N.C. Revenue Data Said Still Improving

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Preliminary revenue figures for the month of March show that North Carolina's economy is continuing to improve, Revenue Secretary Mark Lynch said today.

Lynch said the preliminary report "tells me people are buying more goods from markets in North Carolina. I feel that the ripple effect shows that people have more money to spend."

The net general fund revenue for March increased 15.4 percent, but Lynch said there were substantial distortions in the tentative figures.

"There are many substantial distortions in March and I emphasize this at this time this large percent increase for the month must not be considered as an accurate comparison of net general fund revenue between this year and last," Lynch said.

He said one major distortion was in corporate income tax collections. There was a 42 percent increase for the month in corporate income tax collections, he said. Lynch said the increase was in excess of $22 million for corporate income tax collections.

Tentative sales and use tax collections were up about 8 percent, for the month of March. This results in a percent increase for the first nine months of this fiscal year through March of about 4.7 percent, which compares with increase of 4.4 percent through February and 3.1 percent through December 1982, Lynch said.

Lynch said he normally releases the figures later in the month, but "with the General Assembly in session, I think they need to know just what the revenue picture says."

Pitt County Planters

TOBACCO SETTING — Workers on the Bonnie Rouse farm in the St. Johns community near Grifton set out some of the first tobacco in Pitt County. Billy McLawhorn, who tends the land, said he had about 36 acres of tobacco this year. McLawhorn said his soil was not as wet as some due to the sandy conditions in the area. Even under cloudy skies and the threat of rain, the farmer said he was expecting to have about five acres set before the end of the day. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Shuttle Crew Packing Up For Saturday Touchdown

By HOWARD BENEDICT

AP Aerospace Writer
CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Elated by their "smooth" and "clockwork" space walk, Challenger's astronauts began packing up today as they neared the end of an inaugural mission marred only by problems with a satellite they carried aloft.

The four crewmen were awakened for their last full day in space by Mission Control playing a recording of a folk song with the refrain "I'm a lousy co-pilot and a long way from home."

Maybe they didn't like the choice of music, but whatever the reason, the astronauts were unusually slow to acknowledge Mission Control's greetings. It wasn't until capsule communicator Mary Cleave's third try, a half-hour after wakeup, that Commander Paul Weitz responded.

"They were apparently just reluctant to answer as they got their breakfast on," explained NASA commentator Terry White.

Much of today's relatively light flight plan called for cleaning up the spaceship and checking systems for the return to Earth. The only other items were some medical experiments and the pursuit of a phantom space target in a rendezvous exercise.

Weitz and pilot Karol Bobko are to guide Challenger to a landing at 10:49 a.m. PST Saturday at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. America's second shuttle has performed near-flawlessly on its inaugural flight.

While looking toward home, mission specialists Story Musgrave and Donald Peterson were expected to provide Mission Control in Houston with additional details today on their double space walk into the ship's open cargo bay on Thursday — an excursion they long will savor.

They tested their own ability to work in the hostile environment of open space and they tried out the tools and techniques that someday may save lives and satellites. Officials said it clears the way for shuttle missions next year to retrieve and repair a long-ailing satellite and to practice refueling an orbiting spacecraft.

"The EVA (extra-vehicular activity) was really smooth; it went really like clockwork," said Flight Director Harold Draughon.

NASA was especially pleased with the performance of the spacesuits — the same $2.1 million outfits that developed technical bugs during a flight of the shuttle Columbia in November, forcing cancellation of a space walk.

The suits functioned so well this time that Mission Control gave Musgrave and Peterson permission to stay outside 45 minutes beyond the intended 3½ hours. They needed only an extra 17 minutes and re-entered Challenger's airlock after a walk of 3 hours 47 minutes.

Musgrave and Peterson had a ball, romping effortlessly in the airless 60-foot-long cargo bay as they practiced with tools, pretended to free a stuck satellite, maneuvered a winch with a 100-pound load and carried a 50-pound object the length of the bay and back.

Bundled in the bulky white suits, they soared twice around the globe during the space walk, enjoying two sunsets and two sunrises. Below and surrounding them was a breathtaking vista.

C-of-C Panel Weighs Psychiatric Care Study

The task force organized by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce to look at the scope of psychiatric services in the area planned a meeting this afternoon to consider a possible recommendation, the chairman of the study group said.

Jeannette Cox said this morning that the 15-member task force would decide today on what recommendation it will make to the chamber's board of directors regarding the psychiatric services issue. She said she could not comment on what stance she thought the task force might take.

The chamber's board has scheduled a meeting for Tuesday at 5 p.m. to receive the report and/or recommendation from the task force.

A source close to the committee said the group endeavored to study the scope of existing and proposed psychiatric services in the Greenville area. According to the source, interviews conducted by the task force included representatives of Pitt County Memorial Hospital and Charter Medical Corp., which has sought approval to construct a new 65-bed psychiatric facility here.

The Project Review Committee of the Eastern Carolina Health Systems Agency voted last week to recommend disapproval by the full HSA board of proposals by three firms, including Charter Medical, which made bids to establish psychiatric hospitals in the eastern section of the state.

The ECHSA governing board has scheduled a meeting for Wednesday to consider the committee's recommendation.

The City Council, which was asked by Charter Medical to endorse its hospital bid, has held several workshops to discuss the psychiatric services issue but has taken no stance. Some council members indicated last week that they were interested in the results of the task force study.

The task force is not expected to make a presentation or recommendation to the council. Ms. Cox said the committee's report will be presented to the chamber's board members for their consideration.

City's Drinking Water Within New Standards

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Greenville Utilities Commission officials say there should be no problem locally in meeting federal drinking water standards.

Their comments Thursday afternoon came after an environmental scientist at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill said earlier this week that drinking water in 19 out of 40 cities studies in the state may not comply with a federal standard for drinking water.

Dr. Philip G. Singer said initial reports show that nine of 40 cities with populations between 10,000 and 75,000 recorded levels of trihalomethane in their drinking water in excess of 100 parts per billion and another 10 cities were above 80 parts per billion.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has set 100 parts per billion as the maximum safe level of trihalomethanes, or THMs, in drinking water, because THMs have been linked with a risk of certain cancers.

Wadie Lewis, superintendent of GUC's water and sewer departments, explained that THMs — hydrocarbons such as chloroform and bioform — are formed when chlorine used to treat raw water interacts with organic compounds in the water.

According to Singer, the first monitoring results, collected last winter, are only preliminary and might not represent THM levels fairly. But he said many readings were too high in what is normally the season of the lowest THM levels.

Lewis said that, "to date, we don't have and don't anticipate any appreciable problem being able to live with 100 parts per billion. We adjusted our treatment three years ago — cut out prechlorinating as much as possible because it was a cost factor for us — and at the same time effected a reduction of THMs in the finished water."

According to Lewis, "We just got back samples of water tested from the old water plant, the new plant, which was dedicated last week, and our deep well water. They were all within the limits."

"Our average last month was 31.8 parts per billion," according to Lewis. But he noted that "this is significantly lower than our average annual value, which may run in the 60 to 80 range annually."

Lewis said that "we anticipate a difference at the new plant — a lower THM value — because of presetting. But we don't have the data to back that up. It's too early."

Lewis noted that the THM level generally increases from west to east because "more organics are in the water in the East than in the Piedmont and West."

TESTING TRANSFORMERS — Don Batzel, left, and B.T. Palmer, of the The Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Co. run a power-factor test on a transformer for the Greenville Utilities. According to GUC officials, the test is run approximately every two years to detect failure hazards in the conductors of transformers before a failure occurs. The test is run on the windings of the transformers, testing the insulation of the windings and a test is also run on the oil contained in the unit. This transformer is a 115,000-volt unit at the North Side station. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Teen Suicide: Danger Signals And What To Do

By SHARON RUTENBERG
NORTHFIELD, Ill. (UPI)

—Rick, a college freshman, put his head on railroad tracks just before a train came.

Benji, aged 2½, stopped eating and threatened to throw himself in front of cars because, he said, nobody loved him.

"Depression can strike children," says psychiatrist Dr. Mary Giffin, medical director of the Irene Josselyn Clinic of the North Shore Mental Health Association, in the Chicago suburb of Northfield. Giffin also is co-author with Carol Felsenfeld of "A Cry for Help" (Doubleday, $16.95).

"For many years it was suspected to be an illness of adults only — which it clearly is not," she said in a recent interview.

The book tells parents, relatives, friends and teachers of potential teenage suicide victims how to recognize danger signals and what to do when they occur.

"The distress signals are a cry for help and the cry needs to be responded to. We make a big pitch for parents and friends being the communication bridge and that they are just as important as the professional people," Dr. Giffin said.

Each day an average of 18 young Americans kill themselves — more than 6,500 every year. Each hour, 57 children and adolescents attempt suicide, more than 1,300 a day.

"Although suicide is listed as the third cause of death, homicides and accidents being second and first, many of those first two causes are in fact suicide."

"Suicide has doubled in 10 years, it's tripled in 20 years."

"And even younger children are killing themselves. That's where the increasing numbers are occurring right at the moment."

Case: David, 4, wrapped himself in a blanket and set it on fire. Asked why, he said, David is a bad boy. There will be no more David.

"Young people aren't used to dealing with stress, and so they can more easily convince themselves that no other person in the world has ever felt so awful," Dr. Giffin said.

"They are so afraid, so profoundly lonely in their suffering. They have not had enough experience with depression to know that, as dreadful as it feels, it will end — they will feel better."

"Too often, they see suicide as the only exit from their suffering."

Dr. Giffin listed 16 danger signals.

The first group lays the groundwork: Acting out aggressive hostile behavior, alcohol and drug abuse, passive behavior, changes in eating habits, changes in sleeping habits and fear of separation.

The second group "may worry you in terms of shifting personality traits," she said. It consists of abrupt changes in personality, sudden mood swings, impulsiveness, slackening interest in school work and decline in grades and inability to concentrate.

The last four "seem to come just before an actual suicide attempt" — loss or lack of friends, loss of important person or thing, hopelessness, obsession with death and evidence the child is making a will.

"The most obvious and appropriate first step is to ask your child if he's considering killing himself."

"Don't worry about putting ideas into his head, the ideas are already there. Putting a fear into words diffuses it, transforms it into something tangible that can be dealt with."

"You will show you care by broaching the subject. Too often, adults wait for exactly the right opportunity. There is no right opportunity. When you see the need, start talking."

Peer group contacts are important — but parents are more important, she said.

"Many people respond by shaming or underplaying the concern of the child. Very often, parents try to be too reassuring, everything will be all right. And all that does, of course, is to shut up the child. And we urge people not to talk about suicide being immoral."

Worried parents finding poetry or a diary should not be concerned about invading their child's privacy — but should go ahead and read it "because the child left it out in order for it to be seen," she said.

Teachers are an untapped resource, she said.

"If a parent suspects that a child is having problems, the teacher should be the first person to whom he turns. Favorite teachers are often being confidantes."

"There are some myths that people need to be aware of, such as the person who talks about suicide won't kill himself," Dr. Giffin said. "You shouldn't joke about these things, you should take them seriously."

In Rick's case, the 17-year-old freshman described as "perfectly normal, an all-American kid, a typical teenager," arrived at the University of Missouri with his parents, who then left on vacation. Rick asked his roommates' advice about an easy way to commit suicide.

"Throw yourself in front of a train or get yourself a gun," they joked.

Four days later, he took the first suggestion, after leaving a note in his biology notebook saying he was having a hard time adjusting and just wanted to rest in peace.

Other myths include:

—Nothing could have stopped her once she decided to kill herself.

—The person who fails at suicide the first time will eventually succeed.

—When he talks about killing himself, he's just looking for attention. Ignoring him is the best thing to do.

—Talking about suicide to a troubled person may give the person morbid ideas.

—People under psychiatric care rarely commit suicide.

—Suicides often occur out of the blue.

—People who kill themselves are insane.

—Once a person tries to kill himself and fails, the pain and shame will keep him from trying again.

—"My son was depressed and suicidal but the depression has lifted, he's finally out of danger."

—"Only a certain type of youngster commits suicide and my child just isn't the type."

—Suicides are mainly old people with only a few years left to live.

—Suicide runs in families, so you can't do much to prevent it.

"And all of those, we negate," Dr. Giffin said.

"People considered depressed or poor risks, or people who aren't measuring up, are not the group that we are writing about. The group we're writing about are, on the whole, quite successful," she said.

Case: Alexandra, 19, who lived in a Chicago lakefront suburb, hanged herself. People who knew her best were aghast. She just wasn't the type.

Alexandra's mother wrote: "She did not fit the stereotypical model about the depressed girl who throws herself into the Chicago river on Christmas Eve because she thinks nobody loves her. Her vices were Marlboro Lights and an occasional chablis. She got her kicks by tutoring black children suffering from racially-related learning problems. She had never been violent. She was not recognizably depressed."

The most common methods of successful suicides are hanging and trains. Gun use is increasing.

There are more suicide attempts among women and girls, but more successful attempts among men and boys. That is partly due to the more lethal choice of a male's method, although more females are starting to use hanging and guns.

"Drugs so often are indefinite and they may end up being in a coma and losing some of their faculties ... may end up with brain damage," Dr. Giffin said.

Ann Carolyn Ruffin and Thomas Cox were united in marriage Sunday at the home of the bride, The Rev. Bert Williams performed the double ring ceremony and music was presented by Johnny C. who sang "Perfect Love."

The bride wore a blue gown and matching hat. She was given in marriage by her son, Arethell Ruffin. The maid of honor was Joyce Baker of Norfolk, Va., niece of the bride, and bridesmaids were Wendy Ruffin, daughter of the bride, and Wyomia Wilson of Greenville. The flower girl was Brandy Baker, great-niece of the bride.

Lester Cox, brother of the bridegroom, was best man and ushers were Anthony Ruffin, son of the bride, and Kerry and Ricky Baker of Norfolk, Va., nephews of the bride.

Josette Williams directed the wedding.

Mrs. Katie Grimes, grandmother of the bridegroom, was remembered with a corsage.

A reception followed the ceremony. Lendora Baker of Norfolk, Va., sister of the bride, Shirley Ruffin of Greenville, sister-in-law of the bride, and Mary Pitt and Mary Council of Greenville assisted at the reception.

Parents of the couple are Mrs. Sara J. Ruffin of Grimesland and the late John Ruffin. The parents of the bridegroom are the late Mr. and Mrs. Lester James Cox.

Cooking With Xiong Yang

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

Twenty-four year old Xiong Yang has been living in New York City for about two years. I met him shortly after he arrived from Shanghai, China. His aunt, Florence Lin, the well-known cookbook author and one of my good friends, was our interpreter. When I met him again about a year later, he spoke English well. A semester of English study at Columbia University and further hard work account for the remarkable fluency he acquired in such a short time.

In this country, Xiong Yang calls himself Henry. He named himself after the Henry Hudson Parkway, where, as he says, "I live with my aunt in a large and beautiful apartment, located in the Riverdale section of the Bronx."

Now Henry is a sophomore at Manhattan College, studying electrical engineering and hoping to go to graduate school. When he completes his university education he will go back to China and, he told me, "use the knowledge I have gained to make a contribution to China's modernization."

Henry was seven when the Cultural Revolution swept through China. By the time he finished high school, university education was closed to all except workers with several years' practical experience in a field of technology. Because he was eager to continue his studies, Henry entered a technical school.

Exactly one year later, the law changed: ironically, university education was now open to everyone under 25 except technical school students. They had to graduate from technical school, work two years in a plant, then apply to the plant for permission to attend a university.

After another year in school and two years of work, Henry was again disappointed when the plant where he was working refused to release him to attend university. It was at this heart-breaking moment that the complex arrangements for his western education were made.

Henry's older brother, Jie Wang, used to be a professional soccer player; now he is working in Hua-Shan Hospital. Their mother is head of the Shanghai Hospital for Gynecology and Obstetrics. Their father, before his retirement, was with the Administrative Bureau of Electric Power of Eastern China.

It was Henry's father who taught him how to make an unusual dish — thinly sliced pork dipped in a crisp, delicate batter and fried. When Henry offered to cook this delicious dish at my house, I jumped at the opportunity. To accompany it, we had boiled Chinese noodles and Florence Lin's lovely stir-fried snow peas with mushrooms. All I had to do was to provide the dessert.

XIONG YANG'S PORK

1½ pounds boneless pork loin

XIONG YANG — A Chinese student in New York City prepares a pork dish little known in this country.

3 large eggs
1 teaspoon sherry
3 tablespoons cornstarch
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon white pepper
½ cup corn oil

Thinly slice pork into 24 slices. With dull edge of knife or a cleaver pound each pork slice in a crisscross pattern until very thin.

Beat eggs until foamy; stir in sherry, cornstarch, salt and pepper; beat gently until batter is smooth.

In an electric skillet, heat corn oil to 350 degrees. Dip pork slices, one at a time, into batter; drain off excess batter. Carefully add to oil, a few slices at a time. Fry, turning once, until cooked through and golden brown — about 2 minutes. Drain on paper towels and keep hot in a warm oven. Makes 4 to 6 servings. Serve with boiled Chinese noodles and stir-fried snow peas with mushrooms.

Dear Abby

A Widow Or A Divorcee?

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I was married for a long time (35 years), then my husband and I got a divorce. The decree was granted, and my husband said he picked up his papers. I never did pick up mine.

In the meantime, he passed away. Now when people inquire as to whether I am a widow or a divorcee, I say I am a widow because I never picked up the divorce papers. Right?

MRS. E.

DEAR MRS. E.: Wrong. Whether one picks up the papers or not has no bearing on the validity of a divorce decree. What is, is. A divorcee you are, and a widow you aren't.

DEAR ABBY: Right on, gal! You told "M. in Ottawa, Canada" that if her fiancé would visit a family-type nudist camp he would realize that it is a healthy family experience. It's absolutely true! Once I was so inhibited that I dreaded dying because I knew the undertaker would see me naked.

Finally I realized that this was just a painful hang-up, so I decided to do something about it. I persuaded my wife to visit a nudist camp with me. We gritted our teeth, disrobed and pretended we were "old-timers."

On the second visit it was like the Garden of Eden. "They were naked and they were not ashamed." (Genesis 2:25)

Today I could go on national television nude and not blink an eye. What a relief!

BEEN THERE

DEAR BEEN: You might not "blink," but a few million viewers would.

DEAR ABBY: I have a good-looking, intelligent, 18-year-old son who recently graduated from high school. He has been friends with a boy his age for about a year. (I'll call the friend "Greg.") He has spent time at Greg's house and has "slept over" occasionally, as most boys do. I thought nothing of it, as my other three sons (all older) had done the same. He would always tell me where he would be, and when I called, he would always be there. I could always depend on him to be truthful and reliable.

Recently I found out, and he admitted to it, that he was having an affair with Greg's 41-year-old divorced mother! I can't understand this arrangement. What could a jobless, 18-year-old boy have to offer a woman her age?

I am also 41 and am heartsick about this. What advice can you give me? Should I just sit back and hope the whole mess blows over?

HEARTSICK

DEAR HEARTSICK: Your 18-year-old son is not a "boy" — he is a man in the physical sense, and what he has to offer this 41-year-old woman is obvious. It is fortunate that you and your son can talk candidly to each other because he needs to fully understand the pitfalls of engaging in such an affair. If your motherly advice fails, perhaps his three older brothers can lay it out for him, man-to-man.

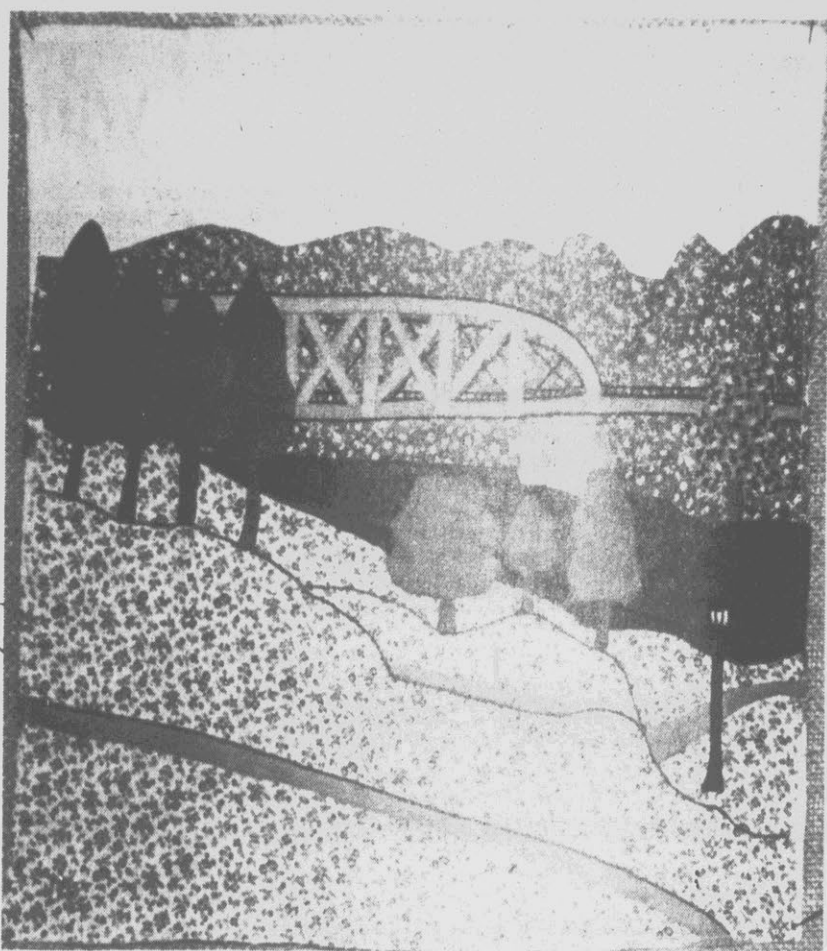

DEAR ABBY: When I married my wife, her body was slim and attractive. Subsequently she began to gain weight, and my desire for her began to diminish commensurately.

I love my wife and have remained faithful to her. My question is this: Can a man learn to enjoy making love to an overweight woman?

TURNED OFF

DEAR TURNED: Love can move mountains.

Why Act Now?

The State Board of Education has jumped on the bandwagon. Or put another way, the board is closing the gate after the horse got out.

Meeting in Raleigh Wednesday the board voted to put East Carolina University's teacher education program on two years' probation, citing essentially the same shortcomings listed a few weeks ago by the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education when it denied reaccreditation to ECU.

This is not so much a defense of ECU, which should have known better, as it is a critical look-back at the state board, which presumably knew better and chose not to act.

The state board gave accreditation to ECU programs in 1980 and 1981. Virtually nothing, we are told, had changed at ECU since that time. But now that the national council has said naughty-naughty, so must the state board.

On top of that, ECU has moved to make the changes called for by the national council — before the state board acted. Why act now, unless the state board feels compelled to cover its own tracks.

This is one instance where it would have been advantageous for the state board to lead, rather than to react.

Source Of Pride

The very building of the N. C. Museum of Art has been wracked with controversy.

The $16 million structure stands virtually completed, however, and it was opened by the governor, with bagpipers and many honored guests Tuesday. The building is open to the public this weekend.

The museum will house a unique $50 million collection of art owned by the state. There is nothing else like it in North Carolina and the museum will serve to provide access to great paintings for school children, art students and all the citizens of our state.

Two Pitt County natives, the late Lucy Cherry Crisp and the late Dr. Robert Lee Humber, were both instrumental in championing an art museum for North Carolina. For several years Miss Crisp was director of the fledgling state art museum prior to its move to the renovated State Highway Building office. It was through her dedicated efforts that many North Carolina artists received the first showing of their work.

Dr. Humber made a significant contribution to the museum's establishment through his success in getting a pledge from chain store owner and art collector Samuel Kress for a bequest of art valued at $1 million. This pledge satisfied the stipulation by state legislators for funds to match the million dollars they had allocated for the founding of the state museum of art.

Gov. Hunt said the museum is "ready to take its place among the great museums of this country and the world."

That certainly is not too great a vision. Such a state art museum would not be possible without the commitment of all the people of our state to its financing and support. We have done something in which we can all take great pride.

The Torch Is Lighted

April 4, 1968, is not a date easily forgotten. It was the day that Martin Luther King Jr. was gunned down.

On April 4, 1983, only scattered handfuls of people gathered to mark the 15th anniversary of King's death.

Time does that. It robs people of the immediacy of a cause and the historic changes in American society by public example, prayers, coaxings and pleadings of a charismatic leader.

One of the ironies of King's assassination was that it enshrined him and his dream because he was a living sacrifice, a martyr, to the cause he espoused. It came at a time when King was still a force, a voice for those who had not yet found their voices, in public life.

There are others who would have liked to pick up the torch dropped when King fell at Memphis; they didn't have a chance because just as they were overshadowed by him in life, they were even more overshadowed by his death.

Instead, that torch continues to light the way in a ghostly hand.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — It is the Wednesday before the season opened on Monday, and I am sitting about 25 rows up in the grandstand at Municipal Stadium, watching the Expos of Montreal against the Orioles of Baltimore. If this isn't heaven, it is right next to it.

The truth is, I am playing hooky. I ought to be back up in Washington, D.C., watching the Democrats against the Republicans, but Washington hasn't had a club for the past 10 years. Football, yes; baseball, no. It is a terrible thing to have a national capital in which the national pastime isn't seen. No wonder the people are down on government.

Anyhow, here I am, and the Florida sun is shining and a gentle breeze is blowing, and the maple-leaf flag of Canada is rippling out in center field. The stadium holds about 4,000, and today 3,647 fans have shown up. Half of them are over 60. The men are mostly given to bay windows and salt-and-pepper mustaches; the women are either thin and wiry or big and bulky. It is a good crowd for a major league game that, as they say, "doesn't matter."

RALEIGH — Senate liberals are quietly crediting Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green with rescuing what they consider their most important legislation of this session. They're saying Green's support of a pair of child support bills helped them grab the bills from the claws of legislative death.

The bills introduced by Sen. Helen Marvin, D-Gaston, establish computer procedures to automatically instigate court proceedings against parents who are late with their child support payments.

The bills seek to redress the state's high rate of non-compliance with court-ordered child support. In any year, as many as 60 percent of the state's 100,000 child support cases will fall into arrears at one time or another, court statistics say.

After undergoing considerable change in committee, Sen. Marvin's two bills sailed through the Senate on second reading in mid-March. But, the next day, when the bills came up for final reading, they were sidetracked to the Senate Appropriations Committee. Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, and Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, said the fiscal note attached to the bills raised a cost factor. Under state law and Senate rules, a spending bill cannot be passed until after the main appropriations bill has been passed.

"At that point, those bills had been deep-sixed," one senator said. "They were dead," said another.

Royall and Hardison objected on the grounds of the $1.6 million computer cost. Supporters of the bill contend that the money is a separate question. The bills are written in such a way that counties would not have to enforce the laws until they received money to buy the computers.

They also argue that the bills are money-savers. Mrs. Marvin, for example, has a cost analysis saying the state would save $5 million annually if these bills were made law.

Another possible factor was the belief, on the part of unnamed legislative leaders, that this bill was simply a foil to get the computers for the county clerks of court. Supporters say they now hope they've killed that misconception.

Supporters didn't think they'd get a chance to make their case if they had to wait until after the main budget was approved. The assembly will adjourn a few days later and they saw little chance of straightening things out and getting the lengthy bills through the House in such short time.

Here's where Green enters. Pieced together reports indicate that Sen. Wilma Woodard, D-Wake, asked Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, to intercede with Green on behalf of the bills. Barnes did so one afternoon, catching Green in the Senate chamber. At the same time, Mrs. Woodard and Hardison were discussing another bill at Hardison's desk.

Green confirmed in a short interview that he approached Hardison, appropriations chairman, and expressed an interest in getting the bills out of committee in April. Apparently that was enough.

Hardison says he's looking for a way to move the bills without an appropriation. The approach used in the bills is unrealistic, he says. Furthermore, he contends that he's always supported the concept. "These are good bills. They ought to be on the books already." Others think he would have left them to die if Green hadn't interceded.

Mrs. Marvin then went to Green, trying to gain support for the computer appropriation. She says she was pleased with his response. Hardison says that in the free-for-all for limited funds at the end of the session, these bills have a very good chance of getting funded.

WASHINGTON (AP) — After nearly 18 months of political turmoil over the MX missile, President Reagan seems to be right back where he started.

Now, just as in the fall of 1981, the administration is proposing to put MX missiles in existing launch silos that hold the less powerful Minuteman weapon. Again, more studies are proposed to develop a better scheme to protect land-based missiles from incoming Soviet rockets.

And just as before, the MX missile is sure to ignite a fireball of controversy on Capitol Hill.

The question now is why would Congress accept an idea that it already has declared is no good.

"We know it's going to be a difficult vote," acknowledges White House spokesman Larry Speakes.

Another administration official, speaking anonymously and with crossed fingers, says, "One hopes that everyone will give a little bit. I think the argument is going to be that it's better than what we've got now."

In dozens of breakfast meetings and private sessions, administration representatives have sounded out more than 200 members of Congress on what type MX plan might pass. The eventual outcome is seriously in doubt.

One message from the White House is that the United States already has spent $4.5 billion on MX, and killing the program now will send that money down the drain and leave the country with no new missile as it sits down with the Soviet Union in arms talks.

Another new administration tack is to virtually dismiss any hope of solving the problem of U.S. land-based missiles being vulnerable to attack. The administration used to speak of the so-called "window of vulnerability" in doomsday terms, but now seems ready to shrug off the issue.

"There is no perfectly survivable basing mode for many, many years ahead," says Ronald F. Lehman, deputy assistant secretary of defense for strategic and theater nuclear forces policy.

Opponents such as Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y., say the MX isn't necessary and that U.S. strategic forces are adequate. Addabbo plans to lead a new fight to kill the MX, along with the B-1 and a new nuclear aircraft carrier. He says they would unnecessarily increase the budget deficit.

Critics are happy to point out that it was Reagan — the architect of a big Pentagon buildup — who derailed the congressional consensus assembled during the Carter administration for deploying 200 missiles among 4,600 shelters in the deserts of Utah and Nevada. Reagan discarded Carter's idea, and reopened the congressional battle.

"All the hoop and holler that went on during the campaign about strategic vulnerability and the Russians being ahead, it really hasn't changed at all in the strategic area except a bit of a detriment in the sense that the MX is not being deployed now, which it would have been under the Carter plan," says Jody Powell, former press secretary to Jimmy Carter.

Reagan never has had much luck with the MX.

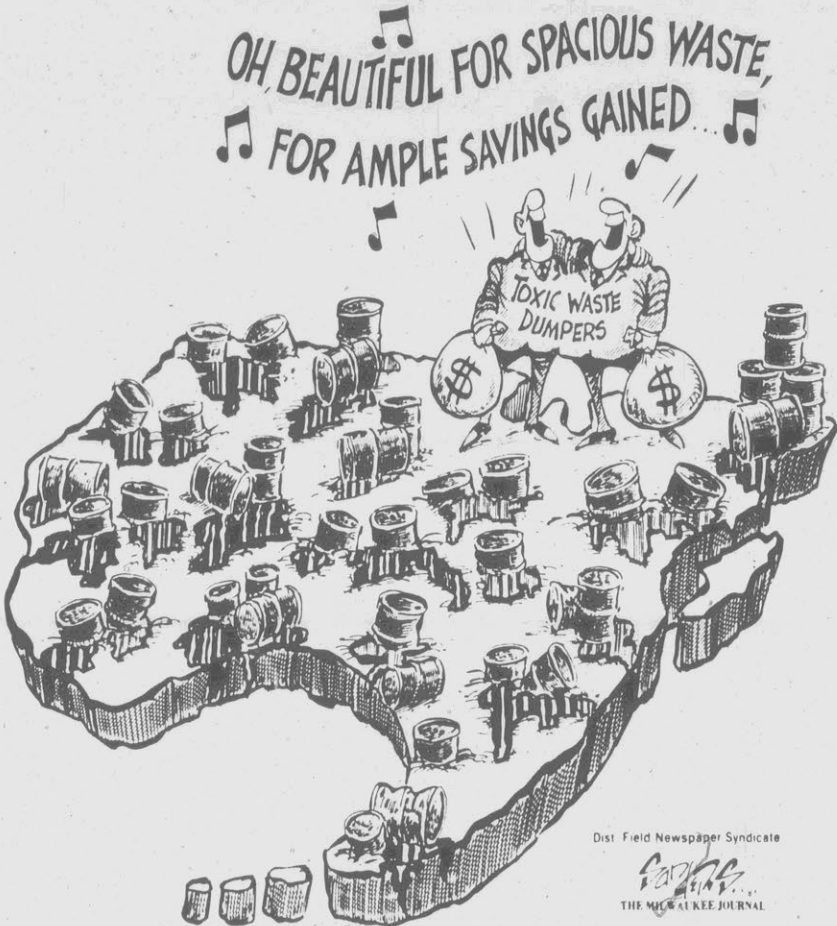

His first idea — putting the missile in Minutemen silos reinforced by steel and concrete — was unveiled in October 1981. It was rejected by the Senate because it did not solve the vulnerability problem. The defense hardliners in Congress who were supposed to be on the president's side were not convinced the strengthened silos would do much to protect the missiles from attack.

Forced to come up with a new idea, Reagan proposed "dense pack" — a plan calling for the deployment of 100 missiles closely together in a tract in Wyoming.

Dense-pack didn't have many friends in Congress — or the Pentagon, for that matter. Three of the five members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff registered objections to the idea, and congressional opponents of the MX teamed up with dense-pack skeptics to kill the idea.

Within weeks of proposing dense-pack, Reagan shelved it and appointed a bipartisan committee headed by former national security adviser Brent Scowcroft to recommend a system that would be acceptable to both the Pentagon and the Congress. The panel's proposals, leaked to the press, call for putting 100 MX missiles in Minuteman silos.

Reagan is expected to endorse the recommendations next week.

Nancy Can Make The Difference

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan gave the clearest signal yet last week that he's thinking seriously about a second term.

Nearly tossing his hat into the ring, Reagan told a small group of reporters on Tuesday that "you really can't in four years carry through programs that may be necessary." He added that one-term presidents "create instability."

For Reagan, of course, an equally important factor is a rising popularity, buoyed recently by signs of an economic upturn. The president is sure to benefit from the public sense that "the worst is over," even if full recovery remains distant.

Family interests often being pivotal, however, Reagan's eventual decision may have as much to do with wife Nancy's career as that of his own.

Notably, in contrast to last year, when adverse publicity, her father's death and an assassination attempt had disillusioned her, Mrs. Reagan is now hitting stride. Her recent television appearance on "Diff'rent Strokes" was well-received as was a theatrical debut at the Kennedy Center last week. Friends say her confidence is fully restored.

"She's a new person," said Nancy Reynolds, longtime friend and press aide to the Reagan family.

Indeed, it's possible that Mrs. Reagan will appear in other television serials as well as theater or movie productions before the end of the president's term (her staff is sorting through numerous requests for the best political and professional options).

"They'll probably go to the ranch this summer and make the final re-election decision," said another family friend.

All other factors being equal, Nancy's revived career could tip the scales when the decision is made.

A new means test: Next fall the nation's 91,000 public school districts will be required to verify the incomes of families whose children receive free or reduced-priced meals. No one knows exactly how much fraud plagues the $3billion lunch and breakfast program, but conservatives such as Sen. Jesse A. Helms (R-N.C.) estimate that the Agriculture Department review could save $39 million per year.

Food for Thought: The National Coalition on Television Violence recently cited NBC's "The A Team" as TV's most violent series program for averaging 39 violent acts per hour.

Strength For Today

An anonymous writer declares, "It is funny about a man."

"He criticizes the government and doesn't turn out to vote. He talks about the folly of overwork, and then plays cards until 3 a.m. He complains about rotten service and then over-tips the waiter. He goes to church on Sunday and to the devil for the rest of the week, making the odds 6 to 1.

"He hasn't the nerve to refuse money to the grafter, but will stand off the man he really owes. He thinks one way and acts another, and if there were a third way, he would take it. Yes, sir, funny creature, a man."

Yes, a man is a funny creature. The only thing that saves him from destruction is that he is a child of a loving and merciful God. He is the only creature with a destiny, yet he so often despises his destiny. He is the only being endowed with a capacity for reason, yet so many of his acts are utterly unreasonable.

Yes, sir, funny creature, a man.

In Life, Exhibition Games Do Matter

down in order. "That's life," says the old geezer, getting to his feet for the stretch. "Life is 90 percent three-up, three-down."

In the bottom of the seventh, the Expos's second baseman, name of Little, gets a single. Then he steals second off the pitcher. "See what I mean?" says my friend "That's life, too. Turn your back, and they steal you blind." In the top of the eighth, the Orioles come to life. John Shelby, this spring's phenomenal outfielder, beats out a single. Dauer singles to left, and suddenly the crowd is attentive. The next hitter flies out, and then Crowley hits a long fly to Warren Cromartie in right.

A crazy thing happens. Cromartie thinks he has just made the third out and starts trotting toward the dugout. Shelby hotfoots it to third and then scores on a wild pitch. The old geezer is thumping his cane and fairly snorting in disgust. "Talk about life," he says. "Bonehead plays in life will cost you every time."

In the bottom of the eighth, Cromartie comes up to bat. The old geezer bellows at him. "Hey, Cromartie!" he yells. "How many outs make three?" My friend has been thumping his cane at the umpire, too. "Inside!" he hollers. "Way inside!" It is Dutch Rennert behind the plate. When he calls a strike you know it's a strike. My philosopher finds meaning in the process. "Some guys go down swinging," he says, "and some guys go down with the bat on their shoulder."

In the end, it is Expos 4, Orioles 2. We have a winning pitcher, Burris, and a losing pitcher, Weichel. We have had Rear-don's wild pitch. At some point in our lives, most of us throw a wild pitch or take a base because of one. But mainly this has been a game of three-up, three-down, not exciting, not boring — a nice scattering of good, clean hits, with the runners moving and the fielders shifting; and if it weren't for the fences, the foul lines would stretch forever. Spring training has something to teach us: It provides an echo of life. It matters.

Nearly 10,000 Soviet Spies In France, Says Ex-Minister

PARIS (AP) — The 47 Soviet citizens expelled from France for spying represented only a fraction of an East bloc spy network which steals military and technological secrets, a former Cabinet minister says.

Former Interior Minister Michael Poniatowski said 600 agents of the Soviet KGB intelligence agency "manipulate close to 10,000 people who are either aware of it or not."

He said each of the agents is assigned 15 to 20 recruits, many of them in subordinate jobs such as industrial designers or archivists who photocopy information.

Poniatowski, a conservative, questioned the Socialist government's expulsion on Tuesday of the 47 Soviet, including 40 diplomats, five businessmen and two journalists.

"It is better to have a spy who is known, monitored and watched than a man who you don't know who is doing the same job," he said in an interview with the Socialist newspaper Le Matin.

"The general rule is that a third of the diplomatic personnel are with the KGB," Poniatowski was quoted as saying. "This third represents a third of the total KGB framework, with the rest of the agents primarily found in Aeroflot (the Soviet airline) and Intourist (the Soviet tourist agency)."

Poniatowski controlled the police when he was interior minister in former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's government.

The government's action on Tuesday was the biggest spy sweep in French history.

Sources said the expelled Soviets included the chief of Soviet intelligence in France, identified as Mikolai Chetverikov, the third-ranking diplomat at the Soviet Embassy. All of his chief aides also were expelled.

"At the top you have the KGB," said an unidentified espionage specialist quoted by Le Matin, "but they use the services of the Czechs and East Germans a lot, especially for information concerning military and technology secrets. The Romanians are concerned with commercial affairs, but sometimes they are called upon for unexpected attacks. The Bulgarians take care of terrorist actions."

Roger Wybolt, former head of the French counter-espionage service, reportedly described the agents as "courteous people who maintain friendly relationships with all those who interest them."

According to Tyson, Booker Dixon was found by his wife in a pool of blood on the floor of the garage the morning of March 21. Tyson said Dixon had been shot seven or eight times in the back, neck, head and chest.

Reginald Dixon was a student at Ayden-Grifton High School.

Education, Justice Jobs Eyed For Possible Cuts

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Ways to eliminate up to 2,500 state education jobs, cut up to 169 Justice Department positions and trim $2.5 million in anticipation of federal Human Resources grants were identified by legislative budget committees Thursday.

In all, up to $75 million a year would be shorn from the 1983-85 budget under the plans adopted as House-Senate Base Budget Subcommittees drew closer to their deadlines. Departmental plans identifying ways to cut the budget by 1 percent, 2 percent and 3 percent are to be submitted next week to the Joint Appropriations Committee.

Both the education subcommittee and the panel on Justice and Public Safety adopted resolutions urging the Appropriations Committee not to accept the cuts they identified.

"We're saying we don't believe in what we've done," said Sen. Marvin Ward, D-Forsyth, co-chairman of the education subcommittee.

The resolution adopted by the panel says the education subcommittee "has the gravest concerns that these proposed reductions, especially those that would increase class sizes, ... would result in irreparable harm to the education system of the state of North Carolina."

However, the cuts may be needed because legislative analysts have estimated that state revenues in 1983-84 will be about $92.7 million below Gov. Jim Hunt's projections.

Hunt predicted that revenues will grow 8.8 percent while legislative analysts say it will grow 7 percent. The difference rests on a disagreement about when the recession will end, how strong the recovery will be and how long the recovery will last.

Ward noted that the Legislature could avoid cuts if the economy picks up or taxes are increased, adding that it was unlikely the Legislature would need to lay off people in the schools.

The 3 percent cuts would generate enough money to lift the freeze on teachers' and state employees' salaries. But members of the education subcommittee said they don't want to lay off teachers to raise other teachers' salaries.

"In my opinion we have to lift the freeze," said Rep. Jo Graham Foster, D-Mecklenburg. "We can't go like this another year."

"It concerns me that we would under any circumstance consider increasing the classroom size," said Sen. Jim Edwards D-Caldwell.

Ward noted that the 2,500 jobs affected by the cuts would not mean 2,500 layoffs because many teachers will move or retire. He said the jobs affected include about 1,300 public school teachers, 450 school aides, 250 community college teachers and 450 university professors.

The proposed public school cuts amount to $47.6 million in 1983-84 and $46.3 million in 1984-85. They would affect textbook purchases, bus replacements, administrative jobs, testing programs, instructional supplies and student-teacher ratios in kindergarten and grades 1 through 12.

The proposed community college cuts amount to $6.3 million in each year of the biennium. Among the programs they would affect are those for new industry training, visiting artists, apprentices, college transfers and adult high school students.

The proposed University of North Carolina cuts come to $18.1 million in 1983-84 and $18.4 million in 1984-85. They would affect the student-teacher ratio, Area Health Education Centers, administrative jobs and North Carolina Memorial Hospital.

In the justice subcommittee, members recommended the 1 percent cutback but noted that further reductions would hurt the administration of justice.

Franklin Freeman, director of the Administrative Office of the Courts, said he was concerned that his staff was being cut at a time when legislators want to crack down on drunken drivers and people who fail to pay child support.

He noted that the 2 percent cutback would eliminate about 60 positions affecting half the counties in the state. The 3 percent cutback would eliminate 103 jobs and that would affect almost every county, he said.

"The positions were set by the General Assembly and every one of them is politically sensitive," he said. "A member of this body in years past got a special bill to create them."

The cuts would drop $2.6 million in each year of the biennium and would affect operations and salary reserves in addition to specific positions.

Among the positions affected would be four District Court judges, two Superior Court judges and various juvenile court counselors, magistrates, deputy court clerks, court reporters and assistant district attorneys.

The Subcommittee on Human Resources' vote to trim $2.5 million in anticipation of increased federal block grants drew criticism from Department of Human Resources officials.

Budget analyst Charlotte Ashcraft said an extra $1 million was expected in maternal and child health grants, with an added $500,000 for the Child Welfare Services Office and $1 million for the Division of Social Services.

However, Ernest Spence of the Office of State Budget's human resources division said such cuts would reduce services.

"We've reduced the budgets down to the block grant money and now we're going to get a little bit more," he said. "We're trying to get services back up to where they were several years ago."

The panel also recommended that a proposed $300,000 increase to administer federal funds for the low-income energy assistance program be shifted to fund program services.

More debate erupted when the panel considered cutting vacant positions in Social Services and occupied positions in North Carolina's schools for the deaf and blind.

Ms. Ashcraft pointed out that while the social services jobs are federally funded, the money could be used elsewhere in the department.

But Deputy Human Resources Secretary Lucy Bode said cutting positions was unwise even though her department did not intend to fill them in the near future.

"Reducing those positions could reduce our options," she said. "It may really put North Carolina back. It's much harder to restore something than it is to cut it."

The subcommittee agreed to delay those cuts until Ms. Bode analyzed their impact.

The panel agreed to cut seven of 13 positions targeted for removal earlier this session in the schools for the blind and deaf.

Legislative analyst Bob Daughtry said the cuts in administrative personnel were needed because the number of deaf children — many coming from a rubella outbreak in the 1960s — was dropping.

Under the plan, two positions each would be removed from the North Carolina School for the Deaf in Morganton, the Governor Morehead School in Raleigh and Eastern North Carolina School for the Deaf in Wilson, with one position dropped at the school for the deaf in Greensboro.

Finally, the panel approved a proposal to increase the rent paid by many employees in housing near the state's psychiatric hospitals.

Daughtry said the rents would still be only 75 percent of market rates.

One Failure Stands Out

HOUSTON (AP) — Of the thousands of driver's license applicants flunked by Jim Alexander, one failure stands out — a prospective bus driver who flattened a parked pickup truck.

"He just looked at that pickup," said Alexander, a trooper with the Texas Department of Public Safety. "He didn't have much to say."

Alexander, who has been testing applicants since 1967, says he can now sense when some people aren't quite ready to drive.

"You'll ask them to hit the left turn signal and they'll hit the windshield wipers," he said. "That's when I know I need to start worrying about my safety. I've jumped out of a few cars over the years when the drivers forgot about their clutches."

Another time, a driver he was testing came within a split second of causing a pileup on Interstate 45.

"I finally got her stopped on the shoulder and she was already crying," he said. "I preferred to walk back to the office, and I was proud to have the chance. She just wanted to sit in the car and cry until someone from her family came and drove her home."

Alexander fails about a fifth of the drivers he tests, but says it's not hard to break the news.

"I've done them a service. I've let them know they aren't prepared yet to drive," he said.

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

I WILL CRY OUT UNTO THE LORD

THE PATRIARCHS AND THE PROPHETS OF OLD TOOK ALL THEIR JOYS AND SORROWS TO THE LORD IN PRAYER. THEY WERE COMPLETELY CONVINCED THAT GOD HEARD ALL THEIR UTTERANCES WHETHER OF SADNESS OR OF REJOICING. WE CAN SAY THE BOOK OF PSALMS HAD ITS BEGINNINGS IN THE PETITIONS OF THESE EARLY WORSHIPERS. IT TOOK MANY, MANY, CENTURIES BEFORE THIS BOOK OF SACRED POETRY WAS FORMULATED. PRAYER SEEMS INSTINCTIVE WITH ALL MEN, AND IN HIS EXTREMITY OF NEED MAN CRIES OUT TO GOD. "DRAW NIGH TO GOD," SAYS THE PSALMIST, AND THIS WAS WHAT MEN SOUGHT TO DO. EVEN JESUS RESORTED TO PRAYER FROM THE PSALMS ON MANY OCCASIONS. HE FREQUENTLY PRAYED BEFORE MEALS OR BEFORE THE WORKING OF MIRACLES. EVEN HIS HUMAN NATURE IS EVIDENT IN PRAYER IN THE GARDEN OF GETHSEME AND ALSO ON THE CROSS. "MY GOD, MY GOD, WHY HAST THOU FORSAKEN ME?" THIS UTTERANCE FROM JESUS ON THE CROSS WAS THE START OF PSALM 22:1. HOW MANY PROPHETS BEFORE JESUS MADE THIS SAME CRY CAN NEVER BE KNOWN. PATRIARCHS, PROPHETS, KINGS, POOR MEN, ALL KNEW THAT COMMUNION WITH GOD WOULD BRING THEM THE HELP THEY NEEDED.

Religious Oppression Runs High

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

Religious rights are being trampled in 24 of the world's nations, but there are scattered areas of improvements, says a summary of data gathered from around the globe.

While suppression has increased in some countries, it has lessened in others, making 1982 "on balance, a good religious year," the report says.

Nevertheless, in some places "your beliefs could still cost you your life," says the report compiled by A.D., an official monthly published jointly by the United Church of Christ and the United Presbyterian Church.

The third such annual study, it was based on questionnaire responses from governments, religious centers, denominations and councils, academic researchers and human rights groups, as well as news reports and staff interviews in many countries.

"This year's survey is the most thorough we have ever done," says James A. Gittings, the magazine's editor-at-large who compiled the report.

It lists 13 "worst cases" — nations where "citizens are extremely curtailed in their capacities to be faithful to dictates of their faiths." Albania, North Korea, Iran, Afghanistan, Guatemala, Ethiopia, El Salvador, Czechoslovakia, the Soviet Union, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Turkey and Pakistan.

On the other hand, the listed Communist nations "apply a systemic bias against religion," while in Turkey and Pakistan ethnic

These "worst cases" display mixed grounds for opposing religion or aspects of it, the report notes, with "supposed religious links to political or revolutionary struggle" claimed in Guatemala, El Salvador and the Philippines.

For a change, Argentina no longer was listed as hostilities figure in the difficulties for Christian minorities, the report says.

Besides the "terrible 13" countries, the report says religious freedom also is "severely abridged in at least 11 additional states, including Vietnam, Burma, Guyana, Nepal, South Korea, South Africa, Taiwan, Syria, Israel, Chile and Uruguay."

For a change, Argentina no longer was listed as oppressive because "the intensity of politically derived repression of religious leaders has mitigated in that country since the loss of the Falklands war," the report said.

But the Philippines, previously listed as free, was put on the "worst" list because of the government jailings and beatings of priests for social protests, the report said.

It said that in Israel, Orthodoxy is increasing its hold on religious affairs, restricting "free exercise of religion by non-Orthodox Jews, Moslems, Christians."

"Good news is also part of the religious picture," the report says, citing indications of a "thaw" in attitudes and practices of some Marxist states toward religion.

The change is "slow moving, much more a process than a direct result of decisions," the report says, adding that various factors seemed behind the shift, including:

"The fading of both revolutionary political dogmatism and memories of early ... mistakes, a more realistic reading of the strength of religion, the demonstrated capacity of religious persons to be good socialist citizens."

"Whatever the causes, the church of East Germany enjoys increasing freedom and confidence. Hungarian churches exercise similar liberty. The Polish church has clearly been tested in strength and not found wanting, and the church of China appears to have emerged from the persecutions ... with considerable strength."

To a lesser degree, the situation appears improving in Rumania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia, the report said, but said Czechoslovakia still "presents the door visage to religion that once was the Marxist norm."

"The Soviet Union's glacial official attitude toward religion continues. Believers who will not register their societies are still persecuted. On the other hand, religious life, despite its difficulties, is 'upbeat' in the Soviet Union and churches are full."

Dedicating New Church In Farmville On Sunday

FARMVILLE CHURCH TO BE DEDICATED ... The Farmville United Methodist Church building will be dedicated this Sunday with Bishop William R. Cannon, resident bishop of the Raleigh area as the speaker. The building was constructed from 1970-72.

FARMVILLE — The dedication service for the Farmville United Methodist Church will be held Sunday at 11 a.m. with Bishop William Cannon, resident bishop of the Raleigh area, preaching the sermon.

Special guests will include the Rev. J.B. Parvin, Greenville district superintendent; the Rev. Jack Hunter, Rocky Mount district supervisor and pastor when the present church was built, and several former pastors and their families.

A covered dish dinner will follow the service.

The First Methodist Church was started in Farmville in 1901, with the first sermon preached in the old academy building across the street from the present Emmanuel Episcopal Church on Walnut Street.

The Rev. A.D. Butts of Ayden and the Rev. H.M.

Eure of Greenville organized the church in 1902, preaching in a one-room school building on Main Street. The first church was built in 1903 on the corner of West Church and Fields streets and was dedicated in 1905.

In 1924 a new building was constructed on the corner of Church and Walnut streets and this church was dedicated in 1935.

In 1968 a four-and-one-half acre site at the intersection of West Church and Wilson streets was purchased for the present church and ground was broken in October of 1970. A consecration service was held in January of 1972 and the building will be dedicated this Sunday.

According to the Rev. Dennis Ricks Jr., pastor of the church, the building, which cost over $952,000, is now debt-free.

Couples Learn Adopt Realism

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Married couples are becoming more tolerant and realistic toward marital stress and that has led to a decline in the nation's divorce rate for the first time in 20 years, researchers say.

Psychologist Ann Weber and sociologist Phillis Otti of the University of North Carolina at Asheville say more couples are realizing marital success depends more on "learnable skills and pragmatic behavior" than luck or innate talent.

The divorce rate declined from 5.3 per 1,000 population in November 1981 to 5.1 per 1,000 in November 1982, the latest Census Bureau figures show.

Ms. Otti and Ms. Weber are collaborating on a study of 50 couples — married and unmarried — and their success or failure in their relationships over a one-year period.

Ms. Otti said she has developed a model to gauge what she considers five key factors in any relationship: compatibility, motivation, expectations, coping skills and environmental stress.

She said motivation appears to be the most important factor keeping couples together.

"We went through a period when marriage was romanticized," she said. "Then in the 1970s we saw singlehood glamorized. Today people are re-examining the 'grass is greener on the other side' outlook. As a result, many couples are more motivated to keep their marriages together."

Ms. Weber said the study shows that couples today are more aware of skills needed to make a marriage work.

"We've been doing research on relationship dynamics for 20 years, but only recently has it been translated into practical skills," she said.

For example, she said, couples are more likely to seek counseling today than in the past.

"If you're motivated you will find a way, you will find the skills," Ms. Weber said.

Life As It's Lived

That Age For Defining What Little Boys Are

By GAIL MICHAELS

"Little boys like mud," Zachary told me one afternoon at Meg's soccer practice. He had been playing with several other small children on a playground adjacent to the practice field where I was watching Meg attempt to aim the ball within 30 feet of her target.

But Zachary's announcement diverted my attention. I looked down to find him covered with mud up to his knees. "I found a puddle," he explained. "Little boys like puddles."

In the past few weeks Zachary and I have discovered many things that little boys like and dislike. In a way we have actually been defining what little boys are. And this is very important to Zachary because in his mind he has only recently graduated from being a baby.

The transition has not been easy. Suddenly, the pacifier, which had previously been relegated to bedtime, has again become an object of intense desire. My lap is now rarely unoccupied. And I can't stand still for more than two seconds without being confronted with two upheld arms and the urgent supplication, "Hold Me!"

This clinging, I suppose, compensates for Zachary's strides in independence. With the exception of forgetting to pull up his underpants before he pulls up his jeans, he is fully toilet trained. He now insists upon being the one to unfasten the restraints on his carseat, and he also has to dress himself, with the exception of putting on his socks. Doing socks, he has concluded, is big boy work, as is cleaning up rooms and taking showers, and he has no intention of becoming one of these beleaguered creatures just yet.

He resents any encroachments upon his liberty. He knows, for instance, that he had better come when I start counting, but he always waits until "two," and he always feels compelled to scream as he finds his way to me. "Don't count!" And if he does get punished for something, he has a tendency to toss his head and sniff. "I don't care."

"I don't care," is what little boys say when they are threatened with losing out on dessert if they don't behave matter what their sisters say, are not pests.

Most decidedly, little boys know what they are supposed to eat.

"Rabbits eat carrots," Zachary declared last night at supper. "Little boys don't."

Zachary wrinkled his nose. "Rats and bugs eat broccoli. Little boys don't."

"What do little boys eat?" I asked.

He grinned. "Candy."

Arnie's Army Again Marching In Georgia

By WILL GRIMSLEY

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Legends die hard.

Arnold Palmer, 53, squinting through gold-rimmed spectacles, thinning silver hair framing that boyish nut-brown face, has reached down and pulled new miracles from a reservoir of what had been only stirring memories.

And Arnie's Army is running amok again. "For me, the loyalty and encouragement of the fans are bigger and better than ever," the old charger from Latrobe, Pa., said after shooting a 4-under-par 68 Thursday in the opening round of the Masters golf tournament.

"I get more letters, I sign more autographs, I have more commercial commitments than I ever had back in the 60s.

"I feel great."

It was immaterial that Ray Floyd, Dr. Gil Morgan and young Jack Renner shared the tournament lead with 5-under-par 67s.

It was Arnie's day, and apparently it is not his last.

Asked pointedly if he felt capable of winning a fifth Masters title, he responded huskily:

"Damn right."

Then Palmer began explaining how his once robust power game had begun to deteriorate after he reached into his 40s, how he himself had become discouraged and bored and several times contemplated retirement.

The last of his 61 tour victories came in the Bob Hope Classic in 1973.

"After a few disappointing tournaments, I thought I might just hang it up," he said, "and get my exercise by running."

Then suddenly something happened that brought an astounding renaissance.

Just before the Los Angeles Open in January, a friend introduced him to a new driver with a head soaked in oil and the Arnie of old emerged.

"I was getting 25 yards and more, sometimes up to 50, on my drives," he said. "I led at LA with nine holes to play before getting tired."

He dropped into a tie for 10th. But at San Diego in mid-February he had 19 birdies and an eagle.

"I was encouraged and inspired," he said. "I was sure I could be competitive again."

"I had made this a question mark year. If I had a bad year, I decided I would limit myself to a few senior tournaments."

Arnie said he felt fresh and strong when he checked in for his 29th Masters but had trouble setting up in a comfortable position.

"I was with Tom Watson on the practice tee Tuesday," he added. "Tom also noticed that my lower body seemed to lock up on the swing. He helped me to straighten it out."

"Teasing off, I was more comfortable and sure of myself than I had been in years."

Palmer said his determination to succeed was fed in part by the intense enthusiasm of his multitude of fans, who stuck by him in his lowest period.

"I kept getting a lot of letters from people who told me never to quit," he said. "They said they were behind me no matter how badly I played or how often I lost."

The term "Arnie's Army" was coined by a reporter at Augusta when Palmer was at his peak — a belt-tightening, glove-tugging charger who seemed capable of grabbing a course by the throat and choking it to death.

The more flamboyant journalists compared him to a cowboy hero who rides up on a horse and rescues a damsel in distress at the last moment. Emerging at the time golf was discovered by the TV networks, the macho Pennsylvanian became the idol of housewives and teenagers.

Palmer is always aware of the presence of his Army.

"I saw the gallery pick up after I birdied two and three," he said. "It started thinning when I bogeyed 10. Things got awfully quiet. Then I birdied 14 and 15 and I found out they hadn't gone home yet."

Palmer said he could feel his game eroding some 10 years ago.

"I didn't give myself a chance," he said. "I had a lot of outside interests. I didn't practice. I would rush to a tournament and, if I didn't make the cut, I'd wait for the next one."

"It's different now. Two or three years ago, I felt the fire coming back. I wanted to play again. I run three miles every morning, exercise, work three hours in the office and then play golf. I sleep soundly."

"Golf is no longer a drudge. I enjoy it again."

Although a successful businessman with a score of lush commercial contracts, Palmer is driven by a single financial goal.

Palmer Wows 'Em At Augusta

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Two veterans and a young lion shared the first-round lead, but the resurgence of an old hero, Arnold Palmer, quickened the pulse of the Masters Golf Tournament.

Palmer, the 53-year-old living legend who built his popularity by winning this event four times, brought Arnie's Army back to life Thursday.

Their noise and enthusiasm virtually drowned out the 5-under-par exploits of the leaders — former champion Raymond Floyd, Gil Morgan and Jack Renner, who tied at 67.

Palmer was one shot back at 68, his best round on the 6,905-yard Augusta National Golf Club course since posting a similar score in 1965.

"Damn right," Palmer said when he was asked if he could win a record-tying fifth Masters title.

"I want to win, or not play at all," he said, alluding to the status of his overall game. "Either get on, or get off."

He got it on Thursday because of a new driver and some advice from Tom Watson.

He said the driver was helping his distance an average of 25 yards and that Watson helped him correct a flaw in his hip movement during a practice round Tuesday.

"I'm not eliminating the possibility I'll have a poor round tomorrow, but I feel more confident about going out and playing," Palmer said.

The round was interrupted by a 40-minute rain delay, but the swirling winds that normally test the Masters field never developed.

Because of those conditions, half of the 82-man international field came in at par or better, 28 of those with subpar rounds.

Five-time Masters champion Jack Nicklaus wasn't in the top half of the field.

Neither was Gary Player, nor Sam Snead, the 70-year-old star of another era who had announced this would be his final fling at Augusta.

Nicklaus never got anything going and struggled in with a 73, a figure matched by Player, the South African who has three Masters titles.

Snead shot 79 and immediately withdrew.

"I'd have to shoot 67 or 68 to make the cut and I couldn't do that if they let me putt in from 14," Snead said. "So, I'm down the road."

Renner, the 26-year-old Californian who had never before broken 70 in three previous Masters appearances, put together a string of 36 consecutive 3s beginning on the 12th hole, including eagles on the par-5 13th and 15th holes and birdies on the par-4 14th and 17th.

Renner said that in the last year he added 8-10 yards on his drives, which has made a big difference on the par 5s.

It's changed his game on the longer Augusta National holes from a "no-go situation to a go-for-it situation," he said.

Renner used 4-woods to set up long putts for both eagles — scoring from 45 feet at No. 13 and from 30 feet at No. 15.

"I'm tickled to death to open up in contention," Floyd said.

"I think the first round is critical. It allows you to go out and play."

Floyd's round included one bogey when he missed a 7-foot par saving putt at No. 10 and six birdies. He won the 1976

Masters title.

Morgan, the only two-time winner on this year's tour with victories at Tucson and Los Angeles, claimed his share of the lead by sinking a 35-foot putt on the 18th hole in twilight.

"I was pretty excited when that one went in," Morgan said. "I thought it (the round) was going to get away from me."

Morgan, who didn't start his round until after the rain delay, left his approach to 18 off the green near a television tower and was forced to make the long putt after a poor pitch.

"It's a new feeling for me," Morgan said of sharing the lead. "But I feel like my game has been in pretty good shape all year."

Four other players were grouped with Palmer at 68 — amateur James Hallet, 1980 champion Seve Ballesteros of Spain, J.C. Snead and Charles Coody, who won this event in 1971.

Defending champion Craig Stadler and Bruce Lietzke were deadlocked at 69 and 11 others were tied at 70, including two-time champion Watson, former champion Fuzzy Zoeller, Tom Kite and Calvin Peete.

East Carolina Women Earn Split In Softball Twinbill With FSU

By WOODY PEELE

Reflector Sports Editor

East Carolina University's Lady Pirates came away with a split with Florida State in a pair of softball games yesterday afternoon. The Pirates took the opener, 2-0, but then fell in the second game, 5-4.

Florida State, twice defending national AIAW champions, are 32-5 on the season and generally regarded as the top slow-pitch softball team in the country. Official rankings of slow-pitch teams was halted this year since the AIAW has folded and the NCAA does not have championship competition for slow-pitch, only for fast-pitch.

East Carolina did all of its damage in the first inning of both games, holding the Lady Noles scoreless in the first contest — the fifth straight shutout the Lady Pirates had recorded. But in the second game, after taking a 4-0 lead, the Pirates saw FSU come back and finally push ahead in the fifth inning after scoring three runs.

"It was a good team effort," Coach Sue Manahan said. "The key thing is that we have to learn we can beat the best and we did that today."

"When they started to hit, we didn't give up. We tried to come back." Several times, the Lady Pirates got runners on back in the second game following their first inning action, but were unable to put anything together against the tight FSU defense.

East Carolina was somewhat handicapped by missing regular rightfielder Cynthia Shepard, missing because of the death of her grandmother. "Cyn is the sparkplug of the team," Manahan said. "She's a threat every time she comes to the plate. You can look at the North Carolina (doubleheader) and see that. She figured in both of the runs in that. Her speed makes her capable of advancing at any time."

"But, too, we're a team and one player doesn't make or break us," the coach added.

East Carolina scored twice in the first inning of the opener — all the runs that were to be scored in the game. Yvonne Williams got a one-out double and Fran Hooks reached on an error. Mitzi Davis hit a sacrifice fly to score Williams and JoLanda Clayton's single brought Hooks to the plate, who scored when the FSU catcher dropped the ball on the slide home.

FSU didn't get a baserunner until the third and had only two hits off Jeanette Roth.

STIHL® 015 CHAIN SAW. $190 and bonus pack

In the second contest, ECU grabbed a 4-0 lead in the first frame. Williams reached on a fielder's choice and Hooks reached when her grounder was misplayed at second. Davis then tripled in both runners and scored on Clayton's single. Robin Graves moved Clayton to third with a hit and she scored on a sacrifice fly by Tamara Franks.

FSU got back into the game with two runs in the third. Pitcher Susan Painter singled and with two away, LeAnn Harrell singled. Teresa Collins then doubled in both runners.

In the fifth, the Lady Noles pushed ahead with three runs. Kelly Tillman opened with a single and Amy Snider ran for her, moving up on an infield out. She scored on Darby Cottle's single, and Harrell then singled. Collins doubled again, driving in both runners to give FSU the 5-4 lead that won it.

Collins, Cottle and Harrell each had two hits in the second game for FSU while Davis and Sherry Stout each had two for ECU. No one had more than one hit in the first game for either team.

"What makes them Number One is that they have 13 full scholarships," Manahan said. "Nobody else can approach that. They have an $86,000 budget and that doesn't include their grants. Nobody else has that."

"Our budget is only $17,000 and that includes everything. If you look at it from a dollar standpoint, they should not lose."

With the demise of the AIAW tournament, and the lack of a slow-pitch championship by the NCAA, ECU's prospects for post-season play are still not gone. "We have a state tournament, and then the ASA (American Softball Association) is sponsoring an invitational tournament," Manahan said.

Too, it will probably be the final year of slow pitch for the Lady Pirates. "North Carolina has already committed to go to fast pitch and N.C. State, we understand, is dropping softball in favor of soccer next year. But we'll be ready for fast pitch. We've already recruited with that in mind."

East Carolina, now 12-5, returns to action today in the

Panthers, Huber Dump Tabor City

ROBERSONVILLE — North Pitt pushed over five runs just before the rain pushed the game off the field and took a 5-0 win over Tabor City last night.

The victory gave North Pitt third place in the Roanoke Easter Baseball Tournament.

The championship game, between Williamston and Plymouth, was postponed until tonight by the rains.

The game was a scoreless tie through the first four and a half innings as North Pitt's Junior Huber kept Tabor City off the bases, allowing only one hit — that a first inning single by Darrell Fowler. Huber struck out two and walked one during the five-inning contest.

In the bottom of the fifth, with one away, Ken Whitehurst insured the Panther victory with a solo home run. But North Pitt wasn't through yet.

Daniel Keel singled and Brian Briley doubled him to third. A double by Huber scored Keel and Barry Strickland walked to load the bases. Lee Manning doubled in Briley and Huber, and another two-bagger by Jay Hines plated Strickland with the fifth run.

The game was called at the end of the frame, giving North Pitt the win.

Hines, Whitehurst and Briley each had two hits for the Panthers, now 6-4 on the year.

North Pitt returns to action on Tuesday, hosting Farmville Central in an Eastern Carolina Conference game.

Swan Throws Curve Balls That Catch Phillies Off-Guard, 6-2

By The Associated Press
Craig Swan threw the Philadelphia Phillies a curve — in more ways than one.

Swan, a fastball-slider pitcher until he developed shoulder problems several years ago, said he developed a curveball during the off-season "just to show it, and here we are getting batters out with it."

Although he issued six walks, the New York Mets' veteran right-hander held the Phillies to three hits in 62-3 innings Thursday before giving way to Neil Allen, who preserved a 6-2 victory.

"I was throwing a curveball and I finally got some confidence in it," said Swan. "My fastball was so erratic I got into some trouble situations and the curve came through for me for the first time in my life."

In the day's only other National League games, the Montreal Expos downed the Chicago Cubs 7-3 and the Pittsburgh Pirates nipped the Houston Astros 3-2.

The Mets made it two in a row over Philadelphia by outpitching the Phillies 10-4 — the losers managed only nine hits and two runs in dropping two games, including Bobby Molinaro's pinch homer Thursday — while George Foster homered for New York and newcomer Danny Heep had two doubles and a single.

"I worry when we don't hit, even though it happens sometimes," said Philadelphia Manager Pat Corrales, whose club has five players on the disabled list, while center fielder Garry Maddox is out with a sprained ankle. "We're definitely going to make some changes based on nine hits in two games. We'll score runs, I promise you that. I'm not knocking Swan, but we're supposed to get more hits and runs off him than that."

Expos 7, Cubs 3
Tim Raines and Andre Dawson drove in two runs apiece — all unearned — in Montreal's four-run fourth inning, while Bill Gullickson scattered eight hits and struck out eight.

With one out in the fourth, Warren Cromartie reached on an error by second baseman Ryne Sandberg, stole second and went to third on a single by Doug Flynn. Gullickson sacrificed Flynn to second and Raines followed with a two-run single. After Bryan Little walked, Dawson looped a double down the right-field line for two more runs.

Flynn drove in Montreal's first run with a second-inning grounder, Gary Carter hit a sacrifice fly in the seventh and Jim Wohlford homered in the ninth.

Although the season has just begun, the Expos are all fired up over their pennant chances.

"In the past, I've picked the teams we had to beat," said Dawson, "but this time I think the rest of the division has to chase us. We feel we have a decent starting rotation and they can get the job done. There is no question about our capabilities on offense. Give us an opening and we'll take advantage."

Just as they did Thursday after Sandberg's error.

Pirates 3, Astros 2
Pittsburgh's Dale Berra led off the ninth inning with a game-tying home run and Lee Mazzilli drive in the winner with a single to rally the Pirates past the winless Astros. After Berra's homer, Steve Nicosia singled off Bob Knepper, who had blanked the Pirates since the first inning, and was forced at second by Lee Lacy. Lacy stole second, his third steal of the game, and scored when Mazzilli singled to center.

Rod Scurry, the third Pittsburgh pitcher, earned the victory with 12-3 innings of scoreless relief. He struck out Tony Scott, Omar Moreno and Dickie Thon after Alan Ashby opened the Houston ninth with a double.

"He always talked to me about Kansas — the tradition, atmosphere and history," Brown said. "It's really special."
Meanwhile, Blair said he didn't plan to change the Nets' style of play.
"The players don't have to adjust to me," said Blair, the coach at the University of Colorado before he became Brown's assistant.

Schuler in that capacity. Brown said he wanted to stay with the Nets until the completion of his second season, one in which the club already has qualified for the playoffs and is guaranteed its best record since joining the NBA during the 1976-77 season.

But Taub insisted. "Joe said he didn't want to go through another Perkins thing and be in limbo. I understand his thoughts and appreciate that," said Brown. He referred to former New York Giants head Coach Ray Perkins, who announced with three games remaining in the National Football League season that he was resigning at the end of the year to become coach at the University of Alabama. The Giants lost two of their final three games.

"It was hard to say 'yes' when it was finally given to me. If they (Kansas officials) said they hadn't made a decision yet, I would've stayed," said Brown, who left as UCLA's coach in 1960 to take over the Nets.

"I wouldn't consider just any job," he added. "Kansas is special. It had to be a special job."

Brown said his college coach, Dean Smith of North Carolina — who attended Kansas — taught him long ago that Kansas was a prime coaching job.

Colts' Schlichter Faces Gambling Investigation

BOSTON (AP) — Baltimore Colts quarterback Art Schlichter's status as a National Football League player was in doubt after a published report said he had gambled heavily on sports events and lost more than $350,000.

The Boston Globe reported in today's editions that when the former Ohio State star failed to cover all his losses and was threatened by the alleged bookmakers, he helped the FBI investigate four men who were charged Thursday with illegal gambling. The newspaper said its information came from sources close to the FBI probe.

An NFL official, while declining to confirm that Schlichter was the player involved, said the league was aware of the investigation and was cooperating with federal authorities.

"We have no further comment at this time, due to the pending status of the case," said Joe Browne, a public relations spokesman for the league.

Clauses in player contracts and league regulations specify that punitive action can be taken against players for gambling. Paul Hornung of the Green Bay Packers and Alex Karras of the Detroit Lions were suspended indefinitely before the 1963 season for betting on league games. Both sat out the entire season.

The same year, five other Detroit players were fined $2,000 each for betting $50 each on Green Bay to beat the New York Giants in the 1962 title game.

The Globe said Schlichter started placing bets with the four bookmakers in late 1962, but the paper said it could not learn whether the bets involved his team.

The Baltimore Evening Sun in a story Thursday did not identify Schlichter, but said an NFL player had lost $389,000 in bets on basketball games.

Efforts to locate Schlichter Thursday night failed. His father, Max, said at the family farm at Bloomingburg, Ohio, that his son was in Columbus, but he did not know how to contact him.

The Globe reported that when the 1962 season was over, Schlichter returned to the Columbus area, where he lived and had starred at Ohio State for four seasons, and continued to place bets by telephone to Baltimore. When the player could not cover his losses, the bookmakers threatened him, the paper said.

The Evening Sun said the player was told that his team would be informed of his gambling activities.

The Baltimore paper said the player had told FBI agents that the men were charging him at least $10,000 a week in interest on his losses.

Schlichter contacted law enforcement officials in Columbus and the FBI entered the case, suggesting that Schlichter offer to pay his debts as part of a scheme to trap his creditors at the Columbus airport on April 1, the paper said.

It is not known whether Schlichter was wired with a microphone or equipped with marked bills, as is customary procedure in such investigations.

But the Globe reported that the FBI was watching the airport rendezvous and arrested Harold E. Brooks Jr., Joseph Serio and Charles T. Swift at the scene after Schlichter allegedly passed the money to them.

The three, indicted along with a fourth man Thursday by a federal grand jury in Columbus, were to appear today in U.S. District Court in the Ohio city. The fourth man, identified as Samuel R. Alascia of Catonsville, Md., was picked up Thursday in Baltimore and was scheduled to appear in court on April 20.

Max Schlichter, asked if his son gambled, said, "Not that I know of. He went to the horse races like a lot of other people do."

He said he knew nothing about the reports and that, "I'd have thought the Colts would have called if they thought something was wrong."

The indictment against the four men alleged a gambling enterprise from January 1963 to April 1 and said sports betting lines, over the telephone, were run between Ohio and Maryland.

The indictment charged that Alascia, Brooks and Serio "would travel from Maryland to Columbus, Ohio, to attempt to collect moneys owed to them by virtue of said wagers."

It charged Swift with traveling to Columbus from Maryland to promote "a business enterprise involving gambling."

Schlichter, the Colts' top pick in the 1962 college player draft, and the fourth player selected, had been expected to be Baltimore's starting quarterback last season. But he was beaten out before the season began by Mike Pagen of Arizona State.

Ultimatum Leads Brown To Leave Nets For Kansas

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — As the New Jersey Nets filed past Larry Brown in the airport lobby, neither the players nor Brown knew that just a few hours later he would resign as their coach to head the basketball program at the University of Kansas.

Brown stayed behind, his future uncertain, when his team flew to Detroit Thursday to prepare for tonight's National Basketball Association game against the Pistons.

He was summoned to the Nets' offices for one final meeting with team owner Joe Taub, who said he issued an ultimatum: "Either stay with the Nets or resign to get the job in Kansas."

Brown said he then called Kansas Athletic Director Monte Johnson, who offered him the opportunity to coach the Jayhawks, the fourth-winningest team in college basketball history.

The 42-year-old Brown replaces Ted Owens, who was dismissed last month after 19 seasons as the Jayhawks' coach. Owens' 1962-63 club finished 13-16, its second straight losing season.

Bill Blair, one of Brown's assistants, becomes the Net's interim coach for the remainder of the regular season and the playoffs. General Manager Bob MacKinnon also will assume duties as an assistant coach, joining Mike

Augustine Gets Relief

By The Associated Press
Milwaukee's Jerry Augustine, a relief pitcher, found himself in an uncustomed role against the California Angels — as a starter. When the game ended, nobody was more relieved than Augustine.

"I was tired late. I hadn't gone this far in a long time," said the Brewers' left-hander after pitching eight shutout innings and surviving a shaky ninth before walking off the mound Thursday night with a complete-game 5-3 victory.

In other American League games, the New York Yankees battered Seattle 8-1, Cleveland routed Oakland 9-1, Minnesota nosed out Detroit 5-4 and Boston beat Toronto 7-4. Kansas City's game at Baltimore was rained out.

Augustine, who started only two of his 20 games in 1962 and against the Angels was starting for only the eighth time since being made a reliever in 1979, wound up back in the Brewers' rotation when Pete Vuckovich, last year's AL Cy Young Award winner, was discovered in spring training to be the victim of a torn rotator cuff.

"They say I'm starting for Pete, but there's no way I can fill his shoes," Augustine said. "He's one of the best in baseball. I just want to help any way I can."

For four innings he held the Angels hitless. For eight he had them baffled with a four-hitter. Then he weakened and gave up singles to Fred Lynn and Ron Jackson and a home run to Bobby Grich.

"I started pushing," Augustine said. "Whenever I got in trouble I tried to keep the ball down and in the park. I did it — until Grich in the ninth."

By then, the Brewers had built a 5-0 lead, partly on a two-run homer by Robin Yount and a solo shot by Gorman Thomas.

"You can't say enough about Augustine tonight," said Yount. "He hasn't gotten much of a chance in the past, and he pitched a great game."

Yankees 8, Mariners 1
Dave Winfield's third homer of the season, Steve Kemp's second and Butch Wynegar's first helped the Yankees win their first game of 1963.

"This feels good," Manager Billy Martin said. "The first one seems to be the hardest. Now, hopefully, we'll be on a roll. After you win a ballgame, you'll be a little more relaxed."

Dave Righetti pitched three-hit ball for 52-3 shutout innings and left with a 5-0 lead and George Frazier mopped up, allowing Seattle's only run in the ninth on a double by Julio Cruz.

Indians 9, A's 1
Andre Thornton had two singles, a double and a homer and drove in four runs — he has eight RBI already — as the Indians mauled Oakland. Len Barker scattered six hits in seven innings while Cleveland chased Tom Underwood after 11-3 innings.

Thornton had an RBI single in the first inning and another one in a five-run second and ripped his two-run homer in the fifth.

Twins 5, Tigers 4
Larry Herndon didn't have the best of days in left field for Detroit.

In the first inning he watched John Castino's shot sail over the wall for a homer. And in the third when Ron Washington hit a fly ball he could get his glove on, Herndon dropped it for a three-base error and the two runs that gave the Twins their victory.

Kent Hrbek and Gary Gaetti walked and Hrbek went to third on Randy Bush's forceout. Hrbek scored on a wild pitch and after Jerry Ujdur issued his third walk of the inning, Herndon dropped Washington's drive for the pivotal error.

"It was about time we got a break," said Minnesota Manager Billy Gardner. They got all the breaks the first two days."

Red Sox 7, Blue Jays 3
Carl Yastrzemski got back into the swing of things for Boston, along with Dave Stapleton and Dwight Evans.

Yaz, starting what will be his final season in the majors, hit a two-run single in the first inning and Stapleton followed with a three-run homer that started the Red Sox on their way to a split of their season-opening series with Toronto.

Evans contributed a two-run homer in the fourth inning as Boston built a 7-3 lead, but John Tudor, struggling from the opening inning, couldn't last the minimum five innings for the victory. Bob Stapley took over and was the winner.

Tudor gave up homers by Cliff Johnson and Jesse Barfield.

Hostetler Wins Playoff

Henry Hostetler was the winner of the Thursday Night Amateur Tournament at the Greenville Putt-Putt.

Hostetler won a sudden death playoff on the first hole over Jimmy Silverthorne. The two had tied with one-under-par rounds of 71 at the end of the two-round tournament.

Wally Jordan finished third.

Richmond Breaks Mark In Leading The Pack

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Tim Richmond took a wild ride Thursday at Darlington International Raceway as he broke the track qualifying record on the way to winning the pole position for the TransSouth 500 Grand National stock car race.

The 27-year-old driver with the movie star looks and a heavy foot negotiated the treacherous 1.366-mile oval in his sleek Pontiac LeMans in only 31.160 seconds — an average speed of 157.818 mph.

The old mark of 155.866 mph was set by Benny Parsons in April 1980.

That record was shattered Thursday, with six of the 18 first-day qualifiers for Sunday's race eclipsing it.

Darrell Waltrip, the two-time defending Winston Cup champion, off to a slow start this season, took the outside spot on the front row at 156.916 in a Chevrolet Monte Carlo Super Sport.

Geoff Bodine, driving a Pontiac Grand Prix, and Joe Ruttman, in a Buick Regal, grabbed the second row with laps of 156.467 and 156.204, respectively.

Harry Gant was next in a Buick at 155.971, followed by Lake Speed at 155.897 in a Buick.

"I darn near crashed on my first lap, and that was the quickest one," Richmond said, referring to the first of his two qualifying laps. "I made my entry into the fourth corner too early and I really wasn't comfortable. That mistake almost put me up into the wall.

"I'd love to have seen what that lap would have been if I hadn't made that mistake."

He managed to keep the car under control during the second lap, and turned in the second best lap of the day at 157.489.

Waltrip, winner of this race in 1979 and 1981, was the only driver to come close to Richmond's quick lap. He made only one circuit of the track and wound up just .239-second behind.

"I made up my mind I was going to run only one lap," he said. "I figured I'd make or break it in one lap. Besides, that's as long as I can hold my breath."

The fast qualifiers appeared to agree the big jump in speed here since the Southern 500 last September was a combination of factors, including a newly developed Goodyear tire, the talent of the engine builders on NASCAR's top teams, the aerodynamics of the 1983 model cars, and an excellent track surface.

Noting that 23 of 59 Grand National pole-sitters at Darlington have gone on to win the race, Richmond grinned.

"I know it's a good place to be on this track because so many things seem to happen in the back of the pack here," noted Richmond, who won his first pole a year ago at Bristol, Tenn., and also won a pair of races at Riverside, Calif. "It's going to be nice to see all that open track in front of me at the start."

Postlewait Shares Lead With Daniel

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Kathy Postlewait and Beth Daniel each shot first-round 6-under-par 67s to lead the field into the second round of the $200,000 J&B Scotch Pro-Am LPGA golf tournament.

The leaders were to play on the more difficult par-72 Desert Inn course today after gaining first-round leads on the easier par-73 Las Vegas Country Club course.

Daniel, who had a flawless round with six birdies and no bogeys, wasn't satisfied with her performance Wednesday.

"I could have been a bit lower because the conditions were perfect for golf," said Daniel.

Daniel, who led last week's Nabisco-Dinah Shore Invitational after three rounds before soaring to a final round 76 to lose to Amy Alcott, said she wasn't thinking about any collapse this week.

"I'm not going to dwell on it and am just going to move on and forget about last Sunday," she said.

Postlewait, who has never won a tournament in 10 years on the LPGA tour, tied the course record for the front nine at the Las Vegas Country Club with a 5-under-par 31 on birdies at the third, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth holes. She also birdied 11 and 12 to go seven under at that stage.

But she overshot the green on the 13th hole into a bunker and made her only bogey.

Sharon Barrett shot a 4-under-par 68 on the Desert Inn course, starting quickly with three consecutive birdies with putts of 10 feet and two of 25 feet.

"I putted real well," said the former Tulsa University star. "And that was because I was working hard all year on my putting."

Tied at 69 were South African Alison Sheard, Anna-Marie Palli of France, Vicki Ferguson and Stephanie Farwig.

Veteran Judy Rankin, Shelly Hamlin and Donna White were next with 70s, one shot ahead of defending champion Nancy Lopez and Jan Stephenson.

Alcott, who won the $55,000 first prize in last week's tournament, could manage only a par 72 on the DI course along with 1982 player of the year Joann Carner and Kathy Whitworth, who is seeking her 85th tour victory.

Tax Break Measure Breezes Through N. C. Senate

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The state Senate enacted a tax break Thursday allowing General Assembly members to claim up to $50 a day — including weekends — in state income tax deductions.

The bill, which drew some comment in the House, was approved by the Senate, 31-10.

Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, said the bill would bring North Carolina in line with a 1981 revision in the federal law. It allows lawmakers to deduct an amount equal to the money they spent in Raleigh for food and lodging during the session.

It also allows them to deduct a standard amount, $30 a day allowed federal workers or $35 a day allowed state workers, rather than keeping extensive records as required under the old law. Lawmakers who spend more than that may continue to itemize.

"This will not cost the state anything," Rauch said in an interview. "It might benefit some legislators, but others might do worse than before. But nobody's going to make any money off this."

In other legislative action:

Arrest Expunction

A bill to let adults without criminal convictions erase any record of their arrests won tentative state Senate approval after heated debate.

Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, said the bill, approved 28-18 on its second reading, would help clear the reputations of innocent citizens who might otherwise have trouble getting jobs. Under current law, someone may only have arrest records erased after three years without criminal conduct.

The final reading of the bill was expected today.

Sen. Gerry Hancock, D-Durham, applauded the intentions of the bill but warned against "rewriting history."

"You cannot erase history, you can only distort it," he said.

Hancock said the bill would remove records of some who are repeatedly arrested, comparing the situation with that of gangster Al Capone.

He said that while Capone was widely known for his illegal activities, his only conviction came for income tax evasion.

Hancock asked Swain whether John Hinckley Jr., who was found not guilty by reason of insanity in the assault on President Reagan, could have his record expunged.

Swain said he would not, then immediately called for a vote on the bill.

Ridge Law

A bill aimed at limiting high-rise construction on mountain ridges won approval of the Senate Judiciary I Committee.

The bill was amended to prohibit placement of tall towers on buildings that meet height requirements of the bill.

Sen. R.P. "Bo" Thomas, D-Henderson, introduced the measure to limit to 35 feet or three stories construction on ridges 2,950 feet above sea level. It would not apply to government buildings, utility or television towers.

Local governments in the 25 counties covered by the bill could choose to override the proposed law. Sen. Robert Swain, D-Buncombe, said an amendment would be introduced in the Senate to spell out the conditions for overriding the law.

Waste Compact

The Senate approved and sent to the House a bill that would let North Carolina join other states in a compact to share responsibility for low-level radioactive wastes.

Sen. Russell Walker, D-Randolph, said the bill will reduce the chance that North Carolina will have a disposal site on state soil, adding that under federal law each state is responsible for wastes it generates.

Under the proposed compact, a commission with members from eight states would decide where to put wastes once a site in Barnwell, S.C., is closed in 1992. Walker said Virginia, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi and Alabama are expected to join the plan.

Each state would pay $25,000 as an initiation fee, but the cost of waste disposal would be borne by waste producers, Walker said.

Child Porn

A select Senate committee voted to send to the full Senate a bill cracking down on child pornography in North Carolina.

The bill would make anyone encouraging the filming of sexual acts by children under age 16 guilty of a felony. People who manufacture, deliver, or display such material would be equally guilty.

The committee adopted one change, lowering from 18 to 16 the age for which a person could be prosecuted for violating the law.

Basketball

Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake, introduced a resolution honoring North Carolina State's NCAA basketball championship and the state's long-standing basketball tradition.

The resolution also honors the University of North Carolina for its national championship last year, when the General Assembly was not in session and could not officially celebrate the victory.

It notes that seven North Carolina teams have made it to the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament's final four in the past 10 years, in which time four state teams reached the National Invitation Tournament final four.

PCB

Rep. Frank Ballance, D-Warren, introduced a bill to appropriate $1 million to Warren County to compensate for location of a PCB landfill there.

The bill also designates how the money should be spent — $350,000 for industrial development, 350,000 for a water system in Afton, $200,000 for health needs and $100,000 for recreational and cultural programs.

In the bill, Ballance notes that, "the orderly, environmentally sound economic growth of Warren County has been adversely affected by the polychlorinated biphenyl landfill being installed..." He said the state was made safer at the potential risk to local citizens.

Outpatient Commitment

A bill that would make it possible to involuntarily commit a mentally ill person without proving he is dangerous was criticized as inefficient and unconstitutional.

The bill would remove the requirement that a patient be proven dangerous before being committed and would not require that he be represented by an attorney at the hearing.

Supporters say allowing commitment when a patient is likely to become dangerous as a result of refusing prescribed medications will protect the patients and the public.

But Deborah Greenblatt of the Carolina Legal Association for the Mentally Handicapped said it is impossible for a psychiatrist to predict dangerousness and that failing to require an attorney is unconstitutional.

Room Tax

Reps. Charles Beall, D-Haywood, and Martin Nesbitt,

D-Buncombe, pleaded for permission to levy hotel and motel room taxes in their counties, while opponents warned that the taxes would spread across the state and harm the tourism trade.

The lawmakers told the House Finance Committee that a 2 percent sales tax would provide revenue to promote tourism in their areas, which have no other industry.

A bill that would levy a similar tax in Mecklenburg County also is before the committee.

Ernest O'Banion, vice president of the Travel Council of North Carolina, said the absence of an occupancy tax was one reason why tourism was increasing in North Carolina and decreasing in many nearby states.

Auditor's Office

State Auditor Ed Renfrow presented the House Judiciary II Committee a comprehensive plan to restate the duties of his office, emphasizing what he called the necessity of being independent of other state departments.

The proposal is contained in a bill sponsored by Rep. Richard Wright, D-Columbus.

"This bill in no way impairs our ability to audit," said Renfrow. "But it does remove from us any responsibility to regulate or do anything that would damage our independence."

The bill would require that each state department present the auditor's office with a financial statement before the audit. That would require the departments to keep good records and keep the auditor's office from having to get department books in order before the audit, he said.

Rep. Kenneth Spaulding, D-Durham, said members of the auditor's staff found themselves doing clerical or secretarial work instead of auditing.

Appeals Courts

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, filed legislation urging the North Carolina Courts Commission to study the N.C. Court of Appeals' case overload problem and recommend solutions.

The resolution notes that the appeals court has more cases per judge than any of the state's courts.

Winner said in an interview he wasn't prepared to endorse any solution to the problem. He said possibilities suggested thus far include dividing the courts into civil and criminal, having appeals courts in different areas of the state, and doing away with automatic right of appeal.

Nursing Home

A bill that would allow waiver of state permission to build nursing homes under some circumstances drew support from Alexander County residents and opposition from the Department of Human Resources.

Under the bill, sponsored by J.P. Huskins, D-Iredell, a nursing home established in a county with a population of 25,000 or more that doesn't already have a nursing home automatically would qualify for a certificate of need from the department.

Alexander County's effort to build a nursing home has been stymied by a state moratorium on new home construction imposed as a cost-saving measure.

"Sending elderly people away is traumatic enough, but it becomes worse when they have to be sent so far away that relatives and friends can't visit them," said Ruby Little, an Alexander County resident.

Lucy Bode, deputy secretary of human resources, said she was sympathetic but that requests for nursing homes were coming in from all over the state.

"We just can't afford them," she said. "They money's just not there."

OSHA

The Senate Judiciary III Committee approved a bill to exempt small-town volunteer fire departments from North Carolina Occupational Safety and Health regulations over a Labor Department spokesman's objections.

Mike Raglin said the bill would have no effect because his department currently has no power to enforce OSHA rules on volunteer departments of any size. But he said it might hinder the department's willingness to keep the volunteers informed about safety issues.

Firemen say the rules would require them to buy expensive equipment by a July deadline, but Raglin said the deadline could be waived by the Labor Department.

Fire officials, many attending the meeting, apparently convinced panel members who unanimously approved the bill.

Bank Commission

The House Committee on Banks and Finance Institutions approved a bill that would put three additional members on the State Banking Commission. The commission currently has five bankers and seven members of the public. The bill would add two public members to be named by the House and Senate and another member of either faction to be appointed by the governor.

Bills

Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, introduced a bill to provide authority for implementing a petroleum allocation system in times of energy shortages.

An Alternative In Compensation

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A legislative subcommittee is considering a new compromise aimed at expanding the kinds of injuries covered by workers' compensation without putting too much of a burden on industry.

Gene Smith, a Raleigh attorney who specializes in workers' compensation cases, offered the compromise Thursday. He said it would allow workers to recover for injuries sustained during a "specific traumatic incident."

Existing law allows compensation for injuries sustained in an "accident" and the courts have interpreted that to mean an unusual event — when the worker slipped, tripped or fell.

The subcommittee of the House Manufacturing and Labor Committee is considering a bill introduced by Rep. William Clark, D-Cumberland, to allow compensation for injuries sustained in a job-related event.

Clark said the bill is designed to be a compromise over legislation proposed in the 1981 session. He said he wants to help compensate workers who are injured during routine performance of their duties.

Industrial Commission Chairman William Stephenson said 197,000 workers' compensation claims were made last year and only 4,000 claims were contested. He said that of that 4,000, more than 1,000 focused on the definition of accident.

He said he believed that an unknown number of additional workers were discouraged from filing claims because of the interpretation of accident.

All workers in the state are covered by workers' compensation except employees of the federal government and railroads, farmworkers and domestics.

Industry spokesmen say

Clark's bill is too broad and would result in a kind of health and accident insurance for workers. But lobbyist Sam Johnson, representing North Carolina Associated Industries, said his group has not taken a stand on Smith's proposal.

Clark said he would not object to Smith's proposal if "the language represents that industry is willing to accept a compromise." He said it certainly would be better than the existing law.

But Paul Michaels, another Raleigh attorney who represents workers seeking compensation, told the subcommittee that Smith's language would do little to improve the current situation.

"The words 'specific' and 'traumatic' leave the court great latitude to interpret and put restrictions on compensation to people who are not getting it now," he said.

Stephenson said he thought the language in Smith's proposal could help workers without bankrupting industry.

"We generally agree that a problem exists but the question is how to address it," said Rep. Tom Rabon, D-Brunswick, chairman of the subcommittee.

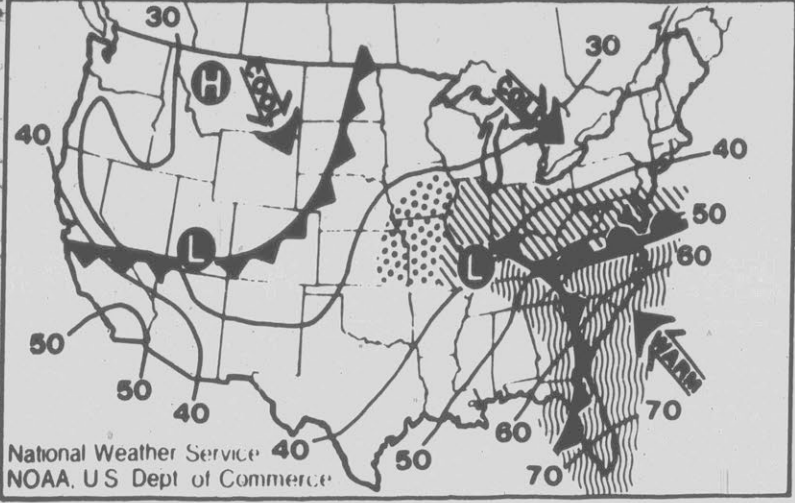

There was less agreement on part of Smith's proposal prohibiting compensation for psychological or mental problems and injuries that are related to congenital or heart problems.

Michaels said the phrase could prohibit compensation to older workers who suffer back injuries because everyone's physical condition deteriorates with age.

Meanwhile, the Senate Manufacturing, Labor and Commerce Committee quickly approved a House bill allowing insurance companies to charge less than the standard rate for workers' compensation policies.

The Forecast For Saturday, April 9

Low Temperatures

WEATHER FORECAST — National Weather Service forecasts rain and showers Saturday from the Midwest to the mid-Atlantic and south to Florida. Snow is expected for the eastern Plains. Sunny weather is expected for most of the West. Cool temperatures are forecast for most northern states. (AP Laserphoto)

By The Associated Press
Showers and thunderstorms are expected to continue through Saturday across North Carolina, with heavy rain possible across western part of the state, the National Weather Service reports.

Moist southerly winds ahead of a stationary front located west of the state are the cause of the showers and thunderstorms. Low pressure is expected to move north along the front into Tennessee and Kentucky tonight, increasing the possibility of heavy rain across the western part of the state.

There were scattered showers and a few thunderstorms across North Carolina Thursday. Highs were in the upper 70s and lower 80s. The statewide range was from 60 at Boone to 82 at Fayetteville.

Overnight lows were in the mid 50s to lower 60s in most of the state.

Mostly cloudy skies will be the rule through Saturday along with periods of showers and thunderstorms. High temperatures Saturday will be in the 60s and 70s. Lows tonight will range from around 50 in the northern mountains to the mid 60s along the outer banks.

With the ground already soaked from a prolonged wet period, any additional rain will produce mostly run off. If widespread heavy rain develops over the western part of the state some flooding of small streams and creeks is possible.

If that occurs, a flash flood watch may be required over portions of the mountains, foothills and piedmont, the weather service said.

Crow-Eating Time For Watt

WASHINGTON (AP) — James Watt has learned that he can antagonize the environmentalists, the preservationists, the Democrats and the Indians — but not the fans of the Beach Boys.

Eating crow in a drizzle on the White House lawn, the secretary of the Interior withdrew his suggestion that rock groups would no longer be welcome to perform on the Mall.

The Beach Boys and another pop group, the Grass Roots, have been the warmup act for the Fourth of July fireworks displays that drew hundreds of thousands of people to the Mall for the past three years.

To make the point that he had shot himself in the foot, Watt carried a plaster of paris foot with a hole in it, a present, he said, from President Reagan.

It turned out that both Ronald and Nancy Reagan are Beach Boys fans — or maybe they, too, had heard the nationwide razz when Watt disinvited rock groups for Fourth of July. Without mentioning the Beach Boys specifically, he claimed rock groups that performed on the Mall the last two years attracted "the wrong element" — drinkers, muggers and drug users.

Watt said he still wants Las Vegas singer Wayne Newton to perform on the Mall before the fireworks, but he said the Beach Boys would be invited to perform "as soon as we can get that worked out."

National Park Service spokesman George Berklacy said no date had been set for the Beach Boys' concert. But it certain they would be asked to come some time other than Independence Day because that schedule has already been arranged.

A spokesman for Watt, Tom DeRocco, said later Watt had not been in touch with the group to issue a formal invitation.

The group's rhythm guitarist, Al Jardine, said in Moncton, New Brunswick, that the group is eager to come back to Washington.

"That's certainly kind," Jardine said of Watt's plans to issue a new invitation. "We'd certainly like to come back and make peace with the administration."

Elliot Lott, the Beach Boys' tour manager, said Nancy Reagan telephoned before Thursday night's performance in New Brunswick to offer her support. "We were very surprised to hear from her and it was great," he said.

Watt's disclosure that he had substituted Newton and the U.S. Army Blues Band for rock groups on the Mall was made public Wednesday.

By Thursday, after Watt's musical tastes had provoked chatter on radio talk shows across the country, Washington got the message.

Watt was invited to see the president, then sent out to meet the press on the White House lawn for a chorus of mea culpa.

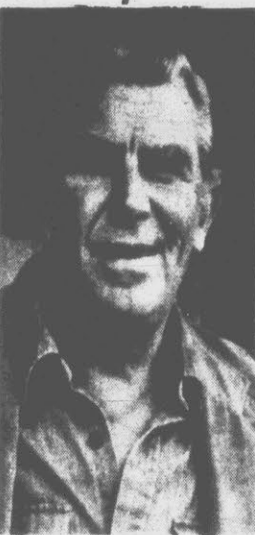

"The president is a friend of the Beach Boys and he likes them, and I'm sure when I get to meet them I'll like them," Watt said.

Some White House officials privately expressed dismay that Watt had appeared to be tar-and-feathering a nationally known entertainment group that had gone out on a political limb in 1980 by supporting a Republican candidate — George Bush.

Anyway, Watt's critics said the Beach Boys' music is melodic and pop rather than hard rock.

Griffith Is Quietly Wed

ANDY GRIFFITH

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Actor Andy Griffith and actress Cindi Knight were married last weekend at Griffith's home in Manteo, N.C., a newspaper reported Thursday.

"We didn't want a big deal made. We wanted it just for us," Ms. Knight told the Jacksonville Journal in a telephone interview.

Griffith, 56, and the 27-year-old actress from Jacksonville were married Saturday in a private ceremony. The bride's family and a handful of friends attended the wedding, his third and the first for her.

The couple's friendship began in 1978, when she was a dancer and understudy in "The Lost Colony," an outdoor drama staged near Griffith's estate. She recently appeared in a television drama, "Murder in Coweta County," starring Griffith and Johnny Cash.

"Over the years I would call her whenever I could find her," Griffith told the Journal. "I started to see her. We fell totally in love."

They discussed marriage for years, finally setting the date about a month ago, he said.

Meeting

A business meeting will be held at Allen Chapel Church Saturday at 2 p.m. for all members.

Excommunicated

VATICAN CITY (AP) — A rebellious Vietnamese archbishop has been excommunicated for the second time by the Catholic church for consecrating bishops without papal authority.

The Vatican's Congregation of the Doctrine of the Faith announced the action Thursday against Archbishop Pierre Martin Ngo Dinh Thuc, brother of former President Ngo Dinh Diem of South Vietnam. He was excommunicated along with six other followers of a Spaniard who claims he is Pope Gregory XVII.

Thuc was previously excommunicated Sept. 17, 1976 for consecrating a number of priests in the Spanish town of Palmar de Troya, near Seville, but obtained the Vatican's pardon.

Odds On Oscar Winners Made

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — "E.T., The Extra-Terrestrial" is the even-money favorite to capture the Oscar for best picture and Ben Kingsley and Meryl Streep are 6-5 favorites to win best actor and actress awards, says a Las Vegas oddsmaker.

Lenny Del Genio, who posts odds for the Frontier Hotel, said "Gandhi," at 6-5, is next most likely to take home the best picture award at Monday's ceremonies in Los Angeles. "Tootsie" and "The Verdict" are both listed at 3-1, while "Missing" is a dark horse at 9-1.

Nevada state law forbids casinos from taking bets on anything but sporting events. Del Genio, a movie buff, said he drew up the odds for fun.

Kingsley, who played Gandhi in the motion picture, is favored to take the best actor award over Paul Newman, who is listed at 2-1 to win for his role in "The Verdict."

Dustin Hoffman is at 5-1 for "Tootsie," while Jack Lemmon is an 8-1 choice for "Missing." Peter O'Toole, who appeared in "My Favorite Year," is a 9-1 longshot.

Ms. Streep, favored by the oddsmaker for her role in "Sophie's Choice," is challenged by Jessica Lange, a 3-1 choice for "Frances."

At 8-1 for best actress are Sissy Spacek for "Missing" and Julie Andrews in "Victor, Victoria." Trailing at 9-1 is Debra Winger for "An Officer and a Gentleman."

James Mason is a 3-2 favorite to win best supporting actor award for "The Verdict," followed by Louis Gosset Jr. at 3-1 for "An Officer and a Gentleman." Grouped behind at 8-1 are Charles Durning for "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," Robert Preston for "Victor, Victoria," and John Lithgow for "The World According to Garp."

The favorite for best supporting actress is Kim Stanley for her role in "Frances," followed by Teri Garr at 4-1 for "Tootsie." At 5-1 is Jessica Lange for "Tootsie," followed by Glenn Close at 8-1 for "The World According to Garp." Rounding out the list is Leslie Ann Warren at 9-1 for "Victor, Victoria."

New 'Mike Hammer' Has Gentle Side

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Hammer is still tough as nails. He wrenches thugs out of cars by their noses and doesn't pull any punches. But Stacy Keach brings out a softer side to the world-famous gumshoe Saturday night in CBS' "Mickey Spillane's Mike Hammer 'Murder Me, Murder You.'"

It's a gentler, more sentimental, more reflective Hammer. Part of it comes from Keach as an actor and part from Hammer as a more modern character. He's been updated. He fought in Vietnam, not Korea, and Saturday's story is, he says,

"the most important case in my life."

That's because the dolls in question are Chris Jameson, Hammer's long-lost love and the only woman to receive a marriage proposal from Mike, and the couple's love child, Michelle (Lisa Blount).

Just in case Mike is considering a life of domestic tranquility, Chris (Michelle Phillips) gets bumped off early. Marriage would spoil the image. Nobody could make an honest man of Mike Hammer.

And, besides, how would it look if Mike was wearing a wedding ring when he fielded all those luscious proposals: "Have we met, or do I just wish we had?" coos one dish.

This production will not win any awards from feminists. All the women are overflowing naturally, and then some because their clothes seem to be several sizes too small. Mike's ever-loyal secretary, Velda, played by Tanya Roberts, seems to be acting at a 45-degree angle to facilitate the cleavage shots.

"I walked into 31 flavors of women, and I wasn't on a diet," says Hammer as the ubiquitously leering narrator. Mickey Spillane is no Shakespeare, and Mike Hammer is not Hamlet. But he certainly has more fun.

Keach makes a dashing, dapper Hammer. He looks almost jaunty in his tilted gray fedora. He knows how to speak lust with his eyes, and talk dirty with his fists. His short jabs, punctuated by an almost comic-book, popcorn-popping sound, never miss the other guy's kisser.

This is what escapism entertainment is all about.

Mike Hammer, in one form or another, may be America's longest-running movie series. Spillane says Keach is the ninth on-screen Hammer, including one done by Spillane himself in his younger days. Spillane is now 65 and still churning out Hammer pulp in two-to-three weeks when the spirit moves him.

He has written about 30 Hammer books, with 180 million copies sold worldwide. He's such an identifiable character that Spillane's only contribution to "Murder Me, Murder You" is Mike Hammer. The movie was written by Bill Stratton. Spillane didn't even touch the script, according to CBS.

Which may account for the fact that the story gets a little overburdened and confusing. Hammer, the cops and the vermin are all looking for his daughter, Michelle, who, when abandoned by daddy, grew up to be a druggie and a porno queen before cleaning up her act. Michelle supposedly had a briefcase full of loot when she disappeared.

But who watches Mike Hammer for the plot anyway?

The allure is in Mike's fistic and poetic hammershots:

"When he tours the fashionable side of New York, he says: 'The 60s, where the addresses are in brass and the streets a little cleaner.'"

"When he sees two women practicing martial arts, he says: 'Those two speak judo pretty fluently.'"

"When he's reminded of killing two people, he says: 'They weren't people.'"

"When death comes to the wrong doorstep, he says 165 cops were killed last year, and only one convicted murderer was executed. "The system stinks," he says. "I don't understand what's happened to our values."

Children can have their superheroes Saturday mornings. We'll take Mike Hammer Saturday night.

Rivers Reach Record Levels In Gulf Coast States

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer
Rivers surged to record levels today in the Gulf Coast states where floods from three days of relentless rain have washed into the homes of more than 40,000 people and seriously crippled the city of New Orleans. "The worst is yet to come," warned National Weather Service forecaster Fred Lowery as runoff from ground saturated by up to 20 inches of rain bloated rivers in some of the worst flooding on record in Mississippi and Louisiana. Flooding that began Wednesday already has killed nine people in the South and brought to 16 the number killed by a storm that hit California on Sunday and brought record cold and snow to the Rocky Mountains as it moved eastward. Louisiana Gov. Dave Treen, who declared a state of emergency in 16 of Louisiana's 64 parishes and ordered 86 National Guard units to help with evacuations, said today damage would run into "tens of millions of dollars." The governor, appearing today on ABC's "Good Morning America," added, "We've committed every resource of the state to cope with any life-threatening situation."

For more than 12 hours "there was virtually no communication with New Orleans, but that was restored sometime last night," Treen said.

However, telephone communications into the city remained sporadic this morning.

Treen said about 40,000 people in Louisiana had been displaced or had their homes flooded in Louisiana. About 21,000 evacuees spent a second night away from home in Louisiana and Mississippi.

"We've just got to hope and pray these rivers don't get as high as we think they will," Treen said.

In New Orleans, water surged Thursday through entire sections of the city, virtually cutting off its 1 million residents from the outside world when long-distance communications equipment failed. Although the water was receding early today, occasional rain showers fell.

Ski boats rode swamped portions of Interstate 12 north of the city and tempers flared over waves caused by four-wheel-drive vehicles cursing flooded streets.

In Mississippi, the Pearl River at Jackson was at 36 feet, 8 feet above flood stage and flooding some neighborhoods as it continued to rise. Flooding was predicted along the Mississippi River in Tennessee and New Madrid, Mo. Heavy rains hit western Florida during the afternoon Thursday, with 4 inches falling in six hours in Pensacola.

Desperate holding actions were under way in a dozen small Southern towns. The Amite River at Denham Springs, La., crested at a record 41.5 feet, 12 feet over flood stage, about midnight. The Bogue Chitto River was to crest at 25 feet this morning at Franklinton, La.

Up to 20 inches of rain fell in southeastern Louisiana on Wednesday and Thursday, the weather service said.

Fourteen inches of rain fell in Hattiesburg, Miss., 11 inches fell in New Orleans and 10 inches fell in Bay Minette, Ala.

"This is the worst flooding we've ever had," said Capt. Mack White of the sheriff's office in East Baton Rouge, La.

Treen called the situation "very, very severe" and declared a state of emergency in 14 of Louisiana's 64 parishes. He ordered 86 National Guard units to aid in rescue operations and estimated 40,000 homes in his state had been damaged by rising water.

The hardest-hit area of Louisiana was above Lake Pontchartrain, north of New Orleans.

Mississippi authorities said 1,000 residents were forced from their homes, with more ready to go; Treen estimated 20,000 people had been forced from their homes in Louisiana.

Hundreds of roads and highways were under water.

Indictment For Congressman

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. George Hansen, a conservative Idaho Republican charged with concealing financial information, says his indictment may be a "politically motivated" attempt to silence him.

Hansen, known for his personal international missions, was indicted Thursday by a federal grand jury on four counts of failing to disclose financial transactions to the House, including loans from Texas millionaire Nelson Bunker Hunt.

A maverick who has both amused and outraged his colleagues, Hansen is the ninth member of Congress — and the second Republican — to face serious criminal charges since 1980.

He is the first person ever indicted on charges of violating the Ethics In Government Act for making false statements on financial disclosure forms filed with the House.

The indictment is not Hansen's first brush with the law.

In 1975, he pleaded guilty to two misdemeanor charges of filing late and false campaign finance reports. The two-month prison sentence given Hansen was suspended, and he paid a $2,000 fine.

Hansen also gained public attention in 1979 when he went to Iran in a personal effort to free the U.S.

hostages held at the American Embassy in Tehran.

That 10-day mission, in which Hansen criticized U.S. relations with Iran, brought protests from the White House of President Carter, the State Department and many of his colleagues in Congress.

Hansen, a seven-term congressman, predicted he would win his latest legal battle.

The 52-year-old Hansen has been eager to get involved in U.S. foreign policy.

The same year he went to Iran, he traveled with Democratic Rep. Larry McDonald of Georgia to Nicaragua, where they met dictator Anastasio Somoza to voice U.S. support. Somoza later fled the country.

The indictment, returned in U.S. District Court, charged Hansen with leaving out these major transactions on the financial disclosure forms he filed for the years 1978 through 1981:

—A $61,503 personal loan made in 1980 to Hansen and his wife Connie in Mrs. Hansen's name by Nelson Bunker Hunt.

—A $50,000 personal loan made to the Hansens in the name of Mrs. Hansen by a Dallas bank and guaranteed by Hunt in 1978.

—The sum of $135,000 in personal loans made to Hansen in 1981 by three Virginia residents.

—An $87,475 profit made by the Hansens on the purchase and sale of silver futures contracts during a two-day period in 1979.

Each of the counts carries a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment and a $10,000 fine.

The Ethics In Government Act requires that each member of Congress annually report the nature and extent of personal financial holdings, liabilities and transactions, including loans and profits from sales such as commodities deals. The disclosure statement also must include similar information about the member's spouse.

But Hansen said the indictment was "based upon an untried and novel interpretation of untested federal law."

Road Plans Accelerated

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Improvements to a mountain highway delayed for years will proceed on an accelerated schedule as the state Department of Transportation has recommended, it was announced Thursday.

A statement issued by Gov. Jim Hunt's press office said Transportation Secretary Bill Roberson had assured legislators from Transylvania and Henderson counties that a public hearing on improvements to N.C. 280 from Brevard to Mills River would be held in July.

Construction contracts will be let before July 1984.

The $6 million project originally had been scheduled for construction in fiscal 1988-89, but the new date was approved last year.

Sen. Charles Hipps, D-Haywood, said the road had been promised by several administrations since the 1960s.

He called Hunt's decision to move up the schedule "a big moral victory. It shows how flexible the governor can be."

The 10.6 mile project is one of two planned for the area. The second, improvements to N.C. 280 from Mills River to I-26 in Buncombe County, originally was to be built on a new location.

But the transportation board since has recommended using part of existing N.C. 191-280 north of Mills River, with a connector to Asheville Airport Access Road and to I-26 in Buncombe County.

Construction of that section, to begin in fiscal 1984-85, is expected to cost $4.5 million.

Two Collisions Here Thursday

An estimated $1,690 damage resulted from two traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police Thursday.

Cars driven by Hattie Elks Dunn of 2907 E. Fifth St. and Marian Wood Taylor of 306 Oak St. collided about 12:20 p.m. at the intersection of Fourth and Sycamore streets, causing $600 damage to the Dunn car and $550 damage to the Taylor car, police said.

Kandy Faye Waters of 409B E. Second St. was charged with failing to stop for a red light following investigation of a 9:05 p.m. collision at the intersection of 10th Street and College Hill Drive.

Officers said the Waters car collided with a vehicle driven by James Clifton Watford of 1003 W. 14th St., causing $40 damage to the Waters car and $500 damage to the Watford vehicle.

Bulk Of Godfrey's Estate To Charity

NEW YORK (AP) — Arthur Godfrey left the bulk of his estate, totaling up to $2.5 million, to five charities, his three children and six other relatives, according to court papers.

The radio and television personality, who died March 16 at age 79, left $100,000 to each of the children, according to papers filed Wednesday in Surrogate's Court in Manhattan.

He also left $100,000 for the executor of the estate, Joan Zacher of Queens, and $50,000 each to a brother, two sisters and three grandchildren, the documents said.

The organizations to share equally in the bulk of the estate are: New York public TV station WNET; the Straug Clinic and the International Medical Research Foundation, both of New York; the Ocean Science Laboratory, of Montauk, N.Y.; and the Berks Gymnastic Academy, of Wyomissing, Pa.

The exact amount left each organization will be determined after the other bequests are made and taxes are paid on the estate, said Godfrey's lawyer, Phillip Mandell.

Godfrey left nothing to his first wife, Catherine Bean, of Honolulu, or to his second wife, Mary Bourke Godfrey, of Paeonian Springs, Va., whom he married in 1938, according to the documents.

Computers For Postal Centers

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — At least three major postal centers in North Carolina will be getting new computer scanners to read ZIP codes, which would help cut costs and could keep postal rates stable, a postal spokesman says.

Gene Skipper at the postal service here said the main post offices in Raleigh, Charlotte and Greensboro will receive the equipment which permits typewritten ZIP codes to be read by computer.

The computerization will help the postal service process mail faster and with fewer errors and could "stabilize postal rates for longer periods of time," said Skipper.

U.S. Postmaster General William Bolger has said the scanners are being installed in 118 major post offices across the nation.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — THE SOUR PILOT'S PLANS ARE UP IN THE AIR.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: D equals O.

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Reaching a good contract is only part of the battle. You have to make it before you can be acclaimed the victor!

North-South used good judgment to reach a sound spade slam. After locating a spade fit via the Stayman convention, North was faced with a difficult decision. His hand was worth 16 points in support of spades — not enough to drive to slam on his own. But he was reluctant to make a pusillanimous raise to four spades. As a compromise, he made a general slam try by leaping over game. South's fifth spade and near maximum convinced him to push on.

Declarer won the club lead in dummy and cashed the king-ace of trumps to learn that he had a sure loser there. Since he was a great believer in finesse, declarer entered dummy with a diamond and took the heart finesse, which succeeded. Then he led a club only to learn that the finesse was doomed to lose. Declarer threw in his cards in disgust, conceding down one.

The kindest thing to say about declarer's concession was that it was a bit premature. With careful timing, the hand could still have been brought home.

Let's assume that the play has proceeded as above. The heart finesse has succeeded, and declarer has discovered that he has a sure trump loser. Declarer can still enlist the aid of the enemy to bring home his slam.

Declarer must cash the ace of hearts and his remaining diamond winners, then graciously present West with the lead by exiting with a trump. West has left nothing but red cards, so whatever he returns permits declarer to ruff in dummy while discarding the losing club from his hand. Making six-odd.

FOCUSAn American Success Story

Sunday marks the 136th anniversary of the birth of Joseph Pulitzer, one of the most influential figures in American journalism. Pulitzer came to the U.S. as a poor immigrant from Hungary in the 1860s. But by 1878, he was the owner of the "St. Louis Post-Dispatch." Then, in 1883, he bought "The World," a nearly bankrupt New York newspaper. At "The World," Pulitzer introduced a sensationalistic style of reporting that became known as "yellow journalism." The style sold newspapers. Soon "The World" had the nation's largest circulation. Pulitzer was on his way to becoming a multi-millionaire who would be known to generations as the founder of the nation's most prestigious journalism awards.

DO YOU KNOW—What graduate school of journalism did Joseph Pulitzer endow?
