sheared away by the impact of the crash, but the Virginia Beach, Va., resident was quickly removed from the car and taken to the infield hospital. He was later transferred to Moore County Hospital in Pinehurst.

Nissen's car went out of control coming through the second turn and slammed hard into the outside guardrail where it intersects with a concrete wall along the backstretch.

A car driven by Harry Lee Hill hit the inside guardrail while attempting to avoid Nissen, and another car, driven by Glenn Sears, then slid through the scattered debris and struck the concrete barrier. Neither was injured.

The rest of the field was red-flagged to a halt after completing the 148th lap of a scheduled 197-lap event on the speedway's 1.017-mile banked oval. Earnhardt, driving a Pontiac, was awarded the victory, with Bobby Allison second. He was followed by Butch Lindley, L.D. Ottinger and Bosco Lowe.

Earnhardt, who picked up the winner's share of $8,150, led five times for 107 laps. He averaged 91.892 mph.

Speedway and NASCAR officials decided after nearly an hour'a wait to call the race official after 148 laps because track workers said it would take at least two more hours to repair the damaged guardrail.

Earnhardt, the pole-sitter, had been locked in a race-long battle for the lead with Neil Bonnett, but the latter pitted when the yellow flag came out for Nissen's accident and wound up sixth, the last car on the lead lap.

Bonnett led four times for 41 laps, giving up the top spot to Earnhardt for the last time 40 laps from the end.

The final caution period was the eighth of the day in the crash-marred race, but the only other serious incident came on lap 91 when Morgan Shepherd blew an engine coming out of turn one and slammed hard into the guardrail.

Shepherd, from Conover, N.C., who still had a sore neck from crashing in virtually the same spot Friday during a Grand National stock car practice session, was shaken up an was taken to a hospital in Pinehurst, N.C., for observation.

Final 5 Spots Filled For 500

ROCKINGHAM (AP) — The final five spots in Sunday's Warner Hodgdon Carolina 500 Grand National stock car race were filled Saturday, with four of the cars standing on previously recorded qualifying speeds.

Buddy Arrington gained the 31st spot in the 35-car lineup by virtue of Friday's lap of 136.175 mph in a Dodge Magnum.

D.K. Ulrich took to the track Saturday and produced a lap of 133.606 in a Buick Regal, giving him the 32nd spot.

Also qualifying with times record in earlier time trials were Rick Newsom, Bobby Wawak and Ernie Cline.

The announced field of 36 cars was pared by one because there were no other cars entered. Morgan Shepherd was entered, but wrecked his car.

The 500-mile race over North Carolina Motor Speedway's 1.017-mile banked oval is scheduled to start at 12:05 p.m. EST Sunday.

Farmville Tops Cougars, Gains Finals

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

HOLLYWOOD — Farmville Central owed SouthWest Edgecombe this one. The Jaguars, upset last week by the Cougars in the ECC tournament, avenged that loss Friday night in the District II 3-A semifinals.

Keyed by Terrence Pettway's 17 points and 14 rebounds, the Jaguars eased past SouthWest Edgecombe, 54-49, to advance to the District II finals Tuesday night against West Craven.

The Eagles edged D.H. Conley, 61-60, in Friday's other semifinal game. In the girls' title game, D.H. Conley meets North Lenoir. DHC beat Charles B. Aycock, 42-37, Friday to advance to the finals.

Farmville is now 18-7. West Craven is 19-5.

"Our guys were ready," Farmville Central coach Mike Terrell said afterward. "They were as ready as they could be emotionally. We were a lot more mentally ready tonight.

"Losing last week doesn't hurt you," Terrell said. "Losing this week hurts you a lot."

Farmville raced to an eight-point lead midway through the opening quarter and led 14-8 going into the second period. SouthWest cut the deficit to two with a minute left, but the Jaguars led at the half 26-21.

The Jaguars stretched their lead to 13 with 4:08 left in the third period and led 41-30 going into the final period. However, guard Tim Walker keyed an 11-1 run by the Cougars that cut the lead to 48-45 with 1:08 left.

But Pettway hit three of four free throws to up the lead to 51-45, and Reggie Gorham hit two more with 26 seconds remaining as the Jaguars never allowed the Cougars closer than four again.

"I thought we dominated the game — except for one little spurt in the fourth period," Terrell said. "Our guys played real intense."

The intensity translated into a 27-18 advantage on the boards for the Jaguars and a 48.8% (20 of 41) from the field. SouthWest, which finishes the season at 18-9, hit 37.5% (18 of 48) from the field.

Joining Pettway in double figures for Farmville were guards Reggie Gorham and Gary Hobgood. Gorham scored 11 points and Hobgood added 10.

Walker topped soutWest with 21 points. LeMonte Johnson led SWE off the boards with 10 rebounds.

The Jaguars, known for their inside game, used the outside shooting of Gorham and Hobgood to take the early lead. Gorham hit a 15-foot jumper from the right and Hobgood canned one from the left for a 4-0 lead.

A jumper and a follow shot by Pettway and another jumper by Gorham pushed the lead to 10-2 with 2:55 left before a jumper and a pair of foul shots by Walker cut the gap to 14-8 after one period.

Pettway took a pass inside from Hobgood and then hit an 18-footer and forward Tony Hargrove hit two free throws as Farmville stretched its bulge to 20-12 at the 3:29 mark.

Jesse Forbes hit two buckets — one after a Jaguar turnover — to slice the gap to 20-18 with 1:16 left. But Gorham hit a jumper and then hit a free throws to make it 23-18.

After SWE narrowed the lead to 23-21, Bobby Carraway canned the front end of a one-and-one and Pettway put the missed second shot with less than five seconds left to give Farmville a five-point halftime lead.

"I thought we came out and played excellent most of the first half. We did a pretty good job of hitting the open man in our offense," Terrell said.

Farmville did an even better job in the third period against SWE's man-to-man — "I think the key to the game may have been when they switched to man-to-man. We play better against a man-to-man," Terrell said.

Hargrove took a pass from Andrew Edwards in for a bucket and was fouled. He missed the free throw, but Pettway followed it back in for a 32-23 advantage. Hargrove then hit Gorham inside and Hobgood nailed a jumper for a 36-23 lead with 4:08 left in the period.

SouthWest managed to cut the lead to 11 going into the final period, but the Jaguars went back out by 13 (47-34) before the Cougars rallied for the final time.

Farmville missed two one-and-ones and turned the ball over three times while the Cougars rallied to within three. Walker hit a jumper, a follow shot and had another scored on a goaltend by Pettway to key the 11-1 run.

But the Jaguars never allowed the Cougars closer than three as they held on to win.

Chargers Ease By Kinston, 9-7

KINSTON — Ayden-Grifton outlasted Kinston High School Friday afternoon to chalk up a 9-7 baseball victory in the opening game of the season for the Chargers.

The game wasn't decided until the final inning, when Ayden-Grifton pushed over two runs to take a 9-6 lead into the final half of the frame. Kinston tried to rally, but came up with just one run.

Doug Coley hurled the win for the Chargers, going all the way. He scattered six hits through the afternoon.

Kinston grabbed the initial lead, scoring a run in the first, but Ayden-Grifton came back with two in the top of the second, and each team added single runs in the third. That left the Chargers ahead, 3-2.

Ayden-Grifton added four runs in the fifth to up its lead to 7-2, but Kinston came back with two runs in each of the fifth and sixth innings, trimming the lead back to 7-6.

In the top of the seventh, the Chargers sewed it up, however. Terry Garrett opened the inning with a single and Charles Mitchell walked. Gene Johnson then doubled to drive both runners across and give the Chargers a 9-6 lead.

Kinston came up with one more run in the bottom of the inning, but fell short with its rally.

Garrett led the A-G hitting with three in four trips, while Johnson was 2-5.

David Mitchell led the Kinston hitting with three in as many appearances.

A&T, Howard Gain Finals

GREENSBORO (AP) — Joe Binion and Eric Boyd scored 22 points each to lead North Carolina A&T to an 81-74 victory over Maryland-Eastern Shore Friday night in the semifinals of the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference basketball tournament.

The Aggies were to defend their MEAC title against Howard, a 67-57 victor over South Carolina State, in the finals Saturday.

N.C. A&T moved out to a 40-28 halftime edge, but the Hawks opened the second half with a 12-4 burst to make it 44-40. Binion hit two buckets and Boyd followed with a 15-footer to pull away to a 57-50 margin with 12:04 left.

The Hawks were able to come no closer than five points the rest of the way.

Antoine Collins and Jimmy Brown added 15 points each as the Aggies went to 22-7.

Maryland-Eastern Shore was led by Donnell Boney's 19 points, while Allen Faulks added 16 and Allen Davenport had 14. The Hawks finished the season at 10-19.

Derek Carraciolo scored 13 of his 17 points in the second half to lead Howard over South Carolina State.

Kevin Scott hit 11 of his 16 points in the first half and Bernard Perry added 10 of his 14 as Howard, 19-8, took a 35-30 halftime lead. S.C. State, 13-13, came to within 64-60 with 12:11 left, but could get no closer.

Carraciolo helped seal the victory as he grabbed a game high 13 rebounds and blocked two shots.

The Bulldogs were led by Ralph Miller with 15, while Lorenzo Chance added 14.

The victory was the sixth straight for Howard, and marked the fifth straight year the Bison have reached the MEAC finals.

ECU Grid Clinic Dates Are Set

The East Carolina University football staff will hold its annual spring football clinic for high school coaches, college coaches and any others interested on April 8-9.

The clinic is scheduled for Mendenhall Student Center on the main campus, starting at 5 p.m. on Friday with registration, followed by three sessions beginning at 6 p.m., and concluding with a pig pickin'. The linic will continue all day on Saturday.

Head coach Ed Emory, now in his fourth season with the Pirates, has just completed his most successful recruiting campaign following a 7-4 season, and will head up the clinic for 1983.

New offensive coordinator and associate head coach Art Baker will lead the offensive portion of the clinic, dealing primarily with the Pirate "I" attack. Last season, the Pirates averaged 399.2 yards per game and 23.5 points per game in the unique option oriented "I" attack.

New defensive coordinator Tom Throckmorton will feature the 50-front defensive alighment in his session of the clinic. While coaching at VMI, Throckmorton engineered several defensive schemes that led to major upsets.

All members of the ECU staff will participate in the clinic. Those attending the clinic are welcome to attend the Pirate spring workouts on Friday (2:30 to 4:30) and Saturday (4 to 6:30).

Pre-registration is $15, while late registration on Friday will be $17.50. For those attending just the Saturday sessions, registration will be $12.50, starting at 8 a.m.

Eagles Nip Conley, 61-60

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley saw its season — and the Keith Gatlin era — come to an abrupt end Friday night against a West Craven team the Vikings had beaten twice during the regular season.

It was a contest the Eagles, long considered one of the most talented teams in the state but also one of the least disciplined, seemed destined to give away — somehow.

The Eagles blew two seven-point and one six-point leads in the last 3½ minutes, but when Conley guard Mitchell Cox missed a hurried 17-footer at the horn, West Craven had survived, 61-60, in the District II 3-A semifinals.

The Eagles, now 19-5, play Farmville Central for the District II title Tuesday at 8:30. The Jaguars, 18-7, eased past SouthWest Edgecombe, 54-49, in the other semifinal game Friday night.

The Vikings end the season at 22-4.

The Vikings trailed 56-49 with 2:14 left but rallied behind Gatlin — and three Eagle turnovers. Gatlin, who scored a game-high 20 points, nailed a three-point play, a layup and a pair of free throws to cut the gap to 61-60 with 13 seconds left.

The Eagles turned the ball over in backcourt with seven seconds remaining, and with nearly everyone looking for Gatlin to get the ball for the final shot, Cox shot — and missed — at the buzzer.

It was a play that left many of the more than 1,800 who watched wondering what had happened and why Gatlin had not gotten the ball. Asked about the last play, DHC coach Shelley Marsh said:

"I knew they'd be all over Keith," Marsh said. "If Mitchell couldn't get it to Keith, I told him to take the last shot.

"I certainly would have liked to get the ball in Keith's hands, but we had to go to our second option," Marsh said. "I thought he took about as good a shot as we were going to get."

It was a physical game. At least twice players had to be restrained from going after each other, and nowhere was it more physical than inside where the Eagles dominated the boards, 31-17 — including an 18-7 advantage in the second half as DHC failed to get a rebound in the third period.

Linwood Harris led the Eagles with 13 rebounds. Leon Cox had seven rebounds to lead DHC.

Joining Gatlin in double figures were Leon Cox with 14 points and Mitchell Cox with 11.

West Craven went to a box-and-one in the second half on Gatlin and held DHC's star guard scoreless until the final two minutes when he scored seven points to aid the DHC comeback.

Harris, who did not start, led West Craven with 19 points. Ronnie Bellamy had 16 points — 14 in the second half — and Thomas King added 12.

Conley hit 46.7% (21 of 45) from the field. The Eagles nailed 63.2% (24 of 38) from the floor, including 11 of 16 in the second half. West Craven hit 13 of 22 from the foul line, DHC 18 of 31.

The Eagles had 25 turnovers — 15 in the second half — compared to 13 for the Vikings.

DHC jumped on the Eagles early. Gatlin scored eight points in the first period — all on jumpers from 15 feet or beyond — to help DHC go up by five early and lead 15-12 at the end of the period.

Two long jumpers by King put the Eagles up 18-17 early in the second period, but Mitchell Cox stole the ball and drove for a three-point play and Gatlin hit a layup as DHC went ahead 26-22 and led at the half, 27-26.

The Eagles scored the first six points of the second half — all by Harris — to go up 32-27. Two buckets by Leon Cox put DHC back on top, 35-34, but Bellamy's three-point play with 1:00 left made it 39-37 and West Craven led, 41-37, going into the final period.

The Eagles hit the front end of three straight one-and-ones — and grabbed the rebound on each second miss — to extend their lead to 45-39 with 6:13 left. DHC cut the lead to two but a 5-0 spurt gave West Craven a 51-44 lead with 3:19 left.

Three-point plays by Harris and the Vikings' Otis Payton made it 54-47 with 2½ minutes left. The Eagles could not hold the lead, however. Gatlin's three-point play made it 56-52. Then, after missing the front end of a one-and-one, Gatlin drove for a layup and Mitchell Cox hit two free throws after stealing the ball to cut the lead to 58-56 with 1:20 left.

Bellamy hit a jumper on the baseline but Gatlin countered with two free throws for 60-58 with 26 seconds left. Reserve Anthony Wesley then hit one of two free throws for a 61-58 lead, but Mitchell Cox took a pass from Gatlin for a layup to cut the lead to one with 15 seconds left.

It was a close as DHC got, however, as Cox's final shot missed, sending many of the Eagle fans out onto the court to celebrate.

"I really can't think of anything I'd do differently," Marsh said afterward. "We played them about as well as we could have.

"I thought we were mentally ready to play ball, but talent-wise they have the best talent in the district — and that includes Farmville Central."

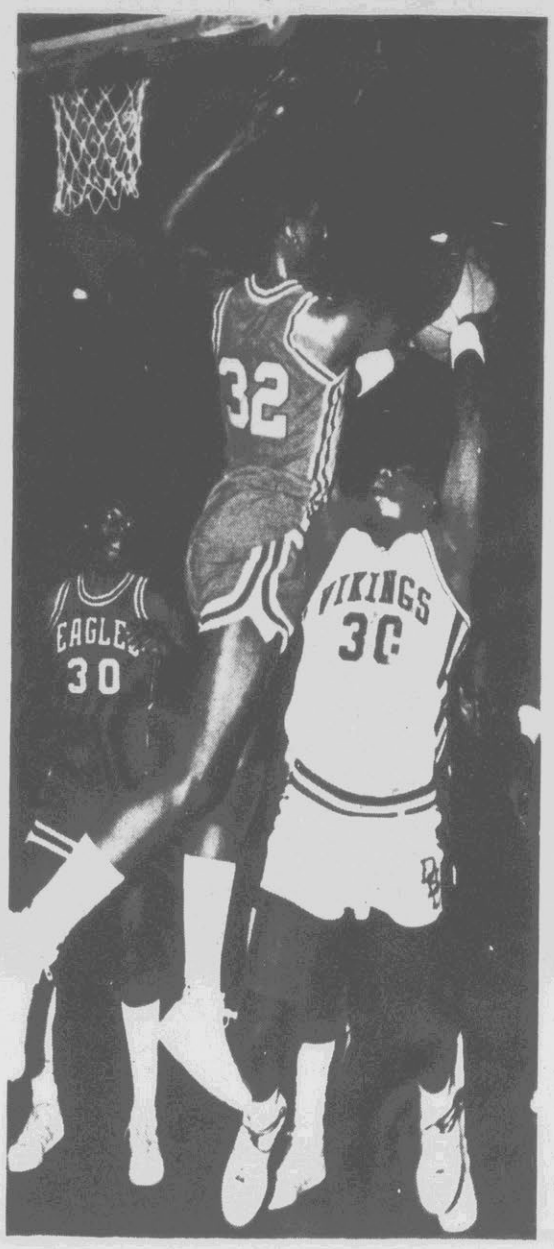

Added Marsh: "Talent-wise, we're not a 22-4 team. But heart-wise we are. The kids never gave up tonight and that's all you can ask."

Valkyries Top Aycock, Face N. Lenoir Again

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley had never defeated C.B. Aycock under third-year coach Joy James in four previous tries. Until Friday night.

Nor had the Valkyries ever been in a district final under James. But, they are now as Conley held off a late charge by C.B. Aycock en route to a 42-37 victory in the District II 3-A semifinals.

DHC, now 24-3, faces North Lenoir for the district title Tuesday at 7 p.m. The game is a rematch of the Coastal Conference tournament title game, won by North Lenoir, 51-50. The two teams tied for the CC regular-season title.

"It feels good to beat someone who's beaten you four times," James said. "I want (North Lenoir). I want another shot at them and I think the girls do, too. It should be a good game."

DHC almost didn't make it to the finals. The Valkyries lost a nine-point bulge early in the second half as CBA scored 10 straight to take a 21-20 lead. Conley regained the lead at the end of the period, 28-26.

Aycock retook the lead, 31-30, with 5:09 left, but Irish Barnhill's jumper and two buckets by Mechio Kornegay gave DHC a 38-33 lead with 2:55 left. Aycock had its chances at the end as DHC hit just four of nine free throws — Conley missed the front ends of three one-and-ones. But the Lady Falcons had just four points in the last 2½ minutes while turning the ball over three times.

Twice Aycock cut the lead to three, but a miss and a turnover foiled any hopes of getting closer as DHC held on to win.

"I thought our girls wanted it more than they did," James said. "I thought our kids played a great man-to-man and I thought our switching defenses kept them off balance."

DHC forced Aycock into 15 turnovers — a high number for the Lady Falcons, who finish the season at 21-6. DHC had 10 turnovers.

Kornegay led DHC with 17 points and Darlene Cannon added 11. Aycock was led by Zina Jones with 12 points — 10 of which came in the second half — and Marsha Hester with 11 points.

Three long-range jumpers by Cannon and five CBA turnovers helped DHC to a 10-6 lead after the first period. Kornegay's baseline drive pushed the lead to 16-8 with 2:20 left and led at the half, 18-11.

DHC stretched its lead to 20-11 early in the second half before Aycock ran off 10 straight points with Sheri Williams hitting two buckets. DHC countered with a 6-0 spurt — all on outside jumpers — to go up 26-21 with 3:48 left.

Aycock tied it at 26-26 on a jumper by Jones but DHC regained the lead as the third period ended and then held on despite losing the lead in the final period to win.

Waltrip Recalls Daytona Crash

ROCKINGHAM (AP) — Darrell Waltrip's neck still aches and he remains a little hazy about the details of what happened two weeks ago at Daytona International Speedway.

The frightening crash that left him with a mild concussion and plenty of assorted aches and pains was the worst in the racing career of the 36-year-old resident of Franklin, Tenn.

That incident, graphically portrayed on national television during the running of the Daytona 500, seemed a long time ago and far less scary as Waltrip stood basking in the sunshine Friday in the garage area at North Carolina Motor Speedway.

While his Junior Johnson-Pepsi crew prepared the No. 11 car for Sunday's Warner Hodgdon Carolina 500 Grand National stock car race, Waltrip stood with a cup of coffee in hand and talked earnestly about the crash.

"I was in the best physical shape at Daytona that I'd ever been in," Waltrip explained. "I'd been running on the beach for three weeks and doing sit-ups and pushups. I think that kept me from getting hurt worse.

"That's the first time I've had to be helped out of a car. I'm just thankful that I didn't break anything."

The two-time defending Winston Cup champion, who has won 24 races over the past two seasons, was asked if it was tough getting back in a race car after the battering he took at Daytona.

"No, not really," he replied, "although I'm glad we were at Richmond (last week) rather than a superspeedway like Talladega.

"It's a lot like a football player that has a knee go out and maybe has to have an operation. The first time he has to make a crucial cut he's worried about it. After he does it, a lot of the worry goes away."

Waltrip spent one night in a Daytona Beach hospital for observation, then checked out and went home with a splitting headache. He was on medication for several days.

"I've still got a lot of pain in my neck from where my helmet dug into me," he said. "I hit the bar (part of the roll cage) on the (right) side of the car and that busted my helmet. I think that's when I got the concussion.

"But this ain't my first rodeo," he cracked. "I'm a big boy and I've been racing a long time. I know you can get killed in one of these cars, or injured, and I've built my lifestyle around avoiding that.

"Some people don't understand that that's how you earn your pay in this kind of racing. You don't do yourself or your team any good if you're broken up.

"One of the things that bothered me the most was that it (the crash) just destroyed my favorite car," Waltrip noted. "That car, with some new sheet metal on it to make it a 1983 (Chevrolet) Monte Carlo, was the same one that I won both Talladega races with last year.

"The guys are building us a new car, but it won't be ready until Atlanta (the week of March 19). Meantime, we're here with an older Monte Carlo with the old straight nose. We knew it wasn't going to be as fast as the newer ones, but we feel it's the best car for the race."

Waltrip managed to qualify the car in the 11th spot during the opening time trials Thursday. The top 20 spots were filled that day, with James Hylton leading 10 more qualifiers Friday. Another six cars are scheduled to qualifying today.

Hylton, driving a Monte Carlo, turned in a fast lap of 139.225 mph on the 1.017-mile

Tabb, Gretzky Are Honored

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Mary Decker Tabb dominates female distance running as no other woman has ever done. But her burning desire to become an Olympic champion has not been fulfilled.

"It's hard for me to believe that I've never been in the Olympics," Tabb said Friday before accepting The Associated Press Female Athlete of the Year award at the annual Tampa Sports Club Banquet.

"The next Games are in my plans, though, if I can stay healthy," added Tabb. "I could turn professional and go out and make a lot of money, but I've always loved track and field and want to be in Los Angeles in 1984."

Retaining her amateur status doesn't mean Tabb's pockets will be empty, however. She has lucrative endorsement contracts with several companies and is exploring other opportunities, according to her manager.

"We're looking at some things outside of the running industry," said Brad Hunt. "The field is wide open."

Tabb, who entered 14 races last year and won them all, shattered seven records — three indoors and four outdoors — as she established herself as clearly No. 1 in her sport.

She said she has never had a problem motivating herself, but admitted that sometimes she finds it hard to push herself against weak competition.

"I guess my main motivation is the Olympics. It seems that everytime they come along, I miss them for one reason or another," she said.

Tabb estimated that she has lost about four years of running time to various injuries, including those that prevented her from going to the 1976 Olympics in Montreal.

The U.S. boycott of the 1980 Games in Moscow kept her away a second time. She also feels she had the ability to challenge for a spot on the U.S. team in 1972, but as a 13-year-old she was too young to try out.

Plymouth In Semis

AHOSKIE — Northampton-East upset Tarboro's girls, while Plymouth's boys advanced into the semifinals of the District I 3-A basketball tournament at Ahoskie Friday night.

Tarboro, the number two seed from the Northeastern Conference fell to Northampton-East, the number three seed from the Roanoke River league, 55-46, in the opening game on Friday night.

Northampton-East was to face Warren County, the RRC's top-seeded team in Saturday night's semifinals. The other semifinal game, on Monday, sends the NEAC's winner, Roanoke against Southeast Halifax. The winners meet Wednesday for the title.

In the boys' contest, Plymouth, number two in the NEAC, downed Northampton-West, 83-71, to advance to Saturday night's semifinals. There, the Vikings will take on North Edgecombe, the RRC's number one seeded team.

Monday night, Roanoke, the NEAC champ, takes on Northwest Halifax in the other semifinals, with the finals set for Wednesday.

Champions To Finals

BATH — Mattamuskeet's boys and Belhaven's girls, the winners in the regular season race in the Tobacco Belt Conference, moved into the finals of the District 1-A tournament Friday night.

Belhaven's girls rolled to a 51-35 victory over Bath, while Mattamuskeet ripped Belhaven's boys, 76-60.

The results set up the finals, scheduled for Tuesday night at Bath High School. Belhaven takes on Chocowinity in the girls' championship, while Mattamuskeet and Aurora meet for the title in the boys' division.

The winners move on to the Regionals, scheduled for Atlantic Christian College in Wilson the following week.

Early Jump Lets State Top Pirates, 13-7

RALEIGH — N.C. State got a grand slam home run from Jim Toman in the second inning that sparked the Wolfpack into an 11-0 lead Friday, and the 'Pack held off East Carolina after that for a 13-7 baseball victory.

The loss was the first in three starts for the Pirates while the Wolfpack boosted its record to 5-1-1 on the year.

"Nobody quit until the last pitch," ECU Coach Hal Baird said of his team, which struggled back from the big Wolfpack lead to make it somewhat respectable before it was over. "I was proud of regular position players. They battled back and after the first two innings, it was a 7-2 margin in our favor."

State jumped on junior college transfer Robby McClanahan early, scoring three runs in the first inning. Chris Baird opened the inning with a bunt single. "This was a key play in the game," ECU's Baird said later. "The ball went right to Robby and he just couldn't come up with the handle."

After a groundout moved Baird to second, Andrew Fava drew a walk and Tracy Woodson smacked the ball out of the park in left field to give the Wolfpack a 3-0 lead.

The Wolfpack followed that up with eight more in the second, chasing McClanahan from the mound. Jay Yvars doubled to right to start this and Joe Maciejewski singled just by shortstop Kelly Robinette up the middle, scoring Yvars. Maciejewski was sacrificed up and Baird drew a walk. Doug Strange then grounded back to second baseman Tony Salmond, but Robinette dropped his relay at second, leaving all runner safe. After a popup got the second out, Woodson walked to forced in Maciejewski.

That set the stage for Toman, who parked the ball over the left field fence, clearning the bases and running the score to 9-0.

However, the 'Pack wasn't through yet. Doug Davis greeted reliever Brian Peterson by drawing a walk and Yvars completed the scoring of the inning with a third NCSU homer to left, and it was 11-0.

East Carolina began its comeback in the third inning, scoring four runs to cut it back to 11-4. Robert Wells opened with a walk and Mike Williams was safe on an error. Salmond then walked, loading the bases, followed by a one-run single by Robinette. John Hallow's sacrifice brought in Williams with the second run, and a passed ball plated Salmond. Robinette then scored on Todd Evans' single to end the inning's scoring.

The Pirates added a five run in the top of the fourth. Wells opened again with a walk and Salmond also walked again. Robinette then singled to load them up. Hallow's sacrifice fly scored Wells.

The Wolfpack got two insurance runs in the bottom of the fourth. Toman drew a one-out walk, and Davis followed with another free trip. Yvars reached on a fielder's choice that got the middle man. On a double steal attempt, catcher Jabo Fulghum's throw to second was off-target, scoring Toman. Maciejewski also walked and Mark Celedonia singled just past Salmond's glove to Yvars for a 13-5 lead.

It stayed that way until the ninth, when the Pirates added their final two. Pinch-hitters David Horne singled and Mark Council drew a walk. Hallow then reached on an error, loading the bases. Evans followed with a groudout, scoring Horne, and Winfred Johnson's groundout brought Council over with the final run.

Woodson, Davis and Yvars each had three hits for the Wolfpack, while Robinette and Evans had two each for ECU.

Evans, who had a seven-for-seven hitting streak stopped his first time up, is not 9-for-12 on the year.

Mike Pesavento picked up his second victory of the season for the Wolfpack, going the first seven innings.

"I was disappointed in McClanahan and Peterson," Baird said, "but State has a good offensive club. They have experienced hitters. If we would have been able to make up for those, the game would have had a different complexion. We walked too many hitters. We could have escaped with a minimum of damage."

Baird said that he was pleased with the effort of the regular position players and the final two relieve efforts by Kirk Parsons and Chubby Butler. "If we continue to give that kind of effort, we will eventually become a pretty good team. Defensively, it wasn't a great game on our side, but our defense did not cause the loss. What did was on the mound the first two innings. Aside from that we played smart."

The two teams meet again on Monday and Tuesday in Greenville at ECU's Harrington Field, with game time each day at 2 p.m.

State, Carolina Women Win

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Linda Page's 26 points paced five players in double figures as No. 16 North Carolina State ran by Wake Forest 104-66 Friday in the first round of the Atlantic Coast Conference women's basketball tournament.

N.C. State shot 57 percent from the field and 77 percent from the free-throw line in the first half to take a commanding 54-27 lead as Wake Forest managed to hit only 34 percent and 63 percent from the charity stripe.

Priscilla Adams, Angie Armstrong and Ronda Falkena each scored 14 and Claudia Kreicker added 10 as the Wolfpack went to 21-6, 13-1 in the ACC. Adams also grabbed a game leading 10 rebounds.

Wake Forest, 14-14 and 0-8, was led by Keeva Jackson's 15 points.

Mary Anne Cubelic's tip-in at the buzzer gave Clemson a 93-92 overtime victory over Duke in the opening round of the Atlantic Coast Conference women's basketball tournament Friday.

Duke overcame a 13-point first-half deficit to force the overtime, which Clemson played without starters Peggy Capel, who fouled out with 24 points, and Jaqui Jones, who had 13.

Janet Knight, who led all scorers with 26, gave the Tigers an 87-82 lead early in the overtime with a three-point play. But Duke rallied behind Stacy Hurd, who finished with 25 points, to take a 90-89 lead.

After trading baskets, the 5-foot-9 Cubelic got inside position for the winning tap to cap a 14-point performance.

Jennifer Chesnut added 22 points for Duke, while Rose Claire had 19.

Clemson, 12-16 and 6-8 in the ACC, was to play top-seeded North Carolina State in a semifinal game Saturday. Duke ended its season at 15-10 and 6-8.

Teresa Brown scored 29 points to lead No. 18 North Carolina to an 85-80 victory over Georgia Tech in the first round of the Atlantic Coast Conference women's basketball tournament Friday night.

The Yellow Jackets jumped out to a 17-10 lead behind LeeAnn Woodhull, who finished with a career-tying 32 points. But the Tar Heels outscored Georgia Tech 13-5 before the half to take a 44-40 intermission edge.

North Carolina opened the second period with 12 unanswered points, but the Yellow Jackets closed to within 80-76 before running out of gas.

Pam Leake added 16 points for the Tar Heels, 22-6 and 11-3 in the ACC, while Henrietta Walls had 14 and Kathy Crawford chipped in 13.

Kate Brandt had 15 points for Georgia Tech, which finished at 10-19 and 2-12.

North Carolina took on second-seeded Maryland Saturday night in the semifinals.

Jasmina Perazic scored 17 points and Lea Hakala added 16 to power 7th-ranked Maryland to a 70-63 victory over Virginia in the opening round of the Atlantic Coast Conference women's basketball tournament.

Maryland, 23-4 and 11-3 in the ACC, was to play No. 18 North Carolina, 22-6, in Saturday's semifinals while No. 16 North Carolina State took on Clemson.

The Cavaliers, 15-13, opened a 35-17 lead with 4:02 remaining in the first half and led 35-27 as Cathy Grimes moved toward her game-high 22 points.

The Terrapins took their first lead at 48-47 with 8:28 remaining and put together an eight-point run four minutes later to make it 62-53. Virginia battled back, but Maryland took the lead for good at 54-53.

Marcia Richardson added 13 points for the Terrapins while Chequita Wood had 11.

Lynn Anastasia scored 14 for Virginia and Debbie Young added 12 as the Cavaliers finished their season at 15-13, 6-8 in the conference.

ODU Sun Belt Victim

By The Associated Press

Old Dominion Coach Paul Webb thinks his team has earned a postseason tournament invitation. They'll have to get it without strutting their wares again.

The Sun Belt regular-season champions were upset 63-59 by Jacksonville in the opening round of the conference's postseason get-together Friday night. Guards Maurice Roulhac and Andrew Hinton led the Dolphins to their first conference victory of the season with sound ball control in a deliberate offense.

Still, Webb doesn't believe his team, which finished the season 19-8 and 12-2 in the conference, should be slighted because of its quick exit in the Sun Belt tourney.

"Unfortunately we didn't pick a very good game to not play well," said Webb. "Overall, I'm very satisfied with the season and I think our play warrants a postseason bid, whether it is the NCAA or the NIT."

Otis Smith and Roulhac had 16 points and Hinton 14 for Jacksonville, 6-21 during the season. The Dolphins slowed the pace all game and survived two last-ditch attempts by ODU to pull out the game.

Mark West led the Monarchs with 20 points.

"Our guards did a great job handling the ball," said Bob Wenzel, coach of the Dolphins.

"The key to our win was how well we handled the ball, and we hit our free throws down the stretch."

"You have to give Jacksonville a lot of credit," added Webb. "They had a game plan and executed it very well."

With Old Dominion sidelined, Virginia Commonwealth assumed the favorite's role. VCU, which also was 12-2 in regular-season conference action but lost twice to Old Dominion, squeezed past Western Kentucky 57-55 behind Calvin Duncan's 19 points and 18 by Fred Brown.

"I'm not concerned at all about ODU losing," said Rams Coach J.D. Barnett. "I only worry about preparing our kids for the next opponent."

That will be host Alabama-Birmingham, which beat North Carolina-Charlotte 65-63 on Steve Mitchell's jumper with five seconds left. Jacksonville played South Florida, a 66-59 winner over South Alabama, in the other half of Saturday's doubleheader. The winner of the tournament gets an automatic bid to the NCAAs.

No ranked teams played Friday night. In another tournament, Iona and Fordham advanced to the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference finals. Iona blasted Army 65-53 and Fordham ran away from St. Peter's in the second half 66-52.

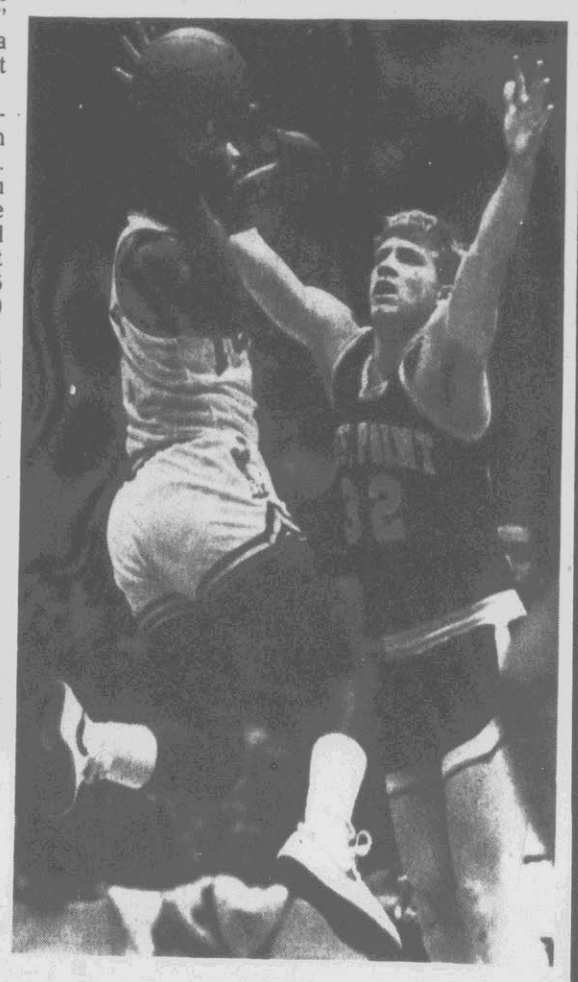

The Iona Gaels, 21-7, rode Steve Burtt's 20 points and 18 by Rory Grimes to victory. Fordham, 18-9, was paced by Mark Murphy with 18. The MAAC final was scheduled for Saturday.

The Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference tournament finalists are North Carolina A&T and Howard. NC A&T beat Maryland-Eastern Shore 81-74 and Howard made the MEAC finals for the fifth straight year with a 67-57 win over South Carolina State. The MEAC tourney winner gets an automatic NCAA bid.

In the Ivy League, first-place Princeton stayed one game ahead of Penn by beating Cornell 63-53. If Princeton beat Columbia last night, it clinched a berth in the NCAA tournament.

Penn downed Columbia 87-80 as David Lardner tossed in a career-high 23 points. Brown beat Harvard 80-70 and Yale took Dartmouth 85-82.

Elsewhere, it was American 54, Hofstra 53; Morehead State 85, Middle Tennessee 65; Murray State 85, Eastern Kentucky 63; Tennessee Tech 76, Akron 61; Santa Clara 79, San Diego 64, and in the National Collegiate Christian Athletic Association tournament, Baptist Bible (Missouri) beat Baptist Bible (Pennsylvania) 62-55.

Bruins Win Big East

STANTONSBURG — Wilson Beddingfield's boys and Rocky Mount's girls won the Big East Conference basketball tournament championships Friday night and will represent the conference in the State 4-A Playoffs which start on Tuesday.

Beddingfield, seeded fourth in the tournament, defeated sixth seeded Wilson Fike in the boys' game, 54-42, to win the championship.

Rocky Mount's girls, who had won the regular season title, followed that up with a 43-31 victory over number two Fike to sweep both ends of the championship picture.

The two teams will play host to the runners-up from the Cap-Eight Conference on Tuesday. The winners of those game advance into the regionals to be held at Wilson Hunt the following week.

USFL Begins Play Today

By The Associated Press

"The scariest moment in football for the coaches and the players is when you line up for that first kickoff," says Red Miller, coach of the Denver Gold of the United States Football League. "Despite all the work you've done, you don't know what you've really got."

Making Sunday's kickoff against the Philadelphia Stars at Denver's Mile High Stadium even more nerve-wracking is fact that it's a new league and Miller — like other coaches in the USFL — has had only five weeks to build a team from ground zero.

"I think we're as ready as we could be considering the limited time we've been together," said Miller, once coach of the Denver Broncos of the National Football League. "I don't think it will happen, but as a coach, you always have a gnawing fear that a newly assembled team will lose its poise under fire."

Along with the Denver-Philadelphia contest, four other games will be played Sunday — Boston at Tampa Bay, Chicago at Washington, New Jersey at Los Angeles and Oakland at Arizona. Monday night's game will feature Michigan at Birmingham.

The USFL wrapped up final preparations for the season Friday by establishing the rosters for its opening weekend.

As the 12 teams pared their rosters to 40 active and 10 inactive players, some former NFL players, hoping for another chance, found themselves without a job.

Among them, quarterback Mike Livingston, a longtime Kansas City Chief, and safety Dick Jauron, who played for Detroit and Cincinnati, were cut by the Boston Breakers. Quarterback Joe Gilliam, who never unseated Terry Bradshaw in Pittsburgh and who later dropped out of football because of a drug problem, was released by the Denver Gold.

Other former NFL players cut included running back Leon McQuay (New York Giants), by the Tampa Bay Bandits; place-kicker John Roveto (Chicago Bears), by the Chicago Blitz; running back Don Hardeman (Houston), by the Los Angeles Express; linebacker Sammy Green (Seattle), by the New Jersey Generals; tackle Jeff Sevy (Chicago), by the Oakland Invaders and punter Herman Weaver (Detroit), by the Michigan Panthers.

Each of the USFL teams has about a half-dozen former NFL players remaining, but George Allen, the boss of the Blitz, has 16 ex-NFLers on his active roster. Among them are linebacker Stan White (Detroit), quarterback Greg Landry (Detroit, Baltimore), kicker Frank Corral (Los Angeles Rams), kick returner and safety Eddie Brown (Rams), cornerback Virgil Livers (Chicago) defensive tackle Joe Ehrmann (Baltimore) and running back Kevin Long (New York Jets).

DU Appoints Chairman for North Carolina — William J. Bateman Jr., a Raleigh insurance executive, was appointed North Carolina state chairman for Ducks Unlimited, the world's largest waterfowl conservation organization.

Bateman, a long-time Ducks Unlimited member, has volunteered much of his time to DU for the sake of waterfowl conservation. Over the years, he has served DU as a member of the Raleigh area committee. Last year he was the Wake County sponsor chairman, helping the state net $1,143,805 on behalf of the ducks in 1982. In his new role with DU, Bateman will help coordinate and develop fund-raising activities throughout the entire state.

"Volunteers like Bill have helped make Ducks Unlimited what it is today," said Dale Whitesell, executive vice-president of the 455,000-member organization. "Last year alone, thanks to the efforts of Bill Bateman, DU raised $34.7 million to help restore and maintain North America's waterfowl wetlands."

"Ducks Unlimited has been called a 'can-do' organization," said Whitesell, "because of its national network of conscientious volunteers. We are happy to have Bill Bateman on our team."

Lake Mattamuskeet Opens — Sportfishing season on Lake Matamuskeet in Hyde County opened March 1. Mattamuskeet is known nationwide for its fine largemouth bass fishing. The lake also has a good population of striped bass, crappie and bream. With the warm weather we have had lately the fish should start biting early this year.

Brown Won't Invest Money

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Paul Brown, who created two National League football teams, says from his knowledge of the new United States Football League, "I wouldn't invest any money in it."

"I think generally the people who try to do it have no realization of the problems that go with it," Brown said in an interview from California with the Columbus Dispatch.

Brown put the Cleveland Browns together in 1946 in the All-American Football Conference. The Browns joined the National Football League in 1950 after the AAFC collapsed.

In 1968, he built the Cincinnati Bengals in the American Football League. That league merged with the NFL in 1970.

The USFL opens play this weekend and Brown said games "are going to compete with baseball when they play, and I think they have underestimated the popularity of baseball in this country. The test is still going to come when they start to play, when we see how many people show up ... No, I wouldn't invest any money in it."

Brown and others warmed up to the USFL after Herschel Walker of the University of Georgia signed with New Jersey.

"They take it seriously now, sure," Brown said. "When you go to sign somebody, and they are knowing up front, for instance, that Herschel Walker got $5 million for three years ... It will hike up salaries."

Brown sees potential problems in the new league.

"They have already violated some of their own rules," he said, citing the $2 million salary ceiling for all but two

Celtics Win, Don't Gain

By The Associated Press

The Boston Celtics must feel like they're on a treadmill.

Despite a 115-110 triumph over runaway Philadelphia Friday night and a glittering 43-15 record, the Celtics still trail the 76ers by seven games in the National Basketball Association's Atlantic Division with time running out on the regular season.

Boston Coach Bill Fitch called the 76ers "too great a team to fold with that kind of lead unless they have an epidemic. The intensity of the rivalry is there, and you get a playoff preview and you get a little better feeling if you're Boston."

Larry Bird wasn't feeling particularly well — he played with a painful infection in his right foot that kept him out of practice for three days — but still led the Celtics with 32 points as they tied the season series with Philadelphia at 2-2. Kevin McHale, who was 10-of-11 from the field, added 21 points as the Celtics, playing at home, snapped the Sixers' 10-game winning streak and handed them only their eighth setback in 58 games.

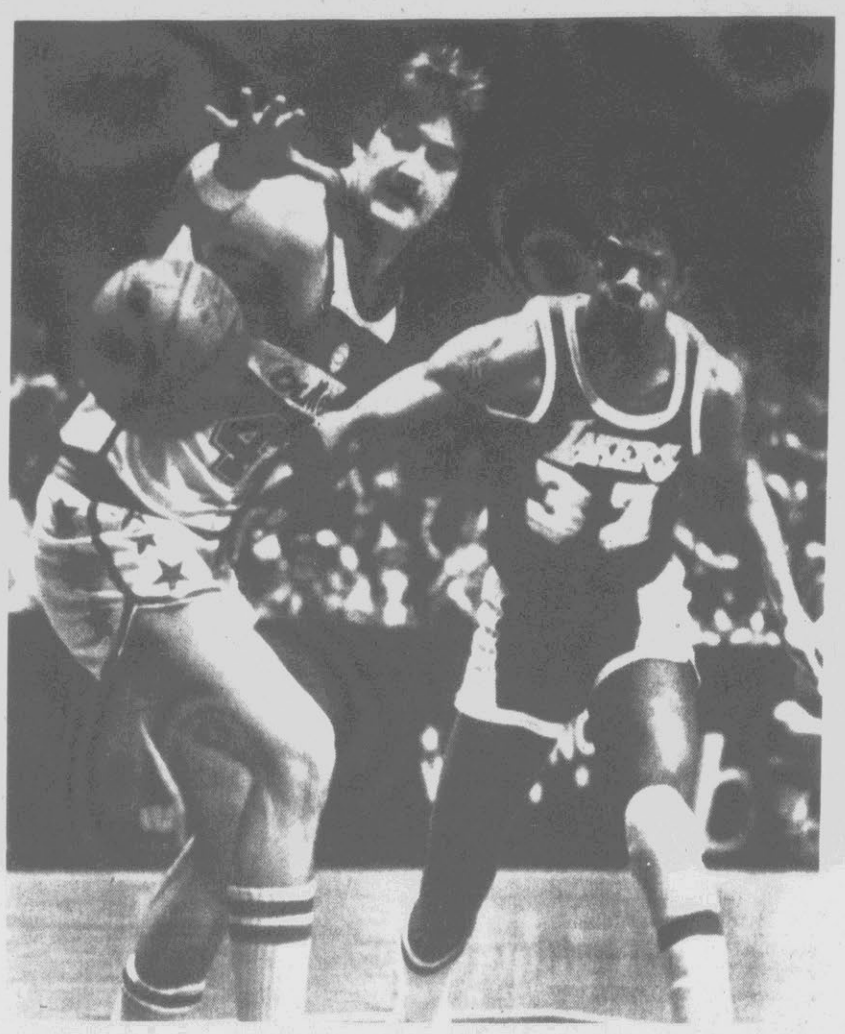

Elsewhere, the Washington Bullets stunned the Los Angeles Lakers 96-93, the Atlanta Hawks trounced the Houston Rockets 115-87, the Milwaukee Bucks downed the Dallas Mavericks 108-102, the Chicago Bulls upended the New Jersey Nets 124-119, the Kansas City Kings trimmed the Indiana Pacers 120-103, the Phoenix Suns defeated the Golden State Warriors 109-102, the San Antonio Spurs beat the San Diego Clippers 107-99 and the Denver Nuggets outlasted the Portland Trail Blazers 142-138.

The Celtics and 76ers were tied nine times and the biggest lead was nine points by Philadelphia early in the game.The lead changed hands for the 12th and final time of the second half on an eight-foot jump shot by Robert Parish that put Boston ahead 104-103 with 4:06 to go. That launched a seven-point run in which McHale followed with a dunk and Nate Archibald converted a three-point play. Moses Malone led Philadephia with 26 points.

"It's always good to beat Philadelphia because they're such a tough team," said McHale. "When you do beat them, you always feel good about yourself and your teammates."

Bullets 96, Lakers 93

At Landover, Md., Ricky Sobers' jump shot put Washington ahead with nine seconds remaining and later added two free throws as the Bullets overcame a 19-point deficit.

The Other Joe DiMaggio

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — "Hey, Joe, how about a little more mustard on this liverwurst?" says Yogi Berra.

"OK," replies Joe DiMaggio, placing a jar on the table. "How are you fixed on egg salad?"

"Got enough, but you might give me a refill on this coffee, with just a little cream."

"Rest of you fellows all right?" Joe DiMaggio asks the handful of New York Yankee coaches sitting around the table.

"Swell," comes a chorus. "Get back to your stall, Joe. We're fine, thanks."

It may come as a surprise to the baseball world that Joe DiMaggio is catering spring training lunches for New York Yankee office personnel, coaches, players and the press in a revamped trailer near the stadium third base line here.

But this Joe isn't the slim 6-footer who hit in 56 straight games and makes all those Mr. Coffee commercials.

He's short and fat, with a receding hair line. He has a New York accent and wears an apron. He is a retired New York restauranteur who lives in Fort Lauderdale and spends close to two months dishing up sandwiches and drinks at the end of the morning workouts.

Above the refrigerator and grill is a hand-printed sign which reads:

"All DiMaggio's Dishes Are Hits."

Joe DiMaggio is the Yankee hash slinger's real name, and the name had nothing to do with the way he got his job.

"I owned an Italian restaurant in Flushing, Queens, called DiMaggio's," he said. "It was pretty popular. Weeb Ewbank, Joe Namath and other New York Jets started eating there regularly.

"Another customer was Bill Kane, the Yankees' traveling secretary. He lived in an apartment just back of my place and came in often. He learned that I spent six months of the year in Monticello, upstate New York, and six months in Fort Lauderdale. In 1971, he asked me would I cater to the guys at training camp.

"He said they'd been ordering sandwiches, which sat around and got stale. I agreed."

The short and stubby Flushing Joe DiMaggio said he and the tall, still-athletic-looking DiMaggio have become friends over the years and often share a laugh over family names.

"Joe always says maybe we're kin," said the other DiMaggio. "Our families both come from Palermo, Sicily. I have an Uncle Dom and an Uncle Vince, the names of Joe's brothers. Both of us have a sister named Mary."

He said he first met the Yankee Clipper in 1936 when he accompanied a friend, Lena Blackburn, to a game in old Shibe Park in Philadelphia.

"It was Joe's first year with the Yankees," the Flushing DiMaggio said. "He hit the longest home run I have ever seen. I bought it for a buck from the kid who got it and Blackburn, who was a coach of the A's, took me to the hotel after the game to meet Joe and have him sign the ball.

"I've still got it."

One day, he said, he was at his home in Monticello when he got a long-distance phone call from Augie Busch, owner of the St. Louis Cardinals.

"Joe," Busch said, "this is Augie. I wanted to make sure you would be at our Old Timers game Sunday."

"I had to explain that I was another Joe. I learned that DiMag was holidaying at Grossinger's as he often did and that Busch had just told the operator he wanted to get in touch with Joe DiMaggio, and the call came to me because I was the only DiMaggio listed.

"I relayed Augie's message to Joe."

Shortly after George Steinbrenner took over as owner of the Yankees in 1973, Kane called the lunchroom DiMaggio, saying that George had some guests in his trailer and would he please make up a platter of nice sanwiches.

"I did and had them delivered," DiMaggio said. "Afterward, I got worried and called Steinbrenner's trailer to see if everything was OK.

"A man answered. 'Who is this?' I asked. The voice on the other end was belligerent. 'Who in the hell are you?' 'Joe DiMaggio,' I replied. 'This is Babe Ruth,' Steinbrenner said, and slammed down the receiver.

"Kane said George was furious, thinking somebody was putting him on. It took Bill a long time to convince him it really was a Joe DiMaggio."

DiMaggio the caterer spends a couple of hours each morning shopping for liverwurst, cold ham, ground beef, pickles and enough other ingredients to feed 60-70 people. He broils the hamburgers and makes his own salads. He keeps a popcorn popper popping.

He also prepares two hard-boiled eggs every morning for Manager Billy Martin and occasionally, upon Billy's requests, shops for steaks, which Billy prepares in his room at the hotel.

Martin stays at the same hotel as Steinbrenner, on the same floor just down the hall.

"The cooking odors that come from his room are awful," says the Boss. "I've told him if he doesn't stop cooking in his room I'm going to have him tossed out of the hotel."

That might make it tough on Joe DiMaggio the Caterer. When Billy gets an appetite, they say, he has no respect for the hour.

players per team.

"That was broken so fast it took your breath away ... Next, they took an underclassman, breaking their own rules again ... They say this is one time, or an unusual situation? It doesn't work like that."

The USFL schedule runs from March through July, posing no conflict with the NFL. But Brown said signing Walker for such a sum may bring war to the bargaining table.

"I'd guess in a year from now we'll be drafting about the same time," he said. "Not all athletes are like this, but you'll find there are certain persons in this world, that money now is everything. We have to be able to be there, just for those types of people."

South Carolina and Duke. They were on a roll." Charlotte had won its last six games and seven of its last eight coming into Minges.

The Pirates were unable to handle Charlotte's Candy Lucas, who transfered from N.C. State. Lucas hit on 13 of 23 shots from the floor, leading the Lady 49ers with 26 points.

"She's a hell of a player, and I thought we did a good defensive job on her," Andruzzi said. "She's just that good."

Charlotte also had one other in double figures as forward Sylvia Akers got 18, making good on nine of 13 shots.

"I really thought we did a good job inside (defensively) on them. We didn't make stupid mistakes, we controlled the ball and our defense created for our offense."

Charlotte scored first, grabbing the lead on a short jumper by Lucas before Denkler made two free throws to tie it up. Charlotte went back out on another jumper by Lucas, but Sylvia Bragg retied it, and a three-point play by Lisa Squirewell put ECU ahead, 7-4.

Charlotte was able to regain the lead at 12-11 on another Lucas jumper, but Squirewell got another three-point play and Bragg hit from ten feet out to put the Pirates in to a 16-12 lead.

They never trailed again.

Denkler, who had been held to only her two free throws in the first nine minutes of play, finally hit from the field and promptly scored three more, then added a pair of free throws as the Pirates eased out into a six point lead. Darlene Chaney, off the bench, scored twice in the final three minutes to run the lead out to ten, 32-22, and the Pirates held a 36-26 margin at halftime.

And if Charlotte thought it could rally, ECU quickly put those thoughts to rest. Denkler hit the first two baskets of the second half to run the lead out to 12, 40-28, and although Lucas and Akers keyed a rally that cut it back to eight, 42-34, ECU quickly pulled away again.

The Lady Pirates scored the next nine points in a row, four by Denkler, to run out to a 5 1-34 lead, and after a basket by LaVon Jones, Truske and Denkler each scored to up the lead to 19, 5 5 -36.

The margin eventually climbed to 22 on two baskets by Denkler at 66-44 with 5 :05 left, and it was all over.

Bragg finished the game with 20 points for the Lady Pirates, while Squirewell had 11.

ECU shot 44.1 percent for the game, including 5 1.6 percent in the second half, while UNCC made good on 43.5 percent. ECU held a 39-36 rebounding edge, led by Denkler and Squirewell, who had 10. Lucas had eight to lead Charlotte.

"We had six people who played the majority of the game," Andruzzi said. "I respect our underclassmen for having a good effort for the seniors.

"Mary, Fran and Caren left us with a lot of class, and their teammates wanted them to go out winners," Andruzzi said.

Indiana Sprinter Sets 440 Record

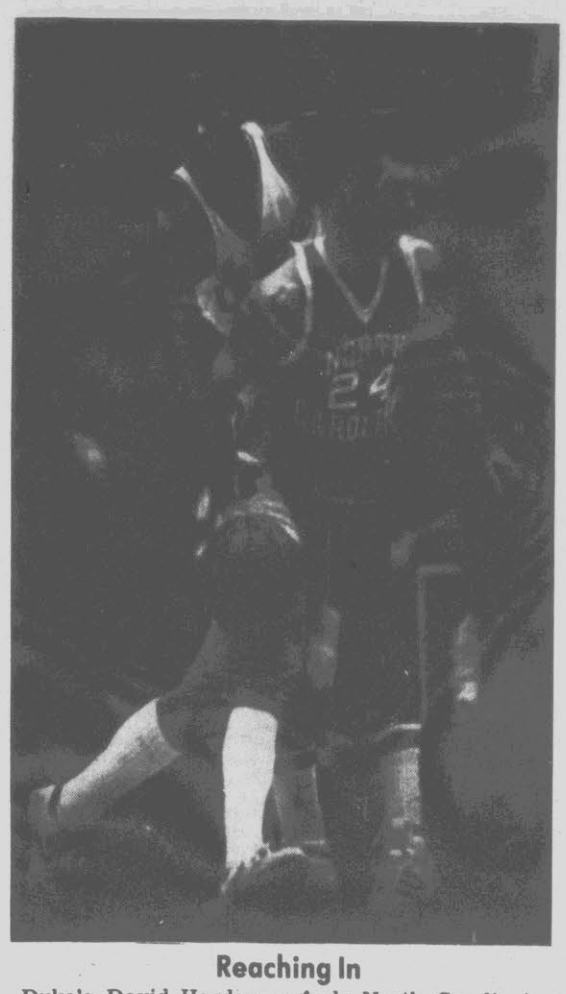

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Indiana sprinter Sunder Nix set a world indoor record of 46.66 in the 440-yard run Saturday to lead the Hoosiers to the Big Ten Indoor Track and Field Championships title.

Nix bettered the old mark of 46.92 which he set on his home track during the 1982 conference meet.

"I was really running to win the race and not for the time," Nix said. "I felt pretty comfortable all the way around."

Leroy Dixon of Wisconsin, who barely missed nipping Nix at the tape, was clocked in 46.72.

Indiana compiled 111 points to easily outdistance runnerup Michigan which finished with 95 points. Wisconsin finished with 79, Michigan State 63, Purdue 42 and Illinois 41. Minnesota had 23, Iowa 22, Ohio State 19.

CINCINNATI (AP) — Junior Johnson of Cincinnati missed a five-shot jump shot with three seconds left Saturday, preserving a 73-72 victory for Virginia Tech in a final regular season Metro Conference basketball game.

The Hokies, 21-9 overall and 7-5 in the conference, owned a 73-70 lead, but Myron Hugesh's basket cut the margin to 73-72 with 54 seconds remaining.

Reggie Steppe of Virginia Tech missed the front end of a one-and-one free throw situation with 42 seconds left and Cincinnati grabbed the rebound and ran the clock down for Johnson's final shot.

Perry Johnson scored 19 of his game-high 25 points in the first half, leading the Hokies into a 38-33 halftime lead. Johnson sank 13 of 16 free throws. He also had a team-leading 12 rebounds.

Wake Forest could get no closer than seven points before State settled for a 56-46 halftime lead.

"I thought we still had a chance at the half, even though we didn't play well in the first half," Wake Forest coach Carl Tacy said. "We still didn't play the good defense and losses of concentration and mental breakdowns added to the total."

Bailey ended all doubt, scoring State's first eight second-half points, and the Wolfpack went on to lead by as much as 129-86 in the final minute.

State, 17-10, 8-6 in the ACC, also had 18 points by Sidney Lowe, 13 from Ernie Myers and 12 by Charles as it kept its NCAA tournament hopes alive.

Lowe also handed off 14 assists, boosting his career total to 704, second in ACC history only to North Carolina's Phil Ford, who had 753.

Wake Forest, which will have a chance for revenge in the opening round of the ACC tournament Friday, was led by Dulaney Rudd with 22 points. Anthony Teachey added 14; Kenny Green, 13; and John Toms, 12, as the Deacons fell to 17-10 and 7-7.

Plymouth Tops Panthers, 7-0

BETHEL — Plymouth High School handed North Pitt a 7-0 setback as the Panthers opened the 1983 baseball season Friday afternoon.

The Panthers were unable to generate any offense during the afternoon coming up with only three hits.

Plymouth also only got three hits, but all three came in the fourth inning when the Vikings pushed over all seven of their runs — taking advantage of three of five errors North Pitt made during the contest.

With one down in the seventh, Hudson reached on an error and Davis walked. Sawyer followed by reaching on an error, loading the bases. Mark Mizelle singled in Hudson, and Hardison reached on an error, scoring both Davis and Sawyer.

Askew got a single, driving in Mizelle, and Baker walked, reloading the sacks. Hart's single scored Hardison, and a walk to Hudson brought in Askew. Baker then scored on a balk with the seventh run.

The Panthers return to action on Tuesday, traveling to D.H. Conley.

Levi-Garrett Wins

ROCKINGHAM (AP) — The Levi-Garrett crew headed by Buddy Parrott set a record Saturday in winning the 15th annual Union 76 pit crew contest at North Carolina Motor Speedway.

The crew for Joe Ruttman's Buick Regal Grand National stock car, owned by Dr. Ron Benfield of Harrisburg, N.C., emptied two cans of gas into the tank, changed both right-side tires and got the car away from the pits in 14.689 seconds.

That broke the mark of 15.704 seconds set a year ago by the a crew head by Tim Brewer, who then was working with driver Cale Yarborough and former car-owner M.C. Anderson.

Reagan Sees Improved Job Rate

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — President Reagan predicted on Saturday that the unemployment rate "will be heading downward" and said he hopes to act soon on a $4.9-billion public works bill to help the jobless.

In his weekly radio address to the nation, Reagan said he was working out differences over some provisions of the legislation and that he hoped the bill to help victims of the recession would reach his desk by the end of this week.

The $4.9-billion job-creation and community assistance bill passed the House last Thursday and will be taken up early this week by the Senate Finance Committee.

In his address, one day after the government reported that civilian unemployment held steady at 10.4 percent in February, Reagan also revealed he will submit his own jobs legislation to Congress this week.

The president's plan is aimed specifically at curbing youth unemployment and finding work for hundreds of thousands of people left jobless by depressed conditions in many old-line manufacturing industries.

The radio address, normally broadcast live, was pre-recorded Friday because Reagan was traveling from San Francisco to Klamath Falls, Ore., where he was meeting with representatives of the lumber industry before returing to the White House.

Reagan said about half the current unemployment problem is cyclical, a direct result of the recession. The other half, he said, was structural, generated by declining industries that displace workers and youths who lack experience and therefore can't get jobs.

The chief executive said he would attack the structural problem by asking Congress to approve a $2.50 an hour summer wage for youths, 25 percent lower than the $3.35 an hour minimum wage, to help teen-agers get jobs.

He also said he would propose a voucher system, under which those who have been unemployed for an extended time could convert their unemployment benefits into job vouchers that would entitle their new employers to tax credits.

In a Democratic response, Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, charged that Reagan has made the protection of the nation's environment a partisan, political issue.

Prior to the inception of the current administration, Mitchell said, Republicans and Democrats worked together for more than 10 years "to enact and enforce national laws to protect the very basis of a health life: Clean air, pure water and unpoisoned land.

"Ronald Reagan has not kept that national commitment. He has shattered the bipartisan consensus in support of a healthy environment," Mitchell said.

Reagan's apparent optimism that he will be able to work out the differences he has with Congress over the jobs legislation came as somewhat of a surprise.

Deputy White House press sercretary Larry Speakes had said Friday that the bill passed by the House on Thursday contains $500 million more than Reagan wanted to spend as well as some projects the president did not favor.

"It's the president's view that if the bill is not changed in the Senate, the president will have to take a long, hard look at it before making a decision as to whether to sign," Speakes said.

He added the administration would encourage the Senate to make the changes it seeks, but he did not specify what those changes were.

In proposing the voucher system, Reagan said the "overwhelming majority of those who have been unemployed for long periods would gladly trade their benefits for a job, if they could only find one," Reagan said. "What they're looking for is an opportunity to become productive again."

As for the youth differential, the president said the cliche "that you can't get a job until you have experience and you can't get experience until you have a job really is true for too many young people," especially minorities.

To guard against employers hiring teen-agers to replace adult workers, Reagan said the youth wage could be used only in the summer and his legislation would contain provisions "that absolutely prohibit businesses from displacing current workers by hiring young people at a lesser wage."

Steel Industry Seeking Revival

By JIM McKAY
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — After weathering a business slump unequaled since the Great Depression, America's steel industry is seeing signs of revival.

Orders for steel are picking up. Some long-cold furnaces are being fired up again. Less steel is being imported. Last week, the United Steelworkers of America agreed to roll back wages to help the companies cut costs.

But it's far too soon to declare that the industry that once epitomized the industrial might of America is on the way to good health.

Major steelmakers lost $3.5 billion in 1982 when production was below half capacity, and an estimated 160,000 steelworkers were laid off indefinitely.

"The economy faces a difficult time over the next few quarters to begin the recovery from two back-to-back recessions," said Sheldon Arnot, vice president of sales for second-ranked Bethlehem Steel Corp.

Orders for steel are increasing as the nation's factories begin to emerge from 2½ years of hard times. U.S. Steel Corp. and Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp. announced the restart of cold furnaces in the Pittsburgh area shortly after the USW pact was signed Tuesday.

"We're expecting some companies will break even by the second quarter, and some even have a shot at making money," said Charles Bradford, a steel analyst for the investment firm Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith in New York.

Steel imports appear to be declining. Foreign products took an estimated 19.9 percent chunk of the U.S. market in January, down from 20.9 percent in December and an all-time high of 26.6 percent in January 1982, according to the American Iron and Steel Institute, an industry trade organization.

The new contract, which temporarily cut wages by $1.25 an hour or about 9 percent and reduced cost-of-living payments to mill workers, should give cash-pressed companies some immediate relief.

"The agreement represents a responsible step toward getting employment costs under control to make us more competitive," said industry negotiator George Moore of Bethlehem Steel.

But some industry analysts contend the step was not big enough.

"The steel companies get a little relief. But by the end of the contract it's given back, so the competitive position with the rest of the world isn't significantly improved," Bradford said.

The pact is a "Band-Aid," said Joseph Wyman, a steel securities analyst for Shearson-American Express in New York. "It's better than nothing, but it's not what they need."

The Rev. William Hogan, an industry expert at Fordham University, said the contract concessions, although small in relation to steel's overall problems, should help bring in orders.

"It will give the industry some breathing room," he said. "The industry is not going to recover until the economy recovers, but this concession will help."

Buyers are rebuilding inventories depleted last year. The industry acknowledges orders have increased, primarily in sheet steel used for consumer products such as automobiles and appliances.

Orders for flat-rolled steel are rising, and steel shipments, which dropped to a dismal 60 million tons in 1982, are expected to rise to 72 million tons this year, the industry said. A record of 111.4 million tons was shipped in 1973.

Bradford, who is predicting shipments will go to 80 million tons in 1983, said orders placed this month should tell if the recovery is stable.

"One company had orders last October of 40 percent of capacity, in January 58 percent and in February over 80 percent, and that's not atypical," he said. "If orders fall back down to 40 percent of capacity, you'll know it's not for real."

Eighth-ranked Wheeling-Pittsburgh, a producer of flat-rolled steel, planned to relight a blast furnace in Monessen, Pa., on Sunday, putting 280 people back to work. The furnace has been idle since May.

"There is gradual improvement, but we are a long way from seeing some kind of big surge in production," said Wheeling-Pittsburgh spokesman Ken Maxcy.

U.S. Steel said it would fire up an idle blast furnace for making iron at its Edgar Thomson Works near Pittsburgh later this month. Some 300 employees will return to the mill.

The Edgar Thomson Works, which has four blast furnaces in the industrial Monongahela River Valley, has not made iron since December 1981. Steel is made by removing impurities from iron.

North State's IRA pays more interest: 10.50%

The real difference between all the available IRAs (Individual Retirement Accounts) is the amount of interest you get paid.

So check around. You'll soon find that North State's IRA pays you more.

And retirement will bring more big bills like Jacksons, Grants and Franklins when you open a North State IRA.

As little as $100 starts an IRA at North State. And even if you already have an IRA someplace else, you can open a new one and start getting North State's higher rates.

As with any IRA, you get tax deductions now (deduct deposits up until April 15 from your 1982 return) and income when you retire. So come in and let us tell you about a North State IRA at the office nearest you.

And while you may think that IRAs look a lot alike right now, a higher-rate North State IRA sure will look better later on.

Because it puts more great men in your future.

You'll get the highest rates with a North State IRA.

Heavy Selling Causes Gold, Silver Prices To Drop

By JOHN DOWLING
Associated Press Writer

Gold and silver prices dipped sharply Friday on the Comex in New York in the wake of heavy selling on London gold markets.

The March-delivery gold contract dipped as low as $405 an ounce before rallying to close at $417.60, $12.70 below Thursday's close. Silver for March delivery fell 70 cents to close at $10.18 an ounce, and contracts in some deferred months fell 75 cents, the maximum permitted in a day's trading.

The trading session in New York started on a negative note because of falling prices in London, where trading opens several hours earlier, analysts said. Concerns over the status of the OPEC oil price negotiations, now set to resume Monday, influenced gold trading in both markets, they said.

The gold market is concerned that an oil price war might force producing nations to sell gold to make up for lost income from petroleum, said Jack Boyd, vice president for commodity research for Drexel Burnham Lambert in New York.

Friday's trading was influenced by a report that an un-identified party offered a large quantity of gold for sale in London before the opening of trading, leading to speculation that holders of gold were liquidating in anticipation of an oil price collapse, he said.

Market analysts have said a substantial drop in the official OPEC oil price would confirm beliefs that inflation is under control, and that in turn would increase the investment attractiveness of securities. Both of those developments would tend to depress prices for gold, which traditionally has been an investment refuge in times of inflation and economic in-stability.

Futures prices for live and feeder cattle dropped on the Chicago Mercantile exchange, while hog futures prices were mixed and pork bellies gained some ground.

The April-delivery cattle contract fell .88 cent to close at 64.82 cents a pound, while fee-ders for March delivery fell .65 cent and closed at 71.92 cents a pound.

John Ginzel, livestock analyst in Chicago for Drexel Burnham Lambert, attributed the declines in part to expectations of a period of weak demand for beef. Coupled with this, he said, has been an increase in the average weight of beef carcasses, indicating that cattle are get-ting bigger just when demand is getting smaller.

The April-delivery hog contract was .03 cent lower at 51.92 cents a pound, while most other contract months increased slightly. Pork bellies for March delivery were .75 cent higher at 72.95 cents a pound, and prices in most other contract months moved higher as well.

Ginzel said the increase in futures prices for bellies reflects a belief that there is strong re-tail demand for bacon at current price levels.

Grain and soybean futures closed slightly higher in most contract months on the Chicago Board of Trade after recovering from early declines.

Analysts said grain prices moved in response to swings in precious metals prices for much of the trading session, falling sharply in early trading and rallying late in the day.

The early drop in grain prices prompted buying by commercial interests that were seeking to take advantage of low prices, particularly in wheat and soybeans, sources said.

There was little fundamental news to move the market, other than reports that corn sales in the country had picked up as a result of recent price gains. Analysts said gains in the past three days were largely a "correction" in the wake of heavy selling Monday.

"The market's been oversold," said Walter Spilka, grain analyst for Smith Barney in New York. "It's coming back slowly, taking its cue from the metals markets."

At the close, wheat was 1¾ cents to 4¾ cents higher with the March-delivery contract at $3.17¼ a bushel; corn was 1 cent lower to ¾ cent higher with the March contract at $2.80½ a bushel; oats were 1¾ cents to 3 cents higher with the March contract at $1.48½ a bushel; and soybeans were 1¾ cents to 4½ cents higher with the March contract at $5.76 a bushel.

Oil Fuels Bull Market

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The problems of OPEC have provided some fresh fuel for Wall Street's bull market.

As members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries struggled to reach agreement on a unified pricing and production front, the leading stock market averages all reached record highs in the past week.

Investors in increasing numbers seemed to see the prospect of lower oil prices as a significant new force working toward economic recovery.

Raymond F. DeVoe Jr., an analyst at Legg Mason Wood Walker Inc., said a reduction in the price of oil could be "the most bullish development of the decade."

On Friday, the United Arab Emirates' oil minister reported that representatives of eight OPEC nations had reached an "understanding" on prices and production in their efforts to avert a price war. They planned more meetings for the coming week in London on the undisclosed plan, presumably to try to sell the other nations in the 13-member cartel on it.

A few weeks ago, when some oil producers began to announce price cuts, the securities markets reacted with considerable uncertainty and caution. There were widespread fears that a turn in the long-term upward trend of oil prices would create turmoil in the international banking system.

As Wright Investor's Service of Bridgeport, Conn., observed, "Many of the world's financial and investment decisions of the past 10 years have been predicated on rising oil prices."

Lately, however, the markets have shown more confidence that any shocks can be absorbed and that the benefits of cheaper energy will be many and widespread.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 20.02 to 1,140.96 in the past week, on top of a 28.12-point gain the week before.

The New York Stock Exchange's composite index rose 2.27 to 88.63, and the American Stock Exchange market value index was up 6.79 at 384.82.

Big Board volume accelerated to a pace of 101.09 million shares a day, against 95.57 million the week before.

Many analysts have been busy lately counting the potential blessings of lower oil prices. The first that usually come to mind are lower inflation and more room for economic growth in industrialized countries like the United States.

But there is also the theory that a smaller U.S. oil bill would make the Federal Reserve's job of trying to control monetary growth easier, and thus help promote lower interest rates. In addition, corporate profits would logically benefit from a reduction in businesses' costs for fuel and petrochemical materials.

Said Wright: "Energy company profits, which accounted for about 20 percent of total corporate profits last year, will continue under pressure but not uniformly so. Integrated oil companies should see higher refining and marketing earnings and, depending on the strength of economic recovery and their ability to maintain refined product prices, higher profits overall."

When OPEC thrust its name into the headlines in the fall of 1973, with price increases and an embargo on sales to the United States, the stock market spent several weeks reacting to the news. The Dow Jones industrials tumbled from 980 in late October of that year to 788 in early December.

Union President To Keep Chrysler Job After Retiring

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — United Auto Workers President Douglas A. Fraser said Saturday he will continue as a member of the Chrysler Corp. board of directors after his retirement from the union presidency in May.

Fraser's statement followed a 1½-hour meeting with Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca, in which the union president was joined by UAW vice presidents Owen Bieber and Marc Stepp.

"Owen, Marc and I told Mr. Iacocca that the union thinks it is wise to accept the corporation's proposal that I continue on the board for a transition period following my retirement as president of the UAW," Fraser said. "At this year's annual shareholders' meeting, I will be standing for re-election along with the other nominees to another one-year term."

Iacocca praised Fraser as a "respected labor leader who knows this business inside and out," and expressed pleasure at the union president's decision.

Fraser was elected to the board in May 1980 and became the first union leader to be named to the board of a major U.S. corporation.

The UAW contract with American Motors Corp. provides for such a position but Fraser said it has not been filled because the Labor Department has not joined the Federal Trade Commission and Labor Department in approving the arrangment.

Iacocca asked Fraser to remain on the board until he is 70.

Fraser is stepping down as union president in May after reaching the mandatory retirement age of 65, and is expected to be succeeded by Bieber. Stepp is director of the union's Chrysler department.

The current UAW president has demanded a seat for the union on Chrysler's board since 1976, but the automaker has refused to put such a provision in its contracts with the union.

Instead, Chrysler offered to nominate Fraser to the board without committing itself to a "union seat."

In accepting the automaker's offer, Fraser had said he would "represent the workers" and "leave the room" if topics came up that could pose a conflict of interest.

Fraser stopped participating in the board's activities late last year when employees at Chrysler Canada struck the company and while U.S. union members were working without a contract as they negotiated a new one. Fraser has since become active again.

Senate Set For Anti-Recession Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Appropriations Committee is preparing to vote on a $3.9 billion anti-recession bill, $1 billion less than a measure the House approved overwhemingly on Thursday to provide jobs and humanitarian assistance.

The measure prepared for the Senate panel's action this week contains more spending on health and other social programs than the House bill, and less on brick-and-mortar construction projects.

As drafted, the bill and an accompanying report earmark substantial amounts of funds to the states represented by influential committee members — the type of provision that had prompted many critics of the House bill to label it "pork barrel."

Several committee members were expected to offer amendments to the draft Senate bill, and both the overall $3.9 billion total and specific items included in the proposal may change significantly before the measure reaches the floor.

In a separate development, the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee was reported to be weighing a call for tax increases beginning in 1985, together with substantial cuts in President Reagan's defense buildup, as part of a tax-and-spending plan to reduce deficits.

Congressional sources, speaking on condition they not be identified by name, said Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., was considering a proposal for a 5 percent growth in defense after inflation — a level that would cut an estimated $92 billion from Reagan's proposed Pentagon spending through 1988.

In addition, Domenici has indicated that he is willing to consider calling for a tax increase beginning in the 1985 fiscal year, a year earlier than Reagan's proposals for standby tax increases would take effect.

These sources also said Domenici is opposed to any additional cuts in programs that provide benefits according to need. That would preclude reductions in food stamps, Medicaid and welfare programs, areas where the Reagan administration has proposed cuts.

The Senate Budget Committee is expected to begin drafting a budget this week, although unlike the past two years, Domenici will not enter the meetings with the type of comprehensive budget plan he has developed previously, sources said.

The jobs bill drafted for the Senate Appropriations Committee is likely to spark some opposition, in part because of the provisions earmarking funds to states represented by key members.

For example, the measure calls for $100 million in new funding for family housing of military personnel. Of that amount, about $18 million would go to installations in Georgia, the home state of subcommittee chairman Sen. Mack Mattingly.

Another $6.4 million would go to installations in Hawaii, the home of Sen. Daniel Inouye. Inouye is the senior Democrat on the subcommittee.

An aide to Mattingly, Richard Moore, said Mattingly did not draft the list and intends to vote against the overall measure unless it is changed. Other sources said the list was prepared by the subcommittee staff while Mattingly stayed at "arms-length" from the process.

The transportation section of the bill also includes money for key members of the subcommittee.

A total of $19 million is earmarked for a mass transit station in Buffalo, N.Y., a state represented by Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, a member of the subcommittee.

There is $33.8 million for a bus facility and mass transit parking garages in Florida, whose Democratic Sen. Lawton Chiles is on the subcommittee. That proposal was in the House bill until opponents forced Rep. William Lehman, D-Fla., chairman of the House subcommittee, to remove it.

A report drafted to accompany the bill also includes $1.9 million for Oregon, home state of Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, chairman of the full Appropriations Committee.

That provision also was deleted from the House bill, as were provisions for $7.2 million for mass transit in Pennsylvania and $6 million for a bus facility in Connecticut. Both those projects re-appeared in the Senate draft report.

The measure also calls for $75 million in airport improvements, and the accompanying report calls for "priority consideration" for the Watford City, Batineau, Fargo, Mandan and Dickinson airports in North Dakota.

Airline, Workers Agree

NEW YORK (AP) — Trans World Airlines and its flight attendants have reached agreement on a tentative three-year contract, averting a nationwide strike that had been set for Saturday morning.

The agreement was reached at midnight Friday, a minute before a threatened strike by 7,000 members of the Independent Federation of Flight Attendants. The attendants had been working without a contract since April 1981.

TWA spokesoQan Sally McElwreath said the contract, retroactive to December 1981, includes a 33½ percent raise over the length of the agreement. That would immediately increase the average flight attendant's salary $4,000 to about $32,000 a year, she said.

The contract also includes $500 a month for expenses, up to $1,500 a year for dental care, increased retirement benefits and a $30,000 life insurance policy, Ms. McElwreath said.

TWA's flight attendants are stationed throughout the country and the ratification vote is expected to take several weeks.

Union spokeswoman Monica Kaufmann said a sticking point in the talks was matching the job security and working conditions at other airlines.

Meanwhile, a strike by 10,500 machinists and ground crew workers at American Airlines was averted Friday after Transport Workers Union members, rejecting the advice of their leadership, approved a three-year contract.

"The members have determined that this is not the time nor are conditions right for a strike," union leaders William Lindner and John Kerrigan said in a statement.

MRS. DONALD RAYMOND ANDERSON

Couple Marries Saturday

Norma Gayle Roberson and Donald Raymond Anderson were married in a double ring ceremony Saturday afternoon at five o'clock in the Hooker Memorial Christian Church. The Rev. Ralph Messick performed the ceremony.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James David Roberson of Greenville, the bride was escorted by her father and maternal grandfather. She was given in marriage by her parents.

The bridegroom is the son of Ms. Sandra H. Anderson of N. Wilkensboro and Sidney O. Anderson of Roaring River. His best man was his brother, Johnny Anderson of N. Wilkensboro.

The bride's honor attendant was her sister, Jackie R. Adams of Greenville. Bridesmaids included Becky C. Brock, Ruth W. Pellisero and Cindy Magette, all of Greenville and Patricia A. Church of N. Wilkensboro, sister of the bridegroom.

Groomsmen included Nelson D. Adams of Greenville, brother-in-law of the bride. Bill and Mike Anderson, brothers of the bridegroom, and Ric Vandett, all of N. Wilkensboro.

A program of wedding music was presented by Eloise Jackson of Winterville and Dawn Odom of New Bern, who sang "Endless Love," "We've Only Just Begun" and "The Wedding Prayer."

The bride wore a formal gown of candlelight silkened organza over peau de soie that featured a high neckline encircled with re-embroidered alencon lace beaded with pearls. The gown featured a sheer yoke of illusion bordered in alencon lace and pearls that continued over the fitted bodice and the capped sleeves of extended illusion were edged in lace and pearls. The modified A-line skirt extended into a chapel length train and featured a self-fabric bow at the waistline closure. She wore a open crowned bridal hat edged in silk Venise lace and pearls that featured a turned up brim and attached silk rose. She carried her mother's lace prayer book covered with cascading ivory silk roses, burgundy satin ribbons and lace streamers.

The matron of honor wore a formal gown of cranberry organza over taffeta styled with an off-the-shoulder double ruffle and a natural waistline accented with a satin bow. The A-line skirt was enhanced by a flounce ruffle at the hem. She wore baby's breath in her hair and carried a clustered bouquet of mixed burgundy flowers, pink pixie carnations, baby's breath and greenery tied with burgundy and lace ribbons.

The bridesmaids' gowns were styled the same as the honor attendant but had a bustle back. They also wore baby's breath in their hair and carried a bouquet identical to that of the honor attendant.

The bride's mother wore an emerald green formal gown of qiana and the mother of the bridegroom wore an aqua accordian pleated formal gown. Both were remembered with white orchid corsages. The grandmothers were remembered with corsages.

The couple will be living in Greenville after a wedding trip to Williamsburg, Va. and Washington, D.C.

The bride graduated from J.H. Rose High School and is personal lines manager at Tadlock Insurance Agency, Inc. The bridegroom graduated from N. Wilkens High School and from Lees-McRae College in Banner Elk. He is now attending East Carolina University.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall. Mr. and Mrs. Gary Little of Greenville greeted guests.

The reception table was covered with a candlelight lace cloth and centered with an arrangement of cranberry and pink roses flanked by cranberry candles. Cranberry candles were also used on the mantel.

Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Little of Greenville said good-byes.

A bridesmaids luncheon was given by Yvonne McLawhorn, aunt of the bride, Saturday. The bride remembered her attendants with pearl necklaces. The after-rehearsal dinner was given by the mother of the bridegroom and family at the Western Sizzlin' Steak House Friday evening for members of the wedding party and out-of-town guests.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I don't know about you, but I never buy a cookbook written by a skinny person. It's pure fiction.

Same with foods I buy in the supermarket. I eat to enjoy, not to have a fiber experience. Show me a fat Gerber baby on a jar of strained bananas and I'll show you a woman who has strained bananas over French ice cream for lunch!

Now it seems all that is about to change. Remember those chubby little Campbell kids with the dimples in their fat knees scarfing down all that hot soup? In keeping with the nation's preoccupation with physical fitness, the "kids" are going to shed a few pounds. Experts are now saying fat babies are not necessarily healthy babies and they're going to update their image.

Okay, I didn't say anything when they lightened up Aunt Jemima a few years ago. I even kept silent when they gave Betty Crocker a new hairstyle, but now they've gone too far.

The faces on my cupboard shelves are like old friends. How do you think I'm going to feel picking up Mrs. Butterworth and discovering a Barbie doll in my hand?

Or poking around the freezer case and coming up with Mama Celeste with a facelift, blonde hair and a jogging suit? It won't be the same.

I suppose the Blue Nun will go modern and exchange her traditional habit and bicycle for a three-piece suit and a Corvette. Or worse, some ad agency will put Orville Redenbacher in contact lenses, dye his hair and have him shorten his name.

Sometimes I think advertisers don't understand people at all. Eating should be a pleasurable experience.

I know by looking at the Hershey kids that they eat chocolate until their faces have to be retouched. I know that Mrs. Smith drags into the kitchen every morning and bakes every one of those pies and has never counted a calorie in her life.

And I know that when the Quaker appears on the oatmeal box wearing Foster Grant glasses and a chain around his neck, it'll be all over for me.

If I were the advertisers, I'd go the other way. I'd try to restore some of the warmth and pleasure that comes with good food. I'd have a fold-out page of Orson Welles eating avocado and sour cream dip and saying, "Would this body lie to you?"

The bride wore a formal gown of white chiffon over peau de soie designed with an open neckline complemented with a bertha collar edged in Brussels lace. The empire bodice was encircled with Brussels lace. The modified A-line skirt was accentuated with a flounced hemline edged in Brussels lace that extended to form a sweep train. She wore a ringlet of white silk flowers in her hair with white satin streamers. She carried a bouquet of pink miniature roses, violets and white stephanotis accented with bridal lace and streamers of white satin and lace love knots.

MRS. MICHAEL GLENN POTTER

The honor attendant wore a lavender taffeta gown with an overlay of chiffon styled with an open neckline and bertha collar. The flower girl wore a formal dress with ribbons in her hair.

Corsages were presented to grandmothers of the couple, Mrs. Maezelle Norville of Falkland, Mrs. Brunis Gray of Greenville, Mrs. Louise Dail of Ballard's Crossroads and Mrs. Edith Collier.

The couple will live near Farmville after a wedding trip.

The bride graduated from D.H. Conley High School and is employed by Hardee's of Greenville. The bridegroom graduated from Ayden-Grifton High School and works at Sweet Carolines and Earl's Convenient Mart in Greenville.

Tapenade Plus

MIRELLE JOHNSTON'S TAPENADE

To be served with raw vegetables or spread on croutons.

- 1/2 cup black olives from Nice or oil-cured black olives, pitted
- 6 anchovy fillets, cleaned, rinsed and drained
- 1 1/2 tablespoons capers
- 1 garlic clove, peeled and crushed
- Juice of 1 lemon
- 4 tablespoons olive oil (possibly more)
- Freshly ground pepper
- 2 tablespoons fresh basil, finely chopped (do not use dried basil)

In an electric blender, on high speed, whirl together the olives, anchovies, capers, garlic, lemon juice, olive oil and pepper for a few seconds. Stir, and check if mixture is too thick and needs more oil. Pour into a bowl and check the seasoning (if it is too salty add 1/2 teaspoon sugar). Add the basil. Cover with plastic wrap and keep in the refrigerator until ready to use. It will keep about 10 days. From "The Cuisine of the Sun", by Mireille Johnston (Random House).

Food Editor's Note: When fresh basil is unavailable, we substitute fresh parsley. The tapenade makes about 3/4 cup and is an extremely savory mixture. —C.B.

LaClede Gets $2 Million Preservation Facelift

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — The LaClede Hotel, built prior to the Civil War, is being brought back to life in one of the most extensive preservation efforts under way in Mobile.

"It's a historic monument, and it'll be here forever because of the things we've done to it," said developer Jim Mattei, a partner in the project.

The LaClede stands at the entrance to Bankhead Tunnel and for years suffered decay. It served as the ramshackled backdrop to the movie "Back Roads," which featured a has-been boxer and a down-and-out prostitute.

The $2 million investment to restore the old hotel as an exclusive office address should serve as "an example for the state in historic restoration," said Mattei.

The hotel balconies with 260 feet of iron lace are probably the most distinctive in the city, a coveted perch for Mardi Gras parade-watchers.

Restoration began a year ago. Parts of the building are now completed. Roy Moran, an apartment developer from Dallas, Texas, moved his firm, Moran Properties, into the ground-floor suites in December.

"The LaClede was built in so many different phases and with so many alterations, that it was difficult to do research on it," said William H. Phillips, the project architect.

"We have been able to document 12 major alterations and additions to the building."

Phillips said the building has "been like a mystery novel, like picking up a book you want to read and not being able to put it down. Every time you open another door, you have a surprise."

Back when the first section was built, about 1855, he said, it was rectangular. A fruit stand and a liquor store were downstairs, with a front door, and residential quarters on the second floor. The front of the building was 2½ stories.

Many changes followed over the years before the building fell into disrepair. It closed in 1963.

The property was once a part of a series of Spanish land grants, and the buildings have probably the longest title abstracts in Mobile. Many of the port city's most prominent citizens once owned it, including cotton merchant Gustavus Beale and Henry Hitchcock, Mobile's first millionaire who died of yellow fever.

The hotel is significant because it's an example of the Federal style commercial row buildings.

Mike Leventhal of the Historic Development Commission said the LaClede project is "a sign of things to come in downtown Mobile."

"Up to now," he said, "preservation basically has happened in a cycle. First, people restore houses to use as their own homes. Second, they're restoring homes for white-collar offices. Finally, they restore commercial buildings for use as commercial buildings.

"The restoration of the LaClede has opened up this phase of preservation in Mobile, showing that preservation is economically feasible, marketable and profitable."

In a separate public project, the city spent $4.3 million restoring City Hall, a pre-Civil War building damaged by Hurricane Frederic in 1979.

It's an example of Renaissance Italiante style. In 1974, City Hall was listed as a National Historic Landmark building.

Scattered lace appliques adorned the skirt which was bordered with cluny lace and double rows of ribbon and a band of silk Venise lace encircled the waistline. She wore a tiered fingertip mantilla of imported silk illusion with pencil edging bordered with cluny lace attached to a cluny lace cap with seed pearls. She carried a cascade of white roses and ivy centered with cymbidium orchids.

Satin bows were featured at the shoulders and a folded sash centered with a fabric rose enhanced the modified natural waistline. She carried a cascade of mixed spring flowers and plum streamers.

Susan Stoneham of Greenville was maid of honor. Other attendants were Lisa Mills, cousin of the bride, Lynn Sutton of Greenville, Angie Quinn of Winterville, Pansy Gaskins, sister-in-law of the bridegroom of Virginia and Rita Jackson of Grifton. Their gowns and bouquets were identical to those of the honor attendant.

The flower girl was Amanda Brick, niece of the bridegroom of Virginia and the ring bearer was Brad Gaskins, nephew of the bridegroom of Grifton. The mother of the bride wore a gown of aubergine taffeta with a lace jacket. The mother of the bridegroom selected a formal gown of mauve and burgundy chiffon over satin. Both wore corsages of cymbidium orchids.

Mrs. Mary Jane Buck, grandmother of the bride, Mrs. Ruby Smith and Mrs. Ora Gaskins, grandmothers of the bridegroom, were remembered with corsages.

Jean Evans of Grimesland directed the wedding and Pam Jackson of Grifton presided at the register.

AFTER-SCHOOL SNACK
Crisp Cookies and Milk

CRISP COOKIES

An old-time recipe we've brought up to date.

- 1/4-pound stick butter
- 1-3rd cup granulated sugar
- 1-3rd cup firmly packed dark brown sugar
- 1 large egg
- 1 cup sifted all-purpose flour
- 1/2 teaspoon (scant) baking soda
- 1/2 cup quick-cooking oats
- 1/2 cup lightly packed flaked coconut

In a medium bowl with an electric beater, cream butter, granulated sugar and brown sugar; beat in egg until blended. Add flour and baking soda; beat until smooth. With a spoon stir in oats and coconut. If necessary, cover and chill until firm enough to handle. Using 1 tablespoon for each, roll into balls; place a few inches apart on a buttered cookie sheet; flatten with fork tines in criss-cross fashion to 1/4-inch thickness. Bake in a preheated 400-degree oven until lightly browned — 6 to 8 minutes. With a wide spatula remove to a wire rack to cool completely. Store in a tightly closed container. Makes about 30.

Nutritionists Seeking Healthiest Food Produce Book

By PATRICIA Mc CORMACK
UPI Health Editor

The day fast food places coast-to-coast put cucumber or bean dip sandwiches on the menu, Sonia L. Connor and her husband William probably will shout for joy.

And Uncle Sam, who has been supporting the Connors' years-long quest for the healthiest diet of all, may even turn a cartwheel.

The jubilant contortions will be from getting into the American dietary mainstream — fastfood emporiums — types of sandwiches that may contribute to prevention of some killing and crippling disorders linked to dietary sins.

The litany of faults includes too much salt and sugar, overloads of greasy and fried foods, too much red meat and all those edibles that crowd junk food bins and shelves nationwide.

Mrs. Connor is a dietitian and Dr. William E. Connor is a professor of medicine at the Oregon State Health University section on clinical nutrition and lipid metabolism.

William Connor has been tracking dietary dictums at National Institutes of Health Clinical Research Centers since the 1950s. His wife has been helping to devise recipes to fit scientific findings judged prudent for one's health.

Before moving to Portland, Connor did his dietary detective work at the NIH Clinical Research Center at the University of Iowa School of Medicine.

Among other things, Connor has been been looking into the way bulky and high fiber diets help promote longevity and ward heart disease, certain kinds of cancer and assorted other ailments.

Connor says many of these are linked to overconsumption of wrong kinds of food. For health's sake, however, there can be overconsumpton of the right kinds of food, too — leading to obesity.

Sandwiches featuring bean dip or cucumber fillings are on the Connors' recommended list. They also push low-salt, low-fat, whole grains, beans, chicken, fish, and red meat used as a condiment in vegetable dishes.

"It is an alternate diet and it is our best guess, based on science, for the healthiest diet," Mrs. Connor said.

She might as well have winked when she said "guess." There is no guesswork in the recipes devised at the clinical centers. They are based on what science shows to be the best direction for dietary styles to take if people are to stay well as long as possible.

Vegetables in sandwiches replace such fillings as lunch meats laden with salts and fats. Besides vegetables the researchers promote peanut butter and celery for sandwichs. There's not a ham-on-rye in the batch.

Recipes for other types of health fare are in "The Best From the Family Heart Kitchens," a cookbook put together by the Family Heart Study Nutrition Staff at the Oregon Health Sciences University under tutelage of the Connors.

"If you lose weight and then adopt the dietary style recommended in this book," Mrs. Connor said, "it's a pretty good bet you won't get fat again."

That's because the food satisfies, provides lots of bulk with relatively few calories, is satisfying and does not tend to promote overconsumption of high-calorie food.

"The type of food recommended involves dietary changes on the part of the typical American family," Mrs. Connor said.

That American families can change from oldstyle feeding — gradually — is being demonstrated in a five-year family study begun in Oregon in 1978 as part of the research supported by Uncle Sam, she said.

"We selected 233 families at randon, and have been working with them to see how many changes can be made in the diet over time.

"Some have moved away, but among the rest there are changes going on — less sugar and salt, less red meat, more chicken and fish, more whole grains."

It is Mrs. Connor's impression that the changes are not a hardship.

"Changing just takes time," she said.

"We wanted to devise the healthiest cookbook for the average family. I call it the brown and white cookbook. There are two kinds of cookbooks, the kind based on the typical American diet — with fat, white flour, sugar, refined products. I call that the white cookbook.

"Then there is the brown cookbook — one that leans to vegetarianism. Lots of grains, tons of beans and such. Our cookbook is in the middle."

Dr. Connor, in an introduction to the guide, lists afflictions caused by, or associated with, eating excessive amounts of certain nutrients.

He calls them diseases of overconsumption.

His list of the problems and over-consumed nutrients associated with each:

— Atherosclerosis, coronary heart disease and stroke: cholesterol, saturated fat and calories.

—Hypertension (high blood pressure): salt and calories.

—Obesity: calories.

—Diabetes mellitus: calories.

—Cholesterol gallstones: cholesterol and fat.

—Cancer of the breast: fat.

—Cancer of the large bowel: fat. cholesterol and lack of fiber

—Cancer of the uterus: calories.

—Dental caries: sucrose.

"You will recognize that these maladies are among the most common causes of poor health, suffering and death in our country," Connor says.

"The next question is: How can they be largely prevented? The answer is that the consumption of foodstuffs that contain the nutrients causing these diseases must be altered.

"For example, to prevent high blood pressure, the use of sodium chloride (table salt) must be drastically reduced. Processed foods containing salt and other sources of sodium should be avoided whenever possible."

The book also contains dietary advice for those interested in fending off disease and ailments.

Connor said he and his staff have devised a way of cooking and eating that embodies nutritional principles designed to prevent diseases of overconsumption.

"In the alternative diet concept, we have attempted to unify two basic aspects in the history of food: to return to the diet of our ancestors (more plant food, less animal food) and at the same time benefit from technology by using low-cholesterol, low-fat, processed foods.

"The healthy and appetizing pattern of foods then emerges as is exemplified in the cookbook."

The six food groups in the alternative diet include:

—Beans, nuts and seeds: "Eat 3 to 5 cups of beans per week (kidney, pinto, lentils, refried, chili and such). Use nuts and seeds to spice up grains, beans and vegetables."

—Vegetables: "Eat 2 to 3 cups per day, unpeeled if possible."

—Whole grains and potatoes: "Eat 2 to 5 servings at each meal. Choose snacks from this group — bread, rice, popcorn, cereals, oats."

—Fats: "Use sparingly (4 to 5 teaspoons per day). Think of using half the fat as spreads, mayonnaise or salad dressing and half in cooking and baking (vegetable oils, margarine, shortening)."

—Fruits: "Eat 3 to 4 pieces per day. Fresh fruit is preferable to juice."

—Low-fat animal products: Eat one of the following, aiming for a daily average of either 6 ounces of fish or 3-4 ounces of poultry, shellfish or lean meat or 1-2 ounces of lower fat cheese. Use low-fat dairy products as desired (skim milk, yogurt).

"We view the principles of the alternative diet as guidelines for the gradual adoption of a new eating lifestyle," Connor says in the book.

"This may mean months and more likely means years.

"A new way of eating does not occur by decision only but by practice as well. To this extent we have provided the tools with which to practice — recipes."

Asked about cost, Mrs. Connor said: "We have this philosophy that the research and everything is paid for by tax dollars, and people should get it at cost — which is $8.30, including postage."

"We are non-profit."

—— To order: Make a check of $8.30 payable to Oregon Health Sciences University and address the envelop: The Best from the Family Heart Kitchens, L216, Oregon Health Sciences Univrsity, 3181 S.W. Sam Jackson Park Road, Portland, Ore. 97201.

Pain Relief

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — A team of researchers at the University of Rochester Medical Center has found that a synethetic drug, metkephamid, which is derived from one of the brain's own chemicals, provides relief from severe pain.

This discovery may lead to analgesics without the addictive effects of some commonly prescribed narcotics.

Reporting the results of the first analgesic test of metkephamid on people, the team found the drug, manufactured by Eli Lilly Co., to be more stable than the brain's pain-reducing chemicals and to produce less addiction and less depression of breathing than standard narcotics.

Dear Abby

Are Holographic Wills Legal?

By Abigail Van Buren

1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I have a friend who is 75 and a widower. (I'll call him "Paul.") He lives alone, and I am just a neighbor he's known for quite a few years. I'm 54 and a bachelor. Paul's health has been failing the last few years, so I've been looking after his needs, such as buying his groceries, providing transportation to his doctors, etc. He says I am his best friend, and he's told me repeatedly that he is leaving everything he has to me. I always say, "That's nice," then I change the subject.

Paul says he has a handwritten will in his drawer. He has no children, but he does have a younger brother in town who is a prominent attorney, but Paul doesn't plan on leaving him anything because he thinks he is a snob. Paul says his handwritten will is as good as one drawn up by a lawyer. He didn't want a local lawyer to draw it up because he says lawyers talk, and he doesn't want his brother to know what's in it.

Is it true that a person can make up his own will without a lawyer or witnesses?

PAUL'S PAL

DEAR PAL: Yes. It's called a "holographic" will. It must be entirely written, dated and signed in the handwriting of the maker. No witnesses are required, and no printing or typing may appear on the paper.

Holographic wills are legal in most states, but not in all.

DEAR ABBY: I've lived with my fiance for six months. We're planning to marry and I am expecting a baby in four months. We love each other very much and everything would be ideal, except that he is only legally separated from his wife. She has their two children and is living with her boyfriend.

She has filed for divorce, but that's where it stands. They had a written agreement that he would pay for the wedding and she would pay for the divorce.

She says she doesn't have the money. (She gets welfare, child support, plus a lot of help from her boyfriend.) I have a good job but everything is so high these days, it's hard to make ends meet, let alone save anything.

I'm not worried that they might have a reconciliation because they both agree that their marriage was a joke from the start.

Don't tell me to leave him, because he is my whole world. Can I do anything to force her to get the divorce?

ALMOST A MRS.

DEAR ALMOST: No. I hope you realize that your "whole world" is a man who went into a marriage expecting it to fail, had two children in this marriage that he says was a joke from the start, then started a second family with you while still married to somebody else.

Since you seem to be the only one in this three-ring (less) circus who's in a hurry for the divorce, it appears that the only way to get it is to pay for it yourself.

DEAR ABBY: What is the difference between a tourist and a traveler?

LEON

DEAR LEON: A tourist is a traveler who looks like he hasn't traveled much.

Cooking Is Fun

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

Years ago, in a Tampa, Fla., restaurant, I ordered my first bowl of Cuban Black Bean Soup, and was astonished when it appeared. I saw nothing resembling soup — only cooked black beans mounded on rice. Where was the liquid that usually accompanies soup?

As Jane Nickerson, in her "Florida Cookbook", writes: "The name (for Cuban Black Bean soup) is deceptive, for this soup is more of a stew, a thick mixture of delicious flavored black beans served over rice. Liberal portions of raw, minced onion garnish each portion, and diners may add olive oil and vinegar, according to taste. This soup gained popularity in Florida's Spanish restaurants, where it appears as a first course, but at home, because it is substantial and a good source of protein, it provides a thrifty main dish."

I like to serve Cuban Black Bean Soup for Sunday night supper. Accompanied by a salad (with or without cheese) and such a homestyle dessert as Apple Crisp or Apple Pie, it's good enough for company.

CUBAN BLACK BEAN SOUP

1 pound dry black beans
1 medium green pepper, chopped medium fine
¼ cup olive oil
1 medium onion, chopped medium fine
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 teaspoon ground cumin
1 tablespoon red wine vinegar
2 teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
Hot Cooked Rice

Pick over beans, wash well and cover generously with water. Soak overnight. Drain, rinse in fresh water and drain again. Turn into a 4- to 5-quart saucepot; add 6 cups water and the green pepper. Bring to a boil; cover and simmer, stirring occasionally, until beans are tender — 1 to 1½ hours, or much longer (time varies greatly).

In a 10-inch skillet, heat oil. Add onions, garlic and cumin; cook gently, stirring often, for 2 to 3 minutes. Stir in vinegar; cook a few minutes longer. Stir into bean mixture with salt and pepper.

Simmer, uncovered, until most of the liquid has been absorbed — about ½ hour. Mixture should be consistency of stew.

Serve over cooked rice and pass chopped onion.

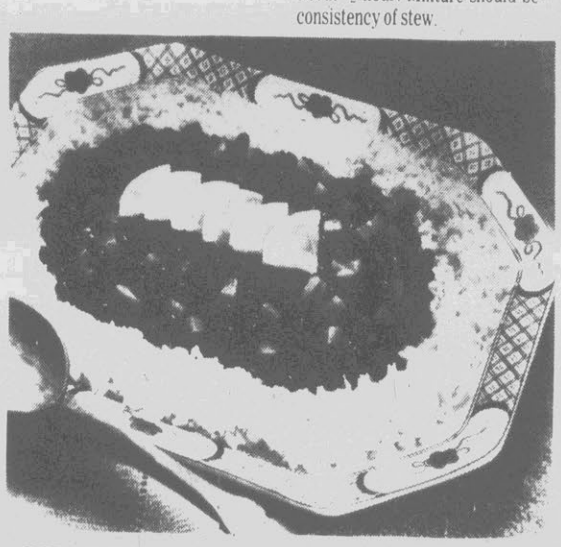

Makes 6 to 8 servings.

GRAPEFRUIT MOLDS

Light and refreshing as salad or dessert.

1 envelope unflavored gelatin
2 cups unsweetened grapefruit juice
¼ cup honey
Sliced banana

In a medium bowl evenly sprinkle gelatin over ½ cup of the grapefruit juice and let stand to soften — about 5 minutes. Bring the remaining grapefruit juice and the honey to a boil; pour over gelatin mixture and stir until gelatin dissolves. Ladle into four 6-ounce custard cups; chill to set. At serving time unmold and garnish with banana. Makes 4 servings.

CUBAN BLACK BEAN SOUP — Served over rice and topped with diced sweet onion and lemon slices it makes a thrifty main course.

Payment of $15 fee for the courses (except the figure drawing course) are to be made payable to Pitt Community College during the first class.

ROYAL SEAL — The royal seal of South Carolina, symbol of the authority of King George III in the American colonies, is returning to the Palmetto state after an absence of more than 200 years. Valued at more than $130,000, the two sterling molds are being flown to Columbia from the British Museum in London for the 200th anniversary of the withdrawl of the British from South Carolina. KERTESZ PHOTOS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — "Andre Kertesz: Form and Feeling," an exhibition of 88 prints from the Hallmark Photographic Collection, has started on a national tour that will cover 10 cities during 1983 and '84.

The works in the display represent a full career survey of Kertesz's work in black and white, dating from 1914 to 1972. The traveling exhibition is at the Sheldon Memorial Art Gallery, Lincoln, Neb., Feb. 15-March 20, and concludes at the Snite Museum of Art, Notre Dame, Ind., Sept. 8-Oct. 20, 1984.

PAN OR PRAISE?

NEW YORK (AP) — It's harder to review a bad play than a good one, despite the popular notion that, given a choice, critics would rather pan than praise, says theater critic Walter Kerr.

"It takes 10 times as much energy to write a bad notice as it does to write a good one," Kerr explains.

'Old Salt's Day' At Chrysler

NORFOLK — "Old Salt's Day," an afternoon of family entertainment, will take place at the Chrysler Museum beginning at 2:30 today. Among entertainments planned for the event is "Tales of the Sea" to be told at The Curiosity Shop, followed by the singing of worksong and sailor chanteys by veteran chanteyman John Townley and Captain George Sally.

"Tales of the Sea" begins with a dramatic interpretation of John Masefield's poem "Sea Fever" as four actors on stage "call the audience to sea." Another selection, "The Bag of Winds" from Homer's "Odyssey" will be told in pseudo-Green theater style; and stories from American culture and folklore will be narrated and interpreted. This program is the first presentation of "Tales of the Sea."

Songs to be performed by Townley and Sally will be primarily 19th century sea chanteys. They will be accompanied by a fog horn as well as with musical instruments that went to sea — the concertina and the melodian. Townley is a former folk and pop singer, and CBS songwriter, who served for ten years as resident chantey singer at South Street Seaport Museum near Fulton Fish Market in Manhattan.

Those attending "Old Salt's Day" can also take a look a "The Sailor, 1930-1945" exhibition now on view at Chrysler.

The Chrysler Museum is located at Olney Road and Mowbray Arch in Norfolk. Admission is free. Hours are 10 to 4 Tuesdays through Saturdays, and 1 to 5 on Sundays. For more information, interested persons may call the museum at 804-622-1211, extension 40 or 78.

Black Artists Show

GREENSBORO — A major exhibition of art by four prominent North Carolina black artists is currently on view at Green Hill Gallery, 200 N. Davie St., Greensboro. The show, which opened Feb. 20 in conjunction with the observance of February as Black History Month, will be up to March 25.

Minnie Evans, James Gadson, Charles Joyner and Juan Logan are the four artists whose work is being exhibited.

Mrs. Evans, who was born in 1982 in Long Creek, is a self-taught artist who made her first drawing in 1935 and her first painting in 1954. Her brightly colored art, drawn from "God-given" dream images, are filled with angels, flowers and trees. Her work has been exhibited at the Museum of Modern Art, the Studio Museum of Harltem and the Whitney Museum of American Art, where she had a one-artist show in 1973. Her works are in the Smithsonian Institution and numerous collections nationally.

Gadson, originally from Allendale, S.C., and currently on the faculty of UNC-Chapel Hill, studied at several schools including the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia. His abstract works have been exhibitd in Washington, D.C., Philadelphia and the N.C. Museum of Art, Raleigh.

Joyner, a Smithfield native, was educated at Iowa State University, A&T State University, and UNC-Greensboro. Currently, he teaches in the School of Design at N.C. State University. Primarily a printmaker, his works have been exhibited in several Southern cities, and his art is in many collections in the region.

Nashville native Juan Logan attended Clark College and Howard University. A sculptor and painter, Logan now lives in Belmont. His sculpture has been shown in Charlotte, Denver, San Francisco and other cities across the country. In 1971 his large geometric sculpture received the Romare Bearden Award at Carnegie Institute's "USA" exhibition in Pittsburgh. His work is in the collections of NCNB, A&T State University, and the Museum of African Art in Washington, D.C.

Beaux Arts Ball Set

RALEIGH — Plans have been announced for the 10th annual Beaux Arts Ball sponsored by the North Carolina Art Society.

The ball will be held in the new North Carolina Museum of Art at 8 p.m. April 8, which marks the first time ever that the ball has been held in the state's art museum.

The black-tie event is part of a week of activities leading up to the museum's grand opening festival April 9-10. The North Carolina Art Society Day — the annual meeting day for society members — will be held Friday before the ball.

Tickets to the Beaux Arts Ball are $250 per couple for members of the society. Tickets for non-members of the society are $150 for a single ticket, $275 for a couple.

Information and reservations may be obtained by writing to: N.C. Art Society Office, 2110 Blue Ridge Road, Raleigh, 27601, or by telephone 833-1935, extension 139. Persons interested are advised to make early contact.

Extensive preparations have been made to make the event a gala one. There will be an arrangement of flowers and candles, and a four-course dinner featuring regional specialities including shad roe and squab.

Music will be provided by the Peter Duchin Orchestra with Duchin at the piano.

The North Carolina Art Society is the membership and volunteer support group for the North Carolina Museum of Art. Proceeds from previous balls have helped to fund acquisitions of art such as Claude Monet's "Morning Mists," and have been used to augment funds raised for the Education Wing of the new museum and educational programs.

Committee members for the 1983 Beaux Arts Ball include persons from 19 North Carolina towns. Greenville is represented by Dr. and Mrs. Sellers Luther Crisp and Dr. and Mrs. Ira May Hardy III.

Struts Finery

Antoinette Jenkins, a retired East Carolina University teacher, has reported that a funny thing involving a feathered stranger happened to her on the way to a local bank recently.

"As I was crossing the NCNB parking lot recently, I noticed something dart under a car. At first I thought it was a cat. When it emerged from beneath the car, I discovered it was not a cat, but a small rooster in bright colors.

"His body was tan, he sported a plume of shiny black tail feathers, and a brilliant red comb," Mrs. Jenkins said, describing the bird.

"At my approach, it stepped dwon from the curb of a planted area with all the aplomb of royalty descending a staircase. Then he high-stepped to the planted section again, with his head held high and his fine tail feathers ruffling in the wind. He walked about like a one-man 'Strutters Ball.'"

Mrs. Jenkins says the question that arises in her mind is what is there about NCNB on First Street to attract a colorful, strutting rooster. She put the question to two NCNB employees, Sandy Smith and Katherine Gray. Both had to admit they could not shed any light on the bird's parking lot visit.

New At EEii's

BELHAVEN — An exhibit of photography and custom-made knives by James L. Rouse is currently on view at EEii's little KORNERS of the world. In addition to his work, Rouse is showing a collection of his guns and swords.

A life-long resident of the Bucklesbury community near Kinston, Rouse became interested in color photography while serving in the U.S. Air Force. His photographs focus on nature, with subjects ranging from mountain trails to old farm equipment to the waters of the Outer Banks.

A Review

Fine Reviews Enrich 'Tar River Poetry'

FOR HUMANS TOO — Bag Balm, a thicky greasy cream made by a family in Lyndonville, Vt., who started packaging it in 1909, is also used by humans to soften skin, prevent diaper rash and to grease guns. Makers of Bag Balm say some people may even buy it for the container, which is a bright green and pink and sports a cow's head on top and a cow's udder on the sides. The tiny cow shown beside the can represents the bovine for which the antiseptic is primarily manufactured. (AP Laserphoto)

Tar River Poetry. Volume 22, Number 1. Greenville. East Carolina University. Editor: Peter Makuck. Advisory editors: James Kirkland, David Sanders, Phyllis Zerella, Norman Rosenfeld. 56 papes, paper. $2.50. (Available in local bookstores or by mail from: Department of English, East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C., 27834)

I like the way Peter Makuck reviews books of poems. He has a manner of writing conversationally about what he feels, how he reacts to a volume of poetry, as well as zeroing in on specific responses to individual poems and lines within a poem. Makuck (consciously or unconsciously — I would suspect the latter) avoids the pitfall of being condescendent to the reader — an irritable habit that some critics of poetry seem unable to escape. Perhaps it's because he himself is a fine poet that he can relax, be natural and tell us, after presenting a verse from Stephen Dunn's "In the San Bernardinos," ... "So much for the beer-ad romance of backpacking. It is not the kingdom of rocks, trees and flowers, but the heat of human contact that Dunn prefers. He is at his best when writing about people and the hard world of work that leaves them too drained to be able to offer themselves in love ..."

Maybe poetry that emphatically addresses itself to tiredness and the heat of human contact is not precisely what an incurable romantic like myself would prefer to spend precious time reading — yet, Makuck's honesty and perception serve a vital function by informing me what I can expect in Dunn's volume under review, "Work and Love."

This honesty, however, works to make me want to acquire, read the second volume Makuck reveiws in this issue of "Tar River Poetry," Mark Jarmann's "The Rote Walker." Early in the review, Makuck tells the reader that "The Rote Walker" is a volume that "belongs to the literature of memory and is rich with the particulars of a rigid Christian upbringing that Jarman struggles with throughout the book." Immediately my interest is piqued. Then, he adds that "'Greensleeves,' first poem of the volume, introduces the themes of music and the hidden life:", followed by three verses from the poem in which are the lovely lines ... "Everyone out, I touch/ the piano and find five notes/ still cling to my right hand ... A scrap of melody,/ it is the one piece/ I ever played well: my heart/ is still in it, too. It is possibly this/ that I mean. So much meant/ to be lost is saved." (What poetry lover will not long savor the comforting thought succinctly expressed in "so much meant to be lost is saved.")

By time I got that far, emphatically hooked. The volume goes on my must list of future reading. Even the bad grades Makuck assigns to the technical aspects of both volumes, "typography and layout ... leave something to be desired, especially in Jarman's book where letters routinely kiss or fall apart ..." fail to dampen the enthusiasm he has aroused. Mission accomplished.

•This much space spent on Makuck's reviews might be construed as a tactful way of detouring making comments on the main course, the 39 poems by 28 poets contained in this latest issue of "Tar River Poetry." But not so. As in previous issues, editor Makuck has garnered an impressive bouquet of poems that give readers new views, new pleasures, renewed confirmation that poetry in American is alive and doing well.

Very briefly, a look at one or two examples to give a flavor of the new issue of "Tar River Poetry":

"One narrow doorway: five small figures, silhouetted in glare light
Of the hot midday sun — ranging from four to three feet in height — come hopping, lopsidedly,
into the long room . . ."
(From "Dominican Shoe Tinkers" by Laurance Lieberman)

"He was an adequate saint, the best they had.
His dreams were busy with strange vines and purposes. He learned how to smile and nod hello, but they could not persuade him to shine his shoes."
(From "Shrine" by Nicholas Rinaldi)

Cat fanciers will find delight in three entertaining poems about a cat named Craven by poetess Kathryn MacDonald.

"Tar River Poetry" is attracting critical attention nationally — for the excellence of its content, its representation of poets old and new from all areas of the nation, and its fine typography and layout. Poetry readers who enjoy new work by established poets as well as poems by younger poets would be well advised to get a copy of each new issue.

Book By Pitt Native Nominated For Award

Pitt County native Sue Ellen Bridgers' third novel has been nominated for the American Book Award. "Notes for Another Life," published by Alfred A. Knopf in 1981 and by Bantum Books in 1982, is one of 96 books nominated from 1,000 entries submitted by publishers.

A panel of authors, librarians, critics and editors who chose those books to be nominated will also select the award winners in each field. Winners will be announced April 28 at the New York Public Library.

The American Book Awards were established in 1980 as a book industry program to select, honor and promote hardcover and paperback books of distinction, exemplary achievement and literary merit. It is the successor to the National Book Awards program.

Mrs. Bridgers is the author of two other books published by Knopf and Bantam.

"Home Before Dark," published in 1976, is an American Library Association Notable Book and appeared on the New York Times Best Books list for 1976.

"All Together Now," published in 1979, received the Christopher Award, was the Boston Globe-Horn Book Honor Book and was listed as an American Library Association Notable Book and a Best Books for Young Adults. "All Together Now" was nominated for an American Book Award in 1981.

Mrs. Bridgers is the daughter of Wayland and Bett Abbott Hunsucker of Winterville. She lives with her husband and three children in Sylva.

BRIDGERS' BOOK NOMINATED — "Notes for Another Life" by Pitt County native Sue Ellen Bridgers has been nominated for the American Book Award. This is her third novel, and was published by Alfred A. Knopf and by Bantam Books.

Author Sees America From Back Highways

By JOY STILLEY
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When William Least Heat Moon listens, people talk.

He listened to people all across the country, from Ninety Six, S.C., to Hat Creek, Calif., and from Dime Box, Texas, to Thief River Falls, Minn., as they talked to him in cafes, in bars, in their homes.

"Wherever I went, I found people interested in talking about the odd historical aspects of their town," he said in an interview. "In a small town when you've lived there 40 years everybody's heard your story and when a stranger comes in they're pleased to find a fresh pair of ears."

Adding to that a fresh pair of eyes, and a keen interest in people, places and ideas, Heat Moon, 43, has written a book, "Blue Highways: A Journey Into America," about his three-month trip of 13,889 miles — more than halfway around the world.

Following the double trauma of a failed marriage and the loss of his job as a college English teacher, Heat Moon fitted his half-ton van with a bunk, packed his old U.S. Navy seabag with clothes, added a tape recorder and camera, and took off on America's back roads — the ones marked in blue on the old maps.

Shunning the interstates, he headed for places like Nameless, Tenn.; Opelousas, La.; Liberty Bond, Wash., and Hungry Horse, Mont.

"I love names and peculiar words; I have a fascination with the poetry of the land, and once you know the history behind the names, they definitely become poems," said Heat Moon, a slim, bearded man in jeans, who is part American Indian.

"Every town seemed to have the unofficial historian, more frequently a woman. Most have a resident codger who seems to lie in wait for a stranger, and one regular in the bar who makes it his business to talk to whoever comes in."

Though he slept in his van, called Ghost Dancing, and prepared many of his meals there on a small stove, he always ate breakfast in the local cafe or grill, where it was easiest to strike up a conversation.

"I found that breakfast was a good time to get the pulse of the community," he said. "And if you were talking to an elderly person they were much more alert then than later in the day.

"I'd be talking naturally to someone, but once I started hearing good stories, then I would switch to my reportorial mode and listen with a different ear. Later, going down the road, I would turn on my microcassette recorder and would try to reconstruct the conversation as best I could."

Heat Moon was invited to "so many meals," especially in the South, where he found "Southern hospitality" a reality.

"In the north-central states it was more difficult to take a conversation past hello and goodbye," he recalls. "No place between Idaho and New York state did a single person buy me a beer or I buy them one. But in the Northeast, which is thought of as being cold, I found people quite friendly."

Heat Moon, strangely enough, also found it difficult to strike up conversations with Indians, probably, he says, because of his Anglo appearance.

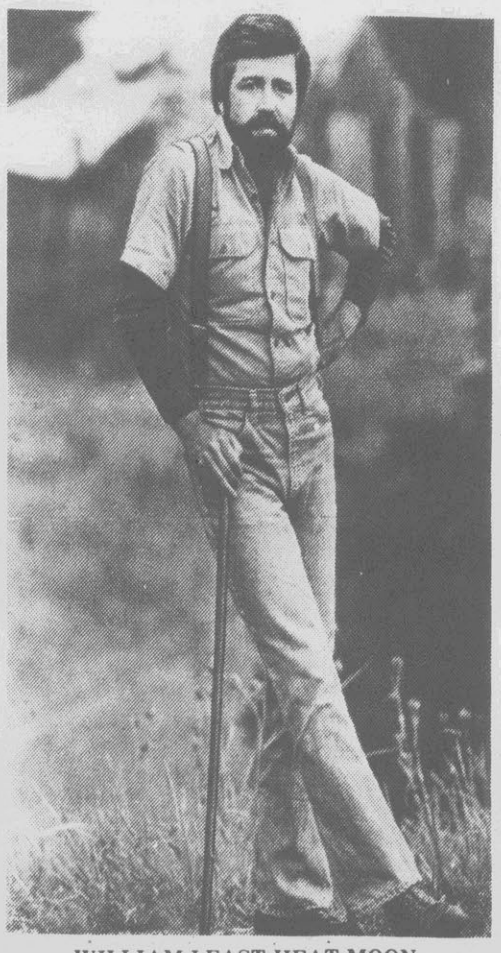

"But going on the road and wandering put me in touch with the spiritual side of tribal America," he said. "My angle of vision changed and I was beginning to see things in the context of the long heritage of red America."

When Heat Moon, who is also known as Bill Trogdon, located the grave in North Carolina of an ancestor eight generations back, William Trogdon, he found another side of his heritage.

"I had seen a photo of the tombstone in a Trogdon family history written in the '20s and it was something I'd always wanted to see since I bore his name. In a way it was like meeting him."

Heat Moon, who went back to the University of Missouri for a degree in photojournalism after having previously received a Ph.D in English there, is remarried and living in Columbia, Mo., where he still has Ghost Dancing. He is working on another book stemming from his journey around the country's perimeter, "going into the people and the land and how the land shapes people."

"I saw tremendous strength and dignity in people customarily not given too much regard and respect," he said. "We haven't listened to these people, and as a result we may be going deaf and blind to people who are closer to the Founding Fathers than those living in the cities."

Fishing Show At Morehead

ATLANTIC BEACH — Plans have been announced for the annual North Carolina Commercial Fishing Show March 12-13 at the National Guard Armory, 3609 Bridges St., in Morehead City.

Admission is free and it will be open to the public. Show hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday and from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

Four seminars are scheduled each for Saturday and Sunday. Among speakers at these events will be Gerald (Jerry) Gaskill, chairman of the N.C. Marine Fisheries Commission; John Foster of the Aquaculture Advisory Service; Dr. Michael Levi, N.C. Agriculture Extension Service; Dr. Bill Queen, director of the Institute for Coastal and Marine Resources, East Carolina University; Jim Bahen and Bob Hines, both Marine Advisory Agents, UNC Sea Grant; Larry McCabe of McCabe's Marine Electrical Service; and a representative of the U.S. Coast Guard.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By LOUISE PERRY

Devotees of the "novel of intrigue" will thrill to the latest crop of mystery and suspense fiction to be found at Sheppard Memorial Library and its branches. From detective stories to espionage thriller, readers will find a wide variety of exciting reading to carry them into spring.

Peter Straub, author of "Ghost Story," now gives us "Fighting Dragon," a tense story of an affluent commuter town, where every refrigerator is stocked with Perrier, and every closet with expensive jogging shoes. There is only one thing wrong with living in Hampstead, in fact: it is about to be visited by a siege of unspeakable horror. The four principal characters are led through escalating terrors to a world thoroughly penetrated by mystery. And the reader is led through a tale that accelerates toward a climax of brusing and masterly power.

Julian Rathborne, author of "A Spy of the Old School," has been called by critics intelligent, sophisticated and brilliantly cynical. The hero of his 14th novel, Richard Austen, may be described similarly. Austen is a leading archaeologist and pillar of the establishment. He is also a communist spy. The story that unravels is of a man who thinks he has covered his trail, then suddenly finds himself facing exposure. Fans of Le Carre and company will find this novel as well-plotted and written as any of its genre.

Max Collins, author of the Dick Tracy comic strip, now has written his first hardcover book featuring a wise-cracking ex-cop, Viet Nam vet Mallory. When Mallory agrees to deliver hot suppers to housebound elderly women, his aged clients turn out to be pleasant surprises. But driving up to the house of his new friend Mrs. Jonsen with meat loaf and baked potatoes, he finds a hold-up in progress, is knocked out and wakes up to find he has been made a party to murder. "The Baby Blue Rip-off" is a fast-paced and ingenious tale launching author Max Collins and hero Mallory into the world of suspense fiction with a humorous bang.

From Texas Skit To Major Hit

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Two or so years ago, actors Jaston Williams and Joe Sears were in Austin, Texas, at a party thrown by Ben Sargent, the Pulitzer-winning cartoonist. They were asked to do a skit.

"Joe and I were upstairs, drinking, wondering what we were going to do," Williams says. Then they spotted a satirical Sargent sketch hanging on a wall. It inspired their skit.

The skit inspired a play. The play inspired Gary P. Nunn, former leader of the Lost Gonzo Band, to drag a visiting New York critic to see it. The critic wrote a rave. Also touted the show to a New York agent.

In due course, "Greater Tuna," an affectionate satire of small-town life in the mythical town of Tuna, Texas, came to New York. It became an off-Broadway hit hailed by many critics, one calling it a Lone Star version of National Public Radio's acclaimed, mythical Lake Wobegone, Minn. — "The town that time forgot and decades cannot improve."

"Tuna" revolves around the broadcast day of Greater Tuna's tiny radio station — over whose 250 mighty watts come such things as music, call-ins, rumors, "The Weekly Art Minute," and, if the wire copy can be found, news.

The station's sign-off slogan: "If you can find someplace better than Tuna, then move!"

Twenty Tunans are in the show. Most are basically bigoted, fundamentally decent and about a quart low.

They range from a Klansman to a Humane Society savior of fish, from a festering hippie to Bertha, a polyestered, beehived book-banner who wants "Roots" buried because "it only shows one side of the slavery issue."

Weird. Equally weird, all 20 characters — the figure doesn't include an off-stage judge found dead in "a Dale Evans swimsuit" — are played by Sears and Williams.

"You do get punchy," says Sears, who with Williams has been dashing on and off stage in a variety of costumes ever since "Greater Tuna" opened here last October.

"I remember when we were just starting, Big Bertha came out wearing the radio announcer's mustache. That doesn't happen very often now, thank God, but you really do have to concentrate on what you're doing all the time.

"We know the people we're satirizing; we come from them," he says. "I can understand what I can perceive to be the danger of the Moral Majority mentality. And yet, just because someone's wrong doesn't mean he or she is not a likeable person. So we're able to satirize them without slicing them to ribbons."

Still, Sears recalls an uneasy night when "Greater Tuna" opened in a small town near San Antonio, Texas.

"A lot of polyester and overalls there," he says. "It was just like playing Tuna. And I thought, 'Lord, what have we done?' But they just loved it. A lot of people came up afterwards and said, 'I know someone just like that.'"

Prime Showcase For New Work

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When the Actors Theater of Louisville first began its new American play festival in 1976, it wasn't quite the prime showcase for an author's new work that it is now.

Only three critics showed up. But on the current go, between 60 and 100 critics are expected for the festival's 10-play, two-day special visitors' weekend next month, according to ATL officials.

Also expected: As many as 500 other out-of-towners — theater pros mostly, producers, directors, agents and the like — many no doubt hoping to discover the next "Crimes of the Heart," the next "The Gin Game."

Those Broadway hits, each a Pulitzer Prize-winner, and Marsha Norman's off-Broadway success, "Getting Out," all came from ATL's festival. "Game," in the festival's first year, started the ball rolling.

"That was the one that really put us on the map," says ATL's producing director Jon Jory, 43, son of actor Victor Jory.

His new-play bash has become a major event for visiting critics and theater folk of New York and regional persuasion, with a sprinkling of foreign delegates also popping in to see what is what in new American plays.

Jory, who spoke by phone from Louisville, is glad ATL's festival is still on the map, has gotten a solid reputation and all that.

But he doesn't consider the annual gathering a script bazaar where the sale, not the play, is the thing.

"I'm sure there are people who view it as a marketplace," he says. "But we don't. We view it as a creative and artistic event where a lot of people get together and supply ideas and reactions."

The festival, sponsored for five seasons now by Humana, Inc., a hospital-building firm, opened Feb. 20, with the big weekend scheduled for March 25-27 at ATL's $1.7-million, two-theater complex.

Most of the new plays displayed at this season's showcase are by relatively unknown authors.

But three are by relatively known scribes — John Pielmeier, whose "Agnes of God" still is on Broadway; William Mastrosimone, whose "Extremities" recently opened off-Broadway, and James McClure, whose rollicking one-act "Lone Star" had a short-lived but generally well-received Broadway run.

Those plays, with widely disparate themes, had one thing in common — all had ATL productions prior to heading north, "Lone Star" in 1979, "Agnes" in 1980 and "Extremities" in 1981.

Such transfers to New York are few and far between, though. What wows 'em in Louisville is no guarantee of even a staged reading in New York.

Still, the new plays keep arriving at ATL, which California-born Jory made his new Kentucky home in 1969.

Record Companies Face A Two-Edged Dilemma

By MARK SCHWED

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — The record companies will admit that nearly $10 is too much for most folk to pay for an LP. But the only solution they have is to give you less music for less money.

Record sales were much lower last year than the industry had projected, and the projections had been pretty pessimisic to start with. At the same time, a three-year slump in sales of stereo equipment worsened in 1982.

There are all sorts of arguments that the near-$10 price is economically justified: the high cost of making a record, multimillion dollar salaries paid to artists like Kenny Rogers, and less than adequate royalties paid to the creators of the music — the songwriters.

The bottom line is that people today can't afford to shell out 10 big ones for an album when the gas bill keeps going up along with the mortgage, the price of stamps and the cost of keeping junior in diapers.

As a result, people have looked for other ways to entertain themselves. Pac Man and his video friends gobbled about $1 billion worth of quarters in 1982. Walkmans were replaced by Watchmans. Videotape recorders jockeyed with videodiscs for the video dollar.

Many Americans have given up on albums. Instead, they invest as little as $150 in a stereo cassette recorder, then tape record albums off the radio or from their friends' collections. It's a lot cheaper that way — much to the chagrin of composers, songwriters and publishers who don't get their royalties.

Home taping, combined with tape counterfeiting, took another $2 billion from record company ledgers.

Something had to be done.

So record companies have started slashing prices — or have they?

RCA Records in Nashville announced recently the release of a "newly developed mini product series featuring a retail price point of $6.98." What that means is the record company will start putting out records that have only six songs and cut the price from nearly $10 ($8.98 list, not including tax) to $6.98.

Early releases included Louise Mandrell's first solo album, "Closeup," Leon Everette's self-titled LP, and "Those Were The Days" by Gary Stewart and Dean Dillon.

"The $6.98 series will be offered as an addition to RCA Records but will not replace the regular $8.98 LP offerings," the press release said.

The price cut is a step in the right direction, but it remains to be seen whether people will pay $1.16 for a song. In fact, the six-song mini LP is actually slightly more expensive per song than an eight-song LP. Six songs for $6.98 gives you one song for $1.16; Eight songs for $8.98 gives you one song for $1.12.

The only saving grace is that the sound quality on the six-song disc is better than a regular album.

But the price is the key.

"Heck, you can buy a record for $2.98 at K-Mart," said one expert record-buyer in Nashville. "I even saw Fred Waring and the Pennsylvanians holiday special album on sale for $1.98."

CBS Records is taking a similar approach in its 45 rpm records. Instead of offering a song on each side of the single record, the record company is only offering one-sided singles, at a price that should be well under $1.

If you thought the $8.98 price for an album was a bit high, would you believe a 4.7-inch-wide record for $17? The compact disc, with each side holding 30 minutes of music, will be introduced in Europe this fall by PolyGram and in the United States this spring. The phonograph needle to play the disc will go for $750.

Dogwood Festival

FAYETTEVILLE — For 1983, the date of Fayetteville's annual Sunday-on-the-Square has been changed to coincide with Fayetteville's new Dogwood Festival.

The festival, which will open April 17, will have events for every interest — form the Open House at Pope Air Force base and Fort Bragg to stock-car racing, ACC all-star basketball, and a beauty pageant.

Also, there will be a dogwood trail to walk along, a historic tour, and a celebrity golf tournament.

Two entertainment events are being planned — a dance with Harry James and his band, and a concert by comic Red Skeleton.

The week of events will conclude April 24.

Newsman As Superman

By PATRICIA WALSH

PHOENIX, Ariz. (UPI) — Who but star reporter Clark Kent, alias Superman, could streak through the sky to the scene of the breaking news story, get his exclusive scoop and make a daring rescue while he's at it?

Jerry Foster, that's who. With a little help from his helicopter — and without having to change clothes.

Foster, 44, is among a handful of television reporters who operate with a helicopter control column in one hand and a camera or microphone in the other.

He was one of the first to dispense with a separate pilot.

Besides reporting, Foster has made uncounted rescues of people stranded on mountain tops, in the desert or in suddenly flooded washes.

Foster's efforts caught national attention last fall, when President Reagan presented him with the prestigious Harmon Trophy. Trophy recipients include pilot Amelia Earhart and astronaut Neil Young.

That alone made up for the limitations and dangers inherent in his line of work, the pilot says, sitting in his small office papered with crayoned renditions of his chopper from schoolchildren.

"People have asked me is it worth it, not to go to a movie, not to get more than a few minutes from downtown, to always be carrying a beeper and a two-way radio," he said. "When I stood in front of the President, it was worth every hardship, freezing your a.. in the rain and snow, jumping in an icy river to pull somebody up — it's just a great feeling of accomplishment."

Foster takes in a six-figure salary because he has broken the mold of the pilot describing traffic jams on the freeway. He is a news reporter with almost instant access to a breaking story.

To ensure his availability, he sticks close to his red-white-and-blue Sky12 chopper. He lives three blocks from the KPNX-TV building and always stays within a 20-minute drive.

"You make a commitment to a television news helicopter, it's a full-time job. When I tell somebody I'm never more than 20 minutes away from the helicopter, I feel like I'm talking television stuff — but it's the truth," he says.

Foster's second wife, Vicki, 30 — "I'm a big fan," she says — enjoys helping him with his appointments and scheduling.

She has no illusions about his priorities and she says if they hadn't lived together for a year before marriage, "we probably wouldn't be together now. He couldn't take time to date."

Her husband admits his career destroyed his first marriage.

"The more I got into it, the more I wanted to prove that the helicopter and television are made for each other," he said. "So while I was cementing that marriage, the other marriage was going to hell."

Foster also acknowledges he is "a lot less educated than the people I work with." He "squeaked" through high school, graduating with a GED exam. And he said that may account for some hard feelings from better educated colleagues.

Bruce Erion, a protege of Foster who flies and reports for WXIA in Atlanta, said Foster "really did start the whole thing. He's more or less an institution."

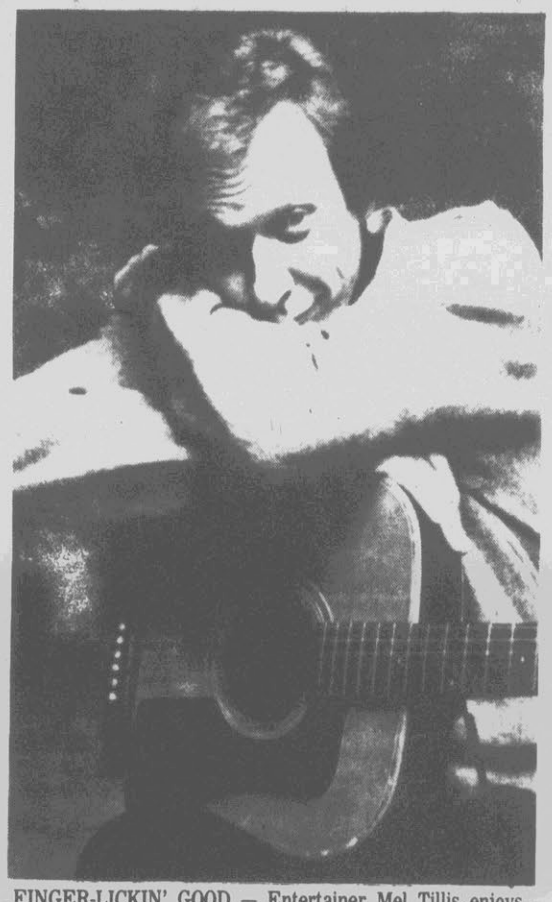

But Foster is more modest.

"I'm a guy who's in the right place at the right time. There are people in the news business and in helicopters very superior to me, but they don't have the combination."

Foster's reputation as a rescuer means he often gets the jump on his news competitors.

"I've had members of a newspaper call and raise all kinds of hell with a law enforcement agency because they called me," Foster added, saying the officials told the newspaper "buy a helicopter and we'll call you."

Officials often call Foster first to ask his help, because his chopper is faster than theirs, which are usually laden with more equipment.

Success Depends On 'If'

By KENNETH R. CLARK

UPI TV Reporter

NEW YORK (UPI) — Mersh Greenberg lives these days by the biggest little word in the English language, which is "if."

He will prosper if he can strike a movie deal with MTV — cable television's raucously popular "music channel." He will be a success if independent producers flock to his banner.

Greenberg and his associates in Silvercup Studios have something in the neighborhood of $50 million riding on that string of "ifs," and their goal is a big one.

They are out to take a sizeable chunk of the business of shooting television commercials, sitcoms, talk shows and various features for a program-starved cable industry away from Hollywood and bring it to New York. At the moment, they don't even have the tools with which to do the job.

Right now there are no Silvercup Studios. There are only the remains of the Silvercup Bakery that for years dominated the Long Island City skyline across the East River from Manhattan, where equivalent property values tend to be assessed by the square inch.

The bakery browned its last loaf of bread in 1975, leaving in place of its ovens and flour silos a vast, man-made cavern capable of housing nine state-of-the art sound stages plus 100,000 square feet of space for support and ancillary services.

Greenberg's office nestles in one tiny finished corner of the cavern. The rest will follow from completion of the first sound stage in mid-April through the next 12 months. He was torn between his blueprint for a dream and recognition of some very hard realities.

The blueprint takes in more than just the equivalent of Hollywood's vaunted sound stages and film facilities. It includes a 120-seat showcase theater where budding actors and actresses can test their skills, and where audience reaction to various productions can be gauged.

It includes facilities where Broadway producers can stage their own "backers' auditions" and the means by which a Broadway play might be pre-taped for posterity — and, incidently, cable television mileage — "when the New York Times finishes destroying it."

The hard realities are a suspicion that New York's well-muscled craft unions might object to that, and to Greenberg's plan to let cash-poor cable programmers use the facility after hours at cut rates.

What also is troublesome is the fact no one in modern times ever has built a nine-sound stage studio from scratch.

"We have feasibilitied ourselves into a coma," said Greenberg. "We have studied and factored, but the fact is we don't know what we're doing. We know how to build Warner's old studio and we know how to build ABC's present studio. But what we have to build is a 1995 studio in 1983.

"There's no logic to it — not that anyone in this business, including myself, uses logic as the basis for anything. If we did, this would be a shoe factory."

Because the Hollywood studios never will be threatened in their own turf, Greenberg said Silvercup will go after independent producers and cable programmers who cannot afford to pay up to $7,000 a recording session.

"It's a world of independents," he said. "We have to target the independents. We'll get the studios when we get their overflow, but if Paramount wants to make a film and they have room on their lot, they're not going to come here.

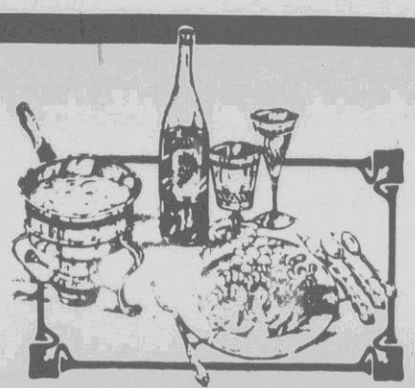

Unions, Greenberg said, will be dealt with as the need arises.

But Greenberg's greatest hope of success for Silvercup lies in two already proven triumphs — Sid Bernstein, who has been tapped to head the new studios' music division, and MTV.

Bernstein is the impressario who first brought the Beatles and the Rolling Stones to the United States. MTV is the cable channel that offers subscribers wall-to-wall rock, around the clock, in explosive, gyrating color.

Greenberg's vision is to turn MTV programming into a feature film.

"You put together 90 minutes of those (MTV presentations) — an hour and a half, which we're going to try to do — and announce the stars and we'll have kids fighting to get in," he said.

We give you the world on a silver platter.

a unique atmosphere, great food & terrific service, all at a reasonable price.

People Uprooted From Their Land

The Tennessee Valley Authority since its 1933 inception has built an empire of hydroelectric dams and recreation areas by uprooting people from their land.

The federal utility most recently exercised its powers of eminent domain in the Tellico Dam project in East Tennessee, when 340 lost a concerted effort to delay the project and were ordered off their landsin the 1960s and 1970s.

Before Tellico, there was TVA's Norris Dam project near the its headquarters in Knoxville, Tenn. TVA bought 153,000 acres of land and displaced 3,000 rural families from the Norris Basin in the 1930s.

The eviction of these people from their land, their resettlement and the socio-economic ramifications are the subjects of "TVA and the Dispossessed," a book by Michael J. McDonald and John Muldowny published by the University of Tennessee Press.

Norris Dam was TVA's first hydroelectric project and was named for Sen. George Norris of Nebraska, the "Father of TVA."

Folks in the Norris Basin were mostly farmers, and authors McDonald and Muldowny tell how some of the poor-but-proud people would load up their "eggs, chickens, butter, ginseng, 'possum hides, chestnuts" on wagons and take it to the market in Knoxville.

For about 40 pages the lives of the country folks are relived in vivid fashion. The authors interviewed many of the people on how life was happy back before the dam came along, and how unsettling it became when forced to leave their land.

The book later digresses, however, into a discussion of facts and figures about the people and the land.

There are dull statistics and tables on how much of the land was cleared, the population of the area, and the movement of farmers to cities as compared to their movement to other farms.

The authors conclude that TVA's policy of buying a huge chunk of land for Norris Dam aided its plans to develop electric power and recreation resources, but it did little for the needs of the displaced families.

The evicted people were supposed to be the "forgotten Americans" who would be aided by the development of a dam. But it turned out that the "social experiment" was a failure, mostly because TVA's leaders interpreted the aims of the agency's founding act differently.

"The end results of the resettlement program at Norris do not point to the existence of a viable planning structure, but rather to the lack of one," the authors write.

At $28.50, the book is not for the casual reader. It was written by two associate professors of history, and no doubt their book would be a fine tool for a student studying the history of one of the nation's most controversial federal agencies. Steve Holland (UPI)

Acquires First Editions

ECU NEWS BUREAU

The J. Y. Joyner Library of East Carolina University has acquired prized first editions of such literary works as "The Federalist," the "Song of Hiawatha," and "A Farewell to Arms" in a fine 175 volume collection of literature, history and poetry donated by lMrs. Elizabeth G. Ross of Washington, N.C.

The collection covers a wide variety of subjects, from Charles S. Stewart's account of a voyage to the South Seas in 1829-1830 to "Contageous Diseases of Domesticated Animals" (1880), and has an interesting history, Joyner Library officials said.

Mrs. Ross gave subject collections or individual items to several institutions. The gifts were part of 1,000 volume library which Mrs. Ross purchased at the estate auction of the late James McKimmon Saunders, Jr. of Washington, N.C. This library was a composite of books owned by the Saunders, Gallagher and Blakely families, containing strong holdings in the field of children's literature, religion and history.

The state historic site of Bath received a complete set of the Colonial Records of North Carolina edited by North Carolina Secretary of State William Laurence Saunders. This set originally belonged to another Secretary of State, John Bryan Grimes, whose brother gave it to James Saunders, a great nephew of the set's editor.

A large assortment of religious books dating to the early 1700s, once belonging to Lamote M. Balkely, editor of the Norfolk, Va., Ledger-Dispatch, was given to the Christian Medical Foundation of Tampa, Fla.

Mrs. Ross also augmented the holdings of the late George H. and Laura E. Brown Library in Washington, N.C.

The volumes donated to the Joyner Library are being processed, but may be examined by interested parties upon request to Mrs. Sallie Mann of the library's acquisitions department.

New Magazine for Washington

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Edmund T. (Buck) Buckman, chairman of the Tourist, Recreational and Cultural Development Council of the Washington Chamber of Commerce, has announced that the city of Washington will soon be publishing its own magazine.

"We are planning a slick, full-color publication ... that will create a positive, highly charged image of the unique qualities of our community both for newcomers and for ourselves," Buckman said.

The proposal for a Washington and Beaufort County magazine was presented to the chamber in December by Dr. Tom Williams, president of a Washington-based firm specializing in communications, public relations and publications.

Former editor and publisher of The New East and Tar Heel magazines, Williams is also the author of six books, including the recent "Tales of the Tobacco Country."

Writers and photographers from Washington, Beaufort County and surrounding areas are invited queries about their work or completed manuscripts for consideration. The address is: Williams & Co., 234 W. Main St., Washington, 27889. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for a reply on rates to be paid for written material and/or photographs.

Some of the types of material needed are: personality profiles, success stories, past and present history articles, brief how-to features, and a series of mini-features written by community leaders in all walks of life. A special need is for old photographs showing the area in past days.

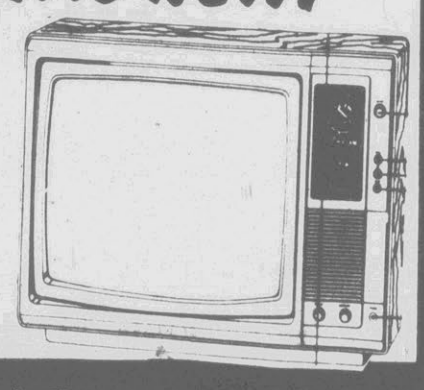

Plans call for a first printing of 5,000 copies with publication set for mid-May.

Built In 1893, The Structure Has Been Moved To The Eagles Museum

Winterville Depot Gets A New Lease On Life

Text By LaRue Evans

"All aboar-r-d," the conductor would sing. And with a toot of the whistle and a "chug chug" of the engine, the train would pull away from the station. But now the station itself has been pulled away, the one in Winterville, that is. Movers recently took the original portion of the structure to the Connor Eagles Museum located at the Pitt County Fairgrounds.

In 1840 a railroad, connecting the north with the south, began at Wilmington and ran to Wilson, Rocky Mount, and Weldon. During the Civil War it was known as the "lifeline of the Confederacy" because food and supplies, slipped past the blockade, were forwarded over this railroad to supply Lee's Army in Virginia. Then between 1882 and 1890 a splinter line of this railroad extended from Weldon eastward to Scotland Neck and Parmele, and it reached Greenville by 1889. In 1890 the railroad line reached Winterville. Ten years later the Wilmington and Weldon consolidated with the other lines in the East to become the Atlantic Coastline Railway.

But before the railroad reached Winterville, A.G. Cox had a flourishing business in the manufacture of cotton planters. Of course, when the train came through, he used it to ship his planters to the cotton-growing regions of the South, and this involved paperwork such as filling out bills of lading. To handle this, the railroad assigned a Mr. Pope as the first operator who did his work in a boxcar. In 1893 the railroad company built a combination passenger and freight depot and gradually added platforms for loading bales of cotton. The last addition was in 1946 when ACL built a 30 by 203 feet platform to accomodate all types of freight.

James (Jim) E. Green from Martin County came in 1910 to be the first official depot agent in Winterville, holding this post until his death in 1948. After Mr. Green's death Mrs. Nina Stockin (Worthington) served as agent until Atlantic Coastline no longer needed the depot. In 1973 Atlantic Coastline changed its name to Seaboard Coastline Railway.

The original depot had a door on the front with a partition down the center. This created two waiting rooms — one for blacks and one for whites. This partition was later removed and the door converted into a window.

Four trains came through each day — two going to Rocky Mount and two coming from Rocky Mount, and they transported the mail. Often there would be no passengers nor freight to go on the next train, so the agent would hang the outgoing mail on a hoop located near the tracks. As the train came through, the mail clerk would toss to the ground the bag of incoming mail and at the same time grab off the hoop the bag of outgoing mail — all completed without stopping.

One annual attraction was the arrival in the fall of a new school teacher. Word would spread that she was expected on the afternoon train, so the townspeople would gather at the depot to await her arrival. Standing in a group beside the tracks, they'd grow excited as they waited.

"Here it comes," someone might say as the train came into view. Then as it drew up to the station and stopped, the crowd became suspenseful.

"You reckon she's on it?" another would ask.

But then the door would open to the baggage car, and the baggage crew would lift out a trunk placing it on a dray. A drayman then pulled it over to the platform of the depot. The crowd knew then that the teacher was really on the train. Voices grew quiet and eyes focused on the steps to the passenger car.

The conductor appeared first. He'd place a stool on the ground beneath the bottom step of the train. Then the new teacher appeared, in hat and gloves, of course. Standing on the ground by the steps, the conductor extended his right hand upward to assist her as she stepped down. In a new and strange community, she stood there alone with the townspeople, staring and silent, arrayed before her. Then the chairman of the school board would step up. Tipping his hat, he approached her, offered his arm, and escorted her to his touring car to drive her to the teacherage.

Local citizens also rode the train. They rode to Kinston, or to Ayden for appointments with Dr. Riddick, the dentist. Some rode it to Norfolk, or to Portsmouth, that is. From Portsmouth they had to take the ferry to reach Norfolk. School teachers sometimes took entire classes of children to Rocky Mount and back. Faye Gaskins says that she rode on the train whenever she'd go to Dr. Hawes, a specialist in Greenville. Lucy Mae Worthington (Mrs. Lloyd Worthington) and her children, Elaine and Bert, would use it to visit Mrs. Worthington's mother who lived in Greenville. She described the train as dirty, mostly from soot. She also told of how the folks who ran the train looked after the welfare of their passengers. On one ride they took, a young boy had an epileptic seizure, and the conductor stopped the train to give the boy some assistance.

The days of the passenger trains made a colorful era. Even the uniforms of the conductors and porters contributed to the overall scene. Each wore a white shirt and a necktie with a coat and trousers of dark blue. The coat had brass insignias up the side of each sleeve cuff, on each corner of the coat collar, there was a gold watch fob and chain. The cap had a high crown and a stiff bill with the same brass insignias attached to the band that encircled the base of the crown.

It was the job of the conductor to help passengers off and usher others on, take up the tickets, and call out the name of the next town that the train was approaching. Captain George D. Hawkes and Captain James Shackleford Barr were two conductors who served on the Winterville line. Bill Moore was the porter and Mr. Ellington was the engineer. Captain Hawkes entered the service of ACL in 1885 as a baggage master and later became a conductor. Captain Barr, was on the job when he died in 1927. He had a heart attack while on the train, and ACL sent a special train with a doctor on it to render assistance. The last conductor to serve was Grover C. Andrews, for passenger service ended in the summer of 1942 when the automobile, airplane and truck changed the emphasis on the mode of travel in the local area.

In May 1968 the depot in Winterville ceased to function and July 15, 1981 marked the discontinuation of freight service to be conducted from the building.

Since then, the depot had slowly deteriorated. To preserve it for posterity, Connor Eagles purchased the structure from the Seaboard Railroad System, and arranged with J.W. Landen and Sons, house moving contractors, to move fifty feet of the original structure to the Connor Eagles Homestead and Museum located at the Pitt County American Legion Agricultural Fair. The depot was 160 feet in length, and the fifty foot portion on the opposite end is now for sale. The remainder, the middle portion, served as a source of material for the restoration and reconstruction of the depot in its new location. Unfortunately, vandals destroyed the original nameplate bearing the word WINTERVILLE that was mounted over the door of the depot.

But it's as Connor Eagles says about the Winterville depot building "... old things attract the eye." And in its new locale, it's another attraction salvaged from the architectural past of Pitt County.

IN ITS LATTER DAYS ... This photograph of the Winterville Depot was taken a couple of years before a decision was reached to sell the 90-year-old building so that it could be removed and relocated to a new site at the Connor Eagles Homestead at the Pitt County Fairgrounds. Brief Sermons On A Car's Body

Text & Photos

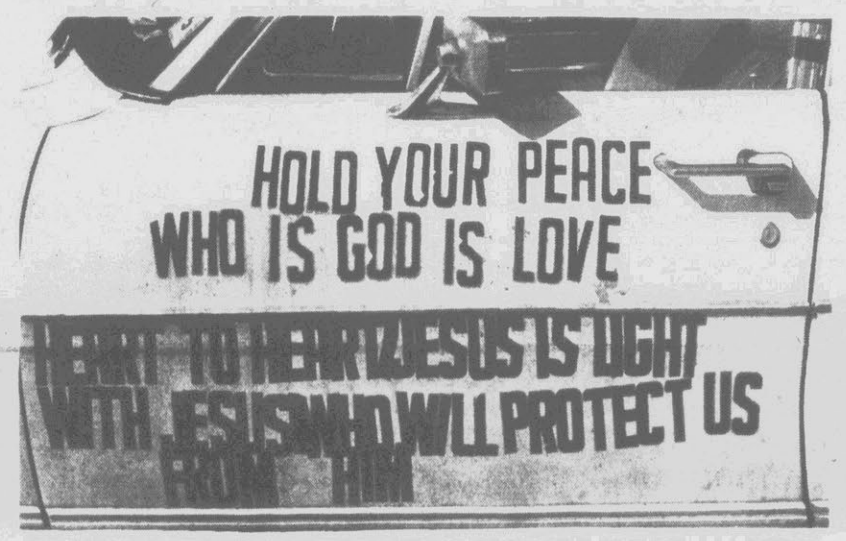

By Jerry Raynor

Perhaps it was out of gas, or the motor had malfunctioned. Whatever the reason it was left unattended, parked along a Pitt County paved rural road, the heavily lettered car carries an eye-catching wrap-around sermon on metal consisting of brief admonitions and declarations.

The messages are clear, vividly stated — words about love, Christian salvation, the perils posed by Satan.

The person or persons responsible for affixing more than a hundred letters needed to spell out their thoughts on the car's body obviously worked from conviction and love. Adhesive letters of the type commonly used on mailboxes were utilized for the task.

Over the centuries, many means of spreading the Christian gospel have been employed — in carved stone, on the written page, over airwaves, and by word of mouth. While this particular example of a visual sermon is not unique, it is not often that a motorized sermon in metal is encountered.

ON THE DRIVER'S SIDE AND THE REAR ... of the car, two of the longer admonitions have been pasted onto the car's metal. A WITN-TV sticker proclaiming "We're Livin' It Up" seems a bit incongruous.

THE MOTORIZED SERMON CAR ... carries slogans on all parts of the car except the front fenders, the hood and the top. The car was parked alongside a rural paved road in Pitt County near the Bethel-Stokes highway when these photographs were taken.

Program Offers Alternative Justice For Courts

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — It is an unusual arrangement that links a convicted drug dealer with a severely handicapped 59-year-old man, or matches a 15-year-old reckless driver with a group of elderly citizens whose favorite pastime is playing bingo.

But the arrangement is working in Buncombe County. Backers say it is improving the lives of the less fortunate and turning around the lives of those who may have been headed for trouble with the law. It is also saving taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The arrangement is part of a relatively new organization called Buncombe Alternatives Inc., which works with the North Carolina court system to find alternative punishment for non-violent offenders who otherwise might be sentenced to prison.

Since October, the organization has saved North Carolina taxpayers nearly half a million dollars and has given Asheville and Buncombe County more than $22,000 in community service performed by program participants.

The agency also is enriching lives in ways that cannot be measured with dollar figures.

E.G. Sawyer, who has multiple handicaps and cannot speak, had resigned himself to a life of lonely hours with only his television and cigarettes for company. Since August, his life has been brightened by a 29-year-old convicted drug dealer who cooks, cleans and shops for him and spends hours each week just keeping him company.

Former drug dealer "Sandy," in turn, says she now has a new friend who has given her life more meaning. And a drug-education course she was required to take after her conviction "opened my eyes," she said.

"This has opened up a whole new side of me, and I'm thinking about going to school and starting a career that will mean something," she said.

Sawyer grinned and picked up a tattered card containing the letters of the alphabet, which he uses to convey his thoughts to Sandy by pointing to letters to form words that in turn form sentences.

"He can sure get his point across," Sandy said, as Sawyer laughed robustly at a joke he had just told through his alphabet card. "The first two weeks the card about drove me bats, but we do pretty well now."

Russell, 15, was brought to Buncombe Alternatives in January after being charged with driving without an operator's license, failure to heed a blue light, excessive speed and reckless driving.

"I was petrified," he said, describing his first encounter with the law.

He was placed in a holding cell at the adult jail and his future seemed bleak.

Instead, Russell was "sentenced" to the Brentwood Hills Nursing Center, where he soon discovered that the elderly patients were "starved for affection."

"I'd play bingo with a whole group of them, and pretty soon they all knew my name and I started learning their names and they'd tell me their problems," he said. "It made me feel pretty good to know I was making them feel better."

Russell had until March 3 to finish his 50 hours of community service work at Brentwood, but he spent so much extra time at the center that he finished his required hours a month ahead of time — and plans to continue going to the center voluntarily.

Among the organizations that have been served by the agency's clients are the Nature Center, Deerfield retirement home, child development agency, Flynn Home, the health department, Brown's Temple Day Care Center, Irene Wortham Center, Pack Library, YMCA and Asheville-Buncombe Community Christian Ministry.

Police Officer Played Role Of Shady Crook

By BILL CRIDER
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Lester Williams was a laid back crook with a southern drawl, a .38 in a shoulder holster and good connections to high rollers with big bucks.

"He was the kind of guy who could set up big deals," said State Police Lt. Michael A. Bryan.

The lieutenant ought to know. He played the undercover role of Lester around New Orleans for 14 years.

But today we bury Lester. His cover was blown, he is no more. He had to be sacrificed in a Nassau County, N.Y., police operation that uncovered $.7 million worth of stolen paintings.

The paintings, and some silver, were stolen by three masked bandits who broke into a mansion at Sands Point, Long Island, on April 13, 1982, and carted off 23 pieces of artwork, including a $400,000 Picasso and a Monet valued at almost $600,000.

As the bandits should have known, selling such identifiable loot is not easy. Three months after the robbery, holders of the loot were still looking for a buyer.

Word trickled down to Lester.

"I got it first from a rich real estate man in Mississippi," Lt. Bryan recalled recently.

"He called and said, 'Hey, for what it's worth, word is out on the Gulf Coast that there is a load of art for sale at 12½ percent on the dollar."

Lester went around to a shady lady he knew. "I hear you got something going," he said. She was glad to see him. She was looking for potential buyers. Her reward for finding one would be a nice "finder's fee." She produced a detailed list of paintings, including measurements and names of the artists.

"She even had a Polaroid picture," said Bryan. "Somebody propped the paintings up against a wall and made a photograph."

Bryan put the list on national police teletype to see if anyone knew about them and Nassau County Police popped right back by long distance telephone.

In the sting operation that resulted, Lester was an indispensable man. The shady lady told him to check into a certain Long Island motel and a man named George would contact him.

George turned out to be George Haag, 57, of Ridgewood, Long Island. Bryan said Haag used to rob banks for a living but, having served time on those enterprises, now prefers to study law.

Lester arrived in style, by private plane. His accouterments included a borrowed diamond ring that looked as big as a golf ball. He told George he knew nothing about art, was mistrustful on the subject, and so had brought along his own $600-a-day art expert — actually an FBI agent whose speciality is art.

George kept in touch by telephone but cautiously stalled on dealing. Lester threatened to fly home. George then admitted he was having the shady lady flown to New York to make sure Lester really was Lester. Ah, one must laugh, eh?

It all came to a head on July 15, 1982, in a motel dining room. Lester was eating breakfast when Haag walked in with two women from New Orleans. The women pointed Lester out and left, mission accomplished. No longer suspicious, Haag joined Lester at the table.

Actually, in addition to talking to a State Police lieutenant from Louisiana, Haag was smack in the middle of a sizeable Nassau police operation.

"They had up to 30 people there," said Bryan. "The businessmen and airline pilots at neighboring tables were police. The busboys were police. I've been in this business a long time and I know what a good operation looks like. They put on a fine operation."

A helicopter lingered over the area, just in case. Radios crackled.

ASK OMAR

Q.—We play a five-card major system, which means that we open a prepared minor when we hold a major suit of only four cards. The trouble is that we open the "better minor." That has raised considerable problems. It is clear which minor is better when you hold A-K-x in one and Q-x-x in the other. But which should you open when you hold A-J-x in one and K-Q-x in the other, for example? We would appreciate your help.—H. Nelson, Silver Spring, Md.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—It is because of problems like this that few expert pairs open the better minor. There is no difficulty when one minor is longer than the other—open the longer suit. A second rule to remember is never open a two-card suit.

That leaves only two cases at issue: 1) where you have two three-card minors, and 2) where you have two four-card minors.

It really doesn't matter what you elect to do, as long as you are consistent. Personally, I like to open one club when I have two three-card minors and one diamond when I have two four-card minors. I believe that most experts use this method, and it has one obvious advantage—whenever you open one diamond, you will usually have at least a four-card suit. Thus you will have one fewer artificial bid to worry about, and partner will feel free to raise your diamond suit in a competitive auction.

You will note that I said you will usually have a four-card suit when you open one diamond. There is one holding where you will have only three diamonds but will be forced to open the bidding with one diamond nevertheless. It is that rare hand in which you hold four cards in each major, three diamonds and only two clubs.

Q.—One point always vexes me—how do you evaluate insufficiently guarded honors? —L. Silverman, Bronx, N.Y.

A.—You do not know whether a singleton honor, or a doubleton queen, for that matter, is going to be a working value or not when you first evaluate your hand. A simple method is the following:

Count either the honor's high-card value or distributional value, whichever is the higher. Thus a singleton king is worth 3 points; a singleton jack is worth 2 points, as is a doubleton or singleton queen. However, a singleton ace is worth 6 points and a doubleton king 4. Neither is insufficiently guarded.

Accessories Can Make Difference

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

New York interior designer Bebe Winkler recently pulled up to a client's home in Rye with a truck full of furniture and accessories.

The startled woman was alarmed to notice that the accessories took up far more room than the furniture. But Ms. Winkler calmed her client by explaining that when the truck returned to New York most of the accessory items would be on it. The point of her story is that "even an experienced designer can't just see something in a store and know it is perfect for a room. No matter how experienced you are, you still have to experiment.

If that is true for the professional, it goes double for the nonprofessional do-it-yourself decorator. The way to get the accessories right is to practice putting combinations together and stand back and see if they work, said the designer.

"Of course, you can't do that if you don't have enough to choose from," she added, noting that her idea of an ideal client is one who asks that at least two items be selected for every spot so that she can change off from time to time. Ideally, she thinks you ought to rearrange things every six months or so just to keep yourself and others interested.

As the finishing touches that perform the same function for a room that jewelry and makeup provide for the appearance, accessories ought to occupy more thought than they do, she said. Not only do they complete a room and lend it personality, warmth and color, their placement also can serve to emphasize the room's best features, subtly eliminating from notice those areas not quite up to snuff.

There are only a few decorating rules that apply to the arrangement of accessories. Furthermore, these rules are often successfully ignored by those with a good eye and an interest in creating a novel interior. The rules that do exist largely center around the idea that objects used together should be compatible in proportion and mood. They don't have to be the same size but the accessories should relate to one another in bulk and scale.

You should not try to put a tiny lamp on top of a large sofa table or to crowd a bunch of large objects onto a few shelves, for example. Another guideline that usually produces good results is to group the accessories in odd numbers instead of even — threes and fives instead of twos and fours.

Even though you may be all thumbs when it comes to arranging a tabletop or wall display, you can improve your eye for an attractive design with practice. Use your own home as a laboratory. Home decorating magazines and books can supply a source for new ideas.

You may also get ideas at a friend's home or in the displays at home furnishings stores. Study the source closely to see exactly how a table is set, a sofa festooned with pillows, a mantelpiece decorated.

As a rule, most nonprofessionals err on the side of timidity, says Ms. Winkler. They choose items that are too small and insignificant, then use too many of them together in an effort to make up in bulk what is lacking in drama and originality.

"When choosing between two accessories which are about the same, always opt for the larger one and you are unlikely to go wrong," she says.

A single piece of sculpture on a pedestal in front of a window or next to an arrangement of plants is a much stronger and more vital decorative touch than a whole collection of small items, adds Barbara Taylor Bradford, a decorating authority.

As a rule, displays of disparate objects fall flat. You usually need a unifying theme to tie it all together. The theme might be color — all the items in the same or related colors. Or, it might be function — a group of perfume bottles or teapots.

Too many accessories on display leads to visual confusion. Sometimes, an immediate improvement is made by simply packing half the items away out of sight. Then in a few months, the things that have been put away are recycled for display and those you've tired of looking at are put away.

Q. Will grass and weed seeds placed in a compost pile remain viable and germinate when I use the compost? (L.L., Gibson)

A. Most grass and weed seeds will be killed by the heat that develops when leaves, clippings and other compost materials go through fermentation. Some hard seed, such as morning glory, will come through alive, but most will be dead.

Q. Is it too late to have my garden soil tested for nematodes? My garden is about a quarter acre in size. (E.P., Kinston)

A. No. The fall would have been a better time, but you can have a nematode assay made up to planting time. Just don't try to collect your samples when the soil is frozen or too wet to work.

Collect your sample from 10 to 15 sitesint he garden. Avoid the top inch of soil and then draw your samples from the next six to eight inches. Place the soil in a plastic bag, keep moderately cool and mail to Agronomic Division, Nematode Advisory Section, N.C. Department of Agriculture, Blue Ridge Road, Raleigh, N.C. 27611. There is a $1 professing fee for each sample.

Q. Is there any reason why I cannot grow either type of redwood tree in this area? (T.G., Efland)

A. The two redwood or sequoia species, redwood (Sequoia sempevirons) and big tree (Sequoia gigantea) require abundant moisture, deep, well-drained soils and mild climate. Their native range is pretty much imited to areas where heavy summer fogs provide a humid atmosphere. Is isn't likely that either of these species would thrive in your area.

A tree that closely resembles the redwoods, the dawn redwood (Metasequoia glytostroboides), has grown extremely well in a few isolated plantings in North Carolina. Also, the native baldcypress (Taxodium distichum) is fairly similar to the redwoods and grows well when planted out of the swampy areas.

Q. When is the best time to take cuttings for rooting apple trees?

A. It is not a good idea to root cuttings of apples. It is best to graft the apple tree, using a water sprout. Do this during the dormant season just prior to new growth.

Q. — Is there an easy way to remove white paint from the bricks on the front of our house? We think it would look better if the bricks were red.

A. — There not only is no easy way, but it can be such a major job that trying to remove the paint is not recommended. It can be sandblasted, which would have to be done by a professional company, or taken off with a paint remover, which is a chore to end all chores, but your best bet is to leave it the way it is or paint over it. Yes, it probably would look better in the natural color, but some people apparently don't think so.

Q. — We have moved into a new house. When we began to gather things from the old house, we discovered several pieces of luggage kept in the basement had developed a slight mildew. We washed them with soap and water and dried them thoroughly. Now we keep the luggage upstairs and don't expect to have the same trouble, but just to be sure, is there anything we can do to prevent future mildew from attacking the bags?

A. — You probably have corrected the trouble, but wipe the luggage with denatured alcohol, using a clean cloth and not saturating it. Dry it where there is a movement of air — near an electric fan, if necessary. Waxing it will help to prevent another case of mildew. Remember, mildew flourishes where it is damp, warm and poorly aired.

Q. — I want to build a free-standing, cedar closet in my attic. Anything special I should know?

A. — The Aromatic Red Cedar Closet Lining Manufacturers Association describes such a project in this manner: "Start by making a 'foundation' of 2-by-4 lumber nailed together on edge. To this nail, in order, the floor, side, back side, ceiling — all ¾th-inch exterior plywood. To support low-cost hollow-core doors, install a 2-by-4 at each side of the closet front. You can use plywood doors and eliminate front posts, but manufactured doors are less likely to warp. Line the closet with aromatic red cedar, applying pieces in random lengths, horizontally, for a pleasing effect. Also, cover the ceiling and floor with the same wood.

Before hanging doors, cover them with red cedar also, using nails and a new cartridge-type adhesive, since the surface of a hollow-core door is very thin. Finally, add a cedar shelf and the clothes rod centered between doors and back. Add magnetic catches to keep the doors closed. Insure an airtight closet by installing stripping around the doors. Add fascia as required. Finish the doors and closet exterior, but not the interior."

A personal postscript is that the fumes or aroma exuding from the wood would be sealed in and thus ineffective if the inside of the closet were finished with anything. This is something to be remembered years later if you feel inclined to use a sealer or other finish on the wood. Resist the urge. Instead, go over the wood with sandpaper or steel wool, which not only will give it a new appearance, but open the pores to release the aroma.

Q. Every time the faucet in our kitchen sink is turned off, there is a loud noise, almost as though someone were hitting the pipe with a hammer. Whjat is causing this and how can we fix it? Or is a job for a plumber.

A. It appears to be caused by air in the plumbing system. Either some air chambers are needed or one or more of those already there are filled with water.

Try shutting off the main valve and opening all th faucets. Close the faucets and turn on the main valve. Test to see whether noise is till there.

If it is, a pluber is needed to determined whether the air chambers of air cushions are defective and need replacing or whether some additional ones are required.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, stain, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," available by sending 50 cents and long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know How

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

From various sources come these bits of information of interest to the home owner:

Gaining increasing attention among house developers and lenders is the practice of public auctions to sell houses. This method has been around a long time but recently began to pick up steam.

Gordon Greene, president of Chicago-based Real Estate Auctions Inc., one of the few companies specializing in this field on a national basis, says prospective buyers get an opportunity to inspect the properties prior to the auction and are pre-qualified to determine if their incomes are sufficient to support mortgages on the auctioned houses.

Most of the title hazards which the purchaser of a house faces are fairly commonplace, but some are not. Listen to this tangle told by Robert Dawson, president of Lawyers Title Insurance Corp. of Richmond, Va. In Florida, a single man who wanted to buy a house "borrowed" a wife to sign the legal papers because a real estate broker told him his chance of obtaining credit would be better if he were married. The assumed wife was married to another man. She signed many legal papers. Everything got real complicated, but it really exploded when the buyer defaulted on his mortgage payments and moved to another city.

Rock salt or sodium chloride is a type of chemical popular for its ability to melt ice. It penetrates ice and forms a brine solution that breaks the bond between ice and pavement. But Henry Kirchner, a technical specialist for Dow Chemical Co., says it is not as effective as calcium chloride pellets for melting ice. He has produced a pile of statistics intended to prove his point, but it will be interesting to see how the supporters of sodium chloride react to his view.

The former Henry J. Kaiser estate on the west shore of Lake Tahoe in the Sierra Nevada mountains was the primary filming site for the second of the "Godfather" movies. Soon it will fill another role. More than 20 chateau-style houses are being built there. The area has everything, including a long list of summer and winter sports. But you had better not think about it as a possible site for your next home unless you are a millionaire and then some. The prices begin at more than $1.5 million.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much helpful information in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

Life Has Been Frustrating Since Mechanic Took His Ride In UFO

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — For the past five years, life has been one frustration after another for Bill Hermann.

He feels the fear and terror that swept over him when he rode in a flying saucer and spoke to the saucer drivers should have been enough. He doesn't need the pervasive disbelief that seems to surround him now.

Hermann, 30, a diesel mechanic by trade and church custodian of necessity, recently ruminated over what has happened since March 1978, when he rode his first UFO.

"I'd never been interested in science fiction. I thought that was all hogwash. Garbage. But I've had two contact experiences and 15 sightings of UFOs, and I've also investigated 40 sightings statewide."

Hermann first saw the saucer hanging around his neighborhood in late 1977 and early '78, and he wasn't alarmed. At first, he thought it was some sort of secret military aircraft flying out of nearby Charleston Air Force Base.

When it flew low near his home in North Charleston one March evening, he went outside and walked toward it for a closer look.

"It dropped, and I was scared," he said in a hushed tone. "A green light came up around me. I was disoriented. At my feet there was an orange circle of light ...."

When he became reoriented, he was on an examining table inside the UFO. He distinctly remembers the craft was a molded metal, two-decked contraption about 70 feet in diameter and 25 feet high. The inhabitants were about 4½ feet tall, Hermann remembers, "and looked like human fetuses."

They spoke English with no accent and told him not to be afraid, but that didn't help much. "I had this horrible fear."

The UFO crew callously referred to him as a "subject" and said that he, along with certain other earthlings, had been chosen for their experiments. They anticipated his questions, and they spoke without moving their lips.

Hermann came to later that niight in Summerville, nearly 20 miles away.

The second ride was somewhat similar but much less scary.

"It was a 3½-hour trip down to Florida and back. We flew over an orange grove and over the (Kennedy) space center. I remember looking down through some kind of monitor at the faces of people looking up at us."

His visitors told him they were from Zeta Reticuli. ("There is such a star," says Lee Shapiro, director of the University of North Carolina's Morehead Planetarium.)

"That's a solar system 32 light years from here," Hermann said. "They said I'll see them again, but I haven't. Not that I'm looking for them. December 1982 was my last sighting. But I won't be afraid next time."

Word of Hermann's visitors got around, as word of such things will, and in no time he'd made television and newspapers. That's when the real troubles started.

He began getting harassing letters and phone calls. Then threatening calls. "Some people fear the unknown. They think you're some kind of threat."

People began to follow him, he said, and the most threatening thing was when two men tried to run him off the road.

The fact that he lost his job as a diesel mechanic was unrelated, he emphasized. "My company had to cut back because of the economy, and I was one of several that got laid off."

On the positive side, retired Air Force Lt. Col. Wendelle Stevens of Tucson did report Hermann's encounters with the extraterrestrials in exhaustive detail in a hardback book. Hermann says 5,000 copies of the $17 book have been sold.

So, Hermann counts his blessings. He has a job. The publicity has pretty much died down. Most people accept him. "I've gone through all kinds of medical batteries, and I don't have any radiation or side effects. And no implants, like one woman got."

Life As It's Lived

By GAIL MICHAELS

I've always been led to believe that a child who is subjected to too many changes at one time becomes insecure. Zachary, however, seems not to have heard this.

His move to a big bed and his sudden adoption of civilized toileting techniques have resulted in a surge of self-confidence so mammoth in nature that his nursery school teacher and I are ready to flay him.

I realize that this is not an appropriate response. But remaining on good terms with a pompous 2-year-old would try the patience of a far holier mother than I. Zachary actually swaggers when he walks. And the daily chores of motherhood, exhausting under the best of cirsumstances, have become a series of confrontations.

No longer am I allowed to dress him or to brush his teeth. He alone must squirt "Crust" liberally on and around his toothbrush to insure that his tongue remains cavity-less. He alone must select his outfit (a striped shirt and a Big Bird print pants are a typical combination), and he must pull them on, usually backwards twisted to an almost correct position.

Suddenly, he hates help of all kinds, including kisses for real or imaginary injuries. Formerly, I even had to "kiss it and make it well" when I was the one who inflicted the pain. But the last time I swatted him, he glared at me and provided his own solace.

"Bless my heart," he crooned while rubbing the point of impact.

Naturally, his sister was no help. "You call that a spanking?" she said with disgust.

Zachary turned on her fiercely. "You hush your mouth!"

In a household filled with provocation, his primary source of irritation is my continuing effort to phase out positive reinforcement for potty training. He has no intention of letting me get away with such a dastardly villainy. His pride in his achievement seems inextricably linked to the amount of chocolate with which his exertions are rewarded.

No other kind of reward satisfies him. When I tried to substitute Granola Snacks, he turned up his nose and said, "That's kitty food."

Of course, the cat prefers chocolate, too. The other morning after I had finished showering and dressing, I walked into the kitchen to find the two of them partaking of the Reese's Pieces which covered the table and the floor.

"Zachary Michaels," I said ominously.

"I went to the potty," he explained. "All by myself," he added. "Without you."

I started to pick up the candy. "I'm proud of you for that, but I don't want you climbing on the counters and getting things out of the cabinets anymore, do you hear?"

"But I needed them! They're mine!" He stamped his foot and crunched three of his self-administered rewards into the floor.

Again I was caught without any appropriate response. I guess the sages are right. A little learning really can be a dangerous thing.

Carter Points To Museum In Hometown

By SCOTT SHEPARD
Associated Press Writer

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) - Former President Jimmy Carter disappointed some officials in Sumter County when he decided to build his presidential library in Atlanta rather than in his hometown.

But their disappointment has turned to enthusiasm now that Carter has indicated to them that his library plans include the possible construction of a presidential museum in Plains.

Shortly after Carter vacated the White House in 1981, local officials met with the former president to discuss where he intended to build his library.

"Naturally, we asked him to locate the library in his hometown, like other former presidents have," Sumter County Chamber of Commerce President David Wansley said in a recent interview.

"And naturally, we were disappointed when he decided to locate the library in Atlanta."

Georgia Southwestern College in nearby Americus also made a bid for the Carter library, college president William Capitan said.

"We wanted to make the campus available," Capitan said, noting that the college's library already houses memorabilia from Carter's term as governor of Georgia from 1971 to 1974.

"But we didn't fight for the library tooth and nail," Capitan added. "He (Carter) said he wanted the library in an area where there was a higher concentration of scholars and that seemed reasonable."

Wansley said Carter chose Atlanta because he wanted his library to be "more accessible to scholars."

Since then, however, the former president has indicated he would like to see a presidential museum in Plains as a "kind of annex" to the planned library in Atlanta, Wansley said.

"At this point, it's just a concept," he said. "He's thinking in terms of a museum of his life, a place to display the memorabilia of his presidency and his governorship."

Carter's first priority, however, is completion of the library in Atlanta, after which the former president will turn his attention to the museum, the chamber of commerce executive said.

"At this point, there's nothing we can do but wait for further word from Mr. Carter," he added.

The design and location of the museum "depends a lot on the wishes of President Carter and the people of Plains," he said.

"We've talked with President Carter about a number of possibilities — converting the train depot or the old school building into a museum, building a new building or possibly obtaining the state's welcome center for use as a museum," Wansley said.

"Whatever is decided, the facility should befit a president."

There's "no doubt that a museum in Plains would give a boost to tourism in our area," Wansley said.

In the heyday of the Carter presidency, about 10,000 tourists each month visited Plains, which has only about 900 residents, Wansley said. Since Carter's defeat for re-election in 1980, the flow of tourists through Plains has dropped to less than 100 a month, he added.

Funeral Director Spent His Time With Presidents

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — He has gone camping with Walter Mondale, looked for arrowheads with Jimmy Carter, snow skied with Gerald Ford and was in the White House the night before Richard Nixon resigned.

He has tossed down beers with Carter's brother, Billy, at his once-famous Plains, Ga., gas station and has drawn blood from Watergate whistle blower John Dean for his marriage license.

Larry McWhirter, a 41-year-old former naval hospital corpsman and now a funeral home director, was in the presidential entourage when Sara Jane Moore fired a bullet at Ford in San Francisco.

After eight years with the Navy, McWhirter was assigned during the Lyndon Johnson presidency in 1966 as a corpsman to Camp David, the presidential retreat in the Maryland countryside.

"President Johnson didn't care much for Camp David," McWhirter said. "The only reason he ever came was because Lady Bird liked it."

He said Nixon "came up a lot because he could get away from the press."

McWhirter, who served as a backup for the presidential physician, left Camp David in 1970 for a tour in Germany and returned to the U.S. two years later to be assigned "administrative aide to the physician to the president."

Of the four presidents and vice presidents he served during his years at Camp David and the White House, McWhirter said his favorite was Ford.

"He was a remarkable man, and I got to know him and his family really well," he said. "When he was vice president, I traveled with the Fords quite often, especially to Vail (Colo.). The whole family was down to earth and went out of its way to make me feel comfortable."

He said he remembers the day an attempt was made on Ford's life.

"We were leaving the hotel and I had just gotten on the press bus when I heard the shot," he said. "It scared me to death. I didn't know for sure that he had not been shot until we passed the cutoff point to the hospital which I had done the advance preparations on."

McWhirter said he was assigned to Carter shortly after the former Georgia governor defeated Ford in 1976.

"He was a nice man, one-on-one, but he was more reserved than Ford," McWhirter said. "Also, the whole thing was new to him after the election. He couldn't get used to having to tell the Secret Service every time he wanted to walk down to peanut warehouse or somewhere."

McWhirter said Mondale as vice president "liked to camp out and really get away from it all, get away to some place that didn't have a telephone."

That, he said, was when he realized the heavy responsibility he carried.

"It can be pretty worrisome to be with the vice president of the United States, responsible for him medically, and be nine miles from a telephone and 50 miles from a hospital," McWhirter said. "It's the closest I'll ever come to getting an ulcer."

For Week Of March 6 - March 12, 1983

Thomas Still Seeks New Image

HOLLYWOOD — This week (March 7), Richard Thomas stars in a TV movie about a country singer whose personality and individuality is stifled by the memory of a legendary father.

It was a project he had a special feeling for: It's six years since he stepped off the TV treadmill that was "The Waltons," but in spite of critical raves for outings in other roles, he's still "John-Boy" to most Americans.

Richard told me he could have had no ruder a reminder of the Walton on his back than his first encounter with Hank Williams Jr., the performer he plays in this week's NBC movie "Living Proof: The Hank Williams Jr. Story."

He said: "Hank admitted he was appalled at the idea of John-Boy playing him. I told him I'd be uncomfortable playing the role without his approval, and pointed out to him that his epic struggle to establish an image independent of his father was pretty much the same as I'm going through.

"He understood that sometimes I feel the only way I'm going to shake off John-Boy is to become an ax murderer."

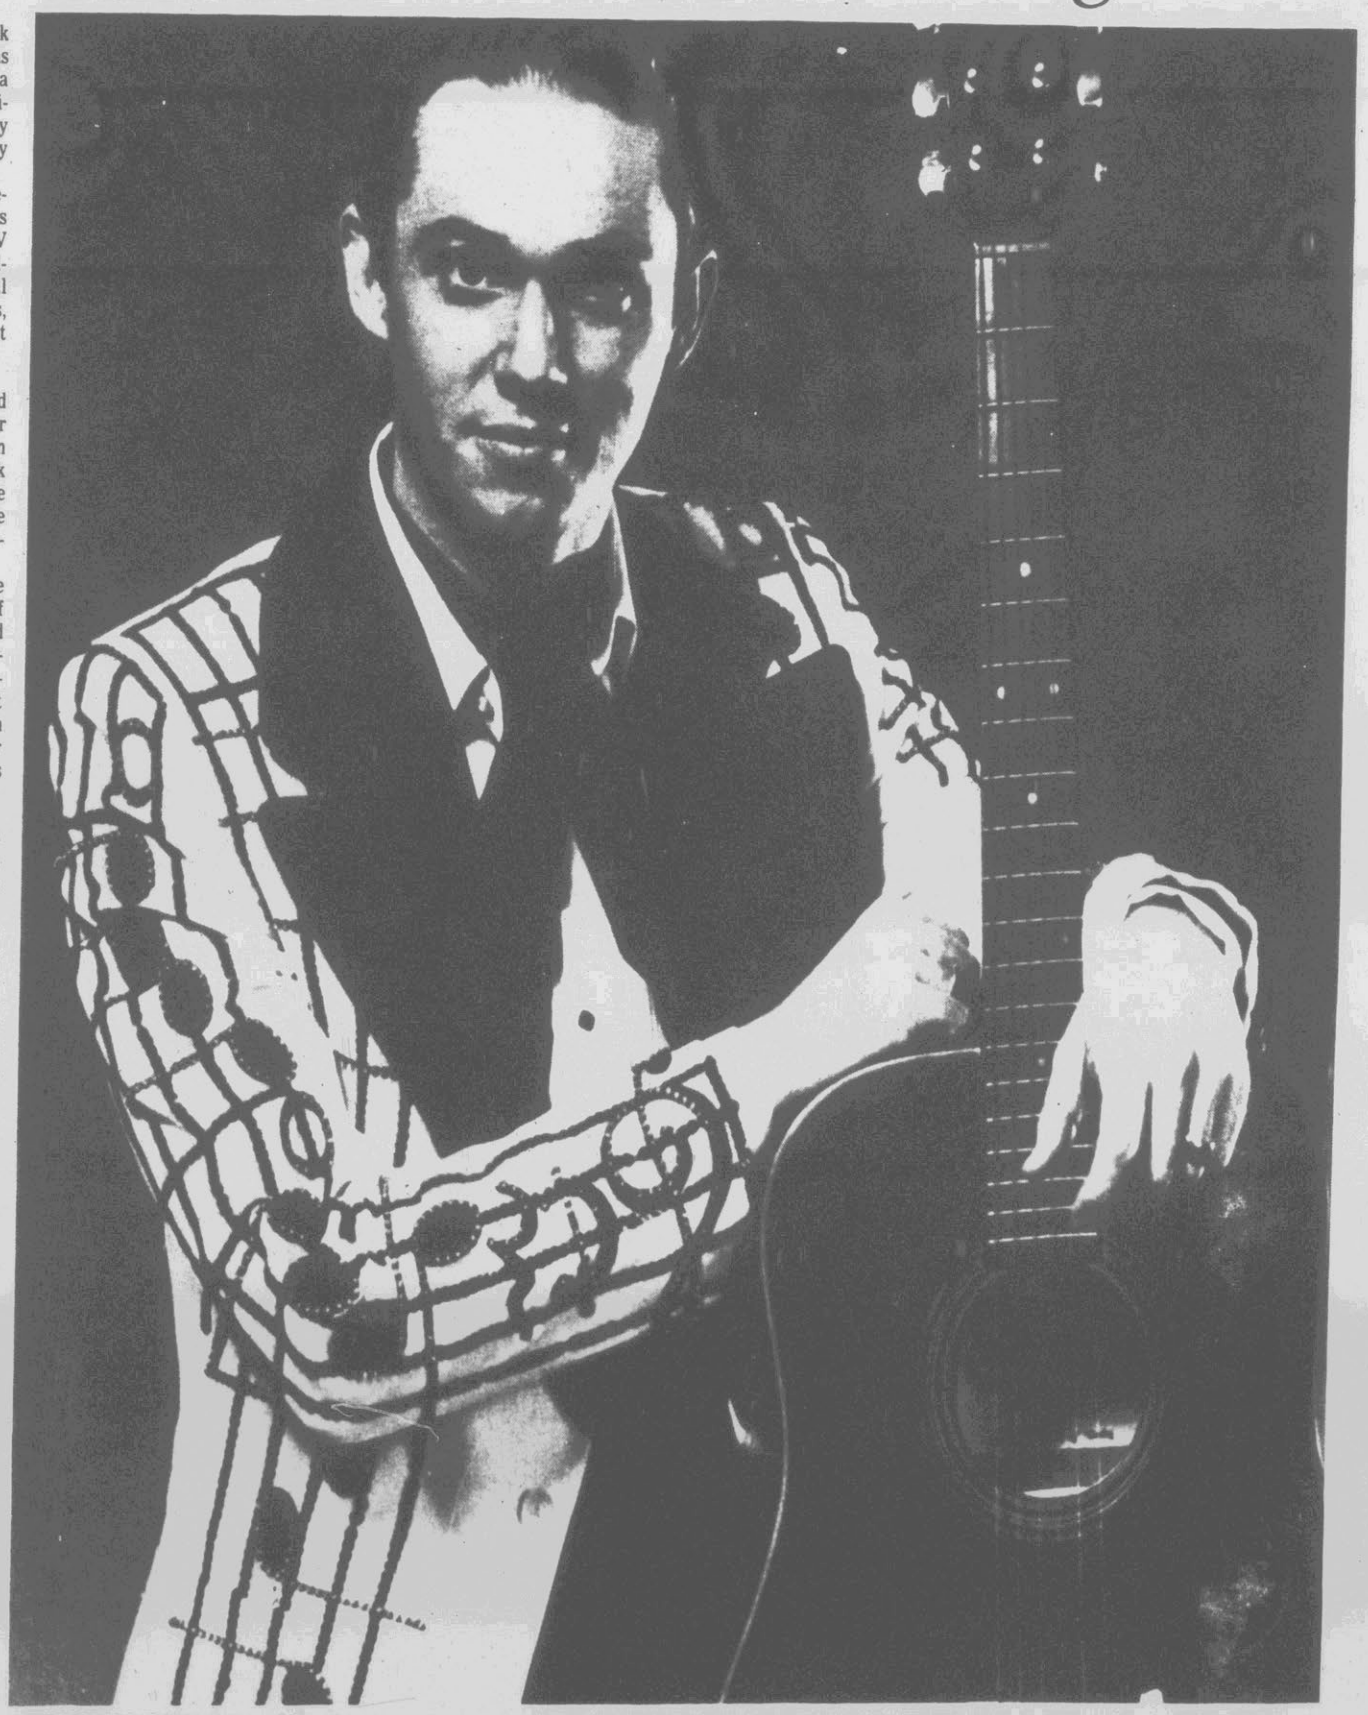

His initial reservations squashed, Williams did all he could to help Thomas recreate his desperate — and almost fatal — struggle to prove to the country-and-western world that he was more than just his father's son.

Instead of an ax, Thomas uses a guitar and a microphone to demonstrate musical talents that John-Boy had to keep hidden. He's a much-published poet and a dancer, too, and "Living Proof" is his first crack at producing a movie, nursing it from first draft to final cut.

Said Richard: "I can understand the public hanging me on a hook and refusing to let me off it, but the industry really should know better."

Brian Kerwin was a soldier with a yellow streak in "The Blue and the Gray," and he contracts a social disease in an upcoming ABC movie, which until recently was a contender for least attractive film title of the year.

Then someone decided that "Lovesick: The Herpes Story" might send viewers racing for that dial, and the film became "Intimate Agony."

RICHARD THOMAS stars and performs several musical numbers in "Living Proof: The Hank Williams Jr. Story," a drama about the young man who overcame living in the shadow of his folk hero father and a near-fatal accident before becoming an established star in his own right. The film will air Monday, March 7 (9-11 p.m.) on NBC.

Hirsch Is Busy

During the "Taxi" series' hiatus, Judd Hirsch will be co-starring with Martin Balsam in the movie version of Herb Gardner's play "The Goodbye People."

Devil Made Him Do It

"The Demon Murder Case," a tale of alleged demon possession of an 11-year-old boy and the circumstances surrounding his family's agonized involvement during rites of exorcism, will air on NBC's Sunday Night at the Movies, March 6 (9-11 p.m.).

In the film, young Brian Frazier (Charlie Fields) begins to exhibit frightening signs of alleged demon possession after he sees a vision of what he terms "The Beast." When the boy continues to display inhuman feats of strength and make agonizing threats and unworldly sounds — even after the rites of exorcism — Kenny Miller (Kevin Bacon), his sister's boyfriend, admonishes the demons to "take him on instead."

This bold challenge results in terrifying circumstances for Kenny, who, after seeing several visions of "The Beast" and experiencing a brush with death, stabs his girlfriend's employer.

"I usually play crazies, drug addicts or alcoholics, so it was a nice change to play a guy who is normal, at least for the majority of the film," said Bacon, who recently scored a critical success in the film "Diner."

"The Demon Murder Case" turned into an emotionally draining experience for Bacon — as it was for many other members of the cast.

"I was acting something I had never experienced," he said. "It's true that you don't have to kill to play a murderer, but in dealing with possession there are so many unknown factors that it's difficult to make it work. I've never had an experience with ESP, instead. I think many of those feelings are simply coincidence — but I also have to say that I don't not believe it. No one has ever disproved these strange phenomena."

The following statement will precede "The Demon Murder Case": "This film contains some fictional scenes depicting demonic possession. It is suggested by the stories of people who claim to have witnessed so-called demonic possession. These claims are not accepted by religious or medical authorities, who attribute such behavior to different spiritual and psychological causes."

Packed House

Michael Landon's Malibu home was packed over the weekend before Christmas. In addition to his own youngest children, his house guests included three of the child stars from his "Little House" series.

"We cleaned out every fast-food joint on the West Coast," said Landon. "And I needed a chisel to get the candy and gum out of my ashtrays."

Networks Reshuffle Schedules

Darren McGavin

It used to be that at the end of summer you bought your copy of the thickest TV Guide of the year and scanned the pages for the new shows of the new season.

Now, there are many seasons to the television calendar and it seems they change faster than summer turns to autumn. Quicker than you can change the channel, an old show is gone and a new one is in its place — or, as the case may be, a new show is gone and an old one returns.

"Alice" is one such program. Linda Lavin and company get another go at the brass Nielsen ring this week as the hash-slinging waitresses return to CBS, "on a regular basis," Mondays at 9 p.m. (ET) beginning March 7. The series, which began broadcasting in September 1976, aired for a limited two-week run in mid-January and then once on the last day in February.

"One Day at a Time," starring Bonnie Franklin, moves from Sunday nights to Mondays, following "Alice"; and "Newhart," starring Bob Newhart, moves from Monday nights to Sunday evenings, beginning March 13.

New on NBC this week is a half-hour comedy mystery called "Small & Frye," starring Darren McGavin and Jack Blessing, airing Monday March 7 at 8:30. p.m. "Small & Frye" is slated for a limited-run of six episodes.

McGavin stars as a contemporary private eye with a '30s self-image and Blessing appears as his, yes, shrinking partner. Chip Frye is able to accomplish this feat due to a lab accident that causes him to shrink down to six inches.

This is a Disney production, so all belief is allowed to be suspended for the duration of the limited-run.

On a more serious note, NBC introduces "Monitor" this week, Saturday, March 12 at 10 p.m., an hour-long, news magazine program starring Lloyd Dobyns as anchor. Steve Delaney and Rebecca Sobel will be correspondents. Dobyns was previously co-anchor of "NBC News Overnight" with Linda Ellerbee.

'Little Girl' Steals Show

The guest star of the Monday, March 7 (8-9 p.m.) episode of "Little House: a New Beginning" will not work for peanuts — but she's perfectly happy with a handful of raisins.

A tiny orangutan named Strawberry stole the hearts of the cast and crew as she displayed her talents in the episode titled "For the Love of Blanche."

Strawberry's road to stardom started just a few months ago when her trainer, Bryan Renfro, visited the stage where "Little House" was being filmed. Executive producer Michael Landon spotted the 40-pound 'starlet' and asked Renfro when she would be available for work.

Landon then wrote and directed the show, which calls for Mr. Edwards (series star Victor French) to promise a dying man that he'll take care of the man's "little girl," only to learn that the little girl is a baby orangutan.

"Chimps are interesting to work with," said Landon, "but they are temperamental. They can get mad, and touchy, for strange reasons. This is the first time I've worked with an orangutan, and there is a big difference."

Trainer Renfro agrees. "Orangutans are a much more mellow animal," he said.

The first scene involving Strawberry and French called for her to give him a big kiss, but when Renfro, standing behind the camera, said "Kiss!" the little red-head stared at French's hairy face for a few seconds and then slowly shook her head "No!"

Michele Will Tell

DEAR MICHELE: I would like some information about Louis Gossett Jr., who stars as Walt Shepherd on "The Powers of Matthew Star." GEORGE L. HAGGARD, SEABOARD, N.C.

TO GEORGE IN SEABOARD: Born in Brooklyn, New York, on May 27, Louis Gossett, Jr. might have easily chosen a career other than acting. Having been an ace basketball star at Abraham Lincoln High School in Brooklyn, Gossett was drafted by the New York Knicks while appearing in the Broadway production "The Desk Set." "I made it to the first day of training camp, but the others were bigger, stronger, faster and smarter. Besides my attention was split. Ever since high school I'd been trying to do shows and still make it to practice. I did all my sleeping on the train." It is evident Louis chose the right profession — the former Emmy-winner ("Roots") was nominated for an Oscar as Best Supporting Actor in "An Officer and a Gentleman," in which he plays the drill instructor, Sgt. Foley. Divorced, with one son, Satie (8), Louis resides in Los Angeles.

DEAR MICHELE: Who created the Smurfs? Also, why was "The Quest" taken off television, and will it be put back on? T. OWENS, LEXINGTON, N.C.

TO T. OWENS IN LEXINGTON: There were Smurfs before anyone knew what to call them. Pierre "Peyo" Culliford, a Belgian artist, was sketching them long before he had a name for them. One night at dinner he asked his father to pass the salt and pepper, calling them "schtromf," a French colloquialism meaning "whatchamacallit," which in Dutch translates to smurfs. Culliford decided this was a perfect name for the little blue people he had been sketching. So that's what he called them when in 1958 he began drawing a comic strip and books based on the characters. "The Quest" was relieved of its airtime due to poor ratings.

DEAR MICHELE: Could you please give me some information on Michael Nouri, star of "Return of the Doberman Gang"? What is his nationality? Will he be returning to TV with a series? SANDRA LARRIMORE, FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

TO SANDRA IN FAYETTEVILLE: The son of an Iraqi-born former life insurance executive, Michael is also a licensed life insurance salesman. Look for him in the feature film "Flashdance," in which he has the starring role of Nick Hurley, a business executive who becomes involved with a flashdancer.

Directing With A Delicate Hand

The word Svengali has several connotations, though Noah Webster gives its definition as "one who attempts, usually with evil intentions, to force or persuade another to do his bidding."

In the entertainment business, a performer's mentor is often referred to as a Svengali; that's why John Derek has been given the label many times for his handling of wife Bo's business affairs. Therefore, the new TV movie titled "Svengali" is bound to provoke controversial thoughts and discussion before it even hits the air; CBS will present the film on Wednesday, March 9.

Peter O'Toole heads the cast as a former New York stage star who is now a vocal coach for other performers. He is unusually intrigued by one of his new students, a young rock singer (played by Jodie Foster), who first rebels against the stern and relentless demands set down by her new teacher. But their relationship eventually becomes much more than either first bargained for.

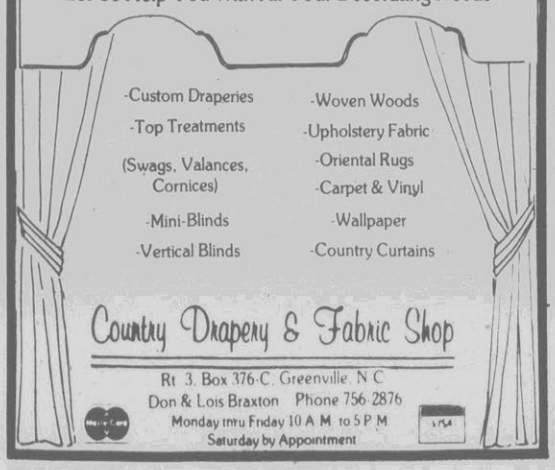

Such delicate material requires a skilled director able to avoid cheap sensationalism. The man given the job was Anthony Harvey, the British filmmaker whose other works include last year's TV drama "The Patricia Neal Story" and the feature film "The Lion in Winter," which also starred O'Toole and won Katharine Hepburn an Oscar.

Harvey doesn't deny that palms began sweating over what might emerge visually in the new film:

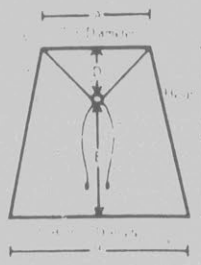

"I think CBS was enormously worried, but both Peter and Jodie are extraordinary actors," he says. "The thought of love scenes between them did worry me at first, since Peter's around 50 and she was 19 or 20 when we made the film. However, they're both such special people and the characters are so wonderful, you tend to forget about the age factor."

Broadway Debut

John Wesley Shipp, Kelly Nelson on "The Guiding Light," will make his Broadway debut as The Duke of Buckingham, dashing English lover of Queen Anne, in the production of "The Three Musketeers."

The play will be in rehearsals from now to March 18th when it will open to the public in Stamford, Conn. It will come to Broadway on April 10.

The major supporting role will show off John's physical agility in many fencing and fight scenes. And, of course, he sings in the show as well.

Misses Hollywood

Dorothy Malone is in from her home in Dallas to discuss with friend and publicity-career guidance counsel Thelma White plans for a possible return to Hollywood.

White says Malone wants to "make a complete transition in her career," quoting the actress as saying, "I want to follow in the footsteps of my favorite actress, Bette Davis."

Actresses Co-Star

Elizabeth Taylor and Carol Burnett, two of the world's most popular actresses, will co-star in "Intimate Strangers," an HBO movie based on the novel "Nobody Makes Me Cry" by Shelley List and Jonathan Estrin.

SCTV's Satirical Backbone

A motley group they are indeed, those denizens of the fictional SCTV station that is the base of operations for the humor on "SCTV Network," the satirical comedy series on NBC-TV, Fridays (12:30-2 a.m.).

John Candy, Joe Flaherty, Eugene Levy, Andrea Martin and Marty Short are the resident repertory players. Their characterizations — either parodies of well-known personalities or original creations — are the backbone of the SCTV brand of satire, which has drawn accolades from critics and earned the program an Emmy.

Among the more popular station characters are station owner Guy Caballero and horror movie host Count Floyd (Flaherty); station manager Edith Prickley and immigrant cleaning lady Perini Scleroso (Martin); comic Bobby Bittman, newsman Earl Camambert and hunch-backed Woody Tobias Jr. (Levy), who plays the gruesome Bruno in SCTV's 3-D horror flicks; producer-entrepreneur Johnny LaRue and horror movie star Dr. Tongue (Candy). Marty Short's addition to the cast during the last cycle of shows introduced odd-ball Ed Grimley to the fold.

From where do the inspirations come for the comic gems which many a reviewer has called the best currently on television? "If you get a germ of an idea that's really silly enough and people laugh at it when you do it, then it's worth pursuing," Levy has said.

The in-house audience at the Emmy Awards last September was in stitches as the video tape of a "silly" Levy creation — "Perry Como: Still Alive," featuring an ultra laid-back Como (Levy) — was shown. Levy and the rest of the cast considered the Emmy telecast exposure an invaluable "promo" for the late night series. "It was obvious that many of the folks in attendance at the theater were seeing it — and enjoying it — for the first time," Flaherty said.

Flaherty draws attention to one inevitable "ripple effect" of the "SCTV" approach to comedy. The fact that the cast members are so good at doing characterizations makes it a bit of a problem for them to establish identities of their own. Flaherty thinks that while a certain amount of viewer confusion as to whom is doing what can't be avoided where personality parodies are concerned, the problem is really compounded when station characters, too, similarly tax the viewer to solve the identity mystery. "If a station character is unrecognizable as to which actor it is," Flaherty says, "it sort of defeats the purpose. I was careful to choose ones that don't require much make-up."

Latest arrival Short — a veteran, like the others of the Toronto Second City stage revue, who went on to star in two prime-time network series — reaffirms the joy he feels at having returned to the "flexibility" of doing a variety of characters, as opposed to "being pigeon-holed into one character, as you are with a situation comedy."

Lives Are Threatened

A fanatical band of political terrorists holds the fate of thousands of Super Bowl spectators in its hands, in "Black Sunday," to be rebroadcast as The CBS Late Movie, Friday, March 11 (11:30 p.m.).

The story opens in Lebanon, where leaders of a terrorist organization are plotting their next venture, an attack that is to take place in the United States with the aid of a collaborator, Michael Lander (Bruce Dern), an emotionally scarred Vietnam War veteran who now flies the television blimp at major athletic events.

A group of Israeli commandos under the leadership of Major Kabakov (Robert Shaw) raid the terrorist headquarters, but one of them, a beautiful Palestinian, Dahlia Lyad (Marthe Keller), escapes.

She comes to the United States to work out the details of their plans with Lander. Meanwhile, Kabakov and FBI agent Corley (Fritz Weaver), aware that the terrorists have something major underway, are hot on their trail, finally catching up with the fanatics just after they put their plot into action.

Landers and Dahlia have commandeered a blimp from which they plan to attack thousands of spectators at the Super Bowl, including the President of the United States.

"Black Sunday," which was originally released theatrically in 1977, was directed by John Frankenheimer from a screenplay by Ernest Lehman. Kenneth Ross and Ivan Moffat. John A. Alonzo was the director of photography.

'Lottery' Begun

Production has begun on "Lottery," a 90-minute movie scheduled to air this season on ABC.

The film stars Ben Murphy and Marshall Colt. Murphy, as Patrick Flaherty, is the representative from Ireland's Shamrock Bank who is assigned to notify winners of the Inter-Sweep Lottery. Colt, as Eric Rush, is assigned by the investigation branch of the IRS to be Flaherty's partner and to help take the sting out of Uncle Sam's bite applied to the big winners.

Winner No. 1 — Peter Moreno (Christopher McDonald), a mentally slow young man whose sister, Priscilla (Zane Busby), and her greedy fiance, Victor (Reni Santoni), try to do the youth out of the $3 million ticket given to him by his recently deceased father.

Winner No. 2 — Arnold Berman (Allen Goorwitz), a debt-ridden salesman who thinks that Flaherty and Rush are after him for cheating on his income tax returns. His wife, Sylvia, is played by Renee Taylor.

Winner No. 3 — Policewoman Corey Phillips (Ilene Graff), the single mother of a seven-year-old son, believes her dreams have come true, but finds that winning $2-and-one-half million has its own pitfalls.

Bitterweet Story

"Revenge of the Nerd," a bittersweet comedy for young people about a high school freshman who is considered a "nerd" by his peers, is in production for future broadcast as a presentation of "The CBS Afternoon Playhouse."

Manny Jacobs stars as Bertram Cummings, the "nerd." Also starring are Chris Barnes, Sarah Inglis and Robert Weiler as his classmates at Master's High.

Bertram Cummings is an exceptionally intelligent young man. But his sense of style, or lack of it, has made him an object of ridicule among his classmates. And worse yet for Bertram, he has begun to believe his own bad reviews.

Dawber Signed

Pam Dawber and her Rabbit Production Co. have signed an exclusive deal with Paramount TV to develop and produce both comedy and dramatic series. For four years, Pam Dawber co-starred with Robin Williams in the comedy series "Mork & Mindy."

Hall Of Famer

Frank Broyles, who has served as an expert analyst on ABC Sports' coverage of "NCAA Football," has been elected into the College Football Hall of Fame after leading the Arkansas Razorbacks to a 144-58-5 record during his 19 years as head football coach. During his stint at the Razorback helm, Broyles won seven Southwest Conference championships, went to ten bowl games and led Arkansas to the 1964 national championship.

G-man, Nets' New Enforcer

Mike Gminski was never a 97-pound weakling, but now that he has beefed up to 250 pounds, while at the same time trimming several inches off his waistline, he is a new man in the middle for the New Jersey Nets.

"Yeah, we call him 'Mr. Macho' now. He's now the Hulk, a giant of a man, a terror up the middle," says Nets teammate Buck Williams, his tongue only slightly in cheek.

The fact is, the 6-11 Gminski worked hard to build his strength and as a result the Nets find themselves with a solid backup center who can step in when starter Darryl Dawkins gets in foul trouble, as is his tendency.

Gminski and the Nets can be seen playing the Philadelphia 76ers on CBS, Sunday, March 6 (noon).

The 23-year-old Gminski, a four-year starter at Duke was a first-round draft pick of the Nets in 1980. He averaged a promising 13.2 points and 7.5 rebounds a game his rookie season, but that campaign came to an end 24 games early because of an elbow injury that caused numbness in his shooting hand. It turned out to be the start of a string of troubles that were to nag Gminski throughout his sophomore pro campaign as well.

"There was never any point when I was truly 100 percent healthy last season," Gminski said. "I spent all my energy getting over the illness (a staph infection that plagued him for much of the year) and my bad back. I was never at full strength and that was very frustrating."

Playing hurt, Gminski appeared in 64 games, averaging 5.2 points and 1.8 rebounds in just 11.6 minutes per game. His lackluster performance led to frequent booing from unsympathetic fans.

"I didn't really let the fans bother me," he said, "because that's the way fans are. Fans expect you to perform well. They don't want to hear excuses. When you're playing well they'll let you know it, but when you're not, look out."

Although the acquisition of Dawkins meant Gminski would once again play a reserve role this season, he accepted the job and has averaged over 7 points and 5 rebounds in 15 minutes per game.

"When Mike plays really well, I always have the feeling that we can win the game," said Nets Coach Larry Brown. "I don't want him to be happy coming off the bench (as opposed to starting), but I think he's best for us in that role. He always gives us a lift when we need it most."

"He's a completely different player this year, even in practice," Williams added. "He's playing with more confidence, probably because he's not worried about his health. What with all that muscle and judo training, you don't mess with G-man anymore."

Building A Bench

The Phoenix Suns, seeking to add size and strength to their bench for the stretch drive to the playoffs, have dealt to obtain the Cleveland Cavaliers' 7'1" center James Edwards. In exchange for Edwards, the Suns sent reserve center-forward Jeff Cook to Cleveland, along with an undisclosed amount of cash and two 1983 draft picks.

TV Chatter

By Polly Vonetes

If you have a dream of becoming the next big television star of the decade — you just might have that chance — right now the largest, most sweeping talent hunt in the history of the entertainment industry is underway. "Star Search," a new weekly series, will bring the best of today's new talents to Hollywood to compete for the No. 1 spot in eight performance categories, an opportunity for ongoing national exposure, and more than $1.5 million in cash prizes.

This talent hunt, and the "Star Search" series scheduled to premiere in September, will be kicked off in April by a two-hour star-studded special. During the special telecast, a "900" telephone number that viewers will be instructed to call if they wish to become a competitor on the series, will appear on the screen. When you call you will be given instructions where to send a 5-minute video cassette of yourself in performance. The most promising new talent will be selected from these cassettes to compete on the program. I suggest — if you are interested — you get your act together — tape it — and be among the first to enter.

NBC is reportedly taking the blame for "Taxi's" low ratings. It is felt — "in high places" — that the series was "misplaced" in a Saturday night time slot. They will be calling for "Taxi" (after a short hiatus) to return by the end of March (NBC's proud peacock is still dragging its tail feathers).

1981 - 82 Community Report

Pitt County Memorial Hospital

Greenville, North Carolina

Counting on your hospital

Two years ago we at Pitt County Memorial Hospital presented our community report to you as a newspaper supplement. We received so many favorable comments on that report that we decided to use the supplement format again this year.

A community report helps us accomplish several goals. It allows us to tell you about the changes, innovations and accomplishments of your community hospital during the last year. It gives us the opportunity to introduce you to the complex nature of the hospital industry and our dual mission as your community health care provider as well as regional referral center. It gives us a way to publicly express our appreciation for your financial and volunteer support. And this year it provides us with a way to introduce you to a few of our employees you can count on to bring you the best in care.

Your knowledge that you can count on Pitt Memorial is the one thing we would like you to remember about this year's community report. Even though we've really grown in the last several years, it's very important to remember that we are here to serve the people of Pitt County. We're here to take care of your children, your parents, your friends and your neighbors. And we are able to do it better than ever before because of our role as a regional referral center with many special services.

Community reports are usually filled with information about an institution's growth, and ours is no exception. We've listed the highlights of our last fiscal year on the facing page, but some are so special we wanted to list them here:

•Opened the 138-bed West Bed Tower and closed PCMH - East, our temporary wing of patient rooms at the Holiday Inn that helped alleviate our bed shortage

•Added a Poisindex system to the emergency department that speeds diagnosis and treatment of potentially fatal poisonings

•Established a Department of Pastoral Services to enhance our patients' recoveries

•Opened a special six-bed intensive care unit in pediatrics

•Developed a model relationship with the Eastern Carolina Vocational Center to offer new and expanded services to rehabilitation patients

•Completed the computer conversion to the new system shared with the School of Medicine and East Carolina University

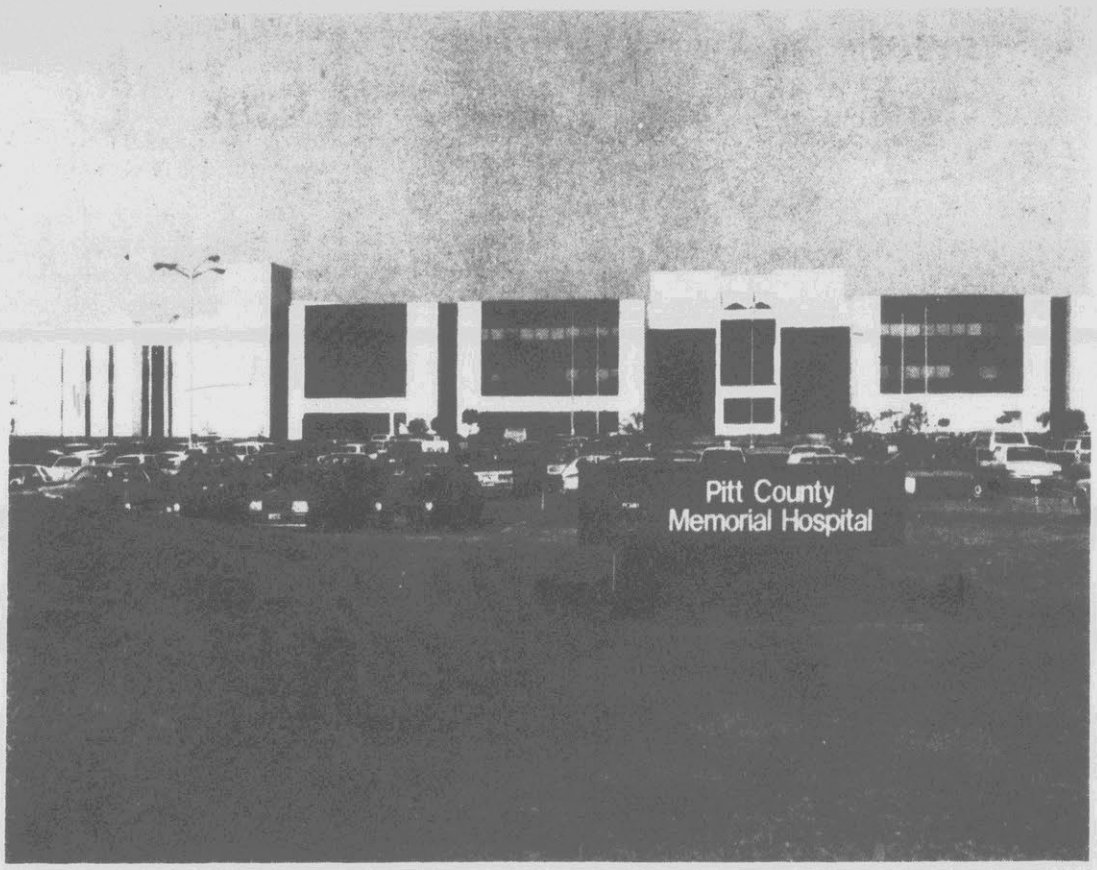

•Received a three-year accreditation from the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals

•Received the American Hospital Association Energy Management Award

•Certified as a cost containment hospital by the N.C. Hospital Association and the N.C. Medical Society

•Accepted the generous donation of nearly $39,000 from the Greenville Service League from their earnings with the hospital gift shop, hospitality shop and snack cart

•Said good-bye to Senior Vice President M.E. "Rick" Gilstrap and welcomed new Senior Vice President Fred T. Brown Jr.

•Thanked Mildred Indorf, Robert T. Monk, Ephraigm H. Smith and Glenn Strickland, retiring members of our Board of Trustees

•Welcomed the School of Medicine, our new neighbor, to its home in the Brody Medical Sciences Building

•Welcomed 22 new physicians to the medical staff

•Cared for 20,454 inpatients

•Served 37,565 patients in the emergency room

•Said the first hello to 2,153 babies born

Of course, one of the biggest challenges of the last year has been to develop and provide new services and keep a close eye on the cost of patient care. The administration and management team is ever mindful of our commitment to deliver services at the most reasonable cost. For example, last June we started using electronic thermometers and expect to save $3,000 annually. We changed our copying system and saved $30,528. We initiated self-insured workman's compensation and saved more than $100,000. We adopted new methods of automated laboratory testing and saved $60,000. There are many other examples throughout the hospital.

We hope you set aside some time to spend reading the rest of this year's community report. Pitt County has a hospital you can count on, and you can share it with pride with your fellow citizens in the state. Our progress is exciting. Our growth is for you.

Counting on us for care

Jack W. Wilkerson, M.D., joined the medical staff of Pitt County Memorial Hospital in 1967 as the forty-fifth member. Today, he is the chief of staff for the 210 doctors who practice medicine at the hospital.

A graduate of the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, he is certified by the American Board of Family Practice. He is an associate of Greenville Family Doctors, P.A., and a clinical professor of family medicine with the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

"The growth of the medical staff at Pitt Memorial has broadened the medical expertise in a number of specialized areas," he says. "I am constantly amazed at the number of services we have to offer that didn't exist five, ten and fifteen years ago.

"In the past, patients with complicated problems had to be sent to other places; now they can stay closer to home. This is a tremendous convenience for the patient and his or her family.

"We have the opportunity at Pitt Memorial to blend community physicians, hospital staff and medical school physicians for the betterment of our patients. This is a rare thing. In many of the larger medical centers, the medical school is a closed shop to the community physicians," he says.

"We hope to continue to nurture the relationship between 'town and gown,' " he adds. "We are a little medical center compared to Duke, for example, which has over 900 doctors on its medical staff.

"Our growth so far has been controlled growth. As we continue to grow, we are going to lose some of the intimacy of the small community hospital where everyone knows each other, but the good thing is we have opportunities and advantages in delivering health care that didn't exist before and which don't exist anywhere in our 29-county region."

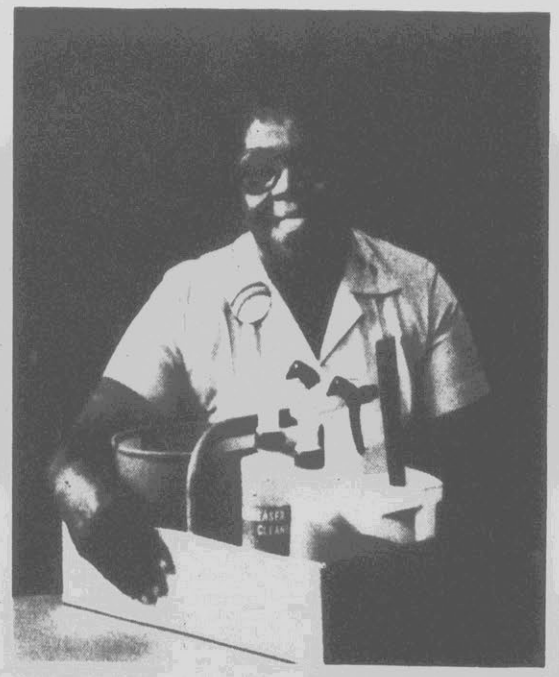

Kathy Wahl is the vocational evaluator in the rehabilitation center's occupational therapy department. Using various tests, she assesses the abilities and skills of patients to determine their job capabilities. The patients may be victims of stroke, head or spinal cord injuries or acute arthritis.

"I see an average of four to five patients each day because my work requires a great deal of one-on-one testing," she says. "All my patients are referred by a physician at Pitt Memorial, but they come from all over the 29-county region.

"Most often the patients have to change jobs rather than modify their previous jobs," says Kathy, who earned her master's degree in rehabilitation counseling from East Carolina University. "I help patients understand that they can still make a worthwhile contribution to society even though parts of their bodies don't function as they did before. I help them to see that there are other skills they can develop."

Kathy's evaluation involves achievement tests, aptitude tests, interests tests and work samples. "The work samples simulate tasks found in real-life jobs," she says.

From the data collected through the tests, Kathy makes realistic recommendations about the patient's job capabilities to the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation in Greenville. "The best part of my job is when one of my former patients gets a job," she says.

Bonnie Britton enjoyed her experience as a nurse extern on 3-north so much that she joined the staff when she graduated from East Carolina University with her bachelor's degree in nursing.

"The nurse extern program is an excellent way to break the reality shock for a nursing student," Bonnie says. "After the junior year, the nursing student can choose to work on any floor in the hospital. The student can do everything except administer medicine."

Bonnie decided to stay at Pitt Memorial after graduation for a number of reasons. "Pitt Memorial offers nurses a number of advantages," she says. "As a teaching hospital for the East Carolina University School of Medicine, the hospital provides nurses with the opportunity to care for a variety of patients. The hospital also places a high priority on education. Through inservice programs the nurses are kept informed of the latest advances in health care."

As a full-time employee, Bonnie has become a member of the hospital's Quality Assurance Committee. Bonnie evaluates aspects of nursing care which have direct effects on the patient. "One of the most important components of nursing is communication. The nurse is the patient's advocate; we are here to communicate to the physician what the patient is feeling and what they want," she says.

"We strive to provide the best possible care for our patients. With nurses, doctors, residents and nursing students working together, the patient receives better care."

Lena Worthington wears a button to work every day that reads, "It's going to be a great day." A present from a patient, the button symbolizes Lena's attitude about her work and about life.

Lena has been a member of Pitt Memorial's housekeeping staff for 15 ½ years. "I love my work," she says. "I love meeting people and trying to help others."

In addition to her button, Lena wears her 15-year service pin and a pin given to the housekeeping staff in 1979 for having the cleanest hospital. "I like my pins," she says. "I'm not dressed without them."

Lena's day begins at 7:00 a.m. sharp. Her duties on 2-north include the cleaning of 44 rooms daily. "The first thing I do when I go into a room is to greet the patient," Lena says. "Then I begin emptying the trash, damp dusting, cleaning the bathroom and dust mopping. I don't leave until the room is clean and the patient is comfortable."

Asked if she is happy working at Pitt Memorial, Lena replies, "I'm very happy. I don't have any problems, and when you don't have problems, you're happy."

Diane Corbin is one of five buyers in the purchasing department at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. Together, they made more than $7 million in purchases during the 1981-82 fiscal year.

Diane handles the purchases for computer services, the rehabilitation center, fiscal affairs, nursing services and the administrative staff. She is the one who purchases the beds and other furniture in patient rooms, along with such extras as the styrofoam pitchers for ice water.

A graduate of East Carolina University, she has been employed by the hospital for two and one-half years, becoming a buyer in October 1981. "In my work, I deal with a number of sales representatives as well as people throughout the hospital," says Diane. "I enjoy the people and the work is very interesting."

Diane works hard to hold down costs for the hospital. "I act as a liaison between the hospital department and the selling company. I do research on new products and do price comparisons in order to save money on all orders." Diane is also a liaison to the standardization committee, a hospital committee which makes the final decision on the introduction of new products.

Employees like Diane make the hospital a more efficient place. She saves the staff valuable time, and her decisions save the health care consumer money.

Mike Roberts is a medical technologist in the laboratory medicine department. "Medical technology is a 'behind the scenes' service at the hospital," says Mike. "We serve a large number of patients, but we see very few of them face-to-face."

Mike trained at Pitt Memorial while he was a student at East Carolina University. His work in the blood bank includes cross matching units of blood, preparing blood for surgery and routine transfusions.

"Very few patients realize what goes on during the hour before they receive a unit of blood from the blood bank," he says. "We must test the blood for antibodies and make sure we are providing units of blood that the patient can accept. This acceptance can sometimes be a life or death situation.

"The blood bank also provides blood products to patients," Mike says. "Pitt Memorial is the largest user of platelets in the region serviced by Tidewater Regional Blood Services in Norfolk, Va. Platelet transfusions are used primarily by adult and pediatric oncology patients undergoing chemotherapy, which destroys the bone marrow's ability to produce platelets.

"As the hospital grows and continues to offer more and more specialized services," Mike says, "the laboratory will also become more specialized to keep up with the pace."

When Gracie Mebane Vines came to Pitt Memorial in 1977, the hospital had two social workers. Today, Gracie is the chief of Patient and Family Services and commands a staff of 12 professionally trained social workers.

"Our social workers are here to serve all our patients," she says. "We work with the doctors and nurses to determine the family's ability to provide care when the patient returns home. This evaluation is important because we do not want the patient to become part of the 'revolving door syndrome' and have to return to the hospital. We also help place patients into nursing homes, rest homes and other health care related facilities.

"Counseling is another major part of our work," Gracie says. "We are committed to the treatment of the whole person, not just the medical problem. A patient may have more than health problems, and these problems may keep the patient from recovering physically. It is our job to do what we can to relieve the stress the patient may be under."

Gracie is originally from Greenville. She received her master's degree in social work from the University of Wisconsin and has done further studies in organizational development at Case Western Reserve in Cleveland, Ohio.

"It is exciting to be a part of a developing medical center and to have the opportunity to participate in the molding of our reputation," Gracie says.

W. Thomas Bass, M.D., is in his first year of residency training in pediatrics at Pitt Memorial. He is one of 93 physicians in postgraduate training who provide care to patients.

Dr. Bass is a native of Edenton and a member of the 1982 class of the East Carolina University School of Medicine. "I love this area and wanted to stay here," he says. "I was attracted to the medical school at ECU because of the personal attention the students receive, because I was familiar with some of the professors from my undergraduate work at ECU, and because I thought it would be exciting to be a part of a developing medical school."

While his fellow students went to larger medical centers across the country, he decided to stay in Greenville and complete his three-year residency program at Pitt Memorial. "I like the smaller community hospital setting, and Pitt Memorial really is unique in being both a community hospital as well as a teaching hospital. I plan to practice in Eastern North Carolina, and by staying in Greenville I can learn even more about the area.

"I also feel the pediatric program here is excellent. The medical school has attracted outstanding physicians in this field. As a resident, I am the primary care physician for a number of patients, but I report to an attending physician.

"The pediatric wing of the hospital moved into the new West Bed Tower in the last year. The facilities are excellent, and the kids have their own playroom. The nursing staff is highly motivated," he adds.

"The pediatric program at Pitt Memorial has become much more specialized with the addition of the medical school. We are now providing some forms of care which previously required a trip to the Piedmont or further away. With care available so close, the children can be closer to home and to their parents."

Counting on your support

How many hospitals can boast a 900 percent increase in their volunteer staff? Pitt Memorial can. In just one year the volunteer staff grew from 23 to 225, an impressive gain made possible by the energetic leadership of our new volunteer director, Etsil Mason.

The volunteer force took on many new projects, from adding bookcases in the waiting rooms to providing personal assistance to critically ill patients. Today, new volunteers are receiving a warm welcome with a special orientation program that helps them feel right at home.

The other big news from the volunteer staff is the organization of the Pitt County Memorial Hospital Auxiliary, a group that will provide personal and financial support for the hospital. The group was organized entirely by volunteers, and we appreciate their initiative.

Another special volunteer group here at Pitt Memorial is the Greenville Service League. This group of volunteers earned $39,000 last year by operating our hospitality shop, gift shop and snack carts. Their profits from these ventures were returned to the hospital to help us purchase new equipment, supplies and other items.

The valuable time donated by volunteers is essential to the successful operation of a large hospital like ours, but equally important are volunteers in the community who offer financial support to Pitt Memorial. We have two organizations entirely devoted to coordinating the financial contributions that come to us from local residents and businesses.

These groups are the Pitt Memorial Hospital Foundation and the Gifts Fund Committee. The men and women who are members of these groups are available to answer questions about ways to channel private support to the hospital.

They are aware of the needs we have and the variety of giving opportunities that are possible. They believe in the community's responsibility to help support their hospital, and they know how important it is for the hospital to be prepared to meet the needs of their relatives, neighbors and friends in Pitt County.

All of us at Pitt County Memorial Hospital appreciate your support, the donations of your time and money, the gift of your community spirit and pride. Thank you.

ASK THEM YOURSELF

Send the question, on a postcard, to "Ask," Family Weekly, 1515 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10036. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

CAROL BURNETT

I know it's a tough question for any modest person, but to what do you attribute your continuing popularity? — F.K., Cocoa Beach, Fla.

I've often wondered about that. For one thing, when people watch you between their toes, as opposed to on a big screen, there's not as much awe. When I was growing up movie stars were bigger than life; TV stars are smaller than life. Plus, I guess what brings me closer to viewers is that I'm not slick and confident. I'm like the gal next door or a neighbor who doesn't make waves. On the street and in restaurants people say, "You remind me of my wife, my mom, my sister, a friend." They identify with me much more than with other stars who are "perfection personified."

DON RICKLES

What do you have to say to the guy who stuck you at the top of the 10 Dullest Men in America list? — S.G., Little Rock, Ark.

I wish the president of the International Dull Men's Club a long life — with an abundance of rashes. No, really, I consider it a great honor to be listed with such distinguished folks as Lawrence Welk, Walter Mondale, John Glenn and Garfield the Cat. This is the most interesting thing that has happened to me since I had the measles.

FROM THE "ASK" EDITORS

LOS ANGELES — Award-winning actress Vanessa Redgrave has been dropped by yet another talent agency and is no longer seriously considered for Hollywood-based film and television projects because of her outspoken pro-Palestinian position. The Oscar winner for 1977's Julia is a pariah nonpareil even among those casting and programming executives who readily admit that she is the world's greatest living actress. "I can't even mention her name here," a top inside source at CBS-TV admits. "We went through all the death threats, bomb scares and boycotts with [the TV movie] Playing for Time, and it didn't do well enough for us to justify taking a chance with her again."... Despite playing the lead in the new TV film Love is Forever, Michael Landon was conspicuously excluded from a recent screening for cast and crew. The movie, which airs later this month on NBC, is the true story of an Australian journalist who swam the Mekong River to rescue his Laotian fiancée. Insiders report that from the first day of filming Landon "tried to direct himself and everybody else" — which did not please Love's producer-director-writer, Hall Bartlett, who struck Landon from the screening invitation list. Landon, who doesn't even attempt an Aussie accent in the picture, also refused to change his frizzy, undyed gray hair, even though he plays a much younger man.... At a recent awards dinner, Burt Lancaster introduced the guest of honor this way: "Kirk Douglas is the most difficult and exasperating man I know — except for myself." —Robert Windeler

Candice Bergen

NEW YORK — Talk about great expectations: Dustin Hoffman, who won an Oscar three years ago for Kramer vs. Kramer and whose Tootsie is a smash, said not that long ago: "I keep feeling I haven't done anything yet — or don't accomplish what I set out to do"... Actor Omar Sharif confides that, at 50, his personal life is empty and lonely. An insomniac, he lies awake all night reading.... Candice Bergen had plenty of time to bone up for her role as Life magazine photographer Margaret Bourke-White in Gandhi. Director Sir Richard Attenborough offered her the part 15 years ago when he was starting to turn his Gandhi dream into reality.... Eduardo Ponti, 10, son of Sophia Loren and Carlo Ponti, is an E.T. fan. On a recent plane flight, the head of a big E.T. doll could be seen poking out of his jacket.... It's not unusual for 80 percent of his audience to be women, and singer Tom Jones maintains that performing for a female following is the ultimate experience. "When you get them that stirred up," he says, "there's nothing to equal that kind of reception." — Anita Summer

WASHINGTON — Hot sellers in Washington these days are the official Moral Majority Book Burning Matches. Peddled by Moral Majority members, the distinctive matchbook invites people to flip open the cover to discover an official list of books the organization wants burned. Inside is a numbered list with blank spaces. Cal Thomas, Moral Majority vice president for communications, says, "People think we're censors because the other side has screamed that for so long."... The Environmental Protection Agency wants to do more than clean up America — it's on a rampage to clean up its own offices. A team of inspectors is going around with cameras to videotape the action or inaction of staff members. E.P.A. staffers were told to do all their filing and not leave any trash lying around. Otherwise, they could find their debris on the agency's closed-circuit television system.... More than 10,000 survivors and their children are expected in Washington next month for the first American reunion of the victims of the Holocaust. Attendees of the American Gathering of Jewish Holocaust Survivors will register their original names and surnames, places of birth and the cities or villages they lived in before being taken away to concentration camps. A computer will be on hand during the four-day reunion to help people reunite with relatives and friends from prewar Europe.

CLIFF ROBERTSON ISN'T MAD AT ANYONE

By Mark Goodman

On a winter afternoon in 1977, Cliff Robertson's secretary was going over the actor's I.R.S. forms and found a record of $10,000 paid to him by Columbia Pictures. Robertson hadn't worked for Columbia in recent memory, had never received a check for that amount and assumed it was some sort of computer mistake.

"I told my secretary to check it out, then forgot about it," Robertson says. He flew to England to look into a possible film project, then returned to New York and found a slew of messages to call the president of Columbia, David Begelman. "I called Begelman," Robertson recalls, "and he said, 'Cliff, I'm very interested in this $10,000 check. What do you know about it?' I said, 'Three things. One, I didn't get it, two, I didn't deserve it because, three, I didn't work for Columbia.' So Begelman said to me, 'Cliff, do me a favor. Let me know anything you hear about it.' He then added, 'Let's have lunch the next time you're out. It's been too long.'"

Here were possible crimes of forgery, tax fraud and embezzlement. Failure to report them could make Robertson an accessory after the fact.

Robertson, toying with a brandy in a Manhattan restaurant not far from his luxury apartment, smiles wryly at the memory. He recalls hanging up the telephone and saying to his wife, actress Dina Merrill, "You know, Deenie, I'm really impressed. A lot of eyebrows were raised when Begelman was made president of Columbia, but he seems to be minding the store. Here's a man dealing in millions of dollars, and he's that concerned about an insignificant $10,000 check."

"Little did I know," Robertson adds, "that I was talking about the tape on the Watergate door."

David Begelman, it turned out, had embezzled $84,000 from Columbia, including three forged checks (the other two were made out to director Martin Ritt and publicist Pierre Groleau). Indeed, the melodrama of the man who dealt in millions but, for reasons never fully understood, was driven to embezzle in the thousands, became known as Begelgate.

Don Hunstein

Before it was finished, the scenario of forgeries, firings, rehirings and recriminations played for three years like an old Saturday serial out of Republic Pictures. As reported in David McClintick's best-selling book on the subject, Indecent Exposure, even Begelman's eventual declaration of penitence in a courtroom plea of nolo contendere, was stolen from those matinee epics. "My worst enemy is sitting right here at this table....I can't accept success....I snatch it away from myself by committing crimes."

However, in that certain clan mentality that works in the rarified circles of Hollywood, the worst crime was exposure itself. To some of the power elite, the real culprit was Robertson; his crime was Making Waves. He violated one of the cardinal rules of the trade: The artist shall not bother himself with the accounting of money.

This particular artist paid the price of a nearly ruined career. It appeared that Hollywood plainly intended to make an example of Robertson — an example, as he now points out, "that finally backfired on them." But first, he had to undergo a long and painful lesson in the prerequisites of power.

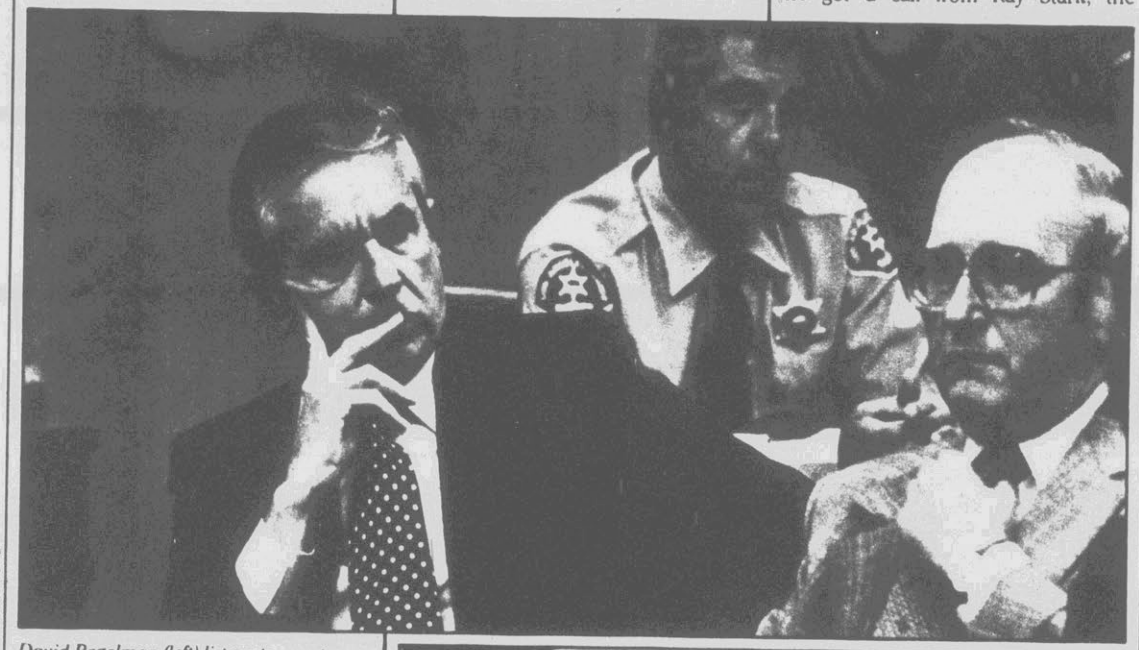

Robertson remembers vividly the mounting terror of his position. Shortly after talking to Begelman, he says, he stopped off in Los Angeles for 36 hours en route to New Zealand. He called his accountant who told Robertson to come to his office immediately without stopping at his hotel. There Robertson was shown the check with his signature forged. The check, drawn on the Bank of America, had gone through the Wells Fargo Bank, was converted into traveler's checks and sent to — David Begelman. Robertson's accountant told him, "Cliff, you're sitting on a hydrogen bomb. You may well be in a dangerous position — and not necessarily just professionally. Begelman is now one of the most powerful men in town."

As Robertson recalls, "I said, 'My career doesn't need this and I don't need this. I don't even live in this cockamamy town. Why me, Lord?'" But he faced a terrible dilemma; here were possible crimes of embezzlement, forgery and tax fraud, and a failure to report them could make him an accessory after the fact. He immediately called an attorney, who advised him to keep a low profile, get out of town and let him turn the matter over to John Van De Kamp, then the District Attorney of Los Angeles County.

Done, said Robertson, and he and his daughter left for New Zealand. As he accurately points out: "I only did what the law requires any citizen to do." True. But not all citizens are famous actors tampering with the pocketbooks of wealthy and influential producers. Robertson and his daughter returned several weeks later to Los Angeles, where he found that nothing was being done about the matter. "Nothing?" he asked incredulously.

"Not even the D.A.'s office?"

"Nada," his lawyer replied. "Nobody will touch it with a 10-foot pole."

Says Robertson, "Then I knew I was in trouble. The word was out, but nothing officially was going to be done about it. I called Morris Udall [the Democratic congressman from Arizona for whom Robertson had campaigned] and he suggested I go straight to the F.B.I. I waited a week. Then my agent and accountant got calls from Begelman. He said to them, 'Tell Cliff the mystery of the $10,000 has been solved.'"

According to Begelman, a young Columbia employee had admitted embezzlement and had come to Begelman with his father, who had promised restitution if Begelman would forgive the boy. Says Robertson: "David wanted to know if I wouldn't do the same thing, as an act of compassion. I said, 'Sure. I don't want to see the kid go to jail.'"

Robertson, however, is no fool, and he realized that the story just didn't wash. Finally, in September he went to the F.B.I. in Washington. From there he was to go to London to make a picture with Jean Simmons. The F.B.I. was concerned enough to urge Robertson to take precautions in case a contract had been put out on him. Hence, more B-movie melodramatics. "There I was in England," he says, "going in and out the back of the studio in the back seat of a limousine with a blanket over me."

Shortly thereafter, Dina called her husband from New York to read him the headlines in Variety: Begelman had resigned as head of Columbia Pictures pending an investigation of financial irregularities.

"Once again," Robertson says, "I figured it was now a fait accompli. And once again, little did I know. I had lunch with a producer in London who didn't know anything about my involvement. He told me, 'This whole thing is a farce — certain people want to see Begelman back in six weeks.'"

The first public disclosure soon followed, however; reporter David McClintick named names in his first piece on the Begelman affair in the Wall Street Journal. The Robertsons decided that for Cliff's protection it was time to go public. Dina, the daughter of cereal heiress Marjorie Merriweather Post and financier E.F. Hutton, is not without influence: She called her friend Kay Graham of The Washington Post. Robertson told Mrs. Graham he would cooperate fully on the story, and Post editor Ben Bradlee ran the story on Christmas Day 1977.

The following morning Robertson flew to Colorado with his daughter for a week of skiing. Minutes after he arrived he got a call from Ray Stark, the immensely powerful producer who reportedly put Begelman into the Columbia presidency in the first place. "Stark talked to me for 40 minutes," Robertson recalls. "He wanted me to recant. I said, 'Ray, I've done what the law requires, and I'm not involving myself any further. I'm here with my daughter, and I'm going skiing.' Stark said, 'That's it?' I said, 'That's it, Ray.' Stark said, 'Happy New Year,' and hung up the phone."

Unfortunately, it wasn't a happy year. In the years before the forgery incident, Robertson had been busy as an actor, appearing in 40 films. In 1976, the year before the checks hit the fan, he had starred with Genevieve Bujold in Obsession. At the time of the incident he had no specific plans for another film (he did complete the movie with Simmons) — and it would be a long time before there were any offers. "I didn't work in Hollywood again for three and a half years," he says.

Even now, Robertson is still careful to point out, "I've never said publicly that I was blacklisted." Indeed, some people in Hollywood suggested that Robertson, then 52, was past his prime. Not true. From his earliest days of live television drama in the 50's, Robertson, though handsome enough to play leading men (he did portray John F. Kennedy in 1963 in PT 109), had generally been awarded strong character roles. In 1969 he won an Oscar for best actor for his portrayal of a mentally retarded man in Charly. And Obsession was one of 1976's top 10 box-office draws. Then, the phone suddenly stopped ringing.

"I hold no animus toward the town or the industry," says Robertson, now that his ordeal is over. "I'm happy and grateful to be working again."

Well, not quite. Says Robertson's agent, Stanley Black of International Creative Management (I.C.M.), "People would call to make an availability check. Then they'd call back and tell me an offer was coming. Then they'd call back and tell me they were exploring the possibility of using someone else. Somehow Cliff was always passed over, often for names well below his par. It happened often enough that you could see a pattern emerging. After a while, I just stopped telling him when they called."

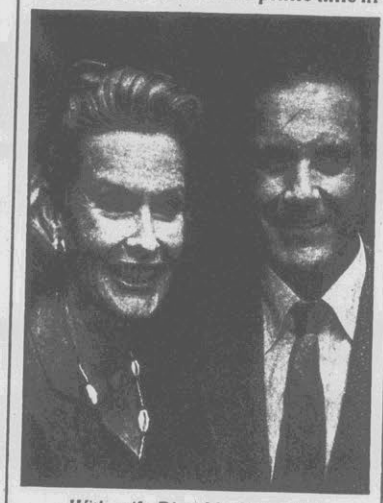

It goes without saying that Cliff Robertson, Dina Merrill and daughter Heather (Cliff and Dina each has a son from a previous marriage) did not have to worry about starving. But Robertson is proud of the fact that he has always maintained financial independence. He also loves work and the inactivity gnawed at him.

"They couldn't take my typewriter away," he says. He wrote a play for the John Drew Theater in East Hampton, N.Y., where the couple maintains a summerhouse, and wrote the screenplay for a sequel to Charly. Still, he remembers, "There was the incessant nightmare feeling that this really wasn't happening. I kept thinking I was going to roll over and say to my wife, 'I just had a terrible dream.' Then I'd begin to question myself, wondering if I had done something terrible as an actor."

Frustrated, Robertson wrote an article for the Op-Ed page (opposite the editorial page) of The New York Times, in which, as Robertson sums up, "I said that I believe 99 percent of the people in this business are basically honest, but that sometimes I feel 98 percent of them are frightened by the 1 percent who have inordinate power and wield it ruthlessly."

There is a curious Hollywood ending to Robertson's saga. Begelman was forced to resign as president of Columbia and was indicted on four felony counts, including grand theft. He was never prosecuted. He repaid Columbia with interest and was eventually rewarded for his pecadilloes with the presidency of M.G.M.-U.A. Later he told Barbara Walters in a prime-time interview that there was no blacklisting of Cliff Robertson. At the time, director Doug Trumbull and casting director Toni Howard were looking for someone to play opposite Natalie Wood in an M.G.M.-U.A. production entitled Brainstorm. They went to Begelman and asked if it was true that Robertson was not blacklisted.

David McGough/DMI

With wife Dina Merrill in 1982.

"Of course not," Begelman replied.

"Good," said Trumbull. "He's starring in your next film."

Robertson adds, with a laugh, "Begelman immediately called Rona Barrett and took credit for hiring me."

The floodgates reopened for Robertson following Rona's announcement that he had been signed for the picture. Now Robertson is starring in not one, but three films this year: Brainstorm, Bob Fosse's Star 80 with Mariel Hemingway and Class with Jacqueline Bisset. The moral: Hollywood also loves to forgive and forget — especially if spiritual generosity promises box-office profits.

Now that his ordeal is done, Robertson can also afford to be charitable. "I hold no animus toward the town or the industry," he says. "I'm happy and grateful to be working again. But if I had never made another film, I could at least be proud of what I did. I'm not naïve enough to think that I marked the end of creative bookkeeping; but I don't think there'll ever again be quite as much." FW

PEOPLE QUIZ

ARE TEAM SPORTS AND EXTROVERTS A PERFECT MATCH?

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Your sports preference reveals a lot about how you feel about yourself and others.

2. Athletes don't age as fast as the general population.

3. Men consider themselves better athletes than women, and women agree.

4. People who run tend to eat more than nonrunners.

ANSWERS

1. True. Studies conducted by a team of psychologists at Bishop's University (Canada) showed that preference for team sports is linked with the personality characteristics of the extrovert, including such traits as sociability, talkativeness, impulsiveness, interest in the personalities of others and compatibility with all kinds of people. On the other hand, preference for individual sports is associated with the introvert, who is inclined to be independent, critical of others, selective in choosing friends and a loner. The study also found a higher level of self-esteem among males participating in individual sports and among females engaging in team sports.

2. True. Studies at the University of California's nutritional sciences department indicated that athletes and other physically active people, even those who ride a bicycle for an hour a day, get more mileage from what they eat and assimilate more vitamins, proteins and trace elements than more sedentary persons. Thus, they tend to look better, feel better and retain their youthful vigor longer.

3. False. Investigators in a Pennsylvania State University study noted that with increased participation of females in sports and business, both men and women are beginning to confront stereotypes about their own abilities and those of the opposite sex. A questionnaire interview of men and women college students concluded that both the male and female respondents acknowledge males to be more competitive in game playing. Although male respondents perceive males to be better game players, female respondents think women are slightly better players. Also, the investigators added, traits such as independence, aggressiveness, objectivity, competence and strategy are qualities associated with athletic ability.

4. False. A University of New Mexico survey of more than 400 runners varying in age, sex and occupation showed a decreased intake of food, cigarettes and alcohol, plus improved nutrition and better sleeping habits as a result of running. The motivation for such activity was described as a desire to feel better physically (92.5 percent) and psychologically (87.3 percent), control weight (58.4 percent) and relax (55.5 percent). Other studies of the psychological differences between runners and nonrunners found runners to be less outgoing and polished, and more intelligent, serious, shy and self-sufficient than the general population. CHILDREN

SAYING BYE-BYE TO BABY TALK

By Susan Lapinski

"Teddy bear down!" cries 2-year-old Jessica after watching her favorite toy fall off a chair.

"Yes, teddy took a tumble, didn't he?" responds Jessica's mother.

To a casual bystander, this snippet of conversation would not sound like much of an exchange. But to psychologists who are researching the way toddlers learn to talk, the words are packed with importance.

Professionals have long understood the general process of how baby communication develops, from cries and babble to double consonants such as "ma-ma" and "da-da" to the use of real words, usually by the age of 1. Children learn by listening, by imitating and by making connections between what is said and what results, experts say. And now researchers are finding out how children can be helped in this important learning process.

"A child needs to learn how to add to his own speech so he can sound like his parents," says Keith Nelson, Ph.D., a professor of psychology at Pennsylvania State University. In several studies of 2-year-olds and their mothers in this country and in Sweden, Nelson says he has observed that parents can make a real difference in how quickly their children develop verbal skills.

For example, in the case of Jessica and the tumbling teddy bear, Nelson says that Jessica's mother did all the right things: She responded immediately and with interest to what Jessica had to say, and she "recast" the meaning of Jessica's statement into a new sentence with different words. Thus, Jessica is made to feel competent in her speech — she sees that others can understand her. The recasting also helps Jessica to learn another way of saying that her teddy bear fell down. "By keeping a child's meaning but replaying it in a new sentence, a mother gives a child encouragement and a new challenge," Nelson says.

New talkers are more likely to increase their vocabularies by talking with parents than by playing with peers, suggests a recent study at Boston University on toddler communication. For three years, Edward Mueller, Ph.D., associate professor of psychology, videotaped the actions of male toddlers less than 3 years of age in play groups. Children this age may have as many as 700 words in their vocabularies, according to Mueller. Yet the 600 videotapes produced by the study show that the children were hardly verbal. Their play centered on shared fascination with objects and toys and lacked understandable words or sentences.

After observing the way toddlers communicate with each other — mainly by banging on a table, gesturing and repeating sounds — Mueller concludes that "words are irrelevant in a play group" because the children are focused on learning how to play.

That leaves parents with the main responsibility for tuning up children's talking abilities. Besides using the effective recast method to encourage new talkers, Nelson suggests that parents should also:

Reading books to your child will help improve his language.

- Show enthusiasm for things that interest a child and be sensitive to his or her moods, so that the process of talking with you will be enjoyable.
- Refrain from using baby talk with children who are age 1½ or 2. Language that is too simple may slow down their progress.
- Avoid correcting a child's use of language. Instead, drop the right usage into your own conversation as a subtle and less discouraging lesson.
- Read books and tell stories to your child. These give him something in common with you to talk about and let him know you value spending time talking with him.
- Introduce adults and other children to your child for him to talk with.
- Try not to worry excessively about a slow talker. However, if your child is not putting two- or three-word sentences together by age 2, then it may be wise to seek professional advice — from a pediatrician, speech clinic or possibly a local university's department of communications or linguistics. THE SUBJECT IS ROSES

Wallcoverings abound in rose patterns in many scales and colors. These by Style-Tex, Columbus Coated, Motif Designs. Bed comforter by House of York; towels by C&A Bath Fashions, designed by Tricia Guild.

A hand-cut rose graces this vase; the table is set with Ebony Rose china, both from Lenox. Porcelain rose finials accent brass bed by Bella Ross for J/B Ross.

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Everything is coming up roses this season — not only in gardens but also in home interiors. There's nothing so inviting and eye appealing as a room with an exciting fabric mix, and florals can be a lovely and effective part of that mix.

In order for three or four patterns to be compatible, there are two rules that you should adhere to: Colors should match or blend and scale has to be considered. You can mix three fabrics, using the same small- or medium-size flowers or you can use one large floral pattern, one medium-size pattern and one small. Avoid such combinations as two giant floral patterns with one tiny pattern.

If you're using several patterns in one room, you might find that a solid-color rug will hold the whole scheme together, or you might complete a pattern mix with the floor covering. Mixing patterns need not be complicated; it requires only a little experimentation with sample fabric swatches.

Patterns can also create the illusion of more space. For instance, patterned carpets or wallcoverings with a light background foster a feeling of depth. Using your wall pattern (on a smaller scale) for curtains and upholstery will serve to unify and "expand" the room.

Introducing. . .

The fastest growing quality shade tree in America

- Beautifully shaped majestic shade tree grows up to 8 feet each year.
- Densely leafed branches span 30 to 35 feet.
- A hardy tree, with a long life of 35 years and more.
- Will shade a one-story house after just 3 years.
- This Hybrid Poplar shade tree is the product of 50 years of research by the U.S. Forest Service.
- Attractive, dark green, densely set foliage reaches a mature height of 50 to 60 feet in 10-12 years.
- Buy direct from the grower and save!

Actual photograph taken just three years after planting in this yard.

Lush screen in only three years after planting 9 ft. apart.

Lush, cool shade in the shortest time possible.

Why wait 10 or 15 years for regular trees to shade your home? Our U. S. Forest Service developed Hybrid Poplars will give you lush shade and a beautifully ornamented landscape in only 3 or 4 years.

Picture it! A backyard patio, cool even in the noonday sun. The cooling comfort of soft zephyrs flowing over your home from deep, green foliage. Your hammock ready for a lazy afternoon . . . and only 3 years after planting our Hybrid Poplars.

Perfect for screening, too.

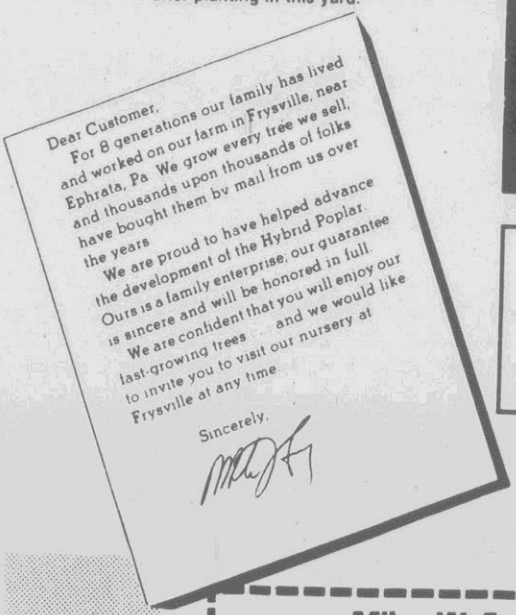

There's no better, faster growing, privacy hedge than our hybrid poplar screen variety. It provides magnificent screening to insure privacy between houses or around your patio or pool, to screen out the sounds of nearby highways, and to serve as a windbreak or snow fence. Plant them 9 feet apart and they'll grow into a solid green living wall in about 3 years. The screen variety is slightly narrower than the shade variety—spanning about 10 feet with the branches somewhat denser—a desirable characteristic for screening.

Hardy, rugged. Grows almost anywhere.

Our Hybrid Poplar is not to be confused with the short-lived Lombardy Poplar. Our trees normally live up to 35 years and are wind-resistant as well as insect and disease resistant.

These remarkable trees were developed 50 years ago by the U. S. Forest Service to reforest fire ravaged land quickly, and to reclaim unusable land such as abandoned strip mines and landfills. We've sold thousands of them by mail to people all over the country. They weather the heat of the South and the cold of Canada's remote Provinces. They leap out of tough prairie soil, and even do well near coastal salt spray.

These phenomenally fast-growing trees require no special care like spraying or dusting. We do recommend use of our Tree-Start Fertilizer pills, along with plenty of watering after planting.

Dear Customer,

For 8 generations our family has lived and worked on our farm in Frysville, near Ephrata, Pa. We grow every tree we sell, and thousands upon thousands of folks have bought them by mail from us over the years.

We are proud to have helped advance the development of the Hybrid Poplar. Ours is a family enterprise; our guarantee is sincere and will be honored in full. We are confident that you will enjoy our fast-growing trees . . . and we would like to invite you to visit our nursery at Frysville at any time.

Sincerely,

We offer this unique double guarantee. FULL REFUND or FULL REPLACEMENT for any trees that fail to survive within ONE YEAR (not just "90 days") following purchase. All trees carry a State Certificate of Inspection. All trees are guaranteed healthy and true to variety.

THE SUBJECT IS ROSES

The FAMILY WEEKLY Rose

There's an old saw that says if you want attractive offspring, it's a good idea to be good looking parents. Apparently that holds true for flowers, too.

Nine years in development, the FAMILY WEEKLY rose, seen on our cover page, was graced with spectacular-looking parents, according to Tom Carruth of Armstrong Nurseries in Ontario, Calif., who propagated the new hybrid exclusively for FAMILY WEEKLY.

"Its mother is a variety called Angel Face, a lavender floribunda [a type that grows in clusters], and its father is a tea rose called Double Delight, which has been the most popular rose for the last 10 years," explains Carruth.

The father rose opens white and, as it matures, it changes or "blushes" to a ruby red. The blushing quality is one of the characteristics it has imparted to the FAMILY WEEKLY rose. Both parents give off a delicious scent and so, of course, does their offshoot.

The FAMILY WEEKLY rose offers a panoply of color — from its creamy richness in the bud stage to a ruby-lavender when it's in full bloom. And it is definitely a good mixer. "It's unique how incredibly it blends with pinks, lavenders, whites, or even reds, in the garden," Carruth says.

Unlike some rose varieties, this one is hardy and doesn't need pampering. Carruth's rule of thumb: "The newer the hybrid, the better the vigor." Once in the ground, the FAMILY WEEKLY rose plant will begin to develop into an attractive, rounded bush of medium to low height. Depending on geographical location and climate, it will be in flower within an average of six weeks of planting — and you'll find it blooms profusely.

With regular watering and monthly feeding with equal parts of nitrogen phosphorus and potassium, the plant will reward you with armloads of large flowers with good cutting stems. "Most people today want to grow a rose that will smell like a rose and have brilliant coloration," says Carruth. "We were looking for a new color and intense fragrance. In the FAMILY WEEKLY rose, we got them both." One cut bloom will perfume an entire room, he says assuredly.

How to Love Your Bloom

Contrary to popular belief, rose cultivation is not difficult. Any adequately drained soil that will grow vegetables or other flowers will produce roses. Follow these guidelines:

- The location selected for your roses should receive at least six hours of sunlight daily and contain no living tree roots that might compete with the roses for food and moisture.
- When planting, dig a hole large enough to spread out the roots without tangling or crowding and deep enough so that the crown (the stems above the roots) will be at proper depth. Where the severity of the climate justifies winter protection, the crown should be an inch or so below the surface of the soil. In more moderate climates, it may be level with or slightly above the surface.
- When filling the hole with soil, scatter a small handful of a balanced ratio of commercial fertilizer around each plant. Fertilizer should not be mixed with the soil at planting time. When applied on the surface, its descent is so gradual that it does not reach the roots until they have developed sufficiently to receive it.
- Roses, like most flowers, do best with frequent deep waterings. Check with a rose-planting guide for your geographical location.
- In pruning an established plant, all cuts should be made just above a bud, and all dead wood should be removed.

Country Blue Quick Quilt

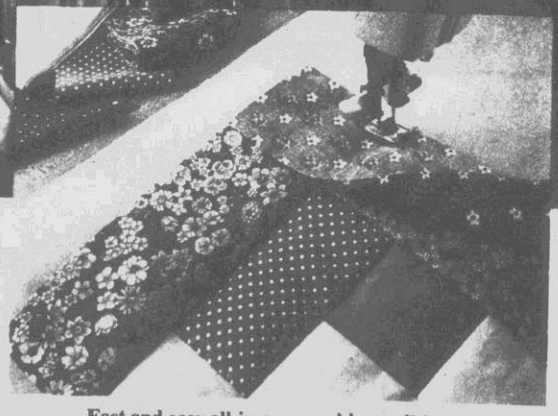

Rust Quilt

Natural Quilt

Our Famous Log Cabin Kit Is Back in a New Version

Fast and easy all-in-one machine quilting

Nothing could be easier than our famous quilt—made by patching a log cabin pattern to back and batting in one operation on your sewing machine. The kit comes with precut natural muslin and calico strips. Center a solid-color square on your batting and backing, then stitch down one strip at a time as shown at right. Sew the blocks together, add the border and finish off by hand. That's it. (It took one reader only thirty hours to complete.) Kits are available for twin-, double-, queen- and king-size quilts and throw pillows. Besides Country Blue, quilt kits also come in predominantly rust or natural.

Each Quilt-Top Kit includes 2½"-wide precut strips of easy-care natural muslin and assorted prints, plus 3 border fabrics, all in cotton or cotton/polyester. Prints may vary slightly according to availability. Directions included for machine- and hand-quilting.

Because our all-in-one technique requires that you have batting and backing in hand when you begin your quilt, you may also order a kit that includes them. Batting is bonded polyester, 48" wide. If you prefer to buy your own batting and backing, wait until kits arrive to determine amounts needed.

Approximate dimensions of finished quilts:

Twin: 65" x 92" Double: 78" x 92" Queen: 82" x 96" King: 98" x 98"

Each Pillow Kit includes enough 2½" precut strips plus batting and backing, and instructions (pillow form not included) to make one pillow: Size: 14" square.

Each Pillow-Sham Kit includes channel-quilted natural muslin top, matching fabric for ruffle and backing, plus directions. Size: 21" x 27". Fits standard-size pillow only.

THE SUBJECT IS ROSES

Florist to the Famous

Celebrities love roses. Elizabeth Taylor adores lavender ones to match her eyes. Ann-Margret will take any color rose so long as it's pink. Olivia Newton-John, Burt Reynolds and Zsa Zsa Gabor favor yellow. Jimmy Stewart is fond of sending red roses.

These are just some of the tidbits shared by Fred Gibbons, who with partner Harry Finley runs Flower Fashions Inc., a little flower shop in Beverly Hills with a big show-biz clientele.

Gibbons, who hails from Texarkana, Ark., came to Hollywood 25 years ago to become a movie star, but decided instead to be a florist to the famous.

According to Gibbons, "nearly everyone sends flowers to everyone else in Beverly Hills." They do it for weddings and divorces, births and bar mitzvahs, when a film starts production or a TV series is canceled — and just for fun.

Shy screen stars send flowers in their own special way.

"People are still talking about some of the extravaganzas we've organized," says Gibbons, whose shop has done everything from a Roman-style banquet for Caesar's Palace to a Renaissance sunrise wedding ceremony for Karen Black. But the particularly memorable one was a Las Vegas bash in honor of Frank Sinatra. The million-dollar winter wonderland party (in the middle of July) was complete with live doves, fountains and tons of white roses. Gibbons and his partner flew around the world to personally hand deliver 50 invitations to royalty, along with three dozen long-stem white roses. At least half of them accepted and turned up. "At the last minute, Sinatra didn't show," says Gibbons, "but the party went on anyway."

Stars with a reputation for being shy or reclusive will order flowers in their own special way. Gibbons tells us that Marlon Brando, a big spender who thinks nothing of ordering five or 10 dozen roses at a time, always calls ahead before sending a limousine with a signed card in a sealed envelope and payment in cash — so there's no record of a billing address. Jimmy Stewart, on the other hand, likes to drop by as he did this last Christmas. "He settled his lanky frame into a chair and wrote all the cards to tuck into the flowers ordered," Gibbons says.

There are, of course, hazards and unusual requests that go with the territory. "If we didn't have an unlisted number," says Gibbons, "we'd be on call 24 hours. Now we just avoid the late-night calls, which usually came from the Las Vegas crowd."

Gibbons and his partner have also learned to be wary of certain customers, like the one who rushed in to order flowers for rock star Rod Stewart, only to turn around and pursue the shop's truck to learn where the star lived. But the Flower Fashions driver eventually gave him the slip.

And in the unusual requests category, Gibbons has even delivered paid-for-in-advance flowers to telephone booths! FW

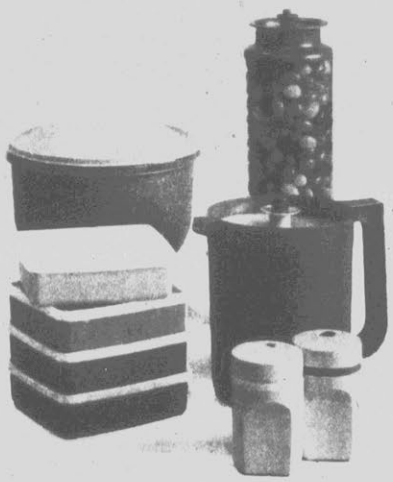

THANKS, TUPPERWARE!

I guess everyone has a dream. For my husband John and me, it was being able to own a home in a nice neighborhood. And thanks to my career selling Tupperware brand products, our dream came true!

"When I started eight years ago, I really didn't have any previous sales experience. The very thought of going to work in sales was frightening... and yet exciting, too. But I surprised John, our friends, our family... everyone! We got our home here in Camarillo... nearly doubled its size... furnished it... and now, we're putting my Tupperware earnings away to enlarge the dining room and remodel the kitchen!

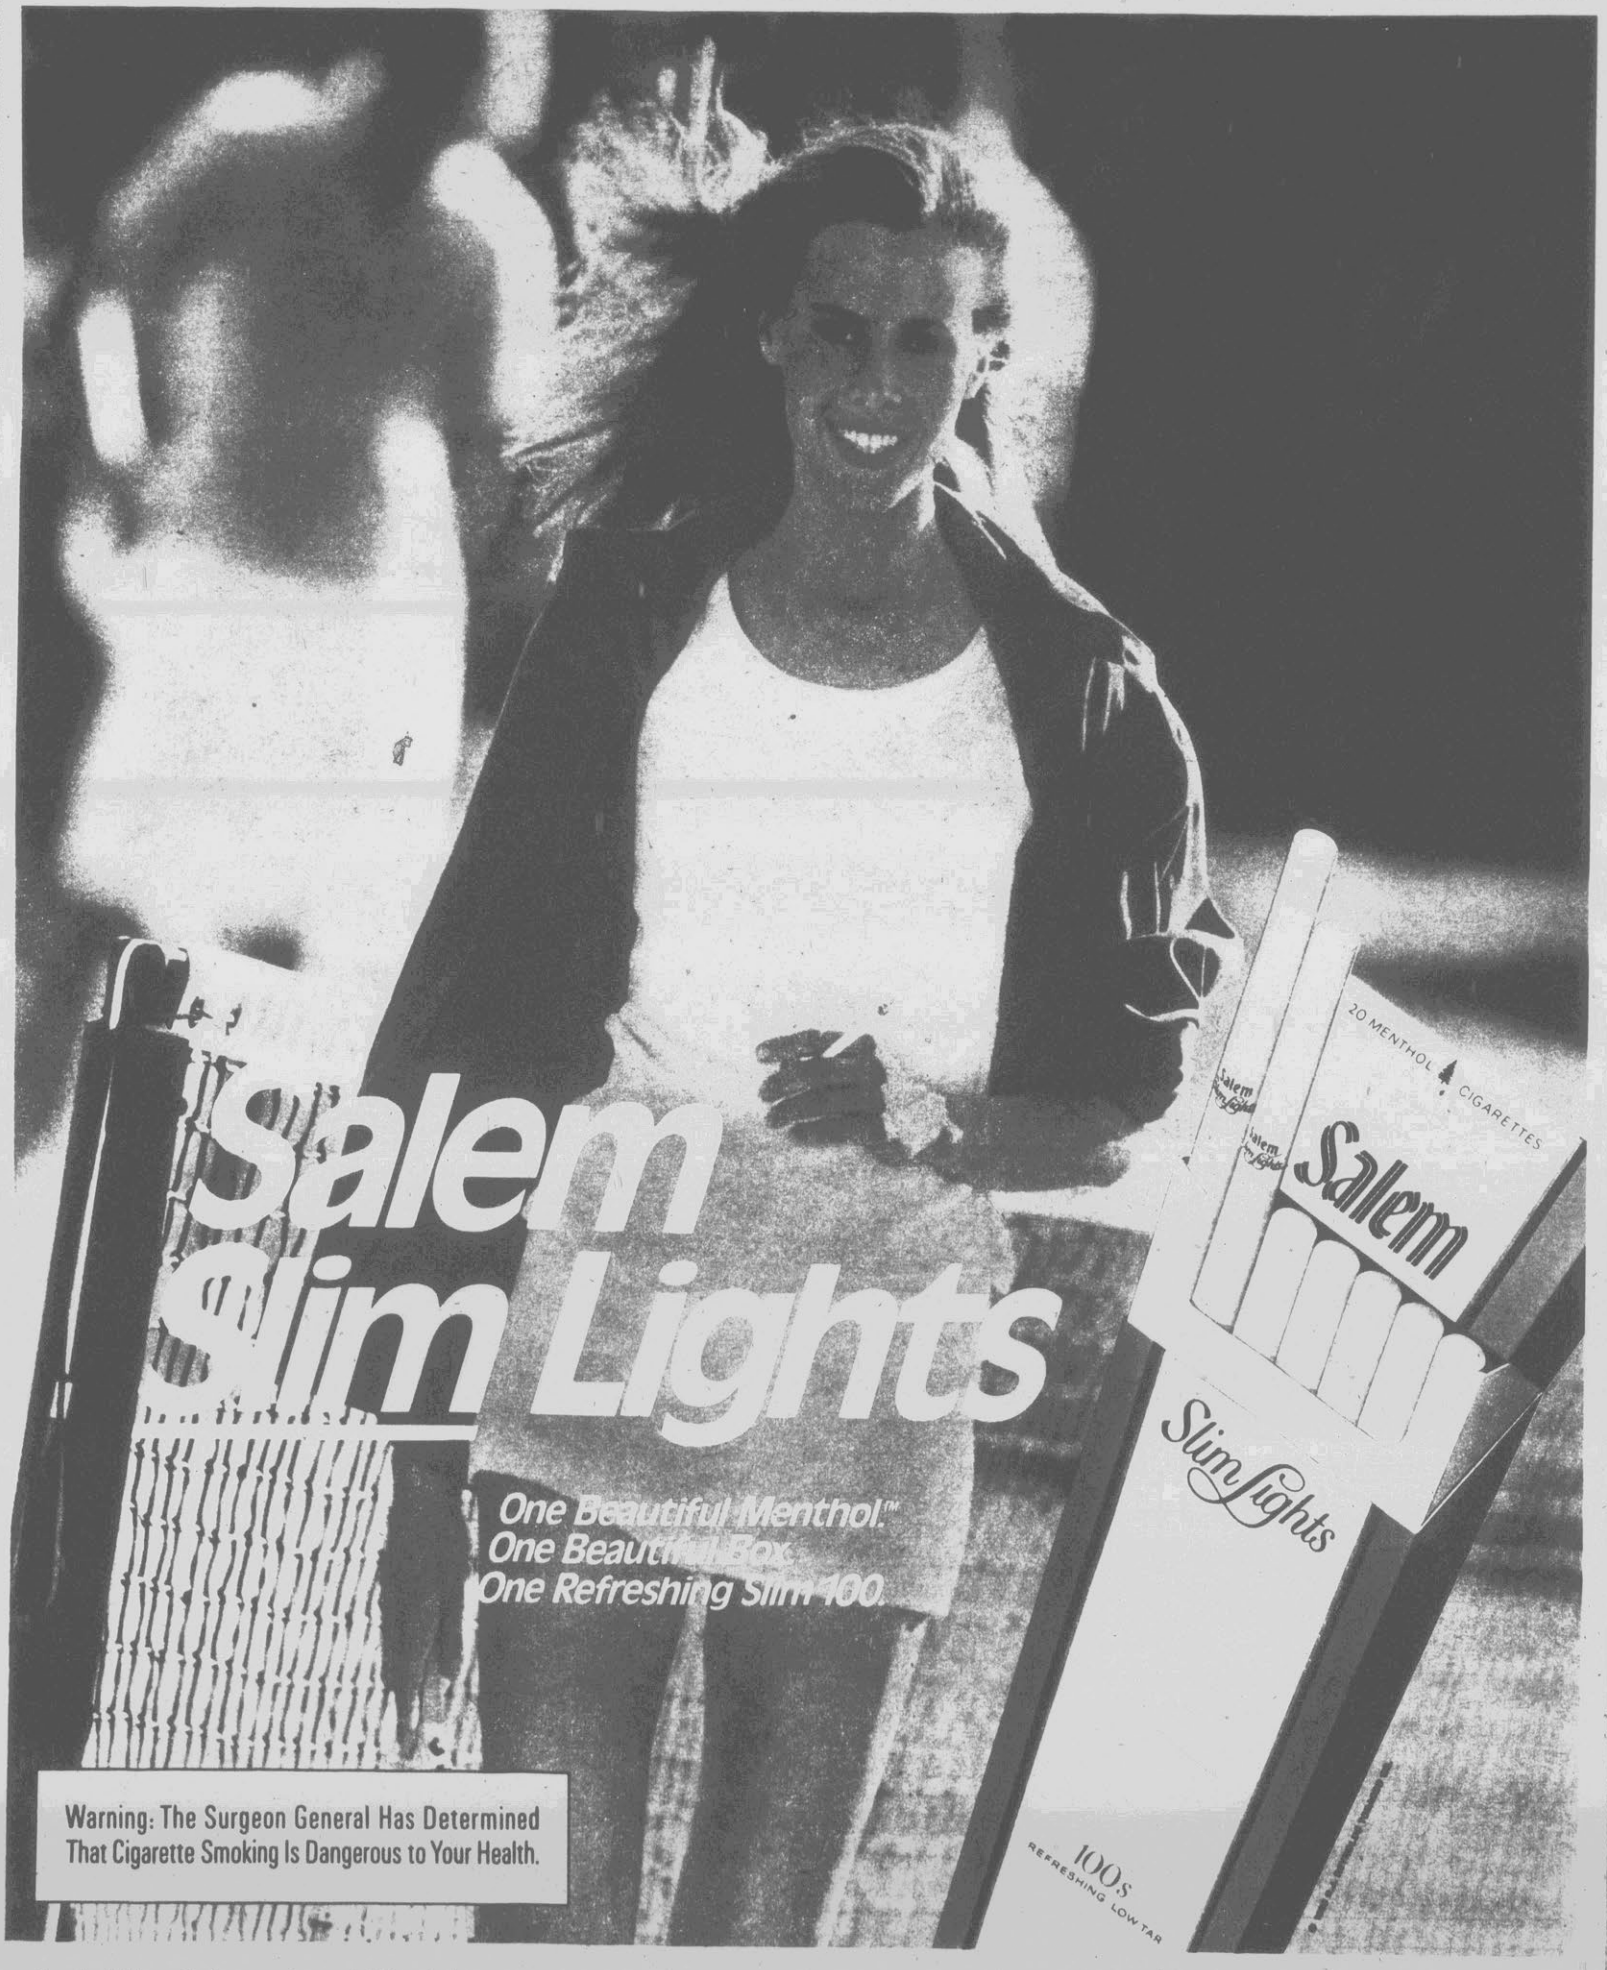

"I've found that the financial rewards with Tupperware are limited only by my own energy. Turning an older home into our dream home was great. And the feeling of doing something useful and meaningful with my life has been a tremendous personal discovery for me."

Pros and Cons of Sharing Your House

TENANTS ANYONE?

By Doreen Bierbrier

To help pay the mortgage, a growing number of homeowners are renting part of their homes to tenants.

Sharing your house with renters has other advantages besides money. Tenants can help you with the household chores; they can provide a measure of security if you would otherwise live alone. Some also play Monopoly with you on bleak Saturday nights and listen when you've had a rotten day at work.

The chief disadvantage to living with others is a lack of total privacy. People also tell horror stories about tenants who didn't pay their rent, didn't wash their dishes and had a succession of boyfriends or girlfriends who used the bathroom at 3 in the morning.

Here are answers to some of the most commonly asked questions about renting to a tenant.

Isn't it illegal to rent part of a single-family house to others?: Usually not. In most jurisdictions it is perfectly legal for an owner to share a house with a limited number of unrelated people who pay him rent. Usually two to six renters are permitted in a single-family residence.

What is more commonly prohibited by local law is a rental arrangement in which additional, or accessory, dwelling units have been carved out of a single-family residence in a neighborhood designated for single-family units.

Your local zoning office can tell you the laws for your city or county.

How much rent should I charge?: The only way to set a fair rent is to do some homework and find out the going rates for rentals in your area. Look in the newspaper under the classified sections "Roommates" or "Houses, Apartments to Share." First, check for those rentals that are in the same geographical location as your house. Then compare the features of the rentals in the newspaper to your rental, and find out how much rent is being asked. Later you can even ask potential tenants who look at your house how your rent compares with other houses they have seen.

Will I have to accept anyone as a tenant?: No. An owner can pretty much choose anyone he wants as a tenant if the renter will be sharing a house with the owner. The Fair Housing Law of 1968 bars discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex or national origin in connection with the sale or rental of most housing, but it does not apply to "... rooms or units in dwellings containing living quarters occupied or intended to be occupied by no more than four families living independently of each other, if the owner actually maintains and occupies one of such living quarters as his own residence."

The most important question to ask yourself for each prospective renter is, "Do I feel comfortable with this individual?" Evaluate each candidate on his personal merits.

Where can I find tenants?: You will probably get your quickest results by running a weekend ad in the classified section of the largest newspaper that services your locality.

Another good method is to look through your own network of friends and relatives. You may also post notices at work, churches, colleges, libraries, bookstores, clubs and associations, etc.

How should I screen potential tenants?: Very carefully. The single most important part of the rental process is tenant selection.

There are three key elements you should look for, other than personal compatibility: (1) Is this individual steadily employed? (2) How did this person get along in the last place he resided? (3) Is this person willing to pay the amount of money I am requesting as a security deposit?

Do I need to have a written rental agreement?: Yes. Although they are not legally required, a well-written rental agreement will define the basic rights and responsibilities of the owner and the tenant, protecting each. FW

FOOD

TURN PORK AND SAUERKRAUT INTO A GOURMET FEAST

Country Maron

By Marilyn Hansen

Extolling the virtues of Choucroute Garnie (the French version of pork and sauerkraut) as "one of the very best traditional French-Alsatian cold-weather meals" is chef Michel Fitoussi of the restaurant 24 Fifth Avenue in New York City.

The versatile chef explains that this dish, which originated in Alsace-Lorraine, can easily be prepared for a host of people and served country style right from the casserole set in the middle of the table. "When I lift the lid, everyone gathers around," he says, "enjoying the aroma, ready to fill their plates. A variety of sausages, each with their different seasonings, is what gives each choucroute made a different character." It's best served with boiled potatoes and crusty bread.

To accompany this popular, hearty dish (so downright hearty, it was served at the 1980 Winter Olympics in Lake Placid), Fitoussi likes to pour some favorite wines, which we have listed, and keep an Alsatian beer on hand.

Traditionally, a delicious way to cap this splendid meal, Fitoussi tells us, is with a Tarte Alsacienne made with pears.

CHOUCROUTE GARNIE

5 lbs. refrigerated bagged or canned sauerkraut
3½ cups dry white wine
1 lb. salt pork
1 lb. Polish-style kielbasa sausage
1 lb. bratwurst or country sausage
1 lb. Italian sausage, sweet or hot, or a combination
1 lb. frankfurters or knockwurst
Water
1½ teaspoons thyme leaves
Bay leaves
10 juniper berries
¼ teaspoon whole black peppercorns
8 pork chops, sliced 1½ inches thick
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
½ teaspoon salt, or to taste
Few twists freshly ground black pepper
12 whole, boiled, peeled potatoes
Assorted mustards

1. In a colander, rinse sauerkraut under cold running water and let drain. Place sauerkraut in a large bowl and pour 3 cups of the wine over it; cover with plastic film, refrigerate overnight, or for one or two days.

2. Day of cooking and serving: Place salt pork, sausages and frankfurters in three separate saucepans, cover with water and season each with ½ teaspoon thyme leaves and a bay leaf. Heat to boiling, cover and simmer 20 minutes.

3. Remove salt pork from court bouillon* and slice into 8 slices; reserve broth. Keep sausages and frankfurters in broth until needed.

4. Turn marinated sauerkraut and liquid into 8-qt. casserole or Dutch oven. (If you do not have a casserole that size, use two smaller ones.) Add slices of salt pork, juniper berries, 2 bay leaves and peppercorns. Cover casserole and place on center rack of preheated 350° oven. Bake for 2 hours, stirring now and then. If sauerkraut dries out, add a little court bouillon from the salt pork to keep it juicy.

5. In large skillet, heat butter until hot, but not smoking. Brown pork chops lightly on both sides; set aside.

6. When sauerkraut has cooked 2 hours, remove from oven. Arrange pork chops on top of sauerkraut; sprinkle with salt and a few grindings of black pepper. Cut sausages and frankfurters into large serving-size pieces, 3 to 4 inches long. Place sausages and frankfurters around pork chops.

7. Heat remaining ½ cup white wine to boiling and pour over meats along with 1 cup of court bouillon from the salt pork. (Discard sausage and frankfurter broth, or chill and skim off fat and use as a base for soup.) Replace casserole cover, return casserole to oven and bake for 1 hour, or until pork chops are cooked through, sauerkraut is bubbling and sausages are steamed.

8. About 45 minutes before choucroute is finished, boil potatoes in lightly salted water just until tender. Drain immediately and peel; keep warm.

9. To serve in a rustic ski-lodge style, place casserole on a thick hot pad or several trivets in the center of the table; lift lid and allow guests to serve themselves right from the casserole. Or you may lift out the meats, place sauerkraut in the center of a large serving platter (one you use for Thanksgiving turkey), arrange pork chops over sauerkraut and place sausages and frankfurters around edge. Serve potatoes separately in an earthenware or wooden bowl. Accompany with an assortment of mustards.

Makes 8 servings

*Court bouillon is the seasoned broth that results after the meats are cooked.

MONEY

THE SMALL INVESTOR'S GUIDE TO STOCKS

By Merrie Spaeth

With financial experts predicting a turn in the economy, many small investors are wondering if there's a place for them in the stock market. On this question, FAMILY WEEKLY sought the advice of Gordon Williams, business correspondent for the ABC Radio Network and author of Financial Survival in the Age of New Money (Simon and Schuster).

Q: Small investors used to hold a sizable chunk of the stock market. Over the last decade, they have largely disappeared. Is it time for them to consider re-entering the market?

A: Well, it's certainly time for the small investor to start looking at the market. If experience is a guide, the rally that began last August will last around 36 months. Our tax laws absolutely mandate that even small investors look toward capital gains as opposed to interest from savings accounts and the like. [Capital gain is the increase in the value of the stock or other long-term investment.] Capital gains are taxed at a maximum rate of 20 percent, while interest income, salary and the like — what's called ordinary income — is taxed as high as 50 percent.

Q: Do you think one should have any minimum amount of money before looking at stocks?

A: Let's back up. A very important caveat is that people should have a cushion of three months' living expenses socked away. If they don't have that, they should save it up first and stick it in something safe and liquid. Then, and only then, do we think about investing. People should try to set aside 5 to 10 percent of their take-home pay for, first, savings, then investment. Where they invest depends on their level of sophistication.

Q: What do you advise for the new investor?

A: Mutual funds. [A mutual fund is a broad portfolio of stocks put together by a large institution to minimize the risk of holding only a small number of stock investments. The investor buys into it just like buying a stock.] Because they're good for gaining experience and because mutual funds have actually done as well as or better than the market generally. . . . Conservative and growth-oriented funds are the places to start.

Q: Does the new investor need a broker?

A: There are two kinds of mutual funds: load funds, which you buy from a broker who charges a commission, and no load funds, which you buy directly from the fund. There's absolutely no evidence to show that load funds perform better than no load funds. . . . Once you, as a beginning investor, have a feel for the market, that is, have done your homework, paid attention for a while and want to become a direct investor, then you need a broker. FW

Now! You Can Start Your Own "Million Dollar" Zoysia Lawn!

SPECIAL SALE $2.33 Plus up to 900 FREE Plugs

Lakeland's Famous® 30-Below-Zero Zoysia Takes Wear, Tear, Cookouts, Children's Games . . . After 30 Below Zero Winters, It Bounces Back Green, Thick, And Beautiful! Closest Thing To An Indestructible Lawn You Have Ever Seen!

Zoysia Lawn Wasn't Mowed Or Watered For A Month! Not A Weed In Sight!

By Mike Senkiw, Agronomist, Lakeland Nurseries

If your family is like mine, you're squeezing every dollar to make sure you have enough to go around. And it looks like things are going to stay that way.

One way to cut expenses is to cut the costs, and work, of lawn care. For example, a woman wrote about her zoysia lawn that she had mowed it only twice ALL SUMMER. She hadn't spent a cent on weed-killers. Not one cent for fertilizers. Yet her lawn was as green and weed-free as a pile carpet.

ZOYSIA LAWNS STAY GREEN THROUGH HEAT AND DROUGHTS

Let the scorching sun burn lawns around you into hay—your zoysia stays fresh and green, an emerald isle of beauty. I have yet to water my own zoysia lawn. One day I saw that my sprinkler had gotten cobwebs! In Iowa, a zoysia lawn was declared the area's "Top Lawn—nearly perfect." Yet this lawn had been watered only once that entire summer!

Cut your water bills. Save the work of lawn sprinkling. Start a famous Zoysia grass lawn now.

Weed-killing chemicals are NOT NEEDED for a weed-free Famous® Zoysia Lawn

How is it possible that Famous Meyer Z-52 Zoysia stays weed-free without using expensive, risky chemicals? It grows so thick that crabgrass (weed) seeds don't get enough light to germinate!

Has Cut Mowing To Once A Month

Zoysia grows sideways, not just up like ordinary grass. It forms a thick, interwoven carpet of turf that keeps its well-groomed look weeks longer. It cuts your mowing by half, 2/3 or more!

No-Reseeding—Not Ever!—With Lakeland's Famous® Zoysia

Plug in Lakeland Zoysia and never buy grass seed again. Zoysia lawns don't grow old; they just grow better. They sparkle under 100° heat . . . stay green through droughts. They resist diseases and insects which ruin ordinary grasses. After sharp frosts, they only give up their green color, then green up better than ever each following Spring. Famous Zoysia gives you the closest thing to an indestructible lawn you have ever seen.

Ends Washouts on Steep Slopes Perfect Where Other Grasses Do Poorly

Deep-rooted zoysia holds soil in place, stops it from washing away from slopes. It's your perfect answer for worn out or weedy areas, too.

In a typical newspaper article I read (quote): "upgrading your current lawn" requires the right selection of grass seed plus "regular applications of fertilizer (and lime where needed)." This article also said you need, "weed, insect and disease control." Sound familiar? Of course!

NO NEED TO DIG UP YOUR LAWN PLUG IN Z-52 ZOYSIA

Why not forget all that work and expense, and plug in Famous Meyer Z-52 Zoysia? To upgrade your lawn with zoysia, don't dig it up. Just set plugs into holes in the soil a foot apart or less. Let those plugs spread toward each other to form a carpet of solid turf. Growth is so vigorous it chokes out old growth you want to get rid of, WEEDS INCLUDED.

From Coast to Coast People Write to Mike Senkiw, Agronomist

From Hudson, N.Y., E. La Roche writes how he planted plugs "in the worst possible place—clay with weeds and gravel . . . It formed a 4" thick carpet of grass. Not children, dogs, cats, rabbits, extremely hot sun or drought could kill it."

From Sacramento, Calif., J.M. writes how he bought our Zoysia "for a weed infested spot—it took care of the problem."

From Indiana, M.A. Low, Sr. writes how he visited a physician friend in Albert Lea, Minn. where he saw a "whole back yard was entirely in zoysia and it was beautiful . . . a deep green."

The success of many thousands of delighted Famous® Zoysia owners awaits you. Prove it to yourself today.

Prices and Bargains

If you plant more grass that sits there and struggles—or dies on you—you may not miss your work and money. It's the time you cannot recover! IS THERE LIFE AFTER COMA?

For 35,000 Americans each year, the answer is yes.

Chas. Schneider/FPG

Most people who wake up from comas do so within the first six months.

By Michael D'Antonio

For 17-year-old Carlton Rogers, who lay deep in a coma, Thanksgiving Day 1980 began the way every day for the past four months had begun. The nurses came in to change the linen of his hospital bed and adjust his position to prevent bedsores. Next, the doctors made their examinations. Carlton's family — his mother and father, uncles and aunts — would begin their daily vigil at 10 o'clock, even though in the months since the young man was struck by a drunk driver, while hitchhiking to his suburban Washington, D.C., home, there had been no sign he would ever wake up again. But this day would be different. When the nurse changed the tube inserted in Carlton's throat to keep him breathing, he struggled briefly to consciousness and croaked, "Stop!" Carlton Rogers had begun to wake up.

Rogers eventually awoke fully. He, of course, considers himself extremely fortunate, but that doesn't mean his troubles are over. To Carlton, the four months he lay unconscious seem easy compared to the two years he has spent trying to put his life back together.

With the advent of shock-trauma centers and new medical techniques, more and more people are being brought out of comas. Of the 70,000 Americans struck each year by the tragedy of a coma, 50 percent recover. But the pain and struggle don't end with waking up. Those who emerge are often changed for life and must face problems science is only beginning to understand.

"It's a relatively unexplored field because we never had this many people coming out of comas," says Dr. Jeffrey Barth, director of the neuropsychology assessment laboratory at the University of Virginia Medical Center.

A coma is a state of profound unconsciousness from which the patient cannot be aroused, even by powerful stimuli. It may be caused by a head injury or by a condition such as a stroke. Most of those who do wake up do so within the first six months; after that time there is little hope. (There is practically nothing that can be done to help coma victims wake up, though doctors believe stimulating the senses could help.) Recovering victims have many problems to contend with. They have all lost time, in some cases months. And because most coma victims have suffered a head injury, there is generally brain damage, leading to what doctors call post-concussive syndrome — a combination of dizziness, poor coordination, amnesia and fatigue — and that may be only the tip of the iceberg. Many victims find their personalities have changed.

Handsome, blond and athletic, Carlton Rogers today shows few physical signs of his ordeal. But he knows he's different now. His concentration is poor. He doesn't remember recent events, "and people tell me I've changed," he says. "I don't really feel it, but I guess I have."

At University Hospital in Baltimore, researchers are finding hard evidence to support many coma victims' claims that they awake to find themselves much different people. In many cases the part of the brain that plays a critical role in personality has been injured, and frequently the damage releases a patient's inhibitions — usually happy

ROACH PRUFE, #1 in University Tests

In a report released by the UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA and published by the ENTOMOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF AMERICA, eight commercial and test products that included a broad spectrum of insecticides were tested against a product called "ROACH PRUFE." The tests were conducted in heavily infested apartments and showed at the end of the 8 week test period that with a single application of ROACH PRUFE in each apartment, the roach population was reduced by an average 99.5%. By comparison, with the worst results were two widely recognized insecticides currently used in aerosols and applied by exterminators. They showed a 0% (no) reduction at the end of the 8 week tests.

Commenting in a letter, the University researchers stated: "Our experience under field conditions has shown that when properly applied, the ROACH PRUFE formula provides a degree of cockroach control that is usually superior to all other registered commercial or consumer products."

Disease Carriers

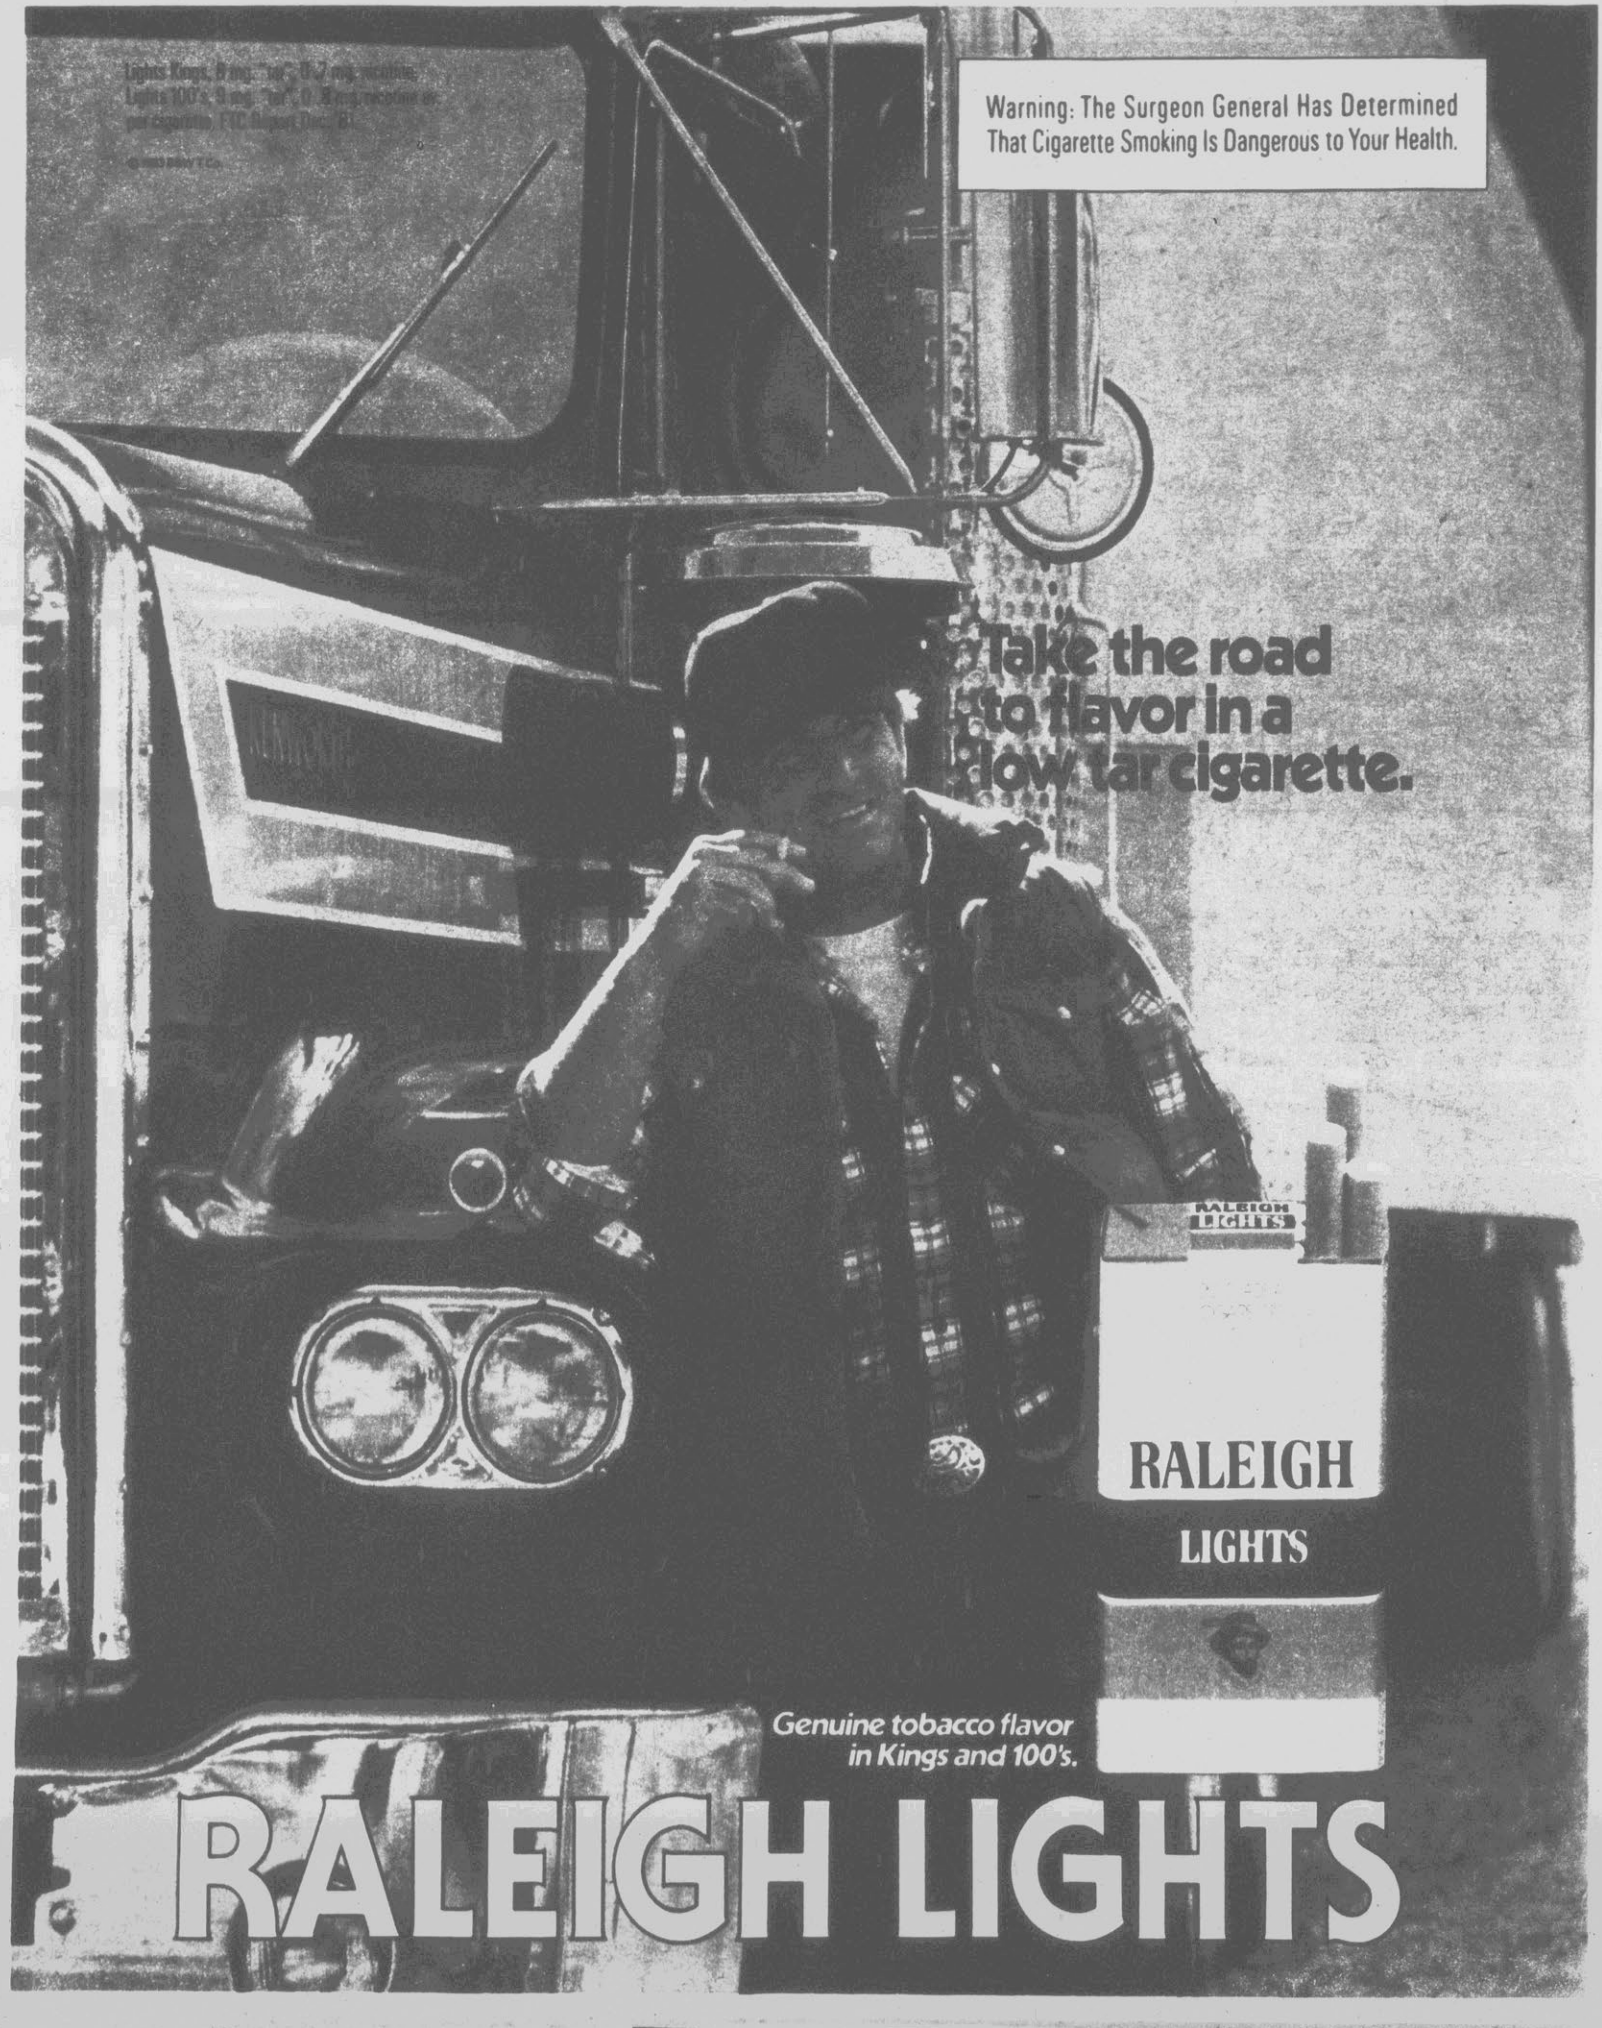

Odorless, Easy To Apply

Alan Brite, holder of 15 U.S. and foreign patents has just been awarded the first of 3 U.S. patents pending on ROACH PRUFE. Brite says: "Because roaches simply do not recognize ROACH PRUFE as an insecticide, they do not try to avoid it by scattering to other parts of your residence as they do with other insecticides. Plus the electrostatically charged powder sticks to their bodies. They then carry the powder back into the walls spreading it among the other roaches. The result is you kill not only the roaches you see, but also those hiding and multiplying in the walls."

ROACH PRUFE is odorless, non-evaporating, non-staining and non-flammable. The powder is simply applied with a teaspoon under kitchen appliances and in other hidden areas. It can be used in homes, schools, hospitals, restaurants, plus new construction.

If ROACH PRUFE is not available at your local hardware store, the manufacturer will be glad to send it to you. To obtain a one pound container, just send a check or money order for $8.90, which includes postage. Add tax if you live in California. One pound covers up to a 9 room residence. You'll need an extra pound for a basement or garage. Send to Copper Brite, Inc., Dept. 12 at 5147 W. Jefferson Blvd., Los Angeles, Ca. 90016. Copies of the University test are available by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Copper Brite, Inc., Dept. A.

people can become exuberant; introspective people can become sullen. Wide mood swings are common and so are religious conversions.

Victims are also dogged by the unanswerable question, "Why me?" Dr. Paul McClelland, assistant professor of psychiatry and director of consultation-liaison for psychiatric services at University Hospital, often tells his patients of the girl who convinced herself she came from another planet because that was the only way her mind could explain her terrible accident.

A neuropsychologist, McClelland works with recovering coma victims who have been treated at the hospital's shock-trauma emergency center. "We've gotten very good at saving people, and we're even learning to help them wake up from comas," explains McClelland. "But not enough is being done to help people with the after-effects of a coma. Couples often break up, families are torn apart because things have changed. But the old person didn't die, and we have to help him get better."

Families and friends can play a critical role in a coma patient's return to normal life, Dr. McClelland stresses. Though there could be a tendency to treat victims in a special way, that's often the last thing they need. "By treating them differently, they become different," says McClelland. "If you take away all of a person's responsibilities, that person becomes less responsible. If you take away the role he or she once played in the family, say it's the father who was in a coma, you take away part of his or her identity," he adds.

To help bolster a coma victim's sense of well being, Dr. McClelland works with entire families. A team of specialists at University Hospital determines both the physical and psychological factors of a patient's condition. McClelland then tells everyone concerned what to expect, and he counsels them on ways to ease the coma victim toward a normal life. It's often a long, gradual process, but he says that even those who suffer permanent brain damage can regain many functions.

In Carlton Rogers's case, the most difficult physical problem involved his speech. He needed an operation to help him keep breathing while he was unconscious. That, combined with his head injury, left him with limited control of his speech — and for Carlton that has been extremely painful. "I walk up to someone," he says, "and everything's fine until I open my mouth. Sometimes they think I'm retarded. I try not to let it bother me, but it does."

Researchers are slowly unraveling the effects head injuries have on behavior and basic functions. Dr. Barth breaks mental functions down into six categories: intelligence, abstract reasoning, mental flexibility, memory, motor skills and problem solving. Controlled by various parts of the brain, any or all of the functions can be affected by a head injury. By subjecting coma patients to a battery of tests, Barth can determine their specific problems. "The normal recovery curve lasts about 18 months after they regain consciousness," he explains. Nearly all of the functions that are going to be regained, he says, will come back during that 18 months.

Because Barth must help patients with the psychological side effects of their injuries, he has to get an accurate picture of what the patient was like before the accident or illness. "We talk to family, friends, teachers, all kinds of people. We try to figure out through interviews and school records what kind of person he was before the accident and how he might be different now."

Barth is also examining how basic personality traits are often magnified by head injuries that are serious enough to cause a coma. While patients may not be radically different people after a coma, their personalities could be more intense. "A serious person most likely will become even more serious," explains Barth. Problems arise, he says, when those magnified traits begin to dominate every part of daily life. Also, in cases of head injuries, patients often suffer damage to the part of the brain that inhibits impulsive actions.

The good news is that in many cases doctors are finding out the brain has more recuperative abilities than expected. While much is still unknown, researchers have documented the return of long- and short-term memory and the recovery of many of the six functions Dr. Barth tests his patients for. One research group at New York University Medical Center is even developing mental exercises that help patients train their injured brains to work better.

Finally, support groups have been formed at most major hospitals in the country to help recovering coma victims and their families handle their new challenges. "We go to extraordinary lengths to save a person's life, only to find we're left with a person who is much different, and we can't do much to help him find himself again," says Dr. Barth. But doctors have begun to try. FW

an internationally renowned floral artist creates an original sculptured bell.

The Sonia Rose

BY JEANNE HOLGATE

Life-size sculpture of intricate beauty in hand-painted bone china . . .
at the very attractive price of $60.

Entirely hand-painted.
Hand-decorated with pure 24 karat gold.
Issued in limited edition.

Fresh and arresting, The Sonia Rose is a triumph of two great traditions. Combining the beauty of floral sculpture . . . and the lilting grace of a bell . . . in an enchanting new work in fine bone china to enjoy and treasure always.

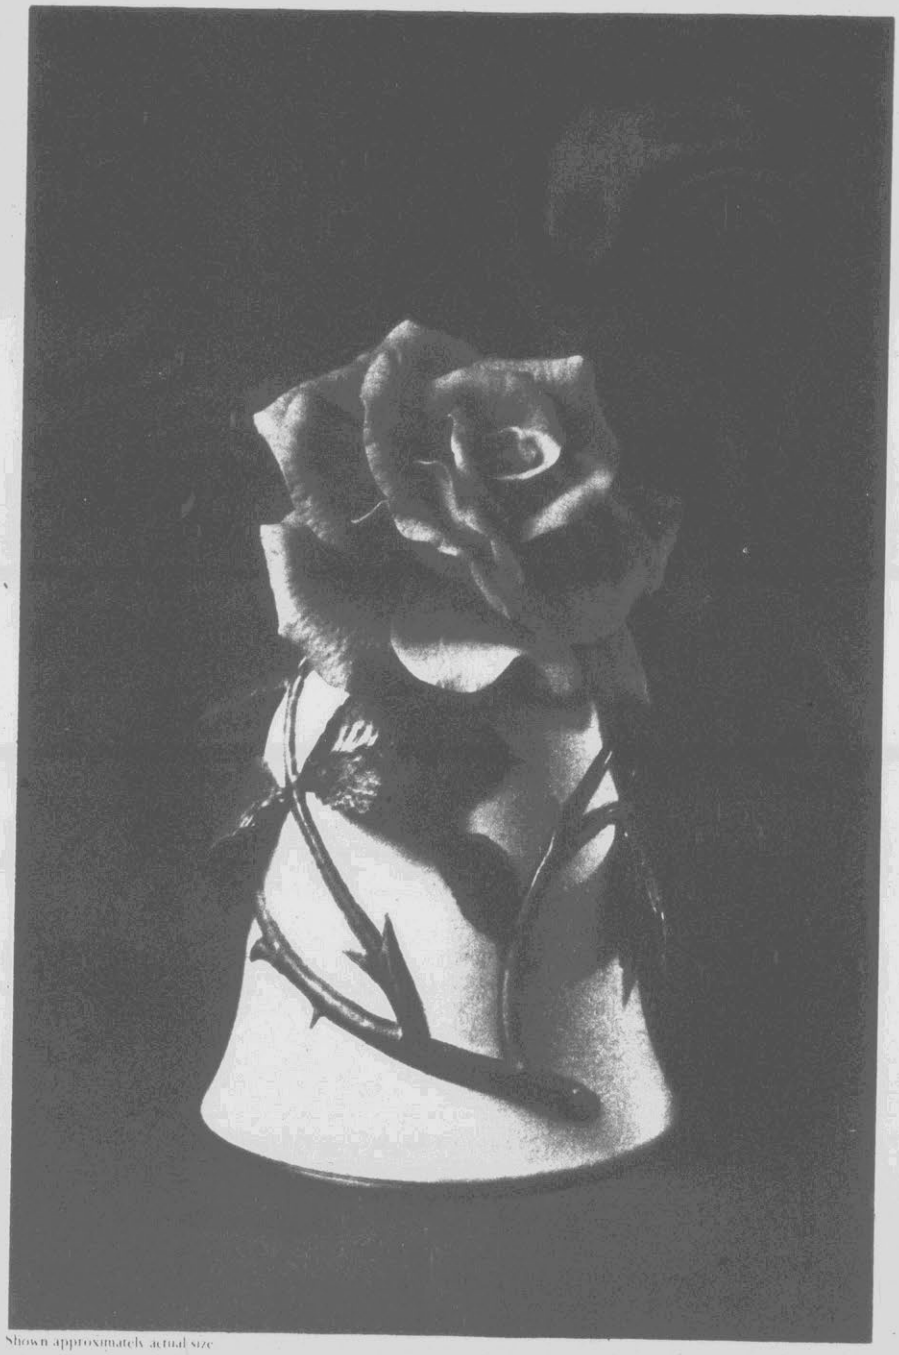

The creator of this delightful sculpture, Jeanne Holgate, has been acclaimed as America's finest floral artist. Internationally admired, her work is represented in the great floral art collections of the world, including the British Museum, America's famous Hunt Collection, and the private collection of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother.

Here, the artist has captured a rose in the radiant blush of first bloom. With entrancing precision, the sculpture portrays every vein of each leaf, every curve of each petal—even the tiny thorns growing out of the stem. The colors are of a subtlety that rivals nature itself. And the composition is superbly united by the bell of white bone china, which is hand-embellished with pure 24 karat gold.

In the tradition of the finest floral sculptures, The Sonia Rose is depicted fully life-size. Each imported bell will be individually handcrafted under the supervision of Franklin Porcelain. As an indication of the care that will be taken, the sculpture will be assembled by hand. And this intricate work will then be hand-painted—leaf by leaf—petal by petal.

Importantly for collectors, this is the first sculptured bell by Jeanne Holgate. It will be issued in a single, limited edition. A restriction of just one sculptured bell per person will be enforced, and the total edition will be limited forever to the exact number of individuals who enter orders by the end of 1983. Then, to insure the edition remains permanently closed, the bone china molds will be broken.

To brighten your home with a work of unusual beauty . . . and to acquire a future heirloom for your family . . . you need only return your application no later than the expiration date it bears: March 31, 1983. No payment is required with your reservation. But please be sure it is postmarked by March 31st.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

PUNSTER'S PARADISE

What does this forlorn little creature below represent? What else — a gopher broke. It's a Punjab, silly. In his clever book of visual puns, Gopher Broke and 59 Other Punjabs, Alan Rubin explains, "The Punjab is a made-up word . . . Describing all those things absurd . . . That come to mind each time I see . . . A thing not quite what it should be."

There's Facial Hare (rabbit on a man's nose); Peasant Under Glass (a serf pushing out against a drinking glass); Illegal (an ailing bird); Hog Wash (piglets with ears clipped to a clothesline); Carry Grant (our 18th President transported by rickshaw).

Then there's Dead Ringer (Alexander Graham Bell's tombstone); Polygon (an open, empty bird cage);

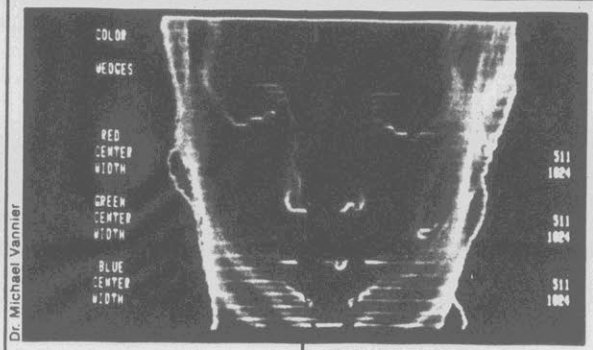

Gopher broke

Metro-Golda-Meir (the late Israeli leader inside the M.G.M. logo). And our favorite: Condescending (a guy in stripes climbing down a prison wall).

MIRACLE DEVICE AIDS DISABLED

Confined to bed, a former elevator engineer is "writing" notes and "talking," though he can't move or speak. He has amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (A.L.S.), an often fatal neurological ailment better known as Lou Gehrig's Disease. But a miraculous electronic device lets him communicate again — using only the movement in his thumb.

Dr. Michael Vannier

Developed by Sunnyvale, Calif., aerospace engineer Walt Woltosz and his wife, Ginger, the device could ultimately help an estimated one million people suffering from crippling diseases.

About a dozen of these computer devices are now in use in the U.S. First, a specially designed computer program is inserted into the machine. Via a special switch, a handicapped person can activate the machine without having to press on the computer's keyboard. It's slow going, but with steady pressure on the switch, he can select words from a vocabulary stored in the computer and build sentences shown on the screen. A patient can "write" letters, because the computer has a paper printout, and "talk" via a voice synthesizer that translates computer signals into audible speech. By hooking up a home's wiring to the computer, a patient can control appliances, lights, radio and TV.

The computer, which costs $2,700, is even helping a high school football coach stay on the job. An A.L.S. victim who has lost the use of his arms, he can command the machine by foot switch to diagram plays for his assistants.

SIMULATED SURGERY IN 3-D

Through 3-D video, a person needing corrective facial and skull surgery can now see the results before the surgeon even picks up a scalpel.

The new technique, first developed by engineers for designing military aircraft, uses shaded, three-dimensional facial images constructed from two-dimensional CAT scan pictures. By rearranging the 3-D images, the surgeon can now simulate each step of the operation, typically done for victims of tumors, birth defects or accidents.

According to radiologist Dr. Michael Vannier, who is spearheading the project along with plastic surgeon Dr. Jeffrey Marsh, both of Washington University Medical Center in St. Louis, the images are so realistic in scale that prostheses can even be designed to replace facial bones, an eye socket or part of a jaw.

Any hospital with a CAT scanner can utilize the new diagnostic technique, and with more than 1,000 scanners in U.S. hospitals, Vannier says he expects it to be commonplace in craniofacial surgery in the next year or two.

PANDA-MONIUM

Last year panda lovers everywhere became alarmed when Ling-Ling at the Washington, D.C., Zoo didn't give birth as expected. Few pandas breed in captivity, and only about 1,000 pandas are still in existence, due to an agricultural expansion in China that gradually destroyed many of the bamboo forests, the pandas' main food source.

This Wednesday (check local listings) PBS airs a fascinating National Geographic special, Save the Panda. It shows the elusive creature in the mountains of China, within a 770-square-mile wildlife preserve.

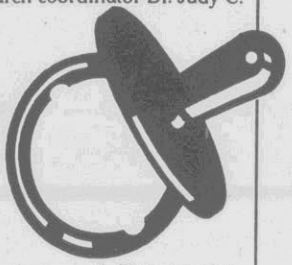

In the winter's bitter cold, the Chinese-American research team observes the pandas' living, feeding and mating habits — all to help the black and white giants make it to the next generation. Viewers will also see the capturing and collaring of a wild panda for the first time on film, rare footage of a newborn cub (they weigh only a few ounces) nuzzling its mother and a special behind-the-scenes look at Ling-Ling.

PACIFIERS HELP PREEMIES

Giving pacifiers to premature infants during tube feedings may lead to faster weight gains and shorter hospital stays, says a new study.

"We wanted to see if we could improve the sucking reflex of these infants so that they could move on to oral feedings more effectively," research coordinator Dr. Judy C. Bernbaum of Philadelphia's Children's Hospital told us.

Preemies are routinely fed through tubes because they haven't fully developed the sucking behavior of full-term babies. Of the 30 premature infants studied, the 15 who were given pacifiers acquired the sucking reflex more quickly than the nonpacifier group and, despite the same caloric intake, put on weight faster. Dr. Bernbaum thinks the sucking may stimulate hormones that improve digestion and reduce restlessness, with less energy lost.

Infants who used pacifiers also reached the five-pound weight necessary for hospital release about a week earlier.

● GROWING PAINS! A gardener poring over a new seed catalog noticed one letter wrong in the name of each of these vegetables: 1. Pets. 2. Parrots. 3. Cord. 4. Jeans. 5. Hams. 6. Squasm. How quickly can you correct the mistakes?

1. Peas 2. Carrots 3. Corn 4. Beans 5. Yams 6. Squash

● Crazy Fingers! Hold a book in front of a mirror. Try to walk your fingers from one corner to an opposite corner while viewing the book in the mirror.

● Sum Split! Split 40 into two parts so that the smaller part plus half the larger will equal 1/6th the larger plus twice the smaller. What parts?

Ten and thirty will do it.

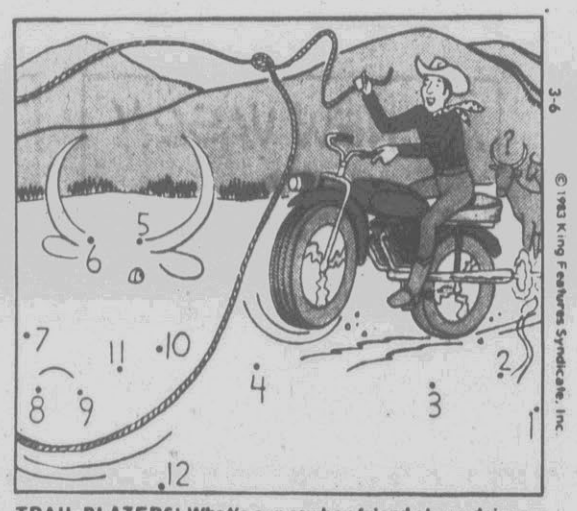

● Duck Soup! At what hour do ducks rise? At the quack of dawn. What do you call a barrelful of ducks? A quackerbarrel.

DRY AND MIGHTY!

Challenge: Place a dry water glass upside down on the table. Now, as shown above, grasp the glass with thumb and forefinger, and try to pick it up.

Secret: Prepare for this stunt by rubbing your fingers thoroughly dry on a handkerchief or napkin. Then, squeeze the glass as you attempt to lift it.

If your fingers are not completely dry, they will slip, as others attempting the trick unknowingly soon will discover.

SPELLBINDER

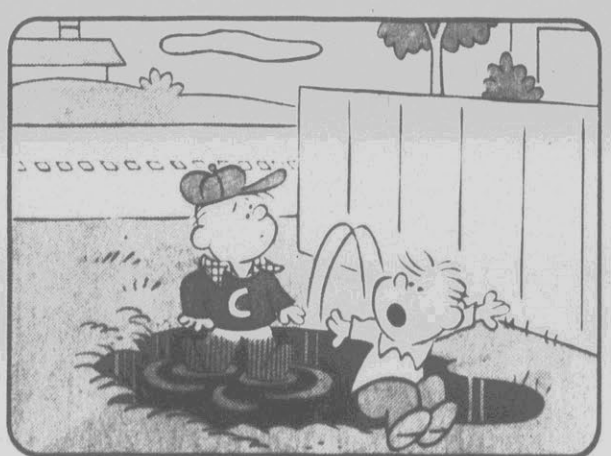

SCORE 10 points for using all the letters in the word below to form two complete words:

ACERBATE

THEN score 2 points each for all words of four letters or more found among the letters.

Try to score at least 50 points.

Possible anagram: Beat, Care.

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: 1. Cloud is smaller 2. Street line is missing 3. Letter is different 4. Fence is shorter. 5. Puddle is smaller. 6. Arm is moved

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

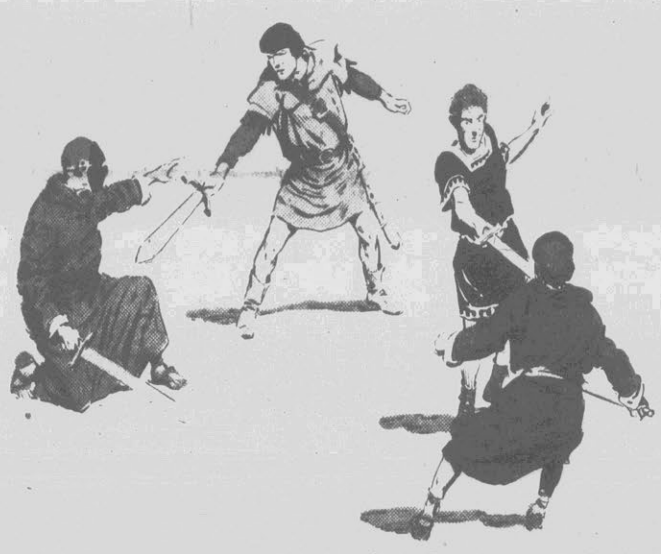

Our Story: THE SECOND DAY'S COMPETITION BEGINS AT NOON. IN THE MORNING KAREN TOURS SALONAE WITH ALP ARSLAN. THEY SAVOR THE SMELL OF HOT CAKES AND OF A HIRED GUIDE'S LIES. "THIS IS THE POOL IN WHICH NARCISSUS DROWNED," HE EXPLAINS AS KAREN ROCKS WITH RATHER TOO MUCH LAUGHTER. WHEN ALP STEADIES HER...

SHE STEALTHILY SLIPS THE LAD'S KNIFE FROM ITS SHEATH, CASTING IT BEHIND. "THAT WILL COST HIM," SHE THINKS.

ONLY AS THE KNIFE-THROWING EVENT APPROACHES DOES ALP NOTICE THE LOSS. HIS PARTNER PRINCE VALIANT HAS EARNED HIGH POINTS. BUT FORCED TO BORROW AN UNFAMILIAR BLADE, ALP VENTURES WITHIN A HAIR'S BREADTH OF MURDER. HE AND VAL SLIP INTO SECOND PLACE.

THEY RECOUP WITH SWORDPLAY. THE MASKED OLD MAN IS AGILE BUT HIS ARMS ARE WEAK; VAL TRIUMPHS. BUT THE MASKED YOUNGSTER FIGHTS LONG AND HARD, RETIRING ONLY WITH A BLADE AT HIS THROAT. BY NIGHTFALL, VAL AND ALP, ALONG WITH THE STRANGERS, ARE FAR IN THE LEAD.

YET ALP IS STILL TROUBLED ABOUT THE MISSING KNIFE. "KAREN? ARE YOU THERE?" HE CALLS INTO THE DARKENED ROOM AT THE INN.

BUT IT IS VALETA WHO SITS BY THE FIRE AS ALP SPILLS OUT HIS TALE. "VALETA TOOK YOUR KNIFE, I'M SURE," SHE SAYS, PRETENDING TO BE KAREN. "SHE IS VERY SHY -- BUT VERY MUCH IN LOVE. THE THOUGHT OF YOUR WINNING AND MARRYING GRENDL..." AS ALP DEPARTS TO PONDER THIS NEWS VALETA SITS BY THE FIRE, ENJOYING WHAT JEALOUSY HAS MADE HER DO.
