Lebanese Druse Leader Assassinated By Gunman

By G.G. LABELLE
Associated Press Writer
BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) —
A gunman with a silencer-equipped pistol assassinated

the top legal authority in Lebanon's Druse community today, pumping several bullets into his head in the victim's west Beirut home, police sources said.

A French soldier was killed by a sniper in a separate shooting near the Green Line dividing Moslem west and Christian east Beirut, and Beirut airport remained closed following a Druse threat to resume heavy shelling unless Lebanon's

army cleared out.

The police sources said a preliminary investigation indicated the assassinated Druse official, Sheik Halim Takieddine, a moderate, may have known his assailant and that the sheik's maid was being questioned.

One police official said the maid admitted the man to the house in the Sanayea district of west Beirut
"because he was familiar to her. The assailant asked the maid to fix him some coffee, and when she returned to the living room a few minutes later, she found the sheik dead and the man gone."

Takieddine, 60, was the highest legal authority of the secretive Druse faith, an offshoot of Islam. He set the rules for such things as marriages, divorces and wills.

Takieddine was second to the spiritual leader of the Druse, Sheik Mohammed
Abu Shakra.

Takieddine was considered a political moderate and had always called for peaceful Moslem-Christian coexistence in this war-torn nation.

He had also asked Druse leaders to show more flexibility when negotiating with Christian President Amin Gemayel's government for an end to the country's almost nine years of civil warfare.

Gemayel was in Washington for meetings
today with President Reagan and other U.S. officials to discuss ways of removing foreign troops from his country.

The Progressive Socialist Party of leftist Druse leader Walid Jumblatt listed as its first demand "a final and permanent cease-fire" in the fighting between warring Lebanese factions. A cease-fire was declared Sept. 26, but it has been violated almost daily since, and an outbreak of heavy shelling Wednesday forced the airport and many schools to close.

The French soldier was killed when his patrol was fired on this morning by an unidentified gunman along the "green line" that divides Beirut into predominantly Christian and Moslem sectors.

Lt. Col. Philippe de Longeaux, a spokesman for the French peacekeeping force, said the patrol came under small arms fire as it drove through the Tayyouneh neighborhood on the southern edge of Beirut.

The patrol returned fire, but de Longeaux did not say whether the assailant was hit.

Anti-Sandinista Groups Ready To End Operations

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three anti-Sandinista groups told the United States they are prepared to end their military operations against Nicaragua if that nation takes "credible steps" toward democracy, a senior American official said today.

The official, reporting on talks conducted this morning in Panama City between the anti-Sandinista leaders and Richard Stone, President Reagan's special Central American envoy, said his report was intended to convey a message directly to Sandinista leaders in Managua.

The official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said "the anti-Sandinista groups are prepared to open negotiations with the Sandinista government."

They "are willing to suspend para-military activity in Nicaragua if the Sandinista government takes, specific, credible steps to implement the democratic promises they made to the OAS in 1979," he said.

Stone believes that opponents of the Nicaraguan government "will be prepared to end their military activities if a democratic electoral competition were part of a political solution to the conflict within Nicaragua," he added.

The source said Reagan had been informed of Stone's meetings in the Panamanian capital, and that he felt the proposals were "worth a try."

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Stone would be returning to Washington shortly and would meet with Reagan and Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

He said the Panama meetings were seen as "an opportunity for continuing the efforts to achieve a regional solution" to the conflicts in Central America.

In July 1979, Sandinista leaders offered assurances to the Organization of American States that they would promote a democratic evolution once in power. The promises were made shortly before the fall of the government of Anastasio Somoza.

The official pointed out that it was these promises that led the OAS to recognize the Sandinista group when it was still an exile group.

"Ambassador Stone feels that this presents the Sandinista government with an opportunity to begin negotiations in order to implement the democratic promises it has made to the OAS," the official said.

The official did not identify the three groups meeting separately with Stone, but he said they included that commanded by Eden Pastora, a former Sandinista official known as "Commander Zero."

He said that no date had been set for when the elections must be held, adding "we'd prefer them as early as possible." The Sandinistas, who took power in July, 1979, have said that they will hold elections in 1985.

Asked what would happen if the Sandinistas won such elections, he said "if they win, they win."

Meanwhile, the official said that there had been "no substantial reduction in the Cuban military presence, the training presence," in Nicaragua.

He said that the publicized departures of Cubans from that country involved teachers.

"We're not aware of any military reduction," he said.

INTERSECTION SAID UNSAFE

Whoever is concerned, wake up! On South Memorial Drive from West End to 264, a light is needed at the intersection of Fairlane Road and Memorial Drive. A curve and hill need to be graded. A telephone pole needs to be moved. A tree needs to be cut down. The speed limit needs to be reduced to 35 miles per hour. For years I've heard brakes squeal and seen wreck after wreck at this intersection. Time and again I've talked to all I know in Greenville. I've called Raleigh.
Nothing has been done. Two of my dear friends lost their lives here recently and I blame the state of North Carolina. You cannot replace a life. Please, someone, do something! Mrs. Lee Hannah

Hotline called Gerald England, division traffic engineer with the North Carolina Department of Transportation, the agency responsible for signals and sight distances and other controllable safety factors for this intersection of a state-maintained (Memorial Drive) and city-maintained (Fairlane Road) intersection. He said you already have contacted him personally and he has promised to meet with you and representatives of the Greenville Police Department and the N.C. Highway Patrol within the next week or two to discuss how to better protect the public at this intersection. He said he only Wednesday picked up law enforcement agency reports just completed on the accident which claimed the lives of your friends, Mrs. Harrell and Mrs. Long, Nov. 12.

You make the point, however, that you are not interested in discussing only this accident, which apparently involved excessive speed, but what could be done about this intersection which you feel has been insufficiently protected for many years.

England promised to let Hotline know the outcome of the meeting with you and to answer, after that meeting, each of the suggestions you made in your Hotline question.

Other persons interested in this issue should voice their concern in letters and phone calls to the N.C. Department of Transportation, Mrs.
Hannah suggests.

Talk Extending Shuttle's Flight

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston
(AP) — Columbia and its Spacelab research facility are working so well, and science experiments are so productive, that officials said today they are considering extending the space shuttle's nine-day mission by one day.

"Things are working well, and it would be a benefit to science to stay up an extra day," flight director Charles Lewis told reporters. "But it's just in the thinking stage and we probably won't make a decision until the weekend."

Harry Craft, NASA's Spacelab mission manager, said an extra day would enable the scientist-astronauts on board to gain extra medical, atmospheric, astronomy and materials processing results. He said preliminary planning is under way in case there is an extension.

The extra day would mean Columbia, Spacelab and the six astronauts would return to Earth on Dec. 1 at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif.

The astronauts early today created an artificial aurora, generating a brilliant display of lights by firing bursts of gases and electron beams into the darkness of space to learn more about the atmospheric veil that envelops the Earth.

And one of the space travelers, mission specialist Robert Parker, got a bit snappish after a stream of instructions and suggestions from the science control center on the ground.

Parker was administering a series of tests of the body's balance mechanism to payload specialist Ulf Merbold. From the control center here, Wubbo Ockels asked the spacemen to start a battery charge for a different experiment.

"You guys should recognize that there's two people up here trying to get all your stuff done," said Parker angrily. "I think you might be quiet until we get one or all of them done."

Parker earlier exclaimed,
"Beautiful," as he watched a series of blue flashes bounce thousands of miles along Earth's magnetic lines.
"Fantastic," exalted scientists on the ground.

Deep Freeze Felt By Upper Midwest

By DANA FIELDS
Associated Press Writer

A deep freeze sent the mercury plunging as low as 15 below zero in the upper Midwest today, while snow squalls pelted the Great Lakes region and made driving treacherous in southern Michigan.

In Wyoming, rescuers using dog teams took advantage of a respite from snowstorms Wednesday to launch three searches for a total seven people, including two in a light plane, who disappeared Monday following a brutal blizzard that blanketed the state with 2-feet of snow.

One of the searches ended with the rescue of four deer hunters whose truck had stuck in snow near Sundance.
But the hunt for a 43-year-old sheepherder reported missing near Rock Springs was called off with no trace found, and crews in the air and on the ground searched until dark without finding a plane that had left the Jackson airport in bad weather Monday afternoon.

Two tractor-trailer trucks and four cars piled up Wednesday night on U.S. 93 near Twin Falls, Idaho, in a wind-gripped snowstorm that dropped about 5 inches of snow. State police said there may have been one fatality.

On the northwest coast, a new Pacific-born storm dumped 9 inches of snow on Warm Springs in central Oregon and 6 inches in Burns on Wednesday before turning southward into California today and turning to rain.

Car batteries froze up from Montana to Colorado as temperatures Wednesday dropped as low as minus-30 at West Yellowstone, Mont., to a record 7 below zero in Denver.

Subzero weather also gripped Wyoming, where Cheyenne's minus-14 broke a record. Goodland, Kan., posted a record 1 below and it was 10 degrees below zero in the Black Hills of South Dakota and 6 below at Scottsbluff, Neb.

The nation's cold spot this morning was Havre, Mont., with 15 below, while the minus-3 reading at Missoula broke a 52-year-old record by 1 degree and the temperature fell to 1 below zero at Sioux Falls, S.D. Temperatures were expected to warm up through the day — but not by much, with highs in the 20s and 30s predicted for much of Colorado, Idaho, Montana, South Dakota and Minnesota in occasional flurries.

Three more inches of overnight snow in northern New York coated foot-high accumulations that piled up Wednesday in vicious snow squalls off the Great Lakes, and motorists were urged to use caution. Two major snowstorms beginning Nov.
21 — plus a smaller storm that petered out Tuesday after dropping no more than a foot of snow in the higher mountains — stranded thousands of travelers and left at least 78 people dead from the Rockies to the Great Lakes. Victims of this week's blizzard included 16 who collapsed with heart attacks while shoveling snow, 12 killed in traffic accidents, and nine who died of exposure or asphyxiation in stalled cars.

WEATHER

Clear tonight with in 20s. Sunny and morning with clouds moving in. High temperatures in low 50s.

Looking Ahead

Increasing cloudiness Saturday with chance of rain that night and again Sunday into Monday.
Highs in 60s Saturday and Monday, in the 50s on Sunday. Lows generally in 30s.

Girl Football Player 'Tough' On Gridiron

By LARRY STROUD
Batesville Guard
BATESVILLE, Ark. (AP) — To Holly Hambrick, football is the name of the game. While other girls tended their knitting this semester, Holly played football with the Chargers of the Batesville Pee-wee Football League.
Holly, 11, is the first girl to ever play football at Batesville School, at least as far as anyone can figure out, said Pee-wee Football League director Bill Hicks.
He admitted that he hadn't been too crazy about the idea at first, but noted that there was no rule that said girls couldn't play. But before signing her up for the program, he sought the advice of several school officials, including the superintendent.

"My reaction to it was that she might get hurt," said Hicks. "But she hasn't. She's just as tough as the boys. I'm pretty pleased at the way it's turned out."
"I'm mean," said Holly, laughing, when asked why she wanted to join the team. "I like to play football." She said she always enjoyed sandlot football "when they let me play" and that the step-to-pee-wee ball was automatic.
"I just play on the line — guard, tackle or end," she said. "I don't carry the ball... I mostly block."
Her favorite aspect of the game?
"I like to sack them."
Two or three other girls planned to go out for football with her, but they backed out, said Holly.
"They were afraid they would be the only ones," she said. "And, some of the parents wouldn't let them."
Holly, who weighs about 80 pounds and stands 4-foot-10, wants to be a veterinarian. She competes each season in a local softball league, takes piano lessons, helps her parents raise dogs and loves the trampoline, said her

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Is anybody out there still eating turkey?
Or am I the only one who is growing plumage on her chest and strutting when I'm called?
We've been eating off that bird for seven days now and we still have two legs, two thighs and 15 pounds of white meat to go.
A turkey is kinda like split pea soup. You only have to make it once in your life and from there on in you just keep adding water. Chili is like that too. You can feed a single person off it or you can feed 300. It all depends on how often you want to experience a piece of hamburger.

But back to turkey.
No one will ever convince me a turkey does not have life after Thanksgiving. It's his ultimate revenge for the indignity he suffers at the hands of cooks all over the world. First, we neuter them with surgery. Just when they look good minus a few pounds, we stuff them up with dressing until they burst. After hours in a hot oven, we poke at them with forks before we transfer them to a platter where they sit in a compromising position with their legs falling apart like divining rods.

That's why, immediately following dinner, they begin to grow.
If finishing off turkey leftovers doesn't pull your family together, nothing will.
"Mom, I have to fly back to L.A. I can't sit here and finish off your turkey. I have a job."
"No one leaves this house until the turkey is gone!"
"Mom, you know I'm a vegetarian and can't eat meat or poultry."

mother, Greta Hambrick, a third-grade teacher at West Elementary School.

What was her parents' reaction to her ambitions on the gridiron?

"I thought it was all right," responded her father, Rick, a lineman for Arkansas Power and Light Co. "We talked with her about it," said Mrs. Hambrick.

As for her daughter's football future, Mrs. Hambrick said, "We're just going to take it a year at a time. I explained to her that every year ... the boys are going to be getting bigger. Anytime it gets too rough she can quit."

The Chargers finished the season with a 22-0 victory over the Raiders and a 3-1 record.

Clark-Brown Vows Are Solemnized

Sharon Elaine Brown and Minister Abner Jerome Clark were united in holy matrimony Nov. 19 at the Wells Chapel Church of God in Christ here. The double ring ceremony was conducted by Dr. Robert L. Gorham of Pinetops at 2 p.m.
Parents of the couple are Ms. Hazel Ruth Brown of Baltimore, Md. and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Warren Clark of Greenville.

Music was provided by Ricky Battle of Robersonville, organist, and Tammy Boyd of Greenville, vocalist.

The bride was given in marriage by her mother and escorted by Minister Vernon Mines of Newport News, Va.
The bride wore a formal gown of white silk satin organza over peau de soie. It was fashioned with a high neckline, Queen Elizabeth style outlined with a floral pattern of silk Venise lace. The gown was designed by Christie Britt.

Bridesmaids were Christie Britt, Theresa Burney, Nina Payton, Annette Clark, Byreeta Burney, flower girl, all of Greenville, and Carolyn Burney of Ayden.

Groomsmen were Matthew Clark of Raleigh, Edwin Burney of Ayden, Mickey Fields of Farmville, Albert Burney, Walter C. Blount and Darryl Burney, all of Greenville.

A reception followed the ceremony and was held in Ayden.
The couple will live in Greenville.

"EAT!"
Throughout the years, we've had leftover turkey glazed, molded, fried, creamed and barbecued. I've put it on a bun, in a salad, a pie, soups, casseroles and stuffed it into pockets of bread.
I've arranged it on skewers, pounded it into fillets, stir-fried it, and married it to rice and broccoli.

I've broken my own rule and made it into dishes I can't even pronounce: tetrizzini, ramekin, cassoulet, florentine, kiev, piccata and strata.

I've made turkey chip cookies, filled in cracks with it and carved phone messages into it.

Usually, I throw away no leftover before its time, but with a turkey, do it within a week or you have a dependent living with you for the rest of your life!

Dear Abby

Listen Up, Mom Here's Chance To Be Great

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: The younger generation was asked to submit 10 tips on how to be a good kid, right? Well, I'm a 15-year-old girl who put together 10 tips on how to be a great mom. Here they are:

1. Don't yell at your kids in front of everyone. (Wait until you get home.)
2. Don't compare your kids to other siblings. ("Joe never did that at your age" and "Karen always got A's in math.")
3. If your teen-agers are at a party, roller rink or the movies, and the curfew is 11 p.m., don't run in screaming at 11:05 to tell them they're late.
4. Don't take things away for the wrong reason. Example: If your son didn't mow the lawn, don't take away his concert ticket; make him mow the lawn.
5. Don't make your kids wear clothes they hate. It's embarrassing to be different from their friends.
6. If you don't like your kids' friends, don't try to keep them apart. It will just make them more determined to get together.
7. Don't snoop around in your kids' rooms, reading diaries or personal letters. (How would you like them to do that to you?)
8. If your children have messy rooms, don't tidy them up—let them do it, and if they don't, they will have to live in them—not you.
9. Don't say "yes" to something one day and "no" the next. It's embarrassing for us to tell our friends that Mom has changed her mind.
10. Tell your children that you love them. They need to hear those words.

TERRI ON LONG ISLAND

DEAR ABBY: The holidays are closing in. Please ask your readers not to send magazine subscriptions as gifts without first checking to see if they are desired or perhaps duplicates.

My mailbox is cluttered with such. Later come the follow-ups asking me to re-subscribe to magazines I didn't want in the first place.

A subscription to the daily newspaper or one's hometown weekly is a welcome gift.

It bothers me to know that a well-meaning friend has spent money on a gift that is unread, then tossed out.

L. IN SEATTLE

DEAR L.: I read you. And I hope my readers read you (and me), too.

DEAR ABBY: Is it characteristic of all old men to talk back to the TV? It is most upsetting because when my husband watches TV, it sounds like there are three people in the living room—when it's only him.

When I am talking on the phone, the party I'm talking to always asks, "Do you have company?" I'm ashamed to admit it's just my husband talking to the TV.

Abby, is my husband senile, or is this a form of insanity? Don't use our name. He is retired and everybody thinks he's normal.

DEAR WIFE: He may be perfectly all right, so unless you have other reasons to question your husband's mental well-being, don't worry about it. Thank your lucky stars you have a man who's alive, occupied and entertained. But it might be good for him to get out of the house and talk to some "real" people occasionally.

DEAR ABBY: Some of your readers who may be inclined to get slightly "gloshed" while traveling abroad might appreciate knowing the penalties for drunken driving in other countries.

The enclosed was supplied by Alcoholics Anonymous of Totowa, N.J. Pass it along:

"So you think the drunk-driving laws in your state are tough? Well, thank your lucky stars you don't live in a country where it's hazardous to your health to be arrested for drunken driving. For example:

"Australia: The names of the drivers are sent to the local newspapers and are printed under the heading, 'He's Drunk and in Jail.'

"Malaya: The driver is jailed, and if he's married, his wife is jailed, too.

"United Kingdom, Finland and Sweden: Automatic jail term of one year.

"South Africa: A 10-year prison sentence and the equivalent of a $10,000 fine, or both.

"Turkey: Drunk drivers are taken 20 miles from town by the police and forced to walk back, under escort.

"Bulgaria: A second conviction results in execution.

"El Salvador: Your first offense is your last. Execution by firing squad."

DRY DRIVER IN N.J.

DEAR DRY DRIVER: I've passed on a version of this item before, but it can't hurt to remind people: If you're drinking, don't drive. If you're driving, don't drink.

Change Is Needed

The case of convicted killer Robert Sullivan should provide this country with a turning point in national policy toward the death penalty.

Punishment so extreme is meted out (presumably) to fit the crime; and there is always the factor of protecting society from the predators in its midst.

But the procedures are so elaborately drawn out that the condemned can remain on Death Row (as did Sullivan, in Florida) for 10 years, without knowing his eventual fate.

That in itself is an unnecessarily cruel and inhumane ordeal to subject the most depraved criminal.

Sullivan's case is not the only one of its kind. Others have waited for years so that the wheels of justice could make their exceedingly slow turns, before being escorted to the chamber, the gallows or the firing squad.

Many times they were ordered to finish out their lives in prison. On those rare occasions when the executioner did his work, there was an outcry; on those occasions when the criminal's life was spared, the public settled back to await "the next one."

The process is extraordinarily inefficient and far removed from the ideal of justice that is swift, that it fits the letter as well as the spirit of the law.

If society is unwilling to exact execution as the law provides, then so be it. Change the law. There are alternatives.

We might even resort to a solution our forefathers sometimes adopted: the penal colony.

Keeping Friends

It is inevitable that the United States will be drawn closer to Israel in that nation's defense efforts.

President Reagan agreed to major new defense measures this week following a meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

The Middle East is in constant turmoil and the Soviet military might is a permanent threat. Militarily Israel represents stability in the Middle East.

While the United States must keep its friends among the Arab nations, our leaders recognize that the military power of Israel is an essential part of maintaining any order in the Middle East. Thus it is no surprise that the Reagan administration is fully backing Israel.

Workable Plan

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Against the prospect of more American blood spilling here on an ill-defined mission, a workable plan to shift the U.S. Marines out of harm's way exists but has run into resistance from Secretary of State George Shultz.

In place of the current, ambiguous task of serving as a pro-government "presence," knowledgeable officials present a strong case for shifting the Marines away from their dangerously exposed positions at the airport. Instead, they would patrol defensible parts of the coastal road leading south from Beirut. That would give them both security and a proper role — military, not political.

At this point, the lack of a workable, long-range U.S. strategy for Lebanon emerges. Shultz objects to repositioning the Marines, contending it might reveal weakness and cost American credibility. His critics insist that moving them would demonstrate the self-confidence of a superpower: keeping the Marines at the airport like sitting ducks in a shooting gallery suggests weakness and the fear of facing up to reality.

The nature of this debate cannot be fully perceived without a personal visit to this embattled city. Beirut seethes with old scores to be settled, sectarian vengeance, car bombs and snipers. The 8 p.m. curfew suddenly shuts down the city cold. Citizens who venture out risk immediate arrest. The eerie silence of a metropolis made quiet by fear, night after night, is broken only by the rumble of half-tracks and personnel carriers patrolling over cobblestones and rubble.

In this setting, the Marines in their present static positions are bullseyes for target practice by sectarian militiamen. A tour of the Beirut airport, taking in the remnant of the BLT barracks (in which 239 Americans were blown up) and the surrounding terrain where the Marines patrol, shows how outrageously vulnerable they are.

The new terrain proposed for the Marines is a long portion of the coastal highway stretching south from Beirut to the new Israeli defense line on the Awali River. When we traveled that road, the claim of the plan's sponsors looked sensible: lengthy sections of the highway in virtually unpopulated areas, with plenty of natural cover for the patrolling Marines.

Shultz, not the White House or Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, is viewed by Lebanese officials and most foreign insiders here as the principal American decisionmaker. Strategically, they think his clinging to the ill-fated May 17 Israeli troop withdrawal agreement digs the U.S. deeper into stalemate. Tactically, Shultz is blamed for using the Marines to try to bluff anti-American factions out of the scene. But neither the Syrians nor their hard-bitten sectarian allies in this blood-soaked country will bluff easily after eight years of civil war.

The political decision to assign the Marines to the airport became untenable the moment the Israelis moved out of the surrounding Shouf mountains and civil war resumed. That converted the Marines in Lebanese eyes from a friendly "presence" to the protector of one small Lebanese faction: President Amin Gemayel's Phalangists.

The plan to shift the Marines would place security of the Beirut airport, which never actually was the defined Marine task, in the hands of one U.S.-trained Lebanese Army battalion. Both Lebanese and Western military officers say the army could indeed handle that job as well as the Marines.

The political point of such a shift is obvious: The Marines would get credit for making the trip from Beirut to the Israeli line safe for all Lebanese. The Marines next might assist the Israelis in peace-keeping along the highway all the way down to Sidon and Tyre, two cities under Israeli occupation south of the Awali.

RALEIGH — John Forlines, president of the state Board of Community Colleges, makes a strong argument when he calls for the elimination of special appropriations for individual community colleges.

Budgets for the colleges should be determined by the state board, he says, so duplication and inefficiency can be avoided. If individual legislators are allowed to get money for their local schools, then a system of political favoritism will set in.

Following his line of attack, you could get mighty righteous on this question: The politicians ought to stay out of the schools and educational decisions ought to be made by the educators.

But a pair of legislators who are instrumental in the approval of special appropriations bills for community colleges defend the practice. Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Vance, chairman of the House Expansion Budget Committee, and Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, say special bills are needed.

Hardison says the Legislature had to pass special appropriations for 20 community colleges this year because the state board failed to do its job. "Their process is supposed to be fair and equitable but some schools were raising Cain," Hardison said in an interview. "They couldn't get the equipment money that they needed."

As the Advisory Budget Commission traveled the state, and then as the Legislature put a budget together last spring, individual schools were lobbying feverishly for special appropriations, Hardison says. Forlines may say that the system is unified but that unity is a myth, Hardison says. The administration of former community colleges president Larry Blake is to blame for this problem. If Bob Scott, the new president, can bring unity back to the system, then maybe special bills won't be needed, he said.

Watkins goes beyond Hardison in the defense of special bills. They're a legislative prerogative, he says. "It is their purpose to administer what we say," he said in an interview. "They are concerned that the Legislature, which the people elected to make public policy decisions, is making them, and not their little group."

Watkins charged that the community college board is in itself political. "The presidents of the community colleges get together and agree what they are not going to ask for. How much more political can you get?" He said the process is too chummy, that some decisions are made simply to avoid upsetting people.

Watkins also raised the question of who is best qualified to decide whether a community college is to get a new program. Many times, these programs are initiated because a new industry is developing in the state, or is moving in. Legislators have a very good idea of what their area needs are.

College presidents are educators and not necessarily attuned to what is going on in the local business community. "They are no more qualified in determining where schools should be and which schools should have which emphasis," Watkins said.

Many of the schools that got special appropriations this year, Watkins said, were frustrated by the slowness of the systemwide process. Requests got bogged down in the bureaucracy and the mediocrity of formulas which divide everything out evenly. That slow procedure doesn't allow individual schools to adapt quickly to changing economic conditions in their communities, Watkins said. A special bill, however, can get a new program started quickly if it is needed.

Policy

WASHINGTON — Few questions of public policy arouse stronger emotions than the difficult question of the death sentence. In our presumably civilized society, should capital punishment ever be imposed?

I have problems with the issue when it is viewed in the large. There is little evidence to support the proposition that the possibility of a death sentence deters anyone from rape, kidnapping or murder. Granted that our 18th-century Constitution specifically sanctions capital punishment, it seems to me arguable that in the 20th century the deliberate execution of a human being could well be regarded as both cruel and unusual. Justices William Brennan and Thurgood Marshall make persuasive arguments in this regard.

But I have no problem with accepting capital punishment in one specific area: If Thomas Silverstein, 30, and Clayton Fountain, 28, should be indicted this week for murder and later found guilty, they should be put to death. The trouble is, they won't be put to death. They are life-termers at the federal penitentiary in Marion, Ill., and they are charged with the murder of two prison guards. But federal law now provides no more than another life sentence for such crimes.

There were two separate incidents about 10 hours apart on Oct. 22. The Marion prison, it should be noted, is the tightest of all federal institutions: opened in 1963, it now functions as the Alcatraz of the 1980s. Here are confined more than 300 of the most dangerous convicts in the nation. Within the prison itself is a separate small prison known as the control unit in H cell block. The most incorrigible prisoners are kept in the control unit under conditions, mandated by the Supreme Court, that ordinarily keep them confined to their cells for 23 of every 24 hours. Silverstein and Fountain were thus imprisoned last month.

A little after 10 a.m., Corrections Officer Eugene Clutts, 51, was escorting Silverstein back to his cell from a shower room. In some fashion not altogether clear, Silverstein managed to pause at another prisoner's cell. He slipped his handcuffs; suddenly produced a 10-inch knife made from a piece of steel bed frame, and stabbed Clutts an estimated 40 times. The officer left a wife, two sons and a daughter.

About 8:30 that evening, Officer Robert L. Hoffman, 53, in the company of three other officers, was escorting Fountain back to his cell from a recreation period. It was the same story. Fountain is described as "a large, muscular man with big arms but small hands." He managed to slip his handcuffs, and with a homemade "shank knife" began to assault the officers. Hoffman left a wife, a son and a daughter.

There may have been a reason why the two murders, so very much alike, were only a few hours apart. The two convicts had a close relationship. Both were serving life terms for previous murders of inmates. Both were identified with a white-supremacist "Aryan Brotherhood." U.S. Attorney Frederick Hess of East St. Louis has speculated publicly that the two men were engaged in "jailhouse machismo," playing a deadly game of keeping up with each other's murders. The two have shown "no remorse."

In testimony before a Senate subcommittee on Nov. 9, Associate Attorney General D. Lowell Jensen characterized the killings as outrageous, "but also outrageous is the fact that a decade's inaction has left current federal law powerless to impose any meaningful sanction for these vicious crimes." It is now impossible, Jensen said, to punish or even to deter such prison murders. Absent a death sentence, current law gives a violent life-termer free rein "to continue to murder as opportunity and his perverse motives dictate."

Bills have been introduced in both House and Senate to remedy this inexcusable situation. The tightly limited legislation would permit capital punishment for the killing of prison guards in federal institutions,

To the editor:

Nov. 27 through Dec. 3 has been designated by President Reagan and Gov. Hunt as National Home Health Week. Home care, the provision of nursing and supportive services to a sick or disabled person in his place of residence, is one segment of the broad spectrum of patient care.

When a patient no longer needs the constant care and supervision provided by a hospital or extended care facility, home health services can provide intermittent nursing and rehabilitative care to the patient in his own home. Home care can work for the short-term convalescent patient who is recovering from an acute illness, the homebound patient who is chronically ill and the patient who is terminally ill. When the patient recuperates at home and medically required services are available, the family has an opportunity to share in his care — a meaningful task to many families. Many times the home environment hastens recovery.

All patients receiving home health care must be under a doctor's plan of treatment, which is reviewed periodically by the attending physician. Homebound patients are visited regularly by registered nurses and licensed therapists to receive treatment as outlined by the physician. Eastern Carolina Home Health Services Inc., a non-profit agency, has served patients in Pitt and Beaufort counties since 1971. The services this agency provides are skilled nursing, physical therapy, speech pathology, occupational therapy, medical social worker and home health aide services. The goal of Eastern Carolina Home Health Services is to provide services which support the family's choice of caring for their loved ones at home and to help the patient maintain the highest level of functioning.

Patients or families of patients who feel they are in need of home health care should ask their physician about ordering the needed services or contact their local home health agency for details.

To the editor:

I would like to commend The Daily Reflector for its excellent coverage of East Carolina University's Maritime History and Underwater Research Program. The recent article concerning the research team's work in Bermuda is a fine example of the work that Mr. Gordon Watts, Dr. William Still and their associates are doing.

The research being done in Bermuda will give us some excellent insights into our own Civil War, a war which not only affected the United States but had ramifications throughout the world. Information gathered from the wreck of the Marie Celeste will give us valuable historical data which can be used in the future.

During the past few months you have run several articles relating to the U.S.S. Monitor Expedition also conducted by ECU. I have read these articles with great interest and enthusiasm. The Monitor expedition has brought national attention to ECU. This should give everyone associated with the university, and indeed, the entire state, reason to be proud of this program.

The historical importance of this project cannot be measured. As a coastal state, much of North Carolina's history has been tied to the oceans and waterways. Just off our coast is the infamous "Graveyard of the Atlantic." The research being done by ECU is helping to preserve our heritage and give us something tangible from our past to learn from. We gather insights into how our forebearers lived, fought, and conducted trade, shaping our country as we now know it.

There is still a great deal of work to be done on this project, as well as many others which are in progress or in the planning stages. Mr. Watts, Dr. Still and everyone associated with this program should be commended and encouraged to continue this excellent work.

Again, my appreciation to The Daily Reflector for its coverage of this program. I sincerely hope we will see more articles of this type in the near future.

To the editor:

Consider this list: heart disease, cirrhosis, glaucoma, cataracts, acne, cancer, migraines, ulcers, asthma, diabetes, kidney disease, bronchitis, arthritis, high blood pressure and deafness.

These ailments represent immeasurable and inexpressible suffering. They often take so much energy that little is left for anything else. They are the kinds of pain that reached the heart of the Lord when he was here on earth. He took physical maladies seriously. He showed that they were matters of concern because He responded to them. He healed the sick. He made the deaf to hear and the blind to see. By His power and because of His compassion, He made the lame to walk again. Yes, Christ healed physical afflictions when He walked with men.

But how do problems of the body compare to problems of the mind and spirit? Do they have more potential for pain and suffering than the following list: pride, bitterness, anger, greed, insensitivity, deceitfulness, laziness, selfishness, impatience, gossip, cruelty, unfaithfulness, sensuality, apathy, self-indulgence, hypocrisy, heartlessness, envy, materialism, or ignorance? Which list keeps a person from knowing the wisdom, goodness, power and love of God?

Then why do we spend so much time praying about physical problems? Why do the majority of current Sunday and Wednesday prayers treat the first list without showing any concern for the second? Judge for yourself. Let us be aware that the condition of our hearts and minds is more important than the condition of our bodies. May we ask God to give us as much health as we need to be the kind of servant He wants us to be.

Strength For Today

A world traveler describes an exciting episode in his career:

"One night on the Mediterranean, we ran into a terrible storm and for a day and most of the night were beaten and tossed about. In the absence of either sun or stars, we lost our reckoning. Then, before the night was over, the storm abated and stars shown out through irregular patches of sky.

"At this point the first officer went on deck with his instruments and within a few minutes he knew exactly where we were. We were sailing once more by the stars."

Just as the mariner has to turn his instruments on the eternal stars before he can determine the position with certainty, so we have to look up to eternal principles by which human life has been governed in order to find out where we are.

When the night is dark and the storm is merciless, and we have the desperate feeling of being totally lost, we should try looking up to the Eternal.

START Talks Are Continuing

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — U.S. and Soviet negotiators met today at the Soviet compound to continue their 17-month effort to reduce long-range nuclear weapons — the only remaining forum for superpower talks on nuclear arms.

The meeting between Soviet Ambassador Viktor P. Karpov and chief U.S. negotiator Edward L. Rowny lasted about 3½ hours. Details were not given; but another meeting was set for Tuesday.

Today's session was the second of the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks, known as START, since the Soviet Union walked out of parallel medium-range missiles talks Nov. 23, suspending those two-year-old negotiations on nuclear forces in Europe.

However, speculation has diminished that the Soviets might also break off the START talks on long-range weapons before an expected recess next week.

After a three-hour session Tuesday, Karpov said the talks would go on. But he added, "There is no progress up to now and as I have stated many times, the position of the American side is not for agreement."

Moscow also has continued to criticize the stationing of new U.S. medium-range missiles in Western Europe, saying the deployment alters the East-West strategic "balance."

Soviet Ambassador to Italy Nikolai Lunkov said in a television interview Wednesday in Rome that the arrival of new U.S. cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Europe has made resumption of the medium-range talks "unrealistic and impossible."

"The start of their deployment has in fact created a new strategic and military reality, which we cannot fail to take into account," the diplomat said.

The statement was the latest in a Soviet propaganda offensive which includes letters from Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov warning the leaders of Britain, West Germany and Italy against accepting the new missiles.

The Soviets walked out of the medium-range missile talks after NATO began deploying the first of 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles slated for five European countries. The walk-out came as the West German Parliament approved deployment of the missiles on German soil.

North Atlantic Treaty Organization nations said they would start deploying the new missiles this month if no agreement was reached in Geneva. The missiles are to counter 243 Soviet triple-warhead SS-20 missiles already targeted on Western Europe.

Moscow has since announced counter-plans to deploy new rockets in East bloc states and on submarines off U.S. shores.

With the medium-range missile talks suspended indefinitely, the START talks are the only remaining superpower forum for discussing nuclear arms. Soviet officials have hinted at possibly merging the two sets of talks, saying the European missiles should be treated as part of the larger, long-range arsenals of both sides.

Western analysts have said, however, that a merger could complicate the strategic talks without raising prospects for an agreement on the Euromissiles.

The START talks concern a U.S. force of about 10,000 warheads and bombs to a Soviet force of 8,800. Though the U.S. force is numerically superior, the Soviets have 7,900 ground- and submarine-launched ballistic missiles — 700 more than the United States. Of the United States' total arsenal, 2,800 of its weapons are the more-vulnerable air-launched cruise missiles and bombs.

The current round of START began Oct. 5 with Rowny proposing the U.S. "build-down" plan for reducing each side's warheads and weapons by 5 percent a year to a base of 5,000. The Soviets rejected the offer as a cover for building U.S. weaponry. Western observers, in turn, contend the Soviet Union's proposal would allow them to increase their number of strategic warheads to 11,400.

Pledge Died In Hazing

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — There were "empty whiskey bottles all over the house" where a fraternity initiation party ended in the death of a 20-year-old pledge whose blood alcohol content was five times the legal intoxication level, officials say.

Van L. Watts, a junior engineering student at Tennessee State University, died Wednesday from an overdose of alcohol, said Dr. Charles Harlan, Davidson County medical examiner.

"He died from drinking too much alcohol in too short a period of time," Harlan said, estimating it would take about 26 shots of 100-proof alcohol for a 150-pound man to reach Watts' blood alcohol content of 0.52. A level of 0.1 is considered legally drunk in Tennessee.

Police ruled the death accidental, said Homicide Capt. Sherman Nickens.

University and Omega Psi Phi social fraternity officials denied that Watts' death was caused by hazing, which is outlawed by the Tennessee State. The fraternity was banned from campus five years ago for a hazing incident, but was readmitted two years ago, said university spokesman Larry Calhoun.

The death was discovered after members of Omega Psi Phi, who attended an off-campus initiation party at an East Nashville house, arose Wednesday morning and could not wake Watts.

Calhoun and national fraternity spokesman Carlton Petway said Watts and eight other pledges attended a solemn initiation ceremony early Tuesday evening.

Shuttle Flight...

Parker and Merbold, working in the Spacelab station in Columbia's cargo bay, had triggered beams of electrons and ionized argon gas from accelerometers outside the lab, zipping them into a highly-charged field of plasma at 155 miles up.

Other shuttle instruments measured the affect of the experiment on the atmosphere, especially on the formation of the man-made aurora-borealis—the northern lights generated when enormous amounts of energy from the sun saturate Earth's protective curtain of magnetic fields and pour through magnetic openings above the North Pole.

Mission scientist Rick Chappell, observing at a control center at the Johnson Space Center here, explained: "The experiment is probing how particle beams interact with atmospheric gases, which is important in understanding the auroral phenomena."

"The crew fires the beams up the magnetic field lines, and those beams bounce off the opposite hemisphere and come back to the shuttle along the field lines," he said. "That will give us an idea of the shape and length of the magnetic field."

The firings might be seen by people on Earth as a brief, bright flash in a clear night sky, but because the firings are not on a set schedule, sightings would be improbable.

Chappell said the results could lead to a better understanding of how atmospheric energy disturbs shortwave radio communications and influences the weather on Earth.

The astronauts planned several tests of the device over many parts of the globe during the remainder of the flight.

In an earlier calibration test of the device on Wednesday, astronaut Owen Garriott described the lights as "single, bright flashes. They form a semi-hemispherical glow in a bluish color."

Garriott, Byron Lichtenberg and pilot Brewster Shaw form the Blue Team in the flight's two-shift round-the-clock operation. Parker, Merbold and commander John Young make up the Red Team. Merbold is the first European to fly on a U.S. space mission.

The accelerators used in the light experiment were developed by Tatsuzo Obayashi, a University of Tokyo researcher. It is one of scores of international experiments from 14 nations carried on this first flight of the European-built Spacelab, a billion-dollar facility.

During this third day of the planned nine-day journey, the astronauts continued experiments started earlier in biomedical research, metals processing and Earth observations.

They also focused a powerful German-made metric camera on the Earth, gathering images that scientists hope will map portions of the planet never before properly charted.

The camera, with 1,100 frames, is taking pictures of the surface with a resolution of 32 feet, much clearer than photos obtained by Earth observation satellites. Garriott and Lichtenberg took the first pictures Wednesday as Columbia passed over Western Europe.

Scientists on the ground heaped praise on the performance of the astronauts and their instruments.

"They're really off to a great start, a really superb performance," said Karl Knott of West Germany, mission scientist for the European Space Agency.

"Spacelab is proving to be outstanding in wedding manned space flight with science," said Chappell, the U.S. mission scientist.

Columbia is to return Spacelab and the six astronauts to Earth on Wednesday, landing at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif.

Manufacturing Plant For N.C.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt announced today that Chase Brass and Copper Co. of Ohio will build a $40 million metal alloy manufacturing plant in Shelby.

Construction will begin immediately and production should begin in late 1985, Hunt said in a news conference. The plant eventually will employ more than 100 workers to produce a brass-copper alloy strip used to make electrical connectors and similar products.

Company officials said this is the first such plant they have built in the United States for 30 years. They said it will use a new technology to try to revitalize the company, which was started during the Civil War.

Chase is a unit of Sohio Chemicals and Industrial Products Co., owned by The Standard Oil Co. of Ohio.

"Chase's selection of Cleveland County as the site for the new facility reflects a trust and faith in both North Carolina and our economy ... and also a confidence in our people who are such productive workers," Hunt said.

Scientists Take It All In Stride

VOLCANO, Hawaii (AP) — Scientists are taking in stride Kilauea Volcano's 12th eruption of the year, which is spewing lava up to 130 feet high and sending flows in three fountains.

"We're getting to almost know what to expect," said Bob Decker of the U.S. Geological Survey's Hawaiian Volcano Observatory on Wednesday. He said the largest lava flow travelled 2½ miles to the northeast in a remote area. Others moved north and southeast.

The new activity was labeled Phase 12 of a sporadic eruption that began Jan. 3. Phase 11 ended Nov. 7 after two days, Decker said.

Volunteers Supplement Government's Services

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Charles Petty compares his Office of Citizen Affairs to the United Way commercial that never mentions money but softens up viewers to dig in their pockets later and give to charity.

The office serves as the state's ombudsman and advocate for volunteerism.

Soviet Meet...

public appearance Aug. 18 when he met with a group of U.S. senators. The official Kremlin explanation for his absence from public view has been that he has been suffering from a cold.

Among the public functions Andropov missed were annual Bolshevik Revolution day anniversary gala at the Kremlin on Nov. 5 and the Nov. 7 Red Square military parade. His absence at those functions was unprecedented for a Soviet Communist Party leader.

In addition, Andropov did not make any public appearances during two major foreign policy crises — the Sept. 1 Soviet downing of a Korean Air Lines jetliner and this month's Soviet suspension of the Euromissile talks in Geneva.

The Soviet leader has only issued public statements on those events.

The announcement of the Parliament session apparently means that the powerful 322-member Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party will hold a plenum in advance of the meeting. As head of the Communist Party, Andropov would be expected to preside.

Plenums are never announced in advance. The Dec. 28 date for the parliamentary session meant that the plenum could convene for just one day on Tuesday, Dec. 27, or hold a two-day session, as it did at its last meeting in June.

The Central Committee is the body that makes major personnel and policy decisions. The current plenum will be keenly watched by Western analysts and Soviet citizens for leadership changes.

Since Andropov became leader of the party Nov. 12, 1982, there has been only one addition to the ruling Politburo — the promotion of Geidar A. Aliev in November 1982.

That elevation is widely thought to have been agreed upon before the death of Andropov's predecessor, Leonid I. Brezhnev, on Nov. 10, 1982.

one of Gov. Jim Hunt's pet projects. It has been recognized nationally for its success.

"It is not our responsibility or prerogative to recruit volunteers for certain tasks but we can give credibility or status to volunteerism," said Petty, executive director of the office since 1978.

Petty said statistics show 71 percent of North Carolina's adult population serve as volunteers compared to 52 percent nationwide. There are 1,100,000 volunteer tasks being performed for state government and 600 million hours donated to public and private groups each year.

"It is a multibillion-dollar industry," he said.

Petty and his 14-member staff work on award programs and recognition of volunteers, speeches and programs to encourage volunteers and proposed legislation and state policy.

Their efforts helped make volunteer work count as experience for a state job and to help state employees get off work to do volunteer work as long as they make up the time.

"I see this office as more thematic than programmatic. We put forth the concept and try to strengthen that concept," Petty said.

He acknowledges that it's difficult to measure the staff's success because there's no documentation of volunteer efforts a decade ago and it's difficult to identify every volunteer today.

Petty said some who give of their time freely don't consider themselves volunteers, a word once reserved for women who worked in schools or hospitals.

He said 93 percent of the firemen in North Carolina are volunteers. Others are coaches, board members, rescue squad workers, Jaycees or athletic booster club members.

The office divides volunteer activities into five categories: direct services such as tutoring, policymaking jobs such as board membership, administrative jobs, fundraising and advocacy. It keeps a catalogue of contacts to help potential volunteers find the right organizers.

"We encourage people to follow their own dreams," Petty said. "We try to say where is your heart? If you don't like what you're doing you're not going to do it very long, especially with no payback."

"We really don't know what's available in all 100 counties. The day we know everything will be a very sad day. I hope the volunteer activity in this state (is so great) no one will ever be able to put their hands on all of it."

Feldstein Again Strays From Boss's Policy

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Ignoring White House scoldings, presidential economist Martin Feldstein insists he's a team player who fully supports "our president and his economic program."

But Feldstein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, strayed again from the administration line Wednesday night by disputing its contentions that new taxes will only lead to more government spending.

In a speech to the Tax Foundation, Feldstein continued to wage his strong campaign to reduce the red-ink spending — even after a highly unusual public chiding by administration officials.

Indeed, Feldstein sought to downplay his differences with the administration in his opening remarks to the group, which awarded him its "distinguished public service award" at a dinner in New York.

"I certainly hope that I am a team player," said Feldstein, a highly regarded conservative economist before taking his administration post.

Yet he went on to tell the group, "There is in fact no basis in either experience or logic for believing that additional tax revenue at the present time would serve only to finance increased spending."

Said presidential spokesman Larry Speakes: "I've heard the president say the opposite many, many times."

Only a day earlier, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan contended that tax increases have "a funny way of being rerouted" into more government spending and he urged even more cuts in domestic programs to pare the deficits.

Feldstein delivered his speech in a day in which administration officials, both publicly and privately, showed their growing impatience with the economist. He has been at odds with other administration officials, notably Regan, over the cause of high interest rates and the urgency to reduce the deficits, now around $200 billion.

Feldstein said after his New York speech there is "much less disagreement between myself and Donald Regan than many people think."

He said he spent three hours with Regan on Wednesday. "Anybody who suggested that I did not fully support the president's program was speaking falsely," he said. "I don't know what Larry Speakes said this morning. I was on the job today. There was no discussion of any of this with the president."

But Speakes left little doubt that Regan's senior staff would like to see Feldstein go back to his Harvard University post earlier than his planned September departure.

One senior White House official, speaking on the condition that he not be identified by name, said, "Feldstein has been told privately that he's perfectly welcome to disagree, but when the president makes a decision and sets a policy, he should either say nothing or get out."

"He's been told that straightforward ... repeatedly, and he persists. The president is incensed by it. Marty is using the Democrats' line," the official said.

After the scolding, Feldstein issued a statement saying, "Of course, I completely support the president's program." He also said he wanted to clear up "some confusion" about deficit remarks last week that apparently prompted the latest flap.

In those remarks, he said military spending and the administration's big tax cut are the main reasons pushing deficits up past the $200 billion mark.

But he emphasized at that time that he was not opposing higher defense spending or arguing for major tax hikes.

Feldstein first got into hot water over his views, held by most mainstream economists, that the huge deficits are the major factor keeping interest rates up. Regan has insisted there's no historical evidence connecting the two.

Feldstein also has continued to push for adoption of a standby tax plan that was put forth by the administration in its budget plan submitted to Congress earlier this year. The tax plan called for raising certain taxes to help reduce the deficit — but only if Congress made additional cuts in spending programs and the economy were healthy.

Congress virtually ignored the tax plan this year. The administration has not yet decided whether to resubmit the proposal when it unveils early next year its budget for the 1985 fiscal year.

Feldstein, in his speech to the Tax Foundation, took note of fears that tax hikes would not lead to any reduction in budget deficits.

But he said, "I believe that such a conclusion is wrong."

He said it "fails to recognize the powerful role of public opinion and political leadership. It ignores also the revolutionary change in attitudes about government

Dog Slaughter Bringing Pleas

NEW YORK (AP) — Slaughter of dogs in Peking and a ban starting today on their ownership in the Chinese capital brought a plea from a U.S. animal welfare group, urging "support for ... unfortunate animals."

A scolding, too, came in a letter from John Kullberg, executive director of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, to Zhang Wenjan, China's ambassador to the United States.

About 200,000 dogs have been drowned or clubbed to death in the drive to rid Peking of the animals, an official there said Tuesday. Remaining dogs, the official said, would be "killed on the spot."

The ban was announced Oct. 11 for health and safety reasons, officials said.

Plant Wrecked By Explosion

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — An explosion that collapsed a metal processing plant and left eight people hurt was "ba-boom, bang and lots of smoke," according to a witness who turned in the alarm.

The blast Wednesday forced evacuation of a school and nearby buildings because of escaping ammonia fumes.

A dozen people were inside the one-story Schubert Heat Treating Co. when the walls blew out and the roof crashed down around 10 a.m., said Assistant Fire Chief Gilbert H. McLaughlin.

JCPenney THE CHRISTMAS PLACE

Labor Commissioner Critical Of Big Business Commitment

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's recruitment of large industries is coming at the expense of helping small established or new businesses and may end up costing the state jobs, Labor Commissioner John Brooks says.

The state annually spends millions of dollars to attract foreign investments, while less than $100,000 goes to help small businesses capture foreign export markets, he said in a speech at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington on Wednesday.

"The state should use more of its own revenue to assist new businesses," Brooks said. "Other states are far ahead of us."

He said the state can't always count on large industries it attracts, particularly when its major sales pitch boasts of North Carolina's low wages. "Babcock & Wilcox moved out of here lock, stock and barrel to Singapore because those workers will take lower wages" than Wilmington workers, Brooks said, adding that firms being attracted from the North may someday move again to Latin America for the same reason.

The future, he said, will see increasing dependence on "small, flexible businesses."

"Isn't it time we help (established) businesses rather than spend money on making North Carolina more profitable for out-of-state firms?" Brooks said. Brooks quoted a study in Inc. magazine that ranked North Carolina 39th in the nation in the amount of entrepreneur support and small business development aid it provides.

The state also needs to help new businesses establish markets or come up with product ideas, Brooks said. Once the new firms are producing, he added, the state should help them break into markets overseas.

In 1980, Brooks said, about 96,000 jobs in the state were directly related to exports. He said 20 jobs were added in related industries for each new $1 million in products sent abroad.

Brooks said the state for the first time last year lost more jobs through plant closings by big corporations than it gained by recruitment. Some of those plants, he said, were economically viable but didn't match the corporation's production plans.

To prevent the loss of jobs from such causes, Brooks suggested establishing "regional corporate entities" that would buy and operate the plants until a permanent owner can be found.

Say Alcohol Level High

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — A preliminary autopsy shows that a 30-year-old Asheboro man who was shot and killed by a N.C. Highway Patrolman had high levels of alcohol in his blood, officials say.

Dr. Paige Hudson, chief medical examiner with the N.C. Medical Examiner's Office in Chapel Hill, said Wednesday that tests on Everett Clinton Chambers revealed alcohol levels present equivalent to registering .25 on the breathalyzer test. A .10 percent level constitutes the legal limit of being under the influence.

Hudson said there was "no question about it at all" that the man was impaired.

Chambers, identified by Asheboro officials as a laborer in the city's water and sewer maintenance department, was shot about 4 a.m. on Sunday in Asheboro by Trooper G.D. Blackwood.

Asheboro Police Det. T.L. Melver said Blackwood was called to assist another trooper on an unrelated traffic violation when he came upon an armed man, whom police identified as Chambers.

Chambers crossed the street when he saw Blackwood, but later drew his gun and pointed it at Blackwood, who then shot Chambers, Melver said.

Monetary Fund To Get Extra Money

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan ended a year of arguments between his administration and Congress about the International Monetary Fund by signing legislation authorizing an $8.5 billion increase in the U.S. contribution to the fund.

Congressional opponents had criticized the IMF as nothing more than a bail-out of large U.S. banks with money tied up in Third World nations. But Reagan, who signed the legislation Wednesday night, had argued that the money was vital to keep the international financial system afloat and preserve jobs in U.S. export industries.

The money is the U.S. share of some $50 billion in increased contributions agreed to last year by the 146 member countries in the fund, which makes loans to governments, particularly those in trouble with their balance of payments.

With congressional approval of the bill last month, other nations notified the fund officially that their contributions were on the way.

ON THE RISE — Two rare North Atlantic right whales poke their heads above the surface of the Bay of Fundy in what is believed to be courtship activity. Estimates are that fewer than 200 of the once plentiful whales survive today. (AP Laserphoto)

Calf Gives Reason To Hope For Rare Whale

By SUSAN ESSOYAN
Associated Press Writer
BOSTON (AP) — A 45-ton right whale that has churned her way up and down the East Coast brought a second calf north with her this fall, giving scientists new hope for the future of the breed.

Scott Kraus, the head of a New England Aquarium research team that has studied the whales for the past three years, said Tuesday it is the first time scientists have seen a second calf born to a right whale.

The species, so called "because they were the right whales to kill," is the most endangered of the large whales, Kraus said in an interview before presenting a paper on the group's findings at the Fifth Biennial Conference on the Biology of Marine Mammals.

"You can catch up to them in a rowboat," he said. "They're slow, they float when dead and they yielded the most amount of oil and baleen, which was most important for the corset industry."

Hunting decimated the population of right whales in the North Atlantic, Kraus said, and there are only about 200 of the animals left, making any birth important. "It's significant and encouraging that one of the known females has given birth to two calves," he said.

Scientists estimate only four or five right whales are born in the North Atlantic each year. There are more right whales in the Southern Hemisphere, but the animals spend the summer so far offshore that scientists cannot study them.

Unlike gray whales, which were close to extinction in the North Pacific but have bounced back to a population of 16,000, right whales off the East Coast of the United States have not done well, Kraus said.

Part of the reason may be that the shiny black mammals are friendly and roam near shore. "As a result, they may be the most vulnerable to human intervention and habitat alteration," Kraus said.

Scientists aren't sure how and when right whales mate, how long the cows are pregnant, or when the whales reach maturity.

So it meant a leap in knowledge when they spotted the whale, which the scientists dubbed Fermata, swimming with a second calf this summer off the Massachusetts coast. "It suggests at least a hint of a birthing interval," Kraus said.

The last time the female had been seen with a newborn calf was in 1973, off the coast of Jekyll Island, Ga. Four months before that she was seen alone off the Maine coast.

"It's the first evidence we have of a long-distance migration," Kraus said. "It suggests that this population goes somewhere along the south Atlantic U.S. coast to breed or at least give birth."

Kraus' team works out of Lubec, Maine, the easternmost point of the United States, and hopes to begin following Fermata and other right whales farther south. The research is financed by the World Wildlife Fund and the National Marine Fisheries Service.

The team hopes determine what factors are necessary for the survival of the rotund species. Full-grown right whales are about 50 feet long and weigh about a ton per foot.

Scientists identify individual right whales by the collosity, lump of thickened skin on the head. Fermata's is shaped like the musical symbol, fermata, which indicates a held note.

Williamsburg Will Look Back

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Instead of today's multicolored lights and Santas, Christmas decorations in the Historic Area at Colonial Williamsburg are those of 18th-century Virginia.

Starting Dec. 15, candles will be lit in all the windows along mile-long Duke of Gloucester Street. Porches and doorways are hung with roping and wreaths made from pine, holly, fresh fruits, vegetables and dried flowers.

New Tobacco Law No Cure-All, Say Experts

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The renewed freeze on federal price supports for flue-cured tobacco and other changes in the tobacco program will help the industry, but farmers still fear quota cuts, experts say.

Next month, U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block is scheduled to announce the production quota for the 1984 tobacco crop. North Carolina officials hope he'll keep the quota at this year's level, but concede that a cut of anywhere from 6 to 15 percent is possible.

"The secretary's hands are pretty well tied, so (State Agriculture Commissioner Jim) Graham asked that if under the law, the quota must be cut, it not be cut more than 6 1/2 percent," said John Cyrus, tobacco affairs specialist with the North Carolina Department of Agriculture. "That was one of four or five options they presented earlier this year."

The quota has been reduced a total of 46 1/2 percent since 1975 as the Flue-Cured Tobacco Stabilization Corp.'s stockpiles have grown, he said. The grower-supported cooperative buys any leaf that doesn't bring at least 1 cent over the support price, then tries to resell it later.

When the cooperative's stockpiles are considered excessive, the government tries to reduce them by reducing the production quota.

Despite quota worries, Cyrus said the bill signed Tuesday by President Reagan "is a first step toward making our tobacco more competitive and reducing costs of production."

The bill, backed strongly by U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and other members of the state's congressional delegation, freezes the federal price support for flue-cured tobacco at $169.90 per hundred pounds through 1984 and possibly 1985.

It also eliminates the "double assessment" under which some farmers had to pay extra fees to the non-cost tobacco fund, and it requires a phaseout of allotment lease and transfer off the farm beginning in 1987.

The phaseout will address one of the most common complaints about the program — that its beneficiaries include corporations and individuals who are not farmers. But serious problems remain, including strong competition from foreign producers and excessive unsold leaf stockpiles, Cyrus said.

Exports of U.S. tobacco slumped to 456 million pounds in fiscal 1982-83, the smallest amount in a decade, he said. Domestic sales also are off because cheap foreign leaf is increasingly popular with U.S. cigarette manufacturers, he added.

"Farmers can't continue to survive with the quota being reduced so drastically," said Cyrus. He acknowledged, however, that the 6 1/2 percent reduction sought by state officials "wouldn't give Stabilization much leeway to get rid of the leaf it has."

In a related development,

U.S. Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C., on Wednesday criticized the N.C. Council of Churches for sponsoring a hearing Tuesday on moral questions involving the tobacco industry.

"Would the (council) sleep better at night if cigarettes are still manufactured and all the tobacco comes from Africa and the North Carolina tobacco farmer is broke?" Rose, chairman of the House Subcommittee on Tobacco and Peanuts, said in an interview with radio station WSJS of Winston-Salem.

"If you can somehow outlaw cigarettes, then we might have another discussion. But right now it's very legal to make cigarettes in North Carolina and ... I want North Carolina farmers growing the tobacco."

Sister Evelyn Mattern, program associate with the council of churches, said the group saw tobacco "not as a church issue, but as a people issue."

"Whether you look at smoking and health or the labor question, it is something that we feel we should concern ourselves with," said Ms. Mattern. "We're not trying to get rid of tobacco, but we're trying to save people."

Death Penalty

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — An Iranian court sentenced 52 people to death in Iran for drug offenses during November, the official Iranian news agency reports.

The Islamic Republic News Agency said Wednesday the sentences are subject to confirmation by higher courts. It said 1,812 people were arrested for drug offenses during November.

In addition to the 42 sentenced to death, two people received life sentences, 97 were jailed for 10-25 years and 350 from one to 10 years.

Serious View Of Horseshoes

By DREZ JENNINGS
The Arizona Daily Star
TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Al Larson balances the horseshoe in his palm, takes a step and lets go.

The shoe sails and spins and curls with a clang around a pin 40 feet away.

Says Larson: "There are three things to remember about pitching horseshoes: how to hold it, how to make it stay flat and how to make it turn just enough revolutions so it ends up facing the pin."

"And the rest is just practice."

That's easy for Larson, 50, to say. He's been pitching horseshoes since he was a 4-year-old "country boy" in Montana.

He takes his pitching seriously, using "deadeyes" — competition-weight horseshoes of not more than 2 1/2 pounds — when he practices. And he practices on a lighted regulation course, complete with concrete runways, that he built in the back yard of his home.

When he's gearing up for competition, Larson slings as many as 200 horseshoes during a practice session. Larson can hit the pin 35 percent of the time — "a little bit better than anybody else at the Sunday picnic" — and 60 percent of the time when he's been training.

Although he is right-handed, Larson pitches with his left hand, a relic of his early days in the sport when he was too short to loft the horseshoes over the pin that marks how far a horseshoe pitcher can step before throwing.

Larson, who was an officer in the Army from 1953 to 1973, pitched his way through duty tours at Fort Huachuca and in Vietnam.

"There wasn't much else to do except watch out for tarantulas and pitch horseshoes," he said of his devotion to the sport during his stateside duty.

Now Larson pitches because of the people he meets. "Very few of them are city boys. They come from places like Michigan, Illinois and Mississippi. They're like the kind of people I grew up with," he said. "I like the camaraderie."

Becalmed Moscow Political Scene Poses Queries

By STEVEN R. HURST
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — The usual autumn government and party meetings have not been scheduled yet this year — evidently because President Yuri V. Andropov is too ill to officiate. The strangely quiet political scene has led to speculation about who is running the Soviet Union.

Soviet sources have indicated in past weeks that the country is on a kind of automatic pilot.

Western diplomats, asking to remain anonymous, say they think day-to-day foreign policy decisions have been taken over by the military, led by Marshal Dmitri F. Ustinov.

The 69-year-old Andropov, his health a question mark since last spring, has not been seen in public since Aug. 18.

With so many uncertainties, the focus of attention now is on the failure of authorities here to announce a meeting of the rubber stamp national parliament, the Supreme Soviet.

This is a country where things tend to happen according to plan and tradition, and the Parliament session and meeting of the Communist Party Central Committee are always scheduled by mid-November.

The Soviet constitution says the legislature must meet twice a year. So far this year the legislature has met only once, in June, when Andropov was named president, consolidating his absolute hold on power.

Tradition holds that its meetings are announced 30 days in advance, and Associated Press records dating back two decades show that every session has been preceded by a 30-day notice.

Those records also show that since 1962 no regular parliamentary session has ever been held later than Dec. 18. That was in 1974. Last year the Parliament met on Dec. 22, but that was a special occasion to mark the 60th anniversary of the founding of the Soviet Union.

Soviets insist that a meeting of the Parliament will come in the second half of December. The country still has no formally adopted economic plan or budget for the coming year and those documents are the business of the Parliament.

Andropov should attend the parliamentary session as head of state. He reportedly is suffering from a heart and kidney condition and the latest rumors in Moscow say he has lost the ability to walk. Nothing, however, is known for certain about the state of his health.

Tradition holds that the parliamentary sessions are preceded by a plenary session of the party Central Committee.

At those sessions the ruling Politburo makes top personnel changes and dictates the course of foreign and domestic policy.

Western diplomats say Andropov must be present at the plenum in his role as leader of the Communist Party.

Unofficial records show Andropov's predecessor, Leonid I. Brezhnev, was never absent from public view for such a long period despite serious questions about his health dating from the mid-1970s.

Andropov failed Nov. 5 to attend the Kremlin meeting marking the Bolshevik Revolution, or the Nov. 7 military parade to celebrate the event. Brezhnev, despite his poor health, was at last year's parade and stood two hours in freezing weather three days before he died of a heart attack.

Despite his absence from view, Andropov has made a series of statements regarding the Soviet arms control position since late September. But none was made in person either to visiting politicians or on television.

Soviet sources have said that the statements were drawn up well in advance and modified only minimally — taking into account late international developments — before they were released.

Andropov's absence has given rise to growing speculation here that he will resign, either of his own accord or under pressure from his Politburo colleagues.

Before Andropov's health became a serious question, Soviet sources said he was grooming Mikhail S. Gorbachev, 52, as his successor.

But Andropov's apparently failing health has left observers and Western diplomats here wondering if he has had the time to build support for Gorbachev, a technocrat who is best known for running Soviet agriculture.

The question goes, will Politburo old-timers such as Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, 72, Ustinov, 75, Premier Nikolai A. Tikonov, 78, and old-foe Konstantin U. Chernenko, 72, be willing to support any Andropov choice from the younger generation of Soviet politicians?

N.C. Town Could Be Without Police

JEFFERSON, N.C. (AP) — The town of Jefferson may have to rely on the Ashe County Sheriff's Department for law enforcement after its only police officer resigned in a dispute. Town Manager Michael Dixon says.

"There are no immediate plans for anybody to take his place," Dixon said Wednesday after Tony N. Black quit over his demotion from police chief to patrolman, a pay cut and other restrictions.

"I don't feel that I've been treated fairly and I can't work under the conditions that they have set forth," Black, 41, said before officially handing in the resignation. "It's not letting me be a police officer — what I was sworn to do."

Black wasn't available for comment Wednesday and calls to the Police Department were referred to the Ashe County Jail.

Black said earlier the town may have acted to force his resignation and thus permit closing the police department and saving money.

But Alderman Quinten R. Little said the board's decision resulted from "a lot of little things. We just felt like he needed some guidelines. We need to have some say-so over our department."

Black, who has been police chief of the western North Carolina mountain town since 1979 and an officer since 1977, said he was forced to take a pay cut from $13,265 to $10,400.

The aldermen also gave him a work schedule and orders to patrol at certain times each day.

"And I don't think it's in the best interests of the town to have a schedule that every thief would know where I am," Black said.

FOCUS

The "Big House"

The state of New York recently announced it is changing the name of the Ossining Correctional Facility back to Sing Sing. The famous prison took its name from the town of Sing Sing, where it is located. Sing Sing renamed itself Ossining in 1901. In 1970, the prison name was also changed. Sing Sing lies along the Hudson River. Thus, going to prison became known as being "sent up the river".

Whispers Befog Sullivan's Execution

By TIMOTHY HARPER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The mysterious rumor about an alleged alibi raises interesting "what if" legal questions in the case of Robert Sullivan, the convicted murderer who was executed in Florida Wednesday.

What if an unidentified Roman Catholic priest who is rumored to have heard a church confession that may have cleared Sullivan came forward? Would his testimony have been barred by the priest-penitent confidentiality privilege? Would it have been dismissed as hearsay? Or would it have been permitted under recent court rulings?

Sullivan was electrocuted for the 1973 shotgun slaying and robbery of the assistant manager of a suburban Miami restaurant, despite his claim of innocence. Sullivan contended he was drinking in a gay bar 40 miles away when the crime occurred, even though he had the victim's watch and credit cards when arrested.

The execution ended a decade of appeals — including a short-lived stay on Tuesday — that was capped by unsuccessful pleas on Sullivan's behalf before the U.S. Supreme Court and other federal and state courts.

The execution also ended a series of extraordinary but unsuccessful appeals for leniency outside the court system by the Roman Catholic Church, including one relayed from Pope John Paul II to Florida Gov. Bob Graham.

Last week, Bishop John J. Snyder of St. Augustine, Fla., said he had been told that a Catholic priest had heard confession from a Boston man who claimed he had been drinking with Sullivan in a gay bar on the night of the murder; the man was allegedly afraid to come forward because he did not want his family to know he was a homosexual.

The bishop emphasized, however, that it was only a rumor. He said he did not know when or where the alleged confession took place or the identities of either the priest or confessor. The bishop also said he could not reveal how he had heard the rumor, but he insisted that no priest had violated the confidentiality of the confessional.

The priest-penitent privilege is a traditional part of American law that says no clergy — including priests hearing confession — can testify in court about confidential conversations they have with people seeking religious counsel.

However, an Episcopal priest working at a Nebraska prison last year turned in a teen-age inmate who confided he had committed two murders. The teen-ager claimed he thought the conversation was confidential. But the priest said it was "counseling" rather than a confession and said he had warned the young man he might report it.

A traditional confidentiality privilege also applies to lawyer-client and husband-wife conversations, and about two-thirds of the states extend it to doctors and their patients, too.

Paul Rothstein, a Georgetown University professor who is one of the nation's foremost experts on criminal evidence, said there is another reason the testimony might not be allowed even if a priest who had heard the rumored confessional claim did come forward.

"The other thing is it would be hearsay," Rothstein said. In this case, the rules of evidence would allow only a person actually at the bar drinking with Sullivan to be sworn in and offer such testimony; second-hand "he told me" versions are not regarded as reliable enough for a court of law.

Any testimony from the man who told the bishop about the rumored confessional alibi would have been twice-removed "double hearsay" and the bishop's testimony would have been thrice-removed "triple hearsay."

Consequently, lawyers for Sullivan based their flurry of last-ditch appeals on other legal claims: that his trial lawyer did not do enough, that the Florida courts discriminate against people accused of killing whites and that Sullivan's sentence was not properly compared to those in subsequent murder cases.

However, Rothstein said, both the priest-penitent privilege and the hearsay objections to such testimony might have been overcome if the priest who allegedly heard the rumored confession had been identified.

He said hearsay can be admitted if the court determines it is not in the confessor's interest to come forward. In other words, if the court agreed that the Boston man's career or reputation might have been seriously harmed if others learned he was gay, then the priest's testimony would be allowed instead.

Rothstein said court rulings in recent years also allow both hearsay evidence and confidential priest-penitent conversations if there is no other way to prove a defendant's innocence.

In a 1973 decision on a case appealed from Mississippi, the U.S. Supreme Court case approved the use of hearsay — another man's confession — to clear a man accused of a crime he did not commit.

Some Returning 'Overpayments'

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — A state welfare official says she finds it "touching" that more than 1,600 people have sent back food stamp overpayments to the state even though they weren't required to.

About 11,000 welfare recipients around Oregon got an unexpected bonus in October when a computer error caused them to be overpaid. Some people got up to $80 in additional benefits, officials said.

But because the mistake was made by the state, the state could not force anyone to return the extra amounts, said Carol Wisner, spokeswoman for the state Adult and Family Services Division.

Even so, Ms. Wisner said that as of this week, about 1,640 people had sent the overpayments back to the state.

"Considering that most of our clients live on very low incomes, and knowing how difficult it must be for them to return this extra amount when they're already hard-pressed, we're really touched," she said Wednesday.

The overpayments totaled about $240,000, and of that amount about $41,000 has been returned, she said.

State welfare officials don't think they'll be getting many more returns of overpayments at this point, she added.

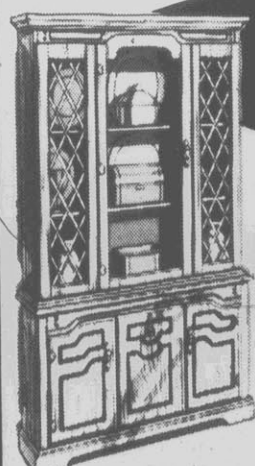

Opposing Rate

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Durham senior citizens plan to ask their newly-elected City Council to reverse its past policy and actively oppose a new rate increase requested by Duke Power Company.

The executive committee of the Durham Chapter of the National Council of Senior Citizens voted Tuesday to go before the City Council next Monday with its request.

The committee wants the city to use its legal staff to intervene and oppose utility rate increases before the State Utilities Commission. The request comes in the light of a recent announcement that Duke Power Co., which provides electrical power to Durham and much of the Piedmont, plans to request permission to raise rates by more than 13 percent.

Vets Ignite ECU Rally, 59-43

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

When a basketball team is a young one, it has to look to its veterans when there's trouble. Last night against Christopher Newport, that's exactly what East Carolina's Pirates did.

Trailing 37-34 with just over 10 minutes left in the game, the Pirates, paced by senior Tony Robinson and junior Barry Wright, reeled off 22 straight points to charge out into a 56-37 lead over the next six minutes and went on to take a 59-43 victory over the Captains.

Robinson, who led the Pirates on the night with 16 points, scored ten points during that spurt, including two three-pointers. Wright added seven points, with one three pointer.

The rally enabled the Pirates to overcome the stubborn Captains whose plodding type of offense left the taller, quicker Pirates frustrated on both offense and defense.

Early on, East Carolina got the shots it wanted, but they just refused to fall for them. Then, the Captains began to dominate the boards against the Bucs, and get the open man for the basket moving out to as much as a seven point lead at times.

"Just what I thought was going to happen happened," Coach Charlie Harrison said. "I told (the Pirates) that they'd come in here and pitty-pad around, run around and get our big guys (outside) playing defense. And I don't think we came ready to play. The staff knew what would happen, but we didn't think our guys wouldn't be excited."

Harrison praised his opponent for its strategy. "That's one reason I don't like playing a Division III school. But they run some of the things that we are going to see later in the year, and it's better for us to see it now. Then, we can always bring out the tape and show them what can happen so they can remember." Harrison said many of the Virginia teams the Pirates play in the ECAC-South use the "flex" offense as did the Captains.

"One of the problems is that we keep waiting for someone to ignite us instead of igniting ourselves. Tony Robinson was one of the few who came to play and it showed. Once they started playing, bang! We're up 20. We started playing defense and got some steals and got the ball inside. But that's something that we have to do collectively."

East Carolina, which fell behind by as much as six in the early minutes of the second half, fought back to go ahead by four at 34-30 before the Captains scored seven straight to lead by three with 11:50 showing.

Robinson then got things started with a three-point play at the 10:05 mark. Wright followed with a jumper that put ECU back ahead, this time for good. Wright added another short jumper a minute into the rally, and Curt Vanderhorst followed with a layup to up the lead to six. Wright scored off another fast break, getting a three-point play, and Roy Smith added another basket. Robinson picked up two free throws and Vanderhorst scored on a free throw.

Robinson then hit another fast break layup, followed by another that turned into a three-pointer when he was fouled. That capped the drive with 4:52 left, making it 56-37.

The Pirates then went to their bench, playing everyone and allowing Christopher Newport a slight three-point rally.

The visitors had led much of the first half, taking the initial lead and not letting ECU move ahead until the 7:06 mark when Robinson hit from the top of the key for a 20-19 edge. William Grady hit on the first of two free throws for a two-point lead, but after ECU moved ahead, 23-21 with 5:30 left, the Captains went into a stall waiting for the final basket — which they got on a 15-footer by Keith Cobb with four seconds left.

"They wanted to keep it close," Harrison said of the strategy. "They move it around and try and get you to relax. This is the first time that most of our guys have seen the flex and they have to learn that you can't relax against a patient, pattern team. If you do, they get you. It's a time when we have to utilize our quickness."

Not that the Pirates didn't try to do just that, but it seemed like every time they were able to slap a ball loose, another Captain was just in the right position to grab it up again.

Newport was not quite as able to run the same patterns in the second half and had to rely more on its outside shooting. "We sealed off the reversal pass and made them put it up outside. And I think they got a little tired. I don't think they are quick enough to go 40 minutes with us."

That proved the case as once the Pirates took command, they raced down the court time after time for layups.

"I'm trying not to get impatient myself (with the team). I kept waiting for the defense to give us a spurt, and finally it did. We're going to have to have spurts like that."

The game saw the return to action of junior guard Bruce Peartree, who has been sidelined with knee surgery. Peartree played 11 minutes and scored four points — the rust showing.

"Our players can't sit back and say, 'I'm a freshman,'" Harrison said. "The public doesn't care whether you're a freshman or a senior, just which column the game goes into. This one went into the left one, and a win is a win is a win."

Robinson's 16 points represented the only double figure scoring for the Pirates, who shot only 44.6 percent on the evening. CNC was led by Buck Moore with 15 — also a lone double figure scorer. The Captains hit on just 40.8 percent of their shots.

The smaller Captains out-rebounded the Pirates, 37-34, led by nine by Moore. ECU was led by Roy Smith's seven.

One thing that pleased Harrison was ECU's low turnover amount — ten. In two games, they've forced 42 and committed only 24.

The Pirates get a much stiffer test on Saturday when they take to the road for the first time. They travel to Richmond, Va., to face the 20th-ranked Rams of Virginia Commonwealth in a 7:35 p.m. game in Richmond Coliseum. The game is the opening contest of the year for VCU, the favorite in the Sun Belt Conference.

Tiger Defense Aids In Win Over Furman

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Clemson's defense saved the day for the Tigers as they slipped past a determined Furman 71-67, Tiger Coach Bill Foster says.

Foster, who left the bench with 2:11 to play because of discomfort caused by a hiatus hernia, said his team's entire attack was built around halting George Singleton.

Nevertheless, the Paladin was the game's high scorer with 17 points.

"We tried to sell the guys on playing defense and not putting up enough bricks to build a motel and we would be in good shape," Foster said. "We were down 8-0 and then we got up by 16, so you have to be pleased with our improvement."

"Our defense kept us in the game when we were not shooting well," he said.

Gene Davis, Furman coach, played two freshman guards much of the game and noted, "our inexperience showed. We did a lot of good things during the game, but we had some bad stretches."

Davis said a zone defense was responsible for much of the Paladins' success on defense.

"There was a tremendous size difference and that makes it difficult to match up, particularly with (Anthony) Jenkins, who presented us with a big problem because we couldn't match up," he said.

Jenkins and Vincent Hamilton each scored 14 points to lead Clemson.

The Tigers, up by as many as 15 points in the second half, had to struggle as Furman cut that lead to 5 points with 1:17 to play.

Furman jumped to an early 8-2 lead, but the Tigers rallied to tie the score at 16 on a jumper by Jenkins with 9:34 left in the first half.

Atari Workers Vote 'No' Over Labor Union Representation

MILPITAS, Calif. (AP) — A vote by Atari Inc. workers to reject a union is a clear slap to labor's hopes of gaining a foothold in the high-tech Silicon Valley, the company said, but a union leader said the campaign will continue.

Some workers cheered Wednesday outside Atari's coin-operated games division after balloting conducted by the National Labor Relations Board showed 143 employees opposed union representation and only 29 were favored it.

The vote came after two years of organizing at Atari by Glaziers, Architectural, Metal and Glass Workers

Local 1621 whose organizer, Kathy Ruiz, had said a victory would start "a domino effect" of unionization in high-tech industry, giving other workers "more courage" to join unions.

The defeat was only the latest in a series of unions trying to break into the mainly non-union industry, but a trade group official warned that electronics companies should not become complacent but instead, "make sure you're listening to your workers."

"The union can come back again and probably will," said Charles Elkind, a spokesman for the American Electronics Association.

Ed Jones, a Glaziers union organizer, quickly declared the Atari election "illegal" and promised to ask for a repeat vote, claiming the company threatened workers with loss of benefits if the union won.

His allegations echoed charges filed last week in two unfair labor practice complaints that cited alleged threats and company questions about workers' union sympathies.

Atari spokesman Bruce Entin said the allegations were "totally untrue."

Entin added: "The employees have spoken and given a message to all unions as loud as it is clear: we don't need a union at Atari."

Union officials had cited hundreds of recent layoffs by Atari in their bid for workers' votes.

Some employees wore anti-union T-shirts and buttons to work and voiced opposition to the labor drive.

"I don't believe they can give me anything more than I have now," said Kery Drake, an Atari employee for three years. "I feel I have it pretty good now and I wouldn't want to go into something unknown."

The vote was the first since 1980 among electronics firms in the Silicon Valley, which takes its name from the chips of silicon used in computer brains. The valley is at the south end of San Francisco Bay.

Three years ago, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers waged an unsuccessful drive to unionize Raytheon Corp. of Mountain View.

Companies in the area where unions represent workers include Lockheed

Missiles & Space Co. Inc., Westinghouse and General Electric, where unions have been in place many years.

A survey by the American Electronics Association showed that of a dozen elections reported to it between 1977 and 1982, none were won by a union.

The Glaziers union has five days to challenge the Atari election, triggering an investigation that could lead to a repeat vote, according to NLRB official John Montoya. Otherwise, the union must wait a year before another election is held.

A victory at Atari would have affected only 179 assemblers, machine operators and cabinet makers, but Ms. Ruiz said, "Our union is committed to doing this, to organizing the Silicon Valley."

In their campaign, union supporters said that 2,500 job cuts at the financially troubled company since late February, including 500 in the coin-operated games division, occurred with little or no notice.

But Entin responded that "the unions cannot create jobs. They cannot save jobs."

The organizing campaign hostility among pro- and anti-union workers at Atari, and in May, some workers turned a fire hose on others after clashing over efforts to get election authorization cards signed.

Robot Does A Paint Job

NEW YORK (AP) — Both garbage trucks and certain city employees ought to come out looking sharper after New York's newest worker assumes a messy post in a paint bay.

The new worker couldn't care less about a regular spattering of paint and won't even mind a 16-hour shift.

It's a garbage-truck-painting robot.

The mechanical man is expected to punch in at the Central Repair Shop next spring, if final approval is given by officials, said Sanitation Department spokesman Vito Turso.

The plan is to program the robot to copy the arm movements of a human painter, and then to let the robot take over the job that workers have said soaks them in a rain of paint.

The department says the $372,000 robot could save $44,000 a year in a working life of 20 to 25 years. And the union representing sanitation workers says it'll go along, even though the robot would cost one job, because it's a job nobody likes.

"It will also improve the city's image," said Deputy Sanitation Commissioner Robert Contino, "by putting one of its operations at the forefront of modern technology."

Now, about the subway system...

Mayor Rides On Rickshaw

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Circling City Hall in a rickshaw, Mayor David Coeyman was giving his body a break. In fact, that's how he earned the ride.

The trip was the payoff of a bet hizzoner had with Mayor George Bald of Somersworth — a wager over whether Coeyman could quit smoking during the "Great American Smokeout" two weeks ago.

He did.

"He is really helping his body tremendously with what he has done," said the 33-year-old Bald, as he lifted the rickshaw handles after Coeyman, 39, climbed into the seat. They headed down the street, to the applause of a crowd.

"This is fun," said Coeyman.

"I can't tell you how good it feels to sit here and say for two weeks I have not had a cigarette after 23 years of smoking two packs a day," he told reporters.

"In about ten years his lungs will be about as clean as if he had never smoked," said the mayor of Somersworth.

Greyhound Union Appears Ready To Soften Terms

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Representatives of striking Greyhound workers seem poised to soften their bargaining demands in an attempt to revive negotiations to end a nearly month-long walkout.

Although members of the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions remain secluded at a downtown hotel in strategy sessions that began Wednesday, a source close to the Greyhound situation indicated union negotiators were weighing a compromise contract counterproposal to Greyhound management.

Some 12,700 union bus drivers, mechanics and Greyhound terminal workers struck the company Nov. 2 after refusing to accept pay cuts averaging 9.5 percent a year. Last week, the rank-and-file voted overwhelmingly to reject a modified company proposal for pay cuts in the range of 7.8 percent.

But John W. Teets, Greyhound's chairman, vowed Tuesday that the bus line would step up its hiring of replacements for the strikers, and that Greyhound would seek to increase its service, which has been cut back to about 10 percent of its pre-strike level.

The 31 members of the union bargaining council traveled here from Phoenix, Greyhound's home base, to reassess the union's stand with the help of federal mediators.

The source, who agreed to discuss the bargaining strategy only on the condition he not be identified, said that Kay McMurray, chairman of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, told union negotiators Wednesday that any resumption of negotiations to settle the strike would likely require a new union contract proposal.

McMurray, emerging from the private talks with the union leaders, refused to discuss what went on behind closed doors. But he did tell reporters, "There's always room for optimism."

The members of the union bargaining committee imposed a news blackout on the strategy sessions, and reporters were not given access to the negotiating committee.

But the source close to the discussions said "we're trying to find out where we stand, what it's going to take to get them (the Greyhound negotiators) back to the bargaining table."

It was not clear what sort of wage or other contract concessions the union bargaining team might be willing to offer the company.

For the most part, the union has held its ranks together, although estimates of the number of workers crossing picket lines vary. Company spokesmen have maintained that thousands of ATU members have decided to work during the strike, while the union says the number is far below that.

But the bulk of the 12,700 Greyhound workers have been on strike for 29 days, and the company has indicated it is willing to continue operations despite the walkout.

Thomas R. Donahue, secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO, also conferred with the union bargaining team, pledging continuing support by the 13.8 million-member labor federation.

Donahue, in a meeting with reporters, noted that the AFL-CIO has asked the rank-and-file to boycott Greyhound bus service, and said he doesn't think the transit workers union "will lose" the strike.

Greyhound officials in Phoenix reiterated Wednesday that the company will move to replace the strikers.

"We are taking applications and training drivers nationwide," said Kathy Davidson, a company spokeswoman.

"We will be in the process in the next two weeks of hiring to fill in where our employees have not returned to work."

Still Oppose Arab Sales

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel's defense minister says his nation has not dropped its opposition to U.S. sales of top-quality weapons to moderate Arab countries such as Saudi Arabia and Jordan.

Moshe Arens said Wednesday the weapons could improve the military capability of those nations to the point of one day endangering Israel.

Israel's refusal to soften opposition to the U.S. arms sales signaled the Reagan administration's failure to win major political concessions in return for more aid to Israel promised during two days of talks with Arens and Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

U.S. officials say President Reagan told the Israelis of the need for the United States to maintain good contacts with pro-Western Arab regimes in order to promote regional stability.

But Arens said the upgrading of Arab weapons forces Israel to improve its own army and to "plan for the contingency that the capability might be turned against Israel."

Meanwhile, at a session with reporters and editors of The Washington Post, Arens said Lebanon should launch "some guerrilla activity against the Syrians" in parts of Lebanon controlled by the Syrians. Guerrilla attacks might convince the Syrians "they're better off getting out than staying in," Arens said.

Couple Held In Sears' Theft

Two people were arrested by Greenville police early today at Sears at Carolina East Mall and charged on one count each of breaking, entering and larceny, according to Sgt. Randy Nichols.

He said officers responding to a 1:20 a.m. burglar alarm at the store saw a man running from the back of the store and apprehended Johnny Ray Taft, 21, of 1612B Hopkins Drive. Nichols said police continued to check the premises and arrested Liz Helen Burns, 31, of 905 Macon St., Kinston, in a storage section of the building.

Police said bond for each person was set at $5,000 on the breaking, entering and larceny charges. First appearance hearings will be scheduled for District Court in Greenville.

Nichols said an estimated $3,200 in merchandise from Sears was found outside the rear of the store and piled up in the aisles. He said officers found television sets, radios, video games, and a bag of sweaters stacked outside, while various clothing items had been removed from racks and were piled up inside. A vehicle parked behind the neighboring Carolina East Centre was confiscated.

Value of the single-barrel shotguns was set at $100 each, she said.

The detective said police have been investigating similar complaints for several weeks.

$1.3 Million Is Given Defector

By WENDEL CHANG

Associated Press Writer
TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — A Chinese navy pilot, who said he ate wild plants to survive as a child in the 1950s, today received a reward of $1.3 million in gold for defecting to Taiwan in his MiG-17 last month.

Wang Xuecheng, 28, also was commissioned a major in the Nationalist Chinese air force at a ceremony during which he renounced his membership in the Chinese Communist Party.

Wang flew his jet fighter to Taiwan, the seat of the rival Nationalist Chinese government, from a Chinese military air base on Zhoushan island, 360 miles northwest of Taiwan on Nov. 14.

The Nationalists have a standing reward in gold for any pilot from China who defects with his warplane. The amount depends on the type of aircraft, and a MiG-17 has a reward of 3,000 taels of gold, worth $1.3 million at the current exchange rate.

Gen. Hau Pei-tsun, chief of the Taiwan armed forces' general staff, handed Wang one ingot of gold at the ceremony which 1,200 military personnel and other spectators attended. The rest of the gold ingots were stacked nearby, covered by a cloth.

Since residents in Taiwan are not allowed to possess gold bars, Wang will receive his reward in a cash equivalent which could earn him an annual interest of $71,250 if deposited in a bank.

Wang, who said he earned a monthly salary of 84 yuan, or $42, in China, will receive a salary of 24,000 Taiwan dollars, or about $600, as a Nationalist air force major.

In a speech at the ceremony, Wang said food was scarce in China during the 1950s and the government there launched a series of campaigns to boost production. "There were times when I had to eat wild plants and sweet potatoes to survive," he said.

Wang, who said he left his wife and parents in China, is the eighth Chinese pilot to defect to Taiwan since 1960, but he is the first navy pilot and his MiG-17 is the first such aircraft brought here.

Nuclear Cargo Drivers Are Ready For Terrorists

By ROBERT MACY
Associated Press Writer

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The government calls them couriers. CBers use the handle "suicide jockeys." Their cargo is earmarked for distant targets, but they end up near hamlets such as Bunceton, Mo., and Rock, Kan.

The elite cadre of heavily armed, well-trained drivers who deliver America's nuclear weapons in $800,000 "rolling vaults" are the key to the nation's most secure truck line.

The armored trucks cover some 8 million miles annually, toting missile warheads, nuclear weapons and components to some 125 sites in the 48 contiguous states.

Most shipments begin at Pantex, the Amarillo, Texas, plant that is the genesis for America's nuclear weapons. From there the shipments fan out in Safe Secure Trailers (SSTs) or Safe Secure Railcars (SSRs) to military installations and the nation's nuclear testing ground, 70 miles northwest of Las Vegas.

The rigs are driven by truckers who have a "Q" clearance, the highest security designation given by the FBI. The trucks are accompanied by escort vehicles containing armed couriers.

Their every move is monitored electronically by the Department of Energy's Safeguards and Security division at Kirtland Air Force Base, Albuquerque, N.M. All of America's nuclear weapons are produced, tested and transported under the direction of the DOE.

"We know where they are, what they're doing every moment," DOE spokesman David Jackson said of the special shipments. "And we're prepared to respond to any problem."

Some 130 of the 230 employees in the DOE's Transportation Safeguards Division are drivers who haul the world's deadliest cargo for a salary averaging $25,000 annually.

"If you don't like driving trucks our way — hauling atomic bombs around, shooting guns, strenuous training and keeping in shape — you need not apply," Jackson said.

From the outside, the SSTs resemble a normal 18-wheeler. That's where the similarity ends.

"The tractor is armored and bullet-proof," said Jackson. "It has sophisticated communications equipment that allows us to keep track of a shipment at all times. And the trailer has a number of systems that deny entry. Unless you have the combination and do everything right, you don't get in. There are systems to disable the truck so it can't be moved."

"The trucks are so sturdy that in the event of a really severe accident, such as rolling down a cliff, the interior cargo would be well-protected," Jackson said. "The weapons are tied down in special containers and can't be armed. A nuclear detonation is virtually impossible."

The containers are designed for "worst-case" catastrophes and must pass a punishing series of tests such as fire, immersion and free fall. The cargo must emerge tied down and in place after simulated 60 mph head-on crashes.

There has never been a hijack attempt, although there have been some accidents.

"If you drive 8 million miles a year, you're going to have blowouts, breakdowns, drunken drivers plowing into you," added Jackson. "But we've never had an accident in which the contents posed a threat to the drivers or the public.

"Any nuclear device contains conventional high explosives and it's unlikely these would go in an accident. If under the most incredible circumstances you could imagine you had an accident in which you had an explosion, there still would be no nuclear detonation."

Jackson said the DOE cargo is safer than many trucks carrying propane or toxic chemicals.

The first SSTs were developed in the early 1970s in response to worldwide terrorism threats.

Schedules, destinations and routes are not announced in advance. Even local police departments are not aware of shipments, although state police officials are informed.

Couriers are trained in the use of .357 magnums, M-16 rifles, submachine guns, grenade launchers, shotguns and sniper rifles with infrared scopes for night action.

Driver training includes surprises such as a helicopter attack, light-armored-vehicle assault, anti-tank rockets and blockades. Physical training includes hand-to-hand combat.

One woman is included among the drivers, who are mostly veterans of the armed forces. Their eight-week training period includes not only a strict physical regimen, but also training in areas such as radiation monitoring.

Most shipments include a driver, a driver riding "shotgun" and a relief courier. As many as seven others may be riding in escort vehicles that keep the truck continually in sight.

Jackson said the drivers "don't consider themselves people who take inordinate risks. They have the potential for getting in harm's way, but they have the training to do their job. We've never had trouble getting volunteers."

COURIER IN TRAINING — An unidentified courier fires at a cardboard attacker during training at a Department of Energy range in Albuquerque. The couriers, responsible for moving nuclear weapons, undergo training in case of hijack attempts. (AP Laserphoto)

Tito's Isle Will Be A Nat'l Park

By LARRY GERBER
Associated Press Writer

BRIONI, Yugoslavia (AP) — The Yugoslav government plans to make a national park of Brioni Island where Josip Broz Tito lived in secluded luxury during his 35 years as president.

Few Yugoslavs or outsiders have set foot on this Adriatic island since the revered communist leader turned it into his private retreat in the 1950s. Deer and elk still roam free among the Roman ruins and exotic plants as they did before Tito's death May 4, 1980.

Lions, tigers and bears roar in an open-air zoo, and 170 people care for three villas and two hotels which are still used for occasional official visitors, said Anton Vitasovic, the guide for a group of journalists who toured the three-mile-long island recently at the invitation of the government.

Tito's small home on the nearby Vanga Island will become a museum.

With upkeep costing the equivalent of about $1.2 million a year, Brioni is probably the most extravagant of the 29 residences left behind by Tito, who lived in grand style during his presidency.

It is also a drain on the national treasury at a time of financial stress. Many Yugoslavs are burning candles during daily electric-power outages and the average motorist is rationed to 10.4 gallons of gasoline per month because there isn't enough money to import enough fuel.

Foreign borrowing and other policies of the Tito years left the country with a foreign debt officially estimated at $19 billion.

The retail inflation rate is 37 percent, and 900,000 of the 23 million Yugoslavs are out of work, said Vice President Zvone Dragan, top-ranking economic adviser to President Milka Planinc.

Tito, nevertheless, is remembered as the man who unified and held together a diverse nation of six republics, two provinces and more than 20 ethnic and religious groups.

Even though that unity is now feeling the strain of shrinking resources and money supplies, there appears to be little likelihood that Tito's memory will be tarnished by today's problems.

His portraits are everywhere and soldiers guard his favorite Brioni retreat as if he were still alive.

"The army is still protecting this area until somebody tells them they don't need to do it any more," said Marjan Rotar, former manager of Brioni's hotels.

Plans to open the island are part of a national drive for Western tourist dollars. Helped along by the 1984 Winter Olympics at Sarajevo in February, the country hopes to take in $1.35 billion next year in tourist revenue alone, Dragan said.

Officials said Brioni will be made a national park during or after 1984.

Tito spent six to eight months a year on the islands during his later years.

Soviet leaders Leonid I. Brezhnev and Nikita S. Khrushchev were visitors to Brioni.

Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru of India and President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt joined Tito on Vanga in 1956 to sign the declaration inaugurating the non-aligned movement — now commonly referred to as the Third World.

during his last stay in 1979.

Armed soldiers and caretakers watched visitors warily on Vanga and the main island. Visits to Tito's official residence on Brioni were not allowed.

But Miladen Milinovic, a tourist official, told the reporters they were among the first outsiders to visit since Tito's death.

"You should be honored to set foot on this island," he said.

No Fixed Age for Plastic Surgery

How old should a girl be before she can have a nose operation? At what age can it be done safely and with a guarantee of success? — Mrs. I.J.D., Conn. Dear Mrs. D.:

Teenage girls and boys become highly sensitive about the size and shape of their nose during adolescence. At this age there is an alteration of body image which must satisfy them and give them a comfortable feeling of inner dignity.

Dr. Andrew Ganz, a prestigious plastic surgeon in New York City, has been particularly interested in the physical and psychological problems that occur in this age group. He believes that the nasal plastic operation, or rhinoplastic surgery, should be delayed in adolescence until there is mature development of the bone and cartilage of the nose.

There are factors such as heredity and general physical structure and development that must be taken into consideration before the decision to perform nasal plastic surgery is made.

It must be emphasized that the judgment of the surgeon is made with each individual case, for there are many criteria which determine the so-called ideal time for surgery. One of the most important is the understanding of the youngster's emotional and psychological balance. Many adolescents are so traumatized emotionally and embarrassed by their physical appearance that the time for surgery should be stepped up.

Generally after 16 years of age surgery can be performed on a girl's nose with excellent physical and emotional results. Surgery in boys can probably wait until the age of 18 years.

Again I emphasize that there is no fixed rule.

I am particularly interested in the last part of your letter that inquires if the operation can be done with "safety and with a guarantee of success."

Modern-day anesthesia and the exquisite refinements of surgical procedures ensure the safety of the operation. Only in rare instances does any complication arise.

Dr. Ganz emphasizes that "there cannot possibly be a guarantee of the end result of the nasal plastic operation. Any such guarantee is fraught with potential hazard to the relationship between the doctor and the patient. In most instances it is possible to anticipate the final result. Yet there are so many variables in the healing capacity of the individual that any attempt at prophecy would do an enormous injustice to the patient."

Nasal plastic procedures have developed enormously in the past two decades. Surgical distortion of the nose now rarely occurs when the operation is performed by highly trained surgeons who have spent many years perfecting this delicate technique.

COOPERATED

MILAN, Italy (AP) — A court has convicted six leftist terrorists of the 1980 murder of a prominent journalist, but immediately paroled two for cooperation with prosecutors.

A Floating HQ Planned

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon plans to set up a small floating forward headquarters in the Middle East by the end of the year to help protect U.S. interests in the Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean regions.

A staff of up to 20 officers and men will be placed aboard a U.S. Navy ship operating with a small flotilla of warships called the Middle East Force, the Pentagon has announced.

U.S. Central Command leaders long have wanted to set up a small staff in the Middle East. The command, headquartered at MacDill Air Force Base in Tampa, Fla., can draw on a pool of about 230,000 U.S. Army, Marine, Air Force and Navy personnel as needed for rapid deployment in a vast region covering 19 nations.

It is known that U.S. military officials would have preferred to establish a forward headquarters ashore, but no country in the region apparently was willing to allow its territory to be used for that purpose.

The Middle East Force, normally numbering two to three destroyers, operates for the most part in the Persian Gulf. Such a naval force has sailed those waters for about 30 years.

The new mission will help plan military exercises and administer arms aid and sales to countries in a region stretching from Pakistan in the east to Egypt in the west, and from Iran in the north to Kenya in the south.

"We have no intention of establishing permanent bases in the region," the Pentagon said when asked if the creation of the floating headquarters is a forerunner to such a move.

The new floating headquarters will be headed by Marine Brig. Gen. Ray M. Franklin

U.S. Sees Revival In Leprosy Among Immigrants

BATTLING LEPROSY — Dr. Thomas Rea, a University of Southern California dermatologist, sits in his office where he treats 400 leprosy patients at County-USC Medical Center. (AP Laserphoto)

By LEE SIEGEL
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Carlos immigrated from Mexico in 1969, married and fathered two sons, now six and 11. But he keeps a secret from his boys — Carlos has leprosy.

"Sometimes I think they may catch it," he said. "I want to leave them free, without problems. They have all of life ahead of them."

Carlos — who asked that his real name not be used — is typical of most leprosy patients in the United States. He works full time, is raising a family, poses almost no threat of infecting anyone but relatives and suffers few symptoms other than occasional burning pain in his legs and a few subtle spots on his body.

But like many other leprosy patients, Carlos represents what experts say is a trend: Leprosy, the disfiguring scourge of the skin most associated with exotic lands and Bible stories, is increasing in the United States because of the immigration from Southeast Asia and Latin America.

"These people come to the United States and bring their disease with them," said Dr. Thomas Rea, a University of Southern California dermatologist who treats Carlos and about 400 other leprosy patients at County-USC Medical Center. Leprosy, also named

Hansen's disease after the Norwegian doctor who discovered leprosy bacteria in 1873, is a little-understood disease that over a period of many years attacks body tissue, especially skin and nerves.

If untreated, it can lead to spots or sores on the body, nerve pain, accidental hand and foot mutilation stemming from victims' inability to feel pain through damaged nerves, and even death from complications.

During the first 9½ months of this year, newly reported cases of leprosy totaled 193 nationally, compared with 160 during the same period of 1982, said Dr. Charles Shepard, chief of the leprosy section at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

With the exception of a few years, the number of leprosy cases reported in the United States has increased annually — more than doubling from 103 in 1963 to 231 in 1982, he said.

There are 4,000 to 5,000 leprosy patients in America and 11 million worldwide, most in India and Southeast Asia, he said.

"The increased incidence is due entirely to imported cases," said Dr. Robert Jacobson, clinical chief for the U.S. Public Health Service leprosy facility in Carville, La.

The 1983 CDC figures show most of the new cases were reported in areas that receive the most immigrants from Southeast Asia and Latin America: 58 in California, 28 in Hawaii, 27 in Texas, 24 in New York City, 15 in Washington state, nine in Arizona and six in Florida.

"California has been number one for quite a while in new cases of leprosy reported," Shepard said. "There's more immigration in California from countries that have leprosy," particularly Mexico, Southeast Asian nations and the Philippines.

Shepard, Rea and other experts said that despite public fears about leprosy, the disease is only mildly contagious. Immigrants who imported leprosy rarely infect other people, and then mostly relatives living under the same roof, they said.

Carlos, whose three siblings in Mexico also have leprosy, works as a restaurant busboy — a fact Rea said "doesn't present any problem. That's not the sort of contact that seems important."

"When patients are treated, they pose no risk of infecting anyone else," said Gilbert Gibson, who manages Seton Medical Center in Daly City, Northern California's major leprosy clinic.

Leprosy's milder form either disappears spontaneously or can be cured with drugs, while the more severe form — which Carlos

Symptoms usually don't appear until three to 10 years after a person is infected, so many immigrants — including Carlos — don't show symptoms until after they arrive, Shepard said.

While leprosy is relatively common in many of the immigrants' home countries, it remains endemic only in two parts of the United States — the Gulf Coast of Texas and in scattered areas of Louisiana, where it was brought in the 1700s by French-Canadian pioneers. And in those areas there are fewer cases each year among non-immigrants.

No one really knows why the disease is common in certain countries and areas, but experts speculate leprosy is linked to poverty, cramped housing, poor nutrition and possibly heredity.

Rea called the rise in U.S. leprosy cases an "opportunity" because, like leprosy, cancer and rheumatoid arthritis also may be linked to a malfunction of the body's immune system.

"If we understand more about how this abnormal immune regulation comes about in leprosy, we might get a much better idea of how it comes about in cancer and arthritis," Rea added.

Researchers now are working to develop a vaccine and new drugs to combat leprosy, especially since some leprosy is resistant to dapsone, one of the major drugs used in treating the disease. At USC, Rea and his colleagues are using funds from the Knights of St. Lazarus fraternal order to do research aimed at eventually producing a vaccine.

Shepard said a vaccine now is being tested in humans in Norway, and testing should start next year in the United States, Great Britain and Venezuela.

New Program Will Pay For Veterans Training

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Unemployed North Carolina veterans of Vietnam and Korea are eligible for more than $7 million in the next two years through a new program, but state officials say the tight economy has slowed the project.

"We have had several veterans send off to the Veterans Administration for certification," said Charles Erwin, manager of the N.C. Employment Security Commission office in Asheville. "We are out beating the bushes trying to get employers interested. If jobs were more plentiful, it would be better."

Congress recently approved $75 million to fund the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983. The money will be used to reimburse employers for the costs of hiring and training eligible veterans. Employers can be reimbursed for 50 percent of a veteran's wages during on-the-job training, up to a maximum of $10,000. Training will be limited to a maximum of 15 months.

Erwin said his job is to match certified veterans with interested employers.

"We can either get the employers interested first or get the employees and then look for an employer," Erwin said.

Veterans can find certification forms at regional VA offices and local ESC offices. The VA will have final approval.

"The key is to get an employer interested," Erwin said.

To qualify for the program, a veteran must have been unemployed for at least 15 of the 20 weeks before applying. A certificate is valid for 60 days. Prohibited from using the program are veterans receiving educational assistance through the GI Bill or the Post Vietnam Educational Assistance programs. Employers receiving assistance for a veteran under the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit Program also are barred from the new training program, according to the VA.

Erwin said there are no quotas attached to the funds. The training assistance is available statewide as needed.

"Training can be the most expensive part of hiring an employee," Erwin said. "With this offset, an employer may be able to take another employee he needs for training."

The program also allows employers to contract with educational institutions for job training, according to the VA.

During the recent recession, an estimated one million Vietnam-era veterans were unemployed. The program was created to reduce the high proportion of veterans among ranks of the unemployed.

No Place Else For Some Of Patients

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — About 27 percent of the patients in North Carolina's four psychiatric hospitals are considered inappropriate for such settings by the state Department of Human Resources, recent data shows.

According to data released Wednesday by A. Eugene Douglas, state mental health director, about 760 of the 2,770 patients at the hospitals — Dorothea Dix in Raleigh, Cherry Hospital in Goldsboro, John Umstead in Butner and Broughton in Morganton — simply have nowhere else to go.

Included are approximately 360 patients, most of them elderly, who have exhibited no violent tendencies but have received mental treatment. They are awaiting transfer to a small family care home of nine or fewer patients, to a rest home or to a nursing home that can provide more skilled medical services, Douglas said. They will be moved when appropriate beds or rooms become available.

The hospitals are also treating 122 mentally retarded people who do not need to be in the hospital setting, he said. Another 237 patients are classified as needing nursing care for behavior management, including victims of Alzheimer's disease, which prompts senile-type behavior at an early age.

"These people are there simply because the place has a fence around it," Douglas said. "If they are left unsupervised, they may walk in front of a car, fall into a river. They show the symptoms of extreme senility."

FLIMFLAM MEANINGS HOUSTON (AP) — The term "plastic" when used to define a person usually means not real, not strong or unsubstantial. The implied meanings are obsolete. For years, plastic materials have been put to the toughest uses, such as football helmets, gas tanks for trucks, canoes and submarine cable.

Opening lead: Jack of ♦.

There are many ways to handle the diamond suit in today's hand. How you tackle the suit cannot be determined until you know more about the hand.

After North stretched to jump raise spades, South's hand was worth a full ace more than a minimum opening bid. Therefore South launched into Blackwood and contracted for a small slam when he discovered that his side wasn't missing two.

West's club opening lead attacked declarer's soft spot. The jack was covered by the queen and king and won by the ace. A study of the hand showed that, if trumps were 3-1, it would not help declarer to play for a 3-3 diamond split, even if he took a winning finesse — a defender would ruff the fourth diamond while declarer still had a club loser. But before declarer could tackle diamonds, he would have to find out which defender, if any, held the third trump.

Declarer cashed the king-ace of trumps. Had West showed out on the second round of trumps, only one diamond holding would allow the contract to succeed —

East would have to hold four low diamonds and West Q-9 doubleton.

When West showed up with the long trump, declarer could make his slam only if East held precisely the queen doubleton of diamonds. Declarer finessed the ten of diamonds and cashed the king. He crossed to the board with the ace of hearts to cash the ace-jack of diamonds, discarding two clubs from his hand as West followed helplessly. On the fifth diamond, declarer discarded his last club, and the defenders could get no more than one trump trick.

Note that declarer must end up in dummy after the second trump trick. If he does not, he is an entry short to set up and run the diamonds.

Christmas Pay Raises Leaving State's SHP Out In The Cold

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — About 2,800 North Carolina law enforcement officers can expect pay raises to help them through Christmas, but Highway Patrol troopers will be left in the cold.

The Highway Patrol received a salary adjustment two years ago from the General Assembly while other state workers were under a salary freeze. But prison guards, State Bureau of Investigation agents and other officers will receive varying increases on top of the 5 percent raise granted all state workers this year.

The salary adjustments come under a legislative policy inspired by a study showing officers are earning less than what other employers could pay them.

State wildlife officers will reap the biggest increase. Entry level officers will jump three pay grades, from one paying $12,012, to one offering a minimum of $13,644. That means an officer still earning the minimum would receive a 13.6 percent raise.

Others will get no adjustment until a two-year freeze on merit pay raises is lifted.

When the officers will get the extra money will depend on how quickly personnel workers can complete the paperwork. Only a few are expected to have bigger paychecks by their next payday, Dec. 20. However, all raises are retroactive to

Dec. 1.

The pay increases for law enforcement officers come at a time when many of the state's 150,000-plus teachers, university educators and other state workers are grumbling because the Legislature held them to the 5 percent raise last summer.

But lawmakers set aside a separate fund of about $10 million this year for salary adjustments, to be made when classes of workers were identified as underpaid and likely to depart for higher-paying jobs.

State officials say they don't know how much of that money will be used for law enforcement because the paperwork hasn't been completed.

Shot, Killed After Quarrel

LENOIR, N.C. (AP) — A 64-year-old Lenoir man was shot and killed Wednesday morning, apparently following an argument with his brother, authorities say.

John Franklin Hogell was found dead by police on a sofa around 10:30 a.m. in his brother's apartment. Police said Howell had been shot several times.

Authorities said that Luther Jones Howell, 65, was arrested on Wednesday and charged with murder. He was in Caldwell County Jail without bond pending a first appearance hearing Thursday.

Snafu Separates Honeymoon Pair

By ALAN FRAM

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — It was love that drew Christopher and Marcelina Soprenuk into matrimony.

But now that their Mexican honeymoon is over, it might take more temporal forces — like the efforts of three nations and a New Jersey congressman — to get them back together again.

After a week in idyllic Cancun, Soprenuk, a 33-year-old intern, is back in the Garden State, putting in his shifts at Methodist Hospital in Brooklyn, N.Y.

His 30-year-old bride is spending her days at the Yucatan Peninsula sort, hoping that she can be back in this country by the end of the year.

The couple left for Cancun shortly after their Nov. 12 marriage. Soprenuk said Wednesday that his wife, a citizen of the Philippines who has worked as a nurse in this country for 5½ years, was assured by Mexican and American officials that her work visa was the only travel document she needed.

But when the pair tried leaving Mexico Nov. 21, authorities told her she did not have the proper papers to come back to the United States. Soprenuk returned four days later and has been fighting to get her back ever since.

"It's incredible, it really is incredible," Soprenuk said from Emerson, N.J., Wednesday. "I speak to her practically every day, giving her news about what is going on."

With the help of Rep. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J.,

Soprenuk is trying to speed the processing of needed documents, including clearance by the FBI and the Mexican government and a check by Manila police.

"It could be two or three weeks, I hope," said Lynne Hurwitz, who is in charge of constituent services in Torricelli's Hackensack, N.J., office. "Or it could be longer."

Soprenuk said that to save money, his wife is staying at a $7-a-day hotel, rather than the $80-a-day resort where they stayed during the honeymoon.

"I told her to go out exercise, and get herself tired so when she comes home at night she can go to sleep and not worry too much," said Soprenuk.

"She just got caught in a bureaucratic mess," said Ms. Hurwitz.

LENOIR, N.C. (AP) — Seven men were sentenced to prison terms ranging from one year to seven years on counterfeit charges Wednesday.

The sentences came after Lenoir detectives aided a U.S. Secret Service probe that began on the opening day of the World's Fair in May 1983 when a Lenoir man was arrested for passing bogus $20 bills.

Lenoir police said the bills surfaced in Caldwell County and other parts of North Carolina.

mats made instant airfields a contribution to victory in World War II. But today's jets suck grass up through the holes into their engines.
A problem.
Great Lakes ore boats used to be 750 feet long. Now they are over 1,000 feet. Cleveland has trouble handling them.
A problem.
How deep a hole do you have to dig and cover it with what to survive an atomic blast?
A problem.
All these problems and many, many more come here to the Waterways Experiment Station of the U.S. Army Engineers for solution. They usually find it. WES is a laboratory staffed by 1,400 scientists and technicians who study how waves behave, rivers run, concrete crumbles, the ground gives in or doesn't.
It tries to provide solutions to engineering problems both military and civilian, such as earthquake-proofing buildings or shock-proofing missile silos or housebreaking the Mississippi River. But things can get pretty far afield.

Since the Corps of Engineers, the biggest builder in the world, may also be its biggest user of concrete, WES runs the biggest concrete lab in the world. It test-hammers model runways to determine how long airports, civilian and military, can stand the pounding of jumbo jets. It gave the specs to bury the North American Air Defense Command inside a mountain in Colorado.
Since the Corps oversees 25,000 miles of waterways in the United States, WES is testing to determine if the Asian grass carp will eat its way through the hydrilla weeds that clog them.
Since the Corps dredges the nation's harbors and has a lot of muck and sand on its hands, WES studies what to do with the spoil. One answer is to create manmade marshlands. Also make islands for nesting shore birds. WES and the Corps have tried some in Mobile Bay and learned they work fine for terns if they're kept sandy. Terns don't lay eggs in vegetation.
WES was created in 1929 after the Mississippi's third worst recorded flood to study how to best tame the river. During World War II it built a scale model of the Mississippi Basin with the help of some German POWs who had once fought with Gen. Rommel's Afrika Korps. As now refined, the 800-acre model can demonstrate what a cloudburst in South Dakota or leaky faucets in Louisville will do to the river.

The Mississippi is, of course, a civil works responsibility, one of many that take up 60 percent of WES' $70 million budget. The Engineers have models of 60 other ports and rivers. One of Cleveland, is used to study the ore boat problem and determine where best to build jetties. One of Niagara Falls studied where to blast rock to keep the falls scenic but also avoid blocking its huge hydroelectric plant.
The Corps studies beach erosion from an 1,800-foot pier near Kitty Hawk. This project is under the Coastal Engineering Research Center, recently moved here from Fort Belvoir, Va.

In keeping with the times and the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, WES has greatly expanded its environmental facilities.
The 140 environmental scientists at WES have a $20 million budget to examine how dredge spoils can be used to cover strip mines. They are investigating what to do about melaleucas, an exotic tree planted in Oklahoma to control erosion that has also begun invading lake shallows. Corps environmentalists are determining if it is safe to import two species of weevils from Argentina that eat canal-clogging water hyacinths and only water hyacinths.
Beginning with the premise that the Engineers dig earth and move it, WES over the years has become the government's expert on dirt. It sets off explosions to test its ideas on Minuteman silos. It tests how tank treads "relate" to different soils and vice versa (and claims the world's speed record for a tracked vehicle: 74 m.p.h. for a souped-up armored personnel carrier).
The same reasoning gave WES the responsibility for designing the wheels for NASA's lunar rover, which it did after examining some moon rocks.
Since the Engineers have always been the Army's camouflager, WES is at work to find how to disguise targets against microwave detection, heat sensors and even satellites. Forty percent of WES' effort is in such military fields, when the Engineers swap their civil white hard hats for their khaki ones.
Overall, its work ranges from the cataclysmic — how best to build against earthquakes and nuclear weapons — to the mundane. One such is the best and cheapest way to rebuild canal lock walls against the ravages of time, ice and inexact tow barge captains.
Given the high costs of not only, building but also tearing down buildings, the concrete lab is busy devising methods of making do with the aging post offices, Pentagons, Capitols, Agriculture Departments and other buildings that house the federal government.

The Engineers also have a lab in Hanover, N.H., which studies how thick ice has to be to move tanks across it, which gets you into how to keep helicopter rotors ice free, which gets you into how to dig for minerals in frozen ground. Another Corps lab in Champaign, Ill., is probing ways to make military structures more energy efficient.
The Corps lab in Dallas? That one buys and repairs for the Corps all of its diamond-tipped tools.
Here, where you find runway pounders cheek by jowl with tank tread departments and blast analyzers and bog builders and concrete mixers, it is very difficult to define just what kind of lab WES is.
But astronauts did motor across the lunarscape, the APC did hit 74 m.p.h., Cleveland will survive most likely and Niagara Falls abides.

Bike Theft Ring Caught
RANDLEMAN, N.C. (AP) — A juvenile theft ring that allegedly saw bicycles stolen, reassembled and then sold again has been solved by Randleman police, authorities say.
Randleman Police Chief Joe Farlow said an 18-year-old has been charged in connection with the ring. He said he plans to draw juvenile petitions against two other youngsters.
Farlow said most of the bicycles were stolen from Randleman homes.
"We've known this has been going on for about a year and have had some suspects. But we haven't been able to make arrests on it until now," he said.
"We've had just a rash of bicycle thefts. Bicycles were being stolen in a quantity. Then they were torn down and the parts reassembled."
The reassembled bicycles were then sold to other youngsters, he said.
"In one case, a boy's bicycle was stolen and he was then sold a reassembled bicycle."
Jonathan Richard Hassell, 18, of Randleman, has been charged with two counts of misdemeanor larceny in the Nov. 23 theft of two bicycles, Farlow said. Hassell was released on a $2,000 unsecured bond.

Thief May Lose A Hand
KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — The government will carry out the first public hand amputation of a convicted thief on Dec. 9 under recently imposed Moslem law, the official Sudan News Agency reported today.
Quoting Internal Affairs Minister Ahmed Abdul-Rahman Mohammed, the agency said preparations for the amputation of the thief's right hand at the wrist have been completed. The thief was not named and details of the conviction were not given by the news agency.
The news agency said the amputation will be carried out at Khartoum's Kober Prison by health ministry and prison personnel and the thief will receive medical treatment afterward.
The amputation is in line with the Moslem legal code decreed by President Gaafar Nimeiri on Sept. 9. Since then, five people convicted of theft have been sentenced to amputation and the sentences have been confirmed by an appeals court. Three of the sentences are under Supreme Court review.
More than 40 Sudanese, including some women, have been publicly whipped for drinking alcohol in Khartoum, as offense punishable by 40 lashes under the code.

Play It Safe In Children's Toys
NEW YORK (AP) — Check any toy you buy, particularly metal or plastic ones, for sharp edges or points which might injure a child, warns safety expert Dan Turcott.
For stuffed animals, make sure the seams are tightly sewn and eyes and nose are securely fastened, advises Turcott, director of F.W. Woolworth's Quality Assurance Laboratory. If the seams tear open the child might eat the stuffing, he explains, and if the eyes and nose parts can be pulled off, the child might swallow them.
When buying a bicycle, be sure that it carries the tag or statement on the box of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. This certification means that the manufacturer has met the standards for strength and safety.

Energy Use Is High In South
NEW YORK (AP) — Since 1960, energy consumption in the southern United States has doubled and some southern states lead the nation in total and per capita energy consumption.
Honeywell's Energy Management Information Center says Texas currently uses 11 percent of the nation's total energy — more than any other state. Louisiana, consuming 5 percent of the total energy, ranks 7th among the top 10 energy using states; Florida ranks 9th, consuming 3 percent of the total energy consumed in the United States.
Louisiana uses more energy per capita than any other state.

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — 'Tis the season to be wary, says "Consumer Reports Presents: The Holiday Special," HBO's Christmas special of a program that tips viewers on the best and worst buys in turkeys, antacids and toys for tots.

This is one program that definitely won't appear on the commercial networks. Imagine a "Consumer Reports" expose ridiculing the claims of some product followed by a commercial pitch for that same product.

HBO, a pay-cable service, has no sponsors, so it can bite the hand that feeds the networks with an entertainingly useful program produced by Consumers Union, the non-profit testing organization that publishes Consumer Reports magazine.

"This is truly an anti-commercial-television show," said Bridget Potter, HBO's senior vicepresident for original programming. "It's the only show that tells you what not to buy."

So tonight, and three other times this month, HBO's 30-minute "Consumer Reports" will offer helpful hints for Santa's shopping list. This is the 15th "Consumer Reports" show in a random series that began on HBO in 1979.

If you're in the market for toys, the holiday program says, quite sensibly, that products that do the same thing over and over again quickly lose their appeal. "Twas the night after Christmas," says a character wearing red pajamas and a full white beard, "and everyone was snoring because the gifts were all boring."

To prevent post-Christmas blahs, "Consumer Reports" recommends creative toys such as construction sets and mind-taxing games. As for adult gifts, ranging in price from $50 to $900, the program rates clock-radios, small cameras, cordless telephones and video recorders.

There's more to Christmas than stuffing merchandise under the tree, and viewers will also hear beneficial tips on stuffing themselves. "Stay away from turkey rolls," the show says. Now, that's something we've suspected for some time but never had the reliable, support data from Consumers Union.

And, until "Consumer Reports" said so, who would have thought that there would be no butter in a Swift's Butterball turkey?

Equally indispensable is the segment on antacids. "Which one is right for you? There is no clinical proof that any brand of antacid works better," the program says, suggesting that ordinary baking soda may be the most effective and cheapest remedy.

In a spoof of forever-young Dick Clark and his "American Bandstand," "Consumer Reports" does American Bookstand, listing the most popular books for ages 8-13: Judy Blume's "Superfudge" series, "E.T.," "Black Stallion," "Garfield the Cat" and "The Hardy Boys."

It's this kind of clever packaging that makes interesting information even more attractive, and Ms. Potter credits executive producer Alvin Perlmutter, formerly in charge of public television's imaginative "Great American Dream Machine," for the show's style.

The show's substance is the product of the researchers at Consumers Union. HBO is involved in topic suggestions, "but once we've agreed on examining something, like microwave ovens, then they get all the data," said Ms. Potter. "You could say we have creative input, but no factual input."

"HBO places no restrictions on them at all. They place more restrictions on us because, sometimes, in the interest of programming, we would like them to be more outrageous. But they won't do anything to damage their credibility."

In fact, HBO wanted the researchers at Consumers Union to do a holiday special last year, but they rejected the idea because they didn't think they could get enough information.

NEW YORK (AP) — In a cold, blustery wind outside the Minskoff Theater, thousands of aspiring stars lined up for hours for their chance to audition for the television show "Fame."

Inside, producer Bill Blinn scanned about two dozen brightly smiling hopefuls. From them and others who waited outside Wednesday for the open "cattle call" audition, he hoped to find two dozen principal actors and dancers to play the incoming class at the mythical academy based on Manhattan's High School of the Performing Arts.

"So above all, they have to be young looking," Blinn said. "Next, they've got to be able to dance. Their looks won't help them a bit if they can't move right."

"Fame" ran for two years on NBC but was canceled last April. Down, but not out, with strong backing from critics and fans, the show was picked up for syndication this fall and is currently carried by 125 stations nationwide.

Rosanna Magarelli, a 24-year-old trained ballerina and apprentice actress, showed the same persistence Wednesday.

Shunning the life that snaked down West 45th Street, through Shubert Alley and onto West 46th Street, she sneaked into the third-floor studio, scribbled a fake number on a card to make it seem she had been in the line outside and began the screening process.

She was quickly rejected on the basis of appearance — the first hurdle in the audition — but the undaunted Jersey City, N.J., native pulled her shoulder-length brown hair into a bun, replaced her turquoise striped jeans with a ballerina's leotard and went right back for the dance audition.

Across the room, Blinn huddled with production coordinator Frank Fischer and choreographer Otis Sallid.

"OK. You, you, and you," said assistant Michael McAssey, finally pointing his pen at Miss Magarelli. "Would you please stay. The rest of you, thank you for coming."

"I figured I had nothing to lose, so why not try again?" said Miss Magarelli, who believes a part in "Fame" would let her combine her talents. "I wouldn't have to choose between acting and dancing. I could do both," she said.

Miss Magarelli obviously could, since she and two others in her group of a dozen at the dancing audition were asked to come back later in the day for a singing and acting audition.

"Two down, two to go," she said, heaving a hefty sigh.

"I knew I could do it. There was no doubt in my mind," said Terrence Hunt, a roly-poly but ebullient 25-year-old from St. Louis. "Especially since I remember to wear my super special glasses," he said, poking a finger through the lensless frames.

"Me too," chimed Tom Perna, 21, a dancer and college student from Fort Lauderdale, Fla. "I knew my tan would work."

But that was only after round one. Perna, a handsome blond with an Adonis-like build, was cut after the dance audition while Hunt was tapped for a callback.

"It's an artificial, arbitrary and awkward process," Blinn told one group, "but unfortunately it's the only one we've got."

"I truly hope they don't get discouraged," he said later. "I'm sure I'll pass up more than one who five years from now will turn out to be another Bette Midler."

OFF THE AIR — Linda Ellerbee, who will be without a program after "NBC News Overnight" ends Saturday, says she won't sign on with "First Camera." She has been asked, but "It's not the right thing for me to do right now," says Linda of the low-rated newsmagazine show. (AP Laserphoto)

Tentative Pact

NEW YORK (AP) — Musicians from New York to Los Angeles will just keep recording along after their union and the industry reached a tentative three-year agreement, averting a threatened strike.

Terms of the contract, reached Wednesday afternoon between the American Federation of Musicians and companies including CBS Records and Warner Bros. Records, were being withheld pending a mail ratification vote.

Pencil-User Manual Set

By LEE SIEGEL
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — In an unabashed bid to combine "yesterday's technology with today's terminology to make tomorrow's money," computer maven Peter McWilliams has written a new word processor manual — for the pencil.

The paperback parody, set for publication today, gives simple instructions for using the pencil, which McWilliams calls the McWilliams II Word Processor.

In the 144-page, illustrated satire, the tip of the pencil lead becomes a "printer port" and its eraser is a "deprocessor."

To "create a file," simply "place a sheet of paper under the point of the McWilliams II Create."

To save the file, "put the piece of paper in a safe place."

And if you wish to "delete" part of the text, simply "place eraser (deprocessor)" side of the McWilliams II over the portion of the file to be deleted. Rub and rub. Portions of text under the eraser will magically disappear. Brush away magic dust.

Beached by telephone at a computer show in Las Vegas, McWilliams said he expects the book to sell well.

"If millions of people fork over $4.95 for Garfield (the cat cartoon books), then yes, this is worth $3.95," McWilliams said. "I have no pride. I have no shame. I have not much money and I want a lot."

The "McWilliams II Word Processor Instruction Manual" is the seventh computer book published by McWilliams' Prelude Press, which claims that some people have called the McWilliams II "the greatest thing since Pet Rocks."

The West Hollywood company previously published the popular and "only slightly more serious" volumes including "The Personal Computer Book" and "The Word Processing Book."

McWilliams says the McWilliams II was made possible by the "radical discovery" of "wooden microchips," but admitted he lifted the idea from the 1982 April Fools edition of BYTE magazine.

"I actually paid the author of the piece $150 and paid BYTE magazine $50," said McWilliams. "I didn't steal it. I bought it. I now own the idea."

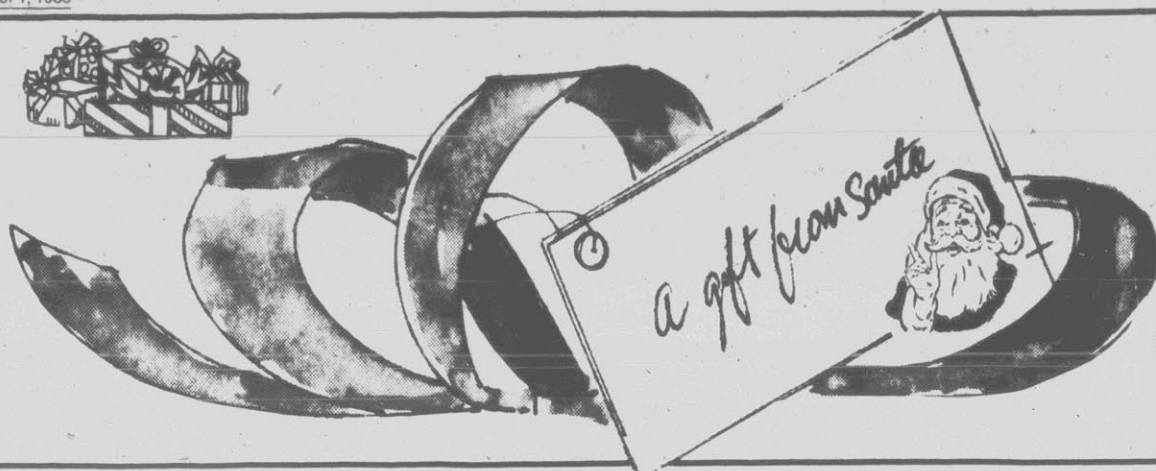

He said he got the idea for the book when, as a promotion for his other books, he distributed pencils with a couple pages of instructions and "everyone loved it and started ordering it."

The new book cites numerous convenient aspects of the McWilliams II: it's portable, prints characters in any language, uses no energy, is easy to learn, has no moving parts and is "user friendly" — meaning that even a computer ignoramus can learn to use it.

The book says that "every McWilliams II comes with an unconditional five-year guarantee. If anything goes wrong with your McWilliams II, simply return it to us along with $5 for postage and handling, and we'll be happy to repair it or send you a new one absolutely free."

The volume also shows numerous other uses for McWilliams IIs — as stays to truss stuffed poultry, as chopsticks for eating Chinese food and even as knitting needles.

McWilliams warns that while the McWilliams II may look like an ordinary pencil, "I spend nights not sleeping when I think there are people out there buying pencils when they really want McWilliams II Word Processors."
