Gromyko Hints Conventional Arms Talks

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz today said he made no headway in trying to persuade Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko to resume nuclear arms control talks.

But Shultz, in a news conference while flying from Stockholm, Sweden, to Oslo, left open the possibility that the Soviets would end their suspension of East-West negotiations to reduce conventional forces in Central Europe.

NATO sources in Stockholm said Gromyko has signaled Moscow's willingness to resume the talks on conventional arms as early as March.

Another possible policy shift from Gromyko, the sources said, involved combining and renaming the two presently suspended nuclear weapons negotiations in Geneva. "They have not made up their minds on the continuation of START (long-range weapons talks), but they might consider combining them with INF (medium-range weapons talks) under a new name, Forward-Based Systems," one source said.

In addition, they said, Gromyko has indicated the Soviets would not stand in the way of the worldwide ban on chemical weapons Shultz proposed in a speech this week to the European Disarmament Conference.

The sources, who refused to be identified even by nationality, said the indications came in meetings Gromyko held Wednesday with Shultz and West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

Shultz indicated his five-hour meeting with Gromyko on Wednesday at the Soviet Embassy in Stockholm laid the groundwork for a continuing U.S.-Soviet dialogue despite the impasse on nuclear weapons.

"I think the meeting was worthwhile," Shultz told reporters traveling with him on his Air Force jetliner. "Exchanges in the right kind of spirit can be helpful."

Shultz, en route back to Washington, stopped in Oslo for a six-hour courtesy visit with King Olav and Norwegian government officials.

Standing in the aisle of the jet, Shultz gave an account of the meeting with Gromyko, which he had hoped would thaw

83 Dead In Mine's Fire

By KAKUO ABIKO
Associated Press Writer

TAKADA, Japan (AP) — Rescue workers today recovered the bodies of the last three miners trapped 700 feet under the ocean floor by a fire that killed 83 workers after filling one of Japan's largest coal mines with carbon monoxide.

Throughout the night, hundreds of relatives waited in snow at the Mitsui Mining Company's Miike mine site to learn the fate of those below, shouting and converging every time rescue workers brought a blanket-covered body to the surface.

Company spokesman Shosuke Ueda said the three bodies found this morning brought the final death toll to 83. He said 13 of the 96 miners initially trapped by the fire were rescued from the mine, on Japan's southernmost island of Kyushu.

The death toll makes it Japan's fourth worst postwar coal mine disaster. The worst disaster occurred at the same complex in 1963, when 458 workers died in an explosion.

Ueda said the company waited about five hours after the outbreak of the fire Wednesday afternoon before contacting local police, but he declined to comment on charges that rescue operations were insufficient in the early stages. He said the delay was because the company initially felt it could handle the situation with its own rescue team.

Officials said a 23-man company rescue team was sent down to the fire immediately, but Kyodo News Service quoted a labor union leader as saying a larger rescue effort should have been launched.

Kyodo quoted local police officials as saying better rescue operations in the early stages could have averted the disaster.

Rescue workers worked through the night to find those trapped by the fire. Officials said rescue operations were hampered by smoke, fumes and water in the shaft.

Company spokesmen, interviewed by telephone, said most of the 13 hospitalized workers had inhaled poisonous fumes. They said about 600 miners escaped safely through three exits from the pit, nearly two miles from the shaft entrance, where the fire started.

Wednesday's blaze broke out as 707 miners were working in the Ariake shaft, which cuts under the Ariake Sea, 560 miles southwest of Tokyo, company officials said.

The fire died down Wednesday night, and early today rescue workers sealed off the section around the fire.

Moslem And Christian Schools Close Beirut Mourns Kerr's Murder

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — In a rare display of unity, schools and universities closed down in both the Moslem and Christian sectors of the capital today to mourn the slain president of the American University of Beirut.

Malcolm H. Kerr, a 52-year-old American native of the city, was shot in the head outside his campus office Wednesday.

Educational institutions and various factions of Christian, Druse, Sunni and Shiite Moslems called for suspension of classes in tribute to Kerr, who specialized in the study of Middle Eastern politics and sought to keep his university free of political strife.

Shortly after the assassination, the university, located in predominantly Moslem west Beirut, canceled its classes until Monday.

A university spokesman, Radwan Mawlawi, said today no funeral arrangements have been made yet. He also said he had no word on the progress of the police investigation of the assassination.

Police said no arrests have been made, but they otherwise refused to comment on the investigation.

Likewise, they declined comment on their search for gunmen who kidnapped Saudi Arabia's consul, Hussein Abdullah Farrash, in west Beirut on Tuesday.

An anonymous telephone caller Wednesday said a pro-Iranian group calling itself Islamic Holy War killed Kerr and abducted Farrash.

The caller warned that Farrash would be executed and demanded that U.S. and French troops in the multinational force leave Lebanon "or we will shake the earth under their feet."

Callers claiming to represent Islamic Holy War have claimed responsibility for several other attacks, including the Oct. 23 suicide truck-bombings at the U.S. and French military bases in Beirut. But proof of the group's existence has yet to emerge.

Americans' Personal Income Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said today Americans' total personal income rose 6.3 percent in 1983 amid a sharp decline in joblessness.

And after subtracting taxes and discounting for inflation, Americans' income levels went up 3.2 percent, more than six times the tiny 0.5 percent increase in recession-wracked 1982.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said the boost in the adjusted personal income marked its best performance since 1977. But he predicted 1984 would not be as good a year on the income and spending front.

"With the tax reduction program behind us, this year's growth in income and spending will be slower," Baldrige said in a statement. "Still, consumer purchases will continue to expand. Confidence is high, employment prospects are good and inflation has been brought down substantially."

At the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said that "personal income and consumption continue to be a strong force in the recovery. Increases for the last three months have been steady and consistent. With unemployment on the decline and personal income steadily increasing, the prospects for a sustained recovery are very good."

In December, income rose 0.9 percent while personal consumption spending rose 1.3 percent.

Personal income rose steadily last year after a one-month dip in February, partly reflecting the improving job picture. Unemployment in the 12 months dropped from 10.7 percent in December 1982, highest rate since the Great Depression, to 8.2 percent in December.

The yearly unadjusted gain in personal income exceeded the 5.9 percent posted in 1982, a year when the country was still mired in the recession.

Americans saw their personal income rise in 1983 and also got the benefit of having each dollar go farther since inflation for the year was down substantially.

For the year, the report said:

—Personal income rose to a total of $2.742 trillion. The 6.3 percent increase was the largest since a 12.5 percent jump in 1981.

—Disposable, or after tax, income rose 7.3 percent to $2.337 trillion after increasing 6.3 percent in 1982. —Income from wages and salaries increased 6.1 percent, compared to a 5 percent jump in 1982.

—Personal consumption spending, which includes just about everything except interest on installment credit, rose 8.4 percent to a 1983 total of $2.157 trillion. It had increased 7.3 percent in 1982.

—Consumer price inflation, according to a measure that reflects changing buying patterns as well as prices, rose 4 percent, compared to 5.8 percent in 1982.

In December, the report said, total income reached an annual rate of $2.857 trillion while spending rose to a rate of $2.258 trillion. Disposable, or after-tax, income rose 0.8 percent over November to an annual rate of $2.443 trillion.

New personal savings fell 7 percent to an annual rate of $117.5 billion in December. The national saving rate fell to 4.8 percent from 5.2 percent.

December's income breaks down to $10,384 for every man, woman and child in the United States, based on a population estimate of 235.3 million.

Pitt-Greenville C-of-C Reaccreditation Begun

A representative of the Southeast Region Chamber of Commerce visiting the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce says the chamber is "one of the leading chambers in the U.S."

Harry Cowan, regional manager for the Southeast Chamber, told PGCC officials today that "of chambers the same size as yours throughout the nation, you rank 20 percent above all other chambers in every facet."

Cowan is conducting the final phase of a reaccreditation overview of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber. The manager today interviewed representatives of various communities and interests in Greenville and questioned them on the chamber.

The PGCC was first accredited in November of 1978 and the organization must be reaccredited every five years. Of the 3,500 chambers of commerce in the United States, 496 are accredited and 126 of these are in the Southeast region.

The evaluation program assesses the PGCC against standards prepared by the United States Chamber of Commerce. According to local chamber officials, after the reaccreditation overview is complete, Cowan will recommend to the board whether or not to reaccredit the organization.

Serving on the PGCC Reaccreditation Committee were Chris McCoy, chairman, along with Trish Byrum, Griff Garner, Tim Rosche, Janice Buck, Craig Smith and Don McGlohon.

Re-Election Bid By Elvira Allred

Pitt County Register of Deeds Elvira Tyson Allred announced today that she will seek re-election to the post she has held since 1962.

The announcement came after Mrs. Allred filed with the Board of Elections for inclusion on the May 8 primary election ballot. Mrs. Allred was appointed register of deeds by the Board of County Commissioners in February 1962 to fill an unexpired term, then was elected for four year terms in 1964, 1968, 1972, 1976 and 1980.

Prior to her appointment, Mrs. Allred had been employed in the register of deeds office since March 1952.

A Farmville native, Mrs. Allred attended Farmville High School and Campbell College. She is a member of the First Baptist Church in Farmville and is a past president of the North Carolina Association of Registers of Deeds.

Mrs. Allred's husband, Harold Allred, is a Farmville businessman.

"With the fine work of an excellent staff, plus the modern improvements I have added in the past several years," Mrs. Allred said, "I know the services provided to the citizens of Pitt County in the register of deeds office rank among the best in the state."

"I respectfully ask the voters of the county to afford me the opportunity to continue to strive to maintain this standard."

STUDY PARTICIPANTS ASKED

Dr. Richard H. Merrill, associate professor in the East Carolina University School of Medicine, is seeking persons having hypertension — high blood pressure — to participate in a new study of the condition at the medical school. He said the condition can usually be controlled through a combination of drug therapy and modifications to diet and lifestyle. There will be no monetary cost to participants in the study. They will be asked to make periodic visits to the School of Medicine Outpatient Center. Merrill recommends that those considering taking part tell their personal physicians. Anyone interested is asked to call Dr. Merrill's office, 757-2545, to obtain further information or to set up an appointment for initial screening.

Dear Abby

'Doctored' Words Filled Her Invitation

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1984 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I have a question about wedding invitations. My husband is a physician, as are our daughter and her fiancé.

Should we mention all the doctors? (I would think so.) Do we use our daughter's last name, or do we use her first name only, preceded by "Doctor"? Or does she have to forego her title? (My husband doesn't think it's fair to use the man's title and not the woman's. I agree.)

If we were to use the following, would it look like a medical convention?

Dr. and Mrs. Charles Cutwell request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter Dr. Elizabeth Jane Cutwell and
Dr. Paul Eric Pillpusher
MOTHER OF THE BRIDE

DEAR MOTHER: All the doctors are entitled to use their titles. And I think they should. However, the decision should be left to your daughter.

DEAR ABBY: I'm another longtime reader who never thought I'd see the day when I'd be writing a Dear Abby letter, but here I am because I am in desperate need of your advice.

I'll try to make this short: I have met and fallen in love with a man who has every quality I've ever wanted in a man. I am 35 and he is 42, so we both have been around a while.

The problem is, he doesn't know how to kiss. How can I tell him without hurting his feelings? We have so much in common and I know we could have a wonderful relationship. We are both attractive, sensitive and affectionate, but when he kisses me, so help me, it's like kissing a board!

Please answer soon. He is a terrific man in every other way, and if he knew how to kiss, he'd be perfect.
KISSING A BOARD

DEAR KISSING: Don't worry about hurting his feelings. He will forgive you after he becomes an expert. He is obviously keeping his lips stiff, so tell him to relax and kiss you softly, gently and tenderly. Better yet, reverse roles and give him a demonstration.

Nobody is a great kisser naturally—everyone had to learn from someone. So teach him!

DEAR ABBY: Last year my daughter was married. She is not a religious person and neither is he. Her background is Christian and his is Jewish. They wanted some kind of church wedding, but our minister refused to marry them, and her fiancé couldn't find a rabbi who would marry them. I know this sounds terrible, but it's true.

I agonized over it until a friend suggested the Unitarian Church. I called the local pastor, and he was delighted to perform the ceremony. He became ill at the last minute, so a young woman substituted in his place. She performed an absolutely beautiful ceremony. It was enchanting! She combined the Jewish tradition (the groom stomped on the glass) and she brought in some of the Christian traditions, too.

Many guests said it was the most beautiful wedding they had ever attended. This idea may be helpful to others.

RANCHO PALOS VERDES

DEAR RANCHO: I'm sure it will be. Thanks for sharing.

Well-Informed Mother Called First Step In Curbing Defects

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Health Editor

"Babies need not be born sick," says Dr. Mary J. Hughes, who is crusading on behalf of 250,000 infants born sick and deformed annually in the United States.

"No new drugs or therapies are needed to bring Dr. Hughes' dream — well babies for all — to realization, she said.

"We're not talking about research down the road but about things we know that need to be applied to save babies."

A well-informed, well-motivated mother is the first step in Dr. Hughes' campaign. That starts with every baby being planned, she said. She does not believe in "babies by chance."

Dr. Hughes is vice president and director of public health education for the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation, a voluntary health agency whose cause last year was supported by more than $80 million in contributions.

"Having a baby is not a pathological thing," Dr. Hughes said. "It is a physiological event meant to come out well and not sick."

"If we could encourage women to better take care of their own health and that of their unborn babies we would significantly reduce the number of sick babies born in our country."

"We're not talking about research findings to come but about what is possible right here and now from what we know."

The health educator said said fewer sick babies would be born if mothers-to-be would also:

—Get into care the minute they know they are pregnant.

—Stop over-the-counter drugs, smoking and drinking.

—Join an exercise program.

—Sign-up for childbirth education classes.

Dr. Hughes said women who need assistance following the advice should contact the local March of Dimes for information about the location of childbirth and exercise programs in their communities.

"It's a trend, a trend supported by the Foundation, that hospitals now are expanding exercise and childbirth classes along with prenatal clinics," she said.

The goal of "well baby" at birth has come a long way in the past decade, Dr. Hughes said.

"When you think of the expansion of medical science relative to the unborn baby, it is fantastic. We can look at the baby in the womb. We can perform surgery on babies in the womb. It blows your mind."

Some causes of birth defects, cited by Dr. Hughes and the Foundation:

—A child may be born with defects because of a virus infection of the mother during pregnancy. Rubella is an example and immunization is the way to prevent such defects.

—Birth defects may be caused by a mother's exposure during pregnancy to excessive amounts of lead, alcohol or drugs. Smoking is a known hazard.

—Defects may be due to a disease of the mother-to-be. Diabetic mothers-to-be require special monitoring throughout pregnancy to help assure the birth of a well child.

—A baby may inherit abnormal genes or chromosomes from either parent and be born with heart, brain, kidney, blood or metabolic abnormalities. Genetic services now are available at more than 100 centers in the United States. Established in most cases with start-up support from the March of Dimes. The services include a wide range of specialized diagnostic procedures, as well as the expertise to translate findings into a basis for informed decisions by prospective parents and individuals at risk for birth defects. —Low birthweight has been identified as a major factor in the incidence of birth defects. Babies born with a low birthweight have an increased rate of abnormalities. A low birthweight baby weighs in at 4 pounds 7 ounces or less. Women who adopt proper nutrition during pregnancy help their unborn babies to normal birthweights.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

My mother never really grasped the philosophy behind television. She has always considered herself the fantasy and what is on the screen the reality.

In her heart she knows that Robert Young is a retired physician who decided to prescribe to the world his brand of coffee. He doesn't get a dime for it. He just sincerely wants us not to be jittery and to sleep at nights.

To watch an evening of television with her is like attending a tea party with Alice in Wonderland.

The other night I switched the channel to Bob Newhart and she said, "You can watch him if you want to, but I've never been able to look him in the eye since he left his first wife."

"What are you talking about? Bob Newhart has had only one wife."

"You have a short memory if you can't remember that pretty little dark-haired girl, Emily, who was a schoolteacher."

"Mom! That's a part he was playing."

"Next thing you'll tell me is that James Brodin didn't give up a great medical practice to go off and manage a hotel somewhere. What a waste. I'll bet his parents broke their buns to get him through medical school.

"It is nice to see Kate Jackson married, though. Those other two Angels would have gotten her into trouble. No doubt about it."

I couldn't believe she had become so involved in their lives.

"The one I'm really worried about is Shirley's girl."

"Shirley," I said flatly. "Shirley Jones Partridge. Her little girl, Susan Dey, remember her, is doing all kinds of things on Emerald Point. I don't know what happens to kids. She came from a nice family too."

As the evening progressed, I realized she would always be convinced that Judd Hirsch lost his job driving a taxi and was selling yogurt, James Garner Rockford lost his license as a private investigator and was selling cameras, and all eight kids from "Eight Is Enough" were sailing around on the Love Boat trying to find out who they are.

"What ever happened to that nice-looking man on Twenty Mule Team years ago?"

"He is in Washington and is president of the United States, Mom."

"Should have stayed where he was. It was steady work," she said.

CAULIFLOWER SHREDS
This unusual way of treating cauliflower is repeated by request.

1 small head cauliflower (2 1/4 pound minus leaves)
1/4 cup butter, cut in 4 pats
1/4 cup water
1/4 teaspoon salt

Cut apart cauliflower so florets are attached to stems; rinse in cold water. In a food processor shred cauliflower coarsely (florets will be rice-grain size, stems short shreds); there should be 2 1/2 loosely packed cups. In a covered 10-inch skillet simmer together cauliflower, butter and water, stirring several times, until cauliflower is tender and liquid has evaporated — about 12 minutes. Stir in salt. Sprinkle with paprika, if you like. Serve hot. Makes 4 servings.

SNACKTIME FARE
Cheese Toast & Coffee
CHEESE TOAST

If you prepare the cheese spread ahead and store it in the refrigerator, you can make these snacks quickly.

Grate 4 ounces of sharp cheddar cheese medium fine — there should be 1 slightly packed cup. In a small bowl, with a spoon, mix together the cheese, 2 tablespoons finely chopped pimiento-stuffed green olives, 1 tablespoon mayonnaise and 2 tablespoons ketchup. (Makes about 3/4 cup.) Spread on lightly toasted slices of bread, using 2 level measuring tablespoons for each slice, and making sure to cover the edges of the toast. Place on foil and broil to melt cheese and brown lightly. Cut each slice into 2 triangles and serve at once.

Idea With Merit

A university-public school teacher exchange program has been established at East Carolina University to implement a General Assembly joint resolution which called for improving the quality of teaching in the public schools.

The ECU plan allows faculty members to go into the public schools voluntarily on an exchange basis. Public schools teachers and administrators will be placed on the campus in the exchange. Faculty members in mathematics, science, English, history, library science and other arts and sciences departments will participate. Also participating will be faculty from the schools of education, music, art, business, home economics and technology.

Greenville school Superintendent Delma Blinson said he felt the program will be a success. He said he expected there will be more teachers volunteering for the program than there will be spaces available.

The program certainly seems sound. East Carolina's mission has always been heavily involved in the training of teachers and education administrators. The university has been deeply committed to improving the quality of education in North Carolina. Without doubt those who teach the future teachers will benefit from a stint in the public schools, and some time spent on campus by public school teachers will obviously be a positive experience.

Plans have been laid for the exchange program. Now comes the practical side of making it work.

Sense Of Loss

Pitt Community College, in the last two decades, has grown from a small, freshly hewn spot alongside N.C. 11 into a rapidly growing, mature institution of learning. Much of the credit for that progress should go to Dr. William E. Fulford Jr., the former Edgecombe County agricultural teacher who headed PCC from 1962 until his death Tuesday.

Comments by two of PCC's officials following Fulford's death characterize the community feeling about his leadership:

"We ... feel a great sense of loss. He has served the people of this county and the students of this college inspirationally and well." — Dr. Ed Bright, PCC dean of instruction.

"Doctor Fulford's leadership will be missed, but the organization which his foresight and leadership began will carry on." — Clifton Everett Sr., chairman, PCC Board of Trustees.

We can only echo those thoughts, and add a "thank you."

Study In Contrasts

NEW YORK (AP) — Twenty years ago President Lyndon Johnson declared a "war on poverty" and proposed a budget that would offset defense spending cuts with higher expenditures for health, education and manpower training.

Today, President Reagan is often represented by political foes as something of the opposite, as a man, that is, who is willing to sacrifice social good for military might, and who has forsaken the poor.

Twenty years ago, Johnson was looked upon as a man who would fine-tune the economy and put it in the service of society, with the costs moreover to be paid by a healthier, more vigorous, more-just economy that surely would result.

Today, Reagan is often portrayed as preferring an economy undeterred by social considerations, one free to expand without government interference so as to achieve its fullest potential, with rewards filtering through society.

Such broad-brush representations are unlikely to capture the fine lines and nuances of either man's programs, but for the practical purposes of politics the contrast is becoming an element in presidential election-year maneuvering.

In recent weeks, for example, most Democratic candidates have espoused some form of industrial policy that would direct economic activity to preset social and economic goals — directly opposite to Reagan's hands-off attitude.

Former Vice President Walter Mondale of Minnesota seeks "cooperation to restructure and revitalize ailing industries." And Sen. John Glenn of Ohio seeks to "put this country's best minds to work in developing a sound industrial policy for America."

Meanwhile, The Heritage Foundation, a conservative think tank, and the Institute For Socioeconomic Studies, have issued attacks on industrial policy, which some scholars tend to view as just more government intervention.

The latter's Journal, a quarterly, also carries in its latest issue a criticism of accusations that Reagan has dismantled the country's social welfare program, written by Kevin Hopkins, White House director of policy information.

"Hyperbole — indeed outright nonsense," says Hopkins. So much so, he adds, that it "makes it difficult to carry on any kind of rational debate on the distribution of welfare assistance."

Hopkins claims that food stamps went to more people in 1982 than in 1981, that more households received free or reduced price school lunches in 1982 than in 1981, and that the number of needy who received aid actually rose.

Hopkins argues that the Reagan administration's critics have a "dole mentality" in that their criterion of welfare policy is based on the number of recipients rather than on the real needs of society.

Whatever specifies the arguments take, there seems to be in them an echo of the 1960s, which some Democrats consider the finest decade for their economic policies since the days of President Franklin Roosevelt.

To Republicans, however, the issues are old and discredited. The current decade, they are inclined to argue, is the finest yet for proving the value of conservative economic theories.

WASHINGTON — The newly reconstituted U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is about to pursue a radical idea that may impress you as positively astounding. Are you ready? Hold on. This is the idea: White persons have civil rights too.

Now there is a piece of rich, ripe heresy for you. The idea is breathtaking. It boggles the mind. No such unthinkable thought has been voiced in the federal establishment for nigh on to 30 years. Since the Supreme Court decided Brown vs. Board of Education in May of 1954, the whole trend of law and social policy has been to this effect — that civil rights, by which we mean a bundle of rights not to be discriminated against by reason of race or sex or national origin, are exclusively the property of minorities.

Linda Chavez, the commission's new staff director, took a different view in an interview the other day. Listen to what she said. You would not believe such common sense could be spoken in Washington. "I think we should be against discrimination against anyone of any color," she said, "and we should be against special preference for anyone of any color." She believes the Civil Rights Commission should pursue a goal of a colorblind nation.

Toward that end, Ms. Chavez recommends a few changes. The liberal members who have dominated the commission for many years had set up several studies that were cocked and loaded in advance. One purpose of these studies was to demonstrate the terrible character and general beastliness of Ronald Reagan. Another purpose was to advance the notion that minority students have a civil right to higher education at public expense. Still another unbiased and objective study was intended to show that in today's work force, women are paid, on the average, less than men. Yet another study was designed to show that in Alabama, blacks have poorer housing than whites.

Ms. Chavez has the votes to cancel these partisan, pointless and duplicative studies. Instead she proposes an investigation that no one yet has undertaken seriously. She wants to explore the effect on white persons of such procrustean devices as racial quotas and affirmative action.

Some fragmentary evidence is available here and there. Court records tell us of qualified white students who have been denied admission to professional schools so that less qualified blacks could be taken. The Supreme Court has turned down the plea of white contractors who have been barred from bidding on "set-aside" federal jobs. Records at the high court also tell us something of senior white police and firemen who have been fired so that junior minorities could be retained.

But the broad consequences of "affirmative action" have yet to be systematically looked at. By contrast, the evils of willful and deliberate discrimination have been studied to the point that we have bibliographical studies of the studies. In all of this an essential point has been lost: Affirmative action programs may be well-intended, but they are manifestations of racism, pure, undefiled and contemptible. The object of affirmative action is to give special advantage to workers, or to students or contractors or voters, for one reason only — race. Such programs no longer can be defended in the name of redressing wrongs that were imposed by state laws upon blacks 30 or 50 or 200 years ago. A whole generation has grown up that has not known legal segregation. When do we begin treating individuals as individuals, regardless of race?

Ms. Chavez evidently feels that time has come. She proposes to give new direction to an agency that has spent 20 years in the advocacy of bogus ideas — the idea, for example, that discrimination against blacks is bad but discrimination against whites is good, and the idea that it is peachy-keen to bus little children long distances solely because of the color of their skins.

A couple of months ago, when the hullabaloo developed over Reagan's effort to put his own people on the Civil Rights Commission (and why not, for heaven's sake?), I was ready to see this outfit abolished. Ms. Chavez gives us hope that something useful may come of it yet.

Labor Says 'No' To Bentsen

WASHINGTON — AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland is putting out the word that Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a moderate from all-important Texas who is first choice for vice president inside Walter F. Mondale's campaign, is simply not acceptable to organized labor on the national Democratic ticket.

Bentsen's rating by COPE, the AFL-CIO's political arms, has been mediocre: ranging between 26 percent and 48 percent favorable since 1978. But what really makes him unacceptable to labor was his "wrong" 1978 vote on the AFL-CIO's labor reform bill. On Oct. 6, 1978, Bentsen voted against applying cloture to end the filibuster that defeated the labor bill.

Organized labor's humiliating defeat on that bill led to Kirkland's stepped-up political activity and his high-stakes gamble endorsing Mondale for president. Thus, disagreement over Bentsen could open rift of major dimension between labor and the Democratic front-runner.

A Dec. 28 letter from National Chairman Charles T. Manatt suggests the Democratic Party will accept an out-and-out quota system for national convention delegates to prevent any black revolt led by the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

"I am reaffirming my personal commitment and that of the Democratic National Committee (DNC) leadership to total performance of our affirmative action goals," Manatt wrote to Jackson and his ally, Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Ind.

That was Manatt's answer to Jackson's query of what the chairman would do at the Jan. 20 DNC meeting to ensure that state Democratic parties meet "represenational goals."

Those "goals" would include a proportion of delegates for racial minorities equal to their share of the party — well over 25 percent for blacks. To Democratic leaders, that is not too large a price to pay to prevent a Jackson-led rebellion, even though it would have a predictably damaging impact on the millions of voters who oppose quotas as a matter of principle.

Michael K. Deaver, the powerful White House deputy chief of staff, is trying to block Peter Dailey, who ran Ronald Reagan's media campaign in 1980, from a repeat performance in 1984. Insiders trace this to old rivalry between two California public relations firms: one headed by Dailey, the other by Deaver.

No final decision has come out of the Oval Office. Deaver, backed by USIA Director Charles Z. Wick, appeared to have convinced the president late last month that Dailey's control over production and time-buying should be split among at least two other firms.

But Dailey counterattacked after Christmas. Having resigned his post as ambassador to Ireland to take over what he assumed would be 1984 Reagan media chores, he refused to walk off the set quietly despite Deaver's power.

Henry A. Kissinger was furious at his old State Department colleagues when he learned that Deputy Secretary Kenneth Dam was responsible for the White House putdown of his Central America Commission's report on Jan. 9, two days before it was made public.

"Guidance" from Dam was the basis for White House spokesman Larry Speakes's statement to newsmen that President Reagan was "inclined" to ignore the commission's recommendation that aid to El Salvador be linked to human rights progress. Kissinger stormed that four hard months of work would go down the drain if this were the president's public attitude.

Kissinger Commission staffers promptly collared national security adviser Robert C. McFarlane, who reprogrammed Speakes to reverse himself. Furthermore, when the commission report was formally unveiled, Reagan's comments were suitably friendly.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger called on his experience as federal budget director a decade ago to belittle the present budget chief, David Stockman, at a closed-door debate over tax-budget policy in the White House Roosevelt Room Jan. 9.

At a working lunch attended by President Reagan, Stockman and economic adviser Martin Feldstein made an impassioned pitch for tax increases. But Weinberger recalled that future-year revenue estimates handed him in Nixon administration days were invariably off the mark, and he added Stockman's were no better now. Hence, Cap's advice: Neither raise taxes nor cut defense spending.

Furthermore, Peter, the craven coward, had become a proven coward, had become a craven of such spiritual stature that he was performing miracles, healing the sick and the afflicted. For all his wavering, his denial, his flight, he had never ceased to love Jesus.

Today, as in those ancient days, faith in Christ gives us courage, fills us with boldness and makes us resolute as we confront opposition.

Gergen Held Spotlight Position

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Gergen-led coup topples president," the banner headline screamed. It topped a fanciful edition of a Washington newspaper, taking aim at the handiwork of David R. Gergen, who resigned from the White House last week after three years as President Reagan's assistant for communications.

The job, and Gergen's own proclivities, often put him directly between the president and the reporters covering the White House. For him, that was where the White House action was, as he tried to promote the ideas behind the president's programs.

The fake newspapers were distributed at a party for the departing White House aide, a veteran of the Reagan, Ford and Nixon administrations.

Gergen was the guy who was always ready with an explanation of the president's plans. To repeat a phrase he often used to describe his efforts, he wanted to put "the White House spin" on news stories to make sure they portrayed Reagan in the most favorable light.

For one of the first times in his current White House career, Gergen met a deadline ahead of time: his resignation letter to the president was dated Jan. 12, one day before his departure. The text was one of the longest such documents submitted.

In a full, typewritten, single-spaced, legal-size page, he produced a partisan history of the Reagan presidency that would serve nicely as a summary of a campaign speech. And it may be the first resignation letter that points out, in a section on Reagan's mastery of the news media, that the president understood "the power of radio."

In Gergen's view, Reagan arrived at the White House "when both the country and the presidency were in decline." Now, he said, as a result of Reagan's tenure in the job, "we have hope the decade of the '80s can begin in a new era of resurgence for the country and the presidency."

Gergen, who is spending the rest of the winter and spring at Harvard University, devoted long hours to Reagan, working deep into the evening and often on weekends — talking to reporters, talking to other White House staff members, talking with the president, thinking about that "spin" and how a Reagan story would play in print or on the news broadcasts.

It was Gergen who, with White House spokesman Larry Speakes and a few other staff members, would play the role of questioning reporter when Reagan went through news conference dress rehearsals. He would pepper Reagan with policy questions, and then, with others on the staff, review the answers, working on them with Reagan until they had just the ideas they thought the president should express.

Jesse Helms Files, Kicks Off Campaign For His Third Term

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, leader of the Republican Party's most conservative wing, launched a bid for his third term with a blast at his likely opponent — a moderate Democrat influential in national party affairs.

Helms, who filed for office Wednesday, challenged Gov. Jim Hunt to a debate and accused the Democrat of straddling the fence on key issues. Hunt has said he'll debate only after North Carolina's primary election in May.

"All I get is remote-control responses from one or more of that battery of press agents he has," Helms said. "I don't know where he (Hunt) stands on anything. I think he stands pretty much where the popular opinion is."

The campaign between

Helms and Hunt, which promises to be the most expensive statewide race in the nation this year, has been under way for months although neither officially had declared his candidacy. Hunt has said he will file Feb. 6 after two days of pre-announcement festivities.

Hunt, whose second term as governor ends this year, headed the commission that wrote the Democratic Party rules for the 1984 presidential campaign. Several polls have shown him ahead of Helms, but Helms said Wednesday that "Gov. Hunt's going to be surprised" as the campaign progresses.

"All I hope is that the people of North Carolina understand the issues and understand where both candidates — or however many candidates there are — where they stand," Helms said.

"If my positions on all the issues are understood by the people and they don't want me for the U.S. Senate, that would suit me fine," he said. "I'm not going to sell my soul to get elected."

Helms, 62, in 1972 became the first Republican senator elected from North Carolina this century. He won the 1978 race with the help of his National Congressional Club — one of the nation's largest political action committees.

Analysts predict that this year's campaign will generate expenditures of $20 million — $14 million by Helms alone.

Helms said he had no idea of how much money he will spend.

"All I can say is, we'll spend however much we can legitimately raise, and we'll spend it in legitimate ways," he said.

Since his last election in 1978, Helms has drawn the support of the Moral Majority and the ire of the National Organization for Women, which declared him "Public Enemy No. 1."

Helms has opposed abortion and busing to achieve desegregation while backing prayer in schools. He alienated blacks last session by opposing a national holiday honoring the Rev. Martin Luther Jr.

But Helms' announcement included some conciliatory comments for blacks.

"The leadership of the blacks have written off the black in terms of participating in the two-party system," he said. "Nobody has a greater stake in the survival and prosperity of our free enterprise system than our black citizens. With Democrats in Washington, all they get are handouts."

Helms' political advertisements have accused Hunt of supporting unions and catering to liberals.

Federal Funds Open To On-The-Job Training

The development of the Job Training Partnership Act of 1982 has been announced by Jim Hannan, manager of the Greenville Employment Security Office. The program utilizes federal funds which are available to employers for partial reimbursement for cost of on-the-job training.

Any employer from a business with a North Carolina license or from a non-profit or public agency can be considered for a training contract.

Individuals eligible for the JTPA program must be economically disadvantaged persons who are either unskilled, unemployed, or underemployed. These individuals must also belong to one of the following target groups — displaced homemakers, handicapped persons, heads of households, high school dropouts, minorities, public assistance recipients, single parents, veterans, or women.

Employers who negotiate a contract with ESC for JTPA can receive up to 50 percent reimbursement of the hourly starting wage during the determined training time. The employer receives monthly payment for the extraordinary costs of training individuals who are unskilled. All participants in JTPA are also screened for targeted jobs tax credit which allows employers a tax credit after the period of reimbursed training ceases.

On-the-job training has proven to be the most effective way to insure that training programs meet the needs of business.

The local Employment Security Commission is currently seeking to make employers aware of this opportunity. Employment Security Commission local office personnel are actively recruiting JTPA contracts by means of telephone contacts, employer visits, and promotional letters. All interested employers are urged to contact the local office at 3101 Bismarck Street, telephone 756-2686.

General's Death Is Declared A Suicide

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A two-star Army Reserve general who was found hanged at Fort Sam Houston had committed suicide, the medical examiner ruled today.

Maj. Gen. Robert G. Ownby, 48, was found bound and hanged from a second-story stairwell Jan. 11. A typewritten note pinned to his sweater said he had been "sentenced and executed" for "crimes by the U.S. Army against the people of the world."

A handwritten note found on Ownby's desk said he apparently had started some intruders and was going to investigate. The notes initially led some to believe terrorism or murder was involved.

But Bexar County Medical Examiner Vincent DiMaio ruled today it was a suicide. Ownby's hands had been tied tightly behind his back with a military web belt, and a rope noose was looped around his neck. But there were no signs of violence at the scene and his body bore no marks or bruises, DiMaio said earlier.

Two generals have since been provided with bulletproof vests at Fort Sam Houston, but a base spokesman called the protective gear a "precautionary measure" and said it was not related to Ownby's death.

Painting Bids Said Too Low

NEW YORK (AP) — The owners of two Venetian scenes painted by British artist J.W.M. Turner, who rejected auction bids totaling $2.6 million as too low, now might work out a private sale, a spokeswoman for the auction house said.

Lili Friend of Christie's said the paintings were unsold Wednesday because the bids "were less than the minimum agreed upon in advance" by the sellers and the auction house. She said that minimum was "confidential — even I don't know it."

the chilled relations between the superpowers. On the most vexing issue, the breakdown in nuclear arms control talks, Shultz said, "We made no headway on that subject."

The Soviets suspended the discussions in Geneva in late November to protest NATO's deployment of new U.S.-built Pershing 2 missiles in West Germany and cruise rockets in Britain.

Last month, parallel talks in the Swiss city to cut back longer-range rockets also stalled.

Asked whether the Soviets had agreed to end the stalemate, Shultz replied flatly: "No."

The unidentified NATO sources later said the Soviets might consider merging the two sets of talks, although they had not decided to restart negotiations.

The United States has been basically opposed to merger of the talks, because of the complications involved in dealing with long and intermediate range missiles in one negotiation.

Shultz was evasive about the talks in Vienna, Austria, on reducing NATO and Warsaw pact troops and armor. Those discussions ended before Christmas.

"We discussed a wide range of arms control issues but the thrust of the discussion varied from one to the other," Shultz said.

Swedish and other diplomatic sources in Stockholm reported they had been advised by Gromyko that the Soviets want to resume the 10-year-old parley on conventional forces as soon as possible but that no date had been fixed.

"It was a straightforward, businesslike atmosphere," Shultz said of his talk with Gromyko — their first since September, when they had a heated disagreement in Madrid, Spain, over the Soviets' downing of South Korean jetliner with 269 people aboard.

This time the two men discussed issues of arms, the Middle East, Central America and Africa, but did not schedule another session.

Shultz said he and Gromyko would meet in New York in the fall if both attend the U.N. General Assembly session. Last fall, to protest the shooting down of the jetliner, the governors of New York and New Jersey barred Gromyko's Soviet plane from landing at New York area airports. Gromyko then stayed away from the meeting.

Of Wednesday's meeting, "Gromyko said it was a necessary session," according to Shultz. "We each expressed our views very frankly."

Asked if he was able to settle anything with Gromyko, Shultz said, "It wasn't that kind of meeting." He added that there were "no formal agreements."

In their meeting, Shultz and Gromyko shook hands, toned down the hostile U.S.-Soviet rhetoric of recent days and conferred at length about arms control and other sensitive issues, U.S. officials said.

Peat Safety Questioned

RALEIGH (AP) — Serious questions about the health impact of mining and processing peat remain for North Carolina, a state health official has told a legislative study committee.

"One of our concerns centers around the metals content of peat deposits, their concentration, their potential for release during the mining and processing ... and their entry into the food chain," said Dr. Charles G. Smith, an environmental epidemiologist with the state Division of Health Services.

Smith quoted a U.S. Department of Energy senior scientist as saying that methanol production from materials such as peat posed "a substantial health and safety risk," and the effects were not all known.

"Our division feels these potential health and safety risks need to be further explored," Smith said in a prepared statement.

Smith presented his views Wednesday at the first meeting of Legislative Study Committee on Peat Mining and Land Clearing. The 1983 General Assembly charged the committee to assess the environmental, economic and social impacts of peat mining and land development activities.

The committee's discussion Wednesday focused on a controversial proposal by Peat Methanol Associates, which wants to mine peat from 15,000 acres in three northeast counties and convert it to an alcohol fuel at a $540 million synthetic fuel plant to be built in Washington County.

Peat Methanol Associates must obtain nine permits from the state Division of Environmental Management before it can begin operation.

The legislative study committee, which includes 10 legislators and one member of the public, plans to hold public hearings next month in Plymouth, which is near the PMA site.

tainted, or at least a touch too thin. You can see right through it.

"You might say we're getting maximum exposure," joked city engineer Bob Bedell.

Bedell said it became clear that the $77,500 worth of glass was too transparent only after it was installed.

Now the contractors will have to come back and put film on the windows to secure privacy.

"We're trying to figure out if we should sell tickets and make this thing a revenue producer," quipped one City Hall budget analyst.

'Full Exposure'

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA. (AP) — Florida has a Sunshine Law requiring that government activities be conducted in full public view, but employees at City Hall here think transparent windows in the bathrooms is taking full exposure a little too far.

Workers recently installed 127 new tinted windows in the basement bathrooms at City Hall. But the tint was

For Dorothy

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Dorothy Dandridge, one of the most prominent black actresses in motion picture history, has been honored posthumously with a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

Her star, the 1,774th to be dedicated, was placed between those previously dedicated to Harry Belafonte and Barton MacLane. Mrs. Belafonte and Sidney Poitier accepted the award for Ms. Dandridge during ceremonies Wednesday sponsored by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce.

Ms. Dandridge, who died in 1965, received an Academy Award nomination in 1954 for best actress in "Carmen Jones." Her last major American film was "Porgy and Bess" in 1959.

Her other film credits included "Lady from Louisiana," "Bahama Passage," "Drums of the Congo," "Ebony Parade" and "The Hit Parade of 1943."

Champagne For Winning Poem

NEW YORK (AP) — Mrs. Nancy G. Gates of Greensboro has won a bottle of imported French champagne for contributing a poem on successful marriages to Ladies' Home Journal.

The poem, which received an honorable mention, is:

"Happy marriages don't seek goals
Of endless moments filled with bliss.
They're made instead by imperfect souls
Who end their argument with a kiss."

Some Flu In The Schools

There has been no excess absenteeism in the Pitt and Greenville schools, officials reporting, apparently indicating that the influenza that has affected other areas of the state isn't a widespread problem here at this time.

Kathy Riggs, administrative assistant to Greenville school Superintendent Delma Blinson, and Dr. Eddie West, superintendent of the Pitt County schools, both said that absences are no higher than is usual at this time of year and that flu has not seemed widely apparent among students of the two systems.

Tillie Cullipher, nursing director at the Pitt County Health Department, said she has heard of no large incidence of influenza, either.

Kay McLawhorn, a nurse at Pitt Children's Clinic in Greenville, said many of the clinic's patients have had gastrointestinal disorders with some flu-like symptoms, but she said the incidence is not unusually high for this time of year.

Dr. James Galloway of Pitt Family Physicians, P.A., said he does not believe that influenza is showing up among adults of the county. He has treated none this year, he said.

The City Control can designate certain areas of Greenville as controlled residential parking area. For more information, call 752-4137. Ask for Engineering.

Congress To Study Tax Amnesty Plan

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Impressed by the results of a one-time amnesty for state tax delinquents in Massachusetts, a congressional committee is launching a study of a similar program that some authorities say could net the federal treasury $20 billion a year.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said Wednesday that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, promised the investigation after the success of the Massachusetts program became clear.

However, the state plan did not sway the commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service from his doubts about granting amnesty to federal tax delinquents. Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. told Congress last year that such a plan should not be implemented. "We have not changed our position," IRS spokesman Ernie Acosta said Wednesday.

Harry Durning, spokesman for the Massachusetts Department of Revenue, said that about 30,000 people showed up at tax offices on Tuesday alone. On Friday, Durning had estimated 16,000 had come forward. They voluntarily paid more than $40 million in back taxes.

"I believe the federal government should give serious consideration to adopting a one-time-only tax amnesty program" similar to the Massachusetts plan, O'Neill said.

"I strongly favor the idea....," he added. "I believe it is clear from the impressive results of the tax amnesty in Massachusetts that there are probably millions of citizens across the nation who would take advantage of the opportunity to settle their accounts with the federal government, thereby increasing federal revenues and clearing their consciences at the same time."

The state promised that any taxpayer who voluntarily paid any back taxes plus interest would be immune from civil penalties and criminal prosecution. Payments ranged from two cents to more than $1 million.

The Senate Finance subcommittee on the IRS studied federal amnesty briefly last year but made no report on the issue. But at a one-day hearing, the National Taxpayers Union and Citizen's Choice, a Chamber of Commerce organization, called for amnesty while the American Bar Association urged a thorough study.

One of the most vocal supporters of the concept is Jack Warren Wade Jr., of Arlington, Va., a former IRS agent. He told the subcommittee that if amnesty attracted only 20 percent of those who failed to file a return or understated income, it would bring the government $100 billion over the next five years.

The National Taxpayers Union told the subcommittee, "A properly designed amnesty program would benefit the IRS by bringing in untold billions of dollars from the underground economy into the light. The non-filer problem (those who don't even file a return) could be significantly reduced."

Egger, the IRS chief, agreed that amnesty has great potential for bringing taxpayers into the system. But he questioned whether a temporary amnesty would not cost the tax system more in public support than it was worth in dollars.

"Honest taxpayers may perceive an amnesty as 'special treatment' for dishonest taxpayers, and therefore unfair, inequitable and contrary to IRS' policy of administering the tax laws uniformly," Egger told the Senate panel. "Moreover, instituting one amnesty might encourage the belief that the offer would be repeated in the future, leading to non-compliance in the interim."

Wade said his experience as a revenue officer with the IRS convinced him that many people fail to file a tax return one year because of poor records or complicated laws, and then don't ever get back into the system for fear that the first mistake will be caught and send them to jail.

"While some non-filers aren't concerned or worried about this problem, many others are truly very scared and worried, and would like to be in compliance, but they have no way to right their wrong without fear of severe punishment," Wade said.

"The prospect of criminal prosecution hangs like a veritable albatross during every filing season."

Unlike the Massachusetts program, the plan favored by Wade would excuse only criminal prosecution — not civil penalties that IRS may impose for tardiness or non-filing. Egger, too, said that any amnesty plan should assure forgiveness from criminal prosecution only.

Cutbacks Loom For Labor Dept.

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Some 230 Labor Department employees who ran the government's job training program in the 1970s are faced with layoffs due to a pending staff cut at the agency, sources say.

Another 220 positions in the Employment and Training Administration, which has the responsibility of supervising jobless benefit and training programs, will be eliminated through attrition by July 1, according to these sources.

The sources, who declined to be named publicly, said the sharp staff cutback at the Employment and Training Administration results from the transfer of responsibility for manpower programs from the federal to state governments.

The agency, which had a staff of more than 3,300 at the height of the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) program in 1978, already has been slashed to 2,200. When the new Job Training and Partnership Act is phased in fully by July 1, the sources said, the agency's staff will fall from its current level of 2,250 to about 1,800.

Sources said a general reduction-in-force notice will be sent to all 2,250 ETA employees here and in the field offices by Feb. 1, and that by late May, some 230 will be laid off and another 220 positions will be abolished through retirements and resignations.

One source said Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan, in an effort to cushion the impact of the layoffs, has circulated a memorandum to all agency heads imposing a freeze on outside hiring. The goal is to "keep the number of layoffs to a very low level," this source said.

Under the CETA program, the government spent more than $66 billion between 1973 and 1981, and the staff of the employment administration expanded as personnel were hired to administer and monitor the complex program, under which the federal government contracted with some 450 state and local governments to train the hard-core unemployed.

Under the replacement program, block grants totaling about $2.8 billion will be sent to the governors, who will administer training programs in cooperation with private industry councils dominated by business leaders.

Discount On Stored Leaf

RALEIGH (AP) — A growers' cooperative is trying to spur sales of flue-cured tobacco grown in 1982 but still in storage by offering a 10 percent discount until June 30.

Buyers may purchase up to 75 million pounds of the leaf at a cut rate the first half of this year, said Fred Bond, general manager of the Flue-Cured Cooperative Stabilization Corp.

"This is a special offer that we hope will generate special interest," said Bond. Prices for tobacco from 1976 to 1979 also have been cut 15 percent to 30 percent, he said.

Bond said it was premature to predict the success of the sale. As of Wednesday, the cooperative had sold 500,000 pounds of the 1982 crop and had total sales of almost 3 million pounds.

Hampered by a soft tobacco market worldwide, Stabilization has seen its inventory soar to 768.8 million pounds.

About 18 percent of the 1983 crop, 162 million pounds, went to Stabilization. That was better than the 1982 figure of 26 percent, Bond said.

The cooperative gets tobacco that fails to bring more than the federal price support level at auction. The cooperative pays growers the price supports for their tobacco, using loans from the Commodity Credit Corp., and repays the loans with interest after selling the leaf.

LIGHT SENTENCE

ROTTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — A Dutch court has sentenced a West German to a year in prison for illegally storing explosives. Prosecutors claimed ex-CIA agent Edwin C. Wilson planned to supply the material to terrorist organizations.

IMPROVING — Jimmy Tontlewicz, who survived 20 minutes submerged in icy Lake Michigan, remains in critical condition today but in speaking of his recovery, doctors say "things look awfully good". Doctors hoped to be able to remove the four-year-old from a respirator sometime today, and he is expected to regain consciousness in the near future. (AP Laserphoto)

U.S. Ambassador Has Earned Nicaraguan Approval

By ELOY O. AGUILAR
Associated Press Writer
MANAGUA, Nicaragua
(AP) — Except for an occasional cartoon in the pro-government media, U.S.

Ambassador Anthony Quainton has earned the respect of Nicaraguan supporters as well as critics of the revolutionary government. But he will be leaving his post this spring, sources here and in Washington say, after serving for two years as the pivotal link between the Reagan administration, which sends covert aid to Nicaraguan insurgents, and the leftist Sandinistas. Miguel Blandon, director of the government-run Radio Sandino, said Quainton is seen here as a "reasonable" man who avoided confrontation and "at times expressed he was in favor of a dialogue between Nicaragua and the United States."

"He has shown great interest in getting to know the Nicaraguan reality," said Maria Azucena Ferrey, vice president of the opposition Social Christian Party. "His opinions are adjusted to reality. He recognized some things that the revolution has done that were good. We recognized them too."

The boyish looking Quainton arrived in Managua in March 1982 just as the Sandinistas declared a state of emergency because of what they said was the threat of a U.S. invasion. That state of emergency is still in effect.

It was during Quainton's tour here that CIA support for Nicaraguan insurgents fighting the Sandinistas became known.

At high government levels, the ambassador kept a good relationship going although he continued to walk out of state functions or refuse to stand whenever the Sandinista anthem was played because it has a reference to the "Yankee, enemy of humanity."

The 50-year-old Quainton, a graduate of Princeton and Oxford universities, often can be seen wearing a tropical "guayabera" shirt. He appears to go about his business effortlessly, whether it is diplomacy, tennis or participation in a local theater group.

There have been recent reports out of Washington, later denied, that Quainton had angered State Department officials by making statements that could have been interpreted as praise for the leftist-led revolution.

The U.S. Embassy here had rebutted a report presented by President Reagan in Washington that charged Nicaraguan Jews were suffering from anti-Semitism among the Sandinistas.

Blandon, who has had Quainton as a guest on radio debates, said, "To say that he favors the revolution is sheer madness. The ambassador has maintained his position. There has been a confrontation of ideas, but the ambassador has defended his position."

William Baez, leader of the Nicaraguan Development Institute, a private business organization that is not aligned with the government, called Quainton "a right man for the right circumstances during the right time."

Opposition labor union leader Jose Espinoza praised Quainton's diplomatic tact by joking that he got along "with Moors and Christians."

Quainton was vilified in cartoons by the pro-government press which used his Roman Catholicism to portray him as the man who encouraged the local Roman Catholic Church to be more vocal in its criticism of the government.

It is normal for an ambassador to be reassigned after two years in a job with visibility and tension as high as it is in Nicaragua, but sources close to the U.S. Embassy here said Quainton could have stayed in Nicaragua longer if the Reagan administration wanted.

Some Nicaraguan officials said they believe Quainton will be reassigned to bring in an ambassador closer to Reagan's views.

A Western source, with access to top levels at the embassy and among the Sandinistas, said the United States and Nicaragua have reached a stage where negotiations could start "about specific bilateral issues" instead of general discussions about Nicaraguan relations.

Quainton, in the foreign service since 1959, has kept silent on reports that he will be reassigned. The Seattle native's first post as an ambassador was to the Central African Republic, and he was named director of the Office for Combating Terrorism in 1978 with the rank of an ambassador.

In Managua, Quainton has attended regularly diplomatic receptions and government functions. He kept the channels to private Nicaraguan groups open even at a time last year when the government tried to reduce those contacts by putting pressure on Nicaraguan citizens.

More than 1,000 people, including high-ranking government officials, showed up for the embassy's official reception last July 4. "He has kept his government well informed and he has relayed and defended his government's position," a non-American diplomat said.

Quainton will be leaving at a time when the Sandinistas have made gestures toward reconciliation with the Reagan administration and their domestic critics by offering amnesty for rebels, lightening press censorship, reducing the number of Cubans here and promising elections for February 1985.

A PIVOTAL LINK — U.S. Ambassador to Nicaragua Anthony Quainton has earned the respect of both Nicaraguan supporters as well as critics of the revolutionary government during his two-year term as ambassador. (AP Laserphoto)

Mexico's Opposition Parties Asking Better Media Access

By CAM ROSSIE
Associated Press Writer
MEXICO CITY (AP) — Opposition political parties, in a rare joint statement from the right and the left, contend that the government restricts their access to the news media. The government is "shutting off the voices of the opposition that in this moment, more than ever, need to be expressed," Gonzalo Altamirano Dimas, of the conservative National Action Party, said at a joint news conference.

Altamirano, whose party did better than any other minority party in Mexico during presidential elections last July, said the government is "confused" and believes the nation's media are for its own private use.

The government is controlled by the Institutional Revolutionary Party, which has governed Mexico for more than 50 years. Electoral reforms since 1976 have opened up the system to a degree, and seven opposition parties signed the joint protest statement.

Altamirano said the opposition's access to the media is being restricted during "a moment of crisis in which it is necessary to open avenues of expression....To close those avenues would be dangerous for the present (and) for the future of the country."

The joint statement charged that the opposition parties' attempts to produce radio and television programs have run into "diverse difficulties" in production and broadcast, including inadequate scheduling on private and state-run channels.

The statement acknowledged that there have been some advances in recent years allowing media access to the opposition, but said it appeared those advances are "retreating."

Speaking of Your Health...

Double Vision

My mother, who is 79, recently began to complain that she sometimes sees double. Because it comes and goes, we haven't done anything about it. Should we worry about it? — Mrs. M.Y., Utah
Dear Mrs. Y.:

I wonder how you would react to your own letter if you objectively scanned it. At least it would be terribly confusing.

You ask whether you should worry about it and I assume that you want me to assuage your anxiety. I can't because you obviously are not sufficiently worried to bring your mother's symptoms to the attention of an eye doctor. The fact that the symptoms come and go is certainly a lot more hopeful than if there were a sudden onset of continual double vision (or diplopia).

Nevertheless I still am concerned that by your neglect you may be overlooking a potential problem which, in the early phases, might be reversible.

There are many reasons for double vision. Some are simple and unimportant. Others can indeed be serious.

The nature of the double vision can be determined exactly with the aid of complex instruments.

Neurological examination coupled with specialized eye techniques are essential. Studies of the vascular system of the brain may sometimes be necessary. An imbalance of the muscles that move the eyeball is but one of the causes of diplopia. The possibility of a nerve disorder must be considered.

It is pointless to burden you with the other possibilities. It would serve to terrify you rather than to alleviate your anxiety. The pathway is clear and obvious. Your mother must have these examinations done in order to rule out any of the possibilities responsible for the progression of her present symptoms.

During the day my ankles become so swollen that I have to take my shoes off. Sometimes it is hard for me to get the shoes on again. But after a night's sleep the swelling disappears. I have been told that I don't have heart trouble but I worry. How long can this continue without causing serious trouble? — Mr. D.T.B., Nevada
Dear Mr. B.:

You did not mention how old you are. I therefore cannot immediately base my opinion on a vascular condition.

Although you have been assured that there is no important reason for your problem, there must be some concrete explanation for it.

In some instances the condition may be due to marked obesity, standing in one position at work, deep varicose veins and other vascular problems.

That you obviously are not in any imminent danger is evidenced by your doctor's reassurance. Nevertheless this discomforting symptom of edema (or swelling) of the legs should not be allowed to go undiagnosed or untreated.

Dr. Coleman welcomes questions from readers. Please write to him in care of this newspaper.

Some Say Coffin Business Hurting

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — People just aren't dying to do business with coffin makers the way they used to.

With an increase in Americans' life span and a sharp rise in cremations, some industry officials say the coffin business is suffering.

"You really can't sell two of them for one individual," says George Lemke, executive director of the Casket Manufacturers Association of America.

The result is a shrinking industry: the number of coffin makers, distributors and assemblers has dropped from 600 to 400 since 1967, Lemke said.

"There have been a number of bankruptcies and liquidations in the industry in the last 10 to 12 years," Lemke said. "There are people who closed their doors and gave up because of limited profitability and competition."

For those who survived, competition in the $620 million-a-year industry has become fierce, Lemke said.

"I think what you're talking about is a mature industry that has become increasingly competitive," said Lemke, whose Evanston-based association represents 200 companies and suppliers nationwide. "You're confronted with a stable to declining market and that creates a shakeup."

Competition is much like any other business — with the exception of price wars, coffin makers say. The best way to be No. 1 is to give the customer a reasonable price, good service and high quality.

In these times when quick delivery sells, the emphasis is on service, said Dennis Fish, sales manager for Brenner Casket Co. in Chicago.

"The customer (in an urban area) has come to expect one-day service," Fish said. "He orders a casket, he wants it the next day. That's a big part of this business."

Coffin makers can be innovative, too, offering different styles, such as a "princess model," a daintier model designed for women, said Patrick Forkin, of AMEDCO Inc., the nation's second-largest casket maker, which is enjoying a flourishing business.

Yet, even with different models and top-notch service, coffin makers are facing changing times. One major trend that's cast a pall on the industry is the rise in cremations, which are becoming cheaper and more acceptable.

Lemke said cremations have doubled in the last eight years to 12 percent of people who die, and nearly 75 percent of these are without caskets.

Cremated remains are commonly stored in urns, which can then be put in columbariums — a building or vault with niches for family space.

Last year, there were more than 230,000 cremations in the United States, said Jack Springer, director of The Cremation Association of North America.

The reasons: it's cheaper, families no longer live close together, and there has been a relaxing of attitudes in the Roman Catholic Church, which no longer discourages the practice.

Springer, whose society has 575 members, said a cremation may cost about $500 or $600 while a modest funeral — with burial plot, grave marker, casket and other necessities — could cost $2,000 to $3,000.

Cremations also have an impact on other areas of the "death industry," saving other costs, such as hiring a hearse.

Even richer people are opting for the urn or the cardboard box, Springer said. He said in posh Marin County, Calif., cremations have reached 40 percent.

But in the Bible Belt, fewer than 1 percent of residents are choosing cremation.

Springer also said cremations are more popular because "parents no longer live down the street," he said. "When someone passes away, it can be handled quickly."

And the practice is not about to fade away, Springer said.

"Buggy makers would have liked automakers to go away," he said. "It wasn't going to happen. It's the same for cremations ..."

Eventually, the coffin may well be a thing of the past."

Some disagree. With casket and full funeral, "there's a degree of reverence which you can't get in cremation," said Forkin, who said his Springfield, Ill., company does not consider cremation a threat and reports sales of $95 million a year.

The coffin-maker business also is losing business simply because people are living longer, in part, because of better health care.

"One of the situations, you've got it a ceiling on the market," Lemke explained. "There are only X number of deaths a year."

For example, he said, the mortality rate of 9.4 per thousand in 1973-74 has dropped to about 8.6 per thousand. Nearly two million Americans died last year.

Recent government statistics show that from 1970 to 1980, the average life span for a man increased from about 67 years to more than 70 years. For women, it was an increase from about 74 years to nearly 78 years.

Yet not everyone in the coffin industry sees a gloomy outlook because of longer lives.

"There's a point where people aren't going to live forever," Fish said. "It will level out eventually."

Dying Toddler Receives Liver

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A desperately ill toddler from Miami received a liver transplant today with an organ found after her mother went on network television to plead for a donor, doctors said.

The liver was implanted in 2-year-old Trine Engbreetsen, who flew to Pittsburgh with her parents in a snowstorm Wednesday and was admitted to Children's Hospital in serious condition, said hospital spokesman Dick Reibling.

A team of surgeons began the operation at about 2 a.m. and the donated liver was inserted at 8 a.m., said Reibling, adding that the complete procedure usually takes 12 to 14 hours.

"So far things are going well," the girl's mother, Mary Ann Engbreetsen, told reporters.

Her husband, Lars, 40, said Trine was "fully awake" when she was rolled into the operating room and had "a little smile on her lips."

The donor, a 21-month-old girl from Kentucky, died of a brain tumor Wednesday afternoon at Vanderbilt University Hospital in Nashville, Tenn., according to hospital spokesman Wayne Woods. The girl's name was not released.

Surgeons from Children's Hospital in Pittsburgh, who had flown to Nashville to be on hand during the liver-removal operation, rushed the organ back for the second half of the surgery.

Earlier Wednesday, Dr. Thomas Starzl, a pioneer in liver transplant surgery, had flown to Denver from Dallas after learning that a liver might be available for Trine from a 23-month-old child who authorities described as a victim of child abuse.

Removal of the brain-dead boy's liver, originally scheduled for Wednesday evening, was postponed when it was determined that the Kentucky child's blood type more closely matched Trine's.

Starzl was to stay in Denver for the removal of that liver, which will be implanted in another critically ill child.

The victim's identity and details of his case were not released.

Cold And Snow Chilling Nation

By RON SIRAK

Associated Press Writer

A second blast of snow from a double-barreled storm hit the Northeast today and the Siberian Express was back on track, sending temperatures tumbling as low as 40 degrees below zero in the frozen Rockies and northern Plains.

Records fell to subzero lows as far south as Texas, with the wind making it feel like 70 degrees below zero in places. Temperatures in the range of 20-to-30 degrees below zero were noted from upper Great Lakes to the Rockies.

Snow broke out again about midnight along the Eastern Seaboard from Maryland to Maine on the heels of a storm Wednesday that left about half a foot of snow in most places and melted at least two lives.

Schools in much of the region remained closed today, but public schools in New York City were among those that decided to hold classes.

The stinging cold in the West and upper Midwest, which was reminiscent of the so-called Siberian Express of January 1982, was not expected to loosen its hold until at least the weekend, said Nolan Duke of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo.

"Temperatures were in the 20-below range from Minnesota to Montana overnight, and it won't get above zero across the north-central states today," Duke said. "It looks like readings nearly that cold will be the rule for the next couple of days over the Plains, most of the Midwest and moving into the Northeast."

On the morning after one place in Utah reported that state's all-time low of 65 degrees below zero, it was 40 degrees below zero today in Alamosa, Colo., 35 below in North Platte, Neb., 33 below at West Yellowstone, Mont., 32 below in Worland, Wyo., 28 below at Roosevelt, Utah, and even 10 below in northwestern Arkansas.

Records for the date were set in Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., 26 below; Indianapolis, Ind., 17 below; Fort Wayne, Ind., 16 below; Dayton, Ohio, 15 below; Grand Rapids, Mich., 12 below; and Amarillo, Texas, 11 below. The 13 below reading in Chicago tied a record set in 1940.

Winds gusted to 70 mph at Squaw Mountain west of Denver, making the air feel like it was at least 70 below zero, said Byron Louis of the National Weather Service in Denver.

In the Northeast, fears of a major winter storm had businesses closing early Wednesday, but accumulations were generally lighter than expected. By early today 8 inches was on the ground at Dulles International Airport near Washington and in Martinsburg, W.Va., with 4 to 6 inches in most areas along the coast from New Jersey to Maine.

"Snow will continue through the day in the Northeast, but the heaviest part of the snowfall is behind them," Duke said.

Inch Of Rain

Another inch of rain in the last 24 hours has added to the continuing sog and bog of January, dashing farmers' and sodden homeowners' hopes of drying out a little from the wet winter season.

None of the precipitation was frozen, however, as temperatures remained above freezing for the period. The high Wednesday reached 41 degrees Fahrenheit and the low dipped to 35 degrees.

Highs in the upper 30s were predicted today. Lows tonight will be in the 20s.

Sunshine will return to the area Friday, according to the National Weather Service, but a chance of rain looms for the weekend.

UNC-W Nips Lady Pirates, 61-60

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
East Carolina's Lady

Pirates, after struggling back from as much as ten points down in the first half, missed three shots in the final seven seconds last night and bowed to UNC-Wilmington, 61-60.

It marked the first time the Lady Seahawks have beaten the ECU women in six tries, and it made ECU Coach Cathy Andruzzi cry, "Foul."

The Lady Pirates were up by five points, 54-49, with 6:18 left in the contest, and appeared headed for their third straight win of the year. But the Seahawks, who used the foul line to great advantage, rallied behind the charity shots of Gwen Austin, and regained the lead at 60-58 for good and withstood the final attempt by the Lady Pirates to pull it out.

It all came down to the final 15 seconds. Trialing 61-60, East Carolina's Jody Rodriguez fouled Sheila Patterson. Before the shots, UNC-W called time out to discuss its plans for those final seconds and the options that remained.

Patterson then stepped to the line and missed and East Carolina got the rebound and Sylvia Bragg raced down court with the ball. But she fumbled it as she started to put it up, and there was a scramble. Delphine Mabry came up with it and put up a shot that missed. Two more, one of them by Lisa Squirewell, also missed before the horn finally sounded.

It all left Andruzzi very unhappy — especially with the officiating.

A total of 23 fouls were called on the Lady Pirates — who went man-to-man most of the evening — as compared to just nine against the Lady Seahawks — who stayed in a zone throughout the game. "I would have thought we were in Wilmington if but for the crowd," Andruzzi said. "We go to the line seven times and they go 39? At our place?"

"We did everything we had to do to win the game. We outrebounded them, we shot a pretty fair percentage, and we have fewer turnovers. We did what we needed to there at the end. But you tell me. We put up three shots right there at the end. Lisa gets mutilated for sure and there's no call on anything."

Andruzzi said she was proud of her girls. "They played hard and did a good job against a very offensive-minded Wilmington team. This was a big game for us, but we're young and they have veteran team. We knew they could shoot the ball and we made some early mistakes.

"But they never gave us and kept trying. They made adjustments and followed the game plan at the end," Andruzzi said.

Andruzzi said the plan was for Rodriguez to foul and hope for a miss and a rebound. "We didn't want to call a time out to allow them to get set up in their defense. We wanted to just push it to them, try to get inside and work for a basket or a foul."

The plan worked — except that the Lady Pirates missed and no fouls were called.

Wilmington, now 11-2 on the season, led throughout the first half. The Lady Seahawks scored the first two baskets and steadily built up a lead until it reached 18-8 with 12:10 to go on a jumper by Patterson. Over the next few minutes, the two teams swapped baskets until Bragg finally broke the string and cut the lead to six at 26-20 with 5:11 left in the half.

Bragg scored off a layup with two seconds left in the period to trim the lead back to just 31-28.

Wilmington failed to score a field goal during the first six and a half minutes of the second half, but held on at the free throw line. Patterson made two to open the half to open the lead to five again, but Squirewell and Bragg then scored to cut it back to one.

After two more free throws by Wilmington, Annette Phillips hit to put ECU ahead for the first time. The two swapped points, however, until Squirewell scored with 12:02 left to give ECU a 42-40 lead and Anita Anderson scored off a missed free throw by Squirewell for a four-point play — and a four-point lead.

ECU eventually worked the lead out to five at 54-49 before going into a cold streak that allowed the Lady Seahawks to rally behind five free throws and a basket by Austin. Two of those free throws gave UNC-W the lead for the last time at 58-56 with 1:40, but Bragg tied it up. Jill Amos then scored twice at the line to put the Seahawks up by two again. Austin then hit the first of a one-and-one with 36 seconds left for a three-point lead.

Mabry then scored with 19 seconds left and Patterson was fouled four seconds later.

When she missed, the Pirates had their chance, but it wouldn't go.

Austin led the UNC-W scoring with 17 points while Amos had 16, Jenny Owen had 12 and Patterson had 11. UNC-W used only five players in the contest.

East Carolina's scoring was led by Bragg with 18 points, while Squirewell had 12 and Phillips and Mabry each had ten.

ECU held a 43-34 rebounding edge, led by Squirewell and Phillips with ten each. UNC-W's Austin led all in that department with 13.

The loss dropped the Lady Pirates to 7-7 on the year. They travel to UNC Charlotte on Sunday and on to Appalachian State on Monday.

Both Teams Explosive

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Sunday's Super Bowl matches two explosive offenses, each capable of acquiring huge chunks of yards at a clip.

The Washington Redskins scored more points this season than any team in National Football League history. The Los Angeles Raiders led the American Conference in scoring.

Clearly, both teams can slug it out in the end zones with glamorous, sudden strike offensive weapons like John Riggins, Joe Theismann, Marcus Allen and Jim Plunkett. But which team succeeds best at that task may be decided in one of football's less glamorous locations — the opposing lines.

The rules are clear. An offensive lineman may do all sorts of things to protect his quarterback and clear running lanes for his ball carrier. The one thing he may not do, however, is hold. And that, according to the Raiders and why refs don't call it sometimes. It is so well executed. Sometimes, though, it is extreme. Washington's usually laconic Dave Butz remembers one hold that caused him to react.

"I had one guy pull me down from behind," he said. "I don't usually talk to guys on the field but that time I had to. I told him, 'That was a helluva grab.'"

Like Long, Butz has become a student of holding techniques. He's had more time to devote to the subject, since he's in his 11th NFL season.

"Some guys will close their fists and catch your jersey with just their small fingers. The ref thinks their hands are closed, but they've got you. Other guys will hang on to your breast plate. I don't care how strong you are, you can't get away from that."

Butz says he complains to refs, but, even though he's a veteran, he doesn't get much more satisfaction from that than Long.

"I try not to complain unless it's flagrant," he said. "Usually the refs say 'I can't see it,' but it's done all the time. Teams do it because 10 yards is a cheap price to pay. It used to be 15 and that's a more radical penalty, almost certain to force a punt."

Often offensive lines will double team ambitious defenders like Butz. "You beat a guard and suddenly a center picks you up," he said. "Sometimes, I feel like a pinball bouncing from one bumper to the next."

And if the double-teamers are holding, too, it just adds to the frustration.

One guy you wouldn't want to frustrate, though, is Los Angeles' Lyle Alzado. He looks like he eats nails for breakfast and when someone suggested that he was LA's 1983 version of John Matuszak, the giant who played on the defensive line for the Raiders' last championship team, Alzado positively bristled.

"I'm not Matuszak," he said. "He never played a day of football in his life. He was never a force. Howie Long is nine billion times the football player he was."

Long is Alzado's pet. "Howie and I are similar. We're both a little insecure. We both have short tempers. He has more ability than I do. He can reach greatness. I don't think I have the ability to do that."

Are offensive linemen brave enough to risk Alzado's wrath by holding him? Why certainly.

"It's part of the game," he said. "Sometimes it gets a little ridiculous."

When that happens, he reacts. In last year's playoff game against the New York Jets, he ripped off tackle Chris Ward's helmet and threw it at him.

"Chris Ward is a fat pig and a big mouth," Alzado explained. "He was holding. If he says he wasn't, he has a mental problem. You want to hold once in a while? That's OK. But get off me the next time. Let me play the game."

Alzado also is not a fan of defensive players who celebrate their accomplishments with dances.

"What if every offensive tackle started dancing when he threw a block? And every guard danced when he trapped his man? And the quarterback danced when he threw a touchdown? Pretty soon, you'd have a disco out there."

"There's a new breed of player today. They're not as physical. I belong in another era, I think."

Top Ranked Teams Manage Cage Wins

By The Associated Press
-Top-ranked North Carolina still is unbeaten, although Virginia again did its best to wreck the Tar Heels.

Michael Jordan scored 23 points as North Carolina withstood a furious Virginia rally for a 69-66 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory Wednesday night in Chapel Hill, N.C.

Last year, the Tar Heels had to overcome a 10-point Virginia lead in the final 4:12 for a one-point victory. In 1982, North Carolina trailed the Cavaliers by nine points before rallying to win.

North Carolina seemed to be in charge this time, holding a 58-37 lead midway in the second half when Othell Wilson sparked a Cavalier charge. Wilson scored 13 points as Virginia outscored the Tar Heels 21-1 to pull within 58-58 with 5:24 left.

"Othell was shooting from very far out," Jordan said. "In the zone, that's what we wanted. But he was pretty hot."

Jordan, however, snapped the streak with a jump shot with 4:50 to go. Later, he added a foul shot to boost North Carolina's lead to 62-58.

Virginia did pull within 69-66 with 45 seconds remaining, but Rick Carlisle missed a shot that would have tied it and North Carolina's Sam Perkins was fouled while grabbing the rebound. He made one foul shot, giving the Tar Heels their 13th victory and fourth in ACC play.

Four other ranked teams were action Wednesday night, and all four managed to win. Sixth-ranked Georgetown beat Providence 80-76. No. 16 Boston College topped Northeastern 81-78 in overtime. No. 18 Memphis State breezed by South Carolina 75-58 and No. 20 Oklahoma downed Colorado 100-89 in double overtime.

Jordan admitted it was frustrating watching Virginia whittle away at North Carolina's 21-point lead.

"We just got too relaxed against a good club," he said. "During that stretch, we weren't taking our time and we were trying to get it up the floor too fast."

Perkins had 16 points and 12 rebounds, while teammate Brad Daugherty had 11 points and seven rebounds.

Wilson finished with 21 points for Virginia, 11-2 overall and 1-2 in the conference.

Top Ten
Patrick Ewing and David Wingate scored 18 points apiece to pace Georgetown over Providence in Big East action. The Hoyas, 14-2, took control with an 11-4 spurt that gave them a 64-53 lead with nine minutes remaining. Providence then narrowed the gap to four points in the final minute.

The game was moved from the Capital Centre to the 4,000-seat McDonough Arena on campus because of a snowstorm that hit Washington, D.C., during the day.

Second Ten
Martin Clark's layup with 40 seconds left in overtime helped Boston College continue its 20-year domination of Northeastern. Jay Murphy, who led BC with 30 points, made two free throws with one second left to seal the victory in Newton, Mass.

Northeastern's Mark Haspel, who scored 23 points, made a layup with 4:32 left in regulation to tie it at 73. Neither team scored again before the overtime.

BC, 12-3, has beaten Northeastern 19 consecutive times since 1964.

Philip Haynes scored 19 points to pace a balanced Memphis State attack in Columbia, S.C. The Tigers led South Carolina 33-24 at halftime and went on to raise their season record to 12-3.

Wayman Tisdale scored 36 points and Jan Pannell hit eight straight free throws as Oklahoma battled Colorado and the Buffalo fans in Boulder, Colo.

Playing before 10,649, Colorado's second-largest home crowd, Oklahoma, 14-2, called a timeout with nine seconds left in the Big Eight game. When play resumed, the Sooner players gathered at halfcourt and traded insults with the Colorado fans.

Oklahoma Coach Billy

Tubbs made an obscene gesture toward the crowd, which responded with a hail of debris. As the Oklahoma players left the floor, they threw some of the debris back at the fans.

Unranked Teams
Charles Jones scored 19 points and was one of four Louisville players to hit double figures as the Cardinals downed Cincinnati 78-64 in the Metro Conference. Louisville went on a 17-1 streak to open the second half to go ahead 51-22.

Lorenzo Charles tallied 31 points and grabbed eight rebounds to pace North Carolina State past North Carolina-Wilmington 81-53.

Syracuse got 20 points from Rafael Addison and 16 from Dwayne Washington in routing Connecticut 96-68 in the Big East. In another conference game, Ed Buckley scored 19 points and Harold Pressley had 18 as Villanova sank Seton Hall 84-67.

In the Southwest Conference, 7-foot junior center Jon Koncak scored 22 points and grabbed 20 rebounds as Southern Methodist routed Texas A&M 83-66, freshman forward Carven Holcombe's 23 points helped Texas Christian over Baylor 76-54, and Bubba Jennings and Vince Taylor each made four foul shots in the second overtime as Texas Tech beat Rice 76-68.

Carl Henry scored 17 points and Calvin Thompson added 15 as Kansas crunched Missouri 73-56 in the Big Eight. In other conference games, Dave Hoppen scored 27 points, including an insurance free throw with 19 seconds left, helping Nebraska over Iowa State 64-63. Winfred Case scored 16 points, including four foul shots in the final 39 seconds, leading Oklahoma State over Kansas State 60-58.

Ron Stokes sank a corner jump shot at the buzzer to lift Ohio State over Michigan 62-60 in the Big Ten.

COACHES' CORNER

By CHARLIE HARRISON
ECU Basketball Coach

It seems that the thing on everyone's mind is our streak of defeats and one thing I don't do is avoid issues. Granted it has not been fun. Coming in second - or, for that matter, anything but first - is no fun for me, my coaches, or my players. Of course, we've played good teams; of course, we're young. Of course, no one player has emerged as an offensive stalwart.

So, what are this "coach's" feelings? Disappointment, not discouragement. Still I have to live with frustrations for everyone involved. In coaching, you can't leave your work in the gym or the office. I'm no exception. Sleepless nights - or, if sleep occurs - nightmares dominate supposedly the only peaceful time of the 24-hour day. Skeptical eyes seem to appear everywhere.

Coaching cohorts and administrators go by without hellos or words of encouragement, conveniently avoiding any conversations. Do I have "The Plague?" Fans wanting an immediate explanation of "why not a winner now" emerge from the woodwork and not the stands.

People, or average fans, seldom realize the agony of defeat of a coach, be it one defeat or many. An old successful coach once said, "The difference in facing defeat and facing death is simple - in facing defeat, you have to get up the next day."

I hurt, because I care. I care, not just because it's my job, but because it's my nature and I've made a commitment to build a program, not a one-year team. Nothing comes easy and this "streak" is not easy to shrug off, but I still believe we're doing it the right way for all involved - players, fans, ECU, and ECU academia!

So if you're one of the few that will say hello during the midst of bad times and ask how I'm doing - I'll tell you that I hurt but, I'll also tell you that we are working and caring about a common goal - a program with good people. And, after this brief conversation, I'll either go back to working, or teaching, or recruiting, to later go home to a house where the inescapable problems do not vanish and should sleep come, so do the same haunting dreams. May they both end soon and may the streak end too. My stomach and mental health would greatly appreciate it!! Good luck or success come only to those that work for it and can appreciate it when it happens. I'll definitely be one that will work for it and most definitely be one who can appreciate it WHEN it happens, for I'm going to get up the next day, and the next, and the next!

Eventually, happily not hurting!

Tar Heels Top Cavaliers; State Wins

By The Associated Press
Top-ranked North Carolina managed to hold off Virginia despite blowing a 21-point lead and North Carolina State overcame North Carolina-Wilmington — and itself — to end a five-game losing streak.

Michael Jordan scored 23 points, including three in the final moments, to spark unbeaten North Carolina to a 69-66 victory over Virginia in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game Wednesday night.

In the only other game involving an ACC team, Lorenzo Charles poured in a career-high 31 points and grabbed eight rebounds to lead the Wolfpack to an 81-53 victory over the Seahawks.

Virginia and North Carolina proved again that no lead is safe for either team in Carmichael Auditorium, especially in the last four years.

"You've got to give them a lot of credit for coming from 21 down," North Carolina coach Dean Smith said of the Cavalier rally. "That brought back memories from the time they came from 16 down to beat us three years ago, the only time they beat us with Ralph (former Virginia center Sampson) in Chapel Hill."

In 1982, the Tar Heels trailed by nine before Jim Braddock and James Worthy rallied North Carolina to a 65-60 triumph. Last year, Virginia held a 10-point lead with 4:12 left before a Jordan steal and dunk clinched a 64-63 victory.

Jordan was the hero this year, scoring three points in the closing minutes to cool off hot-shooting Othell Wilson, whose 13 points anchored a 21-1 spree which brought Virginia from a 58-37 deficit to within 59-58 with 5:24 left.

A Brad Daugherty dunk and two free throws by Matt Doherty gave the Tar Heels a 66-59 lead with 1:37 left. Jim Miller then took over where Wilson left off, scoring Virginia's next seven points to pull the Cavaliers to within 68-66 with 45 seconds left.

Rick Carlisle then missed a short jumper and Sam Perkins grabbed the rebound and converted one free throw to lead North Carolina to its 13th victory and fourth league triumph.

"During that stretch, we weren't taking our time and we were trying to get it up the floor too fast," Jordan said of the Virginia comeback.

Virginia coach Terry Holland was pleased with the comeback bid, although it did fall short and drop his team to 11-2 and 1-2. He was also worried about how the loss would affect his team in its next outing, two days away.

"That momentum we had at the end and falling short could show up against Clemson," Holland said. "It works both ways."

Perkins scored 16 points and 12 rebounds for the Tar Heels while Daugherty had 11 points and seven rebounds.

Wilson finished with 21 points for Virginia. Jim Miller added 12 while freshmen Tom Sheehy and Olden Polynice scored 10 points apiece.

Meanwhile, N.C. State coach Jim Valvano, whose team has lost five straight ACC games, said he was happy to finally win.

"We really needed a win," he said. "Before the game, I asked (the players) to just play hard. I can't guarantee what would happen but you got to dive for loose balls, play hard all the time. They did tonight. We not only have to play the opposition, but we've had to play ourselves."

Terry Gannon added 14 points as and Charles led a second-half surge to stretch a 34-25 halftime lead to 50-28 with 15 minutes left. N.C. State, 11-7, grabbed its biggest lead at 74-38 with 4:04 left.

Charles, who hit 12 of 16 field goal attempts and all seven of his free throws, scored eight of the Wolfpack's first 11 points, but the Seahawks stayed close until the second half.

N.C. State started three guards — Webb, Gannon and Ernie Myers — for the first time this season.

"I decided we needed to get the ball upcourt quicker," said

Valvano. "With three guards we can get a little transition going before the defense sets up. It also saves a little wear and tear on Charles."

Seahawk coach Mel Gibson said his team lost its confidence in the second half. "Those first ten minutes of the second half are the worst

we've played in a long time," said Gibson, whose team scored just nine points from the floor in the first 15 minutes of the second half. "We don't have the experience or the power to go against them — not yet."

Anthony "Spud" Webb scored 11 points for N.C. State. Terry Shiver scored 13 points and grabbed 13 rebounds for UNC-Wilmington, while Tony Anderson scored 11 for the Seahawks.

Soviets Claim Interference

MOSCOW (AP) — The top Soviet sports official today said the U.S. State Department is interfering in Soviet arrangements for the Los Angeles Olympics, and reiterated that Moscow still has made a formal decision on whether to attend the Summer Games.

Marat Gramov, chairman of the Soviet Committee for Physical Culture and Sports, adding to a long list of Soviet criticisms of arrangements for the 1984 Olympics, said the State Department "intervened" in an agreement on arrangements for Soviet Olympic athletes.

He also complained that Moscow had been barred from sending an "attache" to Los Angeles during preparations for the Olympics.

Gramov said at a press conference that Soviet delegates had signed the agreement with the U.S. Olympic Committee after a recent visit to Los Angeles.

"After our departure, the U.S. State Department intervened and told the president of the U.S. Olympic Committee that he had no power to sign such a protocol. We have no intention of dealing with the U.S. State Department," Gramov said.

A U.S. diplomatic source, commenting after the press conference, said the State Department had objected because the protocol provided for safety and travel rights for Soviet athletes and that as a private group, the U.S. Olympic committee cannot make such guarantees.

Gramov said the protocol "reflected all the problems we will confront if we decide to go to Los Angeles, including transportation, training and accommodations."

Gramov last summer denied reports that the Soviets were considering an Olympic boycott. But he said then and today that Moscow will not serve formal notice of its plans until required by International Olympic Committee rules.

"According to the charter, we can make the decision up until May," he said today. "We will make the decision then."

Gramov also said the State Department had blocked the Soviet Union's "Olympics attache" from the Los Angeles area.

"We presented our candidate for an Olympics attache and the U.S. Olympic Committee had no objections," said Gramov, without explaining what the official's duties would be. "Then the State Department said our attache was not acceptable."

Portions of the Los Angeles area are closed to Soviet diplomats and journalists, and Western observers theorized this regulation may have been the reason the Soviet attache was denied access.

The State Department also has interfered with plans made to transport Soviet athletes to the Games, according to Gramov.

What Does EVERYONE Need?

No Evidence Of A Crime In Briefing Papers Probe

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —
The head of a congressional investigation into how Carter administration documents were obtained by the 1980 Reagan campaign says he postponed hearings to avoid partisan bickering, although one source says probes didn't find any culprits.

"It all fell apart," said the source, who spoke only on condition he remain anonymous.
"I'm aware of any crimes being committed."

The hearings, which had the potential to embarrass the Reagan administration in an election year, were indefinitely postponed by Rep.
Donald J. Albosta, D-Mich.,

the subcommittee chairman who began the investigation seven months ago.

Albosta's surprise announcement on Wednesday marked the third time the hearings have been put off.

With top-ranking Reagan administration officials testifying under oath about 1980 campaign activities, the hearings would have been a major media event.

Albosta said that although his probe has "borne considerable fruit," he was putting the hearings on hold because they had the potential "to degenerate into partisan bickering and a media extravaganza" in an election year.

But the source close to the investigation offered another reason: Albosta's human resources subcommittee of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee failed to answer the central question:
Whodunnit?

The source said that not only have congressional investigators been unable to find out how Carter materials, including a debate briefing book, reached the opposition, but the value of classified documents found in Reagan campaign files is questionable.

The source said he knew of no classified material uncovered in the files beyond several State Department documents dealing with Iran. But by the time these documents had reached the Reagan camp, their contents had already appeared in U.S. and French newspapers and the Congressional Record.

Subcommittee aides would neither confirm nor deny the source's assessment.

Asked about the source's statements, Albosta said through an aide that "the postponement of hearings has nothing to do with the amount or quality of information discovered by the subcommittee."

The White House has never denied that the Reagan campaign received a copy of the briefing book prepared to get Jimmy Carter ready for a pivotal debate against Ronald Reagan a week before the 1980 election.

James A. Baker III, then a campaign aide and now

White House chief of staff, has said he received the briefing papers from William Casey, then the campaign director and now head of the CIA. Casey has said he cannot recall ever seeing the briefing book during the campaign.

Albosta said he would follow a different route in an effort to clear up "serious unresolved conflicts in testimony" from unidentified individuals who gave unsworn testimony to his investigators.

He said that instead of having them testify in public under oath, subcommittee aides would ask them to sign, under oath, statements prepared on the basis of information received from various sources.

Albosta said he has been assured by the White House that people connected with the Reagan campaign will be encouraged to comply. A White House spokesman said Wednesday that Reagan people have been cooperating with the probe and that "the president is confident they will continue to do so."

The chairman said that when the sworn statements are collected, the subcommittee will issue a written report on its findings and then possibly hold hearings to determine whether the Ethics in Government Act needs strengthening.

Micha Green, the panel's staff director, said he hopes the report will be finished by mid-March.

Albosta said that "while this report will cover some matters that have already been discussed publicly, many documents and events not previously disclosed will be made public through this report."

A source close to Albosta said that some of this new material would include revelations that the Reagan campaign received several documents, which although not classified, contained information that was not supposed to circulate outside government circles.

Albosta's investigation has not been the most popular on Capitol Hill. House Speaker
Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., initially opposed it and Republicans on the subcommittee still do, taking the position that it is the job of the FBI, not Congress, to solve the mystery. The FBI has not made public the results of its separate investigation, which was requested by the White House.

Steve Hemphill, counsel to subcommittee Republicans, said he was surprised and pleased by the decision to scrap next week's hearings.

"Apparently they've decided public hearings would not be in the best interests of the subcommittee at this moment," Hemphill said. "That's what the Republicans have been saying all along."

Asked about Albosta's reference to partisan political bickering disrupting the hearings, Hemphill replied,
"I can assure you the Republican members and staff would not be initiating any bickering."

High School Peace Course Stirs Fresh Controversy For Britons

By BEN DOBBIN
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — A controversy has sprung up in Britain over a new high school subject called peace studies — teaching youngsters how people, races and nations are supposed to get along in the nuclear era.

In late December Toni Baker, 14, got a C-minus on a paper in which she supported NATO's policy and the deployment of U.S. cruise missiles in Europe. Since then there has been a flow of irate editorials, opinion columns and letters to the editor in the national press debating whether the subject is education or indoctrination.

Peace studies is taught to junior high school and high school students in more than half of Britain's 125 local school systems, though the content is not uniform around the country. The subject examines not just the issue of nuclear weapons, but also peace and conflict in all levels of society, attempting to answer the question: How is peace secured?

Miss Baker, a pupil at Kingsleigh High School in Bournemouth in the south of England, made the headlines in British national newspapers when she placed at the bottom of her peace studies class homework that "politicians

Among the six questions she was given on nuclear arms, she replied yes in favor of the cruise missiles, the first 16 of which became operational in Britain at the end of 1983.

Teacher David Pope, who wrote under her answers that he had "no faith in deterrence strategy," is currently undergoing an inquiry by his superiors.

A commentary in the conservative Daily Telegraph newspaper said: "One can be fairly certain that someone advocating the introduction of such a subject is a supporter of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament and perhaps an out-and-out pacifist."

The commentary argued that peace studies had become part of a "campaign not for new forms of education, but against the very idea of education, a campaign to replace teaching by indoctrination."

Dr. Paul Smoker, a senior researcher at Lancaster University's Richardson Institute for Peace and Conflict Studies, said the teacher was "totally irresponsible" but he maintained the incident was an exception. The course, he said, usually is taught in a non-partisan way.

Because it is a relatively new discipline, first emerging in a university setting in the United States in the early 1950s, peace studies would be expected to attract controversy, Smoker said in an interview with The Associated Press.

"Educators are very well aware of the dangers involved when dealing with a controversial subject," he said. "The overwhelming majority of teachers ... try very carefully to keep it out of party politics. And obviously there will be some exceptions."

"How anybody can be properly opposed to this subject is a bit beyond me," Smoker added. "It's much better to be informed about this problem than sweeping it under the carpet."

Nuclear weapons are hotly debated in Britain, with both political parties and broadly based groups arguing the issue. The opposition Labor Party's platform calls for Britain to unilaterally give up its own nuclear weapons, while Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's conservative government supports the nuclear option and firmly backs the deployment of American missiles in Europe.

The subject cannot be ignored, said Grace Crookall-Greening of the pacifist Quakers movement in London.

"These ideas are not just connected with the threat of nuclear war but with the increasing violence we've seen in society in the last two decades," she added.

"The nuclear debate is the most pressing issue of our time and the children are very well aware of it and, frankly, in need of a therapeutic approach to it."

Peace studies were introduced around 1980, she said, as a response to the military's recruiting campaigns in high schools.
"It's all part of a game, unfortunately," she said.

Shift Emphasis On Bid-Rigging

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina officials are shifting their emphasis on bid-rigging away from highway contractors to utility and electrical cases and restitution, a state official says.

H. Al Cole Jr., deputy attorney general with the anti-trust section, said in an interview Wednesday that federal and state bid-rigging probes that resulted in convictions or guilty pleas by more than two dozen firms have slowed as investigators shift away from highway contractors.

"We're really just kind of hanging around to see what the feds are going to do," Cole said.

"Highway has kind of run its string, but as to utility and electrical (cases), the feds are still going pretty strong as far as grand juries are concerned," he added.
"We see a few indictments come down every couple weeks."

Cole said the state left indictments in the highway area up to federal investigators, choosing instead to pursue restitution. To date, restitutions total about $15.7 million, with $12.5 million coming from 25 highway firms, he said.

He said North Carolina settled with about 30 electrical and utility contracting firms for an estimated $3.2 million.

Since the state investigation began in June 1980, nearly all of the contractors convicted or pleading guilty to bid rigging charges have been reinstated to the state's approved list of bidders,
he said.

Meanwhile, the General Assembly has enacted legislation making bid rigging a felony instead of a misdemeanor, with individuals punished by up to six years in prison and a $100,000 fine. Firms may be fined up to $1 million.

Other provisions allow state agencies to suspend bidding privileges for up to three years and let the courts suspend licenses of convicted bid riggers.

Cole said the independent efforts of state and federal investigators made prosecutions difficult at times. In some cases, he said, companies changed their names in order to continue to do business and circumvent federal sanctions.

He said contractors in the course of the investigation said bid rigging had been going on for 20 or 30 years.

O'Connell, who heads Bradford University's School of Peace Studies, said he provides reading lists, advice and lectures to teachers setting up peace studies schools all over the country.

He said in an interview he has seen unease in the faces of thousands of youngsters in British schools who never before had seriously discussed the prospect of nuclear war.

"This is the first generation in history that isn't quite sure it has a future," O'Connell said.

The Census Bureau says it has counted 36,031 shoe stores nationwide in 1982, including 3,709 in California. Five years ago, there were 30,006 stores selling shoes in the United States.

The census of business and industry also showed 25,641 new car dealers in America, down from 30,783 five years ago. California once again led the states, with 1,787 new car dealers.

Alaska Bison Herd Faces Angry Farmer Opposition

By BRUCE BARTLEY
Associated Press Writer
DELTA JUNCTION,
Alaska (AP) —

Bison, brown-bearded remnants of the frontier's wide open spaces, have made themselves at home on the doorstep of the rugged Alaska Range for more than half a century.

But today their presence is a source of constant conflict between game managers trying to preserve one of the nation's last free-roaming buffalo herds and farmers trying to grow barley and other crops in a wilderness area near the Arctic Circle.

On Thursday, a farmer accused of illegally killing three bison is due to go on trial.

Bison have roamed the area since two dozen of the animals were transplanted from Montana more than 50 years ago. The herd now numbers 300-400.

In the 1970s, Gov. Jay Hammond selected the area as the site for an ambitious state-sponsored, 60,000-acre development program, the Delta Agricultural Project, where barley fields would thrive in the midnight sun.

The unofficial dividing line between the buffalos and farmers has been the Alaska Highway, with state officials hoping the buffalos would stay south of the highway, away from the farmers' fields to the north. But the animals have crossed the highway to forage.

On Sept. 21, Earl Mitchell summoned Alaska State Troopers to his farm on the west bank of the Gerstle River. He told them he'd shot three bison, and invoked a state regulation which permits killing game animals "in defense of life or property."

When investigators arrived, Mitchell was salvaging the animals as required by the "defense" regulation. The meat was donated to churches.

But the regulation lists several criteria to be met before a game animal can be killed legally. Investigators said Mitchell had not exhausted "all other practicable means" to get rid of the animals before killing them.

A year earlier, Mitchell shot a buffalo on his farm. He pleaded guilty to the illegal killing, was fined $1,000 with $500 suspended, and given a suspended 10-day jail sentence.

Since Mitchell was cited, farmers, businessmen and sportsmen have been meeting to devise a solution — an alternative bison range. Earlier this month state Sen. Pappy Moss asked for $1.75 million to pay for it.

By clearing more black spruce, planting more barley and grass and fencing the north side of the highway, proponents of the plan think the bison can be pretty well contained.

Dave Johnson of the Alaska Department of Fish and Game biologist says it's the closest thing to a consensus he's seen since he's been in Delta.

Responsible for protecting both the bison and the farmers' fields, Johnson has been catching it from all sides since he took the job in 1981.

"It's been a really tense situation," he says softly.

"If we can just convince the people who make the decisions that there are real, live people out here who are being hurt by this, we can solve this problem. We can have both free-roaming bison and agricultural development."

That was the plan when the barley project first was conceived, but Johnson says it "fell through the cracks."

There's never been enough money to develop the alternative range effectively, he says.

From April or May until August, most of the bison graze west of the Delta River, Johnson says. But forage is limited, and about the time it runs out, the animals migrate toward their winter range.

Unfortunately, that coincides with the ripening of the barley and hay crops in the agricultural project. With a short growing season, everything has to go right for farmers to harvest their crops anyway.

By developing the state range, which lies along the migration route, Johnson and the others hope to keep the bison south of the highway during critical harvest weeks.

But hamstrung by a lack of money, game managers cleared and planted only 75 acres in 1980. In 1981, the acreage doubled, and a few bison took advantage of it. In 1982, they spent perhaps one-third of the critical period there. By last fall, the range had grown to 600 acres — about half of it cultivated — and most of the herd lingered until forage dwindled in late September.

But last summer was abnormally wet and farmers still were trying to harvest in early October. Nevertheless, Johnson says the experience proves the alternative will work.

Ultimately, he wants to clear and plant 4,400 acres, and burn another 5,000 to 10,000 acres where nature will restock the bison's larder.

Author Says President Johnson Knew Of Risk

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the first days of his presidency, Lyndon Johnson was told the war in Vietnam might be unwinnable, but he still made a "knee-jerk decision" to continue it, says a book about LBJ to be published on Friday.

Johnson wasn't drawn into the quagmire of Vietnam, writes author Vaughn Davis Burnet, but "knew from the very beginning that even a great American effort centered in Saigon would have a very slow payoff — and might not have any."

The book, "The Presidency of Lyndon B. Johnson," is part of an American presidency series published by the University Press of Kansas.

In an interview, Burnet said his book tries to show the major accomplishments as well as the major failures of the Johnson presidency.

"It's like oil and water, they won't mix," he said. "Here you have a man who is both good and evil and you have to treat him that way."

Bornet, a retired professor of history and social science at Southern Oregon State College, says it is virtually certain that at the time of his assassination John F. Kennedy was not on a course of withdrawing from Vietnam.

Johnson, he says, "clearly did not think his way through his Vietnam inheritance in November and December of 1963. His knee-jerk decision was made in hours, not even in days. From the outset, the vice president of the Kennedy years, facing the 1964 election, was determined on the necessity to carry on. He was even willing to enlarge on his inheritance."

As a result, Johnson "kept making unqualified public and private promises of support to South Vietnam, essentially a state in chaos," Bornet writes. "The American public simply had no idea that in the winter of 1964 their future had already been committed."

Bornet contends that Johnson had decided in 1965 not to run for a second term because of his poor health. He says the president's unexpected announcement in 1968 was not prompted — as convention wisdom has it — by his unpopularity.

"Outwardly, Lyndon Johnson was an impressive masculine specimen who wore a shirt with a 17½ collar and 37-inch sleeves and stood 6 feet 5¼ inches tall," Bornet writes. "The huge body deceived observers but not its owner."

Johnson had fully recovered from a heart attack in 1955 and as a president without a vice president, was determined to quiet the slightest public suspicion about his vigor, Burnet says.

But, he adds, Johnson "almost feared to close doors, to be alone; would there be another attack, with no one to help?"

"Long before the preparation period for the election of 1968, the Johnsons, husband and wife, knew that in the national interest as well as their own there should be no further years of arduous labor as chief executive after Jan. 20, 1969," Bornet writes.

"So Johnson's withdrawal from candidacy for another term could have been — but clearly was not — due to Tet, the war in general, rival challengers in his party, the protesters, the polls, the 'system' working, any alleged mental quirks or supposed tendencies toward avoiding conflict, or the fear of losing."

Summing up, in the final chapter, Burnet says that Johnson's major domestic program, his war on poverty, had results that were neither spectacular nor permanent.

But, he adds: "This presidency made a difference... What President Johnson achieved would look better if he had not promised so much more, so frequently, and without reservations. He wanted desperately to be — and to appear to be — a great, not just a good president."

Files Suit In Cougar Attack

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Charlotte woman says she suffered a miscarriage after being attacked by a cougar that escaped from its natural habitat at Grandfather Mountain and has filed a $4 million suit against the park.

Pamela Kiger, 26, was about five months pregnant when she was clawed and bitten by the cougar on April 10, 1982. She said she suffered a miscarriage about three weeks later.

Ms. Kiger contends the park did not protect visitors from the cougar and says she suffered emotional and psychological trauma that has permanently reduced her earning capacity.

The cougar, named Judy, bit the woman on the arm and struck the right side her head, causing an 8-inch wound. Her attorney, R. Patrick Snoddy, said on Wednesday the physical wounds have healed, but "the terror of the moment still lingers."

Grandfather Mountain President Hugh Morton was traveling Wednesday and relayed his comments about the suit through an employee.

"I'm very sorry the lady got hurt," Morton said. "However, there were extenuating circumstances about the incident because the cougar was aggravated by another person in Ms. Kiger's party who climbed a fence into a restricted area that the cougar considered to be his territory."

Kiger and a friend, Ray Andrews, were at the Avery County park, observing cougars when the attack occurred. Andrews has said Kiger stayed on the trail over looking the cats while he crossed some rocks to a restricted area to look down on the animals from behind a chest-high wall.

The cougar then jumped over a rock barrier and a 10-foot fence. Andrews moved away from the animal, but it ran toward Ms. Kiger and bit her. As she retreated, the cougar struck her on the head.

The 90-pound cat was the pet of a Lenoir man but was transferred to the park last February after it attacked a 9-year-old girl.

Shortly after attacking Kiger, the cougar was sent to the Natural Bridge (Va.) Zoological Park, where she lives in an enclosed cage.

Castro Pressuring 'Millionaire Farmers' Of Cuba

PRIVATE FARMERS — A group of Cuba's private farmers sell bananas and garlic at a small, ramshackle free market in Havana recently. Fidel Castro's government is putting a gentle squeeze on private farmers. (AP Laserphoto)

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer
ARTEMISA, Cuba (AP) — Fidel Castro's Communist government is putting a gentle squeeze on this island's remaining private farmers, a hardy breed that has produced a crop of Cuban-style "millionaires."

Twenty-five years after the Castro revolution, more than 60,000 peasants still own and work individual farms — averaging 100 acres — and make comfortable livings selling fruit, vegetables and other crops on Cuba's small free market.

But the government and these private farmers' "collectivized" neighbors are trying to cajole, shame and persuade them into joining agricultural cooperatives.

The Ricondo sugar-growing cooperative, in the rolling green canefields outside Artemisa, is an example of the trend.

Founded in 1979 by 16 farmers holding 564 acres, it has grown more than six-fold in membership and acreage since then. But 20 farmers in the local cane-growing zone remain outside the cooperative.

The co-op president, Jose Zamora, said some holdouts insist they will "never, never" join. But, he told a visiting American journalist, "by the end of 1986 we should have all of them in — except maybe for a couple."

The reporter later found a handful of "never, never" sayers selling bananas and garlic at a small, ramshackle free market in Havana, 35 miles northeast of here.

These private farmers were wary of talking openly of their future. But one straw-hatted peasant finally explained, "We have been working our own land all our lives and we will continue. Why should we join a cooperative?"

Officials of the National Association of Small Farmers, the government agency responsible for both the private farmers and Cuba's 77,000 co-op members, confirmed unofficial reports that many peasant entrepreneurs are making the equivalent of $30,000 a year in gross income, and some earn $60,000 or more, a huge sum compared with the typical $3,000 or $4,000 a co-op member or Cuban worker earns.

These well-heeled "campesinos" — the Spanish term for peasants — have drawn

IMMUNITY SUSPENDED

some direct fire from President Castro.

"You know, there are millionaire farmers earning 10 times as much as an outstanding medical specialist," he complained to a Communist youth meeting in May 1982.

But the Cuban leader is unlikely to crack down hard on the private campesinos, since he has long promised them they will be allowed to farm and to bequeath their land to their children. In fact, most private farmers first received their plots in Castro's 1959-63 agrarian reform.

Before the revolution, three-quarters of Cuba's agricultural land was in large-scale cane, rice, cattle and other operations, many U.S.-owned. The revolutionaries converted these into large state farms, now operated by more than 300,000 wage-paid workers.

But some 45,000 campesino who at the time of the revolution owned fewer than 165 acres were allowed to retain their farms, and 110,000 others who were renters were given title to their small plots.

Today, the 4.2 million agricultural acres not owned by the state are evenly split between cooperatives and the individual farmers.

The private farmers must fill quotas, selling produce to the state for its two markets — the cheap rationed-food market, and the "parallel market," where selected food items are sold in unlimited amounts at higher prices.

But any crops beyond the quota can be sold in a third market, the free-wheeling "peasants' markets," where supply-and-demand sets the price. Often the only quality tomatoes, bananas, pork and other items are available in these markets, and at stunning prices — 58 cents for a banana, for example.

These peasants' stalls serve as a necessary outlet in a communist economy where shortages of consumer goods leave Cubans with too many pesos and too little to spend them on.

In making their pitch to private farmers, the co-op boosters stress efficiency and social benefits.

They say co-ops, by integrating small plots into larger spreads for joint cultivation, allow for more economic land use, machinery purchases and irrigation. They also point out that gathering campesinos into collectives means that long-deprived rural families can finally be supplied with electricity, running water, and nearby health and educational facilities.

Although the collectivization is voluntary, publicity and social pressures can be a powerful force in a regimented society bred on socialist theory.

The "moral" pitch was summarized by Guillermo Berges, an official of the National Association of Small Farmers.

"By joining the co-op, the Cuban peasant shows he isn't influenced by monetary gain, but by his level of awareness," he said. "He knows he cannot think only of himself, but of society. His mentality is no longer individualistic."

Berges estimates that by 1990 only 10,000 or so private farmers will still be resisting collectivization.

He must be counting on peasants like Pedro Zamora, who drove his new orange Polski, a Polish-made sedan, up to his new concrete house on the Ricondo cooperative during the reporter's visit.

The 50-year-old, leathery-faced campesino said he had merged his 132 acres into the co-op three years ago. He earned $6,900 last year, compared with a high of about $12,000 as a private farmer, he said.

"But then I used to spend more, on seed and other things," he said. "And the work was harder, without equipment or help. This is better. I like it."

Poe Admirers Marked Poet's 175th Birthday

By MARTIN STEINBERG
Associated Press Writer
BALTIMORE (AP) — About 200 admirers of Edgar Allan Poe crowded around his grave in Westminster cemetery early today with snow falling and champagne glasses filled to toast the ghoulish poet's 175th birthday.

Some of the devotees drove through a snowstorm from as far away as North Carolina to celebrate the author of "The Raven," "The Tell-Tale Heart," "The Pit and the Pendulum," and scores of other poems and short stories.

"There are some strange people here, but 99 percent of them are regular people," said Jeff Jerome, curator of the Edgar Allan Poe House and Museum here and organizer of the event, which started at 11 p.m. Wednesday.

Poe was born in Boston on Jan. 19, 1809, and lived in several cities on the East Coast, including Baltimore, from 1832 to 1835. The birthday celebrators watched a dramatic recitation of the conclusion of "The Tell-Tale Heart" at Westminster Church and then filed into the church's catacombs — where Poe was originally buried — for a slide show.

Just before midnight, they walked outside to Poe's grave and after hearing another Poe opus, broke into an impromptu "Happy Birthday, Dear Edgar" around 12 o'clock. The crowd then quietly dispersed, but a few hung around hoping to catch a glimpse of the mysterious person who has left a bottle of cognac and a bouquet of roses on Poe's tombstone every Jan. 19 since 1949.

Few doubted that the snow would keep the person from carrying on the tradition.

"When you would consider that somebody would brave freezing temperatures for whatever number of years, apparently it's something very deep and very personal for him," said Bruce Goldfarb, a 27-year-old student at the University of Maryland-Baltimore County, who supplied some of the partygoers with Amontillado.

Others said they would not do anything to try to unshroud the mystery of the anonymous admirer of the poet, who died here in 1849.

"We'll leave him to his own personal tribute," said Stacey Briley, who drove eight hours with her mother, Louise, to get here from their Washington, N.C., home in time for the birthday tribute.

"He's the only writer I feel I can relate to through his writings," the 20-year-old student at East Carolina University said, explaining why she went to all the trouble to attend the ceremony. "I feel I have a little bit of Poe in me."

But traveling long distances to the cemetery to pay respects to Poe on his birthday isn't that unusual. Cliff Krainick, 37, drove with his wife and two sons from their home in Falls Church, Va., for the celebration.

"This is my 10th year," he said. "I used to fly in from Chicago" during the first six years.

American Univ. In Beirut Caught Up By Violence

By MONA ZIADE
Associated Press Writer
BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) —
The American University of

Beirut was founded more than a century ago by a Presbyterian missionary who wanted to spread literacy and Christian values in the Middle East. Because of its location, the prestigious university has, at times, been dragged into Lebanon's endless violence. On Wednesday it happened again.

Malcolm Kerr, the school's president, was shot to death as he stepped out of an elevator near his office in the university's College Hall. A shadowy, pro-Iranian Moslem group known as Islamic Holy War claimed responsibility.

In February 1976, shortly after the outbreak of Lebanon's civil war, a student, angered by his suspension for involvement in political activities on campus, gunned down two senior academics — Raymond Ghosn and Robert Njeim.

Only six months ago, the university's acting president David Dodge was released after being held captive for a year by pro-Iranian gunmen.

Dodge is the great-grandson of New England minister Daniel Bliss, who founded the school in 1866 under the motto: "That they may have life and have it more abundantly." These words are carved into an arch above the main entrance to the campus.

As the cornerstone for this university was laid, Bliss said: "This college is for all conditions and classes of men without regard to color, nationality, race or religion."

From a rented one-room school with 16 students, the university has grown into a 73-acre campus with an enrollment of about 5,000.

Before Lebanon's civil war, the university attracted students from five continents. It has graduated presidents and prime ministers, diplomats, academics, physicians and even revolutionaries from many lands.

At least six members of the current Lebanese cabinet, including Foreign Minister Elie Salem, are graduates. George Habash, leader of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, Druse leader Walid Jumblatt and former Syrian President Nazem Kodsai are also alumni.

The fires of Arab nationalism were kindled at the school early in the century, as young politically minded students were exposed to liberal ideas for the first time.

This year Kerr instituted a policy requiring all students to sign a pledge that they would not participate in political activities on campus.

The measure provoked a number of demonstrations, including a student sit-in that delayed the opening of the academic year. Since then, there have been at least two demonstrations each week.

American University is a private, non-sectarian, independent institute chartered by the state of New York. It has faculties of arts and sciences, medicine, engineering, architecture, agriculture and health sciences. Affiliated with the school is the American University Hospital, a 500-bed hospital with modern medical equipment.

Over the years, the university has received aid from the U.S. government and from various foundations in the United States, including the Rockefeller and Ford foundations. Its 1983-84 budget is $86 million, half to run the teaching hospital and have for academic program.

But when Kerr arrived, he found the school was badly in need of money and launched an international fund drive.

"Like any private university in North America, we always have to raise more funds," he said at the time.

Money comes from four main sources — university tuition and fees paid to the hospital; Middle East governments that support special programs, such as a nursing program sponsored by Saudi Arabia; alumni, corporate and foundation contributions and U.S. foreign aid, said Vahe Simonian, the school's director of development.

U.S. foreign aid funds amount to between 3 percent and 5 percent of the school's income, according to the university financial officer, William Rice.

Tuition ranges from about $2,500 a year in liberal arts to about $5,500 in medicine, Rice said.

The school's 25-member board of trustees is chaired by Najeeb Halaby, former Pan Am president and father-in-law of Jordan's King Hussein.

According to Simonian, other trustees include Alfred DeCrane, president of Texaco; Robert Goheen, former president of Princeton University; Philip Habib, former Mideast troubleshooter for the State Department.

The campus is jewel-like — terraced gardens and wooded hillsides, stone buildings with red tile roofs overlooking the Mediterranean, and despite the presence of guards, a quiet haven in densely populated Moslem West Beirut. The street that runs outside its main gate is called "Rue Bliss" after the university's founder.

The university's skyline is dominated by the bell tower of College Hall, where Kerr was murdered Wednesday.

Violence In Schools Still Problem

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —

Education Secretary T.H. Bell says school discipline is better than it was a few years ago, but violence in the classroom is still a problem far from solved. "It's better than it was, but ... we didn't dig up a problem that's imaginary," Bell said Wednesday.

The National Education Association has accused Bell and President Reagan of engaging in "political hype" about school violence when in fact the climate in schools has been getting better.

The White House released a report last week on disorder in schools that drew heavily from statistics that Bell's National Institute of Education gathered in 1976 and 1977.

"The data are old, there's no doubt about it," said Bell. But based on polls and talks with school officials, he added, "we know that the public is still deeply concerned about it. So it isn't an imaginary problem of Ronald Reagan and Ted Bell, by a long ways."

"We're not saying it is a raging issue that just emerged. We know better than that," said Bell, who added, "It doesn't hurt you any, where the polls indicate that there's some problems like that and you're running for office, to emphasize it. I guess all sides do that."

Bell, in an interview with The Associated Press, United Press International and Reuters, also said he plans to fund research to develop new computer software to help teach writing, algebra and pre-algebra.

He said too many of the existing school computer programs amount to little more than "electronic page-turning."

Bell said computers, if used properly, can serve as "a slave mechanism" to relieve English teachers of burdensome tasks and to help keep students with average IQ from "bombing out" on algebra.

Bell said he expects "a mighty struggle" in statehouses over the issue of rewarding teachers for outstanding performance, but predicted that 10 or 15 states will enact some type of performance-based pay. He said the Education Department will finance experiments in each state offering career advancement incentives and peer review systems for teachers.

Bell said schools need programs that can analyze pupil responses, provide remedial tutoring or move the pupil on to the next level, and then give the teacher a printout showing how the pupil performed.

The education secretary said that for a high school English teacher who faces 150 students a day, it is "sort of self-inflicted punishment" to give a writing assignment.

Much of the hard work of checking for grammar, spelling, punctuation and structure "could be done by the computer as a slave mechanism," leaving the teacher free to critique style and content, he said.

But, Bell said, "I don't think we're ever going to get to where we can teach writing and have it all automated."

Bell, who has played a pivotal role in stirring the national debate about raising school standards, said he expects unions to keep fighting state efforts to adopt performance-based pay for teachers.

Bell is soliciting proposals from school districts to experiment with performance-based pay and career-advancement systems for teachers. He said he hopes to award $25,000 to $50,000 to at least one or two districts in each state, working with universities.

He said President Reagan's proposed fiscal 1985 budget will include "a modest increase" in the $479 million block grant program for states and local school districts, and would boost college work-study funds to pay for college students to tutor adult illiterates.

Flu Symptoms Abound, But Not Yet Epidemic

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — State officials say that a flu-like illness that has kept students out of school throughout North Carolina is likely to become more widespread before it abates.

But Dr. John E. Parsons, an epidemiologist in the state Communicable Disease Control Branch, said there is "no epidemic, but there are local outbreaks of excess absenteeism."

"The activity indicates an earlier onset of flu than last year," Parsons said. "You can expect in a week or two it will be more widespread. But whether we get an epidemic or more excess absenteeism is impossible to foresee."

Meanwhile, the illness appears to be peaking in Wake County, according to associate school superintendent Carlos Hicks. "In most of the schools, it is peaking and starting to go down a little," he said.

But Buncombe County clinics, emergency treatment centers and doctors are seeing a marked rise in the number of patients with flu-like illnesses, and industries are also being affected, said county health director Dr. James B. Tenney.

He said absenteeism in local schools is ranging from 15 to 20 percent.

Parsons said 10 universities across the state send in weekly reports on the number of students seen with flu or flu-like symptoms. Up until the end of last week, all were reporting normal levels of flu — about five or fewer cases per week, he said.

But on Friday, North Carolina State University in Raleigh reported 17 cases of flu — more than a three-fold increase. N.C. State so far is the only reporting center with abnormally high levels of flu, said Parsons.

The symptoms are also appearing among residents of the Piedmont region. School officials noted a sharp increase in the number of students who've either stayed home or left school sick since schools reopened for the new year.

"It lasts from three to five days and it's been passing from kid to kid," said Brenda Haynes, a medical assistant at the Rockingham County Children's Clinic. "It's more than just the 24-hour kind."

Hospital emergency rooms and clinics that treat minor emergencies on a walk-in basis have noticed an increase of patients complaining of a variety of flu-like discomforts.

Dr. William Ameen at Alamance County Hospital in Burlington said about one-third of the 60 emergency room patients the hospital has seen in recent days fell into that category.

Parsons said his branch has isolated one strain of flu virus called influenza A, also called the England strain. The virus was found in an adult from Cary.

"This strain was a type we have seen in the United States and in the world, so I'm not surprised we're picking it up," he said.

Last year, many North Carolinians suffered from influenza A virus and the other major type, influenza B, he said.

Influenza is a viral infection of the respiratory tract. Symptoms include fever, chills, headache, muscular aching and coughing. Treatment is bed rest, drinking plenty of fluids and use of aspirin, or acetaminophen for children, to ease symptoms.

Dr. Leon Andrews, a New Hanover County medical examiner, said Mrs. Lane died from multiple gunshot wounds. He said an autopsy may be performed later this week in Jacksonville.

Lane underwent surgery at Cape Fear Memorial Hospital late Wednesday.

A burning chair was pulled out of the mobile home, but New Hanover County Sheriff's Department investigators said they did not know how the fire started. The fire did not ignite the mobile home.

Authorities said they have not determined how the shootings occurred, but Detective G.L. Landry said "at this particular time I feel it was strictly domestic."

A 12-gauge, single-shot shotgun was removed from the home, Landry said. No other weapons were found inside.

Most Satisfied With Housing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many Americans view their housing as "Home Sweet Home," a National Association of Realtors survey says.

The survey asked how satisfied people were with their housing. Some 30 percent of U.S. households are extremely satisfied with their housing, while only 2 percent indicate that they are very dissatisfied and another 5 percent that they are somewhat dissatisfied, the survey said.

The consumer survey of the Joint Center for Urban Studies of Harvard University and Massachusetts Institute of Technology sent surveys to 5,000 households and nearly 74 percent completed the 20-page document, center officials told a news conference.

ROME (AP) — Tourists flock in the summertime to bathe in the clear Mediterranean and sun themselves on decks the ancient Romans carved on cliffs overlooking the beaches.

Children playing in the fine-pebbled sand occasionally dig up a piece of a German fighter plane, or a soldier's boot, unexpected reminders of a day nearly 40 years ago when the Allied forces landed 70,000 men on the beachhead 38 miles south of Rome, a quiet fishing village on the coast of central Italy.

It was a major World War II operation that marked a turning point in the drive to liberate Rome. And Saturday, the famous landing at the beachhead 38 miles south of Rome will come alive again in 40th anniversary ceremonies.

The program will include films of the operation, returning veterans and tributes to the thousands of troops who died before British and U.S. forces freed Rome from German occupation on June 4, 1944.

Diplomatic representatives from several countries, including Britain, West Germany and the United States, will attend the ceremonies marking one of the most monumental — and controversial — landings in World War II history.

In an unusual move this year, wreaths also will be laid on the graves of more than 25,000 German soldiers who died in the fighting.

Say Hospital Sales Boost Care's Cost

WASHINGTON (AP) — The sale of hospitals can drive up Medicaid and Medicare costs by millions of dollars each year because new owners are reimbursed for increased capital expenditures, according to a congressional study.

The General Accounting Office study "provides convincing evidence of the wastefulness and folly of continuing a payment method which encourages hospital sales at higher prices by helping to finance the sales through increased Medicare and Medicaid payment," Rep. Willis Gradison, R-Ohio, said Wednesday.

In releasing the report, Gradison called for congressional hearings on hospital mergers and their effect on federal Medicare and Medicaid payments and an investigation by the Department of Health and Human Services.

Gradison said that when a hospital changes ownership, new depreciation and interest costs can drive up capital expenses that can translate into higher Medicare and Medicaid payments.

"Several hundred million dollars a year are probably at stake to the federal government alone," he said.

The GAO studied the purchase of 54 hospitals by the Nashville-based Hospital Corporation of America from INA Corp.'s Hospital Affiliates International.

During the first year after the sale, the hospitals' overall costs increased by about $55 million because of the purchase. Changes in interest, depreciation and home office expenses were cited. The report added that a portion of the increased costs was allocated to the Medicare and Medicaid programs.

The GAO questioned a number of accounting methods the company used to calculate Medicare and Medicaid reimbursements.

Thomas F. Frist Jr., president and chief executive officer of the hospital corporation, disagreed with the study's conclusions, saying it didn't identify specific Medicare rules under question. "The study simply reflects the GAO's opinion of Medicare guidelines with respect to hospital acquisitions," Frist said in a statement.

Frist said the hospital corporation didn't increase patient charges at any of the acquired hospitals at the time of the 1981 merger and that increases the following year were less than national average. He said the increase of Medicare claims was about $8 million.

"The Germans are now our allies, and it is time to mourn the soldiers of all countries who died in this historic battle," said Ennio Silvestri, director of tourism for Anzio and organizer of this year's commemoration.

Ceremonies are being held Saturday, even though the landing took place on Jan. 22, 1944.

Among those expected at this year's anniversary is Raleigh Trevelyan, a British author whose memories of Anzio are recorded in the best-selling book "Rome '44, The Battle for the Eternal City."

Schoolchildren will pay tribute at the statue of Angelita Rossi, who according to a widely accepted account, was a 5-year-old girl rescued by a British soldier as she was wandering near a minefield.

The dark-eyed Angelita, whose ragged dress was replaced by a soldier's uniform and who shared the trenches of the British troops, died a week later as a German shell hit a jeep she had been placed in to drive her to safety, according to one account.

The episode seemed so characteristic of life and death during the war that it became one of the best-remembered wartime stories and was made into a popular song.

But one woman, Angela Rossi, now 47 and living near Anzio, has for years contradicted the outcome of the widely accepted version, saying that she is the child of the war story. Most authorities discount her claim.

Silvestri said he does not know whether Mrs. Rossi will attend Saturday's ceremonies.

"She has turned up in the past," at other anniversary ceremonies, he said.

The landing, code-named "Operation Shingle," is vividly remembered by World War II buffs and veterans as an assault that was designed to achieve victory within a week. Instead, it took four months.

Backed by cruisers, destroyers, minesweepers and submarines, the soldiers of the British Sixth Corps and the U.S. Fifth Army, along with close to 20,000 vehicles, landed in a pre-dawn amphibious attack.

The objective was to draw off and contain German forces and then join Allied troops advancing from the south to march into Rome.

There was no immediate German response, allowing the Allied troops to nurture premature hopes of an easy victory. But days later, German soldiers attacked, pinning the troops to the beach. By Feb. 18 it seemed the tide had turned in favor of the occupying forces.

It took until May 23 for Allied soldiers to break out of Anzio and begin the victorious march on Rome, the first Axis capital to fall to the Allies.

Argentina's Exiles Going Home

By DOUGLAS GRANT MINE

Associated Press Writer
BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — After years of repression, heartache and fears, the nightmare is ending for thousands of Argentines who are coming home from exile to life under a new, democratic government.

A government-sponsored television advertisement captures the spirit.

In it, a young man, suitcase in tow, stops at the door of a working-class home on a tree-lined street in Buenos Aires and knocks. A gray-haired man, obviously the youth's father, opens the door and the two, after a poignant moment of recognition, embrace.

President Raul Alfonsin, whose Dec. 10 inauguration ended more than seven years of military rule, told the several thousand-strong Argentine community in Spain this week, "The path is clear for the return of all those who for one reason or another left their homeland during these past years."

In the message broadcast by Spanish television, the new president said all the exiles "have the right to contribute their effort to the task at hand, because only through the active participation of all can democracy become a reality."

Reliable estimates put the number of Argentine citizens resident abroad at more than 1 million — out of a total population of 28 million. The majority cannot be considered political exiles, having left the country over the past decades in search of broader economic horizons.

But tens of thousands left for political reasons beginning in the mid-1970s, when leftist guerrilla violence and its brutal repression, first by rightist paramilitary organizations and then the ruling armed forces, caused many intellectuals, union militants and party activists to fear for their lives.

Former President Isabel Peron, who was ousted and jailed by the military in 1976, came back briefly for Alfonsin's inauguration. She has lived in Spain since being freed in 1981 but will return home next month.

For former exiles, homecoming is a special experience.

"Every day is a spectacle, seeing familiar sights and encountering old companions," said Jorge Bernetti, a 35-year-old journalist and former Peronist union activist who moved to Mexico in 1974 after appearing on a "death list" of the Argentine Anti-Communist Alliance. The "Triple-A" was believed made up of neo-fascist police and civilians and was encouraged to kidnap and murder leftists by sectors in Mrs. Peron's administration.

Bernetti returned last month with Adriana Puigros, former professor of philosophy and letters at the University of Buenos Aires, who chose exile the same year after a bomb exploded in her office.

She too was active in the left wing of Peronism, a labor-based populist movement founded 40 years ago by the late army strongman and three-time President Gen. Juan Peron.

The two spoke with The Associated Press in a downtown apartment.

"Homecoming should be happy, but it's not that easy," said Ms. Puigros. "There's a lot of uncertainty. You don't know what you're going to find, and the economic situation is discouraging."

Argentina is struggling through its worst recession in history, with 15 percent unemployment and 400 percent annual inflation eroding salaries.

Ms. Puigros has tenure after nine years at Mexico's National Autonomous University and admits such job stability would be difficult to establish here.

But she is also excited by the newly democratic Argentina.

"This time, the recuperation of democracy is really heartfelt, much more so than the other times we've gone from military to civilian government," she said.

Alfonsin appointed Hipolito Solari Yrigoyen, a former senator who was jailed for a year by the dictatorship and spent five years in exile, a roving ambassador.

He told a group of exiles in Spain this week the U.N. High Commission on Refugees has agreed to pay airfares for those Argentines who want to go home.

Only a few are not welcome back.

Three days after his inauguration, Alfonsin ordered the prosecution on homicide and illicit association charges of seven exiled leaders of guerrilla organizations active in the mid-1970s. The only one of the seven who returned, former provincial governor Ricardo Obregon Cano, was arrested at the airport and is in jail pending trial.

The decree against the guerrilla leaders was issued simultaneously with a decree initiating prosecution, on murder and torture charges, of nine retired generals and admirals who formed successive juntas that ruled the country from the coup until 1982.

Local and international human rights groups blame the defunct regime's security forces for the deaths of up to 15,000 suspected leftists.

TO ABROGATE PACT KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — The Zairean government plans to abrogate its agreement with the Soviet airline Aeroflot after an explosion last week at Kinshasa's international airport in baggage unloaded from an Aeroflot plane, sources reported Monday.

on the second heart trick! Next came the ace-king of diamonds and a diamond ruff on the table, followed by a heart ruff in hand.

West was down to nothing but trumps, so when Tommy led his last diamond, West had to ruff with a trump honor to avoid having dummy overruff with the ace. Now West had to exit with a high trump. Declarer, on the ace, and he now held the 9-8-7 of trumps while West was down to K-Q-3. West could get only his two high spades, and the contract was home with the loss of only three trump tricks.

West did get 100 for honors, but his friends told us that he did not consider that to be any consolation.

Cultural Kaleidoscope

A recent coup has changed the political face of Nigeria. Nigeria is Africa's most populous nation. Some sources estimate the population at 100 million. That works out to an average of nearly 200 persons per square mile. Nigeria is composed of about 250 ethnic groups, each with its own language. Yet the nation's official language is English. About 75 percent of the nation is illiterate with a per capita income of $750 a year.

Favors Ending Military Aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Rep. Bella Abzug, calling on Congress to end military aid to El Salvador, says U.S. policy toward the Central American country is "foolhardy, reckless and destructive."

Abzug, a New York Democrat, said the only way U.S. objectives in El Salvador can be achieved is through direct military intervention because the Salvadoran Army is incapable of using the assistance efficiently.

She said the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America, which was headed by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, erroneously attempted to portray the conflict in Central America in Cold War terms. "The enemy in that area is poverty, it's social injustice," she said.

Ms. Abzug made a fact-finding visit to El Salvador, Nicaragua and Honduras in late December and early January.

Technology

Not Yet Ready

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stringent standards for exhaust from diesel cars and light duty trucks won't go into effect until the 1987 model year, the Environmental Protection Agency says.

EPA Administrator William Ruckelshaus asserted the agency didn't feel the technology was fully ready to be mass produced and installed on vehicles.

Current standards, that went into effect in 1982, allow release into the air 0.6 grams of particulate per mile. That was supposed to be reduced in 1985 models to 0.3 grams for diesel cars and 0.26 for diesel light-duty trucks. General Motors asked for the delay.

Ruckelshaus said there would be little environmental harm because diesel vehicle sales have dropped instead of increased as had been predicted. He also said many light diesel vehicles already emit pollution well below current standards.
