Hussein, Arafat To Meet

By DAVID MASON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Jordan's King Hussein, leader of a six-nation Arab League delegation to Britain, said Saturday he will meet with PLO chief Yasser Arafat this week in the latest round of Middle East peace efforts.

U.S. Mideast troubleshooter Philip C. Habib met with Hussein for just over an hour and was to fly to Israel Sunday morning.

Habib said the purpose of the meeting was to review with Hussein the visits to Washington last week of the Israeli and Lebanese foreign ministers and to bring the king up to date on the status of the talks on the withdrawal of foreign troops from Lebanon.

"His majesty was very gracious to receive me ... and we naturally went over the ground in this regard rather thoroughly," Habib said without elaborating.

Hussein told a news conference earlier that he would meet with with Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, sometime this week. He did not diclose the exact day or place.

In answer to a reporter's question, the king said the talks would be "crucial." But he would not elaborate.

The king also indicated he would soon clarify his attitude toward the U.S. proposal for self-determination for West Bank Palestinians in association with Jordan.

After months of political maneuvering, Hussein and other members of the Arab League delegation met with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on Friday.

The talks were described as cordial and appeared to clear the way for a more active role by Britain in the quest for peace.

"Anglo-Arab relations are once again as they should have been," Hussein said.

Britain, with strong historical ties to the Mideast and important trading interests there, had been effectively sidelined from the area because of a squabble over Palestinian representation on the Arab delegation.

Mrs. Thatcher had refused to receive the delegation because it originally included a PLO official.

Mrs. Thatcher, however, agreed to inclusion in the delegation of Walid Khalidi, a Palestinian professor who has close ties with the PLO but is not an official of the organization.

The delegation received a red-carpet welcome Friday and spent some three hours with Mrs. Thatcher and other high officials. Afterward, they went to Buckingham Palace for an audience with Queen Elizabeth II.

The purpose of the delegation's visit was to explain last September's Fez, Morocco, Arab summit peace proposals, which some observers interpreted as implicitly recognizing Israel's right to live in peace.

Mrs. Thatcher said after the meeting there was "now an important opportunity for peaceful progress in the Middle East."

Khalidi called the talks "extremely satisfactory," and Hussein at his news conference said the mission was a success.

He welcomed Britain's peace efforts and said they would avoid polarization of the Mideast conflict.

Hussein also said, "The situation in the (Israeli)-occupied territories is extremely dangerous."

Habib stopped over in London on his way to Israel with new American proposals for obtaining a withdrawl of Israeli, Syrian and Palestininan forces from Lebanon.

Both Hussein and the PLO leadership have been equivocal about the American peace plan, spelled out by President Reagan last Sept. 1. Neither has flatly rejected it, as Israel has.

Hussein said he would clarify his attitude toward the Reagan plan "possibly in a short space of time," but it was believed he will need PLO assent to join in the proposal. A key part of Reagan's proposal was a more active role for Hussein, perhaps as intermediary between the PLO and Israel.

ECU Computer Helps Identify Toxic Subjects

By SUE HINSON

Furniture polish is an innocuous enough looking substance. It does what it's supposed to do, makes your tables and counters shine like there's no tomorrow. But if Johnny gets hold of the polish, there just may be no tomorrow.

"A lot of grief, suffering and guilt can be avoided if parents will just put any kind of cleaning compound and drug, no matter how safe they are thought to be, under lock and key. That one measure will save little Johnny from dying from swallowing a simple amount of polish that no one even suspected was toxic," advises Dr. Joseph E. Williamson, associate chairman of the ECU School of Medicine Department of Emergency Medicine.

The list of potentially dangerous substances is virtually endless. It was with this in mind that Pitt County Memorial Hospital invested in a Poisondex with funds provided by the hospital and the Eastern Carolina Emergency Medical Services System.

The Poisondex, a desk-top commputer system, details treatment procedures for 160,000 commercial, industrial and botanical items by cross referencing trade and jargon names with the symptoms they exhibit when injested. A color index to identify plants and mushrooms accompanies the system's plastic microfiche cards.

"We've had it about a year and rarely a day goes by that we don't use the Poisondex five to seven times," Williamson said.

Before the Poisondex arrived, Williamson said the emergency department staff frequently had to call the poison center at Duke University Medical Center to describe patient's symptoms. Immense toxicology books also had to be "hauled out and gone over page after page" to identify substances. "That system did not make for exact diagnoses, either," he said.

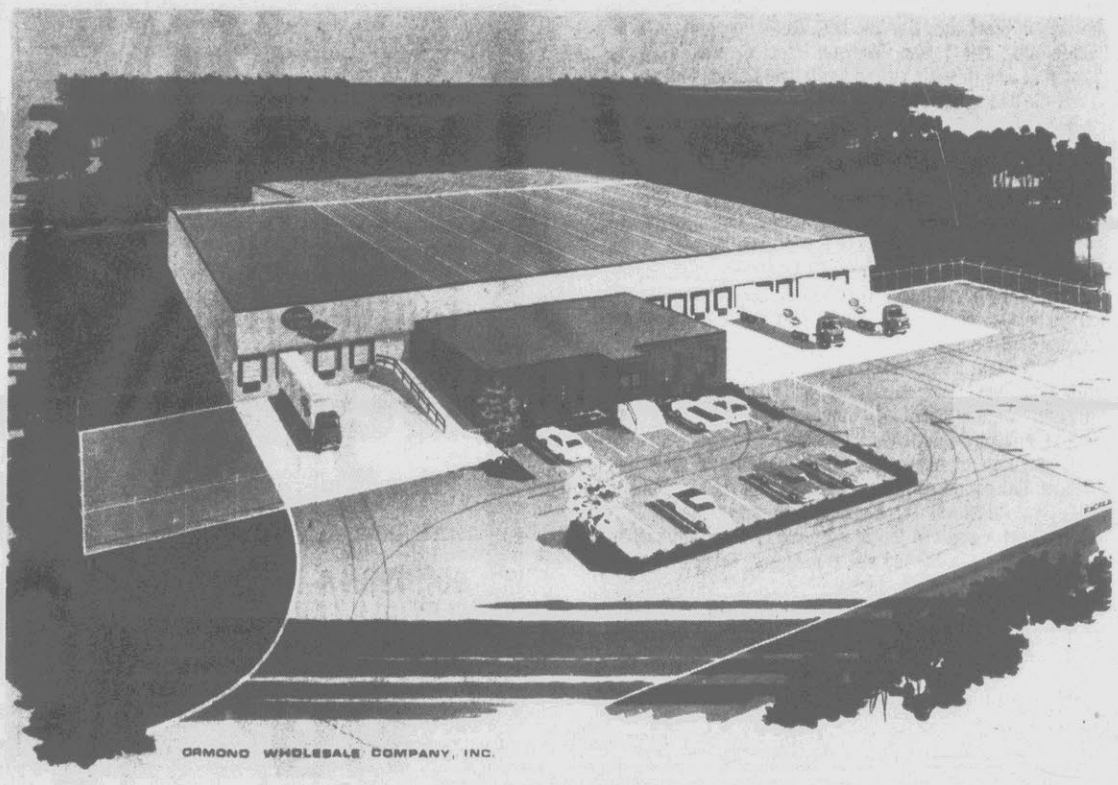

"We're fortunate to be able to identify poisons more readily, but we would like to not have to use it at all," he said.

Safety precautions parents can take include putting all household products up high or, even better, under lock and key, Williamson said. "Most households have over 20 products lined up under the kitchen sink or in a low cabinet, and parents assume these products are not hazardous. But the rule is, assume that they all are poisonous and lock them up."

High on the list of hazardous products, behind furniture polish, are glue, bleach, starch, ammonia and soap. Some common house and garden plants are poisonous as well, including jasmine, philodendron and oleander. "Oleander will flat kill you," Williamson said.

"Parents should especially look out for children who like to chew on things," he advised. "A lot of 3-year-olds will eat plants out of arrangements and some dried and fresh flowers in arrangements can make children sick."

NEW FACILITY PLANNED ... Ormond Wholesale's new food distribution center, which will be built on a 34-acre tract on Industrial Boulevard, is expected to be ready for occupancy by the firm's dry grocery and refrigerated products sections by next January.

Firm Plans New Center

By TOM BAINES

H.L. Ormond Jr., president and general manager of Ormond Wholesale Co. Inc. of Greenville, has announced plans by the firm to build a new food distribution center on Industrial Boulevard just north of Greenville.

The company services independently owned supermarkets, convenience stores and rural community stores, and also franchises Foodland and Clover Farm supermarkets in a regional area from Raleigh to the coast.

Ormond said construction is expected to start immediately on the multimillion dollar project and the firm hopes to occupy the new center by the first of the year.

According to Ormond, the 110,000-square-foot masonry-metal facility will be built on a 34-acre site between the McGraw-Edison Co. plant and Regional Storage and Transport Inc.

He said the project will be developed in three phases, with the dry grocery and refrigerated products sections moving to the new site first, followed by completion of the frozen foods segment and general offices. A vehicle maintenance facility will complete the development.

Ormond said that, initially, general offices will be maintained at the company's present 1901 Dickinson Ave. location, along with frozen foods and cash and carry operations. Ultimately, the entire wholesale business will be relocated at the new facility, he said.

Ormond said the center will have almost double the space now available on Dickinson Avenue, including 88,000 square feet for dry grocery storage, a 16,000-square-foot refrigerated and frozen-foods area, and an office area of some 6,000 square feet. The firm's fleet of 37 vehicles will be maintained at the Industrial Boulevard site.

Spring To Bring Economic Shift To Washington

By MELVIN LANG
Reflector Staff Writer

Spring arrives just before midnight Sunday, and with it the dawning of what some business-watchers in Beaufort County say will be a prosperous upswing in the economy.

"Even if there were not an upswing nationally, I think there would be one here," Job Service manager Jim Crooks observed in Washington.

"Let's face it, not only in Beaufort County but in eastern North Carolina, spring brings on an increase ... in agricultural and seafood industries, in forestry," Crooks said. But, he said, there is more this year.

"Currently there are trickles of jobs coming in, but they are jobs from employers that haven't been hiring for several months ... Employers with routine production jobs.

"That indicates to me that production is up," Crooks said. "Some employers are beginning to work a little overtime, preparatory to increasing their work forces. Several have indicated they expect to increase their work force, and that's within the next three months.

"We're not looking at any layoffs or cutbacks and, among the smaller employers, their confidence has been building."

Crooks said the unemployment rate in Beaufort County at the end of January — the last report available — was 13.8 percent. He predicted the next report would be considerably below that level.

Similar reports came from Bill Adeyounis, industrial development director and executive vice president of the Washington Chamber of Commerce, and Ellen Carawan, secretary of the Belhaven Area Chamber of Commerce.

"It's holding its own right now and there is always hope," Ms. Carawan said.

Adeyounis was more optimistic, stating that he believes "things are really on the upswing" despite a decline in tax collections and sales in Washington during the past year. Adeyounis said sales dropped $from 185 million a year ago to $171.3 million, "but we were lucky to come out like that."

Now, he said, "The attitude is brighter and they tell me people are beginning to perk up. It look's like we're beginning to get some stimulation."

Warren S. Lane, executive director of the Downtown Washington Association, agreed with that assessment although he acknowledged that business now could be better.

"I'd have to say it's spotty now. Having gotten the momentum started with the after-holiday sales, which have been successful, the market is slowing now. But it is showing increases unit-wise," Lane said.

Fordham Says ECU Med School Wasn't Needed

RALEIGH — North Carolina's educational funding crisis may be due to a system that "overbuilt colleges," including the East Carolina University School of Mediicine, a newspaper quotes Chancellor Christopher C. Fordham III of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill as saying.

Fordham, who could not be reached for expansion of his remarks, made the comments in a speech to the Greater Raleigh Chamber of Commerce Thursday.

Fordham, speaking at a chamber-sponsored coffee talk, said the General Assembly should not increase aid to private colleges in view of the needs of the state's universities.

"Right now we can't pay our bills, and they're asking for more," Fordham said.

Referring to the 16 UNC-member schools and the 33 private colleges and universities, Fordham said, "It may well be that North Carolina has overbuilt colleges — both public and private. It represents a serious problem ... we're overextended."

Fordham also told the Raleigh chamber members "we built a new medical school we didn't need," referring to the ECU School of Medicine

Before becoming chancellor at UNC-CH, and during the lengthy fight to establish the medical school at East Carolina, Fordham was dean of the UNC medical school.

In July 1974, as the ECU School of Medicine was being developed, UNC President William Friday placed Fordham in complete charge of the ECU program.

While overseeing the ECU medical program, Fordham refused to allow ECU officials to use any of the $15 million set aside by the Legislature for development of the school; haggled with then ECU Chancellor Leo Jenkins over jurisdictional issues, and at one point said the medical school at ECU "cannot proceed unless Chancellor Jenkins and his constituencies will support the effort in good faith."

While Fordham suggests the medical school at Greenville was not needed, Dr. Stuart Bondurant, current dean of the UNC medical school, said in an article published in the North Carolina Medical Journal in January: "It seems to me that we are educating about the right number of physicians in North Carolina and that, if anything, too few North Carolinians are going into medicine."

Bondurant suggested that, if there is to be a surplus of physicians in the state, "It is due to in-migration of physicians from other states and countries."

"Reducing the positions in North Carolina's medical

Greenville Shows Off Its Flags

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Have you seen an American flag flying atop a pole recently?

More than two dozen flag poles are topped with the Stars and Stripes each weekday at government buildings and private businesses in the Greenville area. More than half of them also display the flag on weekends.

A survey conducted last week showed that flags fly at the Greenville City Hall, the city's public works department, the Town Commons, the Pitt County office building, the county courthouse, the two U.S. Post Office buildings, the National Guard building, the Department of Corrections, the Highway Patrol station and the two First State Bank offices on Memorial Drive each weekday.

Flags are displayed seven days a week at the city's three fire stations, the Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center, the East Carolina University School of Medicine's Brody Medical Science Building, at the Pitt-Greenville Airport and at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

The American Flag is also flown seven days a week at the Federal Building, where it is raised and lowered each day by an automatic flag pole; and at the U.S. Army Reserve Center, at ECU's Joyner Library, on College Hill Drive on the ECU campus, the Dodge Store, and at the three McDonald's Hamburgers restaurants, where the flag is flown 24 hours each day.

The Pitt-Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce reported that it will "try to" fly the flag everyday, but some days it is not flown.

And a spokesman for the Social Security Administration said that, while there is a pole in front of the building, the agency doesn't fly the flag outdoors. However, there are three flags displayed inside the building.

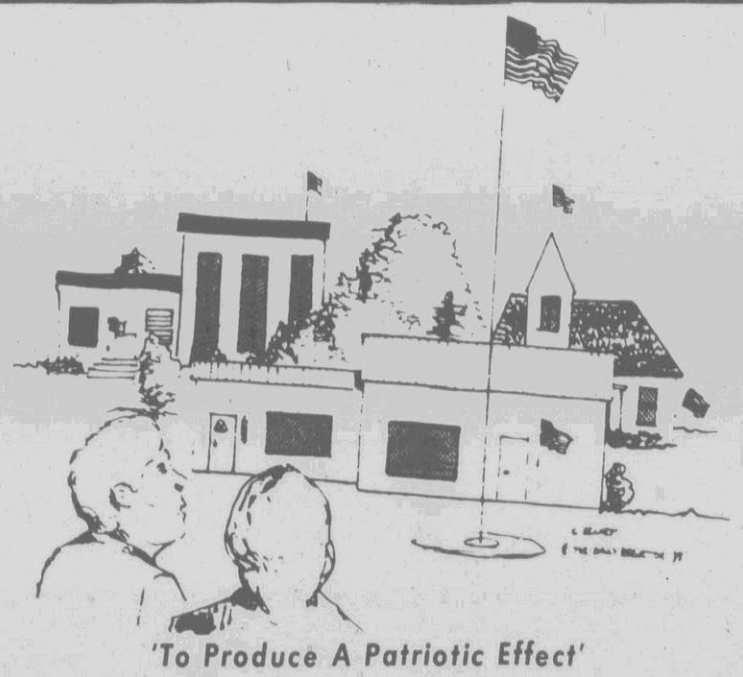

Those locations where the flag is raised and lowered each day report that if the weather is rainy in the mornings, the flag is not usually displayed.

The display of the Stars and Stripes dates from 1777 when the Continental Congress established the flag by resolution. Later, Gen. George Washington is said to have described its symbolism: "We take the stars from heaven, the red from our mother country, separating it by white stripes, thus showing that we have separated from her, and the white stripes shall go down to posterity representing liberty."

By proclamation of the president of the United States, the national flag is flown night and day at Fort McHenry, Md.; Flaghouse Square, Baltimore; the Capitol in Washington, and the Marine Corps Memorial — a statue of the American flag-raising on Mount Suribachi on Iwo Jima in 1945 — in Arlington, Va.

Federal law allows the flying of the flag at night at other locations "when it is desired to produce a

BETSY SANS

Visitor Relates Life Of Eskimo

By ANGELA LINGERFELT
Reflector Staff Writer

Betsy Sans, a native of Alaska, has lived most of her life in Arkansas, but she still remembers a lot about living in Alaska and the lifestyles of Eskimos.

Born in Seward, Alaska, Ms. Sans moved to Arkansas when she was 5 years old. Her mother, Ruth Bochann, was an Eskimo and her father, Webster Denton, was a North Carolinian. She recently visited a relative, Larona Murray, in Greenville and told of some of her experiences and memories in Alaska.

Ms. Sans said Alaskan life is more primitive than life here. The biggest town in Alaska is Anchorage and it isn't quite as big as Greenville.

"There is one main highway in Alaska and most places don't have cars. Sometimes bears can even be seen in the streets. Not everybody lives in igloos like people think; igloos are temporary housing while hunting. Eskimos live in board and sod houses. There isn't much wood so they use seal oil for light and heat," Ms. Sans commented.

She added that Eskimos sell furs, hunt and weave baskets as a way of living. They eat whales, fish and seals mainly and don't like "white people food." She said a person not used to Alaska is called a tenderfoot or "chechoka."

The language of Alaska is called Eskimo and there are different dialects depending on what part of the state one is in. Ms. Sans said it was a spoken language, not written.

Passing on legends is the main form of entertainment in Alaska, Ms. Sans said, and she remembers several legends that are known throughout Alaska.

"One that everybody knows is about how the white mosquito came about. There were two brothers, an older brother and a younger brother, who were out in the wilderness. The older brother told the younger to stay where he was while he went out to hunt food.

"When the older brother didn't come back for a while the younger brother went out looking for him. The older brother had been taken away by a snowman. The little brother found them and hit the snowman with a big club. Then the little brother built a big fire and burned the snowman. His ashes caused mosquitos," Ms. Sans recalled.

Ms. Sans remembers another legend about an Eskimo woman who thought well of herself. "She looked down on everybody else. When she died, she wanted to be buried on top of a hill so she could look down on everybody else. After she was buried on the hill, a fire started on her grave and never stopped burning. It's still burning today," she said.

Three Collisions Investigated

Approximately $6,400 automobile damage resulted from three collisions on Friday, according to Greenville police records.

One collision occurred on N.C. 11 when a vehicle driven by Donnie Gean McMillar of Walstonburg collided with a vehicle driven by Jasper Cooper Jr. of Route 1, Greenville. One injury was reported and McMillar was charged with a safe movement violation.

Estimated damage to the McMillar vehicle was $2,000, while damage to the Cooper vehicle was placed at $2,500.

In an accident on Memorial Drive by Carolina East Center, police records showed that a vehicle driven by Amos Guy Harris of 2604 Dunn St. collided with a vehicle driven by Dennice Hickman Herman of Winterville. One injury was reported and Harris was charged with going too fast for conditions.

Estimated damage to the Harris vehicle was placed at $800 and damage to the Herman vehicle was $100.

Another accident resulted when a vehicle driven by Norman Jesse Paramore of 1310 Vandyke St. collided with a vehicle driven by Lindell Wright of Robersonville. The accident occurred at the intersection of Gum Road and North Greene Street. No injuries were reported and Paramore was charged with a safe movement violation.

Damage to the Paramore vehicle was estimated to be $300 and the damage to the Wright vehicle was placed at $700.

'The Poacher' Is Opera From Neglected Era

On Friday evening, eastern Carolinians had a unique opportunity to hear a rarely performed German opera from a period in opera's history seriously neglected by most performing companies in operation today.

Albert Lortzing's "Der Wildshcutz" ("The Poacher") falls into that never-never land of German opera between the two pillars of that nation, Carl Maria von Weber and Richard Wagner. First performed in 1842 in Leipzig, it acheived a great success and still is presented with some regularity in German. Outside the country, however, appearances of the work are rare indeed. We,in Greenville, can thank the National Opera Company for giving us one of only two performances which the company will give with orchestral accompaniment.

One finds very little music in this work that one could remotely call original. The opera is highly derivative, owing a great deal to the style of French opera-comique a la Boieldieu and Auber as well as the more obvious and very strong references to Weber, whose "Freischutz" was the touchstone for most of German opera on this time and which obviously gave Lortzing his impetus. However, unoriginal does not necessarily mean not entertaining.

Lortzing's music captures a geat deal of charm, melody and humor. It was the eighth of his 14 works for the stage, premiering three years after the one other work for which he is known, "Zar Und Zimmermann." "Wildschutz" is based on a comedy by A.F.F. Kotzebue, Der Rehbock (The Roebuck), a highly revolutionary play about unfair punishment meted out by the lord of the manor to a schoolmaster who only once has shot a deer on the lord's land. In a genre on theater known for its improbabilities, Lortzing's libretto abuses that privelege mightily.

Double and triple disguises abound, making a short synopsis of the plot virutally impossible. Suffice to say Sabastian Baculus, a schoolmaster, is caught poaching on Count Eberbach's land. The count takes a fancy to Bacalus' sweetheart, Gretchen (or at least so he supposes). This, along with another flirtation involving a baroness disguised as a man who in turn is redisguised as a peasant girl, will give the reader an idea of the plot. It all does end happily, though.

Several musical numbers stand out, a couple of which are the delightful overture with its hunting horns (horns are used a great deal in this opera to suggest its forest setting), the nimble ensembles, some very graceful arias, two of which belong to the schoolmaster, Baculus: an "A-B-C Teaching Aria," highly reminiscent of Van Bett's scena in "Zar Und Zimmermann," and Gilbert and Sullivan-like patter song about "Funf Tausend Thaler" (translated "five thousand dollars") the amount the schoolmaster has been offered to give up his Gretchen.

The National Opera Company's performance served this work well. John Haber's direction and set deisgn captured the spirit of the work in all its Biedermeier splendor, the second act setting in particular, an outrageous combination of German Hunting Lodge, Greek Pantheon and Gothic Arch. If Haber's direction tended to be on the static side, one must place a good deal of the blame for this on Lortzing who produced copious music, delightful though it may be, in places where dramatically very little happens. Don Wilder, conductor for the performance and musical guide of the company for many years, produced miracles with the East Carolina University Symphony Orchestra which accompanied the performance. Musically speaking, the opera sails along very comfortably for the orchestra until Lortzing decides to throw in a few curves. The orchestra coped with the curves valiantly.

The vocal demands of this work run the gamut from folk-like simplicity all the way to full Italian Operatic bel canto scena. The singers of the company seemed well prepared for their individual tasks. The scene-stealer, as one might suspect, is of course Bacalus, an almost "fail-safe" role, and one which John Reinhardt projected with fiercely comic intensity, if a bit mugging at times. The Gretchen was poutingly well sung by Judith Bruno, a soprano well-remembered from her delightful Norina in last year's "Don Pasquale." Winston Cook's Count Eberbach, a few minor blemishes aside, sang viscerally well.

Bryan Post's bright and clear tenor voice seemed strangely suited to the role of the Baron though this again is Lortzing, not Post. Susanna Gonzalez, who sang the Baroness (with all the disguises), has a hauntingly lovely voice but which sounds as though she still is undecided whether she is a mezzo or a soprano. Lisa Norris as the Countess, possesses a rich mezzo with good, solid projection throughout her range. The roles of Nanette and Pankratius, the cameo comprimario roles, were well handled by Carol Christensen and Phillip Evancho respectively.

If this reviewer has a criticism, it is that all the singers could sharpen up their diction. In a good many places words were indistinct, a serious problem in a work whose plot depends highly on the audience's following the convoluted plot developments.

Marck Evancho acieved wonderful lighting effects under dire and pressed circumstances. Mona Boyd's Williamston Junior High School chorus was a definite added plus to the performance.

Founded in 1948 as the National Grass Roots Opera Company, this group of young, enthusiastic singers has brought opera to many areas where it either exists minimally as in eastern North Carolina, or even in areas where it exists not at all. It is to the company's everlasting credit that it not only performs complete performances such as this one but also literally hundereds of condensed versions for schools across the state and across the country. Long may they live!

Flags Have Place Of Honor In Greenville . . .

patriotic effect."

According to a U.S. Marine Corps publication, "How to Respect & Display Our Flag," first published for distribution at the Chicago World's Fair in 1933, when the flag is displayed, it should be raised "quickly to the top of the staff." When it is lowered, it should be done "slowly and with dignity," and the flag should never be displayed with the union down "except as a signal of dire distress."

When the flag is flown at half-mast, it should he raised to the top of the pole for an instant, "then lowered to half-staff ... one-half the distance between the top and the bottom of the staff."

When lowering the flag from the half-staff position, according to "Our Flag," the Stars and Stripes "should again be raised to the peak" of the pole, then brought down.

On Memorial Day, it is proper to display the flag at half-staff until noon, then hoist it to the top of the pole.

When another flag is displayed on the same pole with the national banner, the Stars and Strips should always be on top. The only two exceptions to this rule allow the United Nations flag to fly above the Stars and Stripes at U.N. Headquarters, and the church pennant — a dark blue cross on a white background — to fly above the flag during church services conducted by naval chaplains at sea.

When a flag is displayed flat against a wall, either horizontally or vertically, the union — the blue field with white stars — "should be uppermost and to the flag's own right, that is the observer's left."

"During the ceremony of hoisting or lowering the flag, or when the flag is passing in a parade or in a review," persons in uniform should "render the right-hand salute," according to "Our Flag." Persons not in uniform should place their right hand over their heart.

"Our Flag" suggests that every precaution be taken to "prevent the flag from "becoming soiled," and says "it should not be allowed to touch the ground or floor, nor to brush against objects."

When the flag, through wear or damage, is "no longer a fitting emblem for display it should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably by burning," the Marine Corps publication says.

"I see another slant on this now. They (stores) are holding their own or showing slight increases which, of course, result in dollar increases.

"Basically, it's a waiting period but we are finding traffic. It's even or perhaps a little better than a year ago, and we are looking for a good spring season."

The economy has been helped by Texasgulf, whic has held employment fairly steady at its phosphate operation at Aurora. Promises of other major employment opportunities have been postponed as environmental hearings delay North Carolina Phosphate Corporation's mining startup.

In Washington, the city government is moving to help merchants perk up their business by offering to put up matching money to fund a full-time professional director of the Downtown Washington Association. Lane has held the job on a part-time basis for eight years.

Lane said he expected his role to be phased out within 60 to 90 days.

The move to a professional director is part of "a community effort that is pulling us together," Lane said. He said private financing is being used to renovate two downtown buildings — the old Talley Building, which will house a sporting goods-gun shop, and the Baum Building, a structure that was idled for a year by fire. The remodeled Baum Building will house two retail shops and some offices.

"As the months pass we hope there will be more," he said. "I think real estate values now are going up on the empty buildings which still dot the area."

Poison ...

Watch batteries are also toxic. "People will lay them down on tables and forget about the batteries until their child shows up sick. We've had or heard about at least 100 cases where small children think the batteries are M&M's and pop them in their mouths. When batteries decompose in the child's digestive tract, they emit very, very toxic substances," Williamson said.

If a parent thinks his or her child has come in contact with a poisonous substance, the emergency room should be contacted immediately. "If the name of the product is known, we can look it up on the Poisondex and advise the parent what to do," Williamson said.

Products, pill bottles or plants should also be brought to the emergency room so antidotes can be determined. "If we have no idea what the poison is, we can't tell how to treat the person," Williamson said.

During planting and growing seasons, herbicide and fungicide poisonings are frequently seen at the emergency room, according to Williamson. "Herbicides and fungicides can either be inhaled or absorbed through the skin, so it is imperative that farmers strictly follow safety directions on packages so they won't end up in here just wiped out."

The next step of poison control at PCMH will be a 24-hour poison information telephone service that individuals and regional health care professionals can call with questions about possible poisonings.

If you suspect that your child, a friend or anyone has come in contact with poison, call the Pitt County Memorial Hospital Emergency Room at 757-4461. A doctor or nurse will help you.

schools would, if anything, increase the inflow of physicians while even further reducing the access of sons and daughters of North Carolina to medical education," he said.

Bondurant continued, "It seems that North Carolina medical schools are now educating approximately the correct number of physicians for the state while access of North Carolinians to medical education is below the national average. If these observations and conclusions are correct there appears to be no reasonable basis for reducing the size of the medical schools or otherwise reducing access of North Carolinians to careers in medicine."

Dr. William Anlyan, vice president of health affairs at Duke University, seems to agree with Bondurant.

In a January interview, Anlyan said that, when he bacame dean of the Duke medical school 20 years ago, "everyone was asking why we weren't producing more physicians. At Duke, we responded by increasing class size from 72 to 84."

Now, Anlyan said, there seems to be a "pretty good state of balance" in the number of physicians in the state.

Wallace Hospitalized

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Alabama Gov. George Wallace, who scolded reporters this week for writing about his health, was admitted to a Birmingham hospital Saturday evening, marking his third hospital stay since February.

Wallace, 63, was admitted to University of Alabama Hospitals for tests, and was listed in satisfactory condition.

John Wright, a spokesman for the hospital, said Wallace was admitted on the advice of his doctor and an internist at the Birmingham hospital for "further tests relating to the governor's complaint about leg pains."

Doctors gave no estimate of how long the hospital stay might last, Wright said.

Wallace, paralyzed below the waist, has been admitted twice this year to Jackson Hospital in Montgomery — once for treatment of an inflamed colon and a second time after suffering a reaction to medicine he was taking.

tied in with a computer operation, he said, noting that the firm is in the process of installing a new system "which will enable us to better service our customers through operations analysis." He said the new installation will replace an older computer network.

"The building has been designed to accommodate both rail and truck shipments and there will be an inside rail dock for receiving," Ormond said.

Ormond said financing is being handled through Home Federal Savings and Loan Association and the general contractor will be J.H. Hudson Inc. of Greenville. Engineers for the project are Freund & Associates of Michigan, working in association with engineers from J.H. Hudson.

The firm was founded in 1932 by Ormond's father, who moved to Greenville from Kinston and opened Hooker and Ormond Wholesale Co., in partnership with Monk Hooker, at the corner of Dickinson Avenue and Clark Street. Ormond soon bought out his partner's interest and the firm became Ormond Wholesale.

The business later moved to a building on Dickinson Avenue at the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad intersection and it remained there until around 1947 when the present facility was opened. The firm expanded in 1959, 1963 and 1969.

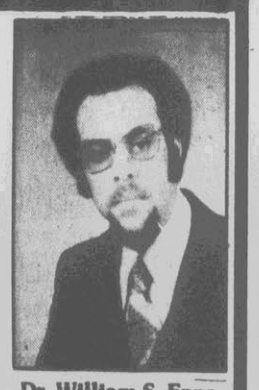

Lyman Ormond Jr., who worked at the business while he was growing up, became active full time in 1955. His father remained active in the business until 1968.

The business, which has approximately 75 employees, handles dry groceries, dairy products, frozen foods, produce, tobacco products and candies, and is making plans to handle fresh meats, according to Ormond.

The firm became affiliated with Foodland-Clover Farm International in 1963 and has 35 franchised accounts under the Foodland or Clover Farm names. It holds memberships in the National-American Wholesale Grocers Association and the N.C. Food Dealers Association, as well as the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce.

Graduation: This Is The Year To Be At ECU's

East Carolina University's commencement exercises this year may become the cultural event of the decade.

That's not necessarily because Chancellor Emeritus Leo Jenkins and distinguished graduate Robert W. Morgan will be honored as the recipients of the first honorary degrees to be given by the institution. It may not even be because Morgan, who went on to distinguished service in the N.C. Legislature, as state attorney general and then as U.S. senator, will be the principal speaker.

The clamor to be a part of this year's commencement exercise may well be brought on by the fact that for the first time this year attendance at the ceremonies will be "by invitation."

Through the years the ceremonies have been held outdoors in Ficklen stadium. With parents, grandparents, brothers, sisters and assorted uncles, aunts and cousins of the thousands of graduates attending, the crowds have run over 13,000.

This year the ceremonies have been moved indoors to Minges Coliseum, which seats only 6,900 — thus the need for invitations to assure that the closest relatives of the graduates have a chance to see them receive their degrees.

But think of it; when tickets to any event are hard to get it quickly becomes essential to be there. Imagine the demand for invitations. It could exceed the requests for tickets to the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament. Even though there will be no charge for the invitations, there might even be scalping and we could be reading in a few weeks that ECU commencement invitations are going for $25 each.

Commencements are normally staid and predictable. This year's ECU ceremony, however, promises to be a glittering social event that everyone just has to attend — something like a White House dinner. Those who aspire to be part of the scene must be there!

ECU Pirate Club Seeks To Support A Major Program

The ECU Pirate Club kicked off its Siege of '83 drive here last week with an armada of 14 Pirate ships.

The campaign is organized by divisions with captains for each "ship" which will solicit new memberships in that division.

The Priate Club, or Educational Foundation Inc., is the fund-raising organization which provides athletic scholarships at the university. ECU has made the move to NCAA Division I-A football. Coach Ed Emory is recruiting the athletes that are needed to compete in that division. A football schedule is being built that includes some of the nation's top collegiate football teams.

The program has moved in the direction that most East Carolina fans wanted to see it go. Now the broad base of fan support must be built if football at ECU is to remain competitive in the top division.

Inside Help

RALEIGH — In the debate over the separation of powers within state government, most of the attention has been focused on how the Legislature has usurped executive authority. Anyone who sat in the Appropriations Committee for General Government on March 8 saw how the flip side of that deal works. Having a legislator in an executive agency can save that agency when it comes time to fund it.

The committee was discussing the Local Government Advocacy Council, which has a $114,000 annual budget. The council employs a director, assistant director and secretary. The budget also covers four to six council meetings a year.

Fred Aiken, legislative analyst for the committee, suggested that this might be a good place to save some money. The committee is charged with cutting 3 percent out of its budget. Eliminating this council would save half the money it is required to take out of the bureaucracy known as the Governor's Office.

The council advocates the position of local government within the governor's office. It also assists local government in the search for grants, federal and state money.

Aiken reasoned that the council could be eliminated because 12 of its 19 members are there by reason of their affiliation with either the N.C. League of Municipalities or the N.C. Association of County Commissioners. This council, Aiken said, is basically duplicating the work of these two organizations.

It is not the purpose of this column to say whether or not the council does its job, whether or not the council is needed. But, in the debate that followed, it became evident that the council was safe — two of its members happened to be legislators who happened to be on that committee. There was no separation of power — no checks and balances — when it came for the Legislature to consider funding of the Local Government Advocacy Council.

Sen. Joe Johnson, D-Wake, saved the council. Johnson, who very effectively represents the interests of the 20,000 state employees who work in Raleigh, gets his hair up whenever jobs are in danger. It's his job to make sure that no state jobs are cut. If one goes, it's most likely one of his constituents out of work. He's so good at his job that a national organization of state government employees recognized him as one of their 10 favorite legislators a few years back.

Johnson took the floor to advocate for the advocacy council. In his 11 years in the Legislature, he said, he'd never been so impressed with the good work of the council. Cut this out, he said, and the little towns of North Carolina will be without the resources to pursue grant money. It'll all go to the Charlottes and Raleighs.

He was followed by Rep. Aaron Fussell, D-Wake, who said about the same thing for the benefit of House members. The committee didn't even bother to vote on whether they'd keep the council. They just moved on to another agency.

Sen. Dave Parnell, D-Robeson, said after the meeting, "I told Fred (Aiken) he ran into a buzz saw with the two members of the committee on the council and, I understand, two others as former members." Johnson had made some good arguments, Parnell said. But "even if he didn't make a good argument," Parnell said he doubted the committee would have cut out the council.

That's how the appropriations process works when a council can count on having a few of its members sitting in the Legislature.

Sunday Morning Notes

There was a time when business was virtually totally centered in the downtown area of Greenville and most other municipalities of the South. When major new stores came to the town they always looked for a downtown location.

Automobiles and suburbs changed all that. Where years ago only a few country stores existed on the outskirts of Greenville, now major shopping centers stand with acres of parking.

That, in turn, has brought about the demise of the parking meter in Greenville. For the most part the meters have been removed and they are being disposed of by the city.

It takes only a moderately long memory to recall when the devices were despised by motorists and almost universally loved by municipal governing bodies. The meters had to be used solely to regulate on-street parking by law, but everybody knew it took coins to operate them. The coins were collected by the city which kept the proceeds after the meters were paid for. A sharp parking-meter salesman could convince any councilman that the meters would pay for themselves with the company taking half and the city half until they were paid off.

Thus the meters sprouted, and so did the complaints. Some car owners made a practice of seeing how many parking meter violations tickets they could accumulate before a police officer came to see them. Meter maids were soon hired to ticket overtime parkers and there were frequent rushes by parkers to get back to the car before the fateful ticket was written.

Barry Sumrell of the Greenville Fire Department drew the side job of collecting from the meters. This was done with an armored push cart. The coins dropped through a shoot and into the locked safe.

Parking meter ordinances were tested many times with the courts finally holding that meters which took more than one coin were primarily for revenue. Thus only single coin meters were legal for regulating parking.

As the downtown traffic went, so did the parking meters. Somehow the revenues they brought in were absorbed in the city budget ... and there were few who were sorry to see the parking meter go.

Pressure

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan, who has had to compromise on several major issues lately, is being pushed to be more flexible in nuclear arms reduction talks with the Soviets.

The strongest and most vocal of the prodders are the Allies in Europe who are trying to stave off the start of deployment of U.S. Pershing II and cruise missiles by the end of the year.

One by one, the Western European leaders are urging Reagan to settle for less than his so-called "zero option," which calls for elimination of all intermediate range missiles in Europe. The Soviets already have some 300 missiles aimed at European capitals.

Last summer new Soviet President Yuri Andropov made proposals on reducing Soviet missiles and warheads if the United States would not deploy any of its missiles.

But the president has rejected those proposals as "one sided" and says that they would put the United States at a permanent disadvantage. Nor would the ceilings be verifiable under present circumstances, he insists.

Much as he would like to wait it out and to see whether the Soviets come up with a serious negotiating position, Reagan is beginning to feel the pressure, not only in the United States but abroad, to explore and propose a new position until the nirvana of no missile deployment can be reached.

The drive to seek an interim agreement is backed by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, and even British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has indicated more flexibility is needed to break the deadlock.

And in the United States the nuclear freeze movement is gaining momentum, which Reagan believes will give the Soviets the wrong signal.

He realizes that Americans and Europeans alike are growing impatient and need proof that there is a dedicated drive to end the mutual fears of a nuclear holocaust.

Kenneth Adelman, Reagan's nominee to head the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, is having his problems on Capitol Hill. His confirmation is in doubt in the Senate and it won't be voted on until after Easter. Several senators have questioned whether he is sufficiently devoted to the cause of disarmament.

Meanwhile, muddying the waters is a staff memo that nuclear arms negotiator Edward Rowny, a retired general, passed on to Adelman when he moved over to the agency. It suggests some members of the negotiating teams may be too "liberal" or want progress "at any price."

Rowny issued a statement saying the memo represented internal "talking points" and "do not represent my views then or now."

Nevertheless, the intra-agency squabbles between the hardliners and those who seek an accommodation and the seeming lack of solid direction has given the Reagan administration the image of not being in command.

The Soviets were rebuffed in the recent German elections when the electorate support Kohl, a conservative, but one of his first acts of business was to call for an interim pact.

Germans, who have lived on the edge of the precipice, and would be the first Western country hit if the Soviets move beyond their sphere in Europe, would like to see more signs that their fate is not being sealed with the protracted negotiations. And the rest of the world will rest easy when the two superpowers are ready to deal.

First Shots Fired

ATLANTA — On the morning after last week's "cattle show" of presidential hopefuls, the first shots were fired in a Southern counter-revolution against the tightening and potentially-fatal grasp by left-of-center special interest groups on the Democratic Party.

Southern Democratic state chairmen assembled for breakfast behind closed doors to hear from a special guest invited by Georgia chairman Bert Lance. He was a colleague of Lance's from the inner circle of Georgians who in 1976 guided Jimmy Carter to the presidency: Hamilton Jordan.

Using flip charts and pointer, Jordan told his story in blunt terms: No Democrat can be elected president without the South, but no Democrat can win the South if the special interest groups — labor, feminists, environmentalists, peace activists — force the dialogue left of the national consensus.

As of today, said Jordan, none of the six cattle show entrants who had appeared at the previous night's Georgia Jefferson-Jackson dinner could defeat a resurgent Ronald Reagan. To change that, he continued, it is necessary to shift the dialogue of the candidates toward the center. In effect, Lance and Jordan were calling for the establishment of a Southern political action committee to counteract all the other PACs representing Democratic constituency groups who have forced the candidates to the left.

There was full agreement from the Southern leaders, and therein lies both a threat and an opportunity for frontrunner Walter F. Mondale. His campaign has been based on capturing the Democratic special interest groups that Lance and Jordan see as guarantors of defeat. Yet, the Southern counterrevolution could give Mondale the opportunity to emancipate himself from their tight embrace that ultimately may suffocate him.

Until now, Mondale and his strategists have welcomed the ambitious efforts by their old Carter administration pals, Lance and Jordan, to mobilize the South. With the burden of racist politics lifted and black voting percentages higher than elsewhere, had not the South at long last moved into "the mainstream"? Mondale's "Southern strategy" is to campaign here vigorously but not much differently from elsewhere. Typically, his first visit upon arriving in Atlanta last week was with the local black caucus.

Lance and Jordan more precisely put the South in the mainstream of the nation, but not of the Democratic Party. While the party has moved left of center, they say, the nation has moved right of center — where the South is today. Thus Jordan's injunction: To win the South.

Word Of Caution May Be In Order

WASHINGTON — Somewhat in the fashion of Random House or Little, Brown, the Department of Defense last week held a press conference to introduce a new book. In his role as publisher, Secretary Caspar Weinberger stood at a lectern and touted the work; one of the anonymous authors fielded the reviewers' questions. Only the shrimp and sherry were missing.

The book is "Soviet Military Power" (Government Printing Office, 2nd edition, 107 pages, $6.50). Sad to say, the first reviews were disappointing. The morning Post played the story on Page 14, and the newspaper's top military analysts gave it the old ho-hum and pooh-pooh. They thought the authors had portrayed Soviet weaponry "in largely breathless and uncritical terms." At times, they sniffed, the booklet "reads like a manufacturer's brochure."

For those of us who are not military experts, the new publication makes a more sobering impact. The Pentagon's purpose was to ring an alarm bell, and the data presented in this booklet have precisely that effect. Assuming the accuracy of the figures, we have to believe that Soviet leaders have been engaged in a massive, sacrificial, escalating buildup of armaments all across the board

A word of caution — not of skepticism, but of caution — is in order. In most fields of public interest, it is possible for critics to check sources and to make independent judgments on the validity of an author's conclusions. No such thing is possible here. The data on the Soviets' production of arms presumably were compiled from reports of the National Security Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the Central Intelligence Agency and others. The authoritative Federal Staff Directory lists almost 50 agencies, bureaus and offices concerned with military intelligence. We assume, without personal knowledge, that the incredible satellites we read about truly can photograph the shoulder patches on a Russian uniform from a hundred miles up in space. There is no way in which a layman can challenge such a statement as, "Since 1981 the Soviets have produced 4,500 tanks." The figures have to be accepted on faith.

With that caveat on the record, let it be said that the figures are profoundly disturbing. The Soviets are continuing to produce and to deploy ever more menacing nuclear weapons. Their nuclear forces "practice almost constantly, emphasizing command and control under various conditions." Older intercontinental missiles steadily are being replaced by more lethal ones.

The same ominous dedication is seen in the Soviet Union's modernization of conventional forces. Soviet air defenses are now "the most massive in the world." A new version of the "Foxbat" interceptor should enter service soon. Improvements continue in their program for surface-to-air missiles. The Soviet tank identified as the T-80, with enhanced firepower and survivability, is in production, and "at least several hundred" of these tanks have been deployed in Eastern Europe.

The astonishing expansion of the Soviet navy goes on apace. More than 30 ballistic missile submarines and more than 90 attack submarines now patrol the Pacific. The booklet contains photographs of the Soviet aircraft carrier Minsk; it is not as powerful a fighting machine as our Nimitz-class carriers, but it is impressive all the same.

Weinberger sums up the situation with a reassuring note. While the Soviets' buildup "cannot be wished away or ignored," there is no requirement that the United States "match the Soviets unit for unit, weapons systems for weapons systems." What is required, he says, "is a nuclear and conventional posture that makes any Soviet military operation too uncertain of outcome and too high of cost to be pursued. That posture is in part military sinew and in part national resolve."

The last sentence, it seems to me, says it all. Our own forces, combined with those of our allies, assuredly are not puny, but if the Western world is not to be intimidated, blackmailed or bullied by the Soviet Union, we cannot afford another decade of neglect — and we cannot permit a perception to develop of any weakness in the national will. Toward that end, the new booklet makes a persuasive case.

To the editor:

Howard Moye and the other members of the United Tobacco Growers Association know precisely what they are doing.

The United Tobacco Growers Association from its beginning has favored tobacco program reforms. The needed reforms are simple: (1) All program participants must share in the risk of tobacco production and profit only from production. (2) U.S. tobacco must be merchandised so as to avoid painful quota cuts and high rents that now DO bankrupt family tobacco farms.

The mean-spirited and irresponsible leadership of the N.C. Farm Bureau opposes ANY reform. The NCFB represents the presently affluent non-producing quota owners who now extortionately confiscate more than 100 percent of the profit of tobacco farming. The political tragedy is that they may outnumber growers 10 to 1. Unfortunately, any reformed future program that will benefit present quota owners and farmers can only occur with NCFB's support. Therefore, the United Tobacco Growers Association is deliberately proceeding with the second option which will benefit tobacco growers. The Tobacco Deregulation Act of 1983 now has 36 sponsors in the U.S. House. During the week of March 20, the same bill will be introduced in the U.S. Senate with the strongest bipartisan support.

Economic analysis indicates that free market will benefit U.S. tobacco growers and the economies of production areas. Any doomsday rhetoric is completely unfounded and indicative of the economic ignorance of its purveyor. The UTGA feels its approach to the problem is appropriately cogent. Quota owners who may be concerned had best communicate to NCFB's leadership new instructions before the tobacco deregulation bill passes the 98th Congress.

To the editor:

March has been proclaimed by Greenville's Mayor Cox as National Nutrition Month and it is being celebrated across the country. Awareness of food habits and food intake is the purpose of the celebration.

As dieticians, we are concerned with the variety of nutrition information that is available. It is difficult for individuals to discern between facts and fallacies. Though basic to our needs, nutrition is a complex science requiring in-depth study to understand.

Many claim to be experts, labeling themselves "nutritionist" without background beyond self-instruction. Unfortunately, college degrees can be obtained relatively easily thorughout the country, resulting in misrepresentation and misguidance. When seeking nutritional advice, diet counseling, etc., individuals can feel confident that information they receive is the most accurate available if they obtain counseling from qualified dieticians. A Registered Dietician has met specific standards concerning education and work experience, as well as passing a national examination. Many hold advanced degrees. Thus, an "R.D." behind someone's name is a guarantee of trained professional help. We encourage people with nutritional problems to look for that qualifying symbol.

Many qualified dieticians and Registered Dieticians are available in the community. Local hospitals, public health departments, East Carolina University and government agencies have qualified dieticians available to assist with nutritional needs. We hope people will choose their resources carefully and look for a qualified R.D. when seeking nutritional help.

To the editor:

How can we hate evil and love God? We'll not do it through COWARDICE. It takes a brave man to say "No" to temptation. Nor will we do it through CONFORMITY. Evil never beomes good, even if the whole world says it's good. We can't hate evil and love good through COMPROMISE with evil. A Christian never lowers his standards of conduct, no matter what inducements are suffered. Nor will CONSENT BY SILENCE do it. Turning your back on sin never drives it away.

We can change the evil in our lives to good through CONVERSION. Repentnce and Christ's forgiveness work this miracle. We can keep up the change through CONCENTRATION. Practice makes perfect in living good by heeding the dictates of CONSCIENCE, guided by the indwelling SPIRIT. And we can grow in grace by following Christ's TEACHINGS and EXAMPLES.

To the editor:

This week (April 21-25) has been set aside for the purpose of recognizing the educators who directly influence the lives of our young people. They are on the "front lines" daily, attempting to teach, motivate, inspire and challenge our young people to do their very best.

The majority of our teachers continue to dedicate their lives to the teaching of our future leaders. Let's all take a few minutes this week to let a teacher know that he or she is appreciated.

Reagan Is Trying To Buy Time

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, facing continuing battles on a broad range of defense and national security issues, is being advised by aides and members of Congress to step up his pro-defense campaign.

As a result, the president is contemplating a nationally televised speech from the Oval Office on the defense budget, or, possibly, a major defense policy speech to the Foreign Affairs Council when he visits Los Angeles later this month.

The president is trying to buy some time on Capitol Hill, and got a reluctant Senate Republican majority to accede to his request that they delay a Senate Budget Committee vote on his defense spending plan until April 6.

Noting the delay, Democrat Lawton Chiles of Florida commented:

"I am concerned the president is going to the country to seek support for his budget."

And that is exactly what the president's advisers have in mind.

One senior White House official acknowledged that "the sentiment is strong" in favor of a freeze on the development and,eployment of nuclear weapons. So, the sentiment is also strong in the White House that the president needs to build a public case for his positions, not only on nuclear weapons, but for defense spending in general and for funding for El Salvador in particular.

"We recognize (the need for) a selling job," said Larry Speakes, the chief deputy White House press secretary. "It's something we have to go to the public on, which the president intends to do."

Reagan is asking for $238.6 billion in defense spending for fiscal 1984, an increase of 10 percent beyond inflation. There is pressure in Congress to limit the increase to 5 percent to 6 percent beyond inflation.

The president has already taken steps to drum up public support for his budget. He used a Saturday radio address to the nation to talk about defense issues and has urged members of Congress to speak out in support of his spending plan.

In a carefully orchestrated program, the administration released a booklet on Soviet military strength, printed on glossy paper with multicolored charts, photographs and drawings. It broadcast to Europe, via satellite, a news conference by Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger to draw attention to the publication.

"I think you'll see a steady effort over the next couple of weeks in the Defense Department, the White House, and elsewhere in government to persuade people" to support the president's military plans, said David R. Gergen, the president's assistant for communications.

At the same time, White House officials were quietly hinting that the president may modify his medium-range nuclear weapons reduction proposal presented to the Soviet Union at negotiations in Geneva.

Reagan has proposed that the Soviets dismantle their more than 600 medium-range nuclear missiles aimed at Europe. In exchange the United States would forgo deployment of 572 Pershing 2 and cruise missiles.

Any change in the Reagan "zero option" plan would reflect pressure building on the president from Europe. The leaders of West Germany and Italy have suggested that he put forward an interim arms reduction plan.

Such a plan might allow some Soviet missiles to remain targeted at Europe while the United States installs some new missiles.

One official, making anonymity a condition for his remarks, acknowledged the political benefit of such a move, both in the United States and in Europe. "That will help," he said.

Strategy May Work

WASHINGTON — The Nuclear weapons Freeze Campaign must be kidding.

Not only do its leaders want Congress to pass their controversial resolution but, contingent on mutual Soviet restraint, they also want it to eliminate funds for nuclear systems testing.

Yet organizers are betting that a two-pronged strategy can help to keep public pressure for arms control on the Reagan administration. And it might work.

Meanwhile, the freeze movement's new campaign against nuclear warhead and flight testing won't easily find public complaints have centered more on such specific weapons systems as the MX and B-1 bomber than standardized Pentagon procedures.

In Congress, many who've lent support for the nonbinding freeze will probably balk at proposals to axe money for testing. Until now, freeze advocates have carefully avoided using the budget process to advance their cause. Even with assurances that a testing halt would be mutual and verifiable, lawmakers will be reluctant to participate in what amounts to legislating arms control.

The new campaign's biggest obstacle will be Ronald Reagan himself. Last week, while speaking to evangelicals in Florida, the president launched another counterassault on his nuclear critics, calling their goals fraudulent. With similar fanfare in Washington, he re-released a 1981 Pentagon report, Soviet Military Power, with minor revisions.

But considering the well-dressed, generally middleaged activists gathered in Capitol Hill church halls and hearing rooms last week (there were 5,000 from 43 states), Reagan may not hold all the cards. Those activists, at least, intend to lobby every lawmaker on weapons votes between now and 1984. If the next election brings a more sympathetic White House and Congress, they wager, an interim halt on production and deployment is possible by 1985.

Signals of an economic upswing, ironically, should also work to the movement's advantage. Despite evidence linking soaring defense spending to unemployment, better times will make nuclear arms all the more topical. As Randy Kehler, national freeze coordinator, told our reporter, Michael Duffy, "We've had trouble hooking the freeze to economic issues, anyway. Basically, people are just afraid of the bombs."

Moreover, if votes on anti-testing amendments can become the standard for genuine arms control support in Congress, they may help to keep the freeze issue alive as well. Whether or not the amendments fail, Ronald Reagan and his Geneva negotiators would have to stay on their toes, particularly as 1984 nears.

George Gallup

Poll

The American public is often skeptical about the existence or extent of "national crises." But they believe there truly is a crisis facing the Social Security System and they are willing to coneider changes in the system, if necessary, to stave off its collapse.

In contrast, for nearly a decade the polls showed that Americans simply did not believe in the energy crisis and, as such, they rejected most proposals to deal with it. Recent polling finds that Americans have no such doubts about the possibility of an insolvent Social Security System.

A 1982 Gallup survey for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce indicated that fully 63 percent of employed Americans were afraid they might not receive benefits at all when they reached retirement age, while another 16 percent believed benefits might not be as good as they are now.

Other polls have shown as much, if not more, public doubt about the viability of the Social Security System. A January 1983 CBS/New York Times poll found that only 27 percent of the public believe the Social Security System will have money available for the benefits they expect upon retirement.

The polls have been less clear about what changes the public is willing to accept to save the eystem, but a willingness to accept some change is indicated. Here is what recent surveys have shown:

DELAYS IN RETIREMENT AGE — When the Gallup Poll and the NBC/Associated Press Poll asked their respondents if moving back the age for retirement was acceptable, large majorities said no. However, when the propostion was to increase benefits for those who delay their retirement (ABC/Washington Post) or reduce benefits for those who retire early (NBC/Associated Press), solid majority responded postiviely. In effect, the public favors both negative and positive incentives for later retirement, but resists any proposals for doing away with retirement at age 65 for those who want it.

THE INCLUSION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES — All the polls have shown large majorities in favor of bringing federal employees into the Social Security System.

DELAYS IN COST OF LIVING INCREASES — The public tends to be more or less evenly divided on delays in cost of living increases, but slight majorities favored this principle in the CBS/New York Times and ABC/Washington Post polls. Similarly, the Gallup Poll found a slight plurality favor tieing future Social Security benefits increases to wages rather than prices.

TAX INCREASES — The greatest differences between the polls has been on the issue of further increases in Social Security premiums. As a general rule, polls showed the public will accept higher Social Security taxes, if it a choice among tax increases, cutbacks in benefits or seeing the system collapse entirely.

Gallup found only 34 percent approved of increased employee and employer payments as a means of making the system pay for itself," but Harris found 55 percent approve and 42 percent disapprove of a rise in Social Security taxes "to keep benefits as they are now."

Opponents Work Together

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — One of the Legislature's greatest ironies this session is that most of the major legal reforms are being spearheaded by three men who expect to be at each other's throats by fall.

Sen. Henson Barnes, Rep. Parks Helms and Rep. Paul Pulley have shown a remarkable willingness to work together on bills this session despite the fact all are considered likely to seek the Democratic nomination for attorney general.

For example, Barnes and Pulley are co-sponsoring bills changing evidence laws and setting up a comparative fault system in damage cases. Meanwhile, Helms (who co-sponsored a 1981 comparative fault bill with Pulley) is counting on Barnes to handle most of the bills from his Courts Commission.

"They have fought some good battles, and now that they find they'll be on the opposing sides, that doesn't cause them to lose respect," Barnes said of the group. "But do not let that blind anyone to the fact that when the bell rings and the campaign begins, it won't be tooth and toenail."

The current congeniality also extends to two other potential candidates, District Attorney Wade Barber Jr. from Pittsboro and Raleigh attorney-lobbyist Howard Kramer, who both often appear at various judiciary committees attended by the Legislators.

Helms, D-Mecklenburg, said he can't remember such friendliness in other races. Probably the best example of sour relations was in 1979, when the feud between then-House Speaker Carl Stewart and Lt. Gov. James Green flared to the point that the two leaders didn't even follow tradition by gaveling out the session simultaneously. Green narrowly defeated Stewart in seeking re-election in 1980.

The chambers always contain plenty of people who are testing the waters for other jobs. Besides the attorney general candidates, others thinking of higher office are Sens. Richard Barnes, D-Forsyth, and A.D. Guy, D-Onslow, for Insurance Commissioner; Sens. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, and Robert Jordan, D-Montgomery, for lieutenant governor; and, of course, Green for governor.

The potential candidacies also fuel much legislative joshing. Whenever Helms gets up to speak, Pulley's seatmates nudge him to stand up and even the count. And when Insurance Commissioner John Ingram spoke to a legislative committee recently, one member said he thought "Commissioner Guy" might have a question.'

Pulley, from Durham, was asked about the effect of having so many candidates in such close quarters.

"I was a little uneasy about it at first, but I've been pleased with the quality of the people involved," he said. "For example, Parks has come to me and asked me to help him in a thing or two.... Wade has generally been friendlier to me than ever before."

No Average Person To Count

NEW YORK (AP) — Because of all the to-do about oil prices and interest rates and big federal deficits there probably is a tendency of late to forget about you.

How are you doing?

The statistics, which allegedly compress your condition into a digital readout, are mixed. Unemployment remains high, but per-capita disposable income is at record high levels and consumer debt is relatively low.

But do statistics really tell your story — or merely the general story?

Even economists — or perhaps it should be said, especially economists — will tell you there's a big danger in statistical measures and an even bigger one in using statistical measures as if they were thermometers or barometers.

The unemployment rate, for example, is a national figure, an average of sorts. You, however, are an individual worker plying a specific skill in a single area of the country. There is no average person, job or locality.

The jobless rate also is processed. Officially, unemployment in February remained at 10.4 percent of the civilian population, with 11,446,000 people out of work. But that figure was lowered by the technique of seasonal adjustment.

You can seasonally adjust numbers and make them look better or worse on paper, but in doing so you do not create one job or relieve one bit the financial anquish of one family or any one member of it.

Seasonal adjustment as it applies to jobs is an economic measuring and forecasting tool, rather than a statement of conditions. Seasonally adjusted, there were 11.45 million unemployed in February. But the unadjusted, raw count was 12.4 million people.

You can't really blame the economists for this sort of thing. It was never the intention of anyone to have these figures broadcast hither and yon as if they were the hard, factual, chiseled-in-granite truth.

Seasonally adjusted figures are meant not to measure your condition so much as to give a rough indication of where the general economy is headed.

If, for instance, an increase or decrease in any statistic is simply because of temporary or seasonal factors, such as Christmas hiring, the economists try to eliminate it, the better to spot the basic, long-term trend.

They aren't talking about your specific condition in your limited job and geographical area, but instead about averages and general conditions. Their digits are economic tools, not measures of individual conditions.

Consider those statistics that show consumer purchasing power is at an all-time high. They don't mean the financial condition of all segments of the population are better off than they were a year or so ago. Not at all.

Those who turn consumer conditions and behavior into statistical tools are well aware of this, and some wisely observe that consumer buying power statistics say nothing of the distribution of that power.

Looking behind the buying power figures you may find a less healthy depiction of the economy. Some economists say the huge middle income group — and lower income group too — remains in recession and the national figures are skewed by prosperity in the much smaller upper income categories.

Says Albert Sindlinger, a pioneer in consumer measurments: "Most of the recent 'strength' in housing and autos has been dominated by stockholders, the only people with enough money to spend as well as invest in the market."

How are you, the individual, doing?

It's hard to say without knowing the numbers. And only you can produce them, which is to say, only you can really measure how well you're doing — no matter what the official statistics say.

EPA To Start Buy-Out Soon

EUREKA, Mo. (AP) — Property owners in dioxin-contaminated Times Beach were told Saturday that the federal government hopes to begin buying their homes and businesses by mid-summer.

"We are here to show the federal government is committed to getting this job done," Patrick Breheny, the regional director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, told about 400 Times Beach residents at Eureka Junior High School.

Under the government's plan, property owners are to be paid the fair market prices their homes and businesses would have commanded before the dioxin contamination was discovered and before the town was inundated by flood waters in December.

Breheny defined the fair market price as "what a buyer and seller are willing to agree on." He refused to specify further, saying legal concerns could arise if he did so.

Families also can qualify for up to $15,000 in relocation assistance, Breheny said.

Many residents came to the meeting expecting the terms of the purchases to be spelled out in greater detail and came away disappointed.

Paul Vermette, a Times Beach resident, called the meeting "inconclusive."

Purchase offers will be based on estimates made by independent appraisers and residents can hire their own appraisers and meet with the government to discuss any differences on prices, Breheny said.

Vermette said he would be willing to sell his house to the federal government at a fair price. "I hope they get started July 1 and they get to me on July 2," he said.

About 2,400 people lived in the village southwest of St. Louis until early December, when the Meramec River flooded. As the waters receded, the National Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta recommended that residents remain out of town because dioxin was discovered at levels dangerous levels.

The town was polluted in the early 1970s when waste oil hauler Russell Bliss sprayed dioxin-contaminated oil on most of the unpaved streets to control dust.

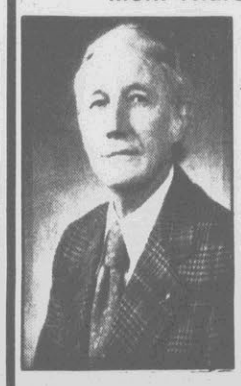

Times Beach resident Willow Johnson said she will not leave her home despite the offer.

"There are lots of houses, but we have a special feeling for this one," Mrs. Johnson said. "We're staying because this is our home — don't people understand that?"

Civil Rights Panel May Issue Subpoenas For Federal Data

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The U.S. Civil Rights Commission is considering issuing subpoenas against some federal agencies to obtain information it needs, the chairman of the panel said Saturday.

A letter from the six-member panel complaining about lack of compliance with requests for the information was sent to the White House last week, said Clarence M. Pendleton Jr., chairman of the commission.

The information sought by the commission "is mostly personnel material" that will permit the panel to determine the ratio of minorities employed by the federal government, Pendleton said. He said the investigation "includes political appointees ... and the Congress."

"For some time, we have been attempting to get not onlv White House documents, but documents from other federal agencies to be used in the course of our statutory responsibility to monitor the civil rights domain," Pendleton said in a telephone interview from his home here.

"Many of the commissioners felt that the information was not forthcoming" and that the panel should use its subpoena power to get it, Pendleton said, adding that that decision was reached at a commission meeting in Williamsburg, Va., last month.

Although the White House initially was considered a target for a subpoena, Pendleton said the Reagan administration "has agreed to release the information that we requested and a subpoena may not be necessary."

However, he said the commission will issue subpoenas if it does not receive the information it wants by April 25.

"I don't think the intent was to not give us the information," he added. "I think it was a matter of it being delayed ... Some of the materials are very late in coming in."

The commission monitors the enforcement of civil rights laws within the federal government.

"We have no statutory responsibility to accuse or point fingers or to do anything about it" if the commission finds problems, Pendleton said. "We could just try to make the public aware."

Pendleton stressed during the interview that the commission "isn't going out and trying to find discrimination. We are just monitoring the situation."

Cave-In Buries Man For 20 Minutes

ROCKY HILL, Conn. (AP) — A 41-year-old man was buried for 20 minutes Saturday when a rain-soaked, 8-foot-deep pit he was digging near his father's home caved in.

"I was gone. I ran out of air completely and I guess I passed out," Joseph Gineo Jr. said after being rescued.

Gineo was covered two feet over his head, said his father, Joseph Gineo Sr., 64, who also got stuck up to his hips in the cave-in. The two men began digging the pit last week to find the source of water leaking into the house and decided to finish the job Saturday.

"I got myself out and started shoveling and screaming for help," the senior Gineo said.

The younger Gineo's sister, Anne Brice, was the first to arrive on the scene, followed by neighbors Charles Struthers and John DelMastro.

"I jumped in and started digging for him," Mrs. Brice said. "It was kind of odd, a lady in a dress digging, but he's my brother."

The elder Gineo said a young son of Mrs. Brice called police, but in the commotion gave only his uncle's name before hanging up. He then ran to a neighbor's home for help.

"My uncle's buried," DelMastro said the boy screamed.

"I just ran over there with a shovel," DelMastro said. "This Struthers got there probably a minute before me. He was in the hole digging and I just jumped in."

Police arrived after "hearing the name over the phone. They know me down there and they called back here to find out what happened," the elder Gineo said.

Mrs. Brice said it "took us 15 to 20 minutes before we got part of his body and that was his shoulder. He was the color of my (blue) sweater I got on."

Two feet below ground, the younger Gineo said he was thinking of his father.

Carter: U.S. Needs Forceful Approach

MARRAKESH, Morocco (UPI) — Forbmer President Carter said Saturday the United States must be forceful in pursuading Israel to withdraw from Lebanon and halt settlement of the occupied West Bank.

Carter, who arrived in Morocco Friday from Lebanon on the last leg of a Middle East tour, spent the day strolling through the vast markets of the walled city of Marrakesh. He was scheduled to meet King Hassan II Sunday in Fez before leaving for the United States.

Carter said that during his Middle East tour, his impressions "ranged from satisfaction in Egypt where I found a strong desire to pursue the peace process, to deep concern in Israel over the government's insistence in settling Israelis in the West Bank."

The former president repeated earlier appeals for the United States to stand firm in persuading Israel to withdraw its forces from Lebanon and end its policy of expanding settlements in the territory occupied in the 1967 Middle East war.

"It's crucial that we don't back down as a nation," he said. "I think any show of wavering or hesitation on our part would be counter-productive.

"People are depending on us to be strong, forceful participants in the peace process — especially as regards the West Bank, Gaza and Lebanon."

While visiting the Marrakesh bazaar, Carter stopped to talk to several Moroccan craftsmen demonstrating their skills and offering their work for sale.

The former president seemed particularly captivated by the work of elderly Moroccan artisan Mohammed Ben Hassan who promptly presented him with his wood lathe — which is operated holding a knife with one's toes against the spinning wood.

"I studied your technique very closely," said Carter, himself an avid woodworker. "But I'm not sure I have enough toes to use this."

Ben Hassan said he had used the lathe for six years and would need four days to build a new one.

"He liked it, so I gave it to him," the craftsman said. "He can make better things with it than he can with his machine at home."

While in Lebanon, Carter met with Lebanese President Amin Gemayel and visited U.S. troops serving in the multinational peace-keeping force. His Middle East itinerary also included Jordan and Syria.

Reagan Flails Democrats' Spending Plan

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, keeping up a drumbeat of criticism against the Democrats' budget plan, said Saturday their spending proposal could bankrupt Medicare and "seriously undermine" his efforts to rebuild the nation's military power.

"To put it bluntly, their budget gambles with our security and our safety," he said.

"I don't want America's recovery and security to be sacrificed on an altar of discredited hand-me-down theories," the president said in a reference to the Democrats' plan to boost domestic spending while trimming by half the increase in military spending that he seeks.

With the House expected to debate on Wednesday its budget committee's recommendation of an $863.5 billion budget for fiscal 1984, the president is expected to use every opportunity available to speak out against the plan and draw public support for his own proposal to spend $848.5 billion.

He has invited two groups of Republican members of Congress to the White House on Monday afternoon, for a pep talk to keep the reduced ranks of Republicans behind his program.

In addition, Larry Speakes, the chief deputy White House press secretary, said that a major speech on defense issues, intended to boost public support for the president's efforts to increase Pentagon spending, remained under "active" consideration.

Speakes said that a final decision on such a speech has not been made, and characterized the president's efforts in opposition to the Democrats' plan as an attempt to "wipe 'em out on the budget."

In his weekly radio address, the president said the "House liberals are pushing a budget — the so-called liberal Democratic budget — that if implemented, would reverse the progress we've made and wreck our program to rebuild the economy."

"To cite just one example, Medicare would be driven into bankruptcy by the failure of their budget to address its problems," he said.

Delivering the speech from Camp David, Md., where he was spending the weekend, Reagan offered what he said were examples of the potential impact of the Democrats' plan to shave the increase in military spending to 4 percent after inflation, rather than the 10 percent he has sought.

"Passage of the liberal budget would seriously undermine our rebuilding progress," he said.

He said that if the Democrats "have their way," it would require disbanding entire divisions, decommissioning an aircraft carrier battle group, disbanding three Marine Corps fighter squadrons or Air Force fighter groups or even cutting back on troop training.

"Such cuts would send the worst possible signal to the Kremlin," the president said.

The president's statements echoed the stance he took Friday when he made a hastily announced visit to the White House press briefing room to denounce the Democrats' alternatives.

The Democratic plan would restore many of Reagan's domestic budget cuts, such as in food stamps and legal services for the poor, and would provide a 4 percent salary increase for members of the military service and federal workers, as opposed to the year-long pay freeze proposed by the administration.

It also foresees $30 billion in new revenue — a figure that likely would be achieved by repealing the 10 percent tax cut and tax indexing. The 1983 cut would take effect, for most, in withholding reductions effective July 1.

"They would pretend to reduce the federal deficit, but by putting you deeper in the hole," the president said.

Reagan said the nation's economic recovery — "stronger than most people, including ourselves, predicted" — could be halted "if big spenders in Congress have their way."

The Democratic budget plan was approved Thursday on a straight-line party vote in the House Budget Committee.

With a gain of 26 seats in last year's elections, House Democrats feel the odds have improved for beating Reagan when debate begins Wednesday on the House floor. The question is whether they will remain unified behind House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass.

Budget Director David Stockman has predicted that enough Democrats will jump ship and join Republicans to send the plan back to the budget panel for a complete overhaul.

Giving the Democratic response to Reagan's radio talk was Rep. Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri, who denied that the Democrats' proposed budget was simply a product of the party's liberal wing.

"You don't have to be a liberal to respond to clear human need," he said.

Gephardt said the Democratic budget's planned defense spending growth rate of 4 percent after inflation "will keep America strong without sapping our economic vitality."

By contrast, he said, the Reagan budget promises "big defense expenditures, enormous deficits and gigantic problems."

"The Democratic budget will provide both growth and fairness. After two years of wandering in the economic wilderness, few Americans could ask for anything more. And fewer still will settle for anything less," Gephardt said.

Never On Saturday

WASHINGTON (AP) — Never on Saturday, Ling-Ling and Hsing-Hsing seem to have decided.

The giant pandas at the National Zoo, who mated for the first time in eight years of trying Friday, were together most of the day but "showed no interest" in getting together again, said zoo spokesman Mike Morgan.

As a result, veterinarians Saturday evening artificially inseminated Ling-Ling using sperm from Chia-Chia, a panda in London who also failed to mate with Ling-Ling in the past.

Morgan said the 20-minute procedure "went well. No problems.

"She was returned to her den and is recovering from the anesthesia," Morgan said.

Female pandas go in heat only once, for about three days, during a year, and they are able to conceive only during a 12-to-36 hour period, Morgan said.

"The plan is to put them together tomorrow (Sunday) and see how they react, see if she's still in heat and hope for a natural breeding," Morgan said.

If Ling-Ling and Hsing-Hsing do not mate again, Morgan said veterinarians will repeat the artificial insemination Sunday.

If she does become pregnant, a baby would be born sometime from the middle of July to the beginning of September.

It would be the first panda born in captivity in the United States, although several have been born in other countries.

Should a baby panda be born, Morgan said tissue examinations could be made to determine whether Hsing-Hsing or Chia-Chia was the father.

Cliff Swallows Return To San Juan Capistrano

SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO, Calif. (AP) — Keeping alive a centuries-old tradition, tiny cliff swallows returned to the crumbling Mission San Juan Capistrano on Saturday and were greeted by a host of camera-toting tourists.

Shouts of "There they are!" saluted the first half-dozen arrivals as the ancient mission bells, rung by 87-year-old Paul Arbiso, pealed a welcome.

"I've been dreaming to come here for many, many years," said Mariluz Buchanan of Sacramento, a native of Spain who joined the throngs welcoming the tiny fork-tailed birds home from Argentina. "I'd like to be here whether there's one swallow or 1,000 swallows. I just wanted to be here on this day."

Drawn by the highly publicized annual return of the birds on St. Joseph's Day, people came from as far away as Canada to see the homecoming.

"We were hoping that they'd come in swarms, but that's obviously not the case," said Dr. Howard Bowles of Winnipeg, Canada. He said he and his wife, Janet, came to Southern California for her birthday because "she always wanted to be here when they (the swallows) arrived."

In fact, according to the Rev. Paul Martin, pastor of the old mission's church, the number of swallows making their yearly migration from South America to the mission, founded in 1776, has declined.

"They are a shy bird," he said, noting that the human population has increased in the Orange County community about 55 miles southeast of Los Angeles.

Annual Spring Rites Flourish On Florida Coast

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — As surely as robins fly north each spring, hundreds of thousands of college students flock to Florida beaches this time of year to soak up the sun, get away from their studies and size up the opposite sex.

"It's absolutely wild. I love it," says 18-year-old Jeanne Matolyak, who huddled with five other young women beneath a palm tree for an ocean-front laser light show in Fort Lauderdale.

"It's like one big happy family of college people," said Miss Matolyak, a student from Miami University in Ohio.

In Daytona Beach, the Chamber of Commerce projects each student will spend $100 a day. This year, 300,000 are expected during the four-week period that culminates around Easter.

That's an increase of 50,000 from 1982, in part due to publication last year of "The Rites of Spring," a book by two Yale University seniors outlining places to spend break and giving high marks to Daytona Beach.

"They're breaking away from school for a while and they kind of go crazy," said Nancy Overfield, spokeswoman for the Daytona Beach chamber.

Fort Lauderdale expects about 250,000 students will hit the beach for a $125 million boost to the local economy by April 1.

Spring break also is a boon to breweries, which sponsor promotions such as beer-tasting contests and free phone calls home.

"Beer companies have just now come to realize 'how important spring break has really become as far as marketing their beers," said Anheuser-Busch spokeswoman Mary Keeble in Atlanta.

The students' itinerary is simple: "Get up, lay out in the sun, get done with that, go to the hotel, shower and eat and go out and party," explained Gail Reedy, 19, an Iowa student who traveled to Fort Lauderdale with nine other women.

Some fly to Florida, but cars, vans and buses seem to be the most common means of travel.

Alida Perkins, 21, a senior at Mankato State University in Minnesota, and a group of friends traveled 30 hours on two buses to get to Daytona Beach, which claims to be the "World's Most Famous Beach."

Why would students from Minnesota ride 30 hours to get here?

"If you drive 12 hours you only make it to Nebraska," Miss Perkins said.

Japan Expects Protest Of U.S. Sub

TOKYO (AP) — Police expect at least 10,000 demonstrators to turn out Monday to protest the return of the nuclear-powered U.S. aircraft carrier Enterprise for the first time since the Vietnam war.

The demonstrators clearly are out to mock hawkish Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, who has enraged the opposition by telling the United States that Japan will become an "unsinkable aircraft carrier."

On the last visit of the Enterprise, in 1968, 40,000 demonstrators clashed with police at the western port of Sasebo, leaving more than 500 people injured. Sasebo will play host to the ship again Monday.

The protesters contend the Enterprise carries nuclear weapons and its presence violates Japan's non-nuclear principles, which prohibit the introduction, manufacture or storage of such arms in Japanese territory.

The Japanese are particularly sensitive about nuclear arms because they are the only people ever to have suffered nuclear attack — the U.S. atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki at the end of World War II.

Two years ago, former U.S. Ambassador Edwin O. Reischauer said that U.S. ships had routinely carried nuclear payloads while making port calls and sailing in Japanese waters since the 1960s.

On Thursday, current U.S. Ambassador Mike Mansfield told Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe that the United States respects Japan's feelings about nuclear weapons and faithfully observes all treaties with Japan. He did not specifically say whether the Enterprise carries nuclear arms.

But the opposition and some others say the Enterprise visit represents a growing U.S. military presence in the Far East. They say Washington is trying to force Japan into playing by American strategic rules and shift its policy away from the pacifism of the post-World War II era.

"Behind the port call is U.S. military strategy to counter Soviet military strength," said the mass-circulation Asahi newspaper. "It reflects the Cabinet's efforts to bolster U.S.-Japan defense cooperation in disregard of popular feelings.

"There is a real danger this will result in increased international tensions and harm national interests," Asahi said.

U.S. officials insist that the Enterprise's four-day call at Sasebo has no purpose other than liberty for the crew after participation in the South Korea-U.S. joint maneuvers.

Japanese critics see it as a blatant show of strength aimed at antagonizing the Soviet Union while showing U.S. support for Nakasone, who took office last November.

They also see it as the latest in a series of moves to undercut Japan's postwar policy of limited defense. In recent months the government consented to deployment of U.S. fighters at a base in northern Japan, made an exception to its ban on arms exports by agreeing to supply the United States with military technology, and has given priority to defense spending.

Nakasone also has initiated a joint U.S.-Japan study on defense of Japan's sea lanes, and created an uproar in Parliament after stating in Washington last January that Japan would become an "unsinkable aircraft carrier."

The Japan Socialist Party and other opposition groups say Nakasone also has denigrated its pacifist constitution by saying that Japan, in a U.S.-Soviet war situation, would help block Soviet forces from passing through its strategic straits, and would escort U.S. ships carrying vital goods to Japan.

The participation of Japan-based U.S. forces and the Enterprise in South Korea "demonstrates the unity of U.S.-Japan-South Korean defense efforts," said defense commentator Haruo Fujii in the weekly Shukan Yomiuri.

The U.S.-South Korean war games, one of Asia's largest maneuvers ever, "drew a clear picture that the Japanese peninsula will be assigned the role of 'unsinkable aircraft carrier' in the event of a war in Korea," he said.

Soviets Show Dissatisfaction Over Afghanistan

MOSCOW (AP) — The government press said Saturday that Afghanistan's economy is improving but still in deep trouble, possibly indicating Kremlin frustration over the loss of troops and money in the battle against anti-communist rebels.

The accounts of a faltering economy suffering food and other shortages were a new angle in the more detailed reports of fighting in Afghanistan that have been appearing in the Soviet press this year.

In early February, Soviet dispatches said thousands of people had died in the 4-year-old guerrilla war in Afghanistan. Saturday's accounts also said "thousands of peaceful Afghan citizens" have been killed.

The official Tass news agency, reporting from Kabul, added that Afghan leaders had adopted "urgent measures" to restore the economy to 1978-79 levels and eliminate shortages.

The Tass account coincided with a report in the newspaper Sovietskaya Rossiya saying that rebel attacks had damaged factories and interrupted power supplies, causing losses of "billions of afghanis," the Afghan currency.

The newspaper said Moscow had given aid to Afghanistan, citing as examples the training of 70,000 Afghan "specialists" and Soviet construction of 1,000 miles of the total 1,600 miles of paved road in Afghanistan.

It also indicated some economic growth, saying agricultural production increased 12.7 percent in 1982.

But this was compared only with the last "pre-revolutionary year" — the year before the April 1978 revolution that brought the first Soviet-backed Afghan regime to power.

The Tass report showed the Afghan economy had suffered severe setbacks in the period since 1978.

It quoted Afghan President Babrak Karmal as giving "key economic sectors the task of reaching the production levels of 1978-79 within the next three years."

Speaking to party leaders in Kabul on Saturday, Karmal stressed "the need to increase sharply industrial and agricultural production and provide the population with uninterrupted supplies of food and other goods," Tass said.

It said the Afghan party leaders "adopted a detailed decision on urgent measures" to boost the economy.

"The decision says that in the field of industry, construction, transport and communications it is necessary to restore within the shortest time the economic facilities destroyed by counterrevolution and resume production at enterprises standing idle," Tass said.

Family Of Four 'Executed'

HARARE, Zimbabwe — The government charged Saturday that followers of opposition leader Joshua Nkomo taunted, tied up and then killed a white farmer, his wife and two granddaughters with single shots to the head "in classic terrorist execution style."

Nkomo, who fled to Britain a week ago charging Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's troops were out to kill him after liquidating hundreds of his followers, could not be reached for comment. Officials said he had checked out of his London hotel and that his whereabouts were not known.

Walesa Outlines Protest Strategy

VIENNA, Austria — Polish labor leader Lech Walesa, in an interview published Saturday, outlined a strategy of peaceful protests reminiscent of India's Mohandas K. Gandhi to wrest reforms from the Communist government in Poland.

"We have devised many efficient means of pressure, many of which haven't been tried out yet," the former chief of the Solidarity labor federation said in the interview published by the Vienna daily Die Presse.

One form of protest, he was quoted as saying, could be cancellation of television subscriptions. "That would be a big loss to the state treasury, and we could take more walks in the meantime," Walesa said.

Jobs Bring Long Lines

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Thousands of Pittsburgh's unemployed lined up for blocks in a cold, drizzling rain Saturday in hopes of snaring one of 170 temporary city clean-up jobs.

City officials opened the building's doors at 8:30 a.m., as police directed the crowds lining up outside. More than 100 city employees and volunteers checked the applications and unemployment cards at long tables in the building's lobby.

By the time the doors were closed at 4:30 p.m., city officials estimated that more than 3,000 people had turned in applications. Hundreds of others were turned away at the door for failing to meet the city residency requirement.

Police earlier estimated the crowd at 5,000.

Teen-Agers Held In Death

SAN DIEGO — Three teen-age girls are being held in the death of a paralyzed veteran whose body was found on a rain-swept hillside in the Cleveland National Forest, the San Diego County sheriff's office said Saturday.

The girls were booked in Juvenile Hall on suspicion of murder, kidnapping, armed robbery and vehicle theft, said sheriff's Sgt. John Reeve. They were not identified because of their ages, 14, 16 and 17.

The badly beaten body of Harry Richard Sherwood, 37, of Yuma, Ariz., who served in Vietnam and was paralyzed from the waist down, was found Friday on a hillside near Alpine.

Price Of Drug Tripled

LOS ANGELES — The manufacturer of Bendectin, a drug to combat morning sickness that has been linked to possible birth defects, has ordered a 300 percent price increase to cover legal costs connected with lawsuits.

Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, a subsidiary of the Dow Chemical Co., said it has boosted the wholesale cost of 90 tablets to $48.02, which raises the retail price for the same number of tablets to about $90.

The drug cost $15.86 wholesale for 90 tablets in December 1981. The price increase was ordered in two stages, the latest March 1.

David Frost Marries Again

LONDON — Television host David Frost married Lady Carina Fitzalan Howard, daughter of the Duke of Norfolk, at a London registrar's office Saturday and told a crowd of 500 well-wishers: "I am very happy."

It was the second marriage for Frost, 43, and the first for his 30-year-old bride.

Frost, who was divorced last June from actress Lynne Frederick, said: "We are going to have a brief honeymoon, but I will be back at work next week."

Pope Meets Factory Workers

TERMOLI, Italy — Pope John Paul II on Saturday toured factories and met workers on the feast day of their patron saint, putting on a protective face mask at one stop and getting an unusual reproduction of the "Pieta."

After an open-air Mass in this Adriatic coast town, 130 miles southwest of Rome, John Paul said in his homily that Jesus also was a laborer who learned carpentry from his father Joseph, the patron saint of workers.

Town Has Had 'Enough'

HOLDREGE, Neb. — The Holdrege City Council has had enough.

If four propane-fueled noisemakers don't work, the council has directed the Municipal Services Department to get rid of several thousand crows roosting in a town park "in a manner judged to be best."

Dick LeBeau, a Holdrege resident, said the town's south park was being destroyed by the thousands of birds roosting there. He said tree branches have been knocked down and bird droppings were becoming a problem.

Protest Fails To Stop Vessel

ALESUND, Norway (AP) — Two protesters were charged with "irresponsible speeding" in rubber boats during an unsuccessful attempt by environmentalists to block the departure of a Norwegian sealing ship.

Police in Alesund, a port on Norway's west coast, said they charged two members of Greenpeace with illegal and hazardous speeding in the harbor as the protesters tried to block the sealing ship Veslekeri from sailing Thursday.

Anti-Nuclear Group Blocks Train

FORT COLLINS, Colo. (AP) — About 25 nuclear freeze advocates gathered Saturday around a train they believed was carrying nuclear warheads, and eight protesters were arrested after they knelt in train's path, police said.

Earlier Saturday, in Denver, about 15 people protesting the train's movement through populated areas gathered around the Burlington Northern freight train as it stopped in a station to change engines and crews. Two people were arrested in Denver on obstruction charges, police said.

The protesters in Fort Collins were members of a group known as Poudre Nuclear Freeze and those in Denver were affiliated with the Catholic Worker, a group that gives aid to the poor.

Nuclear freeze advocates said the train moved through Colorado late Friday and Saturday carrying nuclear warheads bound for Washington state.

Mike Wenniger, media relations manager for the Burlington Northern Railroad in St. Paul, Minn., said the railroad has a contract with the U.S. Department of Energy to transport classified cargo from Amarillo, Texas, to a Trident nuclear submarine base in Bangor, Wash. He declined to say whether any such shipment was made Friday.

Ben McCarty, spokesman for the Department of Energy office in Albuquerque, N.M., said, "The cargo is classified and I cannot comment on it. I can say generally that these shipments carry nuclear weapons, nuclear weapons components or special nuclear materials."

He would not say how often the trips are made or comment on their routing — but he did say "that's our train."

In Fort Collins, police said the eight arrested, all of Fort Collins, were charged with obstructing government operations and obstructing a highway or other passageway.

In Denver, the two arrested were identified as Marshall Gourley and Bill Sulzman, of Denver. They were being held at the Denver City Jail for investigation of obstructing a passage, a misdemeanor, a sheriff's officer said.

Gourley is a priest and Sulzman is a member of the Catholic Worker, said Shirley Whiteside, a spokeswoman of the group.

Louise Bartel of La Junta and a dozen activists spotted the train Friday night as it arrived in La Junta. She said that two of the freight cars had armor plating, distinctive markings and turrets.

She and other nuclear freeze activists notified news media statewide about the train, which activists said left the Pantex Corp. plant outside Amarillo, Texas, shortly after 2 p.m. Friday. Pantex is the nation's sole producer of nuclear warheads.

Wenniger said the shipments being made for the Energy Department "are very heavily guarded" and said they are made irregularly along two possible routes.

"We have been moving these items that I spoke of for over 20 years without any accident that has impacted on the weapons or components or materials at all," McCarty said. "These trains are specially designed to protect the shipment in the event of an accident or in the event of a terrorist attack."

The train moves at 35 mph for added safety, McCarty said.

"There are armed couriers inside the train who have a specific mission of protecting the shipment," he said.

Paris Fashion Show Puts Emphasis On Fabrics

By SUZY PATTERSON
AP Fashion Writer

PARIS (AP) — Fabrics and more fabrics are the stars of the early ready-to-wear shows in Paris — taking place mainly under the fabric of huge tents in the courtyard of the Louvre museum.

More Japanese than ever are showing — 11 out of 70-odd shows — and their fascination for fabric is obvious.

This is a natural, since their expensive shows are mainly put on by the Japanese textile industry. So, as these designers drape and pile on layer after layer, one wonders if the clothes wear the woman rather than the other way around. In any case, you'd have to be courageous to wear these engulfing outfits.

Two outstanding exponents of this attitude are Rei Kawabuko at Comme des Garcons, and Yohji Yamamoto. They both went for draped, asymmetrical looks, outsized ponchos over skirts and pants. Needless to say, the look is long. To get the Kawabuko look, you can also make knots all over soft fabric dresses.

Black is predominant, in jerseys, velveteens, jacquard fabrics. Grey, white, and bright blue provide some relief, plus earth colors at Yamamoto.

To get the kind of look that the Japanese are pushing, you might need a storeful of drapery, and you have to know how to hang it. Big flounces down the front, odd panels here and there, and a generally confusing line will help you get the big chic that younger dressers seem crazy about these days.

Voluminous coats and kimono-looks crop up as well, over flowered pants at Yuki Torii. Sweaters should be huge, as at Hiroko Koshino — who showed very big and bold clothes, but often quite shapely with some waist emphasis, and handsome yoked collars.

What's happening to French fashion? Don't worry, it's still going strong, and the form-fitting look is not out forever.

There will, of course, be new attention to fabric and some more volume as skirt lengths drop for winter.

Question Of Americans In Indochina Still Open

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Despite some recent colorful dramatics and heady rhetoric, no hard new evidence has emerged to back claims that American prisoners of war are being held in Communist Indochina a decade after the last U.S. troops came home from the war.

James "Bo" Gritz, a Vietnam War veteran, has focused attention on the POW-MIA (Missing In Action) issue by staging secret operations into Laos, where he believes some Americans are still held captive.

Washington officials, although criticizing private forays like Gritz's, have shown they are willing to consider that there may still be Americans alive in Southeast Asia.

President Reagan said Jan. 28 that U.S. government intelligence agencies were "fully focused" on the problems of prisoners of war and MIAs and ready to take "decisive action on sighting reports that can be confirmed."

In 1976, a select committee of the U.S. House of Representatives concluded "there are no Americans still being held alive as prisoners in Indochina," although it speculated that a small number of deserters and civilians might have chosen to remain behind.

Reagan has declared April 9 national POW-MIA recognition day "as a symbol of our unswerving commitment to resolving the fate of all American servicemen still missing."

The Defense Department currently classifies only two servicemen as missing in action, while 2,450 have now been officially declared "BNRs" — killed but bodies not recovered. In addition, there are 22 American civilians listed as missing in action and 18 as BNR.

The Vietnamese have repeatedly denied that any Americans are being held in Vietnam, Cambodia or Laos. They say the last prisoners of war were sent home in 1973 after the Paris cease-fire accords were signed.

However, the U.S. government continues to receive what it calls "live sighting reports," generally from Indochinese refugees claiming to have seen or heard of Americans still alive. Between 300 and 400 reports are on file and while U.S. official sources are not willing to rule out that some Americans are being held captive, they describe the reports as "spotty stuff."

More than 1 million refugees have poured out of Indochina since the 1975 Communist victories, but none are known to have carried out convincing evidence such as photographs of or letters from missing Americans.

"We have a lot more information now (on alleged Americans in Indochina) to work with, but none of it correlates to specific unresolved cases," says Lt. Col. Paul Mather, who has served with the U.S. Military's Joint Casualty Resolution Center (JCRC) since it was established in 1973 to tackle the problem of America's war dead and missing.

Mather, who represents the resolution center in Thailand, says the only reports that did correlate were those received from various sources prior to the emergence from Vietnam of Robert Garwood in 1979. Garwood was captured by Communist forces in 1965 but stayed behind voluntarily after the 1973 prisoner release.

Some of the "live sighting" reports are years old before they reach U.S. officials.

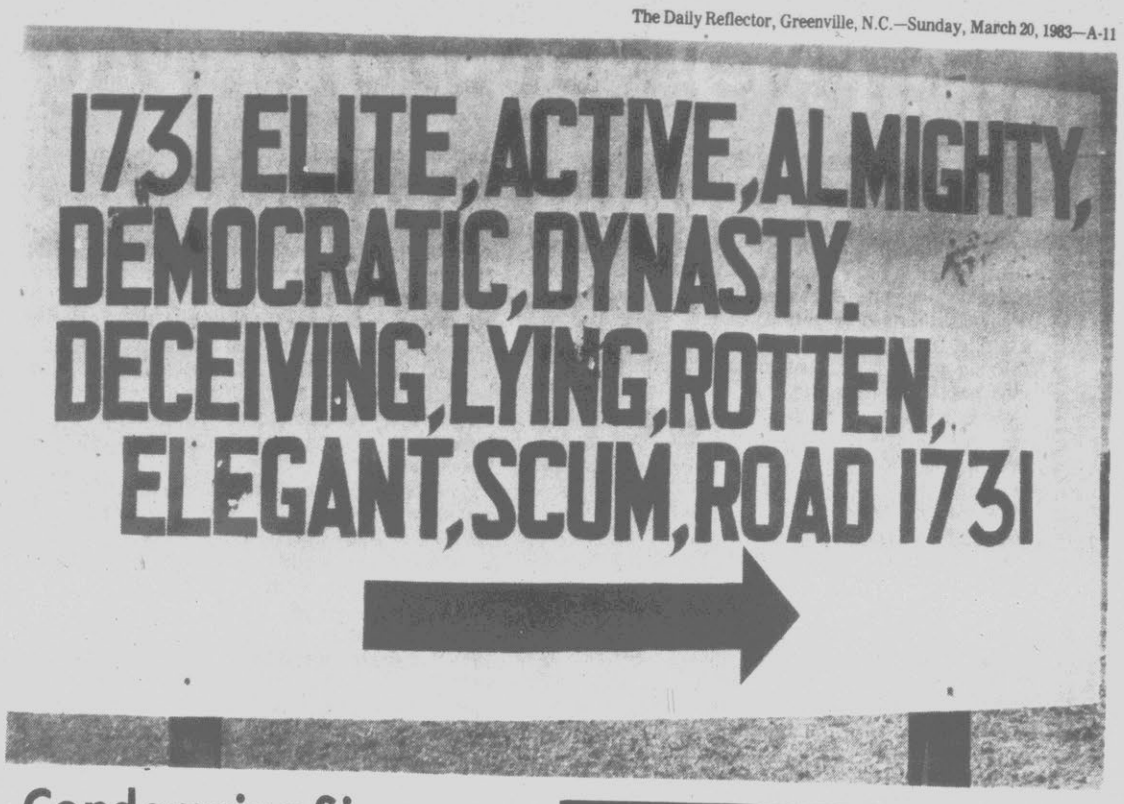

Gritz, a highly decorated ex-Green Beret, claimed last year that "several hundred" Americans were being held in a rugged strip along the Vietnamese-Laotian border. He led a fruitless raid into Laos last year and recently returned to the United States after pleading guilty in a Thai court to charges related to his missions. He was told to leave Thailand.

This year, Gritz revised his estimates of Americans alive in Laos to at least 10 and claims now to have photographs of some POWs.

Gritz and some others in the MIA-POW movement have charged that the U.S. government is not doing enough to provide a final accounting, and have launched private efforts to find information, remains of the dead or proof that all had not died.

One father had leaflets scattered along the Thai-Laotian border with a picture and information about his son lost in Laos during the war. A few families have been able to enter Indochina and talk with officials. Some so-called representatives of MIA families appear in Thailand from time to time with what most Indochina observers regards as highly dubious schemes and often patently false information.

Much of this activity has been focused on Laos since that country shares a long, penetrable border with Thailand — which Americans can enter easily. It is often a grisly business, with some Laotian anti-Communist resistance groups attempting to sell alleged American remains recovered inside Laos to any willing buyers.

Condemning Sign

This sign, located in the Eastern Pines section of Greenville, was erected by Reginald Garris of Greenville. Garris said he put the sign up because he felt that too much of Highway 1731 was built on his property. This sign is located on one of Garris' fields and there is another one placed on a tobacco barn. "There're more signs to come," Garris commented. (Reflector photo by Angela Lingerfelt)

Teacher Resigns After Charges

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A suspended junior high school math teacher facing sex charges involving four male students has resigned from the Charlotte-Mecklenburg school system, the school superintendent says.

Superintendent Jay Robinson said he received the resignation Tuesday of Jasper Pressley, 54, who was suspended from his job after his arrest on sex charges March 3. The charges involve three 15-year-old students and one 17-year-old student.

All citizens are encouraged to attend this hearing to provide comments and program activities as well as a project area the Town of Grimesland should consider.

Plane's Tires Blow

BOSTON (AP) — A Delta Air Lines jetliner blew out two tires as it landed at Logan International Airport on Saturday, forcing officials to close three of four operating runways for a time.

Phil Orlandella, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Port Authority, said there were no injuries among the 147 people aboard Flight 618, which landed around 11:35 a.m. after a flight from Tampa, Fla.

"Upon landing, the plane blew two tires, one right, one left," he said. "We don't know what caused it."

The blowouts stranded the plane at the intersection of two main runways, delaying operations for 15 minutes. One of three runways was immediately reopened, but two others remained closed until workers towed the plane to the terminal.

Singer Will Fight Extradition

TORONTO (AP) — Cathy Evelyn Smith, indicted in California for murder in the drug overdose death of comedian John Belushi, has surrendered to police but is expected to fight her extradition from Canada.

Ms. Smith, 35, a former back-up singer for Gordon Lightfoot and other performers, is believed to be the last person to see Belushi alive. His body was found in a hotel bungalow in Hollywood on March 5, 1982.

Ms. Smith surrendered to Toronto police Friday night, and a hearing on extradition and bail is scheduled for Monday. Police Sgt. Stephen Harris said Ms. Smith would be held at least until then.

Her attorney, Brian Greenspan, said after the arrest that Ms. Smith would fight extradition.

In June, the National Enquirer quoted Ms. Smith as saying in an interview that she injected Belushi with a fatal "speedball" of cocaine and heroin. Ms. Smith later retracted the statement, saying she was affected by alcohol and drugs during the interview.

Testimony by the Enquirers' reporters figured in the murder indictment issued Tuesday by a Los Angeles County Grand Jury, said District Attorney Robert Philibosian.

The indictment also charged Ms. Smith with 13 counts of supplying and administering cocaine and heroin to Belushi between March 1 and March 5, 1982.

Under California law, Philibosian said, "if a person commits an inherently dangerous felony — such as furnishing or administering cocaine or heroin — which causes a death, that person is guilty of second-degree murder, even if the death was unintended.

"She will be extradited," he said. "The only question is whether or not she waives formal extradition and agrees to return voluntarily."

Philibosian would not comment on the investigations by his office, police, and the coroner, which initially concluded that Belushi died of accidental overdose.

However, he said the follow-up investigation required the use of the grand jury to obtain evidence "from witnesses who refused to come forward originally."

Investigators took Ms. Smith away for questioning shortly after Belushi's death, but did not arrest her at that time. She was released and soon returned to Toronto, her hometown.

Belushi, 33 when he died, was known for his manic characterizations, which were a highlight of NBC television's Saturday Night Live series and such films as The Blues Brothers and Animal House.

Volcano Is Active

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Mount St. Helens shot a plume of steam and ash about 5,600 feet into the clear skies of southwest Washington on Saturday.

The plume occurred at 10:56 a.m., lasted six minutes and was visible 60 miles away in Portland, Ore., said A.B. Adams, spokesman for the University of Washington Geophysics Center, which monitors activity at the mountain.

The Cowlitz County river watch station near Elk Rock reported a light dusting of ash from the plume, he said.

Seismic activity beneath the 8,364-foot mountain remained only slightly above background levels, Adams said. "It's not unusual to have a steam plume," he said.

An eruption alert by the U.S. Geological Survey, which said scientists believed the mountain would have a peaceful dome-building eruption within three weeks, remained in effect. The alert was issued March 6.

In such an eruption, molten rock is pushed from within the ground and adds to the size of the lava dome inside the crater, which already is bigger than a sports stadium.

The Geological Survey did not plan to send crews into the volcano's crater over the weekend, a spokesman said. Scientists last entered the crater Thursday and noted the north and west sides of the 700-foot-high lava dome continued to change shape.

For New Bedford, 'Age Of Innocence' Is Past

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press Writer

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — Rumors are flowing in this city of fishermen and millworkers. One story has the wooden bar at Big Dan's being ripped apart with a chain saw. Another says the entire tavern was obliterated by a bulldozer.

Many wish the rumors were true.

But Big Dan's still stands, a boarded-up blight on its blue-collar neighborhood. The sign out front is down, and the bar has been neatly dismantled.

Gone is the Pac-Man, the field hockey game and the pool table where police say a gang of men held a woman and raped her for two hours while bar patrons cheered and jeered.

Gone too, say some, is the city's complacency about violence against women.

"We were a naive city," said Darlene Wheeler, a mother of two who found herself turned activist by the rape at Big Dan's. "Maybe our age of innocence has ended."

In the two weeks since the attack, New Bedford has become a national cause. Last week 2,500 people marched by candlelight to protest the assault.Gloria Steinem, author and activist, couldn't attend. Instead, she sent a telegram: "What happened to the woman in New Bedford happens to all women."

Ms. Wheeler and other women who formed the Coalition Against Sexist Violence presented demonstrators an agenda for New Bedford: a rape crisis center, sensitivity training for police officers who deal with rape victims and ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment.

The coalition has been swamped with calls and contributions from people new to the feminist movement. Rita Moniz, a political science professor at Southeastern Massachusetts University and a coalition member, said this was a hopeful sign.

"The answer to violence is to change the way women are treated in society," she said. "If women were not seen as inferior people they wouldn't become victims of violence."

The burst of activism has been recorded by television, radio and print reporters, and the attention has unsettled many in New Bedford. It is the topic of angry conversation in the Portuguese cafes and among the knots of retirees who gather at the Purchase Street Mall.

"They don't like it," Brian Lawler, the city's new mayor, said from his North End insurance agency a mile from Big Dan's. "It's a very quiet community."

The quiet was broken two hours before midnight on March 6 when a 21-year-old woman went into the bar to buy cigarettes. According to police, she stopped to have a drink with a woman friend, lingered after the friend left and then started for home.

The woman told police that men blocked her path. She was thrown to the ground, police said, stripped of her pants and hoisted onto the pool table to be raped by at least four men. The police report said that from nine to 15 men cheered the attackers during two hours of rape and humiliation.

The victim fled around midnight, naked from the waist down. A motorist picked her up and called for help. When police arrived, they found two of the alleged participants standing at the bar with the other patrons. Liquor and beer were flowing. It was business as usual.

"The whole incident says something about how people felt about what was going on," said Ms. Moniz. "I'm sure they felt that safety in numbers — that nobody was going to take the word of one woman against 20 men."

A grand jury returned charges of aggravated rape against Daniel Silvia, 26, John Cordeiro, 23, Victor Raposo, 23, and Joseph Vieira, 26.

Jose Medeiros, 22, and Virgilio Medeiros, 23, who are not related, were charged with being accessories after the fact.Bristol County District Attorney Ronald Pina said the two men egged the others on with shouts of "Go for it!" and touched the victim with their hands.

All of those charged are Portuguese immigrants, a fact that has cast an ethnic taint on the incident.

The Portuguese community, about half of the New Bedford population, is an intrinsic part of the city, which has a Portuguese language newspaper, radio station and cable television channel.

But leaders of the Portuguese community feel the case has brought out buried hatreds. Callers to Open Line, a talk show on WBSM-AM, made inflammatory suggestions that the city would be better off if its Portuguese residents were sent back across the ocean.

James Ragsdale, editor of The Standard-Times of New Bedford, said his newspaper received similar calls from people he called "mental midgets."

New Bedford's history as an ethnic melting pot goes back to the mid-1800s when thriving fishing, whaling and textile industries made the seaport one of the nation's most prosperous towns. Then, as today, the worker pool was supplied by immigrants, some from Quebec, many more from the Azores.

The flow from Portugal continued through this century. But the city's industries have failed to keep pace.

The demand for whale oil dried up. The textile industry moved south. Last year, New Bedford led the state with a jobless level touching 13 percent.

The city has struggled for a comeback, and Lawler, the mayor, thinks the rape case won't harm those efforts. He said that although the city was shocked, residents knew the attack was not indicative of their community.

"Inside the community is the awareness that there's nothing generic about New Bedford that caused this thing to happen," Ragsdale echoed.

Police and city officials say there have been few problems with the city's 70 bars and taverns that nestle among brightly painted three-decker homes. Community leaders say bars in the Portuguese neighborhoods are social centers, where children come to watch their grandfathers sip beer and play Soaca, a card game resembling whist.

Big Dan's, they say, was different.

"Someday I knew that place had to close," said David Arruda, owner of Mauriciou's Market, a groceria next to Big Dan's. "There were a lot of complaints about the place." The bar crowd was noisy. Some men urinated in the street. "They broke my windows a couple of times," he said.

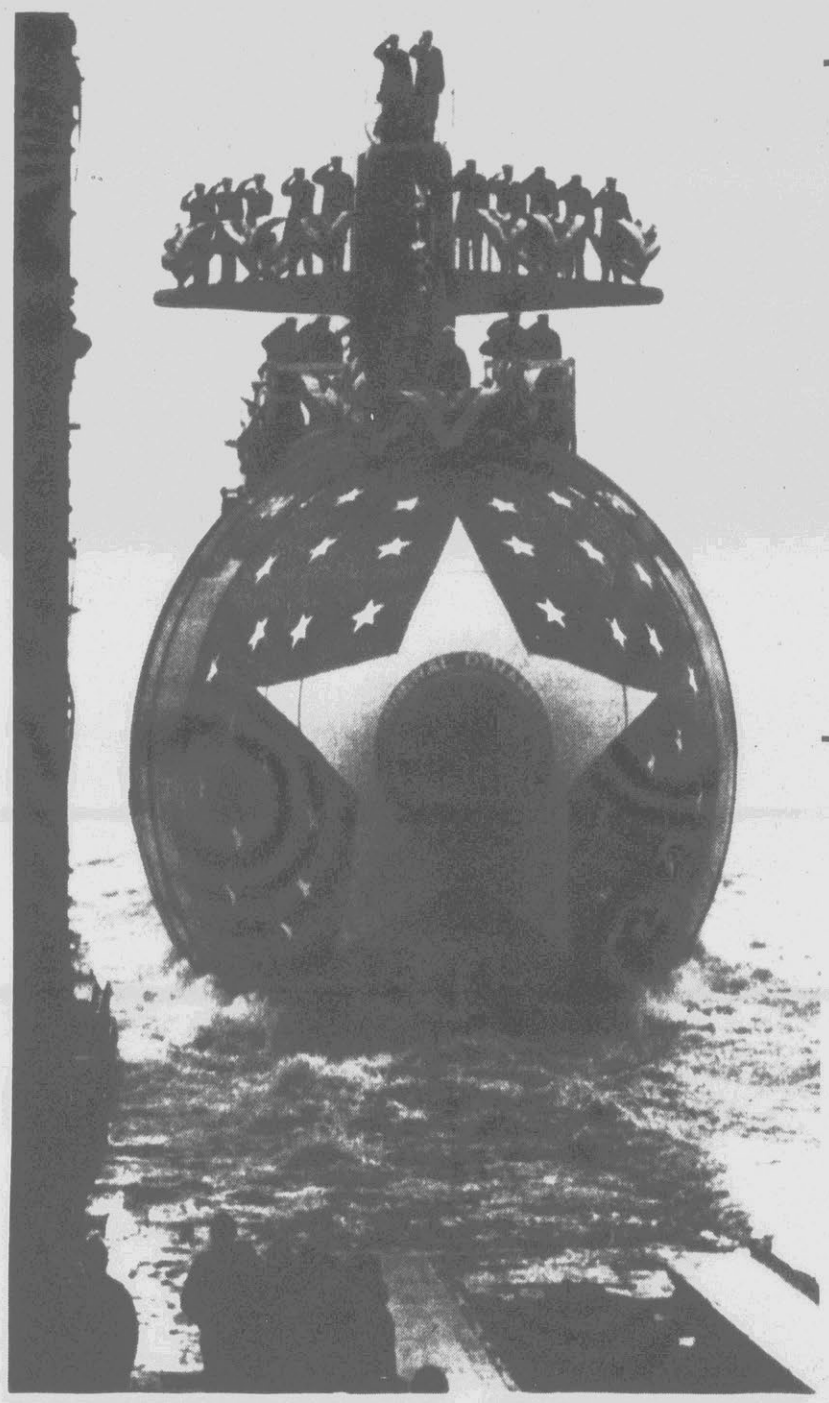

John T. Cheffers, a Boston University expert on mob violence, said the bar's history of rowdiness might offer some explanation for the horror of witnesses siding with attackers rather than victim.

"I don't think that behavior like this pops up unheralded and unprecedented," he said.

The chain of violence can be broken, Cheffers said, if several try to stop it. But there are dangers for those who try.

"There's a physical risk and an emotional risk," he said. "The emotional risk is one of isolation, of being considered contrary to the machismo of the situation. Some fear surrendering their masculinity by trying to stop it."

"But I wouldn't call it masculine," Cheffers added. "I'd call it brutishness."

Rape

An Attack Takes Place Every 6 Minutes In U.S.

By DOLORES BARCLAY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It happens every six minutes.

In a sparkling white frame house in Ohio, in a roach-infested motel in New York. To a 70-year-old grandmother or a 16-year-old cheerleader.

Rape happens and does not discriminate.

It happened March 6 in New Bedford, Mass., to a woman in a bar. She was gang-raped while patrons cheered. The brutality and callousness of that act infuriated a city and a nation.

It was not the only sexual assault in the United States that day, of course. Two rapes each were reported to the police in Portland, Ore., and Seattle; there was one rape in Jackson, Miss., and one in Miami. The Los Angeles Police Department says about seven rapes occur each day there.

But most rapes are not reported. According to FBI crime statistics, 81,536 women were raped in 1981 and 82,088 in 1980. Experts say these are but a fraction of the sex crimes that annually occur.

Still, while sexual assaults continue, public attitudes toward victims have changed. It remains emotionally difficult for a rape victim to report her assault, but changes in the criminal justice system in the past decade have eased the ordeal and made it more humane.

And rape victims are taking action. Women are taking self-defense courses and women's groups have set up prevention lectures. Women also are initiating civil suits against their assailants, forcing them to sell property or have their salaries garnished in order to meet cash judgments.

Some communities run public service announcements on television. Rape crisis centers visit public schools and church groups. The Worcester, Mass., Community Mental Health Center runs an awareness program for children. There are similar programs in Tacoma, Wash., Syracuse, N.Y., and Columbus, Ohio.

"I have observed in our own city and in other areas of the country that there has been substantial improvement," says Assistant District Attorney William Heiman, chief of the rape unit in the Philadelphia District Attorney's office.

"It's not perfect, but it's better today than nine years ago," he said. "It's not like the old days when women would be grilled on their past sex life and police looked at them cockeyed because they were out late alone at night and the prosecutor snickered and looked at the woman because she was attractive and didn't realize she had been brutalized."

Sarah — not her real name — a 28-year-old mother of two young girls, was raped Dec. 23. A man entered her Washington, D.C., apartment while she slept and threatened her with a knife. She took the knife while he was occupied with his assault and stabbed him before he fled.

He was caught and arrested. What happened to Sarah next was different than it would have been 10 or 20 years ago.

"I called 911 and a policewoman answered the phone," Sarah said. "She said she'd stay on the phone while the police came to my apartment.

"Yes, I was glad she talked to me and she was concerned," she said. "I didn't have to wait that interval to evaluate what had happened."

Two members of the police sex crimes unit rode in the ambulance with Sarah./ "They didn't ask questions and just wanted to know how I was," she said.

She was taken to a hospital trauma unit and treated for her stab wounds, which included slashed ligaments in her hand. A male detective finally questioned her. "He said that if I felt uncomfortable, we could take a breather, but I told him what had happened," she said.

"Everybody at the hospital looked at me like I was a hero."

The police, she said, "let me know that they just aren't pigs but human beings. They're more concerned about women being raped than ever before."

Part of that concern stems from the sensitivity training many police departments initated in the 1970s, influenced by growing grass roots efforts by women's groups.

"Women have educated the whole criminal justice system and worked with emergency rooms in the hospital in changing procedures and in sensitizing people," said Dr. Mary Lystad, director of the National Center for the Prevention and Control of Rape.

Some hospitals absorb the costs associated with rapes, such as pap smears, tests, venereal disease shots and treatment of physical injuries.

Heiman said the rape unit in the Philadelphia District Attorney's office was set up in 1978. Before that, the conviction rate for rapists was 40 percent, he said. Today, the rate is 80 percent.

In Philadelphia, the same prosecutor sees the case through from beginning to end.

Senator Contends Subs Are Deterrent

GROTON, Conn. (AP) — America's superior submarines would allow the substitution of "equipment for lives" in time of war, Sen. David Durenberger said Saturday at the launching of the attack sub USS Minneapolis-St. Paul.

"We must make it clear to any potential adversary that our anti-submarine defenses are sufficient to counter any possible threat," Durenberger, a Republican and Minnesota's senior senator, said at the Electric Boat Co. shipyard, where the sub was built.

"Every submarine we put to sea — and we have only one-third the number of those in the Russian fleet — helps to ensure that goal," he said. "A strong submarine force means a strong Navy and a strong Navy means a secure America."

Because of heavy rain, the ceremonies were held inside. Despite the rain, about 50 peace activists held a non-violent vigil behind police lines outside the shipyard.

Some erected a bright red banner depicting mushroom clouds from a nuclear blast and caricatures of President Reagan and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger astride a nuclear sub. The banner bore the slogan: "Cruisin' U.S. into W.W. III."

Reagan Seeks Advice From EPA Employees

By GREGORY GORDON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan held a secret meeting with five veteran Environmental Protection Agency employees this past week, soliciting advice on how to get the agency back on track, EPA sources said Saturday.

A source close to William Ruckelshaus, a moderate Republican who launched the EPA as its first administator during the Nixon years, said he would decide by Sunday whether to accept a White House offer to return as its chief.

EPA sources said none of the EPA officials in attendance at the White House meeting with Reagan were supporters of the president's environmental policies. But they described the extraordinary session as "friendly."

Other officials said the meeting was an indication of the White House's concern over ending the EPA controversy that has riveted the public's attention for weeks.

Despite the March 9 resignation of EPA chief Anne Burford and the firings of several other officials, the agency still is besieged with allegations about ties to industry and laggard enforcement.

Administration officials said the White House apparently floated a "trial balloon" by leaking Ruckelshaus' name as a probable Burford replacement to see if his service on numerous corporate boards would raise opposition.

One environmental group noted Ruckelshaus' current employer, the Weyerhaeuser Co. of Tacoma, Wash., is caught in a controversy over the use of a controversial herbicide on timberlands in the Pacific Northwest.

EPA officials told United Press International that on Tuesday, Reagan popped into a high-level meeting in which senior White House aides and five career agency bureaucrats were discussing the agency's needs.

One source said Reagan stayed at the meeting for 22 minutes, listening intently as the officials — one-by-one — described the agency's management and leadership needs and what was needed to placate angry members of Congress.

"There was no ancient history, no personalities," said one participant. "It was a positive meeting from beginning to end."

The official said White House aides asked what was needed, if EPA could start anew, to address the nation's complex environmental problems.

The EPA officials present included Ed Johnson, a top pesticides official at the agency; acting deputy general counsel Gerald Yamada; two water quality officials, Henry Longest and Rebecca Hanmer; and Richard Wilson, an official of the air quality office.

One official said Reagan's arrival at the session, which was organized on short notice by presidential assistant Craig Fuller, had been planned but the bureaucrats were not told in advance.

The EPA officials seemed stunned by Reagan's presence, and some regretted later not capitalizing more on the chance to give the president a firsthand briefing, this source said.

But the EPA employees stressed to Reagan, without discussing individuals, that the wrong persons are in some jobs and the agency has not used its resources efficiently, the participant said. They also discussed personnel and funding cuts.

Officials Claim EPA Documents Were Altered

WASHINGTON (AP) — John A. Todhunter, the Environmental Protection Agency official in charge of controlling toxic substances, ordered staff studies altered to make two suspected chemicals — dioxin and formaldehyde — appear less dangerous, two EPA officials claim.

In congressional testimony, one current and one former EPA official said they received orders — attributed to Todhunter — demanding changes that favored the chemical industry's position in both cases.

Todhunter, assistant EPA administrator for pesticides and toxic substances, denies that he ordered the changes, saying he had almost no involvement in the dioxin report and only made suggestions on formaldehyde.

The allegations came up in testimony as part of the continuing Congressional investigations of the EPA over claims of political favoritism and conflict of interest at the agency.

Karl E. Bremer, chief of the toxic substance office in EPA's Chicago office, told a House subcommittee on Friday that Todhunter ordered him to delete part of a report dealing with dioxin's possible link to miscarriages in pregnant women.

Bremer said the order was relayed to him by Todhunter's assistant, Marilyn C. Bracken, who according to Bremer, claimed "her job was on the line."

"She told me that Dr. John Todhhunter had instructed her to have those lines removed," said Bremer. "She said it didn't make any difference what she or I felt about the validity of those studies or the removal of these lines."

Through a spokesman, Todhunter denied giving such an order and claimed the study on dioxin contamination in Michigan was nearly complete by the time he went to work at EPA in July 1981.

Ms. Bracken "may have just invoked his (Todhunter's) name," said Michael McDonell, a Todhunter assistant. Ms. Bracken, who no longer works at EPA, refused to discuss the matter.

Dioxin, an unwanted byproduct in the manufacture of some herbicides, is considered one of the most toxic chemicals known to man. In Missouri, EPA officials said one part per million found in the soil was sufficient to justify the decision to buy out the town of Times Beach.

Last year, a former EPA official, Richard L. Dailey, testified that Todhunter had penciled in changes to be made in a technical document on the alleged cancer risk from formaldehyde, a widely used chemical that is found in products from plywood to diapers.

Dailey said that when he objected to one of the proposed changes as scientifically unsound, he was taken off the formaldehyde project for three months, and that later when Todhunter demanded even more changes, he resigned from the agency.

Legislative Fight Is Brewing Over Annexation

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A potentially bitter fight is brewing in the General Assembly over a proposal to let voters veto municipal annexation plans, observers say.

Sen. Aaron Plyler, D-Union, has introduced legislation to rewrite North Carolina's annexation laws for the first time since 1959. While opposing factions have criticized different parts of the bill, the package as a whole has drawn grudging acceptance of the N.C. League of Municipalites.

But the league, representing 450 of the state's 465 active cities, strongly dislikes an amendment Plyler wants added to his bill. It would allow residents of the city and the area to be annexed to vote if enough of them petition the municipal government.

A number of citizens' groups back the amendment and made emotional appeals for it during a public hearing last week at the Legislative Building.

"There is not a more repressive, undemocratic law in the country" than an annexation statute that doesn't let residents vote, said Dean Weber of the Right to Vote Association in New Hanover County.

Fred Baggett, associate counsel of the League of Municipalities, says annexation referenda would cripple city growth.

"History tells us that," said Baggett in an interview Friday. "We had votes before the (1959) law was passed and more than half of the annexation proposals were voted down."

Plyler, who chaired the Legislative Research Commission's annexation committee as it conducted a two-year study of the issue, says Baggett's position is too pessimistic.

During virtually every referendum more city residents than people in the area to be annexed would be eligible to vote, he said.

Also, while controversial annexations often are highly publicized, they're in the minority, he said. About 63 percent of annexations result from petitions signed by the residents themselves. The other 37 percent are initiated by city officials.

"Actually, I don't expect too many annexations to be voted down," said Plyler in an interview Friday. "But so many people have asked for this (amendment). I think they have a right to have a voice in something that affects them so greatly."

As now written, the annexation bill doesn't include the amendment on voting. Plyler said he didn't include it with the original bill because he didn't want opposition to the amendment to delay the full package.

Plyler said he expects a member of the Senate Local Government and Regional Affairs Committee to introduce the amendment. He wouldn't identify the senator.

"I really don't think (the amendment) will be a key issue as far as the bill itself is concerned," said Plyler. "They'll vote it up or down and proceed with the rest of the bill. I think the bill itself will go through all right."

While provoking the loudest comment, the voting rights controversy is only one part of the annexation issue.

In its report to the Legislature, which became the basis for Plyler's bill, the study committee recommended a number of changes in the 1959 law. Most were designed to lengthen the annexation process and give residents more of a chance to express their feelings.

Currently, annexation can take place in as little as 38 days. The bill would lengthen the minimum period to 15 months.

City officials would be required to send a certified-mail notice to residents of the area to be annexed. Currently, the only required notification is a newspaper advertisement. Residents who don't let the city know they received the notice would be mailed another and, as a last resort, city officials would have to post a notice on the residents' property.

Baggett criticized the notification requirement as costly and burdensome, and Plyler said he might settle for first-class mail notification as a compromise.

Another controversial issue centers on an existing requirement that annexed areas get water and sewer lines within two years. Under the bill, if the city doesn't meet the deadline, residents could petition to reverse the annexation.

The municipalities league prefers letting dissatisfied residents seek court relief, possibly in the form of property tax rebates, Baggett said. But Plyler disagreed.

"We don't want to leave people with no choice but to go to court," said Plyler. "It's too expensive. We want to make it easier on the people, to see that they're treated right."

Six of the bill's provisions are designed to make annexation easier for rural fire departments. Cities that take in the fire departments would have to compensate the departments for monetary losses, while providing employment and benefits for firefighters whose jobs are eliminated.

Currently, the annexation law affects about 400 cities, but others are are governed by local ordinances that in many cases have stifled growth. The Plyler bill would make the annexation law apply statewide.

Eastern's Largest Union Rejects Contract Offer

By SUSAN POSTLEWAITE
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines' largest union, hoping to push management back to the bargaining table, rejected what the airline called its "final" contract offer by a margin of almost 4-to-1, labor leaders said Saturday.

Seventy-two percent turned down Eastern's offer of a 32 percent pay hike over three years, said Charles Bryan, president of the International Association of Machinists District 100.

He said 10,500 of IAM's 13,000 members cast ballots, and about 100 ballots are still uncounted. No exact figures were released.

"I think it was an overwhelming show of support and confidence in the union leadership," Bryan said. "We're very pleased with that result."

A strike deadline is scheduled for 12:01 a.m. Thursday, and Bryan was confident that IAM members would reaffirm their strike authorization in a separate ballot being counted Saturday.

"I characterize myself right now as extremely disappointed," Eastern Chairman Frank Borman said after hearing of the vote. "We genuinely thought the ... members of the IAM at Eastern would have recognized this is clearly the best offer they could expect."

Borman has insisted the $200 million wage increase offer was all Eastern could afford.

The two sides are scheduled to meet in Washington on Monday before the National Mediation Board. On Friday, Borman said he would not negotiate any further. On Saturday, he said the airline would send a representative to Washington.

"We understand the union has further proposals to present, and we'll be willing to hear them," Borman said Saturday. "Eastern hopes they have something to offer that might finally resolve this matter ... We'll listen and we'll see what happens."

The IAM represents 13,000 baggage handlers, machinists and ground workers nationwide, with about 5,600 in Miami, a few thousand each in New York and Atlanta, and smaller groups in Pittsburgh, Boston, Charlotte, N.C., and other cities.

Eastern averted a walkout a few minutes before midnight March 12 with the proposal.

The strike threat has already had a "substantial impact" on Eastern's financial picture, Borman said Friday.

Borman said a strike would be a "catastrophe," and threatened to hire replacement workers if the machinists refuse to cross their own picket lines. He predicted 65 percent to 70 percent of Eastern's flights will take off as scheduled.

The proposal included a 32 percent pay increase over three years but no retroactive increases. The raises would come in 6 percent increments on April 1, Nov. 1, and April 1, 1984, with an 11 percent raise in November 1984 for two months.

Under the proposed contract, a top-rated machanic, who now earns $13.15 an hour, would make $17.40 an hour at the expiration of the pact.

"We want to go back to the table in good faith," Bryan said Saturday. "We've made a pledge to the flying public, the community and all employees at Eastern ... that we will continue to be reasonable and fair. We're not trying to exceed the industry."

He said union doesn't want to strike, "but somewhere along the line you have to stand up and be counted."

Many Eastern employees voting Friday night appeared ready for a confrontation with the company.

Affect On Savers Is Almost Lost In Congress-Bankers' Tax Battle

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Almost lost in the furious battle being waged by Congress and bankers over withholding taxes from interest and dividends is the undisputed fact that the direct cost to savers would be close to nothing.

The government cannot agree with the banks on how much it will cost to do the paperwork on withholding, or whether bank service charges will have to be raised to finance it. No one can say with certainty how much more taxes the new law will bring in.

But the banks and the government agree that over a year, withholding would cost a $5,000 account earning 10 percent a total of $2.40. That's the compound interest lost to the saver if 10 percent of the interest earned by the account is withheld for the government.

Without withholding, a $10,000 account with an effective annual yield of 9 percent, compounded quarterly, would earn $900 over 12 months. Withholding would cut the yield to $897.07.

The calculations were made by the Treasury Department and by the Joint Committee on Taxation. Sen. Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., chief backer of withholding, cites another example: Withholding would mean a loss of less than 50 cents a year for a $1,000 account with 9 percent interest compounded quarterly.

"We don't dispute that figure," said Fritz Elmendorf, spokesman for the American Bankers Association, a major force in a campaign against withholding that has generated millions of cards and letters from concerned savers to Congress.

"Fifty cents is not a big loss to most people," he added. "But it shouldn't be lost at all because the Internal Revenue Service has other ways of getting the job done."

Partial withholding on interest and dividends was ordered by Congress last year. It is due to start for most accounts on July 1; for Treasury bills and corporate IOUs, it begins next Jan. 1. Only 10 percent of interest and dividends would be withheld for taxes, compared to a maximum withholding rate of 37 percent on workers' wages.

But because of the mail campaign, the fate of withholding is not certain.

A majority of Congress has signed repeal bills. The repeal effort blocked Senate action on an emergency recession-relief bill for a week, until the showdown was put off. In the House, a petition is being circulated to override the leadership and force a vote by the membership on blocking withholding.

A large share of the millions of pieces of mail urging repeal is form letters and cards printed and mailed in bulk by banks, credit unions and savings and loan associations. But even many of those pieces carry handwritten notes expressing concern that the government is taking something it has no right to.

The Reagan administration asked for withholding after the IRS estimated about 20 million people cheat on their taxes each year by failing to report interest and dividends totaling $25 billion.

Much of the mail calls this a new tax and repeats an ABA characterization of withholding as "looting" savings accounts.

Virginia National Bank tells customers withholding "will virtually eliminate compounded savings growth on savings and investments." Kansas City area banks ran an ad with the headline: "Starting in 1983, the federal government will be getting a raise — from you!" Sen. Robert Kasten, R-Wis., who is leading the fight for repeal, sent a newsletter advising constituents "how to stop the new tax on your savings."

What the ads don't say is that for people who already pay their taxes, withholding will cost nothing more than the tiny bit of lost compound interest. Money withheld will be credited against taxes owed when the annual tax return is filed. There is no new tax — except for those who are paying no tax now.

In The State

Asbestos Found In Dorm Rooms

GREENSBORO — Officials at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro have warned about 300 students living in two dormitories asbestos has been found in the ceilings of their rooms.

Asbestos, once used as a fire retardant, has been linked to respiratory ailments. Residents of Strong and Moore halls were warned not to touch the ceilings in their dorms.

UNC-G officials said 30,000 square feet of the ceilings in rooms, the hall foyer and game room will be replaced this summer at a cost of about $100,000.

Woodpeckers Drill Budget

LUMBERTON — Woodpeckers have drilled a $100,000 hole in the Lumberton City School System budget.

The woodpeckers drilled holes in the wooden light poles at the Lumberton High School football field, seriously weakening the top-heavy poles and creating a potential safety hazard to sports spectators. The woodpeckers have drilled holes as wide around as a baseball in the supports.

The entire lighting system is to be replaced.

Law Provides Tax Breaks

RALEIGH — Counties may be deprived of some revenues under a new state law giving property tax exemptions to industries with pollution-control equipment, state and county officials say.

The law was designed to encourage the textile industry to install anti-pollution devices inside mills to protect workers. But as a result, it has made large property-tax breaks available to utilities and other companies that previously did not claim them.

Fund Starts For Little Girl

GOLDSBORO — A campaign to raise $2,000 for a 7-year-old girl with cancer climbed to $5,000, only two days after fund-raising began. The Erica Lewis Fund campaign was initiated with a front-page story in the Goldsboro News-Argus.

Erica must have intensive chemotherapy and radiation treatments and bone marrow transplants in her fight against cancer.

Her medical expenses are being taken care of by a program for crippled children. But her mother, Mrs. Linda Lewis, and her 4-year-old brother must spend the next two months with her at a Gainesville, Fla., hospital. The brother, Timmy, will be the bone marrow donor.

White Arrested In Raleigh

RALEIGH — The Rev. Leon White of the United Church of Christ Commission for Racial Justice was arrested at the Legislative Building Friday during a demonstration against the PCB landfill in Warren County.

White was charged with trespassing on legislative property. He was jailed after refusing to post $200 bond.

White marched more than 60 miles from Warrenton to Raleigh with a group of about 10 protesters opposed to the landfill.

Helms Will Support Forest

WASHINGTON — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, has pledged to keep the Uwharrie National Forest within the National Forest System despite proposals to sell it.

The Uwaharrie is part of 6 million acres of national forest land nationwide designed for study under President Reagan's Asset Management Program.

Exterminator Pays Damages

NEWLAND — Terminix Inc., an Asheville exterminator, has been ordered to pay $77,840 for contaminating a Mitchell County elementary school's water in 1981.

An Avery County Superior Court jury awarded $52,840 in actual damages and $25,000 in punitive damages to the Mitchell County school board and a total of $5,251 to Blue Bell Inc., which operated a garment factory adjacent to the school.

The school and factory had to change their plumbing after the state Department of Agriculture determined their well and water systems were contaminated with pesticides used by Terminix.

Truckers Asked To Use Caution

COINJOCK — Truckers have been asked to use new precautions in crossing a deteriorating bridge on U.S. 158 over the Intracoastal Waterway because of the danger the bridge may collapse under too much weight.

A U.S. Army Corps of Engineers spokesman said truckers should wait until other traffic stops before crossing the bridge, but bridge tender Clyde Spruill said few truckers are heeding the request.

Anti-Drug Activity To Be Increased

By The Associated Press

North Carolina is one of several states targeted for increased federal assistance in stamping out drug smuggling, says state Attorney General Rufus Edmisten.

Edmisten said Friday he had been briefed in Washington, D.C., on the Reagan administration's new effort to set up drug task forces across the country. Edmisten and other state attorneys general met with Reagan at the White House last week.

"I am of the opposite political party, but this president is very strong for law enforcement, especially in the drug areas," said Edmisten.

He said he was particularly pleased with plans to expand use of military bases and equipment, including the Marine base at Camp Lejeune and the Army base at fort Bragg.

The administration also plans to beef up its force of federal prosecutors and law enforcement agents working with on the drug problem.

U.S. Attorney Sam Currin of the Eastern District of North Carolina said drug enforcement officials began using military facilities in the state last year after Congress relaxed restrictions on such activity.

The military's chief contribution has been intelligence information supplied by sea, air and radar surveillance.

"These planes are now notifying the Drug Enforcement Administration whenever they spot suspicious looking vessels," said Currin.

Edmisten and Currin attended a meeting this week at Camp Lejeune to discuss ways to expand the use of military equipment in the anti-drug effort.

"I think you will see some very dramatic changes in the drug smuggling," said Edmisten.

Currin said the state probably will get four new federal prosecutors, who will be assigned exclusively to drug cases. Tentative plans call for two prosecutors to be assigned to the eastern district and one each to the middle and western districts, he said.

The eastern district's only prosecutor assigned to drug cases handles them on a part-time basis, Currin said.

"These new prosecutors will do primarily sophisticated grand jury type investigations," he said. "We will be utilizing the grand jury, subpoenaing records, (and) documents, tracking money, tracing funds and also (following) funds into property."

Currin, who will oversee the federal effort in eastern North Carolina, said the investigations will be aimed at people "who are directing, financing and protecting the drug trafficking business."

He said most of the agents in North Carolina will work out of Wilmington, where drug enforcement activities have been concentrated. He said he hoped to station some of the agents in the northeastern part of the state.

"I think right now we have a lot more drugs going into the northeastern part of the state, Morehead City north, than we do in the southeastern part of the state," said Currin. "I think Operation Gateway has to a large extent curtailed the drug traffic coming into Brunswick County and that area."

A federal grand jury last week indicted the Brunswick County sheriff, the Shallote chief of police and 20 other people on drug-related charges. The federal-state investigation was called Operation Gateway.

Tests Help Trace Reaction

United Press International

Researchers at East Carolina University have demonstrated for the first time that certain laboratory tests can show whether a person has died from a severe reaction to stings by bees or other related insects.

"I think the findings represent a modest breakthrough in this area," said Dr. R. Page Hudson, a pathology professor at the University of North Carolina who assisted in the study.

He said the study could help resolve uncertainty that surrounds some of the estimated 50 insect sting deaths in the United States each year.

"Fatal insect sting hypersensitivity is generally regarded in death certification circles and by insurance companies as accidental, but because physical signs disappear before autopsy, it can be very difficult to prove," said Hudson, who also serves at North Carolina's chief medical examiner.

The test could be a major factor in proving accidental death for insurance purposes, he said.

The research was conducted by Dr. Donald Hoffman, a pathology professor at the East Carolina medical school, and Dr. Catherine Wood, a reasearch associate at ECU.

A report by the three was published in the current issue of the Journal of Allergy and Clinical Immunology and Hudson outlined the studies during a recent meeting of the American Academy of Forensic Sciences in Cincinatti.

People who die from stings by bees, hornets, yellow jackets, wasps and related insects are abnormally sensitive to the venom of the insects. For unknown reasons, they develop extremely high levels of antibodies to proteins in the venom.

When a person who is overly sensitive is stung, the body's immune system releases massive amounts of histamine and other chemicals that trigger symptoms ranging from hives, wheezing and shock to death from heart failure or asphyxiation.

The two East Carolina researchers modified two laboratory tests for antibodies and used them on blood samples provided by Hudson. The samples came from eight people who were believed to have died from insect stings in North Carolina between 1979 and 1981.

A radioallergosorbent test (RAST) showed all of the samples contained high levels of IgE antibodies, which cause allergic reactions to insect venom.

The second test, an enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA), showed the victims had levels of IgG antibodies comparable to levels recorded in other groups of venom-allergic patients. IgG antibodies are thought to protect against venom reactions.

"One of the most important things about the work is that it wasn't previously known that post-mortem blood samples could be used for this purpose," Hudson said.

"Blood changes pretty quickly after death, and there were a lot of reasons to question whether the antibodies against the venoms could still be found."

Hudson said about 10 percent of those who have never had a serious reaction to insect venom respond positively to a RAST test, so the method cannot prove deaths caused by insect stings in every case.

"Despite this disclaimer, a positive RAST is strongly suggestive in the absence of contrary evidence, he said.

House Approves Credit Card Fee

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A bill allowing banks to charge up to $20 a year for credit cards easily won approval Friday in the state House after efforts to eliminate or lower the fee were soundly rejected.

The House voted 92-10 to approve the bill and send it to the Senate.

Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake, the bill's sponsor, said he has "not had a reputation in this General Assembly of looking out for the interest of the lending institutions" but he believed the bill, which would generate an estimated $14 million a year for the banks, was a good one.

Banks say they need the money to compensate for an estimated $13 million in annual losses on credit card purchases.

Adams said the credit card fee was a compromise. He said banks wanted to charge the credit card fee, raise the interest rate on credit card purchases from 18 percent to 21 percent and begin charging interest on those purchases as soon as they are made.

Credit card customers now have a 25-day grace period before they are charged interest.

But Adams said the banks decided not to seek higher interest rates or elimination of the grace period if the credit card fee was approved.

Adams noted that a Wake County Superior Court judge recently ruled that the banks could charge fees for credit cards under existing laws. Unless the General Assembly puts a cap on that fee, Adams said the banks could charge any amount for a credit card.

Rep. Worth Gentry, D-Stokes, said the bill was too drastic and he unsuccessfully tried to delete the charge for the credit cards. The amendment was defeated by a voice vote.

"A $14 million windfall is not in keeping with the economy of our state," he said.

Rep. Dan DeVane, D-Hoke, unsuccessfully tried to amend the bill to lower the maximum credit card fee to $10.

"Banks are not the only ones who need relief," he said.

Rep. Ruth Cook, D-Wake, amended the bill to require banks give customers 30 days notice about the credit card fee and allow them a chance to give up the card. It also would allow customers to cancel their credit card and get a refund based on the amount of time they had the card.

Forty-two states already allow an annual credit card fee ranging from $15 to $25. Adams said he expected about 20 percent to 30 percent of the card holders to surrender their cards after imposition of the fee.

The fee affects only bank-issued credit cards. It does not affect other kinds of bank cards or credit cards issued by department stores.

"I have never paid a penny of interest on the charges I've made," said Rep. Dan Lilley, D-Lenoir. "I would be willing to pay a little bit for that service."

The bill also would allow the state to override federal regulations on loans, mortgages and credit sales.

"This bill is designed to reinstate the authority of you, the North Carolina General Assembly, over the lending laws in the state of North Carolina," Adams said.

He noted that the Depository Institutions Deregulation and Monetary Control Act passed by Congress in 1980 struck down state laws regulating lending. But Congress gave the states until March 31 to reassert their authority.

Adams said the bill was an "attempt to satisfy all lending institutions and provide for them what advantages they have under the federal pre-emption."

He amended the bill to make sure that state banks and savings and loans could charge comparable interest rates. But the amendment prohibits them from comparing their interest rates with those of credit unions or small loan companies, whose rates are as high as 36 percent.

JAIL FOR INSULTS

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Joop Glimmerveen, the former leader of a Dutch neo-fascist party, has been sentenced to six weeks in jail for insulting ethnic minorities in the Netherlands.

Southern Democrats To Work Against Chicago's Byrne

ATLANTA (AP) — Ten state Democratic Party chairmen from the South plan a trip to Chicago to campaign against Mayor Jane Byrne's planned write-in candidacy for re-election and in suport of Democratic mayoral nominee Harold Washington.

Paul Weston, a spokesman for the Georgia Democratic Party, said the Southern Democratic support for Washington followed Mrs. Byrne's turnabout decision to stage a write-in candidacy after saying just after defeat in the primary she would support Washington.

Georgia Democratic Party Chairman Bert Lance, who served as federal budget director under former President Jimmy Carter, said in a prepared statement that Washington's campaign "has become an election with national ramifications."

"First, it must be made clear to Democrats that the political party system works best when all Democrats rally behind Democratic nominees," he said. "Jane Byrne has committed the cardinal sin of turning on her party and ignoring her clear defeat.

"Second, black Democrats in Chicago and in the nation must be assured that the Democratic Party is their party and is committed to them. This gesture by Southern Democrats, I think, will help send a signal that Democrats stand together — all of them."

Weston said party chairmen who will make the trip to Chicago next Wednesday are Lance, Charles Whitehead of Florida, Jimmy Knight of Alabama, Bart Gordon of Tennessee, Joe Goodwin of West Virginia, Alan Diamonstein of Virginia, Paul Patton of Kentucky, Jesse Bankston of Louisiana, W.J. Bryan Dorn of South Carolina and Lilburn "Lib" Carlisle of Arkansas.

He also said chairmen in North Carolina, Mississippi and Texas support the trip and have been trying to arrange their schedules to join the delegation.

Weston said he would be discussing the trip with the chairmen of North Carolina, Mississippi and Texas over the weekend in hopes of having a final list Monday of those going to Chicago.

Washington, who is vying to become Chicago's first black mayor, faces Mrs. Byrne's write-in candidacy and Republican nominee Bernard Epton.

Tar Heels Cruise By Madison, 68-59

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina forward Sam Perkins changed his priorities in Saturday's NCAA East Regional game with James Madison and the decision proved wise.

Perkins scored 14 of his game-high 18 points in the second half and Michael Jordan added 16 as the eighth-ranked Tar Heels cruised to a 68-49 victory over the Dukes in second-round tournament action.

"The first half, I stayed down low to get position when the shot went up," Perkins said. "In the second half, I decided to move out."

Matt Doherty added 14 points for the defending national champion and second-seeded Tar Heels, 27-7. North Carolina advances to the East Regional semifinals at Syracuse, N.Y., where it will meet the winner of Sunday's Syracuse-Ohio State matchup at Hartford, Conn.

Jordan was shackled with foul trouble, picking up three in the first half and getting his fourth seven seconds into the second period. Tar Heel coach Dean Smith altered his defensive strategy to keep Jordan in action.

"Other than a hunch, we could zone and we had the lead," Smith said when asked why he let Jordan keep playing. "He's a smart player. I was worried more about the charge than a defensive error."

James Madison coach Lou Campanelli would have preferred a slower tempo, much like the one he employed in last year's 52-50 second-round loss to the Tar Heels. He never got the chance.

"Carolina's defensive strategy was to make us shoot," Campanelli said. "We had too much adrenalin. We forgot how we played last year."

In the second game of Saturday's doubleheader, Virginia Commonwealth faced fourth-seeded Georgia, making its first trip to the NCAA tournament.

Perkins scored six of North Carolina's first eight points as the Tar Heels expanded a 28-17 halftime lead to 36-23 with 13:13 left. Combining its height advantage with accurate perimeter shooting, the Tar Heels eventually took a 64-46 lead with 2:07 left on two Doherty free throws. The final score represented North Carolina's biggest lead. Jordan was shackled with foul trouble, picking up three in the first half and getting his fourth seven seconds into the second period.

After committing five turnovers in the first three minutes, North Carolina hit its next seven shots to take a 14-4 lead on Jim Braddock's jumper with 13:34 left. The Dukes retaliated with an 11-4 spurt and cut the margin to 24-17 on a David Dupont free throw with 2:36 left before intermission.

Charles Fisher's 16 points paced James Madison, which finished at 20-11. Dan Ruland added 15.

North Carolina shot 65.8 percent, including 72.7 percent in the second half. The Tar Heels outrebounded the Dukes, 27-21.

Hallow's Grand-Slam Helps ECU Gain Split With George Mason

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

John Hallow drilled a grand-slam home run to lead East Carolina University's Pirates to a 5-0 victory over George Mason yesterday in the second game of an ECAC-South baseball doubleheader.

Mason had used two home runs by Cary McMichael to come from behind and take a 6-2 win in the opener, snapping a six-game losing streak for the Patriots.

Charlie Smith hurled the shutout for the Bucs in the second game after they had seen their eight-game winning streak stopped. The win was the first complete game shutout for the Pirates this year. Two other shutouts saw relievers come on during the action.

Smith, who scattered five hits during the seven inning contest, struck out five and walked two in going the distance. He got into trouble in the fifth, but a suicide squeeze attempt went awry and that helped Smith get out of that jam.

The Pirates, meanwhile, had their troubles with the bats. They got only four hits off Les Wright in the opener, and added six more in the second game. Three of those six, however, were for extra bases, as compared with no extra base hits in the first contest.

"We were definitely sluggish in the first game," ECU Coach Hal Baird said. "I expected (ECU) to come out with fire in their eyes. The pitching in the first game was not really that strong although the guy did do a good job. We were even sluggish in the second game. We were just fortunate enough to get some guys on and John hit the ball out."

Baird praised Smith for his job in the second game. "He gave us a lift when we needed it."

But he was unhappy with the pitching in the first game, as Bob Davidson took the loss — his first decision of the year, despite three previous starts. "We've got to start doing the little things better, and it's obvious that we weren't doing them in the first game. I really feel fortunate to get a split of of this. I'm not very happy with the way we're playing."

It wasn't totally on Davidson's shoulders however. The big damage in the first game came in the fifth inning when, with two out and two on, an error enabled the Patriots to keep the inning alive.

They scored five runs after that to erase an ECU 2-1 lead.

"Everybody told me that Mason swung the bats well. They played well and deserve a lot of credit," Baird said. "But I look at our guys and wee seemed to lack a charge today. Maybe I'm expecting too much...."

McMichael staked the Patriots to an early lead in the first inning with his first homer of the afternoon, that coming with two away. He slapped the ball over the fence in right for a 1-0 lead.

East Carolina came back in the second to tie it up with a run. With one out, Robert Wells singled and Tony Salmond got a hit. Wells then took third on a fly out by Jabo Fulghum, and a double steal brought Wells home.

ECU took the lead in the third. Kelly Robinette led off, reaching on an error, then he stole second. Robinette moved on to third on an infield out and scampered home on a wild pitch for a 2-1 lead.

The Pirates then threw the game away in the fifth. Barry Durham led off with a single and with one away, Mark Oliver got a hit. After a second out, John Hallow made a fine stab of Jim Youngblood's liner, but was then unable to find the handle to make an out, loading the bases.

Mason had two other threats in the game, leaving a man stranded at third in the third and on second in the sixth.

East Carolina, meanwhile, was virtually handcuffed by Patriot pitcher Les Wright, who allowed only four hits, two of them by Wells. A double play got Mason out of a jam in the first with runners on first and second with none out, but three pop-ups ended that.

The best threat came in the fifth when Mike Ashton doubled and took third on a wild pitch with none out. Then, after a ground-out back to the pitcher, Robbie Foster missed the ball on an attempted suicide squeeze, easily getting Ashton at the plate.

It was fortunate, in that Foster followed with a single to right — and could have scored the run with that hit — had it still been there.

With two away in the sixth, the Patriots got a man to second on a walk and an error, but Smith got the final out on a grounder to end the inning, then retired the side in order in the seventh.

Hallow and Curlings each had two hits to lead the Pirates, while no one for Mason had more than one.

The Pirates are now 11-3 overall and 1-1 in ECAC-South play. Mason falls to 1-7 overall and 1-1 in the league.

East Carolina travels to N.C. State on Monday, then to Campbell on Tuesday before returning home to face Ohio on Wednesday and Thursday. James Madison is then in Greenville on Saturday for another ECAC-South game.

Cavs Move On, 54-49

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Even when he's being held virtually scoreless, as he was in the second half Saturday, Ralph Sampson finds other ways to make his presence felt.

In leading Virginia to a 54-49 victory over Washington State in second-round action of the NCAA West regional basketball tournament, Sampson used blocked shots and outlet passes to trigger three crucial fast breaks that helped the Cavaliers thwart a second-half Washington State rally.

"The turning point came when they got those three transition baskets on us late in the game," said losing Coach George Raveling. "I felt that gave them a cushion.

"Ralph Sampson might be the best player ever to play the game because he can do some things I've never seen a 7-4 guy do."

Virginia Coach Terry Holland agreed with Raveling's assessment. "Our defense gave us some fast-break baskets which obviously kept our momentum going when the pace of the game slowed down," Holland said.

Sampson, Virginia's senior All-America center, scored 15 points and added 12 rebounds and four blocked shots to lead Virginia into next Thursday's West semifinals in Ogden, Utah. Utah played UCLA in a later game here Saturday to determine another semifinal berth.

The 7-foot-4 Sampson, despite scoring only two points in the second half, was instrumental in Virginia's ability to hold off a Washington State rally. The Cougars trailed by as much as eight points in the first half and were down 30-25 at intermission but pulled into a tie just a minute into the second half.

With 9:18 left in the game, Sampson grabbed a rebound and fed guard Ricky Stokes for a fast-break basket that put the Cavaliers ahead 38-34.

Seconds later, Sampson blocked a Washington State shot. The deflection went toward center court and guard Othell Wilson was off for another fast-break basket, giving Virginia a six-point edge.

Finally, after the Cougars had drawn into another tie, Sampson again blocked a shot to Wilson, who scored on the other end, was fouled and made the free throw to account for a 45-40 advantage with 5:59 left.

The Cavaliers, seeded first in the West regional, then went into a delay offense, and except for some sloppy free throw shooting would have iced the contest quickly. Virginia hit only seven of 14 free throw attempts in the final two minutes, and at one point missed four in a row. But three free throws by Wilson, who finished with 14 points, in the final 21 seconds gave the Cavaliers a comfortable margin.

Sampson scored Virginia's first eight points, helping the Cavaliers to move to their big first-half advantage, but Washington State reserve forward Aaron Haskins fueled a comeback late in the half, scoring eight points as the Cougars at one point cut the deficit to a single point.

Haskins paced the losers with 14 points and guard Craig Ehlo had 12.

Conley Girls Take Regional Title, 61-48

By JIMMY DuPREE

STANTONSBURG — The Valkyries of D.H. Conley connected on 13 of 16 free throws in the final 1:31 of their game to claim 61-48 victory over Southeast Guilford in the finals of the Eastern Regional 3-A Conference Tournament.

The Valkyries advance to the state championship game against Enka, a 47-45 overtime winner over Madison-Mayodan in the Western Regional tourney. The game will be played Friday night at Elon College.

Tourney most valuable player Mechio Kornegay scored 18 points for Conley, while Irish Barnhill pumped in 13, Karen Barrett 12 and Darlene Cannon added 11 points and grabbed 10 rebounds. Barnhill joined Kornegay on the All-Tournament team, along with Lori Phillips and Kim Johnson of Southeast Guilford and Michelle McCoy of East Bladen.

Phillips posted 20 points for the Falcons and Johnson added 16 as Southeast Guilford finished the season with a 24-4 record.

The Valkyries led 40-34 at the end of the third period, and Barnhill's layup after a steal improved the margin to 48-38 with 6:20 on the clock. But Conley went into a delay offense and didn't score again until Lisa Mills connected on a free throw with 1:31 to play to set the score at 49-46. Three field goals by Phillips had cut the Valkyrie edge to two points with 1:39 left.

The Falcons were forced to foul late in the game, and Cannon hit on seven out of eight and Kornegay three out of four attempts from the charity stripe to run up the final margin.

"I knew they were really going to the middle all through the game," said Conley coach Joy James, whose team is now 27-3, "and even more so after (Barrett) got her fourth foul. We went to the stall, and my girls missed some crucial free throws.

"I called timeout and told them I had faith in them, and when we got in a pinch late in the game we made (the free throws).

"What we were trying to do was get Mechio at the free throw line and let her go one-on-one. Southeast Guilford is a smart ballclub; they play scrappy defense and keep their hands in your face."

"We didn't play well offensively," said Southeast Guilford coach Jim Clontz. "We forced a shot late in the game that really cost us.

"They were awfully quick, but I felt like we kept up with them. The key was that we got down early and had to come back. We had them right where we wanted them, but the shots just didn't drop. I think offensively we were pressing ourselves."

Conley trailed 13-12 after the first period, but a full-court drive by Cannon 50 seconds into the second quarter put the Valkyries ahead to stay. Barrett and Kornegay added field goals and Barrett a free throw to build a 19-13 Conley lead with 5:08 left till intermission.

A three-point play by Kornegay with 1:07 left in the first half gave Conley a 26-17 edge — the largest of the half.

After trading buckets through the 1:50 mark of the third period, Kornegay connected on a move inside and Barnhill added a layup on a steal to set the score at 40-30 with 1:11 left in the period.

"I think Barnhill did a great job agaisnt their press," James said. "She had three steals for easy layups that kept us ahead when we needed it.

Graham Outlasts Roanoke, 47-39

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer

STANTONSBURG — The Graham Red Devils and the Roanoke Redskins battled through the first half with neither team managing more than a two-point lead, but in the end the Devils ambushed Roanoke 47-39 for the Eastern Regional 3-A Conference title at Wilson Beddingfield gymnasium.

Tim Jones paced the Red Devils with 16 points, while teammate Rod Cousin added 11. Greg Everette and Glenn Daniels each posted eight points for Roanoke, which finished the 1982-83 campaign with a 24-4 record.

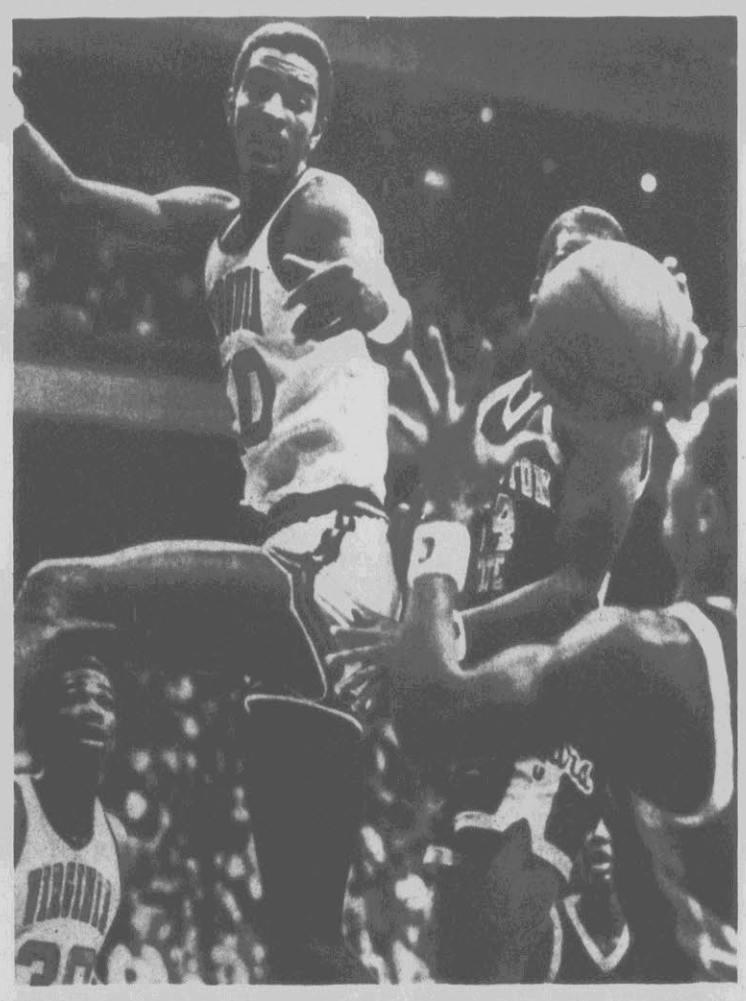

Jones and Cousin were named to the All-Tournament team, with Jones taking MVP honors. Ricky Highsmith, who managed only six points against Graham after posting 19 against East Bladen Friday, was named to the squad, along with Linwood Harris of West Craven and Rodney Rhoda of East Bladen.

Graham struggled to a 24-22 halftime advantage and outscored the Redskins 10-4 through the 3:38 mark of the third quarter to take control. Roanoke whittled away at the lead for a 35-30 score at the end of the period.

A three-point play by Gary Baker with just 24 seconds elapsed in the fourth quarter cut the gap to two points, but Jones sank a field goal and added a pair of free throws for a 39-33 Graham advantage with 5:40 on the clock.

George Sixth In 100 Free

(See Other Story, Page B-6)

LONG BEACH, Calif. — East Carolina's Nan George finished sixth in the 100-yard freestyle at the NCAA Division II championships yesterday at Long Beach State University.

The finish, in an ECU record time of 57.73 seconds, gave George her second placing in the event, and All-America status for the second time. The sixth place finish was also the highest post-season finish for an ECU woman in swimming.

No other Lady Pirate placed during the day, although Nancy James and Nancy Rogers also swam in the 100 freestyle; Kaky Wilson and JoAnne McCulley swam in the 100 individual medley and the team of Rogers, James, Nancy Ludwig and George competed in the 400-freestyle relay.

Georgia Nips VCU, 56-54

AP Sports Writer

GREENSBORO (AP) — James Banks was looking for a little redemption and found it in time to give Georgia a 56-54 victory over Virginia Commonwealth in the second round of the NCAA East Regional basketball tournament Saturday.

Banks canned a jumper with two seconds left to give the Bulldogs the victory in their first NCAA competition ever. The Bulldogs, 22-9, will move on to Syracuse for the East Regional semifinals where they will face the winner of Sunday's Rutgers-St. John's game at Hartford, Conn.

Earlier, eighth-ranked and second-seeded North Carolina claimed a 68-49 victory over James Madison to move on to Syracuse. The defending national champion Tar Heels, 27-7, will play either Syracuse or Ohio State next Friday night.

"I looked for the shot and fortunately it went down for me," Banks said. "I really needed that shot personally. It was the biggest one I've ever made."

There was some doubt on the jumper as it appeared that Lamar Heard touched the ball while it was in the cylinder. Heard said he didn't touch it and Georgia coach Hugh Durham basically agreed.

"Naturally, I wouldn't say that Lamar touched the ball," Durham said. "If he did, it was out of the cylinder."

Virginia Commonwealth coach J.D. Barnett said he wasn't quite sure how the winning points were scored.

"The ball sure was hanging on the rim, and there were some hands up there hitting it," Barnett said.

The Bulldogs held a 50-41 lead with 11:33 remaining on a Vern Fleming jumper. Virginia Commonwealth rallied with eight unanswered points and later took a 54-52 lead on Randy Corker's short jumper with 1:59 left.

Georgia tied the score on a Terry Fair layup with 1:31 left, then got the ball back when Calvin Duncan was called for traveling and held for the last shot.

Virginia Commonwealth built a 19-13 first-half lead as Duncan did most of the work. Georgia rallied to tie on Gerald Crosby's layup with 5:40 left.

Fleming's baseline jumper at the 1:57 mark gave Georgia a 27-25 lead and Donald Hartry's two free throws extended the lead to four with 1:13 remaining.

Corker's two free throws three seconds before halftime cut Georgia's lead to two.

Fleming led Georgia with 16 points, Banks added 14 and Crosby 11. Virginia Commonwealth, 24-7, got 14 points from Fred Brown, 13 from Duncan and 10 from Michael Brown.

Rose Thinclads Win Five Events, Snap Two Marks

HILLSBOROUGH — Rose High School's tracksters set two new meet records and won five events on the way to the championship of the Orange Relays Saturday.

William Waugh set a new standard in the shot put with a winning heave of 52 feet, 6½ inches. The old record was 50 feet, 6⅜ inches.

The other record came in the 400-meter relay, where the team of Craig Dupree, Roderick Harrell, Kevin Michaels and Edward Frazier finished in 42.3 seconds. The old record was 43.5 seconds.

Rose also took first place in the Special 800-meter run, as John Byrd captured that in 2:02.61, and in the Special 3200-meter run, with John Ormond winning in 10:02.48. Both runners received special plaques for their victories.

Rose's other win came in the distance medley, where the team of Charles Godley, Byrd, Paul Bolen and Ormond teammed up for an 11.02.5 timing to take first place.

Other results saw Rose's Donnell Lee take fourth and Roswell Streeter finish fifth in the high jump, both leaping six feet; Tommy Sparkman finish second in the triple jump with a leap of 44 feet, 3¼ inches; the 1600-meter relay team of Harrell, Dwayne Speight, Godley and Sparkman take fifth, time unavailable; and the sprint medley relay team of Frazier, Dupree, Michael and Bolen take fifth in 3:48.

Rose finished the day with a total of 68 points, beating out Richmond County, which had 61, for the title. A total of 15 teams participated in the event.

Rose returns to action on Tuesday, hosting Northern Nash in a dual meet.

Utah Stuns Bruins, 67-61 In Western Regionals

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Two months ago, Utah's basketball team had a 7-10 record and clearly was going nowhere fast.

Even when the Utes turned their season around by winning nine of their last 12 regular-season games to gain a share of the Western Athletic Conference title and an NCAA tournament berth, Utah and its 16-13 record were taken lightly.

But the Utes, relishing their underdog role, answered their critics with a 67-61 upset over seventh-ranked UCLA Saturday in a second-round game of the NCAA West regional basketball tournament.

Senior Pace Mannion sank five clutch free throws and set up two uncontested baskets with timely passes to spark the upset.

"I have dreamed about playing UCLA my whole life," said Mannion, a 6-foot-7 forward-guard. "You know, I wasn't nervous coming into the game at all. I figured we had nothing to lose because we were the underdogs."

Utah Coach Jerry Pimm echoed Mannion's sentiments. "The pressure was on UCLA, not on us," he said. "We were picked to finish sixth in our conference. We were the underdog today and we will be again next week in Ogden. We'll go just as far and be just as loose as we can."

Pimm said the Utes had two goals — to stop the Bruins' fast break and to prevent UCLA from getting second shots — and were successful at both.

Pimm said the Utes, who scored a mild upset with a 52-49 decision over Illinois in first-round action Thursday night, went into their delay with five minutes to go against UCLA "so we could work the clock and give UCLA a chance to pick up the fouls to put us into the bonus."

"We were the best free-throw shooting team in our conference, and I have a lot of confidence when we are at the line."

The loss spoiled UCLA's return to the tournament after a rare absence last season when the Bruins were on probation.

"Reflecting on the season, I don't recall a time when we shot so poorly," said UCLA Coach Larry Farmer. "This team has been able to score all season long, but we couldn't get into the rhythm.

"Down the stretch, I thought our defense was very good, but they (Utah) shot the ball very well. Give Utah a lot of credit, they played well."

Fourth-ranked Virginia defeated Washington State 54-49 in an earlier second-round game here Saturday as Utah and Virginia both advanced to the West semifinals next Thursday in Ogden, Utah.

Mannion, Peter Williams and Angelo Robinson each scored 18 points as the unheralded Utes, seeded 10th in the West, outplayed the favored Bruins, the tournament's second seed, down the stretch.

Utah, 18-13, will play the North Carolina St.-Nevada-Las Vegas winner, while Virginia advances to play the Boston College-Princeton winner.

Robinson's jumper put Utah ahead for the final time with five minutes remaining, and the Utes then went into a delay game, forcing UCLA to foul.

Mannion sank three free throws to give Utah a 60-55 lead with 1:50 remaining. Nigel Miguel subsequently hit two free throws for the Bruins, reducing the deficit to three points.

Mannion then threw an inbounds pass three-quarters of the length of the court to a wide-open Williams, whose slam with 1:16 remaining put Utah on top again by five points.

After a free throw by Utah center Chris Winans and a rebound basket by UCLA guard Ralph Jackson, Mannion converted two more free throws with 24 seconds to go for a 65-59 lead. Seconds later, Mannion batted a loose ball out to center court, from where Utah guard Manuel Hendrix raced in for a clinching basket.

The first half was tightly contested, with Utah taking a five-point advantage midway through the half. But UCLA rallied to score the final five points, taking a 34-32 lead at intermission.

Baskets by Kenny Fields and Rod Foster early in the second half staked the Bruins to a 40-35 advantage, but Mannion then twice fed Winans for easy baskets underneath to make it close again.

UCLA, which finished its season at 23-6, was paced by Fields with 18 points and Foster with 14. The Bruins, who shot 59 percent from the floor in the first half, managed just 30 percent in the second half and made only four field goals in the final 10 minutes of the game.

Amarillo beat Gadsden (Ala.) 60-54 for fifth place, and Lake Region (N.D.) defeated Dekalb Central (Ga.) to finish seventh. Northwest Mississippi met Cumberland (Tenn.) later for the title game.

Beddingfield Nips Greene

SNOW HILL — Wilson Beddingfield pushed over a run in the top of the seventh, then held off Greene Central to claim a 6-5 baseball victory over the Rams Saturday.

Beddingfield took the lead in the top of the first inning, scoring three times.

The Rams, however, rallied for one in the bottom of the frame. Terry Goff doubled, moved up on an out and scored on a wild pitch.

The Bruins added a single run in the top of the second for a 4-1 lead, but Greene Central came up with one in the fourth before tying it up with two in the fifth. Goff opened the fifth with a single and Chris Suggs banged a two-run homer to make it 4-4.

Beddingfield went back out with one in the sixth, then got the game-winner in the seventh. Woody Mercer led off the fateful frame, getting hit by a pitch. Roger Batts reached when his sacrifice bunt was errored, moving Mercer to third. He then scored on Neal Ferrell's fielder's choice.

Greene Central rallied for one in the bottom of the seventh, but failed to knot it again.

Vikings Down Williamston, 6-2

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley's Vikings won their third straight baseball outing of the year yesterday, downing Williamston, 6-2.

The Vikes fell behind in the top of the first as Williamston scored the first run of the game. Daniels reached on an error and stole second. He then scored on Gray Thomas' single.

The Vikings bounced right back, however, scoring twice in the bottom of the first. Steve Mills reached on an error, scoring on a double by Chris Via. After a balk moved Via to third, Todd Rouse grounded out, allowing Via to score.

Conley came up with the game-winner in the third. Rouse led off with a single and was sacrificed up. He scored when John Brown singled.

Conley went on to add three more in the fifth, after Williamston had scored a run in the top of the frame.

Conley's hitting was led by Mitchell Cox and Via, each with two hits. No one had more than one for Williamston, which got only three off the Viking hurlers.

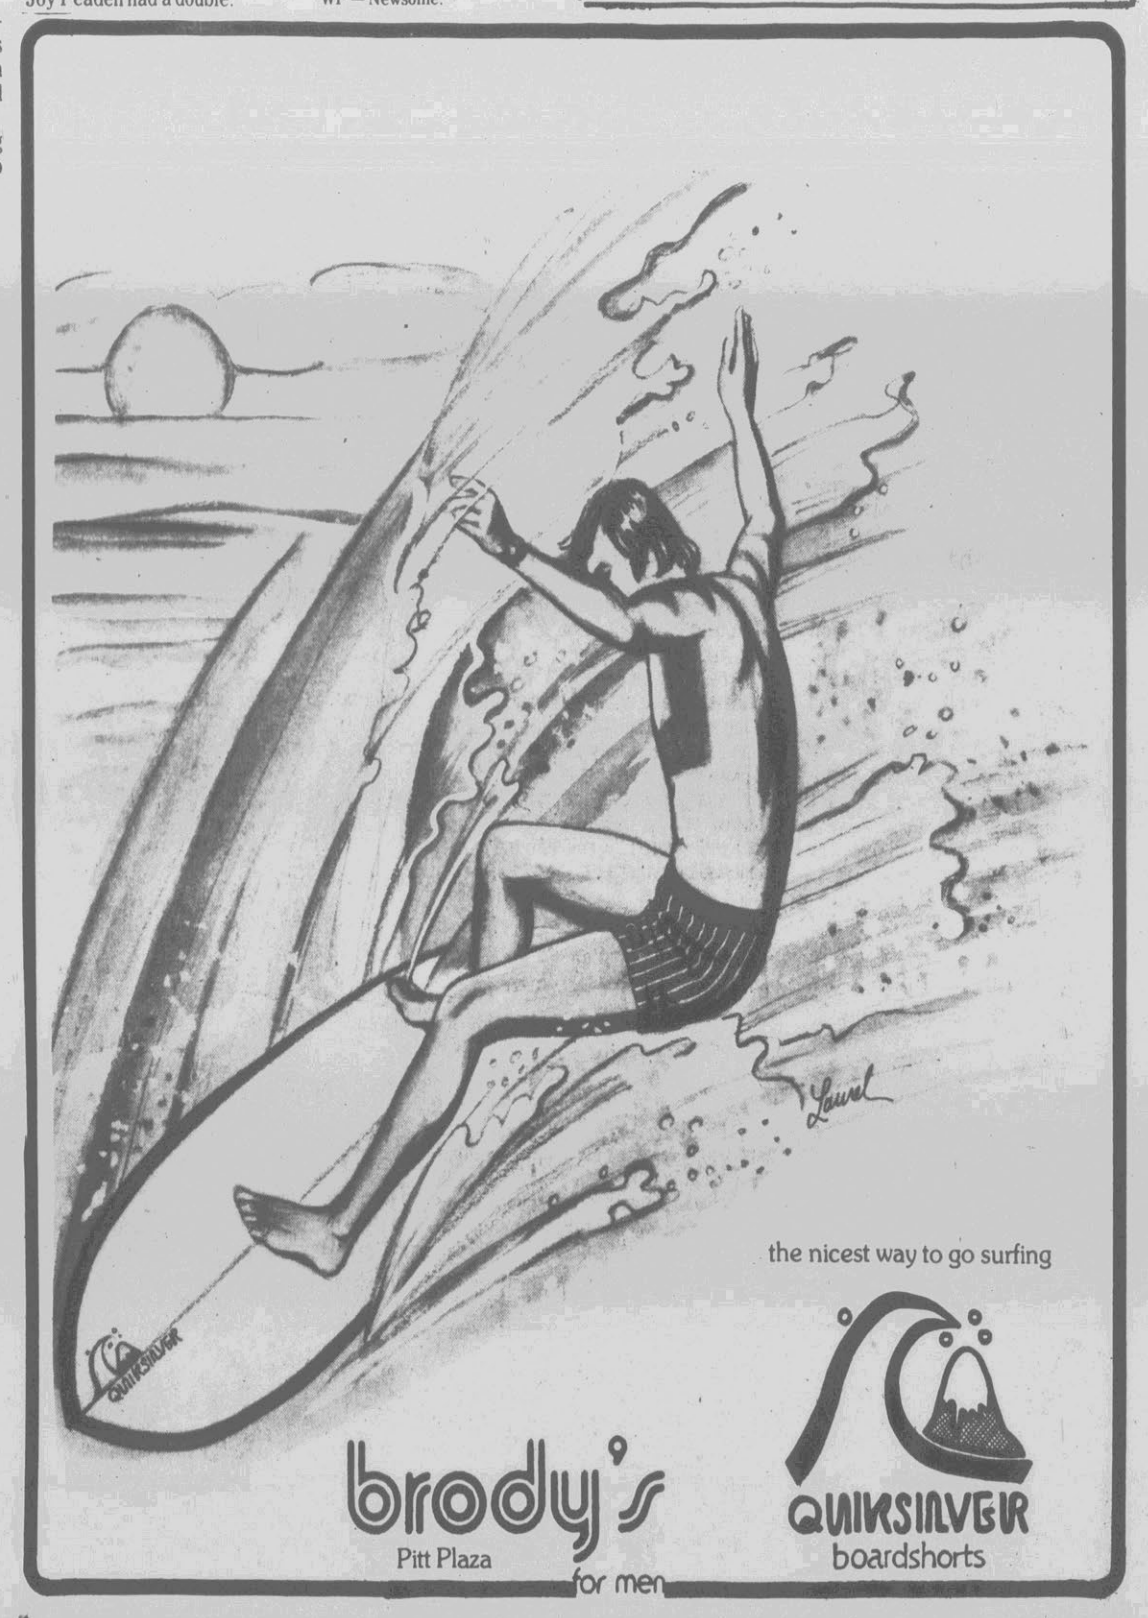

Conley, 3-0, travels to Ayden-Grifton on Tuesday, while the Tigers, 1-1, have a make-up game with Ahoskie on Monday in Williamston.

Arkansas Speed Too Much For Purdue

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Ninth-ranked Arkansas' speed and quickness proved to be the difference Saturday as the Razorbacks squandered a 10-point second half lead, but recovered to oust Purdue 78-68 in the second round of the NCAA Mideast Regional basketball tournament.

"When you've got speed, you can run away from mistakes," said Coach Eddie Sutton of the Razorbacks.

"It was their quickness against our strength, and quickness won out," said Purdue Coach Gene Keady, a former assistant to Sutton at Arkansas. "That is true in most team sports."

Alvin Robertson, the "other" guard in the Arkansas arsenal generally pegged a notch below Darrell Walker, outdid the second team All-American to spark the victory.

Robertson had 26 points and also had eight steals to key a pressing defense that forced the Boilermakers into 23 turnovers and also produced 12 steals for the Hogs.

Sutton said he thought his team had the game under control in the first half "but they came at us in the second half and we got stagnant. This team has "character, too, and turned it around."

The victory sends the Razorbacks into the regional semifinals at Knoxville, Tenn., against the winner of Sunday's Louisville-Tennessee game.

In an earlier second-round contest, No. 12 Kentucky pulled away late to down Ohio University 57-40.

Arkansas, 26-3, appeared to have the Boilermakers on the ropes with a pressing defense that produced steals and turnovers and enabled the Hogs to build a 41-31 lead with 17:34 to play.

But, Purdue, finishing 21-9, fought back to cut the lead to 48-47 as Jim Rowinski and Jim Bullock each scored six points.

The Boilermakers took their first lead since the opening minutes on two free throws by Steve Reid that made it 49-48 with 10 minutes to play. Purdue then built a 53-48 lead on a layup by Greg Eifert and two more free throws by Reid before Arkansas came back to win behind a spurt keyed by Darrell Walker and Robertson.

Ricky Norton's two free throws with 4:22 to play put the Hogs ahead to stay at 59-57. Walker had five points and Robertson four in the comeback that deadlocked it at 57.

Walker, a second-team All-American, finished with 22 points and Joe Kleine added 12 for Arkansas, appearing in the NCAA tourney for the seventh year in a row.

Russell Cross, playing despite an ailing back, led the Boilermakers with 22 points. Rowinski, Bullock and Reid each had 12 points.

Jittery Kentucky Rolls To 57-40 Mideast Victory Over Ohio Five

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Coach Joe B. Hall of 12th-ranked Kentucky called it "our typical tournament-opening jitters" after watching his Wildcats struggle to a 57-40 NCAA Mideast Regional basketball victory over Ohio University Saturday.

"I'm glad we got it out of the way and were successful," said Hall. "I hope we never play this way again."

Kentucky struggled with the Bobcats' deliberate style most of the afternoon before taking control in a second-half burst sparked by Dirk Minniefield and Melvin Turpin.

"It's good to get this one under our belt," said Minniefield. "It should help our confidence. It will make us looser next week."

Coach Danny Nee, who steered Ohio to a school-record 23 victories this season, said his team "did the things we wanted to go, but I think there were too many Wildcats out there. Their talent showed in the end."

Nee had noted earlier this week that his team beat DePaul on St. Valentine's Day and won in Tampa on St. Patrick's Day.

"But St. Joseph or St. Jude didn't come through today," Nee said, referring to the saint whose day is celebrated Saturday and to the patron saint of lost causes.

The victory, snapping a three-game NCAA losing streak for the five-time national champion Wildcats, sends Kentucky into next week's regional semifinals at Knoxville, Tenn., against the winner of Sunday's Indiana-Oklahoma contest.

Ohio, the Mid-American Conference tournament champion, used a slow tempo to stay with the heavily favored Wildcats most of the day.

Kentucky was leading 27-23 with 13:50 to play when the Wildcats went on an 11-3 run for a 12-point lead. Turpin had five points in that spree and Minniefield added four and also contributed a lob pass that freshman Kenny Walker laid in for the other basket.

Ohio, finishing 23-9, never was able to come within eight the rest of the game, and Kentucky never led by more than 12 until scoring the final eight points of the game in the last minute to provide the 17-point margin of victory.

Minniefield led Kentucky, 22-7, with 16 points and Turpin contributed 14.

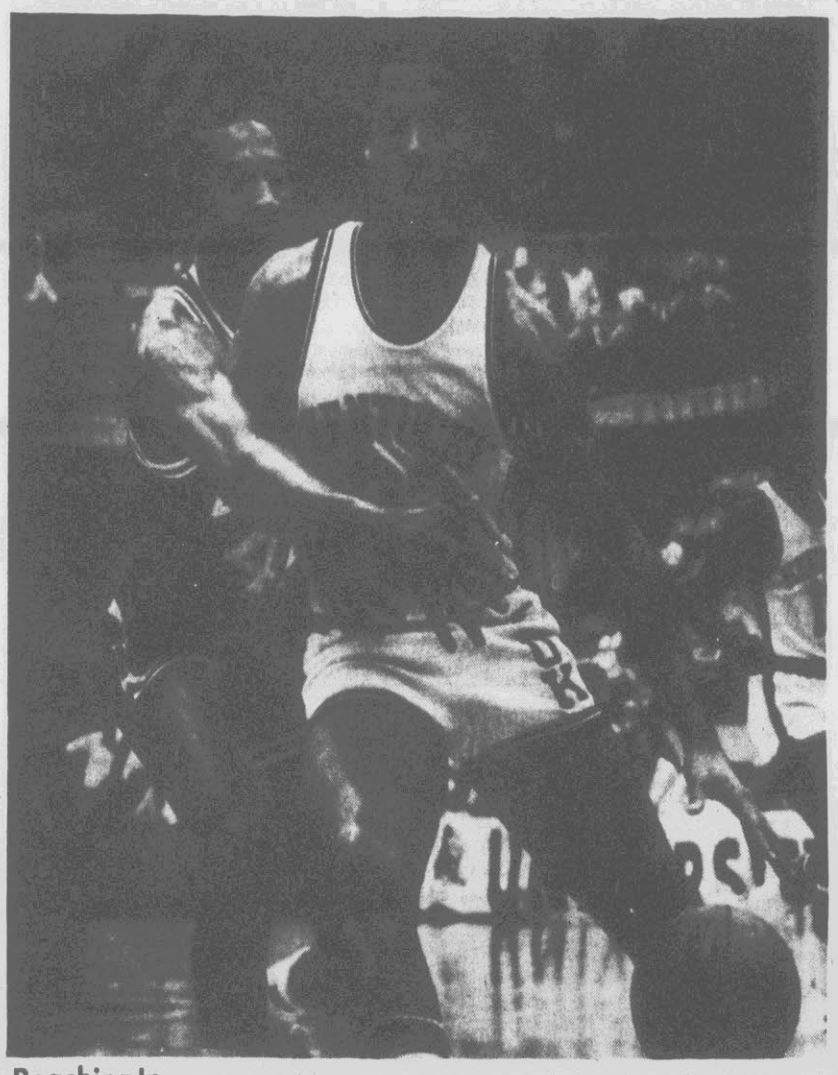

Jim Master, who bombed in four long shots in the first 11 minutes of play, finished with 10 for the Wildcats, winners of their 34th Southeastern Conference championship this season.

John Devereaux, who fouled out in the final minute, led the Bobcats with nine points and freshman Robert Tatum, who hit the 15-foot buzzer shot Thursday night to beat Illinois State, added eight.

Houston Outstalls Terps, 60-50

HOUSTON (AP) — The No. 1 Houston Cougars, who love to run-and-gun, showed Maryland Saturday they can also play stall ball.

The Cougars turned the Terrapins' slowdown tactics against them and advanced to the NCAA Midwest Regional semifinals with a 60-50 victory.

"We practiced on that (the delay game) all week because we knew they might try it," said Michael Young, who led the Cougars with 16 points. "We knew we had to play good defense to break it up and we did."

Houston Coach Guy Lewis said "If you asked me I'd say it was a boring game but I'll take it anytime it's a win. I thought we reacted with poise."

Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell said "They have a better team than us and they proved it. We went to the stall because we just don't have as much talent as they do and we felt like we couldn't run with them."

Houston assistant coach Terry Kirkpatrick said "Lefty tricked himself with that slowdown. He thought he was going to lull us to sleep but it backfired."

Maryland's Jeff Adkins said "Our game plan would have worked if we had just hit the inside shots. That was our only chance and we knew it.

"We thought it was going to work but ..."

Houston will meet the winner of the Georgetown-Memphis State game in the Midwest semifinals.

Villanova nipped Lamar University 60-58 in the other Midwest second round game at The Summit and will play Sunday's winner of the Missouri-Iowa tussle in the semifinals.

Houston hit its first five field goal tries and made clutch free throws in the second half as the Cougars slowed the game down themselves in the cat-and-mouse affair.

Seven-foot Houston center Akeem Olajuwon scored 12 points before he got into foul trouble and freshman guard Alvin Franklin made four of six free throws.

Maryland, 20-10, was led by Adrian Branch, who scored 20 points, and Len Bias, who had 12. Maryland, which beat No. 15 Tennessee-Chattanooga in a first-round game, played without Herman Veal, a starting forward this season, who was put on disciplinary probation by the school before the tournament because of a campus incident.

It was Houston's 23rd consecutive victory and boosted the Cougars' record to 28-2 for the season.

The Terrapins of the Atlantic Coast Conference sprung a deliberate offense on the Cougars to start the game.

Maryland led by as many as five points before Young hit four straight buckets to give the Cougars a 26-24 lead at intermission.

The Southwest Conference champion Cougars had averaged 84 points per game, but Maryland's delay tactics took away their run-and-gun style.

Maryland held the ball for almost five minutes at the start of the second half with the crowd yelling, "boring, boring." Once the Cougars got the ball, they held it until they got clear, close shots.

Villanova Shoves Lamar Out Of NCAA Playoffs

HOUSTON (AP) — Villanova's one-two punch of John Pinone and Dwayne McClain finally shoved upstart Lamar out of the NCAA Midwest Regional basketball playoffs Saturday as the Wildcats settled for a 60-58 decision when the Cardinals refused to be knocked out.

"You've gotta give Lamar credit for hanging in there," said Pinone, who directed Villanova's pounding inside game. "We threw the ball away. We just didn't handle the pressure very well. But we'll do a better job next week."

After cruising to a comfortable lead with seven minutes to play, Lamar awoke in the final minutes to make it close.

"I thought we had a real sinking spell with 15 minutes to go and with five minutes to go," Lamar Coach Pat Foster said. "My biggest disappointment in the game was that we just wore down. It was due to the high emotional level of the last game. I guess it burned us out a little but we showed a lot of pride to make the comeback we did."

While Pinone controlled the inside, McClain was busy driving the lane.

"Lamar was a tough team," McClain said. "We didn't shake them up like we wanted to. We were trying to work the ball inside the whole game because of our height advantage and it worked pretty good."

Villanova hit its first eight shots of the game and forced the Cardinals to shoot over a tight 2-3 zone defense.

The Cardinals, 23-8, made one late surge, hitting the last eight points of the game before yielding to the Wildcats, who advanced to the Midwest Regional semifinals Thursday night in Kansas City, Mo., against the winner Sunday's game between Iowa and Missouri.

Villanova, which had lost three of its last four games coming into the tournament, was led by Pinone with 15 points and McClain, who drove through Lamar's defense for 14 points.

Tom Sewell, recovering from a hamstring injury, scored 16 points for the Cardinals and Kenneth Perkins led a late second half spurt to finish with 19 points.

The Wildcats built a 56-41 lead with seven minutes to play in ending the outmanned Cardinals' season.

The Wildcats, seeded third in the Midwest Regional, opened a 14-4 lead and were ahead 32-26 at halftime.

Lamar had earned a second-round berth by upsetting Alabama 73-50 on Thursday.

Rogers Grabs Two Shot Lead At New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Bill Rogers, winless for almost two years, said he played exactly the sort of round he wanted to play in taking the lead in the $400,000 New Orleans Open golf tournament going into Sunday's final round.

"If you could tell them you wanted to play a type of round, I couldn't do any better," he said after carding a nearly flawless 3-under-par 69 for a 54-hole total of 205.

"I put it in almost all the fairways, hit all the greens. I only scared bogey a couple of times," he said. "I had a lot of opportunities for birdies, and I made three."

Rogers said he felt he was in trouble only once Saturday. On the par-4 14th hole, he wound up in a bunker on his second shot, but blasted out to leave himself a six-inch putt, which he holed for par.

At 11-under-par, Rogers held a 2-stroke lead over Doug Tewell and David Edwards.

Three strokes back were Vance Heafner and Greg Norman, the world's hottest golfer over the past month.

Norman, playing only his second American tournament this year, is coming off victories in the Australian Masters and the Hong Kong Open, plus a second-place finish at Bay Hill last week.

The tournament, sponsored by U.S. Fidelity and Guaranty insurance company, is being played over the 7,080-yard course at Lakewood Country Club.

Rogers went into Saturday's round tied at 8-under with Mark Hayes, who bogeyed his fifth hole of the day and double bogeyed his ninth and 18th to slip four strokes back of Rogers' pace.

"I just didn't do anything right," Hayes said. "I double-bogeyed 9 and 18. What more can I say?"

Edwards carded a wildly erratic round of 69, getting birdies on four of his first eight holes, bogeys on three of his next five, then birdies on two of the four final holes.

"That's the way I've been playing — sort of hitting it and chasing it," said Edwards.

Tewell had a bogey and eight pars on his first nine holes, six birdies and a bogey on his back nine.

He missed putts of 12 feet on No. 7 and four feet on No. 14 to card the bogeys. Included in his birdies were putts of 25 feet on No. 12, 30 feet on No. 17 and 18 feet on No. 18.

He said that after the ninth hole, "I left my glove on. I couldn't get any feel, so I said to heck with feel, I'll just leave it on.

"You can bet that tomorrow, I'll leave it on."

Rogers hasn't won a tournament since 1981, when he won three.

Although he was in the money in 21 of the 23 tournaments he entered, he had only seven finishes in the top 10 last year.

At 7-under going into Sunday's final round were Lon Hinkle, Jim Simons, Wayne Levi and Jay Haas, who held a share of the lead with a 68 on Thursday's opening round but slipped off the pace with a 70 on Friday and a 75 on Saturday.

Tom Watson was in a five-man jam at 210, five strokes back, after a round of 71 on Saturday.

Scores after Saturday's third round of play in the $400,000 USF&G Open golf tournament, being played on the 7,080-yard, par 72 Lakewood Country Club course:

Darrell's Brother Captures 1st Win

Waltrip, starting only his seventh Darlington Dash series race, drive a Chevrolet Cavalier from the pole position to an easy victory over Fred Turner's Datsun SX-200 in the 150-kilometer event.

The teenager from Owensboro, Ky., averaged 116.419 mph on his way to picking up first-place money of $1,275. Mike Swaim, the only other driver on the same lap with the leaders, was third, followed by Ed Berrier and G.W. Gibson, all of them in Cavaliers.

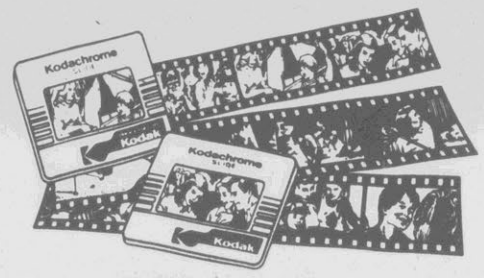

The 62-lap, 94.36-mile race was marred by a wild, five-car wreck that began when Larry Hoopaugh, running with the leaders, lost control and started spinning as he entered the main straightaway on the 22nd lap.

Mickey York hit Hoopaugh and they both veered into the inside wall. Cars driven by Art McBurnie, Stanley King and Carson Jenkins then got tangled in the wreck as they tried to slip past.

Hoopaugh, McBurnie, King and York all were checked at the infield medical center and released. Jenkins was taken to a hospital with what was believed to be minor shoulder and neck injuries.

Carew Says May Be Last Year

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Rod Carew, a seven-time American League batting champion who has hit over .300 in each of the last 14 years, said Saturday he may retire following the 1983 season.

Carew, who is only 328 hits short of 3,000 for his career, is in the final year of a five-year contract with the California Angels.

"There is a very good possibility I'd retire after this year if the Angels don't offer me a contract," he said before California's exhibition game with the Milwaukee Brewers. "I just don't want to have to go somewhere else and start all over again.

"People might think I'm crazy but I don't think I am. You can bounce around from team to team. I've seen so many players do that late in their careers and I don't want to do that."

Carew played 12 seasons with the Minnesota Twins before coming to the Angels in a trade before the 1979 season. The 37-year-old first baseman has a career batting average of .331, best among active major leaguers.

"People don't realize that we're human beings, that making a million dollars a year isn't everything," said Carew. "The money is nice, but it doesn't make me any different than a lot of other people.

"Not too many people understand, your kids start in a certain place and make friends. I don't think there's enough money in the world to pay for picking up your family, moving, my kids making new friends.

"It was a traumatic experience for us to move out here (from Minnesota to California) in the first place."

Carew, who has three daughters, said the Angels haven't approached him about a new contract.

"They have their policy," he said. "I don't know what's going to happen. It's like a waiting game now. I don't think about it and there's no pressure for me.

"I'm keeping a diary on this year just in case (he retires)."

Carew hit .319 last year despite suffering an injured hand on April 16 that bothered him for the entire season.

"I had three fractures in my right hand," he said. "I played with about 45 percent strength in the hand, I also had problems with a nerve in the hand."

How did he stand the pain?

"Tape," he replied with a smile. "It would have taken at least six weeks for it to heal, I didn't feel like I wanted to sit out that long. I was tempted to ask them (the Angels) to put me on the disabled list, but I never did. I hate sitting on the bench.

"It couldn't have gotten any worse. My only problem was that I didn't have any strength in my hand. It finally healed after the season was over."

Carew said he believes he's capable of having another year like the one he enjoyed in 1977, when he hit .388 for the Twins.

"The main thing is my health," he said. "If I'm healthy, I know I'll have a good year. The last four years I've been hurt. I played in Minnesota for 12 years and I was only hurt once.

"I've never counted it out (an eighth batting championship). I always feel like I'm going to lead the league."

If Carew retires after this year, that would mean he'd fall short of 3,000 hits for his exceptional career.

"It's nice to accomplish things, but I don't think these things should be the most important part of my life," he said. "I don't think I'll think about 3,000 hits until next year, if I play. I know I can do it in two years, if I play two years."

Four Capture Mat Titles

PEMBROKE — Four Pitt County wrestlers captured championships at the Tar Heel State Classic wrestling tournament at Pembroke State University Saturday.

Mike Long and William Bridgett, both from D.H. Conley, along with Eric Peoples of A.G. Cox Junior High, and James Johnson, a former Conley wrestler, all took championships.

Long won two matches and captured the championship at 191½-pounds, while Bridgett took the championship at 165, winning all three of his matches. Both competed in the Junior Division of the tournament.

Peoples, wrestling in the Kids Division, took the heavyweight championship, winning his title with a pin in the final match.

Johnson took his title in the Open Division at the 198-pound level, winning both of his matches.

Johnson will be competing in two national tournaments in the next few weeks. This coming weekend, he'll wrestle in the National Club tournament, to be held at the New York Athletic Club. He will represent the Wolfpack Wrestling Club of Raleigh in that.

On April 8-9, Johnson will compete in the U.S. Wrestling Federation Championships to be held in Chicago.

Leo Durocher, when he played shortstop for the New York Yankees in 1928, was nicknamed "The All-American Out" by his teammates.

Backboards in the National Basketball Association are 4 feet by 6 feet and must also be transparent.

"At the first of the season I didn't think we had the height to get this far," James said. "But I knew we were going to be faster than most of the teams we'd play. I only lost one senior from last year's squad, so I knew we had a chance. I'm just real happy for the girls right now.

"I know we're probably going to be smaller than the team from the west, but we're used to that."

17-foot jumpers to set the score at 39-37 with 1:42 to be played.

Cousin stepped to the free throw line and sank both ends of a one-and-one to give the Red Devils a 41-37 margin. Mark Keck and Jones added a pair of free throws each to give Graham an eight-point advantage.

Daniels connected from 14 feet for Roanoke with 13 seconds on the clock, but the late fouls again cost the Redskins as Wendell Stanton sank a pair from the charity stripe to set the final margin.

"The key to this ballgame," said Roanoke coach Clarence Atkinson, "was that we got behind, they backed their zone up and we missed the outside shots.

"Once they got a little working lead, they went to a little of a delay game and we were forced to foul. We let (Jones) catch the ball inside too much. But like I said last night, you can't put them on the free throw line and expect to win."

The Red Devils connected on 17 out of 22 attempts from the free throw line, while Roanoke only went to the line nine times hitting seven.

"Unless someone can get a workable lead on them," Atkinson said, "they're going to be hard to beat. They play a very smart game. They are very difficult to prepare for."

The lead changed hands 11 times in the first half, as neither team could put together back-to-back field goals. Gary Baker's baseline drive for a layup with 27 seconds left in the first quarter gave Roanoke a 14-13 lead going into the second period.

Roanoke Nips East Bladen By 53-52

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer

STANTONSBURG — "We had them on the ropes and came down five times and turned it over," East Bladen coach Sam Boger after his team's 53-52 upset loss to Roanoke High School in the semifinals of the Eastern Regional 3-A Conference Tournament at Wilson Bedingfield High School. "We had our chance; it just wasn't our night."

The Roanoke Redskins needed 13 points in the second half from Ricky Highsmith to erase a 27-22 East Bladen halftime advantage and advance to the finals against Graham High School. Spencer Bryant's free throws with 42 seconds remaining in the contest put the Redskins up 53-48 as the Cougars' rally fell short as Herman Roberts' desperation shot tipped the rim but was launched after the buzzer to dash the Cougars' hopes for the championship.

Roanoke led throughout the first quarter, but East Bladen controlled the middle periods before the final Redskin attack.

"We can't play with a lead," said Roanoke coach Clarence Atkinson. "If we get a working margin, things go kaboom. I don't know what happened on that last shot; I was on my knees with my face in my hands — hoping."

Graham surprised West Craven with a 66-60 upset in the opening game of the night. Rod Cousin netted 23 points and Tim Jones posted 20 including 12 out of 13 from the free throw line. Graham connected on 32 out of 39 attempts at the charity stripe for a blistering 82 percent to offset the 68 percent performance from the field by West Craven. Linwood Harris scored 19 and Ronnie Bellamy 17 for West Craven.

In contrast, Roanoke shot just 38 percent from the field and 63 percent from the line in its 24th victory in 27 outings. Highsmith led the Redskins with 19 points, followed by Donnie Wallace with 11 and Bryant with 10. Rodney Rhoda paced the Cougars with 20 points, while Thomas Beatty added 13.

Roanoke outscored East Bladen 10-2 over a 4:30 span of the third period to knot the score at 32-32 with 1:41 remaining. Wallace, Highsmith and Greg Everette combined for eight of those points off the offensive boards as the Cougars faltered offensively.

Rhoda's follow-shot of his own miss with 42 seconds left in the quarter ended a four-minute dry spell by East Bladen and gave the Cougars a 34-32 edge. A jumper by Gary Baker with 10 seconds on the clock tied the score at 34-34 going into the final period.

The Redskins took the lead 20 seconds into the fourth quarter on a field goal by Bryant, but Thomas Beatty answered with a move inside for East Bladen.

Everette's drive inside put the Redskins ahead to stay at 38-37 with 6:53 on the clock. Highsmith and Bryant added field goals to expand the Roanoke lead to five with 5:40 to be played, but Rhoda connected on pair of slick baseline drives with Highsmith adding a pair of free throws in-between to set the score at 44-41 with 4:18 left.

The Redskins missed an opportunity to put the game on ice with 4:05 remaining, as Bryant missed the front end of a one-and-one and Highsmith connected on one of two free throws awarded on a pair of technical fouls by Steve Moore. Roanoke missed the shot after the in-bounds play, and Highsmith was called for reaching in on the rebound.

"We should have taken advantage of that opportunity," sighed Atkinson. "That really could of cost us."

The Cougars connected on nine out of 10 free throws in the closing 3:51 of the game to hold close, but Highsmith swished a pair for Roanoke with 1:36 on the clock for a four-point advantage. Baker added a baseline drive before Bryant's free throws closed out the Redskins' scoring.

Rhoda connected on a pair of free throws to cut the margin to three with 18 seconds reamining, and Beatty hit a follow-shot with five seconds till the buzzer for the final margin.

East Bladen fouled Wallace with three seconds left, and he missed the first of a one-and-one. Roberts rebounded for the Cougars but failed to call time out as his shot sailed off-target.

"I had one (timeout) left and I told them to call it, but no one saw the signal," lamented Boger, whose team finished the 1982-83 campaign with a 21-3 record. "We just kind of lost our composure there for a while. The pace was to our advantage."

Roanoke (53)—S. Bryant 3 4-6 10, Baker 1 3-5 5, Duggins 0 0-0 0, Daniels 2 0-1 4, Highsmith 6 7-9 19, Peterson 0 0-0 0, Everette 2 0-0 4, Wallace 4 3-6 11. Totals 18 17-27 53.

George, McCulley Place, Gain All-America Honors In Nationals

LONG BEACH, Calif. — East Carolina Univeristy's Nan George became the first Lady Pirate to achieve all-America status in NCAA Division II swimming Friday afternoon, and JoAnne McCulley quickly followed suit. George, McCulley and a number of other Lady Pirate swimmers are competing in the Division II championships being held at Long Beach State University.

This is the first year the Lady Pirates have participated in NCAA swimming, having been a member of the AIAW last year, when they had eight to achieve all-America honors in that association.

George won her honors by placing seventh in the 50-yard freestyle in a time of 24.60 seconds. The top 12 in each event receive A-A honors. Last year, it took only a 16th place finish to make the AIAW list.

McCulley followed that up later that day by also making the list by finishing ninth in the 100-yard breaststroke in 1:09.47. That also established a new ECU varsity record, and her 50 split of 32.23 was another varsity mark.

Nancy Ludwig failed to place in the 200-yard individual medley in 2:22.1. Ludwin also failed to place in the 200-yard butterfly with a time of 2:17.2, while Abbey Schutz finished the same event in 2:18.1.

Jessica Feinburg did a 1:10.9 in the 100-yard breaststroke, with Kaky Wilson turning in a 1:13.7 but they failed to place.

The 800-yard freestyle relay team of Nancy James, George, Ludwig and Nancy Rogers did an 8:02.1, not placing.

Rene Seech was 35th in the one-meter diving, but her score was unavailable.

"I was real pleased," Coach Rick Kobe said. "The meet is incredibly fast. It's thrilling to get the school's first-ever NCAA all-America. (Saturday) is a good day for us too. I was pleased with Nan and JoAnne. They did a nice job."

In competition on Thursday, James, McCulley, Schutz and George did a 1.54.3 in the 200-yard medley relay; Feinburg and McCulley had identical times of 32.4 times in the 50-yard breaststroke; Rogers had a 1:58.0 in the 200-yard freestyle; Ludwig did a 1:01.35 in the 100-yard butterfly, with Wilson finishing in 1:03.2 and Sharon Holt turning in a 1:04.1.

Spinks Gains Decision Over Dwight Braxton

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Michael Spinks said he learned a long time ago he could beat Dwight Braxton.

He did it when it counted most Friday night, and became the undisputed light heavyweight champion.

The boxers first got acquainted when Spinks was an Olympic champ seeking to rise through the professional ranks and Braxton was a former inmate trying to make an honest living as a boxer. They would meet in Philadelphia gyms to polish their skills by hurling punches at each other.

Spinks says he intentionally overestimated his former sparring partner to prepare himself for their bout to unify the World Boxing Association and World Boxing Council titles at Convention Hall.

"I said he's going to be all over me. I worked as if there would be no end," said Spinks, who set aside a personal tragedy that haunted him only minutes before the fight, which he won in a unanimous 15-round decision.

On Jan. 7, just two days after he was charged with possession of an unlawful weapon, Spinks' common-law wife, Sandra Massey, was killed in a car crash on the Schuylkill Expressway in Philadelphia. He said he was reminded of her death by his 3-year-old daughter, Michelle, as he prepared to enter the ring.

"She leaned up to me and said, 'Where's Sandy?' It kind of took everything out of me," Spinks said. "I had nothing to tell her, but that I would be with her, always with her."

Before the fight, Spinks said he shed tears as he recalled his personal loss.

And moments after the fight ended, Spinks had his daughter at his side in the ring. He smiled and blew kisses to the crowd as he waited for the decision to be announced.

Judges Tony Perez and Frank Cappuccino gave the fight to Spinks, 144-141, while Judge Tony Castellano scored it 144-140.

"I expected (Braxton) to come out and run," Spinks said. "He came out walking. I said OK. I gave him targets and took them away. He had nothing to shoot at."

Spinks, 6-foot-2½, said his plan were to keep away from the little WBC champion, at 5-6¾ the smallest man ever to hold a light heavyweight crown. Braxton built his record by boring in on opponents, punishing them with body shots. But Spinks, 26, made it difficult for his 30-year-old opponent to have his way.

"I wanted to be like the television program with the guy Elliott Ness. 'The Untouchables.' That's what I wanted to be — untouchable. That's what I became," he said.

"I was in control the whole time. I beat him with my jab all night long. I won. I shut him out with one hand."

Spinks claimed that he duped Braxton into thinking that the fight would turn into what was billed as a "brawl for it all."

"I talked as if we were going to run head-to-head, like rams. That threw him off a little," Spinks said.

Braxton said he thought he had won the fight, but claimed he hurt himself more than Spinks did.

"I just didn't put out enough," said Braxton, 19-2-1 with 12 knockouts. "I'm only human. Believe me, he didn't beat me. I beat myself. I didn't fight my fight. I didn't stick to my plan — keep on top of him and be more snappy inside.

"I let him run and do a lot of hustling. I didn't press the issue. It was more or less a track meet.

"I'll be back. Believe me, I'm going to be back. I'll just go back to the drawing board."

Spinks dominated the fight, as he said, with his left hand. Whenever Braxton tried to attack the body, Spinks repelled him. One of the few rounds he looked like he was in any kind of trouble was the eighth, when he slipped and fell twice and was knocked down once.

Spinks, however, said the knockdown came when Braxton stepped on his feet.

"As he tried to swarm over me," said Spinks, 23-0 with 16 knockouts, "I caught him with jabs," just as his older brother, Leon, told him.

Leon Spinks, the former world heavyweight champion whose boxing career may have ended earlier this month with a cruiserweight loss to Carlos De Leon, ran up to his younger brother between rounds, screaming at him to jab more.

Michael Spinks said he had a pre-fight premonition he would be throwing a lot of jabs.

"I saw left hand after left hand, jabs with my left hand," he said. "I didn't see my right hand go. I saw him going out in the first round. That never came to pass."

However, he added, "My mission was accomplished."

Rain Again Hits Games

Rains and wet grounds again forced the postponement and cancellation of several athletic events in the area Friday.

East Carolina University's ECAC-South opener with George Mason was postponed and was to be made up as part of a doubleheader on Saturday. Also delayed until Saturday was a softball game between North Lenoir and Farmville Central.

Rescheduled for Monday were: Edenton at Roanoke baseball and softball; Ahoskie at Williamston baseball and softball; and Roanoke and Williamston at Ahsokie in boys' and girls' track.

Delayed until next Wednesday were: SouthWest Edgecombe at Conley baseball, Greene Central at Rose softball and Rose at Fike tennis.

No dates have been set for the replay of Greene Central at Rose baseball; Farmville Central at Beddingfield boys' track; and a baseball and softball game between Bear Grass and Jamesville; and a baseball game between Ayden-Grifton and West Craven.

A baseball game between North Lenoir and Farmville Central was cancelled, although there was some slight possibility that it might later be made up.

Gold Looking For First Win

By The Associated Press

"Good as gold" isn't saying much in the United States Football League.

"I feel like we're a team after a first exhibition game," said Coach John Ralston as his winless Denver Gold prepared for Sunday's game in Chicago against the Blitz. "We're making a hodge-podge of mistakes. It isn't one or two guys having the problems. It's spread across everybody in the lineup."

One member of the Denver lineup who hasn't had too much trouble is quarterback Ken Johnson. He replaced Jeff Knapple during last weekend's 21-7 loss to Boston and completed 15 of 27 passes and threw a touchdown pass. He'll be starting against the Blitz.

Sunday's other USFL games are Tampa Bay (2-0) at New Jersey (0-2) and Washington (0-2) at Boston (1-1). Saturday night's games were Los Angeles (2-0) at Arizona (1-1) and Oakland (1-1) at Michigan (0-2). Monday night's game is Philadelphia (2-0) at Birmingham (1-1).

Chicago expected to come home unbeaten after two games, but it was burned 30-29 in Arizona last weekend, thanks in part to erratic kicking by Frank Corral, the refugee from the National Football League's Los Angeles Rams. Corral has a damaged knee and, as a result, the Blitz has signed John Roveto, no stranger to Chicago's pro football fans. He kicked — sort of for the Bears.

"I never did too well in Soldier Field before," he said. "Maybe I'll do better now. Some people there love me and some people hate me. That's OK. I've hit the upright in Chicago a couple of times and the ball hasn't gone through. I figure Soldier Field owes me a couple."

In his last game with the Bears, he missed three field goals. The Bears lost 10-7 to St. Louis. He was cut once by them dufing the season but was re-signed later on. Similarly, he was cut by the Blitz during training camp and re-signed when Corral came up lame.

"I want to play for George Allen," he said of the Chicago coach. "The Blitz is the best team in the league and I've never been on the best team in any league."

The Generals make their home debut and they expect more than 40,000 to show up to see multimillionire tailback Herschel Walker — and to see if he can look like more than your average back.

"If I start getting 40 yards a pop, it's great for me," said Walker, ranked fourth in USFL rushing with 125 yards in two games. I want to be great and it would be great for the team to win. We both should complement each other ... I can get 6,000 yards, but if we don't have a winning season, it doesn't mean that much to me."

Tampa Bay has shown flashes of brilliance both on the ground and in the air. In their debut the Bandits' John Reaves, a retread from the NFL, passed for 358 yards and three touchdowns. The following week Greg Boone rushed 31 times for 157 yards. "They've played better than anybody I've seen to date," said Generals Coach Chuck Fairbanks.

The winless Federals are the USFL's walking wounded heading into Boston. Washington has lost three key starters — rookie quarterback Mike Hohensee with a bruised sternum, running back Craig James with a strained back and wide receiver Reggie Smith with a dislocated ankle.

Reserve quarterback Kim McQuilken, another NFL refugee, was ineffective last week in Hohensee's place, but Dick Coury, the Boston coach, observed: "They may be better off with McQuilken, who has more experience."

EC Golfers Are In 16th

GREENVILLE, S.C. — Clemson's golfers dominated play on Friday in the opening round of the Furman Invitational Golf Tournament, leading both the team and individual standings.

The Tigers had a combined team score of 280, five ahead of Mississippi State, in second with 285. Five further back were Furman and South Carolina, tied for third with 290. Campbell and Tennessee were knotted for fifth with 292.

East Carolina's golfers stood 16th in the field of 22 with a 305 score.

Clemson's Norman Chapman and Tony Nimmer were tied for the individual lead with 68's. Stuart Smith of Tennessee and Hugh Royer of Mississippi State were deadlocked at 69, while seven more golfers were tied with 70's.

East Carolina's best was Chris Czaja and Don Sweeting, tied with 75's, while John Riddle had 77, David Woodard had 78 and Mike Helms had 82.

The tournament was scheduled to wind up on Saturday with 36 holes of play to make up for being rained out on Thursday.

Georgia Boy After Victory

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — After finishing in second place last weekend for the fifth time, Bill Elliott hopes that competing before the home folks will give him the edge he needs to claim his first NASCAR victory.

Elliott, a native of Dawsonville, Ga., qualified for the third spot in the line-up for Sunday's Coca-Cola 500 stock car race at Atlanta International Raceway. During Friday's qualifying, Elliott drove his Ford Thunderbird at 166.309 mph, placing him behind Geoff Bodine and Buddy Baker.

"I'd really like to win here," Elliott said. "I believe the people would tear the grandstands down if I did."

Elliott, in his first year of running the full NASCAR schedule, made his strongest charge yet last weekend in the

State Wins In Double Overtime, 69-67

By The Associated Press

The Princeton Tigers apparently aren't in Oregon just to look at the scenery.

Not given much of a chance in the NCAA basketball playoffs, especially against 19th-ranked Oklahoma State, Pete Carril's textbook Ivy Leaguers took the measure of the Cowboys 56-53 Friday night in one of the truly stunning upsets of this year's tournament.

Eastern teams followed suit and made a strong showing in other first-round games Friday night as Syracuse, Georgetown and Rutgers all won in their respective regions.

Syracuse whipped Morehead State 74-59 and Rutgers stopped Southwestern Louisiana 69-53 in the East Regionals at Hartford, Conn. Georgetown defeated Alcorn State 92-62 and Iowa tripped Utah State 64-59 in the Midwest at Louisville, Ky.

In the first game of a doubleheader in the Mideast at Evansville, Ind., Tennessee knocked off Marquette 57-56. Oklahoma tripped Alabama-Birmingham 71-63 in the second game. Following Princeton's success at Corvallis, North Carolina State tripped Pepperdine 69-67 in a double-overtime thriller.

Rich Simkus sank four crucial free throws in the final 34 seconds to key Princeton's upset of Oklahoma State. The Tigers, who had to beat North Carolina A&T Tuesday night in an NCAA preliminary game to get to Corvallis, got 20 points each from Simkus and Craig Robinson.

"Our team has to have something from everyone to win," said Princeton Coach Pete Carril. "If we don't, then we have a lot of trouble. It's nice to have people respect you but it's more important to respect yourself and we have that."

Princeton beat Oklahoma State on a night when it gambled with a sagging defense and held the Cowboys' talented 6-foot-8 center Leroy Combs to 12 points, just four of them in the second half. Combs fouled out with 1:37 to go.

"In doing that sagging in on Combs, you give up outside shots," Carril continued. "Happily they Oklahoma State didn't make as many as they might have."

Dereck Whittenburg sank eight of 10 free throws in the second overtime to lift 16th-ranked North Carolina State over Pepperdine. The Wolfpack didn't make a field goal in the second extra period, but connected on 10 of 13 free throws to pull away for the victory.

Whittenburg topped the Wolfpack with 22 points.

Leo Rautins scored 21 points and collected six rebounds as Syracuse eliminated Morehead State.

The Syracuse zone defense intimidated Morehead State and limited the Eagles' high-scoring Guy Minnifield to only two field goal attempts in the first half. Minnifield, who finished with 12 points, didn't hit first field goal until 13:54 into the game. Syracuse led at halftime 37-27.

"Our strength is getting inside and they wouldn't let us do it," said Morehead Coach Wayne Martin.

Rich Brunson keyed a second-half rally as Rutgers overcame a nine-point deficit to beat Southwestern Louisiana. The Scarlet Knights had trailed by as much as nine points in the first half and Southwestern Louisiana led 33-27 at halftime before the Scarlet Knights came back behind Brunson, who scored seven points in the game. Clarence Tillman led Rutgers with 11 points.

"We finally started to run," said Brunson, talking about the Scarlet Knight's second-half rally. "Thanks to the steals and once we got the running game going, we were in good shape."

Patrick Ewing scored 19 points and hauled down 11 rebounds as No. 20 Georgetown held on to defeat Alcorn State. Alcorn State went ahead 40-38 early in the second half, its first lead since the early minutes of the game. But Georgetown went on a 20-6 spurt to build a 58-46 lead with 8:35 remaining and led the rest of the way.

"We needed to get the ball inside more," Alcorn State Coach Davey Whitney said. "But he (Ewing) rejected that first ball and then we were afraid to go inside."

Bob Hansen scored 24 points and Greg Stokes keyed a second-half streak that led Iowa to a comeback win over Utah State.

Stokes, who finished with 17 points, scored three baskets during a 14-2 run midway in the second half that wiped out a seven-point Utah State lead at halftime. Stokes' dunk with 8:09 left put Iowa ahead for good at 48-47 and the Hawkeyes were on top 53-47 at the end of their streak.

Michael Brooks' four free throws in the final 1:01 led Tennessee over Marquette. Tennessee trailed 51-46 with 5:51 remaining. Brooks' jumper made it 51-48 and the Vols did the rest of their scoring from the free throw line while the Warriors missed several one-and-one opportunities.

Chucky Barnett, picking up the slack for foul-plagued Wayman Tisdale, scored 26 points in leading Oklahoma over Alabama-Birmingham.

Tisdale, the 6-9 All-America freshman, finished with 17 points but sat out more than 12 minutes when in foul trouble and finally fouled out with 1:40 remaining. He had averaged 25.1 points this season.

Barnett, a 6-4 senior who only averaged 11.2 points, scored 16 of his points in the second half as the Sooners withstood a Birmingham comeback led by the outside shooting of McKinley Singleton and Luellen Foster.

"With Wayman on the bench somebody had to take the initiative," said Barnett.

"Oklahoma played us the way most of the teams played us," said UAB Coach Gene Bartow. "They packed it in and made us take those 15-footers."

Carolina 500, losing by half a car length to Richard Petty. It was Elliott's fifth close second-place finish in the past two seasons.

"He's ready to win," said reigning Winston Cup champion Darrell Waltrip. "All he has to do now is go out and do it."

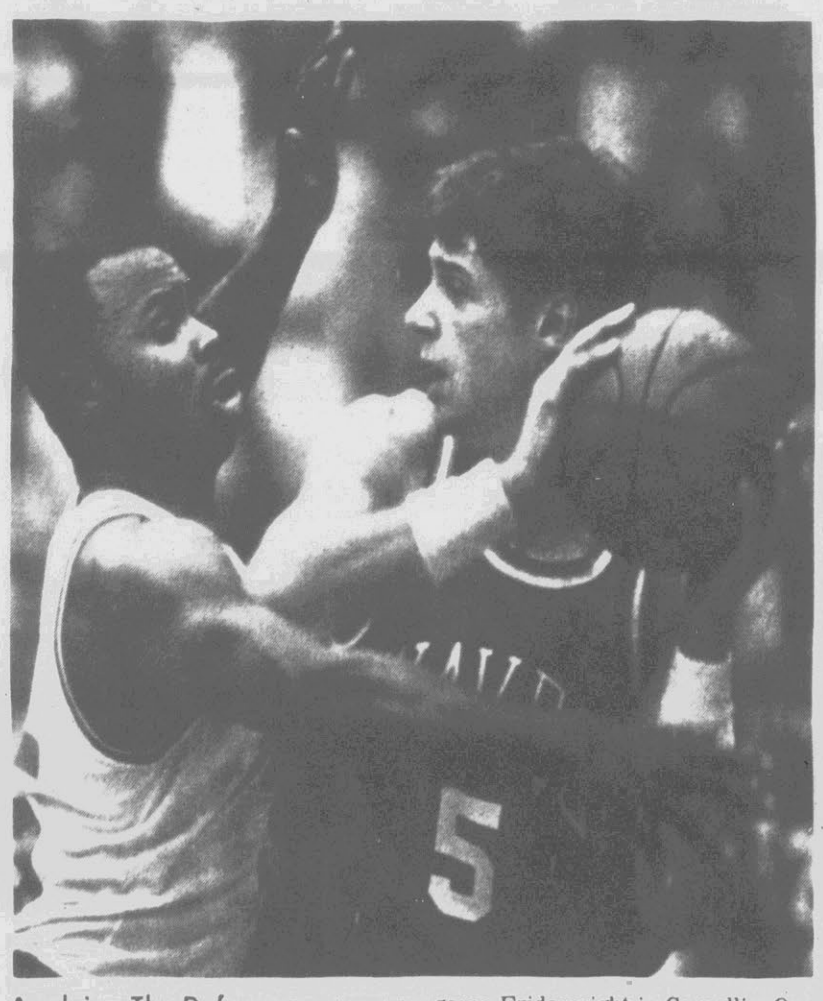

Both Petty and Waltrip have questioned Elliott's aggressiveness, although they said they believe he'll improve in that area with more experience.

Elliott admits that it has been difficult for him to overcome the caution he learned in six seasons of part-time Grand National circuit racing on a shoestring. During those years, he knew a wrecked car had to be paid for out of a family budget that also supported the racing of brothers Ernie and Dan.

But last year, Michigan industrialist Harry Melling bought the team, pumped in some big money and told the Elliott brothers to go to it.

"Last Sunday, that (old instinct) was totally out of my mind while I was racing Richard," Elliott said. "I made up my mind that I was going to do everything I could to beat him, or they were going to haul our car in with a tow truck.

"I did everything I could and tried everything I could to beat Richard," he continued. "If he'd made just one little slip I could have beaten him.

Season Ends For NAIA Cinderella Chaminade

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Chaminade's storybook season ended one chapter sooner than the young men from Honolulu had hoped.

Charleston, S.C., making use of a great height advantage on the boards, upset the top-seeded Silverswords 66-65 Friday night in the semifinals of the NAIA Basketball Tournament.

"I don't know what happened," said Chaminade forward Richard Haenisch. "The whole world came crashing down in one game."

The Silverswords, who electrified the college basketball world in December by defeating then-No. 1 Virginia, ended their season 32-4.

"We have exceeded our season goal by getting into the championship," said Coach John Kresse of 12th-seeded Charleston. "This has to be the greatest win ever for our school."

In the championship finals last night, Charleston met West Virginia Wesleyan, a bit of a Cinderella team itself. West Virginia Wesleyan, the only at-large entry in the 32-team tourney, used a fast-break offense to crush Fort Hays State of Kansas 71-56 in the other semifinal game Friday.

In the women's title game, defending champion and top-seed Southwestern State of Oklahoma went against Alabama-Huntsville. The Oklahoma school cruised to its second straight lopsided tournament victory Friday by downing Missouri-Kansas City 81-69, and Alabama-Huntsville came from behind to defeat Portland, Ore., 73-67.

Tim Dunham, one of the heroes of the Virginia game, led the Silverswords with 26 points and said they may have "been a little flat."

"I'm not taking anything away from them, though," he added. "They're a good team."

Charleston, with a 64-60 lead, played keep-away in the final two minutes until, with 50 seconds to go, Dunham stole a pass and fed to Mark Wells for a fast-break layup. Wells was fouled and made the free throw for a 1-point margin. But Charleston's Keith Coleman sank two free throws to pad the lead back to three points, and Earnest Pettway hit a bucket for Chaminade at the buzzer.

Coleman, a freshman, led Charleston with 18 points, and T.C. Sabbs came off the bench to score 10 points in the second half, including nine of his team's 11 points during one decisive stretch.

"To have a freshman go to the line at the end of a crucial game like that and show such poise makes the next three years look bright for us," Kresse said. "But tomorrow night is on our minds now. What a great opportunity for our team and our school."

Luck Helps Michigan St.

By The Associated Press

Michigan State is still in the National Invitation Tournament, thanks to a 10-foot shot by a 7-foot player.

"We feel very, very lucky to win," said Michigan State Coach Jud Heathcote after a last-gasp, 72-71 victory over Bowling Green Friday night. "I don't think our kids thought Bowling Green was as good a team as they are. But give Bowling Green credit. It's a finely coached basketball team."

The NIT tournament wrapped up first-round play Friday night, as Arizona State defeated Fullerton State 87-73.

Michigan State center Kevin Willis tossed in the winning basket for the Spartans with five seconds remaining.

"It felt really good — the best feeling I've had all week long," the 7-foot Willis said. "The coach said that whoever had the best shot, take it. I happened to have the best shot."

Bowling Green Coach John Weinert: "I am very proud of the way my players played. We gave away several inches (height advantage) all around, we thought we could win, but we didn't."

Willis, who finished with 16 points and 12 rebounds, hit his game-winning basket after Falcon guard Keith Taylor put Bowling Green ahead, 71-70, with the front end of a one-and-one free throw with 17 seconds remaining.

Neither team held more than a four-point lead in the second half with the lead changing 14 times after intermission. Overall, Bowling Green kept the game close by hitting 21 of 25 free throws.

Paul Williams poured in 26 points and Byron Scott added 24 as Arizona State held on to beat Cal State-Fullerton.

Scott, who had 15 second-half points, scored 10 in a 7:30 span to put Arizona State up 70-60 with eight minutes remaining in the game.The Titans, despite 10 points down the stretch by Leon Wood, could get no closer than four as Billy Jordan and Scott each sank four free throws apiece in the final 1:30.

"Paul really got us going," saim Arizona Coach Bob Weinhauer. "He did the job inside on Fullerton, which was our plan from the start. We also stopped their penetration and did a great job on the boards."

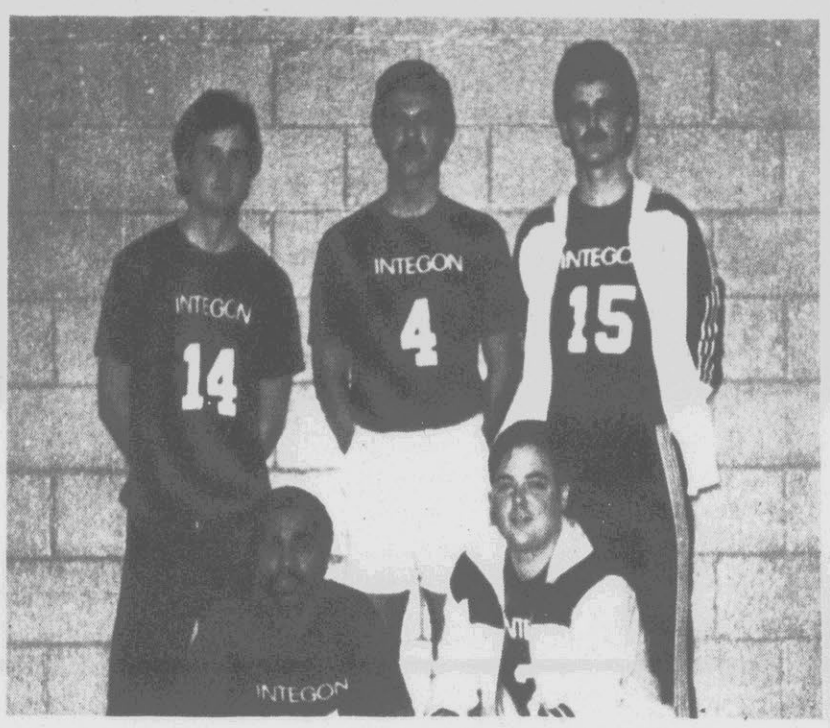

The Sun Devils enjoyed a 52-42 rebounding advantage, much to the dismay of Titan Coach George McQuane.

"They were aggressive on the boards and they played to their strengths — the transition game and offensive rebounds," he said. "It was an up-tempo game and I thought we played hard. But there is a difference between playing hard and playing well."

In other second-round games Monday night, it's Virginia Tech at South Carolina, Wake Forest at Vanderbilt, South Florida at Mississippi, Iona at Nebraska, Northwestern vs. DePaul at Rosemont, Ill., and New Orleans at Oregon State.

Righthander Bob Miller holds the big league record for pitching with the greatest number of teams. Miller worked for 10 clubs, winning 69 and losing 81.

Celtics Crush Nets To Retain Second Position

By The Associated Press

The Boston Celtics, who aren't accustomed to fighting for second place, took it out on the team trying to catch them.

The New Jersey Nets hoped to take advantage of a Boston slump to pull within two games of the Celtics in the Atlantic Division, but instead found themselves four games behind after a 116-103 defeat Friday night.

The victory snapped a four-game losing streak for Boston, its longest in four National Basketball Association seasons. The Celtics did it with the kind of intensity fans have become accustomed while the team won three straight division championships and one NBA title.

"We had to come out like we were on a 10-game winning streak and we were going for 11," Boston Coach Bill Fitch said. "We had to be aggressive."

In other NBA games, Atlanta bombed Cleveland 97-73, Detroit trimmed Milwaukee 103-99 in overtime, New York beat Washington 106-100, Chicago crushed Portland 117-101, Los Angeles defeated Kansas City 109-96, Seattle mashed Denver 147-117 and Houston edged Golden State 122-120.

Larry Bird scored 23 points and keyed two Boston rallies that put away New Jersey.

He had six points during a 14-2 Celtics run that turned a 19-19 tie into a 33-21 lead. Then, after the Nets scored the first eight points of the second half to trim a 17-point deficit to 70-61, Boston responded with an 8-0 run of its own, as Bird scored seven.

"At times in this game I felt we finally played back to normal," Bird said. "Defense is the name of the game, and you get your running game going from that. You score a lot of points when your defense is working."

Kevin McHale, who added 19 points on 8-for-12 shooting for the Celtics, said the four-game losing streak might turn into a blessing.

"This might be the most positive thing that could happen," McHale said. "We had so much success, maybe we got a little spoiled. It might be good to remember how bad it actually felt and how terribly we played as a team.

He added, "We got very accustomed to winning and maybe we tried to take some shortcuts. The losing streak could be very good because we realize we can't take shortcuts."

The final margin was the closest New Jersey got after Bird restored the 17-point lead as the Nets scored the last 10 points of the game.

"We just weren't ready," Nets guard Michael Ray Richardson said. "That's what separates us from Boston, I guess."

Darryl Dawkins scored 19 points and Albert King added 15 to lead New Jersey. Boston guard Quinn Buckner had 17 points, all in the first half.

Sonics 147, Nuggets 117

Kiki Vandeweghe scored 31 points and reserve forward Greg Kelser added a season-high 30 as Seattle stopped Denver's 11-game winning streak.

The Sonics' fifth straight victory ended the Nuggets' winning streak one shy of the club record of 12. The 30-point margin was Seattle's greatest ever over Denver and its 147 points broke by one a team record equalled three times previously.

Rockets 122, Warriors 120

Elvin Hayes became the NBA's third leading career scorer and Houston celebrated by breaking a nine-game losing streak on Wally Walker's 20-foot jumper with four seconds remaining.

Hayes scored 10 points, and he passed Oscar Robertson on the all-time scoring list with a total of 26,716. Hayes, who has played for 15 years, trails only Wilt Chamberlain and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

Alan Leavell led the Rockets, who won only their 12th game in 67 outings, with 28 points while Walker had 20, including six in the final two minutes.

Lakers 109, Kings 96

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 35 points to lead Los Angeles to its sixth consecutive victory, while Kansas City dropped its fifth straight.

Abdul-Jabbar had 20 of his total in the second half and helped the Lakers build a 75-57 lead midway through the third quarter.

Knicks 106, Bullets 100

Bernard King scored 22 points and Bill Cartwright 21 as New York beat Washington for its eighth straight victory.

Cartwright scored 15 first-quarter points to help the Knicks take a 29-23 lead and they extended the margin to 55-43 in the second period. The Bullets, who got 30 points from Jeff Ruland, closed the deficit to 100-98 late in the game, but Ernie Grunfeld had four points in the final minute to seal the outcome.

Pistons 103, Bucks 99

Kelly Tripucka scored 14 of his 29 points in the fourth quarter and added nine more in overtime as Detroit scored the final nine points of regulation and then beat Milwaukee in the extra period.

Tripucka started the 9-0 burst by Detroit in the final minutes that tied the game 91-91 at the end of 48 minutes, then scored nine of the Pistons' 12 points in overtime to give them their second victory in the last nine outings.

Threat To Wild Turkeys — The wild turkey, its statewide population decimated by destruction of habitat and overhunting in the early part of this century, is on the comeback in North Carolina, but according to wildlife officials the expansion of turkey numbers is being threatened by a few well-intentioned but misguided turkey enthusiasts.

According to Brian Hyder, the wild turkey specialist for the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, the wild turkey population in North Carolina has nearly doubled in the past ten years as a reusIt of changes in the turkey hunting season, better protection and an expanded turkey stocking program.

He says that the expansion of wild turkey numbers is being threatened, however, by individuals who are raising semi-wild turkeys and releasing them in nearby woodlots.

"There are several serious problems with releasing pen-raised turkeys to the wild," said Hyder. "Foremost among these is that releasing pen-raised birds is not an effective way to establish a turkey population in the wild. The Wildlife Resources Commission released thousands of pen-raised "wild" turkeys back during the 1930s and '40s. None of them survived to establish a reproducing population of turkeys."

Hyder said that releasing pen-raised turkeys to the wild is a use of energy and resources that could be better channeled into more productive methods, "but more important than mischanneled energy and resources is the threat that pen-raised turkeys cast over our expanding population of truly wild turkeys.

"Since 1970 we have live-trapped 520 wild turkeys from areas which have sizeable turkey populations and relocated them to 30 turkey restoration areas scattered across the state. These relocated birds, for the most part, have done well and are expanding their numbers and range.

"It has come to our attention recently that a few individuals in eastern North Carolina have released semi-wild turkeys adjacent to and in some cases in the same areas where native wild birds have been stocked. The problem with this is that pen-raised turkeys are often carriers of diseases such as blackhead, fowl pox and coccidiosis for which wild birds have little resistance. Past studies have shown that the introduction fo pen-raised turkeys into areas which have a population of wild turkeys generally means an elimination of the wild birds by disease.

"We have tremendous potential for the expansion of the wild turkey population in North Carolina," Hyder continued. "We have an estimated 10,000 birds in the state now but we have suitable habitat to support 40,000 or more, and that's the goal we're working toward. We need the support and involvement of all the state's turkey enthusiasts, but we all need to be working in the same direction, with proven methods, toward the same goal."

Hyder points out that it is illegal to release pen-raised turkeys to the wild in North Carolina and suggests that persons interested in wild turkey restoration contact the Wildlife Resources Commission at 512 N. Salisbury St., Raleigh, N.C. 27611, or join the North Carolina Wild Turkey Federation.

Outdoor Vacations Available — Are you wonderin what to do for a summer vacation? the National Wildlife Federation is offering a series of back-to-nature vacations this summer suitable for adults, families, teenagers and young chlidren.

Conservation Summits are offered for adults or entire families. These programs last six days and include workshops on birds, wildlife, wild flowers, map reading, geology, fly casting, environmental issues and many other topics. Free-time activities include tennis, horseback riding, square dancing, hiking and other sports. In addition, teachers and college students may receive college credit for attending these workshops.

This year, Conservation Summits will be held in four locations: the Blue Ridge Mountains of North Carolina, Rocky Mountains of Colorado, Adirondack Mountains of upstate New York and the Nova Scotia coast.

Earth Treks — designed for teenagers between 13 and 17 — are adventures in environmental exploration, backpacking, hiking and outdoor skills. Other topics will include wildlife biology, geology, forestry, folklore and stream biology. Earth Treks will be offered in the Rocky Mountains of Colorado and in western North Carolina.

Ranger Rick's Wildlife Camp — for children 9-13 years old — is offered in western North Carolina. Youngsters will learn about hiking, wildflowers, trees, birds, aquatic life and many other topics.

For more information, contact the National Wildlife Federation, Dept. PR2, 1412 16th St., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20036.

Cape Fear Marlin Tournament — The 1983 Cape Fear Marlin Tournament, one of the major springtime billfish competitions in the eastern half of the nation, will be held May 21-28, with cash prizes and special awards possibly exceeding $120,000.

Tournament headquarters is Wrightsville Marina, where registration and entry confirmation are to be completed by May 21. The entry fee is $300 per boat. This year's tournament is expected to draw 75 boats, with early entries already in from as far away as Key West, Fla.

This will be the tournament's 10th consecutive year, and for the first time, it will offer a $100,000 special award if a new North Carolina record is set for a blue marlin catch. The state record is 1,142 pounds, and was set July 26, 1974.

The prize list will cover blue marlin, white marlin, sailfish, dolphin, wahoo and tuna. For more information contact Mr. Archie Siler, Chairman, 4918 Wrightsville Ave., Wilmington, N.C. 28403.

Fishing Report — Reports afield reveal the spring fishing season might be starting. Striped bass are being caught near Edenton in the Albemarle Sound and around Washington in the Pamlico River. With the water level dropping, the hickory shad fishing should pick up around Grifton most anytime. Reports from commercial fishermen on the coast show good numbers of grey trout offshore. It will be mid-April before they move in.

Sambito, Buckner Head Injury List

By The Associated Press

Spring training is supposed to get pitchers and hitters in shape for the gruelling baseball season. This spring, trainers and doctors are getting plenty of work, too.

Here's the latest medical report, which is threatening to rival the National Football League's weekly injury list:

—Houston Astros relief ace Joe Sambito will undergo surgery on his left elbow for the second time in less than a year.

—First baseman Bill Buckner of the Chicago Cubs is suffering from a circulatory disorder in his right hand and will miss the rest of spring training.

—The Texas Rangers, who were concerned about their pitching going into training camp, had even more to worry about Friday when starter Danny Darwin checked into a hospital with an ulcer.

—And veteran pitcher Rick Reuschel of the New York Yankees, who missed all of last season because of two shoulder operations, pitched two shaky innings as the Yanks defeated the Texas Rangers 10-8 on Bobby Murcer's two-out home run in the ninth inning of a 'B' squad exhibition game. Reuschel allowed five runs, all in the second inning — three were unearned — and five hits.

"There was no pain, but I had no arm strength. I couldn't pop the ball when I wanted to," he said. "It wasn't as good as I had hoped, but I'm encouraged that I could pitch in game competition. When I threw last Saturday, it felt real good. I'm sure I was throwing better than I did today. I don't know it I overdid it that day and set myself back. But I threw today better than I did Tuesday."

However, owner George Steinbrenner called Reuschel's performance "sad. It's too early to tell, but it's sad."

Reuschel said he would probably give up his comeback attempt if he cannot pitch by July.

The Yankees got some good news in the pitching department when Shane Rawley allowed two hits in five scoreless innings as New York defeated Texas 10-5 in an 'A' game, with Dave Winfield driving in four runs with a homer and double. Rookie first baseman Don Mattingly drove in seven runs with a pair of homers, a sacrifice fly and a double in the 'B' contest.

Meanwhile, the Rangers said Darwin will be hospitalized a minimum of three or four days and will be out of action at least two weeks.In addition, starter pitcher Charlie Hough was operated on Friday for knee problems and will be on crutches several days before starting rehabilitation.

Houston's Sambito, the Astros' all-time earned run average leader, was to be operated on today at Indian River Memorial Hospital in Vero Beach, Fla., by Dr. Frank Jobe, who repaired ligament damage and removed bone chips from the elbow last July 7.Sambito had experienced irritation and numbness in the elbow.

On the field, the Atlanta Braves capitalized on three errors, including catcher John Mizerock's dropped ball at the plate that enabled Gerald Perry to score the winning run, to score five times in the ninth inning and beat the Astros 10-6.The tying run scored when shortstop Dickie Thon allowed a potential game-ending double play grounder to go between his legs.

Buckner's problem has caused numbness in the little finger on his right hand and Buckner has been ordered not to hit or field for two weeks. "At the end of that time he will be tested again and they'll decide what way to go," said Cubs general manager Dallas Green. If surgery is required, he said, it probably would be postponed until the end of the season.

Meanwhile, Jerry Manuel singled home the tie-breaker in a six-run eighth inning as the Cubs outlasted the Oakland A's 13-12.The A's made three errors in the inning and five of the Cubs' runs were unearned. Gary Woods' two-run double tied the score 9-9.

Elsewhere, Dallas Williams singled home the tying run and Ron Little knocked in the go-ahead run in the eighth inning as the Cincinnati Reds came up with four unearned runs defeat the Los Angeles Dodgers 8-6.

Bryan Little collected two hits, scored two runs and drove in one to lead the Montreal Expos to a 4-3 victory over the New York Mets.

Dave LaPointe and four other St. Louis pitchers held the Philadelphia Phillies to five hits as the Cardinals won 7-2.LaPoint pitched four hitless innings.

Carlton Fisk and Harold Baines hit three-run homers and Greg Luzinski drove in three runs with a pair of singles as the Chicago White Sox overwhelmed the Boston Red Sox 13-0 behind the five-hit pitching of Britt Burns, Dick Tidrow and Al Hrabosky.

Jim Palmer pitched six shutout innings to lead the Baltimore Orioles to a 2-1 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Gary Ward hit a three-run homer and drove in six runs to pace the Minnesota Twins to 14-9 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Kirk Gibson slammed a pair of solo home runs and Enos Cabell tripled home the winning run in the seventh inning as the Detroit Tigers defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 3-2.

Rick Manning's bases-loaded triple highlighted a five-run fourth inning as the Cleveland Indians downed the San Diego Padres 8-2.

The Milwaukee Brewers tied the California Angels 2-2 in a game called after five innings because of rain. The San Francisco-Seattle game was rained out.

Bodine On Coke Pole

The 34-year-old driver, who last year moved from Chemung, N.Y., to Pleasant Gardens, N.C., to be near the racing operation of team owner Cliff Stewart, Friday drove a Pontiac Grand Prix to a quick lap of 167.703 mph.

That was fast enough to grab the inside front-row spot for Sunday's 500-miler on the 1.522-mile banked oval at Atlanta International Raceway.

Buddy Baker, driving one of the sleek 1983 Ford Thunderbirds, took the other front-row position by turning a 166.632 lap.

"We made some chassis adjustments after the final practice session and it made a big diffrence, " said Bodine, the 1982 Grand National Rookie of the Year. "I had been running about a second slower but I knew that first (qualifying) lap was a lot better than the practice laps.

"I was a little nervous when I left the pits because you never know how the car is going to react to an adjustment. But it felt good in turns three and four when I came around for my warmup lap. So I just stood on it and it handled beautifully all the way around the track.

"It was a gamble," he said of the chassis adjustment, "and it worked."

Bodine, who crashed while leading last week's race at Rockingham, N.C., credited crew chief Darrell Bryant for his pole victory.

"He's had the car running just super for me all year. I used to help with the chassis, but now I concentrate solely on driving," Bodine said. "I think it has made me a better driver. I'm having a ball driving."

In all, 30 drivers put their cars in the lineup Friday. The first session of time trials, washed out Thursday, sorted out the top 15 and the second qualifying session added 15 more.

Bill Elliott, in a 1982 Thunderbird, took the third position at 166.309 mph, followed by Bobby Allison's Buick Regal at 165.966 and the Chevrolet Monte Carlo Super Sports of Joe Ruttman and Neil Bonnett at 165.906 and 165.845, respectively.

Two-time defending Winston Cup champion Darrell Waltrip was next at 165.575 in a Monte Carlo. Richard Petty, who picked up the 196th victory of his career last week at Rockingham, qualified 11th at 164.748 in a Grand Prix.

The quick qualifier in the afternoon session was Tim Richmond, who took the 16th spot at 166.198 in a Pontiac LeMans. Ricky Rudd, who had his string of pole victories broken at three, placed his Monte Carlo 20th in the grid with a disappointing lap of 163.081.

The rest of the 40 car field will be filled today.

The lineup for Sunday's Coca-Cola 500 Grand National stock car race, with type of car and qualifying speed in mph:

OPEC Price-Cutting Agreement Is Already Under Another Strain

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

LONDON (AP) — The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' historic agreement to cut prices 15 percent is less than a week old, and already it may be out of date.

Some oil exporters outside OPEC, including Egypt and the Soviet Union, have cut their prices below the $29-a-barrel set by OPEC last Monday. And many oil industry officials expect Britain to cut its $30.50 price soon, perhaps below OPEC's rate.

The result could be a new crack in OPEC's price system, and thus lower energy prices in the United States and other oil-importing nations. Many economists believe consumers would see substantial savings at the gasoline pump if the average price of crude oil dropped below the new level of $29 a barrel.

The $5 cut in OPEC prices meant little for American motorists because competition for gasoline sales already had driven the price down to a level that reflected a $29 oil price. Refiners are expected to keep most of the savings from OPEC's price cut.

Besides cutting its base price, OPEC said it would limit its overall production to 17.5 million barrels a day as an average for the rest of 1983. Also, all members except Saudi Arabia agreed to abide by a national quota for oil production. The idea was to limit sales in order to dry up the oil glut.

Saudi Arabia was assigned the role of "swing producer," meaning it would adjust its oil production up or down to balance supply with demand on the world market. In practice it means the Saudis will be forced to hold their production at the current depressed level for several months, many analysts believe.

The driving force behind OPEC's agreement was an overwhelming desire to prevent a price war and, in the longer run, to revive demand. It was the dropoff in demand in recent years that helped push prices lower.

"The latest OPEC accord will stabilize oil prices only if all members comply with their quotas, if non-OPEC producers don't undercut the agreement, and if demand increases," said Edward Yardeni, chief economist at Prudential-Bache Securities.

Despite the shaky state of the agreement, few analysts are ready to declare the OPEC deal dead. There are too many unknown and unpredictable pieces in the oil-price puzzle to say with confidence that prices will continue falling, or that OPEC will fold.

One unknown is the buying plans of oil companies, which have been taking oil from stockpiles recently instead of buying it from OPEC or on the open market. They stayed away from contract purchases because they believed prices would come down. As a result, the demand for OPEC oil kept falling, pulling prices down.

If the psychology of buyers remains the same, prices could fall further.

The price of oil on the spot market — where individual cargoes are sold to the highest bidder — has been little changed since OPEC's agreement. Trends in the spot market usually influence the decisions of governments and oil companies that set the price of oil sold on long-term contract.

The new focus of attention by oil-price watchers is London, where the government-owned British National Oil Corp. is being pressured by customers to drop the price of its North Sea oil to $29 or $29.50 a barrel.

It was Britain's decision last month to cut its price by $3 a barrel, to $30.50, that triggered a series of negotiations among OPEC and non-OPEC producers desperate to avoid an international price war.

The climax of those talks was an emergency OPEC meeting in a London hotel where the cartel ministers decided after 12 days of talks to cut their base price to $29 — the first such reduction in the cartel's 22-year history.

Britain is not an OPEC member but its decisions on prices are important to the cartel because Nigeria — a major OPEC producer — sells a crude oil that is of similar quality to that of the North Sea, and therefore competes head-on with Britain.

When Britain cut its price to $30.50 in February, Nigeria cut its price by $5.50 a barrel to $30 a day later without seeking the consent of its fellow OPEC members.

If Britain cut its price again, Nigeria might feel compelled to break OPEC ranks again. Nigeria, the most populous country in Africa, is particularly vulnerable because its economy is weak and it relies on oil for 90 percent of its revenues.

Saudi Prince Talal bin Abdul Aziz al-Saud, brother of King Faud and a former Saudi finance minister, said in an interview in New York on Friday that he was convinced another British price cut would trigger a price war.

"The country that really scares the international community is the English," he said. "If the British decrease the price, then Nigeria will have to do the same thing ... then there will be a (price) war again."

France Demands Currency Help

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — French Finance Minister Jacques Delors on Saturday threatened that France will withdraw from the European currency valuation system unless it gets monetary and financial concessions from its partners during negotiations in Brussels this weekend.

A French pullout could hurt the 3-year-old system, aimed at stabilizing the currencies of eight of the 10 nations in the Common Market, formally called the European Economic Community. The talks here were prompted by a dramatic weakening of the French franc against the West German mark in recent weeks.

"If there's no progress, France will withdraw from the European Monetary System tonight," Delors told reporters as he entered a special meeting to discuss a possible revaluation of European currencies.

The system, established in 1979, requires governments to intervene to protect their currencies when they falter on money markets.

Delors made his comments as preparations continued for Monday's start of a two-day meeting of Common Market leaders in Brussels. The summit is almost certain to be overshadowed by the currency issues discussed Saturday by European finance ministers.

The French minister rejected West German calls for a devaluation of the French franc and demanded instead an upward valuation of the West German mark against the other European Monetary System currencies.

"I'm the most European-minded minister of the French government," he said, but added: "I have no intention of giving in (to West German pressure)."

Apartment Funds Approved By State

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — In a move to provide safe and sanitary housing for low- and moderate-income North Carolina families, state officials conditionally approved nearly $40 million in financing for apartment projects.

The projects would mean 1,530 apartments, according to the North Carolina Housing Finance Agency.

Gary Paul Kane, executive director of the agency, said the units will pump about $91 million in state coffers, while providing an additional 1,125 jobs.

Developers of the accepted projects must now submit applications for a firm commitment of mortgage insurance under a federal housing program.

MARKET ANALYSIS — The Dow Jones industrial average closed at 1117.74 Friday, unchanged from the previous week. (AP Laserphoto)

Grain and soybean futures prices were mixed Friday but generally held the advances of the previous two sessions on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Wheat prices advanced sharply near the close of trading while corn and soybeans were mixed over a narrow range. Support for wheat came primarily from technical signals, such as trends on price charts and relationships with prices of other grains, said Susan Hackmann, a grain analyst with A.G. Becker.

Corn prices were under pressure early in the session after traders heard a rumor that farmers would be permitted to pull out of the payment-in-kind program if they wished, Miss Hackmann said. But she said prices recovered later when the rumor proved to be unfounded.

Prices throughout the grains had rallied sharply in the previous two sessions and selling by traders who were taking advantage of the higher prices to take profits put pressure on the markets Friday, Miss Hackmann said. Additional pressure came from increased sales of grain by farmers on cash markets, she added.

But there was sufficient buying interest, primarily from speculators who were encour-aged by signals that registration for the payment in kind program has been high, to prevent prices from falling, she added.

Wheat settled 3½ cents to 7½ cents higher with the contract for delivery in March at $3.40½ a bushel; corn was ¼ cent lower to ¾ cent higher with March at $2.87 a bushel; oats were unchanged to ¾ cent higher with March at $1.58 a bushel; and soybeans were 1 cent lower to 4½ cents higher with March at $5.97½ a bushel.

Cattle prices continued advancing as rain throughout the Midwest aggravated already poor conditions in feed lots, said Phil Stanley, a livestock analyst in Chicago with Thomson McKinnon Securities. He noted that mud in feed lots keeps cattle from gaining as much weight as normal and detracts from their quality.

"Packers are looking for good quality cattle and they're hard to find," Stanley said. Cattle for delivery in April reached a new high.

There was some concern about a surplus of boxed beef supplies but that is expected to be absorbed by the market next week, Stanley said.

Hog prices drifted lower but volume was light as most traders are evening up their contract positions prior to the release Monday of the Agriculture Department's report on inventories of hogs and pigs.

Live cattle settled .13 cent lower to .50 cent higher with the contract for delivery in April at 67.02 cents a pound; feeder cattle were .15 cent lower to .25 cent higher with March at 71.77 cents a pound; live hogs were unchanged to .65 cent higher with April at 50.62 cents a pound; and frozen pork bellies were .20 cent lower to .55 cent higher with March at 73.70 cents a pound.

Many traders are staying out of the market amid uncertainty about price direction, said Bette Raptopoulous, a metals analyst in New York with Prudential-Bache Securities, Inc.

In early trading Friday, she said, discussion about the possibiliy of heavily indebted nations asking for extensions of their loans prompted a brief and mild rally, Miss Raptopoulous said. But in later trading, concern that oil prices could continue declining pushed prices back down, she added.

Gold settled $4.20 to $4.30 lower with the contract for delivery in March at $415.40 a troy ounce; silver settled 20.5 cents to 26.2 cents lower with March at $10.348 a troy ounce.

S.C. Reports Loss In Jobs

GREENVILLE, S.C. (UPI) — Officials say textile employment in South Carolina dropped by 1,200 jobs in January, part of a 5,000 job loss suffered by the industry across the Southeast.

James Chapman, chairman of Inman Mills of Greenville, said the new Labor Department figures are a surprise to him because the industry has been gaining strength overall.

Chapman predicted a modest recovery for the textile industry this spring and a strong rebound by the end of the year.

Consumers Hold Key To Recovery

NEW YORK (AP) — American consumers may still be in a cautious mood after the recession of the past year and a half.

But Wall Street analysts figure they have the means at their disposal to step up their spending significantly in the months ahead, providing new momentum for economic recovery.

"Consumers are being engulfed by a rising tide of purchasing power," said Gary Wenglowski, director of economic research at Goldman, Sachs & Co. in a recent report predicting a "relatively strong first-year recovery" for the economy.

As Wenglowski sees it, this influx of extra buying power stems from three primary sources — income tax cuts, declines in oil prices, and the sharp rise of the securities markets since mid-1982.

The 10 percent tax cut scheduled for July 1 will pump money into consumers' pockets at a rate of $35 billion a year, he says. But even before that, there will be tax refunds this spring some $22 billion to $26 billion larger than normal because of widespread overwithholding in 1982.

Meanwhile, falling oil prices can have the same effect as an additional tax cut, by reducing consumers' bills for gasoline and home heating oil.

With U.S. oil consumption at about 5.5 billion barrels a year, a $5-per-barrel price cut multiplies to $27.5 billion. It is not likely that every penny of that would be passed through to consumers, but Wenglowski estimates that perhaps two-thirds of it would be.

Lastly, rising stock and bond prices have increased consumers' net worth dramatically. Wenglowski estimates that financial assets directly owned by consumers jumped almost $500 billion in market value from last June to December, and an additional $100 billion or so since then.

The markets have leveled off lately. In the past week, the Dow Jones industrial average was unchanged at 1,117.74 after taking a 23.22-point drop the week before.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index was down 0.92 at 86.37, and the American Stock Exchange market value index lost 4.10 to 381.13.

Big Board volume averaged 70.65 million shares a day, against 82.07 million in the previous week.

Of course, the increase in the value of stocks and bonds since last summer does not represent a pool of money available to be spent at a moment's notice. In theory, if everyone holding stocks decided to cash in on them at once, much of their paper value would be wiped out.

Still, many analysts say, a rising market means increased net worth, and a sense of greater prosperity.

"The vast upsurge in the securities markets should do much to spark purchasing power," said Eldon Grimm, analyst at Birr, Wilson & Co. "In terms of total dollar amount, the stock market boom of the past seven months has broken all records.

FROM GRAPEVINES

Springtime. The grapes were harvested last fall and now the vines are pruned. The grapevines are being used by many area women to create things of beauty, including baskets and wreaths.

Louise Stokes of Ayden said, "I saw pictures of grapevine wreaths in a magazine about two years ago and set out to copy it. I kept working with it until I was satisfied with the end result."

Mrs. Stokes uses wild grapevine she finds on a ditch bank and she has also made a wreath out of a type of birch.

For a wreath or basket, she starts making a circle according to the size she desires. "I like to make my item the same day the vine is cut — its more pliable and flexible.

"Before the basket or wreath is decorated, they may look crude — but after they are decorated, they are quite pretty and can be enchanting. It's a hobby and I like decorating," she said.

Mrs. Stokes uses a variety of colors "because it can be used in so many areas to decorate. If you want a country look, you can use more warm colors."

Several suggestions were made by Mrs. Stokes during an informal class in making wreaths and baskets:

- Weave the vine in and out and wedge it for a basket. (She uses wire only to secure the handles).
- Use styrafoam and moss in baskets as a filler material and as a covering.
- The leaves are stripped from the vines; however, some of the smaller tendrils are left for effectiveness.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

As I was driving down the highway the other day it occurred to me that the gas glut has brought back an American tradition that for the past year or so has been parked in driveways awaiting better times: the recreational vehicle.

For awhile there, it looked like campers were destined to become the biggest planters ever built or the most expensive bedroom for "sleepovers" ever constructed.

But not anymore. They're all, in the words of Willie Nelson, "on the road again." As a driver who considers "passing" one of life's great adventures, I found myself following a 32-footer with tandem wheels and a sign that read, "The Vagabonds, Ruby and Rusty, Kendalville, Indiana."

I knew in my heart that if they didn't turn off for gas or food, I would follow them right into Kendalville, rather than attempt to go around them.

For the next hour and a half, I had a lot of time to think about Ruby and Rusty and to reflect on my own camping days. I knew that Ruby was a sport. At that moment she was reading a road map to her husband who didn't care where the sun was setting, he was going east and if the sun was going down there, God had made a big mistake!

She would worry about the gears burning out when they went uphill and the brakes burning out when they went downhill. She would worry about sudden stops and wonder if she had remembered to lock into place all the cupboard doors or would she have mayonnaise and breakfast cereal to clean up.

She would worry about whether or not she had thrown out the fishheads wrapped in newspaper she had left by the sink.

She would worry about getting a spot in a campground that you could "pull through" instead of backing up and running the risk of driving over Rusty's foot again.

Her life was built around laundromats and how far it was to the next one. The big saucepan that she usually washed sheets in was being used to store bait.

The scenic wonders were secondary. Grand Canyon. Big deal! what she really wanted to see loom over the horizon was a dumping station for their holding tank.

Actually, this is all speculation. I never saw Ruby or Rusty. They pulled off the side of the road around 5:30. I figured things would seem better to both of them after they had lunch.

COLCANNON

One of the best of the Irish dishes.

- 3 large (about 1¼ pounds) mealy potatoes
- 1½ cups (about ¾ pound) coarsley grated, tightly packed green cabbage
- ¼ cup butter
- Medium-small (about 3 ounces) onion, finely chopped
- ¾ teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon white pepper

Pare and quarter potatoes; cover with boiling water and boil, covered, until tender — 15 minutes or so; drain. Put through a ricer or mash smooth; keep hot, covered, in a low oven or over boiling water. In 1 cup boiling water boil cabbage, uncovered, until tender-crisp — about 5 minutes; drain and stir into potatoes. In a 6-inch skillet in the hot butter gently cook onion, stirring often, until golden; stir onion and butter into potato mixture with salt and pepper. Serve hot. Makes 4 servings.

A pound of ham makes 2 and a half to 3 servings.

I found it at Brody's Downtown

"I was shopping downtown at Brody's just the other day and saw lots of fashion clothes I really love!"

"Tell me all about it! You know how I love to shop!"

I was in the better sportswear department looking for something special to wear for Easter and Ruth Cannon showed me the new 2-piece dress by Sasson. This is a very smart look in ladies ready-to-wear for that young contemporary! She has it in the two-piece gray diagonal for $70 and also in a blue and white stripe 3-piece for $130 that has a matching white linen jacket. This is definitely my look for Spring!

Browsing through the shoe department I found the Bandolino shoes in spring's most popular colors. Tim Byrd gave me his expert opinion on what shoe would go with my new spring outfit and he helped me pick the smart, soft woven leather pump. It comes in navy and camel and has the new short tapered heel for $62. Tim said these would certainly put style and comfort into my spring wardrobe. It may be a good idea to visit the shoe dept. soon to get your size, too, before it's gone!

Everyone needs a blazer, and Brody's Downtown has a good selection of Personal II in navy and white for the fuller figured lady sized 14½-24½. Mattie Ferguson realizes this customer is fashion concious and she knows exactly how to put together that finished look that's so much in style now. The blazers are priced at $71 with coordinating bottoms selling for $31. See Mattie in missy sportswear; she knows what her customers are looking for and is willing to help!

Lots of ladies are hard to fix in a bra but there is one person that really is good at this and her name is Jean Shingleton at downtown Brody's! She said that now is a good time to get a strapless bra to wear with all your spring and summer fashions. She has a new look in Warners in a soft tricot or sheer priced at $11.00 & $12.00. They come in beige & white.

Over in the junior dept. Kim Alligood was excited about the newest arrival of Polo shirts—the colors are new and vibrant. They are comfortable and easy to wear. Kim also mentioned the new fashion belts that are so very stylish with any dress or separate outfit and recommends everyone's spring wardrobe be complimented by lots of belts.

Diane Aycock stopped me on the way out to show me a line of fine China accessories in Royal Orchid that she thinks would compliment any decor! I agree with her, it is lovely.

I really do enjoy shopping at Brody's Downtown. The sales people are the most cooperative and helpful of anywhere I've shopped. They're so full of new ideas and are always the friendliest! You know, it's hard to find a pleasant place to shop where the sales people genuinely have your best interest at heart, but, I found it, and it's downtown Brody's. I know you'll love shopping there as much as I do!

Inconsiderate Public Adds To Patient's Pain

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I've had cancer and have been on chemotherapy for a year and a half. I'd like to pass on some tips to the general public to help them deal with cancer patients. Ninety percent of the people I've dealt with have been great. Here's the other 10 percent:

People who wait until they have an audience, then ask in a sorrowful voice, "How are you, dear? Your color looks terrible." (I took this from one woman for several weeks before yelling, "I'm fine! And don't ever ask me again!" She never has.)

People who ask, "How many days a week can you work?" When I reply, "Two," they say, "Boy, are you ever lucky! I wish I could find a way to work only two days."

People who ask loudly, "I know you've lost all your hair. Is that your hair now, or are you wearing a wig?" (It's none of their business. I don't ask if they're wearing falsies, so I wish they'd lay off about my wig.)

People who tell you that your doctors don't know what they're doing — all you need are vitamins, or some faith healer they heard about in Europe who performs "miracles."

People who tell you about all their relatives who died of cancer and how much they suffered.

I've wanted to write this for ages. Even if you don't print it, I feel better now.

OFF MY CHEST IN OREGON

DEAR OFF: It's well worth the space if just one well-meaning but thoughtless person sees himself and learns from it. Good luck and God bless.

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem I can't talk to anybody about because I'm too ashamed.

Fifteen years ago I had to get a delayed birth certificate. I appeared before a judge and under oath I lied about my parents' birthplace. They were born in a foreign country and I said they were born in the U.S.A. (I had been ashamed of my parents' birthplace ever since I was a child.)

My parents have been dead for over 25 years. Can I be punished for this lie? What do I have to do if I want this falsehood corrected on my delayed birth certificate? Thank you.

CAN'T SLEEP NIGHTS

DEAR CAN'T: The information is used for statistical purposes only. According to the state department of birth and death certificates, you will not be punished for this falsehood.

To change the information on your delayed birth certificate, you may be required to provide documentation to prove that this time the information you submit is true. Then an affidavit must be filled out and the birth certificate will be changed. No sweat. Pleasant dreams. You're welcome.

DEAR ABBY: When I hear women complain because their husbands snore, it saddens me because both my father and my wonderful husband of 16 years snore, so I've had 35 years to think about this.

A snoring husband is God's gift to a wife. It is audible testimony that he is with you. He is not in a cold grave, he is not sick in the hospital, and he is not in another woman's bed.

He is right there. With you!

If you love him, it will be a comfort to you. If you don't, no amount of philosophizing will help you accept it.

RUTH

DEAR RUTH: As I once read (in a book I wrote): "Snoring is the sweetest music this side of heaven. Ask any widow."

Future Trends Told

What will supermarkets be like 5 to 10 years from now? Rachel Kinlaw, extension food specialist, North Carolina State University, speculates on the results of current trends.

The number of people between the ages of 15 and 24 will continue to decline, while the 25 to 44 age group dominates the market. These people will be having babies, but the birth rate will remain low.

Fifty-two percent of all women ages 16 and over noe have jobs; this is expected to increase to .63 percent by 1990. Working wives now contribute about a fourth of the total family income. Marketing duties will be shared in the family, as more teenagers and men pick up part of the burden.

New supermarkets will be larger and will include space for service deli's. bakeries and general merchandise. About one-third of the space will go for non-food items.

The groceries will be checked out by computer scanners, which are already in a few markets. A computer beam will "read" the universal product code on each item, match the code with an assigned price, ring up the sale and provide a descriptive tape for the consumer. The device also helps the store manager keep track of inventory, purchasing needs and sales trends.

Warehouse stores, which take the no-frills approach, will grow in popularity. They carry fewer items, fewer perishables and fewer advertised brands than regular markets. They do not advertise as much either. As a result, the items cost less. Regular markets will expand their lines of generic and no-frills brands to compete. Stores will also be open longer to compete with the convenience-type stores.

Although food prices are expected to rise along with the inflation rate, the expenditure should still only take a little more than 11 percent of the disposable income by 1987, no more than 10 years earlier.

AFTER-EASTER GATHERING
Vegetable Platter
Mimosa Spread
Toasted Walnuts
Hot Punch

MIMOSA SPREAD

A great way to use those leftover Easter eggs that were hard-cooked and colored with edible dye.

6 large eggs, hard-cooked
Hollandaise Sauce, see Note
7-ounce jar roasted sweet peppers or pimentoes

Peel eggs and mash with Hollandaise Sauce. Drain peppers and dry on paper toweling; if necessary, scrape off any spots of burnt skin; chop coarsely; stir into egg mixture. Chill. Makes about 2 cups. Bring to room temperature before serving as a spread for a Vegetable Platter: sliced cucumbers; sliced parboiled zucchini; carrot rounds. Or use as a stuffing for short lengths of celery ribs or hollowed-out cherry tomatoes.

NOTE: Make the Hollandaise Sauce with ¼ pound butter, 2 large egg yolks and 1½ tablespoons lemon juice, using standard directions.

BUTTERSCOTCH SAUCE

One of the best of its kind.

1 cup sugar
1 cup dark corn syrup
½ cup light cream
2 tablespoons butter
Pinch of salt
1 teaspoon vanilla

In a saucepan (about 3 quarts) over medium heat, stirring constantly, cook sugar, syrup, cream, butter and salt until sugar dissolves and mixture comes to a full rolling boil. Boil 5 minutes, stirring several times. Off heat stir in vanilla. Serve hot; or cool to room temperature, stirring occasionally, and serve. To reheat, place over hot water or over very low heat and stir often until pouring consistency. Makes about 2 cups.

Bath Drama Seeks Support

BATH — Public assistance is being sought for this summer's production of the Bath Outdoor Drama, "Blackbeard: Knight of the Black Flag."

The Committee for An Outdoor Drama at Bath Inc., which has produced the Stuart Aronson play for the past six years, is seeking area assistance financially.

The committee has noted that due to "general economic conditions and increased production costs, we find that we must have additional revenue to guarantee its continued success."

"To that end the committee is establishing a membership society to be known as 'The Friends of the Outdoor Drama at Bath' as a tax-exempt, non-profit organization to aid in the promotion and financing of this worthwhile endeavor."

Another step being taken this year to raise funds will be the sale of a high quality souvenir brochure. The brochure will contain information on the cast, the play, the production, the history of Bath and Beaufort County as well as a listing of the membership of "The Friends of the Outdoor Drama at Bath."

A chart of membership types, both in individual and corporate categories has been established by the committee. Details on membership fees and on the number of free tickets given with each type of membership are:

Individual Memberships

- Regular, $10, one ticket.
- Sustaining, $25, two tickets.
- Sponsor, $50, 4 tickets.
- Patron, $100, 6 tickets.
- Donor, $250, lifetime pass.
- Benefactor, $500, two lifetime passes.
- Lifetime, $1,000, four lifetime passes.

Corporate Memberships

- Corporate sponsor, $50, 4 tickets.
- Corporate patron, $100, 6 tickets.
- Corporate donor, $250, 12 tickets.
- Corporate benefactor, $500, 20 tickets.
- Corporate Life, $1,000, 30 tickets.

Individuals or agencies wanting to become a member of "The Friends of the Outdoor Drama at Bath" may write to: Jack Alligood, president, Committee for an Outdoor Drama, P.O. Box 209, Bath, N.C., 27808.

N.C.'s Only Progressive Newspaper

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — When Robert Brown was a graduate student in Chapel Hill in the 1960s, he came to the conclusion that the state's newspapers ignored the political opinions of intellectuals and activists.

Brown decided to start his own newspaper to give activists a forum to voice their views on political issues.

Seventeen years later, The North Carolina Anvil has expanded to a twice-weekly publication and has a circulation of 7,800. Brown says it's the state's only "progressive" newspaper.

"It's not the average man's paper," he says. "There are no blue collar worker readers. It's definitely a special interest paper for certain groups, activists and intellectuals of every persuasion."

Brown calls the Anvil a "newspaper of politics and the arts."

The most recent edition of the Anvil features a front-page story praising the PBS television documentary on the 1979 Greensboro shootings, "88 Seconds in Greensboro," and another page-one article criticizing a local paper for its reporting on the transfer of a community groups' funds to an all-white civic organization. Inside, the eight-page edition carries movie reviews and a page of free classified advertising.

The Anvil shares space with Brown's other enterprise, Buffalo Printing Co., in a cement-floored building in downtown Durham. Stacks of Anvils are piled to the ceiling in one corner of the building, and the walls are covered with old political campaign buttons and bumper stickers.

Brown, 48, a stocky, balding man dressed in work shirt and pants and red suspenders, says the Anvil has been a controversial publication since its beginning.

"We've been called everything — Communist rag, Marxist publication, you name it," he says. "In the beginning, we were visited many times by the Klan. I guess they didn't like what we were printing. And we've never been that popular with the activists.

After Forty Years, Artist Works On Age Of Reptile Art

By JAMES V. HEALION

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — Russian-born Rudolph F. Zallinger, 63, is back working on the monster work of art he started 40 years ago.

The opus is "The Age of Reptiles," the famous dinosaur mural 110 feet long and 16 feet high in Yale University's Peabody Museum of Natural History. It won Zallinger a Pulitzer Prize, has become famous the world over and helped to popularize dinoaurs for generations of youngsters.

Zallinger was a young graduate of Yale's School of Fine Arts when museum director Dr. Albert Parr asked him to do a series of drawings of seaweed for a book Parr was writing. When he handed Parr the pencil sketches, the commission for the reptile mural followed in 1943.

His research was so thorough that it took him 18 months to produce a preliminary model in cooperation with the paleontology staffs of Yale, Harvard and the American Museum of Natural Art.

The mural in the museum's Great Hall of Dinosaurs shows plant and animal life in the rain forest primeval as huge beasts heave through 200 million years of flora and fauna.

The Postal Service took a detail from the masterpiece and in 1970 printed 200 million copies of a stamp, "The Age Of Reptiles." A reproduction has appeared in successive editions of Golden Books for children for the past 24 years. And 7 million visitors have seen it at the Peabody in the 35 years since Zallinger completed it in 1947.

The Peabody's roof sprang a leak recently and a small portion of the mural — about one square foot — was damaged.

Zallinger, now a professor at the University of Hartford art school, was invited to do the necessary restoring.

He said the paint hadn't faded at all. Aside from repairing the damage due to streaking and mottling, all he had to do was vacuum 35 years of accumulated dust from the mural, dust so fine that it was visible only from a scaffold. He also had to contend with some ribbing from colleagues.

"Going to get it right this time, Rudy?" a professor of paleontology said as he sauntered by.

Zallinger never really left Yale, the Peabody and the mural. He lives in nearby North Haven with his wife, Jean, another careful researcher, whom he met at the Yale School Fine Arts, and who is a successful artist herself.

His illustration popularized dinosaurs for millions of kids in the 1950s and 1960s, and still does today. He was asked why he thought dinosaurs enthralled youngsters so.

"They are so big, so bizarre. They did indeed live and breathe. They look like a cross between a dragon and a mythological beast. Those little guys can weave pretty fanciful stories in their minds about them," he said.

The museum sometimes is used as the most chic backdrop in town for cocktail parties. One of the most memorable for Zallinger was an affair tied in with the King Tut exhibit. Not only was the Egyptian ambassador invited, but S. Dillon Ripley, then the Peabody's director and now the Smithsonian's, insisted that an authentic Egyptian belly dancer be retained to wiggle. In 1978, the inaugural dinner for Yale President A. Bartlett Giamatti was held in the Great Hall.

As Zallinger worked on the mural the first time around, people dropped by to chat. Many, like Lars Onseger, a Nobel laureate in chemistry, who came up on the scaffold for his conversations, became a friend for life. And after all these years, one question people asked him back then still makes Zallinger wonder.

Chrysler Museum's Shows Focus On French Art

NORFOLK, Va. — The look of art in April at the Chrysler Museum will be strongly French, with two shows focusing on French art opening on April 1.

One is a showcase of late 19th century French paintings, "French Salon Paintings from Southern Collections," a traveling exhibition of nearly 70 paintings organized by the High Museum of Art in Atlanta. The second exhibit is that of 31 rare French photographs taken soon after Daguerre invented the process in France in 1839.

"French Salon Paintings from Southern Collections" highlights the work of 50 French artists during the peak years — 1848-1898 — of the salon's importance in popularity, influence and magnitude. The exhibition not only records the richness and diversity of French Academic art held by museums and private collectors throughout the South, but also represents a side of French art long neglected by the demand for the work of Impressionists and Post-Impressionists in the early part of the 20th century.

Works by Gerome, Cabanal and Bouguereau are included in the collection. Twenty-two of the works being exhibited were actually shown in French Salons. Some are works that were specifically commissioned by wealthy American collectors.

Of the nearly 70 paintings, 13 are from The Chrysler Museum's collection of French Academic art, considered among the finest in America. After closing in Norfolk, the show will travel to the N.C. Museum of Art in Raleigh and then to The John and Mable Ringling Museum of Art, Sarasota, Fla.

"19th Century French Photrographjy" illustrates how early photographers, many of them first trained as painters, illustrators and engravers — translated their technical sensibilities into the new medium of photography. The images were taken from 1851 through 1875 by the early masters of the medium — Nadar, Charnay, Le Gray, Durieu, Negre, Silvy and Marville. The photographs were borrowed primarily from private collections in New York City and Norfolk.

In addition to portraits, the photographs cover genre scenes of Egyptian, French and Central American locales, nudes and still lifes of fruit and game.

Catalogues for both exhibitions have been published and may be ordered by mail from: The Jean Outland Chrysler Library, Chrysler Museum, Olney Road and Mowbray Arch, Norfolk, Va., 23510. The 173-page catalogue of the French paintings show is priced at $14.95. The 40-page catalogue of the photography show, written by The Chrysler's Museum's Curator of Photography Brooks Johnson, is priced at $7.50. Both are fully illustrated. For mail orders, add $1.25 per volume for postage and handling.

Chrysler hours are 10 to 4 Tuesdays through Saturdays, and 1 to 5 on Sundays. Admission is free.

Surgeon-Poet To Be Speaker

The presentation will be at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday in the upstairs conference room of the Pitt County Memorial Hospital cafeteria.

Selzer's writings, which view the world of medicine through the eyes of a practicioner, have appeared in The Atlantic, The New England Review, Harper's, Esquire, New American Review and other literary magazines.

Among Selzer's books are "Mortal Lessons: Notes on the Art of Surgery," "Confessions of a Knife," and "Letters to a Young Doctor."

His visit is being jointly sponsored by the department of surgery and the humanities program.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By WILLIE NELMS

The cold winter months often stir a desire to travel to other places and to experience new advantures. Two new books added to the collection of Sheppard Memorial Library will help to satisfy these desires.

Chilton Williamson Jr., books editor of the "National Review," has developed a portrait of life on the oil frontier of Wyoming in "Roughnecking It." Vivid as Mark Twain's "Roughing It," Williamson's book takes us to Kemmerer, Wyo., a small town at the heart of the new migration to explore oil.

Located at the very center of the Overthrust, perhaps the richest deposit of underground oil and gas outside of Saudi, Arabia, this is where the modern gold rush is taking place. The author focuses on the oil-field workers — the modern equivalent of the "Forty-Niners."

Williamson's characterizations and imagery reveal how the roughnecks' dreams of fortune mirror those of the earlier gold prospectors. Yet these modern explorers face issues unique to the 20th century — notably, the conflict between the search for energy and the preservation of the wilderness.

In the spirit of Hunter Thompson, Williamson has captured the lives of these roustabouts. In these workers, he rediscovers old truths about the West, and illuminates some of the most striking aspects of our national character. His book gives us an authentic and insightful potrait of a new West, which is strikingly similar to the old.

Eric Newby, editor of several travel books, related his wanderings in "A Traveller's Life." A fascinating series of scenes and portraits drawn from his vast experiences as a sailor, salesman and editor, this witty memoir reveals an unfailing gift for finding adventure and novelty abroad and at home.

Many of Newby's destinations have been exotic — including the interior of Afghanistan, Istanbul (via the Orient Express), and the jungles of East Africa. Other journeys, when seen from a new perspective, offer delightful views of familiar places. Included here are a splendidly grimy grand tour of the London sewers, and a walk along the often bizarre lengths of Broadway.

The individuals Newby meets along the way provide a delightful view of humankind. These include a pair of tiger-shooting Indian princes as well as Evelyn Waugh, author of "Brideshead Revisited," a book which has recently enjoyed renewed public attention.

Through all these uncommon encounters, Newby carries on with humor and the explorer's special brand of courage tempered with common sense. Overflowing with typical British wit and grit, "A Traveller's Life," will be enjoyed by armchair readers and travel buffs alike.

Blair Publisher Has Reputation For Quality

WINSTON-SALEM — During the past 28 years John F. Blair has established a reputation for quality publishing in the Southeast. And 1983 promises to be a banner year for the small, independent press in Winston-Salem. The six new books and three reprints are an electic mix, a characteristic of Blair throughout its history.

"North Carolina's Historic Restaurants and Their Recipes" is not only a cookbook but is also a guide to the history of some of the state's finest eateries. Author Dawn O'Brien traveled all over the state visiting an assortment of restaurants to taste their food, research their history and charm their owners and chefs into divulging secret recipes.

"Selecting the 45 restaurants included in the book was very difficult for me," Ms. O'Brien says. The author had to set rigid guidelines to keep the restaurants to a managable number. Among these were age (the structure must be at least 50 years old), the building's architectural integrity and the quality of food and service.

"Two-Moon Pond" is a collection of nonfiction writings by Paul Koepke, a retired professor and a dedicated observer of the natural world. Seventeen years ago he and his wife "forsook the dubious advantages of city life" and moved to the country. Their country acreage includes a pond, named one night when they saw the moon reflected on the water. The 22 stories in this collection are a result of Koepke's long and continuing study of Two-Moon Pond and the surrounding ecosystem. Virginia Ingram, the book designer at Blair, is taking special care with the design and printing of the book.

"Classroom Success for the Learning Disabled" is a companion to Suzanne Stevens' highly acclaimed earlier work, "The Learning-Disabled Child: Ways That Parents Can Help." The book is designed to help both parents and teachers commbat the academic and psychological problems that LD children face every day in the classroom. Ms. Stevens' advice is based on years of experience as a classroom teacher. (A third printing of her previous book, "The Learning-Disabled Child ..." is planned to tie in with the publication of her new book).

Claiborne Young's "Cruising Guide to Coastal North Carolina" will fill a long-neglected need for a complete guide to boating in the coastal waters of the state. North Carolina has the largest area of inland waters on the East Coast and more than 3,000 miles of shoreline. Vast areas of these waters have been largely ignored by the cruising boater because there was no easy access to reliable information on facilities, anchorages and navigation. Young's book corrects that lack with detailed information about the numerous rivers, sounds, inlets, towns and marinas that make up North Carolina's coastal waters.

"Every Man Must Try" is the autobiographical story of civil rights activist Hubert Eaton. Eaton, a widely known medical doctor in Wilmington, is one of the unsung heroes of the civil rights movement. During the 1950s and 1960s, while the media focused attention on demonstrations and violent confrontations, Eaton was one of the people who worked within the system to combat racial discrimination.

He initiated lawsuits that ended segregation in New Hanover County schools and hospitals. He led the fights that successfully desegregated the YMCA, the golf course and Wilmington College (now UNC-Wilmington). The legal battles were more often than not long and painstaking, with too many setbacks and disappointments to count. Eaton's memoirs are filled with recollections of the famous and the infamous.

"Slave Tales" is a collection of more than two dozen oral narratives from ex-slaves in North Carolina. In the midst of the Depression, the Federal Writers' Project assigned field workers to interview any ex-slaves that could be found. More than 2,000 former slaves contributed to the program, and their oral histories were deposited in the Library of Congress. Belinda Hurmence has edited a representative sampling of narratives from North Carolina slaves. They tell of daily life on the plantation, of good "marsters" and bad, of the Yankee liberation and of hard times after the war. Hurmence's book is the first source to make the slave narratives readily available to the general public.

Two coastal favorites will be reprinted this year, both in paperback for the first time. This will make the ninth priting for Carl Goerch's classic "Ocracoke" and a third for Robert Lee's biography of Edward Teach, "Blackbeard and the Pirate."

More Details On The Winterville Depot

Les Turnage, who is actively involved in assisting Connor Eagles in continuing efforts to secure buildings, equipment, artifacts and furnishings for the Eagle Connors Homestead at the Pitt County Fairgrounds, has provided additional information on the acquisition of the Winterville Railroad Depot recently moved to the homestead. A history of the depot was the subject of a feature article by LaRue Evans that appeared in the March 6 issue of The Daily Reflector.

•"The depot was donated to the homestead by officials of the Seaboard Coastline Railroad," Turnage said. "After they donated the building, Pitt County Commissioners provided funds to pay for the cost of moving it from Winterville to the homestead site.

"We are certainly most grateful to the people at Seaboard and to the county commissioners for their generous support which made it possible to place this fine building for our citizens to see and enjoy in the coming years," Turnage remarked.

Turnage said that "the depot has been set up on new foundations, and minor maintenance work is being carried out. It's looking real good and is ready to be shown to anyone interested. We encourage people to come out to see it." (To make an appointment to tour the depot, call Turnage at 752-2715 or Eagles at 752-4468).

"One thing we would be most grateful for is that if anyone has knowledge of the whereabouts of the Winterville name plate that was originally on the depot, we'd sure like to hear about it so that we might be able to get it back," Turnage commented.

"Also, we will appreciate donations of any items suitable for the depot, things like telegraph equipment, typical depot office furniture or any other items appropriate for the building.

"The Winterville Depot building is a fine addition to the buildings at the homestead. As soon as we have funds available, we're going to paint it, and it will really be attractive then."

Serkin To Perform Thursday At Hendrix

Peter Serkin, pianist, whose musical sympathies are noted for being broad, will perform at 8 p.m. Thursday in Hendrix Theater, Mendenhall Student Center, on the East Carolina University campus.

Tickets for the performance are priced at $7.50 and will be available in advance from the Central Ticket Office or at the door prior to performance. For more information and for reservations, call 757-6611, extension 266.

Serkin made his first public appearance in 1959 at the age of 12. He has since appeared with most of the world's major symphony orchestras.

A New York magazine critic, noting his thoughtful individuality enabling him to bring something new to all he plays, wrote: "The finest pianist this country has yet produced. He plays with an enormous vitality that becomes both creative and recreative and there are no apparent limits to his technique."

The Serkin piano concert is the last concert of the 1982-83 East Carolina Univerity Unions Artists Series season.

Bill Congdon, marimbist, will be presented in recital at 9 p.m. Tuesday in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall. Congdon, a senior in the school of music, East Carolina University, is this year's winner of the "Young Artist Competition," an event sponsored annually by the school of music's Student Forum. The recital is open to the public without charge.

A native of Charlotte, Congdon was selected from 13 competing performers, all students of the school of music, in the final round of competition held Feb. 2. As winner, he is also the recipient of a cash prize.

For his winner's recital Tuesday, Congdon will play compositions by five composers. Mini-Concert At GMA Wednesday

The group recently appeared at a performance in the state Capitol, and is under the direction of JoAnn Bath.

Patrons may bring bag lunches, with liquid refreshments to be provided by the museum.

Wins Piano Contest

A Rose High sophomore, Philippe Aronson, was the first-place winner of the sixth annual Keyboard Competition for high school students held March 11-12 at the Shenandoah College and Conservatory of Music in Winchester, Va.

Students from several Eastern Seaboard states competed in the annual competition. The preliminary round of competition was judged by keyboard faculty members of Shenandoah. Each student was required to play, by memory, Schubert's "Impromptu in A flat, Opus 142, No. 2."

Judging of performances of the five finalists selected from the preliminaries were three guest artists — Fernando Laires of the Peabody Conservatory of Music; Beth Gigante, a piano pedagogue specialist, and Dr. Wesely Ball, a music educator and early childhood specialist. Laires was one of the judges in 1982 for the Tchaikovsky Piano Competition held in Moscow.

For his elective composition as a finalist, Aronson chose to play a group of nocturnes by Hawes. As first-place winner, he received a $100 cash award.

Aronson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Aronson, is taught piano in Greenville by teacher Carlene Ragan.

The faculty musicians will perform works by Mozart, Pinkham, Hindemith, David van Vactor, Chris Dean, Jean Rivier and Beethoven.

The general session Friday will get under way at 4 p.m. with a welcome by chapter president Margaret Sandresky, with Christine Neuhaus of Adelphi, Md., performing the "Paderewski Debut Recital."

Interest sessions on Saturday morning will be held from 9:30 until 10:30 in several locations.

From 10:45 until 11:15 a.m., a program of ECU Opera Theater scenes directed by Clyde Hiss, with accompaniment by Mark Gansor and Alisa Wetherington will be presented. Scenes from four operas will be performed by voice students in the School of Music. Interest sessions will again be held from 11:30 until 2:30 when a general session will be held.

Joseph Distefano of the ECU School of Music, secretary-treasurer of the Mid-Atlantic Chapter of the society, is in charge of local arrangements.

Vocal Group Concert Wednesday

The New York Vocal Arts Ensemble, a group of five performers, will be the second attraction being presented during the coming week as part of the East Carolina University School of Music's Festial '82-'83.

The ensemble will be in concert at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall. There is no admission charged and the event is open to the public.

Founded by Raymond Beele in 1971 for the purpose of exploring and performing long-neglected repertoire of vocal chamber music from the Middle Ages through the 20th century, the group has presented annual subscription concerts series at Alice Tully Hall and has performed throughout the U.S., South America and Europe.

In their Greenville concert, the New York Vocal Arts Ensemble will open its program with Orlando di Lasso's "O, Ochhi Manza Mia," to be followed by four Johannes Brahms songs, five songs from Dmitri Shostakovich's "Songs from Jewish Poetry;" Paolo Tosti's "Aprile," and two Rossini songs.

After an intermission, songs to be sung are: Joseph Barnby's "Just As I Am," Charles Ives' "Camp Meeting," and "Three Poems on the Resurrection" by William Vollinger.

Also, "Listen to the Mockingbird" by Alice Hawthorne, Charles K. Harris' "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now," "May Erwin's Frog Song" by Charles Travathan, Scott Joplin's "Ragtime Dance," and three traditional Russian folk songs.

In addition to founder Beegle, a native of Los Angeles, the members of the New Hork Vocal Arts Ensemble are: Stephanie Dorner, soprano, from Los Angeles; mezzo-soprano Cori Ellison, a native New Yorker; tenor Gregory Mercer of New Hampshire; and baritone Stephen Poulos of Plainfield, New Jersey.

The ensemble has released a number of recordings — on Turnabout, VOX and Desto Records

Learning Confidence

Text and Photos By Mary Schulken

John Moore didn't like watching students fail his class so, seven years ago, he decided to do something about it.

Now, he's working every day with two classes of students who say he makes them feel like they can do anything.

Moore heads North Pitt High School's career education department, a program he said is designed to help students with special needs make "realistic career choices, based on their interests and abilities," then equip them with the skills necessary to succeed in that field.

"Prior to the program I was teaching regular vocational ed classes," said Moore, "and I noticed some students couldn't cope — they didn't succeed because of their communication and computation skills."

Moore said he "didn't want to sit and watch those (students) fail" so he started the career education program.

"I wanted to get these students in a situation where there were just a few (in each class) and we could work with them fairly individually and still work on vocational skills," said Moore.

"First of all we identify the student's interest, whether it is waiting tables, bagging groceries ... or woodworking," said Moore. "Then we develop the vital skills (for that career) and teach them the words, tools, expectations, etc., associated with it."

The program tries, by graduation, to place all students in jobs which "may or may not be in their field," said Moore. Ninety percent of the students who completed the program are "successfully employed," he added.

The federally funded program is the only one in Pitt County and one of "a handful" in North Carolina, according to North Pitt guidance counselor Betty Speir.

Speir said Moore's program is designed for students with "specific handicaps — some are not able to read or write as well and some have physical handicaps." She said the program keeps most participants from becoming dropouts.

"Some of these kids would be potential dropouts if it weren't for the program," she said. "This gives them something to stay in school for — gives them a chance to learn they can do something with their lives."

In addition to developing work skills, Moore stresses character, neatness and self-confidence to students.

"There is good potential in every student," he said. "A lot get slack when they lack self-confidence or when they're not challenged. If someone can work with them and give them some self-confidence, they benefit — basically what they need, though, is that self-confidence."

Moore's students fashion bookcases and rocking chairs to build self-confidence. They also make hand-lettered signs, weave macrame plant hangers and learn to use a cash register and set a table with style.

"The students come into here (class) and think they can't do things," said Moore. "They say to me 'where's the machine?' I tell them right there — your hands — that's the machine."

Pride and accuracy are important in Moore's class, too. He tells his students to clean their work areas after using them and not to hurry a job "just to get it through."

"They (students) are constantly pulling in other students and saying, 'Hey, look what I've done,'" Moore said. "They want others to see what kind of work they're doing."

"We work on attitude," said Moore. "If we (he and the student) can develop that character, then we've been successful."

When they're not strengthening vocational abilities, the career-education students work on competency skills — reading, spelling, math — by filling out job applications, adding up sales tax and computing pay scales.

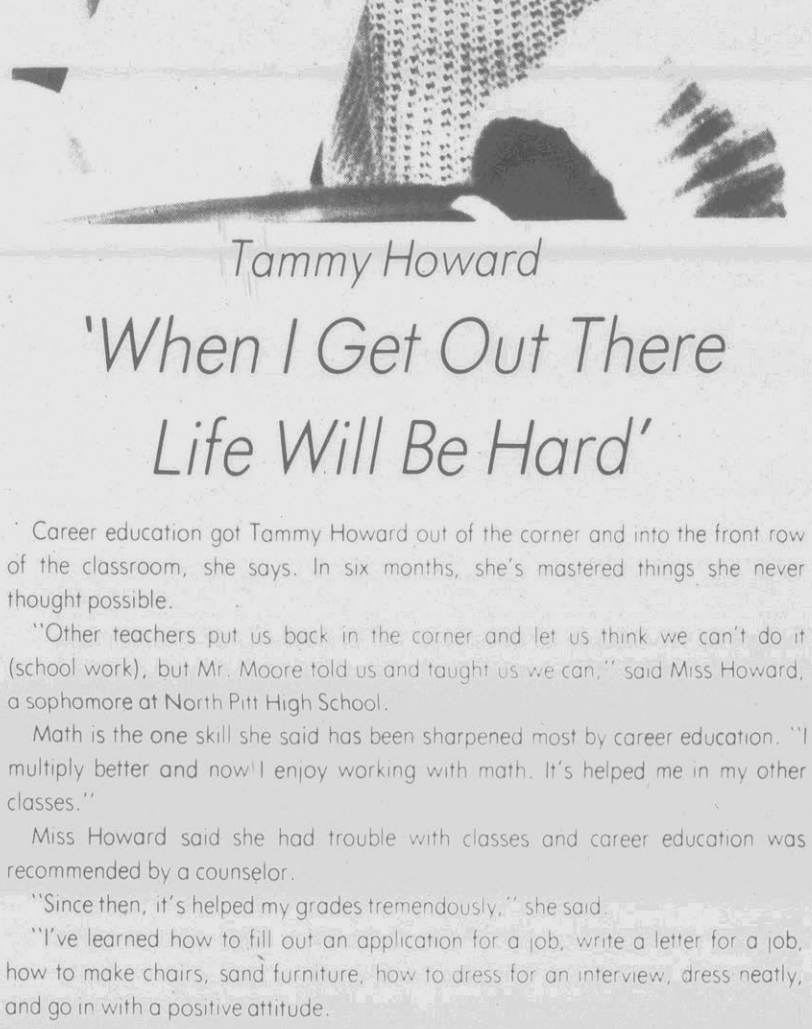

Students are referred to the class by school-based committees consisting of principals, teachers, counselors and occasionally someone from Pitt County's central office.

Moore moves from group to group during his two two-hour career-education classes, showing one student the right way to wax a bookcase the student just finished and another how to make change.

"You need lots of different skills to teach a class like this," Moore said. "We've done a little bit of everything through the years — even sewing some clothespin bags".

Moore said he learned his skills when he was growing up. "I'm really lucky, I guess, because I learned to do everything around the house — a little bit of sewing, some macrame, woodworking — and now I use these things with the kids.

"It's very different from teaching typing," he added with a smile.

Tammy Howard

'When I Get Out There Life Will Be Hard'

Career education got Tammy Howard out of the corner and into the front row of the classroom, she says. In six months, she's mastered things she never thought possible.

"Other teachers put us back in the corner and let us think we can't do it (school work), but Mr. Moore told us and taught us we can," said Miss Howard, a sophomore at North Pitt High School.

Math is the one skill she said has been sharpened most by career education. "I multiply better and now I enjoy working with math. It's helped me in my other classes."

Miss Howard said she had trouble with classes and career education was recommended by a counselor.

"Since then, it's helped my grades tremendously," she said.

"I've learned how to fill out an application for a job, write a letter for a job, how to make chairs, sand furniture, how to dress for an interview, dress neatly, and go in with a positive attitude.

"Of the things we've done, I've enjoyed filling out job applications and working on math best," she said. "I was scared because I didn't know how to do it (fill put applications) but Mr. Moore taught us the right things to do.

"The class has taught me a lot about life," she added.

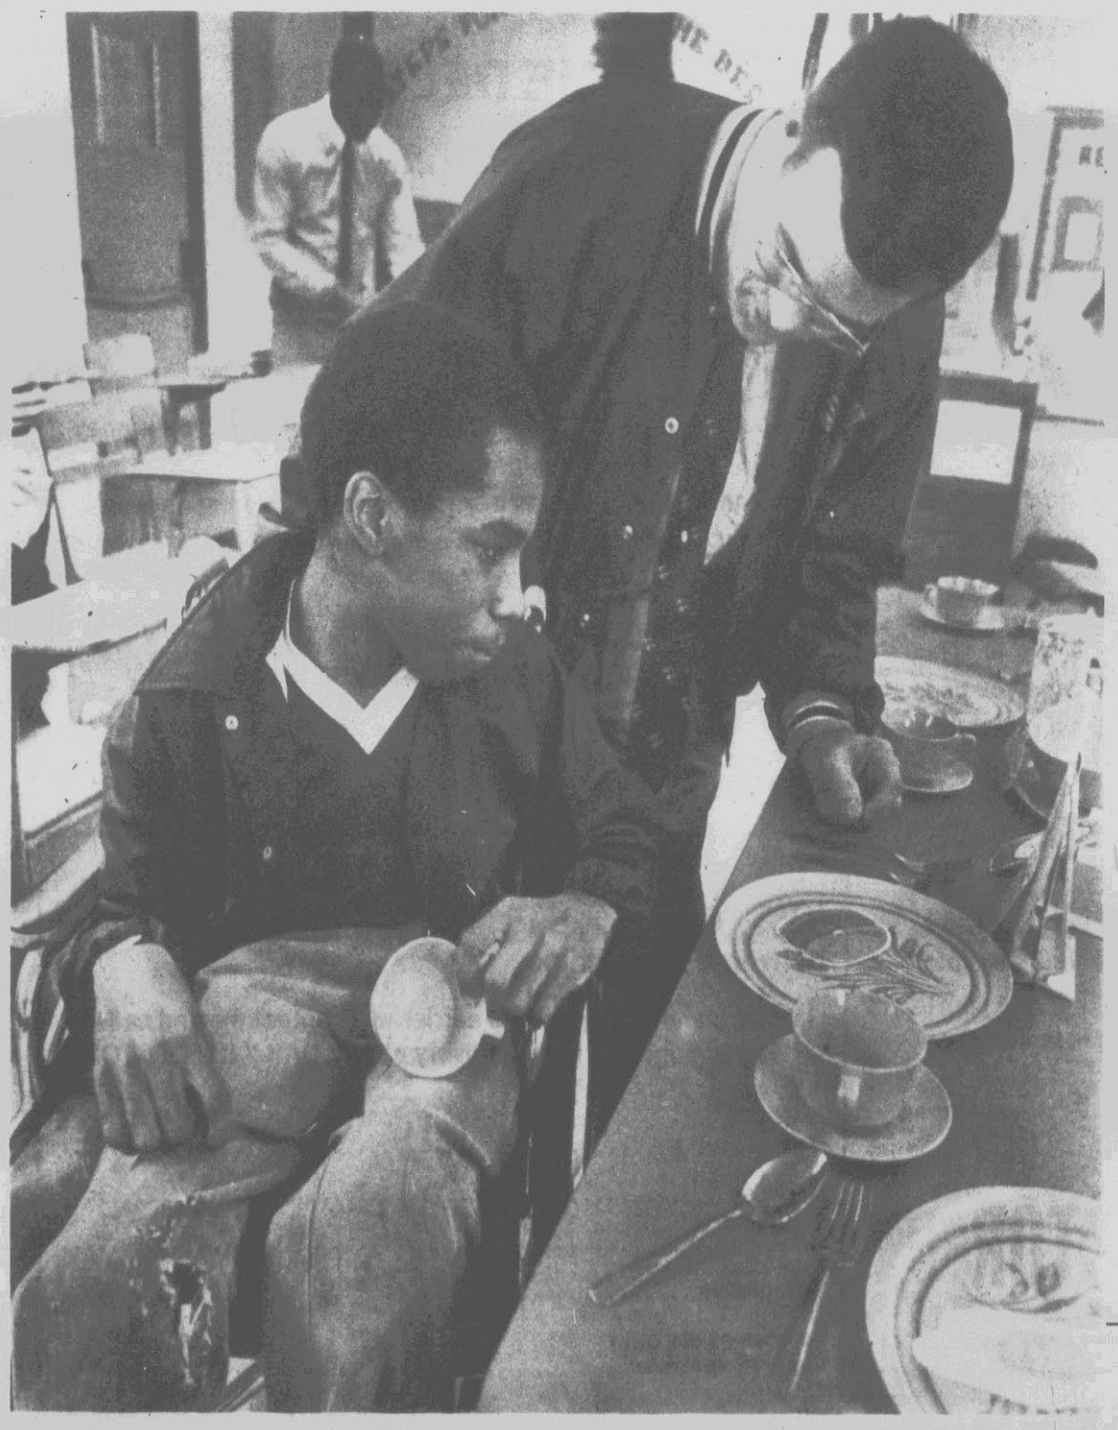

"Mr. Moore has convinced us that when I get out there (out of school) life will be hard," she said. "If I don't get my education now, I'll be out on the street ... and I won't get it."

Miss Howard is interested in computers and modeling, she said, and hopes to come up with a job in those areas.

"So far I haven't (had any job offers) but I'm hopeful," she added.

"The important thing is that Mr. Moore keeps working with you and keeps making you think you can do it," Miss Howard said. "He's kept a lot of kids from dropping out this year.

"I'm planning on geting right back into career education for the next two years," she added. "I think it can help me."

Owner Holds Off City 12 Years

By DAVID TOMLIN
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Annie Mary Timmons huddles waiting for the bulldozers in two squalid rooms of her last condemned apartment house and contemplates what is literally the wreckage of her dreams of real estate riches.

"I was just getting ready to cash in," says the 80-year-old businesswoman. "I was gonna be a multimillionaire. I was gonna have a fine time in my old age instead of not even having a place to die in."

Forlorn as this sounds, Ms. Timmons is tough and resourceful enough to have held the city of Columbia and its building inspectors in a legal hammerlock for the past 12 years.

Since 1971, when officials first condemned her seven two-story apartment houses as dangerous and uninhabitable eyesores, she has erected one legal barricade after another to keep the Caterpillars at bay.

For the past seven years, she has been her own attorney, contesting the city's right to destroy condemned property all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, which wasn't interested.

"Helpless? Hell, no! Dumb? Hell, no," says city building inspector Edward C. Hornsby. "More than any other citizen I've seen, she's had every chance to be heard."

But on Jan. 14 the city quit listening, and the demolition teams rolled into the city's Shandon section to smash six of her seven buildings flat.

All six had been vacant since the 1971 condemnation, but Ms. Timmons lived alone in the deteriorating seventh, amid stacks of used lumber and boxes of debris salvaged from her other property.

In the next two months, Columbia City Council will decide what to do about the last building, and Hornsby says Ms. Timmons will get still another chance to save the building.

"She still has the option of restoring the building for apartments, as long as she does it in compliance with current zoning restrictions," Hornsby says.

That last phrase may be a key to why the standoff has lasted so long. "Current zoning restrictions" would have meant a drastic reduction in the 72 units into which Ms. Timmons had divided the seven buildings.

Feisty and independent, Ms. Timmons bought and remodeled most of her property in the 1940s, before the city had any real zoning laws. When the laws came along, she was granted "non-conforming permits," which meant she could leave the structures as they were.

But Hornsby says she lost her permits when she failed to repair the condemned property within 12 months in 1971. Once the deadline passed, he says, she would have had to meet the new restrictions to lift the condemnations.

Ms. Timmons tells a different story. She contends her "beautiful" buildings were condemned without reason or notice, and contractors she hired were never granted permits to make repairs.

"I tried a hundred times," she says. "Since 1971, I was never allowed to get any kind of permit." She says her tenants were forced out, and she was deprived of rental income while vandals and transients slowly destroyed her property.

Ms. Timmons says it all really began in 1969 when her largest property with 163 units was condemned by the state Tricentennial Commission to make way for restoration of the adjacent historic Hampton-Preston home.

She never claimed the $325,000 she was awarded in that fight, most of which has since gone to pay attorneys and other debts. But she says city officials made a target of her seven Shandon area houses after that.

"They were going to get rich off them," she says. "I think it was because they saw how easy it was for the state to do it."

But Hornsby says Ms. Timmons' problems with the city go back to her early days as a landlord, when he says her property was in frequent trouble with fire inspectors.

"She performed a real service to the community during the war by providing housing for soldiers from Fort Jackson," Hornsby says. "But the war ended, and the properties began to deteriorate."

By 1971, Hornsby says, most of the tenants had already moved out because the houses were in such bad shape, and Ms. Timmons herself was living in a house she owned in Florida.

Meanwhile, Shandon was enjoying a resurgence, residents got behind the effort to clean up Ms. Timmons' decaying structures, and the problem took on political overtones.

"If they can just paint me as a bad enough character and then promise to save them from public enemy number one, they can get votes," Ms. Timmons contends. "They tell lies about me in the papers, and even though people know better they're still going to believe it."

She says her houses were all in fine shape and fully occupied in 1971.

Ms. Timmons moved back to the condemned house she occupies now in 1976, which is technically illegal. Doors and windows are sloppily boarded over, pigeons roost in the porch, and interior plaster cracks around missing wall fixtures or crumbles onto scarred or missing floorboards.

But city officials say she's not nearly as destitute as she appears, padding about her musty rooms in slippers and housecoat, though she spruced up for a photographer's visit.

Even without the buildings, her Shandon property could easily be sold for hundreds of thousands of dollars, Hornsby says. He adds that she also owns "considerable other property" in Richland County and may still have the Florida house as well.

Ms. Timmons doesn't answer questions about her financial status directly. But the taxes on her property are paid, she has gas and electricity in her two disheveled rooms, and she concedes that her "only sure source of income" — $162 a month in Social Security — isn't all she has.

"That wouldn't even pay my phone bill," she says with a shrug.

Test Will Help Find How Baby Learns Faces

LANCASTER, Pa. (AP) — Caitlyn Owens, 7 months old, is taking a test. She sits on her mother's lap and looks at a caricature of Nikita Khrushchev for a few seconds. Then she is shown two photographs, one of Khrushchev and one of Henry Fonda.

She looks at the Russian for one second, spends 6½ seconds looking at the actor and the rest of the allotted 30 seconds "wiggling and looking around," says Donald J. Tyrrell, who is keeping track of Caitlyn's eyes through a peephole in the back of a specially made wooden contraption that overlooks the baby and the pictures.

Tyrrell, a professor, child psychologist and researcher at Franklin & Marshall College, is studying whether babies between 6 and 9 months old can recognize a familiar face from a caricature. Eventually, by manipulating the facial features of the caricature, he hopes to discover which feature or features a baby uses to recognize a person.

"Oddly enough," he says, "we really don't know how adults do this."

The test uses the fact that babies prefer looking at something new to looking at something they have seen before. Therefore, if they recognize the Khrushchev photograph from his caricature, they will look longer at the Fonda photograph.

Caitlyn is one of 200 Lancaster County babies who have already been volunteered by their parents to participate in a research study of "several different aspects of memory and visual perception in infants." Tyrrell plans to test as many babies as possible during the next couple of years.

The professor's study is one of many such studies going on at F&M and other colleges and universities throughout the country. Though the behaviors scrutinized may seem small, what is found out can have surprisingly large and practical consequences.

The researchers start with what is known.

What is known is that most babies prefer looking at something complex to something plain. They especially like looking at the human face. And they prefer looking at something novel to something they have seen before.

During the past 25 years, these facts have been studied and confirmed. How?

The baby is allowed to look at two patterns: one, perhaps, a checkerboard, the other a bull's-eye. The baby tends to look longer at the bull's-eye.

Tyrrell's study is going a step further, with the caricatures.

Expert Urges Care In Drugs

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Americans spend about $286 billion annually on health-care costs, but some of that money is wasted because too often they don't properly take the medicine that's been prescribed, says a pharmacology expert.

Dr. Bruce Woolley, professor of applied pharmacology and therapeutics at Brigham Young University, said 30 percent of all prescriptions written out are never filled and of those that are filled, only about 20 percent are taken correctly.

"A serious communications problem has developed in America between the physician and patient and the patient and the pharmacist," Woolley said. "Doctors, pharmacists and patients need to know exactly what the drugs are, as well as when and how they should be taken. All three have responsibility in handling prescriptions."

There is at least one incident of a woman overdosing on Valium by taking "one tablet as needed for anxiety until exhausted" which the label instructed, he points out.

Generally, a family practitioner prescribes about 20 different drugs that he knows very well, Woolley said. Problems crop up when the family has several doctors involved in treating an illness.

"The prescription label should be very specific to cut down on confusion," he said. "If it says 'take four times daily,' does that mean while the person is awake, or during a 24-hour period? For many drugs, those few hours could make a difference."

Woolley said that even though doctors were busy people, they shouldn't be too busy to explain what they were prescribing. Likewise, a pharmacist should be willing to take the time to explain what a drug is and how it might affect the patient.

"If the pharmacist isn't willing to do that, the customer should change pharmacies," Woolley said.

He said that though nearly a third of prescriptions were never filled, more often the problem was taking the medicine incorrectly, rather than not taking it at all.

"The Boston Collaborative Drug Surveillance Study has shown that there is a drug-related death among every 200 people hospitalized," Woolley said. "And one government study during the past decade showed that the nation's health bill for hospital days devoted to the care of drug toxicity patients was in excess of $3 billion in one year."

Woolley cautioned that no prescription should ever be taken by anyone other than the person for whom it was prescribed. "Every person has different body chemistry," he said. "Individual prescription dosages are meant only for that person."

He pointed out that America is a drug-oriented society with people demanding prescriptions to cure their ills. "Consumers are becoming more mobile, no longer sticking to one doctor," he said. "That puts more responsibility for proper use of prescription drugs on consumers."

Life As It's Lived

By GAIL MICHAELS

I am seriously thinking of starting my own business. I plan to call it Rent-A-Kid. Couples who are undecided about having families of their own will be able to rent for a period of no less than one month one or both of my children, depending on how large the renters think they will want their own families to be.

Once business picks up, the children will, of course, be allowed a vacation. They can come home for any two-week period of their choosing once a year, but not at the same time.

Actually, to be fair, Rent-A-Kid was not originally my idea. All the credit should go to Phillip who had this brilliant inspiration while the children were engaged in their normal mealtime repartee. For at least 10 minutes Meg had been weeping copious into her hamburger-noodle casserole because Zachary was sitting in "her" chair. She simply could not reconcile herself to our callous refusal to uproot his firmly entrenched body.

And he, having won by nature of his unparalleled ferocity and our abject fear of provoking it, could not help lording his victory over her with comments like, "I'm neber, neber gonna move, no I'm not."

Finding, however, that he was no longer getting the appropriate rise from her, he began probing another sore spot. "My cat is at the door. She wants in."

The response was everything he could have hoped for. "It's not your cat!" Meg howled. "It's mine! Tell him it's mine, Mommy!"

"Zachary, the cat is Meg's."

"It's my cat," he said, and he grinned his nastiest grin.

"It's mine. Santa Claus brought it to me! Tell him that, Mommy!"

"What difference does it make?"

"It makes all the difference in the world to me!"

"It's my cat, my cat, my cat," Zachary began to chant with the same wicked gleam in his eye.

It was at this point that I offered my usual solution. I threatened to sell them to the gypsies.

"That's against the law," Meg sniffed. "Selling children into slavery is illegal."

Phillip finally spoke up from the neutral zone. "We could rent them out. Think what a service we'd be doing for humanity. Good ideas, after all, encourage imitation. Within weeks after we went into business, beleaguered parents everywhere would be renting out their kids to would-be parents. Birth rates would fall precipitously. Margaret Sanger would be elevated to sainthood. We could even sell franchises. Of course, stock in the major hamburger chains would go way down."

"Another service to humanity!" I cried. "Who knows what repercussions an idea like this could have. Whole forests might be saved from the encroachment of Pampers, Luvs and Huggies. One-income families might once again get to view red meat in its unground state."

"Then again," Phillip said pensively, "it might not go over. The renters might still cling to the mistaken notion that they can mold their breed without making the mistakes that made their rental kids the fearsome lot that they are."

Maybe so, but I still might try to sell the idea to the Chinese.

Some Georgia Farmers Hopeful

ATLANTA (AP) — There are hopeful signs this spring for Georgia farmers, battered and beaten at the bank. For some, though, it's too late.

"Interest rates are coming down, inflation is down and costs are leveling out. That's the bright spot in agriculture this year," said Cecil Smith, head of the farm managment department of the Georgia Cooperative Extension Service.

"But if the year unfolds as a good year, we'll still have a sizable number of farmers in very real trouble financially."

Farmers in Georgia are coming off a good year in the fields — yields on several crops approached or broke record levels last season — but a bad year at the bank. For many of them, it has been several bad years.

When farmers don't make money, most must stay alive through credit, borrowing the money to try it another year. This time, federal loans that have bailed them out in the past aren't as plentiful. Some farmers, having lost money for years, are finding that the government won't take a chance on them anymore.

"Some farmers are so deeply in debt, there is no way out for them to get out of it," said Orson G. Swindle, director of the state Farmers Home Administration. "It would be foolish and irresponsible for us to renew their loans."

The plight of Georgia farmers began in 1977, when after expenses they only kept an average of 9 percent of the gross income they brought in. The year before, net income had been 22.8 percent of the gross, said Smith.

That year kicked off a roller coaster ride that hasn't stopped yet. In 1978, net income was back up to 20.8 percent of the gross, and held to 20.7 percent the year after that. But in 1980, farmers kept just 2.4 percent of their revenues.

In 1981, it rose again to 10.6 percent — less than interest payments, which took 13 percent of the gross. Final figures for 1982 are not in yet.

"That's three out of five years with very low net returns," Smith said, noting that "1980 was almost nothing.

"And when the average is making nothing, of course you've got some farmers who did make money, so that shows you that the ones who lost, lost a lot."

Early forecasts for the 1983 growing season are not conclusive.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—What constitutes a takeout double? There are some players who maintain that you cannot make a takeout double when your hand contains a five-card suit, especially if it is a major. Others say you must have at least 13 high-card points for a takeout double. Please give us the official word?—R. Peres, Miami, Fla.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—There are a lot of modern theories on overcalls and takeout doubles, but I don't subscribe to many of them. The tried and true ways are still perfectly sound.

A takeout double shows about the strength of an opening bid. It promises support for all unbid suits. The more perfect the shape of the takeout doubler's hand, the more he can shave the strength for his bid. For example, I would make a takeout double of a one diamond opening bid with:

♠AJxx ♡K10xx ◇x ♣QJxx

However, I would not double with:

♠AJx ♡K10xx ◇xx ♣QJxx

I know that some modern players will never make a takeout double of an opening bid when they hold a five-card spade suit. But to me, a takeout double of one diamond is the obvious bid on:

♠AJxxx ♡K10xx ◇x ♣Axx

The trouble with overcalling one spade on this hand is that you can quite possibly lose a 4-4 heart fit, which could easily prove to be the best contract. Also, you should not overlook the possibility of punishing the opponents on those hands where partner has length and strength in their suit. Here's another hand where I would make a takeout double of one diamond with a five-card major:

♠Kxx ♡AKJxx ◇x ♣AJxx

This hand is too strong for a mere overcall. You can describe it as accurately by first doubling and then bidding hearts over any action that partner takes.

Here's a useful rule of thumb. When making a takeout double, value your hand as if it were going to be the dummy (which, indeed, is likely to be the case). So add 3 points for a singleton and 5 for a void in the opponents' suit, and if you come up with the equivalent of an opening bid, your hand is good enough for a takeout double.

Apply this rule to our first example. You will come up with a valuation of 14 points, which clearly justifies our decision to double. Note, however, that the second example is worth only 12 points.

Send any questions for this column to: Charles Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Bridge Complete," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged the best received.

Lab Tackles Pilots' Headaches

By RON HARRIST
Associated Press Writer

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — It's not exactly a household word across Dixie, but to those in the business of flight, the Raspet Flight Research Laboratory has a national reputation for tackling aeronautical headaches.

Since 1948, the Mississippi State University-based facility has conducted aeronautical research for an exclusive clientele that has included the military, NASA and big names of the aircraft manufacturing industry.

"We work with ideas," explained Dr. George Bennett, since 1979 director of the laboratory. "We determine if an idea has merit before it goes on to more complex and costly research."

Unlike the early days of flight, when untested aircraft were put through their paces by daredevil pilots, Bennett's crew includes engineers, highly rated test pilots and skilled technicians to tackle highly complicated experiments.

The experts design and test modifications and new gadgets with a fleet of 12 aircraft that range from production models to a jet-powered sailplane and an all-fiberglass craft that was designed, constructed and first flown.

"We rarely test an entire airplane because the manufacturer generally does this," Bennett said. "We use our experts and aircraft like most people would use a wind tunnel — testing new ideas in actual flight conditions."

The laboratory, established by August Raspet, has taken on a variety of challenges in recent years, ranging from helping test planes that can operate in a sandy, desert environment to working with an air deployable data buoy for the Navy Oceanographic Office.

Bennett said the projects are funded by either government or corporate customers and can range in cost from $30,000 for small experiments to more than $1 million for major undertakings, such as the desert flight research.

Raspet began his research using sail planes, later moving to powered aircraft before he was killed in a flight accident in one of the lab's research aircraft in 1960.

The laboratory today is housed in a large modern hanger featuring two shop areas equipped for the fabrication and modification of aircraft and apparatus using metal and fiberglass materials. The hanger is located on the Starkville-Bryan Airport, adjacent to Mississippi State.

"Our aircraft are flown by competent test pilots with all appropriate FAA ratings," Bennett said. "Flight operations are directed by Gifford Bull, who has over 20 years of test flying experience in a wide variety of airplanes."

Bennett said there are only two or three other university-based operations capabile of doing the unique research handled at Raspet.

While most aircraft manufacturers and NASA have their own flight test operations, they prefer to farm out ideas for small-scale testing before making a major investment, Bennett said. "We have a very versatile operation and we have shown that we take an interest in the unusual idea."

He said ideas also come from the university's department of aerospace engineering but "we then go out and get somebody to fund the necessary experiments."

Bennett said the laboratory serves is a teaching arm of the university at the graduate level and provides temporary employment for undergraduates

Miami Continues To Build Luxury Hotels

By SUSAN POSTLEWAITE
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Hotel occupancy has dipped 12 percent in two years, but greater Miami is getting a wave of luxurious new hostelries, among them a Miami Beach resort billed as "too rich for all but the rich," and another with marble bathrooms and rooms priced up to $1,500 a night.

Some people fear that with 20 new or renovated hotels — more than 8,000 rooms — opening by the end of 1985, the area will be "overhoteled" for the next few years.

Hotel managers and developers say the market will be more competitive, but contend no one will go out of business.

"Business begets business," says Chuck Schlakman, manager of The Eden Roc on Miami Beach. He said the lodging business "will be extremely competitive because of the new hotels," but added that "it's an indication that positive things are happening in this area."

The new hotels "are going to add a lot of prestige to the area," he said.

Miami Beach's first hotel in 16 years, the Alexander, will go up next door to The Eden Roc. The Meridien Hotels of Paris, one of France's leading hotel chains, and a subsidiary of Air France, recently announced the 300-room luxury resort on Collins Avenue.

In Coral Gables, city officials recently accepted a plan by developers for a $36 million renovation of the grand old Biltmore. The white towered hotel has been vacant 15 years, but would be returned to 1920s elegance under the facelift.

As the buildings open at the rate of four and five a year, hotel managers and developers say there will be plenty of business for everyone, but others fear the city will be flooded with an excess of rooms for at least a few years.

"The next few years are going to be difficult because we have a lot of new supply coming into a market that is soft," said Chase Burritt, an analyst with Laventhol and Horwath in Coral Gables, the firm that did many of the hotel marketing studies.

Miami, like Dallas, Houston, and Atlanta a few years ago, may be "overhoteled" for about five years, he said.

But "by 1986 there will be an upturn in occupancy and in overall performance by the lodging industry in Florida," he said.

Miami's new convention center and the city's growth as an international financial center will lure thousands more visitors in the 1980s, hotel analysts and developers say.

The poshest of the hotels to open so far is The Pavillon, where a single costs $95 a night and a suite with a spiral staircase can run to $1,500 a night. "There's been no compromise here," said front office manager Andre van Hall, showing off an all-oak lounge, Italian travertine marble bathrooms and stocked bars in each of the rooms, on the day before a portion of the bayside hotel opened in February.

"There's plenty of demand for something like this in the area. It's just marketing, good marketing," he said.

Study Of Horses May Help Immunity Fight

By KATHY McCARTHY
Associated Press Writer

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — A tiny bay Arabian horse known only as 1601 and an 11-year-old Houston boy named David were born with too much in common — a rare, inherited disorder that left them with no natural immunities.

David celebrated his 11th birthday last September in the special protective "bubble" in which he lives at his parents' Texas home. He is the oldest person known to survive with the disorder in a special, germ-free environment.

There are other survivors who received bone marrow transplants to restore their immune response, says Dr. Hans Ochs, a pediatrics professor at the University of Washington School of Medicine in Seattle.

Little 1601 died before she was 6 months old, killed by pneumonia despite isolation, special nursing and experimental treatment by veterinarians at Washington State University.

Humans and Arabian horses are the only species in which the condition — severe combined immunodeficiency — occurs spontaneously, says Dr. Lance Perryman, an associate professor in the WSU School of Veterinary Medicine.

The victims lack two types of white blood cells — B and T lymphocytes — which help the body fight infection.

Without those cells, Arabian foals are killed by viral and bacterial infections that normal foals weather easily.

Children with the disorder face an early death from a host of infections, life in an isolation bubble like David's or sometimes risky therapies designed to restore their immune response.

WSU researchers have confirmed how the disorder is transmitted in Arabians: every four matings of a carrier stallion and mare will produce one normal foal, two carriers and one affected foal. The birth of a CID foal (in humans, its referred to as SCID) currently is the only proof that both parents are carriers.

Human beings can inherit severe combined immunodeficiency in several ways, one of them identical to the Arabian transmission method, Perryman says.

Dr. Travis McGuire, another WSU veterinarian, was the first to identify the disorder in Arabians, in 1972, and WSU scientists have been primary researchers of the SCID-Arabian link since then.

The disorder was first recognized in humans in the mid-'50s, Ochs says.

Through their Arabian research, WSU scientists are attempting to refine treatment methods to aid human victims, as well as define the cause of the disorder in Arabians and develop a carrier test. Dr. Nancy Magnuson has done much of the biochemical research.

"We know this is a genetic disorder and we speculate that the basis for the disease is a missing enzyme — one normally required to produce the missing blood cells," says Perryman.

Once the enzyme is defined, it may be possible to pinpoint carriers by assessing whether they show sub-normal levels of the enzyme in their blood.

In a separate observation, Dr. Tilahun Yilma, another WSU veterinarian, has found that blood cells from CID foals do not produce gamma interferon when treated in a manner that generates that substance from normal foals' blood.

Gamma interferon is another substance involved in the regulation of immunity.

Yilma now is trying to determine why the substance is not produced — and what effect that may have on the regulation of immunity.

"It may end up being very important, but more experiments are required," says Perryman.

The gamma interferon discovery probably will prove more valuable for treatment than for assessing the cause, he says.

Between 2 and 3 percent of Arabians are born with CID, a frequency Perryman terms "incredibly high" considering the way the disorder is inherited.

Ochs estimates several dozen children with the disorder may be born annually in the United States but the ailment is not always diagnosed correctly.

WSU scientists purposely breed affected foals from their herd of proven carriers and try experimental therapies designed to lengthen the foals' life span.

Untreated, such foals will die before five months of age. So far, even with special nursing care and experimental therapy, no CID Arabian foal at WSU has lived longer than $11\frac{1}{2}$ months.

Undiagnosed, untreated children with SCID will die within their first year, Ochs estimates.

Bone marrow transplants are the most effective means of treating human children with combined immunodeficiency, Perryman says. The new marrow will produce the blood cells they need to fight infection. But many such children lack compatible donors.

To help them, WSU vets are trying to refine "stem cell transplants."

"Stem cells," or cells that can generate the B and T blood cells needed to fight infection, can be obtained from the liver of a healthy horse fetus, then transplanted to a CID foal.

The WSU foal which has survived longest — $11\frac{1}{2}$ months — did so after receiving a stem cell transplant. An autopsy showed "evidence of some revival of the B and T cells," Perryman says.

Ochs says some fetal liver transplants have been done in children but so far have not proved promising. Since the necessary fetal liver is obtained from miscarried or voluntarily aborted fetuses, the tissue supply is both controversial and limited, he says.

WSU scientists hope their experiments can increase the effectiveness of stem cell transplants and minimize rejection of the strange cells by the recipient.

Video May Affect Creativity

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A University of North Carolina sociologist says video games may be depriving dedicated players of time they could use for something more important — like daydreaming.

However, participants at a symposium on electronic leisure say that while video games and home computers may fragment society at first, they could lead to a new kind of play and social interaction as the technology grows.

"What we're heading for is an information-based society," said Stephen F. Weiss of the Department of Computer Science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. "The computer has become central to this notion."

Robert N. Wilson, a UNC sociologist, said people could put their time to better use.

"Daydreaming, contemplation, meditation, reflection, self-analysis, fantasy, and perhaps more important, reading, are all significant activities that require a quiet space to be properly encountered and achieved," Wilson said.

High Point Man Led Auto Dealers

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — George W. Lyles Jr. joined President Reagan in the Rose Garden last year to announce campaigns against drunk drivers and won national attention on the Phil Donahue show and the MacNeil-Lehrer Report.

Lyles, a High Point car dealer and entrepreneur, did all of that while presiding over the world's largest trade organization, the 20,000-member National Automobile Dealers Association, during one of the industry's bleakest periods. His responsibilities kept him away from home roughly 220 days during the year, but he says he wouldn't trade the experience, even for one of his brand new Rolls Royces.

He said the most enjoyable part of his job was always being on the hot seat.

"Wherever the action was, I was there," he said.

Now he's trying shift into a slower gear and get adjusted, once again, to spending most of his time as a Piedmont businessman. He turned the presidency over last month in Las Vegas after delivering his swan song to 5,000 delegates at NADA's national convention. "I'm not relieved, but I'm not depressed or letdown either. It was not a burden, but it was time consuming."

Lyles considers an NADA victory over the Federal Trade Commission last spring his most important accomplishment as president. NADA fought hard to convince Congress to overturn an FTC regulation that would have required dealers to inspect used cars and place on each of them a sticker indicating the results of that inspection. The NADA contended the FTC standard would have hiked the cost of each car $200 to $300.

NADA's intense lobbying campaign for the bill designed to abolish the regulation drew fire from some consumer groups. They said it was an example of a powerful industry using its political action committee's bountiful campaign chest to sway votes and get its way.

During a crucial interview and confrontation with some foes on the MacNeil-Lehrer Report, Lyles defended NADA's position. Lyles also testified before congressional committees that were examining the regulation. The bill passed both chambers overwhelmingly.

Frank McCarthy, the association's executive vice president, said after the votes Lyles convinced the NADA board of directors to adopt a voluntary measure encouraging dealers to place stickers on used cars that would help consumers know better what they were getting in that car. The stickers include lists of all options and warranties on the cars. McCarthy says 30 state associations already have endorsed the measure.

But those successes, though significant, merely suggest the kind of president George Lyles was. Says McCarthy: "Because of the difficult times, and because of the many fights we had in government, and because of the many things the dealers needed from manufacturers, he was more active than most NADA presidents. He had the ability, and times demanded it."

Even though Lyles worked, prodded and maneuvered to ease car dealers' pains during the most devastating economic downturn since the Great Depression, he estimates 1,000 dealers went out of business during his term.

Parents Upset By Phone Bills

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Angry parents have been calling South Central Bell's office here, complaining about bills that include calls to certain unfamiliar New York numbers.

Bell tells them what one reaches by dialing those numbers — sexy prerecorded messages.

Youngsters have been making most of the calls, thinking the number is toll-free. It's not.

Bill Michelet, a spokesman for South Central Bell, said local youths are making frequent use of the number, and some telephone bills have run several pages long listing the New York calls.

The Concordia

Three Levels Of Living Space

By Jerry Bishop

This passive solar design is suitable for vacation or year round living. The rear or southern elevation of the Concordia is highlighted by an abundance of decks and glass. A minimum of windows are found on the north, east and west sides. On the basement level are found large shop, storage, and recreation areas plus a bedroom. Unique aspects of the first level living room are its location up two steps from the rest of the first floor, two stories of glass on its southern wall and its openness with a railing to the hall and stairway adjacent. An angled wall lends character to the kitchen-dining areas. The master suite occupies the entire second level with its own bath, dressing area, walk in closet, storage nook and private deck.

Remodeling Reflects Energy Costs

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Rising energy costs and the habit of remaining in the same home instead of moving are combining to produce a change in home remodeling projects.

A recent survey by the publisher of Building Supply News Magazine found today's remodeling projects tend to be more energy related than in the past.

"Caulking, weatherstripping and adding insulation never used to be important at all. But today they have become very important to the home remodeling trade," said Morry Robinson of Cahners Publishing Co., the magazine's publisher.

In a 1981 survey of 2,500 households, the magazine found the 10 top projects (in descending numbers of jobs completed) were: interior and exterior painting; wallpapering; carpeting; weatherstripping, caulking and sealing; replacing or adding lighting fixtures; adding new kitchen faucets; insulating; replacing bathroom faucets, and remodeling the bath.

Counting by dollar volume instead of number of jobs, room additions topped the list at $10.5 billion. Other projects, (in descending order of dollars), were: Kitchen remodeling; adding new carpet; reroofing; installing exterior siding; remodeling a bathroom; finishing a basement; adding a new garage, and installing new kitchen cabinets.

Robinson, who expects a trend toward practical remodeling projects to accelerate, sees five growth areas for 1983 and beyond. They include: Replacing exterior windows and doors and installing storm windows; upgrading the home heating and hot water system; adding insulation to reduce energy costs; interior painting and wallpapering, and installing passive solar systems and devices such as sun rooms and sun scoops, greenhouse windows and air locks for entryways to the house.

On the other hand, he predicted a drop in big-ticket remodeling jobs, such as the addition of new bathrooms and kitchen remodeling.

"People tend to make these major changes when they move into a home, rather than in midstream, and the statistics indicate that fewer people are moving nowadays," he said.

With consumer interest in improving the home environment high, many industry trade associations have found it worthwhile to develop written materials showing how to use their products and services to enhance that environment.

These groups may provide an overlooked source of information and guidance for consumers interested in remodeling their home.

The following will provide free or low-cost information about some aspect of home remodeling:

—American Society of Interior Designers, 730 Fifth Ave., New York, NY 10019. Provides lists of members around the country and information on selecting an interior designer.

—Asphalt Roofing Manufacturers Association, P.O. Box 3248, Grand Central Station, New York, NY 10163. Has two booklets for 50 cents each: "A Homeowners Guide to Quality Roofing" and "Good Applications Makes a Good Roof Better," for do-it-yourselfers.

—Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers, 20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago, IL 60606. Literature and information about appliances.

—Carpet & Rug Institute, P.O. Box 2048, Dalton, GA 30720. Information on buying, installing and maintaining carpets, rugs, bathmats and bedspreads.

—National Association of the Remodeling Industry, 11 East 44th St., New York, NY 10017. Can provide names of contractor members.

Besides these organizations, others may be found in the listings of trade associations. Ask your local librarian for guidance in locating these groups.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

A similarity of terms is confusing to the do-it-yourselfer, who usually devours every bit of information he can about repairing and remodeling things in and around the house.

Words, phrases and expressions that seem to mean the same thing sometimes do not. And, occasionally, different turns of speech actually have the same meaning.

The combinations that quickly come to mind are varnish and polyurethane varnish; waterproof and water-resistant; passive solar energy and active solar energy; plywood and lumber-core plywood; concrete and cement; humidity and condensation, and incandescent and fluorescent.

So-called natural-resin varnish is the regular varnish we have been using for years. Polyurethane varnish is a synthetic, actually a plastic. It should not be applied over shellac. Natural varnish can. Polyurethane is easier to apply than regular varnish, dries faster and is more resistant to everything. Natural varnish is still a high-quality product of great durability and is cheaper than polyurethane.

When something, such as an adhesive is waterproof, it means water cannot penetrate it. When it is water-resistant, it means that it resists water under high humidity conditions but permits the passage of water which is resting against it and especially when there is pressure.

A house with a passive solar system has the components for storing and releasing the heat of the sun. Passive solar features generally are built into a house during its construction and include such things as plenty of glass on the side which is exposed to the south and a thrombe wall that absorbs the sun's rays and later, when the sun has set, lets them escape. An active solar energy house has solar collectors to absorb the heat and mechanical means to distribute it, store it and release it. It is better if these features are built into a house during the original construction, but they can be added later if necessary.

When you buy regular plywood, you get veneer-core plywood, in which the faces run parallel to the length of the panel, with alternating plies at right angles. It's kind of like a club sandwich, with an uneven number of plies.

But if you want plywood with two faces on either side of a heavy core of sawed lumber, you must ask for lumber-core plywood. That can be compared with a sandwich that has only two pieces of bread and a thick piece of meat between them. It is more expensive than veneer-core plywood and usually is used for good furniture.

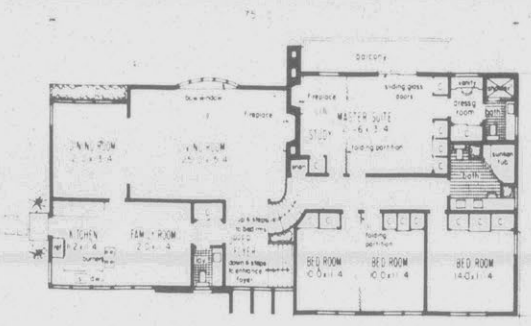

The words concrete and cement sometimes are used interchangeably. Concrete is a mixture of sand, cement, water and aggregate materials, which can be gravel or any of several other materials. The cement usually is Portland cement, which is a generic term and not a brand name. We thus see that cement is merely the powderlike binder used to make concrete. It also is used to make mortar, which is the same as concrete without the aggregates and sometimes with the addition of lime. Concrete is for making sidewalks, roadways and other heavy-duty projects. Mortar is used in the joints of bricks, stones, etc.

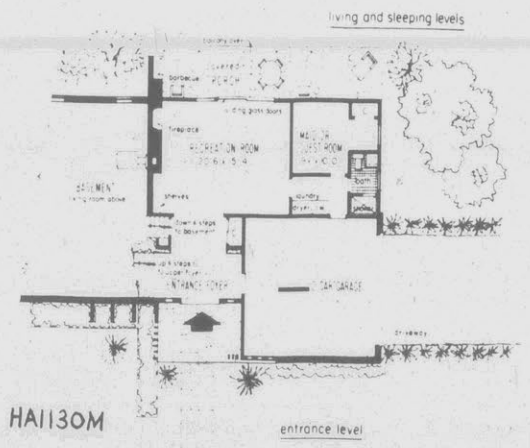

Condensation has a wide meaning, but when used in reference to a house, it means the transformation of vapor into water, visible in the form of sweating on windows, walls and pipes. You get this kind of condensation when warm, moist air settles on a cool surface. Under certain very cold conditions, it then turns into ice. Humidity is merely the moisture in the air. Generally, when discussing the amount of it in the air in our houses, we speak of relative humidity. That is the amount of water vapor in the air relative to the highest amount the air will hold at that particular temperature.

An incandescent bulb is one in which a filament gives off light when heated by an electric current. A fluorescent bulb or lamp is tubular and has a coating of fluorescent material on the inside. A mercury vapor provides an ultraviolet light which causes the fluorescent material to emit a visible light.

Q. I have two identical oaks in my yard. However, one sheds its leaves early in the fall while the other one holds it leaves almost until winter. What can be the reason? (R.S., Gold Hill)

A. Genetic variability between the trees is the main reason. Oaks, even within the same species, have an especially wide range of characteristics. Oaks hybridize freely also. So your trees may look identical, but one may be a hybrid with another oak species. This could be the reason one retains its leaves longer than the other. Location could be another less important factor involved. A tree in a protected location, one over a water ot sewage line, or one near a source of artificial light at night will retain its leaves longer than normal.

Q. How do I control camellia flower blight? (L.P., Kannapolis)

A. Camellia flower blight, a fungal disease that cases camellia blossoms and buds to turn brown, is best controlled by applying Terreclor (PCNB 75 W) as a drench on the soil in enough water to cover the root area. The disease is also controlled by applying Terraclor (PCNB 20 Dust) as a dust over the root area. These should be done in late December or early January. For now, pick up and dispose of dead blooms to help stop the spread of the disease.

Q. I know soil temperatures are important for planting date planning and germination success. Where and how can I get soil temperature information? (R.H., Vale)

A. Soil thermometers are not expensive and are available at most hardware stores. However, it is also important to understand averages and trends in soil temperatures as well as what changes might be expected in the coming few days. The N.C. Extension Service Taletip Service (1-800-662-7301) provides a message concerning soil temperature. It is Taletip tape number 5009. Information includes averages for the past week at specified locations across the state, plus a look ahead at what is expected to happen in the coming week. The tape is updated each Monday morning.

Q. Last year some of my azaleas had pale spots on their flowers. These spots enlarged, and the entire bloom became mushy. What is wrong? (A.M., Hertford)

A. Azalea petal blight is characterized by pale or whitish spots on colored petals and rust-colored spots on white petals. These spots enlarge rapidly, and the infected tissue becomes soft and watery. Rainy periods during or following blooming enhance the spread of the disease. To control the disease, spray one application of Bayleton according to instructions on the label when the first flower buds show color. Spray varieties as they show color.

Here's the Answer

Q. — The water in our toilet tank sometimes runs into the bowl very slightly, usually just after the tank has been flushed and refilled. I took off the cover and saw some of the water was overflowing into the vertical hollow metal tube. I assume this is what is causing the leaking into the bowl. I want to fix it. Is there some way to do so without replacing the mechanism inside the tank, which I don't want to do except as a last resort?

A. — Yes. Holding the vertical rod with both hands, bend the rod so the ball at the end sets lower in the tank. Let the tank fill up. If the water level then is slightly below the top of the vertical tube, which is called the overflow tube, you will have corrected the trouble.

Q. — Do I have to take the gloss off my kitchen cabinets in order to refinish them? I hate the prospect of sanding them down.

A. — You can avoid sanding if you use what is called a deglosser. It is a liquid put on like paint that removes grime as well as the gloss. Follow the manufacturer's instructions very carefully.

Royal Academy Sending Exhibit

NEW YORK — For the first time in its 214-year history, London's Royal Academy is sending a major exhibition from its holdings to the United States. Among the 27 masters represented are Constable, Turner, Gainsborough, West, Lawrence and Sargent. The 41 works on display offer a wide survey of pre-eminent 18th and 19th century art in Great Britain.

This unprecedented exhibition also highlights the Royal Academy itself, England's oldest art institution. Founded in 1768 under the patronage of King George III, the academy is devoted to the education and exhibition of the nation's artists judged most promising by their peers.

An artist applying for membership in the academy must present a "specimen of his abilities," in the words of Sir Joshua Reynolds, first president. If the candidate is accepted, his "diploma work" joins the collection. In this way — and by purhcase and gift — the Royal Academy has acquired remarkable paintings, drawings and sculptures. The collection is chosen soley by artists and thus reflects their tastes.

The masterpieces in "Paintings from the Royal Academy" exhibition include Reynolds' "George III," a six- by nine-foot portrait which will be seen in the king's former colonies for the first time. Equally imposing is Constable's "Leaping Horse," a landscape considered among the finest from this painter.

Airy and spontaneous, five oils-on-paper by Constable suggest why his landscape studies are admired by many artists.

Other high points of the exhibition are Henry Singleton's "Royal Academicians in General Assembly," depicting the institution's 40 members and second president, the American Benjamin West; Raeburn's engaging "Boy and Rabbitt;" and drawings by Stubbs for his monumental volume, "The Anatomy of the Horse."

Funded by BATUS Inc., "Paintings from the Royal Academy" appears at the National Academy of Design as a "Britain Salutes New York" festival presentation.

The National Academy is open daily Tuesdays through Sundays from noon until 5 p.m., closed Mondays. Admission is $1.50 per person, with free admission Tuesday evenings from 5 to 8 p.m.

From New York the show will travel to five other American museums — in Seattle, New Orleans, San Antonio, Richmond and Wilmington, Del. His Excellency Sir Oliver White, Ambassador of Great Britain to the U.S., is honorary patron of the exhibition.

A fully illustrated catalogue, supported by a grant from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, contains 33 color plates. The catalogue, priced at $13, plus $1.50 for postage and handling for mail orders, may be ordered from: The National Academy, 1083 Fifth Avenue at 89th Street, New York, N.Y., 10028.

Spotlight Turned On Huston

CBS presents a tribute to director John Huston this week.

Huston with more than 40 major films to his credit, is the subject of "The American Film Institute Salute to John Huston," to air Wednesday, March 23. Lauren Bacall hosts the tribute.

Huston will be presented with the American Film Institute's Life Achievement award at a black-tie dinner on March 3, which was taped for the television special.

Some of the celebrities who will join the special to honor the director are: Orson Welles, Bette Davis (previous recipients of Life Achievement awards), Robert Mitchum, Victoria Principal, Michael Caine, Robert Blake, Sam Jaffe, James Mason and soccer great Pele.

Miss Bacall is closely linked with Huston through her late husband, Humphrey Bogart, who starred in several famous Huston films, such as "The Maltese Falcon," "The African Queen," "Key Largo" (in which Miss Bacall co-starred), "The Treasure of Sierra Madre" and "Beat the Devil."

Others who were awarded the Life Achievement award from the American Film Institute were John Ford in 1973, James Cagney in 1974, Welles in '75, William Wyler in '76, Miss Davis in '77, Henry Fonda in 1978, Alfred Hitchcock in '79, James Stewart in '80, Fred Astaire in '81 and Frank Capra last year.

Huston, who was born in 1906, the son of actor Walter Huston, began his adult life as a journalist but soon turned to screenwriting. For several years he was successful at screenwriting but turned to directing in 1941.

His first try at directing was a movie that became an instant success, "The Maltese Falcon," and endures to this day as a classic detective story. Huston also wrote the screenplay. "In This Our Life," with Bette Davis and Olivia de Havilland, and "Across the Pacific," with Bogart, soon followed.

After several years in the Army during World War II, Huston returned to direct "The Red Badge of Courage," "The Asphalt Jungle," "Moulin Rouge," "Moby Dick," "Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison" and "The Roots of Heaven." Recently, he directed the musical "Annie," and before that, "Victory."

Bulletins Update Threats

The issue of nuclear weaponry has long been a controversial one. Although steps have been taken by certain groups to get people thinking about the consequences, the matters still seem like ones that can be put off by ordinary citizens for awhile. However, that may change after NBC's presentation of the innovative drama "Special Bulletin," on Sunday, March 20.

Though executive producer Don Ohlmeyer denies his intention was to create a modern counterpart to the famous Orson Welles "War of the Worlds" radio panic of the late '30s, the potential is clearly there.

"Special Bulletin" shows what could happen if anti-nuclear terrorists took over a major city — in this case, Charleston, S.C. — and threatened to detonate their own bomb unless their demands are met. The events will be presented as if they were actually unfolding during network television reports (or special bulletins).

Ohlmeyer's main expertise lies in the world of TV sports; after years with ABC, he crossed over to NBC and created that network's highly successful "SportsWorld" series. His experience provided ar education in using state-of-the-art video equipment, which "Special Bulletin" uses extensively.

"We worked on the script for three months," he says, "so I'm familiar with the lines, but watching it actually unfold is unbelievably frightening because it looks so real." Some Charleston officials also felt that fright factor, but Ohlmeyer says the community was generally cooperative.

The cast is largely made up of unknowns, though Ed Flanders of "St. Elsewhere" and character actress Kathryn Walker star as the TV reporters. According to Ohlmeyer, "It's a producer or director's dream to be able to cast the right performers for the right parts, without needing a couple of marquee-value names who maybe can't act."

Disclaimers will be placed throughout "Special Bulletin" so latecomers won't mistake fiction for fact — but in an off-handed way. Ohlmeyer hopes the effect on viewers will be similar to what the real thing would produce.

"We're not trying to scare people by making them think this is actually happening, though they should be caught up in the imagined reality of it, as with any good picture. Suffice it to say, though, that I think they're going to be on the edges of their seats while they're watching this."

Justice Delayed

Friends often watch Susan Scannell's performance on "Search for Tomorrow," but one pal on jury duty had proceedings delayed so that she and nearly everyone else there could watch the show. Said Susan: "Now that's a friend."

Nelson Warms To Television

TRACY NELSON

It's not surprising that 19-year-old Tracy Nelson is in show business. After all, she comes from a long line of celebrities — she is the daughter of actor-musician Rick Nelson and actress Kristin Harmon Nelson, the granddaughter of Ozzie and Harriet Nelson, the granddaughter of football great Tom Harmon, and the great, great granddaughter of epic film director Cecil B. DeMille.

Nevertheless, despite her distinguished pedigree, Miss Nelson, who plays Jennifer Dinuccio on "Square Pegs," is a reluctant celebrity and at one time hesitated to work in television.

"I was worried about doing a TV show because so much of TV is bad TV," said the actress, who has performed on stage in England and Scotland. "But the 'Square Pegs' pilot was a really good script. It was so different and refreshing. I wouldn't have done it if the people involved weren't involved."

One of the driving forces behind the CBS series is its creator, "Saturday Night Live" alumna Anne Beatts, who has said that the message of "Square Pegs" is that it's okay to be socially lame — to be a square peg in a round hole.

"The great thing about our show is that we have an incredibly creative cast and production staff. Everyone in the cast is young and excited," said Miss Nelson. "In the pilot, Anne Beatts gave us a synopsis of the character and let us do whatever we wanted with it. She had enough respect for us to listen."

In Jennifer Dinuccio, Miss Nelson fleshed out a character who is trendy, aloof, and, perhaps most important, popular. Because she is one of Weemawee High School's "in crowd," Jennifer is looked up to by the definitive square pegs in the series — Patty and Lauren — who spend the bulk of their time trying to be as popular as Jennifer.

"If Jennifer's the proverbial anything, it's the class snob," explained Miss Nelson. "When you're going to high school, you don't know why those girls are so popular, but they are. That's what was so interesting originally about Jennifer because I had to find that thing that makes her so popular. I think it's her attitude."

On the surface, Jennifer may seem like a caricature because often her chief concern is appearance, but Miss Nelson defends the character.

"To me, Jennifer has a lot of dimensions; she is a person," Miss Nelson said. "Jennifer has lots of things that make her feel bad or make her angry. Playing her is an acting exercise that's as important as any other part."

Cast For Cruise

Yvette Mimieux, Brenda Vaccaro, Donna Reed and Efrem Zimbalist Jr. have been set for "The Love Boat's" two-hour special to be filmed on location in Hong Kong.

Richard Kinon directs the first of "The Love Boat's" three specials to be filmed in the Far East, with locations including the People's Republic of China, Japan and Pearl Cruises' M/S Pearl of Scandinavia, in addition to Hong Kong.

Personal Best

Denzel Washington, who co-stars as Dr. Phillip Chandler on the realistic medical series "St. Elsewhere," wants to invest his character with some personal qualities.

"I'd like to bring the best of myself to the character," said Washington. "I think Chandler is strong but with a sense of humor. He has to be strong because he's one of the few black doctors in the hospital. He's under pressure to make it. He's out there on his own."

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

DEAR MICHELE: Could you give me some information on Felice Schacter? She played Nancy on the old "Facts of Life" series. Also, where could I write to her? JOHN BELCH, HOPE MILLS, N.C.

TO JOHN IN HOPE MILLS: Felice Schacter was born in New York City on November 17, 1963. She has been acting since the age of six months, when she was signed to be the "Pampers" baby. If she's not already enrolled, Felice would like to go to Princeton (it's close to her New York home) to study psychology and journalism for an alternative career in broadcasting. Although no longer a castmember of "The Facts of Life," I suggest you write to her in c/o the series, NBC-TV, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, N.Y., N.Y., 10020. The network will forward her mail.

DEAR MICHELE: On the series "The Andy Griffith Show" was the town of Mayberry, N.C., based on Elm City, N.C., and if not which town was it, if any? JOHN BAILEY, ELM CITY, N.C.

TO JOHN IN ELM CITY: Andy Griffith was born in Mt. Airy, North Carolina. Mayberry is loosely based on his hometown, where today stands Mayberry Mall.

DEAR MICHELE: Everyone I know agrees with me that the most outstanding performance in "The Winds of War" was given by Jan-Michael Vincent. He showed maturity, skill and real craftsmanship as an actor. Byron was, by far, the most unforgettable character in the series. Who is Jan-Michael Vincent? What else has he appeared in and where is he from and how does one contact him? RALPH HARDEE RIVES, GREENVILLE, N.C.

TO RALPH IN GREENVILLE: Jan-Michael Vincent temporarily traded in his surf board to portray Byron Henry in ABC's epic "The Winds of War." Vincent is an actor by trade, a world-wandering surfer by choice. He has established himself as a working professional in some 200 television shows and 18 movies, including last year's "Hard Country," and "Buster and Billie," "White Line Fever," "Baby Blue Marine," "Hooper" and "Bite the Bullet." Born in Denver and raised in Manford, California, he's not one of Hollywood's 'in' crowd. He's more likely to be found in a country-and-western club with his guitar, singing along with Willie Nelson, David Allen Coe or James Taylor. Home today is (where else?) Malibu Beach, in a house he built with the aid of some fellow surfers. Divorced, he has a daughter, Amber. You may address your correspondence to Vincent in c/o ABC Entertainment Center, 2040 Avenue of the Stars, Los Angeles, Ca., 90067.

(FOR ANSWERS TO YOUR QUESTIONS ABOUT TV SHOWS AND PERSONALITIES, WRITE TO 'MICHELE,' c/o The Greenville Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 30, Hopewell, Va. 23860.)

Heather Directs Acting Career

Heather Thomas has always wanted to direct movies, not star in them. But anyone who has seen her as apprentice stuntwoman Jody Banks on ABC's "The Fall Guy" knows that the movies' loss is television's gain.

The 24-year-old actress did enter UCLA as a theater major, but during her last two years of school her attention turned toward activities behind the camera. But even before graduating she learned one of Hollywood's basic lessons.

"I can make a lot more contacts acting," she explains. "Then I can use them for producing later."

Her first interview was to replace Pamela Sue Martin on "Nancy Drew." It was unsuccessful, but on the third try she won a role on CBS' "Animal House" clone, "Co-Ed Fever."

"It was canceled after the third commercial," says Miss Thomas, with a laugh. Actually, viewers weren't that lucky. The show lasted a full 30 minutes, but was unceremoniously canceled, despite seven other episodes that were scheduled.

Feeling her performance was contributory to the disaster, she began taking acting classes and hasn't stopped since. She's been much luckier with "The Fall Guy," the highly rated Wednesday night series about Hollywood stuntpeople.

"Between (series star) Lee Majors and (series creator) Glenn Larson, I knew I couldn't lose," she says.

Even though it didn't come to realization during the first year on "The Fall Guy," Miss Thomas insists this season she will do more than perpetuate the "Charlie's Angels" giggle and jiggle tradition.

"The first year," she explains, "we had to promote the main character and let the public know him."

Miss Thomas has learned a lot from working with Majors, and considers him one of her closest friends.

"Lee has a heart of gold," says Miss Thomas, "but he demands professionalism as Barbara Stanwyck did of him when they did 'The Big Valley' together. He's also the co-producer so he had to establish a parental image. But he has also broken out a case of $40 wine for the crew on a cold night."

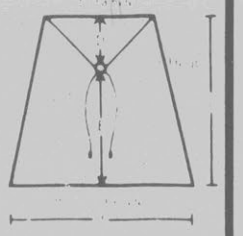

Friends Pop Up

One never knows where friends will pop up, as Joe Mascolo (Stephano DiMera) of "Days of Our Lives" found out. While filming on location in Lake Arrowhead, Calif., some of Joe's pals just happened to have a cabin next door to the one the show was renting. For Joe it was "a very pleasant surprise."

Interest In 'Facts'

Nancy McKeon, 16-year-old star of "The Facts of Life," feels it's good for young stars to know about business and finance.

"In a few years, I want to be able to know about money managing," said McKeon. "As a legal adult, I will need to be familiar with stocks, bonds and all that stuff."

Waters Choppy For Lawyer

The CBS series "Mississippi," filmed on and around the beautiful and historical American river of the same name, will premiere Friday, March 25 (10-11 p.m.).

In this limited run show, Ralph Waite portrays criminal lawyer Ben Walker, a successful big city attorney who, unfulfilled by the high-pressure business world, begins a new life on the Mississippi River as the owner of a stern-wheel towboat, or river tug. Despite the refreshing change the river offers, Ben finds himself swept into action and drama at every port, defending local townsfolk in trouble with the law, and oftentimes working for no fee.

Stan Shaw plays Lafayette Tate, a Vietnam veteran who wants to escape from the violence of his past, but is not quite beyond getting himself into scrapes, from which Ben must occasionally extricate him. Lafe's responsibilities include keeping the riverboat in running order and assisting Ben with his cases.

As they travel on the river under Ben's steady hand, the itinerant crew comes together and even begins to resemble a family.

Waite, who starred for nine years in the series "The Waltons," is a co-founder of the Los Angeles Actors Theater. Although perhaps best-known as the father of the Walton clan, Waite has an impressive list of theatrical credits, including stints on Broadway in such plays as "Hogans Goat," "The Watering Place," "The Trial of Lee Harvey Oswald" and "Blues for Mister Charlie." Waite's films include "Five Easy Pieces," "Lawman," "The Grissom Gang" and "On the Nickel," which he also wrote, produced and directed.

Miss Miller has also appeared on Broadway in the 1975 production of "Black Picture Show," for which she was a Tony Award nominee and a Theatre World Award winner.

"Mississippi" will run for six weeks, replacing "Falcon Crest" until its return in re-runs later in the year.

Candy's Characters Are Not Too Sweet

"I don't know where it comes from either," says repertory player John Candy of NBC's satirical comedy series "SCTV Network," as he allows that, yes, sleaziness does seem to be the stock-in-trade of several of the Candy-originated characters.

Johnny LaRue, the producer-entrepreneur, is the best-known Candy alter ego. "His outside interests could be anything from moving companies to slum landlord," Candy says. Forever in debt and a born hustler ("he's been working since he was 10 years old"), LaRue, according to Candy, is not about to foist his life style on any life-long partner. "There will definitely not be a Mrs. LaRue. He sees himself as the perennial playboy."

Then there is Tommy Shanks, the mayor of Melonville, the fictional town where the SCTV station is located. "He's a politician of very few words," Candy says. Shanks reacted angrily — to the point of physical confrontation — not too long ago to some comments by "Nightline Melonville" co-anchors Floyd Robertson (Joe Flaherty) and Earl Camembert (Eugene Levy).

But are all of Candy's characters a good deal less than solid citizens? Not exactly. Witness "Fishin' Musician" Gil Fisher, who is a real pleasant sort. And how about Candy being invited to meet opera superstar Luciano Pavarotti, whom he has parodied more than once on the show? That's pretty high-brow for the guy who also gave the world the aforementioned LaRue and others of that ilk.

Candy's first professional job was in "Creeps" at Toronto's Tarragon Theater. In 1973, he accompanied his friends, Dan Aykroyd and Valerie Bromfield, to a Second City audition and was hired for the Chicago company. Shortly thereafter, they joined the first Toronto Second City cast.

"SCTV Network" debuted in 1976. Candy has been associated with the show from its inception, except when he left temporarily in 1980 to write and perform in "Big City Comedy."

Interest In 'Facts'

Nancy McKeon, 16-year-old star of "The Facts of Life," feels it's good for young stars to know about business and finance.

"In a few years, I want to be able to know about money managing," said McKeon. "As a legal adult, I will need to be familiar with stocks, bonds and all that stuff."

Waters Choppy For Lawyer

The CBS series "Mississippi," filmed on and around the beautiful and historical American river of the same name, will premiere Friday, March 25 (10-11 p.m.).

In this limited run show, Ralph Waite portrays criminal lawyer Ben Walker, a successful big city attorney who, unfulfilled by the high-pressure business world, begins a new life on the Mississippi River as the owner of a stern-wheel towboat, or river tug. Despite the refreshing change the river offers, Ben finds himself swept into action and drama at every port, defending local townsfolk in trouble with the law, and oftentimes working for no fee.

Stan Shaw plays Lafayette Tate, a Vietnam veteran who wants to escape from the violence of his past, but is not quite beyond getting himself into scrapes, from which Ben must occasionally extricate him. Lafe's responsibilities include keeping the riverboat in running order and assisting Ben with his cases.

As they travel on the river under Ben's steady hand, the itinerant crew comes together and even begins to resemble a family.

Waite, who starred for nine years in the series "The Waltons," is a co-founder of the Los Angeles Actors Theater. Although perhaps best-known as the father of the Walton clan, Waite has an impressive list of theatrical credits, including stints on Broadway in such plays as "Hogans Goat," "The Watering Place," "The Trial of Lee Harvey Oswald" and "Blues for Mister Charlie." Waite's films include "Five Easy Pieces," "Lawman," "The Grissom Gang" and "On the Nickel," which he also wrote, produced and directed.

Miss Miller has also appeared on Broadway in the 1975 production of "Black Picture Show," for which she was a Tony Award nominee and a Theatre World Award winner.

"Mississippi" will run for six weeks, replacing "Falcon Crest" until its return in re-runs later in the year.

Candy's Characters Are Not Too Sweet

"I don't know where it comes from either," says repertory player John Candy of NBC's satirical comedy series "SCTV Network," as he allows that, yes, sleaziness does seem to be the stock-in-trade of several of the Candy-originated characters.

Johnny LaRue, the producer-entrepreneur, is the best-known Candy alter ego. "His outside interests could be anything from moving companies to slum landlord," Candy says. Forever in debt and a born hustler ("he's been working since he was 10 years old"), LaRue, according to Candy, is not about to foist his life style on any life-long partner. "There will definitely not be a Mrs. LaRue. He sees himself as the perennial playboy."

Then there is Tommy Shanks, the mayor of Melonville, the fictional town where the SCTV station is located. "He's a politician of very few words," Candy says. Shanks reacted angrily — to the point of physical confrontation — not too long ago to some comments by "Nightline Melonville" co-anchors Floyd Robertson (Joe Flaherty) and Earl Camembert (Eugene Levy).

But are all of Candy's characters a good deal less than solid citizens? Not exactly. Witness "Fishin' Musician" Gil Fisher, who is a real pleasant sort. And how about Candy being invited to meet opera superstar Luciano Pavarotti, whom he has parodied more than once on the show? That's pretty high-brow for the guy who also gave the world the aforementioned LaRue and others of that ilk.

Candy's first professional job was in "Creeps" at Toronto's Tarragon Theater. In 1973, he accompanied his friends, Dan Aykroyd and Valerie Bromfield, to a Second City audition and was hired for the Chicago company. Shortly thereafter, they joined the first Toronto Second City cast.

"SCTV Network" debuted in 1976. Candy has been associated with the show from its inception, except when he left temporarily in 1980 to write and perform in "Big City Comedy."

Gratifying Work

Jim Perry, the host of the new quiz show "Sale of the Century," has been host to a number of other game shows, both in the United States and in Canada. He estimates to have given away over $3 million in cash and prizes during his tenure as host of these programs, which include the former game show "Card Sharks."

"It's a great thrill to see people win," said Perry. "Some are truly overwhelmed. It goes back to the old adage that giving is better than receiving — and, for me, that's very true. It's indeed gratifying, and one of the wonderful parts of my job, to see people literally jump for joy."

Writing New Series

NBC Entertainment has commissioned "Shogun" writer Eric Bercovici to write "Thousand and One Nights," a five-hour miniseries anthology of Arabian intrigue stories.

A Young Landry

Chicago Blitz quarterback Greg Landry recently appeared on "ABC SportsBeat" and talked about George Allen. "At 36, I'm young in George's mind, whereas I was let go in Baltimore because I was too old...The only other team that I can recall is Dallas that puts a lot more emphasis in character than just on the stopwatch."

Allen Sums It Up

Chicago Blitz head coach and part owner George Allen talked with Howard Cosell about his team and the USFL on "ABC SportsBeat." Allen has been criticized for spending large sums of money to sign top rookies and veterans. "I don't think anyone can get in this league and think they're going to count pennies," stated Allen. "When you start a new league, you've got to expect to lose a little money."

Laimbeer Cleans The Boards

Naming the top rebounding center is easy — Moses Malone of the Philadelphia 76ers. Now, can you name the NBA's second leading rebounding center?

The answer is Detroit's Bill Laimbeer, and if you didn't get it, you can be excused. Laimbeer is hardly a household name. He's not much of a jumper, is not particularly quick, had to spend a year in Europe before making it in the NBA and for much of his career had a tendency to carry a few extra pounds.

But that is all in the past. The new Bill Laimbeer, while not exactly svelte, is some 30 pounds trimmer than the old model. He takes basketball more seriously now, knowing it's his career and thus requires year-round training.

Laimbeer and Malone can be seen going head-to-head on Sunday, March 20 (7 p.m.), when ESPN broadcasts the Pistons-76ers game.

"Early in his career Bill was kind of happy-go-lucky. He told us he believed the summer was his time and he wanted to forget about basketball," said Pistons coach Scotty Robertson. "I told Bill, 'You can't play if you're fat,' and he responded by showing up at 254 (down from a high of 280) in training camp this year. We've shown confidence in him and given him the responsibility of being the starting center. He's responded by playing well."

Although Laimbeer picked up some of the scoring slack when the Pistons were plagued with injuries earlier this season, his primary job is rebounding.

"Rebounding is my job and if I don't do it we're in trouble," Laimbeer said. "I'm really the only rebounder on the team. Our forwards are scorers and shot-blocker types."

Laimbeer, who is listed at 6-11 and 245 pounds, averaged 7.4 points and 6.3 rebounds a game in three unheralded seasons of college ball at Notre Dame and was a third-round draft choice of the Cleveland Cavaliers in 1979. He opted to go to Italy instead and averaged 21.1 points and 12.5 rebounds per game for Brescia. He signed with Cleveland in 1980, but gradually lost playing time after the club signed James Edwards as a free agent. In February 1982, Laimbeer was dealt along with Kenny Carr to the Pistons for Paul Mokeski, Phil Hubbard, a first-round pick and a second-round pick.

Laimbeer has turned out to be a fine acquisition for Detroit. He started all 30 games after joining the Pistons last season and averaged 11.3 rebounds, enough to have ranked fifth in the NBA if he'd done it over a full season. This season his solid presence in the middle has earned the respect of players and coaches around the league. The Eastern Conference coaches, in fact, voted him to a spot on the All-Star team.

Run For Record

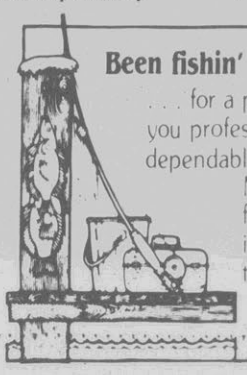

The Philadelphia 76ers may become the first team in NBA history to win 70 games in one season. Their season to date, equals the pace set by the 1971-72 Los Angeles Lakers, as they ran off the current record of 69 wins.

TV Chatter

By Polly Vonetes

It was bound to happen — it just took a little longer than I thought. Judy Carne, Burt Reynolds' ex-wife, is negotiating with a publisher to publish the story of her three-year marriage to Burt, titled, "Judy — My Life with Burt Reynolds." It promises to be one of those 'tell all' books.

Voluptuous Mae West dolls will be joining the glamorous hand-painted Marilyn Monroe dolls on toy shelves around the country by Christmas time. Poor Barbie — by comparison she will look like a victim of anorexia nervosa.

For you who prefer the long form TV mini-series — good news — for you who don't — sorry about that, but "money and ratings" is the name of the game. The success of "The Winds of War" has caused the networks, and justifiably so, to plan for more and more of these "events" on their schedules. It was the first time in three years that cable viewers switched back to free TV to catch the "Winds" — a fact that cannot be ignored.

Jane Russell's "sagging spirits" may be attributed to the cancellation of her "uplifting" bra commercials. She is afraid her fans will forget her — (not a chance, Jane, your beauty was photographically recorded for us to enjoy time and time again in such films as "The Outlaw" and "Gentleman Prefer Blondes" on the late show).

I thought Peter O'Toole's green socks were a nice touch for St. Patricks Day. Then I found out that he always wears green socks — he gets an attack of nerves if those green socks aren't on or near his body. The story goes that Peter's father, Pat, a bookie in Connemara, Ireland, thought that green socks would bring a bookie luck. Now Pete wears them always in honor of his much-beloved father.

A full crew will be on hand when "The Love Boat" sets sail for its seventh season this fall. In fact, almost all regulars (except three) have re-signed their contracts for the eighth, ninth and tenth seasons. The three in question are Fred Grandy (Gopher) and Bernie Kopell (Doc), who are still negotiating — no problems expected here — but Lauren Tewes, whose agent is holding out for more money, is something else — she will receive $1,000,000 for this seventh year — producers feel that's adequate pay for a cruise director.

CHARLENE TILTON

co-star of Dallas and Youth Chairman for the March 26-27 Easter Seals Telethon

What prompted you to take up volunteer work? —H.J., Easton, Pa.

Back in elementary school the principal asked if I'd tutor some of the kindergarten kids with learning problems — and I found that I liked tutoring. In high school I got a group together to sing in old-age homes. Another time I helped out with a carnival that raised a million dollars for a child study center. Now, with Easter Seals I'm trying to get young people to do volunteer work with disabled people in their communities.

ROBERT GOULET

Of all the famous folks you've performed in front of, is there anyone you could have done without? —K.B., Albany, N.Y.

L.B.J. During the Vietnam War, I performed at a White House state dinner. The President sat 30 feet away from me, slumped in his chair, head cradled in his arm, elbow resting on the chair. He stared at me dourly for five songs. I got nervous, so before the next song I went over and whispered, "Mr. President, you are scaring the daylights out of me." He just continued scowling. I thought my career was over. At the end, however, he said, "I admire you very much." With as much grace as I could muster, I replied, "I wish you had said that earlier."

FROM THE "ASK" EDITORS

LOS ANGELES — Now that Lynda Carter has shed Ron Samuels both as husband and manager, she's signed with Jerry Weintraub's firm, which is off and running with a Rita Hayworth-style buildup — appropriate since Carter will star in a three-hour CBS-TV movie on the life of that 1940's red-haired pinup queen. Hayworth is now suffering from premature senility and has a court-appointed custodian to handle her affairs. Carter, the former beauty queen and Wonder Woman, is cramming by reading every article and book ever written about Hayworth and running her movies, especially Gilda, Cover Girl, Fire Down Below and Pal Joey, over and over.... Despite coming off a recent slew of box-office failures, Jack Nicholson will get $3 million of M.G.M./U.A.'s $12 million budget for Roadshow. Co-star Tim Hutton gets $1.5 million and director Martin Ritt $1 million.... Capitol Records doesn't kid around when it signs new acts. The company's contracts call for exclusive rights to the work of each new artist "throughout the Universe (including, but not limited to, the entire solar system)."... In the unlikeliest casting this side of Jerry Lewis and Robert De Niro in The King of Comedy, Jackie Gleason has sailed to England (he still won't fly) to join Laurence Olivier in filming an HBO drama. "It's just the two of us speaking to each other at the funeral of my wife," says Gleason, adding that now Lord Larry will finally get to work with "the No. 2 actor in the world."

—Robert Windeler

Lynda Carter

NEW YORK — French sex goddess Brigitte Bardot, still gorgeous at 48, tells why she quit making skin flicks in favor of protecting seals' skins: "I never enjoyed acting. The sex scenes made me ill. They don't compare to poor, dumb animals, which give me my reason for living."... Jackie Onassis recently watched one of her favorite performers, ballet's Rudolf Nureyev, in his Broadway production of Don Quixote. She sat entranced on the edge of her seat, chin cupped in her hands. Only occasionally did she take her eyes from the stage to whisper something to her date, financier Maurice Tempelsman.... Princess Stephanie of Monaco will start her fashion-design career in September at a Paris school. She had to put off entering for a year because of the car crash that severely injured her and killed her mother, Princess Grace.... REO Speedwagon rockers Kevin Cronin and Gary Richrath ran into John McEnroe's manager after a recent match. Informed that the volatile tennis star was unwinding by playing his guitar, guitarist Cronin marveled, "How strange. I unwind by playing tennis."

WASHINGTON — Contrary to popular rumor, President Reagan and his elegant wife, Nancy, do not dine on veal in truffle sauce when alone at the White House. "They like simple dinners," says Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, Sheila Tate. "Maybe steak and a salad, but always a dessert. Their weakness is sweets." And according to Tate, the President's biggest weakness is not jelly beans. It's coconut cake.... Anti-Equal Rights Amendment crusader Phyllis Schlafly recently delivered boxes of quiche to senators supporting the E.R.A. Spoofing the current best seller, her inscription read, "Real Men Do Not Draft Women." Reactions were strong. Some senators were unhappy that they got spinach instead of seafood. The most distraught was Senator Dennis DeConcini (D.-Ariz.) who didn't receive any quiche at all. His spokesman complained, "We're very upset. He's a bonafide [E.R.A.] supporter."... At January's annual bash for the Alfalfa Club, an exclusive 150-member group comprised of Cabinet members, Supreme Court justices, Congressmen and the President, attorney (and Baltimore Orioles owner) Edward Bennett Williams kiddingly offered this political observation: Senator John Glenn and former California Governor Jerry Brown would make a great Presidential ticket because both had been in outer space — although Brown had suffered re-entry problems.

"Where's Mommy?"

THE ANGUISH OF ABSENTEE MOTHERS

By Patricia Paskowicz

Not long ago I went with my husband to a cocktail party, one of many such events I have to attend in relation to his faculty position at a large university. It should have been just another innocuous gathering, and it would have been if not for one significant factor: I'm an "absentee" mother, a woman who gave custody of her three children to their father when he and I divorced. And that fact, I have learned, is like having a stick of dynamite strapped to me in a world full of pyromaniacs, forever fearing that someone will choose to strike a match and light the fuse. Anyone at all can do it at will. This time the destruction came from the department chairman's wife, a person I had not met before.

I was standing alone, nibbling at the tidbits I'd chosen from the buffet, when she approached me with a welcoming smile and an introduction. Yes, I was so-and-so's wife, and yes, I had come from Chicago all the way to the West Coast to marry him. No, the two of us did not have children, but I had three children from a first marriage. Ah, well, that must keep me busy. Which school were they attending?

"Well, they don't attend school here; they live with their father in Michigan," I replied.

The look of horror which spread across her face seemed like an eclipse of the sun. She stood there for a few seconds, utterly speechless, although her mouth was open in astonishment. A familiar anticipation of approaching danger rushed through me. This woman was reaching for one of those matches, and I had to stand there and allow her to use it. Without another word or gesture, she turned her back on me and walked away. I retreated to the nearest bathroom and cried.

Another time, before I had remarried, a blind date had ended in a similar fashion. When I offered my phone number to the man, he said, "I really don't want that; I could never come to like a woman who's deserted her kids." Deserted? I saw my children regularly and had told him so..

From research I've conducted on my own — I've interviewed roughly 100 absentee mothers — I estimate that more than a million other mothers without custody exist in this country, and most of them face the same sort of rejection and ostracism. A mother who lives apart from her children, regardless of the reasons, or how often she sees them, is almost without exception considered deplorable and is commonly assumed to be a runaway mother — although hardly any of them really are.

In the eyes of our society the absentee mother is seen as having refused to accept her life assignment.

We refuse to see that sometimes it is in the children's best interest for the father to assume custody.

She is a rebel. And that makes her dangerous.

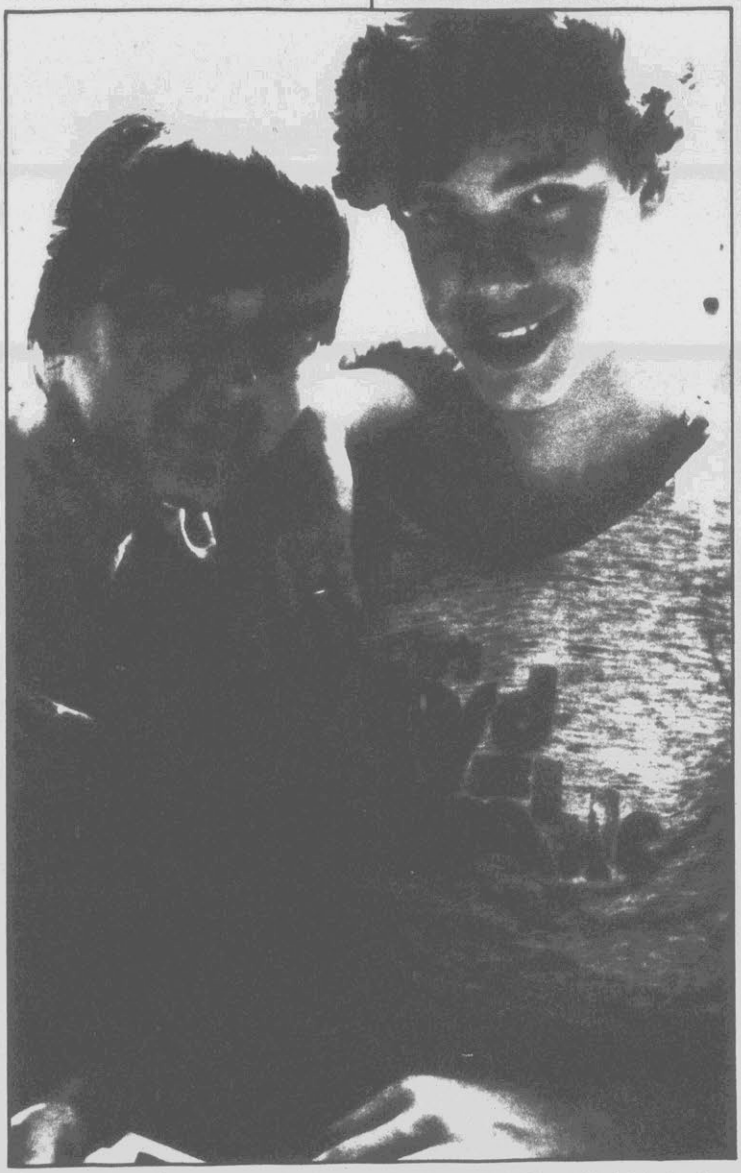

We stubbornly refuse to see that in certain instances not only is it in the mother's best interest but also the children's for the father to assume custody following divorce. Naturally there are some frivolous absentee mothers who fit the stereotype represented by a playgirl like Margaret Trudeau, but my research shows that these are a mere handful, comparatively speaking. It should also be noted that in 25 percent of the cases, women have absentee motherhood imposed on them, half of the time by the courts and half by their children's wishes.

Of the so-called "willing" absentee mothers I studied (many actually feel they have no choice), 20 percent gave up their children due to sheer intimidation by their husbands — they feared physical violence, commitment to psychiatric facilities or unrelenting harrassment.

Another fifth relinquished custody when they experienced emotional breakdowns (many had serious problems in their own childhoods) and were no longer able to handle the responsibility of raising their children. "When I left my husband, my sons were only 1 and 2," explained one absentee mother. "For six years I had tried on my own but became overwhelmed and shot myself. . . . When I found myself thinking of suicide again, I gave up my boys."

Yet another 20 percent gave up custody because they couldn't get by financially (usually after trying to do so as a divorced mother for an average of two and a half years). "Having custody sentenced me to welfare and my son to a terrible, inner-city environment," said the absentee mother of a 5-year-old boy. "He needed more than I could give, more than just love can provide. I couldn't live that kind of life anymore!"

The author says son Chris, now 15, is more "bemused" than bitter about his situation.

Then there is the fifth who relinquished custody in order to "find themselves," to gain self-realization. Such a goal sounds egotistical and selfish, but most of these mothers found themselves in acute stages of self-deprivation every bit as pathological and dangerous to their emotional health as a disease would be to their physical health. Said a divorced mother of three young children who had given everything she had to single mothering for seven years: "I was so burned out I just had to go away and heal. The children's needs always had to be considered first and, ultimately, to take precedence over any of my needs. How long should I have been expected to be excluded from the world because I am a mother?"

The remaining 20 percent consists of women who decided, along with their husbands, that the children would receive more effective nurturing with their fathers, and women who were having problems in second marriages.

Valid and even urgent reasons aside, the absentee mother is stigmatized, even if she continues to see her children on a regular basis. Noncustodial mothers told me they were called unfeeling, irresponsible, narcissistic, obscenely ambitious and promiscuous. One woman, who was raised in a very religious family, was told by her parents that she would "go to hell for this."

A college professor I interviewed drew foul language from her father-in-law and disparaging words from her own mother when she gave up custody of her 13-year-old daughter, who didn't want to move 2,000 miles away to where her mother's new job was located. "My mother was acting as if I had failed in my main mission in life; rearing my daughter for 13 years seemed to hold no significance. And my father-in-law called me unspeakable names even though I wanted to take my daughter with me."

Another absentee mother, a 42-year-old personnel director, told me: "I get these funny looks that make me feel like I have two heads. It's gotten so that I don't tell strangers I have children because I don't feel like explaining all the time and then watching as judgment is passed."

In some cases, even her own children turn against the absentee mother. One woman I interviewed, who later killed herself, told me, "My two sons won't see me or talk to me; my whole family has disowned me even though they know how hard it had all been for me, even though I persevered for more than 20 years."

The results of the intense guilt inflicted on absentee mothers and the often vicious social censure they endure combine to create a high rate of self-destructive behavior. My findings indicate attempted suicides among absentee mothers that are 60 times higher than average. In my own case, after failing at suicide twice, I developed an armor against social disapproval: I put 50 pounds of fat between me and "them."

I have found that 60 percent of absentee mothers experience emotional problems serious enough to require psychiatric help, and this situation persists after an average of seven years from the time custody is relinquished. Those absentee mothers who don't fall into suicidal behavior, alchohol or drug abuse use denial to protect themselves from the pain. I've discovered five basic forms of denial used either singularly or in combination: (1) the assertion that they will have their children back as soon as . . . (a small percentage of women, 13 in my study, do resume custody, but the assertion is made even when there is no tangible evidence or likelihood of resumption of custody); (2) the assertion that they wish they hadn't done it (when, in fact, there is good evidence they are at least subconsciously satisfied with the father custody arrangement); (3) the use of secrecy about the fact that they are absentee mothers; (4) the practice of distancing themselves from other absentee mothers with statements and attitudes that amount to saying, "I'm not like them! My decision was unavoidable or justifiable, but theirs probably wasn't," (when, in fact, they share many common denominators); and (5) the dismissal of people's negative reactions to them as being unimportant, ineffective or nonexistent.

Why should these psychological balancing acts be necessary? We say we recognize the essential nature of the need for both men and women to develop according to their individual abilities and limitations. We've certainly come to recognize that men are capable of being excellent nurturers.

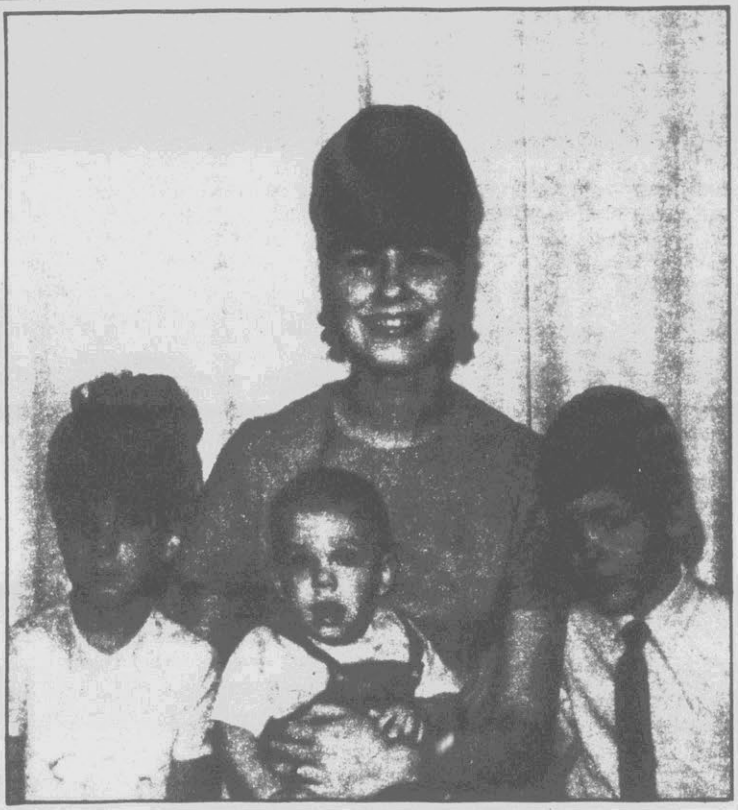

In this light, how can we continue to reject and punish the divorcing mothers who select the option of relinquishing custody? The fact that a woman is an absentee mother does not make her evil while custodial mothers are inherently good. In fact, Mary-Alice Isenhart, a psychologist who has researched the topic, has found that custodial and noncustodial mothers do not significantly differ when it comes to "value systems, personal resources and the view of having acted in the best interest of their children." However, custodial mothers have a more positive view of themselves as parents than do noncustodial mothers. In fact, most absentee mothers in my study see their former husbands as being at least equally competent as parents as they are, if not more so.

I believe one reason absentee mothers don't see their children more is that their guilt feelings lead to painful visits.

And what about the children? Certainly the children of women with emotional problems are spared the trauma of possible child abuse; those whose mothers face severe financial difficulties are insured basic physical necessities that bring essential feelings of security with them.

Furthermore, there is emerging proof that the children of absentee mothers adjust to their parents' divorces and their own new circumstances just as well as children of divorce who live with their mothers. I don't mean to suggest that the children of absentee mothers have no special problems. Because our society teaches children that their mothers are their main source of nurturing, the initial shock of separation from the mother can be terrifying. My older son, now 18, remembers feeling bewildered, and later, in spite of intellectually being able to understand and accept my giving him up when he was 5, feeling unable to dissolve the sense that he had been betrayed.

My daughter, the oldest (she was 7 when my husband and I separated) and now married with a child of her own, is finding it difficult to be a full-time mother herself. We both recognize the link to my negative feelings in the same situation when she was a baby. A sad inheritance. However, on the other hand, my youngest, a boy now 15, responds to the whole issue with a bemused, "What's the big deal, anyway?"

WHERE'S MOMMY?

Interestingly, Prof. Judith L. Fischer and graduate student Jane M. Cardea, of the home and family life department at Texas Tech University in Lubbock, found in their study of mother-child relationships after divorce that "there appeared to be less acceptance of the custody situation on the part of children living with their mothers." One-half would have preferred living in a different family situation such as having their mothers remarry. One-third of the children who lived with their fathers seemed pleased with the situation compared with only one-tenth who seemed pleased living with their mothers.

In other words, nothing so horrible has been found, in fact, with the practice of a mother choosing the noncustodial role. What researchers do suggest is that families work to reduce the custody father's negative feelings toward the noncustody mother and to increase the mother's visitations. (The average absentee mother in my study spends a total of three months a year with her children. I believe one reason absentee mothers don't see their children more is that their guilt feelings lead to painful visits.) Says Dr. Fischer: "The key thing is for a child to have continuing positive contact with the absent parent, whether mother or father."

When handled right, what we have in the end, I believe, are fathers who want custody having it, mothers who want help with parenting getting it, children who seem better off in some important ways and a reduction in human frustration. PW

What we have in the end are fathers who want custody having it and mothers who want help with parenting getting it.

BRYANT GUMBEL RAIDS THE REFRIGERATOR

TODAY'S COOL-AS-ICE CO-HOST THRIVES IN THE HOT SEAT.

By Mark Goodman

Bryant Gumbel, co-host of NBC's Today, sits back in his office after a hectic morning before the cameras, lights up a cigar and says, "I'm very happy with my job. It suits my personality. For better or worse, I'm the sort of guy who walks into your home and goes right to your refrigerator."

That's the sort of good-natured casualness viewers like in the early morning while they themselves are rummaging in their refrigerators, trying to wake up and absorb the first onslaught of the day's events. Still, Gumbel's job is no piece of cake. In January of last year, he replaced veteran Tom Brokaw in Today's co-anchor post next to the multitalented Jane Pauley. He did so at a touchy time. For two decades Today's hold on the television audience was as strong as morning coffee. Then along came David Hartman and his homespun style on ABC's Good Morning America, and NBC suddenly awoke one morning to find itself in second place in the ratings race, with CBS Morning News pressing hard from the rear. More than a few pundits predicted that Today would crack in the vise.

Today's ratings have slipped dramatically in the past year, but the show's foothold remains solid, thanks in large measure to Gumbel's imperturbable adaptability. At that, Gumbel, now 34, was not an entirely unfamiliar face to American viewers when he took over the slot. After eight years as a weekend sportscaster at KNBC in Los Angeles, Gumbel assumed the highly visible role as NBC's anchor on NFL '81, the Sunday football roundup show. He also began appearing thrice weekly doing sport spots on Today as well as hosting the "trashsport" show Games People Play (which featured events along the lines of bar bouncer contests and N.F.L. linemen lugging freezers on their backs).

Gumbel's presence, though, was a marked departure from Brokaw's stern eminence. Brokaw was not the sort of folksy fellow to head straight for your refrigerator; indeed, his rare ghost of a smile could chill your orange juice at 90 paces. Yet Brokaw's stiff-jawed approach, which eventually carried him to the co-anchor slot on NBC Nightly News, was a reliable fixture on the morning horizon and, above all else, the American viewer prizes reliability in those frazzled early hours. Reflecting on the contrast, Gumbel says, "Brokaw and I have known each other for 10 years, and we get on well. But we're very different people. I tend to be irreverent, where he's structured. He's more serious than I am, more conservative, and I will react more emotionally than he did."

Nor, of course, does Gumbel ply his trade in a vacuum; he has to blend with Ms. Pauley, who had become accustomed to playing off Brokaw.

"The change was a little scary," Pauley concedes. "After all, I spent five and a half years with Brokaw, and the job just got better and better. To lose him was, frankly, terrifying. But I didn't realize how painless the transition would be. They're not cut from the same cloth, but on balance I think it was an even trade." For his part, Gumbel feels that "I didn't mesh with Jane quickly, but it did come naturally. In fact, I think it would have been unnatural to assume that we would interact instantaneously. If we had tried, I think it would have looked phony. What has evolved, though, is a sense of mutual respect."

Tony Corody/Sygma

Flipping out: Bryant and Bradley admire June's pinball wizardry.

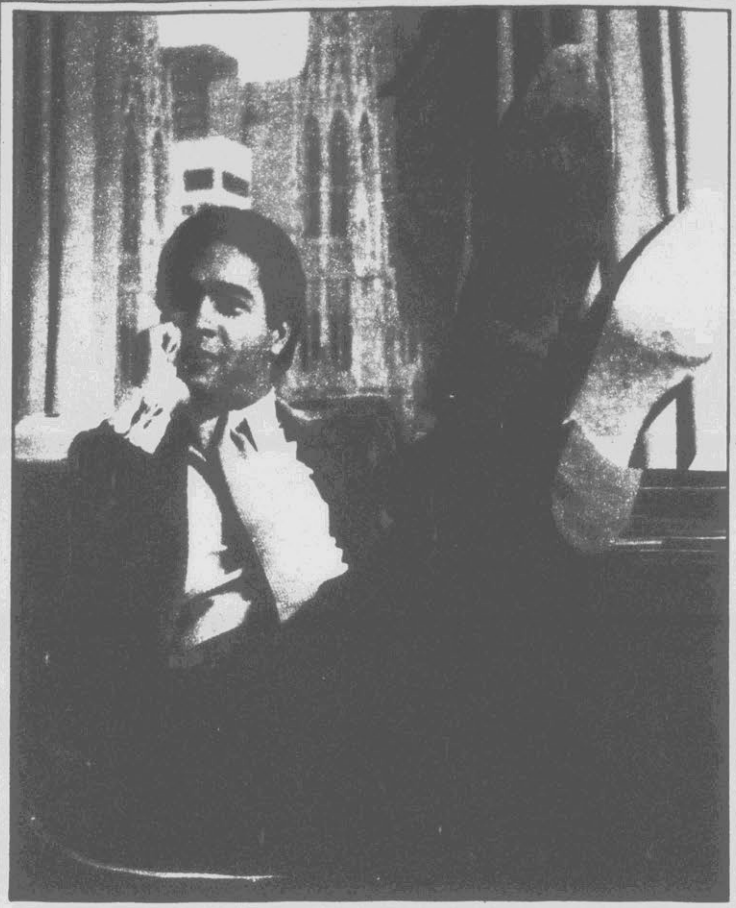

In truth, it is surely Gumbel's relaxed attitude toward the whole business that has carried the morning and at least kept NBC in second place in the ratings (although the latest Nielsen figures show that Today is now closer to third place CBS Morning News than to No. 1

Good Morning America). "I never thought in terms of what people wanted in the morning," Gumbel says, "any more than I ever worried about what people wanted in the way of a sportscaster. I always figured that if I didn't work out, I would at least get fired doing things my own way. I just can't dance to someone else's tune. I don't mean to say, 'Do it my way or to hell with you.' But unless I'm comfortable with something, I can't make it work. If I were a race-car driver, and given the choice of a fast car that I didn't fully understand, I would take a slightly slower car that I knew well."

Another manifest difference between Brokaw and his successor is that Brokaw is white and Gumbel is black. At first much was made of the fact that Gumbel was the first black host of a morning network show — a distinction that seems to matter less and less as time passes and familiarity sets in. "I didn't feel any external pressure about it," Gumbel says. "And I certainly didn't feel any internal pressure. I figured that the executives who made such decisions had already factored in whether or not a black face would scare people off in the morning. I didn't believe the people who told me race never entered into it — I'm not that naïve. It just wasn't something I could worry about. But then," he adds, "I never worry about much of anything."

Gumbel grew up in an atmosphere relatively free of worries, racial or otherwise. His late father was a Cook County (Ill.) probate judge and his mother is a Chicago city government employee. He was raised in Hyde Park, an integrated suburb on Chicago's South Side, and attended Catholic De La Salle Institute. For college he chose Bates, a small, prestigious liberal arts school in Maine, where he majored in Russian history. After graduation he sold paper products until the company folded, turned freelance writer and eventually became an editor of Black Sports magazine. When that publication closed down, he landed a job as the weekend sportscaster at KNBC in Los Angeles. He and his wife, June, bought a house in Calabases, Calif., a pleasant town north of Malibu, and settled into the good life with their son, Bradley, now 4.

NBC

BRYANT GUMBEL

Glib, cheeky, good-looking and likable, Gumbel prospered. In 1980 NBC came to him with a three-year package, estimated at $1.5 million. It offered Gumbel a chance to show his wares in all three TV arenas: sports (N.F.L. '81), news (Today) and entertainment (Games People Play). "I didn't really want to leave California," he says, "for very human reasons. We were happy there, I liked what I was doing and I didn't need the money." But he accepted and found a duplex on Manhattan's East Side while he and June kept their California home. He accepted once again when NBC approached him in 1981 about the possibility of replacing Brokaw.

"At first," Gumbel concedes, "the person who was most reluctant was me. I thought, 'Why set yourself up for a line of criticism you don't need?' But I went ahead for motives just as human: challenge, respect, opportunity and money."

Needing only five hours of sleep a night, Gumbel moved effortlessly into the discordant predawn rhythms of early-morning television. He awakens each weekday morning at 4:15, hops into a limousine at 5, is in makeup by 5:10. Then he gets a bit of "quiet time" before facing the cameras for Early Today at 6:30 A.M. After the show he spends the day in his office talking to writers and preparing for the next day's show. At 5:30 in the afternoon, he says, "I become a normal human being. I go home, have dinner with my family, do the things everybody else does." His only after-hours concession to the rigors of his job is the 30 minutes he spends looking over the script before turning in.

"If I didn't work out, I would get fired doing things my own way."

The last of many things Bryant Gumbel does not worry about are ratings. "Look," he says, "these are hard times for NBC. On Today we're like pitchers who are supposed to win 20 games for a team that's playing under .500 ball. There's only so much we can do on morning news. I mean, we can't say Reagan was shot when he wasn't, just to excite the viewer. Sure I'd like to be No. 1, but it's unrealistic to expect a news program to burst out of the pack. But things will get better for NBC, and they'll get better for us right along with it."

Characteristically, Gumbel is content to sit back and enjoy a long, long ride. "I'm really having fun doing this," he says. "It's funny, but I never looked down the road when I was doing local TV, and I never looked down it when I was doing national sports. I've always focused on day-to-day things. When the show stops doing it for me, then I'll worry about what to do next." FW

COUPLES

CHOOSING THE BEST TIME FOR A BABY

By Stephani Cook

There was a time not long ago when a young couple automatically began planning a family soon after they married. Today, with so many young women pursuing careers, couples are postponing child rearing. The problem they ultimately face is determining which time is really the right time to start. For insight FAMILY WEEKLY turned to Dr. Niels Lauersen, a gynecologist and author, with Eileen Stukane, of the recently released Listen to Your Body (Simon and Schuster).

Q: Dr. Lauersen, how does a couple decide when is the right time to have a baby?

A: People have to realize that no time is going to be "perfect." Basically, there is no right or wrong time, and people with careers and without, with enough money and without, find that when the wife is pregnant, the nesting instinct is there and they become ready, even if they weren't sure before.

Q: How involved should husbands be in the decision?

A: Not only is it essential that husbands be involved, but it's also important to realize that they like to be involved — and that includes during the pregnancy, when they can be very helpful to their wives; they just have never been permitted. Interestingly, one out of three questions I get when I am on call-in shows are from men who are concerned about their partners.

Q: What problems could exist for a couple who postpone having a child?

A: The longer a couple waits, the harder it will be for pregnancy to occur. In men, sperm count decreases with age. In women, things like scarring in the tubes from conditions such as pelvic inflammatory disease, ovulatory problems or hormone imbalances can create difficulties. This is why pain and menstrual irregularities must be evaluated before a woman wants to become pregnant. Often the problem is a small one and can be easily dealt with.

A woman in her mid- to late 30's or early 40's who is pregnant will need to get more rest and eat properly because she has a greater risk of having a difficult birth.

A: A younger couple might give themselves a year before seeking help. A couple in their mid-30's should see a doctor after trying unsuccessfully for about six months.

A woman should also make sure that she is in excellent physical condition (that includes being the proper weight) before she tries to get pregnant. I suggest, in addition, that she step up her vitamin intake — especially B complex and additional B6, which can enhance fertility. FW

THE PROPER ETIQUETTE FOR A WATER COOLER ROMANCE

Teresa Anderko

By Peggy Schmidt

When Cupid's arrow strikes in the hours of 9 to 5, are you better off listening to your heart or your head? It's smart to take both into account, say experts who have studied the increasingly widespread phenomenon of romantic relationships between men and women working for the same company.

Because more women are working full time and moving into management and traditionally male fields, contact between the sexes on the job has grown and with it the probability of finding interesting and available partners in the workplace. Forty-four percent of the young, single women polled by Mademoiselle magazine in its March issue said they met men they subsequently dated through work.

"The office is fast becoming the place where maximum temptation meets with maximum opportunity," says Dr. Mortimer Feinberg, chairman of B.F.S. Psychological Associates, who has surveyed over 1,000 executives at companies nationwide about the issue of romance at work. Adds psychotherapist Valerie Angel, "It's the perfect place for love to bloom because both people can regularly see and gain valuable in-

Lakeland's Famous® 30-Below-Zero Zoysia Takes Wear, Tear, Cookouts, Children's Games . . . After 30 Below Zero Winters, It Bounces Back Green, Thick, And Beautiful! Closest Thing To An Indestructible Lawn You Have Ever Seen!

Zoysia Lawn Wasn't Mowed Or Watered For A Month! Not A Weed In Sight!

By Mike Senkiw, Agronomist, Lakeland Nurseries

If your family is like mine, you're squeezing every dollar to make sure you have enough to go around. And it looks like things are going to stay that way.

One way to cut expenses is to cut the costs, and work, of lawn care. For example, a woman wrote about her zoysia lawn that she had mowed it only twice ALL SUMMER. She hadn't spent a cent on weed-killers. Not one cent for fertilizers. Yet her lawn was as green and weed-free as a pile carpet.

ZOYSIA LAWNS STAY GREEN THROUGH HEAT AND DROUGHTS

Let the scorching sun burn lawns around you into hay—your zoysia stays fresh and green, an emerald isle of beauty. I have yet to water my own zoysia lawn. One day I saw that my sprinkler had gotten cobwebs! In Iowa, a zoysia lawn was declared the area's "Top Lawn—nearly perfect." Yet this lawn had been watered only once that entire summer!

Cut your water bills. Save the work of lawn sprinkling. Start a famous Zoysia grass lawn now.

Weed-killing chemicals are NOT NEEDED for a weed-free Famous® Zoysia Lawn

How is it possible that Famous Meyer Z-52 Zoysia stays weed-free without using expensive, risky chemicals? It grows so thick that crabgrass (weed) seeds don't get enough light to germinate!

Has Cut Mowing To Once A Month

Zoysia grows sideways, not just up like ordinary grass. It forms a thick, interwoven carpet of turf that keeps its well-groomed look weeks longer. It cuts your mowing by half, 2/3 or more!

No-Reseeding—Not Ever!—With Lakeland's Famous® Zoysia

Plug in Lakeland Zoysia and never buy grass seed again. Zoysia lawns don't grow old; they just grow better. They sparkle under 100° heat... stay green through droughts. They resist diseases and insects which ruin ordinary grasses. After sharp frosts, they only give up their green color, then green up better than ever each following Spring. Famous Zoysia gives you the closest thing to an indestructible lawn you have ever seen.

Ends Washouts on Steep Slopes Perfect Where Other Grasses Do Poorly

Deep-rooted zoysia holds soil in place, stops it from washing away from slopes. It's your perfect answer for worn out or weedy areas, too.

In a typical newspaper article I read (quote): "upgrading your current lawn" requires the right selection of grass seed plus "regular applications of fertilizer (and lime where needed)." This article also said you need, "weed, insect and disease control." Sound familiar? Of course!

NO NEED TO DIG UP YOUR LAWN PLUG IN Z-52 ZOYSIA

Why not forget all that work and expense, and plug in Famous Meyer Z-52 Zoysia? To upgrade your lawn with zoysia, don't dig it up. Just set plugs into holes in the soil a foot apart or less. Let those plugs spread toward each other to form a carpet of solid turf. Growth is so vigorous it chokes out old growth you want to get rid of, WEEDS INCLUDED.

From Coast to Coast People Write to Mike Senkiw, Agronomist

From Hudson, N.Y., E. LaRoche writes how he planted plugs "in the worst possible place—clay with weeds and gravel... It formed a 4" thick carpet of grass. Not children, dogs, cats, rabbits, extremely hot sun or drought could kill it."

From Sacramento, Calif., J.M. writes how he bought our Zoysia "for a weed infested spot—it took care of the problem."

From Indiana, M.A. Low, Sr. writes how he visited a physician friend in Albert Lea, Minn. where he saw a "whole back yard was entirely in zoysia and it was beautiful... a deep green."

The success of many thousands of delighted Famous® Zoysia owners awaits you. Prove it to yourself today.

"Same Day Fresh"

The day we cut your plugs is the day they are on their way to you. Because freshness counts, Lakeland has 2 shipping points, one in the Midwest and one in the East. sights about one another."

Still, there are complications inherent in getting emotionally involved with someone at work, even when you're both eligible singles. They can be minimized if you keep the following guidelines in mind:

Discuss potential work-related problems before you get involved: Most office romances are rooted in the routines of a business day — over morning cups of coffee in the company cafeteria or during the course of working on a project together — rather than in formal dating situations. As soon as the two of you admit that your interest extends beyond a good working relationship, it's smart to talk about what might happen if you begin seeing one another outside of normal working hours, advises Ms. Angel, who is a staff member at the Postgraduate Center for Mental Health in New York City.

In some corporations there are official policies against dating on the job. Others require that one person resign only if marriage results, although this kind of policy is being challenged as discriminatory, since it is usually the woman who leaves. In small offices, there may be no official rules, but it's a good idea to find out what the unwritten policy is by bringing up the subject informally with a trusted colleague who has been there longer than you.

Be aware of the pitfalls of dating someone on a different job level or a co-worker with whom you work closely: Boss-subordinate romances can be sticky because charges of favoritism are usually inevitable. (One-third of the companies responding to Dr. Feinberg's survey listed favoritism as an adverse effect of sexual involvement between employee and employer.) If a few dates evolve into a steady relationship, you should discuss the possibility of one of you transferring to another department.

Becoming emotionally involved with someone on your own level in your department can also create problems. It could be difficult to give your work the same attention you did previously — or convince your boss that it's possible — simply because you see so much of one another. Furthermore, when things aren't going well in your relationship — or if it fizzles altogether — your feelings could surface in your behavior on the job.

Don't try to keep the romance a secret: In the tight little society of an office or plant, your relationship will eventually become known, whether one of you inadvertently drops a clue or your co-workers draw their own conclusions about your behavior. People rarely attempt to confirm their suspicions with a direct query, but they may drop a question like, "What do you think of Jim?" According to Dr. Feinberg, it's best to simply say, "I went out with Jim last week; he's very nice." Taking a straightfoward approach will cut down on rumor and speculation.

If the two of you work for the same boss, it's advisable to let him or her know that you've become involved with one another rather than have the news delivered by someone else, suggests Dr. Feinberg. Reassure your boss that what matters most to both of you is to continue doing a good job and let him or her decide whether any adjustment in your work situation is necessary.

Save affectionate behavior for after working hours: Even if others are aware of and accept your relationship, it's best to camouflage your feelings while on the job. People's perceptions about whether the romance affects your performance are as important as the reality itself. Projecting a "my work comes first" attitude and keeping a professional distance when dealing with your lover at work are the best ways to show your commitment to your job.

Like it or not, your relationship will get more than its share of attention.

Be prepared to be watched and talked about: The relationship of Mary Cunningham and William Agee catapulted the two corporate heavyweights onto the top of the list of victims of office gossip in history, noted Life magazine. Even if you or your lover aren't in anywhere near as visible or powerful a position as those two, your job performance and behavior will come under extra scrutiny by your employer once your liaison with a co-worker becomes known.

But it doesn't necessarily follow that your reputation will suffer. "Being romantically linked with a colleague usually doesn't affect your chances for upward mobility unless you're neglecting your responsibilities or the relationship is having a bad affect on office morale," notes Dr. Feinberg. In his study he found that more than half of the companies surveyed believed in a hands-off policy in cases of simple romance between employees. When it came to more complex relationships (for instance, the relationship is causing disruption at work), that percentage dropped to one-third.

And, like it or not, your private life will receive more than its share of attention on the office grapevine. There's not much you can do about that other than be casual and honest about your relationship, although it's not necessary to discuss your feelings about the other person or detail how you spend your time together. FW

ROBERT DUVALL

A NEW WIFE, A NEW IMAGE AND A SONG IN HIS HEART.

Moviegoers might enjoy knowing that Robert Duvall, the big screen tough guy who won Oscar nominations for playing a Mafia lawyer in The Godfather, a maniacal lieutenant in Apocalypse Now and a macho marine in The Great Santini, keeps a pair of white doves in his Manhattan apartment. His wife, Gail, gave him the birds as a present because in his latest movie, Tender Mercies, a love story in which he portrays a country-western performer, Duvall sings a song about a dove. He and Gail, married last summer, also have taken to singing the song offscreen. Duvall's new status as a romantic lead, off camera and on, has indeed brought harmony to a man who, by his own admission, has often picked the wrong woman (his first marriage ended in divorce) and who for years was a highly respected but not-always-recognized character actor. He's also excited about a soon-to-be-released movie he produced and directed called Angelo, My Love, starring a gypsy boy. Nonetheless, as Duvall, 52, explained to FAMILY WEEKLY's Mary Ellin Bruns recently, he doesn't want to become too happy.

Duvall with pal Angelo: "As soon as he opened his mouth, I thought he was fascinating."

Bruns: Although Tender Mercies is a love story, there is only one brief love scene in the film and it isn't very explicit. How would you feel if a director asked you to do a more explicit love scene?

Duvall: How do you mean — nude?

Q: Yes.

Duvall: I had to do one in one movie. I wasn't very chivalrous. I staged it so she had to face the camera. Some people love to peel their clothes off. I don't think it's so necessary to have those scenes. I'd turn it down.

Q: The character you play so convincingly in Tender Mercies is a recovering alcoholic. Is it true that you yourself don't drink?

Duvall: On the set of Apocalypse Now we had real beer, so I was drinking those down and I got a little swacked after the shoot, but I don't really drink, no.

Q: How did you meet the gypsy boy and why did you make a movie about him?

Duvall: I met him about six years ago. He lived right on my street in New York City, of all things. He was 7 and so precocious. That put some people off but it made me interested in making a film about him. As soon as he opened his mouth I thought he was fascinating. A complex little creature. He reminds me of what a gypsy is supposed to be: deep mystery, those eyes! He's got a healthy ego. The first time he saw himself on film, he leaned over and said, "Bobby, I love myself." I took him to a disco — he's a phenomenal dancer. He got up and danced with Diana Ross, Ilie Nastase and Nadia Comaneci. They looked like sticks compared to him — he's so loose.

Q: You've been called a marvelous actor by so many people. What makes your acting succeed?

Duvall: Simplicity, I guess, trying to be truthful and simple. You just try to talk, listen. I listen, you talk, just like we're doing now.

Q: You've played some macho characters. Do you think you're that way at all?

Duvall: Not overly macho. Just an individual, I guess.

Q: Are you afraid of anything?

Duvall: I'm sure I must be afraid of a lot of things. I guess if a guy walked through that door and threatened my life, that would be pretty frightening. I don't quite know how I would deal with it.

Q: I was wondering, since your dad was in the military, was the marine you played in The Great Santini at all like your own father?

Duvall: No, my own father was more brooding, quieter. His outbursts were less obvious. He sat on things more. But there were parallels. I guess the main one was that we traveled. You move in the military. Once you get used to one city, you've got to go to another place. So you never have roots. I have no place to go back to because we were always on the move, so I have to kind of find my own imaginary place to go.

Q: You once said that when you were young you would get nervous calling up a girl.

Duvall: Sure you get nervous. When you're young it's life or death to go out with the one you want. You see a girl, she smiles at you, you smile at her, then you suffer for four hours. You go home and say, "Why couldn't I meet her?" As you get older, you suffer less and less, and then when she smiles at you, you smile back and 30 seconds later you've forgotten her.

Q: You've also remarked that the acting profession can be hard on a relationship.

Duvall: Yeah, you travel a lot, and a lot of things revolve around you and you don't include your mate as much as you should. You're always thinking about yourself.

Q: Do you remember the first time you and Gail met?

Duvall: Yeah, I do. It just happened. It was not a big thing. She was just kind of quietly there. She's a quiet person. She was quiet for a long time. We didn't talk a lot because she's shy. Sometimes you don't even know that you'll end up with a person. You're friends first. . . . We got married on an island off of Maine. The guy flew in on a seaplane, landed, married us and flew away. All the guests went in by boat. It's beautiful up there.

Q: You've said that you've picked the wrong woman many times but with Gail it was different. What makes your relationship so special?

Duvall: Similar histories, similar tastes. She understands what I'm doing more than anybody. We understand each other. We're on the same wavelength.

Q: You said there was a song about doves you both like to sing.

Duvall: Yeah, it's a song I sing in Tender Mercies — "On the Wings of a Snow White Dove." She and I sing that. We harmonize on it. Oh, she can really sing; she sings beautifully.

Q: If you had to pick a few words to describe yourself, what would they be?

Duvall: I've been accused of being dumb. I don't think I'm dumb. I'm very unaware in certain areas. I wish I could take a car apart and fix it. I admire people who can do that, who are very good with their hands. I'm not very good with my hands. I guess I'm intuitive. That's the way I think and operate.

Q: Are you an emotional person?

Duvall: I'm emotional. I don't know if I always show it, but I feel that I'm emotional, yeah.

Q: Are you happy with the way your life is right now?

Duvall: Yeah, I'm happy overall, but I don't have it completely the way I want it. There's always an obstacle out there. But it's good to not have it just the way you want it. That way you're always struggling, you're not getting too fat and too content. FW

GETTING A LEG UP ON KNEE INJURIES

By Jill H. Andresky

Many of the 75 million Americans who exercise daily face the risk of painful knee injuries and, later in life, related arthritis. Once primarily a male complaint, knee injuries now all-too-commonly affect women who are also becoming more and more physically active.

"Start-and-stop sports, heavy contact games, even a sharp twisting movement or jump can tear the bone-linking ligament fibers or cartilage," reports Dr. Kenneth E. DeHaven, director of athletic medicine at the University of Rochester Medical Center. Besides arthritis, which can result from an earlier untreated knee problem, the most common injuries are sprains, severe contusions, tendonitis, torn cartilage and torn ligaments. Less common, but just as serious, are kneecap problems, such as inflammation, caused by heavy stress or overuse. Very rarely does the knee joint itself become injured.

The knee is basically constructed of two parts: the joint (two parallel hinges held in place by crisscrossing ligaments) and the bony kneecap (patella), attached by tendons to muscles in the thigh. Cartilage cushions the bones. What makes it vulnerable is that unlike the elbow, which also angles and rotates, the knee hinge must bear body weight, gravity pressures and repeated pounding with each step we take.

By flexing and warming up all the muscle groups in the legs before starting to play, the risk of injury can be reduced. Also essential: gradually stepped-up endurance exercises to keep knees strong for running and jumping. Dr. DeHaven cautions against wearing improper athletic shoes and running or playing on concrete.

Orthopedists agree that there is no foolproof way to prevent knee injuries, as even a fall or misstep can result in a torn ligament or pinched cartilage. Fortunately, the vast majority — 90 percent or so — of knee injuries heal with rest, protection, rehabilitation and a gradual return to exercise. In most cases, minor tears in the ligaments will knit themselves together and thicken as the muscles surrounding them strengthen through physical therapy.

With severe tears, however, ligament fibers or cartilage can shrivel and form scar tissue rather than grow back together, and sometimes tissue fragments stay loose in the knee. These problems require surgery to reattach the pieces, often within the first few days after injury. If left alone, these can cause instability in the knee ("trick knee," for example). If they go more than two weeks without medical attention, it can be difficult to correct the problem properly.

"Because it's sometimes difficult to tell the difference between a minor or major injury, it's safest to see an orthopedist as soon as possible," warns Dr. Nirschl, medical director at the Virginia Sports Medicine Institute in Arlington.

Recent medical advances, particularly the invention of a small, lighted periscope called the arthroscope, have greatly improved the diagnosis and treatment of knee injuries. With this device, orthopedists can peek directly into the knee and check for damage. X-rays, previously relied on for diagnosis, are considered less reliable.

The arthroscope also has improved surgical techniques. Using the periscope, surgeons can perform microsurgery if serious cartilage damage occurs but no need for major reconstruction exists. (Ligaments must be repaired through major surgery.) Surgeons make a small incision, remove torn cartilage pieces and then smooth or suture damaged tissues. The extent of the recovery depends on the injury's severity, but microsurgery reduces surgery aftereffects and scars.

Such operations should reduce the likelihood of arthritis occurring later in the damaged area. But for men and women already debilitated by arthritis in the knee, there's another hope — the artificial knee. Although far from perfected, these do provide relief from pain and freedom of movement.

For most knee-injury sufferers, prospects for a return to normal activity are excellent. Dr. DeHaven expects to see more and more microsurgeries because, "People aren't willing anymore to accept living with a 'trick knee.' If the medical options work, they want to try them." FW

NOT IF YOU OWN THE Amazing TREE TOMATO

(Cyphomandra betacea)

GROWS INDOORS OR OUTDOORS . . . YOU PICK BASKET AFTER BASKET OF RIPE, TASTY TOMATOES . . . ONE BUMPER CROP AFTER ANOTHER . . . 5 TO 7 MONTHS A YEAR . . . YEAR AFTER YEAR!

We Get Letters!
Read what L. F. S. of Wisc. has to say . . . ". . . Just a line to let you know the Tree Tomato is doing great . . . about 5½ ft. tall . . . you said leaves grew 12" . . . mine are 15 and 16". It's just beautiful!"

Noted Citriculturist of New Zealand says:
"Ripening in New Zealand from late April to early November, the tree tomato has a very long fruiting season. Its wide range of culinary uses make it a valuable winter and spring fruit . . . a welcome addition to the menu." "Although introduced into New Zealand many years ago, it is only in recent years that the tree tomato has become better known for its many uses. It is now much sought after, and its popularity is indicated by the high price realized for it on local markets . . . Under suitable conditions the plant will produce from 40 to 60 lbs. of fruit annually."

From New Zealand comes the biggest garden sensation of the century . . . THE PERENNIAL TOMATO!

GROW IT OUTDOORS AS A TREE—INDOORS AS A HOUSEPLANT!
The TREE TOMATO will thrive marvelously—indoors or out! If you live in a temperate zone, plant it outdoors and enjoy its bountiful, exotic beauty in your garden! Or, tub-grow the TREE TOMATO, bring it indoors for winter, and surprise your family and friends with ripe, just-picked tomatoes even during the coldest months of the year! Or . . . cultivate the TREE TOMATO as a house-plant anytime . . . anywhere! The TREE TOMATO will achieve heights of up to 8 ft. outdoors, but it can be trimmed and trained to any size or shape you wish!

ENJOY TREE TOMATOES SO MANY DELECTABLE WAYS!
We think TREE TOMATOES are much tastier than ordinary tomatoes . . . it's hard to find a meatier, firmer, more bursting-with-goodness taste treat! Rich in Vitamin C, TREE-TOMATOES are fabulous in salads, sandwiches and are absolutely fantastic just sliced up and popped in your mouth!

Nothing beats fresh produce, so why continue to pay high supermarket prices for inferior tomatoes, when you can grow your own TREE TOMATOES! REMEMBER, WE SHIP MATURE PLANTS . . . NOT SEEDS . . . ORDER YOUR TREE TOMATOES TODAY! Full growing instructions included.

The TREE TOMATO . . . a remarkable new horticultural concept . . . unlike anything you've ever seen before! NOT a vine . . . NOT a regular tomato plant that withers and dies after one summer . . . the TREE TOMATO is a living, growing tree that BEARS FRUIT SEASON AFTER SEASON . . . YEAR AFTER YEAR! Why settle for garden-fresh tomatoes a few short weeks of the year? Why put up with hothouse tomatoes that taste like cardboard the rest of the time? Not when you can pick crop after crop of red, plump juicy TREE TOMATOES up to 7 months a year (all year 'round when grown indoors!)

WAVE AFTER WAVE OF SUCCULENT TREE TOMATOES GROW AS QUICK AS YOU CAN PICK 'EM!
Your TREE TOMATO will arrive already leafed-out . . . in full, green hardy vigor! When ready to bear, the branches will literally droop with huge clusters of delicious TREE TOMATOES, hundreds upon hundreds . . . and, as one crop is harvested, another rushes forth to take its place . . . so you have a virtually constant supply of luscious TREE TOMATOES!

With Interest Rates Dropping . . .

DOES IT PAY TO REFINANCE A MORTGAGE?

By Robin Greene

If you bought a house or a co-op in the past two or three years, you probably cringe every time you hear Government reports that interest rates are decreasing. It's possible to refinance your high-interest mortgage so you can take advantage of those lower interest rates, but refinancing can be expensive. By doing some simple calculations, you can determine if the cost of a new mortgage is worth the long-term savings.

"The first thing to consider when refinancing is the potential savings on your monthly payments," says Barry Clements, chairman of the residential mortgage committee for the New York State Bankers Association. As an example, Clements compares two $40,000 conventional mortgages that are to be paid off over 25 years. Monthly payments at 17½ percent are $591.02; at 14 percent those payments drop to $481.51 a month.

Before you start counting your savings, however, you must consider the cost of refinancing. The most significant expense will be the "points," or the charge, you must pay the new lender. One point is 1 percent of the total amount of the mortgage. So on a $40,000 mortgage, one point is $400. The number of points you will be charged varies from lender to lender and often depends on the type of mortgage you are shopping for. You can expect to pay between two and four points on a conventional mortgage. If you are looking for an F.H.A. (Federal Housing Administration) mortgage, you could be charged as many as nine points.

In addition to points, you will also have to pay a seemingly endless list of closing costs, which will vary from bank to bank. Among them are attorneys' fees (about $350 to $550), appraisal costs (about $75 to $100), bank application charges (about $75 to $400), fees for a title search, municipal inspection fees and in some cases a prepayment penalty. If you refinance with your present lender, some of those costs may be waived.

You also need to calculate how long it will take to make refinancing pay off. Jon C. Salmon, vice president of Salmon Real Estate, Staten Island, N.Y., suggests you add up all your expenses — closing costs and points — then divide that number by your monthly savings to determine the number of months it will take you to break even.

To see how this is done, consider the $40,000 mortgage that is refinanced from 17½ percent to 14 percent. It is reasonable to assume that a lender would charge three points (3 × $400, or $1,200) and $1,500 in closing costs. Total cost of refinancing, then, would be $2,700. Remember, the monthly savings on mortgage payments was $109.51. When you divide the closing costs ($2,700) by the monthly savings ($109.51), you see that it will take about 24½ months to recover expenses.

Your decision to refinance will depend on how long you intend to remain in the same house. "If you plan to stay in your house for a longer time than the recapture period, then it might make sense to refinance," says Salmon.

Finally, you should consider your tax bracket. Interest payments on your mortgage are tax deductible. "The higher your tax bracket, the less the interest is really costing you," says Harrison J. Gordon, a New Jersey-based attorney who practices real-estate financing. The lower your bracket, the more sense it will make to refinance.

To make things even more complicated, however, your points and some of the closing costs are also tax deductible. It's up to you to weigh all these factors to decide if refinancing is the right step for you. FW

COOKBOOK

BEAUTIFUL, BOUNTEOUS BRUNCHES

By Marilyn Hansen

What better atmosphere for family and friends to gather together in than an unhurried and relaxed Sunday brunch? It's also one of the easiest kinds of entertaining you can do, according to Connecticut caterer Martha Stewart, who recently published the impressive, lavishly illustrated cookbook Entertaining.

"A brunch gives you a wonderful chance to put together a party simply and inexpensively," she told us, "and people especially welcome it in winter and early spring before outside activities begin." Stewart, who reports getting an early start in entertaining during grade school through organizing all the birthday parties in her neighborhood, likes to invite guests to brunch around noon and recommends preparing only one complicated dish and letting the rest of the menu be easy to fix.

Stewart's idea of a great brunch is serving omelettes cooked right before everyone's eyes, where one can choose from a mouth-watering variety of fillings, handsomely set out on the table. Making the perfect omelette is a cinch. Stewart suggests "you take the freshest eggs and just beat them lightly with a fork, cook them in melted, sweet butter (with nothing added), sprinkling lightly with a little coarse salt and lots of freshly ground black pepper just before serving."

For omelette fillings, Stewart will spend time marketing for unusual seasonal produce. Some of her favorite fillings are wild mushrooms, wilted escarole and sautéed green and red peppers. The author finds that, year-round, guests enjoy red caviar and sour cream, thinly sliced smoked salmon, smoked trout or whitefish mousse. "People also love to combine fillings," she says, "and one marvelous trio is creamed spinach, grated Gruyère and crumbled, crisp bacon."

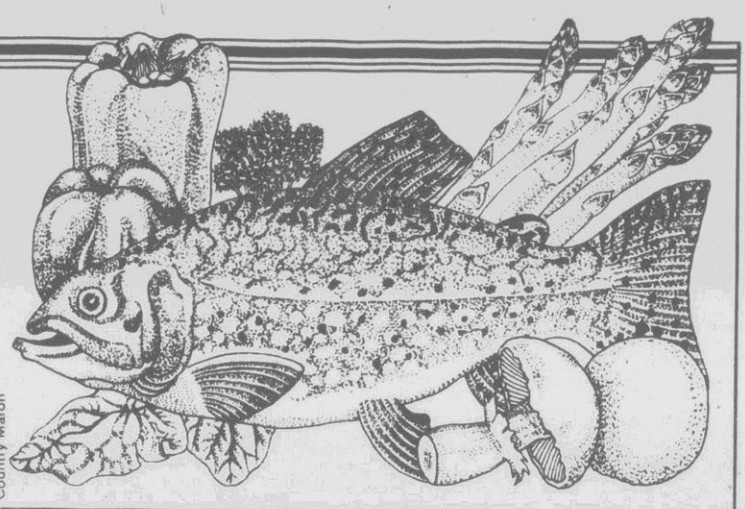

If we've whetted your appetite, why not try, for your breakfast pleasure, a few of the recipes presented here from Stewart's new cookbook. You'll really enjoy preparing and serving them, as well as our collection of other recipes for scrumptious quick dishes, some make-ahead treats and delicious beverages you just whirr up in the blender — for breakfast any day of the week.

MASTER OMELETTE RECIPE*

1 tablespoon melted clarified butter
2 eggs, well beaten but not frothy
⅓ cup filling, if desired
Salt and pepper, to taste

1. Heat the omelette pan over high flame. Add clarified butter and heat until hot but not smoking.
2. Ladle eggs into pan.
3. Pull eggs away from sides of pan with a fork while constantly moving pan over the flame to prevent sticking.
4. Just before eggs set, spoon the filling into center of omelette.
5. Gently roll ⅓ of the omelette over filling, tilting pan and using a fork.

Country Maron

6. Turn cooked omelette onto serving plate. Sprinkle with salt and fresh black pepper from a pepper mill, as desired. Entire procedure should take less than 1 minute.

Makes 1 omelette

Note: Martha explains that: "There is no single technique for preparing light, fluffy, no-fail omelettes, but here is my method [above]. However, if you are successful and more comfortable with another, there is no reason to change.

"At large omelette parties I use either portable electric stoves (recommended for enclosed locations), propane gas burners or small butane gas burners on tabletops to provide ample cooking and serving space.

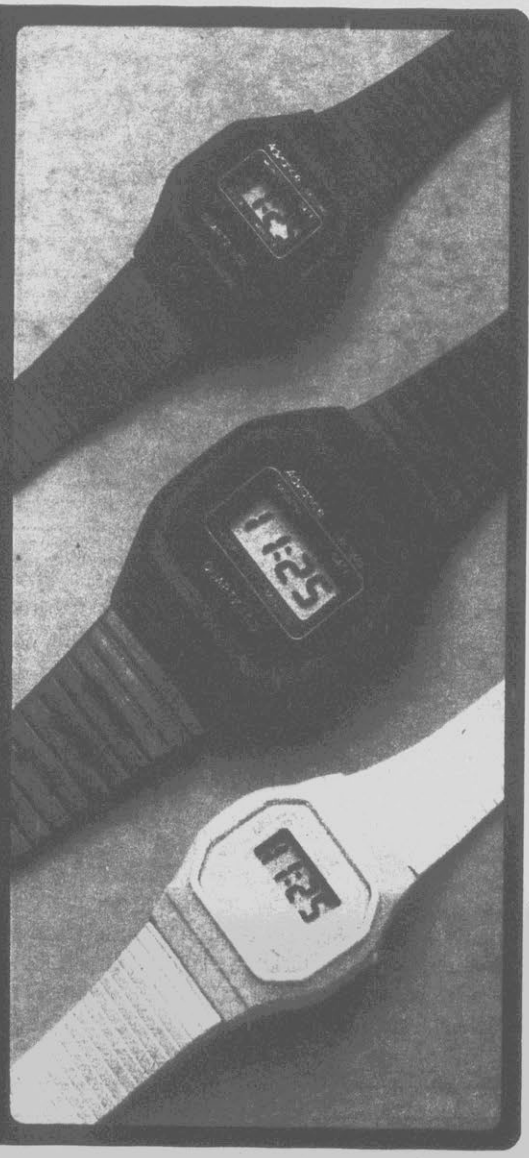

"Clarified butter should be used in making omelettes as it tends to burn less easily than regular butter. It is simply melted butter skimmed of foam and strained, with any watery residue discarded."

ASPARAGUS OMELETTE*

1 lb. fresh asparagus, thin stalks
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
Salt and freshly ground pepper, to taste

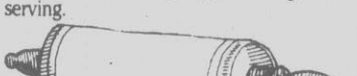

1. Cut asparagus tips into 3-inch lengths and steam over boiling water until crisp-tender, about 3 to 5 minutes.
2. Toss tips in a sauté pan with the butter and season with salt and pepper.
3. Use 4 or 5 asparagus tips for each omelette. Garnish for 4 to 6 omelettes

SAUSAGE IN* PUFF PASTRY

½ lb. ground pork
1 teaspoon ground cumin
½ teaspoon thyme leaves
2 cloves garlic, peeled and pureed
Salt and pepper, to taste
1 egg yolk mixed with 1 tablespoon cream

1. Roll the puff pastry into a rectangle ⅛ inch thick. Cut into lengthwise strips about 3 inches wide. Put on baking sheets sprayed with cold water. Refrigerate.
2. Mix the meat with the spices, garlic, salt and pepper. Divide into as many portions as you have strips of pastry. Roll each portion of sausage into a cylinder as long as the pastry strips.
3. With a pastry brush, lightly paint the surface of each pastry strip with water. Put sausage meat near one long edge and roll up, firmly patting the closing edge to seal.
4. You can refrigerate the rolls for a day, until ready to bake, or wrap well and freeze for several weeks.
5. To bake, preheat oven to 375°. Cut the rolls into ½-inch sections. Put on water-sprayed baking sheets, 2 inches apart. Paint with egg wash and bake until puffed and golden brown, about 12 to 18 minutes. Serve hot. Makes about 50 hors d'oeuvres

Note: You can bake these rolls to a light golden brown (10 to 12 minutes) and store until just before the party, reheating before serving.

ORANGE GLAZED ORANGE POUNDCAKE

4 cups sifted all-purpose flour
2½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1½ cups unsalted butter
2½ cups sugar
5 large eggs
1½ cups whole milk
Finely grated rind of 2 bright-skinned oranges

Glaze:
½ cup fresh orange juice
2 tablespoons Cointreau or other orange-flavored liqueur
¼ cup sugar

1. Preheat oven to 350°, butter and flour 2 6×4-inch-deep tube cake pans, or 1 large 10-inch angel food tube pan.
2. Sift together dry ingredients.
3. In a large bowl, use electric mixer to cream butter and sugar until light. Add eggs one at a time and beat mixture until fluffy.
4. Add sifted dry ingredients alternately with milk, beating at low speed.
5. Stir in orange rind. Turn batter into prepared pans and bake for approximately 1 to 1¼ hours, or until cake tester inserted into cake comes out clean.
6. Cool cake slightly in pan, then invert onto a rack to cool more.
7. Prepare glaze to brush onto cakes: In a small saucepan, heat orange juice, Cointreau and sugar, stirring until sugar dissolves. Brush glaze over tops and sides of the still-warm cakes, using as much of it as possible. This cake is best when served a day after making. Makes 2 6-inch ring cakes, or 1 10-inch tube cake

SYNOMETRICS...an Olympic Champion's Discovery!

Turn Belly Fat into a Rock-Hard Lean Stomach

in 7 short minutes a day with the "miracle" of SYNOMETRICS the fantastic new discovery for speed shaping away ugly, embarrassing fat and flab ... to reveal a brand new rock-hard, lean, trim, handsome body!

Introducing IKE BERGER
Olympic Champion and truly one of the world's great athletes
• Olympic Gold medal winner

"I'm over 50, yet in just 7 days SPEED SHAPER™ 'burned' off the fat and flab I've lived with for thirty years."
"I thought my fat and flab was with me for life. SYNOMETRICS "burned" it off in only 7 days."
HY HARRIS, New York, N.Y.

IKE BERGER explains SYNOMETRICS

You already know about the Isotonic and Isometric principle of body dynamics. Millions of people use one or the other in their daily exercises. One day I accidentally discovered that if I used BOTH methods together in one single exercise, I automatically speeded up the results tremendously and I reduced my daily exercise hour down to only 7 short minutes.

THE SCIENCE OF SYNOMETRICS

I later learned the scientific reason for this amazing result. It's called SYNERGISM—meaning that when you combine two methods the result is greater than the both of them separately. I now called my new discovery SYNOMETRICS and developed a special exercise unit I call the SPEED SHAPER. And that's just what it is ... a speed method to give you results in minutes, NOT hours. Now ... build yourself a fantastic looking body with the incredible SYNOMETRICS—the invention that works on the exciting new scientific concept of ISOTONIC + ISOMETRIC.

IRON CLAD MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

In just a few days you must actually begin to see measurable, real results ... or your money back promptly and without any question.

• No diet needed if daily caloric intake does not add to present body weight.

1202 Brighton Rd., Clifton, NJ 07012

If the SYNOMETRIC Unit can really start shaping me up in just days, and I mean ALL over (stomach, waist, chest, arms and legs), I will keep it and use it...otherwise, I will want a full refund. Rush SYNOMETRIC to me.

necticut home to interview Martha, she served me a piece of this Orange Glazed Orange Poundcake along with some freshly brewed Columbian coffee. I adored this cake with its moist texture. Martha gave me the recipe and said she and her catering service were making it for the birthday party of a man who loved orange cake. It's also perfect for Easter dessert or a basis for a wedding cake, with lots of orange glaze and long slivers of candied orange peel covering the cake. They did such a cake for a wedding, in fact, accenting it with daffodils.

CURRANT SCONES *

2¼ cups unsifted all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon baking soda
1 tablespoon sugar
¼ lb. (1 stick) unsalted butter
½ cup heavy cream
½ cup dried currants
1½ tablespoons brandy or sherry

1. Sift the flour with the baking powder, baking soda and sugar. Cut in the butter with a pastry cutter or in the food processor.
2. Stir in cream and mix until dough holds together. Add the dried currants plumped in the 1½ tablespoons brandy or sherry to the dough. Wrap in plastic wrap and chill well.
3. Preheat oven to 375°. On lightly floured board, roll out dough ½ inch thick for tiny scones, ¾ inch for larger rounds. Cut into 1-inch rounds for hors d'oeuvres or 2½-inch rounds for breakfast or tea. Place close together on a lightly buttered baking sheet.
4. Brush tops with [additional] heavy cream for a glazed finish and bake in a hot oven until puffed and golden brown (13 to 15 minutes). Makes about 20 (1-inch) scones

Note: These scones are excellent as 2½-inch rounds for teatime consumption or as tiny 1-inch hearts for hors d'oeuvres with smoked turkey or ham.

CALAS-TOUS-CHAUDS

(Rice Fritters)

1 pkg. active dry yeast
1½ cups cooked rice, cooled
3 eggs, beaten
1½ cups unsifted all-purpose flour
½ cup sugar
½ teaspoon salt, or to taste
¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg
Fat for deep-fat frying
Confectioners' sugar

1. Dissolve yeast in 3 tablespoons very warm water (105° to 115°). Mix with rice and let stand in a warm spot overnight.
2. The following day, beat in eggs, flour, sugar, salt and nutmeg, adding more flour if necessary to make the batter thick.
3. Heat fat to 370°, or until it browns a 1-inch cube of bread in 60 seconds. Drop batter by tablespoons into hot fat and fry until golden brown on all sides, about 3 minutes. Drain on paper towels and sprinkle with confectioners' sugar. Serve hot along with freshly brewed, strong coffee.
Makes about 4 dozen

Note: According to tradition in the French Quarter of New Orleans, vendors used to sell calas, or rice fritters, on the streets, crying, "Belles calas!"

CRANANA SHAKE

1 cup cranberry juice cocktail
1 cup plain yogurt
2 small bananas, cut in chunks
2 ice cubes

1. Place all ingredients in blender and process on blend setting for 30 seconds. Serve at once. Makes 2 servings

CINNAMON SWIRL RAISIN BREAD

Dough:

2 pkgs. active dry yeast
½ cup very warm water (110° to 115°)
⅓ cup vegetable shortening
⅓ cup honey
1 tablespoon salt
2 cups milk
5½ to 6 cups unsifted all-purpose flour
2 cups quick or old-fashioned oats

Filling and Glaze:

1 cup packed brown sugar
⅔ cup chopped almonds, pecans or walnuts
½ cup raisins
½ cup all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons ground cinnamon
⅓ cup unsalted butter or margarine, melted
1 cup confectioners' sugar

1. Make dough: Dissolve yeast in warm water. In a large bowl, combine shortening, honey and salt. Heat milk in a small saucepan until a fine rim of bubbles appears around edge. Pour the scalded milk over shortening mixture and let cool to lukewarm. Stir in 1 cup flour, add dissolved yeast and oats. Stir in enough remaining flour to make a soft dough.
2. Turn out onto lightly floured surface and knead 10 minutes, or until smooth. Shape dough into a ball; place ball in large, greased bowl and turn once to coat dough's surface. Cover; let rise in warm place about 1 hour, or until double in size. Punch dough down, divide in half, then roll each half into a 14 × 7-inch flat rectangle.
3. Make filling: Grease two 9 × 5 × 3-inch loaf pans. Combine brown sugar, almonds, raisins, flour and cinnamon. Add butter; mix until crumbly. Sprinkle each rectangle with half of filling. Starting with short side, roll up. Place in prepared pans. Cover; let rise about 45 minutes, or until almost double in size.
4. Heat oven to 375°. Bake 40 to 45 minutes, shielding with foil if necessary. Turn out of pans and cool on rack. Blend 1 cup confectioners' sugar with 1 or 2 tablespoons water until smooth. Drizzle this glaze over loaves.
Makes two 9 × 5 × 3-inch loaves

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

AT LONG LAST, HELP FOR 40 MILLION HANDICAPPED

By Michael D'Antonio

At a recent performance by the National Theatre of the Deaf in Burlington, Vt., many of the audience had to be carried in and out of the building because the entrances couldn't accommodate wheelchairs. It was impossible not to see the irony of barriers inhibiting the handicapped at an event performed by the handicapped. Fifteen years after the Government declared war on those barriers between close to 40 million handicapped Americans and the rest of society, they can still be found at every turn in daily life.

It can be something as simple as uncorking a wine bottle, an imposing task for many with cerebral palsy. Or it can be as basic as entering a restaurant, something that's impossible for millions in wheelchairs. Manufacturers still don't design everyday products with the disabled in mind. Many architects still don't plan buildings so the handicapped can use them. And the sophisticated new "miracle" devices that can open the world for a disabled person are still too expensive to be widely available.

"There are a great many disabled people who should be in the workplace, out in society," explains Clyde Behney, a technology expert and program director for a U.S. Senate Committee on the Labor and Human Resources project, "Technology and Handicapped People," completed last May. "The technology is coming on fast. That's the good side. But I'm worried about how we're going to get it to the people who need it."

A scooter helps with narrow doorways.

The term handicapped refers to three main categories of disabilities: sensory impairment (blindness and deafness); mobility impairment (paralysis); dexterity impairment (amputation, arthritis, deformity). In his study, Behney found a lot of "gee-whiz, high technology items" being developed to get people with all sorts of handicaps into the mainstream. For instance, a new small-wheeled, battery-powered scooter, called the Amigo, can replace some wheelchairs, giving riders access through narrow doorways.

But one big obstacle to the widespread use of the Amigo and the many more exotic devices for the handicapped is the reluctance of physicians to recommend their use and the reluctance of insurance companies to pay for them, Behney adds. "Insurers are reluctant to approve anything new or anything that doctors haven't overwhelmingly accepted."

In the meantime, handicapped individuals say there are plenty of small adjustments that could make life easier — if someone would only make them. Jean Shiner, peer advocate counselor at the Vermont Center for Independent Living (for the handicapped) has a long list of suggestions to make the world more accessible for the blind. Paper money is a big problem in the U.S., she explains, because the blind can't tell one denomination from another. "They could notch the corners of the bills or make them all different sizes," like many countries do, she says.

Many problems could be solved with simple solutions, agrees James Murphy, information service manager of the National Information Clearing House on Handicapped Children and Youth. Murphy, who has cerebral palsy, a disease which attacks the central nervous system and impairs a person's ability to control voluntary movement, points out that a car door with a push-button handle would be less challenging to an arthritic if there were a simple lever attachment. Many items, such as tape recorders and radios, could be outfitted with oversized controls so vision-impaired people could see them and those with limited hand movement could manipulate them, Murphy adds.

Helping the millions of handicapped Americans calls for more than fancy devices. Public attitudes must change.

"I personally have had tremendous problems dialing pay phones fast enough. Often, before I'm finished, a recording comes on saying I should hang up and try again," he continues. "And they could make it easier to get the coins in the slot. I'm one of the people who also has trouble with wine corks. You should see me and my girlfriend. Two people with C.P. trying to open a bottle of wine is like a Keystone Cops comedy," he laughs.

Fortunately, Bell Telephone, as well as corkscrew manufacturers, have come up with some ways to help the disabled. Bell is studying a new public phone for the handicapped that would feature a big coin slot, a shelf to steady a wobbling approach and special call buttons for operator assistance. "There are simple modifications we're making to make it more accessible," says Bell spokesperson Barbara Levin. As for the cork problem, one manufacturer now markets a device that forces compressed air into the bottle to pop the cork out easily.

Even most of the architectural problems could be dealt with easily, suggests Murphy. "Building ramps for entrances, wider doors, lowered fixtures, adapted faucet controls and doorknobs — all these things are very simple," he says.

A Federal law passed in 1968 requires that all buildings constructed or renovated with Government funds include special access features for the handicapped. But the rules affect a small number of public places, and many more are still closed to millions of handicapped who simply can't get up stairs or through narrow doorways.

Part of the problem is public perception of the limits handicapped people have, states Caroline DelPolito, who is studying the issue for the American Society of Allied Health Professionals. She believes the problems of the handicapped, the simple barriers to their lives, will become a political issue as well as a social issue. "We're really discriminating against a very large group of people," she states. "And they aren't going to take it forever."

The outrage of the handicapped is already being expressed in political terms in Vermont, where the Center for Independent Living is demanding that voting booths be equipped for the handicapped. A simple recording explaining the positions on the ballot, wider voting booths and minor changes in voting machines would put the handicapped on equal footing with others.

So while technological advancements, in devices simple and complex, will make life better for the disabled, machines will be just part of the solution to the problem. Technology expert Behney says that attitudes of the public, the medical profession and insurers will have to change as well.

"With the budget cuts in research and medical care, I don't see things taking off for the better in this decade," Behney says. "But while I'm pessimistic about the immediate future, I think by the end of the century we'll see great strides. Computers, robot arms, voice machines and other exotic devices will become affordable and widely used. And people who once were a drain on society will become active participants, working and contributing as much as anyone."

But that success, Behney says, concurring with Caroline DelPolito, will require science and human factors. "People are going to have to change the way they think about disabilities," he says, "and I think eventually, they will. Then we can put the technology to its best use." FW

PEOPLE QUIZ

DOES YOUR HEART KEEP PACE WITH YOUR THOUGHTS?

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Highly creative people still need rewards in order to create.
2. Thinking creatively uses both sides of your brain.
3. When you are concentrating very hard on something, your heart beats faster.
4. If your child has a good memory as an infant, he may be more intelligent than average when he is older.
5. Creative people are inclined to be overly modest about their abilities and to underrate themselves.
6. Intelligence is something you inherit, which your environment cannot affect or alter in any way.
7. Your brain can repair itself.

ANSWERS

1. False. A team of specialists from the University of Oklahoma and Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University studied the effects that rewards have on creativity. The researchers found that when a reward is offered to a highly creative person he is apt to slow down his creativity. A reward offered to a person of low creativity tends to increase his ability to create.

2. True. Research has shown that the brain has two hemispheres, or sides, each one governing certain personality traits. A person's character is usually dominated by one side or the other. Dominance by the right side usually manifests itself in distinctive creative endeavors. Dominance by the left side often results in a talent for rational or logical thinking. A University of California study determined that an artist usually has a more dominant right side, meaning a strong intuitive ability. On the other hand, the study observed that a scientist usually has a more dominant left side with a gift for rational and logical thinking and a limited tolerance for fuzzy reasoning. The most creative thinkers, the study found, are able to move back and forth between intuitive thinking and logic, combining the best output of both sides of the brain. People who can do this can create, achieve their goals and resolve problems that leave others baffled and unsure about how to proceed.

3. True. The execution of tasks that require concentrated mental attention is likely to be accompanied by heart rate acceleration, the National Research Council of Canada reported. Other studies showed also that mental effort can burn up nervous energy faster than manual work and that it requires more rest to recuperate from mental fatigue than physical tiredness. If your job requires you to think — to really accelerate your thought processes — you could feel just as tired at the end of a workday as someone employed with manual labor.

4. True. Studies at Case Western Reserve University (Ohio) found that high infant recognition-memory scores obtained at 4 to 7 months tend to go hand in hand with similar high scores on standard intelligence tests of children tested at ages 4 and 7.

5. False. University of California behavior scientists studied the correlation between creativity and narcissism (extreme interest in one's appearance, comfort, importance, abilities, etc.) in undergraduates. The students were tested as well as asked to identify themselves as highly creative or not highly creative. The study showed a positive and significant relationship between creativity and narcissism. In other words, a creative person tends to be neither shy about his skills nor to underrate himself.

6. False. Prof. David G. Martin of the University of Manitoba (Canada) observes in his monograph "Personality" that an individual only inherits a potential range of intelligence. The level of intelligence he develops within that range is determined by environmental experiences and how he reacts to them.

7. True. Researchers at the University of California have shown for the first time that the brain creates its own self-repair chemicals after injury. "These chemicals," the scientists concluded, "serve not only to enhance the natural repair capacity of the brain, but may also increase the survival potential of neural tissues transplanted to the brain or spinal cord. The optimal time for transplantation of tissue is often days after the injury. And this timetable correlates well with the optimal production of central nervous system repair chemicals." FW

THE SEXES

WOMEN'S WEEPING A FAR CRY FROM MEN'S

By Norman Lobsenz

Women cry more often, harder and longer than do men, according to a study of adult crying behavior conducted by Minnesota biochemist William Frey II. In a report to the American Psychological Association, Frey explained that in his study he asked several hundred men and women to keep a record of their crying over a 30-day period. Nearly half of the men reported no "emotional crying" episodes, but only 6 percent of the women did not cry. Women cried more than five times in the month, on average, compared to once or twice for men, and nearly half of the women shed actual tears while three-quarters of the men reported only "watery eyes."

For both sexes, most of the crying episodes were triggered by emotionally charged family events, such as arguments or celebrations; the next most frequent causes were sad movies and television programs.

A majority of both men and women said they felt better after having a good cry. There could be a scientific basis to this feeling. Emotional tears are unique to human beings, Frey says. He feels they are nature's way of getting rid of chemicals that build up in the body as a result of stress.

PRESERVING A GRAND RELATIONSHIP

Are we creating a nation of "grand-orphans"? According to a study by child psychiatrist Dr. Arthur Kornhaber, only one out of every 20 children has any sort of regular contact with a grandparent.

In his book, Grandparents-Grandchildren: The Vital Connection (Doubleday), Kornhaber points out that in times past grandparents played a central role in many families, serving as a source of strength and support and giving uncritical affection to children. Today, as young families move frequently and older couples often retire to better climates, snapshots, phone calls and occasional visits have replaced the frequent visitation that used to foster close emotional links between grandparents and their grandchildren.

To counteract this isolation, Kornhaber suggests more communication through the regular exchange of letters or tape cassettes; having children send homemade presents to grandparents and the latter send family heirlooms to youngsters. "Vital connections, moreover, need not be limited to kin," he says. "A few determined children go out and find surrogate grandparents. Almost any older person can find surrogate grandchildren. Undivided attention given by an older person can foster a close and enduring attachment with any child." In fact, older people who are not related to the child can often serve the same important function as real grandparents. FW

UNITED STATES TREASURY MINTING ERROR*

Creates Rare Collecting Opportunity

Actual Size of Susan B. Anthony $1 Coin

THE FIRST SUCH OPPORTUNITY IN OVER 100 YEARS!

AN OPPORTUNITY LIKE THIS MAY NEVER OCCUR AGAIN IN YOUR LIFETIME! It's the result of a most unpredictable turn of events. When the United States Mint first issued the Susan B. Anthony $1 coins in 1979, they never intended them to become rare coins for astute collectors or investors. But, since they stopped minting them in 1981, this is how it seems to be turning out.

Here is the story that makes the Susan B. Anthony coin a rarity. In 1979, the United States Mint produced millions of SBA coins for general circulation, and then found that no one wanted to use them. In 1980, they drastically curtailed the minting and in 1981, they did not mint any at all for general circulation.

What's so remarkable about this set?
Consider these facts:

- These are most likely the last one dollar circulating coins the United States will ever issue.
- For every 75 Susan B. Anthony coins struck in 1979, the first year of minting, only one was minted in 1981, the third and final year of minting.
- This final 1981 minting was never released through banks to the public.
- Congress has debated whether they should order the U.S. Mint to melt down the remaining Susan B. Anthony coins.
- This may be the only complete "closed" coin issue you will ever be able to buy in your lifetime at this price.
- Susan B. Anthonys are undoubtedly one of the shortest lived American dollar coins ever minted.

LIMITED AVAILABILITY

The Washington, D.C. Columbia Mint has acquired a limited quantity of Susan B. Anthony coins in Brilliant Uncirculated condition and assembled them into complete nine-coin collections, consisting of one coin for each of the three years they were minted (1979, 1980, 1981) and from each of the only three mints (San Francisco, Denver and Philadelphia) that minted them. Each coin bears the individual mintmark S, D, or P of the mint that produced it. This unique collection is housed in a specially designed custom case. The case protects their value and provides an attractive display showcase as well as convenience for your safe-deposit box.

When our supply of the Brilliant Uncirculated nine-coin collector sets is depleted, this offer will automatically expire and any unfilled orders and remittances will be returned. We urge you to place your order immediately. We regret that we must restrict each individual order to a limit of three collections. This limit applies whether you are a collector or a professional dealer, ensuring the same opportunity for all. Do not delay, order today.

SIMILAR COIN WORTH $39,000! WILL HISTORY REPEAT ITSELF??

The last time there was a similar collector opportunity was more than 100 years ago when 20-cent coins were minted in 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1878. The similarities between that 20-cent coin and the Susan B. Anthony coins are astounding. The old 20-cent piece was about the same size as a quarter just like the Susan B. Anthony. Consequently, the people rejected it—just like the Susan B. Anthony. Circulation quantities of the old 20-center were struck in large numbers only the first year—just like the Susan B. Anthony. Believe it or not, one of the old 20-cent coins recently sold for $39,000. Just think about the potential of the Susan B. Anthony coins for you.

Not only will these SBAs enrich your own collection, but they should become family heirlooms to be passed along to your children and your grandchildren.

Again, we must emphasize that our nine-coin collector sets are severely limited. These coins will never be minted again. We challenge you to try to assemble this complete nine-coin set yourself. Go to any bank and ask for a Brilliant Uncirculated Susan B. Anthony dollar from just one of the three years of minting and you will then quickly realize the opportunity you have. We strongly suggest—to avoid disappointment—that you not delay in ordering.

MINTING ERROR

* The error that makes this a rarity? Take a quarter and lay it on the Susan B. Anthony pictured above. Note the similarity in size that turned out to be its problem. People refused to use it—perhaps you were one of them. When the U.S. Government became aware of this public rejection, they recognized that there had been an error in judgment. Susan B. Anthony coin minting ceased, destining the coins to collector status. *

Announcing
The Franklin Library of
PULITZER PRIZE CLASSICS

A sumptuous private library of the most outstanding works ever awarded the Pulitzer Prize for literature.

Each volume fully bound in genuine leather and elegantly embellished with 22 karat gold.

"These are the Pulitzer Prize-winning books that we believe will be as important a hundred years from now as they are today."

– Howard K. Smith, Leading American news analyst and member of the special Selection Panel.

THE PULITZER PRIZE is America's most prestigious literary award. In the sixty-five years since its inception, less than 350 works — out of the many thousands published each year — have been judged worthy of this singular honor.

Now, a distinguished panel of prominent Americans has been specially convened to select the greatest, the most important, the most enduring works ever awarded the coveted Pulitzer Prize. And The Franklin Library, the world's leading producer of great books in fine bindings, will issue these works in a comprehensive, leather-bound private edition.

This will, unquestionably, be the most important and impressive library of modern American literature ever published. In keeping with its significance, each volume in this special edition will be fully bound in genuine leather, its spine richly embellished with 22 karat gold. In addition, the books will contain illustrations of artistic importance. Many will be the original publishers' engravings traditionally associated with the works in which they appear. Others will be totally new works of art. The complete collection will therefore be unprecedented. A private library like no other.

Prize-winning masterpieces

The fifty books selected by the panel for this important collection are all acknowledged modern classics, spanning every major category. Works that have stood the test of time and remain as memorable today as when they were first written.

Here are towering novels — Hemingway's The Old Man and the Sea, Pearl Buck's The Good Earth, Steinbeck's The Grapes of Wrath, and equally important works by such brilliant American authors as William Faulkner, James Michener and Robert Penn Warren. Great plays by Thornton Wilder and Tennessee Williams. Marvelous poetry by Robert Frost, Stephen Vincent Benét, Carl Sandburg. Notable biographies — Lindbergh's The Spirit of St. Louis, Eleanor and Franklin by Joseph P. Lash. And powerful historical narratives by Bruce Catton, Arthur Schlesinger and Barbara Tuchman.

From Edith Wharton's epic 1921 novel The Age of Innocence to Edmund Morris' brilliant 1980 biography, The Rise of Theodore Roosevelt, this is a collection that will bridge the decades. It will bring together, for the first time, the very finest works that have won America's highest literary award — and that have won for American literature the admiration of the entire world.

Finely crafted leather volumes

The books in this important private library will be printed and individually bound in full leather for each subscriber at a price not much higher than you pay for an ordinary book — just $29.50 per volume. All of the books will be specially designed expressly for this private edition. Even the sizes will vary. As you open each volume, you'll discover many uniquely appealing features. The unmistakable texture and aroma of leather. The marbled endleaves. The gilded page edges. The crisp typography. The magnificent illustrations. The fascinating introductions specially written by the editors of The Franklin Library. Even the bookpaper will be custom-milled, free of the acids which cause ordinary papers to yellow and grow brittle.

Imagine the pleasure of seeing your own private library grow, month by month, and the satisfaction of watching your family immerse themselves in these extraordinary works. For here is a collection of American literature to be enjoyed and displayed with deep pride. A collection eminently worthy of being passed on down the generations.

Handsome medallion bookends

To give you the opportunity to display selected books from your collection on desks and tables, as well as on library shelves, an elegant set of matched bookends will be provided to you at no additional charge. These impressive bookends will be crafted of solid hardwood and set with a deeply sculptured medallion of 24 karat gold electroplate on bronze.

An outstanding value — at a guaranteed issue price

The books in this private library will be issued at the convenient rate of one per month. Your original issue price of just $29.50 each will be guaranteed not to increase throughout the subscription period — regardless of any rises in the cost of leather, gold, printing or binding — and you will have the right to discontinue at any time simply on giving thirty days' written notice.

To subscribe, just return the accompanying invitation acceptance form to The Franklin Library, Franklin Center, Pennsylvania 19091, by the expiration date it bears: April 30, 1983. It is not necessary to send payment at this time.

CHILDREN

Preventing Cavities from Birth

BRINGING UP BABY'S TEETH

By Susan Lapinski

By the time most American children go to the dentist, they already have cavities, crooked teeth, or both. Yet some of these common dental problems can be avoided with the right kind of home care and regular check ups beginning at an early age.

"Let us see children one or two times a year, starting when they are around

Bob Scott

2, and we can pretty much guarantee no cavities or braces," says Dr. Stephen J. Moss, chairman of the pediatric dentistry department at New York University and one of about 5,000 dentists who specialize in caring for children. (The American Dental Association recommends taking a child for his first dental visit at about age 3.)

Dr. Moss's optimism is based both on his own experience and recent research findings. A study by the National Institute of Dental Research, a Government agency, found that tooth decay among schoolchildren has declined 32 percent in the last 10 years due to wider use of fluoride, better dental care and changing dietary habits.

Good dental care should begin at home when a child is still a baby. Once he begins going to the dentist, additional preventive steps can be taken. Dr. Moss and other pediatric dentists offer a variety of new techniques — including the use of special plastic sealants on the chewing surfaces of children's back molars, where cavities often occur, and a supplemental fluoride gel that is applied directly onto teeth. Fluoride works by chemically bonding with the tooth enamel, making teeth more resistant to decay and also stopping cavities that are just beginning to form.

Teaching parents how to care for and clean their children's teeth is a major emphasis of pediatric dentistry, or pedodontics, a field which began about 30 years ago. Certified pedodontists have at least two years of training in child psychology and development, in addition to a dental degree.

Four-year-old Lucia Sanchez of Washington, D.C., speaks approvingly of the preventive care she's received from her pedodontist over the last two years. "I sit in a little chair that goes back, while he cleans my teeth with a special toothbrush," Lucia says. "It tickles my teeth, and I like it."

It's not just cavities that can be prevented. By taking proper care of their children's teeth early in life, parents can in some cases help their children avoid the need for braces. Many orthodontic problems are not hereditary, and it is estimated that 50 percent of these problems can be avoided. For example, to prevent malformation of teeth, dentists advise new mothers who are bottle-feeding their babies to hold the infant in a sitting position during feedings and to use a kind of plastic nipple that closely resembles a mother's breast.

For parents who want to insure healthy teeth for their children, The American Academy of Pedodontics offers the following suggestions:

- When teeth first begin to show in infancy, wipe them after each meal with your finger, wrapped in gauze.
- Once a few teeth have grown in, you may add a dab of fluoride toothpaste to the gauze pad.
- When a child has a number of teeth, switch to a small, soft-bristled toothbrush. Children who have mastered the use of a knife and fork probably have enough dexterity to do the brushing themselves.
- Do not categorize foods as being "good" or "bad." Instead, teach children that the longer any food particles stay in contact with the teeth, the greater the opportunity for decay. Encourage them to do their teeth-cleaning as soon as possible after eating, especially if they've had sweets.
- Make sure children get adequate nutrition at all meals, and especially at breakfast. A child who misses breakfast and snacks all day is not likely to brush afterward, and more likely to retain the sugar on his or her teeth. FW

WHAT IN THE WORLD

THE SECRETS TO YOUR PERSONALITY

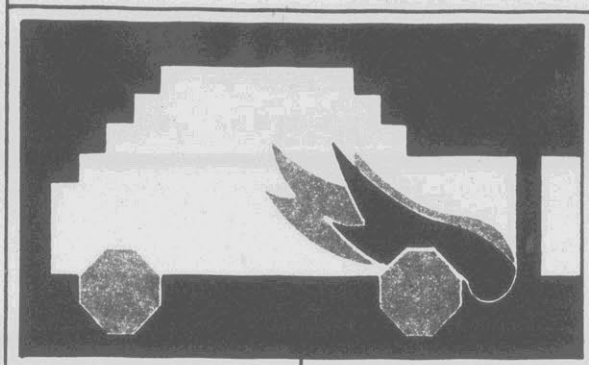

You may not know it, but that gum wrapper you dropped, those tax deductions you, uh, fudged, the time you didn't curb your dog, the paper clips you swiped from the office, all represent deep, dark character traits. Yes, in the amusing new book 1001 Ways You Reveal Your Personality, authors Elayne J. Kahn and David A. Rudnitsky probe our hidden personalities.

If you cheat a lot on your return, they insist, you resent all authority figures, crave complete gratification and dislike sharing your possessions. (If you're a mild cheater, you weigh your responsibilities carefully and know how to adjust to economic realities without compromising too much integrity.) Guilty of littering? Well, the compulsive litterbug represents an angry, frustrated person who takes it out on the immediate environment. Litterbugs are also whiners who are always complaining — especially about how filthy the streets are!

When you let Rover run amuck, you expect others to do your dirty work. You have difficulty confronting unpleasant tasks and prefer to furtively redirect them to other people. And how about you, yes you, who like to take home a few things from the office? Pilfering means you feel overworked and underpaid, and this is your way of compensating yourself. But with some 11.5 million people already unemployed, don't try explaining it that way to your boss.

VIDEO GAME JUSTICE

Could you beat a video game while drunk or on drugs? One way to cut down on traffic fatalities, suggests a Purdue University professor, is to supply police officers with a hand-held video game. Suspected drunk or drugged drivers would be asked to play the game at curbside as a test of their sobriety.

Purdue pharmacy professor Roger Maickel, who has been studying links between alcohol, drugs and traffic accidents for over a decade, says alcohol is the only substance that now can be detected by roadside breath tests. "But there are some 400 to 500 chemical substances people use — besides alcohol," he told us.

So far Maickel, who recently presented his idea at a Senate hearing, hasn't had any takers, but he has gotten inquiries from researchers interested in testing performance of pilots and public transportation operators.

NEW HOPE FOR CLEFT PALATE

One out of every 750 infants is born with a cleft, or hole, usually due to a birth defect, in the lip, upper jaw bone, roof of the mouth or all three. But now a new surgical technique is making it possible for cleft lip and cleft palate patients to have complete corrective work done in a single operation, instead of the usual two or three.

"We can operate on a patient starting at about age 9 [after normal jaw growth has taken place] and simultaneously improve chewing ability, speech and appearance," says Dr. Larry Wolford, coordinator of the cleft palate program at John Peter Smith Hospital in Fort Worth, Tex.

Wolford says the two- to four-hour procedure is so effective because the new, speedier method enables doctors to waste less tissue in repairing a cleft.

INVENTION IN CONTRACEPTION

A safe, reliable method of sterilizing women without surgery has been successful in early testing, according to a recent report.

The 45-minute procedure, which is designed to be reversible, blocks the fallopian tubes with silicone plugs. It is done in a doctor's office under local anesthesia. An instrument called a hysteroscope guides a device in the uterus that injects liquid silicone rubber. The silicone then solidifies into plugs that block the monthly passage of eggs and prevent fertilization.

"We have performed the procedure on 500 females," Dr. Jay Cooper, chairman of obstetrics and gynecology at the Phoenix Baptist Hospital and Medical Center, told us, "and of the 495 who returned for follow-up, no pregnancies were reported." Cooper says there were also no serious side effects, such as pain or irregular bleeding. Should a woman later decide she wants to become pregnant, the plugs can be removed.

Pending approval by the Food and Drug Administration, the procedure could become available within a year, says Cooper.

CHAMPS AND CHUMPS

John McEnroe and Jack Nicklaus may both be champs, but that's all they have in common. According to a new study, tennis's Bad Boy is the least liked and least credible of jock endorsers, while golf's Golden Bear was tops in both categories.

Nicklaus: His word is golden.

The survey of 1,500 Americans, done by advertising's Benton & Bowles firm, found that Chris Evert Lloyd (who rates highly with women) and the now-retired Sugar Ray Leonard (especially well regarded by the young) rank right up there with Nicklaus. Leonard totally eclipses poor heavyweight champion Larry Holmes, who was found to be liked or believed by very few. Quarterback Terry Bradshaw, tennis teenybopper Tracy Austin and golf's Tom Watson emerge as less well known than some athletes, but very likable and believable. Some rising stars, says the survey: quarterback Joe Montana, basketball's Julius Erving and Larry Bird and hockey whiz Wayne Gretzky. The ubiquitous Reggie Jackson is the best known of the jocks, but the home run slugger rates only average on believability and is in the bottom half on likability.

In exchange, you agree to buy 8 more tapes or records (at regular Club prices) in the next three years—and you may cancel your membership at any time after doing so.

If you wish to receive the Selection of the Month or the Special Selection, you need do nothing—it will be shipped automatically. If you prefer an alternate selection, or none at all, fill in the response card always provided and mail it by the date specified. You will always have at least 10 days to make your decision. The tapes and records you order during your membership will be billed at regular Club prices, which currently are $7.98 to $9.98—plus shipping and handling. (Multiple-unit sets and Double Selections may be somewhat higher.) ● SMART SET! Compared with Rubik's cube, this is a cinch. Draw a box containing nine small squares. Color the middle square green. Now, color the rest green, yellow and blue so that there are three squares of each color with no two side-by-side squares the same.

B, Y, G

One way — top across: G, B, Y; middle across: Y, G, B; bottom across: B, Y, G

● What Ho? The name of what living creature is spelled with these letters rearranged: BRINO? Hint: Its arrival is a sign of Spring.

The robin

● Sum Split! Challenge: Discover a number that will be doubled by adding 14 to a quarter of it. Time limit: One minute.

Eight will do it

● Ah-Ha! What did the toad give Luke Skywalker? Star warts. What video game is played by ducks? Quack-man.

VERSATILE VERSICLE!

Puzzle out letters, line by line, to find the answer:

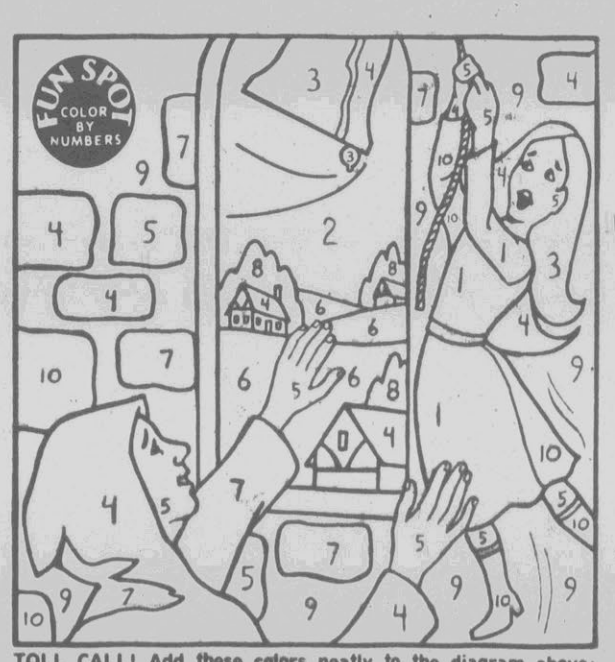

In eyes and also nose,
In nap though not in doze,
In shore as well as roar,
In choir but out of chore,
In corn and also pone,
In strong yet miss'd in stone,
The WHOLE? Look in "surprising"
For this most seasonable thing.

P.S.: It could spring out at you. What's that?

WHAT'S UP! What's going on in the scene above? To find out, connect dots with missing lines from 1 to 2 to 3, etc.

Prince Valiant

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: "WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE?" KAREN ASKS WHEN SHE FINDS A VOICE. "YOU WERE IN INDIA." GALAN DONS HIS MASK AND BOWS. "I EXPECT YOU HAVE SEEN ME AT THE TOURNAMENT. AND WHAT BRINGS YOU HERE?" KAREN EXPLAINS ABOUT HER FRIEND ALP, AND ABOUT VALETA, AND THEN SHE POUTS: "I WANTED TO FIND A WAY TO MAKE THE MASKED STRANGERS LOSE..

"....THEN ALP AND FATHER WOULD WIN. ALP WOULD BE GIVEN PRINCESS GRENDL'S HAND AND VALETA WOULD SULK FOR MONTHS. SO MUCH FOR THAT IDEA."

SUDDENLY KAREN LAUGHS. "GALAN, ARE YOU HOPING TO MARRY GRENDL YOURSELF?" HE IS ABOUT TO EXPLAIN WHEN YUAN CHEN APPEARS AND STIFLES THE BOY. "SPEECH IS HUMAN, SILENCE DIVINE. KAREN, YOU MUST TELL NO ONE OUR IDENTITIES. TOO MUCH HAPPINESS DEPENDS ON IT."

THE TOURNAMENT RESUMES ON THE MORROW AND PRINCE VALIANT EXPLORES THE STREETS OF SALONAE. HE KNOWS NOTHING OF THE TWINS' FEUD OR OF ALP'S STRANGE ENCOUNTER. BUT THAT CHANCE MEETING HAS SET EVENTS IN MOTION. THUS IT HAPPENS THAT VAL FINDS HIMSELF SURROUNDED.

"WE WOULD BE PLEASED TO ESCORT YOU TO THE PALACE," THE TOURNAMENT JUDGE SAYS. IN REPLY, VAL UNSHEATHES THE 'SINGING SWORD.' THE FIRST ATTACKER HE PARRIES WITH A KICK, WHIRLING AT ONCE TO FEND OFF A SECOND. BUT THE BLADE ARCS OVER THE SHORT FELLOW'S HEAD, AND VAL'S CALF PAYS FOR THE MISTAKE. A PRINCELY KNEE SEEKS REVENGE.
