No Vote Tabulating Machines On Nov. 8

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Greenville voters will not be using vote tabulating machines in the Nov. 8 city election, but County Commissioners and members of the Pitt County Board of Elections will continue to investigate the possibility of securing vote tabulators.

Commissioners, at an Oct. 6 workshop session, gave their approval for the use of computerized vote tabulating machines in the city's November election, provided details could be worked out with the suppliers of the machines.

But Clifton Everette Jr., chairman of the elections board, told commissioners Monday that Airmac Technology Systems, designers and manufacturers of a vote-tabulating machine demonstrated here last month, would agree to the use of the machines in the city election only if the county would agree to purchase the tabulators.

Everette said ATS had offered to sell the county 26 machines at a cost of $3,475 each. The total package, including 26 tabulators, a programmer and other equipment, would cost $101,350, Everette said.

Monday, Everette said an ATS salesman had led him to believe that ATS would do the city election without any commitment on the part of the county. But Everette said since the Oct. 6 workshop, other ATS officials said a purchase agreement would be necessary.

"Let's forget what has transpired and start over again," Charles Gaskins, chairman of the Board of Commissioners said following a discussion. Gaskins then asked Everette to arrange a meeting between commissioners and election board members to discuss the use of vote tabulators.

"Maybe we can work up something for a later time," Everette said. "I appreciate your willingness to pursue" the use of voting machines.

In other business Monday, commissioners accepted bids for a number of items of computer equipment and for a two-year heating oil contract. In both cases the board decided to study the bids before awarding contracts.

Only one bid, from IBM, was received for the computer equipment, which would upgrade and expand the county's system. That bid, for magnetic disk and tape storage units and other equipment, totaled $79,934, with a monthly payment

Senate Votes 76-12

King Holiday Passes Test

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate supporters of a national holiday for Martin Luther King Jr. won a key test vote today, crushing an attempt by Sen. Jesse Helms to derail the bill through lengthy committee hearings.

The 76-12 vote against Helms was a decisive but predictable defeat for the man who has waged a fierce fight against commemorating the birthday of the slain civil rights leader and recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize.

If the Senate sticks to its plans, the final vote on the bill will come at 4 p.m. EDT Wednesday, when King's widow, Coretta, plans to be in the galleries.

Both supporters of the bill, including Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., and opponents, such as John Tower, R-Texas, said in advance of today's vote that support for the measure was overwhelming. Frustrated supporters have watched similar bills die each session since 1968 — the year King was gunned down on a balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tenn.

With defeat of the motion by Helms, R-N.C., to send the bill to the Judiciary Committee for hearings, the Senate was set to consider amendments.

The bill sets the holiday observance for the third

Monday in January beginning in 1986. King's birth date was Jan. 15.

President Reagan, once reluctant to grant federal workers a 10th paid holiday, has agreed to sign the bill that passed the House 338-90 on Aug. 2.

Before the vote, Helms repeated his argument that the bill should be studied in committee because "the record is clear about his (King's) association with the far left and elements of the Communist Party, USA."

Helms said several senators had told him they would vote for the bill only because they were under "political pressure."

The conservative Republican also attacked Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., for Kennedy's prior criticism of Helms' stand on the King bill.

Defense Accepts Three Jurors For Green Trial

By MARY ANNERHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Attorneys in the bribery and conspiracy trial of Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green have accepted three jurors who say they have heard about the widely publicized case, but have not formed an opinion.

Prosecutors on Monday identified 17 potential jurors from a pool of 34 people. Defense attorneys began questioning those 17 people this morning.

By midmorning, defense attorneys agreed to accept Arameta Warren, a former school teacher who lives in Raleigh; Dusty Batten, a Cary woman who works for Northern Telecom; and Henry Brown of Raleigh, sales manager for Metrotool.

Green, 62, was indicted June 20 for allegedly accepting a $2,000 bribe, consenting to receive a $2,000 bribe, conspiring with Howard F. Watts to receive a bribe and twice consenting to receive bribes of $10,000 a month. He has pleaded innocent to all charges.

If convicted, he faces a maximum of 23 years in prison and an unspecified fine. He is the state's first lieutenant governor to face criminal charges.

Meanwhile Monday, Watts' attorney entered a plea of innocent to the conspiracy charge. James R. Nance Sr. of Fayetteville also filed a motion seeking dismissal of the charges against Watts because of an alleged immunity grant.

Prosecutor Jim Blackburn earlier in court has said he is not sure any immunity grant would cover Watts in this case.

The motion, which will be heard later, argues that Watts agreed to a "debriefing" on information he had about criminal matters in exchange for pleading guilty to conspiring to burn warehouses owned by state Sen. J.J. "Monk" Harrington, D-Bertie.

The motion said Watts understood that he would not be tried on any indictment arising out of other crimes in North Carolina. Watts was sentenced to serve more than 13 years in prison after pleading guilty to conspiracy to burn and the motion said

Key U.S. Defense Data Said Passed To Soviet

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) —

An American was charged with stealing secrets about the Minuteman missile and other U.S. weapons research and selling "a windfall of intelligence" to a Polish spy for relay to the Soviet Union, government officials disclosed today.

An army expert said the material described Defense Department efforts to enable the Minuteman to survive a nuclear first strike by the Soviets, according to an FBI affidavit filed in court.

James Durward Harper Jr. of Mountain View was charged with stealing secrets from May 1979 to the present for more than $250,000, according to the FBI.

Harper, 49, arrested Saturday, was arraigned today and faces a capital crime espionage charge, which could bring a life term in prison if convicted.

The affidavit said the FBI obtained information from a high-ranking officer in the Polish intelligence service.

It said that when the documents about the Minuteman were delivered to the Polish intelligence service in Warsaw on June 5, 1980, a team of 20 KGB analysts and engineers were sent by plane from Moscow to Warsaw to evaluate them. The following month, the officers instrumental in obtaining the documents received a commendation signed by Soviet President Yuri Andropov, who was then head of the KGB.

The FBI said Harper, 49, passed sensitive or classified U.S. information involving Minuteman and ballistic missile defense systems. The Minuteman missile is the backbone of the strategic missile force.

The affidavit alleged that Harper "did unlawfully, knowingly and willfully conspire" with Zdzislaw Trzychodzien, an officer in the Polish intelligence service Sluzba Bezpieczenstwa, and others to transmit the defense documents to the Polish People's Republic.

The affidavit said the spy activities occurred in

To Replace 4 Bridges

RALEIGH — Four bridges in Pitt County are scheduled for replacement in the North Carolina Department of Transportation's bridge improvement program in the next three years.

The bridge improvement program, approved by the transportation board Friday, includes 500 bridges throughout the state, and is estimated to cost $165 million.

The Pitt County bridges to be replaced include: the Otter Creek bridge on N.C. 43 northwest of Falkland, scheduled for replacement this fiscal year at a cost of $373,000; the Grindle Creek bridge on N.C. 903, scheduled for replacement in fiscal year 1985 at an estimated cost of $155,000; the Chicod Creek bridge on SR 1760, also scheduled for replacement in fiscal year 1985 at a cost of $375,000; and the Parker's Creek bridge on SR 1530, scheduled for replacement in fiscal year 1986 at an estimated cost of $210,000.

Greene County bridges scheduled for replacement include: the Contentnea Creek overflow bridge on N.C. 123, scheduled for fiscal year 1985 at a cost of $220,000, and the Little Contentnea Creek bridge on N.C. 903, set for replacement in fiscal year 1986 at a cost of $535,000.

Also scheduled for replacement this year is the Roanoke River bridge on U.S. 13-17 at Williamston, at a cost of $10.8 million.

While the Cape Fear River bridge on U.S. 421 at Wilmington is the most expensive replacement under construction at the present time, the Albemarle Sound bridge on N.C. 32 is the most expensive project planned for the current fiscal year. That bridge replacement is expected to cost some $25.15 million.

The next most expensive bridge replacement scheduled this year is Bogue Sound bridge, linking Morehead City with Atlantic Beach and Bogue Banks. The cost of that project is estimated at $12.2 million.

SUSPICIOUS CALLS

The East Carolina University Department of Sociology has called Hotline to say that someone is placing telephone calls in this area and representing himself as a sociological researcher associated with the ECU Department of Sociology. If the person he reaches by telephone agrees to participate in the survey, the caller begins asking questions that soon evolve into some that are personal and suggestive in nature, a secretary in the department says she has been told. John Maiolo of the sociology faculty says that the caller is in no way associated with the ECU Sociology Department and is not authorized to be questioning in the name of the department or the university.

First reading approval was given by the Greenville Board of Education Monday night to the policy chapter dealing with student affairs in city schools.

The complexity of school administration is revealed in the span of subjects and guidelines contained in the chapter. There are 26 individual subjects with policy guidelines, covering everything from attendance requirements to assignment of pupils, transfer of pupils between the city and Pitt County systems, student accounting, suspension, emergency medical treatment — on to search and seizure on school premises, pregnant students and school dropouts.

Superintendent Delma Blinson said the policy guideline for transfers between systems has not strictly been enforced. He said that, because of erratic school boundaries, a number of students now attending one system should be in the other system.

"Any effort at this point to strictly enforce the guidelines would create a real hassle," he said. "At the moment it's best to wait for action on the proposed merger issue before we take action."

Blinson said enforcement of the guideline would result in an

Doctor Sentenced On Drug Charge Conviction

Dr. John Lee Waeltz, 29, of 2608 Jackson Drive pleaded no contest in Pitt County Superior Court Monday to three counts of obtaining a controlled substance (Percoset) by fraud.

He was given a suspended five-year prison sentence and was fined $5,000. Judge Charles B. Winberry Jr. of Rocky Mount also stripped Waeltz of his right to practice medicine in North Carolina.

A Pitt County grand jury indicted Waeltz on the charges May 31, and he was suspended from his post as a third-year resident in obstetrics and gynecology at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. By entering the no-contest plea, Waeltz did not plead guilty to the charges but offered no defense.

State Bureau of Investigation Agent Tim Nelson testified that the charges resulted from a routine audit of a Farmville pharmacy at which time a prescription involving Waeltz was questioned.

Nelson, a member of the SBI's special diversion investigative unit which concentrates on drug law violations by professionals such as physicians, dentists, pharmacists and nurses, said the offenses occurred between Sept. 2, 1981, and April 14, 1983, and involved 1,300 dosage units of the narcotic, which is used for pain relief and sedation.

The agent also said Waeltz told investigators he had used the drug for severe headaches.

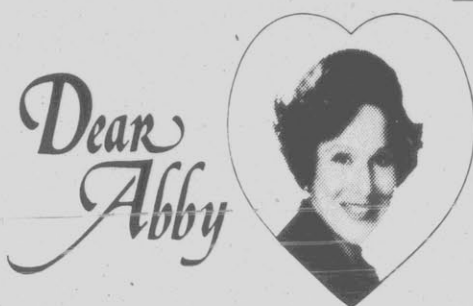

Waeltz could have received a maximum of 15 years in prison on the charges.

Dear Abby

Mother's Discard: Daughter's Keeper

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I'm in love with a wonderful man. I'm nearly 20 and Irving (not his real name) is 46. He happens to be my mother's ex-boyfriend and I've known him since I was 14. Our relationship wasn't planned. It just happened. We are very much in love and plan to get married soon.

My mother and her side of the family aren't speaking to me. I don't understand why. I didn't start seeing Irving until two years after he and my mother broke up. He has three teen-age children who approve of me and we get along great.

My problem is that people make me feel guilty even though I haven't done anything wrong. The age difference isn't such a big deal nowadays. I'm happy and Irving is happy, so why am I bothered so much by these guilt feelings?

LUCKY IN LOVE

DEAR LUCKY: You feel "guilty" even though you haven't done anything wrong because that's the feeling you had as a child whenever your mother disapproved of your actions. The "child" in you still yearns for your mother's approval, and when she withholds it, your happiness is flawed.

The feelings you have are not so much "guilt" as a sadness for having been unjustly judged.

DEAR ABBY: A woman wrote in complaining because her boyfriend's ex-wife still does his laundry. She thought it was "weird" and considered the ex-wife a threat.

I see nothing weird about it. I've been doing my ex-husband's laundry for five years. Not only that, I prepare good meals for him several nights a week. He still pays me alimony, and it's to my benefit that he dresses neat on his job and eats well so he stays healthy.

In exchange for the laundry and meals, he maintains my car and house when repairs are needed, which saves me a bundle of money. His fast repairs and service calls can't be beat.

So you see, it's sort of a trade-off. We still love and care for each other, but there are some things we just can't agree on, so we divorced.

NOT WASHED UP IN ORLANDO

DEAR NOT: Sounds like you both have a good thing going for you. Pity more divorced couples aren't that practical.

DEAR ABBY: About a year ago you ran a letter from "A Bible Student" who presented the biblical view on abortion, and in so doing quoted the Scriptures.

Will you please run it again?

PRO CHOICE IN ST. PAUL

Students come from Iran, Taiwan, Nigeria, Canada, Japan, Venezuela, India and Malaysia. Most of them are interested in business classes and computer science, the speaker said. ECU has 140 foreign students.

Mrs. Roseveare gave a report on the district meeting held in Aurora. Florence Holt received a silver bowl as a participation award. The Louise Kling bowl was awarded to Greenville, District 15, for the attendance record.

Meeting hostesses included Mrs. Roseveare, Polly Dail and Jessie Little.

Appropriate Move

Police Chief Ted Holmes, in one of his first moves since becoming head of the local police department, announced the formation of a narcotics and vice enforcement squad.

He said the squad will concentrate on street level drug and vice problems.

Chief Holmes cited street level drugs as a problem of "particular concern to the department."

"I believe that local law enforcement agencies should take all reasonable action to ensure that drug use is minimized," he said.

The squad will start small, only two officers, and the chief specified there will be one white and one black officer because of "the nature of our problem and the makeup of the city."

Initially the squad will work directly under the chief's supervision and later will be assigned to the detective division.

The problem of street drugs is certainly a major one in our city — and it is likely that drug use leads to other more serious crimes. Certainly any effort by the police which leads to better enforcement of the laws against illegal drugs will be timely. Formation of a narcotics and vice enforcement squad seems a move in the right direction.

Fun Therapy

Recreation brings to mind, baseball, tennis and other physical activities. It also includes, however, arts and crafts.

Lucille Sumrell reported to the Greenville Recreation and Parks Commission on the progress of the arts and crafts program recently.

"Now arts and crafts are flourishing all over town, with young and old involved," she said. "More people are recognizing that making things with one's hands is excellent therapy, besides being fun."

Arts and crafts are certainly a part of the city's recreational program. They appeal to a wide number of people and we are happy there is heavy participation.

—James Kilpatrick—

Dedication

WASHINGTON — James David Autry, 29, escaped death by 24 minutes on Oct. 6. He had been scheduled for execution in the Huntsville, Texas, state prison at one minute past midnight. At 11:37, Supreme Court Justice Byron White ordered the proceeding stopped.

The story raises some disturbing questions about the high court's handling of the matter. On the face of the record, it appears that Autry is alive only because of a last-minute change of lawyers. The layman, untrained in the technicalities of federal jurisprudence, is bound to ask how a life could be made to depend upon the drafting of a legal paper.

The chronology goes back to Magna Charta in 1215. There the rule was enunciated that as a matter of justice, punishment should fit the crime. That principle was written into our Constitution as the Eighth Amendment in 1792. Punishments that are "cruel and unusual" may not be imposed. In 1910, the Supreme Court laid down its own rule of "proportionality," that the severity of a sentence must be in proportion to the gravity of the crime.

More to the immediate point: In 1977, in what is known as the Coker case, the Supreme Court applied this principle of proportionality to imposition of the death sentence. There the court held that a death penalty for the rape of an adult woman "is grossly disproportionate and excessive and is therefore forbidden by the Eighth Amendment."

That principle was expressly reaffirmed in 1982 in a case from Florida. Earl Enmund had been convicted of participating with two other persons in the robbery and murder of an elderly couple. Enmund himself had no part in the actual murders; there was no evidence that he ever intended any such consequence. Speaking for the court, Justice White found the death sentence in such circumstances "inconsistent" with the Eighth Amendment. Capital punishment for a passive accomplice, he concluded, is disproportionate to the crime.

Now, to the matter of James David Autry. In April 1980, he entered a liquor store in Port Arthur, Texas, and went to the cash register with a six-pack of beer. "That will be $2.70," said clerk Shirley Drouet. "Here's your $2.70," said Autry, and shot her between the eyes. He was tried for murder, found guilty and sentenced to death. After exhausting his appeals in the Texas state courts, he filed a petition last January in U.S. District Court for a writ of habeas corpus.

This is the disturbing thing: Autry's January petition made no mention of the principle of proportionality. Entirely different grounds were advanced. The District Court and later the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals rejected his petition. On Oct. 3, the Supreme Court, dividing 5-4, summarily turned him down. Autry's execution was to go forward on schedule.

But behold! New lawyers took up Autry's cause. On Oct. 5 they filed a new petition for habeas corpus, and this time they advanced the argument that the "proportionality" of Autry's sentence never had been reviewed. This petition reached Justice White at about 11:10 on the night of the scheduled execution. Twenty minutes later he granted the stay. By the time his order had been telephoned to Huntsville, Autry had been strapped to a wheeled stretcher. An intravenous catheter had been inserted in his arm, awaiting a lethal dose of poison.

What goes on here? On Oct. 3, five justices were ready to let Autry die; four justices thought his appeal should be perfected; none of the nine mentioned "proportionality" in any way. But 48 hours later, because Autry's new lawyers had "raised grounds not presented in his first petition," White blocked the execution.

Such dedication to procedural rigidity may be defensible as a matter of law. In ordinary circumstances, the court cannot be expected to rule on questions not presented to it. But these circumstances were not ordinary. Autry's first lawyers, in effect, had neglected to check the right box on a form. If this is how the mill wheels of the law are meant to grind, they grind in a most peculiar way.

SOUTHERN PINES — The sun had just gone down, most of the barbecue had been eaten and the 300 folks at Clyde Sullivan's ranch here were getting ready to party. Attorney General Rufus Edmisten, candidate for governor and guest of honor, was drafted by the convened.

"We want Rufus to sing Honky Tonk Angel," one woman hollered from behind the beer wagon. Edmisten sang, but not that song. When he finished, the call for "Honky Tonk Angel" went up again, by more people this time.

Edmisten acquiesced but when he was finished he caught the disapproving eye of Marvin Speight. "I'm sorry, Marvin, they made me sing it."

Speight, chairman of the state ABC board and one of Edmisten's most important supporters, wouldn't elaborate about the apology. But, when pressed, he agreed that the song doesn't help Edmisten's image.

Seven months before Democrats choose their gubernatorial candidate, Edmisten is the frontrunner, according to the polls. And a day's campaigning with Edmisten shows he's drawing large, enthusiastic audiences. But as a lot of full-time political speculators see the coming race, Edmisten and "Honky Tonk Angel" are too closely associated for Edmisten to win the governor's office. Whether deserved or not, Edmisten carries the reputation of a party-goer.

"We just can't have a governor who's out singing in bars," says one high-ranking Democrat who opposes Edmisten's nomination. The question of personal image comes up almost every time you discuss Edmisten's chances for winning.

"That irritates me more than anything else," Edmisten says. "Just because I'm a happy person, people say that about me. I'm a younger guy, unmarried, so, who do they start rumors about? ... Most of the ones saying that about me are the ones who are out running around on their wives and drinking. I've not had a drink in public in three and a half years. I don't go into bars. I don't like them. I'm not ashamed about one thing in my personal life. I've had a wonderful girlfriend for years ... and I'm fanatical about my flower garden."

Edmisten discounts the importance of what he calls "the gossip. That's not a thing but a Raleigh gossip phenomenon because it's not out there where there are decent people who don't care about that drivel." In his statewide poll, the Edmisten campaign asked if the candidate had an image problem. He wouldn't disclose the poll results but he says "it didn't show up," meaning the gossip hadn't been heard outside of Raleigh.

But in Southern Pines, some folks had heard. "His personal life will kill him," one Moore County Democratic Party official said privately — and with regret. "He's single and he's been divorced. I think he's perceived as being a party man — which he probably doesn't deserve."

Dick Carlton, a deputy attorney general and regional campaign coordinator, said the rumors came from Edmisten's opponents. He says he's tracked them down on two or three occasions and confronted the perpetrators.

Rufus Edmisten knows how to enjoy himself. He stands out as a candidate who really enjoys the tedium of campaigning, who really enjoys the handshaking, the speech-making, the joke-telling and, in his case, the singing. As the campaign wears on, however, it'll be his job to convince the doubters that he's a man of substance who also likes to laugh rather than a court jester who can't bring dignity to the office of governor.

To the editor:

The following is a copy of a letter which I am sending to the president and the two North Carolina senators. Since it speaks to a crucial issue of our times, I would like to share it with the readers of The Daily Reflector:

"As a 1983 black East Carolina University graduate from Greenville, N.C., I hope that you find it in your heart to vote for passage of the bill to make Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday a national holiday. Dr. King was a patriotic and great American who gave his life for a cause he believed in, peace and justice for all. Being black and having lived in the South most of my life, I experienced prejudice firsthand going to school as a child. While the experience was not one I would care to remember, I referred to it to make a point. Without the sincere efforts of Dr. King on behalf of the poor and downtrodden of this country, people such as myself would not have been able to participate fully in the American way of life.

Dr. King received the Nobel Peace Prize and pushed for Civil Rights Legislation (Civil Rights Acts of 1964, 1965 and 1968), that made it possible for me to vote, attend the university of my choice, eat at desegregated restaurants and live in decent housing. How can you deny a man such a great honor who gave his life so that the poor of this country might have a chance at a better life? Please respond to this letter and vote for passage of the bill to make Dr. King's birthday a national holiday on Tuesday. As an American, I think that it is the least we can do."

To the editor:

At a time when government spending is at an all-time high and the average taxpayer, many of which are farmers, small business operators and other self-employed that do not get cost of living raises and holidays with pay, I feel the time is at hand for all people to be willing to give a good day's work for a good day's pay.

I am sure many people feel the nation should proclaim a national holiday in honor of Martin Luther King. I am also sure many would want it because of pay without work they would receive. If we are to continue increasing the number of national holidays with every worthwhile cause, we should limit the number of days an employee could receive pay without work or double time for work. By everyone thinking of giving for wages rather than receiving for wages, we could all be a factor in increasing efficiency and productivity, as well as decreasing inflation and cost, all of which should give us a better attitude about ourselves as well as our fellowman.

GOP Gains An Edge

CHICAGO — Intensified hostility between Chicago's white and black Democratic politicians in the nearly six months since Harold Washington became mayor opens the door wide for Ronald Reagan and the Republicans to capture this Democratic bastion.

"There are now two political parties in Cook County," a white Democratic leader told us. "One is white and the other is black." He and his compatriots predict a massive white defection next year to President Reagan in a city whose steadfast Democratic loyalty sustained politically stricken Jimmy Carter in 1980. For his part, Mayor Washington threatens massive black defections to Republican candidates at the county level.

This disarray seems like providential deliverance for the Republican Party, steadily decaying in Illinois as elsewhere. Apart from what it means for Reagan's re-election prospects in this key state, GOP strategists understand the prospect of fusion with Chicago's white Democrats. Considering the rise of black Democratic candidates in the nation's big cities, it is a problem far from exclusive to this city.

Its exaggeration here stems partly from Harold Washington's unique personality. A longtime state and federal legislator, he is no street radical. He can be eloquent and charming, as he was in an interview with us at City Hall. Dispassionate observers credit him with a real effort to control city expenses.

But he has not lifted a finger to accommodate himself with the regular Democratic organization. State Attorney Richard M. Daley, who lost to Washington in the Democratic primary, called the new mayor after his election offering help, and that was their last contact. That has been a common experience for businessmen volunteering support. Washington's failure to show up for appointments persists, as in missing a recent breakfast with two of the city's most prominent business executives.

Actually, a few of the 29 anti-Washington regulars on the City Council — especially Alderman Roman Pucinski — yearn for reconciliation. After the mayor at the Chicago White Sox victory rally took care to put himself and all 50 aldermen behind the baseball team, Pucinski told us he glimpsed a peace offering. But when we informed Washington of Pucinski's interpretation, Washington said he was conveying "no special message."

The mayor makes no secret of his intent to demolish what remains of the late Richard J. Daley's Chicago machine. Machine politicians — those who backed Richie Daley and those who supported then Mayor Jane Byrne — view their fight with Washington as a struggle for their very survival.

The Daley wing maintains superficial relations with the mayor, while the Byrne wing — led by Alderman Edward Vrdolyak, Cook County chairman and leader of the City Council's 29 regulars — engages in hand-to-hand combat. But key figures in both wings say that really at stake is a winner-take-all racial battle for Chicago with round two, the mayoralty election four years hence, as the final round.

Do Chicago's whites, in their cherished bungalows, really care what happens to Fast Eddie Vrdolyak and the machine? Although Vrdolyak is greeted as a hero in the neighborhood taverns, polls show slowly-growing white support for Washington.

But issues over the horizon suggest more racial polarization. Impending struggle between mayor and Council over the share of budget cuts to be borne by the city's police and fire is fraught with racial implications — as Washington pointed out in our interview. It is "not a simple question of how many policemen or how many firemen you should have" but a matter of the white community looking "upon the police as the protection of certain 'perks' that no community is supposed to have."

That climate is pressing Chicago's white Democrats into Reagan's arms in the view of politicians here, including leaders of the Daley wing who back endorsing Walter F. Mondale in return for his support of Richie in the primary. Vrdolyak is believed by friends to prefer Sen. John H. Glenn, but may also endorse Mondale for the sake of a little organizational unity. Presidential politics is of so little importance to them that a Reagan romp in Chicago would bring few tears.

What does concern them is local politics. Washington, describing Vrdolyak's failure to support him last year as "low-life" and an "unpardonable sin," told us "I would have no loss of sleep at all" in leading Chicago blacks against next year's Democratic ticket. That will happen, he said, "unless they clean up their act" — that is, oust Vrdolyak.

This is on its face a division of what was once the country's most disciplined big-city Democratic machine organization into white and black wings. With the split seemingly irreconcilable, what remains to be seen is what progress the Republicans make with that white wing in 1984 and beyond.

Reagan Warms Up Political Humor

WASHINGTON (AP) — As President Reagan warms up for what he calls the "mashed potatoes" circuit and a round of political speeches, he is also warming up his political humor.

He took to the podium the other night at a dinner marking the 10th anniversary of the Heritage Foundation, a conservative think tank, where he had been welcomed by Joseph Coors, the Colorado brewer and a member of Reagan's inner circle.

"Actually," Reagan said, "I was a little surprised by the warmth of Joe's introduction. I'm not sure how many of you know this, but there's a certain coolness between Joe and me tonight, and maybe that's my fault."

Reagan explained: "When I arrived at the reception here I said, 'Joe, it's been a long, hard day in the Oval Office, but now it's Miller time.' The audience applauded that crack."

The president, however, was not through.

"That's when he showed me his Mondale button," Reagan added.

And, before getting down to the business of his after-dinner speech, there was this jab at the Democrats: "Seriously, though, where are those Democratic candidates with their grandiose solutions now that we need them?"

Strength For Today

The inner voice and the outer voice.

Mount Sinai and the Ten Commandments represent the outer voice. They are instructions addressed to one's mind and conscience from the outside. The Ten Commandments do not set forth the whole requirement of morality, but only the minimum. The commandments represent a foundation upon which a beautiful superstructure of love and good works can be built.

The inner voice is something

The America's Cup race, for example. Now there was a problem that could have been solved with more money and a lot of wind."

different. This is something within a person's nature which tells him whether he is doing right.

God's final, ultimate communication with us is not through commandments, as important as they are. God speaks his greatest message to the heart through the inner voice. We can hear this inner voice if we listen for it, unless we have dulled our moral sensibilities to such a point that we cannot experience an urge to be better.

The president's aides have insisted time after time that Reagan will not answer questions posed to him when he is posing for photographers with a visiting foreign dignitary.

Sometimes the edict is adhered to, and the president simply smiles and says "no questions" as the questions are shouted out. Sometimes he grabs the bait and comes back with a one-liner or two.

Recently, the visitor was Foreign Minister Xueqian Wu of China.

With reporters and photographers gathered in the Rose Garden, the two men left the Oval Office and walked along a colonnade and stood front and center for the picture-taking session.

What about the Soviets and the arms talks, the president was asked.

"No questions," he called back. Why form a campaign committee if you're not running for re-election, he was asked.

"No questions," he said again. What about a replacement for Secretary Watt, he was asked.

Finally, he replied "There seem to be questions. There will be no answers."

McFarlane Sees No 'Pulpit' In New Adviser Role

WASHINGTON (AP) — Robert C. McFarlane is taking over the White House national security adviser's job made famous by Henry A. Kissinger, but McFarlane says he won't use it as a pulpit for promoting his own views with President Reagan.

"My role now is not to be an advocate, but to be a coordinator," McFarlane said Monday after he was appointed to succeed William P. Clark, who is leaving to head the Interior Department. "I intend to do that,

and I don't expect any difficulty."

The appointment of McFarlane, a retired Marine lieutenant colonel and foreign policy professional who worked in the Nixon and Ford administrations, dis-appointed hard-liners and left in doubt the plans of U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, who was passed over for the national security adviser's post.

In a statement from her office, Mrs. Kirkpatrick said, "I am committed to remaining at the United Nations through the 30th session of the General Assembly." Its session probably will end around Christmas, and she reportedly is eager to return to Washington.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick, offering no words of congratulations to McFarlane, said "the president has the right to appoint anyone to any position in the administration, and, as always, I support the president's decision."

Reagan said she will remain at the United Nations. "As far as I know she's happy," the president said.

In his new job, McFarlane is responsible for keeping the president abreast of foreign policy developments and summarizing for him frequently conflicting options and advice from the State Department, Pentagon and Central Intelligence Agency and other national security offices.

While saying he has worked for years with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and CIA Director William Casey, McFarlane said, "surely there are disagreements on a given issue. My role now is not to be an advocate but to be a coordinator."

At a briefing for reporters, McFarlane said, "I think more than many of you allow, Cabinet government has been the name of the game in national security affairs. I think that if the point of your question is do I intend to seek to promote a personal point of view or in any other way to establish some confrontational status with the secretary of state, of course not."

Howard Phillips, head of the Conservative Caucus, called McFarlane's appointment "a nail in the coffin of conservative hopes for influence in the Reagan administration."

"The key thing is that conservatives are out of the loop in terms of having any significant influence on policy," said Phillips. "This means the State Department has virtually unchallenged control on Reagan administration foreign policy."

Richard Viguerie, publisher of the Conservative Digest, said that Clark, a longtime Reagan confidant, had been "a balance, a counterpressure against George Shultz and moderates at the State Department. Now there will be no counterpressure."

"It's a definite loss for the conservative viewpoint to have a Kissinger protege advising the president numerous times a day," Viguerie added.

During Kissinger's tenure at the White House, he picked McFarlane as his military assistant.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, offered a different assessment: "All in all, I think it is a very good appointment. He will do a very good job of serving the national security interests of the country."

McFarlane, 46, has been serving as Reagan's Middle East special envoy and, at the same time, deputy assistant for national security affairs under Clark.

Reagan said McFarlane had "won my utmost confidence and respect ..."

"He shares my view about the need for a strong America, an effective, bipartisan foreign policy based on peace through strength," the president said.

"He enjoys the respect and affection of my other principal advisers in the national security community. And working closely with me, he'll provide the leadership and spirit of teamwork that we value in this administration."

Growing Pains Felt By North Carolina Mutual

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Co., the nation's largest black-owned insurer, is planning to diversify, modernize and seek more white policyholders as it enters its 86th year, officials say.

William Kennedy III, the seventh president of the firm since it opened in 1898, said N.C. Mutual plans to expand into real-estate brokerage and universal life insurance, in which part of the premium becomes a high-yielding investments that can be tapped by the policyholder.

The company also plans a $4 million computer system changeover this month and hopes to draw more middle-class and white policyholders through direct mail and other mass-marketing techniques, Kennedy said.

However, with blacks comprising more than 99 percent of the firm's policyholders, he said the increase in white clients would probably be "relatively small" for several years.

"We feel we have to change with the times," said Kennedy, 61. "There is no other industry where the changes are so great as insurance."

N.C. Mutual, established by Durham barber John Merrick, has grown to service nearly 1 million policyholders in 13 states and ranks among the top 10 percent of the country's insurance firms in assets and policies.

In 1982, the company reported income of more than $80.5 million, a 2.2 percent increase over 1981, and more than $200 million in assets. It also had $7 billion of insurance in force, up from $6.6 billion in 1981 and from $1.4 billion in 1972.

Part of its success lies in its minority ownership, Kennedy said. N.C. Mutual often receives part of group insurance policies from large corporations.

Fraud Trial Opens Today

ATLANTA (AP) — Testimony is expected to last a week in the non-jury trial of a former federal agent charged with embezzling food stamps during an undercover investigation.

The trial for William Cross was scheduled to begin Monday afternoon, but was delayed until today. Judge J. Owen Forrester rescheduled the trial because of a previously scheduled hearing that began Monday morning extended into the afternoon.

Cross, a former agent with the Department of Agriculture's inspector general's office, was fired after he was accused of embezzlement.

Cross was indicted Aug. 4 by a federal grand jury in Atlanta. He is accused of embezzling more than $3,400 during an undercover food stamp fraud investigation in South Carolina.

Cross, who is named in 16 counts, coordinated a sting operation that began in March 1981 and was conducted by local, state and federal authorities.

Cross, 52, gathered evidence that resulted in state and federal food stamp charges against 32 people in March 1982.

But the federal indictments later were dismissed after the U.S. attorney's office in Columbia began investigating Cross. State charges were handled through plea bargains, guilty pleas and trials.

have to be a sound company first before we can do any good for anyone," he said.

"Our critics don't understand insurance companies. Compared to others, we're more liberal and take more risks. We have financed small firms others would not touch."

Kennedy admits that N.C. Mutual has encountered criticism for not more aggressively lending money to black entrepreneurs.

For years, Federal regulations determined the way we did business with savings customers.

As a result, on most certificates, $1,000 deposits would earn the same rate as $10,000 deposits.

Often, short-term plans were permitted higher rates than longer term investments.

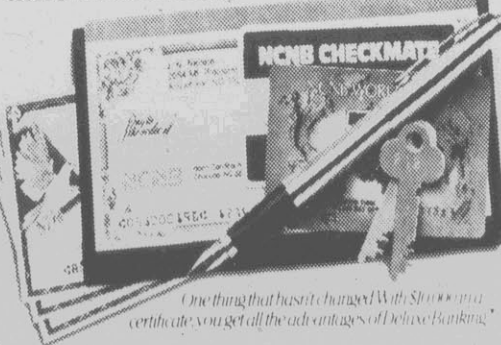

Finally, the regulators, not the savers, fixed the timeframes for deposits. None of this made much sense to us.

But it's all over now. After October 1, the Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee (DIDC) has said that we can set certificates up any way we like. And we're making it very simple:

1. The more money you invest, the higher your rate.

2. The longer you leave your money with us, the higher your rate.

3. You pick the maturity, from 7 days to 36 months or longer, or any time in between.

On maturities of 31 days or less, you have to invest $2,500 or more, but on maturities over 32 days, you can start with as little as $1,000.

In short, the system is flexible enough to pay you a good rate on your money for the time that works best for you.

We compound interest daily, so you earn the maximum yield.

What's more, if you have some emergency and need your money early, we've reduced the penalty to the minimum the law allows.

The chart shows you the basic idea. Now, the specific rates will change from time to time, but the idea won't change: your bucks can now build up a lot faster with us.

So, whether you have money to invest or a CD maturing with us or someplace else, ask for the details, along with our current rates.

Now you don't have to leave the neighborhood for the latest way to put more muscle in your money.

Midway Ride Mishap Fatal

By PHILIP BRASHER
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS, AP — A car that broke loose on a popular spinning ride at the state fair dangled for five or six revolutions with "people screaming to stop it" before falling 50 feet into a crowd, killing one man and causing seven other people to be hospitalized.

The car on "The Enterprise" ride came loose shortly after 8 p.m. Monday, said Bob Halford, assistant general manager of the State Fair of Texas, where a similar fatal accident occurred in 1979.

Burguers watched in horror as the disabled car carrying three people slowly disengaged from the spinning ride and then crashed to the ground between another ride and a root beer stand.

Two of the three passengers survived, but were seriously hurt. The other injuries were among people on the ground.

The car "went around five or six times before it came loose. You could hear it clicking and see it coming loose. You could hear the people screaming to stop it. They could definitely see it coming off. It barely missed a refreshment booth. It was about an 11 o'clock angle," said T.J. Allred, 22, of Dallas.

"It landed upside down in a crowd of people," he added.

"It hit and shattered," said Kim Poling, 19, of Columbus, Ohio.

Mary Brown, 19, of Dallas, was working at a cotton candy stand on the midway of the State Fair of Texas when she heard "a loud bang and then some popping."

"I guess it was the thing cracking," she said. "I looked around and saw a car flying through the air. I just jumped out of the booth and started running. I only saw two guys on the ground, one of them was in pretty bad shape," Ms. Brown said.

Four Still Face Same Charges

HARRISON, Ark., AP — A federal judge acquitted one woman charged with harboring fugitive tax protester Gordon Kahl, but four others, including the woman's husband, still face the same charge.

Final arguments were scheduled today in the trial of Ed Udey and three other people on the harboring charge. Udey's wife Irene was acquitted Monday for lack of evidence.

Kahl, 63, a member of the tax protest group Posse Comitatus, died June 3 in a shootout with authorities seeking him in the killings of two U.S. marshals in North Dakota. Kahl died at the Smithville home of Leonard and Norma Ginter, both accused of harboring him. The other defendant is Arthur Russell of Mountain Home, Ark.

The question is whether or not PAC money being funneled into congressional campaigns is undermining representative democracy and disenfranchising the individual," Martin said.

Police Seeking New Officers

Greenville Police Chief Ted Holmes said today that the department has implemented a new recruiting program in an effort to hire 15 new officers.

Holmes said the recruiting program will reach into many of the state's universities and community colleges in an effort to fill vacancies created by past resignations and an increase in personnel authorized by the City Council in the 1983-1984 budget.

Officer Nelson Staton will visit university and community college campuses Oct. 24-Oct. 28 to conduct interviews and answer questions that applicants might have, the chief said.

Information about the department and the city of Greenville has been sent to several schools and the Employment Security Commission in each county has also been advised of the vacancies, according to Holmes. The deadline for applications is Nov. 4.

Holmes said the new officers will be hired so they may begin a basic training school in January.

Additional information may be had by contacting Staton at the police department or the city's personnel department at P.O. Box 1905 or telephone 752-4137.

Carriers To Check Elderly

A new service will be made available by local letter carriers for the elderly and homebound persons on postal routes, the president of the Greenville branch of the National Association of Letter Carriers has announced.

"Carrier Alert," a recently organized national program, requires letter carriers to identify the elderly and homebound patrons on their routes and monitor their mailboxes for accumulations of mail or other signs of distress according to Ronald C. Buck, president of NALC Branch 1729.

If there appears to be a problem, Buck said, carriers will notify the Pitt County Council on Aging.

"We encourage participation in the program by older citizens and the homebound who would like to feel more secure and to feel that someone really cares," Buck said. "Call your local post office or the Pitt County Council on Aging for more information and to register for the program."

British Plan Use Polygraph In Trying Snare Spies

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Britain's security agencies plan to introduce U.S.-style lie-detector tests in an effort to weed out Soviet bloc agents in sensitive departments and halt a string of embarrassing spy scandals.

The British have doubts about the polygraphs' accuracy, but Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's administration does not want to antagonize U.S. intelligence chiefs who suspect the Soviets have penetrated Britain's KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — Vice President George Bush scheduled a meeting today with Michael Manley, the former Jamaican prime minister whose leftist government backed Cuba.

Bush's three-day visit to Jamaica is considered a boost for Prime Minister Edward Seaga, whose Jamaica Labor Party has been trailing Manley's party in recent polls.

Seaga, elected in 1980, has been one of President Reagan's staunchest foreign friends and his government

Helms Talks 'Role Model'

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., who is fighting a proposed national holiday honoring civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., continued to call for further hearings on the issue as a U.S. Senate vote draws near.

"A proposition to set up a role model for young people to follow in perpetuity without a hearing is not proper," Helms told the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters on Monday. "If we're going to have a national holiday, let's have one for Thomas Jefferson first."

Helms, who has filed suit seeking FBI information he says will show King was an "action-oriented Marxist," said retired FBI officials agree the material should be released.

The tapes and transcripts from wiretaps have been sealed under a court order since 1977 and are not scheduled to be made public until the year 2027.

Both a hearing on Helms' suit and a vote on a Helms motion to delay the holiday bill were scheduled for today. The House approved the measure 338-90 and a final Senate vote is scheduled for Wednesday if Helms fails to have the bill sent to the Judiciary Committee for more hearings.

Helms also blasted newspaper editors.

"They just can't find anything good to say about a conservative and to tell you the truth I can't find much good to say about them," he said.

Helms, a former Raleigh television executive, said broadcasters play a vital role in society because of their "ability to get the hard truth to the people."

increase of about 100 students in the city schools.

Approval on a second reading basis is required before the policy chapter becomes official.

Two budget amendments were given approval, both in the current expense category. Budget amendment No. 5 confirms the board's earlier approval to transfer $7,000 from the school fund balance to the budget for athletic transportation. Budget amendment No. 6, representing an increase of $31,246, represents the final adjustment to the payroll funds. "We know now what the salary ratings are," Blinson stated. "We have assigned the lowest level salaries to current expense funds, and the highest level to state funds, and have converted four personnel from half to full time."

Approval was also given to adding Capitol Life Insurance Co. of Virginia Beach, Va. to the list of firms authorized to provide tax-sheltered annuity programs to school personnel.

A resolution of gratitude and appreciation to the Pitt County Commissioners for their support of the proposed one-half cent local sales tax was adopted. The resolution notes that passage of the proposed tax would substantially aid city and county schools.

Blinson reported that a recent state compilation shows Greenville is among the top 10 percent in the low rate of dropouts in state school systems. Greenville's rate for the 1982-83 school year was 5.2 percent, compared to the overall state rate of 6.7 percent. Within the state's school systems, the dropout rate varied from as low as 4.2 percent for Clay County and Forsyth County school systems to a high of 11.2 percent for the Durham city system.

Forgot To Send Him To Prison

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A former Teamsters union business agent who was convicted of trying to influence a witness will finally begin serving a four-year prison term on Oct. 31 after the FBI discovered that the government had forgotten to order him to prison eight years ago.

A federal judge on Monday ordered Frank Martinez to begin serving the term.

security establishment, government officials said.

Britain's eight civil service unions, representing 520,000 white-collar government employees, Monday launched a campaign to block the use of the polygraph.

They charged the lie detectors, which monitor signs of stress such as heartbeat rates, would eventually be used in all government departments.

The unions claimed in a pamphlet titled "The Case Against the Polygraph" that lie detectors are easy to beat and "could become the spy's ticket to a civil service career."

Likening the lie-detector tests to "tossing a coin" to determine a subject's guilt or innocence, the Society of Civil and Public Servants said the polygraph screening "will make a mockery of security."

However, Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative government is determined to tighten up security and track down suspect officials in sensitive positions.

A team of senior British security officers has just returned from the United States, where they trained in polygraph techniques under

The FBI said information allegedly supplied by Harper was relayed to the KGB, the Soviet Union's intelligence service.

Harper appeared before U.S. Magistrate Owen Woodruff and said, "I have no intention to hire a lawyer. My intention is to cooperate with authorities to expedite the proceedings."

The balding suspect was handcuffed while in court. Woodruff ordered that Harper be held without bail. Further court proceedings were scheduled for Wednesday with a preliminary hearing set for Oct. 27.

The FBI said some of the information was available to him through his now-dead wife, Ruby Louise Schuler, who had worked for Systems Control Inc., a defense contractor in Palo Alto. The agency said she had access to classified documents.

She had quit the company in August 1982 because of illness, and she died June 22, 1983.

Harper, a power supply consultant at Solelectron Corp., never had any security clearance. The FBI said its agents recovered some government documents when they arrested him at his Mountain View apartment on the San Francisco Peninsula.

A spokeswoman for Britain's intelligence agencies.

The security officers were sent to America at the urging of U.S. intelligence agencies alarmed at Britain's failure to spot Soviet agents like Geoffrey Prime.

The former Royal Air Force officer operated undetected as a Kremlin spy for 14 years, including several years at the top secret Government Communications Headquarters at Cheltenham in southwest England.

Prime was jailed for 35 years last November after his spying activities were uncovered when police arrested him on charges of sexually assaulting young girls.

U.S. intelligence sources described Prime's activities at Cheltenham, where Soviet radio and satellite traffic is intercepted, as "the most damaging Soviet penetration of Western Security since World War II."

British officials acknowledge that Prime avoided detection despite at least six screenings.

The sources said that Prime admitted during interrogation that he would not have sought an assignment at Cheltenham if the British had used polygraph screening.

The Society of Civil and Public Servants, second largest of the civil service unions, says the polygraph wrongly clears one in four guilty people and points the finger at half the innocent people examined.

It said people with something to hide can beat the polygraph by using distractions when they're asked key questions, like curling their toes, biting their tongues, pressing hidden thumb tacks into their flesh — or even thinking of erotic experiences.

Campbell Christie, the society's deputy general secretary, said: "We fully support the need for effective security procedures in the civil service, but the introduction of polygraph screening will make a mockery of security."

"Many loyal and valuable civil servants will have their careers blighted by a test of trustworthiness that is little better than tossing a coin to determine guilt or innocence."

Counting Noses

'All The Time'

BERNARDS TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — One mother of quintuplets, Jennifer Joyce, has been given advice from Peggy Jo Kienast, another mother of quint.

Mrs. Joyce was told to plan on "counting noses all the time."

"You learn a lot of patience," says Mrs. Kienast, the mother of five 13-year-olds who says the two mothers talked by telephone recently.

The Joyce's three boys and two girls were born Aug. 18 six to eight weeks prematurely.

"She didn't know what to expect," said Mrs. Kienast in a telephone interview from her home in this Somerset County community.

"With five babies there's always going to be one who's doing something you don't want it to — you can't keep everything in apple-pie order all the time, like you would if you had one," Mrs. Kienast said. "You just work things out — you're counting noses all the time."

CUSTOMER UPDATE

choices & changes

What do the new access charges mean to you?

Earlier this year, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) ruled that all telephone customers must begin paying a separate monthly charge for access lines. The charges are to be known as interstate access charges and are to become effective January 1, 1984.

To comply with the ruling, we have filed proposed interstate access charges with the FCC. The proposal calls for these monthly interstate access charges: $2.00 for residential customers and $6.00 for business customers, per access line.

This customer update explains the reasons for the FCC's decision.

What are access lines?

Access lines are the lines and related facilities which connect your telephones with the telephone company's switching equipment. Our switching equipment actually sends your calls where you want them to go—to another telephone in your local calling area or to a long distance service.

In other words, access lines give you the ability to make local and long distance calls.

How are access lines now paid for?

You now pay a monthly rate for basic local service which pays part of the costs of access lines. Part of the remaining cost is paid for with a portion of the money the telephone company receives from interstate long distance calls.

How does this process work?

All the money from interstate long distance calls is pooled. Then, the money is divided among the participating telephone companies. The amount is based on how much a company has invested to provide long distance service. And a company's investment depends generally on how much its customers use long distance. In other words, the more customers of a particular company use long distance, the more that company generally receives from the pool to help pay for access lines.

As a result, heavy long distance users pay the greatest share of access line costs.

How will this process change?

The FCC has said to do away with this method of pooling and dividing interstate long distance money. According to the FCC, a new method is needed because heavy users of interstate long distance are paying far more than their fair share of access line costs. The FCC has ruled that all customers should pay their own access line costs.

How will access lines be paid for in the future?

The FCC has said that beginning January 1, 1984, rates will be set up this way:

—You will continue paying a monthly rate for local service. Part of that rate will pay part of the costs of connecting you to the telephone company's switching equipment.

—You will begin paying a separate monthly charge to help pay for the remaining costs of access lines. This will be known as an interstate access charge. This is not a rate increase for telephone companies. Instead, the access charge replaces the interstate long distance support. The FCC thinks that as a result, rates for interstate long distance calls will go down.

How much will access charges be?

To ease the impact on customers, the FCC has said that access charges will be phased in over a six-year period—January 1, 1984 to December 31, 1989. During this six-year period, both customers and long distance companies will pay access charges. The customer access charge will gradually increase each year, while access charges to long distance companies will decrease. At the end of the six-year period, all customers will be sharing equally in the costs of access lines.

The FCC has said that during the transition period residential customers will pay a flat charge of $2.00 per line per month in 1984; $3.00 per line per month in 1985; and $4.00 per line per month in 1986. Business subscribers will pay $6.00 per line per month for the first three years of the transition.

Soviet General Says Missile Counter-Measures Awaiting

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — Any swift-striking nuclear missiles installed by NATO in Europe will be matched by rockets that can hit the United States "in 10 minutes," a Soviet general is quoted as saying.

"Of course we will take counter-measures that directly threaten U.S. territory," Col. Gen. Nicolae Chervov was quoted as saying in an interview with the West German magazine Stern.

"We would build up our intercontinental system and balance out the short flying time of the Pershing 2," Chervov reportedly said. "If the Americans station weapons in Europe that can reach our land in 10 minutes, then we will put up ones that likewise can reach the U.S. in 10 minutes."

"You'll find out soon enough" what kind of missiles they would be, Chervov, a member of the Soviet general staff, was quoted as saying. "In any case, they're good rockets."

The Pershing 2 is one of two kinds of U.S.-built nuclear missiles NATO plans to start installing in Western Europe this winter if negotiations fail to produce agreements to reduce the Soviet and U.S. arsenals of medium-range nuclear weapons.

NATO says it needs the force of 572 missiles to counter the Soviet arsenal of SS-20s missiles.

"The Pershing 2 reaches its target in eight to 10 minutes," Chervov told Stern. "Our SS-20 needs about 16 minutes, because it has a steeper trajectory. In order to even out this disadvantage, we will, in coordination with our allies, bring a corresponding rocket system into position."

Stern quoted Leonid Zamyatin, a senior Kremlin spokesman, as saying that in two years of arms talks in Geneva, "We haven't moved forward a millimeter."

The Pershing 2 is "a completely new weapon system, against which we must protect ourselves with completely new means," Zamyatin was quoted as saying.

Chervov was asked if the Soviet plan to match the swift-striking Pershings meant putting SS-20s in Cuba. "Absolutely not," he replied. "Cuba is not what we mean."

The magazine asked Chervov if the Soviets had any nuclear weapons outside its own territory.

"Overall, wherever our divisions are based outside the Soviet Union, the missile units of those divisions are equipped with tactical nuclear weapons with a range of some 100 kilometers (62 miles)," Chervov replied. "But just as clearly, I tell you that outside our state territory there are no Soviet intermediate-range or strategic nuclear weapons," the general said in the interview, scheduled to be published in Thursday's issue.

If NATO installs the Pershing 2 and cruise missiles, the Soviets "will deploy as many SS-20s in the European part of the Soviet Union as necessary for our own security and that of our allies," Chervov was quoted as saying.

President Reagan, asked to comment about Chervov's remarks, said, "I don't exactly take a Soviet general's word as being authoritative on anything."

The largest contingent of the new NATO missiles — 204 — would be put in West Germany, Britain, Belgium, Italy and the Netherlands will host the rest.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko on Monday said Reagan's recent proposal to cut back on the planned NATO deployment if the Soviets dismantled a corresponding number of their missiles in Eastern Europe "a propaganda trick and nothing else."

Gromyko met with West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Vienna over the weekend. Genscher said Gromyko said nothing to indicate a change in the Soviet stand at the Geneva talks.

The West German government has firmly backed the plan to host the NATO missiles. But West Germans in cities nationwide protested the plan on Monday, the fifth day of such outcries. On Monday, it was women's turn to rally, and they banged pots and pans, ripped apart toy missiles and snarled traffic to get out their message.

No violence was reported. Police arrested 30 protesters in Munster.

'Air Was On Fire' Say Gas Explosion Survivors

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL, Associated Press Writer
SOUTH CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Joe Slater was stocking chili sauce on the second shelf in aisle three when the explosion sent a ball of flame across the ceiling. "It seemed like the air around me was on fire," Slater said.

Tommy Parsons looked around for a way to escape and saw that the back wall was no longer there. He ran through unscathed.

One minute, Delma Hudson was standing by her cash register. The next, someone was putting out a fire in her hair.

They were three of the lucky ones Monday when a natural gas explosion ripped apart the inside of the Foodland supermarket and sent the roof and walls crashing.

Seventeen people were injured and five remained hospitalized today, all in satisfactory condition.

A gas line about 40 feet from the supermarket was accidentally ruptured about noon Monday by a road construction crew and was leaking when the explosion occurred, according to Columbia Gas of West Virginia. The gas was shut off afterward, the utility said.

Glenn Hudson, no relation to Delma, was at work in his sign shop next door when he heard the explosion at 2 p.m. "It knocked over everything in the office," he said. "I rushed out the door, saw the cinder blocks flying everywhere, cars were crushed. The building was caved in completely flat."

He said he tried to run to the Foodland "but the flame was coming out of the ground." He went back and called for help.

Slater and Parsons, 21-year-old stock clerks at the Foodland, and Glenn Hudson had smelled the gas for a couple of hours.

"The Columbia Gas crew was out there," said Parsons. "The owner asked the guy if he should close the store and send everyone home. The guy said, 'No, as long as it was in open air it shouldn't cause any trouble.' It wasn't an hour later when it exploded."

Ed Esposito of the Charleston mayor's office said officials planned to ask the manager, who was injured, about that report.

Hudson said a backloader, a piece of heavy equipment being used by the road crew, snagged a four-inch gas pipe and not long afterward, his shop began filling with gas. His employees opened all the doors.

Delma Hudson usually works in the Foodland office but was at a checkout counter on Monday. She hadn't smelled the gas.

As she told the story hours later, her hands repeatedly went to the back of her head, to the singed gray curls. "It doesn't look bad, Delma; really, it's fine," said her friend.

Miss Hudson, a woman in her 50s, had worked at the Foodland market since it opened in 1969, she guessed.

When the explosion came, she said, "All I was thinking about was getting out." She was barely out the door when a young man rushed up and slapped at her hair. "He just saw it was on fire and put it out. I didn't even know it was burning," she said.

Slater said he was putting chili sauce on the second shelf when the explosion knocked him down.

"I put my hands up over my head, curled up in a ball, looked up and seen the flame, like a big ball of fire, and the whole ceiling fell out."

"While I was laying there, a big ball of flame was coming from the back of the store and rolled towards the front, all the way across the store. I laid there for five seconds; it seemed like the air around me was on fire."

By all accounts, the force of the blast created a vacuum that snuffed out the flame in the air. Slater said he saw that his exit toward the front was blocked, so he ran to the back and followed a woman running down the fourth aisle.

"She got about halfway down the aisle and fell," Slater said. "She sort of panicked and started screaming. I picked her up and told her to 'call down, it's going to be all right, we'll get out.' They did."

Parsons was in the milk cooler. "I ran out the cooler door and the whole back wall was gone — it was just laying over and the ceiling was almost touching the floor. I ran out," he said.

The wonder of it all, said Parsons: "I didn't even get dirty."

Foot Care for the Elderly

Often readers write to ask how the feet should be cared for in the elderly, especially those who have arteriosclerosis.

When the blood vessels are normal and have no calcium plaques in them, they are elastic and can carry the blood pumped into them by the heart.

A large artery, the aorta, leads from the heart and carries the blood into smaller and smaller arteries and finally to capillaries that are distributed to all parts of the body. The tips of the feet are supplied by these small blood vessels.

It is for this reason that infections of the feet in the elderly and in people with arteriosclerosis are dangerous. For if a cut, a bruise, or an infection of the foot occurs and sufficient oxygen and blood is not carried to the area, severe complications can result.

The care of the feet becomes a most important need for everybody, but especially for people with circulatory problems, diabetes, marked obesity and those with chronic diseases.

The feet must be kept in a constant state of cleanliness by washing them with a mild soap and then thoroughly drying them with soft towels. The spaces in between the toes are too often neglected and are inadequately dried and this might open areas for bacteria or germs to set up housekeeping.

Tight garters must not be worn because they tend to further diminish the blood circulation. Tight supporting hose should be used only at a doctor's suggestion, for they too can impair the blood circulation.

Special preventive care includes avoiding splinters, picked up when walking barefoot. For these, too, can become infected.

Fungus infection and athlete's foot (yes, they do occur in the elderly who are no longer active in any sports) can open the pathway for bacterial infections of the feet. These fungus infections now respond remarkably well to anti-fungal medications.

Tobacco is an important factor. It further narrows the blood vessels in the feet. All tobacco should be avoided in people who have any ulceration of the feet or vascular problems.

Toenails should be cut straight across. Whenever possible the cutting of the toenails should be done by someone else to be sure that there is no injury to the skin by the scissors.

Replacing The Encyclopedia

By KATHY HORAK

Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Some things never change, which simplifies life for encyclopedia publishers. Most things do, however, which keeps hundreds of encyclopedia writers, editors, researchers and analysts employed.

But for how long? Some library scientists predict that multi-volume reference books will go the way of clay tablets and papyrus as computers take over in the Age of Information.

"Many libraries already are geared to the electronic age," said F.W. Lancaster, professor of library science at the University of Illinois.

"There will certainly be a day, I believe, when publishers will no longer publish encyclopedias and libraries will be museums of what was published in the past," Lancaster said, admitting, "That's not a popular thesis."

Based on a study for the National Science Foundation on how soon electronic data systems might replace the printed word, Lancaster concluded the shift would occur in Western societies by the year 2000, mainly because "in printed form, encyclopedias can't keep up."

But publishers of the nation's six major multi-volume encyclopedias still try.

Entries in Academic American, Colliers, Encyclopedia Americana, Funk & Wagnalls, New Encyclopedia Britannica and World Book are constantly updated on in-house computer files. Revisions are published at least every 10 years — a cycle deliberately coinciding with the U.S. census.

Funk & Wagnalls, for example, has undergone 20 complete revisions since it first appeared in 1912. Company president Jim Stoltzfus said entries were completely rewritten every decade "because we must accommodate all the new census information, which hits about 80 percent of the (27) volumes."

Who decides what's in Funk & Wagnalls? A 100-member editorial staff and some 1,200 contributing editors, along with you, me and the Census Bureau.

"We'd include a topic that was a one-time sensational news item but which has progressed to the point where it has a constant presence in news and discussions. Instead of simply a news item, it's a political reality," said Leon Bram, the encyclopedia's vice president and editor in chief.

Bram explained with a new entry in the latest edition: world energy supply — "actually, Energy Supply, World."

The Arab oil embargo, the search for petroleum in remote Alaskan and Siberian fields and industrial nations' reaction to changing supplies were sufficient "to consolidate this as a topic itself," Bram said.

Among other new entries, Stoltzfus cited sports medicine, international terrorism and "so-called controversial lifestyle entries" like sex education, venereal disease and homosexuality.

"Perhaps the biggest change is in the number of places in the world that one must add and subtract as population figures change," Bram said. "The 1980 census caused us to add over 400 new inhabited places."

Funk & Wagnalls keeps all its basic source material in computers because that form is easier to consolidate and edit. Lancaster insisted it was simply common sense to handle all reference material that way.

He noted that Academic American and Encyclopedia Britannica already had their volumes in computer form for access by consumers with home computers, who pay a small fee for each entry they use.

"I certainly can conceive of electronic encyclopedias through videodiscs," Lancaster said. "Eventually they could have moving pictures and sound, so instead of describing how an airplane flies they could have a whole model of a plane. A child could actually manipulate it, so it becomes more like a videogame."

But Dr. Robert Greer, dean of the graduate school of Library and Information Management at the University of Southern California, disagreed.

"Obviously (printed encyclopedias) are not the investment they were years ago, but that doesn't mean they're less valuable," he said. "They can be even more valuable (than electronic data systems) because one of the problems with computers is people get too much information and they don't have time to deal with it all. The systems don't discriminate for them."

Dr. Robert Hayes, dean of UCLA's graduate school of Library and Information Science, suggested what might be encyclopedias' ultimate saving grace: "Some people just like books."

lectured a genteel Smithsonian audience on the literary merit of Geoffrey Chaucer's lewd "Miller's Tale."

Despite the obscenities, or maybe because of them, Peter G. Beidler — 1983's national professor of the year — quickly had his listeners in the palm of his hand.

"The Miller's Tale," if it were a movie, would be rated R or X depending on what camera angle is used," he told them. "If you're embarrassed by my telling you this story, I can only ask you to imagine how I must feel. My mother and mother-in-law are both in the audience."

Beidler, an English professor at Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa., interrupted a sabbatical at the University of Canterbury in England to deliver the Smithsonian lecture earlier this month and accept a $5,000 award from Education Secretary Terrell Bell.

He won the teaching award in July from the Council for Advancement and Support of Education, a group of administrators and officials from 2,400 colleges and universities, over 114 other nominees.

CASE goes back to basics in picking winners for its 3-year-old award. Research and publication, crucial for advancement and prestige at many universities, take a back seat here to the teacher-student relationship.

Beidler, renominated after losing out in 1982, fit the bill.

"Pete's supreme gift to his students is his life," Patti Saunders, a lawyer and former Lehigh student, told the judges in a letter accompanying the nomination.

"By the example of Peter Beidler, each of us learned how much positive influence one sincere and dedicated individual can have on another. We will not forget," wrote Jeff Lobach, another lawyer and former student.

Beidler, 43, graduated from Earlham College in Indiana and received his doctorate from Lehigh, a 6,000-student school on a Bethlehem hillside. He has taught there for 15 years.

He asks his students to call him Pete, and bought his first and only three-piece suit for the Smithsonian lecture. He's more likely quiz students before each class than to give a final exam, and says discussion improves immensely "because they're not taking notes on what Pete Beidler thinks."

"I get restless if I'm not learning something new," Beidler said at his rapid clip. "I just fall apart as a teacher. It's better for me and the students if I keep pushing the outer limits."

In his quest to avoid boredom, this Chaucer expert has taught:

—Self-Reliance in a Technological Society, in which he and his students formed a corporation, got a bank loan, bought and renovated a run-down house, sold it, repaid the loan and divided the profits — all the while reading Thoreau, Emerson and others.

—Writing Fiction for Redbook, in which he arranged to have Redbook editors show students around the magazine and individually critique story submissions. "None of the stories got accepted, including mine," Beidler said. "But the students learned a good bit if only from getting a real rejection slip."

—A Close-Up of Arizona's Hopi Indians, in which students read about the tribe and spent their spring vacations on the reservation observing the culture and interviewing Hopis. Resulting student reports were published in the tribal newspaper.

"I have always felt that I was happier when I was in touch with what I call the real world," said Beidler. "I've found ways to involve students in the real world so I don't feel I'm enclosing myself in an ivory tower."

Beidler applauds the emergence of education as a political issue in the 1984 presidential campaign.

"Which party comes out with the winning solution. I don't care. They're talking in the right direction," he said. "Merit pay is a great idea."

He is spending this year writing on Chaucer, the 14th century English poet whose masterpiece was "The Canterbury Tales," a series of stories told on a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Thomas a Becket. "The Miller's Tale" is the story of a woman who makes fools of three men — her elderly husband, a young lover and an amorous cleric.

But the professor of the year has not always wanted to teach. He took a year off after earning his doctorate to be a carpenter.

"I just needed to get away from all that scholarship and all those words," he said. "But I found that I missed students."

Beidler took another unpaid year off to live on a Hopi reservation, where he wrote a novel about the tribe called "Peninsula in the Sky."

"It wasn't published, and it never will be," he said with characteristic directness.

But the novel paid off anyway. Beidler, who teaches on madness, misfits and other literary topics besides Chaucer, says his mistakes taught him enough about creative writing to offer a course in that, too.

Beidler ventured into college administration last year as acting vice president for student affairs at Lehigh. But he says that's out of his system for good.

"The best job at a university is teaching," he said. "I never thought I would discover that it really is the nicest profession in the world."

Ride At State Fair Closely Inspected

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A ride at the North Carolina State Fair similar to one in which a Texas man was killed and two others seriously injured is inspected daily and has performed flawlessly, officials say.

A car flew off a ride called "The Enterprise" at the Texas State Fair in Dallas on Monday and landed 50 feet away. Texas officials had not determined the accident's cause late Monday.

The North Carolina fair in Raleigh has a version of "The Enterprise," said Ben Braunstein, marketing and sales official for James E. Strates Shows. The Orlando, Fla., carnival company supplies rides, sideshows and other fair entertainment.

"Your (state) inspectors are marvelous, and they've been checking our rides carefully each morning," said Braunstein.

Strates won't close the computer-controlled Enterprise at the North Carolina fair unless a problem is spotted, said carnival owner James E. Strates.

"The problem is that there several types of Enterprises made by several different companies, and we don't know whether ours is just like theirs," he said. "We've been trying to get through to the Texas fair, but so far we haven't been able."

Braunstein said North Carolina's Enterprise consists of individual cars that run rapidly in a circle. When they reach a certain speed, the center of the ride rises up and revolves "like a pinwheel," he said.

The ride was manufactured in Europe and "is the best," added Strates.

The accident could have been caused by a computer malfunction, a mechanical error or human error, he said.

Packers Survive Shootout With Redskins

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — It was nothing less than the wildest shootout of the year — and it ended with the game's most accurate marksman misfiring.

Washington's Mark Moseley, who had already kicked four field goals, was poised for a 39-yarder, almost routine for him. But he was wide to the right as time ran out and a 20-yard chip shot by Jan Stenerud with 54 seconds to play stood up as the winning edge in the Green Bay Packers' 48-47 victory Monday night.

"It's the first time Mark's missed in a situation like that," said Redskins' quarterback Joe Theismann, who threw two touchdown passes to Joe Washington. "He's won a lot of games for us in that situation. He's the best kicker in the league and I'm sure that's the last one he'll ever miss like that."

"He has made so many clutch kicks I guess the percentages finally caught up to him," Stenerud said of Moseley, last year's Most Valuable Player in the National Football League.

It was the highest scoring game in the league this season, surpassing Green Bay's 41-38 overtime victory over Houston in the season opener.

"You never expect to see 95 points in a game and it is always impossible to explain," said Washington Coach Joe Gibbs. "The Pack was just super tonight. They were great playmakers and they made a big night for themselves."

The game almost belonged from start to finish to the quarterbacks.

Green Bay's Lynn Dickey completed 22 of 30 passes for 387 yards and three touchdowns — 36 and 9 yards to tight end Paul Coffman and 31 yards to fullback Mike Meade.

Theismann hit 27 of 39 attempts for 398 yards and had scoring tosses of 6 and 5 yards to Washington.

In all, the two teams amassed 1,025 net yards in total offense, just 108 short of the NFL record of 1,133 set in 1950 by the Los Angeles Rams and the now-defunct New York Yankees.

"It was the wildest game I've ever played in," Dickey said. "Everything you wanted to see or hear just about happened."

The lead changed hands seven times, five in the final quarter.

"It seemed like who had the ball last would win the game," said Packers' fullback Gerry Ellis.

Ellis, who rushed for 41 yards and caught four passes for 105, came up with the big play that set up Stenerud's game-winning kick — a 56-yard catch and run to the Washington 8-yard line.

"The ball just shot through the gap," Dickey said of the pass to Ellis on a third-and-10. "I got just enough on it that Gerry caught it."

"At that point we were pretty desperate. We were behind and I had nothing to lose."

Neither did Theismann — except the game.

He nearly pulled it out, completing four consecutive passes as he moved Washington from its 27 to the Green Bay 22 with three seconds left before Moseley failed.

"I cheered like mad when he missed," said Bart Starr, Green Bay's usually unflappable coach.

Mike Douglass' 22-yard run with Joe Washington's fumble 67 seconds into the game opened the scoring, but by the end of the first quarter it was 10-10 with Moseley and Stenerud each kicking a field goal and tight end Clint Didier recovering John Riggins' 1-yard fumble in the end zone for the Redskins.

Coffman's scoring catches offset the first of Riggins' 1-yard TD runs and Moseley's second field goal to put Green Bay on top 24-20 at the half.

The Redskins held a 33-31 lead after three quarters, Moseley's final two field goals and Washington's 6-yard catch overshadowing Ellis' 24-yard run, the first touchdown scored on the ground against the Skins since their 31-30 season-opening loss to Dallas.

Fifteen seconds into the fourth quarter, Gary Lewis scored his first career touchdown on a 2-yard sweep, but Riggins countered with his second TD and Washington led 40-38.

Then Dickey and Theismann traded off their final scoring passes of the night before Stenerud settled matters.

The Redskins, their nine-game winning streak on the road halted two short of the NFL record and their five-game winning streak against the Packers ended as well, fell to 5-2, two games behind unbeaten Dallas in the National Conference East.

Green Bay, 4-3, trails first-place Minnesota by a game in the NFC's Central Division.

Asked whether this game could be the turning point in an erratic season, Dickey shrugged and replied: "It was one game, one night. We have to find out next Sunday."

For Joe Washington, it was one game he'd just as soon have missed. "It is not fun until you win," he said. "Because we came up on the short end of the stick, I see no fun in it at all."

Leaders Hold Poll Slots

By The Associated Press

For the second straight time, voting for the nation's best in college football resulted in the same 20 teams as the previous week.

The top five spots in The Associated Press Top 20 were identical to last week, led by overwhelming leader Nebraska, but losses by Ohio State, Arizona and Alabama caused considerable shuffling after that. Those three teams fell to 17th, 19th and 20th, respectively.

Nebraska, a 34-13 winner over Missouri, received 52 of 58 first-place votes and 1,154 of a possible 1,160 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters in the weekly poll. The other six first-place ballots went to Texas, which received 1,107 points following a 31-3 rout of Arkansas.

Last week, with all 60 voters participating, Nebraska led Texas 55-5 in first-place votes and 1,195-1,144 in points.

North Carolina, West Virginia and Auburn held onto the 3-4-5 spots. The Tar Heels defeated North Carolina State 42-14 and received 997 points. West Virginia blanked Virginia Tech 13-0 for 978 points and Auburn, which beat Georgia Tech 31-13, received 888.

Ohio State slipped from sixth after a 17-13 loss to Illinois, which jumped from 19th to 11th. Arizona, ninth a week ago, lost 19-10 to unranked Oregon and Alabama, No. 11 last week, is now 20th after a 41-34 loss to Tennessee.

Florida, which was idle, received 861 points in going from seventh to sixth. Georgia went from eighth to seventh with 795 points by downing Vanderbilt 20-13.

Miami of Florida climbed from 10th to eighth with 722 points by whipping Mississippi State 31-7. Southern Methodist was idle but jumped from 12th to ninth with 657 points and Michigan rose from 13th to 10th with 625 points following a 35-0 whipping of Northwest-ern.

The Second Ten consists of Illinois, Iowa, Arizona State, Washington, Maryland, Oklahoma, Ohio State, Brigham Young, Arizona and Alabama.

Last week, it was Alabama, SMU, Michigan, Iowa, Oklahoma, Maryland, Washington, Arizona State, Illinois and BYU.

Cribbs' Smooth Running Keeps Buffalo Ahead Of NFL Rivals

By The Associated Press

Things are running very smoothly for the Buffalo Bills right now because Joe Cribbs is running very smoothly for them.

But a few months from now, when the National Football League's 64th season draws to a close and the United States Football League's second season approaches, things may be quite different.

Then it will be time for Buffalo's hardest workhorse to become Birmingham's biggest Stallion.

Cribbs is a big reason why the Bills, expected by many to be little more than an afterthought in the American Conference East, lead the division one game shy of halftime this season.

"He's just outstanding, couldn't be playing any better," says Kay Stephenson, the Bills' rookie head coach. "I don't know how a young man could line up week in, week out, and play any better than Joe Cribbs plays."

It must hurt him, then, to imagine what life might be like next year without Cribbs, the AFC's third-leading runner and sixth-leading receiver.

"I don't think about it. All I think about is our next game," insists Stephenson. But his quarterback, Joe Ferguson, is at least slightly more candid.

"Sure, I think about it, but as a player there's nothing in the world I can do about it," says Ferguson. "I let other people take care of that."

The other people are the Bills' lawyers. Buffalo doesn't want him to get away. But throwing more money at him won't work.

Last July Cribbs became one of a handful of NFL players to go the "futures" route — signing with the new league while still owing service to the old one.

The Bills said they'd match any offer by the Stallions. In fact, that's the basis of a lawsuit. Somewhere in Cribbs' contract is a clause giving the team the "right of first refusal," meaning if Cribbs should seek employment with another team when this contract expires, the Bills can keep him by equalling any offer.

But Cribbs' lawyer, Gerald Tockman, says that refers only to Cribbs' dealings with other NFL teams, not with the USFL. He points out that when the Bills' contract was signed, the USFL didn't even exist. Cribbs and the Stallions have sued the Bills, insisting the clause is "invalid, void, lapsed, terminated and unenforceable."

Tockman also has filed a motion to dismiss the Bills' suit, saying his — filed three days earlier — should be allowed to run its course. The judge in the case, he said, has set next Monday as a tentative date to hear the motion.

Interestingly, there has been no acrimony in the lockerroom between the "lame-duck" Cribbs and his teammates. Winning can do that.

And the rest of the Bills see that Cribbs isn't merely playing into the string, saving himself for his new team. Incentive clauses can do that.

Key Terp Pass, Missed Chances Doom Deacons

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — While Wake Forest football coach Al Groh was disappointed with Saturday's 36-33 loss to No. 15 Maryland, he gave credit for the victory where it was due — to Boomer Esiason's clutch pass and missed Demon Deacon scoring opportunities.

Esiason's 30-yard touchdown to Sean Sullivan with 1:15 left ended an otherwise good performance by Wake Forest. Groh said at his weekly news conference Monday.

"It was just a super pass and a super catch," said Groh, adding that Esiason, who completed 19 of 28 passes for 293 yards, threw only about three that could be called inaccurate.

But he said Wake Forest's inability to finish drives hurt as well.

"I think in retrospect, looking back on the game as a whole, driving three times in the first quarter without scoring hurt us in the long run," Groh said. "But in those three drives, I think our guys found out that they could do some pretty good things against a quality team."

Groh said it was important

The better he does for Buffalo this year, the more earning power his Birmingham contract will give him next year.

For now, next year is just that — a long way away. "Right now my only desire is to contribute to the Bills in as many ways as I can," he says. "The lawsuits and all that. I just leave it all to my lawyer."

Tockman says Cribbs' second greatest asset — behind his obvious talent on the field — is his sense of humor.

"When all of this started," Tockman said, "he thought it ironic that we'd been trying to get certain contract terms out of Buffalo, that the Bills kept saying no, and that when he got everything he wanted from the Stallions, the Bills said they'd match it. He thinks it's all kind of funny."

Dooley Leads Golf Tourney

BUIES CREEK (AP) — East Carolina's David Dooley fired a 5-under-par 67 on Monday to grab a 1-stroke lead after the first-round of the Hargrove B. Davis Intercollegiate Golf Tournament at the Keith Hills Country Club.

Guilford shot a 292 to take a 1-stroke lead over Old Dominion in the team title chase. East Carolina is third at 294 while North Carolina State and North Carolina at Charlotte are tied for fourth at 299.

There are 18 teams taking part in the three-day tournament at the 6,735-yard, par 72 course.

Old Dominion's Alan Schulte was second with a 68 followed by teammate Rick Schuller with 69 and David Smallwood of Guilford with a 71.

Four players are tied for fifth at even-par 72. They are Keith King of Guilford, Davis Love and Mark Ohrman of North Carolina and Art Roberson of N.C. State.

Spartanburg Tops Pirates

SPARTANBURG, S.C. — The University of South Carolina at Spartanburg defeated East Carolina 3-2 in overtime Monday in college soccer action.

USC-S improved its record to 12-4, while the Pirates slid to 2-10 on the season.

ECU will travel to North Carolina Wesleyan Thursday.

The largest winning margin in the Super Bowl was made by Green Bay in the initial game in 1967. The Packers beat the Kansas City Chiefs by 25 points, 35-10.

Jordan Wins Grid Contest

J.B. Jordan of 1913 E. 8th Street, Greenville, is the winner of last week's Daily Reflector Football Contest.

Second place went to Margie Mix Johnson of 503-B Battle St., Greenville, who also missed only three, but was further off the point total with a guess of 78.

Three other entrants also missed but three games, but were further off in their point guesses.

The next weekly contest appears in today's paper.

O's Celebrate Win

BALTIMORE AP — The last parade was in 1979 — and those members of the newly crowned World Champion Baltimore Orioles who attended that event say they much preferred this year's stick-and-ball celebration.

The parade Monday afternoon through downtown Baltimore — an event featuring an orange and black sea of pennants, balloons and 100,000 boisterous fans — celebrated the Orioles' first championship since 1955.

In 1955 an emotional crowd turned out to console the Orioles after the Pittsburgh Pirates bounced back from a 3-1 deficit to sweep the last three games and the World Series.

In 1979, when the team came back, and there were a lot of people who came out who had a lot of tears in their eyes because we just said catcher Rick Dempsey, the Most Valuable Player of this year's series. This year we got tears in our eyes because we won.

Fifteen players from the 1979 team were on this year's title team, including Dempsey, the fiery backstop who set a record with five extra base hits in the series. Dempsey signed autographs and shook hands the entire length of the parade, a feat of endurance which never had a peer.

With the crowd chanting, MVP MVP, Dempsey stepped from a cherry red 1983 convertible and said simply, "We're under the spotlight, but we're not under the spotlight."

Right away fans packed the streets along the eight-block parade route and the plaza surrounding City Hall, cheering and waving pennants, down at the players as they cruised past in a parade of orange and black convertibles. "Something Magic Happened," read one banner. "George, You Brought Third Base," read another, referring to New York Yankees' catcher George Steinbrenner.

A proclamation by Gov. Harry Hughes, declaring the day as "Oriole Day" in Maryland, was read as the parade started and joined Mayor William Donald Schaefer and members of ceremonies Brooks Robinson, the Orioles Hall of Fame first baseman, at City Hall.

The celebration began Sunday night at Memorial Stadium, where some 30,000 fans greeted the Orioles on their return from Philadelphia after the fifth game win.

This town caught on in 1979 and it's been waiting for a World Series ever since, said celebrant Chip Dahle, who was accompanied by his wife. "We just wanted to be a part of it all. The fans here are wonderful."

City police spokesman Dennis Hill agreed with Dahle. "It's certainly a happy day, and the police are happy too," Hill said. "It certainly hasn't been quiet, but we've had no arrests and no real problems."

He added that they were only four arrests stemming from the two-day celebration.

And although the veteran players on the Orioles may have enjoyed it more, it was second-year shortstop Cal Ripken Jr. who expressed the feelings of the team to the crowd.

"I'd like to thank everyone of you," said Ripken, standing on the steps of City Hall. "This is a perfect ending to a perfect year."

Court Tackles TV Controls

NEW YORK AP — A Supreme Court decision to back the dispute over who controls the televising of college football games has thrown a wrench into the plans of two major networks.

After the Supreme Court's announced intention Monday, ABC spokesman Donn Bernstein said the network was "in a total hold pattern now. We hope for an early reading. It would be helpful that we get it by the spring to clear the way for sales."

And CBS spokesman Jay Rosenstein said, "Our 1984 football telecasts depend on the decision."

The TV rights showdown stemmed from a fight between the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the College Football Association, a group of 10 of the best-known college football powerhouses. The NCAA claimed the right to contract television rights on their own, but subsequently retreated when the NCAA granted them a bigger voice in its television policy.

CFA Executive Director Charles Nemas said Monday, "We believe the Supreme Court will eventually conclude that the NCAA should not maintain the exclusive control of college football television."

The CFA television committee will continue to develop an attractive marketing concept that could be available for 1984, Nemas said.

The Supreme Court justices agreed to review lower court rulings that the NCAA's 30-year control violates federal antitrust law. The court's decision is not expected until next year and therefore will not affect contracts, worth $74.2 million, for the current football season.

The NCAA's television contracts over the next three years are worth more than $200 million, indicating the court's decision could have a billion-dollar impact over the next decade.

A federal trial judge and the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals had ruled previously that centralized control over the selling of television rights to college football games violates the Sherman Act, a major antitrust law.

Those rulings came in a lawsuit filed by the University of Oklahoma and the University of Georgia Athletic Association, whose lawyers say the two schools could make a lot more money making their own television deals.

Most immediately, the lower court rulings threaten the NCAA's $207 million worth of contracts with ABC, CBS and Turner Broadcasting Systems for the next three football seasons.

NCAA lawyers told the justices that many other televised sports arrangements are jeopardized by the rulings. "The list of endangered arrangements could go on and on," their appeal said.

"Professional football, baseball, basketball and hockey have a statutory antitrust exemption for telecasting agreements but this applies only if certain conditions are satisfied, and it does not pertain to other professional sports or any amateur sports," the appeal said.

Kelso, 5-Time Horse Of Year Takes Final Lap Around Track

CHESAPEAKE CITY, Md. AP — There are those who say that Kelso, five times Horse of the Year, died with his last ovation still ringing in his ears.

"Kelly," as he was affectionally known by his owner, Mrs. Allaire C. duPont, had not raced since 1966, but they brought the 26-year-old gelding — ancient as horses go — back for one last hurrah last Saturday at Belmont Park in New York. He was taken by van from his retirement home to parade up the stretch before the Jockey Club Gold Cup, an event he had won five times.

It had been so long since he last had worn a saddle that there was concern he would fight it. But, old campaigner that he was, he seemed to remember what it was for.

He and Forego, a 13-year-old gelding, led the Cup field to the starting gate to a rousing ovation. The applause continued as the two lingered on the track and stopped at the winner's circle to smell some flowers.

After being returned home to Woodstock Farm, and a little more than 24 hours after what turned out to be a farewell salute, Kelso was dead.

"Symptoms about 4 o'clock, and he died about 10 minutes to seven," said Jeffra Moore, wife of the farm trainer, Eugene Moore.

"We'll never know what killed him or what the effect was of his trip to New York," said Dr. Alan McCarthy, a veterinarian who had been caring for him. He said stress could cause colic, and added, "That had to be a stressful trip for him."

His appearance in New York was to spur donations to the Thoroughbred Retirement Fund, which seeks to find homes for retired horses.

Kelso was buried Monday near his dam, Maid Of Flight; the stallion Neartic and the dam Venomous.

A son of Your Host, Kelso won 39 of 63 career starts, finished second 12 times and third on two occasions. Kelso was a great-grandson of the immortal Man o' War and a grandson of Triple Crown winner Count Fleet.

As a 2-year-old in 1959, he won once and finished second twice. He won Horse of the Year honors five consecutive years, 1960-64. No other horse has won the honor more than three times. He retired after making one start in 1966 with earnings of $1,977,896.

Kelso won the Jockey Club Gold Cup in the same years he took Horse of the Year honors, when the classic was run at two miles. He set a Belmont Park record of 3:19.45 in 1962 and an American record of 3:19.1-5 at Aqueduct in 1964.

Carl Hanford trained Kelso during his brilliant career.

"I have never ridden a better horse," said Eddie Arcaro, who rode Kelso in all nine 1961 starts.

Since Kelso was a gelding, there were no survivors.

Aerial Duel Set Saturday

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Duke's football team, which has had little to boast about in this winless season except quarterback Ben Bennett, may face a throwing battle against No. 15 Maryland on Saturday, coach Steve Sloan says.

Sloan, at his weekly news conference Monday, noted that Terrapin quarterback Boomer Esiason might make it difficult to use ball control against Maryland.

"He's real big and strong ... and he has a great arm," Sloan said. "If anything, he occasionally throws it too hard. He has a rocket arm. He can run, maneuver (and) he is very dangerous scrambling and he makes big plays."

In addition to its 0-6 record, Duke has not beaten Maryland in more than a decade. But Sloan hoped Bennett could pull off the kind of heroics that nearly gave the Blue Devils a victory over Clemson last week.

Bennett, who completed 34 of 53 passes for 367 yards and a career-high four touchdowns passes in Duke's 38-31 loss to Clemson, had three second-half TD tosses to bring the Blue Devils within seven points. But a fourth-down pass inside the Clemson 10 with a minute left was deflected as the Tigers held on to win.

"I admired the effort of our players," Sloan said. "We're never satisfied with a loss but there is something to be said for uncommon effort."

Sloan said he was pleased with the Blue Devils' offense, which racked up 508 yards to 514 for Clemson.

"Offensively, we played very well," Sloan said. "Some of the reasons were we were able to generate a rushing attack, we kept them off balance with our snap count (and) they were not able to rush the passer. If they do, you have problems because they have such a talented defensive front."

Orioles Won World Series With Finesse

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

The best team in baseball won the World Series.

The Baltimore Orioles didn't do it with mirrors, not with multi-million-dollar free agents, bombs or bombast. They did it with the finesse of a surgeon's scalpel.

Joe Altobelli, who stepped into a pressure cooker when he replaced Earl Weaver as manager, chomped placidly on a smelly cigar and outfoxed Paul Owens right out of his unwanted Philadelphia pilot's pantaloons.

While the Phillies, with their stable of certain but aging Hall of Famers, struggled to find a winning groove, the Orioles played poised, precision baseball with a team almost lacking in individual identity.

Their destruction of the late-surging National League champions was mercifully painless and quick.

Oriole pitchers didn't come in and blow down the Phillies' hitters — Mike Schmidt, Joe Morgan, Gary Matthews and Pete Rose — with blazing firepower. They mesmerized them with dizzying assortments of spins and speeds that sent them back to the dugout skaking their heads in bewilderment.

And always in the Orioles background was "the organization," with its farmyard which should serve as a textbook for all baseball franchises.

Until the very end, it was difficult to guess who the Most Valuable Player might be. Would it be young Mike Boddicker, the rookie right-hander with his foshball? Or second baseman Rich Dauer, who hit those two big doubles in the fourth game? Or big reliever Sammy Stewart, who kept stepping in to throttle Philadelphia threats? Or maybe the ace slugger, Eddie Murray, who snapped out of a miserable slump with two mighty last-game home runs?

No, it was Rick Dempsey, the rollicking catcher with the anemic .231 season's batting average, who sealed the election with his 371-foot home run Sunday, one of his five vital hits in the series for a batting average of .385.

"That's the nature of this team," Murray said graciously afterward. "When one part of the team lets down, somebody else picks it up. In this case, it was Dempsey and the lower part of the order."

That order consists of Dempsey, third baseman Todd Cruz and Dauer, lovingly tabbed "The Three Stooges" by teammate Ken Singleton.

Murray is perhaps the best switch-hitting player in baseball since Mickey Mantle, but the average public hardly knows he exists. His name doesn't conjure up visions of deed and drama as that of a Ruth, Mantle, DiMaggio, or, for that matter, a Reggie Jackson.

Murray, who batted .306 with 33 home runs and 111 runs batted in for the season, got only two hits in his first 16 at bats before Sunday's explosion. But Oriole fans didn't boo him. Schmidt hit 40 homers and knocked in 109 for the Phillies and it was his bat that carried the team into the playoffs. Yet when his bat cooled against the Orioles (one hit in 20 at bats), Philly fans turned on him atrociously. It was a sad commentary.

This is only one of the many contrasts in the two teams emerging in the series.

A national case was made of it when Rose was benched in Friday night's game. Rose himself, admittedly one of the game's durable giants and great competitors, was openly bitter, criticized the action and refused to face the press, which has always lionized him.

Singleton, one of the Orioles' best offensive performers, had to sit out the series because designated hitters weren't allowed under baseball's silly alternating system. He didn't emit a single whine. Neither did Dempsey when pulled for a pinch-hitter in another of the weekend games.

"He did right," said Dempsey, of Manager Altobelli.

While Philly players grumbled most of the year over Owens' scattershot platooning — many of the complaints apparently justified — Altobelli platooned liberally, swapping all three outfield positions.

"It's prolonging my career," said John Lowenstein.

The Orioles grow most of their talent down on the farm, make little use of the free agent market, astutely buy, sell and trade. Lowenstein was obtained on waivers for $20,000. Three of the series' stars — Dempsey, Scott McGregor and reliever Tippy Martinez — were gained in a 1976 trade with the Yankees. You no longer read of the guys the Yankees got.

The trade will forever be remembered as "George Steinbrenner's Folly."

Expect More Charges

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) —

The government was on the verge of completing its presentation to a grand jury in a case that already has led to guilty pleas by four present and former Kansas City Royals to cocaine-related charges and has become major league baseball's worst drug scandal.

Vida Blue, a Cy Young Award winner who pitched for the world champion Oakland A's in the 1970s, pleaded guilty Monday to a federal misdemeanor charge of possessing three grams of cocaine. Three of the pitcher's former Royals teammates pleaded guilty last week to a similar charge stemming from Blue was released by the Royals on Aug. 5.

U.S. Attorney Jim Marquez has said he expected a federal grand jury investigating cocaine traffic in suburban Johnson County, Kan., to return "many indictments." The investigation was not necessarily limited to baseball players, he said.

"We hope to get everything finished tomorrow (Tuesday)," Marquez said. "I can make no further comment."

Blue, 34, who won the American League Cy Young Award in 1971, spent more than two hours before the grand jury Monday after entering his plea. The grand jury later recessed for the day without returning indictments.

Outfielder Willie Wilson, the 1982 American League batting champion, first baseman Willie Aikens and outfielder Jerry Martin pleaded guilty last week to attempting to possess cocaine.

All four have been released on $5,000 unsecured bonds and face maximum penalties of one year in prison and $5,000 fines. Sentencing for all four is scheduled for Nov. 17.

The government said plea agreements with the players charged last week included stipulations that they would not be prosecuted further in the government's seven-month probe.

The plea agreement with Blue was sealed. Marquez said he asked that it be sealed "in the furtherance of justice and the investigation."

The first non-player charged in the investigation was Ben David Roselli, 32, of Overland Park, Kan., who pleaded guilty Monday to a charge of conspiracy to distribute cocaine. The charge is a felony that carries a maximum penalty of 15 years in prison and a $25,000 fine.

Roselli, a lawyer who once did research for the Kansas Court of Appeals, said he had very little contact with any baseball players. He described his involvement as

"doing a favor for a friend."

However, Marquez, when asked about Roselli's link with the Royals players, said Roselli was "a major target" of the investigation.

Blue, who was released by the Royals after his record fell to 0-5, was questioned closely by U.S. Magistrate J. Milton Sullivant before his plea was accepted.

At one point, Sullivant asked Blue: "Have you recently been under the care of a doctor or a psychiatrist or been hospitalized or treated for drug addiction?"

"Yes, I have," Blue answered.

Marquez said later that Blue's attorneys told him the former pitcher had been treated for drug abuse. Aikens' agent said last week that Aikens would be involved in a comprehensive guidance program during the off-season.

The Royals said Martin was informed before he was charged that his contract would not be renewed for 1984. Blue had a guaranteed contract through 1984 for a reported $600,000 a year, but Royals General Manager John Schuerholz said Monday he could not comment on whether the guilty plea would have any effect on the contract.

Breaking his silence on the situation, Royals owner Ewing Kauffman said Monday, "We are sorry and we do apologize to all the baseball fans of America, especially the youngsters, because we do not condone this."

Schuerholz said the Royals would wait for federal authorities to complete the case and then let baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's office decide "if any further action is called for."

Kuhn said last week that he would examine the evidence before considering any action.

Schuerholz said he thought drug abuse was "a problem throughout professional sports," although he said he saw positive things in the works to deal with it.

"The Players Association has agreed it is a problem that must be shared with them, as well, and has agreed to work with management to develop a meaningful drug program that can combat the drug problem we currently have and ultimately eliminate the problem and rid our business of the blemish that this brings to all of us," he said.

"Nobody in baseball can tell you in an honest conversation that it is not a big deal," Schuerholz said. "It is a big deal, and we do care. As an industry, we're not going to allow ourselves to be dragged through the mud."

Blue, who pitched for the Oakland A's in the early to mid-1970s and later for the San Francisco Giants, was traded to the Royals in March 1982.

Only two pitchers — Steve Carlton of Philadelphia and Jim Palmer of Baltimore — recorded more than Blue's 158 victories between 1973 and 1982. He was the Most Valuable Player in the American League the same year he won the Cy Young Award.

Four days after Blue was released by the Royals, Marquez disclosed that a number of Royals had been questioned in a continuing cocaine probe. He did not identify the players but inadvertently named Blue as a former player who had been questioned.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Amanda Meers said in court hearings last week that Wilson, Aikens and Martin were heard in FBI-wiretapped telephone conversations in June trying to make arrangements to buy cocaine. Wilson and Aikens each tried to purchase a quarter of an ounce, and Martin tried to buy a gram, she said.

Schuerholz Does Not Believe Drugs Caused K.C.'s Decline

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Is there a connection between the decline of the once-powerful Kansas City Royals and the admitted drug involvement of a few key players?

John Schuerholz, the team's beleaguered general manager, says he doesn't know for certain, but he doesn't think drugs had a big impact on the Royals' lackluster performance in 1983.

Just three years after winning the American League pennant, the Royals finished four games under .500 and 20 games out of first place this year in the American League West, a division they once dominated.

Outfielder Willie Wilson, who won the AL batting championship in 1982 with a .332 average, saw his average plummet 56 points to .276 last week. Wilson admitted in open court that he tried to purchase cocaine at the height of the season.

Pitcher Vida Blue, a former Cy Young Award winner, was released by a disgusted Schuerholz in August with an 0-5 record and an earned run average of 6.01. In open court Monday, Blue admitted to possessing three grams of cocaine a few weeks prior to spring training. He also indicated that in recent weeks he has undergone therapy.

The other two Royals who pleaded guilty to trying to buy cocaine in June were outfielder Jerry Martin, who was on the disabled list almost the entire year, and first baseman Willie Aikens, who was booed frequently for his clumsy, heavy-footed misplays at first base.

"I don't think we can go back and do an autopsy on 1983 and determine what level of drugs was in the system of this team," Schuerholz said Monday.

"I personally don't think the drugs had a big impact, when you measure all those other things. It may have had some. I'm not discounting it, and I'm not trying to push it under a rug. But how do you measure it?"

The Royals were beset by several injuries during a long, disastrous season that saw them finish 79-83 and be out of contention by mid-September for the first time since 1974. Dennis Leonard, their finest pitcher, went out in May with a knee injury.

"Dennis Leonard not being able to pitch for over half the season had a lot to do with where we finished," said Schuerholz, who engineered the deals that brought Blue and Martin from the San Francisco Giants and Aikens from the California Angels.

"Larry Gura's pitching slump did, too. Our very disappointing run production had a lot to do with where we finished," he said. "Our horrendous fielding, our team earned run average, had a lot to do with it. Whether any or all of those were impacted on by a drug problem, I don't know. I really don't know."

Schuerholz admitted a connection was possible.

"But I don't know that for a fact. I really don't. I don't know what part, if any, the performance of Vida Blue was affected by this. I don't know to what degree Willie Wilson's performance was affected... or Willie Aikens. I don't have the answer to that. They may not have been affected at all."

Ripkin, Murphy Are Honored

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Shortstop Cal Ripken Jr. of the world champion Baltimore Orioles and outfielder Dale Murphy of the Atlanta Braves were named players of the year Monday by The Sporting News.

Ripken, who batted .318 and had 27 homers to go with 101 runs-batted-in, was the only American League performer to play every inning of every game. Murphy batted .302 with 36 home runs and 121 RBI as the National League's top player.

LaMarr Hoyt, who fashioned a 24-10 record for the Chicago White Sox, was named by TSN the AL's top pitcher and John Denny, 19-6, of the Philadelphia Phillies the top hurler in the NL.

Catcher Carlton Fisk and designated hitter Greg Luzinski also represent Chicago on an AL team of all-stars selected by the weekly publication's editors. Third baseman Mike Schmidt was the only other Philadelphia player on the publication's team in the NL.

Also in the AL lineup as selected by The Sporting News were Eddie Murray, Baltimore, first base; Lou Whitaker, Detroit Tigers, second base; Wade Boggs, Boston Red Sox, third base; Ron Guidry, New York Yankees,

'China Rose' Esthetically Good '60 Minutes' Wins 7 Emmys In Competition

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Robert Halmi has the reputation of a man who can, and will, make a TV camera almost anywhere for local color.

He's the one who persuaded Richard Chamberlain and Rod Steiger to fly to Canada's icy Frobenier Bay to shoot scenes for "Cook and Peary," upcoming on CBS. No film crew, Halmi says, has ever worked closer to the North Pole than that.

Halmi's "China Rose," tonight on CBS, was made entirely on location in Hong Kong and Macao. As one of that show's leading characters says, "It's not like Minneapolis at all, is it?"

"China Rose" is an esthetically pleasing film, flawed in some respects but — thanks to the Hungarian-born filmmaker — rich in the sights and sounds of the exotic East.

The secret, says Halmi, whose syndicated "Peking Encounter" was the first American film to be shot entirely in the People's Republic of China, is to let the place and the people speak for themselves.

"We're shooting a scene in Aberdeen harbor, and it's just filled with these little junkies," he says, explaining the technique. "No way you can direct anything there."

George C. Scott and Ali MacGraw share top billing in "China Rose," and they're saddled, unhappily, with a weak script that has Miss MacGraw's character, Rose Arrow, often saying stupid things.

Once, for instance, she tells Burton Allen, a bigshot businessman from the Midwest, played by Scott, "You know, for someone in the grain business, you ought to get more involved with rice."

Or, later, "Don't young lady me... Deal with me as a person, not a commodity on the grain market."

Anyway, Allen is in China looking for his son, Danny, who disappeared there 16 years ago. He hires Rose, through the U.S. consulate in Canton, as his "guide," and the first people they contact are sure that Danny died in the Cultural Revolution.

Then, Professor Chen remembers Li Ling, Danny's friend who now lives in Hong Kong. Allen and Ms. Arrow cross over to Hong Kong to meet Miss Li, who tells them Danny died in Regent Hospital in 1968.

"I think she was lying about something," says Ms. Arrow. "I'm not sure what."

But Allen isn't sure about that, and when they find Danny's grave in a Buddhist cemetery, marked only by a small, black cross and an American flag set in stone, he prepares to return to the United States.

Then, over dinner that night, a blathering friend from Minneapolis, on tour of the Orient, says, "Burt, do you realize there's a street in Hong Kong where they sell nothing but jade? I can't stand it. Nothing but jade."

After that innocuous remark, Allen returns to his hotel and finds a note tucked under his pillow that convinces him he must continue to search for his son.

He rushes to the dock, with a stop in a dark alley, to catch Ms. Arrow before she returns to Canton.

Scott is good in the part, slow-moving and powerful. Miss MacGraw, roundly maligned last season as Natalie Jastrow in ABC's "The Winds of War," is OK.

The supporting cast includes Denis Lill as police Superintendent George, James Hong as Professor Chen and Tong Lan Hwa as Li Ling. David Snell plays Kornfeld, the consulate officer in Hong Kong who tells Ms. Arrow he knows nothing about Danny.

When he said he had been mugged and needed a place to stay until his father arrived the next day, Elliott invited the young man to stay at his East Side home and gave him $30 and clothes to wear.

The next morning, when Elliott was unable to reach his daughter, a student at Yale University, to confirm the friendship, he called John Jay Iselin, president of WNET-TV, whose daughter attends Harvard.

Elliott's story stunned the Iselin family. The impostor had called them the day before with the same story. They, too, had given him money and invited him to stay over. However, they grew suspicious and asked him to leave.

Officials said the unwitting hosts for the unidentified hoaxer included the dean of the Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism, Osborn Elliott.

On a recent Saturday morning, Elliott said, the young man called, identified himself as David Potier and claimed he was a friend of Elliott's daughter.

"Where are you staying," he asks, "just in case something comes up?"

"After 16 years, what's going to come up?" she replies.

"Drinks... dinner." So there is romance in "China Rose." But how about the leading players?

Rose Arrow: "Do you think we're going to have an affair?"

Allen: "Do you?"

Neil Diamond In Evacuation

SEATTLE, Wash. (AP) — Singer Neil Diamond was among the guests who had to evacuate their rooms when fire broke out on the top floor of the Four Seasons Olympic Hotel in downtown Seattle.

About 60 guests, including the 42-year-old Diamond and his party, were asked to leave their rooms and go down stairs to the hotel restaurant, officials said.

The fire started Monday morning in air conditioning filters in a storage room on the 12th floor and smoke spread throughout the building, according to fire officials. The blaze was put out by a sprinkler.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: I equals H.

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal U throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

The bidding:
South West North East
2 ♥ Pass 2 NT Pass
4 ♥ Pass 4 ♦ Pass
6 ♥ Pass Pass Pass
Opening lead: Queen of ♣.

Sometimes you have to dig a little to find the winning line of play. Consider this hand from a tournament in England.

South's first two bids showed a hand capable of taking ten tricks in hearts on its own. When North showed his concentration of values, South elected to gamble on slam.

West led the top of his club sequence, and declarer's first thought was that he had seen better dummies. It seemed as if he would have to rely on a defensive error for his slam — either someone would have to win the first spade, or else the defenders would have to let two rounds of spades go through.

Careful analysis, however, revealed another possibility. With extremely favorable distribution, declarer could execute a strip and end play.

Declarer won the first club and drew the missing trumps. Then he cashed the ace-king of diamonds before leading a spade. West started an echo with the seven to show an even number of spades, and East correctly held off. Declarer ruffed dummy's last diamond, cashed his remaining high club and led his last spade. East's goose was cooked.

Landmark Sale

Today is Alaska Day, marking the anniversary of the transfer of Alaska from Russia to the United States. Secretary of State William Seward negotiated the sale in 1867 for $7,200,000. Since then, Alaska has returned many billions of dollars in wealth to the U.S. In the 1970's, just building the pipeline to bring oil across that state cost more than 1,000 times as much as Alaska's original purchase price.

DO YOU KNOW — In what year did Alaska become a state?

MONDAY'S ANSWER — Congress has so far declared 9 federal holidays.

Sets Execution For 3 Killings

RUTHERFORDTON, N.C. (AP) — A Superior Court judge set an execution date of Jan. 13, 1984, for James W. Hutchins, who was given two death sentences for killing three law enforcement officers.

Judge William T. Grist of Charlotte set the date Monday after a stay of execution granted by one federal judge in October 1982 was dissolved by another in August.

A McDowell County jury recommended that Hutchins die in the state's gas chamber for the May 31, 1979 slayings of Rutherford County sheriff's deputies Roy Huskey and Owen Messersmith. They had responded to a disturbance complaint filed by Hutchins' 17-year-old daughter.

State Highway Patrolman R.L. "Pete" Peterson was killed later as he chased Hutchins.

Hutchins is imprisoned at Central Prison in Raleigh.

Wrong Man

LONDON (AP) — A man named two weeks ago by Afghan authorities as a British spy killed by government troops in Afghanistan is working as a warehouse clerk in London, according to the Sunday Times.

The Afghan Foreign Ministry has said it identified the man killed in July by his passport and a driver's license as Stuart Bodman, 30. It said he had posed as a reporter and was carrying codes, a video camera and devices for sending messages through U.S. satellites.

"I don't know how they got my name. The closest I've come to spies was when I caddied for (actor) Sean Connery at Kingston Max Hill Golf Club years ago," Stuart Bodman (30), told reporters who found him in a pub near London.

The Times said records at the London passport office indicated someone falsely applied for and received a passport under the name Stuart Bodman last November, and he apparently was the man killed in Afghanistan.

Dismay Over Army Medal

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The awarding of the U.S. Army's Distinguished Service Medal to Maj. Gen. W.E. Ingram, retiring adjutant general of the N.C. National Guard, caused some irritation in a legislative panel investigating Ingram.

Rep. Murray Pool, D-Sampson, who chaired a state House committee that found some evidence of misconduct but filed no formal charges, said he was surprised.

"I hope this doesn't mean that the Army condones what has been going on in the National Guard," Pool said. "A fellow who's under investigation by the Department of Army and they turn around with the other hand and give him the highest peacetime medal you can give him. It does make you wonder."

The House committee concluded that Ingram used Guard aircraft for personal flights, received a state pension while also collecting his $44,588 salary as adjutant general, played favorites with promotions and played golf during duty hours.

Col. Frank Fuller, N.C. National Guard chief of staff, said the investigation was complete and that the Secretary of the Army was aware of it.

Two Named To Advisory Panel

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt has appointed C.C. Cameron of Charlotte, chairman of North Carolina Citizens for Business and Industry, and the Rev. Nilous Avery of Asheville to the state Advisory Budget Commission.

Cameron is chairman of the board of First Union Corp., one of the largest financial institutions in the Southeast.

"He will bring to the Advisory Budget Commission a keen understanding of the budgetary process," Hunt said in a news release Monday.

Testifying On Organ Network

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The parents of a Laurinburg boy who is waiting for liver transplant surgery will testify before a U.S. Senate panel considering creating a national network to help distribute organs, Gov. Jim Hunt says.

"Medical advances are making organ transplant surgery an increasingly accepted practice," Hunt said Monday in a news release. "As this occurs, the need for a nationwide network to match organs with recipients is becoming urgent. We must have a national policy in this area."

Hunt said Rick and June Brooks, whose 8-month-old son, Josh, needs a liver transplant, will appear Thursday before the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources. Doctor have said Josh will die within three months without a transplant.

Josh was transferred Monday from a Laurinburg hospital to the Duke University Medical Center. Doctors said he's getting into advanced stages of liver failure, with a bloated abdomen and internal bleeding.

Meanwhile, Reagan administration health officials Monday spoke against a House bill to establish a federal center and computer network for organ transplants, saying the matter is best left to the private sector.

Dr. Edward N. Brandt Jr., assistant secretary for health in the Department of Health and Human Services, said

"the present voluntary system of organ procurement can be managed well by the private sector. Beyond providing advice and assistance, interference by the federal government is unnecessary."

Rep. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., author of the legislation, called this "a true knee-jerk reaction by the administration automatically opposing a federal role" in overseeing the transplant situation because of ideology.

The Senate committee also will explore the issues surrounding health insurance coverage for organ transplant surgery.

Seek To Repeal Beer Sale Law

SYLVA, N.C. (AP) — Leaders of a petition drive aimed at overturning beer sales in Sylva say a lack of prosecution for violations of alcohol control laws is behind their repeal bid.

Petitions will be circulated Tuesday requesting a referendum to overturn the Nov. 7, 1978, voter approval of legalized beer sales in Sylva.

The Rev. Dillard Moore, pastor of Moses Creek Baptist Church in Cullowhee and leader of the "dry" group, said Monday that police have charged store employees with selling beer to minors, but no convictions resulted.

Decision Is Awaited On Reinstating Of Lawyer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina State Bar Council this week is to consider reinstating the license of a former lawyer disbarred for forging court documents, with any decision expected to be controversial.

A three-member bar committee recommended in June that Art Vann III, 39, of Durham, be reinstated. That recommendation drew criticism from some lawyers.

"Anyone convicted of a felony involving falsification of court records should not be given a second chance to subvert the process," said Durham lawyer Patricia Wagner, who with three other lawyers wrote to the bar to oppose reinstatement.

However, Vann, who joined his father in his law practice in 1973, claims his misconduct stemmed from "an overwhelming desire to help people."

Vann's request for reinstatement came with petitions signed by more than 50 of Durham County's 425 lawyers and letters from legislators and judges asking that Vann be reinstated, or saying they had no objection to reinstatement.

Asked why he wants his law license back, Vann told the hearing committee: "I think primarily because I felt like at the time that I practiced law, that I always at all times attempted to do what I thought was right both for people and the courts. On the instances ... which caused my disbarment, I made some severe errors in judgment and those things were very, very wrong."

Vann's indiscretions came to light in September 1978 when a Durham police officer became suspicious about a driver who should have lost his license for drunken driving. An investigation showed Vann had altered the Breathalyzer reading in that court file and forged the judgment to let the client keep his driver's license.

Vann ultimately admitted tampering with 121 cases. In most cases, he said, he simply wrote out a decision a judge had authorized and signed for the judge instead of waiting for the clerk to do it. He said it was a way to save time.

However, Vann said there were about a dozen cases in which he made up judgments. He surrendered his law license in October 1978 and in February pleaded guilty to 11 of the 121 forgeries and was fined $3,000.

Two months later, he was indicted on four more felonies — forging a client's signature and passing the client's $21,000 check, embezzlement and practicing law without a license.

In September 1979, Vann pleaded no contest to the forgery charge. He told the bar hearing committee he didn't forge the signature, but pleaded no contest and accepted punishment.

He was sentenced to 1½ years in prison and served about five months before parole.

Crash Injured Lone Passenger

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP)

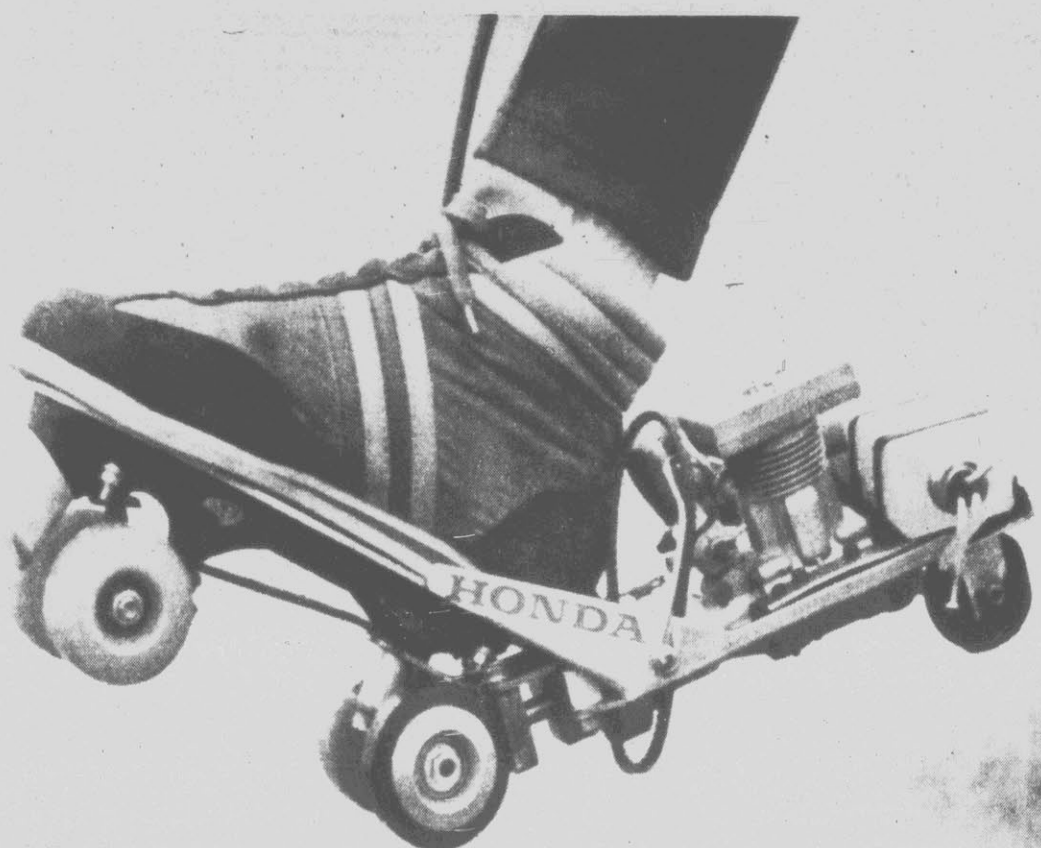

— A lone passenger in a single-engine plane was injured Monday when the aircraft developed engine problems and went down in some trees about 10 miles southeast of Greensboro.

Tom King, air traffic manager at the Greensboro Airport tower, said the Beechcraft Bonanza was registered to Leawon Johnson.

Officials said Johnson was in good condition at Moses Cone Hospital in Greensboro after suffering multiple injuries.

The plane was "just about wiped out," King said.

Officials said the pilot apparently tried to land in a field about noon, but the aircraft struck some trees.

VERY SUB-COMPACT — When it comes to fuel economy, here's transportation cheapskates might appreciate: gas-powered rollerskates appeared at an idea contest sponsored by a Japanese automaker for its employees at Suzuka City, Japan. There is no plan to market this very sub-compact model. (AP Laserphoto)
