Libyan Forces Overwhelm Chad Defenders

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer
N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — Libyan warplanes, tanks and troops overwhelmed Chadian defenders at

Faya-Largeau in a fierce six-hour battle today, informed sources reported, and the government said it might be forced to retreat from the surrounding area due to "the extreme gravity of the situation." Western military sources first reported the fall of Faya-Largeau, and Chadian Information Minister Soumaila Mahamat acknowledged the defeat. He also claimed government forces continued to resist insurgents in parts of the 100-square-mile palm grove surrounding the town. "Our forces control the road leading west from a point seven kilometers (4.5 miles) distant and the road leading east from a point 18 kilometers (11 miles) distant," he told a news conference, but added: "In view of the extreme gravity of the situation, it cannot be ruled out that our forces may carry out a tactical withdrawal." Reporters have been barred from the war zone and there was no independent confirmation of the military situation at Faya-Largeau. At a news conference Wednesday, at a time when Western sources said all government resistance in Faya-Largeau had ceased, Soumaila claimed that the Libyan-backed onslaught had been "routed." He declined to comment on government losses in the battle for the oasis and its 7,000 civilian inhabitants.

Western military sources said the rebels captured the town after a fierce six-hour battle. Resistance by the 2,500 troops, roughly half the armed forces of President Hissene Habre, ceased at midday today, the sources said.

Looking Up

The Greenville Tobacco Market recorded another increase in price average Wednesday as sales activity reflected general improvement throughout the Eastern Belt. The market sold 639,143 pounds for $1,054,557 in averaging $165 per hundred pounds, topping Tuesday's $164.01 when 791,911 pounds sold for $1,298,837. Purchases by the Flue-Cured Cooperative Stabilization Corp., which administers the price support program, dropped to 39.21 percent of total sales from 43.81 percent the previous day. Poundage placed under government loan here Wednesday amounted to 250,584, down from 347,093 pounds Tuesday. Beltwide, Stabilization receipts were also down slightly as the 14 participating markets saw 2,287,618 pounds taken or 40.95 percent of total sales. The figure Tuesday was 2,776,811 pounds or 43.7 percent. The eastern markets generally enjoyed increased price levels on the fifth day of sales as the overall average of $163.10 per hundred pounds compared with $160.57 the previous day. The belt has averaged $155.88 per hundred so far this season.

Beirut Airport Continues Rocket Target

By TERRY A. ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer
BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Druse gunners rocketed the U.S. Marine compound at Beirut airport and other positions today, killing five people and wounding 30, including a Marine, police said. The state radio said three Cabinet ministers were later kidnapped by Druse gunmen.

The radio said the ministers were seized as they left the Chouf mountain town of Aamatur, where they had met the spiritual leader of the Lebanese Druse, Sheikh Mohammad Abu Shakra. The state television said, however, the gunmen stormed the sheik's house in nearby Baadran to abduct the ministers.

Those kidnapped were identified by the radio as Public Works Minister Pierre Khoury, Finance Minister Adel Hamiyeh and Labor Minister Adnan Mroweh. They represent one-third of Lebanon's Cabinet. After the airport attack, Lebanon's army returned artillery and mortar fire on Druse positions in the hills overlooking Beirut, and the 1,200-man U.S. Marine contingent at the airport went on "condition one," its highest state of alert in four months, Marine spokesman Maj. John Shotwell said.

During a lull in the bombardment, U.S. presidential envoy Robert C. McFarlane visited the Marines. But a shell struck about 500 yards north of the compound as McFarlane was meeting with the Marine commander, Col. Timothy J. Geraghty, sending Marines leaping for cover.

As the leathernecks shouted "get in the foxholes," McFarlane walked briskly to his nearby car. Marines and his plainclothes bodyguard shielded him as he sped off with a Lebanese police escort.

No additional casualties were reported as a result of the shell, which landed at 1:45 p.m. (7:45 a.m. EDT). President Amin Gemayel's government ordered the airport closed after the first, 30-minute barrage, diverting inbound planes to neighboring countries. The airport was reopened to outbound traffic three hours after the attack, the second bombardment of the facility in three weeks.

The shelling came during a new round of heavy fighting between Lebanon's Christian and Druse militiamen in the Israeli-held central mountains overlooking Beirut. Police said the Katyusha rockets were fired from multiple launchers in Druse areas.

After the airport attack, the state-run news agency reported Druse fighters shelled a small Lebanese army garrison in the mountain town of Kfar Matta 11 miles southeast of Beirut, wounded five soldiers and "attacked and entered" two nearby villages. The army garrison was reported under siege.

No group took responsibility for the airport attack, but police said the shellfire began around 7:15 a.m. and came from positions near Aitah, a town held by the Druse militia.

Marine spokesman Shotwell said 1st Lt. Ailneal Morris, 26, from Sarasota, Fla., was hit in the right thigh by a piece of shrapnel from a rocket that exploded in the Marine compound at the airport. The Marine contingent is part of a multinational peacekeeping force patrolling the Lebanese capital.

Morris made a brief appearance before television crews to show that his injury was minor. No other shells exploded near Marine positions, Shotwell said, but Marines dived into foxholes and sandbagged their positions during the barrage.

Police said rockets crashed into slums on the airport's edge, killing one woman in her car, another in her bed, a third near a bakery and a boy walking to school. Police said a man also was killed.

Lebanese army Capt. Youssef Atrissi said one rocket slammed into the Lebanese air force's section of the airport, slightly wounding one Lebanese soldier.

Six U.S. Navy warships providing support for the Marines pulled back from Beirut's Mediterranean coast during the rocket attack and steamed out of sight, but there was no word whether any rockets fell near them.

The attack appeared to mark a setback in talks between the government and Druse leaders over sending the Lebanese army into the mountains when the Israeli army pulls back to new lines in the south. The Druse claim the Christian-dominated army supports the Christian militias.

State radio said some shells exploded near Israeli army positions south and east of the airport, prompting Israeli soldiers to open fire with machine guns that scared motorists off the road.

The Christian-Druse feud has persisted for months in the central mountains. The Israelis have said they plan to pull back to southern Lebanon to extricate themselves from the sectarian fighting and reduce casualties from Palestinian guerrilla ambushes.

Indiscriminate rocket and shellfire slammed into the airport July 22, during Gemayel's visit to the United States. Leftist Druse leader Walid Jumblatt said his militiamen were responsible for that round of shelling, which killed one person and wounded 23 including three U.S. servicemen.

Pierre Khoury, minister of public works, told reporters at the airport there was no serious damage. He said one shell landed near the airport entrance and two others hit runways. Reporters saw glass blown out of administrative offices, apparently the result of the rockets exploding nearby.

The violence erupted after McFarlane returned to Beirut on Tuesday, having failed to induce Syria or Israel to commit themselves to a timetable for withdrawing their troops from Lebanon.

Report Soviet Nuke Sub Sunk

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Soviet nuclear submarine carrying 90 crewmen sank in the North Pacific in June, almost certainly causing a "substantial loss of life," according to a report by CBS News.

Vigorous rescue efforts drew the attention of U.S. defense officials who learned that a submarine had sunk but have not yet determined what caused the accident, the network reported Wednesday night. There was no evidence of radioactive contamination, the network said. Defense Department spokesman Army Lt. Col. Tom Jones said, "We can neither confirm nor deny the story at this point."

The network said the submarine hull had been raised in recent days from waters off the Kamchatka Peninsula, where the Soviet Union has a naval base at Petropavlovsk.

An unidentified intelligence source was quoted as saying "there was almost certainly substantial loss of life."

The Soviets lost another nuclear-powered submarine near Britain in 1970. Three years ago, one caught fire off Japan and wallowed disabled for days until it was taken under tow.

Additionally, a diesel-powered Soviet submarine was lost in mid-Pacific in 1974 after a series of internal explosions. In a massive then-secret project, the CIA recovered the front third of the vessel, including the bodies of 70 sailors.

The United States has lost two nuclear submarines in accidents, the Thresher off Cape Cod in 1963 with 129 men and the Scorpion in mid-Atlantic in 1968 with 99.

Flag, Pole For Humber House

By ANGELA LINGERFELT
Reflector Staff Writer

A dedication ceremony for the presentation of a flag and a flagpole was held Wednesday at the historic Robert Lee Humber House on the corner of West Fifth and Washington streets.

The flag and flag pole were donated by descendants of Marshall D. Whitehurst and Elizabeth Taylor Whitehurst.

"Like the Fleming home, which is now our chamber of commerce, it (the Humber House) too, has reached its peak of excellence ... I wish to give an American flag and a flagpole of most durable qualities," said Jeannie Cox Brown Whitehurst, whose husband, Samuel Clayton Whitehurst III, is the great grandson of Marshall D. Whitehurst and Elizabeth Taylor Whitehurst.

At the ceremony, Walter Faulkner, president of the Greenville Area Preservation Association, presented a plaque recognizing the Humber House's designation by the U.S. Department of the Interior as a National Historic site.

"I am pleased to present this plaque. It will be displayed with all the pride of Greenville and Pitt County," Faulkner said.

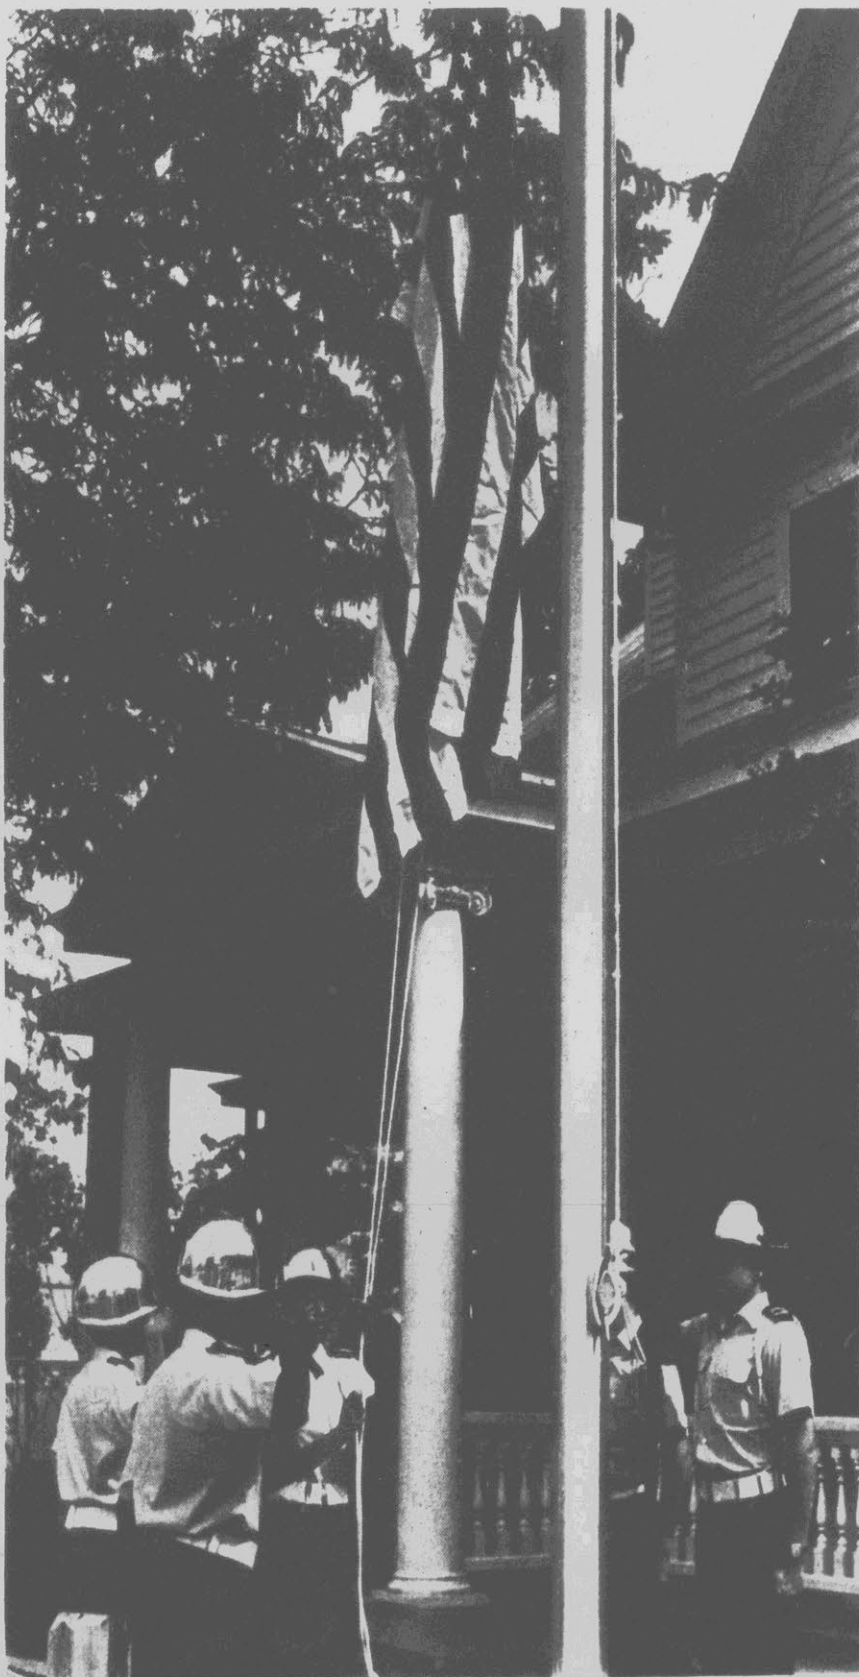

He added that the plaque "is to my knowledge, the first of its kind to be displayed in Pitt County."

Also participating in the ceremony were Mayor Percy Cox, Pitt County Board of Commissioners Chairman Charles Gaskins and the Rev. William J. Hadden. The D.H. Conley High School JROTC Color Guard performed the flag service.

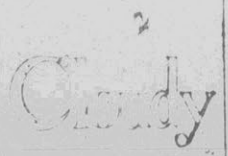

The house, built by Robert Lee Humber Sr., was the home of Robert Lee Humber Jr. for many years during his career in public service. Dr. Humber was instrumental in the establishment of the State Museum of Art and received international acclaim for his work toward world peace.

"The flag is important to our community and will serve as a reminder of the great gentleman we had in our midst," Gaskins said.

The home has been leased to the North Carolina Division of Archives and History for a regional office.

Shedding Light

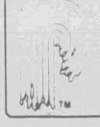

NEW YORK (AP) — An Army device used to penetrate the darkness is working in peacetime for people with night blindness.

A three-pound "optical device," used by medical corpsmen and air rescue teams who need to see in the dark, has been converted by ITT Corp. into a 12-ounce night-vision aid resembling a monocular operaglass.

The new instrument is aimed at helping the nation's more than 100,000 victims of retinitis pigmentosa (RP), a degenerative disease of the retina and the leading cause of non-accidental blindness in the United States.

Some 3 million persons are afflicted by the disease worldwide, according to ITT.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I had enough guilt this week without reading that because I have a high school education and a white collar job, I am increasing my husband's risk of a heart attack.

The survey that was done at the University of North Carolina really puzzles me. If education and a good job are a lethal combination for men, then how come I didn't get a heart attack when my husband had a Ph.D. and a white collar job to which I contributed nothing but a ring on my finger and another one around his collar?

Besides, it wasn't more than two years ago that another survey came out that said since the return of so many women to the work force, there has been a definite increase in heart attacks among women because in invading a man's world we fell susceptible to their business pressures and anxieties.

So it would seem that the family that matriculates and escalates together...hyperventilates together.

The amazing thing about these surveys are the mysteries no one has answered. Why are women both the carriers and the victims of these heart attacks?

Why, if holding down a job outside the home makes you sick, would men want to keep it to themselves and exclude women?

If housework is such a healthy job, then how come we can't lure more men to it? I asked my husband this the other night and he said, "Nonsense. I know a lot of men who would jump at the chance to say home, raise children, cook, do the laundry and not have management breathing down their necks."

As we turned on the TV set, I kept that thought. During the next three hours, there were 38 commercials geared toward keeping house and raising children. There were women fighting "disgusting roaches," wax build-up, peeling paint, corroded ovens, oily peanut butter, lazy laundry detergents, stinking kitchen odors, pesky termites, backed-up sinks, tension headaches induced by dogs and kids, cars that wouldn't run, too much caffeine, deodorants that let down, garbage tumbling out of weak bags, grease that clung to the walls, handprints that wouldn't come off, toilets that smelled and clothes stains that would take the sight out of a good eye.

As we clicked off the set, I said to him, "I just realized how selfish I have been staying home having fun and letting you go out to work. 'One of these days' is now! All of this is yours!"

"Sweetheart," he said, "I love you too much to allow you to make that kind of a sacrifice and jeopardize your health."

The answer seems apparent. Maybe if both of us shared in the giddiness of housework and the body-destructing job outside the household, we could reduce the risk from a heart attack to simple heartburn. There's a cure for that!

Experienced Eye Needed For Shopping

By FRED McNEESE

The tribulations of furniture buying:

The living room suite that looked just right in the showroom has somehow grown between store and home. It fits into the living room but the family doesn't.

The chair bought from the back of a truck parked at the corner last week has shed a leg.

Buying furniture can be a joy — or years of living with an eyesore.

In an attempt to take at least a little of the sting out of furniture buying, the Southern Furniture Manufacturers Association has published three brochures for consumers. "Do's & Don'ts When You Buy Furniture," "When You Buy Wood Furniture," and "When You Buy Upholstered Furniture" together contain more than 50 pages of information on furniture purchasing and care.

Nancy High, the association's director of communications, said the Furniture Industry Consumer Advisory Panel suggested the brochures because, "Panel members determined over the years, as they reviewed complaints about furniture, that most people don't know how to make good consumer decisions about furniture because they don't buy furniture very often."

"Their consumer skills are not kept up to date."

The seven-member panel was established in 1973 to act as an informal complaint handling agency, Ms. High said.

Attempts to solve problems are first made by opening lines of communication among buyer, retailer and manufacturer.

Although the panel has no authority to enforce action, a panel brochure says it can function effectively by obtaining a review of the complaint by high ranking management and recommending appropriate action.

Some problems can't be solved to everyone's satisfaction because of the way the furniture industry operates.

"If the problem involves merchandise that is over a year old, we are not very effective in helping people," Ms. High said. "There is a feeling in the industry that if there is a defect in the manufacturing, it will manifest itself within the first year."

Because furniture makers receive no wearability guarantees from fabric manufacturers, they offer none to consumers.

Fabrics sometimes cause major problems, Ms. High said.

"There are times when a fabric that is defective slips through the inspection, there may be a defect in the fabric itself or there are problems with the tailoring."

"Sometimes, people just make a poor selection. They often see a little swatch of cloth and they order a chair done in it. And, when the chair comes in, it doesn't look like the chair they think they have ordered."

Ms. High said consumers' most common mistake is buying furniture that doesn't fit the room for which it is being bought.

"People must realize that furniture looks much different in the store than it does in the home," she said. "The furniture looks smaller on the retail floor than it is going to look in the living room or in other parts of the home."

She suggests people take a simple scale drawing of the room to the store so they can measure the dimensions of the furniture and get some idea of how it will look at home.

She recommends visiting several stores.

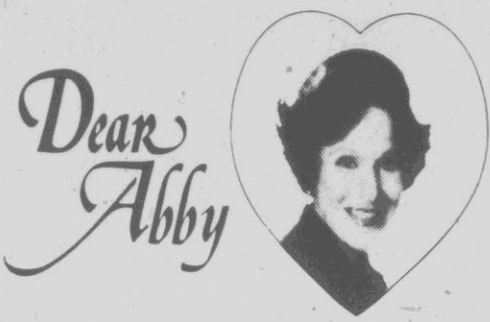

"You really need to cost compare," she said.

Back-of-truck specials should be avoided.

"Such operators usually have a plausible story such as a retailer couldn't pay for the order and, rather than return the shipment, they've been authorized to sell it at cost," an association brochure says. "There may be fairly good looking furniture on view, but the unwary purchaser may find the boxed furniture is not the same style, is of lesser quality, or even broken — the truck and driver long gone."

Ms. High said another red flag is a salesman who demands all the money before delivery. A third to half of the cost is the standard down payment.

"There are many reasons for not giving all the money up front," Ms. High said. "I think the most important is, if there is a problem with the furniture after it is delivered, you have very little to bargain with."

Friends Don't Judge Houses

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am a 13-year-old girl, and my problem is my house. You see, we live in a middle-class neighborhood, but my parents aren't as wealthy as everyone else. Our house is falling apart, but we can't afford to fix it up, and it really is a disgrace.

I'm losing all my friends because I'm too embarrassed to invite anybody over. They keep inviting me to their houses, but I can't ask them back because I don't want them to know I live in a dump.

Please help me before I lose all my good friends. Sometimes I feel so bad I just burst into tears.

BURSTING IN BUFFALO

DEAR BURSTING: Would you drop a good friend because you discovered she lived in a "dump"? True friends judge you on what you are, not the kind of house you live in.

DEAR ABBY: I am dating a very beautiful and sensitive woman who has been beaten by her father, brothers, ex-husband and boyfriends. She is 42, and I am 38. When we started going together (a year ago), she promised that I would be the only man in her life.

Last week she admitted to having had sex with three other men while going with me. I forgave her, then I found out that a fourth man had given her a lobster for Mother's Day. Knowing that a man doesn't give a woman a lobster for nothing, I questioned her, and she admitted she had had sex with him, too. I became upset and jealous and unintentionally sprained her wrist and yanked her hair.

She said my actions had hurt her more than all the fractures she had received from all the other men put together, and she never wants to see me again.

Since this was the first time I ever did anything like that, don't you think she should give me another chance so I can prove it will never happen again?

Problems Of Adjusting

Carolina Telephone & Telegraph spokesmen say the current strike against the Bell System apparently will not affect users in eastern North Carolina except for a possible wait on long distance information inquiries.

That's good news. We, like the rest of this nation, have come to rely on our telephones as a member of the family, or of the business, and any interruption is serious.

But the Communications Workers of America and its more than 400,000 members who work for the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. also have problems — wages and job security — that carry over into the lives of the vast majority of Americans.

CT&T's Michael J. Pittman took note of that situation, pointing out that his own company and others are "seeing more and more automation and as such, conventional jobs are disappearing."

With that kind of change going on in the workforce and in technology, we probably can expect more interruptions as this nation, its businesses and its workers adjust to today's life.

Worthwhile Project

The Pitt-Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce this week mailed out some 4,300 booklets to East Carolina University and Pitt Community College incoming students.

The booklets will give the students tuition rates, academic calendar, student activities and much other information they will need upon coming to school for the fall. There is also information about Greenville and the area which will assist students in meeting their needs here. The students will also find information on locating a parttime job and there is information on how to find housing in the area.

It is a desirable chamber project which we hope will make living and attending school in Greenville easier for the new students.

Treasuries Bulge

WASHINGTON (AP) — If campaign treasuries bulging early in an election scare off potential competitors, a lot of incumbent senators won't have any opposition in the 1984 elections.

But that piece of conventional political wisdom seems destined to go the way of many other such "truisms," as the soaring costs of campaigns and the explosion of PAC money reshape the nature and timing of election efforts.

It may only be the summer of 1983 — 15 months before the 1984 general election — but campaign fund-raising is going full blast.

Already, 31 incumbent senators have raised more than $10 million for their 1984 re-election campaigns. They have stashed $9.6 million in bank accounts across the country, ready to pour it out to beat back opponents' efforts to unseat them.

The political action committees are a major source for this early surge of money. More than $2.4 million has poured from the PACs into the Senate campaign treasuries by midyear — up 62 percent from the same period in 1981.

At least 11 incumbents have already collected more than $100,000 from PACs. Only three had done so in 1981, Federal Election Commission reports say.

This all suggests that the 1984 Senate campaigns will top the $114 million spent in 1981-82 — the current record — including $21.7 million in PAC money.

Big campaign war chests don't seem to have done much good at scaring off opponents this year.

John Tower has one of the biggest, sitting on a $1.6 million bankroll to start his effort to keep the Texas seat in Republican hands.

But Bob Krueger, the former congressman who almost knocked off Tower in 1978, is back again. He's got almost $200,000 in the bank. And state Sen. Lloyd Doggett, who wants the Democratic nomination just like Krueger, already has a bankroll of $400,000, much of it left over from his previous campaigns.

And that doesn't even count Rep. Kent Hance or former Texas Gov. Dolph Briscoe, who are thinking about making a bid.

Jesse Helms has already raised $1.7 million — and spent $1.5 million of that. But, as certain as anything can ever be in politics, North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt will challenge the Republican incumbent in what promises to be one of the most expensive and most heated Senate campaigns ever.

And Chuck Percy has $609,861 in the bank, including the proceeds from a dinner featuring Ronald Reagan. But Rep. Tom Corcoran is trying to take the GOP nomination in Illinois away from him, while Rep. Paul Simon, former Percy opponent Alex Seith and state controller Roland Burris are off and running on the Democratic side.

Conversely, a lack of early money doesn't seem to do much to encourage opponents — at least in Kansas. Nancy Kassebaum, the GOP officeholder, had only about $86,000 in campaign money raised as of July 1, but various prominent Kansas Democrats have repeatedly turned down those urging them to challenge the first-termer.

One of the ironies of politics today is that how much money the incumbent spends is not nearly as important as how much the challenger spends.

One academic investigation of House races — by Gary Jacobsen of the University of California at San Diego — suggests that the more the challenger spends, the more likely the challenger is to win. The incumbent's spending seems to have a far smaller impact on the outcome because it is mainly a reaction to what the opponent is spending.

Nevertheless, politicians facing re-election fervently believe they need to spend every possible campaign dollar to win another term. The inhabitants of the Senate facing the voters next year are no exception, having made a good start on making the 1984 elections the most expensive ones in history.

RALEIGH — The guy's a troublemaker. He's never hurt anyone, but he's repeatedly getting convicted of one offense or another. One judge has already given him a break by putting him on probation. Now, convicted of yet another non-violent crime, it looks like he's going to prison.

Under a program about to get started in North Carolina, this troublemaker may not end up in prison where it will cost the taxpayer $9,000 a year to feed, clothe and house him. He may end up in the Division of Adult Probation's intensive probation program.

With intensive probation, a convict lives and works at home, just like anyone else on probation. But, under this pro-

WASHINGTON — Those of us in the news business are constantly concerned about what we call our "right of access," by which is meant our right to cover public trials and to look at public records. Here in Washington a very different "right of access" is the constant concern of lobbyists and politicians. They are thinking about the right of access that money buys.

All of us should think about this problem, and persons who are serious about public affairs should read Elizabeth Drew's new book, "Politics and Money." Ms. Drew is Washington correspondent for The New Yorker; she is a brilliant reporter and a graceful writer; here she has put together a disturbing study of the effect of money on life on Capitol Hill.

Specifically, her book is concerned with the rivers of money that are fed by campaign contributions from corporations, labor unions, trade associations and special interest groups. She touches only incidentally upon money paid to members of Congress in the form of lecture fees.

The practice of giving "awards" to members, disclosed recently by The Wall Street Journal, also is outside her realm — but these additional sources of money would serve only to make her picture more somber.

We are talking about big money — about the millions upon millions of dollars that are spent in congressional and presidential campaigns. There is soft money and hard money, PAC money and committee money. It rolls in from direct-mail solicitations and from fund-raising dinners and cocktail parties, but mostly it rolls in from those who, want to buy something.

Are we talking about buying votes on particular bills? Are we talking about outright bribery? No, says Elizabeth Drew, the system is rarely so crude. What do the investors expect? "At a minimum, they expect access." The person who contributes $500 or $1,000 expects to talk directly with his congressman, and not with the congressman's administrative aide. He expects to get through on the telephone. He expects his letters to receive personal attention.

With access goes an opportunity to educate a member in some area of legislative concern. Few members are intimately familiar with problems of banking, oil production, sugar imports, drug licensing and the hiring of immigrant labor. The lobbyist who has gained a right of access can give his spiel, tell his story, make his case.

"If an issue doesn't involve a high moral principle, and if it doesn't directly affect an important constituency group, the member is open to persuasion. He who has access is most likely to persuade."

In her final chapter Ms. Drew offers several recommendations for reform. She supports public financing of congressional campaigns, with enforceable ceilings on what any candidate could accept from political action committees. She would require radio and TV stations to give a certain amount of air time to candidates and would prohibit the candidates from buying additional time on their own. She would reimpose limits on expenditures by independent committees.

Her diagnosis of the political illness, in my own view, is better than her prescription for a cure. Beyond question, the immense amounts of money that now are raised and spent on campaigns are eroding public confidence in the Congress. Ms. Drew is quite right: Raising money gets to be an obsession, and obsessed people do irrational things.

But her reforms have been proposed off and on for the past 20 years, and never have commanded support in both houses at the same time. Public funding would give incumbents an unfair advantage. Ceilings on spending raise serious constitutional issues. Her "free time" proposal understandably would be resisted by broadcasters who are in business to sell commercial time, not to give it away. But "Politics and Money" is a provocative, unsettling book. There is still time, before the 1984 campaigns get fully under way, for Congress to consider bills to make a bad situation at least a little better.

Reagan May Lose On Defense

WASHINGTON — The gratuitous slap in the face to Ronald Reagan in response to his latest appeasing gesture toward the feminist movement has intensified doubts inside the White House that the president can win a second term by continuing to play defense.

President Reagan was described by associates as furious when Polly Madenwald, national president of the Business and Professional Women's federation, indicated as "degrading" his light humor complimenting the civilizing impact on men of women. He wanted to send her a poison-pen letter, rare for Reagan.

But less important than the president's visceral reaction toward the feminist movement's habitual bad manners is what the incident shows about the early 1984 re-election political strategy charted by Reagan political advisers worried sick about the bad news in their private polls.

"We're playing on the other guy's field," one insider critical of that strategy told us. That indeed has been the course charted for the president in recent weeks — mainly by well-organized Michael K. Deaver, the president's deputy chief of staff and long-time confidant. To its critics, this is a formula for another one-term presidency.

The strategy derives from private polls that hardly confirm rampant optimism in Republican ranks. Apart from the widely publicized gender gap and black Reaganphobia, these surveys show Reagan barely defeating Sen. John Glenn in popular votes and actually losing the electoral vote, thanks to swings of Southern states.

Beginning with the education blitz orchestrated by Deaver, the president has been defending himself before hostile groups on issues where the polls show him weak. Master advanceman Deaver's tactic has been to publicly display the president as more sympathetic to blacks, woman and the poor. The speech on open opportunity before the American Bar Association, the creation of a federal commission on hunger and, most recently, Reagan's ill-fated impromptu appearance before the International Federation of Business and Professional Women all fit the strategy.

That last fiasco reveals the limits of Deaver's tactics. In seeking to appease pressure groups committed to policies antithetical to his own, the most ideological, most conservative president in more than 50 years has nothing of substance to say to them. Deaver has given him a schedule but no program.

Lacking proposals, Reagan falls back on archaisms. Trying to convince the world he is no racist, the president on two successive days publicly recalled that his father never let him see "Birth of a Nation," the racist silent film. That same era was evoked when the president, overreacting to a bungled Business and Professional Women's tour of the White House by going across town to address them, fell back on old-fashioned gallantry toward women that was to cause him much trouble.

While failing to win converts, the president loses the dynamism necessary for re-election. "Ronald Reagan is not really Ronald Reagan when he's on the defensive," one inside critic of what's happening told us. "To be himself, he has to be on the offensive." When the president is talking about black rights, feminism and hunger instead of freeing America's competitive spirit from taxes and government regulation, he is not on the offensive.

Strength For Today

Stories have been told for generations about people who were converted to a devout Christian faith by apparently chance circumstances.

There is a famous story of the Bibles which some generations ago were distributed among Koreans because a ship carrying the Bibles wrecked in a storm and the Bibles were cast on the Korean shore. Since they were written in Chinese, they were read in many Korean homes and prepared the people for the later arrival of Christian missionaries.

In another such incident, it was the chance reading of a Bible that Jerry McAuley, the river pirate and one of the most wanted criminals of his day, was converted to become a profound Christian influence in his generation.

These examples reveal the infinite number of channels by which God's grace is brought into our hearts. The important thing is that our hearts be prepared to receive this grace.

Probation Won't Be Like It Has Been

gram, he's got two probation officers and he's going to see them much more frequently than does someone on regular probation. If the program works correctly, he should feel like he's got a shadow.

"This program requires a minimum of five to seven contacts a week," says George Barnes, chief of administrative services for the division. There'll be regularly scheduled meetings between probation officer and the convict and there'll be non-scheduled meetings, too.

The probation officers will work as a team with a maximum of 25 clients. One officer will work surveillance. He'll go out into the field, checking that the probationers are where they're supposed to be. If they've got a 6 p.m. curfew, which many will have, he'll check their homes at that time. He'll check to see that they show up at work or any place else they're told to be.

"We'll check up on the person at home, on the job, wherever he may be, up to four or five times a day. There'll be curfew checks, late night checks, early morning checks," said division director Charles Cohoon.

The second officer will handle the convict's treatment programs. He'll offer him the same counseling any probationer receives and he'll line up drug or alcohol treatment if needed. But, instead of seeing the client only once a month, he'll see him several times a week.

Everyone in the program will be required to have a job and they'll be assigned to 32 hours of community service each month. That service should pretty much eat up their weekends.

State officials have high hopes for the program based on Georgia's experience. For the convict, the chances of rehabilitation are considered greater. He is watched closely enough that any pattern of alcohol or drug abuse should be broken. At the same time, he holds a job, contributes to the support of himself and his family and he gets work experience.

The savings for the state could be astronomical. Consider Cohoon's hopes that 40 officers are hired — at a cost of about $600,000 — to handle 300 convicts. If that many people are kept out of prison, it relieves the state of the need to build a medium security prison unit which costs about $37 million. In addition, the state doesn't have to hire 500 prison guards and other personnel to run that prison.

The general figure used to estimate the cost of maintaining one inmate for one year is $9,000. In that case, this program would save $4.5 million a year.

The General Assembly approved the program during the 1983 session, Cohoon says. The program wasn't given any direct funding, Barnes said. Instead, the Department of Correction will fund the program by using some of the money it is saving because of the recent drop in the prison population.

No Secret To A Longer Life

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — If all diseases were eliminated, the average maximum life expectancy would still be no more than 85 to 95 years, according to a physician at the University of North Carolina.

"The cause of aging is unknown, but it looks like each person has a biological clock that simply wears out or turns off with time," says Dr. Phil Sloane of the Department of Family Medicine at UNC-Chapel Hill.

Reports of areas in Ecuador, Russia and India where people reportedly lived to be well over 100 years old once led researchers to believe that there might be a formula for long life.

But Sloane said studies have shown that people who claimed to be over 100 years old greatly exaggerated their ages.

"The number of people who actually live to be more than 100 is very limited," Sloane said.

He said the most significant evidence that life can be prolonged by adopting certain habits came from a diet-modification study in the 1930s. The study showed that rats with severely restricted diets from birth lived longer than other rats.

The rats that lived longer, however, were subjected to painful starvation that resulted in late sexual maturation. Sloane said it was doubtful that human beings would want to undergo such a regimen.

Even if human beings were found to respond to diet in the same way, Sloane said, "modifying diet to slow the biological clock doesn't seem to have much promise."

He said gerontologists are more interested in helping people adapt to aging than trying to prevent it.

Successful aging is largely a matter of coming to grips with the loss of familiar roles in life and the loss of physical capacity, Sloane said. He said many people over age 65 do cope well with the changes.

"About 10 to 20 percent are highly successful," Sloane said. "About 60 to 80 percent adjust fairly well. Only 10 to 20 percent, many of whom are in nursing homes, are highly unsuccessful."

Sloane said people who remain healthy as they age typically share certain characteristics.

Those characteristics include keeping their weight down, staying active, having a wide variety of interests, not smoking and drinking in moderation.

"Most people who are healthy as they age insist upon getting exercise," Sloane said.

Parents Challenge Polk Extended School Year

COLUMBUS, N.C. (AP) — Parents challenging the legality of an extended school year say they will file suit against the Polk County Board of Education and the North Carolina Board of Education to halt the experiment.

Walter L. Currie, Asheville attorney for Polk County parents opposed to the long school year, said state law sets a 180-day school year and does not allow more. Currie said he expected to file a suit against the experiment today.

Polk and Halifax counties are the only school systems in the state that volunteered for a state project that adds 30 minutes to each school day and 20 days to each school year.

The school board said the program should improve Polk County test scores, among the lowest in the region last year.

Under the program, Polk County students would go to school for 200 days instead of 180 and for seven hours per day instead of six and a half.

But a group of about 1,000 Polk County parents has hired lawyers to try to stop the program before school starts Monday.

"There will be a number of different bases for the suit," Currie said. "In a nutshell, it will be the legality of the action taken by the state board and local board. There will also be constitutional questions, as well as a challenge of the action based on state statute."

Polk County School Superintendent James E. Benfield said a member of the state attorney general's staff has told him, "It looks like everything is in order and for us to continue as planned."

"We anticipate everything is legal, and we plan to continue on," he said. "I feel like once they see the benefits of the program, most people will like it. It can't do anything but help students."

Reeves McGlohn, special assistant to the state superintendent of public instruction in Raleigh, said Wednesday, "There is no way to measure what kind of an impact such a suit might have on the extended school day program in Polk County."

"We feel strongly, whatever setbacks they might encounter, those people (Polk school officials) have the ability and the inclination to carry out the concept of the extended school day and school year," he said.

General Statute 115C-84 says in part, "There shall be operated in every school in the state a uniform school term of 180 days for instructing pupils."

The statute says the state board can shorten a school year by 60 days, but does not address lengthening a school year.

Bur Kay Webb, an attorney with the education section of the Attorney General's Office, said, "In conjunction with the state's other powers, it would give them the discretion to lengthen it. If they were going to extend it (the extended year) to the whole school system, I imagine that might require a change in the statute."

Vote Strict Waste Rules

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina Commission on Health Services Wednesday adopted four new hazardous wastes rules that are stricter than federal regulations.

The commission approved the rules unanimously despite warnings by the North Carolina Citizens for Business and Industry that the rules might go farther than state law allows.

Gov. Jim Hunt proposed the rules after the General Assembly failed to pass a separate bill regulating hazardous waste landfills.

The rules would:

- Ban liquid hazardous waste from burial in a landfill.

- Require that a 5-foot-thick clay line and a detection system for leaks also be installed below the artificial liner that the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency regulations require.

- Require all generators, treaters, storers and disposers of hazardous waste report annually on how much hazardous waste they handle.

- Permit no hazardous wastes to be put in landfills for which there are "technically and commercially feasible alternatives" such as recycling and detoxification.

The four rules had been included in a Senate bill that did not pass in the 1983 General Assembly after the House — which wanted stricter measures — could not agree to a compromise.

Sheriffs Voice 'Image' Concern

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina Sheriff's Association is out to get Andy Taylor, Buford Justice and Roscoe Coltrane.

Concerned about their public image as portrayed in films and television, the state's sheriffs have signed a petition calling on the entertainment industry to stop tarnishing their reputations.

The petition was presented to Carey Biddick, president of the sheriffs' national association, which is heading the protest.

About 80 sheriffs attending the annual conference in Asheville this week signed the petition. About 20 did not attend.

Host Sheriff Thomas H. Morrissey of Buncombe County said the portrayal of the typical sheriff in a "sloppy, unprofessional, bumbling manner," is unfair and untrue.

"But it gives a false impression to the public of what he really is," Morrissey said.

He pointed to the television program "Dukes of Hazzard," which features stumbling sheriff Roscoe Coltrane, the film "Smokey and the Bandit," with Jackie Gleason as Buford Justice, and North Carolina's Andy Griffith, who portrayed small-town sheriff Andy Taylor, as examples of the chief offenders.

"We have a great sense of humor," Morrissey said. It's just that the sheriff's don't want to be stereotyped. "We're not asking to be the good guys," he said, but just true-to-life.

Part of the image problem, Morrissey said, stems from sheriffs getting their post through the ballot box. "People consider elected sheriffs more politicians than professionals," he said, "which I don't think is necessarily the case, at least in North Carolina."

That image is aided and abetted by the entertainment industry's casting of sheriffs, Morrissey said. That started, he said, when Joe Higgins, the fat Hollywood deputy, looked into the camera with his mirrored sunglasses and rumbled, "You in a heapa trouble, boy."

Morrissey said the sheriffs association doesn't have the money to run a media campaign to counter its members' negative image. Instead, it will try to pressure the entertainment business directly.

Tobacco Prices Mostly Higher

By The Associated Press
Flue-cured tobacco prices were mostly higher on the South Carolina and Border North Carolina and the Eastern belts Wednesday, while there was little change on the Old and Middle Belt, the Federal-State Tobacco Market News Service said.
Gains over Tuesday ranged from $1 to $4 per hundred on the Border Belt with good, fair lugs and primings making up the bulk of sales. Volume was light to moderate.

Gross sales Tuesday totaled 5,106,616 pounds, averaging $154.47 per hundred — down 61 cents from Monday. The season total is 23,837,757 pounds, averaging $148.92.
The Flue-Cured Stabilization Corp. received 27.1 percent of Border Belt gross sales Tuesday.

Grades of primings and nondescript on the Eastern Belt improved $1 to $6 per hundred pounds from Tuesday, while most lugs and cutters were either unchanged or $1 higher.
Lugs and primings still made up about 75 percent of the marketings, with sales graded good to fair. Volume of sales ranged from moderate to heavy.

Tuesday's sales grossed 6,358,868 pounds to an average of $160.57 per hundred, up $2.41 from Monday. Season sales reached 27,500,836 pounds averaging $154.41.
Stabilization receipts were 43.7 percent of gross sales Tuesday and 43 percent for the season.

On the Old and Middle Belt, changes in grade averages were mostly $1 to $2 per hundred, with the bulk selling between $122 to $152 per hundred.
Fair and low quality primings continued to dominate the markets, followed by fair quality lugs. Volume was light to moderate.
Sales in the Middle Belt Tuesday grossed 1,002,521 pounds and averaged $145.76 per hundred pounds, up $3.42 from Monday. So far this season, 3,707,585 pounds have returned $142.65 per hundred.

Stabilization received 26 percent Tuesday and 27.3 percent for the season.

Concerned Over Commitments

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. military activity in Latin America and Africa is drawing attention to America's widespread defense commitments and underlining a key Pentagon concern about a possible manpower shortage.

The current maneuvers involve a relatively small number of America's 2.1 million uniformed personnel and are of generally short duration with the exception of the six-month-long series of exercises in Central America.

But they highlight a potential problem that U.S. military leaders and experts have warned about publicly in recent months — America doesn't have enough troops to fulfill all its commitments at once. Should greater numbers of troops be needed for a longer time, there would be manpower shortages.

Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., the new Army chief of staff, told reporters at the Pentagon earlier this week that "traditionally, we've had a range of contingency needs that probably exceed the force capabilities that we've been able to generate. That probably applies now."

Similar warnings have been sounded by other military leaders in recent months. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, in arguing for the Reagan administration's record $1.8 trillion Pentagon buildup, says the money is needed to fulfill all the U.S. commitments abroad.

The United States is now taking part in three overseas exercises, in addition to moving about 550 men to the Sudan to operate and defend U.S. AWACS surveillance planes. The big jets were moved there to monitor the attempt of the U.S.-backed Chad government to repulse Libyan-supported rebels.

In Central America, the first elements of what will eventually be 5,000 U.S. ground troops began arriving this week in Honduras for a series of maneuvers that may take up to six months.

Meanwhile, the Navy has committed three battle groups — two aircraft carriers and a battleship — and a total of 19 ships to the maneuvers in what Wickham and other Pentagon officials say is an effort to "send a message" to potential enemies that the United States will support its friends such as Honduras.

A separate, and long-planned, Navy exercise also is under way in South America. Six ships and 2,000 men are part of the 24th annual "Unitas" exercises, a six-month series of naval maneuvers between U.S. ships and vessels from Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela.

In Egypt, 5,500 U.S. troops that are part of a rapid deployment force began joint American-Egyptian maneuvers in the third "Bright Star" exercise. The month-long exercises also involve smaller operations in Sudan, Oman and Somalia and a total of 7,000 U.S. troops in the four countries.

Two weeks from now, 17,000 Army and Air Force personnel will take part in the annual NATO exercises, one of the biggest annual maneuvers of the Western alliance.

In addition, 1,800 Marines have been in Beirut for 11 months as part of a multinational peacekeeping force and will remain there for an indefinite period. Lebanon has asked that the number of Marines be increased.

Except for the lengthy and highly publicized maneuvers in Honduras and the Marines in Beirut, the exercises are among the 120 "significant" military maneuvers the Pentagon plans each year, 90 percent of which are overseas. That figure doesn't include smaller exercises run by each of the four services.

Because of the small number of troops involved, the maneuvers don't tax U.S. commitments, but if the numbers of troops were increased or the maneuvers extended beyond their usual length of three to four weeks, American personnel would have to be shifted.

Wickham and other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff have warned that the current defense buildup, while providing dozens of new weapons systems, could mean a manpower shortage as the new weapons enter service later in the decade.

The Army is at its smallest level in 30 years, Wickham said.

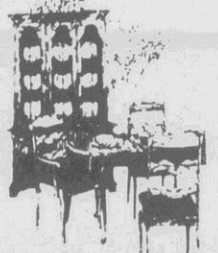

The situation is unlikely to change soon. For the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, the Pentagon requested an increase of 39,000 in authorized troop strength, most of whom would go to the Air Force and Navy to run new weapons.

But Congress has trimmed that back to 12,000 in the Pentagon authorization bill which is awaiting final approval.

'Blood Alley' Has History Of Wrecks And Multiple Deaths

By SCOTT RECKARD
Associated Press Writer

COACHELLA, Calif. (AP) — The half-century-old road dubbed "Blood Alley" for its "history of flaming accidents with multiple deaths" has added 11 more victims to the tally, all of them piled in a car being pursued by Border Patrol agents.

The narrow two-lane highway, which stretches flat and straight across monotonous miles of desert, has racked up 71 deaths in the last three years, including the 11 victims of Wednesday's wreck.

The fatalities, which occurred on a 68-mile segment of California Route 86, add up to "roughly three times higher than normal for such a road," said state Transportation Department spokesman James Larson.

"There has been a history of flaming accidents with multiple deaths along there," Larson said. "It's just, well, bone-jarring."

Those who died Wednesday were packed in a car that led Border Patrol agents on a 30-mile chase at speeds over 100 mph before running a stop sign and being hit broadside by a tractor-trailer truck about 120 miles east of Los Angeles, authorities said.

U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service officials said they believed the car was involved in smuggling illegal aliens. Neither the Border Patrol agents nor the driver of the hay truck was injured, authorities said.

Critics of the north-south highway between Brawley and Indio long have blamed its narrowness for the high death toll and Larson said plans to widen the road to four lanes could take up to 10 years.

The highway is "horrible ... dangerous," said John Haagsma, who owned the $80,000 truck that collided with the car. "Everybody hates that road. They should have fixed it a long time ago."

The carnage has turned some citizens into crusaders seeking improvements on the road at a time when highway funds are tight.

Bill Freeman, 57, a retired air traffic controller from Coachella, said he founded the Highway 86 Improvement Association after a school bus carrying 52 children collided with two trucks in 1977.

A couple in one truck and two brothers in the other died in the flaming wreckage, but the children escaped serious injury.

"Fortunately, it was near one of our few populated areas along the road, and there were people nearby who were able to evacuate them," Freeman said.

In 1980, a bus driver and three students died when another school bus crashed on the highway about 25 miles south of Coachella.

Found Accused 'Despicable'

CLEVELAND (AP) — A judge who sentenced a self-proclaimed Nazi to death for murdering three people on the Cleveland State University campus last year said he found both the man's acts and philosophy "unspeakably despicable."

Cuyahoga County Common

Pleas Judge James J. Sweeney on Wednesday sentenced Frank G. Spisak, 31, to die by electrication on Feb. 1.

Help keep Greenville clean! Call the Right-of-Way Office at 752-4137 for more information.

Freeman blamed the accidents on a combination of drunken drivers, truckers who often make up 40 percent of the traffic, and the boredom and impatience of drivers trapped behind trucks, farm vehicles, and vacationers heading for the Salton Sea.

"They get backed up behind a long string, decide they're just going to pass, they pull out and they don't make it ... head-on," he said.

Luck, however, has helped hold down the death toll and the 1977 school bus crash is just one example, Freeman said.

On July 16, at the same intersection where Wednesday's collision occurred, three Coachella residents were hurt when their car collided with a bus carrying 43 farm laborers. None of the workers was injured.

"So three weeks ago we had a situation in which 43 people could have died just as easily as those 11," Freeman said.

After 28 people died on the highway in 1980, the state posted signs in English and Spanish warning drivers to turn on their headlights when traveling the route. Freeman said the signs worked — for a time.

"It dropped to only six in 1981," he said. "But then, people got used to seeing headlights coming along and stopped paying as much attention."

In 1982, 20 people died in Highway 86 accidents, while six were killed in the first five months of this year, said Kent Miller, of the California Highway Patrol's Sacramento office.

The state transportation commission recently allocated $55 million to widen 27 miles of the highway from two lanes to four.

Documents Reveal Informant's Try For Meeting With Soles

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer
WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Attorneys for state Sen. R.C. Soles, D-Columbus, sought dismissal of political corruption charges because they thought prosecutors tried to use a narcotics dealer and male prostitute to entrap them, according to documents opened Wednesday.

The motion for dismissal and a related motion calling for an investigation of Assistant U.S. Attorney Doug McCullough for alleged ethical violations were opened Wednesday on the order of U.S. District Court Judge James C. Fox.

Fox sealed the motions, which have been withdrawn, before Soles' trial began July 18 because he felt they were highly prejudicial to both sides.

Fox decided Wednesday that portions of the documents remain sensitive and he ordered them deleted before the papers were made public. He said the deleted portions talk about confidential informants, cases pending against other people, "impertinent and scandalous" information about people mentioned and information unrelated to the Soles' trial.

Soles, who is serving his eighth legislative term, was found not guilty Tuesday of aiding and abetting interference with commerce by extortion. Fox dismissed three other charges Monday.

One of the motions released Wednesday sought dismissal of the charges against Soles because McCullough committed ethical violations that irreparably hurt Soles, violated Soles' right to a fair trial and attempted to bypass the attorney-client relationship.

The major violation alleged in the document was a post-indictment investigation of Soles which used an informant from Fayetteville whose name has been removed from the documents. McCullough, in an affidavit attached to the documents, recounted how he learned about the informant and how the man set up a meeting with Soles' attorneys.

McCullough said an investigation by the Fayetteville office of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms uncovered information about possible illegal activities by Soles.

The information came from the informant identified by law enforcement officers as a narcotics dealer and male prostitute. The man said he was trying to blackmail Soles while some people linked to the senator were trying to keep him from talking, the affidavit says.

McCullough said he was interested in four possible areas of misconduct by Soles — attempts to tamper with a potential witness, illegal narcotics transactions, postal fraud involving forged money orders and a fourth item that was deleted from the documents.

The prosecutor said his suspicions were important in light of previous allegations that Soles tried to influence a witness in his own trial, tried to prevent an accident report from being filed in a car crash in which he was involved that resulted from a high-speed chase and lied to a State Bureau of Investigation agent probing election fraud in 1974.

McCullough said he determined the investigation would be proper for gathering evidence that could lead to separate charges but no information was revealed.

He said he never authorized the informant to talk at length with defense attorneys or say why he wanted to speak with Soles.

In a similar affidavit, defense attorney Joe Cheshire said the informant first contacted him June 30 and said he needed to see Soles in person to give him some information about his trial.

Cheshire said the attorneys were suspicious but decided to pursue the matter because the man said the informant dealt with rumors about Soles' arrest for speeding in Fayetteville.

On July 15, three days before the trial, Soles and the attorneys were in Myrtle Beach working on the case when Soles received a message that the man was at the Howard Johnson Motel there. The attorneys contacted the man and attorney Edward L. Williamson and Cheshire met with him at the motel restaurant for about 40 minutes.

Cheshire said the man wanted to talk with Soles alone but the attorneys told him that could not happen until he told them all he knew about Soles.

Cheshire said the man proceeded to relate information about Soles' past which was irrelevant to the trial but could be "terribly embarrassing and damaging."

Before the man left, the attorneys told him not to run, Cheshire said.

"It is clear that this was an overt attempt to subvert the attorney-client relationship existing between the defendant and his attorney and to develop new and more evidence against the defendant for use at the upcoming trial," the motion said.

The attorneys said the meeting damaged their efforts to prepare for the trial, something which led to Fox delaying Soles' trial for two days after a jury was selected.

They also filed a motion calling for the Office of Professional Responsibility in the U.S. Department of Justice and the North Carolina State Bar to investigate McCullough's actions for many of the same reasons.

McCullough filed a response to the motions charging that, "The florid and somewhat reckless language contained (in the motions) ... indicates that both motions may have been filed more for the purpose of creating prejudice against the government with the public and possibly the jury."

McCullough said Wednesday that although the motions were withdrawn, the Justice Department must conduct an investigation. He said officials are reviewing the documents for any unresolved questions and a response is expected about Aug. 12.

When defense attorneys withdrew the motion, they acknowledged that prosecutors were acting within the scope of their duties by conducting the post-indictment investigation.

Australia's Keel Okayed

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — The semifinals start for the challengers in the America's Cup races one day after top contender Australia II's legality as a 12-meter yacht was reaffirmed.

The New York Yacht Club had challenged the validity of the Australia II as a 12-meter, contending that the fins on the revolutionary keel give the boat a deeper draft when heeled over.

But an International Yacht Racing Union committee ruled Wednesday that the yacht is a legal 12-meter in spite of its secret keel which the Australians make a point of keeping hidden from view.

"I'm absolutely thrilled because now I can go ahead with my semifinals and finals and produce a challenger, whomever that might be," Jock Smith told The Associated Press.

Smith, chairman of the neutral International Challenger Race Committee, which will choose a challenger, said the ruling came from the IYRU's chief measurer, Tony Watts.

"The measurement committee unanimously reaffirms that the keel of Australia II is legal," Smith quoted Watts as saying in a Telex Watts sent from London.

The Americans were keeping a low profile immediately after the decision was announced, and the American boats — Liberty, Freedom, Defender and Courageous — stayed out on the water well past 6 p.m.

Jim Ford, press officer for the Defender-Courageous Syndicate, declined to comment on the ruling.

Referring to the crews of Defender and Courageous, he said, "These guys really aren't in a position to comment and the issue is so sensitive that frankly, we'd just as soon they didn't have the opportunity to comment."

The Australians have claimed the Americans are suffering from a case of sour grapes because the Americans did not originate the unusual keel design which increases the speed of Australia II.

Since the first America's Cup race 132 years ago, the Americans have always won the Cup. Historically, the United States has been a world leader in sailing and has taken the defense of the Cup extremely seriously.

The New York Yacht Club, which holds the deed to the America's Cup, will choose an American boat to stage the 25th defense of yachting's top prize in a best-of-seven series beginning Sept. 13.

The four challengers vying for the chance to sail against an American 12-meter are Australia II, Victory '83 of Great Britain, Canada I and Azzurra of Italy.

Australia II is millionaire developer Alan Bond's fourth try to wrest the Auld Mug from America. It has dominated the six other foreign yachts.

The shape of the new keel has been concealed by a plywood and plastic security skirt to shield it from public view each time Australia II is lifted from the water.

Evans' Homer Powers Giants Over Atlanta

By The Associated Press
After San Francisco Manager Frank Robinson cleared the air, Darrell Evans cleared the bases.

Robinson conducted a one-hour, 25-minute meeting before Wednesday's game with West Division-leading Atlanta and then the Giants got a three-run homer from Evans, his 23rd of the season, with two outs in the ninth inning to beat the Braves 7-4.

The meeting, Robinson said, was long because "it was that good. I didn't want it to end, but we had to get ready for the game. It's the best meeting I've ever been associated with. It was time to clear the air a little bit."

Evans, who was outstanding in the first half of the season, had cooled off considerably in recent weeks. But his homer was the second in two days.

"It's nice to get going again," Evans said. "It was frustrating. I only had six or eight RBI since the All-Star game and I hadn't hit a homer in a long time."

The last two days pulled Evans within three of leader Mike Schmidt in the NL homer race.

"The home runs are important for me," Evans said. "This gets me back in the race."

New Duties For Carson

East Carolina University veteran track coach Bill Carson will add two more teams to his coaching duties this school year. In addition to the men's indoor and outdoor track teams, Carson will now be head coach of the women's indoor and outdoor teams, as well as coaching a cross-country team.

Cross country is being returned to the Pirate program this fall, as the ECAC-South will hold a cross-country championship November 5 at the University of Richmond.

The ECAC-South is adding five championships this athletic year, in addition to basketball. This is the first time that East Carolina has fielded a cross-country team since the mid-1970's.

Carson, entering his 17th year on the Pirate coaching staff, is the senior ECU coach. He has also produced more Division I all-America athletes than any other coach in ECU history.

for the home run title, and I've been in that position only one other time, and that was 10 years ago."

Evans walked away from the plate in disgust after fouling a delivery from Terry Forster down the first base line, then ripped the next pitch over the center field fence.

"I didn't get all of it, but you don't have to here (in Atlanta)," Evans said. "In Candlestick, I wouldn't be happy now."

The homer scored Dave Bergman and Johnnie LeMaster, who had singled off loser Steve Bedrosian, 7-5. Evans was the first batter Forster faced.

The victory went to Greg Minton, 6-8, and Gary Lavelle worked the final inning for his 13th save.

The Giants took a 4-3 lead with two runs in the eighth after starter Craig McMurtrey yielded two-out singles to Jack Clark and Jeff Leonard. Chili Davis singled to center to score Clark, and Leonard also scored when the ball got by Dale Murphy.

But the Braves tied the game in the bottom of the eighth on Bob Horner's RBI double.

Despite the victory and the successful meeting, the Giants are still in fifth place in the West, 14½ games behind the Braves, who have a 6½-game bulge over second-place Los Angeles.

Asked how he sees the division pennant race, Robinson said, "What race? I don't see a race. Until somebody closes some ground, there won't be a race. I hope we'll be the ones to do it."

Reds 9, Dodgers 2
Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda also held a meeting, but it was conducted after the Dodgers were bombed in Cincinnati.

"Let's just say I'm upset," Lasorda said after the chewing-out session. "I don't want to talk about it."

Dann Bilardello hit a homer and drove in four runs for the Reds, while Bruce Berenyi survived seven walks by holding the Dodgers to five hits. The nine Cincinnati runs were the most for the Reds since June 30, when they beat San Francisco 15-5.

Phillies 4, Pirates 2
At Philadelphia, Steve Carlton scattered eight hits in 8 2-3 innings to register his 296th career victory and struck out 10 Pittsburgh batters to increase his all-time strikeout lead to 12 over Nolan Ryan.

Joe Lefebvre tripled to knock in the go-ahead run for the Pirates in the seventh after Carlton survived a shaky inning during which the Pirates scored both of their runs.

In the fourth, Carlton walked three, including Marvell Wynne with the bases loaded, and threw wildly after a bunt attempt to allow another run to score.

Astros 4, Padres 3
Dickie Thon slammed a two-out homer off the mezzanine facing in left field to end a 14-inning marathon at the Astrodome.

Thon's blast off losing pitcher Luis DeLeon, 2-4, was his 16th home run of the season and made a winner of Vern Ruhle, 4-3.

Houston had a 3-1 margin going into the eighth, but the Padres tied the game on Alan Wiggins' two-out, two-run single.

Cardinals 9, Cubs 5

At Chicago, St. Louis ended its eight-game losing streak by scoring two runs in the ninth to send the game into extra innings and then getting a two-run single from Ozzie Smith and a two-run homer from David Green, giving him five RBIs in the 13th.

The ninth inning started with Chicago ahead 5-3 and ace reliever Lee Smith on the mound, but Lonnie Smith homered and Green singled in a run to tie the score. Green also had a two-run double in the third.

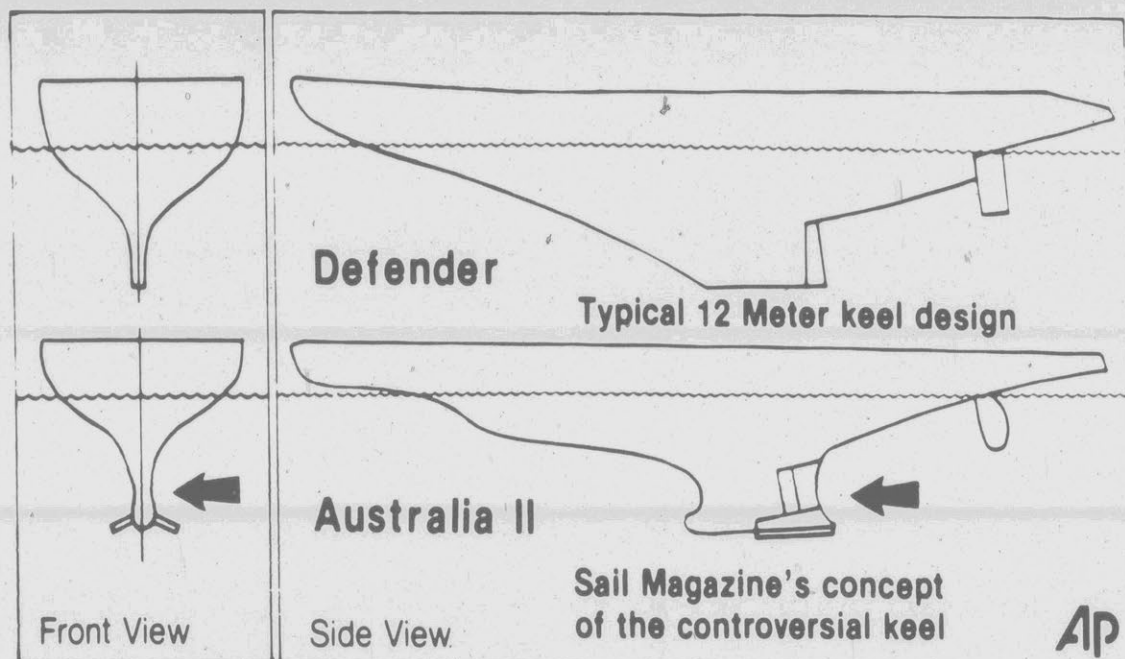

The four St. Louis runs in the 13th made a winner of Dave Rucker, 3-1, the fifth of six Cardinals pitchers.

Expos 5, Mets 3
At Montreal, Bill Gullickson pitched and hit his way to victory over New York.

Gullickson allowed only four hits for 7 2-3 innings, doubled twice and scored three runs for the Expos.

Tim Lincecum twice followed Gullickson doubles with run-scoring singles, while Jim Wohlford also singled in two runs.

Keel Controversy

Controversial Keel

This diagram shows the difference between a typical keel design and the design of the controversial keel based on the concept published in the August 1983 issue of "Sail Magazine."

According to the International Yacht Racing Union, the radical-winged keel of the Australia II is legal so it can participate in the America's Cup competition. (AP Laserphoto)

Rose Runners Meet On Friday

Coaches ask that the candidates come prepared to run as the teams kick off preparations for the 1983 season.

Auburn, UNC, FSU Top South

By ED SHEARER
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — There won't be a great deal of movement in the power structure of college football in the South this fall, even though two of the game's biggest personalities have departed.

Bear Bryant died shortly after retiring with the most victories of any coach in history, but the Alabama team he left will again be in the fight for supremacy in the Southeastern Conference.

Herschel Walker, the Heisman Trophy winner who was expected to shatter the game's career rushing record this year, signed a fat $3.9 million contract with the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League, bypassing his final collegiate season at Georgia. The Bulldogs, who own the nation's best record over the last three seasons (33-3), remain a threat to win the SEC title for the fourth year in a row.

Most preseason forecasts are tabbing the Auburn Tigers as the team to beat in the SEC, but Coach Pat Dye's outfit faces a rugged schedule, toughest of any team in the conference.

North Carolina is expected to capture the Atlantic Coast Conference title, ending Clemson's two-year reign. The Tigers should be strong again, but they are ineligible for the ACC crown because of probation.

Florida State, which turned a rebuilding champion into a 9-3 season last fall, ranks as the area's top independent and could be the best football team in Dixie in 1983.

The Seminoles are blessed with an explosive offense led by quarterback Kelly Lowrey.

"It kind of scares me to death," Coach Bobby Bowden said of the Florida State offense. "I'll tell you what, there was one time during last season that I looked out there and saw us doing things I couldn't believe. I said to myself, 'There's nobody in the world that can stop us.'"

"But I'll tell you there is a way to stop us, and that's to take the ball and ram it down our throats," Bowden said. "Louisiana State and Florida did that to us last year, and if we can't stop the five-, six- and seven-yard runs up the middle on first down, some teams will beat us this year, too."

Florida State's strongest competition in the independent ranks should come from Miami of Florida and Southern Mississippi, which again expects to field a strong team despite the loss of quarterback Reggie Collier.

Auburn has been thrust into the favorite's role in the SEC because of the return of 15 starters from last year's 9-3 team. The Tigers feature two of the league's top running backs in Bo Jackson and Lionel James, a steady quarterback in Randy Campbell and several outstanding linemen — tackle Pat Arrington, guard David Jordan and tight end Ed West on offense and nose guard Dowe Aughtman, tackles Donnie Humphrey and Doug Smith and linebacker Gregg Carr on defense.

The Tigers must contend with Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee and Florida within the SEC and also must take on such outside powers as Texas, Florida State, Southern Mississippi and Maryland, expected to finish second to North Carolina in the ACC.

"I like our football team at this point," Dye said. "But there are so many intangibles and so many variables that determine what kind of season and what kind of record you have. If we had a favorable schedule, then realistically I would be a lot more excited about our chances of finishing high in the nation and the possibility of winning it. I think there is still a chance."

Ray Perkins, a former Alabama great, has assumed the task of succeeding Bryant at his alma mater, leaving the New York Giants of the National Football League for the post.

Perkins has shelved the Wishbone offense, choosing to go with a pro attack, and the Tide should have a potent offense led by quarterback

Walter Lewis, wide receiver Jesse Bendross and running back Linnie Patrick.

"I think we'll have another good team," Coach Vince Dooley of Georgia said. "What we are talking about is being good and being a champion, which has been the standard for three years. He (Walker) may be the difference between those two."

Barry Young, a fullback, will move into Walker's tailback spot. John Lastinger, recovering from a spring knee ailment, will be the quarterback once he's completely healed. All-American Terry Hoage heads a talented defensive secondary, but the defense is expected to be without the services of All-SEC Jeff Sanchez, who has a slow-healing broken left arm.

Elsewhere in the SEC, Florida should again be strong behind quarterback Wayne Peace and linebacker Wilber Marshall, and Louisiana State could challenge with a strong ground game featuring sophomore stars Dalton Hiliard and Garry James.

Mississippi State has one of the SEC's top quarterbacks in John Bond and an excellent receiver in Danny Knight. Vanderbilt is coming off one of its best seasons in years, but lost All-SEC quarterback Whit Taylor. Mississippi will be operating under a new coach, Billy Brewer, and the Rebels are expected to be in a battle with Kentucky to avoid the cellar.

Coach Dick Crum has 12 starters back at North Carolina from an 8-4 team that knocked off Texas in last year's Sun Bowl game.

The Record Team

American relay runners Emmitt King, Carl Lewis, Willie Gault and Calvin Smith (L to R) pose with the American flag on the track of Helsinki Stadium Wednesday evening after setting a new world's record in the 4x100 relay at the World Track and Field Championships. For Lewis, it was his third gold, as he had already won the 100-meter dash and the long jump. (AP Laserphoto)

Lewis Sparks Americans

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — The United States has thrust itself back on top as the world power in sprinting, mainly because of Carl Lewis.

The swift and powerful Lewis, who runs with the speed of a runaway locomotive, anchored the American 400-meter relay team to a world record Wednesday night in the inaugural World Track and Field Championships.

Churning down the final 100 meters to the cheers of 50,000 fans in Olympic Stadium, Lewis swept across the finish line well ahead of his closest pursuers.

As he did, he glanced at the clock.

"When I first looked at it, I thought it said 38.8 (seconds)," said Lewis.

"I did a double-take. Then, I looked again ... and I realized it was 37.8."

Actually, it was 37.86 seconds.

The old record was 38.03 by a United States team in the 1977 World Cup at Dusseldorf, West Germany.

Preceding Lewis on the relay were Emmitt King, Willie Gault and Calvin Smith.

Lewis, Smith and King also had finished 1-2-3 in the men's 100-meter final Monday night, and Lewis led a 1-2-3 finish in the long jump Wednesday night.

The multi-talented 22-year-old from Willingboro, N.J., won with a leap of 8.55 meters (28 feet, three-quarters inch), and was followed by Jason Grimes at 8.29 (27-2 1/2) and Mike Conley at 8.12 (26-7 3/4).

Despite the impressive long jump finish, it was the relay team that commanded the most attention.

The Americans, once the world power in the sprints, had slipped in recent years, failing to win a gold medal in the 100- and 200-meter dashes in the 1972 and 1976 Olympic Games.

And in 1980, the United States boycotted the Summer Games, further diminishing the American sprinters' credibility.

But led by Lewis, who has been ranked No. 1 in the world in the 100 each of the past two years, they are solidly on top again.

It took some devastating performances in the World Championships, however, to make that authoritative.

"We have such confident sprinters in the United States that we can win in any World Championship," said Lewis.

He also said that the depth of the American sprint team was one reason he decided to bypass the 200 in this prestigious meet.

Smith, the world record holder in the 100, is running the 200, along with Larry Myricks and Elliott Quow.

Smith is hoping for the same crowd reaction from the appreciative fans in Olympic Stadium for the 200 that the Americans received in the 400 relay.

"The crowd was really behind us," he said. "They (the fans) kept saying, 'Go, go, USA.'"

The U.S. went — at a sizzling pace. King got off to a good start, Gault turned in a brilliant second leg and Smith followed with a fast 100 meters, before turning over the baton to Lewis.

At that point, though, the American team still was in second place, behind the Soviet Union. But once Lewis starting rolling, there was no doubt that he would win.

The question was whether the Americans would break the world record.

They did — by .17 of a second.

"I didn't see the clock right at first," said Lewis. "Then, when I did, I couldn't believe it."

It didn't take him long to believe it. And when he did, he leaped into the arms of Grimes, who had cut across the infield from the long jump area to congratulate his teammate.

Then, he raced over to celebrate with the other members of the relay, as the crowd stood and applauded the announcement of the world record.

The four took a victory lap around the track, waving American flags, as the fans continued to drown them with cheers.

Surprisingly, it was the first world record for Lewis, the world's best sprinter and long jumper. He does, however, have the best times in history in the 100 and 200 at sea level, and the best distance in the long jump at sea level.

But the outright world record was something special.

"It's a dream come true," he said.

The relay was one of two world records to fall on a crowded program that included eight finals.

Jarmila Kratochvilova of Czechoslovakia shattered the mark in the women's 400 meters, clocking 47.99.

In erasing the mark of 48.16 set last year by Marita Koch of East Germany, the Czech earned her second gold medal of the meet. She also won the 800 Tuesday night.

In spite of Kratochvilova's dazzling double, the woman who most captivated the fans was Mary Decker of the United States.

Decker shattered the myth that the Europeans, led by the Soviet Union, are the world's most dominant distance runners on the track by winning the 3,000-meter race in 8:34.62.

After leading all the way, then being caught entering the final straightaway by Tatyana Kazankina of the Soviet Union, the 1976 Olympic 800 and 1,500 champion, the gritty Decker put on a brilliant finishing kick to win convincingly.

Wednesday's other winners were East Germany in the women's 400-meter relay (41.76), Bert Cameron of Jamaica in the men's 400 (45.05), Ekaterina Fesenko of the Soviet Union in the women's 400 intermediate hurdles (54.14) and Martina Opitz of East Germany in the women's discus (68.94 meters, 226-2).

After four days of competition, the United States leads in gold medals with five and in total medals with 15, including five silvers and five bronzes.

East Germany is second in golds with four and third in totals with 11, while the Soviet Union has three golds and a total of 14 medals.

Today was a day off, before the final three days of competition begin Friday.

Royals Ready To Play But Yankees May Not

NEW YORK (AP) — The Kansas City Royals are in favor of resuming the controversial pine-tar game next week. Now it's decision time for the New York Yankees players, who have two options — play or forfeit.

Meanwhile, the Major League Baseball Players Association must decide whether to contest or forget the matter.

The controversy stems from a July 24 game in which the Royals' George Brett had a two-run homer in the top of the ninth inning disallowed by the umpires because of too much pine tar on his bat.

American League President Lee MacPhail later overruled the decision, and said the game should be resumed Aug. 18 with four outs to go and Kansas City leading 5-4.

The Royals voted 15-10 Wednesday night to play, according to player representative Dan Quisenberry.

"If we played at the end of the year, we'd have to fly all the way across the country from California," he said. "Everybody's tired in August anyway, so what's another game? It's important to get the thing squared away."

Although the Yankees didn't take an official vote, player rep Dave Winfield said a poll of team members Tuesday night showed unanimous opposition to the Aug. 18 makeup.

"You have to look at the negatives," Winfield said. "We could fail to get the two runs we need to win and we'd lose momentum in a very important pennant race."

"At the same time, we would add to our problems by having to play on what would be a day off."

But Yankees' principal owner George Steinbrenner, who is against completing the game before the season ends, said, "It's against our wishes ... but we'll play it."

But the decision may not be his to make.

Don Fehr, counsel to the players' association, said the Aug. 18 date could violate the section of the collective bargaining agreement which states: "No club shall be scheduled or rescheduled if practicable to play more than 20 consecutive days without an open day."

Mark Belanger, special assistant to the players' union, met Wednesday with MacPhail. He said the players association could file for arbitration if it determines that there have been a violation of players' rights or simply drop it.

"Those are the two possibilities," he said. "We hope to come up with something very soon."

There's also the problem of what time the suspended game should begin. Steinbrenner says 2 p.m. EDT, but MacPhail says it would have to be later, probably after 5 p.m., because the Royals play the Detroit Tigers in Kansas City the night before.

Sun Shines On Yankees

By The Associated Press
The next afternoon that Toronto's George Bell goes out to left field at Yankee Stadium, he'll be sure to have his sunglasses with him.

Wednesday's game taught him a lesson.

"There's no excuse for not having glasses," said Toronto Manager Bobby Cox after watching his left fielder lose a fly ball hit by New York's Dave Winfield in the treacherous "sun field" at the Stadium.

The ball dropped for an RBI single in the fifth inning and provided Winfield with his 17th game-winning hit, tops in the American League.

"It's probably my fault," added Cox. "I don't know why I didn't put (Barry) Bonnell in left field. I don't know if Bell ever played left field in Yankee Stadium. It's the toughest sun field in baseball. I talked to him before the game and he said he could play it."

New York Manager Billy Martin was as surprised as anyone that Bell didn't have his glasses on.

"He went out there without glasses," said a disbelieving Martin. "I laughed my head off. He learned about Yankee Stadium."

The Yankees won, 8-3.

In other AL action, Seattle beat Oakland 7-5, Cleveland edged Baltimore 4-3, Boston stopped Texas 4-2, Milwaukee blanked Kansas City 4-0 and Minnesota beat California 4-1. Rain washed out the Chicago-Detroit game.

Yankee starter Dave Righetti, 13-3, allowed nine hits over seven innings. He struck out seven and walked two before giving way to George Frazier in the eighth when the Blue Jays scored their last two runs.

With Toronto leading 1-0 on Alfredo Griffin's RBI single in the top of the fifth inning, Jerry Mumphrey triggered a six-run Yankee uprising in the bottom of the inning off loser Jim Gott, 6-10.

Mumphrey, who later was traded to Houston for Omar Moreno, hit a drive to left-center that fell between Bell and center fielder Lloyd Moseby and rolled to the wall for a triple. Graig Nettles later hit an RBI single before Bell lost Winfield's fly ball in the sun.

Ken Griffey followed with an RBI single and Don Baylor an RBI double. Reliever Roy Lee Jackson later forced home the fifth run with a bases-loaded walk to Butch Wynegar and Jerry Mumphrey's sacrifice fly capped the inning.

It was the sixth victory in eight games for the Yankees, while the stumbling Blue Jays lost for the seventh time in the last eight games.

Mariners 7, A's 5
In Oakland, Ron Roenicke's

three-run homer capped a five-run rally, leading Seattle over the A's and snapping their five-game winning streak.

Matt Young, 9-11, scattered eight hits in 7 1/3 innings as he won for only the second time in his last 10 decisions and broke a three-game Seattle losing streak.

Two relievers finished up for the Mariners, including Ed Vande Berg, who registered his fourth save.

Indians 4, Orioles 3

In Baltimore, Lary Sorensen allowed six hits and struck out nine as Cleveland defeated the Orioles. Sorensen, 6-9, gave up Ken Singleton's three-run homer in the fourth inning for all of Baltimore's runs.

Aggressive baserunning figured in all of Cleveland's runs, starting in the first inning after Alan Bannister singled for the first of his three hits and stole second. Bannister moved to third on a single by Pat Tabler and scored as Andre Thornton grounded into a force play.

Gorman Thomas walked to open the fourth and scored on a double by Ron Hassey as right fielder Dan Ford threw to second in an attempt to get Hassey. Hassey moved to third on an infield out and scored on a suicide-squeeze bunt by George Vuckovich. Toby Harrah then singled, stole second, and scored all the way from second as Bannister beat out a two-out grounder to shortstop Cal Ripken, Jr.

Red Sox 4, Rangers 2

In Boston, Tony Armas slugged a three-run homer and reliever Bob Stanley put down a Texas rally in the ninth inning, leading the Red Sox over the Rangers.

Boston starter Bruce Hurst, 9-8, gave up eight hits, including an RBI triple by Bill Stein and run-scoring single by George Wright in the ninth. Stanley got the last three outs, recording his 22nd save.

Hurst nursed a 1-0 lead for seven innings before Armas unloaded his 25th homer, tops in the AL, off reliever Victor Cruz in the eighth.

Brewers 4, Royals 0

In Kansas City, Moose Haas fired a three-hitter and notched his sixth consecutive victory, pitching Milwaukee over the Royals.

Haas gave up a single to George Brett with one out in the first and then retired 14

Royals in succession until Onix Concepcion doubled with one out in the sixth. A walk to Pat Sheridan with two out in the sixth and a double by John Wathan with one out in the eighth were the only other baserunners the Royals could muster.

Haas raised his season mark to 10-2. He is 6-0 against Western Division teams and has not lost since June 10.

Paul Molitor drove in two runs with a homer and double off Paul Splittorff, 9-5.

Twins 4, Angels 1

In Anaheim, Gary Ward, Dave Engle and Garry Gaetti belted home runs to lead Minnesota over the Angels.

Ward followed a two-out single in the third by Ron Washington with his 18th homer of the season. Engle led off the fourth with his seventh homer, off Geoff Zahn, 8-7. Gaetti closed out the Minnesota scoring with a homer in the ninth, his 17th.

Castillo, 8-9, survived several jams to complete his third game of the season, scattering 10 hits. The Angels broke through in the third on Reggie Jackson's RBI single.

Tottie Robbins On Injured List

By The Associated Press
After letting quarterback Doug Williams get away to the United States Football League, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers came up with the big bucks to keep Lee Roy Selmon.

Although terms were not disclosed, the Bucs announced that Selmon will be the highest paid player at his position in the National Football League. The 6-foot-3, 250-pound defensive end, a three-time All-Pro selection, was the first draft choice ever of the expansion Bucs in 1976.

Williams, a five-year veteran, signed Tuesday with the USFL-expansion Oklahoma Outlaws after contract negotiations for a five-year pact failed with the Bucs.

Meanwhile, the Washington Redskins announced that Coach Joe Gibbs had signed a new five-year contract. Terms of the contract were not released.

"I can think of no one more deserving of this confidence than Joe Gibbs," team owner Jack Kent Cooke said in a statement. "He has been a patriarch of the great Redskins family, molding it into a potent force in professional sports."

The assistant coaches of the Super Bowl champions also were rewarded with new three-year contracts, retroactive to March 1 of this year.

Elsewhere in NFL training camps, the New England Patriots waived place-kicker Dean Dorsey of Toronto and nose tackle Joe Verria of Bridgewater State.

The Patriots were also involved in a trade with the San Francisco 49ers, sending quarterback Matt Cavanaugh for a middle-round draft pick.

New England also agreed to pay the 49ers about half the guaranteed salary due Cavanaugh under his contract.

Miami Coach Don Shula said he plans to use all three of his quarterbacks against the New Orleans Saints this Saturday. Veteran David Woodley, No. 1 draft choice Dan Marino of Pittsburgh and Jim Jensen, a third-year player from Boston University, will share the playing time.

Right tackle Tottie Robbins of the St. Louis Cardinals suffered a bruise to his left knee during contact drills Tuesday night and will miss between two and three weeks of practice, the team announced.

"There is nothing torn and the knee is stable," said offensive line coach Tom Lovat.

Robbins is a former member of the East Carolina football team and had become a starter with the Cardinals in his rookie year last season. San Francisco wide receiver Renaldo Nehemiah, a world-record hurdler, will make his first start of the preseason against the Patriots, according to Coach Bill Walsh. Nehemiah will replace Fred Solomon, who suffered a slight knee sprain in last week's game against the Los Angeles Raiders.

The Houston Oilers claimed former University of Houston defensive lineman Wilson Whitley off waivers.

Tight end Mike Barber ended his holdout by signing with the Los Angeles Rams. Terms of the contract were not released.

Carner Opens Defense Of Henredon Classic

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.

AP Sports Writer

HIGH POINT (AP) — JoAnne Carner may be wondering when she'll win again, but Patti Rizzo was starting to wonder if she'd win at all.

Carner, the LPGA's all-time leading money winner as well as this year's leader opened defense of her Henredon Classic title today. Rizzo, fresh off her first professional triumph in the Boston Five Classic, wouldn't mind making it two in a row.

Rizzo was the 1982 LPGA rookie of the year after winning more than $46,000 in her opening year. Her best finish was a fourth, but she was beginning to think she'd never reach the summit.

"I lost a lot of confidence being out here the first year and a half because I really hadn't done what I wanted to do," Rizzo said. "I was starting to wonder if I could do it or not."

Rizzo did it, but only after slipping behind Australian Jane Lock, who was also looking for her first tour victory. Rizzo shot a 68 on the final day while Lock went to a 73.

Although she earned $26,250, there was a lot more to the triumph.

"Mentally, it brings back a lot of confidence," Rizzo said. "Now that I have won, I think I'll be able to believe in myself. I know that I can do it."

Carner won five tournament titles last year and finished second five times. In 1983, she's been a runner-up six times despite climbing to the top of the money list with $168,744. She did not play in the Boston Five.

"I'm playing well tee to green, but I'm putting terribly," Carner said. "I'll hit 16 to 18 greens and I just can get the ball in the hole. I'm missing a lot of the fast six footers."

The cure to her putting woes, she said, was, so to speak, in her head.

"I had my head cocked at an angle which gives you a poor line. I've worked on it. It's starting to come around."

Besides Carner, six of the top 10 money winners are entered. Once again, however, Jan Stephenson is among the missing.

Stephenson, who edged out Carner for the U.S. Women's Open title, did attend the inaugural Henredon but withdrew after two rounds because of a virus. She did not attend last year, and despite comments that indicated she would play as much golf as possible for the remainder of the year, she pulled out this year because of illness.

According to reports, Stephenson didn't contact tournament officials, but did call the LPGA office.

The heat that has plagued the LPGA this season has followed them to the Willow Creek Golf Club layout. Temperatures are expected to hover in the 90s with a slight chance of showers through the first two rounds.

Sheridan Is New AD

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — Furman football coach Dick Sheridan says he doesn't expect any problems handling his old job and the new post of athletic director of the Southern Conference school.

"I really wouldn't be able to accept the position if we did not have an efficient organization structure in the athletic department," the fifth-year coach said after his appointment was announced at a news conference Wednesday afternoon.

"The cooperation of the athletic staff and the football staff will allow me to organize my time where I will not be taking time away from my football duties," Sheridan said.

The announcement came less than a week after athletic director Dutch Baughman announced he would leave Furman Sept. 1 to accept a position as assistant commissioner of the Southwest Conference in Dallas.

New Power Companies Spread

By BILLY PRITCHARD
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The big utility companies will become "power brokers" rather than "power producers" in the future, according to the latest in "ReUsableNews."

That prediction and the periodic column "ReUsable News," is the product of Christopher D. Turner of the Earth Studies Program at Appalachian State University in Boone.

Turner sees a future when each home will be equipped with its own solar electric cells and farms that produce electricity from gas-fired generators fed by livestock wastes.

And further down on the farm, Turner says, those refined livestock wastes can produce two additional by-products: a deodorized fertilizer and, after additional treatment, a feed supplement of higher protein concentration that can be fed back to the livestock.

Turner began writing his column under a grant from the North Carolina Energy Division. His responsibility is to keep consumers aware of renewable energy projects in the state. His title, in fact, is coordinator of the Appropriate Technology Monitoring and Information Dissemination Grant.

Turner explained that appropriate technology means that technology which is appropriate to the region, such as electricity generating windmills in the mountains, or appropriate to the energy at hand, such as waste products on farms, which produce methane gas when compressed.

"I think the whole

(energy) movement points toward a more decentralized power system," Turner said in a telephone interview from his office in Boone. "Instead of having like two huge power plants that serve half the state, I think the country will have a network of generating stations much more decentralized."

An example, he said, would be for a mountain resident in Western North Carolina to have a windmill generator in his yard. The windmill would produce enough power to operate an all-electric home. What the home unit doesn't need would be passed on to the utility company, contributing to the overall system.

"It works out that in the mountains, the highest wind times are in the winter, which is also power peak times for the utility companies," Turner said, adding that when wind was down, the home-owner would take energy back from the utility company under a contractual agreement.

In Avery County, Turner said, a private trucking company has something every utility company customer dreams of having — a meter that goes backward.

Turner said Underwood and Weld Inc. has installed a four-kilowatt wind generator that is tied into a local utility pole. When the wind generator is producing more energy than the trucking company needs, it goes out to the utility and the company's meter is turned backward as a credit.

In neighboring rural Watauga County, a man has set up a micro-hydro induction motor generator that can produce about 10,000 kilowatt hours per month. The utility company pays him 3 cents per kilowatt hour produced, or about $300 per month, in a strictly one-way deal. The power is not connected to the man's home.

Turner said the Watauga County project, which he said is part of a "hydro renaissance," works by piping water from an impoundment area down to a power house about 1,600 feet away and 180 feet in elevation below. There the water runs through a turbine, powering a generator.

In California and across North Carolina, Turner said, companies are being formed to bring back old hydro-electric power plants, such as old textile plants located on rivers and streams.

In Hawaii, Turner said, a wind generator has been built that is three times as powerful as the windmill built on Howard's Knob near Boone several years ago. The Boone windmill, an experimental project that led to many successful changes in the design of wind generators, produced, when working, a maximum of 2 megawatts, while the Hawaii wind generator, with 400-foot blades, will produce 7 megawatts, or 7 million watts.

And in California, the "wind rush" has replaced the "gold rush," as private

Nightshift Men Asleep At Job

BRISTOL, England (AP) — A court has upheld the firings of three factory foremen for allowing night-shift workers to sleep on the job in bedrooms hidden in wall and ceiling cavities above air conditioning units.

The four sleeping compartments at Plessey Semiconductors Ltd. were furnished with mattresses, blankets, pillows, sheets, bedside lights and alarm clocks and had been used for 20 years. The company makes computer microchips and employs 520 people at Swindon.

Douglas Haigh, 39, one of the fired foremen, argued unsuccessfully before the industrial court Wednesday that he was fired unfairly.

Before he was made a foreman, he conceded, he had "occasionally" slept in the secret bedrooms.

After he was promoted, he said, he had to remain silent. "Had I told the management what was going on, I might as well have left. The men would have made life impossible for me," Haigh said.

The compartments complete were discovered after cleaning contractors exposed apparently useless electrical cables in a basement ceiling. Managers followed the trail and found sliding hatches leading to the bedrooms.

Haigh said it was a long tradition for maintenance men to sleep on the night shift at Plessey. "Sleeping in these places was going on throughout the time I was foreman," said Haigh, who was promoted to the position four years ago.

"But in fact it was common knowledge for many years before that. I started as an apprentice in 1960 and people knew about it then," Haigh added.

At the start of the two-day hearing, Michael Hughes, the factory's manager, said there had been complaints that maintenance men were difficult to find at night.

After the discovery, he said he posted a watch in the area and then confronted Haigh, who commented, "It's amazing what you can find when you look."

School Start Delays Seen

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — School openings will be delayed in several eastern North Carolina tobacco-producing counties because of a late harvest of the crop.

This year's tobacco crop is developing later than usual because of a cool, wet spring, and many farm children who normally are in the classroom will be in the tobacco fields.

Granville, Sampson and Robeson counties have all decided to delay the first day of school until Sept. 6. Two more counties are considering delays and several others will excuse absences during the first few days of school.

"This is an effort to cooperate with Granville County farmers due to weather conditions delaying tobacco harvesting," said Lionel Burnette, chairman of the Granville County School Board.

"A lot were requesting we give them two weeks, but I felt that a compromise of at least a week to 10 days was sufficient," said J.R. Musselwhite of the Robeson County school board. "One week would be a great help to them."

At least two other counties — Harnett and Wayne — are considering similar delays.

A 'Constant' Leaf Battle

HENDERSON, Ky. (AP) — Sen. Wendell Ford, D-Ky., said Wednesday it is becoming almost a constant battle to keep Congress from scuttling the tobacco price-support program.

In a speech to the Henderson-Audubon Area Chamber of Commerce, Ford said the freeze on support prices authorized by the nation's lawmakers this year hasn't solved all of the problems facing tobacco interests.

"I thought this change would satisfy the tobacco critics and silence them for a while," Ford said. "But it hasn't worked out that way."

A bill that would have extended the freeze into 1985 failed to make it through the Senate before Congress took its August adjournment.

The freeze on price-support levels also included a provision to make sure the program carried no cost to the government. Ford said that was unfair treatment.

"No other farmer in any other government price-support program is required to underwrite any losses," Ford said. "We've set a double standard for the tobacco farmer and it isn't fair, but it was the price we had to pay to keep the program alive."

Woman's Death Said 'Natural'

Dr. Robert Sloss of the area medical examiner's office said today that the death of a 72-year-old Route 2, Farmville, woman appeared to be the result of natural causes.

Sloss said that an autopsy will be performed on the body of Ethel Sautler, who resided near U.S. 264A east of Farmville.

Sheriff Ralph Tyson said the body was discovered Wednesday on a path near some tobacco barns off the highway. He said the Sheriff's Department was notified at 4:04 p.m.

Fines Self For His Tardiness

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico Supreme Court Chief Justice H. Vern Payne gave himself a $50 fine for tardiness after he was five minutes late for a court hearing.

Payne said Wednesday he imposed the fine on himself because he was late for hearings Tuesday. Since the high court demands promptness and protocol, Payne said he felt it was the right thing to do.

"The reason I levied the fine is that we have a schedule and there are other people depending on us," Payne said. "Litigants are paying their lawyers, and in my mind we need to be conscious of the fact."

Payne said the $50 fine he paid will apparently go into the state's general fund. He said the amount was "an arbitrary figure," and added, "I thought it ought to be enough to smart."

RJR Asking For Tax-Free Bonds

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. is asking for $75 million in tax-free industrial revenue bonds to improve pollution-control equipment at several plants.

The bonds would also be used to finance water and sewer construction at its new factory in Tobaccoville.

A tentative agreement has been reached between Reynolds and the Forsyth County Industrial Facilities and Pollution Control Financial Authority for the proposed bond issue.

Before final approval, the proposal must be reviewed by the North Carolina Department of Commerce must review the proposal and it must be approved by the Forsyth County commissions and the state's Local Government Commission.

Japanese Farmers Fear Farm Imports

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer
TOKYO (AP) — Ten thousand Japanese farmers jammed Tokyo's austere Martial Arts Hall recently for their annual crusade against agricultural imports, especially from the United States, and for greater price supports from their government.

The farmers, often referred to as being among the world's least efficient but best organized, were not in a festive mood. The government is trying to hold the line on rice subsidies because of its own financial situation, while the United States has escalated its demands that Japan lift 22 residual farm import restrictions.

"We must carry out every possible act of resistance in a thorough drive to block liberalization and expansion of agricultural imports," said Shizuma Iwamochi, president of the Central Union of Agricultural Cooperatives.

The same day, and almost within shouting distance of the farmers, President Yoshiro Inoyama of the powerful Federation of Economic Organizations repeated his group's position that farm imports must be liberalized — preferably before President Reagan visits Japan in November.

The two voices represent the split between Japan's manufacturing industry, which worries about foreign protectionism against its exports, and a farm industry seeking greater protectionism, subsidies and price supports.

To keep 4.6 million farm households going, Japan's 118 million people pay some of the world's highest food prices — double the world average for beef and dairy products, triple for rice and almost four times the world average for wheat.

Ground beef costs $3.40 a pound, butter around $2.65, milk about 85 cents a quart and rice about $1 a pound.

Although farming produces only 2.5 percent of Japan's gross domestic product, the government this year will spend $8.3 billion, 13.6 percent of all government subsidies, on farm supports. An additional $2.5 billion supports rice and wheat prices.

Only 15 percent of the land in these mountainous islands is arable, and farmers till an average of 2.7 acres, in contrast to 44.5 acres in the United States and 64 acres in France.

The full-time farmer has become rare in Japan. The Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Ministry says only 8.4 percent work exclusively as farmers, while 70 percent earn most of their income from non-farm jobs.

A common pattern is the "shell farm" where sons or daughters hold jobs in nearby towns while the older generation works the fields. The ministry says a quarter of Japan's farmers are 65 or older, a further drag on productivity.

While Japan must import almost all its feed grains, peas and soybeans, thousands of bags of rice lie rotting in storehouses. Rice demand has fallen steadily with Westernization of the national diet, but rice farmers, wedded to tradition and reluctant to give up their subsidized price, have resisted crop transfer programs.

Iwamochi's cooperative union, representing 10,000 local farm groups, cites Agriculture Ministry figures showing Japan spent only $2,000 in subsidies per farm household in 1977, compared to $7,000 in the United States.

The difference, of course, is that the American farm is 164 times larger. Farmers, meanwhile, argue that Japan already is America's biggest farm product customer, with purchases of $5.5 billion last year. They also contend that with a food self-sufficiency level of only 70 percent, Japan cannot risk greater reliance on imports.

Yujiro Hayami, professor of economics at Tokyo Metropolitan University and an authority on agriculture policy, noted that among the 22 restricted import items, liberalization would seriously affect the nation's farmers in only four — two cereal categories, beef and citrus.

Although beef and citrus fruits have become symbols of the U.S.-Japan battle over farm imports, there is room for compromise, Hayami said in an interview. He acknowledged that "if the beef market was liberalized the (Japanese) industry would collapse," and proposed that Japan's 460,000 beef farmers, many with only a few head of livestock, be given a five- or six-year grace period while the government promotes modernization with a 30 percent to 40 percent levy on liberalized imports.

"Liberalization could be a blessing if adequately used," he said.

The government has urged restructuring Japanese farms by expanding the size of individual units and increasing efficiency through group cooperation. However, the governing Liberal Democratic Party has avoided open confrontation with the farmers, who constitute a powerful political constituency.

Iwamochi, in calling for more subsidies, reminded party leaders that they had voiced "understanding" for farmers' demands during the campaign for recent Upper House election won by the Liberal Democrats, and claimed that they would "violate political ethics if these statements end up as mere election promises."

He is nearing completion of work toward a doctorate from the same school.

He and his wife, Jean, have three children.

Agent Warns Of Beetle Threat

Mitch Smith, tobacco agent for the Pitt County Extension Service, has issued a warning to farmers not to overlook the threat of flea beetles in tobacco.

The pest, especially damaging to over-ripe tobacco, is mobile, Smith said, and often returns to fields that have recently been treated. "Control of the flea beetle may require more than one application of an insecticide," he said.

The farm agent recommended the following insecticides for control: Guthion, Lannate, Nudrin, Orthene, PennCap-M, Sevin and Supricide. Large plants should be treated, Smith said, when it is estimated that there are 60 or more beetles per plant.

Bingo Business Acquires Newsletter

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Bingo — once the domain of elderly ladies who played in church basements — has gone uptown, say two aficionados who hope to hit the jackpot with a monthly newsletter aimed at the younger breed of bingo maniac.

Reopen Jail Death Probe

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — District Attorney Peter Gilchrist has ordered Charlotte homicide detectives to reinvestigate the 1981 death of a Mecklenburg County Jail inmate.

Medical Examiner Hobart Wood, who originally ruled the death an accident, requested that Gilchrist reopen the case after being questioned during an investigation by The Charlotte Observer.

Raymond Miller, 41, died moments after being put in a holding cell Sept. 13, 1981, according to Tom Jackson, Miller's cellmate. The Observer quoted an unidentified source as saying an officer used a controversial choke hold on Miller before putting him in the cell.

Jackson and the unidentified source differ with the police report on the incident, which said Miller was seen alive two hours after being put in the cell and was found dead an hour after that, according to The Observer.

Wood's autopsy showed Miller suffered neck injuries. The medical examiner said this week that he had considered choking as a possible cause of death but couldn't find enough evidence to support that. Instead, he listed brain injuries and alcohol-related conditions as the causes.

"I remember being concerned with the findings in the neck at the time," Wood said. "It didn't jibe with what police and the jail said."

The choke hold allegation places the neck injuries in a different light, Wood said.

"There is an element in the bingo population that is addictive," George said Wednesday. "They feel it's just like the Pennsylvania Lottery. If you play enough, you'll hit."

Socializing is an even bigger factor, said Ms. Wirth, whose own family gathers regularly for bingo.

"There's a brotherhood among bingo players, a fraternal kind of feeling," she said. "Even if you go alone, you start talking to somebody across the table."

"It's a chance to let loose. I get rid of all my tension," usually playing 21 cards at a time, she added.

Ms. Wirth and George say much of their success stems from the fact that the bingo market has remained untapped for years.

Although Pennsylvania legalized the game in July 1981 — one of the last states to do so — federal law still prohibits the mailing of any publication promoting it.

"There's a few publications that call it (bingo) corn games, card games, party times, you name it. But they don't reach the bingo population. We do," George said.

Already the two are planning to expand the September issue and print an extra 8,000 copies. And they're talking about taking on the business full time, which suits Ms. Wirth just fine.

"I could play all night," she said.

For George, though, business is one thing and pleasure's another.

"I'd just as soon stand in the back and watch," he said, smiling.

"I became intrigued by the bingo player, the whole mentality," George said.

Despite the skepticism of family and friends, George and Ms. Wirth began contacting more than 600 licensed bingo operators in Allegheny County, asking them to buy advertisements in the new publication.

Before long, they had earned enough to finance the $2,000 cost of the first issue, a 16-page pamphlet which includes listings of game locations and discount coupons.

Nearly all 12,000 copies, distributed free at convenience stores and bingo halls in the Pittsburgh area at the end of July, were gone within two weeks.

"Several priests told us when we gave them some copies that women will kill to get hold of these," George said.

Despite bad times and fancy pastimes, bingo is booming, the pair say. Many bingo operators pull in as much as $72,000 a year, according to George.

What draws many of the same people back to spend an average of $15 a night at

Raise For Most

An East Carolina University official said today that most all faculty members will receive a pay increase this year, with the "larger portion in the 4 percent to 6 percent range."

The University of North Carolina Board of Governors last month allocated enough money to each of the 16 UNC-system campuses to give each faculty member a 5 percent pay hike. But the board also gave the chancellors, deans and department chairmen the flexibility to decide how much each faculty member would receive, based on a merit system.

Dick Blake, assistant to ECU Chancellor John Howell, said "most everybody will get a raise" at ECU but emphasized that "merit will be an essential element" in the amount of pay increase.

He said other factors that will apply in the amount of pay increase given ECU faculty are "promotions and cost of living."

Blake emphasized that all secretaries, maintenance workers and other regular state employees will receive a 5 percent pay increase.

Churches Assail U. S. Policies; Silent Over Soviet

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer
VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — The World Council of Churches assembly assailed American military involvement in Central America, calling for an end to U.S. efforts to "contain the aspirations" of the region's people.

In its closing hours Wednesday night, the 18-day assembly also denounced South Africa's apartheid policy of race and adopted a sweeping condemnation of nuclear weapons, calling their production, deployment or use a "crime against humanity."

The Council said that in the past Christian guilt "over the fate of Jews in their countries" may have "led to uncritical support of Israel." The assembly it welcomed a more "critical stance" toward Israel and said it backed Palestinian claims to a sovereign state.

Even with the final rush of legislation, delegates from 300 denominations totalling about 500 million Christians around the world still paused for worship services, morning, noon and night.

"We thank you, O God, that you have brought us together..." they prayed in a farewell celebration of song, litanies and banners in a tent packed with 3,000 people.

Regarding Central America, the assembly strongly opposed "any type of military intervention by the United States, covert or overt, or by any other government."

That position parallels that of most major U.S. Protestant denominations and of U.S. Roman Catholic bishops in urging withdrawal of all outside forces.

But the global church body also accused the U.S. administration of launching broad military, financial and political policies against Central America's people.

The aim is to "destabilize the Nicaraguan government, renew international support for Guatemala's violent military regimes, resist the forces of historic change in El Salvador and militarize Honduras," the assembly said.

It said the militarization of Honduras was to ensure "a base from which to contain the aspirations of Central American people," although ostensibly for reform, peace, democracy and to prevent communism.

"The opposite prevails," the assembly said, as violence escalates and undermines the "legitimate interests and security of the nations and peoples of the American hemisphere."

About 500,000 people have been forced to flee their countries, the assembly said, charging U.S.-financed military killings in Honduras, and massacres in Guatemala and El Salvador.

The assembly said the attempt to destabilize Nicaragua's government undercuts a legitimate effort to end exploitation of the poor and threatens to plunge not only Central American but Caribbean countries into worse suffering and violence.

A Reagan administration spokeswoman, in an interview published Wednesday, blasted U.S. church leaders and the news media for confusing or distorting U.S. policy in Central America.

Faith Whittlesey, the administration's director of public liaison, said church leaders tend wrongly "to characterize the Sandinistas as Robin Hoods, essentially fighting for social justice."

Concerning South Africa, the assembly said racism destroys "human dignity both of the racist and the victim."

Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, a black who heads the South African Council of Churches, gained an added note, expressing love for white South Africans despite the system.

The assembly urged increased church support for forces opposing apartheid, including liberation movements, and termed the South Africa-outlawed SWAPO organization the "legitimate representative of the Namibian people." The assembly called for independence of the southwestern African territory of Namibia, as recognized by the United Nations. It remains under military rule of South Africa.

The assembly also approved a statement on the Middle East, critical of Israel and asserting the "justice of the Palestinian cause."

Criticizing the Israeli settlement policy on the West Bank, the assembly said it "has resulted in de facto annexation."

It called for withdrawal of Israel from territories occupied in 1967, backed rights of Palestinian to establish a "sovereign Palestinian state," and the right of all Mideast states "to live in peace."

Earlier in the week the assembly had refused to demand the Soviet Union withdraw its 100,000 troops from Afghanistan immediately, but called for a cutoff of arms shipments to rebels fighting the occupation.

The council also said it could not act on a human rights plea on behalf of Soviet Christians unless Soviet delegates themselves brought the matter up. The plea had accused Soviet delegates of being government pawns unlikely to broach the subject.

Suspect He Fell In Love With Victim

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A 25-year-old Raleigh woman stabbed 14 times during a burglary and rape attempt was able to convince her assailant to bandage and dress her wounds and allow her to drive to the hospital, police detectives say.

The suspect apologized and promised to wait for the woman's return from the hospital after the July 30 incident.

"He fell in love with her. He was waiting for her when we got there," said Det. Maj. R.T. Justice.

Police found a man who matched the description provided by the victim wandering on the street near the victim's home.

"She displayed an incredible presence of mind. She actually talked him out of killing her," Justice said.

"Just imagine the horror of something like that."

"She kept her cool. The things she said kept him cool," said Det. D.C. Williams.

Johnnie Lee Anderson, 35, who has been on parole from a Florida prison since July, remains jailed under $60,000 bond. He is charged with first-degree burglary with intent to commit rape, kidnapping and felony assault.

The victim, Mary Ann Daskal, was released from Rex Hospital last week. She is the daughter of a Fayetteville sheriff's detective.

Police said the woman was awakened about 3 a.m. by a man sticking a steak knife in her neck. She was stabbed repeatedly as she struggled with her assailant.

She told officers that the man kept asking for a date. After talking with her, he took the woman to the bathroom and began cleaning her wounds. At one point, she tried to escape out a bathroom window, but the man pulled her back inside, police said.

After she was bandaged, Ms. Daskal repeatedly asked to go to the hospital. Police said the woman's assailant told her that he loved her and put her into her car, telling her he would await her return.

Hospital officials notified police.

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The morning has a very adverse influence which requires that you use care and caution with other persons to avoid a harsh and unforgiving condition which is brewing.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) If you get too emotional you cannot straighten out a matter between a family tie and an outsider, so compose yourself.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) You may find it hard to communicate with a friend early in the day, but later can do so very well. Stress harmony.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Forget that expensive entertainment you have in mind and get your talents working constructively instead.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Be very careful and cautious with those at home and prevent any trouble from erupting.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Don't get so involved with a private worry that you fail to gain the outside benefits that could be yours.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Plan your time so that you can soothe a worried friend and also help another a short distance away. Use patience.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) If you are too demanding now, you can have a serious setback where some aim is concerned, so tread lightly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You feel like making some very radical changes, but don't do it. Make quiet plans for the future.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) A friend could keep you from meeting an important obligation if you go out with him, or her, so stay put.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) A partner and a person in power could be having an argument so don't interfere and it will soon be over.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) First get some new method organized and then you can do a better job of your work. Seek advice from an expert.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Try to control your temper when a pal and a person in business come into an argument, otherwise you become the scapegoat.

The auction is instructive. Despite his balanced hand, North preferred the encouraging two spade raise to the discouraging one no trump response. That allowed South to revalue his hand and make a game try and North, with help in the suit and a maximum raise, went on to game.

West led the top of his heart sequence, taken by the ace. There are only nine tricks for North South, and the optimists would run all their trumps, confident that East-West would make a discarding error and that they would make their contracts.

Technicians would realize that, if the cards lie normally, the contract is cold — all they need is for the diamond honors to be split between the defenders. They would ruff a heart at trick two, cash a high trump and cross to dummy with the queen of trumps to ruff the last heart. All that is needed then is to exit with a club and sit back and wait for a defender to help declarer out.

The best the defenders can do is to take their three club tricks. As the cards lie, East wins the third club. If he is a good defender, he will return the jack of diamonds, but declarer should not be swayed. He should assume that the diamond honors are split. So he wins the ace of diamonds in hand and leads a diamond toward the table, finessing the ten when West plays low. Four spades bid and made!

Nab Suspect In Computer Caper

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The premise of the movie "War Games," in which a teen-ager gains illegal access to a computer system using his home computer and telephone lines, became a reality this summer when a Raleigh teen-ager nearly gained control of the North Carolina State University computer.

N.C. State campus police have arrested Allan Clegg, 17, on charges of felonious access to a computer system.

"I'm sure it started as a game, but we were afraid it was going to become a very bad situation," said John G. Lewis, assistant manager of systems operations in NCSU's computer science department.

"Our feeling was that he was trying to get total control of the computer system," N.C. State campus police Sgt. L.K. Reynolds said.

Harry Kuhman, manager of systems operations at the university's computer science department, said had that happened, Clegg could have been capable of shutting down the system.

Clegg, who has been accepted at NCSU for the fall quarter, had earlier used the campus computers as part of a high school course. He had been warned last fall about tampering with the computer system.

"He had been read the riot act before," Lewis said. "He knew how to work this system."

University officials said they first noticed something was fishy when an out-of-date student account was being used to gain access to the computer.

Reynolds said NCSU student Art Barnes allegedly gave Clegg another student's password and account number, which enabled him to gain access into the system.

"That was the first thing that alerted us to some kind of funny business," Kuhman said. "There was a lot of comments about 'War Games.'"

"It sort of amused us at first," Lewis said. "It looked like all they were using the system for was to pass messages back and forth."

Lewis said school officials wrote programs to lock up the out-of-date account number that was being used, but the program was broken. So was a program to keep track of the tamperer. A more complex monitoring program was then developed that kept watch on the tamperer.

"They were sending messages, such as 'Hi, stranger,' throughout the system that harassed the student users," Lewis said. Then messages such as "The system is stupid — beware," started being left for the system's operators.

Kuhman said the teen-agers then tried to gain total control over the system by becoming the system operator.

"The operator's password is extremely complicated," Kuhman said. "It would be extremely difficult to become the operator, if not completely impossible. There are enough safeguards in the system to prevent that, but these people knew enough to defeat some of them."

After determining that the transmissions were not coming from an on-campus computer, officials began to suspect a home computer user had tied into the NCSU system.

Kuhman said a telephone trace by Southern Bell officials solved the mystery.

"They knew their way around the machines ... this is just the kind of petty theft of computers that's popping up more and more," Kuhman said. "This is not just people out having fun. They're breaking into other people's accounts. I think we've nipped this in the bud."

Native Americans

Today Native Americans from more than 50 tribes plan to gather in Gallup, New Mexico for the Inter-tribal Indian Ceremonial, a celebration of their culture. Centuries ago, the Indians ruled North America. Today they are among the most deprived citizens in our nation. About half of the 1.4 million Native Americans live on or near the 261 reservations that are held in trust by the federal government. But life for Indians on reservations or in cities is hard. Fully 16 percent of Native American families earn less than $5000 a year. In some areas, unemployment among Indians is 80 percent. Their rate of death from disease and suicide is more than double that of other American racial groups.

DO YOU KNOW—Who first called Native Americans "Indians"?

WEDNESDAY'S ANSWER—The carnival slang term for "danger" is "Hey, Rube!"

Saturday Night Comedy Kuralt Takes Two On The Road

Based On Comic Strip

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — "Kudzu" on CBS Saturday night is an inoffensive little comedy that probably says all there is to say on the subject.

That's important, because the story — of a young man's search for his good-for-nothing father — presumably once was considered material for a series.

Tony Becker plays Odell "Kudzu" Venable Dubose, whose desire to be a writer like some others he can think of with roots in the South — "William Faulkner, Margaret Mitchell ... Rod McKuen" — leads to the true story of his long-gone daddy's departure.

The TV program was based on characters created by Doug Marlette for a comic strip of the same name.

The show's producers did all they could to appeal to the network, and they didn't miss the mark by a lot. The title is amusing — kudzu is a vine that often grows wild in the South — the introductory footage is inviting, the music appealing. And, the humor is mostly gentle.

"Boy, would I like to get my hands on that," Kudzu, thumbing through a magazine for aspiring writers, tells his mother.

"Son," Mavis Venable Dubose replies, "I think it's about time you and your Uncle Dub had a modern, scientific talk about all the technicalities of ... begettin'."

Kudzu is talking, of course, about an electric typewriter.

In any case, he decides to try for the $3,500 that Reader's Digest offers for stories on "my most unforgettable character." Kudzu's pal, Maurice, thinks it's a lousy idea.

"Everybody in Bypass," Maurice says, talking about their town, "is so ... forgettable."

But Kudzu has in mind a can't-miss story about his daddy, a Bible salesman said to have perished in the wilds of New Guinea while peddling the Good Book to the heathens. Trouble is, no one wants to talk about Harlan Odell Dubose.

"Well ... he was short," Preacher Dunn tells the inquiring Kudzu.

"That's it?" "Well, he wouldn't appear short," the preacher says, "if you were a little bitty fella lookin' up at him."

Back home, Kudzu begins his article: "My daddy was ... a compact man ..."

But then, he hears the truth, inadvertently, from his Uncle Dub.

One wonders how — or why — the producers of a show like "Kudzu" manage to cram so much into 22 minutes of TV time, including laughtrack.

Sometimes, the miniplots strengthen a story. Here, the digressions — Maurice and Betty Jane unload a broken ladder on an unsuspecting tourist couple, Kudzu makes a play for the voluptuous Veranda while Betty Jane smolders — seem more like clutter.

That's not to say those little vignettes aren't funny: "Sayin' you're beautiful," Kudzu tells Veranda, "is like sayin' the ocean is deep, the desert is dry ..."

"Ya mean," she inquires, "I got dry skin?"

In the end, Kudzu can accept the real story of his father's disappearance, but can Veranda?

"Would it hurt our relationship," he asks, "if I told you my daddy was a no good bum?"

"I couldn't care less," she responds.

Betty Jane pulls Kudzu aside and asks, "Well?"

"She'll stand by her man," he says.

Linda Henning plays Kudzu's mama, James Hampton is Uncle Dub, Mallie Jackson plays Betty Jane, Larry B. Scott is Maurice and Teri Landrum is Veranda.

For 14 years, veteran CBS cameraman Isadore "Izzy" Bleckman, newsman Kuralt and soundman Gianneschi have been traversing the United States, chasing down those small dots on the map in search of a good, untold story.

Bleckman figures that in that time they've been through every state "about five times," hundreds of cities, thousands of towns and six buses.

"I know more about those buses than the people we take them to for repairs," Bleckman said. "Probably that's why I'm still on the road. I'm the only guy who can keep those buses running."

Gianneschi and Bleckman, both Chicago natives, still live in suburbs of the Windy City, Arlington Heights and Highland Park respectively.

Kuralt, who still does "CBS News Sunday Morning" lives in New York.

The bus — currently a 1973 Ford bought used — usually spends its time off wherever Gianneschi and kman park it before catching a plane back.

"We try not to have to drive the bus all the way back to Chicago after every trip," Gianneschi said.

"Right now it's in Syracuse. Right in the middle of the airport next to the fire department," Gianneschi said.

"They let us have a nice secure place to park it."

Gianneschi, 57, has been traveling for CBS since he worked with Edward R. Murrow on the "See It Now" series in 1955.

Bleckman said the road gang has logged about a half-million miles in its time.

NEW YORK (UPI) — "Izzy" repaired helicopters in the U.S. Army during the Korean War. Using that know-how, he began fixing buses — keeping them rolling for his "On The Road" colleagues, Charles Kuralt and Larry Gianneschi Jr.

Gianneschi, 57, has been traveling for CBS since he worked with Edward R. Murrow on the "See It Now" series in 1955.

Bleckman said the road gang has logged about a half-million miles in its time.

"My wife doesn't like me around the house too much," laughed Gianneschi. "Our 40th wedding anniversary is coming up, in March so I guess it worked out well," said the father of five — two sons who are TV cameramen, two who are soundmen, and a renegade daughter who heads a cultural exchange program in Japan.

Bleckman, 47, who's been married 17 years and has two young daughters, said that in the past year — especially now that "On The Road" is running as a half-hour summer series — he's lucky to get home weekends.

When Kuralt is back in New York writing and editing the Tuesday night summer show, Bleckman and Gianneschi are still out there on the backroads filming compilation pieces — like the program that featured the unusual things Americans use to hold up their mailboxes, or another on old signs.

That can take a couple of weeks," Bleckman said. "We get them while we're working on other stories, driving around, we spot something."

All three members of the road gang come up with story ideas — usually Kuralt.

Bleckman said they discuss the stories together before they go after them.

"I usually don't tell him (Kuralt) whether I like something or not," Bleckman said. "Because in the past when something really didn't appeal to me, we'd do it and it would turn out great. Kuralt has a way of doing that."

"He has an uncanny sense for a story and a knack for drawing people out," Gianneschi said.

There was one Kuralt idea Bleckman recalls he really didn't want to do: "He wanted to do the names on toilets. You know, all the fancy names you see on the doors instead of just plain 'Men' or 'Women'."

"I told him, we can't do this — run around shooting toilets all over the place," Bleckman said. "We shot about a week in California — that's got to be a lodestone for unusual toilet names — and we gave up. I think even he began to think it was silly."

In the old days, when "On The Road" appeared as features on the "CBS Evening News," the threesome had more time on their hands.

"Charles always had two or three fly rods in the van," said Gianneschi, who also is an avid fisherman. "Charles must have a trout fishing license from every state in the union that has one. But now he's too busy with 'Sunday Morning' and the half hour show."

There've been other changes.

There used to be a microwave oven on the bus.

"We use that a lot," Gianneschi said. "Heat up chili or fresh corn right off the stalk along some roadside."

Now they hardly ever use the regular stove they've got aboard, although they keep snacks, soft drinks and beer in the refrigerator — just in case.

Both men said in telephone interviews from their homes that it takes them about 10 minutes to pack for a week-long trip. They keep extra shoes and gear for foul weather — like what they ran into at Lake Millac, Minn. — on the bus.

"Lake Millac is one of the coldest damn places — 35 below," Bleckman said. "So cold we could drive our 12,000-pound bus right out on the ice."

"We did a story about the ice fishermen. How at first they brought big boxes out on the ice for protection. They started bringing more and more stuff out and the whole thing evolved into a regular village of two-story fishing huts."

"Two-story buildings with TV's and generators. I guess they wanted to get the hell away from everyone and drink beer," he said.

Bleckman and Gianneschi hope the half-hour series is picked up for the new TV season.

"I get a twinge once in awhile when I hear the big doings going on in the world," said Bleckman, who interrupted his "Road" work briefly in 1972 to cover President Nixon's trips to China and the Soviet Union. "But it fades as I get older. You can't beat this."

Yes, there are occasional arguments.

"We spend more time together than we do with our families," Gianneschi said. "You know, it's like a marriage. You have a little tiff now and then and you let it blow over."

"The bus is big enough. You can't take life that seriously."

That might seem expensive, but Frank Nemirofsky says prices don't seem to matter as soon as customers squeeze the mink-covered toys.

"It's exactly like going into a pet store and picking up a puppy," he said of his Rare Bears, whose prices range from $60 for the basic model to $800 for what he calls Breeding Stock.

"Initially I felt that a $175 teddy bear would be bought by someone who was well off," he said. "But I soon found people from all walks of life buying the bear because once they've picked him up, they can't put him down."

Besides chocolate-colored coats of mink, the teddies come with pedigree papers stamped with 24-karat gold seals, said Nemirofsky, a former garment consultant who has sold 10,000 bears and is readying 50,000 for Christmas gifts.

Forensic Anthropologists Versus 'Perfect Crimes'

By THOMAS HARNEY
Smithsonian
News Service

When sausage-maker Adolph Luetgert did away with his wife, Louisa, in one of Chicago's most notorious murder cases in 1897, he disposed of her body by dissolving it in a vat filled with a caustic solution containing 375 pounds of potash.

Luetgert might have gotten away with his gruesome crime had it not been for one George A. Dorsey, a physical anthropologist at the Field Museum of Natural History.

When police searched for Luetgert's missing wife, they found Louisa's ring and four small pieces of bone in the congealed sediment of the vat. At the trial that followed, Luetgert's lawyers based their defense on the argument that there was no corpus delicti. The tiny pieces of bone, they contended, could not be identified and, in fact, might be those of an animal. But Dorsey, an expert witness for the prosecution, had compared the bone pieces with human skeletal collections at his museum, and he authoritatively identified the bits of bone as those of a woman. Luetgert was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Dorsey's appearance at the Luetgert trial is one of the early landmarks in the history of forensic anthropology—a field concerned with the identification for law enforcement agencies of bones known to be, or suspected of being, human.

In the 19th and early-20th centuries, forensic anthropology was a specialty engaged in only occasionally by a few anatomists and physical anthropologists. In the last 50 years, however, it has come into its own as a highly sophisticated scientific discipline with certified practitioners in 19 states and Canada.

During this half-century, the Smithsonian's National Museum of Natural History in Washington, D.C., has established itself as the most active center for forensic anthropology work in the United States—primarily because of its unparalleled collection of human and animal skeletons and its special, albeit informal, relationship with the Federal Bureau of Investigation located only a block away from the museum.

The museum has three resident physical anthropologists who are interested in forensics—Dr. T. Dale Stewart, Dr. J. Lawrence Angel and Dr. Douglas Ubelaker. Spanning three generations they have more than 70 years of forensic experience among them. With the help of research assistants they handle hundreds of forensic cases every year for the FBI and state and local law enforcement agencies.

Outside the offices where the scientists work is a long hallway lined from floor to ceiling with tiers of drawers containing carefully cataloged skulls and bones of more than 30,000 individuals, from modern Americans to ancient Egyptians.

This skeletal collection, the largest in the world, has served for most of this century as a basis for studies comparing ancient and modern peoples, the principal research concern of Stewart, Angel and Ubelaker. But it has also served as the basis for identifying the skeletal remains of victims of crime.

"These remains can be anything from a complete skeleton to tiny fragments," says Ubelaker, who gets a new case from the FBI crime lab almost every week. He begins an identification by determining if the bones really are human and how much time has elapsed since death.

"I estimate the age of the individual by relying on patterns of tooth development as well as arm and leg bone growth," Ubelaker explains. "The sex of an adult skeleton can usually be determined by looking at the structure of the pelvis. Stature is calculated by measuring arm and leg bones, using formulas derived from documented skeletal materials."

"We look for anything about the individual that might be unique. Especially valuable is evidence of past medical problems. Medical records—X-rays for example—can sometimes be found and compared to the remains to make a positive identification."

"Finally, we check to see if there are signs of foul play, such as the crushing or breaking of bone, knife marks and damage characteristic of bullets."

Dr. T. Dale Stewart, who at 81 is the dean of the Smithsonian's forensic anthropologists, recalls how "we got into this crime business. It was because of our collection and because most medical examiners and coroners had and still have their hands full dealing with flesh-covered remains and haven't time to develop the highly specialized knowledge and techniques needed to analyze and identify skeletal material."

The first Smithsonian scientist to identify bones for the FBI was Stewart's old boss, Ales Hrdlicka, a world-renowned physical anthropologist. When Hrdlicka died in 1943, the FBI began coming to Stewart.

"An agent would drop over to see me once or twice a month with some bones and a list of questions," Stewart remembers. "As it turned out, one of the first lots of bone they brought me—in a cardboard box, as I recall—led to a murder trial."

The bones had been found by laborers cleaning out an abandoned well at a farm near Quantico, Va. Stewart identified the material as bones from a white male, around 28 years of age, about five feet 10 inches in height, probably left-handed and with signs of pyorrhea (bone loss around the necks of the teeth).

Some military buttons from the same well led investigators to the Marine Corps base nearby and to the record of an ex-Marine who had been a bootlegger during Prohibition days, 15 years earlier. The man disappeared around that time, and it was believed that he was killed in a hijacking incident. There was a suspect, but in the absence of a corpus delicti no legal action had been taken. Stewart's identification established the corpus delicti, and the suspect was belatedly tried for murder and convicted.

The accuracy of Stewart's skeletal identification was startling. Although he had overestimated the victim's age by two years, Stewart had come within half an inch of his height. On the witness stand, the victim's mother testified that her son was left-handed, and his last dental record as a Marine diagnosed him as having pyorrhea.

"The accuracy of my identification seemed remarkable then," Stewart says. "Today, identification feats of this sort are commonplace. Physical anthropologists who pursue this line of work have more knowledge and better techniques."

Stewart stopped taking on FBI cases when he was appointed director of the National Museum of Natural History in 1962. But in the last decade, as the museum's physical anthropologist emeritus, he has resumed an active interest in forensics.

Drawing on his many years of experience, Stewart has written a highly praised textbook on forensic anthropology, giving valuable advice on every important facet of the field, from how to differentiate between human and animal remains (bear paws look so much like human hands and feet that even trained anatomists have been fooled on occasion) to tips on how to conduct oneself when on the stand as an expert witness in a court trial.

Tracing the history of forensic anthropology in America also has been one of Stewart's main interests in recent years, and he says it has involved as much "sleuthing" as some of his forensic cases. It was Stewart who brought to light the story of George Dorsey and the Luetgert trial.

Dorsey attended Harvard where he came under the influence of Harvard anatomist Thomas Dwight, the first American scientist to begin investigating ways to best estimate stature and sex from skeletal remains. Dwight (1843-1911), known as "the father of American forensic anthropology," held the Parkman professorship of anatomy at Harvard Medical School in the late-19th and early-20th centuries.

By coincidence, George Parkman, a wealthy patron of the Harvard Medical School, was himself a memorable figure in the history of forensic anthropology in America; Parkman, however, is more famous for the grisly way in which he met his death in 1849 than for his philanthropy or research.

Parkman had loaned money to Professor John W.

Webster of Harvard. When pressed for payment, Webster invited Parkman to his office after school was out and murdered him. Then, in an effort to prevent the victim's identification, he cut off the head, hands and feet and consigned them to the furnace in his laboratory, disposing of the rest of the body down his privy. Some of the burned bones and other remains were recovered and, at the trial, another Harvard professor, Jeffries Wyman, became one of the first American anatomists to testify in court on the identification of a skeleton. Webster was found guilty and hanged.

In the years since the Webster trial, the methods used by forensic anthropologists have become considerably more sophisticated. But one thing has not changed: Given the right encouragement, skeletons do not hesitate to reveal their secrets.

From a skull, a forensic anthropologist can help an artist reconstruct what a person looked like. Smithsonian anthropologist T. Dale Stewart has improved these likenesses by identifying the precise points that control the alignment of the eye.

MORE THAN A NEW LOOK, A NEW OUTLOOK.

AT&T

When the Bell System breaks up, AT&T will become a new company with a new symbol. We'll continue to do a lot of what we did before, but we'll also be free to do much more.

You'll still be able to count on us for the world's most dependable telephones, equipment and systems from our Bell Labs and Western Electric units. Our high-quality and innovative long distance service will let you reach out and touch anyone, anywhere—across the nation and around the world. And our products and services for homes and business will continue to help move and manage information more efficiently and productively.

We'll be able to do exciting new things for you, too.

As the new AT&T, we'll be free to follow our technology into new markets in data services and micro-components. So we'll be able to use our knowledge to bring more benefits of the Information Age home to you.

We'll also expand our international business—helping to bring this country's telecommunications expertise and products to people and places all over the world.

The new AT&T is a new company with a great deal of experience. And starting January 1, we'll have new freedom to put that experience to work for you.
