A New City Council Sworn In Thursday

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

An overflow city hall gathering witnessed a historic occasion Thursday night as Greenville's first female mayor assumed her duties along with a newly elected City Council that includes the first local black mayor pro tem.

Janice Buck, who was first elected to the council two years ago, joined four incumbent council members and two new officials in receiving the oaths of office from Superior Court Judge David E. Reid.

Returning to the council are Louis Clark, Judy W. Greene, William Hadden and Stuart Shinn, while Dr. M.W. (Henry) Aldridge and Edward E. Carter begin new tenures.

The council followed tradition by electing Carter as mayor pro tem for the next two years. Carter was the choice of the board after leading the council field in the November elections and returning black representation to the board following a two-year absence. Ironically, Carter's election as mayor pro tem came only two years after he narrowly missed gaining a seat on the council in the 1981 balloting.

Mrs. Buck, who occupied the mayor pro tem chair the past two years, began her administration by paying tribute to outgoing Mayor Percy Cox, a 17-year veteran of city service. She said the three-term mayor, in providing "outstanding leadership," was "dedicated to the betterment of the quality of life" here and "answered the call to serve."

The new board honored Cox and outgoing Councilman George Pugh by adopting for the record resolutions citing the retiring officials for their service and presenting them engraved plaques. Pugh, a former member of the city's Board of Aldermen, served one term on the council.

A supportive crowd that spilled out into the hall adjoining the third-floor council chambers turned out for the ceremonies. A reception honoring Mayor Buck and the new members of the council followed the city hall activities.

bers joined incumbents Louis Clark, Judy Greene, William Hadden and Stuart Shinn for Thursday evening's installation ceremonies. (Reflector Staff Photo)

Two Marines Wounded In Shiite Militia Shelling

By G.G. LABELLE
Associated Press Writer
BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) —

Shiite militiamen fired on the Marine base at Beirut airport today, wounding two U.S. servicemen, and Israeli gunboats and helicopter gunships attacked a PLO base near Tripoli.

A PLO spokesman said the Israeli shelling killed one person and wounded three and that the Israelis set up a naval blockade to prevent Yasser Arafat and his loyalists from evacuating Tripoli. Israel denied it set up a blockade.

The Marine contingent at the airport retaliated with small arms, 40mm grenades and anti-tank Dragon missiles and "the firing ceased. There were no other casualties or damage," Marine spokesman Maj. Dennis Brooks said.

Beirut radio stations said the counterattack devastated the Shiite position, the second wiped out in two days by the Marines.

Brooks said one Marine was slightly wounded and one Navy Seabee suffered minor wounds when two rocket-propelled grenades and smallarms fire struck near the northeastern perimeter of the base shortly before 8 a.m. (1 a.m. EST).

Brooks said the Marine was in a bunker and the Seabee was driving a bulldozer when the base came under fire.

The wounded Marine was evacuated by helicopter to the amphibious assault ship Guam. The Seabee suffered a broken eardrum when a rocket propelled grenade blast hurled him off the tractor. He was treated at the airport, Brooks said.

The PLO base shelled by Israeli gunboats contained tents, buildings and vehicles. Israel's military command announced. It said the bombardment scored "accurate hits" on the fortification which it said was a half-mile north of Tripoli, where Arafat is trapped.

The Israeli attack came three days after a bomb exploded on a Jerusalem bus, killing four Israelis and wounding 46. Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization claimed responsibility for the blast.

But a government official in Jerusalem, speaking to reporters on condition he not be identified, said the Israeli attack today "shouldn't be considered an eye-for-an-eye action" and "should not be viewed as an effort to prevent Arafat from leaving Tripoli."

The Israeli official said the gunboat assault on the Tripoli base was "in line with our long-standing policy of hitting terrorist targets from which terrorists are sent out on actions or where terrorist actions are planned."

The official reiterated Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's condemnation of the United Nations' decision to allow the use of its flag on Greek ships heading for Tripoli to evacuate Arafat and his loyalists from the siege mounted by Syrian-backed rebels in the PLO.

"If the United Nations lets them leave, it lends them international legitimacy... We can't go along with this," he said. "It is inconceivable to have an international organization of which we are also a member give safe conduct to people who have committed such a terrible, heinous crime" as the Jerusalem bus bombing.

A Fatah spokesman in Tripoli, Ahmed Abdul-Rahman said one person was killed and three wounded in the pre-dawn attack, and that after the shelling the Israeli navy set up a blockade to halt the evacuation of Arafat and 4,000 of his fighters from Tripoli.

Abdul-Rahman said Arafat sent an urgent message to the U.N. Security Council to intervene and lift the Israeli blockade. He said Arafat also sent messages to France and Greece seeking a reaffirmation of their commitment to help carry out the evacuation.

Abdul-Rahman said France had agreed to provide a naval escort for four Greek ships that will take Arafat and his fighters to Tunisia and North Yemen, probably next week.

Arafat has been trapped in Tripoli since Nov. 3 by guerrilla mutineers who accuse him of softening his stance toward Israel.

BASE, Calif. (AP) — Scientists inspected Columbia and its astronauts today for signs of wear from a record 10-day flight, but it may be weeks before officials know why a computer and a navigation device failed and forced an 8-hour landing delay.

With the $1 billion European Spacelab in its cargo bay, Columbia ended its flight of more than 4 million miles in a dusty touchdown at 3:47 p.m. Pacific time Thursday, less than an hour before sunset.

The ninth space shuttle mission was hailed as a success for the reams of scientific data accumulated during the voyage. Fourteen countries contributed to 73 experiments conducted round-the-clock in an unprecedented amount of scientific activity.

"We have many scientific firsts that came out of this mission," said NASA administrator Gen. James Abrahamson, flanked by shuttle Commander John Young and pilot Brewster Shaw at a post-landing news conference.

"We also have one that has been proven time and time again, and that's that the level of uncertainty in the universe is a constant," Abrahamson said.

The four mission specialists — Owen Garriot, Robert Parker, Byron

Lichtenberg and West German scientist Ulf Merbold — were hurried off for a week of 12-hour-a-day experiments on how the body reacts to weightlessness and the return to gravity. The tests will duplicate those done during the flight.

Columbia, which has now made six trips into space, was towed to a scaffold-like device which will hoist it onto a Boeing 747 jetliner for its return to the Kennedy Space Center in Florida, planned for Monday.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration scientists examined its exterior for damage and planned another briefing today.

However, inspection of its failed computer — which had four backups on board — and a broken navigational guidance device will await Columbia's arrival in Florida. Abrahamson said "weeks" of tests would be needed to determine the reasons for the breakdowns.

The six astronauts — the biggest crew on any space flight — were not endangered by the delay from the scheduled 7:59 a.m. PST landing, and had food and fuel for another two days, NASA officials said. The flight had already been extended by one day to give the astronauts time for more experiments and some sightseeing.

But Young, praising Shaw's handling of the situation, joked that when the computers failed, "I turned to jelly."

"There was a problem and I don't want to minimize that, but ... we were not on the edge of some huge problem," Abrahamson said.

Mission Control ordered the delay after a powerful jolt shuddered through the craft, followed by the failure of two computers and the navigational device, called an Inertial Measuring Unit or IMU. One computer was quickly brought back up. Columbia had two backup IMUs and only one was needed for landing.

Santa Parade Here Saturday

The Greenville Jaycees' Christmas parade Saturday will begin at noon on First Street near the Willis Building.

Jaycee spokesman Bobby Tripp said the parade will proceed south down Reade Street, follow Reade Circle to Dickinson Avenue, turn right on Dickinson and proceed half a block to Washington Street for a left turn, and continue out Washington north to First Street for termination.

Tripp said the noon starting time is a departure from the 10 a.m. schedule followed in recent years.

Former Congressman Jenrette Draws Fine And 2 Years In Prison

WASHINGTON, (AP) — Former South Carolina Rep. John Jenrette was sentenced to two years in prison and fined $20,000 today following his bribery conviction in the FBI's Abscam case.

"You have betrayed your public trust, not only as it relates to the citizens of your district in South Carolina, but for everybody, everybody in the country," U.S. District Judge John Garrett Penn told Jenrette in handing down the sentence.

Jenrette, a Democrat, is one of seven members of the House and Senate convicted on various charges in the undercover investigation involving a phony Arab sheik offering bribes for help with an immigration bill.

Five have received sentences of from one year to three years and fines up to $50,000. Only one, former Rep. Richard Kelly, R-Fla., has yet to be sentenced.

Jenrette's lawyer, Kenneth Robinson, pleaded with Penn for a sentence of no more than six months because, the attorney said, Jenrette was the only Abscam defendant whose judgment was distorted by alcoholism.

"Can't there be more mercy for Mr. Jenrette when the prosecutor says the man has been remorseful and he has suffered?" Robinson asked.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Reid Weingarten, in urging that Jenrette receive at least as severe a sentence as the other defendants, told Penn he realized Jenrette had performed important community service since his conviction three years ago and was remorseful.

But Weingarten added that "these compassionate feelings must be overcome by the objective component ... his almost unbelievably gross sellout."

"I don't think it would be fair or accurate to pin Mr. Jenrette's conduct in Abscam on his alcoholism," Weingarten went on.

Jenrette's real offense, the prosecutor said, was that the American public "will conclude that's how business is done on Capitol Hill."

Anything less than a substantial prison sentence will fuel the cynicism Mr. Jenrette's conduct has caused.

The judge said he was disturbed that the government's case against Jenrette seemed to originate with the desire to "get at you or some congressman."

Penn said he was "astounded" to learn during testimony that the FBI targeted Jenrette without having any suspicion that he had been involved in any previous crimes.

The judge said he saw no evidence that Jenrette, a Democrat, solicited a bribe, "but I still cannot overlook the fact that ... you could have walked out of the room and reported to the FBI or someone else."

Penn's sentence was as follows: Two years and a $10,000 fine for conviction of accepting a bribe; two years and $10,000 for conviction of conspiracy; the prison terms to run concurrently; a suspended sentence of two years and $10,000 on a third count involving Jenrette's attempt to solicit more bribe money.

Dear Abby

Amount Of Bill Should Be Total Concern Of Host

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Please, settle this long-standing dispute between my daughter-in-law and me.

I say that when we are out for dinner and I am the host and the bill comes to the table, the guests should engage in polite conversation and show no interest in the check.

My daughter-in-law not only insists on knowing how much the bill is, she offers her unsolicited opinion on how much the tip should be!

Please print your answer. I want to show it to her.
STORMY IN SUNLAND, CALIF.

DEAR STORMY: The amount of the bill and the size of the tip should be the exclusive concern of the host or hostess. Your daughter-in-law should contribute her opinion only if she is going to contribute to the bill.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 22 and my fiance is 21. I'll call him "Leon." We've been engaged for two years, but we never set a wedding date because Leon wanted to pay off his motorcycle, van and boat first.

Well, in the two years we've been engaged, I've had two abortions, and I just found out I'm pregnant again. I honestly don't know how this keeps happening, Abby. I've been on the pill for two years and I hardly ever forget to take it. Leon never uses any protection because it's against his religion.

He wants me to get another abortion, but this time I think we'd better keep the baby and get married. I've always wanted a pretty church wedding. My parents promised me one, but I'm afraid if I tell them I'm pregnant, I won't get the wedding. Also, the kind of wedding I want will take four or five months to plan, and I'll be showing by then. Please tell me what to do.

IN LOVE IN TAMPA

DEAR IN LOVE: Tell your parents you are pregnant and want to be married as soon as possible. Forgo the kind of wedding that will take four or five months to plan. There's no reason why your wedding can't be both pretty and prompt. And if it's against Leon's religion to use birth control, tell him to use self-control.

DEAR ABBY: I just returned from picking up my 9-year-old son at school, and I am at the end of my rope.

This is the fourth time in as many days that "Johnny's" teacher called and asked me to pick up Johnny because he had wet his pants. Today she told me that unless something is done about this I will have to take him out of school.

Johnny stopped wetting his bed when he was 4, but he has not as yet achieved consistent daytime dryness. Sometimes he will be fine for weeks, then for no apparent reason he starts to wet his pants again. It doesn't matter if he's in school or on vacation, he still wets his pants.

I've had him to a pediatrician, then to a urologist, and neither doctor could find anything physically wrong, so I took him to a child psychologist. She said, "Ignore it and don't make an issue of it; in time the boy will outgrow it."

This is very hard to ignore, Abby. Now what?

END OF ROPE

DEAR END: Take the psychologist's advice, then ask her to write (or telephone) Johnny's teacher enlisting her patience and cooperation.

To expel the boy from school for this reason would only compound his problem. In the meantime, buy him some disposable, absorbent, diaper-type underpants with plastic linings. Your urologist can tell you where to get them.

Sarah McClendon Is Cited As Woman Of Conscience: 1983

By PATRICIA McCORMACK

United Press International
Accustomed as she is, Washington reporter Sarah McClendon, 73, found herself in the spotlight the other day.

Attention this time, however, wasn't trained on her during a televised presidential press conference while she asked a thorny question — her trademark during scores of news conferences spanning administrations of nine presidents.

The scene this day was a luncheon at the Pierre Hotel in New York City. Mrs. McClendon was being honored as the 1983 Woman of Conscience, a prestigious award from the National Council of Women of the United States, an umbrella group for 27 organizations whose aggregate membership totals millions of women.

Leaders of these organizations, ranging from the Women's Relief Society of the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-day Saints (Mormons) to the YWCA, saluted Mrs. McClendon, a native of Tyler, Texas. Mrs. McClendon began her news career writing for newspapers in Texas, and later founded her own news service for newspapers and radio stations in Texas and elsewhere.

She accepted the award and then launched an attack on secrecy in government.

"Taxpayers don't know what's going on," she said.

"There's too much secrecy. We don't know what goes on between the president and heads of state when they meet. They don't tell us."

"We usually find out some things from the other countries later. If we found out what they really talked about maybe we would know why the talks fail."

"If we keep on asking questions maybe, just maybe, we will be able to find out why there is poverty, what is behind the high interest rates, why we have the arms race with the Soviets and why we now are on the verge of world war."

The first Woman of Conscience award in 1963 went to author Rachel Carson, who was cited for protecting the environment from pollution. Other award recipients have included anthropologist Margaret Mead and medical pioneer Dr. Mary Allen Engle.

"Sarah McClendon has made tremendous contributions as a journalist," said Nancy Barker, president of the NCW, presenting the award.

It includes a grant contributed by Clairol Inc. as part of its public service program.

Mrs. McClendon came to Washington as a WAC

(Women's Army Corps) public affairs officer during the presidency of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

In January she will join a new public television program, "Inside the White House," that also will feature Helen Thomas, veteran White House correspondent for United Press International, and columnist Betty Beale.

The Woman of Conscience award this year focused on people's right to know through communications, marking United Nations World Communications Year.

Mrs. McClendon said she is firmly committed to the people's right to know.

She has aimed questions during the Reagan administration at such explosive issues as civil rights and sex discrimination in the federal government.

During Richard Nixon's administration she often harped on the issue of neglected veterans. During President John F. Kennedy's administration she sought to uncover information about security risks.

Mrs. McClendon said she sees herself as a "bridge between big government and little people."

The citation said Mrs. McClendon had been named 1983 Woman of Conscience "Because she has fearlessly asked tough questions of nine United States presidents."

Mrs. McClendon recalled her dealings with some.

"When I asked President Nixon about the failure of the Veterans Administration to get education checks to veterans all over the country, he at first said it was not true."

"But in 10 minutes afterwards he started an investigation. Later he changed administrators and the whole VA personnel at the top and went on national radio to say I was right."

About President Reagan, Mrs. McClendon said:

"He doesn't like for any one to disagree with him. He dodges questions. He often plays down a reporter's question as if the reporter actually had no basis for asking."

"If a reporter pursues, as I did one time in trying to get out the report on the study of discrimination against women from the Justice Department, he may end up making the reporter look silly, disrespectful or antagonistic."

"But in the end he found the report and is now giving it to us gradually."

The National Council of Women of the United States, a non-profit, non-partisan association, is an information center and forum for current national issues for its membership of autonomous organizations and individual members.

Pitt County Farm Bureau Receives Award This Year

The best public relations program in North Carolina for 1983 has been awarded to the Pitt County Farm Bureau.

The award was presented at the annual meeting of the N.C. Farm Bureau Federation Convention held in Asheville Sunday through Wednesday.

Gray Faughter, vice president of the federation said, "Pitt County has done an outstanding job telling the farmer's story during 1983. The committee used the newspaper, radio and television to help create a better image of the farmer."

"The purpose of the public relations effort is to create a better understanding between the farmer and the urban population. This is the second year Pitt County has received the award," said Helen Wooten, chairman, Pitt County Farm Bureau Public Relations Committee.

Alma Worthington is a member of the N.C. Farm Bureau Women's Advisory Committee. Twenty-five women from across the state make up this committee whose purpose is to work to involve women in every area of Farm Bureau and to coordinate the state and county work.

or strapped to a wrist.

The button activates an alarm hooked into the telephone, which automatically dials the hospital's new center and buzzes for 5 minutes.

After a call to the home to assure that the alarm was not set off accidentally, hospital personnel contact a relative or neighbor from a list chosen by the subscriber, said Katherine Cardini, the Lifeline coordinator at Ellis.

If none is available to check on the caller, police or paramedics are sent to the scene.

Hospital officials say the $16-per-month cost of the service, which can be waived in cases of financial need, is a small price to pay for the degree of independence and security the system offers.

"I want to live here (at home), and now I don't see any reason why I can't," said Mrs. Edith Cusato, 77, a Schenectady widow who joined the program after recovering from injuries suffered in an emergency at home.

She had slipped and fallen on her garage floor. She sustained a broken shoulder and wrist and her calls for help were unheard for more than two hours.

"Finally the little boy next door who always picked up my mail — I'd give him a lollipop or some candy, you know — came by with his mother and heard me calling," Mrs. Cusato said.

She decided to join Lifeline at the urging of her daughter, who lives out of state.

ter, who lives out of state.

"I like to be doing things. I can't just sit around and do nothing," she said.

The emergency button functions up to 200 feet away from the telephone, allowing most users to wear it anywhere in the home or yard, hospital officials said.

At this writing Ellis has 12 subscribers. Mrs. Cardini said she hopes the program eventually will cover 75 people.

The program is restricted to people with known medical problems. But in cases like Mrs. Cusato's, health emergencies strike unexpectedly.

The Carrier Alert program in Schenectady has been working informally since 1974, pioneered by William Cooke, president of local 358 of the National Association of Letter Carriers, and the local Office for the Aging.

"The Postal Service and the national union realized that some locals were doing it and decided to take the bull by the horns and give it some organization," Cooke said.

People join the postal service program by filling out cards with names of friends or relatives to be contacted in case of emergency.

The cards are filed at the Office for the Aging, and stickers are placed on participants' mailboxes.

Letter carriers who notice an unusual mail build-up at a home notify the Office for the Aging.

Union officials campaigning at senior citizens meetings hope to bring in a total of about 500 members.

Two Programs Cooperate To Keep Elderly At Home

By ELIZABETH RICCI
SCHENECTADY, N.Y. (UPI) — A recently retired Schenectady letter carrier, Alfred Villano, probably saved a life two months ago when he noticed an unusual mail build-up at the home of an elderly man on his route.

Police were notified and discovered the man had been without food or water for at least three days.

Even the most independent senior citizen living alone shudders at stories like this, of contemporaries who suffer medical emergencies at home and are unable call for help.

Two nationwide programs are helping prevent such situations in Schenectady. One is the Boston-based Lifeline, whose more than 800 programs serve 30,000 subscribers in the United States.

In Schenectady, where the elderly population is 8 percent higher than the national average, the postal Carrier Alert system takes over where Lifeline leaves off.

The postal system formalizes what many letter carriers have been doing for years — keeping an eye on mail build-up at the homes of elderly people who live alone.

Lifeline operates locally through Ellis Hospital's new personal emergency response center.

It looks so easy as Tom Clark takes small bits of clay and gently sculpts them on little armatures. Gradually these clay pieces become Wood Spirits™, Mountaineers and Special Characters.

Each piece is hand cast from an original with a special blend of resins, crushed pecan shells and wood chips. Each statue is then carefully hand painted and hand stained. The creations are signed by Dr. Clark and each new edition is numbered.

All collector purchases must be registered by the Cairn Dealer and certificates of authenticity and Cairn newsletters are mailed directly to collectors for each purchased artwork. Once retired, all Cairn artworks are eligible for secondary market trading.

Growth Lies Ahead

A new mayor and City Council have formally taken office with the swearing in ceremonies Thursday night.

With four incumbent members of the council, along with a previous council member, there should be enough experience there to carry on city business affairs adequately.

The city's first woman mayor, Janice Buck, took office. She had previously served on the council.

It should be an interesting and productive two years for the new council. Its members have many problems to face, but they are problems most councils would like to have, for they involve the amazing growth our city has seen in recent years.

With growth, however, comes the need for better traffic movement, more efficient policing, better fire protection, more adequate recreation and libraries.

We are sure the council and mayor are aware of these things and they will be doing what they can to maintain adequate city services for a growing municipality. There is much to be done, but Greenville is an economically healthy community and that is a major base to build upon.

'Free' Can Cost

Studies show that people who have to pay part of their medical bills are just as healthy as those who have free medical care. Additionally, the studies show that those who pay a part of their medical costs make one-third less visits to physicians.

Sadly, those who receive free medical care do little to change their poor health habits and thus the implication is that the more frequent visits do little to change their general health.

Soaring cost of health care is a matter of major concern to our nation and cost-sharing programs are being considered as a way of reducing the costs.

Many private health plans require cost sharing through deductibles and by the insured paying a percent of the routine health care cost, with full coverage being reserved for major medical matters.

It is likely that government-sponsored health care programs will move in this direction.

It has often been shown that that which comes free is largely wasted.

Fortune Hunting

NEW YORK AP — As viewed by Albert Lowry, the man who helps people build fortunes in real estate, the 1980s are in some ways a mirror of the 1970s.

In that earlier decade "smart" people bought property through the use of creative financing, which often meant borrowing 100 percent of the property's value, fixing the property up and taking out still another mortgage.

So long as values rose and rents were sufficient to cover the payments, it could be done. Not a day went by that inflation didn't bail out scores of buyers who had gone in over their heads without reading the terms.

Lenders were equally creative, especially in the repayment terms. Some of the mortgages they offered called for rising monthly payments. Many mortgages were written for very short terms. Lots of them included balloon payments.

Recession came. The two incomes that often supported the investments were reduced to one. The tenant lost his job and couldn't pay the rent. The monthly terms continued to rise. The balloon note came due.

And inflation wasn't there to bail out the harried owner. His property was repossessed. How times change. Tens of thousands of people did indeed make their own little fortunes in the 1970s. But maybe as many failed.

Lowry, therefore, has produced another book, "Hidden Fortunes," subtitled "How To Profit From The New Opportunities Of The 1980s."

The new opportunities are mainly in picking up properties at distress prices from those who have had to repossess them. And, it must be added, are anxious to get the properties off their books.

You find such properties by asking lenders such as savings institutions, by reading the legal newspapers, by checking for possible postings in court houses or sheriff's offices.

As in the 1970s, you might still obtain creative financing terms. Lending institutions aren't in the business of managing properties. They are in the money business, however, and they might use their money to move properties.

Lowry estimates he has purchased $6 million of property this year alone, and throughout his career has been involved in $35 million worth of purchases, sales and exchanges.

Less than two decades ago at age 37, Lowry was a supermarket butcher in Oakland, Cal. who "wanted to be a very successful person."

That, he says, is when he found out about real estate, and learned that "the ability to read, write, add and subtract were the only skills needed."

NEW YORK AP — In the waning weeks of the year, many Americans develop a case of tax-shelter fever.

And as financial experts unanimously agree, it can often prove to be a painful and costly affliction.

"At this time of the year, we urge extreme caution in selecting any tax sheltered investment," says William Brennan, publisher of a newsletter on tax matters. "There is simply not enough time for a proper evaluation from both a tax and economic standpoint."

"Some of the investments offered this late in the year are viable and will be beneficial in the right circumstances," adds the accounting firm of Arthur Young. "Others, however, are not. The annual year-end rush to obtain tax shelters sometimes clouds the true issues, and you must be attentive to the various risks-benefits involved."

Not so long ago, tax-shelter investments, in areas like real estate, oil and gas, cattle breeding and equipment leasing, were aimed mainly at wealthy people. But as inflation pushed more and more Americans into high tax brackets, they gained much broader appeal.

From about $1 billion in publicly registered funds in 1975, the market has grown to more than $10 billion this year, says Howard Slayen, tax partner in the Palo Alto, Calif., office of Coopers & Lybrand, accountants.

"Furthermore, total investment activity in this area is probably understated by as much as 50 percent since many investments are privately placed,"

WASHINGTON — Last May, President Reagan afforded us an opportunity to test a foreign government's attitude toward travel restrictions. Almost immediately after Reagan went before television cameras with aerial photographs of alleged Soviet arms deliveries to Nicaragua, we approached Sandinista press officials in Managua about visiting the port city of Corinto, the "arms depot" in question.

To our request, a government official promptly replied, "Go ahead." No escort, she said, would be necessary. (When we got to Corinto, less than 24 hours after Reagan's speech, we found that field kitchens, not tanks, had been off-loaded.)

The story comes to mind in the wake of Reagan's decision recently to deny Nicaraguan leader Tomas Borge that right to visit the United States. While, in the interest of dialogue, a supposedly unfriendly nation regularly opens its doors to citizens and officials of the United States, the bastion of freedom closes its own for the pettiest of reasons: Basically, as State Department sources conceded, the idea of a Borge tour simply gave Washington the willies.

For some time, Borge has wanted to speak directly to influential Americans in academic and foreign policy circles. Despite years of solitude in strongman Anastasio Somoza Debale's prisons, he's a masterful pol anxious to test his persuasive powers on U.S. audiences.

That one more politician would pose any threat to this nation's interests is laughable, as Anthony Quainton, our level-headed Managua envoy who supported Borge's visit, apparently believed.

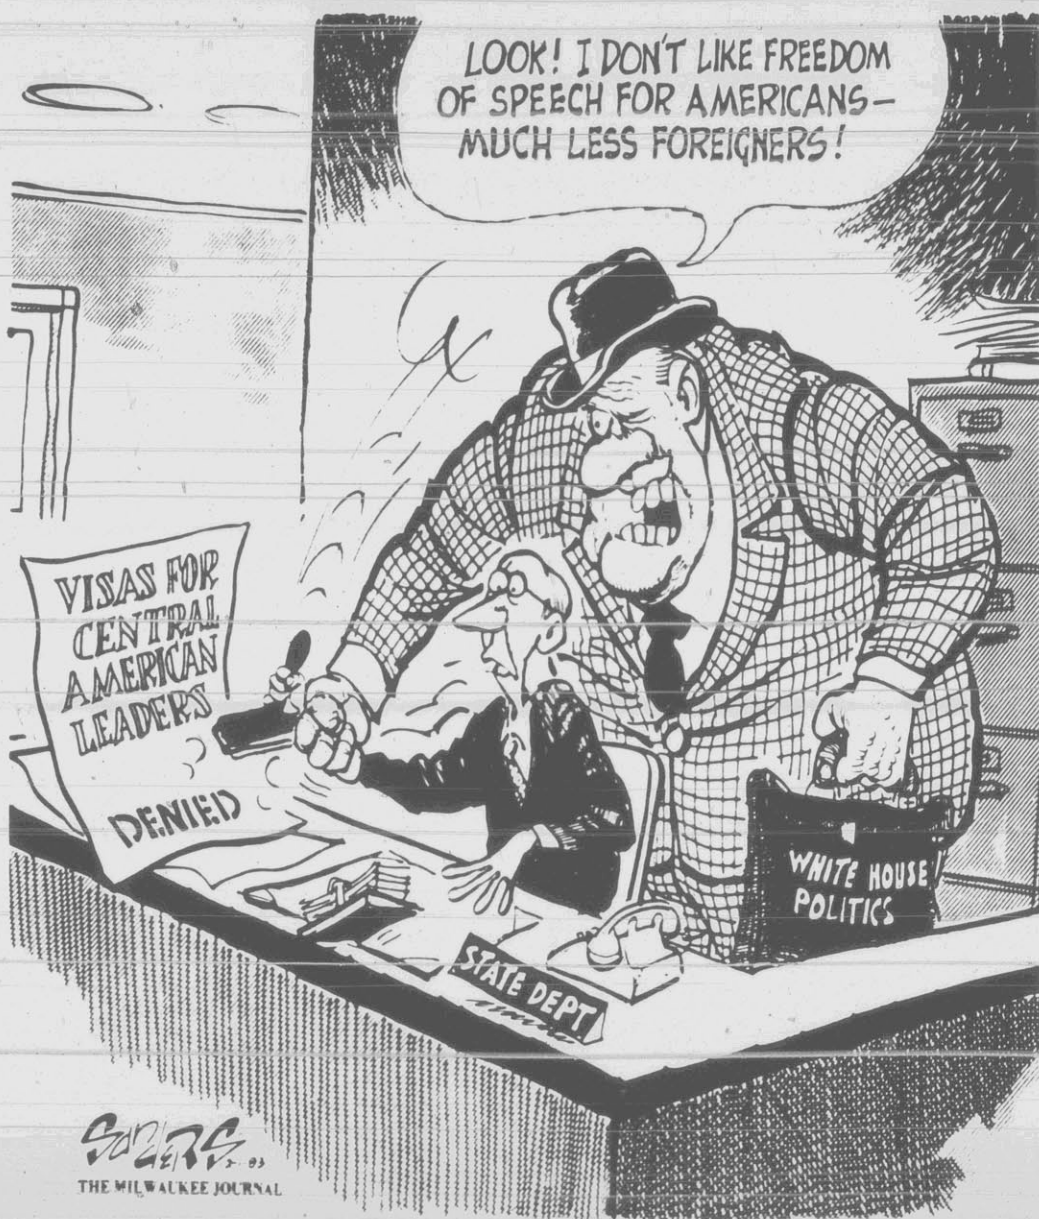

Yet, White House higher-ups who understand media manipulation as well as anybody, obviously thought otherwise. Their simultaneous decision to deny a visa to Salvadoran rightist leader Roberto D'Aubuisson, who visited the United States last spring, was said to demonstrate a disdain for "extremists" of any sort. Such a comparison betrays the ignorance of Nicaraguan history that has helped soil America's name in the region.

U.S. leaders' paranoia about exposing Americans to terrorist attacks is justifiable. Their paranoia about exposing Americans to alternative ideas is not.

Footnote: The ill will from Washington toward Managua is sure to pass through Havana as well. Constantine Menges, a National Security Council adviser, told a group of Cuban emigres that the administration will upgrade pressure on Cuba in the coming months.

Menges, who is widely credited with applying the "domino theory" to Central America, said the United States will move to "isolate" Havana and increase support for Cuban resistance groups. Menges added that reports of moderating the guerrilla war against the Sandinistas were "groundless."

State Teems With 'Official' Panels

RALEIGH — North Carolina has a commission that studies redshirting, a commission that places art in public buildings, a licensing board for Cape Fear River pilots, a task force on "New Horizons."

Look in the executive branch of government and you'll find enough commissions, study committees, task forces and licensing boards to fill up an organizational chart. In all, the executive branch is currently authorized to operate 320 permanent boards and commissions.

This week, the General Assembly will begin looking at the need for all of these boards and commissions. A committee of the Legislative Research Commission will hold its first meeting Friday. First up on the agenda will be Ran Coble, executive director of the N.C. Center for Public Policy Research. For nearly two and a half years, the center has been researching these panels.

The center has compiled a four-inch thick directory of state boards and commissions. It is the largest research project, in terms of sheer volume, the center has ever published. The center's report will, for the first time, fix a price tag on the operation of these boards and commissions — the governor's office is unable to provide such a figure — but Coble refused to release it beforehand saying he wants the legislative panel to hear it first. Accompanying the directory will be a set of recommendations which Coble estimates could affect 150 of the boards and commissions.

"There are groups in there that we've been really impressed with how conscientiously they have represented all groups and regions of the state and how conscientiously they do the work set out for them," Coble said in an interview. "On the other hand, there are groups which haven't met in a year. And there might be six groups doing work in one small area of government expertise. So, there's some duplication of effort."

Many of these boards and commissions are criticized as political tools of the sitting governor. Jim Hunt is widely considered to be a master of creating panels upon which he can place his political supporters. In that way, he keeps his grassroots organization working.

Coble said the center pursued that angle but could not find any proof that Hunt had used these panels politically to any greater extent than did previous governors. They've always had a political nature, Coble says. But he adds that Hunt's computerized system of keeping track of appointments to the panels has added a level of sophistication unknown before Hunt took office.

The center's study found a number of problems which the legislative study will want to address. Some of the panels rarely meet. Some duplicate each other. Some regulate such narrowly defined fields that they affect only a handful of people. Some focus so narrowly on one problem that they are unable, in their recommendations, to provide the executive branch with any sensible perspective.

In general, Gary Pearce, Hunt's press secretary, defends the principle behind the panels. "They provide a citizen's perspective and involvement in the workings of state government. A lot of these things are too important to be dealt with just by bureaucrats and these boards give a perspective from outside of state government."

Coble agrees with Pearce, to an extent. "You're getting a lot of citizen involvement, a lot of good advice, for the money," he said. "But, at some point, you have to ask just how much citizenry involvement and advice the executive branch needs."

Tax-Fever Rush Can Hurt

Slayen observed.

It's a standard precept in personal finance that investors should plan their tax-shelter moves early in the year, when they have plenty of time to evaluate the deals available and consider which will best suit their individual circumstances.

But in the press of all the other business of life, it's easy enough to put off taking any action until the year-end deadline gets uncomfortably close. No one knows that better than people in the business of selling shelter vehicles.

"During the next few weeks, otherwise rational, conservative investors turn into easy prey for the army of tax shelter promoters," says Jay Goldinger, a broker at Cantor, Fitzgerald & Co. in Beverly Hills, Calif.

For those who are determined to get into a shelter before year-end, Goldinger advises: Beware of promotional hype. One of the most telltale signs of a questionable tax shelter is slick, multicolored advertising. Remember, it is the investor who ultimately pays for the expense.

One of the biggest hazards in the game right now is the militant approach the Internal Revenue Service is taking toward what it considers "abusive" shelters. IRS policy is that "every tax return identified as containing a questionable shelter be examined," notes Robert Stanger, an investment adviser specializing in tax shelters.

Of course, the experts note, many good, perfectly legal tax shelters exist that can withstand the most stringent IRS audit. But there are also lots of them that may cross the line into "abusive" territory.

"Finding legitimate tax shelters requires diligence and research on the part of investors," Goldinger observes.

Just how difficult that assignment can be was illustrated by a news story that broke only a few weeks ago. A federal grand jury returned an indictment charging that a group of shelterpromoters had engaged in a $130 million fraud involving a false tax-shelter scheme.

Their customers included not only an imposing array of celebrities from the entertainment world, but the chairman of a bank and the head of a large financial conglomerate — all of whom may face additional tax bills if the government wins its case.

Strength For Today

The mail brings a picture of a little child from an Asian country and underneath is the caption, "Hunger is all she has ever known."

This youngster is slowly dying of malnutrition. In America we eat almost five pounds of food per day per person and throw away enough garbage to feed a family of six in India. The average dog in America has a higher protein diet than millions of people in Asia.

Is this our fault? Only partly so — if at all. But certainly it is our responsibility. We cannot afford to allow the Third World to starve.

The fact of such deprivation does not mean that our lawmakers are remiss or that the church is remiss in its ministry. What it means is that here is a desperate situation, and the best brains in the world will have to be put to work trying to find a solution.

God will not be complacent if we fail to do our utmost.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Referring to the editorial which concerned itself with the subject of "Flag Changes Reflect Haste" on Dec. 4, 1983, in The Daily Reflector, I would like to present some of my thoughts.

My roots are in Pitt County. I have seen these two flags, the Union Jack and Confederate flags all my life. When I think of the Union Jack, I think of our mother country, accepting that much which was done was a reflection of the pattern of circumstantial thinking of a given era. When I look at the Confederate flag, I do not think "white" nor "black," I think of an era of days gone by.

I question the judgment of any one citizen to dictate a present change to the past pattern of thought. It simply means that tradition is tradition, and the right of the individual is to make a critical judgment for his/her own good. It should not demand that my critical judgment acquiesce to his/hers.

Educator Raps Higher Admission Standards

RICHMOND (AP) — Norfolk State University President Harrison Wilson says, "Higher admission standards will effectively deny an opportunity for a college education to half the minority students."

Dr. Wilson, who heads one of the state's two predominantly black state-supported universities, differed sharply with the presidents of several mostly white schools.

Dr. William Anderson, president of Mary Washington College, said the new standards are only a starting place.

"We urge you to go further," he said.

"Too long we have fostered the notion that education is fun and games. We must tell students they have to work harder — the results are worth it," he said.

Their comments came Thursday during a joint meeting of the Council of Higher Education and the State Board of Education.

Wilson said the state board's adoption of tighter high school graduation requirements and the push for more restrictive college admission standards will hurt many in need of the greatest educational opportunities possible.

He said 122,000 Virginia families, many of them black, live in poverty, and "Only education can provide the means to remedy this."

Wilson said many minority students still suffer the effects of historic socio-economic disadvantages and often have lower academic scores than whites, even though the achievement gap is narrowing.

He suggested that many minority students don't take courses aimed at college entrance because junior high school counselors steer them toward vocational education.

He urged that application of the new high school graduation requirements begin with children entering the first grade in 1984.

"This would give schools and children more time to prepare and policymakers more time to study the implications," he said.

Wilson said minorities will make up 30 percent of all Virginia students by the end of the decade and, without broad educational opportunity, "many will wind up with no jobs, no money and no future."

"It will cost Virginia a great deal more money to deal with that problem than it will to provide the kind of education that could avert it," he said.

Dr. Donald Dedmon, Radford University president, applauded higher standards but said too much attention these days is being paid to college entrance test scores.

"We must look at how well high school students have done in weathervane courses — science, English and mathematics. That's more important than looking at test scores," he said.

Dedmon said the greatest problem in education is not underachieving students but poor quality teachers.

"There are too many C-minus teachers fooling around with the minds of our children," he said.

Dedmon also cautioned against too much emphasis on high-tech courses that might detract from the arts.

"You can't be truly educated without having been exposed to the history of man through his works," he said.

BATTLING FIRE — Chicago Fire Department rescue ladders, used to evacuate about 50 people from a smokey fire, lean against a Chicago hotel Thursday as smoke billows from an upper floor of the eight-story

Deadline On Ridge Law Limits Drawing Near

By The Associated Press
With a Jan. 1 deadline facing them, it appears many of North Carolina's mountain counties will accept the state's ridge construction limits instead of adopting their own rules, officials say.

"Most of the counties are at a fish-or-cut-bait stage," said Alan Lang, a planner with the North Carolina Department of Natural Resources and Community Development in Asheville.

Most of the counties in his western region apparently will not adopt local regulations, he said.

"If you simply allow the state ban to take effect, it simply prohibits," said Lang. "It's simply less of a hassle for them than enforcing their own regulations."

However, at least one county has passed its own ordinance.

The Avery County Board of Commissioners on Thursday passed an Avery County Mountain Ridge Protection Ordinance. The ordinance prohibits buildings taller than 40 feet or three stories on ridge tops.

The board also passed a companion ordinance prohibiting tall buildings in the valleys, except in special cases.

Meanwhile, officials in many of the 23 other mountain counties are mulling the law passed by the Legislature this year which prohibits buildings of more than 40 feet on ridges higher than 3,000 feet.

It also gives counties the option of passing its own ordinance if it wants stricter or more lenient limits than are in the state law.

In Burke County, commissioners on Tuesday rejected a planning board proposal to make the state prohibition apply to the county's peaks below 3,000 feet.

Some officials say the state law confuses them, which may have contributed to the delay in some counties deciding what to do.

"We all understand the intent of the law, but the wording seems to indicate something different," said Wilkes County planner Cecil Wood. "We're trying to connect the intent with the wording."

The state Association of County Commissioners has held workshops in an attempt to help local officials decide what to do. Ten counties were represented at one such meeting Tuesday in Lenoir.

"The distressing thing to me is that there were several counties represented ... that still didn't seem to be clear on some fundamental points," said Butch Gunnells, the association's general counsel.

Join Forces To Criticize Koch

NEW YORK (AP) — Women's rights advocates and liquor producers joined in criticizing Mayor Ed Koch for signing a law requiring bars to post warnings that drinking alcohol during pregnancy can harm the unborn.

Koch insisted Thursday, "Pregnant women aren't required to read — never mind heed — the posted warning." He said it was educational.

But the local president of the National Organization for Women, Barbara Rochman, said the notices could lead to "harassment of pregnant women" and added the group was "uneasy" about a law protecting the unborn at the expense of women's freedom.

Next Shuttle Step Is An 'Play Down' Rift With Reagan

In-Orbit Repair Test

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — In nine flights, America's space shuttle has proved it is a reliable satellite delivery system and an outstanding science platform. Now NASA is ready to test it as a repair truck, for recovering and fixing orbiting payloads.

The initial step toward the in-orbit repair capability is a Buck Rogers-like test on the 10th shuttle flight, scheduled to start Jan. 30. Becoming the first space-walking astronaut not attached by a safety line to his spacecraft, astronaut Bruce McCandless will don a rocket-powered backpack and maneuver up to 300 feet away from the shuttle Challenger.

That will be an important rehearsal for Flight 11, set for liftoff April 4, when a Challenger crew attempts the first satellite rescue mission — a rendezvous with a sun-study payload called Solar-Max that failed in orbit more than three years ago.

Astronaut George Nelson, wearing the rocket pack, will flit over to the satellite, secure it to the shuttle's robot arm and bring it into the cargo bay for repair. The corrected payload will be returned to orbit, but it the astronauts cannot fix it, Solar-Max will be brought to Earth for an overhaul and carried back up later.

These two flights kick off a busy 1984 NASA schedule that will see 30 astronauts rocket into space on 10 shuttle missions. They will deploy more than a dozen new satellites for paying commercial customers.

Six of the astronauts will be women, including a second flight in August for Sally Ride, who in June became America's first woman astronaut in space. Kathryn Sullivan will become the first female to walk in space. She and Ms. Ride will be on the same flight, with Columbia as the carrier.

Three blacks also will fly next year, following in the footsteps of Guion Bluford, who in August became the first black to ride in a U.S. spaceship.

The nation's third shuttle, Discovery, makes its flight debut in June on a commercial satellite delivery trip. A fourth shuttle, Atlantis, will be launched for the first time in 1985.

Starting in June, shuttle launches from Cape Canaveral, Fla., will accelerate to one a month — except for August, when there will be two — for the rest of the year. Most flights will deliver communications and scientific satellites to orbit.

The first Defense Department military flight carrying a cargo labeled "secret" is set for blastoff in June. A second Defense flight is scheduled for September.

Spacelab, just back from a successful journey, will be refitted as a medical laboratory for a flight aboard Challenger in November.

The shuttle launches are to increase to 12 in 1985, with NASA working up to a take-off rate of 24 a year by 1987. The agency has 90 missions booked through September 1988.

Complacency About Immunization

Despite the most active educational campaign about the importance of immunization and vaccination, a serious deficiency still exists. Exactly why the American public is so complacent about infectious diseases is difficult to explain.

Those of us who can recall the panic of the poliomyelitis plague know the devastation caused by this catastrophic infectious disease. Yet with the advent of the polio vaccine those fears have melted into insignificance.

Throughout the ages infectious diseases devastated countries and reduced their populations by the plague.

Today the comparative rarity of infectious diseases adds to the complacency about immunization. This complacency is filled with potential harm. Most people don't realize that measles, mumps, whooping cough, rubella and tetanus still take a heavy toll in those areas where vaccination and immunization are not maintained.

Prevention of disease is the foundation of modern living. Untold energy is being devoted to the means by which major diseases can be more easily controlled by early detection and early treatment.

Nowhere in the science of medicine is prevention more accurately defined than in the field of immunization against disease.

The basis of immunization is to aid the body in building up its own defense systems so that it can withstand an attack by an invading germ or virus. A vaccine is a substance which can cause a slight infection in the body and stimulate the body's defense reaction or antibodies. Once these antibodies are built up to a high concentration, an invasion by a germ or a virus is then repulsed and controlled before it can establish itself as a threat to health.

The magnitude of the contribution of immunization and vaccination can only be stated in the phrase, "Smallpox is already an eradicated disease." This is a truth that occurs in lands where the nutrition level is high, where the housing is adequate, and where sanitation is completely controlled.

Adequate vaccination coupled with the advent of antibiotics have liberated many nations from the threat of this plague which so often destroyed them.

Diphtheria was a disease of devastation. At the turn of the century, thousands of people, especially young children, died from it. Today sporadic cases still occur. Fortunately, many of these are cured by the combination of antibiotics and serum injections. Nevertheless, about 10 percent of all children who acquire diphtheria at this time still succumb to it.

Measles, a disease that is taken for granted as just a passing factor in childhood, still takes a high toll.

German measles, when it occurs in women during pregnancy, is responsible for thousands of unnecessary deformities in their offspring.

It is pathetic to learn that there are still thousands of families all over the United States who carelessly disregard the teachings of their doctors and the Public Health officials and do not maintain the level of immunization.

Vaccinations are administered free of charge at all Board of Health Stations. Is there really any rational reason why a child should be deprived of vaccinations that now are available?

strained over Reagan's action on Argentina and over the United States' huge budget deficit and high interest rates, which she criticized acridly in the House of Commons on Thursday.

The prime minister, speaking today at the opening of a new office building in London, said the press reports contradicted the "warm and friendly discussion" she had Thursday evening with U.S. Treasury Secretary Donald Regan.

"It is with friends that you can talk frankly, never with rancor, always with friendship, always with understanding," she said. "That's the way it is between Britain and the United States. That's the way it will continue to be."

In the House of Commons, the government moved swiftly to head off what the liberal Guardian newspaper predicted would be "an intensified wave of anti-American feeling."

Ray Whitney, a junior Foreign Office minister, said in a statement he welcomed Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's assurance that Washington would not supply weapons that would help Argentina to invade the Falklands again.

Weinberger met defense ministers of NATO in a private session this week.

Thatcher's criticism of U.S. economic policies came within hours of the decision to lift the ban on arms sales to Argentina. As a result, British newspapers reported today "major friction" in U.S.-British relations.

The Daily Mail, which supports Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative government, said Reagan had delivered "a bitter snub" to the prime minister. Relations between the two governments, it said, were at "rock bottom."

"Reagan Sells Out Thatcher," the Daily Mirror, which supports Britain's opposition Labor Party, headlined its report.

The United States backed Britain in the 74-day war in the South Atlantic to regain possession of the Falkland Islands.

U.S. State Department spokesman Alan Romberg announced Thursday that Argentina's improved human rights performance and its imminent return to civilian government merited a lifting of the arms sale ban, imposed by former President Carter in 1977.

President-elect Raul Alfonsin will be inaugurated Saturday as Argentina's new civilian president, replacing the military junta that has ruled for seven years. Vice President George Bush will attend the ceremony, indicating the importance being placed on U.S.-Argentine ties.

A few hours after Romberg's statement — and shortly before meeting here with U.S. Treasury Secretary Donald Regan — Mrs. Thatcher delivered a scathing attack on Reagan's economic policies. She told the House of Commons that large U.S. budget deficits were hurting Europe and would in time damage the United States as well.

The budget deficits are "causing high interest rates which are extremely damaging to this country and other European countries," she said, adding that they "are, in fact, preventing us from getting the amount of investment we should have here by withdrawing a lot of capital to the United States."

Noting what she called America's "fantastic balance of trade deficit," she said, "I would rather be in our position, which is sustainable, than theirs, which I believe will cause great trouble within 12 months," she added.

Legislators said they were shocked by the prime minister's vehemence and disdain.

Regan told a news conference shortly before meeting Mrs. Thatcher that U.S. interest rates are likely to remain high at least until next spring. He said annual U.S. deficits could remain around $200 billion until 1988.

"The lifting of the ban on arms sales to Argentina represents the most serious rift between Downing Street and the White House since the Thatcher-Reagan partnership began 3½ years ago," the liberal newspaper The Guardian wrote.

The rift between the two leaders first surfaced when Reagan, ignoring warnings from Mrs. Thatcher, ordered the invasion of Grenada last October by U.S. troops. Grenada is a former British colony and its governor-general is a representative of the queen.

Another point of friction is the reported American failure to keep Britain informed about its intentions in Lebanon. Mrs. Thatcher on Wednesday ruled out demands for Britain to withdraw its 110-man contingent from the multinational peacekeeping force in Beirut but indicated the need for closer consultation with the Reagan administration.

Shuttle Flight...

slowed the shuttle's 17,400 mph orbital speed and started it on an hour-long, high-speed glide across the Pacific Ocean.

The 33,000-pound Spacelab was designed and built by the European Space Agency which donated the science module to NASA in exchange for the orbital flight, and dozens of European scientists were present for the landing.

Some of the scientific data will take months or years to analyze, but already scientists were talking of the discovery of iron in distant star fields, a new reading on the gases in the upper atmosphere and new knowledge about how humans adapt to spaceflight.

Research on Spacelab has revived a 77-year-old theory on the workings of the human inner ear and established new data on the energy explosion in the sun.

"It is not sufficient to say that we are all pleased and all satisfied with the flight," said Michel Bignier of France, director of the European agency's shuttle operations.

The next shuttle mission is scheduled for Jan. 30, when Challenger will be launched on a flight that will feature a space walk.

Disturbed By Nobel Prize

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Professor Barbara McClintock, the 81-year-old Nobel Prize-winning geneticist, has a complaint — all the fuss over her getting the award has interfered with her work.

Miss McClintock, from Cold Spring Harbor, N.Y., delivered the traditional lecture given by Nobel laureates Thursday, speaking for almost an hour on the mobile elements in genes.

After her address, Miss McClintock said the Nobel prize uproar has seriously disturbed her routine.

"I haven't been able to work at all since the day I got it Oct. 10," she complained. Noted for her singlemindedness and for perseverance in her research, Miss McClintock added, "I hope to continue once this is over and done with, if I am only given the time."

She gets her award and $190,000 prize money Saturday.

Kidnapper Faces Life

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — A 38-year-old man convicted of abducting his former employer's son and burying him alive for four days while demanding a $75,000 ransom faces up to life in prison.

Ronald Floyd White of Conroe, Texas, was convicted Thursday of aggravated kidnapping, one of the witnesses against him was Michael Baucom, 22, who was rescued by sheriff's deputies from a makeshift coffin buried in an oilfield north of Houston in September 1982.

Baucom said the verdict did not surprise him. "It was pretty well apparent," he said, dismissing a defense lawyer's argument that Baucom was involved in the plot.

Order Death By Lethal Injection

FREEHOLD, N.J. (AP) — Richard F. Biegenwald, convicted of killing an 18-year-old woman because, prosecutors said, "he wanted to see someone die," has been sentenced to execution by lethal injection.

The jury that convicted him of murdering Anna Olesiewicz, one of five deaths Biegenwald has been indicted for this year, returned the death sentence Thursday. His execution was set for Jan. 26, but he has the right to automatic review by the state Supreme Court.

Miss Olesiewicz was shot in the head in August 1982. Biegenwald had been paroled in 1981 after serving 25 years of a life sentence for murder.

Charge Mother With Drowning

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — A Winston-Salem woman was charged with second-degree murder Thursday, 15 months after her 13-year-old daughter was found drowned in the family bathtub.

Winston-Salem police Capt. E.L. Moreau said that on the morning of Michelle Jeanne Lachat's death, her mother, Louise Lachat, 53, was found in her bedroom, unconscious from a drug overdose.

Mrs. Lachat was released on $25,000 bond, part of which was posted by her husband, Remy J. Lachat.

Moreau said Mrs. Lachat came with her attorney Thursday morning to the police station, where the warrant was served.

NATO Ministers Debate Soviet Impasse Policy

By DAVID MASON
Chief European Correspondent
BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — NATO foreign ministers end a strategy conference today with debate on how to break the impasse in U.S.-Soviet nuclear disarmament negotiations.

The latest round of U.S.-Soviet strategic arms talks, or START, ended Thursday in Geneva with the Soviets refusing to agree on a date for resuming talks on long-range missiles and bombers. Ordinarily, the two sides would have set a resumption date for approximately eight weeks from now.

The Soviets said NATO's deployment of U.S.-built medium-range missiles in Western Europe has created a "change in the overall strategic situation," forcing them to re-examine the START issues.

On Nov. 23, the Soviets walked out of the separate medium-range nuclear missile talks after the arrival of the first of 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Europe.

In their final communique, U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and the foreign ministers of 15 allied countries planned to urged a quick Soviet return to the arms talks and to stress a commitment to balanced and verifiable arms reductions. They spent Thursday assessing the state of the arms talks and general East-West relations.

A senior U.S. official in the Shultz party said "nobody is running around in a state of frenzy" looking for new ideas for easing U.S.-Soviet tensions. But Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson of France termed the arms talk deadlock "a crisis in East-West relations."

NATO officials, including Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe of Britain, said they were not surprised by the Soviet move, and felt there still were strong reasons to hope the Soviet Union would return to the START negotiations next year.

There appeared to be less optimism among NATO officials that the Soviets would return to the medium-range missile talks. The alliance was expected to reaffirm its determination to continue a program of deploying cruise and Pershing 2 missiles begun last month in Britain, West Germany and Italy.

A nuclear advisory group made up of NATO delegations said Thursday the five-year deployment program can be "halted or reversed" should an arms accord be reached.

Also today, NATO named Lord Carrington, former British foreign secretary, to succeed Joseph Luns of the Netherlands as the sixth secretary general of the 34-year-old alliance. Carrington's ascension to NATO's top civilian post was expected.

Luns, 72, who has held the post for 12 years, had said he would announce his long-expected resignation to the foreign ministers. He is to be replaced by Carrington sometime next summer.

Carrington, 64, resigned as foreign secretary in April 1982, accepting responsibility for British policy leading up to the Argentine invasion of the Falkland Islands. The British won back their South Atlantic colony in a 74-day war.

Although the Middle East is technically outside the North Atlantic Treaty Organization area, officials have paid close attention to the violence and political instability in Lebanon.

Shultz, Howe, Cheysson and Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti of Italy met Thursday to discuss the status of the multinational peacekeeping force in Beirut to which their four countries contribute.

The ministers explored ways to prop up the government of President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon and there was no indication of any immediate plans to reduce or withdraw their contingents.

Andreotti recalled that Italy had originally agreed to field 1,100 troops, but that the present number is twice that.

Some doubts have arisen in both Italy and Britain over the continued meaningfulness of the multinational force, which numbers about 5,600 troops. More than 300 peacekeepers have been killed since they first arrived in Lebanon last year, including 256 U.S. servicemen.

After the NATO meeting, Shultz was to join four other U.S. Cabinet members in discussions with Common Market executives on trans-Atlantic economic disputes.

Hunt Campaign Share Attacked

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt's expected bid for the U.S. Senate is not "draining money" from other North Carolina candidates as some Democrats claim, the chairman of the party says.

Some Democrats say advertisements critical of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., are another example of how Hunt is getting more than his share of party resources.

But David Price, chairman of the state Democratic Party, said that is not true.

"In no sense is this draining money from state races, so no one need have any fear on that score," Price said. "We're very aware that the party has to be very concerned in balancing the efforts in all the races."

The ads, which cost about $50,000 to produce and air, attack Helms' Senate voting record. Price said they were bought with money from the N.C. Democratic Victory Fund, an account specifically for use in federal races.

Some Council of State members recently discussed sending Price a formal complaint on the matter, the Greensboro News and Record reported Thursday.

"Some (of us) suggested that something be drafted to show our position, but there hasn't been any unanimity on it, and nothing was drawn up," said Secretary of State

Thad Eure.

The 10-member Council of State is composed of the state's constitutional executive officers — such as the governor, lieutenant governor, auditor, insurance commissioner and attorney general. It advises the governor and decides certain state policy matters.

During an informal meeting last week, which Hunt didn't attend, the subject of campaign financing arose. The feeling was widespread that "all the money is going in one channel" — the Hunt-Helms race, Eure said.

All Council of State members are up for re-election next year, although several are seeking higher office.

Eure confirmed that he and Labor Commissioner John Brooks were behind the move to draft a protest resolution about the money spent on Hunt's behalf, but said other council members agreed.

The News and Record said Attorney General Rufus Edmisten discouraged drafting a letter, fearing that an open squabble might embarrass the party. Edmisten could not be reached for comment Thursday.

Eure said two or three council members didn't attend the meeting and said he couldn't recall who was or wasn't present.

Joint Concert For Taiwanese, Chinese

TOKYO (AP) — A Taiwanese violinist and a Chinese pianist will give a concert in Tokyo on Christmas Eve, organizers said today. It is believed to be the first joint concert by musicians from the two countries.

Pianist Li Xian, 18, from the Shanghai Institute of Music, and Lin Chiao-liang, 23, from Taipei and a performer with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, will perform five classical pieces and one Beatles song, a spokesman for the Japanese organizers said.

The two will be accompanied by the Waseda University Orchestra at Showa Women's College in Tokyo, he said.

Hiroshi Shigenobu, producer at Televiman Union Co. Ltd., told The Associated Press the musicians also would perform on a special Japanese TV program to be aired Dec. 29.

He said they were selected for the concerts from four possible promising musicians from China and Taiwan.

"We selected the two performers not because of creed, religion or nationality," Shigenobu said. "But one happened to be from China and the other Taiwan. They are both very gifted and promising as performing artists."

Li gained recognition when he won an international competition in Paris in 1980. Lin, a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music in New York, gained fame when he won the Queen Sophia international competition in Madrid in 1976.

The two musicians will play a selection of pieces from Haydn, Chopin, Beethoven and two pieces by Chinese composers. Their finale will be an arrangement of the Beatles' "Let It Be," Shigenobu said.

Mainland China and the Chinese Nationalist government on Taiwan have been in dispute since 1949, when the nationalists broke away from Communist rule.

Pelicans Losing War With Fishermen

Corps Of Engineers Claim No Pipeline Environmental Harm

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has declared that a proposed water pipeline from Lake Gaston to Virginia Beach won't harm the environment.

Virginia officials are pleased but North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt on Thursday threatened to take legal action to block construction.

The corps' Norfolk District Engineer, Col. Ronald Hudson, signed a document on Wednesday declaring that the pipeline "will have no significant impact on the quality of the human environment."

Both advocates and foes of the pipeline said that a corps permit allowing the project to proceed is now a formality.

The report and a draft environmental assessment will be circulated for 30 days before the corps issues a permit to allow the pipeline to be built, Virginia Beach Mayor Louis R. Jones said.

"We're pleased that the colonel has decided to sign the two statements," Jones said.

Virginia Beach sees the 85-mile, $176-million pipeline as the means of meeting its ever growing water supply needs into the next century, the city hopes to take as much as 60 million gallons of water a day from the lake.

The city of Chesapeake, which also will need additional water during the 1990s, has expressed an interest in joining Virginia Beach in the project.

Lake Gaston straddles the Virginia-North Carolina border. The pipeline is almost unanimously opposed by residents of communities surrounding the lake in both states. They contend that the project would cause water levels to drop in that lake and Kerr Lake upstream.

Hunt said, "This seems to indicate that the granting of a permit for construction of the pipeline is a foregone conclusion. I am very disappointed that the corps is refusing to comply with our request for a full environmental impact statement."

Hunt said he would consult with state Attorney General Rufus Edmisten and, "We will use every legal means at our disposal to prevent construction of the pipeline."

Gov. Charles S. Robb was in northern Virginia at a meeting and unavailable for comment but his press secretary, George Stoddart, said the news of the decision reached the governor's office late Thursday that the engineers would not require a full environmental impact statement.

By DAN GARCIA
Associated Press Writer
REDONDO BEACH, Calif. (AP) — "Pier bum" pelicans that rely on easy pickings from fishermen's bait or catches have become such pests that fishermen sometimes pelt them with cherry bombs or tie their foot-long bills shut with fishing line.

But even those who consider the birds unwelcome fish thieves were bewildered when 31 birds were found electrocuted last week. Police and game workers say a 68-year-old bait company worker and his grandson used a 115-volt generator and four strands of electrical wire to keep the pelicans off their barge.

Wildlife workers say the pelicans themselves become vulnerable because they are trusting, friendly creatures who stand tolerantly while tourists pet them. They divebomb for fishermen's bait or steal their catches — often becoming so dependent on fishermen that they never learn when young to find their own food.

Dan Armstrong, operator of the Redondo Sport Fishing Co., said the decline in the ocean's anchovy population — which he blames on commercial fishermen — is forcing the pelicans to rely increasingly on barges and piers.

The latest incident in the Los Angeles area followed a string of attacks, from October 1982 to March 1983, in which 23 California brown pelicans — protected by both federal and state laws — had their upper bills sawed off or left dangling.

Early attempts to replace the bills surgically with fiberglass replicas failed when the bones to which they were attached deteriorated.

Another 22 pelicans were the victims this fall of apparently unrelated mutilations up the coast in Monterey, where their pouches were slit, their windpipes slashed or their throats cut open.

On Thursday, dozens of hungry pelicans bobbed in the water or sat on the rails of the Redondo Bait Co. barge, about 100 yards off shore, where John Perry Wilson and his grandson, Ronald Cullen Johnson, 24, were arrested Saturday for investigation of cruelty to animals in the electrocution of the 31 birds.

Armstrong was surprised because Wilson "has always respected the pelicans."

"I've known him for many years and I can't believe he would be involved in something like that," Armstrong said. "I've seen him feeding the pelicans and I know he has found fishing spots by watching the birds diving for fish."

Pat Moore, a spokesman for the state Department of Fish and Game, said warden Carroll Cox is preparing cruelty-to-animals cases against the two, who are free on bail and scheduled to be arraigned Jan. 3.

Wilson and Johnson could not be found at the harbor this week, and other fishermen said they were probably working at sea.

At popular King Harbor, sport fishermen say the persistent birds are robbing the sport of its appeal.

On the dock, Ed Faulkner, 66, a licensed fisherman for 25 years, said he knows the birds are federally protected, so he only waves them away with his hand.

"When I go out, there can be hundreds of them around the boat," Faulkner said. "You have to throw a bunch of anchovies over one side to distract them and then throw your line out the other side."

"They get tangled up in our fishing lines and take hooks in their bills, and when you go to free them from the hooks, they're full of lice," Faulkner said.

While fishermen know not to feed the birds, other wharf visitors feed them "out of kindness of heart. But in essence, they are killing off the birds," Moore said.

But Armstrong said fishermen were also to blame.

"I've seen some fishermen step on them, or hold them under water till they drown, or tied their bills with line so they can't feed on their bait," he said. "The birds have become such a problem that even skiff rentals (for amateur fishermen) were down this summer."

Fishermen have caught some birds with more than a dozen hooks rotting in their beaks, Armstrong said, adding: "They're not very bright birds."

Price-Setting In Bride Field

HONIARA, Solomon Islands (AP) — Fearing skyrocketing inflation in the cost of marriage, a provincial government says a man can't pay more than $600 for a wife.

The government of Temotu Province in the former British colony in the Pacific passed legislation this week setting the maximum price for a bride.

A bride price or buying a wife is common among the Melanesian nations of the Pacific such as the Solomons and Vanuatu.

Anyone paying more than $600 in Temotu Province will face a hearing before the Council of Chiefs and three months in jail or a fine of up to $90, officials said.

The action was taken because local officials feared inflation in the price of brides similar to what has taken place in Papua New Guinea, where the price for a wife averages around $3,000. One Papua New Guinea man reportedly paid $18,000.

Solomon Islanders say a wife can still be had for less than $300 in more remote areas of the country.

Office Trees Are Regulated

WASHINGTON (AP) — Not even Christmas trees are spared a flurry of bureaucratic regulations. The Defense Department, in a 1½-page memo, is laying down the law for decorating Pentagon offices for Christmas.

The regulations urge the use of phony trees because they're less likely to catch fire. They allow "only sparing quantities" of holly and cornstalk, no decorative snow and no lighted candles. The directive also says: "decorations and displays within assigned space shall conform to the general use of the space, as appropriate."

The rules cover all 70 local offices with Department employees, including the Pentagon.

Defer Decision In TMI Survey

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is postponing until next week a decision on whether it will investigate the repair of thousands of steam generator tubes at Three Mile Island.

The repairs to 29,858 cracked tubes at the damaged Unit 1 reactor were made with a kinetic expansion process that had never been used that way before in a nuclear plant.

The commission decided to postpone its decision, although its staff argued that the tubes performed well on recent tests — leaking only one-sixtieth of the legally permissible amounts.

Co-Op Joins Purchase Program

The Edgecombe-Martin County Electric Membership Corp. has announced that, as of Nov. 1, it joined 26 other cooperatives in signing an agreement with Duke Power Co. to purchase 56.25 percent interest in Unit 1 of the Catawba Nuclear Station on Lake Wylie in South Carolina.

Rudolph Sexton, EMC manager, said the purchase involved cooperatives that make up the North Carolina Electric Membership Corp. He said Duke Power has pledged to buy excess energy from the plant that is not required for the cooperatives.

Sexton said electricity the NCEMC began receiving on Nov. 1 is from Duke Power's McGuire Nuclear Station Unit 1, part of an exchange arrangement worked out with the investor-owned utility when the Catawba arrangement was made. He said the cooperatives will draw power from McGuire until the Catawba unit goes on line, now expected to be completed in July 1985.

Sexton said the buy-in agreement should result in a "recognizable savings in wholesale power cost in the future as well as now."

Wife Of Lech Walesa Placed In World Spotlight

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer
WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Danuta Walesa, the quiet wife of Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, ventures onto center stage Saturday to collect the Nobel Peace Prize her husband won for heading the only free trade union in Soviet bloc history.

"I'm scared," the short, brown-haired mother of seven said as she frantically prepared for her flight today to Oslo, Norway.

Walesa will remain at home. He has been quoted as saying he fears he may not be allowed back in if he leaves Poland.

Mrs. Walesa doesn't welcome the limelight.

"I like the peaceful, calm life," she said during a quieter but more difficult time, her husband's 11-month martial law internment. His confinement began with the martial law declaration of

Dec. 13, 1981 — which suspended Solidarity — and ended in November 1982.

Walesa describes his wife as "a splendid woman, a good wife and an ideal mother. It is she who supports all of us, although it is harder for her. She is more of a hero than I am."

Like her husband, the 34-year-old Mrs. Walesa is a devout Roman Catholic, and he has shielded her from the international publicity surrounding them since he led the shipyard strike which forged Solidarity.

She raises their three daughters, ages one, three and four, and four sons, seven to 13 years, in a seven-room apartment filled with an endless stream of visitors and a small army of advisers, secretaries and drivers.

The assistants, whose number on any given day ranges from six to a dozen, include driver Mieczyslaw Wachowski, who spends much of his time acting as deputy father to the Walesa boys, to the sturdy Henryk Mazul, a retired shipyard worker who acts as gatekeeper at the second floor apartment.

Most of them, reportedly supported by gifts from union backers, have been with Walesa since Solidarity's early days and remain with him out of a sense of loyalty to the man and the free trade union movement.

Walesa has spent much of their 14-year marriage either in hiding or in jail, leaving his wife alone with their children.

"She is such a magnificent woman that she manages well by herself," said the family's priest and friend, the Rev. Henryk Jankowski. "I wish every man had a woman like that."

Walesa, an electrician at the Lenin shipyard in the Baltic port of Gdansk, has been detained scores of times since he married Danuta, a pretty florist six years his junior, on Nov. 8, 1969.

"He tried to keep me as far from these matters as possible," she said, referring not only to the era of Solidarity but to the decade before when Walesa waged an often dangerous struggle for free trade unions.

In 1980, police dragged him from their two-room apartment in central Gdansk just as his wife went into labor with their sixth child, Magda.

"She screamed terribly then," said a neighbor. "Don't take my husband. She screamed so that the whole block could hear."

The couple met when Walesa, newly employed at the yard, entered the florist shop where his future wife worked and asked her for change.

"He was apparently under the impression that he was such a handsome man that he didn't have to buy flowers," she said. Walesa passed by the shop daily on his way to work, and romance blossomed. They were married a year later.

Mrs. Walesa says the early years of their marriage were the happiest, although her husband was soon embroiled in labor disputes.

He got involved in the workers' movement at the Lenin Shipyard. On Dec. 16, 1970, more than 50 people died when security forces fired on striking workers. Years later, Walesa told Westerner reporters the incident taught him to avoid direct physical confrontation.

In 1976, he was dismissed from the yard for making a remark critical of then Communist Party First Secretary Edward Gierek.

Walesa, reportedly a hard worker and an excellent electrician, was fired from two subsequent jobs for political reasons, and was unemployed in August 1980. This fellow workers, however, took collections every pay day and turned the money over to Mrs. Walesa to see the family through hard times.

Walesa became a symbol of the workers' struggle on Aug. 14, 1980, when he climbed the wall of the Lenin Shipyard to take command of a workers' protest.

After two weeks of negotiations, he and government officials signed the Gdansk Agreement, promising the legalization of Solidarity, and Walesa became a national hero.

Team To Survey Senior Housing

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A task force of senior citizens will be dispatched next year to check on safety hazards in housing for the elderly, Consumer Product Safety Commissioner Sam Zagoria says.

He said the task force will study about 2,000 residences for possible hazards. Zagoria said today in remarks prepared for delivery to a forum on elderly consumers organized by the Better Business Bureau.

Zagoria said a site for the study has not yet been selected by the five-member commission.

The checks will cover private homes, row houses, apartments and mobile homes, with inspectors looking for common hazards and making recommendations to correct any problems they find.

If it is a success, Zagoria said, the commission hopes to expand the project in the following year with the cooperation of state and local governments.

The forum on the older consumer was also told that the business community has difficulty defining and categorizing the elderly.

Industry knows the older consumer is out there in growing numbers, said Dr. George Baker of the Center on Aging at the University of Maryland.

But while industry knows the elderly have special needs, those needs have not been communicated effectively.

"Business is discovering that older consumers comprise a large, highly diverse market," William H. Tankersley, president of the National Council of Better Business Bureaus, said in prepared remarks.

"As we move from a youth-oriented to an older society, we must be prepared to work more efficiently with this burgeoning segment of the consumer population," Tankersley said.

He noted that in 1983, for the first time, there are more Americans over 65 than there are teen-agers.

While official estimates for 1983 have not been issued, Census Bureau projections list 27,427,000 persons aged 65 and over, compared to 26,546,000 aged between 13 and 19.

In his speech, Zagoria cited several hazards that pose a particular danger to the elderly, and where a market for safer products is waiting.

For example, he listed non-slip surfaces on scatter rugs. Safety tapes or other materials could help avoid up to 12,000 injuries from falls by persons aged 65 and older, he said.

Bathtubs and showers are an area where safety products would find an audience, he said, because the elderly are so prone to slipping and falling in them.

Other products ripe for development, he said, are monitors to warn of air pollution and some sort of mechanism to prevent scalding by hot water in tubs and showers.

Loses Fight To Restore Pledge

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — One official said the city was known as the un-American "People's Republic of Berkeley," but he lost a bid to bring back the Pledge of Allegiance at city council meetings.

Another official who voted against the proposal said she didn't want the city to be thought of as "Berkeley."

The city council voted 4-3 Tuesday for the status quo: No pledge before meetings. The practice was dropped in 1971, when three council members refused to stand during the recitation.

Councilman Leo Bach proposed reviving it to counter publicity from a widely distributed photo of the burning of a U.S. flag in Berkeley.

The city is known as "Berkeley, Nutville." And we don't want to be an object of ridicule," said Vice Mayor Gilda Feller, voting no.

Found Navy Is Not Ready For Combat

NEW YORK (AP) — An investigative arm of Congress says the Navy remains unready for war despite big budget increases in the past three years. The New York Times reported today.

A confidential report by the General Accounting Office said the Navy has spent too much money on new ships and airplanes and not enough on ammunition, fuel, maintenance and support equipment, the report said.

"It says the supply problem means the Navy could not deploy enough fully armed and equipped aircraft carriers and airplanes in the event of a war."

Navy Secretary John F. Lehman responded by saying the Navy's readiness is improving after 15 years of inadequate funding. He said the improvement would continue at Congress approved the Navy's budget requests for the next five years, the Times reported.

The congressional report said that two months after a war began, only eight of the Navy's 14 carriers could put to sea ready for battle, and then only by stripping shore bases of weapons and equipment. Lehman agreed, adding, "But it was six when we came in."

The report also said that fewer than 60 percent of the Navy's tactical carrier aircraft were ready for combat on any given day, despite a minimum requirement of 70 percent.

Furthermore, the accounting office charged that the Navy used inflated estimates of its rates of readiness, the Times reported.

The report, completed late in the summer, said the Navy from 1980 to 1983 increased spending on new aircraft by 83.6 percent, to $122 billion, while it raised spending on aviation operations and maintenance by only 10.4 percent, to $4.6 billion.

The report said the Navy had begun to correct that imbalance but that with current budget trends, it would take until 1988 or 1990 to rectify.

Reinstated By Judge's Order

NEW YORK (AP) — Two female firefighters fired after a year on probation have won reinstatement with back pay after a judge found "extraordinary evidence of intentional discrimination."

The ruling Thursday was a victory for Brenda Berkman, whose earlier lawsuit forced the city to accept women firefighters, and Zaida Gonzalez. They lost their jobs in September.

U.S. District Judge Charles P. Sifton said, "The Fire Department failed lamentably to prepare its officers and members for the extraordinary task of integrating women into its previously all-male ranks."

Meese Cites No Real Evidence Of Hungry Children

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential counselor Edwin Meese III says he has not seen any authoritative evidence there are hungry children in America and that many people

DISCUSSES HUNGER — Presidential counselor Edwin Meese III, says he has not seen any authoritative evidence there are hungry children in America. (AP Laserphoto) go to soup kitchens "because the food is free and that's easier than paying for it."

In an interview Thursday, Meese said the Task Force on Food Assistance was created by President Reagan in September "to get to the bottom of some of these allegations that have been unsubstantiated."

"So, if there are hungry children, the question is why are they hungry? The United States government is spending more on food assistance than it ever has in history."

Proclaiming World Food Day last Oct. 14, the president said there was "no reason for hunger anywhere in America ... Food and help are available to anyone who is hungry in America."

The U.S. Conference of Mayors said in October that economic recovery had not yet reached the hungry in U.S. cities.

"The problem of hunger is indeed continuing to grow in cities despite recent reports and indications of an economic recovery," said the mayors.

They added that the hunger problem "has been exacerbated, clearly, by the recent drastic cuts in federal benefits and the high cost of basic necessities, such as food, shelter and energy."

During the same period, a group of physician told a House subcommittee that studies in the states of Massachusetts and New York as well as in Chicago found increases in the number of people, especially children and the elderly, suffering from inadequate diets.

Asked about reports of hungry children, Meese said, "I've heard a lot of anecdotal stuff, but I haven't heard any authoritative figures."

"With all the resources of the federal government, with all of the resources of state and local government, with all of the voluntary organizations," he added, "if people are going hungry there must be some problem that has not yet been addressed and it is not lack of funds."

He called some of the allegations "purely political."

He said the Reagan administration has "provided for those who are truly needy" and then added:

"I think some people are going to soup kitchens voluntarily. I know we have considerable information that people go to soup kitchens because the food is free and that's easier than paying for it. ..."

"We have a system in this country that virtually everyone is taken care of by one program or another," he said.

Meese was interviewed by reporters from The Associated Press, Reuters and United Press International.

On other matters, he said:

—He is confident Reagan will run for a second term but the president has not told his closest advisers of his plans for 1984.

—He does not expect White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III to leave government to become commissioner of baseball. He also has no expectation that Martin Feldstein, Reagan's chief economic adviser, will soon leave the administration. Feldstein came under fire for dissenting from Reagan's opposition to tax increases to reduce budget deficits.

—Said Reagan is concerned about deficits "and he is concerned about the fact that he has been unable to convince the Congress and they have been unwilling to cooperate on a real deficit reduction program."

—He expects the administration to ask for a larger increase in next year's defense budget, but he declined to how much larger.

N.C. Elections Board Asks Law To Bar Tactics Used By The FBI

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina Board of Elections has called for legislation to bar law enforcement agencies from using tactics like those the FBI employed in a mixed-drink referendum in Bolton last year.

The board said on Thursday the FBI denied voters in the Columbus County town their constitutional rights by rigging a mixed-drink referendum during an undercover corruption probe.

The board asked FBI Director William Webster to review the guidelines for undercover operations "to ensure that in the future such operations are not utilized to influence North Carolina elections."

It also asked the state congressional delegation to outlaw the "use of FBI funds to initiate or influence elections in any state or municipality in this country."

An FBI spokesman in Washington said the agency will respond to the board's request for a review of undercover tactics after it has received a copy of the opinion.

The board on Saturday overturned the April 30, 1982 liquor-by-the-drink referendum.

Board Chairman Robert Spearman said the FBI's tactics contribute to voter cynicism and mistrust of the electoral process.

"I would hope very much that Congress and the FBI would take another look at this kind of thing," he said.

Federal officials, however, defended the Bolton referendum as an integral part of the probe and insisted the FBI only followed instructions outlined by local politicians.

The referendum followed a probe known as Colcor, short for Columbus County corruption, and resulted in convictions of or guilty pleas by a county commissioner, a state representative, a police chief and a district court judge, among others.

State Sen. R.C. Soles was acquitted of charges stemming from the probe.

Undercover agents posing as crooked businessmen asked local politicians to help them to get a mixed-drink referendum passed so they could open a bar.

In its opinion, the elections board says the referendum was the idea of the agents, not Bolton residents.

"Neither the laws of North Carolina nor the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution permit that elections may be initiated, or election workers paid with funds supplied by secret undercover agents," the opinion said.

Douglas McCullough, assistant U.S. attorney, said federal authorities tried to halt the election but could not without blowing the agents' cover.

McCullough said he called each member of the Bolton Town Board and the town attorney the day before the vote and warned them of "very strong indications" that the referendum was fixed. The board voted to proceed with the referendum, in which voters approved liquor-by-the-drink 136-76.

"Reasonable people can disagree over what was best," McCullough said. "We made a judgment that it was more important to eliminate the drug dealers we were dealing with rather than bring fully to the surface the role of the undercover agents."

McCullough said the elections board's decision to overturn the vote was welcome since "we asked them not to hold it in the first place."

The board's opinion stemmed from a hearing Saturday in Whiteville, the Columbus County seat, where participants in the FBI's operation testified about their roles. The U.S. Attorney's Office refused to allow the FBI agents subpoenaed for the hearing to testify.

Shark Is On Prison Menu

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Shark is now on the menu at South Carolina prisons, and officials say the inmates are taking to it.

"It's gotten a real good reception," said prison food service director Tim Miller on Tuesday. "We've had hardly any response that was non-positive."

Miller likes it too, because the shark meat is currently shipped free to the prisons, courtesy of the state Wildlife and Marine Resources Department.

The department's seafood marketing services section is in the midst of a one-year effort sponsored by the Gulf and South Atlantic Fisheries Development Foundation in Tampa, Fla., to cultivate South Carolina tastes for shark.

They figured the state prison system would be a good place to start.

"In order for a commercial shark fishery to become established in South Carolina, we feel it is important to develop large-scale markets such as the prison system that can purchase in bulk," says section head Will Lacey.

The prison system has gobbled up more than 3,000 pounds of the meat, and state marketers have fed hundreds more pounds in bite-sized nuggets to anyone who would take them from booths in shopping malls, fairs and festivals.

Prison inmates seem to prefer the shark batter-fried, but Lacey says you can also broil it, bake it, grill it, stew it or use it in soup.

"The shark is very versatile," he said. "It's as good as anything that comes out of the ocean."

Chicago Courts Shudder Over 'Operation Greylord'

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — In the nation's largest court system, these are days of high anxiety. Names are about to be named. Secrets are about to be revealed. Scandal is in the air.

Now, three years after it began, Operation Greylord, an Abscam-style probe touted as the most ambitious investigation of judicial corruption in U.S. history, is about to go public.

It promises to be a tale of intrigue and adventure: a "white knight" judge who concealed a tape recorder in his cowboy boots, FBI

"moles" posing as corrupt prosecutors and a "Boy Scout" state's attorney who turned to life in the fast lane to snare crooked defense lawyers.

Reports also have surfaced of deals cut in bars, an FBI agent snapping pictures of a judge counting money and even electronic "bugs" placed inside the chambers of at least two judges — believed to be the first such court-approved eavesdropping.

As many as 100 phony criminal cases also were created to ferret out Cook County's kinky lawyers, judges and courtroom fixers as part of Greylord, said former Police Superintendent Richard Brzezczek.

Now, some judges, attorneys and police officers accustomed to adjudicating millions of cases each year, including tens of thousands of felonies, will be getting a fresh look at law and order — from a defendant's eye view.

In recent days, scores have been advised by the Justice Department they were overheard in legal wiretaps — sometimes in judges' chambers. Not all are suspected of criminal activity. Some also have been advised they are targets of the Greylord probe.

Part of Greylord, named after the wigs worn by British jurists, reportedly focused on narcotics and traffic courts — just two parts of Cook County's immense judicial system that includes 322 judges and 20,000 licensed attorneys.

One judge — who was relieved of official duties Monday — predicts he will be indicted. By the end of next week, as many as four judges, eight lawyers and four police officers and other court personnel reportedly will be charged with crimes.

"What this has done is intimidate everybody," said Edward Genson, a veteran defense attorney who has confirmed his client, Judge Wayne Olson, is expected to be indicted. "People are afraid to practice law. People are afraid to be judges."

Indeed, some say caution has replaced cordiality since word of Greylord first leaked last summer when Brocton Lockwood, a southern Illinois judge serving a stint in Chicago's Traffic Court, disclosed he was an undercover agent, wearing a microphone under his robe and and carrying a tape recorder in his cowboy boot.

Since then, some say judges are anxious to put more on the record. Attorneys are reluctant to waive juries for fear of being misinterpreted. And every word in private conferences is being weighed carefully.

Though no one has yet been charged with a crime, the Greylord investigation already has created legal tremors — both for its methods and the message it may carry.

Some veteran defense attorneys are outraged, arguing the legal wiretapping of judicial chambers is an invasion of private conversations of hundreds of innocent people.

"There are certain things I say to people that are not crimes but I don't want the FBI to know it," said Sam Adam, a defense attorney who said he's been approached to represent there is no apprehension. Judge James Bailey, who serves in criminal court, said Greylord will hurt jurists who are on the retention ballot this fall and must get a 60 percent approval rate to stay on the bench.

"Nobody likes a crook," Bailey said. "Nobody likes anyone under indictment. Nobody likes anyone with a cloud over his or her head."

And that cloud definitely is hovering over the judicial system, said Judge Kenneth Gillis.

"The public," Gillis said, "could perceive that 50 percent of the judiciary is involved, when it could be only two to three, if any."

The number of indictments expected is a tiny percentage of the lawyers and judges operating in Cook County.

In addition to the county's regular judges, downstate judges, such as Lockwood, also serve temporary stints in Cook County's 365 courts. The result is as many as 600 judges handle the nearly six million cases filed each year ranging from traffic tickets to murder.

"We're talking about a few bad apples," said William J. Kunkle Jr., assistant state's attorney. "This is not an indictment of the whole system. This is the system cleansing itself."

Wyoming Antelope Are In Wintry Death Trap

By MARGUERITE HERMAN

Associated Press Writer
CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Desperate to reach clear areas to feed amid unrelenting snows, hundreds of antelope have been killed by trains while others await slow death "bunched up" along a fence erected to protect a cattle range, officials say.

About 1,500 antelope are being prevented from reaching Red Rim, a southern Wyoming plateau that dependably blows clear, by the 40-mile fence which has become a focus of wildlife protectors' protests.

The rancher who built the fence argues the antelope herd has been mismanaged by the state Game and Fish Department and is destroying his range for grazing, an issue hotly contested in Wyoming for years.

Wildlife groups have charged that the real reason for the obstruction is to clear the land for coal mining.

Rancher Taylor Lawrence has offered to open some gates, but insists the fence won't come down.

And Bureau of Land Management spokeswoman Pat Korp of Cheyenne said Wednesday her agency and the U.S. attorney's office were "checking all the alternatives" to see if legal action might bring the Red Rim fence down.

Bitter cold and as much as 2 feet of snow have created a death trap for thousands of antelope in southern Wyoming that cannot find exposed sagebrush for feeding, state wildlife officials said.

Trains have killed at least 200 antelope that gathered in the cleared areas along railroad tracks in the past two weeks, and more have died on highways.

The plight of the Red Rim antelope has prompted a "flood" of calls Wednesday to the National Wildlife Federation and the Wyoming federation from people who "want to do something," spokesman Tom Dougherty in Cheyenne said.

Dougherty said some members of Congress called — and a New Hampshire woman offered to sell her property to pay for feeding the animals.

Stopping the antelope is a 5-foot fence erected by Lawrence, who owns land on Red Rim.

About 400,000 antelope roamed Wyoming before this year's hunting season, which killed about one-quarter of the herd and brought it nearer to ideal size, state Game and Fish Department spokesman Dale Strickland has said.

When the national and Wyoming wildlife federations warned last fall the fence would mean death to thousands of antelope during a severe winter, Lawrence said the animals would go elsewhere.

Instead, the animals are "bunched up" along the fence, trying to find a way into the one area they rely on during critical winters, according to Game and Fish biologist Dave Moody.

"I'm morally responsible to those animals," Moody said. "It'll be tougher than hell for me to sit back and watch them die."

According to Moody, Lawrence has said he might open some gates in the fence. But Moody questioned whether antelope would use the 20-foot openings.

"He's willing to let hundreds of antelope die," the biologist said.

Lawrence was reported out of the state Wednesday and did not return several phone calls to his Casper office.

Lawrence has denied accusations by the wildlife federations the fence was prompted by a desire to remove his land's status as antelope winter habitat. That status has stalled possible federal coal leasing in Red Rim.

The federations asked that Red Rim be declared unsuitable for mining because poor soil and low rainfall make it impossible to reclaim to antelope winter range. Under Lawrence's land in Red Rim is coal owned by Rocky Mountain Energy, which contends it can reclaim the land and seeks a compromise with officials on the leasing question.

Holbrook was pessimistic about the herd's prospects.

"The whole antelope population out here is beginning to approach some real risk," he said.

Ticketing By Firemen

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Starting next week, city firefighters will be taking on an extra chore — handing out citations to cars illegally parked in fire lanes and handicapped zones.

The parking laws have been on the books for years, but it wasn't until a City Council action earlier this year that firefighters were authorized to dispense the citations, says Fire Department Capt. Gerald Perkins.

Perkins, who will be coordinating the new program, says the council's action permits firefighters to go into parking lots on private property and enforce the laws.

Those caught illegally parked in handicapped zones will be issued a $52 ticket, while those cited for parking in a fire lane will receive a $30 citation, Perkins says.

"The citations are printed and should be distributed to all (fire) stations by Monday, and we'll be under way," he said.

Perkins said Fire Department personnel were trained for two months last summer to write parking tickets and were also instructed on how to answer citizen complaints about the violations.

Duke Offers Challenge For Pirates

East Carolina's basketball Pirates, after suffering their first loss of the season last Saturday night, go from one lions' den into another this Saturday when they travel to Durham to face Duke University.

Tipoff is set for 7:30 p.m. in Cameron Indoor Stadium.

The Pirates, who won their first two outings, went up against then-ranked #20 Virginia Commonwealth University last Saturday and were drubbed 75-44. The 31-point margin was the largest suffered by a Charlie Harrison-coached team.

Oddly enough, VCU dropped out of the standings after taking two top-sided wins during the week.

Duke is unranked, but the Blue Devils bring in a 5-0 record. The young Blue Devils got off to a slow start, downing Vanderbilt 78-74 and then nipping William & Mary, 70-63.

But in their last three games, they rolled to lopsided wins, beating Davidson 90-63, South Florida 95-66 and Ohio University, 82-63.

Sophomore guard Johnny Dawkins, 6-2, leads the Blue Devils in scoring with a 25.6 average, but Duke has four other players in double figures. They include 6-8 sophomore center Mark Alarie at 13.4, 6-5 sophomore forward David Henderson at 12.6 and 6-0 freshman guard Tommy Amaker at 10.2.

All but Henderson have been starting. The other two starters usually are 6-7 junior forward Dan Meagher, averaging 6.8 points a game, and 6-8 sophomore forward Jay Bilas, hitting 9.2.

Dawkins is the leading rebounder with 6.6 per game, while Alarie and Bilas are both pulling 6.2 per game.

Overall, Duke is scoring 83.0 points a game, while allowing 66.8. The Blue Devils are outrebounding their opponents, 36.8 to 31.4.

"Duke is probably more explosive than Virginia Commonwealth on offense," Harrison said. "Dawkins is a phenomenal talent and has the intelligence to go with their talent. Henderson hurt us last year and he's playing extremely well this year as a sixth man. This will be another very tough test for us at this point in the season."

To a large extent, the Blue Devils went through a season last year similar to the one the Pirates face this year — having very young players. The Blue Devils were 11-17 last year as Coach Mike Krzyzewski went with a lineup composed mostly of freshmen. That experience appears to be paying off for the Blue Devils so far this year.

Last year, the two teams met with Duke escaping with a 70-63 win after trailing throughout most of the first half.

This year, however, the shoe is on the other foot with Duke having the more experienced team and the Pirates the youngsters. Three starters for the Pirates are freshmen — 6-7 center Roy Smith, 6-6 forward Derrick Battle and 6-2 guard William Grady.

The only experience in the starting lineup comes from 6-1 point guard Tony Robinson and 6-5 forward Barry Wright.

Wright is the leading scorer for the Pirates with a 12.0 average, while Robinson is the only other player in double figures at 10.7. Smith is scoring at 9.0 per game, while Grady has a 7.0 and Battle, a 5.0 average.

Reserve guard Curt Vanderhorst is scoring a 7.0.

The leading Pirate rebounder is Smith at 8.3, followed by Battle at 5.0.

The Pirates have averaged 59.3 points a game while allowing 61.3. They've been outrebounded 39.0 to 35.7.

"You know, I said we probably would not be a real good team in December and take our lumps," Harrison said. "Well, I feel we are still trying to get the feel of our team. Until all veterans play as they are capable and we find out just what our youngsters really can do, then I'm not sure we know enough about our team to know just how to play certain situations."

"Our poor shooting, lack of aggressiveness and inconsistency must change in order to be a good basketball team," the coach continued.

Following this Saturday night's contest, the Pirates are again idle for a week before playing host to Drexel University the following Saturday, December 17, in Minges Coliseum. Then, they travel to Peoria, Illinois, the following Tuesday and Wednesday for the River City Shootout, hosted by Bradley

Lady Pirates Hosting JMU

East Carolina's Lady Pirates seek to snap a two-game losing streak Saturday night when ECU hosts James Madison at 7:30 p.m. in Minges Coliseum.

The game is the first ECAC-South contest for the Lady Pirates. While there will be no league standings this year, the women will play a post-season tournament to decide a champion for the first time. That tournament will be held in Greenville in early March.

East Carolina comes in with a 2-3 record, having lost to Fayetteville State, 64-53, and UNC Charlotte, 56-50, in play last week. In the latter game, the Lady Pirates built up as much as a 14-point lead before losing.

James Madison was 2-2 on the year prior to a game last night with American University on the Dutchesses' home court. East Carolina leads the series between the two schools, 8-2, winning last year's only meeting, 54-48.

JMU opened the 1983-84 season with an 88-48 win over

Loyola and then took a 68-53 win over George Mason in a conference meeting.

That, however, was followed by a 66-65 loss to Howard on a buzzer shot and a 60-57 overtime loss to George Mason in the consolation game of the George Washington Invitational tournament.

Junior Sue Manelski, a 5-6 guard, is the leading scorer for the Dutchesses with a 16.8 average, while 6-0 freshman-center Julie Franken is hitting 15.5 points a game. Forward Michele James, a 6-0 junior, is scoring at a 10.0 clip.

Other starters are expected to be 5-6 senior guard Mary Gilligan (2.5 ppg) and 5-11 freshman forward Besty Witman (8.8 ppg).

The Dutchess are led in the rebounding column by James with 13.3 per game, while Franken is pulling 10.0.

East Carolina is led by Sylvia Bragg, a 5-8 sophomore guard with an 11.2 average, while Annette Phillips, a 5-10 junior forward, has a 10.2 mark. Other starters are 5-4 sophomore guard Delphine Mabry, 9-4, 6-2 senior center Darlene Hedges, 3-4, and 5-10 junior forward Anita Anderson, 5-8.

The leading ECU rebounder is Phillips with 6.6, while Hedges is pulling 6.0.

Following the game this weekend, the Lady Pirates are idle until next Saturday when they host Cincinnati at 3 p.m.

Steinkuhler Wins Lombardi

HOUSTON (AP) — Dean Steinkuhler, a hulking offensive guard for the top-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers, shared the honor of being college football's best lineman with the nation's top running back.

Steinkuhler, 6-foot-3 and 273 pounds, won the 14th annual Lombardi Award on Thursday night over Doug Dawson of Texas, Bill Fralic of Pittsburgh and Reggie White of Tennessee.

Part of the award, given in honor of the late Green Bay Packers Coach Vince Lombardi, belonged to Mike Rozier, winner of the 1983 Heisman Trophy. Steinkuhler said.

"Any time you have a guy like Mike behind you, it can't help but make the line look better," Steinkuhler said after receiving the award. "I want to thank Mike, without him I probably wouldn't be here. People don't get up on Sunday morning and read our (the offensive linemen's) stats in the paper."

The four finalists were chosen by a panel of 158 college football coaches, sports writers and sportscasters to receive the 40-pound block of granite that is given as the trophy. Results of the balloting were not released.

Steinkuhler is the Cornhuskers' fastest lineman ever, running 40 yards in 4.67 seconds.

A native of Burr, Neb., a rural community of 300, where he played only eight-man football for Sterling High School, Steinkuhler was selected to the AP's All-Big Eight team and was a second team All-American.

"I don't know if this is the biggest thing to ever happen to Burr, Nebraska, but it's definitely the biggest thing to ever happen to Dean Steinkuhler. Most kids from small towns don't get the chance to play football for a major university," he said.

He was described by his coach, Tom Osborne, as "possibly the best lineman" he has seen in his 20 years of coaching at Nebraska. "The main thing about Dean is his speed and balance," Osborne said.

"He has good coordination. He is strong and very intelligent and you just don't find guys that size who could move like that. I think that's why the pros and everybody who's seen him play are quite impressed with him."

Even as a junior, playing with All-American, 1982 Lombardi winner and two-time Outland Trophy winner Dave Rimington and all-Big Eight linemen Randy Theiss and Mike Mandelko, Steinkuhler consistently graded highest.

"A lot of people have compared me to Dave. I really don't see how they can. I used Dave as a leader. He has helped me get where I am today," Steinkuhler said.

This year Steinkuhler was the foundation of a line that a number of opposing coaches said was among the best they had ever seen.

Rozier continually credited the offensive line for opening holes that helped him become only the second man ever to rush for more than 2,000 yards in a collegiate season, gaining 2,148.

"Those guys open holes anybody could run through," said Rozier.

UNC-Wilmington To ECAC-South?

UNC-Wilmington could become the newest member of the ECAC-South when the full ECAC holds its next meeting.

According to Dean Ehlers, athletic director of James Madison University and president of the ECAC-South, only the approval of the entire ECAC remains. A two-thirds vote of the entire membership is necessary for final approval.

UNC-Wilmington has been seeking affiliation with a conference for several years now and will become the second North Carolina member of the league if it does gain approval. The ECAC-South has already given its stamp of approval to UNC's entry into the conference.

It is doubtful that UNCW could receive admission in time for any sports this year, but the school could become a full member in time for next fall's opening programs.

Current members of the ECAC-South are East Carolina, William & Mary, Richmond, James Madison, George Mason and the U.S. Naval Academy.

The panel returns one last time this week to give you its predictions of the 1983 bowl games, running from tomorrow's Independence Bowl to the finale in the Orange Bowl when Miami, Fla., takes on #1 ranked Nebraska.

But more about that later. First a couple of other things.

Yesterday Simon Terrell, the executive director of the North Carolina High School Athletic Association, announced that he will retire following the end of his current term, which ends July 1, 1984. Terrell is only the fourth man to head the organization and has done so since 1967.

During his tenure, the NCHSAA has grown to cover 334 schools with some 90,000 athletes annually. The association is now in the process of coming up with a plan for a major realignment of the state, with several options available — including one which would have a 5-A ranking of the super-sized schools. Another possibility would be to reduce the rankings to only three.

That, however, will not be fully settled until after Terrell has stepped down, next December.

His replacement will be sought shortly after the first of the year, but the best bet is his current assistant Charles Adams.

Adams would come into the job totally familiar with the situation, having served under Terrell for some years now. Terrell, if our memory serves us, was the assistant to L.J. Perry, the previous executive director, before moving up with Perry stepped down.

Adams would therefore seem to be the logical replacement.

Recommendations are expected to be made to the board of directors as to a replacement in February.

At any rate, Terrell deserves a hardy salute from the NCHSAA and all high school athletes, past and present, for the work he has done over the past 16 years.

Now to our picks. With Vickie Spivey still in the lead, it would appear that she had a lock on first place. A comparison of her picks and ours — we are in second place — show that at best, we could only pull even. There are only two differences, the margin of her lead.

The current standings show Spivey with a 96-44 mark, followed by this writer at 94-46. The guests rank third with a 92-48 record, followed by Tom Baines at 91-49. Jimmy DuPree is fifth with a 90-50 mark, followed by Joe Jenkins at 89-51.

Our guest for the finale is the best guest of the year, WNCT-TV's Slim Short.

Whereas last year, there were enough differences in the pack to allow for some general overhauls, it isn't likely to occur this season.

The only question is whether it will be a tie for Vickie or an outright championship.

In this area, the biggest game, of course, is the Florida State-North Carolina meeting in the Peach Bowl. Florida State comes in following one of its biggest defeats, suffered last weekend at the hands of Florida. Whether the Seminoles can rebound from that is questionable — but if they do they certainly will be hungry. A lot depends on how quickly Kelly Lowery is ready to play.

Our pick is that the Tar Heels will come out on top, but the panel gives them only a 4-2 edge.

The other consensus picks: Air Force over Mississippi; Maryland over Tennessee; Southern Methodist and Alabama, a toss-up; Boston College over Notre Dame; West Virginia over Kentucky; Oklahoma State over Baylor; Ohio State and Pittsburgh, a toss-up; Illinois over UCLA; Northern Illinois over Fullerton State; Brigham Young over Missouri; Penn State over Washington; Florida over Iowa; Texas over Georgia; Nebraska over Miami, Fla.; and Auburn over Michigan.

Pepperdine Likes OTs

By The Associated Press
Pepperdine has this thing about playing national powers in overtime, as 14th-ranked Wichita State has discovered to its dismay.

Pepperdine, which took national champion North Carolina State into two overtimes before losing in the first round last season's NCAA basketball tournament, put in only five extra minutes Thursday night. But they were enough to hand the Wichita its first defeat, 67-66.

It was a light night for college basketball, with only three ranked teams in action.

No. 15 Arkansas topped Southwest Missouri State 56-41, and No. 20 Fresno State routed Portland 70-45. And unranked Virginia continued to get along without Ralph Sampson, winning its sixth game without a loss, 52-41 over William & Mary.

Dwayne Polee and Scott McCollum had 14 points each to lead Pepperdine. But it was Mark Wilson, who made some key steals in both regulation and overtime and made a key free throw after missing the first of two to tie it with four seconds left in regulation.

"I've been in that situation before," Wilson said. "I rushed the first shot, but then I took my time, bent my knees and hit the second. When you miss a shot, you just have to come back and play hard."

Pepperdine Coach Jim Harrick said his plan all along was to take advantage of Wichita's weakness in the backcourt.

"They're not a very good outside team, but they can sure beat you inside," Harrick said.

Wichita's Xavier McDaniel was the game's leading scorer with 20 points.

Top 20
Joe Kleine had 23 points and 12 rebounds to lead Arkansas over Southwest Missouri prompting opposing Coach Charlie Spoonhour to put it simply.

"Joe Kleine is a monster," Spoonhour said of the 6-foot-11 center, who scored a game-high 23 points and lead both teams in rebounding with 12. "He is a great rebounder."

Ron Anderson hit all eight of his field goal attempts and scored 20 points to lead Fresno State. The Bulldogs, 4-1, rolled to an early 35-18 lead and built it to 56-27 midway through the second half.

Bernard Thompson and Scott Barnes added 12 points each for Fresno.

Unranked Teams

Senior Rick Carlisle paced a balanced Virginia attack with 12 points. He got help from veteran guards Ricky Stokes and Othell Wilson as well as Tom Sheehy and Olden Polynice, two highly-touted freshman Coach Terry Holland hopes can compensate for Sampson's absence.

Wilson, came off the bench to tally 11 points. Sheehy had nine, Stokes had eight and Polynice, a 6-10 center, contributed two key foul shots in a seven-point burst that broke the game open early in the second half.

That prompted William & Mary Coach Barry Parkhill, a one-time Virginia star, to say:

"I really think they are a whole lot better than people are giving them credit for. I think they are one of the top 30 teams in the country," Parkhill said.

Wayman Tisdale had 23 points and 11 rebounds as Oklahoma ran its record to 5-1 with a 94-66 rout of Georgia State.

Chuck Person scored 17 points as Auburn routed outmanned Youngstown State 78-52 in the opening round of the Colonial Classic. The Tigers will meet South Alabama, who downed Florida A&M 81-70 in the tournament opener.

John Price had 21 points. Shawn Campbell 19 and Charles Carradine 17 to lead Weber State to a 94-83 victory over Utah.

Tulane won its fourth game without a loss, routing Central Florida 82-54 as Howard Jenkins led the way with 20 points.

scored 21 points and had nine assists as Connecticut topped winless U.S. International 98-80.

Vince Hinchey scored 25 points as Boise State defeated Wyoming 66-52.

Vince Martello's 18 points paced Florida State to a 76-63 victory over Jacksonville.

Southern California beat San Jose State 69-62 behind Ron Holmes 19 points and 16 by Wayne Carlander.

Lefty O'Doul of the Philadelphia Phillies set a National League record in 1929 by reaching base 334 times. He made 254 hits, drew 76 walks, and was hit by a pitched ball four times.

Different Styles In Peach

ATLANTA (AP) — Coach Bobby Bowden of Florida State says the 16th annual Peach Bowl football game will offer two contrasting styles of offense.

"We depend upon the big play," Bowden said. "Dick (Crum, coach of North Carolina) is more methodical."

"I use ooh-aah football," Bowden added. "Ooh, I loved that play, or aah, that was bad."

The two coaches were in Atlanta Thursday for a news conference to preview the Dec. 30 clash, set for a 3 p.m. EST kickoff at Atlanta Stadium.

"I hate that expression 'you're no better than your last game,'" Bowden said, prompting an outburst of laughter.

FSU enters the game with a 6-5 record, having lost four close decisions before being demolished 53-14 by archrival Florida last Saturday at Gainesville.

"The worst thing about our football team is our record," Bowden said. "We're a lot better than our record. I've never been with a team that lost so many close games. Last week I can't explain."

Despite the thrashing last week, oddsmakers have made the Seminoles an early 3-point favorite over the Tar Heels, the Atlantic Coast Conference runnerup with an 8-3 record.

Crum said he watched the FSU-Florida game on television and figured out what happened.

"Everytime they did something great, there was a penalty," Crum said. "When you have turnovers and penalties, it's pretty tough to win."

"I need you to come to Tallahassee and tell the people that," Bowden said.

Crum has an 84-29 record in 10 years as a head coach at Miami of Ohio and North Carolina, including a 50-19 mark in six years at the helm of the Tar Heels.

The most significant Crum record as far as the Peach Bowl is concerned is his perfect 6-0 mark in postseason competition.

"I can't explain it," Crum said. "Our kids are going to work hard, but we let them have a good time, too. That's been the approach we've had."

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

THE MAGNITUDE OF THE BIBLICAL ARMIES

THE ARMY OF ISRAEL CONSISTED OF INFANTRY ONLY AND WAS COMPOSED OF SPEARMEN, SLINGERS, AND ARCHERS. (NUM. 11:21) IT INCLUDED ALL THE ABLE BODIED MEN OF THE NATION FROM TWENTY YEARS OLD AND UPWARD, ABLE TO GO FORTH TO WAR. THE LEVITES WERE THE ONLY MALES EXEMPTED FROM SERVICE BECAUSE THEY WERE THE PRIESTHOOD. WHEN KING SOLOMON RULED, HE ADDED CAVALRY AND CHARIOTS TO HIS FORCES, SWELLING THE NUMBERS AND THEREBY INCREASING THEIR EFFECTIVE POWER. HOWEVER, WHEN IT CAME TO GREAT POWER, THE ANCIENT ARMIES OF NEBUCHADNEZZAR OF BABYLON OUT-RANKED THEM ALL! BESIDES INFANTRY AND CAVALRY HE EMPLOYED A CORPS OF ELEPHANT DRIVERS, POSSIBLY THE FORERUNNER OF THE MODERN-DAY TANK. IT WAS JUST SUCH AN IMPOSING FORCE THAT ONE DAY, SUDDENLY, ENCIRCLED JERUSALEM.....

...AND JERUSALEM LIES AT THE MERCY OF NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S BESIEGING ARMY.

Early TV Days Recalled By Actor E.G. Marshall

By JULIANNE HASTINGS
UPI TV Reporter
NEW YORK UPI — Fifty years in the business, two Emmys, more than 500 television credits to his name. When E.G. Marshall starts reminiscing about television the time goes by far too quickly.

Marshall has been doing television since it began. His first appearance was in June 1948 in "Our Town" starring Raymond Massey on NBC. The late Fred Coe was the television director, Martin "Chet" Manulis was the stage director.

"In those days you went on the air when you were ready and when you finished, it there was time to spare, they'd tell some news or play some music," Marshall said during an interview in Manhattan's Greenwich Village, where he still has an apartment.

Audience sizes were not huge, but no one worried. "We didn't have Nielsen's in those days."

"You used to have to go to a bar to watch TV. A colleague once told me, 'The AA got me out of bars and now television's putting me back in. You have to go to a bar and watch your show or watch a kinnie a week later.'"

Kinnies, officially known as kinescope recordings, were the only records that could be made of those old television programs in the days before videotape. They were made by filming a television monitor and the picture quality, needless to say, was poor.

The first audience was upscale, middleclass, city people who went to theater and concerts.

"You could tell by the mail that the audience was changing," Marshall said. "What they would object to, you shouldn't show anything above the knee and you shouldn't discuss religion and never use a cuss word, 'hell' or 'damn,' because that was forbidden."

"If there was any accent, like an Irish play or a cockney play, you'd get mail saying, 'Why you do you do these plays with these foreign brogues?' I'd think, now we're reaching out to Indiana, no longer just New York, Philadelphia, Chicago."

Much of what was done on the air were works that are public domain — Shakespeare, Ibsen, Faulkner. "When did you see Faulkner last on television," Marshall sighed.

Marshall, who most recently was seen on television in his excellent portrayal of the late Ambassador Joseph Kennedy Sr. in the NBC miniseries "Kennedy," will be seen this week in the CBS presentation of John Steinbeck's "The Winter of Our Discontent" with Donald Sutherland, Teri Garr and Tuesday Weld.

"What's heartening about this is here we are getting back to American writers and doing real stuff," Marshall said of the Steinbeck movie.

He said he was disappointed with the course television took as it matured.

"It never developed the way we all hoped and thought it would."

"I suppose a lot of people will be watching the numbers on 'Winter of Our Discontent' to see whether they can say, 'I told you so,' or 'I told you,'" he said, switching the tone of his voice to indicate first disapproval and then approval.

The Minnesota-born Marshall started his acting career on the stage in Chicago. "The first week you'd be sold out and the second week you'd have half a house," he said.

In 1937, he and three pals paid $7 apiece to share a ride to New York.

He got a room at the 44th Street Hotel and struck out. "Er, better phrase that set out," he laughed.

Since then he has been on Broadway in "The Iceman Cometh," "Jason," "Waiting For Godot," and "Plaza Suite," and made such movies as "The Caine Mutiny," "Twelve Angry Men" and "Superman II."

In 1962 and 1963, Marshall won Emmys for his starring role as Lawrence Preston in the CBS series "The Defenders." He also played in the NBC series "The Bold Ones."

Now?

"No more series," he said. "I enjoy what I'm doing now, so many things. I would never want to be tied down like that again."

He also is not interested in directing.

"Can you imagine dealing with actors? I'd rather sneak around and say to the director, 'Why don't you tell him or her to do this?' Or what about this idea?"

"I recognize directorial con. They say, 'Oh that's terrific how you do that. Oh my God, that's magnificent the way you do that!'"

"Mike Nichols has a thing that he says at the end of a scene or an act, he does his imitation of W.C. Fields — sounds nothing like him. He says, 'Very goooooo. Just two small theeeengs.' They are always two very important things," Marshall said. "He's a very good director."

Despite all his TV and movie experience, Marshall's first love is still the stage.

"I'm in control — or I am not in control," he said. "You can do your own editing when you're on stage. It's up to you. When you see a movie or television film you say to yourself, 'Why the hell do they cut to that person now?' Because that's a very important line. I was trying to make a point there."

"But when you're on stage, they can't dim the lights on you."

Spacecraft To Watch Halley Comet's Fly-by

By LEE SIEGEL
Associated Press Writer
SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Spacecraft from Japan, the Soviet Union and the European Space Agency will greet Halley's Comet when it zooms into the solar system in two years, marking a "very useful" step in East-West cooperation, scientists say.

The United States, concentrating on the space shuttle program, will play a limited role in the missions to the so-called "dirty snowball" which streaks into the solar system every 76 years, the last time in 1910 and 1911.

The comet's visit in late 1985 and early 1986 will be the first time spacecraft laden with modern scientific instruments will be used for observations — including some U.S. experiments.

"At the moment, there are not too many cooperative efforts between the Soviet Union and the United States," said Tamas I. Gombosi of Hungary, a leading scientist on the U.S.S.R.'s international Vega 1 and 2 comet missions.

This international Halley's effort involves a lot of nations," he added. "It makes it easier for the United States and the Soviet Union to cooperate in this joint effort. ... These projects are very useful from a political point of view. This is a basis for further cooperation."

Gombosi and several other scientists from European, Japanese and U.S. space agencies met to discuss the Halley's missions Thursday during the American Geophysical Union's meeting.

"This is a very important occasion," said University of Iowa physicist and AGU President James A. Van Allen, who discovered the Van Allen radiation belt surrounding the Earth. "To my knowledge, it's the first open, public discussion of all the comet missions around the world."

Halley's Comet will round the sun in February 1986. It will be encountered the following month by the Soviet Vega 1 and 2, by Japan's MS-T5 and Planet-A spacecraft and by the European Space Agency's Giotto, which will contain some U.S. experiments. All five spacecraft will be launched between December 1984 and August 1985.

In Tokyo today, scientists from Japan's Institute of Astronomical Science unveiled the 6-foot-high, 308-pound MS-T5, which is to go into solar orbit in January 1985. The craft will fly about 625,000 miles from the comet, collecting data on solar winds, the clash between plasma waves of the sun and the comet, and the difference in the magnetic waves of the two, said professor Kunio Hirao.

The possible but still uncertain mission with most American involvement is ISEE-3, launched in 1978 as a joint project of the U.S. and European space agencies initially designed to study the solar-wind-blown magnetic tail of the Earth.

But for ISEE-3 to approach Halley's Comet in late March 1986, it first must survive space dust that will hit it during its planned encounter with the smaller Comet Giacobini-Zinner on Sept. 11, 1985.

Numerous American scientists are involved in the Soviet, Japan and European-sponsored Halley's missions, although official U.S. government involvement is relatively small. The reason, van Allen said, is that "we're spending all our money on the space shuttle."

A 1979 U.S. government decision not to participate as a partner in the Giotto mission "was a big disappointment on both sides of the Atlantic," said Ruedeger

Reinhard, mission project scientist.

But many American scientists are participating individually in the Soviet Vega missions, and the U.S. Deep Space Network will help track the spacecraft, said Gombosi.

In addition, European Space Agency and Soviet officials soon will meet in Japan to negotiate an agreement to make Vega data available to improve the navigation of the Giotto spacecraft, he said.

Comets are believed to be "dirty snowballs" made up of frozen water, ammonia and carbon dioxide and "some dirt," said Van Allen.

The immediate purpose of the Halley missions is to learn more about the 3-mile diameter comet nucleus, how its 100 million-mile long tail is formed and how it and the planets interact with solar wind.

AL PACINO SCARFACE

In the spring of 1980, the port at Mariel Harbor was opened, and thousands set sail for the United States.
They came in search of the American Dream.

One of them found it on the sun-washed avenues of Miami...wealth, power and passion beyond his wildest dreams.

He was Tony Montana.
The world will remember him by another name
...SCARFACE.

He loved the American Dream.
With a vengeance.

"Scarface" is an intense film
both in its use of language and depiction of violence.
We suggest mature audiences.

Life As It's Lived

Heroic Efforts Down The Drain

By GAIL MICHAELS
Last week I was asked to host a Monday morning meeting for the purpose of organizing a series of Saturday enrichment activities for children.

The mere thought of inviting people into my home on a Monday was enough to wreak havoc on my equilibrium. The other days of the week are bad enough, but anyone brave enough to tread my carpet after a weekend of non-stop kids and Phillip would do well to bring a shovel or at least a guideline to attach to the handle of the front door.

But fool that I am, I refused to reveal to a new acquaintance that my den on Monday morning normally bore a strong resemblance to Kansas City on "The Day After." I quietly determined that somehow I would manage to keep the usual weekend wreckage to a minimum.

I was overly optimistic. In spite of all my efforts, the children scattered their toys and books and Kleenex with their customary gay abandon, and Phillip was right behind them with his newspapers, video cartridges and junk mail. The only thing I managed to do over the weekend in preparation for my guests was to bake.

Such rare activity naturally attracted an audience. The children hovered around me like starved vultures. The cat had to be put out because she has such a strong affinity for baked goods that it invariably overcomes her instinct for self-preservation.

Unfortunately, I could not put out Phillip. He even made a pot of coffee for me in the hope that its bewitching aroma would induce me to share a few fresh crumbs with him. The aroma did indeed have a strong effect on me as did the coffee itself. I disposed of it in the same place that I throw the muritic acid with which I clean brass.

At 6 a.m. Monday morning, I struggled out of bed and started cleaning. I vacuumed, dusted, cleaned bathrooms, and mopped with heroic effort. The committee was due to arrive at 10 a.m. By 9:45, I was dressed and ready to put on the coffee. Phillip had left me approximately one and a half scoops.

After a brief moment of panic, I located a generous neighbor. I brewed the coffee, rinsed the dust off my good china, and waited for the doorbell to ring. And waited. At 10:30 the phone rang instead.

"Oh, Gail, there's been a mistake," the caller said. "We changed the meeting to my house because I'm expecting a package and we just realized that we forgot to call you. I hope this hasn't caused a problem."

"No," I sighed. "I always clean my house before dawn on Mondays."

"Good. You just put everything away, and we'll have the meeting at your house next Monday. And I do hope you'll forgive us."

I put everything away, including the coffee. I hope they like it strong.

Do you remember a rock and roll band named "Johnny and the Moondogs"? How about "The Cavemen"? Actually, they are the same band. You probably remember them better as "The Beatles", the name they finally settled on. Other names the Fab Four used included "The Foreverly Brothers", "The Moonshiners", and "The Quarrymen Skiffle Group". The name "Beatles" was chosen as a tribute to Buddy Holly's "Crickets". This week marks the third anniversary of John Lennon's death.

DO YOU KNOW — Who was the original drummer for the "Beatles"?
THURSDAY'S ANSWER — Blair House is the Washington house used by visiting dignitaries.

Suggests A 'Message' In Camouflage Craze

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Whether it's politics, patriotism or just the latest fad, Pennsylvania surplus store owners say kids have gone "nuts" over military camouflage clothing this Christmas season.

Warren Sudler, manager of I. Goldberg's, a military surplus store in downtown Philadelphia, said he's even selling tiny, specially made camouflage uniforms for toddlers at $27 each.

"We have a lot of frantic parents looking for camouflage for their kids," he said. "I would call it more than a fad."

Bill Bonn of Army-Navy Surplus in Pittsburgh said he noticed just before Halloween that kids were buying camouflage uniforms, green camouflage face paint and matching hats.

Since then, he said, the demand is so great his store had to start a waiting list.

Bonn speculated that the Oct. 23 terrorist attack that killed 240 U.S. servicemen in Beirut, Lebanon, and the U.S. invasion of Grenada may have boosted the popularity of military garb.

"I think we've finally bounced back from our Vietnam Yippies or hippies or whatever," Bonn observed.

"The kids have gone nuts for camouflage," said Don Keefe of Keefe's Army-Navy in Kingston, in northeastern Luzerne County, as goods flowed steadily past cashiers. "There's no way anyone could have anticipated this demand. It's whacky."

Sudler had no ready explanation, but said he got the feeling that "underneath it seems to be a kind of unity for the United States."

Keefe suggested patriotism. "I would say this whole tough-guy image is part of the Reagan administration and that filters down in lots of ways," said David M. Jacobs, an associate professor of history and popular culture at Temple University in Philadelphia.

"In a way it's a kind of bizarre throwback to the 1950s when America had power, unbelievable power compared to other countries," he said. "You get a longing for that, a feeling that America should reclaim its rightful place, that America shouldn't be bullied around. This may come out in military clothes. Military clothes do suggest an aggressiveness and toughness, a kind of belligerence."

Whatever the reason, Bobbie Seizer of Ardmore Army-Navy, which has four stores in the Philadelphia suburbs, said, "Camouflage is extremely big these days and we're having difficulty getting the merchandise."

"At one time it was just hunters; now it's kids," said

Arlene Ross of the Broad Street Army-Navy Store in Harrisburg. And, she said, some people are also inquiring about buying helicopters, parachutes and anti-tank weapons.

Jacobs noted that during the 1960s and '70s, when the military became unpopular because of the Vietnam war, some youths wore military clothing as a form of protest.

"It was a way of making fun of the military by wearing the uniform out of context," the professor recalled.

According to Jacobs, military styles also have become high fashion among women. By wearing such garments, he said, a woman is showing that she is "an assertive, independent woman, willing to take her place beside man."

Lacocca Keeps Chrysler Helm

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — Squelching speculation that he might retire or seek political office, Lee Iacocca says he'll spend at least three more years as leader of Chrysler Corp., which escaped bankruptcy in 1979 under his leadership.

"This ought to put an end to the rumors," Iacocca said Thursday after the No. 3 automaker's outside directors announced an agreement that could give him as much as $5.5 million if he stays at Chrysler's helm for four years. The agreement calls for Iacocca to stay for three years as chairman and chief executive, with the option to remain a fourth.

The announcement from the New York board meeting created what spokesman Bill Stempien called a "party atmosphere" at the company's Highland Park headquarters.

Lacocca, whose appearances in Chrysler advertisements have helped him become one of the most recognized corporate figures in America, will get 150,000 shares of Chrysler common stock at the end of three years, plus 50,000 more if he stays another year or more.

Options to buy another 400,000 shares also were included in the contract, the company said in a statement. Chrysler stock closed on the New York Stock Exchange Thursday at 27 1/2 per share.

Lacocca's current salary has not been disclosed, but was $365,000 in 1982. Stempien said.

"I'm happy about it. I feel honored they want me to stay on board four or more years," Lacocca said in a statement issued by Chrysler.

Yesterday's Cryptquip — MOM'S PURCHASE OF DRUMS FOR SON HAD PERCUSSION REPERCUSSIONS.
Today's Cryptquip clue: T equals I.

The Cryptquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Opening lead: Three of ♣.

This deal is from a recent tournament in Italy. It highlights two points that we have often made: 1) Bridge is an art, not a science; 2) Point count is only a guide, not a master. If you count points slavishly, you will see that East-West have 22 and North-South 18, so it would seem that there is, at best, a partscore in the cards.

Now let's take a look at what happened. The auction shown occurred at one table. Note that, at his second turn, North returned to his partner's first bid suit — he did not yet know that his partner had more than four hearts, so he could not raise on three card support. However, a two spade rebid would have been wiser.

THE VICTIM
VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Gabor Demsky, co-publisher of an underground Hungarian literary magazine, is scheduled to be tried in Budapest Dec. 21 on charges of assaulting police. A dissident writer reported Thursday, Demsky reportedly suffered a concussion and other injuries from two policemen.

Grenades In
2 Churches

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Grenades primed to detonate were found today in two Christian churches and a religious seminary, all located in the Arab sector of Jerusalem, police said.

Police spokesman Ziv Rotem said two grenades were found in the Franciscan Church, one in the Dormition Abbey and one in the Greek Orthodox seminary, a spokesman said. Bomb experts dismantled the grenades without harm, he said.

Meanwhile, police continued a search for gunmen who killed an 11-year-old Arab girl and wounded her sister Thursday in the West Bank city of Nablus.

Police said eye witnesses reported the gunmen opened fire from a car bearing Israeli license plates. The shooting followed a stoning incident in the city center, police said.

The grenades were found in buildings inside the old walled city of Jerusalem, in the Arab sector formerly ruled by Jordan. Rotem said the grenades were of Israeli army issue, but he added this did not automatically mean Jews were responsible.

There have been several incidents of violence and vandalism against Christian institutions in the city in the past year. Suspicions have pointed to Jewish extremists who claim the churches are abetting missionary work among Jews. No arrests have been made.

Several churches say they have received threatening letters, and anti-Christian slogans have been daubed on some Christian buildings.

Name Educator To Head Govm't

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada (AP) — Nicholas Braithwaite, an educator, has been named head of the advisory council that will oversee Grenada's interim government until elections next year.

Sir Paul Scoon, the island's governor general, announced the appointment Thursday in a radio address.

Scoon also said formal charges would be brought against some of the 47 people who have been in custody since they were apprehended during the Oct. 25 U.S.-led invasion.

Most prominent of the detainees are former Deputy Prime Minister Bernard Coard, considered the engineer of the coup in which Prime Minister Maurice Bishop was slain Oct. 19, and Gen. Hudson Austin, who headed the Revolutionary Military Council that seized power.

Scoon did not say what charges would be filed.

The appointment of Braithwaite, who has been acting chairman since the advisory council was formed Nov. 10, ended speculation on the Caribbean island that Alister McIntyre might still head the council.

McIntyre, a Grenadian who holds a high United Nations post in Geneva, had been named chairman, but turned down the job for health reasons.

He said the council would need time and outside assistance to draw up a new voter list because no elections have been held in Grenada since the 1979 coup that brought Bishop to power.

The governor general also announced three other appointments: Allan Kurtin, a Grenadian serving as permanent secretary to Jamaica's Prime Minister Edward Seaga, as Braithwaite's deputy; William Demas, secretary general of the Caribbean Development Bank, as economic adviser to the council; and Randolph Mark, a farmer, to the nine-member council.
