City Council Has Budget

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

The City Council has received for consideration another "maintenance" budget that once again calls for continuation of the present tax rate and the provision of services at current levels, while actually totaling 3.4 percent less than the 1982-83 package.

City Manager Gail Meeks has submitted a recommended city government budget for 1983-84 totaling $13,253,160 or some $462,162 less than the board approved last June.

Mrs. Meeks said the financial package, which does not recommend funds for any new programs or new positions, proposes that the current tax rate of 49 cents per $100 assessed valuation be maintained for the new fiscal year. She said the 1983 property tax valuation is estimated to be $798,167,857, representing an increased valuation of $22,205,783 or 2.8 percent.

The city expects to receive the Greenville Utilities budget by the end of the week, according to Mrs. Meeks. Both segments will be adopted by July 1. A public hearing will probably be scheduled around the middle of June, she said.

Mrs. Meeks said that state shared revenues, such as the local option sales tax, utilities franchise tax, beer and wine tax, and intangible property tax, are a concern since they are tied in with the economy and are hard to project. She said payments from those taxes fluctuate and are received by the city three months after purchases are made, making it hard to project budget revenues. The local option sales tax is the most difficult to budget, she said, as the city's share varies

HOUSE FIRE — Firemen cool hot spots after fire heavily damaged a rural Pitt County home Tuesday. Firemen from Black Jack were first on the scene and said the second floor of the house was in flames. Melissa Parker and her family — which included 13 members — occupied the house. Seven members of the family were home when the fire started and escaped without injury. The house was reportedly owned by Jack Spain and is located on rural paved road 1755 about a mile south of Hudson's Crossroads. Firemen from Simpson and Eastern Pines assisted Black Jack. Damage was listed at approximately $14,000. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Nile Shuttle Sinks With 627 Aboard

By MAURICE GUINDI
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A Nile River steamer with 627 people aboard caught fire and sank today in muddy, crocodile-infested waters. Authorities said at least seven people were known dead and 120 were missing.

Interior Ministry spokesman Fakhreddin Khaled said 500 survivors were pulled from the river and the rescue effort continued 11 hours after the boat sank more than 800 miles south of Cairo.

The official Middle East News Agency reported from Aswan that some survivors were hospitalized, but did not say how many.

It said the fire "completely devoured" the steamer, but there was no immediate word on the cause of the blaze that broke out before dawn on a boat filled mostly with Sudanese and Egyptian passengers traveling south to Sudan.

Mustafa Abdel-Ghafour, general-secretary of the Southern Aswan governorate, said he had received a report that some passengers swam ashore and others were being picked up by military helicopters.

Abdel-Ghafour said about two dozen police boats, two army helicopters and about 50 military frogmen had joined the rescue effort, along with fishermen from nearby towns.

He said 10 doctors flew to the scene with medicine and first aid equipment, and the government sent food and blankets for survivors.

Police sources who asked not to be named said the steamer, on a shuttle service between Aswan in southern Egypt and Wadi Halfa in northern Sudan, carried 599 passengers and a crew of 28.

The sources said 547 of the passengers were

Government Borrowing Stops As Limit Runs Out

WASHINGTON (AP) —

The Treasury has put government borrowing on hold while the Senate starts work on the Reagan administration's request to increase the national debt limit to nearly $1.4 trillion.

Sen. Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said the Senate would begin consideration of the measure late today.

Dole's panel voted 11-5 Tuesday to go along with a House-passed version of the legislation for a nearly $100 billion increase in the current debt limit of $1.29 trillion, which Treasury officials say will be reached at the end of the month.

The House-passed bill endorsed by the Senate Finance Committee would raise the debt limit to $1.339 trillion. Administration officials say this will be enough to meet government borrowing needs through the end of the fiscal year, Sept. 30.

Without an increase, the government will have no borrowing authority and may be faced with defaulting on its securities. In addition, there could be disruptions in Social Security benefit checks, unemployment benefits and government payroll checks.

But uncertainty over congressional action on the measure has forced the government to indefinitely postpone today's scheduled auction of $5.75 billion in five-year, two-month Treasury notes.

"The postponement (of the auction) is necessary because congressional action on legislation to raise the debt limit to permit issuance of the notes on the June 1 settlement date is not assured at this time," Treasury officials said in a printed statement.

Aide Suspended

Sen. John P. East has placed his top administrative assistant on "indefinite administrative leave" pending the disposition of a criminal investigation by District of Columbia police.

East said that on May 13, upon the advice of Howard Liebengood, sergeant at arms of the U.S. Senate, he suspended Quentin C. Crommelin Jr. with pay. His press secretary said as far as he knows, Crommelin has not been charged with anything and that the nature of the investigation will not be discussed by East nor his staff.

Crommelin, 36, an Alabama native, joined East's staff in July 1982. A former Army captain and Vietnam veteran, he is a graduate of the University of Virginia Law School and has served on the staffs of Sen. James Allen of Alabama, Sen. Harry Byrd of Virginia, and Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina.

ODD SHOE EXCHANGE

I read an item in Dear Abby recently about the National Odd Shoe Exchange and would like to know more about it, J.S.

The National Odd Shoe Exchange is located near Indianola, Iowa. Its purpose is to serve persons whose feet are not the same size or who have only one foot by getting them together with others whose sizing problems, sex, tastes, ages, etc., match their own. For instance, a woman who wears a 7 on the left foot and an 8 on the right foot can be matched with someone close to her in age and taste who wears an 8 on the left foot and a 7 on the right foot. A right foot amputee and a left foot amputee wearing the same size can be matched to share the cost of each pair of shoes. There are 14,000 members, 1,000 of whom are amputees.

The exchange was founded in 1943 by Ruth Rubin Feldman, an occupational therapist who had had polio herself and saw many others like herself who needed mismatched shoes. It is being carried on by Jeanne Sallman, an enthusiastic customer who joined in 1950 to accommodate her 4B and 6B feet. Membership is a $15 lifetime registration fee, plus $7.50 annual dues.

Anyone wishing more information may write National Odd Shoe Exchange, Jeanne Sallman, Director, Rural Route 4, Indianola, Iowa 50125.

Israeli Jets Draw Heavy Syrian Fire

By The Associated Press

Waves of Israeli jets drew heavy anti-aircraft fire over Lebanon's Bekaa Valley today after Syrian missiles shot a pilotless Israeli drone reconnaissance plane, Lebanese radios reported.

The Israeli military command reported that Syrian warplanes fired air-to-air missiles at Israeli jets but scored no hits. The Israelis said they had no information on a drone being shot down.

It was the first Syrian-Israeli air encounter since Israel invaded Lebanon last June. Israel and Lebanon signed a U.S.-mediated troop withdrawal agreement last week, but Israel's pullout is contingent on a Syrian withdrawal, and the Syrians have so far refused to remove their troops.

The incidents occurred at a time of rising tension between Israeli and Syrian forces in Lebanon.

State and private radios in Beirut said the Israeli reconnaissance drone was brought down by a Soviet-made ground-to-air SAM-6 missile fired by Syrian forces at 12:35 p.m. (6:35 a.m. EDT). Initial reports by Lebanon's state radio said a missile fired by a Syrian warplane downed the pilotless aircraft.

The incident prompted

Israel to send waves of reconnaissance jets over the Bekaa Valley in eastern Lebanon, drawing barrages of anti-aircraft fire from Syrian and Palestinian positions, according to the broadcasts.

"Israeli jets have been staging intensified reconnaissance flights over the Bekaa since 2 p.m. (8 a.m. EDT)," said the Christian Voice of Lebanon radio. "Syrian and Palestinian positions are firing anti-aircraft guns at the Israeli planes non-stop."

The drone was downed east of Jizzine, 25 miles southeast of Beirut, while the aerial encounter occurred over Beshheri, 44 miles north of the Lebanese capital, according to Lebanese police and radio reports.

Israel's military command in Tel Aviv said Syrian warplanes fired air-to-air missiles at Israeli reconnaissance planes over Lebanon, but that there were no hits and all Israeli aircraft returned safely to base.

The Israeli command did not say where the aerial encounter in Lebanon took place, but asserted the Israeli air force was continuing patrols in Lebanese air space.

The Israeli command said it had no information about a drone being downed by a Syrian missile. But it said two SAM-7 ground-to-air missiles missed an Israeli helicopter near the Bekaa Valley town of Amiq on Monday.

The SAM-7 is a shoulder-fired rocket carried by Syrian infantry units while the SAM-6 is a more sophisticated missile fired from a mobile launcher and is radar-guided.

There was no mention of the SAM-5 missiles that were recently installed at Syrian land positions by Soviet crews. SAM-5s are capable of hitting high-flying aircraft over Israel from Syrian territory.

Israeli planes shot down 86 Syrian planes in the Lebanon war last June while Israel lost only two of its own aircraft, one to Palestinian guerrillas and the second to Syrian missiles.

Western diplomatic sources in Beirut said Israel recently moved drones and drone-launchers into the Bekaa, where Israeli and Syrian forces face each other along a cease-fire line that stretches from near the Syrian border to the central mountains, a distance of 50 miles.

The U.N. peacekeeping force in southern Lebanon has recorded as many as 200 overflights a day by Israeli jets in the region during the past week.

Syria has an estimated 40,000 troops in Lebanon and an additional 10,000 troops poised inside its border. They are supported by 10,000 Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas and 1,000 Iranian volunteers.

Israel has an estimated 28,000 troops in Lebanon, according to Western diplomatic sources in Beirut who say this represents an increase of about 3,000 troops in recent weeks. The Israelis have also increased by about 90 the number of tanks in Lebanon, bringing the total to about 400, the sources said.

School Ruling Reaction Mixed

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Reaction from spokesmen for local private schools relative to the Supreme Court ruling on denial of tax-exempt status to the Goldsboro Christian School and Bob Jones University range from "no problem" with the decision to calling the decision "a black day for America."

All the schools contacted operate on a non-racial discriminatory basis, allowing the enrollment of students of any race. The four have blacks, Indians and Orientals enrolled in their student population.

J.M. Bragg, president of Greenville Christian Academy said "we believe in the right of anyone to receive education at a Christian or private school, and we believe, too, in the right of any institution to take any stand they want to for their schools.

"Our hope and prayer for people everywhere is that this ruling will not stereotype all education as the result of this issue. I feel any institution should have the right to take any stand they want with the understanding of possible consequences and the willingness to accept the legal ramifications that might result in such a stand."

Jim Summerson, head of Mount Calvary Church and Academy in Hookerton, calls the ruling "a black day for America. From what I heard on the news last night the newsperson said it did not matter about religious beliefs. If this is true, it opens up real problems for churches in America, regardless of denomination."

"I don't know what we can

Exercising Brain Can Boost Mental Performance

SEATTLE (UPI) — The old woman fingered her plastic bank card as she stared at the electronic bank machine's buttons and confusing digital instructions. She had transferred buses to get downtown, shopped in stores and picked up groceries, but the cash machine was baffling. So, she slipped the bank card back in her purse and turned away. Was age or technology to blame?

Two researchers studying the effects of aging on mental abilities want to know if training in old age can improve mental performance.

In 1956 Warner Schaie, of Pennsylvania State University, began testing a sample of 400 people obtained from the files of the health maintenance organization of Seattle's Group Health Cooperative.

Many members of the original sample have died or moved away. About 100 are still in the program.

Every seven years Schaie runs the same tests of mental ability on the group that he did at the start. Some recently took their fourth test.

Schaie has been joined in his research by Sherry L. Willis, an associate professor who is trying to measure the effect of training sessions on the subjects' test scores.

The tests are designed to determine abilities in word recognition, word usage, spatial orientation, number or quantification skills and inductive reasoning.

"The good news is that most people really show very little change — barring acute illness — until the early 60s," Schaie said. "In fact, a substantial number of people show no real deterioration until their late 70s."

"The late 70s seem to be a breaking point. Before 60, virtually no one suffers measurable deterioration in their mental abilities. After 80, almost everyone does."

"... passive vocabulary (word recognition) holds the longest," he said. "That's probably because we're talked at until we die."

The tests show inductive reasoning — the ability to synthesize information, make decisions and draw conclusions — is usually the first mental function to decline.

This does not mean the aged should be fearful about declining mental faculties, Schaie said.

"In effect, it's a case of use it or lose it. We find that those who maintain their mental capacity the longest are similar to those who follow a disciplined program of exercise," he said. "You have to keep exercising your brain like it was a muscle."

Schaie and Willis also say certain personality types retain mental function longer than others.

"You have to be able to strike compromises with life, especially as you get older," Willis said. "Rehashing past tragedies or present worries over and over is an indicator of mental rigidity."

They find older people who work crossword puzzles or play chess or card games such as bridge tend to score higher on their tests at progressively older ages. These games require an active response.

Their research also suggests older people probably can still learn or relearn some things.

"We're not talking about training someone to be a nuclear scientist or a computer programmer — although there are some older people certainly who could become computer programmers," Schaie said. "We're talking about retraining people in living skills, for example, that would allow them to live more independently, longer."

Ms. Willis says some testing "seems to show that some of the effects of aging are not irreversible."

Test subjects may forget how to perform a certain test, she said, but training seems to help them relearn the mental skill more quickly.

What looks like mental deterioration often isn't, Schaie and Willis emphasized.

They said many older people don't function as well as previously simply because they are more removed from work and social activity. Some do not keep up because they aren't exposed to new tasks required by a changing society.

The electronic bank machine is a good example of the problem, Ms. Willis said.

"I test myself by seeing if I can write a check at the grocery store before the checker can finish totaling up the bill," she said. "I notice now that I can't do it all the time. It can't be my age (she's in her 40s); it's those new electronic scanning machines. At least that's what I tell myself."

An aged person's mental ability is also, in a large way, a factor of the time taken to think, Schaie said.

"Some of the confidence games and swindles perpetrated on older people often try to deprive the person of time by rushing him to make a decision," he said.

While the speed of thinking may slow, mental abilities needed to reach a conclusion may remain intact.

"We are seeing a lot of very interesting people — some who have not shown any sign of decline," Schaie said.

"Some of these people give you courage. If I can be that way, you say, getting older will be okay."

Dear Abby

Words Of Consolation Can Be Cruel

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "Linda in Lancaster" telling about some of the cruel comments she heard after losing her 14-year-old son. Six years ago my 14-year-old son was killed in an accident. I also heard some cruel comments from people who thought they were comforting me.

My son was a slow learner. Not retarded — just slow. My sister-in-law said, "You're better off. Now you won't have any more 'problems' to deal with, so don't feel sorry for yourself." (I will never forgive her.)

At the time of my son's death, there was no one to talk to about my feelings. It was easier just to keep quiet — easier on others. Everyone assumed I was "adjusting nicely."

Recently my mother casually mentioned how much my son had resembled me. My guard was down and I broke down and cried. Her comment: "I thought you'd be over that by now."

Abby, I'll never be "over it." I'll just keep my guard up more closely now, especially when people ask, "How many children do you have?" We originally had two, but I thought that by answering "One," I wouldn't have to talk about the one we lost. But that doesn't work either. When I say "One," I'm asked, "Why only one?" (Can you believe it?)

I feel for Linda. Thanks for letting me get this out of my system. In my heart I'm still

THE MOTHER OF TWO

DEAR MOTHER: Please accept my condolences. You most certainly should talk about the son you lost. And if you feel like crying, go ahead and cry until you're all cried out. (Tears are healing.) Don't keep this raging resentment bottled up inside you, pretending to be "adjusting nicely."

You are still hurting because you haven't allowed yourself to express your normal feelings: the anger, the pain, the grief of losing a part of you. You need to do that.

Please get in touch with a wonderful support group called Compassionate Friends. (Check your phone book.) They can be enormously helpful to people who have lost a child.

About your sister-in-law: She probably meant well, but she showed herself to be shallow, unfeeling and thoughtless. Forgive her.

DEAR ABBY: I noticed that the U.S. post office has issued a 17-cent postage stamp with a picture of a woman on it. Her name is Carson. Who is she? Someone said she's Johnny Carson's mother. Is that true?

TRUE OR FALSE?

DEAR TRUE? False! (Johnny Carson's mother's name is Ruth.) The stamp was issued to honor Rachel Louise Carson, an American biologist and science writer (author of "Silent Spring"). She died in 1964.

DEAR ABBY: I heard something that upset me and wonder if it is true.

Someone said that in the case of female twins, one twin is likely to be sterile. Thank you.

A TWIN

DEAR TWIN: Not in humans. However, in the case of cattle, when a female and male are twinborn, the female, known as a "freemartin," is usually sterile.

Japanese Look Lends New Profile To Fashion Scene

By MARIE OKABE
NEW YORK (UPI) — Japan's avant garde designers are shocking and delighting the fashion capitals of the world.

From Tokyo to Paris to New York, the latest rave in the fashion world is the new Japanese look emphasizing comfort and fabric over the more tight-fitting and conservative silhouettes of European and American designers.

Retailers and customers describe the clothes as "modern" and "forceful," "philosophical," "refreshing" and "intellectual." Critics dismiss the style as "funereal" — the beggar or flea market look.

The most controversial of the new designers is Rei Kawakubo, creator of the Comme des Garçons line, whose popularity abroad has surged since she first showed her collection in Paris last October.

Others like Issey Miyake, the first of the new wave of Japanese designers, and Yohji Yamamoto, also emphasize dark shades and masculine shapes and have captured the fancy of European and American high fashion markets.

Ms. Kawakubo's somber, heavily layered and baggy skirts, blouses and coats — often dotted with holes — are appearing in international fashion magazines and the windows of New York's trendiest stores.

This spring when she showed her fall collection in Paris, American buyer Charles Galloway of Beverly Hills said, "There's a customer for that, and these are definitely clothes for the young."

The "beggar look," associated with the new designers, originally came from the streets of London where it appeared about a year ago, according to a New York fashion correspondent from Tokyo.

As they have done with Western technology, the Japanese designers quickly adapted the ideas and improved upon them.

"Women want something new," says Comme des Garçons spokeswoman Marian Greenburg.

International sales for Comme des Garçons alone have more than tripled to $27 million in the past two years, soared 10 fold during the same period, Ms. Greenburg said.

In Paris — a city already sprinkled with boutiques of such established Japanese designers as Kenzo, Hanae Mori and Issey — a Comme des Garçons shop that opened last fall ships its merchandise to stores across Europe in Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Holland, Denmark and Norway.

"The Japanese look provides an alternative to American and European fashions," said Nina Santisi, publicity director for New York's elegant specialty store, Henri Bendel.

The success of the Comme des Garçons boutique in Paris led to the unveiling of its first American store at Bendel's Feb. 28.

Boutique manager Ginny Zeitler says her less daring customers are sometimes afraid to try on some of the "difficult" outfits — often seen in high fashion journals on slim models wearing a smudge of blue or black lipstick.

According to Zeitler, many of her customers are jet set shoppers and those in the fashion business, not "corporate people."

The shoppers who frequent her exclusive store do not seem to mind that a hand-dyed black and white baggy cotton dress costs as much as $515.

Loss Broods Well

North Carolina entered the race, put up a good fight, and lost. The high-priced, income-producing computer research center chose Texas instead. Gov. Jim Hunt's office summed up the situation: "Naturally we're disappointed ... but the fact that we were in the top four shows we have a lot to offer the industry."

At one time, 52 cities in 22 states were competing for the center, a multimillion-dollar project to be developed by Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corp., a consortium of 12 major U.S. corporations. At the end, it was a choice between Austin, Texas; North Carolina's Research Triangle Park; San Diego and Atlanta. Austin won.

It was a big victory, one that would have settled nicely in this state. The corporation will have an annual budget approaching $100 million with 275 scientists and about 150 support personnel.

Texas Gov. Mark White compares the decision by MCC to NASA's move to Houston in the early 1960s. "It should be a magnet and a hub that will produce a great many technological spinoffs," he said.

This is the type of industry that Gov. Hunt has been seeking for North Carolina. It does, indeed, speak well of his efforts that the state was among the final choices for such a project. The effort to land a victory of this magnitude should not be lessened.

Choose Carefully

W.E. Fulford, Jr., who has presided over much of the growth and development of Pitt County College, will be taking a leave of absence for a year beginning July 1.

An interim president will be chosen by the board of trustees to direct the college during the year. No doubt the board will act as speedily as possible, but at the same time, choose carefully the person who will serve as interim president during the year.

Pitt Community College is a major educational entity in our community and it is making an important contribution in training its students for business, the medical field, industry and further education.

The interim president will have much to do to prepare for the fall quarter at PCC and we hope it will be a person who will continue to direct the institution toward further service to our community.

Vibes Pay Off

NEW YORK (AP) — Since he holds many patents in vibration analysis, and because he invests in stocks, it isn't surprising that Robert S. Morrow should seek guidance from the vibes emitted by the stock market.

What is surprising are the results. In November 1980 he forecast the market would bottom out in August 1982. When it did, he bought five warrants — for leverage — and showed a profit of 86 percent by the second week in May.

The average would have been higher if Lomax Petroleum had performed as well as his high-tech choices. It rose only 7 percent, diluting the 152 percent gain on Syntech International, the 113 percent on Grant Industries, the 99 percent on Codenol Technology, and the 59 percent return on Balance Computer.

Throughout his professional life the 50-year-old Morrow has measured and analyzed vibration patterns in machines and instruments, the better to reduce the movements to zero. He holds 34 patents.

In 1976, at the insistence of his wife, Sandra, he joined an amateur investment club near his Dublin, Ohio, home and became intrigued with the pulses given off by the market "as surely as the ocean has waves."

Delving deeper into the mathematical analysis of the waves, measuring in particular their frequency and amplitude, he found a bull-bear pattern of 52 months, and within it smaller cycles of 26 months down to three weeks.

He had, he felt, discovered the market's timing, an invaluable tool to go along with the more conventional criteria he used in picking individual stocks.

Morrow seeks high-tech stocks because of their tendency to be fast growers, and, of course, because he is more aware of their merits. As manager of research for such a company, he reads 40 technical journals each month.

The companies he chooses, he says, have the potential to double in 12 to 18 months. Most have a 25 percent annual growth rate, 15 percent after-tax profit, and produce a unique product that is bound to rise if its industry does.

Using those criteria, and relying on spectrum or vibration analyses, he recommended 14 stocks to his club beginning in 1976 and, during the time they were held, saw them gain an average of 64 percent a year after commissions.

Morris doesn't claim to know all the reasons for market cycles, but suspects it has much to do with such things as paychecks, taxes and Social Security payments, all of which are locked into some fraction of a year.

He has found the 52-month cycle to be made up of about 34 bull months and 18 bears, which leads him to the forecast of a 1350 peak in the Dow Jones industrial average by April 30, 1985.

In the meantime, however, he thinks the high for this year has been or is about to be reached — "there is a 3 percent noise level that nobody can forecast," he says — and that the Dow will close this year at 1104.

To Morris, "stocks are a massive ebb and flow of funds." If you understand this ebb and flow, he says, you can use the short cycles to exploit trading opportunities and the long ones for longer-term investments.

He insists that even monetary and fiscal policies do not change the cycle, a view at odds with the beliefs of many conventional forecasters. Such policies affect the amplitude of cycles, he says, but not their frequency.

Morris also scoffs at the theory that expanding economies and markets occur before a presidential election, the notion being that an incumbent seeks to spur economic activity and thereby his election chances. That cycle, he claims, cannot be found before 1962. If it exists, he says, it is mere coincidence.

Deeply immersed in engineering, Morrow says he isn't about to drop out. Instead, he says, he has simply found a new interest that insures against middle-age doldrums — and puts money in his pocket.

Nevertheless, he has registered as an investment adviser, handling accounts of $50,000 to $300,000, and plans to expand it to include physicians and athletes.

RALEIGH — When Gov. Jim Hunt presented his budget at the beginning of the year, legislators looked with skepticism on the proposal to lift the freeze on increment pay raises. To reinstitute the programs of annual steps for teachers and merit raises for state employees, the Legislature would have to find $96 million. Considering the recession and the mood against tax increases, it didn't appear likely that money would be found.

But now, a recovery is under way, some tax increases are being discussed and Hunt's base budget was trimmed by some $45 million. So, Hunt and legislative leaders are talking about a pay increase that would go beyond the $96 million.

The proposal calls for a 5 percent pay hike for all state workers. But, the freeze would remain in effect. Total cost, by my calculations, would be $146.8 million — some $50 million more than the original plan.

The charm of the across-the-board pay hike is that it is seen as being fairer to all state workers than was Hunt's original proposal. The teacher and state employee increment programs are not identical. If the freeze is lifted, all teachers get a raise this year, but not all state employees.

Teachers are on a 10-step salary schedule that was instituted in 1980. No teacher has yet peaked out on that schedule. So, if the increment increases were re-instated, all teachers would have gotten a 4.8 percent raise.

State employees are on a nine-step schedule. More than 15 percent of them have reached the top of that schedule and these people won't get a raise this year if only the freeze is lifted.

Also, the assembly never appropriates enough money to give everyone a merit increase. If the lowest paid employees all get steps, only two-thirds of the state workforce would get the raises.

Everytime a higher paid employee gets one, it decreases that percentage.

Emmett Burden, executive director of the N.C. State Employees Association, estimates that 40 percent of the state employees would not get any increase next July if only the freeze is lifted.

"An across-the-board raise would be much fairer and more equitable," said Arch Laney, executive director of the N.C. State Government Employees Association, "especially since we haven't had anything in terms of a raise in two years."

State employees last got a raise — 5 percent — in January 1982. But, six months later they learned that the merit program was being frozen because of that year's fiscal crunch.

John Dornan, executive director of the N.C. Association of Educators, says both plans mean the same money for individual teachers. But, with an across-the-board raise, base salaries would rise.

That would be better in the long run, it would make teaching more attractive to beginners and give experienced teachers greater earning potential. NCAE favors the idea.

Going to a across-the-board raise would represent a change of heart for Hunt. He's said he favors re-implementation of the step increases because they reward productivity. But there's strong feeling in the Legislature that it would be unfair to do nothing more than lift the freeze.

Hunt worries that if the freeze is not lifted this year, the merit increase program could lose its hallowed place in the budget. Go two years without it and it can no longer be considered an automatic element of the budget every year. Burden and Laney share that concern but they think the program can wait another year, if it means getting a raise for all state employees.

To the editor:

In the last two decades, U.S. tuna boats have killed more than eight million dolphins. For reasons no one knows, tuna travel under the dolphins, so fishermen use the dolphins to locate the tuna and intentionally set nets around them. Unable to escape, the dolphins are entangled in the nets and drown or die of shock.

With enactment of the Marine Mammal Protection Act in 1972, making the killing of dolphins illegal, the government instituted an observer program whereby technicians would accompany a random sampling of tuna boats to insure compliance with dolphin protection regulations. Within several years, the dolphin kill was at a tenth of its previous level. But last January a federal court ruled that the observer program is unconstitutional, which could prove disastrous for dwindling dolphin populations. The observer program offered the only practical method of assuring that dolphin-saving techniques were being used and of estimating mortality rates.

The MMPA was intended to protect the dolphins. We must let our representatives in Congress know that we demand enforcement of the MMPA through the observer program and continued research into dolphin-saving techniques or dolphin populations may collapse.

Dolphins possess brains as large as and as complex as our own. Some suggest that the dolphin is at least smarter than any other animal (except perhaps the whale) and possibly even smarter than humans. It will be tragic if the dolphin sacrifice continues until the herds are too small and too few to recover.

To the editor:

Please let me preface my comments. Greenville and Pitt County people are very blessed to have some excellent dedicated doctors. I love and appreciate those who serve so well. However, isn't there someone, somewhere who can help the average working person? Medical expenses are unheard of.

To cite my case, I went to a local doctor last week and spent approximately 10 minutes in his presence. He checked my throat, looked into my eyes, checked my reflexes and had me walk across the room for him. They called it a neurological workup. I was referred to this doctor by another local doctor.

When I left his office and stopped to pay my bill there was a sign "Expected to pay when services are rendered." When I asked the receptionist how much my visit was, she replied $70. I said, "I beg your pardon," thinking I had surely misunderstood her. Her reply was the same thing.

Do you realize that, considering this, his hourly rate could reach $420 per hour. I was unable to pay $70, but could pay $35, which incidentally left me $35 in my checking account. There was no diagnosis given. I still have my problem and am short $35 and in debt $35. Can't someone help us with our problem?

Strength For Today

An older minister, speaking to a group of young ministers, advised them that when they went to their first parish they should become acquainted with their new surroundings by walking through them.

"Do not ride through your parish," said the old teacher, "until you have first walked through it. Tramp through it step by step until you know its life. Get down on the level on which everybody walks, and you will understand your people and your problems better."

One of the conspicuous things about Jesus of Nazareth was the way he lived his life amid the teeming crowds of his day. John the Baptist lived in the wilderness and people went out to hear him preach, but Jesus carried his message into the cities and villages and countrysides of Palestine. This was one of the things which made Jesus the more vital of the two.

Don't ride through life — walk through it. Enter into it living, and by so doing you will find life.

Hi-Tech Job Interview

Apparently the job market for college graduates is still in the hi-tech industries. The trouble is that most graduates don't know how to apply for a hi-tech job.

When Rod Beaver came home from an interview the other day he was very discouraged.

"The personnel director only spent three minutes with me and said I wasn't qualified."

"Of course you weren't qualified," his uncle, who works for IBM, told him. "Look at the way you're dressed. You're wearing a blue suit and a white shirt and a conservative tie. And you shaved. Is that any way to apply for a position in a hi-tech industry?"

Beaver said, "I don't understand. I wanted to make a good impression."

"You don't make a good impression in hi-tech by wearing a shirt and tie."

"I thought everyone at IBM had to wear a dark suit, shirt and tie."

"That was in the old days when it was important to look nice. If you want to be a salesman you can dress like that, but if you're going for the big money in programming and research they don't trust you if you're too well dressed."

"What should he have worn?" Beaver's mother asked.

"A sport shirt, blue jeans and open sandals. You have to look like a crazy genius before they take any interest in you. You kids think you can just walk into a hi-tech company all slicked and dressed up and they'll be impressed with you. But it isn't so. They want people who look like they know something about computers."

"I've got an outfit in my closet I can wear, and I'll go out for an interview this afternoon."

"Don't go out until you grow a beard. Hi-tech executives hate people who are clean shaven. And don't get a haircut for a while. You want to look like a gorilla if you hope to get the personnel director's attention."

"Does he have to grow a beard?" his mother asked.

"It could make the difference between $25,000 and $45,000 a year," his uncle said.

"What do I say to the personnel director?" Rod asked.

"You don't say much. I'll be the personnel man. Now the first question I'll ask you is if you think you would be happy working for the company."

"Yes, sir. It's always been my dream to work for a company like this."

"That's not the correct reply. You say you have no idea, but you're willing to give it a try. Except you don't want to be bugged about how long it takes you to come up with something. And you don't want anyone checking on how many hours you put in."

"Does he have to be that surly?" his mother asked.

"There are hundreds of kids waiting out there for jobs in hi-tech, and all the companies are looking for are surly loners who don't want to be told what to do."

"If Rod is going to look unkempt and be surly how is he going to impress the hi-tech clients?" his mother wanted to know.

"If he gets the job he'll never see a customer. The people they hire for research and development are kept in a separate building in cages and they get a banana once or twice a day."

Rod thanked his uncle for the advice, and came back the next month to announce he got a job with the Apple Corporation. "I did everything you told me, me, and they were so impressed with the way I looked and how surly I was, they selected me over two guys from the Stanford Business School, and gave me a surfboard so I wouldn't get bored in my office."

Wallace Prefers Mondale

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Reflecting the depth of change in Deep South politics, an intimate of Gov. George C. Wallace was asked which current Democratic presidential hopeful would appeal most to the old segregationist's current constituency and replied: Fritz Mondale!

Wallace and Mondale indeed share the same left-of-center coalition currently dominant in Alabama Democratic politics. That makes unlikely in the extreme Wallace's endorsement of Sen. John Glenn, help that some insiders here think might be necessary to overcome Mondale's organizational head start.

This judgment seems extreme, but Glenn is in for the fight of his life against Mondale in Alabama's presidential primary March 13, one of at least 11 primaries on that "super-Tuesday" that might well determine the nominee. Glenn's Southern Strategy, predicated on the theory that the ex-astronaut's more conservative image will automatically prevail in the old Confederacy, collides with leftward impact of black voting in the desegregated South.

Glenn's prospects in Alabama had seemed particularly bright to his managers considering the influence here of one of his supporters back home in Ohio: Marvin Warner, a Cincinnati business tycoon who was Jimmy Carter's ambassador to Switzerland. A native of Birmingham, Warner attended the University of Alabama with some of the state's prominent figures — such as Gen. Taylor Hardin, a key aide to Wallace in his glory days as governor.

Harden has been pushing Glenn in Alabama. But an even more influential Warner schoolmate, George Corley Wallace, has not. "Who would pay any attention if I did endorse anybody?" he said, when we asked during an interview in his capitol office whether he would endorse anybody for president. Wallace, who once delighted in mimicking and ridiculing liberal Democratic politicians, would not rise to the bait when we asked him his opinion of current hopefuls.

While Wallace was eager to discuss with us such international problems as the Third World debt overhang ("I warned against that, you'll remember," he said), the only presidential campaign he wanted to talk about were those of 1964, 1968 and 1972 in which he was a dramatic participant. That Wallace will keep hands off the campaign of 1984 may be the oddest but is surely the safest forecast in today's Alabama politics.

If he has a personal preference for president, it is not Glenn but an old colleague and darkest of dark horses: Florida's former governor, Reubin Askew. Beyond sentiment, however, Wallace is running with political horses not faintly similar to his old American Independent Party.

Wallace is allied with a four-pronged coalition — labor, school teachers, blacks and trial lawyers — that opposes the business interests on vital tax questions; in our interview, Wallace complained about the "businessman's greed." With the race issue no longer an obsession, he has returned to his left-populist roots. Hence the confident appraisal by his intimate: Wallace and Mondale have the same constituency.

Even in this transformed climate, one mainstream Alabama Democratic politician assumed two months ago that Glenn is more to Alabama's taste than Mondale. He consequently contributed $250 to the senator's campaign. To his surprise, he and several other Glenn contributors were not invited to a cocktail party marking the senator's visit to Montgomery (one of the minor but damaging mistakes now legendary in the Glenn campaign).

"I found an awful lot of Nixon and Reagan backers there," said one mainstream Democrat who crashed the party. Glenn's invited guests would have been called Dixiecrats two decades ago. An example: John R. (Bubba) Trotman, a nominal Democrat who has backed Republicans in congressional and U.S. Senate races. Hosting the party were Ed Lowder and his son, Bobby, representatives of Alabama "old money" and the Farm Bureau.

The links of the Lowders and Trotman with today's Alabama Democratic Party are slim. Noting this and Mondale's organizational headstart, one insider told us: "I think it will take Wallace to save Glenn here, and that's not going to happen."

The judgment is premature. Copyright 1983 Field Enterprises, Inc.

Salvadoran Rebels Say Forming Provincial Rule

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist insurgents say they will create a revolutionary government in a northern province and are urging thousands of peasants who fled the rebel stronghold to return.

The Popular Liberation Forces announced Tuesday over the clandestine Radio Farabundo Marti the formation of a "Regional Governing Junta" for Chalatenango province.

The rebel faction also said it is establishing civil registries to issue birth, marriage and death certificates and launching a civic action program. It did not provide details during its broadcast from "somewhere in Chalatenango."

Chalatenango, located along the Honduran border, is the rebel band's center of operations. The Popular Liberation Forces, largest of the five guerrilla groups fighting the U.S.-supported rightist government, claims to control 26 of Chalatenango's 33 townships.

Stretched thin by guerrilla offensives around the country, the military stopped defending the communities against hit-and-run rebel attacks six months ago and now use its troops to guard highways, power plants and other key installations in the area.

The rebel broadcast said it will form a "popular local council" composed of guerrilla leaders, prominent leftists in the province and a group of Roman Catholic priests and nuns who joined the insurrection and call themselves the "popular church." It did not say who would form the junta.

"We are building popular power. We are advancing toward final victory," the broadcast said.

Guerrilla leader Facundo Guardado urged peasants who fled the province to return and appealed to small businessmen to join the rebel cause. Half of the province's population of 225,000 is reported to have fled since fighting between the rebels and government forces began in October 1979.

Solidarity Members Sentenced

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Five Solidarity members have received prison terms ranging up to two years following their conviction for "disturbing the normal functioning" of an internment camp, the official news agency PAP reports.

A sixth member of the outlawed independent union, Radoslaw Sarnicki, 19, drew a suspended one-year sentence, was fined $118 and placed on three years probation, PAP said Tuesday.

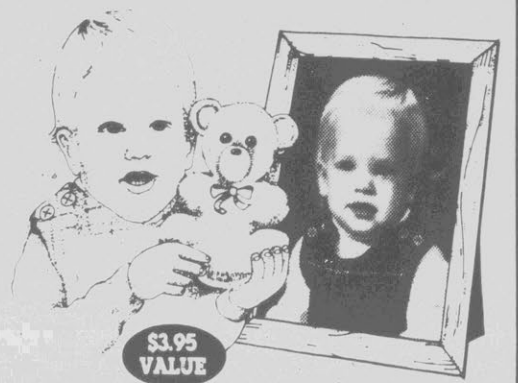

The six defendants had alleged they were beaten by guards on Aug. 12, 1982, at the Kwidzyn internment camp in northern Poland where they were held after the December 1981 imposition of martial law.

During the March 3 trial at a civilian court in the Baltic city of Elblag, defendant Zygmunt Golawski testified prison guards "savagely beat" about 40 inmates who protested cancellation of their relatives' visitation rights.

Juror Reports 'Never Doubt'

NEW YORK (AP) — A juror said there was "never a question of guilt" for a man convicted of slaying a federal witness and three CBS technicians and conspiring to murder another person in what prosecutors said was an effort to cover up a massive fraud.

Donald Nash, 47, of Keansburg, N.J., displayed no emotion as he was convicted Tuesday of four cold-blooded slayings on a lonely New York City pier, gunning down Margaret Barbera, 38, and the three CBS employees who came to her aid on April 12, 1982.

"It was never a question of guilt," said juror Raymond Coletti after the Manhattan Supreme Court panel convicted Nash following an eight-week trial.

The technicians gunned down at the parking lot atop Pier 92 in Manhattan were Edward Benford of Hawthorne, Leo Kuranuki of Great Neck, and Robert Schulze of Clifton, N.J.

The jury, which deliberated for 13 hours over two days, also found Nash guilty of conspiring to kill Miss Barbera's friend and co-worker, Jenny Soo Chin, a 46-year-old Teaneck, N.J., woman who disappeared on Jan. 5, 1982, and is presumed dead.

Nash faces a sentence of 25 years to life on each of the four murder convictions, and up to 25 years on the conspiracy count. He is to be sentenced by Justice Clifford A. Scott on June 22.

Defense attorney Lawrence Hochheiser, who said he felt "terribly shaken" as the verdict was announced, told reporters it would be appealed. He had called only one defense witness, an eye doctor, arguing that Nash's poor eyesight made it unlikely that anyone would hire him as a hit man. He also questioned the validity of the prosecution's forensic evidence.

Hochheiser said Nash told him, "You did the best you could, don't worry."

Assistant District Attorney Gregory Waples would not say whether his office would prosecute Candor Diamond Co. owner Irwin Margolies, whom he accused in court as the man who hired Nash to silence Miss Barbera and

Gunmen Get $10.7 Million In Armored Car Theft

PARIS (AP) — Police searched today for three or four gunmen who robbed an armored car and escaped with as much as $10.7 million in cash.

Police said the holdup took place Tuesday night at the intersection of a highway between Massy and Palaiseau in the suburbs southwest of Paris.

They said the three employees who were in the truck were not injured.

The employees told police the gunmen were riding in a car that resembled a police vehicle and forced them over to the side of the road. The gunmen then fled in the armored vehicle.

Authorities said the armored car had visited shops, banks and businesses and was loaded with cash from the Pentecost holiday weekend. The head of the collection firm which operated the truck initially estimated the loss at the equivalent of $1.3 million but police sources said the sum was closer to $10.7 million.

Buyers See Continued Economic Improvement

NEW YORK (AP) — The economy will continue improving over the next 12 months amid a "slight or moderate" increase in prices, corporate purchasing managers said in a survey released today.

Fifty-nine percent of the managers said they expect the current quarter to be stronger than the first quarter, compared with 9 percent who think it will be worse, and seven of 10 managers predicted improvement again during the second half of the year, the National Association of Purchasing Management said.

The association represents those who buy equipment and supplies for companies, and the latest survey queried managers at 250 corporations nationwide.

Sixty-four percent of the managers said they see price increases during the rest of the year, while only 1 percent expect lower prices. Last November, only 29 percent of the purchasing agents predicted higher prices.

The higher prices will be across the board, according to 22 percent of the agents, while 78 percent "see only selective changes," the association said.

Despite expectations of an improving economy, the purchasing managers reported only a moderate increase so far in production.

Eleven percent said their companies were operating at less than 50 percent of capacity. That was down from 19 percent last November, but above the 9 percent who reported such factory utilization in May 1982 and the 5 percent in November 1981.

The agents surveyed also could not report a boom in capital spending this year.

Thirty-three percent said their companies will spend more for capital programs, such as new plant and equipment, in 1983, but 40 percent said their firms will spend less than in 1982.

Wine Find

MENTOR, Ohio (AP) — Daniel Zivko didn't know much about wine, but he seemed to recall "they made good wine in Bordeaux." So he bought a dusty collection of bottles for $500 which may turn into a $40,000 windfall.

Zivko and his wife went to a sale of furnishings at the mansion of Edward W. Moore in Kirtland last fall, hoping to pick up some art objects at reasonable prices.

A wine expert was reported to have appraised the wine and liquor collection, including about 880 bottles of wine, at $700.

Zivko, who works for a subcontractor doing energy audits, picked up one bottle marked Haut Sauternes 1912 Bordeaux.

"I pulled it out of the case and held it to the light," he recalls. "It was a light amber color and gleamed like a topaz. The Haut Sauternes meant nothing to me, but from somewhere in the back of my mind, I recalled that they made good wine in Bordeaux."

He offered $450 for the collection, and was talked up to $500. The Zivkos took about 100 of the bottles home with them, stopping along the way to buy a couple of wine books.

Among the bottles was an 1899 Chateau Haut-Brion. That vintage, one book said, was outstanding.

The Zivkos were later told by Alexander C. McNally, who runs the annual Heublein Inc. auction of rare wines, that 390 bottles of their wines would bring between $25,000 to $40,000 at auction.

So the Zivkos plan to auction off their wine Thursday at the Beverly Wilshire hotel in Los Angeles, and they'll learn exactly how much their $500 investment was worth.

Impolite Defendant Has Plea Rejected By Judge

HOUSTON (AP) — A judge who jailed one teen-ager who failed to call him "sir" now has refused to accept a plea bargain for a woman accused of welfare fraud, because she made the same omission.

State District Judge Michael McSpadden refused Tuesday to accept Sandra Thomas' guilty plea even though attorneys for the state and the defense had agreed on conditions of a plea bargain. Under that arrangement, Ms. Thomas would have been sentenced to four years probation and ordered to pay the state $892.

McSpadden said the woman answered several questions "Yes" and "No" and that he repeatedly admonished her to add "sir" to her answers.

"When you're asking me for probation, I want you to show me some respect," McSpadden said he told the woman. He said she answered another question "yes," and he refused to accept her plea and set a trial date for June 27.

"We'll just let a jury decide this case," McSpadden said. "It will be interesting to see what they might do with a welfare fraud."

Assistant District Attorney Bill Miller said he would not comment. "I don't want to fan the fires," he said.

Defense attorney Vincent Musachia said he had warned Ms. Thomas to call McSpadden "sir."

On March 30, McSpadden sentenced Michael A. Washington, 18, to 30 days in jail for burglary after he refused to address the judge as "sir."

Washington was freed April 17 after an appeal to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin. He was assessed a four-year probation sentence for burglary of a building.

Reagan Calls MX Vote 'Wise Step' For America

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lobbying hard for votes, President Reagan scored a major legislative victory by persuading the Democratic-controlled House to approve funds to develop the 10-warhead MX missile.

Reagan called Tuesday's 239-186 House vote a "wise, courageous step forward for America" that tells the world "Americans are uniting in a common search to protect our security, reduce the level of nuclear weapons and strengthen the peace."

The Republican-controlled Senate was scheduled to vote today on MX development funds. In a test of sentiment, Senators voted 59-35 Tuesday to kill a Democratic attempt to delay an MX decision until Reagan agrees to a basing plan to make the weapon less vulnerable to a Soviet attack.

Critics say the MX would be vulnerable to Soviet attack and destabilize the arms race. Reagan argued the MX is needed as a bargaining chip in arms negotiations with the Soviets.

Extensive lobbying by Reagan was credited by MX supporters and critics alike with persuading the House to reverse its 245-176 vote of last December against the weapon. But Reagan won over many opponents by pledging his commitment to arms control.

Reagan won another legislative round as the Senate Finance Committee voted 11-7 to approve his bill to give tuition tax credits for parents of private school pupils. The measure would eventually allow a credit of up to $300 a year for each private school pupil.

The panel also voted 11-5 to raise the government's debt ceiling another $100 billion to $1.389 trillion. Treasury officials say the increased borrowing authority, which has passed the House, is needed because the current debt limit of $1.29 trillion will be reached at month's end.

Acknowledging that the measure's fate was unclear, Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., warned there would not be a Memorial Day recess unless a debt ceiling bill was approved.

The Finance Committee was also planning today to vote to repeal a law requiring the withholding of taxes from interest and dividends starting July 1.

On the other side of Capitol Hill, the House Appropriations Committee cut $240 million from the first appropriation bill for 1984 before sending the bill to the House floor. The cuts were approved in response to threats of a presidential veto.

The $14.29 billion measure would provide funds for the Energy Department, Army Corps of Engineers, Bureau of Reclamation and eight smaller agencies including the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The panel also quickly approved a $34.19 billion spending bill for the Department of Housing and Urban Development and 17 other independent agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency and National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The full House, however, is expected to add $4.6 billion to the measure for revenue sharing with local governments that was not included in the version approved by the Appropriations Committee.

A measure to establish a state-federal health insurance program for the unemployed won approval of the House Energy and Commerce Committee and headed to the full House with broad bi-partisan support.

States choosing to participate would receive matching federal payments that depended on a state's unemployment rate. Jobless workers who enrolled would pay a premium of 2 percent of their weekly unemployment check.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, meanwhile, approved former Florida Sen. Richard Stone's nomination to be Reagan's special ambassador to Central America. Gen. Paul X. Kelley won approval from the Senate Armed Services Committee to be the new Marine Corps commandant. Both nominations now go to the full Senate.

Key Team For 1984 Olympics

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — One of the teams expected at the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles will not run, jump, swim or compete in any contest, yet will play a key role.

According to the publication MIS Week, there will be a team of some 450 technicians whose duties during the 16-day event will be to handle regular telephone service, the broadcasting of video and audio signals to 3 billion people in 160 countries, and the teletyping of data, and teleconferencing — all using digital fiberoptic cable at nine venues in the Los Angeles area.

Nominee

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Lt. Gov. Martha Layne Collins, trying to become Kentucky's first woman governor, narrowly captured the Democratic gubernatorial primary to set up a campaign against former major league baseball pitcher Jim Bunning.

With more than 600,000 Democratic votes from Tuesday's election counted by early today, Mrs. Collins, a former schoolteacher, had an 11,519-vote lead over Louisville Mayor Harvey Sloane, making his second successive attempt for the state's top office.

Bunning, a state senator who was supported by the state and national Republican parties, swept his primary against feeble opposition.

Court's Ruling To Mean Less Money For Schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, accused by university president Bob Jones III of murdering religious freedom, may have dealt a death blow to some religious schools.

The nation's highest court repudiated the Reagan administration's legal views Tuesday, ruling by an 8-1 vote that the federal government rightly denied tax breaks to racially discriminatory schools.

"The government has a fundamental, overriding interest in eradicating racial discrimination in education — discrimination that prevailed with official approval for the first 165 years of this nation's history," Chief Justice Warren E. Burger wrote.

Burger said the administration was wrong when it told the Internal Revenue Service to stop withholding tax-exempt status for such private schools.

President Reagan, asked at a White House ceremony about the ruling, said, "We will obey the law."

Tuesday's decision is a serious blow to many private schools that depend heavily on tax-deductible contributions from individuals. Those contributions are not as attractive when not tax deductible.

The high court had been told that without such special tax treatment, many religiously affiliated schools would have to close down.

President Reagan had explained the administration's break from a 13-year IRS policy as an attempt to rein in bureaucracy, not to promote racism. Administration lawyers said Congress never authorized the IRS to combat racial bias by denying tax breaks.

With only Justice William H. Rehnquist dissenting, the Supreme Court said the administration was wrong. Such tax-exempt status properly was denied Bob Jones University in Greenville, S.C., and the Goldsboro Christian Schools in Goldsboro, N.C., the court said.

Bob Jones University bars interracial dating and marriages for its students, and the Goldsboro schools refuse to admit blacks. The policies are based on religious beliefs.

"We're mourning the death of freedom, religious freedom," said university president Jones, an ordained preacher. "It's been murdered by the Supreme Court today."

"We'll pay the taxes we have to pay, and trust the Lord to sustain this institution," Jones said.

National and state flags were flown at half-staff at the university Tuesday.

William T. Coleman Jr., the prominent black lawyer and civil rights advocate specially appointed by the Supreme Court to defend the IRS policy, praised the ruling.

"I think the court has said for the first time that racial discrimination in any form whatsoever in educational institutions is against national policy," Coleman said. "The government cannot directly or indirectly support it."

For Bob Jones University and the Goldsboro schools, that indirect support amounted to about $1 million a year in tax breaks.

Burger's opinion discounted arguments that the IRS action represented a trampling of religious freedoms when applied to religiously affiliated schools.

"The governmental interest in stamping out racial discrimination in education substantially outweighs whatever burden denial of tax benefits places on (the schools') exercise of their religious beliefs," Burger said.

Conceding that the ruling "will inevitably have a substantial impact on the operation of private religious schools," he added that it will not prevent those schools from observing their religious tenets.

The American Jewish Committee said in a statement that the decision was "a victory in the continuing battle against bigotry." The National Association of Independent Schools said it was pleased, adding that "the private school world in general does not support racial discrimination."

NAN BARBER

Health Center Adds New Counselor

Recently returned to Greenville after a 10-year absence, Nan Barber is a new substance abuse counselor with the Pitt County Mental Health Center.

A Greenville native, she has worked for the past several years as a social worker in Chattanooga, Tenn. Much of her adult life here was spent as a teller with Wachovia Bank. She majored in social work at East Carolina University and was employed as a social worker before leaving here. While in Chattanooga, she commuted three years to the University of Tennessee at Knoxville to earn a master's degree in social work.

Most of her work in Tennessee was in protective services — part of the time children's protective services, part of the time adult protective services.

It was while she was doing protective services work that Mrs. Barber began to see the rewards of assisting substance abusers and their families toward recovery. "There is nothing more exciting to me," she said, "than working toward recovery with an alcoholic and his or her family."

She encourages her clients to use all the resources of the community, especially Alcoholics Anonymous, Al-Anon, Families Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous and the like. The program that each of these organizations offers one to become responsible for oneself and face one day at a time work and work very well," she said. She said she only wishes there were more in this area to give her clients more choice as to when to attend.

Mrs. Barber is the wife of Ed Barber, a car dealer. She has one stepdaughter, Wendy, 17. She attends Hooker Memorial Christian Church and is a member of a number of social work organizations.

States See Treasuries At Low Ebb

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite signs that a national economic recovery is gaining momentum, state treasuries will end this fiscal year at an all-time low, the National Governors' Association said today.

"Fiscal 1983 state budget balances are expected to total less than one-half billion dollars, or two-tenths of 1 percent of current expenditures; state spending has slowed dramatically; and few states are expecting big revenue gains in 1984," a report by the association said.

The same survey also found that for this fiscal year, which ends for most states June 30, the balance for all 50 states will total $345 million.

If Texas, an energy rich state and the only one with a large surplus, were excluded from the aggregate, however, the national picture would be a net deficit.

The $345 million surplus for the fiscal year now nearing an end compares to more than $11 billion just three years ago.

Despite laws or state constitutions that forbid operating budget deficits, seven states now expect to end the year in the red. These are California, Connecticut, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Vermont and Wisconsin. Their combined deficits are expected to total $1.4 billion.

Accord Near On DUI Package

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — After wrangling for weeks, legislative negotiators are on the brink of reaching a compromise version of Gov. Jim Hunt's program to combat drunken driving, lawmakers say.

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, co-chairman of a joint conference committee working on the bill, said Tuesday the Senate panel members had formed a proposal on three of five points still separating the House and Senate versions — including the controversial dram shop portion. Senate conferees were to meet today to discuss the remaining two differences. If they finish, they might submit their proposals to the House delegation later today. Barnes said that discussions on a compromise, which had ground to a near halt, have picked up steam under pressure from Hunt and Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green. Hunt met with Barnes and Lancaster last week, while Green attended the Senate delegation's meeting Tuesday.

Green said in an interview he told the group it was "time to do it (get finished), and they agreed."

"We're mighty close," said Barnes. "Probably within a few days ... we'll be through."

Both versions of Hunt's bill would replace driving under the influence and lesser related offenses with the new charge of driving while impaired. Sentencing would follow a separate hearing and be in accordance with a formula matching punishment with circumstances surrounding individual cases.

Both bills would raise the minimum age for drinking beer and wine from 18 to 19.

The bills would allow immediate, 10-day license revocation for any driver with a blood alcohol content of 0.10 or higher, and convicted drunken drivers could lose their licenses for one year. Cars could be impounded if the owner is caught driving drunk after an earlier DWI conviction.

Nile ...

Sudanese and 48 were Egyptians. The steamer, an old vessel owned by the Nile Valley Co., a joint Egyptian-Sudanese firm, left Aswan on Monday for the 200-mile voyage to Wadi Halfa, a Sudanese river port just south of the border, the sources said.

Shortly after 3 a.m. today (8 p.m. Tuesday EDT), they said, fire broke out on board, gutting the steamer and causing it to sink.

The sources said the ship went down about two miles south of the famous Abu Simbel temples of ancient Egyptian Pharaoh Ramses II.

The area where it sank, the sources said, was infested with crocodiles.

Abu Simbel is about 150 miles south of Aswan.

The steamer was named 10 Ramadan, after the lunar Moslem calendar date of the start of the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, which at the time coincided with Oct. 6. Ramadan is the Moslem holy month of fasting.

The disaster coincided with an important event in relations between Egypt and Sudan — the inauguration today in Khartoum, Sudan's capital, of a joint parliament of 60 Egyptians and 60 Sudanese.

The joint parliament was formed in accordance with a charter the two countries signed last October outlining a 10-year program of policy coordination.

do about religious freedom. I'm not saying whether Goldsboro is right or wrong, but that religious freedom is at stake."

Summerson added he was "very concerned about religious freedom. Unless we get more conservatives in our government, we will lose all the religious freedom we have now." Making note of the constitutional guarantee of freedom of religion, Summerson said "there is a tremendous difference in freedom of religion and freedom from religion, and I'm afraid of what can happen to Christian principles if we lose sight of this difference."

R. W. MacKenzie, chairman of the board of directors at Carolina Country Day School, said "I have no problem with the ruling as it applies to schools that practice racial discrimination. Any school that discriminates racially should not be allowed a tax-exempt status."

The Rev. Travis Smith, who heads the Life Gate Christian Academy in the Chicod Community, feels "the decision is an infringement on the rights of freedom of religion. We have this right under the first amendment, and I feel this ruling is a really terrible decision."

A fifth spokesman, Father Jerry Sherba, pastor of St. Gabriel's Catholic School and administrator of St. Gabriel's School, commented, "It's about time. Such racially discriminatory schools are anti-gospel and anti-constitutional. They undermine the gospel value that all are created equal in the eyes of God and therefore perpetuate racism which is in no uncertain terms sinful."

Budget ...

depending upon the purchasing power of the people.

Mrs. Meeks said the city will experience a shortfall of $41,000 in local option sales tax revenues in 1982-83 and revenues have been projected at $913,916 for the new fiscal year.

The city manager, in her budget message to the mayor and council, said, "In preparing the 1983-84 budget, every effort has been made to work toward the maintenance of an economically sound financial structure which will enable the city to continue to operate in an efficient manner and to continue to provide a full range of municipal services to the citizens."

Mrs. Meeks said employee salaries have been calculated based upon the June 30, 1983 payroll and funds have been recommended to continue the merit program under guidelines approved in 1980.

Position allocations are also recommended at the same level as 1982-83, Mrs. Meeks said, although city departments requested 17 new positions. "Funds are not available in the proposed budget to authorize any of these positions," she informed the council.

The new budget proposes a general fund, which contains personnel and operating expenses for all departments except transit, of $9,538,301, up $46,283 from the current level.

Debt service, which contains expenditures to pay the bonded indebtedness of the city, Parking Authority, and the Utilities Commission, is projected at $2,705,905, down $414,945. Revenue sharing funds anticipated total $695,732 or $9,585 less than 1982-83. Part of the revenue sharing allocation is contingent upon the reenactment of the federal program by Congress.

Public transportation is figured at $282,802 or $80,510 less than the present budget level. The proposed Parking Authority budget amounts to $30,420, down $1,405.

She said a modification in the method of computing the Utilities turnover to the city will result in an increase of approximately $247,887 in 1983-84. The turnover, a variable payment to the city based on citizens' equity in the municipally owned utility, amounted to $1.26 million in 1982-83.

Mrs. Meeks said that while the city's fund balance (cash on hand) is not considered a revenue, it was necessary to appropriate $122,455 of the total in order to balance the new budget. An appropriation of nearly $460,000 from the fund balance was projected last May to help balance the current package.

The city manager said that capital outlay equipment is recommended to be funded at basically the same level as the current year, with funding expected to be channeled through anticipated revenue sharing allocations. She said if the program is not re-enacted, the capital outlay expenses will have to be deferred until other funds become available.

Mrs. Meeks pointed to some "pressing capital improvement needs" that should be addressed this year. She recommended that these needs be met through the sale of net-debt reduction bonds, which are allowed by general statutes. She said it appears the city would be able to issue approximately $942,390 in net-debt reduction bonds during the new fiscal year.

Programs recommended for funding through the issuance of bonds include replacement of the Hooker Road bridge ($129,000), Fifth Street and Rock Springs Road bridge repairs ($25,000), cemetery land ($100,000), a fire-rescue communications system ($128,000), fire-rescue substation land acquisition ($90,000), and fire-rescue headquarters land acquisition ($110,000).

The city and Pitt County jointly fund the operation of Sheppard Memorial Library and the Pitt-Greenville Airport. The city's proposed contribution to Sheppard, budgeted out the revenue sharing trust fund, is $279,021. An appropriation of $30,000 is projected for the airport.

The proposed city budget is available now for public review at city hall, located at the corner of Fifth and Washington streets.

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market advanced broadly today as the rally that began Monday continued.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 2.61 to 1,221.65 in the first half hour.

Gainers took a 2-1 lead over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said buying was fueled by a belief that the gradual upswing in business activity since the start of the year could be the start of a prolonged period of economic expansion.

Many Wall Streeters had expected the recent surge of growth in the money supply — and accompanying fears of higher interest rates — to deal a significant setback to the bull market in stocks.

When it did not, traders apparently concluded that the path of least resistance for stock prices was upward.

A highlight of early activity today was the largest block trade, in number of shares, on record at the Big Board. A 7 million-share block of Ramada Inns crossed the tape at 97½, unchanged from Tuesday's close.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 18.88, for its best daily showing since April 26, when it climbed 22.25.

Gainers led losers by more than 5 to 2 on the NYSE.

Big Board volume swelled to 109.85 million shares from 84.96 million in the previous session.

Both the NYSE's composite index, up 1.19 at 95.58, and the American Stock Exchange market value index, up 6.50 at 458.60, reached record highs.

South Korean Continues Fast In Call For Reforms

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Opposition politician Kim Young-sam has vowed to continue his week-old hunger strike to back demands for democratic reforms, even though he was forcibly taken from his home to a hospital by a score of policemen, sources said today.

Sources said Kim, who began his fast May 18, refused to undergo medical examinations, including blood and urine tests, and declined to take injections. The sources, who asked not to be identified, said the 55-year-old Kim also insisted he would continue to refuse food.

Kim's wife earlier had reported 20 to 30 plainclothes police agents entered their home in Seoul this morning and demanded he get into an ambulance to go to a hospital. She said that after an hour of arguing, her husband was carried out and taken to Seoul National University Hospital.

Mrs. Kim said before he was taken from the house, he told her he would continue to fast as long as he remained conscious. She said he also called on the government to reflect on what he called "undemocratic doings."

Kim headed the now-defunct New Democratic Party and was considered a leading presidential candidate in 1980. But he was placed under house arrest by the military government in May 1980 during a crackdown on anti-government demonstrations.

That house arrest was lifted on April 30, 1981, but was reimposed June 1, 1982, after Kim gave an interview to a foreign publication in which he criticized the government.

Despite the house arrest, Kim issued a statement on May 16 reiterating demands he has long made for the "establishment of a democratic government" in South Korea.

Two days later he said he was beginning an indefinite hunger strike to back those demands even though he knew it meant he "could lose my life in the fight."

Sources had reported he was taking only water and salt and that his weight had dropped by from 143 pounds to 127 pounds. He also was reported to have been running a temperature, suffering headaches and weakness in the legs.

Kirkland Hurls Rose Past Garner, 5-2

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Editor
GARNER — It was a game typical of the 1983 baseball season for the Rose High School Rampants: filled with the unexpected. The outcome, a 5-2 victory for Rose over Garner, was not so unexpected as the way it came about.

The Rampants will now host Mideastern 4-A Conference champion Eastern Wayne Thursday at 8 p.m. at Guy Smith Stadium. The Warriors defeated Pinecrest to earn the right to play Rose in the second round of the 4-A State playoffs.

Who would have thought the Rampants would shut down the most potent offense in the highly touted Cap 8 Conference, or that Rose would score five runs off a pair of pitchers with an combined ERA of 0.97 and 14 wins in 15 decisions? Certainly none of the followers of the Trojans.

But the players, coaches and fans of Rose knew differently.
Senior Kenny Kirkland took over for Mike Kinley on the mound in the second inning to record the win for the Rampants. Kirkland also broke up Garner starter Tony Lee's no-hitter with an RBI single in the third.

"I didn't think we'd score a lot on them," said Rose Coach Ronald Vincent after his team's 19th win in 20 outings. "Kinley's been our ace all year, but he's had control problems recently. I thought it would be a low-scoring game; that's why I pulled him out so quickly."

"I think Kirkland pitched his best game of the season. But I really expected them to hit the ball better than they did."

Garner coach Paul Faulk gave Kirkland a large share of the credit, also.

"He came in and shut the door on us," lamented Faulk, whose team finished with a 19-4 mark overall. "We knew the lefthander (Kinley) was wild — that he wouldn't last long."

The Rampants picked up a pair of unearned runs while taking a 3-1 lead in the top of the third, then added the other two in the fourth.

Rose catcher Curtis Evans popped up in foul territory with an 0-1 count, but Trojan first baseman John Howell dropped the ball to give Evans a second chance. Four pitches later, Evans trotted to first with a walk to open the Rampants rally.

Courtesy runner Bill Johnson stole second, moved to third on a fielder's choice by Rudy Stalls and scored on a wild pitch. Trave Fuqua, who had also walked, took second on the errant pitch. A base on balls to Randy Warren put runners on first and second with two out.

Kirkland stepped to plate and ripped a single to left to drive in Fuqua, but the ball got by J.P. O'Connor to send Warren scampering home. Kirkland rounded second, but O'Connor recovered to nail him at third to end the inning.

Designated hitter Eric Woodworth blasted a solo homer over the 355 mark in left with one out in the second to improve the Rampants' advantage to 4-1, and Mike Laboni followed with a base on balls. Evans singled to right, but Lee bobbled the ball to send Laboni running to third. The throw from Lee was in time for the tag but sailed off the tip of third sacker Roy Hill's glove to allow Laboni to trot home.

After a fly ball by Bobby Buie for the second out in the fourth, reliever Billy Tart struck out the next seven Rose batters. A bunt single by Stalls in the seventh was the only runner Tart allowed over the final 12 batters the Rampants sent to the plate.

"I can't believe Tart didn't make all-conference," said Vincent.

"If Billy Tart isn't an all-conference pitcher, then I don't know who is," concurred Faulk. "I really can't understand how he was left out."

The Trojans fared only marginally better over the final frames, as Kirkland allowed a lone run in the fifth before retiring seven of the last eight batters. Dorsey Clement walked, and Doug Phillips slapped the only single for Garner to drive him in. The ball Phillips hit bounded towards Fuqua at shortstop but took a high hop when it hit the seam of the infield grass.

"When they got the lead, they took me out of the game," Faulk said. "Our game plan was shot — we planned to run."

The Trojans left a pair of runners on base in the first frame, and proceeded to leave them loaded in the second and third.

Garner managed a run in the second inning before Kirkland came on in relief. Lee led off with a walk, and courtesy runner Dorsey Edmundson moved to third on a sacrifice and two more walks. Kinley's fourth base on balls of the game drove in Edmundson, and Vincent made his pitching change.

"The first three innings we left too many ducks on the pond; that was the key to game," said Faulk. "You can't leave the bases loaded twice and expect to win."

"Greenville made the plays; I don't know if they could play any better than that."

The second round game sets up a meeting between the two Eastern finalists from last year. Eastern Wayne downed Rose in the state semifinals last season — the only loss the Rampants suffered during the 1982 campaign.

The winner of that game will face the winner of Saturday night's Lee County-Richmond County contest next week.

Rose's Craig Davies Ninth In State Golf

CHAPEL HILL — Rose High School's Craig Davies rallied from a 77 on Monday to score an even par 72 yesterday and take ninth place in the State High School Golf Championships.

Davies score of 149 made him the only area golfer to score in the top 15. Farmville Central's Gary Hobgood just missed out, firing a 77-74 for a 151, tying for 16th place.

Rose as a team finished in 19th place among the 21 teams entered. Only Havelock, which tied Rose for second place in the Jacksonville sectional finished behind Rose. Elkin, the 21st team, was disqualified on Monday.

Lee County pushed past Reidsville, South Mecklenburg and Jacksonville to win the team title with a 624, while the other three were tied for second at 625.

The individual championship went to Charlotte Catholic's Francis Ciucevich, who had a 143, one under par.

Other Rose scores included: John Jordan, 83-83-166; Jordy Smith 98-87-185; and Chris Evans, 86-88-174.

CBA Ousts Valkyries

PIKEVILLE — Charles B. Aycock's Eastern Carolina Conference champions ousted D.H. Conley's Valkyries from the State 4-A,3-A softball playoffs yesterday with a 10-4 victory.

Aycock took the lead with a run in the first, but Conley rallied to tie it up in the top of the second. Aycock then pushed over two in the bottom of the frame, and added two more in the third. After Conley rallied for two in the fifth to close within 5-3, the Lady Falcon put the game away with five more runs in the bottom of the fifth.

Conley added its final run in the sixth.

D. Benton led the Aycock hitting with three in four trips, while B. Montague, A. Daw and T. Boyette were all two-for-three.

Waltrip, the season's earnings leader at $229,955 and the Winston Cup GN points champion the past two years, Sunday scored his fifth consecutive triumph at the Bristol, Tenn., International Raceway, winning the Valleydale 500.

He announced Tuesday that he would turn his Late Model Sportsman car over to Bill Elliott for Saturday's $125,375 Mello Yello 300, won last year by Gant. Waltrip said he would serve as Elliott's crew chief.

"I guess really the bottom line to the whole thing is that the magnitude of the World 600 is such that I'd rather concentrate solely on it," Waltrip said. "I like Bill, I like the way he drives and I just thought he'd do a good job in the car."

The one-time heavyweight champion, Tommy Burns, received $1.25 for his first professional bout in Detroit in 1900.

Parsons Gets First Shot At Taking World Pole

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Benny Parsons gets the first crack today at winning the pole for Sunday's $478,010 World 600 NASCAR event.

Parsons is the first of 54 drivers scheduled to qualify today for the pole and its $30,100 prize at the Charlotte Motor Speedway's 1.5-mile tri-oval. However, being first could prove costly.

Weather forecasters were predicting sunny skies with a high temperature near 80. With the track becoming stickier as trials develop, later qualifiers could have greater traction.

Fifteen of the 42 starting spots will be filled Wednesday with 15 more on Thursday and the remainder on Friday.

Speeds are not expected to reach Cale Yarborough's 1980 record of 165.194 mph because Goodyear and NASCAR have mandated the use of a harder-compound tire, such as that used at larger tracks like Daytona or Talladega.

Terry Labonte will qualify second while Geoff Bodine, the fastest in Tuesday's practice session at 160.935 mph, will qualify fourth. Tim Richmond, Morgan Shepherd, Bobby Allison and Harry Gant are among the first 10 with Darrell Waltrip 15th and Richard Petty 18th. Allison is the Winston Cup Grand National points leader.

Others in the qualifying order include: Dale Earnhardt, 21st; Yarborough, 24th; Neil Bonnett, who won last year's race, 36th; Buddy Baker, 45th; David Pearson, 49th; and Bill Elliott, 52nd.

Injuries Keep Philadelphia On Edge In 1983 NBA Title Series

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Although Philadelphia leads the Los Angeles Lakers 1-0 in the National Basketball Association championship series and has won nine of 10 playoff games, health and injury problems are preventing 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham from enjoying himself.

"We have not had a dull moment in the playoffs. If it's not one player, it's another," Cunningham said Tuesday after learning that his No. 1 backup at center and power forward, Clemon Johnson, would miss Thursday's second game because of a urinary tract infection.

Johnson joined Moses Malone, Julius Erving, Andrew Toney, Clint Richardson and Bobby Jones on the list of Philadelphia players who have been hampered by injury or illness since the regular season ended.

"It's something you have to overcome," Cunningham said. "You just have to move on. I have confidence in the other players. We had injuries during the season and you have to have players ready to contribute."

Cunningham said seldom-used Earl Cureton and possibly rookie Mark McNamara would replace Johnson as relief for Malone at center and Marc Iavaroni at power forward.

"Earl has more quickness and has been involved in a few more playoffs than Mark, so he probably will play more than McNamara," Cunningham said.

Cureton has played in only three of Philadelphia's 10 playoff games, for a total of six minutes. McNamara has seen action in one postseason game for one minute.

"I know I've got my hands full," Cureton said.

One of the Lakers that Cureton might guard is Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the second-leading scorer in NBA history. But Cureton said he believes he has an advantage over Abdul-Jabbar in quickness and in getting up and down the floor in a running game.

"But nobody likes playing Kareem," Cureton added. "I'll try to front him, make him work as hard as he can."

Lakers Coach Pat Riley, whose team is trying to become the first team in 14 years to repeat as NBA champions, also has plenty of injury problems to contend with.

Bob McAdoo, the Lakers' top frontcourt reserve, missed the first game with a bruised thigh and is questionable for Thursday's contest. Guard Norm Nixon, who scored 26 points for the Lakers in Game 1, still is bothered by a bruised left shoulder.

Riley said the second game "may be the most important. Philadelphia wants to be in the driver's seat. They don't want to go to Los Angeles 1-1."

Erving said Cunningham told the team "to play like we're behind 0-1. He said to forget last weekend and pretend our back's against the wall and, if we lose, we'll be 0-2."

Cunningham said the 76ers should approach the first two games as a package deal.

"Psychologically, we won't be ahead in the series unless we win the second game," he said. "We can't play like frontrunners yet."

Moose 6
Pepsi-Cola 5

The Moose rallied for three runs in the bottom of the sixth inning and pulled out a 6-5 win over Pepsi-Cola yesterday in the Tar Heel Little League.

Pepsi pushed out into the lead in the first inning of the game, scoring twice. They added a third run in the second before the Moose rallied for a pair in the bottom of the second. Pepsi got a fourth run in the third, but the Moose closed it to 4-3 with a solo homer by Wes Jackson. Pepsi inched out again in the fifth to take a 5-3 lead into the final frame.

But in the bottom of the sixth, the Moose rallied to take the win. Jackson led off with a double and scored on Darrin Bullock's double. Allen Speight singled and John Caravin walked, loading the bases. Charles Rogers also walked, scoring Bullock with the tying run. Stephen Smith reached on a fielder's choice that got Speight at the plate, leaving two out. But a wild pitch then allowed Caravin to score with winning run.

Bullock led the Moose hitting with three, while Jackson had two. Shawn Lyles, Wes Mackenzie and Chris Fuqua each had two hits for Pepsi.

Union Carbide 8
Optimists 6

Union Carbide scored early then held off a rally by the Optimists to take an 8-6 North State Little League victory yesterday.

Union Carbide pushed over one in the first inning, then stormed out to a 6-0 lead with five more in the second. Two of those scored on a homer by Bill Turcotte.

The third, however, saw the winning runs score. Martin Anderson led off the third with a homer, making it 7-0. Then, Jonathan Powers reached on a fielder's choice and advanced on a wild pitch. Mike Fletcher was hit by a pitch and Powers, after advancing on a fly out, scored on a double steal.

The Optimists began their rally in the bottom of the third, scoring once on a Nelson Galloway homer. They added three in the fourth and two more in the sixth, but fell a pair short to catching up.

Paul Powers led the Union Carbide hitting with two, while Galloway and Heath Clark each had three, and Park Williams and Ken Pearson each had two for the Optimists.

Garris-Evans 11
Hendrix & Dail 9

Garris-Evans outlasted Hendrix & Dail, 11-9, in the Prep League last night in a game that went eight innings.

Hendrix & Dail grabbed the lead in the first inning, scoring twice. Garris-Evans came back with one in the second then added three in the third to take a 4-2 lead. H&D, however, rallied for four in the bottom of the inning, moving back ahead, before Garris-Evans got three in the fourth and H&D scored one in the frame to tie it at 7-7.

Hendrix & Dail went back out with one in the fifth and after Garris-Evans scored twice in the sixth, tied it once more at 9-9 with one in the bottom of the sixth.

Then, in the eighth, G-E pushed over two to win it. With one out, Tony Evans walked and stole both second and third. Robbie McDonald walked and also stole up. Charlie Crandell's grounder forced Evans at home, but after Crandell stole up, both runners scored on a single by Bruce Koonce.

Koonce and McDonald each had three hits, while Mike Kelly and Mark Holloman each added two for Garris-Evans. Hendrix & Dail was led by David Tinglestad, Jeff Mahoney, Mitch Mitchum and L.L. Everette, each with two.

Edwards' took the lead with a pair of runs in the first inning, but Thompson retaliated with three in the third.

William Crandell slapped a leadoff triple, and Fred Streeter and Smith drew walks to fill the bases. An error on a grounder by Terry Williams allowed Crandell and Streeter to score before Cox's winning hit.

Mark Smith went the distance on the mound for Thompson.

Ronald Wilder and Kervin Vines had a pair of hits each for Edwards', while no one had more than one for Thompson.

Gripton led 4-1 after three innings, but Chicod rallied for six in the fourth. Shane Adams led off with a double, and Richy Smith reached first on an error. Ken Hadnott singled in Adams, and Brian Evans followed with a base on balls to load the bases.

A walk to Steve Mills pushed across Smith, and Randy Mills walked to score Evans. A single by Mike Elks drove in Steve and Randy Mills.

Williamston Downs N. Edgecombe, 6-5

LEGGETT — Williamston High School pushed out into a 5-0 lead, only to have North Edgecombe rally for as many to tie it up in the seventh and force an extra inning before the Lady Tigers gained a 6-5 softball victory yesterday.

The win, in the first round of the State 3-A,4-A playoffs, sends Williamston against Rose High School of Greenville today at 4:30 p.m. at Greenville.

Williamston scored single runs in the first three innings and added two more frames with one run each in the fifth and sixth. Then, North Edgecombe came up with its

Then, in the top of the eighth, the Lady Tigers got the winning run. Timberly Rodgers singled and after two outs, scored on a hit by Hope Hopkins.

Lynn Mills, Wanda Price, Rodgers, Hopkins and Regina Rodgers each went two-for-four for Williamston, while P. Haskins was 2-4 for North Edgecombe.

Blue Jays Romp To Fifth Straight Win

By The Associated Press
Red-hot is the best way to describe the Toronto Blue Jays and the Chicago White Sox's Greg Luzinski.

Both are on rolls of five — a five-game winning streak that has thrust the once-lowly Blue Jays into first place in the American League East and a five-game home run streak for Luzinski that has him within one game of the AL record for hitting a homer in consecutive games.

Buck Martinez drove in four runs with a pair of doubles and Roy Lee Jackson pitched 3-2-3 innings of one-hit relief to lead the Blue Jays to a 7-6 come-from-behind victory over the Detroit Tigers Tuesday night. Toronto took a one-game lead over the Boston Red Sox, who lost to Chicago 12-4, and the Baltimore Orioles, who dropped their fifth in a row, this one by a 6-1 score to the Minnesota Twins.

"The players aren't making a big deal out of it (first place)," said Jackson. "It's great for the fans, but it's too early in the season to be concerned with it."

Luzinski's home run was one of five hit by the White Sox as they pounded Boston.

"I can remember hitting home runs in two straight games, but nothing like this," said the man known as The Bull. "I've never had a streak like this, especially as bad as I've been going."

Luzinski also had two singles and despite his streak of power is hitting only .213.

In other AL games, California edged New York 7-6 in 10 innings, Oakland nipped Milwaukee 8-7, Cleveland defeated Seattle 6-4 and Texas and Kansas City tied 2-2 in a game halted by rain after five innings.

The Blue Jays, whose pitchers had hurled three consecutive shutouts, pulled out their victory over Detroit after trailing 5-0 after the second inning. They scored four times in the third, capped by Martinez' pinch RBI double, and took a 7-6 lead with three runs in the fifth.

After Toronto loaded the bases, Martinez hit a bouncer down the third-base line. Third baseman Howard Johnson fell down trying to move to his right and the ball rattled around in the left-field corner and got past Larry Herndon as all three runners scored.

"Being in first place means that when you're on top you can create your own destiny," said Martinez. "You don't have to be concerned with what other people are doing. It's awful early, but with our pitching staff we're not going to have any big skids."

White Sox 12, Red Sox 4
Ron Kittle and Jerry Hairston hit three-run homers to key an eight-run first inning. Besides Luzinski, Carlton Fisk and Lorenzo Gray also connected, giving the White Sox 14 home runs in their last five games. Jerry Koosman was the winner in his first start of the season, allowing four runs and eight hits in six innings.

By homering in five successive games, Luzinski set a club record and is one short of the AL mark of six straight. The major league record is eight straight by Dale Long of Pittsburgh in 1956.

Twins 6, Orioles 1
Ron Washington drove in three runs with a single and double and John Castino and Tom Brunansky cracked solo homers as Minnesota handed Baltimore its fifth straight setback. Bobby Castillo allowed six hits while outpitching Scott McGregor and hurling only the second complete game of the season for the Twins and the second in a row. Frank Viola pitched an eight-hitter against Baltimore Monday night.

Angels 7, Yankees 6
Bobby Grich's bloop single with two out in the bottom of the 10th inning capped a two-run California rally. The Yankees appeared to have the game won when Ellis Valentine hit a line drive at right fielder Oscar Gamble with two out and two on. But Gamble dropped the ball for an error after apparently losing it in the lights as the tying run scored. Grich followed with his bloop hit off Gamble's glove.

Graig Nettles, Gamble and Roy Smalley homered for the Yankees, with Smalley's 100th career homer in the top of the 10th giving them a 6-5 lead. Fred Lynn homered in the bottom of the eighth for the Angels to tie the score 5-5 after New York had gone ahead with three runs in the top of the inning.

A's 8, Brewers 7
Bill Almon was credited with a steal of home for the winning run in the eighth inning when Milwaukee catcher Ned Yost failed to hold the pitch on a suicide squeeze that backfired. Almon and Jeff Burroughs opened the inning with singles off Jamie Easterly and advanced on Dwayne Murphy's sacrifice. Mike Davis missed the ball attempting to bunt on a suicide squeeze, but so did Yost. Almon, breaking from third, crossed the plate as Yost fumbled for the loose ball.

Ruthven Holds Astros In 5-4 Chicago Victory

By The Associated Press
Chicago Manager Lee Elia wasn't too excited about the location of Dick Ruthven's pitches. But he was pleased about the location of Dick Ruthven — on the Cubs' roster.

Ruthven, in his first start for the Cubs since being acquired from the Philadelphia Phillies for reliever Willie Hernandez last Sunday, pitched 6 1-3 innings in Houston Tuesday night — matching his longest stint of the season.

inning run on Ron Cey's fifth homer and scored twice in the seventh, shortstop Dickie Thon's third throwing error gave the Cubs the decisive run in the top of the ninth and Campbell came on to slam the door on the Astros in the bottom of the ninth after Lee Smith gave up a two-run double by Kevin Bass.

The Astros got two runs in the seventh, shortstop Dickie Thon's third throwing error gave the Cubs the decisive run in the top of the ninth and Campbell came on to slam the door on the Astros in the bottom of the ninth after Lee Smith gave up a two-run double by Kevin Bass.

Dodgers 3, Phillies 0
The Phillies' scoreless streak reached 35 innings as Alejandro Pena of the Dodgers tossed a four-hitter at them for his first complete game in the majors.

"I've never seen anything like this since I've been in baseball," said befuddled Pat Corrales, the Philadelphia manager. "All we're doing is lowering our averages and the other teams' earned-run averages. It's a shame, because we're getting some very good pitching."

Loser Larry Christenson allowed only three hits in seven innings and struck out eight batters. Two of the hits were doubles by Dusty Baker, who scored a run in the fourth inning and drove in one in the sixth.

Pirates 6, Braves 5
Pittsburgh's Larry McWilliams was cruising along with a four-hit shutout when the Braves jumped on him and reliever Kent Tekulve for five runs. McWilliams wasn't surprised. "After all," he said, "I used to be one of them and I know what they can do. When they get the momentum going, it's hard to stop them."

Jason Thompson's two-run double in the sixth inning and Lee Mazzilli's two-run homer in the seventh, both off Rick Camp, helped the Pirates build a 6-0 lead.

Glants 6, Mets 2
San Francisco's Mike Krukow allowed seven hits — two of them home runs by Dave Kingman — to beat the Mets for the seventh consecutive time and build his career record against them to 12-3.

"Dave Kingman hit three homers off me in my rookie year," said Krukow, a five-year veteran. "Today was four and five." Jack Clark and Chili Davis homered for the Giants.

Cardinals 7, Reds 1
Dave LaPoint pitched an eight-hitter for his first complete game in the majors and George Hendrick drove in two runs as St. Louis halted its four-game tailspin.

Expos 5, Padres 4
Bryan Little singled, took second on a grounder and scored on Warren Cromartie's single in the 13th inning to give the Expos their victory over San Diego. It was Cromartie's third time up with a runner in scoring position, and the first time he brought one home.

"Not too many people get three or four chances, so happily I was able to come through one of those times," Cromartie said. "It was a couple minutes before midnight and I know we all wanted to go home."

When John L. Sullivan lost his heavyweight championship to James J. Corbett in 1892, he received no purse. It was a winner-take-all bout.

Cards, 'Cats Set Meetings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Louisville and Kentucky, two elite college basketball teams which have not played each other in a regular-season game since 1922, will meet Nov. 26 in the season-opener for both teams, it was reported Wednesday.

The first game of the four-year series will be played in Lexington, according to The Washington Post. The game will be televised in prime time by Turner Broadcasting System in a joint venture with Sports Productions Inc. of Dallas over a syndicated home commercial network.

Turner, according to Post sources, is paying about $600,000 for the television rights for the 1983 game only.

It will be the largest single-game fee paid for a regular-season basketball game, surpassing the $575,000 Turner paid for in last year's Georgetown-Virginia contest, which matched up centers Patrick Ewing and Ralph Sampson.

Games 2 and 4 of the Louisville-Kentucky series will be played in Louisville, while Game 3 will be in Lexington, the newspaper said.

Kentucky for years resisted efforts for a regular season game between the two, but last spring at the urging of the university's Board of Trustees, the school's Athletic Board endorsed the idea and urged Athletic Director Cliff Hagan to attempt to arrange a series of games.

Louisville, ranked second in the final Associated Press college poll after last season, beat 12th ranked Kentucky 80-68 in overtime in the Mid East Regional final of this year's National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament.

Morton Named Gold's Coach

DENVER (AP) — New Denver Gold Coach Craig Morton, an 18-year veteran of play in the National Football League, said an upbeat, "wide-open" approach would be needed to turn around the slumping United States Football League team.

"There have been too many negative things going on," said Morton after his appointment was announced Tuesday at a news conference called by Gold owner Ron Blanding. "One thing we've got to do is get this thing back on a positive note."

The fledgling team's first head coach, former Denver Broncos coach Red Miller, was fired by Blanding last week after the Gold lost its fourth straight game. On

Safety Footwear Increasing

NEW YORK (AP) — Every morning, nearly 6 million Americans go off to work with secret defensive weapons hidden in their shoes — in men's shoes, women's shoes, black wing-tips, cowboy boots, laced high-tops, loafers, oxfords and sneakers.

"Concealed daggers? No. James Bond devices? Wrong again.

"They're steel safety toes. "Better than anything "007" could invent, these invisible steel shields built into dressy, casual and rugged footwear are "weapons" to defend people against on-the-job foot injuries.

Since 1970, the use of safety shoes in the United States has increased over 250 percent, according to The Footwear Council. The rise is partly due to requirements of the U.S. Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), founded in 1970. OSHA has mandated safety shoes in more industries than before.

As an example of safety gains, the New York State Workmen's Compensation Board reports that in 1979 (the latest available data year) leg-injury cases involving feet were 8 percent lower than in 1970.

Foot injuries actually have declined far more, believes Dr. Samuel Heller, the Board's Chairman of Podiatry Practices, because "With safety shoes, accidents that might have seriously injured feet now result only in minor bruises, which may not even be reported."

Besides OSHA rules, another major factor in increased safety shoe usage is the great progress in styling. The Footwear Council points out.

At one time, all safety shoes were clunky high-tops with rigid soles, weighing a ton and looking it. Now manufacturing innovations have made possible more flexible soles, and uppers in current fashions. Workers prefer safety shoes that are styled like footwear they wear off the job.

This is confirmed by Republic Steel Safety Director Patrick J. O'Neal. "Our steel operations still require the heaviest-duty models," he notes, "but in the fabrication divisions and for guards and health workers, we approve safety shoes in many modern styles, and they're very popular, particularly with the fashion-conscious young people."

It's not only men who've begun protecting their feet in style. Women moving into OSHA-regulated jobs are spurring demand for oxford, moccasin, and sneaker-style safety shoes, the Council notes.

People also are increasingly wearing safety shoes while doing home chores such as mowing lawns, chopping wood, or do-it-yourself construction projects.

"We encourage our employees to wear safety shoes for such jobs," says O'Neal, "because we believe safety is a 24-hour concern. I always wear safety shoes myself when cutting grass."

The extra protection can keep a tool malfunction or a toppling pile of bricks from causing injury, and the price and styling of the footwear are comparable to other casual shoes. The usual price range is from $25 to $60, and has remained stable in the past several years, the Council reports.

During manufacture, the protection is built not only into the toe-box, but the sole and other areas. Specialized safeguards are provided in shoes tailored for every industry from lumbering to oil.

Parker Pleads Innocent

Dwight Parker of Newark, N.J., charged with two counts of murder in connection with the deaths of the Rev. Leslie L. Thorbs of Grafton and Anthony Ray Herring of Goldsboro, entered pleas of innocent at his arraignment in Pitt County Superior Court this week.

Parker is also charged with two counts of robbery with a dangerous weapon in connection with the case.

The bodies of Thorbs and Herring were pulled from the Tar River near the bridge on SR 1400 several days after they disappeared in February. Both men died of gunshot wounds and their bodies had been weighted with cement blocks before being placed in the river.

A tentative trial date of July 25 was set for Parker.

The arraignment of a second defendant in the case, Carolyn Denise Pippins of Route 4, Greenville, was continued. She is charged with two counts of murder and one count of robbery with a dangerous weapon.

'40-Plus' Workshop Planned

George Hood of Raleigh, founder of "40-Plus," an organization for unemployed persons 40 and older, will conduct a job-finding skills workshop Thursday at noon at the Jaycee Park Recreation Building, 2000 Cedar Lane, for anyone of any age interested in the subject.

The workshop is the final segment of the Mental Health Association in Pitt's County noon "Spotlight" lecture series, which this year has focused on unemployment. Hood, who has been a personnel manager and also an unemployed over-age-50 person himself, says unemployment is one of the most stressful events anyone ever experiences. His workshop is designed, he says, to show participants how to present themselves and also how to systematically search for a job.

The workshop is free, with participants encouraged to bring a sandwich. Drinks will be provided.

Drink Bottlers Open Advertising War

NEW YORK (AP) — Seven-Up Co. today launched a nationwide advertising campaign declaring that unlike most soft drinks, 7-Up has no artificial color or flavor and "never will."

In the broadcast and print ads, competitors are named and products displayed as containing either, or some combination of, caffeine, artificial color and artificial flavoring.

Coca-Cola Co. said it would fight Seven-Up's campaign. PepsiCo Inc. had no comment.

The reaction was similar a year ago when Seven-Up set the intensely competitive $16 billion soft drink industry in tumult with the debut of its campaign that 7-Up contains no caffeine. "Never did. Never will."

The makers of Coke, Pepsi and most other soft-drink producers accused Seven-Up of trading on the controversy over health aspects of caffeine but within months every industry producer had come up with a caffeine-free cola.

Tuesday, in what Seven Up called "Soft Drink Wars, Part II," it boiled over again.

Coke informed its bottlers and field personnel nationwide that it was developing a marketing strategy to confront Seven-Up's "insidious" campaign to raise dark questions about the quality and pureness of its competitors' products.

PepsiCo's response was "no comment," from spokeswoman Rebecca Madeira. "We're going to concentrate on selling our products," she said.

Seven-Up Chairman Edward W. Frantel said Tuesday that the company was launching its latest sally because of a "growing body of concern among consumers about artificial flavors and artificial colors and possible negative health implications of the stimulant caffeine — especially with regard to children, the major users of soft drinks."

Caffeine has been linked to nervousness in some people and the federal Food and Drug Administration has warned pregnant women to avoid caffeine because heavy doses caused birth defects in laboratory rats. Other studies, however, have disputed those findings.

Artificial colors and flavors must undergo safety tests before winning FDA approval. Some health researchers suspect artificial colors and flavors can cause health problems, but that has never been demonstrated.

The new 7-Up commercials stress that the lemon-lime drink, concocted by a Missouri general-store proprietor in 1929, has a "clean, refreshing, unspoiled taste." Other makers' drinks are pictured, and sometimes named, in the ads.

Asked if the implication is that other soft drinks do not meet the "unspoiled" measure, Frantel would say only: "I think we are just talking about ourselves. We're talking about our product."

Dolores Sanchez, a spokeswoman for Coca-Cola in Atlanta, said the new 7-Up campaign prompted a strongly worded letter last Friday saying the ads seek to create negative consumer attitudes about soft-drink coloring and flavoring.

The letter from executive vice president Thomas D. Dannemiller constituted Coke's reaction to the 7-Up campaign, Ms. Sanchez said.

It said, in part, "We believe this campaign is false, misleading and detrimental to the soft drink industry because:

"—By implication, the commercials say that such soft drinks have an unclean, spoiled taste.

"—Further, it is a disservice to the American public which may become confused by the suggested messages of this insidious campaign."

7-Up's label includes as ingredients citric acid and sodium citrate, but Frantel said they occur naturally in citrus fruit and are not classified by the FDA as artificial.

Frantel said the ads that show artificially colored or flavored products include the company's Like caffeine-free cola, which is colored with caramel. Caramel, which is burned sugar, is considered artificial by the FDA.

And he did not deny that Diet 7-Up's ingredients include saccharin and benzoate, the latter a preservative.

Drug Comforts Cancer Patients

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — A drug already used for some surgery patients helps control nausea in patients undergoing chemotherapy for cancer, according to preliminary results of a study at Duke University Medical Center.

Dr. John Laszlo, director of clinical research in the Duke Comprehensive Cancer Center, said more than half the 15 patients who received the drug lorazepam before chemotherapy treatments showed reduced nausea attacks after treatment.

Lorazepam, already on the market for use in surgery as a pre-anesthetic agent, causes short-term memory loss, Laszlo said. Twelve of the 15 patients in the study did not recall receiving the chemotherapy treatment after their doses of the drug, he said.

Lorazepam has not been studied systematically as an anti-nausea drug before.

"We didn't really expect to find that," Laszlo said. "It was a surprise."

"We have various anti-emetics, some which work in certain patients and some which work in others," he said. "When we don't know what anti-emetic will work in a given patient and the patient vomits after each course of chemotherapy, he may develop a pattern of vomiting before having chemotherapy — called anticipatory vomiting."

For those patients, simply thinking about coming to the hospital for treatment or seeing the nurse may be enough to set them off, he said. About 25 percent of cancer patients undergoing therapy develop this problem.

Because lorazepam shows promise in preventing anticipatory vomiting, Laszlo and his colleagues are conducting additional studies on patients with the problem.

"This is a conditioned response," he said. "Since the condition is learned behavior, does that learned behavior depend on memory? Then the idea is to prevent it from forming. If we block memory, can we block the learning of anticipatory nausea and vomiting?"

Duke will begin a cooperative study with East Carolina University School of Medicine to combine lorazepam with other anti-emetics and look at memory loss and anticipatory vomiting over a period of several treatments, he said.

Smoke Detectors Recalled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Honeywell Inc. is voluntarily recalling more than 770,000 battery-operated smoke detectors that may not sound an alarm when smoke is present, the Consumer Product Safety Commission said today.

The Minnesota-based company said the alarms may not work correctly because of problems in the circuit board mounting, although they may sound when the test button is pushed.

The company is asking consumers to return detectors with model numbers TC89B and TC89C that have this defect. Because Honeywell no longer makes residential smoke detectors, the company will replace returned units with a comparable model produced by another manufacturer.

Honeywell produced the affected smoke detectors in 1977 and 1978. Sold nationally and in Canada, the detectors carry the model numbers TC89B and TC89C and have a date code between 7601 and 7820. The model numbers and date codes are found under the smoke detector cover on a piece of gray cardboard.

Honeywell recommended that consumers check the battery and then determine whether the smoke detector is working properly by using an extinguished candle to create smoke. If the detector does not sound in the presence of smoke, consumers should contact Honeywell at its toll-free number, 800-328-8194, or write to Honeywell Consumer Affairs, 8941 10th Avenue North, Golden Valley, Minn., 55427.

Clarification

There is a difference, local Juvenile Courts counselor Brenda Teel says, between juvenile detention centers and state-supported training schools.

The cost quoted in Tuesday's article on the organizational meeting of the Pitt County Action Coalition for Teens of supporting a child in a juvenile detention center was actually that of supporting him or her in a training school. Mrs. Teel said she feels that the cost of juveniles corrections programs is in no way a waste, as was alluded to in the article.

Chancellor Plans Take Year's Leave

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Dr. Robert C. Suderburg will step down, at least temporarily, as the chancellor of the North Carolina School of the Arts this fall.

Officially, Suderburg is taking a year's leave of absence, but he said Tuesday that he may not return to the arts school.

William C. Friday, the president of the University of North Carolina system, said he will recommend at a meeting of the university's Board of Governors on June 10 that the leave be granted.

Friday said that an acting chancellor, chosen from within the university system, will be named before Sept. 1 to run the arts school while Suderburg is away.

Suderburg is leaving at a time when the school is coming under increasing financial pressures. The school has been burdened by a $2 million debt on its new theater, the Roger L. Stevens Center for the Performing Arts. The school has virtually exhausted local sources of funds for the center, which opened a month ago.

Suderburg, who is a composer, said yesterday that he wants the time off to work on his music and to reassess his career.

READY — Astronaut Sally Ride, who will be the first U.S. woman in space, said Tuesday she is ready for the trip aboard the space shuttle Challenger on June 18. Ms. Ride chided reporters about making the special emphasis because of her sex. (AP Laserphoto)

A Review

Python Film Is Satire Out Of Control

For 20 years the mad members of the Monty Python troupe have outraged and entertained audiences in both Britain and the United States. The talents of Graham Chapman, Terry Gilliam, Eric Idle, John Cleese and Michael Palin often mixed perfectly to spoof all subjects great and small.

In "The Meaning of Life," now playing at the Buccaneer Movies, Monty Python assaults philosophy, religion, education, sex and the insurance industry. Unfortunately the attack is only partly successful.

Monty Python's humor is like Tabasco sauce; you either like it or you don't. I usually do, but it is best appreciated in small doses. The short satirical skit has always been the most successful format for the antics of Monty Python. Viewers could put up with dead moments while anticipating a rapid return to humor. In only two feature-length films has Monty Python's humor been sustained, "Monty Python and the Holy Grail" and "Life of Brian" used short comic episodes but were thematically controlled movies. "The Meaning of Life" is not.

Comedy is often subversive; it forces us to look at our behavior and beliefs and see the absurdities which underlie them. Comedy is often crude and at times obscene, but to be effective it must be controlled. "The Meaning of Life" is a prime example of satire out of control.

The idea behind the film is promising. In attempting to answer the great philosophical question of what life is all about the Monty Python members have resurrected the metaphor of the ages of man and devised short episodes on birth, growth and learning, fighting, middle age, the autumn years, and death. Some of the scenes are genuinely funny, combining wit and comic madness. Most, however, degenerate into crude farce.

The most successful episodes deal with birth and death. In "Birth and the Third World" serious religious and philosophical dialogue is juxtaposed with an outrageous song and dance number reminiscent of "Oliver" to make a point about birth control that is both savage and funny. In "Death" the film parodies both Bergman and Fellini in a fine caricature of modern art films.

The problem is that nothing else works completely. Individual sequences begin well but often become exercises in gratuitous obscurity and nudity. We are even treated to a five minute sketch about vomiting.

I find nothing wrong with a comic's use of obscenity, nudity, or even vomiting for that matter, if the use has a purpose. Too often in "The Meaning of Life" it does not. The movie is like the little girl with a curl in the middle of her forehead, when it is good it is very, very good; when it is bad it is horrid.

'Taxi' Characters Prepare For Show's Farewell

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The Sunshine Cab Co. was an ironic shingle for the misfits in "Taxi." There wasn't a success story in the bunch. In five years, none of the drivers found a road paved with anything more than harsh reality and hard knocks.

"It's a lot like life," says Ed Weinberger, one of the creators of the award-winning comedy, which has its next-to-last original episode on NBC tonight. "Nobody made it out." The last new show is scheduled for June 15.

Yet, together, the characters forged a friendship and camaraderie that hadn't been seen in network comedies since "The Mary Tyler Moore Show." They were the kind of cabbies who would pick you up in a rainstorm.

That warmth was their success, and the program's cancellation by two networks in two seasons can't take it away.

When the meter stops ticking tonight, the program that won the Emmy for best comedy three years in a row will be replaced by "Buffalo Bill," about an egotistical talk-show host on a television station in Buffalo, N.Y.

This time, the closing notice will stick. NBC salvaged "Taxi" from ABC's scrapheap after the 1981-82 season, but the producers now have gone off to different projects. Weinberger and his partner, Stan Daniels, have created a new comedy, "Mr. Smith," about a talking orangutan. It will be on NBC's fall schedule on Friday night.

There was quite a furor when ABC canceled "Taxi" last season, thus losing its one comedy with grit and grown-up wit. The fact that it failed on NBC in three timeslots will substantiate, for some, ABC's decision. But ABC never came up with anything better in ratings, and certainly not in quality.

"NBC did what it had to do," says Weinberger. "I regret it, but I respect it. It was a business decision. They treated us fairly and gave us a shot. There's no kicking or screaming this time. We felt at least NBC respected us. At ABC, I didn't think it mattered to them that they were canceling a quality show."

Because of the fifth year on NBC, "Taxi" did 22 more shows and went over the magic 100-episode mark. "You want over 100 episodes when you make your syndication deal," says Weinberger.

Even if "Taxi" lost some fares the past few seasons, it still produced programs that were funny and touching. Precisely because life was a series of fender-benders for the oddballs in "Taxi," our lives became, by comparison, a bit brighter.

This is not to say that "Taxi" was consistently brilliant. In the past two seasons, the show took a wrong turn whenever it showcased Latka (Andy Kaufman), the foreign grease monkey, and his alien rituals. This violated the show's spirit of producing identifiable and realistic human comedy.

But, generally, "Taxi" described the human condition poignantly, better, in fact, than it depicted genuine New York cabbies. Without a black or Hispanic in the front-line cast, "Taxi" was more Hollywood's version of a New York cab company.

The only character who really resembled a hack was Alex Reiger (Judd Hirsch), a seen-it-all type with a laissez-faire attitude. He also was most content to being a cabbie forever. Tony (Tony Danza) wanted to be a boxer.

Elaine (Marilu Henner) saw herself as a fashionable art dealer and Bobby (Jeff Conaway) was a New York actor.

Conaway left the series midway but made a return visit to the garage — this time Bobby was a struggling Hollywood actor. "Anything else would have seemed phony," says Weinberger. After all, this was a show about potholes, not paved superhighways.

Which brings us to the delightfully des. Diminutive Danny De Vito made this cynical, hateful taxi dispatcher as unredeeming as they come. He took perverse pleasure in belittling his fellow losers, hiding his insecurities and personality flaws in an acidic tongue.

The character who managed to grow the most was Jim Ignatowski (Christopher Lloyd). Once a spaced-out relic from the psychedelic '60s, he had improved himself by series end.

NBC Will Send 'Monitor' Against '60 Minutes'

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC has failed against "60 Minutes" with Boomer, Walt Disney and the time-warper from "The Voyagers!" Since counterprogramming on Sunday evening hasn't worked, what's to lose in carbon-programming?

That's the logic behind NBC's decision to challenge CBS' "60 Minutes," television's top-rated show, with its own newsmagazine, "Monitor," the lowest-rated series in the 1982-83 season.

"Monitor" earned that dubious distinction while filling the 10 o'clock slot on Saturdays, when the audience includes too many baby sitters and lonelyhearts — certainly not the best crowd for a serious magazine show.

But it won't be a case of viewers doubling their pleasure Sundays at 7. They'll have to choose "60 Minutes" or "Monitor," and that's a kamikaze mission for the NBC show.

"It's like batting against (Yankee relief ace) Goose Gossage on his best day," says Sy Pearlman, executive producer of "Monitor."

Making inroads into the weekly 40-percent audience-share for "60 Minutes" won't be easy. If it happens, it will take time. "You're asking a generation of viewers to sample another offering," Pearlman says.

Harvey Shephard, CBS vice president for programming, pooh-poohs the move.

Turkey Remembers Native Son

By JERRY RAYNOR, Reflector Staff Writer

TURKEY — The historic marker in the center of Turkey is a visible reminder that one of Sampson County's young men journeyed south more than 150 years ago to find fortune and defeat in what was then the rich sugar country of Louisiana.

Thomas Overton Moore's story is that of a Tar Heel who made good after going far South — to Louisiana. Born in April 1804, near the village of Turkey in Sampson County, Moore was educated in his home county a few miles south of Goldsboro before leaving at the age of 25 to live with his uncle, Walter H. Overton in Rapides Parish, La.

One of young Moore's paternal ancestors had been politically prominent. James Moore, who had emigrated from Ireland in the 1600s, had become governor of the Carolinas in 1700. On his mother's side, he was a descendant of William Overton who came to Virginia from England about 1670.

On arrival in Louisiana, Thomas Moore took over the management of his uncle's sugar plantations, and at a later date bought his own plantation which became a successful business venture.

Moore was as active as a family man as he was in business and politics. In 1830 he married Bethiah Jane Leonard and fathered five children.

After serving in the political arena in Rapides Parish for a number of years, Moore was elected to the Louisiana State House of Representatives in 1848. His political rise thereafter was fairly rapid — he was elected to the Louisiana Senate in 1856 and in 1859 won his Democratic ticket race for the state's governor despite being opposed by another popular Democrat, Thomas J. Wells.

According to the Dictionary of American Biography, Moore was "in disposition fiery and inclined to be exacting and uncompromising, (but) nevertheless a thorough politician who played the political game with great zest and effectiveness."

Typical of his zest for taking action was his decision early in 1861 to order state troops to take Forts Jackson and St. Philip on the Mississippi River below New Orleans, as well as Fort Pike on the Rigolets and the barracks and arsenal at Baton Rouge. This he did, rightly surmising that the Louisiana legislature would soon adopt a secession ordinance.

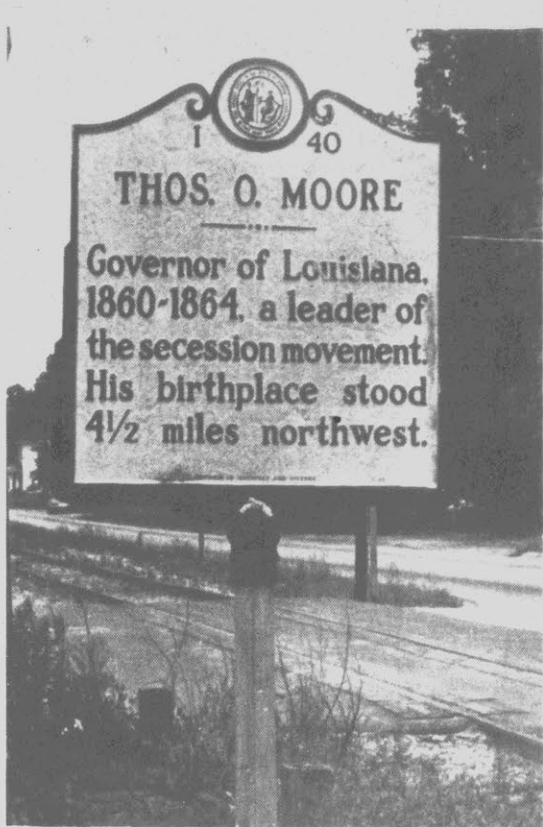

After the secession ordinance was adopted, Moore promptly took further measures to make Louisiana an active member of the Confederacy. He directed the organization of local defense companies, established supply depots, and had packing plants built in order to provide provisions for Confederate soldiers.

Confederate President Jefferson Davis asked for 3,000 troops from Louisiana — Moore in April 1861 issued a call for 5,000 troops in addition to those requested by Davis.

Following the capture of New Orleans by Federal troops in June, 1862, Moore's administration was disrupted, but Moore continued to govern central and northern Louisiana. He moved his capital from Baton Rouge to Opelousas and later to Shreveport and functioned as governor of unoccupied areas until the end of his appointed term in early 1864.

In his final days as governor, he issued strict guidelines laying down non-fraternization measures to be followed by Louisiana residents — they were forbidden to trade with the enemy, to enter Federal lines, to bear Federal passports, or to accept or use Federal money.

It was at this time too, in the spring of 1864, that Moore suffered heavy personal losses. His plantation in Rapides Parish was confiscated by Federal authorities, and his home and sugar mill destroyed. In the summer of 1865, following the issuance of an arrest order, Moore fled to Havana, Cuba, the refuge point for many Confederate leaders seeking to avoid capture and trial.

STATE HISTORIC MARKER ... in the Sampson County village of Turkey is today a visible reminder that a native son, Thomas Overton Moore, found fame in Louisiana as the Civil War governor of that state from 1860-1864. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Eventually, through the intercession of friends, Moore, then in his early 60s, was allowed to return to Louisiana with a full pardon. Until his death in 1876, Moore spent the last decade of his life attempting to restore his plantation and to recoup his lost fortune. He never entered the political arena again, and died at age 72 on his plantation near Alexandria.

More Oil Drilling Done In Gulf

More drilling is going on in the Gulf of Mexico than in any other offshore area of the world. More than 5 billion barrels of oil have been taken from the underwater resource area under a federal leasing program. Remaining proved reserves total 2.7 billion barrels of oil and 73.8 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, according to National Geographic.

Supervisor Buys His Own Railroad

NORTH TONAWANDA, N.Y. (AP) — To visit Andrew Conklin you drive over a set of railroad tracks, swing left and go to the foot of Somer Street to a small wooden building that used to serve as a Conrail freight yard office.

At a desk by the front door is Devan Lawton, who is Conklin's superintendent of operations and only full-time employee.

Conklin is the president and sole owner of Tonawanda Island Railroad Inc., a short line that moves freight cars onto sidings at two lumber yards and an industrial firm.

Until he retired in November 1981 after 40 years of railroading, Conklin was superintendent of Conrail's bustling Buffalo Division and responsible for the movement of trains over 1,100 miles of track.

His Tonawanda Island Railroad began operations on Valentine's Day.

Conklin sits at a desk toward the rear. "Welcome to our world headquarters," he says with a grin.

Engineers Join In Opposition To Defense Work

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — At an age when his friends were taking their driver's tests, Warren Davis got a top security clearance to help develop the nation's first missile warning system.

Now, after more than two decades of defense work, Davis has begun a new project, working with other engineers and scientists who don't want their skills used to create the nation's military hardware.

Davis, 41, is a founder of High Technology Professionals For Peace, a group of 300 self-described "technologists" opposed to the continuing arms race and its impact on the scientific community.

The group holds regular meetings, and spreads its word to college campuses through lectures and pamphlets. It has even started its own employment agency to find non-military jobs. Two-thirds of its members live in Massachusetts, but it has members worldwide.

"You have a responsibility, like a parent giving a gun to a child," says Davis. "Technologists have been giving guns to politicians who have not used them wisely."

Another member, MIT physicist Barton Lane, says the group also is concerned with the practical problems involved with defense work.

Young engineers, working within the cloister of security clearance, can find themselves out of touch and unemployable when the bubble bursts on defense spending, as it did in the early 1970s, he says.

"Graduating seniors aren't aware of the boom-and-bust nature of defense work," says Barton. "They don't realize the implications of getting a security clearance."

The group has written a brochure called "The Campus Defense Information Package" about the pitfalls of defense work. It is being distributed on 500 college campuses.

Davis, who now works as a consultant in medical research, also gets the message across by speaking at college campuses. He draws from his own experience.

A high school junior when the Soviet Union launched its first Sputnik, Davis was enrolled in a special Ford Foundation program for bright, young science students.

After a summer of intensive classroom training, Davis was given a part-time job with a defense contractor working on a missile early warning system.

"It was heady stuff," he recalls. "We got the feeling the Soviets were way ahead of us and we were the vanguard that was meant to catch up with them."

Davis earned a doctorate in physics and worked on the Polaris, Poseidon and Minuteman II missiles, but became disillusioned about the research, which he says is creating more sophisticated weapons to do battle with other advanced machines.

"If war breaks out, it may be well that most of the population in this country will be dead by the time the computers carry out the war," he says.

Davis said he got the idea to form the group when he was looking for a job.

"A friend who was working for GTE told me he would get $1,000 in his pocket for bringing me in," he said. "It was for the MX missile and I became very upset about it. I decided I would like to go to GTE and wave a $1,000 bill in front of some engineers and get them to leave."

Instead, Davis and a dozen colleagues formed High Technology Professionals in 1981, holding meetings every other week that a member describes as "group therapy sessions."

"If you're working on the MX missile at AVCO (a Wilmington, Mass., firm) you certainly aren't going to be talking to people there about your doubts," said one member who asked not to be identified. "It helps to talk about this with other people who have changed their careers."

The organization also set up an employment agency to find members jobs outside the defense industry, but it has had little success, placing only one job.

Davis blames the lack of success on the current economy and the competition from defense contractors who recruit more aggressively. He worries that the defense-oriented companies may drain manpower from other firms.

He is not alone in his fears.

"There is a concern that when the defense contracts really hit, they could have a major impact on the labor market," says B.J. Rudman, a personnel expert who has done consultant work for the Massachusetts High Technology Council, an industry organization representing high tech firms.

Rudman says defense contractors pay more across a spectrum of jobs. "They clearly are more competitive in the short term," he says.

Lane says the public is not aware of the pressure faced by researchers to do defense work.

"People have this view of scientists working in labs helping humanity," he says. "They don't realize a large fraction of the best technical minds are working on weapons of incredible power. This is why we are raising this dialogue."

Modern Society Changes Again

NEW YORK (AP) — Back in 1949, America's highbrows wore fuzzy tweed suits. Now they wear turtlenecks and jeans. Watching the ballet was fine then, but films from India and Japan are preferred now.

Of course, the lowbrows wore old Army clothes and watched Westerns. Now they favor T-shirts and TV game shows.

Russell Lynes is at it again.

The societal explorer who invented those classifications re-examines America's taste buds in the June issue of American Heritage magazine. And he offers a modern version of the chart he concocted 34 years ago for Life magazine.

In that chart, and in an essay for Harper's magazine, Lynes categorized Americans as Highbrow, Upper-Middlebrow, Lower-Middlebrow and Lowbrow — all according to taste.

The upper-middlebrow, for example, wore a Brooks Brothers suit and regimental tie while the lower-middlebrow preferred a splashy tie with a double-breasted suit.

Tijuana Has One Of Border's Notorious Lockups

By NORM CLARKE
Associated Press Writer
TIJUANA, Mexico (AP) — The cellblock is still wet from a hosing down, but water can't cleanse the foul air — your lungs rebel at the stench of raw sewage.

Several floors above, from behind a row of bars, come anguished wails from a mentally disturbed woman.

From cell A-8, a 6-foot-wide cage stuffed with more than a dozen inmates, a rumpled prisoner slouched on the concrete floor calls out a welcome.

"Hey, mister, how do you like our hotel?"

Moments later, a shoe flung from an upper cell hits the floor with a whack.

The Kingston Trio sang about it in the 1950s. Others have scorned its squalid conditions, less lyrically. The Tijuana jail of the 1980s has not lost its place among the most notorious lockups in North America.

Even those hardened by frequent visits to the jail, a three-tiered brick compound a block off the city's busy main street, find the conditions wrenching.

"Some days you want to close your eyes to what you see, your ears to what you hear and your nose to the smell," said one of several people who regularly visit the jail but asked not to be identified for fear they would be barred from the facility.

"It has the image of being the end of the earth," said Robert Chavez, an official at the U.S. Consulate in Tijuana.

Ernesto Gallardo, a 38-year-old ex-police officer who became the head jailer two years ago, denied through an interpreter that prisoners were mistreated.

But a visitor noted that tiny cells designed for a few were routinely crammed with 15-20 prisoners, their arms and legs spilling through the pale green bars.

The only furnishings are old toilets, often overflowing, and corroded, dilapidated steel bunks without mattresses or springs — just sheets of iron on frames, with khaki blankets.

Only a few of the roughly 150 inmates in the jail each day have cells of their own. Most of those appear to be deranged. Some well-to-do prisoners pay for private cubicles with such amenities as television sets and curtains, according to the visitors.

Tijuana, a city of almost 1 million residents, has no facility other than the jail in which to care for its mentally ill.

Hands clenched on the bars, the screaming woman whimpered as a visitor passed her third-floor cell, its walls smeared with human waste. Across the cellblock from her was a man who stalked back and forth, glowering at anyone who met his menacing stare. An insider said the man was homicidal and warned two visitors to stay at least an arm's length beyond the stalker's cell.

At the east end of the cellblock's second floor, below a large opening lined with bars, foot-long potato sprouts in a crude garden reached for the morning sun. Several shriveled potatoes were left behind in the freshly dug soil.

According to one of the frequent visitors, the potatoes, skins and all, are boiled in a soup served almost every day at the single meal provided by the jailers. Loathed by the prisoners, the potatoes are often slopped on the cell floor.

The prison diet is supplemented by other food brought in by charity groups. The inmates drink water from a plastic jug issued to each cell.

In 1982, a total of 612 Americans were arrested in Baja California. Of that number, about 90 percent of the arrests occurred in Tijuana.

For most Americans, the stay is a short one, usually no more than 48 hours. But that's an eternity for some.

"Americans who end up in there are generally very happy to see us," said Chavez.

Weekends are the busiest. "We bail out 12-15 Americans on a rough Saturday night," the consular official said. Most are jailed for being drunk and disorderly, which carries a $3.50 fine.

Jailed Americans are usually treated "fairly decent," he said.

"I'm sure there are a lot of incidents we don't hear about for many reasons — fear among them," he added.

Gallardo complained that the jail received undeserved bad publicity because of the nearby state prison, where prisoners have accused guards of torture methods that include spraying pressurized water up their noses.

Gallardo acknowledged a need for more space and improvements. "We would like to clean up the place. We would like more food, better food, but we don't have the funds," he said.

Perhaps, he said, when the new state prison is completed near Tecate, the jail might gain additional quarters. But, because of Mexico's failing economy, the jail — like the inmates in the Kingston Trio song — we can't pay. must wait. "Just send our mail to the Tijuana jail."

"So here we'll stay, cause

Corporate Sex Barriers Dropping

STANFORD, Conn. (AP) — Women already have a firm foothold in corporate and institutional management and may eventually dominate in such posts, believes an expert in the field of issues and policy management.

"Women who are skilled in public policy, strategic planning, risk assessment and the communications arts are well placed to outflank their more traditional male counterparts," says W. Howard Chase, editor of Corporate Public Issues and Their Management.

"The evidence is all around us," adds Chase, who is also co-founder and chairman of the Issues Management Association, whose president is a woman, Dr. Madeleine Hochstein.

Salaries for talented issue-policy managers range from $35,000 at entry level to as high as $200,000, according to Chase. And there is no salary discrimination against women in the field, he says, citing several reasons:

"There are almost as many women as men in the Public Policy graduate schools, and their proportion is growing," he points out. "Ten years ago there were three men for every woman in graduate schools of business administration. Today almost 50 percent of the MBA candidates are women."

"But probably the most important reason for potential female dominance of the issues management field is that they are less troubled by shibboleths of past traditional practices than men," Chase says. "Since men have held most of the executive posts in public affairs, public relations and communications, they frequently take dominance for granted and tend to be intolerant of innovative practices such as issue management disciplines."

"As major companies move toward the concept that there are only two major functions — the management of profit and the management of public policy, integrated by strategic planning — there will be great opportunity for women to move into the vacuum of leadership created by male traditionalists," Chase predicts.

Brother Refuses To Give Up On Missing Soldier

By PETER MATTIACE
Associated Press Writer

NEW FLORENCE, Pa. (AP) — When 1st Lt. Paul Byron Whipkey, a 26-year-old pilot and company commander, disappeared from Fort Ord, Calif., on July 10, 1958, the Army listed him as absent without leave.

In time, the Army charged him with desertion. Twenty-four years passed.

But his family refused to believe the Army. For all those years, they demanded an explanation for why the young officer had vanished so mysteriously.

Then, in April 1982, the Army Board for Correction of Military Records held a three-day hearing and concluded Whipkey died the day after he disappeared.

The board's report, issued July 1, said, "His unauthorized absence ... (is) excused as unavoidable ... (and) his death was incurred in the line of duty, not due to his own misconduct."

On Aug. 26, the Army Adjutant General's office issued a certificate of honorable service and acknowledged Lt. Whipkey's death, without explanation.

But Carl Whipkey will not give up. "The government knows what happened to my brother. They can't shake me of that," he says. "There are so many questions still unanswered."

Whipkey, 55, a thoughtful, soft-spoken communications technician living about 65 miles east of Pittsburgh, has accumulated thousands of government documents in his 25-year "life's work" for his brother's fate.

The continuing unknown, and his failure to pierce the Army bureaucracy, has led Whipkey to suspect the sinister, the seemingly outlandish: that his brother was a secret agent killed by fellow agents, that his aircraft was shot down over the Soviet Union, that he is suffering or has succumbed to illness from secret Army nerve gas or atomic tests of the 1950s.

"I would be satisfied even if the Army would say they can't tell us for security reasons," Whipkey says. "But until then, we can't rule anything out."

By all accounts, the blond, 5-foot-8-inch Lt. Whipkey was an all-American young man and a superior officer.

He grew up in Pittsburgh's suburbs, earned a civil engineering degree and his Army commission with honors at The Pennsylvania State University in 1954 and won his Army pilot's wings and was assigned to Fort Ord in 1956.

On July 10, 1958, Lt. Whipkey told fellow officers at Fort Ord that he was "going to get a drink" in town.

A few hours later, hundreds of miles away in Mojave, Calif., Lt. Whipkey checked into a motel, said the FBI, which investigated the officer's suspected desertion after the routine 60 days had passed. The next day, July 11, Lt. Whipkey bought 14 gallons of gas in Mojave, according to the FBI findings included in the Army's 1982 report. It appears he was never heard from again.

Carl Whipkey, informed his brother was missing, said he became suspicious July 12 when he telephoned Fort Ord and was told officers were finishing a job begun July 11 — packing his brother's belongings into 11 wooden crates for shipment home.

"When you catch them packing up your brother's clothes one day after he disappeared, you get superhyper super-quick," Whipkey says.

Five weeks later, California fish and game officers found his red and white 1956 Chevrolet in "a desolate and forbidding region" of Death Valley, according to the Army.

The car — 15 miles from the main road, 150 miles from Mojave, 400 miles from Fort Ord — was "found to be in very neat order," the Army report says, and contained Lt. Whipkey's suitcase, personal belongings and dog tags. There was no sign of the officer.

"It appears that (Lt. Whipkey) may have wandered out into the desert ... and succumbed in the extreme heat," the Army board report says, "and that the shifting sands have made it a near impossibility to find, or recover, his remains."

It is here the Army closes its public files on Lt. Whipkey. Army spokeswoman Margaret Tackley recently referred an Associated Press inquiry about Lt. Whipkey to the board's eight-page report, which says that the passage of time has made it "remote, if not impossible," to "end all questions concerning (Lt. Whipkey's) disappearance."

Last week, after another AP attempt to get an official statement about the disappearance, the Army said it would have no further comment.

In June 1977, Whipkey sought information from the FBI under a Freedom of Information Act petition. In 1978, he says, the FBI told him it had destroyed field files on the case in December 1977.

But Whipkey claims he has discovered an unknown, dark side to his brother's Army career.

According to Whipkey, his brother flew in five atomic test explosions in Nevada. He says he suspects his brother was exposed to radiation and, in his duties in the testing area, may have seen evidence of classified experiments involving humans.

The Army report acknowledges that Lt. Whipkey was assigned to temporary duty as a pilot at Camp Desert Rock, Nev., from July to October 1957. But it makes no mention of atomic tests and contends that "extensive investigations" failed to support Whipkey's other assertions.

The Army report does, however, confirm that soon after Lt. Whipkey's Nevada duty, he developed black moles on his body and plantar warts on his hands. His brother and the Army agree that the lieutenant complained of not feeling well, constant colds and weight loss, and that his personality changed, becoming more nervous.

And, according to Army records, several months before he disappeared Lt. Whipkey, then only 25 years old, had all his teeth removed and was fitted with full dentures.

A retired Army lieutenant colonel, Charles Lewis of Enterprise, Ala., testified last year that he recalled two Army intelligence agents interviewing Lt. Whipkey on the Camp Desert Rock flight line during the atomic tests.

Lewis said he and other officers noted Lt. Whipkey "appeared to be nervous and uptight" after the agents left. His nervousness prevented him from flying several observation missions, Lewis said.

"Paul's actions were always ethical on and off the base," Lewis testified. "But Paul became suspiciously silent to others when the agents were mentioned or appeared on the scene at the airfield or the officers club."

Whipkey has gathered some support in his search for his brother's fate. Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., and Sen. Jeremiah A. Denton Jr., R-Ala., have offered to help.

Former Rep. Don Bailey, D-Pa., a Vietnam veteran, appeared before the Army board on his constituent's behalf, "convinced there are a great many questions about what happened to a very loyal fellow officer."

The American Legion is helping Whipkey and his lawyer press their claims for almost $14,000 in death benefits, GI insurance, back pay and interest in the case.

"Whether it is a cover-up or just a bungled investigation, it seems to us there are still some unanswered questions," says Bob Bishop, a state American Legion officer.

The Army report acknowledges that although the FBI "conducted a thorough investigation" into Lt. Whipkey's disappearance, the Army made "no encompassing investigation."

"Apparently," it concludes, "the responsible individuals who were aware of his disappearance on 10 July 1958 were of the opinion that he would eventually return."

Pet Visitors

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Dogs, cats and other pets would be allowed to visit prison inmates and patients in state health care facilities under a measure before the Oregon Legislature.

Approved by the Senate and sent to the House on Monday, the bill would require state mental health, corrections and health officials to set up guidelines under which patients or prison inmates could receive visits from pets.

Japanese Seek Computer To Solve Problems

By DAVID LAMMERS
Associated Press Writer
TOKYO (AP) — Forty of Japan's top young computer scientists are beginning a 10-year national research project with a mandate to develop a new generation of computers — computers that can assess the meaning of information and figure out ways to solve problems.

The aim is to put Japan in the forefront of the worldwide race for the "Fifth Generation" computer.

Dr. Kasuhiro Fuchi, who helped build Japan's first primitive transistor tube computer in 1964, has handpicked what he calls "the 40 brightest, under 35-year-old computer scientists that I know of in Japan" for work at a new, government-funded lab in Tokyo.

All of his researchers are on loan from eight Japanese computer makers who are participating in the project. Called the Institute for New Generation Computer Technology, the research effort was organized by the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, which is spending about $40 million for the first three years of research.

Fuchi said the first task will be to design a computer with a different internal design, or architecture, and much simpler to program. The scientists are working with a computer language called PROLOG, developed in Britain, which would ease the burden of software engineers in programming computers to perform complicated tasks, Fuchi said.

Computers designed in the post-World War II period were large and expensive, while the software, or program, was relatively simple and cheap. Today, the situation is reversed, with the software more expensive, and critical, than the hardware.

The current fourth generation computers, still in the developmental stage, can be programmed at great effort and expense to help doctors make diagnoses or to aid geologists in the search for valuable minerals.

These "expert" programs, and the large computer-stored data banks, rudimentary voice and text recognition systems, computer graphics, machine translation, chess-playing programs, and other artificial intelligence developments are the building blocks of the fifth generation computer.

Fuchi, and others interviewed here, said the strength of Japan's national project is that it will be able to pull the various strands of artificial intelligence research, very high speed "supercomputers" and other developments into one system.

Getting a computer to think, or to "draw inferences," means constructing a vast system of "logic rules" which would give it a crude facsimile of human reason.

But Japan's fifth generation project is not really expected to produce a "black box" that resembles a human brain, Fuchi said.

A "dream" fifth generation computer could listen to a human speak about a problem, pull data out of its storehouse of knowledge, deduct and induct while solving the problem, learn from its mistakes, and voice its answer.

That is unlikely to result from this project, Fuchi added.

However, Japan's effort does have some lofty goals, which include a mixed bag of major challenges facing the world's computer scientists.

Among these:
—A Japanese-to-English translation system with a vocabulary of 100,000 words capable of 90 percent accuracy.

—A computer to play a complicated Chinese game called "Go."

—Expansion of current crude voice recognition systems so a machine could hear the voices of several different speakers.

—A computer-aided design (CAD) system that could help design and debug other computers.

—Mega-memory data libraries that could also store at least 10,000 graphs and photographs.

George Lindamood, a computer scientist working in Tokyo with the U.S. Navy's Office of Naval Research, said the project "is asking for a qualitatively different computer that would require several breakthroughs."

"But their goal, to create a computer that the common man could input into and use, has tremendous commercial potential and is inspiring to researchers."

The U.S. and British governments have each formed study groups to determine if they should fund similar research efforts, but it is uncertain whether either will proceed.

A U.S. official who follows high technology issues said Japan's fifth generation project is important because "it will try to integrate the new elements in computer research into a system."

The official, who asked not to be named, added that unless Western nations launch competing projects, top Western scientists would come to Japan to participate in the fifth generation project "and the Japanese would pick their brains and teach them nothing."

This view is disputed by David Warren, a Scottish computer scientist who has worked at the SRI International in Menlo Park, Calif. months of work at the fifth generation computer lab.

"The Japanese are already very familiar with my research because what I've done has been published, and they've studied it thoroughly. On the other side of it, they've shared their ideas with me very freely," Warren said.

He said IBM and various U.S. government-sponsored research projects are pursuing many aspects of what is included in Japan's fifth generation computer project.

"However," he said, "there is no government project or private research effort that I know of which compares with what is going on here in Japan."

Baby Can Find Food At Home

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — Some parents find it reassuring to know the pureed carrots 8-month-old Junior has just slung across the room were homemade and contained no fillers, salt or sugar.

They also have discovered homemade baby food is cheaper than that sold in jars — an important consideration if Junior is flinging the major part of his food around the room.

"Making your own food isn't that hard," observed Deborah Miller, South Mountain Family Practice Center's pediatric clinical nurse specialist, who teaches a course in pediatric nutrition. "It is just as convenient as buying it in jars and you can use food the rest of the family eats, with a few alterations."

"That means the baby can get used to the household's eating patterns," she added. "That's especially important in ethnic homes where they just don't cook foods like those found in the jars."

Besides paving the way for a smooth transition between pureed carrots and hearty adult meals, homemade baby food usually costs less than the commercial product, she noted.

"Until about four years ago, there was a legitimate concern that the prepared foods had too much salt in them," Mrs. Miller said. "Since then, most of the baby food manufacturers have eliminated that problem."

Parents Learning To Cope

By JOHN DINGMAN
Associated Press Writer
JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — "It's the greatest thing that's happened to me since Christina was born," said Rebecca Maynard.

She was referring to a special training program at the North Mississippi Retardation Center for parents of autistic children such as Christina.

Mrs. Maynard and Christina recently completed a three-week stay at the center, where the mother learned how to cope with the behavior of her 4-year-old daughter, and help her reach a more normal life.

The pilot program is under the direction of Matt Armstrong, with the help of Peggy Power, a speech pathologist, and Betty Danials, a special education teacher.

Armstrong says that autism is a rare affliction. Only five out of every 10,000 birth results in an autistic child, and four out of the five are males. The cause is not known, nor is there any cure at the present.

Even the symptoms do not always come from autism. But, if a child shows repetitive behavior, such as rocking back and forth constantly, the possibility is there. Autistic children tend to be very self-centered; they have a limited understanding of ideas or show abnormal response to stimulus. Unusual eating habits also are a symptom.

Some of the indications come early, but they are most noticeable after about 13 months when it becomes apparent the infant is not developing normally.

That's the way it was with Mrs. Maynard and Christina. "She was different from the beginning, and I knew something was wrong," the Biloxi woman said.

But at about 2, her daughter developed many of the classic autistic symptoms, Mrs. Maynard said, and she began to seek treatment.

Until she heard of the program at the center in Oxford, Mrs. Maynard said, "I was at a dead end and thinking of an institutional program for Christina."

Now, she said, anyone who sees the child would not notice any great abnormality.

Not that she has been cured, although Mrs. Maynard's primary joy at the moment is the fact that Christina finally has been toilet trained.

She also is learning to communicate with others to some degree, mostly through the use of a sort of sign language. Christina has learned to use word-like sounds for certain objects.

The progress is the result of the system taught at the center. Autistic children need a strict, structured management so they will learn to do the same thing properly over and over again.

The three-week course for parents is free and is funded by the state through the University Affiliated Program and by the National Society for Autistic Children.

The first week, the parents attend class and watch special education teachers at work. The second week, they work with their children under supervision of the experts, and in the third week, they care for their own children with the teachers observing and helping after the day's sessions.

Mrs. Maynard said for her, the greatest help was learning what she calls the heart of the program, getting rid of bad behavior by reinforcing the good.

Always, she said, the parent must concentrate on success, not failure. She tries not to put Christina in a situation where she knows the child will fail.

"I started with things she could do, and I am reinforcing her behavior on those," she said.

"With something new, I keep a hands-on approach, placing my hands on hers and guiding her, little by little letting her do it herself," Mrs. Maynard said.

"It's a 24-hour-a-day job," Armstrong said, and the children do better if they get "the continuing attention they need."

Right now, there is little hope that autistic children will be cured and be able to lead fully normal lives, Armstrong said.

Danube Town Hears Greek

By PRUDENCE HELLER
Associated Press Writer
SZENTENDRE, Hungary (AP) — Greek-style music pouring out of amplifiers permeates the center of town. But the sunshine, if there is any, is nowhere near as intense as the Greek sun. The waterfront is not the Aegean or the Adriatic, but the Danube. The announcements that alternate with the music are in Hungarian.

The town is Szentendre, population 17,000, about a dozen miles upstream from Budapest.

Why the Greek music? One could chalk it up to the almost zany reality of Szentendre that makes it a sort of New York Greenwich Village on the Danube. It's a very active artists' town, with museums galore and stores selling all kinds of craftwork.

But this is also a medieval Greenwich Village, whose narrow, cobbled streets, many open only to pedestrians, baroque and rococo houses in all colors, and churches of many architectures, including the Orthodox "onion dome," carry centuries of history into the present.

The Greek music isn't as zany as one might think, either. For the Greeks played a role in the history of Szentendre, as did the Serbs, Bosnians, Dalmatians and Albanians. They all fled to the region from the advancing Turks in the 15th, 16th and 17th centuries. The Serbs particularly were a dominating influence in the town's artistic heritage, although only a handful remain in the area.

Szentendre — named for the apostle St. Andrew — first appears in records in 1146. The first church, we're told, was built in the 13th century. Until the early 14th century, the town was owned by the bishops of Veszprem. The people of the region grew fruit, especially grapes. But even then, some arts and crafts were produced.

In the late 19th century, blight hit the grape crop, and Szentendre turned to small industry — but also became Budapest's fruit bowl, growing a wide variety of fruit for the nearby city.

But for the average visitor, it's the center of town and the banks of the Danube that are the focus of attention.

Hungarians pour into town for a jaunt on a weekend by train or on the Danube riverboat from Budapest. Their T-shirts with legends like "University of Georgia" and "San Jose, California" contribute to the Greenwich Village atmosphere.

So do all the handicrafts for sale, including those draped across the front steps and front door of one of the famous churches. And so does the fact that people spend so much of their time just walking around and looking — and, of course, eating. The restaurants tucked into the baroque houses often have back yards for dining al fresco, and serve Greek and Serbian as well as traditional Hungarian cuisine.

A band may set itself up outside one of the eateries. And on summer evenings, there may be an outdoor play on the main square.

The visitor seeking to get away from the bustle can go into one of the churches or museums, including the Serbian Orthodox Cathedral and the Greek Orthodox Church. One museum is a collection of Serbian ecclesiastical art. Others give a good idea of how Hungarian artists reacted to such movements as impressionism.

And perhaps the most popular museum is the home of the Hungarian ceramics artist Margit Kovacs, who died in 1977 and whose work is collected there. Her philosophy as an artist: "Everybody breathes his soul into his work, his laughter, his joy and his grief. And how wonderful."

She found all three, but it's her sense of humor that predominates. She can depict pure woe — but she also saw the humor of the folk custom of paid mourners at a funeral. And her "Noahs," "Ulysses" and "The Miraculous Catch," all showing people in neat, tubby boats, make one think of "Rub-a-dub-dub."

Edgar Kaplan, New York, Norman Kay, Philadelphia, Richard Pavlicek, Ft. Lauderdale and Bill Root, Boca Raton, won the Vanderbilt Team Championship, premier event of the Spring North American Championships held recently in Hawaii. Since they had won the Board-A-Match team event at the Fall Championships, they will be seeded through to the finals of the trials to select the 1984 United States team for the World Olympiad team championships.

In one of the early rounds of the Vanderbilt, the winners met Trump Coup Tommy's team. They found themselves trailing early in the match when Tommy aggressively pushed to slam on this hand. Tommy's two club opening was a whisker weak, and his decision to drive to slam after partner's positive response showed either touching faith in his partner's ability or belief in a Supreme Bridge Player.

West led the queen of clubs, taken in dummy as declarer discarded a heart. Declarer cashed the ace-queen of diamonds, then came to hand with a club ruff. He discarded dummy's jack of hearts on the king of diamonds, then led a heart to the king and East's ace. East thought it would be a good idea to try to protect his queen of trumps for the setting trick, so he continued with a heart. Dummy ruffed, and declarer discarded a heart on the king of clubs when East declined to ruff.

Declarer ruffed a club with the ten of trumps, a far-sighted play! Next came a heart ruff with the ace of trumps, followed by the nine of trumps from dummy. If East covered, declarer would win and be left with nothing but high trumps, so East played low. But thanks to his earlier play, declarer was now able to remain in dummy by underplaying the eight of trumps. A club from dummy now completed the trump coup — whether East ruffed high or low, declarer would make the last two tricks by ruffing as cheaply as possible.

Computers For China's Schools

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Students at 14 universities throughout China will soon be using American-made computer systems.

The $15 million contracts for the Honeywell systems will be used for library information retrieval, class scheduling, student records, payroll and accounting systems, computer science training and Chinese character software development.

The 14 universities currently have some 100,000 undergraduate and graduate students and more than 25,000 faculty members. Student population is expected to exceed 125,000 in the next two years.

Lowe's Pricing Policy: Many items in this tabloid carry a reference retail price. The reference is intended to provide a guide to the range of retail selling prices in our area and may be useful in identifying different units of the same manufacturer. An item's reference retail price is either the manufacturer's suggested retail price or our determination of its full retail price based on prices at which it or similar merchandise is offered by principal retailers (department stores, specialty shops and other non-discount sellers) in our selling area. While we believe our reference retail price does not appreciably exceed the highest retail price at which sales are made in our selling area, we cannot assure you that our reference retail prices, as described above, represent the prices in every community on any given day. Some items in this advertisement are listed at "regular" selling prices. The merchandise is offered at this price except during a special sale. The purpose of showing a reference retail price (or a regular price) is to assist you, our customer, in making a knowledgeable and better informed buying decision. We suggest that you also do comparative shopping and compare our prices. (Prices in this tabloid do not include delivery charges. Ask us about delivery rates.)

Lowe's Raincheck Policy: If we sell out of an advertised item, we'll issue you a raincheck. When we restock, you'll be notified so you can buy at the previously advertised price (except for products marked "Limited Quantities"). Our smaller stores may not stock all advertised items. But every item shown here can be ordered for you.
