Justices Rule

Execution Postponement Is Ruled Not Necessary

By RICHARD CAPELLI
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal appeals courts do not have to postpone the executions of all death row inmates pushing non-frivolous appeals, the Supreme Court ruled today. The decision likely shortens the life expectancy of some 1,200 condemned murderers nationwide.

By a 6-3 vote, the justices upheld expedited procedures used by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Texas death row inmate Thomas Barefoot.

The high court's decision said federal appeals courts are free to adopt expedited procedures to help them cope with last-minute appeals from death rows.

In the same Texas case, the court ruled that psychiatrists may be allowed to testify about a convicted murderer's "future dangerousness" when the life-or-death sentencing decision is being made.

Of the 37 states with death penalty laws, only four others include a psychiatric prediction of future dangerousness as a factor to be considered by the judge or in sentencing.

But those states — Idaho, Oklahoma, Virginia and Washington — use such predictions as one of several aggravating circumstances, suggesting death as the appropriate punishment, to be weighed against mitigating circumstances that suggest life in prison as the best sentence.

Texas alone gives exclusive weight to the psychiatric prediction, one attacked as unreliable by the American Psychiatric Association.

The court, disagreeing with the APA, said there's no reason to believe such predictions of future dangerousness cannot be made with an acceptable degree of reliability.

The court's decision, carried in an opinion by Justice Byron R. White, set out what amounts to a life-and-death timetable for death row residents.

"It is a matter of public record that an increasing number of death-sentenced (inmates) are entering the appellate stages of the federal habeas process," White said. "The fair and efficient consideration of these appeals requires proper procedures for the handling of applications for stays of executions and demands procedures that allow a decision on the merits of an appeal accompanying the denial of a stay." White offered, among

Syria Avers Rejection Of Withdrawal Plan 'Final'

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — President Hafez Assad told Secretary of State George P. Shultz today that Syria's rejection of the Israeli-Lebanese troop withdrawal agreement is "final and irrevocable," a Syrian government spokesman said.

In a statement issued after Shultz's departure for Israel, the government said Assad made clear during a nearly five-hour meeting that Syria considers the agreement, negotiated by the United States, Israel and Lebanon, unacceptable because it undermines "unity, sovereignty and Arab belonging."

Assad repeated the frequent Syrian charge that the agreement signed May 17 is "more unfair and dangerous than the Camp David accords," which paved the way for the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Earlier, Shultz met Foreign Minister Abdul-Halim Khaddam in the Foreign Ministry for more than an hour.

Before the talks, a Syrian official close to Assad said Syria had "no present" to offer the United States and that he would stick by his long-held policy of demanding a return of all Arab lands captured in the 1967 Middle East war without conditions.

"We will inform Shultz that Syria refused and will always refuse anything that affects its security," said the official, who asked not to be identified.

"Under no circumstances can Syria accept any kind of Israeli presence in a point in Lebanon that is only 25 kilometers (15 miles) distant from Damascus," he said.

Assad has denounced the agreement Shultz arranged providing for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon, claiming it threatens Syrian security and violates Lebanese sovereignty because it allows the Israelis to patrol southern Lebanon.

He has insisted he will not consider withdrawing Syrian troops until that agreement is scrapped and Israel pulls its forces out.

As Shultz went into today's meetings, the Syrian state-run press indicated he would fail to alter Assad's position, which has not changed since Shultz last visited Damascus two months ago on his first Middle East mission. The English-language Syrian Times published a commentary saying Shultz "will certainly find in Damascus the same stand which he had known very well."

County Commissioners Plan Expand Giving Surplus Foods

By ANGELA LINGERFELT
Reflector Staff Writer
Pitt County Commissioners agreed Tuesday to expand the number of food items, subject to availability, distributed locally under the surplus foods program.

Approval of the expansion came at the request of Leroy James, Agricultural Extension Service county chairman. James, whose agency now supervises the food distribution, asked commissioners to allow him to add flour, corn meal, rice, dry milk and honey to the surplus butter and cheese now being distributed.

The board agreed to allow James to make application for all kinds of surplus food.

Pitt County Commissioners Tuesday heard Soil Conservation Service district Conservationist Albert Coffey report on a proposed drainage project at the county farm off SR 1725.

Coffey showed the board different methods that could be used to drain the land. The board decided to have a meeting with the owners of the adjacent land to determine how they would drain it.

Contracts for office supplies for the coming year were awarded to Eastern Office Supply Co., which submitted the low bid of $9,193, with a 25 percent discount for additional items purchased by the county.

Other bids received included: Taff Office Supply, $9,409.87 with a 25 percent discount, and Carolina Office Equipment Co., $11,390.10 with a 25 percent discount.

The board approved a recommendation by the tax collector that bills be sent out as close to Aug. 1 as possible. Tax bills were sent out in August of last year and commissioners were pleased with the early collections that resulted.

The commissioners designated Chairman Charles Gaskins to be the official voting delegate at the North Carolina Association of County Commissioners' annual conference.

Commissioners accepted the resignation of Roger L. Adams, personnel manager of Collins & Aikman, from the Committee for Employment of the Handicapped, and named Jim Craft to fill Adams' seat on the committee.

Commissioners also accepted the resignation of A. Louis Singleton from the Pitt County Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees.

Charles A. Waller was reappointed to the Pitt County ABC Board for a three-year term, and reappointed Charlie Holliday and Ann Bellis to the Pitt County Sediment Control Commission.

George Alvan and Jean Allen were reappointed to the Greenville Board of Adjustments, while Ephraim Smith was reappointed a member of the Pitt Community College Board of Trustees.

The board also appointed Leslie L. Turner and Elvie Ferris to the Greenville planning and zoning board. Turner was named to fill the seat held by Elbert Mills whose term expired and who was not eligible to be reappointed, while Ferris was named to fill the unexpired term of Dick Ferris who resigned from the board.

Housing Authority Asks Computer Firm's Offer

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

Housing Authority commissioners have authorized the agency's staff to ask a computer firm to submit a contract and operator manual for its data processing system for review and also to demonstrate the full system for the authority.

The board, meeting Tuesday night, agreed to have the staff pursue discussions with Computer Generation Inc. (CGI) for possible purchase of the hardware and software package from the Atlanta based firm.

Ken Noland, the authority's director of operations, told board members that four proposals for data processing hardware and software were received initially and of the four it appears that CGI will better serve the needs of the agency. He said the system can be expanded in the future if necessary.

The board members approved the CGI proposal, subject to further staff review and a satisfactory demonstration of the data processing system.

Noland said the agency held a bid opening for the proposed Kearney Park modernization project recently but only two contractors participated. He said a second opening will be held and a contract will be awarded for the work.

The staff member mentioned that the authority is still awaiting word from the Department of Housing and Urban Development on an application for some $360,000 in special purpose money to fund work in the Meadowbrook housing area. Noland said an application for $515,000 in funds for Kearney Park, which would be in addition to $1.1 million in modernization money for the project, is also being reviewed by HUD.

Executive Director Joe Laney said the authority has received written approval from HUD to proceed with the preparation of design documents for a new 40-unit conventional housing project in West Meadowbrook. Laney said that bid and contract paperwork is being prepared for submission to HUD by Aug. 1 and it is BOTTLING COMPANY HERE?

Recently I found an old soft drink bottle in a barn. In raised glass lettering are the words, "soda water" and Chero Bottling Company, Greenville. Inquiries of local people have so far turned up nothing about this company. Is there anyone who can tell me about this company, when it was in business and what products it made. N.H.

Long-time Greenville resident D.J. Whichard Jr. says the Chero Bottling Company was operated here from some time "in the teens" to some years after World War I. Located on Dickinson Avenue in the Eighth Street-Ninth Street area, it was first operated by Carey Warren, he said. The company made a number of fruit-flavored sodas, he remembers.

Anyone else having information about this company is invited to share it through Hotline.

Adopted Budget Resolution

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

At a special call meeting Monday night, members of the Greenville Board of Education formally adopted a budget resolution for the city schools for fiscal year 1983-84 — July 1, 1983 to June 30, 1984 — amounting to a grand total in all categories of $11,250,792.

This is the action required by law that formally establishes the budget following the adoption of county budgets by county commissioners in the local current expense and capital outlay allocations, and the establishment of projected funds to be received in the categories of state, federal and food service revenues.

Amounts in each major category of funds adopted in the resolution are:

- Local current expense fund . . . $3,279,525
- State Public School fund . . . $6,064,567

- Federal Grants fund . . . $ 816,517
- School Food Service fund . . . $ 830,250
- Capital Outlay fund . . . $ 259,933
- Total budget, all funds . . . $11,250,792

Under authority granted to the board, members will be able from time to time during the year to adopt budget resolutions that can, within clearly definable limits, shift line items within the budget to make pressing needs and approve other bookkeeping adjustments that may occur with the receipt of additional funds or the cutback of funds dependent on actual allocations received.

In a report to board members, Superintendent Delma Blinson said the summer school program resulted in revenues of $12,550, with total expenditures of $13,878 for a deficit of $1,328 in the program.

In one other action, board members approved the election of three individuals and the resignation of one person.

Harman-Byrd Wedding Vows Are Solemnized

KINSTON — Janice Elizabeth Byrd of Grifton and Richard Steven Harman of Kinston were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at one o'clock in the Greater Kinston Tabernacle in a double ring ceremony conducted by the Rev. Joseph Hutchinson.

The bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Lee Byrd of Grifton, was escorted by her father.

Parents of the bridegroom are Mrs. Carol Jones of Kinston and Walter Steven Harman of Newport News, Va.

The bride wore a formal gown of white organza over peau de soie designed with a Queen Anne neckline outlined in silk Venice lace. The empire bodice was encircled with matching lace appliques of silk Venice lace. Lace enhanced the full bishop sleeves with cuffs overlaid in floral silk Venice lace. The modified A-line skirt and attached chapel length train were accentuated with an edging of silk Venice lace. She wore a fingertip veil of illusion edged in silk Venice lace held in place by a caplet overlaid in matching lace. She carried a cascade bouquet of white orchids with white ribbons and violets intermingled.

The honor attendant, Ginger B. Hoover of Florence, S.C., sister of the bride, wore a formal lavender gown with lace at the neck, long sleeves and a cummerbund. She carried a white lace fan accented with violets and ribbons.

The bridesmaids were Amy Lynn Brothers of Grifton; Beverly Carol Harman of Kinston, sister of the bridegroom; Tejuana Gowan of Grand Bay, Ala.; and Renee Tripp of Salisbury, cousin of the bridegroom. Each attendant wore a gown and carried flowers like that of the matron of honor.

The flower girl, April

MRS. RICHARD STEVEN HARMAN

Jones of Kinston, wore a white dress with lavender ribbons and carried a white basket filled with lavender and white flowers. The ring bearer was Tony Howell.

Dwayne Harman of Kinston, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Ushers were Mike O'Connor of Kinston, Bob Hughes of La Grange and Joe Tripp Jr. of Florence, S.C., cousin of the bridegroom.

Wedding music was provided by organists Mrs. James Gowan and Mrs. Joseph Hutchinson. Soloists were Rev. James Gowan and Mrs. Joseph Hutchinson.

Mrs. Thurman Huffman directed the wedding. Jean

Tripp presided at the register.

A reception was held at the Salvation Army Hall following the ceremony. Servers were Mrs. Adrian Arnette, Mrs. Bob Hughes and Mrs. Thurman Huffman.

Several showers were given in honor of the bridal couple.

The bride is a graduate of North Lenior High School and is employed as an admission clerk at Lenior Memorial Hospital. The bridegroom graduated from Kinston High School and is employed by Glen Raven Mills.

After a wedding trip to Orlando, Fla., the couple will reside at Route 2, Grifton.

The Growing Problems Of Latchkey Children

By MARLENE AIG
Associated Press Writer
PEEKSKILL, N.Y. (AP) — Nine-year-old Stephanie admits she's afraid to be home alone after school. Jonathan agrees that sounds are always more ominous when he's by himself. And Linda says she's scared at night, even when her sister is there.

Stephanie, Jonathan and Linda — not their real names — are part of a growing phenomenon in the American school system: the latchkey child, the youngster who returns to an empty house after school.

As many as 6 million children between the ages of 6 and 12 are left to fend for themselves when the school bell rings at 3 o'clock because Mom and Dad are both working or because there's only one parent at home.

"It's not something people brag about. People don't go around telling people 'I've left my kid home alone,'" said Lynette Long, an assistant professor of education at Loyola College in Baltimore.

Mrs. Long and her husband, Thomas, an associate professor of education at Catholic University in Washington, have written a guidebook called "The Handbook for Latchkey Children and Their Parents," to be published by Arbor House in August.

The Longs say the "sky-rocketing divorce rate, single-parent families and dual family incomes" are major reasons for the growing number of latchkey children.

As many as 50,000 children under the age of 6 are left alone, according to Mrs. Long.

"Sixty-eight percent of all women with children work and day care is not always available or affordable," she said.

Stephanie, Jonathan and Linda were lucky. This past spring they were part of an experimental class at the Hillcrest Elementary School that taught "survival techniques" for the latchkey child.

"The program was school-based as part of the fourth-grade curriculum so children were not separated or stigmatized," said Florence Saul, a professional counselor at the Family Service of Westchester, who devised and taught the class.

While she and the Longs believe children as young as 9 should not be left alone, "many are and many just don't have the tools for coping."

Among those "tools" are how to handle telephone calls, deal with someone at the door, prepare snacks or meals, care for younger siblings, organize for homework, act in case of fire "or who to call if you think there's a monster in the closet."

Latchkey children — the term stems from the 19th century when children wore their housekeys around their necks — often become prime victims of crime because they are young and alone.

"The real problem is children who become ill," said Mrs. Long. "Many are sent to school who, 10 years ago, would have been kept home. Some are left home alone. Elliott in 'E.T.' is a good example of a latchkey child left home alone because he doesn't feel well."

In the Chicago suburb of Naperville last April, 10-year-old Jeanine Nicario was murdered by someone who broke into her home while she was home — alone — sick with the flu.

Detective Donald Sellick of the Peekskill Police Department's Juvenile Bureau took over Ms. Saul's class one day and advised the 33 youngsters to "know where to go for help."

Children walking to empty homes or even to homes where Mom is waiting should walk where there are a lot of people, just in case someone tries to follow them.

"Don't be afraid to run," he said.

He urged the children to "observe mentally" where there are people "not just lights. Look to see if a car is in the driveway."

If a child is home alone and the doorbell rings, he advises: "Talk through the door. Don't open it. If you don't know them and they won't go away, call the police."

If the phone rings, "don't tell them you're home alone. Say your mother is in the shower and will call back."

Children should always have telephone numbers of relatives or a close family friend — "someone they can call if they need help."

The house should be secure and children should be made aware "if something is abnormal. If a light is out or something doesn't look right, call police," he said.

The prime goal of the course, which Ms. Saul will teach at several other district schools in the fall, "is to help the kids feel self-confident and to see themselves as independent."

"There's a gap between current reality and the school system. The system is still set up as if Mom will still be there at 3 o'clock," said Mrs. Long. "The school year should be restructured. Parents don't have two weeks off at Christmas and two months off in the summer. Schools should not be day care providers."

Abby Votes With Teen's Parents

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: You may think this is silly, but I want to get my ears pierced a second time so I can wear two pair of earrings at once. Mom and Dad say, "NO!" I say they are my ears, and if they rot off, it will be my problem.

I'm 16, and I think I know what I want. My parents say having two holes in each ear is just a passing fad, and one day I'll be sorry, but, Abby, having two holes in the same ear has been around for centuries.

My mom and dad say they're afraid I may get carried away and end up with maybe seven holes in each ear, and one in my nose, too. I won't. I think even three holes are gaudy. All I want is two.

What is your opinion?

PERFORATED PATTI

DEAR PERFORATED: True, they are your ears, but you are still a minor, and as such you must abide by the wishes of your mom and dad. I vote with them. Two holes in one head are enough.

DEAR ABBY: This is written in all seriousness, so please don't take it as a joke. My boyfriend thinks he is allergic to me. "Dan" breaks out with a red, itchy rash whenever he's exposed to anything he's allergic to, which happens whenever we are together for any length of time. We've heard it's possible for a person to be allergic to another person, although it is extremely rare. Two allergists Dan has gone to said, "It must be your girlfriend's makeup, perfume, hair spray, deodorant, toothpaste, shampoo, etc." But since I've stopped using makeup, perfume, hair spray, etc., and now use only Dan's brands of deodorant, toothpaste, shampoo, etc., his rash has persisted, and we've come to a dead end.

We really care for each other, but we may have to split up if he doesn't quit breaking out every time we're together. It's been going on for over a year.

K. IN COLORADO SPRINGS

DEAR K.: It may be a "nervous reaction" rather than an allergy. Suggest that Dan consult a psychotherapist. I don't mean to be unkind, but your boyfriend could be unconsciously itching to split up, or "break out."

...

Every teen-ager should know the truth about drugs, sex and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I'd like to talk to you today about this country's symbol of justice.

To be honest with you, I never really looked at the statue of her perched atop the Montgomery County courthouse back in Ohio until one day when I was in my late 30s.

As I came out of the courthouse after buying a dog license one afternoon, I glanced up at her and my heart skipped a beat. Here was a woman wearing a caftan, with upper arms that could fan Brazil and looking like she had eaten every pigeon that came within arm's length. I figured her for about 40.

At that moment, the statue of justice became my role model.

I began to fantasize about how great it would be when I reached her age. I would ride in on my longevity wearing a blindfold when I was near a scale I didn't want to see.

But something happened to me on the way to 40. An 50. Linda Evans came along. So did Joan Collins and Linda Gray. Older women who defied the very fiber of justice — not to mention gravity.

Oh, I didn't mind the mother-daughter hand-comparison tests where you tried to guess who had done the most dishes — or the Oil of Olay ads where the ages on their T-shirts were the same as my thigh measurements. But when I saw the rear view of Raquel Welch at age 41 in a swim suit on the cover of Life magazine, I quit lying to myself.

There is no justice hovering over courthouses or the Supreme Court or anywhere else.

She's a myth, like her twin sister, the Statue of Liberty. Here's a woman wearing the same nightgown, with a 35-foot waist, a 3-foot mouth and an arm that holds seven tourists on curved a stairway. When was the last time you met a Miss America with those measurements?

The Statue of Liberty — mother of exiles. They got that part right!

I paid a visit to my original role model a couple of weeks ago. She's still there on top of the Montgomery County courthouse, holding the scale and beckoning me to follow in her righteous footsteps. As I stood there, I felt a splatter on my cheek from a pigeon. I wasn't surprised.

I think they're right about women. We're our own worst enemies.

Question Of Trust

It's heartening to hear a Department of Transportation spokesman say that North Carolina "has no unsafe bridges," but its disillusioning to hear the same spokesman say that nearly 69 percent of the state-maintained bridges are structurally unsound or obsolete.

Information such as that makes you want to rush into the family vehicle and take a Sunday drive across the nearest bridge.

North Carolina has had serious bridge accidents but, overall, the state has a good track record. Joel Johnson, a DOT bridge appraiser, says there is no reason to believe that North Carolina's bridges will not continue to be safe. Repairs and upgrading construction are continuous, he said, although work has been slowed in recent months because of financial cut-backs.

That should be corrected in the months ahead as more funds become available from the 5-cent tax added to gasoline earlier this year. North Carolina will receive about $8 million from that tax, according to Johnson, and much of that money will go toward maintenance of the state's 16,000 bridges.

That will be just a drop in the bucket. Johnson says it would take $50 billion to replace all of the state's structurally deficient bridges. As for safety, the situation isn't as bad as it sounds. Some of those bridges are "structurally deficient" because they are too low for trucks to pass under on Interstate highways, or they are wooden bridges on lightly traveled dirt roads that wouldn't take heavy traffic anyway.

And the state is making progress, to a degree. There are now more than 100 bridges in the process of being replaced.

In the meantime, we'll just have to trust Mr. Johnson when he says there are no unsafe bridges in the state.

Adequate Facilities

Greenville's new 5,700-square-foot Greenville Area Transit System garage was dedicated in ceremonies at the public works department.

The $363,407 facility was built with a $289,925 federal grant and local and state funds. It gives the transit system the needed space and equipment to properly maintain the fleet of seven buses and other equipment. Included is automatic washing equipment which will keep the city's buses clean.

GREAT has some 1,000 riders daily and the system is providing a service to our citizens.

One of the things a developing city must have is adequate public transportation. Greenville has developed a good bus system and now the public works department has the facilities to service its equipment.

Worries Continue

NEW YORK (AP) — Wherever economists celebrated the Fourth of July they probably put a damper on the fun, telling anyone who would listen that while the fireworks were beautiful they were awfully dangerous too.

As dangerous, you might say, as an expanding economy, which you should know leads inevitably to a shrinking economy because of the inborn cyclical nature of such things.

"Too much of a good thing?" ask Citibank economists in an analysis of the strengthening expansion. Too much? Why millions of people haven't even noticed a thing, even the results of the tax cut in their paychecks.

"The second quarter has brought a surge of growth," say the Citibank people, "and that raises the possibility of another bout of accelerating inflation."

Already, the Citibank folks worry, the expansion has put the Federal Reserve, which seeks to control the supply of dollars, "in the uncomfortable position of having to decide whether to curb the pace of recovery."

Hold on, says John Wright, who runs Wright Investors' Service, which thinks that over the years the Fed has done as much damage as good. Isn't it a bit hasty, he asks, to call the fire department before the Roman candle is lit?

He insists that "concerns about the economy overheating — while one of 10 workers remains unemployed and one of four machines stands idle on the factory floor — are clearly premature."

Robert Christian, director of economic research at Provident National Bank of Philadelphia, seems to agree. "It has been our feeling that the current recovery would be below the norm of the average postwar economic recovery," he announces and adds: "We remain of this belief."

Over at Wharton Econometrics, Donald Straszheim seems to disagree, having announced June 25 that "recent economic statistics have been uniformly positive, and the fear of a fragile recovery is past."

A pleasant enough observation, to be sure, especially when it is noted that Straszheim foresees "at least six quarters of very strong economic growth," which would seem to transport us comfortably through 1984.

But if you cannot worry about an upturn you can worry about the downturn to follow. What happens after those six sturdy quarters? "Warning signs," he broods.

These broodings are about renewed cyclical difficulties, which "could become serious by early 1985," including higher interest and inflation rates, slower growth, and an unemployment rate stalled at a high level.

All these concerns come amidst some rather pleasant statistics.

In May, for example, the University of Michigan survey of consumer attitudes reached its highest level in nearly a decade. And housing starts in the same month rose 19 percent.

RALEIGH — Being a conservative is quite the rage in Raleigh these days — maybe not as chic as it was right after the 1980 election but, nonetheless, being conservative is the thing to do.

So it's not surprising that with everybody rushing to convince us how conservative they are, that some of us have become confused about what the label "conservative" means.

For example, take the debate in the House-Senate conference committee on the tax package for the fiscal year we've just entered. One group says the conservative thing to do is raise taxes by $74 million. The other group says the conservative thing to do is juggle the accounting books and practice a little deficit spending.

The $74 million issue concerns teachers who are on a 12-month salary schedule. They perform all of their work in one fiscal year, but take two paychecks in the following fiscal year. Wiggle a few numbers by counting the July and August 1984 checks in the next fiscal year's budget and, like magic, you've created a one-time $74 million windfall for the state.

The issue, at this writing, is the core of the debate between the two different revenue packages passed by the two chambers of our General Assembly. The Senate says to take the money and run. The House says that's unwise, unconstitutional and unconservative. They say forget the money magic and raise taxes.

On the House side, the assembly's most powerful liberal, Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake, said, "We want to be conservative." To which Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, responded in astonishment, "Say that a little louder."

It's hard to argue, however, that Adams and his fellow House conferees didn't make a good conservative argument against the Senate's magic money proposal. Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Vance, called it deficit spending — a procedure that is unconstitutional in this state. How could a group of seven conservative seantors endorse paying this year's teacher salaries next year? If the teachers all said they wanted all their money this year, which they have the right to do, then the state would end up $74 million short. What good conservative hasn't argued that you can't spend more than you take in?

To which Royall announced that it was obvious Adams wasn't much of a businessman. (Adams is a lawyer.) The Senate plan may juggle the books but it avoids the $74 million one-time tax increase on business that is included in the House plan. (The seven Senate conferees are all businessmen. The House crowd has two businessmen, four lawyers and a retired military man.) To the Senate businessmen, the definition of conservative is anything that keeps down taxes on business.

So in this debate, you had both sides claiming to be taking the conservative course. Actually, you had one side taking the cautious course. The other side took the business course. The House was saying that the state could get itself into a real mess with this deficit spending. What happens if the state spends this $74 million and then the economy starts going down again? North Carolina could end up with a revenue shortfall like this year's and, to make things worse, a bank account that never was big enough to pay the teachers the money the state is contracted to pay them.

The Senate was saying the state already has $74 million sitting around. Grab that money and use it to balance the budget for the fiscal year that's just started. The state won't have to raise taxes this year and that is the ultimate test of a true conservative.

This stuff sure will be a lot less difficult to understand when political moderation comes back into style.

Public Forum

To the editor:

The Baha'i community of Greenville recently received news of the hangings last week of 16 more Baha'is in Shiraz, Iran. Among the 16 were seven women and three teen-aged girls.

These latest executions are shocking and demonstrate the depravity of the fanatical regime in Iran. It saddens us that many people draw a negative conclusion about Islam from what is happening in Iran today.

Iran executed the 16 in spite of an appeal for clemency by President Reagan one month ago. The 10 Baha'is hanged Saturday were subjected to long interrogations, after which they were further pressured to recant their religion and accept Islam.

A telegram to President Reagan June 19 from a national Baha'i spokesperson protests the crimes and continues, "Some 60 Baha'is are still in jail in Shiraz and are also threatened with death. We hope that the United States will be in the forefront of enlightened nations in preventing further such barbarities."

Baha'is have been arrested wholesale and executed in twos and threes for the past year. But this is the first time since December 1981 and January 1982, when 15 national and local Baha'i leaders were executed in Iran, that so many of the faith's followers have been martyred at one time.

Iran's treatment of the Baha'is has drawn the protests of President Reagan who defended them, stating, "These individuals are not guilty of any political offense or crime. They have not plotted to overthrow the regime and they are not responsible for the deaths of anyone. They only wish to live according to the dictates of their own consciences."

The president's appeal was directed to the world: "I strongly urge other world leaders to join me in an appeal to the Ayatollah Khomeini and the rest of Iran's leadership not to implement the sentences that have been pronounced on these innocent people. Sparing their lives would be a step forward for Iran and the world community."

To the editor:

It would appear that the use of polygraph and its regulation remain shrouded in ignorance. It has been suggested by some that polygraph examiners in North Carolina should be licensed by the state. In fact, they are required to pass an extensive battery of tests — written, oral, and practical.

The examination is administered through the Private Protective Services Division of the State Bureau of Investigation. No polygraph examiner in North Carolina may legally conduct a polygraph examination for private enterprise unless they are licensed.

Prior to state licensing, polygraph examiners are required to complete an intensive training program of 320 hours. Most polygraph schools require the applicant to have a B.A. or B.S. degree prior to admission.

In the future, let us hope that those who would speak out would first do their homework.

'Off With Their Heads'

WASHINGTON — The measure of how quickly and pervasively hysteria over the Carter briefing book gripped this city's power centers was taken when one of the Republican Party's most respected senior counselors passed this word to his contacts at the White House: Off with their heads!

Easily recognizable severed heads would belong to budget director David Stockman, CIA Director William Casey and, most notably, White House chief of staff James A. Baker III. President Reagan, this seasoned Republican strategist advised, should avoid Richard Nixon's fate by beheading lieutenants. The advice was rejected, but the very fact it was tendered reflects the early-summer mood in Washington.

Although no evidence of any crime was in hand, the normal business of government at the White House was suspended by the revelation that candidate Ronald Reagan's staff had access to some of candidate Jimmy Carter's briefing material for their 1980 debate. As in other post-Watergate incidents, the cry of the Queen of Hearts was heard: "Off with her head! Sentence first, verdict afterwards."

Senior aides at the White House who followed the queen's approach in their advice to Reagan about Richard V. Allen, Anne Gorsuch Burford and Ray Donovan stand to lose their own heads in this case, and therefore are uncharacteristically judicious. Nevertheless, the incident shows how the Washington-based media can start slowly and end up as a headlong stampede, pounding at the gates of the White House.

The first two weeks of harping about the briefing book incident by ex-Carter aides Pat Caddell and Jody Powell went virtually unnoticed by the media. Caddell advised one prominent Democratic spokesman that he was going to open the issue on NBC's "Today" program and advised him to be ready for a deluge of reporters' inquiries; the party leader received not one telephone call.

Such ennui was privately attributed by key Democrats to distaste for Jimmy Carter here, strangely building rather than diminishing in his third year of retirement. But what really discouraged early media interest in this case was the lack of novelty about leaked documents in a city where the omnipresent duplicating machine has made secrecy obsolete.

The president's senior staff, nonchalant considering the early lack of media interest, were overwhelmed by what happened next. "I think we were all caught off guard," one of Reagan's most politically astute advisers told us. With ABC's Sam Donaldson tenacious in pressing the story, his colleagues were pounding at the White House gates intent on not being left behind.

With the media pack in full cry, Republican strategists outside the White House began playing Queen of Hearts by urging that Reagan not duplicate Nixon's folly but get rid of his erring tacticians. One well-placed party operative passed word that Reagan could keep Baker, Stockman and Casey by quickly dispatching just one scapegoat: communications director David Gergen.

Baker, Stockman and Gergen were excused from Reagan's presence from that part of the briefing for his June 28 press conference that dealt with the Carter debate incident. But White House aides Edwin Meese and Michael Deaver strongly counseled the president not to condemn any aide on ethical grounds for receiving Carter campaign material, since that condemnation would have to be followed by their dismissal. Consequently, Reagan on six separate occasions during the press conference sidestepped ethical judgments about his senior staff.

Indeed, quite apart from any violation of the law, there is no evidence so far of any espionage operation carried on by upper levels of the Reagan campaign. It is the lower levels that cause concern at the White House. But what is expected at worst is interaction between the Reagan and Carter political operations in the gamy atmosphere that often prevails inside campaign staffs.

That hardly justifies parallels to Nixonian Watergate outrages.

Strength For Today

The medieval church held that pride is the greatest of sins. Scripture supports the theory that practically all sin goes back to the sin of pride.

There is a wholesome kind of pride which everyone should have. We are proud of our country, proud of our families, proud of our friends. Mixed in with all the mistakes we have made, there are some achievements in the lives of all of us in which we can take just pride.

The pride which the Bible condemns is not of this variety.

It is the debasing pride which lifts man in his own esteem above his fellows. Evil pride blasts romance and marriage because neither party will admit fault or ask for pardon. Pride has driven men to make fortunes by trampling on their fellows.

Pride causes the Pharisee to stand, even in the temple of God, and give thanks that he is not as other men.

"Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall."

A Matter Of Influence

Panowski."

"But they all didn't take communion."

"I think you're missing the point, Panowski. Until the Pope's visit we had the unions under control, the people were dispirited and had lost their will to fight us and we looked like we were in control. Now everything is changed and we're back where we started from. The Pope gave everyone a shot in the arm, which is something we didn't need at this time."

"So I underestimated his appeal as a spiritual leader. We all make mistakes. "Is that what you want us to tell Moscow?"

"Why do we have to tell Moscow anything? We're an independent country."

"No reason except they have six million troops on our border. You better come up with a good story when the Kremlin calls us, which should be any minute now."

"Why don't we say he came here on a trade mission to buy Polish hams, in exchange for Vatican wheat?"

"I'm not sure the Soviets will buy that one; not after the speeches he made from the pulpit."

We could say the Western press exaggerated the visit and made it into a political exaggerated the visit and made it into a political spectacle to further their warlike intentions towards the Warsaw Pact nations."

"That's better, but it's still not good enough. The Soviets are going to ask why we let him come in the first place."

"Because we needed the hard currency to buy oil from the Russians?"

"It won't fly, Panowski."

The phone started ringing.

"It's them Panowski. Why don't you answer it?"

"Hello, yes, Comrade. This is the Central Committee. Before you say anything, he's gone. We kicked him out of the country before he could do any damage. ... No, no. Everything's quiet in Poland. Do you think one priest could be a threat to the great Polish Communist Party? ... Who told you the whole country turned out to hear him? ... That's disinformation put out by the CIA. The man didn't even fill up one small church. A few old ladies turned out to see him. You have my word for it ... Listen to me ... We don't need any troops ... He didn't influence any of us ... so help me God!"

No Rush By Teachers To Be Certified

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — School officials say a new state policy on out-of-field teaching is not likely to send teachers scrambling for certification.

The new policy is aimed at keeping teachers from teaching subjects in which they are not certified.

Officials say the policy has several phase-in features that will allow teachers to teach out-of-field subjects while they take courses to get certification.

"The crucial question is how many we will have this fall teaching out of field," said Joe Flora of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg school system. "Principals have been told to do what they can to minimize out-of-field teaching next year."

According to a state survey of grades nine through 12 in 1982-83, 20 percent of all classes statewide were taught by teachers not certified in those subjects.

More than half the health teachers and almost one-fourth of the science teachers in Charlotte-Mecklenburg schools were not certified by the state to teach those subjects.

School officials say to get certification in their out-of-field areas, some teachers may begin taking courses during the second semester of the 1983-84 school year.

By that time, the state Department of Public Instruction will have finished assessing the credentials of the state's teachers who are teaching in outside areas.

Flora said some teachers will be certified because of teaching experience and college courses they have taken.

Most of the reshuffling in teacher assignments is expected to occur in the 198-85 school year.

"We have never permitted full-time out-of-field teaching," Flora said. "The typical situation is that a teacher is out of field in one or two subjects. The endorsements will take care of that."

Certificate endorsements are part of the new policy's phase-in features. The endorsements permit a person with 18 hours of college credit in a subject to be assigned to teach that subject less than half the time.

Another option allows a superintendent to give one-year provisional certificates to teachers working out of their fields in 1983-84 while they begin to take college courses to get credit. Such teachers must take at least six credit hours of training per year until full certification is granted.

Joys Of Travel Go Unnoticed

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — The joys of world travel often go unnoticed by top executives.

One officer of a worldwide company with 100,000 employees said, "There is no time for fun when visiting eight countries in eight days. The demands are exhausting."

The official of R.J. Reynolds Industries said, "It often is even more complicated when you get home. Friends and neighbors accuse you of feigned jadedness when you try to downplay the trips."

Smaller Pension Benefits For Women Illegal, Asserts Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, in a ruling that could force sweeping changes in the insurance industry, ruled today that it is illegal for pension plans to pay smaller monthly benefits to women than to men.

The court threw out a pension plan for Arizona state workers that paid women $34 a month less in retirement than men with the same length of service. The court said all retirement benefits derived from contributions made after the decision today must be calculated without regard to the sex of the beneficiary.

But the court said that benefits derived from contributions made prior to today's decision may still be calculated under the old system, which allowed larger monthly benefits to men.

The insurance industry maintained that the differences in monthly payments were legitimate because women, on the average, live longer than men.

Today's ruling came as the court concluded its 1982-83 term. It is due to return for the next term on the first Monday in October.

The insurance industry contends that today's pensions ruling could "revolutionize" the business because sex-based differences are often used to compute premiums, as well as benefits, for life, health and auto insurance.

The American Council of Life Insurance had said, "Pension plans covering 26.1 million Americans and backed by $165.8 billion in reserves would have to be changed substantially" under today's ruling "with consequences which cannot now be clearly foreseen." The final word could be left to Congress, which is already considering numerous bills that would make it illegal to base insurance rates and coverage on sex differences.

According to congressional testimony, 37 state legislatures also have so-called "unisex" insurance bills before them that would ban discrimination based on gender in setting insurance rates and pension plan benefits.

The insurance industry said that eliminating all sex-based differences from insurance would ironically cost women $360 million more per year for life insurance premiums and $700 million more per year for auto insurance premiums.

The industry has also said that the cost of pension plans could rise by close to $2 billion a year if women's benefits must be raised to the level of men's benefits.

The Supreme Court ruled in 1978 that women cannot be forced to make larger contributions than men to employer-operated pension funds. But that case did not deal with benefits.

In today's opinion, Justice Thurgood Marshall said, "The classification of employees on the basis of sex is no more permissible at the pay-out stage of a retirement plan than at the pay-in stage."

In an opinion joined by four other justices, Marshall said Arizona's practice of making larger monthly pension payments to men than to women is illegal discrimination under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Marshall said the "underlying assumption" of Arizona's plan "that sex may properly be used to predict longevity is flatly inconsistent with the basic teaching" of the high court's 1978 ruling.

He said that decision requires employers to treat their employees as individuals and not as members of a particular race, religion, sexual or national class.

No Damage By Weather

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Gusty winds and driving rain blew across the county Tuesday, but no damage was reported in the Greenville area.

The wind velocity reached 63 mph, according to Bill Russ, supervisor at the Pitt Greenville Airport. A rainfall of .22 inches was recorded by Greenville Utilities.

Sam Uzell of the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service said area farmers had not reported any wind damage to their crops. "Yesterday's rain was more beneficial than the wind was harmful," he said.

"I don't know if there was any wind damage, but I wouldn't be surprised if the wind didn't blow down some plants," Uzell said. "Some scattered corn and a few tobacco plants might have been damaged, but I haven't heard of any problems."

Because most of the local telephone lines are underground, Carolina Telephone Company did not report any damage as a result of the high winds, according to Dick Flye, district commercial and marketing manager.

The high temperature Tuesday was 93 degrees and the low temperature was 67.

AIDs Hotline Is Now In Operation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The toll-free telephone line has been set up by the government to provide up-to-date information on AIDS, the deadly disease that attacks the body's ability to fight infections.

In addition to the telephone hotline, Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler said Tuesday that a new leaflet entitled "Facts on AIDS" is now available to the public. The booklet will be updated as soon as new information about the disease becomes available, she said.

The hotline will be open from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. EDT daily. The number is 800-342-AIDS. Callers from Alaska and Hawaii may phone collect to a separate number, (202)-245-6867. Public Health Service employees will answer the calls and make referrals if necessary.

The leaflet may be obtained by writing the Public Health Service, Office of Public Affairs, Room 721-H, 200 Independence Ave. S.W., Washington, D.C. 20201.

A separate publication, called "AIDS Information Bulletin" will be sent on the first and third Mondays every month to health professionals, researchers, state and local officials and other groups interested in developments connected with the disease. It will contain information on government projects on the cause and treatment of AIDS.

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome has affected more than 1,600 Americans and killed more than 600. Its principal victims are homosexual and bisexual men with multiple sex partners, intravenous drug abusers, recent Haitian emigrants and hemophiliacs. The disease leaves the body vulnerable to a variety of infections by destroying its ability to fight off disease.

The government plans to spend $14 million on AIDS projects this year.

others, these guidelines: —That death row inmates seeking execution postponements must make "a substantial showing" that they have been deprived of some federally ensured right.

—That when federal trial judges deny execution postponements but allow the inmates to carry the last-minute pleas to federal appeals courts, those appeals courts must consider the merits of the inmates' underlying appeals.

—Postponements of executions are not automatic just because a death row inmate has formal appeals pending before the Supreme Court.

Today's decision carried no immediate impact for Barefoot, a resident of Texas' death row, because a new death warrant will have to be signed for him.

But it could carry very immediate impact for Mississippi death row inmate Jimmy Lee Gray, who was to die in the state's gas chamber earlier today.

Mississippi authorities now are expected to press for permission to execute Gray before his death warrant runs out at midnight.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals had ordered that Gray's execution be postponed until the Supreme Court's decision in Barefoot's case was announced.

Now, Mississippi authorities will ask the appeals court to lift its postponement order.

Gray, 34, was sentenced to die for the kidnapping, rape and slaying of 3-year-old Deressa Jean Scales of near Pascagoula. If Gray is executed today, it will be the first such execution in Mississippi since 1964 — and only the eighth execution of a U.S. prison inmate since the Supreme Court reinstated the death penalty in 1976.

Barefoot was sentenced to die by lethal injection in Texas for the 1978 murder of Carl Levin, a Harker Heights, Texas, police officer who had been investigating a night club fire.

A New Iberia, La., native, Barefoot was then a fugitive wanted in New Mexico on criminal charges. Prosecutors said he shot Levin in the head at close range to avoid arrest.

hoped the project can be advertised for bids by the first of September.

He said that 18 of 33 parcels needed in West Meadowbrook for the new units have been purchased, including 13 from the city and five from private owners. Laney said that site acquisition is going well overall and all purchases should be completed by early August.

The authority's Section 8 programs continue to be stable, he said, with 98 out of 100 units authorized under the existing housing segment leased and 108 out of 109 allowed under the moderate rehabilitation program rented. All 60 units in the University Towers mid-rise for the elderly are rented, Laney said.

The director noted that site work is continuing for the new 40-unit Greentree Village townhouse development off East 10th Street. The housing complex will be constructed and managed by the Westminster Co. of Greensboro.

All 702 conventional housing units owned by the authority were occupied at the end of June, according to Sallye Streeter, director of resident affairs. She said average rents included: N.C. 22-1 (Meadowbrook), $93.42; N.C. 22-2 (Kearney Park), $102.65; N.C. 22-3 (Moyewood), $100.41; N.C. 22-4 (Moyewood), $106.38; N.C. 22-5 (Hopkins Park), $87.26; and N.C. 22-6 (Newtown), $99.77. The overall average was $98.28.

Trial Date Set In Derailment

LIVINGSTON, La. (AP) —

Trial is set for Oct. 3 for a former railroad engineer charged with mishandling hazardous materials after the derailment of a train in a fiery explosion last fall.

E. Peyton Robertson pleaded innocent Tuesday. His lawyer said he would seek to have the trial moved from Livingston, which was evacuated for two weeks after the accident.

"We're going to fight this case," said Robertson, who faces a possible 10-year prison term and $10,000 fine if convicted.

FOCUS

Smoking and Health

This weekend, experts are scheduled to gather in Winnipeg, Canada for the World Conference on Smoking and Health. Smokers run a greater risk of cancer, heart attack, and respiratory ailments than non-smokers, though no one knows precisely how harmful the effects of smoking might be. The American Cancer Society estimates that smoking-related disorders cause some 325,000 deaths in the U.S. every year. And yet cigarette sales are going up. Americans who do smoke smoke heavily — an estimated 11,500 cigarettes per person per year. But today more people than ever are taking their health seriously. In the past three years, more than 30 million Americans have kicked the habit.

DO YOU KNOW—How many Americans are expected to die of cancer this year?

TUESDAY'S ANSWER—Tommy Lasorda managed the winning National League All-Star team in 1982.

One Dropout In 4th Grade Became Prof

HOUSTON (AP) — Guadalupe Quintanilla never doubted grade school teachers who labeled her a "slow learner" because she could not speak English. But she refused to believe her three children were.

"I had accepted the fact that I was, but I could never believe that of my children. To me, they were the brightest children in the world," Mrs. Quintanilla said.

Desperate to help them, Mrs. Quintanilla, a fourth grade dropout, decided to learn English and got a college to admit her. She made the Dean's List every semester, earned four degrees and now is a Spanish professor and assistant provost at the University of Houston.

Two weeks ago President Reagan appointed Mrs. Quintanilla, a Democrat, to the National Institute of Justice Advisory Board, which informs the White House on new law enforcement procedures and techniques. The nomination was approved last week by the Senate.

But her biggest accomplishments are her children, Mrs. Quintanilla said. One son is a lawyer, the other a doctor and her daughter is halfway through law school.

One month after her birth 45 years ago in the village of Ojinaga, Mexico, her parents crossed the Rio Grande to live with her grandfather near Brownsville.

Because she grew up in a Spanish-speaking family, she never learned English and schoolwork was difficult. Test scores indicated she had an I.Q. of 64.

When teachers started labeling her children as slow learners, Mrs. Quintanilla became angry.

"I started looking around and discovered that most of the children from Spanish-speaking families were considered slow learners. I just couldn't accept that so I asked the principal. He said it was because they never spoke English at home and were confused in the classroom," she said.

So at age 30, Mrs. Quintanilla decided to learn English.

She looked up words in a dictionary. She tried to enroll in a Brownsville high school. She asked administrators at a junior college to let her sit in a classroom and listen. She asked the hospital where she had worked as a volunteer to admit her to the nurses training program, and she applied as a telephone company trainee.

"I just wanted a place to practice," she said.

She finally staked out the parking place of Henry L. Warren, registrar at Texas Southmost College. She sat on his car and waited to explain her problem to him in Spanish.

Warren finally agreed to admit her on an individual approval program, allowing her to take typing, basic English, math and speech.

"I made all As, except in math. That was my only C," she said.

She said she wouldn't have made it without her classmates' help.

"They helped me by tutoring me in algebra. I thought at first that it was some kind of spaghetti. They showed me how to use a microscope and even where to get the Cokes — things so different from the environment I had known."

Mrs. Quintanilla admitted she thought of quitting more than once.

"I felt guilty about neglecting my family, even though they were very supportive," she said. "And every time I walked out of algebra class I would be sick with fear that I would not succeed and tell myself, 'I'm never going back.' But when tomorrow came, I always went back."

In three years, she earned bachelor's degrees in biology and psychology. When the family moved to Houston in the early 1970s, she entered the University of Houston and earned a master's degree in literature and a doctorate in education.

In addition to her work at the university, she is a consultant to the Houston Police Academy teaching Mexican culture and Spanish. She also wrote a booklet, "Conversational Spanish for Police Officers," which has been used by federal authorities at Cuban refugee camps.

Fireworks Killed One, Hurt Others

By The Associated Press

Flying debris from an illegal firecracker explosion claimed the life of a New York City man, and other fireworks accidents injured at least 18 people around the nation over the Fourth of July weekend, authorities say.

Joseph Giglio, 23, was "cut practically in half" after he put powerful M-80 firecrackers in a 55-gallon metal drum and set them off, said police Sgt. Peter Ruane. Ruane said Giglio, of the New York City borough of Staten Island, was 60 feet away when the drum blew up Monday.

Also on Staten Island, six young people were burned when a firecracker thrown out the window of their car blew back in and exploded inside the car.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission had warned before the holiday that the number of people injured by fireworks annually has risen over the past decade, with an estimated 8,544 injuries in 1982.

Eight people, including five children, were injured in Hollywood, Fla., when a rocket fell and exploded among spectators sitting in a "safety zone" 75 yards from a public display area Monday evening.

A 5-year-old boy was in stable condition Tuesday, suffering from minor burns. Other victims were released after being treated at Hollywood Memorial Hospital for burns, cuts, temporary hearing loss and bruises, said hospital spokeswoman Zandra Thompkins.

Hollywood Deputy City Manager John Kooser said the city paid $8,900 for the show, put on by Pitale Display Co. of New Castle, Pa.

A man helping set off a public display at Herndon (Va.) High School was struck in the face by an 18mm rocket. The 54-year-old man suffered a skull fracture and third-degree facial burns, including severe eye injuries. He was listed in serious condition Tuesday at Fairfax Hospital.

A 14-year-old Garden Grove, Calif., boy lost the tip of a finger Monday night after he lit a "Piccolo Pete," a kind of whistling flare, in an 18-inch pipe that was capped at one end, police Sgt. Ron Fleischer said. The boy also had cuts on a hand and was hit in the stomach and chest by shrapnel, and underwent surgery at University of California-Irvine Medical Center.

A pyrotechnician working on a fireworks display at Milltown, N.J., was struck in the side Monday by shrapnel from a shell that exploded on the ground. He was hospitalized in fair condition.

A 39-year-old man lost an eye and both arms below the elbows when a cannon fired prematurely during a Fourth of July Civil War reenactment at Provo, Utah. He was in serious condition Tuesday at Utah Valley Hospital. A second man suffered a hand injury.

The cause of the premature firing during re-loading has not been determined, said Police Chief Swen Nielsen.

Say Women Are Good Managers

LONDON (AP) — Women make better managers than men even though they are under more pressure, two researchers reported today.

Organizations which refuse to break their male-dominated hierarchy and take on more women bosses are "missing out on good management material," they said.

The report was written after two years' research for the British government's Manpower Services Commission, by Gary Cooper and Marilyn Davidson of Manchester University's Institute of Science and Technology.

The report said that women do break into middle and senior management often have to be better than men because they are under heavier pressure. Many women executives have trouble sleeping and smoke more than men in similar jobs, but although they suffer "prejudice and discrimination," they cope better than men, the report found.

Steel Imports Decision Is Criticized On All Sides

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's decision to impose a combination of tariffs and import quotas on foreign-produced specialty steel drew fire from virtually all quarters within hours of its announcement.

"I don't think anybody's going to be completely satisfied with the mix," U.S. Trade Representative Bill Brock predicted Tuesday before the deluge.

Steel executives and the United Steelworkers union called most of the four-year program "wholly inadequate" to bolster their ailing industry, which has been undercut by cheap imports.

Cries of "most unfortunate" and "too little, too late" arose from Congress, while the European Economic Community accused Reagan of violating the anti-protectionist principles signed at the Williamsburg economic summit in May.

Under the program, effective in 15 days, 8 percent to 10 percent tariffs will be placed on stainless steel, strip and plate imports. The tariff on all three products will drop to 4 percent in four years.

The program sets global tonnage quotas for bar, rod and alloy tool steel. Bar steel quotas will start at 27,000 tons and go to 29,500 in the fourth year, with more stringent limits on the other two products.

Brock, who has been directed to pursue orderly marketing agreements with any receptive nations, offered the proposal accepted by the president. It won out over a three-year across-the-board quota program recommended by the U.S. International Trade Commission and a similar five-year plan pushed by specialty steel management and the steel union.

Industry spokesman Adolph Lena and Steelworkers president Lloyd McBride denounced the tariff levels on stainless steel, strip, and plate and said investment programs would have to be re-examined in light of "minimal import relief."

"Tariffs can be easily offset by additional foreign subsidies," the two men said in a statement, adding the tariffs cover products that account for 75 percent of domestic output.

The EEC said Reagan's decision "does not reflect the commitment to 'halt protectionism, and as recovery proceeds, to reverse it by dismantling trade barriers' as declared in the communiqué of the Williamsburg summit conference."

But Reagan and Brock maintained the new program is consistent with the Williamsburg agreements and pointed a finger at the nation's trading partners.

"There is virtually no free trade in world steel," Brock told reporters in Washington. "Most of the countries engage in some distortive practices, unfair practices. There's an enormous amount of government intervention."

In a letter to Congress, Reagan cited "the pervasive nature of unfair trading practices in specialty steel" and said imports have led to domestic production losses, idle plants and heavy unemployment.

He said his program will "give the industry sufficient time to complete investment projects, improve productivity and restore profitability."

But Rep. Doug Walgren, D-Pa., called the administration move "too little, too late to revive the health of this critical American industry" and said it would mean continued unemployment for thousands of steelworkers.

Sen. John Heinz, chairman of the Senate Steel Caucus, labeled the action "a compromise which may resolve disagreements between cabinet agencies but fails to fully address the injury to the industry involved."

The Pennsylvania Republican said he has introduced legislation requiring presidents to either adopt ITC recommendations intact or submit their alternatives to Congress for approval.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., called Reagan's action "virtually meaningless" for three-quarters of the specialty steel industry. He said he would ask the president to reconsider and meet personally with a specialty steel delegation.

Almost 4,000 Scouts Prepare For Jamboree's Opening Rites

By JOHN MARLOW
Associated Press Writer
KANANASKIS COUNTRY, Alberta (AP) — Almost 4,000 U.S. Boy Scouts.

their legs cramped from days-long bus rides, scattered like buckshot as they arrived in the Canadian Rockies for the 15th World Scout Jamboree to prepare for tonight's opening ceremonies.

The Americans came from all 50 states, making up nearly one-third of the international gathering of teen-age boys and girls.

English and French are the official languages of the jamboree, but for the 3,832 boys here from the United States, scouting is the common tongue as they swap badges, pins, patches and shirts with scouts from 105 other countries.

Few of them expect language to be a barrier. The vast majority of U.S. scouts said the first thing they wanted to do was visit boys and girls from other nations, communicating as best they can.

"The things that scouts do really are universal," said James Van Schaick, 15, from Thief River Falls, Minn., who received his Eagle Scout award at the jamboree Monday from Lord Baden-Powell, grandson of the founder of the scouting movement.

Van Schaick said a highlight of the jamboree will be "seeing all the different people from all the different countries, trading badges."

"Getting around and learning some of the different customs and traditions" of scouts from other countries was also high on the list of priorities for Jon E. Jones of Rantoul, Ill.

Gary Rhame, 16, of Nacogdoches, Texas, and Leon Brannan of Haughton, La., said they had a hard time deciding what to do first.

"I'm looking forward to it all," said Rhame, an Eagle Scout attending the jamboree on a scholarship. "I'm looking forward to getting to hike in the Rockies, to visit the (Calgary) Stampede. I'm interested in getting to Banff. But seeing the boys from other countries — that's No. 1."

Brannan, who was on the working staff for the U.S. National Jamboree at Fort A.P. Hill in Virginia two years ago, said he would get a chance to enjoy this outing and looked forward to participating in "everything that I can possibly get into."

Kurt Bloom, a Life Scout from Bellevue, Wash., said several boys in his group went hiking Tuesday on the glaciers in nearby Banff National Park, but that he wanted to stay around the scout village — now the eighth-largest community in Alberta — so he could trade patches with other scouts.

River rafting and hiking were priorities for Richard Dixon of Mansfield, La. For Steve Derrick, also of Mansfield, it was "hikes and the girls."

Rusty Wittman of Center, Tex., also attended the national jamboree in Virginia two years ago, but said he was looking forward to the worldwide outing even more.

"They didn't have any mountains (in Virginia)," Wittman said. "And they didn't have any girls at all."

Greg Saal of Clinton, Ohio, said one of the best things was just getting off the bus. The group of Ohio scouts had flown to Seattle, arriving there June 29, and then boarded a chartered bus for the trip into Canada. They arrived in Kananaskis Country, a provincial park, Monday afternoon.

For scouts from Louisiana and Texas, it was a 1,700-mile bus ride from Denver after a flight from Dallas. On the way, there were stops at the U.S. Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs, Jackson Hole, Wyo., and Yellowstone National Park.

In contrast, Dan Olsen, with Troop 601 of Bremerton, Wash., about 750 miles away, said his group flew from Seattle to Calgary and took the bus from there — a ride of about 60 miles.

BEAR WATCHER — Murray Busch, an Alberta Fish and Wildlife Officer, is shown with radio in hand, standing on one of the two bear traps being used at the Boy Scout World Jamboree on Tuesday. The naturalists have increased their vigilance because of the arrival of thousands of scouts from around the world. (AP Laserphoto)

Sand Bags, Not Sand, Wanted

BETHEL, Alaska (AP) — When a shipment of 30,000 pounds of sand arrived in this riverside town, people thought of an old joke: the one about selling iceboxes to the Eskimos.

"All we have here is sand," says City Manager Lyman Hoffman. "And marsh."

The city even has its own 200-acre sand pit. So Hoffman was a little surprised when 500 bags of sand arrived at the airport, carrying a freight bill of $9,991.

But Anchorage Sand & Gravel insisted the Bethel Public Works Department had ordered 500 sand bags.

Sand bags — not bags of sand, says Lyman. "You know, the vinyl bags you put the sand in."

City workers had planned to fill the bags with local sand and put them on the rapidly eroding banks of the Kuskokwim River.

Hoffman says the order was clear, and he refused to accept the shipment. Anchorage Sand & Gravel thinks it provided what the city ordered and has begun legal action to collect on the bill.

Meanwhile, the riverbank continues to wash away.

Newborn In Flag Colors

CLEVELAND (AP) — Newborn John James Lynn Hart will be dressed in red, white and blue when he leaves the hospital for a patriotically decorated nursery. It's only fitting for a descendant of a Declaration of Independence signer born on July Fourth.

The first child of Peggy and Timothy Hart was born Monday, 207 years after his ancestor, John Hart, put his signature on the declaration in Philadelphia. John Hart was a prominent farmer and member of the New Jersey legislature.

"We had hoped for it," Mrs. Hart said of her son's fortunate birth date. "We were happy that it worked out this way."

Jennie Brock was honored on her 101st birthday last week with a dinner at Saints Rest Holy Church in Winterville.

Mrs. Brock is a member of the church. Scripture was read by Edward Williams. Solos were sung by Ollie Vera Moldey and Tyrone Greene. Words of tribute were spoken by Pauline Boyd, Tempie Suggs, Chestina Murphy and Russell Boyd. The prayer and closing remarks were made by the Rev. W.C. Elliott. Two Accidents Investigated

An estimated $2,050 damage resulted from two traffic collisions investigated Tuesday by Greenville police.

Officers said a car driven by Minnie Jenkins Stancill of 613 Oak St. and a truck driven by Clifton Glenn Huggins of Route 3, Kinston, collided about 12:14 p.m. at the intersection of 10th Street and Wright Road, causing $1,000 damage to the car and $300 damage to the truck.

Ms. Stancill, police said, was charged with failing to see her intended movement could be made in safety following investigation of the mishap.

A car driven by Debra Elks Blank of Birchwood Sands Trailer Park, and a truck operated by Wayne Mark Nelson of Route 4, Greenville, collided about 5:37 p.m. on Greenville Boulevard, 300 feet north of the Eastbrook Drive intersection, causing $450 damage to the Bland car and $300 damage to the truck.

Canoe Winners Announced

Winners in the annual fourth of July canoe race sponsored by the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department have been announced.

The first place team, consisting of Kenny Barnes and Paul McMillan, arrived at the Town Common at 12:15 p.m. Second place went to Larry Bolen and Robert Barnes and third place to Ronald Vincent and Tommy Jordan.

Twelve two-man teams took part in the race, which began at the Falkland Wildlife Boat Landing and ended at the Town Common.

Two Injured In Wreck

Two persons were reported injured and an estimated $3,500 damage caused Monday when cars driven by Walter Scott of Route 1, Oak City, and Cheryl Sutton Mills of Route 4, Greenville, collided about 2:30 p.m. at the intersection of Greene Street and Airport Road.

Police, who charged Scott with failing to see his intended movement could be made in safety, estimated damage at $1,500 to the Scott car and $2,000 to the Mills vehicle.

Officers said Ms. Mills and a passenger in her car were injured.

Pippins Pleads Innocent

Carolyn Denise Pippins of Route 4, Greenville, who is charged with a New Jersey man in the February murder and robbery of a Grafton minister and a Goldsboro man, entered a plea of innocence during her arraignment Tuesday.

A trial date for Miss Pippins' case was set for July 25 in Superior Court in Greenville.

Miss Pippins and Dwight Parker of Newark, N.J., were each indicted in April by the Pitt County Grand Jury on two counts of murder in the deaths of the Rev. Leslie L. Thorbs and Anthony Ray Herring. The grand jury also indicted Miss Pippins on one count of robbery with a dangerous weapon and returned indictments against Parker on two robbery counts.

The bodies of Thorbs and Herring were recovered from the Tar River near the bridge on State Road 1400. Authorities said both men died of gunshot wounds to the head and cement blocks had been secured to the victims' legs.

Jones To Speak In Edenton

Rep. Walter B. Jones, D-N.C., of Farmville will be the guest speaker at the Chowan County Democratic Party's Summerfest on July 16 at the American Legion Building in Edenton.

Jones will speak following the 7 p.m. dinner. The Don Madre Band will provide entertainment.

Tickets are $7.50 per person and may be purchased by contacting Lueta Sellers, Route 2, Bella Vista Drive, Edenton, N.C., 27832, telephone 482-4134.

Solicitation Request Approved

Police Chief Glenn Cannon has announced approval of a request by the United Revival Prayer Center to conduct a door-to-door solicitation during July, August and September. The drive is designed to raise money for a building fund.

Pitt Entry Wins Contest

Pitt County's "Universal Girl" talent winner, Anita Lang, won the title "North Carolina Universal Girl Talent Winner" Saturday night in competition in Wilmington.

Miss Lang was the "best dramatics" winner in a pre-pageant command performance and she won the "best modeling for street dress" award in the pro-am modeling competition. She also was chosen by the other 39 contestants as "Miss Congeniality" and was presented the "best evening gown award."

Being the state talent winner entitles her to compete in the World Our Little Miss Pageant in August, but she says she has decided not to do so. She will continue her art education at East Carolina University this fall.

Patrol Sees Safe Holiday

Highway Patrol Troop A Commander Carl Gilchrist said today that the Fourth of July holiday was one of the safest holidays he can recall, both in the 22 counties of the troop and the State as well.

Gilchrist said there were no traffic fatalities in the troop's area.

Although the figures for July 4 itself were not available today, Gilchrist said 234 persons were arrested on driving under the influence charges in the troop for the week that ended at midnight Sunday, including 20 DUI arrests in the Pitt-Martin County district and 65 in the district headquartered in Kinston.

There were 166 traffic accidents for the week that ended Sunday night, including 31 mishaps in the Pitt-Martin County district, the troop commander said.

Photography Workshop To Open

The Greenville Community Schools photography workshop will begin Monday and continue through July 22.

Classes will be conducted daily from 2-4 p.m. in the graphic department at Rose High School. Students in grades eight, nine and 10 who preregistered should report to the graphic department and bring their own camera and film.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed higher today, rebounding from Tuesday's broad decline.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 3.81 to 1,212.34 in the first half hour. Gainers held a 4-3 lead over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said worries persisted about the outlook for Federal Reserve credit policy and interest rates. Allen Sinai, economist at the forecasting firm of Data Resources Inc., rated chances better than even that the Fed would soon raise its discount rate from 8½ to 9 percent.

But brokers also said traders were encouraged by the recent progress of the recovery from the recession.

The Conference Board reported that its indexes of consumer confidence and buying plans rose strongly last month, suggesting that the recovery was beginning to move at a "go-go" pace.

Among today's early volume leaders, Fluor rose ¼ to 21½; General Electric ½ to 54½; Cluett Peabody ¼ to 28, and American Telephone & Telegraph ¼ to 63½.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average tumbled 16.73 to a three-week low of 1,208.53.

Declines outpaced advances by almost 4 to 1 on the NYSE.

Big Bond volume totaled 67.32 million shares, against 65.11 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index lost 1.27 to 96.64. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 2.22 at 242.48.

GYPSY KING BURIED

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Jan Lakatosz, the 82-year-old king of Polish Gypsies, has been buried in Wracklaw, in southwest Poland, the news agency PAP reports.

Farmville Board Seeks Amending Of Contract

FARMVILLE — Farmville commissioners voted Tuesday night to amend a contract with McDavid Associates to provide administration of the Farmville Community Development Grant.

The McDavid firm will assume the responsibilities formerly held by a relocation specialist in community development. The town will pay the firm $21,000 for this work, expected to run at least two years.

Approval was given for the purchase of a "Welcome to Farmville" sign to be placed on Farmville United Methodist Church property at a western entrance to the town. This sign will be like the sign now located at the North Main Street entrance to town.

A grant of $1,000 was made to the Farmville Chamber of Commerce to promote the Tobacco Days Jubilee planned later this summer.

The administrative budget of the Walter B. Jones Town Common Beautification Committee was approved. The town administrator was authorized to provide the supplies requested in that budget.

The mayor was authorized to certify the roster of the town's volunteer fire department.

A report was received from the town tax collector on those persons not owning real property whose 1982 personal property taxes are not paid. The tax collector was authorized to have listing of property bought during a tax lien sale held June 13 stamped "sold to the town of Farmville."

The purchase of a condensing unit for the courtroom air conditioner was authorized. The cost is expected to be about $3,000.

The mayor was authorized to sign the Municipal Insurance Trust of the North Carolina Group Life and Health Insurance Program. This is a self-funded benefit plan for municipal employees sponsored by the N.C. League of Municipalities.

Kinston Firm Has Raised Its Offer

First Financial Savings and Loan of Kinston increased its offer Tuesday to purchase the common stock of First Colony Savings and Loan Association to $15 a share, matching an offer made last week by North State Savings and Loan of Greenville.

First Financial offered $13 a share directly to First Colony shareholders in an unsolicited move in late June. But First Colony oficials rejected the bid and advised shareholders to turn down the offer while the board sought a better offer.

As a result, First Colony officials invited North State to negotiate a transaction which they could recommend to their shareholders.

North State officials said this morning that they could not comment on whether or not its $15 a share offer would be increased.

First Financial spokesman Tom Heath said his firm's offer to purchase First Colony shares has been extended to Aug. 2.

First Colony, with assets of $110 million, is headquartered in Southern Pines and has 10 offices in nine cities.

First Financial, with assets of $140 million, has savings and loan offices in La Grange, Goldsboro, Morehead City and two offices in Kinston, and has loan offices in Havelock and Jacksonville.

North State presently has five savings offices in North Carolina, including sites in Ahoskie, Windsor, Wilson and two in Greenville, as well as two loan production offices in Virginia. Present assets of North State total $130 million.

The firm also has two other merger agreements — one with New Bern Savings and Loan and one with Martin County Savings and Loan — that if completed by year-end would increase assets to $220 million and add additional offices in New Bern, Bayboro and Williamston.

Blood Drive

The second annual "Liberty Blood Drive" held Friday at the Moose Lodge netted 225 pints of blood, according to Red Cross spokeswoman Ruth Taylor.

She said the drive, which featured donations by appointment, also saw 21 people deferred for various health reasons.

A bloodmobile visit Tuesday at East Carolina University resulted in a collection total of 106 pints of blood and seven deferrals, Mrs. Taylor said. The campus drive was sponsored by Alpha Epsilon Delta Pre-Med Society and the Biology Club, with Terry Grant serving as chairman.

The next drive will be Aug. 4 at the Greenville Utilities building.

Firebombing

Claims Third

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A 4-year-old girl whose mother was killed in a supermarket firebombing has died of her burns, bringing the death toll from the attack to three. Fifteen people were injured.

The child, Jennifer Vance, died shortly before noon Tuesday at Tampa General Hospital, said hospital spokeswoman Debbie Lozier. Her mother, Martha A. Vance, 23, and Leigh A. Carter, 20, were killed in Saturday's explosion and fire. Six people remained hospitalized Tuesday, four in critical condition and two stable.

Meanwhile, prosecutors said a grand jury will meet July 13 to decide whether to return murder and arson charges against John William Ferry Jr., accused of setting the fire with gasoline.

Kids Kept Home

During Curfew

DETROIT (AP) — Parents have "kept their kids home" and youths themselves have responded well to a new curfew enforcement in Detroit, Police Chief William Hart said in announcing 36 arrests.

Citywide enforcement of the 1975 law requiring those younger than 18 off the streets by 10 p.m. on weeknights and 11 p.m. on weekends began last Friday as part of Mayor Coleman Young's war on street crime. Violators face a $500 fine, to be paid by parents.

Meanwhile, lawyers for the Michigan chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union said Tuesday they will challenge the constitutionality of the ordinance.

Indicted In 2 Slayings

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — A Forsyth County grand jury indicted a 24-year-old Lexington man Tuesday on two counts of first-degree murder in the shotgun slayings of two people at a Winston-Salem Restaurant.

John S. Gardner, 24, was accused of killing Kim Miller, 24, of Yadkinville, and Richard A. Adams, 21, of Winston-Salem, at a Steak and Ale Restaurant on Dec. 23.

Both Miller and Adams were restaurant employees. Their bodies were found in a small office at the back of the restaurant on the morning of Dec. 24 by another employee. Adams was originally from Grifton.

Two weeks ago, Gardner pleaded guilty in Forsyth County Superior Court to armed robbery of a Winston-Salem couple and was sentenced to 14 years in prison.

No date has been set for Gardner's murder trial, and District Attorney Donald K. Tisdale said Tuesday that the need to appoint a new defense attorney will delay the case.

"It looks to me, from this distance, like a capital case," he said.

Investigators speculate that robbery was the motive in the two restaurant murders.

Recover Bodies

In Plane Crash

HOMESTEAD, Fla. (AP) — The Air Force has recovered the bodies of two airmen killed in the sea crash of an F-4D Phantom jet during training maneuvers.

Staff Sgt. Jim Armstrong, a spokesman for Homestead Air Force Base, said the victims, whose names were not released, died Tuesday after the jet crashed in the Straits of Florida.

Drug-Use Up, Fewer Smoking

LONDON (AP) — There are more heroin addicts but fewer cigarette smokers in Britain these days, according to two new government reports.

The Home Office, in a report issued today, said there were about 2,800 new registered addicts of heroin, cocaine and other hard drugs in 1982, compared with the 1981 increase of 2,250. Registered addicts are provided with prescribed drugs and asked to attend treatment clinics.

The Home Office gave no overall figures, but the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs has estimated there are about 9,000 registered addicts and a total of 40,000 serious drug abusers.

On Tuesday, a government report said cigarette smoking in Britain has fallen sharply in the past two years.

The report, issued by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, showed the number of cigarette smokers dropped from 42 percent in 1980 to 38 percent last year.

This represents a drop of more than 1 million in this nation of 56 million persons.

Tradition The Key In 50th All-Star Game

CHICAGO (AP) — Exactly 50 years to the day after the first All-Star Game was played in Comiskey Park, the best players in the National and American Leagues were set to go at each other again in the same historic stadium tonight.

And, to the consternation of some, the same rules they were using in 1933 — nine players to a side and no designated hitter for the pitcher — applied in 1983.

The National League is the only amateur or professional league in this country that still refuses to use the DH rule. What's more, although it has agreed to use the AL rule in alternating World Series, it steadfastly sticks to a no-DH stance for the All-Star Game.

That means starting pitchers Mario Soto of the NL and Dave Stieb of the AL would be required to take their own swings if their turn to bat came up.

But with 29-man rosters providing plenty of pinch hitting talent, pitchers rarely get to bat in All-Star contests. Stieb was an exception, coming to the plate against Bruce Sutter in the 1981 game. Predictably, he struck out.

"I'm not looking forward to it," said the Toronto Blue Jays right-hander who was the first 10-game winner in the majors this year. "I took some batting practice Monday and made some considerable contact. Of course the pitcher was my manager, Bobby Cox, not Mario Soto."

Stieb and Cleveland pitcher Rick Sutcliffe brought batting helmets to the game — just in case.

As far as NL Manager Whitey Herzog was concerned, he'd be perfectly happy to play the game with a DH. And he figured with retiring veterans such as Johnny Bench and Carl Yastrzemski added to the teams in their final seasons as 29th players, the opportunity for the DH was certainly there.

"If there's one time the DH should be used, it's the All-Star Game," he said. "We should use AL rules in AL cities and NL rules in NL cities."

"I've managed both ways so I don't care. It's no big deal. I do get tired, though, of having pitchers come up who can't hit or even bunt. I've got one pitcher, he's struck out 96 times without a walk. He gets a walk, he'll get into the Hall of Fame."

"With guys like Bench and Yaz on the team, why not let them be the DH and bat maybe three times?"

One swing would be sufficient for Bench.

"I am the 29th man on the roster and I want to be the 29th used," he said. "I'm honored and flattered to be here."

The 1983 All-Stars worked out Tuesday after an three-inning Oldtimers Game won by the NL, 6-5. Billy Williams hit a two-run homer and Don Kessinger doubled home the winning run for the Nationals.

Some 41 Hall of Famers, the largest gathering ever of baseball's most honored men, were here for the event and for the current All-Stars, who shared locker space with the oldtimers, it was like having their bubble gum cards come to life.

Rookie Ron Kittle, the lone representative of the host Chicago White Sox, got the loudest reception from the crowd of 27,653, who watched the oldtimers game and then the workouts. He had stars of his own in his eyes.

"I'm just going around and getting them to sign my bat, if they will," he said.

"This is a great event, a great day," said Gary Carter, the NL's starting catcher and a self-confessed fan and collector of baseball cards and other memorabilia.

"To be on the same field where Babe Ruth played is a great honor. Coming in here and dressing in the same locker room with some of the greatest former players is a special thrill for me. There were people in here that I idolized as a kid. It makes an already special occasion all the more special."

All-Star Games haven't been so special for AL President Lee MacPhail, though. His league has lost 11 in a row and 19 of the last 20 to fall behind 34-18-1 in a series it once led 12-4. This is his last year in office and he hopes he can go out a winner.

"Of course it bothers me," he said. "I'm embarrassed by not winning. We like to win and we come to win. This is my last chance to win. I want very badly to see the American League win."

The last AL victory, a 6-4 decision at Detroit, came in 1971 — two years before the American League adopted the DH rule.

Williams, Kessinger Star In Baseball Old-Timers Game

CHICAGO (AP) — A few boys of summer showed they had some spring left in their bats Tuesday as Billy Williams' two-run homer and Don Kessinger's game-winning double helped the National League Old-Timers to emulate their younger counterparts and beat the American League 6-5.

The tone for the three-inning contest was set when AL starter Lefty Gomez threw his first pitch from the rubber, then stepped up to the grass when he found his fastball had lost its zip.

More than a few baserunners learned the same thing about their legs, and some of the putouts involved more numbers than the average tax return.

The Nationals scored one run in the first after Willie Mays reached on a fielder's choice. Ron Santo walked behind him and Joe Torre punched a roller through shortstop to score Mays.

But the Americans answered with three in their half of the frame. Mickey Vernon reached on a fielder's choice and Minnie Minoz avoided getting hit long enough to be walked.

Al Kaline followed with a double to left, clearing the bases, and then showed some daring by coming around all the way from second after Mays made his dutiful basket catch on Tony Oliva's sacrifice fly.

But the National League, which has won 11 straight regular all star-contests, wasn't finished. Monte Irvin singled with one out in the second and Red Schoendienst walked behind him. Pinch-hitter extraordinaire Smokey Burgess doubled those two home and Billy Williams sailed a Hoyt Wilhelm knuckler into the upper deck in right for a 5-3 National lead.

The Americans drew even at 5-5 in the second. Brooks Robinson led off with a double and Bill Freehan followed with a single. One out later, Jim Fregosi's grounder snaked through second baseman Bill Mazerowski's legs to score Robinson. Lou Brock then failed to handle Moose Skowron's soft liner and Fregosi scored the tying run.

The Nationals crawled ahead 6-5 in their final turn at the plate on consecutive two-out doubles by Bobby Thomson and Kessinger.

Williams was named the game's most valuable player. Robin Roberts was the winning pitcher and Don Larsen was the loser.

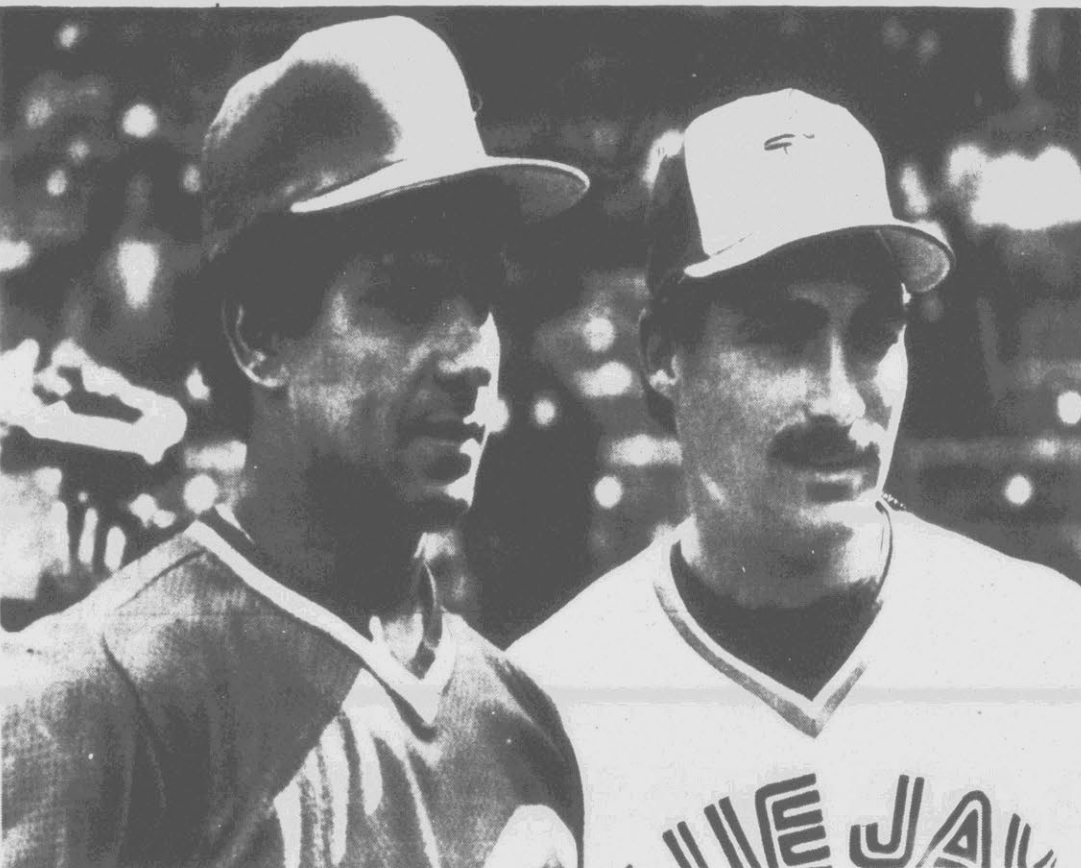

North State Pairing Change

A mistake in the standings of the North State League resulted in incorrect pairings for the first round of the league's tournament, which begins Thursday at Guy Smith Stadium.

The Jaycees and Kiwanis both finished with 6-12 records, but the Jaycees, with two wins in their three meetings, finished fifth instead of sixth in the league, and will meet the Optimists at 2 p.m. Thursday. The Kiwanis will take on Union Carbide at 4 p.m.

The original pairings, published yesterday, had the two teams reversed in their first games.

Herzog Confident NL's Youthful Pitchers Capable Of 12 Straight

CHICAGO (AP) — American League hitters hoping to end an embarrassing streak of 11 straight All-Star losses will face a talented, but relatively inexperienced National League pitching staff tonight.

NL Manager Whitey Herzog isn't worried. "I think the nine pitchers I picked are the best pitchers in the league," he said as his team took batting practice Tuesday. Besides, he added, "I don't know how you can get All-Star experience without getting picked for the team."

Actually, the NL roster lists 10 pitchers. Under pressure from National League President Chub Feeney, Herzog added Los Angeles Dodgers left-hander Fernando Valenzuela.

Feeney explained that he urged Herzog to make the addition after he took a poll of the other 11 NL managers and each named Valenzuela among the top eight pitchers in the league.

"I'll put Valenzuela in and if we lose, I'll blame it on Chub," Herzog joked. The Dodger ace is 8-5 with a 3.63 earned run average, highest on the NL All-Star staff.

With two previous All-Star appearances, Valenzuela is a veteran on the 1983 staff. Only Montreal's Steve Rogers, who was named for the fifth time, has more All-Star experience. But it is doubtful either will see action tonight since both pitched Monday.

Cincinnati's Mario Soto, whose 9-7 record earned him starting honors, is making his second All-Star appearance, as is Gary Lavelle of San Francisco.

Six of the remaining eight have never played in the All-Star Game. They are Houston's Bill Dawley, San Diego's Dave Dravecky, San Francisco's Atlee Hammaker, New York's Jesse Orosco, Atlanta's Pascual Perez and Chicago's Lee Smith.

Meanwhile, Dave Stieb of the American League's East Division-leading Toronto Blue Jays was named to start by Manager Harvey Kuenn. The right-hander, 10-7, is the veteran of the AL's eight-man staff. He is making his third All-Star appearance.

To follow, Kuenn can choose from Texas' Rick Honeycutt, Kansas City's Dan Quisenberry or Boston's Bob Stanley, all making their second appearance, or All-Star rookies Aurelio Lopez of Detroit, Cleveland's Rick Sutcliffe, Seattle's Matt Young or Baltimore's Tippy Martinez.

Kuenn denied that he was pressured by New York Manager Billy Martin to add left-hander Dave Righetti to the staff when Ron Guidry of the Yankees withdrew because of back spasms. Righetti, who fired a no-hitter Monday against Boston improving his record to 10-3, said he had been asked if he would be available for the All-Star Game and replied that he could pitch an inning because Wednesday would have been his day to warm up between starts.

1983 Season Full Of Surprises

By The Associated Press
The Toronto Blue Jays in first place? The Texas Rangers?

Could this be the year of the first all-Canadian World Series? Or perhaps the first all-southern one?

As baseball pauses for its annual All-Star game — the earliest since 1942 — both the Blue Jays and the Rangers are in first place in the American League. In the National, the leaders are the Montreal Expos and the Atlanta Braves, trying to show that last year was no fluke.

If those standings hold up, consider the frigid possibilities of a Montreal-Toronto World Series or a nice, warm Texas-Atlanta encounter.

Meanwhile, the first half of the season has seen Rod Carew chase 400 and Steve Carlton and Nolan Ryan chase each other.

Elsewhere, Carl Yastrzemski and Johnny Bench are going, while Mark Fidrych, George Bamberger and Rene Lachemann are already gone.

And, Dave Righetti of the New York Yankees wrapped up the first-half on July 4 with the first no-hitter in the major leagues since 1981 when he set down Boston 4-0.

The American League East started with Billy Martin returned for the third time as the Yankees manager and Joe Altobelli replacing Earl Weaver in the Baltimore Orioles dugout.

Yet Toronto has opened the most eyes. Led by pitcher Dave Stieb, 10-7, the Blue Jays' lineup of talented unknowns has carried them to a 43-33 record, one game ahead of the Orioles. Notoriously slow-starting, Baltimore has had to overcome disabling injuries to hurlers Mike Flanagan and Jim Palmer.

In New York, Martin barely weathered a scrape with a woman reporter in June that threatened to cost him his job. The Yankees, two games behind Toronto, were also hurt by a lack of right-handed starting pitching; Matt Keough, acquired from Oakland on June 15, became the first Yankee starting right-hander to win when he notched a victory June 19.

The Milwaukee Brewers, last year's champion "Harvey's Wallbangers," have lost Cy Young winner Pete Vuckovich and reliever Rollie Fingers for the entire season with injuries.

Boston has enjoyed Jim Rice's league-leading 22 homers and 58 runs batted in. But Red Sox fans are lamenting Yastrzemski's announcement that this season will be his last; Fenway Park is already sold out for Boston's last home game.

Only the Cleveland Indians, with first-year manager Mike

Ferraro, are below the .500 mark in the AL East.

For years, the Texas Rangers were a flop in the AL West. This year, relegated to the bottom in pre-season predictions, the Rangers and rookie Manager Doug Rader are 44-34, two games ahead of California. Leading the way has been Rick Honeycutt, who was 5-17 last season but is 11-4 this year with a 1.64 earned run average.

Carew's .402 average for the Angels leads the majors while George Brett is hitting .364 for Kansas City and Boston's second-year man Wade Boggs is at .356.

The Chicago White Sox spent millions on free-agent Floyd Bannister, but so far, Bannister has only a 3-9 record and 4.76 ERA, and there were whisperings that he was on the trading block. But rookie Ron Kittle has found Chicago to his liking, pounding 18 homers and knocking in 55 runs.

Oakland's Rickey Henderson, who stole a record 130 bases last year, has swiped 42 this season. Seattle, with a 30-51 record — worst in the majors — fired Manager Lachemann in June and released Perry, who has 310 career victories.

In the National League East, the world champion St. Louis Cardinals traded Keith Hernandez to New York and saw Lonnie Smith enter a drug treatment center. Pitcher Joaquin Andujar is just 4-11, yet the Cardinals are only two games behind the Expos.

Montreal's strong showing has been aided by Andre Dawson's 62 runs batted in and Steve Rogers' 12-3 mark.

Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt was almost dormant in May and June, Pete Rose is hitting just .244 and Carlton is 9-9, but the "Wheeze Kids" are second in the NL East.

Carlton and Houston's Ryan have been playing their own sort of game in the race for the all-time strikeout lead. Ryan passed Walter Johnson's legendary mark of 3,508 early this season before Carlton went ahead. The two have traded places several times and Carlton's 3,569 is currently eight ahead of the Astro flamethrower.

The Chicago Cubs, who have not won a pennant since 1945, have pulled within four games of the top while the Pittsburgh Pirates won nine games in a row, longest victory streak in the majors this season. The New York Mets, with Tom Seaver returning home and running up a 5-8 record, saw Bamberger, their manager, resign.

In the NL West, Dale Murphy's 19 home runs and 57 RBI have put defending champion Atlanta one game ahead of the Dodgers. They are the only two teams in the majors above .600.

Los Angeles watched reliever Steve Howe get off to a strong start and then re-enter a drug treatment center. The Dodgers fined him $54,000, equivalent to one month's salary.

Cincinnati's Bench announced recently that this would be his last year.

San Diego expected Steve Garvey would break Billy Williams' NL record of playing in 1,117 consecutive games — he did — and that he would help the Padres — he has. So has little-known pitcher Dave Dravecky, who is 12-5.

One pitcher who didn't fare well was Fidrych, the 1976 AL Rookie of the Year who was pitching for Pawtucket, the Triple-A farm team of the Boston Red Sox. After several years of comeback attempts and after a poor season this year, Fidrych called it quits last week.

Hiawatha Nahomia Nokomis Francisco Looks Forward To Year

By The Associated Press

Hiawatha Nahomia Nokomis Francisco and the more-simply-named Alvin Miller, two of the top football recruits in the nation, are looking forward to the upcoming football season at Notre Dame.

But they're not just excited about playing at the college level. They're already thinking national championship.

"The big thing going around this year is that Notre Dame can really come out No. 1," says Francisco. "When I made my official visit to Notre Dame, a lot of guys I knew from high school came up to me and said Notre Dame is going to the Sugar Bowl."

Francisco, a running back, played at Moeller High School in Cincinnati under Coach Gerry Faust, who became Notre Dame's head coach two years ago. But his first two campaigns produced un-Irish-like records of 5-6 and 6-4-1 and rumors have been flying that another season along those lines might mean a change.

"Everyone keeps mentioning it," says Francisco. "We keep reading in the press that Mr. Faust needs a winning season and a bowl game to keep his job. We have to do it to keep him and prove that he's capable of coaching a team all the way. I know things will change. I know Mr. Faust will bounce back and I want to be part of it."

Francisco and Miller, a wide receiver from St. Louis, were among 51 high school athletes — one from each state and Puerto Rico — honored in New York last week with "No. 1" awards from the Hertz Corporation for an outstanding athletic performance.

Francisco, who rushed for more than 1,500 yards as Moeller won its sixth Ohio state championship in seven years, broke open a tight game against Massillon High School with a 64-yard touchdown run in the second quarter and scored another touchdown while gaining 135 yards on 10 carries.

Miller, touted in some quarters as the No. 1 football prospect in the nation, won a record four first places in the 86th running of the Missouri large school state track meet. He scored 40 of his team's 46 points, four points more than the entire second-place team.

Francisco, who was named after his father, has learned to live with his unique name, although he admits that "when people would kid me I wanted to punch them out."

Faust solved that problem.

"He gave me the nickname 'H' as a sophomore," Francisco said. "I really started getting fed up with people pronouncing my name wrong and making all kinds of jokes and I was thinking about changing my name. He said, 'H, don't change your name. One day that name will work wonders for you.' After that, everything started picking up."

Miller's exalted status surprised him because Kirkwood High wasn't a pass-happy team — "I was always a wide receiver, and running backs and quarterbacks usually get the glory," he said — he missed three games with an injury and, besides, he was a basketball hot-shot in his early high school days.

"At first, I got so many letters from basketball coaches, but only five or six from football coaches," Miller said. "Finally, football started to flow, but it didn't matter because I wasn't going to play basketball in college."

"I was mentioned in a national magazine after my sophomore year as one of the top players in the area and I was really pursuing basketball quite a bit. But I didn't improve as much as I would have liked after my sophomore year and I spent that summer running wind sprints and catching footballs instead of shooting baskets. Lifting weights kind of threw off my jump shot a little bit."

"Just before my junior year, the St. Louis papers wrote how I was the premier football player in the area, a big-play guy. I guess they figured I did well the times I did get the ball. I also returned kicks and punted and I made good on the chances I did get."

Miller knew all about Notre Dame's football reputation, but what really sold him on the school was its academic tradition.

"When you graduate the numbers of football players they do, you must be doing something right," he said. "Once I made my visit, I was impressed even more. I didn't know what to expect and I found a group of regular guys going at it."

"People stereotype Notre Dame so much. I've been asked, 'Why are you going to England to play football? Why are you going to an all-boys college? Why are you going to a school where you have to wear a white shirt and blue pants?'"

"They graduate 98 percent of their football players. Academics and football are the reasons I'm going to Notre Dame."

Petty Dislikes New Race Rules

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Richard Petty said Tuesday that Monday's Firecracker 400 stock car race proves new NASCAR restrictions have set racing back 10 years.

"This is about as sorry a race as I've seen in a long time," Petty said. "This race shoots NASCAR's theories all to hell. This sets racing back 10 years."

Petty's dislike of the new rules was echoed by others in stock car racing.

"This is the worst thing I've seen happen in racing in years and years," said Junior Johnson of the new rules, which involve engine changes designed to slow down the cars. "I don't see any sense in the rules. They haven't slowed the cars down any. And the rules are unsafe, because of all the blown engines they're causing."

"I have no qualms about slowing the cars down, if that's what NASCAR wants to do," he said. "But NASCAR ought to announce right now that we're all going to have to run 300 cubic inch engines in 1984."

In University Games

U.S., Cubans Collide

EMONTON, Alberta (AP) — In a rematch of the 1979 Pan American Games final, the unbeaten U.S. and Cuban teams will play tonight in a men's basketball headliner at the World University Games.

The Americans are heavy favorites on the basis of a lopsided exhibition victory in Kansas City, Mo., before this competition began.

But the way things have been going for the Americans here in other sports, you never can tell.

The Soviet Union continued its domination in the swimming competition Tuesday night, posting four victories in five events.

The Soviets are far ahead in the swimming medals race with 23, 15 of them gold. The United States is second with 12 medals and Canada third with nine.

UCLA's Bruce Hayes had to settle for his third silver medal when he finished second to Soviet star Vladimir Salnikov, world and Olympic champion in the 400-meter freestyle. Salnikov was clocked in 3:48.32 with Hayes at 3:54.93.

It was the fifth medal of the Games for Hayes, the only American to win a gold medal in the first five days of competition.

Both the American and Cuban men's basketball clubs are 4-0 in these games.

Cuba lost by a big margin to the Americans in the 1979 Pan Am competition.

Before coaching the U.S. team to a 100-52 romp over Australia Tuesday, Missouri's Norm Stewart watched the Cubans erase a seven-point halftime deficit and beat Ivory Coast 107-82. The Americans crushed the Africans 104-65 on Monday.

"I think they're (the Cubans) playing a lot better than they were in Kansas City," Stewart said. "I don't really know any of their players by name but that No. 9 (Raula Dubois) has become a pretty dominant player."

"They're very capable so we'll have to be ready," Cuban Coach Pedro Chappé Garcia said the obvious — his players want to beat the Americans desperately.

"If there is anything that gets a Cuban team up, it is playing the States," he said.

Politics emerged at the games Tuesday when Soviet Union officials hinted they may delay a decision to enter the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles until the last moment.

Former President Jimmy Carter called for a U.S. boycott of the 1980 Olympics in Moscow because of the Soviets' intervention in Afghanistan.

"The final decision on our participating in the Los Angeles Olympics should be taken at a time when it is clear the local organizers have succeeded in assuring all of the regulations are followed," Soviet Union Olympic Committee member Nikolay Riashentzev told a news conference.

Riashentzev serves as the head of the Soviet delegation at these games.

In Tuesday's U.S. men's basketball victory, guards Johnny Dawkins and Eric Turner combined for 29 points. Dawkins had 15 and Turner 14.

Dawkins, from Duke, and Turner, from Michigan, led five Americans in double figures. Villanova's Ed Pinckney came off the bench to get 12 points while Louisiana Tech's Karl Malone and Michigan State's Kevin Willis each tallied 10.

Just Like Old Times

The three were part of the National league team, and, just like old times, Leo Durocher was the manager. (AP Laserphoto)

At Nearly 78, Durocher Still Has Famous 'Lip'

By WILL GRIMSLEY

AP Special Correspondent

CHICAGO (AP) — It was a familiar scene — Leo Durocher in a baseball uniform, sitting on a table in the manager's office and cussin' up a storm.

"This cap is two sizes too big for me," he growled, wrapping layers of adhesive tape around the inside band. "And Yash gave me a 34 waist on these pants."

"I haven't been a 34 since I quit playing nearly 40 years ago."

Durocher wore a Chicago Cubs uniform provided by the Cubs' lockerroom custodian Yash Kowano although he is better known publicly for his tenures with the Dodgers and Giants.

"Look, No. 2," he said, showing the back of the shirt. "I've always been No. 2, all my career."

Leo the Lip, as they once called him, made one of his rare baseball appearances at Comiskey Park Tuesday as skipper of the victorious National League in the Old Timers Game — the appetizer for tonight's 50th All-Star extravaganza.

"I got No. 2 when I broke in with the Yankees in 1925," he continued. "Never had anything else. Lasorda (Tom Lasorda, manager of the Dodgers) grabbed it, maybe thinking it was good luck."

"One day when I was just a kid on the Yankees I'm lying on a table like this — all dressed in my uniform — and the Babe (Ruth) comes up and dumps me in the middle of the floor."

Durocher, who will be 78 later this month, is still a crusty codger who spews his words at a 500-a-minute clip and snaps out his baseball wisdom in raspy chunks that don't tolerate dispute.

His hair, what is left of it, is pure white. Ignore that waistline malarkey. He still is thin and tough as nails.

In his managerial heyday he was a volatile, contentious guy who conducted a tight ship, feuded with umpires, fans and the establishment and never minded taking an occasional poke at an obstreperous fan who might get too flighty.

Did he ever consider the similarity of his and the style of the Yankees' Billy Martin?

"They're always saying somebody imitated me," he replied. "Eddie Stanky imitated me. Bill Rigney imitated me. As far as I know everybody manages like somebody."

"But Billy Martin, he will never change. Who's going to change him? I'm not saying this in a derogatory sense. That's just Billy."

Leo substantiated the report that he could have had the Baltimore Orioles' job in the 1960s, before he took over as manager of the Cubs.

Larry MacPhail — the old man not the son (Lee MacPhail, now president of the American League) approached me when I was coach for the Dodgers. I turned him down, Leo said.

"Later, Lee came out to talk to me. I said, 'No, I'm happy with the Dodgers. This is my home.'"

Durocher said his players once told him, "If you can manage a ballclub, anybody can manage."

"You know, they were right. It's not as hard as people make out. I never paid any attention to charts and computer stuff like they use today."

"I told my pitchers, 'Keep the ball high and tight or low and away.' If they do that, who can hit them?"

"It's just a matter of control. I wanted to cry when I read about Fergie Jenkins (Cubs). Once you could turn the lights out in a tunnel and he could throw the ball into a mitt. In a game the other day, he threw 12 straight balls."

Durocher said it's ridiculous to build up a manager as a genius.

"Casey Stengel could have stayed in bed and managed those Yankee teams in the 1950s," he said. "You also have got to have some luck. Take 1969 (with the Cubs). I tried everything. Nothing went right. We finish second."

"Go back to 1954 (champion year with the Giants). Everything I did was right. The guys stole, hit and run, squeezed, hit the long ball. But I was still the same man."

Durocher, regarded as having one of the finest minds in baseball, has made no effort to get back in the game. He lives the high life in Palm Springs, Calif., playing golf almost daily with the Hollywood and jet set.

"When I agreed to come to the Old Timers game here," he said, "I looked in the trunk for an old uniform. They were moth-eaten and full of holes."

"I had four decent uniforms. I gave one to Sinatra, one to Dean Martin, one to Jeff Chandler and the other to Jerry Lewis."

"What the heck — I had no use for them on the golf course."

Fight Will Not Be Recognized

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Larry Holmes' proposed fight against Marvin Frazier will not be recognized as a defense of his World Boxing Council heavyweight title, says Jose Sulaiman, WBC president, who repeated his warning that Holmes faces loss of his championship.

The organization is insisting that Holmes fight top-ranked challenger Greg Page. Sulaiman conceded that Holmes' failure to agree last month to a definite date for a fight with Page had been overlooked, but he indicated Tuesday his patience was wearing thin.

"Larry must make his mandatory defense," Sulaiman said, adding that "history repeats itself." He recalled that the WBC had stripped Leon Spinks of his heavyweight title in 1978 when he failed to defend against No. 1 challenger Ken Norton.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — PODIATRIST'S BEST PLACE TO BROADEN PRACTICE: CORN BELT.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: L equals H.

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

ALWAYS ENOUGH DIAMONDS

South wisely decided to settle for a small slam.

West led the queen of clubs, taken in the closed hand. How would you proceed?

If West has the king of hearts, you can claim the slam. After winning the first trick, draw trumps, cash your remaining club honor and ruff a club on the table. Now cash the king of diamonds and lead a low diamond toward your hand. If East produces an honor, you win and return the nine of diamonds, and dummy's ten of diamonds is good for a heart discard.

If East follows with a low diamond, play your nine. As the cards lie, West wins the jack, but he is end played. He must either return a heart away from his king or else play a club and give you a ruff-suff.

However, you also make the slam if West has three or more diamonds. In that case, he can return a diamond. If he has three diamonds, the long diamond in dummy sets up for a heart pitch. If he has four or more diamonds, run all your winners and, at the end, West will be squeezed between the king of hearts and his long diamond. Try it.

Here's a hand to test your technique. Can South claim his slam regardless of the minor suit distribution, if we assume that West has the king of hearts for his overcall?

North-South bid well to their slam. North had little to spare for his cue-bid after West's overcall. Nevertheless, he dutifully cue-bid his ace of hearts after South showed he was interested in heart control for a slam.

Trip Into Fantasy Land With President Of ABC Television

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Ask John Severino, president of ABC Television, to point to the class and quality in series programming on ABC's fall schedule, and he bobs and weaves as if he's been blindfolded and forced to play Pin the Tail on the Donkey.

Every stab he takes misses the mark.

"I think we present a fairly wide range in information and entertainment programs," he said at a recent press conference with TV writers in Los Angeles. "There are sporting events in prime time, which the others don't have, and the Olympics, which the others certainly don't have."

Without mentioning series programming, Severino turned to last year's special programming — "The Winds of War" and "The Thorn Birds." A little dizzy now, he spun around and cited upcoming made-for-TV movies: "The Day After," about the aftermath of a nuclear bomb hitting Kansas City, and "Something about Amelia," about incest.

True enough, ABC's movies and miniseries have done the network proud, but what about the series programs, the staples of prime-time television? Where are the reality-based dramas, the serious-minded comedies, the Emmy awards for distinguished regular programming?

"It's in programming like 'Dynasty,' 'Hart to Hart,' 'Three's Company,' 'Happy Days,' 'I could go on and on," he said.

So could we. Where's the uniqueness, the innovation in your regularly scheduled lineup? Is there a "Hill Street Blues" on your schedule, a "Cheers" or even something promising like "After MASH"?

"I think 'Police Squad' and 'No Soap, Radio' were programs that were different and unique. Unfortunately, they didn't make it," Severino said. "Police Squad" was zany, but it didn't have any social relevance. It also was canceled by ABC after three episodes. "No Soap, Radio" was a joke — on ABC.

By the way, those programs were broadcast during the 1981-82 season. Anything current that could be construed as sophisticated or quality programming?

"I think 'Webster' is a program that is going to be very unique and different in a quality nature this year," he said. "Webster" is about a black kid adopted by white parents. But NBC's "Diff'rent Strokes" went that route first.

Severino wisely ignored ABC's other new programs, most of which were previewed at the recent TV critics press tour in Los Angeles. Not only wasn't there anything outstanding, there was nothing that even stood out. Still, Severino pressed on. "We had our best development season in many, many a year."

Evidently, Severino and the network's programmers have been spending too much time on "Fantasy Island," which, in a bold programming touch, is supposed to get more realistic this season.

Let's face it, any network that turns over seven of its 22 prime-time hours to producer Aaron Spelling can't have a tight grip on reality. Spelling's newest program, "Hotel," is from the same Shangri-la and escapist mentality as his "Love Boat," "Hart to Hart," "Dynasty," "T.J. Hooker," "Matt Houston" and "Fantasy Island." The world outside might be crumbling, but Spelling still wishes upon a star — and he's shameless about it.

"Hotel" is certain to be a hit this season, since it follows highly rated "Dynasty" and "The Fall Guy" on Wednesday, which is bound to be ABC's most successful night.

Hoping Avoid Anonymity Fate

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Barbara Carrera, who plays a snake-toting villainess in an upcoming James Bond film, hopes to overcome the curse of anonymity that afflicts most actresses who play opposite Agent 007.

Why should Miss Carrera be different from Bond's other leading ladies?

"Because my character is so absolutely wicked and memorable," she said in a recent interview.

Miss Carrera, who appeared in such television mini-series as "Centennial" and "Masada," plays the role of Fatima Blush in "Never Say Never Again," in which Sean Connery returns as Bond for the first time in 12 years.

Miss Carrera said it was Connery's wife, Micheline, who came up with the film's title, "having for so long heard Sean insisting that he'd never do another Bond."

Cockatoo Flew The Coop

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fred, the comic cockatoo who was once a star on the ABC-TV show "Baretta," has flown the coop.

Fred — all white except for a yellow comb — left with a bang on the Fourth of July and hasn't been seen since, according to his keeper at Universal Studios.

At the end of a show Monday, there was a "sudden noise, a very loud bang," said Steve Barrons. "The bird was scared and flew off."

A $1,000 reward has been posted for the return of Fred.

New Midwifery Bill Could Pose A Limit On Choice

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The latest version of a bill to regulate midwifery in North Carolina has left questions about how many will continue delivering babies at home.

"It could be a tool that could limit the choices," said Rep. Jeanne Fenner, D-Wilson. "But women are going to have babies at home whether we make it easier or not."

The version approved Tuesday by the House State Government Committee would require that midwives be supervised by a physician, be either registered nurses or certified by the American College of Nurse-Midwives and pay registration fees of up to $100.

A subcommittee had suggested midwives be required only to collaborate with doctors, but that wording was rejected for "supervision."

Rep. Bill Grimsley, D-Guilford, a physician who opposed the original bill, said he was pleased with the substitute.

Grimsley said the bill would help ensure quality care without limiting home deliveries, although he said home births were already rare.

"Fortunately, the majority of women prefer in-hospital deliveries," he said. "We spent a great deal of time addressing the concerns of a very few, but a very vocal few... running the risk of jeopardizing obstetrical care in the state."

State Health Director Ron Levine said the bill would make it easier to have babies at home.

"It establishes state policy that the health community shall provide qualified attendance for individuals who choose out-of-hospital delivery, while setting up an extremely sensitive, supportive regulatory body to see that it happens," he said.

But Mrs. Fenner, a member of the House subcommittee, said it was hard to predict how the bill would be interpreted.

"It assures a level of competence for those who would practice midwifery without specifying whether births must occur in a hospital or non-hospital setting," she said. "But there is some question whether doctors will consent to supervise home deliveries when they may face retaliation from the medical community or lose their hospital privileges."

The bill provides that a panel of three doctors, three nurses, two midwives and two obstetricians oversee decisions about midwifery. The bill also allows some lay midwives to continue practice if they had permits under current laws. Violations of the proposed law would be punishable by up to 30 days in jail or up to a $100 fine.

Other legislative action:

Auto Franchise

The state House approved a bill to update North Carolina's automobile dealer franchise laws after concerns by all but one major auto manufacturer had been silenced.

Rep. Parks Helms, D-Mecklenburg, told the House that manufacturers and dealers "are in basic agreement on what you have before you today."

"The major thrust is to protect the franchisees once an agreement has been entered into with a dealer," he said after the House voted 104-0 to send the bill back to the Senate for concurrence. "Before we had this, there was a great deal of uncertainty about the policy the General Assembly was expecting to be enforced."

The bill establishes guidelines under which the commissioner of motor vehicles may determine whether to allow new automobile franchises, requiring that they be "economically and practically feasible" for more than one dealer.

New dealers would be restricted to market areas 10 miles in radius where the population is greater than 250,000, 15 miles if the population is between 150,000 and 250,000 and 20 miles if the population is below 150,000. Action on contested new dealerships would be required within 240 days of a challenge. Current laws have no time limit.

The bill also sets up procedures under which dealers may pass dealerships to children or relatives who are qualified to run the franchise and agree to the terms of the dealer's contract.

In addition, dealers that have gone out of businesses due to the recession could be reopened by manufacturers without going through hearings required for new dealerships. And manufacturers must notify dealers of any deficiencies that might jeopardize their franchise and allow time to correct the problems.

The House Small Business Committee deleted a Senate-passed provision prohibiting manufacturers from selling fleets at prices lower than dealers' invoices. Helms said that answered objections by Volvo-White truck makers.

Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, said only Toyota remained opposed to the bill.

"All manufacturers got the parts they objected to fixed," he said. "Everyone is happy but Toyota."

The changes were sparked by complaints from dealers who said manufacturers arbitrarily opened competing franchises in their areas, forcing them out of business.

"Businessmen were finding themselves broke and just barely able to get out from under it (the franchise agreement)," Nesbitt said.

Helms said he expected the Senate to agree to House changes.

Tax Notice

The House Finance Committee approved a bill that would require tax collectors to mail notice of impending foreclosure on tax liens to the current owner of the property if the name is different from the name in which the property is listed.

The bill would require tax collectors attempt to find the name of the current owner in titles, property transfers and other documents filed in the office of the register of deeds or the clerk.

Also approved by the Finance Committee was a bill setting training and experience standards for registering counselors and a bill to establish a law enforcement officers' training fund with money from criminal court actions.

Hospitals
The House Judiciary I Committee approved a bill designed to help hospitals collect overdue debts for emergency room services. The bill would create a lien on property of anyone receiving the service and failing to pay their bill.

There would be no lien in cases where the cost of the service is disputed, the hospital offers a partial payment plan or there is an insurance company or other third party to pay the bill.

The committee raised several questions about whether the bill gave hospitals too much authority but then approved the measure.

Taxes

Action on the $219.1 million compromise tax bill compiled by a House-Senate conference committee will be delayed by about a day because of the July 4 holiday.

Rep. Dwight Quinn, D-Cabarrus, House co-chairman, said the conference report needs the signatures of all 14 committee members before it can be considered by the full House or Senate.

Although the House returned to work Monday night, the Senate did not return until Tuesday night, prohibiting the House from receiving the report until Wednesday.

It takes three days for the report to be enacted, delaying final action on the bill from Thursday to Friday.

Among the bill's provisions are a tax on video games and used cars, a higher tax on new cars, accelerated corporate tax payments, a higher tax on liquor sold to bars and restaurants and a change in the accounting procedures for paying some teachers.

Rent To Own

The House enacted legislation to extend provisions of the Retail Installment Sales Act to lease-purchase contracts in an effort to prevent abuses.

Rep. Jeanne Fenner, D-Wilson, who introduced the bill, urged concurrence in Senate amendments, although they watered down the measure.

"This is better than what we have, which is nothing," she said.

Escrow-Interest

The House voted 33-77 against efforts to revive as a minority report a bill to require that interest be paid on escrow accounts.

"It's an issue, in my opinion, that will not go away until we deal with it in the statutes," said Rep. Anne Barnes, D-Orange, who asked that the House consider the bill despite an unfavorable report by the House Banking Committee.

Under House rules, a minority report may be submitted if 25 percent of committee members present and voting agree.

Mrs. Barnes said similar bills had been introduced every session without ever reaching a chamber floor.

"This is an issue that has been knocking on the door of this House for 10 years," she said. "I think that it's time we let it in."

Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake, said the membership of the committee necessitated a minority report for "consumer oriented" bills. He said consumers could gain $6 million a year if they earned interest on money held by financial institutions to pay for insurance and taxes on property.

Rep. Margaret Tennille, D-Forsyth, disagreed with the bill, saying to require interest on escrow accounts would be a step toward requiring interest on federal tax withholding.

Others argued that minority reports defied the honor of the committee system.

"The speaker agonizes long and hard over the membership of committees," said Rep. Jack Hunt, D-Cleveland, chairman of the House Rules Committee. "If we start hearing minority reports on everything, we'll be here 'til Christmas."

"I just cannot believe that there are that many people on the banks and banking committee that are against consumers," said Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville.

Resource Recovery

The House tentatively approved a bill to let local and county governments control burnable waste, let out revenue bonds and negotiate contracts without bids in order to set up resource recovery systems.

Rep. Marvin Musselwhite, D-Wake, said the bill would apply to non-recyclable waste. Local governments could generate electricity by burning garbage and sell it to utilities to pay off revenue bonds.

Death Penalty

The Senate Juicuary I Committee approved and sent to the full Senate a bill that would eliminate the need for some additional hearings to set execution dates for condemned criminals.

Currently, a death row inmate's execution can be stayed pending appeal. But when the stay is lifted, a hearing must be held in the county where the inmate was convicted to set a new execution date.

Prosecutors and the N.C. Attorney General's office have complained that the policy creates needless delays and red tape.

Under the bill, after a condemned prisoner's case has reached the U.S. Supreme Court and begun a second round of appeals, further lifting of stays would set automatically a new execution date on the fifth Friday hence.

Liens

A bill that would abolish private tax lien sales was approved unanimously by the Senate. It requires the county and city to advertise liens and begin foreclosure proceedings if they aren't paid.

"This is a good bill for private property owners in North Carolina," said Davis, saying that currently many private sales result in higher fees for taxpayers.

Gift Tax

A bill to exempt school tuition and medical payments made on behalf of another person, such as by a parent for a child, from gift taxation was approved unanimously by the Senate.

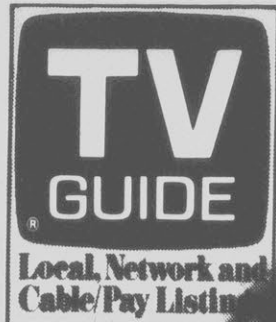

The exemption would apply only for payments made directly to schools or hospitals.

Another bill given Senate approval would exempt historic property from taxation.

Bad Checks

Under a bill approved by the Senate, judges would have to consider requiring restitution when sentencing people guilty of writing worthless checks.

Stumbling Block Removed From Early Action On Waste Compact

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A state House committee Tuesday removed a stumbling block to immediate consideration of a bill to help establish an eight-state low-level radioactive waste compact.

The House Judiciary I Committee removed from the bill an amendment requiring the state set concentration thresholds for hazardous wastes which are considered safe to bury by March 1, 1985, and placed a moratorium on hazardous waste landfills until July 1, 1985.

The action represented a victory for Gov. Jim Hunt, whose aides strongly lobbied committee members. Hunt has been pressing for the bill, saying North Carolina may be forced to set up its own radioactive waste dump if it does not join the compact.

Hunt also has been pressing the Senate to approve a House-passed bill regulating hazardous waste landfills.

The bill was assigned to a subcommittee of the House Rules Committee, which has met once.

Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, said he attached the hazardous-waste amendment to the compact bill earlier to put pressure on the subcommittee to act.

He said he thinks the hazardous waste bill stands little chance of receiving Senate action and that without the amendment to the compact bill, legislators will have done nothing this session to control disposal of hazardous wastes.

"We're quickly finding ourselves in the situation where we can't control high-level (radioactive) waste, we're delegating control of low-level (radioactive) waste and there is no bill on hazardous wastes," Nesbitt said.

"The least we can do is send the Senate a message that if they're interested in us delegating this authority, let us control hazardous wastes in this state," he said.

Under the compact bill, eight Southeastern states jointly would decide where to store low-level radioactive waste when the existing burial site in Barnwell, S.C., closes in 1992.

The federal government controls burial of high-level radioactive wastes.

House Speaker Liston Ramsey has ruled that the House cannot act on the compact bill until the Senate acts on the hazardous waste bill. That's why supporters pressed for the amendment to be removed before the compact bill was jeopardized.

Nesbitt tried to amend the bill Tuesday to remove the reference to the hazardous-waste bill while keeping the moratorium on landfills and the deadline for setting thresholds. His efforts failed by an almost 2-to-1 margin.

The committee voted by the same margin to remove the earlier amendment from the bill and send it back to the floor.

A Least 15 'Small Wars' Exact A Bloody Price

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

War winds have blown into new corners of the world — the dusty mountain trails of Nicaragua, the wastelands of the mid-Sahara, Peru's Andean slopes, the divided house of the PLO.

Today at least 15 "small wars" rage around the globe, along with a score or more lesser conflicts, an Associated Press survey shows.

The cost is unknowable: Each day uncounted hundreds die, thousands are maimed or driven from their homes, and untold wealth is consumed.

Almost 300 such wars have been fought since World War II, report the British authors of "The War Atlas," a new book detailing four decades of military conflict. These have included the all-out carnage of Algeria, Vietnam and Nigeria, and the hit-run "sideshow" of Northern Ireland and Spain's Basque region. At least 10 million have died.

Although great powers themselves have not clashed on the battlefield for 38 years, almost half the current wars could be classified as proxy battles — waged between local forces armed and encouraged by the rival superpowers.

The outside powers often take a more direct hand. The Center for Defense Information, a non-governmental Washington research office, says more than a half-million foreign combat troops are involved in eight conflicts, including Soviets in Afghanistan and Americans in the officially unresolved Korean War.

The face of war is changing. In a historic reversal of roles, almost as many guerrilla wars in 1983 are being fought by anti-communists against Marxist regimes as are being fought by leftist insurgents.

And today's wars blur borders. "Civil wars have been internationalized," note "War Atlas" authors Michael Kidron and Dan Smith, "not merely by the intervention of a superpower, but by being exported (through) assassinations, bomb attacks, kidnappings, embassy occupations."

Here is a region-by-region look at a world at war:

MIDDLE EAST

Lebanon's hemorrhaging goes on. Since civil war exploded in 1975, an estimated 64,000 people have been killed — the equivalent of 5 million dying in an American conflict.

The recent mutiny in the Palestine Liberation Organization's ranks added a new dimension to the Lebanese fighting. Now a fratricidal struggle goes on within a civil war, wrapped inside the Arab-Israeli regional conflict and surrounded by the East-West superpower rivalry.

Lebanon's agony grew from a Christian-Moslem battle for supremacy, a conflict still reflected in a deadly feud between Christians and Druses in the Chouf Mountains. And renewed war seems ever possible between Israeli and Syrian forces occupying sectors of crowded Lebanon.

To the east rages one of the world's two conflicts between nations — the Iran-Iraq border war. (The other is a little-noticed clash between Chad and Nigeria on their oil-rich frontier in Africa.)

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein opened the hostilities 2½ years ago, seeking territory from his neighbor and retaliation against Iran's subversive activities in Iraq. But now he is on the defensive, futilely calling for peace talks.

Along the 300-mile warfront, the battle grinds on, in mass infantry-and-armor attacks that gain little ground but produce heavy casualties. The overall death toll is certainly in the tens of thousands.

The Nicaraguan government claims at least 600 Nicaraguan soldiers and civilians, and more than 2,000 rebels, have been killed.

In a way, the Nicaragua fighting is a spillover from the civil war in nearby El Salvador. U.S. officials say their strategy is to stop a southwest, are trying to bring down the rightist government of Gen. Efraim Rios Montt.

Two years ago, Colombia's civilian democratic government declared the M-19 guerrilla movement all but dead. But in one recent firefight in the southern Colombian jungles, the rebels killed 11 soldiers and policemen, while losing 23 of their own fighters.

ASIA

South Asia's two grim little wars have cost hundreds of thousands of lives.

The civil war wracking remote Afghanistan for more than four years has left at least one million people dead or wounded. One-quarter of the country's 15 million people are believed to have fled to neighboring Pakistan or Iran.

An estimated 100,000 Soviet troops and 30,000 soldiers of the pro-Soviet Afghan government are fighting anti-communist tribesmen — an elusive enemy at home in the rugged Hindu Kush mountains.

The Soviet Union, which Western diplomats say has lost about 20,000 men dead and wounded in Afghanistan, appears increasingly eager to end the war. Exploratory peace talks have begun.

Cambodia's latest bloodletting has lasted as long as the Afghan war, and produced hundreds of thousands of refugees and untold thousands of dead.

A Vietnamese force that invaded Cambodia in 1978, installing a new government there, has been pursuing the guerrilla remnants of Pol Pot's old regime in the western forests. These Chinese-supplied, communist Khmer Rouge guerrillas are allied with two non-communist resistance groups.

A Vietnamese offensive devastated rebel bases in April, and in May the Vietnamese trumpeted the withdrawal of some of their more than 160,000 troops. But the insurgents claim to be hitting back, even against targets in Phnom Penh, the capital.

For a decade, President Ferdinand Marcos' authoritarian government alternately hammered and cajoled Moslem separatist guerrillas in the southern Philippines. But now that the Moslem insurrection is winding down, a years-old insurgency by the communist New People's Army is gaining force.

Other lingering communist insurgencies trouble the governments of Thailand and Malaysia, and small-scale resistance to central governments continues among tribal groups in Laos, Burma and India.

AFRICA

The world's youngest and oldest wars embroil Africa's northeastern quarter.

In the Saharan emptiness of northern Chad, as many as 4,000 rebels struck south in mid-June against troops of Hissene Habre's Chadian government, capturing the oasis town of Faya-Largeau.

The invaders are loyal to Goukouni Oueddei, who was ousted by Habre as president a year ago, and reportedly have strong Libyan support.

The world's longest war is the 21-year-old struggle of separatist guerrillas in the northern Ethiopian province of Eritrea.

The Marxist government, whose forces are aided by hundreds of Soviet advisers, announces regularly the rebels are about to be crushed. But the insurgents hang on, and this spring reported launching a major offensive from their Nakfa mountain redoubt.

Three thousand miles to the west, where the Sahara meets the Atlantic, desert nomad guerrillas have waged a hit-run campaign against the Moroccan army, in a bid to establish an independent state in the former Spanish Sahara.

Morocco asserts sovereignty over the territory, abandoned by Spain in 1976. An Organization of African Unity summit last month called for negotiations between Morocco and the Polisario Front guerrillas.

A trio of brushfire wars, in some ways intertwined, blazes across Africa's southern cone.

In Angola, the UNITA guerrilla faction that lost a 1976 civil war fights on against the Marxist government. From bases in the southeast, UNITA claims to be making "a spectacular advance" northward. But the government, which accuses white-governed South Africa of financing UNITA, insists the rebels pose no threat. Some 25,000 Cuban troops support the government.

To the south, a 17-year-old bush war drags on for the independence of South-West Africa, or Namibia, a territory controlled by South Africa.

Black Namibian guerrillas based in Angola periodically strike across the border against South African forces.

The South Africans retaliate with raids into Angola. The South African military reports a 1982 death toll of 1,268 guerrillas, 77 soldiers and police, and 2,139 civilians. Secret South Africa-Angola talks on a possible cease-fire have shown signs of progress.

In the third "small war," the South Africans are accused of propping up a rebel army in another neighboring black state, Marxist-governed Mozambique.

Pilots Learn Danger Signals Of Flying At A High Altitude

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press Writer

PEASE AIR FORCE BASE, N.H. (AP) — The world at 35,000 feet is a giddy, dangerous place where euphoria can give way to suffocation in seconds.

In the thin air seven miles above the earth, oxygen deficiency — known as hypoxia — can begin with a sense of well-being, then befuddle its victim with confused, pleasant thoughts. Death follows quickly.

Each day, Air Force pilots are sent into this potentially deadly atmosphere — without leaving the ground.

The Air Force maintains high altitude chambers at Pease and 16 other air bases around the country to train and reacquaint flyers with the subtle symptoms of hypoxia and other hazards of high altitude flying.

The sessions, including classroom training and a two-hour chamber "flight," are part of a growing awareness that physical training, diet and psychological factors are as important to a pilot as a well-maintained aircraft.

"Back in the '60s the pilot was worried about his equipment. We didn't really know how important the human factors were," says Capt. Ernest Pritchard, head of the Pease training unit. "Now we're on the leading edge of technology and we're beginning to test those limits in human factors."

The need for such training was illustrated in May when a West German executive jet with a crew of three mysteriously flew 1,600 miles off course and crashed into the North Atlantic.

The Learjet 25D was on a flight from Vienna to Hamburg when it failed to land and continued on at 43,000 feet while ground controllers and chase planes tried without success to contact the crew.

The plane apparently ran out of fuel and crashed 200 miles south of Iceland. Officials theorize the crew was long dead — the victims of a malfunctioning oxygen system.

A similar mystery claimed the life of Louisiana State University football coach Robert "Bo" Rein in 1980. Rein was in a private plane flying from Shreveport to Baton Rouge. The plane climbed to 41,000 feet, then fell into the Atlantic, 1,400 miles off course.

Officials said the accident may also have been caused by a gradual hypoxia that civilian pilots are not trained to recognize.

To help flyers spot the symptoms, the Air Force has its pilots strap on oxygen masks and sit in the special chamber that can duplicate conditions in the stratosphere.

Air is pumped out, bringing the chamber to the equivalent of 35,000 feet. The chamber is then brought down to 25,000 feet, and the flyers are asked to remove their masks.

At first there are no obvious signs. Breathing is easy; the class turns its attention to a page of math and logic problems. But after a minute a certain light-headed feeling appears, followed by a tingling sensation and subtle visual changes.

These early symptoms are followed by more serious ones. But lack of coordination, numbness and tunnel vision can be belied by a sense of well being. The students are all smiles; if left unattended they would be unconscious in three to five minutes.

The chamber's attendants, wearing masks and trailing air hoses, don't let things get that far.

"How are you doing, No. 4," an attendant asks an Air National Guard captain who is studying his math problems with great concentration.

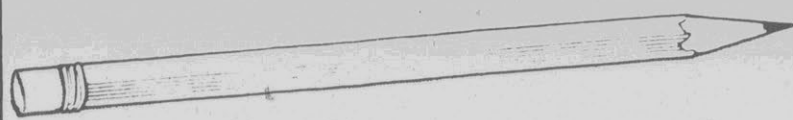

"Pretty good," the captain answers, with a wide grin.

FATAL FEELINGS — Air Force Capt. Kevin O'Donnell reacts (at center) after spending two minutes with his oxygen mask off in an altitude chamber at 25,000 feet as masked officers observe on both sides. (AP Laserphoto)

TEACHERS TAKE NOTE!

Washington State On Edge Of Economic Eruption

By DAVID AMMONS
Associated Press Writer
OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — First it was the awesome eruptions of Mount St. Helens which put Washington state on the map.

Now it's eruptions of another kind — the economic woes of the Washington Public Power Supply System, teetering at the edge of the largest municipal bond default in the nation's history.

The fallout over the supply system, which acts as a construction arm for utilities in the Northwest, could severely dampen the bond sales market nationally. It could also add millions of dollars to interest bills paid by states, school districts and other agencies which rely on bond sales to build schools and colleges, jails and prisons, and other projects.

"After St. Helens blew up, we had to spend months getting out the message that we weren't covered with ash and that people could still visit," sighed Commerce Director Dick Schrock, recalling the major 1980 eruption.

tion of the long-dormant volcano.

Another problem for the state has been the troubles of Seattle-First National Bank, Washington's largest bank, which said it was in danger of failing and announced it would merge next month with BankAmerica Corp.

Seafirst Corp., the holding company for Seattle-First National Bank, lost more than $220 million in 1982 and the first quarter of 1983, largely because of bad energy loans.

And the Wall Street Journal said last week that Seafirst is being investigated by a federal grand jury looking into the collapse of Penn Square Bank in Oklahoma City. Seafirst bought about $400 million in energy loans from Penn Square.

"We're getting all sorts of questions about WPPSS and Seafirst and whether we'll have enough energy," Schrock said. "These problems are creating some questions in the minds of some businesses we're trying to attract. We're having to tell them we have our fiscal house in order as a state."

Now the state's industrial marketing efforts are being hampered, and it is scrambling to repair the damage done to its image as a good place to do business, he said.

Washington's credit rating has dropped twice in the past year because of economic troubles, a shaky tax structure and the need to borrow from the banks to pay bills on time.

At the same time, the Legislature has slashed the industrial marketing budget by 40 percent, said Schrock.

Less than two years ago, WPPSS — derisively pronounced "whoops" — was in the middle of the nation's most ambitious public construction project: five nuclear power plants with a price tag of $24 billion. The original cost had been estimated at $4 billion. Inflation, labor troubles, mismanagement, lower power demand estimates, and other woes eventually caught up with WPPSS. Two of the plants, one at the Hanford nuclear reservation in eastern Washington, and another in Satsop, southwest of Seattle, were abandoned. Another plant at Hanford has been mothballed for up to five years, and work has been halted on the second of two plants at Satsop.

The system has only one plant still alive — a third plant at Hanford — but the entire bond debt remains.

The debt on the two abandoned plants amounts to $7 billion with interest — almost double the annual budget for the entire state government.

Sponsoring public utilities have balked at repaying the debt and the Washington Supreme Court held earlier this month that the utilities can't be held liable since they didn't have authority to enter into the WPPSS contracts.

That pushes WPPSS to the brink of default — the nation's largest municipal bond default, apparently leaving bondholders holding the bag. Bond underwriters say the default will depress the municipal bond market nationally and could send interest rates for other government bond issues soaring. "I don't see how you call that anything short of disaster at a time when we are pulling out of a major recession-depression, to see that kind of dampener thrown on the economy," said Gov. John Spellman.

He said impact reports project a job loss of anywhere from 20,000 to 200,000 in the Northwest because of an anticipated default. "On top of what we've been going through for the last couple of years, that is clearly a disastrous result," Spellman says.

A report prepared for Spellman by outside consultants says investors won't buy any Northwest municipal bonds if default occurs. Underwriters say even if they can find investors, interest will be increased at least a full percentage point.

BOND DEFAULT ?

Rehabilitating Brain-Injured

By JO-ANNE BYRNE

GOLDEN VALLEY, Minn. (UPI) — A decade ago Guy Vito probably would have died from the multiple injuries he suffered in a 1980 traffic accident.

But medical technology pulled him through and Courage Center, which claims to have the nation's only long-term residential program for brain-injured people, rehabilitated him.

Today he is one of a "new population" of brain-injured who can lead independent lives.

He can return to his home country on Minnesota's Iron Range, wearing a helmet to protect his head from injury and operating a motorized vehicle when shopping.

Vito, 28, represents a segment of the population few understand. He is alive because of the miracles of modern medicine, but he is perceived as "different" by most people in his world.

"I'm perfect compared to what I was," he says.

Following a two-month coma, stints in hospitals in Duluth and rehabilitation facilities on the Iron Range, Vito wound up at Courage Center because, he said, "I wanted to be helped. I was sick of myself."

At the center, most of a patient's emotional improvement comes from interaction with other residents, said Chris Duff, who manages the Brain Injury Trauma Program.

"Suddenly we are faced with people seriously disabled who would have been dead," Duff said. "They are not retarded, they are not mentally ill. Noone understands them. Everywhere else they are freaks."

Duff said, "Most of the residents are here because of alcohol, either their's or someone else's."

Vito had been drinking before he ran out from between two parked cars and was hit.

David Meier was thrown through the roof of a car by the impact of a pickup truck driven by a drunken young man. Meier, 27, was in a coma for more than a month and was extremely bitter about his accident when he arrived at Courage Center.

Although he has not been able to make one arm work as he hoped, Meier has received his permit to drive and can tie his shoes with one hand. "I've learned patience," he said.

The brain-injured see themselves as they were before their injuries, Duff said.

"They all remember they could do something before the accident that they can't do now," said Renee Sandy, vocational rehabilitation counselor. "That hurts all the more."

"If we can help them to realize the extent of their disability, they can succeed. Their chances of a well-rounded life are better if their life was together before they were hurt."

Many of the brain injured haven't had much time to get their lives together. Most of those at Courage Center are in their 20s.

Ms. Sandy supervised a three-month computer program at the center aimed at educational retraining for four young brain-injured males.

"We picked people with the ability to remember," she said. The test scores of those involved generally went up a grade by the conclusion of the program.

Directors at the center are currently attempting to determine how to incorporate computer retraining into their program. "It's the newest thing on the block to study in rehabilitation," said Jan Hart, director of residential services.

The fact computers are non-judgmental plays a big part in their success when used by the brain-injured, Ms. Sandy said. The brain-injured also perceive computers as acceptable since "they're working on this thing that lots of other people don't understand."

Mark Moilanen, associate executive director of the center said that although many who suffer head traumas in accidents are left in physically good shape, they have cognitive deficits.

Seek Revive Old-Fashion Animation

By PETER MATTIACE
Associated Press Writer
CASTLE SHANNON, Pa.
(AP) — Animators Jim Allan and Phil Wilson are making children's cartoons the old-fashioned way, one painstaking frame at a time, in a two-man battle against "that Saturday morning stuff, that herky-jerky 'Flintstones' look."

Allan and Wilson, disciples of the first super-hero of cartoons, Walt Disney, own a fledgling animation studio in suburban Pittsburgh, one of the few American studios producing "full animation" cartoons for kids.

"We're trying to put the quality back in cartoons. Cartooning of old is a lost art," Wilson said in a recent interview. "It seems everyone is going to the Saturday morning stuff and so the kids are only seeing the junk. They just don't know good animation."

Allan, 43, and Wilson, 34, quit their government graphic arts jobs four years ago to open their studio. They have produced two feature cartoons, three public service commercials and a one-minute opening to a television cooking show.

Their first 24-minute cartoon, a Christmas-theme feature called "A Star for Jeremy," took a year to produce and has been played six times on a national cable television channel.

Their second effort, titled "Allison and the Magic Bubble," a cutesy feature about a little girl meeting a space alien, took two years of work and $500,000. It has yet to be seen publicly.

"We'll never be like Disney. We'll never have classics like a 'Fantasia' or a 'Pinocchio,'" Wilson said. "But we want to be successful and hold onto the highest quality we can."

"Full animation" cartoons like the famous Disney productions use at least 12 new drawings for each second, or 24 frames, of film. In full animation, some drawings can be used for two frames.

"With two drawings in a row, the eye sees the action smoothly," Wilson said. "But with real fast action, like a cat pouncing on a mouse, you may need a new drawing every frame to show fast and furious action."

A 24-minute fully animated cartoon can use more than 17,000 individual drawings over about 34,000 frames of film.

Most modern cartoons save on time and production costs with "limited animation." This technique uses as few as six drawings per second and often results in stuttered action.

"When you watch the Saturday morning stuff and you know what to look for you can see spots that suddenly appear and disappear, mouths that suddenly aren't there, buttons that change color," Wilson said. "The kids don't notice this and, even if they do, they're likely to laugh at it."

To make cartoons, a soundtrack is produced first, locking in the action for the animators who must make their characters conform to the sound. Individual drawings are penciled and videotaped to check the movement for smoothness.

The characters are redrawn onto clear acetate sheets and colored with acrylic paint. The sheets, one for each frame, are layered over a painted background and then photographed one at a time on 35mm film. Eight seconds of action might take an hour just to film.

"Everything is so precise," Allan said. "You have to have every action thought out in advance."

Allan and Wilson's small studio in an old garage employs up to 21 workers who help draw, paint and photograph the cartoon over many months. Between cartoons, the studio is nearly vacant.

In contrast, the acknowledged leader of full animation cartoons, Walt Disney Studios of Burbank, Calif., has more than 500 people working on "The Black Cauldron," its next movie-length feature set for release in 1985, according to a Disney spokeswoman.

Allan and Wilson concede Disney is their idol and say Disney's studio is their corporate role model. Wilson once spent $160 for Disney's autograph.

Self-Improvement Books Part Of Learning To Read

By ANDREW TORCHIA
Associated Press Writer
ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia
(AP) — Across Ethiopia, millions of heads bend over unfamiliar objects — books. Lips silently shape sounds and fingers trace lines of Amharic script.

Ethiopia is learning to read and write and count in one of the most vigorous educational campaigns ever conducted in Africa. The country's military government portrays the campaign as a major success of their Marxist revolution.

Like other social changes that arose after the Emperor Haile Selassie was overthrown in 1974, the literacy drive bears little resemblance to what happens in the West or even in many other Third World countries. New readers do not make the acquaintance of Dick and Jane, the suburban children whose playful activities in grade-school primers taught Americans their first sentences: "Run, Dick, run... See Jane run."

Nor do Ethiopians learn a local equivalent: "Run, Negussie, run."

Books in socialist Ethiopia open up a world of self-improvement and ideology, under such primer titles as, "Clean Water and Its Use," and, "Get Rid of Household Pests."

Reading-center shelves hold the works of Marx and Lenin, short histories of the Soviet Communist Party and piles of old Soviet magazines.

Ethiopia was a land of the scribe and the thumbprint, in a phrase contrasting a Christian Orthodox, monastic tradition of learning going back more than 2,000 years, with an illiteracy rate that exceeded 90 percent of the 30 million population. Less than 20 percent of school-age children attended classes, and most of them dropped out and forgot their literacy skills after a few years.

High schools were available in a handful of cities where a feudal elite ran the country's affairs. Few rural teen-agers had the money or the courage to leave home to study.

Gudeta Mammo, 54, head of the national campaign, said illiteracy has been cut to 47 percent since 1979 and is to be virtually eliminated in 1986. He told reporters last month that the program cost 25 million birr ($12.5 million) in the first two years, with more than half the money contributed "voluntarily" through neighborhood committees and peasants' associations — new units of community organization imposed after the revolution.

Nearly 20 percent of the funds came from foreign aid, Gudeta said — 500 Soviet motorcycles for supervisors, 64 Japanese trucks, texts from East Germany.

The program does not cover Ethiopia's several million lowland nomads, and it is limited in northern highlands by anti-government revolts. But beneficiaries include millions who previously had no access to education.

Musema Mohamed, 14, read recently for visitors to a literacy center in an Addis Ababa house once owned by Gen. Debebe Haile Mariam, who was among 60 imperial aides executed without trial by revolutionaries eight years ago.

"The poultry system that we had in our country used to be very traditional and productivity was very low," he read in Amharic. "Out of 15 chickens that you hatched, only half grew up."

The visitors had no means of checking Musema's comprehension, or of confirming their guide's assertion that he had been studying only 17 days. They were told that he had come from a village 125 miles away to work in Addis Ababa four years ago, and presently earns 15 birr ($7.50) a month and his meals as a bar waiter.

Einom Negussie, a 31-year-old house servant, said she has been studying a year and can now write down simple telephone messages. Shopkeeper Yasin Adem, 30, said a year's practice has enabled him "to do all the bookkeeping on paper, instead of in my head."

An independent observer who asked not to be named described the campaign as an impressive example of social mobilization but added, "The question is — what literacy standard have they established, and how long will people retain their skills?"

"It appears to be a very low standard involving a very rudimentary form of sign recognition. That is not necessarily a big breakthrough."

"For campaign purposes, a person is considered literate at the grade-two level," Gudeta said. "He can read a newspaper if it is printed in simple, block letters. He can write and perform simple calculations — two-digit addition and subtraction, and one-digit multiplication and division."

Gudeta said follow-up classes will take adult students through the seventh grade level. Many who began studies in 1979, he said, are now at grade five or six.

In the countryside, adults study under trees and in mud-walled huts, at more than 4,000 reading centers. If blackboards are lacking, some write with chalk on the round, flat pans used to bake injera, Ethiopia's gray and sour bread. Farmers attend classes at dawn, before going into the fields.

A similar enrollment explosion has occurred within the state school system, sometimes without a parallel expansion of facilities. According to the Education Ministry, primary pupils totaled 2.9 million last year, more than triple the number nine years ago.

"My 8-year-old son is in a class of 110, and there are three shifts of classes a day at his school," said an insurance salesman. "Small children are going to school at 7 p.m. Where is their home life?"

Japan's Robots Add New Efficiency To Factories

By DAVID LAMMERS
Associated Press Writer
FUKAYA, Japan (AP) —

To understand how dexterous robots in Japan have become, consider the circuit board inside a color television set.

Inserted into the perforated board are about 500 tiny diodes, condensers, resistors, and other parts as small, and about as delicate, as a cigarette ash.

At Toshiba Corp.'s Fukaya plant, north of Tokyo, four-pronged robots and a variety of other machines have taken over the work of inserting these parts into the circuit board, a job done previously by rows of nimble-fingered Japanese women.

Four years ago, Toshiba, one of Japan's giant electronics companies, decided to create a flexible automated production system, or FAPS, combining computers, a dozen robots and a variety of "mechatronic" machines to automate completely the circuit-board assembly line.

Only a few human workers remain, making sure the machines are kept in working order and that they get the parts they need.

As a result, Toshiba cut the workforce at its color television factory here from 2,000 to 800, increased output by 50 percent and improved quality levels and profits, said Masahide Nambu, Toshiba's senior executive in charge of factory automation.

Japan's big electronics companies, faced with a shortage of assembly-line workers and competition from low-wage Asian nations, have turned to factory automation in a big way. Matsushita and Hitachi have similar assembly line technology, Toshiba spokesmen say.

Toshiba invested $10 million between 1975 and 1982 to automate its Fukaya television factory and spent $20 million on factory automation research in 1981 and 1982. About 200 robots are backed up by battalions of other sophisticated machines in Toshiba's 29 factories in Japan.

At Nagoya, midway between Tokyo and Osaka, an even more radical automation drive was conducted at Toshiba's electric fan plant, where 64 assembly line workers were employed before a FAPS system took over.

Here, Nambu said, Toshiba learned by experience — setting up a line where fans were assembled, tested and boxed, all by machines. The most difficult task was designing a wiring robot which "works as the human hand works," he said.

That wiring robot, which costs about $48,000, has two interconnecting arms and a computer-linked camera which "sees." One of the robot's arms picks up the cable and mounts it in position while another arm solders it in place.

The result: 10 workers oversee the machines and computers which make 24 different types of fans, while production capacity per month has tripled and the profit margin has doubled, Nambu said.

Eiichi Sano directs the 300 engineers who work at Toshiba's Industrial Engineering Development Center in Tokyo, where the automated production systems are devised. He said the crucial factor in Toshiba's automation drive has been the cooperation of the labor unions.

He said workers displaced by machines at the Fukaya television factory were moved next door, to Toshiba's expanding videotape recorder plant. The sharing of employees has permitted company-wide employment to remain stable at about 66,000 for the past several years.

The ability of Japan's electronics makers to make new products while outperforming rivals with its older products has also placed heavy pressure on foreign competitors.

But South Korean electronics firms, for example, have cut into Japan's share of televisions exported to Western nations by taking advantage of wage levels about one-third those in Japan.

However, with the automation drive beginning to show results, only the strongest companies will be able to keep up with the Japanese, said Gene Gregory, who teaches international business at Tokyo's Sophia University.

"In boom times, I think the Asian electronics companies could match the Japanese in terms of automation investment," Gregory said. "But whether they could come up with the investment capital during this recent recession? I doubt it."

Toshiba's computer systems required to coordinate the automated production system can cost millions. In addition, its software development and repair work requires highly skilled workers who must be trained.

Gregory said American robotics technology is at least equal to that of the Japanese, but to install a factory automation system requires the cooperation of labor unions and a crew of engineers with a long-term commitment to the project. And concern about job security among unskilled assembly workers, job switching by technicians and high interest rates have retarded automation in U.S. plants, he said.

Speaking of Your Health...

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

Two Valuable Books for the Layman

Two excellent books were recently called to my attention. Both contain sufficient and clearly written information to deserve being brought to the attention of my readers.

The first, "Preparing for Your New Baby," is written by Shirley Camper Soman, an excellent writer of popular material about families and children. The book is published by Delta and contains a great deal of sane and sensible material.

"To have a baby is the most intensely personal and private event in anyone's life. Yet the giving of life is, in the larger sense, the event most involved with everyone else's life."

In the book, the mystery of how it all begins is explained without scientific complexity. Intertwined in all of this writing is the recognition of the drama of a new life, its growth and development, and the wisdom of the forces that control them.

There is an excellent chapter on the emotional adjustment to parenthood. Both the husband and wife learn new aspects of sharing, caring and mutuality. The unborn child solidifies the relationship and can help to enrich the parents and support the superstructure of a good marriage.

In a sensible way the pregnant woman is kept informed about the many new and unexpected forces that are at work both physically and emotionally during pregnancy.

It is an excellent book and will offer a great deal of support to women who have not yet been satisfactorily introduced to the wisdom and wonderment of pregnancy.

The second book, "Open Heart Surgery: A Second Chance," is written by Myles V. Reinfield who had open heart surgery performed in March 1975 and again in December 1981.

The book, published by Prentice-Hall, is a well-kept diary and chronicle of Reinfield. It shares with the reader many aspects of his medical condition that necessitated surgery.

A great deal of hope and comfort lies within this book. The facts, well written by a layman, tend to relieve anxiety and fear and replace them with encouragement and hope.

The last two decades have brought enormous extensions of accomplishment in the field of open heart surgery. Today the operation is performed in great numbers. The results are spectacular. Thousands of people who might have been doomed to chronic invalidism are today alive and well and functioning because of the brilliance of modern day open heart surgery.

The fears and anxieties of people who are to be operated on must be allayed and assuaged if the convalescence is to be shortened and the return of productivity is to be hastened.

World's Factory Production Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — The world's industrialized nations posted a 2.1 percent jump in factory production during the first quarter of 1983 that snapped a 12-month decline, the International Monetary Fund says.

In a report issued Monday, the IMF said Canada led the way with a 5.8 percent surge in industrial output while Finland posted a 4.1 percent gain over the last quarter of 1982. Norway's factory output increased 3 percent.

Factory production in the United States rose 2.2 percent to reverse a decline that began during the third quarter of 1981, the report said. But the level of U.S. factory production during the first quarter was still 2 percent below the same period in 1982 because of the long-term decline, the report said.

Consumption Of Pasta Growing

NEW YORK (AP) — Pasta consumption in America has about doubled since World War II with about 1½ billion pounds of domestically-manufactured dried pasta products eaten annually.

Robert Green, executive secretary of the National Pasta Association, says a major reason has been the nation's increased awareness of proper nutrition and the important role of complex carbohydrates.
