Gemayel Agreeing To Cancel Accord

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer

Lebanese President Amin Gemayel met again in Damascus today with Syrian President Hafez Assad, and Lebanon's state radio said the two leaders had agreed on a process to cancel the troop withdrawal pact between Lebanon and Israel.

Assad, who has supported Druse and Moslem rebels in their fight against Gemayel, led a red-carpet welcome for the Lebanese president Wednesday at Damascus airport. The men met twice Wednesday, and then Assad held a late-night meeting with leaders of Syria's ruling Baath party. Assad and Gemayel resumed talks today.

Gemayel told reporters the talks were "excellent" and Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salem said: "We hope to have something to say to you when we finish this meeting."

Lebanese state radio and Beirut newspapers did not spell out details of the reported process for scrapping the troop withdrawal pact, ac Syria has demanded. But the reports today said the Gemayel-Assad accord was a prelude to a new cease-fire in Lebanon's civil war, fresh reconciliation talks between Moslem and Christian factions and formation of a national coalition Cabinet.

However, Walid Jumblatt, the Druse opposition leader backed by Syria, said in Beirut that he would not take part in any reconciliation talks unless Gemayel were put on trial for launching artillery attacks against Shiite Moslem and Druse neighborhoods.

The Soviet Union, meanwhile, vetoed a U.N. Security Council resolution which would have replaced the multinational force in Lebanon with U.N. peacekeeping troops, and U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger visited Marines on ships off the Beirut coast.

The U.S. frigate W.S. Sims fired 20 rounds from five-inch guns "in response to fire in and around U.S. personnel" Wednesday night, said Army Col. Edward McDonald, 46, of Rochester, N.Y., chief U.S. military spokesman in Beirut. He declined to say which U.S. personnel had come under attack.

Big Storm's Final Blow In Northeast

By DANA FIELDS
Associated Press Writer

A giant snowstorm blamed for 56 deaths in 13 states took a final swipe at the Northeast today, churning the icy Great Lakes with squalls that left snow almost 3 feet deep in western New York, and it was another frigid morning in Dixie.

March made its debut with temperatures dropping into the 20s across most of northern Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia, with several cities setting records for the date.

Despite its blustery exit, however, February 1984 will be remembered as one of the warmest on record in many areas. Few will forget that December was the coldest ever in the United States with temperatures dropping as low as 60 degrees below zero in Montana.

But across South Dakota, it was the warmest Febbuaby in 30 years, with Rapid City averaging 36 degrees, 10 degrees above normal. It was the fourth warmest on record in Minneapolis, where the mean average temperature was 27.5, 10 degrees above normal, and in Albany, N.Y., where the average of 32.4 degrees was 9 degrees above normal. It was also one of the warmest on record in Portland, Maine, which only got a mere 3 inches of snow all month. It was the warmest since 1976 in South Carolina where temperatures were 2 to 4 degrees above normal.

In Phoenix, Ariz., where it hasn't rained in 54 days, it was the third rainless February on the books. On the other hand, it ranked among the top four for heavy snow in Indiana.

Today, snow showers continued from West Virginia and northeast Ohio across northwest Pennsylvania into much of New York and northern New England.

More than 3,000 people were without electricity for the fourth straight day in central and southwestern Missouri, where a state of emergency remained in effect. National Guardsmen were delivering generators to dairy farmers, flying residents out of emergencies and helping spot downed power lines.

In Ohio, where the snow reached 26 inches in Ashtabula and 17 people were known dead, a team from the Federal Emergency Management Agency planned to try again today to fly over the northeast corner to view the storm damage. Heavy snow off Lake Erie had forced them back on Wednesday.

Most of the deaths in Ohio were attributed to heart attacks in people who were clearing snow or moving trapped cars.

"We're expecting that number to increase as we keep hearing from all the counties," said Davida Matthews, spokeswoman for the Ohio Disaster Services Agency.

By this morning the storm center that had swirled out of Colorado on Sunday was well over southern Canada.

But 40 mph westerly winds trailed behind it, skimming over the Great Lakes and hurling snow squalls at cities on the shores this morning. Some of the latest accumulations included 29.4 inches in Buffalo, N.Y., and 24.9 inches in Rochester, N.Y., where the snow was still falling.

Steve Corfidi, a forecaster at the Severe Storms Center in Kansas City, Mo., said, "The snow will stop for a while, then the winds become more westerly and you get those squalls."

Cold air attacked Florida for the third day in a row and a hard freeze warning went up in the northern section as this morning's temperature at Tallahassee dropped to 27 degrees. Farmers were urged to keep close watch on the blossoming peach crop.

The 16-degree reading at Asheville, N.C., was a record for the date, as was the 19 at Meridian, Miss., the 36 at West Palm Beach, Fla., and the 45 at Miami.

State police in hard-hit Illinois said some secondary roads remained closed by blowing and drifting snow, but most major highways were cleared of the snow that reached between 1 and 2 feet.

Illinois boasted at least one storm baby, arriving Tuesday at the Franciscan Convent near Mokena at the height of the storm. Christine Heal was unable to reach a Joliet hospital, so firefighters took her to the convent where Richard Chester Heal was born. His first bed was a foil-lined cardboard box.

The lake squalls were expected to drop anywhere from 1 to 4 more inches on such places as Cleveland, with 18 inches of snow on the ground, and Erie, Pa., with 20 inches already fallen.

A Thinning-Out Of Demo Contenders

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

As the field of Democratic presidential challengers grows thinner, Gary Hart is heading South, trying to capitalize on his New Hampshire victory in the region where the next big round of primaries looms.

Hart was making a quick tour today of Alabama, Georgia and Florida, three of the states holding primaries on Super Tuesday, March 13, and where he has trailed former Vice President Walter F. Mondale in local polls.

While Mondale challenged Hart to compete with him "head-to-head" in the South, the number of their campaign rivals dropped.

Sen. Ernest Hollings, who finished sixth in New Hampshire, planned to withdraw from the race today, said a campaign aide who refused to be identified. Hollings has scheduled a morning news conference in Washington.

California Sen. Alan Cranston on Wednesday became the first of the eight Democrats to drop out.

"I know when to dream and when to count votes," Cranston said after finishing seventh in New Hampshire with just 2 percent of the vote.

Former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew said, meanwhile, that he would decide by Friday whether to continue seeking the Democratic presidential nomination.

Mondale, holding the organizational edge in the South, campaigned in Dixie a day ahead of Hart. And struggling to regain his frontrunner's title, Mondale threw down a challenge to Hart to battle him for the region's convention delegates.

"I challenge Mr. Hart to bring his campaign to the whole South," Mondale said in Atlanta. "I challenge him to compete with me here head-to-head.

"If Mr. Hart wants to be our national nominee, he should join me here and actively contest these primaries and caucuses."

A still-buoyant Hart, told of Mondale's challenge while at a stop in Chicago, said: "I respond by asking him to join me on a southern swing through Georgia, Florida and Alabama. And I will be back down there in subsequent trips."

New Construction Up For January

WASHINGTON (AP) — Spending for new construction climbed 1.4 percent in January with all major categories except public construction showing increases, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that spending on new construction totaled $281.8 billion at an annual rate in January compared to a rate of $277.8 billion in December.

The January figure represented a 13.7 percent improvement over the pace set a year ago when the construction industry was just pulling out of its severe recession slump.

Private construction was put in place at an annual rate of $232.5 billion in January, a 2 percent increase over the December rate with residential construction up 3 percent and non-residential construciton up an even healthier 7 percent.

In the residential category, construction spending for single-family homes rose 3.5 percent while spending on apartment construction was down 1.4 percent.

For the non-residential sector, construction of commercial buildings was up 13 percent and industrial and office building construction rose by 3 percent.

Public construction showed a slight 0.2 percent decline to an annual rate of $49.3 billion in January. State and local construction increased 3 percent but federally owned construction dropped 10 percent.

The January increase of 1.4 percent followed a revised December increase of 0.9 percent and a similar 1.4 percent jump in November. Last month, the department reported that construction spending had declined 0.2 percent in December.

All of the figures are adjusted to discount for normal seasonal variations.

GRAVE ROBBING

Last week we laid my grandmother to rest in Greenwood Cemetery in Greenville. Within an hour the gate was locked. The next morning by 8:45 it was discovered that several of the baskets of flowers were missing. This we could have accepted better if someone had not had the gall to remove the blanket of beautiful flowers which covered her grave.

I appeal to all people living near any cemetery, to those visiting gravesites and also to the police to set a watch to look for the suspects, obtain license plate numbers, and let's put a stop to grave robbing. People who have lost loved ones hurt enough without having to face a bare grave.

I even appeal to grave robbers: Suppose this were your own mother, father, wife, husband or child. Could you still be so heartless and lacking in respect? J.W.

Police Chief Ted Holmes said special emphasis will be given to watching the cemeteries, as you suggested. Anyone having information about grave-robbing is asked to contact the Police Department, 752-3342.

"INMATES" BEHIND BARS — Inmates are behind bars trying to raise "bail" during the Greenville Jaycees annual Danny Wood's Jail-A-Thon. According to Jail-A-Thon officials, anyone can pay a $25 fee and have a friend "arrested" by law enforcement officers. Upon arrest the person is taken to a holding cell at the Carolina East Mall, where they are allowed to make phone calls to raise the $100 "bail." Officials said last year's Jail-A-Thon netted about $10,400 for a two-day event, while Jaycees hope this year's three-day event will raise about $15,000 for the Pitt County chapter of the American Cancer Society. The Anxious Seek Help In Overcoming 'Social Phobia'

By MARCIA DUNN
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Convinced she was "a total flop" when it came to crowds, Susan dreaded speaking before more than one person at a time. Even Tupperware parties unnerved her; she gasped and trembled at introductions.

Her lifelong terror worsened over time, especially after she learned that her job for a large Pittsburgh corporation required her to show films to employees.

"It was this fear of getting up and talking. I'd sometimes feel faint, I'd gasp for air, I'd be all choked up. I'd be awake all night for days ahead of time," said Susan, 33, who asked that her real name not be revealed.

She tried hypnosis, relaxation classes, dream therapy. She considered resigning.

Nothing helped until she contacted Western Psychiatric Institute and Clinic, where she learned that what she had thought was only severe shyness was in fact a debilitating disorder known as social phobia.

Up to 35 percent of the population suffers from some form of social phobia, according to Constance Dancu, a senior clinician at the institute.

Yet, like Susan, few sufferers realize they have a certifiable illness and that help is available, Ms. Dancu said.

"Either they go into a social situation, they tough it out and they're very uncomfortable. Or it becomes so uncomfortable that they avoid the situation," she said.

Their fears involve everything imaginable.

"For some it may be attending business meetings. It might be attending luncheons for others," Ms. Dancu said. "It could be a fear of writing in front of people or drinking or eating in front of people. Or just being in a social situation and interacting with people.

"The fear is a fear of embarrassment, a fear of rejection, being evaluated in a negative fashion by others."

There's nothing wrong with a little anxiety — in fact, it's "a very positive life force," Ms. Dancu said. But there's a boundary.

"All of us have social anxiety to a certain degree when we're giving a speech or meeting new people," she said. "We're going to feel the butterflies, maybe the sweaty palms. But we attribute it to the situation, and after a few minutes we start feeling better."

The response of those suffering from social phobia is "very different," according to Ms. Dancu.

"They would be feeling very anxious, thinking people can tell they're anxious and negative thoughts (about themselves)," she said.

In the past year, Ms. Dancu and two colleagues, Dr. Samuel Turner and Deborah Beidel, have counseled about 15 social phobia victims aged 18 to 60. The psychologists began treating phobias in January 1980 as part of the institute's Anxiety Disorders Clinic.

Western Psychiatric Institute and Clinic finances its research itself. Forty-one other centers around the country receive money from the National Institute of Mental Health to study social phobia.

Although social phobia usually begins in the adolescent years, the condition is learned and can affect anyone, anytime, Ms. Dancu said.

Because it is learned, it can be unlearned, she reasons.

The psychologists, in weekly counseling sessions, encourage patients to do what they fear most. No medication is prescribed.

The success rate is high after 12 to 15 weeks of therapy, Ms. Dancu said.

"People are getting out and doing the things they were unable to do," she said.

Susan, for example, has learned to maintain "a normal level" of anxiety by "re-learning my thinking."

"It's a dream come true. I'm finally free," said Susan, who's since volunteered for a church community program and taught a handicraft course.

The main problem, according to Ms. Dancu, is getting patients to discuss their illness. Unlike people suffering from other phobias, victims of social phobia seldom reveal their fears.

Instead, they sometimes turn to alcohol or drugs.

"It's just more acceptable to be afraid of flying," Ms. Dancu said. "How often do you hear of someone being afraid of writing a letter in front of someone or giving a speech?"

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

A young reader in Omaha who acknowledges that I do not give advice has asked me to explain the actions of her "weird" mother.

"Don't get me wrong"' she wrote, "Mom's come a long way since the days she listened to 'Young Dr. Malone' on the dio, wore cotton housedresses, and a PTA meeting was the highlight of her month. She learned how to drive at age 50, got her degree at 58 and now teaches handicapped children, but the way she lives ie positively PRIMITIVE!

"She doesn't have a microwave, a dishwasher or garbage disposal. They have a bathtub, but no shower! How can you wash your hair without a shower? She oohs and aahs over my matched stoneware, but there's not more than three plates in the woman's kitchen that match. Imagine, they've been married 38 years and they're still drinking out of jelly glaases.

"She launders foil and plastic bags and uses them again and I'm embarrassed to tell you what she does with paper towels."

Paula, you have just described not only my mother but an entire generation who never throw away a rubber band or a brown paper bag, who chew gum half a stick at time and chase the last bean around the plate for as long as it takes to catch it.

Women who never burn the fireplace because it makes the brick black, who still have heels replaced on their shoes, still soak dish towels in bleach and never throw away the necks of chickens.

For a long time I thought they were cheap. They didn't know how to live life to its fullest. They cut corners and deprived themselves of life's conveniences.

And then something happened to make me take second look. I got married and with it came austerity, not of my own choosing. If we were to survive at all, I had to make it by hand, make it from scratch and make it last or I'd never make it to the end of the month. I complained and vowed that someday I'd never have to live like that again.

But, with the struggle, came a certain pride that nothing else matched.

I can explain your mother, Paula. I know her very well. She's a wise lady who is not depriving herself of anything she needs or wants. She knows something about herself that few of us are privileged to know. She has learned that she can live "without." When you know that, somehow living "with" just doesn't seem to be very important.

Students Participate In Egg Caring For Three Days

The responsibilities of parenthood have been studied by students in Elaine Tschetter's child development class at Rose High School.

Sharon Tucker, student teacher, supervised an experiment in which students carried around a raw egg for three days. The purpose was to make them aware of the time, care and attention which is required in order to be a good parent.

Students decorated their eggs to look like little people — faces were drawn on the eggs, clothing was provided and hair was made from yarn. The eggs were given a name and birth certificate. The students were to take care of their eggs just as they would take care of their own child and they took the eggs with them everywhere they went unless a responsible person was found to "egg-sit."

Students participating were Victor Barnes, Margie Boyd, Joyce Grimes, Lindsey Grimes, Michelle Hardison, Felicia Heath, Lou Middleton, Sandra Powell, Wendy Ross, Johnny Stevenson and Sylvia Whichard.

A certificate was presented to each who had a happy, healthy egg after the three days.

ST. PATRICK

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Although St. Patrick is the patron saint of Ireland, his feast day has been celebrated more widely in the United States than in his native land, according to Bernard McLane, a University of Rochester historian.

Part of the reason is cultural: "Irish immigrants to this country may have used the celebration to maintain ethnic ties," McLane says. The other part is political: "Before an independent Irish republic existed, British authorities banned St. Patrick's Day marches in Ireland," he adds.

Daughter Advised To Brush Off Her Parents' Questions

DEAR ABBY: I am a 28-year-old woman, happily married for eight years, with two children and a wonderful husband.

I work part time to help with the expenses. My husband has always worked full time. Since our marriage my parents have concerned themselves with the way we spend our money. We aren't "rich," but we manage to live comfortably and have never missed a payment of any kind.

We recently bought two snowmobiles for family recreation. Needless to say, Mom and Dad had plenty to say about how "foolishly" we spend our money.

No matter what we buy, they ask, "How much did it cost?" Or, "How much are the payments?" When I get a birthday or anniversary gift from my husband, my mother never says, "How lovely." She says, "How much did it cost?"

We have never asked my parents for a dime. They are in their 70s now, and we'd like to enjoy a good relationship with them. My husband and I are not irresponsible children, Abby. How can we tell them to "butt out" without being disrespectful?

RESPONSIBLE AND FED UP

DEAR RESPONSIBLE: You can't. Your parents still regard you are their "child," but there is nothing you can do about it. You can't change anyone else; you can change only yourself. So, brush off their prying questions with a good-humored, "Don't worry, we haven't missed a payment yet." And smile until your face breaks.

•••

DEAR ABBY: You are mistaken when you say that if a man forces his wife to have sex with him he is guilty of rape. He should not have to "force" her; the Bible says it is a wife's duty to submit to her husband.

A wife who isn't willing to submit to her husband should not have gotten married in the first place. It is little enough to pay for the protection, security and life-long partnership the marriage license provides.

Most women should take a good, long look at themselves after about 10 years of marriage, and thank God their husbands still feel like having sex with them at all! If they've had one or more children, they're probably 20 to 30 pounds heavier than when they married. Who wants to make love to a blob?

Let's face it, Abby. Women probably invented marriage because what they have to sell fades fast, and they know they had better market it before it spoils.

FED UP IN SMITHTOWN, N.Y.

DEAR FED UP: If you are married, my condolences to your wife. And if you're single, please stay that way.

•••

DEAR ABBY: Don't be so quick to condemn the husband who came home reeking of another woman's perfume. He was not necessarily guilty of fooling around with another woman.

I also came home "reeking" of perfume, and I had not been with another woman. However, I had been in a department store to buy a Valentine Day gift for my wife, when a pretty girl sprayed me (without my permission) with some new fragrance she was trying to promote. Sign me ...

Starting Point

Gov. Hunt's Education Commission has received a report recommending sweeping changes in public schools, including a step-by-step pay plan that would boost the maximum salary available for teachers to $34,000 by 1987. No overall cost has been announced for the plan, which was prepared by the commission's staff, but — at least initially — this proposal appears to be the best of several that have surfaced in recent weeks.

A starting teacher now earns $13,600 a year and can reach $19,680 after 10 years. The commission staff says that figure should go to $14,990 for the 1984-85 school year. Minimum pay for experienced teachers would go to $18,000 in 1985-86.

The stepped increases are not unreasonable, if money can be found — and we suspect it can — to support the program. And they would make the lot of North Carolina's public school teachers more acceptable.

This plan also calls for competency tests for graduation from grades 3, 6 and 8, with the state funding special summer programs for students who fail to pass the tests. The idea probably isn't feasible and probably would require a constitutional amendment even to implement, but just think how much more effective this remedial work would be if parents had to pay for it? You know that would foster more concern about what goes on in the classroom.

At any rate, the 50-member commission is meeting March 15 to consider the staff proposals, with a full report due April 5. This is a good starting point to get the Legislature into the effort to improve the public schools.

Day In The Park

The news from West Palm Beach, Fla. is that a young woman's conviction of state laws concerning nude sunbathing have been upheld by a judge.

The woman was convicted of indecent exposure for jogging topless through a state park. The decision was appealed.

We can imagine it was quite a day in the park, with parents covering the eyes of their children and wives yanking their ogling husbands to more serene surroundings.

At any rate the judge conceded that some swim suits leave little to the imagination and cover only "in the narrowest sense of the word."

Nevertheless, a young woman is presumably free in Florida to jog in a tiny contemporary swimsuits ... but not topless.

Speaking The Unspeakable

WASHINGTON — There are times when the unthinkable has to be thought and the unspeakable has to be spoken. To its credit, U.S. News & World Report last week did some thinking and speaking about the state of our defenses. The magazine asked: "Can't anybody here run a war?"

Good question. Nearly 40 years have passed since the United States recorded a significant success at arms. The Pacific campaigns of 1945, climaxed by the destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in August, led to the Japanese surrender. Since then, with the notable exception of the Grenada incident last year, it has been downhill almost all the way.

I say "almost" all the way, for of course we have witnessed some successful individual operations in this period. The Berlin airlift of 1948-49 was superbly conducted. The Inchon landing in September 1950 was a masterpiece of amphibious warfare, and the retreat from the Yalu, even though it was a retreat, was a textbook demonstration of professional skill. Vietnam saw many examples of skillfuf command and courageous fighting. In August 1981 we saw pilots from the carrier Nimitz destroy two Libyan fighters in the Gulf of Sidra. The affair in Grenada was brilliantly conducted.

When these and other achievements have been acknowledged, the unpalatable record remains. One looks back to the humiliation endured by the U.S. with North Korea's capture of our intelligence ship Pueblo in 1968. In 1970 came the U.S. raid on North Vietnam's prisoner of war camp at Sontay: No prisoners were there. Roughly the same failure of intelligence occurred in 1975, with the ill-fated attempt to rescue crewmen from the Mayaguez: The Marines found a hostile Cambodian force, but of crewmen they found none. President Carter's people spoke of the aborted venture into Iran in 1980 as a "limited success." It was in fact a fiasco. Now we witness the Marines' withdrawal from Lebanon after the loss of 241 lives that never should have been lost at all.

Running through these individual accounts of bad news is a separate stream of criticism — of tanks that malfunction, of missiles that fail, of monstrous cost overruns on defense contracts, of eye-popping waste in the procurement of spare parts. Jeffrey Record, a senior fellow for the Institute of Foreign Policy Analysis, returns a damning indictment: "Only profound intellectual and institutional deficiencies within the U.S. military itself can explain so many failures on so many battlefields for so many years."

The editors of U.S. News offer a more pointed explanation. Our armed forces, in their view, suffer grievously from three burdens. One is the suffocating consequence of an overgrown bureaucracy; a second is the destructive rivalry of the several services among themselves; a third is the failure of defense intelligence.

Let me add an unpopular thought of my own: The Pentagon has become so gorged with money in the past few years that it struggles with a bad case of bloat. In 1982 we spent $163 billion on wholly military outlays, exclusive of retirement and construction. In 1983 these items came to $184 billion. This year they are estimated at $206 billion, next year at $252 billion. No one can spend that kind of money efficiently. The need is for armed forces that are lean and mean. The Pentagon's budget is fat and fuzzy.

Keeping Park Funds

RALEIGH — Since 1967, North Carolina has received $34 million in federal grants for the acquisition and development of parks and recreation facilities. Some of the state's best known parks were funded through these grants: The Eno River, Pilot Mountain, Stone Mountain and Carolina Beach state parks, to name four.

In all, 516 projects have been funded with 68 percent of the money going to the local governments and the rest to the state.

Money for the U.S. Land and Water Conservation Fund does not come from tax collections. Instead, it is money the federal government collects from the sale of offshore drilling leases. In fiscal year 1985, these leases are expected to generate $7.4 billion.

President Reagan's proposed budget for next year cuts all state and local funding for these grants. A group of North Carolina parks and recreation enthusiasts plan to fight those cuts with a two-pronged counterattack. They'll ask Congress to restore some of the cuts and, more significantly for the long term, they're planning development of a state parks and recreation fund.

Tom Wells, president of the N.C. Recreation and Parks Society, says environmental and conservationist groups around the country will also join the effort.

"The original purpose of the bill was to put a portion of the leasing money back into the environment which was being damaged by the oil drilling offshore," Wells said. "They'll collect $7.4 billion next year and we're asking merely for $125 million nationwide, about $4 million for North Carolina."

While restoration of the money will be difficult because of the budget deficits, it won't be impossible, Jerry Woodruff, press aide to Sen. John East, said. New Interior Secretary William Clark is expected to put his own stamp on that budget and could restore the funds, Woodruff said. It's also important to remember that Congress has protected the program the past three years when Reagan has tried to kill it, Woodruff said.

Wells' ideas for a state fund are still vague but would involve some kind of non-profit commission, trust or foundation which would come under the state Department of Natural Resources and Community Development. Money collected for this fund would be distributed on a matching grant basis to build facilities around the state.

Where would the money come from? Two ideas are currently being discussed. The first would involve real estate sales. Currently, the purchaser of real estate must buy a $1 revenue stamp for every $1,000 he spends on real estate. Wells suggests that that stamp's price be raised to $2 with the extra money being set aside for parks and recreation facilities. In this case, some money would likely be set aside for local use and other for state use.

Another possibility is a tax check-off similar to wildlife check-off currently on the state tax return. Taxpayers who are due a refund could donate all or a portion of their refund to the parks fund.

Special Visit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Finally, after two years of promises, Rep. Dan Burton brought his parents to the White House to meet President Reagan.

"It was a wonderful experience," the Indiana Republican said afterward.

"My mother had an extremely difficult earlier life. She was a waitress for 18 years and my stepfather worked in a factory. The possibility of them ever meeting the president in the Oval Office was rather remote, to say the least.

"When I was running for Congress, she told me someday she'd like to meet the president," he said in a recent telephone interview. "That was probably the only real campaign promise I made — to my mother. She was thrilled almost beyond the ability to speak."

Burton is one of several hundred representatives, senators and citizens who troop through the Oval Office each year with five-minute appointments to meet the president, perhaps give him an award, link his name with a worthy charity, or just have their photograph taken.

Burton and his parents, Bonnie and Kindith Kelley of Indianapolis, were on Reagan's schedule Monday afternoon during a 30-minute period set aside each month as congressional time. The schedule is arranged by M.B. Oglesby, assistant to the president for legislative affairs.

Within the same half hour, the president also had his picture taken with Rep. Richard Schulze, R-Pa.; met a constituent of Sen. Steven Symms, R-Idaho; met a strawberry queen presented by Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and got an honorary membership in a veterans group brought in by Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind. He also received a commemorative ring from former Boston Red Sox left fielder Carl Yastrzemski, who was ushered into the Oval Office by his congressman, Silvio Conte, R-Mass.

Not surprisingly, Oglesby said he gets more requests for such opportunities from Republicans than Democrats.

"It's not that this is a chic kind of thing," he said. "It's just that they know it's a special favor and the nature of the beast is people call you when they think they will get a positive answer."

Besides the congressional time, about 30 minutes a week is scheduled for Reagan to meet with other citizens who represent worthy causes or for some other reason have met with the approval of Deputy Chief of Staff Michael K. Deaver, who presides over the scheduling meetings.

A couple weeks ago, for instance, the president had an arm wrestling session in the Oval Office with Dan Lurie, publisher of Muscle Training Illustrated magazine. And on Tuesday, Shelley Long, star of the television series, "Cheers," came to see Reagan in her capacity as chairwoman of the interagency savings bond committee.

Safety And OSHA

WASHINGTON — Are the health and safety of American workers better today than when Ronald Reagan took office? Thorne Auchter, head of the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration, says they are. But many of the 80 million Americans whom OSHA protects may have cause to wonder.

Auchter cites as proof of his tenure's success a continuing decrease in the average number of work days lost due to occupational injuries. The national average dropped from 5.9 work days per 100 workers in 1979 to 4.7 at last count.

Auchter also cites OSHA's efforts to issue new or revised rules on hazardous substances, includng final actions on an emergency temporary standard for asbestos and a "right-to-know" labeling requirement for dangerous chemicals handled on the job.

"We can say that the information we have says we're going in the right direction," Auchter told us. "And nobody has information that says we're going in the wrong direction."

In workplace safety, however, the uncertainty remains whether Auchter's policy of cooperation with employers is responsible for the reduction in lost-workday-case rates. Auchter, who has tried to soften OSHA's image as a quick-strike police force, claims that reduced inspections in some workplaces have enabled OSHA to focus on statistically more hazardous sites.

Yet his critics charge that the agency's practice of "programmed" inspections, under which OSHA inspectors only investigate job sites with an above-average lost-workday case rate, ignores situations where accidents are waiting to happen. Moreover, since 1981, OSHA has sharply reduced its number of citations and penalties; it has also referred only two cases to the Justice Department for criminal action.

If anything explains the lower rate of workplace injuries, the critics add, it's the economy's recent sluggishness.

Auchter can claim accurately that court decisions have hampered OSHA's ability to move more quickly on certain health standards.

But despite hundreds of dangerous workplace chemicals, Auchter's OSHA has not added one new substance to the list of those for which it requires maximum exposure levels. The emergency temporary standard for asbestos, in fact, came only after Auchter had stopped all work on a pre-Reagan asbestos proposal. OSHA's right-to-know rule was expedited in part by pressure from industry, which complained that state and local laws were too stringent.

Auchter may claim that the record stands in his favor. And his critics might not have sufficient statistical evidence to prove otherwise. But as Gerald Ford's OSHA chief, Morton Corn, contends, a pro-business OSHA violates the very essence of the agency's congressional mandate. Inevitably, workers will bear the brunt of that switch in emphasis.

This may not be Ronald Reagan's kind of volunteerism, but since mid-December, at least 1,500 American citizens have traveled to Nicaragua to take part in that country's coffee and cotton harvests. Another 600 U.S. citizens are working there in other capacities. Nicaragua's American work force outnumbers the contingents from West Germany (with 500 expatriates living there), Spain (120), Switzerland (70), Denmark (50) and France (35).

Ten years after its passage, the Clean Water Act has resulted in "substantial reductions...in the amount of pollutants that would otherwise have entered the waters," according to an Environmental Protection Agency report recently submitted to Congress.

Public Forum

To the editor:

I would like to clarify the articles that were published on or about Feb. 16, 1984, which stated that the North Carolina Branch of the United American Free Will Baptists has endorsed Jimmy Green for governor.

As general bishop of the United American Free Will Baptist Church, I categorically disclaim any endorsement of a gubernatorial candidate, either personally or as the official church leader of more than 150,000 members. In order for an endorsement to be made on behalf of a candidate, every annual bishop, annual conference, the executive staff and all general departments must vote on said individual. Any other procedure is not the custom nor is sanctioned by the United American Free Will Bapist Church and, thus, has no official recognition within the church body. Furthermore, neither I nor appropriate church departments have authorized any other church official to issue an endorsement on behalf of the North Carolina Branch of the United American Free Will Baptist Church.

It is very unfortunate that such a distortion has surfaced due to the confusion and discomfort that it has caused some church members. However, the laws of the church and the democratic process require procedures which cannot be compromised at any cost. Making the alleged endorsement more preposterous is the fact that I have not spoken to the candidate nor his representative and would not even recognize him by sight.

Strength For Today

In the poem, "The White Cliffs," Alice Duer Miller tells of an old Scotch nurse who brought up an English boy and did much to mould him into strong manhood. If at any time he displeased her or broke the unwritten code which she believed to be binding upon English gentlemen, she would say, "Lad, I'm thinking you'll have no sweet in you tea this evening."

No wonder she made a man of him. Sweetness is very precious to children, and we may imagine that in later years, as trouble came upon him, this youngster remembered the bitter tea he had drunk many an evening because in some way during that day he had been guilty of some oversight or offense.

We all have to drink bitter tea at times, and it is a great help if we know why the sugar has been left out. But those who have learned the lesson the old nurse taught drink what is set before them and vow to improve themselves the next time.

N.C. Execution Date Scheduled This Month

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The concrete floor may be cold to a condemned inmate in socks and shorts, but it's not likely to pull his attention from the crowded room a dozen steps from his cell.

In the room sit a dark hickory chair and a hospital gurney which the state uses to carry out its stiffest criminal penalty — execution. Death can come as gas floods the airtight chamber or as chemicals drip into the person's veins.

The room may be occupied March 16, when convicted murderer James W. Hutchins is scheduled to die by lethal injection. It would be North Carolina's first use of the death penalty in 23 years and the state's first execution by lethal injection.

Last year the General Assembly gave condemned inmates the right to choose between gas and injection as the method of execution.

Hutchins, 54, originally was scheduled to die Jan. 13 for killing three law enforcement officers in Rutherford County on May 31, 1)79. A federal judge temporarily delayed the execution 40 minutes before the deadline.

Officials at Central Prison already had moved Hutchins from his cell on Death Row to one of four holding cells about 50 yards away. Both areas are on the second floor of the prison.

"We bring them here five to seven days before (the execution) depending on the inmate and the mood of the population," said Central Prison Warden Nathan Rice, who recently led a tour of the gas chamber for journalists.

Each 6-by-9-foot holding cell contains a cot and a stainless steel sink and toilet with a small mirror on the wall. Through a slit in the cell door, the inmate can see a stainless steel table and stools. That's where Hutchin's television and radio were placed.

A corrections officer sits at the table keeping a constant eye on the inmate and every 15 minutes he makes notes on the inmate's activity.

The inmate may leave his cell to bathe at an open shower near the table while other officers watch from behind a wall of windows.

The inmate may visit attorneys, family members or a chaplain in a room on the third floor. His hands are cuffed and attached to a waist chain before he is moved.

When the time for the execution nears, the inmate is escorted by four prison officials to a "prep room" adjoining the gas chamber. He is placed on top of a gurney covered in crisp blue linens as officials strap his chest, waist, wrist, ankles and legs.

A needle is inserted in the inmate's vein and a solution to open the veins begins flowing. The gurney with the intravenous solution dangling above is moved into the gas chamber and wedged between the bulky wooden chair and the wall leading to the witness room.

The gurney is eye level with the double-paned glass to the witness room, where as many as 16 people can stand or sit cramped in yellow plastic chairs. The chairs provide the only color in the beige complex of concrete walls.

Rice said lights in the witness room will be turned off so the inmate can be seen more clearly.

A plastic shower curtain separating the gurney from the chair is pulled shut. Through a hole in the curtain, three tubes are connected to the intravenous needle and three prison employees begin dripping solutions into the inmate's vein although only one is the lethal liquid.

No one is to know which solution killed the inmate.

"It is better than giving one person the responsibility," Rice said. "It is less stressful."

Also in the room is the chair used for executions by lethal gas. Its leather head rest is cracking but the four straps to secure an inmate look new and sturdy.

Rice said two identical chairs were taken from the gas chamber at the old Central Prison, before it was demolished. Two chairs were needed for double executions, Rice said.

The door to the gas chamber resembles the watertight door used in submarines, but in this case the doors are airtight. There are two meters, one outside the chamber door and another outside the witness room, which measure any escaping gas.

A second window in the chamber looks into a room where a doctor monitors the heart rate of the inmate to determine the time of death. There also is a blue box for controlling the gas release.

Instructions for using the chamber are posted, telling how three people must simultaneously throw the switch for the gas to begin. Only one key activates the gas but none of the executioners know which one it is.

There also are facilities for a phone to inform officials of any need to call off the execution.

Courtroom Melee Not In 'Lesson'

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — It probably was not the civics lesson their teacher intended: 28 high school seniors were watching a sentencing hearing in Circuit Court when a convicted rapist lunged over a table and attacked a prosecutor.

Before the resulting melee was over, the man's brother and parents had joined the fray; three deputies, an FBI agent and a police sergeant were part of the struggle; a probation worker was hiding in the jury box and the court reporter had taken cover behind the witness stand.

The commotion Wednesday began when Michael S. Smith, 28, lost his last chance for parole when sentenced by Judge Austin E. Owen.

Smith leapt over a table and knocked Assistant Commonwealth's Attorney Kenneth A. Phillips to the floor.

"If it's the last thing I do, I'm going to kill that bastard," Smith yelled after he was subdued.

Smith's brother and parents bolted from the rear of the courtroom and jumped into the middle of the donnybrook. It was unclear whether they were trying to calm Smith or help him attack Phillips.

An FBI agent and a Norfolk police sergeant, both in the courtroom to testify in an unrelated matter, jumped to the aid of three deputies attempting to subdue Smith and his brother.

In the middle of the confusion, a shout was heard: "Get the students out!"

The students from Kellam High School were ushered hurriedly from the courtroom.

Kay Sudduth, a Virginia Beach probation supervisor, vaulted a 3-foot wooden barrier and went into the jury box to avoid the fight.

The court reporter, Linda Van Auken, grabbed her recorder and took cover behind the witness stand. Others in the courtroom, including the judge, watched with stunned looks.

The victim in the case, who had been seated on the front row of the spectators' section, fled the courtroom immediately and hid in a bathroom in an adjacent building. Deputies later escorted her from the courthouse.

Even after Smith was brought under control, his mother, who had lost her shoes and dropped to her knees amid the confusion, continued to scream.

"You don't care!" Caroline Smith shouted at Phillips. "I want that bastard killed!"

As his mother screamed, Smith first calmly called out to her, "Mom, just settle down!"

But suddenly Smith's voice changed in tone, and he began to shout his own threats at Phillips.

Smith's father, Ralph O. Smith, his hand cupped over his wife's mouth, yelled sharply to his son, "Michael, you're going to have to stand before the Lord!"

A bailiff, Tom Rollins, was the only one injured in the fight. During the melee, he suffered a scratch on his ear.

The fray delayed court proceedings for about 45 minutes.

Judge Kenneth N. Whitehurst Jr. said later that the students appeared shaken and some were crying when he came upon them in a courtyard as they were leaving Owen's courtroom.

When court resumed, Phillips made a motion not to prosecute Smith on charges in two additional assaults. He reasoned that because Smith would never be eligible for parole, further prosecution was unnecessary.

Before Wednesday, Smith had been sentenced to life plus 106 years for two rapes, two sodomies and two abductions in connection with two assaults.

When Owen sentenced him to 15½ years plus a $1,000 fine on January convictions of robbery, sodomy and abduction in a third assault, Smith lost any chance for parole. Under Virginia law, anyone convicted in three separate cases on any combination of rape, robbery or murder loses his eligibilty for parole.

Smith was carried from the courtroom through the judge's chambers and was returned to the city jail by sheriff's deputies.

Clothing Taken

Officer James Tripp said today Greenville police are continuing their investigation into the theft of an estimated $1,639 worth of property from a car, which was reported about 1:10 a.m. Wednesday.

Tripp, who said the theft occurred in a parking lot at the intersection of Fourth and Cotanche streets, said Tonya Lou Gilbert of 802 Willow St. reported the property taken included clothes, such as shirts, sweaters, dresses and jeans, as well as a lamp and curtains.

The officer said a window was broken to gain entrance to the vehicle.

Charge Filed

Gayle Cannon Dennis, 33, of Route 2, Grifton, was arrested by Greenville police about 6:10 p.m. Wednesday on charges of obtaining prescription drugs by false pretenses.

Detective N.L. Garrish said an employee at Nichols' pharmacy called police at 3:17 p.m., reporting that he had received a telephone order for Darvocet 100. Questioning the order, Garris said the pharmacist called the doctor's office to confirm the prescription, and found that the physician had not prescribed the drug.

Garris said Ms. Dennis was taken into custody when she came in to pick up the prescription.

Bloodmobile

Despite some confusion Wednesday, a Bloodmobile visit at the Moose Lodge netted 241 pints of blood, according to area chairman Mike Colombo.

He said that because of the need to collect as many units as possible due to the status of the blood bank, high school students from D.H. Conley and North Pitt were bused in on an experimental basis. In addition, an unusually large number of citizens who scheduled donor appointments showed up. He said the resulting number of potential donors on hand caused confusion and inconvenience that the committee will correct at the next visit on May 2 at the Moose Lodge.

Congress Argues Policy On Credit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Merchants are free to charge credit customers more than those paying with cash while the House and Senate wrangle over a bill that would reinstate a prohibition on such surcharges.

The House returned to the Senate on Wednesday an amended version of a bill the Senate approved the previous day extending the ban to May 15.

It the Senate refuses to accept the amendments, the issue will have to be decided by conference committee.

The 10-year-old ban on surcharges expired Monday.

The version of the bill returned to the Senate includes the complete text of a credit card fraud bill passed 410-0 by the House last October.

Rep. Frank Annunzio, R-Ill., chairman of the Banking consumer subcommittee, engineered the amending of the bill as a way of forcing Senate action on the fraud bill, according to Annunzio aide Curt Prins.

Though merchants can now charge credit card-users higher prices, aides in the House and Senate say their fees must be within the boundaries set by state and federal usury laws.

A bill which would set fees at no more than 5 percent of the purchase price also has been passed by the Senate. Hearings on that measure are expected to be held in Annunzio's committee within two weeks.

Prins said the congressman believes the surcharges are anti-consumer and may try to amend the bill to prohibit them unless a state enacts legislation authorizing them within its borders.

The credit card fraud bill, which would tighten up federal law on theft and criminal misuse of plastic money, is supported by a broad coalition including the administration, consumer groups and the credit industry.

"The American Bankers Association says that credit fraud costs $1 billion a year," Prins said. "We're talking about $2.7 million lost for each day the fraud bill is delayed. This money comes right out of the consumers' pocket. ...

"All we're asking them is to take a bill everyone agrees to," Prins said of the Senate which has allowed the bill to languish in its Banking Committee. "The question is, does the Senate want to play games or clean up the problem."

Ken McLean, minority counsel of the Senate committee, said he thought the fraud bill was being held up because lawyers were questioning whether some of its provisions were properly worded.

McLean said Annunzio's maneuver "will delay things" for the surcharge ban extension bill. "The ban expired and the sky did not fall in," he said. "I guess it could wait a few days."

Advocates of surcharges, who also say they are on the side of consumers, argue that because credit transactions cost merchants money, cash customers are subsidizing card-users.

Senators have reported heavy lobbying for a continued ban by banks and credit card companies who fear a loss in business if consumers switch to cash to avoid paying surcharges.

The Federal Reserve Board says that credit card use adds about $6 billion a year to the cost of goods and services. Surcharge advocates say that about two-thirds of this is paid by cash customers.

Athletes Go To Study Hall, Or Cannot Play

By PHYLLIS MENSING
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Basketball players at Temple University have to go to study hall or they can't play on the team. At first some thought it was a joke. But now Temple players, ranked 18th in the country with a 22-3 record, are winning in the classroom too.

They're doing it with the help of a former graduate student, a salesman and a businessman who loves basketball, and in the process some of the players are getting help planning careers.

"There has been a clear shift in academic progress," said counseling director Emily Sherwood. "Some may not have thought about education before.

"So few people are going to make it to the pros, for them to count on it would be a mistake," she said.

"We have told them for years about how winning in the classroom leads to winning on the floor, and now they're starting to tell us some of the same dhings," said Coach John Chaney, who has rescheduled practice or taken a tutor along so his players can keep up with their homework.

Temple's record this year is a big improvement over last year's 14-15 finish, although last year several key players were hurt.

The rules are firm: The entire basketball team must attend study hall once a week at the Temple counseling center. Players who have tried to cut study hall have been told they couldn't play on the team.

But study hall means more than books.

"It's like a family," said Granger Hall, a business major who is Temple's star forward and leading rebounder.

"We all get along, we all joke. And that concept carries over on the court, because we all know what our abilities are," Hall said.

The basketball team's 4-year-old program, run by Jon Cohen, is the oldest of the study hall programs for Temple athletes. Study hall isn't mandatory for all the other teams.

The program was partly the result of local and national publicity over the poor academic progress of some student athletes.

"There were articles breaking in the news and some awful stories that came out," said Dr. Herbert Horikawa, a psychologist at the counseling center.

Cohen, 32, was a graduate student in psychology when Temple Athletic Director Gavin White approached him four years ago about starting the tutoring program.

"He mentioned that in the last few years very few Temple players had graduated, and he asked Emily Sherwood and me what we could do to help," Cohen said. "I had an interest in athletics, and I thought I'd take on the challenge." He now works part-time for the athletic department.

Temple didn't release the number of players who graduated before the tutor program began, but Cohen said one third of the 450 athletes made the dean's list for the fall semester, and all of the basketball players are on target to graduate.

Academic improvement is very hard to measure, said Cohen's wife, Mary Toscani, who started as a tutor with the basketball team and last September became a full-time academic adviser to the athletic department.

"But we can see, because basketball players are a relatively small group, that they've turned from having a negative attitute toward studies to having an interest with them," Ms. Toscani said. "In four years with the program, no one on the basketball team has flunked out."

"I really do empathize with these kids because of their schedule," said tutor Rachelle Williams. Twice this year, the players have missed five days in a row because of road trips and they frequently have to practice at 6 a.m. before classes.

Eric Zemper, a research coordinator for the NCAA in Kansas City, said academics has "been a concern for a long time." Starting in the fall of 1986, incoming college freshmen will need a C average in 11 college preparatory courses to qualify for athletic scholarships under NCAA rules, he said.

Cohen said starting the program seemed like a thankless job at first.

"I thought study hall was a joke, and some other players said, 'We have to go to practice and to class, why this?'" said senior center Colin McNish.

"But now, the guys look forward to coming down here. We all know everybody needs help wherever they go," McNish said.

Cohen recruited several part-time tutors to help him, including a salesman he met in a shoe store and a businessman who shared his love of basketball. They are paid a "minimal amount."

Players come to the study hall at various times, wheneve classes allow, and meet individually with tutors. Some players have found new areas of study, and some have gained new confidence. Guard Nate Blackwell changed his major from accounting to teaching after discussions with Cohen. "I just told him how I felt about working with kids, and now I'm thinking about being a teacher," Blackwell said.

"I needed help academically," said McNish. "But beyond that, I just needed people on my side."

"Sometimes it's just telling them they can. It sounds over simplified, but believe me, sometimes that's all that's needed," said tutor Elizabeth LaRoche. "A lot of love goes on in this place."

One Dog, One Vote

CHESTERFIELD, Mass. (AP) — When the candidates are dogs, dogs should get the vote, the board of selectmen has decided.

The question of canine enfranchisement arose Feb. 11 when Gail Kielson was elected the sole delegate from this Berkshire Hills town to the State Democratic convention.

The unanimous vote was cast by her husband, David, the only other one of about 60 registered Democrats in town to show up at the caucus in the couple's kitchen, and by their golden retriever, Rusty. Rusty reportedly indicated his preference by barking "aye."

Former Selectman Donald E. Tobes wrote to the board seeking equal rights for his golden retriever, Sandy, after reading about Rusty in a Miami newspaper while vacationing in Florida.

Selectmen responded with a letter headed "One Dog-One Vote" in which they observed that, "Sandy is of sounder mind and judgment than some voters and most selectpersons." They recommended that the town clerk and Board of Registrars enroll him for all town elections in which another member of his species is among the candidates.

The selectmen noted, however, that they were "mindful that the trustworthiness of man's best friend ought not to be tainted by the political machinations of man."

Before he can vote, Sandy must demonstrate his ability to "make his mark squarely upon the ballot," the selectmen said. Chesterfield uses paper ballots.

Local Origins In A Double Death

A mother and daughter found dead in the daughter's home in Morehead City Monday afternoon were originally from Greenville.

Clara Williams Springs, 65, and her mother, Janie Bell Williams, 93, both died of heart disease apparently only hours apart, medical examiner Dr. Charles Garrett said.

Their bodies were discovered by Morehead City police after letter carrier Barbara Yeomans became concerned about letters piling up in their mailbox. Garrett said he could not determine which of the women died first or if either knew about the other's death.

According to Walter J. Williams, a nephew of Mrs. Williams' husband, Mrs. Springs moved from Greenville to the Morehead City area some time during World War II. Her mother joined her there a few years ago, he said.

He said Mrs. Williams' husband and Mrs. Springs' father, James Lewis Williams, was the first campus policeman hired by what is now East Carolina University. The family residence was located on 13th Street adjacent to the old First Pentecostal Holiness Church building, he said. Mrs. Williams was an active member of the First Pentecostal Holiness Church here as long as she lived here and had kept her membership here, her pastor, the Rev. Frank Gentry said.

Suggests New Approach In Military Economies

ECU News Bureau

The military could save taxpayers millions of dollars by revamping its promotions and awards structure, an East Carolina University business professor says.

In a paper presented at the annual ECU Phi Kappa Phi Symposium, Dr. John D. Longhill, a retired Air Force colonel and ECU School of Business professor, said people who get promotions in the military are the ones who get commanders what they need. This system, he said, "is not set up to consider costs."

As a result, he said, the government often comes up short in getting its money's worth for the billions it spends on defense.

Longhill cited recent accounts of exhorbitant prices paid by the defense department for spare parts and tools. In one contract, the government was paying about $9,000 for a wrench that could have been purchased for only a few dollars in a hardware store. And this, Longhill said, "is only the tip of the iceberg."

Longhill believes the problems could be helped by putting more cost-conscious people into positions of command. But this would require some changes in the military's promotions and awards structure, "something that is not likely to happen," he said.

The other alternative would be for civilians to "not lose control of what is going on in defense spending. We can spend a lot less. An aware citizenry can make the military do it," Longhill said.

Prior to joining the ECU faculty in 1978, Longhill was an Air Force flier and worked in military managerial and planning positions and was chief of the Computer Applications Group with the Air Force Office of Studies and Analysis. His special field of interest is operations management.

In his paper, Longhill further explained that the problem in the military is that those in command are what he calls "operational people." People in the Air Force, for example, are "operational people." Their concern, he said, is with getting the materials they need to do their job. "It doesn't matter how much it costs."

He noted that most of the high level command positions in the Air Force are held by pilots. Being a pilot is almost a prerequisite to becoming a general in the Air Force with the same kind of promotion structure exisiting in other branches of the military. As a result of the operationally oriented officer being in a decision making position, the military "is going after what it needs and hang the costs," he said.

With the government spending the bulk of its budget, about 29 percent, on defense for such items as fighter planes that cost as much as $40 million a copy and Trident submarines costing more than $1 billion to produce, the question, Longhill said, "is not whether we have too much defense. If these armaments keep us out of World War III then it is not too much."

"Instead, we should question if we are spending too much for the defense that we have," he said.

Phi Kppa Phi is an ECU honor society. Papers presented at the symposium will be published and made available to the public. This year's theme was "Peace and War 1984: Power and Moral Responsibility."

Outlines Program To Provide Jobs

KINSTON — State Rep. John Gillam of Bertie County, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress from the 1st District, outlined a four-point program to provide jobs for eastern North Carolina residents while speaking to a group of about 100 supporters here Tuesday.

Gillam said the jobs program would be the "first comprehensive economic development program ever implemented in the 1st Congressional District of North Carolina.

"There is no reason Piedmont North Carolina should continue to receive 62 percent of new industrial capital investment in this state," Gillam said, proposing the establishment of a commission to define the specific problems of unemployment and economic stagnation in each of the 21 counties in the 1st District.

Gillam suggested that the commission would also identify available resources such as manpower, educational facilities and opportunities, and transportation availability; and determine the character and kinds of development compatible with the region's environment, rural lifestyle and need for new jobs.

The commission would then develop "a comprehensive program, based on cooperation and communication, to ensure that all of eastern North Carolina pulls together toward a common goal of economic enrichment and prosperity," Gillam said. "Define, identify, determine and develop — four points to put eastern North Carolina back to work now."

Gillam explained: "This regional job center concept works much as the magnet school system — by identifying target areas for industry, we can provide the companion service industries such as machine shops; we can provide vocational education on a regional basis more appropriate to the industries we are attracting, and we can give priorities to our highway improvement program to upgrade roads to and from the job centers."

He pledged to bring together "businessmen and women, farmers and fishermen, state and local public officials, career public servants and private citizens" to build the economic development program.

Survivors Of Nazi Experiments In Reunion

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — A group of twins who were subjected to genetic experiments by Nazi doctor Joseph Mengele shared sober memories as they gathered for the first time since their stay in the Auschwitz death camp 40 years ago.

The reunion this week was arranged by CANDLES — Children of Auschwitz Nazis' Deadly Lab Experiment Survivors — which aims "to locate survivors and study the scope and effects of the genetic experiments," according to Eva Moses Kor of Terre Haute, Ind.

Mrs. Kor's sister, who lives in Israel, published an advertisement in a local newspaper about the reunion.

About 100 pairs of twins and triplets were held in the camp in Poland, at which Mengele — known as "the Angel of death" — conducted his experiments.

Yehuda Schwartz, a high school principal, said he decided to attend the reunion and relive his World War II experiences "because I can't bear to see us living documends dying off while more and more people try to pretend the Holocaust never happened."

"I'm not sure, maybe that's me," Schwartz said as he looked at slides of a group of children behind barbed wire. "I was 13 years old and I weighed about 28 kilos (61 pounds).

"They used to measure us all the time, me and my twin sister. Mengele wanted to know if twins were a normal phenomenom."

Hedva Katz was 13 when she, her sister and mother were brought by train to the death camp.

"We screamed for mother not to leave us. She cried and said she'd be back for us. They took her away and we waited by the fence three days. Then a woman came up and said: 'You see that smoke over there, that's where they're burning your mother,'" she said.

Erne Spiegel, who at 29 was the oldest twin, was put in charge of the twins' hospital barracks.

"One day I saw a bathtub. I don't know what was in it but Mengele put bodies of Jewish dwarfs, mongoloids and twins in so their flesh would fall off and he could see their skeletons," he said, adding: "The Angel of Death wanted to show the 'perfect' German race what warped skeletons Jews had."

"We are sending an urgent message....The CANDLES are lit....The twins are calling....Come in Dr. Mengele," were the words of a poem written by Vera Kriegel, who read the verse to the gathering. The group is planning a reunion for survivors around the world next year.

Several of the participants remembered Mengele, now believed living in Paraguay, as a tall, handsome officer who was kind to them on his frequent visits to the barracks.

"When he took our blood, he was much gentler than all the nurses. There were 3-year-old triplets in our barracks and one of them looked like Mengele. The doctor used to come by to play with him every week," recalled Hava Blau, who was taken to Auschwitz from her home in Czechoslovakia in 1944 at the age of 11.

"They took blood from us all the time and X-rays too. We cried all the time because we were scared. We didn't know what they were going to do to us," Mrs. Blau said.

"We are only alive because we were twins," she said pointing to her sister.

Her husband, Alex, interjected, saying that "to this day I wake up at night and hear her crying or screaming."

"Mengele thought he would find out how to make twins and that way increase the German population. The rumor going around was that he wanted to inject our blood into German women so they would beget twins," said Rahel Oren, the twin sister of Mrs. Blau.

Yehudit Yagoda described how her sister died at the age of 11 immediately after the camp was liberated in 1945 because Mengele had put her in a ward with highly infectious tuberculosis patients "to see how that would affect a twin."

MENGELE'S TWINS — Some of the 15 pairs of twins who survived the genetic experiments of Nazi doctor Joseph Mengele met in Tel Aviv this week for the first time in 40 years. Monkeys Prove Very Adept In Video Game

MISSOULA, Mont. (AP) — In an experiment on diet and learning, researcher Steve Lavender plunked eight rhesus monkeys down in front of Pac-Man video games to see how they would fare.

But the critters made a monkey of Lavender, proving so adept at the game that it had to be redesigned to beat their sure-fire system of winning.

With the beat of folk-rock music thumping in his ears, one simian named Albert plays for about four hours a week. He maneuvers the voracious yellow Pac-Man figure around the screen as it heads toward its goal while eluding vicious predators. When Albert succeeds, yellow lights flash and a miniature marshmallow rolls down a chute to his left.

Albert pops it into his mouth and resumes play, still chewing.

But Albert quickly figured out that he did not have to chase over the whole screen to get a marshmallow. He simply steers Pac-Man to a row of three figures at the bottom of the screen and munches more marshmallows while waiting 60 seconds for the same figures to reappear.

Lavender, a 24-year-old graduate student in psychology at the University of Montana, has now redesigned the game somewhat to encourage the monkeys to use the entire screen.

His experiment is part of a program to see how diet deficiencies — in this case, zinc — are related to poor learning.

The marshmallows, by the way, are not part of the special diet, and a good thing too judging by the monkeys' success on such a steady diet of them.

Still, Lavender often finds himself rooting for the monkeys.

"It's like watching your home team play," he said.

2nd Denial Will Stand

RALEIGH (AP) — Southern Bell will not appeal a second denial of its request for a $21.8 million interim rate increase by the state Utilities Commission, the utility's vice president for North Carolina said Wednesday.

The request was part of Southern Bell's $121 million rate case to recover losses caused by the transfer of telephone equipment to AT&T Jan. 1. The commission ruled against the interim request because the utility did not show there was an emergency.

"I think we could successfully appeal the decision," said Jere Drummond in a press release. "The commission's contention that an emergency situation must exist is simply not the law, but the time required to resolve an appeal makes it impractical, since this is part of our overall rate case scheduled for later this year."

Drummond said Southern Bell lost $22 million, or 10 percent of its operating revenues, due to divestiture.

"All we can do now is hope the commission will proceed with our rate case as quickly as possible and recognize the realities of the new competitive world in which we now operate," he said.

Says Nuke Pact Probably Ahead

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's top negotiator at the stalled strategic missile talks in Geneva says there probably will be a U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms agreement "down the line," despite tough rhetoric from Moscow.

Gen. Edward Rowny told an American Legion meeting this week that the Soviets are reassessing the strategy after failing to prevent NATO deployment in Western Europe of new U.S. medium-range missiles.

FOCUS

Wealth of Nations

U.S. involvement in Lebanon symbolizes the trouble within the Arab world, and the importance of that region to our nation. The 21 Arab nations are home to 120 million people. They range in size from Bahrain, at 230 square miles, to Saudi Arabia, at 900,000. Saudi Arabia's yearly output of $16,000 per person is greater than that of the U.S. Emphasis on the military is growing. Syria has 1/6 as many people as France, but twice as many tanks.

DO YOU KNOW — What is the most populous country in the Arab world?

Third World Debts An Economic 'Time Bomb'

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

The shadow that Third World debt casts over the international economy is ballooning ever larger — $44 billion larger in the past year alone. With each billion, world financial leaders grow ever more nervous.

Lower interest rates, a key to defusing the "debt bomb," have not materialized. The worldwide economic rebound — another essential — has been more flat than flashy. And from Nigeria to Brazil to the Philippines, the big debtor nations are finding the repayment regimen, marked by unemployment and high prices, more and more burdensome.

After seizing power in Nigeria, Maj. Gen. Muhammadu Buhari declared last month that he would not "mortgage our economy to any country or anyone else."

It was the kind of tough stance increasingly favored by the Third World debtors, locked in painful negotiations with international institutions and banks of the Enited States, Western Europe and Japan over stretching out repayment schedules.

At a crisis summit last month in Quito, Ecuador, the leaders of Latin American nations, the world's biggest debtors, once again rejected the notion of forming a "debtors' cartel" that would dictate terms for repaying the rich "north" — possibly including a freeze on repayments.

They called on their creditors to "be more flexible and realistic" in negotiations. Otherwise, they said, Latin America could never make good on its debts.

The roots of the debt dilemma go back at least a decade.

In the inflationary 1970s, developing countries became desperate for big loans to pay for oil and other increasingly expensive imports. It was easy money — the banks of New York, London and other Western capitals had billions in deposits of surplus "petrodollars" from the oil-producing countries.

Inthe late 1970s, however, the United States and other Western governments tightened up money supplies in order to fight inflation. This drove some big industrial economies into recession, and pushed up world interest rates.

It was a one-two punch for the Third World.

Recession meant industrial nations were buying less Third World sugar, cotton, copper and other commodities, and at lower prices. Less Third World income meant less for repaying loans. At the same time, higher interest rates kicked foreign debt out of control, since many loans were "adjustable," their premiums ratcheting upward with world rates.

By the end of 1982, developing nations and the Soviet bloc owed Western banks and governments $766 billion, the World Bank reports.

Beginning with Mexico, two dozen countries had to sit down with Western bankers, government representatives and the International Monetary Fund, the Western-dominated lender of last resort, to try to work out new emergency loans and "rescheduling" of old loans to stretch out repayments.

Despite these efforts, arrears still stack up, and the underdeveloped world's foreign debt load has swollen to $810 billion, the World Bank reports.

To qualify for IMF emergency lending, the Third World governments must cut wages, increase prices and reduce government spending — so that the dollars they earn through exports are spent less on themselves at home, and more on repaying loans.

These austerities have thrown hundreds of thousands of people out of work in developing countries. In Brazil, which has $96.5 billion in foreign loans, making it the Third World's biggest debtor, business and labor both estimate unemployment at 15 percent or more, not counting "underemployment," those working irregularly.

The impact is felt in the industrial countries as well — and not just in tense bank boardrooms. Since Latin America is buying less from abroad, U.S. exports to that region have declined sharply. The result: More than 300,000 U.S. jobs have been lost, according to a special study commission of the Americas Society, a U.S. business-sponsored group.

But the burden is heaviest in the debtor countries.

In Mexico, labor leaders complain that working-class families have had to give up meat and survive on beans and corn tortillas. In Brazil, Rio de Janeiro's popular governor, leftist Leonel Brizola, denounces the IMF guidelines as a "provocation to the Brazilian people." Even in Communist-governed Poland, economic officials carried on a newspaper debate over whether the heavily indebted Poles should aggressively demand much easier terms from Western bankers.

Economists agree that poor countries need a constant supply of fresh capital to develop. But in 1983 the Third World paid back $11 billion more than it received in new borrowings, the World Bank reports.

"If we neglect the social needs of our societies, we are soon going to face problems that will be not only extremely serious but may indeed become insoluble," Antonio Ortiz Mena, the Mexican who heads the Inter-American Development Bank, said in a recent speech.

Some specialists studying the problem detect hopeful signs.

William R. Cline of Washington's Institute for International Economics points to the surprising capacity of some Latin American nations to build surpluses of exports over imports, and to the current "stability" of interest rates.

"I think we're seeing the first installment of a resolution to the debt problem," Cline said in an interview.

But others worry that interest rates remain too high and may go higher.

The Americas Society commission, comprising U.S. business leaders and bankers, concluded that uncertainty over interest rates threatens both the Third World's ability to repay its loans, and the pace of global economic recovery.

International recovery is crucial. For the "south" to earn enough to pay off its huge debt, the "north" will have to buy much more of its exports.

But some economists now fear a possible new worldwide recession in 1985. The United States is rebounding firmly from its economic slide, but the recovery is faltering in Western Europe, where economic growth is projected at less than 2 percent for 1984.

Negotiations in the coming weeks involving the IMF and three of the most troubled debtors — Argentina, Brazil and Nigeria — could show the way for what the experts predict will be more "muddling through" on the debt issue through 1984.

The negotiations will be tough. In the Argentine Congress last week, legislative leader Juan Trilla declared that if Argentina's creditors insist on "harsh terms" for repayment, Argentina could "seal off" its economy from the world.

It was a threat to repudiate debts — a decision that would shake the world financial system.

Jakarta Seeks To End Pedicab-Use

By KENNETH L. WHITING
Associated Press Writer

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — If the city fathers have their way, Jakarta's pedicabs will reach the end of the road this year.

The three-wheeled vehicle, known here as a becak (pronounced betchak), served the poor for decades as their main means of transportation. Now they are considered inhumane obstacles to smooth-flowing traffic.

Passengers sit in a canopied seat between two bicycle wheels with the puffing driver steering from a perch at the rear.

Becaks are already restricted to the outer fringes of this city of 6 million, and Jakarta governor Soeprapto says no new licenses will be issued after Dec. 31.

Not that the lack of a license has troubled becak operators in the past. A census last year counted 39,552 becaks in the capital, only 7,828 of them with official permits.

At the peak in 1970, there were 150,000 becaks and 200,000 drivers. Motorized three-wheelers that look like golf cartc took away much of their business. But rock bottom fares, set by haggling, made becaks indispensable in slum areas.

Previous plans to clear the streets of the slow, human-powered vehicles got nowhere. A 1972 decree that the city would be becak-free by 1980 was never seriously enforced, officials said. This time the municipal authorities seem to mean business.

Jakarta's manpower office plans to offer vocational training for thousands of jobless drivers, but many say their employment prospects are bleak.

Most of the drivers are unskilled migrants from rural Java who sought work in the city to support families in the country. They usually rent the becak and contract themselves for several years while living in accommodation provided by the owner, sometimes the becak itself.

Officials say drivers earn about 5,000 rupiahs ($5 U.S.) a day. They pay the owner 700 rupiahs (70 U.S. cents) of this for the use of his vehicle and accommodation.

Becaks are not the only blemish the city wants removed. Vagrants, "untraditional" massage parlors and foreign language signs on buildings also attract official ire.

Like the hapless pedicab drivers, thousands of vagrants are refugees from rural poverty. Sending them home offers no permanent solution because they or others like them trickle back to this crowded capital.

A feasibility study is under way on shipping vagrants to a small island in Jakarta Bay for re-education and vocational training, Soeprapto said. The island of Tidung Kecil is several hours from the city by motorboat. After an unspecified period of rehabilitation, ex-vagrants would be given the option of returning to their rural villages to stay or resettling outside Java.

The police recently shut about 50 massage parlors for operating without permits, violating the terms of their licenses and other transgressions. A police spokesman said many of the shuttered parlors offered "untraditional" massages, a euphemism for prostitution.

The 149 remaining establishments may continue to provide traditional massages by uniformed masseuses who are 35 or older. Signs on their premises must be in Bahasa Indonesia, however.

"Bahasa" means language and Soeprapto has revived a 1974 decree to erase non-Indonesian words from signs in public places, to promote the national tongue.

Barbershop, amusement center, coffee shop, art gallery, drive-in theater and shopping center were among the offensive terms cited. Officials said businesses with legitimate links to tourism could keep their foreign words but they must be used along with Indonesian translations.

Caribou Herd On Endangered List

WASHINGTON (AP) — The last remaining herd of caribou in the lower 48 states — about 30 animals in the Pacific Northwest — has been listed as an endangered species.

The designation by the Fish and Wildlife Service for the Selkirk caribou herd makes it a federal crime to kill the animals. The maximum penalty for a violation is a $20,000 fine and one year in prison.

The Selkirk caribou is the 786th animal listed as an endangered species.

Charge Gromyko 'Unconstructive'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko has been accused by the State Department of engaging in "familiar and unconstructive rhetoric" in his new policy speech on Soviet-American relations.

Department spokesman Alan Romberg said Gromyko's statement, delivered Monday to a Soviet audience in Minsk, "does not square with the expressed desire ... of the Soviet leadership for a productive dialogue with the United States."

Gromyko said the Soviet Union will not resume arms talks until the United States "shows a readiness" to dismantle its new nuclear missiles in Western Europe, according to an account published in Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was slightly higher today, after turning in a mixed performance on Wednesday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which fell 2.51 points Wednesday, was up 1.04 points at 1,155.67 by noontime.

The number of advancing issues was running slightly ahead of declines in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The stock market, which rallied Monday on hopes for a compromise on cutting the federal budget deficit, fell sharply the next day.

The deficit has been blamed for persistently high interest rates, which have pressured stock prices by producing bond market yields which are proving quite attractive to investors.

Before trading opened today, the government reported that spending for new construction climbed 1.4 percent in January from December and 13.7 percent ahead of the pace set a year ago.

Leading the list of the most actively-traded NYSE issues, Texaco was up ¾ at 45¾ and Gulf was up ⅜ at 69⅜. Both are reported to be potential takeover targets. Among other early volume leaders, American Telephone & Telegraph was up ¼ at 17⅛, Citicorp was down ¼ at 36¼ and Warner Lambert was up ¾ at 33.

The NYSE's composite index rose .14 to 90.58. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .46 at 210.68.

Volume by noontime on the Big Board totaled 35.82 million shares, compared with 36.78 million shares at the same point Wednesday.

Warren Is Retired

Lt. Clifton E. Warren retired from the Greenville Police Department Wednesday after more than 28 years service.

Warren, a Pitt County native, attended school in Stokes, served two years with the U.S. Army in Europe, then worked for Export Leaf Tobacco Co. and was manager of the Woolworth store in Washington before joining the police department here in August 1955.

"I got most of my education right here," Warren said of the police department Wednesday, shortly before he was honored by fellow officers at a reception.

Warren, who was promoted to sergeant in June 1962, was promoted to the rank of lieutenant in April 1966, and has served as a shift supervisor for most of the time since them. However, Warren has served as the department's equipment and court liaison officer, and for the past few months has been administrative assistant to the captain in charge of the department's uniformed division.

At the reception, Chief Ted Holmes congratulated Warren on his retirement and said, "We're going to miss him."

The chief also told Warren, "We appreciate the service you've given to the community."

In addition to members of the department, others attending the reception included City Manager Gail Meeks, and several retired members of the department, including former Chief Glenn Cannon.

Accepts Fine In Test-Cheating

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — The former operator of Three Mile Island has agreed to pay a $45,000 fine and put $1 million into an emergency planning fund after pleading guilty to using false test results before the March 1979 accident at the nuclear plant.

U.S. District Judge Sylvia Rambo accepted the plea Wednesday from Metropolitan Edison Co., which operated TMI until another subsidiary of General Public Utilities Corp. took it over in 1982.

Federal prosecutors dropped four other charges in return for the guilty plea and six pleas of no contest to related charges.

GPU Chairman William Kuhns said Wednesday there was no evidence that the violations were connected to the accident at TMI's Unit 2, the worst in the history of commercial nuclear power

'Field Hearing' For Proposals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., announced Wednesday that the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources will hold a field hearing on his proposal to set aside wilderness area in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., will chair the hearing, scheduled to be held March 16 in Bryson City.

Helms introduced the Great Smoky Mountains Wilderness Act last year to designate 400,000 acres of the park as wilderness. The bill would also authorize a $9.5 million cash payment to Swain County and forgive a debt owed to the Farmers Home Administration.

Helms said he wanted to give western North Carolina citizens a chance to comment on the legislation.

Correction

Jay Kuykendall, a student at A.G. Cox School, has been named to the honor roll for Pitt County schools for the third marking period. Wednesday's Daily Reflector incorrectly listed him as Kay Kuykendall.

Find, Save 2 Hikers

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Two young hikers wandering across High Windy Mountain in nearly a foot of snow were rescued Wednesday after they broke into a fire tower and used forest service equipment to radio for help.

Nat Trout, 17, and Stewart Hicks, 16, both of Black Mountain, were taken by rescue teams to Memorial Mission Hospital. They were treated for exposure and released.

Mary White, chief of the Fairview Rescue Squad, said the youths had been hiking in 10 inches of snow for about five hours when they decided to utilize the caretaker's radio equipment in a cabin near the unmanned lookout tower to summon help.

Fire towers are manned only during dry weather conditions, and heavy snows in recent days had eliminated any danger of a forest fire.

The youths contacted the National Forest Service on the service's radio in the caretaker's cabin, then waited in the cabin until they were located by rescuers, White said.

Rescue workers wrapped Trout and Hicks in blankets while others built a fire in the cabin's wood heater in an effort to minimize damage they might have suffered from hours of exposure to snow and cold.

Rick Patton of the Black Mountain unit said rescuers were fairly certain they had found the hikers when they discovered two sets of tracks in the snow on High Windy trail.

Rescuers transported the two by four-wheel-drive vehicles to U.S. 74.

Tractor-Trailer Went Into Ditch

An estimated $8,000 damage resulted to a tractor-trailer truck driven by Robert Simmons of New Bern in a 3 p.m. accident Wednesday on N.C. 43 south of Greenville at Taylor's Estates Trailer Park.

Highway Patrol Trooper John Tomer said a Greenville Utilities Commission truck, driven by Bernice Glisson, which was pulling a pole trailer had slowed to make a left turn into the trailer park drive when the truck driven by Simmons attempted to pass.

Tomer said when Simmons realized the utilities truck was making a turn, he applied his brakes, causing the tractor-trailer to run into a roadside ditch.

Tomer said Glisson was charged with having improper equipment (no lights on the trailer) following investigation of the mishap.

Camel Rally Tops ECU In Overtime

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

FAYETTEVILLE — David Canady dumped in 24 points, including 12 of 15 free throws, to lead Campbell University to a 73-63 overtime victory over East Carolina University's hapless Pirates last night in Cumberland County Arena.

The loss was the 22nd of the year for the Pirates, who have won but four. This was their final opportunity during the regular season for a road victory — and although they held a 12-point lead late in the first half and an eight-point spread midway the second, they could not hold it all together to pull it out.

Campbell — like many of those who preceeded it — was outshot from the floor by the Pirates, but won the game at the foul line. The Camels hit on 23 of 33 attempts, while ECU went to the line but 14 times, making nine. ECU did not shoot a free throw in the final 10:13 of the game — after having bulled back out to an eight-point lead.

That last free throw came on a three-pointer by Derrick Battle, giving ECU a 47-39 lead. Ten of the next 12 Campbell points, however, came at the foul line as Canady hit on eight of those and added the lone basket during the streak. Kevin Spain added the other two free throws.

A tap by Canady tied it at 47-all, and two free throws 45 seconds later put Campbell ahead for the first time since the opening basket. Tony Robinson fouled out of the game on that play — the first of three Pirates to lead with five fouls.

William Grady drove to the basket to tie it up and Curt Vanderhorst hit to give the Pirates the lead again, 51-49 with 6:05 left, but Campbell tied itup five straight times after that, the last on a jumper in the lane by Russ Elbaum with 29 seconds to play.

East Carolina lost the ball on the inbounds play, as Grady was tied up and stripped, but Campbell's shot with eight seconds left bounced off and the Pirates rebounded. A foul was called as the Pirates raced up court, but referee John Clougherty ruled the whistle came after the horn.

In the overtime, Canady put Campbell ahead smashing his way to the basket over Vanderhorst for a 61-59 lead. Roy Smith countered with a jumper but Canady hit two more at the line with 3:29 left and the Pirates never caught up again. Harvey Smith added two free throws and Spain made a three-point play to up the lead to 68-61 before the Pirates scored again. Campbell then added three more free throws and a final basket to wind it up.

For Coach Charlie Harrison it was another bitter disappointment. "Everybody out there did at least one unintelligent thing in a crucial situation," he said. "Then, we go into an overtime when we have four freshmen and a sophomore out there and they have four seniors. Regardless of the talent level, that sort of experience in a crucial situaiton can't be overcome."

Harrison added that it was just another example of a way the Pirates found to "give away something that was ours. We just couldn't hold onto it. We got tentative. I called two times out to tell them that they had to play to win, and not play not to lose.

"Maybe we took a couple of bad shots, or used poor judgements on taking shots, but you can't tell a kid not to shoot when you want them to keep attacking."

Harrison said he didn't think Campbell's zone trap affeted the Pirates as much as their own mistakes. "We dribble the ball off our own feet, or throw the ball away looking for someone to pass to.

"They played hard. They're good kids and they're learning to compete. But they've also gotta learn how to win."

After several early ties, ECU inched ahead on a jumper by Smith and two free throws by Jack Turnbill. Vanderhorst then added a jumper for a 12-6 lead.

Campbell cut it back after that to two, but ECU held onto the lead and finally two baskets by Vanderhorst and one by Tony Robinson opened up a 28-18 lead with 5:06 left in the half. Then, after an exchange of free throws, Grady hit two at the stripe to run the lead to 31-19 with 1:30 left.

After the Camels scored again, ECU elected to hold for the last shot, but Juan Austin stole the ball with 19 seconds left for a layup, and the Pirates missed on their final shot, leaving it at 31-23 at the half.

Campbell put on a rush in the early minutes of the second half and cut the lead back to 38-37 as Smith scored eight of the first 14 points of the Camels.

Grady made two baskets, one on a steal, to run the lead back to five, and that led to Battle's three pointer that upped it to 47-39 with 10:13 remaining.

But after that, it became Campbell's game as they came back to pull out the overtime win.

In addition to Canady's 24, Smith added 21 for the Camels. East Carolina was led by Vanderhorst and Grady with 16 each.

The Pirates close out the regular season Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. in Minges Coliseum, hosting ECAC-South foe James Madison. Then, it'll be on to Harrisonburg, Va., next Thursday for the first round of the ECAC-South tournament.

East Carolina Hosting First League Women's Tourney

East Carolina University's women will play host to the first-ever ECAC-South basketball tournament this weekend, with play starting on Friday night.

While the Lady Pirates are seeded second in the five-team field, they could turn out to be the favorite of the tournament. Richmond, seeded first, was defeated by the Lady Pirates, 51-41, in Greenville a little over a week ago.

The Lady Spiders bring in a 4-1 league record. They were 16-9 with one game remaining overall. East Carolina is 3-2 in the league, having lost to George Mason and William & Mary in a pair of road games. ECU is 11-16 overall.

The tournament will get underway on Friday night at 7:30 p.m. in Minges with #4 William & Mary facing #5 James Madison. The Lady Indians are 2-2 in the league and 9-17 overall. Madison is 1-5, 12-14. The winner of that game will then meet Richmond at 3 p.m. Saturday afternoon.

East Carolina will face Mason in the 1 p.m. game on Saturday. Mason brings in a 3-3 record in the league. The Lady Patriots are 12-14 overall.

The championship game, between the two Saturday winners, will be played on Sunday at 2 p.m.

While the tournament is for the league championship — the first time it's been offered for women — it carries nothing beyond that. There is no automatic bid for the league into the NCAA tournament this year. Officials of the league are hopeful, however, that it will eventually lead to that.

Sylvia Bragg leads the Pirates into the tournament with a 13-3 scoring average. Delphine Mabry is also in double figures for the Lady Pirates with a 10.6 average.

Lisa Squirewell is next at 9.5, followed by Anita Anderson at 6.9, Annette Phillips at 6.8, Darlene Hedges at 5.4 and Jody Rodriguez at 4.8.

Squirewell is the leading rebounder with a 7.0 average.

Mason and East Carolina met twice during the regular season, splitting. ECU won in Minges, 68-50, but was then beaten in Fairfax, Va., 58-54.

The top scorer for the Patriots is 6-2 senior forward Jeanne Daunoras, averaging 21.3 points and 8.8 rebounds a game. Front-court mate Valerie Douglas, a 5-11 junior, has a 12.1 avearge and pulls 8.3 rebounds a game.

Also in double figures is 5-7 junior guard Bobbie Pugh at 13.1 and 5-6 junior guard Linda Jones at 10.9. Rounding out the starters is 6-0 senior center Patty Amidon, with a 4.4 average.

Daunoras led the Patriots in the two earlier meetings with ECU, scoring 20 and 16 points and pulling away ten rebounds in each contest.

William & Mary's Lady Tribe has no scorers in double figures, but all five starters are within two points of each other. The guards are 5-3 freshman Vicki Lutz, 7.3; and 5-6 sophomore Debbie Taylor, 5.5. At center is 6-2 senior Betsy Becker, 7.9; with 5-11 senior Janet Hanrahan, 6.7, and 5-9 senior Sandy DiSilvio, 7.9, at the forwards. Becker is the leading rebounder with a 6.9 average.

Madison, in contrast, has two in double figures, led by 5-6 junior guard Sue Manelski with a 12.9 average. Joining her in double figures is 6-0 junior forward Michele James at 10.1.

The other Duchess starters include 5-6 freshman guard Flo Jackson, with a 7.3 avearage; 6-0 freshman center Julie Franken, 9.6; and 5-11 freshman forward Betsy Witman at 9.8.

James is the leading rebounder with an 8.8 average.

Richmond sports the number one scorer and rebounder in the league in 6-2 junior center Karen Elsner. She is scoring at a 23.8 clip and is puling 12.7 rebounds. Also in double figures in scoring is 6-1 senior forward Betsy McCormick at 10.5, while 5-6 junior guard Jackie Isreal is just outside at 9.7.

The other forward will be 6-0 sophomore Brook Browning, averaging 3.9, while the other guard will be either 5-7 senior Julie Bryer at 3.5, or 5-10 freshman Margaret Sears at 5.8.

ECU Coach Cathy Andruzzi sees the tournament as a true toss-up. "We're very excited about the tournament. It's a field with teams that have beaten each other. Any team can win. Whoever comes in and plays well will take it."

Colts Seem In Limbo

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Baltimore Colts' owner Robert Irsay has reached an agreement with the city to move his National Football League team here, according to a published report.

The Baltimore Sun today quoted two unidentified sources as saying the move is all set.

The key to the deal was a $15-million loan at 8-percent interest for Irsay, according to the report. The loan would replace Irsay's current loan, which expires this year. He acquired it at 8-percent interest when he purchased the club in 1972.

But another Baltimore source was quoted in today's Indianapolis Star as saying, "The momentum has swung back. I think the Colts are going to stay. Although I wouldn't say the talks have drastically depreciated, they have started to take the shape of previous negotiations."

Earlier Wednesday, Indianapolis Mayor William H. Hudnut said he would not make a giveaway offer to attract the Colts. The mayor's sentiment was shared by the chairman of the board that runs a nearly completed, 61,000-seat domed stadium in downtown Indianapolis.

Greene C. Nips Conley, 56-53

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer

LITTLEFIELD — Mike Fulton drove the lane with 1:11 left to give Greene Central a 54-53 lead and Theodore Edwards sank a pair of free throws to give the Rams a 56-53 victory over D.H. Conley Wednesday in the District II basketball championships being played at Ayden-Grifton.

In the night's opening game, Coastal 3-A Conference champion North Lenoir raced by Farmville Central for a 63-52 girls' win to advance against the winner of tonight's D.H. Conley-Greene Central game.

The Greene Central boys will face West Craven, which defeated Southern Nash, 57-52 in the nightcap.

"They beat us last year in the district tournament, so now I guess we're even," Greene Central Coach Lewis Godwin said. "We don't care who it's against any more; we're just glad to be coming back.

"I felt like we played hard enough to win. I was scared before the game that our guys would look at their height and be a little intimidated, but I don't think they were."

Conley used its height advantage to take an 8-2 lead with 3:16 left in the first quarter as the Rams' offense sputtered. A move inside by 6-7 Louis Bryant with 2:10 left in the period gave the Vikings an 11-4 lead before the Rams trimmed it to 11-6 at the end of the period.

Boneree Johnson pumped in a 17-footer for Greene Central, and Anthony Thompson completed a three-point play to knot the score 11-11 with 6:39 left in the second quarter. The score was tied five times after that, with Conley holding the edge most of the period before going to the locker room with a 25-23 lead.

After Raymond Reddrick got the Vikes on the board first in the third quarter for a four-point edge, Greene Central outscored Conley 11-2 through the 3:44 mark to take a 34-29 lead.

The Rams' biggest lead of the night came on a layup by Thompson with 2:25 remaining in the third quarter at 38-31. A 17-footer by Victor Barnes and a three-point play by Bryant trimmed the margin to 38-36 with 2:01 left, but the Rams connected on five of six free throws through the end of the period for a 43-40 lead.

Greene Central held the advantage through most of the final period, but Conley knotted the score at 50-50 with 4:02 remaining in the contest on a high-arching corner shot by Donald Wilson, who added a free throw to put the Vikes ahead.

Maurice Edwards drove inside for the Rams to regain the lead, but Bryant retaliated for Conley to take a 53-52 lead at the three minute mark — setting up the final spurt by Greene Central. Conley's Darryl Daniels missed a pair of free throw attempts with seven seconds on the clock, and Theodore Edwards cleared the rebound before he was fouled.

"We wanted to foul either (Daniels or Bryant), but not (Wilson or Reddrick)," Godwin said. "Some times you can plan something and it just doesn't work out. This time we were fortunate that it did.

"We let them get back in the game. We'd work for a break, then throw the ball away. I was praying we would keep our composure long enough to pull it out."

Theodore Edwards posted 20 points, while Johnson added 11 and Fulton 10 for the Rams. Bryant paced the Vikings with 19 points, with Wilson adding 13.

"We played sluggish all night," Conley Coach Shelly Marsh said. "We had a chance to win it and missed a layup and free throws. They had to come from behind and then we had to come from behind; they just got ahead at the end.

"This is one of the teams I'll always remember because they had a chance to give up back in December, but they hung in there and went on to have a winning season."

Joy Peaden got the Lady Jaguars on the board first in the girls game, but North Lenoir rattled off 11 unanswered points through the 2:27 mark of the first quarter. The Lady Hawks went on to take a 15-6 lead at the end of the quarter.

Sylvia Williams again scored the first bucket of the second quarter for Farmville, but the Lady Hawks posted the next nine points for a 24-8 lead with 4:20 till intermission.

Lisa Lang led a Farmville Central rally, and the Lady Jags trimmed the margin to 24-15 with 2:24 left. But North Lenoir maintained a 31-20 lead at halftime.

Farmville cut the deficit to 35-27 with 4:33 left, but the Lady Hawks went to their strength inside to repell the Jaguars. North Lenoir managed a 45-33 advantage at the end of the third quarter, and the Jags were never able to pull closer until the 4:40 mark of the final period when a drive inside by Stephanie Newton set the score at 51-42.

The Lady Hawks pulled away again but never managed to pull ahead by more than 13 points.

Jennifer Wooten led the Lady Hawks with 19 points, while Helen Wooten added 13. Veronica Chapman chipped in 12 points and Wilhemenia Cratch added 10 for North Lenoir.

Lang and Newton paced Farmville Central with 18 points each.

Lady Indians Defeat Bath

WILLIAMSTON — Chocowinity High School's girls advanced to the finals of the District I 1-A Tournament last night with a 54-48 victory over Bath High School last night.

In the boys' game, Creswell was upset by Mattamuskeet, 73-69.

A preliminary game to decide fourth seeding in the tournament, between Cape Hatteras and Bath, postponed Tuesday night, will be played tonight at Columbia. The winner of that game will face Chocowinity on Tusday at 8:30 at Williamston. That same night, Belhaven's girls meet Aurora for the right to place Chocowinity for the title.

Chocowinity shot out into a 19-12 lead in the first period, but Bath rallied in the second quarter, 13-9. That cut the Lady Tribe lead back to 28-25 at halftime.

The Indians pulled away again in the third period, 13-8, taking a 41-33 lead into the last quarter. In that, Bath tried to rally, but Rhonda Mizelle scored seven points to help fend off the Lady Pirates and give the Tribe the victory.

Wendy Elks, hitting nine of 16 from the floor, led Chocowinity 21 points. Kim Green had 11 and Mizelle had 10 to add to the total. Green had 12 rebounds, while Elks and Mizelle each pulled six.

Bath was led by Vanessa Riddick with 19 and Karen Boyd with 18.

Ueberroth To Head Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball's 15-month search for a new commissioner apparently will end Saturday when Peter V. Ueberroth, head of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, will be named to succeed Bowie Kuhn.

According to published reports, later confirmed by two sources close to baseball, Ueberroth was selected by a search committee to replace Kuhn, whose 15-year term expired today.

Another source told The Associated Press that all 26 club owners had been called secretly to meet on Saturday in Tampa, Fla., at which time the committee, headed by Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud Selig, will "name their man."

The New York Times said owners agreed last summer to accept the decision of Selig's committee, so the election of Ueberroth was viewed as a formality. And, the Philadelphia Inquirer reported that baseball's Executive Council approved Ueberroth's selection last Thursday at a secret meeting in New York.

The naming of Ueberroth will end a political battle within baseball's ownership that began at a secret meeting in December, 1981 in Florida, where nine owners signed a letter urging Kuhn to resign.

Kuhn's ouster was accomplished on Nov. 1, 1982 in Chicago when, opposed by five National League owners, the commissioner failed to gain re-election to a third seven-year term. The five NL dissenters were New York, Houston, St. Louis, Atlanta and Cincinnati.

In December, 1982, Selig's committee was empanelled to find a new commissioner, and, despite continued backing from a solid corps of supporters, Kuhn withdrew his name from further consideration last August in Boston. His term, which originally expired on Aug. 15, 1983, was subsequently extended twice, the final time to March 1.

Selig could not be reached for comment and did not return telephone calls Thursday evening. But a source close to the hunt said the tide apparently turned in Ueberroth's favor when he received the backing of Kuhn supporter Peter O'Malley, owner of the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"That carried a lot of weight with the pro-Kuhn group," the source said. "Obviously, he (Ueberroth) has had the support of the search committee."

Reached aboard the Queen Mary at Long Beach, Calif., Ueberroth would neither confirm nor deny his imminent election. Ueberroth was there to address The Associated Press Executive Council on the Summer Olympics.

"There have been conversations," he said. "But nothing has been decided. That's it. I'm not being cute. That's where it stands."

Fike Teams In Split

WILSON — Wilson Fike's top-seeded boys and girls had mixed results last night in the first semifinal games of the Big East Tournament, being played at Fike.

The Fike boys advanced to the finals of the league tournament with an 82-66 victory over Wilson Hunt. Fike will face the winner of tonight's Kinston-Rose game on Friday at 9 p.m.

The Fike girls, winners of the regular season title, bowed to fourth seeded Northeastern, 78-75, in their game. While the loss knocks the Lady Demons out of the tournament, they still qualify for post-season play, now taking the number two spot in the playoffs.

Northeastern advances to the finals of the tournament. They play again on Friday, facing the winner of tonight's Northern Nash-Rocky Mount game at 7 p.m. The tournament winner advances to take the league's top seed in the state playoffs.

Roanoke Girls Are Ousted

WELDON — Roanoke High School's girls were swamped by Weldon's second half surge last night, bowing out of the District I 3-A Tournament at Weldon High School.

In the boys' game, the Roanoke River Conference made it a sweep as Warren County rolled to an 88-71 victory over Plymouth.

Tonight, the first round continues with Northwest Halifax meeting Plymouth in a girls' game, while the Tarboro boys take on Northampton East.

Roanoke hung with Weldon, the Roanoke River champion, through the first half. The Lady Redskins were ahead at the end of the first period, 16-15, but Weldon outscored them in the second quarter, 14-11. That gave Weldon only a 29-27 lead at the half.

But in the third period, Weldon took firm control of the game and raced away from the Redskins. They outhit Roanoke, 22-8, in the period, running out to a 51-35 lead. Roanoke was again outscored, 23-9, in the final quarter as Weldon raced home with the rout.

Anntionette Martin led Weldon with 18 points while Patrice Newell added 14, Angela Johnson had 12 and Cindy Battle hit 11.

Gloria Duggins and Cheryl Randolph each scored 11 points to lead Roanoke.

Heels Near Perfect

By The Associated Press

While top-ranked North Carolina moved within one game of polishing off a perfect Atlantic Coast Conference regular-season slate, 19th-ranked Maryland strengthened its chances of gaining an NCAA tournament bid.

Michael Jordan scored 18 of his game-high 20 points in the second half, including eight during a 21-4 run as North Carolina cruised by Georgia Tech 69-56 in ACC basketball action Wednesday night.

In other ACC games, Adrian Branch scored 18 points as Maryland beat North Carolina State 63-50 and Anthony Jenkins scored 20 points as Clemson held off a late Duke rally to upset the 15th-ranked Blue Devils 77-76. Also, Rick Carlisle scored 18 points as Virginia upset No. 17 Wake Forest 65-61.

Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins said he knew his team was in trouble from the start.

"Their defense took us out of everything we wanted to do," Cremins said. "They took us out of our pattern, and we had to react to that and go to another pattern. But we never got into it."

Tech, 6-8 in the ACC and 18-9 overall, shot only 37 percent for the night, but stayed in it until the final 12 minutes because of the Tar Heels' lethargic play.

Matt Doherty's 15-footer ignited the 21-4 run after Tech had cut a 35-26 deficit to 37-34 on Bruce Dalrymple's layup with about 12 minutes left. Doherty had six of his 13 points in that stretch, and Sam Perkins scored five of his 15 as the Tar Heels remained unbeaten after 13 ACC games. North Carolina is 25-1 overall.

"It was a rather strange game in that the crowd didn't get into the game until midway in the first half," said North Carolina coach Dean Smith, who claimed his 12th 25-victory season to go one ahead of former UCLA Coach John Wooden.

The game also marked the return of guard Kenny Smith, sidelined since he fractured his left wrist in a game against Louisiana State on Jan. 29. The freshman played 14 minutes, scoring two points.

Yvon Joseph led Tech with 14 points while Dalrymple and Mark Price each had 12.

Ricky Stokes and Carlisle came to the rescue after Virginia's top scorer, Othell Wilson, injured his ankle injury midway through the first half.

"It was an emotional game for us, especially after losing Othell," said Virginia coach Terry Holland.

Carlisle was the only player in double figures for Virginia, 17-9 and 6-7. Wake Forest, 1-6 in ACC road games, got 19 points from Kenny Green, 14 from Anthony Teachey and 10 from Lee Garber. Wake is now 19-7 and 6-7.

Virginia scored three unanswered baskets to go up 6-2 and never trailed again, grabbed a 35-27 halftime lead.

Wilson sprained his left ankle in a collision with the Deacons' Danny Young with 9:28 left in the first half and did not return. He was taken to a hospital for X-rays, which proved negative.

Wake Forest coach Carl Tacy said he thought his team "would be able to put a little more pressure on their backcourt (with Wilson out) but they interchanged their guards and did a good job of covering that area in his absence. We probably didn't take advantage of it enough."

Clemson coach Bill Foster hopes his team's victory did more than end the Tigers' 12-game ACC losing streak. He also hopes it gives them a shot at the National Invitational Tournament.

"If we play well against Campbell on Saturday and win, I think we have a shot at the NIT," said Foster, whose team is now 3-11 in the ACC and 13-13 overall.

Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski, whose Blue Devils fell to 7-6 and 22-7, said he knew "Clemson would be a dangerous team."

The Tigers withstood a second half rally that saw Duke come from 15 points down with six minutes left only to miss three shots in the final 14 seconds. Danny Meagher, Tommy Amaker and Mark Alarie all missed shots in the final 14 seconds — Alarie's tip attempt coming at the buzzer.

Alarie scored 29 points and grabbed 16 rebounds — both career highs.

Clemson also missed a chance to clinch the victory seconds earlier — when guard Vince Hamilton was called for stepping on the free throw line — for the fourth time — with 14 seconds left.

"Vinnie had better hope that the official was wrong or the official had better hope that the calls were right," Foster said. "We are going to go back and look at the film and see just what happened."

Horace Grant scored 16 points and Marc Campbell added 10 for Clemson.

Johnny Dawkins scored 20 points for Duke.

N.C. State may not get to defend its national title, but Coach Jim Valvano knows the slumping Wolfpack will be in postseason play.

"We're going to some tournament ... we'll play some place," Valvano said after his team lost its fourth straight game.

While N.C. State fell to 19-11 and 4-9, the Terps won their fifth game in six outings. Maryland, 19-7, took over sole possession of second place in the ACC at 8-5, snapping a tie with Duke.

Trudeau Resigning When Leader Is Chosen

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

OTTAWA (AP) — Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, who rode to power 16 years ago on a wave of "Trudeaumania" and dominated Canadian politics even as his popularity waned, is stepping down.

Trudeau, 64, said Wednesday he will resign as soon as his Liberal Party can choose a new leader, probably in June. The new party leader will become prime minister automatically but will have to call nationwide elections by next February.

Trudeau's resignation had been expected for weeks — mostly because his standing in the polls is so low that political analysts believe he could not win another election. Still, the suddenness of the announcement came as a surprise.

Meeting reporters outside his office, Trudeau said he made his decision during "a great walk in the snow" Tuesday night during Ottawa's heaviest blizzard in years, followed by 1½ hours in the sauna.

"I listened to my heart and saw if there were any signs in my destiny in the ski and there were none; there were just snowflakes," Trudeau said.

Asked why he chose the day for his announcement, the prime minister replied, "Well, because it is a good day, it is the first day of the rest of my life."

Trudeau, a lawyer, essayist and world traveler, won election to Parliament in 1965. He became justice minister in 1967, and was noted for eccentric habits such as wearing sandals and an Ascot tie into the House of Commons.

He was picked as Liberal Party leader in April 1968, taking over as prime minister from Lester B. Pearson. He immediately called an election and won on a surge of "Trudeaumania" assisted by a charismatic campaign style — tossing off witty remarks and kissing dozens of women at each stop.

Trudeau was re-elected in 1972 and 1974, defeated in 1979, then made a stunning return in 1980 after the Progressive Conservative government of Joe Clark stumbled. His tenure as prime minister is longer than that of any other current leader of a major Western nation.

His most lasting legacies are likely to be the enactment of a new constitution in 1982 that broke the last colonial ties with Britain and the establishment of French as an official language of government.

To Trudeau, making room for French-Canadians in the national government was the only way to combat separatism in Quebec, where about 80 percent of the population speaks French.

His sternest challenge was the "October Crisis" of 1970, when the Front de Liberation du Quebec kidnapped two officials and killed one of them.

Trudeau called out the army and had hundreds of people detained without charges on suspicion of separatist sympathies. He had overwhelming public support, but his reputation as a civil libertarian was tarnished.

His final months in office were devoted to a peace initiative aimed at reducing East-West tensions. Since November he has visited Washington, Moscow, Peking, Paris, London and more than a dozen other capitals for talks with world leaders.

Former Finance Minister John Turner, seen as the front-runner to succeed Trudeau, said he would announce in two weeks whether he will run.

Other likely Liberal candidates are Energy Minister Jean Chretien, Justice Minister Mark MacGuigan, Economic Development Minister Donald Johnston and Employment Minister John Roberts.

Whoever gets the Liberal nod will have an uphill battle in the upcoming election. The Progressive Conservatives, under new leader Brian Mulroney, have been running 20 to 30 percentage points ahead in opinion polls.

The resignation announcement was greeted with cheers at a meeting of Calgary oil industry leaders and at the Toronto Stock Exchange, where the index promptly jumped 10 points.

Sen. Keith Davey, the Liberal campaign chairman said, "This is a sad day for Canada, sadder still for the Liberal Party."

Trudeau told reporters he would "work at something else" rather than retire. There has been occasional speculation that Trudeau might someday be U.N. secretary general or hold another international post.

Trudeau's wife Margaret, who filed for divorce in November following a six-year separation, said she was relieved her husband was stepping down because he will be able to devote more time to their three sons, aged 12, 10 and 8.

At the time of Trudeau's secret marriage to Margaret Sinclair in 1971 — she was then 22, he 51 — the prime minister was considered one of the world's most eligible bachelors.

He was often seen in the company of beautiful women and was linked romantically with singer Barbra Streisand and many others.

At first the Trudeau's marriage had a fairy-tale quality, heightened when each of their first two sons was born on Christmas Day. But before long the marital strains were embarassingly public.

Margaret partied with the Rolling Stones rock group, spilled secrets to People magazine, and played kiss-and-tell in two autobiographical books.

WILL NOT RUN — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau says "No, I won't run again" as he leaves Parliament Hill in Ottawa Wednesday night. Earlier he announced his decision to resign as leader of the Liberal Party of Canada. (AP Laserphoto)

Buried In 'Cadillac'

CHICAGO (AP) — A man who was buried in a coffin built to look like his beloved Cadillac Seville, drawing 5,000 people to the funeral home, was "very car-conscious" and had requested the special arrangements before his death, a funeral director said.

The coffin bearing Willie M. Stokes Jr., who was buried Wednesday, had flashing head and tail lights, a steering wheel, a chrome grille and the Cadillac insignia. The coffin also carried the word "WIMP," the name Stokes displayed on his vanity license plates.

"We took the casket to a body and fender factory in Indianapolis to get the authentic Cadillac grille and trunk design," said Spencer Leak, vice president of the A.R. Leak Funeral Home. "The idea was to make it as close to a Seville as possible."

Up to 5,000 friends and curiosity-seekers filed by Stokes' unique coffin Tuesday and Wednesday at the South Side funeral home.

Stokes, 26, was shot to death Friday by three men in the parking lot of the South Side motel where he lived, police said.

A police officer who refused to give his name said the killing may have been tied to a drug transaction.

Stokes had made the request for the special coffin in the event that he died, Leak said.

His family was pleased with the result, Leak added. "This is what they wanted."

As Stokes lay in state Tuesday evening, he wore a fedora, red-velvet suit and a number of diamond rings and clutched a handful of money. Leak said the diamonds and money were removed before burial.

Leak said Stokes, who drove a Seville, was "very car-conscious."

Robber Added To 'Most Wanted'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI has added Samuel Marks Humphrey, a 34-year-old Detroit man wanted for murder and bank robbery, to its list of "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives."

Humphrey is sought in the murder of a Detroit resident shot in a robbery in his home March 17, 1977, as well as 1983 bank robberies in Rochester, N.Y., and Atlanta, the bureau said. It said he also is sought for a 1982 jewelry store holdup in San Diego.

The FBI said Humphrey is reported to be a heavy drug user, weighs 175 pounds and is a 6-foot-3 black male with black hair and brown eyes. He is has been previously employed as a meat cutter.

From the moment he got out of bed, Trump Coup Tommy knew it was going to be his day. The bridge club had hardly opened its doors when Tommy arrived, and he was soon in a game. On the very first deal of the day he picked up the above hand, sitting South.

After his partner opened the bidding, Tommy might have inquired for aces directly. Instead, he made a jump shift in his suit, then used Blackwood and settled in the grand slam when he learned that his partner held all the missing aces.

West led the top of his spade sequence, and Tommy could count 14 tricks — if trumps broke 3-2. If trumps were 4-1 and West held the length, there was nothing Tommy could do about it. But if East held four trumps, Tommy saw a way to make his slam.

He sacrificed his first king at trick one, when he rose with dummy's ace of spades so that he could ruff a spade in hand. Next he cashed two top trumps, and he smiled with pleasure when West showed out on the second round. Tommy was in his element — he had a hand to play where he needed a trump coup to fulfill his contract. Gone was the bungler; in his place was the master of technique.

Tommy needed four entries to shorten his trumps to East's length and then pick up the trumps. So Tommy finessed the diamond queen, ruffed another spade and crossed to the ace of diamonds for another spade ruff. Then he led to the queen of clubs and ruffed a diamond. Tommy and East were both down to two trumps and a club.

The second king met its gruesome fate when Tommy overtook the king of clubs with the ace. He could lead any card from the table. He was poised with the Q-10 of trumps over East's J-9, and no matter what the defender did, Tommy had to take the last two tricks to bring home his grand slam.

PERTH, Australia (AP) — Maurizia Verbena, 23, who Italian police say is the leader of a gang who preyed on the wealthy in Rome, will be extradited from western Australia.

Two More Years For The Speaker

BOSTON (AP) — House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. says he intends to seek a final two-year term, but would consider resigning from Congress early to be ambassador to Ireland or a cabinet secretary in a Democratic administration.

"He's always had the dream of someday ending his career as ambassador to Ireland, perhaps," O'Neill's press secretary, Christopher Matthews, said Wednesday night. "The key element is that he intends to serve one more term."

O'Neill discussed his future in interviews published today by The Boston Globe and The New York Times. He told the Globe, "I will probably hang it up" after another two years as speaker and representative of the Cambridge district.

Saying he considered himself more liberal than most of his colleagues, O'Neill said he thought he should be succeeded as speaker by House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, because he might be "more in tune with the Democratic members of the House than I am."

An early supporter of the presidential candidacy of Walter Mondale, O'Neill said he wasn't sure what he'd do if Mondale was elected. He said he might be available for a presidential appointment "in a Mondale cabinet or possibly as ambassador to Ireland."

VA Plan Criticized

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Veterans Administration is asking Congress to abandon a proposal to lend out-of-work veterans money to make mortgage payments.

Everett Alvarez, Jr., the VA deputy administrator, on Wednesday called the measure, "a bailout for mortgage lenders." He said it may give lenders "incentives to reverse their policy of forebearing on delinquent mortgage payments," rather than moving for quick foreclosure.

The Mortgage Bankers Association also testified against the proposal because improvement in the economy leads the trade group to believe delinquencies are at their peak, and the program won't be necessary.

Testifying for the bankers, Robert Wertheim, chairman of the Southwest Mortgage Co. of Albuquerque, N.M., said lenders are already "counseling and working with delinquent homeowners in order to keep them in their homes."

Dorothy Starbuck, chief benefits director of the VA, told the Cenate Veterans' Affairs Committee those who might qualify for such emergency loans are already "on thin ice."

Committee Chairman Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., questioned the idea of loaning more money to someone out of work and "placing them deeper in debt."

Simpson also said that Office of Management and Budget Director David Stockman had informed him the administration's plan to change VA rules for GI loan forclosures had been shelved until October 1.

The plan, which lenders and veterans groups feared would make VA loans harder to get, was supposed to go into effect today.

Under the change, the VA would no longer take title to homes when veterans defaulted. Instead, the government would pay a penalty to the lender and let the lender take the house.

Faced with the prospect of having to pay the cost of fixing and selling the house, lenders had said they'd be more careful about making VA loans and avoid making loans to all but the best of risks.

Jane Alexander Breathes Life Into A Movie On Life Of Calamity Jane

By JULIANNE HASTINGS
UPI TV Reporter

NEW YORK (UPI) — Making "Calamity Jane" was a work of love for Jane Alexander, who avidly researched the life of the hard-drinking, rodeo-riding Old West heroine before approaching CBS with her idea for the film.

The action-packed love story focuses on Calamity's love for Wild Bill Hickock, their unconventional, wilderness wedding ceremony and the daughter Calamity gives to a wealthy friend and his wife to raise in the East after Hickock refuses to recognize the marriage.

Starring Miss Alexander in the title role, Frederic Forrest as Hickock and David Hemmings as Calamity's friend Capt. Jim O'Neill, "Calamity Jane" airs March 6.

The script is based on diaries and letters Calamity sent to her daughter, Jean Hickock McCormick. The documents, which tell of Calamity's adventures with her horse Satan, her days as a stage coach driver, saloon girl, guide and member of Buffalo Bill Cody's Wild West Show have not been authenticated, mainly because there are no known other handwritten documents with which to compare them.

CBS, however, liked Miss Alexander's idea so much it made her executive producer of the movie, in which she reprises the role she first played in a one-woman theatrical show.

The Emmy and Tony-award winning actress is a lively, wonderful Jane, using a raspy voice with a slight accent, sometimes looking lean and tough in her buckskins and at other times almost beautiful.

It is easy to tell she is fond of the character she plays.

The actress, a native of New England, said she feels a kind of kinship to the Old West.

"My grandfather was Buffallo Bill's doctor," Miss Alexander said in an interview at her New York apartment. "I'm a real lover of the Old West, after the Civil War to the 1890s."

The actress is a believer in the diaries and letters, although she said that doesn't mean they might not contain a couple whoppers.

"She was liar, but a hell of a lot about the Old West is myth.

"It's hard to know how much of her story is true. I hope the diaries and letters are true. I'm always interested in doing a biography as true as possible."

The alleged marriage is the hardest event to pin down.

"She was crazy about Wild Bill Hickock, but that's complicated by the fact that there were two of them (both named James Butler 'Wild Bill' Hickock) and thay both worked for the government," Miss Alexander said.

Calamity, in her letters, tells her daughter she hopes she doesn't mix the two men up — young Jean's father was shot to death in Deadwood, Dakota Territory, in 1876 and the other James Butler Hickock was still alive in 1896.

In the movie, the wedding is performed and witnessed by two drunken ministers Calamity and Wild Bill come upon at a wilderness campfire.

Even if the letters are authentic, Calamity's claim to being a married woman was disputed in her own day. In one letter she wrote:

"Then while on the trip to Abilene, we met Rev. Sipes and Rev. Warren and we were married there will be lots of folks doubt that we were ever married but I will leave you plenty of proof that we were You were not a woods colt Janey don't let any of these pusgutted blatherskites ever get by with that lie."

Miss Alexander said her Calamity voice came to her spontaneously.

"I have a lot of fun with voices," she said, slipping into the hoarse rasp. "I knew Calamity drank a lot and had to yell into the wind. She also was in a position of authority. You ever notice how women in authority speak lower?"

Wolfman Jack To MC Event

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Wolfman Jack will be the master of ceremonies as "The Memphis Sound" fills the air in this city next month, the organizer of a reunion for the defunct Stax Record Co. has announced.

Artists who recorded for Stax in the 1960s and '70s will attend a black-tie dinner in a downtown hotel and perform in a concert at the Mid-South Coliseum on April 27-28.

"Although Stax as a company may be dead, the legend lives on," said Don Dortch, president of a company that books and manages performers.

Dortch listed among the performers scheduled for the show: The Bar-Kays, Rufus Thomas, Carla Thomas, Johnnie Taylor, Eddie Floyd, William Bell, Shirley Brown, the Temprees and Albert King.

Nationally known artists who recorded for Stax include Otis Redding and Isaac Hayes.

"Not only are most of the artists still recording, but in many countries around the world, the Stax label still exists and is selling the Memphis sound to an appreciative audience," Dortch said.

AN AMERICAN SERIES

TOKYO (AP) — A five-part series designed to show unfamiliar sides of Americans will air on Japanese television next week, a spokesman for the Ministry of International Trade and Industry says.

TV View Of Franks

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — "Enterprise," public television's weekly series on business and how it works, was there when Frank Perdue launched his promotional campaign for the chicken frankfurter.

Tonight's half-hour segment seems at times an inspired, though perhaps extended, commercial for man and product.

No one in "Perfectly Frank" has anything really critical to say about Perdue or the way he runs his $450 million-a-year business. And no wonder: the man is worth $100 million and, "Enterprise" says, "he made it all selling chickens."

Promotional or not, "Enterprise" has a point. If you live in the Northeast, you'll recognize Perdue from his TV ads: the balding fellow with the high-pitched, whiny delivery.

In fact, Perdue's distinctive appearance is so important that his ad agency found a lookalike youngster to appear alongside the man himself in television commercials for Frank's Franks. (The kid's resemblance to Perdue is exaggerated by makeup.)

The promotional effort for Perdue's chicken began in 1971, a decade before the frank was introduced, and the result is a fascinating story in the annals of advertising.

"We were looking for something that would make whatever they (the competition) did not as important, or as good as ours," said Sam Scali of Scali McCabe Sloves Inc., the agency hired to develop an image for Perdue, Inc., "because they couldn't copy Frank Perdue."

That consideration might have impressed Perdue, but there is more to it than that.

"I do think there's some aid to the consumer by the owner of a company doing the ad, because he has the power to see that the product is as good as he says," Perdue said. "And I think he's foolish if he doesn't see to it, when he's the guy up there being made ridiculous by his people."

The approach appears to have worked. Now, "Enterprise" says, "Perdue is so popular, it's sometimes hard to tell what's being sold here."

"Enterprise" visits Perdue's chicken-processing operation in rural Maryland. Perdue maintains a million hens and 100,000 roosters as breeding stock, "just to keep the chickens coming."

The 250,000 chicks hatched each day are sorted by sex, debeaked and inoculated, and shipped off to contract farmers who raise the birds for Perdue. They're fed a diet that contains marigold petals to turn their skin a bright yellow.

Meanwhile, back at the Perdue plant, 35,000 mature chickens are killed and plucked each hour, then examined for quality and cut into pieces for sale.

Until 1980, Perdue sold scraps to farmers for feed — at 10 cents a pound. Then someone, maybe Perdue himself, suggested using the odd pieces of chicken for making frankfurters.

"The food business," Perdue said, "is a very tough business to survive, so you've got to explore every facet to make a profit."

Perdue, ever attentive to detail, follows the chicken frank from plant to supermarket.

NEVER AGAIN — Country music singers David Frizzelle and Shelly West, voted duet of the year by the Country Music Association in 1981 and 1982, have vowed never to sing in Canada again. Their spokeswoman said the duo's two buses were detained at the Canadian border by customs agents in Windsor, Ontario, while en route to a concert. Agents reportedly took dogs aboard the buses Tuesday and conducted a search. (AP Laserphoto)

Massive Power Outage In Western States

By CAROLYN SKORNECK
Associated Press Writer

Traffic lights went out, movie theaters scrapped showings and restaurants had to serve cheese and crackers by candlelight when a blackout hit parts of six Western states for up to 2½ hours, putting 3 million utility customers in the dark, authorities said.

Officials today were trying to determine what caused a major north-south power transmission line to fail Wednesday night in northern California, darkening parts of California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Utah and Texas.

The 500-kilovolt Pacific Gas & Electric Co. power line went out at 5:43 p.m. PST, affecting a huge, interconnecting power grid. While lights in some cities flickered for just a few minutes, electricity in other places was not restored until 8:05 p.m., officials said.

"Obviously there's something either mechanical or electrical wrong, but there's nothing obvious like a plane going through a tower," said Dick Davin, spokesman for Pacific Gas & Electric in San Francisco. "We'll keep investigating until we find out what happened."

Major cities affected by the blackout included parts of Los Angeles, San Francisco, San Diego and Oakland in California; Phoenix and Tucson, Ariz.; Reno and about one-third of Las Vegas, Nev., excluding the glittering casinos and downtown; Albuquerque, Santa Fe and Taos, N.M.; and El Paso, Texas.

According to utility officials in the six states, a total of about 3 million customers were affected.

There were no reports of injuries or serious problems — "no rapes, plundering or pillaging," in the words of a San Francisco police spokesman. But there were a host of inconveniences as police directed traffic with flashlights, auditorium lights dimmed and hospitals and prisons scrambled to turn on emergency generators.

"There are a lot of burglary alarms being set off all over the city," said Oakland police Sgt. P. Galloway. "That's a problem. We don't know which ones to answer."

At Grossmont Hospital in Las Mesa, Calif., auxiliary generators kept the institution operating. "We're doing OK so far," said nursing supervisor Virginia Ray.

Backup generators also supplied electricity at San Quentin prison during the two-hour blackout there, a prison official said.

The effect was widespread because 14 states and portions of Canada are joined in the Western Systems Coordinating Council, which transfers power from the cheapest source to where it's most needed, PG&E spokeswoman Jan Stewart said. More states were not affected because of the systems' safeguards.

"The system is set up so California will isolate itself to minimize the number of people affected," Ms. Stewart said. "In this case, a relay opened and it cut off power from the southwest, which is what it was supposed to do."

"What happens is that it is pulling the plug from a bath said Barry Burdett, spokesma Tucson Electric Power. "The of the loss pulls power fron entire grid."

Marin County in nort California was hard hit. She Department spokeswoman Wagner said "probably 75 perc the power" was down for up t hours. She said she received ab calls a minute, some from hos wanting to know when the p would resume.

When the dark spell knocke cooking equipment, Scoma's re rant in Larkspur near San Qu Calif., "lost all our dinner busi but "sold tons of cheese crackers," said cocktail wa Frannie Cowan. Although electric cash register ini balked, "we kind of cranked it finally worked."

In San Diego, the city S Arena's lights dimmed just t the start of a Clippers bask game. However, the Nat Basketball Association contest on as scheduled and the Cli beat the Phoenix Suns, 102-95.

The Tamalpais Theatre ir Anselmo, Calif., had to scrap p.m. showings of "Sudden Im and "Uncommon Valor" be power was out until 7 p.m.

In southeastern Utah, powe out for 20 to 25 minutes in County, sheriff's deputy Mousaw said. In New M Albuquerque and Santa Fe affected briefly and there reports of outages in Taos Gallup to the north.

"In Albuquerque, the polic partment went down, the sh office went down and the state went down," said Judy Mil New Mexico's state police in Fe. Power was out for just "f 10 minutes" in south Santa F said.

In El Paso, power went out 6:45 p.m. MST, with blackout ing up to an hour, said Scott El El Paso Electric Co.

Oregon Inlet Jetties Bill Clears A Hurdle In House

By The Associated Press

A bill allowing construction of two mile-long jetties at Oregon Inlet has passed another hurdle, but foes say they'll fight the measure when it goes to the floor of the U.S. House.

The bill was approved Wednesday by the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, but officials say the measure is unlikely to see full House action soon.

The committee voted 23-13 to override opposition to the legislation by its chairman, Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., and Rep. John F. Seiberling, D-Ohio, who chaired the subcommittee that reviewed the bill.

Wednesday's voice vote came after an unsuccessful effort by Seiberling to delete the proposal from a wetlands bill. Rep. Walter Jones, D-N.C., attached the proposal as a rider to the wetlands legislation to defuse opposition by environmentalists.

"I'm just so happy I don't know what to do," said Jones, adding that he thought chances of passage on the House floor were good. But Seiberling warned that he would fight the bill and predicted it would be defeated.

"If I were Chairman Jones, I wouldn't bring it up until after the (May 8) primary," Seiberling said. Jones will face Rep. John B. Gillam, D-Bertie, in the Democratic primary.

The bill would transfer land from the U.S. Department of Interior to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to provide footings for the jetties. The proposal cleared the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee last fall after department officials refused to issue permits for the project.

The measure contained an amendment by Rep. James McClure Clarke, D-N.C., requiring that no money be spent on the project unless a Corps study shows a favorable cost-benefit ratio. The study, the third done by the Corps on the inlet, is expected to be finished in June.

Clarke had said previously he was uncertain if he'd support the bill, but told reporters that pressure from Jones and Gov. Jim Hunt helped him overcome his reservations.

"Hunt has staked himself out on it, and (Sen. Jesse) Helms will kill him if it doesn't pass," Clarke said. "There is no other way to go."

Helms, R-N.C., is sponsoring similar legislation in the Senate. Hunt, a Democrat, is running for the seat held by Helms.

The bill still must clear the House Public Works Committee before full House action and then must go to the Senate where a companion bill is being considered.

John Napier, lobbyist for the Oregon Inlet Commission, said he was "very confident" of eventual approval of the project.

The $100 million project was authorized in 1970 by Congress but no money was appropriated. Instead, the Corps has spent millions of dollars a year keeping the channel open.

In 1983 alone, the Corps spent $7 million dredging the inlet, which connects Northeastern North Carolina to ocean fishing grounds.

Moon Pilett, president of the Oregon Inlet Users Association, said Tuesday the channel is already beginning to move and curve, making navigation hazardous.
