Soviet Cuts Oil Prices; Poses Price War Threat

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer
LONDON (AP) — OPEC cut its base price by nearly 15 percent to $29 a barrel, and the Soviet Union today was reported to have slashed the price of its crude to $28, raising the possibility of a new price war.

The Soviet cut, down from $29.25, was reported by industry sources in Rome, who said the decrease was effective March 1. The Soviet Union, which does not belong to OPEC, is the world's largest oil producer, with output of more than 12 million barrels a day.

During the OPEC meeting that just ended in London, it was reported that the Soviets had informed several Western purchasers that the price of Soviet oil would drop to as low as $27.50.

Italy is a major purchaser of Soviet crude, which is widely regarded as a convenient, and occasionally superior, substitute for the OPEC crude, Arabian light. The official Soviet news agency, Tass, said earlier today that the U.S. government wanted to see the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries fall apart and was "disappointed" that the cartel agreed to reduce prices.

The Kremlin urged OPEC last month to stand firm against Western pressure to reduce prices. At the same time, however, Italian oil industry sources said the Soviets had cut the price of Urals crude by $2.15 to $29.25.

Although OPEC ministers, in their 12 days of talks in London, cut prices nearly 15 percent and restricted production to keep them there, many energy analysts doubt the historic plan will work.

The main threat to the accord announced Monday is the likelihood that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, faced with declining demand for oil, will continue to lose customers to more flexible exporters outside the ranks of the cartel.

"This OPEC strategy is not a strategy that can deal with a shrinking market," said John Mugno, an energy specialist at Citibank in New York. "If the market doesn't strengthen then this agreement doesn't make any sense."

World demand for oil has steadily dropped in recent years, partly because consumer nations have adopted conservation measures and resorted to alternate energy sources.

Senate Speeds-Up Revenue-Sharing Payments

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a veto threat and a heavy weekend lobbying effort, Senate leaders today still lacked the votes to stop a move to repeal the withholding tax on interest and dividends.

But they were confident they could summon the needed support to keep the measure from further stalling action on a $3.8 billion Senate anti-recession jobs bill.

If the jobs bill isn't enacted by midnight Tuesday, 27 states and the District of Columbia may run out of money to pay unemployment benefits.

While a stalemate on the withholding issue continued, the Senate voted 73 to 21 to speed-up revenue sharing payments to the states.

Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., said paying the funds to the states more quickly this spring and the rest of 1983 would create jobs and provide vital community services.

Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said the acceleration would add $1.2 billion to the recession-relief measure.

"We could end up with a product that will not get a presidential signature," Hatfield said.

On the more contentious dividend withholding issue, Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., planned to ask the Senate later today to rule the amendment by Sen. Bob Kasten, R-Wis., out of order, aides said.

If his procedural motion succeeds, that would break the logjam on the jobs measure — but Kasten and other backers of the withholding repeal legislation would be free to offer it to another bill.

"We think we can win the procedural vote. But that doesn't dispose of the withholding issue. We can't beat that on a straight vote," said a top Senate GOP official, who spoke only on the condition that he not be identified.

Pulling the withholding issue off the jobs bill raised the specter that Kasten and others might seek to amend it to the big Social Security bail-out bill due for Senate consideration later in the week.

In fact, Baker conceded today that knocking the withholding amendment off the jobs bill probably would mean it would be offered to the carefully crafted Social Security measure.

And, Baker told reporters, "I will make no effort to stop him (Kasten) from offering it to the Social Security bill."

Unlike the jobs bill, the Social Security measure isn't facing such a tight deadline, Baker said. He said his first priority was getting the jobs bill through the Senate — even if it meant bogging down the Social Security measure.

"We will finish this bill today if it is humanly possible," he told the Senate as it resumed consideration of the jobs bill.

The lawmakers face a Tuesday deadline for the jobs bill's extension of national unemployment benefits. Without $5 billion in federal aid contained in the bill to subsidize states, more than half the states could be unable to make unemployment payments to millions of jobless workers.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said today that President Reagan would speak to senators on the telephone today, but added that because the withholding repeal amendment has 52 sponsors, "we realize it's going to be a difficult fight."

Baker aides said that Baker had also tried over the weekend to swing votes around and that the AFL-CIO had been busy lobbying against the bank-supported repeal amendment.

Not Much Help To Consumer

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

While the decision by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to cut the price of crude oil by $5 per barrel may help reduce inflation in the United States, consumers may not see much difference in the price of gas or fuel oil, according to Dr. Louis H. Zincone.

Zincone, an East Carolina University School of Business professor, said this morning that, "for us, I think it (the price cut) will help with the (economic) recovery and reduce inflation."

But, he said, "The profit margins of refiners has been pretty thin. We might not get it all passed on to us."

Another thing to consider, Zincone suggested, is the new 5 cents a gallon federal gasoline tax that goes into effect April 1. "That's a substantial federal tax increase," he said.

"I don't expect a great surge in the use of gas in response to the price decrease," Zincone said "mainly because businesses and individuals have spent a lot of money to conserve. They are not going to stop all of that."

For example, Zincone said if a home owner put in storm windows, he's "not going to rip them out because the oil price has gone down."

While the reduction in the price of oil by OPEC will help our economy, the effect on the "international economy is something else again," according to Zincone.

"The biggest problem," he said, is that many of the OPEC nations, such as Venezuela, "went into spending projects, and debt to cover the spending projects, assuming oil usage and prices would continue to go up or at least remain at high levels."

Financially, "marginal OPEC members, and non-OPEC members that do some producing" will have to re-evaluate their position, Zincone suggested. "The most serious problem for underdeveloped countries is how to repay or restructure the debt that they've taken out," he said.

The situation is "not particularly unusual" though, Zincone said.

"If you look back at the history of Brazil, all their foreign exchange is in coffee. It's either feast or famine. If coffee prices are good, they make a mint and do things. If coffee prices are bad, they've got that coffee commission and put it all in warehouses, much like OPEC has done" with oil.

"It's been a long standing problem with countries that rely on a single commodity in the international market ... oil, coffee or anything else."

"Those seem to be the basic issues," Zincone said, adding, "I think they will come out all right."

PHARMACY SUPPLIED BY HOLLOWELL'S?

My son was recently a cancer patient in Pitt County Memorial Hospital. I was dismayed to learn that some of his medications had to be obtained from Hollowell's Drug Store and channeled through the hospital pharmacy. I don't understand why an entity as big as Pitt Memorial can't buy drugs directly from a pharmaceutical firm and save money for the patients, plus I don't understand why Hollowell's should be the only drug store used by the hospital pharmacy. C.H.

John Stallings, PCMH administrator of pharmacy services, said, "The only things that we get from Hollowell's are those items that are immediate in nature, that is, those that we don't have on our formulary. This might be a drug that a physician prescribes that the pharmacy and therapeutics committee have not reviewed for use in our hospital. Often the situation that arises is that a patient comes into the hospital using a certain medication which his or her physician wishes to be continued. We may have the same formulation on hand supplied by a different firm, but the doctor and patient want the one known to them."

"As for why we use Hollowell's — we have sent out letters several times offering business to all the drug stores in town and Hollowell's is the only one that has been able to offer the hours and the delivery service that we require. However, we are always open to hearing from other firms that might be willing to participate in supplying the hospital pharmacy the supplementary service we need."

Anyone having opinions about this practice by the hospital may write to the hospital board of trustees c/o Jack Richardson, PCMH president.

Productivity Up For 3rd Month

WASHINGTON (AP) — Production at the nation's factories and mines rose for the third straight month in February, suggesting the economic recovery is continuing, new government figures indicated today. But the increase of 0.3 percent was less than one-fourth the January gain.

The Federal Reserve Board report noted February output increases for consumer goods including cars, for defense and space equipment and for construction materials.

Production rose 1.3 percent in January, the new report said, revising that figure upward from the previously estimated 0.9 percent. Output had risen 0.2 percent in December after declining in 14 of the previous 16 months during the 1981-82 recession.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said the new figures were "somewhat reflective of increasing signs of recovery."

Analysts inside and outside government had said that many economic figures had been pushed upward by warmer-than-usual weather in January and that February's numbers were almost sure to look less encouraging.

Other government reports for February have shown the unemployment rate holding steady at 10.4 percent and retail sales falling for the third month in a row — hardly obvious signs of recovery.

Anticipating a month of less-than-robust reports, chief White House economist Martin Feldstein cautioned last week that January figures could be leading to "unwarranted euphoria" about the strength of the recovery. But he also said he still felt "the economy is gradually moving toward a higher level of economic activity."

Ayden Board Objects To Routing Of School Bus

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

AYDEN — The Town Board of Commissioners has approved a resolution opposing a tentative Pitt County Board of Education plan to route bus traffic from the new Ayden Middle School down Short Street and Edgewood Drive to Third Street.

Short Street and Edgewood Drive are part of one thoroughfare plan being considered by the school board that would provide access to the new Ayden Middle School.

The area is primarily residential and residents Billy Nobles and Bobby Teal spoke against the proposed route at the Ayden board's monthly meeting Monday.

"From a commercial standpoint, we are concerned with congestion at the intersection of Short and Third streets," said Nobles. "Already in the afternoons it's terrible in this area and very difficult to get onto Third. Buses and school traffic at this intersection would make it that much worse."

"From the residential standpoint," Nobles said, "We don't want it (school traffic) on our street."

Because of the width of Short Street (22 feet of pavement) Nobles and Teal also stated they felt safety was a concern.

"That street, because it is narrow, is hard enough to navigate in a car," said Teal, "much less in one of those big buses. I feel like it wouldn't be safe to make this (Short Street) a thoroughfare for school traffic."

Teal said a petition opposing the thoroughfare was circulating.

Ayden Utilities Director Mark Suggs reported to the board that Carolina Power and Light has announced a nearly 13 percent overall increase in wholesale electrical cost beginning April 1.

According to Suggs, CP&L said the increase, one of two scheduled for this year, is necessary because of "extraordinary operating expenses" at the utility's Brunswick Plant.

Most of the increase, Suggs said, will be in billing for demand electrical usage. The charge for the first 6,000 kilowatts used will jump from $8 to $11.

Suggs estimated that the rate increase would cost the town $70,000 in the months of May and June.

No action was taken concerning the electrical rate increase.

In other business:

•The board approved a conditional use permit to allow construction of an ultralight airport.

•Mark Suggs was appointed safety director of the town and Travis Dixon was reappointed to the Planning Board for a three-year term.

•The following fire department officers were approved: Calvin Hardee, fire chief; Jeff Tripp, assistant chief, and Ed Skinner, secretary-treasurer.

•A public hearing on rezoning land on Snow Hill Road adjacent to N.C. 11 was set for April 11.

•The board's April workshop meeting, scheduled for April 4, Easter Monday, was moved to April 5.

Humming In Her Head Isn't Music To Her Ears

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I have a noise in my head right now and I have had it for about four weeks. It sounds like a high-pitched humming or buzzing that never stops. At first I thought it must be something in the house, but I hear it when I go outside, too. No matter where I am, I hear this humming, buzzing sound all the time. It's driving me crazy.

My husband has been telling me for three years that he hears a constant ringing in his ears, but I thought he was just imagining it.

I am 65 and my husband is 69. What is the trouble with us? Are we going crazy or what? Have you ever heard of this problem? And what can we do about it?

HEARING THINGS IN ILLINOIS

DEAR HEARING THINGS: I have indeed heard of it. It's a condition called "tinnitus," and millions of people are afflicted with it in varying degrees. There are many causes, but a few of the most common are: wax buildup in the ears, exposure to loud noises, Meniere's disease, a tumor in the auditory nerve, middle-ear infection, allergies to food or medication. Sometimes this condition is simply part of the natural aging process.

You and your husband should be examined by an ear, nose and throat specialist to determine what the cause is, and what, if anything, can be done to alleviate it.

If it cannot be remedied, you may have to learn to live with it. Please don't put off seeing your doctor. The more you know about this condition, the less anxious you will be.

DEAR ABBY: I'm all for giving cash gifts. It's been my personal experience that I actually spend less that way — not to mention the wear and tear on me and my car while hunting for the perfect present.

Besides, there are ways to personalize cash. I've made a cardboard "pizza" with coins pasted all over it for a teenager's birthday, filled a baby bottle with money for a baby shower, wrapped dollar bills around a bottle of suntan lotion for "honeymooners," given rolls of quarters to a college-bound friend (the washers and dryers in dorms get hungry, too), etc.

Last Christmas I stuffed some pasta shells with dollar bills so my new sister-in-law could buy whatever pasta-maker machine she wanted. Returns are a bummer!

LINDA IN FARMERS BRANCH, TEXAS

DEAR LINDA: Cash is not nearly so crass when presented with a creative gimmick. Thanks for some valuable suggestions.

DEAR ABBY: "Betty in Greenwich, Conn." wanted to know if it was considered proper for her Texas gentleman friend to keep his hat on while dining in a restaurant, and you said, "Unless this Texan is an Orthodox Jew, he should remove it."

Abby, I'll bet a million dollars that this man with the glued-on hat is neither kosher, Orthodox or whatever. The poor guy is bald!

Bright Colors For Carpets

Today's carpets come in an array of colors that dazzle the eye. And new construction techniques can fool the eye.

"Carpets can be constructed with lower face weights — the weight of the material per square foot of the part above the backing — which look and feel like the heavier weight carpets. But they will not wear as well," says Wilma Hammett, extension furnishings specialist, North Carolina State University.

To compare similar carpets, ask about denier, ply, stitch and gauge, says the specialist. The higher each figure is, the better the carpet.

A high density carpet, which has fibers close together, is considered to be a better carpet because it will last longer. Denier relates the yarn size and weight, in grams per 9,000 meters. For example, a nylon yarn 9,000 meters long that weighs 1,400 grams is called 1,400 denier, Dr. Hammett says.

The denier of a bonded carpet can be half that of a tufted carpet.

The number of single yarns twisted together to form one yarn is they ply. For example, a carpet with two yarns twisted together in each tuft is a two-ply carpet.

Stitch and gauge together give the number of tufts per square inch. The more tufts per square inch, the better the carpet.

The salesperson can give the denier, ply, stitch and gauge of the carpets, says the extension specialist.

Okay, all of you high school seniors out there — and you all know who you are — you say your graduation picture makes you look like a convicted shoplifter?

You say under student activities, all they listed was lunch?

You say in the class history they called you Dan instead of Jan?

Take heart. I have before me a book by Dan Carlinisky called "Celebrity Yearbook" that I've blown a half day on. Inside are the graduation pictures of a couple of hundred celebrities as they appeared in their high school yearbooks. You're supposed to guess who they are. There are a lot of surprises (and hair colors) that could sustain your ego for 15 or 20 years.

Let's get the cheerleaders, princesses and queens out of the way first. They're born with congenital cuteness, pompom hands and capped teeth and there's nothing anyone can do about it. They never change, so let's get it over with: Ann-Margret, Cheryl Ladd, Shirley MacLaine, Sally Struthers, Cheryl Tiegs and Phyllis George.

Now, onto the graduates, some of whom were lucky to find their way out of the parking lot following graduation exercises.

Paul Newman ran a student laundry, Bella Abzug was a member of the Freshman Sing, Dolly Parton was a member of the Future Homemakers of America and Penny Marshall was an "aide to Mr. Fitzpatrick" and aspired to become a secretary.

The man whose goal was to be president of the United States had to settle for Mel Brooks, comedic genius, while the part-time lifeguard at Dixon High in Dixon, Ill., turned out to be Ronald Reagan, president. Those are the breaks.

David Letterman fattened out his accomplishments with "hall monitor," Julia Child was a "Grass Cop" (and we all know what a future there is in that) and Pat Boone was chairman of the Courtesy Week Committee.

I tried to imagine as I read through the book who among all that talent would have leaped off the pages at me. Maybe Johnny Carson of Norfolk High, class of '43, who wrote one of the funniest class histories I've ever read. ("I was turned down so many times for a date for the Junior Senior Banquet, I felt like a bedspread.")

Maybe Fred MacMurray from Beaver Dam, Wis., who was just plain handsome.

But most of them were . . . ordinary. They looked just like the pictures in your yearbooks . . . young, apprehensive and wondering how they were going to unload the 200 billfold-size pictures that were left.

TV Is Big Factor In Men's Dressier Clothes

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Senior Editor
NEW YORK (UPI) — Men dress up more these days. The elegance helps their image.

They also are wearing lighter weights and lighter colors both for business and sportswear. More are wearing ties.

"We're entering a more elegant era in menswear," said Norman Karr, executive director of the Men's Fashion Association of America. "There is not one overwhelming look for spring and summer, although there is a bit of a boom for the double-breasted."

"Rebelliousness, such as it was in the 1960s and '70s, isn't that important now," said Karr. "Men feel the trend of more dressing up helps establish them."

Karr cited television as the most significant influence on men's dress today.

"Johnny Carson gets dressed up for his show. Dan Rather epitomizes comfortable elegance. Most broadcasters are attractively dressed ... And look at Bob Hope, always extremely well-dressed. Include John Travolta, John Forsythe, and among the sports figures (most of whom are well-dressed off the playing field) there is Jack Nicklaus. They convey what success looks like."

"Ronald Reagan had an effect initially on men's attire," Karr continued, "but I believe he's less of an influence today. The president is a man of many fashion moods. He looks just as appropriately dressed in jeans or jodhpurs as in a business suit. But no wonder. He's a graduate of a movie studio's wardrobe department."

The association's look at menswear for spring-summer predicted a trend away from the deep shades and weightier fabrics that dominated the suits and sport coats of last year.

"The swing for spring is to lighter tones, summerlike weights and a brighter, more upbeat spirit," Karr said.

There's also an increase in double-breasted fashions and sport coats in silk and silk-look clothes. Current styling lends an illusion of height. Classic simplicity marks the single-breasted suit. The two-button model continues to be the No. 1 choice of most American men. Because it's the spring season, you can expect to see fewer vests.

The increase in medium and light colors is often achieved by using more "mixey" yarns. Stripes ranging from hairlines to chalk are a top choice for business wear. Plains and solids come second, many of them using linen and linen-like yarns.

The association reported one of the outstanding developments of the new season is the growing popularity of cotton and cotton-polyester suitings.

In sport coats, the blazer continues to be the most wanted and most worn sport coat in the history of American fashion, the association reported. The number of blazer colors continues to grow. It isn't unusual to find 20 or more colors in a single collection.

In the lightweight department, count in polyester-cotton poplins, polyester-worsted hopsacks, tropical worsteds and some new 100 percent polyester with a silken look. Sport coatings come in pure cottons and cotton blends.

In shirts, the trend is toward more shaping to the figure and the use of white collars on both colored and patterned shirts. Watch also for the collarless, banded shirts in stripes or solids. In formal wear, the classics are back, with the looks of a Fred Astaire, white dinner jacket with black tuxedo trousers and white winged collar shirts.

Daytime formal clothes show the influence of last year's wedding of Prince Charles and Princess Diana, the association said. Look for the traditional dark gray cutaway coats and striped trousers for daytime weddings. The double breasted tuxedo is returning, and jackets show in either black or white to go with black trousers.

In hats, watch for a revival of the stiff-straw boater, but to go along, there is the rakish look of the plantation hat, with its wide, curled brim. Except for the boater, straws are soft.

In neckties, widths remained an unchanged narrow, but there are new "old" fabrics — crepe de chine, taffetas, silk and linen blends, and herringbone tweeds. Shantungs remain important.

Shoes fall into the tasseled slippers and the classic Norweigan type moccasin. Fabric shoes in light shades are expected to be a summer hit.

Designer jeans have de-celerated, Karr said. But jeans go on and on, now with different colors and the stone-washed look.

Plan for a slight rise in price because of the increase in labor and materials costs. But Karr said, "The tremendous amount of quality for the average man means he can dress well without looking to a second mortgage."

The Men's Fashion Association of America is a non-profit consumer education organization, 27 years old, and consisting mostly of American firms although their mailings are international.

Women's History Week Seminar Is Announced

Rare Woman's Role Won By 'Earthy' Rachel Ward

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Reporter
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Once every millennium a great woman's role falls to an actress and she must be ready and willing to kill to get it.

Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone With the Wind" was the biggest plumb of all. Eliza Doolittle in "My Fair Lady" was another.

Less celebrated, perhaps, but almost as desirable a feminine role is that of Meggie Cleary in the best-selling novel, "The Thorn Birds," a cavalcade of love and adventure in Australia.

Since the publication of Colleen McCullough's book in 1977, actresses by the score coveted the role. But not until David Wolper and Stan Margulies decided to make it a four-part, 10-hour miniseries did the blood-letting begin.

The producers sought their Meggie in Europe and the United States. They considered 200 prospects, had 46 actresses read for the part — some major stars — and finally narrowed the field to two.

The choice was between smashing beautiful Jane Seymour and earthy Rachel Ward, both English.

They tested with Richard Chamberlain and it appeared Jane won the part. Rachel didn't test well and knew it. She asked for another chance and returned to dazzle the producers' with her second performance — and landed the role.

Rachel has only four movies to her credit. Two were bombs she won't discuss. In "Sharkey's Machine" with Burt Reynolds she was merely decorative and naked. In "Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid" she was Steve Martin's foil.

"Like every other actress, I desperately wanted to play Meggie," Rachel admitted cheerfully. "Truly good female roles are so few, when one does come along the competition is fierce."

"Meggie is the central figure throughout 'The Thorn Birds.' Her decisions and actions determine the direction of the story line. Usually women don't affect the story."

"Most of the time we're limited to playing bits of fluff on the side. Audiences prefer to see men in action with an occasional shot of a nude woman. People aren't interested in women and their problems."

Rachel's appearance is entirely different on screen than off. She is rarely taken for an actress, hardly ever recognized.

She goes out of her way to dress drably. She wears no makeup and on one recent day her hair was bound at the top of her head by a paper clip.

Most Hollywood actresses would not think of leaving the house without their glamour masks in place. Rachel takes perverse delight in her anonymity.

"I guess I play myself down a bit in real life," was her understated self-appraisal. "I'm subdued and retiring and I try not to be recognized. It's embarrassing. I keep my hair short and try to look a bit scruffy."

"But it's a different matter on screen. I was enormously intimidated by Meggie. She's not a role you play half way. You can't shoot from the hip."

Each scene has heightened dramatic content and reactions to extraordinary conditions. This is definitely not a slice of life story. After all, Meggie does have a love affair with a priest.

"In almost every shot I'm rejected or in danger or someone dies. There's major conflict throughout the screenplay."

"Everyone who read the book has his or her own idea of Meggie, what she looks like and how she behaves, just as they did with Scarlett O'Hara."

"Obviously, I'm not going to fill everybody's expectations. Meggie was small, slight and tomboyish. I'm not those things. But hopefully, I've played her well enough to convince most viewers."

"I look very different from Meggie out of character. So I don't expect people to begin singling me out. It's gratifying to know people appreciate my work in a quiet way but without public display."

"I was advised not to play Meggie because 'The Thorn Birds' is a television show, not a feature film. They couldn't possibly squeeze the story into a two or three-hour movie. Meggie is a rare and important part. I think I've done her justice."

Rachel will know by the end of March. The $20 million epic will be telecast March 27-30.

Full Court Press

No doubt recognizing that North Carolina was mesmerized by basketball tournaments last week, Gov. Jim Hunt called on state educational leaders to use the "full court press against dropouts."

He was referring to school dropouts, not basketball dropouts, and he indicated a concerted effort could reduce high school dropout rates by 10 percent.

The governor was speaking to the Eastern North Carolina Conference on School Dropouts here Tuesday. Certainly his subject and the conference itself were apt. The school dropout rate is said to be 28.2 percent.

"Every time a student drops out of school, we have failed," Gov. Hunt said. The state and nation suffer because our economy depends on students completing high school. He said the problem should be attacked at every grade level and cited the Primary Reading Program as one preventative measure. He also cited the Pitt County Optional School program and the GED program as solutions to the problem. He noted that a Partners in the Schools program in Raleigh utilizes volunteers.

The key is finding the student with problems and "surrounding him with extra help," the governor said.

The importance of reducing school dropouts was emphasized by the governor's appearance at this conference which was involved with the problem. Few young people can compete in the skilled job markets without the proper education ... and a high school education is minimal today to obtain the skills needed to be a productive worker.

Growth Is Needed

It is expected that North Carolina total farm sales for 1982 will be below the 1981 figures when a final report is made this year.

North Carolina cash receipts for 1981 were $4.2 billion, which set a record. A drop in tobacco receipts affected the total farm sales picture for 1982 and the N.C. Crop and Livestock Reporting Service expects tobacco income receipts to be off a couple of million dollars.

The top county in the state in farm total sales was Duplin at $211,332,000. Pitt County was sixth with $99,556,000.

Farm income involves large amounts of money in both the state and Pitt County but when income drops it is not good enough. Our state needs to be looking even more diligently for ways to increase overall farm income and, most importantly, to maximize profits.

Real Toll Surfaces

WASHINGTON (AP) — The real toll of last November's House elections is only now being realized: Both Democrats and Republicans will have a hard time fielding quality baseball teams this year.

Although the annual congressional baseball game is still several months off, coaches on both sides are struggling to put together new lineups in the wake of the national elections that thinned the top ranks of both teams.

"We're in bad shape this year," Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., coach of the GOP team, lamented. "I doubt that I could field a team of nine players. We took a beating in the November elections."

The GOP team lost three ace players: outfielder Pete McCloskey of California, who did not seek re-election; designated hitter Don Clausen of California and pitcher John LeBoutillier of New York, who were both defeated.

Democrats, who had a small team to begin with, also lost their star pitcher with the defeat of former Rep. Ron Mottl of Ohio — who had pitched the last eight contests, chalking up a 5-3 win record.

Both Conte, determined to make a comeback from last year's 7 to 3 loss to the Democrats, and Democratic coach Rep. Bill Chappell of Florida are scouring the ranks of freshmen for new talent. So imagine Conte's glee when he spotted on the GOP roster the name of Florida's Connie Mack, the grandson of the Baseball Hall of Fame's Cornelius McGillicuddy, who as Connie Mack owned and managed the Philadelphia Athletics.

"I sought him out immediately and introduced myself as the manager of the Republican baseball team," said Conte. "And I asked him to come out for the team."

But, alas, there was no joy in Mudville. Mighty Conte had struck out. Conte said Mack told him: "I've never played baseball in my life."

"My heart fell down to here," said Conte, pointing towards the floor.

Strength For Today

Some modern writers would have us believe that the world, with all its diversity of growth, form and life, was not created but just came into being. In the face of all the evidence to the contrary, this is virtually impossible to believe.

We might believe that a boulder or a mountain, or even an ocean, might just happen, but the writings of Homer, the utterances of the Hebrew prophets, the plays of Shakespeare? St. Paul did not just happen, nor St. Francis of Assisi, nor Florence

WASHINGTON — Yes, some of the parallels are uncanny. In the mounting debate over El Salvador, we hear a hundred echoes of 20 years ago in Vietnam. In time, will we hear the final echo also? Will we hear another eternal footman hold our coat, and snicker?

That is the bitter prospect that ought to absorb us. Once again, in Central America as in Southeast Asia, will we endure the humiliating consequences of a loss of will? Is it inevitable that we repeat the story of "too little, too late"? Are we condemned, a generation after Vietnam, again to watch the dominoes fall?

Names, places and events rise like wraiths from graves we would like to forget. There was the government of Ngo Dinh Diem. It could not protect the villages from raids of the Viet Cong. The Communist guerrillas destroyed roads and bridges and railroads; they blew up utility plants and disappeared into the jungle. The government's forces were weak and ineffectual. Diem imposed rule by martial law.

Then a junta killed Diem and took over with Duong Van Minh as head of a military council. We had begun sending military supplies and military advisers to South Vietnam in the early 1950s. We would not send combat troops — that much was clear. We sent more supplies, and more advisers. We used our influence to coax reforms from the successive governments. The number of U.S. military advisers climbed to 750 in 1961, then to 2,700 in 1962. When John F. Kennedy was assassinated in 1963, we had more than 16,000 military advisers in South Vietnam. What we never sent was a commitment to win.

We insisted upon democratic elections, and in 1967, in the midst of the destruction, elections were held. Remember Nguyen Van Thieu? How the images return! Thieu was a disappointment. In the last desperate months, he actually suppressed newspapers. Here at home, liberals voiced their shock at so dastardly a blow to human freedoms. Thieu held "political prisoners." Think of that!

In responding to South Vietnam's appeal, we began bravely. It was in truth a noble cause, and God knows we put a costly investment into it. We counted 57,000 dead; you will find their names etched into a wall of black marble down by the Lincoln Memorial. But the moment of our greatness flickered. Shadows of irresolution fell upon the effort. The dominoes toppled, and the lights went out.

The parallels with El Salvador are not exact, but they are eerie all the same: an ineffectual army, a shaky government, the fact of popular elections, the ruthless nature of a communist guerrilla force. Again we hear the old voices asking for coalition, for negotiation and appeasement. Central America is much closer to us than Southeast Asia. Once we perceived a national interest in holding on to viable and friendly governments in Laos, Cambodia, Burma, Thailand. Surely an even stronger national interest can be seen in holding on to Costa Rica, Honduras, Venezuela, Panama, Colombia, Guatemala. Are we to learn nothing from the toppling of Nicaragua? Are we to accept the fatuous notion that human liberties have improved under the Sandinistas?

It is almost unbelievable that Congress should be balking at appropriating $60 million in further military aid to El Salvador. Of course the funds should be provided, and of course we should lend weapons and advisers to the government forces. The situation is not beyond salvage. But the actions we take now must be decisive; they must be backed by a national will and a national commitment to do what needs to be done.

The philosophers tell us, with great truth, that nations that fail to learn the lessons of history are condemned to repeat them. No one wants "another Vietnam," but if we let our decisions now be colored by Hamlet's "pale cast of doubt," that is exactly what we invite.

Scandal Still Produces Shock Waves

RALEIGH — Two years after the state's bid-rigging scandal prompted the General Assembly to reform the competitive bidding system, the Department of Transportation wants to eliminate sealed bids on some projects.

A DOT-sponsored bill currently before the assembly would provide the state Board of Transportation with alternative means of awarding road projects. State law now requires DOT to get sealed bids for all road projects that involve $30,000 or more. DOT is suggesting that in limited cases the board be allowed to award a contract that had been drafted either through negotiations between DOT and a contractor or through public auction.

Ralph Fadum, chairman of a commission that looked at the bidding process in the aftermath of the bid-rigging scandal, told a House committee recently that in at least three cases, competitive bidding fails to provide the state with the best possible offers.

In remote areas, he said, there may not be enough contractors to bid on projects. You may get only one bid — maybe none. In specialized areas of construction, there may be very few contractors qualified to bid. In cases where DOT cannot draft precise bid descriptions, (for example, landslide clearing projects) bid specifications are practically meaningless. In all three of these cases,

Fadum says, the competitive nature of the bid process is lost.

Billy Rose, state highway administrator, told the committee that DOT would like the power to negotiate with contractors if competitive bids submitted on a project fail to meet state expectations. If there was only one bid, and if it was too high, state officials would meet with the contractor and try to work the price down. Or, they might find out that some aspect of the job justified his higher price.

Fadum said that the state might also want to experiment with the auction of projects. Specifications would be set and the state engineer's cost estimate would be made public. Then, starting with that estimate or another figure, contractors would get the chance to bid down the price.

Sound like pretty good ideas, right? So why was it that many of the committee members interviewed after the meeting agreed with a statement made by Rep. John Church, D-Vance? "This bill's not going anywhere the way it is," he said.

Legislators said the bill opened the door for more price rigging on state projects. Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, said the bill was too vague.

Public Forum

To the editor:

The "freeze-niks" are planning to railroad their suicidal nuclear freeze resolution through the House of Representatives after coming within two votes of getting the resolution passed last year. In my opinion and the opinion of other concerned citizens, this could be national suicide. Military preparedness is the only deterrent to war.

I realize this article will cause the liberal clergy and politicians to cry "warmonger." The fact is I am not in favor of a one-sided freeze that will only result in our own surrender. A nuclear freeze will mean giving in to Russian blackmail. Are we going to refuse to pay the price to guarantee our freedom? Do we no longer have the will to defend our country? I love my country, and I believe a nuclear freeze at this time would be devastating.

As American citizens, we must be alerted to the dangers of this resolution. We are placing in jeopardy (if this resolution passes) the freedom of our country, our children, and our children's children. Common sense says the only real deterrent to war is military preparedness.

A Few Cents Makes A Difference

$60,000, 25-year mortgage comes to about $959 a month or $11,500 a year, compared with a 13 percent rate of about $677 a month or $8,125 a year.

These declines, combined with rising family incomes, has raised the housing affordability index, a new technique for determining how close the median income has come to the median home price.

The index of the National Association of Home Builders, a quarterly figure limited to new homes only, rose to 78.7 in the fourth quarter of 1982 from a low of 70.4 percent during the fourth quarter of 1981.

The National Association of Realtors

index, a monthly figure measuring incomes in relation to existing home prices, rose to 78.9 in January, its eighth consecutive month of improvement from a 64.2 reading last May.

According to the Realtors, the annual income needed to qualify for a $68,300, median-priced home in January was $30,330, versus a median family income of $23,917. The Realtors assume that the loan will be based on 25 percent of total income being allotted to the loan and interest.

Realtor economists say the figure of 25 percent was purposely kept low because it doesn't include insurance, taxes, heat or utility costs. When these are added in, lenders generally allow at least 30 percent of income to be allotted to housing.

While the index is rising it is still far less than satisfactory, said Jack Carlson, chief economist and executive vice president of the Realtors.

"Based on the experience of the past 30 years, mortgage interest rates should be 8.5 percent," he said. "And if that were the case, the housing affordability index right now would be 118.6."

That the index is far short of the 118.6 figure — which would mean that those earning the median income would more than qualify for the median-price house — is the fault of the federal deficit crisis,

Carlson contends.

He claims that as long as the threat of heavy government borrowing hangs over private capital markets, "interest rates will be prevented from falling to the historic 3.5 percentage points above the inflation rate."

Even so, the total price of a house — financing included — is far less today than it was just a few months ago. Four percentage points saved on a $60,000 mortgage amounts to about $55,000 in 25 years.

No wonder people are flocking to real estate offices. You'd probably have to eat a 100,000 cans of two-cent discount beans in order to equal that.

A car driven by Daniel Myers Erwin of Gastonia and a truck operated by Norman Luther Holton of Winterville collided about 3:20 p.m. on Cedar Lane, between 10th Street and Jefferson Drive, resulting in an estimated $800 damage to the car.

Sub Is Netted By Fisherman

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — A West German fisherman radioed for help today when he caught a Soviet or Polish submarine in his net and found himself surrounded by East Bloc warships in the Baltic, the Danish navy's command center reported.

The trawler Gertraud was fishing some 15 nautical miles south of the Danish island of Bornholm when the skipper said something was in his net and his trawler was being dragged, a command center spokesman said.

Within minutes, Warsaw Pact warships on maneuver in the area moved in, and the West German skipper got "pretty nervous" the spokesman said.

A Danish air force helicopter which "happened to be in the area" went to the scene. Hovering over the flotilla, the pilot suddenly saw a submarine of the Whisky class surface. Its crew was ordered on deck and after about half an hour got the sub out of the net, the pilot reported.

The naval command spokesman said only the Soviet Union and Poland have submarines designated by NATO as Whisky class submarines. The sub submerged and left the West German trawler with a damaged net, the spokesman said.

It was the second submarine catch by Baltic fishermen in four days. Last Saturday a Danish trawler got a sub in its net in the same area, but that sub was Danish.

A Soviet submarine grounded in October 1981 near Sweden's Karlskrona navy base, and two other subs were chased near Stockholm in October 1982. Speculation at the time was that the two were Soviet, but a Swedish business newspaper said today that one of them belonged to a NATO government. The Swedish navy denied the report.

Old Discrimination Suit Now Settled

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP)

— An agreement reached in what may be the oldest racial discrimination lawsuit was approved Monday, resulting in $3.3 million to be divided among 840 plaintiffs.

U.S. Middle District Court Judge Eugene A. Gordon said the 15-year-old suit filed against American Tobacco Co. of Reidsville and Local 192 of the Tobacco Workers' International Union was among the longest on record involving Title VII discrimination laws.

Gordon endorsed a consent decree between the tobacco production company, the union local and the plaintiffs.

"This is a great day for me," Gordon said as he announced his approval of the agreement. "This is possibly the oldest case we have, and we've moved it as expeditiously as we could."

Attorneys late last year tentatively reached the agreement, which provides that the blacks who accused the company and union of discrimination in hiring and promotion will receive $3.3 million in back pay.

Eight black workers of American Tobacco's branch and leaf departments filed the class-action suit in January 1968, claiming alleged discrimination dating back to 1955.

In 1973, Gordon ruled that some of the allegations were valid, while others were not. He reaffirmed his ruling in 1981 after the case was tried again in light of a 1977 U.S. Supreme Court ruling on Title VII discrimination law.

"There have been a lot of changes in the company since the suit was filed, such as elimination of the leaf department, so that makes some of the other relief we had asked for unnecessary," said Jonathan Wallas, attorney for the plaintiffs.

J.A. Griggs, one of the plaintiffs who attended Monday's court proceedings, said he was glad the long struggle was over.

"The wheels of justice may grind slow but they grind well," Griggs said. "I can rest a whole lot easier now."

Bridge Plans

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) —

The state is going ahead with plans to build a new $12.3 million bridge between Morehead City and Atlantic Beach, and a public hearing is planned for April or May, an official said Monday.

Cy Lynn, spokesman for the North Carolina Department of Transportation, said officials had decided to conduct a hearing in Morehead City to solicit comment on the proposed bridge. The exact date will be announced later.

The bridge, which would replace a two-lane span that often is jammed with traffic during the tourist season, is a high-priority item on the transportation department's agenda, Lynn said.

"Right now, the plan is to get the right of way by April 1984 and to begin construction by January 1985," he said in an interview. "But these are conservative dates. We've got this on a fast track, and we hope to finish ahead of schedule."

Once construction gets underway, it's expected to take about two years to finish the bridge, he added.

Arms Proposals Being Reviewed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is reviewing its nuclear arms proposals, but President Reagan's chief spokesman cautioned reporters today against reading the "on-going" review as a sign that the president was about to modify the U.S. position in arms control talks with the Soviet Union.

"The president has made no decision about an interim proposal. Nothing has come before him on that subject," said Larry Speakes, the chief deputy White House press secretary. "There are always on-going reviews of negotiating positions."

The Washington Post, in today's editions, reported that the administration was considering a proposal to allow the United States and the Soviet Union to deploy a limited number of intermediate-range nuclear weapons in Europe on an interim basis.

Quoting unidentified White House officials, the newspaper reported that the administration is considering offering the proposal in an attempt to break the deadlocked arms reduction talks with the Soviets.

Speakes refused to discuss the report directly. When asked to deny that such consideration was being given, he replied, "We do not discuss anything that is being discussed in an interagency review."

Cautioning reporters against focusing their news stories on the fact that the president's proposals for European arms reductions were being reviewed, he said

"you would be absolutely wrong to make a lead out of the fact there is a review."

At the same time, the spokesman seemed to step back from his flat assertion Monday that the United States would make no new arms proposal to the Soviet Union before the current round of talks aimed at reducing medium-range missiles in Europe concludes March 28.

"The president has not made any decision to go forward with one," Speakes said.

Speakes also criticized the Soviet position in the arms talks, and said "It would be helpful if the Soviets would come forward with a sincere and honest proposal."

According to the Post, sources said a proposal may be placed before the president as early as next week.

N.C. To Expand Surplus Food Giveaway Program

By RICK SCOPPE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — An expanded cheese and butter giveaway program for the state is expected to begin next month, enabling more North Carolinians to receive the federal government's surplus.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture approved the state's plan March 9 and North Carolina officials hope to start the giveaway April 1 in some counties, Jay Davis, head of the Food Distribution Division of the state Agriculture Department, said Monday.

The state will oversee the program, but local officials will be responsible for actual distribution, he added.

"Under the new criteria, 1.4 million people will be eligible for the program — two and a half to three times as many as under the old plan," Davis said.

The agriculture and social services departments, which will jointly implement the program, want to dole out the surplus food monthly instead of quarterly and make people who aren't food stamp recipients eligible.

"The federal government wants us to take more cheese and make more of it available," Davis said.

The Reagan administration ordered that surplus cheese and butter stored in government warehouses be distributed to the poor and recently asked states to expand their distribution.

"The USDA strongly encouraged monthly distribution, but we've recommended that it be left up to the Board of County Commissioners," said Diane Ingram, program consultant with the Division of Social Services.

"We're looking for a lead agency to coordinate the amount of cheese each county wants," Ms. Ingram said.

County social service departments handled the plan in the past, but the new plan may change that.

"For example, the division of aging may handle it for elderly people," said Ms. Ingram. "But that doesn't mean the social service department can't handle it."

Those eligible for the new program would include those 60 and older, all disabled people on Social Security or

Supplemental Security Income, those receiving funds from Aid to Families with Dependent Children or Medicaid and households with incomes of less than 150 percent of the non-farm poverty level.

Davis said he has ordered 1 million pounds of cheese and a 750,000 pounds of butter for each of the next three months, nearly matching the amount distributed in all of 1982.

Ms. Ingram said 3.4 million pounds of cheese and 189,000 pounds of butter were distributed in North Carolina last year.

Half a million pounds of cheese and 160,000 pounds of butter were given away in the first two months of 1983, she said.

"At this point it's hard to tell how much we'll have requested," Ms. Ingram said.

WEATHER FORECAST — The National Weather Service forecasts rain Wednesday for the Gulf Coast of Texas and east to Florida.

By The Associated Press

The cold front which brought cloudiness and widely scattered showers to the state Monday moved east as high pressure over Illinois and Indiana moved from the northwest, bringing fair weather to North Carolina today.

But a storm system gathering strength over Texas will move slowly east, making some cloudy skies likely on Wednesday, the National Weather Service reported.

It will be fair tonight with lows in the 30s mountains and 40s elsewhere. Highs Wednesday will be in the 60s with the exception of the higher mountains where 50s will be the rule.

Along the coast, winds will be from the northeast at 10 to 20 knots on Wednesday.

On Monday, the morning's cloudy skies gave way to sunny conditions by late afternoon, when highs were in the upper 60s to mid 70s, except for some 50s in the higher mountains and low 60s in the northeast. The warmest area was Fayetteville with 75 degrees.

Clear skies were the rule last night and this morning, with lows in the 40s, except for 30s in the mountains.

High Tech Training Is Advised

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina hasn't done enough to compete with Massachusetts and other states for high-technology industries, the head of a microelectronics company told North Carolina State faculty members Monday.

"If, in fact, North Carolina wants to be one of the front-runners in the high-technology industries," the state must keep expanding its programs to train researchers, said Ray Stata, chairman and one of the founders of Analog Devices.

"That's not to belittle the progress already made in North Carolina," he said in an interview after his speech.

Earlier Monday, Stata's company had dedicated a $3 million, 45,000-square-foot microelectronics facility in Greensboro, where 200 people are employed. In 1978 Analog Devices bought a small company in Greensboro, expanded it and built the new facility last year.

Stata said the company was first drawn to North Carolina by its education and training programs, including the state-funded Microelectronics Center of North Carolina. That center, based in Research Triangle Park, will be the center of microelectronics research and education for several universities.

"But if you want to be competitive with Massachusetts, you haven't done enough," he told the faculty members.

Stata is a founder of the Massachusetts High Technology Council which combines the efforts of industry and government to train researchers and attract new industry.

He said 950 electronics engineers graduated from Massachusetts schools in 1981, twice the 425 graduates in North Carolina.

State and national efforts to boost training in high-technology industries should concentrate on university graduate programs, he said. With a few highly qualified researchers developing new and better microelectronics products, jobs can open up for thousands of workers with less developed skills.

"We have a tremendous (economic) renaissance in Massachusetts), all because of 100,000 new jobs, near as I can tell," said Stata.

He added that training technicians to work with those few researchers "is a relatively easier problem to solve."

Technical training may require from a few weeks to two years, while graduate-level training in engineering often takes 10 years to complete.

Justice Dept. Will Drop Bakker Probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ending a week of conflicting statements, the U.S. Justice Department Monday formally advised the Federal Communications Commission it would not pursue a probe of TV evangelist James Bakker.

Assistant Attorney General D. Lowell Jensen of the department's criminal division said the case had been "carefully reviewed" and no further action would be taken.

"As a result of our review, it has been determined that based upon the underlying facts and circumstances, prosecution should be declined," Jensen wrote. "Accordingly, we are closing our files on this matter."

Justice Department spokesman John Russell would not elaborate on that statement.

But other Justice Department and FCC sources, who declined to be named, said the criminal division had decided the commission hadn't developed enough evidence to prosecute.

The investigation of Bakker, minister of the Heritage Village Church in Fort Mill, S.C., involved published claims that he solicited donations from viewers of his "PTL Club" program for one purpose but used the money for other projects.

Last December the FCC, after investigating the matter for nearly three years, decided to cut short its own probe by letting Bakker's church relinquish ownership of WJAN-TV in Canton, Ohio. At the same time, the agency forwarded its confidential findings to the Justice Department.

Russell announced March 7 that the department had decided not to pursue the matter. That announcement surprised FCC officials, sparking new inquiries to the Justice Department.

On March 10, the FCC was told that the Justice Department was still reviewing the matter and that no final decision had been made.

That review ended Monday with the FCC's receipt of Jensen's letter.

FCC spokesman William Russell refused to discuss the case Monday, saying he couldn't speculate about why the Justice Department dropped the matter.

Several public interest groups have asked the FCC to reconsider the case, but the commission has already allowed Bakker's church to transfer WJAN-TV to the David Livingstone Missionary Foundation.

Carteret Developer Is Sued By Greenville Man

BEAUFORT — James I. Gainey of Greenville has filed suit against a Carteret County developer charging that Caruso Realty of Atlantic Beach took $11,000 from him with "intent to deceive, mislead, misrepresent and fraudulently induce" Gainey into giving the firm "sums of money."

Eleven other suits, asking for more than $500,000, have been filed against Celestino Caruso, Caruso Realty and Diversified Developers of Carteret County, which he owns, and Caruso and Robert L. Martin of Raleigh and their partnership C&M Properties, in connection with the Colony By the Sea condominium project at East Indian Beach.

A number of suits charge the developers with failing to pay bills for construction materials and work done on the first phase of the Colony By the Sea project.

The Gainey complaint alleges that Gainey gave Caruso $11,000 as downpayment on two condominiums in Colony By the Sea, which were scheduled to be ready for occupancy prior to this summer. Since construction on the units has not begun, Gainey allegedly asked for the return of his money.

However, Gainey alleges that his demands for his money were ignored.

Gainey also charged that there are liens against the property, "thus making title to the property unmarketable and therefore non-transferrable in fee simple unencumbered by liens, judgments and other encumbrances."

Gainey's suit is asking for $21,000 in damages, but also asks that the judgment be tripled under a state law that allows triple damages when fraud is involved.

The state real estate licensing board is investigating complaints against Caruso which allege "misconduct." A spokesman for the licensing board said that if misconduct is found, Caruso's license could be suspended or revoked.

Probably A Millionaire

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — For two weeks, Fred Harrell has known he will probably be an instant millionaire.

But he had to wait for confirmation.

Harrell, 60, a security guard at a sorority house at the University of Alabama, filled in a Publisher's Clearing House sweepstakes form some time ago.

It was one of those forms that thousands of people send back, hoping against hope that their number is drawn.

Harrell's was, he was told early this month, although his entry must be verified.

"They told me I might have won," he said, "but I won't believe it till I get it."

He said he was told that confirmation could come today.

When Harrell first got the word, he was so sure of it that he told the students at the Alpha Omega Pi sorority house, "I'm a millionaire! I'm a millionaire!"

Harrell, originally from Florence, S.C. and the father of four grown children, said in an interview that he would not quit his job at the sorority house even if he strikes it rich. He has held the job only a couple of months.

What would he do with the money?

"Buy some land," he said.

Suit Charges Flaherty Collaborated In A Fraud

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The head of North Carolina's Republican Party collaborated to try to defraud the state in the operation of a Wilson County rest home in 1975, attorneys for the state argued Monday.

Superior Court Judge F. Gordon Battle of Chapel Hill heard several hours of arguments in a hearing of a 1980 lawsuit filed by the state against David Flaherty, William H. White, his former special assistant, and four businessmen. Battle recessed the hearing until Thursday so he could read briefs in the case.

The state's attorneys contend Flaherty collaborated with White and the businessmen in obtaining an inexpensive lease on a wing of a state-owned Eastern North Carolina Hospital. Flaherty was serving as secretary of the state Department of Human Resources.

The attorneys said Flaherty and the businessmen told another man seeking to build a rest home in Wilson County that the businessman had already obtained a lease from the state for the wing. However, the Council of State did not approve the lease until the next month.

"The businessmen conspired with Bill White, a state employee, to defraud the state," said Raleigh attorney William L. Thorp, one of three private attorneys representing the state. "It was with the collaboration of the secretary of human resources David Flaherty."

Attorneys for Flaherty, White and the businessmen denied the charges, which were made in Wake Superior Court, and asked that the suit be dismissed.

In 1975, the Legislature urged Flaherty to find a use for the hospital wing, which had housed tuberculosis patients and was in disrepair.

The state maintains that the hospital wing was leased to a group of businessmen at a rent below fair market value at the time. The state also alleges the Wilson Community Rest Home operators received a food service contract for meals that cost less than the meals cost the state.

The suit claims Flaherty discussed the availability of the wing with Oscar A. Keller Jr. and his son, Oscar A. Keller III, both of Lee County, and Roy G. Sowers Jr., a Sanford Democrat who served in Gov. Robert Scott's cabinet.

The three men, along with Ben F. Coleman of Randolph

County, formed Wilson Community Rest Home Inc., got a $40,000-a-year lease on the wing and negotiated a food service agreement with the state.

According to the lawsuit, the men then sold the corporation to Sentry Care Centers of Wilson for $1.125 million.

Youth Is Given 5 Life Terms

PORT HURON, Mich. (AP) — A 17-year-old has been sentenced to prison "for the rest of his natural life" for killing five members of a family with 14 gunshots during a house burglary last April.

James D. Porter IV was sentenced to five life terms Monday with no chance of parole by St. Clair County Circuit Judge James T. Corden, who presided over Porter's 4½-week trial.

Porter, his once-long blond hair cut in a flattop, sat quietly during the sentencing and turned down the judge's offer of a chance to make a statement. Prosecutors said Porter was acquainted with his victims, Elizabeth Giulian and her four children.

Pirate Homers Pace Seventh Straight

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

John Hallow and Winfred Johnson each slammed three-run homers, while both Hallow and Kelly Robinette each had four hits to lead East Carolina to a 13-6 baseball victory over Fairfield University yesterday.

It marked the seventh straight win for the Pirates, who are now 9-2 on the year — and the 99th career victory for ECU Coach Hal Baird, in his fourth season with the Pirates.

The Pirates banged out 15 hits in the contest, scoring in five of the eight innings they went to the plate, with the big blows the homers by Hallow and Johnson. For the former, it was his second straight game with a home, and the latter picked up his third in as many games.

"It's encouraging to see the bats coming," Baird said. "But I'd like to see our pitching and defense come more too."

Baird praised the hitting of Johnson, and noted that Kelly Robinette, who like Hallow, was four-for-five, has been hitting the ball well, but at someone. "Now they're falling in for him."

As for Hallow, who drove in five runs with his four hits, Baird jokingly said, "We'll have to bench him more often." Baird was referring to Hallow's sitting out Sunday's first game of a doubleheader. In the two since then, he's hitting at a 6-for-9 clip, including two homers and a double.

The Pirates had some shaky moments on the mound, giving up three runs each in the second and seventh innings. Brian Peterson started the contest, and was finally chased in the seventh, after being responsible for all the runs. He got brief relief from Kirk Parsons and then Bob Davidson came on for the final two innings.

"Brian battled pretty good," Baird said. "He got through a shaky first, and when we finally did hook it, he had been hurt by the defense and had made a bad 2-0 pitch."

"Davidson has been struggling with some sub-par performances and we wanted to get him a little more work before Friday (when ECU plays its first ECAC-South game). He said he felt good and we wanted to give him some time, and he needed something to get him tough mentally."

The two innings could have done it. He allowed no baserunners, retiring six in order, including three on strikeouts.

Fairfield grabbed the initial lead, pushing over three runs in the second inning. Mark Portanova led off with a walk, scoring on Joe Charno's double to center. Steve Carlotto then singled and stole second. Tom Reardon singled, driving in Charno, and a sacrifice fly by John Martin plated Carlotto for a 3-0 lead.

East Carolina started its comeback in the third, scoring once. Robinette walked and moved up on a single by Hallow. Johnson then singled Robinette over.

In the fourth, the Pirates took the lead on Hallow's blast. With two away, Jabo Fulghum reached on an error and Robinette singled. Hallow then lofted the ball over the fence in right for a three-run homer and the Pirates took a 4-3 edge.

They extended that to 7-3 in the fifth. Robert Wells was hit by a pitch and David Horne walked. Tony Salmond, attempting to sacrifice, reached on an error, and Wells scored on the play. Fulghum's sacrifice fly brought in Horne, and Robinette singled. Hallow then got a hit, driving in Salmond with the third run of the inning.

The Stags came back in the top of the seventh to score three runs and cut the lead to 7-6. Charno opened with a single and Carlotto beat out an infield hit. Curt Washburn reached on an error, scoring Charno. Reardon's third hit of the day brought home Carlotto, but the next two batters hit into fielder's choices, each holding Washburn at third while getting two out. But walks to Mike DellaVecchia and Carmine Farese forced over Washburn before the side was finally retired.

ECU got some breathing room in the seventh with four more runs. Salmond opened with a walk and stole second. Robinette singled him in and Hallow walked. He was out at second, however, on Todd Evans' grounder to second, but Johnson followed with his home run — a towering shot into the trees in dead centerfield. That boosted it to 11-6.

The final two came in the eighth. Robert Wells opened the inning with a solo homer to left. Then, after one was out, Salmond walked and with two away, Robinette got his fourth hit of the afternoon. Hallow followed with a bad hop single at short, scoring Salmond.

Hallow and Robinette, both 4-5, were joined by Johnson with a 3-5 afternoon and Wells at 2-4.

Fairfield's hitting was led by Charno and Reardon, 3-4 and 3-3, respectively, and Carlotto, 2-4.

The two teams meet again this afternoon, and following an idle Wednesday, the Pirates host Clemson on Thursday at 3 p.m.

Pack Slips Into Top 20; Cavs, Heels Slide

HOUSTON (AP) — University of Houston Coach Guy Lewis expects to have all the troops back in action this week as the Cougars prepare to begin play in the NCAA tournament and defend their No. 1 ranking in the final Associated Press College basketball poll.

He would also like to see a return of the Cougars' free throw shooting touch.

"We really didn't have all of our players for a single workout last week," Lewis said Monday after the Cougars swept through the final balloting with 52 of the 56 first-place votes cast by the AP's panel of sport writers and sportscasters.

Several Cougar starters and Lewis were stricken with a flu bug last week that slowed them in preparation for the Southwest Conference tournament.

While upsets caused major shakeups in the AP poll, the Cougars ignored their illnesses and cruised through the SWC tournament at Dallas to gain the No. 1 seed in the 52-team NCAA tournament.

Houston's free throw shooting is still sick, however.

Lewis said he hopes the problem will just go away. The infirmity has plagued UH most of the season. Extra practice has not helped, nor have other methods.

"I can't seem to do anything about poor free throw shooting," Lewis said. "I have tried making them run the stands when they miss, and stuff like that."

The Cougars will take a 27-2 record and a 22-game winning streak into the first round of the Midwest Regional tournament at Houston. The Cougars received 1,112 points in the final AP balloting to give them a commanding tally over runnerup Louisville, which got the other four first-place votes and 1,058 points.

It was the second first-place finish for the Cougars in the AP poll. Lewis' 1967-68 team won 31 games in a row and advanced to the NCAA semifinals.

North Carolina State battled its way into the final rankings with upset victories over Virginia and North Carolina in last week's Atlantic Coast Conference tournament. The Wolfpack moved into the No. 16 position in the final poll.

Louisville, 29-3, swept the Metro Conference tournament, to move from third to second.

St. John's, winner of the Big East tournament, jumped from No. 8 to third with 997 points and a 27-4 record going into the NCAA playoffs.

Virginia's 81-78 loss to North Carolina State dropped the Cavaliers, 27-4, from second to fourth with 891 points.

Big 10 champion Indiana, 23-5, advanced from seventh to fifth with 848 points, while University of Nevada-Las Vegas, 28-2, the Pacific Coast Athletic Association champ, moved from ninth to sixth with 738 points.

UCLA, 23-5, the Pacific 10 champion, lost two of its three games last week and fell from fourth to seventh. North Carolina, 26-7, which lost to North Carolina State 91-84 in overtime, held on to its No. 5 spot.

Arkansas, 25-3, beaten in the SWC semifinals by Texas Christian, 61-59 in overtime, dropped three spots to ninth, while Missouri, No. 12 last week, advanced to 10th despite losing the Big 8 tournament to Oklahoma State 93-92 in overtime.

The second 10 includes, in order, Boston College, 24-6;

Kentucky, 21-7; Villanova, 22-7; Wichita State, 25-3; Tennessee-Chattanooga, 26-3; North Carolina State, 20-10;

Houston, the seventh team to reach the No. 1 spot in the AP poll this season, held the position three weeks, a fact that pleased Lewis.

"I'm happy we're maintaining it," Lewis said. "I felt like we got over the big hurdle when we won the first game after being voted No. 1. That was kind of the pattern" of previous teams, who lost right after reaching the top spot.

Sampson Rated Top ACC Player

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — For the third straight year, Virginia's 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson has been named the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball player of the year.

"This is a great honor for Ralph to win this award three times in a row," Virginia coach Terry Holland said of the ACSWA's Flucie Stewart Award. "One of the reasons he stayed for a fourth year was because of the outstanding competition in the Atlantic Coast Conference. The very fact that he returned for the fourth year is a tribute to him and put him a rather elite company in the ACC, in terms of his achievements."

Sampson's record of receiving the award is matched only by former North Carolina State star David Thompson, who was chosen ACC player of the year from 1973 to 1975.

In the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Association's balloting, Sampson received 75 votes, while North Carolina's Michael Jordan was picked on 61 ballots. Jordan's teammate, Sam Perkins, received the other two votes.

Sampson has turned down numerous professional basketball offers to remain at Virginia saying, "Getting my degree is most important to me, although trying to win a national championship is not far behind."

He'll have a third opportunity at the National Collegiate Athletic Association championship as Virginia is the number one seed in this year's West Regional.

Sampson was a consensus national player of the year as a sophomore and the unanimous choice a year ago. This season he has received the John Wooden Award, the Naismith Trophy and the U.S. Basketball Writers player of the year award.

As a freshman, Sampson led Virginia to the National Invitation Tournament title. The Cavaliers advanced to the NCAA final four his sophomore year and was a quarterfinalist in the Midwest Regional last year.

During the three seasons Sampson has been player of the year, Virginia won or tied for the regular season conference championship, winning 37 of 42 games, the most victories any ACC player has participated in during a three-year period. The 110 triumphs during the Sampson era is the most by a Division I school the last four years.

Beddingfield Spoils Farmville Premier

STANTONSBURG — Wilson Beddingfield romped to an 11-2 victory over Farmville Central as the Jaguars finally got their baseball season underway yesterday.

Beddingfield pushed over a run in the first inning, but Farmville came up with two in the second to take the lead, 2-1. Gerald Wilson reached on an error and so did Taylor Walston. Both were sacrificed up and after the second out, Billy Godley singled both of them in.

It proved, however, to be the only scoring for the Jaguars.

Beddingfield regained the lead with three in the bottom of the inning, taking a 4-2 lead. G. Hill reached on an error and J. Hill singled. Ferrell's single brought in the first Hill, and Davis' errored single scored the other. Boswell and Williams then walked, forcing in Ferrell.

Beddingfield later added three runs in the fourth and two more in each of the fifth and sixth innings.

Davis led the Beddingfield hitting with three in five trips, driving in three runs. Mercer was 2-3 with a two-run homer in the fifth.

Farmville's hitting was led by Wade Corbett with two in three trips, including a double. Bobby Caraway also had a double.

Now 0-1, the Jaguars travel to North Lenoir today.

NEW HOPE — The D.H. Conley Vikings ran past Eastern Wayne and C.B. Aycock Monday for a track victory that lifted their record to 2-0. Conley finished the meet with 96 points, while Eastern Wayne had 73 and Aycock picked up only eight.

Alvin Clemons took first place in the long jump with a leap of 21-2 and in the triple jump with 42-7½. Steven King claimed first in the 100, 200 and 400 meter sprints.

The duo of Steve Norris and Steve Wilkerson tied in the pole vault, each clearing 8-0.

Conley travels to Morehead City Thursday for a meet with West Carteret and Havelock.

'Scale Wage' For Nancy In TV Acting Episode

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan earned $596 — scale wage — for starring in an episode of "Diff'rent Strokes" and plans to donate the money to a parents organization formed to combat drug use among children.

The first lady's press secretary, Sheila Tate, said in an interview Monday that Mrs. Reagan will give the money to the National Federation of Parents.

President Reagan and his wife are planning to watch the show, which has an anti-drug plot, from Camp David, Md. when it airs at 8 p.m. EST Saturday.

Mrs. Reagan, a former actress whose last movie, "Hellcats of the Navy," was made in 1957 and also starred her husband, taped the "Diff'rent Strokes" episode last week at Universal Studios in Universal City, Calif.

In one scene, she talks on the telephone with the president — though his voice is not heard. "I miss you and I love you," the first lady says.

After a pause, she adds, "If I can say it in a room full of strangers, you can say it in front of (House Speaker)

Tip O'Neill." After another pause, she says, "That's better."

After studying her lines, Mrs. Reagan rehearsed with the cast on Wednesday, taped the show without an audience Thursday morning, and taped the show again before a live audience of 250 in the afternoon, according to Mrs. Tate.

Afterward, she retaped one line she had flubbed.

Mrs. Tate said the best of both taped episodes will be combined to make the final show.

In an interview in the March 19 issue of TV Guide, Mrs. Reagan said she hoped the program would bring more attention to the nation's drug problem. The show usually has 25 million viewers, but an additional five million are expected to tune in because of the first lady's appearance.

"A lot of adults are involved in drugs too, of course," she said. "But certainly your heart goes out to the children because they're fooling around with the rest of their lives."

She also recalls her friend, the late Princess Grace of Monaco. They both worked as actresses at the same time.

"We used to joke about the fact that — when we were at Metro — little did we dream that she would end up being the princess of Monaco and that I would end up here (in the White House)," she said.

Liza Minelli Is Out Of Hospital

DALLAS (AP) — Singer Liza Minnelli was resting in a hotel following her release from a hospital where she was treated after getting food caught in her throat, officials say.

The 37-year-old performer was discharged at 6 p.m. Monday, said Mandi Turner, a nursing supervisor at Presbyterian Hospital. Her agent, Michael Maslansky, said she planned to spend the night in Dallas and fly to Tucson today.

"She felt some food was lodged in her lower throat and she was having difficulty breathing and apparently was choking when he (a doctor) was called," hospital spokesman Bill Mays said.

New Sitcoms Not For Adults

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — CBS has tried a magician, a swashbuckling hero and now a bumbling gumshoe. But whenever the network stabs at comedy or campy programming for young and old alike, it seems to turn off the old.

"Ace Crawford, Private Eye," which debuts tonight, is CBS' latest 8 p.m. EDT program to miss the mark, joining the long list of previous mistakes, including "Mr. Merlin" and "Bring 'em Back Alive."

The network's other new show tonight, "Gun Shy" at 8:30 p.m., isn't any barrel of laughs, either.

The importance of 8 o'clock programming is that it sets up the networks' follow-up programs. It's no coincidence that the independent stations and cable services start their big movies at 8.

"The networks' loss of viewers to the independents is most severe at 8," says Harvey Shepherd, CBS' programming chief. Shepherd's over-all strategies have made the network top-rated, but he's still frustrated by the lack of success with programming aimed at the whole family.

Shepherd acknowledges that ABC has developed 8 o'clock comedies that successfully bridge generation gaps, notably "Mork & Mindy" and "Happy Days." "The family situation was an important factor in 'Happy Days,'" says Shepherd.

CBS tried something different at 8 on Mondays with "Square Pegs," about two wallflower high school students chasing the dream of popularity. "We just can't get adults to watch it," says Shepherd.

Recently, comedian Bill Murray and Los Angeles Dodger second baseman Steve Sax made guest appearances on "Square Pegs" to lure adult viewers. "But we have to be careful," says Shepherd. "When you bring adults into the script, the concept changes, and you have to be true to the concept."

Which brings us to CBS' new shows tonight, "Ace Crawford" and "Gun Shy." Adults won't find much to laugh about in either of them.

Tim Conway stars as Ace Crawford, a gumshoe who manages to gum up investigations but solve them in spite of himself. As one character says: "Ace Crawford didn't know what's in store for him. He never did."

Conway, who may be too bland to carry his own show, is very expert at playing characters who go bump in the night, having been a bumbling second banana in "McHale's Navy" and in sketches on "The Carol

Burnett Show."

He's also failed in his own shows, "The Tim Conway Show," a variety hour, and "Rango," a 1967 series about an inept Texas Ranger. Basically, "Ace Crawford" is "Rango" in a trenchcoat.

"Ace Crawford" lacks the zaniness of Peter Sellers' Inspector Clouseau in the "Pink Panther," nor does it have the satirical bite of secret agent Maxwell Smart in "Get Smart." What's left is a Conway, with a spooky deadpan delivery and blank expression, who trips over his feet and knocks over furniture in slapstick routines that gets tiresome very quickly.

Conway's partners in crime are Billy Barty, the dwarf actor who runs the bar that serves as Ace's hangout, jazz pianist Bill Henderson as the bar's blind piano player, and Joe Regalbuto as Ace's bubble-brained assistant.

"Gun Shy," billed as a comedy western adventure, manages to miss on all counts, despite some cute moments. Barry Van Dyke plays Russell Donovan, an 1800s Maverick who wins two kids in a card game. But you won't know the background by watching tonight's episode, an odd choice for series-opener.

Besides the two fresh-scrubbed kids (Keith Mitchell and Bridgette Andersen), there are two dumb outlaws (Tim Thomerson and Geoffrey Lewis) around merely to act goofy.

"Gun Shy" is based on Walt Disney's "Apple Dumpling Gang" motion pictures. Disney is the producer here, giving the studio two misses in two weeks. "Small & Frye" was another program that had limited appeal for adults.

As any viewer of "Sesame Street" can attest, shows for kids — even little tykes — can captivate young audiences without insulting old folks.

Flush Rating Set Record

NEW YORK — The CBS television finale of "M-A-S-H" not only won the Nielsen ratings against the other networks, but also surged to record levels in New York City's "flush" ratings, officials say.

The A.C. Nielson Co., which measures television audiences, said the last episode of the long-running show, which aired Feb. 28, was seen on 72 percent of the television sets in the metropolitan area.

Officials with the city's Department of Environmental Protection say that from raw data they've collected, many of those viewers stayed glued to their TV sets throughout the 2½-hour show.

A few minutes after the "M-A-S-H" episode ended at 11 p.m., the flow rates in Water Mains One and Two went up by a total of 320 million gallons, according to the department's Andrew McCarthy.

"Our engineers say you would have to have 1 million people flushing their toilets at the same time to achieve that rate," McCarthy said.

The readings went through the ceiling," he said. "There was never a jump like this before."

McCarthy said the flow rate often jumps at the end of baseball playoff games, but not at the end of the Super Bowl, apparently because there are so many timeouts in football.

American internationalist Lew Mathe once described a good slam as "one that makes." By his definition, today's slam was one of the great ones.

South felt that it would do no harm to cue-bid the ace of spades on the way to five diamonds. That was all the encouragement North needed to go on to slam—the fact that his partner had denied first-round heart control and had not yet promised second-round control was a minor matter.

It would have been fitting justice had West elected to lead the ace of hearts, but in the real world the queen of spades was a natural attack. Declarer won in dummy, drew two rounds of trumps and then cashed the ace of spades and ruffed a spade on the table. Some people would simply throw in the towel by conceding two heart tricks, but our declarer, one of the world's great players, was made of sterner stuff.

He ran four more rounds of diamonds, discarding three hearts from dummy. West had to find four discards. Since he could part with only one club, he sluffed his three low hearts. Now declarer exited with a heart, and West found himself on lead.

He tried to fool declarer by leading the jack of clubs, but declarer had only one line. He won and finessed the ten of clubs, and the slam was made.

West had two chances to defeat the contract. He could have sluffed the ace of hearts instead of a low one, allowing his partner to score the king of hearts and a spade. Or he could have exited with a low club. While that would have permitted declarer to win a cheap club trick immediately, he would be unable to get back to dummy to enjoy the ace of clubs, and the slam would have failed.

Flight-Training In Phoenix To End For Germans Wednesday

PHOENIX (AP) — Supersonic fighters marked with the Iron Cross will soon disappear from American skies, along with the Luftwaffe pilots often seen sauntering down Phoenix streets in cowboy hats and boots.

After 25 years, the German flight training program at Luke Air Force Base is ending Wednesday with graduation ceremonies for seven German air force pilots.

"There was no more glamorous recruiting attraction possessed by the Luftwaffe than the offer of a two-year program of instruction in the American Southwest," said Lt. Col. Heinrich Thuermer, commander of the last German squadron to train at Luke.

"The Southwest always has been a dreamland for German boys. The Wild West, the land of cowboys and Indians."

U.S.-built F-104 Starfighters or F-84s with German markings eventually became a common sight at this Arizona desert base, about 25 miles west of downtown Phoenix.

About 2,700 German pilots honed their skills at Luke under a mutual defense agreement signed in 1957 by the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany. The program is ending because the Germans are replacing their F-104s with different planes.

Upon arrival in Arizona, most of the young Germans quickly outfitted themselves in Western attire for off-duty hours — from jeans and boots to cowboy hats. They frequently could be seen exploring the desert on horseback.

Thuermer, now 40, said he first came to Luke in 1966 and still finds the desert fascinating and exotic. He said the pilots always were impressed with how "very open, friendly and hospitable" the Americans were.

"As for food and beer, well, we missed our real German bread, a firm rye, and the variety of sausages we had at home," he said. "The beer is different but in the heat of summer, we'd rather have two American beers than one stronger German brew."

Among the program's first graduates were aces from World War II, including Lt. Guenther Rall, who is credited with shooting down 275 aircraft, mostly Russian. They came for transition training in the swift, stubby-winged jets and to share their combat experience.

Sixteen of the German student-pilots never returned home. They and six American pilot-instructors were killed in 44 major accidents involving F-104 Starfighters at Luke.

"It is a demanding aircraft — single-seat, single-engine, high speed," Thuermer said of the F-104. "However, there have been no fatal accidents at Luke since 1976."

At the program's peak in 1960, two squadrons of 60 students were flying more than 22,000 hours in F-104s, which travel at twice the speed of sound. The F-84s had been phased out earlier.

In turn, the F-104s also will be phased out by the Luftwaffe later this decade by the European-built, swing-wing Tornados.

That also means phasing out the training program at Luke, because the Luftwaffe pilots will train elsewhere in their new Tornados, a twin-engine, supersonic aircraft designed for use by the British, German and Italian military.

U.S. government officials have reported collecting $36 million through the years from the Germans for aircraft maintenance, fuel and training. Brig. Gen. Henry D. Canterbury, commander of the 832nd Air Division at Luke, estimates that over $600 million flowed into the local economy because of the program.

The German pilots have established an International Friendship Foundation which contributed thousands of dollars to charity. The trust fund now totals about $50,000 and its donations will be continued in perpetuity.

In a short-term version of the Berlin Airlift of 1947, German pilots also were among the volunteers helping to airlift supplies and livestock feed to Navajo Indians cut off by deep snow in the winter of 1967.

Lt. Cmdr Klaus Pflueger, the squadron's 38-year-old deputy commander, said he will return home "with one eye smiling and one in tears. I love this country."

Millions Of Birds Gone From Christmas Island

By WARREN E. LEARY

AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unusual weather may have caused millions of birds to stage an unprecedented mass exodus from Christmas Island, leaving their young to die in nests on the Pacific atoll, scientists say.

Virtually the entire adult population of sea birds on Christmas Island mysteriously disappeared last year, leaving thousands of chicks behind to starve to death, scientists reported Monday.

Researchers suspect that weather changes may have caused the birds to abandon the island, the first such massive disappearance of an entire bird population ever recorded on a tropical atoll.

Dr. Ralph W. Schreiber, curator of ornithology at the Natural History Museum of Los Angeles County in California, said about 17 million birds representing 18 species either abandoned the island or perished.

The sudden departure, which occurred between Schreiber's visits to the island last June and November, was particularly devastating for the thousands of nestlings.

Some bird species will lose at least an entire generation because of the disruption, Schreiber said.

"What has happened there was a real shock and a catastrophe when put in the context of the breeding biology of these species," he said.

The disappearance occurred during an unusual weather phenomenon known as El Nino, which results in a change in Pacific wind patterns, ocean currents and water temperatures.

This weather, which has resulted in an unusual winter in many parts of the world, is responsible for shifts in fish populations and changes in the habits of animals depending upon these fish, he said.

Schreiber said in a telephone interview that many of the birds may be living in the air above more distant waters, waiting for the weather to change before returning to Christmas Island.

The birds, which feed exclusively on fish and squid, spend most of their lives in the air, floating on air currents and swooping down occasionally to feed, he said.

"There are other islands nearby, but they are 60 to 100 miles away," Schreiber said. "Under normal conditions, birds from one island do not go to other islands and there is no reason to go to another island even in an emergency."

Schreiber has just been awarded a National Science Foundation grant to return to Christmas Island next month for further studies. He wants to see when the birds return and what reproductive cycles they reestablish.

The majority of the birds involved, mostly sooty terns and wedge-tailed shearwaters, have long life spans and are not in danger of dying out because of the breeding disruption, Schreiber said.

The scientists said 14 million sooty terns, at least 1.5 million shearwaters and one million birds of 16 other species were involved in the exodus and death.

Christmas Island is the world's largest coral atoll, covering an area of about 250 square miles. The equatorial island, which has a human population of about 1,500, is part of the Republic of Kiribati, formerly known as the Gilbert Islands.

Buzzard Day

It's a bit early for Halloween, but, as these citizens of Hinckley, Ohio know, it's just the right time of year for Buzzard Day. Today is the day hundreds of turkey buzzards return from their winter homes down south to their summer roosts in Hinckley. Today 60,000 onlookers are expected to join that town's 6,000 full-time residents for picnics, games, entertainment, general festivities, and plenty of buzzard watching. Buzzards have a bad reputation with most people but the citizens of Hinckley know that, despite their ugly appearance and loathsome habits, buzzards — technically known as vultures — are really gentle birds that perform a valuable service as nature's garbage collectors.

DO YOU KNOW — Where do the swallows return each year on March 19?

Deny Recall Delay For X-Body Cars

WASHINGTON (AP) — A consumer group's accusation that General Motors Corp. is dragging its feet on the recall of 240,000 cars is untrue, a spokesman for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration says.

General Motors announced Feb. 6 it would recall the 1980 X-body cars to fix brake problems, but the company and federal regulators are still discussing possible corrections. A formal recall order has yet to be issued by the manufacturer.

The consumer group appealed on Monday to Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole to intervene and speed up the recall.

Joan Claybrook, who was the government's top highway safety official in the Carter administration, accused the Reagan administration of not pushing GM for a recall.

"Now General Motors is objecting to carrying out this recall," Ms. Claybrook wrote Mrs. Dole, urging her "to intervene and resolve this matter." Ms. Claybrook is now president of Public Citizen, a broad-based consumer interest organization.

But the NHTSA spokesman said the recall process was "proceeding as scheduled" and that GM "is not balking at carrying out this recall."

"If there's any problem with the fix we'll deal with that," said spokesman Hal Paris. "There's no holdup in this recall."

Sources knowledgeable about the issue, however, said that NHTSA and General Motors have yet to agree on a correction to the cars.

The problem involves a tendency in the some 1980 X-body cars — the Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Oldsmobile Omega and Buick Skylark — to have the rear brakes lock, sending the car into a dangerous spin.

Gang Leader Today Peace Corps 'Star'

By MARK MOONEY
NEW YORK (UPI) — Misael Perez is a short, compact man who used to dress all in black, wear chains and studs for jewelry, spoke little and was called "Master" by the 175 members of his teenage gang, the Masterminds.

That was in 1980. Today Perez, 20, is a graduate of a South Bronx Job Corps center, wears farmer-style jeans and a plaid shirt, has a wispy moustache and goatee, and talks incessantly about his job — carpentry.

Perez works 10 hours a day, making $11 an hour straight time and double time after seven hours. He works six days a week and on weekends visits building superintendents in his South Bronx neighborhood looking for work.

He does not see his old gang members often these days. They shun him. He has gone straight, got a high school equivalency diploma, a job, an apartment and a new set of values.

"I lost a lady because of Job Corps," Perez said while discussing the changes in his life. "I lost a lot of friends. But I'm going to go for it."

It was that determination that provided Perez with his first career, a petty czar of a violent teenage world in the South Bronx. He still talks with pride of those days, and has kept the last insignia of his rank, his black hat.

"They called me Black Sheep because I wore all black: black sneakers, black pants, black shirt and my black hat. I was a man of very few words and lots of action," he says.

He lived on his tough reputation, taking over an abandoned building at Clay and 173rd streets where he ran the building's boiler and hooked up electrical lines. The pack of young teenagers who crammed in with him paid for his beer, his food and whatever else he wanted.

"In a day I would have young girls get jobs and bring me money. I'd make the guys get jobs and they'd give me a cut or bring me food. I'd tell them, 'You're lucky I'm helping you,'" he said.

Perez had been on the South Bronx streets since he was 14 and knew how to survive there, and he believed he was helping them.

But in 1980 he came across another group being put together — a live-in Job Corps program at one of 109 federal centers set up to give skills to uneducated and unskilled youths. It was the first and still is the only center set up in a poverty area.

"There was a lot of controversy about it because all the things we were trying to get them away from were right outside our door," says Marta Moco, the center's programs manager since it opened.

Although it is still the only Job Corps center in an inner city neighborhood, it has proved to be successful, she says. Of the 50 youths who started the program, 35 completed enough training to be placed in jobs.

The center has expanded into a $3 million a year operation and currently has 250 youths enrolled.

When Perez, one of the original 50, asked for work as a carpenter at the budding center, he was turned down because he was not licensed. Lured by his interest in carpentry, Perez was drawn into the program, discarded his gang "colors," and gradually lost his gang manners.

He looks back at his beginning with the Job Corps with some embarrassment now.

"I didn't trust anyone," he recalls. "I had to go out and get a dictionary so I could talk like them."

He credits the change to the people who taught him there.

"They're the ones who put me through the channels, taught me to finish my work, taught me my skills. They got involved personally," he says.

The corps got him a job through the National Association of Home Builders, and he now is employed building offices for Manufacturers Hanover's headquarters on Park Avenue.

Insuring The California Dream Can Prove Costly

By STEPHEN FOX
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) —
Insuring the kind of California lifestyle many people dream about isn't cheap. And while those who can afford the beachfront bungalows and canyon homes can also pay the higher premiums, not all of them do.

Hundreds of houses were lost recently in California's savage storms — total damage is estimated at well over $300 million — and many homeowners did not have adequate insurance, says Federal Emergency Management Agency spokesman Merl Moore.

Basic homeowner policies
do not cover flooding, mudslides or wave damage,
and Moore said even the affluent were caught with insufficient coverage during the recent bad weather.

"We ran across cases with expensive homes on the coastline that didn't have adequate insurance — either structural or belongings.

People are supposed to re-evaluate (their policies) every few years, but many of them don't," he said. "It's often a matter of their personalities — it's not a question of whether they can afford it. They just don't think about it until it happens."

Many homeowners also didn't buy additional flood insurance coverage offered through the federal government, said Judy Merrill, executive director of the Western Insurance Information Service.

"Nationally, in areas qualified for flood insurance, only about five percent of the homeowners buy it," said Ms. Merrill. "And that's what we're finding in the recent flooding — people have homeowners (policies) but they have not purchased the flood insurance. People just think it couldn't happen to them."

Even those who thought ahead weren't always able to protect themselves.

Richard Cook carried some of his belongings to safety when floodwaters swept through his Huntington Beach neighborhood south of Los Angeles but lost much of what he had to leave behind.

"We have flood insurance for our house, but no one would give it to our possessions," he said.
"There was three feet of water there, and I'm sure damage will be substantial."

Cook was wary, but other California residents may have been complacent.
Homes slither off hillsides or disappear into waves every year during California's winter rains, and some of those who live with that annual threat have come to ignore it. Even if they had insurance, they might not have been covered.

"A basic homeowners policy usually will not cover earthquakes, landslides, floods, surface water, waves or tidal waves, backup of sewers or nuclear radiation," said Ms. Merrill.

Beachfront property can be extremely expensive to insure, said Roger Comerford of Watts, Comerford & Williams, Santa Monica insurance brokers.

"Even though the basic homeowners policy does not provide coverage of damage by flood or high surf, it's hard to get one" along the shore, he said.

Even homes designed to withstand heavy waves aren't automatically insurable, Comerford said.

"We had a couple of clients who built right on the ocean.
In both of these cases they built on pylons that go down to bedrock," he said. "But companies are so afraid of this problem that they refused to write the coverage."

Premiums on a basic homeowner's policy on a $200,000 beachfront dwelling would start at $666 a year, Comerford said. If the owner were required by the lender to obtain extra coverage, and many are, the annual cost would jump to $1,105. If the house was also in a brush area, the tab would be $1,405.

If the owner obtained $185,000 worth of federal flood coverage (the maximum available), his premiums would be about $2,200.
If he wanted to play it ultra-safe and also insure against earthquakes, his total tab would be around $2,600.

Some insurance companies just aren't interested in policies covering hazards such as quakes and floods.

"The only people who are going to buy earthquake insurance are those in earthquake areas and the only people who are going to buy flood insurance are those in flood areas," said Farmers

Insurance Group spokesman Richard Pittinger. "So it's a losing proposition."

The vast majority of California residents are not afflicted by expensive premiums. For example,
California homeowners pay $3.70 for every $1,000 worth of insurance they buy from State Farm. In Illinois, the
Jersey $3.20. Nationwide, the average is $4 per $1,000, said
State Farm spokesman Dave Hurst.

Homeowners in many other states would pay more than Californians for a basic policy on a $125,000 wood-frame home, said All-State spokesman Al Goldhamer, who noted that the figures are examples only.

In Evanston, Ill., the annual premium would be $324; in the Atlanta suburb of Decatur, Ga., $614; in Cambridge, Mass., $757 and in suburban Glendale, Calif., $441.

Study Fate Of Anthony Dollars

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Fewer than half the 800 million Susan B. Anthony dollars minted have been circulated because of a lack of consumer interest, says
Donna Pope, director of the U.S. Mint.

Ms. Pope told a women's business group Saturday that only 300 million of the coins have been circulated, and that the government is storing the remaining 500 million.

Many people complained that the coin, introduced in 1979, too closely resembles a quarter.

New Treatments for Bouts of Bursitis

Are there any new treatments for bursitis? About three times a year I get an attack to my right shoulder that completely incapacitates me for a week or 10 days. Is there any way to avoid this? A lot of my friends can't believe that this is as painful as I say it is.
— Mr. A.L.V., Wisc.

Dear Mr. V.:
Only those who have suffered an attack of bursitis can appreciate the intensity of the pain, the limitations and the distress.

A bursa is a small sac that lies in many joints of the body.
These sacs act as ballbearings to lubricate the joints and make them move easily and freely.

Bursitis is an infection or inflammation of the bursa. The fluid within the bursa may develop mineral deposits that make all motion extremely painful.

Injury, exposure to cold and infection, and some arthritic conditions may be responsible for chronic bursitis.

More and more attention is now being paid to the possibility that undiscovered and untreated gout may be responsible for many cases of bursitis.
Uric acid stones can be deposited in the bursa. The swelling makes movement
most painful.

Uric acid stones, unlike calcium stones in the bursa, cannot be seen by X-ray. For this reason, gout is given more and more consideration as an underlying cause of episodes of bursitis. If gout is indeed present, many new forms of treatment with drugs are available to reduce the concentration of uric acid in the bloodstream.

Cortisone, X-ray radiation and ultrasonic vibrations have been successfully used in the treatment of acute bursitis.
There are also many anti-inflammatory drugs without cortisone that can be used as a preventive measure and as a form of treatment.

I should like to warn you and others who are bursitis-prone not to try to "work out" bouts of bursitis. Exercise, massage and bone manipulation can be extremely hazardous and may even cause irreversible changes within the joints.

The cause of bursitis must be pursued. When found, only then can the proper treatment be started.

SPEAKING OF YOUR HEALTH... The greatest need of the elderly is to know that they are still needed, loved, wanted and respected.

Their accumulated wisdom does not stop when they are retired from work.

It is a pathetic waste of potential to disregard the valuable contributions that the elderly can continue to make to society.

EARTHQUAKE

An earthquake that rocked
