Recreation Dept. Given Special Olympics Money

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Reporter

Two presentations of assistance to the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department were made at Wednesday night's monthly meeting of the department's commission.

One was a gift fund of $1,200 donated by the Greenville Kiwanis Club, with the club's president, Billy Weston, presenting a check to Bill Twine, coordinator of special populations for the Recreation Department.

The Greenville Kiwanis Club's donation is to be used to purchase T-shirts to be given to Special Olympians taking part in the annual Spring Olympics event to be held April 14.

"I feel this is a program the Greenville Kiwanis may want to carry on in the future as part of Kiwanis' international work," Weston said.

Twine remarked that "the generous donation is particularly welcome this year, as we've not been able to have T-shirts for the Olympians for the past three or four years. We're certainly glad to be able to have them again, especially since it's the 10th anniversary year for the Pitt County-Greenville Special Olympics program."

The T-shirts will be emblazoned with two logos — those of the Special Olympics and of Kiwanis International. Approximately 500 olympians of all ages are expected to register for this year's event which gives handicapped persons from the county and city an opportunity to compete in the annual spring event.

Recreation and Parks executive director Boyd Lee noted that "the Kiwanis gift is a response to the gift guide brochure prepared under the leadership of Dr. Robert Deyton. This donation, plus another individual one for $25, shows that the gift idea is really paying off. We're delighted."

"The other gift was that of $100 'seed money' presented by the Greenville Foundation to establish a Recreation and Parks Department Trust with the foundation.

Richard R. (Ric) Cox, executive director of the foundation, and Dr. Herbert Hadley, the foundation's chairman, presented the seed money to Lib Proctor, chairman of the Recreation and Parks Commission.

Dr. Carl Wille headed the committee that worked on formulating a resolution to authorize the department to take part in the foundation's trust program. The resolution was approved by the City Council on Feb. 10.

The Greenville Foundation is the umbrella agency that coordinates arrangements and establishes initial trust funds for various public agencies. Once a trust is

Lebanon Rules Out An Israeli Peace Treaty

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer
NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salem said today his nation refuses to sign a peace treaty with Israel, although negotiations for withdrawal of Israeli troops have made "a great deal of progress."

Salem told a news conference on the sidelines of the summit for non-aligned nations here that he is going to Washington, Paris, London and Rome to promote the Lebanese demand for an Israeli withdrawal. Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization have promised to join in a simultaneous withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon, he said.

U.S., French, British and Italian soldiers are in Beirut to help the withdrawal of Israeli forces. But negotiations on details of the withdrawal have bogged down and the Israeli forces still remain nine months after their invasion of Lebanon.

Asked to comment on Israel's demand in the negotiations for a "normalization" of relations with Lebanon, Salem replied:

"We will have no peace treaty and no normalization. We are not going to have any political relations or economic relations with Israel, nor will we accept any kind of residual military presence on Lebanese territory."

Meanwhile, at the Israeli resort town of Netanya, Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir was planning to leave Friday for Washington to tell Secretary of State George Shultz about withdrawal talks there today with Lebanon.

Conviction Of Hobby Upheld

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A federal appeals court today upheld the convictions of a former North Carolina labor leader and his business partner for conspiring to defraud the government of federal job training funds.

Wilbur Hobby's and Mort Levi's trial was not tainted by faulty jury instructions nor by a discriminatory grand jury system, the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals said.

Hobby and Levi were both convicted of the conspiracy to defraud charge. Hobby, former president of the North Carolina AFL-CIO, was also found guilty of misapplying federal money, and Levi of hiring ineligible students for job training program.

The two men were sentenced to 18-month terms but have remained free pending their appeals.

The charges involved $129,429 in Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) funds awarded for a training program to Hobby's Raleigh printing company, Precision Graphics Inc.

The government argued that Hobby had made an illegal profit from the money by using the funds to rent a computer owned by another company he owned.

Firm Seeking Build Psychiatric Hospital

A Macon, Ga., firm, Charter Medical Inc., has applied for a certificate of need to build a 65-bed psychiatric hospital in Greenville.

A public hearing on the proposal will be held by the Eastern Carolina Health Systems Agency March 22 at 6 p.m. at the Willis Building at the intersection of First and Reade streets.

Tom Gelarden, executive director of health facility development for Charter Medical, said the firm is "looking at a number of sites" although "we have not specifically tied one down at this point."

Gelarden said "Greenville is a growing community," and there is "certainly a need for the type of service Charter provides."

The official said "the primary focus of the facility" will be to provide in-patient care for adolescents, "although there will be some adult services."

The total project in Greenville, according to Gelarden, will cost between $6 million and $8 million, "and we hope to be under construction later this year if we are awarded the certificate of need." Construction of the single-story hospital would be completed in a year or less, he noted.

Charter Medical, a stock company listed on the American Stock Exchange, operates 44 hospitals in the United States and several foreign countries, including Charter Hills Hospital, a 100-bed facility in Greensboro, and a 75-bed hospital in Winston-Salem. The firm has recently received approval for a new facility in Raleigh.

The name of the Greenville hospital would be Charter Pines Hospital.

Gelarden said the Greenville facility would "serve a much larger area than just the city or the county. It would draw from a very wide area," and "provide a type of care missing" in the area at the present time.

Steve Creech, director of the Pitt County Mental Health Center, said "we need more psychiatric beds in this area," but he said, "It's my understanding that additional beds are in the area health care plan for Pitt County Memorial Hospital. If we can get additional beds there, I think it would be adequate to take care of our needs for the immediate future."

Creech said that "I think, with the continued planning for sufficient beds in the area, it's important to keep in mind the costs of hospitalization and keeping people out of state hospitals."

Pitt County Memorial Hospital now has 35 beds in its psychiatric department, and a spokesman this morning said "they are all full."

In addition to the hearing on the Charter Medical application, the ECHSA will conduct hearings March 22 on applications from PCMH for expansion of surgical, radiology and emergency facilities and on an application by PCMH for the establishment of open heart surgery.

Persons wishing to comment on the applications should contact the ECHSA at 758-1372.

Social Security Rescue Bill Approved By House

By CLIFF HAAS

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — In a move that would affect virtually every American, the House has passed a $165.3 billion plan to rescue Social Security by imposing higher payroll taxes, curbing benefits and raising the retirement age from 65.

By a 282-148 vote Wednesday night, the House sent the measure to the Senate, where the finance committee was expected to wrap up work on its version of the package today. The full Senate is expected to vote next week.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., predicted Congress will have the legislation on President Reagan's desk by the end of the month.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., expressed confidence today that the Senate would quickly pass legislation similar to that adopted by the House.

He was asked if the measure would be identical to the House bill and he replied, "I wouldn't say that."

The House bill follows the bipartisan recommendations of the National Commission on Social Security Reform, calling for affluent retirees to pay income tax on half their benefits; a six-month delay in this July's cost-of-living increase; accelerated payroll tax increases; a boost in the levy on the self-employed, and mandatory Social Security coverage for new federal workers.

Those measures are supposed to keep Social Security solvent through the rest of the decade and solve two-thirds of the system's long-term, $1.9 trillion deficit.

During House consideration, legislators voted 228-202 to accept an amendment by Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, to eliminate the remaining third of the long-term deficit by gradually increasing the retirement age from 65 to 67 in the next century.

The Senate package is expected to parallel the House measure.

"It has taken this House two years to make the journey from crisis to compromise," said House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois.

"For the last two years, we have watched the fuse burn on Social Security — paralyzed by partisan bickering," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. "As Washington maneuvered for political advantage, the balance in the retirement fund continued to fall."

Rep. Bill Frenzel, R-Minn., reflected the feelings of many of his colleagues when he said the rescue package "isn't my choice, but it's the only choice. ... If the bill fails we will all deserve the chaos that will result."

Under the bill, the 116 million Americans paying into the Social Security system and the 36 million people receiving benefits will share the burden of bailing out the system.

In addition, people between the ages of 40 and 23 would have to wait until age 66 to draw full Social Security benefits, and people under 23 would have to wait until age 67.

The House also rejected, 296-132, a rival amendment offered by 82-year-old Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., to leave the retirement age at 65 and rely instead on a 0.53 point payroll tax hike in 2010 to solve the long-term shortfall.

No Let-Up In Scrutiny Of EPA Said Planned

ACTING REPLACEMENT — Hernandez, left, will assume duties Deputy Environmental protection of Anne Burford, right, who resigned Agency Administrator John the post yesterday. (AP Laserphoto)

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Anne McGill Burford is gone, but congressional investigators vowed no letup in their scrutiny of the Environmental Protection Agency, which she left crippled by controversy over allegations of mismanagement and conflict of interest.

"The investigation will continue. The saga is just going to begin," Rep. Elliott H. Levitas, D-Ga., said Wednesday after President Reagan accepted "with great regret" Mrs. Burford's resignation as EPA administrator for the past 22 months.

Mrs. Burford said the furor over the EPA and her direction of it had disabled the agency and distracted the president from pursuing his domestic and international goals. Reagan called her departure "an occasion of sorrow for us all."

EPA Deputy Administrator John Hernandez will serve as acting administrator until a successor to Mrs. Burford is found.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said the White House would consider suggestions from many sources in the search for a successor to Mrs. Burford, including Congress, the Republican Party, private industry, environmentalists and "whoever wishes to make their views known."

The chairmen of the half-dozen congressional panels investigating EPA said their inquiries into possible wrongdoing and mismanagement within the agency will continue unabated.

"Anne Gorsuch-Burford is not the issue," said Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., chairman of the House Government Operations subcommittee on the environment. "The issue is the operation of the Environmental Protection Agency and the implementation of our environmental laws."

"We will continue this investigation until every rock is overturned and every fact uncovered," said Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Science and Technology subcommittee on the environment.

ADAPTERS BEING SENT

I've read that some stores have stopped sale of Texas Instruments 99/4A home computer because there is the possibility that the transformer unit could cause an electrical shock. I am concerned about this because we recently bought one. Will they be recalled? A.P.

A Texas Instruments spokesman said the possibility of an electrical shock is remote and that no hazardous incidents have yet been reported. However, in laboratory tests, a potential for user contact with electricity has been determined to be possible if the transformer fails. Therefore, the company is mailing each TI99/4A owner a transformer adapter with a built-in fuse. To install it, one just plugs the transformer into the adapter and the adapter into the wall outlet. If you returned a rebate or warranty card, the company has your name and address and you will receive the modification adapter automatically. However, if you're not sure that the company has your address, you may call 800-858-4565 or 800-527-3550 and ask for an adapter.

New TI-99/4A computers will have a green "safety checked" label on the box signifying that the modification has been made. A similar green label will be sent with your adapter so you can indicate the modification on your home computer.

Reader Has For Vote

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: A recent column has brought about this letter. Lately some of your women readers have written to complain because their husbands call them "Mama."

Well, 58 years ago I married Mildred Watkins from Virginia, and I wouldn't trade her for the national debt. We have four nice children, 12 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren, and they all call her "Mama." I have called her "Mama" from the very beginning, and she has never complained. It's a term of endearment, and she adores it.

During the eight years when I was governor of Kentucky and she was Kentucky's first lady, she was known to everybody as "Mama Chandler." Even the state police called her "Mama." They still do, and she loves it.

With every good wish, I am
ALBERT B. CHANDLER, VERSAILLES, KY.

DEAR MR. CHANDLER: ("Happy," right?) Thanks for the pro-Mama vote. Your letter was a real upper.

DEAR ABBY: Eight years ago our mother passed away after a long illness. Six months later our father married a woman who is the complete opposite of our mother. She's bossy, argumentative and outspoken. In spite of all that, we are grateful that Dad seems content with her.

The problem: Not once since our father married this woman have we been able to have a private conversation with him. (We have tried.) When we call long distance (they live 150 miles away), she gets on the extension and horns in. When we see them, she doesn't let him out of her sight for a minute. She reads every letter we send Dad. She even opens the letters addressed to him.

We would enjoy a little private time with our father alone, but she will not allow it. What do you suggest?

LOST: ONE FATHER

DEAR LOST: Don't put all the blame on her. If your father wanted a little private time with you, he could arrange it. She may be calling the tunes, but it still takes two to tango.

DEAR ABBY: Last summer when I just turned 18, I had a very short affair with a 14-year-old boy. (He looked older.) As if that wasn't bad enough, I became pregnant. I debated on whether to tell him, and I finally did. He was very upset, as was to be expected.

I was preparing to go off to college and I knew there was no way I could have a baby, so I had an abortion. The boy agreed that it was the best thing to do and promised to pay half the cost.

I had the abortion last September, and he hasn't paid a dime toward it. I talked to him on the telephone a few times and he kept promising to send me the money, but he never did. I think I have waited long enough and don't know what to do now. I had to borrow the money for the abortion, and I have to pay it back. I've considered telling his parents about the whole thing, but most parents will take their child's side, so what good would it do?

What do you think I should do?

NAMELESS, PLEASE

DEAR NAMELESS: Because the "boy" was 14, you could possibly be in trouble for contributing to the delinquency of a minor, or possibly charged with statutory rape. Leave bad enough alone, and write off the loss as tuition in the school of experience.

'Struttin' Southern' Follies Planned

A report on the follies presentation "Struttin' Southern" was given by Mrs. Edward Smith at the Greenville Service League meeting Monday.

The program will be held May 13-14 at Wright Auditorium. Members will be selling tickets in the community this month. Proceeds will benefit the Laughinghouse Hospital Fund.

Members will be preparing desserts for the March 29 awards dinner given by the Pitt County Hospital Gifts Committee.

Mrs. Ed Harris said a luncheon meeting for sustaining members has been planned for April 13.

President Mrs. Frank Layne said the next meeting will be April 11. Committee reports included one on February Bloodmobile visits. The Rose High visit resulted in the collection of 178 units with 22 workers giving 76½ hours. Units totaling 117 were collected Feb. 15 at Pitt Community College. A total of 55½ hours were worked by 17 volunteers and the Feb. 28 visit at the Moose Lodge was staffed by 26 league members who worked 88 hours and 173 units were donated. A March 10 visit will be made to D.H. Conley and on March 24 at Fletcher Dormitory.

Mrs. William McConnell reported on the hospital gift shop and Mrs. C.W. Harvey Jr. announced the need of a workshop to prepare Eastern tray favors for Pitt Memorial Hospital. Four layettes were furnished last month and the Lending Chest had three items of equipment returned, answered four calls and received a donation.

Mrs. Horton Rountree received five memorial gifts and answered a call from the Laughinghouse Fund. Mrs. John King, placement chairman, discussed the fall hospital work chart and reminded members of the Easter holidays for workers. Mrs. Jack Whichard, overall Charity Ball chairman, expressed appreciation to her chairmen and members.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

It should be of some comfort to parents to know that in this age of sophisticated communication and premature independence, you can still lay a little guilt on your kids.

Not a lot. Most of the old tried-and-true threats have fallen by the wayside, but there's still one phrase that gets 'em every time: "Never mind! I'll do it myself!"

I have seen a kid pull himself up from the last 15 seconds of a Super Bowl game when the score is even and his team is kicking for a field goal to grab the garbage from his mother and head for the door, just because he had just heard, "Never mind! I'll do it myself."

The phrase works for several reasons. It's a last resort, and both of you know it. You know he's not going to do it the first time you ask, so you build to a climax.

Here's the way it works. You say, "You clear the table this minute or those dishes will never come clean." (He's been sleeping in the same socks all winter. You know he's not going to get too choked up over a little tomato sauce.)

Your second volley: "You clear the table now or you will never watch TV again/go on a vacation with us/receive an allowance/be allowed to sleep up." (So what's so terrible about being dropped from a family? You've done it before.)

This one is spoken with feeling. "Okay, I've had it. I'm only telling you one more time. Get to those dishes or I'll come in there and you'll wish I hadn't." (Mom has a history of non-violence. She's faking.)

Finally, it comes: "NEVER MIND! I'LL DO IT MYSELF."

It never fails. Bodies scurry, plates are scraped and water begins to run somewhere.

A lot of it is delivery. It has to combine the resignation of St. Joan of Arc, the commitment of St. Theresa, the suffering of a thousand women in labor and the eye contact of Jessica Savitch.

Guilt is hard these days to sustain. I don't know why. Maybe it's because the mystery is gone out of parenting. Kids learn too much too soon and we have no surprises left.

One thing for sure, there is still a mystique around: "Never mind! I'll do it myself." Maybe it's because no one has ever dared to imagine what would happen if she did.

My mother is 72 years old and I still don't know.

Frozen chopped onions, green peppers, or olives can be loosely packed in the freezer, ready to add to soups or stews.

Step In Right Direction

Perdue Farms Inc. dedicated its new broiler complex at Robersonville this week with state and area officials on hand.

Donald W. Mabe, president of Perdue Farms Inc., said the firm's North Carolina investment now exceeds $60 million. There is a processing plant in Lewiston, a facility at Cofield, a hatchery at Halifax and broiler houses throughout the eastern section. The firm spends $60 million annually for grain, corn and soybeans. The Robersonville plant employs 250 local people and eventually will add another shift to employ an additional 220.

The firm is the fourth largest broiler producer in the United States and is the largest supplier of fresh poultry to eastern markets. Mabe said the firm has constructed 646 chicken houses since 1973 and still needs 110 more.

Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham said the Perdue operation is all domestic, "a product grown, processed and used here without competing with a European market. We need more of this type of private agriculture, private agribusiness."

Mabe cited the industriousness of area workers in bringing about the decision to locate in Robersonville. He said 10 North Carolina workers will produce what 11 will in most states.

Certainly Perdue Farms is an indication that North Carolina industry and agriculture are moving in the right direction. This is a partnership of farming and industry. The farmers are producing a product and industry is processing it and providing the market.

E.T. Finds A Home

E.T., the little space creature who captured the hearts of America, is leaving — but not before making an unprecedented impression on movie goers of this area.

The film that made E.T. famous is having its final showings at the Plitt Theater today. There was ample opportunity to see it. The film ran for 39 consecutive weeks which is a record for Greenville.

For those who don't recall, "E.T." was the talk of the country last summer and it began its local showing on June 17. It lasted through the summer, fall and most of the winter with 958 showings and some 40,000 people viewing it. The film grossed about $100,000 in Greenville.

If an extra terrestrial creature ever shows up and wants to be friendly, the way will have been made easier by E.T. Certainly if the creature has the attributes of E.T., Pitt County might be a good place for him or her to land.

Babies Count, Too

RALEIGH — A three-pound baby looks pretty much like any other newborn. He's much smaller, of course, and he's a little blue. His head looks a bit too big for his tiny little torso and he's not likely to have much baby fat.

But he's fully formed, all the fingers, toes, arms and legs he'll need. The problems with a child who weighs so little is that he's probably two months premature and his lungs aren't ready to work on their own.

In the past six years, North Carolina has made a big stride forward regarding its infant mortality rate. In 1976, North Carolina had an infant death rate of 17.8 per 1,000 live births. By last year, that figure was down to 13.2, a drop of 26 percent. Private pediatricians and doctors working for the Department of Human Resources say that that drop came about in large part because of the state's perinatal program. That program is designed to prevent premature births and when there is such a birth to provide the care a three-pound blue baby needs.

But the perinatal program is in trouble. Funding for the program as proposed in the 1983-84 budget currently before the Legislature would fall an estimated $1.2 million short of that needed to continue the program in its current form. For the following year, the N.C. Pediatric Society contends, it would fall $1.3 million shy.

There are several aspects to the perinatal program. First, doctors try to identify women who are likely to have premature babies. Then, through prenatal care, they try to extend the length of her pregnancy. It might mean telling her to give up some bad health habits during pregnancy. It might mean giving her a new drug to inhibit labor. Second, when a premature baby is born, he'll get special care. If the family doesn't have the money, or the health insurance, to pay for this care, the perinatal program will pick up the tab.

How expensive is the care? The perinatal society reports in a press release that the average 22-day stay in Winston-Salem's Baptist Hospital intensive care ward for infants costs $10,000. For the smallest babies, the cost can be as high as $1,000 a day.

But, according to the pediatricians, the program works. "Medical science technology is keeping smaller premature infants alive each year, and not only alive, but with better prospects for a normal future," the pediatric society says.

The pediatricians have brought their concern to the General Assembly. Dr. Steven Edwards, chairman of the society's legislative committee, warned the Wake County legislative delegation this month that "children needing care will not get it and children will die."

Already, in an effort to cut losses incurred by its infant intensive care program, Duke Hospital in Durham has cut the number of beds by 25 percent. Edwards warned that other hospitals will soon follow. They cannot afford to provide care to infants if the state is unwilling to pick up the costs of those who cannot pay.

This is not just a problem for the poor. If the total number of beds is reduced, it means the day may come when all the beds are taken and a child who needs space will be denied it, even if his parents can pay. Edwards says that day is coming. The state, by paying for care administered to the poor, makes it economically feasible for hospitals to have enough space to serve all economic classes.

In a tight budget year, the Expansion Budget Committee on Human Resources is going to have a tough time finding the extra money needed. It should be a discomfort to them to know that some young lives may lie in the balance.

Cohen was singing, "Don't cry for me, Saudi Arabia."

"You seem very happy, Cohen," I said. "Would it have anything to do with the price of oil going down?"

"I'm not happy or unhappy," he said. "I just take things as they come. I didn't slash my wrists when the OPEC cartel raised the price to $34 a barrel, and I'm not going to dance in the streets now that they're cutting their own throats."

"You're the only one I know that doesn't get emotional about oil."

"I never considered what OPEC did a personal thing against me. After all, they had the oil and we didn't, and in a capitalist society anyone should be able to get what he can for his goods. I paid the going rate when petroleum went up and now I'll pay the going rate when it goes down. It's strictly business with me, nothing personal."

"But isn't there the tiniest bit of joy in your heart that the cartel is on the ropes, after what they did to the world for 10 years?"

"I never hated anyone because they had oil in the ground. I'm too big a man for that sort of thing. The cartel gave stability to the energy market during the oil shortage, and now that there is a glut it's every country for itself. In life there are peaks and valleys, even for oil-producing nations."

"That's beautiful, Cohen. I never heard anyone talk about OPEC that way before. Did you feel that way in 1982 when you got your heating bill?"

"Nobody likes a big heating bill. But I'm one of those people who lights candles instead of cursing the darkness. I never even got mad when I stood in line for 45 minutes at the gas station to fill my tank at $1.95 a gallon."

"What did you do?"

"I said, 'Cohen, the Arab sheiks have nothing personal against you. Without oil they would still be eating sand. I would do the same thing if I were in their situation. After all, how long is their wealth going to last?"

"And now what do you say when you drive up to a pump?"

"I don't have as much time to talk to myself at a gas station any more. But while I'm filling my tank I say, 'Cohen, you had nothing to do with OPEC falling apart, and if the oil-producing nations want to commit fratricide, it's not your problem.'"

"I wish I could see things so dispassionately," I said.

"I guess it was the way I was brought up. My father was the only person in our neighborhood during the depression that didn't hate John D. Rockefeller because he controlled the Standard Oil Company."

"Everyone says we should be worried if the price of oil goes down too far, because it will wreck the banks."

"The banks are not my worry. They had a good run loaning the oil-producing countries money when they were rolling in petrodollars. Now they have to live with their bad loans. It's nothing personal with me, you understand? But banks are something I don't spend much time fretting about. I guess it was the way I was brought up. My father always felt about banks the way Willy Sutton the bank robber did. They were just a place where the money was."

"My attitude is different, Cohen. I believe OPEC tried to shaft the world, and now that they're being shafted by each other, I feel warm all over. I always react this way when someone else is being shafted. There's nothing that makes me happier than an oil glut, and I chuckle every time the price of oil drops a dollar a barrel. Am I wrong to feel that way?"

"It's not your fault," he said. "It was probably the way you were brought up."

'Eating Crow' Time Is Ahead

WASHINGTON — Transformation of the once-dreaded MX missile from the weapon designed to close "the window of vulnerability" to a mere political symbol was confirmed by President Reagan himself during a recent Oval Office meeting with Sen. John Tower.

Reagan did not protest when Tower, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said Congress never would buy anything like the full complex of 200 MX missiles originally planned. Tower then added: "Well, Mr. President, this is a huge crowd and there's going to be plenty of it for all of us to eat."

Smiling his wry grin, Reagan agreed.

Strength For Today

We live in an age which thinks very little about angels. In fact, most people would dismiss the whole idea of angels with a smile. Yet, the Bible undoubtedly teaches that angels are real.

And they are not all in heaven. They are right here on earth around about us.

Every person has a guardian angel, and hosts of angels (the word means "messenger") bear tidings to our hearts from God himself and then go to the very throne of God carrying our needs, wishes and petitions. They are in the midst of the world's busy life, definitely carrying on a ministry of helpfulness and protection.

The conviction that there are heavenly messengers surrounding us every minute ought to make even the coldest-hearted person respond with faith and hope. The God who marks the fall of a sparrow is never indifferent to any thing in the lives of his children.

Nor was there any dissent from his two top national security advisers, William P. Clark and Tom Reed. Considering what has happened to the weapon this country planned as an answer to the Soviet missile buildup, MX backers from Reagan to Reed on down the chain of command will be gorging on crow when the Scowcroft Commission — with the president's support — relegates the MX to mainly political symbolism.

The MX study commission, headed by retired Lt. Gen. Brent Scowcroft (President Ford's national security adviser), has reached no final conclusions and has more than a month left before making its report. But signals are clear: Instead of basing U.S. security on a weapon — the MX — viewed on Capitol Hill as politically dangerous and militarily uncertain, the commission is expected to propose between 500 and 1,000 easily-mobile "midgetmen" missiles. Attempting symbolic salvation for the president's credibility, a meaningless number of MXs (probably 50 or less) will be thrown in the pot.

The commission's thinking has been carefully reported to the White House. It is being confided to congressional leaders with equal scrupulousness at a series of private briefings that just started.

Both political and strategic considerations are claimed by the administration. Copyright 1983 Field Enterprises, Inc.

Congress Leaves Bankruptcies In Doubt

NEW YORK (AP) — Bankruptcy decisions are being handed down by the nation's judges in staggering volume. More staggering perhaps is the fear that many or even all the decisions are being made without backing of law.

One former bankruptcy judge, Joel Lewittes, says about former associates: "Their determinations may be null and void." Equally disturbing is his view that "every judge might be open to lawsuits."

His fears are echoed by some of the best minds in the legal world, by professors and by members of Congress. Bankruptcy judges nevertheless continue to hear cases and render decisions.

Professor Vern Countryman of Harvard Law School expresses another concern, this one involving financing for companies seeking to reorganize under protection of the bankruptcy courts.

"Nobody can give a lender a valid opinion on such loans," he says, meaning they cannot assure clients they have protection of the law in advancing large sums. Lawyers, he said, are "unwilling or unable to give opinions."

The doubts and fears arose after the U.S. Supreme Court last year decided that the jurisdiction of federal bankruptcy judges was unconstitutional, since their appointments were made without approval of the Senate.

The Supreme Court gave Congress until October 4, 1982 to straighten out the confusion through legislation. But Congress was on its summer recess. Besides, it had several other important issues with which to deal.

A high level judicial conference sought the expedient of an emergency rule, declaring that until Congress acted district courts should handle matters that the Supreme Court said bankruptcy courts weren't qualified to decide.

That still didn't settle matters. Many attorneys still wondered if the district courts could act under such a rule, arguing that the Supreme Court ruling may have removed them as well as bankruptcy courts from jurisdiction.

The Department of Justice asked the Supreme Court to extend its stay until Christmas Eve 1982. By year end, Congress again had failed to act. It had a hot potato in hand: Many district judges didn't want Congress to raise the status of bankruptcy judges, which would give the latter parity with them.

That issue has a history. Until Congress reformed the bankruptcy laws in 1978, decisions were made by referees. Suddenly, referees were being called judges, although their appointments never had been reviewed by the Senate.

Under Article 3 of the Constitution, federal judges must undergo such scrutiny. But to elevate them to the status of Article 3 judges would mean lifetime appointments with no compensation cuts ever.

Lewittes, who supports elevation to Article 3 status, finds things remain complicated on the other side of the fence, since he is again dealing with bankruptcy matters, and along with them, the same problems and doubts that harass both the courts, litigants and attorneys.

"The courts are acting," he says. But then he asks: "Are they operating with jurisdiction, or in a judicial vacuum?"

The decisions that worry him aren't the many scores of thousands of personal bankruptcies — about a half-million in 1982. Those often involve few assets. He is more concerned with corporate failures and reorganizations.

In summary, will decisions, thousands of them — and those who make them too — be challenged in the future?

To the editor:

In regards to the recent accident at Village Green Apartments, there are two Greenville Utilities Commission employees that should be recognized for their prompt and effective action.

One of these employees, upon arrival shortly after the accident, was told by the Greenville Fire Department that three propane tanks were leaking gas out of the piping. While proceeding to the tanks, the employee was joined by another Greenville Utilities Commission employee. They found that the tanks belonged to another company and could have left them for someone else to take care of. But, instead of ignoring the possible danger of the tanks' catching fire, they proceeded to close the frozen valves on the tanks. As a result, one employee received frostbite burns on one hand. Their quick action possibly prevented more damage to property and lives.

These two employees are Larry Baldree, supervisor of the Gas Department, and Wayne Bryant, supervisor of the Water and Sewer Department. My association with Greenville Utilities Commission employees of this caliber has made my 32 years of service with Greenville Utilities Commission more enjoyable.

I am sure that there are others that deserve recognition for their service as well.

Objecting To N. C. Check-Off Change

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A bill that would change the way the North Carolina Election Campaign Fund is distributed won approval in a state Senate committee Wednesday, but received no support from Republican members.

"The only benefit in your bill is to the majority party in North Carolina," said Sen. Cary Allred, R-Alamance, who added that the measure could cost the state GOP up to $14,000 a year.

Under the bill, state tax forms would be changed so that taxpayers who wish to donate $1 to political campaigns will not be able to designate what party would receive the money. The money would be divided among parties on the basis of voter registration, with the lion's share going to Democrats.

"The minority party has received, in the past, about 24 percent of the unspecified funds — about $13,000 to $14,000 — in addition to $66,000 designated to us," Allred said. "It looks to me like all the unspecified funds would go to Democrats (under the bill)."

Sen. Wilma Woodard, D-Wake, who introduced the bill, said it was designed to increase the number of North Carolinians who check off $1 on their state income tax returns.

She told the Senate State Government Committee that only about 7 percent of state taxpayers now use the check-off, while states with undesignated forms have up to three times the participation.

"I believe this is evidence that more people would contribute to this fund if they were not asked to put their party designation on the form," Ms. Woodard said.

Sen. Russell Walker, D-Randolph, said Republicans could benefit from the change.

"It's my opinion that the minority will receive more money because we'll get more participation," he said. But Allred said there is no evidence that North Carolina taxpayers would respond to the change in the same way as those in Michigan or New Jersey.

"They're (not using it) because they don't believe tax money should go to political campaigns," he said.

Sen. Ken Harris, R-Mecklenburg, said he believed the check-off procedure should be eliminated altogether.

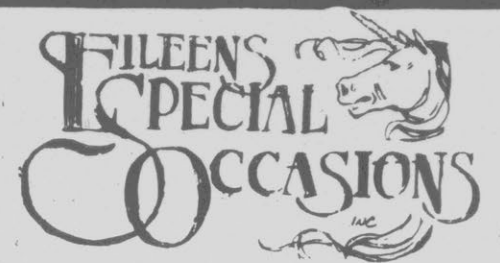

The bill was approved 15-3, with Allred, Harris and Sen. Bill Redman, R-Iredell, voting against it.

The committee also approved a bill that would let the State Board of Elections order new elections on the basis of county board recommendations. Under current law the state board must hold hearings in the affected county.

In addition, the committee approved a bill to let librarians register voters.

Redman put his support behind that bill.

"It seems like I meet a whole lot of Republicans when I'm in the library, so I'd like to move a favorable report," he said.

Again Limit Shellfishing

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — State officials again reclosed a number of North Carolina's oyster and clam beds Wednesday after finding the water contaminated with bacteria.

The areas closed include the region from Bogue Inlet to the South Carolina border and sections of Bogue Sound, said Bob Benton, supervisor of the Shellfish Sanitation program of the state department of Health Services.

The closings followed the reopening of some shellfish areas Saturday by officials. The beds had been closed because of the high levels of fecal coliform bacteria found around the shellfish beds.

After checking the contamination levels this week, officials decided to again close some beds.

Five areas in Carteret, Pender and New Hanover counties were closed by the state Division of Marine Fisheries on the recommendation of state shellfish sanitation officials.

Among the areas closed were the North River and its marshes, Jarrett Bay and its tributaries, the South River upstram from Beacon No.1 and all shellfish areas in Pender and New Hanover counties.

State officials said Wednesday that the oyster season will be extended through March 31. The season had been scheduled to end March 15.

Still No Leads

In Trucker Death

NEWTON GROVE, N.C. (AP) — A month after truck driver George Franklin Capps was killed by a sniper's bullet in the independent truckers' strike, police say they have no new leads in the case despite rewards totaling $36,000.

"The only way we'll ever break it is, somebody has got to talk," said Newton Grove police chief John Hayes. "I don't think this was done by a hired killer. I think it was just somebody who wanted to scare a truck driver."

Capps, 33, a driver for Charlotte's Standard Trucking Co., was the only fatality in the nationwide strike. He was killed Jan. 31 when he was shot in the neck as he drove south on U.S. 701 just north of Newton Grove.

Police said a high-powered rifle bullet shattered his windshield. Capps was found slumped forward on his steering wheel.

In the governor's office in Raleigh, Pam Gaither, who coordinates reward funds for the state, said several recent donations have been made to the Capps reward fund.

In Raleigh and Fayetteville, the State Bureau of Investigation also said it has made no progress toward solving the case.

Seize Boat And Its Marijuana

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (AP) — The Coast Guard seized a 54-foot ketch carrying eight tons of marijuana late Wednesday night in Ocracoke Inlet, N.C., Coast Guard Petty Officer Barbara Smith said early today.

She said the three men aboard the Grand Illusion, a Canadian vessel, were arrested and the boat and its cargo towed to the Coast Guard station at Ocracoke.

"The vessel was boarded because it had improper running lights," she said. "When the boarding party went aboard it found about eight tons of marijuana."

She said the identities of the three men were not immediately available.

Pope Scolds Duvalier Before Leaving

By DAN SEWELL
Associated Press Writer
PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Pope John Paul II ended his eight-day crusade to Central America and the Caribbean today after rebuking Haiti's ruler for neglect of the nation's desperate poverty.

The pope scolded President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier a few hours before he took off from the Port-Au-Prince airport early today on a flight to Rome.

His 18-hour itinerary Wednesday began with a trip from Guatemala to Belize for a two-hour stop. He then came to Haiti, the Western Hemisphere's poorest nation, for a meeting with Latin American bishops and an outdoor Mass for 200,000 Haitians who braved the 90-degree heat.

Duvalier, 31, inherited his father's 14-year-old dictatorship in 1971. He welcomed the 62-year-old pope by praising his record of defending the poor, and boasting that he, too, was "sworn to ... the desperate struggle against hunger, sickness, poverty and ignorance."

The pope rebuffed him. "... the Christians have also noted that there is division, injustice, excessive inequality, degradation of the quality of life, misery, hunger, fear," John Paul said sternly.

"They have thought of the peasants who are unable to earn a living from the land, of the people who live on top of each other in the cities without work, of the dislocated families, of the victims of various frustrations."

"Things must change." The pope also noted the Haitian government's record of repressing opposition politicians and the press. Last Dec. 29, Roman Catholic lay worker Gerard Duclerville was arrested for criticizing the government in his weekly radio program.

Duclerville was freed a month ago after unprecedented public pressure on the government by the church hierarchy.

In a country where the vast majority of nearly 6 million people live below the U.N. absolute poverty level of $140 annual income, John Paul castigated the tiny wealthy elite.

"I appeal to those who have power, riches and culture so that they will understand the serious and urgent responsibility to help their brothers and sisters. It is the hour of duty," he said in a French-language homily during the airport Mass.

Later, the pontiff told representatives of Latin America's 700 bishops, responsible for nearly half the world's 740 million Catholics, that "the poorest must have a preference in your heart."

However, John Paul warned the bishops to be wary of political and ideological overtones in their work.

Duvalier had greeted the Pope with a conciliatory gesture, saying he was renouncing his privilege to veto Vatican appointments of bishops and archbishops.

The Duvalier family have used that power, given Haiti's head of state in an 1860 concordat with the Vatican that established Catholicism as the state religion, to install a church hierarchy loyal to the dictatorial regime.

John Paul welcomed the concession, saying "this news cannot help but contribute to the harmonious development of the Catholic church in this country with the Haitian state."

The Pope also urged the Haitians, at a Mass punctuated by African drums, to exercise "intelligent and active devotion" that avoid Afro-Christian practices "inspired by fear and anguish in the face of forces which are not understood."

The government estimates at least three-fourths of the populace is Roman Catholic, but most mix Catholicism with ancestral voodoo rites.

The Pope, greeting Haitians lining the dusty roadways from his glass-domed vehicle, went from the airport to the gleaming white presidential palace for a 45-minute private meeting with Duvalier.

Duvalier's wife, Michele, gave birth Jan. 31 to his heir-apparent, Francois Nicolas Jean Claude II, and there had been reports Duvalier wanted a papal blessing for the baby.

John Paul, showing the effects of his wearing schedule, posed briefly for photos with Duvalier on the steps of the palace, then went to the cathedral for the bishops' conference.

He had dinner at the mountaintop residence of the papal nuncio and rested there before his midnight departure.

The pope's other stops on his tour, before Wednesday, were Costa Rica, Panama, Nicaragua, Honduras and El Salvador.

Says Tobacco Industry Growth Is Anticipated

MYRTLE BEACH (AP) — Despite predictions of a slump in domestic consumption and a drop in exports, the American tobacco industry will continue to grow, an industry official says.

But that growth will be smaller than in years past and, compared to previous decades, might even be called regressive, Phil Fisher told those attending a conference here Wednesday.

The conference, sponsored by agriculture colleges in the tobacco-growing states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Florida and Georgia, dealt with issues facing the industry in the coming decade.

Fisher, the manager of leaf blending and agriculture for the Brown and Williamson Tobacco Co., predicted that growth in the domestic tobacco industry would amount to only about 3 percent a year.

Even the most optimistic projections, he said, peg industry growth at 1 percent.

There are numerous factors to be taken into consideration in determining the industry's growth, Fisher said.

He said a new federal excise tax on cigarettes could cause a temporary drop in consumption and that possible federal action on self-extinguishing cigarettes could hamper growth.

Fisher said there is also talk in Washington about a regulation to require that tobacco additives be included on cigarette packages.

But Fisher said the bright spot in the domestic outlook is that tobacco is a commodity with an international market.

World production is expected to be up 3 percent a year, he said, adding that the world tobacco market is over 4.5 trillion cigarettes and increasing every year.

But he warned that the world tobacco trade has increased at such a pace that it has made both American and foreign companies more quality conscious.

Fisher said this is a critical time for the industry and told the agriculture educators they must provide expertise to farmers to grow the best quality tobacco in the world at competitive prices.

He added that tobacco companies don't seem to be retrenching, noting that his Louisville, Ky., firm has just completed a new office tower.

Fisher also said firms are pursuing aggressive marketing campaigns. He said there were more than 100 cigarette packaging changes in the domestic market in 1981.

Geriatrics, the science of providing medical care for the elderly, is fast becoming a major concern of hospitals across the nation as the percentage of the population over 65 grows.

In recognition of the increasing need for upgrading geriatric educational programs, the East Carolina University School of Medicine hosted a seminar Wednesday to discuss particular health problems of the elderly.

"The percentage of elderly people in the United States is increasing by leaps and bounds," Dr. Harold Kallman, chairman of the ECU Medical School Geriatric Department, said. "For example, in 1900, four percent of the population was over 65. Right now, we have 11 percent of our population over 65 and by the year 2030, it is predicted that 18 to 22 percent of the population will be over 65."

Dr. Kallman said he was pleased with the number of people who turned out for the one-day seminar. "It is an indication of rising interest and need for caring for the elderly," he said.

Doctors and health professionals from North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia attended the program in the new Brody Medical Science Building to discuss such problems as depression and the incidence of illness in the elderly.

"The elderly are subject to many, many diseases and take a great number of medications. Changes in their physiology and immune makeup which make them subject to infections make (geriatric) health care a different area all together from general practice," Dr. Kallman said.

The methods used in geriatrics have several aims, according to Kallman. "We aim to rehabilitate older patients so they can perform normal daily activities, keep them out of institutions and improve the quality of their lives," he said.

In addition to holding seminars, the ECU School of Medicine is running a program at Greenville Villa Nursing Home to update knowledge about caring for the elderly. "We try to help internists, student nurses, allied health students and others better understand the elderly and better appreciate the problems of older patients by having professionals work closely with the elderly," he said.

Geriatric educational programs have been frequently overlooked in the past, according to Dr. Kallman, but he said that trend is changing. "Most medical schools haven't had geriatric programs up until this time. The majority are now starting up departments in recognition of the expanding need for elderly patient care," Dr. Kallman said.

The ECU geriatrics department will have been in existence 15 months at the end of March. Dr. Kallman joined the staff as chairman at the time the program was begun.

Man Facing Theft Count

Roger William Creech, 21 of 200 E2 Kings Row Apartments on Verdant Street has been charged with larceny in connection with the theft of $500 worth of clothes from the apartment complex's laundry room on Nov. 23.

Chief Glenn Cannon said the clothing, owned by Celia Ann Hancock of 300 C3 Kings Row, was taken from a washer. Cannon said the items were recovered during a search of Hancock's apartment this week.

Cannon said a watch and diamond ring valued at $500 and belonging to Yesim Biricik, 19, of 200 E3 Kings Row, a ring belonging to Herman R. Hines of 122 Harrell St. and two sweaters belonging to Charles E. Sanders of 200 E4 Kings Row also were found in Creech's apartment during the search.

Ms. Biricik's watch and ring, valued at $25, were allegedly taken from her apartment in February, while Hines' ring, valued at $900, was allegedly taken from a cabinet at Roffler of Greenville Hair Design. Sanders' sweaters, valued at $60, were allegedly taken from his apartment.

Cannon said charges will be made in connection with the other cases.

EPA Scrutiny...

Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., told reporters that "of course" Mrs. Burford had become a political liability and that "she did the right thing" by resigning.

Mrs. Burford, who planned to discuss her resignation at a news conference today, said she could no longer take the pressure of the investigations and media attention.

"Shoot, I can't even work anymore," she said in an interview with The Denver Post on Wednesday. "All I can do is read news clips and figure out how to get dressed in the morning without TV camera crews in there."

"That's not right. That's not good government," she said. "It's killing me."

She said Reagan accepted the resignation after she told him she believed she had done a good job and he "observed that it didn't seem to be getting out in the news media."

"I love that guy, I really do, and I'd be proud to serve him any place," she said.

The subcommittees are investigating EPA's handling of its $1.6 billion Superfund program to clean up abandoned chemical waste dumps. Allegations have been made that the fund may have been manipulated for political purposes and that EPA officials may have been guilty of conflicts of interest in making decisions.

Much of the investigation has focused on thousands of pages of EPA enforcement files withheld from Congress on a claim of executive privilege.

Ironically, Mrs. Burford's resignation came only minutes after the White House agreed to let congressional investigators have full access to those documents, a position Mrs. Burford has said she unsuccessfully urged upon the White House last fall.

Vice President Backing Budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush has told a skeptical group of business executives that the Reagan administration's proposed military budget should remain intact despite concern about future budget deficits.

Bush, appearing Wednesday before the American Business Conference, said cutting the defense budget would be "the worst signal we could send."

He said the defense buildup was the only way to force the Soviet Union to negotiate an arms reduction agreement.

A draft resolution for a working agreement between the Recreation and Parks Department and East Carolina Vocational Center, scheduled to be considered at Wednesday night's meeting, was tabled until a later meeting. The agreement being worked on is for use of the center's new pool by the department.

The annual financial report of the Greenville Little League was studied and accepted by the commission. The report, prepared for the league's board by Dan Gordon, supervisor of the league, shows receipts of $23,452.88 and disbursements of $27,203.29 for the Little League year that ended Sep. 9, 1982.

Expenditures for the year resulted in cash disbursements exceeding receipts by $3,750.41, resulting in a cash balance of $10,668.48 remaining on the Sep. 9 date. Cash balance at the beginning of the year had been $14,418.89. Lee, commenting on the report, pointed out that the league had an expenditure of $7,186.09 for uniforms, an expense that only occurs every three to five years.

Additionally, the league's financial report shows a cash balance of $1,481.85 for a special all-star account, one designed to accommodate travel for Little League play outside the Greenville area.

No public funds are involved in operating the Little League program. Revenues are raised primarily through the 14 team sponsors, who each pay $325 to sponsor a team, along with proceeds from the annual luncheon supper and from the concession stands.

Five Collisions In City On Wednesday

An estimated $7,900 property damage resulted from a series of five traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police Wednesday.

Heaviest damage resulted from a 4:30 p.m. collision at the intersection of 10th and Cotanche streets involving cars driven by Wanda Smith of Route 13, Greenville, and Gregory Russell Crowe of Cary.

Police, who charged, Ms. Smith with failing to see her intended movement could be made in safety, estimated damage from the collision at $800 to the Smith car and $2,000 to the Crowe vehicle.

An estimated $1,000 damage resulted to each of two cars involved in a 9:36 a.m. mishap at the intersection of Cotanche and Fifth streets.

Drivers of the cars involved were identified as Stephen Francis Donahue of Huntington Beach, Calif., and Petrice M. Brown of 1905 E. Sixth St.

James Vance Perkins Jr. of Greenville was reported injured in an 8:03 a.m. collision at the intersection of 10th and Elm streets.

Investigators said the Perkins car collided with a vehicle driven by Linda McClain of New Bern, causing an estimated $900 damage to the Perkins car and $500 damage to the McClain car.

Police said a truck operated by Julian Lyle Sanderson of 82 Oakwood Acres and a car driven by Robert Carl Barbato of 62 Azalea Gardens collided about 7:59 a.m. on 10th Street, 175 feet east of the Greenville Boulevard intersection, causing $400 damage to the truck and $500 damage to the car.

A 5:33 p.m. collision at the intersection of May and Ione streets involved cars driven by Tony Felix Cooke of 309 Student St. and Jefferson Davis Wilson Jr. of 205 Granville Drive, officers said.

Damage from the collision was set at $600 to the Cooke car and $200 to the Wilson vehicle.

Cut Sunday Postal Service In Ayden

AYDEN — Only around 50 of the 275 post office box customers in Ayden pick up their mail on Sundays, according to a survey conducted by the Postal Service to determine whether Sunday delivery is feasible in the town, Ayden Postmaster Charlie Davenport said today.

The survey, which prompted the Postal Service to announce this week that Sunday service will cease in seven post offices — including Ayden — in the Raleigh district, showed that on one Sunday 49 box holders picked up their mail. On the next Sunday, only 47 checked their boxes.

Davenport said that response wasn't sufficient for the postal service to offer Sunday service. Beginning March 20, he said, mail will not be dispatched on Sundays to post office boxes in Ayden. Most customers have already been notified.

The other offices include Kinston, Durham, Roxboro, Chapel Hill, Selma and Henderson. Sunday express mail and special delivery will also be eliminated.

A survey of Ayden businesses this morning indicated most don't anticipate any problems with the service cut-off.

"Normally it wouldn't affect us," said Hazel Dail of Ayden Loan and Insurance. "Most businesses ... don't pick up mail on Sundays anyway. We pick it up on Monday morning."

Acid Rain Protest Vote Grows In N. H.

By DAVID WYSOCKI
Associated Press Writer
CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A group asking New Hampshire's towns to pass a resolution to cut acid rain continues to get overwhelming support from residents. More towns approved measures Wednesday urging Congress to cut in half by 1990 Midwest pollution believed responsible for causing acid rain in the Northeast. The approvals continued the resolution's statewide undefeated sweep and pushed the number of towns supporting it to at least 104. At least 97 towns voted

Tuesday night for the resolution and one tabled it indefinitely.

Joseph Dowd, a spokesman for utilities in seven Midwestern states, called the resolution a "self-serving type question."

"Voting for this involves no skin off the nose of people of New Hampshire," Dowd, senior vice president and general counsel for American Electric Power Co. in Columbus, Ohio, said by telephone. "The cost ... would be enormous and concentrated on people of the Midwest, states with the highest unemployment rates."

"The cost of electricity in the Midwest would increase between 20 and 50 percent. In the Midwest, our concern is human beings, not fish, not the recreation pleasures of some fishing enthusiasts," Dowd said.

Acid rain has been blamed for polluting lakes, rivers and forests and endangering water supplies in New Hampshire, the rest of the Northeast and eastern Canada. Industry in the Midwest says there is no proof that emissions from its factories or power plants cause the problem.

By the time town meetings conclude at the end of the week, 194 of the state's 224 towns will have debated the issue.

"It was our feeling that if we got a strong show ... that might tip the leverage in Congress," said Sharon Francis, a spokeswoman for the Acid Rain Education Project, the group that raised the question.

"What ... is remarkable is the groundswell of support. When the Acid Rain Education Project first proposed putting the article on the warrant (agenda), we thought we might be taking a gamble. We didn't totally know how strong the feeling was in New Hampshire about acid rain," she said.

Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., said the vote "gives us momentum."

"It's another arrow in our quiver," he said. "By itself, it's not going to carry the day for us, but it's one more bit of impetus."

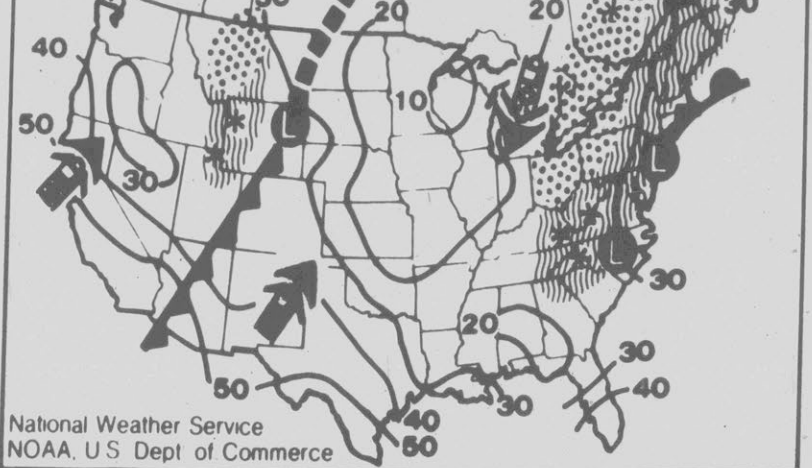

Rep. Judd Gregg, R-N.H., said the overwhelming support for acid rain controls "is a message my colleagues in the House of Representatives should not ignore."

Residents in at least 43 towns also were debating a resolution urging President Reagan to propose a mutual freeze with the Soviet Union on making, testing and deploying nuclear weapons.

Last year, three-quarters of the 68 towns that debated a similar resolution approved it. In early results this year, nine rejected the freeze resolution; seven towns and one city, Lebanon, approved it.

The Forecast For Friday, March 11

•Low Temperatures

Fronts: Cold Warm Occluded Stationary
WEATHER FORECAST — The National Weather Service predicts snow and showers Friday for sections of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming and Utah. Snow and showers are also indicated for Ohio, western Pennsylvania

By The Associated Press
Most of North Carolina will continue to have mostly cloudy conditions again, while snow flurries are expected to fall in the mountains.

Occasional light snow flurries were expected in the mountains today into Friday. Snowfall will likely increase across the northern mountains by tonight with several inches accumulating before tapering off to flurries later Friday.

There's a chance of some light snow flurries getting into the western Piedmont later tonight and into the central portion of the state on Friday, while some rain is possible along the coast.

Much of this will depend on the potential development of low pressure along the North Carolina coast by Friday. High temperatures Friday will be in the 40s except 30s across the mountains.

A wide range in temperatures was noted Wednesday. The northwest portion of the state was limited mostly to the 40s while the southern sections reached the low and mid 60s.

Wilmington reported a high of 71 degrees. The warm air over the southeast triggered some isolated strong thunderstorms along the south and central coast.

Large hail was reported at Burgaw in Pender County and 1½-inch hail fell near Jacksonville late Wednesday afternoon.

Temperatures dipped into the 30s across the mountains, but most of the state stayed in the 40s and low 50s early today. Some light snow fell across the extreme northern mountains.

Satellite Sale Concerns N.C. Weather Experts

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The President's plan to sell the nation's weather satellites could boost research expenses, deprive small farmers of agricultural forecasts and raise fees of private forecasting services, state weather experts warn.

"I think weather data is a service that should be provided by the government, not private industry," said Dr. David Barber, assistant professor of meteorology at North Carolina State University in Raleigh.

Barber said Wednesday he opposes a proposal to sell National Weather Service satellites to private industry. Reagan administration officials said Monday the proposal is designed to reduce government outlays for the weather service and allow private business to seek technical advances in meteorology without facing a tight government budget or red tape.

Congress would have to approve the plan before the satellites could be sold.

But reports of the proposal have raised concerns that problems would arise if companies generate and disseminate weather data for profit.

Barber said N.C. State receives raw data and weather observations from the weather service, paying only for the cost of transmission lines.

"I can't see a company that's in business to make money doing that," he said. "Such a move might save the federal government some money now, but I can see the cost of education and research going up."

Dr. Katie Perry, agricultural extension meteorologist at N.C. State, raised concerns that small farmers wouldn't be able to afford the fees private industry might charge for special agricultural forecasts that are now broadcast free.

"For the small farmer, the best answer may be to join other farmers to purchase the service, or they could take training courses that will enable them to make forecasts for themselves from raw data," Ms. Perry said.

Lt. Cmdr. Herman Pritchard, of the Cape Hatteras

Coast Guard Station, said the proposal also might create problems for marine forecasts.

Barber said private operation of the satellites would invite conflicts of interest.

In most cases, he said, weather information is provided to the Federal Aviation Administration by the weather service.

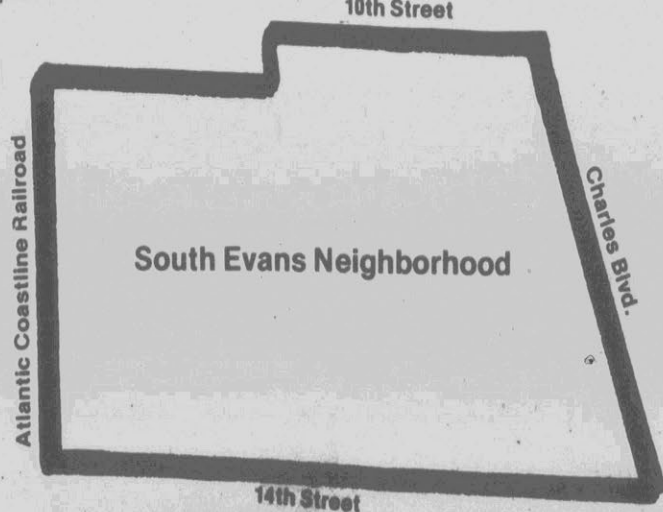

"But in some cases, especially at smaller airports, the airlines do it themselves, and I personally have seen times when airlines have fudged a bit on that information to get aircraft in or out," he said.

Dr. S.P.S. Arya, acting head of N.C. State's Department of Marine, Earth and Atmospheric Science, said the federal government would be subsidizing private industry by selling the satellites. He said companies would not be paying for the cost of research and development now paid by the government.

"I don't think the government's return will be good enough to justify the sale," said Arya.

NOTICE OF NEIGHBORHOOD MEETING

The Community Development Office of the City of Greenville will hold a meeting in the South Evans Neighborhood on March 14, 1983 at the United Pentecostal Church at 7:30 PM located on the corner of Forbes and Eleventh Streets. Clear Physicians Of Murder In Allowing Patient To Die

By KATHY HORAK
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two doctors cleared of murder charges after withholding nourishment from a comatose, brain-damaged man say the ruling confirms that life-and-death medical matters should be decided by physicians and families, not courts.

Municipal Court Judge Brian Crahan on Wednesday dismissed the murder charges against Drs. Neil Barber and Robert Nejdl, but noted his ruling does not prevent prosecution in similar cases.

"If a physician feels he's doing the correct thing he should act in concert with the family," Barber said. "The last place we want to go in these cases is the courts."

Nejdl said he was "obviously delighted at the outcome," but added, "One thing does concern me — that physicians in the county and California in general may still find themselves in jeopardy."

He said state Attorney General John Van de Kamp and District Attorney Robert Philobosian should "speak out and let doctors know that they can make these decisions without fear of prosecution."

In Sacramento, California Medical Association president Dr. Charles Hair said the ruling was important because "it apparently tends to remove the legal restraints for a physician to mechanically perpetuate life when the situation is hopeless."

Nejdl, 56, a Long Beach surgeon, and Barber, 49, a Rancho Palos Verdes internist, were charged in the Sept. 6, 1981, death of Clarence Herbert, 55.

The Carson security guard underwent colostomy surgery at Kaiser-Permanente Hospital in suburban Harbor City on Aug. 26, 1981, but mysteriously stopped breathing in the recovery room. Lack of oxygen damaged his brain, and he was on a respirator for three days until his family authorized its removal.

When Herbert survived without the machine, doctors obtained the family's permission to withhold intravenous food and water until he died.

California law allows doctors to remove life-support machines in such cases but doesn't address the issue of withholding nourishment.

Crahan said the doctors need not stand trial for murder and conspiracy to murder because there was no proof they acted negligently or with malice. Their attorneys contended their actions showed compassion in a hopeless case.

"It must be concluded that neither Dr. Barber nor Dr. Nejdl took any overt action with regard to the patient ... that was, per se, unlawful," the judge said in his 13-page decision.

Applause from a packed courtroom greeted the ruling, which came after a two-week preliminary hearing. Witnesses included national experts in neurology and anesthesiology as well as a Jesuit priest.

Deputy District Attorney Hyatt Seligman said prosecutors have 10 days to decide whether to appeal. They claimed the doctors committed murder to hide evidence of malpractice, but Crahan termed that "speculation."

Herbert's wife, Patsy, testified that doctors misrepresented her husband's condition to obtain the family's consent to withhold nourishment. She has sued the doctors for malpractice.

However, Mrs. Herbert also said that she and her husband had discussed the use of life-support machines before his surgery and "the patient did not want to be a Karen Quinlan," the judge said.

That young New Jersey woman remains in a coma years after she was removed from a respirator. She survives on intravenous nutrients in a nursing home.

Panel Urges Look At Intensive Care Costs

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A panel of medical experts says hospitals need to improve their screening of intensive care units to make sure each patient needs minute-by-minute attention.

A National Institutes of Health conference, which ended Wednesday, developed guidelines for the appropriate use of the expensive resources in the nation's intensive care units.

"It is not medically appropriate to devote limited intensive care unit resources to patients without reasonable prospect of significant recovery when patients who need those services ... are being turned away for want of capacity," the report said.

Intensive care unit treatment usually costs three to four times more than other hospital care. The conference estimated that the nationwide cost of such units is between $10 billion and $15 billion a year or more than 15 percent of hospital costs.

Dr. Stephen Ayres, chairman of the conference and professor of internal medicine at St. Louis University School of Medicine, said there is anecdotal evidence of a substantial number of inappropriate referrals to intensive care units. But he said there is no national data on admissions of any kind.

He said that although it raises difficult ethical and emotional issues, there are cases where patients should be removed from intensive care units if it becomes apparent that the treatment won't improve their condition.

"The ICU is for patients who are salvageable and need minute-by-minute care," Ayres said.

The panel report calls on hospitals to take the availability of intensive care unit beds in their region into account before adding new units.

"We believe that regionalization is very important and that hospitals should not try to compete in terms of their intensive care units," Ayres told reporters.

Several hundred physicians, nurses, medical researchers and other health care personnel attended the three-day conference. Their report said, "The weight of clinical opinion is that ICU care improves survival."

But survival rates vary widely depending upon the illness suffered by the patients involved.

Ayres said these special units are particularly useful in treating heart attacks and drug overdoses.

He said data had been presented at the conference estimating that the rate of death from heart attacks dropped from 30 percent 10 years ago to 15 percent. "We feel a substantial part of that is due to the coronary care unit," he said.

The report calls for greater research on the outcome of ICU treatment, the effectiveness of technology used and related areas as a way of helping clarify who should be treated and possibly holding down costs.

Soviets Say It's A Lie

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union today dismissed the latest Pentagon report on Soviet military strength as "the second edition of a lie."

A commentary in the Communist Party daily Pravda said the 107-page report, published in Washington Wednesday, was an attempt by Reagan administration to justify a bigger military budget.

"Just like its predecessor, the second edition of the Pentagon opus contains a mass of doctored data, is full of shamelessly manipulated facts and groundless contentions about the military 'lag' of the United States," the Pravda commentary said.

The commentary also challenged Pentagon estimates of Soviet missile might.

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, carried the commentary.

As one example of "doctored data" on the U.S. B-52 force, Pravda claimed that the Pentagon understated strength by "more than 300" planes.

It quoted the Pentagon report as saying the United States has 241 such bombers and added that an appendix to the SALT II treaty said the United States has 574 B-52s.

Map A Five-State Tobacco Campaign

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — Farm leaders and tobacco experts meeting here have agreed to mount a five-state campaign to improve the quality of American flue-cured tobacco.

"Do It Right-Grow Premium Bright" will be the slogan for the campaign, announced here Wednesday during a conference on issues facing the tobacco industry over the next decade.

As part of the effort, a coordinating committee will be set up to seek the support of farm organizations and lending institutions in the Carolinas, Virginia, Georgia and Florida — the five states that grow flue-cured tobacco.

Fred G. Bond of Raleigh, N.C., general manager of the Flue-Cured Cooperative Stabilization Corp., said the program is designed to emphasize, enhance and promote the quality of flue-cured leaf.

Bond, who recently returned from a trip to Zimbabwe, said competition from other tobacco-growing countries is getting stronger.

He said Zimbabwe is taking leaf so seriously it now has 3,000 official tobacco grades, compared to 150 in this country.

Kenneth R. Keller, managing director of the Bright

Belt Warehouse Association, was named temporary committee chairman.

A meeting to formalize the campaign will be held in Raleigh March 16.

Keller said that the U.S. share of world trade in bright leaf tobacco has declined because of a drop in quality.

There are tremendous opportunities for U.S. growers to turn the situation around, give more attention to quality and possibly expand their markets at home and abroad, he said.

Another Drop In U. S. Smokers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Per capita cigarette smoking declined last year by 2.4 percent, to slightly more than 187 packs of 20 cigarettes each, the Agriculture Department reports.

The department said average cigarette use was 3,746 cigarettes, down from a 1981 average of 3,840 cigarettes, or 192 packs. The statistical measurement is based on people 18 years or older, smokers and non-smokers alike.

U. S. Diplomat Expelled As Spy

MOSCOW (AP) — U.S. diplomat Richard Osborne was seized "red-handed" with radio spy equipment in Moscow and ordered expelled, the Soviet government newspaper Izvestia said today.

American sources quoted one of the Osborne children as saying "a terrible thing happened to us over the weekend," apparently referring to the diplomat's detention.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Franklin Tonini confirmed that Osborne, a first secretary in the economic section, had been declared persona non grata and was making plans to leave Moscow. He had no comment on the detention or spy charge.

Tonini's office said Osborne's age was not available, but Westerners who had met him said he appeared to be in his late 30s. Sources said Osborne's last post was at the State Department in Washington.

Izvestia said Osborne "was detained red-handed in Moscow on March 7, this year, while working with espionage radio apparatus."

"Confiscated from him was a set of portable intelligence special-purpose apparatus for the transmission of espionage information via the U.S. Marisat communications satellites, and his own notes which were written in a pad made of paper quickly soluble in water, and which exposed Osborne's espionage activities."

Osborne, who is married and has two small children, arrived in Moscow in August 1982.

His wife, Mary, was a substitute teacher at the Anglo-American School here and his two daughters, Lisa and Diane, attended third and first grades respectively.

Tass, the official news agency which misspelled Osborne's name as Osborn, did not say exactly where the diplomat was seized.

The State Department in Washington had no immediate comment.

The last Soviet diplomat expelled by the United States was Maj. Gen. Vasiliy I. Chitov, who left the Soviet Embassy in Washington over a year ago.

Reports in the Washington Post and New York Times immediately after the expulsion in early February 1982 said that Chitov was lured to a suburban shopping center by U.S. agents and caught with sensitive military information.

U.S. officials refused to say publicly at the time whether Chitov's expulsion involved espionage. The State Department said the Soviet general was "declared persona non grata for activities inconsistent with his diplomatic status."

The last known expulsion of a U.S. diplomat from Moscow came in January 1978 when Donald Kursch, a first secretary at the American Embassy, was expelled in retaliation for the expulsion of a Soviet trade mission official in Washington.

Briton Trying A Polar 'Hike'

LONDON (AP) — A Briton who said he was "absolutely scared stiff" has begun a 480-mile trek across the frozen Arctic Ocean in hopes of becoming the first person to walk alone to the North Pole.

Britain's domestic news agency, Press Association, said 26-year-old David Hempleman-Adams started the freezing hike Wednesday after being flown to the edge of the arctic ice cap.

Reporter Martin White said in a dispatch from Resolute Bay in Canada's Northwest Territories that Hempleman-Adams told him, "I am absolutely scared stiff."

"It seems so desolate, so empty out here," the explorer was quoted as saying. "But I feel confident that I have made the best possible preparations and have the best possible equipment."

White said the temperature was 22 degrees below zero as the mountaineer from Bristol, western England posed for photographs and said goodbye to support team colleagues.

Hempleman-Adams calculates it will take him six weeks to complete the one-man walk to the pole, carrying a 120-pound backpack — two thirds of his own weight.

The pack is so heavy that base camp manager Stephen Vincent had to help Hempleman-Adams lift it on to the plane, White reported.

In addition to cold weather gear, a tent and high protein food, Hempleman-Adams is carrying an array of sophisticated electronic rescue, communications and navigation equipment, and batteries to power it. The support team will drop

Teeter Out Of Hospital

David Teeter, one of the East Carolina University students injured in the Village Green apartment complex explosion on March 2, was released Wednesday from Mercy Hospital in Charlotte.

Teeter, a senior and a major in business, was one of six persons who were admitted, treated and released at Pitt County Memorial Hospital on March 2. He went to his home in Charlotte March 3 and, the following day, was taken to Charlotte's Mercy Hospital where he was admitted for observation, tests and treatment.

"I was still very sore, and suffered from pains, cuts and bruises," Teeter said today after being contacted by telephone in Charlotte.

Teeter said he plans to return to his studies at ECU "as soon as possible, although I don't know at this time whether I'll be able to make it Monday." ECU's spring break ends this weekend, with classes resuming on Monday.

"I was released from Mercy at mid-day Wednesday," Teeter said, "but I still have to have some plastic surgery work done."

Investigators have identified leaking propane gas as the fuel involved in the blast that knocked out several apartments at Village Greene. The source of ignition, however, has not been pinpointed.

Teeter said today that, when he returns to Greenville, he will try to find a place to live that doesn't have any type of gas facilities.

Heckler Sworn In Wednesday

WASHINGTON (AP) — Margaret Heckler has been sworn in as the new secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, the largest government agency with a $274 billion annual budget and 142,000 workers.

Mrs. Heckler, a Republican congressman from Massachusetts until her defeat last year, was sworn in Wednesday by Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor at a ceremony in the Oval Office.

"Welcome to the team and good luck," said her boss, President Reagan.

Mrs. Heckler responded by voicing confidence in the president's economic policies. "I could call you Dr. Reagan because I believe the medicine is working... But there are still people in need, and they will be my special concerns," she said.

SCHOOLS CLOSED
QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — Authorities have closed Ecuador's high schools indefinitely, claiming a wave of student demonstrations was aimed at provoking a military coup against the elected government.

Still Work On A 'Death Ray'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon says the Soviet Union is still working on laser weapons that can be used on people, the so-called "death rays."

The Pentagon's latest report on Soviet military power, referring to possible laser weapon systems, said Soviet development of "anti-personnel weapons may well be far enough along for such systems to be fielded in the mid-1980s."

The report, reflecting Soviet developments over the past 18 months, carries virtually the same language on such possible weaponry as did an earlier report issued in September 1981. Defense officials declined to discuss the issue.

Edwards Leads Vikings Past North Pitt

By ALAN WOOTEN
Reflector Sports Writer
HOLLYWOOD — Darryl Edwards fired a two-hitter and rapped out three singles to lead D.H. Conley to an 8-2 baseball victory over North Pitt Wednesday.

Conditions for the game were typical for mid-March. Temperatures were in the 40's with some wind and a slight drizzle continued to fall throughout the afternoon until a sharp bolt of lightning forced officials to halt the contest in the bottom of the sixth.

"We pushed playing this game because it was getting pretty stale playing ourselves and the JV's all the time,"

Conley coach Gerald Garner said. "We needed to get in a game and we did everything we could."

Indeed, the Vikings did all they could to play the game. The regular baseball field was too wet, so the Vikes got the rakes and built a pitcher's mound on the softball field.

The new mound didn't seem to affect Edwards. He started the game by striking out six of the first seven men he faced, with the lone man getting a walk. Edwards finished the game with 12 strikeouts and three walks.

North Pitt pitching was not as fortunate. Junior Huber started but only lasted two batters into the third inning, having given up five runs and leaving two stranded.

Chris Ayers finished up for the Panthers, giving up six hits and a pair of runs.

"Darryl only threw 99 pitches in those six innings and that's pretty good for a high school pitcher," Garner said. "One game doesn't make a season but it sure helps when you can get in that first win. We were very thankful to get in the game alone because we do have a tough schedule."

Mitchell Cox opened the DHC first with a single to right and stole second. Steve Mills reached on an error to advance Cox to third. Mills then stole second.

One out later, Todd Rouse was hit by a pitch to load the bases. Mike Gurkins then slapped a single to center to score Cox and Mills. Glen Clemmons was hit by a pitch to reload the bases.

Stacy McCarter flew out to left and Gurkins was doubled off on the play to end the inning with Conley holding a 2-0 lead.

The Vikings were back for more in the second. Edwards walked and stole second. Cox walked and Mills bunted to load the bases. Chris Via reached first on a fielder's choice, getting Kite out at the plate. A wild pitch brought in Cox and moved the runners up a base.

Rouse failed to reload the bases. Gurkins then ripped a double to left to score Mills and Via. Rouse tried to score from first on the play but was unable to beat the throw. Conley led after two, 5-0.

North Pitt finally got on the board in the third. Scott Rawls popped up into foul territory to open the inning, but a collision with McCarter as he left the box allowed him first base on catcher's interference.

Barry Strickland followed with a walk. Brian Briley grounded out to first to move the runners up a base. Huber then singled to center to score Huber. Greg Briley followed with a triple to right. Strickland scored but Huber was caught in a rundown between third and home for the second out.

Ken Whitehurst grounded out to end the inning and leave North Pitt behind, 5-2.

The Vikings took command in the third with two more runs. Clemmons reached first on an infield single and stole second. McCarter reached on a bunt single to put runners on the corners. A passed ball allowed McCarter to move up a base.

Edwards then delivered an RBI single to left, scoring Clemmons. Kite reached first when Greg Briley dropped a fly ball in short left field, scoring McCarter.

Cox hit into a double play and Mills grounded out to end the inning.

The Vikes added another run in the fourth when Rouse hit a deep fly to left for a triple. He scored when Greg Briley threw over third base on the relay.

"Our pitching is just not ready yet," North Pitt Coach Doug Warren said. "It will come as the season goes and the weather gets warmer. But they hit the ball real well.

"Our defense wasn't bad," Warren continued. "Our pitching just wasn't ready."

"I thought a real key was in the first inning when Cox got the first hit for us to start the game against his former teammates," Garner said.

Cox played for North Pitt before transferring to D.H. Conley this year.

"Our defense was shoddy but we were just thankful to get in the win," Garner said. "We've been outside only six times this year and two of those were on a Saturday. We also had a terrible practice yesterday because everyone was up for the game and it got postponed until today."

The Vikings, 1-0, are scheduled to travel to Farmville Central today. North Pitt, 1-1, travels to Roanoke on Friday.

Hrbek In Action

By The Associated Press
Rather than continue his salary protest on the sidelines, Minnesota Twins first baseman Kent Hrbek moved into action and let his bat take center stage.

The 22-year-old Hrbek, one of the top rookies in the major leagues last season, went 2-for-5 Wednesday as the Twins belted the Toronto Blue Jays 9-3 in exhibition baseball. The previous day, Hrbek reportedly refused to play after becoming incensed by the team's salary offer.

Hrbek, who made $40,000 last year, when he hit .301 with 23 homers and 92 runs batted in to finish second to Cal Ripken Jr., in the American League Rookie of the Year voting, has asked for approximately $200,000 this year. His agent said the Twins offered $85,000.

"The negotiations will be ongoing, but it's probable we'll renew his contract tomorrow (the deadline)," said Twins spokesman Tom Mee. "In all probability, we'll renew it at the last offer."

On Wednesday, Hrbek apparently decided he could better state his case in the lineup.

The Twins were led by Randy Bush and Gary Gaetti, each with a three-run homer.

Toronto was a double loser as another squad of Blue Jays fell to Philadelphia 4-2. Pete Rose and Tony Perez combined for five hits.

Elsewhere, it was Texas 5, Baltimore 4; Detroit 8, Boston 4; the Chicago White Sox 7, Pittsburgh 5; Atlanta 13, Kansas City 0; Montreal 6, Los Angeles 3; San Francisco 4, Oakland 2; Milwaukee 6, the Chicago Cubs 3, and California 8, Cleveland 4.

In a pair of games matching major league clubs against university teams, it was the New York Yankees 7, Jacksonville 1, and Seattle 2, Arizona State 1.

Bill Stein's clutch two-run double with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning lifted the Rangers over the Orioles. Rangers Manager Doug Rader was ejected in the second inning.

German Barranca, Howard Johnson and Mike Laga belted home runs in Detroit's 13-hit attack. RBI doubles by Scott Fletcher and Dave Stegman and a double error by Pittsburgh's Brian Harper helped the White Sox. Bob Watson hit two homers and knocked in five runs while Dale Murphy had four hits to pace the Braves' rout of the Royals.

Andre Dawson and pitcher Randy Lerch both drove in two runs for Montreal. Mike Vail slammed a tiebreaking two-run homer in the eighth inning for San Francisco.

Lady Pirates Lose A Pair

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — East Carolina University's Lady Pirates opened their 1983 softball campaign in the "Sunshine state" Wednesday, but their reception was less than cordial as they dropped a 6-3 decision to the University of Jacksonville and later fell 6-2 against the University of Florida.

The Lady Pirates face the University of South Florida today at Tallahassee before opening play Friday in the Seminole Invitational.

"These games were scheduled as warmups for the tournament," said ECU coach Sue Manahan, "and that's exactly what they were."

"At this point in the season, we're trying to find out who can do what, when. We will not face a weak team while we're here, and obviously both these teams had games under their belts."

The Lady Pirates rapped out 13 hits in the opening game compared to eight for Jacksonville, but a four-run second inning put the Lady Bucs down to stay as they managed a pair in the third and a lone run in the seventh.

Senior All-America Mitzi Davis collected two hits in four trips to the plate for the Lady Pirates, as did Tamara Frinks, Robin Graves and Melody Ham. Graves knocked in a pair of runs, while Liz Cox trotted a triple for ECU.

The Lady Pirates jumped on Florida with a first-inning homer by Cynthia Shepard, but the Gators plated three of their own in the third and added three more in the fifth to hand the Lady Pirates their second loss in as many outings.

Shepard paced East Carolina with a pair of extra-base hits in three at-bats, while Davis added two singles in three trips. Ginger Roth was the pitcher of record in both games.

"We exhibited a few first game mistakes," said Manahan. "As a team we're still looking for a combination, so we used substitutions in both games."

"In the first game we hit the ball well. But in the second we let their pitcher control the game."

Jacksonville evened its record at 3-3, while the University of Florida improved its to 7-5.

Joneses Star In Atlantic 10 Tourney

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

A couple of guys called Jones made a name for themselves in the Atlantic 10 basketball tournament.

Greg Jones was the star for West Virginia as the Mountaineers whipped Penn State 82-72 and Mark Jones was the leading man for St. Bonaventure as the Bonnies advanced with a 77-67 beating of George Washington in quarterfinal play in Pittsburgh Wednesday night.

"I just sit and cheer for Greg Jones," said West Virginia Coach Gale Catlett after watching his top player score 28 points. "You get a player like that, the less you say the better off you are."

Mark Jones, meanwhile, had 18 points for St. Bonaventure in a victory that Bonnie Coach Jim O'Brien called "not pretty."

"Every time we had somebody come across the line, they were getting grabbed or shoved or bumped. It was just not a pretty game," O'Brien said.

"That was easily the most physical game we've played all season. I'm very proud of our kids. They hung in there when we started to slide and lose control. Our kids all season long have been able to maintain their composure." In an Atlantic 10 doubleheader in Philadelphia, Rutgers defeated Massachusetts 79-73 as Roy Hinson scored 31 points and Temple whipped St. Joseph's 88-69 with the help of 20 points from Jim McLoughlin.

Along with the Atlantic 10 tourney, playoffs also were held Wednesday night in the Big East, the East Coast Conference, the Midwestern City and the Trans America Athletic Conference.

Seton Hall defeated Providence 73-64 in a Big East qualifying spot for tonight's quarterfinals at Madison Square Garden.

In the ECC, American defeated Lehigh 77-59; Bucknell edged Hofstra 56-55; LaSalle crushed Delaware 102-62 and Rider beat Drexel 60-51.

In the Midwestern City, Detroit nipped Oral Roberts 78-77 and Evansville turned back Butler 72-63. And in the TAAC, Georgia Southern beat Arkansas-Little Rock 68-67 to win the tournament title and gain a berth in the NCAA playoffs.

The Mountaineers had some touch-and-go moments before pulling it out. Penn State's Dwight Gibson, who scored 17 points, hit a three-pointer with 2:10 left to tie the game at 69. But Russell Todd, who scored 14 points for West Virginia, sank a field goal and Dale Blaney and Jones followed with a pair of free throws apiece to put West Virginia up 75-69.

George Washington got hurt by committing 34 personal fouls in the second half, allowing St. Bonaventure to score its last 25 points from the free throw line. The Bonnies got their last field goal when Rob Samuels took a rebound and made a layup at 12:53 of the second half to put them up 52-45. The Colonials never led in the second half after trailing 41-31 at intermission.

With Hinson leading the way, Rutgers was in front 34-27 at intermission. The Scarlet Knights then outscored Massachusetts 12-2 at the start of the second half to virtually put the game away.

Temple opened a 41-32 lead in the first half of its game and boosted it to 61-44 with 14 minutes left on a shot by Pete Aguilar. St. Joseph's then scored six straight points, but never again got closer than 11.

Freshman Andre McCloud scored 22 points and Marvin Morris added 18, leading Seton Hall past Providence. Seton Hall, which had won only one of 16 conference games this season, earned the right to face top-seeded Boston College in a quarterfinal game tonight.

"One of the goals this season was to win a tournament game," said Seton Hall's rookie coach, Pete Carlesimo, pointing out that the Pirates had lost first-round Big East playoff matchups the last three years. "We thought we could play with Providence or Connecticut. We were, for us, poised offensively. And we played good defense."

Seniors Mark Nickens and Juan Jones combined for 40 points to lead top-seeded American University past Lehigh. Nickens, a transfer from Texas Christian, became the fifth-leading scorer in American University history with his 22-point effort Wednesday, passing former NBA player Kermit Washington with 1,475 points. Jones, who was held scoreless in the first half, scored 18 points in the second half.

Jaye Andrews scored 24 points and Eric Hegedus made four free throws in the final 20 seconds as Bucknell squeezed past Hofstra. Steve Black's 24 points led five LaSalle players in double figures as the Explorers crushed Delaware. Fred Lee's 17 points led Rider over Drexel.

Albert Blakey sank a free throw with five seconds remaining and Doug Chappell scored 28 points to lead Detroit over Oral Roberts. John Worth scored 19 points, including several crucial free throws late in the contest, to pace Evansville over Butler.

Eric Hightower hit an 18-foot jump shot from the corner with one second remaining to give Georgia Southern its victory over Arkansas-Little Rock. Georgia Southern became the fourth team to join the NCAA playoffs, following Princeton, North Carolina A&T and Alabama-Birmingham.

BC Putting Record On Line

NEW YORK (AP) — Before the season started, the coaches in the Big East Conference picked Boston College to finish fifth. Top scorer John Bagley had turned pro, Coach Tom Davis had left for Stanford, taking the heart from the team that came within a game of the NCAA Final Four a year ago.

"I have no argument with that preseason poll," says Gary Williams, who took over as coach of the Eagles. "Our players were just better than everybody thought. Including me. I didn't think we'd do this well either."

"This well" is a tie for first place in a conference that has had five teams in the Top 20 most of the season, a 22-5 overall record and the No. 14 ranking in the nation. Tonight the Eagles put that record on the line as the top seed in the Big East tournament by virtue of their 3-1 record against No. 8 St. John's and No. 13 Villanova, with whom they shared first place.

The action at Madison Square Garden starts with St. John's vs. Pittsburgh and Villanova vs. Connecticut in the afternoon, with No. 18 Georgetown facing No. 20 Syracuse to open the evening action.

Then the Eagles play the final game, taking on Seton Hall, which upset Providence 73-64 in a qualifying game Wednesday night in the final game of a four-game quarterfinal card.

The semifinals are Friday night and the final Saturday. Four, possibly five Big East teams are expected to qualify for the NCAA tournament regardless of the outcome. The coaches expect five entries.

If only four go, the odd team out of the 52-team tournament may be Syracuse, only 9-7 in the Big East, but 12-1 outside the conference, inflicting one of the two losses suffered by No. 1 Houston.

"We've been in the Top 20 all season," Syracuse Coach Jim

Boeheim said Wednesday. "Then we lose here and suddenly we're not even in the top 50?"

Said St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca: "Look at the schedules. Why shouldn't we all go? The losses we get come from bumping each other off?"

But Boston College has very little to worry about. A Cinderella team in the last two NCAAAs and a point of controversy last year — Bradley Coach Dick Versace, among others, questioned why they were invited to the NCAA — they are virtually assured of a spot by their regular-season record. "Pressure?" Williams asked. "I don't feel any pressure. What we've done during the regular season has assured us of a chance to play after the season's over. I can remember when I played at Maryland in the '60s and you had to win the tournament to go. I saw a 24-2 team go nowhere."

Williams, who moved to BC from American University, inherited most of the players from last year's team that lost to Houston in the Midwest Regional finals. But he didn't have Bagley, the team's top scorer and assist man, who turned pro after his junior year and was the first-round pick of the NBA's Cleveland Cavaliers.

This year, three players have carried the Eagles — 6-8 forward John Garris, 6-9 center Jay Murphy, and Michael Adams, the 5-10 guard who waterbugs through, around and under opposing teams.

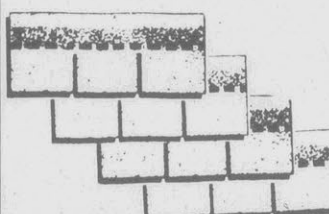

"Maybe we were helped when Bagley left," Williams reflects. "The chemistry of a team is difficult to define. Sometimes you can have too many good players. I just didn't know how good some of these kids were, particularly Murphy, Adams and Garris."

Garris, a senior from Bridgeport, Conn., has been a particularly pleasant surprise for Williams. A transfer from Michigan, he didn't begin to fulfill his awesome potential until late last year. This season, he's averaged nearly 20 points and eight rebounds a game.

Dioxin Exposure Extent: Like Oranges And Apples

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Why Times Beach and not Vietnam? When a veteran asked why the government bought out a town in Missouri that was exposed to dioxin but won't compensate veterans exposed to the same substance in Vietnam, Air Force Major Alvin Young was ready.

He flashed onto a screen a slide showing an orange and an apple.

His point was that the degree of exposure was so much greater in Times Beach, Mo., than in Vietnam that comparing the two situations was like comparing, well, apples and oranges.

For years, the Veterans Administration has dismissed veterans' claims that dioxin in the herbicides sprayed in Vietnam damaged their health. So the VA was put on the spot when another agency of government moved so fast after dioxin was found in Times Beach, population 2,400.

Young, an environmental specialist on loan to the VA, has collected a pile of data intended to prove that herbicides sprayed in Vietnam were not the culprit, but his data hasn't persuaded the veterans.

The issue won't go away. Other veterans keep asking the question that Hugh Walkup of Seattle raised at a meeting of the VA's Advisory Committee on Herbicides: Why Times Beach and not Vietnam?

The Centers for Disease Control decided that one part per billion of dioxin was enough to be a health risk.

The concentration of dioxin in Vietnam was much heavier. The VA says it was an average of two parts per million in Agent Orange — the herbicide sprayed on jungle growth in Vietnam. Between 1965 and 1971, 11 million gallons of Agent Orange were sprayed in Vietnam.

Nonetheless, Young argues that Vietnam veterans are at less risk than the people of Times Beach. And he says he doubts that either group is at much risk at all.

Young says the Missouri residents were exposed far longer to far heavier concentrations of dioxin "and hence the possibility of getting a dose in the body that could have an adverse effect is greater in Times Beach than in Vietnam — far greater."

Not everyone agrees. Rep. Thomas Daschle, D-S.D., told the House of Representatives recently: "If this government is willing to accept responsibility for Times Beach, it has even more of a responsibility to provide compensatory relief to individuals it was directly responsible for exposing to the very same chemical in Vietnam."

He has authored a bill, introduced Tuesday in the House, to compensate veterans for disabilities resulting from some diseases associated with dioxin.

Since the war's end, more than 100,000 veterans have taken a special VA medical examination out of suspicion that Agent Orange exposure has affected their health. And 16,564 veterans, many of them suffering from diseases they cannot otherwise explain, have filed for disability compensation.

The VA has rejected the claims, explaining that no link has been established between the herbicide and any disease veterans are suffering.

Dioxin is an impurity in Agent Orange which is a mixture of the herbicides 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T.

Young puts the difference between Times Beach and Vietnam this way: He calculates that maybe 300 pounds of dioxin were put down over perhaps 5,000 acres in Missouri while 368 pounds of dioxin were sprayed over three million acres of Vietnam.

The major makes five distinctions between Missouri and Vietnam:

— In Vietnam, he says, herbicides contained an average of two parts of dioxin per million while the worst sample of soil in Missouri contained 340 parts per million.

— Soil taken from sprayed areas in Missouri would contain 20,000 times more dioxin than the same amount of soil dug up in Vietnam.

— Most GIs spent only a year in Vietnam. People who have lived in Times Beach since the spraying occurred have had 11 years of exposure.

— In Missouri, dioxin-contaminated waste oil was sprayed on roads to control dust. In Vietnam, herbicides containing dioxin were sprayed mostly on heavily canopied forests with 94 percent of the herbicide, by Young's estimate, intercepted before it reached the ground. Some servicemen involved in the spraying program became saturated with the herbicides; some ground troops were also sprayed, accidentally; but most who came into contact with dioxin, Young says, were exposed to the substance after it had seeped into the ground.

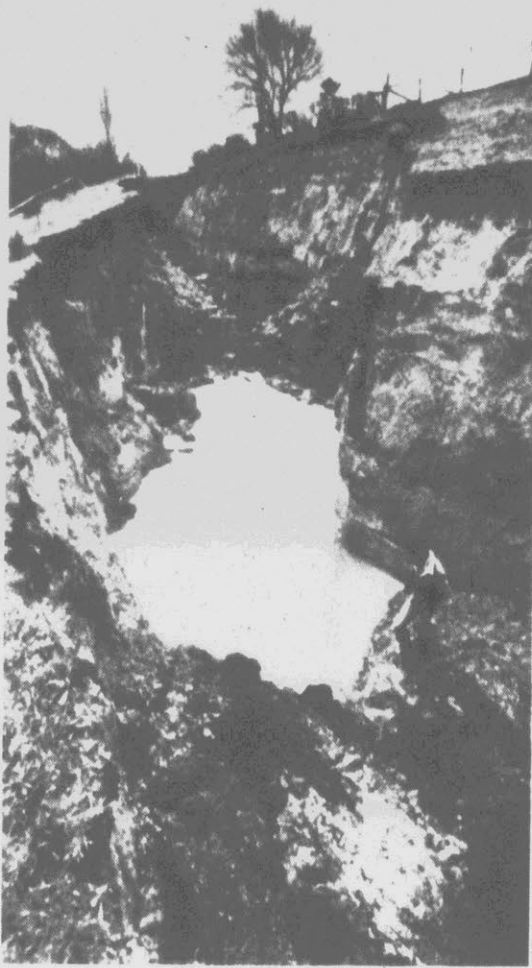

— Dioxin is biodegradable — neutralized by sunlight. Young estimates that 95 percent of the dioxin sprayed in Vietnam biodegraded. But in Missouri, he says, the dioxin seeped into the ground, with less exposure to sun.

Lewis Milford, a lawyer with the Vietnam Veterans Law Center at American University, disputes Young's calculations.

"EPA presumably thought that dioxin levels at Times Beach were a danger to human health," Milford says. "The dioxin levels there were at least one part per billion; in Vietnam, veterans were exposed to Agent Orange with concentrations of between one and 20 parts per million."

"The VA continues to ignore relevant evidence but never explains how much evidence would be enough to award compensation to Vietnam veterans who have been exposed to Agent Orange and whose health problems are related to exposure," he said. "This is no more than a position taken for political rather than scientific reasons."

EARTH OPENS — This gaping hole, apparently the work of recent heavy rains, has opened on what was once a gentle hillside near Sebastopol, Calif. The trench runs for a quarter of a mile, reaching depths of 65 feet and stretching to 30 feet in width. No structural damage has been done to nearby homes, but geologists are uncertain what will happen next. (AP Laserphoto)

Argues Cheaper Gas Will Result

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says eliminating natural gas price limits will drive down the fuel's cost just like deregulation of oil helped cause a decline in oil prices.

"If the natural gas market were not regulated and were allowed to operate the same way that all other major energy markets operate," natural gas prices would decline, Energy Secretary Donald Hodel told the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee on Wednesday.

Hodel's prediction opened four days of hearings by the panel on a melange of natural gas bills, including President Reagan's proposal to lift all gas price controls by 1986.

"The situation in today's gas market is similar to that in the oil market two years ago," Hodel said. "The deregulation of oil prices helped cause a decline in oil prices, which continues even today. Abundant supplies and competitive demand caused prices to fall, and consumers are reaping the benefits."

Current law — enacted by Congress in 1978 as part of President Carter's energy program — would lift price lids on Jan. 1, 1985, from offshore gas and from gas discovered since April 1977. But it retains indefinitely price controls on gas found before April 1977.

Reagan's plan faces strong opposition in the House and Senate. Thus far, 26 natural gas bills have been introduced, calling for partial decontrol to the reimposition of controls already lifted.

"It's clear there is no consensus on this issue at this time," Hodel said.

Committee members agreed, with several saying the Reagan proposal could serve as a "framework" for Congress to enact a new plan.

The controversy stems from the fact that even though some large reserves have been discovered in the past five years, natural gas prices have risen 114 percent in that period.

In the past year, increases of 30 percent to 40 percent have hit consumers in some areas.

Rare Book Confirmed

WACO, Texas (AP) — Baylor University officials say they have confirmed that a book in the university's private collection was printed on the same press that produced the historic Gutenberg Bible.

Dr. Robert Collmer, dean of graduate studies and research, said the book "Codex Justinianus" was printed on the press in 1475 on parchment, or animal skins.

Collmer, who teaches an English Department graduate course in bibliography and research methods, is an expert in incunabula, or rare book identification.

"The Baylor copy is perfect in that it has not been reconstructed from disassembled copies," he said. The book is one of nine known "perfect" copies in the United States.

Former U.S. Sen. William Blakely gave the book to Baylor during the 1960s. He reportedly purchased it in London during the 1940s, said law librarian Della Geyer.

The book contains the legal code of the Roman emperor Justinian and was considered the bible of early lawyers, Baylor officials said.

The book's printer, Peter Schoeffer, was the son-in-law and partner of Johannes Fust, a lawyer and financier who originally supported Gutenberg but later sued him for failure to pay his debts. The suit resulted in Fust obtaining Gutenberg's equipment.

The book will be on display March 10-28 in conjunction with the exhibit of the Gutenberg Bible, which is touring the state as part of the University of Texas centennial celebration.

Realtor-Of-Year

Nominees Asked

The Greenville-Pitt County Board of Realtors is accepting public nominations through March 31 for the board's Realtor Citizenship Award.

Thelma Whitehurst, president, said the competition is being conducted throughout the country by the National Association of Realtors as part of its 75th anniversary celebration this year.

She said nominations of deserving Realtors should be written in a statement of 100 words or less and mailed to: Citizenship Competition, Greenville-Pitt County Board of Realtors, P.O. Box 3262 — ECU Station, Greenville, 27834-0970.

The winner, selected by a panel of area judges, will receive a certificate of recognition and will be entered in the state competition. The state winner will receive a prize and become eligible for the national competition, with the national winner announced in November.

Senators Assail Treaties' Terms

WASHINGTON (AP) — North Carolina Republican Sens. Jesse Helms and John East are criticizing treaties that would give up U.S. sovereignty over a string of islands in the South Pacific.

The senators said Tuesday that the islands in the Gilbert and Ellice chains had strategic importance and predicted that the Soviet Union would try to gain influence in the area if the United States withdrew.

The controversy involves four treaties in which the United States would give up sovereignty over 26 islands spread over four million square miles. The treaties, signed in 1979 by the Carter administration, would give the islands to the island nations of Tuvalu and the Republic of Kiribati.

The auction was textbook. After South opened two no trump, North probed for a spade fit with the Stayman convention. When he located a spade suit in the South hand, it seemed obvious that the suit contract would be the better bet because of the ruffing values in the North hand.

West led a trump. Declarer won and drew two more rounds to exhaust the enemy trumps. Next he cashed his three top clubs, to set up two long cards in the suit on the table. Dummy's trump was an entry, but if declarer crossed to the trump he would have only nine tricks. So the entry had to come via a ruff.

Declarer led the queen of diamonds from hand. Had West won this trick, or had the ace of hearts been with East, declarer would have been home. But unfortunately, the defenders allowed East to win the diamond trick and he shifted to the queen of hearts, and the defenders quickly netted four tricks.

Declarer made a fair stab at his contract, but he could have done better. See the difference if he cashes only two high trumps in hand before playing off the three top clubs.

Should a defender ruff a high club, declarer must fall back on finding the ace of hearts with East. The extra chance comes when the cards lie as in the diagram. East has only two clubs, but he also started with only two trumps. So declarer can now get to dummy with the king of trumps, in the process drawing the last outstanding

A Conquered Land

Today Javier Perez de Cuellar, Secretary General of the United Nations, is scheduled to meet with Soviet leader Yuri Andropov to discuss the Soviet presence in Afghanistan. Unfortunately Afghanistan has been a victim of conquest for centuries. Alexander the Great seized the territory in the 3rd century B.C. Genghis Khan added Afghanistan to his empire in the 1200s. In 1919, a century of British rule ended with Afghan independence. Then, in 1978, a Marxist government came to power with aid from the Soviet Union, despite heavy resistance. A year later, Soviet troops declared war on the anti-communist insurgents known as "mujahidin." And the fighting there is still going on.

Eliminated

A state law passed in the early 1970s requiring all children to be immunized for rubella before entering a school or day-care center has all but eliminated measles in Pitt County and North Carolina, county Health Director Robert Ehinger says.

Ehinger said North Carolina reported only two cases in 1982, while there were 1,697 nationwide — a significant decrease from the 3,012 cases reported the previous year.

Pitt County had no cases reported last year and only two in 1981. Laboratory tests put doubt on the validity of those reported cases.

Reporting of measles incidence has been done since 1912.

Measles continues to be a problem in many parts of the world, but health laws and thorough reporting and followup have practically eliminated it in this country, Dr. Ehinger said. He said smallpox is the only communicable disease that appears to have been eradicated worldwide through immunization.

Eye Funding 'Willie M' Care Needs

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — When the legislature began providing services for emotionally disturbed and violent children in 1981, it expected to find about 50 youths eligible for relatively specialized programs.

But the number of eligible children has grown to 1,093 and requested appropriations for the programs total $21.6 million in 1983-84 and $21.5 million in 1984-85.

Now legislators in the House-Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Education and Human Resources are looking for ways to hold down their costs.

The programs are for so-called "Willie M" children, a group of emotionally disturbed and violent youth identified in a class action suit against the state in 1979.

The case was named for a Charlotte youth, the first of four plaintiffs in the lawsuit. The plaintiffs charged that the state was not providing sufficient treatment and education for emotionally disturbed youth with violent tendencies.

The state Justice Department settled the suit in 1980 in federal court by agreeing to establish long-range treatment programs for the youth.

Jim Johnson, a fiscal analyst for the Legislature, said the state has been spending as much money as was needed to pay for starting programs to help the children.

"The staff has taken the position that is inflationary," Johnson said. "It encourages people to go out and hire more staff as long as the state keeps paying."

He said special language in the 1983-85 budget could allow the state to begin spending money for Willie M. children on a "unit cost basis."

That would involve determining an hourly rate for psychological and other kinds of services and then reimbursing all areas according to the same rates.

Johnson said that might encourage more efficiency and cost-saving measures.

The subcommittees made no decision on the proposal but were expected to continue deliberations.

Spokesmen for the legislative staff, the Department of Human Resources and Department of Public Instruction told the lawmakers that the average student served by the programs is a boy nearly 14 years old. About half the class members are white and half are black, they said.

About half the children already were in a training school, group home or other facility at the time they were accepted into the Willie M. program.

Finally Give An Additives List

WASHINGTON (AP) — The tobacco industry is finally telling the government what — besides tobacco — goes into cigarettes. But nine months after the process began, the government is just starting to review the secret list of possibly poisonous additives.

Last June, after about six years of agitation by lawmakers and citizen groups about cigarette additives, the industry agreed to voluntarily provide names of additives to the Department of Health and Human Services.

Under the arrangement, the only substances subject to the reporting requirement are those put into cigarettes by three or more tobacco companies. Another provision requires the government to keep the names of these additives secret.

"This policy is a joke, an outrage," says Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., who is advocating legislation to require the government to inform about all additives and to make the names public once a year.

Dr. Edward N. Brandt Jr., assistant secretary for health, was questioned by Wyden about additives during an appearance Wednesday before the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on health and the environment.

"My understanding is we know absolutely nothing about what kind of additives go into cigarettes," Wyden said. "For all we know, there could be poisonous pesticides, rodent remains, arsenic...."

Wyden added that he understood the Tobacco Institute, the cigarette industry's lobbying organization, had made the information available "and the department hasn't even looked at it."

Brandt replied that "the department is in the process of looking at it right now."

"I will take full responsibility for the fact that when we negotiated this agreement and began, that I seriously underestimated the kind of scientific task that was before us," he said.

Brandt said that because the chemical substances are inhaled at high temperatures, "what we are talking about is a different kind of toxicological problem."

Because of the temperatures, he said, some toxic substances might be rendered non-toxic. And he said it was possible some substances ordinarily non-toxic might be made harmful.

Wyden called the agreement a "sweetheart arrangement" and said the government may not learn about additives that are widely used.

Brandt defended the agreement, saying that "this is the first time that any opportunity to gain access to that (additive) information has come about. Rather than call that a sweetheart deal... I think it's an opportunity we have...."

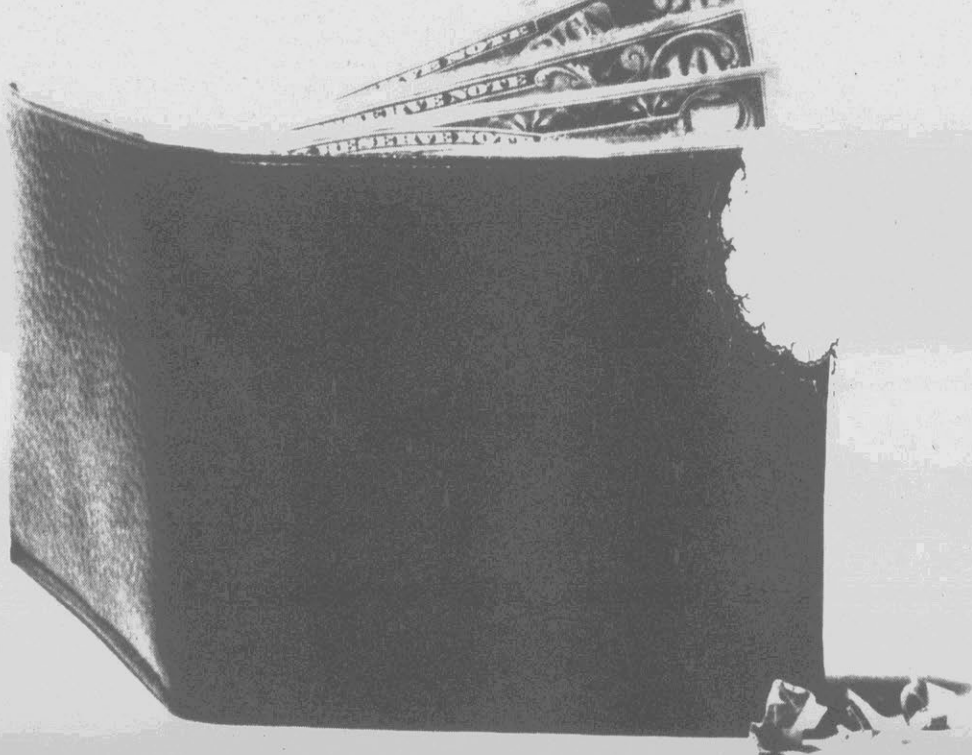

Wednesday's hearing concerned a bill, sponsored by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., to require tobacco companies to reveal all additives and to put stronger health warning labels on cigarette packages and advertising.

Brandt said the Reagan administration feels "stronger warnings are needed," but he took no position on Waxman's bill.

"Smoking remains the major cause of premature death and disability," he testified. "It is now well established that cigarette smoking is a drug dependence and that cigarette smoking is addictive to many people."

There was no testimony from the Tobacco Institute, the industry's lobbying arm. It will have a hearing of its own before the subcommittee next Thursday.

Wineries-Franchise Bill Goes Before House Today

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A bill giving wineries and wholesalers the right to enter into franchise agreements faces state House consideration today after emerging intact from the House Small Business Committee.

The Senate suspended its rules last week to approve an identical measure overwhelmingly.

The bill would let wineries assign one wholesaler to each territory, although the distributor could sell outside that territory. Wineries would be prohibited from cancelling franchise agreements unless the wholesaler lost his license, went bankrupt, failed to maintain adequate sales or failed to keep pace with other state wholesalers.

Wholesalers would be able to appeal the cancellation to the state Alcoholic Board of Control Commission and later in court.

Opponents failed in committee to change parts of the bill they said would restrict minority participation in wine wholesaling while unfairly letting wholesalers pass the business to their heirs.

Efforts by Rep. Herman Gist, D-Guilford, and Rep. C.B. Hauser, D-Forsyth, tried to ensure minority participation failed after supporters said the bill already protected minorities.

Rep. Robert Brawley, R-Iredell, tried unsuccessfully to delete provisions of the bill that allow passing the franchise to a wholesaler's heirs.

"There is not a person in this room who has a guarantee like that in his own business," Brawley said.

"I don't think the death of a family member ought to be grounds for financial ruination," said Rep. Martin Nesbitt, who introduced the House version of the bill. He said wineries have imposed unreasonable demands, including threatening to take away a wholesaler's franchise if he is absent from the business for 30 days.

In other legislative action:

Credits

The Senate went on record as opposing a federal tuition tax credit bill, 45-2.

The resolution urging Congress to oppose passage of the credits for parents who send their children to private schools now goes to the House, where an identical resolution was introduced by Rep. David Diamont, D-Surry.

Sen. Wilma Woodard, D-Wake, warned that the tax credit would seriously damage public schools and would change educational policy for the worse.

Sen. Don Kincaid, R-Caldwell, said the General Assembly doesn't have any business taking sides in congressional battles.

"We in the General Assembly seem to think the congressmen in Washington need some guidance from home," he said. "The proper time for guidance was the election."

Garbage

A bill that would enable Mecklenburg County to set up a solid waste incinerator sparked questions in the House Water and Air Resources Committee whether surrounding areas might be forced to haul their garbage to such an incinerator.

The bill introduced by Rep. Ruth Easterling, D-Mecklenburg, would let authorized local governments require that solid waste generated in the area be delivered to a specific facility. She said large amounts of waste would be needed to make operation of the facility possible.

But Rep. Joe Hudson, D-Union, noted that the bill might require his county to haul garbage to the incinerator without consideration of cost.

The bill was held for discussion next week.

The committee adjourned before it could vote on a bill that would prohibit landfilling of certain types of hazardous wastes.

Insurance

The Senate Insurance Committee approved a bill that would let companies apply to offer lower rates for workers' compensation policies than the N.C. Rate Bureau suggests.

Such deviations are permitted for other types of insurance but is not allowed for workers' compensation.

The bill was amended to require that companies allowed to deviate offer the special rate to all their customers, including those that might be considered special risks.

Commissions

The House Committee on State Personnel began examining selected boards and commissions with an eye toward eliminating any that are unnecessary.

Chairman Rep. John Jordan, D-Alamance, said he appointed subcommittees to study individual commissions.

Water

The House passed a Senate bill that would let sanitary districts file lawsuits opposing the removal of water from the Roanoke River basin.

"The bill was designed to counter designs on the waters of Gaston and Kerr lakes," said Rep. Jim Crawford, D-Granville. He said Virginia Beach, Va., might take water from the basin and "send it back down the Chowan River as a polluted stream."

Nursing Standards

The House overwhelmingly passed a bill to repeal a freeze on state nursing standards imposed by the General Assembly last year.

Rep. J.P. Huskins, D-Iredell, said the action was agreed upon by a study commission after the State Board of Nursing reached an agreement about the standards with community colleges.

Resolutions

Resolutions renewing legislative study commissions on revenue laws and aging were approved by the Committee on Rules and Operation of the House.

The committee also approved resolutions authorizing the Legislative Study Commission to examine the teaching of computer literacy in public schools and community colleges and asking Congress to oppose federal tuition tax credits for private schools.

Rep. David Diamont, D-Surry, said the tuition tax credit would cost the United States government $4.6 billion after five years. Meanwhile, by 1985 more federal money would be spent on many urban private schools than on their public counterparts, he said.

New bills filed in the Senate would:

— Ask Congress to repeal or change a .50 cent per hundredweight assessment on milk authorized by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982.

— Increase grants-in-aid to private child care institutions to reimburse 57 percent of the costs of care for 827 eligible children, instead of 42 percent as currently appropriated. That would cost $1.5 million in 1983-84 and another $1.5 million in 1984-85.

— Authorize the financing of public parking areas for certain projects for state agencies.

Bills filed in the House would:

— Ask Congress to assure that North Carolina lands held by the federal government remain publicly owned.

— Allow witness fees to be paid in juvenile proceedings.

— Provide $50,000 for each year of the biennium for the Autistic Group Home for Children in Stanly County.

— Provide $50,000 to the Robeson Historical Drama Inc. to produce the outdoor drama "Strike at the Wind."

— Allow the time a juvenile spends on conditional release to be credited toward his maximum commitment to the Division of Youth Services.

DUI Bill Prospects Uncertain As Senate Raises Drinking Age

By JOHN FLESHER

Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) —

Supporters of Gov. Jim Hunt's drunken driving bill hoped the state Senate today would reverse an amendment passed Wednesday to raise the legal age for drinking beer and wine from 18 to 21.

The Senate on Wednesday voted 27-21 to amend Hunt's bill, which calls for raising the drinking age to 19. The Senate then adjourned abruptly amid debate over whether the vote would cost extra money and warnings that it could jeopardize the entire package.

There was no vote on the complete bill, which would do away with existing drunken driving charges, replacing them with a single offense of driving while impaired. It would eliminate plea bargaining and require that sentencing be done in a separate hearing and adhere to a set formula.

The bill also would impose civil liability on vendors who sell alcoholic beverages to underaged patrons who later cause accidents and would revoke for 10 days the driver's license of anyone blowing 0.10 or higher on the Breathalyzer. It would permit impounding a person's car if the driver is caught driving drunk although his license has been revoked for an earlier drunken driving conviction.

Senate Majority Leader Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, said the vote raising the drinking age to 21 effectively had deprived the state of $3.2 million in alcoholic beverage tax revenues.

Because the bill is only expected to raise $2.5 million in fees, he said, it will have to be sent back to the Appropriations Committee for further study. Royall warned that returning the bill to committee could tie it up for months and possibly kill it.

"We are talking about a lot of money here," said Royall. "They are ruining the bill by putting other individual bills on top of it. They're going to kill what we've been trying to do since we got down here."

He said efforts to raise the drinking age to 21 should be made in a separate bill.

Supporters immediately began lobbying to reverse the drinking age vote. A motion for such a vote was expected to be made today.

"I think the chances are good for changing this vote when people realize that it could sink the entire bill," said Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, the legislation's chief sponsor.

But Sen. Robert Warren, D-Johnston, who introduced the 21-year-old age limit amendment, said he expected his supporters to hold fast.

"I have an abiding faith in the people of the Senate," said Warren. "They voted their convictions and I would hope they stick with them."

Warren said he would consider changing his age limit vote if convinced it was hurting the bill, but he said he didn't think it was doing so.

Royall raised the money issue as the Senate prepared to act on an amendment by Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Bumcombe, to delete the 10-day license revocation provision from the bill.

Barnes, struggling to keep the bill on the floor, offered to yield to Sen. Aaron Plyler, D-Union, who said he would move to reconsider the vote raising the drinking age to 21.

Sen. Joseph Johnson, D-Wake, then moved to postpone the reconsideration vote until Friday. But it was noted that Senate rules require a two-thirds majority to reconsider a vote after such a long period of time.

Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, then called for adjournment and the Senate voted 32-18 to leave for the day.

"It looked as though we were getting into a situation where it would take a two-thirds vote to keep the bill out of committee," said Hardison in an interview. "I don't want it back in committee; there's no telling what would happen. I want us to pass a law to stop the bloodshed drunken drivers cause."

Barnes agreed, saying that sending the bill back to the Appropriations Committee would pit the measure against pork-barrel legislation that normally floods the Legislature as the session winds down.

Brent Hackney, Hunt's deputy press secretary, called Wednesday's action "a momentary and small disappointment but not a defeat." He denied that the package was in trouble, adding, "We will have a strong bill when it comes out."

During debate on his amendment, Warren said it was inconsistent for the state to have different ages for drinking beer and wine and liquor. Currently, the minimum age for drinking liquor is 21.

"They'll all make you drunk. It just depends on how much you drink," he said.

"Think of the number of people whose lives could be saved by increasing the drinking age," Warren added. "It could be your life."

But Sen. Ben Tison, D-Mecklenburg, said increasing the drinking age would be ineffective.

"I'd support this in a minute if I thought it would do any good," he said. "But I fear we will only encourage teenagers to drink in cars or elsewhere instead of in a controlled environment."

Sanford Plans Head Up Hollings' Campaign Bid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina has tapped Duke University President Terry Sanford to be chairman of his Democratic presidential campaign.

Sanford, a former North Carolina governor, told reporters Wednesday, "it will be less than a manager's job and a little more than a figurehead."

Hollings has not declared his candidacy but expects to do so next month.

Sanford, who served as governor from 1961 to 1965, has been involved in Democratic national politics for more than 30 years and was himself a candidate for the presidency in 1972.

He told reporters he does not intend to neglect his full-time job as president of Duke. But he said he will have time to give adequate attention to the Hollings campaign.

He said Hollings has the "character and leadership qualities" to make a good president, praising Hollings' performance as governor from 1959 to 1963.

Hollings called Sanford, "one of the most thoughtful men in politics." He said he was gratified to have Sanford with the campaign.

"I look forward to his counsel and advice... We will benefit from his wisdom and guidance," Hollings said.

Sanford recognized that Hollings is "not the leading Democratic candidate now," but he said his chance of winning the presidential nomination are "as good as anyone else's and better than some."

The former Tar Heel governor predicted that once the South Carolina senator is perceived as a "genuine national candidate," he should do well not only in the South but across the country. He said he should have a much better reading on Hollings' prospects by Christmas.

Sanford characterized the senator as a centrist whose stands on the issues are much more in tune with the rest of the nation today.

"He comes across as a solid, middle-ground candidate. He would do much better in Michigan today than he would have 20 years ago," Sanford said.

He predicted that Hollings will appeal to a "broad band" of Democrats, including organized labor and blacks.

While conceding that unions probably won't support Hollings as their first choice, Sanford said blue-collar leaders will view him as a "reasonably fair" person and will come to recognize that his stands on labor issues will benefit labor over the long haul.

The university president said Hollings has been "extremely fair" on black issues.

"I think the blacks will look favorably upon him. I think he has a splendid record of being fair to blacks," Sanford said.

Later on Wednesday, Hollings addressed the North Carolina Association of Electric Cooperatives Inc. at the Raleigh Civic Center, talking not about his presidential ambitions but about issues facing the nation.

Hollings said the economy is the top issue in the country today.

"Gun control, abortion, Social Security, a nuclear arms freeze, prayer in the schools pale in significance to the economic survival of this country in international competition," he told an audience of more than 700.

He said the United States should consider protectionist trade policies to counter the protectionist policies of major trading competitors such as Japan and Europe.

Criticizing the Reagan administration's budget deficits projected at more than $200 billion a year in the next five years, Hollings said the "sacrifice must be shared across the board."

Unable To Pay Legal Services

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Attorneys who voluntarily represent indigent criminal defendants through court appointment may have to wait several weeks for their paychecks, state officials say.

Dallas Cameron, legal counsel to the North Carolina Administrative Office of the Courts, said Wednesday that the office is out of money to pay lawyers in court-appointed cases.

He said the office is writing the final checks from the special account and that the money should cover applications for fees made through March 2.

About $6.4 million was appropriated this fiscal year to pay court-appointed attorneys — less than the amount spent last year, Cameron said. The office intends to seek approximately $3.1 million more to cover legal fees for the remainder of the fiscal year, which ends June 30.

They Plan To 'Measure' Local Telephone Service

By NORMAN BLACK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite the resistance of consumer groups and state regulators, telephone companies across the country are trying to apply their long-distance pricing procedures to local phone service.

Local calls would be "measured" — in other words, billed — on the basis of time-of-day, day-of-week, the length of a call and distance — just like long-distance. The industry calls such pricing Local Measured Service, or LMS for short.

Telephone officials assert that Local Measured Service offers the best option to skyrocketing local rates while properly forcing the people who use the phone network the most to pay for that use.

The Florida Public Service Commission recently rejected a bid by Southern Bell to offer LMS as an option. Part of the problem, says Commissioner Susan W. Leisner, "was it just got too complicated for consumers. There's really no way to keep track of your calls or verify charges."

"And Southern never really justified the variable cost by elements. For example, does it really cost them more if you stay on the phone for 30 minutes instead of 15 minutes?"

Ms. Leisner attributes Southern Bell's defeat to "an overwhelming local reaction. I think a lot of the uproar came from retirees from New York, where they had it and hated it."

The debate over Local Measured Service is not new. Cities like New York and Chicago have operated under various types of LMS billing for decades. The controversy is building, however, because of the pending breakup of the Bell System, major changes in regulation and suspicions that the phone companies want to make LMS mandatory.

"We've supported that idea of a per-call billing option for years," says Dr. Lee Richardson, a marketing professor at the University of Baltimore and vice president of the Consumer Federation of America. "But the telephone companies have decided they want the full-fledged, so-called local long-distance system."

"And we are ardently opposed to that," adds Samuel Simon, the executive director of the Telecommunications Research and Action Center, a Washington-based public interest group. "It's too complex — unnecessarily complex — and the average consumer won't be able to understand and accurately gauge his monthly usage."

The January 1984 breakup of AT&T has raised expectations that the 22 Bell companies will have to raise local rates to maintain profitability. For one thing, the system of subsidizing local phone companies with long-distance revenue is being overhauled.

Without new options, customers will be locked into flat local rates that could double or triple.

In Chicago, for example, the cheapest flat rate for unlimited local calling is now $32.85 a month. On the other hand, a Chicago resident can take an LMS option that costs $6.50 a month, covering 80 calls within the city.

New York is the only major city in the country that has made the switch to a mandatory, full-blown measured service for residential customers.

"If we were on a flat rate, the charge would be so high and the local calling zone so small that nobody would want it," says Tony Pappas, a spokesman for New York Telephone.

"It seems fairer to charge people for what calling they do than to average everybody together," he said.

Says Real Texan Reads No Books

By LAURA RICHARDSON
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — When it comes to Real Manhood, Yankee boys think they've got it made if they don't eat quiche. That's nothing. A Real Texan can't even pronounce it.

A Real Texan doesn't wear sunglasses; he squints. A Real Texan doesn't wear designer jeans. He never eats in restaurants; he goes to cafes. He doesn't drink in taverns; he boozes in honky tonks. He doesn't eat breath mints or use insect repellent.

A Real Texan's girlfriend would never leave him for another woman, and the closest he wants to get to California is Las Vegas. He never goes to Oklahoma.

"A Real Texan" is summed up in 88 pages selling for $3.95.

Bill Walraven — who is a native Texan but not a Real one — said he was sitting at Scholz's Beer Garten in Austin talking about Real Men, as defined in the best-selling book "Real Men Don't Eat Quiche," when somebody started talking about Real Texans, who are Real Men and a whole lot more.

Walraven continued the game in his column in the Corpus Christi Caller, readers sent in their favorite definitions of the Real Texan, and a book, "Real Texans Don't Drink Scotch In Their Dr Pepper," is the result.

Reading this little book, one finds that Walraven's Real Texan is a fairly crude fellow with simple tastes. He drives the basic American-made pickup or an unwashed Cadillac, and he does without: chili without beans, beans without sugar, cigarettes without filters, beer without a glass.

He almost can do without women.

"The Real Texan believes in equal rights for women, so long as they know their place," the book says. And a Real Texan "does not like a woman who is smarter than he, which could make him an endangered species."

"The real Texan is just what he is, warts and all. He is us," said Walraven in a telephone interview from his home. "Real Texans aren't necessarily white males, but I guess probably the cliché of the redneck would come through stronger. You can't caricature women as well."

"The amazing thing is it's proved real popular with the real grizzled rancher type," he said Tuesday. "Your truth gets to be funnier than fiction, anyhow."

The book is not necessarily a collection of put-downs, he said.

"I think a lot of these things have more than a grain of truth in them, and that's why they're funny," he said. "Texas is different from any other state because its history gives it a bragging pinnacle. We're the only state that that fought our own revolution, won our liberty before we joined the union."

"To a Real Texan, it's not really brags, he believes it. The history itself has created the mystique, and it sort of builds up an exaggeration that he can whip any guy on the block."

Walraven and Jerry LaPorte, a Caller cartoonist who illustrated "Real Texans Don't..." published the little book themselves at a cost of $12,000 last fall. With a first printing of 25,000, Walraven said he thinks the book will go into a second printing.

"It looks like it's doing pretty good," he said.

"We've gotten a great response from all over, from real Real Texans, and non-Texans, people everywhere. It's the kind of thing you read to find out if you are one, or whatever. Just fun — and I got four or five columns out of it."

There's just one problem: "Real Texans never read editorials, Ann Landers, horoscopes, or columnists."

Complain Over FLRB Rulings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two union presidents are complaining to Congress about decisions by the National Labor Relations Board, saying they have enabled employers in the construction industry to walk away from collective bargaining agreements.

Robert Georgine of the Building and Construction Trades Department and J.C. Turner of the International Union of Operating Engineers, both AFL-CIO affiliates, told a House subcommittee Tuesday that the trend away from union contracts has accelerated over the past 10 years.

Georgine said it is much easier during times of high unemployment for a company to create a non-union subsidiary, even though it has a collective bargaining agreement, and get a skilled work force from the large unemployment pool.

Georgine and Turner urged Congress to call on the NLRB to explain its decisions which, they said, have given "employers in this industry the unilateral and almost unfettered right to repudiate, ignore or evade a collective bargaining agreement."

Novelist Denies It 'Came Easy'

LONDON (AP) — British novelist Graham Greene, 78, doesn't want anyone thinking he arrived at riches easily, or early.

The author of "Brighton Rock" and other successful books, including "The Power and the Glory," says he wrote for 20 years before making enough money to live on.

In a mild rebuke to the Times of London, Greene said in a letter published Tuesday that it was not until 1949, when he was 45, "that I was able to rely on my novels alone."

The Times had referred to the "vast sales" of his early novels.

BROADWAY MOUNTAIN — No, it's not a mountain transported to a Broadway theater; it's a papier-mache cliff, created on a stage of the Brooks Atkinson Theater in New York City for the new production, "K-2". The play, a story of life and death situation at 27,000 feet on the famed mountain, opens late in March. (AP Laserphoto)

Drama Suggests Proving Ground

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — You wouldn't buy a used car without kicking the tires, clocking the acceleration or checking the mileage. The latest offering on Mobil's "Masterpiece Theater" Sunday night suggests a similar proving ground for couples contemplating marriage.

Frederick Lonsdale's "On Approval," considered a risqué, cheeky play when it was introduced to London in the 1920s, is a typically British, farcical look at how two relationships are tested by trial marriages that have the look and feel of money-back guarantees.

The practice of putting a relationship through the rigors of day-to-day living is now fashionable, but, 60 years ago, it was scandalous, accounting in part for the play's popularity. "On Approval" is the kind of play about adult meshing and mismeshing that Neil Simon churns out today.

Although the novelty of "On Approval" is dated, the biting sarcasm of the dialogue is as sharp as any papershredder in Washington. So are the play's insights into how people act when they think they are in love, or when they fear the other party isn't.

Some viewers may find the going too slow, but if you appreciate wry humor and a brainy battle of barbs and brickbats, then the 90-minute "On Approval" will be your cup of English tea.

Maria (Penelope Keith), a pragmatic and properly pompous 41-year-old whose first marriage lasted 18 years too long, vows not to make another matrimonial mistake. Principally the object of her own affection, Maria has also inspired the love of the shy, earnest and strikingly bland Richard (Benjamin Whitrow).

When her friend, Helen (Lindsay Duncan), suggests marriage might be in the wings, Maria nixes the notion because "he'll never be what he is today a year hence." She then hits upon the idea of trying out the courtship in New Haven, so to speak.

Richard's enthusiasm for the unmarried proposal is about as unbridled as it ever gets. "It's wise without being cunning," he says, practically bubbling over. She won't be sorry. "I'm a great deal more than you think I am," he says.

His ecstasy is tempered ever-so-slightly when he's put on notice that they will be sleeping in separate bedrooms — her's in her country home, his in a hotel. What about rainy nights? "I suggest you take a raincoat," she says.

Meanwhile, Helen has fallen head over heels for George, the Duke of Bristol (Jeremy Brett). He's an egomaniacal, underfunded bouncer who probably doesn't have enough room on his dance card for anybody but himself. Still, sweet Helen finds this opposite attractive, and they strike a similar trial-marriage arrangement.

From that point, the focus of the play shifts from rosy fantasy to thorny reality. Characters can't live up to unreal expectations, and the more that is uncovered, the more they long for a cover-up. The starry-eyed lover in each couple begins wondering what there was to love in the first place.

Japan Has Its Jazz Fans

By JOHN NEEDHAM
TOKYO (UPI) — Lights dim and the chatter of 150 young people elbow-to-elbow at tiny tables stops as a spotlight falls on jazz drummer Elvin Jones.

It is Saturday night in Tokyo and the Elvin Jones Jazz Machine swings into "J. Blues," opening the first of two-hour-long sets and demonstrating that jazz is flourishing in Japan.

Live jazz is being played in dozens of clubs in Tokyo. In hundreds of others in Tokyo, thousands across Japan, the jazz is on tape or records, sometimes accompanied by videotapes of concerts.

"I think people here are generally better prepared for listening to a (jazz) concert than in other parts of the world," Jones said in an interview between dates on his most recent month-long tour of Japan.

"I'm sure everyone there has albums of mine, or of me playing with other people. These people bring albums they want autographed, they want a personal signature. They know what's on that album. They know what the music is about. They understand it. They're prepared to hear it."

Jones first toured Japan in 1966, and the same year married a Japanese woman, Keiko. With her as his manager he returned in 1978, and they come back once or twice a year.

He said in 1978 he found Japanese audiences had "broken away from that kind of reserved attention" to the music "and have become more emotional, more attuned to the music."

"I don't mean they get out of control," Jones said, "but they show a spontaneous enthusiasm."

Toshiaki Tomita, who runs two Tokyo jazz clubs and is thinking of opening a third, said "compared with 10 years ago, we have many more people who like jazz music, classic, mainstream jazz."

Tomita said years ago a hit jazz record would sell 10,000 copies at most but now a top recording can sell 30,000. Naming three popular female Japanese jazz singers, he said that "now the jazz boom makes all these women good business, even though they're not very good."

Just about any large record store will have an extensive jazz collection. Jones and other artists say they can find their old records, long out of stock in the United States, in record stores in Japan.

Masao Hakamazuka, a 25-year-old medical engineer for Toshiba Corp., said he has about 100 records, all jazz, in his collection "and my older brother has 400 or more."

Hakamazuka said he gets to live jazz concerts "three or four times a month, whenever I have time." The concerts can be in a 20-seat club or a 3,000-capacity hall.

Jones said Japanese jazz musicians are progressing along with the audiences. On his last tour, he transformed his normal five-member combo into a quartet, with a Japanese pianist and bass player.

Jones said in the 1960s, aside from groups like Sharps and Flats or individual musicians like Sadao Watanabe and Sleepy Matsumoto, most Japanese jazz players were "very isolated."

"I think they were reluctant to come forward as we would," he said, adding he encourages jam sessions with Japanese musicians.

"That's an exchange of information," he said. "That's how they learn."

"My mission as an artist, as a drummer — that's the kind of thing I want to see.

Rural China Seeing A Resurgence Of Superstition

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press Writer
PEKING (AP) — "Witches" murder peasants to exorcise demons, families commit ritual suicide to hasten their journeys to heaven and virgins have been sacrificed by a reincarnated "jade emperor."

There has been a resurgence of superstition in parts of the Chinese countryside, a macabre, medieval world where 30 years of communism have had virtually no impact on folk religion.

"Feudal superstitious activities have regained ground in our rural areas," the national magazine Fortnightly Conversations said recently. "They are harmful to our production and construction and to the people's physical and mental health. They pollute the general mood of society and affect our stability and unity."

All good communists, it said, should study science and propagate atheism.

Peasants burn fake paper money for the dead, along with paper television sets and stereos. Real, hard-earned cash sometimes is placed in the mouths of the dead, distressing communist ideologues who want it spent on the living, or at least put in the bank.

Fortune-tellers are frequently consulted about the sex of an unborn child and women often refuse abortions if they think their next child will be a son and heir.

Tales of superstition, all with futile or fatal endings, abound in virtually every province as China tries to exorcise its self-proclaimed witches, wizards, sorcerers, ghosts, goblins, snake, toad and fox gods and emperors come back to life.

Many are charlatans, extorting money from gullible peasants with promises to cure cancer, heart disease, tuberculosis or other diseases.

Some pass themselves off as emperors. Many, however, actually believe they have supernatural powers and their followers include more than one member of the officially atheistic Communist Party.

The resurgence of superstition began in 1979 when the Communist Party restored the right of religious freedom after years of suppression during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution. For many Chinese, however, religion and superstition are much the same.

Official Chinese press reports have been extensive, including these stories:

In northern Shanxi province, two alleged sorcerers treated a woman's kidney ailment by using chains, needles and fire to beat, bleed and burn the demons from her body. Cui Ernu died after they poured gasoline on her and set her on fire.

In Liaoning province, a Communist Party member Liu Wenxue asked a self-proclaimed witch to exorcise the demon possessing his wife, who had been treated in a hospital for heart disease.

The witch pierced the woman's nose with a knife, put a cord through her nose and strung her up on a ceiling beam. She wound a whip around the woman's neck, repeatedly jerked it to expel the demons, then stabbed the woman's veins with needles. While her husband watched impassively, the exorcism went on for days until the woman died.

The exorcist was sent to prison but the husband who invited the witch home was only scolded by the Communist Party which maintains its own disciplinary system.

In southwest Sichuan province, an avaricious would-be witch and her husband hoped to prove her powers to their neighbors by curing their son's gangrenous hand. After muttering incantations for days and scraping off rotten flesh, she finally ordered it chopped off so that a new hand would grow.

Even near more sophisticated Shanghai, a grandmother who claimed she was possessed by a deity drowned her 4-year-old grandson to "test him." Her brother, a Communist Party member, prevented the boy's family from rescuing him.

In Sichuan province, China's heartland, a man passed himself off as the reincarnation of an emperor, seducing eight women and extorting money from several others. A previous would-be emperor was condemned to death for sacrificing two small girls at his "coronation."

Also in Sichuan, a peasant, Yin Xianfu, set fire to his house because a sorcerer told him he and his seven family members would immediately enter heaven.

His family died in the flames but he was injured as he tried to set fire to his hut and could not fling himself onto the pyre. On the way to the hospital he wept because he had been left behind.

Young girls have drowned because they think they can walk on water. Workmen die because they rush to finish a house by an auspicious day — but before the concrete dries and the house collapses.

China bans the sale of superstition paraphernalia, but authorities often look the other way. In Haikou, capital of Hainan Island, shopkeepers do a good business selling picture charms to hang over doorways and paper money to burn for the dead.

Island officials claim they have been successful in reducing superstitious activities. Peasants used to sacrifice a chicken to appease the gods in cases of mild illness, a pig for more serious illnesses, and a buffalo for a death ailment.

Today health care is improved, they say, and they only kill chickens.

FOOTNOTE TO HISTORY — This early 20th century advertisement, covering the side of a brick building in Washington, N.C., informs the ladies of a wine especially for them. A Washington man explained that McElree's Wine of Cardui was a popular tonic in years past to help women endure recurring problem days.
