Miniscule Rise For Wholesale Prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices rose a miniscule 0.1 percent in July as the cost of food fell for the third straight month and the summer's energy price gains moderated, the government reported today.

For the first seven months of the year, wholesale prices fell at an annual rate of 0.7 percent, fueling economists' predictions that, for the full year, inflation at the wholesale level could be the smallest in two decades.

Last month's tiny gains were largely the product of a 0.6 percent drop in food prices and a 0.2 percent gain in energy costs.

Prices fell sharply for meat, a trend expected to continue through year's end and then reverse itself, for vegetables and for eggs.

Natural gas and heating oil prices tumbled. Gasoline prices rose only moderately after surging in the two previous months.

Overall, wholesale prices for the year ending in July rose just 1.4 percent — the smallest 12-month gain in 15 years. Since July 1982, energy prices have tumbled 4.7 percent and food prices have risen just 0.1 percent.

Indeed, the bright price picture has been widely attributed to the long 1981-82 recession and the worldwide oil glut that drove down gasoline and fuel oil prices.

Food prices have also been falling, but this summer's scorching heat wave has devastated much of the nation's corn crop, now projected to be the down 38 percent from last year.

That is expected to be good news for consumers in the short run as farmers liquidate their herds rather than pay skyrocketing feed bills. Experts expect, however, that as the liquidation ends, meat prices may rise significantly next year.

But, in today's report, the Labor Department said beef and veal prices fell 4.8 percent in July and pork prices tumbled 5.7 percent. Poultry prices were down 2 percent.

The report said prices fell 11.9 percent for vegetables and 1.4 percent for eggs. The cost of fresh fruit rose 3.4 percent.

As for energy prices, gasoline costs rose 0.9 percent, off from the 5.1 percent gain of the previous month. Natural gas prices, up just 0.2 percent in the previous month, fell 1.2 percent in the new report. Heating oil prices were down 0.7 percent, a sharp reversal of the 5.3 percent rise of the preceding month.

Western Sources Report Further Libyan Bombing

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH

Associated Press Writer

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) —

Libya's army poured supplies and reinforcements into the captured northern oasis of Faya-Largeau today and its warplanes bombed Chad government forces in Oum Chalouba on the road south, Western diplomatic sources said.

Meanwhile, the radio station of the Chad rebels, who are backed by the Libya, claimed Chad Foreign Minister Idriss Miskine was trapped when Faya-Largeau was captured and was "either killed or injured" in the six-hour final battle Wednesday.

Miskine has not been seen in N'Djamena for a week and earlier was reported to have gone to Faya-Largeau to boost the morale of the government defenders. But Chad government sources and Western diplomats said there was no reason to believe he was among the casualties or fell into rebel hands.

The Western diplomats said Libyan convoys were pouring down from the Libyan border in a "constant stream" while teams of Libyan technicians were hastily repairing the bomb-damaged airport at Faya-Largeau, 500 miles north of N'Djamena.

They said that Libyan warplanes were bombing government positions in Oum Chalouba, about 200 miles to the south and east of Faya-Largeau. Oum Chalouba straddles one of the two main highways leading to N'Djamena, the capital. It also sits about 150 miles north of the key government outpost of Abeche.

The diplomats, who insisted on anonymity, have access to satellite and military intelligence reports. Their information could not be independently confirmed as no Western reporters have access to the fighting zone.

The sources said Libyan and rebel troops loyal to former President Goukouni Oueddei were combing the 100-square-mile palm grove around Faya-Largeau for remnants of the government forces driven out Wednesday following a Libyan air, tank and artillery assault.

Some 2,500 men, virtually half the armed forces of President Hissene Habre, were in Faya-Largeau when the outpost changed hands for the third time in six weeks. Most of the Habre forces escaped into the countryside, the government said.

A U.S. official in Washington said the rebels had cut off retreat routes to N'Djamena, "leaving the loyalist troops in a hammer and anvil situation. Basically, they are going to have to fight their way out."

Information Minister Soumaila Mahamat confirmed Thursday the loss of the strategic northern city and claimed government forces set up defensive positions 4.5 miles west and 11 miles east of the city, which controls all routes from Libya to N'Djamena.

Soumaila said evacuation was ordered "to spare the 7,000 civilian inhabitants further casualties and suffering." He also said, "In view of the extreme gravity of the situation, it cannot be ruled out that our forces may carry out a tactical withdrawal" from the surrounding area.

Western military sources said U.S.-supplied Redeye surface-to-air missiles, which were sent to help ward off the Libyan attack, were removed from Faya-Largeau before it fell. The Americans also had AWACS reconnaissance planes scouting the area.

The sources also said after the rout at Faya-Largeau, government troops recaptured Oum Chalouba, and Soumaila claimed 500 rebel troops were taken prisoner there.

But a ranking State Department official in Washington said Thursday that Goukouni's forces seized both Oum Chalouba and Koro Toro, 150 miles south of Faya-Largeau, cutting off retreat routes to N'Djamena.

"Habre's forces are apparently pulling back. Apparently they are caught in the middle. Obviously there's very little between Goukouni's army and N'Djamena, except what is left of Habre's forces," said the Washington official, who requested anonymity.

"I understand there is little between Faya and N'Djamena except flat desert, so take it from there. I think it's conceivable that they could reach N'Djamena if they decided to do so."

President Reagan told a Washington news conference Thursday the United States had no plans to send combat troops to Chad, but has agreed to make available up to $25 million in military aid to Chad.

The 500 French marine paratroopers flown to N'Djamena to handle training and electronics for Habre's army were said by French officials to be limited to a strictly non-combatant role. Chad is a former French colony.

President Of El Salvador Observes Navy Capability

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Salvadoran President Alvaro Magana says he doesn't "feel alone anymore" after watching a display of U.S. firepower from aboard the aircraft carrier Ranger off Nicaragua's Pacific coast.

The 80,000-ton Ranger is the flagship of a nine-vessel fleet President Reagan sent to Central American waters last month in a show of support for American allies in the region. Magana, during a 3½-hour visit Thursday, observed mock bombing and strafing runs conducted a mile from the carrier.

In other developments in the region Thursday, civilian lawyer Fernando Diaz Duran was named foreign minister by Guatemala's new military leader, and Nicaragua's Interior Ministry said insurgents fighting the leftist government bombed and partially destroyed a bridge near the Honduran border.

Nicaraguan leaders claim the Ranger and other U.S. warships conducting naval exercises off its coasts are part of an effort to intimidate it.

The Beagan administration, on the other hand, accuses Nicaragua of helping the Soviet Union and Cuba funnel aid to Salvadoran guerrillas fighting Magana's U.S.-supported conservative government in a 46-month-old civil war.

During his visit on the Ranger, Magana saw anti-submarine helicopters lay down smoke targets a mile off the Ranger's port side, A-7 Corsair attack planes strafe the targets and F-14 Tomcats drop strings of bombs.

"After looking at that exhibition, I'm very glad these officers are on my side," Magana told journalists invited on board.

The Ranger was cruising about 100 miles south of San Salvador and 65 miles off the Nicaraguan coast in international waters.

On land in El Salvador, Defense Minister Gen. Carlos Eugenio Vides Casanova said the government battle death toll more than doubled in the past year of fighting against leftist guerrillas.

Vides Casanova said guerrillas killed 2,292 soldiers and officials between July 1, 1982, and June 30 of this year, compared with the 1,073 deaths reported for the previous 12 months.

Annexation Petition Referred Back To Planning-Zoning Body

By TOM BAINES

Reflector Staff Writer

The City Council has referred an annexation petition back to the Planning and Zoning Commission for consideration as part of a study by the board's annexation subcommittee of possible areas that could be brought into the city limits.

The council, which conducted a public hearing last month on a petition by the owners of Colonial Mobile Home Park for satellite annexation, agreed at Thursday's meeting that the matter should be included in the committee study.

Councilman Louis Clark, noting that a long-range plan for annexation is in progress, offered the motion to send the matter to the planning board "with a request from this council" that the committee "give the Colonial Mobile Home Park and the area between the ... park and the present city limits a high priority" in its study.

The planning board, after considering the mobile home petition earlier, recommended that the council not annex the property, which is located on U.S. 13-N.C. 11 across from Burroughs Wellcome.

The General Assembly recently adopted legislation that rewrites the state's annexation laws. Bobby Roberson, city planning director, has said that provisions included in the new law will affect the city's ability to annex by non-petition.

Roberson said there are two areas that should be addressed by the subcommittee. One section involves the island along 14th Street between the present city limits and the satellite city limits, while the second area is along U.S. 13-N.C. 11 from the existing city limits to and including the Colonial Mobile Home Park.

The council voted to continue for one month consideration of an amendment to the zoning ordinance that would remove outdoor advertising signs as a special use in the flood way district. In continuing the item, the council asked that the planning board "suggest an alternative to this ordinance that would have the limited purpose of protecting the scenic view of the river at the Town Common."

Clark said the comprehensive planning committee is "real concerned" about the area across from the Town Common and a one month continuance would keep advertising signs from

PRE-SCHOOL ENRICHMENT VOLUNTEERS ASKED

Persons wishing to volunteer to assist with the Pre-School Enrichment Program which begins Sept. 15 are invited to contact Mrs. Willie Mae Gibbs at Carver Library, 752-3068.

This program, in operation since it was designed and implemented by Acolia Simon-Thomas of the Mental Health staff in 1980, is co-sponsored by Carver Library and the Pitt County Mental Health Center to serve children whose parents cannot afford to place them in kindergarten programs. The children attend a morning session one day a week during the school year and their parents must be willing to volunteer some time to assist, along with the community volunteers. Persons to lead activities, arrange transportation and obtain supplies are needed.

Registration is underway.

New Sales Tax Benefit Seen

The City Council, meeting in workshop session this week, discussed the one-half cent local option sales tax and agreed that the tax "would be of great benefit to the citizens of Greenville and Pitt County," according to Mayor Percy Cox.

The mayor, in a letter to the Pitt County Board of Commissioners, said it was the consensus of the council that the one-half cents tax would enable "the local governments in Pitt County to utilize the additional funds for much needed programs such as public education and capital improvements."

Cox said, "The council is supportive of the sales tax and requests that the ... Board of Commissioners give favorable consideration to enacting the one-half cents local option sales tax."

The tax was authorized by the 1983 General Assembly.

Average Is Up

The Greenville Tobacco Market concluded the sixth sales day of the young season Thursday with its top average so far, while the percentage of tobacco placed under government loan also showed some improvement.

Local warehouses posted an average of $169.31 per hundred pounds Thursday as 601,694 pounds sold for $1,018,728. The average was up from Wednesday's $165 per hundred.

The amount of leaf bought by the Flue-Cured Cooperative Stabilization Corp. declined to 230,069 pounds or 38.24 percent of total sales Thursday. The previous day, 250,584 pounds or 39.21 percent was purchased by the co-op.

The 12 Eastern Belt markets holding sales Thursday saw combined Stabilization receipts of 1,716,866 pounds or 39.4 percent of total sales. The percentage was down from Wednesday's 40.95 percent and marked the first time this season that the figure has dropped below 40 percent for the belt.

The eastern markets recorded the highest average so far this year as 4,353,649 pounds sold for $7,241,630, an average of $166.33 per hundred. The figure was up from Wednesday's $163.10. The belt has averaged $157.10 per hundred so far in 1983. Two markets, Wallace and Kinston, topped the $170 per hundred mark for their daily average.

performed the double ring ceremony.

Daughter of Mrs. Ada M. Holder of Wilmington and the late Harold W. Holder, the bride was given in marriage by David Brookshire. She wore a gown of white organza overlaid with chiffon and trimmed in silk Venise lace. It had an empire waistline, chapel length train and long sleeves with fitted wrist band. Her fingertip length veil was attached to a wreath headpiece.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph L. Hayes of Raleigh.

Joey Marlowe was organist and Kelvin Norkett was soloist for the ceremony.

Debbly Ormsby of Wilmington was honor attendant and bridesmaids included Myra Turner of Wilmington, sister of the bride, Rochel Roland of Greensboro, Elaine Gray of Creedmoor and Sara Bradshaw of Roanoke Rapids.

The best man was brother of the bridegroom, Daniel Conners of Idaho Falls, Idaho. Ushers were Joseph L. Hayes of Raleigh, stepfather of the bridegroom, Eddie Wilson of Raleigh, Rick Hollowell of Chapel Hill and Bob Ross of Greenville.

Bevin Conners of Idaho Falls, Idaho, niece of the bridegroom, and Shauna Turner of Wilmington, niece of the bride, were flower girls.

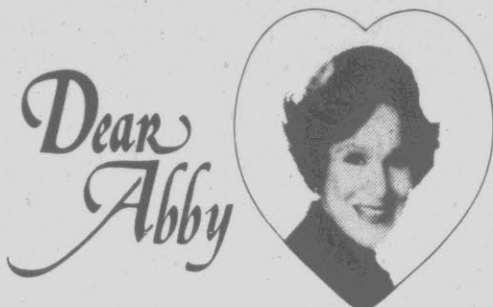

The bridesmaids wore rose colored dresses with empire waistlines and accordin pleated skirts. The off-shoulder neckline was accented by a ruffle of lace and each wore a wreath headpiece of rose colored flowers and ribbon streamers.

The flower girls wore floor length dresses of lavender rosebud print styled with an empire waistline. The neckline and puffed sleeves were accented by ribbons and lace.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to Florida.

The rehearsal dinner was held at Popular Grove Plantation in Scott's Hill. The just in time Band from Charlotte played for the dance which followed.

Dear Abby She Needs To Control Her Life

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am a 35-year-old woman. I'm recently unemployed, which necessitated my returning home "to the nest." My problem: an overprotective mother. She has never liked the man I've dated for the last seven years. When we broke it off (for a while) two years ago, she was very pleased, so when we got back together again, I never told her.

Now that I am home, when he calls I am forced to lie to her, and I have to tell her I am going somewhere else so I can meet him.

Everyone I talk to tells me my mother has no say about whom I may date, but I can't seem to get that through her head. I need some suggestions on how I can deal with her overprotectiveness.

"S'MOTHERED"

DEAR S'MOTHERED: Your problem is not an "overprotective mother" — it's your own inability to assert yourself and project yourself as a mature woman who is able to control her own life. Try doubly hard to find a job in order to break out of that "nest," because as long as you're under your mother's roof, she will feel justified in treating you like a juvenile.

DEAR ABBY: I am a woman of 67, in fairly good health and weigh 272. I cannot keep weight off once I do find a diet that works for me. I have been overweight for 35 years, but nothing like this.

My doctor told me he wants me to have my stomach stapled! Do they actually use staples? Or is that a stupid question?

Please send me all the information you have about this operation or tell me where I can get it.

LAST RESORT

DEAR LAST: In my opinion the first and the only place to get the answer about the procedure is from the doctor who recommended the stomach stapling. Please consider a second opinion. There are no stupid questions — only people who remained uninformed because they're afraid of appearing stupid by asking questions.

DEAR ABBY: My mother is a strict Catholic who feels that no one should live in sin; they should be married first.

MARY ELIZABETH

DEAR ABBY: I have some questions I'm too embarrassed to ask anybody else. I'm a 21-year-old woman and, unfortunately, my mother never told me anything about growing up or being sexually active.

How far can a woman go with a man without getting pregnant? Does the degree of penetration determine whether she is in any danger of getting pregnant? Can a woman get pregnant if she doesn't have an orgasm during sex?

Sorry I am so dumb, but I really need to know.

COULD BE PREGNANT

DEAR COULD BE: See a doctor at once for a pregnancy test.

A woman can get pregnant without experiencing orgasm, and your other questions are answered in detail in my booklet, "What Every Teen-ager Ought to Know." It can be obtained by sending $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

Parents have written to tell me that their 12- and 13-year-old boys and girls found it very educational, and they (the parents) regretted that such a booklet was not available when they were growing up.

There are signs of how the tough economic times have hit Newport has hard as the rest of the country.

A "Feed-a-Friend" program which was started in Newport earlier this year is aimed at helping collect and supply food for the needy.

The Salvation Army began a mobile soup kitchen for the first time this year, which closed down as summer began for fear tourists would begin using it.

For those who have to struggle to make ends meet, Newport's glamorous image seems as distant as the other side of the sparkling blue ocean stretching out from the city's shores.

Adopted Granddaughter Writes On Life In South

By JO-ANNE BYRNE
ST. PAUL, Minn. (UPI) — Treating a sore throat? Consider this remedy:

"Boil potatoes soft with peels on, mash them quick, put them in a piece of linen hot, bind them to the throat, when cold, renew the hot potatoes."

That whimsical and messy suggestion is in an intriguing little book written 150 years ago by Nelly Custis Lewis, George Washington's adopted granddaughter.

Nelly, born in 1779, was Martha Washington's granddaughter by her first marriage and was unofficially adopted, along with her brother, by the childless Washington.

Nelly's housekeeping book, found in a collection of historical papers, has been re-created by Patricia Brady Schmit, of New Orleans, and published by the Historic New Orleans Collection. The book that had been passed on to Nelly's daughter contains recipes, medicinal advice and other glimpses into the world of the 19th century.

Nelly was the belle of Washington, D.C., society during Washington's presidency. She became mistress of a Virginia plantation at 20 and took upon herself the feeding, clothing and doctoring of her own family as well as servants and slaves.

She was called on to entertain as many as 20 guests who might drop in for dinner any day and to oversee preparation of as many as 40 different dishes daily.

Her menus and food had to reflect the family's affluence. Nelly could not be embarrassed in front of her guests by a table lacking in variety.

To faithfully transcribe the book, Mrs. Schmit, a documentary historian, immersed herself in Nelly's life and personality and the culture of the period.

She recently came to Minnesota to address the Women Historians of the Midwest.

In an interview she said most Northerners don't understand the difficulties women faced in the antebellum South.

Since the slaves were not willing workers, she said, the mistress of the house had to push all the time to keep the household moving.

Nelly's duties included directing the butchering and storage of meat, checking dish supplies, washing the best china, keeping her eye on expensive items such as tea, coffee and sugar, which were locked up — and training her servants.

On special occasions Nelly would cook. She may have prided herself on a special pudding, Mrs. Schmit said. Her letters show on at least one occasion she spent the day cooking pudding and was forced to leave her guests at the table and retire with a headache.

A trail of clues from the recipes and Nelly's letters led Mrs. Schmit in many directions as she tried to reconstruct Nelly's kitchen and the kind of tools she used at her open hearth stove.

In a visit to Nelly's plantation, Woodlawn, Mrs. Schmit found the remains of the icehouse where cream desserts were cooled.

"The creams were nice light desserts," Mrs. Schmit said, "but the cakes tend to be awfully heavy."

Her first attempt to re-create Nelly's sponge cake resulted in an inedible concoction because she didn't realize authentic sponge cake had to be beaten for an hour without pause.

Nelly's recipes, some of which came from her niece Mrs. Robert E. Lee, were generally abbreviated and may have functioned simply as memory aids, Mrs. Schmit said.

The book includes remedies for toothache, snake bite, consumption, chapped hands and lips and nose bleeds.

Mrs. Schmit said the many suggestions for treating upset stomach probably stemmed from lack of refrigeration that led to many people eating food past its prime.

Nelly, one of the most accomplished American women of her day and better educated than most men, spent a lifetime satisfying her intellectual curiosity, Mrs. Schmit said. The housekeeping book is a reflection of Nelly's major life work, as a housewife, she said.

Nelly Custis Lewis' Cabbage Pudding "Take a bit of stale bread and grate it, 2 or 3 slices of Bacon, also of veal or any cold meat, chop it fine, sweet herbs sliced fine, a large onion, yolks of 3 eggs, pepper and salt, of boiled cabbage a large bit chopped up with it. Beat all well together, take a large Cabbage, cut a hole at the end, where the stalk was, get out all the inside, then put in the above ingredients, tie up the cabbage in a napkin, let it boil for three hours."

("The Nelly Custis Lewis Housekeeping Book" is $9.95 (plus $1.50 postage) from The Historic New Orleans Collection, 533 Royal Street, New Orleans, La. 70130.)

Economy Adjusts

It again is costing more to borrow — but saving is more profitable. As simple as that, bankers say, is the explanation as to why the prime rate has gone to 11 percent after leveling off at 10.5 percent in February.

Interest paid on such accounts as those based on the money market have gone up in recent weeks. Meanwhile, demand for loans — especially from the deficit-ridden federal government — have gone up. If a bank or thrift institution is going to pay higher interest on its source of dollars, it certainly will charge a comparable interest on money it lends.

Thus, the prime rate on Monday went up.

Now comes the question: How will it affect the economy, which had shown encouraging signs of pulling through? The stock market obviously doesn't like the idea, with the Dow Jones averages reflecting a sharp drop; the international market likes the higher interests, pushing the dollar's value up in world trading.

Local bankers predict the higher prime — if it remains static — will have little immediate impact on borrowing locally, although it could slow the construction industry again.

For some, however, it is hard to realize that just 18 months ago the prime rate was 17 percent and, two years ago, it was more than 20 percent. A return to those levels is unthinkable.

In the meantime, we have a little room to spare while the economy adjusts itself.

Life In Space?

Whether there is life elsewhere in the Universe has been debated for centuries, and no doubt the thought will continue to fascinate earthlings for a long time to come.

We haven't even been certain whether there were other solar systems in the Universe, although logic tells us there almost has to be.

Now a space telescope Laboratory has discovered what may be another solar system around the bright star Vega. Something is circling the star over a diameter of 15 billion miles.

Vega is 150 trillion miles from Earth, and what is now being seen on Earth is many years old.

There may be an Earth counterpart circling Vega. We probably will never know. It cannot be reached by humans through any technology we know today, and it would almost certainly be a futile trip where at best humans would find only lifeless bodies circling a sun. Somewhere out there, however, there still might be another planet that can support life forms. The thought continues to fascinate.

Terrorist Drive

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Salvadoran intelligence expects Marxist guerrillas to respond to the government's recent military victories in the countryside by launching a terrorist campaign against the capital of San Salvador and other cities.

The urban terrorist drive is likely during August but could be delayed for another month, according to well-placed Salvadoran officials.

That would mark the first real return of the war to the Salvadoran capital city in over a year. Despite tightened security precautions, substantial civilian casualties and property damage are possible.

Such an urban campaign by the guerrillas, certain to cost them heavily in men and scarce ammunition, runs counter to their proclaimed strategy of the "prolonged offensive." Salvadoran intelligence believes they are willing to pay that price to regain the world's attention and counter international publicity about recent government military successes.

To prepare for the onslaught of terrorism, security forces in San Salvador have begun a program of extraordinary building and vehicle inspection. Cars are stopped for inspection and to check the driver's papers with far more frequency than usual.

During the past two months, government troops have scored more successes against the guerrillas than in any comparable period. Attracting the most attention were sweeps into San Vicente and Usulután provinces. Guerrillas faded away without seriously contesting the troops, who then began a program for consolidating control over the area by reopening schools, granting farm loans and generally establishing the government's presence.

Simultaneously in the North, some of the war's most intense fighting took place last week when a 2,000-man government force, including the crack U.S.-trained Atlacatl Battalion, collided with a guerrilla force variously estimated between 400 and 1,000 men. The government troops suffered some early setbacks but in relatively heavy fighting routed the guerrillas, who left behind arms and other equipment in substantial numbers.

U.S. advisers discourage government body counts of guerrillas killed, which can lead to human rights violations. But unofficial counts put Marxists killed at between 200 and 300 for the past two months — extremely high for this war.

Crime Isn't An Election Issue

said it had stayed the same.

Curiously, however, crime did not show up as an important answer to another question. When asked what was the most important issue for state government to address in the coming years, 42 percent said the schools had to be improved, 33 percent said more jobs had to be created. Crime did not show up in the statistics.

An aide to the gubernatorial candidate said they were reading the results to mean that the voters are worried about crime but that they don't link it with the governor's race. That does not mean, however, that it can't be developed into an issue.

The poll had some other interesting political information. As reported in this column last week, Sen. Jesse Helms has extraordinary popularity among Democrats. Of those polled, 52 percent were favorably disposed towards Helms. His likely opponent in the 1984 Senate race, Gov. Jim Hunt, is even more popular. Hunt has an 83 percent favorable rating. Hunt also has 78 percent of the respondents saying he has done either a good or excellent job as governor.

Helms' favorable rating was split 24 percent "very favorable" and 28 percent "somewhat favorable." Hunt's breakdown was 46 percent and 37 percent. The 1984 election is getting a lot of attention as a battle of two diametrically opposed political camps. This poll shows that while the two candidates may represent two different political worlds, a good many North Carolinians like the two of them. Like most campaigns, the 1984 Senate race shapes up as a battle for the middle.

Regarding presidential politics, President Reagan's job performance got "excellent" grades from 9 percent, "good" from 38 percent and negative responses from 47 percent. Remember, just Democrats were polled.

For their own party's nomination, those polled liked former Vice President Walter Mondale, 40 percent, Sen. John Glenn, 26 percent, with 24 percent undecided and no other candidate getting more than 5 percent.

One last tidbit: The poll pretty much followed previously reported polls in showing Atty. Gen. Rufus Edmisten a slight leader in the governor's race. There were no surprises in the ranking of the other candidates. But one response does stick out. Of those who expressed a preference for one candidate or another, only 18 percent said they were sure they wouldn't change their minds between now and the May primary. That means 82 percent concede they've not made up their minds yet. That's an awfully high percentage, and if it is correct, it leads one to believe the governor's race is wide open.

Renaissance Women Are Not For Feminists

WASHINGTON — Meet Nina May:

She's 31 and married, has herded cattle and studied law. She now runs her own graphic design firm in a Capitol Hill townhouse. Her works include a book, assorted paintings and a four-language newspaper produced in the Netherlands, from which she recently returned.

Peripatetic Nina (rhymes with China) recently read "Soviet Military Power," published by Ronald Reagan's Pentagon. She's also founded a group called Renaissance Women.

Yet Eleanor Smeal, Gloria Steinem and Phil Donahue need not apply for membership. Renaissance Women, like Nina May, don't like the Women's Movement.

"Feminists have duped the country," Ms. May declares. Her goal, she adds, is to "make people understand that they need not be intimidated" into accepting the feminist movement's agenda.

"Just because I'm a working woman, I'm on their rolls," said Ms. May, referring to NOW, the National Women's Political Caucus and other groups. "But I don't want to be categorized."

Ms. May cites two intimidating encounters as catalysts for her way of thinking. During her freshman year at Stetson University in Florida (her home state), Ms. May says, she dared to ask a visiting Betty Friedan why women couldn't be housewives and feel good about themselves, too. According to Ms. May, Friedan brushed off condescendingly and a Stetson dean — a woman — told her to sit down.

Five years ago, when ERA supporters gathered on the Capitol steps, Ms. May and a friend formed a counter-protest of two. Soon there erupted a shouting match with former NOW president Smeal. When Capitol Hill policemen asked Ms. May to leave or face arrest, she says. It seemed to her that this so-called women's rights movement viewed freedom very selectively.

Last February, long-held resentment finally, if inadvertently, found expression when Ms. May decided to throw a party with the help of like-minded friends. It was the beginning of Renaissance Women, a group that, as an initial newsletter says, "truly represented the majority of women who don't want to deny the differences between men and women, but who want to develop their own individual potential as women ... (and were) already excited about America..."

In five months, asserts Ms. May, about 200 individuals have joined the two Renaissance Women chapters (the second is in Dallas), delving into a potpourri of activities, from aerobics and panel discussion to firearms practice and karate. That the group principally includes conservative Republicans with close ties to the Reagan administration is of no matter to Ms. May, who published a coloring book last year about "liberal inconsistencies." She, in fact, tries "not to let myself be categorized as conservative ... I'm going to say that I'm positive."

Some thing, of course, Ms. May make her stereotypical. Among the early Renaissance crusades have been support for Reagan's defense and economic programs, opposition to a nuclear weapons freeze and educating Americans about the "myth" of the gender gap. Her own experience, Ms. May declares, shows how "it's not sex, but philosophical differences" that drive the women's movement. When Ms. May says, "May I ask you one question: Do you support the president?" it's like being asked whether one believes in God.

But Renaissance Women shy away from matters that are more divisive. Whatever their personal views, "we don't take stands on the social issues," says Ms. May. "We don't have a right to impose our social beliefs on other women." In Ms. May's opinion, there's something tacky about the extremes of a Phyllis Schlafly.

Therin may lie a key to understanding the prospects of Ronald Reagan's women's movement. By Ms. May's characterization, a Renaissance Woman wants things — a strong defense, free enterprise and a healthy body, for example — that are very hard to argue with. Where the concerns are more personal and stickier, however, she's rather avoid contentiousness. In the words of country singer Tammy Wynette, that adds up to "Stand By Your Man."

Some women certainly will find this neo-feminism refreshing. Others may not find it any more enlightened than recent presidential gratitude for those who helped men grow out of skins and clubs.

Strength For Today

A quiet conscience is a great blessing and anyone who has ever been kept awake at night with a bad conscience knows this. But if a good conscience is a complacent conscience, it can do infinite harm.

This is why the great Albert Schweitzer once declared that a quiet conscience is an invention of the devil. Yes, if by quietness we mean complacency; and very often we do. Some of the worst people in the world have a completely quiet conscience.

—Robert Burns—

Exports Is Key To Improvement

of the rise in total unemployment in that period.

Last year alone, U.S. exports to Mexico fell a staggering 60 percent, turning a $4 billion U.S. trade surplus with Mexico in 1981 to a $4 billion deficit last year. The Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco estimates that the slump in U.S. trade with Mexico cost the United States about 200,000 jobs last year.

Q. Are U.S. exports declining now?

A. In the April-June quarter, total U.S. merchandise exports fell 1 percent from the previous quarter, according to the Commerce Department. That, combined with an increase in imports, left the United States with a record $14.8 billion trade deficit.

Q. Who is losing exports?

A. The losses are widespread. Exporters of consumer goods have been big losers, particularly in the Latin American market. Manufacturers Hanover estimates that U.S. shipments to Latin American countries of household appliances are running 43 percent below last year's level and 77 percent below the 1981 level. Overall, U.S. merchandise exports are running 15 percent behind 1981's pace.

Q. Why are U.S. exports down so much?

A. There are many reasons. One is the depressed economic conditions elsewhere in the world. With interest rates high and their own export earnings down, many countries simply cannot afford to import as much. And at the same time those countries' available funds have slipped, the cost of U.S. goods has risen.

Q. Are the exporters raising prices?

A. Not directly. Most, if not all, of the increased cost to foreigners of U.S. goods is due to a rise in the exchange value of the American dollar. Since the dollar is worth more West German marks, Brazilian cruzeiros and more of virtually every other currency in the non-Communist world than it was last year, those foreign buyers must pay more of their local currency for each dollar's worth of imports. And it's not just American goods that become more costly: oil and many other raw materials are traded internationally in U.S. dollars.

Q. Can't the Reagan administration do something to help the exporters?

A. It has pushed for, and apparently will get, approval from Congress to increase by $8.5 billion the U.S. contribution to the International Monetary Fund, which makes loans to cash-squeezed nations. The House last week approved the bill, and it now will go to a conference committee to work out differences between the House version and a similar bill passed earlier by the Senate. U.S. economists say the additional IMF financing will give a needed boost to world trade, including U.S. exports to developing countries.

Public Forum

To the editor:

I would like to inform you that the review of "Class" in the Aug. 4, 1983, edition was not right. It states that Jonathon Ogner is played by Rob Lowe and Skip Burroughs is played by Andrew McCarthy.

Well, I've seen the movie and Rob Lowe plays Skip, the rich student, and Andrew McCarthy plays the role of Jonathon, the poor but smart student.

Your reviewer, although I agree with his review, should check up on facts.

Russian Radar Raises Doubts

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Reagan administration source says U.S. experts are studying a new Soviet radar to see if it violates the treaty banning anti-ballistic missiles.

The source, who is familiar with national security questions and who declined to permit use of his name, said Thursday the radar appeared to be of the kind used with ABM systems.

CBS News said the radar had been under construction for two years and was spotted by a reconnaissance satellite on July 12, near the town of Avalacova. The location is thousands of miles from Moscow, where the existing Soviet ABM system is deployed.

The 1972 ABM treaty permits the United States and the Soviet Union to deploy one ABM system each. The U.S. system at Grand Forks, N.D., was retired in 1975.

The Pentagon's spokesman on duty, Army Lt. Col. Tom Jones, declined to confirm the CBS report, but his statement did hint at concern.

"We do not comment on intelligence matters.

Existence of such a radar would raise serious questions about Soviet compliance with the ABM treaty, Jones said. "We are studying these questions in detail."

The network said the Soviets had not responded to U.S. feelers for a special discussion in Geneva, Switzerland, on the issue. Geneva is the site of current talks on limiting nuclear missiles.

A special U.S.-Soviet panel on verification of existing treaties is scheduled to meet again in September in Geneva.

In today's editions, The New York Times said Secretary of State George P. Shultz read a statement in late July to the second-ranking Soviet diplomat in Washington, Oleg M. Sokolov, requesting an urgent meeting of the verification panel for Aug. 11 to discuss:

—The new radar.

—Three tests of a new three-stage solid-fuel intercontinental missile, the PL-5, that many American officials believe may violate the terms 1979 unratified 1979 SALT II arms agreement by which both sides have agreed to abide.

—The possible deployment of the SS-16 missile system round Plesetsk, a move banned by the 1979 terms.

Police Officer Shoots Suspect

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A Charlotte police officer shot and killed a housebreaking suspect early Thursday after the man allegedly grabbed a police shotgun and aimed it at the officer.

James Robert Lindsay, 39, of Gastonia died at Charlotte Memorial Hospital at 8 a.m., about two hours after he was shot by Officer Ernest Kirchin, a three-year veteran of the department.

Lindsay, wearing boxer undershorts and no shirt, was shot twice in the upper body.

Police say Kirchin shot Lindsay after Lindsay grabbed Kirchin's 12-gauge shotgun and nightstick from his cruiser and pointed the shotgun at Kirchin.

Lindsay never fired the shotgun, police said.

Vehicles Damaged In Collisions

An estimated $1,400 damage resulted from two traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police Thursday. Heaviest damage, officers said, resulted from a 4:05 p.m. collision at the intersection of 14th and Chestnut Streets, involving vehicles driven by Fred Allen Davis of Route 6, Greenville, and Robert Pettus Jr. of 103 Rackley Road. Damage was set at $500 to the Davis truck and $400 to the Pettus car.

Hardwood Taste In Gypsy Moths

BROOMALL, Pa. (AP) — The leaf-munching gypsy moth ate less this year, but has developed a taste for valuable hardwoods in Ohio and West Virginia, and even for California's redwoods, officials say.

The moths, which leave dead, defoliated trees in their wake, have spread for the first time to three counties near Harper's Ferry, W.Va., and officials have found evidence of a buildup in moth eggs as far away as central Michigan, said Robert Wolfe, a government entomologist.

"Until recently the gypsy moth was considered a nuisance by the forestry companies," said Peter Orr, staff director for forest pest management of the U.S. Forest Service. "But it is at the point where it is moving southward and west and it's moving into the valuable hardwood stands in the Appalachians and Ohio."

Wolfe said the moths also have been sighted, but are not yet considered a serious threat, as far afield as the Pacific Coast.

A gypsy moth was found Friday at the Sequoia National Park, home of giant redwoods in California. But officials believe the moth hitched a ride on a vehicle belonging to tourists from New England and does not represent an invasion.

Oregon agriculture authorities said Wednesday that 11 gypsy moths were trapped there this week but do not signal an infestation.

Although the moths have spread from the Northeast, they have devastated fewer acres this year, federal figures show.

The moth, hatching as a caterpillar in the spring and eating its way through the tree tops, defoliated about 2.6 million acres of forest this year, compared with 8.2 million acres last year and 12.9 million acres in 1981, the forest service said in releasing preliminary figures this week.

Sentenced For Credit Fraud

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A San Diego man arrested in Raleigh while carrying a notebook threatening top federal officials has been sentenced to six years in prison after being convicted on four counts of credit card fraud.

The notebook was found during a search of luggage owned by Virgil V. Keels. It appeared to mark for elimination or harm Chief Justice Warren E. Burger; Edwin Meese III, counselor to President Reagan; and U.S. Attorney General William French Smith.

None of the charges against Keels involved the notebook, but a U.S. Secret Service agent attended the trial.

Keels, who served as his own attorney in the trial before Superior Court Judge Robert L. Farmer, denied being responsible for the notebook. He said he would appeal his conviction.

New State Jaycee Prexy Applauds Club

Jim Godfrey is getting a first hand look at how Jaycees in eastern North Carolina are conducting their activities and he applauds the Greenville chapter for the way it is communicating with the community.

The new state Jaycee president was in Greenville Thursday as part of a tour of eastern towns aimed at meeting as many Jaycees as possible and also assisting in the initiation of new chapters.

Godfrey, who attended a Jaycee awareness luncheon during his visit here, said the chapter's meeting with industrial and banking leaders, as well as other area officials, was one of the "best PR (public relations) efforts I've seen in a long time."

Brad Walls, president of the Greenville organization, said the luncheon was held to express to the leaders and officials the chapter's thanks for helping the Jaycees and to inform them of project goals and activities.

Godfrey said the idea to tour parts of the state resulted from last year's effort by U.S. Jaycee President Donnie Jones to visit Jaycees in as many states as possible. He said three of the state's ten regions are included in the current tour, while three more will be visited during Jaycee Week activities in January, and the four remaining areas will be scheduled in April.

"We've met with Jaycees for breakfasts, lunches, dinners and various activities since we began Sunday," said Godfrey, who has been accompanied by Randall Essick, the state Jaycees' community development vice president for external projects. "It has been tiresome, but it has been an eye opener."

Godfrey, a graduate of East Carolina University and bullet-proof glass, was driven along the path marked by the Stations of the Cross to the Sanctuary of Lourdes.

The brief helicopter flight from Lourdes airport to a military barracks just outside the city by John Paul II and by President Francois Mitterrand, who will fly in separate craft, also was rehearsed.

Bordes said he "hoped will people come in greater numbers than ever. It would be cowardly to give in to this act, and it would be the end of our civilization."

where the cocaine was unloaded. Federal drug agents later brought the seized boat to the Coast Guard station at Fort Myers Beach.

Thursday's seizure, although large, doesn't rival the national record of 3,700 pounds found in 22 cardboard boxes on a cargo plane at Miami International Airport.

Prior to Thursday's interdiction, the largest amount of cocaine ever confiscated in Southwest Florida was 625 pounds, seized aboard a plane that landed near LaBelle in late April. That cocaine shipment was valued at $200 million.

Dave Woods, a spokesman for U.S. Customs, said he knew few details about the seizure, except that "about 1,000 pounds of cocaine" were captured. The 44-foot fishing boat was seized, officials said.

Those arrested Thursday were identified as James "Buddy" William Ellis, 26, of Naples; Richard Leigh Kniffin, 26, of Miami; and Wanda Gail Luch, 24, of Winston-Salem, N.C.

The three were booked into the Lee County Jail on charges of possession and importation of cocaine, according to jail records. They were being held without bond and were expected to go before a federal magistrate today.

Arrest records identified Ellis as a fisherman and Kniffin as a boat captain employed by American Off-Shore. Details about Luch were unavailable.

A Coast Guard spokesman said the pleasure-commercial trawler, similar to a charter fishing boat, was brought to the phosphate docks at Port Boca Grande,

Explosion Destroys Statue At Lourdes

LOURDES, France (AP) — An explosion today destroyed a bronze statue of Pontius Pilate behind the basilica where Pope John Paul II is scheduled to make a pilgrimage this weekend, church officials said.

Debris from the statue, showing Pontius Pilate handing over Jesus Christ to the people to be crucified, was thrown 500 feet by the explosion.

The statue was part of the Stations of the Cross, which commemorate the events leading to the death of Jesus Christ, and was on a path about 200 yards from the Roman Catholic basilica. No one lives near the area, and no one was injured.

A group calling itself "Stop the Priests" claimed responsibility for the blast in a telephone call to a French news agency in the southwest city of Toulouse.

The caller said, "We claim responsibility for the attack timed for the coming of the chairman of the board of the Vatican multinational. Other anti-clerical actions will take place this weekend."

Millions of pilgrims visit Lourdes each year, drawn by their faith in the miraculous cures attributed to the waters at its shrines.

Authorities in Toulouse said they had not heard of the group until today.

The Rev. Joseph Bordes, rector for the shrines in Lourdes, said, "Someone wanted to intimidate us but we will not give in to blackmail."

The attack came amid disagreements among French security services and church authorities over protection for the pope, who is to arrive Sunday afternoon and leave Monday night.

A week ago, Bordes criticized a decision by French authorities to deploy 3,600 men in uniform and civilian clothes within Lourdes during the papal visit to provide security.

Church officials said such precautions might discourage pilgrims from coming to Lourdes.

Cleanup work began at dawn to reopen the stations of the cross to the more than 20,000 pilgrims already in Lourdes.

The town stands at the foot of the Pyrenees mountains and is famous for the shrine

Craig Phillips Bethel Speaker

BETHEL — State Superintendent of Public Instruction Craig Phillips will speak at the Bethel Council Chamber of Commerce Pepsi Break August 22 at 5:30 p.m. at the elementary school cafeteria.

Council chairman James Dupree, who announced Phillips' appearance at the board of directors meeting Thursday night, said Phillips will speak on action for excellence for public education.

Dupree also announced that Bethel is being reviewed for recertification of the Governor's Award of Excellence.

Mayor Frank Hemingway told the board that the Oakmont Group has expressed interest in locating a nursing home in the Bethel area.

Hemingway said an August 24 meeting has been scheduled with Oakmont Group owners, town officials, members of the Chamber of Commerce and health care groups to help establish a certificate of need for the facility.

Four new members were voted into the Bethel Council. They include Harris Supper Market, Bethel Chapel Church, Mrs. Mary Wells Andrews, and J. Beverly Congleton.

Seek Assist Prosecutors

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Assistant U.S. Attorney Doug McCullough says he'll seek additional federal resources, including extra judges, to prosecute drug-trafficking cases because of a new state disclosure law.

The law, enacted in the final days of the legislative session, requires state district attorneys to reveal the substance of any oral statements made by the defendant to any informant. Prosecutors say that defendants can identify confidential informants by recalling to whom they made the statements.

Previously, district attorneys only supplied statements that were to be used as evidence in court.

They say the law, which took effect July 14, will most severely affect prosecution of drug cases. Attorney General Rufus Edmisten has called for a special legislative session to correct the problem but Gov. Jim Hunt said he'll reserve a decision until a special House committee meets today to determine what action is needed.

U.S. Attorney Sam Currin earlier agreed to "cross-designate" state prosecutors as special assistant U.S. Attorneys so they could bring cases in federal court, where the rule does not apply. He said state charges would be dismissed and federal charges sought from grand juries.

McCullough will be coordinating federal efforts to assist state prosecutors. He said he expects to meet next week with district attorneys to plan a strategy for handling the cases.

He said he expects one representative from each of the 13 state prosecutorial districts of the federal courts' Eastern District in North Carolina will be cross-designated to try cases before federal judges.

McCullough said he'll also ask U.S. District Court Judge Franklin Dupree to approach the U.S. Administrative Office of the Courts for more resources.

"Some of them (the cases affected by the law) are rather sensitive and can't wait for the North Carolina Legislature to do whatever it's going to do," McCullough said. "It is somewhat of a judicial emergency. It is a priority we've got to address relatively soon."

McCullough said retired judges from outside the state or other judges who are available for a short period of time could be called on to hear the cases. He said federal courtrooms that are not in full use — in New Bern, Fayetteville, Wilson and Wilmington — could be used as well as some state courtrooms.

He said it will take a few weeks to select priority cases, find empty courtrooms, schedule trials and find judges.

McCullough said there are problems accompanying federal prosecution of the cases that local governments may not have considered.

He said proceeds from the sale of planes, boats, vehicles or other property forfeited in the drug cases will go to the federal government instead of the local county school fund.

"The taxpayers may be a little irate," McCullough said. "The coastal counties, like New Hanover, have made a mint (from forfeitures)."

In addition, most federal drug charges carry lighter sentences than state charges. McCullough said the difference ranges from 35 years in state court to five years in federal court for importing a boatload of marijuana.

Life As It's Lived

The Video Game Curse Strikes

By GAIL MICHAELS
Last Thursday evening Phillip won an Odyssey video game system. Naturally, we were all excited, but even so Phillip was somewhat ambivalent.

"They're addictive, you know."

"I think we can handle that," I answered with unbounded optimism. "And these games are better entertainment than television. The children interact with them. They learn intricate pattern recognition and eye-hand coordination. Some of the games even teach spelling and math. Besides, I'm sick of hearing Meg moan that she doesn't have anyone to play with. Now she has a computer."

"OK," Phillip said, "but I still don't know."

I began to share his doubts the next day when the kids started begging me to let them play.

"You'll have to wait for Daddy," I kept saying. Even though Phillip had explained how the system worked, I was not about to tinker with it because of the basic understanding that I have with machines. I don't touch them, and they don't self-destruct.

But Meg's Zachary refused to accept any of my excuses. They pestered me so much that finally I was driven to threats. "You keep this up, and I'm going to give that thing to another family."

This succeeded in quieting Zachary, but my worldly daughter was unimpressed. "You know you're not going to do that. That would be plain dumb."

I gave her the evil eye, and she hastened to add, "And you never do anything dumb."

In spite of all this harassment, I persisted in my belief that we could control the machine rather than it us. Saturday morning arrived with the machine intact and the children itching to play. Phillip hooked the system into the television at 7 a.m. At eight Zachary wandered into the bedroom where I was snoozing peacefully.

"I thought that you were playing with Daddy," I groaned.

Zachary parked himself in the middle of my stomach. "I'm finished. I want to watch cartoons now, and Daddy won't let me."

"Well, you can't be selfish, sweetheart. Meg wants to play with the video game."

But not too long afterwards Meg hunted me down, too.

"Why aren't you playing with the video game?" I said.

She shrugged. "I'm tired of it. Besides Daddy won't let me choose any of the games. He's being selfish."

I wandered downstairs to find out what was going on and found myself pulled into a game of "Turtles," the "Attack of the Timelord," then "Las Vegas Blackjack." Phillip was positively obnoxious. He crowed and punched me in the ribs each time he won. And he couldn't understand why I eventually threw a game cartridge box at his head and walked out.

There was no escape from the voice synthesizer for the rest of the morning and far into the afternoon. I sat down to read, but Faulkner and the chant, "Your planet is doomed; prepare to die, earthling," do not mix.

Along about 4 p.m. Phillip found me huddled in our bathroom with the fan going full blast. "Why don't you come downstairs, and play with me?" he asked.

"What about Meg," I asked.

"She went outside."

"Then how about Zachary?"

"He's no fun. He's too little to get the hang of it."

"Well, I'm not going to play. That thing gives me a headache."

"He began to pout. 'Nobody will play with me.'"

"I think that my chances of ever finding peace in this household are dwindling."

Reagan, De la Madrid To Talk

By PETER EISNER
Associated Press Writer
MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Reagan meets Sunday with Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid to resolve nagging issues of trade and immigration, but U.S. policy toward Central America — which Mexico rejects — is expected to dominate the talks.

U.S. officials said the seven-hour meeting in the Baja California city of La Paz is the first in a series between the two leaders.

De la Madrid criticized the deployment of American ships off the coast of Central America as a show of support for U.S. allies.

"We both want peace in that region, we want economic and social development," he said in an interview in Mexico City broadcast today on NBC's "Today" show.

"I do not believe that we can attain the objective with the deployment of the (U.S.) fleet," de la Madrid said.

John Gavin, U.S. ambassador to Mexico, said earlier that Central America would dominate the meeting between Reagan and de la Madrid. But he said Reagan and de la Madrid would also discuss the millions of illegal Mexican immigrants in the United States and Mexico's demands for trade concessions as it attempts to ease its severe economic recession.

Mexico is expected to maintain its opposition to U.S. backing for rebels trying to topple Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista regime.

The Mexican government supports Nicaragua and contends the area's problems stem from chronic social and economic inequality, not Soviet-backed Marxist revolutionaries as Reagan claims.

Foreign Minister Bernardo Sepulveda has criticized as "inopportune" Reagan's decision to hold maneuvers and send 19 ships in a Central American show of force. He also has referred indirectly to U.S. policy in the region as "simplistic," saying the idea of a domino theory — in which even Mexico could fall to rebel insurgency — "ignores the essential nationalism and the deep economic and social concerns" of the region.

De la Madrid, more directly, has said "Mexico is a very strong domino and cannot be easily knocked over."

Gavin said the United States has not been angered by the Mexican view. He also denied Mexican news accounts that claim Reagan has dismissed Mexican foreign policy as incompatible with U.S. interests in Central America.

"The president believes it is important that we will support, if necessary, the integrity of friendly nations in the region," Gavin said, at a recent news briefing on the presidential trip.

"We recognize and have received the comments without any displeasure," he said. "It's a different point of view."

Mexico is calling for trade concessions, claiming U.S. restrictions on imports are hurting its recovery.

When he took office last December, De la Madrid imposed strict cuts in government spending and subsidies as part of a plan to repay the foreign debt, expected to reach at least $85 billion by year-end.

The cuts drastically curtailed productivity although officials say their international finances have improved. Now they say strict U.S. import rules are hurting chances for a recovery and want a special trade treaty with the United States, Mexico's biggest trade partner.

The idea "that we discriminate against Mexico is balderdash, nonsense," Gavin said. "Quite the contrary is true and the record will show that. We are trying to help."

The economic crisis developed in 1982 when falling prices for petroleum and other commodities made it impossible for Mexico to meet debt payments.

The immigration question involves pending legislation in Congress that would attempt to stem the entry of illegal Mexicans into the United States by punishing employers who hire them.

Mexico fears attempts to cut the refugee flow would tax its limited job market and cause social unrest in the country, where more than 1 million people have lost their jobs in the last year.

Van Given Quadruplegic For California Studies

By ANGELA LINGERFELT
Reflector Staff Writer

When Charles Richard Burke of Greenville was 17-years-old he fell into an old quarry and injured his neck. After being labeled a quadruplegic, he was placed in a nursing home.

Today, at the age of 30, Burke has been packing his clothes for a trip to California, where he is planning to go to law school. He's leaving Saturday and is going to drive there himself with the help of a special van purchased for him by Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church.

"It's a miracle," Burke said today after he was presented the keys to the van.

The van, which cost $9,700 and an equal amount for the special equipment, features a wheel chair lift, a special shoulder harness and hand controls for the gas, brakes and horn. It also has a floor under the driver's seat that can be lowered or raised, an electronic window and extensions that make such things as the air conditioning easy to reach.

"We (the church) bought the vehicle and the Vocational Rehabilitation Center had it equipped with a wheel chair lift and hand controls so he could drive it. It was delivered Tuesday ready for his use," Martin Armstrong, associate pastor of the church, said.

A Greenville resident since 1980, Burke is originally from Newport Richey, Fla. He was recently married in May to Bobbie Sue Hall. His wife is already in San Diego setting up their new apartment, which is located about four blocks from California Western University, where he will attend law school.

Burke said that he has dreamed of going to law school for many years. He said he realized he could do it in 1977, but he had a lot to overcome.

"I started wanting to go in 1977. Now I'm really excited and ready for it. It seems so natural. It's something I've dreamed about for a long time," Burke commented.

Burke's brother, David, will accompany him on the trip. He said it will probably take them about eight or nine days to get there.

The funds for the van were raised by soliciting the congregation of the church for donations and the Methodist Youth Fellowship sponsored a pancake supper. About $6,000 of the church's endowment fund was used.

"We may not ever see Rick again but we feel like he's going to touch a lot of people by doing this. He's a good investment," Dr. Jim Bailey, senior minister of the church, said.

APPEAL DENIED — Anna Hauptmann, wife of Bruno Hauptmann, was denied an appeal Thursday by the U.S. District Court in Newark, N.J. to declare her husband innocent for murdering Charles A. Lindbergh Jr. The court said Mrs. Hauptmann had failed to present sufficient evidence to change the ruling and that the convicted Hauptmann's constitutional rights were not violated during the investigation and trial. going in that area while an alternative is considered.

The council also adopted a motion by William Hadden that the planning board be asked to study for possible protection other areas in the flood plains with scenic value.

Several annexation petitions and rezoning requests were approved by the board following public hearings. They included: a petition by Bill Clark, and others, for satellite annexation of section one of West Hills Townhomes, located along State Road 1204; a petition by John Wellons to annex sections one, two and three of Heritage Village Subdivision; a request by the Pitt County ABC Board to rezone its property (0.488 acres) at 2305 Memorial Drive from R-6 (high density residential) to downtown commercial fringe;

A request by M. E. Porter to rezone a 6.67-acre section of Whichport development, adjacent to Landmark Drive, from highway commercial to R-6; and a request by Dalton Worthington, and others, to rezone 12 acres located near U.S. 264 and Tobacco Road from RA-20 (residential-agricultural) to R-6.

The council approved, following a public hearing, a petition to close a portion of Taylor Street in the West Meadowbrook Redevelopment area that has never been formally opened.

Three amendments to the zoning ordinance were endorsed by the council after no opposition was stated during public hearings. Approved were: an amendment to the provision for automobile service station and automobile repair in commercial and industrial districts; an amendment changing the requirement for accessory uses and buildings; and an amendment changing the offstreet parking requirements for dormitory facilities from one space per four beds to .75 offstreet parking spaces per bed.

The council scheduled public hearings for Sept. 8 on a petition by Bill Clark for satellite annexation of section five of Quail Ridge, located off 14th Street extension, and on a petition to close a portion of Tammie Trail, located adjacent to the Kings Row Apartments complex, that has never been open for public use.

The governing board also: — Denied a request by Ms.

Carolyn Glass of 206 Greenfield Blvd. to prohibit through traffic on Greenfield Boulevard from State Road 1419 to N.C. 11;

— Approved a request by Don Tripper of Carolina Dairies to relocate "no parking" signs on both sides of Millbrook Street;

— Adopted an ordinance modifying traffic regulations in Greenville, designating stop signs for 10 local intersections;

— Approved a request by H. P. Streeper of Rampage Corp. to remove parking for a 30-month period on Seventh Street, from James Street to Cotanche Street;

— Adopted a revised pay and classification plan for the city;

— Adopted an ordinance amending the manual of fees adjusting Utility street cut patching charges;

— Continued until September consideration of an ordinance regulating and licensing transient and itinerant merchants and vendors;

— Adopted a resolution authorizing the sale of city property at the northwest corner of the intersection of Skinner and Harris Streets by quitclaim deed to Kenneth W. and Ellen C. Moore, who submitted a bid of $500;

— Approved a contract between the city and Georgia-Pacific Corp. for extraterritorial fire protection service; and — Approved a one-year contract with the Greenville Museum of Art for the provision of art and cultural services, with the city paying the museum $8,000 in four quarterly payments of $2,000.

The council presented engraved plaques to three retiring employees. They were Lawrence L. Jackson, 28 years with the police department; J. Z. Garris, 29 years with the fire-rescue department; and Joseph B. Meeks, 30 years with fire-rescue.

Spider Bites Killed Children

DAVAO, Philippines (AP) — Five children died of poisonous spider bites this week in an area where betting on deadly spider fights has become a fad among elementary school children, authorities report.

Police in Digos, 650 miles south of Manila on the island of Mindanao, said they did not know what variety of spiders were involved.

All the victims were between the ages of 7 and 10 and died within three days in separate incidents in Digos and nearby communities. Three other children have been hospitalized, police reports said.

The children often carry the spiders in matchboxes and bet on the winners of fights, the reports said, adding that bets sometimes go as high as 100 pesos, or $9, which could be more than a week's pay for a rural worker.

Companies Host Study Of Health Education

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Employees of 28 U.S. rubber plants will be part of a study aimed at reducing health hazards in an industry long associated with a high risk of cancer, researchers at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill say.

"Our project will primarily focus on how do we get employees to take the necessary steps to protect themselves against cancer and other diseases," said Dr. Godfrey Hochbaum, a professor of health education at the School of Public Health. "Smoking is a prime example. The interaction between smoking and certain toxic substances in the workplace work together to create enormous hazards for cancer."

Lou Beliczky, director of industrial hygiene for the United Rubberworkers International Union, said previous studies by UNC and Harvard University revealed cancer risk between two and six times the normal rate.

For example, the risk of stomach cancer was 2-2.3 times normal, while the risk of brain cancer was 4.1 times normal and skin cancer risk was 6.5 times higher than usual, he said in a telephone interview from Akron, Ohio.

Hochbaum said researchers will compare the effectiveness of various health education methods by sampling a cross-section of the 26,000 employees in the plants.

"One of the main features is to try to evaluate whether the approach that we're going to use is more effective than the traditional approach," he said. "Usually management contracts with a firm to provide services and tries to persuade employees to participate. That has been somewhat disappointing in terms of participation by employees."

At half the plants in the study, workers will be given health-oriented pamphlets and will be encouraged to stop smoking, use protective clothing, exercise personal hygiene and stay physically fit, Hochbaum said.

Employees at the other plants will help design the health programs, a new approach designed to improve interest and participation.

"We try to find out by interviewing samples of employees which of these hazards they are most concerned about," Hochbaum said.

"Are there enough smokers who want help to stop smoking? What are their goals and objectives? What programs are available and how can they be carried out to make them most convenient and even enjoyable to the employees?"

In addition, management will be encouraged to reduce inherent hazards by improving sanitation and ventilation systems, he said.

The project is being funded entirely by the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda, Md., which is providing about $250,000 a year over three years, said Dr. Arnold Kaluzny of the School of Public Health.

He said the proposal came from the rubberworkers union, partly because of its work with UNC since the 1970s on health education programs.

"Our role is primarily to evaluate the effects of this intervention program," Kaluzny added.

Researchers say the program, which begins this fall, is the largest of its kind ever attempted.

Beliczky said his main purpose was to ensure healthier workers.

"No one has yet developed a particular procedure to measure change in attitudes or motivation (on the job)," he said. "We wanted to minimize or reduce the potential risk to chemicals that are capable of causing cancer in the workplace."

"They're working with multiple chemical exposures," he said. "Vinyl chloride, asbestos, aromatic hydrocarbons — they're all linked with human cancers. And there are some other documented animal carcinogens."

"This meant that the URW had a work population that was relatively unique," Beliczky said. "Not only did they have the health effects data ... but they now were involved in an early cancer detection screening program."

BF Goodrich, Armstrong, Uniroyal and Goodyear have signed agreements with the union to actively participate in the study, he said. Only Firestone has refused to sign, although officials there are willing to allow employees to participate.

Beliczky said he hoped the program would result in better practices by management as well as by employees.

He said the study would be able to detect improvements by such things as changes in contract language, reduction or elimination of chemicals in the workplace and changing practices.

"We want to know how to be more effective in training and indoctrinating workers — and even their management — to reduce the risk to cancer among our members," Beliczky said.

It is unlikely that researchers will see any impact on long-term diseases like cancer, but Kaluzny said they might determine their effectiveness by the number of sick days taken by workers and the proportion that participate in the program.

"We expect that we can demonstrate that not only will more employees participate, but, once they start, they will stay with it," Hochbaum said.

"I would hope that the particular approach that is being developed here will be proven sufficiently effective to be used more widely," added Kaluzny.

Direction Sign One Day Early

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — It may take a year to post direction signs around the Raleigh Beltline, but the state erected a sign naming the freeway for Raleigh businessman Clifton L. Benson a day before the name became official.

The state Board of Transportation was scheduled to approve the naming today, but Thursday a state crew erected a sign naming the northern section of the road around Raleigh the Cliff Benson Beltline. The southern section is to be named after former Transportation Secretary Thomas W. Bradshaw Jr.

DOT officials earlier had said it would take a year to post signs routing Beltline motorists around Raleigh because it "is a very involved process."

The Benson sign was covered with burlap Thursday, pending final approval of the name. Transportation Secretary William R. Roberson Jr. called the posting of the sign "a glaring mistake."

Aussies Slash Traffic Toll With Breath-Testing

By ARLENE LEVINSON
Associated Press Writer
SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Legions of police have been on the roads since December in many parts of Australia making random checks for drunken drivers and statistics show a marked decline in automobile fatalities ever since.

Beer sales have hit a 10-year slump, but sales of breath-analysis kits have gone up (drinkers use them to test the alcohol content in their blood before driving) and people are taking more taxis.

The police, armed with breath-analyzing devices, have made 480,000 checks since the program started and they have made 3,000 arrests on drunk-driving charges.

Here in the state of New South Wales, there have been 250 fewer highway fatalities in the seven months since the program got under way. In Canberra, the nation's capital, authorities have reported a 50 percent decline in all forms of automobile accidents since December.

The state of Victoria has been making breath tests since 1976 and officials there report a 26 percent decline in highway fatalities.

This year Victoria expects to give 100,000 tests and make 400 drunken-driving arrests.

The breath-testing crackdown has had its effects on some of the nation's recession-troubled industries.

Beer drinking nationally is down 3 percent from a decade ago, putting hundreds of pub employees out of work in New South Wales. Nationally, alcohol consumption is off 5 percent from 1975 levels.

About 5,000 part-time workers were laid off at New South Wales' 1,500 licensed social clubs after bar sales dried up by 17 percent in some places.

Auto-body repair shops complain business has fallen as much as 40 percent.

Terry Flanagan, a vehicle repairman and tow-truck operator commented, "Serious accidents are now very rare. I haven't seen a car rolled over for months. Random breath testing has scared the pants off people. They're not using the roads."

Unlike the sporadic crackdowns on drunken drivers in some parts of the United States, random breath testing here poses a constant, visible threat.

George Paciullo, a Labor Party member of the New South Wales Parliament and head of its Road Safety Committee, said: "Americans would regard this as a gross violation of their civil liberties. But it's to protect the motorist. We seem to accept this. There were complaints from civil liberties groups, but they were very weak."

A U.S. National Safety Council survey of 47 countries published in 1981 placed Australia No. 4 in per-capita traffic deaths with 27 per 100,000 people. (The United States ranked sixth with 24 deaths per 100,000 people.) Alcohol figures in about half of Australia's 3,000 annual road deaths, 1,300 of them in New South Wales.

In 1980 the state outlawed driving with 0.05 percent alcohol in the blood — half the 0.10 percent limit common in the United States.

To reach 0.05 percent level, the average person must consume in one hour three large glasses of full-strength beer, or three glasses of wine or three shots of liquor.

But setting a low level wasn't deterrent enough. It took the random breath testing to bring results.

Day and night, at hundreds of roadsides in New South Wales, traffic police stop batches of drivers for screening. If alcohol is detected, the driver must submit to a breath test, and the results can be used as evidence in court.

Maximum penalties in New South Wales reach fines of the Australian dollar equivalent of $1,760, a year in jail plus loss of a driver's license for five years. Refusing to take the breath test can bring the same punishment.

Learn 'Modern Words' Often Date Back For A Long Time

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — The word musical comedy was in written use in 1765. Newsman dates back to 1596, clone to 1903 and refrigerator to 1803. The word president actually comes from the 14th century and grit from before the 12th century.

This is some of the information unearthed by editors of "Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary," which shows the date when, as far as could be determined, a word was first used in print or writing.

"The English vocabulary has grown in many ways over the centuries. Words enter it from different countries, from different cultures, from science and even from slang," says Dr. Frederick C. Mish, editor of the just-published volume.

"Many words go back hundreds of years, some well over a thousand, even. It's a fascinating study."

A word such as earthing, with the sound of contemporary science fiction, actually goes back to 1593, according to the new dictionary. Electricity is not modern, either. The word dates to 1646. Vaporize dates to 1634, and even American was used as far back as 1578.

Many words, though, are relatively new. The nuclear family was first recorded in 1947. Anchorperson dates from 1973, and one of the newest words in this edition, palimony, from 1979. Watergate, as a general name for a scandal usually involving abuse of office and a cover-up, dates to 1973.

There are some surprises, too. Gunslinger, which sounds like a word from the Old West, actually appeared in print in 1951, though it may have been used a bit earlier in movies, according to Mish. The word television itself goes back to 1907. Pay-as-you-go, popularized here in the 1920s, through the 1940s, dates to around 1840. And gangster was first recorded in 1896.

Where were the dates found? Historical dictionaries containing dated examples of use were of prime importance. But older general dictionaries, particularly all editions of the Merriam-Webster unabridged dictionaries and their supplements, also proved extremely useful, Mish said.

"It was surprising how often a dictionary entry rather than an actual use in running text turned out to be the earliest use of a word that we could find," Mish said. The company's own files on language, stretching back nearly 100 years and containing some 13 million examples of words used in context, were also an invaluable source.

Each word to be researched was put on a slip containing 33 different sources to be checked. The earliest use appearing in one of these basic references then furnished the control date against which to check still other sources — early technical glossaries, concordances of major poets, old cookbooks and others.

Root words were often found to have an interesting history reflected in their descendants, Mish says. The word atom goes back to the 14th century, while atomic was first recorded in 1678, atomic energy in 1906, atom bomb in 1945 and atomic pile in 1946.

Words that have come into popular usage only recently were sometimes found to have been used in English many years earlier. This was true for food words particularly. The word sushi, a raw fish dish, was found to date from 1898 and aioli, a garlic mayonnaise, from 1900.

The word astronaut was used as early as 1929. Double helix is from 1954, microchip from 1969, neutron bomb from 1959, oedipus complex from 1910 and black hole from 1968. Many popular new words were also traced, including parenting, around 1959, condo, 1972 and petrodollars, 1974.

"The dates we have are for the earliest appearance in print or writing, to the best of our knowledge now," Mish says.

Crushed Under Tractor-Trailer

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A Greensboro man was killed Thursday when the small car he was driving was dragged 630 feet and crushed beneath a tractor-trailer attempting to pass him, the state Highway Patrol reported.

Bernard Stadler, 58, was traveling east on Interstate 40 near the Guilford-Forsyth county line when a Piedmont Trucking Co. rig began passing, according to Trooper Zeb Wiseman.

Truck driver Albert Simmons, 41, of Dahlonega, Ga., apparently cut back into the right lane too soon and ran over Stadler's car, Wiseman said.

Simmons has been charged with death by motor vehicle and making an unsafe movement. He was released from jail Thursday night under a $1,000 bond.

ing, according to Trooper Zeb Wiseman.

Amtrak Passenger Route In N. C. Is Promising

By MARY ANNE RHYNE Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — An Amtrak report released Thursday indicates that passenger train service from Raleigh to Charlotte could attract more than the average number of riders but might prove costly for the state.

David King, director of public transportation for the state Department of Transportation, said Amtrak productivity measures predict a 15 percent higher than average utilization ratio.

The formula compares passenger miles and train miles. One person riding one mile equals one passenger mile. A train traveling one mile equals one train mile.

King said the national average for the Amtrak system is 145 passenger miles-train miles compared to 174.5 for the proposed North Carolina route.

He said that according to the report, $702,000 would be the maximum the state would be required to contribute for the first year. But King said he was unsure the state could spend that much money. The state set aside $1.3 million this year for all kinds of public transportation.

Amtrak, which operates in 44 states and receives money from the federal government, would offer the service under a cost-sharing plan where the state contributes to operate the train in areas it believes need additional train service. Currently eight states have such arrangements.

King said he would hope the state route would be profitable enough to become part of Amtrak's standard service, eliminating the need for state funding.

One way to determine the profitability of the line would be an experimental service for about a year.

King said state officials will make a list of the advantages and disadvantages of the service before Transportation Secretary Bill Robertson decides whether to pursue the operation.

"The report itself brings up as many questions as it answers," King said.

"We view it as a viable, feasible operation," Amtrak spokesman Clifford Black said of the proposed route. "We view it with favor."

Black, whose office is in Washington, said it would take several months to begin the service after making a decision.

Under the proposal, the passenger train would go from Raleigh to Charlotte with stops in Durham, Burlington, Greensboro, High Point and Salisbury. The one-way trip would take three hours and 55 minutes and a ticket would cost $26.

Two levels of service are proposed. The train would have a 233-seat capacity for 120 days of the year, including the summer and holidays, and a 113-seat capacity for the rest of the year. There always would be a dining car included.

King said the feasibility study requested by the state indicates no major engineering or operational problems with the proposal and the real question is whether the route would be marketable and feasible economically.

He said the last passenger service in the area ended in 1952 because it was losing money, but added that the Piedmont population has grown dramatically since then.

Amtrak now operates passenger trains over two of the three segments of the proposed route — Richmond, Va., to Raleigh and Greensboro to Charlotte. There is only freight traffic between Raleigh and Greensboro but the report says the track is in excellent condition.

The report says speed restrictions in Durham, Burlington and Mebane are too low and should be changed before passenger service is considered.

There are about $490,000 in capital needs, including passenger facilities in Burlington and Durham.

According to a potential schedule included in the report, the train could leave Raleigh at 6 p.m., Durham at 6:40 p.m., Burlington at 7:20 p.m., Greensboro at 7:55 p.m., High Point at 8:15 p.m., Salisbury at 9 p.m. and arrive in Charlotte at 9:55 p.m.

On the return trip, the train would leave Charlotte at 9:35 a.m. and arrive in Raleigh at 1:35 p.m.

OK Funding Ombudsmen

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Some 250 county commissioners are expected to attend the 76th annual North Carolina Association of County Commissioners conference which opened Thursday.

But even before the first full session, the association's board of directors Thursday acted on a variety of resolutions the conference will consider Saturday.

The board voted to support the funding of 18 part-time ombudsmen who will work with nursing home and rest home committees in each county.

Morton Congleton, deputy director of the State Division of Aging, said there are 159 such committees statewide. Congleton said the added staff, to be located in the regional offices of the state's 18 councils of government, is needed because the state can't effectively monitor the programs with its three staff people.

The program, which would cost $270,000, would be funded by federal, state and local money.

The four-day conference will include workshops on how commissioners can maintain family harmony while attending to county business, a trip to the Southern Furniture Market Center, door prizes, banquets and dancing.

Former astronaut Frank Borman, president of Eastern Airlines, will speak at a dinner Friday evening.

Peete Chases Million

GRAND BLANC, Mich. (AP) — Years ago, Calvin Peete thought golf was just a millionaire's game.

Now, less than eight years after joining the PGA Tour, the 39-year-old Peete stands on the brink of becoming the first black man to win $1 million at the game he once thought untouchable.

Peete, who was born in Detroit and grew up on a Florida farm, fired a 6-under-par 66 over the 7,001-yard Warwick Hills Golf & Country Club Thursday to share the lead with D.A. Weibring after one round of the $350,000 Buick Open.

Peete, who never touched a golf club until he was 23, has earned $968,605 since joining the Tour in 1975.

The winner of the Buick Open will receive $63,000 and the runnerup will earn $37,800, which means that either a first or second place finish would put Peete over the million mark.

"Ten years, or so, ago I didn't even know there was a Buick Open," said Peete, one of 19 children by his father's two marriages. "I always thought golf was only for the rich, but I know now that I was wrong."

Peete, who won the Atlanta Classic and the Anheuser-Busch tournaments earlier this year, said a victory at the Buick Open, with friends and family looking on, would be special.

"This is like my hometown," said Peete, who hit every green in regulation while carding three birdies on each side for 33-33. "Winning in Atlanta was special, but to win here would be the highlight of my career."

Weibring, a former assistant pro at Red Run Golf Club in the Detroit suburb of Royal Oak, carded nines of 32-34. Weibring had a chance to grab the first-round lead all alone after chipping in from 25 feet for an eagle 3 at the 491-yard 13th hole, but fell back to 6-under with a bogey on the par-3 17th.

Canadian Open winner John Cook and Kemper Open champion Fred Couples were one shot behind the leaders at 5-under 67, tied with John Renner and venerable Chi Chi Rodriguez.

Hawaiian Open winner Isao Aoki fired a first-round 68, as did Lou Graham, Don Pooley, Tom Kite, Jim Simons and Jeff Sluman.

In general, the field of 150 golfers tore up the rain-soaked course. Because they could afford to fly their shots right at the flags, without fear of running off the backside of the soft greens, 71 players were at par or better heading into the second round of the 72-hole tournament today.

"The rain was a big disadvantage to me," said Aoki, one of Japan's finest players. "It makes the course play much longer for me because the ball doesn't roll on the wet fairways." The National Weather Service predicted clear skies for today and the remainder of the tournament which concludes Sunday.

National Champions

The Good Sports team, made up of area bowlers, captured the American Bowling Congress' National Amateur Bowling Tournament championship this year. The team bowled a 2,824 series in the event being held at Niagara Falls,

Local Bowlers Take National Tournament

A team of bowlers from Pitt and Martin counties has won the American Bowling Congress' National Amateur Tournament.

The Good Sports, composed of Marvin Sutton of Greenville, Wade McLamb and George Watson of Ayden, Joe Todd of Bell Arthur and David Thompson of Windsor, wound up at the top of the heap when the months-long tournament with a three-game series of 2,824 pins.

Sutton said the team gained the national title by about 30 pins over its closest competition.

The Good Sports took the lead in the tournament back on April 28, when their time to bowl came up in the tournament, held this year at Niagara Falls, N.Y. But they had to wait until just recently to find out whether that total would hold up for the championship — the first ever national title won by a team from the Greenville area.

Watson led the team in the tournament rolling with a 615 series, his first 600 series of the year. Sutton was next with a 587, while Todd rolled a 574. Thompson had a 527 and McLamb, a 521.

Over 1,200 teams competed in the team event, which was contested along with singles, doubles and all-events competition.

For their winning, the team members received trophies, watches and a cash award. They were also honored last night by a dinner here in Greenville.

The team actually had never met each other until just before their time came to roll off. While Watson, Sutton and McLamb all bowl out of Greenville's Hillcrest Lanes, Todd and Thompson bowl in Williamston.

"One of the bowlers who had been going with us to tournaments in the past couldn't go," explained Sutton, "but he said he knew of a couple of other fellows who might be interested."

While arrangements for the team were conducted by phone and letter, the two Williamston bowlers planned to meet the Greenville bowlers once they arrived in Niagara Falls.

However, fate took a hand in that when — on the way up to the tournament — both groups pulled into a motel in Corning, N.Y., at the same time, meeting just a little earlier than planned in what proved to be a small world for them.

Now, they definitely have plans to meet again. They plan now to defend their national title at the Amateur Tournament again next year — in Reno, Nevada.

Sheehan Burns On Hot Day

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.

AP Sports Writer

HIGH POINT (AP) — Despite temperatures in the 90s, Patti Sheehan thought it was a very nice day on the Willow Creek Golf Club course.

Sheehan, the 1981 LPGA rookie of the year, fired a 7-under par 65 to take a three-shot lead in the $180,000 Henredon Classic.

"It was one of those days you felt good about everything. You felt good about your parents and your dirty clothes. You just go out and have a good time and that's what I did," Sheehan said.

Her round, second lowest this season, featured seven birdies achieved by a long-putting exhibition. One of her four birdies on the front nine was a 25-foot putt on the par 4 sixth hole. Sheehan, who's won twice this year, strung together three birdies on the 11th, 12th and 13th holes. The first two came on putts of 22 feet and 18 feet. The final birdie was a 20-foot effort.

"The greens were fantastic out there. The course is in such good shape," she said.

Sheehan might have been able to match the year's lowest 18-hole score — a 63 she fired in the Corning Classic. But she missed several short putts on the back nine's closing holes.

"I would say I'm a good putter and sometimes I'm really good," Sheehan said. "Today I felt good. Had no problems."

Three shots behind are Judy Clark, who finished second in the Henredon two years ago, and Charlotte Montgomery, currently 101st on the LPGA money list.

"I got rid of a bad caddy," Montgomery said of a move she thinks may have helped here gain a share of the runner-up position. "I'm getting back to trusting myself."

Among those at 3-under par 69 is defending champion and leading money winner JoAnne Carner. She's finished second six times in 1983 without a victory and admits the heat has taken its toll.

"We're all getting used to temperatures above 90 degrees," she said. "After Tulsa, this is cool."

Tulsa was the site of the U.S. Women's Open, where temperatures in the 100s were commonplace.

Eight players are at 2-under par 70, including veteran Kathy Whitworth and rookie Amy Benz, who earned her LPGA status last week.

Pat Bradley and Donna White, both top 10 money winners, head the list at 71, while veteran Marlene Hagge and Patti Rizzo, winner of last week's Boston Five Classic, are at 72.

Sandra Haynie, who won the first Henredon and was involved in a playoff with Carner last year, pulled out of the tournament with a neck injury. Beverly Klass withdrew on the back nine after complaining of heat exhaustion, the 13th player to either leave or decline the Willow Creek course.

Georgia Tech Getting Chance At ACC Title

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.

AP Sports Writer

FOXFIRE VILLAGE (AP) — Georgia Tech, in its first season as a full-fledged member of the Atlantic Coast Conference, is pinning its hopes on junior tailback Robert Lavette.

After a freshman season of 866 yards, Lavette rambled for 1,208 yards and 19 touchdowns. Coach Bill Curry makes no bones about it — Lavette will be the catalyst for a good season.

"Everybody's excited about Robert Lavette. Certainly, we are," Curry said. "He's got an opportunity to be a great football player if he'll go 11 weeks in a row at his very best. That's his challenge this year, along with providing us with some more leadership."

Blocking from the backfield will come from fullback Ronny Cone, who missed last season because of a knee injury.

The offensive line may cause some worry with four starters gone from last season's 6-5 squad. At the tackles, senior Derek Gwinn and sophomore John Ivey are expected to fill the gaps left by David Lutz and Ellis Gardner. Junior letterman Tony Kepano and sophomore John Thomas will man the guard slots and Dean Waters and Tom Taylor will split time at center.

"We lost four outstanding linemen. We've replaced them with athletes that we think have an opportunity to be as good as the offensive line last year," Curry said. "But they'll have to make that progress very rapidly."

Senior Stu Rogers will return at quarterback, a "very stable player, superb in spring football. We feel like he's got a chance to be as good a quarterback as we've had since we've been at Tech."

Mike Harrington caught 13 passes last year and returns, as does flanker Jeff Keisler, who caught the same number of passes. Senior Ken Whisenhunt returns at tight end.

Curry is unsure about the defense because of losses in the secondary with 12 other lettermen.

Last year's starters at outside linebacker are back in Dante Jones and Pat Swilling. At one inside linebacker slot is Rob Horton, a 1982 starter and second leading tackler. The other inside spot belongs to sophomore Ted Roof.

Jack Westbrook and Mike

Travis are returning starters at strong safety and cornerback, respectively. Four lettermen follow, but Curry isn't ready to rest.

"We are not as settled there as we'd like to be at this point. We still feel like we're in training camp. We're going to have to solidify our secondary," Curry said. "Our front seven should be bigger, stronger and tougher than we've had in the past."

Georgia Tech's defense allowed more than 2,400 rushing yards and 1,715 yards passing. Cutting those figures in 1983 is the key to improvement, Curry added.

"Our top priority this year is to slow people down in the running game and force them into passing situations. In many instances, we were not able to do that last year," Curry said. "That's a challenge we'll have to meet to be an improved defensive unit."

Setbacks For U.S. Team

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — U.S. fortunes, which had been running high in the inaugural World Track and Field Championships, suffered unexpected setbacks Friday when Larry Myricks failed to get through the first round heats of the men's 200-meter dash and women's hurdler Candy Young was injured.

Myricks, recovering from a hamstring injury, finished only fifth in his heat and missed reaching the second round.

Thursday, his teammate, Calvin Smith, had predicted that Myricks would win the 200 final, which will be run Sunday.

"I just had no zip, no bounce," said Myricks, adding that the injury did not bother him during the race. He said, however, that recent inactivity because of the injury was a factor in his not running well.

Smith, winner of a gold medal in the men's 400-meter relay and a silver medalist in the 100, won his 200 heat easily in 21.10.

Among those joining Smith, the world record holder in the 100, in the second round of the 200 were world record holder Pietro Mennea of Italy and 1980 Olympic 100-meter champion Allan Wells of Scotland.

Mennea had the second fastest first-round clocking, 20.80, while Wells won his heat in 21.14.

In the women's 100-meter hurdles, Young was injured after clearing the first hurdle. Her left leg in pain, she could not stop immediately and crashed into the second hurdle, then tumbled onto the track, grabbing her leg in agony.

After a day off Thursday, the Americans were anxious to return to the Olympic Stadium track, where they have produced some astonishing and unexpected performances since the inaugural World Championships began last Sunday.

The Americans still were riding high after Wednesday night, when Carl Lewis anchored the 400-meter relay team to a world record 37.86 seconds and led a 1-2-3 U.S. sweep in the long jump, Mary Decker won the women's 3,000 with a gritty finishing kick, and Michael Franks and Sunder Nix finished 2-3 in the men's 400-meter dash.

That gave the United States a total of five golds and 15 total medals, including a 1-2-3 sweep in Monday night's men's 100-meter final, won by Lewis.

"That really fired me up," American pole vaulter Billy Olson said about Wednesday's magnificent efforts.

"I wouldn't mind being out there today (Thursday)," he said during the break in the schedule.

"I think the (American) athletes feel really good because everyone (the fans) are very much behind them," said American Edwin Moses, winner of the 400-meter intermediate hurdles Tuesday night.

Willie Gault, a member of the relay team, along with Emmitt King, Calvin Smith and Lewis, thinks the world record will provide a big boost for track and field in the United States.

"Track and field (in the U.S.) ... doesn't get as much respect as it should," said Gault.

The fans here have been very supportive of the Americans.

They stood and yelled and cheered loudly when the American team broke the relay record. They also leaned over the railings to present the four runners with flags — both American and Finnish — and handed them various size versions of "Lasse," the rabbit that is the meet mascot and is named after Lasse Viren, the four-time Olympic gold medalist from Finland.

The Americans' success also has buoyed their hopes for the 1984 Olympic Games at Los Angeles. There, the United States track and field teams hopes to make amends for its absence in the 1980 Moscow Games, which they boycotted and for its relatively poor showings in the 1972 and 1976 Olympics, when they won only six gold medals each.

"I was so proud to see the American flag up on top tonight, and I want to see our flag up on top next year too in the Los Angeles Olympics," the emotional Decker said after her dramatic victory.

"We have proved we can come abroad and compete at our level," said Lewis, the star of the American team — and of the meet.

"Now, Los Angeles is less than a year away. When people come to our turf, we want to show them we can compete well, too."

While the Americans already had shown their strength, their medal harvest appeared far from over.

Among those still to compete were Decker in the women's 1,500, Smith and Larry Myricks in the men's 200, Steve Scott, Sydney Maree and Tom Byers in the men's 1,500, Tom Petranoff and Bob Roggy in the men's javelin, and Mac Wilkins, John Powell and Art Burns in the men's discus.

Also, Billy Olson and Jeff Buckingham in the pole vault, Greg Foster, Gault and Sam Turner in the men's 110-meter high hurdles, Henry Marsh in the 3,000-meter steeplechase, Doug Padilla in the men's 5,000, Dwight Stones in the men's high jump, Carol Lewis in the women's long jump, Ron Tabb and Benji Durden in the men's marathon, and the men's 1,600-meter relay team.

While the U.S. medal count was 5-5-5, the Soviet Union was second with a total of 14, including three golds, four silvers and seven bronzes.

East Germany was third with 11 medals (4-4-3).

"One, two, three, that's what we want," said Foster, referring to the hurdles, in which the United States is considered to have a good chance for its third sweep.

The women's star so far has been Jarmila Kratochvilova of Czechoslovakia. She set a world record of 47.99 in the

Murphy's Law Lifts Braves Over Giants

By The Associated Press
Dale Murphy just won't give the San Francisco Giants' pitching staff a rest. Thursday night, the Atlanta slugger hit two more home runs to give him nine for the season off San Francisco pitchers. "It's tough when a guy has a night like that," said San Francisco's Darrell Evans after watching Murphy drive in five runs in the Braves' 6-4 victory. "They got two big hits from Murphy, but even with the first one we still could have come back, and then he hits another one."

Murphy crunched a 2-1 pitch from Bill Laskey, 12-9, deep into the left-field seats at Atlanta Stadium in the first inning following a two-out single by Claudell

Washington and a walk to Bob Horner. His second homer of the game, and 25th of the season, carried over the right-field fence following a Horner single in the fifth and it was his fourth this year off Andy McGaffigan. "I don't think about home runs, but I'd like to have a bunch of them," Murphy said. "Home runs are not my goal. If it happens, it happens. I just want to get a hit."

In other National League action, the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Cincinnati Reds 4-3; the Houston Astros turned back the San Diego Padres 5-1 and the Chicago Cubs tripped the St. Louis Cardinals 10-5. Ken Dayley, 3-3, held the Giants to one hit until the fifth when John Rabb singled with two out. Brad Wellman walked and Tom O'Malley contributed a run-scoring single. Dayley was chased in the sixth after Jack Clark smacked his 16th homer and Jeff Leonard singled. Rick Camp and Gene Garber finished up, with the latter gaining his seventh save despite a two-run ninth capped by Duane Kuiper's RBI single.

Dodgers 4, Reds 3
In Cincinnati, Ken Landreaux's sacrifice fly in the seventh inning lifted Los Angeles over Cincinnati, snapping the Dodgers' three-game losing streak. Landreaux's sacrifice fly scored Dave Anderson to break a 3-3 tie and gave the victory to reliever Tom Niedenfuer, 6-1, who pitched four shutout innings and struck out a career-high seven. Greg Brock had hit a three-run homer for the Dodgers, but the Reds came back to tie in the third with the help of Dodger errors. "Niedenfuer was outstanding, just tremendous," said Dodger Manager Tom Lasorda. "I guess that's what it took for us to win."

Astros 5, Padres 1
In Houston, Jose Cruz knocked in four runs and Mike Scott overcame a rocky start and combined with Dave Smith for a seven-hitter to lead the Astros over San Diego. Scott, 6-4, recorded his first win since July 16, going seven innings and striking out two and walking four. Reliever Dave Smith earned his fifth save. Scott had trouble early, issuing four walks and allowing six Padre base-runners in the first four innings, before settling down and retiring the Padres in order in the fifth and sixth. Mark Thurmond, 5-2, suffered the loss for San Diego despite allowing only three hits in six innings. "I'm hitting the left-handers pretty good this year, and I don't know why," said Cruz. "I guess I'm just swinging the bat good overall."

Cubs 10, Cardinals 5
In Chicago, Leon Durham's grand-slam homer in the third inning and six unearned runs in the fourth carried the Cubs over St. Louis, the Cardinals' ninth loss in their last 10 games. Third-inning singles by Mel Hall and Ryne Sandberg and a walk to Ron Cey preceded Durham's 11th homer of the season and second grand-slam of his career. Dick Ruthven, 8-9, was the winner. The loss, was charged to Danny Cox, 0-1, making his second major-league start. "It's taking a little time to get back into the swing of things," said Durham, who was on the disabled list in June and missed nine games at the end of July because of back spasms. "But I'm getting back in the groove and hitting the ball on the nose again."

Pirate Gridders Report For Drills

More than 170 East Carolina football players began football practice Friday morning for the 1983 season. "It was great to get started," head coach Ed Emory said. "I'm extremely pleased with the way our players reported back. I can honestly say that this is the best conditioned football team — and the fastest — that I've ever been associated with."

Emory and his staff were particularly pleased with the times that the veteran players were clocked in the 40-yard dash. The entire defensive first team ran a 4.7 or better, with defensive tackles Steve Hamilton and Hal Stephens both running 4.7's and cornerback Kevin Walker turning in a 4.3.

The offense, which also kept its first team below the five-second mark, was led by junior college transfer Henry Williams with a 4.2, the best time of the day. All-American candidate Terry Long, an offensive guard, was timed at 4.8 while tailback Tony Baker ran a 4.5 and tight end Damon Pope, a 4.4. "The times are super, there's no question about that," Emory said. "Any time you have an entire unit clock in under five seconds, you've got to be pleased."

The squad will continue to practice four times a day until Tuesday, when it begins workout in full gear. The Pirates first contest is September 3 when they travel to face Florida State.

Venezuela Hurries For Pan Am Games

GUARENAS, Venezuela (AP) — Two days before the official start of the 9th Pan American Games, athletes are rapidly filling the dormitories of the competitors village. What they are finding is not exactly plush. Like many of the competition sites, the village in this city about 30 miles from Caracas is being readied in a last-minute frenzy. Soldiers and civilian workers are everywhere, welding, painting, sweeping, washing. And trying to put their nation's best face forward. "We do not want to do anything to embarrass the country of Venezuela," Col. Rafael Enrique Pena Perera, official governor of the village, said Thursday in explaining why reporters and photographers could not venture too far in the enclave. The first 200 athletes from the United States arrived late Thursday in Caracas, where the games begin their two-week run Sunday. The Americans are expected to again dominate the games, especially track, swimming and diving and basketball. F. Don Miller, executive director of the U.S. Olympic Committee, toured the dormitories Wednesday night and asked that some work be done before approving them to house the U.S. team. "We found it in adequate condition," Miller said. "It needed some additional cleaning."

Fellow athletes who had spent a few nights in the village said the Americans could expect conditions to be less than perfect. "The rooms are not very good," said Lilliana Fernandez, a tennis player from Cali, Colombia. "We got here last night (Wednesday), and I don't think they were finished yet." "They gave us keys to the rooms, but there are no doors. No mirrors, nothing. And the toilets sometimes don't flush." And then there was her bed. "It didn't have those slats in the bottom and when I lay down, the mattress fell right to the floor," she said. Janet Arnold, a synchronized swimmer from Canada, said she and her teammates had encountered "a few plumbing problems." "It's to be expected, I guess," said Arnold, from Calgary, Alberta. For Porfirio De Leon, a weightlifter from Puerto Rico, the inconveniences of the village are worth it. "The washrooms are some-times out of order, and everything in the dorm rooms is covered with cement dust," he said. "But living with the other athletes has us excited. And we all are under the same conditions." Arnold said she, too, was "excited about being here." "We're learning what to eat and what to stay away from in the cafeteria. Security is tight, but the people seem to be pretty good," she said. "I was at the last Pan Am Games (in San Juan in 1979) and I promised myself that I'd be at the next one, too."

Women Suing To Get Olympic Distance Races

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Peter V. Ueberroth, president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, denounced a lawsuit seeking two more track events for women at the 1984 Summer Games as an "exploitative" action against the wrong people. "They have sued the wrong party at the wrong time for all of the wrong reasons," said Ueberroth in a statement Thursday. "To include the LAOOC in the suit is exploitative at best. We have no jurisdiction in this matter and we have been sympathetic to the goals of women in sports."

The suit, filed by attorney Susan McGreivy of the American Civil Liberties Union on behalf of top women runners, alleges discrimination and is aimed at requiring 5,000-meter and 10,000-meter races for women in 1984.

Named along with the LAOOC as defendants are the International Olympic Committee, the U.S. Olympic Committee, The Athletics Congress, and the International Amateur Athletic Federation, McGreivy said. Ueberroth defended the LAOOC's efforts to include women's sports and said the suit would eventually adversely affect women's sports. "The funds which we will have to use to defend ourselves are the same monies which would become a part of the surplus at the end of the 1984 Games, a surplus which is dedicated to youth and sports — including women's sports," Ueberroth said. He said the LAOOC led the successful fight for inclusion of the women's marathon in 1984 and said other new events for women next year will include the 3,000-meter run, 400-meter hurdles, heptathlon, 200-meter medley (swimming), synchronized swimming, rhythmic gymnastics and three shooting events. Plaintiffs in the Los Angeles Superior Court suit include some 55 people from 19 countries, including Mary Decker, who holds the world record in the non-championship 5,000 and won the 3,000-meter race in 8:34.62 at the World Track and Field Championships in Helsinki on Wednesday, McGreivy said. Also among the plaintiffs are Grete Waitz, the world-class marathoner from Norway, and two women who specialize in the 5,000 and 10,000, Anne Audine of New Zealand and Wendy Sly of England.

Strock, Shula said he was hopeful the Dolphins would sign the discontented player. New Orleans running back George Rogers, who sustained a sore neck in last week's game against Tampa Bay, will probably play against the Dolphins. In Friday night's games, it's the New York Giants at Pittsburgh, Cincinnati at Washington and Green Bay at Seattle. On Saturday night, Cleveland is at Buffalo, Chicago at St. Louis, Detroit at Kansas City, Baltimore at Minnesota, Atlanta at Denver, Philadelphia at San Diego, Tampa Bay at Houston and the Los Angeles Raiders vs. the New York Jets at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J. On Sunday New England plays at San Francisco. On Monday night, it's Dallas at the Los Angeles Rams. Quarterback Matt Cavanaugh shouldn't find the surroundings too different when the Patriots play the 49ers — except for the uniform he's wearing. Cavanaugh was traded Thursday by New England to the 49ers. "I think I've been having the best camp I've had in a long time throwing the ball, so I'm just looking forward to getting out there and spending some time in meetings and getting attuned to what they're doing and then getting on the field and executing," he said Thursday before leaving the Patriots' camp in Smithfield, R.I. Cavanaugh, a second-round draft choice from Pitt in 1978, completed 53.5 percent of his passes for 3,018 yards and 19 touchdowns during his years with the Patriots. He was third on the depth chart behind Steve Grogan and Tony Eason, a No.1 pick this year from Illinois, on the Patriots' depth chart. He'll be the second-string quarterback behind Joe Montana with the 49ers. Tampa Bay Coach John McKay said Jack Thompson will start at quarterback against the Oilers in the Astro dome. Jerry Golsteyn and rookie Bob Hewko will see action in the second half.

month to surge into the lead, while Toronto has dropped seven of its last eight games. Cooper has gone 53-for-150 (.353 average) with 44 RBI since the All-Star break. Rookie Chuck Porter, who six-hit the Blue Jays 3-0 in his last start, was the winner. "I'm not satisfied," said Cooper. "You've always got to do more and try to do more. If you get three hits you should try for four. If you have four, you should try for five. I wasn't able to do it, but I'll take the three."

"He's having an outstanding two months," said Brewers Manager Harvey Kuenn. "He was hitting .270-something at the All-Star break and now he's well up over .300. He's driven in 98 runs. He's really come back."

Yankees 6, Tigers 5
After taking a vicious cut, missing Howard Bailey's pitch, Dave Winfield fell to the ground in pain. His foot was treated, then Winfield swung just as hard and belted a game-winning home run, his 23rd homer of the season. The Yankees have won seven of their last 10 games. Rich Gossage, worked 3 1-3 innings of one-hit relief to improve his record to 10-3. The Yankees grabbed a 5-0 lead, helped greatly by three Tiger errors in the second innings. But Detroit came back with a five-run fifth on six singles, an error and a bases-loaded walk Lance Parrish. "Wasn't that a great game," said Gossage. "We got a big lead, they came back and tied us and then we came back and won."

A's 6, Twins 0
Chris Codioli scattered five hits for Oakland's first complete-game shutout this year and Dwayne Murphy hit his 12th homer as the A's moved into third place in the West with their sixth victory in the past seven games and 13th of their last 18, despite a slew of injuries to the pitching staff. "I'm the only original starter left in the rotation, and I'd like to keep it that way," said Codioli.

with their sixth victory in the past seven games and 13th of their last 18, despite a slew of injuries to the pitching staff. "I'm the only original starter left in the rotation, and I'd like to keep it that way," said Codioli.

"I'm really not out to prove anything except that I belong here," said Codioli. I had to go out and prove myself this year. I've still got eight more starts, and generally I've been stronger near the end of the season."

Overtime Pays Off For Bannister

By The Associated Press
When the Chicago White Sox made Floyd Bannister a millionaire last winter, they expected to get a super pitcher. For half a season, they got a super dud. Then came the All-Star break and Bannister used the time off to work overtime. Now, the White Sox have their super pitcher — and a stranglehold on the American League West Division. Bannister earned his seventh straight victory, striking out 11 in 6 1-3 innings Thursday night as Chicago belted Baltimore 9-3. The victory extended the Sox' lead in the West to six games over Kansas City, which was rained out in Boston. The Orioles, losers of six in a row, fell to third place in the East, one game behind Milwaukee.

The Brewers knocked off Toronto 6-4 to move into first place. The New York Yankees are second, .003 behind the Brewers, after edging Detroit 6-5 in 10 innings. The Tigers are fourth, .001 in back of Baltimore.

In the only other AL game, Oakland jumped into third place in the West with a 6-0 triumph over Minnesota. "The first half is not something I like to look back on," said Bannister, 3-9 at the All-Star break. "During the break, I felt I needed to work a little extra. I threw batting practice, studied films, and worked with (pitching coach Dave) Duncan. I had to try to figure out what I was most comfortable with." He did and his revival has coincided with the Sox' rush to the top of the West, where they are the only team with a winning record. Tom Paciorek had four hits for Chicago. "(Manager Tony) LaRussa told me I'd be playing more," said Paciorek. "That's all I can ask. I'm not saying I'll lead us to the Promised Land but I do think I can contribute to us winning the division and getting into the World Series." "I think playing fairly regularly lately (at first base or in the outfield) has done me a lot of good. When I sit down for a long time, I really lose my timing. Now I've got my timing, my good rhythm back and when I'm swinging good, I feel I can hit anyone."

"We're going to have to get our act together and turn it around," Baltimore Manager Joe Altobelli said. "We only have 52 games left, so we're going to have to turn it around soon. And we're facing a pretty hot team."

Brewers 6, Blue Jays 4
Cecil Cooper, Robin Yount and Jim Gantner knocked in two runs apiece, Cooper hitting a solo home run as well as the Milwaukee moved atop the East for the first time since April 28. Milwaukee is 9-4 this month to surge into the lead, while Toronto has dropped seven of its last eight games. Cooper has gone 53-for-150 (.353 average) with 44 RBI since the All-Star break. Rookie Chuck Porter, who six-hit the Blue Jays 3-0 in his last start, was the winner. "I'm not satisfied," said Cooper. "You've always got to do more and try to do more. If you get three hits you should try for four. If you have four, you should try for five. I wasn't able to do it, but I'll take the three."

"He's having an outstanding two months," said Brewers Manager Harvey Kuenn. "He was hitting .270-something at the All-Star break and now he's well up over .300. He's driven in 98 runs. He's really come back."

Yankees 6, Tigers 5
After taking a vicious cut, missing Howard Bailey's pitch, Dave Winfield fell to the ground in pain. His foot was treated, then Winfield swung just as hard and belted a game-winning home run, his 23rd homer of the season. The Yankees have won seven of their last 10 games. Rich Gossage, worked 3 1-3 innings of one-hit relief to improve his record to 10-3. The Yankees grabbed a 5-0 lead, helped greatly by three Tiger errors in the second innings. But Detroit came back with a five-run fifth on six singles, an error and a bases-loaded walk Lance Parrish. "Wasn't that a great game," said Gossage. "We got a big lead, they came back and tied us and then we came back and won."

A's 6, Twins 0
Chris Codioli scattered five hits for Oakland's first complete-game shutout this year and Dwayne Murphy hit his 12th homer as the A's moved into third place in the West with their sixth victory in the past seven games and 13th of their last 18, despite a slew of injuries to the pitching staff. "I'm the only original starter left in the rotation, and I'd like to keep it that way," said Codioli.

with their sixth victory in the past seven games and 13th of their last 18, despite a slew of injuries to the pitching staff. "I'm the only original starter left in the rotation, and I'd like to keep it that way," said Codioli.

"I'm really not out to prove anything except that I belong here," said Codioli. I had to go out and prove myself this year. I've still got eight more starts, and generally I've been stronger near the end of the season."

Game Still Up In Air

NEW YORK (AP) — George Steinbrenner blames Lee MacPhail for ruining a day at Yankee Stadium for the kids. And there might not be a night at the ballpark next Thursday, either, if the Yanks — with the owner's blessing — vote against concluding the pine-tar game with Kansas City. "I hasten to point out," Steinbrenner said Thursday, "that the decision rests solely with the players. It's theirs to make and I will back them 100 percent in whatever they wish to do."

If the Yankees refuse to play, the game would be forfeited to Kansas City. Even if the Yanks vote against playing, though, the Royals will have to show up at Yankee Stadium Aug. 18 at 6 p.m., as directed by MacPhail, the American League president. An AL spokeswoman pointed out that if the Yankees voted not to play, the Royals failed to show, and then the Yankees appeared at Yankee Stadium, it would be Kansas City which would absorb the forfeit.

"I don't know what were going to do. It's all boring to me," Yankees pitcher Goose Gossage said Thursday night. "I don't care what happens in that game. If we lose it, we lose it. We're in a pennant race."

The Players Association, which met with MacPhail, decided not to file a grievance over the AL president's decision, saying that of the available dates, Aug. 18 was the least objectionable. Steinbrenner, in a lengthy statement issued by the Yankees' office in New York, took MacPhail to task for ordering that the game be resumed starting at 6 p.m., four hours later than Steinbrenner had announced. "It's a darn shame that MacPhail is making it necessary for us to cancel our plans for the young kids of the New York area," Steinbrenner said. "We had planned on having some entertainment after the ballgame, a lot of giveaways, and making a real great day for a lot of young campers and kids at the end of their vacation..."

"We wanted to make it a really nice day for them, but MacPhail has axed all that only to accommodate the Kansas City team's wishes...I do not understand this — it's a lousy, lousy thing to do. But we will abide by it if the game is played."

The game was halted July 24 after George Brett hit a two-out, two-run homer to give Kansas City a 5-4 lead in the top of the ninth inning. When the Yankees protested that Brett's bat had pine tar too far up the barrel, the umpires disallowed the homer, called Brett out and gave the Yanks an apparent 4-3 victory. Four days later, MacPhail overruled the umpires, restored the homer and ordered that the game be resumed next Thursday, rather than at the end of the season, to avoid postseason scheduling problems. Steinbrenner said play would begin at 2 p.m., with tickets going for $2.50 apiece, but MacPhail said it game had to be resumed no earlier than 6 p.m. "to comply with scheduling provisions of the basic agreement with respect to the Kansas City club."

Steinbrenner noted that the players union representative who accepted MacPhail's decision regarding the date and time was Mark Belanger, "who of course toiled for many years as a fine shortstop for the Baltimore Orioles, who are presently in the pennant race with the Yankees."

"I wish that, instead of Belanger, they would have met with our player representatives, Dave Winfield and Don Baylor, and tried to iron it out. I certainly don't want to say that Mark Belanger would be anything but honorable in this matter, but I am saying that the people I think he should have talked to were our player representatives and not a former Baltimore Orioles player who now works on the staff of the Players Association."

Belanger, the only former ballplayer on the Players Association executive committee, had no comment about that — but he did point out that he and the union's counsel had "numerous" conversations with Winfield, Baylor, Royals' player rep Dan Quisenberry and AL player rep Steve Renko before deciding not to file a grievance over MacPhail's directive. The basic agreement, Belanger said, gives the league the right to schedule or reschedule games, but not to require a team to play on more than 20 consecutive dates "unless there is no practical alternative."

A statement by the players association said that, although concluding the game on Aug. 18 would require each team to play more than 20 consecutive dates, "we are informed by President MacPhail that he has concluded there is no practical alternative to playing this game on (Aug.) 18th."

The Yankees are off only three times between Aug. 18 and the Oct. 2 final day of the season. On Aug. 29 and Sept. 22, Kansas City is scheduled to play. On Sept. 15, the Royals are returning home from the West Coast.

Rough Water Hinders Cup Race; Australia II Sails To Semifinal Win

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — While the rest of the America's Cup challengers broke down in rough seas, Australia II made it look easy as it beat Canada I in the opening race of the semifinals.

Victory '83 of Britain also collected a victory Thursday, but had to limp through the 24.4-mile triangular course with a broken rudder to collect it from Azzurra of Italy, which dropped out on the first leg after rigging broke on a mast spreader.

The four boats started the semifinals with a clean slate after three round robins, but Australia II showed it was still the boat to beat as it was the only one to go home unscathed by the chop on Rhode Island Sound.

"All credit on the shore staff on a day like this," said Warren Jones, executive director of the Australia II syndicate.

Martin Wins Putt Event

Phil Martin was the winner of the Thursday Night Amateur Tournament at the Greenville Putt-Putt last night.

Martin combined scores of 33 and 33 to finish with a six-under-par 66.

Moses Hodges finished second after shooting a one-under 71.

"Maintenance is part of the 12-meter program," added skipper John Bertrand. "It's like an aircraft. There's no excuse for falling apart."

Canada I was trailing Australia II by 39 seconds at the third mark, but on the fourth leg it had to turn back to pick up the bowman, who was washed overboard by a huge wave that also tore out a fitting holding the bottom of the jib, said mastman Dave Shaw.

The boat tried to finish the race, but finally dropped out.

on the last leg, when it trailed by 7:04.

Meanwhile, the New York Yacht Club waited for a rules interpretation from the International Yacht Racing Union on renewed claims that Australia II's secret finned keel gives it an unfair advantage.

"We are not going to modify our boat," said Jones after learning of the continuation of the controversy he thought was laid to rest Wednesday by the America's Cup international measurement committee.

"This was a bad day," he added, referring to his boat's first equipment failure during a race. "But you don't cry all day for that."

Azzurra meets Australia II today.

"That's a bad day, too," he quipped.

Victory '83 meets Canada I in the second race.

The results gave Australia II and Victory '83 one point each to zero for Canada I and Azzurra.

Meanwhile, the American boats did not race, awaiting the Aug. 16 start of their final trials under the eyes of the New York Yacht Club, which chooses the boat to defend its 132-year winning streak.

tee's reaffirmation that Australia II met 12-meter standards.

"If they are going to change the rules on us, we'll reassess the situation then," he added.

Bertrand minimized the effect of the bomb-shaped keel on the performance of the boat which has lost just four times in 41 races.

Italian skipper Cino Ricci said none of the boats could hope to beat Australia II for the chance to meet the Americans in the final starting Sept. 13.

"We can finish fourth or we can finish second, but first is impossible," Ricci said. "But we have spent our money to race, so we will race."

"This was a bad day," he added, referring to his boat's first equipment failure during a race. "But you don't cry all day for that."

Turner Orders Teepee Removal In Atlanta

ATLANTA (AP) — Despite last year's dubious precedent, Atlanta Braves owner Ted Turner has decided to remove Chief Noc-A-Homa's Teepee at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium so more fans can watch National League West leaders' home games.

Removal of the team mascot's teepee from the left field seats in August of last year coincided with the start of Atlanta's worst slump of the year.

After the Braves lost 19 of 21 games, fans began blaming the streak on the disappearance of Noc-A-Homa's hideaway. The teepee was restored and the Braves went on to win the division title.

This year, the teepee will stay down the rest of the season, Braves owner Ted Turner said when he authorized its removal following the Braves' 6-4 victory Thursday over the San Francisco Giants.

The removal frees 250 seats per game just as the Los Angeles Dodgers, in second place in the NL West, 6½ games behind the Braves, arrive in Atlanta for a three-game series.

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

BORN TO THE PURPLE

THE COLOR THAT DENOTES ROYALTY IN ANCIENT AND IN MODERN TIMES IS PURPLE. POSSIBLY THIS IS SO BECAUSE ANYTHING PURPLE WAS COSTLY AND CONSEQUENTLY ITS USE WAS THE PRIVILEGE OF THE WEALTHY AND THE HIGHLY PLACED. RICH CLOTHS OF PURPLE WERE USED AS COVERING FOR THE SEATS OF PRINCELY PALANQUINS AS NOTED IN THE SONGS OF SOLOMON (CHAP. 3:9,10), ALSO FOR THE DECK AWNINGS ON LUXURIOUS SHIPS AS NOTED IN EZEKIEL (CH. 27:7), ALSO FOR THE DRAPERY OF MANY IDOLS OF THE HEATHEN AND FOR THE HANGINGS IN THE TABERNACLES AND THE GARMENTS OF THE HIGH PRIESTS. THE PURPLE DYE WAS OBTAINED FROM VARIOUS KINDS OF SHELLFISH. THE AMOUNT YIELDED BY EACH FISH WAS VERY SMALL SO THAT MUCH LABOR WAS REQUIRED TO COLLECT A QUANTITY OF THE STUFF WHICH MADE THE PRICE CORRESPONDINGLY GREAT. SO THE SAYING "BORN TO THE PURPLE" REALLY DID SIGNIFY A PERSON'S HIGH ESTATE.

Couple Giving Ghana Villagers Written Word

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

Now they have the book. They also have a written language which they didn't have before. Many who had thought God didn't speak their tongue now can read the holy words in their own vernacular.

That transition has come in the lives of the Hanga-speaking people of northern Ghana, West Africa, and the achievement is a landmark in the worldwide work of the Wycliffe Bible Translators.

The occasion was the completion of the New Testament in the 200th spoken language that previously had no written form, no dictionary, nor even an alphabet.

"It's a beautiful book," says Geoffrey Hunt, who with his wife, Rosemary, spent 12 years among the Hanga people to decipher their language and give it an alphabet.

"It takes a long time," says Hunt, now of the organization's international linguistics center in Dallas. He notes the tasks requires absorbing the "pattern of sounds," the way different intonations are combined for different meanings, then putting them into lettered words.

About 4,750 Wycliffe linguists and assistants now are at work or in training, with research and translation projects going on in nearly 800 unwritten languages used by groups in 40 countries.

Since it usually takes close to 15 years of analyzing to put a new language into writing, completion of one was a rare event in the early days of the half-century-old organization.

At present, the Bible or portions of it have been translated through combined efforts of many organizations into 1,763 languages. Estimates are that 3,000 languages or dialects still are without Bibles.

Fundamentalists Set April Meet

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Independent Baptist churches plan a convention of about 25,000 fundamentalists next April in Washington to try to dispel their image as "snake handlers."

"The position of fundamentalists has been warped," says the Rev. Truman Dollar, a Kansas City pastor and organizer of "Baptist Fundamentalism '84." "We've been viewed as snake handlers because of misuse of the term 'fundamentalist.'"

He says the conference will attempt to clarify what fundamentalists believe — that the Bible is without error; Christ is God in the flesh; Christ died for the sins of humanity, rose bodily and will return bodily.

"We think the old-time religion has a very positive answer for 20th century people," he says.

'Dogs' Follows 'Cats' Musical

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Critic
NEW YORK (AP) — When "Cats" hit big, you just knew there'd be other animal musicals coming out. I kind of hoped there'd be one called "Pterodactyl," but no, the mundane has triumphed.

"Dogs" is the new animal musical in town. It comes from "The Provincetown Theater Ensemble in Exile." They say Exile is due south of Cape Cod, where time and tide wait for no clam. But I digress.

"Dogs," bowing Wednesday off-Broadway, is, well, a dog. Best I can tell, it's either a canine plea for freedom and dignity or a metaphor for man's inhumanity to audience, if not cast.

It has 10 performers, all human. Only one plays humans, though. The others are dressed up as and portray boy dogs and girl dogs.

You suspect you're in for long night when you first see its five girl dogs. They're each festooned with six rubber nipples attached to the front of their leotards. It's quite gaudy. The boy dogs have... well, no question they're boy dogs.

Some exhibit characteristics of their former owners. Examples: A boy dog, once owned by a drag queen, sings in falsetto. And a prim, middle-aged lady hound curiously sings that she's "a radical feminist canine Jewish lesbian."

All the pooches sniff, bark, yipe, leap about and engage in puppy love. Occasionally, but understandably, they also cower during the course of this Alpo tableau, set in Manhattan.

"Dogs" opens with song and dance in "Google's Canine Cabaret," run by a tyrant. The four-footed troupers flee, only to be put in the dog pound, also run by a tyrant (depicted here, for reasons unknown, as a straw-hatted rural redneck).

New York's dog-loving mayor comes to the pound, seeking a pet. He picks Dawn, the jolly, rotund leader of the pack and "Queen of the Labradors." The others face being "put to sleep."

Will the dogs escape? Will they barge into the birthday party the mayor is throwing for himself? Will they take over City Hall, rob the treasury of $1 million, and begin life anew, roaming free in Labrador?

Who cares? You only hope the cast quickly escapes all this and finds a happy home. In "Dogs," they work awfully hard but are hounded all night by an awful book by the director, Charles G. Horne, and James Stewart Bennett.

Bennett also wrote the score, which is ambition 10, music 0.

Howie Snider Still Cooks Pizza

By LINDEL HUTSON
Associated Press Writer
MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — Yes, Virginia, and California, and Louisiana and New Hampshire. There still is a Shakey's Pizza Parlor on Muncie's Kilgore

Avenue, and it's still owned by determined, banjo-picking Howie Snider.

Although times remain tough economically for Snider's pizza business, he is adamant as ever: "I'm just not going to let us go under."

Snider, his wife and eight kids, are featured tonight in "Family Business," the fourth program in public TV's "Middletown" series, as the small-town family struggling to keep alive their pizza parlor.

The series was filmed in late 1980 and early 1981, and first broadcast in April 1982.

"Obviously, we're still in business," Snider says now. "We're fighting a poor location and a weak economy. And until the economy picks up, we're not going to be comfortable."

But, caye Snider, a retired Marine Corps officer who opened the parlor eight years ago, "I'm optimistic."

The 90-minute "Family Business" segment is a portrait of the Snider family as members work with little or no pay to save the parlor that was sinking into debt. Part of the problem was the $10,000 Snider owed the parent Shakey's corporation.

"The sacrifice the kids were asked to make was made, and that saved us $10,000 and that kept us in business," Snider says. He also says the publicity surrounding the original Public Broadcasting Service show contributed to increased customer traffic.

"We received a ton of phone calls for several weeks after the show," says Snider. "Business doubled for about a month and then began to gradually decline. That caused a great boost in sales, and it helped me catch up."

"Since that film," he says, "people who are in the area — on vacation or just visiting — drop in to see if we're hanging in there, and then they go their merry way. I think that's incredible."

The film also landed Snider a contract with Henry Winkler of "Happy Days" fame, who considered the idea of a television series based on the Snider family.

The contract has been extended a third time, for six months, and Snider says he is "hopeful a pilot will be made." He won't say how much Winkler is paying but, he says, "We're not buying any Cadillacs."

All his kids are still there — "working for me in one way or another" — except Leslie, the eldest and most vocal of the offspring in the film.

In fact, tonight will be his last at Shakey's. Leslie, 28, graduated from Ball State University with a degree in biology and is moving to Evansville to look for work, his father says.

Snider will be watching when his segment is repeated, but not at Shakey's. "We're fascinated by the entire series," he says. "This time my wife and I are going out of town to my parents' home east of here and just watch it in the quiet of their home."

"But we will be showing it on the big screen in the parlor. The kids who are at work will be watching at work. We don't expect what happened last time (publicity and huge increase in business) to happen again, but we figure something will happen."

"I don't know whether to have more people standing by to work or to buy more balloons with my picture on them," he says.

"We've had some fun with this thing. We met and talked with a lot of people, and that alone made it worthwhile," Snider says. "Our lives had gotten bogged down with pizza and payroll, and suddenly we had something else to think about."

Visit Of Death Squad Related By Town Residents

WHERE DEATH SQUADS WALK — Colombian soldiers stand outside their quarters in Cimitarra, Colombia. Residents say that last July the soldiers disappeared just before four men, armed with submachine guns seized five men and executed them at the edge of town. (AP Laserphoto)

EDITOR'S NOTE: Right-wing death squads, frequently accused of operating with the knowledge of government officials and made up of police and military personnel, flourish in many Latin American countries. Here is the story of one such death squad operation as pieced together from interviews with witnesses to the event.

By TOM WELLS
Associated Press Writer
CIMITARRA, Colombia (AP) — As they told the story later, residents recalled that the temperature hung in the low 90s and not a whisper of breeze moved the palms as four men, each with a submachine gun, strode side by side down a dirt street.

They said they knew immediately that the death squad was coming, and they would always remember the day, Monday July 18.

They recalled that people lingered outside the adjoining concrete-walled houses and then slipped silently inside doorways as the men headed for La Ruiz, a small restaurant with six tables.

Witnesses who claimed to have been there said the only customers at that hour were a dozen men who had come into town to buy supplies for their small farms hacked out of the jungle along the Carare River.

They said the gunmen walked straight into the restaurant and ordered five men out into the street. The men were ordered to lie down in front of police headquarters, next door to the restaurant. Their hands were handcuffed behind their backs, said witnesses who asked not to be identified for fear they would be the squad's next victims.

The gunmen said they had a list of 180 people to be executed and that they would be back, the witnesses claimed.

The five men from the restaurant were marched down the darkened street. Over a period of several minutes, gunshots punctuated the darkness. A few hours later, the bodies of the five men, still bearing watches and money, were found on the edge of town. Each had been shot in the back of the head.

Some Colombian newspapers have theorized that any army people involved with the death squads are operating on their own or in connection with cattle ranchers and big businessmen impatient with Colombia's turtle pace system of justice.

The Colombian Human Rights Commission says death squads have killed 327 people in the last year. Many of those killed had been investigated by the army for suspected links with leftist guerrillas, Colombian newspapers have said.

In February, the attorney general's office, acting on orders of President Belisario Betancur to put an end to the terror, accused 163 people of being members of the death squads.

Fifty-nine of those named were active members of the army, including two lieutenant colonels. Sixteen others were retired army soldiers, and the others were civilians. Only one of the colonels and the 16 retired soldiers were charged with taking part in murders. The others were simply said to be members of the death squads.

Special judges were named to determine if there was sufficient evidence to charge those who had not been accused of specific crimes.

The Colombian justice system is slow. It sometimes takes five years for a case to be dismissed or to come to trial.

The minister of defense, Gen. Fernando Landazabal, has denied that any members of the armed forces belong to the death squads. He said in an editorial in the army's monthly magazine that the accusations were an attempt to discredit the armed forces.

In Cimitarra, townspeople told an Associated Press reporter that when the five men were forced out of the restaurant there some people ran to the police barracks two blocks away and others to an army guardpost a block away where a dozen soldiers are quartered.

No one was found at either place, the witnesses said. The soldiers had disappeared a few hours before the death squad arrived, residents told the AP reporter.

None of the witnesses recognized any of the gunmen, and the townspeople say they were strangers who had to arrive by car.

Gen. Daniel Garcia, commanding officer of a brigade of troops for the area, referred all questions about the death squad to the mayor.

The mayor, Salvador Lobo, later told an interviewer he had no way of knowing for sure if anyone went to the army guardpost and the police station to get help.

The police chief, Lt. Simion Mora, declined to comment beyond saying there were no clues in the executions. The police in Colombia are part of the armed forces.

Friends and families of the five men killed in Cimitarra said each of the murdered men had been previously detained for up to 16 days at a nearby military base and questioned about allegedly hauling supplies to guerrillas in surrounding mountains.

There are six leftist guerrilla groups in Colombia. The largest, with an estimated 2,000 rebels according to army intelligence officers, is the Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces, which claims to follow Soviet ideology. Atrocities have also been attributed to some left-wing guerrilla groups.

Meanwhile, the death squads continue to operate.

The Betancur government has named special judges to go to areas where the death squads operate, but so far no one has been arrested.

People now are running for their lives, fearful death squads have them marked for assassination.

In Cimitarra, a town which usually has a population of about 7,500, about 1,500 residents have moved to other parts of Colombia or have gone into hiding, residents said.

Every few days a truck leaves, carrying dozens of residents with their personal belongings. Small river towns along the Carare are all but abandoned, a reporter found in a trip along the river by canoe.

Said a former town official in Cimitarra, "There are lots of things I could tell you and that other people could tell you, but we are frightened."

Restraining Order Issued

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Students in Polk and Halifax counties may not be able to start an experimental extended school program Monday after a superior court judge issued a temporary restraining order blocking the project.

Wake County Superior Court Judge Edwin S. Preston Jr. Thursday issued an order, which expires Tuesday at 4 p.m., barring the two counties from using tax money for the program. The order was in response to lawsuits filed by residents of the two counties who want to prevent the program's startup Monday.

The State Board of Education approved the experiment in an attempt to improve student test scores. Polk and Halifax counties volunteered to increase the school days from 6½ hours to 7 hours and to lengthen the school year from 180 days to 200.

Preston said he wanted a preliminary court hearing on the issue as soon as possible, and no later than Tuesday. At that hearing, a judge will decide whether to lift the temporary restraining order or to replace it with a preliminary injunction.

Richard C. Titus, who is representing 31 Halifax residents, said lawyers for both sides will meet Monday.

Bernard A. Harrell, who is also representing the Halifax residents, said the North Carolina Board of Education does not have the authority to set the number of days in the school year. Harrell said only the General Assembly has that authority.

Board Chairman C.D. Spangler Jr. said the state board will "take whatever action is necessary" to go ahead with the experimental program.

A. Craig Phillips, state superintendent of public instruction, said "We'll respond to (the orders) appropriately through the attorney general's office. It's an important experiment, a responsible effort to find a better means of providing of time for learning."

Another Hoax

LEEDS, England (AP) — Hundreds of Britons responded when they heard that a 7-year-old boy dying of leukemia in a Leeds hospital wanted the world's largest collection of get-well cards so he could get into the Guinness Book of World Records.

At least 1,000 cards were addressed to a boy named Colin. But the story was a hoax — the second involving a phony dying child in Britain this year.

Martin To Talk Over Candidacy

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Rep. Jim Martin, R-N.C., is scheduled to meet with Piedmont Republican leaders next Friday in Greensboro to discuss a possible bid for governor in 1984.

Paul Jones, Martin's district representative in Charlotte, described the Greensboro meeting as an "exploratory thing" to give area Republicans a chance to question Martin and to give Martin a chance to probe their attitudes about the race.

"There will not be a formal announcement," Jones said. David Berford, who works in Martin's congressional campaign office, said it's possible Martin will reveal his intentions.

"I hope he runs," Benford said. "I think he will, but I can't say for certain." The 9th District representative will meet with Republican leaders in Charlotte on Thursday morning and perhaps go to Asheville that afternoon before coming to Greensboro.

Martin, 47, a Davidson College chemistry professor before his election in 1972, is out of the country on vacation this week and could not be reached for comment.

"He's gone about it very methodically," Benford said. "It's part of his professional background, where you take everything into consideration."

If he runs, Martin's primary opponent for the Republican nomination would be state Sen. Cass Ballenger of Hickory, who already is campaigning daily.

"I'm planning my campaign as if Martin is going to run," Ballenger said Thursday during a visit to Greensboro.

Ballenger said he and Martin had a meeting in Statesville in early July. At that time, Martin talked as if he were going to run, Ballenger said.

"I think he was hoping I would back out," Ballenger said.

"He said, 'What a great ticket it would be: President Reagan for president, Jesse Helms for U.S. Senate, Jim Martin for governor and you for lieutenant governor,'" Ballenger recalled.

The Pan American Games

This weekend marks the beginning of the Ninth Pan American Games in Caracas, Venezuela. The Games will attract 5,000 amateur athletes from almost every nation in the hemisphere for competition in track and field, swimming, diving, equestrian events, cycling, soccer, and many other sports. The Pan American Games, first held in Buenos Aires in 1951, are designed to build good relations. Because this meet is always held one year before the Summer Olympics, it is a showcase for Olympic talent and a tune-up for that world class meet. Though the U.S. has often swept the Pan Am Games in the past, Cuba is expected to be a powerhouse this year, particularly in boxing, gymnastics, and baseball.

DO YOU KNOW—What city will host the 1984 Summer Olympics?

THURSDAY'S ANSWER—Christopher Columbus first called Native Americans "Indians."

California's Vinters Battered By Surplus, European Shipments

By JACK SCHREIBMAN
Associated Press Writer
SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Still weeks away from the 1983 grape harvest, California's $5 billion wine industry is hung over from a surplus of wine in storage, a sharp drop in expected sales and prices, and a flood of European competition.

"We're being clobbered," said Phil Hiaring Jr., executive editor and publisher of Wines & Vines, an industry publication.

Hiaring says "10 percent of the American people drink 80 percent of the wine" sold in the United States. About 70 percent of the wine consumed in the United States comes from California.

Other wine authorities, including veteran wine business analyst and consultant Lou Gomberg, say only "4 to 5 percent" of Americans drink wine regularly.

"Something," declared Gomberg, "has to be done about that."

The troubles developed as growers, vintners, distributors and retail outlets began facing the fact that California has almost 554 million gallons of wine in storage — about 90 million gallons more than was being stored at the same time last year.

Vintners concede that if this year's grape crop comes close to 1982's huge harvest, there won't be enough room to store the 1983 vintage. Current indications are that the crop will be at least 10 percent under last year's.

Europe's major wine producers — Italy, France, Spain and Portugal — also have a storage problem. Wineries in those countries are reported to have some 400 million gallons in storage this year over what was being held last year, although the total figure was not available.

And much of that wine is heading to the United States, in what some industry sources call a "Eurowine offensive."

According to the industry-supported Wine Institute, California's 1982 grape crop was an enormous 5.9 million tons — 49.2 percent over the previous year. That record crop came as California wine shipments climbed only one-tenth of 1 percent over 1981 shipments.

Ed Everett, publisher of "The Wine Trade" newsletter, said the result will be grapes hitting the ground rather than the crusher, and "a depression" in prices offered for grapes and charged for bottled wine.

Prices for wines rated from jug to good or very good quality are dropping, although the cost of the finest wines is not expected to decline.

In June, premium wine producer Robert Mondavi dropped the price of his $11 fume blanc at the winery to between $5 and $6. The retail price at discount stores dropped to the $4 range, said Gomberg.

And recently, some jug wines bearing the Carlo Rossi label fell to near 1939 prices in some stores, with eight liters of jug wine going for $7, a cut of more than 50 percent, Gomberg added.

But with a strong dollar, prices have also fallen for foreign wines, making them cheaper here and American wines expensive in other countries.

In June, Clare L. Berryhill, director of the California Department of Food and Agriculture predicted that Italy and France would gain a larger share of the American wine market if the dollar remained strong.

Industry statistics indicate California's share of the total U.S. wine market after World War II was 90.6 percent. Last year, the figure was 68.2 percent. And between 1970 and 1981, wine imports to America rose from 10 percent to 22.6 percent.

Last week in the House of Representatives, two California congressmen introduced a bill which threatens restrictions on wine imports. The measure, sponsored by Reps. Tony Coelho, a Democrat, and William M. Thomas, a Republican, would give countries that export wine to the United States 180 days from the enactment of the proposed law to make their own import rules conform to those in this country.

If they didn't, the president would be required to limit imports just as drastically as other countries limit theirs.

Gomberg concedes a serious oversupply of domestic California wine, but shrugs at the fuss.

The surplus, he said in a recent interview, "has been experienced by the industry in this country for over 200 years, and in all the wine countries of the world throughout history.

"It goes on periodically, unpredictably. Nature makes it unpredictable over and beyond the power of human beings. Nature chose in 1982 to produce a gigantic grape crop in California...by far never anything like it."

Gomberg said during the nearly five decades he has been close to the industry "there have been 10 periods of excess grape production from time to time, leading to excess production of wine, leading to sharp reductions in grape prices, leading to reduction in wine prices. This is normal for this industry. It's normal for agriculture."

Goat-Killing By Navy Blocked

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy has scrapped plans to shoot 500 goats who roam San Clemente Island off the coast of California, according to a congressman's office.

Adm. James D. Watkins, chief of naval operations, ordered the Pacific Fleet to cancel plans to shoot the goats because of a lawsuit pending in the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Art Brodsky, a spokesman for Rep. Tom Lantos, D-Calif. said.

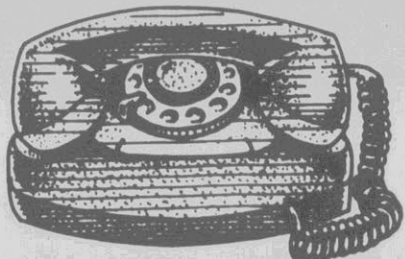

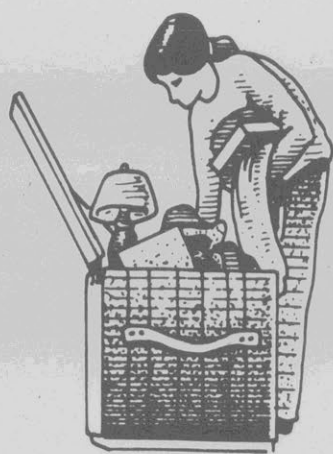

Lantos had objected to the plans and suggested the Navy sterilize the goats. Aides to the congressman say the Navy contends the goats threaten plant life on the government-owned island.
