STORM VICTIM DISPOSAL — A crew headed by Marion Mills (standing center) chops a fallen water oak into firewood. The tree, located at the edge of the St Paul's Episcopal Church parking lot, toppled during the recent snow storm. Mills said the tree, at least 100 years old, will provide about five cords of firewood. The heart of the tree emitted a fragrant aroma as woodmen split the sawed sections in pieces of manageable loading size. (Reflector Photo by Angela Lingerfelt)

Economic Indicators Rise For Sixth Gain In A Row

By ROBERT FURLOW
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — In an apparent new sign of economic recovery, the government reported today that its broadest forecasting gauge rose 1.4 percent in February, the sixth monthly gain in a row.

The new increase in the Leading Index of Economic Indicators was much smaller than January's revised 3.5 percent gain, which was the biggest in three decades.

However, economists consider the string of increases as an indication that recovery from the 1981-82 recession will not fizzle out quickly.

The leading indicators index — a compilation of 12 separate economic statistics — is designed to show trends in the overall economy in coming months.

In February, today's Commerce Department report said, a jump in the nation's money supply was the biggest factor pushing the index upward.

Also showing improvement over January — and thus helping the index — were a rise in the prices of sensitive materials, an increase in formation of new businesses, a drop in first-time claims for jobless benefits and better showings for stock prices, business deliveries and building permits for future home construction.

Components showing worse performances in February compared to January included a drop in the average work week, a decline in contracts and orders for new plants and equipment and a slight dip in orders for new consumer goods and materials.

Two indicators — measuring changes in business inventories and in borrowing by consumers and companies — were not yet available.

Today's report revised January's increase slightly downward from the 3.6 percent originally estimated.

The main reason was a January decline in inventories, a category that was not available for inclusion when the first estimate was made.

Government officials and private analysts now agree that recovery from the long recession is well under way, and most have recently been revising their forecasts to show a stronger upturn than they had expected.

The main question now is the length of the recovery, with some economists fearing that huge federal deficits could push interest rates up again, slowing or even cutting short the revival. So far the leading indicators show no sign of that.

The February gain put the index last month at 148.3 percent of the 1967 base, up from a revised 146.2 percent in January, the report said.

Filing Suit Today For Reinstating Warren

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

An attorney for Alton Warren, former chief building inspector for the city of Greenville, said he would file a suit with the Wake County Clerk of Superior Court today asking for Warren's reinstatement and seeking to have the city's personnel ordinance declared unconstitutional.

Warren was dismissed from his post April 21, 1981, after being suspended on March 2, by Ron Sewell, director of engineering and inspections.

At the time, Warren said he had been suspended after he claimed he was being forced by his department head (Sewell) to violate state building codes in allowing the city-owned community building on Greene Street to be occupied.

Warren said the building, which housed the city's Planning, Engineering and Inspections departments, was unsafe and hazardous at the time and was occupied before it should have been.

Subsequent inspections by both the N.C. Department of Insurance and the Occupational Safety and Health Act Division of the N.C. Department of Labor resulted in what were termed minor violations.

Warren's attorney, Ronald K. Campbell, said the complaint names the city of Greenville, former City Manager Ed Wyatt, Sewell and "three John Does" as defendants.

City Manager Gail Meeks said today she would have no comment on the suit.

Campbell said the John Does were named "with leave of the court to insert the true identity of these persons when their identity has been ascertained." However, Campbell said the three are "current city employees who violated the law in regards to protecting a city employee's right of privacy."

According to Campbell, "there are two causes of action" in the complaint.

First, an alleged "denial of a fair hearing and the constitutionally protected right of due process."

The Raleigh attorney said

the complaint charges that "three witnesses were called to appear" for Warren at a department level personnel advisory review board hearing prior to his dismissal "and were not permitted to testify." One of those, Campbell said, was then-former Mayor Percy Cox, who was elected later in 1981 to a new term as mayor.

Campbell said the complaint also charges that "board members at the hearing were able to interview people outside the hearing room without giving notice to Mr. Warren on what hearsay evidence they heard."

The second cause of action, according to Campbell, involves "the right of privacy" dealing with material in Warren's personnel record "not germane to the hearing" which was "opened up, distributed, photocopied," without written permission or a court order.

The suit asks that the court declare the portion of the city personnel ordinance dealing with "hearing and dismissal of employees" unconstitutional; that Warren be "restored to his former position" and that he be given "back pay" from April 21, 1981, according to Campbell.

Campbell said the complaint also asks for a jury trial and that the trial be held in Wake County, "to protect the city of Greenville,

City Council Defers Action On Hospital

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

While leaving the door ajar for future consideration, the City Council voted Tuesday to "take no action at this time" on a request for a letter endorsing a Georgia firm's bid to build a psychiatric hospital in the Greenville area.

Council members, with Louis Clark abstaining, voted 3-2 to take no action on the endorsement request by Charter Medical Corp., but to consider the issue at later date. Clark is serving as a consultant to Charter in its site selection process and he was allowed to abstain from voting on the issue.

A substitute motion by Janice Buck to take no action on the matter and to "leave it there" was defeated by a 3-to-2 vote. Joining Ms. Buck in favoring her motion to end discussion on the issue was Judy Greene, while William Hadden, Stuart Shinn and George Pugh offered opposing votes. Voting was reversed on the motion to take no action but to reconsider the matter later.

Hadden, saying the board was "not ready for a vote pro or con right now," said a 15-member psychiatric service task force of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce is looking at the issue. Hadden said the results of the task force's study will "give us a lot more information."

In view of Charter's proposal to construct the new 65-bed psychiatric facility and opposition to the firm's bid by the medical community, Hadden said taking no action now represented the "fairest way to treat both parties."

The council, which Mayor Percy Cox said last week had become involved in a situation it should not be involved in, has been asked by Charter to adopt a letter of endorsement for the new hospital.

The mayor said the council, in trying to become informed, had received three different answers to one question on the hospital issue. "We simply haven't gotten the whole story," said Cox.

The council has held two workshop sessions on the hospital issue in recent days and heard from a representative of Charter Medical as well as from spokesmen from the medical community who said psychiatric services offered at Pitt County Memorial Hospital are adequate. They said additional beds that are being considered for PCMH could also help serve psychiatric needs.

The governing board of the Eastern Carolina Health Systems Agency will meet April 13 to consider Charter Medical's application for the new hospital here. The report of the chamber task force is expected prior to April 13 and the council will meet before that date to consider whether to take a stand on the Charter proposal.

Jeannette Cox is the task force chairperson and Clark is representing the council on the study board.

Pershing II Cutback Is Offered If It's Matched

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today offered to cut back on the planned deployment of new medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe if the Soviet Union agreed to reduce its arsenal of rockets targeted on NATO countries.

Even if the proposal is accepted, the United States would begin installing new Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Europe late this year as scheduled, while the Soviet Union would be required to dismantle some of its medium-range weapons. The Kremlin's chief arms negotiator, asked about the offer Tuesday, said, "I'm not optimistic."

Revealing a compromise plan to his "zero-zero" proposal to eliminate all medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, Reagan said in a nationally broadcast statement from the White House that "it would be better to have none than to have some. But, if there must be some, it is better to have few than to have many."

"If the Soviets will not now agree to the total elimination of these weapons," Reagan said, "I hope they will at least join us in an interim agreement that would substantially reduce these forces to equal levels on both sides."

The Soviets have flatly rejected the zero-zero proposal and The United States' NATO allies have urged that the Reagan administration make a scaled-down proposal.

Reagan did not propose a specific limit on the number of weapons. A senior administration official who spoke on condition he not be named said the numbers of missiles allowed under the new U.S. proposal would be the subject of negotiations with the Soviets.

Accusing Moscow of failing to offer any serious alternatives to the zero-zero formula, Reagan said, "Their failure to make such a proposal is a source of deep disappointment to all of us who have wished that these weapons might be eliminated — or at least significantly reduced."

"But I do not intend to let this shadow that has been cast over the Geneva negotiations further darken our search for peace," Reagan said.

Reagan's announcement confirmed earlier reports that a new proposal was put on the bargaining table in Geneva on Tuesday.

Accompanying Reagan's announcement was a White House statement saying the NATO allies "welcome and strongly support the new American intermediate nuclear force negotiating initiative announced by the president today."

"It represents a significant step designed to move the INF negotiations toward conclusion of an equal, fair and verifiable arms control agreement," the statement said.

Reagan announced his new strategy in a speech to NATO ambassadors, gathered in the East Room.

"NATO will begin deploying a specific deterrent to this threat late this year, unless, as we hope, an agreement to eliminate such weapons would make this deployment unnecessary," Reagan said.

Reagan, noting that the Soviet Union has rejected the zero-zero plan, said Moscow "has failed to come up with any serious alternative. They insist on preserving their present monopoly of these weapons."

Pitt Students' Make-Up Day Scheduled May 2

Pitt County students will make up the snow day they lost Friday on May 2, members of the Pitt County Board of Education decided Tuesday.

May 2 was previously scheduled as a teacher workday but board members voted to designate it as a full school day. An additional teacher workday will be added at the end of the school year.

John McKnight, assistant superintendent, said principals in the county indicated to him that May 2 would be more suitable than a day during the upcoming Easter break as a make-up day because most personnel and families had already completed travel plans for the week-long spring holiday.

Annette McRae, president of the Pitt County chapter of the North Carolina Association of Educators, asked the board to consider one of two options — not making the day up or having it a half-day.

School units such as Wake County and Charlotte that have lost several days to snow are not scheduling make-up days because of an inconsistency in the state law requiring 180 days of instruction.

According to Pitt Superintendent Eddie West, the legality of that action is uncertain. "We are going to wait and see what happens up there (in Raleigh) and do what is best for the students here," he said.

Method Encourages Kids To Know Natural Parents

By MARK LANGFORD
SAN ANTONIO, Texas (UPI) — With barely a year of life behind her, Sarah is still getting to know the three most important people in her life — her birth mother and her adoptive parents.

Before Sarah was born, her mother, Gloria, knew she could not adequately provide for the child growing inside her. Adoption was the only answer, even though traditional procedures meant estrangement and a lifetime of painful curiosity.

But new adoption procedures developed by the Lutheran Social Service of Texas now guarantee Sarah and Gloria will have a relationship.

Sarah's adoptive parents could not be happier with the agency's new ways.

"She'll know who I am," Gloria said. "I couldn't take care of her and it's much easier to live with. I'll always know she's somewhere."

That somewhere will be with Nancy and Terry, an infertile San Antonio couple who took custody of Sarah when she was 10 days old.

Gloria herself picked them. "She (Gloria) is part of the extended family," said Nancy. "She is a member of Sarah's family."

Kathleen Silber of the Lutheran Social Service, which arranged the adoption, says the new, open concept is solving many of the problems and frustrations of traditional adoption procedures that end all contact between child and birth parents.

"In closed adoptions, there is a fear of the unknown, a fear that the birth mother is waiting in the shadows to grab the child," said Mrs. Silber. "It takes a load off their (adoptive parents) shoulders to hear that there will be no interference."

In the open program, Sarah not only will know who her real mother is, but why she was adopted. In later years, she will not be nagged with the questions: "Who do I look like? Why was I given up?"

Mrs. Silber said the secrecy of closed adoptions often leads to communication breakdowns between adoptive parents and their children, who mistake their parents' apprehension and fear for dark mysteries that do not exist.

She said the myths of adoption are the necessity of secrecy, the stigma of illegitimacy and infertility and the fear that the mother eventually will forget about her child.

"But they never forget," Mrs. Silber said, "and too many adopted children are in therapy."

Open adoption banishes the fear and anxiety by answering children's questions and providing varying degrees of contact between birth parents and the child they gave up.

The open concept allows different degrees of contact, ranging from a single letter from birth mother to adopted child to periodic visits and regular letter exchanges.

The process also gives more responsibility to the birth mother by allowing her to choose the adoptive family.

"Even if it's just one letter, they are better able to answer the child's questions," said Mrs. Silber. "The bottom line is good mental health for the kids."

Open adoption includes seminars that prospective adoptive parents must attend. Later, face to face meetings are arranged between the birth mother and the adoptive parents.

Their last names are not used.

"Both are scared," Mrs. Silber said. "The birth mother is scared of what they will think of her, but the parents are nervous, too. So far, every single family has lost their fears. It's a beautiful experience to lose that fear."

At this writing, the Lutheran Social Service has used the open concept in placing 75 children in Texas. That number is expected to increase dramatically.

Nancy and Terry were so pleased that they decided to contact the mother of Drew, a child they had adopted earlier through the traditional closed system.

"We wrote three times. We felt that she wouldn't accept us and might want him back," Nancy said. "But she wrote back and we have complete peace. She saw from our pictures how happy he is. We've kept in correspondence and exchanged first names."

Robbie and Mike, another infertile San Antonio couple, adopted Haley through the open concept before the little girl was even born.

"We didn't know about the (open concept) option but it made a lot of sense," Robbie said. "We tried to put ourselves in the child's future. If we hadn't had the option, I think we would have sought out the information ourselves. We've met both (of Haley's birth) parents. It's important they keep in touch."

Mike and Robbie already are teaching Haley to say her prayers, which includes blessings for her birth parents.

"We've got to remember that when the time is right we'll educate her," Mike said. "It's a gradual process. The older and more mature, the more information (we'll give.)"

Homemaker's Haven BY EVELYN SPANGLER

Choose Right Banks Account — Make It Pay

Most married couples have their bank accounts set up as joint accounts, with both husband and wife depositing and withdrawing funds from time to time.

There are advantages to these accounts, agrees Mrs. Evelyn L. Spangler, Extension Home Economist, Pitt County. There are also some drawbacks.

Perhaps the most common one is keeping an accurate record of the balance in the account.

There are some other factors that suggest each spouse ought to have some money in a bank account in his or her own name.

"It is important for each marriage partner to have a financial identity," Mrs. Spangler says. "Otherwise severe complications can result if there's a separation, divorce, or death in the family."

For example, each partner needs to be able to get credit in his or her own right. If a couple divorces and the wife has previously been known only as Mrs. John Smith, she will not have a credit rating under her own name, Mrs. Mary Smith. In this case, she may have to go through the same steps as a young adult establishing credit for the first time.

However, if Mrs. Smith has handled a bank account in her own right, she has had the change to prove her financial responsibility with at least one bank. That could make establishing credit easier.

Mrs. Spangler says a joint bank account provides for the surviving owner to receive the whole account if one of the co-owners should die. However, it may be several days before the survivor can have access to any of the money. He may have to wait until the estate is settled before he can receive the entire amount.

It helps if each spouse has access to some emergency funds in an account listed in his own name.

When a husband dies, the tax authorities assume he earned all the money in a joint account. It will all be part of his estate inventory and will be subject to inheritance taxes unless the surviving spouse can prove she is responsible for placing part of the money in the account.

With separate accounts, a surviving spouse has his or her own money held separately; this money will not be subject to inheritance taxes.

Finally if a couple should divorce, it is easier to divide the financial assets if each person already has a separate account. Nor could either spouse "clean out" the joint account, leaving the other with no funds.

To dissolve a sink full of soap suds, sprinkle with salt.

Fashion Institute Is Approaching Age 40

NEW YORK (AP) — Its walls are not covered with ivy — or graffiti — and much of the rah-rah campus life is missing. Yet the Fashion Institute of Technology (FIT) which has educated thousands of young men and women for America's fashion-related industries, is preparing to celebrate its 40th anniversary next year.

Located in the heart of the nation's fashion capital, 27th Street and Seventh Avenue, here, the institute is one of the first community colleges of the State University of New York to grant associate's degrees in applied sciences. In 1975, it began conferring bachelor's degrees in science and fine arts, and is currently developing a master's degree program.

Its students number about 11,000, one-third from New York City, one-third from New York State and the rest from every state in the country and nations all over the world. More than 20 countries are represented at the school.

"It's really broadening to have so many kinds of people from different backgrounds, from different states and countries in my classes," said Doug Greiwe, an interior-design major from Cincinnati. "FIT is really intense, but I feel it has helped me grow."

Marvin Feldman, president of the institute for the past 11 years, said the school had been begun by members of the apparel fashion industry in 1944, toward the end of World War II.

"They were concerned about the people returning from the war and the lack of trained workers to furnish the manpower for the industry," he said.

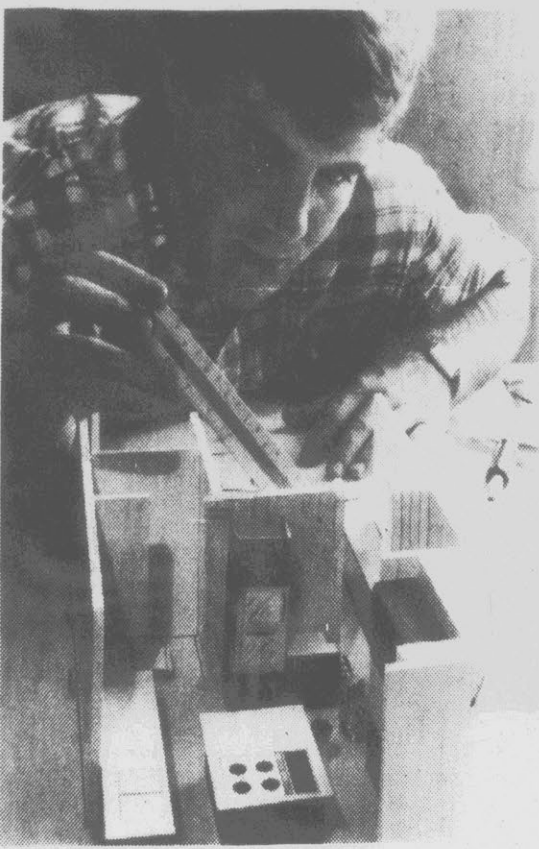

The first classes were held on the top floor of the High School of Fashion, the old Central Needle and Trades High School. In 1959, the institute moved to its new urban campus, which now consists of five buildings that house classrooms, dormitories for 800 students, a library and the largest costume collection in the world.

The school cost $90 million to build, with the city, state and federal government sharing the costs equally.

"The fashion industry is the nation's largest employer and the second largest industry in New York," Feldman said. "This is the only institution in the world specifically designed to serve that industry, and it is the only institution where all areas of training in the fashion trade are housed under one roof."

"We've just exploded," Feldman added. "We went from 1,200 to 11,000 students in the last 11 years."

Some of the major subjects covered are: fashion design, jewelry design, display and exhibit design, photography, INTERIOR DESIGN student Doug Greiwe measures the dimensions of a model kitchen he is developing for one of his courses at New York's Fashion Institute of Technology. Greiwe, a Cincinnati native, is one of more than 11,000 students, from every state and more than 20 countries, currently enrolled at the college.

textile design, advertising and communications, apparel production management, cosmetics, fragrances and toiletries, fashion buying and merchandising, menswear design and marketing, pattern-making technology, textile technology and illustration.

"A good friend of mine had studied fashion design and recommended it," said Linda Weber of Coral Springs, Fla., who is majoring in general illustration. "My friend said that FIT was great but you really had to work hard. I've found that my friend was right."

About 70 percent of the students are women, but the number of men is on the increase. And the instructors are all professionals, many of them experts in their fields such as Stanley Barrows, interior design; Laszlo Roth, packaging design, and Hazel Bishop, cosmetics.

Lucia Sica, who teaches a fashion design course at the institute, has been with the school for 27 years. "I came straight from the industry," she said, "and it took me three years to appreciate teaching. But after a while, it gets into your blood. These students have a keen interest in fashion."

Nicole Liebig, a student from Mystic, Conn., said the reason she had entered FIT was that she had always wanted to be a designer. "I started as a little girl designing dresses for my dolls," she said.

The school graduates 2,000 students a year and adds about $20 million to the payroll of the city, Feldman said.

Feldman said 90 percent of the graduates are placed in jobs, but, more important, many of them have gone on and started their own businesses.

Part of this has to do with the way the school is run. He described the curriculum as "upside down" in that students must select their major when they are admitted and practically all of their technical training takes place in the first two years. Students who leave at this point have already acquired the tools to get them started in the fashion world," he explains.

Among FIT alumni, well known in the fashion field are: Calvin Klein, Stephen Burrows, Sal Cesariani, Don Kline, Jhane Barnes, Norma Kamali and John Anthony.

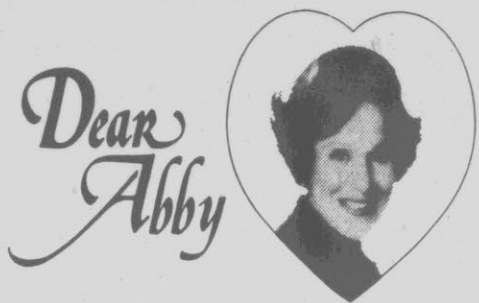

However, it is the thousands of "no names," the students who start their own businesses and employ other workers, who are the "heart and soul" of the industry, Feldman said.

Mrs. Savage Entertained

Members of the society and special friends of Mrs. Savage attended the event.

Mrs. Savage was presented a trophy by Barbara Hadcock, current president of the humane society.

Name Change Costs A Fortune

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I had to write after reading the letter from the "Proud Orlikoffs," who were upset when their son married a woman named Reilly and he changed his name to Reilly instead of insisting that she change her name to Orlikoff.

My brother, Edward Moravitz, married a girl who thought Moravitz sounded too ethnic, so she nagged him until he changed their name to Moore.

After Edward passed away (unfortunately at a much too early age), my mother, in making out her will, left the following bequests:

"To my two grandchildren, I leave $25,000 each. And to my daughter-in-law, Mrs. Edward Moore, I leave $1,000 — the other $24,000 she can get from some family by the name of Moore."

I hope you print this. Don't worry about embarrassing anyone. I've changed all the names, but the idea is the same.

OLGA IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR OLGA: Let's hear it from a man who takes the woman's part in this name-changing controversy:

DEAR ABBY: The "Proud Orlikoffs" felt that their son was abandoning his heritage when he changed his name to "Reilly," which is his fiancée's name.

I ask you: What about the proud Reillys? Why should the woman be expected to change her name to her spouse's just because of an outdated custom?

A man who changes his name to his wife's name is not disgracing his family any more than she would be had she changed her name to his.

Too bad we can't all do as Eleanor Roosevelt did — marry a person with the same last name.

OHIO MALE

DEAR ABBY: You had a letter in your column a few months ago from a daughter whose father had developed a relationship with a lady shortly after the death of his wife, who had lost a long battle with cancer. It hit home with me because my father very lovingly nursed my mother through six years of cancer before we lost her. My father was devoted to Mom for over 30 years — and especially those last six.

About two months after Mom's death, Dad met a lovely lady. There were some unkind comments from family members about the short mourning period he gave Mom. Almost two years later, he still mourns Mom, and this lovely lady understands his grief and comforts him. They have a very caring relationship. Neither one is ready for marriage, but they find it financially advantageous to live together. Now they're getting pressure from family members who want them to get married.

I support my father in his decision as long as he is happy and comfortable with the relationship.

My point: Where do family members get off judging and putting pressure on a man who has lost a beloved wife, and now has a second chance at happiness? No one will ever take Mom's place in our hearts. But Mom is gone, and Dad must go on living.

I hope you'll print this so others won't judge a situation unless they've been there.

- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1 cup sugar
- 1/2 cup coarsely broken pecan halves
- 2 large eggs
- 1/2 cup corn oil
- 9- or 10-ounce package frozen sliced or halved sweetened strawberries, thawed but undrained

Grease and lightly flour 24 muffin-pan cups — each 1-3rd cup capacity. On a sheet of wax paper or in a small bowl, thoroughly stir together flour, baking soda and salt; stir in sugar, then pecans. In a large bowl, with a rotary manual or electric beater, beat eggs and oil until blended; add undrained strawberries and at lowest speed, moving beater around bowl, beat just until strawberries are partly broken up. Add flour mixture and beat at lowest speed until batter is smooth and strawberries are in small irregular pieces. Turn into prepared cups. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean — 30 minutes. Cool 10 minutes. Remove to wire rack to cool. Makes 24 cupcakes.

An Image Is Tarnished

Chicago Mayor Jane M. Byrne took on the well-oiled political machinery of the late Richard Daley four years ago and won. A few weeks ago she took on Daley's son and won, but lost the primary to U.S. Rep. Harold Washington, a black congressman with a prison record. True to the spirit that had led her to tackle the Daley machine, Mrs. Byrne promptly announced she would run as a write-in candidate if the Democrats no longer wanted her as their nominee.

It probably was the downfall of her political career. The loss to Washington, in a primary in which race had not really been an issue, was one thing; her projected effort as a write-in promised an all-out battle of what some Chicagoans said would be "raw racism."

Not only did Democrats see her as a traitor for failing to live up to her pledge to support the party nominee; they saw her as a potential champion for a racist campaign. Her allies in Chicago quit; her campaign chief decided to go elsewhere; her media strategist quit, and state Democratic chairmen from the South said they would work together for her defeat.

Such an end to her relatively brief political career is regrettable. Mrs. Byrne at times drew skepticism at her methods in four years as Chicago's chief executive, but she presented an image of caring for her constituents — walking with them through ghettos, spending the night in less-than-desireous apartments.

The image now is one of instability, of ego trips at all costs.

Unemployment Remains

Everyone is hopeful that the recession is coming to an end and we like to feel that North Carolina was affected less by the adverse economic conditions than many other areas of the nation.

It cannot be forgotten, however that the state's unemployment rate is still high. Recently released figures for February showed 295,600 people out of work or 10.2 percent of the work force.

Gov. Jim Hunt in announcing the figures also announced the establishment of the N.C. Job Network. The system is supposed to match up unemployed people with employers needing workers, or locate job training for those desiring it.

The governor said he felt that, while the unemployment rate is too high it is as high as it will go.

We are convinced that the economy is improving. An unemployed worker, however, is still in the middle of a personal economic recession. Getting workers back into productive jobs should be our state's top priority.

Muzzles Off, Reagan Goes Forth Again

WASHINGTON — In resurrecting Ronald Reagan from restless passivity to the administration's point man in the battle to salvage his defense program, William P. Clark purged the White House of the counsel of political timidity that muzzled Reagan during last fall's election campaign.

The president's soft-spoken national security adviser worked quietly, as always. He digested reams of private messages and memoranda flowing to the Oval Office from defense-oriented congressmen and Reaganite insiders. In various ways, they carried this warning: If Reagan did not personally lead the charge, his defense buildup, and with it his bargaining chips for nuclear-arms talks with Moscow, would soon be in ruins.

Now that the president is back doing what he does best — communicating his deepest convictions over television — all bets are off that the nuclear-freezers and defense-cutters will have their way. With Bill Clark almost alone inside the White House reinforcing Reagan's own political instincts, Reagan has staked power and prestige on humbling his critics whose anti-defense policies verge dangerously close to unilateral arms control while the awesome Soviet arms surge continues.

That is quite a distance from the carefully-structured role of passivity carved out for him last fall by top White House aides. They insulated Reagan from the nuclear debate for fear of tainting him as a nuclear cold-warrior. The big three White House signal-callers — James Baker, Michael Deaver and even Edwin Meese — killed plans for speeches bringing the president too close to the dreaded nuclear issue, ruling even the nuclear freeze out of bounds.

Last month when Reagan met with members of his MX Commission to publicize its bipartisan makeup, Deaver successfully argued against letting photographers record the session — too contaminating for the president.

Clark correctly gauged his boss as uncomfortable under such restraints. He worried and fretted over those private communications flowing into the Oval Office warning that Reagan's trillion-dollar, long-range defense program was bleeding at every pore and needed urgent presidential doctoring.

A large part of Reagan's plight is the empty stable of defense-sellers anywhere else. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, often by well-intentioned overkill, has proved unable to move congressional moderates (sometimes moving them the wrong way). Elsewhere in the Pentagon, Weinberger's speechwriters (who had the lead role in Reagan's Wednesday-night speech) turned out good material — but, with the exception of Navy Secretary John Lehman, no convincing speechmakers.

Clark knew that rescuing rearmament and saving what the president views as the foundation of a strong, safe foreign policy could only be done by Reagan himself.

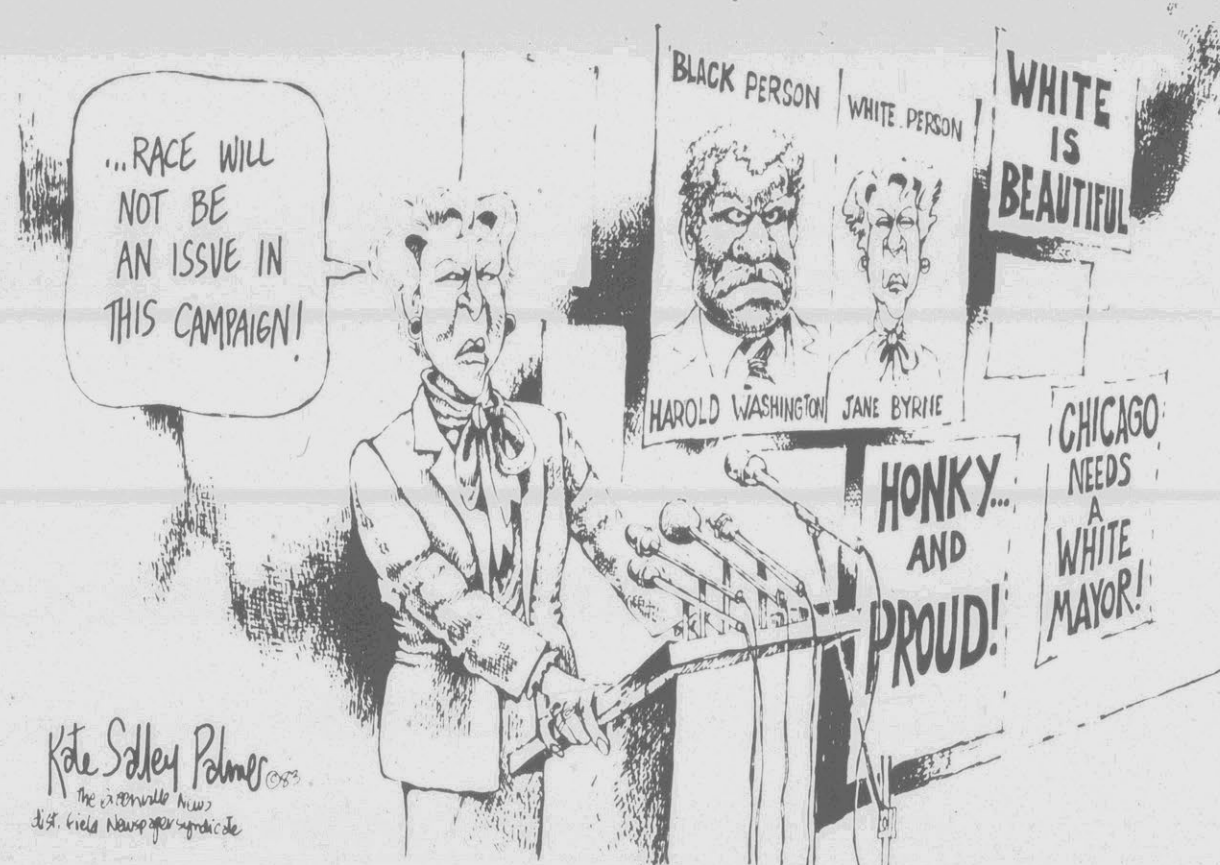

The campaign by the born-again commander-in-chief began with the March 8 speech in Orlando. The target there was to seize moral high ground from the nuclear freeze and peace movements, and he used the speech to stigmatize the Soviet Union as an "evil empire." The next scheduled Reagan offensive was set for March 31 at the Los Angeles World Affairs Council to be followed in early April by a speech on the fate of the MX missile.

But Clark worried about the political impact of congressional votes on the new budget resolution. He argued for sand-wiching in the March 23 speech on the defense budget and the Soviet threat. Clark's advice was all Reagan needed.

The successful intercession by Clark in framing a new, frontal political strategy for Reagan's handling of the defense issue shows that when he wants to use it, his influence inside the White House is pervasive. The corridor chatter of senior aides — at least for now — carries no echo of the political timidity heard so frequently over the past six months.

That seminal change became clear to one White House insider when he heard David Gergen, the top Baker aide who runs White House communications and has always concealed his enthusiasm for defense spending, wax warm over Reagan's speech calendar on national security. "Remember," Gergen said, "we believe in here that you can only get peace through strength."

Early Training Is All-Important

Newsweek's cover story last week dealt with parents who are pushing their kids earlier and earlier into schools. The post-Spock generation of parents believe the sooner their babies get an education the better chance they will have of being successful when they grow up.

I thought Newsweek was exaggerating about mothers and fathers wanting their toddlers to become early achievers until I went over to dinner at the Marks' the other night.

There was tension in the house.

"What's going on?" I wanted to know.

"We're waiting on word whether Jason will be accepted in Culpeper's pre-pre-nursery school."

"I don't think you'll have any trouble," I said. "After all, Jason seems like a very bright 2-year-old to me."

"He is bright," Mr. Marks said. "But they won't take him unless he's potty trained. We only have until September, and so far he won't cooperate."

"I see the problem," I said. "But you would think if Jason really wanted to go to school he'd get his act together."

"That seems to be the trouble. He doesn't seem to care if he gets into the school or not," Mrs. Marks told me. "Every time we mention pre-pre-nursery bag,"

"Maybe he wants to take a year off to find himself," I suggested.

"This isn't a joking matter," said Mr. Marks. "I laid out $16.95 for a toilet trainer last week. You sit the baby on it and it plays music every time he does something. But Jason still won't use it."

"Maybe it's not playing his song."

"We never had this kind of trouble with his brother Ben," Mrs. Marks said. "He's a brilliant student."

"How old is Ben?"

"Almost 5, and he's been accepted by three of the best nursery schools in the area."

Tax Break May Lead To Legislative Battle

RALEIGH — Rep. Marvin Musselwhite, D-Wake, came out of a meeting of the House Public Utilities Committee with a nervous look on his face last week. "I felt the twinge of a battle brewing in there," he said.

Musselwhite was referring to some idle conversation in committee about a 1981 law that exempts businesses from paying property taxes on pollution control devices. The tax credit was designed to help the textile industry but the state's utilities plan to use the write-off to save themselves millions.

Duke Power & Light will save about $12 million in local property taxes this year if the tax exemption is allowed to stay on the books. That savings for the utilities translates into a big loss for three counties, Mecklenburg, Wake and Brunswick. It is in those counties that the two electric utilities have their pollution control equipment.

After the Wake Board of Commissioners figured that a $4.1 million tax break for CP&L would require a 5-cent tax increase for county taxpayers, the Wake delegation filed a bill repealing the tax exemption. A lot of legislators voiced support for the bill, saying they didn't want the utilities to get such a tax break at the expense of these three counties.

But testimony by Sherwood Smith, president of CP&L, appeared to have set some minds to thinking. Smith said it didn't matter one bit to his company if they got the tax break or not. If they pay the taxes, they'll be reimbursed because taxes are always considered in the rate base that determines electricity rates. If they don't pay the taxes, then they may be able to charge lower rates.

Look at that closely. Smith was telling the legislators that if CP&L keeps its tax break, voters across the state will have lower rates. Musselwhite was quick to point out that those lower rates would come only at the expense of taxpayers in Wake, Mecklenburg and Brunswick counties.

Interviewed separately, Musselwhite, Rep. Tom Rabon, D-Brunswick, and Rep. Duke Holmes, D-Mecklenburg, all said they could envision battlelines being drawn on this dichotomy. Legislators might decide to leave the tax exemption alone so they could tell their constituents they voted for lower utility rates. It would be tough luck for those three counties.

Others disagreed. Reps. Richard Wright, D-Columbus, and Jim Crawford, D-Granville, said the utility bill savings would be very small, almost unnoticeable, and not worth the damage to the three counties.

If such a battle should ensue, legislators representing areas not covered by either Duke or CP&L might be strongly recruited by both sides. Either way they voted, it wouldn't affect their constituents.

This may, or may not, be where the battlelines are drawn. Already, some legislators are looking for signs that other major industries are applying for the tax credit, thus harming the tax bases in other counties. It's unlikely, however, that any companies will be found with enough pollution control equipment to rival the effect the tax cut will leave on Wake, Mecklenburg and Brunswick.

Weinbergs never heard from the school again.

"Well you've got until September. Jason could shape up by then. Maybe if you don't make a big deal of his having to go to school, he might just use the potty trainer without being forced to."

"That's easy for you to say," said Mr. Marks. "You don't have to live with the anxiety of it all. If Jason doesn't get into pre-pre-nursery school, he'll never get into nursery school."

"It can't be that big a deal," I said.

"Oh yeah?" Marks said. "How would you like to raise a kid who, by the time he reaches 4, can't even pin a tail on a donkey?"

Strength For Today

Patrick Henry, after he made a will, said to a friend: "If I had given my children the wealth of the world and not imparted to them the tradition and the love of the Christian religion, they would be poor indeed. On the other hand, having bequeathed them the Christian faith, I count them well-to-do, though I cannot leave them much of this world's goods."

There are many ways in which present day homes confer great benefits upon children, but there are other ways in which modern homes leave much to be desired.

Most modern parents know very little about the teachings of religion themselves, and so hand their children over to the church with the hope that a few hours each year spent in the examination of eternal truth will be enough to keep the youngsters decent and at least get them into heaven.

This was not what Patrick Henry was talking about when he said that he had bequeathed to his children the Christian faith.

Greenville: A Changing Community during the heart of the rush season, as much as two million pounds of tobacco might be sold there in one sales day.

Farmers came into the banks to pay off their loans. The budding farm machinery business was looking ahead as farmers realized that mechanized operations would be necessary in the future.

But economic life in Greenville as well as other big tobacco markets such as Wilson and in a sense Rocky Mount and Kinston, too, changed complexions with the opening of the tobacco market.

Shortly after World War II, the entire tobacco picture began to change, and the change has been radical, dramatic and dynamic.

Of all the communities depending so heavily on the tobacco economy, particularly the tobacco selling season, Greenville has managed to fare the difficult challenges brought on by government health programs, taxation, quotas, support prices and the like. Designation has come, and no longer do "drummers" with long tobacco sticks in their hands stand out in front of tobacco warehouses and shout to loaded wagons or trucks "drive in ... first sale." The selling program today seems such a cut and dried process.

As many markets felt the economic pinch brought on by the blows at the tobacco business, Greenville has managed to maintain a five-sale tobacco market, but the big story revolves around East Carolina University. Depressed tobacco markets are there, but ECU has risen far faster than the tobacco story has declined in its special role.

Think of Greenville today and the first thought is of a great university with a in excess of 13,000, and the largest non-military complex east of Raleigh.

Lest someone mistake what we are saying here, let us emphasize that the Greenville tobacco market is still extremely important to the economic picture of that area, but ECU has taken the lead as the pace setter.

Today Greenville is an educational, a university community — economically, culturally and practically. It is secondly a tobacco community.

Our distinct impression over the past several years is that the people of Greenville and Pitt County recognize the role that ECU plays in the area and that role is very much appreciated.

Taken UNC out of Chapel Hill and we'd have a crossroads left. Take ECU out of Greenville and we'd have a much smaller community left.

Challenger Shuttle Launch Set Monday

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer
CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — At long last, the countdown is set to begin for the maiden launching of America's second space shuttle, the Challenger, which has been grounded for more than two months by engine leaks and contaminated cargo.

Launch director Al O'Hara was ready to start the clock ticking at 2 p.m. EST today, aiming for a liftoff at 1:30 p.m. Monday. It is the first U.S. man-in-space countdown with a built-in holiday — Easter Sunday — for most of the launch team.

A normal shuttle countdown moves down to the 11-hour mark and then is held there for 10 hours, 40 minutes to allow crews to catch up on any work that has fallen behind. O'Hara said this hold time has been extended to 25 hours and 10 minutes — starting at midnight Saturday — "to give many of the shuttle workers Easter off."

Those plans could be upset, however, if there are problems to overcome — and Challenger has had its share.

This sleek new ship in the planned four-shuttle fleet originally was to make its launch debut on Jan. 20. But fuel leaks occurred in all three of the shuttle's main engines and in a fourth brought in as a replacement.

While engineers worked to correct a basic design defect in the engines — more powerful than those that powered the first shuttle, Columbia, through five successful launches — a windstorm swept the Kennedy Space Center on Feb. 28.

Gusts up to 70 mph breached protective seals on the launch pad and allowed sand, dust and other matter to settle on Challenger's cargo — a 5,000-pound tracking and data relay satellite. The flight was delayed several additional days while experts evaluated the potential damage and cleaned the spacecraft.

O'Hara is optimistic. "We are very pleased with the engines after going through a very agonizing period of time; we are confident the engines are in excellent condition," he said.

As for the satellite, John

Lovelace, a payload manager, said: "We feel very, very confident that we have gotten all the contaminants that could have caused us a risk."

The four astronauts who will fly the five-day mission used the delays to sharpen their skills in simulators and in jet planes.

Commanding the flight will be Paul J. Weitz, who spent 28 days aboard the Skylab space station in 1973. His pilot will be Air Force Col. Karol J. Bobko, with Story Musgrave and Donald H. Peterson serving as mission specialists.

Musgrave and Peterson will handle deployment of the satellite, which will serve as a relay point for commands and messages between several satellites — including manned shuttles — and Earth stations.

The mission specialists also plan a 3½-hour space walk on Day 4 — an exercise that was canceled on Columbia's fifth mission last November because of space suit technical problems.

Challenger is to return to Earth on Saturday, April 9, landing at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. On its second flight, scheduled in early June, it is to make the first shuttle landing on a 15,000-foot runway near the launch pad at Cape Canaveral.

Delay Nomination Of A Helms Ally

By The Associated Press
Democrats on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee are apparently using some of Sen. Jesse Helms' tactics to delay the nomination of one of his close allies to the Board for International Broadcasting.

The North Carolina Republican had urged President Reagan to nominate Raleigh lawyer Thomas F. Ellis to the board overseeing Radio Liberty and Radio Free Europe.

Geryld B. Christianson, Democratic staff member for the committee said Monday that Ellis' politics have nothing to do with the delay. "Nobody has any prejudged notions about this nomination," he said. Helms has used his seat on the committee several times to block the appointment of people he considers too liberal to State Department posts.

The Washington Post reported that some Republicans on the committee have joined with the Democrats to block Ellis because they fear a prolonged fight over his nomination would embarrass the GOP.

Ellis, who managed Helms' 1978 re-election campaign and Reagan's 1976 North Carolina primary campaign, is chairman of Helms' National Congressional Club, the nation's largest conservative political action committee.

Democrats on the committee have criticized him for his past association with the Pioneer Fund, a tax-exempt group that has supported research into theories that blacks are genetically inferior to whites.

Ellis says he served on the fund's board of directors for a year as a favor to an old college friend.

Nominations to oversight panels like the Board for International Broadcasting are often confirmed routinely without a hearing. But Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., the Foreign Relations Committee's ranking Democrat, has asked for a hearing. A Feb. 24 date was set and canceled, and has not been rescheduled.

Home-Visiting Goat Is Captured

A goat that fell in love with his own image in their sliding glass door became a regular visitor to the home of Bill and Cynthia Kandrotas at 110 Wendemere Court adjacent to Cherry Oaks Subdivision here before his owner was located through the assistance of the Pitt County Humane Society.

Kandrotas said that, once he got over the shock of having a large gray and brown nubian billygoat stand on his deck and gaze into the den door, he developed respect for the goat's intelligence and ingenuity.

"We tried all sorts of ways to catch him and were unsuccessful for some time," he said. "He'd actually pick up the lasso we'd devised to try to capture him in his teeth and fling it aside as if to show how disdainful he was of it."

The Humane Society gave notice in the "Adopt-A-Pet" column Sunday that a goat had been found. The owner, Jerry Muller of the Portertown area of Pitt County, responded and managed to catch the runaway and take him home.

Insurance Surcharge To Take Effect On Friday

By The Associated Press

Insurance rates for North Carolina drivers with traffic convictions will go up about 18.7 percent beginning Friday, officials say.

The increase affects anyone with a traffic conviction who renews his insurance policy after April 1, said Bernard H. Parker, chairman of the North Carolina Reinsurance Facility.

Parker said liability insurance — which is required by state law — may cost about $151 a year for a driver with no traffic convictions. One point against a driver's license could increase his insurance by 29 percent to $195 a year. Two points could increase the original insurance rate by 62 percent to $245.

A driver gets points based on the magnitude of the offense. For example, a conviction for traveling 45 miles an hour in a 35-mph zone will add one point to a driver's record. A conviction for driving under the influence of alcohol is 10 points, and a manslaughter conviction is an automatic 12 points.

The points remain on the driving record for three years and are cumulative. A driver with 12 points against his records will have his license suspended.

Parker said 10 points on a driver's license will force the insurance costs from $151 to at least $748, which calculates to a 395 percent increase.

Twelve points against a driver's license will increase the yearly insurance by about 450 percent.

The point system has been part of state law for many years. The 18.7 percent increase is an effort to make the reinsurance facility "a no-loss proposition," said Ed Jennings, an assistant to Parker.

Jennings said 14 percent of the increase is to recover the facility's operating losses. During the 1982 fiscal year, the facility lost $32.8 million on private passenger cars.

The facility handles drivers considered insurance risks. Base insurance rates for those drivers are 40 percent to 45 percent higher than drivers insured outside the facility.

State law now requires that recoupment charges be collected only from drivers with points on their records. Before the 1981 law, those charges were collected from all drivers in the facility.

Jennings said the remaining 4.7 percent is to make up the difference between insurance rates for drivers with clean records placed in the facility and drivers with points.

Drivers without points who may be insured through the facility include prisoners released after serving time for serious traffic convictions and some drivers who own certain models of vehicles.

"The facility is for people that insurance companies don't want to insure voluntarily and are not considered profitable," Jennings said.

California Highway Patrol investigators concluded County Sheriff's Sgt. Roderick Sinclair "was traveling at excessive speed for conditions and crossed the center line of the highway and collided head-on," said a report released Tuesday.

Age Limit In DUI Bill Is Scheduled For Debate

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A final state House vote on Gov. Jim Hunt's drunken driving package was expected today — with a battle over whether the minimum age for drinking beer and wine should be raised to 19 or 21.

The House tentatively approved the bill Tuesday 108-2 after adopting two amendments and rejecting 10 others. But the drinking age, perhaps the most controversial issue, remained unsettled.

A proposal by Rep. John Jordan, D-Alamancee, to raise the drinking age from 18 to 21 immediately after the bill takes effect Oct. 1 was defeated 76-29, but only after Rep. Bruce Ethridge, D-Onslow, said he would propose today the same age increase to be phased in over several years.

Rep. Martin Lancaster, D-Wayne, sponsor of the Hunt bill, said in an interview he would try to thwart the Ethridge amendment by proposing that the House wait until the Senate acts on a separate bill to raise the drinking age to 21.

Senate sponsors of Hunt's legislation proposed the separate bill as an alternative to amending the Hunt legislation, which they said could slow its Senate approval for months and possibly kill it.

"In the Senate, the argument was that changing the drinking age provision would delay the bill unnecessarily since the same thing could be accomplished in a separate bill," said Lancaster. "Hopefully, the same sentiment will prevail here (in the House)."

The bill's centerpiece is a new driving while impaired offense replacing current driving under the influence and lesser related charges. Plea bargaining would be made more difficult and sentencing would be determined in separate hearings in accordance with prescribed guidelines.

Any driver with a blood alcohol content of 0.10 percent or higher would have his license revoked for 10 days, although he could appeal the action before a magistrate within three days.

There was no attempt to amend the dram shop liability section, which has drawn sharp criticism from business lobbyists. That provision would impose civil liability on merchants who sell alcoholic beverages to underaged patrons or to intoxicated customers who drink on premises and later cause accidents.

"I think we've amended that part (in committee) to address the legitimate fairness concerns raised by the business community," Lancaster. "I hope dram shop will not be changed further."

The House also rejected 48-63 an amendment adopted earlier this month on the floor of the Senate. It effectively would ban drinking in vehicles by presuming that the driver had illegally drunk from any open alcoholic beverage container found in an automobile.

The Hunt bill would make it illegal to have open liquor containers in a vehicle's passenger area. But Rep. Dan Lilley, D-Lenoir, said the provision had no teeth because the driver simply could hand the container to a passenger when he sees the police coming.

But Lancaster said the amendment would remove a driver's incentive to remain sober if his passengers are drinking.

"If he's going to be arrested for what his passengers do, he may as well drink himself," he said.

The House also defeated proposed amendments to:

- Delete a provision allowing special roadblocks to detect drunken drivers.
- Set precise prison sentences for impaired-driving convictions instead of allowing a judge to determine the imprisonment based on guidelines set down in the bill.

— Keep the minimum beer and wine drinking age at 18 and another amendment to raise the drinking age to 20.

— Delete a provision allowing for impounding the vehicle of a person convicted of impaired driving while his driver's license was revoked for an earlier drunken driving conviction.

— Delete a section making it illegal for a licensed driver to drink while accompanying a youthful driver with only a learner's permit.

— Stipulate that the part of the law making it illegal for youths aged 16-18 to drive with any alcohol in their bodies doesn't apply to consumption of communal wine at church.

Two amendments were approved, creating additional discrepancies with the Senate version that must be approved by the Senate or resolved by a joint conference committee.

They would increase from two days to two weeks the minimum time for notifying a person whose car is to be impounded and require that anyone held in a county jail on a drunken driving charge reimburse the county for his upkeep.

The only people to vote against the bill were Rep. Frank Ballance, D-Warren, and Rep. Reid Poovey, R-Catawba.

"The House of Representatives has demonstrated its determination to protect the people of North Carolina from drinking drivers," Hunt said in a prepared statement after Tuesday's vote.

"The overwhelming vote in favor of the Safe Roads Act put both houses of the General Assembly on record as favoring the nation's toughest law against drunken driving."

'Thorn Birds' A Nielsen Winner

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "The Thorn Birds" series, which outdrew "The Winds of War" on its opening night, gave ABC a much-needed ratings victory as the current television season approaches an end.

The A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings for the week ended March 27 placed ABC 4 1/2 ratings points ahead of CBS. With three weeks to go CBS still leads in the season-to-date ratings. But the final three chapters of "Thorn Birds" could give ABC another victory next week.

Sunday's opening chapter of "The Thorn Birds," based on the best-selling novel about a priest torn between love and the church, was seen by an audience estimated at 80 million by ABC.

It had a rating of 39.5 and a share of 55 percent. "The Winds of War," telecast by ABC in February and second only to "Roots" as the highest-rated miniseries of all time, had a 39.1 rating and a share of 53 percent for the first night.

Teen-Ager Held In Store Theft

Greenville police Monday arrested Charles Clifton Taft, 19, of 1806B W. Conley St. on assault and larceny charges about five minutes after $17.90 worth of merchandise was taken from a drug store on Dickinson Avenue by a robber who threatened the pharmacist with a knife.

Chief Glenn Cannon said the thief entered Hollowell's Drug Store at 911 Dickinson Ave., put two hair kits in a duffelbag and then pulled a knife on pharmacist Jack Tyler when Tyler tried to recover the merchandise.

The chief said the incident was reported at 1:15 p.m.

Barney Clark Is Remembered

By PATRICK CONNOLLY
Associated Press Writer
FEDERAL WAY, Wash.
(AP) — Barney Clark, laid to rest as a cold rain fell on 1,300 mourners, was eulogized as "our hero in this chapter of history" who blazed a medical trail with his artificial heart that thousands of patients will someday follow.

"In time, 50,000 men and women per year will be restored to a worthwhile existence with the artificial heart in the United States alone," said Dr. Willem Kolff, director of the University of Utah Division of Artificial Organs, as Clark was buried Tuesday near his home town.

About 1,300 people turned out in cold, driving rain for the funeral service at the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Stake Center, south of Seattle, where the retired dentist was eulogized as a selfless hero.

"To a world increasingly filled with hopelessness and despair, he stood quietly and resolutely for an entirely different view of life," said Elder Neal A. Maxwell of the Mormon Church's Council of the Twelve Apostles. "His impact was immense — greater than he could possibly know."

He called the 62-year-old Clark "a selfless pioneer, adding a new dimension to the Mormon pioneer tradition in which those who lost their loved ones crossing the plains nevertheless picked up their handcart and headed west."

Clark, the walls of his diseased heart as thin as tissue paper, on Dec. 2 traded a peaceful, imminent death for a painful future with the experimental, air-driven heart.

Rarely without pain after the operation at the University of Utah Medical Center, an uncomplaining Clark shook off death time and again for 112 days until circulatory collapse and multiple organ failure overtook him a week ago today.

Future recipients of the plastic heart "will experience that their borrowed days, weeks, months or years of survival are a precious gift which they owe to Barney Clark and (his wife) Una Loy," said Kolff.

In remarks directed to Mrs. Clark, Kolff spoke of the operation and its effect on the patient, his family and the doctors.

"It is not so much life we wanted to prolong, but happiness we wanted to create ... We had hoped we could have given Dr. Barney Clark a higher quality of life," Kolff said. "Dr. Barney Clark is our hero, Una Loy is our heroine in this chapter of history."

The second artificial heart will be implanted within six months, Dr. William DeVries, Clark's surgeon, has said. Doctors hope to expand guidelines for the experiment to allow use on patients not as sick as Clark was.

Clark's body, in a closed walnut casket draped with yellow roses and carnations, was wheeled slowly into the chapel, followed by his wife, sons Stephen and Gary, daughter Karen Shaffer, five grandchildren and members of the medical team.

As she passed, Mrs. Clark smiled at a family friend. Later at the cemetery, while guests milled around, Mrs. Clark bent over, almost unnoticed, and kissed her husband's coffin.

Clark was remembered by his dental partner, Theodore Lund, as a man devoted to golf who "could literally knock the cover off the ball. He never lacked for a foursome." Clark, he recalled, treated patients like family members.

President Reagan was represented at the funeral by William Ruckelshaus, an executive of Weyerhaeuser Co. and the nominee to head the Environmental Protection Agency. He said after a brief visit with Mrs. Clark, "She's a courageous woman."

Other members of the Utah medical team attending included DeVries, assisting surgeon Dr. Lyle Joyce and Dr. Robert Jarvik, inventor of the heart.

Bargain Way To Expand A Fleet

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — People Express Airlines has found a bargain way to expand its fleet, buying 20 Boeing 727s from Braniff International for $4.2 million apiece, with the approval of a U.S. bankruptcy judge.

Judge John Flowers also approved Tuesday a plan for People Express to lease a Braniff 747 for a Newark, N.J., to London route, approved last week by the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Braniff's secured creditors, which had opposed the sales at a hearing Monday, embraced the plan after People Express upped the price from $4 million to $4.2 million for each plane. A new 727 costs about $16 million. Braniff, which has filed for bankruptcy protection, bought its planes between 1973 and 1978.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) —
The proposed redistribution among public school systems of some $2 million for handicapped, gifted and pregnant children could cause some schools to lose teachers, an appropriations panel was told Tuesday.

Ted Drain, who is in charge of programs for those children in the state Department of Public Instruction, told the House-Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Education that the new funding formula is based more strictly on the number of children served. So systems that lose money may not be able to afford the number of teachers they once had, he said.

The subcommittee is considering the public schools' budget request for 1983-85 but made no decision on the funding formula, which is a part of the request.

The state now employs 6,218 teachers to serve 169,460 students identified as "exceptional children" — those who are handicapped, pregnant or academically gifted, Drain said.

A total of $171 million a year goes to exceptional children's programs — $114 million from the state and the rest from the federal government. About $10 million of the state portion is spent on the gifted with most of the money going to the handicapped.

Drain said the first funding program, devised in 1980-81, was designed to keep up funding for each school system while spending any additional funds according to the number of exceptional children in each school system. But he said that system permitted a great disparity between school systems — a disparity the new formula is meant to correct.

Drain said school officials discarded a plan to allocate all the money according to the number of exceptional children because it would have redistributed $6 million among the schools.

The revised plan would allocate only part of the money according to the number of exceptional children, with a $2 million funding shift. Forsyth County schools would lose the most money — $350,000.

Drain said the shift in money was caused by overspending per student in some school systems and the 1981 formula that allowed that overbudgeting to continue.

But he noted that, "This new formula would not cause as much negative fiscal impact (as the first formula proposed.)"

That's because the formula would set aside 4,000 teaching jobs to be allocated according to the number of students in the entire school system. It also would set aside some teaching and aide positions for the trainable mentally retarded and others.

The leftover money would be divided according to the number of exceptional children in each school system.

Prize Pooch Is Purloined

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Dog owner Jill Downing was thrilled when her miniature pinscher finished second in class at a dog show, then shocked when the prize pooch was purloined.

Someone took Corky, cage and all.

"She, the crate, the whole thing was gone," said Mrs. Downing, a professional dog handler from nearby Garland. "Someone obviously knew she was a winner and just picked her up and walked off."

Hundreds of spectators stood Sunday to watch Corky prance triumphantly around the show ring at Texas Stadium during the Texas Kennel Club's first dog show.

But in the confusion on the sidelines after the show, the 9-month-old pinscher was pinched.

"She's very high-tempered, and we're afraid that she will snap (at) someone and they'll toss her out on the street," Mrs. Downing said.

She said her 14-year-old son, Scott, discovered during feeding time late Sunday that the dog was missing.

Corky, which Mrs. Downing said is worth $2,000, was kept in a small fiberglass crate with the Downings' name and phone number on it.

The dog, which weighs six pounds and stands 11 inches high, appears timid but will bite if frightened, she said.

Mrs. Downing said Corky cannot be replaced.

"We want this one," she said. "Corky's got champion blood, and we've groomed her into a winner. And my son's grown very attached to her."

Hunting Name With Dignity

MANKATO, Minn. (AP) — What's in a name? Too much fat, say the 1,800 members of the Minnesota Porkettes, who want the pork promotion organization to come up with a more suitable moniker.

They took up the weighty problem at a meeting here Monday, looking for a name that would be more dignified, said president Pat Rentschler.

"We're proud of our product, and we want to have a new name that's a good name," she said as county Porkettes presidents chewed the fat over a name change.

Jack Morris, president of the St. Paul public relations firm of Peterson-Morris Inc., who was hired to help, explained, "There's something about the word 'pork' that in our language and our current usage reminds people of things like plumpness or fattiness, traits that just, generally speaking, aren't considered too attractive."

Some of the suggestions were serious, but others less so, as the "Ham-sters" and "Oink-a-Doink-a-Doos."

Restorations

FLORENCE, Italy (AP) — After an absence of nearly 50 years, four 15th century frescoes by Paola Uccello have been returned in pristine condition to the Green Cloister of the Church of Santa Maria Novella.

Fifteen other restored frescoes have also been placed in the cloister as part of a museum of religious art and history that opened at the church last Saturday.

State Law To Protect Lawns

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) - The spacious lawns at the West Virginia Statehouse aren't covered by Charleston's leash law, so a state law has been passed to make sure they aren't covered with something else.

Capitol guards had complained that dog owners were letting their pets run free to mess up the grass and attack squirrels, and that without a law they couldn't do anything about it.

The law passed in the legislative session that ended this month requires dog owners to clean up droppings around the Statehouse. The fine for letting dogs run free runs up to $500 and six months in the county jail.

Nicaraguan Planes Strike Guerrillas

By FILADELFO ALEMAN
Associated Press Writer
MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Air Force planes bombed an airfield in northern Nicaragua that anti-Sandinista guerrillas were using to supply their forces and killed or wounded several rebels, Interior Minister Tomas Borge said.

The Nicaraguan foreign ministry denounced new cross-border raids by Honduran-based Nicaraguan exiles pledged to overthrow the leftist government, and Honduras denied a charge that its troops had aided the rebels by attacking Nicaraguan frontier posts.

Honduras also claimed that its security forces had intercepted 12 Nicaraguan soldiers carrying weapons to leftist guerrillas in El Salvador.

Borge, speaking at a news conference late Tuesday, said helicopters and small planes used the airfield to bring weapons, ammunition and other supplies to the rebel forces.

The insurgents also used an airfield in Honduran territory, he said, but stressed that the one bombed Monday was in Nicaragua, close to the confluence of the Coco and Bocay Rivers just across the border from Honduras in Jinotega province.

He said an undetermined number of rebels were killed or wounded in the bombing.

Borge said Nicaraguan troops and rebels clashed in the area of the bombing, with three Sandinista soldiers killed and three others wounded on Monday. He said there were casualties among the insurgents but gave no details.

Because the Nicaraguan government generally bars reporters from combat zones, none of the reports could be checked.

According to the government, the latest clash raised the number of Sandinista troops killed to 64, while the rebels have lost 280 soldiers since clashes began two months ago.

Borge said the rebels planned to use the Bocay River, one of many in the north, to travel into the interior of the country.

Elsewhere, rebels used mortars and small arms fire to attack the Nicaraguan border posts of Teotecacinte, 143 miles northeast of here in Nueva Segovia province, and El Kun, 155 miles to the northeast in Northern Yelapa province on Monday, and then fled across the border into Honduras, the foreign ministry said.

Earlier Tuesday the ministry had charged that Honduran guards attacked two other posts, El Suspiro and El Espino, 80 miles northwest of here in Chinandega province.

The Honduran government denied the charge.

"Honduran soldiers have not entered Nicaraguan territory nor will they because the position of our government is of absolute respect for the principle of non-intervention in the affairs of other states," a statement from the president's office said.

The Nicaraguan officials did not comment on the Honduran claim that security forces intercepted Nicaraguan soldiers carrying a "large quantity" of weapons Saturday at Nacaome, more than two-thirds of the way across the 70-mile neck of Honduran territory between Nicaragua and El Salvador.

Nicaragua repeatedly has denied charges by the United States and its allies in the Salvadoran government that the Sandinistas were funneling Soviet and Cuban weapons to the guerrillas.

In New York, the U.N. Security Council ended a five-day debate without taking action on Nicaragua's charges that the United States and Honduras were supporting the rebels. The session concluded with an appeal by the council president, Sir John Thomson of Britain, for Nicaragua and Honduras to negotiate a peaceful settlement with the assistance of U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar of Peru.

The United States has not answered the charge that it backs the rebels.

There were no new reports from the rebels' Nicaraguan Democratic Force, a Honduran-based organization that includes former national guardsmen under late dictator Anastasio Somoza and former Sandinista supporters, since its claim to have killed 20 government soldiers in an ambush on Saturday.

The Democratic Force, which claims to have at least 10,000 troops in Nicaragua, believes in using its own fighters to overthrow the government, while the other major exile group, the Costa Rican-based Democratic Revolutionary Alliance of former Sandinista junta member Alfonso Robelo is counting on internal dissent to provoke an armed struggle.

Sandinista government estimates of rebel strength vary from 1,200 to 5,000, while the government is believed to have 3,000 to 4,000 troops and an undetermined number of civilian militiamen in the area.

Volunteer Community Police Are Reassuring

By RICK SCOPPE
Associated Press Writer

Crime has never been much of a problem in Ronda, but when the small Wilkes County town lost its lone police officer in January, a few of the town's older residents became concerned.

Mayor Billy Soots and some other men discussed the problem and decided to form what they called a Citizen Patrol that would walk and ride the streets at night "looking for anything out of the ordinary."

"We have quite a few older living here and they didn't feel quite secure. Actually, it was done to make them feel better," Soots said.

Soots said the plan has worked better than he ever imagined. Between 25 and 30 men have volunteered, with groups of two or three going out with walkie-talkies at night.

"One of the men serves as a base near a telephone and calls the Wilkes County Sheriff's Department if the others see anything suspicious. Soots said so far the group hasn't had any cause to call the sheriff."

"There's been no incidents at all," Soots said in a telephone interview Tuesday. "In fact, nothing's happened. Everything's real quiet."

But Soots said that wasn't surprising. Ronda, a town of around 350 people, has never had too much of a crime problem.

"We have a little bank and that was robbed last year," he said. "But we caught him the same day."

"It's a very crime-free area," Wilkes County Sheriff Kyle Gentry said in a telephone interview.

Gentry said he supports the citizens' group.

"I welcome the involvement," he said. "I hope they continue to patrol. There have been no problems and I think the people are broad-minded enough to know what they can and cannot do."

"I've not discussed it with them," Gentry said. "But of course, I hope they go out unarmed."

Soots said that was one rule the group agreed on during a meeting prior to formation.

"We really stressed that at our meetings. We have no authority to carry a gun or make an arrest," he said. "There's no way we can do anything. We're just volunteers who are watching out for their neighbors."

Soots said the group has done more than just make its citizens feel safer. It has brought the community together.

The loss of the town's lone police officer — Bobby McCann — came after two factories closed their doors, throwing between 600 and 700 people out of work, Soots said.

"People's attitudes were real down. It just hurt everybody," Soots said. "But (the citizen's group) seemed to put the town together."

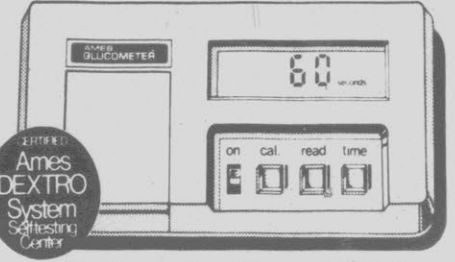

Wreck Causes Heavy Damage

Sherwood House Allsbrook of Williamston was charged with failing to see his intended movement could be made in safety following investigation of a 7:30 a.m. collision Monday at the intersection of 14th and Broad streets.

Officers said the Allsbrook car collided with a vehicle driven by Rose Farmer Evans of Farmville, causing an estimated $1,000 damage to the Allsbrook car and $2,500 damage to the Evans vehicle.

Police said Ms. Evans was injured in the collision.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed higher today, helped by a new sign of economic recovery.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 4.36 to 1,135.55 in the first half hour.

Gainers took a 4-3 lead over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

As trading began, the Commerce Department reported that the index of leading economic indicators rose 1.4 per cent in February. That was a considerably stronger showing than many analysts had expected for the index, which is designed to detect future trends in business activity.

Among the 10 components of the index that were available, however, the government said the biggest contribution to the increase was provided by growth of the money supply.

Monetary expansion has prompted some concern on Wall Street that interest rates might rise and inflation revive.

Chrysler led the active list in early trading, unchanged at 16 1/4. A 130,000-share block traded at that price.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average fell 2.13 points to 1,131.19.

Declines led advances by about 4 to 3 on the NYSE.

Big Board volume increased to 65.30 million shares from 58.51 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index lost .10 to 87.24. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 0.22 at 383.76.

Hope To Link Pay Hike, Performance

WASHINGTON (AP) — Annual pay increases for all federal employees would be linked to job performance instead of being largely automatic, under a proposal by the Reagan administration.

Donald Devine, director of the Office of Personnel Management, said Tuesday that under his proposal employees will have to be rated "exceptional" or "outstanding" to get to the top pay level, or "step."

The number of "steps" within a pay grade depends on the job, but there can be as many as 10.

Since October 1981, employees with management responsibilities — grades GS-13 to GS-15 — have been under a "performance pay" system. The administration's proposal would expand that system to all federal employees.

The current system requires only "acceptable" performance for the GS-13 grade to get his or her annual increase. Devine said government managers have been engaging in a "paper exercise" in assigning performance ratings.

Under his proposal, the standard for a raise on the lower steps would be a "fully successful" rating. Devine said he expected most workers on the lower steps would have little trouble in meeting that standard, since 93 percent already do.

But 99 percent in all grades have been receiving step increases.

Devine's proposal was to be published today in the Federal Register. It cannot go into effect until 60 days have passed for public comment.

Baptist Shuts Out Pirates By 1-0 Score

CHARLESTON, S.C. — East Carolina's Pirates, after banging out 17 hits against Baptist College on Monday, found themselves handcuffed with only three hits yesterday, as Baptist gained a 1-0 baseball victory. The shutout marked the first time in 76 games that the Pirates haven't scored in a contest.

"Baptist is a hard team to access," Coach Hal Baird said afterwards. "During infield, they throw the ball around and kick the ball around, and then they played like a seasoned team when they get in the game."

"I can't fathom 17 hits one day and then we don't scratch the next on a guy who really wasn't that good," Baird added.

The Pirates didn't get that bad of a job from starter Robbie McClanahan, who came out in the sixth for Chubby Butler, who then took the loss on an unearned run in the seventh. Neither pitcher did that bad for the Pirates.

Meanwhile, however, East Carolina was unable to touch either of the Baptist pitchers, the first of whom apparently got the Pirates too anxious, and the second of whom caught them so off balance he got the ball by them.

Both teams had scoring opportunities throughout the game. Baptist had the first threat as Steve Essig led off with an infield hit and moved up on an out. He stole third but died there.

East Carolina came up with a chance in the third as Mark Shank walked, took second on a wild pitch and moved to third on an out, only to wait out the rest of the inning there. In the fifth, Robert Wells walked, was sacrificed up and took third on an out.

With two outs in the sixth, Evans doubled, but got no further. And in the seventh, David Wells walked, was sacrificed up and watched Tony Salmund walk.

But the Pirates couldn't put anything together.

Baptist offered two more threats before finally scoring in the seventh. In the fifth, Billy Harden singled and moved up on an out, taking third on an infield hit. In the sixth, Robbie Bessinger walked and Larry Coleman got an infield hit. Both were then sacrificed up.

The Buccaneers finally struck paydirt in the seventh inning. Harden got another infield hit on which Salmund made a diving stop of, but couldn't get up and make the throw in time. Harden then stole second and was sacrificed to third.

Essig then hit a fly to short center, where Robert Wells made the catch. Harden made no effort to run, but then Wells, preparing to throw, dropped the ball and that set Harden off to the plate, where he scored what was to be the only run of the game.

Baptist had one other threat, in the eighth, when Bessinger doubled, was sacrificed to third and waited out the rest of the inning.

Essig, Coleman and Harden each had two hits for the Buccaneers. ECU was led by Evans with two hits.

The loss dropped the Pirates to 13-6 on the year, while Baptist climbs to 7-10.

The Pirates return to action today, visiting UNC-

Wilmington. They return home on Thursday to host William & Mary in an ECAC-South game.

Love Them Wolves
Pam Stanley clutches a stuffed wolf as she watches the N.C. State Wolfpack practice before its trip to the NCAA Championships in Albuquerque, N.M., later this week. Stanley got the wolf autographed by the State players. (AP Laserphoto)

Crowds Come Now Just To Watch Pack Practice

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — It's been almost 10 years since North Carolina State drew a big crowd for basketball practices.

In 1974, crowds of 5,000 were commonplace as the Wolfpack prepared for its last trip to the NCAA Final Four. Fans watched David Thompson, Monte Towse, Tim Stoddard and Tom Burleson prepare for their attack on UCLA.

The crowds weren't that big this week, but about 2,000 turned out Monday for the first Wolfpack practice since winning the NCAA West regional over Virginia Saturday.

"We didn't really have a practice planned today," Valvano said. "We were just going to shoot around a little."

But we'll have a little scrimmage so you can see the next NCAA champions play."

Ethel Holt of Whitsett, a small town 60 miles east of Raleigh, said she was quite excited to see her boys, especially since she'd burned a lot of midnight oil to see them beat Pepperdine, Nevada-Las Vegas and Utah.

"I'm 83 and I stayed up until 2:30 in the morning to watch them," Mrs. Holt said. She attended the practice despite a broken hip which has forced her to use a walker.

"If this weren't broken," she said, pointing to her hip, "I'd like to go to Albuquerque."

Seven-year-old Jessica Jackson encountered senior guard Derek Whittenburg at N.C. State's Brickyard, a courtyard-type setting which has been the scene of the last two victory celebrations. Jessica got an autograph and a kiss.

Eddie Biedenbach, father of Georgia assistant basketball coach Eddie Biedenbach Jr., was also a spectator at the arena where his son thrilled Wolfpack fans in the mid-1960s.

"I've been rooting for these guys as long as I can remember," said the elder Biedenbach. "I don't know where I'm going to sit when this game comes up. I could go to Albuquerque, but I don't think I'd better."

Biedenbach said he was struck by the similarities between the two schools.

"Neither Georgia nor these guys played well during the season," he said. "But when they have to do it, they just go out and do it."

RED OAK — Mike Kinley tossed a two-hitter and Kenny Kirkland banged out three hits, two of them doubles, as Rose High School's Rampants took an 8-2 baseball decision over Northern Nash yesterday.

It marked only the second game of the year for the Rampants, who have had five games washed out by rains this damp spring. It was also the opening Big East game of the season.

Kinley, who picked up his second victory of the year, gave up the two hits, both of them doubles, in the fourth and fifth innings. But it was walks that got him in trouble, as he issued five passes during the afternoon, two of them in the fifth when both Knight runs scored — tying the score at that point in the game.

But he also struck out 11 batters, including the first eight he faced before Jarrod Moody broke the string with a walk.

Kirkland's three hits gave him the chance to score three runs himself as well as drive in two others. Bill Johnson and Traye Fuqua also added two hits for the Rampants.

"I have to say I'm real pleased," Rose coach Ronald Vincent said after the Rampants rallied to score six runs in the final two innings to put the game away. "We made some mistakes you'd expect in the second game of the season. We didn't swing the bats real crisp until later in the game, especially there in the last inning," he added.

In that last frame, when Rose broke the game open, the Rampants banged out four hits, two of them doubles. "Kinley threw the ball real well. He got tired, but this is actually early in the season for us. So I have to feel pretty well about it."

Rose opened the scoring in the second inning, scoring once. Kirkland opened with a single and stole second. After Curtis Evans walked, Kirkland took third on Bill Johnson's grounder to short. A passed ball then let Kirkland score. Johnson, who had taken second on the passed ball, was thrown out at the plate on Fuqua's single to left.

Rose added a second run in the third. With one away, Rudy Stalls beat out a bunt down the first base line. He moved up on an out and scored when Eric Woodworth reached on an error.

Northern came back to tie it up with two in the fifth. With one down, Moody walked and stole second. Ronnie Stample walked, and again, both runners stole up, both scoring on a double down the left field line by Don Gaylor. Gaylor then stole third, but watched a pop-up and a strikeout end the threat.

Rose quickly took the lead back with one in the top of the sixth. With one away, Kirkland doubled to right. With two away, Johnson singled up the middle, scoring Kirkland for a 3-2 lead.

Rose put it out of reach with five in the seventh. Bobby Buie reached on a two-base error and Randy Warren walked. Stalls, attempting to sacrifice, reached when the relay on his ball was too late at third, loading the bases. Kinley then walked, forcing in Buie. Woodworth followed with a single, scoring Jeff Wilson, who had returned to the game in Warren's place.

Stalls, trying to score from second, was thrown out at the plate. Kirkland then hit a liner down the line that hit third and caromed off for a double, allowing courtesy runner Toby Fischer and Woodworth to score. After an out, Johnson singled in Kirkland. Fuqua followed with a double to right, but again a fine throw got Johnson at the plate.

The win gives Rose a 2-0 record, while Northern falls to 3-2.

The Rampants play host to Rocky Mount on Thursday.

Cougars Hold Off Farmville Rally, 6-5

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer
FARMVILLE — The Cougars of SouthWest Edgecombe got a pair of runs in the fifth and another in the sixth and held off a last-inning rally by Farmville Central for a 6-5 victory in Eastern Carolina 3-A Conference baseball action Tuesday.

Billy Godley, who went the distance on the mound for the Cougars, opened the bottom of the seventh with a double. New Cougar pitcher Eddie Naylor then walked Randy Daniels and Wade Corbett to load the bases.

SouthWest Edgecombe nailed Corbett going to second on Alvin Baker's fielder's choice, but Godley missed the plate to trim the margin to 6-4. Bobby Carroway's grounder to third was bobbled by Hank Farmer allowing Daniels to score and cut the lead to one.

After Gerald Wilson struck out, Taylor Walston drew a base-on-balls to load the bases again. But Naylor got out of the inning with a called third strike on Roy Roman.

"I'm really proud of my players," said Farmville Central coach Bill Davis, whose team is now 1-3 overall and 0-1 in the conference. "They showed a lot of class coming back. They could have given up, but they fought back. We've got a young team, but this shows me we're going to win some ballgames this year."

SouthWest Edgecombe is now 1-0 in the conference and 3-2 overall.

The Cougars jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the top of the first, as Baker bobbled a bunt in front of the plate by Barry Powell and Godley mishandled a tapper back to the mound by Mark Pittman. Eddie Naylor singled to load the bases, and Hank Farmer's base hit brought in Powell and Pittman.

With runners on first and third, the Cougars executed the double steal. Farmer was caught at second on the throw by Baker, but Naylor scored easily from third. Godley struck out Mike Varnell and got Daryl Bess to ground out to third to get out of the inning.

The Jaguars got one of the runs back in the bottom half of the inning on a two-out homer by Corbett over the left-center field fence.

Walston and Roman walked with one out in the second, but were stranded on the bases. Daniels' line drive opening the third was snared by Naylor, who opened the game at first base. Corbett singled and moved to third on Baker's base hit. Both scored on a double to left-center by Carroway to knot the score at 3-3.

Powell opened the fifth with a base-on-balls for SouthWest Edgecombe, but was out at second on a fielder's choice by Pittman. Pittman moved to second on a single to left by Naylor, and both advanced when Farmer grounded out to second. Pittman and Naylor scored on a two-out double by Mike Varnell. Godley ended the rally by striking out Bess.

The Cougars added the winning run in the sixth with two out, as Dan Mills' grounder was fielded cleanly by Carroway but thrown past Walston at first base, allowing Mills to move to second. He scored on a single by Powell to left field.

The Jaguars threatened in the bottom of the sixth, as Roman took first on a fielder's choice and moved to third on a wild pitch and a passed ball.

Tim Askew grounded out to second for the third Farmville Central out.

SouthWest left runners on second and third in the seventh, as Farmer reached first on a throwing error, moved to second on a single by Bess and both moved up a base on a wild pitch by Godley. The

Lady Jaguars Run Past Conley

FARMVILLE — Farmville Central had little trouble in rolling to victory in a dual meet with the D.H. Conley girls yesterday in track. Conley, hampered by having only a few members to its team, went down to a 107-20 defeat.

Samantha Payton won three events for Farmville, the triple jump, the 100-yard dash and the 220-yard dash. Christine Tyson won the long jump and the mile, while Lisa Dixon took both of the hurdle events.

Farmville's next outing is Thursday when it hosts Greene Central and SouthWest Edgecombe. Conley travels to West Craven on Thursday.

NL West Race: Can Braves Repeat?

By The Associated Press

Nobody believed the Atlanta Braves in 1982. They were coming off a 50-66 campaign in the strike-shortened season of 1981. They had a new manager, Joe Torre. And their pitching looked shaky. But they won the National League's Western Division and Torre says, "Now, we're expected to win."

Well, not everyone expects the Braves to win what might be the most balanced division in baseball this coming season. The Braves still have many doubters.

Los Angeles should be there all season, as they were last year when they lost the NL West to the Braves on the final day of the season, beaten by San Francisco on a Joe Morgan homer. The San Diego Padres have improved with the acquisition of L.A.'s free-agent first baseman, Steve Garvey, and San Francisco and Houston have some potential.

Only Cincinnati seems out of the race even before the season begins.

So, the simplest answer seems most probable. The Braves again in '83.

Last year, they finished this way: Atlanta (89-73), Los Angeles (88-74), San Francisco (87-75), San Diego (81-81), Houston (77-85), Cincinnati (61-101). It should look like this in 1983:

ATLANTA

Despite the presence of Phil Niekro (17-4, 3.61 ERA) to anchor its staff, Atlanta looked a little weak pitching-wise. But, as the season wound down, it became apparent the Braves were getting some help from an unlikely place, the bullpen, manned by Gene Garber (30 saves, 2.34 ERA) and rookie Steve Bedrosian (11 saves, 2.42 ERA). Atlanta's 51 saves led the league.

Torre's staff labored without the services of a single left-hander last year, a situation which has been remedied by the acquisition of free agents Pete Falcone and Terry Forster, a reliever.

The Braves' most visible strength is on offense with league MVP Dale Murphy (109 RBI, 36 HR), Bob Horner (97 RBI, 32 HR), Chris Chambliss (86 RBI, 20 HR) and Claudell Washington (80 RBI, 16 HR). Because of these men, the Braves led the NL in runs with 739 and homers with 146.

SAN DIEGO

The acquisition of Garvey (.282, 86 RBI, 16 HR) and the maturation of three young pitchers makes San Diego the most improved team in the division. With his acquisition, San Diego filled three of its most pressing needs — a first baseman, a right-handed hitter and power.

Terry Kennedy (.295, 97 RBI, 21 HR) and Sixto Lezcano (.289, 84 RBI, 16 HR) should help out offensively. The Padres also are awaiting the return to action from a knee injury of Gary Templeton (.247, 64 RBI).

The Padres also have three of the best young arms in the division in Tim Lollar (16-9, 3.13 ERA), Chris Welsh (8-8, 4.91 ERA) and John Curtis (8-6, 4.10 ERA). Luis DeLeon (2.03, 15 saves) and Gary Lucas (3.24, 16 saves) work out of the bullpen.

LOS ANGELES

The Dodgers are relying too heavily on rookies to win the division. Even in Los Angeles, rebuilding signals a year or two of mediocrity. Greg Brock (.310 with Albuquerque) will replace Garvey at first, and Mike Marshall (.388 at Albuquerque) moves into the outfield so Pedro Guerrero (.304, 100 RBI, 32 HR) can play at third for the traded Ron Cey. Rookie of the Year Steve Sax (.282, 180 hits, 49 stolen bases) and veteran Dusty Baker (.300, 88 RBI, 23 HR) help out offensively.

Pitching still is the Dodgers' long suit with left-handers Fernando Valenzuela (19-13, 2.87, 18 complete games) and Jerry Reuss (18-11, 3.11 ERA).

HOUSTON

The Astros might be ready move up the ladder this year — if free-agent Omar Moreno can help provide some runs for a fine pitching staff. Moreno (.245, 82 runs, 60 stolen bases at Pittsburgh last year) will be depended upon to set the table for a team that scored only 569 runs, 11th in the league, last season.

Houston still has that fine pitching, though, starting with right-hander Nolan Ryan (16-12, 3.16 ERA, 245 strikeouts). Also around are Joe Niekro (17-12, 2.47 ERA), Vern Ruhle and Bob Knepper. The staff might even be better if Joe Sambito can return from injury.

Phil Garner wound up hitting fourth for the club last year, driving in 83 runs.

SAN FRANCISCO

The Giants got too little in return for the men they traded away this season. Gone to Philadelphia are left-handed reliever Al Holland (7-3, 5.33 ERA, 5 saves) and Morgan (.289, 61 RBI, 14 HR) for pitcher Mike Krukow (13-11, 3.12) and two minor leaguers. And, Reggie Smith (56 RBI, 18 HR) quit to play in Japan.

The Giants will salvage a few victories, however, with the help of Jack Clark (103 RBI, 27 HR) and relief ace Greg Minton (1.893 ERA, 30 saves), and they are hoping for continued improvement from two young pitchers, Allee Hammaker (12-8, 4.11 ERA) and Bill Laskey (13-12, 3.14 ERA).

CINCINNATI

The Reds are trying to rebuild around a few youngsters like Eddie Milner (.268, 23 doubles), Gary Redus (.333, 112 runs, 54 stolen bases with Indianapolis) and Wayne Krenchicki (.283), and select veterans like Dave Concepcion (.287, 53 RBI), Dan Driessen (.269, 57 RBI, 17 HR) and Johnny Bench (.258, 38 RBI, 13 HR).

Still, the team with the worst record in the league in '82 shows little promise of regrouping in time for 1983.

At least one of their veterans could be gone shortly via trade as the Reds continue to revamp.

Bear Grass Rally Falls Short, 6-5

BEAR GRASS — Bath High School squelched a rally in the bottom of the seventh inning to gain a 6-5 baseball victory over Bear Grass yesterday.

Bath took the lead with a run in the first inning and added another in the second. The Pirates picked up a third run in the top of the fourth before the Bears came up with two, trimming the lead to 3-2. Bath then added two more in the fifth and one in the sixth for a 6-2 lead.

The Bears then rallied to score three times in the final frame. Lawrence Watson reached on an error and David Price walked. Mark Taylor reached on an error, scoring Watson. Craig Gardner walked and Billy Fulford sacrificed to score Price. James Lilly walked, forcing in Taylor with the third run, but a strike out ended the rally.

Watson led the Bear hitting with two, while Bryan Swain and Galen Braddy each had triples to lead the Bath hitting.

Jim Floors singled in Massengill and Mills, then stole second. Riley singled in Henry and J. Floors, and later stole second and went to third when the throw from the catcher went into centerfield. Poole followed with a single before

Moral Issues Raised In Lottery, Child Porn Bills

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Morality sparked debate Tuesday as state Senate committees grappled with bills to start a lottery and to curb child pornography in a state one senator said had become the nation's "smut capital."

Sen. Richard Barnes, D-Forsyth, who introduced a bill seeking a lottery study, told the Senate Rules Committee the state could draw $100 million a year from the games. The committee decided to draft bills to establish a lottery, but the panel will wait for a public hearing before deciding whether to call for a popular referendum or General Assembly action to set up the games.

The Senate Judiciary III Committee approved a bill that would make violating the state's child pornography laws a felony punishable by up to 10 years in prison.

Sen. Robert Warren, D-Johnston, co-chairman of a legislative study committee on obscenity laws and sponsor of the bill, said the bill was modeled on a New York law upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court. But the bill, which would prohibit those under age 16 from performing or simulating sexual acts in movies, slides or photographs as well as promoting such activities, drew some criticism.

And practically took a back seat to morality in some discussions.

"Anyone sitting on the committee and seeing what we saw would be for it (the child pornography bill)," said Warren after hearing arguments that the bill would outlaw sex education films and some popular movies while leaving other "hard-core" pornography untouched.

We (the study committee) were shown evidence that North Carolina has developed into the smut capital of the United States. If a few inequities result from tougher legislation, it's a price worth paying.

In discussing the lottery, Sens. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland, and Vernon White, D-Pitt, opposed legalizing gambling regardless of the financial benefits.

"They'll want to legalize prostitution next," Harris said. "I'd rather go to a 1-cent sales tax increase."

"This borders on public gambling and I'm really opposed to that," said White. "I think moral issues outweigh issues of finance sometimes."

Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, who chaired a subcommittee studying the lottery concept, said the panel found "a surprising lack of negative things" about lotteries.

Barnes said the first drawing of a state lottery would come about six months after the law was passed to authorize it.

In other legislative action:
Computer Commission

A State Government subcommittee approved an amended version of a much maligned bill to create a state computer commission.

After weeks of debate sparked when some members of the Council of State objected to being left out of the proposed commission, the panel approved a compromise that includes all council members. The compromise was suggested by Gov. Jim Hunt last week and was endorsed by Administration Secretary Jane Patterson.

The bill first called for commission membership by the secretary of state, state budget officer, state auditor, state treasurer, and secretary of administration. All but the secretary of administration are on the Council of State. The amended bill adds the governor, lieutenant governor, insurance commissioner, labor commissioner, agriculture commissioner, attorney general and superintendent of public schools.

Session Length

Members of a Senate subcommittee asked a staff attorney to draft possible legislation to limit the length of legislative sessions and revise the General Assembly's committee framework.

Although no vote was taken, panel members generally agreed that limiting sessions by statute was preferable to such alternatives as cutting sessions by constitutional amendment, doing nothing, or asking that a legislative committee do a time-consuming study of the issue.

"We have the tools to take up this issue right now," said Sen. Gerry Hancock, D-Durham. "I think we have a responsibility to come forward with a comprehensive proposal as soon as possible."

Sen. Ken Harris, R-Mecklenburg, said he liked the idea of a constitutional amendment because it would require approval by the state's voters.

Hancock, however, said he didn't think the session length issue was of much concern to most voters.

"This is a problem you almost have to be here to understand," he said. "This is something we should deal with ourselves."

Resolutions

The Senate Rules Committee passed resolutions asking Congress to oppose the sale of National Forest Service land in North Carolina and the dumping of outdated nuclear submarines off the coast.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has asked for the authority to sell up to 6 million acres of federally owned forests, including up to 71,000 acres in North Carolina.

The U.S. Navy has proposed the dumping of hundreds of spent submarines in deep waters off North Carolina and California.

Sen. Melvin Daniels, D-Pasquotank, who sponsored the submarine resolution, said the dumping could result in radioactive contamination of a "choice sailfishing area."

He said the plan could also hurt tourism and might turn the state's coastal waters into a dumping ground for other wastes.

"Can you imagine, once word gets out that we have nuclear waste off the coast, what that would do to beach resorts of North Carolina?" he said, adding, "This would be an easy out for other nuclear wastes."

Teachers

A bill to establish an exchange program between college professors and public school teachers prompted lively debate in the House Education Committee. But the panel took no action on the bill.

Rep. Howard Chapin, D-Beaufort, said his bill was aimed at developing a "partnership between public schools and higher education" and to give teachers a chance to better understand each other's jobs.

He said state officials had promised to develop a similar program but have made no progress on the exchange or related teacher quality assurance program, something he said his bill could help also.

University and public school officials requested time to present information about their efforts. Bob Boyd, an assistant state superintendent for instructional services, said the state has made progress in developing an exchange program.

"There are things that need to be worked out before we pass legislation," he said.

Rep. David Diamond, D-Surry, recommended that the exchange be one way — with college professors going to public schools only. He also suggested that all college campuses be required to participate.

McCain

The joint House-Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Human Resources delayed a vote on whether to turn McCain Hospital for tuberculosis patients into a prison medical facility.

Instead, the panel agreed to hear comment next week from residents near the Hoke County hospital and from employees at the hospital.

Rep. Sidney Locks, D-Robeson, said his constituents "take exception to some of the statistics reported." He said those statistics, which showed a declining patient population at the facility, were the basis of the decision to convert the hospital.

"They are asking that the state develop a more comprehensive chest specialty hospital," he said. "I think there is enough money (to do that) if it is a priority. But it is not. It is the department (of human resources) philosophy that the disease can be treated more easily by community hospitals."

The Legislature has considered closing the hospital for years because of rising medical costs and a dwindling number of patients. Most TB patients now are treated at local health clinics.

Cites Cause Of Problems

MOUNT AIRY, N.C. (AP)

— Government is the cause of America's problems, not the solution, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., told an audience in Mount Airy Tuesday night.

Helms spoke to about 135 people at the Mount Airy Elks Lodge during a dinner meeting sponsored by the Congressional Action Committee of the Mount Airy Chamber of Commerce.

The solutions to America's problems lie in a strong free enterprise system and congressmen willing to stand up for their convictions and vote for a balanced budget, Helms said.

Helms said he has seen fellow congressmen repeatedly support bills that they know will do calculable harm to America because the congressmen are yielding to political pressure.

One such example, he said, was the recent jobs bill passed by Congress.

"It's a boondoggle — something that is no more than cosmetic at best," Helms said. "Government can't create jobs, but private enterprise will if you let them alone."

To function, the senator said, industries must have interest rates low enough to entice them to begin putting people back to work. Low interest rates hinge on the government's continued effort to restrain spending, he added.

President Reagan has made strides in that direction but has been criticized unfairly by the media for his efforts, Helms said. The media are part of the country's problems, he said.

New President Of Lenoir Rhyne

HICKORY, N.C. (AP)

— Lenoir Rhyne College's Board of Trustees has elected Dr. Edgar B. Schick as the college's ninth president.

Schick, 48, will assume his duties July 1.

Schick, a Philadelphia native, is currently president of Nasson College in Springvale, Md. He replaces Dr. Albert Anderson, who resigned January 1 to become vice president for institutional advancement at Luther College in Decorah, Iowa.

Budget Cuts

An official of the state attorney general's office told a legislative committee that cutting 3 percent of the Justice Department's budget would require eliminating up to 44 jobs.

John Elmore told the Joint House-Senate Appropriations Base Budget Committee that the only other area where the budget could be cut was in automobile purchases for law enforcement officers, which he said would save $150,000 — less than 1 percent of the department's budget.

Each of the base budget committees has been told to identify 3 percent to cut in case the state's revenue collections fall short of what's anticipated.

Felonies

The House Judiciary I Committee postponed action on a bill that would allow murder prosecutions for deaths caused during burglaries, even in the absence of a weapon.

Such deaths currently are treated as manslaughter, which is punishable by up to 20 years in prison. The bill, which would allow a death sentence or life in prison, caused concern among committee members.

Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, said juveniles might be sentenced to death under the bill.

"I don't think we want to put everybody to death," he said. "We're taking the gas chamber into potentially every death that involves a theft of anything."

But David MacFadden, a district attorney supporting the bill, said it would extend state law only slightly.

Rep. George Robinson, R-Caldwell, said the committee was losing sight of the victim.

"We haven't thought about the person who lost a life because he happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time," he said. "The fellow who is a victim has some rights."

Rep. Frank Redding, R-Randolph, who introduced the bill, said it was designed to deter burglars from using any sort of physical force.

But Rep. Parks Helms, D-Mecklenburg, said the bill needed more study.

"I really question whether or not this in fact will have that

Judges

Committee work bogged down on a bill to implement an already approved constitutional amendment allowing retired state Supreme Court justices to return to temporary service on the state Court of Appeals.

Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, said he was worried that the bill could be used to enlarge the seven-member Court of Appeals. He said there might be 12 judges of whom seven would vote on a case at random.

But bill sponsor Rep. Parks Helms, D-Mecklenburg, disagreed. He said the bill recognizes the backlog of appeals cases and the reserve of talent in retired judges. He said the bill limits recall of those judges.

The bill before the House Courts and Administration of Justice Committee would allow judges to serve as a voting member of the court or as an assistant to the court to speed up the appeals process.

New Bills

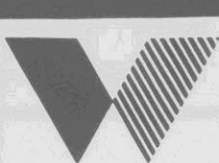

A bill was introduced in the House to mandate restitution for worthless checks and to let community service work be considered as restitution.

A bill was introduced in the Senate to set up an energy compact in the South to promote conservation.

Annual Service Award Is Presented Dr. Haar

Longtime children's doctor Dr. Fred Haar of Greenville was presented the Pitt Memorial Hospital Foundation's annual service award Tuesday night at a banquet where he was cited for 40 years of service to eastern North Carolina.

Kenneth Dews, who presented the award, characterized Haar as "a dedicated pediatrician who has committed his life and energy to caring for the children of eastern North Carolina." Dews noted that, in 1945-46, Haar was the only pediatrician in eastern North Carolina.

Haar was one of the charter members of Pitt Memorial Hospital medical staff when the hospital opened in 1951 and has served on the staff of that hospital and its successor, Pitt County Memorial Hospital, continuously since.

The award was presented at the second annual fund-raising banquet of the Pitt Memorial Hospital Foundation Inc., a non-profit, tax-exempt corporation established in 1980 to raise, receive and allocate gifts for the benefit and growth of the hospital. The foundation is governed by a board of directors from the community.

Wilton Duke of Farmville is the current chairman. Money raised from the sale of tickets for the $35-per-plate affair will go into the endowment fund of the foundation, the interest on which is used to provide gifts for the hospital.

Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green, principal speaker for the 1983 banquet, thanked local residents, especially Dr. Ed Monroe, senior associate dean of the East Carolina University School of Medicine, for "showing me the wisdom of supporting the ECU medical school and its affiliation with this fine hospital."

Music was provided by the East Carolina Chamber Choir and Collegium directed by Dr. Charles Moore.

Fine, Prison In Embezzlement

WILMINGTON — Jean Harrell Webb of Farmville, a former teller at First Union National Bank in Farmville, has been sentenced to three years in prison and fined $5,000 after pleading guilty to embezzlement charges, authorities said.

Robert Pence, FBI special agent-in-charge for North Carolina, said Mrs. Webb, 47, was sentenced Monday in U.S. District Court in Wilmington. The federal indictment to which she pleaded guilty charged that she embezzled $96,000 from First Union National Bank, formerly Bank of Farmville, over a 10- to 15-year period. Her bond was set at $25,000 and she was told to report to a federal correctional facility to begin serving her sentence in two weeks.

Mrs. Webb had been an employee of the Farmville bank since 1957. She was dismissed from her employment there Oct. 20, 1982.

Pollutants At Top Of World

By JENNIFER PARMELEE
Associated Press Writer
BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Scientists have discovered that a dense haze of pollution hanging over the North Pole is larger than previously thought and could raise temperatures enough to change the world's climate.

Researchers fear that the gray haze, which builds up every winter, will hold too much heat in the atmosphere and may begin to melt the arctic ice.

"They are concerned that if the climate in the arctic warms up, that could theoretically affect the latitude climates, the mid-latitudes where we live," Bill Brennan, spokesman for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, said Tuesday.

Brennan said that pollutants such as soot absorb radiation from the sun, effectively retaining heat. In addition, the particles darken the snow and the cloud cover, which means both reflect less and absorb more radiation and heat.

"We found the haze layers are much more numerous than we anticipated and the intensity of the pollution is much larger than was expected," NOAA principal investigator Russell Schnell reported after the group sampled air above the North Pole on Monday. "And the pollution was spread over much larger areas than I had originally thought it would be."

Scientists flying through the haze to measure it have been surprised to find it extending as high as 18,000 feet, Schnell said.

The haze was first reported by pilots in the 1950s, but only in the last few years has it been identified as being of man-made origin.

Before the current study, which employed about 25 scientists from various agencies such as the Boulder-based NOAA, scientists had to rely on information from a network of ground stations scattered around the Arctic Circle from Alaska to Norway.

"There was uncertainty as to whether what they were seeing was accurate or not," Brennan said. "They didn't know the extent of the haze and their instruments didn't tell them what the pollutants were."

NOAA also has scientists testing the air at the South Pole, but Brennan said they were monitoring carbon dioxide content.

The arctic research team found that the two primary components of the winter haze were PCE (perchloroethylene), a chemical commonly used in dry cleaning solutions, and hydrocarbons from fossil fuels such as coal, oil and petroleum products.

The pollutants appear to have carried there from as far as Europe and northern Asia, the scientists said.

A Navy-sponsored research project theorized last December that the pollution came from the central Soviet Union where the economy is heavily based on coal use and steel production.

"Huge quantities of pollution aerosol are released in the central Soviet Union," said Kenneth A. Rahn of the University of Rhode Island and Glenn E. Shaw of the University of Alaska. "Furthermore ... there is a very efficient transport path (air flow) from this region."

Precise measurements of the pollutants were not available, but Brennan did observe that videotapes of the haze showed it was "not as dark as a Denver brown cloud (of smog)."

The study, which began March 10 and is scheduled to finish April 10, moves now to the glacial northern regions of Norway, Brennan said.

Also participating in the study are the National Center for Atmospheric Research, the Desert Research Institute, the Naval Postgraduate School, the Department of Energy and several colleges.

Won't Hear Role of Dog

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Blitzen, a police dog whose nose was "pretty much the case" in a murder trial, won't have his day in court after all.

After a three-week hearing on the legality of using evidence obtained by a dog's ability to distinguish odors, Superior Court Judge Jacqueline Taber ruled a jury may not hear how Blitzen helped link Earl McMullen to the 1979 slaying of his neighbor.

Prosecutor Michael Cardoza said after the ruling Monday that the decision "blows out 80 percent of our evidence. The dog was pretty much the case."

Blitzen, a German shepherd that died last year, was summoned in 1979 to help San Leandro police solve the slaying of 68-year-old Arthur Parke, who was stabbed at his trailer park home.

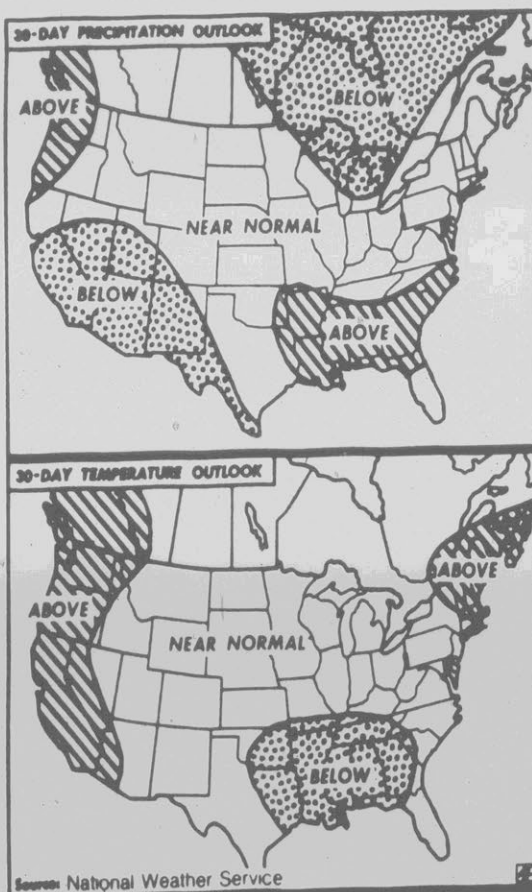

Police found a bloody glove outside Parke's trailer and thought it might belong to McMullen, who had reported the stabbing. The officers let Blitzen smell the glove, then led the dog to a lineup of five shoes, including one belonging to McMullen.

Filing Suit...

so they have a fair forum. It would be much easier for us to be in Pitt County," Campbell said, but holding the trial in Pitt County would not be "as fair to the city of Greenville."

Campbell said the suit is being filed after "19 months of negotiations with the city."

Prepared For 'Tonight' Show

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Heeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeee's Bobby.

Don't expect Ed McMahon to make that big a fuss tonight when comedian Bobby Kelton makes his 14th appearance on the "Tonight" show.

Kelton, a college journalism major now living in Los Angeles, has been refining his act for the past eight years at Las Vegas hotels, big-city clubs, college campuses and on the talk-show circuit. He says the Johnny Carson showcase is special.

"So much so that my six minutes have to be just right. If they called, and I wasn't ready with new material, I would turn down a chance to go on," Kelton says. "But, for those other talk shows, I wouldn't worry if I didn't have a perfect routine. Carson is what Ed Sullivan used to be."

Last December, Jim McCawley, talent coordinator for NBC's "Tonight" show, asked Kelton about making another appearance. The next month, they discussed the comedian's new act. "His job is to screen the material," says Kelton. "He knows Johnny's sense of humor."

Kelton says Carson wants comics to steer clear of ethnic stereotypes, dirty jokes and stale subjects, like restaurant routines. "Everybody has one," he says.

Recently, Kelton has been polishing his latest lines before kids, hecklers and hardened comedy addicts at "The Comedy Store" and "The Improvisation" in Los Angeles. McCawley caught one show and called him last week to say the March 30 show had an opening. As always, Kelton hopes this will be the break that leads to stardom. He's been taking acting classes, and says he almost landed several TV pilot parts. He's more ready for a sitcom now than he was in 1978, when he had his first crack at "Tonight."

He knows the date by heart — "July 27."

"I got a big applause, and Johnny called me back from behind the curtain," Kelton says. "The next morning, all three networks called and wanted to sign me to a one-year holding deal. That's when they give you a lot of money, and don't use you at all."

Fred Silverman had just come to NBC as president, and the network was looking for fresh talent. Kelton signed a $40,000 contract with NBC. The phone never rang. "It was like the old 'Millionaire' show. They gave me money, and I never saw them again."

Kelton says the networks are looking for instant sensations, like when NBC found Freddie Prinze. "It's clear I'm not going to be an overnight star," he says. "You're only brand-new once."

Since "Tonight" has been cut to 60 minutes, there's been no time to sit and chat semispontaneously with Carson, like Kelton did on his fourth appearance — "Nov. 16, 1978." The "status" order on "Tonight" is getting on the show, sitting on the couch, then leaving early, a la Bob Hope. "I don't know why an old lady parachutist sits down but a comedian who makes people laugh can't," says Kelton.

Tonight, Michael Landon not only will sit down, he's already telegraphed his conversation. Besides plugging his upcoming movie, he's going to rap a magazine for an uncomplimentary article.

If Landon is rolling, Kelton may be pre-empted. "Bumping is a fact of life on talk shows," he says.

"Tonight" is taped the day of the broadcast, which means producers and talent scouts alerted to Kelton's scheduled appearance may stay up for nothing.

The syndicated talk shows, like "Merv Griffin," are taped far in advance. A performer getting bumped still receives the standard $500 fee and a rescheduled appearance. But the difference is that there's still plenty of time to spread around the new date, so being bumped doesn't hurt as much.

"Laurence Olivier was on 'Merv Griffin.' It was his first talk show," remembers Kelton. "He was running long, and I was in the green room cheering 'Attaboy Larry. Keep it going. Keep talking.'"

LONDON (AP) — Singing star Dolly Parton, who has canceled two U.S. concerts after receiving death threats, got a standing ovation from British fans when she went ahead with a show interrupted by a bomb scare.

Her performance was delayed by telephoned bomb threat, and about 2,000 fans were evacuated from the theater. But a search by police explosives experts came up empty and the show resumed Tuesday night after a 90-minute delay.

Miss Parton was given a standing ovation when she marched down the center aisle to go on stage.

The anonymous call stopped the concert shortly before the bouncy, buxom 37-year-old country and western star was due to start her performance.

The opening performer, Canadian singer Bruce Murray, already had sung several songs when a voice announced over the sound system: "Ladies and gentlemen. The Dominion Theater has received an anonymous call."

The concertgoers streamed in orderly fashion from the theater in London's West End and were directed to assembly points along Tottenham Court Road by scores of police officers. Miss Parton went to a nearby hotel.

Scotland Yard bomb squad officers with dogs trained to sniff out explosives combed the theater and when they gave the all-clear signal, the audience filed back in.

When the show resumed, Miss Parton told the audience: "We have wonderful fans here and you proved it tonight."

She added jokingly, "I appreciate it, because I need the money."

The concert, which was being taped by the U.S. cable television company Home Box Office, was the last of three that she has given in London, to rave reviews.

Peter Holt, music critic of the evening Standard newspaper, said Tuesday that she "belled out numbers like 'Jolene' and horribly sentimental ditties about little girls and 'puppy dawgs' that had even the toughest Walthamstow (north London) cowboys sobbing into their neckerchiefs."

Miss Parton's distinctive figure, gigantic wigs and outrageous humor won extensive coverage in the popular press.

"I like being a sex symbol," the Daily Mirror quoted her as saying. "If I'd been born a man, I'd probably have been a drag queen. I just love dressing up in fine clothes, frothy wigs and nice jewelry."

But the weekly News of the World said Miss Parton's image could be misleading. "Strip away the cartoon veneer and there is a brain beneath the wig and a heart behind the bra-defying cleavage," it said.

Bel Geddes Out Of Hospital

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Barbara Bel Geddes is out of the hospital after heart surgery, but there's no word when she'll be back as the powerful matriarch on television's "Dallas."

Miss Bel Geddes, 60, was released Tuesday from Cedars-Sinai Medical Center where she underwent a quadruple heart bypass two weeks ago.

She entered the hospital for tests March 12 after complaining of chest pains, and three days later suffered a major heart attack.

"She was in good condition and in good spirits when she was released," said hospital spokeswoman Virginia Bohannon.

At Lorimar Productions, the producer of "Dallas," spokesman Bob Crutchfield said taping for the season ended March 8 and is not expected to resume until late May. He said he does not know when Miss Bel Geddes will be back to work.

It is all very well to make close doubles. But you had better have the defensive skills of 1966 World Open Pairs champions Hans Kreyns and Bob Slavenburg if you want to avoid bankruptcy as a result.

Slavenburg's double of two clubs was tactical—he wanted to drive the enemy to two hearts. But after he accomplished his mission, he and his partner had to defend brilliantly to achieve a plus score.

West led a spade. East won the king and correctly shifted to a trump to cut down club ruffs in dummy. Declarer played the king and West won the ace. Now if West does not remove dummy's last trump, declarer will get home. He will finesse the jack of diamonds, then use the diamond entry to dummy to take the club finesse. After cashing the ace of clubs, declarer can then ruff a club to set up the suit and land the contract.

But it would not do to return any trump. If West returns a low trump, declarer will have two entries to dummy for two club finesses, which will allow the contract to succeed in a different way. West solved the problem by returning the jack of trumps!

Declarer finessed the jack of diamonds. East won the ace and applied the last nail to declarer's coffin. He exited with a diamond. Declarer was in dummy and he could take one club finesse. But he still had to give up a club to East. When East won the king, he continued with the ten of diamonds, and now the defenders were guaranteed two more tricks for a one-trick set no matter what declarer did.

Helping Others To Grow Food

BURLINGTON, Vt. (UPI) — A steelworkers union local in Chester, Ind., is fighting unemployment by helping its out-of-work members grow their own food.

A recent survey by Gardens for All found the United Steelworkers Union Local 6787 was planning to expand its unemployment committee's gardening program to several new neighborhood sites.

Jack Robinson, president of the Burlington-based national membership association for home gardening, says his group is starting to work with unions and unemployment networks to help out-of-work members grow at least some of their own food.

GFA itself is offering free six-month extensions of subscriptions to its monthly newsletter to current subscribers who have lost their jobs.

"We feel when times are hard, gardening is more important than ever," the GFA announcement says.

The Victims

Despite the war that has been raging there for more than 40 months, life for the people of El Salvador goes on. At age 14, Eduardo Flores has lost his mother and his home. And yet, in the refugee camp where he lives, he shares what he has and teaches others to read and write. Meanwhile, Salvadoran troops continue to fight an army of leftist rebels, and the U.S. Congress continues to debate President Reagan's request for more than $100 million in additional military aid to El Salvador's government. For refugees like Eduardo, the future is bleak. And yet he has a plan for his own life. "I want to study more so I can explain things to people," he says. Charge 5th Person In Will 'Forgeries'

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — A Durham waitress has been charged with forging the will of a man who suffered an apparent heart attack and died at her lunch counter.

Debbie L. Rigsbee is charged with forging the will of Ernest R. Castleberry Sr., who died at the lunch counter Dec. 23, according to police.

Four other people have been charged in connection with the suspected forgeries of Castleberry and John A. Robertson of Raleigh.

Ms. Rigsbee was employed at the Woolworth's lunch counter in Durham where Castleberry, a frequent customer, was suddenly stricken.

Since he was buried, Castleberry's body has been exhumed, and an autopsy is being conducted this week.

Sgt. W.T. Martin of the Durham Public Safety Department said police do not believe there was any foul play in his death. He said Ms. Rigsbee's signature appears on Castleberry's will as a witness.

Among those charged with forgery or conspiracy are Hazel J. Castleberry and her husband, Robert J. Castleberry, a former justice of the peace. Robert Castleberry was Ernest Castleberry Sr.'s brother.

Also charged are Barbara B. Hansen of Raleigh, who was a witness to the Castleberry and Robertson wills, and Dinah Clinging of Raleigh, a nurse at Rex Hospital where Robertson was treated.

Defeated UMW Prexy Is Waiting For A Coal Job

By ESTES THOMPSON
Associated Press Writer
EXETER, Va. (AP) — He's turned the land with the help of a pony named Cindy and cleared a small garden. But there's not much else to do so Sam Church Jr., just sits at home, waits for a job and plans a comeback in local union politics.

The former president of the United Mine Workers is out of work and waiting for an opening at the Westmoreland Coal Co.

"It's nice up here, quiet, nobody bothers me," Church said recently as he sat in his living room. His son, Nathaniel, who will be 2 in May and is nicknamed "Bink," sat in his father's lap and eyed Church's pouch of chewing tobacco.

On the paneled walls are photographs of Church and President Reagan, former President Carter, Democratic presidential hopeful Walter Mondale, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., and Coretta King.

Church, 46, and his wife Patti, 27, moved back to Wise County after Church lost to Rich Trumka in the Nov. 9 election for president of the 160,000-member miners' union.

The former vice president of the UMW, Church became president in 1979 when Arnold Miller retired. His term expired last year, one year after Church led the union through a stormy 72-day strike.

Church's house sits in a hollow near the mining village of Exeter. A creek runs a few yards behind the house, and a pet goat wanders the yard.

Church bought the goat as a joke, his wife said, because he told people he would become a goat farmer after losing the election.

He's home again in a place where he knows the people and their work and has the support of friends. He says he is living on his savings and trying to sell his house in northern Virginia.

In the days after his defeat by Trumka, Church reviewed his options and decided to come home. He said he turned down an offer from Kentucky Gov. John Y. Brown to become the state's labor commissioner and never considered working for a coal company as some other union officials did.

He has applied for his old job as a mine electrician at Westmoreland, one of the few coal companies in southwest Virginia still working a regular week. He said he'll probably earn about $35,000 a year if he gets the job back.

"I'm a miner," Church said. "There were a lot of ex-officials of the union who went into management. To me, I would be taking the knowledge and experience I've gained working for the membership of this union and use it against them."

"The worker is who I cast my lot with," he said. "I could have gotten a pretty nice job with some of these coal companies if I'd wanted that. But I would have been a turncoat."

Church is also trying to get back into union politics. He is one of three men running for the post of union field representative in Wise and Lee counties in UMW District 28, the same job that brought him out of Westmoreland's mines and launched his union career more than nine years ago. The election will be held in May.

If he wins, Church said, he wants to start reorganizing several dormant local union chapters.

Is Church interested in reclaiming the union ladder?

"I'm so satisfied just being home, I don't think I'd ever pursue that again," Church said. "All my friends are here and I know everybody down here. I'm satisfied to stay right here in District 28 to be quite frank."

But he said the experience of being the union's chief officer will help him in the field representative's job because "I know where to look for what I need."

The burly Church said he is not bitter about losing to Trumka.

"The membership wanted a change," he said.

Trumka did what Church wanted to do when he trimmed staff and expenses at the union's Washington headquarters, Church said.

"I was afraid it would be looked on as politics," he said. The recession and coal mine layoffs resulted in reduced dues payments and forced the savings.

But the former president is not ready to comment on his successor's performance.

"He hasn't had time to do anything," Church said. "You have to give him a chance, give him time. The union comes first. Next year is the contract negotiation. It's going to be tough. We really have to support the leadership. If we don't, we might find ourselves in the position of some of the other unions — everybody wants a concession."

But Church is watching Trumka and said, "If I thought something wasn't proper for the union, I'd be critical."

Asks Fence Law For Stallions

SURREY, British Columbia (AP) — An amorous palomino stallion is becoming just too good a neighbor for some standardbred mares, says a horse breeder, who wants a law requiring fences to solve the problem.

Red McIlwaine, a director of the B.C. Horse Owners' Association, tells of a case about a month ago where the palomino jumped one fence, trotted about a mile and a half, leaped over another, and impregnated two standardbred mares.

Saying the problem is not unusual, McIlwaine wants the Surrey council to adopt a bylaw making it mandatory to install a six-foot fence around areas where stallions are kept.

A palomino is a golden-colored horse with light-colored mane and tail. Standardbreds are a breed used in harness racing. And McIlwaine said they don't make a very good mix.

Doctor Retains Two-Dollar Fee

By J.L. SCHMIDT
Associated Press Writer
RUSHVILLE, Ill. (AP) — When Dr. Russell Dohner hung his shingle on the town square here in 1955, an office call cost $2.

It still does. "That was the going rate when I opened my office," said the 58-year-old Dohner, an affable general practitioner and one of three physicians in this south-central Illinois community.

"For a time, I didn't think about it at all. Then I finally decided not to change it. There's no real philosophy behind it. I don't consider it unusual at all," he said.

The going rate in nearby communities is $15.

"It wasn't a gimmick," Dohner said. "I didn't intend to attract attention. I thought it would let people have medical care at a reasonable cost."

Dohner, who is also chief of staff at Culbertson Memorial Hospital, still makes house calls, "when I can work them into my schedule."

His typical day starts and ends with hospital visits. Office hours at his red brick building on the north side of the square are 10 a.m. to noon and 2 to 5 p.m. — except Thursdays. His sister, Clarice, two registered nurses and two office workers assist.

Don't look for the quiet doctor's smiling face on the nearby golf course. He's usually too busy with patients scattered around the community of 3,000, many too ill to come to his office.

"I think the personal touch of medicine is being lost. That's why I doctor whenever and wherever," he said.

A native of the nearby Fulton County community of Vermont, Dohner, who is not married, said he had wanted to be a doctor "for as long as I can remember, probably because I liked the old family doctor in the town where I grew up. I appreciated what he did for people."

Dohner graduated from Western Illinois University in Macomb in 1949 and attended medical school at Northwestern University in Chicago. He served a one-year residency and another year working on cardiovascular research at St. Luke's Hospital (now Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's) in Chicago.

Then, lured by the Culbertson hospital expansion, he moved back to Rushville. He has been chief of staff at the hospital, located about halfway between his two-story white frame house and his office, for 15 years.

"I haven't kept track of the number of babies I've delivered, or the number of patients I've had," he said. "I'm not a surgeon, but I've assisted in some operations."

"It's more of a personal thing with me. I'm not in it for the numbers or the glory," he said.

Builders Saved On Home Costs

EMMAUS, Pa. (UPI) — In a national survey, do-it-yourself homebuilders say they saved about 38 percent by building instead of buying. Their average cost was $37,583 for the house alone, or $54,956, including land costs.

On average, the respondents added, their finished homes were worth just over $88,000.

The study by Rodale's New Shelter magazine was based on questionnaires sent to 2,000 graduates of owner-builder schools.

Other findings included: —Almost 100 percent used wood as a primary or secondary heat source and about two-thirds used solar energy as a primary or back-up heat source.

—The average age of owner-builders was 30 to 40, and their median income, about $26,000, compared with the national household median of $22,300.

Fifty-five percent said they held full-time jobs while building their homes. Almost half said their spouses also had full-time jobs during the period.

Few Attorneys Advertising

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A year after the U.S. Supreme Court lifted nearly all advertising restrictions on lawyers, few North Carolina attorneys are advertising their services, state Bar Association officials say.

The American Bar Association has estimated that 7 percent of the nation's lawyers advertise through channels other than telephone book Yellow Pages or directories of attorneys.

Bobby James, executive director of the N.C. Bar Association in Raleigh, estimated as few as 1 to 2 percent of the state's 10,000 lawyers advertise regularly.

The British Still Coming To America

By MARLENE AIG
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — A British businessman has a message for the United States: 200 years after the revolution, the Redcoats are gone but the British are still coming.

This time, though, they're bearing investment dollars instead of muskets, and the businessman has organized an arts festival to make Americans more aware of Britain's role in U.S. commerce.

"It's time we got over celebrating people in funny hats shooting inadequate weapons at each other," says David Lloyd-Jacob. His arts festival, which is scheduled to begin next month, will celebrate the bicentennial of the 1783 Treaty of Paris, the pact that ended the Revolutionary War and recognized the former colonies' independence.

"These two great countries have misconceptions about each other," says Lloyd-Jacob, a 45-year-old venture capitalist who became a permanent resident of the United States in 1974.

"Americans think of Britain as belonging to the last century, not to this century or the next century. And the British view America with admiration and distrust, sort of as an invention worth more than its development, much in the way the U.S. views Japan."

Lloyd-Jacob says Americans don't realize the extent of British investment in this country, and that's something he wants to spell out with his festival.

With the Prince of Wales and First lady Nancy Reagan as patrons, the festival is set to kick off April 14 and continue through November with over 200 events, including art exhibits, crew races and Scottish field games as well as performances by the Royal Shakespeare Company, Royal Ballet and the London Symphony Orchestra.

Among the art exhibits planned are Faberge jewelry from the collection of Queen Elizabeth II and displays from the works of Holbein, John Constable, Henry Moore and Winston Churchill.

Television and film reviews as well as academic symposia also are on the agenda through New York City's five boroughs.

"We have many small events all over the city, not just one thing," says Lloyd-Jacob. "Essentially, we're not big bang people."

New York City was chosen as the site of the festival because, "To Britons, New York exemplifies the United States. It was always the port of entry."

Lloyd-Jacob is quick to point out the city remained in British hands throughout the Revolution. "So we're also celebrating New York's bicentennial of independence."

He says he started thinking about the festival three years ago and turned to the many Britons living in New York for help because "most of the Britons in America are in New York, and the British in New York are clubby here."

The bulk of the almost $4 million raised so far came from the private sector, with some assistance from the British Council and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Most of the businesses involved are active on both sides of the Atlantic, he says.

Life-Saving Prime Coast Guard Role

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —
The Coast Guard is spending too much of its time and money on "convenience" rescues of pleasure boaters and should concentrate on actual lifesaving, a new study recommends.

The report by the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere says a quarter of the Coast Guard's personnel and money goes to search and rescue and 80 percent of that work involved non-emergency situations.

boaters with disabled motors or having other problems are up 55 percent over the last decade, the report said.

The panel urged that non-emergency rescues be given a low priority, other than in times and places where no other help is available. Otherwise, rescues should be handled by private firms or local groups such as police, Coast Guard Auxiliary or U.S. Navy units.

To help fill in the gap, it suggested setting up a new licensing system for operators of vessels under 26 feet which would engage in towing for a fee.

In addition, the panel said that in rescues where no lives are at stake the service should charge for its services. And, it added, the rate should recover the full cost of the rescue, including fuel and crew time.

The report also urged that the Coast Guard:

—Begin charging a user fee for rescues involving only property, not lives.

—Institute fees for domestic icebreaking activities done to aid individual commercial vessels.

—Transfer to private contractors, on a test basis, the placing of some aids to navigation, and study the possibility of transferring river navigation activities to the Army Corps of Engineers.

—Give the states responsibility for recreational boating safety, along with the money from motorboat fuel taxes.

The recommendations, still awaiting final printing, will be sent to President Reagan and Congress for consideration. The Coast Guard made no immediate response to the proposals.

The panel did note that during its study it received a presentation from Coast Guard Commandant Adm.
James S. Gracey in which he said, "We ain't busted, so don't fix us. Just give us more fuel."

The committee said it might be inclined to endorse this approach in an ideal world, but "in this real world of increasingly limited resources, however, we conclude that although a major overhaul or reorganization of the Coast Guard is not warranted, a few significant changes are."

Established in 1971, the advisory committee represents business, industry, academic, research and other groups interested in maritime and atmospheric activities. Its members are appointed by the president.

The committee said the general military character of the Coast Guard is beneficial, but it opposed suggestions that the service be made part of the Defense Department. Once a Treasury Department agency, the Coast Guard is now a part of the Department of Transportation.

In general, the panel proposed little change in the Coast Guard's law enforcement activities, although it stressed that more resources should be made available for drug interception.

Kiwifruit Crop Nearly Double

SACRAMENTO, Calif.
(UPI) — The California
kiwifruit crop has almost doubled in just two years, says George Tanimoto, chairman of the California
Kiwifruit Commission.

The current harvest, which runs from October 1982 through May 1983, is estimated at almost 3 million flats, almost double the 1.5 million from the 1981 crop

For Some, The War Isn't Over

By SUSAN BENNITT MADRID, Spain (AP) — The disabled veterans of Spain's 1936-39 civil war go by two names — "the wounded gentlemen" and "the poor cripples." Their nicknames and their treatment are directly related to the side on which they fought.

The surviving "cripples" are the Loyalists who fought and lost the war to defend the republican government against Gen. Francisco Franco. They hope that after 44 years, they will at last get equal treatment under the new socialist government.

The "gentlemen" are the wounded veterans of the victorious nationalist forces who followed Franco in his uprising against the government starting July 18, 1936. They have been taken care of since the war ended in 1939.

Under an agreement signed in 1962, Spaniards — often nationalist veterans — wounded while fighting in the German "Blue Division" against the Russians on the Eastern Front in 1941-42 receive monthly pensions from the West German government.

Sectors of the army identified with the Franco era are said to be hostile to the idea of granting pensions to all republican civil war wounded. So far, Felipe Gonzalez's majority socialist government has turned a deaf ear to the demands of veterans' associations representing their cases.

The government is said to be concerned about more pressing issues like a 16 percent unemployment rate — the highest in Western Europe.

Until Franco's death in 1975, disabled Loyalist or republican veterans were not entitled to any benefits. Many were considered war criminals.

With the return to representative government in 1976, republicans were given amnesties and certain limited categories fell under a decree entitling them to pensions.

Disabled officers and soldiers who had fought for the republican side became eligible for some benefits in March 1980. More than 70 percent of the veterans died before the legislation was passed.

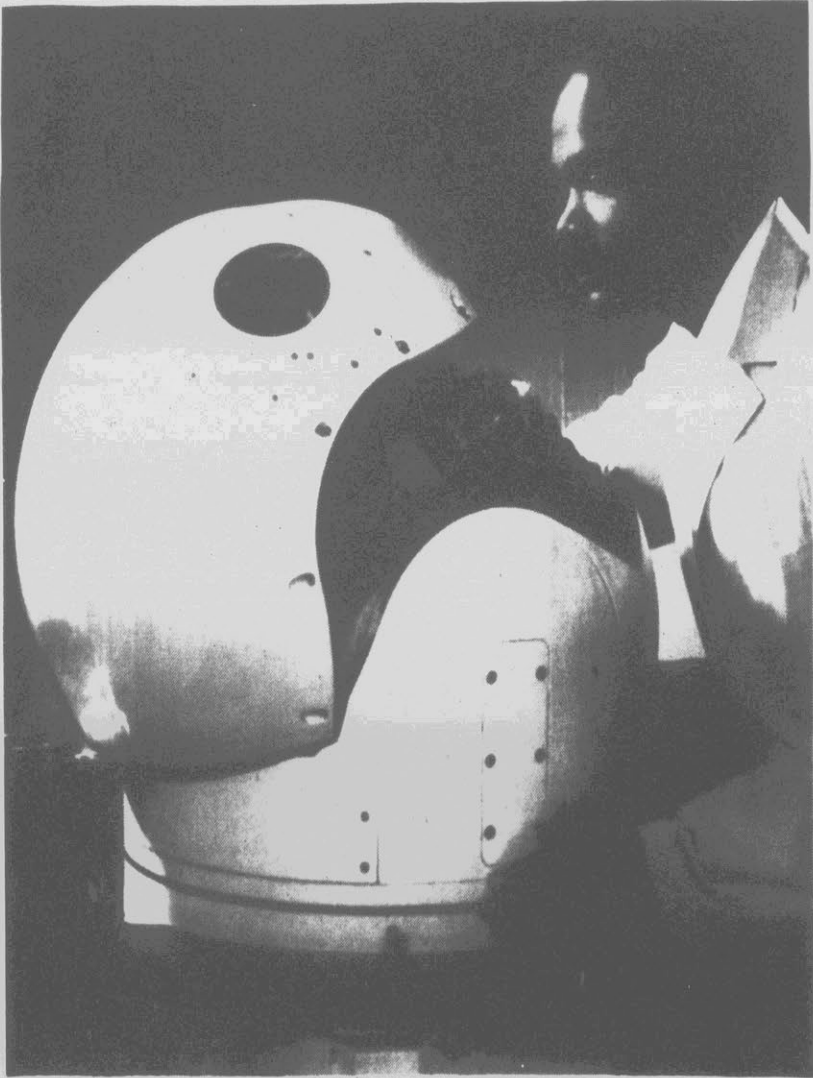

According to Francisco Dominguez, president of Madrid's League of Disabled Veterans of the Spanish War, justice will not have been done until all wounded republican veterans are granted full benefits.

Officers and soldiers who joined the republican side after the Franco uprising receive benefits that do not take into account their rank. Benefits for nationalist veterans and those republicans in the army prior to July 18, 1936 are based on rank as well as nature of injury and extent of disability.

Disabled republican veterans are not entitled to customary military benefits such as housing and clothing allowances which the nationalist disabled receive.

The average age of a surviving civil war veteran is 70 years. There are an estimated 5,000 Loyalist veterans in Spain and abroad.

The Ministry of Defense pays pensions to "the gentlemen" but will not give any figures. "There are certain things that are secrets," said spokesman Col. Jaime Bazo Rosello.

Motivator Turns To The Family

By MARCIA DUNN
Associated Press Writer
BUTLER, Pa. (AP) — For more than five years, Ken Musko has been a master of motivation for the burned-out legions of the working world: teachers, business people, nurses, police, and even clergy who felt they couldn't continue.

Now he's turned his attention to another group whose self-image has plummeted — the American family.

"People are screaming for answers. How can I motivate my employees? How can I motivate my family?" said the Butler High School teacher. "Well, I've got the answers."

Musko's unusual methods for building self-confidence — forcing participants to rappel down buildings and cliffs or be lifted 200 feet into the air by parachutes — won him educational awards, national attention and the praise of participants.

"I would make this course mandatory for all teachers, instructors and coaches in our district if I could," one teacher wrote on an evaluation form of Musko's program. "It helps us rebuild our enthusiasm for teaching."

He is convinced these methods will work for troubled families.

"I believe in it. I've seen it work in my own family," the father of three said.

To develop trust, Musko encourages spouses to blindfold their partner or children and lead them around the house. And he recommends that children fall backwards from chairs and tables into their parents' arms.

To foster cooperation, he suggests that families line up, with right feet attached to a long wooden plank and left feet tied onto another. Similar to moves made during a sack race, everyone must work together to go forward.

For families facing unemployment, he recommends overnight vacations or inexpensive restaurant meals to give hope of a better future.

And he stresses communication, physical contact and group decision-making.

"Everyone needs to feel fully appreciated. That's No. 1. When you feel appreciated, you care more," Musko said. "I can't help deal with all problems. But I can sometimes help a family from breaking up."

Musko, 38, began working with students displaying behavioral problems in the mid 1970s. He soon discovered that nearly all his pupils, as well as their parents, lacked self-esteem.

After participating in the Outward Bound survival program, Musko felt that motivation and positive thinking were the keys to dealing with his students and incorporated those theories plus some of his own into a home-operated business, Beacon Guide Motivational Programs Co.

Since then, Musko has held weekend workshops across the country and published a 68-page motivation manual entitled "Feeling Good."

Musko suffered his own brand of burn-out earlier this year after working with problem students.

"There were a lot of sleepless nights. I was overconcerned about my students. I had blurry vision, a skin disorder," he said.

To combat the problem, Musko switched to counseling vocational high school students and began devoting more of his spare time and energy to helping others.

"After putting on one of my motivation programs, I'm up for a long time afterward," he said.

Despite his push for positive thinking, Musko admits there's nothing wrong with a little sadness.

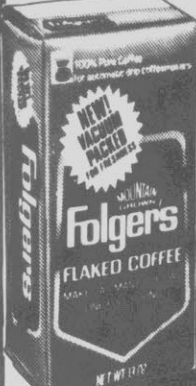

"How do you know the good times if you don't have the bad times?" he asked. "But you can learn to deal with the bad times and not be swallowed up by them."

Records Add To Savings At Tax Time

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer
A little organization can save you money as well as time when you're filling in your tax return.

For many people, the approach of April 15 means a flurry of searching through drawers and closets for necessary expense records and receipts. And if you can't find what you're looking for, you may miss deductions which can trim your tax bill.

Take sales tax, for example. If you itemize deductions, you can deduct the amount you spent on sales tax. The Internal Revenue Service provides tables to use as a general guide. If you spent more than the amount listed in the tables, you can deduct more. But you must have proof.

The record-keeping doesn't have to be complicated or expensive. A set of 12 envelopes — one for each month — is all you need for sales tax receipts. When you buy something on which you pay sales tax, put the receipt in the current month's envelope. When you're getting ready to prepare your return, simply add up each month's expenses.

If the clerk doesn't give you a receipt, ask for one. You may need it for a refund as well as for taxes. Make it a habit to check the receipts for date and amount when you put them in the appropriate envelope; it may seem like a tiresome chore at first, but it should become automatic.

Don't forget things like grocery store receipts. Food generally is not subject to sales tax, but you may pay a levy on non-food items like paper goods and the pennies add up. Meals in restaurants also are taxable in many areas; if you eat out regularly — even if you're only having a quick snack at lunch — you may be surprised at how much sales tax you pay.

Once you've learned how to keep records, you'll also have to learn how to throw them out. Too many papers can be as bad as too few.

A small file cabinet will make life easier; you should be able to find one for $40 or less that will fit into a corner.

Review records at least once a year; the best time is probably just before you get ready to file your tax return since you will have some key papers like your W-2 forms immediately available.

Divide home records into two sets — active and dead storage.

Your active file should include unpaid bills, receipts for bills you have already paid, current bank statements and cancelled checks, and any records you need for your income tax return. You should also keep employment records, credit card information, including card numbers; copies of health records, insurance policies and wills, education and Social Security information and warranties in your active file.

Things like salary statements and paycheck stubs should be kept long enough so you can check them annually against the W-2 form you get from your employer. If there is no discrepancy, throw them out.

Copies of your federal tax return — and the documentation to back up your claims — generally should be kept for three years. That's the amount of time the Internal Revenue Service has in which to audit your return. (The limit does not apply in some specialized cases. If you fail to report more than 25 percent of your gross income, for example, the government has six years to collect the tax or start legal proceedings.)

The dead storage file is the place for records that are more than three years old and this file should be cleaned out periodically to get rid of items that are no longer applicable. There is no point, for example, in keeping the warranty for the refrigerator which wore out years ago.

A family inventory, listing vital information about all members and the whereabouts of important papers, should round out your record-keeping. Action for Independent Maturity, a division of the American Association of Retired Persons, has prepared a 28-page booklet, "Your Vital Papers Logbook."

How N.C. Representatives And Senators Voted

Roll Call Report Service
WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes March 17-23.

HOUSE
BUDGET By a vote of 229 for and 196 against, the House approved a fiscal 1984 budget blueprint that sharply contrasts Democratic and GOP priorities in areas such as defense, taxation and social spending. The victory margin showed that House Democrats now can effectively challenge the president's mastery of Capitol Hill on fiscal issues.

The $863.5 billion Democratic-drafted budget projects a $174.5 billion deficit, $14.3 billion less than the president's budget envisions. It calls for $30 billion in additional tax revenue, probably through cancellation of the final year of the Administration's three-year supply-side tax cut. It cuts the president's defense request by $10 billion, and it raises spending for food stamps, welfare and many other social programs the Administration wants to cut.

The measure (H Con Res 91), which was sent to the Senate, is a master plan to guide later work on individual spending bills.

Supporter Jim Wright, D-Tex., said "the American people in opinion poll after opinion poll have indicated that...they would prefer to forego the third year of the tax cut."

Opponent Ed Bethune, R-Ark., said any member voting yes is "a 100 percent, full-blown, unadulterated practitioner of national liberal Democratic policies which mean more and more central government and more and more economic planning."

Members voting yes favored the Democratic budget.

Voting no: Tim Valentine, D-2, Charles Whitley, D-3, James Martin, R-9, James Broyhill, R-10.

Not voting: Stephen Neal, D-5.

TARGET By a vote of 132 for and 277 against, the House rebuffed Senate attempts to target less jobs money to areas of highest unemployment. The vote came during debate on HR 1718, the anti-recession bill that appropriates $4.6 billion for hurry-up public works construction and other projects aimed at creating hundreds of thousands of jobs in upcoming months.

On this vote the House stuck by its plan to target some $1.8 billion to areas situated mostly in the Midwest and Northeast. For example, the House wanted most of the $389 million earmarked for U.S. Army Corps of Engineers projects to be spent in the most destitute areas rather than in the Sunbelt.

On a later, non-record vote, the House kept much of its targeting but accepted part of the Senate plan to spread a large chunk of the jobs money evenly throughout the country. The bill, which also provided money to help certain states pay unemployment benefits, was sent to the White House.

Members voting no wanted to target a large share of the jobs outlay to areas where unemployment is highest.

NORTH CAROLINA Voting yes: Valentine, Whitley, Ike Andrews, Hefner.

Voting no: Britt, Broyhill, Clarke.

SENATE
BANKS By a vote of 54 for and 43 against, the Senate shelved an amendment to delay from next July 1 until Jan. 1 the date on which financial institutions are to begin collecting for the Treasury 10 percent of the interest and dividends paid depositors. The vote removed the issue from the Social Security rescue bill that later was passed and sent to the White House.

Opposed by millions of complaining constituents and lobbies like the American Bankers Association, the new withholding law is to be debated again by the Senate in mid-April. It is a tax-collection device aimed at raising an estimated $4 billion now lost to tax-cheaters. It would cost the average saver liquidity of about 50 cents for every $1,000 in a savings account.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kans., who voted to shelve the delay attempt, said the banking lobby "ought to lay out the facts and should not try to deceive the American people. They should not say it is a tax when it is not a tax."

Opponent John Melcher, D-Mont., said: "People feel it is harassment. People feel it is unnecessary. People feel it is just some more red tape. People do not really believe...it nets out to much revenue gain. I agree."

Senators voting no wanted to delay or repeal the withholding provision.

Voting from North Carolina were John Est, R, voted no. Jesse Helms, R, voted no.

COVERAGE The Senate rejected, 45 for and 50 against, an amendment dealing with whether new federal employees should be required to join Social Security. The amendment was opposed by federal workers' unions and other lobbies that want civil servants to keep their present generous retirement system, which is partly funded by all taxpayers.

The amendment advocated mandatory Social Security for federal workers hired after the beginning of next year. But, in a bow to civil servants, it let them defer contributions to the existing civil service retirement system until Congress has replaced the latter with a new supplemental pension system.

The supplemental system is seen as necessary to provide federal workers' with pension benefits comparable to those in the private sector. The Social Security rescue bill (HR 1900) later sent to the White House makes participation mandatory for new federal workers but is vague on the new supplemental system.

Sponsor Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, said his amendment would insure that federal workers get a sound supplemental system at the same time they are participating in Social Security.

Opponent John Glenn, D-Ohio, said "it is not fair to include new federal employees under Social Security without providing in advance how pension benefits will be protected."

Most senators voting no were opposed to including new federal workers in Social Security without first legislating a supplemental civil service retirement plan.

Voting from North Carolina were East Voted no. Helms voted yes.

ALIENS By a vote of 34 for and 58 against, the Senate refused to table (kill) an amendment denying Social Security benefits to illegal aliens who have worked in the U.S. The amendment later was knocked out in House-Senate conference. The bill (HR 1900) was sent to the White House.

Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., supported killing the amendment, saying "never before...in the Social Security system have we provided that those who pay in do not get their benefits." Hearings should be held later to determine if the idea is valid, he added.

Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., who sponsored the amendment, said it was wrong to try to keep illegal aliens out of the country and then "turn around and support those aliens that break immigration laws with Social Security benefits."

Senators voting no wanted to prevent illegal aliens from collecting Social Security benefits.

Can't Agree On Parking Fees

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — The state House and Senate can't agree on how to treat Gov. John Evans — at least when it comes to parking fees for his car.

A bill that cleared the House last week would charge the governor, Supreme Court justices and other top officials $10 month for parking space near their offices. But a Senate committee decided Monday that would be insulting.

While the House vote was 60-8 in favor of the fees, the Senate's State Affairs Committee voted unanimously in favor of holding up the bill indefinitely.

"I doubt any other state charges its governor, attorney general or Supreme Court justices for parking," said Sen. James Risch, R-Boise, Senate president pro tem. "That's one of the emoluments that comes with the office."

Heavy Spending In Europe To Retrain The Jobless

By TAMARA JONES
Associated Press Writer
FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Swiss watchmakers displaced by Japanese technology are being turned into electricians, and German hardhats are conquering the computer in the effort to arm job-seekers with sharper skills.

West European nations are retraining millions of jobless workers in hopes of combating the worst unemployment since World War II.

West Germany is spending the equivalent of more than $400 million to retrain over 40,000 people now collecting unemployment payments.

In France, 2.5 million people participated in some kind of job retraining last year. Of those, 88 percent now have jobs. About 30 percent of public funds spent on all types of employment-related expenses, including unemployment compensation, go to retraining.

Austria paid $23.5 million to retrain or train 56,669 unemployed or unskilled workers in 1982.

Belgium shares expense with private businesses to offer training in more than 40 occupations. Last year, 29,441 workers passed through job retraining programs.

Part of Italy's program includes $4.2 million to retrain 1,500 laid-off Fiat autoworkers this year, "but it hasn't been very successful," said regional labor administrator Giorgio Zanutto.

Despite one of the world's lowest unemployment rates — 0.8 percent — Switzerland budgeted $650,000 for retraining this year.

The Swiss have no official tally of workers involved, but a government source estimated the number at 3,000-4,000. The emphasis is on the "watchmaking" regions where 45,000 jobs were lost over the past decade while Japan replaced Switzerland as the world's leading producer of watches.

An estimated 200,000 Danes undergo some form of retraining each year, but no statistics on cost are available. Denmark is battling 10.3 percent unemployment.

Such programs have existed for years in Europe, but participants and officials say the global economic crunch gives them a new importance and urgency.

In the United States, President Reagan has asked Congress to increase funds for retraining displaced workers to $240 million from $25 million, said to be enough to help retrain 110,000 unemployed Americans.

In West Germany, where unemployment is at a post-war record 10.4 percent and a new government is forming, unions and management alike fear that federal budget cuts will hurt the job-training program in its hour of need.

"Already there's too many people and not enough money," said Wilfried Malcher of the West German Employers' Association. "In comparison to unemployment, we think retraining is always better."

IG Metall, the largest union in West Germany, also gives high marks to the country's 14-year-old retraining program, particularly as preventive medicine.

Union spokesman Ulrich Mignon noted that the government pays to retrain people whose jobs are threatened — a category he said included over 200,000 workers as of Jan. 1. "It's money well-spent," he said.

Statistics were unavailable on how many retrained West Germans eventually find jobs.

Because the economic slump reduced job possibilities, West Germany cut back its retraining program last year. Government statistics show 42,103 people were retrained, compared with 47,498 in 1981. West Germans risk forfeiture of some unemployment benefits by refusing to be retrained.

Some European government officials said retraining may be breeding a whole new set of workers' woes — for example, by saturating such fields as data processing while more traditional labor markets suffer severe shortages.

"We don't have problems getting companies to volunteer to train these people, since the government foots the bill," said Giulio Santarelli, head of the Lazio regional government in Italy.

"But in certain professions we have real difficulties in recruiting candidates," he said. "For example, very few young people want to be butchers these days. Yet, that's a profession with a real future in it. I'm serious."

In Japan, where unemployment is relatively slight compared with Western Europe's, the retraining program has come under criticism for a different reason.

"Workers don't get the kind of technical training they can actually put to use on the job," said Yoshikatsu Matani, spokesman for the General Council of Trade Unions.

"At many of the schools, the technology they learn lags far behind what is being used in the factories."

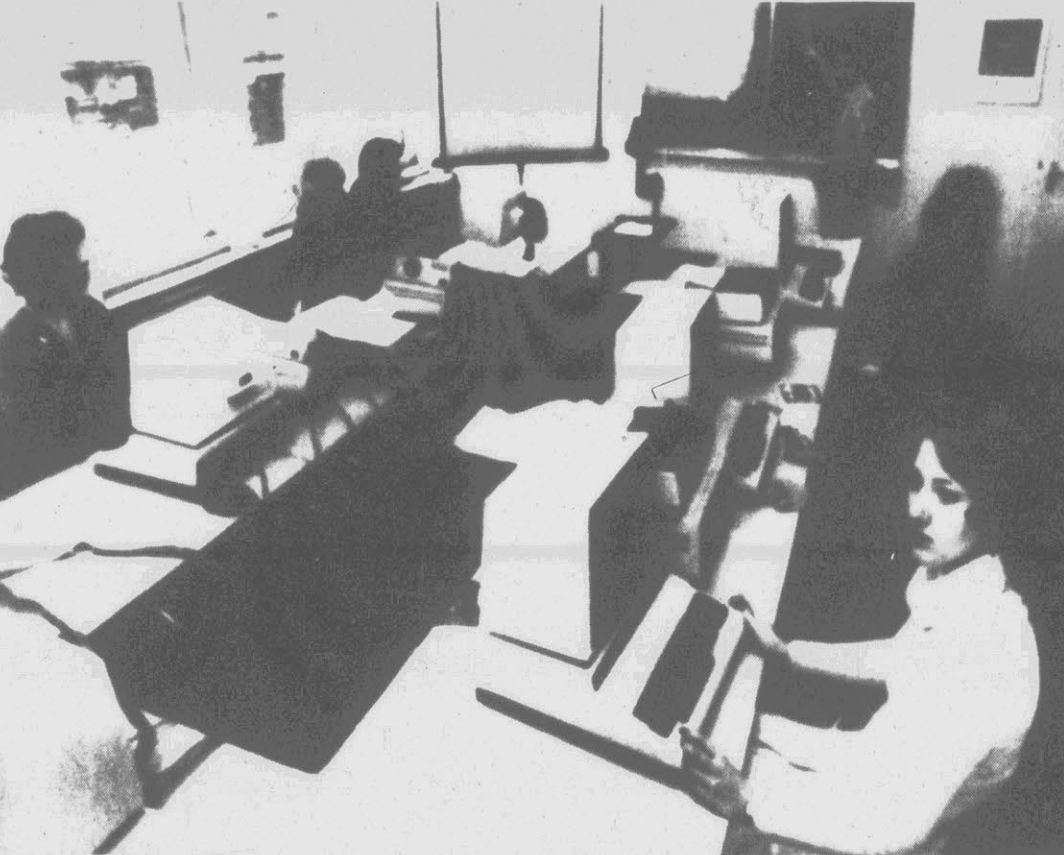

In West Germany, where officials are growing nervous about their sizable investment in the program, participants are now being asked to reimburse the government for the retraining once they have found work.

Nevertheless, vocational schools report a year-long waiting list for spots in the retraining programs.

A young father of two hopes the 35-hour week he puts in at the Hartnack vocational school in Frankfurt will transform him from a jobless delivery boy into a well-rounded businessman.

"This isn't my last chance — there are hundreds of chances," he says. "But this is my best one."

RETRAINING — Jobless workers are being retrained in the field of computer accounting at the Hartnack School in Frankfurt, West Germany. West European nations, facing the greatest unemployment since WWII, are retraining millions of jobless in an effort to combat the problem. (AP Laserphoto)

Mineral Collector Has Lots Of Rocks

By BETSY A. PERSUN
Williamsport Grit
MONTROSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Fifteen years ago, Thomas O'Neil came down off a mountain and discovered a hobby that has proved fascinating to him. The Lycoming County man collects minerals.

O'Neil's chance discovery occurred when he was on vacation hiking through New Hampshire's Presidential mountain range. The weather turned miserable, causing him to cancel a scheduled climb.

On his way back down the mountain, O'Neil ran into the president of a local mineral club out collecting specimens despite the inclement weather. The introduction to this stranger was also O'Neil's introduction to his favorite hobby.

He has devoted most of his time to minerals since his retirement as a tool grinder eight years ago, and cannot understand why mineral collecting does not have a more glamorous image.

"There's a story in rocks," he said. "After all, they didn't go to the moon to pick apples."

O'Neil's zeal for his hobby, however, makes up for others' lack of interest. By his own estimate, he has 3,000 rocks ranging from tiny to fist-sized.

His collection is displayed in one small room of the house he shares with his wife, Esta. O'Neil built shelves along the walls for the larger pieces and converted a closet into a stack of drawers holding trays for the rest.

"There's about three-quarters of a ton of rocks in there," said O'Neil, pointing to the drawers. "Good thing we have a concrete base."

In his collection of about 275 minerals, he concentrates on Pennsylvania minerals, collected throughout the state.

O'Neil wishes more people took an interest in minerals. He belongs to the Pennsylvania chapter of the Friends of Mineralogy, an organization that strives to "upgrade collecting," according to O'Neil.

The organization frowns on commercial dealing in minerals and careless collecting where people do not try to learn about their finds or note the location where they picked them up.

He points out that the makeup of rocks is significant from economical, environmental, historical and esthetic standpoints.

Problem Facing Arizona Lottery

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — First drawings for the new "Count n' Cash" state lottery game will be delayed until next month, because officials overlooked a problem: how to handle 6 million entries for the million-dollar top prize.

"We don't have a revolving drum that big. And even if we did, no one would have arms long enough to reach to the bottom," said lottery board spokesman Al France.

In previous games, the number of entries has been reduced through a series of elimination drawings. But this time, no provision was made for such contests, France said Monday. The board will consider the problem April 7.

Without elimination drawings, the entries would total about 6 million instead of the usual 6,000 to 7,000.

Not Practical As Homesteads

BEAVER, Okla. (AP) — The federal government is selling about 60 acres of public land this week, but a couple of parcels might be hard to homestead.

The sale, scheduled Thursday in this Panhandle town, features one parcel a mile long but only 2.64 feet wide. The other is 2.5 miles long and only 50 feet wide.

Federal officials estimate a fair price for the one 2½ feet wide would be $10 while the other can go for $500.

'HUMAN CHAIN'
LONDON (AP) — Anti-nuclear demonstrators say they will form a 14-mile "human chain" during Easter weekend protests planned at a U.S. Air Force Base and a British nuclear warhead factory.

Lowe's Pricing Policy: Many items in this tabloid carry a reference retail price. The reference is intended to provide a guide to the range of retail selling prices in our area and may be useful in identifying different units of the same manufacturer. An item's reference retail price is either the manufacturer's suggested retail price or our determination of its full retail price based on prices at which it or similar merchandise is offered by principal retailers (department stores, specialty shops and other non-discount sellers) in our selling area. While we believe our reference retail prices do not appreciably exceed the highest retail prices at which sales are made in our selling area, we cannot assure you that our reference retail prices are listed at "regular" selling prices. The merchandise is offered at this price except during a special sale. The purpose of showing a reference retail price (or a regular price) is to assist you, our customer, in making a knowledgeable and better informed buying decision. We suggest that you also do comparative shopping and compare our prices. (Prices in this tabloid do not include delivery charges. Ask us about delivery rates.) Lowe's Raincheck Policy: If we sell out of an advertised item, we'll issue you a raincheck. When we restock, you'll be notified so you can buy at the previously advertised price (except for products marked "Limited Quantities"). Our smaller stores may not stock all advertised items. But every item shown here can be ordered for you.
