U.S. Copter Pilot Killed Near Nicaraguan Border

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — A U.S. Army pilot was killed by "hostile fire" from Nicaragua after his helicopter made a forced landing in Honduras near the border region where CIA-backed anti-Sandinista rebels are active, U.S. officials say.

It was the first reported shooting episode to cause a U.S. casualty since joint U.S.-Honduran military maneuvers began last August.

In Nicaragua, the leftist government's Defense Ministry said its forces along the border fired Wednesday on an "unidentified military helicopter" violating Nicaraguan airspace. The communique said the aircraft made a forced landing about 200 yards inside Honduras but did not mention the pilot's death.

The Pentagon identified the pilot as Chief Warrant Officer II Jeffery C. Schwab, of Joliet Ill., who had served in the 101st Aviation Group 229th Aviation Battalion at Ft. Campbell, Ky. Relatives in Joliet said Schwab about 27 years old.

The Pentagon said two Army engineers aboard the OH-58 observation helicopter were not injured and were released after being examined at the U.S. military hospital at Palmerola Air Base north of Tegucigalpa, the Honduran capital.

Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger said in a CBS television news interview today that the helicopter was flying a course that would have taken it to an exercise area in Honduras.

thing is that the pilot was killed after he got out of the helicopter (and was) simply walking around ... Weinberger said.

President Reagan, asked about the pilot's death as he bid farewell in Washington today to Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, told a reporter it was "a great tragedy."

U.S. Embassy spokesman Chris Arcos said the pilot was killed about 155 miles southeast of Tegucigalpa on the Las Trojes-Cifuentes road, the same road where two American journalists died June 21 when a land mine exploded. Honduran authorities accused the Sandinistas of mining the road.

"The pilot was mortally wounded after the helicopter was obliged to land. The hostile fire came from Nicaragua," Arcos said.

One source in Washington said the helicopter was fired on near Cifuentes, a town near the Nicaraguan border and in an area where anti-Sandinista rebels have launched attacks against Nicaragua to the south.

Neither Arcos nor Pentagon spokesmen specified what had forced the plane to land or the nature of the "hostile fire."

Nicaragua's Foreign Ministry said it had three versions of the incident, including one that said the aircraft was Honduran and one that said the helicopter was forced to land and its pilot killed by fire from the Nicaraguan side of the border.

The ministry also said U.S. Ambassador Anthony Quainton had relayed "a verbal note to our government in which the Sandinista army is accused of attacking the helicopter by land and air."

"In view of this contradiction, we are making public an official communique from the Defense Ministry," the statement said.

That Nicaraguan communique said the area where the incident happened has been the site of "intense fighting against counter-revolutionary groups coming across from Honduran territory..."

River Park North Rules Modified By Commission

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Two changes have been approved, and authorization given for one tentative change in the rules and regulations governing operation of Greenville's River Park North in the Meadowbrook area.

The action was taken Wednesday night at the January meeting of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Commission meeting. The first regulation change permits closure of the park to the public on Mondays effective Jan. 16, with the possible exception of legal holidays, such as the fourth of July, that might fall on a Monday. Until now, the park has been open seven days a week. In requesting the weekly one-day closure, parks Superintendent Walter Stasavich noted the seven-day schedule imposed a hardship on the park's director, Howard Vainright, and also did not provide for a cleanup, maintenance time that was free of visitors.

The second approved change extends the time period for the rental of pedal boats. Under the current regulation, rental hours have been from 1 to 6 p.m. daily, whatever the time of year. Under the adopted change, rental hours now will be from 1 to 6 p.m. November through March; from 1 to 6:30 p.m. during the months of April, May, September and October; and from 1 to 7:30 p.m. in the summer months of June, July and August.

Stasavich reported that the 6 p.m. closure time that has been maintained in all months has resulted in turning away many people who come after work to take the 30-minute rides on the popular pedal boats.

The third change that received tentative adoption for a period of six months, to be reviewed for further action in July, is that of permitting pets in the park (primarily dogs) provided they are kept on a leash at all times and in all areas of the park. The rule until now has been no pets under any circumstances.

Commission members agreed the issue of dogs or no dogs in public parks has long been and likely will continue to be a controversial issue, with dog lovers strongly objecting to having pets excluded from accompanying them in parks, and others claiming they are a nuisance for a place where people come with children. Another factor noted is that since River Park North is primarily a nature park with tame and wild ducks in the area, it will be necessary to keep a close watch to see how the new ruling might affect this wildlife.

Councilwoman Judy Greene, the newly appointed council representative to the Recreation and Parks Commission, remarked that the city has a leash law, but that the old regulation of no pets in the park is the first instance she knows about where pets were expressly precluded from a public area.

In a report to the commission, Stasavich gave a detailed rundown of the operations of the parks division of the Recreation and Parks Department. He said the responsibilities of the division falls into four major areas — maintenance of facilities, equipment and landscape; safety and security both for employees and the public; planning and construction of new facilities and areas, and the ongoing development of River Park North. Other factors noted in his report touched on the fact that new and improved equipment has made it possible to carry out operations without the addition of large numbers of new personnel, despite the fact that park areas and facilities have more than doubled in the last 10 to 15 years.

Department Executive Director Boyd Lee reported that during December, a 30-foot-tall cedar tree had been cut down and removed from Meadowbrook Park. It was discovered, he said, that the tree, valued at $1,000, had been taken by members of an East Carolina University fraternity. After negotiations with fraternity members, Lee said, the fraternity members agreed to procure and plant three large trees as compensation for the one that was removed.

Lee also revealed that the metal flag pole, missing from the Town Common early last year, was discovered and recovered from the Tar River during a period of low water. Also, a missing park bench was recovered from the river at the same time.

Martin Seeking Keep Judgeship

District Court Judge James E. (Jim) Martin announced that he has filed as a candidate for re-election to his 3rd Judicial District judgeship in the May 8 Democratic primary.

Martin, a Bethel native, filed with the state Board of Elections as a candidate to retain the seat he has held since 1980. The 3rd District serves Pitt, Craven, Carteret and Pamlico counties.

Martin was first named in August 1980 by Gov. Jim Hunt to replace retiring Judge Norris Reed Jr. and was then elected the following November to his first full term. He had won a run-off for the November nomination in June.

Prior to his nomination by Hunt, Martin had practiced law in Bethel. He received his law degree in 1975 from N.C. Central University and served as assistant district attorney for the 3rd District and as legal adviser for the police department in Greenville before beginning his private practice in 1978. Martin graduated from East Carolina University in 1965 with a bachelor's degree in social studies.

Martin served for four years in the U.S. Air Force, was an instructor in the ECU Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps flight program, and was a pilot for Trans World Airlines and Piedmont Aviation. He was a high school teacher and coach before entering law school.

Wage Final Desperate Struggle To Save A Killer From Execution

By JOHN FLESHER

Associated Press Writer RALEIGH (AP) — Desperate attorneys and death penalty opponents today mounted a final battle to save James W. Hutchins, scheduled to die Friday at 6 a.m. for murdering three law enforcement officers.

Rebuffed Wednesday by the U.S. Supreme Court, lawyers asked a state judge to declare the Rutherford County man insane and grant a stay of execution. A hearing was scheduled for noon in Wake County Superior Court before Judge Robert Collier, who Wednesday rejected two other motions for a new trial.

Meanwhile, pressure mounted on Gov. Jim Hunt to overturn the death sentence or at least grant time for additional court appeals. Hunt, a capital punishment supporter, declined comment through a spokesman Wednesday.

Hunt agreed to meet at his office at 11:15 a.m. with Mrs. Geneva Hutchins, the condemned man's wife.

While others rallied on his behalf, Hutchins met in Central Prison with the Rev. Guy Johnson of Rutherfordton, the only person besides his wife Hutchins has agreed to see, said prison spokesman Patty McQuillan.

Representatives of the North Carolina Council of Churches, Amnesty International, the Academy of Trial Lawyers and the North Carolina Civil Liberties Union met with Hunt this morning to argue against the death penalty.

Earlier this morning, defense attorney Roger Smith met with Hunt to discuss the case. After the meeting, Smith said Hunt was "well informed and conversant about the case. He grasps the points we are making and understands them well. I think he is in the process of weighing those out."

Hutchins, 54, was convicted in 1979 of shooting to death two Rutherford County sheriff's deputies who investigated his daughter's plea for help. The teen-ager reported that Hutchins beat her as they argued over the amount of vodka she put in punch for a high school graduation party. Hutchins later murdered a pursuing state Highway Patrol trooper.

The nation's highest court voted 7-2 to deny the Hutchins' request for a stay, clearing the way for him to become the first person executed in North Carolina since 1961 and the second person in the United States put to death by lethal injection. Hutchins requested that execution method.

Smith said his client took the news "with sadness and disappointment, but with composure."

"We are very disappointed, but we are determined to continue working as long as Mr. Hutchins has breath and we have breath," said Smith.

The appeal rejected by the Supreme Court was based on contentions that Hutchins had ineffective legal representation during the trial, that the judge didn't allow time to prepare a defense, and that imposing the death penalty on someone who committed crimes while suffering from mental and emotional disturbance was unconstitutional.

After the Supreme Court ruled, defense attorney Joe Cheshire entered three new motions before Collier in his hometown of Statesville. Collier this week is holding court in McDowell County, site of the trial.

Collier denied the first motion, for a stay of execution and new trial based on a sworn statement from psychiatrist Selwyn Rose of Winston-Salem that Hutchins was insane at the time of the May 31, 1979 killings.

The second motion, also denied, was to delay the execution until U.S. District Judge James McMillan of Charlotte rules in a separate case whether death penalty opponents should be excluded from jury service in capital murder cases, as North Carolina law requires.

Collier delayed a ruling on the third motion — that Hutchins is insane now and thus can't legally be executed. Collier ordered state psychiatrist James Groce, who previously has found Hutchins sane, to examine him again and present his findings at Thursday's hearing.

Blood Donors Give Themselves

© 1984 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I just donated blood to the American Red Cross Blood Center in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., and I'm enclosing a piece that was handed to me on my way out.

I hope you will print it. So many people are not aware of how important it is to give blood—especially now that our blood bank supply has become critically low. Thanks!

NEW YORK BLOOD DONOR

DEAR DONOR: You gave more than blood. You gave me an item that will (I hope) inspire more blood donors. Bless you.

WHAT GOOD IS A BLOOD DONOR?

A blood donor is good for people who go through windshield and red lights. For somebody with leukemia.

For people being operated on. For barefoot kids who aren't careful. For people into feudin' and fightin'.

For hemophiliacs so they can be as normal as possible.

For daredevils. For people undergoing dialysis while waiting for a kidney transplant. For people who fool around with guns. For little kids who manage to uncup a bottle of something poisonous.

For people who are burned pretty bad. For new mothers needing a transfusion. For new babies who need a complete change of blood supply. For people having open-heart surgery. For cancer patients. For people with a severe case of hepatitis. For kids who fall out of trees or whatever. For anybody any age with bleeding ulcers. For people in the wrong place at the wrong time. For the very tired with severe anemia.

For people who run into things. For people who are in a lot worse shape than most people you know.

A BLOOD DONOR IS GOOD FOR LIFE

DEAR ABBY: You recently had a letter in your column concerning a dog that barked continuously all day long (and many weekends) when his owner left him alone. Naturally, this disturbed the neighbors.

A man I work with had the same problem with a neighbor's dog, only this dog owner worked nights and slept days, and his dog barked all night long while he was at work. The neighbors complained but got nowhere. Finally they all got together and took turns staying up in shifts to tape-record the dog's barking. Then they placed the tape directly under the owner's bedroom window with the volume on "high" and forced the dog owner to listen to his own dog barking for eight hours straight. Of course, he didn't sleep a wink, but he got the message.

He apologized to his neighbors and sent his dog to dog obedience training school.

IT WORKED IN COLORADO SPRINGS

DEAR WORKED: This "give-'em-a-taste-of-their-own-medicine" technique should work anywhere.

DEAR ABBY: How do you feel about women shaking hands with other women when they meet or say goodbye? How about women shaking hands with men? I suppose a woman in business does this automatically, just as a man shakes hands with another man.

Don't you think a handshake is somewhat masculine? Whatever happened to the warm smile and friendly hello?

PITTSBURGH

DEAR PITTSBURGH: In my view, offering a hand to shake is a friendly gesture whether it's woman to woman, man to man or woman to man.

And nothing "happened" to the warm smile and the friendly hello. Both men and women use them—alone, or accompanied by a handshake.

Teens Seek Tasks Common To Age

Carol asked dad to announce her bedtime about five minutes after her date brings her home. When he does so, she complains about her "strict, old-fashioned" parents.

He and his wife are also concerned about 14-year-old Joe. Is he developing a good attitude in school pretending not to know the answers to questions in class?

What is going on in this family? "The teens are working through the four major personal and family tasks common to adolescents," says Dr. Leo Hawkins, extension human development specialist, N.C. State University.

Carol is working on her relations with the opposite sex. "Every young person must go through some social awkwardness. Carol needed help in taking a stand. She needed someone to blame for appearing to be old-fashioned," Dr. Hawkins says.

Her brother Joe is probably working on his independence from the family. "The first step is to work to become accepted by a group outside the family. He may know the answers in school but doesn't want to be frowned upon by his group," says the extension specialist.

Vocational plans represent another task. "At a time when he is less sure of himself, the adolescent has to make basic decisions about his future. Will he continue his education or go to work? Such decisions are very difficult under the best circumstances," Dr. Hawkins points out.

The fourth major task is the development of a workable philosophy of life. Teenagers may consider many different views before coming up with a personal interpretation of science, religion and what is right and wrong. The family's task is to take the growth and idealism of youth and support it with love," says the extension specialist.

Through all these tasks, the adolescent is re-evaluating the emotional lessons learned earlier. Trust was learned as an infant. Autonomy came as he stumbled through toddlerhood. Initiative was grasped as he moved out of the preschool years. Middle childhood was a time of learning how to do things skillfully. Adolescence brings a re-examination of the whole thing as the individual decides who he is and how close he wants to be to other people.

"As teenagers achieve these tasks, their self-esteem grows," says Dr. Hawkins.

If Egg Foo Young isn't in your permanent culinary repertoire, you may well be interested to try a recipe for this dish. It has a great virtue: it's suitable for supper, lunch or brunch.

EGGS FOO YOUNG — Great dish to serve for supper, lunch or brunch.

enjoy serving old-fashioned Orange Blossoms, made with orange juice, gin, sugar and ice cubes and strained into cocktail glasses. For a happy ending, custard-filled tarts or steamed sponge cake are in the Chinese tradition. Jasmine or some other interesting tea is delightful to serve in small Chinese tea cups, but if there are dyed-in-the-wool coffee drinkers among our guests, it would be well to have a pot of that beverage on hand.

EGG FOO YOUNG
6 large eggs
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 cups fresh bean sprouts, well-drained (see Notes)
1 cup diced (1/4 to 1/2 inch) cooked chicken
4 medium scallions, thinly sliced (1/2 cup)
1 medium (4 ounces) green pepper, finely chopped (1/2 cup)
14 (about) drained canned whole water chestnuts (from an 8-ounce can), thinly sliced (1/2 cup)
1/4 cup corn oil
Foo Young Sauce (see recipe)

In a large bowl beat the eggs and the salt just until foamy. With a large kitchen spoon stir in the bean sprouts, chicken, scallion, green pepper and water chestnuts.

In a heavy 10-inch skillet over moderately low heat, heat oil. Add egg mixture, with the kitchen spoon spread vegetable mixture so it is evenly distributed; cover tightly. Cook until bottom is golden and top is set — about 15 minutes. Cut into 4 equal wedges; with a wide spatula remove and turn golden side up onto individual plates. Serve with Foo Young Sauce. Makes 4 servings.

Improvement Needed

Following an audit of the Pitt County Jail, the Pitt County Board of Commissioners has asked Sheriff Ralph Tyson for priorities on improvement of the jail operation.

A team from the National Sheriff's Association conducted the audit which was funded by a grant from the U.S. Department of Justice's National Institute of Corrections.

Suggested were: preparation of an operational and procedures manual, pay for jailers and matrons comparable to other deputies, that new jail employees be required to complete the National Sheriff's Association's course for jail officers and that the chief jailer attend a course on jail administration.

An outdoor secure recreation area which could be used for fire evacuation was also recommended. It was also recommended that a nurse or physician visit the jail on a regular basis and temperature controlled food service carts be used.

Further recommendations were: the addition of five deputies to the present jail staff of 10, legal reference material be made available to pretrial inmates without lawyers.

Also among the recommendations were: more careful control over inmates property, television, radios and better phone access for prisoners to reduce tension and frustration, and a supply of balanced reading material.

Sheriff Tyson said he has asked the National Jail Center for assistance in preparing an operational and procedures manual. He also recommended the addition of the five deputy jailers.

Certainly the audit should be used to improve conditions for the jail inmates and working conditions for jail personnel.

We don't have to think in terms of making the jail a "country club" to acknowledge that improvements are needed. Particularly in the case of county jails should it be recognized that not everyone there is guilty of a crime. Many there are awaiting trial and should be presumed innocent until convicted. While they should not be expected luxury accommodations, they should be incarcerated under humane conditions.

Water Essential

Gradually an adequate water supply is becoming available to more of the rural areas of Pitt County.

The latest to be served will be some 178 families in the Falkland community. The Bell Arthur Water Corp. has received a loan of $289,000 from the Farmers Home Administration, as announced by Sen. John East, to finance the project. The loan will be paid back over 40 years at an interest rate of 9.5 percent.

With completion of this project the total project service will be to 1,700 rural customers.

A central water supply is becoming essential to rural areas to provide a safe water supply, and for fire protection. It is in the best interest of the entire county when a new area is designated for water service.

Surplus Blues

RALEIGH — With state tax collections running well ahead of forecasts which were used to draft the 1983-84 budget, it appears North Carolina will have a healthy surplus by June. Forecasts range in the area of $100 million but figures well beyond that have also been mentioned.

In its June short session, the Legislature will have to decide what to do with that money. Gov. Jim Hunt, a number of legislative leaders and Democratic gubernatorial candidates are saying that the money should be spent on education.

As Hunt said at a recent press conference, "The greatest need we have right now is to make our schools excellent." Hunt went on to say that by improving the public schools, North Carolina would be improving its ability to recruit new industry. Those industries, he says, need well-educated and productive workers.

But 9th District Rep. Jim Martin, a Republican candidate for governor, says that "instead of finding exciting ways to spend this money, we ought to find a way to eliminate this burden we've put on ourselves." He's talking about the inventory tax on manufacturers.

Martin says the inventory tax hurts the state's ability to recruit new industry. It's an argument that business interests have been making at the General Assembly for years.

The N.C. Citizens for Business and Industry has long advocated a state income tax credit for businesses which pay the tax. Under their proposals, businesses would continue to pay the tax to local governments but could then deduct a percentage of that payment from their state taxes. One of their most recent proposals would have been phased in over three years. In the third year, the businesses would get a state tax credit equal to 25 percent of that which they paid on inventory taxes. The projected annual cost in that third year would be $52.2 million.

Martin says repealing just the tax on manufacturers' inventories would cost $65 million a year. (He's also advocating repeal of the intangibles tax which would cost $60 million a year.)

Ivey Clayton, president of the group, argues that even a 25 percent tax credit on the inventory tax would be very helpful in industry recruitment. "You would get outside people more interested in North Carolina because it would show we're making an effort."

Those arguing for the tax credit say the loss of revenue would be temporary. With repeal of the inventory tax, new industry would start pouring into the state. Industries already here would stop moving their warehouse and distribution operations across state lines to Virginia and South Carolina. That would mean more jobs for the state, more property taxes and income taxes. It would make up for the lost revenue.

So far, few Democratic candidates for governor are talking about the inventory tax. Lauch Faircloth, former commerce secretary, called it an "impediment to economic development." But he's unwilling to call for its repeal, saying the state can't afford the loss of the money it raises.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A recent incident on the White House South Lawn neatly illustrates a hunch by President Reagan's advisers that the less uttered publicly about a problem, the greater the chance it will simply fade away without political damage to the president.

Leaving the White House for a helicopter waiting to carry him to Camp David, Md., Reagan strolled over to a group of reporters and made some remarks about the just-announced drop in the unemployment rate in December.

The green and white Marine Corps helicopter sat, its rotors still and its engine silent.

Then the questions turned to the sticky subject of Charles Z. Wick, the old Reagan friend and director of the U.S. Information Agency who has acknowledged taping office telephone conversations without telling some of those on the other end of the line.

Suddenly, the chopper's rotors began whirling and the engine's deafening whine forced an obviously annoyed Reagan to speak louder and louder, as he praised Wick for "a splendid job" and said he would stay on the job.

As the reporters pressed their interrogation, a military aide moved quickly to the president's side and whispered, "Mr. President, Mr. Deaver says it's time to go." The impromptu news conference quickly ended.

Michael K. Deaver, the deputy White House chief of staff, frequently is the man in such situations who tells Reagan it is time to cut off the questioning. In this instance, the questions dealt with a problem that the president's political aides hope will just fade away.

Disclosures of Wick's taping recordings have come at a time when two other Reagan appointees hastily quit the administration over allegations of questionable financial dealings before they took office.

Paul Thayer suddenly resigned as deputy secretary of defense after telling the president that the Securities and Exchange Commission was looking into his role in insider stock trading before he joined the administration one year ago. The next day, the SEC charged that Thayer had illegally helped eight people make $1.9 million in stock-trading profits.

Before Christmas, J. Lynn Helms quit as head of the Federal Aviation Administration when it became known that investigators were looking into his business dealings before he took office. Helms allegedly was involved in a string of business operations over eight years in which a number of companies were purchased, drained of assets and liquidated, causing losses by angry creditors.

Senior White House officials say such situations tend to become political problems if they are allowed to fester. That was the case with Anne Burford, who resigned as chief of the Environmental Protection Agency only after weeks of controversy over allegations of mismanagement, political favoritism and conflict of interest at her agency.

One White House official, speaking only on condition that he not be identified, said Wick's recent public apology goes a long way toward defusing the political impact of the taping disclosures.

This official said Wick "would never have been fired. The president just doesn't operate that way, particularly with longtime friends."

Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., general chairman of Reagan's re-election campaign, said such cases might become political problems "if the American people had the idea the people we selected (for administration jobs) had basic character flaws."

But Laxalt said any such concerns are not showing up in public opinion polls. "It's a beltway issue of very little mark" outside Washington, he said. The beltway is a highway that circles Washington.

Private Citizens And Diplomacy

WASHINGTON — The Rev. Jesse Jackson brought off his mission to Damascus with all the success of the Great Gatsky scoring three goals in a single night: Jackson won the release of Navy Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr.; he left President Reagan with egg on his face; and he revived a Democratic presidential race that was about to expire from terminal boredom.

This was a triumph. Under the rules of the game, Jackson is entitled to wring every possible ounce of publicity and political advantage from his enterprise. His private audacity succeeded where the government's formal diplomacy had failed. Ho-ho-ho, and as Everett Dirksen used to add, heh-heh-heh as well.

But before the waves of adulation subside, this must be said for the record: Jackson's success in this particular instance ought not to detract from a long-term public policy. It is simply unwise — it is also unlawful — for private citizens to negotiate with foreign governments. This has been the rule for nearly 200 years, and the rule is sound.

The wisdom of the rule is not diminished by the success stories we remember. The first of these stories, involving a pacifist and conscientious objector by the name of George Logan, is strikingly similar to the story of Jesse Jackson. Just as the United States and Syria today are embroiled in an undeclared war in Lebanon, so the United States and France in 1798 were locked into an undeclared war at sea. Just as Syria had captured Lieutenant Goodman, so the French had captured a number of American sailors. Even the political situation offers parallels. Logan was an ardent Jeffersonian, a liberal Democrat by contemporary labeling; the president was Federalist John Adams, a progenitor of today's Republicans.

Logan went to Paris on his own. He talked with Foreign Minister Charles Talleyrand. He dined and dined with Philippe-Antoine Merlin, head of the Directory, and exchanged toasts toward peace with him. Logan won the sailors' release and brought back messages from Talleyrand. Jefferson later acknowledged that Logan's efforts "did much toward preventing declared war with France."

Adams saw matters differently. He denounced the "temerity and impertinence of individuals affecting to interfere in public affairs between France and the United States." The Senate passed a resolution asserting that messages carried by private individuals rather than by accredited representatives should be rebuffed. Such interference would produce confusion and disorder, and would "separate the people from their government."

In 1799, as a direct consequence of Logan's mission, Congress adopted what has become known as the Logan Act, forbidding such negotiations by private individuals. Undeterred, Logan undertook another mission in 1810, this time with England — and this time he failed. Since then dozens of private citizens have played a hand at diplomatic tables. Cyrus Eaton appointed himself as ambassador at large to the Soviet Union. At the time of the Cuban missile crisis, John Scali, who was then an ABC correspondent at the State Department, served as a conduit between the White House and the Soviet Embassy.

No one ever has been prosecuted successfully for violation of the Logan Act, and it is a lead-pipe certainty that no charges will be brought against Jesse Jackson. "Nothing succeeds like success," goes the maxim, and Jackson's success will vault him at least temporarily into third place among the Democratic contenders.

But there is another proverb worth recalling. It is to this effect, that success ought never to be confused with talent. Let us be grateful that the Syrians, for whatever reasons of their own, decided the time was ripe either to pursue peace or to play a game of political put-down with Reagan. Jackson's mission provided a handy opportunity for Syria to make a diplomatic move without embracing a diplomatic commitment. The gentleman's charismatic pleading, we may fairly assume, had little to do with the resulting gesture. Even so, let us hear a round of cheerful applause. Welcome home, lieutenant. And thank you, Jesse.

Public Forum

To the editor:

In reply to the letter in Public Forum Jan. 9 about Eddie Knox, I would like to set the record straight.

While serving you and me in the Senate, Eddie Knox did introduce legislation to make it a felony for a felon to possess a firearm. This is crime control, not gun control.

In regards to the East Carolina University School of Medicine, Eddie Knox voted "yes" for the master bill, after requesting that the cost of the school be attached. Any good businessman or businesswoman will tell you that this is simply good business. Even more important, as chairman of the State Advisory Budget Commission, it was Eddie Knox who helped appropriate $134 million for its construction.

I ask the voters of Eastern North Carolina, "Can we afford not to support a man like Eddie Knox, who has already done so much for our area?"

Takeovers May Benefit Shareholders

NEW YORK (AP) — It isn't true, says Michael Jensen, that shareholders always lose when outsiders — individuals or other corporations — seek to win control of a company.

"Myth," he declares after researching the subject at the University of Rochester, where he is professor and director of the Managerial Economics Research Center.

"Contrary to the myths that are popularized in many quarters, the facts indicate that the market for corporate control protects shareholders," he says.

Myth though it be, it seems to serve the needs of those who believe that what the powerful do generally hurts the weak, and who view any battle as the good guys against the bad.

And who see unfriendly, outsider takeover attempts, therefore, as the "raiders" against the "victims" or "targets."

Jensen cites research indicating that target company shareholders — the victims, if you prefer — generally benefit from big runups in the price of their shares as a result of successful tender offers or corporate mergers. And that the takeover company's shareholders sometimes gain too.

"If there is raiding or piracy taking place it seems to be a peculiar 'Robin Hood' variety," says Jensen in an article in the Graduate School of Management's alumni magazine.

That isn't the only widespread myth associated with corporate takeovers, which have increased in size and frequency over recent years.

Typical is this complaint: The billions of dollars in expenditures made on corporate takeovers are wasted in a time when they could make valuable contributions to improving productivity.

The fact, says Jensen, is that the money involved represents only the transfer of claims on resources from one group of shareholders to another, not the consumption of resources.

A corporate takeover, he reminds you, isn't like eating an egg, in the sense that, once eaten, the egg is gone, never to produce a chicken.

"The only resources actually consumed in a takeover," he says, "are the real resources consumed in arranging the transaction, mainly the time of lawyers, economists and financial consultants."

Even then, he adds, there is real reason to question the existence of waste because "it is questionable whether these parties could actually produce something of value if they took real jobs anyway."

Another myth, according to Jensen: By merging former competitors, takeovers create entities with monopoly power and therefore make shareholders better off by raising product prices and harming consumers.

Fact, according to Jensen: "The evidence indicates that takeover gains do not come from the creation of monopoly power but rather from economies that are available to the merged entities — synergy in the takeover jargon."

Another widespread belief is that merger activity is primarily driven by management desires for an empire, and that managers offer excessive premiums to shareholders of target companies, leaving their own shareholders with the bill.

If this is so, Jensen suggests, it might not be as harmful as it appears.

Research shows, he says, that "the returns to bidder and target firm shareholders around takeovers reveals no systematic evidence that bidding firm managers are harming their shareholders to build empires."

Several Local Clergy Concur On Diplomatic Links

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer
Several local clergymen agree that the establishment of U.S. diplomatic relations with the Vatican can be "a good thing," although some ministers argue that the United States is "mixing church and state" in the decision.

The United States and the Vatican established full diplomatic relations Tuesday after a break of 117 years, a move the State Department said should result in "obviously better communications" between Washington and the headquarters of the Roman Catholic Church.

The formal diplomatic relations will send a U.S. ambassador to the Holy See.

Pope John Paul II will also appoint an ambassador, known as a papal nuncio, to Washington. The United States is the 107th nation with formal diplomatic ties with the Vatican.

"I think it's really about time (that the United States established full diplomatic relations with the Vatican)," said Father Jerry Sherba of St. Gabriel's Catholic Church. "There has been a personal envoy from the president in Vatican City."

President Reagan appointed William Wilson as the U.S. envoy to the Vatican in 1981 and Wilson has been named as Reagan's nominee as ambassador to the Vatican.

"Even though the Vatican is the seat of Catholicism, it is the smallest independent state in the world," Sherba said. "The pope does have an awful lot of influence in the world, and it is positive influence. If our nation could work with the pope and all that he stands for, peace, justice, social concern, then the world would be a better place."

The Rev. Lon Hicks of Community Baptist Church, Ayden, said he thinks having an ambassador to the Vatican "is mixing church and state."

"If we are going to have a special ambassador for the Roman Catholic Church, then we are going to have to have it (an ambassador) for others as well," Hicks said, "even though for centuries the Roman Catholic church has been a strong political force in molding and influencing governments."

Hicks said that "good can come out of anything if it is handled correctly, but in our culture we have been brought up and trained that there should be separation of church and state."

The separation of church and state is the main issue that concerns the local clergy with regard to the relationship between the Vatican and the United States.

"A lot of people are going to raise the separation of church and state issue," said the Rev. Ken Hammond of Mount Shiloh Baptist Church, Williamston. "In my estimation, the move to have an ambassador really transcends the traditional concept of church and state. I don't see it (relations with the Vatican) as being problematic in the debate of the question of church and state."

"I think in essence all we have done is to formalize relationships that have been pretty much obvious anyway," he said. "To say that we have been blind to the impact and influence of the Vatican for a number of years would be naive."

Hammond said he "wouldn't expect to see any major changes or influences on foreign or domestic policy as a result of establishing the relationship" with the Vatican.

Dr. James H. Bailey, pastor of Jarvis Memorial

United Methodist Church, said "I think it is a good thing" to establish relations with the Vatican.

"But it is nothing new," he said. "We have had a representative there" in the Vatican for years.

"In the early days of America, there were so few Catholics and the United States was started in a break with the church of Europe," Bailey said. "But we have had relations with Israel and an ambassador to Israel for the Jews for years. I think the United States should have relations with the Catholics."

"The pope has more control over the people he governs than, for example, President Reagan has over the people he governs," he said. "The important thing about the pope's influence is that it is crosses national, geographical and political lines. It is a unique government."

Bailey said that an ambassador to the Vatican "may be the only inroad that Christianity has had in (United States) politics. Now, people in the government listen to a religious voice only for the expediency of a political campaign, but this ambassador would be nonpartisan."

The Rev. Richard R. Gammon of the First Presbyterian Church said, "It

(relations with the Vatican) doesn't disturb me now as much as it would have say 15 or 20 years ago, yet I'm not wholly enthusiastic about it. I still see the Church of Rome as The Church, and not as a political entity, and yet I'm not particularly upset about having an ambassador to the Vatican."

Bendix Says Decided 'No'

GASTONIA (AP) — Bendix Corp. has canceled plans for a $35 million high-technology plant that would have created 150-500 jobs, saying demand for factory automation systems has not developed as the company had forecast.

"What (the decision) says is that the factory of the future is still in the future," said Frederick Seaby, president of Bendix's Automation division. The plant had been announced in July.

Gov. Jim Hunt had committed up to $2 million in state funds per year over a five-year period to train Bendix workers through new programs at Gaston College and the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

Hunt said through a spokesman he was disappointed that Bendix decided against building its proposed plant, and that no decision had been reached on reallocating the $10 million the General Assembly authorized for Bendix's job training.

Seaby's division makes highly automated production equipment and manufacturing systems that link automated machines. The company once said the Gaston plant eventually would produce $200 million worth of machinery per year.

Three Collisions Here Wednesday

An estimated $6,450 damage resulted from three traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police Wednesday.

Officers said heaviest damage resulted when a truck driven by Steven Alan Morris of Winterville and a car operated by Sara Elizabeth White of 103 Lord Ashley Drive collided about 12:45 p.m. at the intersection of Greenville Boulevard and Granville Drive.

Damage from the collision was estimated at $3,000 to the truck and $1,000 to the car.

Cars driven by Elmer Sturgis Payne of Route 2, Greenville, and Carl Leigh King of Route 6, Greenville, collided about 1 p.m. at the intersection of Greenville and Arlington boulevards, causing $1,000 damage to the King car and $500 damage to the Payne vehicle.

A 7:20 a.m. collision at the intersection of Stantonsburg and Farmer roads involved cars driven by Frank Moya Bissette II of Route 1, Greenville, and Ronnie Griffin Beamon of Route 2, Farmville.

Damage was set at $400 to the Bissette car and $550 to the Beamon auto.

Calif. To Fight Killer's Release

LOS ANGELES (AP) — California's attorney general will go to the state Supreme Court if necessary to block the release of a man convicted in the "Onion Field" slaying of a policeman more than 20 years ago. Deputy Attorney General Dane Gillette says.

Solano County Superior Court Judge Ellis Randall on Monday ordered Gregory U. Powell released on parole, but stayed the order for 10 days so the state could appeal. Gillette made his comments Wednesday.

Powell, 50, and Jimmie Lee Smith, paroled last year, were convicted in 1963 of fatally shooting Los Angeles police Officer Ian Campbell in an onion field near Bakersfield. The case became widely known through the book "The Onion Field" by Joseph Wambaugh.

General Hanged, But No One Takes Responsibility

By KRISTIN GAZLAY
Associated Press Writer
SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A note pinned to the body of a two-star Army Reserve general found dangling from a noose at Fort Sam Houston said he had been slain, but there were no signs of struggle and no one claimed responsibility, the FBI said.

Pentagon officials who declined to be identified said the note read: "Captured, tried, convicted of crimes by the U.S. Army against the people of the world. Sentenced and executed."

The body of Maj. Gen. Robert G. Ownby, his arms bound behind him with a belt, was found Wednesday hanging from the second-story stairwell of an Army headquarters building, the FBI said.

The Pentagon officials said Ownby's death could have been suicide or it could have been murder, with the note indicating it was a terrorist act only a "diversion."

The officials said a second note also was found, but it was indecipherable. A friend of Ownby's said the general had left a note on his desk indicating he was going to investigate a noise.

Ownby, 48, the commander of the 90th U.S. Army Reserve Command, was found about 6:40 a.m. by an employee coming to work, FBI Agent Pat Cowley said.

Cowley indicated he had read the note and said he knew of no reason to suspect the killing was the act of a terrorist.

"There was no apparent sign of a struggle," he said. "We've heard nothing from anybody since the body was found. No one claimed credit."

Military police took no special security precautions after discovering the body, said Col. Robert McDonald, a base spokesman.

"We didn't know what was going on and, at first, there was some concern," McDonald said. "We never went on any kind of military alert here, though."

Leo Soto, executive assistant to the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service region commissioner in Dallas, said the service initially warned border stations could have died as early as 11 p.m. Tuesday.

"It was not unusual for him to be there late at night," base spokesman Capt. Rudy Purificato said. "To my knowledge, he was alone in the building. He often worked late."

The Fort Worth Star Telegram quoted Bob Butler, who described himself as Ownby's "dearest friend," as saying a note had also been found on the general's desk. According to Butler, it read: "I hear some noises. I am going to investigate."

Butler said Ownby's wife, Ann, had called her husband's office at 2 a.m. Wednesday, and when he did not answer, went to the building and found it locked. He said she returned home and went back to the building an hour later.

"She ran into a security agent she knew and had him unlock the building," Butler said. "They went to his office, but he was not there and she came home."

Butler said he doubted Ownby killed himself.

"This was the most perfect husband and father in the world. In my own mind, somebody was waiting in there. I just feel like it was somebody he recognized and they made a martyr out of him," he said.

Ownby, who had three children, was the vice president and corporate director of Delaware Punch Co.

He became one of the youngest two-star generals in the Army upon his February 1982 promotion and had taken command of the 90th ARCOM in August 1981, supervising about 4,500 reservists in 63 combat units throughout Texas and in Bossier City, La.

Ownby began his Army career as an enlistee with the Oklahoma National Guard for three years ending in 1957, attaining the rank of master sergeant.

He spent three years on active duty, serving most of that time as a platoon leader with the 3rd Infantry, the Presidential Honor Guard responsible for security in the Washington, D.C., area.

Ownby will be buried at Fort Sam Houston National Cemetery on Friday, McDonald said.

Execution....

capital punishment groups held news conferences Wednesday and a civil rights attorney wrote Hunt seeking to delay Hutchins' death. A flurry of demonstrations, prayer meetings and other activities was planned for today, while North Carolinians Against the Death Penalty announced a vigil outside Central Prison at 5 a.m. Friday — an hour before the scheduled execution.

The Rev. Leon White, director of the Commission for Racial Justice of the United Church of Christ, told reporters outside the North Carolina Capitol that if Hunt doesn't intervene, "he'll kill the enthusiasm of black people in the state supporting him in the 1984 race." Hunt, a Democrat, is expected to challenge Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., in November.

Television evangelist Jim Whittington, based in Greenville, sent Hunt a telegram urging him to spare Hutchins. "Taking one man's life will not stop crime any more than it has war," said

Whittington.

Four North Carolina political scientists said in a news conference sponsored by Amnesty International that the death penalty didn't deter violent crime. "It's a lottery that picks out a few people to put to death," said James D. Barber of Duke University.

Death penalty supporters urged Hunt to hold his ground.

Alice Messersmith, wife of one of Hutchins' victims, said she would be "very, very relieved if they do go ahead with the execution." If it doesn't happen, she said, "then there is no point in having law officers."

"I'm not too enthused about killing anybody, but I don't know how (Hutchins) felt about killing those officers either," said Rutherford County Sheriff Damon Huskey, whose brother Roy, a deputy sheriff, was among the victims. "God have mercy on his soul. That's all I can say."

of the possibility of a terrorist slaying, but later backed off.

"We put out a normal border alert and told our chiefs that there was an unconfirmed possible terrorist killing," Soto said. "We called them back later to say it didn't look that way. It's the same thing we would have done if a sheriff's office had called about a robbery."

The Washington Post reported Ownby appeared to have been beaten.

Bexar County Medical Examiner Vincent DiMio ruled asphyxiation as the cause of death, but refused further comment.

Cowley, who declined comment on the contents of the note, said the general

Butler said he doubted Ownby killed himself.

Millionaire Said Seen-Vanished

By BOB SPRINGER
Associated Press Writer
MORTON, Ill. (AP) — An Illinois millionaire and his wife who mysteriously vanished remain missing despite hopes raised when they reportedly were spotted in Pennsylvania, police said.

"You'd think if they were seen once, somebody somewhere would have seen them again by now," Morton Police Sgt. Thomas Daab said Wednesday, one month after Elmo Batterton, 55, and his wife, Edna, had vanished.

After what he termed a "solid" report of the couple being in Pennsylvania just before Christmas, Daab said police are as puzzled as ever.

Earlier this week, a judge created a $20,000 reward fund — with money from the Battertons' estate — for information leading to their whereabouts, with $5,000 for advertising the disappearance.

They left behind in their home, 10 miles east of Peoria, a lighted Christmas tree, medications the two took regularly, luggage and Mrs. Batterton's purse with her driver's license and identification.

Three hunters in central Pennsylvania reported following a car Dec. 20 fitting the description of the Battertons' auto and driven by a man and a woman about the same ages as the missing couple, Daab said.

Daab said the three noticed the Illinois license plate because they regularly play that state's Multi-Million lottery game, and saw the MM 283 license as an omen telling them which numbers to pick.

Several days later the trio reported the incident to Pennsylvania police after one of them read about the Battertons' disappearance, said Daab.

He said the FBI was notified, the three men interviewed, and "we feel pretty sure they got the license number correct."

"But as each day goes by without hearing anything new, you begin to wonder," Daab said.

Richard Fandel, Batterton's accountant, was designated special administrator last week to manage the couple's holdings.

He said no corporate bank accounts were meddled with and nothing withdrawn from Batterton's personal bank accounts before the disappearance. No activity has been reported since Dec. 11 in either of the Battertons' checking or savings accounts, he said.

Batterton, 55, customarily carried from $500 to $1,000 cash with him, and handled most purchases with checks, Fandel said.

Court documents filed by the Battertons' two sons, both in their late 20s, list the couple's holdings as including 15 farms.

Join In State Suit Over River Water

AHOSKIE — Joe Parker, a member of the Lake Gaston Task Force, said Martin, Bertie and Hertford counties are among local governments joining the state in a suit challenging Virginia Beach's right to Roanoke River water.
Parker said Wednesday that the Lake Gaston Task Force has been coordinating the state's strategy against Virginia Beach's effort to build a pipeline to tap Lake Gaston for drinking water. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers approved a permit for construction of the pipeline, which calls for the withdrawal of 65 million gallons daily.
The suit, Parker said, is an attempt to block construction until a complete environmental impact statement has been prepared.
"Despite plenty of testimony at the public hearings before Christmas," Parker said, the Corps of Engineers "went ahead and issued the permit."
Parker, in addition to his role as a member of the Lake Gaston Task Force and chairman of Northeastern North Carolina Tomorrow, is a candidate for the N.C. House of Representatives for the 6th District, which includes portions of Pitt, Martin, Bertie and Hertford counties.

Will Benefit By Judge's Order

NEW YORK (AP) — Up to 62,000 people may benefit from a judge's order that the Social Security Administration restore welfare and disability benefits denied since 1980 to mentally ill New Yorkers.
From 1978 until last year, the federal government had a "fixed clandestine policy against those with mental illness," U.S. District Judge Jack B. Weinstein said Wednesday in ruling on a class-action suit brought by the city and state of New York against Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler.
The ruling could provide retroactive benefits of $125 million or more, city officials estimated.

Say 370 Died From Weather

In addition to 372 deaths, 2,594 injuries were reported as a result of severe weather, according to the study by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.
Completed late last year, the report was issued this week by the agency's Assessment and Information Services Center in Washington.

Pooch Stopped Mail Deliveries

DULUTH, Minn. (AP) — A mutt named Ben has accomplished what rain, snow, heat and gloom of night rarely can: He's interrupted regular mail service, for nearly 30 residents of his neighborhood.

Neighbors say that Ben, who has the build of a husky and the markings of a German shepherd, frequently roams the streets and has chased elderly women walking small dogs, people carrying groceries and at least one little girl.

Ben's owner, Kenneth Barbo, says his dog's testiness may result from being teased by passersby.

Now, the dog's Christmas Eve encounter with an employee of the U.S. Postal Service has prompted a cutoff of daily mail to the neighborhood and a complaint to the city attorney. A hearing among all parties before the Northland Citizen Mediation Service was scheduled today in an attempt to settle the dispute.

The 5-foot-3-inch, 115-pound letter carrier, who asked to remain anonymous, told authorities she had finished delivering mail on Christmas Eve when she found herself face-to-face with a large dog standing with teeth bared, snarling.

The dog grabbed her arm and knocked her down, although her heavy winter clothing protected her from the dog's teeth, said Leslie Gonzalez, safety specialist at the Duluth Post Office.

Ben's owner, Kenneth Barbo "called the dog and went into the house" about a minute later, Ms. Gonzalez said.

The Postal Service normally curtails service to the owners of a delinquent dog, but because Ben has the run of the neighborhood, mail has been delivered since Christmas only periodically, when Ben is tied up, Ms. Gonzalez said.

"We're not trying to penalize the people, but we're trying to make the city understand how serious the problem is. We wanted to get all the people united and let the city know they either have a leash law or they don't," she said.

Deputy Police Gene Sisto says police can impound dogs that are running free, but Ben is often tied up and "we can't do anything about it if the dog isn't loose," he said.

Ms. Gonzalez said daily mail service will resume when the problem is resolved.

Meanwhile, residents say they are frustrated. "It's very much a problem," said Lou Rosenfield, noting that many elderly neighbors depend on receiving Social Security checks by mail. "I happen to be on welfare and if I don't get my forms ... they could terminate me, all because of that dumb dog."

Offensive To The Purists

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — That ain't no way to treat the language, the Society for the Advancement of Good English declared upon examining Miller Brewing Co.'s ads for its Lite beer.

So Miller gets SAGE's third annual Duncie Cap of the Year award for proclaiming that Lite beer has "less calories" than regular beer. (If anything, SAGE says, Lite has "fewer calories.")

Equally offensive to SAGE is the line, "Us ex-big-leaguers would rather drink Lite beer." The first word, the society harrumphed, should have been "we."

"The tendency is toward increasingly horrible uses of the language," lamented Lawrence Casler of Pittsford, president and founder of SAGE, which announced its dubious honors on Wednesday.

In Milwaukee, Miller spokeswoman Shelia Payton said the company's copywriters undoubtedly were aware of the grammatical errors.

"Our Lite ads take a bit of license because the campaign for Lite beer is based on humor and the friendship and camaraderie found in beer-drinking situations," Miss Payton said.

Runners-up were Cinemax Corp., for proclaiming "We're doing movies good," and Burger King Corp. for its kicker, "And that ain't peanuts."

Search For Artificial Heart Patient

By DONNA ANDERSON Associated Press Writer SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Dr. William C. DeVries, who implanted the world's first permanent artificial heart in Barney Clark, says he is looking for a second recipient after waiting nine months for official approval while patients died "day after day."

And the pioneering surgeon expressed dismay that the University of Utah's Institutional Review Board, whose approval is required for the operation done at its hospital, gave him the go-ahead for only one more of the many implants he hopes to do.

"It was very frustrating to me to have patients who might die while I have that thing sitting on the shelf," DeVries said in an interview Wednesday, one day after the university panel issued new guidelines for the operation.

"You just say, 'No, no, there's nothing I can do. I can't give you any hope. I don't know when the IRB's going to meet again,'" he said.

By the time most potential recipients were ill enough to qualify for the operation, their life expectancies were down to an average of just 47 days, DeVries said. "Having them dying in 47 days was a big burden. This would happen day after day," DeVries told a news conference earlier in the day. "I'm upset about the fact it took so long to get approval.... We felt like we were shackled."

The new guidelines bode well for the success of future operations because they allow implants in patients healthier than Clark, the 61-year-old Seattle dentist who died March 23 of multiple organ failure after 112 days on the device.

In addition, he said, the second patient will also benefit from the knowledge gleaned from Clark's case.

The surgeon said his heart team will be ready by the time the Food and Drug Administration gives expected approval of the project after a 30-day review.

But DeVries expressed frustration at getting permission for just one more implant. He says a series of the pioneering procedures are needed to evaluate the Jarvik-7 properly.

"We'll go ahead with it, and we'll do it while we can, but still you want something better," he said. "To have every single case reviewed before the next case kind of adds an element of doubt."

DeVries said he had no doubt Clark's case was handled appropriately and that the heart is safe enough for human experimentation, but he nevertheless is concerned.

"What if something happens that the second patient died with some complication of the heart? How long would (the next) approval take?" he said.

And even if the patient lives several years, he said, it is unclear how soon the board will consider a third implant.

Asked if he had considered implanting a heart without going through a review board, just as pioneering surgeon Dr. Denton Cooley did in 1969 and 1981, DeVries said: "I've considered a lot of things, faced with an IRB that was unwilling to move, unwilling to even vote."

Among the things DeVries considered was going to another medical institution. That option still is open if approval for other implants comes too slowly, he said.

A second patient will be less difficult to find, DeVries believes.

"The people that are turned off by the complications are the ones that are healthy. Talk to some people with end-stage heart disease.... Those people are not as skeptical," he said.

DeVries said his worst fears are that the heart could cause a second patient to have pain alleviated only by switching off the device, or that the patient would suffer a stroke and "become a vegetable."

His greatest hope is that the patient will "get to go home and live a happy, successful life."

"I'd like to get him out of the hospital. I'd like to have him go shopping, have him go look at the leaves turning color. I'd like to have him go to a movie — live more of a normal lifestyle than Barney did."

Poland Trims Food Price Hikes

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer
WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Bowling to public opposition to food price hikes, the Polish government today announced scaled-down proposals to raise the cost of luxury foods more sharply than those for basic items.

The increases, originally announced in November, were expected to go into effect this month but will not occur before February, according to government officials. The Council of Ministers met today to discuss the proposal.

Communist authorities clearly want to avoid a repeat of the unrest which accompanied unannounced food price hikes in 1970 and 1976 and helped spark the creation of the now-outlawed Solidarity labor federation in 1980.

The price hikes are expected to generate an additional $1.1 billion for the nation, compared to between $1.2 billion and $1.7 billion under the original proposal.
The increase revenues will be offset, however, by $660 million in compensation for pensioners and other fixed and low income people hit hardest by the increases. The previous plan called for $390 million in compensation.
The new proposal appeared aimed at easing the impact on the average worker's monthly wage of $143. The original plan was forecast to raise the average cost of living by about 7 percent, but no comparable estimate accompanied the new proposal.

The announcement said
there would be no increases for cottage cheese, margarine, vegetable oil and low-quality beef. It said prices would go up for higher grade meat products, bread, especially whole grain bread, and butter.

The price hikes would be third imposed by Communist authorities since they declared martial law and suspended Solidarity in December 1981.
The largest increase in February 1982 doubled the cost of living and generated $34 billion for the crippled Polish economy.

The government solicited reactions to the original proposals in November through the state-controlled media and newly created trade unions, and reported that reaction was overwhelmingly negative.

The new proposal, announced in all major Polish newspapers, denied the increases were intended to "drain the money surplus from the population." The statement said the hikes were intended to "correct relations between purchase and retail prices."

The increases would be the first since the government raised its payments to farmers for grains and meat last July.

The new state trade unions, which the government hopes will replace Solidarity, voiced opposition to the revised price hikes, the official Polish news agency PAP reported.

Representatives of 60 national Polish organizations were presented the plan at a meeting Wednesday with Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski. They "expressed fears of the uncontrolled rise in the prices of processed food stuffs," PAP said.

In a separate development, authorities Wednesday arrested the lawyer representing a woman whose teenage son was fatally beaten while in police custody last May, sources close to the attorney said.

Bednarkiewicz's arrest undercut official efforts to portray as even-handed the investigation into the May 12 death of 19-year-old Grzegorz Przemyski, who was detained by police after a student celebration of the completion of examinations.

The death touched off a storm of anti-police sentiment, and Przemyski's funeral drew an estimated 20,000 mourners. His mother, Barbara Sadowska, a Solidarity supporter, had been beaten May 3 by plainclothesmen who broke into a Roman Catholic relief center where she worked in Warsaw.

Exchanged Self For Boy, Killed

POLSON, Mont. (AP) — A pilot who had exchanged himself for a teen-age hostage was fatally shot while authorities negotiated with a gunman holding him inside a small plane, witnesses and officials said.

Sheriff Glenn Frame as David Cameron Keith, 27, of Columbia Falls, was shot twice by authorities, who had cordoned off the small airport in the city of 2,464.

Frame identified the pilot as Henry Lee Shryock, 64, of Polson.

Keith was undergoing surgery late Wednesday night in St. Patrick's Hospital in Missoula.

The incident began when police in Missoula, 66 miles south of Polson, reported that an armed man robbed a pharmacy there about 1 p.m.
The man was given some drugs, including a synthetic heroin chemical, and fled, Police Capt. Gary Lancaster said.

Post Creek Store on the Flathead Indian Reservation where he seized Bill Crose Jr., 13, of St. Ignatius, said
St. Ignatius Police Chief Wayne Mitchell.

The man fired a shot,
missing the boy's father, then jumped into the Crose family's pickup truck with his young hostage, Mitchell said.

Authorities set up a roadblock along U.S. 93 about three miles south of Polson and negotiated with Keith, who demanded an airplane and a pilot.

Frame in his patrol car led Keith and the hostage to Polson's airport, where they arrived at about 5 p.m.
Authorities, meanwhile, talked to the pilot, who volunteered to fly his single-engine P-35 Beechcraft, parked at the airport.

The pilot waited in the airplane while the negotiations continued. About 5:45 p.m., Keith released the youth, and jumped into the airplane, pursued by a police dog, said Dennis Jones, a correspondent for the Missoulian who was an eyewitness to the incident.

One police officer deflated a tire on the plane, and officers told Keith that the plane was disabled and couldn't take off, Jones said.

But, just after 6 p.m., Keith demanded to take off anyway, Jones said. At that point, Keith was holding a handgun against the pilot's chin and the eyewitness reported hearing one shot, then hearing a muffled shot from inside the plane.

It was unclear who fired the first shot, and whether the first one struck Keith or the pilot.

Challenge N.J. Marijuana Law

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) —
The American Civil Liberties Union, challenging a New Jersey law that forbids residents from having even small amounts of marijuana in their homes, claims the statute violates the constitutional guarantees of privacy.

"The question is whether it's unconstitutional for that statute to be imposed on purely private conduct taking place in the privacy of
Karparkin of the New Jersey ACLU said Wednesday.

A hearing on the ACLU's challenge is set for Jan. 25 in state Superior Court in New Brunswick.

North Carolina's First Inland Port Set To Open

State officials say North Carolina's first inland port, which will open Monday in Charlotte, will extend the market for the state's other two ports into the central

State officials also say the port will help exporters and importers save money while making the state more convenient to shippers.

State Commerce Secretary C.C. Hope said that "the entire operation is designed to give importers and exporters convenient economic access to North Carolina ports."

William Greene, ports authority executive director, said the new port extends the markets for the state's ports
"well into the interior of the nation. We have not had this advantage before."

The new port facility, 200 miles from the Atlantic Ocean, is expected to generate about $1 million in revenues in its first year, Hope said. He said eventually revenues could grow to four times that amount.

Hope said some shippers could save up to half their transportation costs to coast by using the new Charlotte Intermodal Terminal on a 23-acre site near the Brookshire Freeway.

The savings will come because shippers will be able to share the expense of rail or truck freight costs. For example, Hope said, a Charlotte company that has a freight shipment coming into the Wilmington port now often has to hire a trucking line to pick it up.

Using the inland center, the same company would be more likely to find another firm to use the empty leg of the trip.

Elwood Thomas, 52, a former executive at several Charlotte trucking companies, will manage the Charlotte facility.

Hope said at a news conference Tuesday the new facility was developed at a cost of only about $22,000 because the state is leasing the land and buildings. He said the new facility also expands the marketing area for the two North Carolina ports and makes them more competitive with ports in Charleston, S.C., Norfolk, Va., and Savannah, Ga.

"Charlotte is closer than Norfolk to Roanoke, Va.,
(and) Lexington and Louisville, Ky.," he said. "It is the same distance from Atlanta to Savannah. And the entire states of Tennessee and Kentucky are closer to Charlotte than to any port."

The South Carolina State Ports Authority opened its first inland port Nov. 9 at Greer. The facility, called the S.C. International Transport Center, was developed for about $2 million on 110 acres off S.C. 290.

South Carolina ports officials said they had identified about 40 percent of the trips to and from the Charleston port as empty runs.

Analysts Opine 'Problems' Behind N. Korea Offer

By EDWIN Q. WHITE
Associated Press Writer

North Korea's Proposal Has China Backing

PEKING (AP) — China says North Korea's proposal for reunification talks involving South Korea and the United States would help ease tensions on the Korean peninsula.

"China actively supports the proposal of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for holding tripartite talks between the DPRK (North Korea), the South Korean authorities and the United States," the Chinese Foreign Ministry said Wednesday.

"The proposed tripartite talks would be conducive to easing tension on the Korean peninsula and promoting the peaceful reunification of North and South Korea," the statement said.

North Korea made the proposal Tuesday. The next day South Korea said it would not begin any such efforts until its Communist neighbor apologized for a bombing in Burma Oct. 9 that killed 17 South Koreans, including four Cabinet members.

Two North Korean army officers have been convicted in Burma of involvement in the bombing. North Korea has denied any connection with the bombing, so the South Korean demand, in effect, rejected the proposed peace talks.

At a state dinner in Washington for Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, President Reagan said Tuesday he would welcome talks among the two Koreas, China and the United States.

The divided Korean peninsula is under a truce from an armistice that halted the 1950-53 Korean War.

North Korea and China signed the armistice on the one side and the U.N. command, led by the United States, signed on the other.

In Tokyo today, a spokesman for the Foreign Ministry said the Japanese government needs to "ascertain the real intention of North Korea" before making a clear stand on the proposal for a three-party conference.

The spokesman, Wasuke Miyake, said in a news conference that the Japanese government also intends to "closely watch" developments in China, the United States and other countries concerning the proposals by North Korea and Reagan.

"We have to ascertain whether the North Korean proposal is based on the assumption that all foreign troops would leave Korean soil before the talks. We have to study if that is a precondition to the proposed talks or not," Miyake said.

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — North Korea, isolated and falling behind South Korea in economic growth and international prestige, proposed peace talks with the south in an apparent attempt to improve its image.

In its proposal, the north for the first time said South Korean authorities should take part on an equal footing in three-way talks that would include the United States — ally of the south. In the past, North Korea insisted it would deal only with the United States and not its "lackeys" in Seoul.

But within a few hours of the broadcast of the North Korean proposals, the Seoul government in effect rejected them and called again for summit talks between Presidents Chun Doo-hwan of South Korea and Kim Il Sung of North Korea.

The statement from Seoul said there was no "sincere posture" for dialogue, and emphasized that North Korea has never accepted blame for a terrorist bombing last Oct. 9 in Rangoon, Burma, that killed 17 South Koreans, including four Cabinet members. Burma convicted two North Korean army officers of carrying out the bombing and broke relations with North Korea.

The bombing followed a series of diplomatic incidents in recent years that caused embarrassment to North Korea and prompted criticism of the communists.

But the Rangoon attack brought the sharpest outcry from the international community, and three other countries broke off diplomatic ties with the north.

Even China, North Korea's longtime supporter and ally in the 1950-53 Korean War, was reported to have been "aghast" and "appalled" at the bombing — apparently an attempted assassination of the South Korean president.

In its conference proposals, North Korea listed as one of the goals the withdrawal of American troops in South Korea, who now number 40,000. In a letter to Washington, North Korea said that once reunification was achieved, "the United States would be able to wash its hands of the Korean question with honor...."

Seoul governments have strongly resisted previous North Korean demands that the Americans be pulled out.

Diplomatic sources in Seoul said that on their first reading of the new proposals from North Korea, it appeared obvious that the north wanted to do something to improve its image.

One of those taking that line was U.S. Ambassador Richard L. Walker, who told reporters the north wanted to "make an effort to look different to the world" because of its "general international embarrassment" since the Rangoon bombing.

Another diplomat, who declined to be identified, saw it as part of a pattern that has been growing for several years:

—North Korea is feeling more and more isolated, is falling farther and farther behind in its competition with South Korea for international standing.

—South Korea's economy is beginning to thrive again, and the south has been or will be the site of a number of international gatherings, including the 1986 Asian Games and the 1988 Summer Olympics.

—While there are occasional anti-government protests by student activists or other dissidents, relative political stability has been maintained in the south.

In addition to North Korea's troubles abroad, there have been reports of problems involving a plan to turn over the powers of 71-year-old Kim Il Sung to his son, Kim Jong Il.

While the closed nature of North Korean society makes it difficult, if not impossible, to know what is going on there, most outside observers here feel the internal problems may have been ironed out. Some said the north may now feel it is time to try to build a better image in the world.

On Wednesday, U.S. State Department spokesman John

Hughes said the United States is skeptical of North Korea's motives in proposing the talks, but will "wait and see."

At a state dinner for visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang on Tuesday, President Reagan suggested a four-way meeting of the two Koreas, the United States and China.

In its first official response to the new proposals, South Korea reiterated its stand that the problems of Korea are for the Korean people themselves to work out, and said the summit talks proposed repeatedly by President Chun provide the best means to move ahead.

It suggested as an alternative a conference of nations "directly or indirectly responsible" for the partition of Korea in 1945 and the Korean War. That could mean a long trip back in history and involve many countries.

While the latest North Korean moves have brought a flurry of exchanges, prospects of a united Korean peninsula still appear far away.

Price Rollback Pressure Seen

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary Donald Hodel says December's record cold temperatures will increase pressures in Congress to roll back natural gas prices rather than decontrol them as President Reagan wants.

An attempt by liberal Democrats in the House to temporarily roll back government price ceilings on natural gas failed despite a 17 percent increase in home-heating costs in 1983 amid a supply glut. But the Senate also rejected a White House-endorsed plan to go the opposite way and gradually remove the remaining government controls on gas prices over the next three years.

Hodel, however, said that the holiday cold snap has put a big chill on any additional support for the administration.

"Tens of thousands, perhaps millions, of Americans will be receiving their gas bills this month and next month at a very much higher level than they've ever experienced in the past," he said.

See No Hope

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nuclear arsenals of the United States and the Soviet Union are so large and powerful that "mortal damage" could be suffered on either side if less than 1 percent of the bombs slipped through a defense system, a study says.

The study also says prospects for a missile defense system that would achieve President Reagan's goal of ending the nuclear hostage relationship between the two superpowers are "so remote as to be of no practical interest."

Two Tankers In Collision

CHINA GROVE, N.C. (AP) — Two men were injured and traffic was blocked for about three hours Wednesday when two tanker trucks — one carrying toxic chemicals — collided on Interstate 85 near China Grove, police said.

The trucks collided at 4:15 a.m., with the wreckage blocking both lanes of the interstate. The leakage and resulting fumes led the state Highway Patrol to block both lanes of traffic until 7:30 a.m.

Gary W. Hebert of Rayne, La., was the driver of the truck filled with caustic alkali and dimethyl chlorothiophosphate, chemicals reportedly used in the textile industry. He was listed in satisfactory condition at Cabarrus Memorial Hospital. Another man in the truck, Clarence A. Venable of Lafayette, La. was also in satisfactory condition.

The other tanker, driven by Robert V. Applegate of Clayton, N.J. and owned by Chemical Leaman Tank Lines of Lionville, Pa. was traveling north when it switched to the left lane to pass. Police said the truck jackknifed and was broadsided by the other rig.

A&T Grad Egypt's Return To Arab Camp Blocked

For Shuttle

ASTRONAUT — Dr. Ronald McNair of NCA&T Univ. in Greensboro, will participate in the Feb. 3 space shuttle flight. (AP Laserphoto)

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina A&T State University graduate Dr. Ronald McNair says being the first astronaut from a historically black university to go into space is nothing special.

But McNair, a 1971 graduate of A&T, said he was looking forward to flying aboard the space shuttle in early February "because it means an opportunity to me to do something meaningful for others, and also something I'll never forget."

"I've trained for this mission for five years, and I feel like I am ready for it," said McNair, who will be the second black to go into space.

However, McNair said the mission will be no "joy ride." "I've spent a lot of time trying to get my procedures down. It's very serious, and I don't have the luxury of viewing it any other way," McNair said.

McNair, who will serve as a research specialist, is one of two astronauts on the mission who will fly freely in space, using nitrogen-powered jet packs attached to their space suits, NASA officials said. The exercise is designed to show how jet packs can be used to help repair broken satellites in space.

McNair was working as a research scientist at the Hughes Research Laboratory when he learned that NASA was looking for applicants.

"I saw a notice on the bulletin board, and then I got a notice in the mail," he said. "The reality that I might be selected came later."

Ironically, McNair said he almost decided to major in music instead of science while at A&T.

"In fact, I majored in music for a week when I went to A&T because I got psyched out by what I saw in the physics department," McNair said in a telephone interview from his Houston home.

But he said he decided "that it wouldn't be fair to give up the study of physics without giving it a chance."

McNair went on to graduate from A&T in 1971, earn a doctorate in laser physics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and be selected out of 11,000 applicants for the astronaut program in 1978.

Growing up in Lake City, S.C., McNair had a variety of interests, including geography and baseball. He said he began to love physics and mathematics by the time he reached high school because "those subjects challenged me most."

While not involved in the rigorous astronaut training program, McNair spends time on karate and saxophone playing. He has published articles on the physics of karate in Scientific American and the American Journal of Physics.

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer
CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Visits by Yasser Arafat and a senior Saudi Arabian figure have thrust Egypt back into the limelight of Middle East politics, but major problems block Egypt's full return to Arab political life.

Despite a growing feeling that it is time to end Egypt's diplomatic isolation, no Arab state has come up with an accepted formula for restoring Egypt to the Arab League as long as it remains committed to the 1979 peace treaty with Israel.

President Hosni Mubarak has made clear he will not abrogate the treaty — a move that would severely strain Egypt's vital economic, political and military links with the United States and Western Europe.

Egypt hopes instead that if peace talks can begin involving the Palestine Liberation Organization, Jordan and Israel, the treaty will no longer be seen as a barrier to Cairo's return to Arab diplomatic ranks.

However, the Egyptians are keenly aware that these are factors over which they have little direct control. "The start for everything is the Israeli attitude on the West Bank and Gaza, then the dialogue between Jordan and the PLO," Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly told reporters Tuesday. "I think these two steps have to be considered very important for the peace process."

And with Arab political ranks deeply divided and the PLO in shambles, prospects for decisive peace moves in the coming weeks seem uncertain.

"It's really too early to tell whether these recent developments are going to crystallize into anything solid," said one Western diplomat, who spoke on condition he not be named. "There are some interesting trends developing, but I've seen so many false starts over the years that I'm hedging all bets."

Egypt's efforts to improve ties with the Arab world received a major boost Dec. 22 when Arafat paid a surprise visit to Cairo, publicly embracing Mubarak only two days after being driven from his last base in Lebanon by pro-Syrian Palestinian hardliners.

Arafat's visit was followed by favorable comments in Arab newspapers, which praised the meeting as a reaffirmation of Egypt's support for the Palestinian cause. Shortly afterward, Egypt and Jordan signed a joint trade agreement which ended the economic boycott Jordan imposed along with most other Arab states in wake of the peace treaty.

Less than three weeks later, Saudi Prince Talal Ibn Abdel-Aziz, a half brother of King Fahd, became the first member of the Saudi royal family to visit Cairo since the desert kingdom and 16 other Arab countries broke ties with Egypt over treaty.

But the Saudis have made it clear they oppose individual Arab states restoring formal diplomatic ties with Egypt pending approval by an Arab summit, tentatively set for late March in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

"It is very important to put Egypt back in Arab ranks," King Fahd told the Kuwait newspaper Al-Rai Al-Aam. "But such a decision should be adopted by an Arab summit."

Western diplomats and other observers expect such a move would be strongly opposed by Syria and Libya, and it remains uncertain if other Arab states would risk a showdown with the radicals as long as Egypt remained committed to peace with Israel.

There are signs that Sudanese President Gaafar Nimeiri, one of the three Arab leaders who maintains diplomatic relations with Cairo, might try again at the forthcoming Arab summit to persuade the Arabs to restore ties with Egypt or give individual states the green-light to do so.

This time Nimeiri might be able to count on at least tacit support by Arafat now that the PLO leader has moved to patch up relations with the Egyptians.

But, Arafat's meeting with Mubarak was roundly condemned by PLO hardliners and such influential figures in the Palestinian movement as George Habash and Khaled Fahoum, who avoided the Syrian-supported revolt against Arafat within the guerrilla organization.

Arafat's rapprochement with Egypt was widely seen throughout the Middle East as an attempt to gain Egyptian support against Syria and Libya, which openly backed the PLO rebels.

"Unless Arafat feels that he has solid support behind him, I doubt even he will want to risk more problems within his own organization by any big show of support for the Egyptians," one diplomat said.

More Jobs For Teachers Ahead

WASHINGTON (AP) — The growing number of school-age children could mean more jobs for teachers, who found classroom work hard to find in the 1970s.

New job projections from the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics indicate that the nation will need 755,000 more teachers to staff preschool, kindergarten, elementary, and high school classes between now and 1995. At the same time, however, the bureau projects a 15 percent drop in college faculty positions, from 744,000 in 1982 to 632,000 by 1995.

The government report said there were 1,647,000 preschool, kindergarten and elementary teachers in 1982 and 2,274,000 will be needed in 1995. That is an increase of 627,000, or 38 percent. The figure includes a projected demand for 511,000 more kindergarten and elementary teachers and 116,000 more preschool teachers.

Mayor Refuses Cash Paychecks

POLKTON, N.C. (AP) — The mayor of Polkton in Anson County has not cashed a paycheck in the last 10 years. Instead, he frames his paychecks and hangs them on his office wall.

"I've never taken any money because I don't think I should," W. Cliff Martin said. "They don't owe me a thing. It's just a service you've got to do. I didn't want the town to pay me because I live here; I make my living some other way."

Martin, who is vice president of Polkton Manufacturing Co., has been either mayor or a councilman for 32 years. The town treasurer has written a paycheck for Martin every month for the past 10 years, but Martin hasn't cashed one of them.

The checks range in amounts from $10 to $45 and total $3,720.

"They gave me a raise," Martin said, displaying his December check for $50.

Martin said that another reason he doesn't cash the checks is so no one can accuse him of accepting money while in office.

Martin was elected to his first term as mayor about 30 years ago. He served as councilman for consecutive terms after that until he again was elected mayor in 1975.

the town's paychecks doesn't hurt Polkton's bookkeeping.

"They just scratch it off the books at the end of the year," he said. "If you paid somebody out of your checking account, it probably would mess it up at the end of the year, but it (the money) would still be in the bank."

Martin said he has seen a lot of changes in the small town east of Charlotte in southern North Carolina since first taking office. One of the changes was the introduction of the telephone to the area.

A native of Polkton, Martin has been in the shirt manufacturing business for 35 years.

Business Executives Offer Govm't Savings Advice

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of business executives, searching for ways to clamp down on government spending, today proposed savings of $424.4 billion over three years, with more than one-third of the reduction from cleaning up wasteful programs.

Without major changes in government operations, the report warned the budget deficit could balloon to an astronomical $2 trillion by the start of the century and the interest on the national debt would run around $1.5 trillion. Last year's deficit stood at a record $195.4 billion.

As a result, it said that the United States "is in a new ball game — where many of the old rules no longer apply and where many of the 'sacred cows' will have to be sacrificed."

The report, put together by the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control, spelled out 2,478 recommendations that the president, Congress or individual federal agencies could put in place to reduce red ink.

J. Peter Grace, the business executive who was chairman of the panel, urged President Reagan, in a letter accompanying the report, to act quickly on the suggestions. "The current economic trends are simply too serious to delay action any longer," he said.

The recommendations vary from requiring an overhaul of programs in some cases to offering such practical suggestions as putting cash seized by the Justice Department into bank accounts that pay interest.

In spelling out their cost-cutting suggestions, the panel members complained the Defense Department has bought three-cent screws for $91 and spent $114 for silicon electric cells that go for 9 1/2 cents.

They urged the Pentagon to be more efficient and cost-conscious when it contracts for more than $60 billion in major weapons systems and called on the Department of Health and Human Services to charge a penalty to states that have high error rates in welfare payments.

The Treasury Department pays bills as they come in, regardless of when they're due, they said. If it waited until the due-date, a savings of $1.3 billion over three years could be had.

Moreover, federal retirement plans are much more generous than those for workers in private business, offering government employees three to six times the benefits of the best private pension plans, according to the report.

And it said the Internal Revenue Service should turn its "immediate attention" to trying to recover the estimated $81.5 billion individuals and corporations failed to pay in taxes in 1981.

"It is abundantly clear to anyone who reads through ... this report ... that the federal government is suffering from a critical case of inefficient and ineffective management, evidenced particularly by the hemorrhaging of billions of tax dollars and mounting deficits," it said.

"For decades the federal government has not managed its programs with the same eye to innovation, productivity and economy that is dictated by private sector (profit and loss) statements and balance sheets."

Overall, it cited savings of $424.4 billion over three years. Tightening up on wastefulness in government programs could save $160.9 billion and proper personnel management, an additional $90.9 billion, it said.

A smattering of its findings:

—The Agriculture Department has three agencies that duplicate certain research analysis. Some $22 million could be saved over three years if corrected.

—Savings of about $445 million, over three years, could be made if the Federal Aviation Administration reduced the number of air traffic control centers and consolidated other activities.

—The Pentagon could come up with an additional $590 million over three years if it consolidated some of its 29 depots for heavy maintenance of defense systems.

—The Urban Mass Transportation Administration spent $10 million on a computer to keep track of its approximately $25 billion in grants but hasn't been able to close its financial books since 1979.

—The Veterans Administration pays $15 billion annually to six million people (An average of $2,500 a person). "Yet, it has no information to measure the accuracy of these payments even though it knows the error rate exceeds $500 million per year."

—The financial offices of the Energy Department, which was formed from parts of other agencies, don't close their monthly books on the same day. "Payrolls are processed independently at eight locations."

buildings, structures and land worth $104 billion at the end of the 1980 fiscal year. Yet, it lacks a central office to manage those holdings.

The group said 161 business executive worked for 18 months on the project at cost of $75 million to the private sector. No government money was spent, it said.

Celebrate The Largest Employee-Owned Firm

WEIRTON, W.Va. (AP) — Choosing pay cuts over unemployment, workers at Weirton Steel Corp. have given themselves "a second chance," creating the nation's largest employee-owned company.

Several hundred residents of this steel town boisterously turned out Wednesday night to toast the future of the firm, which was cast off by National Intergroup Inc. because it was "just marginally profitable."

The purchase of the tinsplate mill by about 10,000 workers, 20 months in the works, was made final Wednesday when officials of National Intergroup and Weirton Steel signed the $386.1 million deal, financed largely by borrowed funds.

He was one of the hundreds who crowded into the Millsop Community Center, which was decorated with green balloons and a 200-pound cake that carried the message in green icing. "We're on our own."

"Many communities never get a second chance, but in Weirton, instead of creating the tremendous hardships associated with massive layoffs, Weirton Steel will survive and prosper," asserted Sen. Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va.

"There's much work ahead of us, but I am confident that Weirton workers and their families are ready to continue their cooperative efforts," Randolph said.

Weirton Steel Vice President Carl Valdiserri hopes the enthusiasm and excitement carry on for at least 1 1/2 years until the steelworkers receive their first profit-sharing check.

"It's not important how big the checks are. They are tangible evidence that it's working," he said.

About 2,000 workers remain on layoff at the plant, 600 fewer than were furloughed when the employee stock ownership plan was approved last September.

Steelworker Rusty Delanta said the workforce seems to have adjusted to an 18 percent wage and benefit cut needed to help purchase the 75-year-old mill from National Intergroup, formerly National Steel.

"It wasn't as bad as we thought it was going to be," Delanta said. "It's worth it if it works."

—The Urban Mass Transportation Administration spent $10 million on a computer to keep track of its approximately $25 billion in

Say Lynch Mob Aura Inspired

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A "lynch mob" atmosphere fostered by police mismanagement caused the deaths of seven civilians and a policeman during a 30-hour siege, says a lawyer who filed a $12.5 million lawsuit against the police and city officials.

"It was a gross use of excessive force," James F. Schaeffer, lawyer for the families of five men killed by police gunfire during the incident that ended Jan. 13, 1968, said Wednesday in filing the suit. City officials declined comment on the complaint.

The patrolman was taken hostage and beaten to death by what police described as a group of religious fanatics under the leadership of Lindberg Sanders. Seven group members were later killed by police.

SITTING PRETTY — Chinstrap penguin chicks snuggle together in the protective enclosure at Sea World Park in San Diego where hundreds of eggs brought back from an expedition to Antarctica have hatched in the past three weeks. Bird curator Frank Todd says the park is far ahead of the 50-percent hatch rate they had hoped for. The expedition returned with nearly 500 abandoned eggs. (AP Laserphoto)

High Court Weighing Illegal Alien 'Sweeps'

By JAMES H. RUBIN

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Citizens and legal U.S. residents have nothing to fear when the government searches factories for illegal aliens while immigration agents block the exits, the Supreme Court has been told.

Those in the country legally "are free to walk about the factory. They are free to leave," said Andrew Frey, a government lawyer.

He urged the court on Wednesday to overturn a ruling in a California case that such Immigration and Naturalization Service raid tactics are unconstitutional.

The Reagan administration's assertions appeared to receive a sympathetic hearing from several justices during 60 minutes of legal arguments. The court is expected to announce by July whether using agents to block factory exits during immigration raids is unconstitutional.

Justice John Paul Stevens asked whether it is not "a reasonable inference" that only illegal aliens would try to run out of a factory during a raid.

"Isn't it highly unlikely that a citizen would run?" Stevens asked of Henry R. Fenton of Los Angeles, who is representing four individuals who said the raid tactics violate the rights of factory workers who are not illegal aliens.

The four, either citizens or legal residents, sued the immigration service to halt the exit-blocking tactics.

The case stemmed from INS raids of two Los Angeles area garment factories in 1977. In two such sweeps of the Southern California Davis Pleating Co. agents arrested 117 illegal aliens.

On all three occasions, immigration agents blocked the exits — as they did in apprehending 20,000 illegal aliens in other sweeps in Los Angeles in 1977.

The government was either armed with a search warrant or had permission from the employer to search the premises.

But the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled on July 15, 1982, that the raids violated the rights of the four legal U.S. residents and citizens who sued.

The appeals court said the INS had, in effect, "seized" the factories without having a reasonable suspicion of which individual workers they were looking for.

Therefore, the appeals court said, the tactics violated privacy rights protected by the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution.

But Frey contended that the INS conduct "is not a violation of the Fourth Amendment. It is enforcement of the law."

Fenton said the tactics violated the rights of the innocent because "a citizen might be frightened that he could be mistaken for an illegal alien."

Fenton said that since the raids were aimed at those who appeared to be Hispanic, a legal resident or citizen could be arrested or handcuffed by mistake during the factory sweep.

The four individuals who sued are Herman Delgado, Ramona Correa, Francis Labonte and Maria Miramontes.

As Zhao left the White House to continue his two-week tour of the United States, Reagan told him, "Even on matters of disagreement, the premier and I were able to clarify our respective positions."

Noting that he and his wife, Nancy, will visit China in April, the president said, "We now look forward all the more to our trip, knowing that friends will be there to meet us."

After a breakfast meeting with the Cabinet and the signing of two agreements extending bilateral cooperation in science and technology and opening new areas for industrial and technological cooperation, Zhao said the accords symbolize "that we should preserve what we already have achieved and open up new areas in our bilateral relations."

But, continuing his theme that serious obstacles stand in the way of improving U.S.-Chinese relations, Zhao said, "Of course, much remains to be done to really solve the outstanding problems between us and implement the cooperation we have committed to."

The premier also said he looks forward to Reagan's visit in the spring and "to more substantial content in our future talks."

As Reagan and Zhao moved from a lectern to a table to sign the industrial cooperation agreement, each gestured for the other to step forward first. Finally, Zhao moved behind Reagan, and the president, smiling but complaining about inadequate "stage directions," stepped forward, and the two took their seats for the ceremonial signing.

After his three days of talks with administration officials, Zhao was leaving for San Francisco aboard a plane Reagan has lent him from the presidential fleet for the premier's cross-country tour.

Zhao's trip is the first-ever by a Chinese premier to the United States.

The signing of the two agreements hardly concealed the evidence that the two sides had made little progress in ironing out some of their fundamental differences.

On Wednesday, Zhao ruled out the possibility of forming a strategic partnership with the United States to present a united front against the Soviet Union.

China and the United States, he said, have too many disputes over foreign policy.

In an interview with American television correspondents broadcast by Cable News Network, Zhao said the United States and China do have in common their opposition to the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan and the occupation of Cambodia by Soviet-supported Vietnamese forces.

But China could never condone the U.S. invasion of Grenada, Reagan administration policy in Central America, its involvement in the Middle East or its policies toward the Third World, the premier said.

"In these circumstances, it is therefore impossible to establish any comprehensive strategic partnership," he said.

Zhao reasserted China's independent foreign policy as a non-aligned nation and said his country adopts its positions on world issues case-by-case and "on their own merits."

Zhao also said China has not been asked and has not considered taking part in a four-way conference with the United States and North and South Korea to stabilize the volatile Korean peninsula and lead to reunification of the two Koreas.

China announced its support Wednesday of North Korea's call for a three-way U.S.-Korean conference, but South Korea appeared to reject that proposal, charging the North Korean offer was insincere.

Reagan said Tuesday night that a four-way conference would be "just wonderful" in that it would pose the possibility of ending three decades of armed stalemate on the Korean peninsula.

Cavs Hand State Fourth ACC Loss

By The Associated Press
Virginia slapped North Carolina State with its fourth consecutive Atlantic Coast Conference basketball loss while Clemson claimed the early lead in the ACC with a victory over Georgia Tech.

Othell Wilson hit four free throws and Ricky Stokes added two more as the Cavaliers downed N.C. State 57-54 Wednesday night. Clemson captured its second straight ACC win with a 79-69 victory over Georgia Tech 79-69 as Murray Jarman scored 23 points.

Elsewhere, Kenny Green scored 18 points as No. 12 Wake Forest beat William & Mary 80-53 and sophomore guard Johnny Dawkins poured in 25 points as unranked Duke downed Appalachian State 73-60.

While his Cavs beat N.C. State, Virginia coach Terry Holland said the Wolfpack is still a Top 10 team.

"One or two losses can set you in motion in the wrong direction," Holland said after his team upped its record to 11-1 overall and 1-1 in the ACC. "North Carolina State, 10 or 12 days or so, was a Top 10 team. They are still a Top 10 team. They just lost some very tough games."

Jim Miller led Virginia with 13 points while freshman Olden Polynice tied his career-high with 12 points.

The Cavaliers went to its delay game up 51-50 with 4 1/2 minutes left, and Wilson, who had scored only one point up to that point, hit both ends of the one-and-one to give Virginia a 53-50 advantage with 1:05 left. But Terry Gannon's jumper cut the lead to one again with 42 seconds left.

Wilson missed the front end of a one-and-one with 39 seconds left, but Polynice grabbed the rebound and Wilson was fouled again. This time he hit both free throws and Stokes added two more with 20 seconds left to seal the victory.

N.C. State, 10-6 and 0-4, was led by freshman forward Rodney Butts with 12 points. Lorenzo Charles added 11 and Cozell McQueen and Spud Webb each scored 10 points.

"Lucky for me I have a sense of humor," N.C. State coach Jim Valvano said.

Clemson coach Bill Foster was concerned his Tigers might have a letdown after downing N.C. State 63-61 Monday. But there was no letdown as the Tigers broke an eight-game Georgia Tech winning streak.

"I was afraid of an emotional dropoff after Monday's win over N.C. State," he said. "Tech came in here with eight straight wins and was looking for a place in the top 20, but the kids played with great emotion. This team is a bunch of hard workers."

Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins said his team "just

The Tigers, 10-2 and 2-0, took a 37-28 halftime lead largely on the strength of sophomore Chris Michael, who finished with 20 points.

The Tigers led by as many as 14 points before Georgia Tech rallied to cut the lead to four with 1:36 left behind sophomore guard Mark Price,

But Jarman got a dunk and added a free throw for a three-point play. Then, after a Tech turnover, Jarman hit both ends of a one-and-one for a 72-63 Clemson lead.

Scott Petway, Yvon Joseph and Bruce Dalrymple had 12 points apiece for Tech, now 9-2 and 1-1. John Salley added 11 points for the Jackets.

Guard Vincent Hamilton had 12 points for Clemson.

Wake Forest shot 62 percent from the field and Green hit all eight of his shots from the floor as the Deacons upped their record to 11-1.

"We needed this game after a tough loss to Georgia Tech," said Wake Forest coach Carl Tacy. "It seemed like a year since we've played. We seemed to let up in the second half down there, and it was good to see more intense play tonight."

William & Mary coach Barry Parkhill said Wake Forest "played a tremendous game at both ends of the court."

The Deacons ran off a 10-0 spree to break open a close game for a 31-18 lead late in the first half and were never headed.

Anthony Teachey scored 15 points, Mark Cline had 12 and Danny Young added 10.

Keith Cietlicki scored 14 points for the Indians, 2-7, while Kevin Richardson added 12 and Tony Traver had 10.

Coach Mike Krzyzewski celebrated his 100th game at the helm at Duke — and his 52nd victory — as the Blue Devils upped their record to 14-1, the best start for Duke since 1966 when it was 15-1.

Dawkins, the ACC's leading scorer, hit seven straight field goals in the second half to propel the Blue Devils to the victory. Duke used a 20-3 spurt in the opening half to build a 38-27 halftime lead as the Blue Devils dropped the Moun-

Dawkins said he took what the Mountaineer defense allowed.

"They were giving me the outside shot all night, but I am not a one dimensional player," Dawkins said. "I was looking for the job pass inside and it worked."

Appalachian State coach Kevin Cantwell said his plan was the let Dawkins have the jumper, but the strategy backfired when Dawkins hit 12 of 21 from the field.

"That was our game plan, but he was shooting from downtown and hitting nothing but bottom," Cantwell said. "If we had played man-to-man defense most of the night, he might have had 50."

NCAA Prexy Commission: Will It Work?

DALLAS (AP) — Some time next month there'll be a new kid on the block in college athletics: The NCAA Presidential Commission.

There will be 44 college presidents and chancellors on the panel.

How much power will they have?

How much interest will they show?

Will they make a difference?

There were certainly more questions than answers Wednesday as the NCAA ended a tumultuous convention of its diverse, far-flung member schools. The American Council on Education was defeated in its drive to set up an extraordinarily powerful Board of Presidents, able to set policy and put in rules independent of convention vote.

Approved in its place, after more than two hours of debate, was the idea several other presidents set forth — the 44-member presidential commission. It can submit legislation directly to the convention and commission studies. But its overall influence remains unclear.

"I think the presidential commission is going to be very effective and have a great deal of influence," Walter Byers, the NCAA's executive director, said at a news conference following the convention's adjournment.

"This was an issue that commanded much public attention exposure in the news media. The presidents will take their responsibilities seriously."

Also, Byers noted, the presidents will be voted in by mail ballot by all presidents of NCAA-member schools.

"The presidential commission is going to include some of the most respected chief executive officers in the country, the heads of some of the nation's most prestigious institutions," he said.

Byers said the commission could be decided upon as early as next month. He also agreed that its first meeting would no doubt take up the burning issue of Division I-A autonomy, an issue which for about 24 hours had many top football schools talking out loud about an NCAA pullout.

Talk of a split from the venerable NCAA fell almost completely silent, however, when smaller schools agreed to two of the major powers' three demands.

But the large football-playing institutions insisted that they will not rest until their No. 1 goal — legislative autonomy within the NCAA — is met.

"I think a lot of people feel a lot better now," Wayne Duke, commissioner of the Big Ten Conference, said Wednesday as the NCAA concluded its 78th annual convention. "But this is certainly not the end of it."

"I don't think they knew what they were voting for," said Gene Corrigan, Notre Dame athletic director, after Tuesday's defeats for I-A. "I heard more talk about pulling out of the NCAA (after Tuesday's vote) than I've ever heard, and I've been coming to these conventions since 1967."

Delegates approved Wednesday two proposals whose defeat on Tuesday triggered an angry barrage toward the smaller Division I schools. By a wide margin, the convention agreed to let the 105 Division I-A institutions have a separate legislative meeting in June. By a smaller margin, it was agreed that needy students may receive federal assistance money along with a full athletic scholarship.

A move to reconsider the question on Division I-A autonomy failed by eleven votes.

"That remains the main issue facing Division I-A," said Georgia football coach and athletic director Vince Dooley, who startled many delegates Tuesday evening by declaring that Georgia and others should pull out of the NCAA "as it is presently structured."

"We are not seeking to leave the NCAA," said Tom Hansen, executive director of Pac-10

Conference. "And now I see this as an opportunity to work within Division I-A without taking any rash steps. We have two new avenues — the presidential commission and the new summer meeting."

Many schools seemed to fear that big-time powers would increase the size of their basketball squads and coaching staffs and eventually squeeze everyone else out of the lucrative NCAA basketball tournament.

There are 278 schools in Division I, the NCAA's top division, broken up into I-A, I-AA and "I-Other." The 105 I-A schools include the 60 members of the College Football Association, the Big Ten and Pac-10 conferences and 25 others. The 84 Division I-AA schools are those with smaller football programs. The other 89 are almost all basketball-playing schools, such as DePaul and Marquette.

Vic Bubas, the commissioner of the Sun Belt

Conference, had argued on the floor Tuesday that Division I-A autonomy could bring bigger coaching staffs, more scholarships and escalated costs. On Wednesday, he and many others had obviously softened their stance.

"We still have concerns," Bubas said. "Escalation of costs would make it difficult for schools not playing football to compete. The I-Others are continuously worried about Division I structure and automatic bids to the basketball tournament. People in I-A said they don't want to move in those areas. I hope that is true."

NCAA Head Refuses To Get Into Debate

DALLAS (AP) — A major-college football playoff may not be in the offing — and even some proponents are beginning to tone down their sales pitches — but there is no shortage of opinions.

Except perhaps for Walter Byers, executive director of the NCAA, the group that would have to approve any playoff proposal.

Asked whether he was in favor of a playoff, Byers replied, "I don't think what the executive director of the NCAA thinks about a football playoff is very relevant. That question should be decided by the Division I-A institutions. If they want it, they can adopt it, but to my knowledge there has never been a legislative proposal on the floor (of the convention). You can't play the game unless the people who'd qualify want it."

And, another convention ended Wednesday with the subject still only talked about.

One of the more prevalent objections to a playoff is that with 16 bowl games, 16 teams go home as winners. Why, then, does the NCAA have a basketball tournament, where all but the winner go home as losers?

"Every team that gets into the NCAA Tournament is a winner; the fans, players and coaches evaluate it that way," says Dave Gavitt, commissioner of the Big East Conference and chairman of the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Committee. "Getting there is the big thing. I can't think of anything more exciting than seeing the top teams in the country playing for the national championship. I sure could make a good case for at least an eight-team (football) playoff."

Georgia Coach Vince Dooley has pushed for a postseason tournament in recent years, but now says that "the only practical way is a one-game playoff after the bowls — a college Super Bowl. That's the only possible chance any kind of playoff system has. I don't think anything else will work or be acceptable because the bowls won't allow it to happen any other way."

athletic director at Vanderbilt and former head coach at Central Michigan. However, Kramer's reasons have nothing to do with extending the season or lost classroom time.

"Those are legitimate reasons," he concedes, "but I happen to believe that what we've got now is the most positive thing going for college football."

"First, there are some 16 major bowls, with 32 teams participating, all of whom can go back to their respective constituents and use the fact that they went to a bowl to boost ticket sales.

"Second, a bowl trip can be an enjoyable way to end the season — win or lose. Probably the only team that didn't enjoy its experience this past season was Nebraska because they were playing for the national championship. In a playoff, you'd have a great deal of strain without the satisfaction of having enjoyed a bowl trip.

"And third, the controversy spawned by the type of thing that happened on Jan. 2 (the top five teams in the Associated Press poll all finishing with one loss) is probably the most stimulating thing to happen to college football in years.

"Drive around the country last week and listen to the talk shows or pick up a newspaper from one coast to the other and they were filled with who should be No. 1 almost to the exclusion of pro sports. It's great for college football to be arguing that in every drugstore and coffeeshop in the country.

"The bowl season is a reward for fans as well as the players — a holiday, festive-type event they look forward to. A playoff situation would destroy part of that because most fans can't afford financially to go to more than one postseason game. And unless you go like the NFL and play some games at campus sites you'd lose fan support.

"I'm old-fashioned enough to believe that you still play the game for the players and the fan sitting in the stands eating a hotdog and drinking a Coke."

Navratilova Named Top Female Athlete

NEW YORK (AP) — With the same ease and dominance she displayed on tennis courts all over the world last year, Martina Navratilova was a runaway winner as the 1983 Associated Press Female Athlete of the Year.

A native of Czechoslovakia who became an American citizen in 1981, Navratilova garnered 82 votes in nationwide balloting of sports writers and broadcasters announced today. Track star Mary Decker, the 1982 winner, was a distant second with 44 votes.

Finishing third was Tamara McKinney, a downhill skier, who had six votes. Distance runner Grete Waitz of Norway received two votes, while volleyball ace Rita Crockett, college basketball star Cheryl Miller of Southern California and golfer JoAnne Carner received one vote each.

Capturing The AP Male Athlete of the Year award on Tuesday was track and field star Carl Lewis.

Navratilova was magnificent in 1983, winning 15 of the 16 tournaments she entered and posting an 86-1 record in matches. Her only loss was to Kathy Horvath in the French Open.

The athletic left-hander has won her last 51 matches, just five shy of the record of 56 set by Chris Evert Lloyd. In 1983, Navratilova won $1,456,030, second only to male tennis star Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, while her career earnings of $6,384,089 are the most by any tennis player, male or female.

"I'm glad that I got it," Navratilova said when told she had won the award. "But to be honest, I thought I should have gotten it in 1979."

Tennis has dominated the Female Athlete award over the years, with Chris Evert Lloyd winning in 1974, 1975, 1977 and 1980. Tracy Austin took the honor in 1979 and 1981, while Billie Jean King won in 1967 and 1973, and the 1971 winner was Evonne Goolagong of Australia.

"I'm honored with the award," Navratilova said. "I'm really glad because it's people that vote on it."

For the second straight year, Navratilova has finished No. 1 on the Women's Tennis Association computer.

"I was lucky enough to have good year. But I had so many

Among her victories in 1983 were Wimbledon for the fourth time, the Australian Open for the second time and the U.S. Open for the first time.

"My biggest thrill was winning the U.S. Open," she said, "because it had eluded me for so long. I put more sweat into winning the U.S. Open than any other tournament."

The dominance of her serve-and-volley game was so clear that at Wimbledon and the U.S. Open her matches took just minutes. In defeating Lloyd in the final of the U.S. Open, America's premier tennis event, fans applauded the loser because she forced the match to last more than one hour.

"Mental is a part of it when it gets close," Navratilova said. "But most of my matches are two-setters.

"A lot of it is physical. But mentally I'm tough because I put in the work. I work three-four hours a day."

Asked if she could go through an entire year without a loss, she said: "It's a possibility. But if I hadn't lost to Horvath, maybe I would have lost two more matches. You never can tell."

While she lost only once, she noted that there were three other players who almost beat her, including Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia.

Britain's Jo Durie was up 3-1 in the third set in the Australian Open, only to have Navratilova battle from behind to win. And Eva Pfaff of West Germany had two match points against Navratilova in the Canadian Open.

"You have to be so lucky to keep winning," Navratilova said. "But I've also worked hard, mentally and technically.

"I'm hitting the ball harder. I'm putting more spin on it. I'm more aggressive.

"It's difficult to pass me 80 or 90 times. And that's what it would take to beat me."

New Setback For 'Ticket'

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — A judge has ordered that Atlantic Coast Conference basketball games broadcast in the "Season Ticket" package be available to all Orange County cable television viewers.

District Court Judge Patricia Hunt issued a 10-day temporary restraining order Wednesday against Village Cable Inc., the company that serves Chapel Hill and Orange County, and Alert Cable TV of North Carolina Inc., which serves Carrboro.

The companies were ordered to provide the "Season Ticket" games, beginning with Wednesday's Virginia-North Carolina State contest, to all subscribers who received the Entertainment and Sports Programming (ESPN) channel.

The order also directed the town of Chapel Hill to determine whether Village Cable was violating the terms of its cable franchise.

A hearing was scheduled for Jan. 20.

Under the Season Ticket package, cable subscribers pay an additional $75 to receive 21 basketball games not shown on commercial television.

Last week, Judge Elton G. Tucker ordered Vision Cable of North Carolina Inc. to open its remaining games to all 24,000 Wilmington-area subscribers.

Pulled Muscle Scares Lietzke

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) - Bruce Lietzke stood on the practice tee at Eldorado Country Club, took his first swing of the day - a little flip with a wedge - then clutched his chest. "I thought I was having a heart attack," he said. "Then I realized it was the same kind of pain I've had before on numerous occasions - a pulled muscle. But anytime you get a chest pain, the first thing you think is 'heart attack'."

In addition to Lietzke, the group at 67 included Johnny Miller, Curt Byrum, Ronnie Black and Bobby Wadkins. Black and Byrum played at Indian Wells, Wadkins at La Quinta and Miller, a winner of his last two starts, was at Bermuda Dunes. "Nobody is paying attention, but me," said Miller, whose two triumphs have come in a new team event and an unofficial tournament. "But I'm on a roll." He paused, considered and smiled. "Make it a mini-roll. "But I'm playing good. Really good. I wouldn't be surprised if I won this tournament."

The format requires the pros to play one round on each of four desert courses, each day with a different set of amateur partners, before the field is cut for the pros-only windup Sunday at Bermuda Dunes. The big group at 68 was headed by PGA champion Hal Sutton, Fuzzy Zoeller and Craig Stadler, all of whom played at La Quinta. Defending champion Keith Fergus - who had former President Gerald Ford, House Speaker Tip O'Neill and the host comedian as his amateur team - shot 71 at La Quinta.

RALEIGH (AP) — U.S. Senate Democrats say they haven't decided whether to fight President Reagan's nomination of Terrence W. Boyle of Elizabeth City as a federal judge.

Reagan nominated Boyle at the urging of U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C. Boyle is the son-in-law of Raleigh attorney Tom Ellis, Helms' top political strategist.

Boyle's appointment must be approved by the Senate before becoming official.

Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee, which will review the nomination, haven't decided whether to delay the nomination until after the 1984 election in the hope that a Democrat will be elected president and thus replace Boyle with a Democratic nominee.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The descendants of J. Paul Getty inherited billions, and they're getting richer even as they battle over the future of the family oil company. If the current bid by Texaco Inc. to buy out Getty Oil is completed, the family's fortune will increase from $2.5 billion to $3.9 billion.

But the public battle over Getty Oil has divided the fiercely private family. It has also involved — and possibly dragged down — Getty Oil Chairman Sidney R. Petersen, a Getty career man who worked his way up the corporate ladder.

The Getty Museum of Malibu — controlling 11.8 percent of the oil company's stock — also has played a pivotal role, but it has steered clear of direct involvement in the struggle among the heirs.

J. Paul Getty built Getty Oil and ran it until his death in 1976.

Two of Getty's three surviving sons — Gordon and J. Paul Jr. — are locked in a legal battle for control of the Sarah C. Getty Trust, named for their grandmother.

The trust controls 40.2 percent of the company's 79.1 million shares, making it the most potent force in the direction of Getty Oil. And it stands to make an enormous amount of money if the Texaco takeover goes through. Late last year, Getty stock was selling for about $80 a share; Texaco is offering $125.

According to J. Paul Getty's will, the Sarah C. Getty Trust was to have three trustees — Gordon, family friend and attorney C. Lansing Hays and Security Pacific Bank — but Hays has died and Security Pacific refused to assume its role for what it called "legal, technical and business reasons."

Left in sole control, Gordon Getty pressed the company to pay higher dividends. He has proposed establishing a royalty trust, under which income from oil properties would go directly to shareholders rather than finance company diversification.

The company, Gordon's brother, J. Paul Getty Jr., and guardians of J. Paul Jr.'s daughter and heir, Tara Gabriel Galaxy Gramophone Getty, favored diversification, believing the long-term profits for the family would be greater.

A suit filed on behalf of Tara Getty seeks to end Gordon Getty's sole control over the trust, giving other heirs a voice in its operations.

The main players in the feud are:

—Gordon Peter Getty, 49, the youngest and reportedly least-favored of the five sons of J. Paul Getty. A musician and anthropologist who lives in San Francisco, he was listed last year by Fortune magazine as the wealthiest individual in the United States by virtue of his sole control of the trust.

He was named a trustee of the family estate only after one brother, George Franklin Getty II, died and the two surviving brothers fell from favor.

—J. Paul Getty Jr., 52, was born Eugene Paul Getty but later changed his name. He had been designated overseer of the trust, but was stripped of that role by his father after a scandal rocked his family.

J. Paul Getty Jr. disappeared from public view in 1971 after his Dutch-born wife, actress Talitha Pol, died of an apparent heroin overdose. He still lives in seclusion, part of the time in a London townhouse protected by a sophisticated closed-circuit television security system.

—Jean Ronald Getty, 53, is the oldest of the surviving sons. However, he has little stake in the struggles. He was virtually written out of his father's will — receiving only about $3,000 a year — reportedly because J. Paul Getty was bitter over an expensive divorce settlement extracted by his third wife, Jean's mother.

Dividends from the trust are split into three shares of about $28 million a year — more than $76,000 a day — which go to Gordon, J. Paul Jr. and the three daughters of their deceased brother, George, whose death in 1973 at age 48 was ruled a "probable suicide" by taking a lethal mixture of drugs and alcohol.

The fifth son of J. Paul Getty, Timothy, was the favorite. But he was a frail and sickly child who died in 1958 at age 12.

—Sidney R. Petersen, Getty Oil's chairman and chief executive, joined a Getty subsidiary, Tidewater Oil, in 1955, two years after graduating from the University of California at Berkeley with a bachelor's degree in business administration. He rose steadily. But since becoming Getty chairman in 1980, he has sparred constantly with Gordon Getty over the company's direc-

Petersen's doom appeared sealed last week when a tentative agreement was reached in which Gordon Getty, through the trust, and Houston-based Pennzoil would have bought up all the company's outstanding stock. Petersen would have been ousted after the take-

However, Texaco Inc. made an even richer offer to buy out all Getty shareholders, including the trust and the museum.

"Texaco has not announced what its plans are" involving Petersen and other Getty managers, said Getty spokesman Jack Leone.

—Harold W. Williams, chairman of a philanthropic trust that supports the wealthy J. Paul Getty Museum, has played a pivotal role in the corporate battles. The museum, with its extensive stock holdings, is the company's second-largest shareholder and was able to provide crucial swing

The museum, already the richest in the nation, has emerged from the corporate-takeover war as a major winner. At the price being offered by Texaco, the museum will be able to cash out its shares for $1.2 billion, bringing its total assets to $2.1 billion.

Saw Decline in Robberies

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The FBI says robberies of banks and savings and loans in North Carolina fell 22 percent in 1983, the largest drop since 1979.

Robert Pence, special agent in charge of FBI operations in the state, called the improvement "very nice... very pleasant."

There were 72 robberies in North Carolina last year, 20 fewer than in 1982 — a 22 percent decrease. Between 1979 and 1980, the number fell from 115 to 105.

Bank robberies totaled 60, down from 69 in 1982 — a 13 percent drop. Meanwhile, savings and loan robberies decreased from 23 in 1982 to 12 last year, down 48 percent.

Additionally, the average prison sentence for convicted robbers increased from 13 years to 14 years. Sixty-five percent of the robberies are solved, Pence said.

Robberies involving weapons decreased from 78 in 1982 to 59 in 1983. There were three robberies involving violence, compared with five the previous year.

The FBI recovered $293,000 stolen in robberies of banks and financial institutions, up from $246,000 in 1982.

January and October saw the highest number of robberies — 10 both months. Twenty-seven of the robberies occurred between 9 and 11 a.m., and most were in cities with a population of over 100,000.

Raleigh had nine robberies, followed by Charlotte with eight, Winston-Salem with six, Asheville with four, Durham with four and Greensboro with four.

Bitter Sight To New Yorkers

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Employees at the Empire State Plaza office complex are used to sweetening their morning coffee with sugar from little packets stamped "I Love New York."

It was a bitter sight, then, when the coffee crowd stopped in Cafeteria IV on Wednesday and found nothing but green and white packets reading "I Love Vermont."

"It's like finding a dead mouse in your pantry," said Bern Rotman, a spokesman for the New York state Commerce Department, which produced the famous "I Love New York" promotion campaign. "You know it won't harm you, but you want to get rid of it before the guests arrive."

Cafeteria supervisor Debbie Bender blamed the offending packets on a "mismarked box" and said the New York slogan would be back as soon as the Vermont packets were used up.

Disposal Of Aging Nuclear Submarines Is Studied

Soviets Say Grenadian Claiming U.S. Torture

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has published a letter it says is from an imprisoned Grenadian leftist accusing U.S. soldiers on the Caribbean island of torture.

The letter, printed in the government newspaper Izvestia on Wednesday, was signed "Leon Cornwall, member of the central committee of the New Jewel Movement."

The New Jewel Movement was the Marxist party of Grenada's prime minister, Maurice Bishop, who was killed Oct. 19 during a coup by a radical military faction.

Cornwall was a key member and spokesman for the military junta which ruled the island until U.S. forces invaded it on Oct. 25. A Grenadian army major, he was Bishop's ambassador to Cuba. Cornwall was arrested during the invasion.

U.S. officials have said prisoners captured during the invasion are being well-treated and are allowed to see lawyers.

The Soviet Union condemned the invasion as a violation of international law and denied claims by United States that the Soviet Union and Cuba were building a military base on the island. Izvestia published on its front page a photograph showing a few handwritten English lines that conformed to the Russian version of the text. The paper said the letter had been "thrown out of the prison bars" by Cornwall, but did not elaborate.

"American interventionist forces ... (are) committing illegalities, searches from one house to another, terrorizing the Grenadan population, all those who speak out their negative attitude against the aggressor," the letter charged.

"The Americans are holding in prisons in the most horrible conditions all those servicemen of the Grenadan army and members of the ruling party who remain alive," it claimed.

"U.S. and Barbados soldiers torture the prisoners to oblige them to sign false confessions," it alleged. It claimed that six Grenadian army officers were tortured Nov. 16.

The letter also charged that prisoners aren't allowed to choose their own lawyers.

In an interview Tuesday, Maj. Gen. Jack Farris, former commander of the U.S. forces on Grenada, said: "The prisoners are being very well treated. They've got a Barbadian prison commissioner up there and I'm very impressed with the job he's done."

"I saw some of the prisoners," he said "They've got complaints. They all say they didn't do anything. But they're getting to see their lawyers, they're getting to see their relatives, they're getting fed."

FAA Asks For Standards Study

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time in 25 years, the Federal Aviation Administration is asking the American Medical Association to review the FAA's medical standards for pilots.

The agency wants the AMA to consider all "pertinent advances in the field of medicine" over the last two decades, said FAA spokesman Fred Farrar. "The purpose is to make a complete reappraisal of our medical standards and make sure everything is up to date," he said.

Some pilots have criticized the FAA's prohibition against pilots continuing to fly after they have undergone heart bypass surgery while others commend the current regulations for weeding out any pilots who might pose unacceptable medical risks.

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy, rapidly deploying a new generation of nuclear submarines, is girding for battle with environmentalists on how to scuttle more than 100 aging boats — residual radioactivity and all — over the next three decades.

Since the U.S.S. Nautilus was launched Jan. 21, 1953, as the world's first nuclear-powered sub, the Navy has converted its entire submarine fleet to nuclear power.

The Pentagon currently has 33 missile-firing subs and 94 attack boats, designed to hunt down Soviet ships and missile-carrying subs. The fleet is expected to stay at about that number, as the newer subs replace boats built in the 1950s and early 1960s.

By contrast, the Soviets have nearly 400 operational subs, half of them nuclear-powered, according to the authoritative British publication, Jane's.

Within the next 60 days, the Navy is expected to make a final recommendation on how to dispose of the older subs that have played a key role in both U.S. sea power and the American nuclear deterrent. Those boats retain residual radioactivity in their reactors even after the core of the power plants is removed.

Currently, there are seven nuclear-powered subs in mothballs, including the Nautilus, which is likely to be made into a museum at Groton, Conn. But 100 more subs will be decommissioned over the next 30 years.

Those new boats, including the giant missile-firing Tritons and new attacks subs incorporating the latest technology, will form the backbone of the Navy's sub fleet for the foreseeable future, according to Navy plans outlined to Congress over the past two years.

The Navy has come up with three disposal plans — all of which were criticized by various environmental groups after the Navy issued a proposed environmental impact statement 13 months ago.

The proposals call for burying the reactors on land at federal nuclear installations at Hanford, Wash., or Savannah River, S.C., and either selling the hulls for scrap or sinking them in the oceans.

A third method proposes to sink both the reactors and hulls in water about 10,000 feet deep, either in the Atlantic Ocean 200 nautical miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, N.C., or in the Pacific Ocean, 160 miles southwest of Cape Mendocino, Calif.

The problem is that the reactors contain residual low-level radioactivity, even after their cores are taken out. In addition, the hulls retain some low-level radiation, although most of that is dispersed once a reactor is removed.

In its draft environmental statement, the Navy noted that ocean disposal was cheaper than land disposal. It would cost $5.2 million to sink each sub compared to a $7.2 million price tag for burying them on land, according to the Navy's figures.

After the final proposal is made public, the Navy is expected to ask the Environmental Protection Agency for a permit to go ahead with its plan. The EPA will review the entire matter

If the Navy does recommend ocean dumping, it will be opposed again, said Christopher Roosevelt, president of the Oceanic Society of Stamford, Conn., a private group that was one of the key critics of last year's plan.

"Sea dumping is a disposal method that has an extremely inadequate scientific basis in terms of what would happen to the ecosystem," said Roosevelt in a telephone interview. He said his group might file a suit in federal court to block any ocean dumping.

The empty hulls could be safely sunk in the ocean, Roosevelt said, if the reactors are taken out and stored above ground in trenches, rather than buried. Above-ground disposal would prevent corrosion of the reactor metals that would occur if they were buried, he explained.

Another critic has been the environmental organization Greenpeace, which says that both land disposal and ocean dumping could be unsafe.

"The subs should be maintained in mothballs while other options are studied," said Joyce Rosenthal of Greenpeace.

But the Navy says it is safe to dump the subs at sea, pointing to the accidental sinking of two attack subs — the Thresher in 1963 off Cape Cod and the Scorpion in 1968 off the Azores Islands. Both sites have been monitored and no high levels of radiation have been found, the Navy noted.

Ocean dumping also faces congressional opponents. Rep. Glenn Anderson, D-Calif., attached an amendment to a gas-tax increase bill 13 months ago that bans ocean disposal for at least two years. He said he wanted to make sure "our coastal waters are safe for fishing and recreation."

The United States has not dumped any radioactive wastes in the oceans since 1970 when the Council on Environmental Quality reported that the practice increasingly threatened the marine environment. From 1946 until then, 90,000 canisters of nuclear wastes were sunk off the coast.

Ms. Rosenthal suggested that ocean dumping of the subs could be "a wedge that will lead to wider use of the seas for disposing of radioactive wastes."

Sickout Closes School System

CLEVELAND (AP) — City schools remained closed for a second straight day today after federally mediated bargaining failed to end what school officials termed an illegal sickout by custodians.

Federal mediator Jack Buettner said he broke off talks between the school board and the union representing the custodians Wednesday night because no progress was being made.

A lawyer for the 75,000-pupil district, Robert P. Duvin, said the custodians are "engaged in a flagrantly illegal and immoral strike." He said the board has several courses to take, including firing the custodians or seeking a court injunction.

The Unity Committee negotiates for custodial and other non-teaching workers. A committee lawyer, Melvin S. Schwarzwald, said Wednesday there had been no bargaining since Dec. 16. "I suspect people are really upset since there's no progress being made," he said.

Superintendent Frederick D. Holliday said he canceled today's classes in the district's 130 schools because many custodians had already called in sick by Wednesday night.

At a news conference Wednesday, Duvin said custodians had "an elite and extremely lucrative" contract with the school board.

The average custodian earns $30,000 annually and receives benefits worth $13,500, and some have earned more than $40,000 in recent years, Duvin said. He said the school system pays a teacher with a master's degree and 30 years' experience $26,000.

School officials decided at 3:30 a.m. Wednesday to close the schools after 117 custodians, 116 assistant custodians and 54 laborers called in sick.

Schwarzwald said the district's 309 custodians have agreed to the same 9.5 percent wage increase accepted by other unions in the district. But he said they objected to provisions which would allow the school board to sub-contract custodial work. Other unresolved issues include premium pay for work after regular school hours, he said.

Custodial workers staged a sickout on Dec. 5, when 109 custodians called in sick. The schools remained open but there were heating problems in some schools.

Another critic has been the environmental organization Greenpeace, which says that both land disposal and ocean dumping could be unsafe.

"The subs should be maintained in mothballs while other options are studied," said Joyce Rosenthal of

Small TV Stations In Canadian Market Fight

By GLENN ADAMS
Associated Press Writer
AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — After cultivating Canadian television markets for more than a decade, small public and commercial television stations from Bangor to Seattle say they are in danger of losing those audiences — along with the revenues they generate.

Decisions by Canadian regulators, intended to open the airwaves to broader programming, have created a handful of U.S. "superstations" that can send network programs half a continent via satellite, say station managers on this side of the border.

The long-distance programming could push aside regional stations just below the border, said Hope Green, general manager of Vermont Educational Television and chairwoman of a loose consortium of Public Broadcasting Service affiliates across the United States.

PBS stations "have developed a great following in Atlantic Canada," Ms. Green said. "Those people love us."

But six PBS affiliates in North Dakota "are really suffering" and financial problems are looming in Seattle as Canadian cable companies switch to satellite programming, Ms. Green said.

"It's a terrible danger to our consortium" financially, she said. But the greatest threat is to regional, cross-border broadcasting, "which does a tremendous amount of good as far as international understanding."

Margo Cobb, general manager of Bangor's WLBZ, said, "I would think that overall, there is going to be an impact on any (border) station."

The U.S. stations' fears date back two years, when the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission ruled that Canadian Satellite Communications Inc., or CanCom, could transmit Canadian — and later American — programming via satellite. The idea was to expand programming into remote corners of Canada.

Last year, the CRTC said CanCom, a government-licensed private carrier, could provide programming from four network affiliates in Detroit and Seattle to cable companies in remote areas — or to those allowed under CRTC rules to pick up more American programming.

What constitutes a "remote area" is not always a black-and-white issue, said CRTC spokesman Jeffrey Atkins, so more and more cable companies want to substitute feeds from the Canadian satellite for the programs offered by regional U.S. stations.

CanCom's service in some areas is cheaper than regional programming, say Canadian officials, and some Canadian cable operators are asking to drop regional telecasts for satellite feeds.

Meanwhile, "virtually all" microwave contracts with Bell of Canada, through which many cable companies receive U.S. programming, expire in 1987, said David Colville, director of communications policy for Nova Scotia.

This expiration will give many Canadian cable operators a chance to switch to the superstations' programming, potentially leaving the regional stations out in the cold.

It all translates into fewer viewer dollars for PBS and less advertising revenue for their commercial counterparts.

"The potential loss of revenue is significant," said Edward Winchester, general manager of the Maine Public Broadcasting Network in Orono.

He said 35 percent to 40 percent of the network's contributors are Canadian, adding, "Those folks have a lot to lose."

Prairie Public Television of North Dakota gets half of its member contributions from Canadians, said the six-station network's development director, Keith LaQua.

The loss of Canadian markets would have "a fairly severe impact on us," as well as commercial stations in that state, he said.

American broadcasters carefully watched a case in Saskatchewan, where several larger cable companies sought approval to replace microwave transmissions from across the border and go with CanCom.

The CRTC rejected their complaints about the poor technical quality of microwave signals and turned down their application. But broadcasters south of the border don't believe it reflects a CRTC policy shift that will protect U.S. stations from "creeping CanComism."

"We see it as a continuing process," said Dennis Falk, president and general manager of Prairie Public Television, who said American stations are now waiting to see whether the Canadian cable companies reapply to drop their contracts with U.S. broadcasters.

CanCom, whose president took over as CRTC chairman in November, says its TV signals are higher quality, that the satellite is more reliable and that the superstations' programming is better than that offered by smaller stations along the border.

While he still headed CanCom, Andre Bureau said he saw no reason why Canadians should get inferior programming to accommodate American stations close to the border.

American stations "take advertising (money), but don't put anything back in," he said.

Ms. Green disagrees. Her station is planning programs on acid rain, rural farm issues, life in a French-English bilingual setting and regional cultural events, she said.

Saskatchewan Premier Grant Devine said during an August CRTC hearing he was concerned about a loss of the cross-border link forged by regional stations that "superstations" cannot provide.

For instance, he said, one cable company's proposal to drop a Williston, N.D., station would deprive Saskatchewan farmers of farm market and weather information they need.

Networks Seek Movie Rights

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS and NBC have been negotiating with several movie studios about getting theatrical films before they go on pay-television — more proof that the networks have taken the offensive against cable.

Did you think that the business that produced such diverse success stories as "The A-Team," "60 Minutes," "Dynasty" and "Hill Street Blues" would be bullied forever by cable TV?

In the annals of TV history, 1983 was when the networks stopped losing ground to cable, while 1984 may be when the networks began their counterattack.

Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment, said in an interview that NBC has had conversations with some movie studios, "but nobody has put together an economic formula that makes sense."

One movie bartered to NBC first was last year's best picture, "Gandhi." But those talks reached a standstill over money.

For such a movie to bypass pay-cable, a network would have to sign a big enough check to absorb the studio's loss of the potential cable revenue.

An executive at CBS, who requested anonymity, said CBS' discussions with Universal were "on hold," but talks were continuing with other studios.

Through a spokesman, Lewis Erlich, president of ABC Entertainment said the network "is not pursuing and has not been pursued by the movie studios." He said

ABC's strategy against cable rests in miniseries and distinctive TV movies, such as "Something for Amelia," the tastefully treated film about incest that drew an enormous audience Monday night.

Although money remained an obstacle, Tartikoff said that an added benefit from playing footsie with the movie moguls was that, "at some point, the value in the endeavor goes beyond the business deal. By doing this, we'd be weakening a competitor."

Tartikoff was referring to Home Box Office, the nation's largest and richest pay-cable service. The networks have the major studios as allies against HBO because the movie houses are angry at what they consider HBO's take-it-or-leave-it attitude on film fees.

Recently, Paramount fought back by signing an exclusive 5-year, $500 million contract with the newly merged Showtime-The Movie Channel service, which happens to be HBO's biggest cable competitor.

The 75-picture deal starts paying off next month when Showtime and The Movie Channel show Paramount's "Flashdance." Both services will launch stepped-up subscription drives with the movie's television release.

Tartikoff said the Paramount deal with Showtime-The Movie Channel would benefit the networks because, without HBO's 12.5 million subscribers, "there would be less cable exposure before it comes to us."

(Before cable, network showings of theatrical films performed better in the ratings.)

The networks themselves have moved in several ways to combat cable.

CBS and ABC have their own theatrical movie divisions. CBS produced "Table for Five" and ABC made "Silkwood," and when these films are shopped around for TV, CBS and ABC would seem to have the inside track, although spokesmen for the two networks maintain that there must be open and competitive bidding or they would run afoul of the government for "self-trading."

Another example of ABC's inroads into cable is TeleFirst, which begins in Chicago next Tuesday. For a $75 installation fee and $25.95 a month, ABC will beam such first-run movies as "WarGames," "Octopussy" and "Risky Business," not onto the home screen, but into the home's video cassette recorder, which then can play back an unscrambled picture only on the owner's TV.

In more traditional ways, the networks have counteracted cable with major miniseries, classier made-for-TV films and popular series, which nobody else does — for better or for worse.

The success of last year's "Winds of War" and "The Thorn Birds" helped keep the three-network prime-time rating essentially unchanged from 1982, while HBO's nighttime rating dropped 13 percent, according to the A.C. Nielsen Co.

"The days of coming in with marginal programming and being successful are over," said Harvey Shephard, senior vice president for programming at CBS. "Viewing is too fragmented. There are so many choices."

Although cable now reaches 40 percent of the nation's TV homes, many viewers are disconnecting the pay services after several months, reasoning why pay for movies when the networks are offering free films and miniseries?

With a need for more original product, HBO has done its own productions with stars who don't do much TV: Elizabeth Taylor, Jimmy Stewart and Laurence Olivier.

But HBO won't pick up many new subscriptions from these glorified TV movies. Pay-cable's bread and butter remains the major theatrical films.

Long-Term Effects of Head Injury

Our daughter was injured in an automobile accident about two months ago. Because she was unconscious, the doctors were worried about a brain injury. She was in the hospital for about two weeks. All sorts of scans and tests were made and she seemed to have recovered completely.

We are, of course, grateful for our good luck and her good fortune that she was not left with any permanent damage. Nevertheless we sometimes worry that such an injury can have effects at a later date. Is this possible? - Mr. & Mrs. S.S.T., Wyoming

Dear Mr. & Mrs. T.:
 Your daughter is indeed fortunate that she has recovered completely and that there are no disabilities. Head injuries account for an enormous number of deaths and neurological aftermaths.

Her loss of consciousness undoubtedly indicates that there were some changes in the brain tissue. Her recovery is a testimonial to the fact that the brain is a much harder organ than is commonly believed. It is quite remarkable that the brain can withstand far more manipulation during surgery than can the stomach or the intestines.

Injuries to the head may be very severe. Since the brain is protected by the skull and by layers of fluid, often the brain itself sustains minimal injury from which it quickly recovers.

Brain tissue may be bruised (contusion) or even lacerated (torn). The bleeding that is associated with such severe injuries and the swelling of the brain that follows are responsible for many of the symptoms. Sometimes the injuries are associated with changes in speech, understanding of language and many other neurological signs.

caused by a blow to the head which may result in the loss of consciousness. This may be temporary or prolonged depending on the severity of the injury.

It sometimes takes a long period to fully recover physically and psychologically from such an experience. But having once recovered, there is little or no chance of any late developments that will interfere with your daughter's scholastic progress or general health.

It will also take you, the parents, a long time to recover psychologically from such a catastrophic experience. The techniques now available for the study of the skull and brain are simply amazing. CAT scans, ultrasound, and now magnetic resonance can almost pinpoint damage to the brain that previously could only be speculated upon.

I am certain that her doctors will continue to observe her at regular intervals, to make sure that her recovery continues to be as complete as it is.

You did not mention in your letter the exact cause of the accident. As parents we have good reason to be concerned about irresponsibility of drivers, drunken drivers, and those who have previously been convicted of dangerous driving. When will we finally come to the realization that such irresponsible people must be removed from the road and their lethal automobile weapons once and for all taken out of their hands?

Fetal Surgery Posing New Ethics Question

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) — As doctors learn to operate on the unborn, ethicists are struggling with a moral quandary: Should pregnant women be forced to allow this treatment against their will?

Fetal surgery is becoming a promising weapon in the fight against birth defects. Months before the birth of a deformed child, surgeons attempt to correct flaws that otherwise would mean death or a life of retardation and pain.

Conflicts are certain to emerge, experts predict, between the right of a woman to control her body and the right of her fetus to a healthy start in life.

Before such treatment becomes routinely available, doctors, philosophers and bioethicists are ruminating over the emotion-laden dilemmas this therapy will raise. Some of the problems have been discussed at conferences organized by the University of Colorado and the Kroc Foundation. But many uncertainties remain.

Dr. John C. Fletcher, a bioethicist at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., says the courts will almost certainly have to decide whether a woman must submit to the treatment of her fetus.

"Historically, we Americans depend on the courts to help us work out moral conflicts as well as legal conflicts," he said in an interview. "The development of our moral ideas and our legal ideas seem to go hand in hand."

Fletcher raised the question of a pregnant woman's rights in a report in the latest issue of Technology Review, published at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Currently, he says, a woman has no obligation to accept fetal therapy, because this treatment is still considered experimental. But once its advantages are proven, a moral case can be made that it ought to be done if the risks to the mother are slight.

However, Fletcher contends that a mother should never be forced to allow surgery on her fetus against her will. Such coercion, he says, would be morally self-defeating.

"I think too many principles and rights that have very strong standing in our society have to be violated to risk that coercion," he said.

As long as society permits the abortion of perfectly healthy fetuses, he says, forcing a woman to have treatment for an ailing one makes no sense.

"Who would be willing, even under a court order," he wrote, "to strap a woman down for this purpose?"

The Rev. Richard McCormick, a Roman Catholic theologian at Georgetown University, generally agrees.

"I don't think you force people to accept or reject medical treatment," he said. "There may be times, when there is no threat to the mother and enormous benefit to the child, that you would say it is child neglect to deny it."

"Nothing is inconceivable, but I don't foresee the time when that would be an issue. I would hope that people would voluntarily submit themselves to procedures that would have benefit for the fetus but no risk to themselves."

On the other hand, doctors may have qualms about going along with a woman's decision to withhold beneficial treatment from her fetus. What should they do?

should use all their persuasive powers to convince the patient that this therapy is the best medical and moral choice. If the mother still refuses, they have two choices: Either withdraw from the case or stay involved and try to treat the sick infant after birth.

William Riddick and William Wilcox, philosophy professors at New York University, raise another point in an article in the Hastings Center Report.

Some might argue, they said, that all parents have an obligation to submit themselves to surgery if it will prevent the suffering of their children. But fathers are not required to give blood, bone marrow or kidneys to improve their youngsters' lives.

Among forms of prenatal treatment currently under investigation are surgery for hydrocephalus, a buildup of fluid on the brain, and hydronephrosis, a blockage of the fetus' urethra that causes a backup of urine in its abdomen.

In all, 60 of these operations have been done, according to a registry at the University of Manitoba. Twenty-two of the babies were normal when born, while the rest died or were handicapped.

"These results hardly approach the level of the miraculous," Fletcher noted. And many experts agree that more study is necessary before they can be sure which birth defects are best treated in the womb.
